Iraqi raids into Iran boost bargaining chips for U.N. peace talks

NICOSIA, Cyprus — Iraq says it has pulled out of Iranian territory after capturing thousands of enemy soldiers during a sweeping, three-day invasion aimed at strenghtening its hand during peace talks.

Iraq's announcement that it had ended its lightning-quick incursion came just as diplomats for the warring nations prepared to meet today with U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar for talks on a cease-fire.

On Sunday, a four-member United Nations team arrived in Iran to begin discussing one of the key technical elements of a truce: the trade of prisoners of war.

Iraq said Sunday that it had boosted its bargaining chips by seizing 8,636 additional enemy fighters during its push into Iran that began on Friday.

The official Iraqi News Agency announced that Iraq's incursion in the southern war front was over and that Iraqi troops had withdrawn.

In Baghdad, the state-run daily Ath-Thawra said Iraq has "no greedy intentions on Iranian territory and does not want to humiliate the Iranian people."

The article, quoted by the Iraqi News Agency, said Iraq's military actions aimed to recapture Iraqi territory and take "as many prisoners of war as possible."

President Saddam Hussein of Iraq has said taking a large number of prisoners would help in peace negotiations.

However, Foreign Minister Ali Akbar Velayati of Iran said the wide-ranging attacks along the front threaten a prospective cease-fire.

Exactly one week ago and after a string of battlefield defeats, Iran abruptly changed its hardline stance and accepted a year-old a U.N. resolution for ending the 8-year-old war between the Persian Gulf neighbors.

Iraq already has accepted the resolution, which calls for return to previous borders and a prisoner exchange.

According to International Red Cross figures, Iran has about 50,000 Iraqi POW's and Iraq held 13,000 Iranian soldiers before the latest raid.

Velayati called on Perez de Cuellar to take "timely and preventive action" to halt the incursions, Tehran radio reported Sunday.

It said the foreign minister sent a letter to the U.N. chief charging the aggression threatened action on a cease-fire.

Iran said Saturday that Iraqi troops backed by tanks, warplanes and chemical weapons thrust nearly 40 miles into Iranian territory. The country's official Islamic Republic News Agency said Sunday that the attack had been repulsed with 9,000 Iraqi dead and wounded.

It did not provide a breakdown and Iraqi media did not give specific casualty figures.

Iraq said its aircraft flew 148 combat missions inside Iran on Sunday.

Bush proposes child-care plan

By LAURA KING
Associated Press Writer

Michael Dukakis, back in Boston for the first time since winning the Democratic nomination last week, goes to work today in the Statehouse. Republican George Bush, meanwhile, got mixed reviews when he sought to shore up support among women.

Bush, in Albuquerque to speak to an organization of professional and business women, unveiled an ambitious $2.2 billion child-care plan that would be phased in over four years. The group's president, Beth Wray, welcomed the plan but tempered her praise by calling it "one of his first concrete gestures" toward women.

When Bush finished speaking, many in the audience broke into chants of "E-R-A" — a reference to the Equal Rights Amendment, which the vice president opposes. He also was presented with a red purse, which organization members said signified the gap between the earnings of women and men.

Bush, the certain GOP nominee, was back in Washington today after spending five days on the road. His campaigning between now and the opening of the GOP gathering will be curtailed because he has spent nearly the legal limit for pre-convention campaigning.

The Massachusetts governor, returning Sunday night from a three-day campaign trip, was greeted warmly by about 150 people in soggy weather at Boston's Logan International Airport.

Dukakis and his running mate, Lloyd Bentsen, traveled to five states, including the key fall battlegrounds of California and Texas. They set off on their inaugural campaign trip last week, just after accepting their respective nominations at the Democratic National Convention in Atlanta.

The Republicans, meanwhile, were looking ahead to their own convention, which opens three weeks from today in New Orleans.

But the White House said Sunday that President Reagan probably will campaign in the Midwest on Bush's behalf between now and the convention. That word came from White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater as Reagan was flying back from California on Air Force One.

Also aboard was Treasury Secretary James A. Baker III, who had been in California for a weekend fund-raiser, and his presence fueled new speculation about an imminent departure from the administration to run Bush's campaign.

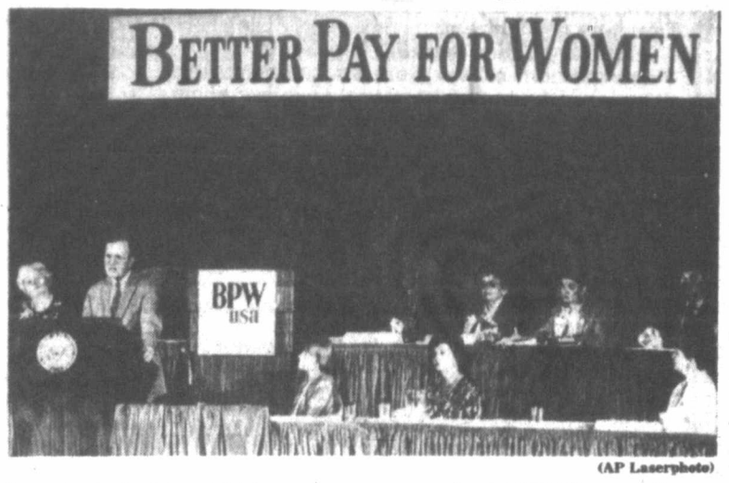

Fitzwater said Baker had "a very brief chat" with Reagan and added: "He's still treasury secretary, put it that way."

When reporters sent Baker a note asking him to come back and talk to them about the matter, he sent back a dollar bill and suggested that reporters take a close look at the banknote bearing his signature.

"Please note the title under the signature," Baker wrote. That title, of course, is secretary of the treasury.

Later, asked by reporters to "share the news," he responded: "There's no news to share."

Baker's status isn't the only source of speculation surrounding the Bush campaign. The vice president traveled to Albuquerque, N.M., on Sunday with former Transportation Secretary Elizabeth Hanford Dole, who has been mentioned as a potential running mate.

City plans public hearing on building condemnation

City commissioners will conduct a public hearing Tuesday regarding the condition of a building at 1023 S. Clark as part of the efforts leading to condemnation and demolition of the structure.

The structure came to the city's attention during a previous citizens request period when a neighboring resident complained that the structure had become a breeding ground for snakes and posed a safety hazard for the neighborhood.

Following the hearing, commissioners also will consider a resolution condemning the structure so that city employees can demolish the building.

Department of Building Inspection staff members have inspected the structure and indicated it is deteriorated and poses a safety and health hazard.

The building was recently included in a delinquent tax sale, with no one purchasing it. The city now is a trustee for the property for other taxing entities.

In other business at the regular meeting at 6 p.m. Tuesday, commissioners will consider:

- awarding of bids for PVC pipe and assorted fittings to be used in construction of the municipal golf course;
- awarding of bids for the purchase of a front deck mowing unit;
- approving on first reading an ordinance establishing a self-funded dental insurance program for city employees;
- ratifying the contract with Gray County Appraisal District for collection of taxes;
- appointing a person to the Canadian River Municipal Water Authority's board of directors; and
- approving the June list of disbursements.

In other business, commissioners have scheduled an executive session to discuss pending litigation against the city, with any action to be taken after reconvening in public session.

Archaeologist feels ancient stone points are works of art

This is the second of a two-part article on amateur archaeologist Dare Locke of White Deer.

By MARILYN POWERS
Lifestyles Editor

In his 30 years of getting in touch with human history through his amateur achaeology studies, White Deer resident Dare Locke has collected numerous artifacts.

Among the numerous items in his extensive collection are various Indian arrowheads, spear points and stone tools. But he also has acquired other similar items predating the advent of the Indian cultures on this continent, including Paleolithic points dating from 1,000 to 15,000 years ago.

Locke explained that one difference between Indian and Paleo points is that Indian arrowheads are placed on a shaft and shot with the help of a bow or, earlier, an atlatl, a type of "slingshot" in which the arrow or point rested in a groove on a shaft which was brought forward rapidly in order to "throw" the weapon.

Paleo points, on the other hand, were all used as spear tips, because Paleo man did not have bows or atlatls, Locke pointed out. Some Paleo points are fluted and all are more carefully executed than later Indian weapons, he said.

"Recent stuff is not as well worked, and they didn't do the fine, second chipping that early man did. He had workmanship that doesn't exist in more recent times.

"Early man depended on points for his very life — they were his whole life. He did fantastic work on them. They are really a work of art," Locke said.

Paleo points had to be fashioned so that they could penetrate the quarter-inch-thick hides of the prehistoric mammoths, camels, giant bison, elephants and giant sloths that constituted early Panhandle man's biggest source of food.

Kills were made by stampeding the animals off a cliff and then "finishing them off," or by driving them into one of the Panhandle's ancient playa lakes or creek beds, he explained.

The big animals would get bogged down in the mud of the water bed and become exhausted trying to escape. Paleo man would then move in for the kill, perhaps hours after the hunt had begun, Locke noted.

The earliest Paleo site in the Panhandle area was documented by Jack Mead of Miami, along with others. The site was found in the 1930s northwest of Miami. Mead and his associates found a sink-hole kill site that yielded three Clovis points, one scraper and bones of at least five mammoths. The find is now housed at the University of Texas in Austin.

Other Panhandle Paleo sites were uncovered when area highways were built in the 1930s and '40s, Locke said, including bison skeletons in playa lake beds.

Traces of prehistoric man are few and far between in the Panhandle, Locke said.

"Since the 1930s, maybe less than 1,000 Paleo points have been found in the Texas Panhandle. I am talking about documented or first-person finds of Paleo Points that are in museums or personal collections," he said.

Collectors must be wary of points that are up for sale. Locke estimates that there could be several thousand recently-made Paleo point look-alikes in collections in the Texas Panhandle.

"Some of these are in museum collections and other public displays. The main reason for this is rarity. Many very large collections throughout the United States have no real Paleo points in them.

"White men have been making them for the past 15 to 20 years. Everything you find yourself and can document is real. If someone tries to sell you one for $20 to $50, you know it's a fake," Locke said.

Locke cautions anyone who sets out with great expectations of finding their own Paleo points or other remains of early man.

"I'm not suggesting that people go out and do it, because they'll be terribly disappointed," he said.

First of all, before doing any hunting, permission must be obtained from the landowner, he cautions.

Arrowheads and other Indian artifacts may be found on the surface; some of the best places to look are along creek beds.

"My suggestion is that if they really want to find points, go from Abilene south. They had a lot more Indians there and a lot more running creeks. Indians were very nomadic here. Small sites yield 1,000 to 2,000 pieces there; here, maybe 100 to 1,000 pieces.

"It's very hard and takes years to build a collection here. But go south, and you can find a lot," Locke said.

Searching for more ancient remnants of early man is even more difficult than for Indian artifacts. "Once in awhile a Paleo point will be found by a collector looking for arrowheads, but it is a very rare find," Locke said.

Paleo artifacts are buried beneath the earth's surface, and unless one gets extremely lucky while digging, they can only be found when erosion exposes them to the light of day after several thousand years' rest, he explained.

The best places to look for Paleo points are in dry creek areas that once had spring-fed water, old caliche and sand blowouts, and around playa lakes. No human bones of Paleo man have been found in the Texas Panhandle, Locke said.

Points

Aside from stone points and tools, other Paleo-era remains are bones of animals of the period, such as the mammoth and giant bison. Because carbon-dating cannot be performed on inorganic substances, flint points and tools are usually dated by the estimated extinction point of animals whose bones are found nearby or in the same strata, Locke said.

One way to tell the difference between Indian and Paleo points, aside from their shapes, is the flint. Paleo flint was often slick, and it is unknown whether it is like this naturally or by being treated in some way, Locke said.

For more information on early man and his tools, Locke suggests visiting Alibates Flint Quarry near Fritch, and Blackwater Draw, south of Clovis and near Portales, N.M. To read about early man and his tools, Locke recommends Early Man in North America by Worthington.

"You can tell people how to do it, but the best thing is to read and learn about it," he said.

Those few who are lucky enough to find anything should document their finds by noting the time, place and all other details, perhaps including photographs.

