Fights, burglaries keep officers busy

Snyder police worked two assault cases and two burglaries and made five unrelated arrests Wednesday and early this morning.

At 3:47 a.m. today, police were dispatched to the scene of an altercation in the 1700 block of Avenue T. Snyder EMS transported a 33-year-old woman to Cogdell Memorial Hospital emergency room where she was treated for a head laceration and released.

An offense report for aggravated assault was filed against another woman in the case but no arrest was made. The case will be forwarded to the district attorney's office.

At 12:27 a.m. today, a 911 call sent police to the 1300 block of 24th Street where another assault had occurred. A 29-year-old man was taken to Cogdell emergency room by Snyder EMS where he was treated for a laceration to his left arm and released. The man declined to file charges.

Among the arrests made was one for felony driving while intoxicated. Police arrested 43-year-old Dennis John McKee of 413 Ave. U for felony DWI at 10:57 p.m. Wednesday. McKee was the driver of a 1978 Ford which struck a parked, unoccupied 1987 Plymouth owned by Ana Martin 2612 36th St. The wreck occurred in the 3900 block of College Avenue.

An offense report for burglary of a vehicle was filed after police received a report at 1:27 p.m. Wednesday that someone had taken a radar detector from a vehicle in the Pioneer Furniture parking lot.

At 4:10 p.m. Wednesday, police investigated a burglary at Westerner Golfland. According to police, someone had forced open the door of the business and taken an undetermined amount of change and some packets of sports cards.

America 2000 plan outlined for local, area administrators

Dr. Sam P. Wilson, U.S. Department of Education's secretary for Region VI, outlined plans Wednesday for a new type of American school.

"I am talking about developing a break-the-mold type of school where innovative people are allowed to be innovative," said Wilson.

Wilson outlined the America 2000 education strategy to administrators and instructors representing Western Texas College, Snyder and Ira schools, Scurry County Library and the local Headstart program.

America 2000 is a long-term strategy adopted by the president and governors in 1990 to close the existing gap of skills and knowledge between American students and those from other educational systems.

According to Wilson, the strategy consists of four parts that should be pursued simultaneously.

The first is to improve schools by making them better and more accountable for their results. Wilson said that schools should be driven to "world-class standards" of education.

Also included in the plan is the invention of a new generation of American schools, improving competency in the five-subject area of English, history, geography, math and science.

Third is an emphasis on literacy, not only for students, but adults as well. According to Wilson, a "nation at risk" must strive to become a "nation of students".

The final part of the America 2000 strategy is to get the community involved in the schools and create communities where learning can happen.

"If we want to see a general reform of education, we have to quit griping and turn to our communities," said Wilson. "The change will be slow, but it will come community by community, school by school."

Wilson cited lack of parental involvement and lack of respect for

1,000s turned away; food banks go bare

WASHINGTON (AP) — Food banks nationwide are turning away thousands of hungry Americans because the federal government is running out of surplus flour, canned goods and peanut butter to stock their shelves.

The Agriculture Department says its warehouses of surplus commodities are nearly bare and it has spent almost all of the $120 million budgeted this year to buy canned goods and other food for distribution to low-income Americans.

Some of the purchased food may still be in the pipeline, but anti-hunger activists worry it won't last long.

A record 25.7 million Americans — more than one in 10 — are receiving food stamps. But the activists say those benefits run out before the end of the month, so many families stretch their meals with the USDA giveaways.

And with the onset of summer, families with children who had been receiving a free lunch at school will have more meals to fix with less food.

"This will be a long, hard summer for the 10 million low-income children who are now eating free school lunches," said Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., chairman of the Senate Agriculture Committee.

Vatican defends its birth control stance at summit

RIO DE JANEIRO (AP) — The Vatican today defended its position on birth control, telling Earth Summit delegates debating humanity's destruction of the planet that the Church does not support procreation at any cost.

The comments by Archbishop Renato Martino came as the delegates began general debate on treaties to protect the environment, including a pact on global warming that the United States has blocked.

"The position of the Vatican in relation to procreation often has been incorrectly interpreted," Martino said. "The Catholic Church does not propose procreation at any cost, but rather insists that transmission and care of human life must be done with the greatest responsibility."

His comments reflected controversial remarks preceding the summit by the Most Rev. George Carey, archibishop of Canterbury, who said that the Roman Catholic Church's position against contraception helped knock population control off the summit agenda.

The Vatican denied it had done so, saying the issues of population, environment and poverty could not be tackled in isolation.

At Wednesday's opening, negotiators faced another issue: Washington's refusal to sign a treaty to protect animal and plant species from extinction.

William K. Reilly, director of the Environmental Protection Agency and head of the U.S. delegation, said the United States is concerned it will have to contribute too much to helping prevent extinction.

Reilly also said the treaty threatens the growing U.S. biotechnology industry.

"They always say that, but it comes down to money," said Scott Hajost, a former State Department lawyer now with the Environmental Defense Fund.

Reilly said the United States is concerned it will have to contribute too much to the maintenance of biological resources, and that the decisions about how the money is spent would be made by the developing countries, where most biological resources occur.

Wilson bound for Boys State

Ben Wilson, a junior at Snyder High School and the son of Mrs. Gwen Wilson, has been selected to attend the June 6-12 American Legion Boys State at the University of Texas.

He was chosen by the school, American Legion Post 181 and local Kiwanians. David Adams serves as post commander.

Wilson will be one of 960 boys throughout the state who will attend Boys State.

This project offers selected youth the opportunity to develop a knowledge of and interest in the American system of government from city to state, by running, being elected and holding office. A day will be set aside to hold office at the Texas state capitol.

