Quick renewal of arms talks encouraged

By MAUREEN SANTINI
AP White House Correspondent

LONDON — President Reagan and his six colleagues at the economic summit urged speedy renewal of nuclear arms control talks Saturday, telling the Soviet Union that the United States is ready to bargain "anywhere, at any time, without preconditions."

While thousands of anti-nuclear demonstrators massed in the streets of London in an effort to disrupt the summit finale, the leaders of the seven major industrial democracies also joined in a denunciation of international terrorism and called for an end to attacks on oil tankers in the Persian Gulf.

Soviet reaction to the arms talks appeal was swift and negative. The Kremlin's official Tass news agency said it showed only that the Western leaders "intend to continue the position-of-strength policy."

In a separate economic communique, the chiefs of state of the United States, Britain, France, West Germany, Italy, Canada and Japan also expressed concern about the impact of high interest rates on the world economic recovery — and especially the debt-burdened Third World.

The final communique, read by British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, the summit host, in London's 15th century Guildhall, was shorn of draft language praising Reagan's efforts to curb U.S. budget deficits, a mild rebuke that betrayed backstage dissension over his economic policies.

■ Anti-nuclear activists stir up summit scene — Page 4A

The leaders, partly in deference to Reagan's re-election campaign, delicately avoided blaming the United States for high interest rates, but there was no mistaking their deep concern over the threat to the world economy if those rates are not reduced.

"You understand it was difficult for us to publish a text which could have embarrassed a government which is present here and is in the middle of a pre-election campaign," French Finance Minister Jacques Delors told reporters.

Nevertheless, Delors said, U.S. interest rates were the "most difficult" issue of the three-day conference. The prime lending rate of major U.S. banks now hovers at 12.5 percent.

As the summit leaders ended their final session at Lancaster House, near Buckingham Palace, thousands of banner-waving demonstrators marched the two miles from nearby Hyde Park to Trafalgar Square in brilliant sunshine, following an 18-foot model of a U.S. cruise missile.

Britain's Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament claimed that 100,000 people participated. Police said there were 50,000 marchers.

A separate group of anti-nuclear demonstrators lay down in The Mall, the broad thoroughfare in front of Lancaster House, in an attempt to besiege the summiteers. Police dragged 80 of them off to arrest and kept the road clear.

Other arrests were made at a sit-down protest outside the U.S. Embassy on Grosvenor Square a mile away from Lancaster House. An estimated 2,000 demonstrators virtually blockaded the embassy at one point, lying in the street before police dispersed them.

Police reported 201 people were arrested during the demonstrations.

Seven people were hurt, none seriously, including one policeman, Scotland Yard said.

The protest centered on the NATO decision to deploy 572 American-built Pershing 2 and cruise missiles in Western Europe beginning last December.

Bonnie Pihlstrom Kankaala's flair is for flying. "It's so much fun, and it feels so good." Today, most of her piloting is pleasure flying in the Bellanca Super Viking airplane, owned by Charles Gillespie of Texas Western Aviation. "When I first saw it, I fell in love...It's so pretty."

Her feet are on the ground, but...

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

When Bonnie Pihlstrom Kankaala was a teen-ager, she got bored.

"I wanted to do something else."

So, she took up flying.

Fifteen years later, she's still soaring but not as much as she'd like to.

She spends her working hours as an air traffic assistant in the Air Control Tower at Midland Regional Airport.

"You know," she reflected, "sitting up in the tower, I feel like I've been grounded.... Seeing all the jets (and other aircraft) going, taking off, I wish I were up there."

Ms. Kankaala, who first soloed at age 16 in a single-engine Cessna 150 in 1969 at Crystal, Minn., earned her private pilot's license at the minimum age of 17, got her commercial license at 18, and has logged 5,000 hours in single and multi-engine aircraft. She is checked out in 16 types of aircraft and holds several licenses, including airline transport, commercial, instrument, instructor, instructor-instrument, and multi-engine. In addition to teaching flying, she has taught ground school, ferried airplanes and flown charter aircraft.

"It's fun," she said of flying. "It's challenging; it keeps your mind active."

Ms. Kankaala is not trying to follow in the footsteps of the pioneer aviatrix Amelia Earhart.

"I've tried to forge along by myself. I think you have to."

Aviation, she suggested, often seems to be a bastion of male chauvinism.

"THERE'S STILL a lot of prejudice against women in aviation," she said. "Quite a few women have broken into it. It's changing. I've been burned a couple of times."

Ms. Kankaala was a flight instructor in Minneapolis and St. Paul. While in St. Paul, she was the "most senior" pilot to apply for a charter, multi-engine flying job within her company but her boss "just flat out said 'no.' "

"It kind of hurts, being as qualified as anybody else," and more so than some others, she said. "I'm hoping people (in Texas) are more open-minded about things like that."

Her student pilots were not so traditional in their views of women fliers.

Even when she was eight and nine months pregnant, she would still be teaching flying.

"My students would joke with me and say they didn't want to go too far from the airport. They would say that teasingly, of course."

But she noted that in today's highly-competitive field of aviation, "You've got to get yourself known. You've got to know people.... It's very tight...and can be very cut-throat.

"That's just the way it is," she said of aviation's attitude toward women fliers. "It's traditional."

Her husband, David, 41, who is chief pilot and manager of Midland oil operator Charles Gillespie's Texas Western Aviation, said his wife is an "excellent pilot."

Ogallala Aquifer reserves limited

By MARK LEWIS
Staff Writer

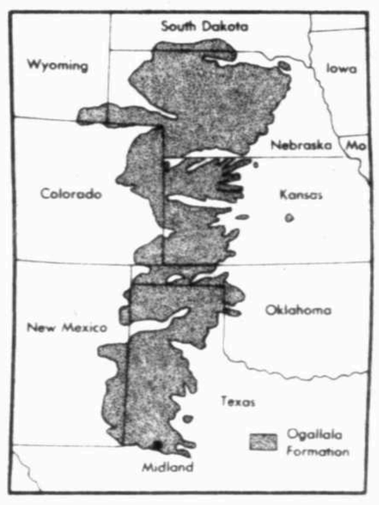
LUBBOCK — As geological formations go, the Ogallala Aquifer doesn't rate very high in the public imagination.

But to the water experts who met here last week, the Ogallala is at least as interesting as the Grand Canyon or the Rocky Mountains because it supplies almost a third of the water used for irrigation in the United States. And slowly but surely, that water is running out.

The Ogallala is an underground layer of water-saturated sand and gravel deposits which stretches for 174,000 square miles from Midland to South Dakota, and contains 3.25 billion acre-feet of water. It is the source of the groundwater that helped turn the semi-arid High Plains into the nation's breadbasket, but that water is being pumped out much faster than the aquifer is being recharged by rainfall.

"Average annual natural recharge to the Ogallala has been estimated at less than one inch," said J.W. Warner, a professor of civil engineering at Colorado State University. "This low rate of natural recharge, combined with intensive use of groundwater for irrigation, has resulted in a mining of the groundwater in the Ogallala Aquifer. To ensure the longevity of irrigated agriculture in the High Plains, every effort to conserve this valuable groundwater resource must be made."

Because the groundwater in the Ogallala is a finite resource, "We have two choices. Eventually, we're going to have to decrease pumping, or recharge the aquifer," Warner said.



Reporter-Telegram Graphic: Matt Holten

Recharging the Ogallala is the hydrologic equivalent of trickle-down economics. The idea is to induce irrigation run-off water to seep back down through the ground into the aquifer instead of flowing downstream into the sea or evaporating into the air.

Much attention at the conference was focused on the playa lakes, the thousands of natural basins which catch and hold rain and run-off water. Arland Schneider, an agricultural engineer for the Agriculture Department, said the playa lakes could be "an effective technique for partially replenishing the depleted Ogallala Aquifer" if the non-permeable clay soil on the bottom was removed, allowing the water to seep down though the much more permeable caliche.

Some fear region facing change to dryland farming

By HALLYE JORDAN

LUBBOCK — With energy prices for running irrigation pumps constantly climbing while commodity prices are depressed and ground water reserves drop dramatically, farmers in the High Plains of Texas are faced with few choices.

"You better buy a ticket out of town or be prepared to live with the water that comes from the thunderstorms," said Dr. Herbert Grubb of the Texas Department of Water Resources in Austin.

Addressing scientists and conservationists during the Ogallala Aquifer Symposium II here last week, Grubb said it was a challenge to guess what the future water supply holds for farmers. But several of those speaking during the symposium predicted a trend from farming irrigated land to dryland farming.

Iran mounting 'human-wave' assault?

By R. GREGORY NOKES
AP Diplomatic Writer

WASHINGTON — Iran faces probable defeat in a horrible bloodbath if it mounts a human-wave offensive against vastly superior firepower in southern Iraq, a prospect that may be giving pause to Iran's religious leaders, U.S. analysts say.

Iran already has delayed its anticipated assault for more than two months, even though it has deployed up to 500,000 troops along its border with Iraq, most of them in the south where an attack long has been regarded as imminent.

But Iranian President Ali Khamenei signaled a possible end to the stand-off, saying Friday that all of the nation's trained soldiers must be prepared for mobilization. Tehran radio added Saturday that "Iran's brave youth are continuing to leave for the battlefront" in large numbers.

■ Kharg Island oil terminal threatened — Page 4A

State Department and Pentagon officials, who insisted on anonymity, said it appears an intense debate over strategy is under way in Iran among religious and military leaders, with the military arguing that sending ill-prepared troops into a new human-wave attack would invite disaster and bring no gain.

"If they live up to past history, the Iraqis would spread them all over the ground," said a State Department specialist on the Middle East. "I've stopped predicting when it will happen, or even if it will."

But, the officials said, even if there is a shift in tactics to more conventional warfare, the 3½-year-old war is sure to continue. And they did not rule out a mass assault at any time.

Secretary of State George P. Shultz said in London on Friday, "All I know is that the Iranians keep talking as though they're about to launch one, but they haven't done so as yet."

Analysts have not detected any of the large-scale logistical movements recently that would signal such an attack, even though the Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini warned that the "epic day" is at hand.

Another indication that Iran may be re-evaluating its prospects, the officials said, is the "surprisingly muted" response by Iran to the downing of an Iranian jet by Saudi Arabian aircraft over the Persian Gulf on Tuesday. They said both Iran and the Saudis seem to be playing down the incident.

In addition, Iran has succeeded in restoring its oil exports from the Kharg Island terminal to normal levels despite Iraqi attacks on its shipping, a State Department official said. He speculated this might induce Iran to cease its retaliatory strikes against Saudi and other nations' tankers in the gulf.

GOP hopeful won't concede despite recount

BRYAN (AP) — Republican congressional candidate Max Hoyt did not concede the 6th District GOP nomination Saturday despite a recount that reversed results from the June 2 run-off and left him 10 votes behind opponent Joe Barton.

Hoyt finished 18 votes ahead of Barton in an unofficial tally after the runoff, but the recount completed Friday put Hoyt 10 votes behind, 4,635 to 4,625. That led Barton to claim victory.

"I will declare it...I am the winner," Barton said. "After the votes have been counted, and then recounted, I think it's all over with but the shouting."

If the recount is allowed to stand, Barton will face the Democratic nominee, former state Rep. Dan Kubiak, in the November general election. The winner replaces Republican U.S. Senate candidate Phil Gramm.

Hoyt said Saturday that his lawyers would be examining the election returns and may challenge the recount in court, but he pledged to support Barton in November if his legal maneuvers fail.

"It is unfortuante for both Joe and I that there is not yet 100 percent certainty as to whom the Republican nominee will be," he said. "It also appears that the recount is just a prelude to legal action for determining the final outcome of this race.

"I am extending to Joe Barton my full support should he end up the winner at the outcome of this election contest. As Republicans and conservative, we need to bury our differences from the primary election and work together to elect a true conservative to the (6th District seat)."

Hoyt declined further comment.

Returns released by the secretary of state's office after the run-off showed Hoyt ahead 4,630 votes to 4,612. The recount, which was requested by Barton, began Wednesday.

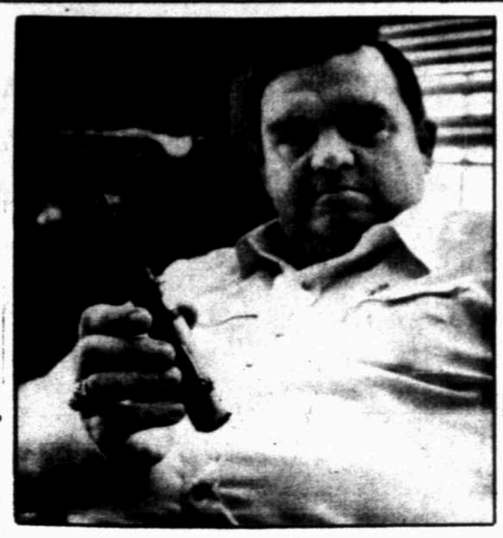
None of the final totals will be official until GOP officials in each county canvass the recount results this week.

Barton picked up four counts in the Johnson County recount concluded Friday, but county GOP chairman Lowell Stroud said two of the votes were open to question.

Two additional ballots were not counted and were put aside as "mutilated," Stroud said.

"It can't be resolved because you cannot reconcile a name on the roster with a vote. You can agonize over these things all day, but you have to make a decision," Stroud said.

Barton dismissed any allegations of irregularities, saying the race was no more irregular than any other election.



W.M. Gilliam, 39, warden for the Texas Department of Corrections Darrington Unit at Rosharan, shows off one of the many weapons that are made in prison.

AP Laserphoto

Inmates' homemade weapons simple as soap placed in sock

ROSHARON (AP) — They range from a bar of soap placed in a sock to a homemade flame thrower fashioned out of a fire extinguisher.

W.M. Gilliam has seen them all and he's amazed at the ingenuity of the people he's paid to watch.

"A weapon is in the eye of the beholder," he says. "If a man wants to kill a man, he can find a way."

Gilliam, 39, is warden of the Texas Department of Corrections Darrington Unit, scene of a brief uprising last month by a group of 14 inmates armed with homemade knives and clubs. No one was injured in the melee, but damage, primarily broken windows, was estimated in the thousands of dollars. Charges were filed against several inmates.

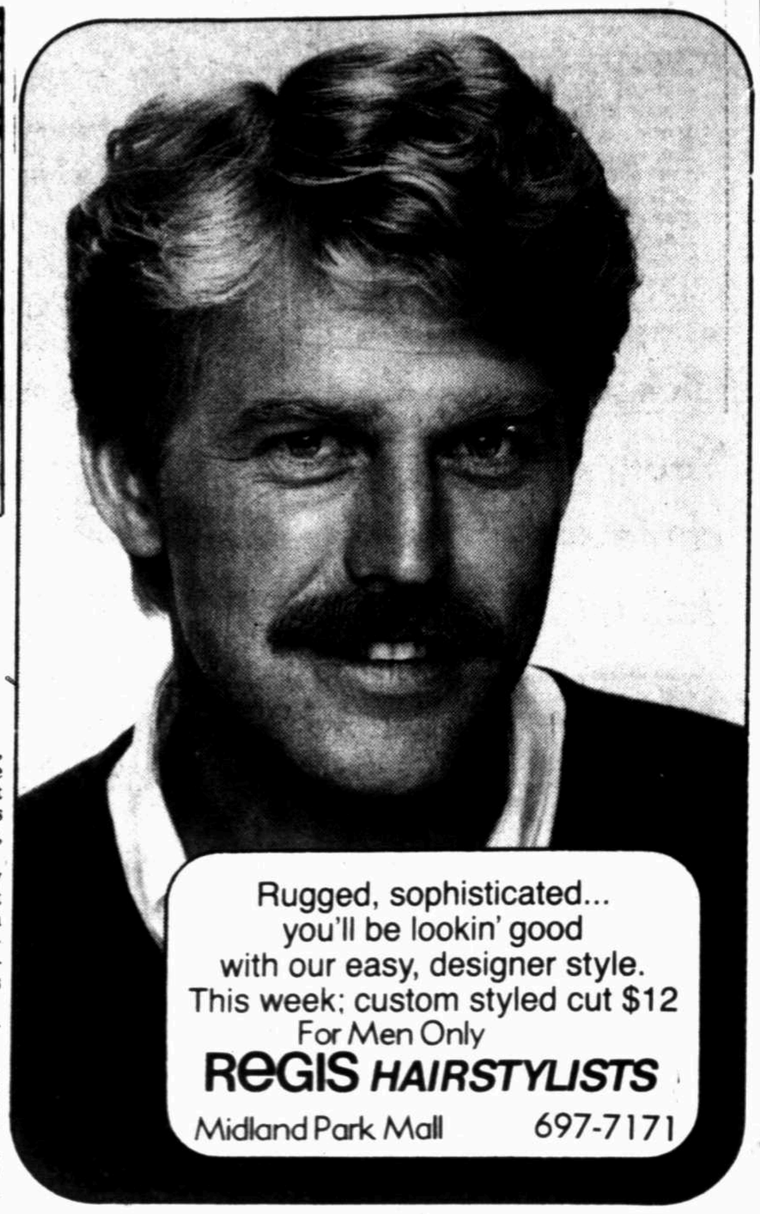
"The most unique thing I heard about was when an ol' boy was killed with a porkchop bone," Gilliam said, referring to a late 1970s incident at the Ellis Unit in Huntsville.

Gilliam, a 12-year TDC veteran, also recalls an incident in which one inmate lifted another prisoner out of his bunk, grabbed him by the legs and pounded his head on the floor, killing him.

Although guards make daily checks for anything prisoners might possess that could be used to make a weapon, the 7-foot, 350-pound Gilliam says there's always the possibility materials will be smuggled in as people enter and leave the prison.

"I've seen some pretty sophisticated things," he says.

The flamethrower tops his list. During Gilliam's tenure with the TDC at Huntsville, a Walls Unit inmate procured a fire extinguisher and turned it into a flamethrower. Fortunately, corrections officials discovered the weapon and confiscated it, he said.



KKK stages noisy, peaceful Houston march

HOUSTON (AP) — Some 58 members of the Ku Klux Klan, guarded by hundreds of police officers dressed in riot gear, staged a noisy but peaceful seven-block march through the heart of Houston's gay community Saturday to protest the growing acceptance of gay lifestyle.

Many of the spectators along the parade route shouted at the marchers, some of whom were in robes, black T-shirts and green army fatigues and helmets. No serious incidents or problems were reported, Police Chief Lee Brown said.

The march began 20 minutes late and lasted about 17 minutes.

At its peak, the crowd of spectators numbered about 2,000, Brown said.

"Last year I told you that you wrote the textbook on policing such events," Brown told the 600 officers at a debriefing session. "This year you wrote the second edition. You improved and revised it."

The operation would cost the city about $80,000, he said.

Klan members, their leader speaking through a bullhorn, carried signs promoting the organization and critical of local and state politicians. The marchers were brought to the scene and then taken away in buses provided by Houston police.

The parade participants, including at least three women, were preceded by 20 officers in riot gear. Another 21 officers followed them.

Recount shows Doggett lead increasing

AUSTIN (AP) — Lloyd Doggett's campaign staff expressed growing confidence and a Kent Hance worker said "we're just hoping" as recounts reported Saturday showed the Doggett lead widening in the battle for the Democratic nomination to the U.S. Senate.

Hance, a Lubbock congressman, requested the recount after he lost by an apparent 467-vote margin in the June 2 run-off with Doggett, an Austin state senator.

Both sides have monitored the county-by-county recount, which is expected to be completed by midweek.

"It looks pretty good," said Jim Marston, Doggett's deputy campaign manager. "We are not going to claim victory yet, but we grow more confident day by day."

According to Marston, with 59 percent of the votes recounted, Doggett had a 1,050-vote lead Saturday. Bexar County is the only major urban county in which the recount has not been completed, he said.

Saturday's recount of the Travis County vote gave Doggett 56 more votes than shown in the secretary of state's canvass, Marston said.

"There are not many counties with a lot of votes out," he said. "We're still going to be careful and have our watchers at every county, but we think it looks very good."

Hance spokesman Craig Tounget said the congressman's campaign staff reported Hance trailing by 850 votes on Saturday.

"We're not catching up yet," he said. "Actually, we've lost a little ground."

Tounget said recounts are scheduled Monday in about 90 counties in which paper ballots were used.

"There is still a great chance it can change," he said. "We're just hoping. There can be a lot of mistakes in there."

Girl wants to be first child astronaut

PORT ARANSAS (AP) — An 11-year-old schoolgirl has sent an application to the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, saying she wants to be the first child astronaut.

"They (had) sent a letter saying they're going to send citizen observers up," said Meredith Medley. Nothing was mentioned about age requirement, so Meredith decided to apply.

Steve Nesbitt, a public information specialist at the Johnson Space Center in Houston, where the astronauts train, blithely sent the youngster a standard astronaut recruitment package.

Nesbitt, who handles publicity for the astronauts, said the space agency receives a dozen letters every day from children who want to become astronauts.

He said he got Meredith's "cute" letter himself because "her mother knows my mother."

"Quite obviously, nothing's going to come of it," Nesbitt said. "We told her to call us back when she's 26."

All inquiries are answered, encouraging the youngsters to stay in school and giving general information about space travel, Nesbitt said.

Meredith said she got the idea to write NASA from Samantha Smith, a Maine schoolgirl who wrote the late Soviet leader Yuri Andropov and got an invitation to Moscow.

Meredith wrote a letter to NASA, saying she'd like to be the first child astronaut.

She sent a copy to President Reagan but he never replied, Meredith said.

Investigators crack 'Great Snake Robbery'

BEDFORD (AP) — Investigators say they've cracked what they dub "The Great Snake Robbery."

A 16-year-old Bedford youth accused of using a 3-foot-long snake to rob a convenience store of 36 cans of beer was apprended late Friday, police said. The youth was one of three who held up the 7-Eleven store about 1:30 a.m., police said.

Beford police Sgt. Bob Bramlett said the three teens entered the 7-Eleven store about 1:30 a.m. Friday and threw the snake at an attendant on duty.

While the attendant wrestled with the slithering reptile, the youths escaped with three 12-packs of beer valued at less than $20.

The snake, identified by Texas Parks & Wildlife game warden Donnie Fitts as a biting — but non-poisonous — garter snake, was killed by police, officers said.

The unidentified store attendant was recuperating Friday from being "scared out of his shoes," and one of the three boys was in custody, investigators said.

"One of the boys simply walked up to attendant and asked him, 'Do you think this is poisonous?' and waved the snake in front of his face," aid detective Doyle Smith. "He had the snake held behind the head, so the attendant didn't see anything but fangs, I guess.

"While the boy held the snake in front of the attendant, the other two boys walked in and took three 12-packs of beer," Smith said.

Youth reportedly confesses to woman's murder

HOUSTON (AP) — A teen-ager admitted he attacked and killed a 23-year-old mail carrier, whose mangled body was found Saturday dumped in an isolated wooded area, authorities said.

A wrecker driver who was towing away the suspect's car discovered the body of Deborah Sue Schatz near U.S. Highway 290 in north Houston, officers said. Miss Schatz disappeared Thursday while helping a co-worker deliver mail.

An autopsy by the Harris County medical examiners showed Miss Schatz was twice shot in the head with a .22-caliber pistol.

David I. Port, 17, who lived in the same neighborhood as Miss Schatz, was charged with murder Saturday and released on $20,000, the Harris County district attorney's office said.

Investigators found blood stains, bullet holes, empty shell casings and bloody clothes Friday in the garage of the youth's home, said detective Dave Collier. A pistol that officers believe was used to shoot Miss Schatz also was found, but police refused to disclose the location.

The teen-ager was arrested after he unexpectedly drove to his family's home, Collier said. A reporter yelled for police and federal officers standing outside the suspect's home in an affluent Memorial area neighborhood, and they gave chase, he said.

The youth drove his car into an apartment complex lot and crashed into a parked car, Collier said.

The teen-ager told police that he killed Miss Schatz, stuffed her body into a plastic bag and dumped it in Buffalo Bayou, officer Michael Waltmon said. Divers searched the murky, rain-swollen bayou Friday evening but failed to find the body.

The suspect, an 11th grader at a north Houston high school, had been missing "about the same time" that Miss Schatz disappeared, police said.

WEATHER SUMMARY

Showers stretching from Texas to Maine and from Washington to Wisconsin are forecast today by the National Weather Service.

Temperature in mid-90s forecast for Basin today

From Staff and Wire Reports

It'll be a sunny day today.

On the hotness scale, the temperature will peak into the mid-90s today, said the weatherman at the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport.

Winds will be southerly at 10 to 20 mph.

Tonight will be fair; the low will be near 70.

For Monday, the weatherman is calling for more sunny weather and a high in the mid-90.

Saturday's high temperature was 95 degrees, and the record high for a June 9 is 105 degrees in 1981. The overnight low was 72 degrees, which was nowhere near the record low of 51 degrees for a June 10 in 1975.

STATE

Sultry weather settled across most of Texas as partly cloudy to cloudy skies dominated eastern sections of the state while mostly fair skies were the rule over the west.

The humid conditions over the east were the result of a mass of warm air that brought moisture in from the Gulf of Mexico. A weak cool front over West Texas resulted in drier conditions west of the humid air.

Afternoon highs hit the 80s and 90s statewide, while the mercury topped out above the 100-degree mark at some locales along the upper coast and in the Lower Rio Grande Valley.

Southerly winds at 10 to 20 mph were the rule over the east, while westerly breezes at 5 to 10 mph were noted behind the cool front in West Texas.

The forecast called for considerable early morning cloudiness across the coastal and eastern sections of Texas on Sunday. Partly cloudy skies and muggy conditions were expected by the afternoon hours.

Widely scattered showers were expected to develop along the coast early Sunday and move inland during the day. A slight chance of thunderstorms also was on tap for North Texas.

Afternoon temperatures were forecast to reach the upper 80s and 90s statewide with a few readings near 100 over the Big Bend.

NATION

Unseasonably hot weather continued across the Northeast on Saturday while showers and thunderstorms struck the Midwest with locally heavy rain and flooding in Kansas.

Record highs for the date, all 95 or 96 degrees, were set at Atlantic City, N.J.; Boston; Hartford, Conn.; New York City; Portland, Maine; Providence, R.I., and Wilmington, Del.

The hottest city in the nation was Martinsburg, W.Va., with 100 degrees.

No real end seen to the heat wave was expected until early this week. It was being caused by a large high pressure area east of the Carolinas — sometimes called a Bermuda high.

FARMING

The Ogallala Aquifer supports the most extensive groundwater irrigated region in the United States. Stretching from Midland up to the southern border of South Dakota, 95 percent of the aquifer's resources are used for irrigation. With eight states pulling water from its base, Texas rates highest in depletion of ground water, taking 70 percent.

"There's been a lot more effort on conservation," said Rick Heimes of the U.S. Geological Survey in Denver, Colo.

SINCE THE LAST symposium 15 years ago, research into soil and water conservation, new strains of drought tolerant crops and other ways to reduce irrigation demands have been studied.

"In the early 1900s, there was a lot of water being pumped," said Ken Carver of the High Plains Underground Water Conservation District No. 1 in Lubbock. "We thought the wells would never run dry."

Some farmers are realizing the economic advantages to reducing irrigation and still producing maximum yields, Carver said. The change began with the promotion of underground pipelines, which switched from concrete to plastic. It continued through efforts such as closing the open holes of abandoned wells to reduce possible pollution of the aquifer, studying playa lake discharges and tail water return systems and other methods of conservation.

"Today we can no longer waste it," he said. "We must maintain the water on the farm and not let it get off the field. (If crop prices don't rise) technology is the only thing that's going to save the farmer."

A pre-plant soil moisture program, using meters that are buried deep in the soil, is assisting some farmers in mapping out water needs for the upcoming planting season. Conducted by the Soil Conservation Service and the High Plains Water District, the computerized data can be used to determine the type of soil and decide how much irrigation will be required to keep the moisture near field capacity. Two methods are used: the tensiometer, which is preferred for reading moisture needs for crops requiring more water such as corn and vegetables; and gypsum blocks, used best with less water-sensitive crops like cotton, grain sorghum and small grains.

"THIS GIVES farmers the soil water holding capacity," said Bill Risinger, soil scientist with the Soil Conservation Service. "It gives them how much they need to irrigate for maximum soil infiltration, although most of them don't fill (the field) to the maximum because they want to leave some room for rain."

Another method of maximizing watering procedures is being conducted through surge irrigation, according to Tim Dybala, irrigation engineer with the Soil Conservation Service. The method allows the irrigation flow to be turned on and off for certain lengths of time instead of allowing it to continously flood the field. Not only does this reduce the tailwater runoff, it also cuts down on deep percolation water losses and lets the irrigator water more rows while maintaining the flow. The device can be preset, eliminating midnight water changes, and can be used for light or heavy watering, depending on which cycle of flow is set.

"Every farmer that buys it is going to have to tailor his management to his own farm because of the differences in soils and needs," Dybala said. The units are available commercially at about $1,000, costing maybe $1,300 to adjust it to most farm equipment, according to James Mitchell, a Lubbock County farmer.

"In some instances, you can pick up 50 percent efficiency," Mitchell said. "It pays for itself the first time it runs and it requires less maintenance than going out and changing the water. You can go to sleep and see about it the next day."

Furrow dikes, or small dams of soil in the furrows, were first tried in the early 1930s. Since then, farmers such as Mitchell who employ them in their fields have reported increased crop yields during the growing seasons.

THE SMALL dikes can trap water in fields irrigated with center pivot systems, such as a modified one that drops water at the soil surface through long drop lines. Especially on circular farms, tailwater runoff is eliminated as the water stays in the small furrows which usually are placed on every other row. Dryland farmers also can benefit with the small dikes in that they hold rainfall.

THE DROPLINE modification to the center pivot eliminates evaporation losses often associated with the sprinklers in the high West Texas winds. According to Mitchell, who farms 320 acres with one towable pivot, it cost around $6,000 to convert his system so that the water will be placed directly above the soil. The sprinkler itself costs anywhere from $25,000-$30,000.

According to studies made by the Soil Conservation Service in 1978, Mitchell's system efficiency increased from 59.8 percent before the droplines were added to 95 percent.

Wind stripcropping is another concept that is growing in use by farmers. The method involves planting 60-inch strips of perennial grasses in terraces. The terraces not only help block the wind, reducing soil erosion but also they improve soil-water management. Weeping lovegrass has been used effectively by some farmers and, during a three-year study by the Soil Conservation Service, other results, such as improved weed control because of a reduced loss of herbicides from the wind, are possible.

WATER

"But there is a serious question whether playa lake water is available in sufficient quantities to justify (the expenses of) recharging," said Schneider. And Warren Wood of the U.S. Geological Survey said the Ogallala is already getting most of its recharge from the playa lakes, so the prospects of increased recharge from this source are limited.

A more radical approach to recharging the Ogallala is being tested in the Lubbock area by High Plains Underground Water Conservation District No. 1.

The district hopes to exploit a heretofore untapped source of water — the unsaturated sand layer which lies above the Ogallala, where some 1.6 billion acre-feet of water lie trapped in capillary storage.

"If you take a pail of sand, punch some holes in the bottom and pour in some water, you'll notice that only about a third of the water comes out the bottom," said Wayne Wyatt, manager of the district and the originator of this secondary recovery scheme.

The rest of the water is trapped in the sand, said Wyatt. "But if you cover the top of the pail and pump in some air, more water comes out the bottom."

Wyatt proposes to do the same thing to the sand layer above the Ogallala; he figures some 300-400 million of those 1.6 billion acre-feet can be pushed down into the aquifer by air pressure.

Wyatt is testing his thesis by sinking a pipe 129 feet into the earth, hooking it up to a compressor and pumping 15 pounds of air pressure down to the unsaturated sand. It's too early to tell how successful the project will be, but Wyatt said early indications are positive.

But even if recharging the Ogallala proves feasible, it will not so much prevent the eventual depletion of the aquifer as delay it.

"We see no outside forces which are going to solve our water problems," said Harry Mapp of Oklahoma State University.

Mapp predicted a shift from irrigation to dryland farming as the Ogallala is depleted and energy prices rise.

"Much has been done, but much remains to be done" to slow depletion of the Ogallala, he said. "Without these concerted efforts, the economic life of the Ogallala will be greatly reduced, with ill effects for all of us."

Iraq threatens Iranian economic installations

The Associated Press

Iraq threatened Saturday to attack Iranian economic installations, including its Kharg Island oil terminal, "without mercy," until there is no oil for Iran to export.

"We now possess all the means enabling us to deal the final blow" to the Iranian economy, Iraqi state radio said. "Logic dictates that Iraq deal its blow without mercy."

Iranian jets and artillery attacked across the southern part of the border Saturday, according to war communiques from Iran and Iraq.

A statement issued in Baghdad said eight Iraqi civilians were killed and 23 others were hurt by Iranian artillery fire that hit the provincial capital of Basra and six other border cities.

Iran's official Islamic Republic News Agency said Iranian planes successfully attacked Iraqi military installations and "sensitive points" at Ali Al-Gharbi. Quoting a communique issued in Tehran, the agency said four Iranian jets also struck Iraqi forces near the town of Ali Al-Sharqi.

PILOT

"I'VE HAD HER in minimum-size twins and I have had her in this thing (TWA's Cessna Citation, a twin-engine corporate jet), and she does a good job. I have no question about her ability to fly."

Kankaala said corporate aviation leans toward male pilots and noted that 90 percent of the passengers in corporate aircraft are men.

"I've heard women say, 'I don't want my husband going off on a two-day trip in a corporate airplane with a woman pilot.' "

He said the airline transport license held by his wife is "like the master's degree or a doctorate in aviation."

Ms. Kankaala's background in flying is an asset to the control tower.

" 'I'm glad they've got a pilot up in the tower,' " she said pilots have said. A fellow pilot in the control tower can help the air controllers understand the airborne pilot's side of the pilot-air controller encounter. "A lot of controllers don't know a whole lot about the flying aspect."

Nevertheless, Ms. Kankaala is not intent on going to the Federal Aviation Administration Academy in Oklahoma City to become an air traffic controller. "It would be nice," she said, however.

"That honestly is not in my heart what I want to do. It's a good paying job. But it's not my forte." Flying is.

Even so, she was working in the Minneapolis Air Route Traffic Control Center before she got the job in Midland last September after her husband landed a job with TWA in August.

"We were especially interested in the fact she had a background in aviation as a pilot, which would add to her credentials," said her boss, Jerry Kubiak, manager of the Midland control tower.

Ms. Kankaala has a "can-do" attitude, Kubiak said.

"She doesn't have to be looked after or prodded. She's a self-starter.... Bonnie knows every nook and cranny (in the control tower)."

Kubiak mentioned, too, that there today is an "understanding and mutual respect" between pilots and air controllers.

Ms. Kankaala edits the monthly in-house newsletter, "On Frequency"; conducts FFA pilot-safety seminars, teaches gifted children at the Carver Cultural Center on aerodynamics and future aspects of flying, and raises two sons, Eric, 6, and Justin, 3.

"I enjoy teaching and lecturing," she said.

And flying.

Thunderstorms, heat, snow dot nation's weather map

By ROGER PETTERSON
Associated Press Writer

A new onslaught of rain-laden thunderstorms caused flooding Saturday in the Midwest, forcing people from their homes, stranding two people on a street sign for hours and floating away cars in the wake of killer tornadoes that devastated two small towns.

On one side of the thunderstorms, a mass of hot air broiled the Northeast with record temperatures near 100, while to the west, the waterlogged Colorado Rockies shivered with more June snow and Winter Park, Colo., greeted the ninth day of June with a low of 23 degrees.

During the night thunderstorms dumped heavy rain from Kansas to Illinois with many places getting more than 3 inches, and hailstones the size of golf balls fell across parts of Kansas. Olathe, Kan., got an even 8 inches of rain in 24 hours. Soldier, Kan., got an unofficial 5 inches during the night, for a four-day total of 13.5 inches.

"We expect this system to be hanging over the Midwest for a day or two more. There is the potential for more severe weather before this thing moves east," Hugh Crowther, a meteorologist with the National Severe Storms Forecast Center in Kansas City, Mo., said early Saturday.

The storm system had spawned more than 50 tornadoes since Thursday from Oklahoma to Wisconsin, and 16 people were killed.

Up to 200 people were forced from their homes in Overland Park, Kan., by flooding, estimated Police Lt. Phil Barbour.

Indian Creek spilled from its banks from Overland Park south to Olathe, sweeping cars as much as two blocks and flooding numerous homes, said police Capt. John Round.

Two teen-age girls caught by racing water clutched a street sign along a flooded Overland Park street for seven hours before being pulled to safety about 7 a.m.

Police tried to use scuba gear to rescue the girls, and finally had to use the Lenexa Police Department's 20-ton, tracked armored personnel carrier to bull through the 5-foot-deep current.

"They were pretty glad to see us," said Lenexa police Maj. George Barton. "They looked extremely frightened and fatigued when we got to them ... but they were OK."

Keyna Baalman, a dispatcher in Colby, Kan., said 55-mph wind and hail caused extensive damage to several barns and farmhouses outside the city Saturday, and wind knocked down numerous trees and power lines.

City officials in Manhattan, Kan., where streets turned into rivers for the second time this week, planned to pump floodwater from basement offices in the city hall, according to city manager Don Harmon. Manhattan police said manhole covers blew open as sewers flooded.

Manhattan got nearly 5 inches of rain Wednesday, with an additional 5 inches overnight Friday.

More thunderstorms rumbled toward St. Joseph, Mo., as the cleanup resumed from flash floods Friday that tore apart homes and businesses, triggered mudslides, and peeled sheets of asphalt from streets.

An estimated 150 businesses, 100 homes and 100 cars were damaged Thursday night and Friday. One man died when he was swept away and about 250 people were evacuated.

Mudslides on a hill overlooking a trailer park in St. Joseph, Mo., forced the evacuation of about 75 families Saturday, police said.

"Mud on the hill is just sliding into the trailers. So far there hasn't been a lot of damage, but it is knocking the trailers around a little bit," said police Sgt. Alex Perez. The town received 7 inches of rain in 24 hours, the weather service said.

Kansas City also was hit by 3 to 4 inches of rain Friday night and early Saturday. Parts of Interstate 35 were closed and waist-deep water swamped several city streets, the Wyandotte County sheriff's office said.

It was so hot in the Northeast on Friday with temperatures in the 90s that subway tracks bent in Boston. The mercury soared through the 90s again Saturday and no relief was expected Sunday.

In sharp contrast more snow fell in the Colorado Rockies, but at a slower rate than Friday.

Lower elevations got rain and a section of Interstate 70 was still closed Saturday by flooding on the Colorado River between Fruita and Loma west of Grand Junction, the Colorado State Patrol reported.

In Aspen, Colo., where geologists kept watch on a section of Aspen Mountain they feared might slide into town, snow fell on the mountain Friday night and a crack in the ground widened half an inch. About 200 people were evacuated Thursday and then allowed to return Friday when it appeared a slide was not imminent.

Anti-nuclear protesters march in London

LONDON (AP) — Tens of thousands of anti-nuclear demonstrators marched through central London and many tried to blockade the U.S. Embassy and the headquarters of the seven-nation economic summit on Saturday.

Police said they arrested 198 people, including 80 who were hauled away as they tried to seal off The Mall leading to Lancaster House, where leaders of seven major Western industrial democracies were finishing their three-day summit.

The U.S. Embassy at Grosvenor Square, a mile from Lancaster House, was under virtual siege during a four-hour protest by 2,000 demonstrators who lay down across access roads and linked themselves together by cobwebs of string. Police set up barricades and dragged away demonstrators to make way for the occasional official car.

In brilliant sunshine and 73-degree weather, a huge procession wound two miles from London's Hyde Park to Trafalgar Square behind an 18-foot model of a U.S. cruise missile. Organizers said 100,000 people took part but police estimated the crowd at 50,000.

Trick cyclists and street musicians weaved among the marchers. Sporting banners with the legends, "Stop Thatcher's Surrender — Return Cruise to Sender" and "Reagan, Hollywood or Bust," the march took nearly five hours to snake into Trafalgar Square.

It was the biggest protest since 250,000 demonstrators gathered prior to the deployment of the cruise missiles in Britain last November.

President Reagan smiled and waved from his black limousine at about 150 jeering demonstrators who were allowed to remain behind barricades in The Mall. Their chants switched from "Maggie out" to "Ronnie, Ronnie, Ronnie, out, out, out."

A series of motorcades carrying host Conservative Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher and the leaders of France, Italy, Canada, West Germany and Japan also swept past.

Hart tells Democratic delegates at state convention 'I do not quit'

DENVER (AP) — Gary Hart said Saturday he has considered the long odds against his defeating Walter F. Mondale, but has decided he will continue to seek the Democratic presidential nomination.

Recalling other tough political contests he has faced, Hart told 3,000 cheering delegates to the Colorado Democratic Convention that if there is one thing they know about him it is "that I do not quit."

"I continue most of all because to turn back now would violate all I stand for, all I believe in," Hart said.

With Hart's devastating loss in New Jersey in one of the final primary elections on June 5, many of Hart's advisers urged him to either withdraw, or continue a low-key candidacy in which his name would be placed in nomination at the Democratic National Convention before Mondale would win a first ballot victory.

But in his speech to the home crowd in Colorado, Hart indicated that he would intensely pursue delegates, including more than 300 who are uncommitted to Hart, Mondale or the Rev. Jesse Jackson.

However, Mondale is already assured the nomination unless 27 or more of the 1,994 delegates who say they back him defect. It only takes 1,967 to win the nomination and Mondale seems likely to pick up more as some 100 state party leaders are assigned delegate seats in the next few weeks before the July convention. He gained five in that category Saturday in Massachusetts. Hart has 1,222.75 delegates, including two gained Saturday in Massachusetts.

Colorado Sen. Gary Hart acknowledges the cheers from the crowd Saturday at the Colorado Democratic Convention in Denver. Hart told the Democrats that he does not intend to withdraw as a candidate for president. At right is Hart's daughter Andrea.

AP Laserphoto

"This candidacy has been nothing less than a miracle, a political miracle possible only in America," he said. "And it continues to be, for there is only one delegate count that matters and that is the one taken...in San Francisco.

"Today, despite the odds, the predictions of experts, and the cynicism of pundits," Hart said, "this candidacy is alive and well."

Several party leaders who talked with Hart in Washington Thursday and Friday said they got the impression from him that he would keep his name in the race, but do nothing to harm the prospects for eventual party unity if he fails to block Mondale at the convention.

And in his speech Saturday Hart included one conciliatory note for Democrats who have urged him to pull out for the sake of party unity, and to increase Mondale's chances of defeating President Reagan in the fall.

California biologist removes bear from town's tree

GROVER CITY, Calif. (AP) — The 150-pound California black bear was minding his own business, lazing 50 feet up in a cypress tree. But the townsfolk weren't pleased and they called in officials.

"We want him tranquilized and safely out of the tree," police Sgt. Oscar Campbell said during the night of babysitting that began Thursday evening and didn't end until 5:30 a.m. Friday. "We don't want to hurt him."

Apparently they didn't. The vigil outside D.W. Grover's restaurant and bar in this town 150 miles northwest of Los Angeles was resolved when a state Department of Fish and Game biologist trucked the young, anesthetized bear to Los Padres National Forest.

Injured man charged in pipe bomb case

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — A 24-year-old man injured in an explosion in his rented car at an Iowa shopping center was charged Saturday with possession of bomb parts, and a federal prosecutor said authorities believe he is the person who planted more than 20 pipe bombs found in three states.

Earl Steven Karr was charged with illegal possession of an unregistered firearm in connection with the discovery of pipe bomb parts in his room in a downtown Minneapolis rooming house, said U.S. Attorney James M. Rosenbaum.

At a news conference, Rosenbaum said Karr may face additional charges in Wisconsin and Illinois, the other states where bombs were found. Five people were hurt in the blasts which began in early May.

"We have found no indication that he had an accomplice or was working with part of any organized group," Rosenbaum told reporters. He would not speculate on a motive.

The prosecutor said Karr had been living at the rooming house a short time but declined to say whether the man had another address. The Milwaukee Journal reported in a copyright story Saturday that the suspect had addresses in Minneapolis and Houston.

A spokeswoman at Paige Hall in Minneapolis said the suspect had lived there for two months.

Rosenbaum said the major break in the case was the explosion in the car in Iowa.

He said items taken from the car appeared to match materials used to make bombs which were placed in cities in Wisconsin, Minnesota and Illinois since May 5.

Rosenbaum said search warrants were obtained to seize other devices or parts that could be used in bomb manufacturing from the suspect's Minneapolis home. Police also seized theatrical makeup "suitable for personal disguise," he said.

Karr was transferred Friday to the burn center at St. Paul-Ramsey Medical Center in St. Paul, Minn., where he was listed in serious condition Saturday with first- and second-degree burns on his face and arms.

Depending on his condition, Karr might be transferred to jail this weekend, Rosenbaum said. He said an initial court appearance would be scheduled Monday or Tuesday.

"We are optimistic that the apprehension will terminate this series of senseless bombings," Rosenbaum said in a prepared statement. "We have no indications of any organized groups being responsible."

Rosenbaum said there is a chance that some pipe bombs may still be found, but he said authorities are optimistic no more will be placed.

Demonstrators protest U.S. involvement

NEW YORK (AP) — Almost 10,000 demonstrators marched under a broiling sun Saturday through midtown Manhattan to protest U.S. military involvement in Central America and the Caribbean basin.

The protesters, waving signs and banners, wove uptown from Dag Hammarskjold Plaza, across the street from the United Nations, to Madison Avenue and 60th Street, then westward to Seventh Avenue and southward again to Times Square, where a mock trial of U.S. policymakers was staged. No arrests were reported.

Before setting out, the crowd heard speakers read "people's indictments" for the mock trial.

"We charge the defendants with planning for nuclear war and destruction. We charge them with planning for genocide," said Suzanne Ross, a leader of the coalition that organized the rally and march.

"We must convict these defendants today and stop this insanity," she said.

Activist lawyer William Kunstler said in a speech the mock charges against President Reagan, Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger, U.N. Ambassador Jeane Kirkpatrick and former Secretary of State Henry Kissinger were being leveled "by the people of the world."

"Of course, you know what the verdict is," Kunstler said in an interview, accusing the administration of fostering oppression.

About 280 police officers on foot, mopeds and horseback flanked the march route.

The rally was held in a fair-like atmosphere with 47th Street closed to traffic and lined with food and drink vendors. Anti-administration speeches were interspersed with musical performances while the crowd milled about. Police at the scene estimated the crowd at nearly 10,000.

Mistletoe caught in cloths

Ancient Druid priests in Britain and Gaul caught mistletoe in white cloths, believing that contact with earth would not only diminish the plant's power to promote fertility and to cure many ailments, but also bring bad luck.

Woman aids government in drug probe

NEW YORK (AP) — When Martha Torres agreed to go undercover and inform against suspects in a major international cocaine ring, all she asked for was life insurance and protection for her children.

She told federal agents she did not want money in return for infiltrating the ring.

Nor was she offered a plea bargain or immunity from prosecution. The reason, authorities said, is that there was no need to — she had done no wrong.

Mrs. Torres is a rare drug informant, one who volunteered to help probe the violent business of importing Colombian cocaine.

Last week, she testified in the trial of 12 people charged in a ring that allegedly imported a ton of cocaine a month through Miami to New York, Chicago, Houston and California.

She said she learned the ring earned $150 million a year in profits, comparable to the income of a healthy Fortune 500 corporation.

Two alleged bosses of the ring — former Colombian senator Severo Escobar, 53, and Colombian lawyer Victor Eduardo Mera, 30 — are being tried in abstentia because they vanished after their apparently mistaken release by U.S. marshals in February.

The case began last August when a worker in Mrs. Torres' Manhattan diamond-district jewelry shop called and asked her to raise bail following his arrest on cocaine charges, authorities said.

Mrs. Torres said his friends told her they would give her the bail money but asked her to lie about its source by falsely claiming it came from her business.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Deborah J. Stavile told a federal jury in Manhattan that Mrs. Torres was "afraid to help and afraid to refuse."

Instead she "approached the government" and agreed to infiltrate the South American cocaine ring, the prosecutor said.

She called Mrs. Torres "a very special witness, a witness who...had no criminal involvement."

Defense lawyers have implied that Mrs. Torres left behind business debts and "bad feelings" before she, her husband and children — authorities will not say how many she has or give her age — were relocated under the Federal Witness Protection Program.

Mrs. Torres, a Spanish-speaking woman who moved from Miami to the Jamaica section of Queens with her family, agreed to wear a concealed tape recorder and help federal agents find out who supplied the employee with cocaine. She also enlisted the help of her 22-year-old son, Jorge.

She moved into more important jobs in the ring, authorities said, leading her to Mera, a Miami resident and Colombian lawyer who allegedly supervised the ring's New York connection.

Mrs. Torres testified that Mera arranged for her to pick up a car carrying 24 kilograms of cocaine last Nov. 25. She was to pay later. She got the car and turned it over to the Drug Enforcement Administration.

Informant admits to 'misstatements' in De Lorean trial

LOS ANGELES (AP) — After 14 days on the witness stand, the key informant in the John Z. De Lorean drug trial has provided a somewhat different story of drugs and money than the one he told the grand jury that indicted the automaker nearly two years ago.

The star witness, James Timothy Hoffman, admits to a few "misstatements" before the grand jury, most of which the government says are "innocuous."

But De Lorean's defense team claims the mistakes were really lies that altered the case against the celebrity automaker.

"When does a mistake become a lie?" defense attorney Howard Weitzman asked outside court Friday. "If a misstatement is made under oath it's a lie."

Weitzman said he had counted "probably more than 50 misstatements under oath" during Hoffman's time on the witness stand. Weitzman said he may have "a few more questions" for Hoffman when the trial resumes Tuesday.

Hoffman, 43, a drug smuggler turned informant, has openly admitted mistakes but denies he lied about anything when he came before the grand jury on Oct. 29, 1982, to testify about De Lorean.

"I was in error," he has said repeatedly. "I was mistaken."

Hoffman, who was once De Lorean's neighbor, is credited with inspiring the government's "sting" operation against De Lorean.

The 59-year-old automaker is charged with conspiring to distribute $24 million worth of cocaine in an effort to salvage his failing car company. Conviction on all counts carries a maximum penalty of 72 years.

Sometime after De Lorean's indictment, Hoffman said he sat down and wrote out in longhand a list of "discrepancies" between his grand jury testimony and the story he told prosecutors.

The list of eight "discrepancies" was entered in evidence last week, and Hoffman elaborated on some other mistakes brought out by the defense.

'Late bloomer' graduates at top of class

HUMBOLDT, Tenn. (AP) — Robert Allen was 32 years old when he first walked through a school house door, but three years later he's graduating at the top of his college class and wants to become a professor.

Allen grew up an only child reared by elderly relatives who refused to send him to school. He decided to "give college a whirl" when he was laid off from his job as a janitor.

"I have never encountered a student with such a wide general knowledge," said Dr. William Odom, president of Bethel College, a small Cumberland Presbyterian Church-supported school in nearby McKenzie. "He got it from reading every book he could get his hands on."

Allen came to Bethel in September 1981 when federal cutbacks cost him his minimum-wage job financed through the Comprehensive Employment and Training Act. He graduates from Bethel on Sunday with a grade average of 3.8 on a scale of 4.0.

In August, Allen will enroll at Vanderbilt University in Nashville with a fellowship to work for a doctorate in English. He plans to become a college professor.

Allen lives with his 77-year-old great-aunt, Bevie Jones, in the same ramshackle house they've rented for more than 20 years.

Renting for $20 a month, the house lacks indoor plumbing and is surrounded by a thicket of trees and bushes that protect it from a nearby highway.

Allen said he likes the solitude, and when not reading, he writes poetry or entertains himself with an ancient, peddle-powered organ and an old banjo that once belonged to his grandfather.

Allen's parents were divorced soon after his birth, and he was brought up by a grandfather, a great-uncle and three great-aunts.

"I don't know what became of my dad, and my mother disappeared when I was not quite 6 years old," he said.

He said his family refused to send him to school for fear his father would try to take him away, even though the father never has tried to contact him.

"We had a home-bound teacher for about a year and a half when I was a child, and that was it until Bethel," he said.

Firefighters contain 1,000-acre brushfire

LOMPOC, Calif. (AP) — Firefighters used a combination air-and-ground attack to gain the upper hand Saturday on a 1,000-acre brushfire that burned to within a half-mile of 30 canyon homes.

"Between the air drop, the bulldozers and hand crews they were able to get a line around it," Santa Barbara County firefighter Bill Cadam said.

The fire was contained shortly after 1 p.m., Cadam said. About 300 firefighters would remain on the scene through the day to guard against flare-ups, he said.

About 100 residents of the Miguelito Canyon area who had been urged to evacuate Friday night were allowed to go back into their homes Saturday morning, he said. The canyon is about 50 miles north of Santa Barbara.

Blasts rock fuel depot

SIDNEY, N.Y. (AP) — Multiple explosions and fire rocked a fuel depot early Saturday and the flames spread to nearby businesses, forcing authorities to temporarily evacuate about 200 people in a three-block area.

The Morabito & Sons Fuel Co. building was destroyed when a tanker truck and two storage tanks — one holding gasoline and the other kerosene — exploded, said Fire Chief Joseph Maddalone.

The flames also gutted a nearby Agway warehouse and the K & D Vending Co. The truck driver was injured.

Utility asks for more tests

SAN LUIS OBISPO, Calif. (AP) — Pacific Gas & Electric Co., having completed low-power tests on Unit 1 of the Diablo Canyon atomic power plant, has asked the Nuclear Regulatory Commission for permission to begin full-power tests, a utility spokeswoman says.

