U.S. troops starting to build camps

Schwarzkopf returns to U.S.

MACDILL AIR FORCE BASE, Fla. (AP) — Gen. H. Norman Schwarzkopf returned to a hero's welcome Sunday, taking his family in a bear hug and telling a cheering crowd, "It's great to be home."

As he stepped off the plane at MacDill Air Force Base, the victorious U.S. commander saluted, then with a broad smile embraced his wife, Brenda, and their three children. His black Labrador, "Bear," bounded into his arms.

"I can't describe to you the emotions in all of our hearts," Schwarzkopf said after making his way through a crowd of 500 well-wishers. "It's great to be an American."

The turnout was smaller than expected after officials spent several days encouraging people to stay home and avoid a crush. City and military SILOPI, Turkey — U.S. Marines on Sunday began building the first safe-haven settlement for Kurdish refugees in northern Iraq, despite more bitter denunciations from Iraq.

As Marines moved into the area of Zakho, Saddam Hussein's troops withdrew as agreed, some even offering smiles and waves to the arriving Americans.

But the Marines were surprised to find 200 Iraqi police in the city. The police pulled out as well, but some U.S. officials objected to the fact that they had been sent to Zakho at all.

"We are very concerned about this new development, the introduction of police forces, which we think is contrary to the spirit of our agreement," said Lt. Col. Bob Flocke, a U.S. military spokesman.

Scud attack

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan — Searchers dug through debris Sunday, trying to unearth bodies after a missile strike on a bazaar in a provincial capital in eastern Afghanistan. Reports said up to 300 people were killed and 700 hurt. At least two Scuds slammed into Asadabad, late Saturday, said Qaribur Saeed, a spokesman for the guerrilla group Hezb-i-Islami. He said the Scud attack was the first on Knar province since the Soviet withdrawal two years ago.

Spills the beans

RADNOR, Pa. — Actress Ruth Warrick says she felt guilty for telling a reporter that the movie "Citizen Kane" was based on the life of newspaper baron William Randolph Hearst. In the April 27 issue of TV Guide, Ms. Warrick, of ABC's "All My Children," describes how she inadvertently held up the premiere of Orson Welles' 1941 movie — which was, indeed, a thinly fictionalized account of Hearst's life. Ms. Warrick, who played Kane's wife in the film, says the movie was to premiere on Feb. 14, 1941, at Radio City Music Hall, but was postponed when Hearst learned of the topic and threatened to never run another advertisement for the hall if the film wasn't pulled.

Empire of W.T. Waggoner

Battle looms over estate of rancher

By Evan Ramstad

VERNON, Texas (AP) — It's the Texas myth come to life: land, cattle, horses, oil, family.

And now, a fight.

The legendary W.T. Waggoner Estate, an empire founded on a ranch two-thirds the size of Rhode Island, apparently is crumbling — undermined by a squabble between third- and fourth-generation Waggoners, presided over by sculptor-socialite Electra Waggoner Biggs, whose name was the inspiration of the Buick Electra and the Lockheed Electra jet.

Townspeople in Vernon, where the ranch and its offshoots are one of the biggest employers, are watching with worry and curiosity as the battle looms over the multimillion-dollar holdings.

"You remember when you were a kid and you wondered why are mommy and daddy fighting?" asks Vernon Mayor Emmett Maxon.

"You thought, 'Which side is going to choose me?' That is their apprehension," Maxon said of Waggoner's 160 cowboys, mechanics, petroleum engineers and bookkeepers.

Mrs. Biggs, the 78-year-old granddaughter of William Thomas Waggoner, has asked a court for help in selling off the 550,000-acre ranch, the nation's largest surrounded by one fence.

Trash pickup, concerts part of Earth Day

Associated Press

Earth Day became Earth Weekend in some parts of the country as environmentalists got a head start on the annual eco-holiday.

There was a beach cleanup in San Francisco, a salmon release and tree-planting party in Seattle, educational events in New Orleans and concerts in Massachusetts and soggy New Jersey.

Monday is the day designated as Earth Day, and commemorations are planned around the world.

In San Francisco, more than 200 people spent Sunday on the beach, enjoying a mild breeze, walking on the sand — and picking up trash.

"Cleaning up the beach is only going to last one day," said organizer Maria Brown. "But people here are learning there's lots of trash on our beaches. So next time they're here, they're not so likely to tolerate it."

There also was a volunteer beach cleanup in Seattle, which lived up to its green image with several Earth Day events. Thousands of salmon were released into a creek in the city's Carkeek Park, and trees were planted at another park.

In addition, a weekend festival at the Seattle Center offered free exhibits, workshops, entertainment and speakers

MCHD District 5 candidates favor equal care

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

ELECTION '91

The three candidates for the District 5 position on the Midland County Hospital District board of directors emphasize quality, cost-effective health care in their platforms.

But they differ in their approaches to hospital district problem-solving.

Campaigning for the two-year post in the May 4 election are David Mandell, Jean Pittman and Michael Roadcup.

They are seeking the post held by David Porter, a certified public accountant who staunchly has been opposed to any tax increases. Porter is not seeking re-election.

The candidates said they favor equal health care for all patients — from the destitute to the affluent. But they want tax dollars spent frugally.

David Mandell, a 30-year-old draftsman and a former leader of the Texas and Midland Young Democrats, said he is running for office because hospital tax dollars for the indigent "were not being spent wisely or in a way that I could support.

"The way indigent care is billed is very unfair to the taxpayers," Mandell said.

Of the hospital's projected 1991 budget of $112 million, he said less than 10 percent goes to care for the poor.

Last year's indigent care bill was $7.3 million, while the revenue from taxes was $5.2 million — a $2.1 million shortfall, Mandell said.

He suggested that hospital charges for the indigent be at Medicaid cost or "at cost" to the hospital — whichever is lower.

"Health care should be the same regardless of social status," he said.

Were he a hospital director, Mandell said he would "listen to the people" before making decisions.

"They (directors) just rubber-stamp the wishes of the trustees, and that doesn't always agree with the wishes of the community," he said.

"The directors are representatives of the people and their votes should represent the people's wishes."

Candidate: MHMC 'hard-pressed' to balance budget

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

Three candidates are unopposed for posts on the seven-member Midland County Hospital District's board of directors.

They are the Rev. Sylvester Ferguson, minister of Greater St. Luke AME Church; Margaret Williams, a retired Midland schoolteacher and counselor, and Dr. Stephen Wiesenfeld, an allergist and doctor of internal medicine.

In discussing his bid for re-election, Wiesenfeld said medical economics faces a "difficult climate out there."

Midland's Memorial Hospital and Medical Center will be "hard-pressed" to balance budgets while providing health care for the various segments of the population, including the indigent, he said.

"I'm hoping that we will get the quarter of a cent sales tax (part of a proposed half-cent sales tax to be shared with the city) to help fund indigent care," Wiesenfeld said.

"That will help considerably in offsetting taxes and also will spread out the tax burden from the homeowners in Midland to wider base of people, not only in Midland but in surrounding counties that come to shop in Midland."

Wiesenfeld said patients without medical insurance and funds often do not put a high priority on health care.

"These are not people who can afford to go to a doctor on a routine basis," he said.

"But we are seeing some differences by having this indigent pediatrics clinic and OB (obstetrics) clinic open.

"If you do good prenatal care, every dollar spent saves about three dollars in catastrophic in-hospital care," he said.

Wiesenfeld said the pediatrics clinic also will save taxpayers' money by providing vaccinations and other preventive-medicine measures.

The clinic at the old Delano Fire Station eventually may include an internal medicine out-patient clinic, Wiesenfeld said.

"I don't think we'll be so lucky (in saving tax dollars) in internal medicine, but we certainly would cut down on the number of (hospital) admissions that we have," he said.

Wiesenfeld also is concerned about the aging population not yet covered by Medicare and about the hospital's expansion needs.

Cuts in Medicare benefits are "driving these small community hospitals out of business," he said, and are shifting the burden of those aging patients to Midland's regional hospital.

The community now has "to bear the burden of the Medicare shortfall," he explained.

"The hospital is going to face a shortfall of $24 million to $28 million from Medicare" in treating older patients, he said.

"Either we raise taxes, or it comes out of the hide of the paying patient," Wiesenfeld said.

Mrs. Williams, who taught and counseled in the Midland public-school system for 37 years, said she is working to reduce costs of indigent medical care while maintaining quality health care for the hospital's patients.

"We (hospital directors) are really responsible for indigent care, trying to reduce the costs, and to be more cost-effective" in the hospital's management, she said.

She advocates frugal management for "holding taxes down."

Mrs. Williams' 1989 election to the board was as a write-in candidate for District 1.

She is married to Johnny Williams, a retired Midland coach, and is the mother of Michael Williams, a lawyer who is Assistant U.S. Secretary of Education in charge of civil rights.

Ferguson, who was unavailable for comment on his views of the hospital's priorities, did not return a questionnaire for the League of Women Voters' Voters' Guide published in Sunday's newspaper.

WAGGONER: Socialite wants to sell ranch

stalls and stables, the ranch covers most of two North Texas counties and reaches into four others.

Its history is as vast.

President Theodore Roosevelt settled a homesteading dispute there; Poco Bueno, the Waggoner horse that defined a style of rounding up cattle, is buried there with a marker fit for prince.

The estate, with holdings more diverse than some Fortune 500 companies, is conservatively valued at $200 million. But the land alone may be worth more than $300 million.

Mrs. Biggs and A.B. "Bucky" Wharton III, 43, the son of one of her cousins, are the controlling shareholders in the estate.

Rumors about the estate's future began circulating in Vernon, about 12 miles north of the ranch's opulent headquarters, shortly after trustee Charles Prather left in February 1989.

Since then, Mrs. Biggs' son-in-law, Gene Willingham, and Wharton have managed the estate, which includes the ranch land; oil, gas and mineral rights; all the ranch buildings, livestock and equipment, such as helicopters and airplanes; and investments.

The two men are said to differ over how to protect the family fortune against low energy prices and land values, but neither they nor their attorneys would be interviewed.

Their showdown, with Willingham representing his mother-in-law, promises to be lengthy and complex with the potential sizzle of an episode of "Dallas."

But Mayor Maxon doesn't expect that. The Waggoner descendants "know how to act, appreciate what they have and know how to share with others," he said.

"They're just people, nice people."

But the potential breakup of the storied ranch is causing some worry in the town of 12,000, where its $3 million annual payroll is the third largest.

"From a sentimental point, most people would sure hate to see it break up," said City Manager Paul Hawkins.

"It's kind of like the Earth. It's been around forever," said Gene Tyra, owner of a music store and a drill captain in the horse club started by E. Paul Waggoner, Mrs. Biggs' father.

"There's a tremendous amount of curiosity about what's going to happen, what will come along," he said.

Earlier this month, Mrs. Biggs petitioned 46th District Judge Tom Neely to appoint a receiver "for the purpose of winding up the affairs of such Estate by liquidating its assets" and distributing proceeds to its shareholders.

It is unclear whether the assets are to be sold to other members of the family or outside parties.

The filing asks Neely to appoint "a person with qualifications to serve as a chief executive officer of a major company."

The filing said Wharton had earlier declared intent to terminate the estate. He is expected to respond by the end of April.

The only major legal battle over Waggoner money, more than 20 years ago, was about Wharton's inheritance. The fight went all the way to the Texas Supreme Court which upheld a lower court's ruling that he was due $45 million.

The ranch's history stretches to pre-Civil War Texas when Dan Waggoner, W.T.'s father, bought land a few counties east of the present ranch. In 1870, the legend goes, father and son drove a herd of Longhorn cattle to stockyards in Kansas and rode back to Texas with $55,000 in their saddlebags.

They set up near the Red River, north of the present town of Electra, which was named for W.T.'s daughter, aunt of the present matriarch and grandmother of Bucky Wharton.

Paying about $1 an acre, the Waggoners slowly built their cattle and horse empire westward.

When oil was discovered on Waggoner land in 1903, W.T. wished for water instead.

"Oil, oil, what do I want with damn oil?" he reportedly said. "I'm looking for water. That's what my cattle need."

But oil's potential was clear and the Waggoners' reversed triple-D cattle brand was soon emblazoned on oil wells, a refinery and dozens of gas stations.

During a visit to the ranch in the 1920s, Will Rogers said, "I see there is an oil well for each cow."

W.T. Waggoner in 1909 gave each of his three children a part of the ranch. In 1923, he took it all back, setting up the estate instead and becoming its first trustee.

The last extension of the estate agreement was in 1981 for 22 years. But it contained a clause that gave the controlling owners a chance to terminate the estate on five-year anniversary dates.

The bylaw required a year's notice for termination. Mrs. Biggs' petition said Wharton gave notice in February 1990 that he would make such a move this year.

(hospital) equipment."

Mrs. Pittman, who advocates "quality health care for all Midland County citizens, not just indigents," said the hospital is "absorbing over $2 million a year for indigent care."

In observing patients entering the hospital, Mrs. Pittman said "I realized that the majority of those people were not taking care of their bodies."

She listed habits such as tobacco smoking, poor eating habits and inadequate exercise that endanger patients' health.

Were wellness programs and other preventive measures implemented, then "obligations to the taxpayers" could be more reasonable and "taxes could stay the way they are right now," she said.

Mrs. Pittman lauded the development of the out-patient clinic for pediatric and prenatal-obstetrics indigent clients, which will save taxpayers "almost almost a half million dollars a year" over emergency room costs, she said.

"That clinic is going to pay for itself in no time at all."

Mrs. Pittman said she has seen the hospital work hard to acquire sophisticated equipment and to lure specialists to what has become a regional medical center.

She recalled those days when "everyone used to go out of town" for many operations, "because we didn't have any specialists" in cardiology, neurology, and oncology.

She said the hospital must continue to keep up with new medical technology to maintain its standing as a quality health provider.

Michael Roadcup, a 40-year-old service technician for a burglar, fire and medical-emergency alarm company and a former Midland County commissioner candidate, said he is "looking for equity" in the hospital.

"I hope it's not greed only that operates all businesses in America," he said. "I hope there's a service factor."

Roadcup was complimentary of the hospital's administration, which "is doing a good job," in his opinion, seeking out "alternatives to (expensive) health care, such as a mid-wife program for indigents and the out-patient health care clinic for minimizing emergency room visits."

He said emergency room fees may average $140 per visit, while projected costs at the hospital's out-patient clinic will be about $40.

"Programs like that are fantastic," Roadcup said.

Roadcup said he was concerned about the increasing tax burden on the community.

"If we charged the medical services at (Medicaid-Medicare) prices, charge the rooms at cost, then we could really stretch those tax dollars. We could treat more (poor) people," he said.

The hospital's administration must "realize that the (tax) money they are dealing with is ours. It's the community's. It's not just theirs. They'd done an excellent job. They've made a profit when it's hard to make a profit.

"Let's see how we can make it better — not more money," Roadcup said of the hospital.

"We (taxpayers) are not an inexhaustible source of money. There's going to be a point where everybody goes broke," he said.

"I take my taxes personally and I'm concerned about quality health care."

Roadcup also advocated a self-imposed wellness program.

HERO: General says 'It's great to be home'

officials spent several days encouraging people to stay home and avoid a crush. City and military officials had feared a logistical nightmare with up to 200,000 expected.

Awaiting his arrival were local dignitaries, base personnel, families of Desert Storm troops and Kuwaiti Ambassador Saud Nasir al-Sabah.

"Mr. Ambassador, I am proud to report to you Kuwait is free," said the four-star general, head of the U.S. Central Command, which has its headquarters at MacDill in Tampa.

The imposing general loomed above others on the podium. Standing before a 40-foot-wide American flag, Schwarzkopf called on the crowd to remember the 250,000 troops still serving in the Persian Gulf.

"They're going to be there for a while. We're getting them home as fast as we can," Schwarzkopf said.

"But I ask all of you please just to keep giving the great support you've given all of us until the last American is home."

After his brief remarks, he stood before the 24th Infantry Division (Mechanized) band as it played his favorite song, "God Bless the USA."

Then Schwarzkopf climbed in a car with his wife, daughters Cynthia, 20, Jessica, 18, and son Christian, 13, for a private reunion at home. The family was separated for the entire eight months that Schwarzkopf was in the Persian Gulf.

Shortly after the general left the morning ceremony, a Boeing 747 jumbo jet painted with a big yellow ribbon touched down at MacDill, bringing 380 Central Command staff back from Saudi Arabia.

Some families waited on the base more than three hours before the general's arrival.

"People respect what he stands for. There's no bull. He just gets the job done and he gets it done well," said Celma Moran of St. Petersburg, whose husband is a reserve sergeant stationed in Alabama. She carried a placard reading: "Welcome Home General. We Love You."

Her son, Bernie, 10, waited for Schwarzkopf clutching a teddy bear dressed in military garb. "I wrote him a letter asking what this war was all about — what was happening over there," Bernie said.

"He wrote me back. He said he would take good care of my daddy if he had to go."

Warren Stiner, 40, of Crystal River, is local commander of the Veterans of the Vietnam War. He waited to present a special homecoming medallion and a letter to the general.

He wasn't upset that Vietnam veterans didn't get such an enthusiastic welcome home. "I'm not bitter at all. All of this has given me the pride I lost 20 years ago."

Schwarzkopf, 56, who has announced plans to retire this summer, has been flooded with offers, including book contracts and a university presidency, and has been mentioned as a potential political candidate.

