Twitty dies

SPRINGFIELD, Mo. — Conway Twitty, who started as a teen rock idol in the 1950s and crossed over to country to become a star, died Saturday at age 59. His wife, Dee Henry, other relatives and some of his band members were with him at Cox Medical Center-South when he died of complications from surgery after a blood vessel ruptured in his stomach. Twitty collapsed on his tour bus during a rest stop in southwest Missouri on the way home to Hendersonville, Tenn., from a performance Friday night./10A

Hutchison makes history

Midland overwhelmingly supports Senate winner

By Ed Todd
Staff writer

Midland voters overwhelmingly opted for Republican Kay Bailey Hutchison to be the next U.S. senator from Texas by generously giving her more than 85 percent of the votes cast in Saturday's runoff election between her and U.S. Sen. Bob Krueger.

Although only 14 percent of the 52,912-member electorate in Midland County voted in the election, 6,382 of the voters joined forces with Ms. Hutchison, the Texas treasurer, while only 1,088 voted for Krueger.

Statewide, Ms. Hutchison won in a landslide. She also was overwhelmingly supported in Odessa and other West Texas cities.

"I think it is very unlikely that Sen. Krueger will run again," said Chris McCormack, chairman of the Midland County Democratic Party.

AUSTIN — Kay Bailey Hutchison, rolling up one of the largest winning percentages by a statewide Republican candidate in modern Texas history, Saturday became the first Texas woman elected to the U.S. Senate.

Mrs. Hutchison's stunning defeat of appointed Democratic Sen. Bob Krueger gave the GOP both Senate seats for the first time since 1875.

People doubtful about economic plan, poll finds

By Richard L. Berke
N.Y. Times News Service

As President Clinton struggles to return to the centrist policies that won the election, an increased number of Americans view him as a liberal, and many say his economic plan relies too heavily on raising taxes and would do little to help the economy, according to the latest New York Times/CBS News Poll.

Most Americans do not appear convinced by Clinton's repeated efforts to show that his economic remedies will place a heavier burden on rich people than on the middle class. And they have grown increasingly skeptical about the fairness and effectiveness of the plan.

The optimism many Americans had early this year that the economy would improve has largely dissipated, with only 13 percent now saying the country is on the rebound. Recent economic data offer only spots of encouragement.

MPD: Juvenile crime rises during summer

By Katherine Poteet
Staff writer

A rash of cars splattered with spray paint last weekend has Midland police looking for suspects — suspects officials believe will most likely be juveniles.

"I can't say right now that whoever did this are juveniles," said Midland police Det. Sgt. Ron Benton. "However, this type of crime, generally speaking, is committed by kids. It's a good possibility."

Benton said about 25 cars were sprayed between the late evening hours on Friday and early Saturday, May 29 and 30, in the area of Hyde Park and Imperial Street. The number of cars indicated that the crime was not just a random act.

"That many cars means that someone deliberately wanted to do it," he

Family quietly buries Koresh

HOUSTON (AP) — In stark contrast to the international headlines he garnered for two months, apocalyptic preacher David Koresh was quietly buried recently in an unmarked grave in East Texas.

People across the world watched in horror April 19 as television carried live pictures of the raging fire that devoured the cult leader's compound outside Waco. Dozens of his Branch Davidian followers and 17 children died in fire and gunfire that day.

Yet only four relatives were there for Koresh's burial May 27 in Memorial Park Cemetery in Tyler, the Houston Chronicle reported Saturday in a copyright story.

'The funeral only puts to rest one phase of this. I don't think I will ever rest in my heart. I didn't get to see the body, and I'm not even positive that is David there.'

— Bonnie Haldeman, David Koresh's mother

"It was a very small affair," Koresh's mother, Bonnie Haldeman of Chandler, told the Chronicle. "Only close family members were told. We did not want the publicity of a funeral or anything else. There were no

Gallup worries about tourism

Navajo shoppers don't let reports of illness disrupt trip

By Tim Korte
Associated Press writer

GALLUP, N.M. — Carrol Ben went shopping Saturday. She traveled the 90 miles from her home on the Navajo reservation hoping to find a bargain at the Gallup flea market.

Ben strolled with her family among the strip of tents, trailers and makeshift booths that stretched for 200 yards to form a dusty outdoor mall.

Displays along the corridor offered colorful Indian-made jewelry, car stereo systems, secondhand clothing, and even watermelons and other produce.

But this was not just another Saturday at the flea market. It came on the heels of week in which residents of northwestern New Mexico were faced daily with reports on the outbreak of a puzzling illness that has claimed 11

GALLUP, N.M. — Summer was supposed to bring thousands of tourists and millions of dollars to this community that bills itself as the "heart of Indian country."

That was before a mystery illness killed 11 people, mostly in and around the Navajo reservation of northwest New Mexico and northeastern Arizona. Tourists began canceling travel plans causing some in the area to fear long-term economic damage.

And even news Friday of a possible breakthrough to solve the mystery is no assurance the tourists will be flocking back anytime soon.

POLL: People think Clinton learns from mistakes of autos and new homes have climbed, but retail sales have been disappointing. Consumer and business confidence have declined markedly.

Clearly troubled by the president's call for new taxes, by his series of seeming political blunders and by a perception that the economy is in terrible shape, Americans have been more critical of Clinton than of any president of the post-war era at equivalent points in office.

Clinton, of course, was elected without a majority of the popular vote in a three-way race.

His rating stands at 38 percent of the public approving how he handles his job, with 47 percent disapproving. Half the people say the president, who campaigned as a populist and vowed to end the status quo in Washington, has lost touch with average Americans.

Clinton's latest political stumble — the uproar over his nomination of Lani Guinier to be the Justice Department's civil rights chief and his withdrawal of the nomination Thursday — did not appreciably alter his basic standing, the poll found. .

Of the nearly 7 in 10 Americans who had heard that Clinton dropped the nomination, 47 percent said he did the right thing and 30 percent said he did not. And 65 percent of that group said Clinton was wrong to nominate Ms. Guinier in the first place, echoing what the president himself said, while 21 percent said they approved of the nomination.

Over all, 32 percent of Americans familiar with the episode said they had a worse opinion of Clinton because of his handling of it, 11 percent said they thought better of him, and 53 percent said it had no effect on their views.

The telephone poll was taken Tuesday through Thursday with 1,347 adults nationwide. Friday night, 565 of the respondents were interviewed a second time, after Ms. Guinier's nomination was withdrawn. For results based on all respondents, the poll had a margin of sampling error of plus or minus three percentage points.

Seeking to erase the perception that he is turning liberal and failing in the job, Clinton has in recent days hammered at the theme that his economic program calls for significant spending cuts, and he appointed David R. Gergen, a senior aide in the Reagan White House, as a top adviser.

But those moves have not raised the president's popularity, nor did the narrow victory of his economic plan in the House of Representatives 10 days ago.

Though many Americans are clearly troubled by the early days of the Clinton administration, the good news for Clinton is that they are still willing to give him a chance.

Sixty-nine percent said Clinton was learning from the problems he has encountered and will do better, the same number who said he had a vision of where he wants to lead the country. And 62 percent said they believed that Clinton "cares about the needs and problems of people" like themselves, although 74 percent held that impression in January.

Clinton insisted last week that he was not worried about his low popularity ratings, but he did remark that he was concerned that people had distorted views of him. "The only thing I worry about is if I think people have an inaccurate impression, which I think is certainly the case today, or if it undermines my ability to do things," he told reporters.

One big challenge facing Clinton is turning around the perception that he has moved to the left since taking office. Roughly half of registered voters said they thought of him as liberal, and 31 percent thought of him as moderate. Throughout the campaign, Americans were evenly divided on whether they saw him as a liberal or a moderate.

Voters are also split on whether Clinton is a "different" kind of Democrat, which is how he presented himself during the campaign. About half say he is different, while 42 percent say he is a typical Democrat, which many probably associate with high taxes and big spending.

Many Americans had expected government to function better with the White House and Congress controlled by the same party, as Clinton promised during the campaign an end to gridlock. But only 35 percent said government was working better, while 45 percent said it was not.

Clinton may take some solace in that the poll found many Americans are critical of Congress and Ross Perot, who has emerged as one of the president's most stubborn, and certainly most public, detractors.

Man convicted in Treaty Oak case is out of prison

AUSTIN (AP) — The man convicted of poisoning Austin's historic Treaty Oak, Paul Stedman Cullen, has been released from prison and planned to return to the city, it was reported Saturday.

Cullen was convicted of felony criminal mischief and given a nine-year sentence for pouring the powerful herbicide Velpar on the centuries-old tree, killing much of it.

About one-fourth of the tree remains. Its plight, and efforts by arborists to save it, attracted worldwide attention.

The Austin American-Statesman reported that Cullen's father, retired Army Col. Paul S. Cullen Sr., of Lawton, Okla., said Cullen's mother had spoken briefly with her son by phone on Friday.

"That is true. He has been released," the elder Cullen told The Associated Press on Saturday.

But he said he did not know his son's current whereabouts.

"I am always glad to see our children," he said.

Lawyer Terrence Kirk, who represented the younger Cullen in the 1990 trial, said Cullen has been in jail or prison since he was arrested in 1989 and served three years in state prison on the criminal mischief conviction.

Kirk did not immediately return a telephone call Saturday from the AP.

Cullen spent the past year at a facility in Louisiana on a federal charge of lying when he filled out an official form to purchase a rifle in 1988, the American-Statesman said.

Kirk told the newspaper that Cullen planned to return to Austin where "people should give him a chance."

"He is concerned about what he wants to do and whether he can get a job. He has always maintained his innocence. He feels like an outcast but is not willing to be run out of the state," Kirk said.

The venerable oak, which was 50 feet tall and had a limb spread of about 120 feet, long had been an Austin landmark.

Legend had it that Stephen F. Austin, the father of Texas, signed a treaty with the Indians under the tree's branches, although the authoritative Handbook of Texas says there is little foundation for that tale.

News of the tree's poisoning brought a stream of well-wishers bearing everything from flowers to chicken soup to the tree.

Experts used a variety of treatments trying to save the tree. Contaminated soil was removed and replaced, some roots were severed, the tree was shaded from the summer sun, and it was misted with water.

QUIET: Koresh doesn't have traditional funeral clergy there. David would not have wanted a traditional funeral."

Mrs. Haldeman, her husband, Roy, Koresh's brother, Roger Howell of Waco, and maternal grandmother, Erline Clark of Chandler, prayed quietly and read Biblical passages. Koresh's birth name was Vernon Howell.

"The funeral only puts to rest one phase of this," Mrs. Haldeman said. "I don't think I will ever rest in my heart. I didn't get to see the body, and I'm not even positive that is David there. Who knows?"

There is nothing to note the demise of the man who held federal authorities at bay for 51 days. Mrs. Haldeman has not ordered a headstone and doesn't plan to for the foreseeable future because she is afraid of curiosity seekers.

Koresh, 33, died of a gunshot wound to the forehead sometime during the inferno that authorities say was set by the cult leader's followers. But authorities have not determined if the fatal wound was self-inflicted.

The blaze broke out several hours after the FBI began ramming the compound with tanks and injecting tear gas inside in an attempt to drive out the cult members. Koresh and as many as 85 of his followers died that day.

The standoff began Feb. 28 when U.S. Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms agents tried to raid the compound to arrest Koresh and search the rural fortress. A gunfight erupted in which four ATF agents and six Branch Davidians were killed.

WORRY: Visitors cancel hotel, motel reservations

(From 1A)

"The damage is done, and we don't want any more damage. If we get any more damage, it's bad," said Mohammad Aysheh, who owns a complex of gas stations, jewelry and curio shops on the east edge of Gallup.

Aysheh fears that people who heard about the mysterious illness during several days of national news reports may not hear about the possible breakthrough, and that fear will continue to spread by word-of-mouth.

"In another 30 days it will grow bigger and bigger," he said.

The news media was singled out by Navajo Nation Vice President Marshall Plummer for demeaning Navajos through ignorant coverage of the illness, and by others for contributing to the negative image of the area.

"When the Legionnaire's Disease broke out, there was no talk of quarantining Philadelphia. There was no talk about staying away from children of people who had this disease," Plummer said. "It's unfortunate that my people are being treated in this way."

But for some, the word from medical investigators offered hope and signaled the time had come to begin the rehabilitation of the area's tattered reputation.

At the Motel 6 in Gallup, manager Welly Giest said he lost more than a third of his bookings during the past week. But he was optimistic that the break in the illness would bring a quick rebound.

"As soon as it dies away, business will come right back. It's on that trend right now because they haven't had any deaths in the last few days. People are going to start ignoring it soon," he said.

While media in general drew criticism, the sharpest objections were to a Wednesday night network television commentary by ABC medical editor Dr. Timothy Johnson.

Johnson's comments on "World News Tonight" to millions of viewers that they would avoid the area if they wanted to be "absolutely safe" also incurred the wrath of Sen. Pete Domenici, R-N.M., who fired off a letter to anchorman Peter Jennings.

On Thursday, Jennings quoted New Mexico officials as saying there was no reason to cancel visits, and the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention as saying it wasn't concerned about the eight staffers it had sent to New Mexico.

On Friday, Gov. Bruce King headed for Gallup as medical experts in Santa Fe were preparing to announce laboratory findings that indicate a virus linked to rodent urine or droppings may be the culprit in the mystery illness.

The governor joined Gallup civic leaders in trying to reassure Americans that it is safe to visit Indian country. His afternoon blitz included a news conference and a campaign-style promenade on a downtown city street.

"It seems as though we're beginning to gain the confidence of the people that we do have an understanding of what the situation is," King said. "Certainly you have no

Gallup is the market and trading center for about 350,000 people in a 16,000-square mile area that spans the New Mexico-Arizona border and includes much of the Navajo Nation. It is one of the more colorful and culturally unique regions of the United States.

Every weekend, the city's population swells from 20,000 to more than 100,000, including many Navajos and Zunis, non-Indian residents from the area and collectors of silver and turquoise jewelry and other Indian crafts.

In the end, the tourist business means about $30 million a year for the Gallup area.

It's the same elsewhere in New Mexico, where an estimated 13 million visitors a year pump $2.3 billion into the state's economy.

The hotel business has been among the hardest hit by the mystery illness scare. Statewide, hundreds of room reservations were canceled, according to state Deputy Tourism Secretary Marsha Adams.

Jana Lee Aspin of the Albuquerque Visitors and Convention Bureau said Saturday that bed and breakfasts were reporting business down 50 to 60 percent because of cancellations, and hotels also were reporting cancellations.

She said a tour operator she talked with had to do a tough selling job to keep people from canceling.

People who saw the ABC-TV story are assuming it's not safe to travel to anywhere in New Mexico, she said.

"Somewhere out there, there is a lot of sensationalism going on that is causing panic," she said. "We've heard there are reports in the East that people in Albuquerque area are dying like flies."

more of a concern for your health here than you do anywhere else in the United States."

Jerry and Barbara Tibbetts of Ontario, Calif., were browsing in the Scoreboard sports shop when they encountered King, making his confidence-boosting march through downtown Gallup.

"Until they tell us any different, we're going to continue like it is," said Tibbetts. "If we can't control it, we can't worry about it."

But there were also tourists such as Alfred Madrid of Hacienda Heights, Calif., who stopped Friday morning to fuel his recreational vehicle at a Route 66 gas station.

"I'm going through here, going to Albuquerque, but I'm not stopping at any restaurants," Madrid said. "I don't think there's anything wrong with any of the restaurants, but why take a chance?"

TRIP: Gallup merchants need Navajos' business

lives.

"I was kind of scared at first about coming down here to where there were a lot of other people," said Ben, a 30-year-old Navajo. "But I decided just to come out to shop. I wanted to see something different that I can only get here."

As she cradled her 3-month-old daughter Erica, Ben said her concern about the unknown sickness has diminished since health officials in Santa Fe announced Friday that a virus carried by rodents may be the culprit.

Others apparently shared her feelings. Ben was only one of hundreds of people who had come to buy, barter or sell goods at the flea market.

Vendor Dean Harris said he sells goods at numerous sites on the reservation, using his Shiprock home as a base. During the past week, he said markets that usually draw 40 or 50 booths have had only 12.

But Harris, glancing out at the bustling activity near his tent, said he was encouraged.

"I guess I was never really too worried about business coming back around," Harris said. "You have to look at the bigger picture. Everything passes eventually."

Elsewhere in Gallup, a town of about 20,000 residents near the eastern border of the Navajo reservation, pickup trucks loaded with families were arriving steadily by midday — a typical occurrence in this community where the increase in the weekend population is measured in the thousands.

Joe Herrera, manager of the Gambles department store near downtown, said 90 percent of his business comes from Navajos who live on the reservation.

"We need their business," Herrera said. "If they start shying off, then I'm in big trouble."

While people appeared comforted by word of progress in the medical investigation, Ed Carlisle, a Bureau of Indian Affairs official, cautioned that test results haven't been conclusive.

Health officials said a virus found in rodent droppings could be responsible for the deadly respiratory affliction. The virus might be transmitted after the droppings dry up and are carried into the air, then inhaled by humans, officials said.

Agency puts emergency phones along highway

■ Call boxes have been placed near Brownsville, Fort Worth and Lubbock to test usefulness.

Associated Press

SAN ANTONIO — Roadside emergency telephone boxes boxes have been placed along the highway near Brownsville, Fort Worth and Lubbock to test their usefulness for motorists stranded with car trouble.

In South Texas, 20 call boxes were spaced out along U.S. 77-83 between Brownsville and San Benito.

They weren't operational until Thursday, but the Cameron County sheriff's office had received 10 calls by 9 a.m. Friday, said Carey Spence, a spokesman for the Austin-based Advisory Commission on State Emergency Communications.

"Two (calls) were for motorist aid. The others were inquiries. Some said, 'I thought this was a pay phone,'" she told the San Antonio Express-News.

The call boxes actually provide free 911 access for motorists with car accidents, medical emergencies or vehicle breakdowns.

The 12-month trial program began a week ago along a 15-mile section of Interstate 27 in Hale County, north of Lubbock, and along a 7.5-mile section of Interstate 30, the old turnpike, between Arlington and Fort Worth.

"In Tarrant County, we've had 70 calls to date. Ten were for motorist aid. But many people call to find out what it is. It's part of the process of educating the public. A few are lost. They call to ask, "Where am I?'" Ms. Spence said.

The telephones have blue and white signs marked "CALL BOX" and the bright yellow boxes are spaced a half-mile to a mile apart so motorists need not walk far.

However, the advisory commission, commonly referred to as the "911 commission," is not clear on how widespread the program eventually will become.

"First of all we've got to determine if they're feasible for Texas," said Mary Boyd, executive director for the commission.

"The cost is $2,200 per box. That could become a very expensive project very quickly," given the size of the state, she said.

The program is sponsored by GTE-Government Information Services, Irvine, Calif., and Cubic Communications, San Diego, Calif., but Ms. Boyd hopes to eventually locate federal grants and some state funding, she said.

The project directors also will be watching to see how resistant to weather the solar-powered cellular phones will be. They are accessible to the handicapped and hard-of-hearing and designed so the 911 operator can identify their location even if the caller does not speak.

Motorists can identify when they've entered or left a call-box zone, thanks to signs provided by the Texas Department of Transportation, Ms. Boyd said.

CRIME: Officers encourage immediate calls about pranks

(From 1A)

said. "It was totally senseless damage."

The suspects, if caught, will be charged with criminal mischief, which police officials say seems to increase with juveniles during the summer months.

"Usually, juvenile crimes will go up the first two or three weeks after school lets out," said Midland police Det. Dan Walkenshaw. "Then, it seems like a large group go out of town with their parents, so the crimes go back down for about three or four weeks. Then, the last weeks before school starts, juvenile crimes are up again."

Walkenshaw said the typical age for juveniles who commit pranks or criminal mischief is the early teens.

"The age seems to have dropped over the years," he said. "It's a younger group of kids, about 12 or 13 years of age, that are doing this stuff."

A majority of the young mischief-makers tend to be temporary runaways or children who sneak out of their homes late at night.

"Most of the parents of the kids will never know they are gone," Walkenshaw said. "The first they know of it is if we contact them or they find a screen off a window."

While the age group may have dropped, the typical pranks have not changed that much. Egging houses and knocking over mailboxes have been two of the most reported juvenile pranks.

"These kids are pretty innovative and can find all kinds of things to do," Walkenshaw said. "However, sometimes a group will just go door-to-door, ringing the doorbells and running."

Catching juveniles who egg houses or ring doorbells is not easy since most people will try to investigate the crime on their own before contacting police.

"Face it, at three or four in the morning, you're in la-la land," Walkensaw said. "By the time you hear a noise or something, the kids are gone. And, many people will go look outside on their own and, soon the neighbors may come out, and everyone checks with each other before calling us."

Contacting the police immediately could lead to more juveniles being caught.

"Especially in the early mornings, when there are few cars out, calling the police first is the best," he said. "We can get the call out right away and a unit may be nearby that can check it out."

George W. Bush may run for governor

DALLAS (AP) — George W. Bush, oldest son of the former president, says he is "interested" in challenging Democratic Gov. Ann Richards when she tries for a second term next year.

On the campaign trail for Republican Senate candidate Kay Bailey Hutchison last week, Bush said he is trying to decide whether the immensely popular governor could be unseated.

"Put me down as interested," Bush told The Dallas Morning News in Sunday's editions.

"She's got a high personality cult following, and she's funny and witty and a charming person at times," he said, adding that Richards has not yet been challenged on tough issues.

"Ann hasn't been defined very much. She's gotten a free ride. I haven't read too many editorials banging her about not leading on education. She has kind of ducked."

Hutchison: 'My roots in Texas are deep'

By Michael Holmes
Associated Press writer

AUSTIN — In 1961, Kay Bailey Hutchison's father took her out of high school in La Marque, Texas, so she could witness a campaign stop by U.S. Sen. William Blakley, who was running in a special election.

"Of course, the thought never entered my head that day that I could actually run for senator myself," Mrs. Hutchison said. "Small-town Texas girls at that time were simply not the talent pool for the United States Senate."

Blakley, a Democrat, lost his race to Republican John Tower.

On Saturday, Mrs. Hutchison, a 49-year-old Republican, won a similar special election and will become Texas' first woman senator.

"My ancestors came to Texas with Stephen F. Austin over 160 years ago. My roots in Texas are deep," she said.

After growing up in La Marque, a town of about 15,000 in Galveston County on the Texas Gulf Coast, Kathryn Ann Bailey headed for Austin and the University of Texas.

Government studies drew her into law school, and she graduated in 1967.

She sought a job with several large Houston firms but found that "law firms were not hiring women."

Instead, she took a job as a reporter for KPRC radio and television in Houston, where she covered city hall, politics and the state Capitol.

In 1971, she interviewed Anne Armstrong, a Texan who had just been named co-chairman of the Republican National Committee. Impressed, Ms. Armstrong offered her a job as RNC press secretary.

Harris County GOP chair Nancy Palm recruited Mrs. Hutchison in 1972 to run for the Texas Legislature. Single and 29, she faced one opponent who reminded voters he was "a family man." She won, becoming only one of five women in the Texas House.

She served for two legislative sessions and a constitutional convention. Then in 1976, President Ford tapped her for the National Transportation Safety Board.

In 1978, she returned to Texas and married Ray Hutchison, a Dallas bond lawyer.

She ran for Congress in 1982, but lost to Steve Bartlett, who's now mayor of Dallas.

She operated her own candy company before returning to politics in 1990, winning election as state treasurer to succeed Democratic Gov. Ann Richards.

While Richards chaired the 1992 Democratic National Convention in New York, Mrs. Hutchison served as temporary chair of the 1992 GOP Convention in Houston.

Rain, lower 90s in forecast

Staff report

The parched West Texas plains may get relief today if the weatherman's prediction of thunderstorms bears fruit.

However, the forecaster at the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport is calling for only a 20 percent chance of afternoon thunderstorms today under partly cloudy skies.

The probability of rain tonight is 30 percent, and the chance of a thunderstorm on Monday afternoon is 20 percent.

Today's high temperature is to be in the lower 90s, and winds are to be southerly at 15 to 25 mph and gusty.

The low temperature tonight is to be near 60 degrees.

Monday's high temperature is to be in the upper 80s.

Saturday's high temperature was 92 degrees, and the overnight low was 66 degrees.

The record high temperature for June 5 is 106 degrees in 1990, and the record low temperature for June 6 is 56 degrees in 1983.

STATE

Moisture from the Gulf of Mexico helped keep conditions hot and humid across Texas on Saturday, with isolated thunderstorms expected later in the weekend.

The National Weather Service said that southerly winds pumped gulf moisture in from the coast, while a moist tropical air mass met a stationary front along the Red River basin in North Texas.

A cloud cover over many parts of the state failed to cut afternoon temperatures, which ranged from the mid-60s in the Panhandle and 80s in North Texas to upper 90s in the south and west, including Rio Grande plains.

Relative humidities from 50 to 70 percent prompted heat indexes to soar in East, South and Central Texas. Waco reported a heat index of 103 degrees and South Texas points also came in over 100. Lufkin and Tyler had values in the upper 90s.

NATION

Unseasonably cool weather extended across the Midwest, and several cities set record low temperatures on Saturday, while rain fell on much of the nation.

California's Sierra Nevada got 8 inches of snow.

Rain from a rare June storm in Southern California flooded low-lying areas, triggered numerous fender-benders, knocked out power and caused the death of at least one person. A 45-year-old man died when five construction workers and a tractor-trailer rig were swept into the swollen Los Angeles River in Long Beach, authorities said.

In the Sierra, up to 8 inches of snow fell on the Lake Tahoe and Mammoth Lakes areas, and the wintry weather was expected to continue through the weekend.

The National Weather Service said rain could change to snow in the higher mountains of northeast and east-central California, and lower temperatures across Utah could bring snow to the mountains of Southern California and Utah.

Showers and occasional thunderstorms grew in size and number through the early afternoon, the weather service said.

The Associated Press contributed to this report.

SENATE: Hutchison garners two-thirds of vote

(From 1A)

"This election sends a very important message to the Congress and to the president," she said. "The people are tired of taxes. They want someone to get serious about cutting government spending and that's exactly what I intend to do."

Conceding his third Senate defeat in 15 years, Krueger said, "I always said I wasn't a great politician. I guess I proved that."

With 97 percent of the precincts reporting, Mrs. Hutchison, the state treasurer, lead Krueger 1,147,690 votes, or 67.8 percent, to 545,241, or 32.2 percent.

Mrs. Hutchison's victory also cut the Democratic margin in the Senate to 56-44. It gives the Senate a record seven women members, five Democrats and two Republicans.

Mrs. Hutchison said her status as a Washington outsider made her the most qualified to represent Texans' anti-tax, anti-spending attitudes.

"We're talking about taxes and spending and jobs," she said earlier in the day. "I'm very pleased because I think the people of Texas really know who I am."

The election was the biggest Capitol Hill race since Clinton took office. Republicans portrayed a vote for Mrs. Hutchison as a vote against Clinton. Krueger had tried to distance himself from the president, voting against Clinton's budget proposal.

Gramm said the vote showed taxpayers' attitudes about the new administration.

"This election was nothing if not a clear repudiation of everything that Bill Clinton is trying to do in Washington," Gramm said.

It was the first special Senate election in Texas since 1961, when John Tower became the state's first Republican senator since Reconstruction.

Krueger is a former literature professor and college dean who served two terms in Congress in the mid-1970s before failing in 1978 to unseat Tower. Krueger was serving on the oil-regulating Railroad Commission when Richards named him to the Senate.

Mrs. Hutchison is a former television reporter, state legislator and candy company owner who won her statewide post in 1990. She finished 99 votes ahead of Krueger in a 24-candidate special election on May 1. As the top two vote-getters, they advanced to a runoff.

A major issue in their monthlong runoff campaign was health care. Krueger called for a price freeze on prescription drugs and insurance premiums. Mrs. Hutchison proposed allowing employees to buy their own insurance plans and get the tax credits now given to business.

But the race included much more — name calling, lie detector tests and a wacky ad in which Krueger impersonated Arnold Schwarzenegger's "Terminator" character in an effort to dispell his professorial image.

"Was it Shakespeare who said, 'Hasta la vista, baby?'" he said in the ad.

Mrs. Hutchison countered with a man-on-the-street commercial that ended with an elderly woman saying, "Hasta la vista, Bobby."

In the last days of the campaign, Mrs. Hutchison fended off accusations that she gave a failed Democratic candidate for treasurer a job as a political payoff.

A computer programmer for the state Democratic Party gave the Travis County prosecutor's office lie-detector tests and affidavits to support his accusation that Tom Bowden, who lost the Democratic primary for state treasurer in 1990, later was hired by the treasury department in return for endorsing Mrs. Hutchison.

Mrs. Hutchison denied the accusation.

The treasurer herself took a lie detector test in April to back up her denial of a charge from a former employee that Mrs. Hutchison once struck her.

WINNER: New senator gets 85 percent of Midland vote sought a Senate seat three times, was appointed to the position earlier this year by Texas Gov. Ann Richards to succeed then-Sen. LLoyd Bentsen, whom President Clinton appointed Treasury secretary.

Ms. Hutchison and Krueger were the two top voter-getters among 24 candidates seeking the post in an earlier race.

In 1994, the Senate seat will be up for election to a full six-year term.

While McCormack said that Krueger's loss "is very unfortunately" since he is a "decent man" and "has been a good public servant," Midland County Judge Charles W. "Bro" Seltzer said that Ms. Hutchison's popular win and Krueger's dismal loss is a "definite message" that the citizens of Midland and Odessa are not impressed by the performance of the Democratic administrations in Washington, D.C., and in Austin.

"The people in Midland and Ector counties have sent a definite message to Washington and just as a definite message to Austin, Texas," Seltzer said, "that they are not happy with the tax-and-spend policies of the Democratic administration in Washington. I suspect they are trying to say the same things to Ms. Richards."

Seltzer is former chairman of Midland County Republican Party.

In Midland County, Ms. Hutchison carried 13 of 16 voting precincts. Early voters cast 88 percent of their ballots for Ms. Hutchison.

Her biggest percentage of votes was in northwest Midland, where she garnered almost 94 percent of the vote.

Greenwood voters gave her almost 91 percent of their votes.

Precincts favoring Krueger were in east Midland.

Krueger received almost 55 percent of the vote in northeast Midland, almost 87 percent of the vote in southeast Midland, and about 81 percent of the vote in east Midland.

Otherwise, Ms. Hutchison won from 76 percent to 94 percent of the votes in Midland's precincts.

In lamenting Krueger's loss, McCormack said that the senator "has done well by the people of the state of Texas. He has always been a capable person. He served us well as a congressman, as railroad commissioner, as a senator."

But particularly next year if Ms. Hutchison seeks re-election, "There will be people who will test the ideas and policies of Sen. Hutchison," McCormack said. "In 1994, I would anticipate that there will be Democrats contesting her re-election on her issues."

McCormack said that Ms. Hutchison "is to be congratulated in the way she conducted herself and the way that she presented her campaign. She ran an excellent campaign and got her issues and her philosophy across."

Japanese TV to air royal wedding

■ Audience to be treated to pomp and pageantry.

Associated Press

TOKYO — When their future emperor is married this week, ordinary Japanese will be transported from the drab reality of workaday life to a world of pomp and pageantry as alien to them as Toyotas would be to the samurai.

Crown Prince Naruhito's bride will take a step far into the past, joining a royal family that has reigned for 1,500 years, longer than any other.

Only an elite, official group of 800 will attend the ceremony Wednesday. But live television will take the nation on a vicarious journey behind the moats and stone walls of the Imperial Palace in downtown Tokyo to a quiet, wooden shrine tucked away in its most sacred corner.

There, Naruhito, clad in a sunrise-orange robe and crown of black lacquered gauze, will walk slowly to the altar of Amaterasu, goddess of the sun, from whom Shinto religious legend says the imperial line descended.

Masako Owada, wrapped in a rainbow of nine silk kimonos styled after court fashions of a millenium ago, will follow close behind. Gold ornaments will glimmer from the bride's hair — a wig, actually, with a ponytail longer than she is tall.

Inside the shrine, the 33-year-old prince will wave a branch of Japanese cypress and prostrate himself four times before a sacred mirror. He will read a prayer. Only 10 minutes after the ceremony begins, the two will seal their marriage with sips of rice wine.

Fuji TV, a major commercial broadcaster, is flying in American actress Brooke Shields — the Japanese media once speculated she was a heartthrob of the prince — to be a color commentator.

Rival NTV will devote 13 hours of programming to the wedding and related events. And TV Asahi is preparing computer graphics to simulate portions of the ceremony not shown on camera.

All will spend much time and effort explaining the rites, which are full of symbolism unfamiliar to most Japanese.

"There are very few events other than telethons or major catastophes that networks would devote this much time to," said Fuji spokesman Haruhisa Yoshino.

Among the likely viewers will be Naruhito's parents, Emperor Akihito and Empress Michiko. In keeping with custom, they will not attend the ceremony, but will be joined by the newlyweds afterward.

Japan's emperors serve as a symbol of continuity and national unity. The monarchy was founded in about the 5th century, and by the traditional count, Naruhito would be the 126th of his ancient clan to occupy the Chrysanthemum Throne.

Many elements of the wedding ceremony date from antiquity, but the one now in use was designed in the last century to reinforce ethnic pride as Japan raced to catch up with modern West.

In earlier rites, less emphasis was given to the native Shinto religion. Rather than praying to the sun goddess, princes once made their wedding vows in poems delivered to the prospective bride by an intermediary.

"Going before the altar, albeit a Shinto altar, was an idea borrowed from the Christian West as part of Japan's modernization," said Yusuke Yoneda, a curator of the Shosoin, the storehouse of imperial treasures.

Yoneda said Emperor Taisho in 1900 was the first monarch to marry before the shrine of the sun goddess.

Soon after that, Shinto-style ceremonies became popular among the public. Today, ceremonies in Christian churches are the fashion, although few Japanese are Christians.

Not all emperors were born in wedlock, some scholars note. Taisho, Naruhito's great-grandfather, was the son of a concubine.

Possibly the greatest break with the past is the 29-year-old bride.

Few Japanese women could be as different from the cloistered court ladies of bygone centuries as Owada, who was educated at Harvard and Oxford and put Naruhito off for years to pursue a career in the foreign service.

Her choice of marriage over career sent a melancholy message to many working women who are under strong social pressure to marry young and devote themselves to rearing children.

Expectations are high, however, that Owada will breathe new life into the tradition-bound palace and seek to open the "Chrysanthemum Curtain" that separates Japan from its imperial family.

Like his bride-to-be, Naruhito studied at Oxford, is fluent in English and is fond of Western ways. Outside the imperial family's many religious rituals, he is hardly ever seen in Japanese-style clothes.

The wedding day has been declared a national holiday. Some zoos and parks will be open, with no admission charge. Commemorative gold and silver coins are being minted.

Entrepreneurs are cashing in with everything from special lines of cosmetics to royal-blue swimsuits to expensive imperial-wedding dolls.

Police will mobilize 30,000 officers in one of their largest security operations. They will be helped by the fact that nearly all of the day's activities will take place within the virtually impenetrable palace grounds, built on the site of a former samurai castle.

The public's only opportunity to see the royal couple live will be during a 20-minute motorcade trip Wednesday afternoon through downtown Tokyo. Police expect 200,000 people to line the 2½-mile route.

Because of security considerations, the palace rejected plans for the crown prince and his fiancee to ride in a horse-drawn carriage, as his parents did 34 years ago. They will make the trip in a black convertible.

Most Japanese support the monarchy and little opposition to the wedding has been heard. Even the $3.2 million cost has been largely excused from often emotional debate over the use of public funds for imperial rites with strong religious overtones.

Japan's constitution, written by the United States after World War II, stripped the emperor of divinity and guarantees the separation of church and state.

Yeltsin opens convention; rival walks out

MOSCOW (AP) — President Boris Yeltsin opened a convention on Saturday to draft a post-Communist constitution for Russia, but the session was thrown into turmoil when his chief rival was denied the microphone and stormed out.

Yeltsin said the 700 delegates would continue their work in the Kremlin's glittering Marble Hall despite the "premeditated provocation" by Ruslan Khasbulatov, speaker of the Soviet-era Congress of People's Deputies.

Although the walkout by Khasbulatov and about 50 other delegates spoiled Yeltsin's carefully scripted opening session, it seemed unlikely to derail the convention.

The Russian president urged early adoption of a new constitution that would strengthen the executive branch and replace the Communist-dominated Congress. He called for elections by October for a new bicameral national parliament.

In his 35-minute opening address, broadcast nationally, Yeltsin hammered the Congress.

"The present legislative organs were elected on the basis of a Soviet election law . . . They are not legitimate under a democratic system," he said.

A few blocks from the Kremlin, 3,000 to 5,000 diehard Communists and nationalists rallied in Lubyanka Square, outside the headquarters of the former KGB, to denounce Yeltsin.

"Long Live the Soviet Socialist Constitution!" said a banner carried by the marchers. An elderly woman waved a sign that read: "When the Democrats were in psychiatric hospitals, the people of Russia worked, harvested and sang!"

In his opening remarks, Yeltsin stressed the need for a constitution that would protect individual rights.

Although the walkout by Khasbulatov and about 50 other delegates spoiled Yeltsin's carefully scripted opening session, it seemed unlikely to derail the convention.

"Russia has never had a government ruled by law," he said. "Just the opposite. Anything done by the government was automatically proclaimed to be legal."

The convention, which is scheduled to last until June 16, has authority only to write a constitution. Yeltsin said he hoped the document would be initialed by the leaders of Russia's 88 republics and regions, then ratified by the Congress.

But if the Congress refuses to sign its own death warrant by adopting the constitution, "we shall have to use other possibilities," Yeltsin warned. He previously has said the constitution could be adopted by a special assembly or referendum.

Yeltsin's speech glossed over demands by Russia's republics and regions for greater power at the expense of the federal government. Those demands may present more of a threat than Khasbulatov's walkout to the success of the convention.

When the session resumes Monday, Yeltsin and his aides will try to find ways to satisfy the regional leaders without gutting the central government's authority and dooming Russia to repeat the Soviet Union's disintegration.

Russia has been locked in political paralysis since the Soviet collapse in 1991, in part because the current constitution, drafted in 1978, did not sharply define the powers of the executive, legislative and judicial branches. All three were run by the ruling Communist Party.

After Yeltsin's speech, Khasbulatov strode to the podium and demanded a chance to respond.

Yeltsin refused. He said that if he opened the convention to floor debate, it would become "another session of Congress."

Catcalls and shouts rang out as Khasbulatov's supporters protested and Yeltsin's backers jeered.

The 50-year-old speaker stalked out of the Kremlin, telling reporters along the way that Russia was "moving toward a dictatorship." He argues that the constitution proposed by Yeltsin would give too much power to the president, pushing Russia back toward despotism.

Khasbulatov said the 50 delegates who left the hall with him included representatives from most of Russia's 21 republics.

But one of Yeltsin's legal advisers, Sergei Shakhrai, said presidential aides were seeking a compromise for the return of those who walked out.

And one of the protesters, lawmaker Oleg Rumyantsev, told a television interviewer that he would return to the convention Monday, indicating the walkout was more symbolic than substantive.

Yeltsin's opening speech was shown on commonwealth television, but the live broadcast ended as soon as he finished, so Khasbulatov's walkout and the ensuing pandemonium were not shown.

Military arrests 120 Palestinians in major sweep

JERUSALEM (AP) — Israel has arrested more than 120 Palestinian activists suspected of carrying out attacks on Israelis in one of the largest such crackdowns ever, the military announced Saturday.

The arrests were made in the Israeli-occupied territories, and several more arrests were expected, the military said in a statement.

The arrests of members of the outlawed Muslim fundamentalist group Hamas included a four-member cell suspected of abducting and killing border policeman Nissim Toledano last December, the army said.

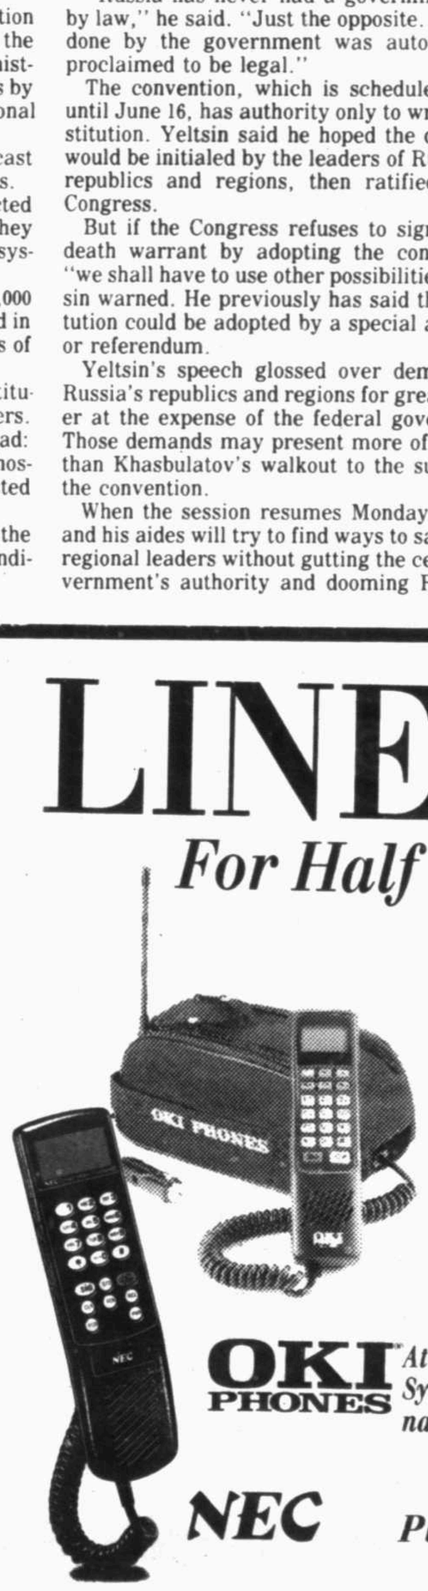

That killing prompted Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin to deport more than 400 Hamas and Islamic Jihad activists to Lebanon last year, an action condemned by the United Nations Security Council.

"This group focused on kidnapping policemen and soldiers for bargaining purposes and then murdering them when this did not succeed," the army statement said. "Dozens of more arrests are expected in the sweep."

Suspects told their interrogators that other attacks against Israelis had been planned but were foiled by the sealing of Israeli-occupied Arab territories imposed in March following a rash of attacks, the army said.

Rabin, who also serves as minister of defense, praised the efforts by the Israeli police and army. He said it was one of the largest such sweeps ever carried out in Israel.

Chaos returns; at least 28 killed

MOGADISHU, Somalia (AP) — Chaos returned to Mogadishu on Saturday as combat erupted between a warlord's fighters and U.N. peacekeepers. At least 28 people, including Pakistani U.N. troopers, were reported killed and 130 were wounded.

Machine-gun fire and grenade blasts echoed through the capital all day as U.N. troops, Americans among them, battled Somalis loyal to warlord Mohamed Farrah Aidid.

The fighting, the worst in Mogadishu since anti-American riots erupted in February, showed the tenuous security situation in Mogadishu even after six months of foreign military presence.

The Somalis were apparently enraged by rumors that the U.N. troops — who took over command of an international military coalition from the United States a month ago — planned to occupy Aidid's radio station.

As military helicopters swooped over the city, Somalis rushed their wounded to hospitals on carts pulled by donkeys. Barricades of burning tires, boulders and wire blocked several main streets.

The city's two main hospitals reported 23 Somalis had been killed and more than 100 wounded.

U.N. sources said three Pakistani members of the U.N. force were killed, but Italian Gen. Bruno Loy said his men recovered the bodies of five Pakistani soldiers.

In an interview with Italian state TV, Loy said Italian troops, backed by a dozen tanks and armored personnel carriers and two helicopters, rescued 80 Pakistanis who were surrounded by snipers in two areas in the city. The Italian defense ministry said 10 American soldiers were also rescued.

The Italians ferried about 30 wounded Pakistani peacekeepers by helicopter to an Italian military hospital, Loy said. No Italians were injured during the rescue, which was achieved by the show of force without firing a shot, he said.

There were unconfirmed reports an American soldier was also wounded.

Some of the fiercest fighting occurred near a traffic circle in the city center, a hotspot since foreign troops arrived in Somalia in December to safeguard relief supplies for victims of war and famine.

U.N. officials warned foreign aid workers to stay indoors, and they did, huddling inside their compounds.

Bullets smacked into a hotel overlooking the circle where most foreign journalists and some U.N. workers are staying, as Pakistani troops on the roof traded gunfire with snipers.

One bullet punched through a wall of a room next to the office of The Associated Press. Journalists lay on their bellies to avoid being hit.

Fresh bullet holes pocked a low wall around the perimeter of the hotel's roof, where journalists transmit stories and pictures by satellite telephones.

Hundreds of Somalis gathered outside a United Nations building up the road, and witnesses said some tried to storm the building.

The fighting broke out about 10 a.m. as U.N. troops conducted inspections of weapons storage sites. The weapons had been taken from Somalis in accordance with U.N. demands.

U.N. spokesman Farouk Mawlawi said Aidid was informed of the planned inspections on Friday and indicated no objection. One of the sites of weapons to be inspected was near Aidid's radio station, which sparked rumors of a planned takeover of the station.

Stockwell and Mawlawi denied any plans to seize the station, which broadcast anti-U.N. chants and songs Saturday afternoon.

Among the U.N. troops facing combat Saturday was a U.S. quick reaction force, a 1,100-member team mostly composed of soldiers from the 10th Mountain Division based in Fort Drum, N.Y.

The U.S.-led multinational force arrived in Mogadishu in December to protect relief supplies intended for victims of Somalia's civil war and famine, which killed an estimated 350,000 people last year.

The United States handed over control of the operation to the United Nations last month and has withdrawn the bulk of its troops.

Birds eye view of the large tally board near the Royal Palace in Phnom Penh Saturday as the final votes come in following Cambodia's first general election.

Opposition head rejects prime minister in government plans

PHNOM PENH, Cambodia (AP) — The head of the party that won U.N.-run elections demanded Saturday that Prime Minister Hun Sen be barred from any power-sharing pact, charging that government forces killed party workers.

As post-election bargaining intensified, about 400 people gathered outside the royal palace and pleaded for Prince Norodom Sihanouk, the country's most revered figure, to take charge in a bid to avert violence.

All sides — including U.N. officials who organized the May 23-28 elections for a constituent assembly — agree that the 72-year-old prince should head an interim government to stabilize the country.

Sihanouk said in a nationwide radio broadcast Saturday he was ready to try again to form an interim government.

But Prince Norodom Ranariddh, Sihanouk's son and the head of the FUNCINPEC opposition party that won the elections, said Hun Sen would have to be cast out.

The prime minister "was personally responsible for acts of violence and killings targeting members of the FUNCINPEC party," Ranariddh said.

U.N. investigators have blamed the Vietnam-backed government for the murders of FUNCIPEC party workers during the campaign. Other pre-election attacks were waged by Khmer Rouge guerrillas, which boycotted the vote.

FUNCINPEC is projected to win 58 seats and the government party 52 in a 120-member constituent assembly that will form a permanent government. The elections were the centerpiece of a 1991 peace accord to end more than 13 years of civil war.

Hun Sen's government has raised tensions by contesting the election results and indicating it may not peacefully share power.

Ranariddh said the results showed that Cambodians have rejected the Communist regime installed by Vietnam.

On Thursday, Sihanouk proposed an interim formula joining the Hun Sen government with FUNCINPEC, as the opposition party is known by its French acronym.

Ranariddh balked, and Sihanouk abandoned the plan.

Officials said it was still possible a new coalition would be formed after Ranariddh's objections are addressed in bargaining.

Police: Doctor's son is among arson suspects

BERLIN (AP) — One suspect is the son of a doctor. Two others were in the German army, and a fourth wanted to impress other neo-Nazis.

They came together after a brawl during a pre-wedding party. They were angry. The fact they believed some of the punches were thrown by Turks increased their rage.

What came next, police and news reports say, was reunited Germany's worst rightist violence: three girls and two women killed in an arson blaze.

One week after the May 29 tragedy in Soligen, news media and officials are piecing together the backgrounds of the young men who allegedly followed the deadly temptations of the extreme right.

"Doctor's Son Arrested," said the Bild newspaper on its front page, accompanied by a picture of a 16-year-old boy identified only as Felix. His mother is an environmental activist.

With a mop of blond hair and a placid face, the boy lately has taken to wearing a bomber jacket with the insignia "all power to the Nazis."

His father hung up black crepe on the front door of the family's home as a sign of mourning for the Turks.

In Solingen, the Tageblatt newspaper said a 23-year-old suspect, identified by prosecutors only as Markus G., was a soldier in the German army. He has been spotted in neo-Nazi outfits and is believed to be a member of a right-wing extremist political party, the newspaper said.

On Saturday, prosecutors announced charges of murder, attempted murder and arson against Markus G., the doctor's son and another suspect. A fourth suspect, 16-year-old Christian Riher, was charged earlier.

Since officials are hemmed in by strict privacy laws, many of the details of the four suspects' lives are showing up in newspapers and on television after talks with friends and neighbors.

They and prosecutors offer this version of events:

Markus G., the doctor's son and a third suspect had picked a fight in a bar after crashing a pre-wedding party. They mistakenly believed two of their opponents were Turks.

After being thrown out, the trio ran into Riher and complained to him about their brawl.

Riher suggested torching a Turkish family's home close to where he lived.

"The other three suspects, who also hated foreigners, went along with this suggestion," chief federal prosecutor Alexander von Stahl said Saturday.

Riher got some gasoline from a nearby filling station, doused the entrance of the Turks' home, threw in some newspapers and set the fire with a cigarette lighter, according to von Stahl. The other teen-ager helped him, while the two men in their early 20s stood watch.

Sexual activity suggests AIDS on rise in teens

BERLIN (AP) — Adolescents around the world are getting syphilis more often, leading to fears their risks of contracting AIDS are also climbing, doctors reported Saturday on the eve of an international AIDS conference.

Surveys are already showing that adolescent women have higher rates of AIDS virus infection than do adults, said Dr. Karen Hein, a pediatrician at the Montefiore Medical Center in New York.

Efforts to combat the problem are being stymied by denial of the problem or concerns that sex education will encourage teens to have sex, despite studies showing the opposite is true, Hein said.

She was in a panel of scientists that spoke at an American Medical Association symposium before Sunday's opening of the Ninth International Conference on AIDS.

During the meeting, scientists, activists and people with AIDS will share the latest research and discuss ways to turn back the epidemic.

Hein not provide numbers on the increase in syphilis, but she said studies around the world are showing that it is increasing in adolescents, indicating a rise in unsafe sexual activity and therefore possibly a rise in the spread of AIDS infection.

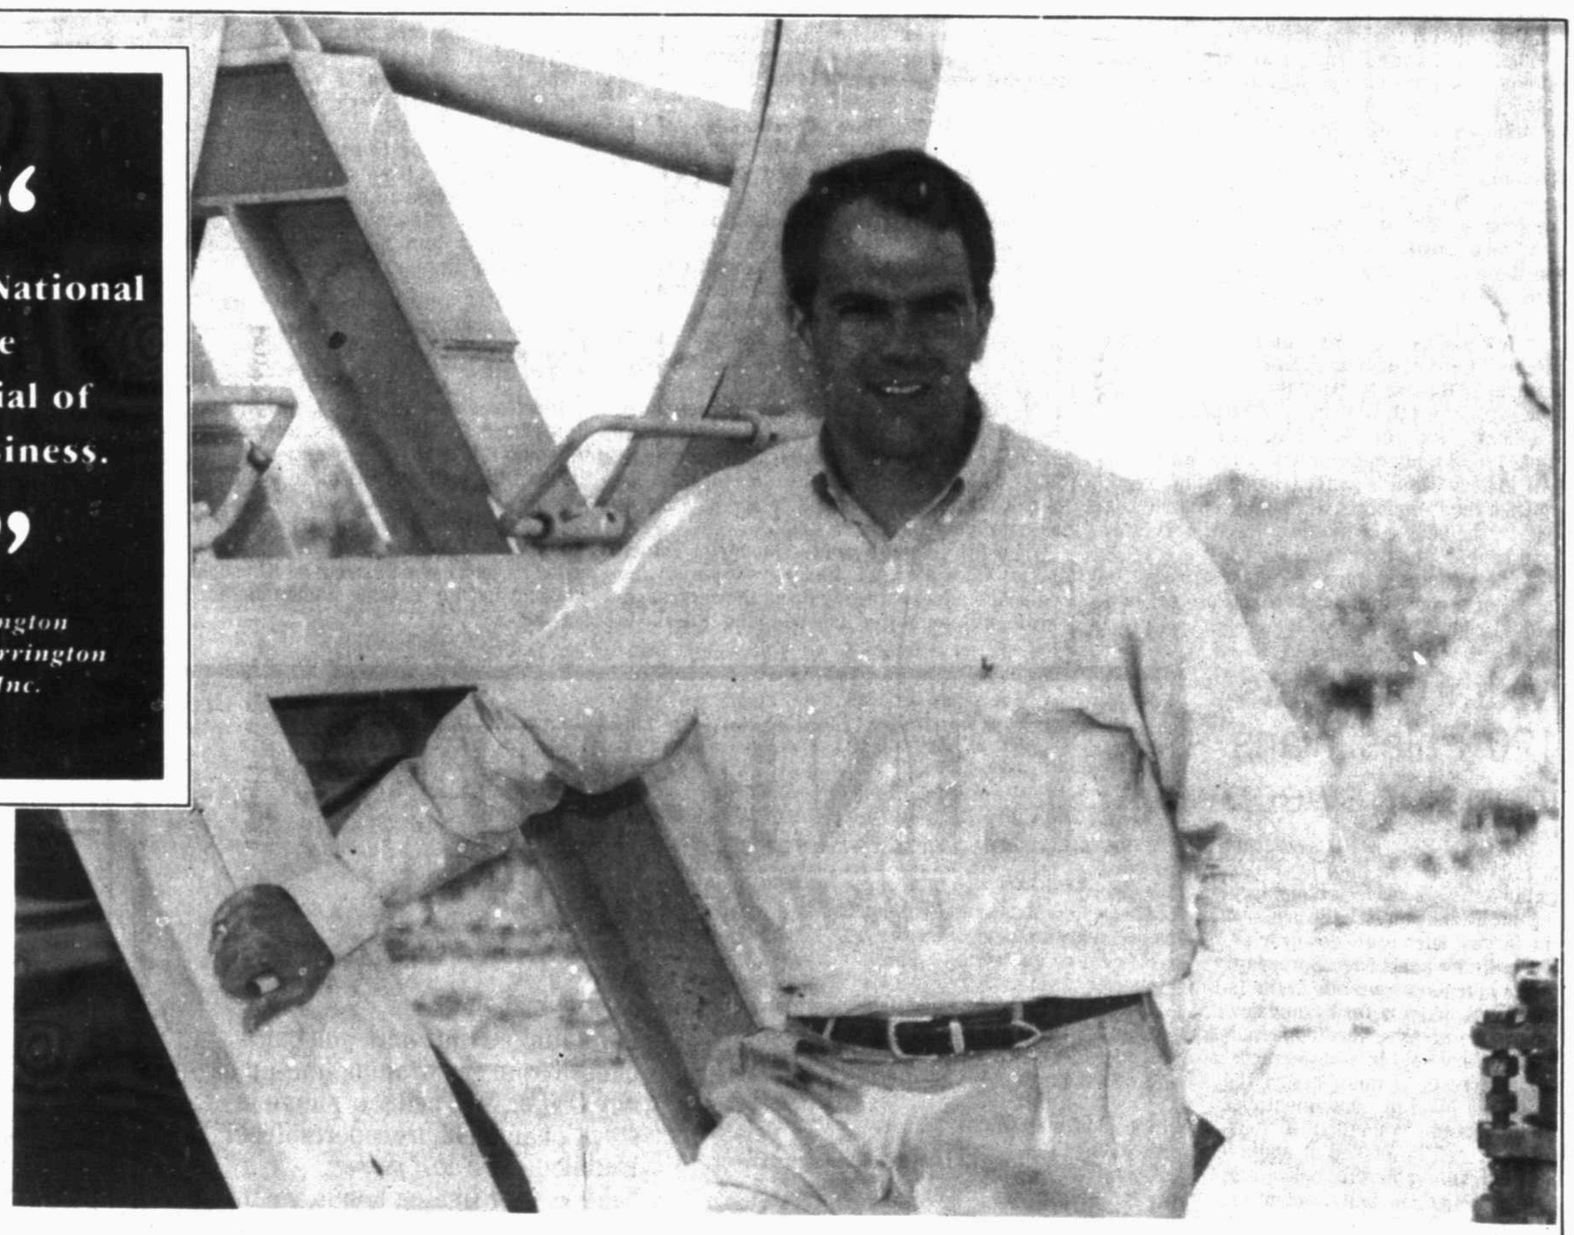

The World Health Organization estimates that 14 million people have been infected with HIV, the virus that causes AIDS, which is now spreading most rapidly in Asia. The agency warned that the world total could rise to 40 million cases of HIV infection by 2000.