On April 13, the NRC gave the utility permission to begin low-power testing at the facility, which has encountered many construction delays and has been the focus of heated anti-nuclear protests.

A major point of controversy was the discovery of an earthquake fault three miles offshore from the seaside facility.

Volunteers save baby owls

SUNNYVALE, Calif. (AP) — Humane Society volunteers rescued six baby burrowing owls that otherwise would have been buried alive at a construction site.

Aloft, the owls' parents shrieked and buzzed the site Friday, apparently fearful their youngsters were being raided.

Volunteers from the Santa Clara Humane Society carefully shoved a plastic pipe, as a breathing aid, into the owls' underground apartment on a lot near a busy freeway. For an hour, the workers scooped dirt away until they could reach in and retrieve the birds.

Presbyterians elect southerner to administrative post

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — The Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) leaves its annual General Assembly with its northern and southern streams officially merged, but more stormy waters ahead.

Commissioners of the 3.1-million-member church picked a northerner as their symbolic leader and a southerner as their day-to-day administrator.

For southerners, outnumbered 2-1 in the merged church, the election of the Rev. James Andrews as chief administrator, or stated clerk, provides a little extra security in dealing with the northern church's New York based staff.

"They're already being much nicer to me," one member of the Atlanta-based southern staff said a day after Andrews defeated longtime northern powerhouse Bill Thompson for the four-year post. "Of course, they'll start plotting something tomorrow."

Actually, Andrews has ties to both churches, which reunited last year after splitting over slavery in 1861. He served as a minister in the northern church before becoming stated clerk of the southern Presbyterians.

But his style is different than that of Thompson, a former Wichita, Kan., lawyer whose social activism made him one of the world's most influential religious leaders.

Where Thompson, who had run the northern church for 18 years, showed no hesitation in wide-ranging applications of the General Assembly's policies, Andrews has promised more "consultation" before he acts.

And while Andrews insists that his politics are similar to Thompson's, he wants to shift the focus of his office away from activism and toward details of the merger.

"I'm talking about the clerk, not the church," he cautionned, predicting that other Presbyterian leaders would take up the slack. "Look at the committees in the National and World Councils. They all have a disproportionate number of Presbyterians on them."

But Andrews said he would concentrate on such things as blending rulebooks from the northern and southern branches.

"This church will find or lose its soul in the Book of Order," he said.

The work ranges from relatively simple tasks, such as working out a common pay-scale and benefit package for northern and southern staffff members, to politically intricate decisions, such as where to put the church headquarters, now split between New York and Atlanta or how to re-draw boundaries of presbyteries and synods where both branches had churches before the merger.

Only two states — Florida and Tennessee — settled their boundaries at last week's assembly.

Sikh militants keep vow to fight Hindu troops who stormed temple

EDITOR'S NOTE — New Delhi bureau chief Victoria Graham reviews the buildup to last week's battle at the Golden Temple in Amritsar, which resulted in the deaths of hundreds of Sikhs and Indian soldiers.

By VICTORIA GRAHAM
Associated Press Writer

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — Late Tuesday the hypnotic chanting from the Golden Temple ceased and deadly silence spread over the holy lake. An army loudspeaker ordered Sikh militants out of the seat of their religion in the holy city of Amritsar.

But the Sikhs answered as they had promised.

From the Akal Takht — the "Immortal Seat of Power" — from the sandbagged ramparts and marble parapets of the 400-year-old temple, machine guns, mortars and anti-tank guns fired at the Indian army. The battle had begun.

With tanks, rockets and machine guns, the army stormed the temple, where Sikh extremists have orchestrated the violent two-year-old campaign for political and religious concessions for predominantly Sikh Punjab state.

The battle raged, often hand-to-hand.

Thirty-six hours later the "Lake of Nectar" for ritual bathing was red with the blood of soldiers and Sikh separatists.

That was the scene described in reports from the scene and from official dispatches.

More than 250 militants and 60 soldiers were killed, the government said, although some reliable sources said 500 Sikh bodies were gathered from the white marble corridors and cremated after the battle.

Troops captured 450 extremists and seized large quantities of machine guns and ammunition from the Golden Temple, 40 other Sikh temples and some Hindu shrines in the northwestern state of Punjab.

Fundamentalist preacher Jarnail Singh Bhindranwale and his top lieutenants were dead.

The government declared that the tragic but necessary operation had "broken the back" of Sikh terrorism that has claimed 300 lives, mostly of Hindus, in the past three months.

The Sikhs, through their Akali Dal party, are seeking religious privileges and some political autonomy in Punjab, where they make up 52 percent of the 17 million people. The Sikh faith, formed from a combination of the Hindu and Moslem religions, is a minority in the rest of India.

Some extremists began looting, burning and murdering, finally prompting the government to move against them in the shrines that had doubled as arms warehouses.

Sikhs in northern India rioted in anger over violation of their temple, and charged that Bhindranwale had been murdered. Opposition members said the carnage was a result of two years of deliberate inaction by the governing Congress Party. They warned of the consequences of continued press censorship, curfews and travel bans imposed in Punjab a week ago.

An election year debate on the operation is under way. It is expected to hurt Prime Minister Indira Gandhi with many Sikh voters but help her with moderates and with Hindus who make up the vast majority in the conservative north.

It also is expected to polarize the Sikh community of 13 million and give impetus to the movement for the separate Sikh state.

The Indian government is alarmed by the demand because an autonomous Sikh nation would encourage many other movements for independence, from the northeast to southern Tamil Nadu.

The possibility of an operation against the Golden Temple had been debated for two years and until recently Mrs. Gandhi's government promised it would not attack, even to halt the violence that had claimed hundreds of lives.

Sources claim Sikh soldiers mutinied

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — About 100 Sikh soldiers mutinied and deserted their base to protest the army's assault on the Golden Temple in the Sikhs' holy city of Amritsar, reliable sources said Saturday.

After the Friday morning mutiny, 10 deserters were killed in a fight with pursuing troops as they crossed the border from Rajasthan into Punjab state, the sources said.

They said the Sikhs mutinied at their camp in the Ganga Nagar area of Rajasthan state and crossed into Punjab's Bhatinda district.

The sources, who are Indians close to the military, spoke on condition they not be identified any further. The Associated Press made several attempts to verify their information, but was not able to reach government spokesmen.

Government officials earlier said Sikh extremists shot two soldiers to death in Amritsar and killed seven other people in three separate attacks in Punjab on Saturday.

Curfews were extended until Monday in most Punjab cities as troops expanded their search for Sikh extremists and arms caches following a two-day battle at the Golden Temsple, the Sikhs' holiest shrine, which the government said was a haven for terrorists. Sikh extremists have been agitating for two years to win political and religious concessions in Punjab, the only state where they are a religious majority.

Approximately 300 people, most of them Hindus, have been killed in Sikh violence in Punjab in the past three months.

In an interview on the government television network Saturday night, Maj. Gen. R. S. Brar said 300 to 400 Sikhs were killed in the temple battle and 1,200 were arrested. The government had reported earlier that 59 soldiers were killed in the fight.

Swiss religious groups have qualms about pope's visit

VATICAN CITY (AP) — Pope John Paul II on Tuesday begins a six-day visit to Switzerland, which broke normal diplomatic ties with the Holy See in the 19th century.

Many Swiss Protestants have criticized the upcoming visit or specific parts of it, such as the planned meeting between the pontiff and the Federal Council, the executive branch of government. Some Roman Catholics are also skeptical, saying John Paul's stay will not be long enough for him to examine church problems thoroughly.

"Historically and structurally Switzerland is suspicious of every type of imposed authority and superiority. That is a fundamental Swiss feeling that the pope will have to face," said one Vatican source, asking not to be identified by name.

"Switzerland is so fundamentally democratic that everything centralized is suspect," the source added.

Switzerland has no archbishop, so local bishops communicate directly with the Vatican.

"They (the Swiss) are suspicious of both emperors and princes of the church," the Swiss Bishops Conference said in a pre-trip statement. "The several bishoprics have all equal rights and are all directly under the Holy See."

Switzerland suspended normal diplomatic relations with the Vatican in 1873, in a dispute over papal infallibility.

Since 1920 the Vatican has maintained an ambassador in Bern, but Switzerland is not one of the 107 nations with ambassadors to the Vatican.

American Christian group begins tour of U.S.S.R.

MOSCOW (AP) — A record number of U.S. Christian representatives began a two-week working tour across the Soviet Union on Saturday, precipitating some extraordinary cooperation between the Communist government and churches.

In order to accommodate the 265 church people on their wide-ranging journeys, guides of the government Intourist service were given special training in theology and church history.

"It's a new day," said the Rev. Bruce Rigdon of Chicago's McCormick Theological Seminary, who is leading the members of Protestant, Roman Catholic and Eastern Orthodox churches.

It is the largest single religious group to visit the Soviet Union, and the government agreed to have its guides briefed on Soviet religious life and teachings by Soviet church leaders, Rigdon said.

"It's the first time in history for Intourist and the churches to work together," Rigdon said. Intourist previously has given its guides special training for other groups such as businessmen, he said.

The visitors were given a two-hour tour of the Kremlin on Saturday. They met with the U.S. ambassador in the afternoon and visited churches in the evening.

Tens of thousands of Israelis protest invasion of Lebanon

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Tens of thousands of Israelis gathered in downtown Tel Aviv Saturday night to protest Israel's two-year-old war in Lebanon and Jewish extremism in the occupied West Bank of the Jordan River.

Demonstrators with banners and placards marched to the Kings of Israel Square for a two-hour rally organized by the anti-war group Peace Now.

Peace Now spokesman Tsali Reshef estimated the crowd at 50,000. The assistant police commissioner, David Kraus, declined to give a figure in line with his department's policy to avoid political involvement.

The demonstration ended peacefully.

"It's on the second anniversary of the war in Lebanon" launched June 6, 1982, said Reshef, "and it's in protest of the whole adventure in Lebanon."

One sign read "583," the number of Israeli soldiers killed in Lebanon since the invasion.

It was the largest anti-war rally since February, when 30,000 to 50,000 demonstrators gathered in Jerusalem.

In another development, Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir said in an interview on Israel Radio that he may propose an expanded role for U.N. peacekeepers in Lebanon when he meets U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar this week.

He said he might suggest that U.N. troops move to form a buffer between Israeli and Syrian forces in Lebanon's eastern Bekaa Valley, but he noted Syria has resisted such a plan.

Book claims pope murdered

LONDON (AP) — Pope John Paul I, who reigned for 33 days in 1978, was murdered because he intended to crack down on corruption in the Vatican, according to a Sunday newspaper report here.

The weekly Observer said British author David Yallop makes the allegation in a book to be published Thursday and he believes the pontiff was poisoned.

Yallop writes that members of the secret Italian Masonic lodge P2, which purportedly had links with the Vatican bank and also the Banco Ambrosiano, were involved in the pope's death. Banco Ambrosiano, Italy's largest private bank, was liquidated by the government in August 1982 following a financial scandal that touched on investments by the Vatican bank.

FINDING THE RIGHT SELLER

Mister home buyer, don't be swayed by gloomy figures bandied about in the media concerning housing interest rates and high prices. Remember that you only want to buy ONE house. And the best way to buy that one house is to have your Realtor find the right house with the right SELLER to go along with it.

As an example, the buyer's next new home may be currently owned by older people who are retiring and are able to provide financing on a first or second mortgage basis for the buyer... often at a lower rate than current lender financing. Their main objective is to SELL THEIR HOME.

For many of these sellers, the income provided by the mortgage they offer you, at a reasonable rate, can make the difference between living frugally on a pension or living well in retirement. Often, they would like to move to a more conducive climate or location for retirement and your monthly mortgage paymens can make it possible for them to do that with more monthly income than they had anticipated.

Middle East conflict frozen in place on Golan Heights

QUNEITRA, Syrian Golan Heights (AP) — There is a peacefulness without peace on the Golan Heights. It is serenity as cold as the patches of snow on nearby Mount Hermon.

The Middle East conflict is frozen in place here where the fighting between Israel and Syria ended in 1973.

Neither side has shown any inclination to resume the hostilities here during a decade in which Lebanon became the area's tinderbox.

For their part, the Syrians have held Palestinian guerrillas in check on this front to preclude Israeli retaliation. Guerrillas seeking to infiltrate Israeli lines must look elsewhere.

"We have Kissinger to thank for this," a U.N. official said, indicating the serene and sun-drenched buffer zone.

A decade later, the disengagement agreement worked out by then-U.S. Secretary of State Henry Kissinger is still holding. The agreement was not even disturbed by Israel's 1981 annexation of the part of the Heights it occupies.

A 1,290-man U.N. Disengagement Observer Force is keeping two of the most powerful armies in the Middle East apart. The buffer zone is only 200 yards wide at the Jordanian border and four miles across in the area of this rubble-strewn ghost town.

The Israelis blew up most of the buildings in Quneitra before they abandoned the town as part of a U.S.-engineered 1974 disengagement agreement that brought the U.N. observers to the Golan.

Quneitra now lies inside the U.N. buffer zone.

Honduran official says maneuvers will continue

JAMASTRAN, Honduras (AP) — The Honduran armed forces chief says joint military maneuvers with U.S. troops will continue indefinitely.

Gen. Walter Lopez Reyes made the statement Friday at the close of a week of exercises by Salvadoran, Honduran and U.S. military units at this airfield near the Nicaraguan border.

He said the United States "is the most powerful champion of world democracy and its advanced military technology, its tactical and strategic concepts and the quality of armament" help its allies modernize their armies.

"The joint maneuvers with the United States will continue with the goal of improving our defensive capacity before the destabilizing actions of Marxism-Leninism" in Central America, he said.

The exercises, 20 miles from the Nicaraguan border, are part of the two-month-long Granadero I maneuvers by 4,100 soldiers from the three countries. Smaller excercises in Granadero I are to continue until the official termination date of June 30.

The next planned exercises are called Big Pine III, and Pentagon sources said months ago that they might start in September. A firm starting date has not been announced.

Col. James Strachan, a U.S. military spokesman in Honduras, said in a telephone interview Saturday that at least 700 American soldiers would stay on after the end of Granadero I.

Striking Scottish miners march through Edinburgh

EDINBURGH, Scotland (AP) — Tens of thousands of striking coal miners and their families marched through Edinburgh on Saturday, bringing the center of the Scottish capital to a standstill in their protest against the planned closure of many state-run mines.

Police estimated that more than 30,000 demonstrators joined the peaceful march, the Scottish miners' biggest show of strength in at least a decade.

Mick McGahey, left-wing leader of Scotland's miners, claimed that 100,000 people, including supporters from rail and transport unions, attended the rally.

The procession wound through the city center to a rally at Holyrood Park, disrupting traffic in its path.

Plane crash kills three

MAUNDOWN, England (AP) — A light plane crashed near a reservoir station outside this town in southwest England on Saturday, killing the pilot and both passengers, police reported.

An Avon and Somerset police spokesman, who declined to be identified, said "There were no survivors." Police said they were trying to identify the victims.

The spokesman said the single-engine plane was on a local flight from an airfield in neighboring Devon county. He gave no other details.

Cholera strikes Indonesia

JAKARTA, Indonesia (AP) — Eleven people have died of cholera and almost 1,400 have been treated for the disease since February in West Kalimantan, the official news agency Antara reported Saturday.

People were stricken with the disease after a series of floods, but communications problems with the isolated area caused a delay in medical treatment, the news agency said.

Officials found out about the outbreak of cholera during the last week in March.

Albanians kill policemen

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia (AP) — Two ethnic Albanians shot and wounded two policemen and a third patron of a restaurant in Pristina, capital of Kosovo province, the state news agency Tanjug reported Saturday.

It identified the two assailants as Riza Plana and Husni Arifi, both 24, and said they escaped after shooting two Pristina police inspectors in the back.

Czechoslovakian Catholics petition pope to visit their nation

PRAGUE, Czechoslovakia (AP) — "Holy Father, we beg you, come to Czechoslovakia."

Roman Catholic activists here say that one-sentence petition to Pope John Paul II has been signed by at least 17,000 church members in hopes that the pontiff indeed will come and add more fuel to a religious revival in Czechoslovakia.

Politics, the pope's evangelism and an upsurge in religious activity have combined to set church and state at odds in Czechoslovakia.

It's highly unlikely the government will permit the pope to visit, say Communists and Western diplomats alike.

But Communist Party authorities have taken note of a religious revival that is overfilling both Catholic and Protestant churches on Sundays, particularly with young people.

The period has been marked by widespread reports of arrests, police harassment of believers and harsh criticism of the Polish-born pope in Communist Party publications.

"You could make the case that church-state relations are the worst they've been since the postwar years," said one Western diplomat. Like other sources interviewed on the issue, he insisted on not being identified.

In the early 1950s, the country's Stalinist leaders sent thousands of priests and laymen to jail and outlawed the Catholic orders in a massive purge.

Memories of collaboration between the Nazi occupiers and many Catholic clergymen during World War II were fresh, especially in the eastern republic of Slovakia, home of most of the 8 million to 10 million Catholics in this country of 15 million people.

Such blatant persecution has died out, but the mistrust lingers on both sides.

Cardinal Frantisek Tomasek, the Czech primate, had agreed to an interview, but when a reporter arrived at his baroque residence on Hradcany Hill overlooking Prague, the 84-year-old Tomasek shook his head and said, "I'm very sorry, but I cannot see you."

Church sources said the cardinal, who had spoken to several Western reporters in previous weeks, had just been warned by authorities to stop the practice. Western diplomats speculated that agitation for a papal visit was one of the reasons.

The Vatican has confirmed that the cardinal had invited the pope to visit in 1985 for ceremonies on the 1,100th anniversary of the death of St. Methodius, who brought Christianity to Bohemia and Moravia.

Asked in April to confirm the 17,000 petition signatures, Tomasek said, "I do not have the exact figure, but there were many more." Four men were arrested during the signature drive, and sources here and in the West said they were beaten by police. This could not be independently confirmed.

"I have already stopped this," Tomasek said at the time in a telephone interview. "It was such a massive action that it was not necessary to continue it any further."

Communist hard-liners make no secret of their dislike for the pope, who speaks Czech and Slovak, and who preaches against atheism and materialism.

Talks on improving church-state relations were renewed late last year after a three-year hiatus, but there has been little sign of progress. A month after the February visit of Vatican envoy Luigi Poggi to Czechoslovakia, Tribuna, organ of the party Central Committee, called John Paul "one of the most reactionary popes of this century."

Tomasek rebuked the journal in a strongly worded open letter.

"The fact that the present ideology of Czechoslovakia is atheism gives nobody the right to accuse and insult those who are of different ideological orientation," he said.

Further talks between the Vatican and government officials were scheduled. Meanwhile, only four of the country's 13 dioceses have resident bishops because the two sides cannot agree on who should fill them.

And John Paul has shown no sign of backing down on his stand against priests belonging to Pacem in Terris, the organization of Catholic clergymen whose first allegiance is to the state.

Underground Catholic activity continues. It includes the secret ordinations of priests and illegal inductions into religious orders, especially Jesuits, Franciscans and Trappists.

Midland's Judy Rankin has seen both the highs and lows on the LPGA Tour, but she has been able to handle all of it. She may even play professional golf again.

Rankin career on hold, but not down for count

By BRUCE CASTLEBERRY
Sports Writer

For every athlete, the time comes when decisions regarding the length of a career are inevitable.

In the case of Judy Rankin, a chronic back injury has put her career on hold. The Midland resident became the first woman in the history of the Ladies' Professional Golf Association to win over $100,000 in a season in 1976, a feat which she duplicated twice before the pain began.

And once Rankin's back problems became chronic after a serious injury seven years ago, her career suddenly dried up like a West Texas rainstorm. Now, at 39, Rankin has just begun to practice again. But her career is still in a sort of limbo.

"I've just barely started to hit golf balls again in the last couple of weeks," Rankin said last week at the 49th annual Women's West Texas golf tournament held at Green Tree Country Club. "It's been the first time since last October 1. I might be able to return, but the earliest I could play would be at the very end of this season." Obviously, Rankin has her work cut out for her if she wants to return to the form that only a few years ago made her the most respected name on the LPGA Tour.

WHEN JUDY Torluemke first picked up a golf club at the age of six in her home town of St. Louis, Mo., there wasn't even an LPGA as it is known today. She soon picked up the game, and at 14 became the youngest winner ever in the Missouri Amateur. Her career skyrocketed through her non-professional days, with the low amateur score at the 1960 U.S. Open, a semifinal berth in the USGA Juniors in 1960 and '61, and another Missouri Amateur crown in '61.

By '62, there were no worlds left to conquer but the pro circuit. "Things are so different now. Colleges offer so much to girls who can play golf. There are lots of places to play now. When I turned pro, the Tour was the only place to play. I basically had to learn to play there. Now players learn in college and they're ready to go the day they start on the Tour."

Her career statistics include 26 official LPGA Tour wins, and she ranks in the top ten all-time of pro money winners and tournament titles. In her first year on the circuit, Rankin entered 15 tournaments and won $701. Until 1972, golf had never been the cashbasket for Rankin it could be today. In '72, she made over $25,000 for the first time, and her career took off.

Then injuries came.

RANKIN'S PHYSICAL problem is a herniated and torn disk, a common ailment among people of all walks of life. But for a golfer, back pains can make swinging a club almost unbearable. "I had the back problems for quite a few years," Rankin said, "But it's been chronic for the past few years. Eventually it became evident that I either had to do something about it or quit playing."

Rankin's most serious problems stemmed from a September, 1977 injury that has "slowly gotten worse ever since. I've never been the same. It got so much more chronic, just all the time." After two consecutive years of earning over $100,000, Rankin made only $51,000 in 1978. She had a solid year money-wise in 1979, but since then has earned less each season as her back problem grew.

The ultimate decision to get away from golf and overcome her injury came easily for the discouraged Rankin. "I wasn't playing well, so it wasn't terribly difficult. I wasn't at the point where I could play well. I was just playing so poorly that it was harder to take than not playing. It got to the point where I needed a break."

In that break, Rankin turned to her family. While many people find 39 to be a difficult year in their lives, Rankin still exudes the attractiveness and vitality that caught Midland businessman Yippie Rankin's eye in the 1960's. Yippie and Judy were married in June of 1967, and when golf was put on hold, Rankin threw her efforts into a home life. The Rankin's only son Tuey, a junior at Midland Lee, has the most notable active athletic career in the family currently. He's in the running for a vacancy at quarterback for the Rebel football team, state finalists in 1983.

And should Tuey get the nod, Rankin the mother may postpone Rankin the golfer's ambitions a few more months. "See why I'm not going on the Tour?," joked Rankin, "I'd like to be in town to see what happens!"

Having a tight-knit family helped Rankin through her transition. "Fortunately I have a very nice family and home. It's given me the best of both worlds all the way through this, and it gave me something else besides golf. As good as it was to me, golf came second."

AS RANKIN sits at the crossroads, she wonders where her future will take her, but has the savvy not to fret. "I think I'll play again, but I can't envision playing full time, and the only way I care to play again is if I can be somewhat competitive.

"There's no doubt I've gotten a little bit soft. It's very difficult to be as hungry 22 years later as you were in the early years. I feel wiser and more experienced. I had to fight some devils I didn't even know about. I don't expect to be leading money winner again or have a chance to win every tournament. I have no ideas of grandeur."

Rankin also seems secure that should her golf not meet her standards, she could walk away from the game that earned her almost $1 million in her 22 professional seasons. "There are a few little things (away from golf) that I'd be interested in," she said. "For a long time I thought the television business was fun and interesting, but it's so competitive and dog-eat-dog. After pursuing a career for 22 years, I don't want to start over. I'm not prepared to try and knock somebody out of a job. Teaching interests me, but just a little. I'd only do it on a limited basis."

Will Judy Rankin once again burn up the LPGA? "If I'm in good physical shape, I'm hopeful. It will take time and hard work, but it will take a lot of playing well to regain my confidence. A few years of playing badly can shatter it. To deep inside me believe in it again is my biggest hurdle. I'm 39. My son will be a junior this year. In the back of my mind, there's some possibility that when he goes away to college, I might want to play a lot. And given enough time, I think my health will be good."

And for the LPGA, that's very, very good. For LPGA competition, the only drawback might be less money to go around. Rankin is like the non-bluffing poker player. If she stays in the game, she has the cards. If Rankin returns, it will be with a loaded deck.

Swale makes amends for poor Preakness showing

NEW YORK (AP) — Swale, the Kentucky Derby winner, made amends for his poor Preakness performance by grabbing the lead shortly after the start and winning the $516,700 Belmont Stakes Saturday, the final leg of racing's Triple Crown.

The victory gave trainer Woody Stephens and jockey Laffit Pincay Jr. their third straight Belmont triumph — the first time this century a trainer or rider managed to do so.

Pine Circle closed with a rush to finish second, four lengths behind the winner and three lengths in front of Morning Bob.

GATE DANCER, the Preakness winner running without the drug Lasix, as he did in Kentucky and Maryland, finished out of the money.

Swale, a son of 1977 Triple Crown winner Seattle Slew, won the Kentucky Derby in impressive fashion but finished seventh in the Preakness two weeks ago.

Swale, sent off at odds of 3-2 by the crowd of 47,369 in sweltering, 90-degree weather at Belmont Park, became the 10th horse to win the Kentucky Derby-Belmont double and the first since Bold Forbes in 1976.

Swale also became the 19th New York-based horse to win the Belmont in the past 23 years.

Play On, the Preakness runner-up sent off as the second choice, was first out of the gate, but Pincay put Swale in front after that. And the dark bay colt, owend by Claiborne Farm, covered the 1½ miles of this longest and final Triple Crown race in 2:27 1-5, the fourth fastest time in Belmont history.

"This horse can really run," said Pincay. "He's just not consistent. He doesn't like hard tracks and that's really why he ran the way he did (in the Preakness). I knew at the quarter pole we'd win.

"He broke super. It was a very slow pace. At the five-eighths pole somebody came close and I let him go again. Woody Stephens deserves a lot of credit for this," Pincay said.

SWALE PAID $5, $4.40 and $3.60. Pine Circle, ridden by Patrick Day, paid $15 and $7. Morning Bob, a supplemental entry at a cost of $32,500 since he was not nominated for the Belmont, paid $4.40.

Morning Bob, a 6-1 shot ridden by Jorge Velasquez, finished a head in front of Play On.

Completing the order of finish were Coax Me Chad, Gate Dancer, Silent King, Exattic, Romantic Tradition, Back Bay Barrister and Minstrel Star.

The winner's purse from the record gross purse also was a record — $358,500. That boosted Swale's career earnings to $1,790,341.

Play On, ridden by Jean-Luc Samyn, trailed Swale by 1½ lengths after a mile and by the same margin at the top of the stretch, with Gate Dancer running third. But Swale was in command and, by midstretch, built a three-length lead with Morning Bob second and Play On backing up to third.

Pine Circle, who had finished sixth in the Derby and fifth in the Preakness, then came on to grab second money.

LOBLOLLY Stable's Pine Circle earned $113,674. Morning Bob, the Pennsylvania Derby winner owned by Michael Spielman and Richard Bonze, collected $62,004. Play On and Welcome Farm got $31,002.

All starters carried 126 pounds.

Swale had been overshadowed by stablemate Devil's Bag, the winter book favorite for the Kentucky Derby, but when Devil's Bag suffered a pre-Derby injury, Swale became Stephens' main horse.

The victory was the ninth in 14 starts for Swale, who has been out of the money only once in his career. Although a three-time stakes winner this year — the Hutcheson, Florida Derby and the Kentucky Derby — Swale has been inconsistent, failing to win after especially quick workouts.

Stephens blamed that as a factor in the Preakness loss.

On Thursday before the Belmont, Swale worked four furlongs in 48 4-5, which pleased Stephens, and he predicted the victory.

STEPHENS NOW is the second trainer to win three straight Belmonts, having won with Conquistador Cielo in 1982 and Caveat in 1983. Pincay also rode those Belmont winners.

D. McDaniel won Belmonts in 1871, 1872 and 1873 with Harry Bassett, Joe Daniels and Springbok.

"It's a great feeling for three in a row...I know it's been a long time that anyone has ever done it," Stephens said.

Pincay became the second rider to win three consecutive Belmonts. James McLaughlin won aboard Forester in 1882, George Kinney in 1883, Panique in 1884 and then repeated the feat with Inspector B. in 1886, Hanover in 1887 and Sir Dixon in 1888.

New green fees hit wallet

This golf business could get out of hand. It has gotten so a person can't even water his front lawn without being attacked.

One irate citizen stopped his car by the curb and demanded, "You are the sports editor. What are you going to do about it? It's up to you to give 'em hell."

I tried to explain that as unfair, unreasonable, arbitrary and contrary as the perpetrators of the pocket-gouging increases were, "They are my friends. I can't give 'em hell."

He was mad because the annual fee for seniors (over 65) at Hogan Park had been raised from $75 to $150.

Another reader was furious over the increase in annual fees at the golf course generally. "It appears to me that this overall increase is exorbitant and unjustifiable. If additional funds are required for Midland Parks & Recreation Department, it appears the burden is being placed on Hogan Park Golf Course participants. To my knowledge, comparable increases were not made to softball, soccer or swimming activities."

From the tone of the letter, I'm glad he resorted to letter-writing and didn't find me standing in the street watering the dirt when he drove by.

Another longtime friend has stopped talking to my wife over the issue because I'm somehow held responsible.

EVERYBODY is mad, it seems. There's a petition hanging in the Hogan Park clubhouse, right next to the neckties reserved for City Council members who passed the increase.

The Hogan Park Men's Golf Association, the Hogan Park Women's Association, the Hogan Park Chicano Golf Association and the Hogan Park Black Golfers Association are up in arms. I'm mad, too.

The main source of irritation is the jump in annual fee from $300 to $600.

That doesn't bother me as much as the increase of $1.50 across the board in daily green fees, especially after a week of golf in North Carolina, where natives wondered why they had to pay $5.50 or $6 a round. For a West Texan, it was hard to understand the complaints. The only advantage we have out here is that you get a good fairway roll.

Admittedly, the difference between North Carolina and West Texas courses seems criminal. Mother Nature was very discriminatory. Carolina not only has an unfair physical advantage, but NC golf superintendents don't even have to run or lift weights to keep their courses in shape...just keep those mowers sharp.

It's so wet on a dry morning, golfers don't show up until after 9 a.m.

THE NEW rates will go into effect June 20, in case your ears aren't ringing from the mounting roar of disapproval. In addition to the annual rate increases, the daily fees go up, for residents, from $7.50 to $9 on weekdays and from $10 to $11.50 on weekends; non residents, from $9.50 to $11 daily and $13 to $14.50 on weekends.

Both City Councilman Jesse Hatfield and Hogan Park pro Rex Worrell were questioned about the outrage. The best they could do was explain that the increases would be channeled toward course improvements and another, much needed, nine holes.

"Yes we've had complaints," admits Hatfield. "When they hear mention of another nine, they come back with 'What do you need another nine for. You don't take care of the ones you've already got.'"

SAYS HATFIELD in beleaguered defense of the increases, "We're trying to build a new nine. The sole purpose is to start putting the extra money aside for a new nine."

Detroit pitcher Juan Berenguer lies on the mound as teammates Marty Castillo, Alan Trammell and Darrell Evans comes to his aid. Berenguer was hit in the head by a line drive off the bat of Al Bumbry of the Orioles, but he was able to stay in the game.

Orioles slow Tiger march

By The Associated Press

Mike Flanagan pitched a seven-hitter in wilting 92-degree weather and John Lowenstein rapped a two-run, bases-loaded single as the Baltimore Orioles defeated the slumping Detroit Tigers 4-0 Saturday.

It was the ninth loss in 15 games for the Tigers, who had started out as baseball's hottest team. The third-place Orioles have won 10 of 13 to pull within nine games of the American League East leaders.

Flanagan, 5-4, retired 13 of the first 14 Detroit batters before Darrell Evans and Rusty Kuntz singled with one out in the fifth inning. The left-hander was in command the rest of the way, thanks to fine fielding support by his Oriole teammates.

Detroit starter Juan Berenguer, 3-4, was felled by a deflected liner off the right side of his face just before yielding an RBI-single to Cal Ripken Jr. for the first Baltimore run in the third. After issuing a one-out walk to Ripken in the sixth, Berenguer was bothered by leg cramps and was replaced with an 0-2 count on Eddie Murray.

FLANAGAN SAID he wasn't bothered by the heat. "I've pitched in snow ... in rain ... in heat ... you just try not to think about it," Flanagan said. "I pitched in 114-degree temperature in Kansas City one time."

Flanagan noted that because the game was on network television, there was a mandatory two-minute break between half innings, allowing more time to remain in the cool clubhouse before venturing onto the field.

The 32-year-old left-hander said he felt the worst after sitting out a long inning as the Orioles scored three runs in the sixth and the Tigers made two pitching changes.

In other American League action, the Cleveland Indians scored six runs in the first inning with the help of a sloppy Seattle defense and held on for an 8-7 victory over the Mariners as shortstop Julio Franco participated in a major league record-tying five double plays.

MIKE EASLER drove in five runs with a homer, double and single and Jim Rice collected his 1,000th career RBI as the Boston Red Sox unleashed a 19-hit attack in a 15-6 victory over the Milwaukee Brewers.

Baseball Results

Greg Luzinski's second grand slam in as many games tied a major league record and powered the surging Chicago White Sox to an 8-4 triumph over the Minnesota Twins.

In the National League, R.J. Reynolds' double with the bases loaded in the bottom of the ninth inning gave the Los Angeles Dodgers a come-from-behind 4-3 victory over the Atlanta Braves.

Joel Youngblood blasted a three-run homer with two outs in the bottom of the ninth inning, rallying the San Francisco Giants to a 6-5 triumph over the Houston Astros.

Junior Ortiz doubled home a run and winning pitcher Mike Torrez added a run-scoring single in a four-run fourth inning that carried the New York Mets to their sixth straight win, a 6-5 victory and a double-header sweep of the Montreal Expos.

In the opener, George Foster drove in three runs with a solo home run and a two-run double in the Mets' 5-3 triumph. Jesse Orosco notched saves in both games, giving him 11 on the season.

John Wockenfuss belted two home runs and Garry Maddox and Sixto Lezcano added solo shots as the Philadelphia Phillies beat Pittsburgh 6-5, sending the Pirates their sixth straight loss.

Rich Bordi and Lee Smith combined on a four-hitter, leading the Chicago Cubs past St. Louis 5-0, ending the Cardinals' five-game winning string.

In an AL night game, Steve Kemp's two-out double in the bottom of the ninth inning drove in Dave Winfield from first base as the New York Yankees nipped the Toronto Blue Jays 2-1.

Pete O'Brien's bases-loaded sacrifice fly scored Wayne Tolleson in the 12th inning, giving the Texas Rangers a 4-3 victory over the Oakland A's.

Tolleson started the inning with a one-out single off reliever Bill Caudill, 5-2, and Buddy Bell followed with a single to move Tolleson to second and Larry Parrish was hit by a pitch to load the bases.

O'Brien then lofted a foul fly ball down the left-field line and Garry Hancock made the catch, but dropped the ball in setting up to throw home.

Third base umpire Dan Morrison ruled that Hancock had the ball long enough for a good catch, and Tolleson scored the winning run uncontested.

Brian Downing drove in two runs in a four-run eighth-inning rally that broke up a scoreless game as the California Angels downed the Kansas City Royals 4-1.

Ron Romanick, 7-5, pitched seven innings, giving up five hits. Luis Sanchez got the final six outs for his sixth save.

The victory enabled the Angels to remain in first place in the American League West. California held on to a half-game lead over the Chicago White Sox, who defeated Minnesota 8-4 Saturday.

Gary Pettis led off the eighth against starter Bud Black, 6-4, with a slow grounder to third, but wound up safe at second on George Brett's throwing error. Juan Beniquez followed with a single, scoring Pettis.

Terry Kennedy bashed a three-run homer in the first inning and Graig Nettles cracked a two-run homer in the fifth to highlight a 15-hit attack powered the San Diego Padres to a 12-2 rout of the Cincinnati Reds.

The victory pushed the Padres into first place in the National League West, one-half game ahead of Atlanta, which lost 4-3 to Los Angeles earlier in the day.

Ed Whitson was the beneficiary of the San Diego assault. He pitched 5 2-3 innings and raised his record to 6-3 and Craig Lefferts finished up for his third save. Jeff Russell, 2-7, took the loss.

Kennedy gave the Padres a 3-0 lead in the first with his fifth home run of the season. San Diego scored another run in the fourth and then broke it open with three runs in both the fifth and sixth innings.

Oklahoma St. eliminated

College Series

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — John Fishel and Tom Thomas each drove in four runs to back the six-hit pitching of All-American Todd Simmons as Cal St. Fullerton defeated Oklahoma State 10-2 Saturday night in the semifinals of the College World Series.

The victory sends the third-ranked Titans, 65-20, against defending champion Texas, 60-13, in today's 7:10 p.m. CDT championship game. The loss ended second-ranked Oklahoma State's season at 61-15.

Simmons, 15-3, a junior right-hander, struck out seven and walked four.

Fullerton State used the long ball to break the ice against Oklahoma State starter Dennis Livingston, 10-3. In the bottom of the fifth, Thomas doubled to left center to score Blaine Larker with the first run of the game. Fishel then belted his second homer of the series and 16th of the season for a 3-0 Fullerton State lead.

Fullerton State added three more runs in the sixth when Thomas tripled off the fence in center field with the bases loaded.

Down 6-0, Oklahoma State picked up its runs on long solo homers.

Chris Beck hit a 390-foot shot to right center in the seventh and Pete Incaviglia powered his 29th homer of the year deep over the center field fence in the top of the eighth.

Fullerton State added four insurance runs in the bottom of the eighth on a bases-loaded, two-run single by Fishel and Bob Caffrey's two-run double.

The championship game will be a rematch of Game 7 of the double elimination tournament when the Longhorns took a 6-4 victory over the Titans. Texas also won two of three games in a regular-season series played in Austin.

Breland moves to finals

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — Mark Breland, the world 147-pound class champion with a reputation as a bomber, boxed his way into the finals of the U.S. Olympic boxing trials Saturday with a 5-0 decision over Louis Howard.

The 6-2½ Breland, from Brooklyn, N.Y., won his 102nd fight against a single loss by beating the Pan American Games champion from St. Louis.

Three other world champions won semifinals at the afternoon session. They were Tyrell Biggs of Philadelphia, super heavyweight; Ricky Womack of Detroit, 178; and Frank Tate, 156.

PERNELL WHITAKER of Philadelphia, the 132-pound world champion, was on the evening card.

Breland exhibited a good left jab and good foot movement in beating Howard, who tried to get inside and did score when he could get there.

Breland landed his vaunted right hand several times, but Howard never looked in danger of going down.

"He took a lot of good shots," said Breland. "He kept his hands so I knew I could beat him boxing, by staying outside."

Breland will fight in Sunday's final against David Gutierrez of San Diego, who scored a 3-2 decision over Tim Christensen.

Boxing Trials

Biggs' big weapon in his 5-0 decision over Michael Williams of Broussard, La., was his punishing left jab.

Biggs knocked Williams down with a jab in the first round and was effective with it throughout the fight.

Today, Biggs will fight Craig Payne of Livonia, Mich., who scored a 5-0 decision over Nathaniel Fitch of the U.S. Army in a bout fought at close quarters. In four previous meetings with Biggs, Payne lost three decisions and one on a medical disqualification.

Womack used his aggressiveness to edge Evander Holyfield of Atlanta 3-2. Holyfield had outpointed Womack in the Pan American Games trials and box-off.

Womack's final opponent will be Bennie Heard of Augusta, Ga., who stopped Clarence Dewberry of the U.S. Army in the second round.

FRANK TATE used a hard, accurate left jab to gain a 5-0 decision over Darin Allen of Columbus, Ohio.

Tate, of Detroit, who also displayed a crisp right hand in the third round, will fight Ron Essett of Indianapolis in the final.

Essett, who punches very well moving backwards, scored a 4-1 decision over Kevin Bryant of the U.S. Army.

Michael Tyson, a 17-year-old national Golden Gloves champion from Catskill, N.Y., pounded his way into the 201-pound final by stopping Henry Milligan of Hockessin, Del., at 2:19 of the second round.

A hard right forced Milligan, a Princeton graduate and civil engineer to take a standing eight count in the second. Then after a right-left-right, Milligan was given another standing eight. Tyson then fired a five-blow salvo to the head, and as Milligan went down, the referee stopped the fight.

Tyson's final opponent will be Henry Tillman of Los Angeles, who jabbed his way to a 4-1 decision over James Pritchard of Louisville, Ky.

Andrew Minsker of Milwaukie, Ore., and Bernard Gray of Boynton Beach, Fla., advanced to the 125-pound final.

BATTLES

Hatfield points out that the Midland golfer really has had a bargain and that the new annual fees are more in contact with reality. He showed a callous disregard for my "daily fee" complaint. "We haven't had any complaints about that. Golfers realize it was necessary." I took this as a personal insult, inferring I wasn't a golfer.

In figuring it up, the daily greens fee for the Midland resident has been $7.50. For the annual member, by averaging out the per round cost per player, it came to $1.80 a round. That's like the $1.10 general admission and 55 cent bleacher seat at a major league ball game.

What hurts is the doubling of the fee. However, Worrell points out that the last time daily fees were raised, "no adjustment was made in the annual fees."

"We are in the process of renovating the original 18," says Hatfield. "I understand work on the tee boxes had already started. Things are so crowded out there that they are starting to close down certain nines on alternating days so they can do some work done.

"But if we don't start now, we'll never get a new nine."

Hatfield says the $600 figure was arrived at by taking the average number of rounds of annual fee golfers and doubling it. "At $600, that's not even $4 a round."

Worrell chips in, "If a golfer plays five times a month, he's getting his annual fee back."

HATFIELD emphasized, "we have got to let golfers pay for the new nine, which will probably cost, from best estimates, from $400,000 to $600,000. We have our oil money and if we strike oil when the drilling starts, that will be a big help."

Hatfield notes that one of the reasons for the crowded conditions at Hogan "is that we get a lot of out-of-town play. Odessa does not have a municipal course and a lot of golfers come over here to play."

"We're trying to make it a fair deal where people who are using course pay for it. And truthfully, that's the only way we're going to get a new one."

Hatfield said, "We don't make money on the course. Last year, I think George Logan (Parks and Recreation chief) shows we lost $94,000 on the Hogan operation."

Hatfield may satisfy the annual greens fee players with his justification for invading Afghanistan, but Jesse and the other members of the City Council remain at the top of my lynching list. There is, after all, a point where friendship stops...at the wallet.

Pressure shifts from Boston to LA

NBA Playoff Preview

INGLEWOOD, Calif. (AP) — The Boston Celtics, who only a week ago "played like a bunch of sissies," moved within one game of an unprecedented 15th National Basketball Association title which they can wrap up today.

Game 6 of the best-of-seven Championship Series against the Los Angeles Lakers will be televised nationally from the Forum starting at 2:30 p.m. CDT.

The Celtics, led by Larry Bird, took a 3-2 lead Friday night after beating the Lakers 121-103 at Boston Garden for their second straight series victory over Los Angeles.

A Lakers triumph today would force a seventh and deciding game, to be played at Boston Tuesday night.

"I'm confident we'll bring it back to Boston for the seventh game," said Los Angeles Coach Pat Riley. "The team with the strongest heart and will will win."

"We have to take control of today's game early," said Los Angeles forward Kurt Rambis. "The Celtics have the upper hand in the series."

Boston's M.L. Carr said the Celtics "cannot get complacent at this point. We have to go out now and play our hearts out."

Bird said the Celtics played like "sissies" following a 137-104 triumph by the Lakers at the Forum in Game 3. It was a contest in which Los Angeles outrebounded Boston 63-44.

The Celtics bounced back with a 129-125 overtime decision Wednesday night and on Friday were led by Bird's 34-point, 17-rebound performance.

In both Games 4 and 5, the Celtics outrebounded the Lakers and had better success defending a Los Angeles fast break that devastated them in Game 3.

If the Celtics win today they will become the 10th NBA team in the last 12 years to win the championship on their opponent's home court.

Much of the talk after Friday night's game involved Bird's magnificent performance and the 92-degree temperature on the Boston Garden floor.

Bird, who had hit on only 41.8 percent of his field goal attempts in the first four games of the series, went 15-for-20 Friday night.

"Larry is a gold mine," said Boston Coach K.C. Jones. "When he didn't get the outside shot at the beginning, he just went to the offensive boards and put the ball in the hoop."

Bird scored 11 of his points in the third quarter as the Celtics extended a precarious 55-53 halftime lead to a healthy 88-77 advantage entering the final 12 minutes. The Lakers weren't closer than seven points in the fourth period.

"Bird was awesome," Riley said. "It looked like he was 15 years old out there. Every movement he made was designed to conserve his energy."

Riley said the heat helped slow down his team's running game.

"It was extremely hot, oppressively hot," he said. "It seems they handled it better than us, but everyone was affected by it."

The Lakers received sub-par performances from their two superstars. Center Kareem Abdul-Jabbar made only seven of his 25 field goal attempts in scoring 19 points, while Earvin "Magic" Johnson was 3-of-9 from the floor in totaling 10 points. Johnson scored only two points in the second half.

"I'm disappointed, but there is Sunday," Johnson said. "We have to shoot better. We'll be back (in Boston) Tuesday."

Penguins set sights on Lemieux

NHL Draft

MONTREAL (AP) — The Pittsburgh Penguins made record-setting center Mario Lemieux the first pick in the National Hockey League entry draft Saturday.

But the 18-year-old Lemieux, a 6-foot-4, 200-pound scoring machine who scored 133 goals and 149 assists for 282 points in 70 games for Laval of the Quebec Major Junior Hockey League, was not particulrly happy with the selection.

"The negotiations are not going well and I don't feel they want me bad enough," said Lemieux, who broke scoring records set by Guy Lafleur, Pierre Larouche, Mike Bossy and Pat LaFontaine in the QMJHL. "Many things are holding it up. (Penguins General Manager) Eddie Johnston might not be smiling after today."

Johnston, however, said prior to the draft that negotiations were proceeding with Lemieux's agent, Gus Badali, and that the situation had improved.

With the No. 2 pick, New Jersey selected center Kirk Muller, who played for the Canadian Olympic team at Sarajevo. Muller, 18, had 31 goals and 94 points in 49 games for Guelph of the Ontario Hockey League.

"I'm certainly happy and relieved," said Muller. "There were a lot of rumors this week and I decided to keep an open mind."

The third pick was traded by the Los Angeles Kings to Chicago for the Black Hawks' top choice (No. 6 overall), goalie Bob Janecyk, a third-round pick this year and a switch of fourth-rounders. The Hawks then took forward Ed Olczyk, 17, of Palos Heights, Ill., who starred for the United States Olympic team.

"I think my mother was the happiest to have me playing home," said Olczyk. "She probably wants to keep an eye on me."

Toronto then took another American Olympian, defenseman Al Iafrate of Dearborn, Mich. The Montreal Canadiens made perhaps the most ingtriguing selection in the first round when they took 18-year-old Petr Svoboda of Czechoslovakia, who has defected from that country and was present at the draft.

When Svoboda emerged from beneath the stands, he received a standing ovation from the crowd of about 6,000 at The Forum.

Yet another Olympian, defenseman Craig Redmond of Team Canada, was taken by Los Angeles with the pick it acquired from the Black Hawks.

Detroit went for center Shawn Burr of Kitchener, then Montreal and St. Louis swung a deal.

The Canadiens sent backup goalie Rick Wamsley, it's own second and third-round picks and Hartford's second-round selection — acquired in 1981 for Larouche — to St. Louis for the Blues' No. 1 choice. The Canadiens drafted Shayne Corson, a rugged 17-year-old center from Brantford who had 71 points in 66 games and 165 penalty minutes.

Pittsburgh, with a pick obtained from Winnipeg last season for defenseman Randy Carlyle, took high-scoring defenseman Doug Bodger, who had 190 points in two seasons for Kamloops of the Western Hockey League.

Non-winner Beck has high hopes

HARRISON, N.Y. (AP) — Chip Beck, a frequent challenger but not yet a winner on the PGA Tour, takes a one-shot lead and some high hopes into today's final round of the $500,000 Manufacturers Hanover Westchester Classic.

"I've spent a lifetime trying to get in this situation," said the 27-year-old Beck, who led through three rounds as recently as two weeks ago.

"You can't think about winning a golf tournament," Beck said after his hard-won round of 70, 1-under par, in Saturday's third round.

"All you can do is to think about playing good golf.

"That's what I'm going to try to do tomorrow—just play good golf.

"I hope I can handle it."

Beck, the leader all the way in this event in the suburbs of New York, completed three trips over the hilly, 6,687-yard Westchester Country Club course in 202, 11 shots under par.

Jay Haas moved into second place with a 68 in the continuing muggy, hazy heat. For the third day in a row, the temperatures reached into the mid-90s. Haas, in a slump most of the season, will take a 203 total, 10 under par, into Sunday's final round of the chase for a $90,000 first prize.

"After the way I've played this year, it's a real pleasure to be in this position," Haas said.

Although Beck has not won, "he's been in the hunt before — he's not a rookie," said Haas.

"He led through three rounds at Muirfield (two weeks ago). He's been there. And he's playing good. We'll have to catch him," Haas said.

Tom Kite, who has finished in the top 10 in five of his last six starts, and Scott Simpson were another stroke back at 204. Kite had a no-bogey round of 68 and Simpson had a 70.

They appeared to be the only others in title contention. It was another two strokes back to Jim Dent, at 206 after a 66.

Alcott blitz hits Sheehan

MALVERN, Pa. (AP) — Amy Alcott overcame a four-stroke deficit and stifling 95-degree heat to take a one-stroke lead Saturday after three rounds of the $350,000 LPGA McDonald's Kids' Classic.

"You gotta be tough," said Alcott, who shot a 3-under-par 69 to overtake Patty Sheehan, the leader after 36 holes.

Sheehan wilted in the oppressive heat and slipped into second place, one stroke ahead of Connie Chillemi and Donna White, with a 2-over-par 74 over the 6,283-yard White Manor Country Club course in suburban Philadelphia.

Alcott carded a 54-hole score of 210, and Sheehan 211. Chillemi and White followed at 212.

Alcott grabbed the lead with a 4-under-par 32 on the front nine, tying Sheehan with a birdie on six and edging in front with another bird at seven.

Sheehan is striving not only for the $52,500 first prize in this tournament, but also the $500,-000 bonus to the golfer who wins two of the last three tournaments. She won the LPGA Championship last week.

Chillemi, who missed the cut in eight of 14 tournaments this year, tied Alcott for the lead with at six under with a birdie on the 15th hole, but fell back again with bogeys at 16 and 18.

Juli Inkster had 213. Kathy Baker's 71 left her at 2-under 214, four strokes off the pace.

Sheehan, who last week won the LPGA Championship by a record 10 strokes, didn't make a birdie Saturday. She had one bogey on each nine.

Alcott after her four birdies on the front nine, played steady on the back side, carding one bogey and no birds.

JoAnne Carner, who won two weeks ago at Corning and has a shot at the $500,000 bonus, appeared out of the running with a 2-over-par 218. She shot a 73 Saturday and had three rounds of 70-75-73.

Beth Solomon, Jane Crafter, Sue Fogleman, Vicki Fergon and Sharon Barrett tied at even par 216.

Barrett, who was three shots out of the lead after 36 holes, fired a front nine 40 Saturday and wound up with a 4-over 76.

Grand Slam: Martina beats Chris

AP Laserphoto

Martina Navratilova holds up French Open trophy after beating Chris Evert Lloyd Saturday in finals.

PARIS (AP) — Martina Navratilova became only the fifth player in history to capture the elusive Grand Slam of tennis Saturday when she crushed defending champion Chris Evert Lloyd 6-3, 6-1 to win the women's singles title at the French Open championships.

With last year's Wimbledon, U.S. and Australian Open crowns already under her belt, the 27-year-old Czechoslovakian-born naturalized American joined an elite band of players to win the world's four most prestigious tournaments consecutively.

Only two other women, America's Maureen Connolly in 1953 and Australia's Margaret Court Smith in 1970, have accomplished the feat. Among the men, Don Budge won it in 1938 and Australia's Rod Laver did it twice, in 1962 and 1969.

IF SHE wins the women's doubles final with Pam Shriver on today, Navratilova will become only the second person to win the slam in both singles and doubles Smith teamed with fellow Australian Ken Fletcher to win all four mixed doubles titles in 1963.

Today, John McEnroe will attempt to become the first American to win the French Open men's singles crown since 1955, when Tony Trabert won his second straight here on the slow red clay courts of Roland Garros Stadium. The top-seeded McEnroe will play Czechoslovakia's Ivan Lendl, who is seeking his first Grand Slam title in his fifth trip to a Grand Slam tournament final.

French Open

Two other championships were decided on Saturday. Yannick Noah and Henri Leconte became the first French pair since 1946 to win the men's doubles, defeating Czechoslovakia's Tomas Smid and Pavel Slozil 6-4, 2-6, 3-6, 6-3, 6-2, and American's Dick Stockton and Anne Smith captured the mixed doubles, downing Australians Anne Minter and Laurie Warder 6-2, 6-4.

Navratilova's crushing 63-minute victory over Lloyd was her second French open title — she also won here in 1982 — and her ninth Grand Slam tournament crown. She has won Wimbledon four times, the U.S. Open once and the Australian Open twice.

"I feel very proud to be among a very select group of tennis players," a jubilant Navratilova told the sun-drenched 17,000 capacity crowd after her victory on the Center Court at Roland Garros.

IN ADDITION to her winner's prize of 98,000, she collected a special $1 million bonus put up by the International Tennis Federation two years ago to the next Grand Slam winner.

