'Ultimate' general strike urged by Polish unionists

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Underground Solidarity leaders, declaring all hope for government reconciliation shattered, appealed for new protests against martial-law enforcers Saturday and urged workers to mobilize for an "ultimate" general strike next spring.

The appeal, circulated here Saturday, was the first call for a general strike by the now-outlawed union since its hiding leaders united in April to resist the Communist government's crackdown.

Lech Walesa, the interned Solidarity leader, approves of every form of protest against the authorities, his wife, Danuta, reported after visiting him for five days at a remote government resort in southeastern Poland.

"Solidarity is entering a new phase of conflict," underground leaders said in their leaflets. "Weakening the authorities is an important element of preparation for a general strike."

They called for an eight-hour strike Nov.10 — the second anniversary of Solidarity's registration in a Warsaw court — followed by demonstrations and a week of protests beginning Dec. 13, the first anniversary of martial law.

The statement called for a boycott of government-controlled unions established by the new law banning Solidarity and included instructions for mobilizing the general strike planned next spring.

This exceeds an earlier call for a four-hour strike Nov. 10 to protest the new law passed by the Polish Sejm or Parliament Oct. 8 that outlawed Solidarity, the first indepdendent union in the Soviet bloc.

"Solidarity exists because this is its members' will," the underground statement said. "The Sejm committed an illegal act by executing the order to delegalize it. This is an illegal act and we do not recognize it."

The statement said the union underground was forced to call new strikes because the government is unbending in its determination to crush the union.

According to Mrs. Walesa, her interned husband said: "It's difficult to endorse the methods used now against the authorities, but any form of protest means that the nation doesn't accept the authorities' policy and the changes made by the authorities."

"So every form of protest is good," she quoted him as saying.

In an interview with Western reporters in her Gdansk home, Mrs. Walesa claimed that government officials had offered to release her interned husband on the condition that he would endorse the new trade union law and implied that he had rejected this.

Asked how he had reacted to the outlawing of Solidarity, she said, "It didn't shock him; he expected the dissolution of the union. He's still very optimistic."

"The ideas of August 1980 will win," she quoted him as saying.

Immediately after the anti-Solidarity legislation was enacted, martial-law enforcers broke a strike at the Gdansk shipyard where Solidarity was formed in August 1980, threatening to jail workers, fire them or draft them into the army. Police also smashed three days of riots in the southern steeltown of Nowa Huta, where one worker was shot and killed Oct. 13, the 15th officially reported death under martial law.

"The to-date measures did not manage to turn the authorities away from the road to catastrophe and we have to reach for ultimate means," the union statement said. "The regime is deaf to the nation's voice."

In an apparent attempt to rally declining support, the leaders said, "If all workers will join the strike, the repressions will not be effective and they will be more afraid than we."

Following the planned November strike, the statement said, workers should join demonstrations against what it called official violence, and defend jailed or interned unionists and union rights.

The leaders also declared the week of Dec. 13-17 one of organized "manifestations" across Poland to pay homage to people killed since the Poznan riots in 1956 in clashes with authorities.

Parents encouraged to curb tricksters

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

With the outcropping of poisoned products, parents may be pulling their children off the streets this year at Halloween, bringing a quick death to the tradition of trick-or-treating.

The Chicago Tylenol poisonings did more than take seven people's lives.

The incident, enraging people across the country, has caused fear — but not only about over-the-counter drugs. One month later, other tainted store-stocked products have become visible.

Because of these poisoned products, police officials nationwide fear a demented imitator may tamper with trick-or-treat goodies.

And parents fear their child may be the victim.

While children are taught throughout the year to "never, never take candy from a stranger," once a year — at Halloween — parents encourage their costume-garbed children to roam dark streets, knocking on strangers' homes for treats.

But as a result of recent poisonings, frightened parents now view the ghoulish evening as a night of potential horror.

And alternatives to the accepted trick-or-treating are becoming popular. In Midland, most schools offer Halloween carnivals where the children still get treats.

"The kids don't think it's any big deal anymore," one Midland parent said of trick-or-treating. "They like to go to the carnivals and see their friends. And the schools even have costume judging contests."

"Traditional trick or treating may be on its way out," said Ron Benton, a Midland crime prevention officer.

With the rash of copycat poisonings, Benton said he thinks more Midlanders will keep their children off the streets.

"With all the publicity about the poisonings, eventually some kook may try it here (Midland)," Benton said. "There is no motive for this. It's got to be some-

Board slates hearing on asphalt plant

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

Texas Air Control Board in Austin has granted residents of Skyview Addition their request for a hearing on a permit exemption that had been given Petroplex Land and Development Co., Inc. for an asphalt plant east of the city.

The hearing will be held at 6 p.m. Dec. 7 in City Hall Council Chambers, 300 N. Loraine St.

The asphalt plant was under construction four miles east of Midland and east of County Road 1160 North when residents in Skyview Addition on the other side of the road became aware of it. They started protesting in early September and sent a written request to the TACB to hold a hearing.

TACB had granted Petroplex Land and Development Co. Permit Exemption No. X-3824 for a drum mix asphaltic concrete plant.

Meanwhile, the City Council at its Oct. 12 meeting decided not to issue the firm a building permit that would allow it to finish the plant and begin production. Residents along CR 1160 North and in Skyview Addition appeared at the chambers in protest of the plant. Representing them was attorney Jerry Prothro.

The band of citizens has argued they weren't aware of the plant until after the permit exemption had been granted and that the plant will be within half a mile of the nearest house when the homes that have been planned are constructed. Charging that emissions will dirty their environment, the residents also contended the application contained errors.

The land on which the plant is being constructed had been owned by Goo-

Two Midlanders were killed and another injured in a one-car rollover at 4 a.m. Saturday along Highway 80 at its intersection with Interestate 20 east of Midland.

Dead are the driver, Mark Joseph Holewczynski, 23, of Box 30383, Midland, and a passenger, Eric Lawrence Knudsen, 21, of Route 1, Box 84, M-17, Midland, according to the Department of Public Safety.

Both men were thrown from the vehicle when it failed to negotiate a curve and overturned 3½ times. Peace Justice Charles Sprayberry pronounced them dead at the scene at 5:15 a.m., the DPS reported.

Injured was a second passenger, Richard Alford Pittman, 20, of 4900 Andrews Highway. He was listed in good condition with contusions and abrasions late Saturday in Midland Memorial Hospital.

Let's take a look at economic record

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.
Editor-in-Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

Hearst

NEW YORK — All the election campaign rhetoric has been centered lately on the economic state of America but what administration critics ignore is a deep world recession far worse than ours. President Reagan has shouldered responsibility for a couple of percentage points of unemployment. But he points out tellingly that the lion's share belongs to previous administrations that tried to solve economic ills by throwing money at them.

That system boomeranged, while inflation and interest rates soared to about 20 percent. Well, by trimming government spending and reducing our swollen bureaucracy, the president managed in less than half of his first term to create reasonable order out of runaway chaos. His adversaries simply don't have practical alternatives to which the American electorate can turn.

Certainly, the president has been persistently sympathetic with the plight of the unemployed. While he contends that as long as a single jobless person who wants to work is unacceptable, the fact unfortunately remains that lots of people don't want to work and many who are "unemployable." There also are two and three folks in the same household who hold jobs.

Let's take a look, though, and see what President Reagan has achieved in 21 months of office.

The 90 percent of Americans employed are much better off than before he was elected by those of us who supported him across the board — middle-class, blue collar and farmer. That's principally because President Reagan carried out, as he promised in his campaign speeches, tax cuts.

Then, there was the menace of inflation that threatened to consume earning and spending power as it knifed to 19 pecent. Well, President Reagan has sucessfully steered the course of the economy so that inflation is in single digits, 6-7 percent. By steadily managing to lick inflation and correspondingly lowering all-time high interest rates to a present-day 13-to-14 percent, President Reagan set the stage for Wall Sreet to recover confidence. The market, remember, went wild with the sight of lowered rates and has boomed ever since.

Campaign echoes 1970 Senate race

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — The challenger accused the incumbent of being a big spender who was soft on crime, against school prayer and for forced busing.

The incumbent called the charges lies and stood on his record.

That was 1970, and the challenger was Lloyd Bentsen. Ironically, 12 years and two U.S. Senate terms later, Bentsen faces the same charges from his challenger, Republican Congressman Jim Collins.

Millionaire Collins, 66, says millionaire Bentsen, 61, is too liberal for Texas — an ironic accusation against Bentsen, who was reviled for years by Texas liberals because he not only ran against but defeated U.S. Sen. Ralph Yarborough in the 1970 Democratic primary.

Bentsen says Collins is an ineffective congressman who has not passed a piece of legislation in 14 years as U.S. Representative from Dallas.

"From 1971 through 1980, Lloyd Bentsen voted 'no' only two times out of 145 appropriations bills," says Collins' campaign literature.

"All told, (Bentsen) has voted to cut $1.3 trillion from the federal budget," responds Bentsen's campaign. "The senator goes to work on spending cuts while legislation is being shaped in committee and on the Senate floor. He doesn't stand mute until debate has ended, then cast one of a handful of symbolic 'no' votes against the final product."

A Collins campaign release labeled "The Liberal Record of Lloyd M. Bentsen" accuses Bentsen of responsibility for high interest rates because he was chairman of the Joint Economic Committee.

Bentsen, Collins charges, cares more about subways for Washington bureaucrats than highways for Houstonians, voted to "give away" the Panama Canal, and was rumored to be Ted Kennedy's choice as a running mate had Sen. Edward Kennedy won the 1980 Democratic nomination for President.

"That's terrible," Collins tells his television audience.

Bentsen's campaign has released what it says is a page from Collins' campaign handbook, contending it proves Collins set out to distort Bentsen's record.

"You can make a challenging statement in 30 seconds which will take an incumbent 30 minutes to explain," the handbook said. "He might have voted for an appropriations bill simply because it had many good features, but you challenge the one bad feature in the bill that he cannot possibly justify."

But there's a big difference between 1982 and 1970.

Even though both President Reagan and Vice President Bush have campaigned for Collins, it would be a stunning political coup if Collins convinced Texas voters that Bentsen is a liberal in the mold of Massachusetts' Kennedy.

Bentsen enjoys cross-party support, while Collins has annoyed some powers in his own party, including Gov. Bill Clements, Texas' first Republican governor since Reconstruction.

Collins released a poll showing, among other things, that Clements trailed his Democratic challenger, Attorney General Mark White.

In a year when the shine may be wearing off Reaganomics and Texans have seen the state's unemployment soar to its highest level in the history of the statistic, even the incumbent Republican governor is in a neck-and-neck race to keep his job.

Also working against Collins is the fact that Texas already has one Republican senator, John Tower.

Nevertheless, Collins has chosen his tack and is sticking with it to the end.

'We all know two things to be true," Collins told the Republican state convention last month, "No. 1 — Texas is a conservative state, and No. 2 — Lloyd Bentsen is a liberal."

Harrelson's stepdaughter provides damaging evidence in Wood trial

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — Charles V. Harrelson's stepdaughter and sometime lover has provided some of the most sensational and potentially damaging testimony to date in the trial of three people accused in the assassination of U.S. District Judge John H. Wood Jr.

Prosecutors, who persuaded Teresa Starr Jasper to become a state witness after she spent six months in jail, are using her testimony to bolster a case based primarily on circumstantial evidence.

Testifying under immunity Friday, the 25-year-old woman helped link the defendants to an alleged $250,000 "payoff" for Wood's death when she said she was sent to Las Vegas to pick up a thick package of $100 bills.

The government alleges the package contained $250,000 from Jamiel "Jimmy" Chagra, a high-stakes gambler who was scheduled for trial before the 63-year-old judge, known as "Maximum John" for his stiff sentences.

Chagra, who was convicted of drug trafficking in another court, will be tried for Wood's murder separately.

Wood was shot in the back outside his San Antonio townhouse May 29, 1979. Harrelson, 44, a previously convicted hitman, is accused of murdering the judge for $250,000.

Mrs. Jasper will return to the witness stand Tuesday after a long weekend, which defense attorneys are using to listen to 60 hours of her conversations recorded by her estranged husband-turned-FBI informant, Michael Jasper.

She testified she picked up the wad of money at a time when "the heat was on" her mother and stepfather because of Wood's death. She said she was paid $5,000 to travel to Las Vegas, Nev., to pick up the package, which she was told was a gambling debt. But she added she was ordered to take the secret "to my grave."

Mrs. Jasper, who also testified she once had an affair with her stepfather, read from 42 pages of love letters he sent her last year while both of them were behind bars.

The letters complimented Mrs. Jasper for going to jail for contempt of court rather than cooperate with the FBI in its massive investigation of the only assassination of a federal judge this century.

Harrelson used obscenities to describe FBI agents, who he said were "like Santa Claus, they're everywhere," Mrs. Jasper said.

Mrs. Jasper testified Harrelson and her mother sent her to the Jockey Club in Las Vegas the month after Wood was slain to pick up the package.

Secret ends with man's death; Parents loved child, officer says

HOUSTON (AP) — A 19-year-old secret has ended with the death of a 13-pound man whose parents kept his existence from outsiders for fear he would be taken away.

When Riley Anthony Nelson died shortly after developing a severe breathing problem Friday, he still wore diapers and slept in the same crib he had used as an infant, his parents said. The couple said he always was fed liquid baby formula.

Officials said it appeared Nelson, who was 3 feet tall, died naturally of complications from an unknown birth defect that severely stunted his growth and mental abilities.

Hospital officials who tried to save Nelson's life first thought they were dealing with a case of severe abuse because of the teen-ager's emaciated condition and childish appearance.

"In my opinion, that family didn't do nothing but give him every bit of love in the world to make him live three times longer than he was supposed to," said police detective S.P. Wilson.

The doctor who delivered Nelson four months prematurely on Jan. 27, 1963, told his mother and father the boy would live five years at most, the parents said.

Ruth Nelson, 51, said she and her husband, Riley, a printer, never told anyone but immediate family members and long-time friends of the child's existence for fear he would be "put in a home."

"I was afraid they would want to take him away," she said. "I'm going to miss him, but I know he's in a far better place than here. I know in my heart that he's in heaven and he's whole. What he missed down here, he's getting up there and that's the consolation I get now."

Anthony, as he was called, grew normally at first but never progressed past baby talk, the parents said.

"I would go to him and say, 'Anthony, do you want to come to Mama?' He'd smile and hold his arms out and I'd take him," Mrs. Nelson said. "We just loved him to death. He was cherished, loved and everything revolved around him. If I had grocery money and didn't have enough for everybody, I would always make sure to buy baby food, diapers and medicine for Anthony."

'Candy Man' scheduled for lethal injection on Halloween

EDITOR'S NOTE — Fellow inmates on death row call him "Candy Man." To children in the Houston area, he's known as "the man who ruined Halloween." To the history of criminal justice, he may be remembered as the first executed by lethal injection. He is Ronald Clark O'Bryan — a father of two, a church deacon, a skilled professional — and a man convicted of killing his own son for money.

By PAUL RECER
Associated Press Writer

HOUSTON (AP) — Ronald Clark O'Bryan, convicted of killing his son eight years ago with poisoned Halloween candy, is scheduled to die next Sunday inside the red-brick Texas prison known as The Walls.

O'Bryan, 37, has spent seven years on death row awaiting a decision from the appeals courts. His attorneys are seeking yet another stay of execution, but prison officials and lawyers involved in the case believe there are little grounds left for appeal.

"This time it may be for real," said prison spokesman Rick Hartley. "We expect it to happen."

If it does, O'Bryan will be the first person executed in Texas since 1964 and the first in the United States to be executed by lethal injection.

The execution date is no accident. State District Judge Michael T. McSpadden set the date for Halloween, eight years to the day after Timothy Marc O'Bryan died from eating cyanide-laced candy.

"I picked it (the date) for you especially," the judge told O'Bryan at the Sept. 30 sentencing. "I hope it is the last execution date I set for you."

O'BRYAN, AS he has from the beginning, claimed his innocence: "I had absolutely nothing to do with this crime."

In interviews on death row, O'Bryan claims he was a victim of the hysteria that was loosed in the city the day after Halloween in 1974.

"The police wanted to convict somebody," he said, "and I was convicted."

In another interview, he noted: "If you'll remember, they were under a lot of pressure to solve this thing. So they picked me as the scapegoat."

Any parent who lived in the Houston area at that time remembers the horror of the days after that Halloween.

Newspapers and broadcasts carried the story: An 8-year-old boy returned home with his father and sister after a happy Monday night of trick-or-treating. His father permitted him to eat one piece of candy before bedtime and he selected a Pixy Stix, a powdered confection packaged in a plastic tube.

His father told police he opened it for the boy and then upended the tube to pour it into the youngster's mouth.

O'Bryan was to testify later that the boy complained, "Oh, Daddy, that's bitter." The youngster drank some Kool Aid to take away the bad taste.

WITHIN MOMENTS, Timothy became ill, O'Bryan told police. The father said he held his son as he was sick. The boy went limp in his arms. In less than an hour, Timothy Marc O'Bryan was dead.

The O'Bryans were well known in the Houston suburb of Deer Park where they lived. He was a soloist at the Second Baptist Church and was in charge of the bus program. There was an outpouring of concern and sympathy.

The day after his son's death, O'Bryan sang a solo in Wednesday church services. He chose the hymn "Blessed Assurance." He changed the chorus from "This is my story — this is my song," to "This is Tim's story — this is Tim's song."

There was not a dry eye in the auditorium, according to a man who was there.

A medical test showed Timothy died of cyanide poisoning and O'Bryan said he received five Pixy Stix in a Pasadena, Texas neighborhood while trick-or-treating with his children and with another father and son. O'Bryan said his children got two of the confections and he gave the others to other children.

An appeal from the Pasadena police department for the candy brought in sacks of sweets. Concerned parents turned in vast quantities of the candy. Others, to the dismay of their children, destroyed the Halloween "loot."

ALL OF THE Pixy Stix were recovered and each contained enough cyanide to kill two or three people, officials said.

On Friday, Nov. 4, the horror deepened.

Pasadena detectives learned that only a few days before Halloween O'Bryan had taken out life insurance policies on his children — $20,000 worth on each child. And he had paid the premium with cash and hid the fact from his wife. There were also other policies taken out only a few months earlier.

Detectives also learned O'Bryan was desperately short of money and deeply in debt. His car was about to be repossessed and he was behind on several other loans.

Further, a man whom O'Bryan identified as handing out the poisoned candy in a Pasadena neighborhood had been working at an airport. The man's story was supported by a number of witnesses and by time sheets. The house where O'Bryan claimed to have received the candy was empty on Halloween night.

Timothy O'Bryan

The officers presented the evidence to Assistant District Attorney Mike Hinton. He was stunned. He called in his boss and together they went over the evidence, detail by detail. Their conclusion — O'Bryan was a prime suspect.

O'BRYAN AND his wife, Daynene, were brought to the police station and separated.

A detective told Mrs. O'Bryan of the evidence.

"Oh, my God — no," she said and lowered her head.

When she recovered, she told police that her husband was troubled. She said he was an exaggerator, a spendthrift in constant financial trouble and had held and lost 21 jobs in five years.

She also told of his collecting on insurance from two fires that had destroyed furniture.

"I feel he cannot be allowed to walk out of this place for the sake of other children," she said.

In another room, detectives asked O'Bryan about the insurance.

He at first denied it, then admitted taking out the policies. He also admitted that he tried to collect on one of the policies at 9:15 a.m. Nov. 1, less than 11 hours after his son had died.

O'Bryan was jailed and later indicted.

THE COMMUNITY was incredulous.

"I'll not believe it," said an O'Bryan neighbor, "until I hear it from his own lips."

At the trial, the state's case was based on circumstantial evidence gathered by police and boosted by witnesses who came forward after O'Bryan was charged.

A co-worker testified of how O'Bryan showed unusual interest in cyanide. A friend of O'Bryan, who worked for a chemical company, told of him calling late one night to ask questions about the poison, including how much it would take to kill. A chemical supply house salesman identified O'Bryan as a man who had inquired about buying cyanide.

O'Bryan burst into tears when his wife took the stand as a prosecution witness. She told how, before Timothy was buried, O'Bryan had discussed how the insurance money would be spent. A relative said O'Bryan, on the day of the funeral, asked advice: Should he use the insurance money to pay debts or to buy a house?

The defendant took the stand and denied all charges. But on cross examination, Hinton caught him in several untruths.

The jury deliberated for less than an hour. Guilty.

IN THE PUNISHMENT phase, Hinton asked for the death sentence because O'Bryan "ought to be damned for what he did."

"It is the most despicable crime I ever heard of, to take the life of your own flesh and blood for money," he said.

O'Bryan's attorney, Richard Harrison, pointed out that the state was able to present only circumstantial evidence and never proved that O'Bryan actually bought cyanide.

In 90 minutes, the jury returned with its decision — death.

The conviction was appealed through the state courts and up the federal ladder to the U.S. Supreme Court, which refused to review the case.

O'Bryan's appeals attorney, Will Gray, last week petitioned for a stay from the U.S. District Court here. It was denied and the lawyer now plans to file an appeal with the Fifth U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans.

If the appeals fail, next Saturday evening O'Bryan will be moved from death row — in the Ellis Unit 12 miles from Huntsville — to the Walls Unit. He will be placed in a holding cell that has not been used since the last Texas execution in 1964. The cell is a few feet from the death chamber.

A FEW MINUTES before midnight, O'Bryan will walk into the death chamber and be instructed to recline on a gurney. He will be strapped down. A medical technician, specified as not being a doctor, will insert into the convict's arm a intravenous needle connected to a tube that snakes through a wall with a one-way window. Behind the wall will wait the executioner.

The Texas Department of Corrections director or the warden will then nod and a curtain will open. The death chamber can then be viewed by a small group of standing witnesses.

O'Bryan will be given a chance to speak final words. When he falls mute, the TDC director or warden will give the signal by saying, "We are ready."

Behind the wall, the executioner will inject sodium pentothal into the intravenous tube. The clear liquid will flow down the tube and into the needle.

UNCONSCIOUSNESS WILL be almost immediate. Death will follow quickly.

Eighteen hours or so later, it will be time for trick-or-treating on the sidewalks of Pasadena, Deer Park and Houston, a time traditionally filled with the laughter of pint-sized goblins. But the memory of the Halloween of 1974 touches children not yet born on that horror-filled eve eight years ago.

Many parents now forbid their children to go trick-or-treating; instead they hold parties. Others give out coins or small toys instead of candy. Some parents let their children collect candy, but tell them not to eat any until each piece has been checked carefully; any suspicious sweet is thrown out.

Vic Driscoll, a prosecutor in the O'Bryan case, is perhaps typical. Asked where he will be on Halloween night, he replied:

"As close as possible to my children."

Ronald Clark O'Bryan is scheduled to die inside a Texas prison as the first person in the U.S. executed by lethal injection. Known as the "Candy Man" for killing his young son with a cyanide-laced treat on Halloween eight years ago, O'Bryan's execution will be this Halloween.

Mercantile Texas Corp. buys troubled Dallas bank

DALLAS (AP) — Mercantile Texas Corp. has acquired Lincoln Centre Bank N.A. to rescue the Dallas bank from what federal regulators called an "emergency condition."

Peter Bartholow, senior vice president of finance at Mercantile, said federal officials approved the takeover Friday after it was learned Lincoln Centre was the victim of unauthorized transactions that would have exposed it to substantial losses.

"There were deposit transactions that left the bank unsecure," Bartholow said.

"In effect, it means that customers may have been authorized to draw against uncollected deposits with no prospect for the deposits to be covered or collectable.

"Conceivably, it could have caused the bank to fail without support," he said.

As of Sept. 30, Lincoln Centre had deposits of $25 million and stockholders equity of $2.8 million.

William W. Wiles, secretary of the Federal Reserve Board, said in a statement that "an emergency condition exists" and that the Fed was asked by the U.S. Comptroller of the Currency to "consider immediate action on the application."

Houston ACORN's 'tent city' erected to protest Reaganomics

HOUSTON (AP) — About 60 people set up a dozen tents near a union hall's parking lot Saturday and exchanged speeches in what the group's local organizer called a display of "how much we hate Reagan."

Judy Graves, with the Houston area Association of Community Organizations for Reform Now, said the rally was a protest of President Reagan's policies in general and was aimed at affecting the fall elections.

She said the Teamsters Union had donated the space for the "Reagan Ranch," which is to stay in place through a 10-day protest.

"It will give Reagan a good indication if his friends go down Nov. 2 that people are just getting increasingly fed up," she said.

The protest is part of a nationwide effort organized in 11 cities by the coalition of low- and moderate-income families and labor, church and peace groups.

Ms. Graves said tent-dwellers in the Houston area are a local example of suffering caused by the Reagan administration's cuts in social spending.

"There's people living on the outskirts of town under the (U.S. Highway) 290 bridge who are afraid to leave for fear someone else will get their spots," she said. About 3,000 families are on the waiting list for public housing here, she said.

Hassan says Arabs will recognize Israel

WASHINGTON (AP) — Morocco's King Hassan said Saturday the Arab world will recognize Israel, if certain conditions are met, including Israeli surrender of the territories occupied in the 1967 war.

Hassan also said the Arab-Israeli conflict has "entered a new phase: This is no longer the conflict of force, but in fact it is the conflict of law, and rights."

Although Hassan's willingness to recognize Israel was qualified, he went further than most Arab leaders have been willing to go previously toward accepting the Israeli state.

Hassan headed a six-nation Arab League delegation that met with President Reagan Friday to discuss Arab and U.S. proposals for a lasting peace in the Middle East.

U.S. officials had said in advance of the meeting that the Arabs needed to "come out of the closet" and explicitly declare their willingness to recognize and negotiate with Israel.

At a news conference, with the foreign ministers of Tunisia, Algeria and Jordan sitting nearby, Hassan said: "Our presence here, if we want to be logical with our own position, shows that we also want ourselves to live in peace with Israel — Israel being recognized — and otherwise, we would not be here."

But he quickly added: "some conditions have to be fufilled in order for this to happen, and so long as these conditions are not fulfilled, there will be no recognition of Israel by Arab states."

A U.S. official said Hassan's statement "seems positive ... rather upbeat" and was at least a "marginal" advance over the previous Arab attitude toward recognizing Israel. The official said he did not want to be identified.

Foremost among those conditions, he said, is that Israel must give up to the West Bank and Gaza Strip and return to the borders it occupied before the 1967 war. He didn't list others, but in the past, the Arab nations have said they include Israeli recognition of the Palestine Liberation Organization and the establishment of a Palestinian state in the occupied territories.

Hassan made clear his feeling that Israel's pre-1967 borders should be recognized by Arab states as the borders of Israel.

Voicing what he declared was an independent analysis of the situation, he said, "We are bound to say these are the borders of Israel. We must say it undeniably."

He said individual Arab nations might respond differently in recognizing Israel. He said some might exchange ambassadors and engage in trade, and others would refrain from direct contact.

"It's a matter of sovereignty of each state concerned," he said.

Hassan said the Arab delegation — which also included the foreign ministers of Syria and Saudi Arabia — will return home "full of hope."

He said he believes there is "the real sincere and deep will and wish to start as soon as possible the peace process," although he didn't mention Israel specifically as a participant.

He said talks between Jordan and the PLO, aimed at preparing a common aproach to negotiations with Israel on behalf of Palestinians in the occupied territories, are "absolutely necessary." Washington wants Jordan to enter the negotiations.

The purpose of the Arab League's mission was to discuss the Arab peace plan, adopted at Fez last month, which calls for a separate Palestinian state, and the Reagan plan, unveiled on Sept. 1, urging self-rule for Palestinians in association with Jordan. Israel has declared it won't ever give up the West Bank.

Hassan said Americans and Arabs should attempt to "build bridges between the positions" of Reagan and the Arab nations. He didn't say how they could be made accepable to Israel, which has rejected both.

He said Reagan had told the Arab leaders, in effect, to "take account of my problems, take account of my concerns, and I commit myself to be along side you, and to take account of your problems and your concerns. This is the position of the president, and for the time being it's enough for us."

Some GOP incumbents using tough ads

WASHINGTON (AP) — In Wyoming, Sen. Malcolm Wallop says his challenger is posing as a conservative, even though he led Edward Kennedy's presidential campaign in the state two years ago. "Do you suppose he fooled Ted Kennedy or is he trying to fool us?" asks a new commercial.

Sen. Harrison Schmitt's recent television commercials accuse his challenger, New Mexico's attorney general, of failing to prosecute inmates responsible for a 1980 prison riot.

And Misssouri Sen. John Danforth says his challenger's campaign amounts to the political reincarnation of an "overpromising and irresponsible" former Democratic governor.

What Danforth, Wallop and Schmitt have in common — tough, new advertisements and Republicanism aside — is the uncomfortable feeling that someone's gaining on them.

That's enough to prompt all three to make late, risky changes in their strategy of seeking re-election by standing on their Senate records while ignoring their Democratic opponents.

Republican officials expect to hold these three seats Nov. 2, but they agree the races are getting closer — particularly in New Mexico and Missouri. That could mean trouble; only a few upsets could topple the GOP's 54-45 majority in the Senate.

These are not the only states where Republican incumbents have taken the offensive — witness Sen. Robert Stafford's challenge in Vermont to Democrat Robert Guest to disclose his personal finances, Sen. David Durenberger's newly sharpened attack against Mark Dayton in Minnesota, and Sen. William Roth's argument that challenger David Levinson is a Delaware outsider.

Only three weeks ago, GOP polls reportedly gave Schmitt a 14-point lead over Attorney General Jeff Bingaman. Now, Schmitt's campaign manager, Diana Welch, says the New Mexico race is "tight tight."

"He's (Bingaman) having an impact with his negative ads ... and you cannot not respond," she said. Bingaman campaign spokesman Mitch Foushee disputes the charge that his advertisements are negative, but in any event, Schmitt now is responding in kind.

Bingaman's ads charge Schmitt with voting three times to eliminate the minimum Social Security benefit. They also say Schmitt voted on one bill to make "grease" payments to foreign government a tax-deductible item for corporations, but to reverse a provision of another law that makes interest on credit card purchases deductible for consumers.

"We don't exactly consider it negative ads to bring forth his record," said Foushee.

Now Schmitt is airing a TV commercial that accuses Bingaman of failing to prosecute inmates responsible for the 1980 prison riot. Foushee says the attorney general was ordered by the New Mexico Legislature to investigate the prison uprising, and was barred by judicial ethics from prosecuting the participants. The local district attorney has prosecuted several cases, in accordance with past practice in the state, the spokesman said.

EDITOR'S REPORT

It could have broken that 1,000-mark long before, I believe, had Paul Volcker, chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, read the signs more carefully, or been a bit bolder. Irving Kristol, a professor of social thought at the NYU Graduate Scool of Business and a nationally-recognized analyst, had this to say in "The Wall Street Journal": "Paul Volcker, with his positive genius for ambiguity — an enormous asset in Washington — has doubtfully echoed that sentiment." Volcker apparently only added that the Fed was never really all that monetarist in the first place, which sounds like a lame excuse to me.

Now in coping with world affairs President Reagan has something of a mixed-up scorecard. At long last he is trying to extricate himself from a well-intentioned and hard-nosed attitude about our Western allies accepting the Soviet-built pipeline for natural gas. Our friends and allies in Western Europe defied the administration's effort to stop them. If they want to do business with the Russians (they claim it means jobs in big unemployment regions) our European colleagues must also face the consequences of doing so. President Reagan and Secretary of State Shultz are in secret negotiation with our allies to come up with a compromise formula. We don't want the Soviets to drive a wedge between us and NATO, something Moscow has wanted for more than 30 years.