His schedule has him leading the May 2 Kentucky Derby parade in Louisville, Ky., heading a May 5 celebration at Tampa Stadium and welcoming Queen Elizabeth during her trip to Tampa on May 20.

HAVEN: Marines begin to build refugee camps

(From 1A)

However, Marine Col. James Jones, head of the 24th Marine Expeditionary Unit, which arrived in northern Iraq on Saturday, said he did not find the brief police presence "particularly disturbing."

The United States and its allies are bringing in thousands of soldiers to protect the Kurds, who fear bloody reprisals from Iraqi government troops for their uprising against Saddam.

Throughout Sunday, swarms of U.S. helicopters ferried troops and supplies into Zakho, 17 miles from the Turkish border settlement of Silopi.

By afternoon, 32 blue-and-white tents provided by the Agency for International Development had been set up in a lush green meadow, and an American flag flew over the town.

"We will rapidly build this small neighborhood into an entire community," said U.S. Army Maj. Gen. Jay M. Garner, the senior U.S. commander on the ground in northern Iraq. He set up headquarters in the newly abandonded garrison of the 44th Iraqi division.

"We are in the job of saving lives and we're going to save lives and do a good job of it," Garner said.

Iraq's state-run press denounced the use of American troops to set up and guard camps for Kurds. More than 1,400 Marines are in Zakho.

"This provocative behavior is blatant interference in Iraq's domestic affairs and a flagrant violation of international law," said the government daily Al-Thawra.

The army newspaper Al-Qadissiya said, "The American dream is to fragment Iraq and to impose complete U.S. domination over it."

Officials estimate 800,000 of Iraq's 4 million Kurds fled to the mountains along the Turkish border after their rebellion failed. About 1.5 million are thought to have sought refuge along the border with Iran.

Conditions in the new camps, being set up in lower-lying areas of northern Iraq, should be better than in the mountains, where cold, disease and hunger have taken a heavy toll among the refugees.

In a sign of the desperate conditions in the mountain camps, Turkey's Anatolia news agency said Turkish troops shot and killed one Iraqi Kurdish refugee and wounded five others Sunday while trying to control a stone-throwing mob near the settlement of Cukurca. The melee broke out as refugees crowded a food-distribution point, it said.

The Iraqi soldiers pulled out of the Zakho area after Garner met with an Iraqi general and instructed him to withdraw his forces to a point 18 miles south of the city.

Garner told reporters that the meeting was "professional ... strictly business. It was not confrontational."

As of Sunday afternoon, U.S. authorities in Turkey could not confirm that the two Iraqi battalions had withdrawn the full distance. However, Defense Secretary Dick Cheney said Sunday on CBS' "Face the Nation" that the Iraqi troops had pulled back behind a mountain ridge and were keeping their distance from the Americans.

The first 400 Marines landed in Zakho early on Saturday by helicopter, and the bridge over the Habur River border with Turkey was opened by them before dawn the same day.

As the tents for the refugees were erected on Sunday, Marine guards took up positions around the camp and stood at military outposts on a low ridge overlooking the valley.

Jones, the head of the 24th Marine Expeditionary Unit, said the U.S.-controlled zone would cover an area ranging from 35 miles to the east of Zakho, about 22 miles south of the Turkish border.

Garner said Kurdish clan leaders would be brought to the camp to show them it is safe and comfortable. Many refugees have expressed fears about returning to northern Iraq.

U.S. Marine Col. Paul Wisniewski rejected suggestions that the threat of a supply cutoff would be used to pressure Kurds to leave the mountains and go to the new camps.

"It is not U.S. government policy to withhold food from people in order to get them to move," he said.

U.S. military personnel said the Iraqi soldiers they met smiled, waved and offered them handshakes.

"They're saying, 'We leave. We go home.' They were packing up and leaving," said Greg Cinelli, a combat photographer.

Cinelli said a helicopter set him down far from the camp and an Iraqi officer drove by, saluted and offered him a ride to the camp.

"I looked in the vehicle and there was no weapon, so I got in," he said. "I was real hesitant at first, obviously."

In Zakho, the mayor told reporters at least half the predominantly Kurdish population of the city had fled to the mountains. The city had 50,000 residents before the war.

who exhorted people to change their lives in environmentally friendly ways.

In Holmdel, N.J., soaked Earth Day celebrants thought it was appropriate that Mother Earth rained on their party.

"You've got to love it — Earth Day and it rains," said Ellis Chase of Keansburg, huddled under a sopping poncho at the state-sponsored tribute to the environment at the Garden State Arts Center. "I think this is a sign. Someone's trying to tell us something."

Or teach something. Messages were everywhere for the estimated 8,000 people who attended the event, which featured a concert starring Southside Johnny, the Turtles, Joe Walsh and Grammy-winning songwriter Julie Gold.

Before the music, a group on the stage led concert-goers through the Earth Day pledge. They said they would "pledge to learn how the earth's natural systems work" and "work together toward restoring the health of the planet."

In one of the first Earth Day events, about 35,000 people gathered at Foxboro Stadium in Foxboro, Mass., on Saturday for a benefit concert featuring Willie Nelson, Jackson Browne, Bruce Hornsby and the Range, 10,000 Maniacs, Indigo Girls and rappers KRS-One and Queen Latifah.

In New Orleans, Earth Day activities also began Saturday with exhibits and a poster contest at a mall in suburban Kenner, and displays and games in a park in Chalmette, another suburb.

HUD probe continues; key players remain mum

By Laurie Asseo
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — "Follow the money," Deborah Gore Dean said into the telephone as she waited for customers at her tony Georgetown antique shop, "The Proud American."

But she wasn't offering advice to lawyers investigating her alleged role in the influence-peddling scandal at the Department of Housing and Urban Development. She was discussing her idea for a television show aimed at finding out how public money is spent.

Dean is just one of the players in the HUD scandal.

Publicity died down after widely covered congressional hearings in 1989 and 1990 on allegations of fraud, mismanagement and cronyism at the federal agency during the Reagan administration.

But former Housing Secretary Samuel Pierce, Dean — his former executive assistant — and others are well aware that a special prosecutor is gathering information so a grand jury can decide whether to indict them on criminal charges.

"I know that there's a couple of people that definitely have problems, obviously Pierce," lawyer who has been involved in the case said, speaking on the condition of anonymity.

Independent counsel Arlin M. Adams, through a spokeswoman, declined comment on the investigation, which has cost about $1.2 million since he was appointed in March 1990. A special grand jury investigation began soon afterward.

His staff, which includes 18 full-time employees and two part-time workers, is investigating allegations that:

■ Pierce showed illegal political favoritism in administering four HUD programs: the Moderate Rehabilitation Program for low-income housing; the Urban Development Action Grant Program; the Secretary's Discretionary Fund for technical assistance and special projects; and multifamily co-insurance.

■ Pierce lied under oath to Congress. The House Government Operations employment and housing subcommittee says he lied at a May 1989 hearing when he denied he ordered HUD subordinates to approve government financing for specific programs. The panel also contends he lied when he said he couldn't recall a January 1987 meeting at which he supposedly sought data on all developers seeking money from the Moderate Rehabilitation Program.

■ Political favoritism was shown to Pierce's former New York law firm of Battle, Fowler, Jaffin and Kheel. Adams also was authorized to look into alleged conflicts of interest among Pierce, the law firm and Lance Wilson, a former Pierce executive assistant who joined the Wall Street investment firm of Paine Webber Inc.

Pierce, who headed HUD during all eight years of the Reagan administration, told the House panel in May 1989 he was not a "hands on" manager of the agency.

That fall — after reports he intervened repeatedly at HUD on behalf of prominent Republicans — he told the subcommittee, "I committed no illegal or wrongful acts." He twice refused to testify.

Also invoking their Fifth Amendment right against self-incrimination were Dean; Wilson, who preceded her as executive assistant to Pierce; and Hunter Cushing, former deputy assistant secretary for multifamily housing.

One who did testify, top Republican political consultant Paul Manafort, acknowledged that he used "influence peddling" to steer federal housing renovation funds to a New Jersey project in which he was a partner.

Manafort has advised the campaigns of Presidents Bush and Reagan and was a business partner of the late Republican National Committee Chairman, Lee Atwater.

Adams' office has sought records from federal and local housing officials on the New Jersey project and another in Savannah, Ga.

Jay Johnston, a spokesman for the New Jersey Department of Community Affairs, said his agency sent Adams' office its materials on the Seabrook project, which Manafort co-owned.

Richard Collins, executive director of the Savannah Housing Authority, said his office provided documents on meetings and correspondence on a proposed project called Park Villa, including papers on dealings with Manafort's firm, Black, Manafort, Stone & Kelly.

Collins said a Black, Manafort associate told him federal housing subsidies would be steered to Savannah if Collins could guarantee Manafort's development group would get the funds. Collins said he declined to make such a promise and the project fell through.

Pierce's attorney, Robert Plotkin, said the former housing director would not be available for an interview.

And Dean's lawyer, Joseph DiGenova, former U.S. attorney for the District of Columbia, said he couldn't discuss any aspect of the investigation.

These days, Dean haunts estate sales and auctions to buy items for her antique store

Her consulting company is inactive until the HUD investigation is resolved.

Approached recently for an interview at her antique store, she said it would have to be short because she was double-parked.

"I have this thing about law and order these days," she joked.

The Nation

AT&T: NCR rejects our 'best' takeover offer

NEW YORK (AP) — American Telephone & Telegraph Co. said late Sunday it had met NCR Corp.'s stated price for the phone company to buy the computer maker, but NCR rejected the proposal.

"This is the best offer NCR stockholders will see. There will be nothing better," AT&T Chairman Robert E. Allen said in a statement.

AT&T said it offered to swap $110 worth of AT&T stock for each NCR share, but "despite numerous discussions through the weekend, the offer has not been accepted."

NCR attorney Dennis Block said the company rejected the offer out of concern that it did not provide a sufficient guarantee that the deal would be worth $110 a share if AT&T's stock price fell before NCR stockholders could vote on it. He said it could take more than three months to schedule a shareholders meeting.

Under the proposal, if AT&T's stock price slipped below $35.50 a share, the phone company would pay less than $110 a share, Block said.

On Friday, AT&T closed at $37.37½ a share, its high so far this year, but Block noted there's no assurance it will stay at that level.

Block indicated, however, that talks between the companies had not broken off completely. AT&T spokesman Walter Murphy said he expected further talks. Discussions during the weekend included meetings between Allen and NCR Chairman Charles E. Exley Jr., Block said.

AT&T has been attempting to buy Dayton, Ohio-based NCR since November. NCR rejected earlier offers of $90 a share and $100 a share in cash, calling them inadequate. Exley has said he would not accept less than $110 a share.

"The recent increase in our stock price provided us with an opportunity to offer NCR its asking price and still be fair to AT&T shareowners," Allen said. "I believe NCR stockholders will be deeply disappointed if this opportunity is not seized on their behalf."

Ducks choose pool for mating

TULSA, Okla. (AP) — Max Durkee will go elsewhere to swim this year. Two mallards have been courting in his pool the last three weeks. And instead of shooing them away, Durkee has played Cupid.

He has provided bird food and placed a wood platform in the pool.

"I really don't know a thing about duck habits, but I'm happy they chose this pool over all the others in the neighborhood," Durkee said.

The mallards ignored the floating platform.

"Mallards mate in the water," said Russell Studebaker, a wildfowl expert for the city of Tulsa. "It should be considered their nuptial pool."

Durkee has been watching the pair closely, trying to figure out where they might nest. He realizes the mother may choose to raise her young in his backyard.

"I can swim in a neighbor's pool this summer if I have to," he said.

McCown finds school reform less taxing than parenthood

By Scott Rothschild
Associated Press writer

AUSTIN (AP) — F. Scott McCown enjoys walking around Town Lake, reading books and being with his family.

He has a penchant for bow ties and looks younger than his age, 35.

So why is he is one of the most feared men in Texas?

State District Judge McCown is considering the latest attempt by the Legislature to fix the public school finance system, which has twice been declared unconstitutional by the Texas Supreme Court.

The plan would shift hundreds of millions of dollars in local property tax money from wealthier to poorer school districts within new education regions, drawn largely along county lines.

It would set a minimum local property tax rate, and it would cost the state an extra $1.3 billion over the next two years.

McCown feels the pressure of deciding the fate of millions of school children. But as a new father, he said, "It's nothing like the pressure of taking care of this new kid."

On April 7, his son, Michael Finnin McCown, was born.

"Right now, I'm just trying to get him to eat and sleep," McCown said. He also has a 9-year-old stepdaughter, Katherine.

Lawmakers have lost sleep over McCown's insistence that Texas school children, whether they live in affluent Highland Park or poverty-stricken San Elizario, must have equal education funding.

"Take back the message that they are all our children, and that the funds must be disbursed equally," McCown told the state's attorney when he scheduled Monday's hearing.

District Judge Scott McCown is the presiding judge in school finance reform legislation in Austin.

Ironically, five years ago, McCown was a state attorney facing an impatient federal judge demanding prison reform in the massive Ruiz lawsuit.

U.S. District Judge William Wayne Justice threatened Texas with $800,000 per day fines for failing to reduce its overcrowded prison population, and McCown, as an assistant attorney general, was the lead counsel for the state.

McCown says he is proud of his work in that case.

"There weren't ever any fines levied against the state," he said. "It was a massive undertaking in a short amount of time. A good defense lawyer in any field of law will help his client get into compliance with the law."

After 3½ years in the attorney general's office, McCown successfully ran for a state district judge seat in Travis County. In October 1989, State District Judge Harley Clark resigned in mid-term and assigned the school finance case to McCown.

"He asked if I would take it, and I said, 'Yes.' I thought it would be interesting," McCown said.

Mike Hodge, an assistant attorney general and McCown's friend, said no one is better suited for the complicated school finance case.

"He is a very calm person who is probably the smartest lawyer that I have ever known or worked with. He has the ability to get to the heart of a problem quickly," Hodge said.

"Most people's first impression is to underestimate him, which is a genuine mistake," Hodge said.

Steve Hall, a former administrative assistant in the attorney general's office, said McCown's deft handling of the Legislature and court in the prison lawsuit "gives him a very broad perspective of the forces at work" in the current school funding case.

McCown was born in Dalhart, raised in Dumas and then his family moved to Fort Worth, where he was graduated from high school. He received his bachelor's degree from Texas Christian University and law degree from the University of Texas Law School in 1979.

His father, Frank McCown, is a former U.S. attorney, now in private practice in Fort Worth. He has two brothers, one a lawyer, the other an accountant.

After school, McCown practiced law at the huge Vinson & Elkins firm in Houston, then taught civil procedure at UT's law school for 2½ years before joining the attorney general's office.

McCown said he enjoyed teaching, but missed the courtroom. Also, he said, he always wanted to be a judge and each job he has taken has been in preparation for that goal.

McCown refuses to talk about the school finance lawsuit, since it is still pending.

But there are few others who have not offered an opinion on the subject.

His court keeps a folder containing about 50 letters from concerned citizens, school officials and politicians.

Most citizens ask that he not raise property taxes for schools. About an even number of writers either praise or condemn him, and some offer their own plans.

The folder is spiced with a few obscene letters, while others admit to changing their opinion of him as the school case progresses.

One man from New Braunfels wrote that McCown's comments to the state on education funding "strike me as sensible."

"I had to rethink my impression of you as 'another activist judicial tyrant.' "

Health officials: Reports of syphilis on the rise

FORT WORTH (AP) — The reported number of babies born with syphilis in Texas more than doubled in 1990, public health officials say.

The 210 cases reported last year were more than twice as many as any other year in the last decade and up 123 percent over 1989, said Joe Pair, director of the Texas Department of Health's Sexually Transmitted Disease Control Division.

While part of the increase can be attributed to changes in national reporting methods, Pair said congenital syphilis, like the disease overall, is undoubtedly increasing nationwide and in Texas.

"Babies die needlessly from syphilis," Pair said. "It's that serious — fatal in some cases. It's a situation that doesn't have to be. Syphilis is completely and easily curable."

Pair said 42 babies with syphilis were stillborn in Texas last year.

In 1990, Pair said, 5,165 cases of infectious syphilis (usually found in adults) were recorded in Texas — a 21 percent increase over 1989.

"We are all very concerned," Pair said. "We have all the elements for an epidemic in Texas — a young mobile population with a lot of people trading sex for drugs and vice versa. Once it gets started, it's hard to stop."

But, he said, a pregnant woman with syphilis can be treated and cured to prevent her baby from being born with the disease.

During 1990, some 300,000 women in Texas were tested for syphilis during pregnancy, and about 800 were treated for it, Pair said.

Of the 210 babies found to have the disease in 1990, 166 were born to single mothers and 124 received no prenatal care.

Foreign servants often live like slaves in England

LONDON (AP) — Alice left the Philippines believing a job in civil engineering awaited her in Kuwait. When she arrived, she was offered work as a housemaid — take it or leave it.

Already in debt for her fare to Kuwait, she became a domestic slave, working night and day, sleeping on the floor and always on call by a beeper.

Alice, 29, said that continued for 2½ years, in Kuwait and London, until her employer tried to rape her.

She was locked in the house after that, but another servant helped her escape by pushing her through a cat flap in a door.

Her face was badly scraped, Alice said, but she was thin enough from lack of food to wriggle through.

Hundreds of foreign women have lived similar nightmares behind the doors of some of London's most exclusive addresses, says the Campaign for Justice for Overseas Domestic Workers, also known as Kalayaan.