Budge was present when ITF president Philippe Chatrier presented Navratilova with the check at a special award ceremony shortly after the match.

When the new French champion turned up 45 minutes late — apparently held up by traffic after leaving the stadium — Budge said: "In my day, I would have been on time for a thousand bucks. Boy, things sure have changed, but I think it's great."

Navratilova went into the final with an awesome record. She had lost only two matches in two years and had dropped only one set — to Hana Mandlikova in the semifinals — on the way to the final here.

Lloyd, her great rival, has not beaten her since the Australian Open in 1982 and had taken only three sets off her in 10 meetings since.

The defending champion, herself trying for a place in the record books — a sixth women's singles title at the French — played well in the early stages and had three break points in the third game for a 2-1 lead. But instead, she quickly found herself 1-3 down and won only three more games in the match.

IN THE second set, Navratilova played some of the best tennis of her career. Serving powerfully and volleying cleanly, she wore down Lloyd with a stream of delicate drop shots that had her opponent scurrying in the heat towards the net.

Lloyd did not win a single point on her service and only seven in the entire set, five of them in the sixth game when she saved two match points and broke Navratilova's serve.

Serving to save her title, she fell behind 0-40 for the fourth time in the set and Navratilova put away her third match point with a volley into the open court.

"I said I didn't think I would be as nervous in the final and I wasn't," Navratilova said. "Once you get there, it's a little easier.

"I've still got the doubles to play and we're going for the slam in that as well, so I can't do too much celebrating tonight."

While Lloyd's challenge faded in the heat, the only real fight of the day came, literally, in the stands.

In the middle of the opening set, play was halted for over one minute when two men stood up and began exchanging blows before being restrained by other spectators.

"The same thing happened when Chris and I were playing in the U.S. Open. I felt like telling them to come down on the court and put on a show," Navratilova joked.

Stabler may retire, but marriage is first

GULF SHORES, Ala. (AP) — New Orleans Saints quarterback Kenny Stabler, planning to marry a former beauty queen who also marched at West Point, says he may take a vow to retire from football after this season.

"I've been trying to make plans for after football for a long time," Stabler said in a recent interview. "I've been trying to take the necessary steps to maintain a certain kind of lifestyle."

Besides marriage, those steps include investing in coastal real estate.

Stabler, 38, said he's taking the game "from year to year," but, he added, "right now, I'm leaning toward this being my last one.

Non-winner Beck has high hopes

HARRISON, N.Y. (AP) — Chip Beck, a frequent challenger but not yet a winner on the PGA Tour, takes a one-shot lead and some high hopes into today's final round of the $500,000 Manufacturers Hanover Westchester Classic.

"I've spent a lifetime trying to get in this situation," said the 27-year-old Beck, who led through three rounds as recently as two weeks ago.

"You can't think about winning a golf tournament," Beck said after his hard-won round of 70, 1-under par, in Saturday's third round.

"All you can do is to think about playing good golf.

"That's what I'm going to try to do tomorrow—just play good golf.

"I hope I can handle it."

Beck, the leader all the way in this event in the suburbs of New York, completed three trips over the hilly, 6,687-yard Westchester Country Club course in 202, 11 shots under par.

Jay Haas moved into second place with a 68 in the continuing muggy, hazy heat. For the third day in a row, the temperatures reached into the mid-90s. Haas, in a slump most of the season, will take a 203 total, 10 under par, into Sunday's final round of the chase for a $90,000 first prize.

"After the way I've played this year, it's a real pleasure to be in this position," Haas said.

Although Beck has not won, "he's been in the hunt before — he's not a rookie," said Haas.

"He led through three rounds at Muirfield (two weeks ago). He's been there. And he's playing good. We'll have to catch him," Haas said.

Tom Kite, who has finished in the top 10 in five of his last six starts, and Scott Simpson were another stroke back at 204. Kite had a no-bogey round of 68 and Simpson had a 70.

They appeared to be the only others in title contention. It was another two strokes back to Jim Dent, at 206 after a 66.

Alcott blitz hits Sheehan

MALVERN, Pa. (AP) — Amy Alcott overcame a four-stroke deficit and stifling 95-degree heat to take a one-stroke lead Saturday after three rounds of the $350,000 LPGA McDonald's Kids' Classic.

"You gotta be tough," said Alcott, who shot a 3-under-par 69 to overtake Patty Sheehan, the leader after 36 holes.

Sheehan wilted in the oppressive heat and slipped into second place, one stroke ahead of Connie Chillemi and Donna White, with a 2-over-par 74 over the 6,283-yard White Manor Country Club course in suburban Philadelphia.

Alcott carded a 54-hole score of 210, and Sheehan 211. Chillemi and White followed at 212.

Alcott grabbed the lead with a 4-under-par 32 on the front nine, tying Sheehan with a birdie on six and edging in front with another bird at seven.

Sheehan is striving not only for the $52,500 first prize in this tournament, but also the $500,-000 bonus to the golfer who wins two of the last three tournaments. She won the LPGA Championship last week.

Chillemi, who missed the cut in eight of 14 tournaments this year, tied Alcott for the lead with at six under with a birdie on the 15th hole, but fell back again with bogeys at 16 and 18.

Juli Inkster had 213. Kathy Baker's 71 left her at 2-under 214, four strokes off the pace.

Sheehan, who last week won the LPGA Championship by a record 10 strokes, didn't make a birdie Saturday. She had one bogey on each nine.

Alcott after her four birdies on the front nine, played steady on the back side, carding one bogey and no birds.

JoAnne Carner, who won two weeks ago at Corning and has a shot at the $500,000 bonus, appeared out of the running with a 2-over-par 218. She shot a 73 Saturday and had three rounds of 70-75-73.

Beth Solomon, Jane Crafter, Sue Fogleman, Vicki Fergon and Sharon Barrett tied at even par 216.

Barrett, who was three shots out of the lead after 36 holes, fired a front nine 40 Saturday and wound up with a 4-over 76.

Grand Slam: Martina beats Chris

AP Laserphoto

Martina Navratilova holds up French Open trophy after beating Chris Evert Lloyd Saturday in finals.

PARIS (AP) — Martina Navratilova became only the fifth player in history to capture the elusive Grand Slam of tennis Saturday when she crushed defending champion Chris Evert Lloyd 6-3, 6-1 to win the women's singles title at the French Open championships.

With last year's Wimbledon, U.S. and Australian Open crowns already under her belt, the 27-year-old Czechoslovakian-born naturalized American joined an elite band of players to win the world's four most prestigious tournaments consecutively.

Only two other women, America's Maureen Connolly in 1953 and Australia's Margaret Court Smith in 1970, have accomplished the feat. Among the men, Don Budge won it in 1938 and Australia's Rod Laver did it twice, in 1962 and 1969.

IF SHE wins the women's doubles final with Pam Shriver on today, Navratilova will become only the second person to win the slam in both singles and doubles Smith teamed with fellow Australian Ken Fletcher to win all four mixed doubles titles in 1963.

Today, John McEnroe will attempt to become the first American to win the French Open men's singles crown since 1955, when Tony Trabert won his second straight here on the slow red clay courts of Roland Garros Stadium. The top-seeded McEnroe will play Czechoslovakia's Ivan Lendl, who is seeking his first Grand Slam title in his fifth trip to a Grand Slam tournament final.

French Open

Two other championships were decided on Saturday. Yannick Noah and Henri Leconte became the first French pair since 1946 to win the men's doubles, defeating Czechoslovakia's Tomas Smid and Pavel Slozil 6-4, 2-6, 3-6, 6-3, 6-2, and American's Dick Stockton and Anne Smith captured the mixed doubles, downing Australians Anne Minter and Laurie Warder 6-2, 6-4.

Navratilova's crushing 63-minute victory over Lloyd was her second French open title — she also won here in 1982 — and her ninth Grand Slam tournament crown. She has won Wimbledon four times, the U.S. Open once and the Australian Open twice.

"I feel very proud to be among a very select group of tennis players," a jubilant Navratilova told the sun-drenched 17,000 capacity crowd after her victory on the Center Court at Roland Garros.

IN ADDITION to her winner's prize of 98,000, she collected a special $1 million bonus put up by the International Tennis Federation two years ago to the next Grand Slam winner.

Budge was present when ITF president Philippe Chatrier presented Navratilova with the check at a special award ceremony shortly after the match.

When the new French champion turned up 45 minutes late — apparently held up by traffic after leaving the stadium — Budge said: "In my day, I would have been on time for a thousand bucks. Boy, things sure have changed, but I think it's great."

Lloyd did not win a single point on her service and only seven in the entire set, five of them in the sixth game when she saved two match points and broke Navratilova's serve.

Serving to save her title, she fell behind 0-40 for the fourth time in the set and Navratilova put away her third match point with a volley into the open court.

"I said I didn't think I would be as nervous in the final and I wasn't," Navratilova said. "Once you get there, it's a little easier.

"I've still got the doubles to play and we're going for the slam in that as well, so I can't do too much celebrating tonight."

Bell soars over 19-feet

SAN JOSE, Calif. (AP) — Earl Bell, who was unable to train two weeks ago because of an injured leg, became the first American pole vaulter to clear 19 feet outdoors, soaring 19-0¼ in the USA-Mobil Outdoor Track and Field Champinships Saturday.

Bell cleared the height on his second attempt, breaking the American record of 18-11 set by his recent roommate, Mike Tully, at Los Angeles May 20.

While Bell's was the only men's mark to fall on a busy final day of the national championships, featuring 23 finals, two U.S. women's senior marks fell.

Judi Brown skimmed over the 400-meter intermediate hurdles in 54.99 seconds, shattering the American mark of 55.69, established by Lori McCauley last year at Colorado Springs, Colo., and Valerie Brisco-Hooks won the 400-meter dash in 49.83, erasing the mark of 50.52 set by Chandra Cheeseborough May 13 at Los Angeles.

A SECOND record fell in the women's 400 hurdles, as runner-up Leslie Maxie, a 17-year-old high school student from Millbrae, Calif., was clocked in 55.20, smashing the world junior mark of 55.61, by Bulgaria's Radostina Shtereva last year. She finished second to Brown.

Meanwhile, Kim Gallagher won the women's 800-meter and 1,500-meter races within a span of about 50 minutes, Merlene Ottey of Jamaica completed a sweep of the women's 100 and 200, and Ria Stalman of the Netherlands completed a double in the women's shot put and discus.

After Bell cleared his record height, he had the bar moved up to a world record 19-3¾, but he didn't really come close to clearing that height on three attempts.

The world record is 19-3½, by Sergey Bubka of the Soviet Union. The only other American to clear 19 feet was Billy Olson, who also reached 19-0¼ indoors this year.

"Everything was going right for me today," said the 28-year-old Bell, who first set the American record of 18-7¼ in 1976, the year when he also finished sixth in the Olympic Games.

Recently, however, he had not been jumping well, clearing only 17-8½ last Monday night at Eugene, Ore.

"I was a basket case there," he said. "I was slow and sluggish. I felt good when I went there, but I had no snap at all."

But with the help of Dr. Leroy Perry, a noted chiropractor who has helped many athletes, Bell got back in the groove for the national championships.

"He striaghtened me out," said Bell. "My left leg was numb. It was the same injury that ended my season last year."

BROWN, THE 1983 NCAA champion and 1983 Pan American Games champion in the women's hurdles, held off the fast-closing Maxie in capturing the title.

"I had a dream (Friday night) I'd run 54.8, but I had no idea I'd get near it," she said.

"I was aware of Leslie (Maxie), and knew that that if I didn't run the race I was capable of, she would beat me. It was up to me not to make too many mistakes."

Brisco-Hooks didn't make any mistakes in the 400 dash, either, in moving into ninth place on the all-time world list of performers in that event.

She is the husband of Alvin Hooks, a former wide receiver with the Philadelphia Eagles of the National Football League who passed up an opportunity to play with the Los Angeles Express of the United States Football League this year.

Hooks, who has signed with the Buffalo Bills of the NFL for the 1984 season, decided to skip the opportunity with the Express in order to help his wife train.

"He helped me with my confidence," she said. "I was beginning to doubt myself."

Gallagher, who also began to doubt herself after finishing fifth in the Bruce Jenner Classic here May 26, came back strongly.

Blazers, Spurs may try to deal

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — Portland General Manager Stu Inman says he has talked with the San Antonio Spurs about a trade to fill one of the big gaps created by the deal that brought Kiki Vandeweghe to the Trail Blazers.

"We've talked to them about their guards," said Portland General Manager Stu Inman. "They have John Lucas, Johnny Moore and John Paxson at one position. If they move a player, they'll move Lucas or Paxson."

Paxson is the younger brother of Portland all-star guard Jim Paxson.

Inman said Friday that the Blazers have talked to several other teams about trades, even discussing a possible deal for Moses Malone at Philadelphia.

Inman said the talk with the 76ers "means nothing."

"Don't make too much of this," he said. "I don't think they will call back."

In the San Antonio discussions, the Blazers are looking for a backup point guard to play behind Darnell Valentine following the deal that sent Lafayette Lever, Calvin Natt, Wayne Cooper and two draft choices for Denver in exchange for the sharpshooting Vandeweghe.

Invaders stage upset with late touchdown

USFL Roundup

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) — Tom Newton ran around left end for a 20-yard touchdown with 4:50 remaining to break a 13-13 tie and lead the Oakland Invaders to a 20-13 victory over the Michigan Panthers Saturday in a United States Football League game.

The Invaders, who won their seventh consecutive game after starting the season 0-9, led throughout the game until Michigan tied it on a spectacular 78-yard touchdown pass from Whit Taylor to Derek Holloway on the Panthers' first play from scrimmage in the fourth quarter.

The Invaders led 7-6 at halftime and added to their margin when quarterback Fred Besana ran a bootleg around left end for a 7-yard touchdown run with 4:17 to play in the third quarter. Kicker Kevin Shea, who missed three field goals, including a 22-yarder, missed the extra point as Oakland's lead remained at 13-6.

Michigan opened the scoring in the first quarter with an 18-yard field goal by Novo Bojovic. The Invaders came right back to take a 7-3 lead less than two minutes later on an 11-yard touchdown pass from Besana to Brian Williams.

Bojovic's 47-yard field goal midway through the second quarter pulled Michigan to within 7-6 at halftime.

The Panthers evened their record at 8-8 with the loss. They are battling the Invaders for one of the remaining available wild card playoff spots in the Western Conference.

Bandits 42, Showboats 24

TAMPA (AP) — Gary Anderson scored his 18th, 19th and 20th touchdowns of the year Saturday night to set a United States Football League single-season record and lead the Tampa Bay Bandits to a 42-24 victory over the Memphis Showboats.

The triumph was the ninth in 10 games for the playoff-bound Bandits, who pulled within one-half game of Southern Division-leading Birmingham with a 12-4 record. The 12-3 Stallions entertain Washington Sunday.

San Antonio downs Cubs by 3-1 count

From Staff Reports

SAN ANTONIO— Ralph Bryant smashed a two-run homer in the third inning here Saturday night to give the San Antonio Dodgers a 2-1 lead en route to a 3-1 victory over the Midland Cubs.

Darryl Banks, now 1-5, was tagged with the hit and the loss in dropping Midland to 18-40 on the year. The Cubs currently are mired in last place in the Texas League West Division.

Midland got on top briefly with a run in the second. Joe Henderson reached base on one of four Dodger erros on the night, then later scored on Banks' single. Banks did all he could offensively, going 2-for-2 before retiring in the seventh, but had control problems on the mound which resulted in his issuance of six walks.

Bryant's 12th round-tripper of the year came in the third. Rob Slezak, who came on in relief of Dodger starter Vance Lovelace in the third, took the victory for his first of the year against two losses. Wild and Crazy guy Steve Martin shut the door on Midland with two innings of scoreless relief to earn his second save of the year.

The Dodgers added an insurance run to preserve the win in the eighth. San Antonio, 25-33, is in third place in the TL West.

Cub shortstop Shawon Dunston chipped in two of the Cubs' five hits. Jeff Jones added the other.

Midland lost the series opener here, but has a chance to return some of the grief in the middle game of a five-game tilt with San Antonio tonight.

Ticket brokers hurting over Soviet-led boycott

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Stung by the Soviet-led boycott, speculators who hoped to convert Olympic tickets into golden profits are panicking because of increased supply and decreased demand, ticket brokers say.

"With the Soviet bloc competing, it would have been a scalper's paradise," said Dion Rich, a San Diego ticket broker. "Now it's a bonanza for the last-minute buyer."

Black market prices are falling and "the boycott has definitely had a bearing on it," Rich said. "It's worse than I thought it would be. There's going to be a lot of tickets to be had."

"We're getting inundated with telephone calls from speculators who want to sell tickets," said Larry Gold, owner of Ticket Time, one of Los Angeles' largest ticket agencies. "People are panicking about their investment."

Gold said demand is likely to increase as the Games approach, "but right now the market is very soft for the marginal and preliminary events."

Earlier this year, some ticket agencies were asking more than $1,000 for tickets to opening and closing ceremonies and $500 for a seat at the basketball finals — five times face value.

Now, some major brokers have begun selling only on consignment, Rich said, "a far cry from when they were gobbling up everything in sight."

Another factor in the glut was the start of over-the-counter ticket sales last week. With the mail-order process all but completed, roughly 1.2 million tickets went on sale at nine Los Angeles-area walk-up centers.

Caught in flames

To the casual observer, the continuing Iran-Iraq war may be a curiosity — nothing more than a strangely purposeless war in a remote corner of the world.

It is that, no doubt, but the 44-month-long war's developing nature portends trouble for the United States in more ways than one. The concern isn't necessarily a potential stoppage of oil tranported by tankers through the now perilous Persian Gulf. The United States imports only an insignificant part of its oil from that region, and loss of the supply would hurt other nations, Japan for example, much more. Besides, a physical blockage of the Strait of Hormuz would be virtually impossible due to its width and the depth of waters.

But since Saudi Arabia waded into the Persian Gulf conflagration in defense of its own air space this week and since Saudi Arabia is manning American aircraft in its air battles with Iran, the picture has changed dramatically.

That point can only be emphasized because of the Soviet Union's involvement in the Gulf. The Soviets have been supplying the Iraqis and bolstering their defense effort against Iran.

The war drags on because Iran has been capable of financing its effort via its sale of oil. With Iraq propped up by the Soviet Union, there's little hope of any quick resolution.

As the war progresses, undoubtedly it will involve other Mideast nations. They'll be drawn in just as Saudi Arabia was and, in a matter of time, the entire Persian Gulf will indeed be engulfed by the flames of war — just as Iran's maniacal leader Ayatollah Khomeini has threatened.

It's time for the United States and the other involved nations to not fan the flames of the war but to work diligently in whatever way possible to bring the conflict to an end and get the nations of Iran and Iraq to a negotiating table where they, hopefully, will talk instead of fighting.

The choice now appears to be between getting the peace process moving or continuing to plunge headlong toward a major escalation in the war that potentially will threaten world peace and security.

Another View:

Trade deficit blame

The steadily widening American trade deficits are becoming an important source of instability in the American economy. The April figures, just published, show the deficit roaring along at a rate of $130 billion a year — a level that, if it had been predicted six months ago, would have been derided as alarmist.

These deficits won't continue indefinitely. But the unsettling thing about them is that no one has any idea when the pattern will break. It depends on the willingness of foreigners, as they sell goods here, to keep holding more and more American dollars. At some point, presumably, they will decide that they have enough and refuse to finance American trade deficits any further. Perhaps they will decide that they have more than enough, and begin selling dollars for other currencies that at that moment look safer or more profitable.

What might precipitate that? It's unpredictable. It might be a rather minor event — one bank failure too many, perhaps, or a strike. The important thing to keep in mind is that when it happens, an uncomfortable adjustment will follow. It will mean a drop in the dollar's exchange rate and a further rise in interest rates. If the country is lucky it will happen gradually. But there's no guarantee that it won't happen the other way.

In the meantime, there are substantial consequences for the American economy. Throughout the postwar years, the United States has built up enormous investments abroad that return a steady stream of foreign income to this country. They are now being rapidly offset by the accumulation of foreign investment here that is helping to finance the trade deficit. This country's net foreign investment, and net foreign income, are falling — at the cost of the standard of living. You ought not be under the impression that the foreign trade deficits are free. You are paying for them out of the capital that this country has slowly built up over many years.

The trade deficits are not, after all, mere financial abstractions. They measure the trouble that American industries are having competing with foreign producers, both in this country and abroad. The reason for it is the very high exchange rate of the American dollar. The dollar is high primarily because American interest rates are high. And if you begin looking for the reasons for the high interest rates, you will find that the trail leads you directly to the Reagan administration's huge budget deficit.

The causes of that dangerously lopsided trade balance don't have much to do with the alleged machinations of foreigners, or their trade policies, or their currency manipulation. The reasons for it don't lie in Japan or Western Europe. The American trade deficit is the result of bad policy here in Washington.

EPA covered up cancer danger

Jack Anderson

What's even more alarming, though, is that Environmental Protection Agency officials knew about this evidence years ago but ignored it in what one government scientist characterized as "little more than a 'cover-up' job."

Every backyard gardener is familiar with malathion. It has been recommended for years by gardening books and columns as the chemical of choice to get rid of insects that devour fruits and vegetables. But beyond the usual labels warning that it is poisonous to ingest, there has been no suggestion that malathion can cause cancer in those exposed to it.

In California, the exposure to malathion extends to millions of people who may never have sprayed a tomato plant or a fruit tree in their backyard. It was sprayed over huge areas of the state — including populated areas — to combat the Mediterranean fruit fly two years ago and is currently being used against the Mexican fruit fly.

But for more than five years the EPA has had good reason to believe that exposure to malathion can pose an unacceptably high risk of cancer. My associate Donald Goldberg has seen EPA files on the chemical. The evidence that malathion can cause cancer was documented in two studies in the late 1970s by the National Cancer Institute.

The EPA routinely reviews such studies and issues comments on the findings. In the case of malathion, though, the EPA reviewers simply edited out the NCI's findings of cancer risk.

Within the EPA, the peculiar review of the malathion studies in known as the "cut-and-paste" scandal. That's because the agency's reviewers pasted up only those portions of the NCI summaries that could be quoted to minimize malathion's dangers, and scissored out passages suggesting that the chemical could cause cancer.

News of the cut-and-paste scandal eventually reached the ears of the EPA brass, and they hired Battelle Memorial Institute, an independent research laboratory, to evaluate the EPA reviews of the National Cancer Institute reports. Here's the Battelle analysis of one of the reports:

"There is no evidence of a critical review or evaluation of the (NCI) report or data contained in it. The portion of the conclusion added by the EPA reviewer would seem to be of little value in determing the validity of the report concerning the possible carcinogenicity (of malathion)."

The Battelle report also noted "highly suggestive evidence of a dose-related carcinogenic effect."

Incredibly, the EPA brass stood by the review that Battelle had lambasted.

Meanwhile, Dr. Adrian Gross, an EPA cancer researcher, concluded from his own study of the NCI data that as many as one of every 1,000 people exposed to "currently established tolerances for malathion" can be expected to get cancer.

"I should think that this represents an unacceptably high upper limit on the risk ascribable to malathion," Gross wrote in his report on the matter.

In a covering memo, Gross expressed himself even more strongly on the EPA's treatment of the NCI reports and Battelle's critical review: "We have here what amounts to little more than a 'cover-up' job and a recommendation that nothing of any consequence be done. ..."

CONFIDENTIAL FILE: The Defense Intelligence Agency has conducted a "census" of Soviet weapons factories, and has identified 130 major assembly plants plus more than 3,500 support facilities. In a report on the subject, the DIA states:

"The Soviet defense industry has grown steadily and consistently over the past 20-25 years. Their military industrial base is by far the world's largest in number of facilities and physical size, and it produces more individual military systems in greater quantities than any other nation. Physical growth and the commitment of large quantities of financial and human resources are its most dynamic aspect.

"Production plants appear to be continually active, suggesting that as old weapons programs are phased out, new ones are begun, leaving little downtime or long periods of layoffs and inactivity. The cyclical process, the continuing facility growth and the high rates of production keep the arms industry in a high state of readiness to meet any contingency."

WATCH ON THE PENTAGON: It's hard to find anyone whose phone bill went down as a result of Ma Bell's breakup, but most of us aren't in as bad shape as the Air Force Space Command in Colorado. According to a recent memo, "the cost of moving a single-line, 'no button' telephone jumped from a flat $75 to as much as $800." Putting in a simple pickup device went from $7.50 to $445, while transfer of more complex phones went from an already-high $500 to a stratospheric $3,120. During a two-month period, labor charges alone were nearly $50,000, instead of the old, monopolistic $9,200.

— Social stratification is the latest trend at the Air Force's Tactical Air Command bases. Enlisted men's off-duty, on-base relaxation centers are being separated into non-commissioned officers' and airmen's clubs. Privates who felt the need for stripe-wearing drinking buddies used to be allowed into NCO clubs. Now the sergeants are pulling rank. At Nellis Air Force Base in Nevada, the split has been costly to the NCOs: Their now-exclusive club lost $18,000 in March and $17,000 in April.

GEORGE F. WILL

Einstein's life stressed parenting

The rotten news for parents was put succinctly in a New York Times headline: "Einstein Revealed as Brilliant in Youth." That may not strike you as any sort of news, but it is, and it blasts a hope that has sustained some of us.

George F. Will

It has long been said that Einstein was a slow starter. The legend, to which many parents have clung for comfort, was that Einstein was dim in primary and secondary school and even failed his college-entrance examinations. He did fail those examinations, but primarily because he had trouble learning French, which trouble I consider a sign of superior spirit.

The rest of the legend turns out to derive from a misreading of the grading system at his Swiss school. It now has been learned, as a result of the preparation of his papers for publication, that the kid was something of a prodigy. He excelled at college physics before he was 11, was gifted at Latin and Greek, and was a "brilliant" violinist.

The science (or so we are invited to regard it) of "parenting" incites the hope that we can learn practical lessons from conspicuous successes. So I have been looking into the rearing of little Al Einstein. My findings are not entirely encouraging.

At age five he was tutored at home, but only briefly — until he had a tantrum and threw a chair at the unfortunate woman doing the tutoring. So far, so good: The Will children certainly have had that Einsteinian phase.

Now for the bad news.

It is said that when at age four or five he received a compass from his father, he trembled and became cold from the thrill of thinking: Because the needle always points in the same direction, something unseen in space must be compelling it; therefore space is not empty.

He was stirred to the depths of his soul (it had more depth than I usually see in children's souls) by a book of euclidean geometry which, he thought, gave him a glimpse of perfection.

Now, admit it: If you gave your child a book of geometry, he or she would not take his or her nose out of the Michael Jackson biography he or she is reading. If you give him or her a compass at 9 a.m., and it has not been lost by 10 a.m., by 11 a.m. it will have been traded for a Moosehead beer can.

Little Einstein was perhaps slow to speak, but once he got the hang of it he said attention-getting things. As the Will children fill the dinner hour with ad hominem remarks about one another, spiced with digressions concerning the enveloping subject of Michael Jackson, my mind turns to this fact: Young Einstein was given to wondering aloud, "What would the world look like if I were riding on a beam of light?"

(Don't say: "Blurry." Einstein was being serious, and the correct answer is: "Frozen." Jacob Bronowski explains it: Suppose you are riding away from a clock tower on the beam of light with which you were seeing that the clock reads "noon." You will travel 186,000 miles away from the clock in a second. But the clock, as you will see it over your shoulder, will not change at all, not even a second. Why not? By keeping up with the beam of light, you have escaped from the passage of time.)

When asked on his 74th birthday whether the compass and the geometry book really influenced his growth, Einstein said he thought so: "But a man has little insight into what goes on within him. When a young puppy sees a compass for the first time, it may have no similar influence, nor on many a child." I love the equation of puppies and children. And I wonder: What about the second time the puppy sees the compass?

You can, Einstein said, postulate theories, but you will never find the answer to the riddle of what determines the reactions of individuals to particular influences. So, parents, the science of parenting is, it seems, severely circumscribed.

Thank God. How intolerable would be the burden of responsibility, and how sad would be the death of mystery, were we able to control the maturation of creatures we let loose on the world.

So it is cheerfully that I, with a flourish that puts me on a par with Einstein at, oh, age four, offer this sunburst: Parenting is a science of single instances.

ART BUCHWALD

Americans never can say bye!

The trouble with foreign people in this country is that they take everything Americans say literally. I have a French friend named Michel Bernheim. I met him the other day on the street, and after the usual chitchat about Paris I said, "Give me a call some time."

Art Buchwald

The next day he was on the line.

"Bonjour," he said, "It's Michel. You said to give you a call."

"I did?"

"Oui, don't you remember? I spoke to you yesterday on Pennsylvania Avenue."

"I didn't mean for you to give me a call right away. I was just finding a nice way to say goodbye to you."

"Then you don't want to talk on the telephone?"

"I can't think of anything to say, frankly."

"But you asked me to call you."

"You're right, Michel. Look, I'm terribly busy right now. Let's have lunch some time."

"I would like that. When?"

"I'm not sure. Why don't you give me a holler?"

Two days later I heard someone calling my name from the sidewalk. I opened the window in my office and Michel was down below.

"What in the devil are you shouting about?" I yelled down to him.

"You said to give you a holler when I wanted to have lunch. How about today?"

"I'm busy today."

"Well, when can you have lunch?"

"I'm not sure. I'm tied up for the next three weeks."

"Why did you tell me to give you a holler when I wanted to have lunch if you were so tied up?"

"Michel, you've been around long enough to know when an American says, 'Let's have lunch some time,' he doesn't necessarily mean it. It's a pleasantry. You French say, 'Au revoir,' the Germans say, 'Auf wiedersehen,' the Spanish say, 'Hasta manana,' and Americans say, 'Let's have lunch,' which in our country means, 'Don't call me; I'll call you.'"

Michel said, "I didn't mean to bother you."

"You didn't bother me. I'll tell you what. Let's check in with each other and have a drink one of these days."

"That would be great," Michel said.

I was sweating out a column the next day when the door opened and Michel stuck his head in.

"Now what?"

"I'm just checking in to see if you wanted a drink."

"Can't you see I'm busy?"

"I can see that now, but I couldn't before I checked in with you."

"Michel, you're driving me nuts. You can't take everything we Americans say as gospel. The only reason I said 'Let's have a drink some time' is because I wanted you to stop hollering under my window about having lunch together."

"All you have to do is tell me you don't want to see me," Michel said in a hurt voice, "instead of asking me to meet with you all the time and then breaking the date."

I felt badly. "You're right. I feel terrible about the way I've treated you. Our problem is that we're so used to saying goodbye to each other with a promise we'll get together soon, that no one in this country expects the other person to keep it. We wouldn't be able to get anything done if we had lunch with everyone we accidentally met on the street."

"I understand," Michel said. "But if you change your mind, you have my card and you can call me."

"I don't have your card, Michel. That's another thing you don't understand: When Americans exchange business cards with each other, they usually throw them away when they get home."

BILL MODISETT

Parenthood necessary qualification for presidency

Bill Modisett

The framers of the U.S. Constitution blundered mightily when they drew up the qualifications for president. They failed to include one of the most important qualifying factors: Being a parent.

It's true they were careful to specify such candidates had to be "natural-born" citizens of the country, must have attained the age of 35 and must have lived in the United States for at least 14 years. But they left out that extremely important qualifying relationship gained by carefully navigating the river of parenthood.

Now I have nothing against people without children; they're fine folks and in some respects their lives may be even more fulfilling than the ones parents lead.

It's just that parenthood — that condition more appropriately described as a trial by constancy — provides a uniquely ideal training ground for those charged with the grueling duties of the nation's highest political office.

For example, there are the presidential press conferences, sometimes called "Raking The Big Boy Over The Coals" sessions. Any parent who has spent the best part of a weekend participating in a 3-year-old's version of "20 Questions" would find a presidential press conference nothing more than child's play.

But even when one is not considering the proper way to respond to such queries from a young questioner as why worms live underground or why it isn't proper to play in the rain completely devoid of clothing, there are other diplomacy tests to be met and mastered with courage.

I'm not a politician. Heck, I'm not even a diplomatic person. Worst of all, I'm not a patient person, but parenthood teaches patience. It illustrates in a deliciously positive way that one really can grasp the will to retie a child's shoe laces 66 times in one day because...well, because...the necessity of leaving the laces tied will "take" in the young mind on the 67th time. Or the 68th. Maybe the 69th.

Anyone who can tie laces that repeatedly could sit through arms limitation talks with the obstinate Soviets and never — never — become disillusioned.

And as for settling disputes between nations...Have you ever considered the parental diplomacy required to resolve the calamitous aftermath following an incident of "toy-nabbing?" When a 1- or 3-year-old happens into the room where another 1- or 3-year-old is contentedly playing and expropriates the toy the second child was playing with, masterful skills are demanded.

Perhaps the most difficult situation a parent will face is that oft-dreaded once-a-year event — the notorious Family Vacation. Have you ever tried to take a trip with a child?

It's rough enough being locked in a house with a small bundle of energy, but try a few hours locked in a car with one...or two. Ever wonder why those people we call parents have rotten nerves and shout a lot?

I truly do think I would not vote for any presidential candidate who was not a parent. Why? Because of the training ground and because what parents do is not all that different from the goal our presidents seek.

Late in the evening, when the lights are low, the house is quiet, and that small bundle of energy is, at last, asleep in your arms, that silence — that peace and fulfillment — makes it all so worthwhile.

'Fast food joints' need better publicity

I am angry at all the bad publicity and attitudes that are directed toward the fast food businesses. I have worked at the same restaurant for almost two years now. I will not say it is easy, and that all our employees have been there as long as I. We do seem to go through quite a few workers, but the reason for this seems to be an attitude problem drilled into everyone's mind.

That attitude is that "Anyone can work at a restaurant," and they don't have to do a good job because "fast food joints" are desperate for help!

The fast food business isn't for everyone. It takes a hard working, responsible person to be successful in the restaurant business. This person has to like his/her job and not feel inferior to others because of their job. It is true we are always looking for good help, but what profession isn't in need of responsible and dependable people?

I'm not using the term "profession" losely either. Workers have to have managers and managers must have supervisors. Yes, there is a career to be had in fast food!

Citizens of Midland, do not just think of those who need good employees to aid in their career; think of yourself! The better quality of employees your restaurants have, the better service they can and will give you. If everyone suddenly found they were too good to work in a "fast food joint" where would you go to eat out? There would be no one to serve you.

Change your attitude today! Fast food isn't a bad place to be, and it will be much better for everyone, if your attitudes are better!

Program aids inmates as well as Midland

It was with a lot of interest that I read the recent Reporter-Telegram story on the work program being conducted by Midland County for the jail inmates. The program appears to give the opportunity of not only saving taxpayers' money, but also allows the prisoners an opportunity to decide if they want to serve less time in jail by paying for their fine or time in jail by working.

The clean-up details which are being provided by the prisoners do more than beautify our city. As I read the comments from the prisoners, it is obvious that many of them are taking pride in themselves by contributing to the quality of life for all Midlanders; their manner of restoring their life by doing work for the city is indicative that they are using their time in a constructive way which will help everyone.

The opportunity the work program is giving these individuals is far greater than the immediate benefits to our city and the taxes they are saving our community. The program allows self esteem. My question is why only the county? The City of Midland has many more inmates who could profit from a similiar program. The people who have traffic citations and are not able to pay them could be allowed by choice to work them out; this would certainly take care of overcrowding of our jail system.

Midland has always been unique; it is so progressive in so many ways that surely our City Council members could come up with a plan that would be beneficial to all concerned. Making our city more desirable by providing a cleaner place to live would certainly provide a better quality of life for all citizens. No doubt many details would have to be worked out, however, with the caliber of people we have in our police department and our City Council a plan which gives a choice to prisoners and saves taxes can surely be worked out. Midlanders would all benefit.

How can anyone call Robert E. Lee traitor?

In the Sunday, June 3, edition of the MRT, a Mr. Arthur Pertile III wrote a letter proclaiming his rights to rename a Midland street after Martin Luther King Jr. He also made some rather questionable remarks concerning Sam Houston, Robert E. Lee, Jim Bowie and Davie Crockett, to which I take exception.

Everyone, especially Mr. Pertile, has the right to their opinion; but before making questionable statements regarding such people as General Robert E. Lee, perhaps he should examine the life of the man. Robert E. Lee, a traitor? I hardly think so.

While a cadet at West Point, Lee compiled a much more impressive record than did Mr. King with his advocation of violence and anarchy. Lee ranked number two in a class of 46 and was one of the few cadets in the long history of West Point to be graduated without a single demerit. Among his long list of remarkable achievements, the man was designated a "Distinguished Cadet" at the end of each of the four academic years, an honor bestowed on only the highest five cadets in a relative class standing.

General Lee served the United States Army in the Corps of Engineers for a number of years. His military career in the U.S. Army was a long and distinguished one and began long before the War Between the States ever did. After declining a position of high command in the Federal forces, he resigned from the army in April of 1861 after almost 32 years of dedicated service to the United States. He did so to serve and protect his home state of Virginia.

Keep in mind, Mr. Pertile, that the South wanted to withdraw from the Union in peace and nowhere in the United States Constitution did it state that secession was an act of war or aggression. It still does not, I might add! May I quote from General Lee's letter of resignation from the U.S. Army? "Save in defence of my native State, I never wish to draw my sword."

Face facts Mr. Pertile, General Lee had nothing shameful to hide. I wonder sir, what did your glorious leader M.L. King do that warranted FBI and CIA investigations. Perhaps sir, you should ask this of yourself and those who proclaim M.L. King Jr. as a great American and Robert E. Lee as a traitor.

Furthermore, Mr. Pertile, General Lee earned his title of general. Mr. King's title of doctor is an honorary one.

We need to reach out to handicapped kids

I must commend Rhonda Rigenhagen for the recent series of articles on "Reaching Out — Special Education" in Midland. The articles were not only informative and enlightening, but also necessary. Handicaps are often difficult for society to understand and cope with. Being the parent of a severely visually impaired child, I have experienced on a first-hand basis the attitudes and reactions of society toward a handicapped child.

It is our responsibility, as parents, to help educate society in order for there to be a greater understanding of the handicapped and their disabilities. Most of the handicapped children in Midland are fortunate that they will be able to attend public schools due to the educational programs offered through MISD. In this respect, they will become less isolated as they are mainstreamed into society in order to live as normal a life as possible.

Therefore, it is up to us as a society to learn to understand these handicaps and to accept them. The next time you see an obviously disabled child or adult, don't stare or turn away. Reach out to them — smile, say hello or engage them in conversation. They may have physical disabilities, but they are still human beings with feelings and need to be treated as such. Let's not make them more handicapped than they already are.

Remember goose that laid golden eggs?

Once upon a time there was a man who had a goose that laid golden eggs. You know what happened to that goose. And the golden eggs.

Is that what the City Council was doing when they raised the annual green fees at Hogan Park Golf Course? While the Hogan Park Golf Course may not exactly be laying golden eggs, the increase may be a bit stiff for some of the players and their play may be sorely restricted. Or is that what the council had in mind?

Though some increase might be justified it would seem that a 100% increase is exorbitant. Though it is said that the extra money is to be used to improve the course, money generated by Hogan Park must go into the general revenue fund. It is not likely that such funds will find their way back to the golf course.

This matter should be reconsidered.

SPEAKING OUT

Midland, Odessa show 'can do' spirit

By PRICE WOMACK

A native West Texan, Price Womack is president of Womack/Claypoole/Griffin Advertising, Inc. in Odessa. He formerly worked for television stations. He is a graduate of Texas Christian University and joined the advertising agency in 1975.

Our growing West Texas was carved from a wilderness desert by a determined group of rugged individualists. Each was unique in his own right, but together they possessed a common "can do" spirit. It was an attitude necessary for survival.

That same spirit is alive in Midland and Odessa today. Perhaps it was rekindled by our recent economic problems, perhaps through the realization that we need each other to build a brighter future, or merely because we are all West Texans. Nevertheless Midland and Odessa, we are better together.

It doesn't take a genius to figure out that we need to diversify our industrial base. It takes action. That's the reason Texas Instruments general manager Jim Watson called a group of media representatives together in September of 1983. He urged this group to help communicate the need for industrial diversification to other business leaders and the public as a whole. One inescapable fact emerged from the discussion — that by working together, Midland and Odessa could be more successful in recruiting new industry to West Texas.

In their discussions, the group agreed it would be difficult to accomplish this goal without first strengthening the relationships of the two cities in general.

The group adopted the name Midland-Odessa Media Coalition and began to form a marketing plan. The local advertising community was asked for support and the "Bridge Company" was formed by four local advertising agencies to develop an advertising campaign.

Market research was conducted to pinpoint attitudes, strengths, and bonds between Midland and Odessa. The results were somewhat surprising. Most people acknowledged past and current problems between the cities, but realized the importance of putting those aside and focusing on the future. The attitude prevailed that we are smart enough to learn from our mistakes and work together.

The research also reinforced the fact that Midland is perceived as a more affluent white collar city and that Odessa is an opportunity-oriented, blue collar town. At first glance, these attitudes looked as if they could be the "Achilles' heel" to the goal of unity. Then, we took a moment and re-evaluated. Neither city should or would give up its unique personality and strength. Each city must recognize the other as vital to West Texas' existence. We complement each other.

On the theme "Come on Midland-Odessa We are Better Together" a new advertising campaign was created. The media coalition's effort is receiving positive local, statewide, and national attention. To date, coverage has been provided by Texas Business Magazine, Adweek, Advertising Age, The Associated Press, and Paul Harvey.

The annual media and production budget is $1 million. Each penny of time, space and material is being donated by every local television station, radio station, newspaper, magazine and outdoor advertising company. To date, this is the largest local media donation of prime time and space of which we are aware in the United States. The campaign began March 10th and will run at least one year.

What will all this accomplish? We hope to build a platform for cooperation and an open, positive forum for discussion between our cities. Already the first ever joint executive meeting of the Midland and Odessa Chambers of Commerce has been held. City officials are at least opening lines of communication to find solutions for local problems.

We probably can't eliminate all the differences of opinion and attitudes toward specific issues.

Together, through advertising and public relations, the media coalition and the Bridge Company intend to strengthen each city's respect for one another.

We hope to help broaden our economic base, improve our educational systems, solve long-term water problems, and provide a future for our children, through cooperation.

Our challenge is to recognize the opportunities we have and capitalize on our common "can do" spirit.

Our generation will carve the new West Texas.

Week chock-full of political surprises for Reagan

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.
Editor-in-Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

Hearst

NEW YORK — It was a week chock-full of political surprises, beginning with President Reagan's appearance on the old sod of the Republic of Ireland, until he returned to Washington from an economic summit in London of the world's seven democratic industrial powers. In between the president conferred privately with Britain's conservative Prime Minister Mrs. Margaret Thatcher, lunched with Queen Elizabeth II at Buckingham Palace and made a pilgrimage to the once shell-shredded beaches of Normandy where American and Allied forces landed 40 years earlier to begin routing Hitler's armies.

The first surprise greeted President Reagan in Eire. I was personally shocked and incredulous after reading about the discourteous treatment accorded our president by the Irish government and the Roman Catholic clergy there. Because of his realistic policy toward the U.S.S.R. and its surrogates trying to foment Central American revolt, the Irish Catholic leadership boycotted his visit. What I find astonishing is that the prime minister of Eire, Garret FitzGerald, and the Irish hierarchy could be so misinformed. Many of their priests are in Marxist-run Nicaragua, I know, but these are hardly the sole sources of information. Both Irish church and government should, as do others, have other channels of data.

JEANE KIRKPATRICK, our U.N. ambassador, recently remarked indignantly about European critics of the president's Central American policies: "Their level of outrage far exceeds their level of information." The Irish prime minister, many members of the Dail (Parliament) and local writers all tend to be on that wavelength.

The Irish prime minister chided President Reagan with what I'd call upside-down remarks. He declared that the "Irish people have close emotional ties with the people of Nicaragua through the work of priests and nuns and lay helpers there." As Kingsbury Smith, Hearst national editor and my old friend and colleague, noted, the Sandinista Marxist regime tries to impose so-called "peoples' churches" on the devout just as the Soviet Union did in Eastern Europe.

Closer to home, Prime Minister FitzGerald ought to see what the Communists did to Czechoslovakia and are trying — so far without much success — to do to Poland where church repression is the norm. Kingsbury-Smith also informs me of this chilling report:

"ON GOOD Friday of this year more than 100,000 Nicaraguans demonstrated against the government. In an Easter Pastoral letter, Nicaragua's Roman Catholic bishops made it clear the Sandinista regime lacks popular support. The bishops said 'the majority of the people live in fear of the present and uncertainty about the future.'"

About 18 months ago, Pope John Paul II, addressing half-a-million Nicaraguans, warned that the church in Nicaragua was threatened by "unacceptable ideological commitments." He condemned the "peoples' churches" as absurd and asserted clearly that priests holding government posts were acting outside the will of the bishops. The pontiff spoke in those ringing terms after the Sandinista regime sought to flim-flam him with flowery promises and phrases.

President Reagan, whose package for Central American aid has been accepted by Congress, also may have stepped on some overly sensitive Irish toes with an interview he gave, roundly condemning the IRA. If it hadn't been for the British rushing in troops to Northern Ireland in 1969, the Protestant firebrand, the Rev. Ian Paisley, might have caused a bloodbath. Obviously, the Irish give no thanks to Britain.

ON A peaceful but competitive note, the seven-nation economic summit is touching all fiscal bases, or trying to, and thereby resolve some irksome problems. Britain is host — we were last year — and also attending are Canada, West Germany, Italy, France and Japan. The big surprise in this conference, as Bernard D. Kaplan, Hearst European correspondent, points out, is that the developed world now wants to get up-to-date with the United States and see how we have managed steady growth and increased employment.

This is especially true in the case of France, whose growth is the most dismal of all democratically industrialized nations and where unemployment is today a headache plaguing a socialist-minded government that directs an enfeebled economy. How is it, socialists are asking, that their economy goes on the skids and the American one booms? The London economic conference will try to get some answers from President Reagan and his economic counselors.

LAST BUT hardly least in this compilation of a week's surprises was comment from Jesse Jackson about Walter (Fritz) Mondale, whose delegate count put him over the top for a first-ballot triumph at the Democratic nominating convention in San Francisco next month. On the CBS morning news, Jackson, trying to build himself a "rainbow coalition," said that President Reagan is a better leader than the former Democratic vice president.

After saying that he could work with Mondale — Jackson ignored Sen. Gary Hart, Colo., in this discussion — the black aspirant for the Democratic nomination declared: "It's not Mondale's character; it's his leadership style and in some instances his substance. Somehow this X factor and leadership must be asserted."

"President Reagan," continued Jackson, "has this capacity to mold opinion.

"To compete with the president, you must be a molder of public opinion. Fritz Mondale isn't."

Would you believe that Jackson ever said it? But he did. And I'll bet you are as surprised as I am.

For wedding, Patti Davis will look like 'unspoiled princess'

DALLAS (AP) — Chicago designer Mariana Zaharoff, confirming that she was hired to create Patti Davis' wedding gown, says the gown will make President Reagan's daughter look like "an unspoiled princess."

Miss Davis' long, white dress is made of silk lace and silk charmeuse, Ms. Zaharoff said in an interview with The Dallas Morning News for a copyright story Saturday.

Ms. Zaharoff says the gown is "very dramatic, very modern and very romantic. She is going to be an absolutely beautiful bride."

Ms. Zaharoff, who has been in Dallas for a trunk show of clothes she has designed, had avoided questions about her role in the wedding for weeks before acknowledging in the interview with The News that she was designing the gown.

Miss Davis, 31, is marrying Beverly Hills yoga instructor Paul Grilley, 25, this summer.

The White House has said it will release the official date of the wedding — Miss Davis' first — and details of the dress this week, when the invitations will be mailed.

But The News said it learned from sources that the event is scheduled for Aug. 12 in an outdoor ceremony in Los Angeles.

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Lt. Col. Guion Bluford Jr., the first black American launched into space, briefly collapsed while delivering a commencement address but recovered quickly and finished his speech.

Bluford, a Philadelphia native, was nearing the end of his speech Friday at Thomas Jefferson University when "he went down," said a spokeswoman for the medical school.

The spokeswoman, who asked that her name not be used, said the astronaut was quickly attended to by "a flock of doctors." Moments later he rose and finished his speech.

Dr. Lewis W. Bluemle, president of the university, told the audience that Bluford's collapse was caused by dehydration. The spokeswoman said it was hot inside the nearly full Academy of Music building, which seats 2,900 and the noon temperature outside was 89.

MIAMI (AP) — Miami Dolphins football players Don McNeal and Dwight Stephenson helped police capture two suspected burglars by hounding the pair through a residential neighborhood until a high-speed chase ended in a crash, police said.

McNeal and Stephenson were unharmed in the Thursday afternoon incident, said Sgt. Alan Mandelbloom.

Mandelbloom said McNeal and brother-in-law Robert Gary were driving to McNeal's home when they saw an unfamiliar car in a neighbor's driveway. McNeal swerved his car into the driveway to block the car.

Two suspects escaped by driving through the front yard while a third fled on foot. Stephenson, who also lives nearby, heard the commotion and ran outside. He hopped into his teammate's car and they took off after the fleeing vehicle.

AUSTIN NOTEBOOK

White talks to 'audience'

By BILL KIDD

AUSTIN — When Gov. Mark White addressed the opening of the special legislative session June 4, his remarks were addressed as much, or more, to the audience that wasn't there as to the audience that was.

White's remarks were carried live by satellite to radio and television stations, which were offered the broadcast free of charge by Communications Carrier Inc., and INK Productions of Austin.

In fact, White and his escorting party arrived in the House Chamber too early and had to wait to begin his speech. Leading Speaker Gib Lewis noted that the House was operating under "Superbowl rules," with the action waiting on the TV cameras.

White has demonstrated a fondness for using television in getting his messages to voters; he prepared a series of public service announcements promoting the idea of educational reform for the special session.

And White took to the airwaves to promote his position on the Public Utility Commission, and eliminating fuel adjustment charges.

It's clear that White is hoping to win clear-cut public support for his education and spending plans and it's clear he's going to need that support.

White is faced with the same situation as his predecessors, that while the governor may propose, it's up to the legislature to dispose.

And under Texas' governmental set-up, the governor has to charm, cajole, frighten, bully, trick or perhaps even persuade lawmakers into doing what he wants.

Early indications in the session were that White will need to do a lot of charming — or whatever — to steer his proposals through legislators who seem, as a group, less than enthusiastic about raising taxes.

Most lawmakers indicated they'd agree to increase taxes if there are significant education reforms, but said they want to be sure taxpayers do get a better school system for those additional dollars.

Lawmakers also have been saying they want to assure that funds now being spent are used as efficiently as possible, and if not, to change that before putting any new funds into education.

After all, it is an election year, and while there's never a good time to raise taxes, doing so now may mean trouble in November, unles constituents are convinced the money is well spent.

White demonstrated he understands lawmakers' concern, promising in his speech at the session's start to bring them a budget tightening plan and arguing that by adopting his tax proposals, now, they should be able to avoid passing more tax increases in 1985.

Rep. Stan Schleuter, D-Killeen, chairman of House Ways and Means Committee, argued White should go farther and promise to veto any tax bill next year.

Schleuter argued, logically enough, that by making that commitment, White would help win approval of a tax bill in the special session.

White, understandably, doesn't want to be forced into such a promise. While campaigning for governor, white stated his opposition to new taxes. After becoming governor, White discovered it might not be so easy to avoid new taxes and continue to meet state needs.

Lawmakers managed to avoid tax increases in 1983, partly by changing some accounting and reporting procedures which resulted in more money being available for the current biennium instead of in the next biennium.

At some point, lawmakers will have to come up with additional funds to maintain services at present levels and meet needs of an increasing population or cut services back.

Despite much talk about reducing government, over the years government has continued to grow, sometimes faster, sometimes slower, and it appears 1985 won't be an exception.

Both White and the Legislature have much to gain or lose in the special session, with plenty of opportunity existing for heroes — or goats — to emerge when the session is over.

White may stand to be the big gainer or loser since he has taken the initiative and called lawmakers to Austin.

And White is showing that he recognizes the danger, and the opportunity, he faces. So he is going to legislators and the public with a message: That while raising taxes may be bad, there are times when not raising taxes is worse, and now is such a time.

Goodness knows, they were better TOGETHER

Mae West was a singular sensation everywhere she went. From her start in vaudeville to such classics as "Diamond Lil" and "She Done Him Wrong," Mae was a master of innuendo. Another vaudevillian, W. C. Fields, wrote the book when it came to sarcastic remarks and practical jokes. Dour-faced and unpredictible, his genius was evident in such films as "You Can't Cheat an Honest Man" and "The Bank Dick". But the two were at their best when they appeared together in "My Little Chickadee". Of all the pictures West and Fields made, the one they collaborated on is the most remembered and requested. As Mae would have said, "Goodness, my dear, had nothing to do with it!"

Teamwork can work for cities, too. Cities like ours. Think about it, MIDLAND/ODESSA.

Basin area college programs vary

Schools focus on local needs

EDITOR'S NOTE: The aim of this article and the accompanying graphic is to provide prospective students considering attending college in the Permian Basin with a guide to use in selecting the school with the program they seek. The graphic is not intended to indicate superiority of either school. Programs in some instances have been combined or separated to simplify the comparison.

High-school graduation marked a milestone in the young lives of seniors commencing from schools across Texas and the U.S.

When the excitement has mellowed and the diploma has been retired to an honored spot on a secluded shelf, the graduates are faced with a major decision. What comes next?

Junior colleges in Midland and Odessa extend Permian Basin grads nearby options. Both offer a wide range of two-year programs which provide students with introductions to various careers.