As a matter of interest, Western Europe displayed little concern over President Reagan's offer to the Soviets of a guaranteed large grain sale. The Russians, besides knocking the offer as an election ploy, have remained noncommital. They can buy grain as they did before in Canada, Australia and Argentina.

The other major foreign policy issue before the president is the thorny-sided Middle East and the quest for peace. I don't feel that we should become more involved than we are already with 1,200 marines in Lebanon. New Lebanese President Amin Gemayel, older brother of the assassinated president-elect, asked in Washington for an additional American presence to help in clearing out foreign forces, meaning PLO, Syrian and Israeli units. American administration officials have promised a serious review and early reply. Except for more material assistance to help battered Lebanon back on its feet, I hope that President Reagan isn't persuaded to send more of our boys into a thankless and potentially dangerous mission.

In my view he started on the right track by telling an Arab league delegation in Washington that "the time has come" for Arabs to agree on direct negotiations with Israel. As a top administration source observed, "the Arabs had better come out of the closet and recognize reality." It means what the Arabs, except for Egypt, never have done: accept Israel's right to exist. Maybe if the Arabs act on the president's initiative, they can somehow achieve coexistence with Israel. I'll keep my fingers crossed because history on both sides has been too inflamed throughout the centuries.

Until after our mid-term elections, all pressing foreign issues will have to take a back seat. The state of our economy remains No. 1 before the eyes and ears of the voters.

The president has successfully whittled away at inflation and high interest rates. The results have been encouraging. Housing starts rose 14.4 percent in September because interest rates dropped perceptibly. That's big when you think of how stagnant the industry has been. It will take a little more patience and fortitude and then recovery for the American economy can be an open road.

Texas Air Control Board sets asphalt plant hearing

drich Hejl before being sold to Petroplex Land and Development Co. It had been included in a voluntary annexation move, but recently was requested to be removed.

Residents in Skyview Addition originally had objected also to being annexed. But Ron Bentley, a resident, said Saturday they were reconsidering on the basis they stood a stronger chance of fighting the asphalt plant with the backing of the city.

Representatives of Petroplex have argued that if the plant violates emissions standards the TACB can shut it down at any time.

Cited as "Contested Hearing Case No. 171," the release from TACB issued Oct. 21 said the company is directed to appear at the hearing and to "demonstrate a preponderance of the evidence that the facility will not make a significant contribution of air contaminants to the atmosphere."

The record of this hearing will be given to the TACB, which will determine "whether to affirm, modify or reverse the decision of the Executive Director to issue Permit Exemption No. X-3824."

However, at this point the only groups listed as parties to the hearing are the TACB staff and representatives of Petroplex Land and Development Co.

The TACB release states that any other persons desiring to be made a party to the hearing must specifically apply in writing for party status to Examiner Ramon Dasch, Texas Air Control Board, 6330 Highway 2990 East, Austin, Tx. 78723.

"No other persons will be admitted as parties unless the request is actually received at the address above no later than Nov. 12. Previous correspondence with the TACB is not effective for this purpose."

A final determination on party status will be made at a prehearing conference scheduled for 6 p.m. Nov. 15 in Midland's City Hall Council Chambers, according to the release.

At the December hearing, only persons who have been admitted as parties will be permitted to present evidence and argument and to cross-examine witnesses.

The TACB notes that anyone wanting to give testimony at the hearing on the merits but doesn't want party status, should call the TACB's legal division at 512-451-5711, extension 358, to find out the names and addresses of all admitted parties. "The parties may then be contacted about the possibility of presenting testimony," the release states.

The board emphasized that all persons wishing to be admitted as parties must attend the conference. "Proposed disputed issues for consideration at the hearing on the merits and requests for official notice should be made at the prehearing conference."

Also, interested persons are asked to call the TACB Central Office in Austin, 451-5711, extension 358, or the regional office in Odessa, 367-3871, a few days before the hearing to confirm that it will be held because continuances sometimes are granted, according to the release.

Spring-like temperatures continue

Highs during the next couple of days should reach the mid-70s after overnight lows in the mid-40s.

Winds should be southeasterly at 5-10 miles per hour.

Saturday's high of 72 was 18 degrees off the record for the date set in 1934, while the low of 42 was nine degrees off the record mark set in 1980.

No rainfall was recorded during the 24-hour period ending at 6 p.m. Saturday, leaving the monthly total at 1.01 inches and the 1982 amount at 12.63 inches.

Skies mostly sunny over nation, except for rain in Florida, South Atlantic coast

By The Associated Press

Showers remained Saturday over the Florida Peninsula and the South Atlantic coastal region.

More than six inches of rain had fallen since midnight at Jacksonville, Fla.

Clouds covered the rest of the Atlantic and extended west over the upper Ohio Valley and northern Great Lakes. Skies were mostly sunny over the rest of the central and eastern part of the nation.

Clouds stretched inland fom the Pacific Coast to the Rockies. Showers were scattered from Oregon and central California to Idaho and extreme western Montana.

For Sunday, the National Weather Service forecasts showers over the Pacific Northwest and from northeastern Florida to the Carolinas, partly cloudy skies over southern Texas and from California to New Mexico, Utah, Wyoming and Montana. Sunny skies are predicted for the rest of the nation.

Highs will be in the 50s in much of the Great Lakes region and from the upper Ohio Valley to the Carolinas; in the 50s and 60s in the Pacific Northwest; in the 60s and 70s in the rest of the northwest.

Midland police investigate burglaries

Midland police are investigating the Friday burglary of two guns valued at $335 from a residence at 606 W. Kansas Ave.

Roger A. Lyle, the owner, reported a Ruger .357-caliber Magnum, blue-steel revolver valued at $270 and a .22-caliber semi-automatic rifle worth $65 missing. Also missing was an undetermined number of old coins. Police reports indicate the burglary took place about 11 a.m. Friday. The burglar apparently gained entry to the house by breaking a dining room window and climbing inside.

Police also received a report Friday of an auto burglary at Burns Paint & Body Shop, 1300 S. Big Spring St.

Steven R. Owens, 4324 Cedar Spring Drive, reported a stereo cassette deck valued at $280 missing from his automobile, which had been at the shop for repairs. Police reports indicate several other unspecified items were also taken from the shop.

Midland firefighters douse oil rig blaze

Two units of the Midland Fire Department fought an oil rig blaze Saturday night 41 miles southeast of Midland near the junction of FM 1357 and FM 2401 in Glasscock County.

A spill fire had resulted from a malfunction in a firebox on a heater-treater unit at a Sohio Petroleum Company rig on the R.S. Davenport Lease B, according to an MFD spokesman.

Approximately 400 gallons of water were used in extinguishing the blaze, which erupted shortly before 8 p.m.

As a result, Benton said the traditional trick-or-treat holiday will die.

"I feel like it (trick-or-treat) will disappear," he said. "Halloween carnivals over the years began to keep girls and boys off the streets. Eventually, Halloween will be strictly a carnival atmosphere.

"Block parties and school carnivals are 100 percent better than knocking on the doors."

Although Midland officials are not taking any action to "ban" trick-or-treating, they are strongly recommending parents take their children to carnivals for Halloween activities this year.

Meanwhile, several Massachusetts cities have outlawed trick-or-treating because of the cyanide-spiked Tylenol cases.

"Police won't clamp down on it (trick-or-treating) here," Benton said. "But I feel the parents will."

In East Texas, church and school Halloween carnivals cropped up after cautious parents read about the 1974 "Candy Man" crime where a Houston-area man reportedly gave his 8-year-old son some cyanide-laced candy to collect on a life-insurance policy.

Ronald Clark O'Bryan, convicted in 1976 of capital murder, is scheduled to be executed by injection this Halloween.

Benton said although Midland is still viewed as a community, metropolitan problems — such as unusual crimes exemplified by the Tylenol poisonings and the "Candy Man" incidents — should not be ignored.

One concerned Midlander, Jerry Arnold, suggests an extra precaution be taken for those who insist turning their children loose this Halloween.

"Parents should be encouraged to write down the block and house numbers where their children go," he said. "Then if anything happens, there will be a list.

"If they go to 30 houses, the parents will have a record," Arnold said, adding he came up with the idea after visiting El Paso, where officials were discouraging trick-or-treating.

Midland Memorial Hospital has offered to scan goodie bags in past years, but decided against the procedure this year.

According to Arlene Strickland, MMH public relations director, poison cannot be detected by X-rays.

"The emergency room recommends that parents escort their children, examine the candy and only go to familiar houses," Ms. Strickland said, adding that costumes should be short enough so youngsters don't trip over them and reflective marking should be worn by the children.

Parkview Hospital, which examined candy and other goodies in the past, also has decided not to X-ray the bags this year.

However, Benton said "although there have been no documented cases of posioning in Midland, parents should check the kiddos candy."

Because of the Tylenol poisonings, Benton said extra precautions should be taken this year and "the kiddos should be encouraged to attend the carnivals instead of trick-or-treating."

"Halloween is going to be strictly a carnival atmosphere," he added. "Last year, I had one trick-or-treater all night long. Halloween trick-or-treating will disappear."

Construction workers set up the first of a group of tents pitched on a vacant Pittsburgh lot Saturday to protest the economic policies of the Reagan administration. Named "Reagan's Ranch," the tents are designed to be reminiscent of the Hoovervilles of the 1930s and are part of a demonstration held in several cities across the nation.

Tent cities pitched protesting administration economic policies

By The Associated Press

Members of church, labor and action groups set up tent communities across the nation Saturday in a Depression era-style protest against President Reagan's economic policies.

The tent cities, known as "Reagan Ranches," went up in Lansing, Mich.; St. Louis, Columbus, Ohio, and New Orleans, and "Reagan Ranches" are planned for at least 30 more cities by Election Day.

"In the '30s, people were forced to live in tent cities called 'Hoovervilles' because of the Depression," said Calvin Cook, spokesman for the St. Louis demonstration. "From where we stand, it looks like we're in for another one."

"We want to send a clear message to right-wing extremists that they can't turn back the clock to 1927, 1928 or 1929," added Bob Knickmeyer, a member of a St. Louis lobbying group for fair housing.

Much of the activity was organized by the Association of Community Organizations for Reform Now, which claims 60,000 low-and moderate-income members in 26 states.

About 20 tents were expected to be set up along Interstate 10 ramps in New Orleans by Monday, where organizers planned a "Nancy Reagan Fashion Show for the Depression-Minded" and a "street theater" to demand disarmament.

Most of the tents going up in New Orleans on Saturday were borrowed from community centers, the Sierra Club and other organizations.

"Living in an urban area, people just don't own tents," said ACORN spokeswoman Ruby Booker.

In Columbus, about 16 tents of various sizes and shapes had been pitched in a vacant lot outside a Baptist Church, said ACORN member Beverly Ross. She said the settlement would stay up until Oct. 29. It was furnished with portable toilets, and the residents were given access to the church kitchen and other facilities.

"Families are going to be there, people that are poor," Ms. Ross said. ACORN planned to pass out information on housing, jobs and help with utility payments.

"We have plenty of blankets and tents and foods and cots and we're going to have a soup line," said another member, Evelyn Cerda. "...Anyone that wants to come in off the streets, we'll feed 'em."

About a dozen tents were set up in Lansing, where bread and beans sold for a dollar. Organizers said they had no idea how many people would sleep at the site in a downtown park, before the protest ends Friday. About 20 people staked out the "Reagan Ranch" on Saturday as temperatures straggled up to the mid-40s. Only one tent had a propane heater.

Thirty people armed with hammers, hatchets and shovels cleared brush to set up the tents in St. Louis. Cook estimated most of the 1,400 St. Louis ACORN members would visit the settlement during its nine-day existence, but said it was impossible to estimate how many actually would sleep there.

"We've got a barbecue under a tarp for the cooking, portable toilets and water for a hydrant," said organizer Clarene Royston. "We don't anticipate any problems."

Possibility of war to be discussed in schools

WASHINGTON (AP) — In schools across America on Monday, youngsters, teachers and parents will discuss a matter rarely mentioned in the classroom — the possibility that civilization could end at any time in a nuclear war.

Educators for Social Responsibility, a Boston-based organization of teachers and parents, says at least 200 schools will participate in this "Day of Dialogue," an attempt to bring the nuclear issue into the curriculum.

"It's an emotional and complex issue for students and for teachers and administrators," says Sheldon Berman, national coordinator of the project.

"We're not trying to politicize the issue, but we are saying that children at every level, even kindergarten kids, are aware of nuclear weapons. This will be a chance to help them get beyond their fears."

BERMAN NOTES that nuclear warfare, although a dominant issue of the times, generally gets scant attention in school. Hiroshima rates little more than a glance in most history texts; attempts to cap the arms race get even less.

Educators for Social Responsibility has adopted as its slogan something said by a ninth grader in a Boston suburb:

"Not knowing is terrifying. And knowing is terrifying. But not knowing is hopeless. And knowing may save us."

The organization, with chapters in 24 cities, says it does not take sides on arms issues but believes they deserve discussion in the classroom "so that students can become active and informed participants in the democratic process."

Last summer, 68 teachers, aided by education consultants and freelance writers, put together a 220-page curriculum guide, "Dealing with Issues of Nuclear War in the Classroom."

BERMAN, 33, a teacher who has taken a year off to direct the project, reports getting 1,200 requests for copies — suggesting that hundreds of schools besides those he knows about will conduct their own "Day of Dialogue."

Two Harvard psychiatrists, William R. Beardslee and John E. Mack, in a study on nuclear fear in children, reported that a majority of the high school students participating in a 1980 survey said they expect a nuclear war.

Many children said the prospect of such a war has affected their thoughts about marriage and plans for the future.

Beardslee and Mack said little research has been done into what children think of nuclear war — perhaps because "we adults have entered into a kind of compact with ourselves not to know."

"We suspect that the implications of what we are doing to the emotional development of our young are so horrifying that we would prefer to remain ignorant," they said.

HERB BAUERS, 73, a retired Los Angeles teacher, says 30 to 50 schools in his area are participating in the dialogue with such projects as students writing letters to parents, teachers, school officials and legislators.

Science classes may discuss radioactivity; history classes may discuss efforts over the years to achieve disarmament.

In St. Rose of Lima Elementary School in Denver, students will paint a peace mural. In Columbia High School, East Greenbush, N.Y., students will experiment with what headlines would look like if world peace were declared.

"I imagine it will be controversial in some places," says Bauers. "But without controversy there isn't any real learning."

Bauers says he hopes ultimately to see the creation of "a formal peace curriculum in every school system."

CORAINE GREENE, who teaches special education in Falmouth, Maine, says teachers have to be careful when discussing nuclear war with kindergarten children.

"We can't talk to them in terms of their own deaths," she said in a telephone interview. "If they never thought of it, we don't want to be the first to tell them."

Man kills pregnant woman, wounds police chief

CANTON, Miss. (AP) — A man who shot and killed a pregnant woman opened fire on law officers, wounding the police chief, before he was gunned down, authorities said.

The man, identified as Koai Meuchy, killed Violet Davis and wounded another woman Friday night before police arrived and shot him, Lt. Bobby Tripp said.

Police Chief Bobby Winters, in stable condition at a hospital, was shot in the back when he opened the locked front door to the home where Meuchy had holed up. "The man just went wild," Tripp said.

Former reporter may be jailed in death

DETROIT (AP) — A former Detroit News crime reporter faces up to 15 years in prison after a manslaughter conviction for the slaying of his girlfriend, a Detroit police sergeant.

Recorder's Court Judge George W. Crockett III on Friday rejected the temporary insanity defense of Douglas Glazier, 54. Glazier was charged with shooting 39-year-old Carol Roketa four times on March 7 with her .38-caliber police revolver.

Glazier remains free on $30.000 bond following Friday's decision. Sentencing was set for Nov. 5.

Inmate injures guards in escape attempt

REIDSVILLE, Ga. (AP) — A maximum-security inmate climbed a fence and injured eight Georgia State Prison guards before he was subdued an hour later and returned to his cell.

Prisons spokeswoman Sara Englade said the incident began Friday when Johnny Strozier, 25, scaled a recreation cage fence, cutting himself on the razor-sharp wire on the top.

Several guards hurt their backs trying to subdue Strozier, another suffered cuts on the head and another was hurt when shattering glass struck his eye, Ms. Englade said.

Strozier, who is serving a 34-year term for armed robbery, has attacked officers five times over the past four months, she said.

Artist permitted to wrap islands in mesh

MIAMI (AP) — The New York artist Christo was given the last permit needed to go ahead with "Surrounded Islands" — his plan to wrap 10 Biscayne Bay islands with pink mesh.

Christo said the pink polypropylene spread around the green islands and the blue bay will create an oversized impression of Monet's water lilies.

The Army Corps of Engineers approved the project Friday after the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service issued a series of conditions and recommended that the project be aborted if even a single manatee is killed. The exhibition is scheduled for March.

Library needs bathroom to stay open

CLIMAX SPRINGS, Mo. (AP) — This town's library may be closed unless the new owner agrees to build a second bathroom.

Frank Velho and his wife bought the library this summer and set up housekeeping with their four children in rooms behind the library.

They were using the sink and bathroom as their own, but the Camden County Library Board, which rents the building from the Velhos for $75 a month, said he and his family are not to venture from their apartment into the library or its bathroom after hours.

Velho said that's a considerable hardship considering that the branch is only open from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. Tuesdays through Thursdays.

"This just isn't working out," said Velho, 42, a self-employed handyman. "We're putting everything we can into the library. We can't afford" a new bathroom too.

Man without kidney bikes for foundation

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Bicyclist Arnold Behrer, who lives with a borrowed kidney, has pedaled 9,500 miles from coast to coast to raise money for the National Kidney Foundation.

Behrer, 27, marked the fourth anniversary of his kidney transplant operation with a cross-country trip on a 15-speed bike. He is scheduled to pedal back to his native Pittsburgh on Sunday afternoon.

"It's a celebration of life for him, too" said Behrer's mother, Isbell, in a telephone interview from the family home in nearby Sewickley. "He's celebrating the fact that he's feeling good."

Radio chopper leads police to suspect

Veteran pilot Pat Monks said he led police to the suspect, 19-year-old Reginald Abbott, by fixing his sight on a bright yellow baseball cap the man wore. Abbott was apprehended Friday after a chase through suburban Dearborn and Detroit's west side.

Monks said he "stumbled onto" the chase by glimpsing Abbott and up to 15 police cars traveling through city streets at up to 100 mph.

When Abbott abandoned his car and ducked behind an apartment building, Monks said, "I just kept looking for that cap."

Malfunction forces jet emergency landing

PUEBLO, Colo. (AP) — A United Airlines jet made an emergency landing Saturday morning after an equipment malfunction, the airline said.

The Boeing 727 was en route from Tulsa, Okla., to Denver and had 61 people aboard. It landed without incident at Pueblo Memorial Airport at 9:10 a.m..

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — Over 30 years ago, the big difference between male and female voters, as charted by the nation's early pollsters, was something of a political joke.

Women — generally slavish to their husbands, fathers or ward-heelers when it came to the cigar-smoking, back-room business of national politics — stood up and spoke their minds firmly on only one issue: They were more fervently against the sale of alcoholic beverages than were men.

Today, the difference between the way men and women think about national issues is no longer a source of humor. It is serious political business, especially for the Republican Party and President Reagan.

By a factor of 10 to 15 percentage points, women are increasingly opposing President Reagan and his policies in favor of the Democrats. And this "gender gap" may make a dramatic difference in next week's mid-term elections.

"We're seeing it, and we're seeing it almost everywhere," said Ann Lewis, political director of the Democratic National Committee. "In the close races, the 'gender gap' may well make the difference."

Similarly, Republican pollster Robert Teeter said in an interview that 1982 may be the year in which women swing elections, especially at the local and state levels.

Republican Sen. Bob Packwood of Oregon, chairman of the Republican Senatorial Campaign Committee, also said recently that a potential "time bomb" for Republicans is the young woman voter — the female "yuppie," as Chicago pollsters refer to "young urban professional" in their town.

Young women, especially single women, tend to show increasing independence from their male counterparts, with the women leaning to the Democrats and the men to the Republicans.

Faced with this phenomenon, which started appearing in polls about six years ago, political scientists, candidates and women themselves have been trying to figure out what the political gap between men and women actually means. Some see it as a political coming-of-age for women who got the right to vote in 1920.

"In the past, women felt that if they had differences with men, they (the women) were wrong," said Prof. Carol Gilligan, a Harvard psychologist whose book, "In a Different Voice," is required reading for political pollsters this season.

"Women tend to think about moral problems in terms of peoples' lives not in terms of abstractions, ideas or rhetoric," she says. "In the past, that was considered a lower form of thinking; but now the minute you visualize human details, it becomes harder for men to espouse policies that are blind to them. When you talk about 10.1 percent unemployment, women see a family with no food on the table. That's the difference."

This tendency to begin thinking independently may be particularly strong among women who head households with no men — singles, divorcees and widows, for example — says Los Angeles Times Pollster I.A. Lewis.

In California, for example, a recent Times poll showed that, among non-married women, 12 percentage points more planned to vote for Democratic gubernatorial candidate Tom Bradley than did men, and 11 percentage points more said they preferred Democrat Edmund G. Brown Jr. to his Republican opponent, Pete Wilson, for the U.S. Senate. The Times poll showed that, statewide, males and females favored Bradley by 7 percentage points and Wilson by 5 percentage points.

Perhaps the strongest difference between men and women politically in recent years has been on war and violence — issues that women tend to visualize as catastrophes that could happen to their own families. Men, by contrast, tend to think of a military build-up as a way to deter a war.

"Since the late 1970s and 1980 presidential elections, we have seen women clearly shying away from war and violence. They saw Reagan as on the wrong side of this issue. Rather than preventing war by a strong defense, they saw Reagan as provoking war," said Tom Smith, senior study director at the University of Chicago's National Opinion Research Center.

Smith said women back the anti-nuclear "freeze" movement more strongly than men this year — an issue that appears on several state ballots and has become important in a few close races.

But, oddly, pollsters said women and men do not differ greatly on how they think about abortion, the Equal Rights Amendment, day care and other issues believed to influence the women's vote.

But some political experts believe that President Reagan's efforts to defeat the equal rights amendment have roused women voters who previously seemed to have no interest in the issue.

"I think President Reagan comes off as a male chauvinist, I'm sorry to say," said Jonnye Clark, a Republican voter in Doylestown, Pa. near Philadelphia. "His policies have hurt...people I know."

However, Clark, like many of her Republican friends, has decided that the way to deal with her unhappiness with the Republican Party at the top is to do her campaigning at home. She is working for a local Republican running for the state legislature "because he is not afraid to deal with issues women are interested in, like education and pollution."

Such views have sent political shivers through the White House, where President Reagan recently set up a coordinating council on women's issues, headed by Elizabeth Dole, assistant to the president and wife of Sen. Robert J. Dole, R-Kan.

"With the tidal wave of women coming into the work force — some for economic reasons, some for a career — plus the change in the types of jobs, we have a totally different picture that's been evolving over the last 20 years. I call it a quiet revolution, and I think any president facing all these changes would have problems," Dole said.

Campaign aide may be investigated

Hearst Feature Service

WASHINGTON — The Small Business Administration has referred a complaint about a former campaign aide to GOP Rep. Margaret Heckler to the Justice Department for investigation.

The former aide, James Angevine, had regularly been on the Heckler payroll during previous campaigns. This year, however, Angevine is the regional SBA administrator for the northeast and is prohibited by law from campaign work.

Published reports in Boston have questioned the payment of more than $17,000 in Heckler campaign fees to Angevine's wife Virginia, charging that she was only fronting for him.

The Justice Department's special ethical affairs investigative unit has taken jurisdiction in the complaint, the SBA said, in a reply to Rep. John LaFalce, D-N.Y., chairman of the House Small Business Oversight Committee who had asked for an investigation.

Asked about the referral, Heckler said she "wasn't aware of that, but I'm sure Virginia's research will stand up."

She said Virginia Angevine as well as Gerry Lange had spent "months and months" of research into the state legislative record of her opponent, Democratic Rep. Barney Frank, "and that has been very expensive."

Controversy over church ends in deaths

SIERRA VISTA, Ariz. (AP) — Three people, including two members of a controversial sect, were killed and four people — two of them sheriff's deputies — were injured Saturday in a hail of gunfire, authorities said.

The shootings came a day after a confrontation between deputies and members of the all-black Christ Miracle Healing Center and Church, which has been at the center of community tension and previous encounters with authorities.

Two members of the sect were killed, said Dale Decker, administrator of the Sierra Vista Community Hospital in this southeastern Arizona community.

The state Department of Public Safety said a third person, not a law enforcement officer, also was killed, but it was not immediately known if that person was a member of the sect.

Decker had said two church members and two Cochise County sheriff's deputies were being treated for gunshot wounds. A third deputy, a female sergeant, suffered a bruised shoulder when she was struck with a pipe, he said.

"We don't have any of the details at this point," said DPS duty Officer Bert Cheney. "All I can do is confirm that two officers were shot and two were assaulted and that three citizens are dead."

The chief DPS spokesman, Sgt. Allen Schmidt, said he and other officials were trying to piece together details of what happened.

"It's going to take a long time," Schmidt said. "We certainly don't want to make any mistakes on this one."

One of the injured deputies, Larry Devers, said he and another officer were sitting in the back of a vehicle when a shotgun was fired through a window.

Devers said he and the other officer were hit by shotgun pellets and flying glass.

"It hit me from nowhere," Devers said.

Reporters said the highway through Miracle Valley, a community of about 500 people just north of the Mexican border, was blocked by DPS officers in riot gear and carrying shotguns.

A dispatcher at the sheriff's office in Bisbee, the old copper mining town about 15 miles to the east, declined to comment and said no one in authority was available to talk by telephone.

"We're still in emergency conditions," the dispatcher said.

Tensions have periodically flared in Miracle Valley, about 20 miles south-southwest of Tombstone, between members of the church and other residents.

On Friday, witnesses said tempers flared when two deputies tried to arrest a church member on an outstanding traffic warrant. They said more than 100 church members, many carrying sticks and bats, surrounded the deputies, who left without making any arrests.

Sheriff's officials were unavailable for comment Friday and Saturday on that incident.

In September 1981, one church member was killed and three others were injured when an explosive device carried by the victim exploded in his lap as he and the others drove in a van to Sierra Vista, where another church member was jailed, authorities said.

Investigation into that blast was continuing.

Following that blast, the leader of the church, the Rev. Frances Thomas, contended the bomb was planted inside the van by "white radicals."

Vistors think memorial appropriate

WASHINGTON (AP) — The grass sod is freshly laid and so a red snowfence keeps visitors away from the new monument honoring those who served in Vietnam. But still they come as close as they can, with cameras and binoculars, curiosity and memories.

In three weeks, visitors will be here by the thousands, for the dedication.

On these sunny autumn days, they arrive in twos and threes, and stare from a hundred yards away at the two black granite walls that bear 57,939 names.

Investment adviser Harris Kempner Jr. and his wife, Peaches, of Galveston, Texas, here on business, stood against the snowfence Friday afternoon.

Kempner's brother, Sandy, a Marine second lieutenant, died in the war, at Chu Lai. He died early in America's involvement — on Nov. 11, 1966. This Veteran's Day will mark the 16th anniversary.

Harris Kempner likes what he sees.

"It gives a sense of these people being at rest, at last," he says. "I get a feeling of healing. I think you are going to find that this is one of the most attended monuments in the city."

Kempner is well aware of the arguments of some veterans that the monument honors only those who died, and not those who fought.

The heroic, larger-than-life statue and flag those veterans wanted will be built, but off to the side, in a grove of trees, closer to the Lincoln Memorial.

Now that it can be seen, and is no longer just an artistic concept, the Vietnam memorial is starkly dramatic to one permitted inside the snowfence, allowed to walk down the sloping path in front.

Then the visitor descends towards the center, and the names rise knee high, waist high, shoulder high, above the head — 10 feet high where the walls meet. A wall of names.

Names from the melting pot: Bobby Lee Wheeler, Algernon P. Kaakimaka Jr., Michael Cutri, Dean C. Spencer III, Steve O. Nussbaumer, Eliezer Ortiz, Jesus Gutierrez Escobar, Richard J. Johnson, Raymond A. D'Angelo, Frederick J. Krupinski.

At the center the names merge — those from the start of America's involvement, in 1959, meet those from the end, 1975.

Passon was a draftee, with the 1st Cavalry.

Another visitor, Andy Bailey, 23, a computer programmer from suburban Arlington, Va., stands beside the fence with Sue Neher of Chevy Chase, Md., a computer programmer at the State Department.

Bailey reads a political message on these walls.

"The memorial is very stark, and gives a reminder how black and ugly war is," he says.

Miss Neher says, "I know the veterans are upset, but I think families — they'll come here and it will mean something to them. It will be something."

"I think it is fine," he says. "There is no denigrating political symbol about it at all. It is perfectly suitable."

He reaches into his memory for appropriate words from Lincoln's Gettysburg Address, and in this grassy place, he slowly recites them: "That from these honored dead we take increased devotion to that cause for which they gave the last full measure of devotion."

Two people hospitalized for possible poisoning

LOS ANGELES (AP) — At least two football fans remained hospitalized Saturday after 200 people reported stomach cramps and other possible symptoms of poisoning at a high school football game.

Monterey Park Police Lt. Jim Strait said Saturday that preliminary information from county health officials indicated the illness may have been caused by copper sulfate contamination in a soft drink dispenser.

However, Dr. Shirley Fannin, associate director in charge of communicable disease control for Los Angeles County, said, "We do not have the facts assembled.

And she said "hysteria" over nationwide reports of contaminated products could be to blame for at least some of the complaints.

EIGHT HOSPITALS checked people who complained of illness after consuming food and drink purchased Friday night from a stand on the north side of East Los Angeles College stadium in Monterey Park, where Franklin and Garfield high schools were playing football.

The sufferers reported a quick onset of symptoms, including nausea, numbness, dizziness and tingling in the extremities, but in most cases the symptoms disappeared within a half-hour, Ms. Fannin said.

Two people remained remained hospitalized in stable condition Saturday morning at Los Angeles County-USC Medical Center, which coordinated emergency efforts, said spokesman Mark Van Slyke said. He said their identities were not being released.

Ms. Fannin characterized reports blaming copper sulfate — a metal salt once used medicinally in small quantities to induce vomiting — as "speculation based on incomplete facts."

"Some people drank soft drinks from the same machines and did not become ill," she said. "We won't be able to rule anything out, though, until we can look at the set-up where it was dispensed and the drinks themselves."

BUT THE LACK of vomiting in at least some of the victims "doesn't fit with copper sulfate," she said, since even in small quantities the substance causes vomiting "a very short time after ingestion."

The symptoms reported "could even have come from hysteria," she said.

"One could certainly visualize this as a few people getting sick and everyone else panicking — particularly in light of what's been happening with the poisonings," she said.

"But that's just another conjecture," she said. "Until we get the facts, we won't know."

About 7,000 people attended the game, but the only reports of poisonings occurred on the stadium's north side, which was served by a single concession stand, said nursing supervisor Sheridan Smith of the hospital.

SINCE THE deaths of seven Chicago-area residents who ingested Extra-Strength Tylenol capsules laced with cyanide, complaints of poisoned products have surfaced across the nation.

