BEAM

By J. W. King, Sr.

It's hardly reasonable to suppose that thousands of war workers on strike in this country are suffering from invasion jitters.

If the boys who are spending their time working up strikes would practice what they preach and go on strike, the situation would solve itself.

Fortune tellers are pretty dumb, but they aren't as dumb as those who believe in fortune tellers.

Money may talk—but not half as much as the people who suddenly acquire it.

It is as easy to draw back a stone thrown with force from the hand as to recall a word once spoken.

Eighteen dollars and seventy-five cents invested today in War Bond will return twenty-five dollars in ten years. There is no better investment today.

It's surprising how often a woman is holding the ladder that a man climbs to success.

The people who purchase enough war bonds will be able to retire in old age instead of just give up.

Politics in Texas this year is all muddled up. There are two factions fighting over the right to send delegates to the national democratic convention. No such strife would have developed if the people had been interested enough to attend precinct and county conventions held, or supposed to have been held, a short time ago. No precinct or county convention was held in this county. Hence nobody knows the sentiment of the voters of this county or the top question today—Roosevelt or anti-Roosevelt.

The Big Spring Bombardier School Band together with entertainers and speakers from the Army Camp will be in Loraine for a program and Bond Rally on Friday night, June 30, at 8:30.

The Big Spring band and other entertainers and speakers have been in Loraine twice before for bond rallies and their programs were splendid and Loraine went over the top on its quota at both rallies. This one should be no exception.

The invasion of Europe is under way and making splendid progress, the war against Japan is progressing rapidly. We are making great strides on all fronts. Our boys are fighting and dying all over the world.

Our part—every individual citizen of the United States—is to buy War Bonds to provide the equipment and food for our men who fight. We cannot, we must not, we will not fail them. If we do our cause is lost and our boys are lost.

Loraine has always come thru with flying colors in all previous War Bond drives—she will do so now. But our efforts must be a little greater this time for the quota of $80,000 is heavy for the time of year. Individual E bond quota for Loraine is $34,000 so if you have not already bought all you can come to the rally June 30, prepared to buy. Loraine must do its part in the war.

The rally is to be held in front of the cheese plant if the weather is fair, if it is raining it will be moved to the gymnasium.

Advises Buying Extra Eggs Now
If every housewife will buy an extra dozen eggs now and store them in her refrigerator she can solve a big storage problem now facing the War Food Administration. At present, WFA says, there are 1,400 carloads of eggs for which no cold storage space can be found. By using their refrigerators, housewives can make it possible to save 25 million dozen eggs. Egg production has begun to decline seasonally, and it will soon be possible to handle all supplies in the usual manner.

Used Cars Under Price Control
Beginning July 10, all used passenger cars come under price control, the Office of Price Administration has directed. All sellers—individual owners as well as dealers—come under the program. Ceilings will vary by model, body type and make and will cover about 6,000 models manufactured from 1937 through 1942. There will be an "as is" and a "warranty" price for each model and body type. Ceilings will drop at the rate of four percent of the "as is" price every six months. Permissible additions to ceiling prices are provided for extra equipment. Separate prices are given for each of three geographical regions. When a sale has been completed, the buyer and seller must fill out a transfer certificate and turn this in to the buyer's local War Price and Rationing Board. Nearly four million motor vehicles went out of use in the United States in 1942 and 1943 and have not been replaced, the Federal Works Agency reports.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

First Phase of Invasion Ended As Initial Foothold is Secured; French Hail "Liberation Troops"

Released by Western Newspaper Union

EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.

This first picture made from French soil shows American doughboys, rifles ready, wading through the surf onto the French beachhead. The photographer who made the picture was in the first group to hit the beach. Note the invasion craft in the background. Soundphoto.

THE INVASION: First Phase Ended

The first phase of the Allied invasion of Europe was completed.

To a tense world, supreme headquarters of the allied expeditionary forces announced this phase as the "securing of a foothold and the defeating of local German reserves."

Against fierce, last-ditch resistance of 10 hastily massed Nazi divisions, totaling nearly 150,000 men, allied forces were plunging inland on a 100-mile front of curving shoreline from the Seine Estuary near Le Havre to the Cherbourg area.

Allied forces are now in the second phase, which is one of defeating the German "tactical reserves," said headquarters. The third phase, which must be won before the Allied position is completely secure, is that of defeating the German "strategic reserves."

(Tactical reserves are those in or near the combat area; strategic reserves are those held in readiness at a distance.)

The Air Umbrella

Headquarters announced that 27,000 individual air missions were carried out in the two and one-half days following the dawn of D-day. Great air fleets, probably greater than those of D-day, hammered Nazi strong points, transport and troop concentrations within a 150-mile radius of the beachheads. Nazi fighter opposition was weak. The German high command had not yet thrown its long-boarded fighter reserves into the battle for Normandy.