While the two have about 40 instructional programs in common, differences in the two curricula broaden the selection from which aspiring students can choose.

"We've tried to respond to the local needs, especially in the early 1970's," explained Dr. Bernhard Sedate, vice president for instruction at Odessa College.

"Your different colleges around the state have different things," said Raymond Yell, dean of transfer and general studies at Midland College. The local boards of trustees decide on programs in response to local needs, Yell said.

"These people are real close to the needs of the communities," he said.

Odessa College currently has an Allied Health program, offering students courses in X-ray, surgical and medical laboratory technologies.

But Midland College is planning to develop similar programs when their Health/Science Building opens in Fall 1985. Yell said the college responded to a need of hospitals unable to find radiologists in the area.

The community, both its private citizens and local industries, "dictate different things in different towns," said Yell.

This helps explain why Odessa College, whose programs are almost evenly split between occupational-technical and pre-professional, offers study in building trades and auto body repair, cosmetology and maintenance technology.

Yell said he was unaware of any move at Midland College to offer more vocational programs for credit, noting that many of these studies are offered in non-credit continuing education classes.

In line with the needs of its working class population, Odessa College offers an extensive program in petroleum studies. Completion of courses in drilling fluids technology (more commonly known as mud in the oil business) and blow-out prevention prepare the participants for certification in these fields.

Both colleges offer petroleum technology programs in following the Permian Basin's fascination with a dependence on "King Crude."

A cursory comparison of the colleges' catalogs could mislead the reader of the program offerings at the two institutions.

While OC offers a separate photography program, MC shutterbugs can earn a two-year degree in the junior college's journalism department with an emphasis on photography.

Another example is that, while OC offers a separate program in emergency medical technology, MC's fire protection school includes a study of emergency medical techniques.

Both will offer programs in education in response to the state's intentions to upgrade standards for teachers. These courses will monitor those considering teaching as a career to ensure they have the necessary abilities and prepare them for the test qualifying them for teacher education programs at upper-level schools.

MC opened in 1969 as an offshoot of the Permian Basin Junior College System which already included Odessa College and branched out on its own in 1972, while OC has been accommodating students since 1946.

While the elder institution has had more time, MC has taken advantage of bond issues which pumped more than $11 million into its coffers.

"We do have age on them, but Midland has done very well within the time they'v been there," observed Sedate.

"Each of us has our specialities," he said.

Both MC, OC frown on joint effort

By RHONDA RIGENHAGEN

Junior college officials in both Midland and Odessa say their programs are meeting community needs and could not be improved by combining resources.

"Our practice in this country has been to localize education as much as possible to meet the needs of people in that locality," explained Dr. Bernhard Sedate, vice president for instruction at Odessa College.

"We have done so very successfully. I would say that, yes, combination of the two colleges might save some money, but it would be educationally disadvantageous to the people of both communities."

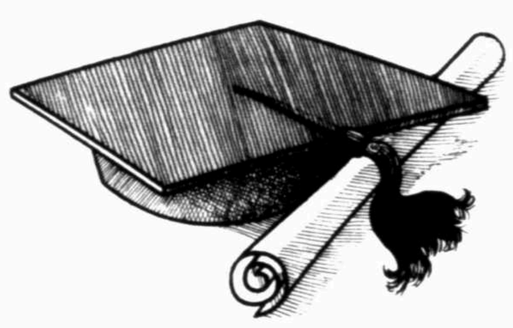
"The nature of a community college is to relate to its community," concurred Dr. Jess Parrish, Midland College president. "We're doing that successfully.

"Not many things are really duplicated," he added. "If we offer the same program (as OC), we might have a little different slant on it."

Sedate said the colleges have excellent communication and cooperation. Rather than competing, each school tries to improve on its own strengths, he said.

"The relationship between MC and OC is good," Parrish agreed. "We just really haven't had any problems. Even if there were some problems, there's several safeguards. Our courses either have to be approved by the Texas Education Agency or the coordinating board."

Before approving any new program, these boards determine if there is sufficient need for it and what impact it will have on similar programs in nearby schools.



"If there is some controversy, the powers that be down there would arbitrate the situation and determine the need," Parrish said. "Not many things are really duplicated."

"Duplication in areas where you have very limited clientele is foolish," Sedate said. "But on the other hand, you have got your basic programs that really need to be offered at both institutions to have a comprehensive community college."

Parrish said there is little chance or need for a union between the two schools. "I have not heard of any such effort," Sedate said, "or of much interest.

"Midland College has proved there's a significant need for that campus," he added. "I think there's been some good instruction at both campuses, with higher numbers of students at each."

Although consolidation of MC and OC seems doomed, Midland County Commissioner Durward Wright offers another proposal — joining MC with The University of Texas of the Permian Basin. "My suggestion is that we combine UTPB and Midland College and get them both elevated to four-year status" while maintaining the Midland campus. OC would simply continue as a community college, he said.

"The overlapping of administration and budgeting could be brought under one umbrella and would result in a more cost-efficient campus," he continued, saying UTPB has one of the highest per-student costs in the state.

Wright said the progress of UTPB has been limited because of the rift formed when the school was located in Odessa rather than between the two cities."I think we need a four-year college in the Midland-Odessa area, and by combining MC and UTPB I believe you would see an enrollment factor at both schools dramatically increase. I believe it would be beneficial to both communities to have this kind of situation."

He didn't recommend a union between OC and UTPB because "they virtually have the makings of a four-year university at the present time."

But Parrish discounted the idea. "We don't want to be anything but a community college. Our board and current administration are 100 percent supporters of the community college concept. A lot of times people just automatically assume that if you're a good community college you should want to become a four-year institution. That's not our role at all."

"We feel like we (MC and UTPB) each have defined service areas and they're very complimentary and well planned. I think each institution is now doing a good job in performing the services they're trying to do."

UTPB serves as locally based 'next step' for students

By LAWRENCE BUDD

ODESSA — The University of Texas of the Permian Basin provides area students choosing to stay close to home a place to complete their college educations.

The upper-level and graduate educational institution of the University of Texas system offers a wide range of third and fourth year undergraduate programs. For more ambitious students, the university also offers graduate programs.

Since its opening in 1973, UTPB has been the Petroplex's single university. The opening of State Highway 191 provides a direct link for Midland students looking for a nearby institution of higher learning.

Core curricula for public junior colleges in Texas adopted by the coordinating board of the Texas College and University System specifically outline the courses junior college students need to take to transfer to the upper-level UT colleges, such as UTPB.

Also, UTPB Associate Director of Admissions Vickie Gomez has developed "Planning the Next Move," an adviser's guide to lower-level academic preparation.

"This gives the student not only the course they need in their major, it gives them the course number they will need at their particular school," said Ms. Gomez.

Within the College of Arts and Education, UTPB offers courses leading to bachelor's degrees in anthropology, art, criminal justice, elementary and secondary education, history, the humanities, literature, mass communications and music.

Other degreed programs are physical education, political science (including pre-law), psychology, sociology, Spanish and speech.

Six programs of study are available through the university's College of Business Administration:
— Accounting and information systems.

That Austin sound: Always there is music

In a way, I suppose, it was strange that someone from New York would provide the impetus to get me reflecting on the early days of what has become known as the Austin phenomenon.

Actually it wasn't so much the New Yorker as it was the album he brought by for my use...something called the "Blue Ridge Rangers." It is a collection of old country western classics written by people like Hank Williams Sr., Jimmie Rodgers and Webb Pierce, but performed in the distinctly progressive style that has become synonymous with the Hill Country of Texas.

When he first tossed the album on my kitchen table I didn't recognize it, but after two songs had played it all came back. Oh, how the memories flowed. I closed my eyes and, almost magically, my mind did the rest.

Suddenly, it was 1973. I'm sitting on the front porch of an old wood-frame farmhouse located on the outskirts of Austin. As I gaze out to the west all I see are trees and rolling hills. A slow-moving creek meanders its way through a subtle valley in the foreground and, in the distance, another farmhouse is barely visible. There is a quaint stillness in the air, but since it is early morning the stifling heat has not yet made its brutal presence felt.

I'm alone on the porch, clad in faded jeans, a red and black flannel shirt and scruffy cowboy boots, the standard attire for those heady days. My feet are propped up on a dilapidated railing and, from inside the house, the sound of someone suggesting a breakfast of scrambled eggs and bacon can be heard. So can the jeering voices of rejection.

Most important, though, is the music. Always there is music. The album (remember the album?) is playing in the background. I can even remember the exact song; it was "Today I Started Loving You Again" and never had I been so moved by such simple lyrics. Maybe it was the strange combination of an uplifting early morning sunrise and Merle Haggard's always slightly depressed view of life; I really don't know. But whatever it was, it worked.

So when my New York friend handed over the album he had no way of knowing he was about to give my brain a much-needed workout.

But that's precisely what happened. It jumped about madly. Briefly it was at a little hole-in-the-wall bar where someone like Ramblin' Jack Elliot was doing a solo gig. Then it hopped over to the late, great Armadillo Headquarters where the bigger names such as Jerry Jeff Walker and Michael Murphey would perform, usually ending their final set with an extended version of "Cosmic Cowboy." Austin, it seems, never tired of that song. Finally, the brain leaped to a giant dance hall on the outskirts of town where "Asleep At The Wheel" could get a crowd dancing in the aisles faster than any band on tour.

Everywhere you went there was music. Some just called it country. Others labeled it progressive country. Or country rock. Or outlaw music. Magazine writers coined the phrase "the Austin sound."

It usually had an upbeat tempo and combined the best attributes of country music and rock 'n roll. Willie Nelson, of course, eventually emerged as the king, but some suggest the roots go back to Buddy Holly.

But whatever its roots, the music became immensely popular and was identified with Austin. As a result, the inevitable migration began. Anyone who was anyone had to be in Austin. They came from everywhere ...and still are coming. The high-tech industry has found the city to its liking. So have other white-collar industries, and it is understandable. It has much going for it; recreation, a major university and, most importantly, a reasonably-priced labor force. Combine those factors and you've obviously got a city that can't remain a secret.

It's a fact of life. There's no stopping it. And, looking back won't make it like it was.

Still, somewhere — probably on the shaded back porch of an old house — a lonesome cowboy must surely be singing the blues.

Lancaster House petition begun

By GEORGIA TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

Since the Museum of the Southwest's recent announcement that the Lancaster House will be torn down beginning Friday, neighborhood residents as well as other Midlanders have worked on a petition asking for more time so that other alternatives may be examined. Any such request will be heard during a Wednesday board meeting at the museum.

Members of the museum were notified of the board's decision in a letter mailed to the membership May 25 which announced plans for beginning Phase II of the museum's expansion program. The public announcement of Phase II and the demolition of Lancaster House came May 30.

Thursday night an open forum to discuss whether the Lancaster House will, as one crowd member put it, "live or die," was held at Haley Park. During the hour-long session, citizens asked the seven members of the museum's board of trustees who were present for a commitment that demolition on the Lancaster House would be postponed for 90 to 120 days while a committee could be set up to evaluate how the house could be saved.

Given to the museum in 1970, the house was the home of Naomi Lancaster, longtime Midland resident and one of the leading members of the cultural arts scene in Midland for many years. Mrs. Lancaster was instrumental in the formation of Midland Community Theatre, the Midland-Odessa Symphony & Chorale, Midland Arts Association and the Museum of the Southwest.

Jerry Porter

Friday morning, the museum held a public meeting at the Marian Blakemore Planetarium to discuss Phase II. Speakers included Al W. Dillard, president of the board of trustees; Mike Collins, chairman of the architectural committee; Jerry Porter, museum director; and Jeannine Donnelly, president of Las Manos, the museum's auxiliary organization.

Plans to provide 10,000 square feet of support space to be used for collection management, exhibition preparation and facilities for educational programs and public meetings in a building addition which will extend out from the Turner House were announced. Also, the block of Indiana Street which divides the museum property will be torn up and landscaped beginning Friday.

"To do what we're wanting to do is going to encompass several years and approximately $5 million actual construction expenditure and a $5 million endowment to help run the place," Dillard said of the phased expansion project.

"We have a long way to go and a lot of hard work to do. If we can get the general public, corporations and other organizations in Midland behind us, we can make you an absolutely first rate museum that will be a real asset to this community."

Nothing was said about the Lancaster House. None of the speakers asked for questions from the floor. However, Dillard told the crowd, many of whom had been at the Thursday night meeting, that each of the speakers would be available afterward to answer questions.

The topic of conversation following the public meeting was Lancaster House.

Board members could be overheard explaining that the museum is not in a financial position to maintain the property. Through the years, money has been spent on the property.

"We can document without any problems $35,000 in direct expenditures," Mike Collins said when asked how much money has been spent by the museum since the property was acquired in 1970. "Most of us feel like with the hidden cost, for example, paying a yard contractor who also does things on our other properties, the figure probably exceeds $50,000."

To restore the house to its original condition would cost a minimum of $350,000 and would require a matching endowment fund to maintain the property each year.

To restore and redesign the house so that it could be utilized as a museum facility would run in the neighborhood of $700,000 and would once again require a matching endowment fund to maintain it properly.

Although no new construction is planned on the site of the Lancaster House for a number of years, the home needs expensive repair work before it is insurable, Collins said.

The board's plan is to sod that area as part of the landscaping done this summer. If demolition of the Lancaster House does not begin soon, then the project will be shelved until after Septemberfest.

The museum board has indicated it is open to any viable alternatives, including giving the house to anyone who will pay to have it moved. In the past week, several individuals have looked into the feasibility of moving the home. So far, there has been no firm offer.

Those who signed the petition Thursday night asking for time to investigate what, if any, alternatives may exist, are planning to submit a request for an extension of time to the board during its Wednesday meeting.

Although Collins said he could not speak officially for the board of trustees, he did say, "I'm absolutely certain the board will hear those requests. How they'll vote, I don't know. I personally would be willing, on the basis of a reasonable request, to favor that sort of a delay."

Costa Rican patriot details communist threat to homeland

Staff Writer

Recognized as a political party in Costa Rica since 1948, the Communist Party is imposing an intensified threat to this small Central American country, despite only a 3 to 4 percent communistic vote in elections, according to a Costa Rican brought to Midland Saturday by the John Birch Society.

Willy Solis Jr., founder and chairman of the Costa Rican Patriotic Movement, an anti-Communist effort, said that regardless of the sophistication of his native country, Nicaraguan-trained guerillas and terrorists are infiltrating Central America, posing a threat to not only Costa Rica, but also the United States.

"Many people in the United States think the Sandinistas are some kind of angels or something. But they are trying to ruin my country," he said, describing Costa Rica as an "advanced" country of 2.5 million people with a strong commitment to education. He called it "the most stable and free country in Central America," but said it also is the only one in the world without an army.

When the army was abolished in 1948, all funds went to educating the population with "six universities, hundreds of high schools and thousands of little schools."

Although the country's strong middle class and free enterprise system have paved the way for some protective programs, such as the Civilian and Special Forces Program and a government-sponsored civil defense program, the country's attempt "to go for a solution in a peaceful, decent way" is in danger, he said.

"A force of less than 1,000 could take Costa Rica if they are properly trained," Solis said, meeting with local news media at Midland Regional Airport Saturday morning. "It has been calculated that it could be taken in half of a day."

Stating that his country's defense against Communists is of importance to the United States as well, Solis called the effort "an American war." Although small now, the Nicaraguan confrontation could escalate into a "full-scale war." If America "doesn't wait until then to intervene...we won't have to risk American lives.

"We have a full-scale civil war going on in Nicaragua now," he said. "The only difference in the people and the government is the Sandinista government has the weapons and the people don't have anything to fight with.

"The free Central American countries can take care of themselves if we have American support," he said. "It is a war for Nicaragua, not a war for Costa Rica or the United States now."

In Midland through the American Opinion Speakers Bureau, an adjunct of the John Birch Society, Solis said, "Part of my big effort is to inform the American people and give them a chance to hear another point of view to the problem. I don't look at this from behind my desk in a big office in San Jose. I'm at the border and I see what is happening on the other side."

Addressing the American mining of harbors, Solis said those who feel a CIA-backed plot has been responsible for the loss of lives are misinformed. "Anytime there is talk about the mines, it gets bigger," he said.

The mines are small and serve only as a deterrent to shipping in Cuban weapons, he said. "They are warning devices. They blow up and make a lot of noise. But it has been proven that no one has been killed by those mines. Those that have died have been from (Nicaraguan) frogmen.

"I know those ships are coming in from Cuba bringing weapons that are unloaded in Nicaragua and taken by truck to Costa Rica. As a Costa Rican, if I care about my friends and my country, anything that will stop them is good.

"In 1981 was the first terrorist act," he said. "That was when the Sandinistas blew up a car taking U.S. Marines to the embassy. Then came the kidnappings, the bank robberies and the bombings."

Last year, 18 Nicaraguan diplomats were "kicked out of Costa Rica because it was proven they were involved in" a bombing, he said. There also is proof that many Costa Rican Communists are trained as guerillas and terrorists in Nicaragua, he claimed. "I know that because I've seen people who have defected and I've seen people wearing the badge of the Costa Rica Communist Party in Nicaragua across the border. Our civil guards found (Communist) weapons hidden in the jungles."

The military weapons are shipped or flown in, he said. "The jungles are so deep and the civil guards so small that we can't control it."

Although he fears for his country, Solis said the Communist threat reaches into the United States.

"For Texas, particularly, it is very close to the Mexican border. If Central America is taken by the Communists, the Communists won't stop there. Mexico is in a lot of trouble — both economically and socially. Even if the Communists don't reach Texas, the refugees will be coming in."

Estimating the refugee population will reach between 20 and 30 million people, Solis said, "They are going to be running into the United States. That's going to create a lot of trouble for the border states."

People of our community who make a difference.

Robert Trimble

Helping those who are less fortunate seems to be a hobby of many Midlanders. Robert Trimble is one such individual.

Bobby Trimble gives much of his time to helping others improve their lives and living conditions. In 1981, Trimble rceived recognition from both President Reagan and Govenor Clements for his involvement in volunteer projects.

As a member of the Alamo Heights Baptist Church, Trimble works with the Young Married Adults Group.

Trimble's most visible volunteer work is as president and coordinator of the Christmas in April Program in Midland. He has been involved in the project since its beginning in 1973 when the program worked on 17 houses. This year, according to Trimble, 169 houses were repaired by nearly 3,000 volunteers.

Christmas in April was began and has continued because the elderly have many needs and unfortunately many times there is no one to help them. This is where Trimble stepped in. He saw the need and had a desire to help. Trimble said, "Once the people (of Midland) see the need, they are willing to come and help."

"You always enjoy working for people when it is appreciated." That is Trimble's reasoning behind the amount of time that he devotes to volunteer work. "You need to get involved in your city and help make it better. It takes a lot of people to make a difference."

When asked if he recommended volunteer work, Trimble responded by saying, "When you give of yourself, you receive a considerable amount back."

Strong beliefs, dedication and action are why Robert Trimble makes a difference in Midland.

Midland police officers looking for bunco artists

By RICHARD ORR
Staff Writer

When 75-year-old Mattie Eddington (not her real name) answered the phone at her North Marienfeld Street home one afternoon last March, she had no idea the call would wind up costing her thousands of dollars.

The caller identified himself as a Midland police officer and said two suspicious men arrested earlier near her home had her name and address written on a piece of paper.

Ms. Eddington agreed to let the officer drop by and visit with her about the matter.

Maxwell

When she answered a knock on the door 15 minutes later, there stood a white man in his mid-40s dressed in a uniform similar to what city police wear. She let him in and he asked if she had any valuables in the house.

THE MAN followed her into a bedroom, where she kept a $10,000 diamond ring and a $300 cameo brooch. He then asked to use the phone and she heard him invite a second man to join them.

The second man also wore a uniform. He took the jewelry, disappeared into the kitchen and Ms. Eddington soon heard the sound of water running in the sink.

When the second man emerged from the kitchen, he was carrying a small, dark blue jar with a tightly screwed, light blue lid on it.

He told her he had placed the jewelry and some chemicals in the jar in an effort to identify any fingerprints that might be on the jewelry.

He then handed her the jar and told her not to take the lid off "because the chemicals would escape" and ruin the identification process.

THE MEN LEFT, saying they'd return in an hour to check the jewelry for fingerprints.

Needless to say, the men never returned. What she later found in the bottom of the jar were four pennies covered with water.

Ms. Eddington had been the victim of a con game known as "Badge Play." Her mistake, according to city detective Phillip Maxwell, was being swayed by a uniform and not asking the men for identification.

But any badges flashed or ID cards produced still need to be carefully checked, said Maxwell, adding, "If they don't see a car, they should be suspicious. And if they're the least bit suspicious, they should call the law enforcement agency being represented for verification."

Dallas police recently alerted Midland authorities that a group of California bunco artists may be operating in Texas. While numerous con schemes exist, this particular group appears to prefer badge play.

"The Eddington case is the only documented one we know about in Midland," said Maxwell, "but I suspect there are others that we're not aware of at the moment. Con men like Midland. There's lots of money here."

OTHER CON GAMES include the Bank Examiner Scam, the C.O.D. Scam, the Pigeon Drop and Three-Card Monte — with the latter two being the most popular in Midland, according to Maxwell.

Although the schemes and tactics vary, there are some common denominators.

For one, the victims are often older people who part with their valuables believing they're aiding authorities — as in badge play or the bank examiner ruse, where the victim is persuaded to draw money out of the bank to help trap a dishonest teller.

Then there are victims who think they're getting something for nothing — as in the pigeon drop, where victims fall for the "need" to put up "good faith money" to gain a portion of the cash someone has just "found" and wants to "share" with his fellow man.

Also, con artists — who can be women as well as men — are usually polished, smooth-talking individuals with a flair for quickly gaining the confidence of people who've never seen them before.

"They're professionals," said Maxwell. "They do it every day. They do it for a living. One guy bragged that he usually netted $200,000 a year on Three-card Monte alone."

Three-card Monte is a sleight-of-hand scheme, similar to the old shell game but using playing cards. The C.O.D. Scam involves the victim paying delivery charges on a "perishable package" for a neighbor who isn't home.

"CON MEN SAY they don't believe what they're doing is wrong," said Maxwell, "because they don't believe you can 'take' an honest person in schemes like pigeon drop and three-card.

"I don't agree. It's usually older people on limited incomes who may see the opportunity to get something for nothing — not necessarily for selfish reasons, but maybe a way to buy something for their grandchildren."

Con artists normally hit an area for a week or two, then move on. This makes it difficult for police to do anything about it. There's also a problem with victims not wanting to report being bilked for fear of embarrassment.

Because of the hit and run nature of con games, police agencies — including the Department of Public Safety intelligence division — work together and share information.

As a result, Maxwell recently had the satisfaction of seeing two con artists arrested in Austin — based on pictures he had taken to a regional seminar there that included officers from all over the Southwest.

"They were caught right in the act," he said with a smile crossing his face.

It made his day.

Judge sentences man in killing of officer

EL PASO (AP) — A state district judge has sentenced an El Paso man, convicted of voluntary manslaughter in the 1980 slaying of a retired city police officer, to seven years in prison.

Judge Herb Marsh Jr. imposed the sentence on Bobby Joe Kimbrough Friday night after the same jury that found him guilty of killing retired police Lt. Frank Gorman in May 1980 recommended the seven-year sentence.

Agency obtains right to possible waste site

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — A state agency searching for a site to locate a low-level nuclear waste repository has obtained an option on a 175-acre tract in Garza County, which will allow testing of the West Texas land to determine if it would be suitable for a disposal facility.

The Texas Low-Level Radioative Waste Disposal Authority currently has a potential site in Dimmit County, but a spokesman said the agency is continuing to search for additional sites in the state.

Areas in both Dimmit and Garza counties have been "highly ranked" by an environmental consulting firm which analyzed potential sites suitable for a repository. The recent study by Dames & Moore, of Houston, ranked 55 sites in terms of environmental and engineering factors.

The option on the Garza County site — about two miles south of Kalgary — gives the authority "a chance to drill, and look at the groundwater and the geology," said TLLRWDA spokesman Tom Blackburn. "We're hoping to get a drilling rig up there late this week or early next week."

Preliminary archaeological, wildlife and plant surveys also will be conducted at the Garza County site, according to TLLRWDA, which notes purchase of the land will depend upon results of the site exploration work.

Blackburn said data from the site will be evaluated by the authority by early July.

The site's owner, Charles Bills, doesn't live on the property. But Blackburn said he didn't know where Bills resides.

Texas faces a Jan. 1, 1986, federal deadline to construct a waste disposal facility, which would store radioactive waste from hospitals, industry and universities. Low-level waste does not include spent fuel from nuclear power plants, Blackburn noted.

Council may plug 'loophole'

Midland City Council may attempt to plug up what one man considers to be a loophole in the recently passed oil and gas ordinance when the group meets Tuesday. The meeting starts at 10 a.m. in City Hall Council Chambers.

At the council's May 22 meeting, a representative with Discovery Operating had submitted an application for a permit to drill within city limits. The location falls about 1,000 feet west of Fairgrounds Road and 150 feet north of Mockingbird Lane. He had pointed out no residences were near the site. However, he had requested the requirement to fence in the drilling area be dropped, saying that if there was trouble he wanted his men to be able to leave quickly.

The application for that site will be considered again. And the council will look at an amendment to the ordinance on drilling oil and gas wells.

The council also will discuss a letter agreement with Quantitative Sciences Corporation to identify and correct data processing reporting problems associated with the Municipal Garage.

In matters relating to city personnel the council is expected to approve plans and specifications for advertising for bids for health insurance for the next three years and for Firemen's Fund participants to apply for deferred compensation treatment of contributions.

Debbie Nobles will submit her request to operate a party pony in city parks. And Texas Business Travels will seek permission to open a travel agency in the Midland Regional Airport terminal.

In dealing with the airport, the council will consider hiring consulting engineers to make improvements to the building's heating and air conditioning systems, and authorizing lease and concession agreements for car rental business.

Bids received for construction drainage improvements to Northwest Drainage Channel from Ward to I Street might be rejected.

The council will consider putting a stop sign at Chapel Hill and Bluebird Lane, putting in one-hour parking on Texas Avenue at the Public Safety Building, establishing two-hour parking in the area around Midland Memorial Hospital and approving a loading zone on Colorado Street for Eagle Property Ltd.

Flood hazard study begins in Midland

FORT WORTH — The Fort Worth District, U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, has begun detailed studies of the flood hazard areas in the city of Midland and Midland County for the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA).

Purpose of these studies is to examine and evaluate the flood hazard areas in the communities which are developed or which are likely to be developed to determine flood elevations for those areas.

Flood elevations will be used by the communities to carry out the flood plain management objectives of the National Flood Insurance Program. They also will be used as the basis for determining the appropriate flood insurance premium rates applicable for new buildings and their contents, as well as setting the rates to be used for the second layer of insurance on existing buildings and contents.

Interested persons may bring any relevant facts and technical data concerning local flood hazards to the attention of FEMA for consideration in the course of these studies. Such information may be furnished to Milburn D. Smith, Fort Worth District, Corps of Engineers, P.O. Box 17300, Fort Worth, Tx., 76102, for forwarding to FEMA.

Road work slated

A Street will be closed through the Scharbauer Drive intersection after 8 a.m. Monday, according to a news release from City Hall. It will remain closed for 10 days for road construction.

Traffic will be detoured west on Scharbauer Drive to Western Avenue and back to A Street on the south side of the channel. Eastbound traffic on Scharbauer Drive will have only one lane of traffic through the A Street intersection. Westbound traffic will be operating normally.

All the Chaparral coaches have been busy on the recruiting trail this spring, seeking those few good players to replace departing sophomores and freshmen who aren't returning.

Most of the MC teams this year were predominately freshmen, so there aren't very many spots to fill.

The basketball team lost two sophomores, Brian Essary and Jackie Phinnessee, plus freshmen Bert Cooper and Jerald Wrightsil. Coaches Jerry Stone and Reggie Franklin should have seven lettermen returning. Essary has signed to play next year for the Angelo State Rams.

Golf coach Delnor Poss also lost just two sophomores, has signed one freshman and is looking for one more player.

Tennis coach Joe Williams is hot on the trail of several tennis players. He should have four or five men returning, along with three women, so he has a good nucleus for next year.

H.A. Tuck is public relations director for Midland College.

All the Chaparral coaches have been busy on the recruiting trail this spring, seeking those few good players to replace departing sophomores and freshmen who aren't returning.

Most of the MC teams this year were predominately freshmen, so there aren't very many spots to fill.

The basketball team lost two sophomores, Brian Essary and Jackie Phinnessee, plus freshmen Bert Cooper and Jerald Wrightsil. Coaches Jerry Stone and Reggie Franklin should have seven lettermen returning. Essary has signed to play next year for the Angelo State Rams.

Golf coach Delnor Poss also lost just two sophomores, has signed one freshman and is looking for one more player.

Tennis coach Joe Williams is hot on the trail of several tennis players. He should have four or five men returning, along with three women, so he has a good nucleus for next year.

Trees need lots of water

It is of upmost importance to provide adequate water to newly planted trees. Bareroot, container-grown and balled and burlapped plantings must have their root zone thoroughly moistened at frequent intervals after transplanting.

Irrigation frequency and the total volume of water applied depends on the size of the root ball, soil type, weather and foliage production. Clay soils retain moisture and would require less frequent irrigation than sandy soils where the water leaches and moves away freely. Temperatures above 75 degrees Farenheit with high winds dictate more frequent water applications. The water must be applied to the entire root mass and beyond. Irrigating only the immediate trunk area of the tree is a poor practice. The root hairs (feeder roots or absorptive roots) are also growing at the edges of the root mass of newly transplanted trees and beyond the dripline on older established trees. Water must be applied to sufficiently wet the soil to a depth of two feet or more. As leaves and limbs grow, the tree requires more water.

Trees in West Texas require water in addition to that received from lawn irrigation. Deep, thorough waterings applied to the root hair zone of absorption result in healthy trees. In fact, moisture to the root zone to a sufficient depth and lateral distance from the trunk is extremely important.

A business that hires a qualified youth this summer can earn tax credit as well as help the youth earn some income.

Calendar-year taxpayers may claim a tax credit on their 1984 Federal income tax return for 85 percent of the first $3,000 in wages paid to qualifiying youth for any 90-day period between May 1 and Sept. 15.

This opportunity for helping youth and helping your business is the "Qualified Summer Youth Employee" provision of the Tax Equity and Responsibility Act of 1982.

To qualify for the tax credit, the youth employee must:

— Perform services during May 1 and Sept. 15.

— Be age 16 or 17 when hired.

— Be a member of an economically disadvantaged family.

— Not have previously worked for the employer.

A designated local agent, the Texas Employment Commission, must certify the youth's age and family economic status before the youth begins. The employer will keep the approved certificate on file as a basis for completing IRS Form 5884, the jobs credit form.

To be classed as a memeber of an "economically disadvantaged family," the TEC will determine whether the youth's family annual income, based on the six months before the month of hiring date, is 70 percent or less of the Bureau of Labor Statistics lower living standard.

For more information on the Summer Youth Employee program and the accompanying tax credit, or advice on how to list job openings and obtain referrals of qulaified vouchered youth, call the local Employment Commission office. Refer to IRS Publication 906 and Form 5884, or contact your tax advisor for additional details regarding the jobs credit provisions.

Smokey Joe's stories reflect long, full life

Midlander in Profile

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Smokey Joe Woods, who lays claim to doing "everything except robbing a bank," has punch to his brag.

He's thrown spitfire baseballs, kept oilfield rigs punching holes in the ground, kept the Yanks airborne in the last great war, watched over the Berlin Airlift, repaired air control devices, fixed aircraft and run motels. Today, he keeps up with the worlds of economics, politics and religion.

He has a reputation to maintain.

Woods

Smokey Joe, who was born William Frederick Woods in August 1911, was named after William Frederick "Buffalo Bill" Cody, the rugged frontiersman, scout, buffalo hunter and Wild West showman.

His father, a merchant, "sold everything from a bag of peanuts to a bale of hay" in his mercantile store. He "lent out so much credit in 1929, he went broke with the crash of '29," recalled Smokey Joe, "and I swore then I wasn't going to be in the next crash and lose everything."

When he started playing baseball, he took on the nickname "Smokey Joe" after fast-ball pitcher Smokey Joe Wood of the 1912 World Champion Boston Red Sox. He threw fast balls, downers and curveballs -- slow and real slow.

Smokey Joe ended up in the U.S. Army in 1931 after he "went all over the country" trying to find a job during the Great Depression.

INSPIRED BY pitcher Dizzy Dean, he tried to make the Big Leagues.

"Dizzy Dean went up to the St. Louis Cardinals in 1930, and I said then, if he can do it, I can too."

Dean got a glimpse of Smokey Joe's pitching at batting practice in '31 when he was in the 23rd Infantry at Fort Sam Houston.

"Dizzy said that 'Smokey Joe has the best downer I ever saw,'" recalled Smokey Joe.

In 1935, while Smokey Joe was into his second hitch — he went into the U.S. Army Air Corps — at Barksdale Field in Louisiana, he got a chance to try out for the big time; New York Yankees and St. Louis Cardinal baseball scouts had been impressed with his hitting, pitching and outfielding.

"I was playing center field just to get my legs in shape (prior to trying out with the Cardinals). I'm a hitting pitcher," Smokey Joe said. "I got a Texas Leaguer (single), stole second, stole third and was trying to steal home. And the guy hit a line drive, hit my shin and turned me a flip. That was my last shot at the Big Leagues." The injury knocked him out of a tryout with the Cardinals.

Later, he pitched at Kelly Field, finished the hitch in the Air Corps, and "had a job waiting for me in Iraan, Texas, pitching in the oil patch" in semi-professional ball.

"All the guys playing were washed out from the big leagues."

SMOKEY JOE pitched for Humble Oil & Refining Co.'s team. He had the reputation of a strike-out pitcher and a solid batter.

"I never hit less than .349," he said. "I was a hitting pitcher; I believe in hitting that 'pa-lo-ta' (palla, Italian for ball)."

He left the oil patch in 1938 and landed in San Francisco, where he "won first prize playing the spoons" on the Uncle Benny Walker Radio Show. He played with the mayor's son, who tied him for first place by playing the "breathing French harp" (accordion).

After the spoon music, Smokey Joe returned to Air Corps and wound up in World War II as flight chief for Gen. O.P. Weyland, who "was in charge of all the fighter pilots" in England prior to the D-Day invasion in June 1944.

"Bobby Jones, the great golfer, was my intelligence officer," Smokey said, "and he hated to fly worse than Gen. (Douglas) MacArthur."

Afterward, he mustered out of service, joined up with the Civil Aeronautics Administration (now, the Federal Aviation Administration) and serviced airport windsocks, tetrahedrons, beacons and lighting systems.

In 1948, Smokey Joe once again volunteered for the military and got in on the Berlin Airlift. He again mustered out, hired on with an aircraft company refurbishing P-47 Thunderbolts for the Korean War.

Later on, he was a mechanic for Boeing Aircraft Co. in the 1950s and 1960s. He left Boeing and inspected Vietnam War-bound aircraft on Wake Island, then settled down in the motel business. He retired in Midland in 1972.

ALL THE WHILE, Smokey wasn't just changing jobs and making money. He became a student of the Bible, got a doctor of prophecy degree in interpreting the King James Bible and often has offered to preach prophecy. But, he has been turned down by evangelists, including James Robison.

"Preachers don't want me to preach in front of their congregations, because I tell the truth," said Smokey Joe. "I tell it like it is."

And he, being an opinionated sort, has developed strong viewpoints about religion, politics and economics.

— Smokey Joe believes "He (Jesus Christ) will be coming back to this Earth very, very soon."

— Smokey Joe says "if people would quit sitting on their brains, like our representatives and senators, and vote, we might come out of this mess. Thank God for RR (Ronald Reagan). He's got to win."

— "Democrats have always been taxers, spenders and electors. Like Harry Truman said, 'Tax 'em, spend it and get re-elected.'"

— "If the people would realize what the Federal Reserve has done and is still doing, they would try and get that ungodly system repealed or else," he laughed, "we are all going down the drain."

— "Hell, it's just like wallpaper. Our money today is just like that script we had in Europe."

— With almost the regularity of the full moon, Smokey Joe carries food, clothing and medical supplies to the struggling American Indians — the Hopis in Arizona and the Kickapoos along the Rio Grande at Eagle Pass.

— "I wish the people of Midland would call the mayor and tell him to fix the streets of Midland downtown and regulate the street lights, so you can make more than one block without having to stop."

Smokey Joe also harbors some grand expectations.

Just like his distant great uncle, Sir Francis Drake, Smokey Joe would "like to circumnavigate the globe and see the seven wonders of the world."

Meanwhile, Smokey Joe reflects and projects.

"I never lost but two baseball games in my career," he said, "and the next ball game I pitch, I want to be sure and win it. When Jesus Christ returns, I want to be with him in eternity.

"I used to pray for wisdom, but now I pray for grace."

Medical psychologist shares methods that worked for him

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

As a medical psychology intern at Salt Lake City Veterans Administration Medical Center, Evan Shapiro had a personal reason for aiming his interests at cancer patients.

He has Hodgkin's Disease.

In remission for the past 2½ years, the 28-year-old said that one day he found thickening lumps in the lymph nodes of his neck.

Shapiro

"I spent some time actually believing it was time for me to die soon," Shapiro said. "I went through some changes and saw some ways to help the patients with behavioral techniques which I found would help myself."

In Midland this weekend with other cancer physicians, researchers and experts for the two-day West Texas Cancer Conference, sponsored by the Allison Permian Basin Cancer Therapy Center, Shapiro focused on psychological stress associated with cancer patients and their families.

"I had the training beforehand, but it was just at this point that I applied it," Shapiro said of his diagnosis. "I had a bit of interest in medical psychology in general prior to the cancer. But after going through the dying and death aspects, I focused on that."

Now completing his one-year pre-doctoral internship in Salt Lake City, Shapiro already has 2,000 hours of pre-internship clinical work, much of it through the Texas Tech University psychology and psychiatry departments.

Although he did not undergo chemotherapy treatments, which cause nausea and severe discomfort for most patients, he deals with many patients taking the treatment. About 25 percent of all chemotherapy patients suffer in some degree from what is known as anticipatory nausea and some studies indicate the rate could be as high as 60 percent.

"The nausea is experienced by the patient prior to or during the administration of the chemotherapy," he said, adding the nausea "typically doesn't kick in" until one to three hours later.

"Anxiety plays a role here but what we're actually talking about is a conditioned response," he said.

Certain tastes, sights, smells and noises can bring on the early symptoms associated with chemotherapy treatments, he said. "They on their own become powerful enough to illicit responses."

Those suffering from anticipatory nausea experience it in different degrees but for "15 percent of the patients, it's severe enough to lead to actual vomiting. Aside from just being an unpleasant experience...evidence shows it may indeed increase the number of those who drop out of chemotherapy," Shapiro said.

"We're not just talking about adding 24 hours to their nausea because they also tend to experience the post-chemotherapy nausea longer." While some patients may be nauseous for two to four hours after treatments, others can experience the symptoms for two weeks. If the treatments are administered every two weeks, "they are sick all of the time."

The use of two types of behavioral methods, progressive muscle relaxation or hypnosis with imagery and systematic desensitization, often help overcome anticipatory nausea.

With progressive muscle relaxation or hypnosis with imagery, Shapiro said "you get the patient very relaxed and mix in a very strong pleasant component. You take the patient cognitively out of the situation." The relaxed patient then focuses on pleasant circumstances, such as sailing on a lake.

With systematic desensitization, often used in the treatment of phobias, the patient is relaxed and then "you develop a hierarchy of scenes which the patient finds typically more aversive."

The patient may begin thinking of waking up with an anxious feeling, knowing the chemotherapy treatments are scheduled for that day. The next scene may be at lunch, when food doesn't look appetizing. That may be followed with thoughts of driving up to the clinic and seeing the chemotherapy nurse outside.

"Each scene creates more anxiety," Shapiro said. The scenes are presented for 20 seconds, then the patient "dissolves" it and relaxes. After each scene is presented twice without anxiety, the patient is moved to the next scene.

"We're getting incredibly good results with the desensitization," he said. "Patients are able to deal with the anticipatory vomiting and anticipatory nausea very effectively."

If the behavioral techniques don't work with a particular patient, Shapiro said he then looks at the family.

Often, family or friends who are not informed or educated about anticipatory nausea don't understand what is happening to their loved one. When they are worried or anxious, it usually is transferred to the patient.

"You need to be flexible," he said. "I don't stay with one technique. You need to use what works best for the patient."

We leave you few options.

The Honda Accord LX 4-Door Sedan is so loaded with standard equipment that it's hard to list any options. In fact, almost the only one is a 4-speed automatic transmission. Practically everything else comes standard.

So you have no choice but to enjoy its cruise control, AM/FM stereo with cassette, air conditioning and Michelin steel-belted radials. Along with engineering features like front-wheel drive, 4-wheel independent suspension, power-assisted self-adjusting front disc brakes and a powerful new 12-valve engine.

More power to you: there's variable-assist power steering, power windows, power door locks and a power antenna.

The 1984 Honda Accord LX 4-Door Sedan. For people who are choosy about their options.

We leave you few options.

The Honda Accord LX 4-Door Sedan is so loaded with standard equipment that it's hard to list any options. In fact, almost the only one is a 4-speed automatic transmission. Practically everything else comes standard.

So you have no choice but to enjoy its cruise control, AM/FM stereo with cassette, air conditioning and Michelin steel-belted radials. Along with engineering features like front-wheel drive, 4-wheel independent suspension, power-assisted self-adjusting front disc brakes and a powerful new 12-valve engine.

More power to you: there's variable-assist power steering, power windows, power door locks and a power antenna.

"WE WANTED A QUALITY LIFESTYLE, NOT GIMMICKS AND GIVEAWAYS..."

"...That's why, when John and I were transferred to Midland, we chose to live at Oakridge Apartments. Sure, we passed up a few gimmicks and giveaways offered by the other communities. But what we got instead is an apartment community superior to anything else we saw. New on the market this year, Oakridge Apartments are bright and beautiful with sparkling new amenities and lots of extras. But more than that, Oakridge is a real quality neighborhood. The people out here are just great, and the management team is the best we've ever had."

1-, 2- and 2-bedroom studio apartment homes are available now. Take Loop 250 to N. Holiday Hill Road and look for the giant American flag.

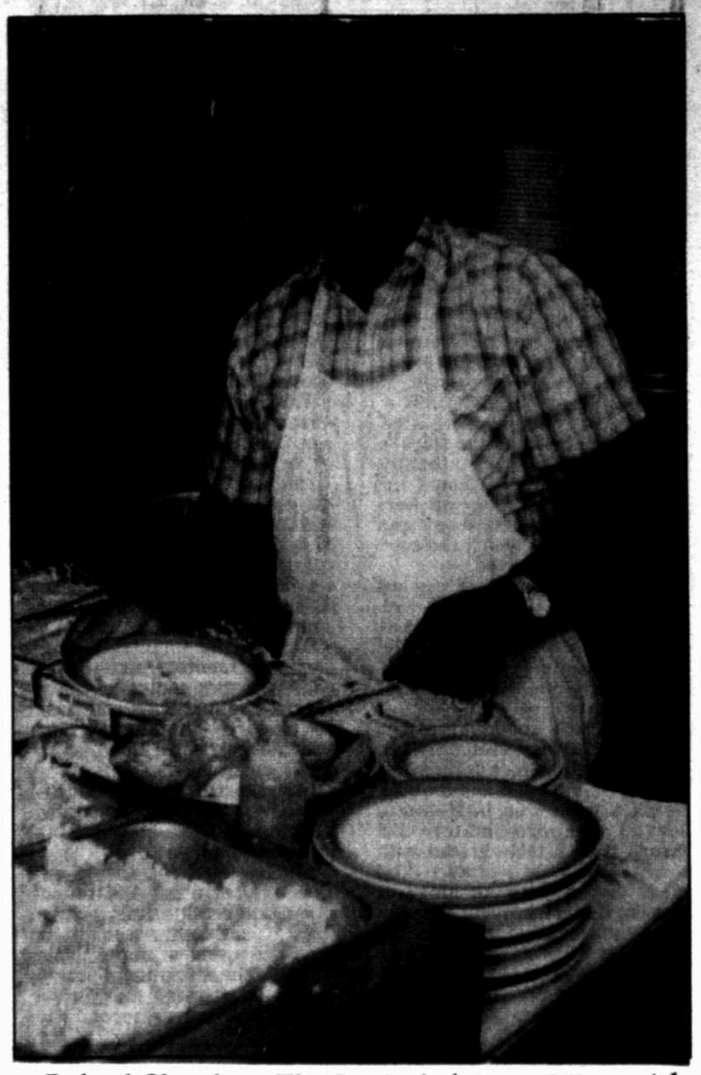
Lynn Daugherty was a waitress at The Spot when it opened in 1947. In 1974, she bought it.



Roland Chambers, The Spot's chef since 1951, specializes in the no-package-mixes and no-microwave-cooking.

hitting THE SPOT

Part of Midland's downtown history includes coffee breaks at The Spot. Attorney Bill Kerr practices the age-old local ritual with a newspaper.

In the 1950s, every town had one: A small, downtown cafe where business executives gathered for coffee...a diner with padded booths that even traveling salesmen found out about...an afternoon hub for homemade pie and coffee, served by a waitress in a starched, blue uniform decorated with a floral embroidered handkerchief....

The Spot was young Midland's friendly diner.

Though its neighborhood has changed in the 37 years it's been there, the place still buzzes with activity.

Perhaps "only the walls" know how many millions of dollars in oil deals have been made there. The Spot was known in the community as a morning playground for idle rich business executives who would sip coffee as they casually conducted big-buck discussions.

But the restaurant's clientele was not restricted to Midland's powerhouse forefathers. It also served downtown secretaries and housewives who shopped downtown. It was a place a proud grandfather would take his favorite granddaughter for ice cream.

Visiting celebrities — such as Tony Dorsett, Earl Campbell and Jane Withers — have managed to hear about the little cafe tucked away in the southeast corner of the Midland Tower building.

OWNER LYNN DAUGHERTY has learned to capitalize on the common need of her customers. She builds her success on the theory that everyone has 45 minutes for lunch and everyone wants to eat.

The specialty is quick meal orders — a meal can be ordered and eaten in a 20-minute-or-less time frame. However, there are no mysterious package mixes and no microwave-magic preparations involved. The restaurant prides itself on serving hot, balanced, homemade meals. They are about as down-home and homemade as biscuits and gravy. Mrs. Daugherty even makes homemade jelly to serve her customers.

Roland Chambers, chef since 1951, still prepares the restaurant's original specialties — homemade chili and homemade stew. It is not uncommon to serve 100 pounds of each on cold winter days. The Spot's fried chicken has become popular with customers, and the menu has featured chicken-fried steak daily (regular customers know it is always available — whether or not it is listed on the menu) since 1947.

THE SPOT'S opening was held in conjunction with the unveiling of the Midland Tower building in 1947.

At the time, Mrs. Daugherty was a 23-year-old waitress working for Butler Hurley. In 1974, she bought the diner from N.A. Green, who had purchased from Hurley in 1963.

Before Mrs. Daugherty purchased the business, she and her husband owned a similar facility, Mack's Snack Bar, on the corner of Colorado and Illinois, for 11 years.

The Spot, "the only original restaurant left in Midland," according to Mrs. Daugherty, has made a name for itself with its homemade food and quick service.

The room's formica tables and countertops are the authentic fixtures from 1947. So are the candy shelves behind the cash register. Pillars, now unnoticeably planted throughout the room, were ringed with counters and high bar stools until a remodeling project in 1964. In the same project, the counter was moved to the back wall and the dining room was expanded to accomodate additional seating space. Today, the tangerine-colored vinyl booths match the color scheme developed in 1964.

Though the Casablanca-style ceiling fans seem reminiscent of the late 40s, they are one of the newest features in the dining room — installed in 1982.

THE SPOT SERVES an estimated 113 customers per sitting — three or more turnovers during lunchtime — and an estimated 100 to-go orders.

The cooks have developed the art of filling plates from verbal orders. It happens so fast, the waitresses don't have time to write it down. "If we wrote down orders, we wouldn't ever get anything done," Mrs. Daugherty said.

Proud of the her staff's teamwork, the waitress-turned-proprietor said she understands the pressures and demands on a waitress. And she understands their needs. "They are happy here."

The restaurant has a low personnel turnover. Ezell Edwards has been a cook there since 1953. And Chambers's son, Richard, has been a cook for nine years. Rita Reed has been a waitress for eight years, and Virgie Chambers, Richard's wife, has worked there seven years. Janice Gilliam has been a waitress four years; and entering their third year are Linda Thomson and Nettie Wright. Cashier Lee Mitchell has worked for The Spot six years. Other employees include Jesse Yberra, Ruben Butierrez and Nancy Cardon.

"THAT'S A PRETTY good record and I feel real fortunate."

The Spot is still a friendly restaurant where regulars can drop in anytime from early morning to early afternoon expecting to "run into" someone. It is not unusual for regulars to call the restaurant, leaving messages for others and knowing word will get to them.

For 37 years, the Spot has kept hours as reliable as clockwork — serving breakfast from 5 a.m. throughout the day, and lunch from 10 a.m. until 4 p.m. daily, except weekends and holidays.

Customers have long known they can get in and out of The Spot and back to the office within the hour. And it's just the spot to see a smile.

With a smile, Linda Thomson performs a balancing act with two specials, a bread basket and a cheeseburger as she contemplates adding another burger.

Waitress Janice Gilliam stays in control at The Spot's fast-paced counter station.

The curtain came down Friday at Green Tree Country Club on the 49th annual tournament of the Women's West Texas Golf Association, but already the golfers are anticipating next year's golden anniversary tournament in Lubbock. It is only fitting they are returning to the scene of their beginnings for the event. The first tourney was held at Lubbock Country Club in 1935.

The Green Ladies Golf Association pulled out all the stops in entertaining the 144 contestants and other guests. The hours and hours of planning involved were evident by the efficiency and smoothness with which the tournament was conducted.

The tourney got under way last Sunday with a flag-raising ceremony conducted by Girl Scout Troup No. 67 and welcome by club officials and concluded Friday with a picnic lunch and awards party.

The week's social highlight came on Tuesday evening when the association met for dinner and to conduct the annual business. A delicious buffet was served to approximately 225 prsons from a table graced with a tree-shaped ice sculpture. The meal ended with an elegant, flaming dessert, brought out with great showmanship to the accompaniment of "Chariots of Fire." Decorations featured the association's colors of green and white.

Singer-comedian Kenny Davis of Los Angeles provided the after-dinner entertainment. Kenny has toured the night club and golf tournament circuits with his act and also appeared in television and movies, including Stephen Spielberg's latest film, "Gremlins."

The Wednesday night party featured cocktails and hors d'oeuvres, a critique of video pictures of the qualifying round by pro golfer Judy Rankin of Midland and a humorous skit.

The delightful skit centered on Green Tree head golf pro Warren Chancellor and how a good ol' boy from the University of Texas left for Hawaii to pursue his golfing career knowing only the Cotton-eyed Joe and returned to his home state skilled in the hula. Despite his best efforts, it was apparent by skit's end that hula dancing is not going to catch on in West Texas.

Directed by Country-Western dance instructor Susie Hitchcock, the skit included a male chorus line and song and dance routines by members of the Green Tree Ladies Golf Association.

Other social events included a welcome party last Sunday evening and a Wait-Out Pairings party on Monday.

Shirley (Mrs. Joel) Mays, general chairman for the tournament, will serve as the Women's West Texas Golf Associations's first vice president in the coming year. Other Midlanders serving on the board are Mary (Mrs. Don) Robinson as second vice president and Marian (Mrs. Bob) Spears as a second year director.

GINGER AND JIMMY FLOYD recently honored their daughter Renee and her fiance Scott Rogers with an engagement party in their home.

The house and the pool area were beautifully decorated with orange and white flowers, and organ music provided poolside by Shirley King added a festive air to the event. Some 200 guests attended.

The house party inclued the honorees' sisters, Angela Floyd and Kimberly Rogers; Renee's grandmothers Irene (Mrs. Ray) Lane of Sterling City and Dollie (Mrs. L.B.) Floyd of Fort Worth, and from Midland Corinne (Mrs. A.T.) Carleton, Edna (Mrs. Billy Don) Green, Hallie (Mrs. Dale) McCarter, Harriet (Mrs. Eugene) Motter, Anelle (Mrs. Jim) Mack, Marge (Mrs. Del) Woods, Virginia (Mrs. Bob) Jones, Nelda (Mrs. Bill) Johnson, Shirley (Mrs. Randall) Johnston and Ernestine (Mrs. E.K.) Browning.

Scott's parents Avis and Kevon Rogers of Texas City were special guests at the party.

FORMER MIDLANDER Jane Slover became the bride of Richard Savell May 24 in Lamesa's First United Methodist Church. After a Ruidoso honeymoon they are at home in Lamesa.

The bride, daughter of Sarah and Claud Slover of Midland, is a special education teacher in Lamesa. She is a graduate of Lee High School and West Texas State University. The son of Ina and James Savell of Wilson, the groom is a salesman with Hughes Fertilizer Co.

Among the wedding guests was the bride's grandmother Ruth (Mrs. Felix) McDougald of Kemp, who at age 87 made her first airplane flight to be present for the occasion.

Pre-nuptial parties included a shower given by Jane's fellow teachers at North Elementary School, a bed and bath shower given by Lamesa Community Players and the rehearsal dinner hosted by the Single Adult Sunday School Class.