In Dallas, officials were testing samples of nasal spray after a 30-year-old man used a bottle of Vick's Long Acting Nasal Spray apparently contaminated with sulfuric acid, authorities said.

In Clearwater, Fla., a tourist suffered minor mouth burns after using a bottle of Lavoris mouthwash, and four bottles of the mouthwash were found to contain muriatic acid.

Officials said both appeared to be isolated incidents.

Southern California has had a recurrent problem with contaminated eye and nose drops during the past year. Some pharmacies and supermarkets have removed such products from open shelves.

Authors write step-by-step shuttle operations guide

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — Kerry Joels, Oklahoma State University graduate and author, is striving to dispel the theory that you have to be an egghead to understand the workings of America's first reuseable spacecraft.

What you have to do, says Joels, is write a readable operator's manual.

And that — with the help of an associate — he did, in time for the space shuttle's fifth (and first operational) flight.

"The Space Shuttle Operator's Manual," released by Ballantine Books about two weeks ago, already is in its second printing.

Joels and his publisher believe the rebirth of American faith in the space program will make the book an instant hit.

The book is a step-by-step operations guide which Joels and associate Gregory Kennedy put together in about eight months after years of time-consuming research.

Both men are curators at the Smithsonian Institution's National Air and Space Museum in Washington, but their book has no official connection with the museum.

Joels received his doctorate degree from Oklahoma State conducting research for NASA. He was in Oklahoma this week on promotion tour and to visit family in Midwest City.

The idea for the operator's manual came to Joels several years ago, he said, while he was studying at NASA's Ames (Calif.) Research Center.

It occurred to him that despite the fascination space travel holds, "People see the shuttle go up and come down but they never really understand how it works."

Last year, Kennedy was finishing preparations for the Smithsonian's permanent shuttle exhibit when Joels came to him with his idea.

To produce their manual, Joels and Kennedy after regular working hours had to wade through NASA's own training and flight manuals, gleaning information for the project.

The authors obtained checklists for the launch and landing of the second shuttle flight — documents that more than tripled their final shuttle manual.

"Unlike past space programs, the shuttle era has demonstrated its remarkable usefulness to the people who are footing the bill," he said. "Right now, taxpayers are in support of the program by almost 2 to 1. This, I believe, is due in part to the sudden realization that we are getting whipped all over the place by technological advancements in other countries."

More than 400,000 people gathered at the remote White Sands Missile Range in southern New Mexico to watch the shuttle's third landing last March, and that was an indication to Joels that Americans believe in the program.

DeLorean toppled by dream turned nightmare

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The plot is classic tragedy in the style of Shakespeare — or Harold Robbins. The tragic hero, a self-made titan of industry with a penchant for fast cars and beautiful women, topples from a great height, flawed by his own overreaching ambitions.

Such was the fall of John Zachary De Lorean, arrested last week on charges of setting up a $24 million drug distribution deal to save his bankrupt car company.

After a lifetime of making his dreams come true, the scene which ended De Lorean's pursuit of his ultimate dream — a swift supercar bearing his name — must have seemed a nightmare.

In a stylish room at Los Angeles' newest hotel, the sleek, impeccably tailored, 57-year-old auto industry genius, held in his hands a package and declared, according to government agents, "This is better than gold. This came just in the nick of time."

The package contained cocaine, according to FBI agents. Within minutes De Lorean was in handcuffs. Within hours, he was in prison, charged with conspiracy to distribute cocaine and possession with intent to distribute the drug.

AP Laserphoto

Christina Ferrare, wife of John DeLorean, leaves Terminal Island Federal prison in Los Angeles after a short visit with her husband. DeLorean is being held in connection with violating federal drug laws.

THE AGENTS would say later they had videotaped this and other meetings in plush hotel rooms with De Lorean, whom they portrayed as a desperate man seeking a fast route to big money which might save his beleaguered company.

In recent months he had criss-crossed the globe seeking cash for his Northern Ireland car plant. It had been in receivership since February and, on the very day De Lorean was arrested, the British government had announced it would close down the plant that had produced the stainless-steel-skinned, gull-winged De Lorean.

But De Lorean had vowed to the last moment he would find the money to keep the plant open.

De Lorean "discussed the importation and distribution of heroin from Thailand and cocaine from South America as a means of generating large amounts of capital to be put into De Lorean Motor Company," said FBI Agent Jerry G. West in a sworn affidavit presented in court.

On Sept. 28, West said, De Lorean agreed to surrender a 50 per cent share of his company if he could generate $60 million in the cocaine deal. The one-half share, the affidavit said, was offered to an undercover agent.

Cocaine, the so-called "rich man's drug" which has been voguish in high society for the past decade, is said to have lured unlikely Americans into smuggling and distribution because of its glamorous image and astronomical profit potential.

Housewives, businessmen and even children have been used as "mules" to carry the drug from South American countries into the United States, authorities say.

"PEOPLE HEAR that you can get a kilo in South America for $15,000 to $20,000 and sell it here for $60,000," said Drug Enforcement Administration agent Charles Bullock. "Right there, they've made a quick $40,000 with only a few expenses."

The exact genesis of De Lorean's alleged interest in a drug deal was kept secret by federal prosecutors who apparently plan to reveal more details at De Lorean's trial.

The scheme, authorities indicated, might have worked had De Lorean not been dealing with a man well known to the FBI which had him under surveillance as a possible drug trafficker for about two years.

William Morgan Hetrick, 50, the balding, mild-mannered operator of a small aviation company in the Mojave desert, was arrested along with De Lorean and an alleged Hetrick associate, Stephen Arrington, 34, and charged with conspiracy to distribute cocaine and possession.

Roland Hughes, an agent with the Drug Enforcement Administration in Los Angeles, said Hetrick was under investigation as allegedly being one of the largest cocaine dealers in this part of the country.

Hetrick was already under surveillance, authorities indicated, when De Lorean, an unexpected figure in the probe, showed up. That was about five months ago, they said.

BY SEPTEMBER, the undercover FBI agents, who had palmed themselves off as drug dealers, were able to set up secret videotape machinery and record conversations between De Lorean, Hetrick and others in hotel rooms in Washington, D.C., and Los Angeles, their affidavits said.

The videotapes, a now familiar element in FBI "sting" operations, are expected to be the key government evidence at De Lorean's trial.

By the time De Lorean was arraigned on the charges, his arrest had been bannered in headlines across the world — a very different kind of publicity than he had so adeptly engineered during his glittering career.

"John is well versed in public relations. That's really one of his strongest points," said his old friend and attorney, Bernard Minsky, who represented him briefly then stepped out to let a veteran criminal lawyer take over.

De Lorean's defense lawyer, Joseph Ball, said he would plead innocent.

He had come a long way to this unlikely stop on a route that many say should have led a lot higher than he chose to climb. He was distracted, some say, by a dream — a flashy, futuristic sports car which would live forever.

THE DE LOREAN odyssey began in Detroit, home of America's auto industry. The oldest of four sons of an automobile foundry worker, De Lorean was a child of divorce and lived alternately with each parent.

He won a music scholarship to the Laurence Institute of Technology and played jazz saxophone in clubs. But his true interest was engineering and he went on to earn masters' degrees in industrial engineering and business administration.

When he was 24, General Motors hired De Lorean as a staff engineer. He was ambitious and imaginative, and his new ideas led him steadily up the corporate ladder.

He was one of the men responsible for the shift to smaller cars in Detroit in the 1960s and turned GM's Pontiac division around with engineering changes that led to quadrupled sales. He reorganized Chevrolet, pulling it out of a seven-year slump.

At 41, De Lorean, the "boy wonder" of the auto industry, had become the youngest GM division manager ever. Soon, he was a vice president, and industry watchers said he was being groomed for the presidency.

But there were problems. His longish hair and trendy clothes were not cut in the mold of GM's staid corporate image. Other company men drove the company product. De Lorean drove exotic Lamborghinis and Maseratis.

DETROIT'S CONSERVATIVE society was stunned in 1969 when De Lorean divorced his wife of 15 years to marry 20-year-old Kelly Harmon, daughter of former football star Tom Harmon and 24 years his junior.

Between marriages, his private life made the gossip columns as he squired about such beauties as Ursula Andress, Nancy Sinatra and Candice Bergen.

After his marriage to Miss Harmon ended, De Lorean married an even younger woman, internationally known fashion model Christina Ferrare, now 29. They have a son, Zachary, and a daughter, Kathryn.

But the biggest shock to Detroit was De Lorean's decision in 1973 to toss over his $650,000-a-year vice presidency at GM and leave to show them "how to build cars."

Amid industry skepticism, he launched his De Lorean Motor Company in 1974 and put together about $175 million in capital from such diverse sources as Wall Street investment houses and entertainer Johnny Carson.

He received backing from the British government to establish his assembly plant in Northern Ireland and predicted it would ease political tensions and contribute to the economy of that nation.

DE LOREAN'S dream car, a sporty two-seater, became a reality. He produced a few thousand of the cars before financial problems engulfed him last February and the company went into receivership. Analysts said the recession and a soft auto sales market contributed to the disaster.

But De Lorean, ever the dreamer, spoke of raising enough millions to pull the company out. He whizzed about the world aboard the supersonic Concorde, meeting with potential investors, staying in the best hotels and maintaining the millionaire's image he had cultivated so carefully.

In an interview with the British Broadcasting Company the day before his arrest, De Lorean said, "We're planning to keep this company alive no matter what happens. And we have the funding in place. It's in the bank."

Asked where the money had come from, De Lorean said, "I'm not allowed to say that until the transaction is concluded."

In the wake of his arrest, Ben Wilson, who represents the De Lorean creditors in Northern Ireland, expressed some sympathy for De Lorean's plight.

"The man must have been driven to distraction," he said, "to try and raise the money in order to re-create his dream."

No fingerprints discovered on cyanide-filled Tylenol bottle

CHICAGO (AP) — Authorities were unable to find fingerprints on a bottle of cyanide-filled Tylenol capsules discovered last week, a police spokesman says.

The examination was concluded Friday without yielding clues sought in the poisoning deaths of seven Chicago-area residents, Lt. August Locallo said Saturday.

Locallo said an FBI spokesman disclosed the results of the tests Friday night at a briefing for the agencies involved in the investigation.

The cyanide was discovered Thursday during tests of bottles returned to a grocery store on the city's North Side, according to police Superintendent Richard L. Brzeczek.

It was the seventh bottle of poisoned capsules found. Five were connected with the seven deaths, and one was found among unsold bottles removed from a store's shelves in the recall following the deaths.

Police are attempting to determine who returned the unused, 50-capsule bottle to learn where it was purchased, Locallo said, and six people still are being sought in the investigation.

Police said the lot number on the bottle — MC2880 — was unlike any others that were being sold at the grocery store, a Dominick's Finer Foods about a half block from a Walgreen's Drug store where one of the victims bought a bottle. The number did match the number on two bottles that claimed four victims, investigators said.

Illinois Attorney General Tyrone Fahner said authorities have examined 70 percent of more than 200,000 bottles of Extra-Strength Tylenol that were returned by consumers and taken off store shelves.

Sales of the medication, the best selling over-the-counter pain reliever before the deaths, were banned in Chicago on Oct. 2 by Mayor Jane Byrne.

McNeil Consumer Products Co., the maker of Tylenol, announced Friday that it will return the non-aspirin painkiller to the market in "tamper-resistant containers" and run 60-second commercials on the three major television networks, beginning Sunday, to discuss the poisonings.

"We want you to continue to trust Tylenol," Dr. Thomas N. Gates, medical director for McNeil, will say in the messages.

Southern Lebanon rebuilding in fear

TYRE, Lebanon (AP) — Southern Lebanon is rebuilding from the Israeli invasion, but the mortar is mixed with fears of nighttime arrests, repression by shadowy agents and new bloodshed.

On the highway that leads from Beirut to Tyre, laborers are fixing houses damaged in the fighting, brickmakers are working for the first time in months and farmers are plowing fields.

Merchant brothers Nasib and Adib Basmas said many businessmen had money to rebuild but hoped to be compensated later for damage done when the Israelis poured across the border June 6 to rout the Palestine Liberation Organization.

They pointed out buildings near Tyre's port, and Nasib said of each one, "look, already repaired."

But when Adib was asked whether it was really wise to rebuild, or if another onslaught of fighting would come, he shrugged and replied: "We hope. We only hope."

In the Palestinian refugee area of El-Bass, just northeast of Tyre, people told of their fear of the Israeli army while at the same time they still asked for the Israelis' protection.

They shiver with greater fear at the militia of right-wing Lebanese Christian leader Maj. Saad Haddad, whose men have moved north from their border enclave following the invasion by their Israeli allies.

In Haddad's six-mile strip along the Israeli border, whole areas are not only devastated but deserted, their concrete buildings riddled with shell holes.

In the Palestinian refugee camp of Ain el-Helweh, outside Sidon to the north of Tyre, Israeli shelling reduced homes to piles of concrete rubble and twisted metal reinforcing rods.

Women, children and old men from Ain el-Helweh and other camps go each day to an Israeli army office in Sidon where the Israelis are releasing some of the men hed in Ansar prison to the south.

The Israelis still hold about 7,000 suspected PLO members or collaborators. Hundreds of Palestinians and Lebanese show up each day in Sidon to see if their relatives will be freed.

At Ain el-Helweh and El-Bass, people say the Israelis still come at night to make arrests. Lt. Col. Aaron Gonen, an Israeli army spokesman at Sidon, said suspected members of PLO groups were still being arrested but not in the camps.

Before the invasion, southern Lebanon's population was estimated at 600,000 to 800,000, with 50,000 in Sidon and 25,000 in Tyre.

Residents and reporters estimated that more than 25 percent of both Sidon and Tyre was wrecked in the savage Israeli bombing and shelling. The Israelis and Haddad's forces, together and separately, now maintain checkpoints in the south.

An old Palestinian man walks past piles of rubble that were once homes in the Ain El-Helweh refugee camp outside Sidon, Lebanon. The homes were destroyed during the Israeli invasion. With winter approaching, bringing with it steady rains, many of the refugees have no shelter. The refugees are in an angry mood and recently tore down a tent erected by the U.N. to house them. Residents do not know if the Lebanese government will allow them to rebuild their homes.

Gemayel says he wants to tour Arab countries

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Declaring his tour of three Western nations resulted in better understanding and support for Lebanon, President Amin Gemayel announced Saturday that he intends to tour Arab countries next.

"It is too early yet to assess the situation in the Middle East conflict, especially as it concerns Lebanon, pending talks I plan to hold in an early trip to some Arab countries that are directly involved in the Lebanese problem," Gemayel said, addressing his Cabinet.

Gemayel presided over an emergency session of the Cabinet, convened to assess the Lebanese president's talks in the United States, France and Italy. His address was televised.

Gemayel returned to Beirut Friday from a six-day trip to countries that contributed to the 4,000-man peacekeeping force helping re-establish state authority in Lebanon following six years of Moslem-Christian civil strife and the Israeli invasion June 6 to rout the Palestine Liberatino Organization.

"I wished at the start of my presidential term to carry the worries and hopes of Lebanon to the world and try to give an accurate portrayal of our case," Gemayel said. "I return to you today confident that the world has become more understanding of our situation and more supportive of our problems."

He said Lebanon now enjoyed "among its friends and on the international level assets commensurate with its needs and aspirations."

Gemayel, who took office Sept. 23, did not say which Arab countries he would visit or when, but Kuwait, Saudi Arabia, Jordan and Syria are expected to be included in his itinerary. He already has received a special invitation from King Hussein to visit Jordan, while Saudi Arabia and Kuwait are expected to be the main financers of Lebanon's reconstruction program.

In his televised speech, the president also vowed to retain Lebanon's "irrevocable independent Arab role within its geographical context," reiterating earlier pledges to strengthen Lebanon's ties with the Arab world and suggesting he would not conclude a peace pact with Israel.

During his trip, Gemayel emphasized his determination to secure withdrawal of all foreign armies from Lebanon and requested the expansion of the multinational force to 30,000 to support the Lebanese army in asserting its influence over the country.

The independent newspaper An-Nahar, whose publisher Ghassan Tueni served as an adviser to Gemayel during his trip, said initial plans envisaged a partial withdrawal of Israeli troops.

Phalange leader says he wants justice

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — The commander of the Christian Phalange militia, whose men have been blamed by Israeli officials for last month's Palestinian massacres, said Saturday he is anxious to see justice meted out to the killers.

"This thing should not be forgotten. Whoever is found guilty of this terrible massacre should be given justice," said Fady Frem, the 29-year-old commander-in-chief of the Lebanese Forces militia, which is dominated by the militant Christian Phalange Party.

The Lebanese Forces repeatedly denied charges by massacre survivors and by Israeli Defense Minister Ariel Sharon that some of its leaders and militiamen planned and carried out the Sept. 16-18 massacre of hundreds of men, women and children in Beirut's Sabra and Chatilla Palestinian refugee camps.

Some foreign press accounts have speculated that renegade elements of the militia perpetrated the massacres without the knowledge of the Phalangist hierarchy, while other accounts have linked senior members of the Lebanese Forces to the killings.

Frem, who last month succeeded assassinated President-elect Bashir Gemayel as head of Lebanon's most powerful private army, said in an interview with The Associated Press that the Lebanese Forces has conducted its own investigation of the massacre.

But he refused to divulge any details of the findings.

"We had some inquiries and all results have been given to the officials in charge of the inquiry," said Frem, who holds a Master's degree in industrial engineering from Texas A&M University.

He was referring to the Lebanese government investigation headed by military prosecutor Assad Germanos. Germanos, in a recent news conference and subsequent interview, said his proceedings were "secret" and nothing would be released until the investigation is finished.

The massacres, which occurred while Israeli troops were posted outside the camps, prompted an outcry in Israel where Prime Minister Menachem Begin's government is now conducting its own inquiry. The Israelis invaded Lebanon June 6 to rout Palestinian guerrillas.

The Beirut inquiry is making little headway, according to a Lebanese official close to the investigation who declined to be named. "How can we?" He asked. "We can't bring Begin or Sharon here for questioning."

Frem, a short, balding man whose mild-mannered appearance belies his 13 years as a militiaman, was asked about a report Sharon read to the Israeli Parliament which said Israeli chief of staff Lt. Gen. Raphael Eytan had met Phalangist commanders at their headquarters on the eve of the massacre to discuss the Phalangists' entry into Sabra and Chatilla to round up any remaining "terrorists."

"It's completely wrong," Frem said of the Israeli report. "There is no truth about it."

Seated at the end of a long conference table and flanked by two aides in his office next to the Beirut seaport, Frem denied that either he or any of his commanders had conferred with the Israelis on any such mopping up operation in west Beirut, former stronghold of the Palestine Liberation Organization.

Frem also refused to offer any evidence or opinion of who was responsible for the massacres. "All the details we have have been given to the committee," he said, referring to the investigation headed by Germanos. "We don't want to start saying things on our own."

He rejected published reports that the Lebanese Forces intelligence chief, Elie Hobeika, planned and led the entry into the camps where the massacres took place. "Hobeika was with me at the time," Frem said. During the period in question, Frem said, he was in Bikfaya where relatives and friends had gathered after Bashir Gemayel's assassination Sept. 14.

Chinese defecting to West

PEKING (AP) — An rash of defections by prominent Chinese is causing acute embarrassment and grave concern to the Peking leadership and could threaten exchange programs with the West, well-informed Chinese sources say.

No reduction in delegations or student exchanges has been made, but the Communist government is tightening restrictions on who may go abroad, said the sources, who asked to remain unidentified.

The most recent defector was a Chinese air force pilot who flew his MiG-19 to Seoul Oct. 16. The South Korean government said Saturday he will be allowed to travel to Taiwan soon to obtain asylum from the Nationalist Chinese.

LAST MONTH, the grandson of writer Lu Xun, who criticized the Nationalists, defected to Taiwan and married his sweetheart there with great fanfare.

China's woman tennis star, 19-year-old Hu Na, played a tournament in San Francisco in July and now seeks political asylum. She has a U.S. work permit and Taiwan's Tennis Association has said she would be welcome.

The rash of defections poses a thorny problem at a time when the first wave of Chinese professionals trained in the United States is returning to the mainland. About 8,000 Chinese — including the son of top leader Deng Xiaoping — are studying in the United States.

If these young professionals — needed for China's modernization — choose to remain abroad or go to Taiwan — the effects would be extremely serious, say Chinese and foreign observers.

CHINA publicly has called for Miss Hu's return and a senior government official said earlier this month that exchanges with the United States would be adversely affected if she stays.

China has not commented on the defection of 25-year old pilot Wu Yungkeng, except to say he lost contact with airforce trackers while on a training flight.

China also has not commented on the defection of Lu Xun's grandson, 29-year-old Zhou Linfei. Zhou had been studying television production in Tokyo at state expense since 1979 and was due to return to Peking.

HIS DEFECTION was especially embarrassing since the Communist regime hails Lu Xun as one of China's greatest revolutionary writers and reformers.

"When Lu Xun's grandson defected to Taiwan, our senior leaders were really furious," said a Chinese source who was a close friend of Zhou's. "It was very bad because Lu Xun is so respected here for his courage in criticizing the Nationalist Kuomintang." Kuomintang is the Chinese term for Nationalist Party.

"I don't know why he defected," said the friend. "His life here was good." He said Zhou worked as a photographer for the Peking military garrison. He enjoyed privileges often reserved for foreigners and frequently went to the foreigners' disco at the Minzu Hotel.

"I AM very worried about this state of affairs," said one Chinese observer. "It will be increasingly difficult to leave, although official delegations going abroad have not been reduced."

Chinese who want to travel abroad now are screened much more closely. A new regulation requires every Chinese applying for a passport to first obtain clearance from the local public security bureau or police, Chinese sources report. That is to ensure they are good risks and make them careful of their behavior and contacts with foreigners, they say.

Soviet economy falters

MOSCOW (AP) — The lopsided Soviet economy, plagued by food shortages, produced 2 percent less meat but 88 percent more industrial robots during the first nine months of 1982, Kremlin figures published Saturday showed.

Steel output also fell, by 1 percent.

Industrial production rose 2.7 percent from January to September, down from 3.3 percent in the same period in 1981, Central Statistics Board figures published by the Communist Party newspaper Pravda showed.

The new figures reflected persistent stagnation in the Soviet economy, which climbed at an annual rate of 8.4 percent from 1966 to 1970, and advanced by 7.5 percent yearly from 1971 to 1975.

The rate of Soviet industrial growth has fallen every year since the 5.7 percent increase in 1977. It was 3.4 percent during 1981, short of the 4.1 percent increase forecast by Kremlin planners.

The figures put meat production down 2 percent, from 6.8 million tons to 6.7 million tons, apparently due to the fourth consecutive poor Soviet grain harvest.

The fastest growing sector in the Soviet economy continued to be manufacture of industrial robots, up 88 percent from the first nine months of 1981, to 3,600 units. The Soviets use the efficient robots for labor such as assembly-line production in auto plants and electronics factories.

For Soviet leaders, the nine-month 1982 statistics mean they have not yet solved what President Leonid I. Brezhnev one year ago called the nation's gravest difficulty — providing enough food.

Chastising the nation's economic planners in a Kremlin speech on Nov. 16, 1981, Brezhnev said, "The food problem is, economically and politically, the central problem."

The official Soviet media have continued to express concern about food. Tass said this week that the Supreme Soviet, the Parliament, would meet next month and consider ways to "liquidate shortcomings" in agriculture.

Diplomat upset over 'bad taste'

WASHINGTON (AP) — A ranking Soviet diplomat, accusing President Reagan of "very bad taste" and a possible insult in a recent comment about the Soviet Union, says the United States is pursuing a dangerous policy that has the superpowers in confrontation.

Valentin Berezhkov, first secretary of the Soviet embassy here, reacted with exceptional heat to the president's comment that the Soviets were buying American grain "because they just aren't smart." He said Reagan had resorted to "utterances which usually in diplomatic history have been used on the verge of breaking relations."

The Soviet diplomat said his government did not want to worsen relations with the United States and "I hope that nobody is really preparing to break relations with the Soviet Union."

When asked whether he thought such language on the part of the president was "dangerous," Berezhkov replied, "I think it can be dangerous if it is repeated all the time."

Berezhkov said the United States was striving to resume the role of "a world policeman" by spreading bases and troops around the world.

As a world power, the United States does not need to use "this kind of insulting words," Berezhkov added.

Three die in mishap on bridge

NUEVO LAREDO, Mexico (AP) — Three people were killed Saturday when an 18-wheel truck plunged about 80 feet from the International Bridge separating the United States and Mexico.

Two women — San Juana Balderas, 53, and Rosa Casarez, 51, both of Nuevo Laredo — were killed when the truck swept them from the bridge as they walked from the United States to Mexico. The truck's driver, who was not identified immediately, also was killed.

The truck was traveling south on the Mexican half of the bridge at 11:50 a.m. when it slammed into the rear of a Thunderbird, swerved and went over the metal railing into the Rio Grande riverbed, authorities said.

The Thunderbird's occupants — Hector Leal of Houston, his wife and four children — were not injured.

The truck, which belonged to Villasana Co. and Forwarding Agency of Laredo and carried 790 cases of eggs, came to a rest upside down and partially in the Rio Grande, crushing the driver in the cab.

The four-lane bridge is the older of two bridges that span Laredo, Texas, and Nuevo Laredo. But authorities said the accident was the first since the bridge opened in 1956 that a vehicle plunged off the bridge.

The Mexican army closed the bridge and about 20 blocks of Nuevo Laredo's main thoroughfare. Traffic was snarled in both cities.

The newer bridge, opened in 1976, remained open but has no passageway for pedestrians.

Copley News Service

WASHINGTON — Ambassador Yoshio Okawara of Japan Friday hinted strongly that his country would for the third year in a row voluntarily retrict its exports of automobiles to the United States.

At a meeting here with reporters, Okawara urged his government to speed a decision, because of the continuing depressed state of American car sales.

"Both the (Japanese) government and industry are well aware of market conditions and the state of the economy as well," he said.

"This fall there has been no surge in demand for new cars (in the United States) and this suggests that 1983 is facing somewhat similar conditions. How soon business will pick up, no one knows."

Japan voluntarily reduced its auto exports to the United States by 1.68 million units in both 1981 and 1982. Actually, the years ran from April 1. Accordingly, a decision on a third year is not due until next March 31.

But the ambassador said, "I think we should look much more closely and much more quickly" and decide on the third year.

He noted that Ambassador William E. Brock, the U.S. Trade Representative for President Reagan, had publicly expressed the hope that Japan would agree to a third year of restricted exports, but said there had been "no official contacts" between the two countries on the matter.

Opinions rude in Japan

TOKYO (AP) — In Japan, where expressing your opinion can be considered rude, nearly 1,000 polls a year seek to find out privately what people think about everything from pets to politicians — and even to guide government policy.

The nation's citizenry are constantly buffeted with results of polls conducted by government, media groups, and about a dozen private survey organizations. Pollsters concur Japan has no counterpart to rival the scale of Gallup or Harris, America's giant independent polling organizations.

"In Japan, people don't like to express their opinions," said Sigeki Nishihira, an opinion poll expert at the government-backed Institute of Statistical Mathematics. "It's a big problem."

"A JAPANESE is more interested in the opinions of his neighbor," he said in a recent interview, "and expressing oneself too clearly is considered strange — even rude." The polls present an opportunity to give opinions without revealing one's identity.

Nishihira said the poll-takers' chore has been complicated by the Japanese language's intrinsic vagueness — "there's intense confusion about what responses of 'yes' and 'no' really mean here."

So Japanese opinion-samplers have developed techniques he said were more complex than interviewing methods used in the United States, often spicing their lengthy questionnaires with "a lot of 'ifs' and 'supposes.'"

Despite these problems, the Japanese continue to churn out polls.

THE MOST recent Institute count shows 902 opinion polls were conducted in 1980 — 523 by local government, 64 by the national government, 160 by media groups and 155 by other institutions. The figures do not include thousands of routine market and consumer surveys conducted by banks, companies and others.

Survey topics are legion.

The Tokyo city government recently probed high school sex and declared 10 percent of the students have had it.

The Prime Minister's Office has recently canvassed opinions on topics including pets, the environment, telephone use, the police, and attitudes of youths toward parents.

IN POLITICS, American and European pollsters often conduct surveys after speeches by government leaders to gauge levels of public support. In Japan, the order is sometimes reversed.

"The Japanese government takes a survey first, then attempts to formulate policy," said Nishihira. "The ministries want to know the thoughts of others first...and the Japanese people think that's very democratic."

These methods have sparked controversy among pollsters. Some media pollsters maintain the government conducts surveys to prop up its policies. Government workers counter with charges that media canvassers launch biased probes to shoot down official policies and criticize leaders.

And in one sign that pollsters are wary of their own public image, the mass-circulation Yomiuri newspaper conducted a poll on polls.

Soviets put base on disputed island

TOKYO (AP) — The Soviet Union opened a submarine base on an island claimed by Japan, increasing Soviet naval capacity in the northwest Pacific, a leading Japanese newspaper reported Saturday.

The Yomiuri Shimbun said conventional attack submarines have already been deployed at the base on Simushir Island in the Kuril chain, 250 miles northeast of Japan's northernmost island of Hokkaido. The Soviets seized the Kuriles from Japan after World War II and have refused Japanese requests to negotiate their return.

It said the officials were concerned because the new base strengthens Soviet military presence in the Kuriles, which already includes submarines capable of delivering nuclear weapons.

Presidents of Egypt, Sudan meet

EL ARISH, Egypt (AP) — The presidents of Egypt and Sudan met in this Sinai Peninsula town Saturday to discuss ways to promote a sense of unity among the youth of the two neighboring nations.

President Hosni Mubarak and Sudanese President Jaafar Nimeiri drove from the airport to the municipal center amid a crowd of several thousand cheering people.

"The road to integration between the two countries is the road of the future so we must depend on the strong arms of the youth," Mubarak said.

Earlier this month the two countries concluded a pact to coordinate their foreign and domestic policies.

Pakistan's Zia arrives in North Korea

TOKYO (AP) — Pakistan President Mohammed Zia ul-Haq arrived Saturday in Pyongyang, North Korea, for a state visit, North Korea's official Korean Central News Agency reported.

North Korean President Kim Il Sung welcomed the visiting head of state, who arrived from China where he had been on an official visit, the agency said in a dispatch monitored in Tokyo.

In an editorial, the agency said Zia's visit "will go a long way towards bringing to a higher stage the friendly and cooperative relations."

Chinese denounce U.S., U.S.S.R.

PEKING (AP) — China's Communist Party newspaper denounced the United States and Soviet Union on Saturday, accusing both of trying to dominate the United Nations.

The Communist Party's official newspaper the Peoples Daily also called for a stronger U.N. response to the Third World and urged the world body to "resist superpower hegemonism."

China, which once reserved the label "hegemonist" for the Soviet Union, now liberally applies it to the United States as China woos the Third World and attempts to steer an independent foreign policy course.

"The two superpowers always want to dominate the United Nations and ignore the demands of the majority of U.N. member nations and resolutions," the newspaper said.

Poles charged with illegal sales

JAKARTA, Indonesia (AP) — Three Polish seamen have been brought to court in the North Sumatra city of Medan on charges of attempting to illegally sell firearms, the official Antara News Agency said Saturday.

Identified only by their initials, ZL, 32; WM, 32, and FA, 28, the three were arrested at Belawan port in August when they were allegedly trying to sell firearms and ammunition to Indonesians, Antara said.