Separate accidents injure two boys

Two separate accidents this weekend, a car-pedestrian collision and a near-drowning, involved 4-year-old Pampa boys.

Kevin William Hopson, 4, remains in serious condition in Northwest Texas Hospital in Amarillo early today, while Reece Taylor, also 4, was treated and released from Coronado Hospital Saturday after almost drowning in a child's swimming pool.

Hopson, son of Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Hopson of Pampa, suffered serious head injuries after being struck by an automobile in the 1900 block of North Dwight at about 4 p.m. Saturday.

According to Department of Public Safety reports, the child was struck by a 1981 Oldsmobile driven by Madeline L. Carubbi, 79, of 1908 N. Dwight. No citations were reported issued in connection with the accident.

City police were first called to the scene, but DPS trooper Danny Pierce was then called in to handle the investigation after police learned the child was the son of a Pampa police officer. DPS troopers are routinely called to handle any accident involving city police within the city limits.

The boy was taken to Coronado Community Hospital emergency room by Rural/Metro Ambulance, where hospital officials reported he was stabilized before being transferred to Northwest Texas Hospital in Amarillo. NWTH officials said early today that Hopson remained in serious condition in the hospital's intensive care unit.

In an unrelated accident, Pampa police were called to a drowning at 1039 Sierra at 5:25 p.m. Saturday. Barbara Taylor, mother of Reece Taylor, told police that her son was playing in a small swimming pool in the back yard of the residence.

Mrs. Taylor said she walked inside the house, then returned to the back yard to find her son floating in the pool. He was not breathing at the time, but the mother was able to restore the child's breathing, police report stated.

The child was taken to Coronado Community Hospital emergency room, where, according to hospital officials, he was treated and released.

Rotary Club to hear phone program

Texas' economy in the next two decades will be as significantly influenced by the revolution in telecommunications technology as it was by highways in years gone by, according to Bill Haehnel, Southwestern Bell Telephone science demonstrator.

Haehnel's program, titled "Gateway to the Information Age, Part II," will be presented to the Pampa Rotary Club at its noon meeting Wednesday at Coronado Inn.

"At the core of our business existence in Texas are knowledge-intensive industries — finance, medicine, energy, electronics — all of which are dependent on a sophisticated communications network," said Haehnel.

He noted Southwestern Bell is at the center of the high-tech explosion in Texas, and improvements in the Texas network will have major impact on productivity in the state in years ahead.

"Lightwave systems, digital switching, and other advanced technologies will be required to meet customers' demands," said Haehnel.

A 45-year veteran of the communications business, Haehnel will examine technological changes affecting the whole spectrum of human endeavor, both in business and personal lives of Texans.

Haehnel predicts telecommunications sales world-wide, more than $40 billion in 1980, are likely to double by 1990, and could even double again by the turn of the century.

Southwestern Bell's construction budget in Texas in 1985 was more than $1.2 billion. "This expenditure is essential if we're to meet our goal of providing first-class service," said Haehnel. "Good telephone service costs money, but poor service is no bargain at any price.

"The customer of tomorrow will expect things like shopping without leaving home, electronic mail, point-of-sale credit, and many other services," Haehnel said. "We want to be in a position to provide those services, and the many others people will want, today and tomorrow."

Rummage sales raided on San Antonio streets

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A city-wide crackdown on zoning violations led to raids on 46 garage sales, prompting complaints from some residents.

Four sidewalk sales and a church rummage sale also were raided by city investigators over the weekend.

"I just feel we have every right to have a garage sale. We pay taxes," said Rosie Arroyo, who was holding a sale at her daughter's home.

Patricia Tawney, a customer at Arroyo's sale, said she works at night as a nurse and her major recreation on weekend mornings is to stop by garage sales.

"I think it's kind of silly to be able to advertise these sales if they are illegal activities. We need to change the law," she said.

Volunteers from Templo Sinai Church said Saturday they hold sales frequently and use the proceeds to send young girls from the church to a summer youth camp.

But City Code Compliance Manager Martin Rodriguez said church rummage sales, as well as garage sales, are a violation of city zoning laws.

Numerous complaints about heavy traffic in neighborhoods where the sales are occurring regularly led to the task force of seven investigators conducting the raids, he said.

If complaints are received, or if the sales are witnessed by city inspectors, they will be shut down immediately, he said.

Investigator Milo Kjos said, "We give them zero hours to comply. That means they have to shut down immediately."

When closing the sales, investigators issued a violation notice to the property tenant and ordered them to halt the sale immediately and remove the merchandise. The violators are warned they could face up to a $2,000 fine if they are again caught conducting a sale.

Rodriguez said many San Antonio residents are under the mistaken impression that garage sales and rummage sales are legal within the city limits.

The city has never passed an ordinance legalizing garage sales, and retail sales are not allowed in residential areas.

Smoke fire closes motel in Canadian

CANADIAN — Officials of Vic-Mon Motel and Restaurant, closed last Wednesday after a smokey fire, say they hope to have it open by Thursday.

Neola Keahey, desk clerk, smelled smoke shortly before midnight July 20, said Marcia Russell, bookkeeper. Searching for the source of the smell, Keahey discovered the kitchen filled with smoke.

Canadian Volunteer Fire Department members controlled the situation, reportedly caused by a grill being let on by mistake, Russell said.

It was not clear if there had been flames, Russell said. Right now, motel officials are more concerned about cleaning up the residue left by firefighting chemicals sprayed in the kitchen, she said.

Owner Ramona Libsack will replace the carpet in the cafe and a professional clean-up crew from Amarillo will be cleaning the kitchen and dining room areas, Russell said.

"It really sounds worse than it is," she explained. "We hope to be open for full service by Thursday, but it all depends on the clean-up schedule."

Marijuana spraying publicity upsets some Wheeler residents

WHEELER (AP) — The potentially toxic herbicide called paraquat has been used to kill wild marijuana crops in this small Panhandle town, and the accompanying national attention has upset some residents.

"The feds went out of the way to get publicity, and I think it's wrong because everyone in the United States knows we have marijuana that grows wild," a county employee who declined to be named told the Fort Worth Star-Telegram.

The project was the second time in six years that a national crew descended on Wheeler for unwelcome coverage.

In 1982, a local fundamentalist preacher caused a stir by having his flock disrupt and picket R-rated films at the courthouse square theater. He later bought the theater, which shows religious films to dwindling audiences.

This year's controversy may not be as deeply rooted as religious bickering, but it does have a historical context.

In 1983, a U.S. district court order blocked the use of paraquat on marijuana after lawsuits by environmentalist groups and the National Organization for the Reform of Marijuana Laws.

But a settlement was worked out this month after the government agreed to spraying guidelines, said Hank Graddy, national chairman of the Sierra Club's agricultural committee.

Graddy says his group is still concerned about the chemical.

"It is a toxic chemical that is very powerful," Graddy said. "Its consequences have not been fully demonstrated."

Starting last Tuesday and continuing through the end of the week, the Drug Enforcement Agency began spraying 51,000 plants on 16 acres of land.

A few miles north of Wheeler, paraquat's effectiveness was swiftly demonstrated. Within 45 minutes the plants were drooping. In two hours, they would be dead.

Its potency prompted rancher Tom Puryear Jr. to prohibit the spraying on his land. "We take pride in our turkey, white-tailed deer and bobwhite quail, and I'd hate to see anything happen to them," said Puryear, 38, adding he read that paraquat remains toxic for five days.

Wheeler was chosen as the first site to be sprayed after the DEA negotiated a settlement with environmentalists opposed to the herbicide and after some complaining from Wheeler County's lame-duck sheriff.

"We screamed louder than anyone else," said the law officer, Lonnie Miller, 55, who has fought the wild marijuana for years. "We've pulled it up, burned it, sprayed it; you name it, nothing worked."

Jim Seward, 44, a Washington DEA agent in charge of the operation, said the local weed is of negligible potency, compared to strains cloned for their high content of a chemical known as THC that gives marijuana its euphoric effect.

The Wheeler variety with 1.6 percent THC can't compare with some cultivated varieties that can reach 17 percent, authorities said.

Miller says an amount of the weed is being smoked locally, but its use is not as serious a problem as alcohol abuse among teen-agers.

Without paraquat, authorities have mainly attacked the thick and wild weed with machetes and small hatchets called tobacco knives. That method is difficult because of the height and thickness of the plants, authorities say.

"I was standing under a tree looking for marijuana to spray and the tree was" the marijuana, Jay Ficke, 34, said. "I'd say it was 18 feet."

Next week the target will be marijuana growing in neighboring Gray County. It will be chopped and burned because officials say the plant is seeding and spraying would not be that effective.

Joe Franklin, 62, is allowing removal of the weed on his property. He says he's glad paraquat is not being used and regrets seeing the weed go.

Franklin who devotes his time to propagating bobwhite quail said the quail and wild turkey use the weed.

"It's a shame you have to destroy a plant that's beneficial to wildlife because of a weakness in the human spirit."

"It's always something stupid," said two-term Mayor Wanda Herd. "It's a lovely town, and we can't get on the air how friendly we are. They are out there in their zoot suits on television and they're spraying and they're saying Wheeler, Texas."

Declining levels of popular lake hurt recreation

ANAHUAC (AP) — Residents who usually enjoy a summer of boating, skiing or fishing on Lake Anahuac say they could easily wade across the 5,000-acre, tree-lined lake without getting even waist deep.

"You can build sand castles where you ought to be water skiing," said a frustrated David Abernathy, who has given up trying to use the lake for anything but scenery.

Irrigation by farmers and a lack of rain have combined for a steady drain on the already shallow lake Anahuac, a popular Chambers County recreational spot that now sits still and half empty.

The lake that was built in a low-lying swamp 30 years ago relies on runoff from Turtle Bayou and water pumped from the Trinity River to maintain its usual level.

But the bayou runoff has stopped and officials say their two pumps on the river can't keep pace with water losses.

Paul Crutchfield with the Liberty-Chambers Navigation District pegs the average depth of the lake at two feet, instead of the usual five feet.

"It's low because it hasn't rained," he told the Houston Chronicle. "We've only got about half the amount of rain we normally would by this time of year. We're short about 11 inches or so."

Water also is pumped from the lake to supply drinking water to seven rural communities in the Trinity Bay Conservation District, but irrigation has been the biggest drain on the reservoir despite decreased use by farmers.

Crutchfield, however, said the lingering drought is the main reason that more water is being pumped out of the lake this year than has been put back in.

A dozen residents with lake homes have banded together and appealed to the navigation district to make improvements that would maintain a constant water level.

"We have a great recreational resource, but it's going to waste," said Kathy Keeler, who lives on the lake and is president of the Anahuac Area Chamber of Commerce.

Walton and other homeowners around the lake think the lake should benefit from the navigation tax they pay of 2 cents per $100 valuation. But Crutchfield said that, while water sports are a nice side benefit of the lake, it was not designed for that purpose.

"It was built for water retention. The farmers have paid for it and maintained it. It would be unfair to increase their expenses for recreational purposes," he said.

Because of such problems as erosion, not everybody favors raising the lake level, Crutchfield added.

About 160,000 to 200,000 gallons per minute are being pumped out every day, while only 120,000 gallons per minute are being put back.

A disabled veteran makes his way across Dallas hotel floor on way to meeting.

Veterans leader claims more assistance needed

DALLAS (AP) — There are not enough beds, doctors, nurses or funds for disabled veterans and the only way to get them is through direct communication with the president, the commander of a veterans' group says.

Gene A. Murphy, outgoing commander of the Disabled American Veterans, criticized federal officials Sunday for continued funding cutbacks and pending suspension of programs to assist veterans. He also called for the creation of a Cabinet-level post for the Veterans Administration.

"We're short on professional staffing ... doctors, nurses. The last five years have been very tough on veterans," Murphy said on the opening day of the 67th national convention expected to draw up to 5,000.

While the cost of health care for veterans will increase about 7 percent from 1988 to 1989, the VA's budget has increased only 2 percent, said Billy E. Kirby, the unopposed nominee to replace Murphy.

"The VA claims the process has slowed to a crawl. VA employee numbers are dwindling ... even as the morale of those remaining employees hits bottom. Buildings are crumbling, equipment is failing and beds are being eliminated," Murphy said.