The battle was joined around Bayeux, first city of France to be freed from German hands. A fierce tank battle raged in several wooded areas near Bayeux, where the Nazis were strengthened by parachute troops.

The navy supported foot troops with a gigantic bombardment of Caen. Nazi forces were attempting to hold the city as a pivot for counterattacks. But on the second day of invasion, the Germans were forced to admit street fighting already was being waged inside Caen.

Single Front

It became increasingly obvious that Allied positions were fast being welded together into a single front, stretching from Caen through Bayeux to just outside Cherbourg and some distance up the Cherbourg peninsula toward Valognes.

It was disclosed that the first forces ashore on D-day might have pushed ahead more rapidly than they did, but General Eisenhower's supreme command decided it was wiser to slow the advance somewhat while awaiting more adequate strength rather than make a risk having the spearheads choked off.

OBJECTIVE PARIS: By Bastille Day?

Bastille day, French national holiday, falls on July 14 and in the first days of the invasion of western Europe, veterans of the 1940 battle of France forecast that the Allies would be in Paris by that date to help the natives celebrate. In New York the French language weekly, "France-Amerique" carried a column by Ernest R. Bauer, which indicated that French military veterans familiar with the terrain over which the battles are now being fought predict rapid progress from the beachheads to Paris—120 miles away.

Meanwhile in London Winston Churchill urged the house of commons to guard against "the idea that things are going to be settled in a rush."

HIGHLIGHTS . . . in the week's news

TYPHUS: American medical corps have conquered the dreaded scourge of all armies—typhus. The disease has been brought under control by a new vaccine, and by a poison called DDT that kills the lice that transmit the germs. Brig. Gen. Leon Fox told news correspondents: "Typhus has been removed from the death list of the U. S. soldier."

MORE FRUIT: The peach crop shows an increase of nearly 150 per cent over last year, according to reports from growers. William Graffitt, vice president of the United Fresh Fruit and Vegetable association, told dealers. The apple crop is expected to be at least 50 per cent larger than last year, and citrus prospects are much better, Graffitt said.

AIR FIELD: Nearer Philippines

A base within bombing range of the Philippines fell to General MacArthur's forces when the Mokmer airdrome on Biak Island was stormed and captured on the 13th day of the invasion of the Schoutens.

The beachhead on Biak was established late in May. A frontal stab was repulsed, following which American forces got in behind enemy positions and swept to the air field from the rear.

The Mokmer field is within 860 miles of the Philippines to the northwest and is within good fighter range of Palau, Japanese western Carolines naval base guarding the approaches of the Philippines.

The island also has two other airfields desired by the Sixth army invaders. The Americans immediately began a push toward the Borokoe airdrome a few hundred yards to the west.

INDUSTRY: Must Take Initiative

Warning that industry must find its own work when war contracts are no longer available, Donald Nelson, chairman of the War Production board, told the house postwar committee, that: "... it won't be the government's job to find work for each company in its present expanded position. It's impossible to find a postwar market for the 8,900 airplanes we now produce monthly."

Stating that he was 100 per cent in favoring government assistance in postwar planning for industry, he said that he was against government "running" small business. He urged that companies now engaged in war production use their own ingenuity and initiative in planning their postwar programs.

He forecast a postwar "expansionist" period in which private enterprise rather than the government would provide the necessary "spark." Government pump priming would be at a minimum under such conditions.

Lookout

A German sentry pictured as he scanned the skies over Boulogne, France—looking for trouble that came unexpectedly. Boulogne was one of the cities hit by sea and air bombings, paving the way for landing of Allied forces.

FOOT SOLDIERS: Pay Increase

In reply to a request by War Secretary Stimson, Chairman May of the house military affairs committee introduced a bill to increase pay of skilled infantrymen $5 to $10 a month.

Soldiers holding the expert infantryman's badge would get a $5 increase and those having the combat infantryman's badge, $10. Cost of the increase would amount to between 55 and 71 million dollars yearly.

In asking for the legislation, Stimson said infantry casualties are the highest of any branch of service. In the North African campaign, including Italy, the infantry suffered 70 per cent of the casualties, although comprising only 19.6 per cent of the total forces.

FARM MACHINERY: Restrictions Removed

Small manufacturers (employing less than 100 workers) can now engage in the unlimited production of farm machinery, equipment, and repair parts made entirely from surplus materials or materials with an AA-4 preference rating.

This new arrangement, announced by the War Production board, is limited to firms employing not more than 50 workers in group 1 labor areas, or on the West coast. Elsewhere plants employing fewer than 100 workers may participate.

Manufacturers meeting these regulations can use surplus materials and component parts from inventories together with AA-4 preference rating materials in such production.

TRAVEL BAN:

Because of the increased loads placed on the nation's transportation system by the invasion, Director of Defense Transportation J. M. Johnson has asked immediate cancellation of all nonwar conventions, trade meetings and all nonessential civilian travel.