Antara said the defendants told the court Thursday they had bought 8mm caliber pistols for $15 each in West Germany and that an unidentified man at Belawan offered to buy the pistols for $50 each. The defendants were being detained in Medan, Antara said.

Lawyers escaping from Afghanistan

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan (AP) — Many prominent lawyers from the Justice Ministry in Kabul, Afghanistan, are fleeing to Pakistan to escape the Soviet-backed regime, reliable guerrilla sources said Saturday.

Three lawyers who recently crossed the border were identified as Abdus Alam Azimi, director general of the Law Making and Research Institute and former vice chancellor of Kabul University; the institute's deputy director general, Mohammad Musa Ashaari, and an administrative officer, Ghulam Mohammad Sikander.

They were among the most senior men in recent weeks to defect from the Moscow-backed regime in Afghanistan. The Soviets intervened in Afghanistan in 1979 to support the government from Moslem insurgents.

The lawyers reportedly told guerrilla groups in Peshawar, near the Afghan border, that "innocent people" and others are hanged without having commited any crime.

Leftists demand hikes in pay in Mexico City

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Thousands of leftists marched peacefully through the capital Saturday evening demanding emergency pay hikes to compensate for the high cost of living.

The demonstrators marched down the Paseo de la Reforma, the city's main street, chanting slogans like: "Down with the high cost of living! Up with salaries!" Many carried small red flags with the yellow hammer and sickle emblem of the Mexican Unified Socialist Party.

New Irish assembly won't work, say political insiders

By ED BLANCHE
Associated Press Writer

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — The new provincial assembly in Northern Ireland is plagued by the same hostilities that have divided Protestants and Catholics for centuries, and insiders believe it is just a matter of time before Britain's latest political initiative collapses.

An Analysis

British officials say the assembly likely will meet for the first time next month to take up provincial legislation now before the British Parliament. But few political insiders believe the assembly will develop beyond being a watchdog with no power, and eventually will wither away.

The province, where at least 2,226 people have been killed since 1969, will continue to be governed by direct rule from London for the foreseeable future. That will antagonize the Protestants, alienate Catholic moderates and boost the bomb-and-bullet campaign by Irish nationalist guerrillas.

Police have warned that guerrilla groups plan to escalate attacks. Well-informed Catholic sources report that guerrilla hardliners are pressing strongly for action and have recently received smuggled shipments of Soviet-made rockets.

THE ASSEMBLY WAS designed to produce a power-sharing administration that would eventually have limited social and economic powers. But Wednesday's voting produced deadlock, as have previous British attempts to get Protestants and Roman Catholics together.

Britain's Northern Ireland secretary, James Prior, architect of the 78-seat assembly, had hoped the election would encourage moderates to step forward. But the initiative backfired with hardliners on both sides making unexpectedly strong political advances.

Prior acknowledged the election results were a disappointment, but he noted: "Everything in Northern Ireland is a setback unless you expect miracles."

The main Protestant parties won 47 seats — the Official Unionists with 26 and the Rev. Ian Paisley's militant Democratic Unionists with 21.

Sinn Fein, political front for the overwhelmingly Catholic "Provisional" Irish Republican Army, won five seats and narrowly missed taking two more in a major political upset.

Sinn Fein, fighting its first election under its own banner since the "Provos" were formed in 1969, won political respectability by taking 30 percent of the Catholic vote. That demonstrated wider support for the movement than London had expected.

THE SOCIAL Democratic and Labor Party, up to now considered the Catholics' only political voice, took 14 seats. Both the Social Democrats and Sinn Fein refuse to take their assembly seats to protest British policies.

The Alliance Party, the only effective non-sectarian faction, polled 10 seats. But it is the only party committed to power-sharing that will sit in the assembly.

Two small Unionist factions took one seat each.

"No one got anywhere," the Irish Times of Dublin, Ireland's most authoritative daily, said in an editorial Saturday. "The killings and the bombings will go on."

Commenting on Sinn Fein's gains, the paper said Northern Ireland "appears not only to be ungovernable, but now a generation educated in the politics of the street is coming into action at the ballot box to support violence."

Sinn Fein Vice President Gerry Adams, a former guerrilla twice interned by the British, hailed the movement's electoral sweep as "a vote for British withdrawal." Sinn Fein leaders stressed that the Provos' campaign to force the British out of Northern Ireland will go on.

Pope John Paul says transfer, mutation of genes beneficial if used for curing ills

VATICAN CITY (AP) — Pope John Paul II, tempering previous criticism of genetic engineering, said Saturday that the transfer and mutation of genes is worthwhile if it is aimed at curing hereditary diseases or increasing food supplies.

At the same time, he issued a fresh warning against "experimental manipulations" of human beings.

In an address to biologists attending the annual seminar of the Pontifical Academy of Sciences, John Paul also urged them to reduce experiments on animals and to increase scientific research to enlarge the world's food supplies.

"The research of modern biology gives hope that the transfer and mutations of genes can ameliorate the conditions of those who are affected by chromosomic diseases," the white-robed pontiff said in English.

The pope has in the past warned of the dangers posed by organ transplants and genetic experimentation, calling their misuse "insidious forms of violation of the rights to live in a worthy way as a human being."

But he told the biologists that "the experimentation you have been discussing is directed to a greater knowledge of the most intimate mechanisms of life by means of artificial models such as the cultivation of tissues and experimentation of some animals genetically selected."

The pope told the gathering in the Throne Room of the Apostolic Palace that he had "no reason to be apprehensive for those experiments in biology that are performed by scientists, like you, that have a profound respect for the human person."

Those experiments, he stressed, "must be all subject to moral principles and values, which represent and realize in its fullness the dignity of man."

"On the other hand," he added, "I condemn, in the most explicit and formal way, experimental manipulation of the human embryo, since the human being, from conception to death, cannot be exploited for any purpose whatsoever."

Molino, Acuna to clash in MCT Fall tennis finals

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

No. 6 seeded Armand Molino will face No. 9 seeded Ricardo Acuna at 1 p.m. today at the Racquet Club in the finals of the United States Tennis Association's Masters tournament in a match that will be new to all concerned.

Molino and Acuna have never faced each other on the court and their first time will be for all the tournament marbles and $1,300 in prize money, not to mention the Grand Prix tour points that can be earned.

Acuna, who is ranked 150th in the world by the ATP computers and a member of Chile's Davis Cup team, got to the finals Saturday with a cool, clean and efficient 6-3, 6-3 win over unseeded Andy Gordon, who had gotten his shot by defeating No. 7 seed Mike Gandolfo on Friday.

MOLINO HAD a tougher time of it, but did win in straight sets, 6-4, 7-6, over unseeded Tim Anderson, the surprise of the tournament who upset the tournament's No. 1 seed Derek Tarr on Friday.

"I can win 19 ATP points by winning Sunday and 10 if I lose, so this was a big match for me," noted Acuna. "I have about 90 ATP points now. I've been on the Grand Prix tour, but I lost five first round matches and that's why I came back to this circuit to build up my points and help my confidence. I'm going back next week to South America to play some Grand Prix tournaments."

Tarr, despite losing to Anderson Friday, still comes out as the USTA Texas Segment point champion with 75 points, which translates into about 35 ATP points. It takes around 70 to 80 ATP points to earn the right to enter Grand Prix events.

But today's finals may be even more important for Molino, the Hollywood, Fla., native who is fighting a points battle.

"I don't even know if I'm ranked in the ATP computer," said Molino. "I played some Grand Prix events last winter and I lost all my points. I think I'm ranked somewhere around 290. But I'm looking forward to playing Acuna. We've never played each other, but we've been teasing each other all week about who was doing the best. So I think it is fitting that we meet in the finals."

ACUNA HAD LITTLE trouble against Gordon Saturday in the semifinals. "I just tried the whole match to keep the ball in play because I knew he (Gordon) would make some mistakes. I knew Gordon had a good forehand, so I just kept playing to his forehand all day."

The Molino-Anderson semifinal match, however, proved to be the most exciting. Anderson seemed on equal terms with Molino during the match, but seven double faults killed the unseeded upset giant and he continually missed his first service throughout the match.

Trailing 5-3 in the second set, Anderson did rally enough to to force a tie-breaker, but a double fault at 4-4 in the breaker turned into a 6-4 advantage for Molino. Molino served for game twice, only to fall into a 6-6 tie, but finally came out with an 8-6 advantage in the breaker to advance to the finals.

"I wasn't serving well at all, but Molino beat me. That's about all you can really say," said Anderson.

THE DOUBLES finals will follow the completion of the singles action at the Racquet Club today and Acuna should see all the action he could want because he is also in the doubles finals with partner Juan Ayla. They were seeded sixth in the doubles.

Acuna and Ayla will meet the surprise doubles team of Sean Brawley and Gary Donnelly, who got to the finals by drawing a bye in the semifinals. Brawley and Donnelly were supposed to meet Nigel O'Rourke and Jeff Robbins in the semis, but Robbins dropped out with a bad shoulder. Brawley and Donnelly will be well rested for the match while Acuna has enough on his mind in the meeting of Molino at 1 p.m.

Fluke pass helps SMU to victory

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) -- Just call it Southern Methodist's college version of the Pittsburgh Steeler's professional immaculate reception.

On the strength of a 79-yard touchdown pass that should have never been thrown or caught, the No. 4-ranked Mustangs survived the Texas Longhorns 30-17 Saturday in a wild Southwest Conference game on regional television.

The fourth-quarter touchdown pass from SMU quarterback Lance McIlhenny to wide receiver Bobby Leach that bounced off Jitter Fields' shoulder pads snapped a 10-10 tie and the Mustangs then stampeded to victory over the 19th-ranked Longhorns.

LEACH dashed untouched to the end zone to keep the Mustangs unbeaten with a 7-0 record and atop the SWC with a 4-0 ledger. The Longhorns dropped to 3-2 and 1-1 in the conference.

"That freak play was the ball game," said Texas Coach Fred Akers. "We had an interception and it bounced off for a touchdown. That hurt. It really hurt."

Leach agreed it was a bizarre play.

"I never saw the ball (after it hit Fields). I just felt it in my hands," said Leach, who ran 35 yards to score after he caught the ball.

He added "I was getting ready to tackle Fields and then there I go scoring a touchdown. It was strange."

MCILHENNY, HOTLY pursued by Texas defenders on third-and-9 at the Mustang 21, threw across field in the general direction of Leach.

"I should have never thrown that ball. At least, I should never have thrown it to him," McIlhenny said.

Akers said the SMU lucky bounce may put the Mustangs on the way to the Cotton Bowl.

"SMU has a very talented football team — a great football team — and they made it happen out there," said Akers.

It was hard for Fields to be consoled.

"That's one of the biggest breaks I've seen. I just felt horrible. It was the most terrible feeling ever," he said. "I guess I should have had it, but that was an amazing break."

The SMU rabbit's foot continued on the next possession when Texas wide receiver Herkie Walls dropped a pass wide open at the SMU 15. On the next play, All-American cornerback Russell Carter intercepted a Robert Brewer pass and returned it 20 yards to the Texas 33. From there McIlhenny whipped a touchdown pass to Jackie Wilson over the hapless Fields.

TEXAS THEN scored with 1:50 to play on a 6-yard pass from Brewer to Walls but the damage had been done by the fluke touchdown.

McIlhenny came right back with 49 seconds to play and lofted a 46-yard touchdown pass to halfback Craig James.

The victory was the 11th consecutive for the Mustangs, longest in NCAA Division I and tying an all-time school record.

Eric Dickerson led all rushers with 118 yards on 19 carries. Dickerson's 2-yard touchdown run and Jeff Harrell's 30-yard field gal gave SMU a 10-0 going into the fourth period.

Huskies rally to foil Texas Tech upset bid

SEATTLE (AP) — Washington's No. 1-ranked Huskies had another close call Saturday but the result was the same — another victory.

Behind the hard running of workhorse sophomore tailback Jacque Robinson, the Huskies rallied in the fourth quarter to beat Texas Tech 10-3 in a non-conference football game.

Robinson, who rushed for 203 yards on 35 carries, scored on a 19-yard run and set up a Chuck Nelson field goal with a 43-yard burst in the final period.

The victory gave the Huskies, top team in the Associated Press weekly poll for six straight weeks, a 7-0 record this season. Washington has won 10 games in a row over two seasons.

"This isn't the first time we've had to get into a game late," Washington Coach Don James said. "We had plenty of chances to get discouraged with ourselves early today but we didn't.

"We just have to have the confidence in our physical strength and endurance to help us get in there a little better."

The Huskies trailed winless Oregon in the fourth quarter here Sept. 25 before winning. They also struggled into the second half against San Diego State, a team they were supposed to blow out.

The so-called soft portion of the Huskies' schedule is over now. The two-time defending Pacific-10 Conference champions now face Stanford, UCLA, Arizona State and Washington State.

"Now," James said, "I can stop worrying about getting the team mentally ready to play. I can go back to coaching again.

"I know that I'll have the kids' attention because they respect these teams coming up."

Second-year Texas Tech Coach Jerry Moore said: "When we had a 3-0 lead, we felt we had a chance to win it. But we needed to make two or three first downs, run the clock down and keep them pinned back in their territory. When you make mistakes against the No. 1 team in the nation, though, it will cost you."

The Huskies went the 32 yards in five plays with Robinson going into the end zone standing up on his 19-yard scamper. Nelson then booted the extra point.

Texas Tech, 3-4, took a 3-0 lead 1:41 into the fourth quarter on sophomore kicker Ricky Gann's 39-yard field goal. Gann's three-pointer came after Texas Tech safety Stan David intercepted a Tim Cowan pass and returned it 27 yards to the Washington 32 12 seconds into the fourth quarter.

Robinson, making only the second start of his Huskies' career, was Washington's offensive star on a day when James' team completed just 6 of 24 passes for only 60 yards. The Huskies had four interceptions.

Frogs devastate Bears

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) - Texas Christian struck for 17 points in the dying seconds of the first half Saturday as quarterback Reuben Jones ran and passed the Horned Frogs to a 38-14 Southwest Conference verdict over Baylor's death-wish Bears.

The Frogs turned two pass interceptions and a fumble into a 24-7 halftime lead and rumbled on to one of their biggest victories under the tenuous reign of Coach F.A. Dry.

Now 3-4 on the year and 2-2 in SWC play, TCU got a pair of touchdowns from Jones and a 69-yard scoring romp from Marcus Gilbert as it cruised to its first triumph over the Bears since 1973.

Marcus, who rushed for more than 100 yards, also banged one yard for the Frogs final TD in the fourth period.

The lopsided, upset victory unfolded before a crowd of 23,817 and marked the first time in his six years at TCU that a Dry team has won more than two games in a single season.

Baylor, plagued by its own miscues and a scrappy TCU defense, fell to 2-4-1 for the season and 1-3-1 in conference warfare.

The Bear touchdowns came on runs of one and 13 yards by Horace Ates and Allen Rice respectively.

Jones sped 10 and 5 yards for TCU's first and third touchdowns and set up the Frogs' second score with a screen pass to Kenneth Davis that covered 58 yards.

Davis got the touchdown from the one with two minutes remaining in the first half. Then the roof caved in.

Baylor failed to cash in a fumble recovery at the Frog 16 as the second half got under way and when Gilbert galloped 69 yards for an insurance TD the contest was over.

Jones had one of his finest hours as a TCU starter, hitting 8 of 21 passes for 222 yards and rushing for another 58 steps.

He reeled off runs of 7, 5 and 10 yards s the Frogs took an early 7-0 lead and he hurled a Hail Mary, 43-yard pass to Greg Arterberry that set up his second TD from the 5.

And it was a 43-yard pass from Jones to ace receiver Stanley Washington at the 3 that preceded Gilbert's one-yard scoring burst.

Given a second chance,. Gilbert burst off tackle and loped 69 yards for the TD that surely broke the Baptists' backs.

Baylor, rotating four quarterbacks, moved 48 yards in 3 plays for its first TD as tailback Alfred Anderson covered most of the distance on a 47-yard run.

Anderson wound up as the Bears' leading rusher with 63 yards o 8 trips and Mike Brannan netted 153 yards passing with a 10-of-19 performance.

For the Frogs, Gilbert got 106 yards rushing and Davis picked up 72 more, both on 17 carries.

New Mexico routs NM State

ALBUQUERQUE (AP) — Halfback Michael Carter and quarterback David Osborn triggered an unstoppable New Mexico offense that carried the Lobos to a record-filled 66-14 non-conference football thrashing of rival New Mexico State Saturday night.

With New Mexico scoring virtually at will against the hapless Aggies, Osborn and Carter led a Lobo attack that rolled up a school record 585 yards rushing and a total offense mark of 653 yards.

The victory was the 10th for New Mexico in the last 11 meetings between the two schools. The 66 points points by New Mexico also was its biggest total in 22 years.

Hawkeyes nip Golden Gophers

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Iowa running back Eddie Phillips rushed for a career-high 198 yards, leading the Hawkeyes to a 21-16 Big Ten victory over Minnesota Saturday night.

Phillips, who carried the ball 36 times, scored only once but spearheaded each Hawkeye drive. The Gophers also lent a hand with four fumbles and four interceptions.

Iowa, 4-3 overall and 3-1 in the Big Ten, took a 7-6 halftime lead and extended it to 14-6 early in the second half. The Hawkeyes drove 80 yards with Phillips carrying most of the load on the ground. Quarterback Chuck Long took it in from the 2 for his second touchdown.

The Gophers came right back with a 47-yard drive. After missing an opportunity when a pass was dropped in the end zone, the Gophers settled for Jim Gallery's third field goal of the game, a 36-yarder.

After leading the first two touchdown drives, Phillips finally got into the end zone himself on the third one. He picked up 47 yards on the 65-yard drive and scored from 14 yards out with 12:12 left.

Minnesota, 3-4 overall and 1-4 in the Big Ten, had scoring opportunities in the second half but saw them disappear as interceptions ended three straight series and a fumble ended the fourth.

LSU raises its record to 5-0-1 with 14-6 win

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP) — Alan Risher threw a pair of first-half touchdown passes to Eric Martin and 14th-ranked Louisiana State held on for a 14-6 college football victory over South Carolina Saturday night.

Playing before a record crowd of 78,944, LSU, 5-0-1, managed only four first downs in the first half — all coming in the Tigers' two touchdown drives.

South Carolina, 3-4, stopped itself with three interceptions and a fumble in the opening half. In the final 30 minutes, LSU's defense came up with several key quarterback sacks to stop Gamecock drives.

After a fumble recovery gave LSU the ball at the South Carolina 23-yard line, the Tigers scored in five plays with Risher rifling a 6-yard scoring pass to Martin over the middle.

WITH 7:53 to play in the second quarter, Risher hit Martin on a 25-yard scoring toss. The completion gave the senior quarterback LSU's all-time total offense mark, shattering the mark of 4,052 held by All-America tailback Charlie Alexander.

South Carolina needed only two plays for its only scoring drive as Gordon Beckham hit Ira Hillary with a 40-yard pass and on the next play Tom Dendy ran 6 yards for the touchdown.

Tulane beats Memphis St.

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Former starting quarterback Mike McKay came off the bench in the fourth quarter Saturday night to direct two scoring drives and give Tulane a 17-10 victory over still-winless Memphis State in a college football game.

McKay was sidelined a week ago by an injury, and freshman Bubba Brister performed well enough to keep the job for this week's game.

McKay came into the game with Tulane trailing 10-7. His first pass was intercepted, but Tulane got the ball right back on a fumble by Memphis State tailback Tony Wiley at the Memphis State 40.

Six plays later, Tulane scored on a one-yard plunge by tailback by Elton Veals.

It was the first starting assignment for Veals, who broke all of O.J. Simpson's California junior college rushing records. Veals led all rushers for the night with 53 yards on 15 carries.

TULANE'S first touchdown came on a four-yard run by fullback Kelvin Robinson in the second quarter. Kicker Tony Wood booted a 28-yard field goal for Tulane with 54 seconds left in the game.

Memphis State's scores came on an 18-yard pass from Trell Hooper to Michael Harper in the second quarter, and a 33-yard field goal by Thomas Ingles early in the fourth quarter.

Memphis State is now 0-7, and Tulane is 2-5.

LAFAYETTE, La. (AP) — Southwestern Louisiana took advantage of six fumbles — one on Lamar's first play from scrimmage — to blank the Cardinals 24-0 in a nonconference college football game Saturday.

Six plays after the first turnover, Ragin' Cajun quarterback Don Wallace scored on a two-yard run and set the tone for the rest of the evening.

USL scored again early in the second quarter after a 78-yard, five play drive capped by a 31-yard scoring pass from Cajun alternate quarterback Dwight Prudhomme to receiver Clarence Verdin.

Kubiak fires five TD bombs in Ag win

COLLEGE STATION, Texas (AP) — Quarterback Gary Kubiak threw five touchdown passes — three to second-team split end Don Jones — as Texas A&M whipped winless Rice 49-7 Saturday in Southwest Conference football.

Rice coach Ray Alborn tried to give his team an emotional lift by having the Owls change into jerseys with their names on them, but they still fell to 0-7.

Kubiak, the SWC's total offense leader, had scoring tosses of 53, 5 and 56 yards to Jones, 16 yards to split end Jimmy Teal, and 1 yard to tight end John Kellen.

On his only rushing attempt, Kubiak scrambled seven yards to the Rice 1 to set up Johnny Hector's scoring leap, and he became a triple threat by punting 38 yards to the Rice 3.

Kubiak sat out most of the fourth quarter, but still set a personal record for total offense with 313 yards, including 306 yards passing on 24 completions in 37 attempts.

He was intercepted three times, but only one was costly, as Rice drove 51 yards for its lone score after freshman Alvin Rettig picked off a Kubiak pass and returned it 24 yards. Larry Collins scored from the 2.

A&M intercepted six Rice passes to disrupt the Owl offense. The victory raised the Aggies' record to 2-2 in the SWC and 4-3 for the season. Rice is now 0-4 in league action.

A&M piled up 556 yards in total offense. Rice had 313 yards running and passing, but 100 of those yards came in the first 10½ minutes.

Alborn, in having the Owls switch jerseys, hoped to duplicate what happened two years ago when the maneuver inspired Rice in a 35-7 upset victory over Houston.

One of A&M's interceptions was by freshman safety Domingo Bryant, who was the AP's SWC defensive player of the week for his play against Baylor last week. Bryant also tipped two passes which resulted in interceptions.

The first tip stopped Rice on its initial possession after the Owls had marched to the A&M 26. Linebacker Jeff Fuller got the interception.

Jones' three touchdown catches, which tied a school record, were his only three receptions of the day. On each of the long scoring strikes, Jones was running wide open about the Rice 20, and Kubiak hit him in full stride.

Kubiak had great protection from his offensive line, which gave him plenty of time to pick out secondary receivers. Last year against Rice, Kubiak had six touchdown passes.

The game was scoreless after one period, but A&M scored two touchdowns in the second quarter on a 210-yard offensive explosion, two more in the third period for a 28-0 lead and three more in the final stanza. Rice's only score came late in the third quarter.

Navy defeats The Citadel

ANNAPOLIS, Md. (AP) — Navy, aided by the running and passing of third-string tailback Bryan Caraveo, overcame a slow start Saturday to defeat The Citadel 28-3.

The victory, which ran Navy's season record to 4-3, may have been a costly one. Quarterback Marco Pagnanelli, the mainstay of Navy's offense, was taken from the field on a stretcher in the third quarter, possibly with a broken leg.

Illinois rallies for wild 29-28 victory

MADISON, Wis. (AP) — Mike Bass kicked a 46-yard field goal on the game's final play, capping a 479-yard passing performance by Illinois' Tony Eason as the Illini rallied for a wild 29-28 victory over Wisconsin Saturday.

Wisconsin had taken a 28-26 lead with 52 seconds left when wide receiver Al Toon threw a 40-yard touchdown pass to tight end Jeff Nault. But the Badgers then missed the extra point attempt, setting up Illinois' winning field goal.

Wisconsin quarterback Randy Wright threw a lateral to Toon, who was set up in the left flat. Wright bounced the ball into the turf, apparently deceiving the Illini into thinking the play was dead. Toon scooped up the ball and lofted his touchdown pass to Nault, who was behind the coverage at about the 5-yard line.

But the Illini struck back to march 51 yards in five plays to set up the field goal by Bass, whose kick after a time-out stunned a crowd of 78,406.

Eason, who finished with 37 completions in 51 pass attempts, set up Bass' fourth field goal of the game with a 23-yard pass to tight end to Tim Brewster.

Wisconsin, which had a four-game winning streak broken and slipped to 4-3 overall and 3-2 in the Big Ten, had taken a 20-9 lead late in the third quarter when Toon scored on a 46-yard screen pass from Wright.

But the Illini, 6-2 overall and 5-1 in the conference, rallied as Eason threw an eight-yard scoring pass to Oliver Williams. The Illini scored with 10:03 left in the game on a one-yard touchdown plunge by Joe Curtis, and Eason threw to Williams for a two-point conversion for a 23-20 Illini lead. Bass kicked a 44-yard field goal with 4:03 left to make it 26-20.

THE BIG TEN

Purdue 24, Michigan St. 21

EAST LANSING, Mich. (AP) — Quarterback Scott Campbell stood on his own 8-yard line, with Purdue trailing 21-17 and exactly six minutes showing on the clock Saturday, and made up his mind that Michigan State wouldn't stop him.

Campbell's determination paid off when he scored on a 1-yard sneak with 1:30 remaining in the game to lift the Boilermakers to a 24-21 Big Ten football victory over the winless Spartans.

"I was thinking that we've come too far and worked too hard to lose it," Campbell said. "I had thrown the interception on the one drive and I said to myself, 'We just have to go down and do it.'"

The defeat was devastating for Michigan State Coach Muddy Waters, who stopped just short of conceding he will bow to pressure both from alumni and media critics and step down at the end of the season.

"I feel terrible," Waters said. "It was great coming to Michigan State, but there is just too much against me right now — too much sentiment. I know how football fans are. They want to win."

Ohio State 49, Indiana 25

BLOOMINGTON, Ind. (AP) — Tailback Tim Spencer ran for two touchdowns and quarterback Mike Tomczak passed for two other scores Saturday as Ohio State, shutting off Indiana's running game, beat the Hoosiers 49-25.

The Buckeyes, 3-1 in the Big Ten and 4-3 overall, jumped ahead 14-0 in the first quarter on the first of Spencer's two 5-yard touchdown runs and a 72-yard scoring pass to Cedric Anderson.

But the passing of Indiana quarterback Babe Laufenberg, who set school records with 34 completions in 56 attempts for 334 yards and all four Indiana touchdowns, kept the Hoosiers in contention much of the contest.

A 33-yard touchdown pass to John Boyd and an 8-yarder to Duane Gunn pulled Indiana to 28-13 at halftime. The Ohio State ground attack — unstoppable the whole game — then went to work on the Hoosier defense in the third quarter. Tomczak, who also had a 17-yard touchdown pass to Gary Williams, kept the Buckeyes on the ground and moved steadily to the Indiana 20.

Spencer, who finished with 187 yards, then picked up 12 before fullback Vaughn Broadnax scored.

The Hoosiers' third touchdown, late in the third quarter, came on a 32-yard pass from Laufenberg to Gunn. But the Buckeyes stretched the lead to 42-19 with a 68-yard punt return for a touchdown by Garcia Lane two minutes into the final period.

Michigan 49, Nwstn 14

EVANSTON, Ill. (AP) — Quarterback Steve Smith ran for two touchdowns and passed for three more in a 35-point second period explosion Saturday to lift conference leader Michigan to a 49-14 victory over Northwestern in a Big Ten football mismatch.

Carter ran back the opening kickoff 33 yards to the Michigan 40-yard line and Smith completed three passes in a 60-yard drive capped by Lawrence Ricks' one-yard touchdown plunge.

Tigers win 5th in row

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Cliff Austin and Jeff McCall scored two touchdowns each to lead No. 18 Clemson to a 38-29 Atlantic Coast Conference win over North Carolina State Saturday.

Austin, who finished with 109 yards on 25 carries, scored on runs of one and 14 yards, while McCall scored twice from the one-yard line. Chuck McSwain added another one-yard touchdown and rushed 14 times for 129 yards.

The victory was Clemson's fifth in a row and raised its record to 5-1-1 overall and 3-0 in league play. N.C. State dropped to 4-3, 2-3 in the ACC.

Clemson broke it open in the third period on Austin's 14-yard run to cap a 48-yard drive. Bob Paulling's extra point raised Clemson's lead to 31-16.

The second touchdown came on an 80-yard drive which took only five plays, the big gainer a 66-yard run by McSwain on an option. McCall scored on a one-yard dive and Paulling's conversion made it 38-16.

COCKEYSVILLE, Md. (AP) — Talks aimed at ending the 33-day-old National Football League strike were indefinitely suspended Saturday, threatening the remainder of the season.

Each side blamed the other for continuing the impasse. Mediator Sam Kagel didn't point any fingers, saying instead that it was "time for the parties to re-examine and reassess their respective positions on the economic issues."

It is those issues — the union's demands for a wage scale, a central salary fund, a fixed percentage of the television revenues — which are at the heart of the first inseason strike in the NFL's 63-year history.

Kagel's announcement that talks had been recessed, subject to the call of both parties, ended 12 days of sometimes intense bargaining in this suburb north of Baltimore. Those sessions began when Kage, a 73-year-old private mediator from San Francisco, was brought in to try to bring the two sides to a settlement.

Jack Donlan, the owners' chief negotiator, said Kagel had told him the central fund concept was "nonsensical." That brought a sharp response fro

Garvey insisted that Sargent Karch, counsel for the Management Council, had said the season could still be played in its entirety with the Super Bowl moved back into February.

"That is untrue," Donlan said. "Garvey is just trying to hold his players together by saying they will get paid for the games that have been lost. They will get nothing."

On Sunday, the union representatives from each of the league's 28 teams will meet in Washington, D.C., to discuss the status of the negotiations. It is the first player representatives' meeting since Aug. 31.

"We go into the meeting with nothing new on the table except they have withdrawn $54 million," Garvey said. "They have gone backwards — it's the damndest thing I have ever seen."

Asked what it would take to turn around the owners' attitude, Garvey replied: "When they finally face the fact they can't bust the union, the hard-liners will say it's not worth losing any more games because of these issues. The networks are hurting, the car dealers are hurting, the beer dealers are hurting and the owners are hurting."

Rent It or Own It

by Bob Howle

Residential heating systems require inspections and maintenance. Wood, coal and oil appliances, especially, produce sooty smoke which creates deposits in the chimney flue. These deposits of creosote and soot are combustible and pose a fire threat to the home. It is necessary, therefore, to clean the flue with a chimney brush. A brush, which is properly fitted to your chimney, will provide the necessary scrubbing action to clear the passage of debris. The most common method for chimney cleaning is the "line and loop method". Bring in your flue size and length to rent all the necessary tools.

For your maintenance and repair projects, the usual or the unusual, you will find the right tools and equipment to get the job done, done right and done more efficiently at BOB'S RENTAL CENTERS INC., 2700 Rankin Hwy. 685-1271, 2909 N. Big Spring, 684-8294. We rent an easier way of life. Come in soon and see what we have available. In addition, the tools you rent from us are always serviced and maintained and ready to function. Open 8-6 Mon.-Sat.

Handy Hint:

Always rotate a chimney brush in a clockwise direction so as not to loosen and lose the rod or brush.