Roughly half of the world's AIDS infections have occurred in those less than 25 years old, the WHO said. In the United States, 20 percent of females and 25 percent of males with AIDS have been 13-29 years old, the agency said.

Trial in Bush assassination plot opens; two plead guilty

KUWAIT (AP) — An Iraqi nurse testified Saturday that Saddam Hussein's agents ordered him to bring a jeep packed with explosives into Kuwait on a mission to assassinate former President Bush.

And if the car bombing failed, he was told to strap himself with explosives for a suicide bombing. His payment: about $1,300 at the black market rate.

"They told me to kill Bush," Wali al-Ghazali, 36, told the three-judge court overseeing the no-jury trial.

Al-Ghazali and another Iraqi, Raad al-Assadi, pleaded guilty Saturday to charges that carry the death penalty. Twelve other Iraqi and Kuwaiti defendants pleaded innocent in the plot to kill Bush during his visit.

Bush visited the emirate April 14-16, receiving a hero's welcome. Kuwaitis revere the former president for leading the coalition that expelled the Iraqis from Kuwait in February 1991 after seven months of occupation.

Human rights activists have criticized the trial, saying it's unlikely the suspects would be properly defended in a country where anti-Iraq sentiment still runs high.

The bearded suspects, dressed in light gray shirts and dark gray pants, listened quietly to the charges as they sat in a black metal cage. They looked rested, with no visible signs of mistreatment.

After a day of testimony, the court adjourned the trial until June 26.

Al-Ghazali testified that on April 9 two Iraqi intelligence agents ordered him to take the jeep into Kuwait and park it near Kuwait University, where the Iraqis thought Bush was to receive an honorary degree.

Bush, however, received the degree at another institute.

The agents also showed him how to use a leather belt rigged with explosives, which he would detonate once he got close to Bush. He was also told to blow himself up if he was caught beforehand, he testified.

Al-Ghazali said he was paid 5,000 Iraqi dinars — about $16,000 at the official Iraqi rate, but less than $100 on the black market — and $1,200. He was told that al-Assadi would be his guide.

"When we entered Kuwaiti territory I prayed that God would make something happen to stop the operation and I intended to inform the authorities at the first chance I got," he said.

U.S. officials say the plot to kill Bush was hatched by the Iraqi government. Baghdad denies the charge.

Al-Assadi, the other defendant pleading guilty, testified that he did not know about the assassination plot until after his arrest. His defense lawyer said al-Assadi did not understand the charges.

One of the seven defense lawyers, Najib Lughayan, said the guilty pleas of the two Iraqis were illegal because they were entered before the defendants had talked with their attorneys.

Al-Assadi told the court that an Iraqi agent offered him 10,000 dinars to smuggle five cases of whiskey into Kuwait, where alcohol is banned, and detonate 10 explosives in car showrooms and shops.

He and eight of the defendants then drove in a jeep and van toward the border, picking up al-Ghazali on their way. But al-Assadi said he changed his mind about the bombings and buried the explosives in the desert.

He said al-Ghazali was carrying a bag with two Belgian-made 9mm pistols, anti-tank explosives and an explosives belt. He testified that al-Ghazali told him: "The car will not go back to Iraq."

The 10 men were arrested April 13 inside Kuwait, a day before Bush and his entourage arrived. They tried to make a run for the border after being surrounded by security men, but failed.

A banner calling for people to fight against fascism, racism and neo-Nazi arsonists leads a group of protesters in Solingen, Saturday.

Thousands protest attacks on Turks

SOLINGEN, Germany (AP) — Tens of thousands of people took to the streets across the nation Saturday to protest the killing of five Turks as suspected arson attacks revived fears that neo-Nazi violence would spread.

Federal officials rushed to investigate a fire at a Turkish house in the western German city of Hattingen. Another investigation was under way at a heavily damaged Turkish restaurant in the southern city of Konstanz.

Police said a Turkish mother and five children between the ages of 3 and 16 narrowly escaped the flames in Hattingen by climbing out a window at the back of the house.

Police said they are seeking a young man seen leaving the scene by the mother, who was awakened by one of the children. No one was injured, but the house was gutted, police said.

In Konstanz, several German students living above the burned out Turkish restaurant also escaped without injury, police said.

Police suspect arson in both attacks.

Twenty-six people have died in neo-Nazi violence during the past 18 months, and hundreds more have been injured.

Earlier Saturday, chief federal prosecutor Alexander von Stahl announced charges against three young men in the May 29 killings of the five Turks in Solingen. Von Stahl said the three — a teen-ager and two men in their early 20s — would face charges of murder, attempted murder and arson. A fourth teen-ager was charged earlier.

U.N. 'safe area' comes under Serb artillery fire

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina (AP) — One of the U.N.-declared "safe havens" for Muslims came under heavy Bosnian Serb attack Saturday, blocking U.N. efforts to reach the city and mocking attempts to negotiate peace.

A radio operator in embattled Gorazde said more than 40 villages in the area have "vanished from the face of the Earth" in the Serb offensive — apparently aimed at wiping out the last Muslim strongholds in eastern Bosnia.

Bosnian Serbs took up arms in Bosnia after Muslims and Croats voted to secede from Yugoslavia in February 1992. Fighting has left more than 138,000 people dead or missing.

A U.N. Security Council resolution adopted Friday would commit up to 10,000 additional troops to guard Gorazde and five other Muslim territories. But critics say the plan will only create Muslim ghettos and do little to stop Serb aggression.

Ejup Ganic, Bosnia's Muslim vice president, called the safe areas "concentration camps."

"They are setting up a model which will be used to destroy the free societies in the world," Ganic told The Associated Press. "They all agreed this is an aggression from Serbia. Now, they don't want to stop the aggressor."

But Bosnian Serb leader Radovan Karadzic, quoted by Yugoslavia's Tanjug news agency, said the resolution was good for Muslims because it would save them "from total defeat." He said the resolution was not damaging to Serbs, who, he said, want to end the war.

A ham radio operator who serves as Gorazde's voice to the outside world denounced the U.N. action as too little and too late.

"Did the U.N. . . . have to wait this long? Couldn't it have prevented this latest . . . offensive on Gorazde, Brcko, Gracanica?" said Mustafa Kurtovic, speaking from Gorazde via radio.

Like Gorazde, the northeastern towns of Brcko and Gracanica have been the sites of intense battles for weeks between Muslim-led government forces and Bosnian Serb troops.

"In the last 10 days in the Gorazde area, 42 villages vanished from the face of the Earth, as well as cultural and sacred objects," Kurtovic said.

In a radio message carried by Sarajevo radio, Kurtovic said "hundreds of shells are falling" on several villages surrounding Gorazde.

U.N. monitors meant for Gorazde were stymied Saturday. Though agreeing in principle to let them in late last month, the Serbs have not allowed them access.

Cmdr. Barry Frewer, the U.N. spokesman in Sarajevo, said Gen. Ratko Mladic, the Bosnian Serb commander, had "very conveniently" been unavailable to negotiate the passage of the U.N. observers.

Benin man to be first African to head College of Cardinals

VATICAN CITY (AP) — A cardinal from Benin was approved Saturday to head the College of Cardinals, becoming the first African to head the group that elects the pope.

The election of Bernardin Gantin, 71, reflects the importance the Vatican has been giving to Africa, where the Roman Catholic Church has seen some of its biggest growth in recent years.

Gantin's appointment was approved by Pope John Paul II on Saturday, the Vatican said. The cardinals elected Gantin on Friday.

Gantin replaces Cardinal Agnelo Rossi, 80, who stepped down to return to his native Brazil.

Clinton court journey nears middle-of-the-road end

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Clinton's Supreme Court search has been a journey through the Democratic Party's ideology, opening with an entreaty to a liberal star but ultimately turning toward the political center.

With an announcement likely this week, Clinton was focusing on a handful of candidates who share a few traits: all are known as consensus-builders, moderates and reasonably safe choices for the first high court vacancy of Clinton's presidency.

As Clinton's three-month search nears its end, there are a number of intriguing subplots in the quest to replace retiring Justice Byron White.

The president is trying to reshape the court as he works to recast his administration, quelling any talk that he would seek a liberal legal scholar as a counterweight to the court's conservative tilt in the Reagan-Bush years.

"Everything that says he is committed to the mainstream approach is helpful now," said Democratic strategist Geoffrey Garin. "On the court search they seem to be looking down the road at the political implications."

And with his public image bruised, his economic plan on tenuous footing in the Senate and his health care plan in the wings, Clinton can ill afford a polarizing Senate confirmation battle. This was underscored last week as Clinton abandoned Lani Guinier, his nominee to head the Justice Department's civil rights division, in the face of opposition from moderate Senate Democrats.

"I think what is happening here is the president is letting a large set of outside circumstances factor in his court decision-making process," said Kermit Hall of the University of Oklahoma Law School and editor of a book on the high court. "It leads me to believe he is going to end up with someone safe from the middle."

Some of the intrigue involved in the pick has little to do with Clinton.

Because Republicans have held the White House for 12 years, the pool of Democratic potential nominees on the federal bench is more limited than the president would like. So the administration has pored over state Supreme Court rosters, and even looked outside the judiciary.

The president is trying to reshape the court as he works to recast his administration, quelling any talk that he would seek a liberal legal scholar as a counterweight to the court's conservative tilt in the Reagan-Bush years.

The replacement for White will serve on a court whose own ideological fissures and obsession with secrecy have recently been exposed through the papers of the late Justice Thurgood Marshall.

Also, Justice Harry Blackmun is considered likely to retire after next year's session, so as Clinton makes his first choice he is aware he likely soon will have a second.

Clinton's short list was said to include 1st Circuit Court of Appeals Judge Stephen G. Breyer of Boston, who has stayed on the list through recent changes, as well as Interior Secretary Bruce Babbitt, a former Arizona governor and attorney general who would fit Clinton's desire for a nominee with "real life" political experience.

If Clinton decides to choose a woman, administration sources said the president is likely to turn either to Ruth Bader Ginsburg, 60, a federal appeals judge in Washington, or Stephanie Seymour, 52, of the federal appeals court in Denver.

Others considered more distant possibilities included federal judges Jose Cabranes, Jon Newman of Connecticut and Gilbert Merritt of Cincinnati, as well as Education Secretary Richard Riley, who is said to have told Clinton he was not interested. And as Clinton completed his search, advisers said it was possible he might reconsider candidates scratched from the list previously.

"The list is now quite short; the question is whether he is satisfied with it," an administration official familiar with the search said Friday, on condition of anonymity.

As has been the case in his Cabinet appointments, the drafting and marketing of his economic plan, and now the court search, Clinton has been buffetted by the competing demands of liberals who have waited 12 years for a Democratic president, and moderates who believe the next wait for a Democrat would be as long or longer if Clinton does not set the party on a new centrist course.

When White announced his retirement plans, women's groups demanded a female candidate; Hispanics urged Clinton to name the first Hispanic to the court; black leaders sent a list of candidates; and moderates warned Clinton of the perils of a liberal nominee.

That initial public flurry has been replaced by quiet lobbying of White House officials and influential Democrats. "The wrestling is done in private," said Hall.

But the administration official said there was no evidence of "a raging tug-of-war" as Clinton wound down the search.

'DOS for Dummies' is sign of the times

By Steve Lohr
N.Y. Times News Service

"DOS for Dummies," a how-to guide for using the software that runs most personal computers, seems to violate a time-honored tenet of business: never insult the customer.

Several publishers rejected the book, and once it was published, leading bookstore chains initially declined to stock it. The first printing was a cautious 7,500 copies, and expectations were modest.

"I had doubts about it myself," recalled Patrick J. McGovern, chairman of the International Data Group, a big publisher of computer books and magazines, which in November 1991 took a chance on a title that dared to call its readers dummies.

Eighteen months later, "DOS for Dummies" has sold 1.3 million copies, a pace usually associated with big-name authors or provocative subjects, and no slowdown is in sight.

More than a publishing phenomenon, "Dummies" is a sign of the times. Price wars have created a mass market for personal computers, yet they remain maddening machines, difficult to use and humbling to encounter — and that's the empathic insight behind the success of "DOS for Dummies," an irreverent primer for the perplexed.

A personal computer, it seems, can make just about anyone feel like an idiot. And as the machines get faster, lighter and cheaper, computers are increasingly moving beyond the office into the home and onto the road, where men and women must face them alone. What is shaping up is one of humanity's most vexing confrontations with technology since a cave man first singed his hands on fire.

Culture, as well as technology, is to blame for computing's complexity. It still has the hallmarks of an industry dominated by technological elites.

To read a computer manual is to decipher the foreign language of the "C prompt," the "user interface" and the dreaded "disk error." The writers are apparently paid by the word.

Today's slender notebook computers are probably the only product category for which the operating manual is bigger than the product.

In the computer industry, every company claims these days to kneel before the altar of the customer. No computer executive seems able to string together three sentences without proclaiming his company "customer driven" or "customer focused."

Yet despite such talk, the computer business is still hooked on technology, pursuing the latest widgetry with abandon, convinced that customers will always follow. It is, after all, one of the few multibillion-dollar industries — and perhaps the only legal one — that routinely refers to its customers as "users."

Dan Gookin, 32, the author of "DOS for Dummies" and a self-confessed computer nerd, insists that personal computers are needlessly difficult to use. And he believes he knows why.

"The biggest problem is that there's still a lot of dorks in computing," Gookin said. "They're the kind of people who were in chess club in high school — real bright but wound up in their self-centered little technical world, and they can't communicate with other people."

A harsh judgment, perhaps, but many computer executives acknowledge their shortcomings in dealing with laypeople. The experts are also sympathetic to the troubles of computer neophytes, for they often have difficulties of their own with new machines.

So many computer companies are beginning at last to try to make their wares less intimidating.

Guinier becomes rallying point for civil rights march

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Clinton's decision to drop Lani Guinier as his civil rights nominee is a reminder that the struggle for justice continues, organizers of the 30th anniversary March on Washington said Saturday.

The president's abandonment of Guinier left civil rights leaders "stunned and hurt," said Walter E. Fauntroy, national director of the anniversary march.

"Obviously that action, if it does no more, will spur people to participate in this significant march for jobs and justice and peace," Fauntroy told reporters.

Clinton withdrew the nomination Thursday after Guinier was heavily criticized for her writings about how to protect minority interests within a democracy.

Fauntroy predicted that tens of thousands of people will march on Aug. 28 to mark the 30th anniversary of the historic rally led by Martin Luther King Jr. About 250,000 protesters marched in 1963.

Fauntroy described the anniversary event as an opportunity for King's contemporaries to pass the torch of the civil rights movement to a younger generation — many of whom were not yet born when King delivered his famous "I have a dream" speech at the foot of the Lincoln Memorial.

■ Fire ignites on carnival ride, injures 20

NEW ORLEANS — A fire that ignited in the motor of a spinning carnival ride at the Louisiana Superdome injured at least 20 people, including five children who were hospitalized, authorities said Saturday.

Twenty-eight people were on the ride, which spins people in a circle as they sit in cars about 30 feet off the ground, when a fire broke out in the motor, said New Orleans Fire Department spokesman Norman Woodridge.

Twenty people were treated for burns and smoke inhalation, the fire department said. Four children were listed in stable condition at Baton Rouge General Hospital's burn unit. A fifth child was in the hospital's intensive care ward, said nursing supervisor Joy Smith.

Caretha Alexander said her 9-year-old daughter was the child in intensive care.

"She was burnt from the face on down," Ms. Alexander said.

She said she was on the ride with her daughter Friday night when a cable started burning. She managed to slip free of the ride's restraints and jump to the ground, but her daughter and others couldn't immediately get out, Ms. Alexander said.

■ NASA report to include redesign costs

WASHINGTON — A NASA official said today that President Clinton will receive a report next week on various designs of a space station that, for the first time, will include costs that previously had been concealed elsewhere in the agency's budget.

The official, who is familiar with the Clinton-ordered redesign of the station, said that a voluminous report to be released Monday will specify a number of options that go above the minimum spending amounts the White House had set. The design is planned in such a way that the options can be put on later.

Clinton had ordered NASA in March to come up with designs costing $5 billion, $7 billion, and $9 billion to replace the station program NASA had estimated at $31.3 billion.

But the official, who spoke on condition that he would not be identified, said NASA had never included the costs of using the space shuttle as a building materials carrier, research and operations support. That will add billions to the operation, the official said.

"There's going to be sticker shock," he said. "But the taxpayer is entitled to get the full numbers."

■ Scientists rule out sound as source of hum

TAOS, N.M. — A team of scientists is looking more closely at electromagnetic signals as the cause of a mysterious hum that first bothered some Taos-area residents two years ago.

The team of researchers has "informally ruled out sound" as a cause for the hum, said Sherry Robinson, a University of New Mexico spokeswoman.

Experts from UNM, Sandia and Los Alamos national laboratories and the U.S. Air Force's Albuquerque-based Phillips Laboratory are using sophisticated equipment to try to find and identify the noise.

Late last month, acoustical, seismic and electromagnetic sensors were set up outside the home of Bob and Catanya Saltzman, about eight miles south of Taos.

The Saltzmans were among the first to publicly complain about the low, constant, pulsating sound they say interferes with sleep and causes other physical problems.

Robinson said Friday that although the team of scientists and engineers found nothing dramatic, they will continue to analyze their data for several more weeks.

Several members of the team earlier this week expressed interest in performing new tests using a piece of gear known as a "tempest receiver," which "taps into communications signals and analyzes them," she said.

"It covers a whole range of electromagnetic frequencies," Robinson said.

■ Jackson leads Denny's discrimination protest

ANNAPOLIS, Md. — The Rev. Jesse Jackson joined about 50 protesters at a Denny's restaurant Saturday to demand an end to what the group said is a pattern of discrimination against blacks by the national chain.

"These charges against Denny's are escalating," Jackson said. "They say they aren't happening, but they are lying. ... Where there's smoke, there's fire."

The demonstrators marched in the parking lot carrying signs reading "Equality For All" and "End Discrimination Now!"

Inside, the restaurant was packed with customers eating breakfast as the protest began at mid-morning.

Six black Secret Service agents said they were refused service at the restaurant last month because of their race. The agents, who were in Annapolis to guard President Clinton, have filed a federal lawsuit against Denny's.

Country star Conway Twitty dies at 59

By Jerry Nachtigal
Associated Press Writer

SPRINGFIELD, Mo. — Conway Twitty, who started as a teen rock idol in the 1950s and crossed over to country to become a star, died Saturday at age 59.

His wife, Dee Henry, other relatives and some of his band members were with him at Cox Medical Center-South when he died of complications from surgery after a blood vessel ruptured in his stomach.

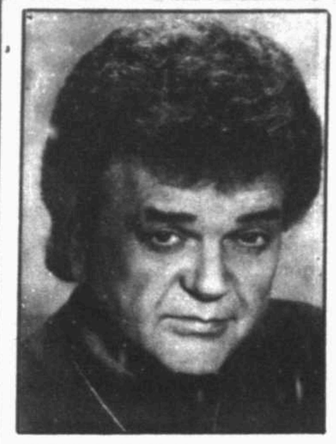

Twitty collapsed on his tour bus during a rest stop in southwest Missouri on the way home to Hendersonville, Tenn., from a performance Friday night in Branson.

"I've just been sitting here crying," said Sandy Brokaw, Twitty's press representative. "I was in awe of the man."

Twitty was born Sept. 1, 1933, as Harold Jenkins, but changed his name in 1957 by borrowing from Conway, Ark., and Twitty, Texas.

After spending many years as a songwriter, his performing career took off with the name change. He recorded more than more than 40 No. 1 hits, including "Hello Darlin'," "Tight-Fittin' Jeans" and "Linda On My Mind."

"Everyone will remember Conway Twitty, industry and fans alike, as the consummate singer and performer, who has been this wonderful and dynamic presence in our business for over 30 years," said Bruce Hinton, chairman of MCA Records in Nashville.

—Bruce Hinton
MCA Records chairman

Mel Tillis, who said Twitty and his wife were at Tillis' Branson theater Thursday night, called Twitty a great singer.

"He didn't do a lot of talking on stage, he said he let his music do his talking," Tillis said. "He was a song's best friend, because he could really sing."

Twitty and Loretta Lynn, who could not immediately be reached, won the Country Music Association's Vocal Duo of the Year award in 1972, 1973, 1974, and 1975. They won a Grammy for their 1971 duet, "After The Fire Is Gone."

Twitty got his break as a rockabilly artist in the 1950s, writing songs for the Sun Records' stable of singers that included Elvis Presley, Jerry Lee Lewis and Johnny Cash.

His first hit was "It's Only Make Believe," which soared to No. 1 on the pop charts in 1958.

Twitty capitalized on his teen idol status by starring in the films "Sexpot Goes to College" and "College Confidential."

Despite the advice of managers, booking agents and record company people, Twitty made the switch to country and turned out a string of No. 1 hits until "Georgia Keeps Pulling On My Ring" missed in 1977.

"I'm a fan, too. I like what the fans like," Twitty said in a 1985 interview. "I believe I can pick the songs. I have a fan's ear."

In 1982, Twitty opened Twitty City, a nine-acre tourist complex in Hendersonville, a Nashville suburb. It included performance facilities and Twitty often would come out and greet visitors.

Twitty turned down a contract offer to play baseball for the Philadelphia Phillies out of his love for music. He learned his first guitar chords from his father, a riverboat captain on the Mississippi.

He grew up in Friars Point, Miss., listening to the Grand Ole Opry on the radio and was influenced by the local black church. He put together his first band when he was 10.

"My Dad told me when I was a kid: 'When the cotton is out there, you get it. When it's not out there, you can rest,'" Twitty said in a 1990 interview. "I've been fortunate. It has been out there for me for a long time."

Besides his wife, he is survived by his mother, Velma Jenkins; and his four children, Joni, Jimmy, Kathy and Michael. They all live at Twitty City.

Funeral arrangements were pending.

Courting GOP: Dems hope for health-care help

WASHINGTON (AP) — Hillary Rodham Clinton rang up Republican Sen. Dave Durenberger not long ago to say she had missed him when he was unable to make it to one of her health care meetings with lawmakers.

Her husband had six Republicans to lunch at the White House this spring for what participants described as a general talk about health care.

Both gestures were part of a methodical effort by the White House to woo moderate Republicans over to the administration's emerging health reform plan. The elaborate courtship dance is aimed at avoiding a repeat of the jobs bill debacle when unanimous Republican opposition torpedoed President Clinton's bill.

But it's delicate going and already, some Republicans are bristling.

"Buying three or five Republicans isn't going to do it," Durenberger, of Minnesota, said in an interview.

"They're going to have to get at least half of us. The answer is not to get a handful of us on the margin. The issue is to get legislation the people can support."

Not surprisingly, Senate Minority Leader Bob Dole of Kansas is less than happy with the White House's approach.

"They ought to work directly with the minority leader, rather than go around him and try to pick off two or three Republican senators," Dole's spokesman, Walt Riker said.

Mrs. Clinton has been on Capitol Hill numerous times to consult with Republicans as she pulls together a reform package for her husband. Initially, the plan had been expected in May, then June. Release is now uncertain as the administration focuses on winning approval for the president's deficit-reduction package, which only narrowly passed the House.

The president's wife had three Republican senators — Nancy Kassebaum of Kansas, John Danforth of Missouri and Conrad Burns of Montana — to the White House recently to discuss health care overhaul legislation they've introduced.

Their bill includes some of the items that the White House package is likely to rely on, such as a basic package of benefits, limits on premium increases and measures to prevent insurance companies from screening out risky consumers.

But the GOP bill would provide government vouchers to help the more than 30 million Americans without insurance, rather than the employer mandates and tax increases the Clinton plan is likely to endorse.

Employer mandates and price controls are two of the biggest sticking points with Republicans, many of whom oppose what they see as big government getting too involved with the private sector.

Still, the White House thinks there are about 20 Republicans who might back its health-care reform bill, if compromises can be struck.

There is a shorter list for a possible vote to choke off a filibuster, if one develops, when even all 57 Democrats voting together aren't strong enough to prevail.

Besides Kassebaum, Danforth and Durenberger, this list includes Sens. John Chafee of Rhode Island, James Jeffords of Vermont, Arlen Specter of Pennsylvania and Bob Packwood of Oregon, all GOP moderates with an interest in health care.

The White House also admits there might be another reason for two of the Republicans to swing behind the president's plan. Durenberger and Packwood face ethical difficulties — the Minnesotan is under indictment for an alleged scheme to bilk the Senate out of reimbursement expenses and Packwood stands accused of repeated sexual harassment.

One White House official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the administration hoped they would be more eager to help on "do-good" legislation that would burnish their own images.

UCLA students continue hunger strike

LOS ANGELES (AP) — It's late in the afternoon and 19-year-old Cindy Montanez is weary. Wrapped in a blanket, she leans against her younger sister and clutches a stuffed animal for strength.

"I'm worried about my courses," said the university freshman, glancing at a row of unread textbooks that line the mattress where she sleeps in a tent. "Education is important to me. That's why I'm starving myself for it."

Montanez and her 16-year-old sister Norma are two of nine people on a hunger strike hoping to persuade the University of California, Los Angeles, to upgrade Chicano studies from an interdepartmental program to a full-fledged academic department.

Since the hunger strike began May 25, the fasters have brought increased attention to the status of Hispanics in Los Angeles.

"In a community that's 40 percent Mexican-American, there is a need for a Chicano studies department," Fernando Chavez, eldest son of the late farmworkers union leader Cesar Chavez, said Thursday as he visited the strikers in the tent they set up outside the university chancellor's office.

Cesar Chavez's hunger strikes demanding better conditions for farm workers inspired the UCLA group.

The hunger strikers include five UCLA students, a high school student, a student from Mexico, a UCLA medical professor, Jorge Mancillas, and an individual describing himself as a spiritual adviser.

The controversy began last month when UCLA chancellor Charles Young announced that university officials prefer to keep Chicano studies an interdepartmental program, so that it can draw on the strengths of a number of different departments.

"We believe the interdisciplinary approach is the way to have the best program," Young said at a news conference Thursday. "Obviously the hunger strike has had an impact. But the hunger strike itself is not going to result in a change in the decision."

The strikers want a separate department with permanent faculty.

Lack of fresh air is linked to health problems

■ Some newer airplanes circulate less fresh air in order to save money.

By Martin Tolchin
N.Y. Times News Service

To save money, U.S. airlines are circulating less fresh air into the cabins of many airplanes. As a result, flight attendants and some passengers have begun to complain of headaches, nausea and other health problems, especially after long flights.

The reduction of fresh air is done only on newer planes. Older aircraft built before the mid-1980s provided cabins with 100 percent fresh air that was circulated every three minutes.

But the newer models provide half fresh air and half recirculated air that is freshened every six or seven minutes or longer. The recirculation system enables the planes to use less fuel to cool the outside air, which is heated by the engines as it is drawn in.

"Ventilation systems are driven by air that comes off the engines," said Jack Gamble, the chief spokesman for Boeing, which uses recirculation systems on its newer planes. "If you cut back on the engine system, cut back on the speed, burn less fuel, you're going to cut back on the amount of air circulating in the cabin."

Airline officials say they have received no significant increase in passenger complaints. They also say there is no conclusive correlation between cabin air and the health of passengers.

But Doris Bachrach, a Manhattan securities analyst and frequent traveler, said that in the last two years she had experienced severe headaches on domestic flights of more than four hours. On a recent round trip from New York's Kennedy airport to San Francisco aboard American Airlines, she said, "Both ways, I walked off with a headache, which in my case invariably turns into a migraine."

Fidel Gonzalez, a flight attendant based in Chicago with United Airlines, said "flight attendants are constantly complaining" about the air quality in airplane cabins. "Some have been so sick they couldn't take the next flight," he said.

Nevertheless, Dr. Jeffrey R. Davis, medical director of American Airlines, said that the oxygen supply in recirculated air was better "than you would get in an office building or crowded department store."

About half the seats on the 7 million domestic flights last year were on aircraft with the new systems, experts said. A government study said that in 1985 about 30 percent of the flights were on planes with such systems and that by 1990 the proportion had grown to 40 percent.

These newer planes, built for an era of fierce competition, include Boeing 757s and 767s and newer versions of 737s and 747s, as well as McDonnell Douglas MD80s and MD11s.

"I think it's more desirable to have outside air, but it's a trade-off," said Dr. Andrew Horne, a medical officer with the Federal Aviation Administration's Office of Aviation Medicine. "If you want to spend more money for fuel, then you get more outside air."

But airlines say that there is no significant problem. David Shipley, a spokesman for USAir said, "We have worked with the FAA over the years to improve air cabin quality, and do not think we have any problems specific to USAir or the type of aircraft we fly."

Joseph Hopkins, a spokesman for United Airlines, said that the number of formal complaints was a "statistically insignificant" percentage of last year's 430 million passengers. But Ms. Bachrach said she had never filed a formal complaint, nor do many other afflicted passengers.

Neither the FAA nor the Air Transport Association, which represents the major airlines, compiles data on passenger complaints concerning the quality of air in the cabins.

Several government studies have noted that proving a link between air circulation and health is difficult because there is no data on the health of passengers before they board a flight.

But the studies say that less frequent circulation of fresh air exposes passengers not only to the respiratory problems of other passengers but also to higher levels of carbon dioxide, as well as to fumes from materials used to construct or maintain the cabins. These include cleaning agents, pesticides and gases like ethanol and benzene.

Such exposure, the studies found, could cause headaches, malaise and fatigue.

Because of extensive complaints from its members, the Association of Flight Attendants, the union representing attendants at United, USAir, Alaska Airlines and 18 smaller companies, commissioned an extensive investigation of the problem.

Acquaintances: Murder suspect told minister he worshiped devil

WEST MEMPHIS, Ark. (AP) — Michael Wayne Echols carried a cat's skull, wrote satanic poems and called himself "Damien," acquaintances said, and he once told a minister he worshiped the devil.

Many who know Echols said they weren't surprised when the 18-year-old high school dropout was arrested with two buddies and charged with capital murder in the deaths of three 8-year-old boys.

Echols, Jessie Lloyd Misskelley Jr., 17, and Charles Jason Baldwin, 16, were held without bond in undisclosed locations this weekend after separate appearances in municipal court Friday.

They will be tried as adults in the May 5 bludgeoning deaths of second-graders Steve Branch, Chris Byers and Michael Moore.

As word of the arrests Thursday spread through this blue-collar community of 28,000, acquaintances of the accused trio said they were shocked by the possible involvement of Baldwin and Misskelley.

Both were described as basically good kids. But schoolmates and neighbors said Echols had a dark side that people feared.

"He just scares me talking about him," said 16-year-old Roni Hendrix, who described Echols as a serious youth who seemed obsessed.

Roxanne Harrison, the mother of one of Echols' former friends, said Echols also frightened her. She said he once told her that he was a devil worshiper and displayed several satanic poems he had written.

You can compromise with the IRS...and win!

Federal Tax Consultants says yes! A recent change in Internal Revenue Service policy has created a situation where taxpayers can negotiate with the government and substantially reduce their tax obligation in many cases. Depending on individual circumstances, the tax bill can be significantly reduced.

According to Charles Frost, founder of Federal Tax Consultants (FTC), an enrolled agent and a former IRS officer, the new IRS policy can lead to a win/win solution for both the federal government and the taxpayer. That solution is called Offer in Compromise.

"Offer in compromise has been an IRS possibility for many years, but it was never utilized on a wide scale," Frost explained. "In February, 1992, Internal Revenue Service changed it's policies regarding the way Offers in Compromise are handled. Offers in Compromise are a collection tool where the IRS chooses to take fewer dollars today instead of waiting for more dollars in the future. In other words, one in the hand is worth two in the bush."

Frost continued that the compromise process is very difficult, but not impossible when:

(1) The Tax penalty and interest exceed a taxpayer's net realizable equity and

(2) Monthly ability to make an installment agreement to the IRS is minimal.

He said the IRS initiated this new policy in lieu of a general taxpayer amnesty program to help bring people out of the under-ground economy of cash and barter and back into the realm of voluntary compliance with federal tax laws.

The IRS benefits because the government regains control of billing and accounts receivable. The taxpayer benefits because he is given an opportunity to make a fresh start free of long standing tax obligations.

"If a taxpayer meets the two criteria outlined above, I suggest he or she call FTC at 1-915-697-1120 for further review of their tax situation, " Frost said. "We offer a service called a Letter of Opinion in which we review your case at minimal cost to determine if you qualify for the offer in compromise process. Naturally, we can't guarantee that you will qualify for this negotiation process, but if you do, the savings could be substantial.

Recently, IRS accepted $7000.00 from one of our clients who owed over $70,000, Frost said. On another FTC case, IRS agreed to a $4000.00 settlement against a $24,000.00 Tax Debt. FTC has had very good results using the offer in compromise process. Everyone's individual situation is different, but there is always a posibility that you can qualify.

To meet the increased case load, Frost has added Don Williams to his staff. Williams, a former IRS revenue officer with 18 years experience, also offers an extensive background in real estate, insurance and taxation. FTC, with offices in Amarillo, Lubbock, Albuquerque, Midland-Odessa and Durango, Colorado, continues to grow to meet the needs of taxpayers who need to negotiate with the Internal Revenue Service.

A taxpayer should use caution when selecting a representative to handle his or her tax problems. The individual should select a person who has experience in the tax community and specifically a person who specializes in IRS negotiations. FTC does just that!

A recent article in The National Federation of Independent Business Owners Magazine said it is wise to use the services of a professional if:

(1) The IRS is claiming a large tax deficiency.

(2) There's a possibility that criminal charges may be filled.

(3) Dealing with the IRS is so stressful that you can't open IRS correspondence much less respond to it.

(4) You have received a "30-day" or "90-day" letter from the IRS.

(5) You owe taxes, but can't pay.

Legislator says his prison record makes him better lawmaker

By Dennis Conrad
Associated Press Writer

SPRINGFIELD, Ill. — Coy Pugh has stolen a car, shoplifted, run with a gang, packed unregistered guns, possessed heroin and jumped bail.

All of those things, he said, make him a better state legislator.

"People in my community know what I've done after prison, the accomplishments I've made ... how easy it is for black men to end up in prison and how hard it is for them to overcome," said Pugh, a freshman Democrat from Chicago.

He said his criminal past and comeback make him an ideal choice to represent people living in tough Chicago neighborhoods.

Pugh, 41, first acquired a police record at age 16 and it stretched for more than two decades. He served four years behind bars. As a convicted felon, Pugh was allowed to run for state office after completing his last sentence.

His past was no secret during the election in Chicago, but few state lawmakers knew before he was elected last fall.

Rep. Thomas Homer, a fellow Democrat and chairman of the Judiciary Committee on which Pugh serves, said he has been impressed with Pugh's work.

"He's been a really thoughtful, contributing member of the committee," Homer said.

The former gang leader sees no conflict in sitting on the committee that deals with crime bills. He said his experiences help him bring a sense of fairness to the committee.

"Mistakes are what you are talking about, and we are all imperfect," he said. "It's been my experience that laws are written to govern the actions of the lesser class of people. People really don't make laws to govern their own actions."

Pugh said his first run-in with the law was for pitching pennies. He was 16 and spent the night at a police station.

A year later, in 1969, he was sentenced to 90 days in jail and two years on probation for stealing a car. A string of shoplifting convictions followed.

Next came convictions for unlawful use of guns, drug possession and pimping — the only part of his record Pugh disputes. He said he wasn't pandering, just trying to pick up a woman at a bar.

Carpet worries can't be swept under rug

By David Gram
Associated Press Writer

MONTPELIER, Vt. — In 1985, the Sands family got sick. Very sick.

Linda and Stephen Sands and their five children suffered from headaches, dizziness, burning noses and throats, body tremors, double vision and shortness of breath. Eight years later, they are still battling various ailments.

The Sandses do not blame viruses or any other contagion; the cause of their illnesses, they say, is the carpet that had been installed in their home.

Linda Sands said she and her family had been healthy, that she had "never experienced anything like this in my life, ever. This whole thing is bizarre. I mean it is the most horrible thing I have ever been through."

They are not alone. Complaints of health problems linked to carpets have come from homes, schools and offices where they have been installed, from the factories where they are made and even from workers at the Environmental Protection Agency's Washington headquarters.

Now those complaints are beginning to be heard in the halls of Congress. A Senate hearing was held last October and one is set for Friday before the House subcommittee on Environment, Energy and Natural Resources, to air carpet concerns and the responses of the industry and government regulators.

Worries about the health effects of some carpets have been around for years. But many of those who've raised alarms say that until just recently, those worries in large part have been swept under the rug.

Between 1987 and 1990 there were more than 500 such complaints to the U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission. But spokesmen for the $8.5 billion-carpet industry say concerns about their product are not based on firm evidence.

"It's all anecdotal," said Ronald Van Gelderen, president of the Carpet and Rug Institute of Dalton, Ga.

He said he hoped the EPA would "take a look at all the anecdotal information and see what scientific conclusions can be made," and said the industry would "make the necessary adjustments."

There is agreement on all sides that not all carpet is bad; industry critics say it appears that only certain batches appear to cause problems.

But the effort to determine whether some carpet does cause problems, and which of the dozens of chemicals used in carpets might be at fault, has been maddeningly slow.

In its literature, the industry says that "indoor air pollution is a serious issue. ... Carpets are a part of this issue, but a very small part."

An industry pamphlet recommends thorough ventilation during installation and for the next 48 to 72 hours, and says people "may wish to leave during the installation of the new carpet."

The Sandses were given no such warning when their new carpet was installed in 1985. It was March in Vermont and they didn't open windows. And they didn't immediately leave the house. They've regretted it ever since.

"As soon as the roll of carpeting was brought into our house, there was a very strong chemical odor just penetrating everything," Linda Sands says.

On a larger scale, the same thing happened to the EPA. In 1987 and 1988, the EPA installed 27,000 yards of new carpet during renovations at its Waterside Mall offices in Washington. Soon, 880 of 5,000 workers at the complex complained of illness.

J. William Hirzy, president of the union representing EPA professional employees, said senior agency officials dragged their feet in investigating employee health complaints. Later, at the urging of industry officials, the agency sought to suppress information about a health study of EPA workers, he said.

But in 1989, the agency ripped the carpet out. And it issued an internal policy that the agency would not buy any more carpet that contained one suspect chemical, 4-phenylcyclohexene, or 4-PC.

Tobacco cancer

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — Louisville Redbirds manager Jack Krol will undergo outpatient surgery next week for a cancerous lump on his tongue.

"There's no doubt in my mind it's the dipping (snuff) and chewing (tobacco) that did it," Krol said. "I don't mind being an example for my players, but this is not the way I wanted to do it."

Krol said his doctors told him indications are that "we caught it in time" and that he should make a complete recovery.

Major League Baseball banned chewing tabacco from the minor leagues last week.

Krol's surgery is scheduled for June 15 at Baptist Hospital East in Louisville.

He said he was told he probably will be able to resume his duties five to 10 days after the surgery.

Pitching coach Mark Riggins will act as manager on the Redbirds' trip to Indianapolis.

Kieschnick gets UT win

■ It was far from pretty, but Brooks Kieschnick and the Texas Longhorns defeated Oklahoma State 6-5 in the first round of the College World Series.

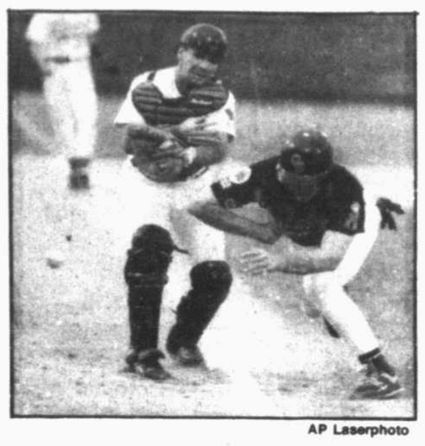

Associated Press

OMAHA, Neb. — Brooks Kieschnick just did finish the job he started Saturday night against Oklahoma State.

Suffering through an off night, the All-American pitcher allowed 12 hits and five runs, throwing 172 pitches before Texas edged Oklahoma State 6-5 in the first round of the College World Series.

Kieschnick (16-3) gave up singles to Sean Hugo and Peter Prodanov in the ninth before making Thad Chaddrick his 11th strikeout victim to end the game.

"I was worried about his pitch count," Texas coach Clint Gustafson said in explaining his visit to the mound in the ninth. "I talked to him during the third and told him he wouldn't make it through the fifth the way he's throwing now."

Texas catcher Joel Williamson loses the ball after being hit by Oklahoma State's Joe Wallace.

"My adrenalin was flowing," Kieschnick said, "and I told coach I had something left."

A throwing error allowed Steve Heinrich to score the go-ahead run from second base in the seventh inning when Oklahoma State catcher Joe Wallace's attempted pickoff throw bounced into center field. Heinrich had reached on a single and Kieschnick walked off Oklahoma State reliever Greg Dean (2-2).

Kieschnick, a first-round draft pick of the Chicago Cubs, threw his ninth complete game of the season.

"The key before the game was to be patient and get his pitch count up," Oklahoma State coach Gary Ward said.

"We felt he didn't have good control of his breaking pitch early. We had him in trouble but he made good pitches and got out of it."

Texas (51-14) picked up its first three runs by the narrowest of margins when Jerry Taylor's sixth homer of the season with two on appeared to go off the glove of left fielder Sean Hugo at the fence.

"I didn't think it was hit that well," said Taylor, who batted .275 this season but is hitting .400 in postseason play. "I didn't think it was out until I heard the crowd roar as I was rounding second."

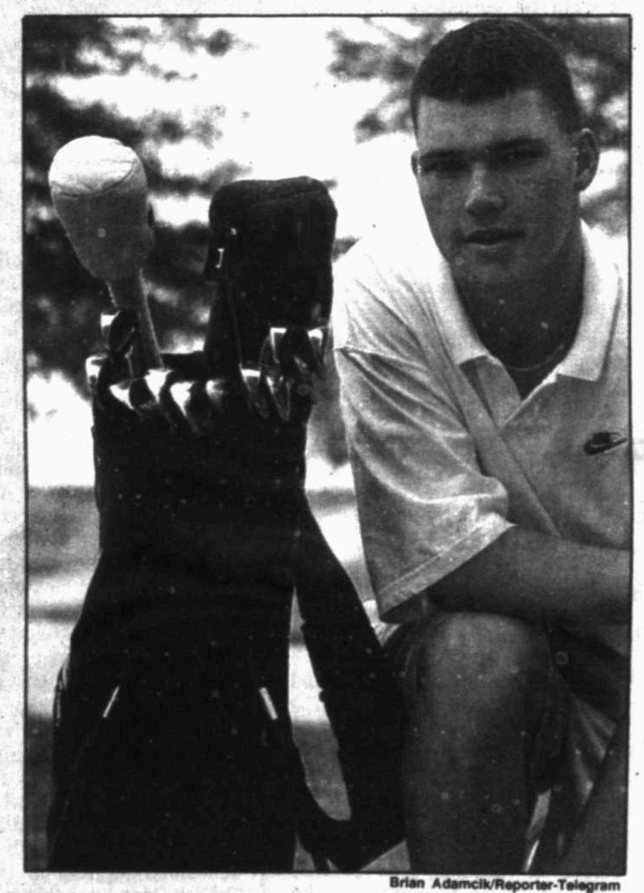

Oklahoma State (43-16) got on the board in the second on Peter Prodanov's homer, but Taylor's run-scoring single in the third gave Texas a 4-1 lead.

Oklahoma State went ahead by scoring four times in the fourth. Tad Chaddrick, Hunter Triplett, Jason Heath, Joe Wallace and Ernesto Rivera singled for two of the runs and a wild pitch brought in another.

Kieschnick had Rivera picked off second but Wallace broke from third to the plate and drew a throw from shortstop Tim Harkrider. Wallace scored when catcher Joel Williamson dropped the throw.

Golf is his life

Midland College golfer Chad Campbell picked up his first set of clubs when he was all of six years old.

■ Midland College freshmen Chad Campbell has spent a good many hours on the links — and it is paying off.

Chad Campbell has spent the large majority of his life in Andrews, Texas.

No. Let's be more specific.

■ NJCAA Championships/2C

Chad Campbell has spent the large majority of his life on a small plot of land known as the Andrews Country Club.

When he was just six years old, Campbell picked up his first set of golf clubs. He doesn't remember his first score, but he does remember loving the game, and loving to play almost every round ever since.

Campbell does recall shooting a 60 over nine holes "sometime before I was 10."

Now, some 14 years after first picking up the game, Campbell and four other Midland College Chaparral golfers are headed for one of the biggest achievements of their sporting life — the National Junior College Athletic Association Golf Tournament, at McCormick Ranch Country Club, in Scottsdale, Ariz.

Tournament play begins Tuesday as the second-ranked Chaps look to bring home a second consecutive NJCAA championship.

Campbell is far from the only talented golfer on the team, but he did finish the 1992-93 golf season with the lowest scoring average of any of his teammates, and that includes Masters veteran Stephen Dundas.

Campbell closed the year with a scoring average of 72.1 through 10 events. Dundas was next with a 72.3.

Graf out-duels Fernandez

Associated Press

PARIS — Her game was admittedly below par, her top rival was missing and her celebrations were restrained. Still, Steffi Graf was hungry enough to become French Open champion again.

■ French Open

After a shaky start, the top-seeded German came from behind in the final set to defeat No. 5 Mary Joe Fernandez 4-6, 6-2, 6-4 Saturday for her third French Open title.

It was Graf's first French championship since winning back-to-back titles in 1987-88. It was also the 12th Grand Slam victory of her career.

Yet, Graf seemed more subdued than ecstatic.

When Fernandez hit a forehand into the net to end the match after two hours, 30 minutes, Graf showed little jubilation. She held up her arms briefly, turned to her coach and parents in the stands, then exchanged kisses with Fernandez at the net.

The mood was clearly tempered by the absence of Monica

Angels rally to defeat Missions, 11-10

By Bill Petitt
Staff writer

Up until Saturday's game between the Midland Angels and San Antonio Missions, the Angels had been quite un-Texas League like this season. Case in point — most games were under two and a half hours in length, most teams hadn't played a version of wall ball off the Angels outfield fences and games had generally been in single digits.

It's good not to get too far from your roots.

The Angels and Missions amassed 35 hits and 21 runs over three hours and 15 minutes. When the dust cleared, Midland pounded four home runs for a come-from-behind, 11-10 win in front of 2,763.

As Angels announcer Bob Hards would say it was sidewalk souvenir day at the ballyard as Emmitt Cohick and John Jackson each slugged two home runs. For Cohick his home runs proved costly for the Missions and the Angels front office. Cohick's first shot in the fifth was worth $5,000 — $2,000 to Cohick, $2,000 to Joetta Harris who held the winning program and $1,000 to an area charity as it cleared the Wells Boot City sign.

"I didn't know (he had won) until I got to the dugout and the players were telling me and Donny (coach Don Long) was smiling as I made it to the dugout," said Cohick, whose last two home-run performance was in the Connie Mack World Series playing for a Long Beach, California team.

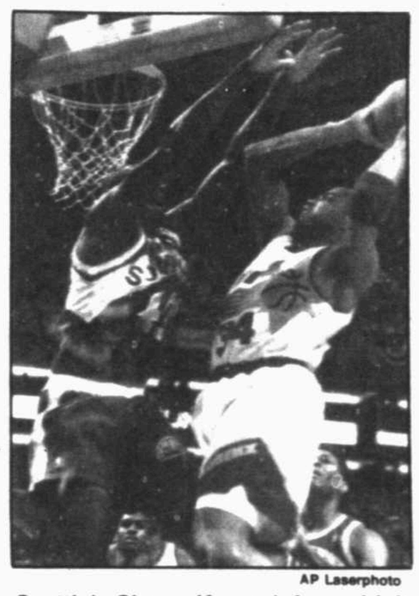

Cohick's second shot was worth free cokes to the entire audience for a seven minute stretch and tied the game at 9 after San Antonio had taken the lead with a five-run seventh on three base hits.

San Antonio sent nine batters to the plate in the sixth and 10 in the seventh as the Missions teed off on starter David Holdridge and reliever Ron Watson.

Despite the sixth, Holdridge continued to improve as he had his previous four outings, allowing just four earned runs in 5⅓ innings of work. Watson, who had come up from extended spring training two weeks ago and is considered one of the Angels top prospects, allowed five earned runs on four hits and three walks in ⅓ of an inning.

Cohick's homerfest overshadowed a stellar performance by outfielder Jack-

Charles in charge

■ The Phoenix Suns, led by Charles Barkley's 44 points and 24 rebounds in a 13-point win over Seattle, advance to the NBA Finals.

By Steve Wilstein
AP Sports Writer

PHOENIX, Ariz. — Charles Barkley and Michael Jordan set up a date in the NBA Finals and another on the golf course, one for prestige, the other for a friendly wager no matter who might object.

"We won't bet on the game, but we'll bet on the golf," Barkley said Saturday, jabbing his buddy and Olympic teammate over his gambling losses.

Barkley laid down the challenge on the court with career playoff highs of 44 points and 24 rebounds in the Phoenix Suns' 123-110 Game 7 victory over the Seattle SuperSonics on Saturday to win the Western Conference title. That came one day after Jordan's Chicago Bulls beat New York for the Eastern title.

The league's only true megastars and most exciting players — Barkley, MVP this year, and Jordan, MVP the last two — will face each other starting Wednesday night in Phoenix.

Leaving nothing to chance, Barkley handed out only one assist and did the rest himself in a record free-throw bonanza for the Suns that ended a tortuous trip to the finals in their 100th game this season.

After 82 regular-season games with the league's best record; after 18 playoff games — five more than Chicago; after going to the limit in the opening round against the Los Angeles Lakers and in the third round against the Sonics; after all that, the Suns finally are playing for the championship for the first time since 1976, before Barkley could even dunk.

All season it seemed inevitable, Barkley vs. Jordan for the NBA title, and now it is imminent.

"I came to Phoenix for one reason, and it wasn't just to get to the finals," Barkley said. "I believed all year that we were going to win the championship. I'm glad we're playing Chicago because they're the best team.

Krone rides into thoroughbred history books

Prairie Bayou injury leads to horse's death

By Ed Schuyler Jr.
AP Racing Writer

NEW YORK — Jockey Julie Krone rode into racing lore and realized a dream in the Belmont Stakes on a windy, wet Saturday that turned into a nightmare for Loblolly Stable.

While Colonial Affair won the Belmont, the favorite, Prairie Bayou, suffered a compound fracture of his left front leg in the run down the backstretch and was humanely destroyed about a half hour after the race.

It was the second time in three weeks that a Triple Crown race was marred by tragedy. On May 15, Union City smashed his right front ankle in the Preakness and had to be put down.

A gasp went up from the crowd of 45,037 when jockey Mike Smith appeared to leap from the back of Prairie Bayou. Smith later said he "tried to hold onto the reins, but I slipped and fell off the side."

The grand gelding, runner-up in the Kentucky Derby and winner of the Preakness, was taken to his fate by horse ambulance while Smith walked disconsolately from the track with Tom Bohannan, the trainer for John Ed Anthony's Loblolly Stable.

■ Belmont Stakes

"It was a bad step," Smith said. "It was raining and kind of slippery. Everything was normal. It was just an abnormal mishap."

The 29-year-old Krone, who became the first woman to ride a winner in a Triple Crown race, said she was more than confident on the backstretch.

"My thoughts went back 15 years when I saw Steve Cauthen win an' I said to my mom that I wanted to be a jockey and someday win the Belmont Stakes. Now it has all come true," she said.

Steve Cauthen rode Affirmed, the 11th and last Triple Crown winner, in 1978.

"Julie was terrific," said Scotty Schulhofer, Colonial Affair's 67-year-old Hall of Fame trainer.

But there was sadness for him in the victory.

"It's a tremendous loss," he said of Prairie Bayou's fatal injury. "He was really a nice horse, but that's racing. It's hard to take, but it happens and sometime it happens to the best of them."

After finishing seventh in his career debut last Oct. 14, the gelding had won seven races and finished second three other times in his only other starts until Saturday.

It was the second time bad luck had hit Anthony. He sent out favored Demons Begone in the 1987 Kentucky Derby, and that colt had to be eased when he bled badly.

Krone had Colonial Affair, making his debut in Triple Crown competition, fourth with a quarter mile to go.

The pair then charged down the center of the track and won the 1½-mile race by 2¼ lengths over Kissin Kris, who was 3½ lengths in front of Wild Gale. Silver of Silver was another two lengths back in the field of 13 3-year-olds.

Colonial Affair completed the race in 2:29 4-5, giving Schulhofer his first Belmont victory in five tries.

An inquiry was lodged against Kissin Kris, but after the stewards studied the film, the order of finish was allowed to stand.

"I was thinking this was the longest stretch I've ever come down and it just kept getting longer and longer," said Krone, who was riding in her third Belmont. She is the only woman to have ridden in the Belmont, but there have been women riders in the Derby and Preakness.

Sea Hero, the Derby winner who had finished fifth in the Preakness, won the $1 million bonus that goes to the horse that records the most points for the three races on a 10-5-3-1 basis.

Sea Hero, seventh on Saturday, didn't add to his 10-point total, but Prairie Bayou, who had 15 points, was denied the bonus because a horse must finish all three races to collect.

"I am sorry that under the circumstances, it's a little sad today, but in any case I'm very honored," said Paul Mellon, the 85-year-old owner of Sea Hero.

"We had a great day today," Donald Little, the Ipswich, Mass., investment banker who owns Colonial Affair, said after the horse's first stakes victory.

CAMPBELL: TCU coach shows interest

(From 1B)

"Midland College is sort of the same as the teams I played on in Andrews," Campbell said. "The players are better, but if someone plays bad, soneone else always comes in and takes up the slack."