Boys State is usually thought of as a mythical 51st state with a constitution, statutes and ordinances constructed by its citizens to govern themselves. All political parties are mythical as well.

The SDN Column

The feller on Deep Creek says, "Sometimes new ideas hurt more than new shoes."

A friend in Austin is a close observer of the happenings in that city. He recently sent us a fax of a sign posted in front of an Austin law firm specializing in divorce.

It may have been a classic case of truth in advertising. The sign read:

Marriage is a ball and chain.

We have a sharp hacksaw.

Wacil McNair was back in town a few weeks ago. Between a busy schedule of watching grandkids play ball and visiting with many old friends, Wacil took the time for a visit to his former place of toil.

While at the news office, the intense heat of the presidential elections and politics came into the conversation. Wacil reminded us of one of his favorite presidential anecdotes.

It involved a conversation between Thomas Jefferson and George Washington, which apparently occurred following some disagreement between the House and Senate.

Franklin asked Washington why the Constitution-framers agreed on a second chamber in Congress.

"Why did you pour your coffee into your saucer?" asked Washington.

"To cool it," said Jefferson.

"Even so," said Washington. "We pour legislation into the senatorial saucer to cool it."

McNair also told us a story that occurred during the Eisenhower Administration. The treasury secretary told the president that the national debt might go above the legal limit.

"Who will go to jail if that happens?" asked Ike.

"We will have to go to Congress," replied the secretary.

"Oh," cried Ike. "That's worse."

Appeals Court affirms 2nd conviction of Robert White

AUSTIN (AP) — The state Court of Criminal Appeals has upheld the conviction of Robert Excell White, who's been described as the dean of Texas' death row inmates.

The Wednesday decision involved White's second conviction in the 1974 machine-gun murder of Collin County grocer Preston Broyles, 73.

Broyles was killed along with two 18-year-old men in the Hilltop Grocery near Princeton, a community seven miles southeast of McKinney. White was tried only for Broyles' murder.

White's first conviction was overturned in March 1987 by the Court of Criminal Appeals on the grounds that White was not told what he said to a court-appointed psychiatrist could be used against him.

He was convicted for a second time in June 1987 and again sentenced to death.

In Wednesday's appeal, White argued that the trial judge's refusal to appoint an independent psychiatrist to be part of his defense team harmed his case. The Court of Criminal Appeals disagreed.

Texas prison spokesman Charlie Brown said White has been on death row since Aug. 26, 1974, the longest of any inmate.

Also Wednesday, the court:

— In a capital murder case from Dallas County, found that a defendant has the right for Crime Stoppers information regarding his case to be produced for inspection. It did not give the defendant unlimited access to the information, saying that would unnecessarily compromise the state's interest in fostering law enforcement.

The court instead outlined a procedure in which a judge would look at the information outside of open court, without lawyers for either side present. If the judge found it was material evidence favorable to the defendant, the defendant would get the information, which would be sealed after trial.

The ruling occurred in the case of Kenneth Thomas, who was sentenced to death in the 1987 slaying of Mildred Finch. Mrs. Finch and her husband, civil rights lawyer Fred Finch, were stabbed to death in their home.

The court said that Thomas had requested Crime Stoppers information including a recorded telephone call and names of informants. Dallas Sgt. Barry Whitfield, who supervises the Crime Stoppers Unit, said the program does not tape conversations with callers or take names of those who call.

Some protest listing

AUSTIN (AP) — Officials say that some employers the state has identified as "extra-hazardous" may not belong on that list.

More than half of the 46 employers have appealed last week's decision by the Texas Workers' Compensation Commission to name them extra-hazardous, officials said Wednesday.

The commission said the newness of the program has led to confusion about the list.

"It's as fair as we could make it," said Del Miller, who helped put the list together. "Is it as refined as I hoped it would be? No, not at all. With more education and more work we can make it more fair and more refined," he said.

Companies were identified as extra-hazardous employers if they had a much greater number of job injuries than similar sized companies in the same line of work. The designation is part of the 1989 overhaul of the system of insurance for workers hurt on the job.

Extra-hazardous employers must draw up a work-safety plan, or face fines of up to $5,000 per day. Or they can appeal the designation, a process that will probably end within the next several weeks.

Much of the problem is that some of the companies gave the Workers' Compensation Commission erroneous data, and some of the data was extremely general, officials said.

The companies were asked to review all the information they sent to the commission, but many did not respond to the request, said Linda McKee, a spokeswoman for the commission.

Only after the list was publicized did the switchboard light up, she said.

Dallas-based Presbyterian Health Care was on the list because it reported nearly 15 times as many injuries to workers as the industry average.

But Presbyterian Hospital spokeswoman Ann Harper said that average was high because it was applied to only 273 employees, when the company actually has more than 4,200 employees.

"Obviously if you apply the number of injuries you have to 273, it will be a high percentage," Ms. Harper said.

The mistake was made after the firm told the commission it had 273 corporate employees, when the commission was seeking the total number of employees in the corporation.

Cheap air fares said hard to get

NEW YORK (AP) — Just because the airlines are running a big fare sale doesn't mean you can get the price you want on the flight you want — as thousands of frustrated travelers are finding out.

The airlines have developed an intricate system of selling seats on the same plane at vastly different prices, to make sure they get the maximum business from all types of customers.

So while American Airlines tried recently to simplify fares with a four-tier structure intended to bridge the gap between cheap tickets and the expensive seats, it still can be hard to get bargains on desirable flights.

Airlines have been swamped this week with millions of calls from people trying to take advantage of the sale, scheduled to end Friday, that cut the lowest fares in half for travel in the lower 48 states. By early in the week, many of the cheaper seats were gone.