An ODT spokesman said there were no plans to ration train and bus travel through priorities, but that reserved space may be commandeered by orders of the army surgeon general for casualty cases.

Yanks on Way to Invasion by Air and Sea

By air and sea the army and navy of the Allied countries join in invasion of French coast. The U. S. paratroopers reflect confidence as they fly over the English channel en route to the invasion of Europe. They were among the first assault troops to land on the continent. More than 4,000 vessels were employed in the initial landings. The landing craft, one of newest types, is shown loaded with American troops about to sail for somewhere in France during the first days of invasion.

Coastguardman 'Flagging' the Sarmi Invaders

Coastguardman B. W. Long, coxswain of Detroit, Mich., directs incoming LSTs to their beaching positions with semaphore signals from the shore at Sarmi, on the north shore of Dutch New Guinea. Capture of Wakde Island and Sarmi beachhead after stiff Japanese army opposition brought two more vital landing strips into American hands on their steady thrust westward toward China and the Philippines and that much nearer to Tokyo and the final victory over the Japs. Heavy naval bombardment blasted Sarmi.

First Nazi Prisoners Taken in France

These are among the first Nazi prisoners captured by the Canadian invasion troops on the soil of France, in the great Allied invasion. Returning ships to England from the first invasion wave carried a large number of Nazi prisoners, which were increased by later returning ships of American and British naval forces.

Nazi 'Butterfly'

A German "butterfly" anti-personnel bomb is examined by Maj. L. Ehrmann, New York, commandant of the Bomb Disposal school at Aberdeen Proving Ground, Md. These bombs are dropped from planes in clusters.

Honor American Dead at Anzio, Italy

A firing squad sends a volley over the graves of soldiers in an American cemetery at Anzio, Italy, at a Memorial day ceremony. The salute followed an address by Fifth army commander Lieut. Gen. Mark Clark given a few days before the invasion of France. Temporary markers have been placed until after the war.

Invasion Baby

"Invasion" is the name chosen for boy born at the invasion hour to Mrs. Anna Bodmar, Chicago, Nurse Eleanor Rytkenon salutes the new arrival at Augustana hospital.

America Through a Train Window

The train clears its mechanical throat, rolls out of the depot, and the moving picture of passing scenery is framed in Pullman windows. . . . Fragments of smoke cruising over sprawling war plants that dot the outskirts of the city. A peaceful industrial scene where weapons are born that wind up in the hell of war. . . . Neat suburban homes on their best architectural behavior. . . . Church steeples pointing at the sky like hands in prayer. . . . Telephone poles whizzing by in Indian file. Birds perched on their wires—like notes on a musical scale. . . . The countryside knee-deep in Spring. A tapestry of greenery stretching toward the horizon. . . . Long lines of trees planted with Rockette precision—bejeweled with ripening fruits. . . . Attractive lady train conductors. . . . Weary travelers slumped in their seats marooned on an island of their thoughts.

Tree-lined small town streets, each house ornamented with manicured hedges. . . . Ribbons of roads wrapped around the landscape. They used to be covered with traffic, but now you can see miles of nude highways. . . . The eager anticipation in the orbs of servicemen on their way home to enjoy a furlough. . . . The train gobbling up miles of space as it roars through State lines. No passports are needed to cross them. One of the miracles too many Americans take for granted. . . . The haze that floats over the grass at sunrise when Nature is still drowsy with morning. . . . Old, unpainted houses on the wrong side of the tracks making their poverty plain. . . . Miles of undeveloped land blanketed with forests between big cities. Places where Nature has room to stretch.

The train whizzing by small, dusty stations surrounded by loneliness. You go by so fast you can't even read the station's name. . . . Cows grazing in Ohio's pastures—their tails continually swinging like a baton. . . . A feather of a breeze tickling a lake—causing it to dimple with a million ripples. . . . Piercing train whistles punctuating the night with exclamations of sound. . . . Cross country trucks moving across the roads with the slow dignity of glaciers. . . . The increased tempo of traffic that heralds the approach to a city.

A stretch of flat land broken by the wide open mouth of a valley. . . . The lights of a lonely farmhouse twinkling in the dark night. . . . The train pulling into a station with the dignity of a dowager entering a tea party. . . . The eternal peacefulness of forests filled with a million leafy fingers reaching for the warmth of the sun. . . . Fields of wildflowers curtsying to the balmy winds. . . . Large signs announcing that you're about to enter this-or-that town. A sight as American as a home run.

Tremendous ranches monopolizing giant slices of territory. Some are almost as large as a small European nation. . . . Skeletons of ghost towns slowly being turned into dust by wind and rain, remnants of the wild West. . . . Modern cowboys who now spend more time riding in station wagons than on horses. . . . The brilliance of a Western night—a dark-faced sky freckled with stars. Much poetry and many songs have been written in tribute to its overpowering beauty. But nothing can match the first-hand view of this shimmering phenomenon. . . . The many peaceful sights that make you think the war is very far away. But a plane drilling its way through the sky reminds you nothing is beyond the war's reach. . . . Peaceful Indians now selling souvenirs at railroad stations. . . . Cattle herds in the sunset making a picture postcard to be filed in your memory.