Since 1986, the group has worked with more than 800 women servants who escaped from families that mistreated them, said Brid Brennan of Kalayaan, a Tagalog word that means "freedom."

Another Filipina, identified only as Sandy, said she came to London with a family from the United Arab Emirates. She had to sleep in the hallway beside the toilet, and the children would slap her and pull her hair, she said.

Sandy escaped through a third-floor bathroom window one night and broke her elbow on the way down.

The women, with scarves wrapped around their heads and faces, spoke at a recent news conference called by Lord Hylton, who brought the issue to a debate in the House of Lords in November. They were identified only by first names because they now live and work in England illegally.

Anti-Slavery International, a London group formerly known as the Anti-Slavery Society, has given the United Nations a report on the problem.

Several members of Parliament are trying to remove the twist in immigration policy that allows women like Alice and Sandy to live here as slaves. Britain outlawed slavery in 1833.

Most of the women on Kalayaan's case list are from the Philippines, but others are natives of India, Sri Lanka, Morocco, Nepal, Indonesia, Nigeria, Ethiopia or Brazil. They enter the country with foreign families coming to live in Britain or with British families returning from stays abroad.

Since 1980, the government has allowed these families to bring servants along as part of their households, without a work permit. Each is given a visitor's visas allowing her to work for the family that brought her if she has been with the family for at least a year.

While the families are in Britain, the servants must stay with them.

"In the eyes of the British system, they have no existence," said Dudley Fishburn, a member of Parliament from the governing Conservative Party. Fishburn is trying to get the issue debated in the House of Commons, where 104 of the 650 members have signed a petition to bring it to the floor.

"The women we are dealing with are slaves," said Alan Whittaker, spokesman for Anti-Slavery International.

He said their passports are taken, they have no control over their lives, cannot change jobs, and often are harassed or beaten. Their wages are low and some don't get paid at all, he said.

"It's an appalling situation and it's got to stop," said Whittaker, who estimated more than 3,000 such domestics are in Britain.

Many were stranded in London with no money after the Persian Gulf War broke out because the families that employed them returned home, said Sally Hautot, a lawyer for Kalayaan.

Some ran away because they feared going back to the region or because their employers stopped paying them. Miss Hautot said more than one-fourth of the women Kalayaan has helped fled Kuwaiti employers.

When the women are on their own, they generally live underground, with no access to health care or the legal system.

Most have no difficulty finding new jobs as domestics, but they cannot leave the country until they are ready to return home for good. Most left their homes in the first place because of poverty.

The Home Office, which handles immigration matters, has agreed to issue a leaflet to incoming families bringing foreign employees.

It explains the conditions of a domestic worker's stay, tells the employees to call police if they are assaulted or mistreated, and gives the addresses of the government immigration department and immigrant advisory service.

In a letter to Hylton last month, Home Secretary Kenneth Baker said no changes in the immigration law were planned.

"Allowing domestic workers to change jobs after arrival here would undermine the arrangement and open the U.K. labor market to an influx of overseas unskilled labor," he said.

Legendary New York theater may close

Hearst News Service

NEW YORK — Harlem's famous Apollo Theater will close by June if its owners can't renegotiate the terms of $12 million in outstanding debt, the theater's manager said Thursday.

Percy Sutton, whose Apollo Theater Investors Group manages the theater, said it lost $2.4 million last year and expects to lose nearly the same amount this year, in part because crime in the streets around the historic theater has scared off potential patrons.

"I love this place but I'm not crazy," Sutton said following a press conference from the same stage where fame first greeted soul screamer James Brown, jazz diva Ella Fitzgerald and countless others.

"I have said I'd close the Apollo by June 1 unless there was a satisfactory adjustment of the loan," he said.

The white-walled 1,400-seat theater on Harlem's main street, 125th Street, has been a symbol of black pride and a launching pad for big names in jazz, soul and rock since it opened in 1934. It is also a National Historic Landmark.

Ralph Cooper, the master of ceremonies of the Apollo's famous "Amateur Night" every Wednesday, said that the Apollo's own fame has hurt it, too. The stars who got their start there go on to fame and then become too expensive for Apollo customers.

Cooper suggested that "all of these stars need to get together, get some reduced prices, and come back to the Apollo Theater — come back to play to the people who made them a success."

The financial crisis for the theater came to a head when Sutton and other investors missed a March 1 payment of $36,000 on the UDC loan. He since has made that payment, but still is a month behind.

Closing of bases necessary evil

No sooner had Defense Secretary Dick Cheney proposed 31 major military facilities for closing than lawmakers and local officials from the affected communities sent up loud cries of alarm.

On Capitol Hill, both Democratic and Republican members vowed to block the base closings, even as they moved forward on the Bush administration's plan to cut the defense budget by 25 percent by 1996.

There is no doubt the planned closings would cause economic hardship in many communities, resulting in the elimination of tens of thousands of civilian and military jobs.

But, in this era of declining military spending, the Pentagon's budget can no longer be exploited by members of Congress as a multibillion-dollar pork barrel. As the size of America's armed forces shrink in response to a diminished threat from the Soviet Union, the Defense Department's infrastructure must be reduced accordingly while keeping our armed forces strong enough to carry out military operations like the recent Operation Desert Storm.

Military planning must be tougher, more innovative and less wasteful to ensure that the United States' military dominance is not undercut too severely. To maintain obsolete and unneeded military facilities in order to pump up local economies, at a time when the Pentagon budget is being cut substantially, would undermine the readiness and combat effectiveness of U.S. armed forces.

The purpose of Cheney's plan is to extract savings from the defense budget while maintaining overall U.S. military strength. This has been almost impossible to accomplish in the past because Congress has insisted on preserving expensive, redundant bases. Yet, with an estimated 520,000 fewer military and civilian personnel expected by 1996, there is no rationale for maintaining all 495 major military installations in the United States.

Once the planned closings are completed in 1996, the Pentagon estimates it will save $1.7 billion a year in operating costs.

The base closings are an important fiscal test for Congress. Lawmakers who are serious about cutting waste and achieving budget savings will support Cheney's plan. Those who only pay lip service to fiscal responsibility while actually practicing pork-barrel politics will vote against it.

Changing of policy may ease pollution

It was a particularly even-handed analysis: The National Academy of Sciences found that while the exact nature and severity of global warming from the greenhouse effect was impossible to predict, significant reductions in the production of the culprit waste gases could be accomplished at an acceptable cost.

The NAS report . . . recommended a series of greenhouse pollution reductions as a worldwide insurance policy against the worst-case projections of global warming's effects. The two-year study was requested by Congress.

The report concluded that there are some points on which scientists are nearly unanimous: The greenhouse gases, primarily carbon dioxide, methane and chlorofluorocarbons, are increasing rapidly and will soon reach levels unprecedented in human history.

The heart of the report's analysis is that the nation needn't accept a sky-is-falling doomsday greenhouse effect prediction to order radical changes in our lifestyle or standard of living. A great deal can be accomplished with a combination of common-sense initiatives in federal energy policy.

Arab gestures begin steps toward peace

Several weeks ago, Dr. Alon Liel, the Israeli consul general in Atlanta, said a key piece missing from the Middle East peace puzzle was a "confidence building" gesture on the part of the Arab countries. What Jerusalem was looking for, he said, was something to give Israelis a reason to go to the bargaining table.

That gesture came . . . (April 11) from Prince Saud al-Faisal, the Saudi foreign minister. He announced that Saudi Arabia not only accepted Israel's proposal to begin peace talks under the auspices of the United States, but that Riyadh was ending its financial support of the Palestine Liberation Organization.

For Israelis, who have lived in a state of perpetual war with their Arab neighbors since the founding of the Jewish state . . . , that must have been very sweet news indeed.

Moreover, Saudi Arabia's decision amounts to a de facto acceptance of Israel's sovereignty over the territory Arab cartographers continue to label "Palestine."

Israel offered its peace initiative . . . (April 9), when, after meeting with James A. Baker III, Foreign Minister David Levy said Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir had given his blessing to a plan that would bring Israel and its Arab neighbors to the negotiating table under the auspices of the United States.

Details have yet to be worked out, but if the Arabs can be persuaded to meet one-on-one with the Israelis, the chances for peace will be that much greater.

Israel wanted a gesture. It has not one, but two very substantial gestures. The ball is now back in Jerusalem's court.

Iranians skirmish across Iraqi border

WASHINGTON — Iranian military forces have fought in skirmishes as far as 50 miles inside Iraq several times since mid-March. Their objective is to push Iraqi Shiite rebels toward an "Islamic Republic of Iraq," and to knock off pockets of Iranian dissidents who hide out in Iraq.

Anderson

Reliable sources, including U.S. and Middle Eastern intelligence sources, declined to call the secret forays an "invasion," even though the insertion of hundreds of Iranian soldiers could be called that.

The cross-border incursions have been designed to bolster the dwindling Kurdish and Shiite armed resistance to the government of Saddam Hussein. Also, the Iranians have been able to use the confusion of the civil war to eliminate thousands of Iranian rebels who operate military forces from bases just inside Iraq.

The most significant of the Iranian rebel groups is the People's Mojahedin. For almost a decade, it has been fighting the Iranian leadership — current President Hashemi Rafsanjani, and the Ayatollah Khomeini before him.

Sources within the People's Mojahedin report that the first attacks against their bases in Eastern Iraq occurred on March 10. In twin attacks, large groups of the Iranian Pasdaran — the Revolutionary Guards — reportedly descended on two Mojahedin garrisons.

The fighting was going on about the same time Rafsanjani paid a secret visit to his Revolutionary Guard Corps command in the Iranian city of Kermanshah. Western intelligence sources say that this same garrison has received large numbers of high-level Iranian political and military visitors, indicating heightened activity. But those sources were unable to confirm the major battles reported by the People's Mojahedin.

The sources, including Central Intelligence Agency officials, do report that "from dozens to hundreds" of Revolutionary Guards and Iranian intelligence agents have been crossing the border to arm, train and fight with Iraqi insurgents.

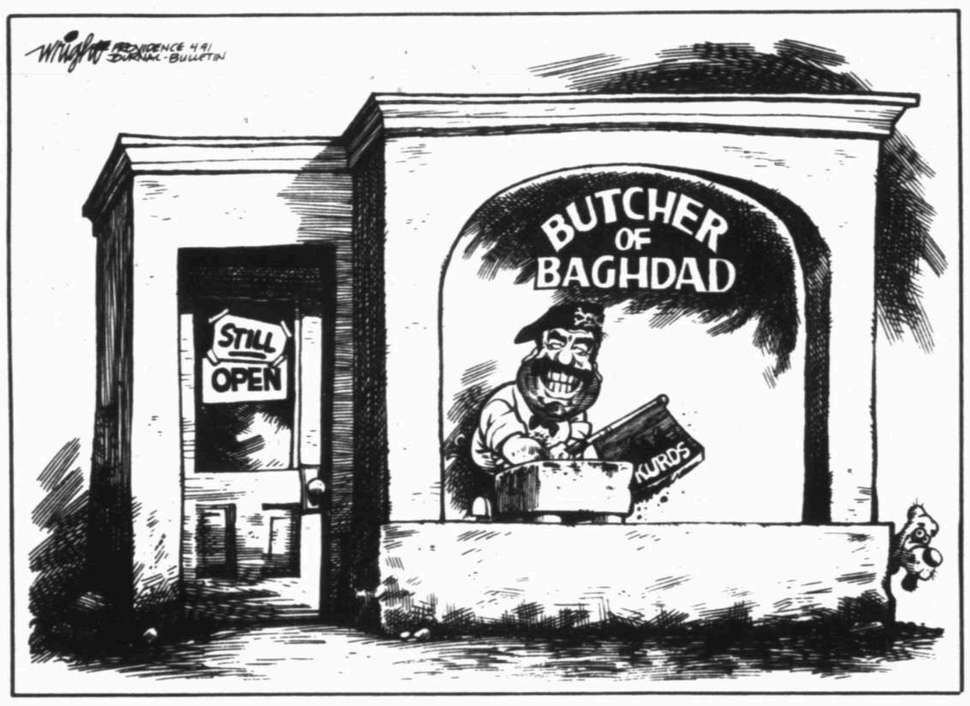

The Revolutionary Guards are under orders to kill themselves rather than be captured because Rafsanjani does not believe he can afford the word to leak out that he is dabbling in the civil war of his neighbor, Saddam Hussein. The incursions are in direct violation of United Nations resolutions banning any countries from military operations inside Iraq except U.S.-led coalition forces.

One Iranian soldier, Mehrdad Sagharchi, was captured by the People's Mojahedin on April 1. He reportedly said, "They kept telling us that if we were captured by Iraqi or Mojahedin forces, we should deny that we are even Iranians. We were told to wear local dress like the Kurdish so they would not take us and show us in the media in Iraq and show the people that, for example, the Iranian regime had violated the cease-fire and trampled those international things. They have even told us nobody should be captured, that we must do our best to destroy ourselves. ..."

The official Iranian media has been silent about Iranian-directed battles inside Iraq, even ordering total secrecy regarding identification of corpses brought back from the battles. Families of the dead soldiers are not told how the soldiers died.

One thing Rafsanjani has not kept secret is his desire for the overthrow of Saddam Hussein and the establishment of an Islamic Republic in Iraq along the Iranian model. Rafsanjani has even called for an election in Iraq, something he will not allow in his own country. He firmly believes that with up to 60 percent of the Iraqi population being his fellow Shiites, it is an election that they cannot lose.

CHARLEY REESE

Kurds familiar with the word 'betrayal'

People who wanted the war with Iraq must accept responsibility for the death and misery being visited on the Kurds.

President Bush is correct to keep U.S. forces out of it. The only way to save the Kurds and the Shiite rebels is to occupy the whole of Iraq and the price of that, in blood and treasure, would be higher than Americans would want to pay.

Reese

On the other hand, Bush is dead wrong in his efforts to deny any responsibility for what has happened. So are his congressional critics who voted for the war.

George Bush told the CIA to incite revolts among the Iraqi people. As just a part of this, the CIA funded a clandestine radio station broadcasting into Iraq repeated demands for the people to rise up against the Iraqi government.

George Bush himself on more than one occasion publicly called on the Iraqi people and the Iraqi army to overthrow Saddam Hussein.

Guess what? The Kurds and the Shiites are the Iraqi people and the Iraqi army, or a good large portion of both.

Now, it's true Mr. Bush did not explicitly tell these people that if they did what he was asking them to do, the U.S. would help. It's also true that he explicitly did not rule out any help.

So put yourself in the position of a Kurd or Shiite. The U.S., after six months of anti-Saddam propaganda, is bombing the bejeebers out of Iraq and destroying its army. At the same time, the little gremlins of the CIA are there advising you on how to revolt. The president is publicly asking you to revolt. The CIA radio station is urging you to revolt. And nobody is saying to you, revolt, but if you get in trouble, don't call us.

The ugly truth is that the U.S. government encouraged them to revolt as part of its war plans. If they got slaughtered, that's okay. Just to slaughter them ties up and disrupts Iraqi forces.

This is the vicious, cold-blooded aspect of war that Americans don't like to face. They prefer that their government do it in secret and not tell them about it, just as they resent being told about the inevitable deaths of civilians. It disturbs their illusions of being wonderfully nice people engaged, King Arthur style, in confronting evil to rescue the good. Sometimes they like to pretend the bad part was all just an accident or a misunderstanding.

After all, this is the second time we have betrayed the Kurdish people. In the 1970s, in a deal cooked up with the Shah of Iran, the CIA armed and financed a Kurdish rebellion in Iraq. Then, the Shah cut a deal with the Iraqis and we abandoned the Kurds to the tender mercies of Baghdad.

Ugly business, isn't it? Yep, mighty ugly.

You'd think the Kurds would have learned not to trust us, but drowning people will grab at anything that floats by. Kurdish nationalism, like Palestinian nationalism, has been trying to avoid drowning in the cold, treacherous waters of imperialism for a long time.

The Kurds are an ancient people of the Zagros Mountains, which border parts of Iraq and Turkey, and the eastern Taurus mountains in Turkey. At the end of World War I, the Treaty of Sevres was supposed to carve up the Ottoman Empire into three Arab states, Kurdistan, and Armenia. Kemal Ataturk, however, overthrew the near-dead Ottoman government and proved too tough a customer for the British and French to take on at that time.

Hence, the Treaty of Sevres was never ratified and was replaced by the Treaty of Lausanne, which created the Middle East you see on the maps today — with no independent Armenia and no Kurdistan.

The problem is that besides being the mother of Western Civilization that region of the world is also the home of people who never forget anything.

WILLIAM SAFIRE

President sits tall in saddle with Soviets

WASHINGTON — When the president's press secretary opined that his boss did not have to have an arms treaty all set to sign in order to meet at the summit with Gorbachev, two groups were horrified:

The sniveling, save-Gorby-from-the-baddies arms-control establishment (you know who you are) want a summit linked to a Start treaty because that will pressure the White House to accede to Soviet demands.

Safire

The ultra-suspicious, press-'em-till-they-cave, unreconstructed cold warriors (we know who we are) want to dangle the prospect of a summit, which Gorbachev needs, to induce him to keep treaty promises made in days of wine and glasnost.

This crossfire caused Marlin Fitzwater, behind the curve on this arcane negotiating stuff, to flip-flop the same day, calling for a summit conditioned on a treaty.

Asked about the disarray, President Bush said, "I'm backing both of Marlin's positions."