MEMBERS OF TEXAS Press Women, District 2, are in for a fun afternoon when they meet Saturday at Robert's Copper Pot. Mary Frances (Mrs. Jim) Beverley will relate her adventures as a travel and foods writer while crisscrossing this great state of ours to cover 100 of its best home-owned restaurants. Her book, entitled "Great Home Town Restaurants of Texas," is scheduled for fall publication.

The group always enjoys having other writers join them at meetings. District President Anne Sherburn may be contacted at 694-2263 for more details.

Dandelions: Lawn woe finds new admirers

Hearst Feature Service

If ever a plant needed good public relations, it is the dandelion. Cursed by homeowners everywhere as the bane of velvety green lawns, the dandelion has been considered no more than an unsightly weed to be plucked as soon as it raised its bright yellow head.

But now, the weed has a friend — the Society for the Promotion of Dandelions in Avon Lake, Ohio. Jeffrey A. Zullo, 17, is president of the 75-member group, and he says the dandelion is so wonderful that it should be made the national flower.

Let's consider the case: Dandelions are low in calories, high in vitamins and minerals, abundant and free. And lately, they are actually being cultivated and are showing up in supermarkets. This "weed" has as much iron per pound as does spinach, and respectable amounts of vitamins A and C, thiamine, calcium, sodium and potassium.

Perhaps, then, it is time to reconsider. If you're going to go to all that work ridding your lawn of the bright little devils, why not consider the discarded greens not as rubbish but as your harvest?

They are a true springtime delicacy, at their best early when the leaves are small. They are easily harvested by digging up the entire plant with a small trowel or knife. If you don't have any in your yard, your neighbors might be happy to let you harvest theirs.

The best greens are fresh, tender and brightly colored. Stay away from leaves that show insect damage. Coarse stems may indicate overmaturity. Dry or yellowed leaves, excessive dirt, poorly developed plants, greens with dark wet spots, or a wilted appearance should be avoided.

California wineries making 'food wines'

By DAN BERGER
Copley News Service

Wine makers throughout California have been trying hard the last few years to persuade the world that they make "food wines."

What, you may ask, is a food wine?

It is a wine that is made to go with food, which in my sphere of things means a wine that is moderate in alcohol, moderate in acid, and has decent varietal character — and is not too sweet to dominate the food.

A food wine is not, I submit, a wine that is so coarse and monstrous in its aromas that it dominates whatever is served with it.

This is the case with a number of so-called late harvest Zinfandels, which are so loaded with various flavors and intensity that they are fun to taste, but poor with food.

These wines are intriguing because they offer so much richness (and often sweetness) that a sip of one of them is fun. But rarely do they match with food. Mostly, they dominate food.

I simply cannot appreciate 16 percent alcohol wines with food.

On the other hand, a delicate, well-made wine of modest proportions (alcohol in the 12 percent range), even if it is on the one-dimensional side, would be preferable with a meal to a wine of the above concentration.

Fortunately, wineries are getting back to making food wines, which is what they have been saying for a long time, and now a series of wineries are staging events to prove that their wines go with food.

Freemark Abbey will hold two dinners, on July 19 and Aug. 16, at the winery.

Festival spotlights catfish

BELZONI, Miss. (AP) — You know you've made the right turn off Mississippi 49 for the World Catfish Festival when the smell of cooking oil begins to fill the air.

There's enough oil to fry about 6,000 pounds of catfish pieces, including several pounds each for the entrants to Belzoni's famed catfish-eating contest.

Cotton may be king in the South, but in Belzoni he bows to catfish, who's crowned anew each year.

Belzoni, population 2,500, is the seat of Humphreys County, and "Catfish Capital of the World," as any T-shirt sold on festival day reminds you. Of the 61,000 acres of catfish ponds in Mississippi, 30,000 are in Humphreys County, Mayor Tom Turner says. And he also says that there are only 10,000 more acres in the whole world where catfish are farm-raised.

Turner, who has spent his life in Belzoni, grows cotton, soybeans and rice — not catfish, although he spends a great deal of time promoting the whiskered, freshwater creatures.

The town Turner heads is so small you can pass it by in a flash. But when you finally come upon the patriotically festooned Humphreys County Courthouse, you've found the right place.

The sand-colored brick building is covered in banners of red, white and blue stars and stripes, and a white lattice-work fence surrounds the master of ceremonies' podium. The outdoor fountain gurgles around a central bronze sculpture of the whiskered catfish. And on this day, children watch as feather-light balsa wood catfish bob on the water from the ends of their toy fishing poles.

Placed all around the courthouse grounds are poles bearing banners, with each one topped by a blue-painted wood catfish.

A little way off are the black metal vats where the breaded catfish is fried to a crispy, golden brown. The cooks use large scoopers, which look as if they had been made from someone's porch screens, to remove the fried fish and hushpuppies from the oil and transfer them to paper plates.

The eaters each face 2 pounds of fish, with another 1-pound plate waiting for them in the wings.The record for the contest is putting away 3 pounds in 8 minutes and 55 seconds.

The eaters take their positions. Some dip to one knee, as if proposing marriage to the formidable plate of fish staring back at them, while others stand with their knees slightly bent, hunched over the plate.

"Remember the hundred dollars. Let's eat a little faster," the judges say as the minutes are called out. The contestants' fingers are busily breaking up the fish and stuffing it into already full mouths before the big swallows. Some contestants are chatting between gulps, others go at it with singleminded solitude.

"It ought to be good now, so let's go ahead and get it down," the caller yells over the loudspeakers.

At 10 minutes, it's hands off the plates and time for the weighing-in of the uneaten remains.

Robert Lee Carver of Belzoni has put away 2 pounds, 5 ounces. Larry Cole of Brandon has chomped on 2 pounds, 1¼ ounces, and Don Delvecki, of Vicksburg, a biologist with the state Department of Wildlife and Conservation Service, is the winner at 2 pounds 8 ounces.

Graduate owes thanks to helpers

By ADELE SCHEELE, Ph.D.

On graduation day, the graduate is the center of attention, receiving not only a diploma or certificate but also congratulations and gifts. That's certainly what anyone deserves who stuck with a college program, excelled perhaps, and is now waiting to go on with life armed with a labeled profession or career.

But what most successful men and women have also learned is that at every celebration, it is they who must give thanks and not just receive it. So here is a chance to practice the other art of succeeding — acknowledging those who helped you along the way. Even though it might have been in their job description — parents who foot the bill, professors who teach, staff members who act as catalysts or supporters — that they did it deserves your direct attention.

One last assignment before graduation day is to write five letters showing your gratitude. The more you give, the more you receive: It's the bread-upon-the-waters-phenomenon. But if you only give to receive, you are doomed. It sounds paradoxical, but it is so. Consider then:

Your family. Thank those who may have given you emotional or financial support. A note of appreciation for their encouragement is needed for the times when you doubted the system and wanted to drop out, when you hated a professor and wanted to drop the course, when you became discouraged with your own progress or friendships, when you worked too hard without relief. Thank them now, in writing, or even with a gift.

Your teachers. Select several who have done more than simply teach the courses offered in the catalogue. Thank those who have inspired you to concentrate on their own field or inspired you by opening new possibilities, or those who have taken time to show you how to think through a problem or to include you on new research or professional meetings. Or those who directly helped you to emerge as a deep thinker, a different kind of scholar than you might have easily elected to be.

School staff. Adjacent to faculty are those members of the administrative staff who change lives behind the scenes. Think about the deans, counselors, financial aides, career placement officers, professor's assistants and secretaries who went out of their way to notice you and befriend you. Your specific thanks to them is vital.

Your friends. Take notice of the unsung heroes, those friends who took the time to listen to your crying over bad grades, missed opportunities, and desperate hurdles. They also helped you celebrate the good times: making the grade, getting the job, enduring.

Cancer funds requested

WASHINGTON (AP) — Former Rep. Thaddeus J. Dulski is calling on his old colleagues to allot more money for cancer research, a program that was one of his pet projects while in Congress.

"Cancer will cost our economy over $40 billion in lost wages, forced liquidation of assets and health care costs. It will strike two in three American families, killing 440,000 of our citizens this year," the New York Democrat said.

Dulski recalled that he helped sponsor the 1971 National Cancer Act. "I believed then that it was imperative for the federal government to become involved in a national cancer program. Today, I believe that it is just as important that we continue this effort with all the resources that we can muster," he said.

Dulski added, "Believe it or not, there is a hopeful side to this dreadful story. In the early 1900s few cancer patients had any hope of long-term survival. In the 1930s less than one in five persons were alive five years after treatment. In the 1940s it was one in four, and in the 1960s until recently, it was one in three. According to the American Cancer Society, today about 326,000 Americans, or three out of eight patients who get cancer this year, will be alive five years after diagnosis.

"This gain from one in three to three in eight represents saving about 40,000 persons this year," he told a House Appropriations subcommittee.

Classwork goes to hospital

NEW YORK (AP) — The schoolroom, one of two on the fifth floor in the Hospital for Special Surgery here, is crowded, although there are only seven children in it — because these students come to school on stretchers, in wheelchairs or on crutches.

The hospital school, PS 401, is run by the Board of Education of the City of New York. It is primarily for children who are hospitalized at least 10 school days, although young patients who stay for a shorter time can also attend classes. School-age patients from other cities may attend the school, too.

The class is in constant, but almost imperceptible, motion as the youngsters come and go for X-rays, lab tests, bone scans or to the operating room, reminders that they are, after all, hospital patients.

In one corner, 6-year-old Robert watches "Sesame Street" on the TV. Every so often, he reaches out to pat the stuffed doll on his pillow.

Elaine, 13, recovering from surgery to correct curvature of the spine, lies on her stomach studying decimals.

Robert, 16, has had hip surgery. Wearing a Dallas Cowboy shirt with his name on the back, he maneuvers his wheelchair adroitly and settles down to work assigned by his regular teacher.

Pamela, 14, in a pink T-shirt, is typing answers to history homework when she is called for a bone scan of her elbow.

Joel, 16, and a high school senior, is typing in a computer program. He plans to be a journalist and loves "to play around with computers."

The younger students use their robot, 2XL, with "Speak and Read" tapes.

In a corner of one schoolroom, there is a complete kitchen in which students learn to prepare meals.

The two teachers here, Carol Tyler and Michael Goldstein, have a special license to teach disabled children but there is no license for the other roles they play — parent, nurse, psychologist. They are alert to everything that goes on even as they work with students on a one-to-one basis.

Freddy, 13, has cerebral palsy and his speech is impaired but they understand what he tries to say.

Kevin, 10, who must keep both legs in casts for 10-12 weeks, is depressed and he starts to shift restlessly, but Goldstein reminds him that when his casts are removed, he will walk normally.

Goldstein says he will sympathize with the children up to a point, "but then I have to persuade them to keep up with their schoolwork." And so he insists that Kevin sit up in his wheelchair and resume studying.

Geography here, fractions there, graphs, science — the teachers, whom the children call by their first names, move from student to student answering or asking questions and giving assignments from the kindergarten level through high school. When called upon to teach a subject with which they are not familiar, they ask for backup from a specialist who is sent over by the Board of Education.

Children are encouraged to bring their own books, but the hospital schoolroom has floor-to-ceiling shelves crammed with books on every subject the children might study, and Mrs. Tyler and Goldstein keep in touch with the children's regular teachers. Sometimes, films, records or radio lessons supplement the schoolwork. Whenever the youngsters remain in the hospital for extended periods, they must take the same tests other children are given and they, too, receive report cards.

"There are few discipline problems here because the students vary in age so there is no peer pressure to incite mischief," says Mrs. Tyler, adding "but don't get the idea that these youngsters are little angels. They're emotionally as normal as any group of kids so there is always someone who tries to grab a greater share of attention, and just one uncooperative child can disrupt the entire group."

"There is no such thing as an average day," says Goldstein. "We can have anywhere from five to 15 pupils, not counting the three or four we teach at bedside. Bedside teaching isn't hard to do because the children can call us on the telephone with questions or to let us know they're ready for another assignment."

School hours are from 9 a.m. until 3 p.m.

Author explores 'greener pastures relocation'

Hearst Feature Service

Is the grass always greener on the other side of the fence?

Alfred Shattuck says you can find out by reading his book, "The Greener Pastures Relocation Guide." Shattuck, a former teacher, counselor and social worker from New York state who now lives in Wyoming, says whether you are contemplating a career change, retirement or a geographic change for its own sake, his book will help you plan a successful, satisfying move.

How does it differ from the plethora of similar books? Shattuck says his book never states where the best places in the United States are.

"That would be too presumptuous," he says. "Everyone who is in search of greener pastures requires different things. I've provided the information and the reader makes the choice."

Almost all of us relocate at one time or another, says the author:

"Whether our purpose in relocating is to move to greener pastures or away from where we'd rather not be, there is a common thread in how most of us go about it — ignorance. Time after time, we go where conditions are no better than they are where we were. If we only questioned what we wanted out of life and then tried to match that need with a place where it could be met, our troubles would be over."

Shattuck says his main purpose in writing the book was to eliminate the great effort spent in gathering data.

"The compilation of facts and advice is intended to give readers direction while their own experience fills in the gaps," he says. "Simply by becoming informed where greener pastures lie, you can tilt the odds in your favor."

Shattuck distills a great amount of raw information into usable form. Topics cover the various climates of the 50 states, the topographical differences, tax advantages and disadvantages of various regions, industries, employment, housing costs and retirement areas.

The book has maps showing the high-and low-risk areas of everything from heart disease and cancer to tornado deaths and earthquake risk to air pollution and toxic waste danger zones. There are charts of comparable home prices for each state, average energy costs, and the average annual salary of public school teachers.

In addition to practical information, Shattuck says his book gives encouragement and inspiration to those who want to seek out what lies beyond their own backyard — in other words, those greener pastures.

Girls questioned on roles

NEW YORK — Most teenage girls today don't favor "traditional" roles for men and women, according to a recent survey by Seventeen magazine. However, many young women are still unsure about supporting an equal rights amendment to the Constitution and do not consider themselves "feminists."

Based on 1,131 questionnaires returned by readers, the survey found 76 percent do not favor "the more 'traditional' roles for men and women (men pursuing careers, women raising children)." Almost an equal number, 75 percent, said they don't believe "there are some jobs only men should do — for example, serve in the military or the ministry."

However, less than half, 46 percent, said they support an equal rights amendment; 41 percent said they aren't sure they support the E.R.A. and 13 percent said they are opposed to it. Yet 65 percent of the teens responding said they do feel women experience sex discrimination in salaries, job opportunities and sports.

On the subject of feminists, only 30 percent of the respondants said they consider themselves "feminists," while 36 percent do not and 34 percent are not sure. In addition 54 percent favored use of the term "Ms.," while 46 percent still prefer either "Miss" or "Mrs."

In certain social settings, many young women did admit they find some "traditional" male/female roles appealing. About 82 percent said they are "flattered" when a man opens a door for them or insists on picking up the tab. Only 3 percent said they are "annoyed."

Communication improved by 'body language'

Hearst Feature Service

Mother always said that actions speak louder than words and never trust anyone who can't look you straight in the eye. Today, behavioral scientists are echoing these sentiments, says a communications expert.

"It helps a lot to know what kind of messages you are sending out and what people are receiving," says Francine Berger, founder and president of Speechworks Inc. on Long Island, N.Y. Berger teaches people how to be accomplished speakers and responsive listeners. A major part of her instruction is intepreting body language.

"If you watch, rather than listen to, a top-notch communicator in action, you will see that rather than concentrating only on words, he or she is tuned into the non-verbal elements of interaction. By mirroring the thoughts, tone of voice, speech tempo and mood, even to the point of breathing in and out with them, the communicator gets in sync with the people he is trying to reach.

"It sounds scary, but it's very effective. It's used mostly by people in sales, but not exclusively. Politicians, lawyers and preachers use this kind of mirror-like matching — called hypnotic pacing — to get in sync with their subjects."

BERGER SAYS that although many people treat the subject of body language as nonsense, the truth is the person who develops this skill wins far more often than the person who ignores or derides it.

"We believe if someone looks you right in the eye, you can trust him. When you look someone straight in the eye, you are making a request or even a demand for attention. Conversely, when eyes are lowered, this is often interpreted as reflecting powerlessness, shyness, a lack of confidence, knowledge or truthfulness."

You can use eye contact behavior to decide how much of an image of power you want to project, Berger says.

"Are you in a confrontation with the need to come out clearly as the winner? Then be very direct. Don't blink much. Do you want to appear non-threatening, kind, mellow? Look away and down quite often. Do you want to appear somewhere in the middle to project the image of an assertive, equality-minded person? Then the eyes will be in contact, but they will drop from time to time. You will take orderly turns giving eye contact and dropping it with the other person. This signal shows that you are ready to give up the floor and yield the floor to the other person. In a well-balanced, equalized conversation, this eye-change rhythm moves smoothly and the conversation will flow."

WHILE THE eyes may give away a lot, the communications teacher says gestures can be just as revealing.

"It's clear when two people are in a strong rapport as they converse, they tend to look like a pair of bookends. You can observe this at any social gathering. Often, one person will unconsciously adopt a gesture, a body stance, a head movement of another person. This is an effort to reflect the other person. It works because most people are comfortable with things that are more like, rather than unlike, them."

Berger says the most common example of this kind of body language can be seen in single bars, where there is a ritualized form of flirting or courting.

"A Rutgers professor did a study of couples at singles bars and identified the four steps that lead up to courting. The first step is the approach; the couple acknowledges the other's presence and they begin to talk, but if they are sitting at the bar, they still face in the same direction.

"In step two, they swivel to face each other. Step three is the synchrony — they start mirroring the other's behavior. If he touches his glass, she touches her glass. If she raises an eyebrow, he raises an eyebrow. They are like bookends, mirroring the other's facial and body expressions.

"The fourth step is the touch. It usually appears to be accidental — he brushes against her or she brushes against him. Oddly, the professor found if they don't reach that fourth step, the relationship is not established."

"The interpretation of hand and body movements is fascinating, but experts agree you must know the person before you can correctly interpret their gestures. One researcher of human behavior, Desmond Morris, claims that in watching people who are lying, there are many interesting body signals to note. Morris says people who are lying are often 'non-verbal leakers.'

Ancient mirrors well made

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The polished look of mirrors has changed only slightly in three thousand years.

A researcher applied modern instruments to an ancient mirror and showed it was produced in much the same way as mirrors are made today by amateur telescope makers.

Valerie Olson, an optical physicist at Hughes Aircraft, put an ancient Mexican mirror, made about 3,000 years ago by the Olmec people, to a series of tests that determined the well-preserved areas showed little light scattering, an indication of good polishing.

Summer time for trolleys

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Bright red trolley cars have become a sign of summer in Kansas City, Mo.

The open-air cars, decorated to resemble the cable cars of an earlier era, shuttle passengers between downtown Kansas City, Crown Center and the Country Club Plaza.

Passengers ride the cars for 25 cents a trip.

The trolley season in Kansas City extends from May through October, when the trackless cars retired for the winter.

Diabetes researchers continue attack on disease

Hearst Feature Service

It's been a promising decade for diabetes researchers who've mounted a multipronged attack on this deadly and complex disease. While no cure has been found, scientists have discovered ways of slowing down its path of destruction through the body.

Diabetes is a disease that destroys its victims organ by organ, cell by cell, eventually causing blindness, loss of limbs, kidney and heart failure and premature death. It is the third leading cause of death in the United States. About 800,000 new cases are diagnosed each year.

At a conference in Pasadena, Calif., diabetes experts told physicians that recent advances in treatment and diagnosis could extend the lives of the estimated 11 million Americans suffering from some form of the disease.

These advances range from improvements in treating diabetes through diet and drugs to experimental and potentially controversial surgery in which insulin-producing portions of the pancreas are transplanted from an aborted fetus to a diabetic. (This procedure has only been tested on laboratory animals). In addition, researchers are using new technology such as genetic engineering and drug infusion devices to increase the efficiency of already existing therapies.

RESEARCHERS NOW believe that diabetes is not one disease, but many, all with subtle differences in cause, histories and treatment. All diabetes is characterized by a failure to produce sufficient insulin to reduce blood sugar and an inability of "receptor cells" found throughout the body to absorb insulin manufactured by the pancreas. This knowledge has changed the way diabetes is treated.

New drugs that have become available in the last five years, for instance, increase the absorption of receptor cells, as well as stimulate production of more insulin. And physicians have become aware that it's necessary to treat patients as soon as their blood sugar goes much above the normal range, at the earliest stage of the disease known as impaired glucose tolerance.

Dr. Rachmiel Levine, deputy director of research at Los Angeles' City of Hope, explained that "the mere presence of high blood sugar over a number of years is in itself a danger," leading to blood vessel damage and other complications. "We have to step in early if we're going to have some success in treating the disease," Levine said.

Diabetes causes leaks in tiny blood vessels or capillaries, which results in circulation problems, as well as damage to the eyes, heart and kidneys in the more advanced stages. Once this process begins, it's almost impossible to reverse, although some success in repairing capillary damage was reported this year with an experimental drug called glipizide.

NEW DIAGNOSTIC techniques allow for closer monitoring of blood sugar levels in both Type I diabetics (those requiring daily dosages of insulin) and Type II (or non-insulin dependent) diabetics. A recently-developed laboratory test called the glycosylated hemoglobin assay, which charts blood sugar levels over a three-month period, gives a more accurate measurement than traditional methods and may help physicians take preventive action sooner.

Among other developments in diabetes research reported at the conference:

— Pancreas transplants: Dr. Josiah Brown of the University of California-Los Angeles has cured diabetes in laboratory animals by transplanting pancreas glands from fetuses to animals of the same species suffering from the disease. By transplanting these glands — tiny islands of cells within the pancreas called islets of Langerhans that are the body's only source of insulin — the fetal pancreas, after a period of growth, produces enough of the hormone to meet the recipient's needs.

The procedure has been attempted successfully on rats and pigs, but problems remain in preventing rejection of the pancreas without using highly toxic drugs that suppress the immune system.

BROWN SAID researchers are trying to deal with the problem by both pre-treating the donor organ and the recipient to remove immune cells that may cause the new organ to be rejected during transplant. "We can't use the anti-rejection drugs like those used in heart and kidney transplants because this is not a life or death situation," he noted. "No one knows what the long-term effects of these drugs might be."

The procedure is likely to outrage right-to-life groups because the transplant involves taking the pancreas from a fetus around the 14th week of development. But such human tests are still years away, Brown said, adding: "We'll deal with this issue when it comes up."

— Insulin Pumps: About 5,000 diabetics in the United States now use insulin infusion pumps. The device, worn attached to the waist like a beeper, feeds insulin into the body through a needle inserted into the skin of the abdomen.

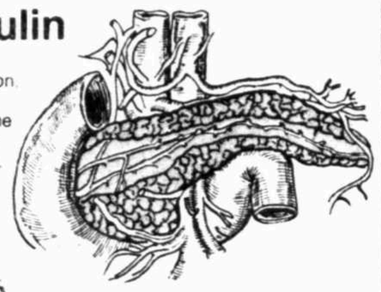
The advantage of the pump is that it delivers a steady flow of insulin, thus allowing the patient to maintain relatively even blood sugar levels, according to Dr. Philip Raskin of the University of Texas Health Sciences Center in Dallas. Diabetics who give themselves insulin shots often experience wide fluctuations in glucose through the day.

BUT PUMPS have been known to fail, causing serious complications and even death. For this reason, Raskin said, he wouldn't recommend the device to most diabetics until it can be proved to be more effective in reducing complications from diabetes on a long-term basis.

— Human Insulin: Genetically-engineered human insulin has been on the market for over a year. Experts say it's been useful to some extent in reducing the incidence of allergic reactions in diabetics who reacted to insulin extracted from the pancreases of cattle and pigs.

— Diet: Increasingly, nutrition and exercise are being used as weapons against diabetes. Dr. Charles Shuman, of Temple University Medical School in Philadelphia, stresses the importance of a high-fiber, high-carbohydrate diet in improving the body's ability to absorb sugar and fats. And recent experiments indicate a program of moderate exercise increases the sensitivity of tissue to insulin by opening up the capillaries and exposing more receptor cells to the hormone.

Biology of insulin



The pancreas—In a healthy person, the pancreas produces insulin to regulate the amount of sugar in the blood. Insulin helps the body burn glucose to provide needed energy. In a diabetic, the pancreas fails to produce insulin or the body resists the insulin produced.

Islet of Langerhans—These clumps of cells, constituting only about 1 percent of the pancreas, contain the beta cells that produce insulin

Beta cell—When blood sugar level is too high, these cells make insulin to lower it. When blood sugar is too low, other cells in the islets produce glucagon, a hormone that instructs the liver to release stored sugar.

Studies suggest throat treatments may be 'overkill'

Hearst Feature Service

The relentless throat-swab-and-penicillin pursuit of every childhood strep infection may be a clear case of medical overkill, recent studies suggest.

If correct, they could signal the end of routine throat cultures for streptococcal bacteria and antibiotic treatment of tens of thousands of children each year. If wrong, they could trigger a rapid rise in disabling complications. In any case, they are producing controversy over recommended changes in medical practice.

During the past 30 years, throat cultures for streptococcal bacteria and the antibiotic war against them have been widely promoted to prevent acute rheumatic fever, a heart-damaging complication of strep infection. The studies, however, have documented a dramatic decline in rheumatic fever in recent years that may not be related to such medical vigilance. Moreover, they show such a sharp drop in disability among those rare few who get the disease that the risk of deadly reactions to penicillin may be greater.

In a report recently published for doctors, experts outlined the following facts:

— The U.S. overall rate for primary rheumatic fever attack has dropped from 28 per 100,000 persons a year in the 1930s to less than 0.5 per 100,000 children 5 to 19 years old in some major cities.

— Although the biggest declines came in areas where more children had access to throat cultures and the prescribed 10-day course of penicillin, it is well known that most children never complete the full course of treatment, clouding the cause and effect link between medical care and the declines.

— While medical care programs seemed to be a major factor in bring rheumatic fever rates among blacks to white levels in the 1960s, the continuing drop among both whites and blacks in the 1970s cannot be accounted for this way.

— Rigorous diagnosis and treatment does not account for the mildness of rheumatic fever cases found. There is some evidence that widespread use of penicillin in the U.S. over the years has weakened the strep organisms. For example, the severity of scarlet fever and cases of a rare kidney ailment — also caused by strep — also have declined.

Dr. Milton Markowitz, professor of pediatrics at the University of Connecticut Health Center, quotes a letter from a fellow doctor in practice for 45 years who could recall very few private patients with rheumatic fever even before penicillin became available. Moreover, in the past 15 years, the doctor wrote, he had seen only six proven cases, three of which he could not have prevented because the doctor never saw them at the time of their sore throats.

Following currently recommended procedures for treating sore throats, over the past five years alone the doctor would have done 5,000 cultures on the 1,000 children a year he sees with sore throats. In addition, he would have done 1,500 follow up cultures for the 30 percent he treated with antibiotics, plus 3,000 more on family contacts — a total of 10,000 cultures in five years. At about $10 each, that's a huge bill to find three cases of rheumatic fever.

Many unaware of having illness

WASHINGTON (AP) — Nearly half of the 11 million Americans with diabetes are not even aware that they have the illness, according to figures from the Health Insurance Association of America and the National Institute of Health.

A sliding door usually consists of two glass panels, one fixed, the other free to slide behind it. It may be part of a glass wall or it may be set in a solid wall where it also serves as a large window. In most cases, as simple treatment is best. A sliding door is handsome in and of itself but remeber that the treatment must never interfere with the funtion. Single or double-draw draperies often work. Traverse rods must be mounted well above the door to prevent the drapery headings from getting tangled when the door is used. Care must also be taken to insure that the draperies draw away from the opening and stack back well to each side.

For many do-it-yourself-decorators, window treatment is often the hardest decorating problem to solve. Thinking of draperies, woven woods, mini or vertical blinds? DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Several factors can help reduce hypertension risks

Dear Dr. Solomon: My father-in-law has been having a lot of trouble keeping his blood pressure down. He has been on a diet and has cut out almost all salt, and now he's taking pills but they don't seem to help either. What else is there? — Darryl, San Mateo, Calif.

Dear Darryl: Most of my patients with hypertension can be helped through diet, exercise, medication, or some combination of these. I prescribe a diet that limits the consumption of salt, saturated fats, and foods high in cholesterol that is designed to help them reach their ideal weight. In addition, although I advise all my patients to stop smoking, I emphasize this even more strongly with patients who have a tendency to hypertension.

Having said this, I should also point out that not all patients will respond to this form of treatment. Some may have kidney disease or a glandular abnormality or some other condition. These patients require treatment for their underlying physical problem; once this is resolved, the patients's blood pressure will usually come down. Some such condition may be at the bottom of your father-in-law's problem.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My granddaughter is 18 years of age, married, and pregnant. She's always taken good care of herself and is continuing to do so by followng her obstetrician's instructions to the letter. The reason that I am writing is that I hear a great deal about teen-age mothers not having healthy babies. Isn't this possible because many teen-agers simply don't know how to take care of themselves, and not just because of their age? — Mrs. E.P., Medford, Ore.

Dear Mrs. P.: You make a good point, one that seems to be substantiated by a study of adolescent girls who were pregnant for the first time. The researchers concluded that health and social factors were more important determinants of the outcome of pregnancy that was age itself. However, the study did not include girls 15 years of age or younger.

Dear Dr. Solomon: Is it true that men who smoke cigarettes have a greater chance of getting cancer of the pancreas? I don't understand how the two things can be related to each other. And do you still have your one day Stop Smoking Clinic in Baltimore? — Mr. T.J., Burlington, Iowa

Dear Mr. J.: A review of the records of 50,000 college students has shown that cigarette smoking was associated with the development of pancreatic cancer. In fact, men who smoked at least 10 cigarettes a day had twice the risk of dying from pancreatic cancer as did men who smoked less than that amount or who did not smoke at all. Yes, I still see patients who want to stop smoking.

For Walter, Staten Island, New York: Patients with diabetes who take an oral agent are rarely bothered by hypoglycemia (an abnormally low amount of glucose in the blood). However, hypoglycemia can occur in these patients, paticularly in older people who have inadequate diets or in individuals who abuse alcohol and do not eat properly.

Neil Solomon, M.D., is a columnist for Los Angeles Times Syndicate. If you have a medical question, write Dr. Solomon at 1726 Reisterstown Road, Baltimore, Md. 21208. Dr. Solomon will not give personal replies but will answer as many questions as possible in his column.

Woman still feels guilty about her past

By DR. JUDITH KURIANSKY

Q. I was not a virgin when I got married and I still feel terrible about it. I've been faithful to my husband all these years, but when he gets mad at me he yells at me about how bad I am for what I did way back then. Why would he stay around for 22 years of marriage if he feels that way about me?

A. Your husband is throwing your past in your face for a purpose, not because he doesn't love you or wants to leave you. Some spouses enjoy having a piece of information they can taunt their partner with. It gives them a power play, like blackmail.

Dragging up your sexual past is hitting you below the belt. It's not a fair way to fight. When you and your husband are arguing, refuse to let his comments touch you.

Remember you did the best you could when you were young. The present is different and you have behaved honorably. Calmly tell him the past has nothing to do with your dispute now, and close your ears to his further taunts. If he persists, calmly announce he is veering from the issue at hand. Bring the discussion back to the present.

Sometimes when people accuse others they are guilty of that very thing themselves. He may feel bad about his own past — or even impulses he has now. It would even be possible he thinks about having sex with someone else.

Another possibility: Your husband feels inadequate about his own sexual performance now. What is missing in your sex life together? It is common for people to bring up their past sexual relationships when something is not satisfying in the present.

Your husband may be imagining you did something with those past lovers that you are not doing with him now. Talk about your sexual relationship — at a time when you feel good about each other. Find out what he would like to happen.

It's time for you to give up your guilt about your past. You weren't bad to have made the choice you did. Perhaps you thought you were in love. Maybe you were pressured.

Review what happened. See that you are a different person now. Congratulate yourself for keeping a marriage together for 22 years — that's no easy feat. Expect the same appreciation from your husband.

Women who carry great guilt about sex from their past usually also feel guilty about being sexual now. Examine whether you are being as free sexually with your husband as you think you can or want to be. I suspect you are holding back.

Since you have so much guilt, you probably came from a repressive home where your parents — and particularly your mother — insisted there should be no sex until marriage. But once women from these backgrounds get married, it is not so simple to unleash their sexual passion.

Your husband may seem to you to be echoing your mother's disapproval. You may even be using his taunts to punish yourself. You are no longer that young girl. Don't regress. Resolve this early guilt by either imagining your mother forgiving you, or giving up needing her approval. Be the grown-up and accept yourself for being a fully sexual woman.

Q. I am a handsome 21-year-old man and I have fallen in love with a 35-year-old woman who lives in my building. I never spoke with her. She doesn't even know I have such warm thoughts about her. I can't sleep at night thinking about her. I don't care that she's married and has three children. I really love her. What do I have to do to have her love me and want to have sex with me and want to be mine forever?

A. Your letter sounds like the beginning of a romance novel: young handsome man falls desperately in love with a married woman, admiring her from afar, unbeknownst to her. As it is for such a book character, the very distance that you descry can add to the intensity of your feelings. Not knowing this woman, you can project onto her the ideal image of a love object.

Being young and inexperienced yourself, you can safely express your sexual feelings without fear of rejection. From this perspective, don't fret so much about what you feel; rather, relish your experience and the pleasure and self-knowledge you can gain from it.

I want to respect your feelings of love for this woman. I do support you in having those intense feelings. They show you are capable of warmth and caring.

But I differ in how I would label the feeling. Love is built on knowing someone and sharing — the good and the bad. When you admire people from afar, you are attached to an idealized image of who they are — that's a crush.

But keep in mind it would be dangerous for you at this point in your life to become involved with a married woman who has children. Enjoy a friendship with her. Perhaps she can help you learn about love by talking to you about it. Then find a young woman who can more easily return all those wonderful feelings.

Microwaves zap cancer

ATLANTA (AP) — Research scientists at Georgia Tech have developed an experimental cancer treatment that uses microwave radiation to kill malignant cells without harmful side effects.

Jim Toler, a Tech research engineer, said the radiation, which is similar to that used in microwave ovens, is applied to raise the temperature of the diseased cells by five or six degrees, just enough to kill them.

"This treatment will not replace X-radiation or chemotherapy or immunotherapy or other treatments," he said. "But we do believe it will offer a new tool that in certain applications will have definite advantages."

The treatment, called electrohyperthermia, requires no surgery, leaves no residual radiation, causes no loss of hair and no nausea, said Toler, who developed the system with the assistance of Tech researchers Mike Studwell and Bernard Jenkins.

Clinical trials are under way in hospitals in New York, St. Louis and Houston to test its effectiveness on a variety of cancers from breast tumors to lung cancers, Toler said. The five-year trials, which are under the direction of the National Cancer Institute, began about 18 months ago.

Establishing the correct position and fit of a waistline is not easy. Although comfort for the wearer is the prime consideration, good appearance and balance must also be considered. Trousers or a shirt may be carefully fitted quite often during early construction, yet still, once the waistband is attached, wrinkles and discomfort appear. Avoid this problem by always attaching the waist fitting aid, or at least passing it around over the garment at each fitting even if it is only other areas that are being adjusted. If a waistband is to be eventually attached, its width will affect the fit and comfort of the garment, particularly if it is fairly wide.

DEAR ABBY

Mothers never forget Mother's Day

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: It's Mother's Day even as I write this. My children are now 23 and 24 and still living at home. They have just explained why they can't buy me a gift again. Each year it's a new reason, but it always boils down to the fact that they are short of money. I notice they always have money to buy whatever they want for themselves.

Abby, every year (also on my birthday and Christmas) I say, "What I really want wouldn't cost you a cent. Just make me a card, promising that for just one day you will gladly do any favors that I choose without arguing and complaining."

Would you believe they refused? The closest I've ever come to it was once when my son wrote out a list of HIS choices, which were not agreeable with me.

I ran into the same problem with my husband. I told him that for my birthday all I wanted was for him to do some handyman chores. No luck there either.

Was my suggestion out of line? I would think that most people would jump at the chance to do chores instead of spending money.

Don't print my name. Sign this ... WHOSE DAY IS IT, ANYHOW?

DEAR WHOSE: To demand services in lieu of a purchased gift is no gift — it's blackmail.

The concept of services offered as a gift is lovely, but only when volunteered by the giver — not demanded by the recipient.

DEAR ABBY: I have mothered five children and here I sit, the morning after Mother's Day, wondering whether some children are just insensitive to their parents' feelings, or if I'm overreacting to my hurt.

All our kids are grown — some married, all have good jobs and are financially responsible. We raised them that way, and feel we did a good job. We don't live close to our children, but we keep in touch and are a close family.

I worked away from home only after our children were grown — not before — because I felt that raising them properly was my first priority. My husband is still employed full time. Every Christmas, birthday, anniversary, etc., I have sent all the children and their spouses a gift. (And made sure they arrived on time. When a birthday or Christmas gift arrives two weeks late, it loses some of its excitement.)

Today, I feel a little hurt because I received nothing for Mother's Day. I rationalized it, saying, "They're too busy — I really shouldn't feel this way."

I was a good mother. I gave my children lots of love, and let them go when it was time to leave the nest. I do not interfere in their lives.

I never forgot my own mother on Mother's Day, and find it hard to understand how any child could. So please, Abby, print this for children of all ages to read. Perhaps they aren't aware of how much it hurts to be forgotten. — FORGOTTEN IN PHOENIX

Vaccines developed

BOSTON (AP) — From the deadly scourge of smallpox to the itch of chicken pox, the development of vaccines over the last two centuries has produced powerful weapons against the viruses and bacteria that sicken, maim and kill mankind.

Scientists recently reported the successful test of a vaccine against chicken pox, the last major childhood disease for which there is no available protection.

Smallpox, which killed hundreds of millions of people throughout history, was the first disease to be conquered by medical science. Dr. Edward Jenner, an English physician, developed a vaccine against smallpox in 1796.

In 1967, the World Health Organization began a program to eliminate the disease worldwide. The last known naturally occurring case of smallpox was reported in Somalia in 1977.

The first vaccine to prevent poliomyelitis, a viral disease that causes paralysis, was introduced in 1955 by Dr. Jonas E. Salk. In 1961, an oral polio vaccine was developed by Dr. Albert Sabin.

In 1955, polio caused 175 deaths in Massachusetts. By 1963, no deaths were reported from the disease there.

Before Dr. John F. Enders developed the measles vaccine in 1963, almost all American children caught the disease. But from 1963 to 1983, there was a 99.7 percent reduction in the number of measles cases.

A combined vaccine called DTP was introduced in 1949. It protects children against diphtheria, tetanus or lockjaw, and pertussis or whooping cough.

Vaccines were developed in 1967 for mumps and 1969 for rubella or German measles.

Among vaccines still under development is one for Epstein-Barr virus, which causes mononucleosis and is associated with some cancers.

Vaccines are also available for many other diseases, including influenza, hepatitis, pneumonia, cholera, bubonic plague, rabies and yellow fever.

THE BEAUTY OF THE IRIS

Text by Julie Hillrichs

Irises, the popular plants with large colorful blossoms, have appeared throughout history in the most unpredictable places. Irises have turned up on scepters of ancient Egyptian rulers and are carved on the brow of the Sphinx.

In the 1300s, King Charles V of France adopted three golden iris-like designs on a blue field as his coat of arms. And the design is used as the symbol for North on the compass.

Some historians believe the iris was once a lily so the design was called "flower of the lily." Others claim the iris originally was described as "flower of Louis" because, according to legend, Clovis I of France used the iris early in the sixth century after an angel presented him with the flower for accepting Christianity.

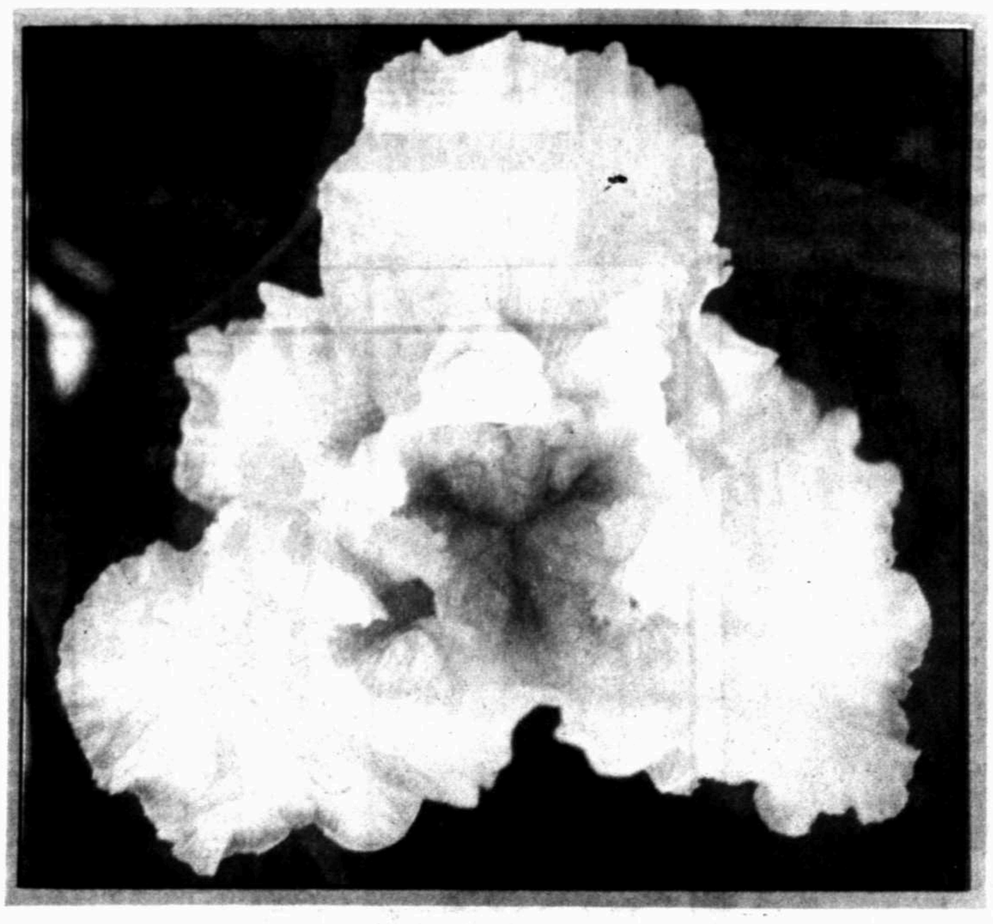
"Iris" is derived from the Greek word for rainbow. The iris has an unusual shape which sets it apart from other flowers making it easily recognizable.

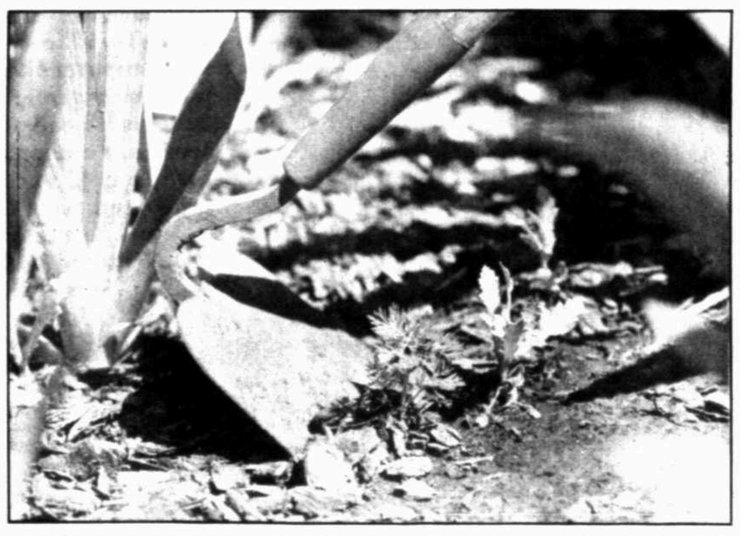
Its bloom has three sets of three petal-like parts. The lower set, called the falls, flares out and hangs down below the stem. The three upper segments, known as standards, curve up into a dome; and three curved style branches cover the stamens in the center.

Irises may grow from six inches to more than six feet tall, bloom in a variety of shades and appear in several color combinations. The leaves rise directly from rhizomes (underground stems) and are either bulb-like or elongated.

Maria Spencer, a member of the Midland Iris Society, said the most common garden irises are the tall bearded varieties which are available in thousands of shades and sizes. She added that irises are one of the easiest perennials to grow because they survive with minimum attention and reward gardeners with fine blooms year after year.

Irises grow successfully in almost every geographical region and bloom from April through July. In West Texas, however, "irises bloom beginning the first week in March and end the first week in May due to the hot, dry climate," she said.





The most common garden irises are the tall bearded varieties, above, which grow from six inches to higher than six feet tall. Far left, is a Golden Cupid iris, an example of a dwarf iris, which averages under ten inches in height. Irises should be cultivated shallowly, as shown in the center photo, after each rain when the ground has dried sufficiently. Jane Cappadonna, right, removes outer leaves and dried blossoms from plants in her iris beds.

Some historians claim the iris originally was described as "flower of Louis" because, according to legend, Clovis I of France used the iris in the early 500s after an angel presented him with the flower for accepting Christianity.

WHEN TO PLANT

Irises grow throughout the temperature regions. But in West Texas, Mrs. Spencer said "iris bulbs should be planted between July and September to allow the sets to establish proper root systems before winter."

WHERE TO PLANT

The ideal location for planting irises is in a sunny, well drained area. Irises require at least one-half day of sunshine and won't respond in deep shade. Also, water should not stand in the iris bed. Raise the bed slightly above the level of the garden paths for additional drainage if necessary.

SOIL PREPARATION

Work the soil well to a depth of 10 to 12 inches. If the soil is heavy, add sand so moisture percolates out quickly.

FERTILIZATION

Good garden sense should be used when fertilizing irises, Mrs. Spencer said. Although irises thrive in almost any soil condition without feeding, they do respond to fertilization. Excessive fertilizing with a product containing a high level of nitrogen will result in very lush growth of the plants. However, they are more susceptible to rot.

To prepare the new iris bed, spade in a good application of compost below roots. Then add an application of a well balanced fertilizer as a top dressing dusted around and in between the plants in early spring or late fall. Steamed bone meal and super-phosphate are ideal top dressing materials.

PLANTING

Place each plant, also known as a rhizome, eight inches to two feet apart just below the surface of the ground with the roots spread so they are within reach of moisture. Be sure to pack the soil firmly around each rhizome when planting.

WATERING

Depending on the geographical location, newly set plants need moisture to grow new root systems. Established plants do not require watering except in very arid parts of the country and appreciate watering at fairly long intervals in dry weather. According to Mrs. Spencer, "too much watering is the common mistake of most iris growers."

CULTIVATING

Keep the iris beds free of weeds and prevent neighboring plants from spreading. Remove outer leaves as they begin to brown and keep litter, old iris leaves and grasses away from the rhizomes at all times.

GENERAL GARDEN CARE

Cultivate the soil shallowly after each rain when the ground has dried sufficiently. As the iris grow, the outside foliage become limp and should be removed; particularly about two weeks after blooming. Do not trim iris foliage on established plants except to cut off leaf spots that appear, Mrs. Spencer said. Also, on a dry day, cut the bloom stems level with the ground after blooming so the cut heals quickly.

Furniture shopping refreshing

The Associated Press

Americans shopping for furniture may find it a refreshing experience in the coming months.

Indications at the recently concluded semi-annual furniture market in High Point, N.C., are that consumer wishes are being taken into account by manufacturers eager to convert an upturn in housing construction into more sales for new furniture.

Manufacturers of wood furniture have tended to divide it by style, offering some groups in each style category. Typically these include: American or European traditional, French, 18th-century, oriental and contemporary. When sales in one style start to go down, it is usually considered time to offer something new in that classification.

Today, however, says Thomas G. Tilley, sales manager of the traditions division of Thomasville Furniture Industries, some companies are taking a new approach. Instead of giving people more of what they don't want and aren't buying, they look for what is selling to develop new furniture.

THOMASVILLE'S NEW American country group shown at the market (which introduces the new styles for the coming season to retailers and the press) was created after analysis showed that the company's sales of country furniture have more than doubled in the last three years.

The "Santa Fe" collection combines Spanish, English and Mexican design themes. Some pieces carry the theme's romance, while others would go with almost any medium-brown wood furniture. That's because "new furniture usually has to go with what people already have," explained Tilley.

Besides the country category, other important trends in new wood furniture include more of the modern unornamented, high-sheen lacquer style introduced in Europe and authentic reproductions.

Speaking at one of a round of industry panels, Ron Hahn, president of Universal Furniture Industries, noted that today's home furnishings customers were the most sophisticated and knowledgeable ever. When buying traditional furniture, such people often seek pieces with more integrity and authenticity, he said. Perhaps this helps account for the continued growth of reproductions.

The Kittinger Co., soliciting new retailer business for the first time in recent memory according to company president Fred M. Battson, showed 16 of its best-selling replicas from six historic restorations and museums.

THE PIECES — copies made by Kittinger to the exacting standards of museums and restorations such as Colonial Williamsburg, Newport, R.I., and the Boston Museum of Fine Arts — were formerly sold mainly through designers and at the museums. Now Kittinger is following the lead of others in mass marketing these pieces.

The Baker Co. added to its Stately Homes Collection, this time selecting 12 pieces to reproduce from Irish castles. John Widdicomb also presented a collection of authentic replicas.

A new interest in satisfying consumer demands was evinced by a number of companies. Before developing "Santa Fe," for example, Thomasville went calling on furniture retailers and consumers to see how people were actually living. The company also employs focus groups and maintains a dialogue with bellwether retailers to anticipate and ascertain consumer needs, according to Tilley.

John Foster, president of Lea Furniture, noted that his firm had marketed children's furniture based on themes from cartoons for several years, but discontinued it. "The furniture didn't work for consumers because it was too expensive and too short-lived," he said.

Instead, after consultation with retailers and others, Lea was showing a "Build-A-Bed" system which employs seven components such as a trundle bed, storage base, bed ladders and a chest to create as many as 15 different configurations. The function of sleep, guest accommodation, study and play surface and storage are all satisfied in the package which is designed to sell for under $1,000, he said.

TRADITIONAL DISTINCTIONS between bedroom, dining room and living-room furniture appear to be breaking down, rapidly, in recognition that furniture that functions well can usually fit into any room.

Drexel Heritage, for example, offered a library wall panel arrangement of storage units, bookcases and bases against which a convertible sofa or a bed may be set. The furniture works in a bedroom as a storage headboard or in a library, den or living room, depending on one's needs. Its location can be changed should its owner move to another place, said a company source.

Emphasizing the educative aspect of markets — besides their function as a place to show new products — were several new developments. For the first time, there was a technical section with about 30 exhibitors who are suppliers of machinery and components to the furniture industry. Such sections are common at the larger furniture markets held in Europe, but have not been a feature at American markets in the past.

A supplier of chemicals for polyurethane used in bedding and upholstery took space at the market not to sell furniture or foam — or even chemicals. The company has created a video presentation designed to teach consumers about foam bedding and was there to encourage retailers to install such a video presentation for their customers' use.

Burglary study reported

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Every nine seconds a home is burglarized in the United States and the average American has a one-in-six chance of having their home broken into in the next 12 months, according to a national government study.

In another study, sponsored by Honeywell Protection Services, at least three out of five individuals reported being burglarized in the past year or knew someone whose home had been burglarized in the past three years.

Technique battles insects

By ED HUTCHISON
Hearst Feature Service

Taking care of the nutritional needs of your garden while throwing up a barrier to insects and disease has never been easier, thanks to recent developments in chemistry and application techniques.

For example, the rose gardener of not long ago had to be prepared to dash off to the garden whenever an unexpected shower washed off the chemical dust intended to keep aphids away. Now, by using a systemic-type insecticide, protection can be had for up to six weeks with one application, regardless of how often or hard it rains.

Systemic materials are a great boon to the busy gardener. The material is absorbed by the plant and carried through to its stems, leaves, buds and flowers, where it stands invisible guard. Sucking insects, such as aphids, are killed as they tap into the plant's sap stream.

Some manufacturers combine insecticide, plant food and weed preventer into one product for use on plants such as roses, but it's also good for shrubs and bedding plants. Ortho is an example. Its "3-Way Rose and Flower Care" is a granular material packed into a two-pound canister. Ideally, it's used before weed seeds sprout, since it will not kill existing weeds.

Application of this product is easy. The bed is prepared and several ounces are worked into the top inch of the soil. For the next six weeks, the plant is protected from sucking insects, has been fed a balanced diet of 8-12-24 fertilizer and will not have to compete with weeds since they can't sprout through the invisible chemical barrier.

Most homeowners have sprayers that fit on the end of their garden hoses, and many chemicals can be applied with these. Some sold as dry powders can be applied by squeezing the plastic container or by mixing the powder with water in a sprayer. Even though manufacturers add wetting agents to make the powder mix readily with water, it is often difficult to keep the material in solution. The result is a spotty treatment.

Many chemicals — like the Ortho product just described — are meant to be worked into the soil and must not be put in solution inside a garden sprayer. Many others, though, are sold as liquids that mix readily with water to make a concentrate in the sprayer.

Consider buying already-prepared bug and disease killers if you have only a few plants, such as a rose garden with six bushes. Ortho and others make up many types and package them in squeeeze containers that dispense a cloud of the material. The cloud settles on the plant and protects it. Unlike systemic materials that settle in the sap stream and cannot be washed away, dusting will be washed away by rain.

Even easier to use are pre-mixed liquids packaged in a plastic bottle equipped with a pump handle. Rather than a cloud of dust, a fine, easy-to-control mist is applied by squeezing the pump.

Ortho packages some of its spot weed killers for broadleaf weed control (dandelions and others) in containers. It is an ideal way to kill a few weeds.