DEAR DR. GOTT: My 18-year-old grandson responds quite badly during a full moon. Is there any connection between his deplorable behavior and the moon's cycle?

DEAR READER: For centuries, the cycles of the moon have been blamed for various human behaviors. In particular, ancient people believed that mental illness was related to a full moon. (Remember that "lunacy" is derived from the Latin word for "moon.") This myth has been perpetuated over the centuries, the latest manifestation being werewolves, who supposedly change from human to animal form during the full moon.

I am not aware of any valid scientific study showing moon-related behavioral changes.

Nonetheless, this fantasy is well-rooted in folklore. I'm convinced that this phenomenon may be a self-fulfilling prophecy: If someone believes his activities are related to lunar phases, he will behave that way.

Rather than blame a celestial body for your grandson's "deplorable," cyclic behavior, you should consider taking him for counseling. With therapy, he will begin to understand that he (not the heavens) is responsible for his behavior. This realization may enable him to make the necessary changes in his attitude, without his family having to resort to the more drastic, traditional treatments: a stake through the heart or a silver bullet.

To give you more information, I am sending you a free copy of my Health Report "Mental and Emotional Illness." Other readers who would like a copy should send $1.25 plus a long, self-addressed, stamped envelope to P.O. Box 91369, Cleveland, OH 44101-3369. Be sure to mention the title.

DEAR DR. GOTT: Because of undue wear-and-tear of the tibial and fibular ligaments, I now have an extremely unstable knee. Can surgery correct this?

DEAR READER: Yes, it will but I cannot judge which surgery. The condition you mention, which is usually due to an injury, leads to instability of and pain in the knee. In its mild/moderate form, rest followed by physical therapy will allow for healing and eventual return to normal. Sometimes orthopedic surgeons may have to operate to repair the ligaments.

However, severe forms of ligamentous damage may not heal. In these cases, total knee replacement (with an artificial joint) may be required. Such an operation will solve your problem and allow you to return to full activity — although, of course, some restrictions may apply, depending on your activity and age. The extent of knee damage is based on an orthopedic examination and special X-ray studies.

Singer will surrender

LOS ANGELES (AP) — W. Axl Rose, the lead singer of Guns N' Roses, is tired of running and plans to turn himself in to face charges stemming from a riot in St. Louis last summer, a spokeswoman for his recording label says.

It's not clear when Rose will surrender, Bryn Bridenthal of Geffen Records said Wednesday.

"We're in the process of trying to settle it," Guns N' Roses guitarist Slash said in an interview from Germany, where the group is on tour. "I don't want to see us walking on stage and being walked off by the police."

The band canceled concerts in Chicago and Detroit this spring after a prosecutor threatened to have Rose arrested.

Dan Diemer, an assistant St. Louis prosecuting attorney, said Rose won't have to go to jail on the misdemeanor charges but might face a fine or community service.

Book donation made to center

A luncheon at Reta's Cake Shop ended the club year for Honey Do's Extension Homemakers Club. Plans were made for the fall meetings and a program on drying foods was included in the morning activities.

President Patsy Burleson presided over seven members. They discussed the upcoming Christmas party which the club will host and a fall event. Books were collected to take to Snyder Day Care Center. Members gave one book to each child to have as his own. Other books were donated to the center's library. Muffins were given to the children to have during their snack time.

Following the meeting, the group went to the home of Kathryn Roberts where she gave a demonstration on drying fruits and vegetables. Mrs. Roberts, extension agent, had attended a three-day training session at Lubbock on dehydration of foods.

'Hoppin' John's Lowcountry Cooking'

NEW YORK (AP) — Food historian John Martin Taylor turns to one of the country's distinctive regional cuisines in "Hoppin' John's Lowcountry Cooking."

The recipes from the South Carolina coastal plain and the area around Charleston are unlike other Southern foods in their use of green peanuts, Sieva beans and the bounty of the wetlands, he says.

Martin's book (Bantam, $24) tells of his youth in South Carolina and includes more than 200 recipes, some of them as familiar as grits and others as unusual as Frodmore stew or smoked nuisance gator tail.

Martin, owner of a culinary bookstore, used plantation journals, centuries-old cookbooks and the stories of his neighbors in his research.

Baby carrots go well with grilled foods

By NANCY BYAL, Food Editor, Better Homes and Gardens Magazine, For AP Special Features

High on the list of summer's great pleasures are young, tender fresh vegetables. Whether you're a gardener or farmer's market enthusiast, you'll love the simplicity of these microwave-cooked baby carrots, cloaked in a light, gingery sauce. Serve them with grilled pork loin chops or chicken breasts.

BABY CARROTS WITH PINEAPPLE GLAZE

3 cups baby carrots (1 pound)
3 medium leeks, sliced 1/2-inch thick (1 cup)
2 tablespoons water
One 6-ounce can (2-3rds cup) unsweetened pineapple juice
2 teaspoons cornstarch
1/2 teaspoon grated gingerroot, or 1/8 teaspoon ground ginger
1/8 teaspoon salt (optional)
1/8 teaspoon ground nutmeg
Plain yogurt (optional)

Trim carrots, leaving 1 to 2 inches of stem, if you like. Do not peel. In a 2-quart, microwave-safe casserole combine the carrots, leeks and water. Cook, covered, on 100 percent power (high) for 9 to 11 minutes or until crisp-tender, stirring once. Drain; cover to keep warm.

For glaze, in a 2-cup glass measure stir together juice, cornstarch, gingerroot or ginger, salt (if desired) and nutmeg. Cook, uncovered, on high for 21/2 to 31/2 minutes or until thickened and bubbly, stirring every minute until slightly thickened, then after every 30 seconds.