Desert nights filled with romantic mysteries. . . . When you see the gigantic natural obstacles that still exist in the West you are filled with renewed respect and pride for the pioneers who built a civilization on the foundation of blood, sweat and tears. . . . Tiny villages with less population than in a Big Town apartment house. . . . The Diesel engine entering a tunnel with a loud cry, dragging the serpent of cars behind it. . . . The sage brush country, with an occasional motorist providing the only sign of life. . . . Tired tourists chewing the fingernails of their patience, eager to arrive at their destination. . . . Hot dog stands planted in the middle of nowhere.

The billboard advising motorists: "This is God's Country. Don't Drive Like Hell!" . . . The Chicago skyline resembling an unfinished jigsaw puzzle. . . . Train-sitters trying to whittle away time by playing cards, gabbing, reading, or just staring at a pretty gal across the aisle. . . . The mid-West's gigantic fertile fields—America's breadbasket. . . . A bonfire of sunlight slowly raising its head over roundshouldered hills. . . . Travelling salesmen in club cars nibbling on bits of conversation about tiresome matters.

MR. WINKLE GOES TO WAR

By THEODORE PRATT

W.N.U. RELEASE

THE STORY THUS FAR: Forty-four-year-old Wilbert Winkle, who operates a repair shop in the back of his home, is notified by his draft board that he is in I.A. He breaks the bad news to his domineering wife, Amy. The night before leaving, Mrs. Winkle tells Wilbert she is worried that he may take up with other women but she tells her she has nothing to worry about. On arriving at camp Mr. Winkle is given his physical, and to his great surprise and dismay, is accepted. He takes the oath of enlistment, is given instructions in bed-making, and later given so many "shots" he cannot remember how many. He is sent to Camp Squibb, a thousand miles from home, where he meets Mr. Tinker.

CHAPTER VII

"Me," said Mr. Tinker, "I feel good. I was going to join up anyway." After a moment he growled, "My kid brother was at Midway. He was a flier. Yeah, he got killed there. After the family squeaked every nickel for years sending him to college and on."

"Oh," said Mr. Winkle.

"Me," Mr. Tinker went on, "all I want to do is kill one Jap. I don't want to shoot him. I just want to get him between these." He pushed out two great hairy hands and clenched each into a fist.

"When you feel you're three-quarters done, stop."

"That'll be for the kid. The rest I'll get will be gravy."

Mr. Winkle wished that he had only a small part of the plumber's lust for vengeance.

"If I don't get to the Japs," proposed Mr. Tinker, "and you do, will you strangle one for me?"

Mr. Winkle swallowed. His throat felt dry. "Why, yes—certainly," he promised.

"Don't go back on me," Mr. Tinker searched Mr. Winkle with his beetling gaze. "But he didn't give Mr. Winkle the mouse-look."

In appreciation, Mr. Winkle said, "I won't go back on you."

As if he weren't quite sure Mr. Winkle would keep to his word, or was capable of keeping to it, Mr. Tinker pronounced, "I'm going to ask every guy I meet so there won't be no mistake about it."

Mr. Winkle was envious and a little awed.

Mr. Tinker scowled. Something was bothering him. "I didn't like all them questions they asked," he said. "What's the idea of all that stuff?"

Mr. Winkle explained that it was to fit each man into work according to the best of his abilities and experience.

"You mean," asked Mr. Tinker, "they maybe might not make me into a shooting soldier?"

Mr. Winkle said there was a possibility of this, especially in view of Mr. Tinker's background of being handy with tools.

"Not a plumber?" Mr. Tinker asked in alarm. "I won't be no plumber."

It was Mr. Winkle's opinion that the Army had all its plumbing taken care of by civilian contractors. It would be in some other mechanical capacity.

Mr. Tinker looked glum. "Then how am I going to get me a Jap?" He held up his hands and stared at them as if he were going to fall them. "I knew I shouldna told that guy I take down my jalopies and put them together again."

"Well," Mr. Winkle consoled him, "it isn't decided yet."

He didn't confess his fear that it was. He had heard the stories—and met a few examples—of the Army habit of learning that a man was a baker and then promptly making a truck driver out of him. Thinking of himself as a round peg, Mr. Winkle was sure that he would remain in the square hole of training for the infantry in which he now found himself fastened securely.

Mr. Winkle was sure that his misery was greater than that of any of his fellows.

Filled with rules and regulations, to say nothing of the Articles of War, instruction on How and Whom to Salute, How to Have the Proper Attitude, Military Obligations, The Responsibilities of Group Life, Military Courtesy, Sanitation, Care of Clothing and Equipment, and The Positions of a Soldier, he was afraid to move a finger for fear of the War Department would not approve.