Take care, too, not to spray chemicals — especially weed killer — on a windy day. It wastes expensive materials, and drift from weed killer is hard to keep from good plants. A tiny amount of drift is enough to harm or kill these plants.

Probably the best advice the gardener can get on this matter is readily available on the label on the bottle. Study it carefully, and if it doesn't seem to have worked for you, try the bottle next to it. Manufacturers know what conditions a gardener is going to face and have prepared a shelf's worth of different products to do the job right, providing the gardener reads and follows all label instructions.

Study shows children may escape poverty's effects

WASHINGTON (AP) — Many urban children reared in poverty who suffer the effects of unemployment, alcoholism and abuse can escape being trapped in this lifestyle as adults, according to a 43-year medical study.

The report published by researchers at the Harvard and Dartmouth medical schools, said the concept of an "underclass" of people caught in an unbreakable cycle of poverty from generation to generation appears to have been overstated.

Offspring who perpetuate chronic family problems and dependence on welfare seem to be exceptions rather than the norm, said the report, which charted the development of 456 disadvantaged white males from inner-city Boston into adulthood.

The report, in the March issue of the American Journal of Psychiatry, cautioned that the study should not be used as an excuse to dismantle social and economic aid programs. The researchers noted that because the subjects were exclusively white and male, the study did not address such important social factors and race and sex.

The behavior study began in 1940 with 456 non-delinquent youths, aged 12 to 16, as a control group that was formed to compare with a similar group sent to reform school in an attempt to find the causes of their delinquency.

Half the youngsters in the control group came from impoverished backgrounds and the rest from working class households.

Drs. Jancis V.F. Long and George E. Vaillant said that although few of the men who came from the poorer families attained secure, middle-class status by midlife, most of them did rise to stable, working class lifestyles.

"Men from chronically dependent and multiproblem families were, on average, indistinguishable by midlife from the children of more stable, working class families in terms of mean income, years of employment, criminaltiy and mental health," the report said.

Test identifies risk of falling

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (AP) — The physical examination, which identifies illnesses and disabilities, is almost useless for predicting how well the elderly can function in daily life, says Dr. Mary Tinetti of the University of Rochester Medical Center.

Falls, for example, a serious hazard to the elderly, are usually caused by interaction of many different factors, from poor vision to depression, she says.

She has developed and is currently evaluating a fast, simple, "balance and gait" test to identify those at risk of falling. If proved effective, the test may be included in the physical examination.

AT WIT'S END

National outcry over abandoned bunny endearing

By ERMA BOMBECK

I will probably never get a chance to meet Julia Miles and that's too bad. I think we could be good friends. But she's the wife of the British ambassador to Libya and I sort socks for a living.

Julia endeared herself to me when I read that when she and her family were forced to leave Tripoli in such a hurry because of the political climate, she left behind a pet rabbit in the embassy garden called Honeybun. Well, you can imagine the public outcry once this little-known fact was run through all the wire services around the world. Civilized nations just don't go around abandoning their rabbits.

Julia was quoted in the London Daily Express as saying, "There has been so much fuss over the BLANK thing, I wish I had eaten it before we left."

There were questions to be raised. Did the rabbit have diplomatic immunity? Could they extend his visa? Could he travel alone? Could he be used as a hostage?

What mother has not toyed with the idea of making an orphan out of a pet that she didn't want in the first place? Be honest now. No one is taking names. Surely, it has crossed your minds on more than a few occasions.

I had kids who won goldfish by throwing a ping-pong ball in a glass of water. The fish came with a two-hour guarantee. Ours lived to develop bowel problems. I thought he'd never go.

Our hamsters never fell prey to diseases like all the other hamsters owned by my friends. Ours just multiplied and ran around a lousy exercise wheel all night long. One day, someone just left the cage open. No questions were asked.

For more years than I like to think about, we had a chameleon in a cage on the back of the commode. He was carried up from Florida in a Velveeta cheese box. He had only one trick. Every time someone flushed, his entire body bounced off the top of the cage, hit all four sides and when he came down he was swimming in mid-air for dear life. Had I not been afraid to touch him, I would have sent him to that big septic tank in the sky.

Julia knows . . . as we all do . . . that pets should be protected from children in the first place. If we're not going to make a lifetime commitment to them, we should never assume responsibility for them. But we're all basically weak.

Is Honeybun still in Libya? Get serious. A newspaper spent $3,913 to fly the animal to the Miles home in London so they could all be together again.

I know exactly what Julia is thinking. Drink up.

PLANTS IN THE HOME

Gardens grow successfully in one large container

By ELVIN McDONALD

Lately several readers have asked how to be more successful with container gardens outdoors. The impression I get is that despite constant watering, the plants don't grow vigorously.

Here is the problem: If temperatures in the root zone are too hot, plants become stunted. The solution is to group small pots in large containers; pack well-moistened long-strand sphagnum or peat moss between, to an inch or so deep over the rims. (If you leave the rim of an unglazed clay pot exposed, it acts as a wick and will evaporate moisture from the soil it holds.)

By "large" I mean something on the order of a bushel basket, a sawed-off whiskey barrel, or a box at least 12 inches deep and a foot square or more. Individual small pots within one large community container work well for house plants being summered in a half-shady, protected spot.

If you are container gardening in full sun with little or no wind protection, grow directly in large containers. Plant thickly, after the manner of French intensive gardening. This means that what you want to grow and thrive will shade the soil and thus help keep it cooler.

In a container the size of a bushel or a sawed-off barrel, you might well plant a six-pack of petunias, along with similar quantities of flowering tobacco (nicotiana), annual Phlox Drummondi, and vinca or periwinkle. As the growing medium use a mixture of about equal parts garden soil, peat moss and sand. To reduce weight, use a soil-less mix instead, such as Jiffy Mix or Pro Mix, but be prepared to fertilize a little with every watering, or apply timed-released pellets such as those marketed by Osmocote.

Q. When can I cut my rosebushes back? They are 7 feet tall.

A. Cut off any dead wood or tootall canes whenever you like during the growing season. Your roses will be healthier if you prune so as to keep the center of the bush open, with the branches forming something of a vase shape. When you cut, do so where there is a five leaflet leaf rather than a three.

Q. When is the time to trim azalea bushes?

A. Immediately after flowering. First remove any dead parts, or branches that reach out noticeably beyond the overall profile of the bush. If you actually want to reduce the size or rejuvenate large old azaleas, cut back as much as a third or perhaps even more. Apply an acid-type fertilizer and water well, unless you've had lots of rain.

Q. Is it possible to root cuttings of azaleas?

A. Yes, and early summer is an excellent time. Half-ripened wood roots most easily, in the form of cuttings 4 to 6 inches long. Dip the base of each in a rooting hormone powder, then set to grow in moist peat moss and sand. Enclose in clear plastic and position in a cool, shaded part of the garden.

Check often to be sure the peat-sand is constantly moist. Remove any rotted leaves or cuttings that die. As growth resumes you will know that roots have begun; gradually remove the plastic and increase the amount of light. By the end of summer you will have thrifty young azaleas; in mild climates these can be planted directly in the garden. Elsewhere I would winter them in a coldframe or cold greenhouse and plant out the following spring.

Q. I need help with orchids, especially the larger ones such as cattleya. They bloom but soon the flowers turn brown along with the leaves. All die down and that's the end of seeing them.

A. You don't say how long the blossom stays fresh; in temperatures of 60-80F., with moist air that circulates freely, and very bright light but no hot sun shining directly on the petals for long periods, a cattleya flower may well last several weeks. Then it is natural for it to wilt, wither and turn brown, along with the sheath from which it was borne — but not the leaves or pseudobulbs, which stay green and act as the orchid's energy-storers.

Complete details about growing orchids as house plants are in my notebook sheets. For your set send 50 cents coin and a stamped, self-addressed, long envelope with "Orchids" written on the back flap to Elvin McDonald Reader Service, Box R, Niagara Falls, N.Y. 14305.

Ready or not, 'new wave' furniture debuts in U.S.

The Associated Press

Is America ready for "new wave" furniture?

Ready or not, the art movement that relies on odd color combinations, strange angles and irreverent attitudes was interpreted in new furniture at the recent furniture market in North Carolina, and at least one national retailer plans to put new wave furniture on the sales floor by fall.

Although only a few furniture showrooms contained new wave and other adventurous styles, these few garnered a large share of market conversation as the furniture industry gathered for its semi-annual rites. New furniture and accessories are reviewed and ordered by retailers at the market.

As usual with dramatic style departures, the new wave showed up first in upholstery and occasional furniture and in accessories. Among American manufacturers, Thayer Coggin made the strongest showing. Its 12-piece "Prisma" collection by Milo Baughman includes sofas, chairs, tables and multicolored etageres.

Baughman predicted "New wave will be the most interesting and important revolution in design since William Morris and the arts and crafts movement."

Baughman's designs for Thayer Coggin illustrate some of the style's basic principles in the use of large, overscaled upholstered pieces that combine black and several primary colors in a single chair or sofa.

An import collection from Sweden of seating and tables and the apparently obligatory oddly-angled etagere was shown by America.

Teens must seek happiness

NEW YORK — Teens can achieve a greater level of daily happiness if they learn to pursue it, according to a special report in Seventeen magazine.

The first step is to acknowledge that happiness must be actively sought out. "When the realization sinks in that we cannot sit back and wait for a happy life, we have actually taken the first long step toward finding it," Dr. Josephine Arasteh, health scientist administrator of the National Institute of Child Health and Human Development, said in the feature.

Experts suggested these steps toward a happier life:

— Take a chance on something new. Experimenting with new activities or accepting challenges can greatly enrich a teen's life.

— Don't think there is only one road to happiness. Many teens think there is only one perfect role for them in life, and failure to attain that role will result in unhappiness. Experts advise to keep a flexible attitude, a major ingredient in happiness, and to avoid rigid thinking.

— Don't compare yourself with others, just with yourself. Being first or best in terms of grades, sports or popularity is not necessary in order to be loved and appreciated.

— Slow your pace. Participating in too many activities is not necessary for happiness. Make a list of activities and see which can be eliminated.

Happiness, like taste, is a personal matter, the experts conclude, and what makes one teen happy might not work for the next.

CNS Photo

By EVELYN KIERAN
Copley News Service

PHOENIX, Ariz. — There are no secrets from a balloon. From an altitude of a mere 1,000 feet or so, it's amazing how easy it is to see into people's back yards, to watch people going about their everyday affairs — but even more, it's easy to see how a city grows — developing its warts and its beauty spots.

We sailed over Phoenix early one morning, rising from a vacant lot adjacent to The Pointe, a resort everyone said could never make it in THAT part of town. Make it The Pointe has, despite some terrible puns on the name — and THAT part of town is now a showplace.

In fact, an awful lot of Phoenix is a showplace, which is quite evident from a low-flying balloon as it sails west across the Valley of the Sun. You may start out trying to count the swimming pools, but you soon give up — noting only that so much surface water tends to change the climate somewhat in what is essentially desert country.

(And you also note that lush greenery — gardens, orchards, flowers and fruit everywhere — has also brought an unprecedented number of songbirds and small birds who thrive in the garden country.)

THE BALLOON drifts lightly and the vista of the whole valley unfolds. Rimmed by magic shadowy mountains on every side, the valley looks as if it really has trapped the sun to offer a living area so golden it seems unreal.

Over there, Sun City sprawls toward the mountains — home for thousands of senior citizens who bask in the warmth and beauty of the place.

Toward the center of town, the acres of the Arizona Biltmore's golf courses roll green and lush in the morning mist. Further east, you can almost see the towers of the Borgata Mall — copied from the north Italian town of San Gimignano and now one of Scottsdale's major shopping centers.

All around you the land is lush, prosperous. Here and there, a holdout farmer still plants his acres around an old-fashioned frame house. But in the very next holding, multiunit condominiums rise, providing homes, not only for the people who live in Phoenix but for those snowbirds who come to share in its sunshine throughout the long winter months.

SNOWBIRDS ARE big business in Phoenix. Over the last 10 years, a healthy number of "think-tank" industries have moved to the city, and added substantially to the economic base of the area. But it is the visitor industry which acccounts for the healthiest part of the Phoenix payroll — and it is an industry that gives every indication of expanding.

People come for a little visit, like what they see and return — again and again. People, moneyed people, like it so well they look around for investments. The result is an astonishing number of superluxurious, beautifully designed, well-managed, self-contained resorts that have come a long way from the old rough ranch house, boots-and-saddle imagery of the Southwest.

The Pointe, to worsen the puns, is a fine case in point. It is built in an area that was once an old ranch and a mining settlement. In fact, it was once considered Phoenix's least-attractive neighborhood (there are no REALLY bad neighborhoods in the town).

The principal Pointe, now known as The Pointe at Squaw Peak, has expanded its original resort complex to include North Pointe and South Pointe, three restaurants (The Pointe of View, Beside the Pointe and the Hole-in-the-Wall) and a shopping center.

IT WAS so successful that developer Bob Gosnell decided to do it again — this time on a hillside which people said was undevelopable. Another totally self-contained resort, The Pointe at Tapatio, has a "culinary legend" restaurant, called (ouch!) The Pointe in Tyme. But the place, which wanders over a classic desert hillside, is breathtakingly beautiful. Wrought ironwork, sparkling fountains from Guadalajara, lush bougainvillea and great flowering hibiscus give the impression of old Mexico — with modern plumbing and conveniences. It, too, is highly successful and very popular with locals.

Gosnell has yet another development in the works, called The Pointe at South Mountain — a magnificent property near Tempe on the far side of town from the original Pointe. The condominium phase of the development is already oversubscribed.

The Pointe resorts have the highest occupancy rate in Arizona and the love and affection of a lot of affluent young people. They exude such an atmosphere of fun, people hate to leave.

Another magnficent example of how good things grow in Phoenix is the fabled old Arizona Biltmore. The Biltmore, inspired by Frank Lloyd Wright, has just added a new area, the Terrace Court, executed by the present staff of Wright's famed school at nearby Taliesin.

THE RESORT, now managed by Westin International, still draws a full house much of the year. It was the first in Phoenix, has weathered depressions, wars and devastating fires and yet it continues to grow, maintaining impeccable standards in every aspect of fine hoteliering.

The Orangerie, a new dining room, has quickly become one of the finest in the valley and an all-out favorite with valley residents.

In fact, the proliferation of first-class dining rooms is yet another facet of the growing sophistication of the city. People no longer exchange notes on where to find the best bowl of red, but rather who is producing the best of the new cuisines in the most posh atmosphere.

In this line, The Registry Resort is outstanding. La Champagne, a rich, elegantly furnished new dining room offers a menu and service worthy of the best France has to offer, yet it never loses the ambience of warmth and hospitality which reminds you that you are in Arizona.

Owned by a Dallas-based corporation, The Registry is one of five outstanding hotels in the group. It features a 21-court tennis complex, two championship 18-hole golf courses, four swimming pools (one of which is the largest in Arizona) acres of gardens and a huge bouquet of meeting rooms and facilities. Self-contained — and sophisticated — it appeals to the active affluent from all over the country.

Cottonwoods (which is the English for Los Alamos, its previous name) has been taken over by Stouffer's as part of its great expansion west. We were treated to an extraordinarily fine German buffet there one day, prepared by a young woman chef and served with great gemudtlichkeit. Later we toured the resort grounds, impressed with such details as specially woven Navaho blankets on the headboards and individual hot tubs on the patios.

TWO OLD favorites, the Camelback Inn and Mountain Shadows are now running under the Marriott banner, so beautiful they don't seem real. Hilton has both a downtown hotel and a Scottsdale resort. So does Sheraton. Loew's is coming on line in spring '84 with the Paradise Valley Resort in Scottsdale — and tbe list of new hotels and resorts under construction or still in the planning stages is staggering.

Efforts to preserve cultural sites vary

By BENJAMIN FORGEY
The Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — Twenty-five years ago, in the wake of plans to build the Aswan High Dam, Egyptian and Sudanese officials decided to ask for international assistance in the effort to rescue monuments of ancient Egyptian civilization that were facing inundation.

The result was a worldwide outpouring of concern, money and technical help. Twenty-two Nubian temples, including the massive monuments of Abu Simbel, were dismantled and reconstructed; other sites now in the "drowned museum" were documented by archeologists.

SINCE THEN there have been other impressive, large-scale international efforts to aid in preserving invaluable cultural sites from natural or man-made depredations. The alacritous, heartfelt response to the disastrous 1966 floods in Italy resulted in significant long-term improvements, especially in Venice, and the complex and costly project to stabilize and preserve Borobudur, the stunning 1,200-year-old Buddhist monument in Java, was completed just last year.

These and many other accomplishments and outstanding tasks were discussed and analyzed at length recently at a gathering here co-sponsored by the Smithsonian Institution and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO).

Though the conference had a defensive title — "The Challenge to Our Cultural Heritage: Why Preserve the Past?" — and though many of the participants made it clear that the problems facing such enterprises are more than daunting, one could legitimately leave the meetings with a feeling of having absorbed a heady dose of good news at a time when most of the news is certifiably bad.

THE IDEA of a global cultural heritage, encompassing living, changing cultures as well as those remote in time, represents an inspirational widening of the human perspective. The fact that the idea has been given a legal and administrative structure via the World Heritage Convention, adopted by the UNESCO general conference in 1972 and since ratified by 82 countries, represents at least a dollop of harmony in a strife-ridden world.

Signers of the convention cover the political and geographic spectrum and, so far, 165 properties in 44 nations have been included on the World Heritage List, a sort of last-gasp, don't-tread-on-these signal to the dynamo of 20th-century urbanization, industrialization and population growth.

An especially encouraging thing about this list (in addition to the fact that it exists and is growing) is that it includes both natural and man-made domains — the Great Barrier Reef and the Nubian monuments, Serengeti National Park in Tanzania and the convent of St. Gall in Switzerland, Yellowstone National Park and the Taj Mahal. In the long run this straightforward, if still elementary, acknowledgment that the natural world and the built environment are integral parts of a global whole could turn out to be enormously important.

IT IS also interesting, and encouraging, that the man-made components of the list are not limited to single buildings or isolated monuments, but also include entire urban environments. This international broadening of the concept of conservation parallels changes in the preservation movement in the United States and other Western countries, and for good reason: the problems are much the same, worldwide. The struggles to save the Vieux Carre' in New Orleans, the Inner Harbor in Baltimore or much of the older segment of downtown Washington are not all that different in principle from the ongoing efforts to preserve the old city in Quito, Peru, the medina in Fez, Morocco, or the Islamic quarter in Cairo.

But if many of the threats are the same — the unmitigated prestige of technology, the power of highway engineers, the irrepressible destroy-and-build syndrome common to modernist-trained architects and planners, the flight of better-off families to the suburbs — the problems are intensified in many Third World cities by the relative lack of wealth and the tremendous pace of social change and urbanization.

Thus it is here that this nascent international movement to conserve the past faces by far its thorniest challenges, not only because the problems are greatest in the growing cities of the world and not only because the financial resources to solve them are extremely limited, but also because it is here that old and new values come into open conflict.

IRONIES ABOUND. Many countries are choosing what one banker aptly referred to as "the tourist option" of redevelopment, saving and restoring ancient monuments and entire segments of older cities, or simply building fancy isolated new projects, as a means to attract tourist dollars (or marks or yen). But the question of balance is an old and haunting one: At what point do the negative social impacts of tourism outweigh the financial and cultural benefits?

Changing social patterns in many areas are significant obstacles to preserving the past. In the old city of Cairo, for instance, many fine older structures are "shrinking story by story," reported one speaker, because the necessary traditional habit of annual repainting and replastering after the rains has been abandoned by a large part of the population.

There are the many complex questions concerning the usefulness vs. the abusefulness of technology. The rebuilding of Borobudur was as admirable and as complex a technological effort as has yet been made in the name of preserving human history, involving, it was reported, "air photo analysis, archeology, architecture, chemistry, conservation, engineering, seismology, foundation engineering technology, landscape planning, meteorology, microbiology, petrography, physics, soil mechanics, surveying and terrestrial photogrammetry."

YET IT is one thing to point the specialists in the right direction on so isolated and magnificent a problem as Borobudur, and quite another to devise technological solutions to vast technological-political problems, such as the immense damage being inflicted on relics of the past by industrial and automobile air pollution. The stone caryatid columns of the Erechtheum on the Acropolis have been moved to a controlled interior environment, to be replaced outside with synthetic reproductions, but one has to wonder how valuable an example this is.

But if the road to some sort of accommodation between past and present, to some sort of reconciliation between "modern" and traditional ways of doing things, is a rocky one it also is a clear imperative in all parts of the world.

Developers plan ski resort

Washington Post News Service

Opening day is more than a year away, but developers have announced plans for a major new downhill ski resort on Two Top Mountain in Pennsylvania, about 90 minutes from Washington.

The latest addition to mid-Atlantic skiing is called Whitetail Resort. Situated on 1,000 acres in the Bear Pond Mountains of Pennsylvania's Franklin County, just north of the Maryland line, it will be reached via I-70, about seven miles north of the Clear Spring, Md., exit and seven miles south of Mercersburg, Pa.

The project is headed by D. Bruce Foster, a Waynesboro physician and businessman.

The initial phase, budgeted at $16 million, calls for five chairlifts serving 19 slopes from novice to "true expert" in an area that includes a half-mile-wide bowl. The longest trail will wind more than a mile. The master plan provides for an eventual complex of 13 lifts and 44 trails.

Ultimately, Whitetail is envisioned as a four-seasons resort with golf, tennis and hotel and convention facilities. Design of a vehicle-free village, with several restaurants, will be in the style of 17th and 18th-century southern Pennsylvania architecture.

Despite recent battle, Grenada hypnotizes tourist

By JERRY HULSE
The Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

GRAND ANSE BEACH, Grenada — The morning is gray and clouds smother the horizon, obscuring little pastel-colored homes clinging to hills across the bay.

On the terrace at Spice Island Inn, a handful of diners watch as a lone fisherman paddles by in his boat. Even with the overcast, the sea is a striking green.

A waiter glances up at the sky. "The clouds will burn away soon," he says assuredly.

An hour later the powder-white beach is bathed in sunshine and vendors appear displaying hand-woven hats and bracelets fashioned from black coral.

On this peaceful little island, it is difficult to believe a war was fought barely seven months ago.

While signs of battle still surface, the beauty of Grenada is hypnotizing. It is an island of stunning scenery, and as old island hands assure everyone, there is no safer place presently in the entire Caribbean.

STILL, PEACE and the ejection of the Marxist government has not turned tourism around. Beaches are mostly deserted. I walked for more than a mile along Grand Anse Beach, passing only an occasional vacationer.

Later I ran into Timothy Winkler, a 24-year-old medical student who was studying at the now-famous St. George's University when President Reagan ordered the evacuation of nearly 600 students. With enrollment back to normal, Winkler has resumed his studies.

The question surfaces: Is Grenada prepared for tourists? Well, it all depends if the visitor is prepared for Grenada. The lights fail regularly. The roads are a mess; the telephones go dead; unemployment is staggering. And yet, Grenada is an adventure, a superb adventure, a pleasure. It remains the most outrageously beautiful island in the Caribbean.

There is the Red Crab, a magnificent pub with reasonable meals and zesty beers. Imagine, a perfectly charming English pub doing a surprisingly good business in this distant corner of the Caribbean.

STROLLING THE streets and beaches of this island are more earthy characters than one could possibly encounter in a dozen Graham Greene novels. For years it has been an outpost for adventurers.

Even before the invasion, business had not been particularly good for Joe Gaylord at the resort he calls Twelve Degrees North. At Twelve Degrees North guests take shelter in eight slick bungalows strung down a hillside leading to a private beach; it is one of those special places one prefers to keep a personal secret.

Unlike other destinations in the Caribbean, Grenada is not seeking the mass tourism that has made a mess out of other islands. Only recently one developer was sent packing after he proposed a 500-room high-rise; this on an island with barely 400 hotel rooms along its entire coastline.

Grenada, 100 miles north of Venezuela, is not interested in the big time. Grenada wants the Joe Gaylords with their small resorts. Gaylord, a 56-year-old ex-real estate executive, fled New York 17 years ago, fed up with crowds, stress and two-martini lunches. Today he slugs down two bourbons instead — but only after 5 o'clock.

IN RECENT years when Grenada's politics became a nightmare, Gaylord's wife begged: "Joe, give it up!"

But Joe had invested too much time, too much money. Besides, he had all those calluses to show for it. He told his wife no. She split.

Divorced now, Gaylord lives a life a lot of men might envy. A trim 177 pounds, he has a girlfriend half his age, plays tennis daily, dives, sails and lives in a spacious home with a wall-less living room that faces the sea. It is cooled by trade winds and blessed by marvelous sunsets. But do not be deceived. It has not been all bliss.

Tourism peaked in the early '70s on Grenada. Hotels were full. Cruise ships called regularly. Frequently, guests were turned over to small inns and private homes, or sent away altogether. With barely 400 rooms, Grenada could not hack the big time.

Joe Gaylord and other resort operators were living the good life until 1974. Then demonstrations followed Grenada's independence from Britain. Things worsened in 1979 after Prime Minister Eric Gairy was toppled in a coup.

As the country's politics moved to the left, a lot of Americans moved out altogether. Not Gaylord. He remained behind, even after a run-in with the Cuban ambassador and a nasty beef with a Libyan.

I LOVED Grenada the minute I walked into Mama's. Candles flickered on the table. There was cold beer in the ice box and tantalizing smells drifted from the kitchen.

Mama smiled through the doorway, a gap between her teeth. She was cooking callaloo, a stewed tattou, (armadillo), turtle, lobster fritters, steak barracuda, conch, shrimp, crab, dolphin, red beans and rice, bread fruit salad and stewed manicou, which is possum.

During a power outage, Mama's daughter lit kerosene lamps while Mama handed us the dinner check. It came to roughly $12 apiece, including the drinks.

"Wait a minute!" Mama cried. "I forgot to serve you your pumpkin ice cream."

Visitors go 'quackers' over duck's birthday

By MICHAEL CARLTON
The Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

LAKE BUENA VISTA, Fla. — Life is just ducky here in central Florida and across the land in California; in fact, people in both places are going quackers over a birthday party.

Sorry, but the urge to pun is just too great this year, especially for someone who has just spent a weekend celebrating Donald Duck's 50th birthday at Disney World.

Donald, the foolish fowl we've all grown up with, hits the big five-oh this year and Walt Disney Productions — never one to miss an opportunity for a promotion — has planned year-long celebrations in its two theme parks: Florida's Disney World and California's Disneyland. There will also be parties in Los Angeles and New York, and personal visits by Donald and his entourage to dozens of other cities during the birthday events.

The celebration of Donald's birthday began last month and will run throughout the summer and fall at the Disney parks. There is a daily parade in both parks featuring Donald and his cronies, accompanied by more than 200 musicians, singers, dancers, and a grand marshal selected from visiting tourists. Disney has commissioned a distinctive song, "Happy, happy birthday Donald," for the yearlong parade. A new song-and-dance show — "Donald's Dandy Dazzlin' Dancin' Review" — has made its debut, and Donald's hit movies are screened daily as part of a special film festival.

Last week, Donald and a troupe of Disney characters began a city tour (Burbank, Oakland, Sacramento, Seattle, Salt Lake City, Denver, St. Louis, Boston, Chicago, Atlanta, Dallas, Phoenix) to mark his birthday. And a four-week Donald Duck film festival began at Rockefeller Center's Globe Theater. Also slated this year as part of the celebration of Donald Duck's birthday are a television special, an appearance by Donald in Macy's Thanksgiving Parade, and the introduction of dozens of new products, including a commerative plate, a silver Christmas ornament, and a model railway car.

Eastern Airlines has also jumped on the birthday wagon, hiring Disney characters to meet all its arriving planes in Orlando through Aug. 31. The characters dance to the "Happy, happy birthday Donald" song and introduce unsuspecting visitors to Disney World as soon as they get off a plane.

At Disney World's Epcot Center, French chefs Paul Bocuse, Gaston LeNotre and Roger Verge — who already own one hugely successful restaurant in the park's World Showcase — opened their new restaurant, "Le Bistro de Paris" yesterday on Donald's official birthday. One of the featured entrees is a cassoulet of (gasp!) duckling. Some birthday present. Also, Epcot introduced its new $1 million laser, fountain and fireworks show that is expected to become one of Disney's most popular attractions.

But the biggest event on the Donald Duck birthday agenda is the appearance of 50 snow-white Peking ducks at Disney World — all wearing party hats and quacking madly as they parade in a special salute to the world's most famous duck.

The 50 made their public debut May 19 and were an instant hit with the thousands of visitors to Disney World. They will appear in the daily birthday parade throughout the summer before they are distributed in pairs to zoos in 25 cities, including Los Angeles, Denver, St. Louis, New York, Boston, Chicago, Atlanta, Dallas and Phoenix.

The ducks were raised from eggs by Charlie Cook, curator of birds for Walt Disney World's Discovery Island, a wondrous place where birds roam in a lush setting and tourists arrive by boat. By seeing Charlie — dressed as Donald Duck — as soon as they hatched, they were "imprinted" with his presence and considered him their mother.

The ducks live in Disney World, and each day take a stroll beside a human-sized Donald Duck, who feeds his cousins to assure their loyalty.

The biggest problem in training the ducks, said Cook, was to get them to wear party hats. After countless hours of training and work, the Disney crew came up with a special adhesive that keeps the hats in place. The name of the adhesive: "duct tape." Ouch.

Disney World visit enjoyable

By MICHAEL CARLTON
The Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

LAKE BUENA VISTA, Fla. — If You Go to Disney World:

HOW TO GET THERE: Several major airlines — including Pan Am, Eastern, American, Delta, Republic, United and Continental — serve the Orlando Airport. Eastern, "The Official Airline of Disney World," is the major carrier, with 38 flights daily. Eastern has a vast number of special package plans which include lodging at and visits to Disney World. See your travel agent for details.

WHAT DOES IT COST: A one-day ticket to Disney World (including Epcot Center) is $18 for adults, $15 for children 3 to 12. There is an additional charge ($8.75 and $6.50) for River Country and Discovery Island ($4 and $2). There are several package plans available that reduce the total cost for guests visiting for more than one day. Typical is a five-day ticket for $62 (adults) or $50 (children).

WHERE TO STAY: There are two hotels — the Polynesian Village and the Contemporary Resort — on the grounds of Disney's Magic Kingdom. The rates begin at $100 per night, including transportation by the park's monorail, bus and boat systems. Disney also has a number of villas available, including treehouses, which rent from $100 to $150 per night. There is also a campground at Ft. Wilderness with sites starting at $23. There are dozens of hotels surrounding the park, including several (Hotel Royal Plaza, Howard Johnson's, Hilton, Americana Dutch Resort and Buena Vista Palace) at Disney Village. A new Hyatt recently opened outside Disney World grounds and has received good reviews.

WHAT TO DO: In addition to Disney World and Epcot, the Orlando area is blessed (or cursed) with a number of other theme parks and attractions. First among the lesser parks is Sea World, followed by Circus World and the Stars Hall of Fame. Tampa's splendid Busch Gardens is about an hour and one-half drive away, and the Kennedy Space Center near Cape Canaveral is about an hour's drive. There are several golf courses, plenty of tennis courts, and some good bass fishing in the area.

WHERE TO EAT: The best restaurants in the Orlando area are at Epcot, where French, Italian, Mexican, Canadian, Japanese and German restaurants provide authenic ethnic food. Reservations are accepted each morning at Epcot for dining that day.

Tour doubles as photo workshop

Washington Post News Service

An unusual two-week tour of the Soviet Union and Finland to experience "the white nights and the midnight sun" doubles also as a photography workshop.

The intinerary extends from Moscow north to Leningrad, Helsinki and Ivalo in the Finnish Lapland above the Arctic Circle. Accommodations outside the cities will include log cabins with the opportunity to enjoy a traditional Lapp sauna. A professional will offer instruction in landscape photography.

The tour, open to 30 participants, is sponsored by the Citizen Exchange Council of New York, an organization seeking to promote understanding between Americans and Eastern Europeans. Departure is June 11; the price is $2,699, which includes airfare from New York and most land costs.

A second program is aimed at Americans, particularly families, interested in Soviet family life. On a two-week tour departing June 28 for Leningrad, Kiev and Moscow, the emphasis is on meeting adults and children in their homes and participating in recreational activities. The cost is $2,049 per person for adults and $1,183 for children under 12.

Great Britain's Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher doesn't view herself as a politican first and a woman second, but as "a personality blended into one."

Great Britain's Iron Lady

By JACKIE HIGHE
King Features Syndicate

Being with Margaret Thatcher is like riding in a small but very powerful and expensive car. You get a long way fast and it's a bracing ride, but she smooths out bumps and takes corners tightly, so you never feel at risk.

What's more, she always seems to have plenty of power to spare, so it's easy to see how the less forceful members of her Cabinet could be swept along, despite themselves.

And that, in essence, is how she operates. "Power," she says, "comes not so much from the right to make the final decision, as from the ability to influence and persuade other people — then they go ahead and do your pushing for you."

The reality of power doesn't worry her, nor should it, she feels, worry any woman. "I enjoy it enormously — we all learn history at school, and you feel a sense of responsibility when you're trying to make a little yourself — a sense of purpose being at the center of things. It doesn't weigh me down. It's stimulating!"

We're sitting in the study at Number 10 Downing Street, and Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher is leaning forward in her chair, every nerve vibrating with earnestness.

"WOMEN ARE natural decision-makers," she states. "We don't shrink from decisions." Which is why, she reckons, we ought not to be frightened of aiming very high.

"There's only one top job — but there are plenty of other jobs of responsibility all the way up the ladder. Women should take the opportunities as they come, but they seem to have less self-confidence, in proportion to their ability, than men do. I don't know why. I think it can be an advantage being a woman.

"We're very practical and we don't moan about things — we get on with life. I'm desperate to have more women in Parliament, and I'm constantly trying to encourage the women in my party to take a more active role in politics. I get very cross and upset when they say 'I'm only a housewife.' I tell them being a housewife is a managerial job. You're used to taking responsibility and living within a budget, and we need those qualities in government, and everywhere else."

She's not too happy when I suggest that, far from being an inspiration to the average woman, she might be seen as too capable for us to emulate, far too formidable.

"It would worry me to think that I put women off. Don't hold me up as a role model; I'm just lucky that things have bounced right for me.

"I'm only here because I have a combination of qualities that no one else had at the time." But she does admit that circumstances don't seem to get any easier for women.

"THERE ARE fundamental problems. We have as many educated women as men, but most of them get married. Then when you have a young family you can't just leave it. You can't just pick up sticks and move to London. I was fortunate that we lived on the spot and that my constituency was here. If my husband's work had been in Cornwall or Cardiff I couldn't have left my children to be an MP. And my husband is supportive. Denis said, 'It's absurd for you not to use your talents.'

"There are other difficulties — the time lapse, for example. Women who stop work to have a family lose touch and it takes a little time to get back their confidence."

But she's quick to point out that there are balancing factors — that there are more opportunities than before, and that male attitudes are changing (this despite her own male critics).

She comes in for a fair amount of flack for being "masculine," "aggressive," or even a would-be dictator.

"I'm a tough boss, yes: I drive people, but it's my job to do that. We do have tough discussions in Cabinet. That's the way I run it — I don't want yes men — but it's utterly ridiculous to call me a dictator. If you put things firmly they say you're 'headmistressy,' but they never call a man 'headmastery!'

"It may be that a woman with natural authority stands out more than a man — but I didn't develop it on purpose. I'm not a woman second and a politician first. I'm a personality blended into one. I don't think you can separate qualities, tease them out. People don't evaluate the contribution men have made to life, so why do they do it with us? It's men who think we're different, possibly because there are so few of us in politics today.

"I'D SAY TO women who want to make a success in any career: Rise to the challenge, and take the opportunities as they present themselves.

"Of course it's going to be difficult on the first day in a new job, but so it is for a man. You'll have butterflies. Who doesn't? I still get them. But tackle it day by day and keep calm, because you can do it!"

This is certainly Thatcher speaking on Thatcher. She's radiating sincerity, eyes shining, fists clenched. What price the Iron Lady now? It's obvious that her toughness lies in her ability to control normal human weaknesses — to suppress them rather than not have them in the first place.

She claims that her ability to concentrate on the job makes self-effacement easy. "The moment I've got a job in front of me my mind concentrates wholly on the problem, not on whether I can do it or not. And that's what I'd say to other women — forget yourself and concentrate on the job. Of course you can't know it all at first. We all have a learning time and if you don't know something, never be afraid to ask. It's a sign of intelligence, not ignorance!"

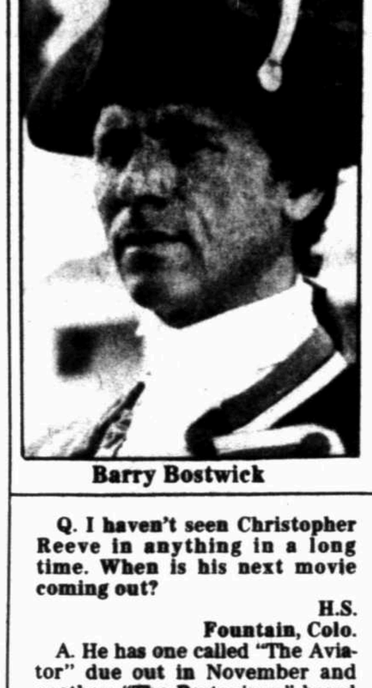
BETWEEN THE LINES



Barry Bostwick

Q. I'm 13 years old. I saw the miniseries "George Washington" and could not believe how handsome Barry Bostwick is. I'd like to know how old he is, what he's been doing the last few years and what he plans to do in the future.

Gena Polci
Prospect, Conn.

A. He's 39, 6 feet 4 inches, blue-eyed and athletic in the style of his native California. In the last few years, he's been starring in all three of the actors' media: stage, TV and film.

His first major film role was the ultra-straight Brad Majors in the cult classic "The Rocky Horror Picture Show," followed by a dual role in "Movie, Movie" and a daredevil role in the highly forgettable "Megaforce."

On Broadway, he created the role of Danny Zuko that John Travolta later stepped into in "Grease" and won a Tony for "The Robber Bridegroom." In L.A. he portrayed the "Pirate King" in "The Pirates of Penzance." On TV, he co-starred in "Scruples," "Moviola," PBS's "Working" and a number of TV movies with provocative themes.

Now, though, he doesn't have any plans. "Just to host 'Saturday Night Live,' " explains an associate. "Otherwise, he's lying low for awhile."

On the romantic front, we reported recently that Lisa Hartman's mother thought it would be nice if her daughter and Bostwick got back together, but as of now, "her things have been moved out of the house," explains the associate.

Q. I haven't seen Christopher Reeve in anything in a long time. When is his next movie coming out?

H.S.
Fountain, Colo.

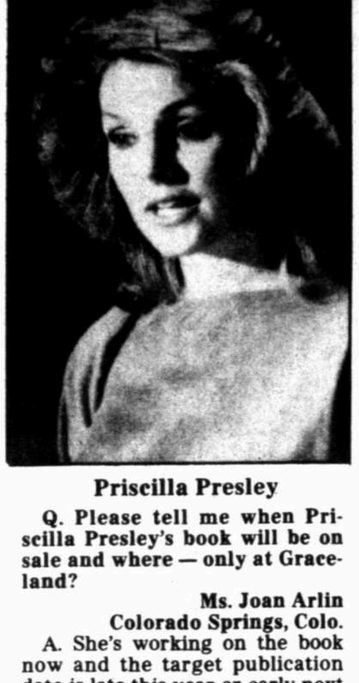
A. He has one called "The Aviator" due out in November and another, "The Bostonians," based on Henry James' novel, but it doesn't have a release date yet. He also may have something going with Vanessa Redgrave — the two just closed in "The Aspern Papers" in London's West End and are talking about bringing it to this country, possibly to Los Angeles, then possibly making a film of it together. But at this point, they're just talking.

Christopher Reeves

Q. If my memory serves me correctly, George Burns' and Gracie Allen's children appeared on their TV show occasionally. Did they stay in show business?

J.N.S.
Midland, Texas

A. No. Their son, Ronnie, appeared more regularly on the show and, according to a family friend, his father wanted him to study acting and continue on in the business, but the younger Burns wasn't interested. He went into the building business in Southern California instead. His sister, Sondra, wasn't too interested either. She became a teacher.



Priscilla Presley

Q. Please tell me when Priscilla Presley's book will be on sale and where — only at Graceland?

Ms. Joan Arlin
Colorado Springs, Colo.

A. She's working on the book now and the target publication date is late this year or early next year. It'll be available at bookstores all around the country, and possibly at Graceland as well.

Q. I recently saw Kurt Russell in "Silkwood." Please tell me all about him.

A. Brown
Mississauga, Ont.

A. He's 33, born March 17, 1951, single but heavily involved with Goldie Hawn, his co-star in the movie "Swing Shift." He has a young son, Boston, from his former marriage to actress Season Hubley.

Professionally, he always wanted to be a baseball player. In fact, he played minor league ball from 1971 until 1973 when a shoulder injury retired him. He got his start in acting as a result of his love for the sport: At age 10 when he heard that his heroes Mickey Mantle and Roger Maris were going to appear in a movie called "Safe at Home," he had his actor-father arrange an audition.

He didn't get a part in that one, but it did lead to other jobs — in the TV series "Our Man Higgins" and "The Travels of Jamie McPheeters" and a film "It Happened at the World's Fair" (starring Elvis) that brought him to the attention of Walt Disney. Disney then signed him to a contract to do films such as "The Computer Wore Tennis Shoes" and "Superdad."

Lately, he's been in the films "Used Cars," "Escape from New York," "The Thing," "Silkwood" and "Swing Shift." Next up is "The Mean Season" in which he plays a reporter caught up in the scheme of a mass murderer. It co-stars Mariel Hemingway and started shooting last month.

Ten-year-old boy wants to be a star

AP Laserphoto

Brian Sadler, left, of Sherman, rehearses a local television commercial with Gus Sherman. Brian, 10, who wants to be an actor, has appeared in various commercials, including one for Smurf Shoes, and has taped a music video with a Dallas-based band which will soon be released through Music Television.

SHERMAN, Texas (AP) — Brian Sadlier wants to be a movie star.

He's a dead-ringer for Ricky Schroder, who stars in "The Champ" as well as the television series "Silver Spoons." Brian has the looks, poise, and drive to make it — all he lacks is a break. He's on his way, and he just can't wait.

At an age when most kids are spending their after-school hours playing softball or hanging out with friends, 10-year-old Brian prefers roles in front of cameras and audiences, acting and dancing in hopes of becoming a popular entertainer.

"I think someday I might be a movie star," the Sherman boy says with a grin. "I like acting. It's a pretty neat business."

In the past two years, the blond-haired youth has appeared in four local television commercials for various discount stores and a national spot for Smurf Shoes.

He recently taped a music video with a Dallas-based band, which is soon to be released through Music Television (MTV), and is first in line for a part in a Dallas Summer Musical production.

As a model, his face has graced the pages of D Magazine, Texas Monthly and the Dallas Morning News. He was also seen in a slide show presented to officials of the Dr Pepper Co. at a convention in Los Angeles.

"Brian has initiated his own career," says his mother, Donna Sadlier. "We (his parents) never push him. We help him all we can. If he said tomorrow he wanted to quit, we'd be totally behind him on that also."

Brian's acting career began two years ago, when he convinced his mother to enroll him in a drama workshop at Austin College.

"You've got to have patience. When you get these auditions they're liable to turn you down. I just have to smile and say 'Thank you anyway...' The reason I like acting is because it's fun to see yourself on the screen and think, I made it. It's a sense of accomplishment."

— Brian Sadlier

Two months later, Brian's drama professor, Michael Fortner, told his mother that Brian should have a talent agent. Fortner wrote a letter to prospective employers in which he said, "Brian is a charmer...He is so fresh and so mature, I think he is ready for the commerical world now — are they ready for him?"

Though he hasn't been in the profession very long, Brian is the first to acknowledge that an acting career can be difficult, bringing forth its own share of disappointment.

"You've got to have patience," he says. "When you get these auditions they're liable to turn you down. I just have to smile and say 'Thank you anyway.' "

Acting also tears him away from friends, he says. "But it's worth it. I have a lot of fun."

Says Mrs. Sadlier, "This to him is a challenge. I never have to hound him."

Brian also dances, as he did in the music video last month. He was recently awarded a certificate of achievement by the Royal Academy of Dance in London, England, for successfully passing a rigorous ballet examination.

"That's a very tough thing to pass," says his mother. "He's been studying for the last year for that. Out of all the things he's done — commercials and all — he was nervous about this (examination). His teacher was so ecstatic because she had never taught a boy before."

When he's not busy acting, dancing or modeling, Brian, an above-average fourth grader at Glad Tidings Institute, likes doing "little boy things," his mother says. He is involved in Boy Scouts and enjoys soccer and fishing.

But acting is his main hobby. And because most of his auditions are held in Dallas and his father works in Richardson, the family will probably make the move south this summer, his mother says.

"I'm proud he takes the initiative to do things himself," she says. "I want him to do what he wants to do. If he wants to make it (acting) a career, that's fine."

Says Brian, "The reason I like acting is because it's fun to see yourself on the screen and think, I made it. It's a sense of accomplishment."

THATCHER

She acknowledges that she has to do a tremendous amount of homework. "If you're well prepared, it gives you confidence. When I give interviews I still get nervous, even though I've done them so frequently. My mind just goes blank, then the first question comes and everything is all right."

This is a Margaret Thatcher softer than the usual public image, more thoughtful, introspective — but definitely not weaker. You're never in any doubt that the steel is there, under the surface even while she's talking about the need for "really close women friends, friends you can totally and utterly trust."

"IT'S A LONELY job in some ways, partly because you have to spend long hours working, but mainly because in the end you know it's you who has to provide the drive. That's perhaps why they call me a dictator, because I've got to be the dynamo, to say 'Come on, we've got to go ahead.'

"That's how I see my job — as a motivator. And constantly you've got to find the renewed vigor and vitality to do it.' She looks at that moment as though she never tires, as though long hours and exhausting schedules take no toll at all.

"It's the way you learn to live...I'm a workaholic, it's true." And if she had to put her success down to any particular quality, it would be "perseverance" and "loving the work I do. If you moan about your job, you'll never do it well. Do it with every bit of enthusiasm you can muster, whether it's being prime minister or keeping the streets clean. It's a matter of personal pride to do your job well. It affects everyone around you, which is one reason I can influence people. And I never give in. Look at Florence Nightingale. You'd call her a success; she knew what she wanted to achieve and she never gave in either."

Her intensity is tremendous. "I have very little private life and sometimes I do miss it, but I have so much else of passionate interest to do.

"Of course I look forward to a break like Christmas — we're still very much a family. But you can never relax. You're on duty the whole time, and you learn to live with that. I would be much more worried if I thought people were withholding things from me or saying 'don't bother her.' Of course main policy decisions are made together, but someone has to have the ideas."

THIS IS THE familiar intractable Mrs. Thatcher speaking, and it's easy now to picture her in those "tough discussions" she talks about — intense, unpersuadable, carrying all before her confidently.

It comes as a jolt, therefore, when she admits happily, "I'd love to be a granny. My children are both 30 and neither is married. You bring them up to be independent, but when it comes to marrying you can't do anything about it. I want some grandchildren!"

If she brought anything new as a woman to the premiership, she thinks it's "a greater interest in the long-term future. Mothers want to give their children more than they had. We have to face the fact that they may not want the same things, but we're always thinking in the future for our children and grandchildren, and that affects the decisions we make."

In any case, she reckons that the office of prime minister is changing. "There are far more summits than ever before. I was surprised when I came to office at how much more involved I have to be in foreign affairs. And then visiting heads of state want to see me — and people from overseas companies, too, so I have to be available. After all, foreign affairs are not just foreign. They affect us here, right down to prices in the shops.

"In fact, there's a tendency for people to want to see more of me here too. They come to the top, but I say, 'Look, there are ministers dealing with those topics — ask them!'

"I tell ministers — indeed everyone — that if you're not prepared to take responsibility, you're losing your freedom, so don't give it up! Everyone in the country, right down the line, should be prepared to take on more responsibility — including women."

IT'S NOT difficult to picture Margaret Thatcher as the head of a large family estate, hounding the butler into visiting the dentist, lancing the footman's gumboil with her own hands — she's a born organizer and readily admits it.

"Sometime over the weekend I'll try to get the flat in order — general tidying and putting things back in the place they should go. I love turning out the airing cupboard, or I might think the kitchen needs straightening out. Then I'll go through the freezer to see what we're running out of. I can't allow it to get low. I've got to have a certain number of shepherd's pies, lasagne, stews — yes, I still do it, and I like it. It's relaxing because it's different."

A somewhat bizarre contrast to the flint-like "leader of the nation," but Winston Churchill (she refers to him frequently, and always as "Winston," as though he were a lifelong friend) had his bricklaying.

A complex woman this — a combination of housewife, mother and hard-core politician, who remains unmoved through the most biting criticism. "You must never take things personally. You must take things in hand without taking them to heart. You have to have a touch of steel in you to do the job I do."

Experts: Minds can be mastered

King Features Syndicate

Evelyn avoided being alone at all costs. She threw herself into all sorts of activities and surrounded herself with people so she wouldn't have time to brood about her husband's affair. He was sorry and she wanted to forgive him, but images of the affair continued to dominate her thoughts.

Raymond had the talent and ability he needed to succeed, yet every time he was on the brink of an exciting challenge he would remember how his father belittled him as a child. "You'll never amount to much," he'd say. "Raymond, why are you so dumb?" Raymond tried to put those thoughts behind him, but they always crept up in time to muddle his success.

June has two terrific grown children. However, as a dedicated mother, she felt she had to remind them constantly of their true potentials. She knew her family resented her continual nagging, but she just couldn't stop it.

Ben compulsively complained about his physical ailments. From arthritis to liver trouble, he couldn't keep quiet. He knew nobody wanted to hear an old man grumble about aging, but his constant obsession seemed uncontrollable.

Doris was haunted by the memories of a rape. Despite counseling, she was terrified to go outside, unable to stop her mind from replaying that horrifying scene.

All of these people had one thing in common: bondage to their unwanted thoughts. Powerful and destructive thoughts such as these can grow like a cancer, taking control of our lives and threatening to destroy all happiness.

But many experts today believe we can control our thoughts, we can master our minds.

A simple method with a surprising success rate is called thought-stopping. It was originally designed for people with an irresistible urge to shout obscenities in church.

But today average people with everyday thoughts are using this method to gain control of their minds and reduce stress. From a fear of flying to an urge to abandon your diet, you can completely eliminate the thoughts that hold you back.

Nearly all of us waste time worrying about things over which we have no control, brooding over hurts long past, agonizing over problems that have no solution. Yet allowing useless thoughts to take our time robs us of valuable moments — and happy moments — when we could be enjoying life and pursuing worthwhile goals.

Thought-stopping offers the release that can free you to pursue more-productive activity. The principle involves an internal "shouting" to the thought. In your mind, you yell, "Stop! Go away!"

This drowning out of the negative thought, called shouting it down, can be mastered with only a little practice. Experts agree that the method can be used without professional help, merely by following the same steps patients in therapy do.

First, identify the negative "target statements," such as "the future is hopeless," or "I'm no good at this." Boston College psychology professor and author Dr. Joseph R. Cautela has his patients take inventory and list any disturbing out-of-control thoughts.

In counseling, the patient indicates the beginning of such a thought by raising a finger, and the therapist shouts, "Stop!"

Typically, the patient reports being startled or interrupted — and that's the whole idea: You can't think of two things at once, so when the patient hears "Stop!" he or she forgets the negative thought.

Soon the patient imagines shouting "Stop!" himself, and learns to distract himself on his own, often replacing the negative thought with a pleasant image such as a grassy meadow or a glistening beach.

Not only does thought-stopping chase away the harmful thought the instant it occurs, but the thought will appear less frequently and finally disappear altogether.

"I always teach the technique along with stress reduction because it's so simple," says Dr. Grace Baron, assistant professor of psychology at Wheaton College in Massachusetts. Patients can learn to use this very real tool "in a matter of 10 to 15 minutes."

Cautela, who treats phobias very successfully and contends that even such thoughts as "What's to become of me? I'm not where I thought I'd be at this age" can be controlled, uses "the self-control triad": thought-stopping, followed by a deep breath to reduce anxiety and relax, followed by a pleasant scene. A person might think, "I'm not going to get another job." Stop! Take a breath. Pleasant scene. Soon the pleasant scene becomes instantaneous.

The urge to smoke, drink or eat the wrong foods can also be stopped. Instead of drooling over that luscious cream pie in the refrigerator, stop! Envision yourself with a trimmer waistline. Better yet, envision yourself taking the pie to your neighbors and letting them worry about it.

The problems behind most negative thoughts cannot be solved by dwelling on them. "I'm not as young as I used to be," "My kids don't appreciate me," "My boss is impossible," "I'm losing my hair": All the brooding in the world won't change those things.

"If your child won't visit you anymore, there's no point thinking about it," Cautela says. He suggests we get on with our lives and think more positively.

Dr. Patricia Wisocki, geronotology expert and associate professor of psychology at the University of Massachusetts, says to plug in a better thought where you eliminate the negative one.

"If your thought is 'Nobody loves me,' you can think of two possibilities; either 'I don't care; I don't derive my happiness from what others think,' or 'Don't be silly; of course I have friends and people care about me.'

"There's a definite link between thinking and behaving," Ms. Wisocki says. "Whining in your head has a penalty. Mulling over something that has no solution will affect your behavior. It can even lead to stress-related medical problems."

Ms. Baron agrees. "The more we practice something inwardly, the more it will be manifested outwardly." And she counts not a single failure in teaching thought-stopping to people. "It works, it feels right."