Aside from his duties as third baseman on the Andrews Sox softball team this summer, the only sporting event you'll find Campbell wrapped up in is his golf game. No calf-roping or bull-dogging like recent MC signee Jason Garduno.

Campbell figures that in the almost decade and a half he's played, he's played about 300 rounds a year at the Andrews Country Club, one of the area's most well cared for courses and one that is an unexpected surprise in its beauty and challenge. Add all those rounds of golf up and you find Campbell has spent close to 2,000 days playing at his home course, which could also be thought of as his home away from home.

Only once in his brief career has he ever grown tired of the game.

"Last year," Campbell said, "after the state tournament, I got bored with it. I took two months off. Played a couple of times, but nothing really serious."

Campbell comes from a golfing family. His mother shoots in the 90s, his father in the 70s, and Chad just finished teaming with his brother, Mike, last weekend for a two-man, low ball scramble title in Andrews.

If brother Mike's name is familiar it is because before he became assistant girls basketball coach at Andrews, he was an All-American golfer at Abilene Christian University.

"We used to play as a family," Campbell said, "but not much anymore."

For the past several years, Campbell's steady golf partners have been Garduno and Steve Ward, both of Monahans. They're close friends and it shows on the golf course. One day in May, the threesome played a practice round at Midland Country Club. Talk was rare, and the trio was all business when it came time to tee-off.

Ward recently graduated from McLennan Community College, in Waco, and could, in fact, peer out his dormitory window and see the flames as David Koresh's Mount Carmel burned to the ground. Campbell is a year younger than Ward; Garduno is Campbell's junior by a year.

Campbell doesn't talk about his golf game a great deal, but the patience he shows on the course speaks louder than any words he could offer. His drive approach 300 yards and his accuracy with irons is what he considers the strong point of his game.

"It's n / putting that mainly needs the most work," Campbell admits. "That usually determines if I play well or even bad."

Campbell still has a year left at MC, and following his JUCO tenure, he plans to attend either TCU, Texas A&M or the University of New Mexico. It is TCU's coach, though, that has shown the most interest.

In his most immediate future, though, is a trip to the desert of Arizona, where if past history is any incidation, the Chaps team 'c do do whatever it takes to bring home another national trophy.

Chap golfers in Scottsdale to defend title

Staff report

■ NJCAA Golf

SCOTTSDALE, Ariz. — Midland College golfers begin a quest Tuesday for their second consecutive national golf championship. A four-day, 72-hole tournament on the McCormick Ranch Resorts course in Scottsdale, Arizona, is the same course where the team won its first-ever Division I National Junior College Athletic Association title one year ago.

After placing second and third the previous two years, the Chaps finally captured their first national golf championship with a dramatic come-from-behind victory. But only one Chaparral player from that team is back from that squad.

But no need to pity MC golf coach Delnor Poss, who returns to Arizona with an experienced crew, not the least of which is the reigning British Amateur titleist Stephen Dundas. He won the title last summer, which got him an automatic invitation into the 1993 U.S. Masters. He's also scheduled to play in the 1993 British Open later this summer.

Currently ranked second in the nation behind the host Scottsdale Community College team, the Chaps have been a powerhouse this year. They've won almost everything they've entered and every team member has contributed to the victories.

Sophomore Guy Redford of Perth, Scotland, was on last year's championship squad. Dundas, also a sophomore, is from Glasgow, Scotland. He passed on the NJCAA event last spring to play some important junior tournaments in Scotland. Darren Summers is a freshman from Edinburgh, Scotland.

Freshman Chad Campbell of Andrews was the Class AAAA state medaist in 1992. This spring, he's been one of the top players for the Chaparrals. Rounding out the team is freshman Shawn Savage of Plainview. Luke Mongrain of Canada is the team alternate and will attend the tournament.

After 36 holes, the field will be cut to the best 24 squads who will play another 36 holes for the championship trophy.

The top ten teams in the final NJCAA coaches' poll were: 1) Scottsdale Community College, AZ; 2) Midland College, TX; 3) Wallace State, Hanceville, AL; 4) (tie) Central Alabama Community College and Brevard Community College, FL; 6) Wallace College, AL; 7) Indian River Community College, FL; 8) Broward Community College, FL; 9) Anderson College, SC; and 10) Florida Community College.

Midland College won a school-record 14 tournaments during the 1992-93 season. The Chaps gained their sixth straight trip to the NJCAA national tournament with a 24-stroke victory over the runner-up team in the Region V tournament.

In the fall tournaments, the Chaps won five of six titles. Dundas was medalist for the events at the High Country Shoot-Out in Ruidoso, N.M., the Bossier Parish Invitational in Bossier City, LA; and the Herb Ferrell Invitational at the University of North Texas. Redford was medalist for the Texarkana Invitational and Campbell was medalist for the Shoot-Out at Sugar Tree in Dennis, TX. The Chaps were third in the Fall National Invitational at the Club at Mission Dorado in Odessa, but Jason Brooks was medalist. Brooks suffered a severe arm laceration the following weekend and was out for the remainder of the season.

In the spring events, Campbell was medalist in two extra holes at the Sun Tree Invitational in Cocoa, FL, where the Chaps were fifth. They won the Bronco Invitational on the New Mexico Military Institute course in Roswell, which also counted as a conference tournament.

CWS: Wichita State defeats Arizona State

(From 1B)

Texas tied the game in the fifth on Stephen Larkin's RBI single.

The Cowboys play an elimination bracket game against top-ranked Arizona State (46-19) on Monday. Wichita State (56-16), which beat Arizona State 4-3 in 11 innings Saturday, faces Texas Monday night.

Wichita State 4, Arizona State 3

OMAHA, Neb. — Wichita State relief ace Darren Dreifort wasn't about to let Arizona State get even twice in their first-round meeting of the College World Series on Saturday.

He was within a strike of collecting his fifth save of the season to back Mike Brandley's six-hit pitching when Arizona State's Sean Tyler hit his first homer of the year to tie the game 3-3 in the bottom of the ninth. That didn't undo the Shockers reliever, who shrugged the blown save off and led off the 11th with his 21st homer of the season for a 4-3 win.

"I kind of laughed because they announced ... that it was his first home run," Dreifort said of Tyler's rocket to right field. "If it's going to happen, it's going to happen at the College World Series."

"When we got the count to 0-2 on Tyler it was all I could to do keep from going to the mound to tell hime not to get anything close because he's going to swing at anything," Wichita State coach Gene Stephenson said. "Well, he got it pretty close."

But Dreifort (11-1) homered to left off Sun Devils starter Marc Barcelo (12-4), who went the distance allowing eight hits, one earned run, struck out eight and walked none.

"I thought it was a chance to make amends," Dreifort said about his game-winning homer. "But I wasn't planning to go deep on it. I just wanted to get on base because I knew we could manufacture some runs."

Dreifort, an All-American and the No. 2 overall in Thursday's major league draft, still had to face Tyler again with two out and two on in the bottom of the 11th and won the battle this time with a game-ending groundout.

Toby Smith's two-run double gave Brandley a 3-1 lead in the third and Dreifort appeared to be in control with one hit and four strikeouts in 2 1-3 innings of relief before he walked Cody McKay with two out in the ninth for the only walk by either team in the game.

Wichita State (56-16) advances to Monday's second-round game against Texas.

FRENCH: Fatigue becomes factor late in second set

(From 1B)

Seles, who won the French Open the past three years but was unable to defend her title this time because she was stabbed by a deranged fan of Graf during a tournament in Hamburg on April 30.

After accepting the Suzanne Lenglen Cup from former champion Chris Evert, Graf said she regretted not saying a few words to Seles in her victory speech.

"I thought about it yesterday," she said. "But after the match, I was so out of it, I didn't do it. I did want to say it and I know I missed the chance and I should have said it."

Asked what her message to Seles would have been, Graf said, "We all hope she is going to be back soon and we think about her."

Graf was asked whether her victory would have meant more to her had Seles been in the tournament.

"Obviously you want to have everybody in the field," she said. "But I won it the way I did, and there is nothing else I can do about it."

Graf said she felt more relieved than anything else.

"I had a few close matches in the last few years and I was always the one who had to play against the better player at the end, so I was thankful it was the other way around today," she said.

The "better player" she was referring to was Seles, who beat Graf in an epic final last year decided 10-8 in the third set. Graf admitted that the quality of that match was much higher than Saturday's final.

"It was definitely better tennis last year," she said. "Today, I obviously didn't play great tennis. I won it probably because at the end I was tactically playing better."

Fernandez, who now has a record of 0-11 against Graf, said the German was better when she needed to be.

"It was close, a couple of points here or there," the 21-year-old Floridian said. "Maybe experience. She hung in there and when it came down to the big points, she knows how to play them very well. She went for it and it paid off."

It was the third time Fernandez has lost in a Grand Slam final. But she said she felt more confident Saturday than in her Australian Open defeats in 1990 and 1992.

"I think I had more faith in myself today," she said. "I went in there believing I could win the match."

The match was marred by unforced errors from both players: 52 for Fernandez and 48 for Graf. While Graf committed most of the errors in the first set, she slowly cut down on her mistakes as the match wore on. The pattern was the opposite for Fernandez.

"I started very hectic, a little bit nervous in the first set," Graf said. "I wanted to win too much maybe. I knew I never lost to her. I knew it was a Grand Slam final and I just wanted it too much in the beginning."

A pivotal moment came in the sixth game of the second set, with Graf ahea 3-2 and Fernandez serving. The game stretched for 19 minutes and 22 points, including eight deuces and seven break points.

ANGELS: Series concludes with 6 p.m. game son, who went 4-for-5 with three runs and two RBI's, including his second and third homers of the year.

So John, when was the last time you hit two home runs?

"It was in a video game," said Jackson.

Despite all the highlight film hits, the Angels had to rally in the ninth for the win after leaving 12 men on base in the first eight innings.

San Antonio broke a 9-all tie with a run in the top of the ninth when Roger Cedeno reached base on a fielder's choice and moved to second on a balk by Julian Heredia. Cedeno scored on a Juan Castro single to take a 10-9 lead.

In the bottom of the ninth, Jackson hit what appeared to be his third home run of the night, but officials ruled the ball hit the top of the fence and bounced back in play for a ground rule double for Jackson. Orlando Palmeiro sacrificed Jackson to third. Mark Dalesandro singled to score Jackson. Kevin Davis came in to pinch run for Dalesandro with two outs. P.J. Forbes walked and Chris Pritchett, who went 4-for-5 with two RBIs, hit the game winner into left center.

Heredia (1-4) picked up the win for the Angels with three innings of relief work.

The final game of the six-game series is tonight at 6 p.m. with John Fritz and Jamie Daspit (0-3) starting for San Antonio.

ANGEL NOTES: The Kip has landed. Jeff Kipila arrived at Angels Stadium in the sixth inning of Saturday night's ball game. Kipila left from Vancouver three days ago after being with California's Class AAA club for the first two months of the season.

Greene 8-0; Phillies win

Associated Press

PHILADELPHIA — Tommy Greene pitched a seven-hitter to improve to 8-0, lowering his major league-leading ERA to 1.87, and the Philadelphia Phillies rebounded to beat the Colorado Rockies, 6-2.

After sweeping three games by a margin of 39-10 against the Rockies in Denver last weekend, the Phillies lost to the Rockies 2-1 on Friday.

Greene pitched his fifth complete game, striking out eight and walking none. He is the first Phillies pitcher to win his first eight decisions since Steve Carlton also went 8-0 at the start of the 1981 season.

Colorado scored in the first inning when Chris Jones doubled with one out, went to third on Darren Daulton's passed ball and scored on Greene's wild pitch.

The Phillies scored three runs in the third off Armando Reynoso (3-3). Dave Hollins led off with a walk, was balked to second, and one out later, Jim Eisenreich walked. Pete Incaviglia doubled in one run, and Kim Batiste added a two-run double.

Batiste strained his left hamstring on the play and was replaced by Mariano Duncan.

The Phillies made it 4-1 in the fifth when Hollins hit his ninth home run of the year. In the sixth, Duncan hit an RBI triple and Lenny Dykstra had a sacrifice fly.

Giants 3, Pirates 2

SAN FRANCISCO — Trevor Wilson pitched 5⅓ shutout innings and hit a home run as the San Francisco Giants beat the Pittsburgh Pirates 3-2 Saturday.

Wilson (3-3), who had been on the disabled list with shoulder tendinitis last month, hit a homer in the third inning off knuckleballer Tim Wakefield (3-6).

Will Clark's two-out double and Matt Williams' 17th homer of the season gave the Giants a 2-0 in the first inning.

Wilson led off the third inning with his homer, the second of his career and the first by a Giants' pitcher since he connected against the New York Mets on July 25, 1991. He have up three hits.

The Pirates, who had a four-game winning streak snapped, including two in a row at Candlestick, scored two runs off rookie left-hander Kevin Rogers in the seventh inning.

Pinch-hitter Orlando Merced walked, loading the bases and Lonnie Smith's run-scoring single made it 3-1. Mike Jackson replaced Rogers and Jay Bell hit an RBI grounder before Jeff King struck out.

Reds 6, Cardinals 2

CINCINNATI — Tim Belcher pitched eight shutout innings and had a two-run double as the Cincinnati Reds rocked Bob Tewksbury again and beat the St. Louis Cardinals.

■ NL Roundup

The Reds snapped their three-game losing streak by pounding Tewksbury (4-6) for the second time this season. The right-hander gave up seven hits, including five doubles, and six earned runs in two-plus innings to take his third straight loss.

Astros 7, Mets 5

HOUSTON — Pinch hitter Kevin Bass' two-run double capped a six-run rally in the sixth inning, sending the Houston Astros over the New York Mets.

The Mets scored four runs in the first inning and took a 5-1 lead in the sixth on Howard Johnson's homer, but starter Bret Saberhagen could not hold it. Houston won for the seventh time in nine games.

Darryl Kile (4-1) pitched one inning for the victory. Xavier Hernandez got six outs for his second save.

Expos 6, Cubs 3

MONTREAL — Marquis Grissom hit a three-run double, highlighting a four-run seventh inning as the Montreal Expos beat Chicago, the Cubs' fourth straight loss.

Pinch hitter Rick Wilkins homered in the Chicago seventh off Jeff Fassero (5-1), tying it at 2.

In the Montreal seventh, Sean Berry hit a two-out single off Jose Bautista (1-1) and scored when pinch hitter Matt Stairs doubled off Chuck McElroy. Delino DeShields and Lou Frazier followed with walks and Grissom doubled to center.

Dodgers 5, Braves 1

LOS ANGELES — Mike Piazza homered, doubled and drove in two runs as the Los Angeles Dodgers defeated Atlanta for their team-record 13th straight victory at home.

The Dodgers again extended the club mark for consecutive wins at home. Los Angeles won for the 15th time in 17 games overall.

Atlanta has lost three in a row and eight of 11. Greg Maddux (5-5) took the loss.

Darryl Strawberry, who spent three weeks on the disabled list because of lower back pain, returned to the Dodgers lineup for the first time since May 12 and went 0 for 3. Booed throughout the game by the crowd of 48,035, he was picked off first after getting hit by a pitch, struck out twice and fouled out. He is hitting .135.

Marlins 3, Padres 1

SAN DIEGO — Luis Aquino stopped San Diego for eight innings, pitching the Florida Marlins past the Padres 3-1 Saturday night.

Aquino (3-3) won for the first time in six starts since April 29. The Marlins scored a total of only one run in his last three games.

Aquino gave up six hits, struck out two and walked one. He lowered his ERA to 2.12, second-best in the National League. Bryan Harvey worked the ninth for his 16th save.

Yankees bury Texas, 9-6

Associated Press

ARLINGTON — Hensley Meulens, who had only one hit this season, went 3 for 4 and hit a bases-loaded triple to key a six-run seventh inning, lifting the New York Yankees past the Texas Rangers 9-6 Saturday night.

■ AL Roundup

New York trailed 6-3 entering the seventh, but got five hits and three walks off four pitchers and took advantage of a key error by right fielder Dan Peltier.

Rich Monteleone (5-3) got the win with two innings of hitless relief. Steve Howe, making his first appearance since going on the disabled list May 8, also pitched an inning and Steve Farr worked the ninth for his 13th save.

Spike Owen and Wade Boggs led off the Yankees' seventh with singles off starter Charlie Leibrandt (1-6), and Peltier then dropped Mike Stanley's line drive to load the bases.

Paul O'Neill singled off reliever Craig Lefferts to pull the Yankees within 6-4. Matt Whiteside walked pinch hitter Dion James with the bases loaded for another run, and Meulens, who entered the game hitting .100 (1 for 10), cleared the bases for an 8-6 lead with a drive that glanced off Peltier's glove.

Mike Gallego added a run-scoring single to complete the seventh-inning barrage.

Yankees starter Bob Wickman was chased in the third inning when Dean Palmer hit a sacrifice fly and Peltier followed with his first major league homer, a two-run shot that made it 6-2.

Tigers 5, Angels 1

DETROIT — John Doherty made his first start since May 19 and pitched six strong innings as the Detroit Tigers beat the California Angels.

Doherty (5-2), sidelined with a sore elbow, gave up one run and three hits. Bill Krueger, Kurt Knudsen and Bob MacDonald finished for the Tigers.

For the second straight game, the Angels led 1-0 after three batters. With one out, Chad Curtis walked, and scored on Tim Salmon's double.

With one out in the Tigers third, Milt Cuyler singled, stole second and third, and scored on a Tony Phillips' single off Chuck Finley (5-5).

Phillips then stole second and moved to third when catcher Greg Myers' throw skipped into center field. After Dan Gladden grounded out, Travis Fryman hit a fly ball to right that Salmon misplayed for a run-scoring error.

The Angels had runners on the corners with two outs in the sixth, but a double-steal attempt failed.

Detroit added three runs in the seventh. With one out, Gary Thurman singled, and Cuyler walked. Phillips followed with an RBI double, and Rene Gonzales booted Gladden's grounder allowing two runs to score.

MacDonald relieved with two runners on in the ninth and got out of the jam for his second save.

Indians 7, Twins 6

CLEVELAND — Left fielder Wayne Kirby threw out a runner at the plate in the top of the ninth, then hit a sacrifice fly in the bottom of the inning as the Cleveland Indians beat the Minnesota Twins.

The loss ended Minnesota's three-game winning streak. Cleveland won for only the second time in eight games.

Trailing 6-3 in the eighth, the Indians tied it on an RBI single by Carlos Martinez and Reggie Jefferson's two-run homer — his fourth hit of the game and fifth home run of the year. The homer came on the first pitch thrown by Mike Trombley (2-3).

Felix Fermin then led off the Cleveland ninth with a single, took second on a wild pitch and third on a sacrifice before pinch-runner Thomas Howard scored easily on Kirby's fly to deep right.

Blue Jays 9, Athletics 5

TORONTO — John Olerud hit a homer and drove in three runs as the Toronto Blue Jays beat the Oakland Athletics for their season-high seventh straight victory.

Juan Guzman (5-0) gave up five hits and struck out 11 in seven innings for the victory.

Olerud's 11th homer of the season — and first at home — gave the Blue Jays a 2-0 lead in the fourth. He hit a 413-foot shot over the center-field fence off starter Shawn Hillegas.

Orioles 5, Mariners 3

BALTIMORE — Mike Devereaux's three-run homer in the eighth inning gave the Baltimore Orioles their second straight comeback victory over the Seattle Mariners.

Baltimore trailed 2-0 in the seventh before Leo Gomez hit a two-run homer to tie it. In the eighth, Devereaux followed an infield hit by Mark McLemore and a wind-blown single by Cal Ripken with his second homer of the season, a drive deep into the left-field seats off Erik Hanson (5-3).

White Sox 11, Red Sox 3

CHICAGO — Jack McDowell became the American League's first eight-game winner this season and George Bell drove in four runs as the Chicago White Sox beat the Boston Red Sox.

Bell broke out of a 5-for-40 slump for the White Sox with a single, a double and a triple. His two-run double off Frank Viola (4-5), sparked a four-run fourth, helping Chicago win for only the sixth time in its last 19 games. The White Sox had 15 hits off three Boston pitchers.

Brewers 8, Royals 2

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — The Milwaukee Brewers, shut out on one hit for six innings by David Cone, broke loose for eight runs in the seventh and beat Kansas City, ending the Royals' five-game winning streak.

B.J. Surhoff doubled with one out, starting Milwaukee's big burst, and later hit an RBI single off Tom Gordon.

Giants put stock in enigmatic Bonds

By Steve Wilstein
AP Sports Writer

Barry Bonds settles into his seat on the San Francisco Giants' charter jet and yanks out the white bag from the seat pocket in front of him.

Bonds

Ptooey! He spits a little brown juice into the bag, smiles and points to the pinch of tobacco tucked into his lower lip.

"I started chewing at 14," he says almost apologetically. "I quit off and on. I quit this whole winter, then started again since New Year's. It's a bad habit. If I could quit I would."

A pause. Ptooey!

"It's just part of my comfort zone, something I'm accustomed to. I'm starting to chew more sunflower seeds, stuffing big wads of them in my mouth. I'm not allowed to chew tobacco at home. My wife doesn't allow it."

So there it is, perhaps his worst vice. No illegal drugs, no gambling, no 130 mph speeding tickets, no barroom brawls. Just chewing tobacco and an unwillingness to acquiesce to everyone's demands that has given him a reputation, fairly or not, for having an aloof and arrogant attitude.

Aboard the jet and the bus to the hotel, Bonds is laughing, telling stories, utterly affable — his big brown eyes as lively as his banana yellow shirt, his smile as bright as the gold and diamonds adorning his fingers, neck and left ear.

There isn't a trace of the reclusive, self-absorbed figure he often is before games, or the weary, detached figure seeking silent refuge afterward.

"People don't realize how much concentration it takes to play this game right, to think about every pitch, every situation for three hours. My mind's going tick, tick, tick the whole time.

"I'm a computer, man. I'm a computer for the whole team. And when work time's over, I'm just mentally drained."

He has it in his mind that he just might be able to keep up his batting average, floating now around .400, be the first to finish a season that high since Ted Williams' .406 in 1941.

"I believe I can do it," says Bonds, his performance from the moment he joined the Giants justifying baseball's richest contract, $43.75 million over six years. "I'm going to give it a shot. I know there's going to be times when I'm going to cut down. I might hit .390, .380. And there's going to be times when I'm going to get very, very hot again. Hopefully, I'll get hot at the right time, and I won't get cold enough where I drop back down to .300."

He giggles at that last thought, a concession that slumps inevitably, often inexplicably, follow hitting streaks.

"Sometimes I don't think it's possible. I don't understand how Williams did it to begin with. It's hard, really hard. Everything's got to fall into place. But I've got a chance to do anything. It might seem impossible, but nothing is impossible."

A triple crown isn't impossible, either, maybe even an 11-pointed crown, with his numbers floating all over the chart of National League leaders one-third of the way through the season: batting average, home runs, RBIs, runs, hits, doubles, triples, slugging percentage, on-base percentage, walks, total bases.

Nor is a third MVP or a fourth straight Gold Glove farfetched, with a season's worth of diving, leaping, highlight-film catches in left field already.

But most of all, he believes that he and Matt Williams and Will Clark and Robby Thompson and the rest of the resurgent Giants aren't about to swoon this June or fade from first, but rather have a good chance of reaching the World Series he just missed twice in Pittsburgh.

Bonds is enjoying his new team and has tales to tell about each player. Some may even be true.

Like the ones about young center fielder Darren Lewis, who watches Bonds for signals on how to position for every hitter. Bonds' vision is so good — "A lot better than 20-20," he says — he can see the catcher's signs from left field so he knows what kind of pitch is coming.

"D Lewis works his butt off. He listens to everything I tell him, and my dad and Willie (Mays) tell him," Bonds says. "But he's easy to fool. One day, I told him we put some gin in the coffee and he says, 'Yeah, it tastes like gin,' and he starts acting dizzy. There wasn't any gin in that. And he likes ginseng tea, so we told him we put some caffeine in it, and he starts bouncing around and goes 2-for-4 that day. He says, 'Yeah, that's great. I've gotta have that every day.' I said, 'D, that wasn't caffeine. That was you.'"

Bonds keeps mental files on every ballplayer. He studies all the hitters and memorizes their tendencies so he knows how to play them, all the pitchers so he knows how to hit them, all his teammates so he knows what they're likely to do at the plate and in the field in different situations.

"It just amazes me how many

Bulls closer to winning third straight NBA title

Associated Press

CHICAGO — Scottie Pippen made his mark, taking up from where Michael Jordan left off, and the Chicago Bulls are one step away from becoming the third team in history to win a third straight NBA title.

"Damn the critics," said Pippen, who could have added full speed ahead, after leading the Bulls to a 96-88 victory over the New York Knicks Friday night.

The Bulls now move on to the NBA Finals, beginning Wednesday in Phoenix. The Suns beat the Seattle SuperSonics 123-110 Saturday in the seventh game of the Western Conference finals.

Pippen is sure to be a major factor.

His 3-pointer with 1:01 left clinched the verdict in the "delayed sweep" as the Bulls won four straight after losing the first two games of the series and put an end to New York's season of heightened expectations.

His 24 points in the finale included seven in the final period, when Jordan was missing his last six shots. That made the difference as the Bulls became the ninth team to come back from a 2-0 deficit to win an NBA playoff series.

"It has been rumored," said coach Phil Jackson of Pippen's alleged inability to step up when needed. "Scottie had a terrific series after being labeled a pussyfooter."

In damning the critics, Pippen said "I've got two rings, so I think I arrived two years ago."

It all began with the migraine headache in final game of the 1990 series when Detroit eliminated the Bulls in seven games. And the label was fueled last year when Xavier McDaniel slugged Pippen in the first minute of the first game of the semifinals against the Knicks.

But Pippen put it all behind him in this series.

It wasn't only the clincher in which Pippen lifted his game to new heights. After being ejected in Game 2, Pippen promised the Bulls would be back.

He scored 29 points and hit on 10-of-12 from the field in the start of the comeback in a 103-83 victory in Game 3 when Jordan was 3-of-18 from the field. Jordan took over in Game 4 with his 54 points but Pippen scored 28 points and had 11 rebounds in the pivotal 97-94 victory in Game 5 in New York.

Once again he stepped up big in Game 6, scoring 16 of his points in the second half. He also had seven assists and six rebounds.

"Scottie was simply an all-star," Knicks coach Pat Riley said. "He played as well as I've seen him. We just didn't have an answer to him."

Patrick Ewing, who scored 26 points, including 13 in the last quarter to keep the Knicks in contention until Pippen's 3-pointer, said "Pippen's play was really the key to the series. When we shut him down in New York, we won the first two games. We just couldn't do it the rest of the way."

Pippen refused to discount the performance of Jordan, who had 25 points, 17 in the first half. Jordan had only four free throws in the final period, usually known as "Jordan Time."

"I never realized Michael was not in his game. He does a lot of things out there so you don't have to look at the scoreboard to see how many points he has. The best game you can get out of Michael is when he takes them out of their defense, things open up for the rest of us."

Jackson realized Jordan was tired and under pressure from the gambling controversy.

"I thought Michael Jordan was exhausted, but I couldn't find time to rest him. I think there was tremendous strain on Michael Jordan with all the controversy."

That involved the book that came out Thursday by Richard Esquinas, who wrote that Jordan lost over $1 million to him in golf bets.

Jordan remained silent except to issue a statement admitting he played golf with Esquinas and lost money. But he added, "I can assure you that the level of our wagers was substantially less than the preposterous amounts that have been reported."

Prior to his vow of silence, Jordan made it known that his ultimate goal now is to win three straight titles, something such contemporary stars such as Magic Johnson, Larry Bird and Isiah Thomas failed to accomplish.

The only teams to win three in a row were the Minneapolis Lakers (1952-54) and the Boston Celtics (1959-1966).

Athletes stand behind Jordan

Associated Press

Professional athletes see little wrong with Michael Jordan's betting on his golf outings, perhaps because they have done the same thing themselves.

MVP Charles Barkley of the Phoenix Suns, who once was fined $5,000 by the NBA for an off-hand wager with Mark Jackson about who would take the last shot in a particular game, shrugged off Jordan's golf adventures, blaming the flap on the media.

"You have to do your own thing and not worry about the press and not worry about image and things like that, because everytime you let them, they're going to rub you and rub you and rub you right through the ground." Barkley said.

"These people are not your friends. That's why I just do my own thing and don't worry what they say about me."

Barkley, who appears in a Nike ad on television in which he declares, "I am not a role model," admitted he often makes golfing wagers, although he would not say for how much.

It's hardly unusual for players walking 18 holes on a summer's afternoon to wager a bob or two on a particular putt or maybe the whole day's score. The difference with Jordan was that the bets were for more than a bob or two.

Golfers Jack Nicklaus and Greg Norman saw nothing wrong with that.

"I just think if a guy wants to gamble something, and he's making $40 million a year, that's his business," Nicklaus said. "He's been a pretty darned good athlete and pretty clean in all he's done. To have something jump all over him like this, it's not right."

Norman said as long as Jordan's bets were on golf, not basketball, there was no problem with it. "He's got money he can afford to lose," he said. "It's not like he's endangering anybody's life. What he does with his money is his own business."

Norman said he often gambled on golf when he was an assistant pro in his native Australia.

"When I was making 28 bucks a week, the only way I got to go out and play golf was through gambling," he said. "It was a great catalyst for me because I learned how to play under pressure. There were times when I was playing that I couldn't afford to lose."

Jordan's financial condition permits him wider latitude. "What he does with his money is his own business," Norman said. "If he wants to go out and lose a million bucks playing golf, so be it."

According to San Diego Businessman Richard Esquinas, Jordan lost that much and more. In his book, "Michael and Me: Our Gambling Addiction ... My Cry For Help," Esquinas claimed the Chicago Bulls star was down $626,000 and that the debt mounted to $1.25 million on a double or nothing bet.

That is not exactly $2 Nassau.

On Saturday, Esquinas said told a Greensboro, N.C. radio station that he lost $98,000 to Jordan in a round at Pinehurst before the $1 million round in California. "Looking back, we were definitely sick," Esquinas said during an interview broadcast on WDNC-AM from his home in San Diego. "But we were having fun.

"The wagering hadn't gotten totally out of control, but we were playing for serious money."

In a prepared statement Friday night, Jordan denied that his bets reached the levels Esquinas wrote about. "Because I did not keep records, I cannot verify how much I won or lost," the statement said. "I can assure you that the level of our wagers was substantially less than the preposterous amounts that have been reported."

Jordan has not spoken to the media for a week, maintaining his silence after revelations that he had visited Atlantic City between the first two games of Chicago's playoff series against New York. He reportedly lost $5,000 on that trip but disputed reports that he was in the casino until 2 a.m.

Esquinas insisted his version of his bets with Jordan was accurate and offers as evidence checks from the NBA star.

SUNS: Barkley takes over in 3rd

(From 1B)

here. Well, we're having the last laugh. There's nothing better in the world than proving people wrong. I don't worry about what people think about what I do. I'm their worst nightmare."

Barkley and Jordan talked on the phone before Saturday's game.

"He told me to go to the basket, and that's what I tried to do," said Barkley, who had trouble sleeping Friday night, waking up every couple of hours from nervousness and anticipation.

"I woke up four or five times last night," he said. "Anybody who can tell you he can sleep is lying."

Sonics coach George Karl wanted his team to play "wild and crazy and out of control," and they did, often to their detriment as they sent the Suns to the foul line 64 times, from where they made an NBA playoff record-tying 57 free throws.

Boston also had 57 free throws in a playoff game against Syracuse in 1953, but that game went four overtimes. The previous record for a regulation playoff game was 54 by St. Louis against Minneapolis in 1956.

In the deciding game of this series, the Suns switched strategy by starting 6-foot-10 Tom Chambers instead of 6-7 Richard Dumas for the first time all season to overcome their difficulty with taller teams.

Chambers also gave Phoenix another outside threat — his 3-pointer sparked a 12-2 start in opening four minutes — but his presence on the court was far more significant than his 17 points and six rebounds.

"I was surprised and I was pumped," Chambers said. "It's very rewarding. All season I wanted to contributed and finally I got my chance when it mattered most. It's been a long time since I felt this way."

The Sonics, who played the maximum number of games in all three of their series, didn't fade easily. A 3-pointer by Nate McMillan at the first-quarter buzzer was part of a 13-2 run that gave them a 36-33 lead.

Barkley, virtually a spectator in the opening quarter with four points, went 6-for-8 in the second period and had 16 points and nine rebounds by halftime as the Suns led 57-51. Kevin Johnson scored nine of his 13 points in the half from the free throw line and finished with 22.

Seattle's Sam Perkins made some incredible shots, including one falling down backward and another on a turnaround moonball, for 13 points in the half while Shawn Kemp added 12. Eddie Johnson led the Sonics with 34 points.

"I thought that was a joke," Johnson said of the free throws. "The whole series we were allowed to be physical, and in the seventh game Charles gets 22 free throws. I just don't understand."

Barkley ruled again the third period, hitting a jumper to start it off, making two free throws and then drawing Kemp's fourth foul on a powerhouse move to the basket. Barkley raised four fingers and shouted "four" to the crowd, knowing full well the importance of taking Kemp out of the game.

A few minutes later Barkley drew Kemp's fifth, dropped two more free throws and finished the quarter with 13 points as the Suns led 91-80.

"I made up my mind in the third quarter that I was going to take over," Barkley said, "because they killed us every (other) third quarter."

No one could stop Barkley now as he hit drives, a 3-pointer and more free throws while also sweeping the boards to let the Suns cruise to the finish.

These Suns are more than Barkley, as the Bulls are more than Jordan.

The Sonics, who got this far by blending talents without the benefit of a dominant player like Barkley or Jordan, couldn't overcome that singular ability by one man to take over a game.

Rudd motivated by crowns in 10 straight seasons

Associated Press

DOVER, Del. — Ricky Rudd doesn't need to be battling for a NASCAR championship to keep firm sights on a goal — even if he does plan to switch teams next year.

"I've got a record that I plan to keep on going and that is I've been able to win a race every year since '83," Rudd said, making a statement that only Dale Earnhardt and Bill Elliott also can make. "Points — that's not a motivator anymore because we're so far back."

Rudd, winless through the first 11 races of 1993 heading into Sunday's Budweiser 500 and 20th in the season standings, has three career victories at Dover Downs International Speedway, third among active drivers.

Rudd's last victory was here in September, a 47-second win over Elliott. The victory was his third in three seasons with team owner Rick Hendrick.

He will have Hendrick's Chevrolet on the inside of row eight Sunday for the $820,000 event on Dover's high-banked, 1-mile oval. Ernie Irvan has the pole on a track-record speed of 151.541 mph. During two days of qualifying, Irvan, Rudd and 26 other drivers broke Mark Martin's September 1988 record of 148.075 mph.

Rudd has only two top-five finishes this season, his best a third in the road race at Sonoma, Calif., three weeks ago. He is 568 points behind leader Dale Earnhardt in the Winston Cup standings with almost two thirds of the season left, but like anyone planning to change teams he already must look ahead.

"I'm working real hard to put my own team together next year," said Rudd, 36. "I started this sport with my own team. We did it ... with really no financial help, no sponsorship. It was very hard going that route."

But he has a limited, if prominent, role as part of somebody else's team.

"I guess I'd like to have a little more say in the managing side of it," Rudd said.

DOVER, Del. (AP) — The lineup for Sunday's $820,000 Budweiser 500 NASCAR stock car race, with residence, type of car and qualifying speed in mph:

Stewart overcomes wind, chill in Dublin

Associated Press

■ PGA Memorial

DUBLIN, Ohio — Payne Stewart, seeking his first PGA victory in almost two years, rode an eagle into a three-shot lead Saturday in the third round of the Memorial Tournament.

Stewart's 35-foot, double-breaking putt on the par-5 15th served as the centerpiece to the day's best round, a 5-under-par 67, that left him at 202.

"It was a tougher golf course today," Stewart said of the 20 mph winds that made the 55 degree temperatures seem much more chilly.

It certainly proved to be much tougher for Stewart's playing partners in the last group on the Muirfield Village Golf Club course, Fred Couples and Greg Norman.

Couples, tied with Stewart for the 36-hole lead, took a double-bogey from the water on 14, shot 73 and found himself six shots off the pace.

Norman, one back after two rounds, blew to a 74 and was eight behind.

In addition to the comfortable lead over Paul Azinger, Stewart's 54-hole total was 14 under par and put him within range of the tournament's scoring record of 16 under, set in 1987 by Don Pooley.

And, Stewart said, he may have to beat it in Sunday's final round if he is to acquire his first title since the 1991 U.S. Open.

"I can't just go out and play Paul Azinger," he said. "It isn't match play. I have to continue to try to play the golf course. I can't shoot 72 and win."

Billy Glasson, with a 68, was third at 206, four behind going into the last 18 holes of the chase for a winner's check of $252,000.

Davis Love III and Jim McGovern, each with a 69, were at 207.

Couples was tied with Corey Pavin, Vijay Singh of Fiji, Brad Faxon and Dudley Hart. Singh shot 68, Pavin 69 and Faxon and Hart each had 70.

While Couples' and Norman's problems were more prominent, in that they helped Stewart to his lead, they were hardly unique.

For example, there was tournament host and founder Jack Nicklaus. He required 42 strokes to play his first nine holes, shot 81 for the day and trails the field at 226.

Stewart, who has two runner-up finishes and two thirds this season, took sole control of the top spot with a 34 over the front side.

He bogeyed 10 after driving into trouble, but got the stroke back with a 25-foot putt on 13.

The long eagle putt on 15, which first broke left, then right, put him three in front and he went to four with a 15-footer on 17.

■ PGA Seniors

SCARBOROUGH, NY — Bob Charles, who is celebrating the 30th anniversary of his British Open championship, shot a 4-under-par 66 in heavy rain Saturday to move into a four-way tie for the lead after two rounds of the $550,000 NYNEX Commemorative.

The 57-year-old from New Zealand, arguably the best left-handed golfer ever and this tournament's honoree, had the day's best round over the Sleepy Hollow Country Club course and shared the lead with one round to play with Larry Gilbert (67), Tommy Aycock (69) and Chi Chi Rodriguez (70).

Dick Rhyan, the first-round coleader with Bobby Gaona at 65, had a 72 Saturday over the soggy 6,505-yard course and dropped into a six-way share of fifth place with Bob Wynn, Simon Hobkay, Gary Player, all with 68s, Japan's Isao Aoki (69) and Jim Dent (71).

Gaona fell apart with a 75 for 140, while defending champion Dale Douglass struggled to a 76 for 144.

"I'm in a chase for it now," Charles said. "I thought I blew myself out of contention yesterday."

Ritzman, King remain tied

EAST LANSING, Mich. (AP) — Alice Ritzman, seeking her first win in 15 years on the LPGA tour, remained tied with Betsy King after three rounds of the Oldsmobile Classic on Saturday, both at 9-under-par 207.

They were one stroke ahead of Solheim Cup star Trish Johnson, a two-time winner this season, and fast-charging Jane Geddes in the $550,000 event which sets the stage for the LPGA Championship next week at Bethesda, Md.

King and Ritzman each shot 1-under 71, as did Johnson, who resides in Swansea, Wales.

King, who joined the LPGA tour in 1977, and Ritzman, who joined a year later, have had varying careers. King has won 28 times, including the U.S. Women's Open in 1989 and 1990. She's earned more than $4 million in her career and is second only to Pat Bradley on the career money list.

Last year was the first in which Ritzman's winnings topped $200,000.

Craddick race good for Texas

Longtime State Rep. Tom Craddick of Midland is again being mentioned in political conversations as a leading prospect for the Republican nomination for governor in 1994, a possibility that is simultaneously titillating and sobering.

Think of it! The governor hailing from Midland, the cradle of Texas Republicanism. A lot of Texans would agree that such a development would be in their own best interest.

Craddick told John Powers of the Reporter-Telegram's Austin Bureau in late May that he is giving the possibility of a run for the Governor's Mansion "some thought." We think that is entirely appropriate.

While Gov. Ann Richards may be pleasing special interest groups throughout Texas, we have to concur with Craddick's assessment that she has failed to provide the kind of overall leadership that the Lone Star State currently needs and most Texans have come to expect. Craddick has been openly critical of her appointments (remember Lena Guerrero at the Railroad Commission and Bob Krueger at the U.S. Senate) and her poor performance in getting the school funding crisis resolved in a manner acceptable to the majority of Texans.

The political reality, insiders say, is that Richards likely would face a tough re-election campaign if someone of Craddick's political stature were to challenge her for the state's top job.

Craddick is no johnny-come-lately to state politics. He was first elected to the Texas Legislature in 1969 and has been overwhelmingly re-elected since. His long service in the legislature has also earned him a degree of respect in the State Capitol that would be hard — if not impossible — for any political newcomer to match. He's a knowledgeable, hard-working state representative who, according to one colleague, "has his hands on the pulse of the people of this state more than Ann Richards does."

Over the years, Craddick has become an effective, outstanding state legislator who strives to carry out the will of his constituents in Austin. In fact, that would be the one drawback to him seeking the governorship. If he won, Midland would gain by being the "hometown" of the governor, but at the same time would lose a knowledgeable, effective legislator who has worked long and hard to gain the political stature he and Midland enjoy today.

That is likely what would tip the scales in favor of a run for the governor's office by Craddick. Texas needs the political leadership of a wise, hard-working, proven administrator. And, yes, Tom Craddick fills the bill.

ANOTHER VIEW

Clinton energy tax will kill economy

The tax-heavy, anti-growth economic plan approved by a narrow margin in the U.S. House of Representatives will drain the life out of America's economic engine should it pass the Senate.

Fortunately, President Clinton's chances of getting Senate approval of the measure are poor. House Democrats gave Clinton a narrow victory Thursday (May 27) with the passage of his $496 billion economic package.

The plan faces stronger opposition in the Senate for good reason. Congressional members on both sides of the aisle fear the plan's $270 billion in new taxes over five years will suck the life out of an already weak economy.

The tax increases will not bring down the deficit any more than the taxes in the 1990 budget deal did. That was when President Bush reneged on his "Read my lips" pledge of no new taxes in return for a congressional promise to cut the deficit.

Although Clinton's budget purports to balance deficit reduction between spending cuts and tax increases, almost 90 percent of the total comes from tax increases.

What's more, those new taxes will punish the most economically productive sector of society. The top 6 percent of taxpayers will bear three-quarters of the burden. Their higher tax rates will encourage them to use tax shelters to preserve their standard of living rather than invest in ventures that would create thousands of new jobs.

But a broad-based $71 billion tax on almost all sources of energy, including oil products, natural gas, coal and electricity would hit every American in the pocketbook. Any household or farm or factory that buys U.S.-made goods or uses heating or air conditioning or gasoline will pay the new tax on energy. This complicated levy — riddled with loopholes for every special interest except the middle class — ought to be dropped.

A government $4 trillion in debt — and borrowing a new $1 billion a day — ought to be cutting spending rather than trying to raise more taxes so it can spend more.

Officials preach environmental gospel

WASHINGTON — Vice President Al Gore and Interior Secretary Bruce Babbitt are booked for breakfast every Thursday for the rest of the Clinton administration.

Anderson

That's when they meet in Gore's White House office for environmental bible study — though their focus is on saving the planet's species, not souls. Biodiversity, ancient forests and "nitrogen-fixation cycles" are on the menu for the administration's high priests of conservation, who sometimes commune more as ecologists than as politicians.

By earmarking this time for the environment, both men are fulfilling a goal they set at the outset: Don't allow the environmental agenda to be crowded out by the crush of everyday crisis management.

"I think Gore has gone through the inevitable transition of becoming vice president," Babbitt told us during a recent interview. "All of a sudden he's in the midst of Bosnia, most favored nation, arms control. . . . He has played a full vice-presidential role. Very early on we talked about his transformation and how it was we were going to make all this stuff work . . . we settled into a Thursday morning meeting at the White House."

At one recent breakfast, Gore and Babbitt, joined by a handful of top officials that included EPA Administrator Carol Browner, talked about the need for cutting government bureaucracy and red tape — for the sake of salmon preservation. Babbitt noted that a salmon travels through 23 different regulatory jurisdictions during its natural cycle from birth, to the time it makes it out of the high mountains of the West, to its trek down the rivers a thousand miles into the Pacific, and then back to spawn where it was born.

During the 12 years of the Reagan-Bush administrations, "cutting red tape" were often code words for permissiveness toward corporate polluters, not for saving a salmon species. A weekly White House breakfast devoted to the environment would have been deemed heretical under Ronald Reagan or George Bush, who dubbed Gore the "ozone man" during the campaign to mock his best-selling environmental treatise, "Earth in the Balance."

During the Bush administration, the nonchalance of Interior Secretary Manuel Lujan was embodied in a remark about red squirrels. Protection of the squirrels was blocking the construction of a federal project in Arizona, and Lujan was getting frustrated. "Nobody's told me the difference between a red squirrel, a black one or a brown one. Do we have to save every subspecies?" Lujan asked.

Babbitt and James Watt, Ronald Reagan's first Interior secretary, are intriguing bookends for the last dozen years. The distances between the two, the standard-bearers of their respective administrations, are as vast as the Grand Canyon itself.

The Grand Canyon is Babbitt's favorite place on earth. He can deliver college lectures on its geologic history, and he was raised not far away. Watt's comment disgusted Babbitt in the way an Italian might be disgusted by a visitor to the Sistine Chapel who asks, "Who put those smears on the wall?"

Babbitt and Watt do share one thing in common. Both read a mandate into their readings of the Bible. For Watt, it was the Second Coming, which he envoked in 1981 to downplay the need for conservation: "I don't know how many future generations we can count on before the Lord returns."

Tonsorialitis causes barbers to drop letters

No, I'm not sore about the president taking his business to another another tonsorial artist. If he thinks Cristophe of Beverly Hills can give him a better trim than Lary of Little Rock, O.K., he's the president, it's his hair, more power to him.

Baker

That's Lary with only one "r," please. It used to have two, but my bride said "Larry" looked overstuffed with alphabet. I said to her what did she mean "overstuffed with alphabet," and she said it just looked too old-fashioned.

I said what's wrong with old-fashioned. Next she'd probably want me to quit having True Detective and the Police Gazette lying around the shop, I said, just kidding her, you know, the way you do with your bride after you've been married 20 or 30 years so she knows how to take a joke.

So she said no, she's serious. The modern thing in the barbering art is dropping letters from your name, she says. Look at Cristophe of Beverly Hills. Drops an "h" and his second "r," quits calling himself Christopher, and he can not only raise the price to $200 per trim, he can find plenty of saps who'll pay it to show they can afford a barber who's barbered his own name.

All right, I hear you, I hear you. You want to know what it was like cutting Clinton's hair before he became famous, speaking of which, did you see the pictures of him at West Point in the Sunday paper? I don't want to sound like sour grapes, but I want you to tell me your own personal opinion of that haircut.

Would you personally pay $200 for that haircut? The man's ears are hardly visible, can you believe it? The president of the United States, and he looks like he's got no ears!

Of course what do you expect from Hollywood barbering culture? They've been hiding the ears out there ever since Clark Gable's, which, if you remember, looked like red sails in the sunset the first time they photographed him in the dark with the light behind him.

I used to tell Mr. Clinton, even after he got to be governor, and he'd come in here and say, "Just a light trim, Larry" — I still spelled it with two "r's" in those days — "just a light trim, Larry, scissors on the side."

And I'd say, "Governor, the public don't trust a governor when they can't see his ears. If you want to get re-elected you'd better let me use clippers."

The problem, see, is that when he was governor, and even before, come to think of it, Clinton's ears were awful close to the side of his head, instead of sticking out sort of flaplike, like your average set of ears. So when he'd come in and say, "Scissors on the side," I'd always say: "No sir, governor. Clippers on the side, and don't ever forget it if you want Arkansas to go on believing in you."

One day he came in here with Gore and that Stephanopoulos fellow and said to me, said, "Larry, these two good old boys both need a trim, clippers on the side." Well, they both got ears about the size of cabbage leaves and this Stephanopoulos knows it because he says no, he doesn't want clippers on the side, he wants scissors on the side, otherwise he's not going to have the trim.

But Gore says he's always wanted to know what he'd look like without all that hair for his ears to hunker down and nest in, and this is a good time to find out since his buddy Mr. Clinton has ordered him barbered clippers on the side. Stephanopoulos saved him, telling Mr. Clinton it was all right to have a little campaign joke at Gore's expense, but this one giving the whole country full disclosure of Gore's ears could mean the loss of four states in the Electoral College.

I kind of liked young Gore. He's got a nice jaw, doesn't he? The other night I was telling my bride I thought Gore would probably be president one of these days because he had the jaw for it, and she said, "Well, if he doesn't make it to the White House, he can always drop the 'r,' become 'Goe of the Nation's Capital' and make a fortune as barber to the stars."

Come to think of it, I could do that myself, couldn't I? If the stars really settle into Washington as the bride says they're bound to. She read that Barbra Streisand now spends all her time reading Thomas Jefferson and watching C-Span I and C-Span II.

My bride says this sounds to her like a woman getting ready to be the first female Ronald Reagan, which reminds me by the way, you don't by chance happen to know who did the Gipper's hair dyeing, do you?

GEORGE WILL

President slays dragon with peanut butter

CHEVY CHASE, Md. — David Will is in his 11th month and in no mood to be trifled with. This prodigiously articulate infant, whose first word was "Iowa," or something like that, is making his thoughts clear. He is thinking that he has about had it up to here with the food in the Will house.

Will

Pureed pears, smushed carrots, a pink paste purporting to have once been chicken — all have received negative reviews from David, as have macaroni and cheese and Spaghetti Os. A negative review consists of fistfuls of the stuff flung to the floor beneath his high chair, which rests upon a plastic sheet manufactured for such contingencies and bearing the onomatopoeic name SplatMat.

So this evening David is to be tempted with an American classic: peanut butter and jelly. And David's father, ever didactic, will enliven the dinner hour by telling a fable, as follows:

Once upon a time, in the glistening capital of a great nation, there stood, high on a hill, a domed building called the Capitol, in which toiled men and women who came from far and wide to deliberate about the public weal. But, lo, the land was menaced by a dragon called Deficit, the conquest of which would require more revenues from the provinces. Or so said the mightiest man in the city, the President, who lived in an alabaster mansion.

Alas, many who deliberated beneath the dome on the hill were loath to do his bidding, saying: Verily, the dragon is dangerous, but so, to us, are taxes, which make the masses querulous.

And as the moment of decision drew nigh, the President found his legions on the hill insufficient. How, he wondered, might a few more souls be won to his side to make a majority? 'Twas then his counselors, like many Merlins, uttered the magic words: "Peanut butter."

The President did not tarry. Flying to his inkwell he plucked up his pen and drafted a Proclamation that breathed the martial ardor for which dragon-slayers are justly renowned:

"Whereas, pursuant to the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended, and pursuant to subheading 9904.20.20 of the Harmonized Tariff Schedule, which provides that whenever, in any 12 month period beginning August 1 in any year, an aggregate quantity of 775,189 kilograms (shelled basis) of peanuts, ground nuts, shelled or not shelled, blanched or otherwise prepared or preserved (except peanut butter) provided for in HTS subheadings 1202.10, 1202.20 and 2008.11, has been entered, no such products may be entered during the remainder of such period, peanuts in the shell are charged against the quota on the basis of 75 kilograms for each 100 kilograms of peanuts in the shell;

"Whereas, peanut butter and peanut paste imports are being or were practically certain to be imported . . . in such quantities as to render or tend to render ineffective, or materially interfere with, a program or operation of the U.S. Department of Agriculture with respect to peanuts, or to reduce substantially the amount of any product processed in the United States from peanuts in the same manner as imports of peanuts, shelled or not shelled, blanched, or otherwise prepared or preserved;

"Now, therefore, I, William J. Clinton, President of the United States of America . . . do hereby find and proclaim that the circumstances requiring the exemption of peanut butter and peanut paste provided for under subheading 9904.20.20 no longer exists. Accordingly, I hereby terminate the said exemption."

And so, two days later, the President's legions became a majority, the taxes were passed and everyone, including Deficit the dragon, lived happily ever after.

PR chairman thanks Midland for success

I would like to take a moment to personally thank all the people who made my job as public relations chairman for Project Graduation such an easy one. The spirit of giving and cooperation is alive and well in Midland and the level of caring about our community and young people is at stratospheric heights.

To Charlie Spence at the Reporter-Telegram, who gave FULL use of the newspaper and staffers Bill Modisett, Gary Ott, Allen Howland, Mary Hardin, Bill Beauvais, Brian Adamcik and Linda Anderson, my deepest thanks for all your caring.

To Theresa Brown and Suzanne Wynn and the entire staff at Big 2 News thanks for working with our schedules and being there.

To Gayle Hill, Scott Jones and especially Eva Fawcett for patience in filming the PSAs and for getting those kids up for your early morning show.

To the Confederate Air Force Airpower Museum and Bob Rice for lending the facility for the PSAs and Barbie Woods for helping us coordinate the filming.

To John Thomas and George Igo at Continental Airlines for generously donating tickets for the party and for their support of the Midland community.

To Doug Cole, KRIL, and Ron Jeffries, KCRS, for PSAs and talk shows.

To Bruce Partain for extending deadlines to get a story in "City Life" and to Cindi Mladenka for help in two stories in "M Magazine" and covering the party.

Special thanks to The Midlander and Paul Thorpe for use of the club. We would not be able to have such a fun and successful party without that wonderful facility.

And thanks to everyone who generally made my job an easy and pleasant one the second time around. I could not have done this without all of your support. Please give next year's PR chairman as much cooperation and Project Graduation will be a continuing tradition of success and community spirit.

Many problems exist with criminal justice

In recent weeks, the stories that have appeared concerning the criminal justice system here have just hit around the edges. After being employed in this system for years, both on the law enforcement and corrections side, I know first hand the many problems that exist.

On the law enforcement side, you have people doing their jobs to the very best; they make their arrest, then the cause goes to the D.A.'s office or county attorney for prosecution. Then the defendant goes before the judge. This is where the true problem begins. Depending on the offense and "who" the person is, more times than not, they get probation. Let's take a good look at the county probation department here. Did you, the taxpayer, know that the adult probation department of Midland County is $6 million behind on collecting fines, fees and restitution? (See Volume 13, Pages 775 and 776 of the Commissioner's Court record.) Yet each month our county commissioners keep right on shelling out money to them. Why when the probation department, which is large in size for this county, (does the court allow the probation personnel to) continue to collect their salaries and let the offenders continue to do what they have always done while the probation department fails to do their job?

It is so bad, the judges are now having to offer bonuses to collect these fees. I find it strange that bonuses have to be offered to get this job done.

The taxpayers are also paying for renovations to a restitution center that was built new in 1989. If the people took the time to read the original contract between the county and the adult probation department they would find numerous violations (from what the contract says the commissioners have broken their own contract). When I asked one of the commissioners about this problem, the statement to me was "we will get our money back in seven or eight months." Well, folks, how about getting some of that $6 million in back payment and fees?

C.G. Reed
Midland

EDITOR'S NOTE: Chris Davis, assistant agency director for the Midland Judicial District Community Supervision & Corrections Department, and Felipa Cordero, administrative assistant, acknowledge that assessments due the Midland County Adult Probation Department as of Thursday totaled $6,385,877.24, but added that of that amount, only $1,679,232.38 is actually past due. The assessment total includes attorneys fees, court costs, ordered restitution, restitution center residential fees, probation fees and other costs involved in the probation system. Those costs actually are to be paid out over several years time, they noted.