When the War Department, as represented by Sergeant Czelebski, failed to approve, Mr. Winkle reported to the Mess-Sergeant.

Almost always there he found Freddie, who had virtually taken up residence in the kitchen. Jack appeared, too, as well as Mr. Tinker. They washed dishes, swept the floor and peeled onions and even the traditional potatoes. Once Mr. Winkle was given a bag and a stick with an iron point on its end and told to pick up papers and cigarette butts around the grounds. He was certain that this was no kind of work for a respectable married citizen of the United States.

Not even when he was doing things right could Mr. Winkle satisfy the Field Department. On the exercise field he kept up with the other men, though he knew his face was flushed and he breathed hard. Then, abruptly, the muscled exercise Sergeant would call: "Hey, you there—John!"

Mr. Winkle realized he was being addressed.

"What's your name?" the exercise Sergeant demanded.

"Winkle," replied Mr. Winkle quite as if his nameplate, pinned on his chest, did not announce the fact.

"All right, John," he was advised, "when you feel you're three-quarters done, stop. That's an order. You know what an order is, John?"

Mr. Winkle said that he did.

"So I don't want to waste time picking up any guys who pass out," the Sergeant instructed him.

Mr. Winkle noticed that he was the only man told to take it easy. Mr. Tinker wasn't told anything, but kept right on with the others, even though he puffed.

At bayonet practice he could find no satisfaction in jabbing at the swinging stuffed figure. He simply could not conceive of himself ever thrusting that wicked blade into another human being, no matter how much a German or a Jap deserved it.

He shuddered when it was explained that it was often difficult to withdraw the blade from a body, and sometimes it had to be twisted out. Certainly he didn't lunge at the figure the way Jack Pettigrew did. Everyone knew that when Jack thrust his bayonet into it, he was sticking Freddie with it. When Freddie sliced with his bayonet, you could take your choice whether he thought of the figure as Jack or the Alphabet. Mr. Tinker swung viciously, and the figure then became a Jap. But Mr. Winkle had no ferocity at all.

The Lieutenant was patient with him, explaining, "Some day you may be in the position where you either get the other fellow first, or he gets you. Think of it that way. Now, try again. Jump at it! Lunge! Kill it!"

Mr. Winkle jumped. He lunged. He killed it with a blow that hardly penetrated the figure. The Lieutenant shook his head and called the next man.

The bayonet and exercise incidents gave Mr. Winkle an attack of imagination, the first he had had since being made into a soldier. He became convinced that he could never compete with the others. He wouldn't be as hardened as they, he wouldn't be sufficiently trained, and this would be his own fault. When the test came on the battlefield, he would not be in condition, nor would he be enough of a killer even to protect himself.

He saw himself in retreat before the enemy. He couldn't keep up. Finally he could go no farther. Mr. Tinker and Jack offered to carry him, but Mr. Winkle wouldn't have it, knowing they would be caught with him. He made them go on, leaving him, and then an enemy soldier appeared. The man raised his rifle high, the bayonet gleaming. It started to come down into Mr. Winkle, who had a last thought of Amy and who knew that the blade would afterward have to be twisted to get it out of him.

On their first pay day, which was a Saturday, they were given passes to town. They stood in line before the orderly room, and entered one by one to receive their salaries. After practice under the tutelage of the Alphabet, who watched critically from the side of the Lieutenant's desk, they saluted, wheeled, and marched out again.

Mr. Winkle was astounded and Mr. Tinker, with most of the others, was aggrieved at the amounts they received. After deduction for laundry, dry cleaning, expenses at the Post Exchange, the barber shop, movies, insurance, camp newspaper, recreation fund, a contribution to the old soldiers' home and several items Mr. Winkle didn't altogether understand or remember, his envelope contained seventeen dollars and thirty cents.

Mr. Tinker did a little better because he had no wife to whom went twenty-two dollars of his pay, to make up, with the twenty-eight contributed by the Government, the fifty that would be sent to the homes of married men. But still Mr. Tinker complained that he used to make more in a week than he now made in a month.

"But you weren't getting ready for the Japs then," Mr. Winkle reminded.

"Yeah," said Mr. Tinker, "that's right."

Jimmy Doolittle has more gifts than any one man has a right to be blessed with. He has been one of America's greatest pilots for more than 25 years. He is bold and completely fearless. Along with that he has a great technical mind and a highly perfected education in engineering.

In addition to his professional skill he is one of the most engaging humans you ever ran across. His voice is clear and keen, he talks with animation, and his tone carries a sense of quick and right decision.

He is one of the greatest of story-tellers. He is the only man I've ever known who can tell stories all evening long and never tell one you've heard before. He can tell them in any dialect, from Swedish to Chinese.