Penn State breezes by WVU; Pitt struggles past Syracuse

MORGANTOWN, W. Va. (AP) — Jon Williams ran four yards for a touchdown with 1:57 left in the first half, and Scott Radecic's 85-yard interception return for a touchdown keyed a strong Penn State defensive effort as the ninth-ranked Nittany Lions breezed to a 24-0 victory over 13th-ranked West Virginia on Saturday.

Williams' touchdown run on a reverse gave the Nittany Lions a 10-0 halftime lead, and interceptions by Radecic and Mark Robinson turned away the Mountaineers in the second half as Penn State continued a 26-year mastery over West Virginia.

Penn State's victory before 60,958, the largest sports crowd in West Virginia history, was its sixth in seven games. West Virginia drops to 5-2. The Mountaineers have not beaten the Nittany Lions since 1955.

West Virginia drove inside the Nittany Lion 20-yard line twice in the second half. Robinson intercepted a Jeff Hostetler pass and returned it 39 yards to foil the first Mountaineer march. Early in the fourth quarter, Radecic stepped in front of a sideline pass and the 230-pound linebacker lumbered down the sideline to give the Nittany Lions a 17-0 lead with 11:29 remaining.

Pittsburgh 14, Syracuse 0

SYRACUSE, N.Y. (AP) — Dan Marino tied an NCAA record by throwing a touchdown pass for the 18th consecutive game — a two-yard lob to Julius Dawkins in the first period — as second-ranked Pitt struggled Saturday to a 14-0 victory over Syracuse.

Pitt's offense, which has sputtered most of the season, could not score again against a stubborn Syracuse offense until Joe McCall dived over the line from a yard out early in the final period.

Pitt is 6-0 and Syraucse 1-6.

Marino's touchdown pass to Dawkins capped a 70-yard drive and enabled the senior quarterback to equal the mark of at least one scoring pass in 18 straight games set by Steve Ramsey of North Texas State in 1968-69.

McCall's touchdown run climaxed a 69-yard drive which began on the opening play of the final period.

BC 32, Army 17

WEST POINT, N.Y. (AP) — Doug Flutie fired touchdown passes of 40 and 23 yards to Paul Zdanek, and Bob Biestek plunged over from the 1 in the second half, to lead Boston College to a 32-17 win over Army.

THE EAST

Trailing 14-12 in the third quarter, BC took advantage of a 4-yard punt to the Army 40 after a bad snap from center and converted it into a touchdown. On the first play, Flutie connected with Zdanek with 4:57 left in the period.

After the Cadets' Joe Hampton picked off a Flutie pass at the Army 26, Rich Loughlin connected with Jarvis Hollingsworth on the Cadets' 42. But Hollingsworth fumbled and Boston College's Steve Lubischer recovered. Ten plays later, Biestek bulled in from the 1 for a 25-14 lead.

Army's Craig Stopa closed the gap to 25-17 with a 33-yard field goal with 6:56 left in the game, but Flutie connected with Zdanek for their second touchdown of the game, a 23-yarder with 3:46 to play.

Harvard 27, Princeton 15

PRINCETON, N.J. (AP) — Quarterback Don Allard threw for 231 yards including two touchdown passes and ran for another score as Harvard defeated Princeton 27-15.

Harvard's victory puts the Crimson ahead of Princeton and solidifies its bid for the Ivy title. Penn, 4-0, leads the Ivy League with Princeton and Brown tied for second place going into Saturday's game. The victory over Princeton was Harvard's first in five years.

Penn 27, Yale 14

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Halfback Steve Rubin ran for two touchdowns and halfback Steve Flacco scored on an 83-yard run to lead Penn to a 27-14 victory over Yale Saturday.

The win, Penn's first over Yale since 1972, kept the Quakers in sole possession of first place in the league with a 4-0 record (5-1 overall).

A Franklin Field homecoming crowd of 32,175, Penn's largest home attendance in nine years, watched as Penn took a 3-0 first quarter lead on a 34-yard field goal by Dave Shulman.

Robinson fires medal 78; Sylvia Roberts scores ace

The Women's City Golf Tournament begins Tuesday at Hogan Park and leading the way into the first round of play will be Susan Britton, seeking her 11th title, and Mary Robinson, who shot a qualifying 78, to capture medal honors.

Nancy Coalter had a 79 while Sylvia Roberts could thank her first hole-in-one on the par three 10th for making the title flight. The ace gave her an 87, just under the wire.

Sylvia missed the $1,000 offered by Jan's for an ace this week, but warned, "That was only my warmup shot. I'm saving my best shots for the tournament."

Joining the championship flight are Nina Colter, 83; Jo Dickson, 84; Bettye Clarke and Margaret Vann, also at 87.

Second flight: Ella Heath, Clara Christy, Pam Camerata, Betty Cobb, Betty Howell, Michelle Collier, Dorothy Melzer, and Bernice Varner.

Arkansas smothers hapless Cougars

HOUSTON (AP) — Arkansas' Danny Walters returned an interception 93 yards for a touchdown and quarterback Brad Taylor ran for two touchdowns and passed for another Saturday to lead the sixth-ranked Razorbacks to a 38-3 Southwest Conference football victory over Houston.

Walters' interception late in the first quarter erased a 3-0 Houston lead and ignited the Hogs to 28 straight points, including a pair of one-yard touchdown runs by Taylor and a 56-yard pass from Taylor to split end Derek Holloway for a 28-3 halftime bulge.

Thomas Brown tacked on a 13-yard touchdown run for Arkansas early in the fourth quarter and Ernie Villarreal booted a 34-yard field goal with 1:39 left to play.

The Hogs intercepted four Houston passes, three off Couger starter Lionel Wilson and one off backup Audrey McMillian. Houston dropped to a 2-4-1 overall record and 1-2-1 in SWC games.

Arkansas boosted its record to 6-0 for the season and 3-0 in league play.

Houston, trying to defeat the Razorbacks for the fifth straight year, drove to the Hog 13-yard line in the first quarter and, on second down, Walters stepped in front of a pass intended for freshman Carl Hilton over the middle.

Walters, who had an 87-yard touchdown interception return against Mississippi last year, darted to his right and outran Houston receiver David Roberson to the goalline.

Arkansas' second touchdown came on a third-down pass from Taylor to Holloway, who had beaten Houston defender Reggie Vonner down the sideline. Holloway caught the ball at the 15 and ran untouched into the end zone.

Wreck decks Tennessee, 31-21

Alabama, Georgia roll on

ATLANTA (AP) — Jack Westbrook rambled 72 yards on a punt return for one touchdown and sophomore Robert Lavette scored three others as Georgia Tech smashed Tennessee 31-21 Saturday.

Westbrook's second quarter punt return produced a 21-7 lead as the Yellow Jackets took control at that point and Tennessee, which upset Alabama one week ago, never got within 10 points the rest of the way.

Lavette, who hammered out 138 yards, scored his touchdowns on runs of 1 yard, 3 yards and 1 yard, the last putting the game out of reach at 31-13 with 10:30 left.

The victory came at the end of a grueling week of work in which the Jackets were put through a pair of 2½-hour scrimmages. It lifted Tech's record to 4-3. Tennessee fell to 3-3-1.

Tech used a ball control offense behind the running of Lavette and the passing of Jim Bob Taylor, who hit on 12 of 19 attempts for 211 yards, including three to Lavette for 53 yards, one a 41-yard screen pass play.

Tech's other scoring came on a 32-yard field goal by Ron Rice in the third quarter.

Kicker Fuad Reveiz of the Vols kicked field goals of 60 and 40 yards, with the 60-yarder at the end of the first half setting a Southeastern Conference distance record.

Georgia 27, Kentucky 14

LEXINGTON, Ky. (AP) — Herschel Walker set a Southeastern Conference touchdown record and John Lastinger passed for three more scores as third-ranked Georgia rallied to defeat winless Kentucky 27-14 Saturday..

Walker, the Bulldogs' All-America tailback, rushed for 152 yards, raising his career total to 4,482 and moving him past Amos Lawrence of North Carolina and Earl Campbell of Texas into ninth place on the NCAA all-time rushing list.

Walker's score, a screen pass that he turned into a 64-yard touchdown play, was the 43rd touchdown of his career and established a SEC record. Walker, a junior, had been tied with Charles Alexander of Louisiana State.

Kentucky, 0-6-1 overall and 0-3 in the SEC, took a 7-0 lead on a 56-yard pass play from Doug Martin to Shawn Donigan.

Vanderbilt 19, Mississippi 10

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Vanderbilt Coach George MacIntyre expected an exciting homecoming Saturday afternoon and his Commodores came through in fine fashion as they stopped Coach Steve Sloan's Mississippi Rebels 19-10.

The Commodores rallied from a 10-7 deficit in the final quarter on the right arm of quarterback Whit Taylor and the heroics of linebacker Joe Staley to post their best start since 1974.

Taylor capped a 79-yard scoring march early in the fourth period with an 11-yard touchdown toss to Norman Jordan to boost Vandy into a 12-10 lead, but Staley stole the spotlight and the football game eight minutes' later.

Alabama 21, Cincinnati 3

TUSCALOOSA, Ala. (AP) — Quarterback Walter Lewis piled up 217 yards running and passing to lead seventh-ranked Alabama to a 21-3 college football victory over Cincinnati Saturday for the Crimson Tide's 57th consecutive victory on its home field.

Playing only part of three periods, Lewis ran for 156 yards, including dashes of 42 and 32 yards, and connected on six of seven passes for another 61 yards as Alabama increased its record to 6-1.

Craig Turner dived over for two touchdowns and Linnie Patrick juked past two defenders at the scrimmage line and ran 45 yards for the other Tide touchdown.

Auburn 35, Mississippi State 17

STARKVILLE, Miss. (AP) — Freshman Bo Jackson came off the bench to score the go-ahead touchdown and Lionel James and quarterback Randy Campbell added clinching scores Saturday in a fourth quarter explosion that carried the Auburn Tigers to a 35-17 football victory over Mississippi State.

The Southeastern Conference game turned into rout after Mississippi State muffed an Auburn punt, giving the Tigers new life that set up Jackson's three-yard touchdown run early in the fourth period. It wiped out a 17-14 Mississippi State lead.

Jackson St. 22, Grambling St. 6

GRAMBLING, La. (AP) — John McKenzie passed for 107 yards and two touchdowns as Jackson State upset Grambing State 22-6 in a regionally televised football game Saturday afternoon.

Bruins, Trojans Cards score wins

BERKELEY, Calif. (AP) — UCLA quarterback Tom Ramsey guided a 397-yard aerial attack in a 47-31 romp over California on Saturday as the undefeated 11th-ranked Bruins dumped the frustrated Golden Bears for the 11th year in a row.

PAC-10

17 of 23 passes for 322 yards and two touchdowns, broke open the game in the fourth quarter after the Bears tied the game 31-31 in the third period. UCLA reserve quarterback Rick Neuheisel threw one pass for a 75-yard touchdown to Dokie Williams when Ramsey was bruised in the first half.

UCLA improved its record to 6-0-1, while Cal dropped to 4-3.

Starting Cal quarterback Gale Gilbert was knocked out of the game with an injured left knee midway through the second period. Gilbert, who had to be helped off the field, completed 11 passes for 126 yards and two touchdowns before he was hurt.

UCLA jumped out to a 7-0 lead on its third play from scrimmage when Danny Andrews swept one yard around the right end for the TD. A shanked eight-yard punt by Mike Ahr on Cal's first possession gave UCLA the ball on the Cal 28. Ramsey hit Paul Bergmann on a 25-yard pass to set up Andrews' score.

The Bears tied the score when they marched 79 yards in 11 plays and scored on a rolling 12-yard catch by David Lewis in the end zone.

USC 38, Oregon St. 0

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Tailback Anthony Gibson scored twice on short runs as 12th-ranked Southern Cal built a 31-0 first-half lead Saturday and rolled to a 38-0 Pacific-10 Conference victory over winless Oregon State.

Gibson, a senior elevated from fourth-string because of injuries at the tailback position this season, scored on a one-yard run five minutes into the game; then tallied on another one-yard burst with three minutes left in the opening period.

The Trojans, winners of five straight after a season-opening loss to Florida, were dominant defensively, with linebackers Riki Gray and Keith Browner and tackle Bryon Darby leading the charge.

Southern Cal is 3-0 in Pac-10 play but ineligible for postseason action due to NCAA sanctions.

Quarterback Sean Salisbury, who played just the first half, threw a 13-yard scoring pass to Timmy White in the opening period, and finished with 10 completions in 14 attempts for 130 yards.

The Trojans led 21-0 at the end of the first quarter, then added 10 points before the intermission on Frank Jordan's 22-yard field goal and a three-yard touchdown run by Todd Spencer.

A six-yard touchdown jaunt by freshman Andrew Jackson in the third period capped the Southern Cal scoring against the Beavers, who fell to 0-4-1 in conference play and 0-6-1 overall.

Stanford 31, Washington St. 26

PULLMAN, Wash. (AP) — Halfback Mike Dotterer bulled four yards for a touchdown with 22 seconds remaining to give Stanford a 31-26 victory over Washington State in Pacific-10 Conference football Saturday despite Stanford quarterback John Elway's worst game of the season.

Dotterer, filling in for NCAA receiving leader Vincent White, rushed for 155 yards and picked up three touchdowns on runs of four and six yards and on a six-yard pass from Elway.

The Cardinal signal-caller hit 10 of 26 passes for 85 yards, breaking a 12-game streak in which he passed for 200 yards or more.

But Elway still completed two touchdown passes, one from the WSU 11 and the six-yarder to Dotterer.

Washington State, led by quarterback Clete Casper's 191 yards passing and 156 yards rushing by running back Tim Harris, stayed in the game throughout and took a 26-24 lead with three minutes to play.

Harris dived in from the one for the score but John Traut missed the extra point.

But Stanford went 78 yards in 13 plays to pull out the victory, with Dotterer accounting for 51 yards on seven carries.

The Cougars dropped to 1-5-1, 0-2-1 in conference play.

Stanford bettered its record to 4-3, 2-2 in the Pac-10.

The game was tied at the end of the first and second quarters before Stanford took a 24-17 lead with nine minutes left in the third period on Dotterer's one-yard blast.

WSU came back less than two minutes later with a 26-yard field goal by Traut after relief quarterback Ricky Turner's one-yard touchdown run was called back because of a penalty.

Wyoming stuns Utah, 16-13

LARAMIE, Wyo. (AP) — Wyoming upset Utah's hopes for a Western Athletic Conference title here Saturday with a 16-13 come-from-behind victory engineered by Craig Johnson's two touchdown passes.

Wyoming's victory left Utah with a 2-2 WAC record and dropped the Utes are 3-4 overall. The Cowboy's evened their record at 4-4 overall and 2-3 in the WAC.

Johnson hit tight end James Williams with an 18-yard touchdown pass with 5:48 left in the game to give Wyoming a 16-13 lead, and cornerback Darnell Clash intercepted a pass to stifle one of Utah's last threats.

Johnson, a senior who usually alternates at quarterback, gave Wyoming its first touchdown midway through the third period when he hit tight end Jay Novacek with a 24-yard pass that gave Wyoming a 10-3 lead.

But Utah tied the game late in the third quarter when Utah wide receiver Tex Wise recovered tailback Carl Monroe's fumble in the end zone for a touchdown.

BYU 34, Colorado St. 18

PROVO, Utah (AP) — Quarterback Steve Young bolted for two touchdowns and passed for two others, igniting Brigham Young to a 34-18 victory over Colorado State Saturday.

Young, the nation's total offense leader, threw second-half touchdown passes of 21 and 7 yards to tight end Gordon Hudson after BYU held a 14-10 lead at intermission.

The victory boosted BYU into sole possesion of first place in the conference. The Cougars are 5-2 overall and 4-1 in the league. The Rams fell to 3-4 and 2-3 in the WAC.

After spotting CSU a 3-0 lead, Young ran for two first-period scores, 13 yards on a quarterback sneak to cap an 80-yard drive and 21 yards when he could find no receivers.

Colorado State fullback Doug Jones scored on a 3-yard run midway through the second quarter, a touchdown set up by a 47-yard punt return by Richie Hall.

Hall also hauled down two of the four interceptions thrown by Young, who completed 19 of 36 passes for 259 yards. Young, a junior, also rushed for 90 yards on nine carries.

BYU's Kurt Gunther added field goals of 29 and 42 yards in the second half.

CSU quarterback Terry Nugent, who passed for 231 yards, found receiver Jeff Raikes in the end zone for a 13-yard touchdown with 50 seconds remaining. He also threw a two-point conversion to Mark Brehm.

Mike Johnston kicked a 35-yard field goal with 11 seconds remaining as the 15th-ranked Irish salvaged a 13-13 deadlock.

"It was fourth and 10 and we didn't have much choice," Faust said, "especially with the way he (Johnston) is hitting.

"We've got too much at stake this year. We're still in the picture in a lot of things. You just don't want to throw that away."

"The tie, although it's not a satisfying thing, will help some people give the respect to this team that it deserves," Brooks said, "I'm sad for the team, but proud."

Johnston's late field goal was his 13th without a miss this season.

Quarterback Blair Kiel, stifled by the Oregon defense throughout the game, set up the tying score with four consecutive pass completions in the final 75 seconds of the game.

Oregon, 0-6-1, had appeared headed for a major upset after quarterback Mike Jorgensen directed an 80-yard touchdown drive early in the fourth quarter to give the Ducks a 13-10 lead.

It was the second straight week the Irish, 4-1-1, have had trouble with a Pacific 10 Conference foe. Last Saturday, Arizona beat Notre Dame 16-13 on a last-second field goal.

Freshman Allen Pinckett scampered 24 yards to the 6, then scored on the next play.

Oregon sliced the lead to 7-3 on Todd Lee's 37-yard field goal with 3:52 remaining in the opening period.

Lee, who hadn't attempted a major-college field goal before Saturday, added a 39-yarder in the third quarter to cut the margin to 7-6. He missed a 31-yard try in the second quarter.

Huskers survive Missouri

LINCOLN, Neb. (APO) — Reserve quarterback Bruce Mathison engineered a long fourth-quarter drive that produced the winning touchdown, then ran for an insurance score a little over two minutes later as fifth-ranked Nebraska came from behind to beat stubborn Missouri 23-19 Saturday in a nine plays after Nebraska's Dave Burke fumbled the ball back to the Tigers at his own 46-yard line after intercepting a pass.

Mathison, who replaced injured starter Turner Gill late in the first half, teamed with I-back Mike Rozier to key Nebraska's winning touchdown drive. Mathison completed 3-of-3 passes on the march and Rozier, who was doubtful prior to the game, contributed runs of 17 and 27 yards.

Nebraska's Kevin Seibel kicked field goals of 33 and 24 yards in the first half and booted a 29-yarder late in the third quarter to cut the Missouri lead to 10-9.

THE BIG EIGHT

Big Eight Conference football game.

Fullback Mark Schellen, also a reserve, scored on a one-yard run with 4:46 left in the game to cap a 79-yard, 11-play drive that wiped out a 13-9 Missouri lead.

Less than a minute later, Nebraska linebacker Brent Evans intercepted a Missouri pass and, three plays after that, Mathison darted 14 yards for a touchdown with 2:10 remaining.

The late flurry lifted Nebraska to 6-1 on the season and 3-0 in the Big Eight. Missouri, which held the Cornhuskers' potent offense in check for most of the game, fell to 3-2-2 and 0-1-2.

Iowa St. 31, Colorado 14

BOULDER, Colo. (AP) — Quarterback Dave Archer connected with flanker Rocky Gillis on a pair of third-quarter touchdown passes, breaking a 14-14 tie as Iowa State defeated Colorado 31-14 on Saturday.

Iowa State's ball-control offense gave the Cyclones a huge time-of-possession advantage over Colorado, but on the two clinching touchdowns the Cyclones uncharacteristically struck quickly.

ISU went 66 yards in just three plays for the go-ahead score with 3:43 left in the third quarter. Gillis slipped behind third-string, freshman cornerback Solomon Wilcots and hauled in a 41-yard scoring toss.

Nimitz, Lee battle for title

With two games remaining on the ninth grade Midland-Odessa Conference schedule, Nimitz and Lee Maroon have taken control of their own destinies.

Nimitz, 5-0-1 and a 28-18 winner over Lee White Saturday, has a one-half game lead over Lee Maroon, a 37-12 winner over 5-1-1 Ector for a 5-1 record, and each can win the conference title if they win their last two games. Nimitz will play Hood on Thursday while Maroon takes on Midland Purple next Saturday. The two schools will then square off on the following Saturday in what could be the deciding game of the year.

Midland Freshman was a double winner Thursday night as the Purple team, 5-2, keps its title hopes alive with a 13-0 victory over 0-5-1 Hood and the Gold team, 4-2-1, defeated 0-5-1 Bowie, 20-0.

In the eighth grade Midland-Odessa Conference, Goddard held onto its lead in the conference race, winning 29-0 against San Jacinto for a 6-0 record. Second place Nimitz was also a 29-0 winner Saturday over Hood to improve its mark to 5-1. Next Saturday, Goddard and Nimitz will meet in a key M-O meeting at Nimitz Field.

Trinity edged San Jacinto in eight grade Midland City Conference action to remain in first and unbeaten with a 6-0 record. Goddard Red, tied for second place with Alamo at 4-2, defeated Midland Christian 26-14 while Alamo shutout Goddard White 18-0.

In seventh grade action, American Conference leader Alamo Grey lost its perfect season by tying Goddard White Saturday for a 5-0-1 record.

Dupree sparks Sooners

OU shuts down nation's top rusher

NORMAN, Okla. (AP) — Marcus Dupree, Oklahoma's power running freshman, scored two touchdowns and rushed for 83 yards Saturday as the Sooners harnessed Oklahoma State and the nation's leading rusher for a 27-9 Big Eight football victory.

Dupree, making his first start in Oklahoma's multi-faceted backfield, scored his first touchdown on a 30-yard sweep around right end in the first quarter and his second on a 2-yard dive with 9 seconds remaining in the third.

Ernest Anderson, who had been leading the nation in rushing with an average of 208 yards per game, was held by the Oklahoma defense to a total of 59 yards, with 34 of them coming in the first half.

The Sooner defense also kept Oklahoma State, now 0-1-2 in the Big Eight and 1-3-2 overall, from scoring a touchdown as the Cowboys got all their points from field goals by sophomore Larry Roach.

Roach narrowed Oklahoma's lead to 6-3 early in the second period, but the Sooners came back on their next possession to score a touchdown that lifted them to 13-3 at the half.

Quarterback Kelly Phelps got the Sooners' second touchdown when he picked up a fumble dropped by Weldon Ledbetter and loped eight yards into the end zone, surprising almost everyone on the field.

Oklahoma, 5-2 overall and 3-0 in the conference, saw its lead cut again in the third quarter when Roach hit a pair of field goals that made the score 13-9.

The Sooners were unable to get a first down on the ensuing drive and had to kick. However, Oklahoma State's Stanley Blair dropped the punt and it was recovered by the Sooners at the Oklahoma State 12.

One very important feature of a whole life insurance policy, sometimes called permanent insurance, is its cash value. In its most popular form, straight life, you agree to pay premiums which remain constant for the duration of the policy. Because the premium does not increase, you are, in effect, averaging out the costs of insurance over your lifetime on a yearly basis. The cash value of the policy would build yearly and you could borrow from it at the low rate of interest specified by the policy. This borrowing feature is extremely attractive when you compare the policy's interest rate with today's going rate.

Insurance plans of various types may offer alternatives. Each alternative has pros and cons and the correct one for you depends upon your individual circumstances. For the valuation of your insurance needs and the best way to meet them, we suggest you call POWELL INSURANCE AGENCY, 601 N. Marienfeld. For personal as well as business considerations, we will analyze your particular circumstances, explain the options and recommend that which is best for you. Tel. 686-2001. Open 8:30-4:30 Mon.-Fri.

INSURANCE TIP:

Cash value is the amount of money that you would receive were you to cash in your policy before it became payable.

Making Midland A Better Hometown

ENERGY AFFECTS SALES PRICE

The degree of energy efficiency (or deficiency) can play a significant roll in the selling price you can get for your home.

In the area of buyer financing, for example, lenders are looking closely at the projected utility costs for a home in determining whether a prospective borrower can afford both the monthly mortgage payment AND the utility payment. Similarly, new Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corporation (FHLMC) and Federal National Mortgage Association (FNMA) appraisal forms require information on energy efficiency. FHLMC has also changed its guidelines to permit higher loan-to-income ratios for energy efficient properties.

The rising cost of energy is affecting the residential real estate market in other ways. In recent national studies, 83% of homeowners surveyed believe that energy-saving features added to the resale value of a property. How much? Sixty-six percent of real estate brokers surveyed indicated that a well-insulated home is worth more (an average of 9%). It pays to make your home energy efficient - in more ways than one.

A large part of saving energy — and money — is simply a matter of cutting waste. And with electricity costing more, mainly because the fuel to make it costs more — conservation is more important than ever.

You can start by maintaining your own home. Seal cracks around doors and windows with caulking and weatherstripping to stop heating and cooling leaks.

Check attic ductwork to be sure it is sealed and well-insulated. If ductwork isn't properly maintained, much of your heating and cooling escapes into the attic.

For the full story on saving energy — and energy dollars — get our Unhandy Person's Guide. Just call Texas Electric or ask for it on the comment section of your electric bill. It'll help even the most unhandy person tighten up his home.

Angelo St. knocks off HPC, 16-6

BROWNWOOD, Texas (AP) — Mike Thomas kicked three field goals Saturday to spoil Howard Payne's homecoming and lead Angelo State to a 16-6 Lone Star Conference victory.

The win raised Angelo State's record to 4-2 for the season and 3-0 in the LSC. Howard Payne fell to 1-5 and 0-3.

Thomas scored with kicks of 30, 19 and 48 yards and quarterback Slade Sherrod tossed a nine-yard touchdown pass to Todd Boales.

Howard Payne missed two field goals and was inside Angelo State's 10-yard line twice and did not score. Its only touchdown came on an eight-yard reverse by wide receiver Robert Gray late in the fourth quarter.

WT St 24, NT St 22

CANYON, Texas (AP) — Senior quarterback Victor McGee passed for 375 yards, including a trio of scoring tosses, to lead West Texas State to a 24-22 victory over North Texas State Saturday.

Two of McGee's scoring passes went to fleet-footed Earl Wilson. Wilson dashed 76 yards with a pass for a go-ahead touchdown with only 1:09 left in the first half and provided the game-winner with a juggling 40-yard reception with 4:53 to play in the third quarter.

The Buffaloes improved their record to 2-5, while North Texas State fell to 1-6.

The Mean Green cut the West Texas State lead to two points on a 5-yard touchdown pass from Greg Carter to Marvin Walker with six minutes to play in the game. However, Lonnie Green missed a 37-yard field goal attempt with only 51 seconds left in the game that would have won the game for North Texas State.

McGee wrote his name in the WTSU record book with his 23-of-43 passing performance. He now has attempted a record 293 passes for the year and has rolled up 2,196 passing yards, another record.

During the aerial circus — in which 83 passes were attempted by the two teams — Bobby Daniels provided most of the ground work. The Mean Green running back got 99 yards on 24 carries. He scored North Texas State's first touchdown on a 1-yard dive.

Wichita St. 30, UTA 13

WICHITA, Kan. (AP) — Running backs Eric Denson and Mark O'Neal each rushed for more than 100 yards and scored a touchdown Saturday to carry Wichita State to a 30-13 victory over Texas-Arlington in non-conference football.

Denson caught a 31-yard touchdown pass from Prince McJunkins in the first quare to give the Shockers a 7-0 lead and piled up 110 yards on the ground for the game.

O'Neal finished with 102 yards rushing, including a 1-yard scoring run in the second period.

Wichita State, which leads the Missouri Valley Conference in rushing offense and rushing defense, amassed 338 yards on the ground while holding the Mavericks to 190.

The Shockers, 7-1 overall and 3-0 in the MVC, were paced by McJunkins' 117 passing yards and 58 yards rushing. Going into the game, he needed 102 yards rushing to become the NCAA's first player to rush for 2,000 yards and pass for 4,000 yards in a career.

Texas-Arlington, 2-5 overall and 0-2 in the Southland Conference, was led by Scotty Caldwell's 98 rushing yards and Andre Gray's 114 yards on kickoff returns.

The Mavericks trailed 20-0 in the second quarter but closed the gap to 23-13 before Wichita State fullback Cecil Suber scored from 1 yard out with 1:58 left in the game to cap the victory.

Suber, who had a bruised shoulder and was a questionable starter, led WSU's final drive with six carries in the 12-play, 54-yard drive.

Curry wins; Odessan loses title

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) — Donald Curry, with undisputed welterweight champion Sugar Ray Leonard watching, outpunched Marlon Starling in a tactical fight and scored a split 12-round decision Saturday.

The victory was the 15th for the unbeaten Curry and brought him the United States Boxing Association welterweight championship. Curry's North American Boxing Federation title also was on the line.

The victory was important for Curry, who went into the fight ranked No.2 by both the World Boxing Council and the World Boxing Association.

Mayweather used his tremendous foot speed to dazzle Munoz in the first six rounds of their fight and then stopped moving long enough to batter the defending champ in the seventh and eighth rounds.

In the seventh, after Mayweather landed a barrage of head punches, he stepped back. Munoz stepped forward and threw a right, but Mayweather countered with a right to the jaw that dropped Munoz for a five count.

Hal Sutton fires 68 for lead

PENSACOLA, Fla. (AP) — Hal Sutton, seeking to become the winningest rookie ever on the PGA tour, mastered high winds Saturday en route to a 3-under par 68 and a one-stroke lead after three rounds of the $200,000 Pensacola Open.

Sutton, who has finished second in two tournaments but has yet to nail down his first professional victory, started the day three shots behind second-round leader and fellow rookie Steve Liebler.

Liebler bounced back from a shaky start that saw him bogey the first two holes to maintain his one-shot lead through nine holes. But the University of South Carolina graduate relinquished the lead to Sutton when he bogeyed No. 10 and 11.

Sutton's 54-hole total of 201 was 12-under-par for the 7,093-yard, par-71 Perdido Country Club course and gave him a one-shot lead over D.A. Weibring, who also shot a 68 to move up from fourth place.

Calvin Peete, who started the day in second behind Liebler, struggled with a 1-over-par 72, but was even with Jim Colbert and Mike Sullivan, who had a 66, at 203.

Gottfried advances

VIENNA, Austria (AP) — Brian Gottfried defeated France's Henri Leconte 6-2, 6-7, 6-4 and Bill Scanlon beat Mike DePalmer 3-6, 7-6, 6-1 Saturday in the semifinals of the $100,000 Fischer Grand Prix tennis tournament.

The 30-year-old Gottfried, aiming for a third title here, disposed of the Frenchman in 2 hours and 45 minutes.

Gottfried took the first set with little trouble, and was leading 2-0 in the second set when the 19-year-old Leconte took the next four straight games and went on to win the set in a tie-breaker.

Gottfried appeared to break Leconte's momentum at the end of the fiercely fought third set. With each holding four games, Leconte led 30-0 in the fifth game before losing the set on a string of errors.

Fin & Feather

Ed Burger, Midland Real Estate Investor, and Mike Morris, an associate from Nashville, recently took a 75 1/4 pound amberjax while fishing off Florida's Long Boat Key in the Gulf of Mexico.

"We were about 150 miles out," explains Burger, who believes the amberjax could be close to record proportions. "It was in 80 feet of water and we used 110-pound test lead on an 80-pound line. It took 20 minutes to land him and it tore up my salt water rig. We wound up bringing him in hand over hand."