Scientists go too far in genetic engineering

Scientists have now gone too far, applying genetic engineering to create deviant life forms. At Texas A&M, researchers have developed a maroon "bluebonnet," thereby thwarting God's natural plan. But more ominously, what's next? Blue "oranges?" "Yellow" blueberries?

These dabblers in nature's secrets remind one of what Cato said in the Roman forum: "You can lead a horticulture, but you can't make her think."

What does Richards do with money from lottery?

About a year ago, Gov. Richards was urging me and my fellow Texans to vote for the lottery so that we could raise money for Texas education. We passed the lottery and now we have Gov. Richards urging us to pass more legislation to raise more money "for Texas education."

Wondering what had happened to the money raised by the lottery, I called my state representative, Tom Craddick, and asked him what happened to the lottery money. He told me that the money goes to the governor's office all right, but she is using it to fund pay raises for all her state employees, not for education like we were led to believe.

My question is this: If I vote for the governor's new revenue increasing measures, how do I know that the money will go to the classroom where the kids are and not to another bunch nowhere near my kids? Frankly, I am getting a bit skeptical about the true motives of our leader in Austin. Is she really trying to help all Texans or just the Texans that work for the governor? I wonder.

Many candidates have trouble telling the truth

Recently in the U.S. Senate, history wasn't made but a revolutionary chapter may have been started. The Rules Committee heard petitioners argue that Sen. Bob Packwood, R-Ore., was not duly elected because he allegedly lied to the voters. It was charged that he would not have been re-elected had they known the truth about two decades of sexual harassment of women.

In the unlikely event this petition would advance to and be upheld by the Supreme Court — such portent!

Remember, there was another candidate who won that election who had trouble with the truth. His romantic objects were (1st) Hillary, (2nd) Gennifer, and (3rd) us.

Community organizations could make a difference

With the logistics of the state budget being finalized, churches, businesses, and civic organizations in many ways are going to have to assume some of the responsibilities for funding schools and human services. I would especially like to address in this letter the issue of personal assistance services for individuals with disabilities. Personal assistance services allow individuals with disabilities to obtain the necessary care to live in their own homes. Without these services, family members would have to care for the individuals or the individuals would have to reside in institutions. The legislators who we have elected have restored funding to these services at current levels.

However, 20,000 to 35,000 people will remain on waiting lists for personal assistance services. Some of these individuals will "fall through the cracks" and resort to nursing facilities.

Entities in our community, such as churches, civic organizations, and businesses could make a difference in how these services are delivered. The issue is definitely a financial one; however, community organizations and gathering dedicated volunteers could be partial solutions. Although, during these busy times, these two solutions may not be realistic ideas.

The issue of personal assistance services will not be going away very soon. In fact, thousands of people will be desperately trying to continue or to begin living in the community.

Local dealers aren't to blame for gas prices

I would like to take this opportunity to respond to Rayburn H. Williams' letter that was printed in the Sunday, May 23, Reporter-Telegram.

It seems that every few weeks I see yet another letter from one of our outraged area citizens claiming that gas and service stations in this area are gouging the public with outrageous fuel prices. I too am very frustrated by pricing in this area, but I am most frustrated by people complaining and always blaming the dealers as the ones that are getting rich at the community's expense.

I have enclosed a copy of several of my invoices for fuel purchased during that time that most of the outlets in this area were posting $1.149 for regular unleaded fuel. These invoices show my cost for this fuel at $1.089 which leaves a profit of six cents per gallon for a gross profit margin of 5.2 percent. I would be interested to hear from any other retailers in our community that operate on such low profit margins.

With the average purchase in my station of roughly 10.2 gallons that leaves me with a profit of 61 cents per self serve customer. This is less that than what the average convenience store makes on a single soft drink. It is much more expensive to market gasoline than soft drinks yet I don't see anyone writing letters complaining about what they make.

For years now I have been trying to get answers as to why gasoline sold to stations in our area is so much more expensive than in other parts of the nation. The Permian Basin has only two refineries. They are consistently within a few tenths of a cent of each other. Since nearly all dealers in this area are bound by contract to our suppliers we have no way to shop around and are at their mercy.

I agree with many of you in saying that our gas is priced too high relative to the surrounding area but I assure all of you that it is not your local dealers that are reaping the benefits of these higher prices.

Bone marrow drive has very successful turnout

Good things happen — right here in Midland.

Recently at First Presbyterian Church, the National Bone Marrow Foundation conducted a drive to identify potential marrow donors. Registration requires donation of a blood sample that enables tissue testing. We had hoped for 100 people — but we got 146 new registrants!

There were some very special stories on that very special day: Our first registrant was a beautiful young women whose fiance is a marrow transplant success story. A man who has been a marrow donor came to check on our progress: "Tell them it's not bad at all to donate, it's much easier than they tell you!" A Hispanic couple drove up from McCamey especially to participate.

Our thanks to many people: volunteer phlebotomists Debbie Madden and Betty Primeaux of Texas Oncology worked with warm, cheerful professionalism. Gail Rowland and the rest of the staff at First Presbyterian Church made us comfortable and welcome, and Gail especially was involved in a lot of telephone work in the days preceding the drive. The Reporter-Telegram's report was very helpful; over 20 percent of the registrants came in response to last Thursday's article.

We especially thank the 146 people who registered and the others who came but were disqualified. It is exciting to think that one of our people may save a life!

Our policy on letters

The Reporter-Telegram recognizes the "Letters to the Editor" format as an important forum for citizen opinion and encourages participation of all readers. To that end, we have set as few rules as possible. However, we must have some, and they are:

- Letters must be signed and include a street address and daytime phone number for verification.
- They should be no more than 350 words in length. While some lengthy letters are published, we reserve the right to edit when necessary due to space limitations.
- Only one letter per month per writer can be published.

Because we cannot research and verify all information in letters, by publishing them we neither imply nor guarantee the accuracy of information stated by writers.

Letters should be sent to: The Editor, Midland Reporter-Telegram, P.O. Box 1650, Midland 79702.

SPEAKING OUT

GOP, some Dems pass legislation to help Texas

By Rep. Tom Craddick

State Rep. Tom Craddick of Midland is chairman of Ways and Means, serves on the Calendars Committee, and is chairman of the Republican Caucus in the Texas House of Representatives. This is the first of two parts on how the prospect of the 1994 elections benefited Texans in the just completed session of the Texas Legislature.

While school finance dominated the headlines, Republicans and like minded conservative Democrats did pass other legislation that will greatly benefit the people of Texas.

At election time, everyone wants to be tough on law and order. The prospect of facing the voters in two years encouraged Democrats to join Republicans and vote to build 20,000 new state jail beds to house nonviolent offenders. These new jail cells will help relieve the prison overcrowding problem and allow the state to hold the most violent offenders for longer periods.

The amount of real time dangerous criminals will spend behind bars was greatly increased. Rapists and other violent offenders will now be required to spend twice as much time incarcerated. Capital offenders (murderers not sentenced to death) will be required to serve a minimum of 40 years before becoming eligible for parole.

Perhaps contemplation of the 1994 elections reversed some attitudes about "drug free school zones." Allowed to die in 1991, legislation to stiffen penalties for drug dealers operating near our schools breezed through the most recent session.

Voters will have the opportunity to ban a state income tax in the November election. The desire to be re-elected removed "scales" from the eyes of one avid supporter of a state income tax. The lieutenant governor, who two years ago proposed a state income tax, not only dropped his opposition to a constitutional ban on a state income tax, but now advocates voter approval before such a tax can be levied. Since Republicans have introduced similar legislation in every session since the mid-1970s, we were cautiously surprised when one of our staunchest opponents suddenly became an ally. Whatever his reasons, Republicans rejoice that for once this Democrat leader heard the voice of the people.

Another change of heart, likely prompted by the 1994 elections, was the willingness of the Senate to reform our civil justice system. In 1991, all product liability legislation approved by the House died in the Senate. This session, however, both Houses passed a bill requiring personal injury cases be heard in the appropriate jurisdiction. Hopefully this will reverse the trend started by the Alfaro decision that made Texas the lawsuit supermarket of the world.

No other issue during this session prompted as much mail from constituents as APPAC. Begun as a program to research ways to reduce the number of teenage pregnancies, it turned into a state financed program to promote "safe sex" and abortions. Fear of the voters' wrath encouraged many Democrats to join with Republicans to stop spending taxpayer dollars on this program that was rather offensive to families all across Texas.

Republicans also led the way in slowing the growth of state spending. Nine Republican members of the House Appropriations Committee scrutinized every expenditure. The result was a House budget proposal $2.7 billion under the Senate version. Ultimately, the Senate version prevailed after the comptroller's accounting tricks were used to find additional funding. But, true to their election year pledges, the Democrats were able to supress their national urge to increase taxes. It helped when they saw their president getting roasted for abandoning his campaign promises and promoting just about every kind of new tax possible.

Looking toward the next election helped some Democrats to realize the value of a Republican bill that discontinues the state practice of paying its employee's share of social security. This small, but important, change will save Texas taxpayers over $200 million in the next five years.

Cuz's Travel Service has nice ring to it, huh Mr. President

Grizzard

Without a lot of references to Travelgate — other than to explain to those who don't keep up with the news that it was about the Clinton administration massacring the White House travel staff and putting one of President Clinton's cousins temporarily in charge — I'm going to write about my own cousins today.

In the past, I've written about my parents, my grandparents and various aunts and uncles. But I've never had much to say about my cousins, and I'll limit this to first cousins for brevity's sake.

I counted and I have nine living first cousins, seven on my mother's side and two on my father's. I don't see my cousins that often, but we remain family.

I thought I would name all my cousins and describe a bit about each one. They are all distinctive. They are all very nice people. Some have profound effects on my life.

And an aside to Northern smart alecks: I would like to point out I never married any of the females. Cousin-marrying went out in the South after the birth of whomever it was who invented instant grits.

My first cousins in no particular order:

MELBA: She's the only one of my cousins who is younger than me. We grew up together in our hometown of Moreland, Ga. One day when we were barely out of our diapers, a local bull got out of its pen and began to chase us.

"Run for it, Melba!" I screamed.

Melba picked up a rock and hit the bull between the eyes with it and it ran away. Melba saved my life. As far as I know, however, Melba never made it to Pamploma. Good news for the bulls there.

MARY ANN: Melba's sister. She was very smart and married the smartest boy in Moreland, Stanley Cauthen. They had lots of smart children. Now they also have lots of smart grandchildren. We're getting old, Mary Ann. Seems like only yesterday, you were quashing the Santa Claus myth for us younger kids.

LYNN: She's where my looks went.

JIM: Lynn's handsome brother. A nearby women's college named Jim the best-looking man at the University of Georgia when he was a student there and invited him to a banquet in his honor. Legend has it, he wore white socks with his tuxedo to the banquet. Jim never married until he was in his late 40s. He's another one of my smart cousins.

GERRY: She babysat me when I was a child. If sweet and kind had faces, they would have hers. She taught me to play Monopoly, but where was she when I invested in all those limited partnerships?

GLENDA: Gerry's sister. We were in a store in Moreland one day when I was 8. Glenda was 12. There were some grapes sitting on a counter. "Like grapes?" Glenda asked me. "Love 'em," I answered.

"Why don't you take one," she suggested. "They won't mind."

I pulled off one of the grapes and ate it.

"You know you're going to hell for stealing that grape," Glenda said. That was the last thing I ever stole. Thanks, Glenda.

SCOOTER: Gerry and Glenda's brother. Great fisherman, great hunter, and former county drag-racing champion. He taught me to throw a curve ball. They hated the dreaded hook in high school in '63 and '64.

MICKEY: She also babysat me as a child, and is why I've always had a thing for redheads, which, incidentally, has cost me about as much money as I lost in those limited partnerships.

MARY JEAN: The classiest lady I've ever known. She wouldn't serve instant grits to a liberal Yankee Democrat.

It should be obvious I've been blessed with some great cousins. And I would like to take this opportunity to say publicly to all of them, "I'm sorry I haven't mentioned you more often in this space and in others, but that doesn't mean I don't love all of you."

And if I had a travel agency I wouldn't hesitate to put a single one of them in charge of it.

Cuz's Travel Service. Sort of has a nice ring to it, doesn't it, Mr. President?

BONDS: Elusive World Series possible this year, Giant says things during the course of one game he does to help us win," pitcher Bud Black says. "Just the subtlest of things a fan might not even notice. It might be something in the dugout that Barry notices that somebody's doing or something he says about a certain pitcher or even about our pitchers. He comes in sometimes and gives us tips. He brings a lot to the ballpark besides great play."

Ballplayer, prankster, showman, Bonds has bit parts in two upcoming movies and he's been on "The Arsenio Hall Show" a couple of times, getting enough of a taste of Hollywood to want more.

"Playing baseball, pursuing my acting career, those are things I feel dedicated to, that I'm going to give 100 percent into. Anything that you do in life, you're a student of that. In our profession you want to make it to the Hall of Fame. If I don't ever make it to the Hall of Fame, at least I know that I got an 'A' in my class for whatever time that I was there and I did the best I can and I can walk away from it happy with myself.

"I'm at my peak right now, and maybe I can play another four years at this pace. To hit, run, steal, you can't do that forever. I can cut down on my stolen bases. But, see, when I feel like I can't do it all, then I don't want to do it at all. If I can't run and I can't hit for power and average, then I don't want to play no more. Or I've got to work harder to do it. One of the two."

Bonds, at 28, clearly is happy with himself right now even if he's never fully satisfied with his own performance. Only a few other free agents — Reggie Jackson with the Yankees, Dave Winfield with Toronto, Jack Morris with Minnesota and then Toronto — have made such an impact on their new teams.

Nike, which helped transform Michael Jordan into a bigger-than-life megastar, is poised to try the same with Bonds. His image soon will loom like a real giant on a building in San Francisco.

Yet Bonds isn't quite sure he wants that much fame.

"Michael Jordan is trying to get his life back," he says softly, as if he's thought about this a while. "It's been taken away from him for so many years. I don't know. I've never been a Michael Jordan-type person.

"I've had long talks with Michael Jordan and Magic Johnson and other great athletes. They always say, 'Barry, now that you've put yourself on a different level, everybody expects you not to have fun. You're not supposed to enjoy the success that you're having. Everybody expects you to be a humble person.'

"For instance, let's say one of my players came in and hit a big home run and was all happy and going, 'Yeah, dude.' But if I came in and did it, it's like, 'Oh, there he goes talking about himself.' The public enjoys it, but sometimes it's a threat to your own players. So you're supposed to hit a big home run and not say nothing. And then root for everybody else stronger than you can root for yourself at times."

Bonds' ambivalence about his off-the-field duties is evident in the way he reacts to requests for his time, one day shutting everyone out, another day accommodating all requests. He is the same person shouting in anger in the locker room hours before a game about an unflattering story, godfather Willie Mays quietly supportive by his side, and then a couple of days later earnestly giving a clinic at Candlestick Park for 10,000 Little Leaguers.

Asked to judge himself among characteristics on a personality poll, he checks off honest, trustworthy and charitable, not mentioning the $60,000 he donated to the Adopt a Special Kid foundation or the support he's given other groups.

Smart?

"It depends what day it is," he says with a smile.

Selfish or greedy?

"It depends what day it is."

Cocky or big ego?

"Cocky, no. Ego, yeah. You've got to have ego."

Arrogant or obnoxious?

"Oh, only to my close friends," he says laughing, "and they don't take it to heart."

He acknowledges that he's moody but believes he is misunderstood by the public because his personality is "filtered through other people."

"So for me to worry about it is really irrelevant," he says. "I don't care what the public perceives me as because it's not me giving it to the public."

And is he bothered by his former teammates in Pittsburgh and other teams, who do know him and have been ticked off by him at times?

"To an extent. They like you or they don't like you. But what it comes down to is, 'Do they respect you?' That's the main thing. You're not there for everybody to like you. You try to do your best, but everybody has his own different personality and his own way to do things.

"I might isolate myself away from the other players to do the things that I'm doing on the field. 'Oh, you're on your own program,' that's what they say. That's the big thing: 'Barry's on his program.' That's not my own program. That's the program that I'm trying to do to keep my success level up, which will improve everybody else's success level. If I do well, that means you're going to do well. If I get on base, steal second, then I'm putting myself in a position to help you out. I'm not thinking about myself."

As much as he claims to ignore criticism, he obviously is not immune to it, as he showed with his profanity-filled outburst in the locker room a couple of weeks ago over a magazine story.

"I get stung by it when all I try to do is perform my job to the best of my capabilities, and when I'm performing it I'm getting back criticism," he says. "I'm getting paid to perform my job. What am I doing wrong in my performance that they're not happy about?"

His bosses, Giants president Peter Magowan and manager Dusty Baker, have no complaints.

"Was he a bargain?" Magowan says, considering the question. "I don't think I've ever seen anybody play the game of baseball better than this guy has played it for the first two months of this year. I used to say the best player I ever saw was Willie Mays and I never expected to see anybody play better than Willie. But I don't think Willie ever played at this level for as long as this."

Says Baker: "The thing I like about Barry more than anything is that he enjoys playing. Besides the money and all, he just loves to play. The only thing I see he doesn't like is to lose. Those two things there, mixed with the combination of talent and intelligence, make a great ballplayer."

Bonds has kind memories of Pittsburgh manager Jim Leyland, calling their much-publicized squabble in spring training in 1991 "a misunderstanding" that is best forgotten. But that scene, precipitated by Bonds' petulance over losing a salary arbitration case and his decision to snub the press, was captured on videotape with Leyland yelling, "I've kissed your butt for three years! If you don't want to be here, then get your butt off the field!" Shown endlessly on television, that moment still defines Bonds' arrogant image.

Leyland and Bonds put that behind them, even if the media and public didn't, and grew closer in two division championship seasons. When Bonds got off to a horrible start in the playoffs last season, he unburdened himself to Leyland in a closed-door session that sparked a resurgence in the final games.

"I knew it was my last year in Pittsburgh," Bonds says, "and I'd never let my team down all season, and I was wondering, 'How can you be there for 162 games and then disappear like a ghost in seven games?' I just wanted to talk to a friend."

Students win top honors at academic decathalon

■ Garden City High School students and teachers spent days practicing for the state academic competition.

By Myra Lee Salcedo
Staff writer

GARDEN CITY — Teamwork is a foregone conclusion for students in a small high school setting who have grown up together. But working closely together — and knowing each other's academic fortes and faults — helped to earn six Garden City High School seniors top honors at an academic decathlon.

"Sometimes we know each other too well. It's like we are brothers and sisters," said Jennifer Jones, a senior on the three-member team which won first place in state at the Texas Association of Community Schools decathlon in San Marcos. The small schools are classified as 3AAA and under.

The seniors vied with 34 teams from schools across the state. Jennifer's team, included Chris Schreader and Charles Blalock. The team — consisting of an "A," "B" and a "C" student — also placed first at the regional contest held at Odessa College. The students answered science, mathematics and social studies questions.

Each of the state winners won $1,600 and additional cash awards at the regional competition.

"Every question was a unique challenge. Most of the questions were pretty tough. Winning was a real team effort," said Linda Jones, a 10-year-veteran of teaching secondary science at Garden City and one of the coaches for the school's academic decathlon team.

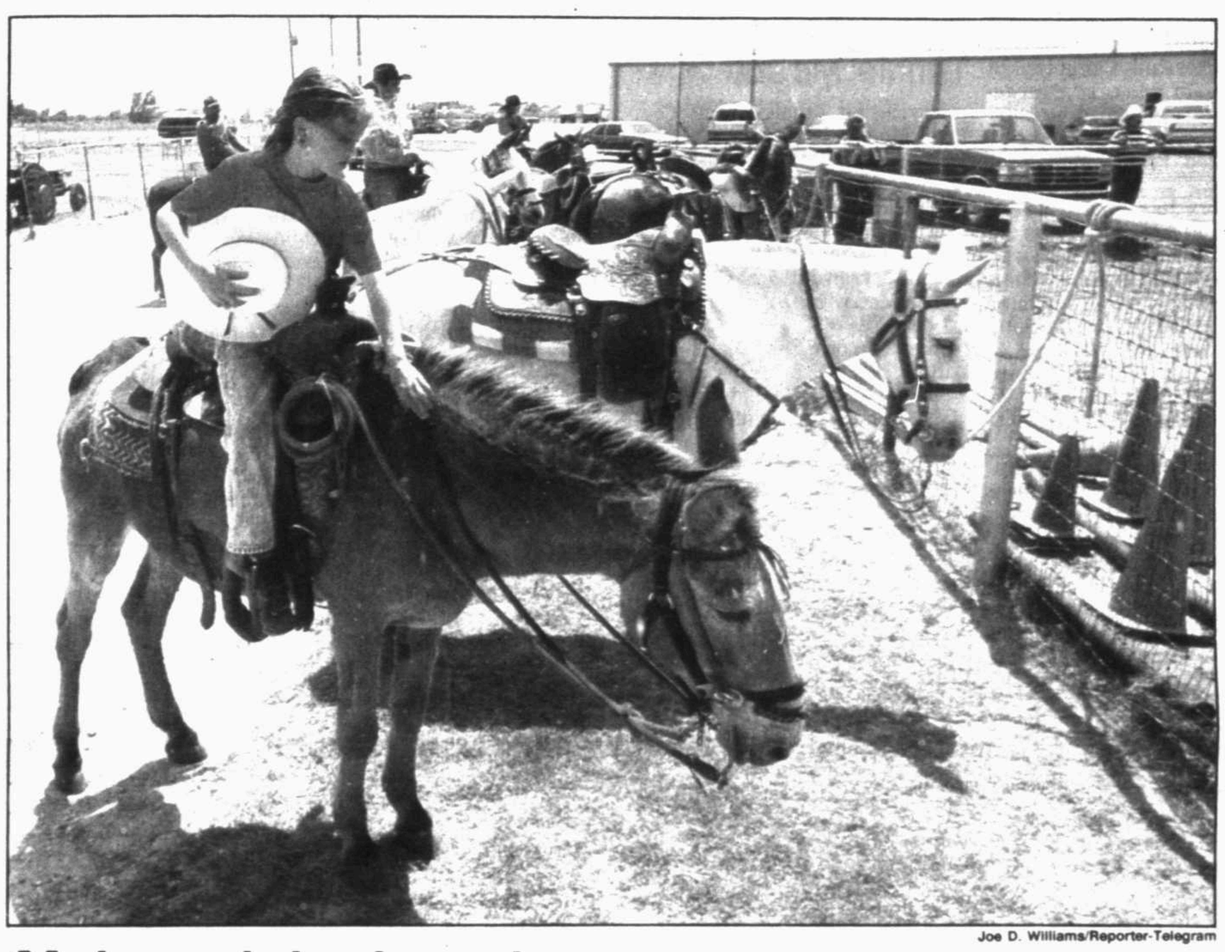

Ms. Jones coordinated the team's coaching. "There were actually 10 teachers coaching the students on and off," she said. "We involved the whole faculty since the questions covered sev-

Program expands wellness

■ Local organizations have united in a partnership to help citizens who need health care assistance.

By Ed Todd
Staff writer

Health care for adults through preventive medicine, screenings, examinations and treatment is being expanded in southeast Midland's largely minority and low-income community through an innovative partnership.

Midland's Memorial Hospital and Medical Center, Casa de Amigos, Community and Senior Services, and the United Way of Midland have joined in partnership to help improve the "quality of life" for those Midlanders who cannot afford healthcare and who, in the main, are without medical insurance.

"Through their participation in the United Way," said United Way Executive Director Jane Wolf, "all Midlanders can be thrilled, pleased and delighted to have a part in this partnership."

The partnership's program, to be implemented in July, is targeted for south and east Midland, which takes in about 18,000 people — Blacks, Hispanics, Anglos — or about 17 percent of the almost 107,000 people in Midland County, a one-town county.

"As a community, we have known of the (medical) need for years," Ms. Wolf said. "Those residents have serious health problems, many of them chronic."

Aside from their inability to "buy" healthcare, many of the residents are without transportation to take them to a clinic or hospital. For those, included sufferers of diabetes and hypertension, who neglect their health until their illnesses are critical, their first exposure to health care may be in the hospital's Emergency Department or in the hospital proper. By that time, health conditions may have severely deteriorated.

And that is when the "high cost" of medicine is billed to the Midland taxpayers, who pay for indigent medical care within the community.

While the preventive-medicine aspect of the partnership is designed to reduce medical costs paid by the taxpayers, it is primarily focused on ensuring the good health of low-income adults.

McMillen Estate presents Hospice with major gift

Staff report

Hospice of Midland has received a $400,000 gift from the Pauline McMillen Estate.

Nations Bank representatives, Jody Hale and Wayne Esslinger, presented Hospice officials with the gift last week. The late J.W. McMillen was a city councilman and mayor of Midland from 1950-54. Mrs. Pauline McMillen died April 3, 1992.

"Hospice of Midland receives the monies on behalf of all the terminally ill patients in Midland County," Hospice officials said. "The funds will be placed in the endowment fund and, by doing so, it will help to fund our present patients as well as provide a base for patients who will come to us in the months and years to come."

Hospice care provides a team of well-trained professionals, including physicians, nurses, home health aides, counselors, chaplain, and social workers, as well as volunteers, to assist the family with complexities of caring for the patient.

Hospice also furnishes durable medical equipment, such as hospital beds, walkers, wheel chairs, oxygen equipment and various other items that the patient may need.

Additionally, Hospice of Midland provides medical supplies and dietary supplements. Patients are referred by their physicians, and patients continue

GARY OTT

'Normal' becomes bizarre when you start telling it

I'm not sure when the thought first occurred to me, but at some point during the past week I began to feel guilty because my life has been what some would call "normal."

Ott

I graduated from a "normal" high school with "normal" grades while participating in the "normal" extracurriculiar activities. After that, I attended a "normal" college where I majored in a "normal" field, setting the stage for a "normal" job once I received my "normal" diploma.

In other words, I'm a "normal" kind of guy.

Now, you might be thinking, "Well, Gary, what's wrong with that?"

Nothing, I suppose, except I keep getting this nagging fear that "normal" really means "boring."

There have been no terribly unusual — or, better yet, bizarre — occurrences in my life, the kind of events that make a person arch his eyebrow and with envious wonderment say, "Wow, you really did THAT?"

Instead, I've always done what I was supposed to do, what I was expected to do, what I was told to do. If you wrote out a perscription for how your average red-blooded American male should live his life, it would more or less describe my very existence.

Oh, there have been a few isolated cases where I strayed from the straight and narrow. I once hitchhiked from Wichita Falls to Shreveport, La., for example. That was pretty unusual, mainly because most people I've known try to leave Shreveport, La., rather than get there . . . especially in the middle of August when it is hotter than a half-chewed jalapeno.

Another time, many years ago, after having consumed a bathtub full of cheap whiskey, I managed to find my way onto a small stage in an out-of-the-way pub where I proceeded to sing backup vocals — uninvited, of course — for Gary P. Nunn on his classic hit "London Homesick Blues."

So, yes, over the years it is true that I have had my moments.

But they are few and far between. Indeed, when viewed in its entirety, my life lacks that certain charm and pizzazz one tends to associate with an Ernest Hemingway novel. It doesn't exactly leap off the pages, begging to be emulated.

DEATHS

Harold Norris

Graveside services for Harold Norris of Midland have been set for 4 p.m. Monday at Fairview Cemetery with Ben Condray, pastor of Alamo Heights Baptist Church, officiating. Ellis Funeral Home is in charge of arrangements.

Norris died Friday at his home.

He was born July 15, 1927, at Lake Victor where he was reared and educated. He enlisted in the U.S. Navy, serving in China and the Pacific during World War II. Following his discharge in 1946, he returned to San Angelo where he married Della Norris on Nov. 27, 1946. He became a bootmaker and worked for Mercer's Boot Shop.

Norris moved to Midland in 1947 and began working for Friday's Boot and Shoe. In 1959, he became owner of Harold Norris Boot Shop which he operated until the time of his death.

Survivors include his wife; two sons, Dennis Glen Norris of Paole, Kan., and Mike Norris of Midland; one daughter, Kathleen Jones of Midland; two brothers, Ronny Rains and Donny Rains, both of Midland; two sisters, Gwen Miles of Belton and Nona Slaughter of Midland; five grandchildren and numerous nieces and nephews.

The family requests memorials be directed to the American Diabetes Foundation, 3404 W. Illinois, Suite 207, Midland, Texas, 79703.

Elberta Young

Graveside services for Elberta Young of Midland are set for 10 a.m. Tuesday at Resthaven Memorial Park with the Rev. Bob Porterfield, pastor of West Kentucky Baptist Church, officiating. Ellis Funeral Home is in charge of arrangements.

Mrs. Young died Saturday at a local hospital.

She was born Feb. 3, 1909, in Dallas County where she was reared and educated. She was a member of First Baptist Church and the Senior Citizen's Club.

She had resided in Midland for 45 years.

Mrs. Young was preceded in death by her husband, Benjamin Young in 1978, and a daughter, Jeri Sides.

HEALTH: Medical care expands

vices, said that the coalition is "cost effective" and is a "very cost-efficient" way to expand health care in southeast Midland.

Currently, approximately 250 older Midlanders are treated in the wellness program at the Southeast Midland Community Senior Center, and between 500 and 1,000 adults are treated in Casa de Amigos' on-going medical-care program which is staffed by volunteers.

Both Casa de Amigos and the Southeast Midland Community Senior Center are funded in part by the United Way of Midland.

In its first year of operation, the new adult health-care program is projected to treat 2,100 individuals, Ms. McCreary said.

"The demand is so great for multiple services," Ms. McCreary said. "Right now, we kind of piecemeal the system together. We send them to the Emergency Room or we send them to a volunteer clinic here. And for many of these people with chronic illnesses, they are not going to be successful in ever learning and managing their own chronic illness or being as effective in managing their chronic illness until we provide them some continuity of care."

The health-care program for adults at Casa de Amigos and the Southeast Midland Community Senior Center will be akin to the pediatric-obstetric Community Health-Care Clinic operated by Memorial Hospital for indigent expectant mothers, young mothers and their children.

"We are drawing from our experience at Community Health-Care Clinic with the maternal and child-preventive (medicine) services," Ms. McCreary said.

Currently, the 30-year-old Casa de Amigos, which serves poorer Midlanders through various programs, provides limited health-care services, food for the hungry, continuing-education programs, dental care for children, and fellowship.

"Most of our clients have jobs that do not provide health insurance," said Ms. Cordes-Pitts. "They know they can pay their rent and utilities," but paying for physician's services, medication, and follow-up services is often beyond their financial grasp.

"They tend to prioritize their children's needs and to procrastinate or put off their own needs. So, when they come (for treatment), they usually are feeling pretty badly," Ms. Cordes-Pitts said.

The more common illnesses among the clients are diabetes among the Hispanics and high-blood pressure among the blacks.

"The Hispanic population has a higher incidence of diabetes due to diet" associated with cultural influences, Ms. Cordes-Pitts said. "And the the black population has the higher incidence of the high-blood pressure again due to diet" related to high salt intake.

And those incidences of illness are not "labeling" or stereotyping "so much as it is just a cultural trend."

The preventive medicine programs at Casa de Amigos and the Southeast Midland Community Senior Center is to detect potential problems and head them off through medication and wholesome eating habits and lifestyles.

Ms. Cordes-Pitts cited medical complications which have been treated at the Casa de Amigos clinic: minor "toe cuts that resulted in amputation in diabetics because they did not take care of themselves," and athlete's foot which spread to above the knee.

"It's not that they have done anything wrong," Ms. Cordes-Pitts said, "but it's the pressures they feel in living — maintaining a job, maintaining a family, all of the costs involved on limited income." In prioritizing needs, the parents often put their children's needs first and postpone treatment for themselves "as long as possible."

Ms. McCreary said that "minority populations have high incidents of several kinds of cancers." Black men in the United States have the "highest incidence" of prostate cancer," she said, "and many of the men in that age (adult) group don't seek health-care at all.

"Adult men are not known to be real avid seekers of that kind of preventive healthcare" even through there are screening tests available for prostate cancer. However, the preventive-medicine program may encourage the men to seek examination in hopes of detecting any cancer "at a much earlier stage" and effecting treatment.

A 1990 study at the hospital's Allison Cancer Center indicated that 42 percent of newly-diagnosed cancer patients came from this part (southeast) of the community" — the program's "target-population" area, Ms. McCreary said.

In the program, Memorial Hospital will provide the nursing staff, educators, case managers, and diabetic educators on Tuesday and Wednesday afternoons at Casa de Amigos. Physicians-in-residency from the Texas Tech University Health Sciences Center will examine the clients. Clients who have specialized problems may be referred to the Midland physicians who do volunteer work at Casa de Amigos on Tuesday and Wednesday nights.

Casa de Amigos' per-patient charge is $5 free per visit if the patient can afford the charge. Otherwise, there is no charge.

A similar program but without the residents will be conducted at the Southeast Midland Community Senior Center on Monday and Thursday afternoons. Scheduling will be flexible.

"We are not only going to decrease the (health-care) costs," said Ms. McCreary, "but we are going to increase the quality of life for those people" who will be receiving ongoing, continuous care.

Care will include health maintenance, physical examinations, routine screenings such as mammograms and Pap smears, physical assessments, screening of blood pressure, cancer screenings, and blood testing.

The nursing staff will "provide some episodic care for colds, flu, lumps and bumps" which "can become an acute illness for someone with a chronic illness," Ms. McCreary said.

Connie Glover, director of Community and Senior Services, noted that the medical services provided by the partnership is not free.

"We will exhaust every payer source for these services," Ms. Glover said. "If they (the clients) have any type of insurance or Medicaid or Medicare, then those services will be billed to that individual" for payment. But no one will be denied (medical) service because of their inability to pay for it."

HONORS: Students win decathalon

eral subjects."

David Blalock, a member of the second team, which took fourth place at regional and third place at state, noted that students arrived about 45 minutes before school on many days to practice for the competition. David, who lives 20 minutes from the high school, made an even greater effort to arrive at the school early.

David, Charles' cousin, was on the three-member team which included Jenny Phillips and Marty Pearce.

The state winners recently returned from a trip to Austin where they were recognized for their achievement by state senators.

Most of the seniors allowed that the trip was anticlimatic since it followed closely on the heels of a senior trip to Los Angeles. The California trip featured visits to Disneyland, Universal City Studios, Magic Mountain and the beach.

"The guys headed for the beach," Jennifer said, laughing.

"We tried to anyway," David said, nudging his buddies. All of the students bantered and tended to finish sentences for each other while relating a story on how the boys got lost on the way to the seaside.

When asked if Ms. Jones was a tough coach, Jennifer, her daughter, said "only if she's your mother."

Jenny said Ms. Jones was a stickler for punctuality. "She made sure we were there when we were supposed to be there," she said.

The students said their senior class consisted of 21 students this year, in a district of about 300 students. All grade levels meet in buildings on one campus.

A third academic team of their peers — including Kevin Hoelscher, Chris Braden and Warren Wills — placed fifth in the regional competition. Alternates were Matt Seidenberger, Brooke Eoff and Cristy Bryant.

Ms. Jones noted that Garden City students won first place in state at the same competition four years ago.

So, is Garden City becoming a hotbed for "growing" decathlon competitors?

"We wish," Ms. Jones said, noting that some students have already set their sights on winning the regional competition next year.

LETTER FROM COLLEGE

Official summer enrollment begins in MC Student Center

By H.A. Tuck

Tomorrow is the time if you want to enroll for a class or two in the first summer session. Official enrollment takes place Monday in the Student Center from noon until 2 p.m. and 4-7 p.m. Those with time permits have been assigned specific 15-minute periods to report for processing. If you've not pre-registered, you should come to the Student Center between 5:30-6:45 p.m. You'll be processed as quickly as possible.

Tuck

If you have any questions, you can visit the Student Services Office on Monday between 7 a.m.-11 a.m. Some information also is available if you call 685-4501.

Summer I classes, which meet Monday through Thursday, begin on Tuesday, June 8, and end on July 13. Students get off Monday, July 5, for the Independence Day holiday.

Summer II session has registration on July 14 with classes starting July 15 and ending Aug. 19.

Kids' College at Midland College begins its first session on Monday, June 14. Although registration for both Session I and Session II was held a couple of weeks ago, there are some classes which still have openings. Many of the sections are completely closed, but others can take some youngsters.

Kids' College is for children who have completed first through sixth grades this spring. Many of the classes are designed for first through third or fourth through sixth graders. The classes in Session I begin June 14 and end June 24. Session II is July 12-22. Each session has three classes each afternoon, Monday through Thursday, so it would be possible to take a maximum of six classes, three in each session.

If you've just moved to Midland, this is a way for your children to meet some other youngsters this summer, plus give them something to do. Kids' College also is great for children, stepchildren or grandchildren who might be visiting Midland during the summer, most of whom will be saying something like "I'm bored!" soon after arrival.

We can't list the classes which still have openings, since they are changing all the time. So we suggest you visit the Continuing Education office in the Administration Building. Late registrations for Kids' College are continuing this week, Monday through Thursday from 7 a.m. to 5 p.m. each day. Call 685-4518 for some information. Cost is $30 per class.

Activities and assistance from the Midland College Business and Economic Development Center and its Procurement Center are little-known, but could be valuable money-makers for local businesses or would-be entrepreneurs.

The BEDC can provide free incubator services for a new business, providing guidance, help with financing, accounting, management and all the myriad of details which help make a business successful. Whether you are struggling to keep your business afloat or have an idea for a business you'd like to start, the BEDC likely can be of service to you . . . without cost.

The Procurement Center may be even less visible. But consider that the United State Government is the world's largest purchaser of goods and services from the private sector and you get an idea of the potential market. The many governmental agencies constantly seek qualified vendors . . . many of which need to be minority-owned. The college's procurement center maintains weekly listings of goods and services needed by governmental agencies, including bids being sought. While the paperwork can be intimidating, the procurement center can help you get through the regulations.

Still another service is in helping you discover the potential for doing business overseas. The BEDC gets lists each week of goods and/or services which are being sought by foreign governments or private, foreign firms. Just last week, for example, Singapore was looking for propane gas burners for hot air balloons, Mexico was looking for polyethylene film, Thailand was looking for cattle rawhides, France needed high-pressure water-blasting pumps, Argentina was looking for generators, reciprocating pumps, rotary pumps, and centrifugal or submersible pumps for oilfield use, and Saudi Arabia was looking for valves for oilfield and petrochemical plants.

Somewhere in West Texas there should be suppliers for all those items.

This is just a tiny bit of what the BEDC and its Procurement Center offer. To learn more, visit their offices at the Midland College South Facility, 201 West Florida, or call 684-4100 for an appointment. It could be just what your business needs to get off the ground!

The Midland College Cheerleading Squad needs some male athletes to complete its roster. The 1993-94 squad has selected its female members, but needs several more males. Members of the squad do receive scholarships. If you are interested in knowing more, contact Tommy Ramos, team sponsor/coach, by calling 685-4502.

This year's Cheerleader Camp is scheduled July 26-29 from 9 a.m.-noon all four days. The camp is conducted in the Physical Education Building for youngsters from first through 12th grades. Registration fee is $40 if paid by July 15, $50 after that. MC Cheerleaders will conduct drills on cheers, chants, tumbling, and dance routines. You can call the same number as above for more information or visit the Student Services office for a registration form.

A lot of Continuing Education classes start this week, some of them non-credit versions of regular summer credit courses.

You could enroll in Aerobics, Business Law (two sections), Computer Operating Maintenance (two sections), Country/Western Dance I, Hunter Education, Management-Human Relations, Spanish I, Beginning, Intermediate or Advanced Typewriting/Keyboarding, or Word Processing Training.

There also are two Defensive Driving Courses offered at Midland College each week. The course bulletin also includes a $2 discount coupon for enrolling in one of these DDCs.

You should visit the Continuing Education office in the Administration Building or call 685-4518 to register. You can even use a Visa, MasterCard or Discover card either in person or by telephone to pay your fees.

H.A. Tuck is public relations director for Midland College.

Greenwood Elementary School has been awarded a Certificate of Exceptional Effort from the Texas School Safety Honor Roll Program recognizing its support of safety education and accident prevention.

The honor roll program, sponsored by Texas Safety Association in cooperation with the Texas Education Agency, is the only state recognition program that covers all aspects of school safety education and accident prevention.

The Honor Roll Program assists schools in meeting the intent of Texas accreditation standards (Principals 3 and 10) relative to safety, promotes coordinated efforts for safety throughout the school system, encourages programs for reducing or eliminating accidents involving students, and enables each school to objectively analyze its own safety activities.

During the 1992-93 school year 1,556 schools from 356 districts across the state participated in the program.

Texas Safety Association is a non-profit, non-governmental, educational organization whose members work in government, private industry and as individuals to prevent accidents and needless loss of life and property.

Cathie Tinney has been appointed as director of graduate studies at the University of Texas of the Permian Basin. She replaces Terryl Anderson who is returing full-time to the classroom.

"Dr. Tinney is uniquely qualified for this position and brings a broad background of experience to support of duties of the office," said University President Charles Sorber upon announcing Ms. Tinney's appointment.

Added Sorber, "We appreciate Dr. Anderson's dedicated and able leadership in the Graduate Office for the past several years. She has done an outstanding job."

As director, Ms. Tinney will administer the University's master's degree programs and develop the Sponsored Projects Office. She also will continue to teach marketing and management classes.

Before joining the UTPB faculty in 1989, Ms. Tinney taught marketing classes at Saint Louis University (Missouri). She holds degrees from the University of Minnesota (Minneapolis) and South Dakota State University.

Graham hospital official offers support to Beaman

By Ed Todd
Staff writer

GRAHAM — Frank Beaman, the 32-year-old indicted hospital administrator whose management skills helped save McCamey Hospital & Convalescent Center from bankruptcy, has been described as one of Texas' "brightest and best" hospital administrators.

"Frank Beaman is one of the brightest and best hospital administrators in the state of Texas," said Harold Wilbanks, chairman of the board of Graham General Hospital, which Beaman manages today.

Wilbanks said Beaman, who joined the Graham hospital last year in ending his three-year tenure in McCamey, "has already made significant contributions to Graham General Hospital and this community in the 10 months he has lived here.

"The board of directors of Graham General Hospital is 100 percent supportive of Mr. Beaman," Wilbanks said.

The hospital is a city-owned, 35-bed complex.

Beaman was indicted on June 2 by an Upton County Grand Jury in Rankin for theft from the hospital. The case was presented to the grand jurors by 83rd Judicial District Court District Attorney Albert Valadez of Fort Stockton.

Beaman was charged with stealing $16,511 in cash and taking property valued at $2,015 from Doug Hopkins, chairman of the board of the McCamey Hospital District. The hospital is supported by tax dollars.

Hopkins declined to comment on Beaman or on the case.

However, Beaman's lawyer, Andrews attorney Steven Clack, said that he is certain that Beaman will be acquitted of the charges.

"It's unfortunate that this bright and talented young man who has done so much for the community of McCamey has had these charges leveled against him," Clack said. "We will be seeking a speedy trial and have every confidence that Mr. Beaman will be cleared. We are looking forward to our day in court."

McCamey is an oil-production and ranching community of 2,400 people 70 miles southwest of Midland.

Graham, a ranching, farming and oil-production community of 9,000 people, is about 200 miles northeast of Midland and south of Wichita Falls.

Last year, when the McCamey hospital celebrated its rise from near bankruptcy to a stable, upbeat operation, Hopkins said that the hospital's turnaround was due to "good management, good tax revenue, and a good doctor."

The physician, Dr. Ernie Lamar Sandidge, is "fantastic," Hopkins said. And the complex has a "good medical" staff.

At that time, Beaman had noted that the McCamey "community wanted this facility, and they supported it during tough times — doing the things that were necessary to turn it around."

Agents seize rugs from Dallas firm targeted in smuggling

DALLAS (AP) — A rug importing company is suspected of illegally smuggling more than $5 million worth of Iranian carpets into the United States.

U.S. Customs agents seized 675 rugs and hundreds of business documents Thursday from the World Trade Center showroom and two warehouses of Feizy Imports and Export Co. Agents believe the rugs were exported from Iran, shipped into Canada and smuggled into the United States.

Since 1987, it has been illegal to import merchandise produced or manufactured in Iran, which held Americans hostage in the 1980s.

Feizy Import and Export and its owner and president, John Feizy, are under criminal investigation, said Connie Fenchel, special agent in charge of the Dallas customs office. No charges have been filed.

Feizy's telephone number is nonpublished and he couldn't be reached for comment Saturday.

In November, he was wounded in the leg when his brother, Gholamali Feizy, 55, opened fire in the World Trade Center showroom, killing another brother, Mohammed Feizy, 57, and wounding business partner Hashem Gharib in the shoulder. Gholamali Feizy then killed himself.

Including its 39,000-square foot Dallas showroom, Feizy Import and Export has seven retail operations nationwide and about 90 employees.

The customs investigation includes all the company's offices, Fenchel said. "It's a national and international investigation," she said.

John Feizy, a U.S. citizen and native of Iran, immigrated to the United States in 1964 and opened his Dallas showroom in 1976. He has sold rugs purchased in the Far East, including China, Pakistan and India.

He also has sold some rugs from Iran, customs officials said.

Last year, customs officials in Champlain, N.Y., seized a shipment of 893 Iranian carpets valued at about $3.4 million that were being smuggled from Canada.

The rugs, which were destined for the Feizy company, had been exported from Iran and shipped through several countries to Toronto, customs officials said. Canada has no embargo on Iranian products.

to see their physician as necessary.

"Hospice of Midland also provides bereavement follow-up for family members," officials said. Grief recovery classes are offered quarterly and several support groups are in place: "Friends Who Care," for widows and widowers; "Rainbow," for children and adolescents; and "Compassionate Friends," which speaks to the needs of parents whose children have died. Individual counseling is also available.

"To each one associated with the McMillen Estate, the board of directors, the staff and the volunteers of Hospice of Midland express our thanks and pledge our daily commitment," officials said.

OTT: When you talk about it, 'normal' sounds pretty bizarre

(From 1C)

Instead, it just sort of lies there like a giant oaf.

This is not to say that I haven't considered behaving in an irreverent and spontaneous manner.

No, indeed.

Over the years I have often dreamed big. There was nothing "normal" about my fantasies.

Don't believe me? Fine. Let me give you three examples of what my life could have been like if only I had possessed the courage to follow my dreams:

Dream No. 1. Join the Peace Corps. It's true. The year was 1976 and I was still something of a bleeding heart liberal, (NOTE: Surely, you remember us. We were those do-gooders from the late '60s and early-to-mid '70s who naively believed it was possible to actually help poor people and, thus, make the world a better place for everyone. Fortunately, we eventually grew up, became cynical and bought BMWs for ourselves). Still, at the time the Peace Corps seemed like a valid option. So I signed up, went through the selection process, was accepted and even assigned to Guatamala, where I was to teach English to the little children. A month before I was to leave, however, I resorted to my old ways. I chickened out. And another chance to add excitement to my life evaporated.

Dream No. 2. Become a lumberjack in Northern California. For some reason, this one took on great significance back in 1972, a carefree time in my life when I was fully prepared to quit college in order to fulfill a dream, any dream. In hindsight, I have no idea why becoming a lumberjack had such appeal, especially since it could result in both sweat stains in the airpits and filthy fingernails, two not-so-minor nuisances I have spent a lifetime trying to avoid. Still, had I pursued that dream — even if it had lasted only a week or two — I might to this day have had something unusual to discuss at cocktail parties. Instead, another fascinating memory faded from my life.

Dream No. 3. Become a guru on top of a mountain. It was the fall of 1973, as I recall, and I had just seen a movie featuring just such a character. He had long flowing hair and a white beard. He would sit in the yoga position for hours at a time, looking wise and serene. Soon word of his great wisdom spread throughout the countryside. People of all ages made the long and winding journey to his home, seeking his knowledge. He never failed them. Day after day, he would answer their complicated questions and through simple, yet poignant, parables he would provide them with the "true meaning of life." I decided I wanted to be like him. So I grew my hair long and moved to a mountaintop. There, I studied and attempted to find solutions to everyday problems. Soon, I was ready. I sent word that my wisdom was now available to the masses. I waited.

And I waited. And I waited.

No wonder I decided to become "normal."

140 Card of Thanks

I want to thank all the wonderful people who stopped on May 29th at Thomason Drive and Loop 250 to offer assistance to my collapsed husband. My grandsons really appreciated your support. Our family would also like to thank the Paramedics. God Bless each of you,
Mrs. Robbie Huddleston

DELIVERY
MOONLIGHTING!
The Midland Reporter-Telegram has several distributorships which need to be filled with responsible individuals.

Often Asked ?????
Is it worthwhile for adults also?
Yes! Our current distributor force is already 90% adult and 10% youth.

Morning newspaper routes are attractive for:
- ADULTS who have F/T jobs, yet want to supplement their income with a steady part-time job.
- MOTHERS who can't justify a small job and daycare, because as a distributor, you do not need daycare!
- STUDENTS needing a part-time job which will work with classes!
- SENIOR CITIZENS wanting regular exercise, added income, or just want to work with people, neighbors and friends.

How much money can I make as a distributor?
Depending on the size of distributorship from $300 to $700 monthly!
Some make even more!

How long does it take?
The actual delivery takes 1-2 hours Monday-Saturday, and 2-3 hours on Sunday, again depending on the size of the distributorship. Also, a few hours a month are needed to collect from subscribers. Many distributors choose to handle some of this by putting envelopes in subsribers'papers. Collecting in person will be necessary though!

When do papers have to be delivered by?
6 a.m. Monday-Friday and 7 a.m. on Saturday, Sunday and holidays.

Do I ever get a day off?
The job requires a 7-day a week commitment. However, distributors do take days off by finding a friend or a family member to substitute a for them!

RESERVE YOUR DISTRIBUTORSHIP NOW!
$100.00 deposit temporary discontinues.

Located in the elegant Museum area of Midland, and surrounded by over a dozen mature oak trees, this large luxurious home reflects the care, and attention to detail that the previous owners have lavished upon it. With new air conditioning systems, ducting, plumbing and wiring to mention just a few of the recent works, this house is in wonderful condition, recently having been extensively refurbished to a very high standard.

The ground floor is perfectly arranged for entertaining as well as comfortable family living with both formal and informal living and dining areas. In fact, ones first impression is that of sheer unabashed pleasure because this house has some very unique features; rich hardwood floors, high ceilings and sumptuous detailing all contribute to the air of this interesting home.

One of the more unusual aspects of this five bedroom house is the 65-foot closed veranda which runs the length of the house. With its flagstones and white-washed walls overlooking the garden and swimming pool, this room is perfect for entertaining large groups, but it is also a cool conduit from which the whole house radiates.

Leading off from the veranda are the formal areas of the front room, with it's marble and oak fireplace and the dining-room which has a magnificent built in hardwood hutch with louvered doors matching the beautiful wood flooring.

The master bedroom suite also leads off from the veranda, featuring a large bedroom with an enormous walk in closet and a gorgeous en suite bathroom.

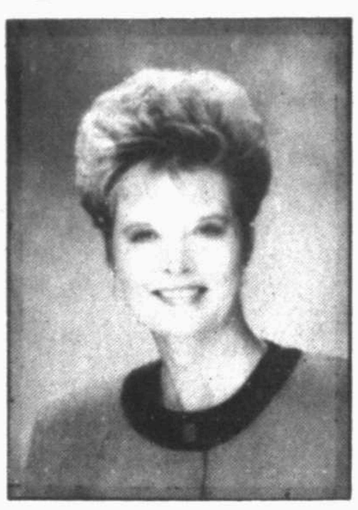

With its skylight and arched window the bathroom is light and airy, perfect for lounging in the large Jacuzzi tub. His and hers vanity areas and a separate shower complete the pretty picture.

There is more to this house than would fit into a single article, so for more information call Roberta Aldridge at Langston Realtors, 682-9495 or visit this beautiful house at 201 S. H during the open house, today from 1 p.m. through 5 p.m..

Learning the Language of Real Estate . . .

At some time you will either be selling or buying a house and may encounter terms that you are not familiar with. This glossary of terms should help you understand real estate transactions by learning the language of real estate.

Jan Melton
Owner/Broker
Re/Max of Midland

Adjustable Rate Mortgage-A term for all loans with rates and terms that can change. These loans are adjusted according to current market conditions.

Amortization-The gradual repayment or retiring of a debt by means of systematic payments of principal and/or interest over a set period so that at the end of the period there is a zero balance.

Annual Percentage Rate (APR)-The annual cost of credit over the life of a loan, including interest, service charges, points, loan fees, mortgage insurance, and other items.

Appraisal-An evaluation to determine what a piece of property would sell for in the current market condition.

Assessed Valuation-The value of real property established for the purpose of computing real property taxes. In general, property is valued or assessed for tax purposes by county and township assessors. The land is usually appraised separately from the building.

Assumption-The act of acquiring title to property that has an existing mortgage, and agreeing to be personally liable for the terms and conditions of the mortgage, including payments.

Balloon-A loan that has installment payments with the remaining balance due in a large lump sum at payment end.

Binder-An agreement formed by the receipt of an earnest money deposit for the purchase of real property to insure the purchaser will complete the transaction.

Closing-The consummation of a real estate transaction, when the seller delivers title to the buyer in exchange for payment by the buyer of the purchase price.

Closing Costs-Charge paid at closing for obtaining a mortgage loan and transferring the real estate title.

Conventional Loan-A loan made with real estate as security and not involving government participation in the form of insuring (FHA) or guaranteeing (VA) the loan.

Credit Report-A report ordered by a lender from a credit bureau to determine if the borrower is a good credit risk.

Deed Restrictions-The standards that define how a property may be used and the protections the developer makes for the benefit of all owners in a subdivision.

Down Payment-The difference between the sale price and the mortgage amount. A down payment is usually paid at closing.

Earnest Money-The cash deposit paid by the prospective buyer as evidence of good-faith intention to complete the transaction.

Equity-The difference between the value of a home and the amount that is owed on it.

FHA-Federal Housing Administration.

Inspection-A review and check of the property to insure that all appliances, plumbing, electrical, and structural fixtures are in compliance with regulation standards.

Interest-The cost paid to a lender for borrowed money.

Mortgage Broker-A broker who represents numerous lenders and helps consumers find affordable mortgages. The broker charges a fee only if the consumer finds a loan.

Mortgage Company-A company that borrows money from a bank, lends it to consumers to buy homes, then sells the loan to investors.

Mortgage Loan-A contract in which the borrower's property is pledged as collateral. It is repaid in installments. The mortgagor (buyer) promises to repay principal and interest, (PI), keep the home insured, pay all taxes, and keep the property in good condition.

Mortgage Orientation Fee-A charge for the work involved in preparing and servicing a mortgage applicant (Usually one percent of the loan amount.

PITI-Principal, interest, taxes and insurance (the four major components of housing payments)

Points-A generic term for a percentage of the principal conventional loan amount; a rate adjustment factor. A lender often charges a borrower some service charge points for making the loan. Each point is equal to one percent of the loan amount.

Principal-The capital sum, the amount borrowed excluding interest and other charges.

Property Survey-The process by which boundaries ar measured and land areas are determined.