Pour the glaze over carrots; stir to coat. If desired, garnish each serving with a dollop of plain yogurt. Makes 4 side-dish servings.

Tiptoe through the minefield

By Phillip Alder

Some hands are simple to play, but on the majority you have to step through the tricks with extreme care. One wrong move and you will be blown up by a proverbial mine.

Cover the East-West cards in the diagram. Against your contract of four hearts, West leads the diamond queen. What is your line of play?

North's two-diamond cue-bid showed a strong hand, probably with heart support. When South bid two no-trump, showing extra values with a diamond stopper, perhaps North should have raised to the ironclad three no-trump.

From the bidding, you know that West has the missing honor-cards. Yet, unless he has king doubleton of spades, there is a risk of four losers: one spade, one diamond and two clubs. You have to engineer an endplay against West. But while organizing the end-position, you must make sure that East cannot get on play to push a club through your king.

As the only entry card East might have is the diamond 10 or nine, the correct play is to duck the first trick. (If you win trick one, the defenders can defeat you with accurate play.) Win the diamond continuation in the dummy, draw trumps and play a diamond to your ace. Next, finesse dummy's spade queen and cash the spade ace. If the king falls, you are home. But when the king remains at large, just lead a third spade. West wins, but he is endplayed.

If he returns a spade or a diamond, you ruff in the dummy and discard the club two from hand. And if he plays a club, the king will be your 10th trick.

Win Game One 122-89...

Jordan, Bulls burn Portland

CHICAGO (AP) — Michael Jordan's shots reached the basket so quickly, they didn't seem to have enough air time to qualify for 3 points apiece.

Larry Bird rainbows they weren't. Nor were they the high-arcing one-handed pushes popularized by Magic Johnson and Michael Adams.

They were line drives, like arrows shot from a bow. Six of them. And they pierced the hearts of the Portland Trail Blazers as surely as they pierced the middle of Chicago Stadium's nets Wednesday in the Bulls' 122-89 victory in Game 1 of the NBA Finals.

Jordan scored 18 of his Finals-record 35 first-half points on 3-pointers. He finished with 39 points and 11 assists and gave Chicago the edge going into Game 2 here Friday night.

"You've got to give the guy credit," said Clyde Drexler, the Portland All-Star who was supposed to be Jordan's near-equal but who was no match for His Airness this night. "We left him open for the 3s and he buried them."

And so Michael Jordan has done the impossible, finding yet another way to bury an opponent. This time, with what both Drexler and Chicago coach Phil Jackson called a "barrage" of ballistic 3-pointers.

Jordan claimed that he was simply operating "within the framework of our offense."

But there's no way that offense calls for Jordan to shoot from downtown Chicago. Jordan is a career 28 percent 3-point shooter and has averaged only 1.2 attempts per game. In his first 16 games of this postseason, he was 5 for 16 from long range.

Perhaps lack of practice explains why he launches 3s with the same flat trajectory as his 10-foot fadeaway jumpers. And why Portland was so unprepared for Wednesday's 6-for-10 outburst.

"Those are the shots we want Michael to take," said Drexler, who scored only 16 points on 5-for-14 shooting in his one-on-one duel with Jordan.

Jordan will take them if the situation is the same as it was Wednesday, when his six 3-pointers set a one-half Finals record and tied the single-game mark.

"My shot was falling from everywhere," he said, "so I ran to the 3-point line and let them go."

Actually, the game was close for a while. Portland made its first seven shots and 11 of its first 14 to take a 25-17 lead. Jordan had 8 points on 3-for-7 shooting and had missed two of his three 3-point attempts.

Jordan scored the Bulls' next 10 points on two 3-point liners and two drives around Drexler to give his team momentum.

Agassi, Courier set for semis at Open

PARIS (AP) — Andre Agassi believes the French Open will be won by an American, either himself or arch-rival Jim Courier. The hometown fans have other ideas.

After Agassi and Courier won Wednesday to set up a semifinal showdown, France's Henri Leconte — who entered the tournament as a longshot — rallied from two sets down to gain another semifinal berth.

He'll play either seventh-seeded Petr Korda of Czechoslovakia or unseeded Russian Andrei Cherkasov, whose quarterfinal battle was suspended because of darkness Wednesday with the score level at one set apiece.

In addition to the rest of their match, today's schedule included the women's semifinals, a repeat of last year's pairings.

Two-time defending champion and top-seeded Monica Seles faced No. 3 seed Gabriela Sabatini. Second-seeded Steffi Graf, the champion here in 1987 and 1988, faced No. 4 Arantxa Sanchez Vicario.

Leconte, who underwent back surgery last year and is ranked 200th in the world, has been bouyed throughout the tournament by euphoric, foot-stamping crowds. Center court literally shook Wednesday as he rallied from behind to down Nicklas Kulti of Sweden 6-7 (10-8), 3-6, 6-3, 6-3, 6-3.

If he reaches the final, his American opponent will have to contend with partisan bedlam similar to that which propelled Leconte and Guy Forget to a stunning upset of the United States in the Davis Cup final last year in Lyon.

But Agassi, after beating No. 3 seed Pete Sampras in straight sets, predicted the winner of his match with Courier will capture the title.

"If I had to bet, I'd certainly bet on that," he said. "I think the final is the next round."

In 13 innings...

Rangers hang on for 4-3 win

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — The way New York Yankees manager Buck Showalter had it figured, desperate times call for desperate measures.

Thus, a risky a pickoff play at third with no outs in the 13th backfired, handing the Texas Rangers a 4-3 victory Wednesday night.

Shawn Hillegas, the sixth Yankees pitcher, gave up singles to Kevin Reimer and Jeff Huson to lead off the 13th, placing runners at first and third.