Above all he loves to tell stories on himself. Here is an example: He was at a Flying Fortress base one afternoon when the planes were coming back in. Many of them had been pretty badly shot up, and had wounded men aboard.

The general walked up to one plane from which the crew had just got out. The upper part of the tail gun turret was shot away. General Doolittle said to the tail-gunner: "Were you in there when it happened?"

The gunner, a little peevishly, replied: "Yes sir."

As the general walked away the annoyed gunner turned to a fellow crewman and said in a loud voice: "Where in the hell did he think I was, out buying a ham sandwich?"

A frightened junior officer, fearing the general might have overheard, said: "My God, man, don't you know who that was?"

"Sure I know," the tail-gunner snapped, "and I don't give a damn. That was a stupid question."

With which Jimmy Doolittle, the least stupid of people, fully agrees when he tells the story.

Jimmy tells these stories wonderfully, with more zest and humor than I can put into them second-handed. As he says, the heart-breaks and tragedies of war sometimes push all your gaiety down into the depths. But if a man can keep a sense of the ridiculous about himself he is all right. Jimmy Doolittle can.

Lieut. Gen. Jimmy Doolittle, head of the Eighth air force over here, noticed one day in the roster of officers at his staff headquarters the name of a Captain Doolittle.

The name is not a very ordinary one, and he made a mental note that some day he would look the fellow up for a little chat. One day not long after that his phone rang and the voice at the other end said, "This is Captain Doolittle."

"Oh yes," said the general. "I had noticed your name and meant to call you up sometime."

"I'd like to come in and see you," said the voice at the other end.

"Why yes, do that," the general said. "I'm pretty busy these days, but I'll switch you to my aide and he'll make an appointment for you."

Ernie Meets Another Old Friend

In roaming around the country the other day I ran into Lieut. Col. William Profit Sr., whom I used to see occasionally in Africa and Sicily.

His old outfit was the first hospital unit ashore in the African invasion, landing at dawn on D-Day. They are so proud of that record that they'll tear your eyes out at the slightest intimation that you're confusing them with the second unit to land.

This is the hospital my friend Lieut. Mary Ann Sullivan of Boston served with. She finally wound up as chief nurse of the unit. But when I dropped in to say hello I discovered that Lieutenant Sullivan had gone back to America a couple of months ago.

She well deserved to go, too. She had been overseas nearly three years.

"Can't we do anything for you?" she asked.

luctance he even entertained a slight admiration for the clever details of his wicked mechanism.

Firing it, however, was another matter. The first day on the range, Mr. Winkle closed his eyes when he pulled the trigger. The resulting explosion made him open his eyes. For an instant he was sure he had shot himself; at least his shoulder felt as if he had.

He was informed by the Alphabet that he hadn't hit any part of the target. On successive tries he didn't do much better, but he learned to keep his eyes open and sight.

A rifle was bad enough, but when the day came that the mysteries of a machine gun were revealed to them, the palms of Mr. Winkle's hands perspired copiously and his stomach crawled.

Nevertheless, he carried out his duty. Sitting before the weapon, the white cloth of the target became a blank, with the horizontal, perpendicular, and slanting boxes marked on it as erasable as far as he could see them. He was so hot when he squeezed the trigger that his glasses became clouded and he might as well have been blind. The gun jumped, spitting out a hail of lead. A great vibration was in his hands. It felt like a series of sharp electric shocks. He let go hurriedly.

Except for the chatter of other guns down the line, there was silence.

The Alphabet filled it. "You plowed up plenty of ground," he told Mr. Winkle. "Now see what you can do to the target."

LONDON.—(By wireless)—Here I've been gallivanting around with lieutenant generals again. If this keeps up I'm going to lose my amateur standing. This time it is Jimmy Doolittle, who is still the same magnificent guy with three stars on his shoulder that he used to be with a captain's bars.

General Doolittle runs the American Eighth air force. It is a grim and stupendous job, but he manages to keep the famous Doolittle sense of humor about it.

Doolittle, as you know, is rather short and getting almost bald. Since arriving in England from Italy he has diabolically started a couple of false rumors circulating about himself.

One is that his nickname used to be "Curly," and he occasionally throws his head back as though tossing hair out of his eyes. His other claim is that he used to be six feet tall but has worried himself down to his present small height in the past five months.

A HANDSOME pair of cushions to brighten up your living room may be made from things on hand or from remnants of silk. Frequently the largest pieces of the skirt of an old silk dress may be used for a pair of matching cushions. The backing may be made of saten. A soft fold of a contrasting silk around the edge makes a smart finish. The sketch shows how such a fold is cut and applied.

Soothe, relieve heat rash, and help prevent it with Mexzana, the soothing, medicated powder. Sprinkle this cooling, comforting, astringent powder well over heat irritated skin. Costs little. Big savings in larger sizes. All the family will like Mexzana.