Murphy thinks veterans also are short on representation in the government, and that's why they want the Veterans Administration to have a position in the next president's cabinet.

"Why shouldn't we have one?" Murphy asked. "Farmers have it, businessmen have it, teachers have it. Why can't we have it?"

On a scale of one to 10, Murphy said he would rate the Reagan administration's accomplishments for veterans a five. However despite their dissatisfaction, Murphy said the group would not endorse a presidential candidate.

Many of veterans' problems can be traced to the Office of Management and Budget, Murphy said.

"We feel they are trying to run the Veterans Administration and I don't think that's right. That's why we want a cabinet level position for the Veterans Administration, where that individual can communicate right with the administration."

Legislation creating the position is pending before a Senate-House conference committee. Reagan also supports the idea.

The one million-member DAV will hold elections Thursday night, at which time Kirby, 67, of Clifton, will be installed.

On Sunday the group named Ronald Castille Outstanding Disabled Veteran of the Year. Castille, now Philadelphia district attorney, was wounded in the leg while serving in Vietnam. He said he was saved by a 22-year-old New York man, Angel Mendez, who died pulling Castille from a rice field.

Journalist's death under investigation

CIUDAD JUAREZ, Mexico (AP) — Mexico's attorney general vowed to remove "bad elements" from the federal police and conduct a full investigation into the deaths of a TV anchorwoman and two other people by police machine-gun fire.

"We're not going to stop fighting corruption. We're going to clean up the police force," Attorney General Sergio Garcia Ramirez said during a visit to this city on the U.S. border to initiate an investigation into the shootings.

Linda Bejarano, 28, co-anchor for XHIJ-TV of Juarez; her mother-in-law, Lucrecia Martinez de Gomez, 58; and family friend Carlos Alfonso Garcia, 25, were gunned down in their car about 3 a.m. Saturday by men identifying themselves as Federal Judicial Police, officials said.

Bejarano's husband and co-anchor, Manuel Gomez, was in the car but escaped injury by lying on the floor.

A Federal Judicial Police officer and three officers on the city police force were arrested, according to Notimex, Mexico's government news agency.

Garcia said the three were "madrinas," underlings who work illegally for members of the elite federal force.

Though illegal, the use of madrinas reportedly is widespread in Juarez. The "officers," lured by the chance to work with Mexico's highest police agency and carry automatic weapons, often have little or no training.

City police Chief Fernando Motta Allen later denied the three were on the city police force.

If an investigation determines the three are not commissioned officers, they will face charges of usurpation of police powers as well as of homicide, District Attorney Alberto Salinas said Sunday.

Garcia suspended the chief of the Juarez Federal Judicial Police pending an investigation, and said he wanted the use of madrinas to end.

"I am absolutely against that corrupt and dishonest practice," he said. "My indignation is great.

"The bad elements (in the federal force) will be removed. There are good elements in the force, ones who devote their lives to it. That isn't the case in this instance. But the bad agents will be removed. We won't let this blow over."

Carlos Armendariz, acting head of the Juarez detachment of the federal police, said the four detainees mistook the victims' car for one involved in a police shootout two hours earlier on a highway south of Juarez.

Occupants of the first car were suspected of being drug traffickers. Police said they found the abandoned car Saturday afternoon in Juarez.

Congressional sources name Houston firm in parts fraud

HOUSTON (AP) — Sources say an as-yet-unreleased congressional report names a Houston distributing company as one of at least 15 U.S. firms involved in the sale of millions of counterfeit and substandard bolts, nuts and screws, the Houston Post reported.

In a copyright story, the Post quoted congressional sources as saying Metal Building Bolts Corp. of Houston is "known to have supplied substandard and misrepresented fasteners to an energy co-generation project and to the federal government."

Civilian and military investigators are probing the sales of substandard fasteners that have surfaced in nuclear power plants, military vehicles, a Louisiana bridge and other locations around the country, the newspaper said.

But Metal Building Bolts lawyer Robert Givens accused the U.S. Customs Service of a haphazard investigation that is setting up the congresssional committee as the unwitting tool of company competitors.

"Metal Building Bolts stands accused, but Metal Building Bolts doesn't understand the allegations," Givens said Sunday. "I've never seen a more contorted and torturous line of reasoning in 15 years of practicing customs law.

"I believe this committee that is investigating substandard products and mismarked products has really run amok, and we have a congressional committee that starts out to determine the facts and somehow ends up running a McCarthy-style investigation," Givens said.

No charges have been filed against the company, but a U.S. Customs Service investigation continues, the Post reported.

Company President Aron Amato, whose home phone number is unpublished, could not be reached by The Associated Press for comment on the report.

Fasteners which fall below accepted standards are a multi-million-dollar worry for industries producing products ranging from automobiles and appliances to military equipment and power plants.

Many of the bad fasteners come from Asian manufacturers, encouraged to deceive by American importers and distributors, congressional officials have concluded.

Houston distributor Tommy Grant noticed the problem eight years ago and has since campaigned to expose it.

"The reason I got involved was, I could see the quality slipping in bolts coming across the water," Grant said. Some bolts marked to indicate they would withstand high temperatures do not because they contain weak steel, cheap coatings or were insufficiently heat-treated, he said.

Transplant recipients facing slim chances of finding right marrow

TYLER (AP) — A 4-year-old boy who beat the odds and eluded a degenerative bone marrow disease that runs in his family is likely to undergo painful operations to donate his healthy marrow to save his brothers.

Zane Cannon's brothers, Zachary, 5, and Zephan, 16 months, have Fanconi's anemia, a rare, potentially fatal genetic disorder that causes degeneration of bone marrow.

Their parents, Jackie and Bruce Cannon, both carry the recessive gene that can lead to the disease, meaning each of their children had a one-in-four chance of contracting Fanconi's anemia.

Zachary's condition was diagnosed in February. Tests at Children's Medical Center in Dallas showed Zephan also had the disease.

Somehow, Zane eluded it and is now his brothers' best hope for survival.

Because the odds of finding a compatible bone marrow donor outside the family are one in 100,000, Zane probably will undergo painful operations to donate his healthy marrow to save them.

The medical bills are staggering, and the treatment, which probably will take place in Seattle, will separate the family for as long as a year.

"It could be worse," Mrs. Cannon told the Dallas Morning News. "If they didn't have a match, if Zane had it, too, we wouldn't have much hope."

A month after Zach's diagnosis, Jackie, 33, suffered the stillbirth of a baby girl — born without a brain.

"It just seemed like everything bad happened to us all at once," she said.

And the Cannons wonder why.

"We are just a totally normal family. Everything about us is normal, with our three little boys and supper on the table ... If you had told us a year ago that all this was going to happen, we never would have believed it," she said.

Bruce Cannon, a 35-year-old purchasing agent for a cable television company in Tyler, has family health insurance, but he learned that the plan will not cover the bone marrow transplants the boys need. The mortality rate of the disease — the boys have only a 50 percent chance of surviving to adulthood without the operation — has made the Cannons ineligible for insurance.

When the operation is conducted — probably sometime this fall — Zane will be placed under anesthesia. Doctors will insert a needle into his spine 150 times to extract marrow. The healthy marrow then will be put into Zach's bloodstream intravenously.

In preparation for the transplant, Zach will undergo high doses of radiation and-or chemotherapy to suppress his immune system, making his body more receptive to his brother's bone marrow. He will have a 20 percent chance of developing leukemia.

The Cannons estimate the cost of the first transplant, plus the cost of keeping up their house in Tyler and renting an apartment in Seattle, could reach more than $100,000.

Zach has several maladies as a result of the anemia. His stunted growth is treated with costly, weekly hormone shots. He also wears a hearing aid in his right ear and recently developed a heart murmur.

"The doctors warned us that a really hard blow to the head could kill him, and for the longest time we just protected him as best we could," Mrs. Cannon said.

Tyler has rallied around the family, staging fund-raisers to help defray the bills.

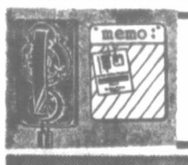

And every donation is special to the Cannons.

"We believe there's hope in the future," Cannon said. "We have so much to feel positive about ... We know it will be hard for the boys, for the whole family. But in a lot of other ways, we've been blessed."

EVER STRIVING FOR THE TOP O' TEXAS
TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

Defense cuts won't make us any safer

House and Senate negotiators finally have approved a compromise defense budget for fiscal 1989, which begins Oct. 1. But just what do our servants think it will defend? The $299.5 billion bill cuts spending on the Strategic Defense Initiative, which conceptually would defend the country, by $800 million from President Reagan's request, while forcing the military to spend $300 million for a non-defense role it can't possibly accomplish, and doesn't want: fighting the futile "war" on drugs. It's like a man saying he can best defend his house by throwing away his rifle and going on a snark hunt.

It could have been worse. The full House had earlier voted to require President Reagan to use the military to seal our borders to drugs within 45 days. It's amazing that anyone could even think such a scheme possible. Even if the government drafted 10 million Americans into an anti-drug force, erected a 10-foot high cement wall around the country, and set up a spy network everywhere, the drugs would still get through. After all, that's just the system the Soviet Union has, yet drugs still get in there.

Although that House measure was dropped, the $300 million approved will commit the military to providing intelligence to civilian anti-drug agencies. This is simply absurd. The military is trained to fight certain obvious enemies, in particular the Soviet military. That's what it trains day and night to do, and that's what it is designed to do. When you ask it to do something else, at best you'll just be wasting money, at worst you'll cause a disaster.

Therefore, the $300 million to be spent on military drug interdiction won't have any effect on that problem — which is really a problem of government trying to enforce drug laws we shouldn't even have. But the money may cause a disaster similar to the recent one in the Persian Gulf, this time involving the very American citizens who are supposed to be "protected" from the influx of drugs. One congressman recently even demanded that the military blast out of the sky any plane suspected of carrying illegal drugs.

A final point. This year's defense budget will be slightly less than the $301 billion spent in FY 1988. Given that inflation is running about 4 percent, that means defense will be cut 4 percent this year; this will also be the fourth straight year of cuts. And a larger portion of that smaller pie is being spent on defense pork-barrel projects and hysteria campaigns like the one described above. So much for Ronald Reagan's alleged defense buildup. The country might be better defended if each citizen went back to placing a flintlock above the fireplace.

Reparations need careful look

James J. Kilpatrick

WASHINGTON — Let us make haste slowly — very slowly — on this matter of compensation for families of the Iranian airliner accident. This is an idea whose time has not yet come.

The word from the White House was definite: The United States "will offer" compensation. An unidentified State department official talked freely of the form and possible amount of such payments. A host of details would have to be worked out, the official said, but the principle of compensation had been accepted.

Well, whoa there! Unless Article I of the Constitution has been amended in the past 48 hours, it still contains a clear commandment: "no money shall be drawn from the Treasury, but in consequence of appropriations made by law." Before serious thought is given to these details of form and amount, the president will need an act of Congress. And before he gets an act of Congress, this whole episode must be thoroughly and publicly explored. At the moment, the story is about as clear as crude oil.

What do we know of this affair? We know that on the morning of July 3, the USS Vincennes shot down Iranian Air's Flight 655 from Bandar Avvas to Dubai, across the Strait of Hormuz.

We know that President Reagan at once sent his formal "sincere regrets" to the Iranian government. He intended his letter as an "apology."

We know, because Iranian radio carried the statements, that the Ayatollah Khomeini immediately promised "revenge," " retaliation" and "real war against the Great Satan." We know that these threats have been ameliorated.

What do we believe? We believe the incident was, as President Reagan said, "a tragic accident."

Beyond these elementary observations there stretches a long list of things we do not yet know. We do not know what to believe. We do not know whether Flight 655 was ascending at the moment of impact. Evidence is in conflict.

We do not know positively whether the civilian plane was inside or outside of the established 20-mile corridor for commercial aircraft. The Pentagon at first said four miles outside. Later reports contradicted the first report.

We are told that the Vincennes sent seven warnings before the order was given to fire, three warnings on a civilian net, four on a military net. We believe the Iranian plane failed to respond to these warnings. We do not know why the plane failed to respond to these warnings. We do not know why the warnings were ignored. For the past year such warnings regularly have been answered.