Faced with the decision of walking Dickie Thon to load the bases and set up a potential force at the plate, Showalter visited the mound.

Instead Showalter ordered the pickoff play in which Hillegas was to fake to first and throw to third in an effort to catch pinch-runner John Cangelosi napping.

The trouble was, third baseman Charlie Hayes did not pick up the sign from the dugout and broke to the bag late. Hillegas' throw skipped down the left field line, allowing Cangelosi to score the winning run and handing the loss to Hillegas (0-2).

"I went out to the mound to set up the play," Showalter said. "With a runner on third and nobody out, you have to roll the dice. He's out if he (Hillegas) makes the throw and Charlie (Hayes) is there. In that situation you're playing with fire and you have to take a chance.

"The way you usually set it up is to fake to third and throw to first. You wouldn't do it with two outs but if the throw's on the money and the guy is there, he's definitely out."

Hillegas said the play would have worked had the execution been better.

"He (Cangelosi) was stunned," Hillegas said. "I hesitated but I still had time to get him. It was a set play. I took the order from my manager and it didn't work out. But we didn't lose because of that play. I should never have put us in that position."

Kenny Rogers (1-2), the Rangers' fifth pitcher, threw 1 2-3 perfect innings to get the win.

Ranger starter Kevin Brown fell short in his bid to become the first major league pitcher to win nine games this season. Brown left after eight innings with the game tied at 3.

"I don't think Kevin had that good of an outing," Rangers manager Bobby Valentine said after his team remained a half-game behind first-place Oakland in the AL West.

"He was throwing a lot of balls up tonight. His fastball was good, but it was up. He finished real strong, though, and our bullpen did a heck of a job for its league-leading 12th win."

Brown, who was trying for his fourth straight win and third consecutive complete game, gave up seven hits, walking two with five strikeouts.

"This is about as bad as I pitched," Brown said. "You learn to have good games and bad games. This was one I felt I had little control. Sure, I was angry at myself but I yelled at myself in the dugout and then I went back out there."

The Rangers evened the game in the sixth when rookie Russ McGinnis scored from third on Thon's infield hit off the glove of reliever John Habyan. Habyan walked McGinnis to lead off the inning and McGinnis went to third on Reimer's double.

After Habyan hit Dean Palmer to load the bases, he struck out Julio Franco and got Ruben Sierra to ground out to first.

The Yankees broke open a scoreless game with a three-run fifth that got started when Brown hit the first two batters of the inning with pitches. — Mike Gallego and Andy Stankiewicz.

The Rangers broke through against starter Greg Cadaret in the fifth on Dean Palmer's solo homer, his 10th of the year. Franco, brought off the disabled list Monday, followed with his first homer of the season.

Jones claims 13th save as Astros top Montreal

HOUSTON (AP) — Pitcher Doug Jones and the Houston Astros probably don't consider 13 to be an unlucky number.

Jones picked up his 13th save of the season Wednesday night in Houston's 5-3 victory over the Montreal Expos. It was his 13th save in 16 opportunities, leaving him tied with Randy Myers of the San Diego Padres, one save behind Lee Smith of the St. Louis Cardinals.

The Expos took a 1-0 lead in the first inning on a solo homer by rookie outfielder Moises Alou, his second of the year, on Astros starter and winner Pete Harnisch (3-5).

The Astros countered with four runs in the first inning off Expos starter and loser Ken Hill (4-3).

The Expos scored single runs in the second and fifth innings off Harnisch.

Cianfrocco hit his seventh homer of the year in the second and Delino DeShields tripled and scored on an infield groundout by Alou to cut the leads to 4-3 in the middle of the fifth inning.

Yogurt slayings reward reaches $100,000

AUSTIN (AP) — A $100,000 reward, said to be the largest reward ever offered in a criminal case in Austin, has been offered in the slayings of four teen-age girls in a yogurt shop last December.

The Austin business community Wednesday added $75,000 to the existing $25,000 reward.

Firefighters responded to a blaze at I Can't Believe It's Yogurt on Dec. 6 and found the bodies of Jennifer Harbison, 17; her sister Sarah Harbison, 15; Eliza Thomas, 17; and Amy Ayers, 13, with gunshot wounds to their heads.

"This is more money than you will probably get from playing the lottery, that's the big news nowadays, the lottery," said Barbara Suraci, mother of Jennifer and Sarah Harbison.

Police have investigated the deaths for six months, but haven't been able to find any substantial leads.

Merriman Morton, chairman of the board and CEO for Texas Commerce Bank, announced the addition of $75,000 to the reward during a Wednesday morning news conference attended by the families of the girls.

"The money was raised by many business people in the community whose names may not come as a surprise to some, but who do want to remain anonymous," Morton said.

To show just how much money $100,000 is, Texas Commerce Bank officials displayed a stack of 100,000 $1 bills at the news conference at the bank.

"This amount of money might shake them loose and make them come forward," said Acting Police Chief George Phifer, who attended the news conference.

Earlier in the investigation, police had asked the community to quit adding to the reward fund because authorities were afraid that someone with information would sit back and wait to see how high the fund got before coming forward. But police said Wednesday that they support the increased reward.

"This is the largest reward I've ever heard of, certainly in the history of the Austin Police Department. The community, the families need the peace that would come with the solution of this crime," Phifer said.

Young Elvis Presley picked as design for postage stamp

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — America has chosen its presidential nominees, and now it's picked its King. The young Elvis Presley of "Heartbreak Hotel," "Hound Dog" and the Ed Sullivan Show has been elected by fans for the new U.S. stamp.