Property Tax-Tax levied by the government on real estate property, this includes the city, town, village and county. Other taxes are school districts, water districts, etc.

Sales Contract-A contract between a buyer and seller which should explain, in detail, exactly what the purchase includes.

Title-Evidence (usually in the form of certificate or deed) of a person's legal right to ownership of property.

Veteran's Administration-(VA)-A federal agency that insures mortgage loans with very liberal down payment requirements for honorably discharged veterans and their spouse.

Warranty-A promise that certain stated facts are true. A guaranty by the seller, covering the title as well as the physical condition of the property.

"Smart" technology merges with single family homes

Kay Sutton

Your toddler wanders too close to your pool and an alarm sounds. your phone rings and the volume on the stereo is lowered. An intruder enters your home and the interior doors lock and the police are notified. Sound like something from a sci-fi movie? It's not. It's "smart" house technology and it's here today.

"Conveniences such as turning on your oven from the grocery store, or security measures such as an irregular pattern of home lights and sounds turning on in your absence are just a few of the amenities that smart technology is making available," says Kay Sutton, president of the Midland Association of REALTORS, Inc. "It will change the way we buy, sell, and use our homes."

Home automation is not a new concept. The National Association of Home Builders, in conjunction with research and development, electronic, and business firms, began developing models in the mid-1980s. A number of other consortiums also are developing home electronic intelligence systems.

"A few thousand smart homes already exist, mostly built and customized for wealthy owners," says Sutton. "Due to redesigns and advanced technology, however, automated home systems will soon become more affordable." Professional Builder & Remodeler magazine reported in 1991 that the expected price of smart house systems had been lowered from a range of $15,000 - $20,000 to $4,000 - $5,000. Home automation systems vary. In general, though, they control major household functions including power distribution, audio/video/telephone signal distribution, and control/data distribution. Systems can be designed for both electrical and gas powered appliances. All system-compatible appliances will "speak" the same language and be able to interact with one another. Most new automation systems go through extensive testing and approval processes by such industry watchdogs as Underwriters' Laboratory.

Initially, smart home systems will be found primarily in newly constructed houses. There are already several companies producing appliances and components for smart house technology. Sutton predicts that upgrading existing houses with smart technology, however, will be big business in the future. Probably so. John Naisbitt's Trend Letter (Oct. 24, 1991) predicted that before the decade ends, smart buildings will have their own listing in the real estate classified ads column of newspapers.

"Whether in 1992 or in 2002, smart technology will soon be integrated into our homes, making them more convenient, more economical, safer, and greatly increasing their value," says Sutton. "The future is here."

Serving 54 counties in West Texas and New Mexico

BRIEFING

Oil prices

A bank of injection headers in the Mabee field, pushing more oil into the tanks.

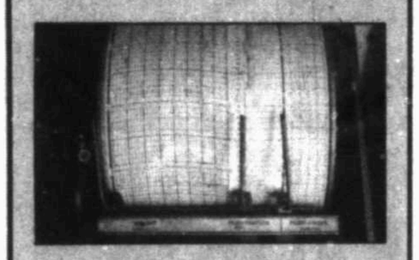

Prices continued to weaken as traders grew nervous about gasoline supplies; as gasoline prices fell, they took oil prices with them.

On the New York Mercantile Exchange, prices fell to $19.74 per barrel late in the week. The posted price fell to $18.25 per barrel.

Natural gas prices were slightly lower amid plentiful supplies, but could get a boost from hot weather in the South and Southwest spurs demand for gas to generate additional electricity. Prices on the Merc were at $2.11 per thousand cubic feet late in the week.

Mitchell proceeds

Mitchell Energy & Development Corp. has netted $123.4 million from its recently completed public offering of 5.9 million shares of its Class B common stock, including 900,000 shares sold under and over allotment option. Mitchell intends to use the proceeds to buy out its MEC Development Ltd., drilling partnership and for general corporate purposes including drilling that would have been done under the partnership.

Rig count

The "hole" story, being recorded on a rig.

There were more rigs making hole during the final week of May, according to Baker Hughes Inc.

In the Permian Basin, the company reported a jump of six rigs during the week, to 111 from 105. A year earlier the rig count was 75.

The increase was even sharper nationwide, the company reported. The U.S. rig count jumped 30 to 671, well above the year-ago level of 629.

Among major oil producing states, Oklahoma saw the sharpest increase with 15 rigs, followed by Texas with eight. Louisiana saw the biggest decline, two rigs.

Fuel coalition

A bill awaiting the governor's signature, creates an alternative fuels coalition composed of three members of the Railroad Commission, the General Land Commissioner, Chairman of the General Services Commission and Chairman of the Texas Air Control Board. The purpose of the Alternative Fuels Council will be to consolidate and coordinate state alternative fuels policy. The council will be funded by a $5.5 million appropriation from oil overcharge funds.

Too much tax

The Btu tax proposed by the Clinton Administration could reduce the U.S. gross domestic product by tens of billions of dollars and eliminate hundreds of thousands of American jobs, according to a study by DRI/McGraw-Hill, an economic analysis and forecasting firm. The study says the tax would have serious adverse economic impacts and that there are better alternatives to managing the federal deficit. The study also said Clinton's economic package would be better off dropping the tax and increasing spending.

Natural gas may slow foreign spending

■ Oil industry capital is leaving the U.S. at an alarming rate but natural gas potential could slow the flow.

By John Paul Pitts
Business/Oil editor

Oil industry dollars are still flowing overseas at an alarming rate, but new confidence in natural gas could bring them back, according to a survey of the 30 largest energy companies.

"There is even a possibility that once confidence has been fully re-established in natural gas that we will see a rig utilization problem," said J.R. Sult, senior project manager for Arthur Andersen & Co.. Sult, who compiled the report noted, however, that producers would need to be comfortable with imbalance problems and see prices at a level needed to sustain development, before that would happen.

Sult said there were just not that many rigs out there to meet a drilling surge for natural gas.

In the meantime drilling dollars continue to flee the U.S. by the billions. The survey concluded that spending by oil companies to develop U.S. oil and gas reserves declined by $3.7 billion or 26 percent in 1992.

"This is bound to have had some impact on America's declining production," said Sult, who said he didn't think all the dollars made their way overseas. "In some cases, I think it was just a matter of spending being deferred, after gas prices collapsed."

While production is now at its lowest level in two decades, the $10.5 billion spent last year was the lowest level in serves has declined 30 percent.

All the while, spending overseas has increased every year during that period. While overseas spending decreased 5 percent in 1992, over the past five years foreign exploration and development spending has exceeded U.S. spending by $20 million.

The prime reasons listed for the flight of capital overseas were: uncertainty about the worldwide economic recession, a continued shift toward international exploration, and the collapse of natural gas prices.

However, since natural gas prices rebounded last fall, many of the oil companies say they are beginning to believe the fundamentals of the natural gas industry are improving because of increased demand and sustained stronger

Oil group disputes number of bird kills

Staff report

ARTESIA — Yates Petroleum Corporation and Harvey E. Yates Company, along with other members of the oil and gas industry, have taken a proactive approach to reduce bird mortality in production units in Southeastern New Mexico.

The companies first conducted a study in conjunction with the Bureau of Land Management (BLM) to determine the extent of bird and bat mortality and to identify problem areas.

Chuck Moran with Yates Petroleum Corporation indicated, "This study will help us to best determine how to focus our resources. There has been criticism towards the industry for not acting quickly enough. However, we don't think it is any more appropriate to waste economic resources than it is to waste energy, other natural resources, or recyclables. We want to get the most bank for our environmental buck."

The study suggests that bird mortality is most prevalent within about three miles of the Pecos River. Yates Petroleum Corporation has begun a program to remediate bird deaths in these problem areas. Very little evidence was found to support fears of widespread bird mortality outside this area. Several facilities which had been in service for a number of years were inspected which contained no bird remains.

It was estimated that approximately 1700 bird and bats per year may die in about 6900 production facilities in Southeastern New Mexico. This is a substantially different number than the "tens of thousands" of bird deaths reported by bird enthusiasts.

Cap Rock electric enters gas business

By John Paul Pitts
Business/Oil editor

Cap Rock Electric, an electric cooperative, serving much of the Permian Basin has announced that it has entered the natural gas business in order to better position itself for the future.

The cooperative, in cooperation with BEI Energy Corp. of Midland has formed New West Fuels, a limited corporation, and has purchased more than 3,000 net acres of proven gas reserves in South Texas, said Steve Collier, Caprock vice president for energy resources and government affairs. Collier will be president of New West Resources Inc., the caprock subsidary which will represent Caprock's interest in the new gas company.

Collier said the electric was entering the gas business because it would provide Cap Rock Electric customers a hedge against escalating fuel prices and spread fixed costs across a larger company. He noted that short term benefits include a valuable asset that is expected to appreciate substantially in the next few years.

Experts see upturn in geologists future

■ Demand for geologists is currently flat but expected to increase.

By Melia McEwen
Staff writer

America's oil and gas industry has undergone drastic changes since 1986, when prices collapsed to near $10 per barrel.

The majors have increasingly built up operations overseas while scaling back domestic operations, marginal wells have been plugged, exploration has come to a near-standstill and workforces have been slashed.

Industry estimates are that since 1982, approximately 500,000 jobs have been lost in the industry. Among those suffering cutbacks have been engineers and geologists.

And while there is no major improvement in the situation for geologists, some say there is light at the end of the tunnel.

Marie Bellomy, executive director of the West Texas Geological Society, said she has seen many changes in the profession during her 32 years with the society.

Currently, she said, "a lot of geologists are going into the environmental field, where there's more demand; others are going back to school to study the environmental field, some are semi-retired and a lot of independents are exploring for oil."

Another field opening up for geologists, she said, is hydrogeology.

WTGS Executive Director Marie Bellomy says things are looking better for geologists.

One service she is very proud of, and that has helped the society's membership during recent years, is a free employment service that has been in place for many years.

Bellomy explained that the WTGS office keeps resumes on file in a computer and will supply resumes to prospective employers — company or individual — who contact the placement chairman.

Clinton could give oil industry hard time

Pitts

"It looks like a long hard three and half years for the oil and gas industry," says Rep. Larry Combest.

When Combest was in Midland this week to deliver a briefing on the Btu tax, we chatted with him about President Bill Clinton, the oil industry and politics. He was not optimistic.

With the oil industry and Clinton already squared off in different philosophical and political camps over the Btu tax, and fears of impending, unbearable, environmental regulation looming, Combest doesn't think the relationship between the President and the oil industry will be exactly friendly for the remainder of President Clinton's term — and when he says term he means four years.

"If the remainder of Clinton's term continues like the first five months, it is almost certain that Clinton will be a one-term president," said Combest.

The Republican congressman from Lubbock did not mention revenge as an element of the relationship between oil and the President, but one only has to read between the lines to suspect that possibility.

If Clinton, after the 1994 elections, comes to the same fatalistic conclusion that he is going to be a one-term president, he may just get mad enough to "get even" with some of the people in the other camp.

Thus far, the oil industry has been the principal lobby against Clinton's Btu tax and one of his most vocal opponents. The oil industry has overwhelmingly rejected not only Clinton's Btu tax, but his tax and spend philosophy. At last reading, his approval rating in Texas was somewhere near 11 percent — a historical low.

On the energy issue, even his own party is treating him like political typhoid. The Democrat-controlled Texas Legislature and the Texas Railroad Commission (two of the three are Democrats) have campaigned vigorously against the tax. State Comptroller John Sharp, a Democrat, has issued a devastaing report against the Btu tax. Only Gov. Ann Richards, has remained obviously silent on the Btu tax. In spite of constant prodding from members of the state's oil industry for her to commit, Richards has steadfastly refused to oppose the Btu tax.

Even Bob Krueger, appointed to Lloyd Bentsen's Senate seat by Richards, and running for election against Kay Bailey Hutchinson, has put as much distance as possible between himself and the administration. Nobody from the administration has even dared to speak up for Krueger, for fear it might injure him politically in Texas.

Moreover, the treatment of the President's plan doesn't improve much in other oil and gas producing states, where opposition is outraged, loud, and pervasive.

So far, it is not a pretty picture. So what might Clinton do if he did ... shall we say ... "want to get even?"

Surveys indicate that what the oil

UPTURN: Demand for geologists could grow

(From 1E)

She said the service has been successful in placing geologists, especially in entry-level jobs, though "Like everything else, it has been slow the last few years, with not that many openings." Prospective employers, she noted, have been a good mix of small companies, individuals and majors.

Membership in the society, while down sharply from its 1980 boom-era high of 2,200 members is stable with 1,400 members, 900 of which live in Midland. "We feel that's a really good number for these times," she observed.

Like Bellomy, Mike Ayling of Tulsa said that while "almost no one admits to hiring any geologists right now," he said there is hiring for environmental geologists.

"My experience is," he said, "there are very few people coming out of school with degrees in geology, and most of those are oriented toward the environmental industry."

Ayling, a recruiter who also helps conduct salary surveys for the American Association of Petroleum Geologists, added that "There's a real reluctance on everyone's part to hire due to not knowing what's coming out of Washington with taxes and the health plan. The attitude is one of caution, of 'let's not make a decision we wish we hadn't made until we know what's going on.'"

In the short term, he said, companies are turning to temporary employees to help with projects.

However, he noted, "there's very little exploration being done, and as a result there's little demand or less demand for people to be trained. The companies that are exploring are relying on their senior personnel or those with experience, those left in the industry. There are a lot of people out there who still haven't given up on the industry, but a lot have."

Strong natural gas prices could boost demand for geologists as companies gear up to explore for gas, he said. "There are those that say gas prices will have to be above $2 for two or three years before they'll think about exploring," he said. "That's dumb, because by the time they get around to exploring, it'll be too late. It'll be too hard to put prospects together."

"I think things will turn around — they have to," he said.

"Look at the long-term projections for energy demand," he added, citing a recent article in Oil & Gas Journal projecting U.S. dependence on imported oil would hit 48 to 50 percent by the year 2000, which is seven years away. In fact, the American Petroleum Institute reported that imports reached 50 percent in April.

Ayling stated that "People should stop and think about the implications. The part of the equation we keep leaving out is that we're not going to be the only country looking for oil in the year 2000. A lot of development nations that aren't using that much oil will be looking for it. I look for strong oil prices in the 21st Century."

He said that while he's not predicting $50 per barrel oil, he does expect significant price increases as developing countries see their economies grow and energy demand grow as well.

"When that happens, that's energy that can't come here unless we're willing to bid for it." he noted.

And, he said, despite talk about developing alternative energy sources, "I don't think we'll see any of that have a significant impact in the next 15 years — they can't be developed that quickly."

The problem with spurring domestic exploration — in areas such as offshore California and in the Gulf of Mexico that have great potential, he said, is a lack of capital.

"We can't get exploration plays started if nobody has the money to buy leases and put the prospect together," he said, adding that concerns him is the fact that capital being generated by the oil and gas industry is being taken out of the industry and put elsewhere.

Still, a boost in exploration will boost demand for geologists, he said, particularly when the mid-size independent producers decide begin exploring for smaller fields, deciding that they can make as good a good return finding a field with 100,000 barrels as they could with a giant field containing much more oil.

One factor he sees coming into play is the fact that the college students who are studying geology are getting bachelors degrees, which Ayling said the environmental industry wants, but "I see fewer getting the masters degrees that the oil industry seems to need. It delays the time span where the industry can gear back up and hire geologists. Also, the lack of students means masters programs and faculties begin to fall apart."

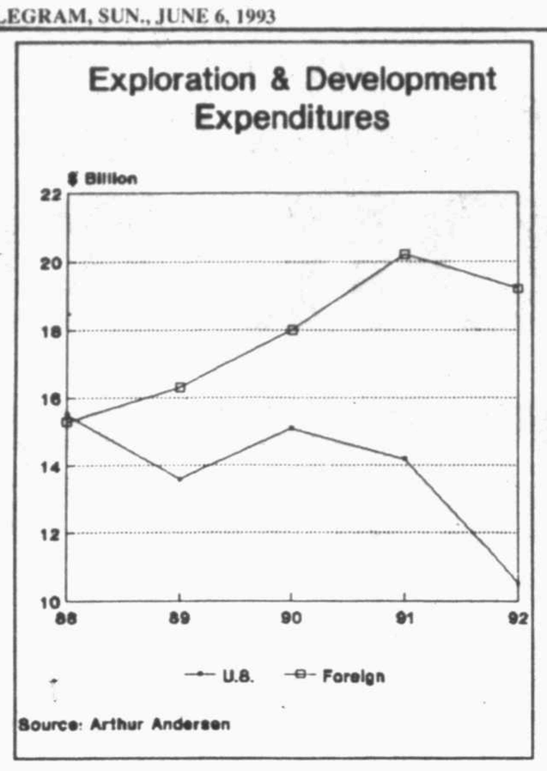

Yet he remains upbeat for the profession long-term, and said he hopes to keep in contact with enough experienced geologists and engineers to help fill the need for experienced professionals when demand begins to grow.

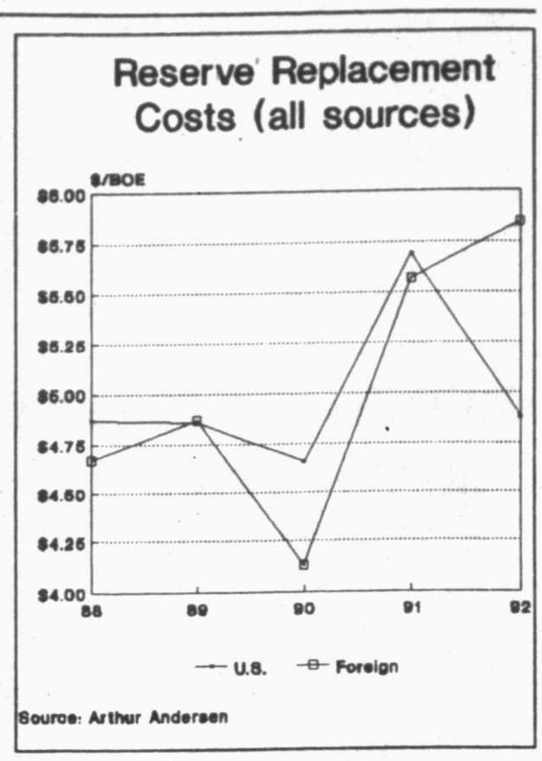

It has been, after all, his main job — recruiting geologists and engineers for medium-size and smaller oil companies - since 1975.

Cut n spend

The two graphs, left indicate a history of replacement costsl for foreign and domestic operations, and a history of domestic and foreign spending for the 30 operators surveyed in the Arthur Andersen report. Foreign spending has been increasing steadily since 1988, while domestic spending has declined.

In terms of replacement costs from all sources, 1992 offered a large gap, but overall on average the foreign and domestic reserve replacement cost are almost neck and neck.

SURVEY: Reveals domestic spending trend

prices. One of the reasons for new confidence in natural gas, says Sult, is the fact that replacement rates are now only 74 percent. "When you don't drill, and you don't add wells, sypply gets tight," said Sult.

"As a result of the shift in natural gas fundamentals, many of the 30 firms surveyed plan to increase domestic exploration and development during 1993," said Victor Burk, managing director of oil and gas industry services for Arthur Andersen.

Another reason oil companies might be looking home again is the cost of doing business. While the cost in the U.S. of adding reserves from all sources, drilling and acquisition, decreased by 14 percent in 1992 to $4.88 barrel of oil equivalent (BOE). The cost of adding reserves outside the U.S. increased 5 percent to $5.85 BOE. Replacement cost for the group averaged $4.97 per BOE in the U.S. and $4.93 outside the U.S.

Said Sult: "Reserve addition costs are roughly equivalent to the U.S., but the possibility for adding great reserves exists only overseas. There are no pure unexplored areas in the U.S., since the oil industry has been denied access to ANWAR and offshore." He also noted that many of the countries that had previously had closed doors were now open to foreign companies, creating tremendous opportunity overseas.

In other categories covered by the report, oil replacement from all sources declined for the fifth straight year, reaching 49 percent in 1992, which was less than half the 1988 replacement rate.

Gas production replacement rate increased marginally to 57 percent in 1992 and averaged 92 percent during the past five years, but sharp curtailment in the last three years has reduced replacement to just 74 percent.

Overall, reserves of the 30 top companies fell five percent to 18.9 billiion barrels and gas reserves declined four percent to 85.7 trillion cubic feet in 1992. At the same time foreign reserves declined slightly to 20.4 billion barrels and foreign gas dropped one percent to 100.3 tcf.

The 30 companies included in the survey account for more than half of all U.S. proved oil and gas reserves. They are: Amerada Hess, Amoco, Anadarko, Apache, Atlantic Richfield, British Petroleum, Burlington Resources, Chevron, Coastal, Conoco, Consolidated Natural Gas, Enron, ENSERCH, Exxon, Kerr-McGee, Louisiana Land, Maxus, Mesa, Mobil, Murphy, Oddidental, Oryx, Pennzoil, Phillips, Shell, Santa Fe Energy, Texaco, Union Pacific, Unocal and USX.

Sult said the survey of these 30 top companies was only a preview of its report on 200 oil companies which will come out later. As for 1993, he said there would be only a modest spending increase on domestic exploration and development.

PITTS: Clinton-oil rift

industry fears most — even more than low oil prices is OSHA and EPA. Is it possible that the President would unleash a barrage of unbearable and crippling environmental and safety regulations upon the industry in the last two years of his term? Could it happen?

Let's look at it this way: If politicians didn't have ways of getting even with their enemies and rewarding their friends, people would not work so hard or spend so much money trying to be their friend.

"If the Clinton administration succeeded in getting produced water and oil declared hazardous materials. We can shut the door — it's over! The oil industry will not be able to operate under those restrictions," said Combest.

So, would an upturn in Clinton's performance and popularity, mend the rift between Clinton and the oil industry? It's doubtful, the rift is probably already too wide for amends.

But, even at that, Combest has no confidence that the Clinton administration will be able to pull itself out of the tailspin it's in. "If he keeps up at this rate, in 90 days an outraged American people will be screaming for gridlock," said Combest.

He characterized Clinton as unfocused, unable to make things happen, a president with an agenda but no plan. "A Democrat friend of mine in Congress told me, that he had never seen an individual so ill-prepared to be president."

Combest estimated that as many as 50 percent of the Democrats who voted for Clinton's energy bill did not believe in it, but voted for it to try and salvage his administration. He said Democrats in Congress are already quaking and fearful of what 1994 might bring. "If things have not changed by then, Republicans could gain control of both the House and the Senate in a single election."

But Combest is not gloating, he warned that for Republicans to win that kind of victory, the country would have to be going down the tubes. "We don't want to see the country go down the tubes just for the sake of a political victory."

Unocal lowers gasoline price

LOS ANGELES — Unocal Corp., whose dealers have complained of paying high wholesale prices for gasoline, has lowered dealers' costs closer to the competition.

"The competitive pressures are always out there. In Southern California (the industry) sells 4 billion gallons a year and there is competition for every gallon," said Richard J. Stegemeier, chairman and chief executive officer of the Los Angeles-based oil company.

Corporate officials would not discuss whether lower wholesale prices would show up at the gas pump for consumers.

"It's just something we can't talk about," said company spokesman Jim Bray.

Oil companies charge dealers a "tankwagon" or wholesale price. Dealers set the retail price based on what they think the competition will bear.

Unocal dealers have complained that high wholesale prices have left them at a competitive disadvantage.

"They recognized that there are problems out there and for the last six weeks they have made some corrections in pricing," said Andre van der Valk, who owns a gas station in suburban Van Nuys and who organized a dealer protest at Unocal's shareholders meeting earlier this spring.

Unocal's wholesale price for regular unleaded gasoline was 7.5 cents lower on May 19 than on Jan. 5, according to the Southern California Service Station Association.

The first survey of 1993 found that Unocal's wholesale price of $1.151 per gallon was the highest of seven major oil companies in the Los Angeles area. It was about 8 cents higher than the wholesale price charged by Atlantic Richfield Co., which is traditionally the low price leader.

In the May 19 survey, the latest association figures available, Unocal's price was $1.076, lower than two other companies.

GAS: Cap Rock venture

(From 1E)

"We paid about 50 cents per Mcf for gas which is now valued at $2.50 per Mcf," said Collier, who added that remedial work on the wells had increased production from 1 Mmcfd to 4 Mmcfd.

Collier, a nationally recognized authority on the marketing of electricity, said the move would allow Cap Rock to help control the cost of power to customers. "The cost of power, which makes up 70 percent of Cap Rock's annual budget, is directly related to the cost of fuel," he explained.

By owning its own fuel reserves, and eventually gathering and processing and marketing facilities, Collier said the cooperative would be in the position of being able to trade gas for power or use the gas in its own generating plants.

"This is nothing new to our business," said Collier. "All major utilities and even some smaller ones own natural gas reserves, and use subsidiaries to operate separate but related businesses."

Said David Pruitt, president of Cap Rock: "We are just a small LDC (local distributing co.) trying to hedge our bets. This is a proven, logical hedge."

Pruitt said the company's entrance into the natural gas field meets strategic goals of the company to lower costs and would not compete with any of its retail customers. He noted that the company may actually in the market for joint ventures with some of its major customers. He also noted that the gas venture would prove minimal risk to Cap Rock customers.

"Change is necessary in this market," said Pruitt. "It is a new more competitive world for energy — natural gas and electrical."

Collier said the foundation of Cap Rock's business strategy was to provide perfect service, at the lowest cost with the most options for the future.

Among other steps the company is making to meet this strategy is to change its wholesale power supply contract from TU Electric to Southwest Public Service Co. beginning in 1994, Collier said, noting that the move is expected to save customers at least 20 percent on electric bills.

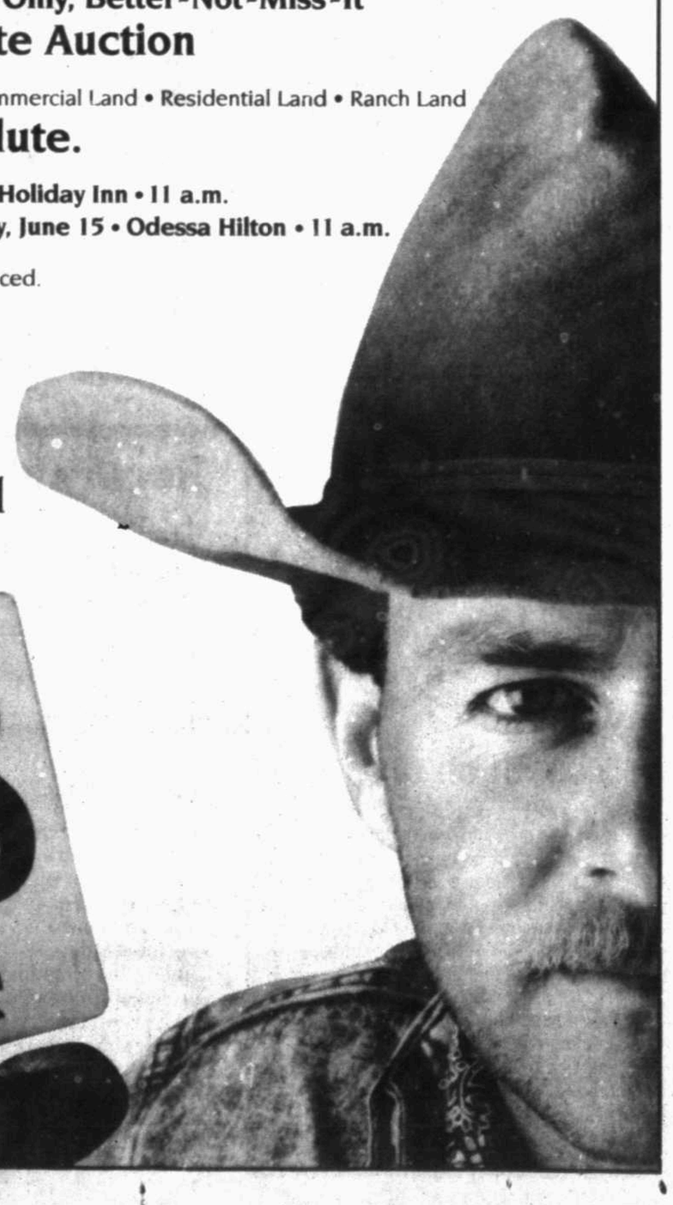

BIRDS: Report disputed

(From 1E)

Moran said it would seem that unscrupulous environmentalists are using unsupported numbers to portray a generally responsible industry as irresponsible and uncaring. Furthermore, when this hazard is put in perspective, it may be insignificant when compared to the number of birds killed in fireplace chimneys, cars or even by domestic cats.

NAME DROPPING

Sheeran

HANK SHEERAN has been named Western District Manager of Energy Industries, one of six District Manager positions created by the company in recent changes in its sales and service distribution system.

Sheeran's new responsibilities include the company's daily operations in West Texas and New Mexico, an area that includes two full-service branches in Midland and Farmington, N.M. and a service center in Artesia, N.M. In Midland, he will supervise 21 employees involved in parts, service and product support sales.

KEVIN FRENZEL has been promoted to operations manager in the Midland office of Hall Southwest Corp.

The Austin-based company specializes in the assessment and remediation of soil and groundwater contamination, Phase I and Phase II pre-acquisition environmental site assessments, RI/FS, RCRA and petroleum storage tank investigations.

KEVIN WIDNER has joined Charles B. Gillespie Jr. as production manager. He will be responsible for drilling and production operations and environmental activities.

He was previously employed as a petroleum engineer with North American Royalties Inc.

JAMES NALER, vice president for wholesale and retail marketing for Pride Refining Inc. and director of Pride Companies L.P. will retire from those responsibilities July 1.

He joined Pride in January 1990 to supervise the company's marketing of wholesale and retail gasoline and diesel fuels and coordinated the company's entry into gasoline marketing which was made possible by a $17.5 million refinery expansion and an $8.5 million pipeline connecting a newly-constructed terminal in San Angelo to the Abilene refinery.

Prior to joining Pride, Naler was president of Kent Lubrication Centers.

Energy traders get more time to squirm with extended hours

By Anne Pearson
Hearst News Service

HOUSTON — Extended energy futures trading debuts next month on the New York Mercantile Exchange, giving energy traders an extra 15 hours a day to squirm over the perils of oil prices.

But traders and brokers don't expect to lose a lot of sleep when the Merc's new "Access" electronic system goes on line June 24.

"If you're an oil trader, you don't sleep well anyway," said James R. Fiedler of E.D. & F. Man International Futures in New York.

Access isn't designed to create obsessed insomniacs, Merc officials say. It is designed to let companies protect their financial positions when market-moving events, like the attempted coup in the former Soviet Union or the Persian Gulf War, erupt after the closing bell on the Merc at 3:10 p.m. Eastern time.

"I think it's going to give us some flexibility we don't have now," said Thomas V. Costantino, vice president for risk management for EOTT Energy Corp., a trading arm of Houston-based Enron Corp.

When major events happen after the closing bell, "you have a lot of exposure, and to not be able to react could be very expensive."

Traders can cover themselves now using the cash, or "over the counter" market.

Cash trading can be particularly brisk on Tuesdays, when the American Petroleum Institute releases late-afternoon statistics on how much oil and refined product are sitting in storage, figures that can give prices a big push up or down.

But traders and Merc officials believe extended futures trading will help the market operate less frantically and more efficiently.

Access is a partnership of the New York Mercantile Exchange, AT&T and Task Management Inc., which developed the software. Traders will be able to deal in crude, heating oil, unleaded gasoline and platinum futures and options via Access.

The system will operate from 5 p.m. to 8 a.m. Eastern time on Mondays through Thursdays and open at 7 p.m. on Sundays. It will be closed Friday and Saturday nights.

But like anything new, Access will take time to catch on, brokers say.

An after-hours trading system for financial instruments called Globex, launched almost a year ago by the Chicago Board of Trade, Chicago Mercantile Exchange and Reuters, hasn't exactly caught on like wildfire, they point out.

But Fiedler said he thinks Access will catch on more quickly than Globex has, because there already is a very active cash market at work after the Merc closes.

Extended Access hours shouldn't be a huge burden on company trading staffs during normal times, because most have offices either on the East or West Coast, and some have traders in London and Singapore. Signing onto Access may add to companies' payroll, but they hope to make up for the cost in volume.

"We'll add at least one person (working 5 p.m. to 1 a.m.), and see how it goes from there," Fiedler said.

Whether Access trading will cut into cash brokers' business is yet to be seen.

"We don't expect much change," said Vin Galeoto, vice president for First National Energy Group, an over-the-counter broker in Norwalk, Conn.

Galeoto said he expects any volume declines in West Texas Intermediate, the benchmark for the Merc's futures contract, to be offset by an increase in Brent, the North Sea marker crude.

Thompson said prime time on Access will come early — about 4:30 a.m. Eastern time — when Brent trading opens on the International Petroleum Exchange.

Midlander to head 1994 Oil Show

Midlander Don Narrell, retired division manager of Halliburton Services in the Permian Basin, will serve as president of the 1994 Permian Basin Oil Show.

Narrell

He is predicting no major changes in the format of the 1994 oil show, to be held in Odessa October. 19-21 at the Ector County Coliseum Complex.

"With completely new facilities for the 1992 Oil Show there are some minor problems to work out," he said. "But all in all I think we came through our last show very well and all we will need next year is some fine tuning."

He added that last year's show was the largest on record for the inland petroleum industry, with over 700 exhibitors occupying some 1,111 exhibit spaces.

"We used every exhibit space available for the show, and we maintained a waiting list of potential exhibitors," he noted. "Early indications lead us to believe the 1994 exposition will be equally as successful."

Companies who exhibited in the 1992 Oil Show will receive renewal contracts for the 1994 exposition in early August and will have 45 days to return them to the Oil Show office if they want to keep their space, said Jay Alvey, the show's executive director. After that, he said, space is offered to those companies on the waiting list.

MEETINGS

SPE speaker to discuss whipstock tool

The Drilling Study Group of the Permian Basin chapter, Society of Petroleum Engineers, will meet Wednesday at the Midland Center beginning at 11:30 a.m.

Featured speaker will be Eric Arceneaux, who will speak on "Introduction of Retrievable Whipstocks." Whipstocks are a specialized tool long used to alter the course of a drilled well. Utilized for years to sidetrack around a junked hole or to change dfirection toward a predetermined objective, whipstocks have recently been used to initiate a horizontal lateral from an existing wellbore.

Arceneaux is with Weatherford Services (Homco). He will discuss the retrievable whipstocks and the applications for this new tool in the Permian Basin.

Cost is $10 and reservations should be made by Monday afternoon by calling 686-7329.

Significant discoveries topic for WTGS

Significant 1992 Permian Basin discoveries will be discussed by four coauthors at the June 15 meeting of the West Texas Geological Society, set for noon at the Midland Center.

Co-authors include Bruce Brady, a Midland consultant, Charles Garvey of Samedan in Midland, Wayne Gibson, a Midland consultant, and Paul Dolliver of Geomap in Plano.

They will focus on the geology and geophysical interpretations and techniques that led to these field/trend discoveries and expansions.

Significant discoveries and trend areas to be discussed include the Buenos field of Garza County, Strawn and Ellenburger structural oil accumulations; the Kristen field of Yoakum County, a Silurian structural oil accumulation; the Triumph field of Upton County, a trend of Wolfcamp stratigraphic oil accumulations; Cobra and Powell fields of Glasscock County, Wolfcamp stratrigrpahic oil accumulations; and the Horseshoe Reef Apron trend of Howard and Scurry counties, Pennsylvanian reef oil accumulations.

The co-authors received assistance from Gilbert Barragan and Meridian Oil CO., Arnold Fincher and Petroleum Information Inc.

Desk and Derrick Club sets meeting

The Midland Desk and Derrick Club will meet Thursday at the Petroleum Club beginning with social hour at 6:30 p.m., followed by dinner at 7 p.m.

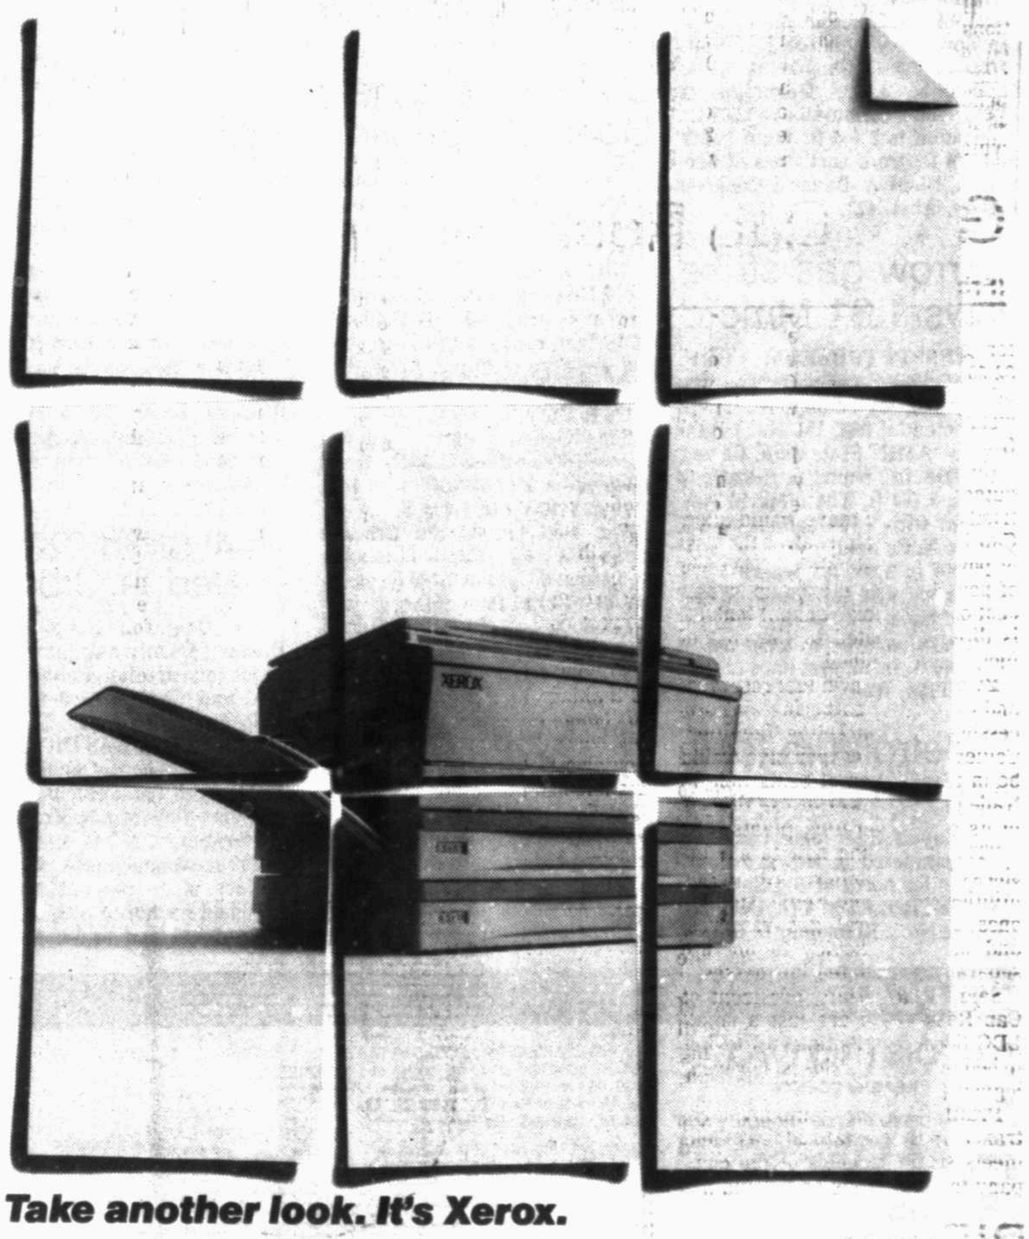

Larry Oldham, executive vice president, Parallel Petroleum, will be the guest speaker. His topic will be "What is 3-D Seismic and How is it Helping Independent Oil Operators?"

Reservations can be made by calling 684-6872.

Howard discovery flows 267 barrels

Staff report

Howard County has gained a Devonian Fusselman discovery that offsets San Andres production on the western edge of the Varel field, seven miles northwest of Big Spring.

J. CLEO THOMPSON potentialed the No. 1 Shell-Alexander to flow 267 barrels of 49.2 gravity crude and 9 Mcfd on a 14/64 inch choke with flowing tubing pressure of 850 psi. Production was natural from open hole interval 10,292 to 10,330 ft.

Permitted as an 11,000 ft. wildcat, the well was drilled to 10,330 ft. with 5 1/2 inch casing set at 10,292 ft.

Formation tops, on ground elevation of 2,525 ft., include the Upper Spraberry at 6,404 ft., Wolfcamp at 7,891, Canyon at 9,194, Strawn at 9,508, Devonian at 10,272, and Fusselman at 10,308 ft.

Location is 2,460 ft. from south and 274 ft. from east lines of Section 24, Block A, Bauer & Cockrell survey, Abst. 473.

Morrow gas strike flows 1.31 Mmcfd

YATES PETROLEUM CORP. has completed a Morrow gas discovery in Eddy County, N.M.

On potential test, the No. 1 Rancherita "AMH" State Com. flowed 1.31 Mmcfd from perforations 7,925 to 8,100 ft. The interval was acidized with 2,500 gallons of 7.5 percent NeFe acid.

Drilled to 8,686 ft., where 5 1/2 inch casing was set, the well was plugged back to 8,365 ft.

Location is 660 ft. from south and 1,980 ft. from west lines of Section 8, T19s, R24e.

IP Petroleum tests Canyon discovery

A Canyon Reef discovery has been completed in Howard County, 10 miles north of Big Spring.

IP PETROLEUM CO. INC. finaled the No. 1 Kennemer to flow 70 barrels of 38.2 gravity crude, 95 Mcfd and 37 barrels of water on a 12/64 inch choke. The well flowed from perforations 8,194 to 8,210 ft., which had been acidized with 400 gallons of 15 percent NeFe acid.

Permitted as an 8,600 ft. wildcat, the well was drilled to 8,660 ft. and plugged back to 8,615 ft. with 5 1/2 inch casing set at 8,640 ft.

On ground elevation of 2,651 ft., formation tops include the Spraberry at 5,790 ft., Wolfcamp at 7,174, Pennsylvanian Shale at 7,949, and Canyon Reef at 8,188 ft.

Location is 2,067 ft. from north and 969 ft. from east lines of Section 26, Block 31, T-2-N, T&P survey, Abst. 1061.

The operator has requested a field designation of Three Fifty (Canyon) for the discovery.

Concho field gets Goen C opener

Goen C production has apparently been opened in the Dark Horse field of Concho County, five miles west of Eden.

SRG OIL CORP. potentialed the No. 2 Hawkins to flow 88 barrels of 39 gravity crude and 500 Mcfd on a 16/64 inch choke with flowing tubing pressure of 40 psi. Production was natural from perforations 3,776 to 3,780 ft.

Scheduled as a 4,000 ft. wildcat, the well was drilled to 3,850 ft. and plugged back to 3,801 ft. with 4 1/2 inch casing set at 3,848 ft.

The well topped the Breckenridge at 2,166 ft., Capps Limestone at 3,660 and Goen at 3,738 ft. on elevation of 2,157 ft.

Location is 1,350 ft. from north and west lines of T&NO RR survey 175, Abst. 880.

Ellenburger opened in Andrews field

PHILLIPS PETROLEUM CO. has apparently opened Ellenburger production in the Fullerton North field of Andrews County, 18 miles northwest of Andrews.

On potential test, the No. 5 Bitler Deep pumped 166 barrels of crude, 10 Mcfd and 23 barrels of water from perforations 8,950 to 9,965 ft. The interval was acidized with 1,087 gallons of 15 percent NeFeHCL acid.

Permitted as a 10,100 ft. wildcat, the well was drilled to 10,028 ft., where 5 1/2 inch casing was set.

Location is 1,000 ft. from north and 1,700 ft. from east lines of Section 3, Block A-32, PSL, Abst. 589.

Ector producer now horizontal well

An existing wellbore in Ector County has been recompleted as a horizontal drainhole in the Goldsmith (Clearfork) field, four miles north of Goldsmith.

AMOCO PRODUCTION CO. reentered the No. 209 Goldsmith Landreth Deep Unit, completing it to pump six barrels of crude, 10 Mcfd and 97 barrels of water. The well produced from open hole interval 5,986 to 6,512 ft., which had been acidized with 1,000 gallons 15 percent HCL acid.

Original depth was 6,512 ft. with a 5 1/2 inch liner hung from 3,986 to 5,986 ft. Kick-off point for the horizontal leg was 6,168 ft.

Surface location is 40 ft. from north and 1,395 ft. of Section 28, Block 44, T-1-N, T&P survey. Bottom hole location is 21 ft. from north and 1,694 ft. from west lines of the section.

Dual gas producer finaled in Crockett

The Davidson Ranch field of Crockett County has gained a dual producer in the Pennsylvanian 7890 and Canyon 6200 fields, 4.7 miles south of Ozona.

AMAX OIL & GAS INC. completed the No. 7-U McDonald "15" in the Canyon for a calculated absolute open flow of 2.34 Mmcfd from perforations 5,992 to 6,122 ft. The interval was acidized with 2,500 gallons of 15 percent NeFeHCL acid and fractured with 34,000 gallons of gel and 84,000 lbs. 20/40 sand.

From Pennsylvanian perforations 7,687 to 7,725 ft., the No. 7-L tested for a calculated absolute open flow of 3.82 Mmcfd. The interval was acidized with 2,100 gallons of 15 percent NeFeHCL acid and fractured with 40,000 gallons of gel and 86,000 lbs. 20/40 sand.

Total depth was 7,950 ft., where 5 1/2 inch casing was set, and the well was plugged back to 7,854 ft.

The well topped the Canyon Limestone at 5,352 ft., Canyon at 5,953 and Pennsylvanian at 7,686 ft. on ground elevation of 2,310 ft.

Location is 2,500 ft. from north and 2,600 ft. from east lines of Section 15, Block MN, GC&SF survey, Abst. 2621.

Crockett reentry nets dual producer

A Strawn producer in the Ozona Southwest field of Crockett County has been converted to a dual producer with the addition of production from the Ozona (Canyon Sandstone) field, 12 miles southwest of Ozona.

ENRON OIL & GAS CO. recompleted the No. 2310ST Henderson Trust "DD" to flow 160 Mcfd from Canyon perforations 6,918 ft. to 7,012 ft. The interval was treated with 65,000 gallons of gel and 181,000 lbs. 20/40 sand.

The well was completed as a Strawn producer in the Ozona Southwest field in September 1992 for a calculated absolute open flow of 4.93 Mmcfd from perforations 8,844 to 8,935 ft.

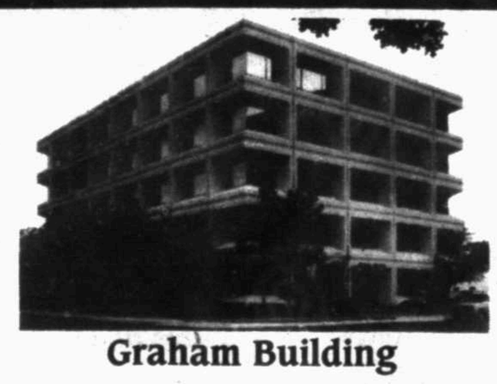

Total depth is 9,290 ft. and the well is plugged back to 9,211 ft. with 4 1/2 inch and 5 1/2 inch casing set at 9,255 ft.

Formation tops, on ground elevation of 2,425 ft., include the Base Cretaceous at 910 ft., Upper Canyon at 5,968, Lower Canyon at 8,610, Strawn at 8,842, Strawn Detrital at 9,022 and Devonian at 9,100 ft.

Location is 660 ft. from north and 1,950 ft. from west lines of Section 23, Block ST, GC&SF survey, Abst. 3295.

Gas sales lift Mitchell earnings

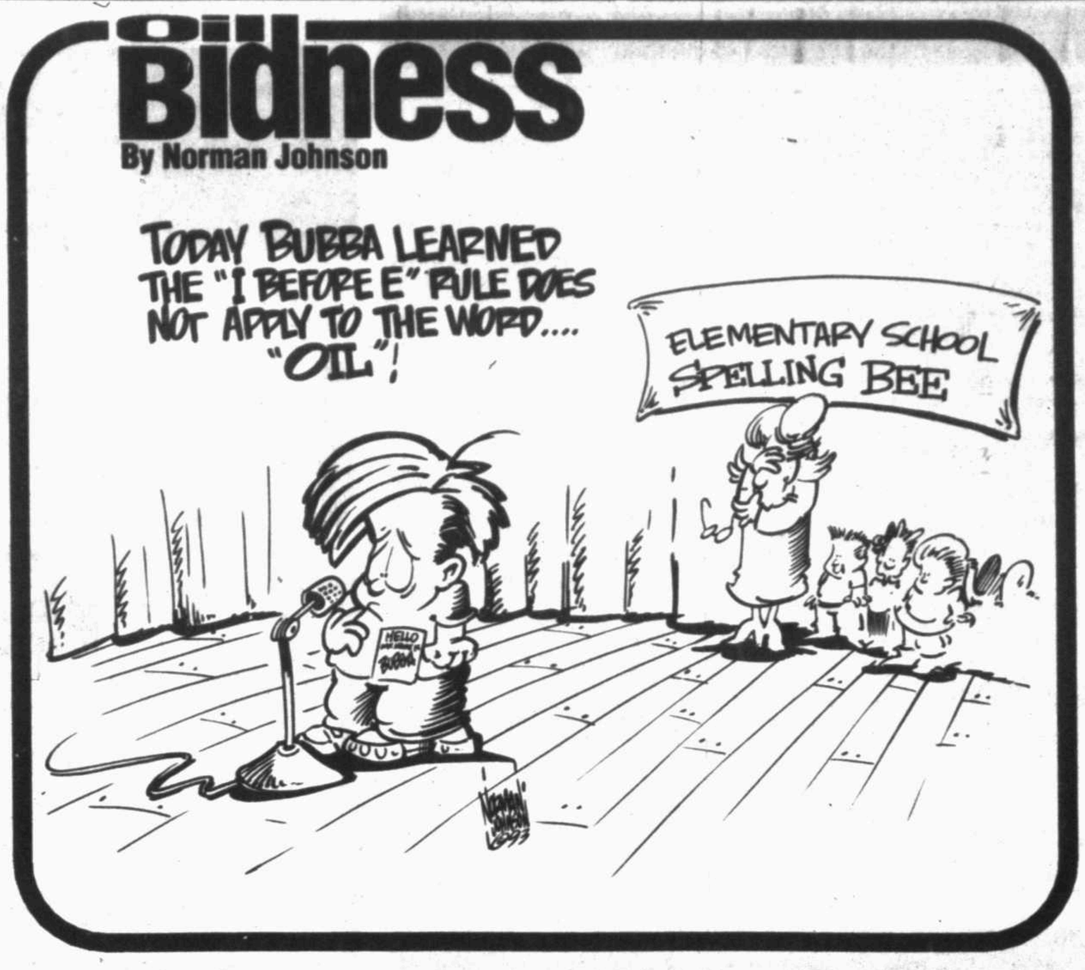

THE WOODLANDS, Texas (AP) — Mitchell Energy & Development Corp. earned $10.3 million in the first quarter after reporting a loss for the period last year, spurred by an increase in natural gas sales volumes and higher gas prices.

The company reported that it had earned 22 cents per share during the quarter ended April 30.

In the first period of 1992, Mitchell lost $26.4 million, or 56 cents per share. The losses came after several charges, including restructuring of the exploration and production division.

George Mitchell, chairman and president of The Woodlands-based company, said the improvement was due mainly to a 27 percent rise in natural gas sales volumes and to higher gas prices. He said further production gains are expected since the company's May 1 buyout of its MEC Development, Ltd., drilling partnership.

Mitchell is an independent energy producer that also has real estate interests in the Houston-Galveston region.

Chevron revamps

SAN FRANCISCO (NYT) — Citing higher taxes and more stringent environmental regulations, Chevron has announced a major restructuring in which it plans to sell two refineries and scale back gasoline sales in the Southeast.

As a result, the nation's third-largest oil company will take a second-quarter, after-tax charge to earnings of $550 million. This will go for asset write-downs, employee severances and environmental site assessments.

Despite the hit to profits, Wall Street clearly liked the move.

"This is a very constructive move," said Eugene Nowak, an analyst who follows the San Francisco-based oil company for Dean Witter. "It shows they are serious about continuing the restructuring they began a number of years ago."

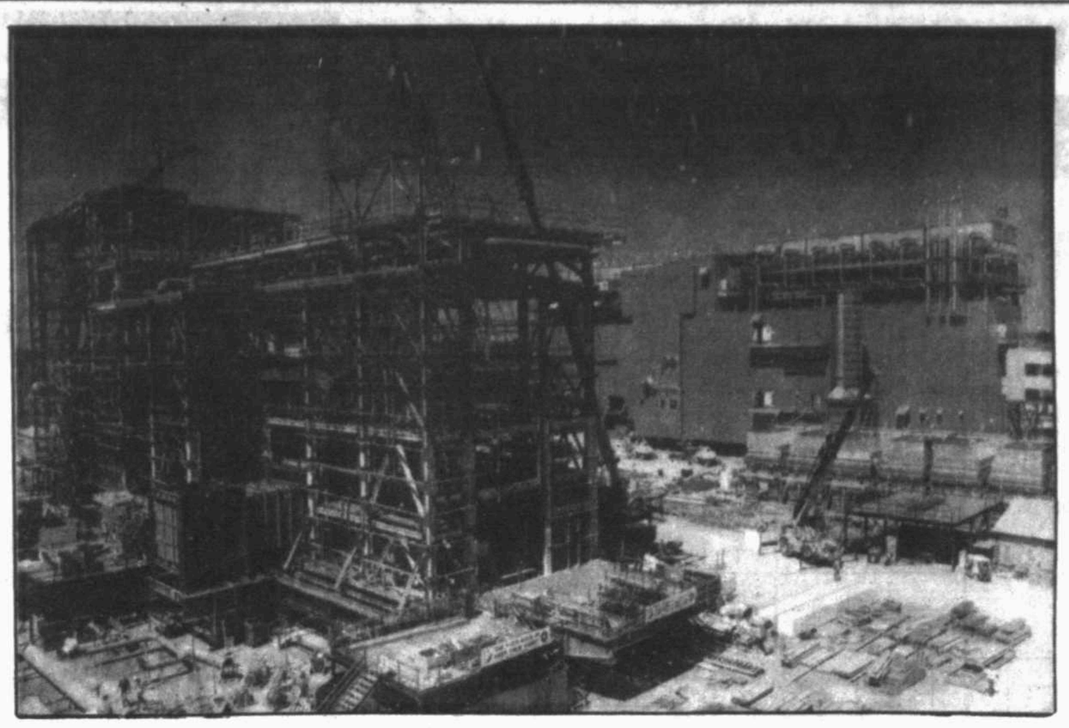

The company said the changes will pump up its cash flow while cutting marketing and refining capital investments by $2 billion within five years.

Chevron intends to sell its refineries at Port Arthur, Texas, and Philadelphia, which employ 1,200 and 600 people respectively and together produce 350,000 barrels of crude oil a day.

The oil giant is selling the Philadelphia refinery because it no longer markets fuel in the Northeast. The Port Arthur plant gives the company more refining capacity than it needs in the Gulf Coast market.