We know little about the elaborate and complicated electronic detection gear that constitutes the Aegis system. Was it malfunctioning? Was it correctly picking up a dual civilian and military signal from the doomed flight?

The Iranian airline announced that 290 passengers and crew members were aboard the flight. All were killed. Within hours roughly 200 bodies were recovered from the Persian Gulf. Reporters at Dubai described many of the bodies as "dismembered," but a number were nude and unmarked. It seems an odd circumstance.

Iran had a television camera trained on Flight 655 from a vessel in the civilian corridor. This may have been merely a fortuitous coincidence, but it is curious all the same. The flight from Bandar Abbas was nearly an hour late taking off. It then flew directly over a combat zone in which gunfire was being actively exchanged. Why was the flight permitted to depart?

Iran's government is beyond the pale of membership in a civilized family of nations. No American can forget the barbaric conduct of that government in the matter of the seizure of the U.S. Embassy in 1979. Neither can we forget that the government of Iran today effectively holds nine Americans hostage in Beirut.

It would be a grievous mistake to link the accidental destruction of the airliner to the deliberate seizure of hostages, but an understandable resentment cannot be suppressed.

Some distinguished members of Congress approve the principle of compensation — House Speaker Jim Wright, Utah's Sen. Orrin Hatch, Virginia's Sen. John Warner. Others are opposed — California's Rep. Tony Coelho, Arizona's Sen. John McCain. The president's sense of compassion may be widely shared, but compassion and compensation belong in different compartments.

Let us examine thoughtfully the precedents in this area. Let us carefully assess the costs and benefits of the proposed gesture. Reagan may be right. My own feeling, subject to change when we know more than we know now, is that this time he is wrong.

Today in history

By The Associated Press

Today is Monday, July 25, the 207th day of 1988. There are 159 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

Twenty-five years ago, on July 25, 1963, the United States, the Soviet Union and Britain signed a treaty in Moscow prohibiting the testing of nuclear weapons in the atmosphere, in space or underwater.

On this date:

In 1593, France's King Henry IV, a Protestant, converted to Roman Catholicism.

In 1866, Ulysses S. Grant was named general of the Army, the first officer to hold the rank.

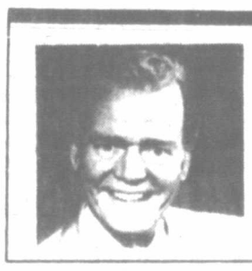

In 1868, Congress passed an act creating the Wyoming Territory.

In 1909, French aviator Louis Bleriot flew across the English Channel in a monoplane, traveling from Calais to Dover in 37 minutes.

In 1943, Benito Mussolini was dismissed as premier of Italy during World War II.

In 1985, a spokeswoman for Rock Hudson confirmed that the actor, hospitalized in Paris, was suffering from AIDS. (Hudson died the following October.)

Television's in for tacky times

Paul Harvey

Johnny Carson's greatest asset is his Nebraska roots. Midst New York sophistication and Southern California's crazies, Carson has prevailed because he has persisted in reflecting traditional American values.

He's at his best interviewing the elderly or hosting children or playing with animals.

Those who have sought to dethrone him have failed. Most recently, glitzy Joan Rivers who makes her points too sharply.

Presently the keenest TV competition is among talk-show hosts Oprah Winfrey, Phil Donahue and Geraldo Rivera. They are seeking to outdo one another in titillating their audiences with sex-related subjects.

The networks are watching. The networks, steadily losing out to cable and to VCRs, sifting to regain audience share, are themselves flirting with more lurid subjects.

The Wall Street Journal recently remarked that "TV is going tabloid," meaning that programs involving real-life murder, mayhem and sex are cheap to make and highly profitable.

And "tabloid television" is proving attractive to an audience that is prized by advertisers, women between the ages of 18 and 49.

For years television sought to lure audiences with the least "offensive" programs; the new success formula tends to focus on the sleazy and the sordid.

Public television, subsidized, is able to afford high-budget quality features.

Commercial TV fights for what audience is left with some 500 game shows, talk shows and series reruns.

Television once looked down its nose at tha tabloid journals, which featured love triangles, physical freaks and "mothers who eat their babies." Now television is imitating them.

On a recent episode of America's Most Wanted a rapist bursts into a woman's home, forces her to the bed, hits her in the face, stuffs lingerie in her mouth and ties her hands behind her back.

Then the camera turns away from the scene. Next time, maybe not.

Robert Pittman, president of Quantum Media Inc., says, "Television works best when the viewer gets to be a voyeur."

Bill Boggs, executive producer of one of the more outrageous talk shows, says, "Sex sells; sensationalism sells."

Will "Blue Television" run its course and revert? Radio did. Radio talk shows got as raunchy and profane as it is possible to get — until the tuned-in audience was turned off.

Excesses, ultimately, inevitably are their own undoing.

But between now and the time television begins to demonstrate self-discipline, we are in for a tacky time.

Writing a letter to Mr. Next President

By BEN WATTENBERG

In this season of presidential nominating, it would be useful if The Next President knew what to expect. Just 16 months from now, we will reach one of those arbitrary dividing lines by which we measure our existence — the beginning of a new decade. The 1990s are upon us.

The small cottage industry of futurism has already begun ritual decademongering. We are told, "The '90s will usher in a new era, leading to a new world at the turn of the millennium at the year 2000."

All right. But what's going to happen? Do we know something? Anything? Alas, the decades do not reveal themselves in advance. In August 1958 no one predicted the radicalism of the '60s. Toward the end of the '60s, there was no common view that the '70s would yield economic turbulence. In 1978 the two dominant figures of the '80s — Ronald Reagan and Mikhail Gorbachev — were tiny blips on the radar of the future. Even if we knew they would achieve high office, we could not have guessed at the course they would take.

But do not despair, Mr. Next President. There are some things we do know something about. We know about the terrain upon which unknowable events will play themselves out. We know there are some questions to which attention must be paid. And there are some intuitions that are based on more than capriciousness. Here, sir, is a first cut:

There will be demographic change in America. The Baby Boomers will all move into middle age. There will be a sharp decline in the number of young adults (which allegedly will yield less crime). Our population will be older (which will surely necessitate more medical services). We know these demographic facts because we are dealing with people who are already born.

The Sun Belt states will likely continue to grow faster than the northern regions, just as happened in the '80s. The census of 1990 will yield a political reapportionment that will reflect this Southwesternization. That will likely yield somewhat of a tilt in American politics toward what have been the more conservative areas of the nation. Beyond that, anyone who tells you about the future of American politics doesn't understand the situation.

The amount of illegal immigration may fall due to the new immigration law. But legal immigration will likely continue at moderately high levels. The new immigrants will be from non-European areas. America will become an ever-more multi-hued, universal nation.

Mr. Next President, don't ask about our economy. It's strong, but puzzling. The experts say we will either have to pay the piper for profligacy, or we won't. If we don't, we'll begin to wonder if there is a piper. There is. Somewhere.

Foreign policy is also unknowable, but we know the right question to ask: Will the Soviet empire break up? Just as the Bolshevik revolution may well have been the key political event of the first half of the century, its demise may be the central event of the second half.

Science will astound us, especially biogenetics, communications and superconductivity, whatever that means. But remember that nature usually manages to trump science. The '80s uncovered AIDS and started us thinking seriously about the "greenhouse effect." This year we are worried about drought. Just like Joseph and his brothers.

Mr. Next President, in the year 2000 America will still be the "No.1" country. That is not necessarily because we're so wonderful, or because you will have been so wonderful, but because there is no other nation in sight that can match us.

I do not know where the stock market will be in the year 2000. I do know that people in that year will complain about conditions. Mr. Next President, the bad news is that, no matter what you do, people will say the president is a turkey. The good news is that they'll probably be wrong.

First U.S. symbol was Indian woman

By RALPH and TERRY KOVEL

Antiques

The first person to personify the United States was not Uncle Sam. That honor belongs to a woman.

Artists of the 17th century often drew figures to represent the different continents. The usual choice for North America was a female Indian, who became known as the Indian queen or the Indian princess and was the symbol of North America that was seen in most European publications.

The early Indian queen was barefoot and muscular, wore a feathered headdress and a short skirt of tobacco leaves or feathers, carried a club or bow and arrow and appeared quite able to defend herself. By the 1750s, she had become more youthful and slender.

After the American Revolution, the Indian princess was gradually replaced by Miss Liberty, who was shown carrying a flag or spears and shields. Although she wore a Greek-style gown instead of tobacco leaves, she kept the feathered headdress.

By the 19th century, she was completely transformed: her complexion lightened, her hairdo and profile changed and she appeared more like a Greek goddess than a princess.

The pictorial symbol that now represents the United States is the Statue of Liberty, the latest of the series of females who have had that honor.

The half-round Federal tables usually found in pairs were not meant to be made into one round table but were used at each end of a rectangular dining-room table to extend its seating capacity. They were known as "circular ends" in the order books of the early 1800s.

One expert said they were "a cheap way to turn your old-fashioned square-leaved Chippendale table into instant Federal."

Q. When did men start wearing neckties like those used today? My boyfriend collects old ties.

A. The long necktie similar to those used today was first worn about 1860. The earliest neckwear was worn to keep the neck warm, to absorb perspiration or to keep the neck from being rubbed by metal armor. Louis XIV of France, the first to make the necktie popular, wore a cravat.

The string tie came into use in America around 1860. The ascot, bowtie and four-in-hand ties all appeared in the 1880s, and the butterfly bowtie was introduced by 1900.

Colorful ties came into fashion during the 1920s, and wild prints were popular. The modern necktie, with its special construction and lining, was developed around the same time.

If you are interested in the colorful, bold ties favored after World War II, you should read Fit to be Tied, Vintage Ties of the Forties and early Fifties by Rod Dyer and Ron Spark (Abbeville, $19.95).

Q. My great-grandmother owned a locket with a photograph inside. It might be a daguerrotype. How old is this sort of jewelry?

A. Jewelry made to hold pictures of loved ones is a centuries-old tradition. The miniaturists of the 18th century painted small, flattering portraits that would be worn in lockets or brooches. When the camera was invented, photographs began to replace miniature painted portraits.

The first brooches with pictures were probably made around 1840 in the United States. Daguerrotypes were used in early jewelry, including lockets, pendants, bracelets and watches.

The Indian princess is shown in this marble statue made around 1825-1850. She represented the continent of America in a group of four garden statues.

Celluloid buttons with photographs were made after 1903. They were sold as souvenirs in many places and seem to be the last of the photographic jewelry. Lockets and pendants that hold photographs are still popular.

Q. My candy box is marked "Claire Lerner, Calif." How old is it?

A. Claire Lerner Studio worked in Los Angeles, Calif. from the 1940s to about 1954. The studio made vases, trays, boxes and other decorative pottery containers.

The Nucleotome is a hollow needle with a cutting knife inside, used in a new procedure at Coronado Hospital to remove a ruptured or herniated disc.

New disc surgery available in Pampa

Dr. Harvey Edwards of Coronado Hospital is using a new procedure to remove a ruptured or herniated disc in the spine.

Instead of the usual complicated back surgery which requires weeks of recovery time, the new procedure, called an automated percutaneous lumbar discectomy, uses local anesthesia and a very small incision and allows most patients to go home the same day.

The procedure is usually done on an outpatient basis, with many patients feeling relief from pain immediately following the procedure.

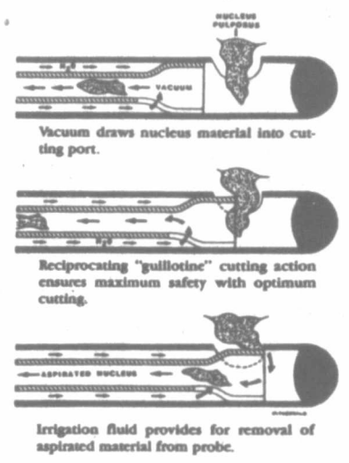

"The procedure won't work for everyone," Edwards said. "Some patients will still have to undergo the longer surgery. Percutaneous discectomy is specifically for patients with uncomplicated, herniated discs accompanied by severe leg and lower back pain or pain that has not responded to conventional treatments, or patients with herniated lumbar discs.