Here's what the president should do on troop withdrawals and arms reductions:

1. Stick to your guns on putting the withdrawal of conventional forces from Europe (CFE, which we want most) ahead of a treaty on strategic missiles (Start, which Gorby needs to lock in his nuclear advantage).

Moscow has pulled a fast one on us by breaking its word on troop withdrawals. After the deal was struck, the Soviets renamed three divisions of army troops "naval adjuncts" — pure bad-faith dealing. Gorbachev now grandly offers to settle for half his subterfuge; if Bush buys that, he sets himself up as a patsy right down the line.

We should insist on an end to "data denial" — the Soviets' pretense that they have in place only half the tanks and artillery we can count. When we gave them the list of their own forces to be reduced, the Soviet negotiators froze.

2. After credibility is re-established on previously agreed troop pullbacks and tank destruction, remove the non-starters stopping Start.

This means dismissing "down-loading," the unverifiable Soviet promise to load only two warheads on submarine ballistic missiles already proven capable of holding seven.

Do not let them sell new wine in old bottles. Ronald Reagan won a real reduction by half the huge SS-18's targeted on the U.S. But the Soviets tricked us by vastly improving the accuracy of the remaining half: pre-agreement, two Soviet warheads were needed to take out one of our hard targets, but now it's down to one.

Thus, the "reduction" in missile numbers does not reduce their threat to destroy our ability to retaliate. (Go explain that to Marlin.)

3.Stop treating those substantial disagreements caused by the Soviets' duplicity, as well as their resistance to on-site inspection of mobile missiles, as mere "technical differences."

The more Bush minimizes the made-in-Moscow difficulties, the more Mr. Gorbachev will say "then let's split the difference." (The moment James Baker hears the word "split" he says, "Where do I sign?") It's no negotiating victory to come out half-tricked; let's not permit the Soviets to disavow hard-won agreements.

Now to the original question: Should a summit be linked to a treaty-signing?

Yes, we should let Gorbachev strut the summit stage if he delivers on his agreement to reduce conventional forces in Europe without renaming the Red Army the Coast Guard.

No, we should not tie the summit to a Start treaty because that would help him pressure us. If he wants to sell a lowball warhead count on his subs and modernize his SS-18's, we can apply intolerable economic pressure to stop such trickery by speeding the development of our nuclear shield.

The hard-line plan: First get a CFE treaty. Then agree to hold a summit for its signing. There, while boosting each other's ratings, squeeze him on Baltic independence.

Then, in that wide-ranging context, reassert the need for a verifiable, Senate-confirmable deal to really reduce his strategic missile threat.

Date rape is difficult to prove, experts say

WASHINGTON (AP) — The crime of "date rape" presents special problems for police and the courts, experts say, with prosecutions often hinging on credibility battles between a defendant and his alleged victim.

"Police and prosecutors often respond to acquaintance rape by doing a lot of victim blaming," said Denise Snyder, director of a rape crisis center in the nation's capital.

But Rikki Klieman, a Boston defense lawyer, said the accused man faces conviction on the woman's word alone.

"To think the system today is tilted against alleged victims is nonsense," she said.

Both women and other experts agree that a much-publicized report of rape at the Kennedy mansion in Palm Beach, Fla., illustrates how difficult discovering the truth can be in such cases.

William Kennedy Smith, nephew of Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, was named in a criminal complaint filed by a woman who told police she met Smith at a nightclub. She said she accompanied him to his family's home, where he attacked her.

No charges have been filed, but police say their investigation is continuing. Police Chief Joseph Terlizzese told reporters he was "99 percent sure" a sexual assault occurred.

"In Palm Beach, these allegations are being taken seriously," said Leslie Wolfe, executive director of the Center for Women Policy Studies here. "That would not have been the case 20 years ago, and even today women are less likely to be believed in acquaintance-rape cases."

A report compiled by the Senate Judiciary Committee staff and issued last month says the number of reported rapes nationwide in one year exceeded 100,000 for the first time in 1990.

The committee's chairman, Sen. Joseph Biden, D-Del., has proposed legislation calling for tougher criminal punishment for sex crimes and allowing rape victims to sue their assailants.

No one knows how many rapes go unreported, but Ms. Snyder said she believes law enforcement officials only are told about one in 10.

"Our society still does a lot of victim blaming in the crime of rape. A lot of women don't want to deal with that," Ms. Snyder said. "This is much more prevalent in acquaintance rapes than in 'stranger rapes' but in both there is a tendency to put the blame on the victim's shoulders."

Nationally, at least 60 percent of all such reported sex crimes are classified as acquaintance or date rapes.

"Many rapes go unreported because of women's fear that the police will treat them poorly," said Ms. Klieman, who prosecuted rape cases as a member of the district attorney's staff in Middlesex County, Mass., from 1977 to 1981. "But these women are wrong. Today, that belief is a fallacy."

Of the reported cases, a tiny percentage — some estimate fewer than 5 percent — result in criminal trials.

How many rape reports are false?

Ms. Snyder, whose crisis center's hotline received an average of 382 calls a month last year, said FBI statistics show no higher percentages of false reports for rape than any other crime.

But Ms. Klieman questions how such statistics are compiled.

"I know that in my state a rape defendant is allowed to show prior false accusations by the alleged victim. That's not the case with any other crime."

She said acquaintance-rape complaints often end up a credibility contest between the accused and accuser.

"The most frightening case, from the defense point of view, is what I call the 'You should have sent her flowers case' in which a respectable man meets a woman, sleeps with her and then doesn't pursue her. Next thing he knows, he's being accused of rape," Ms. Klieman said.

Ms. Wolfe called the image of a scorned woman falsely accusing someone of rape for revenge or attention "an ancient, dangerous stereotype — a medieval view of woman as madonna or whore."

Firm unplugs last manual switchboard

By Joe Bigham

KERMAN, Calif. (AP) — They're pulling the plug on California's last manual telephone switchboard, ending an era when an operator's nimble fingers, not a soulless computer, connected the caller to the rest of the world.

"Cord boards" were romanticized in movies. The operators were familiar, friendly voices willing to give extra help in towns across America.

"When I got out of school, this was it," Glennda Kountz said. She became an operator for Kerman Telephone Co. after high school almost 20 years ago.

But a computer was being installed this week to replace Kerman Telephone's four manual units. Rena McDonald of California Telephone Association said it is the last cord board used by a commercial telephone company in the state.

"There might be a farmer somewhere who connects a cord board to his barn," said McDonald, adding that there still are manual switchboards in some rural parts of the nation.

A light glows near the top of a black backboard when someone wants to make an operator-assisted call in Kerman. An operator plugs one cord into the lighted slot, finds out where the call should go, plugs a second cord into an outgoing trunk line and dials the number.

"I hate to see it go, but I'm looking forward to new challenges," Kountz said. Operators handle 1,000-2,000 long-distance calls a day plus about 300 requests for information.

Customers in Kerman already dial most long-distance calls directly, but they have had to dial zero to reach the manual equipment for credit card or collect calls.

And some older residents dial zero to get special service.

"They ask us to 'call my daughter at Bank of America,'" Kountz said. "We know who she is because we've been here so long. We just go ahead and dial it.

"Or they say they want the little store on the corner. You give them that number. That's the good part, dealing with the community."

The telephone system in this farming community of 5,400 some 200 miles north of Los Angeles has been upgraded bit by bit since William Sebastian bought the company for $40,000 in 1946.

His first telephone office "originally was a beer parlor," Sebastian recalled. "I lived in the lean-to on the side."

Now 75, Sebastian recalls that his first 1930s-style switchboard was more antiquated than the one he's replacing now.

"Customers turned a crank, and only half the cords worked," he said.

Some computer functions, such as recording calls and billing, have been added gradually to the current manual switchboard.

"We use the old principle of doing a better job at less cost or doing more at the same price," Sebastian said.

Only one person at a time will operate the computer-based switchboard scheduled to start up next week. But Sebastian said his eight operators will keep their jobs, transferring to other areas or adding duties to their board work. All speak Spanish so they can serve the area's large number of farm workers who frequently call home to Mexico.

"There's been a romance we've been able to enjoy," Sebastian said of his years in the phone business. "We've seen a lot of history go by."

Most refugees receive food, relief officials say

UZUMLU, Turkey (AP) — Three weeks after the Kurdish exodus from Iraq, an international relief effort has succeeded in feeding most of the refugees camping in the Turkish mountains, say relief officials and refugees.

But water shortages and medical care remain serious problems for the 800,000 Kurds along the border.

"They have basic food. In that sense, there was a turning point reached last week," said Constantin Sokoloff, a field officer for the U.N. high commissioner for refugees.

"Psychologically, people are getting better, they're settling down," he said.

Still, despite the international outpouring of aid, scores of refugees are dying each day on the border of preventable diseases, relief workers and government officials say. Dehydration and the resulting severe diarrhea have killed many infants.

"Sanitation really is the main thing," said Dr. Sandra Allaire of Canada, who is working with the International Committee of the Red Cross at Uzumlu, a camp of about 50,000 people in a mountain basin on the border.

Meanwhile, the situation for an estimated 1 million Kurdish refugees in Iran remains "critical," the U.N. refugee office said.

Omar Bakhet, head of the office's field operations in Iran, said some supplies are getting through, but only slowly — and not enough.

Iran, rather than the international community, continues to bear the main burden of the relief effort, estimated to cost $10 million a day, Bakhet said.

Four Belgian transport planes left Brussels on Sunday for Ourumieh in western Iran with emergency aid and a medical team aboard. The aid, being coordinated with the European Community, consists of tents, an infirmary and blankets for 3,000 refugees, officials said.

Ms. Allaire said disease would continue to spread rapidly in the Turkish camp at Uzumlu unless it had clean water and toilets. Doctors warn the accumulation of human waste on the ground and in streams at the camps may also lead to epidemics.

The camp is the worst-supplied of the three main refugee settlements on the Turkish border. Still, all over the camp, women roll out pita bread on wooden boards and cook beans and noodles over campfires.

The rubbery brown wrappers from U.S. military Meals-Ready-to-Eat carpet the ground.

"The Americans and the British send us very good things," said a 23-year-old medical student who identified herself only as Kurdistan.

But there is little sign of water. And distribution of food remains uneven, with the strongest refugees often able to grab the most packages parachuted onto the hillsides by U.S. and British aircraft.

"The food is OK, but there's no milk," complained Khayria Ramadan, cradling her sunburned, 1½-month-old baby next to her campfire.

The first group of about 60 U.S. soldiers arrived at the camp on Sunday. They will rush in water and medicine by helicopter.

The U.S. soldiers and Turkish workers have begun digging latrines at some camps. But Uzumlu still lacks any toilets. The stench of excrement wafts through the air.

"As the weather gets hotter, it will get worse," said Allaire.

Special Forces troops and Red Cross workers on Sunday were investigating ways to pipe stream water to the refugees at Uzumlu. The U.S. troops also will provide desperately needed medical care to the camp.

Until a few days ago, only five Turkish doctors were providing medical care for the refugees. On Sunday, at the main mobile hospital, elderly men and women lay on soiled mattresses on the dirt floor.

About 50 women clutching sickly babies sat patiently on the ground outside, waiting.

"There are no hospitals — these are for animals," said Mohammed Omar, 37, an English teacher from Dohuk, walking through a dirt-floored tent filled with scrawny babies hooked to rehydration fluids.

Gautier Lambot, a logistics director of the aid group Doctors Without Borders, said the dirt road to the camp, which frequently became a nearly impassable sea of mud, had prevented supplies from getting through.

"We work with the conditions we have," he said.

The U.S. soldiers, from Fort Devens, Mass., promised quick improvements at the camp. They plan to build a special drop zone so aid packages parachuted from planes do not kill and injure any more refugees, said Maj. Robert Vasta, 35, of Croton-on-Hudson, N.Y.

U.S., Vietnam to set up MIA office

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — The United States and Vietnam have agreed to set up a U.S. office in Hanoi to speed the search for American servicemen still missing from the Vietnam War, the countries said in a statement.

The move could help pave the way for formal U.S. recognition of the Communist government in Hanoi.

The agreement came during a visit to the Vietnamese capital by special presidential envoy Gen. John W. Vessey, who met with Vietnamese Foreign Minister Nguyen Co Thach last week.

A joint statement said the two sides agreed to set up an office in Hanoi "on a temporary basis." The statement, dated Saturday, was carried by the Vietnam News Agency and made available by a Western embassy in Bangkok on Sunday.

It said the office would concentrate on improving joint field investigations, planning for joint searches and follow-ups on alleged sightings of Americans.

The issue of Americans missing in action has cast a shadow over U.S.-Vietnamese relations since the close of the Vietnam war, which ended 16 years ago. Nearly 1,700 Americans are still listed as missing.

The United States has told Vietnam that speeding up the search for MIAs is one of two conditions for normalizing ties between the countries.

The other prerequisite is for Vietnam to help end the civil war in Cambodia, where a Vietnamese-installed government has been fighting U.S.-backed rebels for more than 10 years.

The Bush administration holds Vietnam partly responsible for the impasse in efforts by the five permanent members of the U.N. Security Council to broker a settlement in Cambodia.

Last week, Assistant Secretary of State Richard Solomon told the Vietnamese ambassador to the United Nations that as soon as a Cambodia settlement is signed by Vietnam and the other parties to the conflict, the United States would start the process of normalizing relations between the two countries.

This would include easing restrictions on the travel of Americans to Vietnam and lifting the U.S. trade embargo imposed on Vietnam's communist government in 1975.

Vietnam, one of the world's poorest countries, desperately wants the embargo lifted.

In the past few years, Vietnam has handed over the remains of some Americans, mostly airmen, and the Vessey team is expected to bring back more.

Hostage Steen turns 52

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Kidnapped American educator Alann Steen turns 52 Monday, his fourth birthday in the captivity of pro-Iranian Shiite Muslim radicals.

Steen, of Boston, and Jesse Turner, 43, of Boise, Idaho, were kidnapped on Jan. 24, 1987, from the campus of U.S.-affiliated Beirut University College, where they both taught. Their abductors were gunmen posing as Lebanese riot police.

Released hostages said Steen escaped in his first year of captivity, but was caught and badly beaten by his captors.

Steen's birthday coincides with the third visit in a month by Secretary of State James A. Baker III to Syria, the main power broker in Lebanon. Damascus has been instrumental in previous hostage releases.

Baker's first visit to Syria on March 14 brought optimism that the issue of the 13 Westerners missing in Lebanon, including six Americans, could be resolved soon.

Syrian Foreign Minister Farouk al-Sharaa told reporters after talks between Baker and President Hafez Assad that Syria would exert the "maximum effort" to help win the hostages' release.

However, Steen's kidnappers, Islamic Jihad for the Liberation of Palestine, were quick to stress their demand for the release of Arab detainees held by Israel and its proxy, the South Lebanon Army militia.

The kidnappers said in a statement released on March 19 that freedom for Shiite cleric Sheik Abdul Karim Obeid, an activist of the pro-Iranian Hezbollah, from an Israeli jail also would be an "encouraging prelude" for freeing Steen and Turner.

Asian businesses in El Paso enjoy boom

■ Even the Texas border cities of Laredo and Brownsville report a dramatic explosion of mom-and-pop Asian retailers in the past year or so.

By Paul Salopek
El Paso Times

EL PASO — Tony Park sat jauntily atop a tin ladder in his family store, talking sweet success. And, incidentally, scouting for shoplifters.

Customers — their baby strollers, bulging plastic bags and gum-chewing kids in tow — bustled noisily through his open doorway. They rifled through his racks of $16 chiffon dresses and $8 Taiwan-made blouses. And they bought.

And bought.

And bought.

"Now, every day, now Korean businessmen are coming. Everybody hears 'Hey, you know, you can make a lot of money in El Paso,'" declared Park — the latest Korean immigrant to open shop in South El Paso's Hispanic-dominated downtown shopping district.

Indeed, two blocks away, almost a third of South El Paso street's 100-plus border businesses are now manned by Asian families.

Call it a 100-year-old case of deja vu:

Downtown's long-vanished Chinatown district, once boasting the largest Asian community in Texas, is being reinvented by Koreans.

Korean merchants have been working unobtrusively in downtown El Paso for nearly a decade.

But a relatively stable peso — riding in the pockets of a renewed bonanza of Mexican shoppers — has turned that Korean trickle into a flood.

EL PASO'S KOREAN Chamber of Commerce estimates the number of Korean businesses has more than doubled to about 100 since 1988.

"I'm a slave. My father, he takes siestas in the car," cracked 20-year-old Park, who puts in 10-hour days, Monday through Saturday, and still manages to look dapper at closing time.

In the back of his small, tidy store, fiery Korean food simmered in an electric pot. Korean colleagues dropped in to gab with his middle-aged parents over such novelties as seat-belt fines. And his 17-year-old sister, Sandra, took turns after school manning the ladder lookout.

"Spent all our lives in clothing stores," Tony said, handing a ragged panhandler a dollar from his brand-new cash register. "We can't do anything outside clothing stores."

While the Korean migration has added cosmopolitan spice to the 1900s-vintage storefronts in El Paso's border shopping district, it isn't unique to the city.

Chamber of Commerce spokesmen in Calexico, Calif., Nogales, Ariz., and the Texas border cities of Laredo and Brownsville all report a dramatic explosion of mom-and-pop Asian retailers in the past year or so — most of them Koreans.

AND IN El Paso, at least, many feel unexpectedly at home. It's a twist of geography: the most recent wave is cutting a pioneering path north from South America.