The Postal Service today announced that the design outpolled the "old Elvis" by a 3-to-1 margin and will adorn the 29-cent stamp to be released next January. More than 1 million votes were cast.

"Elvis loved his fans very, very much, and I think that he would have just been totally overwhelmed by all of your support," said Presley's former wife, actress Priscilla Presley.

The results were were announced at Graceland, the late singer's home in Memphis that draws more than 650,000 tourists a year.

The vote, which was announced by former Postmaster General Anthony Frank, was 851,200 to 277,723. Frank had approved the stamp before retiring, after years of lobbying by Presley fans.

Voting was conducted by mail April 6-24, and postal officials received more than 1.1 million votes by prepared ballot or post care. Most of the more than 5 million ballots prepared apparently ended up in Elvis fans' scrapbooks, officials said.

The vote marked the first time the Postal Service has asked the public to select postage stamp art.

Officials commissioned two portraits, the winning one that showed Presley in his "Hound Dog" years, cradling a '50s-style microphone, the other representing him in his later years as a Vegas showman, when he favored bejeweled jumpsuits and capes.

Critics objected to the project's $300,000 promotional costs, but the Postal Service said it expects to make money on the stamp as a collector's item.

man from Municipal Court at 9:24 a.m. Wednesday and took him to the county jail to lay out fines for public intoxication. Fifteen minutes later, officers picked up a 26-year-old man from the court and took him to the jail to lay out fines for Class A assault.

At 1:04 a.m. today, officers arrested a 19-year-old man in the 1500 block of 24th Street on a warrant for failure to appear. Police also arrested a 29-year-old man at 2:45 a.m. in the 1900 block of Avenue M for public intoxication.

At 11:35 p.m. Wednesday, police were alerted that someone had broken a window at Chapman Chevron station. An offense report for criminal mischief was filed in the case.

Another criminal mischief report was filed at 8:52 a.m. Wednesday in reference to a windshield having been broken out of a 1981 Pontiac parked at 1307 24th St.

Police also filed offense reports for two bicycles stolen from 2434 Sunset and 3403 Irving Wednesday afternoon.

In one report from the sheriff's office, deputies filed a report of criminal mischief in reference to someone breaking out the front door glass at Watson Packer, Inc. on the Lamesa Highway.

Cholera noted

0HOUSTON (AP) — A Houston woman has become the third person in Texas to be stricken with cholera related to the outbreak that is spreading northward out of South American, health officials say.

Harris County Health Department epidemiologist Cindy Kilborn said Wednesday that the woman became ill May 23 after returning by airplane from a visit to El Salvador.

The woman was hospitalized May 24 and is now out of intensive care and recovering, Ms. Kilborn said. Health officials do not reveal the names of people associated with their disease investigations.

Health officials are testing members of her family and other close contacts to determine if they might have contracted the bacteria that causes the disease, Ms. Kilborn said.

The other cases diagnosed in Texas so far this year have also been imported. The two Brownsville patients developed cholera after visiting Mexico during the Easter weekend.

the educational system as major obstacles to education reform.

"These kids spend nine percent of their time in the classroom and 91 percent at home and in the community. Schools cannot change things alone," said Wilson.

Wilson told local school officials what was required in order to become an America 2000 school system. Communities are required to adopt the goals and strategy of the plan, create a local strategy to meet those goals, establish a "report card" to measure the achievement of goals and plan for a "New American School".

He said the community should create a coordinating team, appoint a coordinator and form task forces aimed at achieving the goals for improvement of schools.

"One thing I try to tell all communities who are considering this plan is not to try and re-invent the wheel," said Wilson. "If you currently have a school-improvement plan, try to blend your plan and the ideas of America 2000."

According to Wilson, 43 states are on line with the America 2000 system. Area towns involved in the program include Amarillo, Big Spring, Brownwood, Abilene, El Paso and many cities in the South Texas region.

But some states have canceled distribution efforts, due to short supplies, said Phil Shanholtzer, spokesman for USDA's Food and Nutrition Service.

Study sees vast worldwide AIDS spread by year 2000

BOSTON (AP) — A new report on AIDS predicts a far grimmer future than previously forecast, warning that more than 100 million people on every corner of the Earth could be infected by the end of the decade.

"This is a global epidemic that is heading out of control," Dr. Jonathan Mann, who coordinated the Harvard University study, said Wednesday.

"The current response cannot succeed and must be changed, because it underestimates both the scope of the problem and what will be needed to deal with it. What is needed is a new global strategy."

Mann is director of Harvard's International AIDS Center and a former head of the World Health Organization's AIDS program in Geneva. The WHO's predictions on AIDS have been far less pessimistic than his new ones.

Dr. Michael Merson, head of the WHO's AIDS program, defended his organization's predictions and its response to the epidemic. He said the WHO already has a new AIDS strategy, emphasizing better AIDS care, increased treatment of other sexually transmitted diseases and more effort at curbing AIDS in women.

"What is wonderful is we have a new global strategy that has been adopted by every country in the world, and we are ready to move forward with it," he said.

The Harvard study was prepared by a team of 40 experts and will be published later this year as an 800-page book called "AIDS in the World 1992." Its predictions were based on a survey of 30 epidemiologists from around the world.

The team estimates that 2.6 million people around the world already have AIDS, and at least 13 million are infected with the AIDS virus. The WHO estimates 1.5 million AIDS cases and 9 million to 11 million infections.

The study predicts that by the year 2000, between 38 million and 110 million adults, and more than 10 million children, will be infected with the virus.

But they don't count...