The fish produced 43 filets. It was a product trip with close to 50 fish in the 15 to 25 pound range being landed in a five-hour period.

DEADLINE FOR submitting applications for aoudad (Barbary) sheep public hunts at Caprock Canyons State Park is Nov. 10. The drawing will be 10 a.m. Nov. 16 and 35 to 42 hunters will be selected. The fee is $250. To obtain applications, write the Texas Parks and Wildlife Dept. (Parks Division), 4200 Smith School Road, Austin 78744 or call 1 800 792 1112.

Officials said the hunts are held to reduce the number of sheep and feral goats which compete with native mule deer and put pressure on native browse species.

Permits will be issued for a two-day hunt beginning noon the first day and endning noon the third day: Jan. 1-3, 3-5, 5-7, 7-9, 9-11, 11-13 and 13-15. The bag limit is one aoudad per hunter with no limit on feral sheep...

THE TPWD will hold public hunts for waterfowl at seven wildlife management areas. Hunters on two of the areas will be required to register and pay $4 for each day's hunt while no fee or registration is required on the other five.

The largest hunt will be at J. D. Murphree near Port Arthur. Hunters must register and pay the $4 fee before each day. Permits will be issued at the headquarters at 4 a.m. each day.

Hunt dates are Nov. 6, 9, 11,13, 16, 20, 23, 26 and 27; Dec. 18, 21, 23, 27, 28, 30; Jan. 3, 4, 8, 11, 13, 15, 18, 20, 22.

Fees and registration are also required at Gus Engling WMA and hunt dates are Dec. 18, 19, 20, Jan. 7, 8, 9.

Hunters will be allowed to hunt ducks and geese during regular hunting seasons at Eastern; Dam B, 14 miles west of Jasper; Granger; Toledo Bend; Shelby; Somerville; and Pat Mayse.

DEER HUNTERS can expect a good season, say TPWD biologists. A half million deer hunters harvest more than 300,000 deer annually in Texas, so the sport is big business.

The season opens Nov. 13 and there is optimism in most counties, based on better-than-average rainfall in late winter and the spring of 1982.

Briefly, here is how it looks:

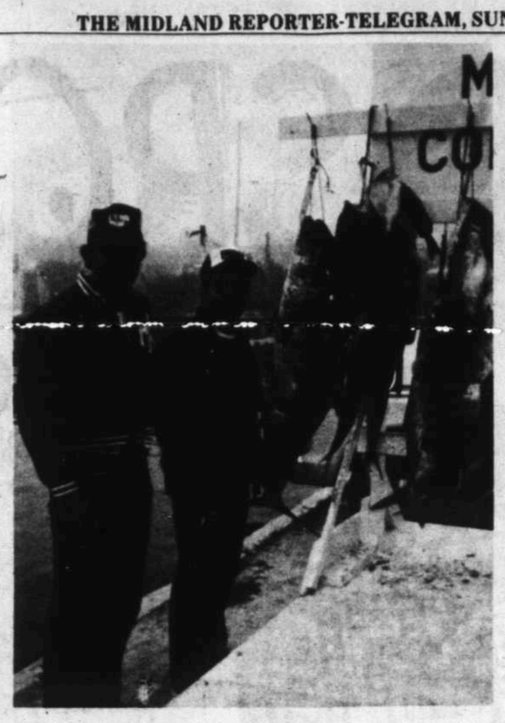
Possum Kingdom—Numbers are up because of good fawn crop. Deer body condition remains good, but deteriortating because of drought. Antler development good. Deer are expected to be moving to find food, which should enhance harvest.

Edwards Plateau—Numbers higher than last year. Fawn crop about average, as is antler development. Body condition fair because of dry weather. Fair to poor acorn crop will keep deer moving. Adequate antlerless harvest is vital in many areas.

Trinity-Brazos—Numbers up slightly. Condition, fair to good. Antler development average. North and central areas have good acorn crop.

Trans Pecos—Mule deer prospects better than average, despite dry conditions. Body condition and antler development good. Whitetails continue to do well within the T-P range.

STRIPERS fishing was productive at Texoma with the lake packed with the three to six pound variety. "The exciting part is that stripers have been chasing shad into the shallows," says Bob Kemp, director of TPWD fisheries. Shad-colored stickbaits with small spinners have been bringing good results.



Ed Burger, right, and Michael E. Morris show off part of catch during trip off Long Boat Key on which Burger dragged in a 75 1/4 pound amberjax.

Whisnants dominate HSBC's October tourney

The High Sky Bass Club of Midland held its October tournament at Lake Spence with 21 men, five women, one teen participating as 55 bass weighing 73 pounds two ounces were taken.

Despite coole weather both days, fish didn't exactly attack the hooks. Larry Whisnant won the first day calcutta with a four-pound, 14 ouncer and Dale Whisnant was the big bass winner the second day with a 3-9.

Larry Whisnant took first in the men's division with four pounds, 14 ounces while Dale Whisnant was second with 3-9 and Terry Denton was third at 3-2. Vicki Denton was the women's winner with a one pounder. Lois Roush was second with a 13 ouncer. In the Teen division, Jey Stanaford was first with a 12 ouncer.

The top 10 after the Spence tournament were: 1. Charles Erck, 637 points. 2. T.E. Armstrong, 635. 3. Jackie Wilkes, 614. 4. Terry Denton, 514. 5. Ed Elliot, 463. 6. Fred Nobles, 382. 7. Jim Crownover, 380. 8. Paul Anderson, 353. 9, John Nobles, 344. 10. Dow Scott, 313.

the next tournament is scheduled Nov. 6-7 at San Angelo Lakes (Angler's choice) with headquarters at Spring Creek Marina. This is a heavy stringer tournament...

CRISP AUTUMN weather has brought a change in fishing patterns at Spence. Striped bass activity has increased, but most of those landed were in the small to intermediate range. Another development was a sudden surge in black bass fishing.

At Paint Creek Marina, Bob and Joyce Dawson, Odessa, took nine stripers to eight pounds; Leroy Dawson, Midland, landed four stripers with a pair of seven pounders and two 10-pounders; Donny Phillips, Denver City, took a 3-15 black bass, and Cliff Johnson, San Angelo, a four-pound striper.

Lee girls beat OHS

ODESSA — The Midland Lee girls took a 69-30 victory over Odessa High in Saturday swimming action to claim the only win in double dual action against Odessa Permian and OHS.

Odessa Permian's girls defeated Lee 66-53 and both the Permain and OHS boys' teams scored victories. The Panthers won 82-31 and the Bronchos 72-47.

Jana Housman led the Rebels in the swimming meet with individual victories in the 200 freestyle and 100 butterfly against both schools and was a member on the winning 200 medley against OHS and on the 400 free relay team which beat both schools.

Sandra Malone beat the two Permian divers for first place and was awarded first against OHS because of lack of competition. She also anchored the 200 medley relay. Debra Cannon was also on the 200 medley and was a winner against OHS in the 50 freestyle. Karen Eberly was the fourth member of the relay.

The only other first place finish for Lee was by Julie Mathis against OHS in the 100 breaststroke and was on the 400 relay along with Housman, Donelle Reisinger and Kelly Simmons.

For the boys, Keith Cox was the biggest winner of the day as he defeated both OHS divers for first place, Permian was a no show in that event for the only first place of the day against the Panthers, and he was a member of the winning 200 medley relay against the Bronchos along with Chris White, Alan Pare and David Kimberly.

White was the only other winner of the day as he finished first against OHS in the 100 breaststroke.

Playoff decisions second-guessed

Mauch sensitive to critics

ANAHEIM, Calif. (AP) — Members of the California Angels reacted with disappointment to the resignation of Manager Gene Mauch and said published criticism may have caused him to leave.

Members of the team that came within one game of winning the 1982 American League pennant theorized that Mauch's resignation resulted at least in part from criticism of his decisions in the last two playoff games. The Angels lost the best-of-five playoff series to Milwaukee after taking a 2-0 lead over the Brewers.

Gene Mauch

"I just feel all the things written and said about him the last week were a factor," said Angels outfielder Brian Downing. "All the time and trouble he put in, it just upset him too much."

Mauch was criticized for his decision to start pitcher Tommy John in Game 4 with only three days' rest. He also was second-guessed for not bringing in left-hander Andy Hassler in Game 5 to face Cecil Cooper, who came up with the series-winning hit against right-hander Luis Sanchez.

"He lived and died by his decision," Downing said. "Here he died by it. Too much came down to the one game. If we had hit like we did all year, this never would have come up."

"Everyone was upset," Hassler said. "The players were and so was the front office, rightly so. It usually doesn't happen. (The Angels were the first team to lose a playoff series after winning the first two games.) But it was clearly a case of the last two games. I don't want to be involved with media hype, but the move (to use Hassler against Cooper) was so obvious."

TIM FOLI, who went 2-for-26 against Milwaukee, said:

"No one is to blame except the players who didn't hit in the playoffs. We're all disappointed we didn't win the playoffs. It was our own fault."

Pitcher Ken Forsch, who was bypassed in Game 4 in favor of John, said he was "really disappointed" at not getting to start in that game.

"I was really hurt," he said. "I didn't like what he did to me, but I still feel he is a fine man and a fine manager. I hate to see him resign."

"It (the resignation) didn't surprise me," said Hassler. "From what I have heard and from what has been written there (in Southern California) it was inevitable. A lot of negative things were written. It could have been something some of the players said.

Dickerson, James duo wears thin

AP Sports Analysis
By DENNE FREEMAN

DALLAS — They couldn't have been more different when they arrived at Southern Methodist University in the summer of '79.

Dickerson's idol was Muhammad Ali.

James' was Roger Staubach.

But they had a common bond: They were the finest running backs in the state of Texas and they were going to play the same position.

Sure, said the skeptics, the arrangement won't last a year.

Somehow, Ron Meyer made it work for three years.

HE CONVINCED Dickerson, the kid Parade Magazine named the finest running back in America, that sharing the tailback position in the I formation was smart; that there would be less wear and tear; that he would never carry the ball without being fresh; that he would get plenty of carries.

Understand, Dickerson had rushed for almost 6,000 yards in high school. He was used to having the ball and the headlines. In the state championship game his senior year, he ran for a record 311 yards and scored four touchdowns.

And Dickerson bought it.

Then Meyer, the salesman supreme, did his dance for James, the leading rusher in the history of Texas 4A football for one season. A lad who had a 2,411-yard and 35-touchdown senior season.

Run that by me one more time, Ron.

Meyer and the same song, pointing out that the injury chances would be slimmer; that opponents would wear down in the fourth period with a double-barreled pounding; that there would be enough glory for all.

Great, said James, where are the helmets.

WHEN BOBBY Collins inherited the Mustangs because of Meyer's professional ambitions, he decided to leave the status quo.

Both had made the All-Southwest Conference backfield as juniors. Dickerson was second team All-American. James was honorable mention.

Collins tinkered with the idea of putting them both in the same backfield. He decided if it wasn't broke, why fix it since SMU was 10-1 in 1981.

So, "The Pony Express" — as SMU Sports Information Director Bob Condron dubbed the duo — rode into 1982.

WITH DICKERSON and James alternating, the Mustangs went into Saturday's game against Texas fourth-ranked and owning the nation's longest victory streak — 10 games.

"The Bittersweet Year of Craig James," was one headline followed by the subhead "Working Time Discourages Pony Runner."

This was all over the fact that James, through the luck of the draw, had carried the ball 29 fewer times than Dickerson this year.

Dickerson has been having a sensational season. He's already over 1,000 yards, has been named the AP's National Back of the Week, and has averaged over seven yards per carry.

James has half as many yards and has been averaging some five yards per rush.

Both players will have their bread buttered for many, many years after this season by the National Football League.

BOTH ARE certain, barring injury, to be drafted in the first round. Dickerson will probably go ahead of James, who has tremendous market value because of his versatility which includes a 46-yard punting average.

Thoughts may create, destroy

By NORMAN VINCENT PEALE

Some time ago in England I read in a daily newspaper a curious story about a lady named Gem Gilbert, a one-time English tennis star. She had died under peculiar circumstances and her story was thought provoking.

Gem Gilbert had died as a dentist was about to extract a tooth, but before he actually touched her!

It seems that, as a small girl, she had visited a dentist with her mother, who was to have a tooth pulled. Tragically a rare accident happened. Her mother died suddenly from the shock of the extraction. The little girl actually saw her mother die in the dentist's chair.

Gem Gilbert never forgot that traumatic experience. For thirty years she carried it in her mind until obsessive fear developed. She would never go to a dentist no matter how badly she needed treatment. Always she lived in fear of having the same thing happen to her as had ended the life of her mother.

But finally came a day when she was suffering so much acute pain from lack of attention to her teeth that she agreed to permit a dentist to come to her home to extract a tooth and to fill others. At her request her medical doctor was also present. Friends gathered around her. Even her minister was there. But before the dentist was able to touch her, she collapsed and died. The newspaper writer, with sharp insight, remarked that Gem Gilbert had been killed by "thirty years of thought."

This is an extreme case, of course. And I've never heard before of such a thing happening. But the immense power of thought, either to destroy or create, cannot be overestimated. You can, for a fact, make yourself sick by your thoughts. Apparently, judging from the story of Gem Gilbert, you can actually kill yourself by your thoughts. Some, like Gem Gilbert, have indeed actually killed themselves by thinking death, by a death wish, by the persistent fear of death or at least by a conviction that some terrible thing was going to happen. In the Bible Job said, "That which I have greatly feared has come upon me." A powerful truth indeed. One can indeed bring catastrophe upon oneself by wrong thinking.

It is a gloomy thought but alas a true one that some people are killing themselves just as surely, if more slowly than Gem Gilbert, by mental attitudes compounding hate and fear, stress and anxiety. If luckily they do not quite kill themselves physically still they kill off their creative powers and certainly all chance of happiness. Thinking does, for a fact, make it so.

One the other hand, it is quite amazing how wonderful living can be to those people who keep their mental attitudes in good condition, who have healthy mindedness, wholesome and normal. Indeed one of the greatest achievements possible to a human being is to have a sound mind. Such a healthy mental state makes all the difference between success and failure, between happiness and misery, between effectiveness and ineffectiveness.

An important technique for utilizing the immense power of thought to the fullest possible advantage is to set up a regular schedule of "mind-emptying." The mind tends to accumulate a mass of resentments, fears, inferiority feelings, gripes and grudges. These unhealthy thoughts clog the mind and draw off its normal power flow. It is important to empty out such unhealthy thinking and substitute right thinking in the form of good will, courage and faith. Then it is possible to experience the immense power of thought in stimulating health, strength and well-being. Remember you are what your thoughts make you. Be careful how you think. A very good authority says, "As a man thinketh in his heart so is he."

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Alcoholics may act as if were older

Dear Dr. Solomon: My husband is 65 years old and his memory isn't what it used to be. I don't know whether it's his age or the alcohol, because he started drinking in the army 30 years ago and hasn't stopped since. I think he's frightened now because he knows he forgets things, and I think he's ready to do something about it. What would you suggest we do? — Mrs. J.O., Staten Island, N.Y.

Dears Mrs. O.: The most obvious piece of advice I can give is that your husband get himself to a doctor without delay for a complete physical examination, and then either contact an alcohol abuse center or Alcoholics Anonymous. If your husband has been drinking heavily for the past 30 years, he very likely requires medical attention.

As far as the memory impairment is concerned, it may very well be related to his drinking; the age of 65 is not very old these days. Dr. James T. Becker, of the department of neurology at the Boston University School of Medicine, reports that a study he conducted showed that alcoholics often function as if they were much older than their chronological age.

But first things first. You husband should see a doctor, and the sooner, the better.

Dear Dr. Solomon: One of my drinking buddies had to go to the hospital, and almost everyone who heard about it said it must be cirrhosis of the liver. But when I'd ask them what cirrhosis is, no one really knew. So I thought I'd write to you and ask: Just what is cirrhosis? — Gerry, Dallas

Dear Jerry: Cirrhosis refers to a number of diseases of the liver in which its normal cells are damaged and replaced by scar tissue. As a result, the amount of normal tissue in the liver is decreased.

This change in the structure of the liver interferes with the flow of blood through the liver and with its ability to function. The liver has been called the body's largest chemical factory and has thousands of functions. Therefore, diseases of the liver can seriously affect a person and even result in death.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I have rheumatoid arthritis and I have been taking aspirin for it for a few years. I don't take any other pills. My brother is a pharmacist and he says that too much aspirin can hurt the kidneys. I'll be taking it for a long time yet, and I'd like to know if it is dangerous to continue. — Stanley, Morgantown, W.Va.

Dear Stanley: The results of a study conducted in England indicate that the use of aspirin in the treatment of rheumatoid arthritis is unlikely to cause any damage to the kidneys. The conclusion is based on a study of 16 patients with rheumatoid arthritis who had been taking aspirin for periods ranging from four to 40 years.

For Bert, Chicago: The digital rectal examination performed by a physician can detect only about 10 percent of colorectal cancers.

(If you have a medical question, write to Neil Solomon, M.D., 1726 Reisterstown Road, Baltimore, Md. 21208. Dr. Solomon cannot give personal replies but will answer as many questions as possible in his column).

Swedish doctoral theses rarely turned down

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — The standard of doctoral theses produced and — worse — accepted at Swedish universities is outrageously low, critics say.

Hardly any of the theses are rejected, it is claimed, but they are so bad that foreign research libraries no longer accept them.

A heated debate on the issue has surfaced anew, this time among students themselves, and set the adrenaline running throughout Swedish academic circles.

In a newspaper article, three research students from Lund University in southern Sweden claimed that Swedish doctoral standards have sunk intolerably low. Almost anything on paper passes for a thesis nowadays, the trio said.

They cited a recently accepted thesis they said pointed up a deteriorating level of the students' general knowledge and a tendency among professors and supervisors to see more merit in the quantity or number of theses passed than in their quality.

"Real brains" stay clear of Swedish universities' research departments out of self-preservation, they wrote, creating a situation where the merit of a Swedish doctor's degree no longer is what it was.

"If it's true that hardly any theses are failed any longer, then something has gone wrong," said Carl-Gustaf Andren, chancellor of the Swedish university system.

Andren deplored parliament's decision to overrule a government proposal that grading committees be instructed to give reasons for passing or failing a thesis. Current regulations do not require them to do so.

Some academicians have made suggestions to enable Sweden to keep up with international standards. One is to cut in half the number of doctoral candidates, thus making studies more efficient. Another is to restore a six-year requirement for a doctorate instead of the current four.

One critic of the present system is Nobel Economics Prize winner Gunnar Myrdal, husband of U.N. disarmament expert Alva Myrdal. He contends every 20th thesis ought to be rejected "to teach students a lesson." This level of rejection, he says, is not approximated now.

Sweden has 16,500 research students, and 800 receive doctor's degrees each year. The proportion between theses passed and failed never has been established statistically.

A group of academic administrators such as Vice Chancellor Rolf Lindborg put the ultimate blame for falling standards not on individual professors who accept theses but on politicians who endorsed an education reform program passed in 1977.

The reform set the four-year limit on doctoral studies, cutting back on what had been a requirement of eight to 10 years. Lindborg charges it also created a system of autocratic professors and left grading committees powerless to defy them.

Critics of the quality of the Swedish doctoral theses claim they are thin both in content and number of pages. The latter might be explained by the government's practice of subsidizing only a limited number, currently 160.

Pollster predicts losses for moderate Republicans

By DORY DEVLIN
Hearst Feature Service

WASHINGTON — Political pulse-taker Peter Hart predicts the mid-term election will find moderate Republicans hurt the worst and that "1982 will be a good Democratic year, but not a banner Democratic year."

"Moderate Republicans may turn out to be the true victims of Reaganomics," Hart said, citing senatorial candidates Millicent Fenwick (N.J.), Pete Wilson (Calif.), Lowell Weicker (Conn.), and Robert Stafford (Vt.) — all involved in races which have steadily narrowed as election day nears.

Hart said that as Democrats have made steady gains in the last few months of the election, Republicans have sharply altered their optimistic predictions.

A year ago, Republicans were saying that in the Senate where 20 seats are up for election, only five seats were safe for Democrats, four were leaning to the Democrats, and 11 were tossups, Hart told the Washington Press Club Thursday.

Now, eleven days away from the election, Hart said, the Republicans view 14 Senate seats as safe for Democrats, three leaning Democratic, and three as toss-ups.

HART SAID HE BELIEVES Democrats will dominate in the House election, possibly picking up as many as 25 seats. He added that races for seats Republicans "need to keep," such as Minority Leader Bob Michel's in Illinois, are close.

For a landslide to occur, the Democrats must pick up about 40 seats, Hart said, which he does not forsee because Republicans have far outspent Democrats.

But Democrats have "moved into a formidable position" in many gubernatorial races, Hart said.

Democratic candidates' positions are improving while Republicans are faltering in the last phase of the campaign mainly because of President Reagan's performance and economic problems, Hart said.

He cited as detrimental Reagan's veto of the appropriations bill overridden by both houses of Congress and his shifting of attention to social issues, abortion and school prayer, while the economy continues to worsen.

Reagan's heavily partisan campaign speeches have hurt his image, Hart added, because he is no longer seen as leader of all the people, but as head of the Republican party.

REAGAN'S APPROVAL OF A JOBS training bill which "six months ago would not have happened" has also fed voter skepticism toward Republicans, he said.

Hart said the 10.1 percent unemployment figure recently released "hurt (the Republicans) but is not as significant as everyone says."

"The key to unemployment is the fear factor," Hart said, noting that 30 to 40 percent of Americans believe that they or someone in their homes will soon be unemployed.

Hart, who has conducted polls for 17 Democratic candidates and for four 1984 Democratic presidential aspirants, sees Social Security as a more powerful issue for Democrats than unemployment.

"Social Security is working well for Democrats with voters over 50 because of the uncertainty and fear" that the program will be cut, he said.

Democrats should make Social Security their issue in 1984, Hart said, suggesting they tell voters changes in the system will have to be made but ask: "Who do you feel safer with making those changes? The Democrats who started the program, nurtured it, or the Republicans who have tried to cut it?"

HART DESCRIBED REPUBLICAN candidates who started off in better shape than they now are as "running away from the economy issue," focusing on smaller, local issues. As a result, candidates are saying "thanks, but no thanks" to the president's offer to campaign, he said.

Hart added that Richard Wirthlin, Reagan's pollster, recently told him that the pesident will not make a paid television appearance the night before the election, as originally planned.

Hart said he is most interested in female and black voter turnout, which he suspects will be higher than ever.

Non-partisan speech ends with GOP campaign theme

By WALTER R. MEARS
AP Special Correspondent

WASHINGTON (AP) — A non-partisan speech, it turns out, is one in which President Reagan doesn't name the Democrats as the culprits for America's economic woes. He just says that everything started going bad while they were in charge.

It is one in which he asks the American people for their support, instead of asking them outright to vote Republican in the congressional elections two weeks from Tuesday.

The non-partisan variety includes a suggestion that it is time to forget about party politics and ends with the Republican Party's 1982 campaign theme: stay the course.

Save for touches like that, the nationally televised speech Reagan delivered from the White House last week sounded a lot like the speeches he has been giving at campaign rallies for Republican candidates.

The Democrats always said it would. They protested that there was no way Reagan could deliver a non-partisan speech shortly before the elections on the economic issues that dominate the campaign.

Reagan only smiled and said that he certainly wasn't going to give a partisan speech. Presidents can do that and get network television time for the purpose. Democratic presidents have done exactly the same thing, in almost the same circumstances, over Republican protests.

The president carefully avoided mentioning the Democratic Party by name, but there was no mistaking who he was talking about when he blamed "the pounding economic hangover America is suffering" on big-spending policies of the past.

"In recent weeks, a lot of people have been playing what I call 'the blame game,'" he said. "The accusing finger has been pointed in every direction of the compass..."

At times, the accusing finger is Reagan's. "In the four years before we took office, those who are now our biggest critics had total power — the White House and both houses of Congress," Reagan said in a campaign speech in Irving, Texas, two days before the economic address. "They had the whole enchilada. And it was then that the problems became acute and nearly brought America down."

"...Those in power managed to create a crisis unlike America had ever seen before," the campaigning president said.

That was partisan, of course. When it came time to be non-partisan, Reagan expressed a little sympathy for the people he described as big spenders who spent years resorting to quick-fix economics for political reasons.

"In a way, I guess I can understand why so many of our political leaders fell into this trap," he said. "I am sure they did it with the best of intentions. It is easy to lose touch with reality when it is other people's money that you are spending and there are so many things you want to do for this or that special interest group..."

The Democrats are not likely to consider that a compliment, non-partisan or not.

Vietnamese in Japan want to come to U.S.

HIMEJI, Japan (AP) — After 20 months in Japan, Dong Chau, a refugee from Vietnam, says the country is "not bad" but he doesn't want to stay here.

Dong, his wife and four sons are part of more than 6,100 Indochinese boat people brought to Japan since 1975; and are among about 2,100 Vietnamese, Laotians and Khymers who remain in 29 camps scattered around central and southern Japan. The rest have gone on to settle in other countries — most in the United States.

Many, like Dong, are caught in a flux, with little chance of resettlement in third countries and unable to assimilate in Japan, a nation that has traditionally ostracized foreigners.

Dong's temporary home — an 8-by-14-foot room in this camp of 100 refugees — sits in a Catholic church compound on the outskirts of Himeji, a small town about 280 miles southwest of Tokyo.

Now 34, the onetime soft-drink salesman from Saigon said he fled Vietnam fearing persecution since his brother worked for the U.S. Military there.

Though his appeal to join his brother, now in the United States, was rejected, he refuses to settle in Japan, saying "I'm still waiting to know what to do."

Meanwhile, two of his sons attend a local elementary school, two others, 14 and 15, languish in the camp, and Dong does part-time construction work.

He supports his family with his earnings, plus food and housing provided by the United Nations High Commission for Refugees.

Father Harrie Quaadvliet, a Catholic priest from Holland, runs this "first asylum" camp with aid from the U.N. group, the Caritas Japan Catholic organization, a few local contributions, and some of the money earned by about 30 of the refugees who work in part-time, unskilled jobs in the town.

Driving in Egypt not for faint-hearted

EDITOR'S NOTE — In Cairo, the advice is simple: Drive at your own risk. Pedestrians, too, don the robes of daring adventurers as they plunge into the cacophonous melange of traffic in a dangerous effort to cross a street. Any resemblance to safety and road courtesy is accidental.

By STEVEN K. HINDY
Associated Press Writer

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — Driving in Egypt is not for the faint-hearted. It demands single-minded purpose, steel nerves and the discipline to forget any rules of the road learned in foreign lands.

Many would-be drivers are intimidated by their first sight of an endless Cairo traffic jam with its mad orchestra of car horns. Radiators explode under the 105-degree summer sun, and carbon monoxide and heat waves radiate from the throbbing mass.

Progress is measured in inches, and the sleeping driver is cut off from all sides.

Others spurn driving for fear of killing Egypt's fearless pedestrians — a beggar scooting between vehicles chanting Moslem praise of almsgiving; families of 10 in chains of clasped hands; black-clad peasant women hugging sleeping babies and balancing bundles on their heads, urchins selling tissues and toys.

Those who surmount these fears must grasp the complexities of Egypt's unwritten driving etiquette: Forget the meaning of road markings; red lights can be passed sometimes; slow down and honk at intersections; drive on the left side of the road if approached by a car on the right, and always drive toward pedestrians and blast the horn.

THE EGYPTIAN DRIVER also must be willing to navigate the likes of "death valley," a puzzle of an intersection just north of the city's central Liberation Square.

Traffic surges through the intersection from nine directions. On its ragged edges are a bus station, the Hilton Hotel, the Egyptian Museum and five main streets. An unpredictable trolley grinds north and south. Six policemen are in charge and most are in the shade.

It works, but how would be hard to say. Buses, packed beyond belief, rush through the center with horns blaring. Daring young men run alongside and leap into the back door.

Every so often, one of these urban cowboys doesn't make it. He is either run over or manages to get to his feet, limping and swearing.

During a recent noon rush-hour, people and machines wound in all directions through the valley. A young man climbed out of his silver Volkswagen in the center and greeted a policeman, apparently his friends, with Arab kisses. Traffic backed up behind him.

A bicyclist clinging to the window of a bus swept by. A motorcycle carrying four puttered through. A tricyclist pedaled by with hundreds of loaves of bread balanced on a plate on his head. Street urchins clung to rear bumpers of the trolley.

AN INTREPID GROUP of American tourists sprung to the center, but half lost their nerve. Some waved frantically at the rushing traffic as they tried to make it to the other side. They barely made it across with their heels intact. It was 10 minutes before the dispirited stragglers joined them.

Many who drive in Egypt never dare venture into downtown Cairo at midday, mainly because of the horror of not finding a parking place and being lost in the mass for hours.

The wise pay 10 cents a day to the omnipresent monadis (callers), very young and very old men who pack cars into back alleys, by hand, leaving only a narrow passage for one-way traffic.

Many drivers use their cars only to get from their apartments to the markets in their neighborhoods, a matter of a few blocks. They dare not drive outside of the city because of tales and visible evidence of fatal accidents on the highways north to Alexandria and south to Upper Egypt. Many involve the legendary "flying coffins," taxis that carry eight passengers and a driver.

FEW RISK NIGHT driving outside the city. Many people drive without lights, to save electricity, and flash only to warn oncoming cars of their approach.

Foreign visitors may drive on an international license, but residents must pass an examination.

Scotti Williston, an American living in Cairo, took a six-week driving course in which he says the main advice given by her instructor was "more horn."

One day, the teacher left her alone to drive back and forth on a tree-lined practice course. Then he jumped from behind a tree in front of her car to test her reflexes. Ms. Williston passed the course, but is afraid to drive in Egypt.

The road test is simple: Drive about 50 feet between rubber pylons spaced far enough apart for two small cars. Then steer around a mild left turn, stop, and back in reverse through the pylons to the starting place.

The hardest part of the test is the social pressure of the other applicants crowded just outside the pylons, watching intently, laughing at mistakes, sometimes cheering.

Justice department moves to deport Nazi supporter

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Justice Department says it is moving to deport Bohdan Koziy, whose U.S. citizenship was revoked last March after a judge ruled that he committed crimes against Jews as a pro-Nazi Ukrainian policeman.

The department said last week it had begun deportation proceedings in U.S. Immigration Court in Miami against the 59-year-old Koziy, convicted of concealing his World War II activities on his 1949 visa application.

In March, U.S. District Judge James C. Paine of West Palm Beach, Fla., found that Koziy "personally and singlehandedly murdered" the daughter of a Jewish physician and "actively participated in the murder of a Jewish family."