"It's almost the same as Paraguay here. Same language. Same type of people," fledgling El Paso businessman Yong In Cho explained in perfect Spanish.

Propping his slippered feet on a display case of inexpensive watches, gloves, hats and pins at his new South El Paso clothing store, Cho said he ended up six blocks north of the U.S.-Mexico border because of South America's soured economy.

"No more opportunity there," agreed Park, whose family migrated from Seoul, South Korea, to Sao Paulo, Brazil, during South America's boom years in the 1970s.

After six months in El Paso, Park's shy parents still don't speak English because they don't need to.

The family's Casa Buena clothing store resounds instead with a polyglot of broken Spanish, fluid Portuguese and rapid-fire Korean.

When bustling South El Paso empties out on Sundays, the Parks also fall back on Korean.

DRIVING THEIR late-model minivan back to work from their West Side condominium on Mondays, they even bring along a touch of middle-class gentility and orderliness to the grafittied border-bargain streets.

'They're even settling in hole-in-the-wall places like Eagle Pass. We should be thankful they're settling here.'

— David Chew, West Central City representative

But doing business in South El Paso's dozen square blocks of shops, funky bars, sidewalk stalls and diners means facing the land of opportunity's rougher edges.

Johnny Lee sprinted out of his family's mercantile store.

But it was too late.

Two suspected shoplifters raced away down the crowded Stanton Street sidewalk — maybe with a filched pair of socks.

"Some of them live right behind the store," complained Lee, a sinewy 19-year-old Korean-American built like a bantamweight boxer. "They all get together. They think they can run us out of here."

"They" — the "cholos" — are a fixture in impoverished South El Paso's Hispanic neighborhoods. And the gang-oriented youths are dreaded universally by the Koreans.

"Everybody around here has problems with cholos, even Hispanics," said Lee, who helps oversee his family's cavernous store crammed with $1 pairs of women's pumps, colored ribbons, inexpensive china, plastic toy cars and nylon underwear.

"BUT (CHOLOS) do seem to hit Koreans. They say, 'Oh, they can't speak English and can't explain it to the police.' So they hit me."

Lee hits back: He keeps a stout broom handle next to his store doorway as a club.

El Paso Police Department spokesmen say the vandalism and thefts that plague rough-and-tumble South El Paso don't specifically target Koreans.

Nevertheless, racial tensions simmer in the maze of clothing stores and money-changing booths that elbow for space near El Paso's international bridges.

"They come in like ants and talk and talk until you're so confused that they've got you surrounded," said Maria Santaana, a 22-year veteran merchant who echoed a common fear about "Los Chinos."

Surrounded by piles of army packs, boots, canteen and bullet-proof vests in her military surplus store, Santaana complained that commercial rents have skyrocketed since the Koreans showed up.

Meanwhile, wild anecdotes about the Koreans' collective economic clout swirl like afternoon dust devils around the gritty streets of South El Paso.

One merchant who asked to remain nameless said Korean businessmen walked into his spacious, strategically located downtown building and offered him — pointblank — $1 million for the establishment.

"WHEN I REFUSED, they said, 'OK, $2 million,'" the longtime El Pasoan recalled in wonder.

Stunned real estate agencies confirm that South El Paso leases have ballooned from $10 to as high as $30 per square foot in the past two years — due partly at least to Korean demand.

"It's amazing for this market," said Mark Blaugruend of Recon Real Estate Consultants. "When they don't have their own money for it, they have access through friends — like a Korean (money) pool."

Not surprisingly, relations weren't much smoother when an earlier generation of Asian entrepreneurs set up shop in South El Paso.

Arriving as railroad laborers in the 1880s, El Paso's Asian community included more than 700 Chinese citizens by 1900.

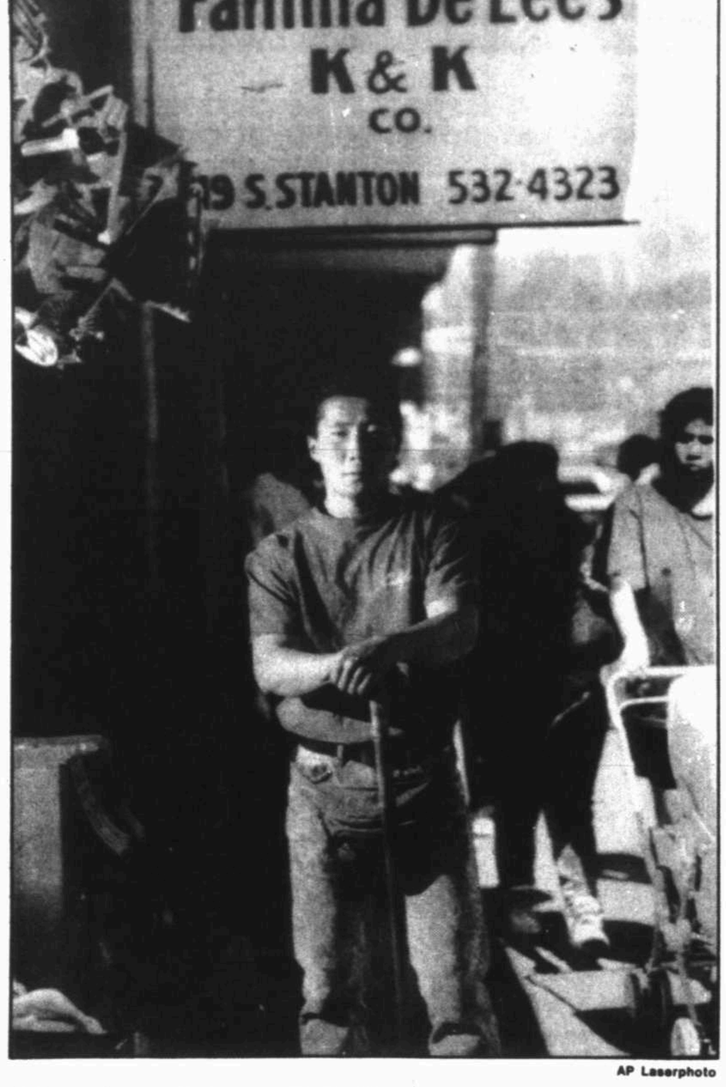

Back then, the city's Chinatown — located almost exactly where today's Koreans have opened businesses and a poor barrio even in pioneer days — supported more than a dozen laundries.

There were several Chinese groceries, Chinese gambling shops and — scandalizing the local Anglo population — a profusion of opium dens.

Even then, Chinese business competition stoked flare-ups of raw, frontier racism.

In 1882, for example, an El Paso matron was awarded a silver cup by fellow Anglo citizens in appreciation for attempting to shoot a Chinese laundryman with a revolver.

BY THE 1920S, most of El Paso's Chinese had left or been assimilated: Chinatown quietly faded from view.

AP Laserphoto

Johnny Lee, 19, is an ethnic Korean merchant whose family story is one of the oldest Korean establishments in El Paso. As in other border cities, Korean business people are thriving in downtown El Paso.

Today's reincarnation worries in an oblique way about that same problem.

"Our children are already Americanized, they speak Korean but prefer English. They don't want to go into business," said David Yoon, the president of the Korean chamber.

"We want to build a Korean school," Yoon said. "And we would like to get involved in the city. We are too new, mostly first generation."

Yoon's office occupies a tiny corner of a downtown warehouse.

That itself is perhaps the biggest show of Korean business muscle.

Grandly renamed "Perlas Plaza," the rainbow-painted, $550,000 brick behemoth on Paisano Street is being completely remodeled into an indoor flea market with dozens of stalls.

The bulk of the spaces already are earmarked for Korean merchants — in the eyes of old downtown merchants, a clannish trademark.

Still, the few El Paso officials aware of such projects welcome them.

"THEY'RE EVEN settling in hole-in-the-wall places like Eagle Pass (Texas). We should be thankful they're settling here," said West-Central City Rep. David Chew, a descendant of old Chinatown whose grandparents moved to El Paso from Mexico during the Mexican Revolution.

Tony Park, for his part, would rather be somewhere a little greener. But then again, maybe not.

"I think in a couple of years, downtown will be a Korea-town," he predicted. "Less than five years."

DEAR ABBY

Organ donors acquire legacy through their gift of life

DEAR ABBY: I am 17 years old and have had my driver's license for more than one year.

Van Buren

While growing up I considered donating my organs, but my mind wasn't made up until I saw a letter in your column. The line I remember best was the statement about "giving my eyes" so a blind person could see.

I would really appreciate it if you would run that piece again. It changed my outlook on donating organs, and maybe it will change someone else's. — JOLYN OWEN, NEWARK, OHIO

DEAR JOLYN: The letter you recall came from the father of a boy named Michael, and now is an appropriate time to rerun it because this is National Organ/Tissue Donor Awareness Week:

DEAR ABBY: Last May, our 22-year-old son, Michael, was involved in a motorcycle accident. He was pronounced brain-dead three days later. Because of an article in your column, he carried an organ donor card in his wallet. The Lord took our precious son 10 days later, but we were comforted knowing that Michael gave two blind people the gift of sight, and a young father who had been on a kidney machine for three years is now living a normal life.

Abby, please let your readers know how to will their organs after death. — MICHAEL'S FATHER

DEAR FATHER: My heart goes out to you and your family on the loss of your beloved son. May I again offer this beautiful essay written by Robert N. Test:

TO REMEMBER ME

At a certain moment a doctor will determine that my brain has ceased to function and that, for all intents and purposes, my life has stopped.

When that happens, do not attempt to instill artificial life into my body by the use of a machine. And don't call this my "deathbed." Call it my "bed of life," and let my body be taken from it to help others lead fuller lives.

Give my sight to a man who has never seen a sunrise, a baby's face or love in the eyes of a woman.

Give my heart to a person whose own heart has caused nothing but endless days of pain.

Give my blood to the teen-ager who has been pulled from the wreckage of his car, so that he might live to see his grandchildren play.

Give my kidneys to one who depends on a machine to exist from week to week.

Take my bones, every muscle, every fiber and nerve in my body and find a way to make a crippled child walk.

Explore every corner of my brain. Take my cells, if necessary, and let them grow so that someday a speechless boy will shout at the crack of a bat and a deaf girl will hear the sound of rain against her windows.

Burn what is left of me and scatter the ashes to the winds to help the flowers grow.

If you must bury something, let it be my faults, my weaknesses and all my prejudice against my fellow man.

Give my soul to God. If by chance you wish to remember me, do it with a kind deed or word to someone who needs you. If you do all I have asked, I will live forever.

READERS: I have carried a donor card for more than 20 years and feel there is nothing I can leave after my death that will be of greater value. Donor forms are available by writing: The Living Bank, P.O. Box 6725, Houston, Texas 77265. It is strictly non-profit, operating on a shoestring as a public service — so please be a sport and send a dollar or two with your request. (It's tax-deductible.)

Bush to speak at graduations

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush has accepted invitations by five universities to deliver commencement addresses, including both the U.S. Military Academy and the U.S. Air Force Academy, the White House announced recently.

Bush will speak at the Air Force Academy in Colorado Springs, Colo. on May 29 and at the Military Academy in West Point, N.Y. on June 1.

Bush had to cancel a planned commencement appearance at West Point last year beause of a visit by Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev.

The president also will speak at the University of Michigan at Ann Arbor, Mich., on May 4; at Hampton University in Hampton, Va. on May 12 and at the California Institute of Technology in Pasadena on June 14.

High hopes

Al Kaufman, an attorney representing 13 property-poor school districts in Texas, spoke at the dedication of a new primary school in San Elizario Saturday. The proposed bill will help balance education spending, he said. "The rich will lose some (funding)," Kaufman said, "but they will still have enough."

New workers' comp law goes on trial

The State

'What's at stake here is very significant to the working population of our state.'

— Bill Whitehurst, AFL-CIO co-counsel

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Lawyers, doctors and national work-safety experts are scheduled to descend on Eagle Pass Monday for a trial in which Texas' new system of compensating workers who are injured on the job is being challenged.

The business-backed workers' compensation reform law was approved by the Legislature in 1989 and signed by then-Gov. Bill Clements after two bruising special legislative sessions.

Last year, the Texas AFL-CIO challenged the law, saying it will lower disability benefits for most injured workers, restrict an employees' access to court and discriminate against Hispanics by reducing benefits for injured farm workers.

A Maverick County judge agreed that major provisions of the bill probably were unconstitutional, and he granted a temporary court order in December to block implementation of the law.

But the state attorney general appealed the decision, which essentially allowed the law to slip into effect Jan. 1.

On Monday, the trial before State District Judge Rey Perez centers on whether to grant a permanent court order to block the law. Attorneys for the AFL-CIO and the state say the trial could last up to two weeks.

"What's at stake here is very significant to the working population of our state," said Bill Whitehurst, an Austin attorney, who is co-counsel in the for the AFL-CIO.

"Our position is that in the name of efficiency and trying to reduce insurance premiums, the Legislature has done a great deal of disservice to the workers," he said.

Whitehurst said he will call witnesses with expertise in job-related injuries, including former U.S. Secretary of Labor Ray Marshall, and Dr. John Gunn of Dallas, former orthopedic surgeon for the Dallas Cowboys football team.

Brad Gahm, vice president for governmental affairs with the Texas Association of Business, however, said the claims made by labor and trial lawyers about the law are "scurrilous."

"The filing of the lawsuit was a bad faith statement by trial lawyers and a small group of labor union leaders who lost the public debate in the Legislature and now want a judge in the far-removed jurisdiction of Eagle Pass to give them a victory," he said.

Under the old system, businesses complained of skyrocketing workers' comp insurance premiums, which had increased nearly 150 percent over a four-year period. They blamed that on the cost of litigating disputes with employees over compensation benefits.

The trial comes at a time that many insurance companies writing workers' comp policies in Texas say that premiums continue to be inadequate, even though employers say they can't afford to pay the rates being charged.

Suspect held in shooting death of deputy

LYTLE (AP) — A 60-year-old San Antonio resident is being held in the Atascosa County Jail on $2 million bond for the murder of a South Texas lawman and the attempted murder of his two colleagues.

Juan Flores Vargas, was charged with capital murder and arraigned Saturday night in the death of Chief Deputy Ken Meister of the Zavala County Sheriff's Department, said Atascosa County Sheriff Tommy Williams.

Meister was shot from ambush as two other undercover officers attempted to sell $1.3 million worth of marijuana in a reverse sting operation, Williams said.

The other two officers returned fire, killing the other two suspects and wounding Vargas, who was treated and released from Wilford Hall Army Medical Center late Saturday.

The shooting took place on a dirt road about 20 miles southwest of San Antonio as Meister, 45, and two other officers met with the three would-be drug buyers, the sheriff said.

Meister walked towards two of the suspects as a third hid in nearby bushes. It was this third man who allegedly shot Meister in the back with a .22-caliber rifle.

"They didn't bring anything," Williams said. "It was a set up, they were going to kill everybody."

Waltrip wins

NORTH WILKESBORO, N.C. (AP) — Darrell Waltrip broke a 34-race winless streak on Sunday, keeping his car out of trouble and capturing the First Union 400 NASCAR race at North Wilkesboro Speedway.

Waltrip, who passed Jimmy Spencer with 52 laps remaining on the .625-mile track, became the seventh different driver to win this season in as many events. He also has won 10 of 34 races on this short track in the North Carolina mountains.

But the 44-year-old veteran from Franklin, Tenn., had to avoid one more pileup, the 17th caution flag of the day, to capture his 80th NASCAR victory. Waltrip became the fifth driver to reach that plateau.

Ernie Irvan, Dick Trickle and Dale Jarrett spun between turn one and two and forced a restart with 21 laps left.

Waltrip, a car owner for the first time this season, got off quickly to open up a 10-car lead on Dale Earnhardt and hold off a late charge by the defending Winston Cup champion to win by 1.5 seconds. Waltrip's last victory was in September 1989 at Martinsville, Va.

The average speed was 79.603 mph and 95 of the 400 laps were run under caution.

Draft dawns on defense

Cowboys wanted lineman all along

Associated Press

IRVING — The Dallas Cowboys made University of Miami defensive tackle Russell Maryland the first pick in the NFL draft, saying he — not Raghib "Rocket" Ismail — was their No. 1 choice all along.

The 6-1, 275-pound Maryland rejoined his college coach, Jimmy Johnson, on Sunday following a trade the Cowboys say they made 48 hours earlier with him in mind.

"We 100 percent traded up to get Russell Maryland," Johnson said. "We had every intention of doing what we had to to get Russell."

The Cowboys traded their No. 11 pick, a second round pick, and undisclosed veteran players to New England for the first pick — which many assumed would be Ismail, the Notre Dame wide receiver-kick returner.

"We made good faith negotiations with the Rocket but his numbers were totally out of our range," said Dallas owner Jerry Jones. "We found out pretty quick he was headed for Canada."

Ismail signed with Toronto of the Canadian Football League early Sunday in a deal that could pay him more than $26 million for a four-year period.

Johnson said he was afraid of losing Maryland, whom he recruited out of high school and signed for the Hurricanes.

"If I had a chance in 100 to lose him, I didn't want to risk it. I didn't want to be feeling sick on Sunday night."

Jones said an agreement had been reached with Maryland and agent Leigh Steinberg which was over a $1 million per year for five years plus signing bonus.

Jones also said an agreement has been reached with Tennessee wide receiver Alvin Harper, who was taken with the 12th pick in the first round.

"We'll have both contracts signed Sunday night," Jones said.