"Patients who have had previous back surgeries or those with arthritis of the spinal joints are not good candidates for the surgery," he said.

The procedure is performed under local anesthesia with the patient awake and lying down. A small needle is inserted into the disc space after local anesthesia has been administered. Over this needle, a slightly larger probe is inserted to permit a small incision to be made in the disc itself.

Using x-ray, the Nucleotome, a hollow needle with a cutting knife inside, is inserted in the disc space. Very small pieces of disc material are then suctioned into the tip of the needle and cut by the knife.

The procedure takes 45 minutes to an hour. The amount of disc removed varies, Edwards said, but the supporting structure of the disc is not affected. Upon completion, the needle is removed and a small bandage is applied over the needle hole.

Vacuum draws nucleus material into cutting port.

Reciprocating "guillotine" cutting action ensures maximum safety with optimum cutting.

Irrigation fluid provides for removal of aspirated material from probe.

"The primary advantage of this procedure is that there is no interference with the muscles, bones, joints or manipulation of the nerves in the lower back area," Edwards said. "Since insertion of the needle through the muscle is the only wound, there is no scarring in or around the nerves postoperatively."

Patients are permitted to walk the same day. Following discharge from the hospital, the patient is evaluated a few days later.

Edwards, who is certified by the American Board of Orthopedic Surgery, is a native Texan who has been in practice in Pampa since 1982. He received his medical degree from the University of Arkansas School of Medicine in Little Rock, and served his internship at the University Hospital in Little Rock. He completed a residency in general surgery and orthopedic surgery at the University of Arkansas Medical Center.

The Nucleotome System automated percutaneous lumbar discectomy equipment is manufactured by Surgical Dynamics of San Leadro, Calif.

Hoechst-Celanese still factor in Good Sam aid

Workers at the Hoechst-Celanese Pampa plant continue to constitute a portion of those seeking aid at Good Samaritan Christian Services, Inc., 309 N. Ward, an interfaith mission responding to material needs of persons who reside in or travel through the area.

"The construction work at the Celanese plant has brought many new and some former residents to Pampa. We have had many requests for food, and the most common reason is, 'I went to work and won't get paid for two more weeks and used our last money to get here.' We are pleased that so many folks have found work," said Bill Ragsdale, executive director of The Good Samaritan.

"Several others have come to Pampa or returned to Pampa and have not yet found work. We have had a problem some nights in finding a motel to put people up for the night, due to the high occupancy rates," Ragsdale said. "We expect the next rush to be at the time of the first layoff, about December or January."

June requests for aid were 17 percent above those for May. Food requests were up 25 percent. Utility aid requests were up from 21 in May to 22 in June. Cost of utility aid for June was down 27 percent; average utility aid payment was $33.63, down from $48.54.

Total June expenses were up 42 percent above May due to the purchase of a copy machine.

There were 310 families seeking help in June; 291 received aid at Good Sam, including food, 241; clothing, 67; rent, two; utilities, 22; transportation, 23; lodging, four; medical, 20; and other, 10. A total of 935 persons were aided; 19 families did not receive aid because many requests for utility aid were referred to other agencies with utility grant funds.

Gray County families receiving help totaled 280; newcomers, 22; outside Gray County but within 25 miles of Pampa, one; and seven transients.

Three families were referred by churches, 35 by friends, one by news, nine by other organizations or agencies and 262 were returns. There were five emergency after-hours calls in June.

Out-of-pocket expenses totaled $3,869.53, compared to $2,727.57 for May. Administrative costs for June were $2,307.52; program costs totaled $1,562.01, including food, $778.88; clothing, $91.20; rent, $115; utilities, $743.28; transportation, $188.30; lodging, $27.62; and medical, $171.17.

Clothing requests for June were down 8 percent from May figures. Clothing needed for distribution includes infants' and children's clothing, work clothing, and jeans and tennis shoes for all ages.

Best gifts from husbands don't come wrapped

Dear Abby

Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: This is in regard to the mother whose husband neglected to give her a Mother's Day gift, stating: "You're not my mother."

I, too, went through that for many years, and felt hurt until I read a letter in your column that said: "My husband never remembers anniversaries or special days. He seldom brings home gifts, but he's a hard worker, doesn't run around, he's there when I need him, he's a good father, takes us places, spends his days off with his family, and who could ask for anything more? His giving of himself far outweighs any gift he could buy me."

I have never complained — nor have I ever forgotten that letter.

J.B., INDEPENDENCE, MO.

P.S. And an extra bonus was that eventually he chose to remember special days because he wanted to.

DEAR J.B.: If a letter in my column can change an attitude, comfort the hurting, solve a problem, open a closed mind or provide a chuckle, hallelujah — my day is made! Thanks for writing.

* * *

DEAR ABBY: Our neighbor's child is only 14 years old. He's 5 foot 11 and weighs about 250 pounds. His mother and I were talking and feel that he needs help. I told her I would write and ask you if there is a group to help young people who are compulsive eaters. He is such a sweet and good young man, but people make fun of him and he gets very hurt.

Although his folks have tried everything, he often eats until his stomach hurts! How can we help? I used to go to AA meetings with a friend, and if there were something like that for eaters, maybe he would go.

CONCERNED NEIGHBOR IN LOS ANGELES

DEAR CONCERNED NEIGHBOR: There is an organization like AA for compulsive eaters of all ages. It's Overeaters Anonymous. It is listed in the telephone directory, and there are chapters in almost every major city. I have attended some of the meetings, and a more compassionate group of people you will rarely encounter.

There is no shaming — no weighing, no embarrassment. Just a loving fellowship of people with a common problem — being overweight and wanting to do something about it. Contact them and put the boy in touch. There's no charge. Please let me hear from you again. I care.

* * *

DEAR ABBY: I had to laugh when I read the letter from "Aching Heart," the high school girl who was in love with her teacher at school.

I'm now 29 and married to a great guy, but when I was a senior in high school, I, too, was "madly in love" with one of my teachers. I tried everything to get him to notice me, but he wouldn't have anything to do with me.

Exactly two days after graduation, he called me and asked me to go out with him. I had no interest whatsoever in seeing him. We never went out. I went on to receive a degree from the University of Minnesota and dated lots of great guys — and even a few jerks.

It's amazing how I could have been so crazy about someone when he was unattainable — but as soon as he was within my reach, I lost all interest. I think it has a lot to do with "forbidden fruit," don't you?

BEEN THERE

DEAR BEEN THERE: Possibly. But while forbidden fruit is said to taste sweeter, it usually spoils faster.

DEAR READERS: Talk about vision concerning television, read on: "I believe television is going to be the test of the modern world, and that in this new opportunity to see beyond the range of our vision, we shall discover either a new and unbearable disturbance of the general peace, or a saving radiance in the sky. We shall stand or fall by television — of that I am quite sure."

New brain-imaging agent helps in diagnosing strokes

NUTLEY, N.J. (AP) — Of the half million Americans who suffer a stroke each year, two-thirds survive, according to the National Stroke Association. Early detection and treatment of stroke may significantly increase the chance for full, or nearly full, recovery.

A new brain-imaging agent can help doctors diagnose strokes earlier, according to its developer, Medi-Physics Inc. The firm says it is the first brain-imaging agent that can cross the intact blood-brain barrier, the fatty wall that surrounds blood vessels in the brain.

This allows doctors to analyze how well the brain is functioning within 48 hours after the onset of stroke symptoms and when other scans may still appear normal. Thus, the doctor can evaluate appropriate action before the brain tissue dies from lack of oxygen.

Weight Loss Volunteers Wanted Now!

$1000.00 Bond Paid By Company

Orange, CA — A major health products manufacturer is offering to pay a $1000.00 U.S. Government Treasury Bond to a limited number of volunteers to help them test the amazing new Decision Diet Program.

Interested people who have 10 pounds or more to lose and who have tried at least one diet program in the past 18 months but failed to reach or maintain their weight loss goal are invited to write for an application and details immediately.

Officials at BioCal Health Industries who have spent years testing and developing diet products believe that the Decision Diet is the most practical, safe and effective diet ever produced. With the Decision Diet Program it is possible to lose 10, 20, 50 even 100 pounds or more while eating all your favorite foods without calorie counting and without an exhaustive exercise regimen!

Rather than using their promotional budget for expensive TV commercials or other advertising, Decision Diet is making this extraordinary $1000.00 offer in order to collect data from qualified people.

In the year ahead you may undertake an extremely ambitious project that will require your best effort to succeed. The goal can be attained through tenaciousness.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) If you press too hard today where work is concerned, it could prematurely fatigue you and cut down on efficiency. Pace is of utmost importance. Know where to look for romance and you'll find it. The Astro-Graph Matchmaker instantly reveals which signs are romantically perfect for you. Mail $2 to Matchmaker, c/o this newspaper, P.O. Box 91428, Cleveland, OH 44101-3428.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Don't take risks on situations that are vague or only partially prepared. Before making your move, be sure everything is crystal clear.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) There is a possibility you may be faced with an unusual domestic crisis today. Everything can be managed in stride if you do not lose your cool.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) Be helpful where you can today but don't be used. Co-workers may try to dump extra work on you that they should be taking care of themselves.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) If you hope to come out in the black today, it looks like you are going to have to manage your affairs with the same caution and prudence a banker uses.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) There won't be harmony in your household today if you set the example with a cranky disposition. Don't expect others to be nice if you aren't.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) An argumentative acquaintance will want to get in the last words if you both disagree today. Don't prolong the issue, let this person close the chapter.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) You're on thin ice today in arrangements with friends where something of material value or money is at stake. Keep this in mind if things gets sticky.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) What you set out to do today can be achieved, provided you do not do something irrational at the last minute that could upset the apple cart. Be consistent until conclusions are realized.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Today's plans aren't likely to work at well as they should if they are overloaded with emotional content. Be logical and objective.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Be on guard today so that you are not drawn into a development with a friend that could lead to an undesirable obligation. Stand up to pressure.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Cooperation and teamwork may not be your long suits today, yet these ingredients will be essential in order to further ambitions. Adjust where necessary.

Some top-knotch athletes get left behind

Hurdler Greg Foster, running with a broken arm, is among the many track greats who failed to qualify for the Seoul Olympics.

U.S. team set for trip to Seoul

By STEVE HERMAN
AP Sports Writer

INDIANAPOLIS — Put aside for the moment the two world records, three American records and eight 1988 world bests produced during the eight days of U.S. Olympic track and field trials.

A better indication of the strength of the U.S. team that will compete in Seoul might be the number of world-caliber athletes who failed to qualify.

Carl Lewis, as expected, earned a chance to become the first track and field athlete ever to win four gold medals in two consecutive Olympic games. Florence Griffith Joyner and her sister-in-law, Jackie Joyner-Kersee, toppled world records in the 100-meter dash and heptathlon, respectively.

Mary Decker Slaney, to no one's surprise, dominated the women's distance running.

Yet despite the fierce competition at Indiana University's Track and Field Stadium, only the top three finishers in each event advanced to the Olympics — leaving a pretty good team watching at home.

Renaldo Nehemiah, world record holder in the 110-meter hurdles, fell in the final and did not make the team. Greg Foster, the Olympic Trials winner in 1984 and a silver medalist in the 110-hurdles at Los Angeles, broke his arm three weeks ago and had to quit during Saturday's semifinals when he lost his balance.

Valerie Brisco, the 1984 Olympic champion in the women's 200, was fourth in the final and did not qualify. Jim Spivey, America's top-ranked mile runner last year, was fourth in the 1,500 on Saturday and missed an Olympic berth by .21 second.

Al Joyner — Jackie's brother and Florence's husband — was the Olympic gold medal winner in the triple jump four years ago but finished fifth in the trials in that event last week and seventh in the 110-hurdles on Saturday.

He may go to Seoul with his wife, but he won't be competing.

Nor will triple jumper Michael Conley, the Olympic silver medalist four years ago; 41-year-old John Powell, who failed to win his fifth Olympic spot in the discus; pole vaulters Joe Dial and Mike Tully; Joan Benoit Samuelson, the 1984 Olympic women's marathon champion; Benita Fitzgerald-Brown, the defending Olympic 100-meter hurdles gold medalist; Jane Frederick, five-time national champion in the heptathlon; or Judi Brown King, silver medalist in the 400 hurdles in 1984.