Exit polls are nice political high for Perot

By Walter R. Mears
AP Special Correspondent

WASHINGTON (AP) — To sound bite it, borrowing Ross Perot's lingo, if exit polls and uncounted write-in votes won elections, President Bush would be on the way out and Bill Clinton's newly-clinched Democratic nomination wouldn't be worth having.

But polls and token write-ins don't make presidents. The election is five months away. And Perot's independent campaign for the White House hasn't been tested in real competition.

Perot may achieve what no third candidate ever has, crack the two-party system and win outright or force an electoral deadlock. By every sign so far, he will be the most powerful third force since former President Theodore Roosevelt tried to retake the White House in 1912, winning 27 percent of the vote.

AP analysis

But he hasn't done it yet.

"It's a long time from now 'til November," Perot said in a CNN interview Wednesday, after the presidential primary finale in which Bush and Clinton won six elections apiece and Perot showed his predicted strength in the exit polls. "When I'm involved in a competition ... I understand very clearly it's never over until it's over."

And this one is just getting started. Perot supporters have petitioned his name onto the Nov. 3 ballot in a dozen states, and are on the way to getting it done in all 50. His announcement of candidacy, on or before the Fourth of July, will be a major political show. He hired two veteran political managers, one Republican, one Democrat, on Wednesday, saying they'd be strategists, not the "handlers" he scorns.

No challenger has started with the kind of sendoff Perot has been getting, from the petition drive volunteers who got at it when he said less than four months ago he'd run if he was on every ballot, to his unprecedented support in national public opinion surveys and in Tuesday's exit polls.

Those surveys of primary election voters who had just cast ballots were conducted by Voter Research and Surveys, a joint venture of the national TV networks.

Primary voters had been telling pollsters all year that they were dissatisfied with the candidates and wished they could pick another. That mood was reflected in the early protest vote, and in the persistently high negative opinion ratings they gave Clinton and Bush.

Those were the circumstances for Perot's more vehement protest, outside the two-party system, with a candidate who promised to put his own millions into financing the campaign, and to break government gridlock in Washington and get on with problem-solving if he won.

Exit polls in the Oregon primary on May 19 showed Perot with 13 percent of the Democratic vote, 15 percent on the Republican side, on write-in ballots that didn't count and weren't officially tabulated. In Washington that night, Perot write-ins accounted for about 19 percent of the Republican and 18 percent of the Democratic vote.

By Tuesday's primaries, the exit polls were being billed as a sort of quasi-election, a hypothetical match of Perot against each of the major party candidates. In those theoretical tests of support, primary voters said they would have preferred him had he been on the ballot in California. He led Clinton in Ohio, trailed the major candidates in New Jersey.

When the same California voters were asked how they would vote in November, pluralities stuck with their nominees to be, Clinton and Bush, although about one third of Democrats and 40 percent of Republicans said they were for Perot.

In nationwide public opinion polls, one-quarter to just over one-third of potential voters say they're for Perot. A Washington Post-ABC News poll put him at 34 percent, just ahead of the major party entries.

No third candidate has reached that point since polling began. John B. Anderson peaked at 24 percent, at about this time in 1980. And no third candidate has stayed there on Election Day in 80 years.

In this campaign of angry, disillusioned voters, there was a guaranteed protest vote, especially when it didn't really count. Transforming protest into November ballots that will count is Perot's challenge now. Springtime polls will be irrelevant then.

Koppel might leave 'Nightline'

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Ted Koppel says he won't stay on as host of "Nightline" if stations continue to bump it for other shows.

The 12-year-old program follows the local news in 62 percent of the country. In other markets, affiliate stations carry syndicated shows at 11:30 p.m. and bump "Nightline" to midnight or later.

ABC News President Roone Arledge said Wednesday the show might be on its way out because of the defections.

Koppel said he is hoping the show will pick up a few stations now that Johnny Carson has left NBC's "The Tonight Show."

If not, Koppel said, "It will never die a death of attrition with me at the helm. If I see that these folks continue to run reruns of 'M-A-S-H,' then I will have to take that into consideration."

"Nightline" began as a temporary news program in 1980, covering the holding of the American hostages in Iran.

Lady's Complaint About Tip Strikes Man as Gratuitous

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1992 Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: Your letter re "tipping" rang a bell with me. Recently I took a lady friend (at her invitation) to a dinner and jazz function. The bill came to $59, which included a $24 cover charge.

I filled out the credit card and added a $6 gratuity. My lady friend peered over my shoulder and said, "That's just 10 percent!" Her tone was very disapproving, implying that I was cheap, so I politely explained that one does not pay gratuities on cover charges, and considering the poor service we received, I thought the tip was generous. I added that whoever pays determines how much the tip should be, and furthermore, it is inappropriate for a guest to advise her/his escort on how much to tip.

I would like your thoughts on this matter, please.

TICKED OFF

DEAR TICKED OFF: I agree with you. It was extremely bad manners for your lady friend to have "peered" over your shoulder at the bill, and even worse to have commented on the size of the tip.

DEAR ABBY: While watching the news, I was shocked to hear about a baby sitter who gave a baby some very old, spoiled medicine, and the baby died!

I immediately checked all the stuff in our medicine chest. I had a bottle of Bayer aspirin that expired two years ago, also some Tylenol with an expiration date four years ago — and other things such as Nyquil, Bufferin, Maalox, all with expiration dates years beyond keeping!

Time passes so quickly, Abby. Please print this. I'll bet a lot of people will get some big surprises. Some prescription drugs may lose their potency only after a while, but others can be dangerous.

LUCILLE IN LONG BEACH

DEAR LUCILLE: Thanks for a valuable letter. Readers, when in doubt, ask your pharmacist.

DEAR ABBY: The question that bothers me is this: My daughter was married in the 1950s. She passed away from cancer two years ago.