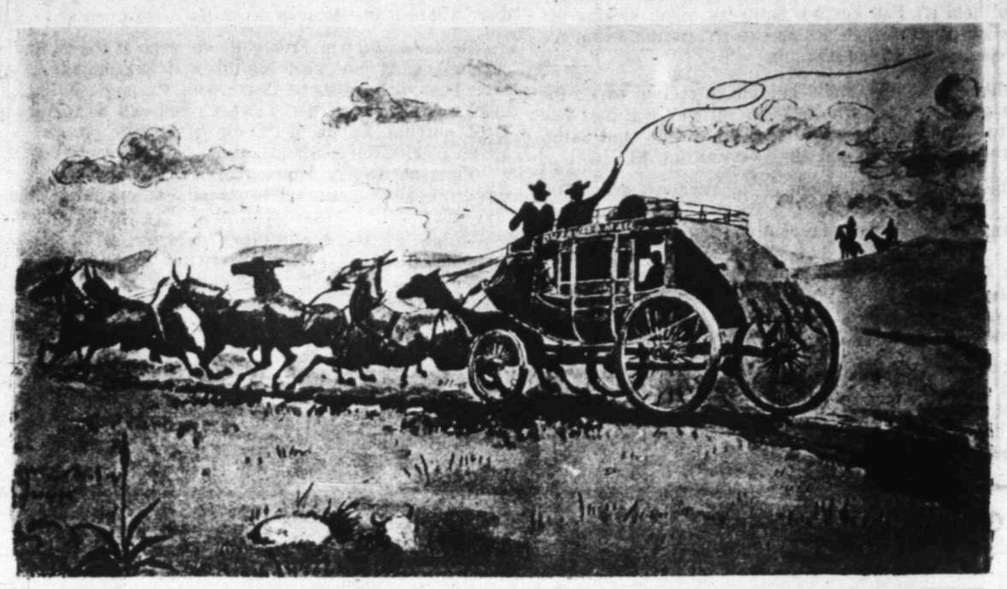
To cross at Horsehead was to risk not only loss of possessions but that of life. Here, the party of John Russell Bartlett is shown fighting desperately to navigate Horsehead's treacherous current in 1850. (from Bartlett's "Personal Narrative of Explorations and Incidents", The Rio Grande Press, Chicago, 1965)



The wheels of the Butterfield Overland Mail stages rumbled between Castle Gap and Horsehead Crossing for 2½ years beginning in 1858, stopping to change teams at a lonely stage stand just upstream from the dreaded ford. Foreboding, desolate, dreary, the Pecos River flows east-northeast toward Castle Gap on the horizon. Here, along this now peaceful, moss-covered stretch of water between two snake-like bends just upstream of the historical marker, lies the original Horsehead Crossing, believe the most acute historians.

Legend of Horsehead Crossing

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the first of a three-part series on the legends and history of the most infamous of all crossings in the pioneer Southwest.

Copyright 1982, The Midland Reporter-Telegram

CRANE-PECOS COUNTY LINE — Its shores have known bloodshed for centuries.

Horsehead Crossing.

The very appelation of the fabled ford on the Pecos River southwest of Crane denotes its sanguinary qualities, stretching across history from the hunting expeditions of the Indians afoot, through the explorations of the conquistadores, and to the westward pilgrimages of wagoners and cattle drovers.

The Pecos always has been a dreaded river in the last few hundred miles before it slashes a canyon in its approach to the Rio Grande, but early day travelers had little choice but to cross it at Horsehead if they wished to journey toward the setting sun. The river rises in the Sangre de Cristo range in northern New Mexico, a breaker-splashed mountain stream tumbling down to the prairie to become a morose, desert-shrouded gully of water when it reaches Texas, and crossings are few and hundreds of miles between.

TREELESS, WITHOUT valley, the Pecos often caught early travelers unaware, as usually they had no idea they were near a waterway in the sea of creosote and chaparral until the banks suddenly dropped steeply at their feet. And too, its crooks and bends, resembling a rattler convulsing from a mortal wound, not infrequently have left persons perplexed and disoriented. One man, according to lore, awoke on the banks of the river to see his team of horses far beyond the channel. He decided to swim across and retrieve them, but the currents of the Pecos blocked his path six times before he realized the animals grazed on the same side of the river as his camp.

But not always were the twists of the Pecos a problem, such as with one man named Clark. "Moving herds up to New Mexico, they wouldn't have to stand guard," said Paul Patterson, 73-year-old author and historian of Crane. "They'd just have them in the bend of the river and there'd just be one man (on watch)."

Although Cabeza de Vaca crossed the Pecos in 1535, the natural break in the river's walls which eventually would become known as Horsehead probably was never seen by eyes other than those of Indians seeking buffalo until Antonio de Espejo's party passed by in 1582. The 150 mules and horses in his expedition were an indication of the likelihood of the Indians acquiring steeds through capture or straying, and once the red men possessed such, the Comanche War Trail was spawned and Horsehead became splattered with blood.

OTHER CONQUISTADORES who likely passed by Horsehead were the parties of Gaspar Castano de Sosa in 1590 and Juan Dominguez de Mendoza in 1684. Mendoza crossed the Pecos 11 miles downstream of present-day Girvin, but may have camped quite near the shores of Horsehead, which lies only a few miles south of the "great saline" he detailed. Later to be known as Juan Cordona Lake, the salt basin was of great importance to Indians. Following the meanderings of the Pecos downstream the following day, Mendoza described Castle Gap as approximately 10.4 miles east. The narrow pass lies some 12 miles east-northeast of Horsehead Crossing.

By the start of the 19th Century the Comanches had incorporated horses into their lives and beaten out the Comanche War Trail, which they followed from the Llano Estacado, through Castle Gap, across Horsehead Crossing and into Mexico. There, they would besiege haciendas and steal horses, driving them northeastward across the desert to Horsehead.

It was from such, according to legend, that the morbid skulls of horses came to line the banks of the Pecos crossing. John Salmon "Rip" Ford noticed the line of skulls on each bank when he crossed in 1849, and his Comanche guide explained that stolen horses, being driven hard from the last waterhole 60 miles distant, would plunge into the river and drink till they died. Later, someone lined the banks with their skulls to mark the crossing's boundaries.

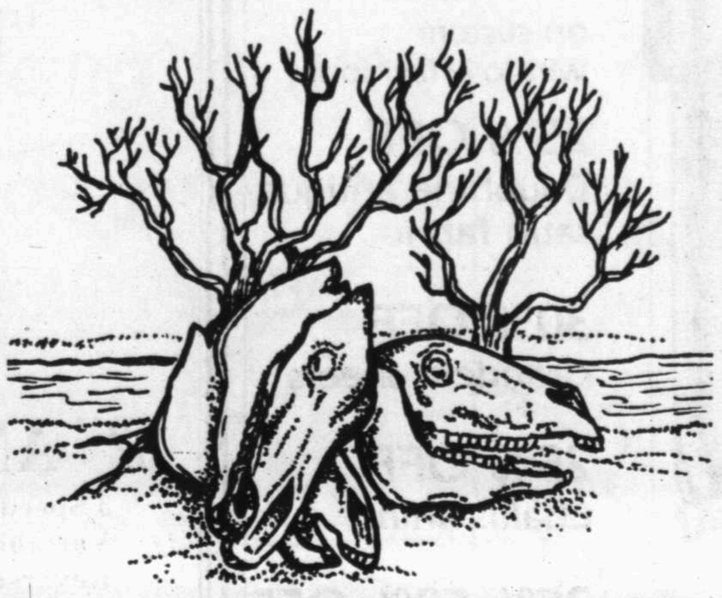
THE FIRST Anglo-Americans to cross Horsehead may have been Dr. Henry Connelly and his party of 100 men in 1839. Carrying bullion from Chihuahua to Fort Dawson, Connelly had a choice of either Horsehead or Salt Crossing, 10 miles to the north.



Staff Artist: Jan Drake

The next year the first recorded death of a white man occurred at Horsehead, and it was to breed a multitude of such deaths to follow. "A fellow by the name of Fellows was accidentally killed crossing the Pecos at Horsehead Crossing in 1840," Patterson noted. "After that...only two or three people were accidentally killed crossing there while a lot of people were getting killed on purpose."

The skulls saw the first cattle herd cross Horsehead in the 1840s, as a driver carried beeves to California, while the 1849 California gold rush opened up a veritable floodgate of emigrants and gold seekers. Wagon parts, cattle carcasses and settlers' belongings began to drift downstream, as Horsehead took its toll.

Robert Neighbors, plotting a wagon course westward with Rip Ford that year, noted that Horsehead's banks were "low, bottom firm and hard, and the water more shallow than at any point touched by the road. Yet the depth is too great for fording, and a good ferry boat will be requisite."

A detailed account of the adversities travelers encountered in crossing the swift, deep stream at Horsehead was given by John Russell Bartlett, who crossed in 1850 during his stint as commissioner of the U.S.-Mexico Boundary Survey Commission.

THE EAST BANK, he noted, was but half the height at this location as elsewhere along the river, but the opposite embankment required leveling with spades to allow wagons to ascend. The channel was 100 feet wide and held four feet of water at its deepest point, he said.

Wagons crossed safely, the mules swimming the treacherous current, until that occupied by Bartlett met with difficulty.

At the two-thirds point, the lead mules lost their footing and turned their heads to swim with the current. The remainder of the mules "began to rear and prance in the water." As the last wagon attempted to pass Bartlett's wagon in mid-stream the current slammed them together, increasing the danger, and Bartlett expected at any moment "to be swept away."

The entire party galvanized into action: men on shore pulling on a rope to turn the heads of the lead mules, teamsters whipping the beasts, horsemen urging the teams shoreward. And the far bank was attained.

It was a hellish ford in a dreaded land, but those heeding the admonition of Horace Greeley kept its shores beaten.

THE BOUNDARIES were kept well-rutted by the wheels of the Butterfield Overland Mail stages for 2½ years beginning at 3 a.m. Sept. 26, 1858. In the midst of a 24-day journey from St. Louis to San Francisco that brought it southwestward from Smith's Station — on the present Albany-area ranch of Midlander Mrs. M.F. Driscoll — the stage halted at the stand just upstream from Horsehead and the reins were assumed by fabled frontiersman Henry Skillman.

The following year the stand was attacked by Comanches, who drove away its stock and stole its supplies — a foreshadowing of the carnage which would follow during the next decade.

The Civil War's initiation in 1861 canceled the state of Texas' plans for construction of a bridge at Horsehead, but that did not deter the cattle drovers from herding their longhorn steers across. William A. Peril crossed a herd in 1864, the same year Samuel Riley Dawson — grandfather of Cora Hollis Smith, 89, of Iraan — met with misfortune at Castle Gap and Horsehead Crossing.

Dawson, en route to California, buried his 2-year-old daughter in the Gap immediately prior to an attack on his caravan by Comanches. The Indians stole several horses and beleagured the emigrants until their water kegs were deplenished, forcing a desperate contingent of men to slip through the line of siege. Riding to Horsehead, they obtained life-saving canteens of water and returned.

The Indians thereafter let them pass, and Dawson crossed the legendary ford where, a generation later, Mrs. Smith also would cross.

THE FOLLOWING YEAR Indians used the rock confines of Castle Gap to stage yet another attack on a wagon train, this one consisting of 123 families. More than a thousand cattle were lost, and the following day the work oxen were driven to Horsehead, where added tragedy occurred.

"The hindmost crowd(ed) the foremost into the treacherous quicksands," said caravan member R. J. Newton, "and only 19 steers, and nine and a half yoke, out of 120 yoke were saved. Two hundred and twenty-one of our oxen died in the Pecos."

The Comanches long-since had learned the value of work oxen and horses, and the caravans that passed unscathed were fortunate.

"Before we reached that stream the Indians slipped in and stole all our horses," a woman recounted in 1954. "We were driving a number of loose cattle in order to have fresh oxen in case our teams gave out. The poor men were compelled to trudge through the deep scorching sand on foot and drive the cattle."

They were lucky. They lost only their mounts. All too often, the cattle drovers who followed paid Horsehead's toll with their lives.

MISD, Greenwood bands to participate in festival

Seven bands from the Midland Independent School District's junior, freshman and high schools, along with the Greenwood High School Band, will participate in the MISD Marching Festival at 6 p.m. Nov. 2 in Midland Memorial Stadium.

The festival, which serves two purposes, allows Midland citizens to see and hear the results of long hours of practice by the 1,500 students and gives the students and their directors an opportunity to practice for the University Interscholastic League Marching Contest Nov. 6, in Ratliff Stadium in Odessa.

Each band will be videotaped as it marches. J.R. McEntyre, Ector County Independent School District coordinator of music, and Tony Anderson, former MHS band director who recently retired from North Mesquite High School, will critique each band on the audio portion of the tape. The students and directors will view and listen to the tapes in order to improve their performances at the UIL contest.

Midlanders welcomed home one of their own Friday night during the West Texas Premiere of "Waltz Across Texas" at Howard Hodge Cinema II.

The movie — filmed here a year ago — stars Terry Jastrow, formerly of Midland, and his wife, Anne Archer. Also present at the premiere was co-star Josh Taylor, better known for his role as Chris Kositcheck on the soap opera "Days of Our Lives."

Funds raised by the $100-a-ticket premiere go to the building fund of High Sky Girls Ranch, located about six miles northwest of Midland. The ranch is a home for 35 girls who, for various reasons, cannot live with their families.

The girls sold 450 tickets to the "tux and boots" affair, which was attended by an estimated 600 persons.

"We should clear something in excess of $30,000" said Dick Blythe, High Sky director. Funds will be used to build two additional cottages and complete a library learning center now under construction.

Aside from the stars, the movie was also attended by director Ernie Day and producer Martin Jurow.

"Waltz Across Texas" was followed by a dinner and dance at Midland Country Club. Music was provided by Pepper Martin and the Fox Band, which was featured in one of the scenes shot at the Stardust.

While most of the men attending the premiere sported black tuxedos, with or without cowboy hats and boots, women showed up in everything from evening gowns to mini-skirts. Couples drove up in vehicles ranging from Datsun pickups to Rolls Royces.

Jastrow and Ms. Archer were greeted warmly and enthusiastically by the crowd as they pulled up in a Rolls Royce. But Josh Taylor seemed to elicit the most spirited response. Girls from High Sky squealed and shrieked as he walked over and kissed several of them. The stars were beset with requests for autographs most of the evening from young and old alike.

Most of the viewers of "Waltz Across Texas" seemed to enjoy the film, which painted a realistic picture of Midland, Texas and the oil business (or "all bidness," as its called in the movie).

"I enjoyed it immensely," Blythe said afterward at the reception. "You've got to expect it to do well here because of Terry and the subject matter. I think it's going to do well anywhere in Texas. I think it's excellent."

"I think the turnout was very good and we certainly raised the money that High Sky Girls Ranch needed," Ms. Archer commented over the noise of the band and several dancers doing the Cotton-Eyed Joe. "From what I've heard, the reaction to the movie has been quite favorable."

"I'm blown away by the response," Jastrow added. "This is my toughest audience because I've grown up with these people. When you judge one of your own you're a little more critical. This was much tougher for me than Dallas." The World Premiere was Oct. 12 in Dallas.

"The response has been remarkable," he continued. "I think the picture speaks for itself."

"We loved it!" said Jane Armstrong and Louis Furche simultaneously. "It's a pretty good idea of how the oil industry goes," he added. Both Midlanders said they knew Jastrow when he was young.

Jastrow, along with his wife, formed a corporation to produce the film, which has been described as a "crude" love story. He said he did it because he had a dream,— to tell the story of Midland, oil and Texas. If Friday evening's gala was any indication, that dream has not only been realized, but has also been successful.

Outing club would bring nature-lovers together

By PATRICK DEAREN
Staff Writer

ODESSA — But for a sudden whim, Patrick Murphy of Odessa might have forever become a part of the nature he loves.

He was in the midst of Big Bend country, where a long hike through the desert had brought him at nightfall to the head of a box canyon and a 25-foot waterfall. He considered making camp near the diamond-shaped rivulets of water at its base, but the lure of a sandy beach to the side proved too strong.

In the night's blackness, Murphy suddenly was awakened — not by sound, but by the absence of such. The crickets had ceased to chirp. The frogs that lived in the waters no longer croaked. The insects that usually buzzed incessantly had halted their nocturnal song.

It began as a deep rumble, then became an angry growl emanating from the cliff above which exploded into a crashing fortissimo that wrenched the canyon. Murphy was picked up, thrown a dozen feet, left shaken and dazed.

In the light of morning, Murphy saw it — a gargantuan boulder crushing earth at the base of the waterfall where he had initially planned to stretch out his sleeping bag.

The boulder missed Murphy on that occasion, though next time it may be a 150-foot Douglas fir or a rampaging grizzly with which to contend.

But Murphy, a computer analyst in a world of ever-increasing technology, has discovered intense meaning in "warming both hands before the nature of fire."

Now, he just wants to bring others who share that oneness with the creation together in a mutually-beneficial organization promoting outdoor activities.

But obstacles loom, as job commitments have forced him to delay initiation of the outing club until late winter or early spring. By then, he hopes, enough interest will have been generated to make the group a success.

"There are a lot of people around here that like to go backpacking, hiking, cross-country skiing, but there's no place close to go," he explained. "The nearest is Guadalupe Mountains National Park or the Big Bend, and they're both four or five hour drives. A lot of them are hesitant about going that far alone.

"We want to operate as a clearing house for people who like to do these things, get them in touch with other people who like to do it."

Murphy described the anticipated membership as consisting of anyone interested in "human-powered activity.... It will be not so much a club as a place, a time and a reason for people to get together." He hopes those who do congregate will include not only backpackers and cross-country skiers but climbers, bikers, canoeists and non-motorized hang glider enthusiasts as well.

Murphy stressed that the as-yet-unnamed outing club will not become involved in political squabbles, as is the Sierra Club. "They are a good organization but they are far too conservative for many people," he said."I am not one who abuses the outdoors but I am not ultra-conservative either.... One major aim of this whole thing is to show people you can have fun and not be destructive."

The organization would consist of "groups within a group" whose respective members would plan specific outings among themselves. Murphy hopes to attract both experienced persons and novices, thereby creating a situation where an interchange of learning can occur.

Murphy, senior computer analyst at Odessa College, was initiated into the wilderness as a youngster when his father took him caving and backpacking in southern New Mexico, and he has grown to appreciate the delicate balance and harmony in nature even more as an adult.

"The (Permian Basin) does have its own type of beauty, but it's awfully refreshing to see pine trees, snow-capped mountains, something besides flatlands," he said.

Persons who share Murphy's desire to see more than sprawling prairieland can obtain additional information about the outing club by calling him at 335-6677 or 563-1146.

City may 'pressure' contractors to aid in fire hydrant restoration

By RICHARD ORR
Staff Writer

"In any business you have to work on certain assumptions," Deputy Fire Chief James Roberts said Friday. "When we see a hydrant, we have to assume it's got water in it."

Such has not been the case lately, however.

Firemen trying to battle Tuesday night's blaze at Polo Park Apartments were somewhat less than happy to find one damaged hydrant that wouldn't work properly and two others with low water pressure.

They also encountered a damaged hydrant at the Warwick Aparments, where a light plane crashed Sept. 24, setting off fires that destroyed one building and seven parked vehicles.

While the problem of damaged or dry hydrants isn't new or unique to Midland, Tuesday night was the first time firefighters encountered low hydrant pressure, caused in large part by extensive construction activity and an apparent communications gap between contractors and city hall.

"It (low pressure) seems centered in areas of new construction on the north and northeast side," said Fire Chief Raymond Lewis.

Lewis said if a contractor fails to re-open all the valves he closed so he could hook into the city water main grid, "it cuts down on the flow to the rest of the line."

If that line is linked to a hydrant, the result is a lot of angry firemen.

A few weeks ago, the Fire Prevention and Engineering Bureau, which sets fire insurance premium rates, spot-checked different areas of the city and discovered "very weak flow" in some places, said Lewis. "It was a whole lot worse than what it was the last time they checked back in 1975 or so."

The bureau found several valves that had been left closed and gave the city 30 days to correct the situation. When inspectors returned two weeks ago, said Lewis, "they found great improvement."

The flow in one hydrant, for instance, had increased from 640 gallons a minute to 3,500.

Some isolated areas of the city require that as much as 1,000 feet of hose be laid between the hydrant and the fire truck, which then pumps the water onto the fire.

While it might take only five minutes to lay 1,000 feet of line, it takes an hour or more to reload the line back on the truck, according to a fire department spokesman.

Consequently, the line is left on the ground and another has to be laid to a different hydrant if the first one doesn't work. To check a hydrant before hooking up to it would consume valuable time that could be used fighting the blaze, according to the spokesman.

"That's why we have to assume the sucker works," said Lewis, noting that in most cases it's a valid assumption.

Normally, the fire department routinely checks hydrants throughout the city twice a year. This year, though, they've been checked four times due to the mounting problem of dry or damaged hydrants.

"In January of this year we went out and checked all the hydrants in town and found a number of them — maybe 20 or 25 — not working," said Roberts. "We sent the list to public works and rechecked them in August. Quite a few had been fixed and we haven't followed up on it since. There's been quite an effort to get them repaired."

"It's getting to be a serious problem," added Lewis.

There are about 3,000 hydrants in the city, and, said Roberts, "If 50 or 60 of them don't work, it's a very small percentage.

"Our problem lately, it seems, is that we managed to hit every one that didn't work. The solution, obviously, is better maintenance. We can check 'em, but we're not equipped to fix 'em.

"But let me emphasize that all the water in the world wouldn't have made any difference at Polo Park. Our response time was three minutes and the first building was already burned to the ground when we got there."

That building was still under construction and hadn't been sheet-rocked or bricked. Fanned by winds in excess of 30 mph, the fire quickly spread to a nearby, partially occupied building. The five residents were safely evacuated, however, and no injuries were reported.

One solution to the low pressure problem, fire officials believe, would be a policy whereby contractors would be required to notify the city whenever valves have to be shut off so city personnel can be on hand to supervise the procedure.

Students in carpentry program 'hammer away' at hard times

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Some fellows, who may have figured that hard times for them were as unalterable as their birthday and mutt, may be amazing themselves.

They're learning a trade — carpentry — to enhance their lives. It may not sound like much, but if you're poor, jobless and unskilled it's a lot.

"I just give them a little pep talk about what this is all about (at the onset)," said Richard W. "Dick" Sampson, the instructor-carpenter, who's teaching 15 jobless fellows to saw, hammer and build things — from stools to tables to a house.

The men get minimum wages — $3.35 an hour — while they're in the intensive four-week course in the United Brotherhood of Carpenters Hall in Midland and funded by a $15,000 grant from the federal government. "I can find out who's good with their dukes," Sampson, who also goes by "Sam," said of specialized woodworking.

After the daily classroom routine, which ends next Friday, the men, with Sampson's aid, will be looking for jobs; they're promised $8.30 an hour on the union scale to start and will have to undergo four years of apprenticeship night school in their seeking journeyman status.

"The big satisfaction," said Sampson, a journeyman carpenter who's been in the trade for 40 years, "is watching these kids being able to handle a set of tools with confidence."

In addition to his years as a craftsman, Sampson taught carpentry on the West Coast for 12 years. He's worked or built just about everything from three-hole outhouses to the towering Bank of America and TransAmerica buildings in California.

"My grandfather had a construction business in San Francisco," said Sampson, "and I grew up straightening nails."

After next week, when their initial carpentry class is over, the men, ages 19 to 45, will be primed to attack the job market.

The men qualified for the CETA (Comprehensive Employment Training Act) by low income (around $4,000 a year for a single person), no income at all or no skill.

"I got a disadvantage," said Monroe Massey who, at 45, is the "old man" in the class. "I ain't got no schooling."

Massey had just finished making a casual table. "I want to take it home, so I'll have something to eat off of," he said. Massey, who hails from Arkansas, said the carpentry program "is real neat, real good, especially for an old guy like me. You learn a trade or better yourself at something you've already done."

Another pre-apprentice student, Earl "Red" Wolf, 29, did some roustabout work in the oil field before he latched onto the program.

"I just went and checked into it," said Wolf. "It's been quite an experience for myself, and I like working with wood."

Said student Norman Niedecken, 27: "I was born and raised a roofer. I learned a lot here. A lot I thought I knew (about carpentry) I didn't know."

"It's pretty thorough," said Richard "Dick" Hiatt, who moved here from Illinois. "It covers a broad range instead of being specialized."

Journeyman carpenter Richard W. "Dick" Sampson checks a measurement on the mini-house which his class built in the course of a four-week pre-apprenticeship carpentry program here.

John Ott, 20, was jobless when he moved to Midland from Pennsylvania. "I'm a Yankee," he said. "Texas is taking care of me." After next week, he plans to go to work hammering and sawing "if they find us a job. Yeah, they're supposed to."

Ernesto Hinojosa, 23, of Alice got into the carpentry program to further his skills.

"It's helped me out a lot. It's encouraging me to keep on learning," he said. "I'm a welder. It's teaching me a lot."

After they've finished the four-week course, the fledgling carpenters will be equipped with tools — from hammers and saws to tapes and squares — to begin their carpentry careers.

State water board trying to gain interest

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The Texas Water Development Board has adopted a resolution authorizing sale of $50 million in bonds — in hopes voters will approve a proposed constitutional amendment Nov. 2 which would increase interest rate limits on state bonds.

At present, the state's general obligation bonds are limited to 6 percent interest, and the Water Development Board has been unable to sell additional bonds in the last few years because of higher rates in the bond market.

In November 1981, voters approved increasing the interest rate on Veterans Land Board bonds from 6 percent to 10 percent maximum.

The amendment to be voted on Nov. 2, Proposition 6, would increase the rate on most state bonds to 12 percent maximum, while retaining the 10 percent limit on Veterans Land Board bonds.

The TWDB is proposing to sell $30 million in bonds for water development purposes and $20 million for water quality purposes.

Board members say they're hoping voters will approve Proposition 6 to allow the bonds to be sold.

The TWDB has had to restrict its loans for water projects to "hardship cases" due to lack of funds, the board notes, with current requests for aid running much ahead of available funds.

Texas Tech tests cotton instruments

LUBBOCK — Electronic instruments give accurate, repeatable measurements of cotton fiber properties, recent tests by Texas Tech University's Textile Research Center indicate.

However, TRC research has found considerable variations in the fiber properties in different parts of whole bales and even in single samples.

"Cotton producers should not interpret the 'accuracy and repeatability' of instruments to mean that the same results can be expected from multiple instrument testing of a given bale," said Donald Johnson, executive vice president of Plains Cotton Growers Inc.

Results from testing a bale of High Plains cotton indicate "short to medium" staple. Fiber lengths ranged from a high of 1.13 inches to .88 of an inch. The average length was almost .998 of an inch.

Length uniformity ranged from 83 percent down to 72 percent and averaged about 78 percent. Micronaire tests gave readings from 4.4 down to 3.8 for a 4.1 average. Strength in grams ranged from 32 to 17 and average just over 24. Leaf content record a high 50, a low of 20 and average 40. Fiber elongation measured from 6.2 percent to 4.3 percent and averaged 4.9.

Beef-grading system won't be changed

COLLEGE STATION — The beef-grading system used by the U.S. Department of Agriculture will remain "as is" in the wake of a survey in which 75 percent of the respondents were against proposed changes in the grading system.

The proposed changes include lowering marbling requirements for prime and choice grades and eliminating the standard grade. The proposal was submitted about a year ago after the National Cattlemen's Association requested that the U.S. Department of Agriculture make several changes to provide beef with less fat and more lean meat.

"Beef grade standards are intended to segregate the beef supply into groups of carcasses with similar attributes of palatability and yields of cuts," said Dr. Ed Uvacek, livestock marketing economist with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service of Texas A&M University. "Grades provide a common language for marketing livestock and meat, and they are the basis on which the voluntary USDA meat-grading service operates."

Texas may have 'peachy' potential

COLLEGE STATION — Texas now boasts about 10,000 acres of peaches, but the potential is there for considerable expansion, according to Dr. Tom Handwerker, Texas Agricultural Extension Service horticulturist.

The potential for growth is strong, since less than 20 percent of the fresh fruit consumed in Texas is actually produced in the state. Last year, some 200,000 peach trees — enough to cover 2,000 acres — were sold to commercial growers, he said.

"Water will be the crucial factor in fruit production," Handwerker said. "It will be the most scarce agricultural resource we have in Texas in the next 20 years, except for land. You need it to grow peaches and other fruit. Water will make or break you; with it, you can grow preaches where they've never been grown before."

Handwerker said that the fruit industry is a major contributor to the almost $10 billion in annual cash receipts from Texas agriculture. "As the state's population continues to grow, there will be increasing pressures for food and fiber production, and we must address a number of critical issues to deal with these pressures."

Texas Rabbit Show to be held at Edna

EDNA — Hundreds of dollars in prize money and a host of trophies and ribbons will be up for grabs Oct. 30 in the annual Texas Rabbit Show here.

The event is open to 4-H, Future Farmers of America or American Rabbit Breeders Association Youth members.

The show will feature 18 classes for bucks and does maturing at eight pounds or more, breeds maturing at less than eight pounds and fur classes. Showmanship classes will be for adults and juniors.

The show, sanctioned by the ARBA youth and the Texas Youth Rabbit Breeders Association, will be at the Jackson County Fair Grounds off Farm Road 822 northwet of Edna. Entry forms are available at Texas Agricultural Extension Service offices.

Texas experiencing massive growth

COLLEGE — Texas had 3 million more people in 1981 than in 1977 and has become the fastest growing state in the Union.

"It's like the state is a giant magnet pulling people here from everywhere," said Dr. Robert Skrabanek, demographer and sociologist with the Texas Agricultural Experiment Station.

"The growth is simply phenomenal; we've never seen anything like this before."

People are shifting to Texas, he said, since the state is in the Sunbelt, has a relatively low unemployment rate and relatively low tax structure."

Today, Texas is the third largest state in the country; California and New York are more populous. In 1960, Texas was rated sixth in population.

Man in Andrews jail in woman's slaying

ANDREWS — Jesus Melendez, address unknown, remained in custody in Andrews County Jail Saturday on charges of slaying a 27-year-old woman 15 miles east of here Oct. 14.

No bond had been set by late Saturday.

Melendez was transferred to Andrews County Jail Friday from Lovington, N.M. He had been arrested in Hobbs on Wednesday and waived extradition.

He is charged in the shooting death of Belenreyes Castillo of Mexico, whose virtually nude body was discovered entangled in a barbed wire fence alongside Highway 176 in eastern Andrews County. She apparently died from a single shotgun wound to the chest, according to law enforcement officials.

Ms. Castillo had been living in Hobbs with a sister for approximately nine months.

Pet care becoming major concern

By VINCE GIORGI
Staff Writer

As her master's truck barrels along the highway, a spirited German shepherd plants an oversize pair of paws on the sleek rim of the pickup box. She scans the horizon, eyes sqinting against the buffeting breeze, and snuffles a snout-full of West Texas air.

But not quite so pretty are the sights seen all too often by area veterinarians. The dog maimed after his master swerved to avoid an armadillo. The leg fracture suffered when the truck slammed to an unexpected halt. Or worst of all, the sorrowful silence after a puppy proves too playful for its rolling playground.

In an average summer, Dr. Tom Green, a Midland veterinarian, sees about five or six such injuries — and sometimes never learns of the fatalities.

Dr. Tom Green

Green said he recently treated a St. Bernard puppy that will never again walk normally, having shattered its leg after tumbling from a pickup. Green has seen fractured skulls, bruised bones and numerous scrapes.

Dr. David Sheen recalls cases where a dog or cat was dragged or hanged by its leash after falling from a moving vehicle.

SHEEN, AN ODESSA veterinarian, said many older dogs will become accustomed to riding in a pickup or open-windowed vehicle.

"But we see a lot of puppies that have jumped out of a pickup, it's just all too common," he said.

Since many pet owners seem unaware of these potential dangers, the Permian Basin Veterinary Medical Association — in conjunction with area television stations — is sponsoring a series of public service announcements in hopes of educating the public about proper pet care.

The announcements are produced by Norden Laboratories and feature several television personalities, members of a group called Actors and Others for Animals, who donated time and talent to the project.