The company also said it plans to stop selling gasoline to all 243 Chevron service stations in Arkansas, and an unspecified number of stations in western Tennessee and western Kentucky.

Chevron also said it will sell company-owned service stations in South Carolina, North Carolina, West Virginia, Virginia, Maryland, Ohio and most of Kentucky and western Tennessee.

Re-energized Enserch recovers from earnings plunge

■ After an agonizing retreat, Enserch is regaining respect on Wall Street.

N.Y. Times News Service

DALLAS — For a dozen long years, Enserch Corp. was on an agonizing downward path.

The parent company of Lone Star Gas Co. and Enserch Exploration was sent reeling by plunging energy prices, ill-fated investments in oil-well servicing rigs, heavy debt and a confused corporate identity that turned off Wall Street investment analysts.

Since logging record profits in 1981, Enserch has seen its earnings plummet. Its stock price cratered. The quarterly dividend paid Enserch stockholders, which stood at 40 cents a share in the early 1980s, was slashed in February to a mere nickel.

But Dallas-based Enserch, a longtime pariah among investments, is suddenly getting new respect. Some analysts are issuing "buy" recommendations for Enserch stock, an exceptionally rare gesture in recent years.

The stock has gained 70 percent since skidding to $10.875 a share early last year, closing at over $18 per share in late May.

There's a growing feeling among analysts that Enserch — along with the rest of the natural gas industry — is entering a new, upbeat era in which profits will escalate significantly.

Analysts are enthusiastic about Enserch's new leader, David Biegler, who took over this month as chairman and chief executive officer from the retiring William McCord. Although he's only 46, Biegler has spent nearly 27 years with the company and has overseen various operations.

Analysts say that Enserch's fortunes are rising along with natural gas prices, which have jumped 30 percent this year. Natural gas, because it is cleaner-burning than oil or coal, increasingly is lauded as an environmentally attractive and politically correct "fuel of the future" for which demand is expected to rise steadily.

Enserch has triple exposure to natural gas. Its largest revenue producer, Lone Star Gas, is the biggest natural gas utility in North Texas. The company's Enserch Exploration unit is involved in oil and gas exploration and production. Another unit, Enserch Development Corp., develops cogeneration plants that burn natural gas to generate electricity.

Analysts are applauding Enserch's decision, announced in February, to put up for sale its large, New York-based Ebasco engineering and construction unit, which last year reported an operating income of $32 million on revenues of $1.2 billion.

The sale, which could bring Enserch $350 million to $400 million, would allow it to sharply reduce its substantial long-term debt of $850 million and provide more capital for drilling new oil and gas wells.

Analysts extol the Ebasco sale in part because it would put Enserch's focus clearly on the natural gas business that is the core of its operations. Biegler says that Ebasco's presence in what is otherwise primarily a natural gas company has confused the Enserch corporate identity, making it harder for Wall Street analysts to evaluate, and potentially less attractive to investors looking for a pure natural gas stock.

Enserch also is drawing praise for its decision to cut its dividend, a move that will save the company $40 million annually.

Analysts are high on Enserch's plan to pour more money into oil and gas exploration and development. They're particularly enthusiastic about the company's big Garden Banks offshore drilling project in the Gulf of Mexico, which is expected to begin reaping revenues by mid-1995.

Biegler, president of Enserch before becoming CEO on May 1, says that he believes Enserch is "right at the breaking point of a new era ... a new period of growth."

Ron Barone, an analyst for Kidder, Peabody & Co. in New York, says that the outlook for Enserch is now "much, much better." He predicts the company's earnings will reach 75 cents per share this year and $1.05 next year.

Barone is encouraged by the growing market for natural gas and Enserch's decision to sell Ebasco. In addition, the Garden Banks project will provide the company "a tremendous amount of oil reserves," he said.

Barone urges Enserch shareholders to keep their stock, because he believes the price is "headed north."

Dan Tulis, an analyst for the Smith Barney, Harris Upham & Co. investment firm in New York, rates Enserch stock a "buy." He applauds Enserch's plans to shed Ebasco.

"I would prefer to see Enserch going back to its roots, of being a premier gas company," said Tulis, who predicts that the company's earnings will reach about 75 cents this year and $1 next year.

Tulis says that his buy recommendation on Enserch stock is the first he has made "in many, many years." The stock could sell for $24 to $30 a share within the next few years if the gas industry fares well, he said.

But Biegler is clearly in the hot seat as the company's new CEO, Tulis said.

"There's no question the company has to deliver," he said. "Enserch has to perform because over the last few years it's been a major disappointment. ... It's a question of regaining credibility."

Enserch's stock zoomed to $40 a share in 1981, when the company reported record earnings of $188 million, or $3.55 a share, on revenues of $3.4 billion. But by early 1992 the stock had plunged below $11.

Like other energy companies, Enserch was crippled by the mid-1980s' downturn in oil and gas prices. Production revenues dramatically declined. Income from natural-gas pipeline operations shrank. Shortly after Enserch pumped large sums of money into a major expansion of its oilfield services unit, drilling activity collapsed and many of the company's well-servicing rigs were idled. Enserch sold the oilfield services business after failing to turn it around.

Enserch's poor performance has been aggravated in six of the past seven years by warmer-than-normal winter weather that sharply reduced Lone Star Gas' sales.

Enserch reported a net loss of $41 million, or 62 cents a share, on revenues of $2.83 billion in 1992. The results were worsened by $52 million in one-time charges for debt restructuring and other items.

Enserch's picture brightened in this year's first quarter, when it reported earnings of $38 million, or 53 cents per share, on revenues of $958.5 million. Residential and commercial sales volumes for Lone Star Gas were up 22 percent over a year earlier. Enserch Exploration received an average price of $1.95 per 1,000 cubic feet for its gas, compared with only $1.63 a year earlier.

"It was a good first quarter," Biegler said. "Not a great one, but a good one."

The company said earlier this month that it also is expecting "a significant improvement" in second-quarter results over the prior year.

Biegler said that Lone Star Gas, the prime natural gas utility for Tarrant County and North Texas, is seeing increased demand for gas heating systems in new homes and for commercial gas cooling systems. And it expects future growth in sales of compressed natural gas as an alternative fuel for vehicle fleets.

Biegler said that Enserch also is banking on growth in its power-generation business, Enserch Development, which in the past five years has helped develop, finance and operate three cogeneration plants built at an average cost of about $200 million each. The plants burn natural gas to generate electricity and produce thermal energy in the form of direct exhaust heat, steam or hot water. The electricity is sold to local electric utilities. The thermal energy is used in production processes of manufacturing plants.

Analysts say that Enserch Exploration, which drills for and produces oil and gas, could add significantly to the future earnings of the parent company.

Enserch has budgeted $112 million for this year's capital expenditures on oil and gas exploration and development, a 70 percent increase over last year. More than $35 million is being pumped into drilling new gas wells in East Texas to increase Enserch's long-established production there.

For the longer term, analysts are encouraged by the company's Garden Banks drilling project offshore of Louisiana.

Development costs for the project, in which Lone Star owns a 100 percent interest, could top $300 million. But the company estimates that Garden Banks will yield 40,000 barrels of oil and 60 million cubic feet of gas daily when production peaks in about mid-1996.

Even if oil and gas prices remain at today's moderate levels, Garden Banks could provide Enserch more than $300 million in added annual oil and gas revenues when production there peaks. The company estimates that it eventually could recover 100 million barrels from the Garden Banks area.

CEO joined firm at 19

N.Y. Times News Service

DALLAS — Although he's risen to the top of a major Texas company at only age 46, David Biegler doesn't evoke the image of a hard-charging, high-strung chief executive officer.

"When something goes wrong, David doesn't bounce off walls like some high-profile CEOs," says Bob Fowler, a former corporate mentor to Biegler.

In early May, Biegler became the new CEO of Enserch Corp., parent company of Lone Star Gas, Enserch Exploration and other operations. Biegler replaced William McCord, 65, who retired.

"He's not loud, and he's not bodacious," Fowler said of Biegler. "I have never heard David chastise his associates or employees in front of other people.

"When David chews somebody out, they know they've gotten good, solid instructions, but it's not loud or offensive. ... They don't feel like they've been beaten to death," said Fowler, the former chairman of Enserch Exploration.

Biegler hooked up with Enserch 27 years ago, at age 19, working part time in the company's petroleum engineering office in his native San Antonio. After receiving a physics degree from St. Mary's University in San Antonio, Biegler joined Enserch full time.

While in his early 20s, he quickly established himself as a rising star. Biegler's recommendations for boosting oil and gas output in various fields enabled Enserch to reap millions of dollars in additional revenues, Fowler said.

Later, as president of Lone Star Gas, Biegler headed the successful efforts to reach legal settlements that released the company from long-term gas-purchase contracts that threatened its financial stability, Fowler said.

Before becoming CEO, Biegler was president and chief operating officer of Enserch, ranking behind only McCord.

"He assesses situations very carefully and very accurately and then takes action," Fowler said of Biegler. "He's the best problem solver I've ever known."

When he's not working, Biegler enjoys spending time with his family at their home in the Dallas suburb of University Park or on six acres they own at the Richland-Chambers reservoir in East Texas (where Biegler recently tried out a new ski boat).

Biegler is married to Diane Knape, a homemaker and former production analyst for Enserch Exploration.

They have four children, ranging in age from 4 to 11. Biegler also has two children (now ages 21 and 19), from a previous marriage.

Arch Petroleum reports Keystone field rules amended

FORT WORTH — Arch Petroleum Inc. announced that the Railroad Commission of Texas (RRC) had amended its interim order regarding field rules in the Keystone Ellenburger Field, Winkler County, Texas.

Previously, as an incentive to encourage water production, the RRC had allowed operators to produce a bonus allowable of 1/2 mcf of natural gas per barrel of water produced from the Ellenburger formation. The RRC's revised interim order, which expires in May, 1994, will now require producers to accumulate all such bonus allowables for sale at a later date. This temporary delay does not affect the producers' gas well and casinghead gas allowables, which presently total 2,388 mcf per day for wells operated by Arch in the Keystone Ellenburger Field.

Following a series of lengthy hearings in 1991-1992, the RRC issued an interim order implementing a reservoir management program designed to reduce pressure in the Ellenburger reservoir through production of large volumes of water in order to optimize recovery of remaining oil and gas reserves. In sworn testimony before the RRC, representatives of the billionaire Bass family's Bass Enterprises Production Company estimated remaining recoverable oil reserves of approximately 42 million barrels and recoverable gas reserves of approximately 450 bcf in September, 1992. Pennzoil Petroleum Company acquired the interests of Chevron U.S.A. Inc. in the field. In a recent hearing, Pennzoil substantially endorsed the Bass plan and Bass' projections of recoverable reserves.

'We will continue to consider every appropriate technique to maximize recovery of the very significant hydrocarbon reserves that we all believe remain.'

Larry Kalas,
President, Arch Petroleum

Arch president Larry Kalas stated, "Arch intends to continue diligent implementation of the RRC's order. We are currently producing over 30,000 barrels of water per day which will allow Arch to bank over 15,000 mcf per day. We will continue to consider every appropriate technique to maximize recovery of the very significant hydrocarbon reserves that we all believe remain."

Mr. Kalas also stated that Arch's December, 1992 sale of a volumetric production payment of 18.3 bcf of natural gas from the Keystone Ellenburger Field to Enron Reserve Acquisition Corp. was made pursuant to an extensive agreement which included provision for amending the delivery schedule for gas.

WHEN YOU NEED TO GET FACE TO FACE WITH THE PERMIAN BASIN OIL INDUSTRY :

PERMIAN BASIN OIL REPORT

The Permian Basin is an oil and gas producing empire of 100,000 square miles with an oil well for every square mile. Comprised of 54 counties in Southeast New Mexico and West Texas, this far flung industry accounts for roughly 20 percent of the nation's total oil production.

Yet, a long standing problem has been the lack of a single newspaper to serve the thousands of companies and over 40,000 workers involved in exploration, land, production, drilling, oilfield service and supply, pipelines and construction, refining, and transportation.

But now, the Permian Basin Oil Report, published weekly by the Midland Reporter-Telegram, has become the information source for the Permian Basin oil industry.

Packed with information and articles about oil and gas people, products, companies, issues, events, drilling, exploration, and production, the Oil Report appears each Sunday as a section of the Midland Reporter-Telegram. Additionally, it is mailed to producers, operators and oilfield service companies throughout the Permian Basin and in 13 Southwest states.

If the Permian Basin is your target market, the Permian Basin Oil Report is the way to reach it.

It's been said that there are two kinds of people in the world: those who are fascinated by the history of their own families and those who are not.

Genealogy evidently is one of those things that you either are very, very interested in or you aren't, with very little ground in between. Fortunately for those of us who would like to know more about our ancestry but don't know how to start, genealogists are very generous with their time, knowledge and expertise.

When I first thought about writing a feature about researching the family tree, I thought it would be a relatively simple start to pick an ancestor who wasn't too far back in the line and who was historically easy to find. In my case, that was my paternal great-grandfather, Cooper Wright, who had been a sheriff in Clay County, Texas (that's Henrietta, for those who, like

HAVE YOU HEARD?

Couple honored with festivities

By Marilyn McKnight Harrison

After a wedding trip to Cancun, Mexico, Jim Jones and the former Nancy Ware will make their home in Denver, Colo. They exchanged vows the evening of May 29 in the Episcopal Church of the Holy Trinity.

McKnight-Harrison

Parents of the bride are Carlene Ware and Herbert Ware Jr., both of Midland. The bridegroom is the son of Shirley and Jim Jones of Clifton.

The pre-nuptial festivities began in February with an engagement coffee given by Nancy's mother at Midland Country Club.

In March, Nancy was honored with a brunch and kitchen and recipe shower in the home of Angie (Mrs. Carroll) Grafa, with Betsy (Mrs. A.E.) Kauffman of Dallas as co-hostess.

April found Nancy and Jim off to Clifton, where they were honored with a miscellaneous shower in the Fellowship Hall of First United Methodist Church. Family members gathered that evening at the Parks' Ranch for an "Easter Get-Together" supper. Hostesses were Charlene Parks and Pat Wright.

A golf weekend was held at the "Warehouse" in Ruidoso, N.M., where Jim and his hosts managed to play golf at all the area courses (and some twice, we are told). Attending were Herb Ware II, Carl Ware and Ted Jones, all of Midland.

The Garden Room of Midland Country Club was the setting in May for a display shower. The hostesses were Darlene (Mrs. Alfred) Boudreaux, Juanita (Mrs. Durward) Goolsby, Edna (Mrs. W.M.) Hibbitts, Sarah (Mrs. Ron) Holcomb, Ann (Mrs. James) Walton and Dolores (Mrs. Robert) Wynne.

That evening, a cookout honored the couple at Midland Country Club's Tennis Pavilion. The hosts were former Midlanders Ann and Don Ormand of Dallas and their children, Suzanne and Scott Tatum and Melissa Ormand, all of Midland. The guests participated in a scavenger hunt to gather articles necessary in wedding preparation. Golf carts were provided to secure the items within the club area.

Wedding week festivities began on Thursday with a paper party held in the home of Fran (Mrs. Dick) Saxe. Other hostesses were Geri (Mrs. Ken) Griffin, Jeri (Mrs. Reginald) McCaslin, Schatzie (Mrs. Charles) Tighe, Gwen (Mrs. Marshall) Jolly and Jean (Mrs. Jim) Elkin.

"Drop your husband and break your dates" was the theme for a bachelorette party that evening to wish Nancy "Good Life and Good Cheer." The affair was held in the home of Lisa (Mrs. John) Bettis. Cohostesses were Emily (Mrs. Herb) Ware, Lauren (Mrs. Craig) Aldridge, Clare (Mrs. Glen) Ellis, Linda (Mrs. David) Kalish and Linda Green.

Friday's events included a bridesmaids' luncheon at the Racquet Club, with the bride's sister, Alison (Mrs. Brett) Smith, as hostess; a manicure party at Christine Valmy given by Kim (Mrs. Bobby) Hillin, Jan (Mrs. Bill) Kalil, Shelley (Mrs. Chip) Smith, Barbara Jowell and Liz (Mrs. Joe) Sloan, and the rehearsal dinner hosted by the groom's parents at LaBodega Restaurant.

Refreshments were provided for members of the wedding party prior to the ceremony by Ruth McFarland and Karen (Mrs. Roy) Williamson.

The wedding reception was held at Midland Country Club. A brunch on Sunday, "Hasta La Vista, Nancy and Jim" was held in the home of the groom's brother and sister-in-law, Ted and Julie Jones. They were assisted by Katey and Dennis Fink of College Station and Beverly and Miro Vranac of Dallas, sisters and brothers-in-law of the groom.

SENIOR PARTIES — Meredith Morgan, who graduated Friday from Trinity High School, was honored with a recent graduation supper by Jana and Jeff Hinkley in their Trinity Estates home.

The daughter of LaVerne and Tom Morgan, Meredith plans to attend Southwestern University at Georgetown this fall.

Guests included former classmates from St. Ann's and Trinity Schools, as well as members of her high school religion class at St. Stephen's Catholic Church. Special guests were Meredith's grandparents, Audrey and Howard Teichelman of Holland.

One table was decorated to reflect Meredith's school years and achievements at Trinity, and another was adorned in Southwestern's school colors of black and yellow. The party rooms were further decorated with school memorabilia.

In addition, Meredith and other Trinity graduates, Rachel Kubicki and Nicki Holloway, were honored with a senior tea in the home of Vina (Mrs. John) Rahlfs. The other hostesses were Doris (Mrs. Dave) Watson, Janet (Mrs. Bob) Stafford, Sally Mogford, Mary (Mrs. Ron) McFadden and Pat Shaw.

Guests were the teachers, administrators and the other girls who are students at Trinity High School. Special guests were the honorees' mothers, LaVerne Morgan, Donna (Mrs. Gerald) Kubicki and Marie (Mrs. Willie) Holloway.

...Amanda Brown, a 1993 graduate of Lee High School, was honored recently with a cookout and pool party.

The fun event was hosted by her aunt, Teri (Mrs. Randy) Brown, and her grandmother, Rama (Mrs. Dan) Brown, at the latter's home.

The daughter of Denise and Mike Brown, Amanda plans to attend Texas Tech University this fall.

...Midland High graduate Chim Williams was honored with a scavenger hunt and picnic recently at the home of her aunt and uncle, Janet and Bob Pollard. Co-hosts were Susie and Gary Burnett and Sherry and Jerry Hewett.

After the hunt, which took Chim and her classmates all over Midland, they gathered on the back lawn of the Pollard home for volleyball and an old-fashioned picnic meal, featurning fried chicken and all the trimmings. Multi-colored balloons and fresh flowers were used to decorate.

The honoree's grandmother, Chic Williams of Fort Stockton, was a special guest at the party.

The daughter of Modesta and Clayton Williams, Chim plans to attend Texas A&M University.

TREE: Family search often not easy myself, don't usually locate things by county), in the 1890s. I figured he'd be easy to find because I knew his name, approximately when he was in office and where.

Midland is blessed with two extremely good sources of research for local and area genealogists: the Midland County Public Library's genealogical section and the Family History Center of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. I wanted to go to both of them.

Anderson

First, I contacted Melba Midkiff, who is one of the librarians with the LDS Family History Center. She's also a member of one of Midland's oldest families and has done extensive research on both sides of her children's family trees.

Some of the equipment at the center — including the microfiche reader, computers, copiers, printers and other machines — looks very complicated, but really isn't once you get used to it. And the center is open to everyone who is interested in personal family research. "Anyone can use the center," Mrs. Midkiff said. "There is no charge unless you order something, and those charges are minimal."

She first started researching her family in 1972, Mrs. Midkiff said, and quickly became engrossed in the process. She also quickly learned one important genealogy lesson: Never assume the family last name was always spelled the way it is now. Researching the Midkiff family around here was easy, she said, because their local history is so well documented, but "1820 is as far back as I can go on it. I can't go as far back as I'd like." One of the reasons for that is that records from before that time don't list the same spelling. "I have found 17 different spellings for 'Midkiff.'"

MANY GENEALOGISTS HAVE this problem, she said, because spelling of immigrants' names often was not accurate. "Most of our ancestors didn't know how to read and write," so when the immigration officials or census takers were listing their names, the officials spelled them in whatever way seemed logical at the time. And it could have been even more complicated if the officials weren't good spellers themselves.

Ancestor-hunting can be fascinating for anyone who gets bitten by the genealogy bug, and facts can be dug out in many ways. But don't expect it to be a quick learning experience. "There are hundreds of ways we can find your ancestors," Mrs. Midkiff said. "You just have to hunt.

"Patience and persistence will pay off. Do your homework, check the county (a lot of genealogical records are on the county level), know if you are looking in the right places — and you'll have a chance to find the information you are looking for."

In my case, I thought that since my great-grandfather had been a public official, his records would be relatively easy to find.

Wrong.

Mrs. Midkiff took my information — basically, name, place and date — and showed me how to look him up on different pieces of equipment and in different sources of reference.

He wasn't there.

Wherever I looked, I couldn't find him. Finally, I asked her to check out my paternal grandfather's records on the computer — thinking that my grandfather's parents would be listed there — and there he was. All my life I thought my great-grandfather's first name was Cooper. Wrong again — Cooper was his middle name; his first name was George. (Later, when I mentioned this fact to my father, he said, "Didn't you know that?")

MY EFFORTS AT FAMILY research were already getting complicated and I was only three generations back.

After three hours with Mrs. Midkiff patiently explaining LDS Family History Center and all its capabilities to me, I was beginning to realize how huge the task of family research really is — also how addictive.

Next stop was the Midland County Public Library, where two wonderful sources of genealogical information are the genealogical section and County Librarian Sandra Wegner, who also is an avid genealogist.

Now that I knew what my great-grandfather's real name was, I figured I should be able to find out more about him, and in the process, find out more about genealogy.

Mrs. Wegner warned me that nothing about genealogy is easy or quick. She said when ever anyone comes in wanting to start their family research, "the first thing I usually say is, 'Do you have a library card?' We have some beginning books that are very simple." She also advised that all genealogists, no matter what their level of expertise, use the standard forms for listing ancestors' names and important dates. "Midland Genealogical Society has forms for the convenience of people who come to the library."

These forms are basic tools for family researchers, and include a pedigree chart and relationship chart (these charts also are available through the LDS Family History Center). Using the charts is very important because genealogists often need help in their research, and "it's very difficult to explain the problem orally, so putting the information down on a standard, accepted genealogical manner helps you communicate in an easier manner."

Next, Mrs. Wegner advises family researchers to start gathering any and all information about specific ancestors as they can, from such written records as death certificates, marriage records, land records, cemetery records, county history books, wills and even family Bibles.

FAMILY LEGEND ALSO CAN be a source of good information. "Never totally discount family tradition without examining it closely, because usually there's a bit of truth there somewhere," she said.

Census records can be "a wonderful genealogical tool," Mrs. Wegner said, because they contain a lot of information which can leads to other records. But, she warned, the census records for the entire history of the United States are not complete. "The 1890 census was lost to fire. I think a few (records) from a few counties in Texas survived."

Also, census records for 1840 and before are not as complete as those that were taken after. Records for "1840 and earlier just listed the head of household and not every member in the house," she said. "Census records are a wonderful record, but are not always totally accurate because they (people taking the census) may have asked the person who didn't really know. And sometimes people are listed by nicknames that you don't recognize."

In addition to a lot of research, genealogy involves a lot of writing, Mrs. Wegner said. "If you don't like to write or read, forget it or hire somebody (to research your family for you). You can do a lot of genealogy without ever leaving town, but you will do a lot of writing — and a lot of waiting" for responses to your letters. Many genealogical publications can put researchers in different parts of the country in touch with each other — and genealogists usually are more than willing to share their research with others.

ANOTHER PIECE OF ADVICE Mrs. Wegner offered: "I would advise anyone interested in getting into genealogy to have a computer and start loading information onto software" because computers can make storing, filing and retrieving information so much easier than doing the work by hand.

After collecting any and all information they can, interested family researchers can use the books in the genealogical section of the library. (Most of them are for reference only and cannot be checked out, so be prepared to spend a lot of time in the library.) The section has its own card catalog for the convenience of genealogists, and reference librarians are available to help researchers get started.

In searching for my great-grandfather, I showed Mrs. Wegner the records I had already found (including his corrected name), and she immediately focused onto his parents and their strong Virginia roots. Evidently there's a lot of good research material available for Virginia, so that's where she took me — the shelves of Virginia books.

And that's where she left me, happily searching for information on my great-great-grandparents.

"Have fun!" she said.

That's the fascination about genealogy — it's a puzzle and a mystery, all wrapped up in your family name(s). You start off with two parents, branch off to four grandparents, eight great-grandparents, and the list goes on and on, one name leading to several others, as far back as the records can take you. And then you start the search for more records. I can't imagine ever running out of relatives to find.

Some people think researching your family is, at best, a waste of time, and at worst, a dangerous occupation. "Everybody expects to find a skeleton" in their family closet, Mrs. Wegner said.

My maternal grandfather used to say: "Don't ever research your family — someone is bound to be a horse thief."

"Yes!" one expert genealogist once said to me. "And they are the most interesting ones!"

I can't wait to find out more about mine.

Keisling named 'Altrusan of Year'

Staff report

Caroline S. Keisling was honored as "Altrusan of the Year" by Altrusa International Club of Midland recently at its installation banquet at the Plaza Club. Francine Weaver presented Mrs. Keisling a plaque.

Seeds for Thought

Landscaping helps cut energy costs

By Deborah A. Benge

Benge

We've not experienced sizzling hot days — yet — but we all know how hot it can be in the summertime. Our homes, inside and out, should be cool retreats, and landscaping with energy conservation in mind can help in the battle with summertime heat.

It's not possible for us to control temperature, wind and other weather elements, but we can make a significant difference by placing and planting trees, shrubs, vines and landscape structures properly. Proper selection and placement can lower temperatures in inside and outside living areas.

Trees, of course, make a tremendous difference with the shade they provide on the house, patio, porches, driveways and other areas of the home. Shading the roof, walls and glazed areas of a house from afternoon sun can lower temperatures inside the house by as much as 10 degrees. So you can see that by planting shade trees on the south and west sides of your home and other buildings will make a tremendous contribution in energy savings. Deciduous trees will drop their leaves in the winter so that warm sun rays can shine on those same surfaces, helping with the warming of the house during the winter months.

It's hard to fight the temptation of planting a fast-growing trees, but try to avoid them. Fast-growing trees are subject to many problems, including insects, diseases, brittle wood, shallow/invasive roots and short lives. By selecting a recommended medium-growth-rate tree, you'll end up with a much better tree. Find out what the top 30 landscape trees for our area are by contacting the Midland County Extension office, 2445 E. Business Loop 20, and ask for Recommended Landscape Plants for the Permian Basin.

Espaliers and vines are another good way to buffer the house and extended outdoor living areas from the summer heat. Vines, shrubs and some trees can be used to shade walls. The foliage cover insulates the wall against summer heat and cold winter winds. Trees, shrubs and vines also provide an effective buffer against noise pollution.

Many vines (English ivy) will cling to masonry or wooden surfaces so additional support isn't necessary, but it should be kept in mind that these vines can be very destructive to walls and other surfaces. Other vines need additional support to twine around, like honeysuckle. Trellis, wires, string and other types of support will be good for these vines.

If you have a new landscape that isn't yet providing shade or if you have windows that simply need shade and protection until shade trees become large enough to provide shade, you may want to turn to fast-growing perennial or annual vines. Glazed areas that face east, south or west may need this type of help. Growing these vines on trellis, wire or string a few feet away from the window will make a tremendous difference in the room temperature.

Find out what the top 10 landscape vines in the Permian Basin are by obtaining the list mentioned above. Fast-growing annual vines that will cover during the season are hyacinth bean (a beautiful vine), scarlet runner bean and morning glory.

Overhead structures can be beautiful as well as practical in reducing summer heat in and out of the home. Arbors, lath and pergolas adjacent to the south and west side of homes or out in the landscape will really help with cooling. These are especially nice because they do not totally exclude the sunlight but screen out some light and reduce heat. The effect you get is very pleasant for sitting and relaxing outdoors, and you'll still have enough light to grow other plants.

Vines can be easily grown on these structures to enhance the beauty and shading of the area. Wisteria, Carolina jessamine, coral honeysuckle and grape are all great for this purpose.

Ground covers provide yet another way to alter heat in and around the home. The temperature a few inches above turf or grass is 12 to 15 degrees cooler than the temperature a few inches above asphalt or concrete. By planting ground cover or turf between houses and around paved areas, you can reduce the amount of heat that accumulates in that area. Again for a list of the top 10 ground covers, come by the extension office and ask for the recommended landscape list for the Permian Basin.

Landscapes that consist primarily of turf grass can be very demanding in terms of water, maintenance and money, so a good way to conserve on all three is to rely on ground covers. This way you'll still have the heat reduction that turf provides but at the same time reduce water, maintenance and money demands. Areas of the lawn that have become shaded out by large shade trees could also be replaced by ground covers, ending up with a nice, attractive solution.

Last but not least is the protection that windbreaks provide. Windbreaks can protect the house and surrounding areas from harsh, cold winter winds, and channel cooling summer breezes through outdoor living areas in the summer. The effective zone of protection for a living windbreak is approximately 30 times its height, although maximum protection occurs in a range of five to seven times the height of the planting.

Some excellent trees for windbreaks include Eastern red cedar, Afghan pine, Arizona cypress, Russian olive, Rocky Mountain juniper, pinon pine, sumacs and eleagnus.

If fuel bills and summer heat get the best of you, don't overlook a simple, beautiful solution that is good for the environment — energy landscaping. For more information ask the county extension office for publication L-1709, Landscaping for Energy Conservation.

At Wit's End

Advertising illusion can't disguise flab

By Erma Bombeck

Bombeck

Nearly every product in America is sold by illusion.

Perfume is promoted by a model sipping white wine on a desolate beach somewhere. Denture creams are touted by a couple with white hair tucked under their motorcycle helmets. They are hyperventilating from the excitement. Car manufacturers are the worst. Sex and speed are promised. You rarely see a car with a kid's head hanging out the window making noises like a siren.

What is all this leading up to? Bathing suits.

Every year around this time, magazines and newspapers articles declare they have the suit for those "problem figures." They proceed to picture a woman with arrows pointing to "too much tummy," "cellulite," "small top" and "skinny legs." The woman is gorgeous. If I had a shape like that I'd send my portfolio to Playboy.

I have yet to see a real female with real figure problems in one of those ads. Where is the woman who carries her handbag into the pool with her to cover her stomach? Where is the bather with a rear end that looks like her parachute never opened? And legs! How many women do you know who complain of skinny legs? (The one Phyllis Diller used to describe as, "The last time I saw legs that thin, they were carrying a message!") Most of us have legs that speak to us when we walk. Our upper arms could fan Samoa.

I used to exercise with a woman who fell on her knees and flogged herself to death with a barbell if she ate a dill pickle. I had more water around my toilet seat than she retained in her entire body. Most of us killed ourselves trying to fit into a leotard. The leotard has never been made to fit the body of a person who needs exercise.

I digress. Generally, the public has bought illusion. No one in the commercials ever drinks a beer alone. A popular shampoo will give you the social life of a rock star, and you can buy eye makeup and look like Cindy Crawford. (Not if you had a Thighmaster implant between your knees!)

Opponents of the illusion theory will tell you this is not true. They say they deal with reality. Miss Americas are not chosen on what judges see, but on their intelligence. When I see a Miss America whose dress is permanently crinkled just under her stomach when she stands up, I'll buy their theory.

Until then, there must be bathing suits out there somewhere — with matching coats.

DEAR ABBY

Stifling last laughs is not uncommon at funerals

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: This is in response to the letter from "Embarrassed in Boston," whose 31-year-old son and his cousin got the giggles during the funeral service of a relative.

Van Buren

I attended the funeral of a co-worker with several other co-workers (all over 25), and during the service, a drunk walked by outside the church, singing at the top of his voice. That started it! We started giggling and could not stop.

To make matters worse, a car came screeching around the corner and went speeding off. Someone leaned over and whispered, "THAT was the hearse." We were giggling so hard by that time, we were all crying. We weren't loud, but our shoulders were shaking and tears were rolling down our faces.

We were embarrassed, but powerless to stop ourselves. Before then, we had been very tense. We meant no disrespect to our friend, and we felt that she probably would have laughed right along with us. — GOT THE GIGGLES IN CALIFORNIA

DEAR GOT THE GIGGLES: It should comfort you to know that my mail is filled with letters from others who also got the giggles at a funeral. Read on:

DEAR ABBY: My sister and I lost our father last January, and oddly enough we both handle our stress by laughing.

First, on the way to the funeral, my son accidentally sprayed himself in the face with mace; then while seated directly behind my daughter in the church, I discovered that she had head lice! Then, my sister who was sitting next to me was sobbing and dabbing her eyes with a tissue when I noticed that her mascara had run, giving her the appearance of having two black eyes!

The final laugh came at the cemetery when they placed the casket on the rollers and one end collapsed!

Meanwhile, my sister and I were laughing hysterically. Thank God, everyone thought we were crying. — THE LAUGHING BLATON SISTERS IN MESA, ARIZ.

DEAR ABBY: After reading the letter about the two grown men (cousins) who got the giggles during the funeral service of their uncle, I had to write and tell you what happened at my Grammy's funeral.

The minister told everyone to stand for the eulogy and prayer, and that's when the giggling and snickering began. Soon, the minister was giggling and snickering along with the rest of the mourners. Guess what started it all? It seems that when Grampy stood up, his pants fell to his ankles, and he was so deep in prayer he didn't bother to pull up his pants until after the eulogy was over.

After the funeral, everyone gathered at my mother's house where one of my uncles said, "Well, Dad sure got the last laugh on Mom!"

That funny episode broke the tension and made Grammy's death a little less painful. So, as the saying goes, "Laughter is the best medicine." — B.M. REINHARDT, SANTA RITA, GUAM

DEAR ABBY: Some years ago, I attended a formal church wedding in Milwaukee, Wis. It was THE social event of the century ... as well as the merging of two enormous fortunes. When the bride was asked to repeat her marriage vows, she was so overwhelmed by her emotions, she started to titter, then giggle, then she burst into tears!

The minister had to stop the ceremony until she composed herself. — I WAS THERE

DEAR ABBY: Many people write to you to complain about having sent a gift that was never acknowledged. It is not always a case of bad manners.

Recently, my parents celebrated their 60th wedding anniversary with an open-house party. A good number of gifts were separated from the cards before the gifts were opened.

My parents would have been delighted to send everyone proper thank-you notes, if they had known whom to thank — and for what!

I read some time ago, in a helpful hint column, that it is a good idea to write a description of the gift on the back of the card accompanying the gift.

This is done by some people — but not enough. It is very difficult to write a thank-you note for a gift if you don't have a clue what the gift was. — FRUSTRATED IN KANSAS

DEAR FRUSTRATED: Thank you for a valuable addition to this column. I plan to use that suggestion myself.

DEAR ABBY: Fifteen years ago, my husband had an affair with a close friend of mine. I thought the hurtful memory had faded, but now it hit me in the face a second time with a computer twist.

My husband spends a lot of time on his home computer. He belongs to some services on the computer using the telephone.

He has spent more than $2,000 on charges over the last year. He met a woman through one of these services. She lives 3,000 miles away. We have been married more than 40 years — we're no spring chickens.

I just received an anonymous phone call telling me to start checking out my husband's computer activities. Abby, I don't know anything about computers, but I started listening and looking around for whatever I could find.

I found greeting cards and little gifts this computer pal had sent to my husband. She had even sent pictures of the gifts he had sent to her!

I thought I made the right decision years ago when he asked for a second chance; now the hurt and distrust are back again.

How does one confront another woman with a computer 3,000 miles away? Or do I forgive my computer-crazy husband again, with a cloud over my trust in him? — HATES COMPUTERS IN SIMI VALLEY, CALIF.

DEAR HATES: Let your husband know that your feelings are hurt, and you do not condone his long-distance romance complete with "little gifts."

"How to Have a Lovely Wedding" contains everything you need to know about wedding planning. To order, send a business-sized, self-addressed envelope, plus check or money order for $3.95 ($4.50 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, Wedding Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054. (Postage is included.)

Theme weddings fulfill fantasies, but take work

By Barbara Mayer
Associated Press

Concentrate on the big picture instead of getting caught up in authenticating details of a theme wedding, advises Georgene Muller Lockwood, author of "Your Victorian Wedding" (Prentice Hall).

The factors that make the most impact are location and room decor, music and clothing.

Investigate public and private museums, parks, old inns and bed and breakfast places, suggests Lockwood. Or transform a modern setting with decorations and flowers.

"Music is terribly important," she says. "People go to the trouble of setting an atmosphere and then have a deejay playing top-40 tunes. Instead, have music that is more in keeping with your setting."

For a 19th century wedding, a harpist, string trio or pianist would be suitable. For a roaring '20s dinner dance, hire a band to play old-time jazz.

While planning your theme, don't forget about the guests, says the author. The more insistent your theme, the more you need to involve others in the wedding party and guests.

Explain why you've chosen this type of wedding. Create an attractive written program, which guests can keep, which explains the significance of the events.

Be prepared to do a great deal of the work yourself. Beth Johnson and Brian Desmond of Hartford did more of the planning for their Tudor wedding than they wanted because they couldn't find professional wedding planners in sympathy with their ideas.

If you want a costume wedding, look for local historic re-enactment groups, suggests Johnson. They usually can lead you to people with skills in sewing, cooking, music and dance performance. In large cities, professional party planners can be helpful. In all localities, little theater groups may be glad to help you put on a fantasy wedding.

'Second time around' can bring love, complications

Associated Press

The second marriage may be the one that lasts, but there are plenty of complications, says a mental health specialist.

A major one is the history of the first, says Dr. Donna Rankin, associate professor of community and mental health nursing at Loyola University Chicago.

She says that each partner must be sure he or she is over the first marital relationship and has resolved the anger, vengefulness or guilt that may have accompanied it. Pre-marital counseling is especially important for couples about to remarry.

"Most experts say it's best to wait two years before remarrying, though this varies, dependent on the length of the first union," she says. "And sadly, many people end up marrying the same type of person and make the same mistakes, even though they swear they would 'never do that again.'"

She says statistics show the second marriage is twice as likely as the first to end in divorce.

Another difficulty is when each partner is at a different lifecycle stage. "One spouse may have already owned a house and is looking forward to moving into a condo with fewer responsibilities. The other spouse, who has never owned a home, may be looking forward to shopping around and choosing a home."

The different structure of the second marriage can bring strain, she says. "In addition to new in-laws, often there are children — living with either spouse or their ex-spouse — the previous spouse and even previous in-laws to deal with," she says. Instant families that result from second marriages can be difficult if one partner has never had children.

On the other hand, she says that a stable new marriage can have a positive impact on children who suffered from the drug or alcohol dependency of a parent.

"The psychological benefits of a second marriage are tremendous, and if both spouses work, relinquishing a role as sole provider is therapeutic for the family budget as well. Children can gain from the strength and support of having two families, while spouses re-ignite the romantic spark by being part of a couple again."

Learning the part

'I know you will."

"I know I won't."

"I know you will."

"I know I won't."

When people's desires are in conflict, most often a battle is brewing. To solve the dilemma usually requires a compromise.

Not so here. No compromise is allowed. Both parties must fight to get their own way. The only tools they can use are body language and their tone of voice repeating the same line over and over.

No violence is permitted.

Obviously, this is not real life.

Instead, it's a game of tactics being played at Midland Community Theatre this summer as adults learn the basics about acting.

"We do a lot of games and exercises that emphasize different areas that are involved in acting," said Rene Brister Chambers, MCT's education theater director and part-time acting instructor at Midland College.

"The way that we get people to do things for us — we have this range from trying to seduce them, as it were to do it, to threatening them to do it.

"They have to play with all those ranges but with just those words. So one partner might take the other partner's hand, or reach and touch their face, or instead they might get angry and shake a fist at their partner's face.

"In a play you know if you're going to be successful or not. You know what's going to happen, but you act as though you don't know what will happen. And you take whatever course of action the character would to try and get what he wants.

"The outcome doesn't matter. It's the doing — the convincing or the threatening or the begging."

These adult students also find themselves "Falling Through a Hole in the World."

"It's a controlled imagery session where the students use their imaginations," Ms. Chambers said. "And it's got a strong tie in to sensory images — what did you see, what color was it, what shape was it, what did it feel like to the touch, was it cold, was it hot, what did you hear? Again, just an exercise in using their imaginations."

Ms. Chambers, who plans on teaching another adult acting class this this fall at MCT, said the course is "an abbreviated version of my college acting class."

So far, she said, "It's going real well."

The teaching method Ms. Chambers uses, she said, "is tied into character motivation or character objective. I use a list of nine questions by author/ teacher Uta Hagen which guides the student through discovery of the character.

"What the character is like. Where the character is. What has happened to the character in the past. And, most importantly, what they want, what stands in their way, and what they are going to do to get what they want."

Other resources Ms. Chambers uses include "Acting is Believing" by Charles McGaw and "Acting One" by Robert Cohen. "Respect for Acting," a book by Ms. Hagen, a successful stage actress, was the textbook Ms. Chambers studied in her first acting class in college.

"I really teach from those three books, and anything else that I encounter," Ms. Chambers said.

The MCT acting class is for beginners.

"Most of them are taking it because they've always wanted to act, and they were always just a little bit hesitant. They weren't quite sure they knew what they were doing. So this is a a safe way to start.

"Some of them did a

Fans can stroll down 'Penny Lane' on 'Magical Mystery Tour'

By Karin Davies
Associated Press writer

LIVERPOOL, England — "Oh, look, Mum, it's Penny Lane!"

Andrea Sutton, a 13-year-old nouveau Beatlemaniac, posed for a snapshot next to the painted street sign, beneath grim, gray clouds which obscured the "blue suburban skies" of the 1967 hit by John Lennon and Paul McCartney.

Quoting from the lyrics, the Oxfordshire teen-ager looked for "a barber showing photographs of ev'ry head he's had the pleasure to have known."

She saw no barber but Penny Lane still has a barber's shop, and "the shelter in the middle of the roundabout" is now Sgt. Pepper's Bistro.

Andrea and her mother, fortysomething Sally Sutton, each had a "Ticket to Ride" on the "Beatles Magical History Tour" of Liverpool, the hometown of the Fab Four and the Mersey beat.

It was hard to tell who was happier to be on the two-hour bus trip — Mum who grew up with The Beatles, or the fledgling fan who was born a decade after the group broke up in 1970 and learned about them in school and by rifling through her mother's collection of vinyl.

"We were mad about them," Sutton told her daughter, who rolled her eyes.

Sutton tried to explain that The Beatles were "more important than just their music," that they introduced new styles, new ideas, new attitudes.

But the history lesson trailed off after Beatles haircuts and long hair; well before mysticism, marijuana smoked in the gents at Buckingham Palace and Lennon's claim that "We're more popular than Jesus now."

Next stop: the inspiration for "Strawberry Fields Forever."

Near the Menlove Avenue home where Lennon lived with his Aunt Mimi and Uncle George, the Salvation Army cared for girls at a Victorian mansion in Strawberry Field. The army's brass band used to perform at a garden party each summer, and Lennon and his aunt would attend.

A modern building has replaced the mansion, but the original ornate gates remain, with "Strawberry Field" written on the pillars.

And perhaps somewhere there is Lennon's perch: "No one I think is in my tree, I mean it must be high or low."

Hilary Oxlade, in her 13th year as a "Beatle guide," said it is not unusual to see young people dragooned into the tour by nostalgic parents.

'The Beatles will go down in history as the most influential musicians of the 20th century. The only sad thing for the kids of today and tomorrow is that the records, the books, the films and the clips on TV can't tell you what it was really like back then.'

— Dave Jones, Liverpool resident

"Youngsters are learning about The Beatles through school work on music, and, of course, they've heard them on the radio, and maybe at home," she said.

Oxlade said her daughter borrowed her Beatles collection when she went away to college, and while recently touring college campuses with her son they listened to the Beatles.

"I don't like his music, he doesn't like mine, so we take Beatles tapes with us in the car," Oxlade said. "That satisfies us both."

Robert and Sally Bromley had their four children, ages 5 to 12, in tow as they strolled through the "The Beatles Story," a museum designed to convey the sights, sounds and texture of the '60s.

"I was a bit young at the time, but I have two older sisters who were into the Beatles," said Sally Bromley, 36. "We have all their albums."

The little ones — Grant, 7, and Harriet, 5 — played on a yellow submarine, and their mother said the title song was their favorite.

The eldest, Laura, 12, was fascinated by the girls screaming outside a hotel where The Beatles were staying. "Mummy, why are the police taking them away?"

Mrs. Bromley tried to explain that The Beatles were like Michael Jackson, only bigger.

Ron Jones, disc jockey at the Cavern Club, a one-time vegetable warehouse that became famous as a venue for The Beatles, agreed that the 1960s music is hot again.

"In the '70s in Liverpool, there was a very heavy backlash against the '60s," he said. "In the '80s and '90s, there was a resurgence. The kids are now interested in the music of that era — the Beatles, the Kinks, the Monkees."

He showed slips of paper requesting songs: "Any Beatles, Em." "Any Beatles Again!!!"

Dave Jones, managing director of Cavern City Tours Ltd., which runs the Cavern as well as Beatles tours and an annual convention, was in Liverpool when John, Paul, Ringo and George were fellow residents.

"The Beatles will go down in history as the most influential musicians of the 20th century," he said. "The only sad thing for the kids of today and tomorrow is that the records, the books, the films and the clips on TV can't tell you what it was really like back then."

Stephen Bailey, manager of The Beatles Shop for 10 years, said he expects business to keep thriving.

"There's no reason why it shouldn't go on forever. The music's as good now as it was then, and it's a lot better than what's coming out today," he said.

Children know Ringo Starr as the narrator of "Thomas the Tank Engine and Friends," an animated children's show, and McCartney does the voice of cuddly Rupert Bear, Bailey said.

McCartney is touring again; George Harrison recently recorded a live album in Japan, which has a fan club of 40,000.

MCT: Chambers conducts acting class for adults little acting in high school. One of the men in the class has had a lead in an MCT production, but for most of them this is their first 'real' actor training ever."

The class offers beginners the opportunity to "gain a little confidence," Ms. Chambers said.

"For scene work, I used plays that are up-and-coming productions at MCT so that they will be familiar with the play and be more comfortable about auditioning. They're going to know how to pick up a play script and make the character turn into a real person."

Ms. Chambers believes an actress or actor lives inside each person.

"I think everyone knows how to act. It's acting when you put on a professional face at work, an authority face with your children, a vulnerable face with your spouse. That's all acting. The classroom study of acting just lets you use those real life acting techniques in an artificial environment, in a play.

"Everyone has a different level of talent, and some are more talented than others, but everyone can learn and improve upon what they've got."

Acting classes serve a variety of purposes.

"I think an acting class should not only give you the skills of acting, but it should be fun, it should be relaxing," Ms. Chambers said. "I think it lets you be like a child again and play."

Songwriter preserves myth of the old cowboy

By Jean Pagel
Associated Press writer

AMARILLO — Listen hard to Buck Ramsey's songs and you'll imagine jangling spurs, a campfire's crackle and the weary bawl of a lone calf.

Listen again as saddles creak and the wind rustles through the jimson weeds.

It's poetry set to music.

A cowboy can trust his horse but not his sweetheart in these songs. Dangers lurk in the stormy skies and the threat of stampede. Prairie life rolls on from the early-morning flapjacks to the long afternoon shadows.

Ramsey said he senses the ghosts of his cow-punching forefathers in the old songs he finds and records.

"I can look back and understand why cowboys had such an infectious hold on the American psyche," Ramsey said. "We just love the way they walked and talked — like gods.

"I'm trying to gather and preserve the basic literature of that myth."

Ramsey, 55, has collaborated with Lubbock music producer Lanny Fiel to record traditional cowboy songs in Fiel's home studio. One recording of 14 songs, "Rolling Uphill from Texas," this spring won the National Cowboy Hall of Fame's Wrangler award for Outstanding Traditional Western Music.

Prizes don't seem to mean much to the man with the voice that can bellow, moan or whoop in waltz-time.

In "Cowboy Soliloquy" he whines:

"And if my cooking is not so complete, You can't blame me for wanting to eat."

In "Cowboy's Letter from Home" he sings gently:

"'The baby whispers a prayer each night, To guide you wherever you roam. We would welcome you, Jack. Please won't you come back?' Read the letter from home sweet home."

Harmonica, fiddle and mandolin join Ramsey's guitar on the breezy tunes that bounce like a trotting horse.

Friends say Ramsey is protecting the integrity of the music while polishing its rough edges.

"I really feel that Buck is a landmark in cowboy literature," Fiel said. "He connects everybody back to those times that we've lost."

Fiel recalled Washington, D.C., schoolchildren singing along when he and Ramsey played recently in a Smithsonian auditorium.

But Ramsey said he shies from the spotlight: His goal is to collect the almost-forgotten cowboy songs into an audible form archived for history.

'I really feel that Buck is a landmark in cowboy literature. He connects everybody back to those times that we've lost.'
— Producer Lanny Fiel

'Buck Ramsey reminds us of open trails, of the frontier, when men were men and women were pure.'
— ex-professor Archie Green

Ramsey grew up idolizing his uncle, a cowboy, on the prairies northwest of Amarillo. He roped cattle himself until 1963, when a horse named Cinnamon threw him and injured his spinal cord.

His brow furrowed and head cocked as he strummed "Doney Gal" from his wheelchair recently. He stopped to elaborate on the song's cowboy, who camped by the San Antonio River.

"He remembers some special time and he's grinning," Ramsey explained, smiling himself.

Cowboy music evolved among those on the trail who sang to lull the cattle or combat boredom, Ramsey said. The lyrics tell little stories and sometimes philosophize:

"My friends gently hint that I'm coming to grief, But if life is part gold, then a cowboy's a thief."

Ramsey, who also writes cowboy poetry, said the music's lingo and character bring back a nostalgia many Americans share. Not so with modern music, he said.

"I believe that these old songs that I'm singing and resurrecting will be listened to after all the Top 40 songs are forgotten."

Former University of Texas folklore professor Archie Green said audiences respond to Ramsey's authenticity because they're tired of pop-star hype.

"Buck Ramsey reminds us of open trails, of the frontier, when men were men and women were pure," Green said.

HOROSCOPE

SUNDAY, JUNE 6, 1993

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: A major career shift lies just ahead. If you have not yet discovered your true vocation, you will soon do so. Be prepared to move quickly when you see something you want. By taking changes in stride, you will reap new financial rewards. Early in 1994, take a break from job pressures with a winter vacation. A fulfilling romance motivates you to do great things. Let loved ones know how they can best help you.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: tennis star Bjorn Borg, actresses Billie Whitelaw and Amanda Pays, composer Aram Khachaturian.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Spend time with your family. Solo recreational pursuits can wait for another day. A short trip will produce great pleasure. Avoid impulsive spending. Exchange confidences with friends.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Keep a journal about what is going on; it could lead to the writing of an important book. Let go of someone who does not return your affection. Older relatives prove helpful.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Others judge you by the company you keep. Stay away from shady people. A friendship develops into a romance. Nothing can keep you from reaching an important goal!

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Today's events heighten your appreciation of a special relationship. A wonderful weekend can be yours. Real estate transactions enjoy favorable influences. Guard your personal possessions.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Spending time with someone who respects and shares your interests is a wonderful experience. Even if a promotional scheme works beautifully, do not use your own money.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Be yourself and a romantic partner will come running. Do not let shyness stand in the way. An imaginative approach helps you find the answer to a family problem.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Read the newspaper to keep up with current events. Intellectual discussions prove invigorating. Encourage other people to depend on their own efforts.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): A conflict with an authority figure must be resolved before either of you can enjoy this day. A potential romantic partner could suddenly appear. Be receptive.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Concentrate on the work that has to be done today and you will be surprised at how much you accomplish. Brothers and sisters were never more important to you.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A good time to think about any psychological hang-ups that have hampered romance. Be honest. Make a final commitment only if you are ready to accept the responsibilities that go with it.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Take extra time getting ready for a date. Mixing business with pleasure proves lucky now. Cultivate social contacts who can open important doors. Try a fresh approach to an old problem.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Dig in when doing research for a family project — skimming the surface will get you nowhere. Try not to be so hard on yourself. Pursue romance wholeheartedly and you will be successful!

ONE HIGH CARD TOO MANY

Did you resort to a finesse in an attempt to land your four-heart contract after West led the king of spades? Incidentally, which finesse are we talking about?

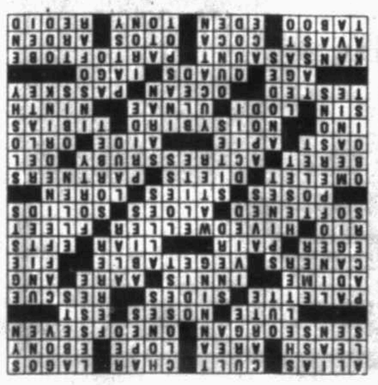

Note East's raise to two spades, despite only three-card support. With only one side-suit stopped and a weak doubleton in the bargain, a response of one no trump was out of the question. Nothing the opponents did could talk South out of making the value bid.

West led the king of spades and declarer could count nine sure tricks—seven trumps and the aces of spades and diamonds. One method of trying for a 10th trick would be to take the diamond finesse. However, that stands less than a 50 percent chance of success, since East is marked with a high club by the opening lead (with both the ace and king West would surely have led a club rather than a spade). Declarer looked around for something better.

An almost sure-fire method presented itself right at the opening gun. Declarer followed low from dummy to the first trick, then got rid of an embarrassing card from hand—the jack of spades! No matter what the defenders did, declarer would eventually win, draw trumps and then take the marked finesse of the ten of spades for the fulfilling trick.

The contract will fail if South does not unblock the jack of spades at trick one. If declarer retains that card, a finesse for the queen of spades can still be taken successfully, but as long as West does not cover declarer will be locked in hand with no way to get to the table to cash the ace of spades.

ENTERTAINMENT IN BRIEF

■ Star show opens

"Islands in the Sky" opens today at the Marian Blakemore Planetarium, in the Museum of the Southwest complex, 1705 W. Missouri Ave.

The star program takes viewers to South Pacific islands and provides a lesson in astronomy, history, sociology and anthropology. Developed by the Hansen Planetarium of Salt Lake City, Utah, with grant assistance from the National Endowment for the Arts, the program will be showing at 2 and 3:30 p.m. Sundays through July.

"Early oceanic navigators in the Pacific traveled thousands of miles in tiny canoes from island to island spreading the unique cultures that compose Melanesia, Polynesia and Micronesi today," said Mark Hartman, planetarium director.

"Knowledge of the sun, winds, waves , animal life and the simple use of the stars as a compass guided the travelers in their migrations."

The program cites the diaries of Captain James Cook, English discovered of Hawaii, to provide evidence that the early Pacific sailors used the stars, moon, sun and ocean currents to navigate from island to island.

The planetarium's "West Texas Skies" star talk continues at 7:30 p.m. Tuesdays. this program covers the current sky map as seen in West Texas.

No admission is charged to museum members. Admission for non-members is $2 for adults and $1 for children. For more information call 683-2882 or 570-7770.