Eighteen inches square is a good size for the cushions and, if you have an assortment of cushions of different sizes, it is easy to transfer the filling into ticks of the size you want. Stitch and turn, leaving a four-inch opening in one side. Rip a smaller opening in the old ticking; sew the large opening over the smaller one and then work the filling through. Rip apart and sew the new ticking with close stitches.

Somewhere in the Pacific (de-layed)--Marine Private First Class Herbert LeMaster, of Route 1, Lorraine, Texas, has been awarded the Purple Heart medal along with six other Leather-necks who were wounded in the capture of Ebon atoll in the Marshall Islands. The awards were made by Captain Harry D. Hedrick, of Winter Haven, Fla., who later was presented with the medal for wounds received in the same action.

The climate is of course very cold, with snow three feet deep at times and the temperature 40 below zero. But the cold climate didn't stop the army work there. Lester said he expected to see the people living in igloos, but not so, they live in houses, and for a living they trap and fish mostly. He spent one year on the Pribilof Islands. This was one lonely year for all the boys there. They were there on Christmas and for so long after reaching the island they didn't receive any mail. But finally they received their Christmas packages in May. The island is known as the home of the fur seal. There were reindeer, fox, sea lions, and many kinds of birds on the island.

Lester has received sharp-shooting medal, good conduct medal and badge showing the months he has spent in combat zones. After his furlough here he will report at Fort Sam Houston, Texas.

Dear Mr. King: Each week it is my pleasure to receive a copy of your paper. I take great interest in reading of what my friends in Lorraine are doing.

A year ago I came to Lorraine thinking I could establish my home in your town. I had many nice plans but due to conditions beyond my control due to the war I was unable to satisfactorily close out varied interests here so had to return to Houston.

Truly I hated to leave Lorraine. In my short year there I found a peace and contentment and a charm in semi-rural life that city people don't even know exists.

You people of Lorraine are actually living in a fools paradise--yes really living so please appreciate the good fortune that is really yours.

This, like all cities of any size which is dotted with defense plants is a bedlam of noise, crowds, hustle and bustle. That's why a business such as I have flourishes. For the nervous wrecks that a city creates need

I personally liked Lorraine. I made friends there. I enjoyed spending my money with the friendly merchants. I found, I adopted and lived the idea that every nickel spent in Lorraine helped to make Lorraine. In Lorraine I noticed for a refreshing change the nicest, best behaved high minded group of youngsters I've seen anywhere. I found Lorraine prices in line with even big city competition.

I read with interest your editorial telling of past and planned improvements in Lorraine. I've read your other editorials also encouraging better things for Lorraine. Therefore I want to hand you a sincere pat on the back. Also one to Dr. Johnson who I found was always thinking of the welfare of his patients first, the welfare of Lorraine second and the welfare of Dr. Johnson last. Lorraine or any other town is indeed fortunate to have such a man in its midst.

Yes, even though I'm away, my interest in Lorraine continues for I liked Lorraine and I hope some day my return will be possible.

With kindest personal regards to yourself and my many Lorraine friends, I remain

Improved Uniform SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

By HAROLD L. LUNDQUIST, D. D. Of The Moody Bible Institute of Chicago. Released by Western Newspaper Union.

Lesson for June 25 Lesson subjects and Scripture texts selected and copyrighted by International Council of Religious Education; used by permission.

THE POWER IN SIMPLE LIVING LESSON TEXT—Daniel 1:8-16, 19, 20. GOLDEN TEXT—But Daniel purposed in his heart that he would not defile himself with the king's dainties, nor with the wine which he drank.—Daniel 1:8.

"Dare to be a Daniel. Dare to stand alone. Dare to have a purpose firm. Dare to make it known."

Remember how we used to sing in our Sunday Schools? Possibly some of us still do. The thought of the song assuredly needs to be emphasized anew. The "times are out of joint." Millions of men and women are meeting new problems and temptations. The standards of life they learned in home and church or Sunday school are not too easy to maintain. Many are hearing that old excuse for laxity. "Man, you're in the army now," or "Don't forget you're not at home with Mother; you're in the navy." Civilians have similar tempting excuses for careless living, drinking, etc.

Our lesson is a timely one. It presents Daniel as having— I. A Courageous Purpose (v. 8).

Daniel and his three Hebrew companions were among those carried captive to Babylon. As promising young men, they were selected to receive an education in the wisdom of the land, at the king's expense and in preparation for his service. The king provided for them the delicacies of his household, thinking thus to keep them strong and in good health. Daniel recognized that many of these things were unclean according to the laws of his people. He also knew that to eat such food and to drink the intoxicants provided for them would be to injure his health and cut down his ability to learn.

It was no easy thing to ask to be excused from what the king had commanded, not to do what everybody else was doing; but Daniel had a courageous purpose "in his heart." But Daniel had the wisdom to be tactful about his convictions. He went to the king's steward with— II. A Considered Plan (vv. 9-13).