If my son-in-law marries again, will he still be my son-in-law? They had no children.

Please put your answer in the paper. It might help some other person who is in the same situation and needs to know.

He always called me "Little Mama" ... so that is how I will sign this letter.

LITTLE MAMA IN GEORGIA

DEAR LITTLE MAMA: Whether he marries or not, legally, he is no longer your son-in-law. Emotionally, perhaps yes. But not legally.

DEAR ABBY: What do you think of a thank-you note that reads as follows: "Thank you for the lovely gift," signed "Mrs. and Mrs. Newlywed"?

I was shocked to receive such a note. It was so cold and impersonal, it could have been run off on a copy machine.

I was very hurt because I had spent a lot of time and money selecting a gift I thought would be perfect for this couple. I would like to add that the bride is a relative of mine.

DISGUSTED IN BERTHOUD, COLO.

DEAR DISGUSTED: Obviously, the bride and groom are woefully ignorant about how to write a thank-you note. However, their note did serve to acknowledge that your wedding gift was received.

Sadly, there are some who can say, "Well, that's more than I received."

Black infant mortality said high

BOSTON (AP) — Health experts say they are at a loss to explain why babies of even college-educated blacks are twice as likely as white infants to die during their first year of life.

The high infant death rate among blacks is often blamed on poverty and poor access to prenatal care. But a study published today shows that these factors, while probably important, cannot fully explain the difference.

The study found that 10 of every 1,000 black babies born to college-educated blacks died during the first year of life, compared to five of every 1,000 white babies with college-educated parents.

The study was conducted by Dr. Kenneth C. Schoendorf of the National Center for Health Statistics and published in the New England Journal of Medicine. It was based on a review of 865,128 white babies and 42,230 black babies, all with college-educated mothers and fathers.

Schoendorf said most people would expect that racial differences in infant mortality would be much smaller among well-educated parents.

"But that was not what we found," he said. "We found that black infants in this select population were still just about twice as likely to die as were white infants in this group."

Dr. James Collins of Northwestern University, who has conducted similar studies in Chicago, said researchers should try to learn whether the stress of racism plays some role.

"It's coming down to the fact we are left with either, it's genetic or it's some stress related to racism," he said. "At this point, there is no data to completely disprove either one. We are still perplexed."

Dr. Paul H. Wise of Harvard Medical School noted that population studies such as the latest one do not take into account the subtle effects of racism.

"Clearly a major portion is racism," he said. "But it's difficult as a scientist to begin to determine what specific elements of racism are being expressed in infant mortality rates."

The study found that the black babies had a higher death rate because they were more likely to be small at birth, either because they were premature or undersized despite being full term.

Seven percent of the black babies were born unusually small, or under 51/2 pounds, compared with 3 percent of whites.

Researchers said they were encouraged to see that when babies were normal size at birth, blacks survived just as well as whites.

PACs find some contributions were merely goodbye gifts

WASHINGTON (AP) — Political action committees are finding to their dismay that much of the money they thought they were investing in a friendly 1993 Congress has gone to lawmakers who won't even be in the race for it.

Many incumbents have been defeated in primary battles. But even more maddening for the special interest groups is a record number of them who took their contributions and since decided to retire.

And some PACs want their money back, rather than leaving it to the politicians to reassign it. Among the outgoing incumbents are at least 30 House members who legally could put it in their own pockets, though most say they won't do that.

"We are a membership organization of more than 60,000 members," said Nathaniel Lack, political director of the pro-Israel National PAC. "Many are retired and contributed $5 or $10. The last thing they want is their money thrown down the drain."

Others PACs say they won't seek refunds — that their money was given without conditions. Others still are debating what their position should be. After all, the retiring incumbents still will be casting votes on a flock of key issues yet this year, and nobody is eager to offend them on the money issue.

"If we cut a check today and someone dropped out tomorrow, I expect we might consider developing a (refund request) policy," said Dan Nadash, political director of the National Association of Realtors. "With record retirements this year I can see a situation where that might occur."

The National Rifle Association's Political Victory Fund won't ask for refunds. "When we give a financial contribution it doesn't have any strings to it," said fund director Terri O'Grady.

Several of the 43 House members and seven senators who voluntarily announced retirements have made the decision easy. They've already written to contributors offering refunds or other choices, such as moving the money to a state political party.

Meanwhile, Rep. George Gekas, R-Pa., has proposed a plan to make sure that no House member leaving office this year can convert any leftover campaign money to personal use.

All remaining contributions for this year's retirees would go to the U.S. Treasury under Gekas' proposal. Without the legislation, at least 30 departing House members — those elected before Jan. 8, 1980 — would be eligible to use the leftover money to line their wallets.

Gekas has been unable to even get a hearing on his proposal from the House Administration Committee. "The silence is deafening," said his spokesman, Brian Sansoni. Retiring senators are not eligible to convert campaign cash to personal use.

Congress voted in 1979 to prohibit future House members from pocketing excess campaign money, but the lawmakers then serving exempted themselves. A 1989 law ended that benefit for those veterans after this year.

USDA's computers under fire

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Agriculture Department may be gambling with $2 billion if it updates its computers before streamlining its network of field offices, lawmakers and congressional investigators say.

According to the General Accounting Office, the department plans to spend nearly $2 billion over the next five years upgrading, operating and maintaining computer systems within USDA's primary farm agencies.

At the same time, the department has a "SWAT team" of experts looking at ways of saving money by closing inefficient offices and bringing other field offices under the same roof.

In testimony Wednesday before the Senate Agriculture Committee, GAO officials said changes in USDA's field structure will have significant implications for modernizing the agencies' information technology.