■ Bag pipe concert set

Trinity School, 3500 Wadley Ave., will be the site for a free "Concert in Commons" set for 7 to 8:30 p.m. Friday.

The bag pipe concert and storytelling event is the culmination of a summer session workshop that begins Monday. The session will provide the opportunity to study with experienced musicians in small groups. The teaching will be oriented toward the polishing of existing tunes and the teaching of new tunes on the practice chanter and the pipes.

Leading the workshop will be Patrick Regan and Cliff Watson.

For more information call Anne B. Wemple, 697-3281 or 682-1529.

■ Local photos in exhibit

Two photographs by Vicky Welch are included in "The Governor's Exhibition" at the Art Institute for the Permian Basin, 4309 E. University Ave., Odessa.

This juried photographic exhibition in honor of Gov. Ann Richards depicts everyday places, events and people of the Lone Star State.

Ms. Welch's featured works are hand-tinted black and white silver prints entitled "Welch Trio" and "When Clowns Dance."

Her personal work concentrates in West Texas ranch and cowboy-related activities and her family and friends are the subjects of many of her photographs.

She is an exhibiting member of the area photography group, In Focus: A Photgraphic Society, and also a member of Texas Photographic Society.

Ms. Welch will be teaching classes on preserving family photographs, history and memorabilia this summer at the Museum of the Southwest, Midland College and Odessa College.

■ Teen to attend contest

Midlander Erra Shay Bachman is anong 11 talented teen-age piano students from across the country who will participate in a new education project, Mobil-Cliburn Ambassadors.

This project will bring the students and their teachers to Fort Worth for the final round of the Ninth Van Cliburn International Piano Competition this month. The 13-year-old Bachman is taught by Joy Finley.

This education program is underwritten by Mobil Exploration & Producing U.S. Inc.

Selected through a recommendation process facilitated by the Music Teachers National Association in the cities represented, the young Mobil-Cliburn Ambassadors range in age from 13 to 18 with five from Texas, two from California and one each from Alabama, Kansas, Louisiana and Washington, D.C.

Local senior citizens' art is on display at LBJ library

Staff report

Midland Presbyterian Homes' residents LaVerne Jones and Kay Sprecher have been selected to display their artwork in the Texas Association of Homes for the Aging third annual "Art is Ageless" competition and exhibition.

Their entries will be displayed in the lobby of the Lyndon Baines Johnson Library and Museum in Austin until Aug. 1.

The exhibit features oil and watercolor paintings, quilts and afghans, as well as intricate wood carvings.

All finalists' artworks were completed after they turned 65.

Mrs. Jones' painting, entitled "Fall in the Rockies," was completed when she was 72 years old. She did not start painting until she was 70. She is a resident of Manor Park and was an honorable mention finalist.

Mrs. Sprecher, a resident of Trinity Towers, was 84 years old when her work, "Waterlilies," was completed. She was named first plance winner in the competition.

Both Mrs. Jones and Mrs. Sprecher were honored at the Lyndon Baines Johnson Library and Museum this May at the art opening gala.

More than 300 TAHA homes participated in the statewide competition and 46 entries were chosen to be displayed.

The art show is presented by TAHA and the Educational Institute for the aging to recognize the talent and imagination of older Texans.

■ Cyrus is at Six Flags

ARLINGTON — Country music performer Billy Ray Cyrus will appear in concert at Six Flags Over Texas June 13.

Cyrus

Cyrus, who became an overnight phenomenon with his recording "Achy Breaky Heart," has a current hit "Some Gave All."

He will appear in two shows at the Arlington theme park's Music Mill Amphitheater. The shows are at 4 and 8 p.m.

A $6 concert fee will be charged in addition to regular park admission. Tickets may be bought at the Six Flags concert box office or at Rainbow Ticketmaster.

■ Music theater set

RUIDOSO, N.M. — The second season of Miner's Castle Mountain Music Theater, Highway 70 West, is open through August.

Music includes pop, bluegrass, country and gospel as well as songs from south of the border and the Old West.

Performances in June are Thursday through Saturday. Performances in July and August are Monday through Saturday. Show time is 7:31 p.m. For more information and to make reservations call 1-505-257-6180.

■ Elvis to be in wax

GRAND PRAIRIE — The Palace of Wax and the Plaza Theatre of Wax has added Elvis to its attractions.

Beginning Thursday in Grand Prairie and June 17 in San Antonio, Elvis will be on view.

Pater Carsillo, resident wax sculptor, created the celebrity wax figure based on Elvis in his 30s during the 1965-'69 period. Most museums that feature Elvis do so with figures from the 1970s period. Carsillo chose to create the image of Elvis based on his likeness most recently selected for the U.S. postage stamp.

The new Elvis wax creation kicks off what Carsillo plans as a music section to be completed in the next two years.

■ 'TEXAS' to open

CANYON — The musical drama 'TEXAS' opens Wednesday at Pioneer Amphitheatre in Palo Duro Canyon State Park near Amarillo and Canyon.

Paul Green's saga of the Texas Panhandle is the best attended outdoor drama in the United States. The production runs through Aug. 21. Performances are at 8:30 p.m. Monday through Saturday and July 4.

For reservations write TEXAS, P.O. Box 268, Canyon, Texas 79015 or write 1-806-655-2181. Tickets are $12, $9 and $6 for adults and $12, $4.50 and $3 for children. Discounts for groups of 20 or more are available.

An optional barbecue dinner, served prior to every performance by Sutphen's of Amarillo, is $6.

■ Western dance set

SAN ANGELO — Rebel Heart is to play at a dance to be held Friday behind Barracks 5 and 6 at Fort Concho Wagon Yard.

Tickets are $5 in advance or $6 at the door.

Gates open at 7 p.m. and food and beverages will be available for purchase on the grounds.

Later this year, "Kicking Up Your Heels" is the theme for the 1993 edition of Fiesta del Concho.

■ Hill's exhibit to close

A display of works by Midland artist Leslie D'Allesandro Hill closes June 19 in the ACT IX Gallery at Theatre Midland, 2000 W. Wadley Ave.

The exhibit may be viewed from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday and during performances. Her works, which have been up during the run of "Dearly Departed," will remain through "Love Letters."

On display are 40 colored pencil drawings, including some on loan from patrons which have never been in a public exhibit before. Much of her work features fantasy figures.

The artist recently received a Permian Basin Advertising Federation Addy Excellence Award for Illustration. In addition, she illustrated "Two Glass Buttons" published by the Nita Stewart Haley Memorial Library and written by Marguerite Starr Crain.

■ Heritage exhibit set

ODESSA — The White Pool House, 112 E. Murphy, is featuring a Hispanic Heritage Exhibition through June.

Hours are noon to 3 p.m. Tuesday, 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. Wednesday through Friday and 2 to 5 p.m. Sunday. Individual or group tours are encouraged during business hours or on other days by appointment. Mona Rogge is the White Pool House coordinator.

■ Mummers to open

Summer Mummers opens June 25 and runs Thursday through Saturday through Sept. 4 at the historic Yucca Theatre, 208 N. Colorado Ave.

The box office is open for reservations to this year's melodrama, "Roguery on the River" or "The Great Goober Grab."

For reservations call 682-4111.

Artist among Texans to visit Ghana on cultural, trade mission

DALLAS (AP) — Arthello Beck moved quickly among the dozens of paintings scattered about his Oak Cliff art gallery, proudly showing some of his favorite pieces.

"That's the road to Senegal," he said excitedly, gesturing at a road that sliced through a small village in the West African country he visited seven years ago.

"I grew up believing that I would never leave Dallas," said Beck, 51. "I was in awe of just being there. I'm sure it'll be the same when I visit Ghana."

This summer, Beck and his wife, Mae, will be among about 20 Texans on a rare cultural and trade mission to Ghana.

Beck said he hopes to scour the West African country in search of sites and people for his paintbrush. The country is rich in history, from the slave trade to African classical periods to modern democratic movements.

"The people, the landscape, the way of life . . . I want to bring that back. My wife and I have different motives," Beck said.

While he is painting, Mrs. Beck, who owns a Dallas day-care center, plans to participate in the formal part of the mission, meeting with government officials, economists and others about entrepreneurial opportunities.

This is the first time a combined cultural and trade mission has been planned from Texas to the country, said Dr. K. Ohene-Bekoe, mission director and president of Dallas'The International Center, which is coordinating the mission.

He said Texans have not been interested in trading with Africa in the past because of Texas' proximity to Latin American countries and stereotypical depictions of Africa.

"A lot of what people see of Africa are famines and wars," he said. "People look at Africa in those terms."

While some African countries are plagued by famines and torn apart by civil wars, the vast majority of countries are stable, Ohene-Bekoe said.

Ghana is one of the most stable. The country recently held democratic elections, and its economy is rebounding, he said.

"It has worked with the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank to develop the most sustainable business climate in Africa," he said.

Businesses of interest to Ghana include electronics, agriculture, cosmetics, construction, transportation and mining, he said.

The Rev. Clarence Glover Jr., the mission leader, said he is excited about doing research and meeting with educators at the university.

Commitment & Leadership From Us All

As high school graduation approaches, many of us as parents, students, employers and citizens of communities look forward to the talents, leadership and contribution this wave of graduates will bring to our society. Our hopes are high as we eagerly begin planning for the future. As I visit high school campuses throughout our region and state, I am continually impressed with the talent of our young people. At the same time I am continually faced with high drop-out rates, particularly among Hispanic students. Although the hope does not fade, the challenges remain strong to address the education concerns of our society.

According to Harold Hodgkins, author of All One System: Demographics of Education, Kindergarten through Graduate School, by the year 2000, America will be a nation in which one out of every three people will be non-white. The growth of minorities in the youth population, Hodgkins predicts, "will change the educational system faster than anything except nuclear war". The changing demographics is an important issue at every stage of the educational pipeline. Although high school graduation rates for all racial/ethnic groups have risen in the past 10 years, college going rates for minorities have risen little since 1976. The changing demographics are particularly an explosive issue for higher education, because on the majority of our college and university campuses throughout the country, the student population does not reflect the community population.

We must continue to improve and contribute to the educational pipeline. The decline of minority participation in higher education may have devastating results. Will we develop an educational and economic underclass whose contributions will be limited? Will we create a culture and an economy that does not develop the talents of a growing segment of our society. Economically, we are moving from an industrial to an information/technology based society. Our world will require higher literacy from all people in order to participate successfully.

As we examine "why" the decline of minorities in higher education, various reasons surface. The leading reasons are 1) limited financing, 2) hostile campus/racism, 3) lack of relevance of curriculum and, 4) academic difficulties. Al-

Grand Jury Reports...

By Jeffrey McDonald

They're filled with phrases like 'powder keg', 'throw away people', 'zero tolerance', 'physical retaliation', 'epidemic', and 'frightening'. At first, you might think they're investigative reports from the streets of America's largest cities, or the scripts of a television movie.

But in reality, these documents, the reports of Special Grand Jury Investigations, are fact, not movie fiction. And they originate, not in the urban ghettos of a New York, or of Los Angeles, but in the streets and schools of West Texas.

In January of 1992, a Special Grand Jury was impaneled by District Judges John Hyde of the 238th District Court, and Dean Rucker of the 318th District Court, both of Midland County.

Just two years before, a Special Grand Jury, convened by District Judge Tryon D. Lewis of the 161st District Court, of Ector County, issued a report of its findings.

The investigations by these Special Grand Juries dealt with similar problems, the unlawful use of alcohol and drugs by school-aged youth. And they shared many conclusions - the widespread use of alcohol and drugs by our young people, the criminal activity that accompanied this use, the inability of local law enforcement agencies to adequately deal with the problem, and the denial, by far too many adults, that such a problem even existed.

The findings did not really surprise the judges who had originally impaneled the Special Grand Juries.

"I think disappointment is probably a better phrase," said Judge Hyde. "There were some findings that I did not expect, and some of the findings were disappointing."

"I was not surprised for example, that alcohol was considered the worst problem among our youth. I think a lot of us expected that. And I think Judge Rucker and I both anticipated it, viewing the number of cases that come through, that alcohol would probably be a more significant problem. But we were still disappointed that that was found to be true."

It was a problem that Judges Hyde, Rucker, and Lewis had been able to observe, first-hand, for years. Observations that indicated to them the need for the Special Grand Jury investigations.

"It was the recognition of the number of cases involving youth of this community with drugs and violence, that began to alarm us. That the rate was increasing," said Judge Hyde. "The recognition that alcohol and drugs played a substantial part in a number of felony crimes in this community."

"And that the age of the offender was getting less all the time, that we had younger offenders coming before the court."

In fact, law enforcement procedures played an important role in the findings of both Special Grand Jury investigations.

The Ector County report found, "that there is a serious lack of cooperation between law enforcement agencies."

Similar concerns were expressed in the Midland County report, which said, "cooperation between separate law enforcement agencies is critical to community success in fighting narcotics, but does not exist at this time in Midland County."

But if the Special Grand Juries found little evidence of organized and cooperative activity among law enforcement agencies, they found evidence of it among criminals.

"Testimony further indicates that there are ,'families' operating sophisticated pyramid systems of distribution that move illegal drugs directly onto school property and into the hands of youthful buyers and sellers," said the Ector County report.

"Despite media reporting to the contrary, there s a growing gang problem in Midland," said the Midland County report, which went on to cite such groups as the Crips, and Vario South Side, as engaging in the sale of drugs.

Both reports also indicated a concern for the growing violence that accompanies these groups and their activities.

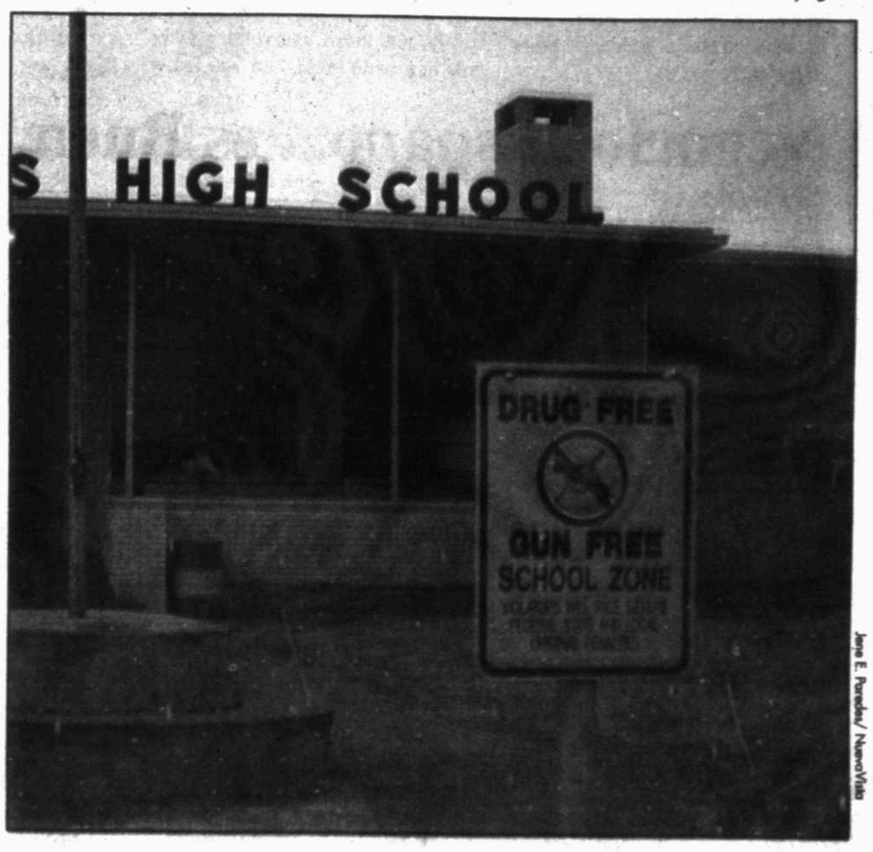

Both reports also touched on the effects of alcohol and drugs upon young people in the schools. Effects which seriously hamper their education, and their future.

"Teachers report a high incidence of Monday morning sickness which they feel is related to alcohol consumption on the weekends," said the Midland County report. "They also consistently testified about high school students returning from lunch drunk or high on narcotics, or not returning to class at all for these reasons."

"An intoxicated student cannot learn and disrupts classtime for other students."

The Ector County investigation found, "that

Gran Jurado Reporta...

Por Jeffrey McDonald

Ellos están llenos con frases como 'barrilito con polvo', 'avienta lejos a la gente', 'tolerancia cero', vengarse físicamente', 'epidemia', y 'miedo'. Primeramente, usted puede pensar que ellos están haciendo un reporte de investigación de las calles de las grandes ciudades de América, o un guión de una película para la televisión.

Pero en realidad, estos documentos, los reportes de una Investigación Especial del Gran Jurado, son factores, no son películas de ficción. Y estas son originadas, no en las calles de gente de color de Nueva York, o en Los Angeles, pero en las calles y escuelas del Oeste de Tejas.

En Enero de 1992, un Gran Jurado Especial fue convocado por el Juez del Distrito John Hyde del 238 avo Corte Distrital, y Dean Rucker del 318 avo Corte Distrital, los dos del Condado de Midland.

Justo dos años antes, el Gran Jurado Especial, convinieron por el Juez de Distrito John Tyron D. Lewis del 161 avo Corte Distrital, del Condado de Ector, publicar un reporte de sus conclusiones.

Las investigaciones por este Gran Jurado Especial trato con problemas similares, el uso indiscriminado de alcohol y drogas por jovenes de edades escolares. Y ellos compartieron muchas conclusiones, el excesivo uso de alcohol y drogas por nuestra gente joven, la actividad criminal que acompaña este uso, la inhabilidad de fuerzas de las agencias de la ley que adecuadamente pueda negociar con el problema, y la negación también por muchos adultos, que tal problema ni siquiera existe.

Los resultados realmente no sorprendieron a los jueces quienes originalmente convocaron al Gran Jurado Especial.

"Yo creo que desilusión es probablemente una mejor frase," dice el Juez Hyde. "Ahí hubieron algunas convocaciones que yo no esperaba y algunas convocaciones que me desilusionaron.

"No fue de mi sorpresa por ejemplo, que el alcohol fue considerado el peor problema entre nuestros jovenes. Yo pienso que muchas de nosotros esperábamos eso. Y yo creo que el Juez Rucker y yo lo anticipamos, viendo el numero de casos que observamos, que el alcohol que es un problema muy significante. Pero seguimos desilusionados que eso fue encontrado y que es la realidad."

A sido un problema que los jueces Hyde, Rucker y Lewis han podido observar, en primer plano, por años. Observaciones que indican a ellos la necesidad para el Gran Jurado Especial investigar.

"Es el reconocimiento de los numerosos casos que involucran a jovenes de esta comunidad con drogas y violencia, que comienzan alarmarnos a nosotros. Que la cifra a aumentado," dice el Juez Hyde. "El reconocimiento que el alcohol y drogas juegan una parte substancial en el numero de crímenes de felonías en esta comunidad."

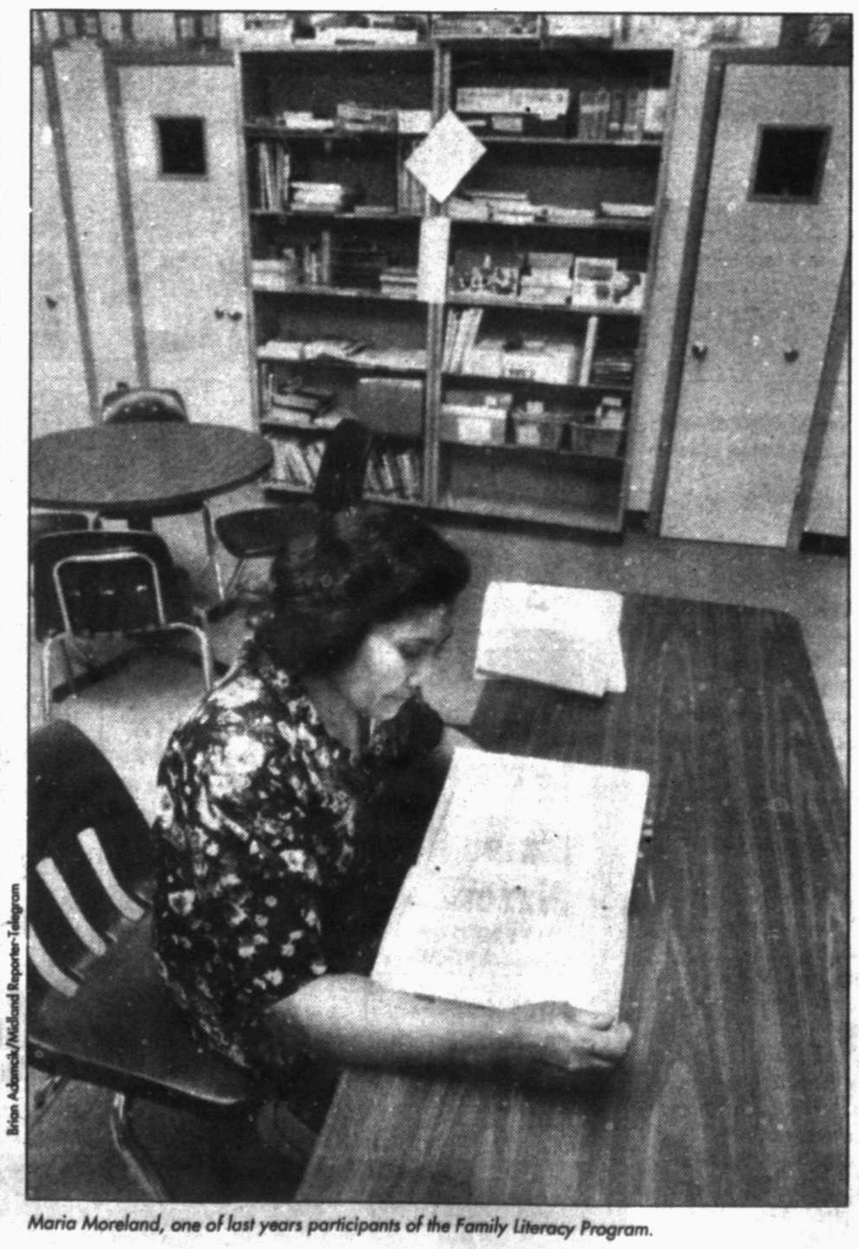

"Y que la edad del ofensor cada vez es menor, que nosotros tenemos jovenes ofensores viniendo a la corte."

En realidad, el procedimiento de la fuerza de la ley juega un papel importante en la convocación de las investigaciones de los dos Gran Jurado Especial.

El reporte del Condado de Ector encontró, "que hay una seria falta de cooperación entre las agencias de la fuerzas de la ley."

Inquietud similar fueron expresadas en el reporte del Condado de Midland, que dice, "cooperación entre agencias de la fuerza de la ley es critica para el éxito de la comunidad contra la pelea de narcóticos, pero esto no

Casa De Amigos Ofrece el Programa Capacidad de Leer y Escribir Familiar

Por Jefrey McDonald

Es tal vez una de las mas durareras imágenes de la familia, el padre leyendole una historia al muchacho a la hora de dormir. No nomas provee la primera experiencia al muchacho de gozar de la lectura, también provee a la familia una actividad maravillosa por significativo, intersección positiva.

Es una imagen innovadora al programa literario dedicado a la presentación en mas y mas hogares. El Programa Capacidad de Leer y Escribir Familia, ofrecido por Casa de Amigos en Midland y ahora entrando en su segundo año, es diferente de otros programas mas convencionales.

"Esta tratando de atraer a toda la familia unta en un proceso de aprendizaje," explica Terrill Littlejohn, Asistente de Educación en Casa de Amigos.

"Porque los padres se les requeriré en la clase, si ellos quieren a los muchachos que estén en la clase. Nosotros tendremos tiempo 'Padres e Hijos' juntos, eso aumenta en valor la unidad de la familia."

"Entonces usted no tiene que levar a sus hijos una vez y los padres van alguna otra vez y no hay interaccion entre la familia. Entonces los padres y los hijos estarán influenciandose una al otro al menos una vez a la semana."

En 1992, durante el primer año del programa, 115 familias, aproximadamente 700 personas, se les sirvió. Alfabetismo no solamente ayuda a crecer a la familia, pero les da a ellos habilidad esencial para la sociedad de hoy en día.

Casa De Amigos Offers Family Literacy Program to Midland

By Jefrey McDonald

It is perhaps one of the most enduring images of the family, the parent reading a bedtime story to the child. Not only does it provide the child's first experience of the joy of reading, it also provides the family a wonderful activity for meaningful, positive interaction.

It is an image that an innovative literacy program is dedicated to introducing into more and more homes. The Family Literacy Program, offered by Casa de Amigos in Midland, and now entering it's second year, is different from other, more conventional programs.

"It's dealing with bringing the entire family together in a learning process," explained Terrill Littlejohn, Education Assistant at Casa de Amigos.

"Because the parents are required to be in the class, if they want the kids to be in the class. We will have 'PAC' time, 'Parent And Children' time together, that enhances family unity."

"So you don't have the kids going one time, and the parents going some other time, and there's no interaction within the family. So the parents and the kids will be interacting at least once a week."

In 1992, during the program's first year, 115 families, roughly 700 individuals, were served. Literacy not only helped them grow as a family, but gave them an essential skill for today's society.

"In order to accomplish anything, you have to

Hispanic Business.... is Good Business

By Amarante Cordova

For Leroy Baeza, the key to success has been finding his niche in a competitive marketplace, and working hard to provide his customers with the very best.

In the beginning, though, Baeza, who owns and operates grocery stores and gasoline service stations throughout the Big Bend area of West Texas, found himself in very different surroundings.

"My first experience was after I graduated from college in Los Angeles. I grew up in Fort Davis and went to school in Los Angeles," recalled Baeza. "I graduated from Cal State-Los Angeles, with a degree in business management."

"I lived in that area for, oh, twelve, fifteen years, and I worked as an industrial engineer. Most of my time was spent working for Walt Disney."

But Baeza never forgot his West Texas roots, and he eventually returned to Fort Davis, where his father, D. S. 'Lolo' Baeza, had established Baeza's General Store in the early sixties.

"The Fort Davis store started a little over 30 years ago. And then, after I joined my dad, we started Baeza's Supermarket in Presidio, about 17 years ago," said Baeza. "They're both small, full-service grocery stores. They're not large supermarkets, but then they're not convenience stores."

Five years ago, Baeza's business expanded further, with the purchase of Sunland Distributors. Based in Alpine, the company supplies Exxon products, and operates Exxon gasoline service stations in several communities throughout the Big Bend country.

But Baeza is quick to point out that the success of the family business is due, in part, to the hard work of the entire family.

"At one point, it was myself, and my wife, my kids, my mom and my dad, and my sister," said Baeza, who adds that this is part of the advantage a small, family-owned and operated grocery store has over a large, national-chain supermarket, especially in the area of customer service. "It's a family. you know everyone, you've grown up with them, and you know their needs."

"Someone comes up and says, 'Give me some cigarettes,' and you know what brand they want. You know if somebody wants their groceries bagged in plastic, another wants a box, or a paper bag. You don't have to ask them any of that."

And, Baeza adds, it's easier for the customer to go directly to the top, and speak to the man in charge.

"We know we have to try harder, we have to do everything we can. Of course, we're human, we have our problems," he said. "Because they know us, it's easier for the customer to sit down and chew me out, every once in a while! That's good, because then I can react to a problem. With them (the national supermarket chains), you never know the owner, you never know where he's at. He's in San Francisco, or Chicago, or someplace like that."

Baeza warns that owning and operating a small business does have it's own, unique headaches.

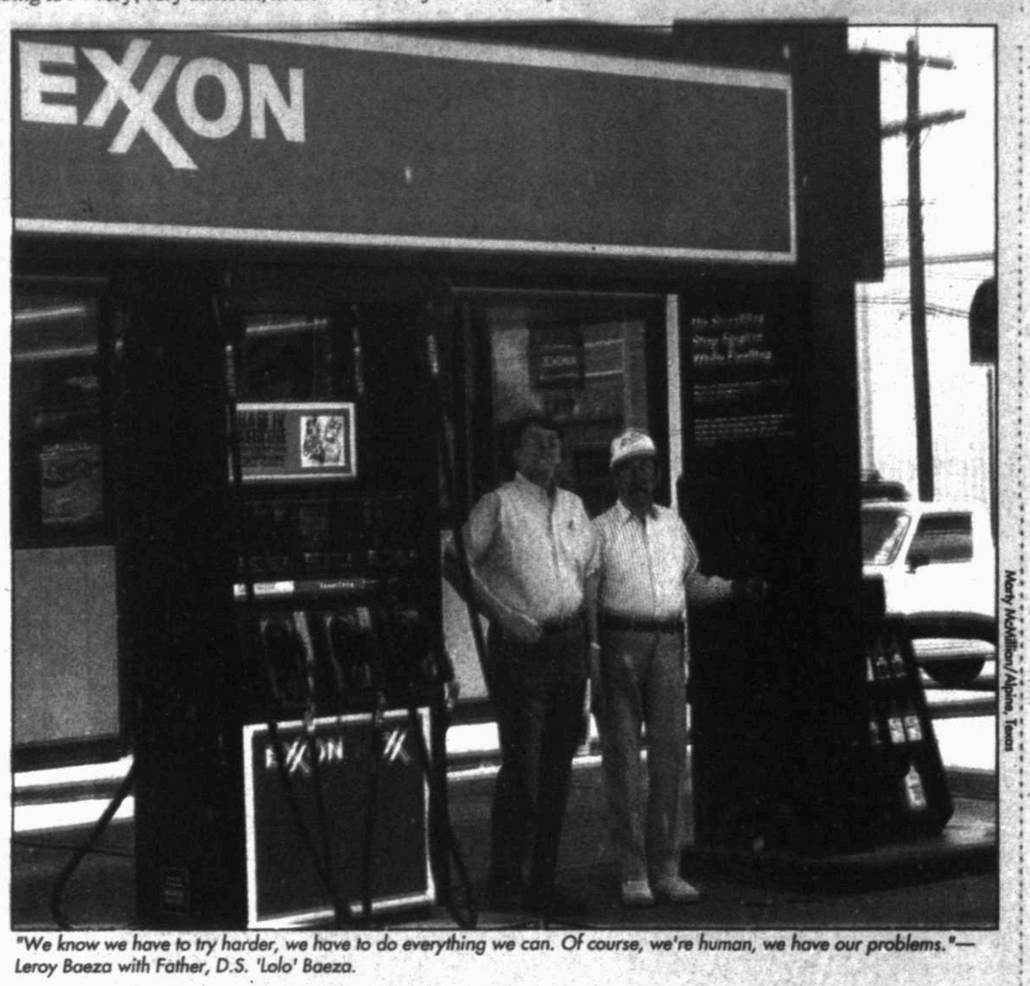

"It's a frustrating time. The time is very difficult for a small business. Right now, I'm working on insurance, and the costs can be very high," he said. "And the prices. Groups like Sam's and Wal-Mart are always very competitive, and they're trying to drive us out of business."

"We have so many laws that apply to us, so many permits. I think it's going to be very, very difficult, in the future, for the 'mom and pop' operation."

But, with the headaches, also come the unique rewards to owning and operating your own business.

"Definitely. I worked for about ten years, working for someone else, and there's just no comparison," said Baeza. "The risks are greater here, but the rewards are so much greater, too. If you're the type that's willing to work, then you're certainly better off working for yourself."

"We know we have to try harder, we have to do everything we can. Of course, we're human, we have our problems."— Leroy Baeza with Father, D.S. 'Lolo' Baeza.

Negocio Hispano... es Buen Negocio

Por Jefrey McDonald

Para Leroy Baeza, la llave para el éxito ha sido encontrar el nicho en la competencia de los supermercados, y trabajar duro para proveer a sus clientes con la mejor calidad.

En el comienzo, sin embargo, Baeza, quien es dueño y opera tiendas de mandado y estaciones de servicio de gasolina por todo el área de Big Bend del Oeste de Tejas, se encontró en un muy diferente ambiente.

"Mi primer experiencia fue después que yo gradué del colegio en Los Angeles. Yo crecí en Fort Davis y fui a la escuela a Los Angeles," recuerda Baeza. "Yo gradué de California State-Los Angeles, con una carrera de administración en empresas."

"Yo viví en esa área por, o, doce, quince años, y trabaje como ingeniero industrial. Mucho de mi tiempo lo pase trabajando para Walt Disney."

Pero Baeza nunca olvido sus raíces del Oeste de Tejas, y el regreso eventualmente a Fort Davis, donde su padre, D.S. 'Lolo' Baeza, había establecido al principio de los sesentas Tiendas de Supermercado Baeza.

"La tienda de Fort Davis comenzó hace un poco mas de 30 años. Y luego, después yo me uní a mi padre, nosotros comenzamos el Supermercado Baeza en Presidio, hace como 17 años," dice Baeza. "Las dos son pequeñas, tiendas de mandado de servicio completo. No son grandes supermercados, pero tampoco son tiendas de conveniencia."

Hace cinco años, el negocio de Baeza se extendió mas lejos, con la compra de Distribuidora Sunland (Tierra del Sol). Con su base en Alpine, la compañía tiene en existencia productos Exxon y opera con gasolina Exxon en estaciónes de servicio en varias comunidades por todo el campo Big Bend.

Pero Baeza rápidamente hace saber de que el éxito del negocio de la familia esta pagado, en parte, al duro trabajo de toda la familia.

"A un punto, fui yo mismo, mi esposa, mis hijos, mi mama y mi papa, y mi hermana," dice Baeza, quien añade que esto es parte de la ventaja de ser pequeño, propiedad-familiar y que la administración de la tienda de comestibles tiene sobre una grande, cadena-nacional de supermercados, especialmente en el área de servicio a los clientes. "Es una familia. Uno conoce a todos, has crecido junto con ellos y usted sabe sus necesidades."

"Alguien viene y dice, 'Dame unos cigarros,' y usted sabe que marca el quiere. Uno sabe si alguien quiere su mandado en bolsas de plástico, otros quieren en caja, otros quieren en bolsa de papel. Uno no tiene que preguntarles nada de eso."

Y, Baeza añade, es fácil para el cliente ir directamente para los jefes y hablar con la persona encargada.

"Nosotros sabemos que debemos tratar mas duro, nosotros debemos hacer todo las cosas que podamos. Claro que, nosotros somos humanos, nosotros tenemos nuestros problemas," el dice. "Porque ellos nos conocen, es mas fácil para el cliente sentarse y masticarme (acabarme, llamarme la atención), de vez en cuando! Y eso es bueno, porque entonces puedo reaccionar al problema. Con ellos (La cadena nacional de supermercados), usted nunca sabe quien es el propietario, usted nunca sabe donde se encuentra. El esta en San Francisco, o Chicago, o en un lugar como esos."

Baeza advierte que ser dueño y operar un negocio pequeño tiene sus propios, singulares dolores de cabeza.

Es un tiempo frustrante. El tiempo es muy difícil para un negocio pequeño. Ahora mismo, estoy trabajando en la aseguranza y el costo puede ser muy alto," el dice. "Y los precios. Grupos como Sam's y Wal-Mart son todo el tiempo muy competitivos y ellos están tratando de sacarnos del negocio todo el tiempo."

"Nosotros tenemos muchas leyes que nos aplican, muchos permisos. Yo pienso que va hacer muy, pero muy difícil, en el futuro, para las operaciones de mama y papa."

Pero, con los dolores de cabeza, también vienen las singulares recompensas por ser propietario y operar tu propio negocio.

"Definitivamente. Yo he trabajado como por diez años, trabajando para alguien mas y no hay ninguna comparación," dice Baeza. El riesgo es superior aquí, pero las recompensas son todavía mas grandes, también. Si tu eres del tipo que quiere trabajar, entonces usted seguramente será mejor trabajando para usted mismo."

usted tiene que ser literato, usted tiene que ser," dice Littlejohn. "Hablando con diferentes representantes del sistema de escuelas (Midland), esto es el mayor problema que los muchachos tienen, es la lectura y entendimiento de diferentes tipos de lectura que ellos tienen que desarrollar. Y todo lo que nosotros estamos tratando de hacer es auxiliar."

Todavía es tiempo par registrarte para uno de las dos secciones de verano del programa planeado para este año.

"Este verano, nosotros estamos planeando en tener dos secciones de cuatro-semanas cada una. La primera será del 7 de Junio al Primero de Julio, y la segunda será del 6 de Julio al 30 de Julio," dice Littlejohn. "Se espera, que en el futuro, nosotros seamos capaces de ofrecer el Programa Literario de la Familia durante todo el año. Sin embargo, que todo depende de fondos económicos."

"El horio de nuestras clases son de 6:30 a 7:45 y luego cambiar y trasladarse a otro cuarto de estudio de las 7:45 a las 9:00."

Las formas para el programa están disponibles en el escritorio de la recepción de Lane, en Midland. Aquellos que deseen mas información favor de contactarse a la oficina de Littlejohn en Casa de Amigos. El numero telefónico es el 682-9701. Fundado por contribuyentes y otorgamientos de la comunidad, el programa es absolutamente gratis.

Y el impacto durara para toda la vida, para los padres y para los hijos.

"Del modo que esta la economía ahora, la gente tiene que trabajar. Ellos no tienen normalmente tiempo para compartir con sus hijos y las actividades de sus hijos," explica Littlejohn. "No se dan el tiempo ellos mismos para compartir con el resto de la familia."

"Y nosotros no estamos tratando de enseñar a nadie como salvar al mundo. Nosotros estamos tratando con lo básico. Porque la mayor parte de las familias, ahí es donde esta el problema, únicamente lo be literate, you have to be," said Littlejohn. "Speaking with different representatives of the (Midland) school system, that's the biggest problem that the kids have, is the reading, and understanding the different types of reading they have to do. All we're trying to do is assist."

It's still not too late to register for one of two summer sessions of the program planned for this year.

"This summer, we're planning on having two four-week sessions. The first one is June 7th through July 1st, and the second is July 6th through July 30th," said Littlejohn. "Hopefully, in the future, we'll be able to offer the Family Literacy Program year-round. However, that all will depend on funding."

"Our classes meet from 6:30 pm till 9:00 pm, Monday through Thursday. We've got the class schedule set up so they have class from 6:30 till 7:45, and then change and go to a different classroom from 7:45 till 9:00."

Registration forms for the program are available at the reception desk at Casa de Amigos, 1101 East Garden Lane, in Midland. Those wishing for more information may also contact Littlejohn in his office at Casa. The phone number is 682-9701. Funded by contributions and community grants, the program is absolutely free.

The impact will last a lifetime, for the parents, and for the children.

"Economics the way they are now, people have to work. They don't normally find the time to spend with the kids, and kids' activities," explained Littlejohn. "They don't allow themselves the time to spend with the rest of the family."

"And we're not trying to teach anyone how to save the world. We're dealing with basics. Because, most of the families, that's where the problem is, just the basics."

La Primera Comisionada Hispana del Condado de Midland

Por Jeffrey McDonald

Como una Hispana y mujer, Louisa Valencia esta abriendo nuevos caminos con su decisione para ser candidato para la oficina del Comisionado del Condado de Midland, Distrito 3. Pero ella ya tiene una idea de como debe y no debe hacer.

"Nosotros tuvimos realmente un buen Comisionado del Condado aquí, que estuvo ayudando a esta area. Ese fue Dewayne Davis, un profesor jubilado por el gobierno," dice Valencia, que su distrito cubría la mayor parte del Sur y Este del Condado de Midland. "El estaba haciendo un buen trabajo, que fue de ayudar a la comunidad. El sirvió cuatro años como Comisionado del Condado."

Joe Williams/Midland Reporter-Telegram

"Education is the key to everything. And it saddens me when I see those kids, who think there's more important things in life than going to school" — Louisa Valencia, First Hispanic County Commissioner of Midland.

Este Servicio llego a su final en la elección de 1984. El sucesor de Davis' pronto probo no poder, o de mala gana, para seguir con la tradición de servicio. Esto guió disatisfaccion en la parte de Valencia y luego a la acción.

"No hizo ninguna cosa el condenado por nosotros. Nosotros tuvimos un tiempo muy difícil para que nos escuchara, mucho menos hizo nada," recuerda Valencia. "El se levanto una vez, y dijo que no iba a gastar dinero en gente encima de ahí y eso realmente, realmente me agitabo."

"Bueno pues, yo decidí, 'Bueno, ni modo al diablo! Es mejor que yo me adentre y vea si puedo abollarlo!' fui avisada, 'Nosotros nunca hemos tenido una mujer Comisionado, mucho menos una Hispana.' Bueno, ahí esta siempre hay una primera vez."

Demócratas en las primarias por las elecciones de 1988. Esto la dirigió hacer rápidamente electa en contra el titulado Comisionado de Distrito 3, el cual ella gano. Luego ella derroto al candidato Republicano por la posición en la elección general. Quedando como la primer Hispana electa para el Comisionado del Condado de Midland.

Atenta de los ejemplos fijados por su antecesor, Valencia regreso al compromiso de servir las necesidades de todos sus electores, que ella creyó fue vital a su posición. En 1992, ella fue reelegida como Distrito 3 Comisionado del Condado, algo que nunca había pasado en ese distrito por mas de quince años.

Durante sus cinco años de servicio, Valencia a tomado en muchas responsabilidades y mas de una pequeña controversia, ayudando en el manejo de los asuntos del condado. Todavía permanecen en el proceso del presupuesto y mantenimiento de caminos.

"Nuestra principal objetivo es el presupuesto o la distribución del dinero de los contribuyentes que pasan por cada oficina del condado que sirve a los contribuyentes. Pero también estamos interesados con el mantenimiento de los caminos en nuestro distrito," explica Valencia. "Nosotros tenemos mas de 750 millas de caminos del condado. Y aun sin embargo nuestro distrito esta dividido igual, esta dividido igual en gente, no en acres, o tierra, o caminos. Distrito 1 tiene la mayoría, sobre el 45% de los caminos en el condado. Yo soy el segundo, yo tengo el 30%. Y el siguiente comisionado tiene el 20% y los otros tiene el 5%. El no tiene ningún problema!"

"Esos son los dolores de cabeza mas grandes. Pero nosotros tenemos nuestro interés principal es el proceso del presupuesto, tratando de colocar suficiente dinero por cada oficina del condado que se maneje eficientemente."

Para Valencia, sus servicio como Comisionado del Condado es una extensión de sus compromisos personales para servir a la comunidad, lo que es importante para ella.

"Para mi, lo es. Yo siento que alguien tiene que hacerlo," ella dice. "Y si todos nos sentamos y esperamos que alguien nos de consejos o nos extienda la mano, nosotros no estaremos competentes para seguir adelante. No estaremos competentes para ser nosotros autosuficientes y ayudar a la gente que se ayude por si sola."

Valencia cree que nosotros debemos también hacer un compromiso a la educación.

"Yo realmente animo a la gente a

Midland's First Hispanic County Commissioner

By Jeffrey McDonald

As a Hispanic, and a woman, Louisa Valencia was breaking new ground with her decision to run for the office of Midland County Commissioner, Precinct 3. But she already had an idea of how the job should - and should not - be done.

"We'd had a real good County Commissioner here, that was helping this area. That was Dewayne Davis, a retired government teacher," said Valencia, whose precinct covers most of southern and eastern Midland County. "He was doing a real good job, which was helping the community. He served four years as a County Commissioner."

That service came to an end in the election of 1984. Davis' successor soon proved unable, or unwilling, to follow in that tradition of service. This led to dissatisfaction on Valencia's part, and then to action.

"Did not do a darn thing for us. We had a hard time even getting him to listen to us, much less do anything," recalled Valencia. "He did get up one time, and said that he wasn't going to spend money on people over here, and that really, really agitated me."

"And so, I decided, 'Well, what the heck! I better get in there and see if I can make a dent in it.' And I was told, 'We never had a woman Commissioner, much less a Hispanic.' Well, there's always a first time."

Valencia was one of three Democrats in the primary for the 1988 election. This led to a runoff election against the incumbent Precinct 3 Commissioner, which she won. She then defeated the Republican candidate for that position in the general election, becoming the first Hispanic elected to the office of Midland County Commissioner.

Mindful of the examples set by her predecessors, Valencia returned to the commitment of serving the needs of all her constituents, which she believed was vital to her position. In 1992, she was reelected as Precinct 3 County Commissioner, something which had not been done in that precinct for more than 15 years.

Through her five years of service, Valencia has taken on many responsibilities, and more than a little controversy, in helping manage the affairs of the county. Yet her two greatest responsibilities remain the budget process, and road maintenance.

"Our main thing is the budget, or distribution of taxpayer's money to run every county office that serves the taxpayer. But we are also entrusted with the upkeep of the roads in our precinct," explained Valencia. "We have over 750 miles of county road. And even though our precincts are divided equally, they are divided equally in people, not in acreage, or land, or roads. Precinct 1 has the majority, over 45% of the roads in the county. I'm the second one, I have about 30%. And the next commissioner has has 20%, and the other one has 5%. He doesn't have any problems!"

"Those are the biggest headache. But we have to take care of that. But our main concern is the budget process, trying to allocate enough money for every county office to run efficiently."

For Valencia, her service as a County Commissioner is an extension of her personal commitment of service to the community, which is important to her.

"To me, it is. I feel that somebody has to do it," she said. "And if we all sit back and wait for somebody to give us advice, or a helping hand, we wouldn't be able to get ahead. We wouldn't be able to make ourselves useful, and help the people that cannot help themselves."

Valencia believes we must also make a commitment to education.

"I'm really encouraging the people to participate in the activities at the library, and get our Hispanic children involved in more education," she said. "Education is the key to everything. And it saddens me when I see those kids, who think there's more important things in life than going to school."

But Valencia warns that, to be truly successful, we must all share in these commitments, and do what we can to pursue them.

"Oh, yes, I definitely do. I know we all have to work for a living. The majority of the Hispanic community are people that have to work hard to earn their living. A lot of them have two jobs," said Valencia. "But can you imagine if we get one hour from everybody? We wouldn't have any problems. They don't have to spend a whole day, they don't have to deprive their families, to give one hour a week."

"If they just have one hour to spare a week, or a month, or whatever. If we help each other, we can excel!"

Latinos Provide Unique Leadership In NAFTA Debate

By Antonio González

It is typical for critics of Latino leadership to decry the lack of Latino unity as the number one obstacle to advancing the Latino community's interests. Lately, however, the armchair quarterbacks have taken a different tack, criticizing Latino leaders for uniting around a common agenda with regard to the proposed North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA). This admirable process of consensus-building culminated recently in a Latino summit in which three of the paramount national Latino organizations endorsed a joint document on NAFTA.

The three groups .. Mexican American Legal Defense and Educational Fund, National Council of La Raza, and Southwest Voter Research Institute .. have joined together around a detailed program that addresses issues of domestic, foreign and trade policy with the goal of providing leadership to the nation on this most important issue. Their unique Latino perspective neither accepts nor rejects NAFTA as it is currently written, but offers a nine.point program on how to make NAFTA benefit workers, small.business people and the environment on both sides of the border.

Already La Opinion, the largest Spanish.language newspaper in the nation, has endorsed the Latino Consensus Position on NAFTA. And I4 other major organizations, including the League of United Latin American Citizens, Midwest Voter Registration Education Project and the National Puerto Rican Coalition, are bringing it to their boards and conferences for consideration.

How was the Latino Consensus Position on NAFTA developed? It's the result of the most extensive research and popular education program ever undertaken by Latino leaders. Literally dozens of community events, polls and directed research projects have been sponsored by Latino organizations since NAFTA became an issue in 1991. SVRI, for example, has conducted nine major statewide or multi-state conferences and a dozen regional briefings with nearly 3,000 Latino elected officials and community leaders participating over the last I8 months. SVRI researchers conducted sophisticated computer-modeling studies on the impact of NAFTA on Latino workers as well as numerous focus groups and opinion polls of U.S. Latinos as well as of Mexicans in the Valley of Mexico).

As a result, the Latino Consensus Position on NAFTA is firmly based on solid research and Latino grassroots and leadership opinion. Latinos are neither unconditionally for nor against NAFTA. For example, more than two-thirds of the California Latino electorate would favor a NAFTA that provides for displaced workers, environmental protection and border infrastructure. Only I0 percent favor NAFTA unconditionally. Only 20 percent reject NAFTA unconditionally. SVRI research shows that NAFTA does not cause massive U.S. job loss, but neither does it create significant numbers of new U.S. jobs.

In short, what is needed is an improved NAFTA, one that creates more jobs, retrains displaced workers, protects the environment and upgrades the U.S.-Mexico border. This is exactly the core of the Latino Consensus Position on NAFTA. It is also close to the position of President Clinton.

Are there Latino leaders who disagree with this posture? Of course, as always, a few on the margins hope to push the NAFTA debate into unhealthy polarized opposites. This is dangerous.

Those who wish to kill NAFTA outright should understand that they are combining forces with openly racist and xenophobic elements who see Mexico and immigrants as enemies. This position is also totally out of touch with Latino community opinion.

Similarly, those who want to push through the Bush version of NAFTA should realize that ignoring real environmental and employment concerns is not only bad public policy, it is also a losing proposition that cannot win in Congress. Ignoring the real fears about the downside of the Bush version of NAFTA will only polarize the country further, strengthening the hand of Mexico-bashers and xenophobes.

Ultimately, we must realize that NAFTA characterizes a new generation of issues that are far more complex than the issue-base (civil rights, Vietnam, Central America) that shaped most of us.

Advancing a visionary plan that responds to NAFTA's critics while preserving the economic benefits and historic advance in U.S..Mexican relations that NAFTA represents is both a sign of political maturity and the right thing to do. We should commend the leadership that had the vision and the guts to make it happen.

Los Latinos Proporcionan Dirigencia Singular En El Debate Sobre El Tratado De Libre Comercio

Por Antonio Gonzalez

Ultimamente, sin embargo, los jugadores de defensa de salón han tomado un rumbo distinto, criticando a los dirigentes latinos por unirse alrededor de un programa de trabajo común con respecto al propuesto Tratado Norte-Americano de Libre Comercio (NAFTA).

Los tres grupos — el Fondo Mexicano-Americano para la Defensa Legal y la Enseñanza (MALDEF), el Consejo Nacional de La Raza y el Instituto de Investigación sobre los Electores del Suroeste (SVRI) — han unido sus fuerzas alrededor de un programa detallado que se enfoca sobre los asuntos de política interior, extranjera y comercial, con el fin de proporcionar dirigencia a la nación sobre este asunto de importancia extremada.

Su perspectiva latina singular ni acepta ni rechaza a NAFTA como esta redactado actualmente, sino que ofrece un programa de nueve puntos sobre el modo de hacer que NAFTA beneficie a los trabajadores, a los pequeños comerciantes y al ambiente en los dos lados de la frontera.

Ya "La Opinión," el mayor de los periódicos en español de la nación, ha respaldado a la Posición del Consenso Latino sobre NAFTA. Y otras 14 organizaciones importantes, incluyendo a la Liga de Ciudadanos Latino-Americanos Unidos (LULAC), el Proyecto del Medio-Oeste para la Inscripción y Enseñanza de los Electores y la Coalición Puertorriqueña Nacional, están llevándola a sus juntas de directores y conferencias para que sea considerada.

¿De que modo se desarrollo la Posición del Consenso Latino sobre NAFTA?

El SVRI, por ejemplo, ha realizado nueve conferencias importantes a niveles estatales y de varios estados, y una docena de sesiones informativas regionales con cerca de 3,000 funcionarios durante los 18 meses últimos. Los investigadores del SVRI efectuaron estudios complicados de modelaje computadorizado sobre el efecto de NAFTA sobre los trabajadores latinos, así como numerosos grupos de enfoque y encuestas de opinión entre los latinos de los Estados Unidos (así como entre los mexicanos en el Valle de México).

Como resultado, la Posición del Consenso Latino sobre NAFTA esta basada firmemente en investigaciones sólidas y en las opiniones del pueblo y de la dirigencia latinos: Los latinos no se hallan incondicionalmente ni a favor ni en contra de NAFTA. Por ejemplo, mas de los dos tercios del electorado latino de California favorecería un tratado que contenga disposiciones para los trabajadores desplazados, la protección ambiental y la infraestructura fronteriza. Solo el 10% favorece a NAFTA incondicionalmente. Solo el 20% rechaza a NAFTA incondicionalmente. Además, la investigación del SVRI muestra que NAFTA no ocasiona perdidas impresionantes de empleos en los Estados Unidos, pero que tampoco crea una cantidad importante de nuevos empleos en este país.

En resumen, lo que se necesita es un NAFTA mejorado, que cree mas empleos, vuelva a adiestrar a los trabajadores desplazados, proteja el ambiente y mejore las circunstancias en la frontera entre los Estados Unidos y México. Este es exactamente el núcleo de la Posición del Consenso Latino sobre NAFTA. Esta igualmente cercano a la postura del Presidente Clinton.

¿Hay algunos dirigentes latinos que discorden de esta postura? Desde luego, como siempre, unos pocos en los margénes esperan impulsar al debate sobre NAFTA hacia extremos opuestos polarizados. Esto es peligroso.

Los que desean matar a NAFTA absolutamente deberían entender que están combinando sus fuerzas con elementos abiertamente racistas y anti-extranjeros, que ven a México y a los inmigrantes como a enemigos.

Esta postura es de igual modo totalmente fuera de sintonia con la opinión comunitaria latina.

De manera semejante, los que desean impulsar a la versión de Bush de NAFTA deberían darse cuenta de que el pasar por alto a las preocupaciones verdaderas sobre el ambiente y los empleos no es únicamente una política publica mala, sino que también es una propuesta perdedora que no puede triunfar en el Congreso.

El pasar por alto a los temores verdaderos sobre la parte perjudicial de la versión de Bush sobre NAFTA solo polarizara ulteriormente al país, fortaleciendo la mano de los que no gustan de México y de los que odian a los extranjeros.

Por ultimo, hemos de darnos cuenta de que NAFTA caracteriza a una nueva generación de asuntos que son mucho mas complicados que la base de los asuntos (los derechos civiles, Vietnam, la América Central) que conformaron a la mayoría de nosotros.

El adelantar un plan visionario que responda a los críticos de NAFTA mientras conserve los beneficios económicos y el adelanto histórico en las relaciones entre los Estados Unidos y México que NAFTA representa, es tanto una señal de madurez política como lo correcto para hacer. Deberíamos elogiar a la dirigencia que tuvo la visión y las agallas para hacerlo suceder.

existe ahora en el condado de Midland."

Pero si el Gran Jurado Especial encuentro poca evidencia de organización y cooperación de actividades entre las agencias de la fuerza de la ley, ellos encontraron evidencia de entre los criminales.

"Mas testimonio indica que hay 'familias' operando sofisticadamente sistemas de pirámides de distribución que manejan drogas ilegalmente directamente a las propiedades de las escuelas y en las manos de jovenes compradores y vendedores," dice el reporte del Condado de Ector.

"A pesar de que los medios de comunicación reportan lo contrario, esta creciendo un problema de panderillismo en Midland," dice el reporte del Condado de Midland, quien fue a citar a tales grupos como los Crips y Vario South Side, como empleados en la venta de drogas.

Ambos reportes también indica inquietud por la violencia que acompaña a estos grupos y sus actividades.

Los dos reportes también conmovieron en los efectos del alcohol y drogas en los muchachos jovenes en las escuelas. Efectos que seriamente impide la educación y el futuro de ellos.