If those athletes weren't good enough to get on the 1988 team, how good were the ones who did?

"I feel our team has been awesome," says Stan Huntsman, coach of the U.S. men's team. "We have the momentum we need (for Seoul). I think we've already shown we won't be a pushover."

Lewis, who won the men's 100, 200 and long jump and was a member of the winning 400-meter relay team, had a world-best 9.78 seconds in the 100, although it could not be recognized as a record because it was wind aided. He also was second in the 200 and won the long jump with a leap of 28 feet, 9 inches, matching the fifth-best performance in history and the best in the world this year.

Another potential gold medalist for the United States will be Edwin Moses, trying to become the first three-time Olympic champion in the 400-hurdles. He won the trials with a time of 47.37 seconds, the fastest ever run in the United States and the fastest in the world this year.

Moses will attempt to become the first three-time Olympic gold medalist in that event.

"Overall," said Joyner-Kersee, who won the heptathlon with a world-record 7,215 points and the long jump with a wind-aided 24-5½, equaling her American record, "I am very pleased and happy with my performance.

"The (200) race was OK," said Griffith Joyner, who didn't get a world record in that event but broke the American record with 21.77 in the semifinals. "I came to qualify for the Olypic Games and stay healthy, and I accomplished that."

Roger Kingdom, another individual gold medalist returning from the 1984 men's team, won his semifinal heat in the men's 110-meter high hurdles in 13.14, fastest time in the world in three years, and took the final in a wind-aided 13.21.

Slaney, the American record-holder in all women's events from 800 meters to 10,000 meters but never an Olympic medalist, joined Griffith Joyner and Joyner-Kersee as double winners Saturday.

Slaney, trying to erase the memory of her 1984 collision with Zola Budd in the 3,000 final, won the 1,500 in 3:58.92, fastest in the world this year and the fastest ever in the United States. Earlier in the trials, she took the 3,000 in 8:42.53.

Mark Brooks wins first pro tourney at Hartford

By CHRIS DAHL
AP Sports Writer

CROMWELL, Conn. — It wasn't only the first time. Mark Brooks said it was also about time he won a professional golf tournament.

"I was thinking all week long that it's my time to win," the 27-year-old Texan said Sunday after winning the $700,000 Sammy Davis Jr.-Greater Hartford Open on the second hole of a sudden-death playoff.

"It's been a long time coming," he said.

Brooks, a slightly-built blonde from Ft. Worth, had been back-and-forth between qualifying school and the PGA Tour four times since 1984.

Although a two-time all-American at the University of Texas, Brooks had never finished better than a tie for eighth in the 1986 Hardee's Golf Classic — before Sunday.

"It will probably take a few days to set in," he said. "There's a lot of quirks that go with it like knowing what you're going to do next year and the next year."

Brooks knocked a 7-iron shot within 10 feet of the flagstick on the second hole of sudden death and made the birdie to beat Dave Barr.

Joey Sindelar, who had also finished regulation at 15-under 269, was the first player eliminated when he hit into the water and double-bogeyed the first playoff hole, No. 16.

Barr, using a sand wedge upside down from a left-handed stance, made a miraculous chip from the edge of a water hazard to get close to the pin after his second shot fell short on the par-4, 399-yard 17th hole.

But the Canadian's shot went for naught when Brooks, who shot a 69 in regulation play, made his putt to earn the $126,000 winner's check.

"You hate to lose a playoff, but it was a birdie so Mark earned it," Barr said. "I was never given a chance to putt."

Brooks became the fourth straight first-time winner on the PGA Tour — following Jim Benape, Tom Sieckmann and Blaine McCallister — and sixth this year.

Barr, 36, didn't miss a green on the way to shooting a 63, the best round of the tournament and one stroke short of the course-record 62, to earn his way into the playoff. The seventh-leading money-winner on the Tour, Sindelar, 30, of Horseheads, N.Y., shot a final-round 65.

Splitting second- and third-place money, Barr and Sindelar each win $61,600.

Ronnie Black and Mark Calcavecchia, who had entered the final round in a three-way tie for the lead with Brooks, both finished with 70s to end up at 14-under 270.

Brett Upper, with a 69, and Roger Maltbie, with a 67, tied for sixth at 13-under.

The tournament is sponsored by Canon.

Bicycling champ receives royal congrats

PARIS — The King of Spain sent a special message to native son Pedro Delgado, who now rules the cycling world.

Delgado, after five years of setbacks, won the Tour de France Sunday, and received messages from King Juan Carlos and a personal welcome from more than 5,000 hometown residents of Segovia who travelled to Paris to cheer their hero.

Segovians were overjoyed at his victory in Spain, too. Fans shouted, car horns honked and church bells rang at the moment when Delgado crossed the finish line to complete a 2,036-mile journey clockwise around France that began on July 4. It was the 75th edition of the classic world's most prestigious cycling race.

The King of Spain was proud Delgado's victory.

"The Queen and I send you our warmest congratulations and we join the satisfaction all other Spaniards feel from your victory," said a telegram from King Juan Carlos from the Marivent Palace on the island of Majorca, where the royal couple are spending their summer holidays.

Delgado, 28, also received a message from the Spanish government which exepressed "enthusistic congratulations."

However, amid the victory, Delgado's thoughts were elsewhere.

"In this moment I am thinking only of my mother," said Delgado, who was forced to withdraw from the 1984 Tour de France when his mother died during the race. "All the fatigue was worthwhile. I am happy, happy. I promised myself I would win this race for her."

Delgado had to endure much to gain this year's title. In 1984, while he was eighth, he crashed going downhill and broke his shoulder.

The year before, his first year in the race, he fainted during one stage but eventually finished 15th overall.

In 1984, he had to withdraw when he was in fifth place with five stages to go because of his mother's death.

With five stages left in this year's race, he had another crisis that threatened his lead, which he gained July 14.

It was revealed that a drug test taken July 15 turned out positive. A second test confirmed he had traces of probenicid in his system.

He was not penalized because the drug is not on the list of banned substances of the International Cycling Union. Probenicid, often used to cover detection of anabolic steroids, is on the banned list of the International Olympic Committee.

He had been criticized by the French media and reacted against statements concerning why he had been using the drug.

"Those statements are valid when the product is on the list of forbidden substances which changes every year," Delgado said.

Last year, Delgado lost the race by 40 seconds to Ireland's Stephen Roche. It was the narrowest losing margin in the history of the tour.

Jeannie Longo, 29, of Grenoble in eastern France, won the women's competition for the second straight year Sunday. She took the overall leader's yellow jersey from Monique Knol of the Netherlands following the July 9 prologue and never gave it up, finishing in 22 hours, 41 minutes and 38 seconds.

Pampa All-Stars continue to shine

By SONNY BOHANAN
Sports Writer

Pampa's 14 and 15-year-old Babe Ruth All-Stars came from behind in the bottom of the seventh to clinch a 3-2 victory over Odessa in the West Texas State Tournament Sunday night in Canyon.

With two out, the bases loaded and the score knotted at 2-2, Tony Bybee stepped to the plate and cracked the game-winning RBI. For the third time in All-Star tournament play, Pampa rallied from a deficit to pick up the win.

"Every time we get in that situation," said coach Wayne Barkley, "we feel pretty confident."

Quincy Williams lasted all seven innings to collect the mound win, giving up two runs on four hits, while striking out seven Odessa batters and walking four.

Anthony Minzarez took the loss, allowing three hits and three runs, with 10 strikeouts and eight walks.

Phillip Sexton singled, and Tony Bybee led Pampa hitters with two one-baggers.

Casey McMillan, Reece McFarlin, Thomas Martinez and Archie Pierce each hit a single for Odessa.

Tony Bybee and Zach Thomas were credited with excellent defensive play.

The Pampa 14 and 15-year-olds will meet Graham Tuesday at 6 p.m. in Canyon. The championship game is scheduled for Thursday at 6 p.m.

Pampa's 13-year-old All-Stars forced a similar outcome in their game Sunday night against Graham in Denver City.

After drawing a bye Saturday night, Pampa took the field Sunday and defeated Graham 3-1 in what coach Dale West described as "one whale of a ball game."

Pampa did all its scoring in the first inning. Brandon Brashears led off with a walk, followed by Tarin Peet, who also reached first base on balls. Jason Brantley hit a single between center and right fields to score Brashears, leaving two runners on base.

Chris Poole drove a repeat liner to the same spot. The Graham right fielder committed an error, allowing Peet and Brantley to cross the plate and ending the scoring for Pampa.

Graham scored its lone run in the fifth. One Pampa error put a man on base, and a second error on a ground ball brought him home.

A Jason Brantley double play in the first inning shut down the only threat Graham was able to muster throughout the game. Coach West characterized the contest as "a pitching duel. Their pitcher threw hard and had a pretty good fast ball, but Jeff Tidwell did an excellent job on the mound for us."

Tidwell was the winning pitcher, giving up only one walk, two hits and one run during seven innings. He struck out five Graham batters.

Arlin Westerman received the mound loss, yielding three runs on three hits, while striking out seven and giving up six bases on balls.

Curt West was Pampa's top hitter with two singles, followed by Jason Brantley with one single.

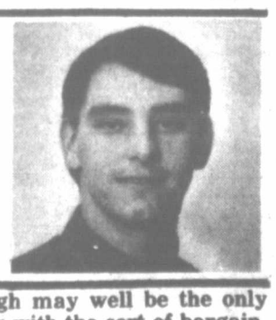

Although both teams committed three errors apiece, coach West credited the low-scoring game to excellent defense and great catches by both clubs.

Pampa and Andrews, the only two teams that remain undefeated, will face off Tuesday at 8 p.m. Andrews defeated Hereford and Levelland to get a shot at Pampa. The championship game is scheduled for Thursday at 6 p.m., and a doubleheader will be played if necessary.

Hough may be sent packing

For any one that missed Sunday's story on the 11-12 year-old Pampa Bambino All-Stars, the team is leaving Thursday for the Southwest Regionals Tournament in Donaldsonville, La.

The double-elimination tournament features seven teams from Texas, Oklahoma, Louisiana and Arkansas vying for a chance to compete in the Bambino World Series in Nashua, N.H. next month.

The All-Stars were given the weekend off to rest and do what 11 and 12 year olds normally do, but they will hit the diamond for last-minute workouts this week, according to coach Larry Gilbert.

Pampa goes up against the Louisiana state champs at 3 p.m. Saturday, July 30.

Terry Moore and Austin Sutton are seeking donations to help pay for the trip to Donaldsonville. Anyone interested in making a donation can contact Moore or Sutton by calling 665-0071, 665-9716, 665-2030, or 669-3708. Contributions may also be mailed to P.O. Box 612, Pampa, Texas 79065.

Prior to opening day this season, no one doubted the power of Texas Ranger bats. What the boys of Arlington Stadium needed was a pitching staff.

With one month left before the freezing of playoff rosters, the situation has been reversed.

As another frustrating season for the Rangers progresses, GM Tom Grieve is on the lookout for "a proven hitter" to add to the lineup. And according to Dallas Morning News columnist Randy Galloway, staff veteran Charlie Hough may be prime trading bait.

It appears almost blasphemous that the Rangers' front office is considering trading the man who has become a veritable mound institution at Arlington Stadium. But a good, young pitching staff has been installed, with many good farm league prospects on their way up. There are plenty of hurlers being groomed to step in, while Texas is suffering a drought of hitters with the ability to help them win games soon.

Hough may well be the only pitcher with the sort of bargaining power to bring in a seasoned slugger. Since he joined the Rangers in mid-1980, he has compiled a 111-92 record. And with pennant races brewing in four divisions, many clubs will be looking for a solid arm to secure the pennant for their camp.

And apparently Hough figures to be traded. He knows, perhaps better than anyone, how badly Grieve and Valentine need to shape a winning program.

Although it seems inconceivable that Grieve and Valentine could actually serve the 40-year-old knuckleballer his walking papers, especially considering the disastrous connotations for them if the trade eventually comes to naught, this season's miserable showing may force the two into a more aggressive effort to turn the club around.