"Chances are he or she would already be practicing thought-stopping without having been taught," Cautela says.

Ms. Baron agrees that we often control our thoughts and rationalize to avoid unpleasant tasks or legitimate guilt feelings. "In the normal world we use thought-stopping to avoid working through something or facing up to something. As Freud says, we bury it deeper and deeper."

But experts are not teaching the concept as a way to avoid facing problems — only to eliminate nonconstructive worrying. In fact, one important thing psychologists hasten to say should not be subjected to thought-stopping is the grief experienced after the death of a loved one.

"Grieving requires confrontation," says Joseph Wolpe, M.D., professor of psychiatry at Temple University Medical School in Philadelphia and the author of "Our Useless Fears." And, in the case of a death, it is vital to progress through all the steps of grief.

Even so, Cautela says dwelling upon the death of a loved one can make it worse. "Work through the memory," he says, "but do it once."

When thoughts prevent us from getting on with more productive activities, it's time to use thought-stopping. "Negative thoughts are, by definition, of no value to us," Wolpe says. They must be nipped at their very beginnings, and thought-stopping has been the solution for many.

Evelyn, the woman who couldn't forget her husband's affair, is now able to think "Stop!" then envision a fragrant bouquet of flowers — like the ones he frequently brings her — whenever a bad thought begins.

Raymond has conquered his memories of being belittled as a child by thinking "Stop!" and replacing those thoughts with positive ones about his ability. "I can do this; I've proved it." "This is where my talent lies."

June, who couldn't resist nagging her grown children, now thinks "Stop!" and reminds herself what a capable crew she raised. "They're so clever, so efficient on their own, that they don't need nudging from Mom."

Ben now uses thought-stopping to keep from talking about his illnesses and to focus on the positive. "I've never had back trouble," he'll beam. And this attitude has actually improved his health. His doctor, who sees him less frequently now, is amazed at Ben's progress.

Doris thinks "Stop!" to block the memories of being raped and instantly envisions a pleasant scene. To boost her confidence, she also studied self-defense, and now lives a normal life, free from her earlier fears.

Our minds can be our greatest assets or our biggest liabilities. If we free ourselves from negative thoughts and harmful memories, we can then tap our magnificent mental resources for strength and support, turn our attention to limitless goals, and know that happiness and peace of mind — at last — can be ours.

Norwegian women want promotion

Norwegian women are willing to sacrifice more for a career than men are, according a recent poll of employees at Norway's five largest industrial companies.

Asked if they'd turn down a promotion if they felt it would alter their present lifestyle, 31 percent of the men said they would, but only 18 percent of the women. Forty-one percent of men but only 26 percent of the women said they'd give priority to home tasks if these conflicted with "important job-related functions."

Singer's hobby now full time

TYLER, Texas (AP) — When Lillis Watson's daughter left home 40 years ago, she was left with an empty nest and an ambition of her own to fulfill. Her husband was supportive — to a point.

"He said he didn't care what hobby or project I wanted to take up — when our daughter went away to college and I was facing the switch between mothering and having an empty nest, though he wasn't too much on me warbling around home," says Mrs. Watson, an 83-years-young Tyler senior citizen, recalling just how her second career got launched.

"But, singing was my desire! I had given myself to our daughter and my two younger sisters and a twin brother, raising them — providing everything from elocution training to helping at school and church activities they were involved in. When my daughter, Melba Jo, said she was going to college, I thought — my time has arrived."

Mrs. Watson did avoid warbling at home when she began singing lessons with vocal coaches Clyde Wolford and Victor Drillea.

"Actually, I didn't tell him (her husband) anything about my singing lessons or first recital," she admitted. "But I think the cover was blown on my activities when he found a check I had written for a lesson. I recall that he asked our daughter if I really was taking voice lessons."

"I just had to sing," she said. "Singing was my desire for years and once I had a chance to really learn how, well — I wasn't going to be lightly put off. Besides, I knew he'd enjoy it once I really learned how!"

Mrs. Watson did learn how, and today, some 40 years later, she shares her love of singing with her own church along with those of other faiths, and especially with those senior citizens in 10 Tyler-area retirement homes where she brings music into their lives each week.

Lillie Watson, left, directs members of the Coterie Club Choir in song as the Hearthstone Nursing Home in Tyler, Texas. Mrs. Watson took up her hobby of singing 40 years ago and at age 43, she's still singing.

Honored recently by Tyler Coterie Music Club for "Outstanding Service to the Community," Mrs. Watson at least once each week visits each of the retirement homes: Clairmont, Colonial, Manor, Glenview, Hearthstone, Heritage House, Leisure Lodge, Northview, Southview, Tyson House and Village East.

Thene there are Wednesday craft workshops at Hearthstone, regular sing-alongs, church services, plus Mrs. Watson is an accomplished barber and does free haircuts for elderly male residents of the homes.

"That's one thing I did have to work at," she recalls. "Getting started was easy, but giving good haircuts took some practice. My own father-in-law was incapacitated in Sunset Home and I realized that there wasn't anyone to trim his hair. At that time, I just had scissors and a comb." A gift of electric barber shears has speeded up her practice.

It wasn't long, she says, until other men wanted her to cut their hair.

"And how do you turn one of them down," she says, "when keeping up your appearance is so important to keeping your self respect."

But, don't mix up singing with haircuts — which Mrs. Watson describes as a voluntary service and a sideline with her. Important and tops on the list are the visits to residents who sing along, or perhaps just listen, remembering another day and another time when they were in a church sanctuary singing.

"A number of residents in the homes enjoy playing piano, too," she said. "Pianos now may be standard items, but getting that first piano took some doing."

She remembers that the Coterie Music Club purchased a piano for the orignal Sunset Retirement home, which began Sept. 7, 1947, when the Tyler Soroptimist received city approval to open a nursing home.

"We began with an old barracks there, left from Camp Fannin days. People were magnificent donating their sevice as carpenters, painters... providing materials...(Government assistance to individuals then was $49.50)," she says.

Sunset Home outgrew its available space, and then came Colonial Manor, she says, and on and on until today Tyler offers nursing homes for those needing varying degrees of assistance in their later years.

"Once we had a place for our senior citizens to live, we needed to keep their lives worth living by having activities and visitation," she tells.

"You know," she warns with a serious mien, "You have to have volunteers to help out in a nursing home. It's difficult for an individual in his own home to provide care and enough activites for an elderly person. But, nursing homes can offer 24-hour care plus new faces and activities going on all the time."

"I enjoyed helping out," Mrs. Watson says. "Handling volunteer activities and coordinating church services for just one nursing home was enough to keep me busy, and as 10 homes have evolved, — I have a pretty tight calendar going from one home to the next without much time to spare."

From the outset, she recruited volunteers, including Coterie Music Club to present music programs at the various homes.

Mrs. Watson actually planned volunteer activities for all homes prior to 1976 when state standards required an activity director in each.

"Working with the nursing homes activity schedule got me involved with 10 churches which provide a special meal for 150 ambulatory nursing home residents each month. I arrange the bus to pick residents up at each home," she says.

Childhood will just 'rust away'

By SANDRA LAKE MILLER
King Features Syndicate

"But, Mother, you promised," Jon complained, with the righteousness of a 10-year-old grievously wronged. Eric joined the Whine Chorus, a capella. "You said you'd come see our fort this weekend and it's already Sunday night and it's almost dark."

I sighed, turned the chicken down to 275 degrees and dug through the closet litter for my scrungy jogging shoes. No way was I going through the underbrush with scuttling things running across my sandals.

I try to keep my promises. Since Dan's death, I feel specially moved to listen to their fantasies, searching for some sign of trauma in my fatherless children, wondering how they can heal so quickly and without scarring.

When Eric was 4, he fell and split open his forehead. He healed with a featherline scar and doesn't even remember being hurt. Yet I, untouched, still cringe when he climbs the magnolia. I also cringe at the un-slept-on side of my king-size bed and wish I had courage to trade it in on something smaller. You see? I lack courage and my wounds still bleed.

Eric and Jon skipped happily ahead of me, impatient with my adult slowness, not understanding why I can't keep the pace they set in the 90-degree heat of this stifling, endless August. Eric's pants are too short, I noted, watching from behind. His socks are showing. He walks with a clumsy swagger, arms and legs and feet too large for his torso, in this summer before puberty.

They drove me crazy in June. What can we do? There's nothing to do! When do we go to the beach? How many more days? Why are we out of Kool Aid? Out of desperation, I let them cross Main Street, to open up some new territory, to get them out of the kitchen.

They claimed territorial rights to the wooded lot near the railroad tracks, planted the flag of possession in the name of God and King. Broken shovels and axes were filched from the junk pile and became weapons of war and tools of reconstruction between battles.

I heard daily reports of the fortress's progress. The foundation was laid, the walls raised. "And we have a latrine, real private."

The woods were pretty, green and dark and damp. I picked my way gingerly along the alleged trail that I could hardly see, goaded along by frequent and impatient "C'mon, Mom's." I tried to ignore the slithering I heard in the brush and walked faster, on the theory that a moving foot would be harder to strike.

"What do you think, Mom?" Jon looked at me with all the expectancy of Christmas morning in his eyes. I stood gawking, not knowing how to respond to their eagerness.

We were standing in a hollow of the woods, shaded by very old oaks — "Grandaddy Oaks," the boys call them. The grass was worn down by their feet. There were dead palmetto fronds standing upright in the dirt in no apparent order and a pile of rusty railroad tools. "This is the weapons room and planning area," Jon explained.

"Come over here, Mom. This is the kitchen." Some long-gone vagrant had unwittingly contributed his cracked bowl and a pot with no handle.

"This is the main room." I looked around wildly. There was nothing there. There really wasn't. Just trees and twigs and a jumble of underbrush and a cleared place where they'd sat and trampled and planned and dreamed all summer.

French farce 'Rue de l'Amour' opens Friday at Theatre Midland

The French farce "Rue de l'Amour" by Georges Feydeau opens Friday in Theatre One at Theatre Midland, 2000 W. Wadley Ave.

Moricet wants to triste with Duchotel's wife, Leontine. Leontine wants to remain faithful because her husband is, or so she thinks. Duchotel is rendevousing with friend Birabeau's estranged wife. They all end up at the infamous 13 Rue de l'Amour for a night of hilarity and mix-ups.

Duchotel is played by Michael Trost, who was in "Arsenic and Old Lace" and "The Best Little Whorehouse in Texas;" Moricet is played by Michael Stannard, who played Henry in "Lion in Winter;" Leontine is played by Elizabeth Batterson, who played Blanche in "A Streetcar Named Desire;" Mykel Menget, last in "Annie," will portray the nephew Jean-Pierre; and the concierge of 12 Rue will be Chrysti Scoville, who played Amy Lee in "Laundry and Bourbon."

Poor confused Birabeau will be played by Gregg Ellsner, who was in "Lion in Winter" and "Arsenic and Old Lace." The inquisitive police inspector will be played by Jess Kozman, last seen in "Taming of the Shrew;" and the quintessential French maid will be Jodi McElligott, who appeared in "Tartuffe" and Summer Mummers. The two policemen will be played by Mark Slattery, a newcomer to Midland Community Theatre's main stage, and Jim Martin, who played Phillip in "Lion in Winter."

Casting committee for this production was Wanda Mohr, Betty Edgar and Ted Kruger. Director for "13 Rue de l'Amour" is Michael Spicer. Sets for the production were designed by MCT volunteer Michael Huslage. Costume design is by Mae Dawson.

"13 Rue de l'Amour," which is co-sponsored by Dresser Titan and Dresser Magcobar runs through June 30. Reservations may be made by calling Theatre Midland's box office, 682-4111.

Old-fashioned box supper planned

ODESSA — Preparations are under way for an old-fashioned box supper auction and social in the Globe Theatre's courtyard at 6 p.m. June 30. The social is being held in conjunction with the Globe's production of "Whenever it Rains."

Some of Odessa's and the area's leading citizens are preparing box suppers for the event. Box suppers will be sold to the highest bidders during an auction hosted by J. Gordon Lunn. Winning bidders will have the opportunity to share their meal with the cooks.

Couples will prepare a box supper for themselves and one other couple. The couple buying the box supper will be able to meet the couple who prepared the meal.

Proceeds from the auction will benefit the Globe.

"Whenever it Rains" will be staged following the event. This musical by Rick Smith with music and lyrics by Timothy M. Ryan, traces the history of Odessa from the coming of the railroad in 1881 through the beginning of the oil boom in the 1930s. Production dates are June 29, 30 and July 6-8.

Participation in the Globe's Box Supper Auction and Social is open to the public. Reservations are necessary. Admission to the box supper is $2.50 per person. Bidding on the box suppers begins at $5 apiece.

Tickets to "Whenever it Rains" are $7 for adults and $4 for students and senior citizens. For additional information and reservations call the Globe, 1-332-1586.

'Mass Appeal' auditions to be held

Auditions for "Mass Appeal" will be held in Theatre Two at 7:30 p.m. June 24 and 25.

"Mass Appeal" deals with the conflict in personalities and beliefs between an older priest in a wealthy parish and a young seminarian filled with idealism but little practicality. It opened in New York in 1980 with Milo O'Shea and Eric Roberts and won critical acclaim both for the script and the performances. Since then it has had several national tours and has been seen on cable television.

Roles are available for two actors. One needs to be able to play in his late 50s or early 60s while the other needs to play in his mid-20s.

For more information call Ted Strickland at Midland Community Theatre's business office, 682-2544.

Youths may audition for Pickwicks

Auditions for Pickwick Players, Midland Community Theatre's youth performing group, will be held in Theatre Two at 1 p.m. Monday.

Persons interested in auditioning must be 12-18 years old or have the approval of the educational director, Michael Spicer.

They need to prepare a one-minute monologue from a play, poem or story to be performed for the audition committee. They should be prepared to participate in a sing-a-long and improvisation with an experienced Pickwick.

For more information call Spicer, 682-2544.

Shows leave town for Olympics

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Spies gotta travel, too, so CBS' "Scarecrow and Mrs. King" are heading for Europe this summer.

The comedy-adventure, like a number of other shows, is getting out of town during the Summer Olympics. Other shows leaving town to avoid Olympics congestion include "Simon & Simon," "Knots Landing," "Paper Dolls," "Benson," "Remington Steele" and "Knight Rider." All of the Aaron Spelling shows will shut down production during the games.

"Scarecrow," starring Bruce Boxleitner and Kate Jackson, will start production on June 18 in Salzburg, Austria. Then the crew is off to Munich, Germany, the picturesque town of Tegernsee in the Bavarian Alps, and England.

Actor to narrates home video

LOS ANGELES (DAP) — John Hillerman, who runs the Robin Masters estate with a tightfist on CBS' "Magnum, P.I.," loosens the purse strings on a new home video going on sale in late June.

Hillerman is the host and narrator of a half-hour detective yarn called "Money Hunt." The video follows the adventures of a 1940s private eye named Cash Hunt and contains a number of hidden clues.

It also has an offer to purchasers of the cassette to enter a contest with a $100,000 prize. The winning entry will be announced Sept. 12.

Long-distance dads suffer emotional strains

By KAY MARIE PORTERFIELD
King Features Syndicate

David's situation isn't necessarily pleasant, but it's a common one. A year after his divorce, his company transferred him to a branch office more than a thousand miles away from his children. "It was move or lose my job," he says. "In this economy I couldn't afford to take the risk." Used to seeing his 5-year-old son and 7-year-old daughter every other weekend, this concerned father has been forced to make radical changes in his visitation.

"I can't afford to pay a lot of air fare," he explains. "Since Amy is in school, that leaves the summer for visits. Sometimes I miss both of them so much I put off calling because it's too painful for me. I feel completely helpless most of the time, like I don't have any impact on their lives at all now."

Every summer the airports are full of them, long-distance dads waiting for their children to arrive from halfway across the country, eager to pick up the threads of an on-again off-again father/child relationship and anxious about how the kids will relate to them.

"I keep their pictures out all year," says one father, "but there's always this gut fear at the gate that I won't recognize them because they've grown so much."

The agony over how much children have grown physically often pales in comparison to the fears some fathers have that their kids have grown beyond recognition emotionally, that the gulf separating them from their children has widened over the course of the year.

EVEN THOUGH, ideally, divorced dads are able to live close to their children and participate in their lives on a frequent and regular schedule, in practice it often doesn't work out that way. In 94 percent of contested custody cases, mothers still receive full custody of children. Many times, even though a father would like to live near his children, his work forces him to separate himself from them.

It is still primarily fathers who wait for their children on hot summer days at the airport, fathers who have to learn the difficult skills of becoming a long-distance parent.

While the psychological studies of divorced dads are few and far between, the results suggest that the emotional strains on fathers who don't see their children often are severe. Divorced men in one study felt shut out, rootless and at loose ends two years after their divorces were final.

The biggest problem these men faced was the pain of mourning the loss of constant contact with their kids. All too often, they dealt with this hurt by cutting themselves off from their youngsters in order to avoid the regular torment of saying hello only to say goodbye again. Another study reported that fathers often feel overwhelmed by their absence from their children, and they feel devalued as parents.

Unfortunately, easing the pain by avoiding the kids isn't good for either a long-distance dad or his children. In a study of 128 divorced fathers, the ones who recovered from divorce fastest were those who were busy making their own households for the children to visit and working at arrangements so those visits could take place.

For these fathers, planning to include the kids in their lives again caused confidence and a real sense of accomplishment to nudge out the feelings of inadequacy, nervousness and sadness they initially felt.

BY THE SAME token, children whose fathers resist the temptation to run from pain by running from the relationship seem to do much better adjusting to divorce than do kids of disappearing dads. When a father remains a part of his children's lives, they seem to have a lower incidence of problems in school.

Recent research conducted by the National Institute on Drug Abuse indicates that kids who have contact with a warm and caring father as a role model are less likely to turn to drugs as adolescents than those with an absent or cold dad.

Interestingly enough, the better relationship children have with their father, the better relationship they will have with a stepfather should mom remarry.

But long-distance dads are human, and often they react to their perceived loss in unproductive ways. Some completely divorce themselves from the children, becoming parents only by virtue of biology and child-support payments.

Others dread summer visits and can think only of the tearful goodbyes at the airport in August. Although they may be physically present with their kids all summer long, they've emotionally distanced themselves to guard against the hurt of yet another parting.

Many long-distance dads, completely engulfed by feelings of helplessness, and fearing they have no influence on their children, use summer visits as threats to childsnatch.

SOME USE THE telephone to intrude into the children's primary household, calling every night at all hours of the night, demanding to speak to the kids and disrupting the other family's routines just to gain a sense of control and impact.

Neither running away nor hanging on too tightly works in the long run. Dads who choose to cut themselves off from their kids many times find the relationship has frayed too much to ever mend. Those who rely on intrusions, demands and threats to feel included from afar often put so much pressure on an ex-spouse that visitation is used as a tool to teach dad a lesson.

Even though a long-distance father's reasons for wanting to constantly make his presence felt may be good, the fallout from such attempts is often upsetting, according to psychologists Fredrick Capald and Barbara McRae, authors of "Stepfamilies: A Co-operative Responsiblity."

They write, "If absentee parents fail to become reconciled to their diminished role in their children's lives and fail to build new lives for themselves, they will often sabotage their ex-spouse's efforts to provide a stable family life for the children."

It isn't unusual for a long-distance parent to feel guilty about having moved from the physical proximity of the kids. Sometimes there's a temptation to ease that guilt by making summer visits a fun-filled cornucopia of expensive presents.

"When I was living 12 blocks from the kids, I rarely felt the impulse to try to buy their affection and make up to them for the divorce," claims Josh, who has been divorced for three years. "The minute I moved to another state, though, I'm a compulsive spender whenever they visit. I'm always feeling like I'm courting then when they're here, trying to make a huge, impressive splash in their minds so they won't forget me when they get on the plane at the end of a visit."

FLASHY PRESENTS and the lenient indulgences don't make up for real parenting: consistent and caring discipline and limit-setting. Even though kids may take advantage of the open- checkbook policy during visits, relationships based on presents, cash and no rules tend to be quite superficial in the end.

No one, especially a long-distance father, would deny that the here-today gone-tommorrow nature of being a parent from afar is difficult. But there are ways to arrive at a new structure, ones that ensure remaining a significant factor in the children's lives without being pushy or overly stand-offish.

Maintain regular contact. Even though you can't see the kids as often as you like, you can call occasionally and send pictures, notes and cards. Consistency is the key to building a solid relationship over the long haul. True, you may see the children only during the summer or over Christmas vacation, but over the years, your impact does add up.

Don't expect too much. Kids who are out playing aren't going to be willing to sit through a long and meaningful phone conversation with you.

But then, if Mom called them in for a long heart-to-heart talk with her, they'd be antsy, too. When you start feeling depressed about the lack of thank-you notes, calls and answers to your letters, remember your own childhood, and don't take their neglect personally.

Get used to having children around. Fathers who live a distance from their own kids often have split personalities. During most of the year, they're single people, and during the summer, they're single parents.

That traniston is easier to make if you occasionally "borrow" friends' children or attend Parents Without Partners functions when your children aren't with you. That way you'll avoid being completely out of touch with the younger set, and you'll have some idea of what to expect when the kids do visit.

When the kids visit, give them time to adjust. It's a rare adult who can hop off a plane, making a transition from one world to another instantly. They need time to calm down. Pushing for affection too hard and too fast can be an unpleasant put-off rather than a reassurance to kids.

Maintain consistency. Keep special toys at your house from year to year rather than sending them all back at the end of the summer. Let the children know they are a constant part of your life by displaying the children's artwork on the refrigerator, keeping their toothbrushes in the bathroom and giving them at least a corner with a bed and a drawer or two to call their own. The non-verbal message, "You are my child even when you aren't here," will come across more strongly than words to the same effect.

Don't pry! Sure, you'll be tempted. According to one study, a full 40 percent of divorced parents are concerned about their child's well-being at the "other" house.

Since you don't have frequent contact with the child and you can't drive by your ex's house or read the police blotter section of the newspaper for her name, you may become the grand inquisitor to either confirm or allay your fears. You'll be closer to your kids if you don't turn them into snitches.

Don't try to do too much at once. No matter how hard you try, you cannot condense one year of contact into one or two months. Life isn't a full-time amusement park, and kids don't expect that from parents unless they're led to expect it. Overscheduling will make the summer a rat race for you and the kids. Too many planned activities can be a way of avoiding the give and take of meaningful interactions.

Learn to set limits. Kids need structure and consistency. Letting them get away with murder because you only see them sporadically and want perfect visits isn't smart. Nobody gets along well with children all of the time.

Correcting them, guiding them and keeping them from getting too many cavities are all a part of parenting. Let things get too far out of hand and you'll wind up resenting the kids, while they regard you as an indulgent, if somewhat dotty, uncle, rather than a dad.

Learn to be a single dad. The only school for this is right there in the trenches. It's easy to find an agreeable lady to date and con into becoming a substitute summer mother when children visit. Resist relying on someone else to stand in for you during visits. Some joint activities are fine, but remember the children are there to visit you.

Finally, Be a father to your children! Ironically, one of the most common ways long-distance dads fail their children and themselves is by giving up the role of father. Granted, your divorce and your geographical distance from the kids means your father role needs to undergo some major modifications, but they don't include becoming a buddy, playmate, distant relative or stranger.

Artist wants science fiction hall of fame

BEAUMONT (AP) — If you've got a thing for The Thing, a crush on the Creature from the Black Lagoon, or if Darth Vader is your darling, then Beaumont could someday be the place for you.

Artist R.A. "Hap" Henricksen hopes to make this industrial city home of the National Hall of Fame of Science Fiction and Fantasy.

The museum would be a repository for science fiction literature, films and television shows with displays of science fiction art, movie sets and memorabilia, said Henricksen.

"Robots will conduct the tours," he said.

An 11-member board of directors soon will begin trying to raise $10 million to renovate a building in Beaumont to house the museum, Henricksen said.

"Science fiction and fantasy have millions of fans throughout the country," he said. "If Oklahoma City can have a National Cowboy Hall of Fame, we can have a hall of fame for science fiction and fantasy."

HARTFORD, Mich. (AP) — The Walker family is definitely a clan that runs together, especially when they hear fire alarms.

Walkers have been fighting fires in this southwest Michigan town since 1926, when Harold Walker Sr. joined the volunteer fire department. He served until 1970, including 21 years as chief.

The current chief is also a Walker — Harold Jr. — but the odds were stacked in favor of that happening, since nine of the 31 members of the force are Walkers.

"It was interesting and exciting work from the beginning," says the eldest Walker, 76, of the family tradition that has comprised a total of 140 years of service.

Hughes' ex-wife writes about their relationship

"The Beauty and the Billionaire," by Terry Moore; Pocket; $3.50; 342 pp

A Review

By DALE POLLOCK
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

Does anyone really want to read a book about Terry Moore, a so-so actress whose most notable movie credits include a co-starring role with an ape in "Mighty Joe Young"? Probably not.

But do people want to read about reclusive billionaire Howard Hughes, whose death in 1976 has not diminished the public's fascination with him? Absolutely.

That's why "The Beauty and the Billionaire" is being published, and that's what Ms. Moore delivers in a breathless retelling of her "secret" marriage to Hughes and their tempestuous relationship between 1948 and 1956.

Hughes was a fascinating character, childlike one moment and imperious the next, and Ms. Moore presents a human side of him that most biographies have downplayed. But their story together is told in such a chatty style that ultimately Hughes comes off as just another guy with weird ideas and habits.

When Ms. Moore first met Hughes, she was a 16-year-old ingenue, typecast as the girl next door in films such as "Son of Lassie." He was the owner of RKO Radio Pictures, already a multimillionaire, and consumed with his far-flung business activities.

It was hate at first sight, as Ms. Moore remembers it, memories that seem surprisingly detailed for a love-struck teen-ager (she later admits to secretly recording phone conversations she had with Hughes). But soon Hughes, already obsessed with secrecy, was hiring the Beverly Hills Hotel's Polo Lounge for private dinners with his young paramour.

Ms. Moore and Hughes' relationship could keep a psychoanalyst busy for years, as they alternated being parent and child with each other. But the Lolita-ish aspects of their time spent together becomes disquieting as Ms. Moore drones on about her and Hughes' undying love for each other.

The unanswered question, of course, is why no one else seemed to know about their marriage, which allegedly took place in 1949 aboard a private yacht off the Mexican coast. Such events are especially difficult to suppress in Hollywood, where gossip is everyone's second occupation.

Ms. Moore claims Hughes insisted on the secrecy because he feared it would damage her career, although she suspects it was so he could continue his affairs with actresses such as Jean Peters and Ava Gardner.

Even though Ms. Moore remarried three times, she says she always considered Hughes her "real" husband. Her financial settlement from the Hughes estate last year, reported to be close to $10 million, is offered as proof that her claim was valid.

But "The Beauty and the Billionaire" does little to aid Ms. Moore's case. If Hughes was emotionally cruel to her, as it seems he was, it still doesn't justify cashing in on a dead man's fame. Ms. Moore just becomes the latest in a long line of Hughes associates to trade on the reputation of an eccentric who is no longer around to defend himself.

Bootmaker turns artist after retiring

WICHITA FALLS (AP) — For most of his life, Norman Olsen, 71, has loved drawing and painting. The years he spent with Olsen-Stelzer boot company in Henrietta left him little time for the art he loved.

Olsen recently had a one man show, the product of a year of 40-hour weeks he's spent hard at work doing portraits, landscape and still-life pastels.

"I started working full time at art when I retired in 1977 but it took me three years to find Steve," Olsen says. Steve is Steve Grey, Olsen's teacher. Grey has established The Artist's Guild where Olsen does most of his work and where Grey does his own paintings and drawings as well as teaching.

Olsen, who grew up working at the boot company his Norwegian-immigrant father established, said, "The first thing I remember doing was in the first grade. It must have been a busy day for the poor teacher. She must have been exhausted," he recalls. Anyway, he did a drawing of a man chasing a butterfly "and the butterfly was bigger than the man," he chuckled.

He became more than casually interested in art when he was in his teens. Since that time he has studied intermittently whenever he had the time or could find an instructor. Drawing and watercolor are his other loves.

At the boot company, which ceased to exist a year ago, Olsen managed the office and advertising for the manufacturing company. Occasionally he did stitching designs for the uppers of the custom-made boots.

"I'm not too fond of boots. They used to have higher heels than they do now," he says. He does own one pair but doesn't wear them much.

Olsen considers drawing well the greatest asset he can have and, like any true artist, he is convinced he could do better. He studied Gustav Rehberger in Dallas and has been working with Grey for some time.

Author compares writing to herding

By GARRY ABRAMS
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

RIVERSIDE, Calif. — When he's making one of his frequent cross-country trips behind the wheel of a Cadillac, novelist Larry McMurtry is not indulging in the American dream of automotive affluence. No, McMurtry sees his compulsive continental crossings as a throwback to that quintessential activity of the Wild West — trail driving.

"I don't drive for any particular reason," he said. "I don't drive in order to improve my mind. I don't stop and visit museums in the various cities that I drive through. I don't seek out scenic places along the road. I have no interest in picturesque hamlets or anything like that. I just get on the interstate and I drive until the interstate stops and then I turn around and I go back. And I think that in essence what I'm doing is a form of trail driving. I'm driving the cars and trucks in front of me from one part of the country to another." McMurtry, whose novel "Terms of Endearment" was turned into this year's multiple Academy Award winner by the same name, also sees another aspect of his life as a metaphor for rounding up dogies.

He explained it this way:

"Every year, at least once and sometimes twice, I drive coast-to-coast, from New York to California...I have also been writing this long novel about trail driving, which is now about 2,000 pages long and may be another 500 or 600 before I tie it off. I had never made any connection between the fact that I drive a lot and the fact that I was writing a novel about trail driving."

But one day, like a bolt of lightning illuminating the plains, it occurred to McMurtry that his writing was analogous to his childhood in West Texas where he tried — and failed — to learn how to herd cows.

Writing, he said, is "the ultimate analogue to my herding tradition. I herd words, I herd them into sentences and then I herd them into paragraphs and then I herd these paragraphs into books."

McMurtry's comments about literary herdsmanship were made in an appearance at University of Califonria, Riverside. He talked at length about his career and some of the strategies he has adopted to prolong his career beyond middle age. His novels include "The Last Picture Show," which was also made into a successful movie, "All My Friends Are Going to Be Strangers," "Leaving Cheyenne," "Cadillac Jack" and "Horseman Pass By."

Lately, McMurtry told the audience of students and teachers, he has been thinking a lot about his craft, now that he has been practicing it for more than a quarter century.

At age 47, McMurtry said he is concerned about the atrophy of writing ability, a malady that seems to strike most novelists by late middle age, if not earlier.

"It's not natural to get better as a writer," he said. "It's natural to get worse. All writers do start getting worse at some point." Fascinated by the problem, he said he once made a chart tracking the careers of the great novelists. The results were discouraging because "a staggering percentage" had creative periods that lasted only about 12 years, though a few had a flare-up in later years.

McMurtry himself went through a "bad phase" when writing "all of a sudden stopped being enjoyable." He began to feel that "every sentence that came out of my typewriter was a boring sentence, probably was a sentence that I'd written somewhere else in the millions of words that I'd written. The paragraphs all looked familiar, the characters all seemed to be doing the same things that other characters had done in my books. I got suddenly very bored with my own writing. I went through a very bad phase. I didn't stop doing it but I was awfully bored with it as I was doing it."

Eventually, he deduced the cause. "What produces it," he said, "is that you have to do something unnatural if you're a writer, and that is to read the same writer every day of your life...Now there aren't many writers you would choose to read every single day of your life."

To emerge from this period, McMurtry said he adopted the tactic of working on two or three books at once, moving from one to another to keep up his interest.

The next crisis McMurtry sees looming is old age, since his studies have found few novelists who wrote well in their 70s and 80s. "I have sometimes thought that the only way to write really well in old age is to go crazy," he said. "You know, it works for poets and so it might work for novelists. In writing there's always the sense that you're bumping up against your own defense mechanisms...Sometimes it's necessary to break those down if you're going to improve as an artist."

During the course of his lecture and the question-and-answer session afterward, McMurtry talked about his childhood in West Texas, how he became a writer and public misperceptions about novelists.

"I think writing grows naturally out of reading and that it needs to be informed by vast reading before it has much chance of becoming permanently valuable," he said. "I grew up in a bookless place. I didn't have anything to read particularly. There were no books in my house. There were no books in my town. There were no books in my part of the country. Then I finally got to a college and discovered a library with 600,000 books. I never again experienced such complete ecstasy."

McMurtry first tried his hand at writing only after several years of omnivorous reading. He wrote his first two novels, "Horseman Pass By" and "Leaving Cheyenne" without making a commitment to writing, he said. But, "in the process of writing those first two books I began to discover how interesting it is to use one's imagination."

Frequently, the public doesn't realize that a novelist is not "a kind of free-lance journalist who's basically a diarist or a reporter of local events who essentially keeps notes on scandals of the neighborhood." The real attraction of writing, he said, "lies absolutely in making things up, in using your imagination. For instance, I'm not very interested in men. I write mainly about women. For me, it's far more interesting to write about a character like Aurora Greenway, a 50-year-old widow in 'Terms of Endearment,' — I've never been a 50-year-old widow — than it would be to write about a 47-year-old novelist, which I am.

Wright Brothers' story told in their own words

"Wind and Sand" by Lynanne Wescott and Paul Degen; Harry N. Abrams; 189 pages; $19.95.

A Review

By FRANK MACOMBER
Copley News Service

The story of the Wright Brothers and the first flying machine has been told and retold many times — but never like this, through the words and photographs of the two leading men in the drama of powered flight, Orville and Wilbur Wright.

"Wind and Sand" relates the stubborn efforts of the Wright Brothers to build and fly the first airplane, with excerpts from their diaries, letters and courtroom testimony in defense of their patents. And there are grainy yet fascinating photographs, taken by the brothers themselves, that trace the history of their efforts.

Their own account of their achievement begins in 1900 with Wilbur's admission: "I have been afflicted with the belief that flight is possible to man."

The book follows the brothers' painstaking research and experiments with an aura of suspense, as if we didn't already know the triumphant outcome. It relates why they chose to experiment at Kitty Hawk, a lonely beach on the Outer Banks of North Carolina.

"We came here for the wind and sand," observed Orville, "and we have got them."

About 90 black-and-white photographs, developed from glass plates by the brothers in their own darkroom, document their repeated experiments with gliders and eventually with their fully-motorized flying machines.

In a sense, the photos themselves tell the story of the danger and difficulty these two daring young men encountered in realizing their dream. They dramatize the 11 autumn "vacations" the brothers took from their Dayton, Ohio, bicycle shop to go to the barren, windswept Kitty Hawk beaches to pursue what most said was the unattainable.

And, at last, the most dramatic photograph of them all — the historic photo of the airborne Flyer, powered by a homemade motor, with Orville on his belly at the controls.

Ten years later, still experimenting with manned flight, Orville wrote:

"I would hardly think today of making my first flight in a strange machine in a 27-mile wind I look with amazement on our audacity."

The brightly written text of this book puts the Wright Brothers with that rare handful of American prodigies of their time — Edison, Bell, Ford and Morse.

Best-selling author has 'pretty tame' life

HONOLULU (AP) — At first glance, Fletcher Knebel's living room seems conventionally decorated in what designers call "tropical contemporary." But could that be a body behind the sofa? It at least is a pair of female legs in sheer black hose with a red garter and very high-heeled sandals, sprawled on the carpet.

"You like it?" Knebel inquires. "No, it's not conceptual art, it's just the bottom half of a mannequin that I put there. It's supposed to make you think of foul play. Life is so tame, and it adds a little excitement."

Knebel moved to Hawaii last summer, partly to get away from the East Coast glitz and partly for the weather, and lives in a house at the back of Hahaione Valley in suburban Hawaii Kai. For a best-selling author, that's pretty tame.

Twenty-two years ago, Knebel and co-author Charles W. Bailey II wrote "Seven Days in May," one of the first in a long procession of contemporary political novels written by a variety of authors about life in Washington, D.C., and skulduggery in high places. "Allen Drury's 'Advise and Consent' was the first," Knebel said. "We were soon after, and dozens of others have been written since.

"Now the participants are writing. (John) Ehrlichman has written three, and I think they're very good. (William) Buckley is in the spy-novel business and Margaret Truman has written a couple of mysteries.

"My publishers wanted me to stay with the Washington theme — they get a good thing going, and they won't quit. But I can't write about another president, another Capitol novel. My readership has fallen off as a result."

Since 1965, beginning with "Night of Camp David," Knebel has been writing alone. "Chuck and I had a harmonious relationship because neither of us knew anything about fiction writing so neither of us could afford to become a prima donna with the other. But a collaboration only works for so long.

"Our first book, 'No High Grounds,' was non-fiction and we just split it in half. For the fiction, I wrote the first draft and Chuck, who enjoys the finesse of writing, finished it. We remain good friends — he became editor of the Minneapolis Tribune and then quit last year to free-lance."

Knebel was a newsman before he became an author, starting with the Coatesville, Pa., Record in 1934, the year he graduated from Miami University of Ohio. In 1937 he moved to Washington as correspondent for the Cleveland Plain Dealer, and later for Look magazine, the Des Moines Register and the Minneapolis Tribune.

From 1951 to 1964 Knebel wrote a syndicated column, "Potomac Fever," and then with the making of a hit film from "Seven Days in May," he gave up the newspaper business to become a full-time novelist. A second novel, "Vanished," was made into a successful movie in 1970, and both occasionally show up on late-night TV.

He has written nine novels on his own, "and the only non-success was one about Kauai called 'Dave Sulkin Cares,'" he added.

Knebel's most recent book, "Poker Game," was published last year and since then the 72-year-old author has written travel articles for the New York Times and a piece for American Health about living with a colostomy that resulted from rectal cancer eight years ago. He attributes his recovery to an almost vegetarian diet and a regimen that includes yoga and meditation.

Pet goat munches $2,000 snack

CALEDONIA, Mich. (AP) — Kevin Wagner's goat prefers carats to carrots, and his wife has a $2,000 diamond ring as proof.

Wagner and his wife, Sue, were in the yard of their Caledonia home about a month ago, when he said their pet goat, Charlie Brown, coughed, and out came a diamond ring.

Since the goat couldn't answer when Mrs. Wagner asked it where it "got that thing," the Wagners had to speculate. Wagner assumed the animal ate the ring along with the grass in their yard, but neither the home's previous owners nor any neighbors claimed it.

Wagner found out from Stanley Schmitz, manager of a local jewelry store, that Charlie Brown's snack has an estimated value of $2,000.

Opening lead: Two of ♡.

It is easier to swindle a pair of experts than a pair of neophytes — good players tend to play and defend in a reliable, intelligent fashion. The hero of this magnificent con job was U.S. internationalist John Moran. The hand occurred in a tournament in Canadea, and his victims were two of that country's great players.

An innocent psychic opening bid by West led to a strange auction by Moran and his partner. Moran will be the first to admit that his slam contract was not exactly ironclad. He had a sure trump loser, so he could not afford to lose a club trick as well. When East covered the jack of hearts with the queen at trick one, that could be accomplished only if he could end play an opponent into breaking clubs for him.

The normal play in trumps would be to lead to the ace and back toward the queen. But even if the spades ere 3-3 and declarer quessed what to do, the defender who won the king of clubs would be able to xit safely with a trump and no end play would be posible. Under those desperate circumstances, Moran elcted to pursue a rather devious course.

After ruffing the opening heart lead, he led the queen of trumps from hand! Can you blame West for not covering when that guaranteed him a certain trumptrick? He got no second chance.

When the queen of trumps held, declarer cashed the king of diamonds and successfully finessed the 10. He discarded a diamond on the ace of hearts, and two clubs on the king of hearts and ace of diamonds. Next he cashed the ace of spades, ruffed dummy's last heart an exited with his last last trump, sluffing a club from the table.

West perforce won the trump and his last three cards were all clubs. His forced club return was run to the queen, and the ace of clus and the 13th diamond on the board scored the last two tricks.

Just another routine hand for Johnny!

Florida citizens paid to spend night in jail

BRADENTON, Fla. (AP) — Paying for an experience most people would pay to avoid, 93 upstanding citizens shelled out $5 each for the right to spend a night in the new, $7 million Manatee County Jail.

Manatee Sheriff Thomas Burton says the 93 — none of whom has been charged with any crime — spent Friday night in the slammer so they can inspect the seven-story, 220-cell downtown complex before it is opened to regular customers.

Burton says the $5 fee paid for breakfast on Saturday morning.

Many kitchen successes 'just happen'

Favorite recipes become million-dollar businesses

By PHYLLIS ZAUNER
King Features Syndicate

The stories of women who have turned the word "kitchen" into a synonym for "success" are heartwarming, an inspiration to every woman who has wondered how she could cook up a little extra cash.

These are entrepreneurs of the most basic American variety, innovative and hard-working. Few of them started out with any notion that they were embarking on any full-scale business endeavor. Their goal was simply to fill some need of the moment. The rest just happened.

Take 55-year-old Jodie Chapin of Lincolnshire, Ill. This year she'll sell more than a half-million dollars worth of a secret blend of dried herbs and spices that she originally made for her family's home use. When mixed with mayonnaise and sour cream it becomes a delicious dip called Dip-Idy-Dill.

"My family and friends loved it, but I had absolutely no thought of going any further with it than that," she recalls. "Then one Christmas, when I was asked to come up with a low-cost item for a charity craft show, I decided I'd put some in tiny jars and use that as my contribution." She sold 30 jars at $1 each.

As one show led to another, Mrs. Chapin gave up on glass jars and switched to more convenient paper packets, hand-lettered. "Pretty soon I was doing a show a week and working like crazy. I'd take along a big bowl of dip for tasting, and sometimes I'd sell 500 packets a day."

EACH CHRISTMAS found an increasing demand. But keeping up was sheer madness. "From October until mid-December I was working night and day, every day of the week, filling and folding those packets until I got tendonitis in my thumbs. While my family slept I watched TV reruns; I think I must have seen 'Land of the Giants' a hundred times.

"After four years of that, I could see it had gotten out of hand. I told my husband, either I get out of this business or it's got to grow."

And grow it did. Because many of the packets were bought as gifts, Mrs. Chapin began getting letters asking for refills. They'd say, "I got this from my sister and I can't find any store that sells it."

On the day she got her first unsolicited order from a store in Denver, she knew she was on her way and had to get out of the kitchen.

She moved to a converted barn in the country, contracted with a small factory to mix Dip-Idy-Dill under her supervision, and hired housewives part-time on their own flex-schedule (a practice she still follows).

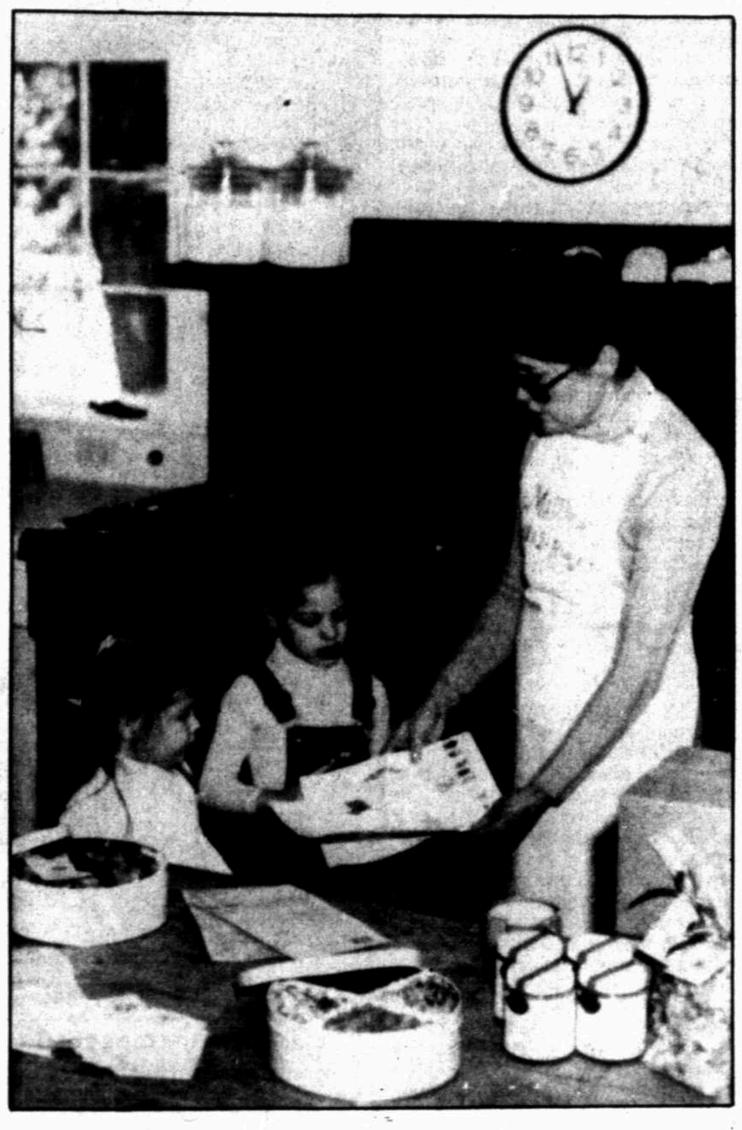
"I learned about business as I went along, going to trade shows, finding the best places for supplies and packaging. For one thing, I found out it's best to deal with small businesses. You get much more personal attention."

FIVE YEARS AGO Mrs. Chapin incorporated under the name Jodie's Kitchen and moved to larger quarters. Now Dip-Idy-Dill is sold across the country and she's added a new dry mix called Galloping Garlic.

Slightly overwhelmed by her own success, Mrs. Chapin confesses, "I never could have believed it would come to this. The product is terrific. It dragged me into business."

Saralee Singer in New York is another one to whom success came as an unexpected bonus. "I just wanted to earn $1,000 so my husband and I could take a vacation."

That was 1971. She baked a Christmas loaf an took it to the buyer at B. Altman department store, who told her it was wonderful and he would stock it. During that holiday season and three more, she spent three hectic months in the kitchen, turning out Christmas loaves like — well, like hotcakes.



Deanne and Blaine Matthews run their mail-order fruitcake business out of the kitchen of their Connecticut farmhouse. The cake is baked from a recipe handed down by Mrs. Matthews' grandmother.

By 1975 she decided to take her accumulated nest egg of $3,000 and open a bakery, which she named Betsy's Place after her daughter. Today that bakery does about $500,000 worth of business a year.

Another kitchen entrepreneur who baked her way to success is Deanna Matthews, who was a department store buyer in New York City when she and her husband decided to move to a Connecticut farmhouse so they'd be closer to skiing.

"I'D BEEN wanting to get into some kind of food business for years," she says, "and after some research I settled on baking fruit cakes and selling them by mail order." In honor of the historic, 170-year-old house they bought, she gave the business an old-timey name, Matthews 1812 House.

The move to Connecticut turned out to be a bonus, because in New York she would have had to build a second, separate kitchen in their apartment to conform to state law.

Mrs. Matthews uses her late grandmother's recipes for her cakes. Her list of ingredients — pecans, dates, raisins, apricots, honey, cream, butter — does not include candied fruits, which she refers to as "those little red and green things." Nor do rinds, peels or preservatives find their way into her 22-quart mixing bowl.

From the start, marketing efforts concentrated on small ads in a general-interest magazine and a gourmet magazine. A free sample and order form were mailed to anyone who wrote. Press releases were circulated with wild abandon, and responses were "extremely encouraging" right from the beginning.

Even so, a home-based food operation is not without problems. There were so many details, you just can't imagine," she explains. "Tracking down the right ribbon, the right wrapping to seal the cakes, the right sealing machine. Just deciding what size cakes to make was a very big decision."

Along the way to success there were a few setbacks, like the day Mrs. Matthews discovered the spices she was buying wholesale were much stronger than the grocery store variety. "We ate a lot of very spicy fruitcake for several weeks."

AT THE HEIGHT of the holiday season, she bakes over 200 pounds of cakes a day. Gross sales the first year were in excess of $25,000.

The next year, with publicity, sales quadrupled. Mrs. Matthews' husband, Blaine, started easing out of his computer business to help her. They geared up for even heavier sales volume, but were surprised to find it leveling off. Apparently something was wrong.

They decided that one product was not enough, they had to expand their line. Now they've added several new items, including a lemon-rum cake. With that, they've made a quick rebound.

Plainly, Matthews 1812 House has turned into a full-scale business. There's a ton of apricots in the basement, a hundred pounds of butter in the refrigerator, and each day there's a sweet, spicy smell of baking that drifts from the old farmhouse in Cornwall Bridge. Yet it's still managed by two people out of a country kitchen.

For Deanna and Blaine Matthews, there's a bonus: They're on hand to watch their two small children grow up.

More than any other home business, food preparation is watched over by government watchdogs. Since tough laws do exist in some places (and experts admit their fairness is up for question), it is essential for anyone contemplating such a business to check with health authorities before investing any large amount of money.

The Health Department of Boulder, Colo., almost put an end to a wholesale cookie business started by Audrey Miller.

FIVE YEARS AGO Mrs. Miller's 30-year marriage collapsed, and she realized she'd have to support herself. Since baking had always been a hobby, she decided that was the way to go.

She sold her engagement ring, cleaned out her savings account, borrowed from a friend, and used the money to invest in a few basics like electric mixers and pans. She held on to her part-time department-store job and spent the rest of her time baking and getting orders.

But working out of her home was against Boulder health codes, and about the same time she gave up her part-time job to devote all her energies to her growing business, she found she was out of business. It took her four months to find a place she could afford and that the health department would approve.

Unsettling as the situation was, she turned near-disaster into good fortune by expanding her line to include brownies, muffins and other toothsome sweets. "And I'm taking off!" she crowed.

According to Census Bureau figures for 1977 (the last year such a tabulation was made), 1,560 women in this country owned bakeries and another 800 owned related food businesses. But a spokesman for the Small Business Administration believes that tabulation grossly understates the enormous number of women who've started baking for profit in the ensuing five years.

Moreover, because of restrictive zoning and health-code laws, many women go "underground" — they bake and sell their products, but they don't talk about it. Some experts believe there are probably close to a million and a half of these uncounted bakers.

NOT ALL KITCHEN enterprises revolve around baking, of course. Becky Holbrook and Laraine Allen of Sausalito, Calif., unexpectedly found themselves owning a catering business when a friend said his company needed someone to cater a business dinner. "Becky, you're a good cook, why don't you do it?" he asked.

When she had recovered from the shock, she and a friend decided to tackle the project of feeding 250 people chateaubriand and mushroom souffle with a Caesar salad and a follow-up of bourbon cake. It went off with a flair that was unerringly professional. That was the beginning of Rainbow Catering.

They work out of their own kitchens, storing make-ahead foods in the oversize refrigerator Ms. Holbrook has in her basement. "If there's any cooking facility where we serve, we try to do most of the work there," Becky says, "on account of zoning laws. The area where we live doesn't permit commercial ventures."

So, what's the current outlook? It was a minor setback when they discovered they could have no Yellow Pages listing because they didn't have a business phone. But they've started a modest ad campaign in local newspapers and may go forward from there.

"We're having fun and making money!" says Ms. Holbrook. They each put in about 20 hours to assemble a big party, and they calculate their profit at about $20 an hour, each.

A food operation of a different sort is the floating deli originated by college student Janet Sacks the summer of 1980. She was looking for a summer job that would enable her to enjoy the outdoors. At the time she was living in a moorage on the Willamette River in Portland, Ore. She noticed there was no convenient place for boaters to buy sandwiches or snacks.

SO MS. SACKS AND a friend built a floating delicatessen which they launched on a Fourth of July weekend to capture the holiday trade. The success of the venture enabled her to recoup her $2,700 initial investment in the first eight weeks after starting her operation, working six days a week.

The following year Ms. Sacks took her business to the larger Columbia River. "We made even more money working weekends in the Columbia than we had all week on the Willamette," she proclaimed.

With ingenuity, a vast panoply of opportunities opens up to make money with food. Paula Fishman's hobby wasn't cooking; it was the tiny garden behind her Santa Monica, Calif., home where she raised herbs. It was her idea to mix herbs with purchased bottles of vinegar.

Because of a strict health department code, she had to give up making her herbed vinegar at home. Instead, she found a bottler who not only accepted her business but offered space for Ms. Fishman and her friends to gather, fill bottles with herbs, seal them and apply labels. In her first nine moths, she moved 3,000 bottles.

"With a business of your own," she notes, "You're doing it because you love it." She finds this a contrast to the out-of-home, nine-to-five job.

However, if all this sounds like paradise beamed down to earth, the food business does have certain hazards. One of them, in these litigious times, is the necessity of product liability insurance, which can be costly.

THIS FACT OF life was pointed out early to "Sugar" Cane Birdsall of Tucson, Ariz., when she tried to market her champagne sauces to a department store and was asked if she was insured.

As it turned out, however, the cost of the insurance was minimal when figured in to the success that was to follow.

Ms. Birdsall, who had invented her champagne sauce to serve at a New Year's Eve party, kept her product price high to maintain a certain air of prestigiousness. Gourmet food writers began to take notice, and when she won plaudits in national magazines and the "New York Times," sales zoomed until she had 200 accounts, some sending $3,000 orders at a time.

At first she did all the cooking herself; later she hired another woman to work a six-hour shift. Neighborhood kids did the labeling and packing. Finally she reached a point where she could concentrate on marketing.

For home food business newcomers, she has one piece of advice: "You've got to be aggressive."

Apparently Ms. Birdsall has found the right formula. Her company, Sugar's Kitchen, reported sales topping $100,00 in 1981, according to Stuart Feldstein, an editor for "Business Week."