Harper caught the Cowboys' eye when he was the most valuable player in the Senior Bowl.

In the third round, the Cowboys took Florida linebacker Godfrey Myles, California offensive guard James Richards and Central State (Ohio) offensive tackle Eric Williams.

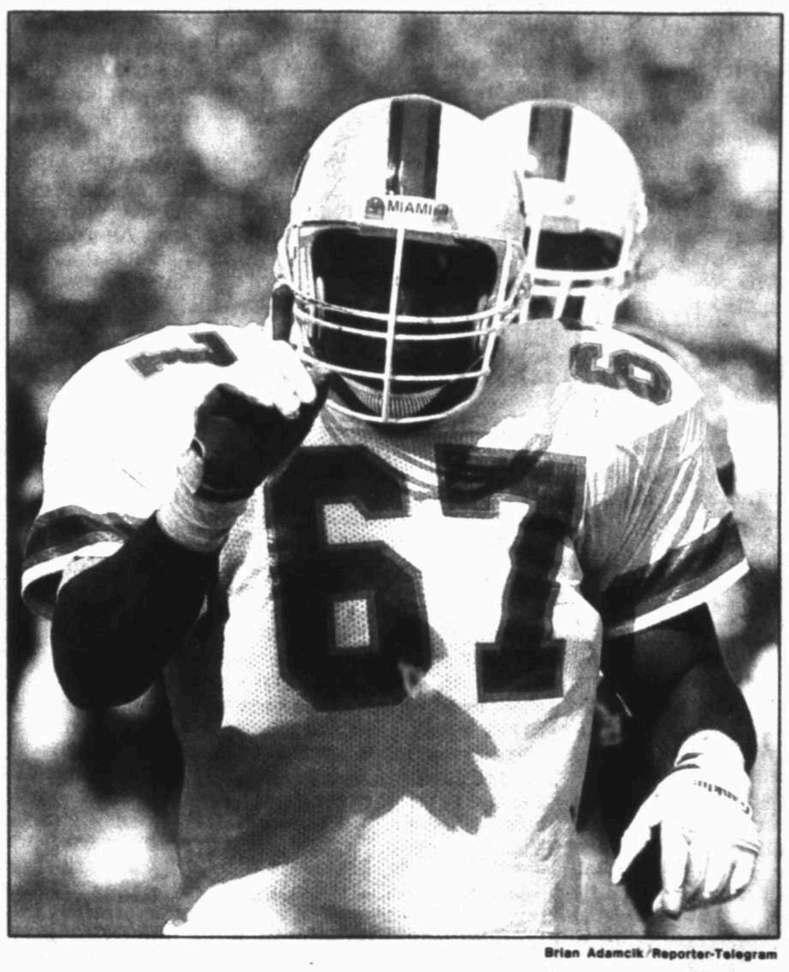

The Cowboys knew they were going to take Maryland on Friday night even though they negotiated with Ismail's advisers on Saturday just to see what it would cost them.

"We asked for and received an offer but we could see Ismail was off to Canada," Jones said.

"We knew two days ago Russell was our pick," Johnson said.

Maryland, the Outland Trophy winner and Associated Press All-American, said he was "flabbergasted and overwhelmed" to be the No. 1 pick. "It's going to be great being reunited with coach Johnson," Maryland said.

Maryland said his short stature didn't mean a thing.

Maryland ousts Ismail at head of NFL class

■ NFL teams jockey for defenders in the early going of Sunday's college draft after Ismail heads for Toronto.

N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — Raghib (Rocket) Ismail headed to Canada and threw the NFL draft into disarray Sunday. The Dallas Cowboys then began a parade of surprises by choosing defensive lineman Russell Maryland of Miami with the first pick.

The decision by Ismail — who received a deal that could be worth up to $26.2 million over four years to play with the Toronto Argonauts — helped create one of the most intriguing draft days in recent memory.

Among other things, teams made a record run on defense in a draft virtually all the experts said beforehand was a bummer for defensive players. Never before had more than the first three players in a row been chosen on defense, but Sunday the first six picked were defensive players as were 14 of 27 first-rounders overall.

"Nobody could anticipate any of that," said coach John Robinson of the Los Angeles Rams, who expected to get Maryland with the No. 5 pick but instead was able to choose Notre Dame cornerback Todd Lyght.

"I think we had all decided, myself included, that ... if we were looking at both Lyght and Maryland, then it would be Lyght," said Jeff Fisher, the Rams' defensive coordinator. "But none of our scenarios included Lyght."

Cleveland selected UCLA safety Eric Turner with the second pick, the highest a defensive back was chosen since 1956. Eric Swann, a 311-pound, semi-pro defensive lineman, was cho-

Oilers beef up the secondary

Associated Press

HOUSTON — The Houston Oilers, who traded away their first round selection for second-round depth, made Indiana free safety Mike Dumas the first pick of the second round in Sunday's NFL draft.

They followed up by taking Arizona defensive back Darryll Lewis and center John Flannery of Syracuse with their two remaining second round selections.

Defensive coordinator Jim Eddy said he was glad to get Dumas and Lewis because so many defensive backs were picked ahead of them.

"We felt the top four or five (defensive backs) would go early but they dipped a little farther down," Eddy said. "I was a little nervous for awhile but the one we really wanted was still there."

Dumas, 5-10, 178, will play free safety for the Oilers but he reminded defensive backs coach Pat Thomas, a former All-Pro cornerback, of himself.

"He reminds me of myself when I played," Thomas said. "He is well suited for what we ask our guys to do. We try to get guys that are very aggressive and smart enough to be in the right place at the right time."

Offensive line coach Bob Young said Flannery, 6-3, 304, would give the Oilers depth.

"I believe he could compete for a starting job this year and next year for sure," Young said.

The Oilers benched center Jay Pennison for the final game of the season in 1990 and moved tackle Bruce Matthews to center. Young said Matthews would go to training camp as the center.

There were only 27 selections in the first round, making Dumas the 28th pick, normally a first-round slot.

Will Dumas negotiate as a first rounder?

"I haven't thought about that, but thanks for the information," Dumas said.

Dumas was more concerned about just getting drafted.

"When the first round ended, the anxiety started to build up," Dumas said. "Then I got that telephone call and the tension eased a little bit."

Dumas finished second on the team with 102 tackles last season.

He moved from cornerback to free safety after coming to Indiana. He batted down three passes and intercepted three others for 152 yards in returns, the second highest season total in school history.

"My preference is playing whether it's cornerback or safety, I just want to be out there and play," Dumas said. "I was kind of an aggressive corner. I could make the plays instinctively."

Dumas returned an interception a school-record 99 yards for a touchdown in the season ending 28-14 victory over Purdue.

Dumas said he's always had to prove himself because of his size.

"Size isn't always the most important factor, it has a lot to do with heart," Dumas said.

Diablos roll past Haloes in slugfest

■ EL Paso comes up with an 18-hit attack that defeats the Midland Angels 20-10 in the rubber game of their Texas League series.

By Terry Williamson
Sports Editor

Oh, if only Midland designated pitcher Jeff Barns had been the starter for the Angels Sunday night at Angels Stadium. But he wasn't — El Paso 20, Midland 10.

The Diablos climbed to 8-2 on the season by shelling three Midland pitchers for 18 hits, including six doubles, a triple and three homers.

But forget about the negatives. Jeff Barns, an infielder who only gets to pitch when things are out of hand and rested since last August, retired all six batters he faced, becoming the staff's ERA leader.

Were El Paso runners completely out of gas from running around the bases? Not according to Barns.

"It was just my good stuff that got them," Barns said before quickly adding, "Let's just hope this isn't a career move.

"Really, there is no pressure on you when you go in a game like this one. You just try to stop the bleeding."

Well, there was plenty of bleeding before the arrival of Barns. El Paso scored at will with everyone in the Diablo lineup scoring at least once. Only John Jaha, the Texas League RBI leader with 20, failed to get a hit, but he walked four times and scored three times.

As if the Diablos needed any help, Midland aided the cause with five errors while losing the series 3-2 to El Paso. Midland ends its first homestand of the year with a 4-6 record.

Nicklaus in runaway

Associated Press

PALM BEACH GARDENS, Fla. — Jack Nicklaus won the PGA Seniors Championship by six strokes.

It wasn't that close.

It wasn't a surprise.

"Just what I expected," Lee Trevino said.

"That's what happens when the best player in the world is playing good," Chi Chi Rodriguez said Sunday after Nicklaus' runaway victory.

He was in command after building an eight-shot lead in the third round Saturday and finished with a 271 total.

In the final 18 holes, Nicklaus coasted. He led by nine shots with nine holes to go and was 10 in front with seven to go. He needed only a closing 70 to score his fourth victory in six career starts among golf's over-50 set.

In those six starts, including four in his rookie season among the seniors last year, he is 71 under par for 23 rounds.

In those tournaments, only three players have finished ahead of him: Trevino in the 1990 Senior U.S. Open, and Gary Player and Rodriguez in this event a year ago.

None was close this time. But, then, neither was anyone else.

Player, the defending champion and a three-time winner of this title, matched par 72 and was 15 behind at 286.

Trevino appeared to injure himself on a shot from the deep rough, but said it "was just a spasm. I'm OK."

He shot 71 and trailed Nicklaus by 16 at 287. Rodriguez was one more back at 288, after a 73.

Cubs waste another Dawson slam

Associated Press

PITTSBURGH — Don Slaught said he'd never seen anything like it. Andy Van Slyke predicted he never would again. And the word most used in the Pittsburgh Pirates' clubhouse after one of the most dramatic comebacks in the club's 104-year history was "unbelievable."

NL

Slaught's two-run double capped a six-run rally in the 11th inning and the Pittsburgh Pirates survived Andre Dawson's second grand slam in three days to stun the Chicago Cubs 13-12 Sunday.

In one of the most dramatic games of the 1,770 played between the two National League rivals since 1900, the Pirates came back from a 7-2 deficit to tie it in the ninth and then overcame Dawson's slam in the 11th.

"I won't be able to sleep tonight," Bobby Bonilla said. "I've never seen a game like this. We've got some highlights for the highlight film now."

With Chicago leading 12-7, reliever Heath Slocumb walked Jose Lind and Curtis Wilkerson and Orlando Merced singled to start the 11th, loading the bases with no outs and bringing on Mike Bielecki, the Cubs' sixth pitcher. Jay Bell doubled home two runs and Van Slyke's sacrifice fly made it 12-10.

Bonilla walked before Barry Bonds, who had struck out four times and was 1-for-26, singled to slice the Cubs' lead to one run. With one out and the bases loaded, Slaught hit a long drive over center fielder Jerome Walton's head to score Bonilla and Bonds standing up.

Giants 1, Astros 0

SAN FRANCISCO — Rookie Steve Decker homered with two outs in the ninth inning and San Francisco beat Houston as the Giants' staff extended its scoreless streak to 23 innings.

Decker's fourth homer of the season came on a 1-1 pitch from reliever Curt Schilling (0-1). The Giants completed a three-game sweep and posted consecutive shutouts for the first time since Aug. 23, 1989.

Braves 3, Reds 2

ATLANTA — Charlie Leibrandt gave up two runs in eight innings as the Atlanta Braves beat Jose Rijo and the Cincinnati Reds.

Leibrandt (1-1) allowed six hits, struck out one and walked four as the Braves evened their season series with the defending World Series champions at 2-2. Kent Mercker got the last three outs for his first save.

Cardinals 7, Phillies 6

ST. LOUIS — Ray Lankford scored from second base on a groundout when he knocked the ball loose from catcher Darren Daulton in the 10th inning and the St. Louis Cardinals beat Philadelphia.

Lankford drew a one-out walk from Mitch Williams (0-2) and stole second. After Williams intentionally walked Felix Jose, Gerald Perry grounded into a forceout at second, and Lankford kept running.

Dodgers 6, Padres 0

SAN DIEGO — Darryl Strawberry hit his first home run for the Los Angeles Dodgers and Ramon Martinez pitched a five-hitter and delivered a two-run single.

Strawberry's solo shot in the seventh inning ended the longest season-opening drought of his career.

Mets 9, Expos 5

MONTREAL — Kevin Elster homered and drove in four runs and Vince Coleman got three hits to lead New York past Montreal.

Coleman's RBI triple keyed a three-run rally in the seventh inning that put New York ahead 4-2.

Spurs clinch Midwest on final day of season

Associated Press

NBA Roundup

SAN ANTONIO — The San Antonio Spurs won the NBA Midwest Division championship Sunday on the final day of the regular season, routing the Dallas Mavericks 135-101 while Utah was losing to Golden State 125-106.

Utah led the Spurs by a game going into Sunday, and had a tie-breaker edge over San Antonio so the Jazz needed only a home court victory over Golden State to wrap up the title.

"It was a fun game for us," Spurs coach Larry Brown said. "I'm proud of this team. Everything we've been through has been tough, but we still had a great season."

San Antonio, plagued by injuries much of the year, finished the regular season with a 55-27 record, one short of the franchise best set last year. Dallas ended a troubled season 28-54.

The Spurs never trailed in the game, and late in the third quarter led by 41 points.

Rockets 131, Nuggets 125

HOUSTON — Sleepy Floyd scored 15 of his 25 points in the pivotal fourth quarter as the Houston Rockets defeated Denver and set a franchise record for victories in a season with 52.

Hakeem Olajuwon led the Rockets with 26 points, 13 rebounds and 9 blocked shots. Olajuwon's 9 blocks gave him 221 for the season and the league title for the second year in a row.

Timberwolves 89, Bullets 87

LANDOVER, Md. — Tony Campbell made a 15-foot shot at the buzzer as the Minnesota Timberwolves overcame a 20-point deficit and matched the biggest comeback in the two-year history of the franchise.

Minnesota finished at 29-53, seven games better than last season but perhaps not good enough to save coach Bill Musselman's job.

Hawks 117, Celtics 105

BOSTON — Dominique Wilkins scored 24 points and John Battle 19 as the Atlanta Hawks opened a big lead and spoiled the return of Larry Bird from the injured list.

Glenn Rivers scored 16 points, Moses Malone and Duane Ferrell 13 each and Kevin Willis, Jon Koncak and Rumeal Robinson 8 apiece as the Hawks snapped a three-game losing streak and handed Boston a fourth defeat in a row in the 1990-91 regular season finale.

Bulls 108, Pistons 100

CHICAGO — Scottie Pippen scored 28 points and Will Perdue added a career high 15 as the Chicago Bulls beat Detroit to finish with a franchise-best record of 61-21.

Michael Jordan, seeing limited action, had 18 and Horace Grant finished with 17 for the Bulls.

Cavaliers 123, 76ers 110

RICHFIELD, Ohio — John Williams, perhaps playing his last game for Cleveland, scored 10 of his 20 points in the third quarter as the Cavaliers beat Philadelphia.

Cleveland finished its season by winning eight of its last 10 games.

Suns 135, Trail Blazers 118

PHOENIX — The Phoenix Suns grabbed homecourt advantage in the first round of the playoffs and snapped Portland's 16-game winning streak.

Kevin Johnson scored 23 points and Jeff Hornacek 22 for the Suns, and both sparked a third-period rally with 14 points apiece as Phoenix improved its record to 55-27.

Magic 120, Nets 110

ORLANDO, Fla. — Nick Anderson scored 26 points and Scott Skiles had 25 points and 18 assists as four Orlando players finished with more than 20 points.

The Magic, a second-year expansion team, finished the season with 31 victories, going 20-18 since Feb. 1. They have the best record among the four newest NBA teams.

Kings 105, Clippers 101

SACRAMENTO, Calif. — Antoine Carr scored 12 of his team's final 15 points and Jim Les tied a career high with 20 points as the Sacramento Kings beat the Los Angeles Clippers.

Warriors 125, Jazz 106

OAKLAND, Calif. — The Golden State Warriors denied Utah the Midwest Division title, routing the Jazz behind Mitch Richmond's 32 points.

Penguins top Capitals, 3-1

Associated Press

LANDOVER, Md. — Mario Lemieux had a goal and an assist and Tom Barrasso returned to stop 26 of 27 shots as the Pittsburgh Penguins beat the Washington Capitals 3-1 Sunday night to take a 2-1 lead in the Patrick Division finals.

NHL

The Capitals, beaten 7-6 in Game 2, were intent upon keeping the tempo at a controlled pace. They succeeded in doing so, but the offensive-minded Penguins beat Washington at its own game.

Bruins 3, Canadiens 2

MONTREAL — Ken Hodge scored with 1:21 remaining in the game and Andy Moog made 40 saves as the Boston Bruins beat Montreal to take the lead in their Adams Division final.

On the decisive rush, Raymond Bourque brought the puck up ice and passed to Craig Janney for a shot. Montreal goalie Patrick Roy made the save, but could not control the rebound, and Hodge tapped it in.

Petri Skriko and Bob Sweeney also scored for Boston, which leads 2-1 in the best-of-7 series.

White Sox finally win in new Comiskey

Associated Press

CHICAGO — The Chicago White Sox won their first game in three tries at the new Comiskey Park when Lance Johnson's RBI single capped a two-run, two-out rally in the ninth inning to beat the Detroit Tigers 5-4 Sunday.

AL

Chicago snapped its three-game losing streak and ended Detroit's four-game winning streak. The Tigers beat the White Sox 16-0 in the Comiskey opener.