He had something thoughtfully worked out, a fair proposal which would not endanger the life or standing of the prince who was over them. He proposed a test, and agreed, if it failed, to be subject to further orders. He knew it would not fail.

How often those who have it in their heart to stand true to God against evils, such as beverage alcohol, have no plan in mind, and are only loud and tactless in their condemnation. They make no contribution to the cause. Let us be intelligent and properly prepared.

Daniel's plan put a planned diet and water over against rich foods and wine. It was a case of simple living against "high" living, and the result was a foregone conclusion. Those high in positions of authority in the field of diet tell us again and again that we need simple, well-balanced meals. And science is definite and clear in its condemnation of alcoholic beverages.

Daniel's test period resulted in— III. A Convincing Proof (vv. 14-16). Ten days proved the point. Daniel and his friends were fairer and fatter than the others. They were vindicated in their courageous stand for what they believed to be right. Simple living demonstrated its value.

Think what a fine testimony the experience of Daniel must have been in that great group of young princes who were at the king's table. So we also may give good witness for our Lord by our loyalty to right standards. Often it is true that those who outwardly scoff at them are secretly moved to respect those who consistently stand for what they believe.

We need to cultivate in our young people the high courage which will enable them to stand against the constant temptation to partake of alcoholic beverages and to face with intelligent courage the clever propaganda of the liquor sellers. Note that Daniel and his friends did not lose by their decision—they gained. They reached— IV. A Commendable Position (vv. 19, 20).

At the end of the training period the king gave these young men examinations. Note that in technical knowledge, "IQ" and in personal characteristics, Daniel and his comrades were superior to all the rest. That is in accord with the findings of modern science in the matter of the use of liquor.

Is it not almost unbelievable then that the advertising of the liquor interests, suggesting that liquor is a desirable thing from a personal, social, and business viewpoint, is permitted? The facts are all on the other side.

Kathleen Norris Says: A Plan for Father's Day

By KATHLEEN NORRIS

"Dad, Sis and I really need a little money. She's still paying for her fur, and we got our hats last week."

By KATHLEEN NORRIS A PLAN for Father's Day I don't mean asking the Cousin Willys to dinner and having strawberry ice cream for dessert, or even having his chair covered as a surprise.

I mean that every family shall make a plan that immediately concerns father's comfort and security. Because while my heart is aching now for practically everyone in the world, it really does ache especially for fathers. Mothers, I may say in a hurried aside, are more resourceful, more independent, and more able to heal the wounds of change and absence than fathers are. Twenty million women in America, young wives and old, are doing things they never dreamed of doing three years ago.

Whereas for twenty million fathers life is unchanged, except that the office routine is harder; there is an empty place at the dinner table; expenses are higher, and everything he once hoped to make certain and sure for his loved ones has been torn up by the roots.

Most wives don't realize HOW HARD LIFE IS FOR FATHER. In thousands of households he is taken for granted. Of course his place is set at the table and if there's a girl in the family he isn't expected to help with the dishes, but too many times life in the household goes on with almost no reference to him at all.

One Man Meets Appeals. "Daddy, how about my five? How about my allowance? Tom's shoes, dear. The plumber, Dad. The man here again about the garden, hadn't we better tell him to go ahead? Dad, you said you'd pay what they believed to be right. Simple living demonstrated its value.

Think what a fine testimony the experience of Daniel must have been in that great group of young princes who were at the king's table. So we also may give good witness for our Lord by our loyalty to right standards. Often it is true that those who outwardly scoff at them are secretly moved to respect those who consistently stand for what they believe.

We need to cultivate in our young people the high courage which will enable them to stand against the constant temptation to partake of alcoholic beverages and to face with intelligent courage the clever propaganda of the liquor sellers. Note that Daniel and his friends did not lose by their decision—they gained. They reached— IV. A Commendable Position (vv. 19, 20).

At the end of the training period the king gave these young men examinations. Note that in technical knowledge, "IQ" and in personal characteristics, Daniel and his comrades were superior to all the rest. That is in accord with the findings of modern science in the matter of the use of liquor.

Is it not almost unbelievable then that the advertising of the liquor interests, suggesting that liquor is a desirable thing from a personal, social, and business viewpoint, is permitted? The facts are all on the other side.

Strange too is the tolerant attitude of our nation and especially of many in the church toward that which is known to be destructive and detrimental. It is an appalling commentary on the extent to which our standards have been lowered or forgotten.

Pistol-Packin' Fish Shoots Water at Its Prey Ashore

The archer fish of Southeastern Asia is prepared for trouble for it carries a gun. Its weapon consists of a tube-like mouth from which it can propel a tiny jet of water accurately for some feet. When the archer sees an insect resting on a plant or other object above, it sneaks up, then shoots, wetting its prey and causing it to fall into the water where the archer gobbles it up.