In his book, "Home, Inc.," Feldstein adds that "a food processing business, operated fully or partly from the home, has unlimited earnings potential through wholesale and direct mail distribution."

Good news for the woman in the kitchen!

How Pepperidge Farm got its start

The year was 1937 — not the best of years for anyone, and a disaster for Margaret Rudkin and her husband. The stock market crash had wiped them out financially. And they had another nagging worry, a son with asthma.

When a doctor suggested that the boy's allergies might be alleviated by eating certain foods including old-fashioned, coarse whole wheat bread, Mrs. Rudkin headed for the kitchen and started baking bread. She even stone-ground the wheat herself.

The prescription worked. And the doctor, enormously impressed, asked if she'd make the same bread for his other patients. Word spread, and when she started getting orders from other doctors — even people who simply liked her bread — Mrs. Rudkin decided to go commercial. She named the bread after her home — Pepperidge Farm.

Margaret Rudkin was not the first woman to make money out of her kitchen — and by no means the last. Today, more than ever, women of culinary talent are turning into kitchen entrepreneurs. Some have made such a success of it they can no longer afford to stay in the kitchen.

Professor unearths 99 bottles

PHILO, Ill. (AP) — The 99 bottles of beer weren't on the wall and they weren't even full of beer — they were buried more than 40 years ago on a farm in, ahem, Champaign County, and contained only water.

Leif Thompson has unearthed more than 100 beer and whiskey bottles in the past week after a worker digging a water line discovered the cache.

"It would make sense that it was a stash — probably during Prohibition," said Thompson, an animal science professor at the University of Illinois. "What might have happened is he could have been selling whiskey, and he could have died."

Thompson, working in a 3-by-5-foot hole, has turned up gallon jugs, beer bottles, quart-size and medicine bottles, many in a rotting wooden box.

The thick glass bottles contained labels such as "Fecker Brew of Danville," "Terre Haute, Ind., Brewing Co." and "Hayner Whiskey Distillery of Troy, Ohio."

There were pieces of cork stuck in the necks of some bottles, he said, but only water inside. Thompson, who bought the farm three years ago, said it probably was a hiding place for the liquor, not the site of a still.

Chunk chocolate born

In 1847 the English firm of Fry & Sons combined chocolate liquor, cocoa butter and sugar, and produced eating chocolate. Daniel Peter, a Swiss, was the first to add milk to chocolate liquor, the paste-like substance that results after cocoa beans are ground.

Woman communicates beauty with camera

King Features Syndicate

The Traverse Bay region of northwestern Michigan is known far and wide as being one of this country's most beautiful areas. Thousands of people from the "Big City," such as Chicago or Detroit, migrate north every summer to inhale the Bay's scenery and to feed its swans.

However, like many of the people who are either natives of the region or who have been residents long enough to call it "home," Leona Witkowski took much of the natural beauty around her for granted.

"Being a native," she says, "I got so used to it, I wasn't seeing it." That is, she didn't see it until a long and painful ordeal eventually led her to a new view of life. Now, she sees "as if for the first time," and with a poet's touch, invites us to take a fresh look.

Unlike a poet, however, words are not her tools. In fact, she would need at least "a thousand words" to accomplish what she does at the flick of a finger. Leona Witkowski is a photographer, now beginning a professional career at the age of 43.

She began taking pictures as a hobby only 10 years ago out of a need to express a new-found joy, never expecting that this hobby would take on business-like proportions.

These flowers are some of the natural beauty Leona Witkowski has captured on camera.

Since then, her photographs have appeared in brochures, greeting cards, along the walls of doctors' offices and within the covers of "Changing Times" and "Traverse, the Magazine." This does not include the number of prints she has sold to private individuals simply by word-of-mouth.

Upon viewing success with her career and her life, it is hard to believe that before this last decade, she had rarely held a camera, Polaroid or otherwise. It is also hard to believe that her life was often far from joyful.

Twenty years ago, a previously undetected birth defect showed up during her first pregnancy. The top two vertebra in her back extended too far into her neck and began pinching nerves. Five years of pain followed, during which she was in and out of traction as she helped her husband, Edward, raise her two little girls, Melissa (who is now 20) and Kathleen (who is now 19). The latest addition to the family is Neil, their 4-year-old son.

Two attempts at neurosurgery were unsuccessful, and in 1968, the decision to perform a third surgery was made. This one was to be far more risky than the others and her doctor was reluctant to do it. "Your nerves and muscles do not come color-coded," he had warned her. But Ms. Witkowski said she would have done anything to be free of the pain. Life was becoming unbearable.

When she woke up from this final surgery, the pain was gone, but a toll had been taken. The nerves going to her hands had been damaged so that she no longer had any feeling or fine motor abilities from the tips of her fingers to the elbows. The gross motor nerves (those that grip) remained functional. This means that she can shake hands, but she "sometimes squeezes too hard."

THESE LIMITATIONS meant that she could no longer sew or bake, which were two of her favorite activities previous to surgery. Her hands could not perform the intricate maneuvers necessary for sewing, nor could they feel the weight of pies and cakes coming out of the oven.

But in spite of the major inconvenience this problem has caused her, Ms. Witkowski has never seen it as a "handicap." "Before the Lord closes a door, He opens a window," is one of her favorite sayings. Indeed, she has made her life proof of that.

Although her final surgery had taken care of the problem nerves, the muscles in her neck took five years to completely rebuild. This was a painful process, and she often wondered if she would ever be without pain.

During this time, however, she developed a friendship with a woman from her church, Sister Frances Stefanski, who urged her to take a look around her at all of nature's wonders. "She talked a lot about trees, how every tree has it own character...I really began to see the wonder of God's gifts to us," Ms. Witkowski said.

As she was "opening her eyes," the pain she had experienced for a good portion of her life was finally going away. Nature's beauty seemed to be a perfect symbol of the spiritual joy she was feeling, and she felt an overwhelming need to share this beauty with other people.

"I had visions of wanting to say it...with all of the spirit and desire to live I had inside...but I couldn't get it out in words...The pictures were my words."

MS. WITKOWSKI began reading all the photography books she could get her hands on, as well as taking mountains of pictures. She would choose the very best prints and make personal notecards out of them for her family and friends.

She calls this time a "spiraling point" for her, because the joy she saw others gain from these cards added to her own and caused her to want to do even more. This spiral contines to this day, for in spite of the term, "professional," her inspiration remains the same.

"If I have a handicap, I would have to thank the Lord for my handicap. It gave me photography, and life has been much fuller...beautiful."

Inspiration does not account for everything, however, and Ms. Witkowski would be the first to agree. Photography is a highly technical craft, one that takes a lot of study and practice to learn.

Like any craft, striving for perfection is a prerequisite to claiming professional standards. And Ms. Witkowski often goes to great lengths to meet her own self-imposed standards.

Sometimes those lengths are no greater than ⅛ of an inch, as with her work in macrophotography (close-up photography). Once, she shot frost on a windowpane ⅝ of an inch away — in the pitch dark. A deviation of ⅛ of an inch would have caused the picture to be out of focus.

"THAT'S CALLED not having much room to work with," she said. She took 72 slides in this case, only three of which suited her standards, but to her this was a victory. "If I'm going to sell my work, it's got to be good. It can't be halfway, or I just won't sell it."

Ms. Witkowski is one of those who believes good equipment does make a difference and chooses it carefully. She uses a variety of lenses, including a zoom, macro and telephoto along with the standard. A lens can make all the difference in the quality of a picture, she claims, and a manual camera body is essential for retaining artistic control.

As her attachments indicate, she has a special interest in macrophotography and enjoys sharing that part of nature people don't normally see. "Whole worlds reveal themselves when you begin to look close," she says. "I could take a small square of space and discover an endless number of things there."

Because of the injury to her hands, Witkowski has devised certain camera attachments to accommodate her specific needs. An aluminum rod extends from the camera's base to allow her to grip it, and a screw is attached to the shutter button to add height to it. The finger that pushes the button is sometimes uncoordinated and the screw keeps down the margin of error. Even then, error can happen, and it isn't always bad news.

"Sometimes I can't coordinate my finger to take the picture at exactly the right time. Sometimes it may be taken too soon or too late, and I'll think, 'Oh, darn!' But then I get the slide back and there's something there I hadn't seen. Like the picture of raindrops suspended on a spider web. I saw the web through the lens, but when I got the slide back, the droplets seemed suspended. That's why I say, 'the Lord has taken some of these pictures for me.' "

Photograpgher Leona Witkowski

Patience has always been one of a photographer's greatest requirements. Perhaps it is because Ms. Witkowski has had to learn to be patient with her hands ("It takes me so much longer to do the simplest of things," she says), that her capacity for waiting for just the right shot is so great.

ONCE, SHE stood on a stool absolutely still with camera poised for 45 minutes, waiting for a mother robin to return to her nest with food for her newborns. "I dared not move or she might not come," she said.

Always prepared for such new discoveries, she keeps her camera with her at all times. Upon returning from church one Sunday morning, she decided to drive to the homestead where she grew up a mile from her present home and walk the grounds. She discovered a large, hollow stump, and as she peered through it, realized that she could see the barn.

So, in skirt and nylons, Witkowski crawled into the log to get the picture she wanted. She says she must have been quite a picture, herself, in that log with only legs and high-heeled shoes sticking out one end.

"That (the farm) was my birthplace," she said. "That log had probably been there all along, but I never noticed it. So much of photography is luck...but you've got to be looking."

Spraberry boom on

Giant oil pay gets new life

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business-Oil Editor

When the boom went to bust in 1982, another boom was just getting underway in the Permian Basin — a boom now in bloom. It's the Spraberry — one more time!

Not since the fifties has this giant stratigraphic oil pay, which sprawls across much of Dawson, Martin, Midland, Reagan, Glasscock, Irion and Upton counties received as much attention as it has from late 1982 to the present. By the end of this year as many as 1,000 new wells may have been added to the Spraberry trend, in the latest round of activity. While investment capital for drilling ventures may have dried up for the romantic wildcats, there appears to be plenty still for low risk drilling.

SAY THE WORD "Spraberry' to some and it brings forth some not-so-polite labels. Dull...unromantic...long, long, long pay backs...marginally profitable are a few.

But despite the lack luster verbiage, "Spraberry" has again become a buzz word among investment bankers throughout the country, according to Don McClure, vice president, finance, for USENCO.

"Everybody investing in oil and gas ventures knows about the Spraberry. As an oil play, it is definitely in this year." says McClure.

There's no guessing the reason it has become popular once again either. It's economics.

"The Spraberry is purely an economic play," says Scott Sheffield, engineer for Parker & Parsley, "and one of the best in the U.S. right now." Some have compared the new boom in the Spraberry to the South Texas Austin Chalk which was a play predicated purely as economics — namely higher oil prices.

THE PRICE of oil has been a factor in the Spraberry "replay" — first because it was going up and finally because it stabilized and made economics predictable. Today operators playing the Spraberry admit that they are still betting on the future, and the fact that oil prices must go higher. When it does they want reserves, but if prices don't increase, it's still economical.

Another factor in the economics of the Spraberry is low drilling costs.

Dennis Johnson, vice president of drilling and production, for Henry Petroleum, Midland, estimates that its drilling and completion cost is 25 percent lower than it was in 1981 and 1982.

"That's a big factor," says Don McClure, "when the drilling costs go up the Spraberry boom will probably dissappear." It's a very simple formula that has produced this play: a flat oil price plus low drilling costs equal predictable economics."

ANOTHER ATTRACTION for the investor in the trend is a return on his money in the form of tax benefits. Investors are able to write off about 65 percent of their investments the first year and the remainder over a five year period — all played against a low risk venture.

Some operators predict that drilling and completion costs will eventually start to go up (probably 10 percent per year) and that the hike may precipitate a fall out of operators.

"Only those with a good track record will continue when economics become less favorable. A lot of people play the trend, but not everyone does it well," said Sheffield. He added that the Spraberry had never been uneconomical for Parker & Parsley.

ONE GROUP that it has been uneconomical for is the major oil companies. Major oil companies discovered and helped in some of the initial development of the trend, but they quickly abandoned it to the independents.

"It was too costly for them," said one operator, "too much overhead."

Said a second operator: "They (majors) want to 'Cadillac' every hole. You can't do that in the trend."

Drilling costs vary throughout the trend. In Reagan County a completed Spraberry well runs from $350,000 to $425,000. In Upton it will be about $400,000-$450,000 and $450,000 or more in Martin and Midland, according to a survey of major operators in the trend who allow for a higher and lower exceptions to the average.

The most successful exploration theory used in the trend appears to be volume drilling.

Said Bill Owens, Adobe Oil & Gas Corp., vice president of production: "It was the theory of John L. Cox and Joe Pevehouse that if you drilled 100 Spraberry wells you would probably make money. Drill four or five and you will probably lose money. I think that theory has been pretty much proven."

As extensive as Adobe Oil & Gas efforts are today , they still play the Spraberry, drilling about 20-25 wells per year, while operating another 300. Adobe also has a gas plant in the trend which tends to keep it interested.

Success ratios in the trend are phenomenal.

PARKER & PARSLEY drilled 100 wells in the trend last year and came up with no dry holes. The firm described the program as "very successful."

Henry Petroleum reports a success ratio of over 95 percent in the trend.

USENCO reports 100 percent success with no dry holes in 29 wells.

Adobe has an almost 100 percent success rate, since most of its prospects are now more or less infill wells, reducing spacing from 160-acres to 80-acres.

Woolen mill keeps weaving despite old equipment

ELDORADO, Texas (AP) — The machines are older than most of the people operating them, but that never has stopped the Eldorado Woolens Mill from continuing what it began more than four decades ago — weaving unique fabrics from wool and mohair solely produced on Texas ranches.

"Our equipment may not be near as efficient as most mills nowadays, but it's dependable," said Dennis Lampman, general manager of the small textile mill that sits on a dusty side street of this tiny West Texas town in the heart of the state's wool country.

"In many ways, the old machines help us - they enable us to produce some of the most unique fabric in the country," Lampman said.

The mill, which opened in Eldorado in 1940, is best known for its "heather-effect" upholstery fabric, which Lampman said could not be created without the old machines, some of which date back to the late 1800s.

"The old machines — they dye everything different shades. So, we have a unique, subtle shading to our fabrics that can't be matched," he said. "It's why we have some of the same clients we had when we opened."

The mill weaves wool blankets and sells primarily to furniture manufacturers on the East Coast, said Lampman, 26.

And although the upholstery fabric business "isn't doing as well as it used to," between 600 and 700 yards of material are produced weekly by Eldorado Woolens, he said.

"We could produce more if we had to, but it's kind of sad — people just don't know the value of wool any more and the market is not as good as it once was," said Lampman, who has worked in textile mills for about 10 years.

The mill buys wool and mohair from area ranches.

Permian Basin rig count drops nine rigs

After climbing for four straight weeks, the Permian Basin took a nose dive this week as it dropped nine rigs. The U.S. rig count, however, edged up slightly after several weeks of decline.

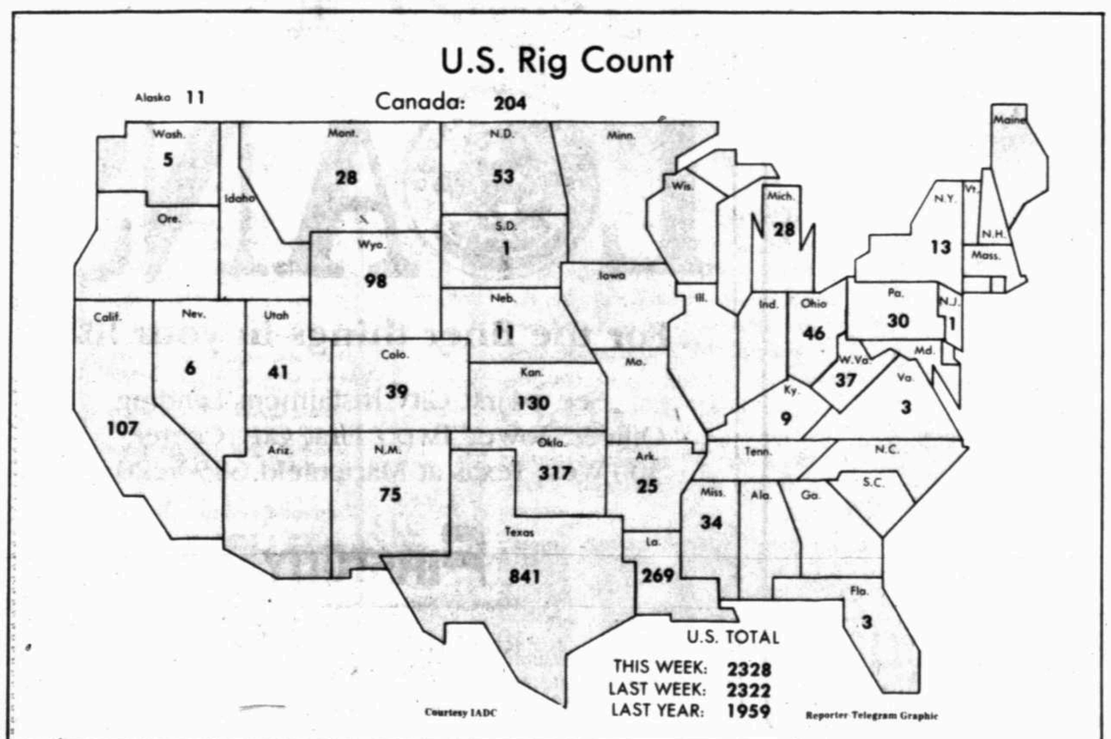
This weeks national count stood at 2,328, up six over last week, and 369 over last years bleak showing of 1,959 for the same period.

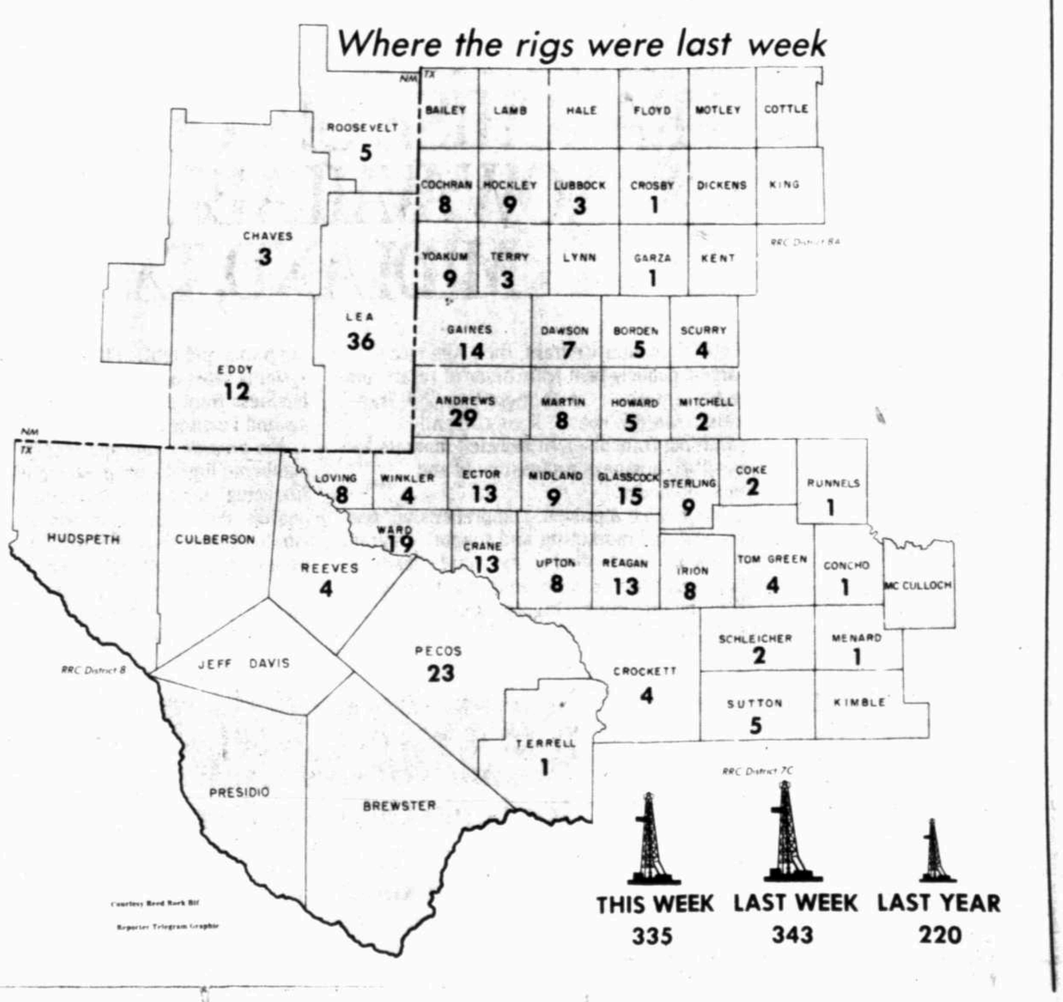
Oklahoma, Louisiana and the Rocky Mountain states along with Kansas all posted strong showings this week.

In the Permian Basin, the count stood at 335 rigs working, dropping from a strong showing last week of 343. While nine rigs were lost this week the showing was still 115 rigs better than the same reporting period in 1983.

Counties in the Permian Basin which registered double digit rig counts were: Lea, Eddy, Gaines, Andrews, Ector, Glasscock, Ward, Crane, Reagan and Pecos.

Lea County, New Mexico with 36 working rigs still leads the pack, but Andrews with 29 rigs is pushing hard to be the second county in the thirty bracket.





Woman communicates beauty with camera

King Features Syndicate

These flowers are some of the natural beauty Leona Witkowski has captured on camera.

The Traverse Bay region of northwestern Michigan is known far and wide as being one of this country's most beautiful areas. Thousands of people from the "Big City," such as Chicago or Detroit, migrate north every summer to inhale the Bay's scenery and to feed its swans.

However, like many of the people who are either natives of the region or who have been residents long enough to call it "home," Leona Witkowski took much of the natural beauty around her for granted.

"Being a native," she says, "I got so used to it, I wasn't seeing it." That is, she didn't see it until a long and painful ordeal eventually led her to a new view of life. Now, she sees "as if for the first time," and with a poet's touch, invites us to take a fresh look.

Unlike a poet, however, words are not her tools. In fact, she would need at least "a thousand words" to accomplish what she does at the flick of a finger. Leona Witkowski is a photographer, now beginning a professional career at the age of 43.

She began taking pictures as a hobby only 10 years ago out of a need to express a new-found joy, never expecting that this hobby would take on business-like proportions.

Since then, her photographs have appeared in brochures, greeting cards, along the walls of doctors' offices and within the covers of "Changing Times" and "Traverse, the Magazine." This does not include the number of prints she has sold to private individuals simply by word-of-mouth.

Upon viewing success with her career and her life, it is hard to believe that before this last decade, she had rarely held a camera, Polaroid or otherwise. It is also hard to believe that her life was often far from joyful.

Twenty years ago, a previously undetected birth defect showed up during her first pregnancy. The top two vertebra in her back extended too far into her neck and began pinching nerves. Five years of pain followed, during which she was in and out of traction as she helped her husband, Edward, raise her two little girls, Melissa (who is now 20) and Kathleen (who is now 19). The latest addition to the family is Neil, their 4-year-old son.

Two attempts at neurosurgery were unsuccessful, and in 1968, the decision to perform a third surgery was made. This one was to be far more risky than the others and her doctor was reluctant to do it. "Your nerves and muscles do not come color-coded," he had warned her. But Ms. Witkowski said she would have done anything to be free of the pain. Life was becoming unbearable.

When she woke up from this final surgery, the pain was gone, but a toll had been taken. The nerves going to her hands had been damaged so that she no longer had any feeling or fine motor abilities from the tips of her fingers to the elbows. The gross motor nerves (those that grip) remained functional. This means that she can shake hands, but she "sometimes squeezes too hard."

THESE LIMITATIONS meant that she could no longer sew or bake, which were two of her favorite activities previous to surgery. Her hands could not perform the intricate maneuvers necessary for sewing, nor could they feel the weight of pies and cakes coming out of the oven.

But in spite of the major inconvenience this problem has caused her, Ms. Witkowski has never seen it as a "handicap." "Before the Lord closes a door, He opens a window," is one of her favorite sayings. Indeed, she has made her life proof of that.

Although her final surgery had taken care of the problem nerves, the muscles in her neck took five years to completely rebuild. This was a painful process, and she often wondered if she would ever be without pain.

During this time, however, she developed a friendship with a woman from her church, Sister Frances Stefanski, who urged her to take a look around her at all of nature's wonders. "She talked a lot about trees, how every tree has it own character...I really began to see the wonder of God's gifts to us," Ms. Witkowski said.

As she was "opening her eyes," the pain she had experienced for a good portion of her life was finally going away. Nature's beauty seemed to be a perfect symbol of the spiritual joy she was feeling, and she felt an overwhelming need to share this beauty with other people.

"I had visions of wanting to say it...with all of the spirit and desire to live I had inside...but I couldn't get it out in words...The pictures were my words."

MS. WITKOWSKI began reading all the photography books she could get her hands on, as well as taking mountains of pictures. She would choose the very best prints and make personal notecards out of them for her family and friends.

She calls this time a "spiraling point" for her, because the joy she saw others gain from these cards added to her own and caused her to want to do even more. This spiral contines to this day, for in spite of the term, "professional," her inspiration remains the same.

"If I have a handicap, I would have to thank the Lord for my handicap. It gave me photography, and life has been much fuller...beautiful."

Inspiration does not account for everything, however, and Ms. Witkowski would be the first to agree. Photography is a highly technical craft, one that takes a lot of study and practice to learn.

Like any craft, striving for perfection is a prerequisite to claiming professional standards. And Ms. Witkowski often goes to great lengths to meet her own self-imposed standards.

Sometimes those lengths are no greater than ⅛ of an inch, as with her work in macrophotography (close-up photography). Once, she shot frost on a windowpane ⅝ of an inch away — in the pitch dark. A deviation of ⅛ of an inch would have caused the picture to be out of focus.

"THAT'S CALLED not having much room to work with," she said. She took 72 slides in this case, only three of which suited her standards, but to her this was a victory. "If I'm going to sell my work, it's got to be good. It can't be halfway, or I just won't sell it."

Ms. Witkowski is one of those who believes good equipment does make a difference and chooses it carefully. She uses a variety of lenses, including a zoom, macro and telephoto along with the standard. A lens can make all the difference in the quality of a picture, she claims, and a manual camera body is essential for retaining artistic control.

As her attachments indicate, she has a special interest in macrophotography and enjoys sharing that part of nature people don't normally see. "Whole worlds reveal themselves when you begin to look close," she says. "I could take a small square of space and discover an endless number of things there."

Because of the injury to her hands, Witkowski has devised certain camera attachments to accommodate her specific needs. An aluminum rod extends from the camera's base to allow her to grip it, and a screw is attached to the shutter button to add height to it. The finger that pushes the button is sometimes uncoordinated and the screw keeps down the margin of error. Even then, error can happen, and it isn't always bad news.

"Sometimes I can't coordinate my finger to take the picture at exactly the right time. Sometimes it may be taken too soon or too late, and I'll think, 'Oh, darn!' But then I get the slide back and there's something there I hadn't seen. Like the picture of raindrops suspended on a spider web. I saw the web through the lens, but when I got the slide back, the droplets seemed suspended. That's why I say, 'the Lord has taken some of these pictures for me.' "

Photograpgher Leona Witkowski

Patience has always been one of a photographer's greatest requirements. Perhaps it is because Ms. Witkowski has had to learn to be patient with her hands ("It takes me so much longer to do the simplest of things," she says), that her capacity for waiting for just the right shot is so great.

ONCE, SHE stood on a stool absolutely still with camera poised for 45 minutes, waiting for a mother robin to return to her nest with food for her newborns. "I dared not move or she might not come," she said.

Always prepared for such new discoveries, she keeps her camera with her at all times. Upon returning from church one Sunday morning, she decided to drive to the homestead where she grew up a mile from her present home and walk the grounds. She discovered a large, hollow stump, and as she peered through it, realized that she could see the barn.

So, in skirt and nylons, Witkowski crawled into the log to get the picture she wanted. She says she must have been quite a picture, herself, in that log with only legs and high-heeled shoes sticking out one end.

"That (the farm) was my birthplace," she said. "That log had probably been there all along, but I never noticed it. So much of photography is luck...but you've got to be looking."

Henry Petroleum reports a success ratio of over 95 percent in the trend.

USENCO reports 100 percent success with no dry holes in 29 wells.

Woolen mill keeps weaving despite old equipment

ELDORADO, Texas (AP) — The machines are older than most of the people operating them, but that never has stopped the Eldorado Woolens Mill from continuing what it began more than four decades ago — weaving unique fabrics from wool and mohair solely produced on Texas ranches.

"Our equipment may not be near as efficient as most mills nowadays, but it's dependable," said Dennis Lampman, general manager of the small textile mill that sits on a dusty side street of this tiny West Texas town in the heart of the state's wool country.

"In many ways, the old machines help us - they enable us to produce some of the most unique fabric in the country," Lampman said.

The mill, which opened in Eldorado in 1940, is best known for its "heather-effect" upholstery fabric, which Lampman said could not be created without the old machines, some of which date back to the late 1800s.

"The old machines — they dye everything different shades. So, we have a unique, subtle shading to our fabrics that can't be matched," he said. "It's why we have some of the same clients we had when we opened."

The mill weaves wool blankets and sells primarily to furniture manufacturers on the East Coast, said Lampman, 26.

And although the upholstery fabric business "isn't doing as well as it used to," between 600 and 700 yards of material are produced weekly by Eldorado Woolens, he said.

"We could produce more if we had to, but it's kind of sad — people just don't know the value of wool any more and the market is not as good as it once was," said Lampman, who has worked in textile mills for about 10 years.

The mill buys wool and mohair from area ranches.

Permian Basin rig count drops nine rigs

After climbing for four straight weeks, the Permian Basin took a nose dive this week as it dropped nine rigs. The U.S. rig count, however, edged up slightly after several weeks of decline.

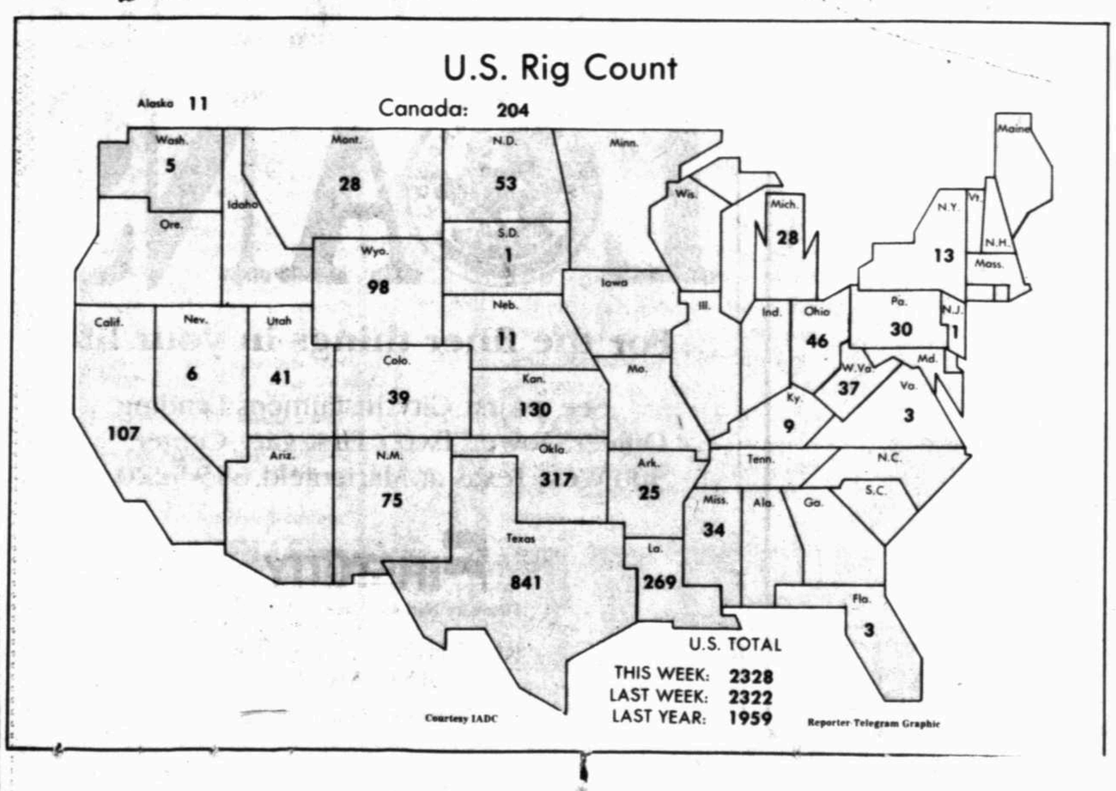
This weeks national count stood at 2,328, up six over last week, and 369 over last years bleak showing of 1,959 for the same period.

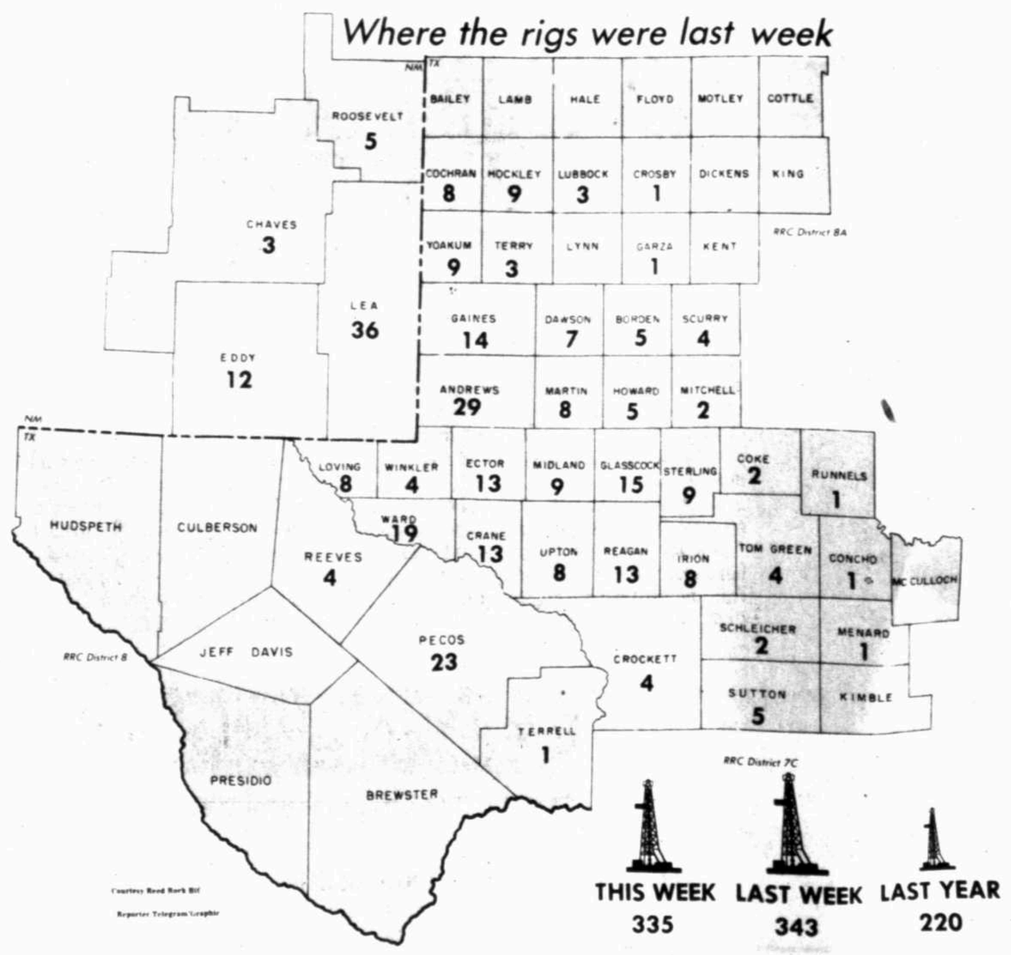
Oklahoma, Louisiana and the Rocky Mountain states along with Kansas all posted strong showings this week.

In the Permian Basin, the count stood at 335 rigs working, dropping from a strong showing last week of 343. While nine rigs were lost this week the showing was still 115 rigs better than the same reporting period in 1983.

Counties in the Permian Basin which registered double digit rig counts were: Lea, Eddy, Gaines, Andrews, Ector, Glasscock, Ward, Crane, Reagan and Pecos.

Lea County, New Mexico with 36 working rigs still leads the pack, but Andrews with 29 rigs is pushing hard to be the second county in the thirty bracket.





BUSINESS BRIEFS

DALLAS — OGRE, the proprietary Oil and Gas Reserve Evaluation software system developed by David P. Cook & Associates, Inc., is now available for microcomputers such as the IBM-PC, the firm reports. The announcement came during the Second World Oil and Gas Show and Conference recently in Dallas.

OGRE software is used by oil and gas companies, engineering and consulting firms, commercial banking and investment institutions and other energy-oriented clients to model and analyze the profitability of petroleum properties.

DFW Airport now completely self-sustaining

DALLAS/FORT WORTH AIRPORT — The Dallas/Fort Worth Airport has announced to the cities of Dallas and Fort Worth that no city tax funds will be required for the next fiscal year.

"As we mark the tenth anniversary of the airport, it is gratifying to once again notify the cities that no tax funds will be required for the next fiscal year and that the airport is completely self-sustaining," said DFW executive director Ernest E. Dean. "The airport was designed as a user-pay facility in which airport users pay all of the costs for its operation and development."

The board also approved the sale of $13,400,000 in Special Facility Revenue Bonds to pay the principal and interest on Braniff Special Facility Bonds.

Purchase of scrap iron, steel increased

WASHINGTON — Domestic steel mills and foundries purchased 10.4 million net tons of iron and steel scrap in the first quarter of 1984, 37 percent more than in the corresponding 1983 period, according to U.S. Bureau of Mines data.

Steven M. Kaplan, president of the Institute of Scrap Iron and Steel, said that March scrap purchases were 3.7 million tons, the highest monthly demand in 33 months. After the severe depression the industry has experienced, he said, we are realizing a steady increase in the demand for our products and the industry is regaining its strength in the domestic markets.

The March tonnage was three percent ahead of the 3.6 million tons purchased in February and 28 percent above the 2.9 million tons recorded in March 1983, one of the highest demand months last year.

Disney to buy greeting card firm

BURBANK, Calif. (AP) — Walt Disney Productions, trying to head off a takeover bid by financier Saul Steinberg, plans to purchase Gibson Greeting Inc., parent of the nation's third-largest greeting card company, in a stock swap worth up to $343 million.

Disney also announced that it had closed its $200 million stock-swap purchase of Florida-based Arvida Corp., which Steinberg unsuccessfully sought to block in federal court.

Both moves were designed to dilute the Disney holdings of Steinberg's New York-based Reliance Financial Services Corp.

Plea from domestic shoe industry rejected

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. International Trade Commission has rejected a plea from the domestic shoe industry for protection from cheaper imports because it found that shoe imports had not seriously hurt American workers or businessmen.

The commission rejected the shoe import complaint on a 5-0 vote Wednesday.

Firm announces multi-zone gas discovery

ARDMORE, Okla. — Noble Affiliates Inc. has announced a multi-zone gas discovery on Federal leases Eugene Island 247 N/2, 247 S/2, 248 and 249 offshore Louisiana. The discovery well, on leases containing a total of 15,000 contiguous acres in which Noble owns a 50 percent interest, tested 8.1 million cubic feef per day from two zones.

The OCS-G 5506 No. 1 (Eugene Island 248) was drilled to 10,146 feet and two gas zones were tested. The lower zone flowed from perforations between 9,036 and 9,048 feet at a daily rate of 3.4 million cubic feet of gas through a 14/64 inch choke with flowing tubing pressure of 3,416 pounds per square inch.

The upper zone flowed from perforations between 7,083 and 7,123 feet at a daily rate of 4.7 million cubic feet of gas through a 18/64 inch choke with a flowing tubing pressure of 2,555 pounds per square inch.

Three additional wells have been drilled on Eugene Island 248 and logs indicate gas pay ranging from 40 to 95 feet thick.

Three wells have been drilled on Eugene Island 247 S/2, which is adjacent to 248, and logs indicate gas pay ranging from 47 to 51 feet thick.

A four-pile, six-slot drilling and production platform and two satellite structures have been installed, the company said. Exploration and development will continue throughout 1984.

Eugene Island 247 S/2 and 248 were acquired in 1982 and 1983. The two offsetting leases, Eugene Island 247 N/2, containing 2,500 acres, and Eugene Island 249, containing 5,000 acres, were acquired in May 1984 Federal lease sale for $3,239,000 and $914,000, respectively.

Noble's exploration and production subsidiary, Samedan Oil Corporation, is operator and owns a 50 percent working interest in the leases. New England Energy Inc., a wholly owned subsidiary of The New England Electric System, owns the remining 50 percent.

Noble Affiliates Inc., is an independent energy company with exploration and production operations throughout major basins in the United States, including the Gulf of Mexico and offshore California, as well as Tunisia and Indonesia. It also operates a contract drilling fleet of 50 land and marine units.

With his eyes full of mischief, Patrick Whitfill of Silverton, Texas, waits to give his Dad a gift from Diamontrigue.

Diamontrigue has unique gifts for Father's Day

"Moms and Dads are different. You can hug Mom and thank her and give her gifts, and she loves it! Dads are hard to thank. They get embarrassed. When you try to thank them for all of the times they've played with you, read to you, bought you things you wanted and didn't need at all, they give you a quick hug and a playful shove. The most wonderful thing about Dad is, they're there when you need them, when everything goes wrong. That's what I want to thank Dad for."

The sentiments of a young man touches us all. To express your love for that important man in your life, the selection you are looking for is at Diamontrigue, University and Parkway in Odessa. Diamontrigue's Gentlemen's Collection of rings is extensive and carefully selected. You will not find the ordinary at Diamntrigue; the latest designs and timeless clasics, all in heavy 14K gold, are featured in the collection. May we suggest you bring your Dad by and make the selecton a famly affair that will be long remembered.

Many fathers wear ties everyday, and all fathers wear ties sometimes. In the West Texas wind a tie-tack is a necessity. A tie-tack set with the Diamontrigue gemstone can be worn with every color. In the Diamontrigue selecton, see the new trillion cut that makes a difinative fashion statement; along with the marquise, and the classic brilliant cut.

Fourteen karat gold overlay chains up-date the look of a standard sport shirt and are remarkably inexpensive. Take a look at these when you are shopping at the Diamontrigue shop.

At Diamontrigue all major credit cards are welcomed—Visa, Mastercard. American Express, Diner's Club and Carte Blanche are graciously accepted.

The Diamontrigue man-made diamond simulant is permanently guaranteed (in writing) to retain its clarity and brilliance forever. Most places that sell man-made gems sell what is known as the "finest". That is where Diamontrigue begins. Gemologists carefully select the gemstones for the Diamontrigue shops. These gemstones are hand-cut by diamond cutters, polished by experts; the look of extra-fine diamonds at a fraction of the cost of nature's own. An exquisite selection from Diamontrigue is a joy forever and can be worn without anxiety. Come by and see for yourself.

The Midland Market is a designer's dream

Is there a designer in you just waiting to get out? Would you love to redesign the interior of your home in your own tastes? If your answer to either was yes, then you have probably looked around to see if you could find the furniture and accessories that you need to complete the decor. As you looked, you probably became disheartened because you couldn't find what you wanted in Midland. Well, you can now turn your disappointment into joy as you learn more about the Midland Market.

The Midland Market has been incorporated as part of Midland Interiors. The difference is that with the Midland Market you are the designer.

The Midland Market was opened to serve the diversified range of wage earners in Midland. It is for those who would like to do the designing themselves and for people who can not afford a full scale design to be prepared for them.

The best aspect of The Midland Market is that they can special order almost any item you would like, whether it is furniture, accessories, tile, bathroom fixtures and even ceilings. They then turn around and offer it to you for 20% less than the actual suggested retail price.

By discounting the furnishings, The Midland Market allows you to purchase more for your money.

So that the newest styles are available to Midlanders, Shari and Gwen (the owners) will be making frequent trips to the Dallas Market. This way they will keep up with the trends as they occur and can find out what is available. They will also make special shopping trips to find exactly what you are looking for.

The Midland Market is very proud of the fact that they can bring to MIdland all of the resources available to designers and offer them at a discount to the public.

If you know what it is that you want design-wise but are having some trouble putting it together, Gwen and Shari are available in the store, for a minimal fee, to help you with your decorating questions.This help can range from matching fabric swatches and wallpaper to deciding which accent pieces will add a finished, polished look.

Whether you are planning to design your own interior out of need or desire, The Midland Market can bring the Dallas Market to you at a discounted price. They are professionals who will treat you like a professional.

The Midland Market is open 10 a.m. to 6 p.m., Monday through Saturday. They are located in San Miguel Square on the corner of Midkiff and Wadley.

Remember, inexpensive does not have to mean cheap, so why not take advantage of the discounted prices offered at The Midland Market.

Shari (L) and Gwen are proud to announce the opening of The Midland Market. It is located in San Miguel Square.

Midland Stained Glass can brighten your life

Midland Stained Glass Center, located at 4313-A West Ilinois, can help you turn your home into a fantasy of stained glass creations. The imagination sets the limit as to how far you can go in creating new and different pieces for your home.

Stained glass is a wonderful medium to work with when remodeling or redecorating your home. Many homes have atriums which are a perfect setting for a stained glass hanging. Mary Richardson, manager of Midland Stained Glass Center, recommends hangings for atriums instead of redoing the entire glass panel, for several reasons. One reason is that it is easier to change the hangings if you redo the decor or if you just want a new look. A hanging is also convenient if you move because you can take it with you.

Besides hangings, stained glass can be used for a multitude of decorating items such as dresser sets, ring boxes, stationary boxes, night lights, tissue box covers, coffee table tops, end tables, game table tops, lamp shades and mirrors.

Skylights and doors are also places where stained glass makes a beautiful differenceand they now carry many diferent types of doors. The have mahogany, ash, oak and pine. These doors can also be used as replacement doors.

Midland Stained Glass Center can create beautiful stained glass or etched designs for you but, they can also help you make them yourself. They offer a variety of classes that will begin in the near future. There will be a beginners class which will cover the basics of working with stained glass. For the more advanced artist, a class in Tiffany lamp shades will be offered in late April. How to work with beveled glass is the subject of another class. Construction of boxes such as ring and stationary boxes will be featured in still another class. The last subject covered in the classes is etching on glass.

If you are interested in participating in any of these classes call Mary Richardson at 697-0322 to sign up today. The classes are on a first come, first served basis.

Midland Stained Glass will also be holding a stained glass competion in the near future so you hobbyist/artists start thinking about what you would like to enter.

For the experienced artist who works with stained glass or etching at home, Midland Stained Glass Center carries a colored glass in a variety of colors and a full line of accessories.

To compliment your stained glass creations, they also carry silk flowers, vines and trees.

Whether you are a beginner or an advanced artist/hobbiest, Midland Staind Glass Center is the place to go. They are located at 4313-A West Illinois. Stop in and see what they have to offer soon.

If you need more information concerning custom work or the classes being offered, call Mary Richardson at 697-0322.

Board continuing efforts to simplify worker's compensation policy

AUSTIN — State Board of Insurance is continuing efforts to implement use of a "simplified" worker's compensation policy in Texas, with a July 1 date being considered.

SBI heard recommendations from insurance industry groups and business organizations on May 31, and recessed its hearing on the policy until Thursday June 14.

Board members instructed their staff to prepare an order relating to the recommendations, including some language dealing with intent, for consideration Thursday.

National Council on Compensation Insurance has recommended use of the simplified policy as the uniform policy for Texas effective July 1.

An advisory committe to SBI held four meetings and received comments from various grops, with those recommendations—including suggestions for revisions—going to the board.

NCCI has not indicated any objection to the modifications, which are to cover provision in Texas law which otherwise could cause problems with the proposed new policy, SBI reports.

Howard Rose, representing the Building Branch, Associated General Contractors of Texas, urged that SBI preserve the existing law that employers are not required to provide coverage for employees of a sub-contractor.

Banking Commissioner James L. Sexton says he is not concerned by some recent criticism by Federal regulators regarding state regulation of banks—and does not view the number of recent bank failures in Texas as indicating any need for change in Texas' regulartory framework.

Texas, historically, has had more bank failures than other states "for the simple reason that Texas has more banks than most other states" —since branch banking is prohibited.

"With the unit banking system," Sexton says, "you are more exposed to bank failures than states with branch banking."

And recently, Sexton says, Texas has experienced "some very uncharacteristic problems," due to problems with energy-related lending and agricultural loans.

But Sexton says the Department of Banking has "some pretty effective regulatory tools," although he hopes to ask the Legislature for "some flexibility in the examination schedule" and "some additional authority over holding companies."

•••

Texas Credit Union Commission has approved regulations aimed at assuring parity of State and Federal credit unions, along with regulations on issuance of securities, mail balloting and standardized accounting.

Commission members authorized Commissioner John (Pete) Parsons to begin a study of guaranty organizations backing out-of-state credit unions which have or seek branches in Texas.

The regulation on parity allows the commissioner to approve fields of membership or changes in fields of membership with "greater flexibility and a broader interpretation of what may constitute the field of membership of credit unions than has been the case in the past."

Attorney Tom Rutledge explained the policy as meaning "if the Feds can do it, we can do it."

Rutledge said the regulation on securities uses a "broad-brush approach" because of the complex nature of securities law.

Parsons reports a key provision is that a credit union is to guarantee to the commissioner that an issue complies with applicable laws and regulations, since his agency lacks expertise in securities matters.

Few credit unions are expected to become involved in issuing securities, Parsons says.

•••

State regulatory agencies are taking a close look at financial institutions, and non-financial institutions, crossing traditional lines of financial activities, including plans by K-Mart Corp. to accept deposits at its stores.

Oil patch safety program could be costly

WASHINGTON — A federally controlled safety program in America's oil patch could prove costly, unworkable and perhaps even impair drilling activity, according to the Independent Petroleum Association of America (IPAA).

The national trade association, representing 15,000 independent oil and natural gas producers, commented on proposed Occupational Safety and Health Administration rules which if implemented would mandate federal safety standards at drill sites coast to coast.

In commenting on the proposed federal rules, IPAA executive vice president Lloyd N. Unsell said that existing standards enforced by individual states and the industry are "far superior" and more flexible than any blanket national regulation could possibly be.

"The cost of these proposed regulations has also been vastly underestimated and appears to have a disproportionate impact on smaller firms, said Unsell in his written comments to OSHA.

SPRABERRY:

USENCO, likewise, drills only proven locations in areas of high predictability.

Of the wells drilled in the trend, initial production will average between 25-70 bopd or more, before flattening out to 10-40 bopd in about two years. Life span for a Spraberry well is normally 25-40 years. Reserves expected for a well are 50,000-80,000 barrels. Normal payout is three-four years.

FOR EACH 100 wells drilled about five will produce over 100 bopd on initial production. The difference is good porosity.

A variety of completion techniques are employed in the trend, but the most practical according to several operators is a medium-sized fracture treatment well-placed in the pay section.

At the moment the Spraberry trend is being played by less than a dozen volume players and a large contingent of firms and individuals drilling only a few wells a year.

John Cox, often called the "King of the Spraberry" is probably the largest operator in the trend and is active in drilling new wells on a double digit basis. Parker & Parsley probably drills more Spraberry wells each year than any other company. They drilled 100 in 1983 and have 60 scheduled this year. Adobe drilled 24 last year and has about the same slated for this year. Through March USENCO had drilled 29 wells with about 70 more slated for the year. Henry Petroleum another volume player drilled 34 last year and plans 60 this year.

OTHERS NAMED AS volume players in the Spraberry include Saxon, BTA and Lewis & Atkins, all of Midland.

Apparently the biggest draw back to playing the trend is the availability of leases. All operators contacted expressed the same view that competition is fierce for leases. Lease cost range from zero dollars on a farm out to $300 per acre for 80,000 barrels of reserves.

"You won't find many 80,000 barrel leases," said an operator, "those are the ones they hang on to.

It is anybody's guess as to how long the intense Spraberry activity will last. It could go on another five years or it could bust at the end of this year. Several of the volume players have already indicated that they will decrease their drilling programs in 1985. Not because the Spraberry has anything wrong with it, but simply because they want to move on and try other ventures.

SAID ONE OPERATOR: "The Spraberry is good, but we don't want to get to thinking that it is everything."

What may keep the trend busy for many more years is the fact that pay zones below the Spraberry, in the Strawn, Fusselman and Ellenberger, are proving prolific and have yet to be throughly explored. Operators are drilling these deep wells now and using the Spraberry as a "bail out". That is if they don't hit a 500 barrel well in the Fusselman, they will settle for a 25 barrel well in the Spraberry to pay for the hole.

With a mountain of well control for the Spraberry and a mole hill of well control for the deeper zones, the Spraberry has been a target for extensive seismic shooting. That's a good sign.

Petroplex to acquire new branch

Jim M. Everett, president and chief executive officer of Petroplex Savings Association has announced the plans to acquire the Monahans branch office of Briercroft Savings, formerly Texas Savings and Loan of Monahans. Everett stated that the agreement reached with Briercroft called for Petroplex Savings to acquire all of the deposits and operating assets with the exceptions of any loans.

"Most of the employuees at the Monahans Branch have been with the Association since its days as Texas Savings and we are pleased to have them as a part of our team. We are also very eager to become a real integral part of Monahans business and civic community.

Lecture site is changed

The lecture is co-sponsored by the Permian Basin Graduate Center and the Midland Chamber of Commerce and is part of the annual Brown-Bag lecture series.