If the deal goes down, it will likely happen within the next month. The Rangers need help quick if they entertain any hopes for the playoffs. But, as with any quick-fix trade, it can never be anything but a desperate gamble.

Norm Hitzges, Dallas radio talk show host, notes that the Rangers and Seattle Mariners are the only major league teams that haven't been on national television this season.

The Dallas Cowboys are placing a large burden square on the shoulders of rookie wide-receiver Michael Irvin.

But Irvin, who signed a four-year, $1.85 million contract and was given ex-Cowboy Drew Pearson's number, seems to take all the attention and pressure in stride.

"The way I see it, the Cowboys were just one or two players, or one or two plays from the playoffs," he said. "Well, here I am. I think I can make the difference."

A comment like that from a rookie invites much criticism, especially if he finds himself unable to live up to such high expectations. Here's hoping Irvin can help turn the Cowboys around this year.

Phillies end Astros streak

HOUSTON (AP) — Mike Schmidt says fair and Hal Lanier cries foul.

The argument centered around Schmidt's three-run homer in the seventh inning that was the deciding factor in the Philadelphia Phillies 6-4 win over the Houston Astros Sunday, snapping a six-game win streak by the Astros.

The home run appeared to go just foul down the left field line, but John McSherry, the third base umpire, called it a fair ball, telling Houston manager Lanier that it hooked inside the foul pole.

"That's the second one he's missed on us," Lanier said. "I can see where the ball landed. I don't see that it's that hard a call to make.

"They have two feet of screen on the foul pole to help them. He told me it hooked around it instead of hitting it. Then it's a six-run game instead of a three-run game."

The 39-year-old Schmidt, a renown power hitter, felt it evened things out for him this year.

"I hit what could have been a home run," Schmidt said. "I didn't see it; I was running.

"I hit one off (St. Louis reliever) Todd Worrell over the foul pole that appeared to be fair, but was called foul and it could have won the game for us," Schmidt recalled. "I just play the game and let them make the decisions."

The Phillies built a 2-0 lead on doubles by Milt Thompson and Chris James in the sixth inning that broke open a scoreless duel between winner Kevin Gross, 10-6, and loser Mike Scott, 9-3.

"I had as good a stuff as I can have," Gross said. "The key was to have better innings by matching up with Scott, because he's not the kind of guy that's going to get bombed."

The Astros came back with two runs each in the seventh and eighth innings as Glenn Davis extended his hitting streak to 11 games with doubles in both innings.

"I felt strong," Gross said. "But pitching my way out of trouble tired me out."

Houston second baseman Bill Doran hit his fifth home run in the eighth before Philadelphia reliever Steve Bedrosian closed it for his nineteenth save.

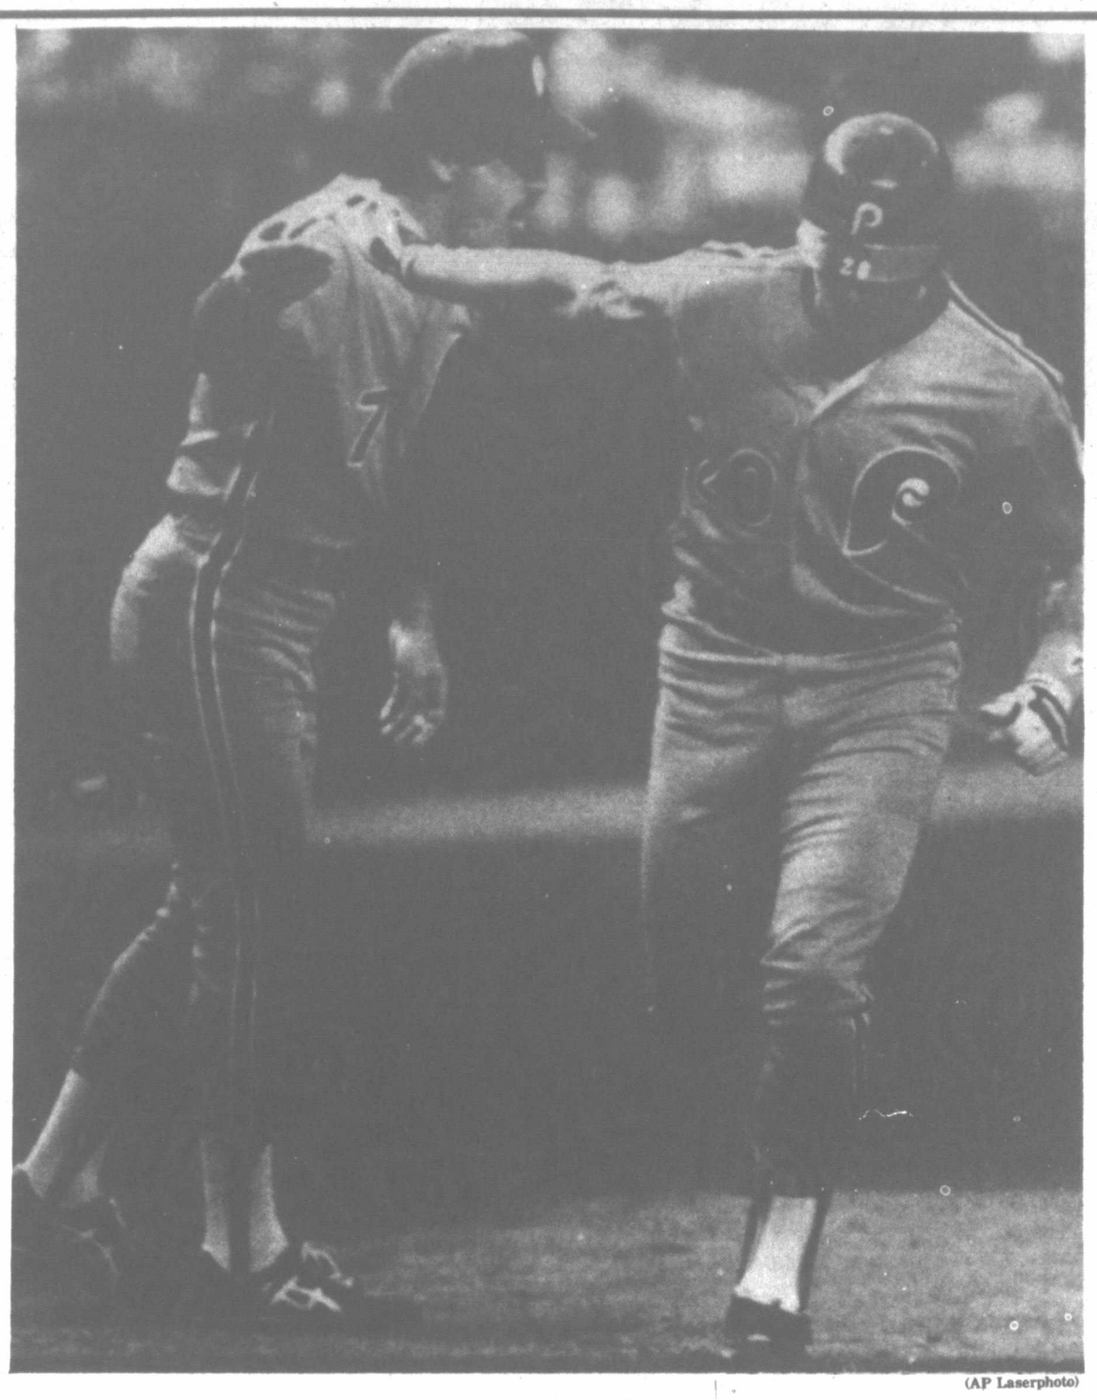

Doran's home run marked the twelfth straight game that an Astro has homered, extending a club-record set in Saturday's game.

Doran turned the focus to the upcoming road trip starting in San Diego where the Astros have lost ten straight games. "We battled back today," Doran said. "And we can't afford to go out there and get swept.

"We don't want to make it any more complicated than it is," Doran said of the Astros, who fell six games behind the National League West leading Los Angeles Dodgers.

On the Schmidt homer, Doran was indecisive. "I'd hate to be John McSherry and have to make that call," he said.

But Philadelphia manager Lee Elia was very decisive and elated. "They say it ticked the foul pole and that's good enough for me," Elia said.

Incaviglia's homer irks Wegman

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Pete Incaviglia said he was only having fun after hitting a two-run homer for the Texas Rangers, but his brief "one flap down" stunt while rounding first base tested Milwaukee pitcher Bill Wegman's temper.

The two exchanged words. Wegman admitted after the Rangers' 6-4 victory Sunday he was already in a touchy mood before Incaviglia irked him.

"I just didn't have a real good command today," Wegman said. "I just didn't feel good anytime during the game."

Incaviglia's third-inning homer gave Texas a 4-0 lead and helped end Wegman's four-game winning streak.

"Wegman was upset," Incaviglia said, adding his flapping motions were nothing new and that, after thinking about it a moment, he had decided "that just wasn't me."

"Their guys do it and you don't see any of our guys crying about it. Some people can't handle it, but the game was meant to be fun," he said.

Wegmen, 10-7, said he was angered when "I sam him do that so-called one flap down."

"Maybe if I strike him out next time, I'll throw my glove at him," he said.

Incaviglia related he was heading back to the dugout when Wegman told him: "'If you flap me again, you'll wear the next pitch.' I told him, 'You don't throw hard enough for me to wear anything.'"

"I lost my composure which is something I don't like doing," Wegman said later.

Texas starter Paul Kilgus, 8-9, said he prepared himself for Milwaukee.

"I just had it set in my mind from four days ago that when I got on the hill against the Brewers that it was all or nothing; I'm was going right at them," he said.

Four days ago, in a 7-2 loss to the New York Yankees, Kilgus was lifted with two outs in the first inning for his shortest major league start ever.

"I had a great sinker today," he said. "I was throwing all my pitches for strikes, any of them, at any time."

Then the Brewers hit two homers in the ninth, one of them after a 22-minute rain delay.

"I was rushing it and off balance," Kilgus said. "I just got out of my rhythm."

Jeffrey Leonard homered for Milwaukee leading off the final inning. Robin Yount walked and Greg Brock followed with a two-run homer.

Brock, who had not played since June 5 because of injury, said it "was encouraging that I didn't have any discomfort. It was good not to feel any pain in all four at-bats."

Mitch Williams relieved Kilgus and picked up his 13th save, getting B.J. Surhoff to hit into a game-ending double play. It balanced the sheet for Williams against whom the Brewers rallied in the ninth Friday for a 2-1 victory.

Pete O'Brien doubled with two outs in the first, then scored on Incaviglia's single. In the second, Jim Sundberg singled with one out and scored on Oddibe McDowell's two-out triple.

Incaviglia hit his 19th homer of the season with two outs and Ruben Sierra on first.

Tulsa whips Midland

By The Associated Press

Kenny Rogers allowed three hits and struck out nine over eight innings as Tulsa beat Midland 5-2 in Texas League baseball action.

The Drillers scored three runs in the second. Chad Kreuter had a 2-run triple in the second and Paul Postier knocked in the other run with a double.

In other league play Sunday, Shreveport edged El Paso 3-2 and Wichita squeezed past Jackson 3-2.

Tulsa's Kenny Rogers, 2-2, was credited with the win. The loser was Chris Collins, 5-5. Rick Raether had the save, his 13th.

Deron McCue knocked in two runs in Shreveport's win. The pitching coach had been activated before the series. He doubled in one run in the third and later added a sacrifice fly.

Both El Paso runs were scored on errors.

Brian Ohnoutka, 1-0, grabbed the win for Shreveport. Alan Sadler, 0-2, was saddled with the loss.

Rivals parley for future of Cambodia

BOGOR, Indonesia (AP) — Sitting stiffly and avoiding eye contact, the leaders of four groups fighting for Cambodia began their first talks today to try to fashion a political settlement.

Their host, Indonesian Foreign Minister Ali Alatas, said they would discuss such difficult issues as national reconciliation, forming a provisional government and building a neutral Cambodia, which has been at war almost continuously since 1970.