Detroit led 4-3 with two outs in the ninth when Ozzie Guillen singled off Paul Gibson (2-1) and scored when right fielder Rob Deer dropped Scott Fletcher's fly ball for an error. Fletcher wound up on second and scored on Johnson's hit.

Brian Drahman (1-0) pitched one inning for his first major-league victory.

Twins 4, Angels 3

ANAHEIM, Calif. — Right fielder Max Venable's error allowed Kent Hrbek to score the tie-breaking run as the Minnesota Twins beat California to snap their seven-game losing streak.

Chili Davis led off with a single against Mark Eichhorn (0-1) and was forced on Hrbek's grounder. Hrbek stole second when catcher John Orton mishandled a pitchout and Junior Ortiz followed with a single to right. Hrbek continued home when the ball bounced off Venable's glove.

Brewers 11, Blue Jays 8

MILWAUKEE — Robin Yount's three-run homer with one out in the 10th inning gave the Milwaukee Brewers a victory over Toronto after the Blue Jays blew a five-run lead.

The Brewers, who trailed 8-3 before rallying for five runs in the eighth to tie the score, won the game against Frank Wills (0-1), the fifth Blue Jays pitcher.

With one out, Bill Spiers and Darryl Hamilton walked and Yount hit Wills' 3-1 pitch over the left-field wall for his third homer of the season.

Mariners 7, A's 2

SEATTLE — The Mariners completed a three-game sweep of Oakland as Ken Griffey Jr. sparked a five-run eighth inning with a sacrifice fly.

The Mariners swept the A's for just the third time in club history. The previous two were also at the Kingdome, April 9-11, 1985, and July 27-29, 1984.

Luyendyk wins for first time since Indy500

Associated Press

Valvoline 200

PHOENIX — Arie Luyendyk got a monkey off his back Sunday with a hard-fought victory in the Valvoline 200, reaching Victory Circle for the first time since winning the Indianapolis 500 last May.

"It's really great to get that ... off my shoulders," the Dutchman said after Danny Sullivan's blown engine allowed him to drive his Chevrolet-powered Lola across the finish line on the one-mile Phoenix International Raceway oval under a combination of checker and yellow flags.

"I was getting tired of people asking me why I haven't won since Indy," he said.

Despite dominating in practice and qualifying, Rick Mears, who had won the two previous Indy-car events here, never led a lap. Michael Andretti, starting from the outside of the front row, jumped to the lead at the start, while Mears fought an ill-handling car all day and wound up a lap off the pace in fifth.

Andretti led until Canadian driver Scott Goodyear crashed in the second turn on lap 35, bringing out the first of three caution flags in the 200-lap event. At that point, Andretti and the other leads pitted and Luyendyk moved to the top.

DRAFT: Signability was important to Jones

(From 1C)

sen sixth by Phoenix, the first player since 1946 drafted into the NFL without attending college.

"All it took was one team to believe in me," Swann said. Larry Wilson, the Cardinals' general manager, said the team had a "letter of agreement" with Swann on contract terms.

With all the surprises and questions about many of the players leading to hasty re-evaluations, most teams used the full 15 minutes allowed for the first round. As a result, the round lasted 4 hours, 55 minutes, which was 39 minutes longer than ever before.

Drama began building on Saturday night when Ismail signed his contract at the Forum in Los Angeles with Bruce McNall, who owns both the Argonauts and the Los Angeles Kings of the National Hockey League. The contract includes $18.2 million in guaranteed money plus the possibility of another $8 million, which apparently includes a minor interest in the Argonauts' ownership.

Both the Cowboys and Atlanta Falcons, who also were interested in Ismail, rejected his final NFL asking price of $14.5 million over five years. Ismail was willing to sign in the NFL for less, because he would have made up the difference with endorsements, most of which will be lost in Canada.

Jimmy Johnson, the Dallas coach, said Maryland, whom he recruited at the University of Miami, was his first choice all along. Cowboys owner Jerry Jones, however, said he "made good-faith negotiations" with Ismail "but his numbers were totally out of our range."

Signability was important to Jones because he felt that, last year, the Cowboys were hurt badly by the holdouts of rookies Emmitt Smith and Alex Wright. Before Sunday was done, Jones announced contract agreements both with Maryland and wide receiver Alvin Harper of Tennessee, selected on the 12th pick in the first round.

Dallas then traded away the last of its three first-round selections, winding up with four extra choices between the second and fourth rounds.

SENIORS: Nicklaus says it was conservative round

(From 1C)

Nicklaus joined Trevino and Rodriguez as the only two-time winners on the senior circuit. His total was 17 under par on the course he redesigned in 1989.

"I played a controlled, conservative round," Nicklaus said. "I did what I wanted to do, what I thought I had to do. It wasn't a round to shoot a low score, but I didn't need a low score."

Bruce Crampton made up four shots over the last seven holes and finished second at 277, after a 68. Did he think he had a chance? "For second?" Crampton responded.

It was a familiar position for Crampton, who did not win a major title in his two decades on the regular tour but was runner-up to Nicklaus in the Masters and U.S. Open in 1972, and in the 1973 and '75 PGA national championships.

"I like being a defending runner-up to Jack," he said.

No one else was within 11 shots of the winner.

New Zealand left-hander Bob Charles was third at 71-282. He was followed by Homero Blancas, 71-283, and George Archer, 74-284.

Despite the big lead at the start of the day and his reputation as being among the most pressure-proof athletes of his generation, Nicklaus said he "had a queasy stomach when I got up this morning."

"I always do," he said.

And, while he enjoyed the victory, he said, the day's play was more like work.

"I always enjoy it when I'm competing against myself," he said.

ANGELS: Nilsson misses cycle chance

(From 1C)

Maybe the only disappointed Diablo was catcher Dave Nilsson, who was lifted by manager Dave Huppert in the seventh inning after he had singled, doubled and tripled. He needed only the homer to hit for the cycle.

Wouldn't you know it, Nilsson's pinch hitter, Greg Faulkner, hit a three-run shot. At least the catching position was good for the cycle — as well as six RBI.

"Well, it is a long season, and I was ready for a break, but I did say something to the manager about the cycle," said Nilsson, who hails from Sufer's Paradise, Australia. "It probably wouldn't have happened anyway since I don't hit too many. I haven't had one all season.

"My replacement (Faulkner) hit one, though. That's fine with me."

Ironically, Midland also had 18 hits, the same as El Paso. Daryl Sconiers, Marcus Lawton and Bobby Jones had three hits and two RBI each. Midland even led the game by a 4-2 margin after one inning of play.

But that was the high water mark for Midland as El Paso erupted for 14 runs over the next four innings, leaving Midland wishing the short road trip to Wichita had started a day early.

Midland also owns a 2-3 mark against Wichita this year. They return home Saturday to face San Antonio.

Former Midland Angel tosses no-hitter for Palm Springs club

Associated Press

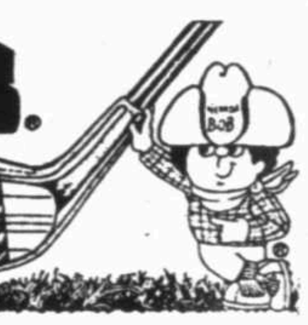

BAKERSFIELD, Calif. — Right-hander Don Vidmar of the Palm Springs Angels pitched a no-hitter Sunday to win his first game of the season, beating Bakersfield 2-0 in the opener of a California League doubleheader.

The 24-year-old Vidmar (1-2) struck out three and walked two in the seven-inning game.

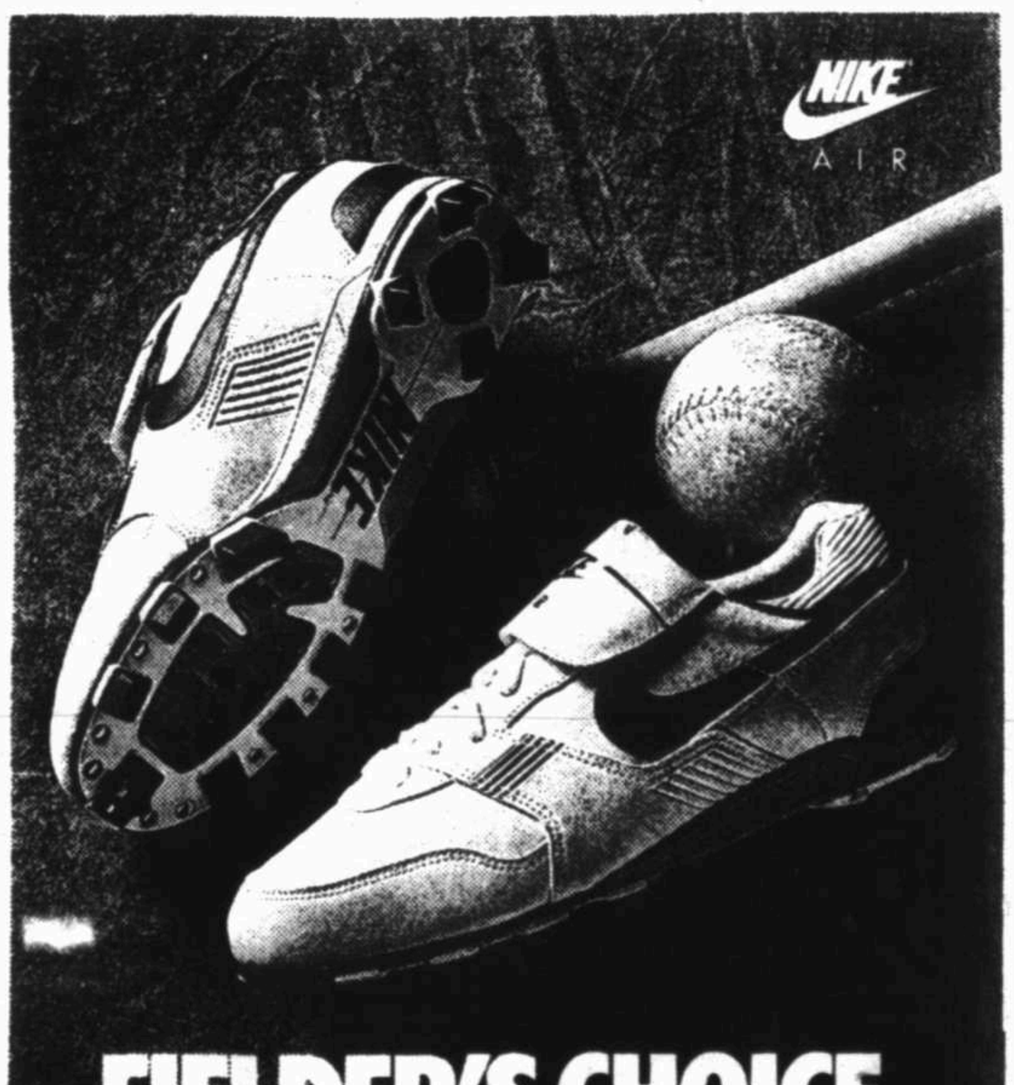

Vidmar, in his third pro season, played college baseball at Grand Canyon College in Arizona and was selected by the California Angels in the 35th round of the 1988 free agent draft.

He saw action last season with the Midland Angels.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

By Jeane Dixon

MONDAY, APRIL 22, 1991

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Hard work and a practical attitude will boost your earning power. Greater diplomacy in September will make family life more tranquil. Landing new business puts you in line for a promotion next December. A close relationship with a neighbor could lead to marriage early in 1992. Those with careers in banking and accounting will make record financial gains.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Innovative and polished skills make a nearly perfect combination today. Be glad you have fixed objectives and ambitions! Your previous experiences help you to get a project under way.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): A long-sought goal continues to elude you. Try a more subtle approach! Financial considerations cannot be completely ruled out when making a family decision. Luxury purchases are best postponed.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Focus on the project with the greatest commercial potential today. Your dreams could be prophetic. Spend only those funds you have earmarked for a particular purpose.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Discuss your money-making ideas with family members. The news from afar could be both pleasing and exaggerated. Believe only what you see for yourself! A spiritual experience will give you new insights.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Steer clear of controversy today. It is better to meditate privately than to argue fruitlessly. A medical checkup may be overdue. Set yourself a spending limit if you go out this evening.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Cleverness alone may not be enough to reach the highest career peak. It certainly helps, however! Back your ideas with vigorous action. Wait until tomorrow to make an important financial decision.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Pay attention to those who share your surroundings. Compromise helps you avoid uncomfortable confrontations. Friends open important doors, leading to new business or valuable contacts.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov.21): A parent or authority figure helps you achieve your aims. Show that you are responsible and accept extra duties. Domestic affairs demand attention. You can learn a lot from a more experienced person.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): An attractive career proposal merits a second look. Avoid intervening in other people's domestic problems. Trying to please a loved one by doing something you know is wrong could hurt both of you.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Your powers of persuasion are at an all-time high. If spending money on home improvements or luxury items, consider both their quality and longevity. A family situation requires careful analysis.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): A valuable new alliance could mean better contacts, raises and a promotion. Strong positive energy buoys a close relationship. Emphasize generosity to your loved ones.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): A close relationship will suffer if you act under false pretenses. Unveil your plans and capitalize on truths you can share. Blind spots will give way to illumination and understanding.

TODAY'S CHILDREN are fair-minded, industrious and artistic. Highly loyal to their friends, these Taureans can be ruthless with their enemies. Although they will give you a second chance, do not expect a third! Cautious by nature, these children will make a move only after exploring every avenue. They are determined to succeed. Wise parents will help these youngsters learn when to stand firm and when to compromise.

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠652 ♡J83 ◇A105 ♣A976
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	2 NT*	?

* Unusual, showing minors
What action do you take?
A.—An awkward problem. You have an attractive hand and no way to show it for the moment. If you double now, you won't know what to do if West bids three diamonds and that gets passed back to you; and raising spades with your holding is unappealing. It's wiser to pass and wait to see what develops.

Q.2—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠652 ♡J83 ◇A105 ♣A976
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	2 NT*	Pass	3 ◇
4 ♡	Pass	?

* Unusual, for minors
What action do you take?
A.—Since you could have nothing, partner's jump announces that he expects to make 10 tricks in the major where you hold greater length. Your two aces surely mean that partner has no minor-suit losers, and your jack of hearts must be a valuable filler. We would ask for aces and bid a slam in spades if partner shows one.

Q.3—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠KQ6 ♡873 ◇AJ63 ♣642
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♣	1 ♠	?

What do you bid now?
A.—If you thought of any bid other than one no trump, brush off your basic bridge primer. True, the positional value of your spade stoppers increases the value of the hand, but your flat distribution is an offsetting drawback. This is a maximum for such action.

Q.4—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AK5 ♡K103 ◇Q98 ♣AKJ6
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	Pass	2 NT	Pass

What do you bid now?
A.—In first or second seat we would pass—you have nowhere near the values for an opening bid. Third-in-hand, however, we favor an opening bid of one diamond as a lead-director.

Q.6—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠AQ985 ♡AK7 ◇653 ♣83
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	Dbl	3 ♠	Pass

What action do you take?
A.—Over the takeout double, partner's jump raise to three spades is preemptive, not strong. Since you have a minimum opening bid and a flat hand, pass.

Q.5—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠Q8 ♡J65 ◇AKJ63 ♣1092
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
Pass	Pass	?

What action do you take?

John Fogarty marries 'most beautiful girl' he'd ever seen

ELKHART, Ind. (AP) — Forget about John Fogarty, rock legend. The groom at Saturday's wedding at the Elcona Country Club was John Fogarty, regular guy.

"If it weren't for my musical career, we'd be just like any other couple," the founder of Creedence Clearwater Revival said after his marriage to Julie Lebiedzinski. "I actually think I'd be a pretty boring neighbor."

Fogarty met Lebiedzinski, a former South Bend hairdresser, while on tour several years ago.

"I was at a party at the hotel (in Indianapolis) after the show with a couple of the band members when suddenly the crowd parted, and there was the most beautiful girl I'd ever seen in my life," Fogarty said. "I always tell people that — it was like this light came out of the sky."

Lebiedzinski's 6-year-old daughter from a previous marriage lives with the couple in Los Angeles. Fogarty's three grown children from his first marriage attended the wedding.

LONDON (AP) — Ballet star Rudolf Nureyev says he and the late British ballerina Margot Fonteyn loved each other but were never lovers.

"I fell in love with Margot the moment I saw her. We had a special relationship," Nureyev was quoted as saying in the Sunday Express. "I wanted the relationship to be more."

However, he added, "she loved her Tito" — a reference to her Panamanian husband, Robert "Tito" Arias.

Ms. Fonteyn died in Panama City on Feb. 21 at age 71. Her husband, whom she married in 1955, died in 1989 after she had devotedly nursed him for 25 years following an assassination attempt which left him paralyzed.

Nureyev, now 53, met the ballerina in 1962 when she was 42 and about to retire. He had defected from the Kirov Ballet while on a visit to Paris the year before.

'The reason we could create a fantasy on stage is because it never became reality. If it had, then the magic would have gone," Nureyev was quoted as saying.

DUBLIN, Ireland — Sean O'Faolain, whose beautifully crafted short stories won him a reputation as the "Irish Chekhov," has died. He was 91.

O'Faolain died Saturday in Dublin following a brief illness, said a spokeswoman for the Aclare House Nursing Home, where he had lived for two years.

His works included "Midsummer Night Madness," "King of the Beggers, a Biography," "An Irish Journey," "Newman's Way" and several volumes of collected short stories in the 1970s and early 1980s.