"Maestros reportan que un alto numero de incidencia de malestares hay los Lunes por la mañana los cuales los relacionan con el consumo de alcohol de fin de semana," dice el reporte del Condado de Midland. "Ellos también constantemente están testificando acerca de los estudiantes de secundaria que regresan después de comida, borrachos o drogados, o no regresan a ninguna clase por este motivo."

"Un estudiante intoxicado no puede aprender e interrumpir a la hora de clase de otros estudiantes."

La investigación del Condado de Ector encontró, "que es un hecho que el uso indiscriminado de alcohol es una realidad que pasa todos los días en nuestros cuartos de clase; dentro de las escuelas, y en las funciones relacionadas con la escuela."

Ambos reportes también expresan inquietud acerca de las drogas y alcohol usado entre los estudiantes atletas, con el reporte del Condado de Ector dijo, "fue aparentemente que estudiantes que están en los programas de deportes están igualmente involucrados en el uso de alcohol y drogas y que el uso en los atletas tiene, en ocasiones, un trato diferente que a los estudiantes que no están involucrados en los programas de deportes."

Los reportes publicados por el Gran Jurado Especial de los Condados de Midland y Ector a aumentado en inquietud acerca del serio problema que confrontan la gente joven en el Oeste de Tejas. La respuesta a sido variada. Algunas han dicho en voz alta que tan importante y necesario paso si nosotros alguna vez reclamamos a nuestra escuela, y aseguramos la calidad de la educación y un brillante futuro para nuestros muchachos jovenes.

Otros, mientras tanto, han desafiado a las investigaciones del Gran Jurado Especial, la información que ellos recogen y la conclusión ellos alcanzan. Y aun otros continúan negando que dicho problema existe — actitud que ambos reportes han indicado fue para que se extendiera en las comunidades.

Pero adicionalmente de hacer la observación al problema, los reportes de ambos Grandes Jurados Especiales también observan la solución. Ambos admiten que programas efectivos se están dando, ambos en educación y fuerza de la ley, pero desesperadamente necesitan aumentar el apoyo y recursos. Y uno de los recursos mas eficientes tal vez sea el tratamiento a los muchachos jovenes por el uso de alcohol y drogas.

"Yo soy un padre, yo tengo dos hijas adolescentes," dice el Juez Hyde, viendo atrás la inquietud que le embarga a el y a los otros jueces de los Condados de Midland y Ector que convocan al Gran Jurado Especial. "Y que eso no juega una parte pequeña, también. Darse cuenta de que mis propios hijos puedan estar afectados por drogas y alcohol en esta comunidad."

"Yo creo que una de las mas importantes ventajas que nosotros tenemos en nuestra comunidad, en cualquier comunidad, es nuestra juventud. El factor de que el Gran Jurado encontró algunos problemas, yo pienso que eso sigue siendo una parte pequeña de nuestra juventud. Es esa parte pequeña que nosotros queremos tratar de salvar. Esta comunidad tiene mucha gente joven muy buena dentro de ella, que hace extremadamente bien en la escuela, nunca se mete en problemas. Pero ahí hay siempre un aumento de números que están en contacto con las drogas y el alcohol. Nosotros debemos de hacer alguna cosa acerca de ellos!

HOUSTON — Un procedimiento quirúgico sencillo posiblemente ayude a personas con asma quienes sufren de ataques repetidos conocidos como "síndrome sinobronquial."

"El síndrome sinobronquial ocurre cuando pacientes reciben tratamiento para un ataque de asma, pero no para los senos tapados que suscitaron el ataque. Esto causa que el asma regrese repetidamente," dijo el Dr. Gene Alford, profesor de otorrinolaringología del Baylor College of Medicine en Houston.

Alford y sus colegas usan cirugía endoscópica para abrir los canales de drenaje do los senos. En el procedimiento, se introduce por la nariz un tubo con un aparato para cortar muy pequeño en la punta.

A través de un "telescopio," el cirujano abre los canales óseos del sinus y quita la mucosa excesiva. La mucosa es el tejido húmedo que reviste la cavidad del seno. En los asmáticos o en personas con alergias, este tejido se hincha, causando que los canales se cierren.

La cirugía endoscópica es mejor tolerado por los pacientes que es la cirugía regular, dice Alford.

"La cirugía de los senos dejaba cortadas grandes alrededor de la boca, moretones alrededor de la ojos, e hinchazón que duraba hasta dos semanas," dijo Alford. "Con la cirugía endoscópica, usualmente no se tiene que pasar mas de una noche en el hospital, y no hay incisiones o moretones. Además, la cirugía abre los senos dramáticamente, reduciendo la probabilidad del síndrome sinobronquial."

Alford dice que la cirugía también es eficaz en personas con alergias que han fallado el "tratamiento médico regular."

"Obviamente, si un medicamento que se consigue sin receta médica proporciona alivio, la cirugía endoscópica es completamente innecesaria," dijo Alford. "Pero si el doctor ha intentado tratamientos normales y medicamentos, y la alergia persiste, entonces usualmente se recomienda cirugía."

Estas son buenas noticias para los mas de 40 millones de Americanos que sufren de alergias o sinusitis, dice Alford.

"La endoscopia realmente ha revolucionado la cirugía del seno," dijo Alford. "Estamos viendo unos resultados a largo plazo muy buenos. Y no es solamente para los casos mas extremos.

HOUSTON.-A simple surgical procedure may help people with asthma who suffer from recurring attacks known as "sinobronchial syndrome."

"Sinobronchial syndrome occurs when patients are treated for an asthma attack, but not the clogged sinuses that triggered the attack. This causes the asthma to return again and again," said Dr. Gene Alford, an assistant professor of otorhinolaryngology at Baylor College of Medicine in Houston.

Alford and his colleagues use endoscopic surgery to clear the sinus drainage canals. In the procedure, a tube with a tiny cutting device attached at the end is inserted through the nose.

Through a "telescope," the surgeon opens the bony channels of the sinus and removes excess mucosa, the moist tissue that lines the sinus cavity. In asthmatics or people with allergies, the tissue swells, causing the channels to close.

Endoscopic surgery is easier on the patients than is standard sinus surgery, says Alford.

"Sinus surgery used to leave large incisions above the mouth, bruising around the eyes and up to two weeks of swelling," he said. "With endoscopic surgery, there is usually no more than an overnight stay, no incisions and no bruises. Plus, it dramatically opens up the sinuses, reducing the likelihood for sinobronchial syndrome."

Alford says the surgery is also effective for people with allergies who have failed "standard medical treatment."

"Obviously, if an over.the-counter drug works, then endoscopic surgery is out of the question," he said. "But if the doctor has tried the normal treatments and drugs, and the allergies persist, then the surgery is usually recommended."

That's good news for the some 40 million Americans who suffer from allergies or sinusitis, says Alford.

"Endoscopy has really revolutionized sinus surgery," he said. "We're seeing some real good, long.term results. And it's not just for the most extreme cases."

Latinos Provide Unique Leadership In NAFTA Debate

By Antonio González

It is typical for critics of Latino leadership to decry the lack of Latino unity as the number one obstacle to advancing the Latino community's interests. Lately, however, the armchair quarterbacks have taken a different tack, criticizing Latino leaders for uniting around a common agenda with regard to the proposed North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA). This admirable process of consensus-building culminated recently in a Latino summit in which three of the paramount national Latino organizations endorsed a joint document on NAFTA.

The three groups .. Mexican American Legal Defense and Educational Fund, National Council of La Raza, and Southwest Voter Research Institute .. have joined together around a detailed program that addresses issues of domestic, foreign and trade policy with the goal of providing leadership to the nation on this most important issue. Their unique Latino perspective neither accepts nor rejects NAFTA as it is currently written, but offers a nine.point program on how to make NAFTA benefit workers, small.business people and the environment on both sides of the border.

Already La Opinion, the largest Spanish.language newspaper in the nation, has endorsed the Latino Consensus Position on NAFTA. And 14 other major organizations, including the League of United Latin American Citizens, Midwest Voter Registration Education Project and the National Puerto Rican Coalition, are bringing it to their boards and conferences for consideration.

How was the Latino Consensus Position on NAFTA developed? It's the result of the most extensive research and popular education program ever undertaken by Latino leaders. Literally dozens of community events, polls and directed research projects have been sponsored by Latino organizations since NAFTA became an issue in 1991. SVRI, for example, has conducted nine major statewide or multi-state conferences and a dozen regional briefings with nearly 3,000 Latino elected officials and community leaders participating over the last 18 months. SVRI researchers conducted sophisticated computer-modeling studies on the impact of NAFTA on Latino workers as well as numerous focus groups and opinion polls of U.S. Latinos as well as of Mexicans in the Valley of Mexico).

As a result, the Latino Consensus Position on NAFTA is firmly based on solid research and Latino grassroots and leadership opinion. Latinos are neither unconditionally for nor against NAFTA. For example, more than two-thirds of the California Latino electorate would favor a NAFTA that provides for displaced workers, environmental protection and border infrastructure. Only 10 percent favor NAFTA unconditionally. Only 20 percent reject NAFTA unconditionally. SVRI research shows that NAFTA does not cause massive U.S. job loss, but neither does it create significant numbers of new U.S. jobs.

In short, what is needed is an improved NAFTA, one that creates more jobs, retrains displaced workers, protects the environment and upgrades the U.S.-Mexico border. This is exactly the core of the Latino Consensus Position on NAFTA. It is also close to the position of President Clinton.

Are there Latino leaders who disagree with this posture? Of course, as always, a few on the margins hope to push the NAFTA debate into unhealthy polarized opposites. This is dangerous.

Those who wish to kill NAFTA outright should understand that they are combining forces with openly racist and xenophobic elements who see Mexico and immigrants as enemies. This position is also totally out of touch with Latino community opinion.

Similarly, those who want to push through the Bush version of NAFTA should realize that ignoring real environmental and employment concerns is not only bad public policy, it is also a losing proposition that cannot win in Congress. Ignoring the real fears about the downside of the Bush version of NAFTA will only polarize the country further, strengthening the hand of Mexico-bashers and xenophobes.

Ultimately, we must realize that NAFTA characterizes a new generation of issues that are far more complex than the issue-base (civil rights, Vietnam, Central America) that shaped most of us.

Advancing a visionary plan that responds to NAFTA's critics while preserving the economic benefits and historic advance in U.S..Mexican relations that NAFTA represents is both a sign of political maturity and the right thing to do. We should commend the leadership that had the vision and the guts to make it happen.

Los Latinos Proporcionan Dirigencia Singular En El Debate Sobre El Tratado De Libre Comercio

Por Antonio Gonzalez

Es típico de los críticos de la dirigencia latina el censurar la falta de unidad latina como el obstáculo principal para el adelanto de los intereses de la comunidad latina.

Ultimamente, sin embargo, los jugadores de defensa de salón han tomado un rumbo distinto, criticando a los dirigentes latinos por unirse alrededor de un programa de trabajo común con respecto al propuesto Tratado Norte-Americano de Libre Comercio (NAFTA).

Este tramite admirable de elaboración del consenso culminó hace poco en una reunion-cumbre latina, en la cual tres de las organizaciones hispanas nacionales principales respaldaron un documento conjunto sobre NAFTA.

Los tres grupos — el Fondo Mexicano-Americano para la Defensa Legal y la Enseñanza (MALDEF), el Consejo Nacional de La Raza y el Instituto de Investigación sobre los Electores del Suroeste (SVRI) — han unido sus fuerzas alrededor de un programa detallado que se enfoca sobre los asuntos de política interior, extranjera y comercial, con el fin de proporcionar dirigencia a la nación sobre este asunto de importancia extremada.

Su perspectiva latina singular ni acepta ni rechaza a NAFTA como esta redactado actualmente, sino que ofrece un programa de nueve puntos sobre el modo de hacer que NAFTA beneficie a los trabajadores, a los pequeños comerciantes y al ambiente en los dos lados de la frontera.

Ya "La Opinión," el mayor de los periódicos en español de la nación, ha respaldado a la Posición del Consenso Latino sobre NAFTA. Y otras 14 organizaciones importantes, incluyendo a la Liga de Ciudadanos Latino-Americanos Unidos (LULAC), el Proyecto del Medio-Oeste para la Inscripción y Enseñanza de los Electores y la Coalición Puertorriqueña Nacional, están llevándola a sus juntas de directores y conferencias para que sea considerada.

¿De que modo se desarrollo la Posición del Consenso Latino sobre NAFTA?

Es el resultado de la investigación mas extensa y del programa de enseñanza popular que hayan sido emprendidos alguna vez por los dirigentes latinos. Literalmente, docenas de acontecimientos comunitarios, encuestas y proyectos de investigación dirigida han sido auspiciados por las organizaciones latinas desde que NAFTA se convirtió en asunto en 1991.

El SVRI, por ejemplo, ha realizado nueve conferencias importantes a niveles estatales y de varios estados, y una docena de sesiones informativas regionales con cerca de 3,000 funcionarios durante los 18 meses últimos. Los investigadores del SVRI efectuaron estudios complicados de modelaje computadorizado sobre el efecto de NAFTA sobre los trabajadores latinos, así como numerosos grupos de enfoque y encuestas de opinión entre los latinos de los Estados Unidos (así como entre los mexicanos en el Valle de México).

Como resultado, la Posición del Consenso Latino sobre NAFTA esta basada firmemente en investigaciones sólidas y en las opiniones del pueblo y de la dirigencia latinos: Los latinos no se hallan incondicionalmente ni a favor ni en contra de NAFTA. Por ejemplo, mas de los dos tercios del electorado latino de California favorecería un tratado que contenga disposiciones para los trabajadores desplazados, la protección ambiental y la infraestructura fronteriza. Solo el 10% favorece a NAFTA incondicionalmente. Solo el 20% rechaza a NAFTA incondicionalmente. Además, la investigación del SVRI muestra que NAFTA no ocasiona perdidas impresionantes de empleos en los Estados Unidos, pero que tampoco crea una cantidad importante de nuevos empleos en este país.

En resumen, lo que se necesita es un NAFTA mejorado, que cree mas empleos, vuelva a adiestrar a los trabajadores desplazados, proteja el ambiente y mejore las circunstancias en la frontera entre los Estados Unidos y México. Este es exactamente el núcleo de la Posición del Consenso Latino sobre NAFTA. Esta igualmente cercano a la postura del Presidente Clinton.

¿Hay algunos dirigentes latinos que discorden de esta postura? Desde luego, como siempre, unos pocos en los margénes esperan impulsar al debate sobre NAFTA hacia extremos opuestos polarizados. Esto es peligroso.

Los que desean matar a NAFTA absolutamente deberían entender que están combinando sus fuerzas con elementos abiertamente racistas y anti-extranjeros, que ven a México y a los inmigrantes como a enemigos.

Esta postura es de igual modo totalmente fuera de sintonia con la opinión comunitaria latina.

De manera semejante, los que desean impulsar a la versión de Bush de NAFTA deberían darse cuenta de que el pasar por alto a las preocupaciones verdaderas sobre el ambiente y los empleos no es únicamente una política publica mala, sino que también es una propuesta perdedora que no puede triunfar en el Congreso.

El pasar por alto a los temores verdaderos sobre la parte perjudicial de la versión de Bush sobre NAFTA solo polarizara ulteriormente al país, fortaleciendo la mano de los que no gustan de México y de los que odian a los extranjeros.

Por ultimo, hemos de darnos cuenta de que NAFTA caracteriza a una nueva generación de asuntos que son mucho mas complicados que la base de los asuntos (los derechos civiles, Vietnam, la América Central) que conformaron a la mayoría de nosotros.

El adelantar un plan visionario que responda a los críticos de NAFTA mientras conserve los beneficios económicos y el adelanto histórico en las relaciones entre los Estados Unidos y México que NAFTA representa, es tanto una señal de madurez política como lo correcto para hacer. Deberíamos elogiar a la dirigencia que tuvo la visión y las agallas para hacerlo suceder.

existe ahora en el condado de Midland."

Pero si el Gran Jurado Especial encuentro poca evidencia de organización y cooperación de actividades entre las agencias de la fuerza de la ley, ellos encontraron evidencia de entre los criminales.

"Mas testimonio indica que hay 'familias' operando sofisticadamente sistemas de pirámides de distribución que manejan drogas ilegalmente directamente a las propiedades de las escuelas y en las manos de jovenes compradores y vendedores," dice el reporte del Condado de Ector.

"A pesar de que los medios de comunicación reportan lo contrario, esta creciendo un problema de panderillismo en Midland," dice el reporte del Condado de Midland, quien fue a citar a tales grupos como los Crips y Vario South Side, como empleados en la venta de drogas.

Ambos reportes también indica inquietud por la violencia que acompaña a estos grupos y sus actividades.

Los dos reportes también conmovieron en los efectos del alcohol y drogas en los muchachos jovenes en las escuelas. Efectos que seriamente impide la educación y el futuro de ellos.

"Maestros reportan que un alto numero de incidencia de malestares hay los Lunes por la mañana los cuales los relacionan con el consumo de alcohol de fin de semana," dice el reporte del Condado de Midland. "Ellos también constantemente están testificando acerca de los estudiantes de secundaria que regresan después de comida, borrachos o drogados, o no regresan a ninguna clase por este motivo."

"Un estudiante intoxicado no puede aprender e interrumpir a la hora de clase de otros estudiantes."

La investigación del Condado de Ector encontró, "que es un hecho que el uso indiscriminado de alcohol es una realidad que pasa todos los días en nuestros cuartos de clase; dentro de las escuelas, y en las funciones relacionadas con la escuela."

Ambos reportes también expresan inquietud acerca de las drogas y alcohol usado entre los estudiantes atletas, con el reporte del Condado de Ector dijo, "fue aparentemente que estudiantes que están en los programas de deportes están igualmente involucrados en el uso de alcohol y drogas y que el uso en los atletas tiene, en ocasiones, un trato diferente que a los estudiantes que no están involucrados en los programas de deportes."

Los reportes publicados por el Gran Jurado Especial de los Condados de Midland y Ector a aumentado en inquietud acerca del serio problema que confrontan la gente joven en el Oeste de Tejas. La respuesta a sido variada. Algunas han dicho en voz alta que tan importante y necesario paso si nosotros alguna vez reclamamos a nuestra escuela, y aseguramos la calidad de la educación y un brillante futuro para nuestros muchachos jovenes.

Otros, mientras tanto, han desafiado a las investigaciones del Gran Jurado Especial, la información que ellos recogen y la conclusión ellos alcanzan. Y aun otros continúan negando que dicho problema existe — actitud que ambos reportes han indicado fue para que se extendiera en las comunidades.

Pero adicionalmente de hacer la observación al problema, los reportes de ambos Grandes Jurados Especiales también observan la solución. Ambos admiten que programas efectivos se están dando, ambos en educación y fuerza de la ley, pero desesperadamente necesitan aumentar el apoyo y recursos. Y uno de los recursos mas eficientes tal vez sea el tratamiento a los muchachos jovenes por el uso de alcohol y drogas.

"Yo soy un padre, yo tengo dos hijas adolescentes," dice el Juez Hyde, viendo atrás la inquietud que le embarga a el y a los otros jueces de los Condados de Midland y Ector que convocan al Gran Jurado Especial. "Y que eso no juega una parte pequeña, también. Darse cuenta de que mis propios hijos puedan estar afectados por drogas y alcohol en esta comunidad."

"Yo creo que una de las mas importantes ventajas que nosotros tenemos en nuestra comunidad, en cualquier comunidad, es nuestra juventud. El factor de que el Gran Jurado encontró algunos problemas, yo pienso que eso sigue siendo una parte pequeña de nuestra juventud. Es esa parte pequeña que nosotros queremos tratar de salvar. Esta comunidad tiene mucha gente joven muy buena dentro de ella, que hace extremadamente bien en la escuela, nunca se mete en problemas. Pero ahí hay siempre un aumento de números que están en contacto con las drogas y el alcohol. Nosotros debemos de hacer alguna cosa acerca de ellos!

HOUSTON — Un procedimiento quirúgico sencillo posiblemente ayude a personas con asma quienes sufren de ataques repetidos conocidos como "síndrome sinobronquial."

"El síndrome sinobronquial ocurre cuando pacientes reciben tratamiento para un ataque de asma, pero no para los senos tapados que suscitaron el ataque. Esto causa que el asma regrese repetidamente," dijo el Dr. Gene Alford, profesor de otorrinolaringología del Baylor College of Medicine en Houston.

Alford y sus colegas usan cirugía endoscópica para abrir los canales de drenaje do los senos. En el procedimiento, se introduce por la nariz un tubo con un aparato para corta. muy pequeño en la punta.

A través de un "telescopio," el cirujano abre los canales óseos del sinus y quita la mucosa excesiva. La mucosa es el tejido húmedo que reviste la cavidad del seno. En los asmáticos o en personas con alergias, este tejido se hincha, causando que los canales se cierren.

La cirugía endoscópica es mejor tolerado por los pacientes que es la cirugía regular, dice Alford.

"La cirugía de los senos dejaba cortadas grandes alrededor de la boca, moretones alrededor de la ojos, e hinchazón que duraba hasta dos semanas," dijo Alford. "Con la cirugía endoscópica, usualmente no se tiene que pasar mas de una noche en el hospital, y no hay incisiones o moretones. Además, la cirugía abre los senos dramáticamente, reduciendo la probabilidad del síndrome sinobronquial."

Alford dice que la cirugía también es eficaz en personas con alergias que han fallado el "tratamiento médico regular."

"Obviamente, si un medicamento que se consigue sin receta médica proporciona alivio, la cirugía endoscópica es completamente innecesaria," dijo Alford. "Pero si el doctor ha intentado tratamientos normales y medicamentos, y la alergia persiste, entonces usualmente se recomienda cirugía."

Estas son buenas noticias para los mas de 40 millones de Americanos que sufren de alergias o sinusitis, dice Alford.

"La endoscopìa realmente ha revolucionado la cirugía del seno," dijo Alford. "Estamos viendo unos resultados a largo plazo muy buenos. Y no es solamente para los casos mas extremos.

Fort Stockton to Celebrate 1993 Fiesta de San Juan

For a quarter-of-a-century, the Fiesta de San Juan has been a tradition of family fun and entertainment for the community of Fort Stockton.

That tradition will continue Saturday and Sunday, June 19th and 20th, when this year's Fiesta meets at Rooney Park, in Fort Stockton.

According to Nina Garcia, Co-chairperson of this year's Fiesta, along with her husband, Joe, and Jesse and Viola Alvarez, the event will feature a little something for everyone.

The first of many related events will actually take place on the weekend of June 12th, when a golf tournament will be held at the Fort Stockton Golf Course. Those interested in registering should call Tournament Chairman Manuel Benavides, at 336-9745.

Athletics will also be a part of the festivities during the Fiesta weekend. On Saturday, June 19th, there will be a men's softball tournament, and a co-ed volleyball tournament, at Rooney Park.

Other attractions at the park include food booths, game booths, and a car show. Visitors to the Fiesta will get to pick their favorite entry in the car show, with the People's Choice Awards, while other entries in the show will flex their muscle in the Stereo Sound Competition.

Saturday's activities kick-off with a parade, which will lead to the park, while Sunday's activities will begin with a mass. A barbeque meal will be served Sunday, and local hairdresser Elvira Feyry is organizing others to offer haircuts to Fiesta visitors. We really meant it when we said there'd be something for everybody!

That includes music, of course. On Saturday night, the Coronation Dance, in honor of this year's Queen of the Fiesta de San Juan, will take place at the Fort Stockton Civic Center. Shelly Lares of San Antonio will provide the entertainment, and food and set-ups will be available. Sunday afternoon will feature mariachi music at the park.

Garcia pointed out that proceeds raised from all of the events will benefit projects and activities of Saint Joseph's Catholic Church of Fort Stockton. And she adds that the event would not be possible without all the time and effort from church members and volunteers.

She also acknowledges the contributions of Pecos County Commissioner Tony Villareal, who has overseen operations at Rooney Park, and the improvements that have made it an attractive place where families can go and enjoy themselves.

Once again, this year's Fiesta de San Juan will take place Saturday and Sunday, June 19th and 20th, at Rooney Park, in Fort Stockton. Admission to the main Fiesta activities at the park is free. Those wishing for more information about the Fiesta, or any of it's related activities, should call Fiesta Co-chairperson Nina Garcia, weekdays, at 336-7994.

Fort Stockton Celebra la Fiesta de San Juan 1993

Por un cuarto de siglo, la Fiesta de San Juan a sido una tradición de diversión para la familia y entretenimiento para la comunidad de Fort Stockton.

La tradición continuara Sábado y Domingo, 19 y 20 de Junio, cuando la Fiesta de este año se celebre en el Parque Rooney, en Fort Stockton.

De acuerdo con Nina Garcia, Co-Presidenta de la Fiesta de este año, junto con su esposo, Joe, y Jesse y Viola Alvarez, el evento presentara una pequeña atracción para todos.

Los primeros de muchos eventos relacionados tomaran parte actualmente en el fin de semana del 12 de Junio, cuando un torneo de golf será celebrado en el Campo de golf de Fort Stockton. Esos interesados en registrarse pueden comunicarse con el Presidente del Torneo, Manuel Benavides, al 336-9745.

Atletismo también será parte de las festividades durante la Fiesta del fin de semana. El Sábado, 19 de Junio, habrá un torneo de softbol para caballeros y un torneo de voleybol, en el Parque Rooney.

Otras atracciones en el parque incluyendo puestos de comida, puestos con juegos y un evento de autos. Visitantes a la Fiesta tendrán que escoger su entrada favorita a la exhibición de autos, con la Selección de Premios de la Gente, mientras en otras entradas se relajaran los músculos para la exhibición de la Competencia de Sonido Estereofonico.

Las actividades del Sábado comenzaran con un desfile, que lo conducirá hasta el parque, mientras las actividades del Domingo comenzaran con una misa. Una comida de barbacoa se servirá el Domingo y Elvira Feyry, estilista local, esta organizando a otros para ofrecer corte de cabello a los visitantes de la Fiesta. Nosotros realmente tenemos la intención cuando nosotros decimos que habrá alguna cosa para todos!

Esto incluye música, desde luego. El Sábado por la noche, el baile de Coronación, en honor de La Reina de la Fiesta de San Juan este año, tomara lugar en el Centro Cívico de Fort Stockton. Shelly Lares de San Antonio proveerá el entretenimiento y comida y todo estará disponible. El Domingo por la tarde se presentara música con mariachis en el parque.

Garcia nos señala que de seguir aumentando todos los eventos beneficiaran proyectos y actividades de la Iglesia Católica de San Juan de Fort Stockton. Y ella añade que el evento no es posible sin todo el tiempo y esfuerzo de los miembros de la Iglesia y voluntarios.

Ella también admite la contribución del Comisionado del Condado de Pecos, Tony Villarreal, quien a seguido de cerca la operación en el Parque Rooney, y los mejoramientos que han hecho el lugar tan atractivo donde las familias pueden ir y disfrutar ellas mismas.

Una vez mas, la Fiesta de San Juan de este año tomara lugar Sábado y Domingo, 19 y 20 de Junio, en el Parque Rooney, en Fort Stockton. La admisión a las actividades principales de la Fiesta en el parque es gratis. Aquellos que deseen mas información acerca de la Fiesta, o cualquier cosa relacionada con las actividades, deberán llamar a Nina Garcia Co-Presidenta, durante la semana, al 336-7994.

though, the answers or solutions are complex, clearly strong commitment and leadership are key to addressing the issue. Leadership and commitment must come not only from faculty, administration, and college boards but from the citizens of our communities. Particularly the public institutions can be encouraged by the taxpaying public to address these educational concerns.

The clock is ticking. We must demand high standards in the class room, however, we must provide the support that will allow willing students to meet and excel that standard. Let us encourage our schools and colleges to not only seek the super stars but to develop those students who display talent both in a conventional and non-conventional manner.

We as citizens of the community should help our city, state and country make good on the American promise of an education. I particularly enjoy the words of Franklin D. Roosevelt, "We seek to build an America where no one is left out and we must do so not only because it is right, but the future well-being of our nation non-minority and minority has placed that task so unmistakably before us".

NUEVA VISTA

5 de noviembre de 1991 – Los residentes de Texas votan a favor de la creación de una Lotería de Texas con un margen de 2 a 1.

El 29 de mayo de 1993, fue un gran día para la Lotería de Texas. No sólo marcó la introducción de Quick Pick, una nueva forma de jugar

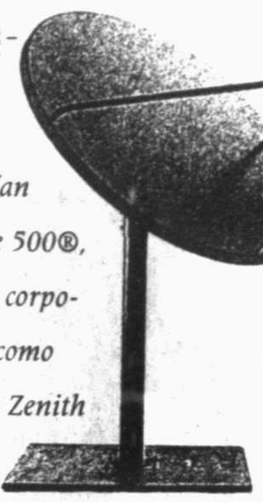

19 de marzo de 1992 – Susan Holten, de Carrollton, Texas, gana el concurso del Logo de la Lotería de Texas. Su diseño es el de un sombrero tejano tirado hacia arriba en celebración.

LOTTO Texas, sino que también nuestro primer aniversario. Y durante ese primer año que los residentes de Texas compraron sus boletos de la Lotería por primera vez, Texas ha adquirido más de 63 nuevos millonarios. A través de los juegos instantáneos y LOTTO Texas, la gente ha ganado más de $889 millones. Pero en realidad el gran ganador es el estado de Texas. Hasta ahora, la Lotería ha contribuido más de medio billón de dólares al Fondo General de Ingresos para el Estado. La contribución de la Lotería, la cual ha sobrepasado su proyección original, representa solamente cerca del 3% del Fondo General de Ingresos para el Estado. Este fondo ayuda a una gran lista de programas del estado, como servicios para la salud pública, parques, seguridad pública, escuelas públicas y prisiones. Todos estos y numerosos otros programas, se benefician de alguna manera cada vez que usted raspa un boleto o escoge seis números.

Este ha sido un comienzo increíble. Si la Lotería de Texas fuera una empresa corporativa, sus ventas, durante los 10 primeros meses, ocuparían el lugar 270 en el Fortune 500®, un lugar más alto que las corporaciones gigantes como Del Monte Foods y Zenith Electronics. Se ha recorrido un largo camino en un tiempo muy corto, y no se trata de suerte nada más. Se trata de la gente. Gente como nuestros comerciantes, quienes venden los boletos y contestan las preguntas. Y gente como usted. Porque ya sea que usted juegue a la Lotería o no, estamos trabajando para usted.

14 de noviembre de 1992 – El primer sorteo de LOTTO Texas es televisado por satélite a través del estado de Texas.

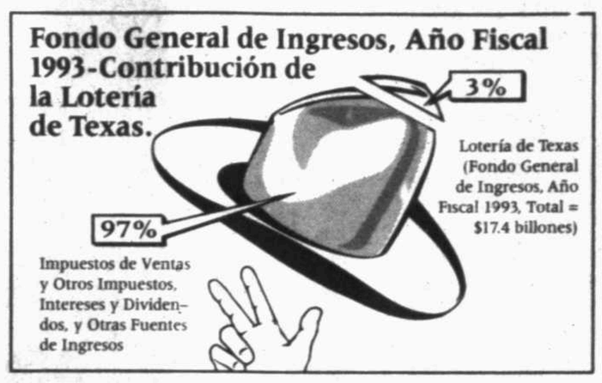

Con un gran récord de ventas, una innovadora tecnología y una organizada agenda de trabajo, su Lotería de Texas ha trazado una nueva pauta a seguir, para las loterías de otros estados. Texas es el primer estado en pagar un millón de dólares en efectivo cada semana, durante 14 semanas consecutivas, a cada uno de los ganadores de las Rifas Millonarias. Texas es también el primer estado que utiliza boletos impresos en papel reciclado que a su vez son reciclables; así como el primer estado en ofrecer terminales de computadoras para LOTTO, a 5,200 comerciantes, listas para operar en el día del comienzo del juego—más que ningún otro estado.

28 de noviembre de 1992 – Janie Kallus, de Schulenberg, Texas, es la primera ganadora de LOTTO Texas con un premio de $21.8 millones.

Una cuidadosa administración del dinero del estado, la evaluación contínua y un entusiasmo sin precedentes, son los elementos que nos ayudan a mantenernos al frente. Nuestro costo inicial de $5.6 millones fue menos de la mitad de los $12 millones originalmente asignados. Y para el 31 de agosto de 1993, aproximadamente $695 millones habrán sido depositados en el Fondo General de Ingresos para el Estado, lo que significa que será una contribución de más del 50% originalmente estimado.

En nuestro segundo año de operaciones, nuestra meta es hacerlo aún mejor. Usted puede ayudarnos si nos manda sus sugerencias. Nuestro compromiso con Texas es el de proveer un sistema de lotería que ofrezca un gran entretenimiento y que sea administrado de la mejor manera posible.

Para asegurarnos que el próximo año sea aún mejor, estamos consultando a un experto.

Usted.

5 de junio de 1992 – 102.4 millones de boletos de Lone Star Millions son vendidos durante la primera semana, imponiendo así otro récord mundial.

29 de mayo de 1992 – El primer juego instantáneo, Lone Star Millions, comienza con siete semanas de adelanto. En su primer día la venta de boletos llega a 23.2 millones, no sólo imponiendo un récord mundial, sino que también el costo total de introducción de la Lotería es recuperado en las tres primeras horas.

7 de noviembre de 1992 – La venta de boletos de LOTTO Texas comienza con ocho semanas de adelanto.

El Contralor del Estado y La Directora de la Lotería de Texas desean saber los comentarios y preguntas que usted tenga acerca del desempeño de la Lotería de Texas. Por favor, use el espacio de abajo e incluya su dirección para que puedan responderle rápida y eficientemente. O llame gratis al 1-800-37-LOTTO.

La Banda de Shelly Lares Debuto Por Primera Vez en el Oeste de Tejas

Por Leonela

Quien pudiera ver imaginarse que Olivia Newton-John tenga que ver algo con la música Tejana? Bueno tal vez no directamente, pero indirectamente si tuvo que ver.

Una muchachita de 10 años de edad que le gustaba cantar mucho, se le pidió que cantara una canción en la boda de su hermana mayor, una canción de Olivia Newton-John. Bueno, ella ensayo lo canción con la banda 'Hot Tamales', que era la banda que iba a tocar en la boda y le gusto a la banda. "Ellos pensaron que yo estaba haciéndolo muy bien para tener 10 años de edad.," recuerda Shelly Lares, de la vez que ella primero comenzó.

La banda 'Hot Tamales' querían que Shelly cantara con ellos en los fines de semana después que ellos la escucharon cantar. Pero teniendo solamente 10 años de edad, la banda tenia que pedir el permiso a sus padres. "Es lo que siempre he querido, entonces ellos dijeron 'Okay'," dijo Shelly.

"Nosotros siempre hemos dejado a nuestros muchachos, en cualquier cosa que ellos quieran estar, por cuanto tiempo sea como positivo. Nosotros siempre los ayudamos en todo," declara Fred Lares, el padre de Shelly.

Nacida el 13 de Noviembre de 1971 en San Antonio de Fred e Irene Lares. Ella es la ultima de cuatro hijos, de 2 hermanas y un hermano. ¿Ahora es este talento hereditario? ¡Claro que si es! "Mi padre, mas antes tenia un conjunto con sus hermanos cuando ellos estaban mas chicos que se llamaba Conjunto Coronado. Mi madre era la que cantaba junto con mi tía, ellos acostumbraban hacer programas en la radio y cosas así," Shelly nos informo.

Shelly tenia 10 años cuando ella principio con la banda 'Hot Tamales' y 14 años cuando ella los dejo. "Yo tuve mi propio banda cuando tenia 15 o 16 años. Nosotros invertimos con nuestro propio dinero nuestro equipo," dice Shelly.

Los miembros de la banda de Shelly Lares incluye J.J. Reyes - teclado, Rudy Perez - Bajo profundo, Adan Arivelos - tambores y David Gonzales - acordeón. Las canciones de Shelly son escritas por diferentes escritores como Richard Allen, J.J. Reyes, Shelly ella misma, y su madre.

"J.J., lo que el principalmente hace, el hace los arreglos de la música. Yo escribo la melodía, lo que yo canto. Luego nosotros nos juntamos como banda y le añadimos nuestro propio estilo," dice Shelly.

La música y la voz de Shelly tiene un sonido muy característico. Su profunda, ronca voz, el pequeños grito que ella da durante sus canciones hace de sus canciones reconocibles ante el publico cuando ellos la escuchan entre todas las radios del Oeste de Tejas. Sus programas están llenos de entusiasmo, sentimientos y corazón. La música y el modo que se escucha es lo que le importa a Shelly y a su banda. "Déjeme decirle algo acerca de mi banda," dice Shelly, "ellos son muy jovenes y muy dedicados. Lo que realmente me gusta de mis muchachos es que nosotros preferimos escucharnos bien primero, luego trabajar en nuestro programa después.

"Eventualmente, J.J. va hacer uno de los mejores músicos en el teclado," dice Fred Lares. "Yo pienso que muchos de mis compañeros van a ser observados en el futuro, como músicos," Shelly añade.

La primera vez que Shelly fue presentada ante el Oeste de Tejas fue en 1989. Ella actuó en Los Arcos Salón de baile en Odessa y fue promovida por, en ese tiempo estación de radio, KNDA. Shelly siempre a hecho y sigue haciendo los viajes con sus padres y la banda. "La banda es como mi familia. Ellos son como mis hermanos," Shelly demanda. Su padre es el director y su madre es la encargada de las ventas promocionales.

Otras ciudades del Oeste de Tejas en las que Shelly se a presentado son Big Spring, Pecos y Fort Stockton. En Agosto ellos harán una gira de tres semanas al Medio-Oeste, (Ohio, Chicago, y Milwaukee). Música Tejana no es muy escuchada en las estaciones de la radio en el Medio-Oeste como es escuchada aquí en el Oeste de Tejas, entonces ellos realmente desenrollaron la alfombra roja para CUALQUIER conjunto Tejano," dice Shelly.

Aparte de estar de gira en los fines de semana, Shelly a estado disponible para hablar en las escuelas. "Yo pienso que nosotros debemos involucrarnos con la generación joven con las cosas como están hoy en día. Yo hablo con los muchachos acerca de quedarse en la escuela y alejarse de las drogas. Si ellos aun te ven que vas a sus escuelas, usted les a hecho el año maravilloso. Muchos de los artistas grandes Tejanos, que la gente lo ve hacia arriba, debería hacer esto. Es una cosa que yo hago ahora."

Para la generación joven del Oeste de Tejas, Shelly dice, "Si usted va a hacer algo, hagalo por usted mismo y no por otras personas. Porque amigos vienen y amigos se van y solamente muy pocos se quedan."

Con su nuevo teme 'Apaga la Luz', Shelly esta contemplando en hacer un video con este tema, mas comenzar a trabajar en un álbum Country? Pueda ser.

Verifique la Guía de Entretenimiento de la NuevaVista para la siguiente presentación de Shelly en el Oeste de Tejas.

"Yo quiero agradecer a toda la gente del Oeste de Tejas por apoyar al la banda de Shelly Lares, nosotros realmente lo agradecemos. Nosotros continuaremos a volver.

Shelly Lares Band Debute was in West Texas

By Leonela

Who would have imagined Olivia Newton-John having something to do with Tejano music? Well, maybe not directly, but indirectly she did.

A 10-year old little girl who liked to sing a lot was asked to sing a song at her older sister's wedding, a song by Olivia Newton-John. Well, she rehearsed it with the band 'Hot Tamales', which was to play at the wedding, and the band liked it. "They thought I was really good for a 10-year old," recalled Shelly Lares, of the time when she first started.

NuevaVista Photo

The 'Hot Tamales Band wanted Shelly to sing with them on weekends after they heard her sing. But being only 10, the band had to ask her parents for permission. "It's what I've always wanted, so they said 'Okay'," said Shelly.

"We always let our kids, in whatever they want to be, so long as it's positive. We'll always help them out," stated Fred Lares, Shelly's dad.

Born November 13, 1971 in San Antonio to Fred and Irene Lares. She is the last of four children, with 2 sisters and 1 brother. Now is this talent hereditary? Of course it is! "My dad used to have a conjunto with his brothers when they were a little younger called Conjunto Coronado. My mom used to sing with my aunt, they used to do radio shows and stuff," Shelly informed us.

Shelly was 10 when she first started with the band 'Hot Tamales' and 14 when she left them. "I got my own band when I was 15 or 16. We invested our own money in our own equipment," said Shelly.

The members of the Shelly Lares Band include J.J. Reyes - keyboards, Rudy Perez - bass, Adan Arivelos - drums and David Gonzales - accordion. Shelly's songs are written by different writers such as Richard Allen, J.J. Reyes, Shelly herself, and her mom.

"J.J., what he mainly does, he does the arrangement of the music. I write the melody, what I sing. Then we get together as a band and add our own style," said Shelly.

Shelly's music and voice have a very distinctive sound. Her deep, raspy voice, the little shouts she gives during her songs make all her songs recognizable to the public when they are heard through the radios of West Texas. Her shows are full of enthusiasm, feelings, and spunk. The music and the way it sounds is what's important to Shelly and her band. "Let me tell you something about my band," said Shelly, "they're very young and very dedicated. What I really like about my boys is that we'd rather sound good first, then work on our show later.

"Eventually, J.J. is going to be one of the better keyboard players," said Fred Lares. "I think a lot of my guys are gonna be noticed later, as musicians," Shelly added.

Recently, the band acquired sponsorship from Wrangler and Miller Lite. "We do outdoor concerts for Miller Lite and Wrangler is helping us get into rodeos," said Shelly.

The first time Shelly was introduced to West Texas was in 1989. She played at Los Arcos Ballroom in Odessa and was promoted by, then radio station, KNDA. Shelly has always and still does travel with her parents and the band. "The band is like your family. They're like my brothers," Shelly claimed. Her dad is the manager and her mom is in charge of the promotional sales.

Other cities here is West Texas Shelly has performed in are Big Spring, Pecos, and Fort Stockton.

In August they will do a three week tour to the Mid-West, (Ohio, Chicago & Milwaukee). Tejano music isn't readily available on radio stations in the Mid-West like it is here in West Texas, so they really roll out the red carpet to ANY Tejano band," said Shelly.

But what about West Texas? "West Texas has always been one of our favorite places to come. Mainly I guess, cause it was the first time we ever went on the road. On my own," declared Shelly.

Aside from being on the road on weekends, Shelly has made herself available to talk to schools. "I think that we should get more involved with the younger generation with the way things are now-a-days. I talk to the kids about staying in school and staying off of drugs. If they even see you go to their school, you'll make their whole year. A lot of real big Tejano artists that people look up to should do that. That's one thing that I do now."

To the younger generation of West Texas, Shelly says, "If you're gonna do something, do it for yourself and not for everybody else. Because friends come and friends go, and only a very few stay."

With her newest release 'Apaga la Luz' out, Shelly is looking to do a video for it, plus, start to work on a Country album? Could be.

Check NuevaVista's Entertainment Guide for Shelly's next performance in West Texas.

"I want to thank all the people in West Texas for supporting the Shelly Lares Band, we really appreciate it. We're gonna continue to keep coming back. These were our first fans and will always be in my heart."

Los Muchachos Exploradores... un Asunto Familiar

Por Amarante Cordova

Si es verdad que la practica hace perfeccionistas, entonces Felis Subia, una voluntaria con el Buffalo Trail Council (Consejo del Sendero Buffalo), Boy Scouts of América (Muchachos Exploradores de América) y la madre de cuatro scouts, deber estar muy, pero muy cerca a la perfección.

"Todos activos en la Exploración. Yo tengo tres Águilas Exploradoras," dice Subia, refiriéndose al mas alto grado en Exploradores, "y yo tengo otro mas. Setenta y cinco porciento!"

"Es un buen programa. Enriquece a nuestras familias, porque todos participamos en cosas."

El compromiso de Subia con los Exploradores principio hace muchos años, cuando su primer hijo se registro en los Exploradores Cachorros, el programa para hijos mas jovenes de Muchachos Exploradores. En los años que siguieron, ella aprendió y creció junto con sus hijos.

"Cuando ellos estaban pequeños, con los Exploradores Cachorros, yo hice mas con ellos," recuerda Subia, quien comenzó como una Jefe de Guardia. "Ahora, es una de dos, Papa o Maestra de Exploradores (La Jefe de una tropa de muchachos exploradores). Pero todavía me gusta trabajar con ellos y mantenerme en contacto. "

"Me gusta saber que están haciendo mi muchachos y en donde están ellos. Esa es la única manera que voy a saber que están haciendo ellos," ella añadió, expresando una inquietud que muchos padres sienten ahora. "Usted sabe los muchachos de ahora en día. Usted no sabe a donde van a meterse, si usted no esta involucrada."

"Yo se que mis padres no estuvieron involucrados con nosotros. Principalmente, fue mi madre, porque mi padre, usted sabe, el iba a trabajar y regresaba a casa y eso era su papel. Nosotros tratamos de cambiar eso en mi familia, en donde Mama y Papa hacen un poquito mas con los hijos. Y lleno de esperanzas, ellos lo llevaran a cabo."

Sobre los años, Subia serviría a Exploradores, y a la comunidad, en muchas capacidades. Como Directora de Entrenamiento de Cachorros, en el Comité de la Tropa de sus hijos, y manejadora del concilio local "Trading Post" (Puesto de Comercio) tienda de surtido.

Desde que los Muchachas Exploradores vinieron a América, a principios del siglo veinteavo, se han visto muchos cambios. Las áreas de interés exploradas por Exploradores han crecido dramáticamente. Exploradores ahora han podido ganar insignias al mérito en mas de 125 áreas, como campamento y caminata, ciudadanía, las ciencias, primeros auxilios, comunicaciones, atletismo, las artes, y mucho, mucho mas. Y ahora sirve a una amplia variedad de edades en la juventud, desde los 6 años de edad en el Programa de Tigeres Cachorros, a los de 12 a 18 años de edad en el Programa Muchachos Exploradores.

Entonces esta el programa de Explorador, que esta abierto a los muchachos y a las muchachas, 14 a 18 años de edad. Exploradores esta patrocinado por profesionales en una extensa variedad de campos, como ejecución de ley o cuidado de la salud y la gente joven recibe una oportunidad única para aprender valioso trabajo de destreza.

Hasta cierto punto, Exploradores aprenden valiosas lecciones.

"Les enseñan a ellos como ser buenos adultos, les enseñan a ellos las diferentes leyes, como protejerse ellos mismos, como decir 'NO'. Algunas de las cosas que debemos enseñarles a ellos en el hogar," explica Subia. "Mirar fijamente la presión esta arriba, y es realmente mala. Pero el programa les esta enseñado a ellos como protejerse a ellos mismos y decir "NO", y que es bueno y que es malo. Valores, es una parte importante en los Exploradores".

Pero Subia señala que esas lecciones de mucho valor se pueden perder sino se incrementa la participación, por los dos lados jovenes y adultos, especialmente en la Comunidad Hispana.

"Ahora mismo, nosotros estamos dolidos por eso. Nosotros necesitamos el liderazgo de los adultos. Nosotros tenemos trabajo para todos, nomas nos falta encontrar a los interesados. Pero hay mucho afuera que pueden hacer," ella dice. "En la tropa de nuestro comité, por ejemplo, nosotros tenemos gente que arregla la transportación para nuestros muchachos, cuando ellos van a campar. Nosotros necesitamos adultos que se pongan en contacto por teléfono y es algo que usted podría hacer una vez por semana, o una vez por mes. No es nada que usted puede hacer todo el tiempo."

"Toma una persona especial para ser Maestra Exploradora, o Maestra de Cachorros. Usted tiene que ser paciente, a usted le tienen que gustar los muchachos y usted tiene que estar dispuesta a trabajar con adultos."

Los programas de Muchachos Exploradores se encuentran en pueblos y ciudades por todo el Oeste de Tejas, y se puede encontrar en los directorios telefónicos locales. La jefatura del Buffalo Trail Council of Boy Scouts (Consejo del Sendero Búfalo de los Muchachos Exploradores), que sirve a toda la región del Oeste de Tejas, esta en Midland. El numero de teléfono es 570-7601.

Es una situación, segun Subia, donde todos pueden ganar, o todos pueden perder.

"Bueno, familias pierden porque ellos no se involucran con las cosas que suceden dentro de la comunidad," ella dice. "Si usted no lleva a su muchacho a esto, ellos nunca llegan a obtener esto. Ellos usualmente acaban en las calles y obtendrán cualquier cosa que ellos quieran allí."

"Nosotros queremos darles a nuestros muchachos un buen programa, pero ellos tienen que obtener el respaldo de los adultos! Usted tiene que respaldar a sus muchachos aunque estén en la escuela, o estén en deportes, o cualquier cosa. Ellos tienen que saber que los padres están detrás de ellos, para orientarlos. Es triste cuando usted los deja a otros adultos, o a otros muchachos, pero pasa. Usted tiene que ir a buscar para conseguir involucrarse!"

Boy Scouting... A Family Affair

By Amarante Cordova

If it's true that practice makes perfect, then Felis Subia, a volunteer with the Buffalo Trail Council, Boy Scouts of America, and the mother of four Scouts, must be very, very close to perfect.

"All active with Scouting. I've got three Eagle Scouts," said Subia, referring to the highest rank in Scouting, "and I've got one more. Seventy-five percent!"

"It's a good program. It's enriched our family, because we can all participate in things together."

Subia's involvement with Scouting began many years ago, when two of her sons enrolled in Cub Scouts, the junior program of Boy Scouting. In the years that followed, she would learn and grow with her children.

"When they were little, with Cub Scouts, I did more with them," recalled Subia, who began as a Den Leader. "Now, it's either Dad, or the Scoutmaster (the leader of a troop of Boy Scouts). But I still like to work with them, and stay in touch."

"I like to know what my kids are doing, and where they're at. That's the only way I'm going to know what they're doing," she added, expressing a concern that so many parents feel today. "You know the kids nowadays. You don't know what they're going to get into, if you're not involved."

"I know my parents weren't as involved with us. Mostly, it was my mom, because my dad, went to work and came home, and that was his role. We've tried to change that in our family, to where it's mom and dad do a little bit more with the kids. And hopefully, they'll carry it on down."

Over the years, Subia would serve Scouting, and the community, in many capacities. As a Cub Training Chairman, on her sons' Troop Committee, and Manager of the local council's 'Trading Post' supply store.

"It's a good program. It's enriched our family, because we can all participate in things." — Felice Subia, a volunteer with the Buffalo Trail Council, Boy Scouts of America.

Since Boy Scouting came to America, early in the twentieth century, it has seen many changes. The areas of interest explored by Scouting has grown dramatically. Scouts may now earn merit badges in over 125 areas, such as camping and hiking, citizenship, the sciences, first aid, communications, athletics, the arts, and much, much more. And it now serves a wider age-range of youth, from the 6 year-olds in the Tiger Cub program, to the 12 thru 18-year-olds in the Boy Scout program.

Then there is the Explorer program, which is open to both boys and girls, 14 thru 18-years-old. Explorers are sponsored by professional in a wide variety of fields, such as law enforcement or health care, and the young people receive a unique opportunity to learn valuable job skills.

Along the way, Scouts learn valuable lessons in life.

"It teaches them how to be good adults, it teaches them the different laws, how to protect themselves, how to say 'no'. Some of the things that we should teach them at home," explained Subia. "Peer pressure's up, and it's real bad. But the program is teachihg them how to take care of themselves, and say 'no', and what's right and what's wrong. Values, that's a good part of Scouting."

But Subia points out that these valuable lessons may be lost without increased participation, both by young people and adults, especially in the Hispanic community.

"Right now, we're hurting because of that. We need the adult leadership. We have jobs for everybody, we just have to find the bodies. But there's a lot out there that they can do," she said. "In our troop committee, for example, we've got people that arrange for transportation for our kids, when they go camping. We need adults that will get on the telephone, and it's something that you might do once a week, or once a month. It's nothing that you have to do all the time."

"It takes a special person to be a Scoutmaster, or a Cubmaster. You have to be patient, you have to like kids, and you have to be able to work with adults."

Boy Scouting programs are found in towns and cities throughout West Texas, and can be found in the local phone directories. The headquarters of the Buffalo Trail Council of Boy Scouts, which serves the entire West Texas region, is in Midland. The phone number there is 570-7601.

It's a situation, according to Subia, where everyone could win, or everyone could lose.

"Well, families lose out because they don't get involved with the things going on in the community," she said. "If you don't take your child to this, they won't get there. They usually end up in the streets, and they'll get into whatever they want there."

"We want to give the kids a good program, but they've got to have the adult support! You have to support your kids whether they're in school, or they're in sports, or anything. They've got to know that the parents are behind them, to guide them. It's sad when you leave it up to other adults, or other kids, but it happens. You've got to get involved!"

it is a fact that unlawful use of alcohol is an everyday occurrence in our classrooms; on school property,. and at school-related functions."

Both reports also expressed concerns about drug and alcohol use among student athletes, with the Ector County report going on to say, "it was apparent that students in sports programs are likewise involved in alcohol and drug use, and that use by athletes has, upon occasion, been treated differently than use by students not critically involved in the sports program."

The reports issued by the Special Grand Juries of Midland and Ector Counties has raised concerns about serious problems confronting young people in West Texas. Response has been varied. Some have hailed the reports as an important and necessary step if we are ever to reclaim our schools, and insure a quality education and brighter future for our young people.

Others, meanwhile, have challenged the Special Grand Juries' investigations, the information they gathered, and the conclusions they reached. And still others continue to deny that such a problem does indeed exist - an attitude that both reports had indicated was widespread in the communities.

But in addition to addressing the problems, the reports of both Special Grand Juries also address the solutions. Both acknowledge that effective programs are in place, both in education and law enforcement, but desperately need increased support and resources. And one of the most effective resources may be the very young people threatened by the use of alcohol and drugs.

"I am a parent, I have two teenaged daughters," said Judge Hyde, looking back upon the concerns that led him and the other judges of Midland and Ector Counties to impanel the Special Grand Juries. "And that played no small part in it, too. Realizing that my own children were affected by drugs and alcohol in this community."

"I think one of the most important assets that we have in our community, in any community, is our youth. The fact that the grand jury found some problems, I think that it is still the smaller part of our youth. It is that smaller part that we try to save. This community has a lot of fine young people in it, that do extremely well in school, never get in trouble. But there are ever-increasing numbers that are being touched by drugs and alcohol. We need to do something about them!"

Nuevos Caminos

participar en actividades en la biblioteca y tomar a nuestros hijos Hispanos involucrandolos en mas educación," ella dice. "Educación es la llave de todas las puertas. Y me entristece cuando veo a muchachos, que piensan que hay cosas mas importantes en la vida que ir a la escuela."

Pero Valencia advierte eso, para ser verdaderamente exitoso, nosotros debemos compartir en estos compromisos y hacer que nosotros podamos perseguirlos.

"Oh, si, yo definitivamente si. Yo se que todos nosotros tenemos que trabajar para vivir. La mayoría de la comunidad Hispana es gente que tiene que trabajar duro para ganar su sustento. Muchos de ellos tienen dos trabajos," dice Valencia. "Pero puede usted imaginarse si obtenemos una hora de cada uno? Nosotros no tendríamos ningún problema. Ellos no tienen que pasarse todo el día, ellos no tienen que privar a sus familias, dando una hora a la semana."

"Si ello nomas dan una hora de sobra a la semana, o al mes, o lo que sea. Si nosotros nos ayudamos cada uno, nosotros podemos sobresalir!"