"We of course realize that on these aspects ... there are divergences of views among you and that many years of conflict and contention have caused estrangment that may impede a quick convergence of positions," he said in an opening speech.

Alatas said such a complex problem couldn't be solved through a single meeting, but a solution will never be found unless a start is made to replace war with dialogue.

The four Cambodian leaders gathered in a chandeliered room in the old palace of the late President Sukarno for informal "cocktail party" talks that have raised hopes for peace in Cambodia.

In large easy chairs around a thick, circular table sat Hun Sen, prime minister of Cambodia's Vietnamese-installed government, and leaders of three guerrilla groups opposing him. They were Khieu Samphan of the Khmer Rouge, Son Sann of the Khmer People's National Liberation Front, and Prince Norodom Ranariddh, who is representing his father, Prince Norodom Sihanouk.

As they gathered, three saffron-robed Cambodian Buddhist monks who had traveled from the United States, Canada and France filed into the palace to pray for success.

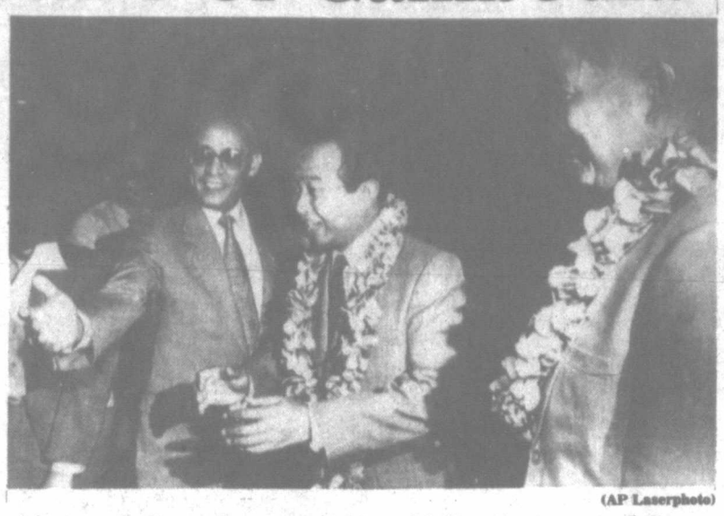

Vietnam, which invaded Cambodia in late 1978 and by Western count maintains more than 100,000 troops there, was to meet the Cambodians in a second stage of talks in the afternoon. That meeting was also to be attended by Vietnam's Communist ally, Laos, and by members of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations, which backs the guerrillas.

Hun Senn and Sihanouk have held two rounds of talks without success, and the current meeting represents the first gathering of all four Cambodia parties.

Vietnam has never talked with the Cambodian resistance factions.

Sihanouk, meanwhile, was visiting Jakarta, the Indonesian capital just 40 miles from Bogor but had no known plans to attend the talks. A Indonesian source said the former Cambodian monarch might make an appearance in Bogor, depending on progress in the talks.

Earlier this month Sihanouk resigned as president of the guerrilla coalition, charging the Khmer Rouge were killing his men.

Alatas, left, welcomes Ranariddh, center, and Samphan to Indonesia on Sunday.

The tentative schedule called for two days of talks with the second day having the same format as the first — the Cambodian factions talking in the morning, then the Vietnamese and others joining in the afternoon.

The talks are based on a July 1987 Vietnam-Indonesia agreement that calls for informal discussions to encourage the various antagonists to participate and allay Vietnam's refusal to negotiate directly with the guerrillas.

Disputes between Vietnam and Association of Southeast Asian Nations delayed the talks, which were not confirmed until the last minute. The association includes the Philippines, Thailand, Brunei, Malaysia, Singapore and Indonesia.

Since 1970, Cambodia has suffered a devastating five-year civil war, a reign of terror by the Chinese-backed Communist Khmer Rouge from 1975 to 1978, a 1978 Vietnamese invasion and a continuing guerrilla war against the Vietnamese-backed government.

Poll: U.S. doing too little for space exploration

NEW YORK (AP) — Americans overwhelmingly favor maintaining or increasing the federal budget for space exploration, even while three in 10 doubt NASA's competence, a Media General-Associated Press poll found.

The national survey of 1,223 adults found that nearly half those questioned lost confidence in the National Aeronautics and Space Administration after the space shuttle Challenger exploded in January 1986, and 60 percent of those, or 28 percent of all questioned, say they still lack faith in the agency.

However, 40 percent of the respondents said the United States was doing too little in space exploration, and majorities supported the initiatives of building a space station and sending manned flights to Mars.

The space shuttle program also won support, with 40 percent saying it should be expanded and as many saying it should be maintained. The first shuttle flight since the Challenger disaster is scheduled for September, although a leak in a gas line is threatening to delay it.

NASA was rated positively overall. Fifty-five percent said the agency has done a good or excellent job, while 37 percent rated it only fair or poor.

Only 18 percent said the space budget should be decreased, while almost half said NASA's budget should remain the same and 30 percent said it should be increased. Of those who favored an increase, 74 percent said they would be willing to pay higher taxes to accomplish it.

The Senate this month approved $200 million for NASA's space station program, only enough to phase it out or put it on hold. The House approved $700 million, and a joint committee is to resolve the issue.

Fear of falling behind in space may be one reason for the public's support for NASA's funding. Just 23 percent of respondents said the United States is ahead of the Soviet Union in space exploration, while the remainder were split on whether the Soviets are ahead or the two countries are about even.

In any case, a plurality of respondents favored superpower cooperation in space: 49 percent favored last month's proposal by the Soviets for a U.S.-Soviet joint effort to send astronauts to Mars.

Fifteen percent said the United States should work alone to reach Mars. Together, 64 percent favored some program to land astronauts on Mars, while 30 percent were opposed. The rest had no opinion.

Support for a space station was nearly as high, with 55 percent in favor and 34 percent opposed. The rest had no opinion.

On the space shuttle, 40 percent said work should be expanded and the same number said it should be kept at the same level. Fewer than a fifth said the shuttle program should be cut back.

The poll found a striking split between the sexes, with men far more likely than women to favor space programs. Fifty-six percent of men said the United States was doing too little in space exploration; only a quarter of women agreed. Forty-one percent of men supported increasing the space exploration budget, compared with just 19 percent of women.

Overall, 40 percent of respondents said the United States was doing too little in exploring space and 36 percent said it was doing about enough. Nearly a fifth said the United States was doing too much in space exploration, the remainder had no opinion.

Congress created the NASA 30 years ago to pursue civilian exploration of space. In recent years, the agency increasingly has carried military payloads as well. A slim plurality in the survey opposed that development: 48 percent said NASA should be involved in non-military projects only, while 41 percent approved including military work. The split was narrowly outside the poll's margin of error of plus or minus 3 percentage points.

Taxpayers won't pay for balls at next inaugural

WASHINGTON (AP) — Whether it's Michael Dukakis or George Bush, the next taker of the presidential oath of office may find the federal government more miserly about paying part of the tab when he kicks up his heels at the end of the day.

The reason: Sen. William Proxmire, D-Wis., has slipped new rules into the conference report of the new defense authorization bill now awaiting President Reagan's signature.

They require the next Presidential Inaugural Committee to reimburse the Defense Department for equipment and personnel it supplies for inaugural balls and other private inaugural events.

So, Proxmire says, when President Bush or President Dukakis steps out on the dance floor at an invitation-only inaugural ball next Jan. 20, "the American taxpayer will no longer have to foot part of the bill."

Proxmire, citing a recent General Accounting Office study, said that when Ronald Reagan was inaugurated for the second time in 1985, "many of the events were largely planned, staffed and executed by federal employees at a cost to the taxpayer of $15.5 million."

The Pentagon alone spent $10 million," Proxmire says.

And it used 8,400 military personnel.

According to Proxmire staff members and the General Accounting Office, hundreds of uniformed military personnel were used at Reagan's nine inaugural balls and galas to do everything from checking the fur coats to playing in the bands and orchestras.

Service members served as VIP escorts, driving visiting celebrities around the capital. The cars were lent by American auto makers, but the Pentagon maintained them, and filled the gas tanks. Members of the inaugural committees had military drivers for as long as six weeks.

Army, Navy, Air Force and Marine Corps personnel served as escorts at inaugural events, under orders to mix and mingle and to see that no guests were ignored. They also were used to set up the events themselves, and to organize receiving lines once they were under way.

Military photographers and cameramen took still and video pictures of the guests, providing copies on request free of charge.

"They took tens of thousands of pictures," a Proxmire staff member said.

Under the new guidelines, the Bush or Dukakis inaugural committee must reimburse the Pentagon for the costs of whatever resources or personnel are used to supply private inaugural events.

The inaugural ceremony itself would not be included because by tradition and history it is a public event. Nor would the inaugural parade down Pennsylvania Avenue from the Capitol.

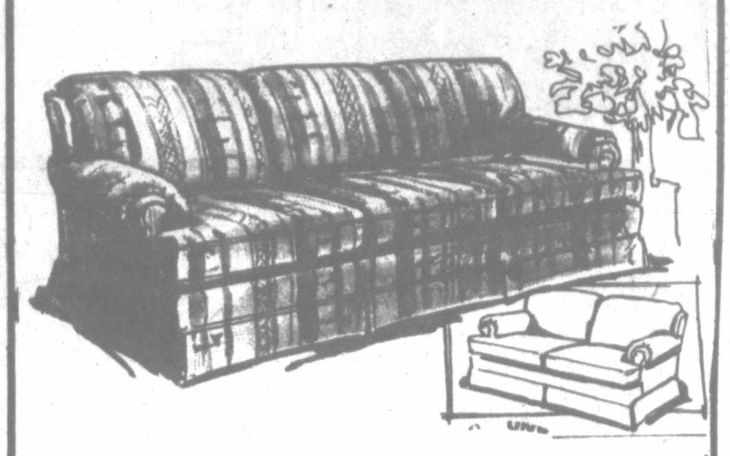

But compensation would be required for Pentagon services to private inaugural functions.

The new Proxmire inaugural rules have one other twist.

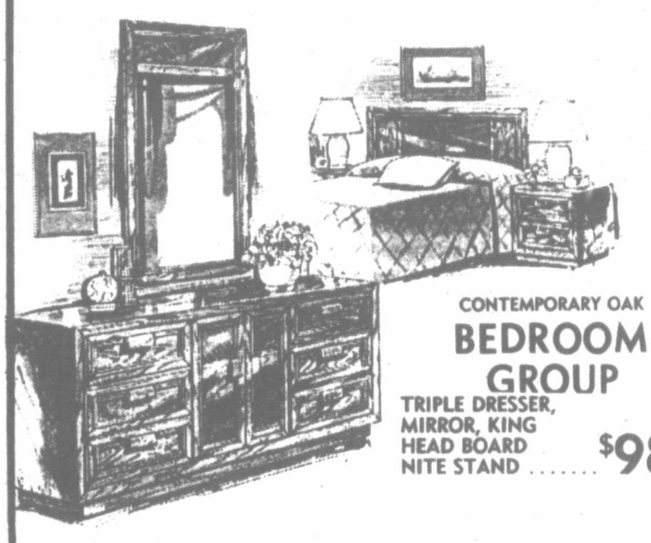

In the past, a Proxmire staff member said, members of Congress have received complaints that service men and women were required to take part in private, partisan inaugural events, often to perform duties they felt were beneath the dignity of the uniform.

Under the new rules, uniformed members of the armed services could be used at private, partisan inaugural celebrations — but only if they volunteer to take part. And the Pentagon would have to be reimbursed for the time spent.

TENSION HEADACHES

If you're bothered by headache that seems to have its origin at the base of your skull, you may be suffering from tension headache.

Tension headaches can be caused by an irritation of the nerves in the area of the spine immediately under the skull. These are called the suboccipital nerves. They pass through small openings in the spinal column to muscles in the surrounding area. Any abnormal pressure of dysfunction of neck and muscles can irritate the nerves, causing tension.

The tension doesn't cause the headache. To treat this form of headache, attention should be paid to the bone and muscle structures. They should be returned to normal balance so they can function properly again.

Medication is not the answer to tension headaches. Aspirin and other painkillers may give you temporary relief-but they won't solve the problem. Once the source of the problem is found and treated, THEN you can get the relief you need.