Prices steady

The modest rise capped a week in which the nation's supply of gasoline fell to what is considered by the government to be the minimum operating level. That made gasoline the leader at the New York Mercantile Exchange.

West Texas Intermediate for delivery in May settled at $21.13 per barrel, up 5 cents. For the week, next-month crude fell 35 cents a barrel.

In Friday's trading, the May crude was weaker than later months, as traders began focusing on Monday's expiration of the May delivery contract and selling their positions. Later delivery contracts finished as much as 36 cents per barrel higher.

Natural gas prices remain soft. For delivery in May, natural gas settled at $1.355 per 1,000 cubic feet, down 2 cents for the day and 2.1 cents for the week.

NGPA meets

The Natural Gas Producers Association will meet Thursday at the Petroleum Club beginning at 11:45 a.m.

Guest speaker will be David Cotner, an independent producer and oil and gas consultant. He will speak on "Analyzing Gas Plant Performance and Process Economics From a Producer Perspective." He will discuss the performance of several area gas plants and provide examples of liquid component extrction economics and plant process type economics.

Reservations should be made by noon Wednesday by calling 682-4030.

Retirees' course

Andrew Cooper III, senior vice president with Shearson Lehman Brothers in San Francisco will be the speaker at Tuesday's workshop entitled "Ready or Not: Are You Prepared for Retirement?" The workshop is presented by W. Keith Wood and Carroll M. Thomas of the Midland office.

The workshop will be at Midland Country Club beginning at 7 p.m. Reservations are necessary and can be made by calling 685-1234.

Stocks plunge

NEW YORK (AP) — Investor perceptions that stocks are becoming too expensive helped send prices plunging Friday, putting a down note on a historic week in which the Dow Jones average closed above 3,000 for the first time.

The Dow average of 30 industrials fell 33.67 to 2,965.59.

Then press 1500 for BUSINESSLINE -- business and financial headlines. For oil price update, press 1211.

Gasoline price increase expected

■ Analysts say that prices likely to jump by 10 to 15 cents a gallon by mid-May.

By Thomas C. Hayes
N.Y. Times News Service

DALLAS — Gasoline prices are likely to rise by 10 cents to 15 cents a gallon at the pump by the middle of May, to an average of $1.20 to $1.25 a gallon, according to several energy analysts.

The nation's gasoline stocks have fallen to the lowest level in 16 years, and gasoline imports this month remain below normal levels with the summer driving season approaching. As a result, nervous traders have added 8 cents this month to the price of gasoline for May delivery.

Prices that service stations pay for wholesale gasoline lag behind developments on the commodity futures exchanges by a few weeks, but they have begun to reflect the rising costs.

Many analysts said the futures prices should continue rising until increases in gasoline production and imports halt the declines in gasoline supplies at refineries, pipelines and storage terminals.

"If there is any supply problem between now and the summer driving season, it will not be reflected as a shortage at the gasoline pump, but in much higher prices," said Edwin S. Rothschild, energy policy director for Citizen Action, a national consumer research organization in Washington.

The lowest average price this year for unleaded regular gasoline at self-service pumps was $1.08 a gallon on March 5, according to the American Automobile Association. The price rose slightly in each of the last three weeks, to an average of $1.10 on Tuesday.

The high mark during the Persian Gulf crisis came on Dec. 4 at $1.39 a gallon. But with crude oil prices ranging between $18 and $21 a barrel after allied bombing raids began Jan. 17, far below the peak of $40 last October, and with demand down amid recession, gasoline prices drifted lower.

Refiners said they had slashed output because of the pinch on profit margins this year. Gasoline stocks last week were the lowest in 16 years, at 204 million barrels, or just under the minimum of 205 million barrels recommended by the National Petroleum Council, a group of industry executives that advises the Government on energy issues.

The American Petroleum Institute said this week that the decline in gasoline inventories was primarily because oil companies are selling off stocks of certain types of gasoline that cannot be sold during the warmer months, beginning May 1, because of tighter environmental standards aimed at controlling summertime air pollution.

The institute said supplies would be adequate during the summer barring "unforeseen events."

Officials of the Energy Information Administration said at a news conference Thursday in Washington that refinery output and gasoline imports would increase soon, and that adequate supplies would be available through the summer.

Some industry experts agree. Kenneth D. Miller, senior principal at Purvin & Gertz, energy consultants in Houston, said operating rates at American refineries, now 82 percent of capacity, should rise to 88 percent within several weeks.

Last summer when profit margins were high, refiners operated at almost 93 percent of capacity.

"There is plenty of capacity in the United States to produce the amount of gasoline that's needed," Miller said.

Profit margins slipped below 15 cents a gallon for wholesale gasoline last January, he said, leading refiners to cut output.

Rising prices have since pushed margins above 30 cents a gallon, however, making it more profitable to increase refining, he said.

But Rothschild of Citizen Action said refiners would have to complete the summer without any serious fires, explosions or other disruptions, if they are to keep service stations amply supplied.

Many refiners delayed normal maintenance procedures, which are usually completed by early April, because the Persian Gulf war raised concerns about crude-oil shipments. These maintenance programs, now under way, reduce output.

Peter C. Beutel, energy director at the Pegasus Econometric Group in Hoboken, N.J., said that most refiners began scaling back output last fall, apparently to reduce imports of crude oil, as the administration and its allies prepared for war against Iraq.

"I believe, but cannot prove," he said, "that there was a tacit agreement between the government and the refiners not to buy crude oil in the world market, but to take supplies from their own stocks."

Using up stocks on hand kept crude prices from soaring beyond $40 a barrel last October, but led to the current problem of low gasoline inventories, he said.

"It means they will have to be out there now buying more crude, and prices will have to move higher," Beutel said. "Basically, they've done a responsible thing."

Warm weather in the Northeast in the winter also contributed to the lower gasoline output, because refiners cut back on their stocks of home heating oil.

Heating oil, jet fuel, gasoline and other refined products are all produced from crude, with gasoline typically amounting to 40 percent or more of the refined output from each barrel.

Also, refiners in Europe, concerned about possible disruptions in their own

Judge to allow Continental, EDS $2 billion contract

HOUSTON (AP) — System One, Continental Airlines Holdings Inc.'s reservations system, can sign a $2 billion facilities management contract that will allow Electronic Data Systems to handle part of its operations, a federal judge ruled.

The 10-year contract with Dallas-based EDS will not yield any cash for the troubled airline, but it will provide millions of dollars a year in savings and give System One access to additional technology, said System One spokeswoman Yvonne Donaldson.

EDS will manage the massive data operations of Continental Airlines, but the reservation system itself will continue to be handled by System One. U.S Bankruptcy Judge Helen Balick in Delaware ruled in favor of awarding EDS the contract on Friday.

Houston-based Continental filed for bankruptcy protection in December.

The contract does not affect negotiations between System One and Worldspan to combine the two reservation systems into the nation's second-largest system, Ms. Donaldson said. Worldspan is operated by Delta, TWA and Northwest airlines and Abacus Distribution Systems, an Asian computer reservation system.

Ms. Donaldson said that combination wouldn't give System One or Continental cash, but it would make the business a mightier competitor against systems operated by American Airlines and United Airlines.

System One had hoped to sell half its business last year to EDS in a $250 million deal that fell through in November after fuel prices soared, the airline industry went into a deep slump and creditor IBM objected to the sale.

Plastic recycling

Darryl Jones of Plastics Recycling Alliance in Philadelphia, prepares a bale of mixed plastics for recycling. The Council for Solid Waste Solutions announced through its new Blueprint for Plastic Recycling program that 18.1 billion bottles and containers will be recycled by 1995, representing the fastest growing recycling rate for any packaging material. This compares to 3.4 billion plastic bottles and containers recycled in 1990.

Pickens may sell his stock in Japanese parts company

DALLAS (AP) — Texas financier T. Boone Pickens is considering selling his stake in a Japanese auto parts company that has rejected his efforts to gain a board of directors seat, a top Pickens aide said Sunday.

Pickens

Pickens, who owns 26.4 percent of Koito Manufacturing Co., has been campaigning for two years to join the company's 20-seat board, arguing his failure illustrates Japanese refusal to allow foreign investors.

The Pickens aide, Andrew Littlefair, denied a report Sunday in a major Japanese newspaper, Asahi Shimbun. The newspaper, quoting unidentified sources, said Pickens had agreed in principle to sell his shares back to Japanese stock speculator Kitaro Watanabe.

"We have not been in discussion with Mr. Watanabe specifically about selling our stock back to him," Littlefair said Sunday.

"Has he asked for the stock back? No. Are we considering several options right now, one of them being selling the stock? Yes," Littlefair said. "We are not in any rush, but it's one of the things we're looking at."

In a report filed with Japan's Finance Ministry last December, Pickens said he had bought the shares from Watanabe with money lent by Watanabe. The shares were used as security for the loan, he said.

CompuServe granddaddy of online systems

Paul H. Pause'

In many ways, most online systems — like GEnie, discussed here earlier — all offer the same basic kinds of services and attractions: information, communications, software, expert advice, tips and tricks about running your programs, fun and games, and friendship. The idea of hundreds of thousands of PC users all over the world using their computers to talk to each other is alluring. (The more we talk together, the less likely it is that we'll want to shoot each other.)

Pause'

CompuServe is the largest of the commercial online services. It currently has more than 600,000 subscribers and supports over 1400 databases and services. According to columnist John Dvorak, it has "... more interesting and practical databases and forums than any other service in the world." And, like any good system, CompuServe is continually growing to meet the changing needs of its subscribers.

On CompuServe, you can access everything from the Library of Congress to "World Aluminum Abstracts," which reveals "he world's technical literature on aluminum." Oh boy!

CompuServe's many online services are organized in a logical menu-driven system. Menus provide categories of information that will lead you to the specific service or feature you're interested in. When you first get on-line, you'll be at CompuServe's "TOP" menu, which starts you off the 12 choices. These include subscriber assistance, an index to help find a topic, communications, news/weather/sports, travel, shopping, money matters/markets, entertainment, home/health/family, reference/education, computers/technology, and business and other interests. Each choice leads, in turn, to other friendly menus to guide you to your destination.

As you begin to learn your way around the system, you'll save time — and time is money — by using commands to jump directly to your area of interest.

Your membership fee includes a subscription to CompuServe Magazine. This is a glossy, 4-color, 60 pg. monthly that is chock-full of hints and tips about what's new on the system and how to use it.

A recent issue had a cover story about job-hunting on-line. (This, I think, could be of a lot of interest in the Permian Basin.) Job-seekers and potential employers can network on professional and industry forums by posting resumes, exchanging messages, and following leads electronically, thus breaking down the barriers of time and distance that can bog down a more conventional job search.

Other recent articles have shown how to use CompuServe to get the most out of Desktop publishing, buying a printer, investing in the bond market, and taking a bicycle tour of France's Bordeaux wine country.

CompuServe does cost money. It is among the most expensive of the online services, but in this case, you really do get what you pay for (and then some), because CompuServe offers the most comprehensive array of services you can find.

CompuServe charges a Membership support fee of $2.00/month (The magazine alone is worth that). You can connect with a local call from Midland, but there is a nominal 30 cents/hour surcharge (access through other networks — SprintNet, Tymnet, etc. — can cost lots more). Then the on-line fees: this is where you can get into trouble. Current rates are $6.50/hour for 300bps, $12.50/hour for 1200/2400bps, and $22.50/hour if you connect at 9600bps. These rates DON'T vary depending on the time of day, as most systems do.

You can pick up a CompuServe Subscription Kit at most computer stores, bookstores, or Software Etc. in the mall. A standard kit includes everything you need for $29.95 (list): user's guide, binder, account number, temporary password, and $25 on-line credit. Software Etc. has them for about $25 plus tax — almost like getting it for free when you consider the $25 credit that comes with it!

In late 1989 (the company's 10th anniversary), CompuServe introduced the CompuServe Information Manager (CIM). This is CompuServe's own front-end communications package, designed specifically to interact with the array of CompuServe features.

CIM provides an attractive graphical user interface, working with pull-down menus and icons. People who have been reluctant to try to get online can now do so almost effortlessly. CIM is sold as a separate, stand-alone program for $39.95, and also includes $25 worth of usage credit. The package includes sign-up information, but not a general user's guide. If you have purchased an earlier version of CIM, you can upgrade to the newest release (4/1/91) for just $3.00.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Bank stock could be reported as capital loss

By Bill Doyle

Q. In 1946, I inherited 4,707 shares of bank stock when the "booked" value of that stock was $37.50 per share. At the present time, the "booked" value is $7 per share. And there aren't any takers even at that price.

The accountant who works up my income taxes is of the opinion that no loss can be shown on my return unless the stock is sold or transferred to another institution.

Is there any other method of handling this so that I may get compensation for my loss, which is substantial?

Doyle

A. There is one — very unhappy — way. If that stock loses all its market value, you can write off the entire thing as a capital loss. In that case, you report the stock as having a Dec. 31 "zero" sales price on Schedule D of the Form 1040 you file for the year in which the stock became worthless. Your entire "basis" on that stock — your cost for tax purposes — becomes a capital loss.

If you go that route, get a letter from a brokerage firm stating there is no bid in any recognized market for the stock. Based on your statement about "no takers," that might be the case. Nevertheless, you'll need the letter, if the Internal Revenue Service questions your return.

The basis on inherited stock is the market value on the date of death of the person who left it, unless an alternate valuation date was used. You should have been informed of your basis when the estate was settled.

Forget about what you call "booked" value. I suspect you mean book value, which is strictly an accounting term. Book value is arrived at by adding up all a company's assets, subtracting its liabilities and dividing by the number of shares outstanding — owned by stockholders. Book value and market value can be quite different.

Unless the stock becomes absolutely worthless, as your accountant explained, the only way to get a tax loss is by selling.

If you are able to sell the stock through a broker or privately, your capital loss will be the difference between your basis and your proceeds from the sale.

If that bank is merged with another bank, there are two possibilities.

Your shares might be purchased by the acquiring bank, making your capital loss the gap between your basis and the amount you receive.

The acquiring bank might issue securities in exchange for your shares. If that happens, your basis on the securities you receive will be the same as the basis on the bank stock you now own and you will have to sell your new securities to establish a capital loss.

Q. I would like to sell 200 shares of stock I own. I have the certificates. Can I sell directly to a friend, thereby bypassing brokers and savings commission costs for both of us?

A. Sure. The first thing you and your friend will have to do is agree on a price. In private transactions, that's normally done by pegging the price to the value at which the shares trade on a stock exchange or in the over-the-counter market on the day the deal is struck.

After that, fill out the assignment forms on the back of the certificates, have your signature guaranteed by a commercial bank, trust company or brokerage firm and send the certificates to the stock's transfer agent by registered mail, return receipt requested. The transfer agent will issue new certificates and mail them to the buyer.

PICKENS: Firm denies financier seat on board

(From 6C)

Pickens' private investment firm, Boone Co., has bought 42,395,000 shares in Koito from Watanabe's Azabu Building Co. since 1989.

The purchase amount was estimated at $1.01 billion, Asahi said.

Koito stock closed Friday at 2,750 yen a share, making the Boone Co. holdings worth $844 million.

Asahi said Azabu Building was in need of funds, apparently because of a slump in the real estate business in Japan, and was recalling the loan.

Officials of Azabu Building and Koito were not available for comment on the Sunday holiday.

Koito has contended that Watanabe actually controlled the shares anyway, and that Pickens was a front for a greenmail attempt. In greenmail, the stock buyer expects the company to buy back its shares at prices above the market rate to avoid a takeover attempt.

Pickens has maintained that he has a genuine interest in management of Koito, and that his status as largest stockholder should entitle him to representation on the board. Koito has rebuffed him, saying his true intentions remain unclear.

"The only thing we've asked for is board representation," Littlefair said. "They've sent word back ... they don't intend to allow us on the board no matter what we do.

"If that's going to be the case, we have to look at whether or not it makes sense to stay indefinitely," he said.

Boone Co.'s options include selling the stock back to Watanabe or to other parties, he said.

"Boone is determined to try to break open the Japanese system and he'd like to be able to stay as long as we can, but they've made it pretty clear they don't want any part of us or any other American on the board. We have to take those messages very seriously," Littlefair said.

Asahi quoted an unidentified Japanese official working for Pickens as saying that Pickens still planned to attend a Koito general meeting scheduled in June.

Attending the shareholders meeting remains an option, Littlefair said. But, he added, "We don't have much interest in going back and being put through what we went through last year."

Pickens has said Koito is being squeezed by Toyota, Koito's second-largest stock holder and major customer for its automobile headlights, into accepting smaller profits, depriving shareholders of fair returns.

GAS: Prices may increase

supplies, restricted gasoline exports to the United States before and during the gulf war.

Now, however, American prices are headed up. On the New York Mercantile Exchange on Friday unleaded gasoline for May wholesale delivery in New York harbor closed at 73.64 cents a gallon.

That is off a half-cent from Wednesday's price, which was the highest since 82.19 cents on Jan. 16, the day before the allies began bombing Iraq. In crude-oil trading

Analysts said that rising gasoline prices in the United States, as well as the swift end to the war against Iraq, would prompt refiners to send more gasoline to the United States by the middle of May, increasing supplies by as much as 500,000 barrels a day.

Domestic refiners also say they are about to step up output. Stu McDonald, the vice president for distribution at ARCO Products Co., a unit of ARCO Inc. in Los Angeles, cited the combination of higher prices and a report this week by the American Petroleum Institute of higher gasoline consumption as reasons for the planned increases in production.