The educational package includes tips on annual vaccinations and check-ups, spaying and neutering and veterinary dental care. Other segments cover checking puppies' collars frequently for fit, the role pets play in comforting elderly people, the dangers of leaving pets in closed cars during summer and the hazards faced by animals riding in pickup boxes or near open automobile windows.

Veterinarians hope such helpful hints will promote more enlightened pet care, and perhaps reduce injuries to Great Danes, Dobermans and other large dogs frequently seen clattering around slippery pickup beds.

"PEOPLE LIKE their dogs to ride in pickups because it gives them a macho image," said Green, observing that "nobody puts a poodle in the back of a pickup."

Green warned that while the dog is often situated to guard the pickup from intruders, it could bite an innocent person and the owner would be liable.

The key to proper pet care, he noted, is common sense, the sort of "horse sense" that's lacking when a person leaves a pet inside a car with doors locked and windows up. Green said heat accumulates so rapidly inside a vehicle that some pets will suffer heat stroke within five minutes.

"We see a lot of people that forget that their dogs grow," said Green, noting the three or four cases annually where an animal's fur and skin engulf its collar because the owner apparently forgot that the collar must expand with the animal.

As with humans, common sense health care for animals requires regular checkups, said Green. "The annual examination is not any less important to a dog than it is to a person," he said.

He recommended that examinations include vaccinations for distemper, hepatitis, leptospirosis, parainfluenza and parvovirus. Annual rabies vaccinations are required in Midland.

Also, "we are seeing a tremendous increase of heartworm in Midland," Green said. Heartworms lodge in an animal's heart, blocking the flow of blood and often causing premature congestive heart failure.

HE SAID OWNERS should have their pets checked for heartworm and placed on a preventive medication program.

For elderly people, or people living alone, "a pet serves a major function in their psychological well-being," said Green. "We see a lot of older people that their pets are literally all they live for."

Consequently, Green said, veterinarians are being called upon to perform many medical procedures — including teeth cleaning, root canals, orthodontics and cataract surgery — that people might only associate with health care for humans.

"We have more people who are willing to do the very best for their animal," he said.

Of course, not all pet owners are willing to bear the expense of correcting their pet's overbite.

But Green, Sheen and some concerned actors are hopeful that the televised pet-care tips will narrow the gap between the owner who cares enough to fit Barky with braces and the owner who carries Prince in the box of a perilous pickup.

Pet care commercials will be aired soon in the Permian Basin area to teach pet owners the proper way to let their animals ride in a vehicle. Its head out the window may be cooler for this black labrador, but the dog could be seriously injured if the driver had to stop suddenly.

PBHS nearing completion of accreditation process

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

After almost two years of preparation, the day of accreditation almost has arrived for Permian Basin High School.

On Wednesday and Thursday, the visiting committee for accreditation with the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools will visit the campus to evaluate the program through class observation, interviews with instructors and administrators and a review of the school's self-study.

According to Glen Walton, administrator of the private high school which is now in its second year, the process for accreditation has been long, but it also has been productive.

"It's an extremely exciting process," Walton said Thursday. "There has been a lot of hard work but we've had some very insightful people helping us."

Last year, SACS visiting team chairperson Dr. Phyllis Benson, who is headmistress of Radford School in El Paso, visited with Walton and PBHS instructors to offer advice on the self-study.

The study, which involved input from students, parents, instructors and members of the board, identified the educational needs of the students and how to best meet those needs, the clarity of the purpose of the school, an awareness of the strengths and weaknesses of the instructional program and an increase in confidence of the school from students and the community.

"Our major strength, we believe, is the one to one method of instruction," Walton explained, referring to the college preparatory curriculum and the one student per one teacher instruction. "Of course, that is the philosophy of the school. It is the most important tenet of the school."

PBHS, which opened its doors for the first time last September offering the personal one to one instruction unique to Midland, graduated four students in May, all of whom presently are enrolled in colleges in Texas and California. According to Walton, there has been a 40 percent increase in student enrollment since this time last year.

Modeled after the Alexander Smith Academy in Houston and the Alexander School in Dallas, the administration at PBHS received much support and many suggestions from consultants from the two schools and SACS. H.E. Phillips, past executive secretary of the Texas Committee of SACS, visited the campus last November to evaluate the progress of the school and its standards for accreditation purposes.

In addition, Walton has made trips to Austin to visit with SACS officials to prepare for the on-sight visit, which will begin Wednesday.

Members of the visiting committee include Benson and Dr. Paul Jungmeyer, academic vice president of McMurray College in Abilene; Sandra Maddox, Region 10 Education Service Center program coordinator, instructional services department; and Dr. James Milson, department of curriculum and instruction at the University of Texas at El Paso.

While Walton expressed his appreciation for the assistance rendered by SACS and other schools, he emphasized the role the faculty played in the process.

"They have been so helpful and it really couldn't have been done without them," he said. He also pointed out that students and parents were of tremendous help in the self-study.

"We distributed student opinion inventories, parent opinion inventories and teacher opinion inventories," he explained. "They completed them and returned them to us so that we could study the results of those, which provided us with information in terms of a basis of change."

While the school has received help from outside influences during the accreditation process, Walton pointed out "we're grown now and about to be on our own."

If members of the visiting team give their approval Thursday, they will submit it to SACS which will formally approve accreditation during its regular meeting in December in Atlanta, Ga.

The self-study also emphasized the philosophy of the school which basically is to provide superior alternative education, he said.

"Through the alternative of one to one education, intellectual ability, emotional stability and social skills are fostered for personal, professional and social success," he said. "The emphasis is on nurturing ideals such as learning is individual and continuous, abilities are individual but not limited and that education is both a right and a responsibility.

"We want to turn out a well-rounded individual who is striving toward a productive and ethical life," he added. "We want our individuals to be cognizant of the needs of society."

Please explain to me the difference between Money Market Certificates and Certificates of Deposit. Thanks. — Betty Boyett

ANSWER: John Cutbirth with The First National Bank says there is no real difference, because both are certificates of deposit, of which there are three types. The money market CD's rate is based on the treasury bill rates and there is a limit to what the institution can pay. There is the CD for $100,000 or more in which it is up to the institution to decide the rate. Finally, there is the CD for under $100,000, which has low statutory rates.

Recently I was in a local variety store on Saturday afternoon. Several aisles were roped off, and tables were covered with plastic.

Upon questioning an employee of the store, I was told that the items were already marked for a sale that would not begin until the following day.

My question, is this legal? Can the store actually prevent me from buying something in these areas and can they charge me the regular price when the sale price is clearly marked? Thank you. — Jody Cook, Lamesa

ANSWER: Yes, this is "totally legal," according to an attorney with West Texas Legal Services.

This practice is not against the law. However, if all aisles in the store were roped off and only a few items marked, this could be false advertising.

Pete Davies, manager of the TG&Y in Midland, says there is a time factor involved in getting sale merchandise ready the afternoon before a sale is scheduled to be advertised and begin the next morning. These sale items have to be marked and ready to go by the time the store opens the next day. He also said he had never been questioned about the procedure.

In the unpaved overflow parking lot at the course, an irrigation system has already been installed. I understand there are plans to pave this area, and it would seem that the system would be covered up with paving. Also, sprayer type heads have been installed in the planters at the entrance to the paved parking area. I think these should be the bubbler-type heads to prevent wasting water and possibly spraying cars in the lot. What can you find out? — Barbara Larsen

ANSWER: Wayne Kohout, director of the Midland Parks and Recreation Department, says the irrigation system has been installed in the unpaved parking lot because there are plans to make this a grassy area until, if and when, the department will have the funds to pave the lot. In the meantime, which Kohout says could range from two years or longer, the lot will be covered with grass, preventing blowing dust, etc., and will not be an eyesore.

Kohout adds that some of the irrigation pipe will be lost when the lot can be paved, but the heads and valves are designed so they can be removed and saved before the paving. The landscape plan for the course has been approved by the city, but the final inspection of improvements has not been made, according to Kohout. He will check the sprinkler heads in the planted beds to be sure they are the correct type.

Prince Andrew

LONDON (AP) — Prince Andrew has been chosen to carry out the royal family's traditional duty of switching on the Regent Street Christmas lights in London's West End, Buckingham Palace has announced.

The 22-year-old prince, in his second official public engagement, is expected to speak briefly on Nov. 18 before flicking the switch. The task was performed last year by Princess Diana, his sister-in-law.

Prince Andrew, who flies a helicopter for the Royal Navy, was in the news earlier this month when he took a Caribbean vacation with movie actress Koo Stark, who appeared in some erotic movies.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Motions seeking new blood tests in a paternity suit against actor Chad Everett have been turned down because of a pending appeal of a previous finding in Everett's favor.

"I have ruled that I have no jurisdiction and your comments should be directed to the appellate court," Superior Court Judge Raymond Cardenas said Friday in denying a motion by Shelia Scott and an attorney for her son, Dale, 9.

Ms. Scott had asked for extended blood tests to protect the child in the event she or Everett died before an appeals court ruling.

A jury ruled last November that Everett, the star of the "Medical Center" television series, did not father the boy when he visited Ms. Scott's apartment on Aug. 16, 1972. He denied having intercourse with her.

Ms. Scott, who had been an extra on the TV series, had lost two trials on the matter previously — in 1973 and 1978 — but those rulings were reversed on appeal on technical grounds.

A new kind of blood test ruled admissible in the last trial indicated that if intercourse took place between Everett and Ms. Scott, it was 95 percent certain he fathered the boy.

However, Everett's attorney argued that no intercourse had taken place and said two other men could have fathered the boy.

O'Neill in fair, stable condition

BEDFORD HILLS, N.Y. (AP) — Actress Jennifer O'Neill, found bleeding from a gunshot wound to the abdomen in her sprawling 22-room mansion, apparently shot herself accidentally, police said Saturday.

The star of the movie "Summer of '42" was in fair and stable condition and under intensive care after surgery, officials of the Northern Westchester Hospital Center said.

Miss O'Neill's wound was "accidental" and "apparently self-inflicted," said Detective Charles Sammann.

At least four people, including her husband, were in the house at the time of the shooting Friday evening, Sammann said. He refused to identify the other three, but said they had been questioned.

Sammann said the former model was alone in her second-floor bedroom, on the bed and bleeding heavily, when police answered a call from a "hysterical" woman.

The bullet passed through her body, police said. The gun was recovered, but police would not disclose its caliber.

Miss O'Neill, 33, lives in a colonial-style mansion in this affluent Westchester County community with her fourth husband and business manager, John Lederer, and her two children, 15-year-old Aimee and 1-year-old Reis.

Lederer was downstairs when the shot was fired, officials said.

Police learned of the shooting when Mount Kisco Police Lt. Ted Brugger received a call from a telephone operator at 6:06 p.m. Friday. The operator told him there was a woman on the line saying she had been shot in the abdomen and was in great pain.

Brugger said he asked the woman, whom he described as "hysterical," for her address and it took several seconds before she was able to answer. Brugger said he called Bedford Hills police and also sent Officer Frank McCann of his department.

"I found her barely conscious and in tremendous pain," said McCann.

A hospital employee said Miss O'Neill, who was wearing brown slacks and a sweater, arrived conscious and screaming, "I can't breathe, I can't breathe! Please help me!"

Hospital administrator Armando Galella said Miss O'Neill underwent surgery at 6:36 p.m. and was out by about 8 p.m. Her husband was "very upset" as he waited in the emergency room, McCann said.

Miss O'Neill, chestnut-haired with blue-gray eyes and chiseled features, earned up to $80,000 a year as a model before her movie career was launched with "Rio Lobo" in 1970, starring John Wayne.

She has since appeared in "A Force of One," "Scanners," "The Innocents," "Whiffs," "Lady Ice" and "Caravans," but won most attention as the older woman who seduced a teen-age boy in "Summer of '42."

The daughter of a wealthy banker, Miss O'Neill was born in Brazil and grew up mostly in New York. She was modeling by age 15 with contracts to both Vogue and Seventeen magazines.

Renwood brings world-class acts to Midland

By GEORGIA TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

Most Midlanders are aware that Midland faces and places have been captured in the movie "Waltz Across Texas." The full-length motion picture was filmed here last October and November. Currently being released in Texas, "Waltz Across Texas" will be released nationwide this year.

But how many Midlanders know that sounds of the Midland-Odessa Symphony, filmed in February of 1981 by Renwood Inc., have already been heard nationwide in the "Computers Are People, Too" promotional film for the Walt Disney movie "Tron?"

" 'Computers Are People, Too' includes segments of Renwood's documentary ballet film featuring Yoko Ichino and the Midland-Odessa Symphony," said Renwood's president, Zuma Renaud.

"This gives the Midland-Odessa Symphony, as well as Renwood, the distinction of being part of a Disney promotional film which aired internationally this past summer. It was aired in the Midland-Odessa area in June of 1982 and for the second time on Aug. 22, 1982.

"IN FACT, WHEN I was in Honolulu this August, I turned on the set in my room out of habit. As I walked away from the TV, the sound of the Midland-Odessa Symphony caused me to turn around and see Yoko Ichino dancing on the screen. I had accidently turned on the set during the 'Computers Are People, Too' film." Mrs. Renaud then added, "Miss Ochino will perform here with Midland's Permian Civic Ballet Company in December."

The air space was free, but the filming wasn't.

"These segments were filmed at a cost of $29,000 to Renwood," Mrs. Renaud said. "We felt the exposure was great and when our Academy Award winning producer, Denis Sanders, suggested we let Disney use it, we agreed. This is something we felt we could do for the Midland-Odessa Symphony and we are happy to do it."

Miss Ichino's performance as well as her partner's, Helgi Tomasson (who does not appear in the segment included in "Computers"), with the symphony was one of the season's high points. The performance was filmed by Renwood Inc. for the purpose of including it in a major documentary film chronicling the life and career of prima ballerina assoluta Mia Slavenska.

COMPLETION OF the documentary has been postponed due to the deaths of several of the primary parties involved in the project.

"The film has been put on the back burner due to the death of Rebekah Harkness and Valerie Bettis, choreographer for 'Streetcar Named Desire.' "

Mrs. Harkness, was, until her death, president of the Harkness Ballet Foundation, Inc., and a member of the board of directors of the John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts in Washington, D.C.

Renwood has several other projects going which are not on the "back burner."

Primary among these projects is the new Select Series being offered by Renwood. The concert series, which begins Nov. 4 with Margaret Whiting, includes Shari Lewis with the Texas Little Symphony Jan. 6, Bobby Short direct from the Cafe Carlyle in New York City March 22, and Roberta Peters April 26. (For more information on the performers call Renwood at 697-7863.)

TOTAL COST for the four concerts per person is $200 (which is tax deductible).

"It is expensive, but it is so because of the artists' fees and the limited seating at Theatre Midland (approximately 500 seats in Theatre I)," Mrs. Renaud said, adding dryly, "World class entertainers demand world class fees."

As a non-profit organization, Renwood Inc. is not in competition with any other non-profit organization in West Texas. The organization belongs to, among others, Auditorium in Midland, Midland Arts Assembly, West Texas Youth Orchestra, Odessa Cultural Council, American Symphony Orchestra League and the Big Spring Symphony Association.

"The reason we called the series the Select Series is because the people that choose to go there are selective in their choice of entertainment. We feel that Midland deserves the best in professional entertainment and we are providing this caliber of artists for their enjoyment."
— Zuma Renaud

"We are an enhancing, rather than a competing organization," Mrs. Renaud said. "We help other non-profits by making available resources drawn from a network of national contacts within the arts, by serving as consultants in specified areas of need, and by serving as the producer for major entertainment events used as fund raises by organizations not usually involved in entertainment events," Mrs. Renaud said.

"ONE EXAMPLE IS our bringing the national touring production of 'Deathtrap,' starring Leslie Nielsen, to Big Spring for the Big Spring Symphony Guild so it (the Big Spring guild) can bring the Midland-Odessa Symphony to Big Spring. And we acted as the catalytic agent that made possible the licensing of Midland Community Theatre to locally produce 'Deathtrap.'" ("Deathtrap" is currently onstage in Theatre I at Theatre Midland.)

"Renwood is not soliciting large sums of money from either the private or corporate sector in West Texas. We rely solely upon the proceeds from the Select Series to fund our operating costs," Mrs. Renaud said.

The organization functions with a minimum staff and as little overhead as possible.

"We have one paid employee, Sam Woodward, a one-room office with no windows, and we are barely making our expenses by charging the $50 price per-concert ticket.

"This price includes champagne and catered hors d'oeuvres an hour before," Mrs. Renaud said. "Actually if we didn't serve that it wouldn't make $5 difference in price. The cost of this series comes from the artists' fees and the lack of a performing arts center in Midland.

"IF WE HAD a 2,000-seat auditorium, we could charge $50 for the season. But we don't," she said.

One of the objectives of Renwood Inc. is providing Midlanders with an evening out in the style it is done in such metropolitan areas as New York, London and Dallas. This style includes serving hors d'oeuvres and providing a bar. (Liquor cannot be served at either high school or at Chaparral Center.)

Mrs. Renaud is not a newcomer to West Texas; she has lived here since 1970.

"We moved to Midland (from Fort Worth) because we wanted to," Mrs. Renaud said. "People who live in Midland are wonderful and I wouldn't live anywhere else in the world.

"The community organizations are among the finest in the country, but there are many people here who have moved to Midland from other metropolitan areas who miss professional entertainment provided in a night-out-on-the-town atmosphere, therefore we decided to offer this select series," Mrs. Renaud said.

THE USE OF the word select in the concert presentation has evoked some interesting calls.

Laughing, Mrs. Renaud said: "No, you don't have to wear a tuxedo. Yes, the party before is for everyone." It was apparent she'd had a great deal of practice answering these two questions on the phone.

"The reason we called the series the Select Series is because the people that choose to go there are selective in their choice of entertainment. We feel that Midland deserves the best in professional entertainment and we are providing this caliber of artists for their enjoyment."

Pausing, Mrs. Renaud added, "We have to start somewhere in providing this type of entertainment for the public. And the Select Series is our beginning."

'Monsignor' movie of relationships, not action

When Christopher Reeve swooped down from the stratospheric ozone ("Superman" and "Superman II") long enough to take on the challenging role as a homosexual playwright in "Deathtrap," (released earlier this year) he started people guessing about where his career was heading.

But as Reeve said then, it is a matter of growing with each role and taking a chance — stretching. Enter "Monsignor," an exercise in on-screen calisthenics for Reeve.

Reeve portrays John Flaherty, an American priest who rises through the politicized corridors of the Vatican (at the end of World War II) to become the main mover and shaker of beleaguered papal finances. But in his unorthodox manner of balancing the books he gains the enmity of his peers and "betters," which threatens to topple the financial empire built not on greed, but ecclesiastical need.

There is a love story too — well, almost. You see, sometimes Reeve dresses up as an army lieutenant and goes into town to make deals with the Italian Mafia, who buy the stores of Vatican cigarettes (priests smoke?) and sell them for a profit on the black market. One day he meets a young postulate (Genevieve Bujold) from a convent in Rome, and it is instant love. Without much contemplation they both throw chastity to the wind and only her eventual discovery that he is a monsignor and therefore "married" to the church puts a halt to the interlude.

It is a curious and unsatisfying relationship. Almost as an afterthought and not really developed in the plot, the two struggle to look like secular lovers but it never works. The usual casting genius of Mike Fenton and Jane Feinberg is lacking in this combination, though the supporting cast is superb.

Playwright-turned-actor Jason Miller who, incidentally, played the priest in "The Exorist," is now the antithesis as Don Appolini, head of a Mafia family. Miller is marvelous as the cold, calculating, yet devoutly religious man, who has one code of ethics for business and another one for the church. And Lenardo Cimino as the Pope has the presence that suggests humility speaks louder than pride. A small man who seems to get smaller in each scene, Cimino finally becomes all eyes as he struggles to stay alive long enough to see the Church through its crisis.

"Monsignor," which might bring back memories of Tom Tryon in Otto Preminger's "The Cardinal," has Reeve age — moving from a serious yet hopeful young man to a serious but unhappy Cardinal. Reeve makes the transition facially — from tightly pursed lips in his youth to a tightly clenched jaw in middle age.

An uneven performance, Reeve is at his best when playing it light as he does as a young chaplain during the war. Reeve finds himself in a nighttime battle crawling along the shattered ground until he reaches an occupied foxhole. A huddled soldier asks, "What in God's name are you doing here chaplain?" And Reeve answers, "That about sums it up!"

"Monsignor" is long and slow moving. It is a movie of relationships, not action; and although individual scenes, in most cases, work well, the total effort is draining. The screenplay by Abraham Polonsky and Wendell Mayes, based on a novel by Jack Alain Leger, leaves Reeve without motivation and the relationship between Reeve and Bujold without true resolution.

As for the direction, Frank Perry lends a heavy hand that fails to spark the fire that lies just beneath the surface of this movie. Even photographer Bill Williams is held to claustrophobic sound sets, infrequently giving us a glimpse of the incredibly beautiful Roman countryside. But it is the quasi-Godfather theme of John Williams lilting in the background and obscuring environmental sound, that really rankles.

Rated R, "Monsignor," will probably be remembered more for what it could have been than what it is.

Day always does professional, competent job

EDITOR'S NOTE: Entertainment writer Georgia Temple was in Dallas Oct. 12 covering the world premiere of "Waltz Across Texas" when she once again made the acquaintance of the movie's director, Ernest Day. This story reflects her observations at the premiere, and an interview done with Day when "Waltz Across Texas" was being filmed here last October and November. She also talked with him prior to the Friday West Texas premiere.

By GEORGIA TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

He was standing alone in the Dallas Loews Anatole atrium following the screening of the Midland-filmed "Waltz Across Texas." With almost 1,000 on hand for the gala world premiere along with the Anatole's normal Tuesday night traffic, the atrium was anything but empty. His hands tucked inside his pockets, he looked just like any bystander.

He wasn't.

While all the movie's celebrities, as well as the personalities there who had nothing to do with the movie, were surrounded by circles of media representatives and fans, the movie's director, Ernest Day, was standing nonchalantly and as inconspicuously as he could outside the limelight. He wasn't noticed because he didn't want to be.

A very private gentleman (in the true sense of the word), Day is modest and reticent about his achievements. For a man who has been associated with as many major motions pictures as Day has — "Dr. Zhivago," "Lawrence of Arabia," "All Quiet on the Western Front," "Ryan's Daughter," "Becket," "Exodus," "A Clockwork Orange," (the list goes on and on and on and includes three James Bond movies) — he is without a sales pitch.

HE CARRIES himself as one who has worked hard, knows what he's capable of and doesn't feel the need to sell himself or his achievements to anyone, characteristics which are unusual and refreshing in this business.

Day's love for movie-making began more than 30 years ago. As a youth, Day would see every film which came to his hometown in England.

"I wanted to be in the movies and that was it," Day said in a Midland interview held while the movie was being filmed here. "The fascination has always been with me."

He started in the business when he was either 15 or 16 (and he's never been out of work since). From the beginning, he knew he wanted to be a director.

"When you start in this business, you need to know which way you want to go. I always wanted to direct.

"The camera is the thing that puts it on the screen," Day said. So that is where he began.

"I WAS VERY fortunate in that I started working in the '50s with John Ford when he was filming 'The Quiet Man' in Ireland. He's a past master.

"Mixing with people like that you learn so much. You absorb good things and some things that you don't need." Pausing, Day added smiling, "But mostly you need it all."

When asked if among the many films he has worked on he had a favorite, Day replied, "Apart from 'Lawrence of Arabia,' 'Becket' was my favorite. And 'The Quiet Man.'" After thinking for a moment, he added, "Every movie you do has interest because you never stop learning."

The question of how he became involved in "Waltz Across Texas" was met with a typically low-key Ernest Day response: "Because Anne wanted me to."

The story floating around the set when they were filming here went something like this: The two had just finished filming "Green Ice" in Mexico. Day had been the director on the project. When it came time to find a director for "Waltz," Miss Archer knew very clearly and without question the director she wanted. She was quoted as having said, emphatically, "I want Ernie Day."

The story was true.

AFTER DIRECTING Miss Archer in Mexico, Day said of her acting ability, "The knowledge is there; it's second nature with her."

When the filming for "Waltz Across Texas" was completed, Day had over four hours of footage.

Ernest Day peers through a lense as he directs a scene during the filming of "Waltz Across Texas" in Midland. Day wound up as director of the movie at the request of one of the film's stars, Anne Archer.

"The first cut of the film was mine — that's the director's cut. Then Martin Jurow (the movie's producer) and I worked closely together (on the next cuts)," Day said of the editing process which was done in California this past spring.

The movie as Terry Jastrow and Anne Archer first saw it was over two hours long, Day said. Unfortunately another 30 minutes had to go to have the correct length film. So the final product, which is one hour and 39 minutes long, reflects input from Day, Jurow, Jastrow and Miss Archer.

Day has a good feeling about the reception "Waltz Across Texas" would receive.

"This movie is not dragging any skeletons out. It's a love story with an oil background. We had a lot of experts checking the background information, and I'm confident the people of Texas will like it."

HIS REMARKS about the project were spontaneous — "Anybody who can raise money to do movies today, has my admiration. It takes a tremendous effort and a lot of guts to do it."

During the Dallas premiere, it was said of Day that he was a man who appeared when he was needed, did his job in a quietly competent and professional manner, and vanished when he was through.

Well put.

So it was no surprise that after the screening when the festivities in the form of a post-premiere party began, Day was there. But when it came time to take his bows onstage as the others had done, well...

"Will Ernest Day the director please step up to the mike," Vern Lundquist, the emcee, asked. Peering into the crowd, Lundquist said, "I saw him here a few minutes ago. Ernest Day? Where are you?"

Your ERA Real Estate Specialist is now offering a worry-free way to buy and sell a home-the Sellers Security Plan.

First, the Sellers Security Plan can advance up to $100,000 on the equity in your present home to use as a down payment on your next home, providing you purchase that house through an ERA approved broker and your present home qualifies.

Then if your house hasn't sold after 210 days, ERA will buy it, at a price and terms you agree to when you accept the plan.

A minimal application fee and certified appraisal are required to see if your home qualifies.

The ERA Sellers Security Plan. Equity advance and assured sale at a price you can live with.

*Some conditions and limitations apply. To see if you qualify, call your ERA Real Estate Specialist and review the Sellers Security Plan contract.

The first year's payment and buyer qualification will be calculated equivalent to a rate of 8¼% for 95% loan-to-value. Interest will be charged at a rate of 13¼% for the first 6 months of the loan. After the first 6 months interest will be charged at the most recent 6months Treasury Bill rate plus 4.25%. Payments on these mortgages are graduated so as to increase the principal and interest payments 7.50% each year for the next 4 years. At the end of the first 5 year period, the graduation in payments will cease. A new payment schedule will be computed using a variable rate mortgage to amortize the remaining balance over the remaining 25 years of the mortgage based upon the then current Treasury Bill rate plus 4.25%. The 7½% maximum increase can be more if the original loan principle exceeds 125%. At each 5 year anniversary date, the payment may be adjusted to allow the remaining payments to fully amortize the loan. ANNUAL PERCENTAGE RATE APPROXIMATELY 14.38%

BALLOONING:

A sport that leaves you up in the air

Shortly after 5 a.m. the phone rang (and rang and rang until I clawed my way out of bed to answer it), and a disgustingly cheerful voice on the other end perked, "Good morning!"

Personally, I didn't consider this ungodly hour to be morning.

This Saturday was the fifth day we had tentatively planned to go up in a hot air balloon; each of the previous times our plans had been canceled due to bad weather. The person on the phone was Tom Lynch, one of few balloonists in the Midland-Odessa area.

As I sat on the steps shivering and waiting for the photographer, it seemed I was surrounded by inky blackness — I guess that's where the phrase "It's always darkest before the dawn" originated. Although it did seem considerably lighter once I forced my eyes open.

As we pulled up in front of The University of Texas of the Permian Basin, two pilots — the other is Jill Anderson of Odessa — and their crews were illuminated by the headlights of several vehicles as they prepared one of the balloons for inflation. Nearly everyone wore T-shirts, jackets, patches and pins sporting balloons.

Tom broke the pre-dawn silence by starting the inflater fan — the noise resembled that of a lawn mower — and aimed it toward the mouth of the balloon. The yellow, orange and red envelope, which was spread out on the grass, began to ripple and billow and rapidly fill with air. As the balloon grew I couldn't help thinking of a child blowing a gigantic chewing gum bubble.

Tom motioned to me to step inside the envelope. The interior was immense, almost cathedral-like. It holds 56,000 cubic feet of air.

After the balloon was partially inflated he lit the burner, which was on its side and facing the mouth of the envelope. Flames shot out as far as seven feet — the burner puts out 12 million British thermal units (Btu) of heat — and made things hot for the two crew members holding the envelope open. Even so, they wore gloves and jackets, and had their backs toward the burner.

As the heated air slowly caused the envelope to rise off its side and float upright, Tom had to keep the flames aimed toward the center of the opening, being careful not to start a grass fire or scorch the envelope or the crew. The metal plate upon which the burner sat was attached to the envelope by cables, and the basket, or gondola, hung from the plate. As the balloon rose it tipped the basekt upright. We were almost set to take off.

Tom's balloon, "Impossible Dream," was tethered to two vehicles. It could not be used in free flight because it had not been inspected for over a year. During free flight a hot air balloon is classified as an aircraft and must meet certain requirements, such as an annual inspection. While tethered it is considered to be a balloon, and an inspection isn't necessary.

Tom began giving rides. With a blast from the burner, the balloon lightly lifted off and floated upwards. There was very little wind — that is the reason for getting up before dawn — and the landings were gentle. About every minute the pilot would turn on the burner for five or six seconds to keep the balloon afloat. The noise was like that of a gas burner on a stove, magnified to a volume that made my ears hurt. Conversations had to be worked around the noise: "When are you WOOOSHHH leaving for Albuquerque?"

As the crew began preparing Jill's balloon, "Celebra-

Balloons ain't just kid stuff

It sounded so simple. Dave Munger, a 37-year-old hot air balloon pilot, explained the basics of a balloon, "It's like a big cigarette lighter and a pillow case."

The Midlander then spent 2½ hours complicating his description by detailing the equipment, principles, costs and requirements of hot air ballooning.

Like cars, small, private balloons can range in price from $7,000 to $20,000. "For a brand new balloon you're going to spend at least $10,000," said Jill Anderson, an Odessa pilot. "You can buy a single-person balloon for $5,000 to $6,000, and a used one is quite a bit less."

And that's just the beginning. The instruction and flight fees for obtaining a pilot's license are approximately $1,500; the annual inspection, required before a balloon can be used in free flight, runs around $150; and insurance is about $500 a year. A typical hour-long ride may use 20 gallons of propane, at 85 cents a gallon. Add to that other miscellaneous expenses, such as fuel used by the chase crew who follows the balloon and picks it up at the landing site.

"Mine costs about $100 an hour to operate," Ms. Anderson said. "It's an expensive hobby." She had to buy a pickup just to transport her balloon.

So why is the number of hot air balloonists, according to Balloon Federation of America estimates, increasing at a rate of about 25 percent a year?

"It's an emotional thing," said Tom Lynch, another area pilot. "It's exciting and thrilling and exhilarating like no other form of entertainment."

Costs can be cut somewhat by belonging to a balloon club which jointly owns one or more balloons. Munger, Lynch and Ms. Anderson are organizing such a club for the Midland-Odessa area.

A balloonist must have a Federal Aviation Administration license to pilot a hot air balloon. He must first apply for a student pilot's license and attend ground school. After six hours of in-flight instruction he can obtain his instructor's permission to fly solo. Ten hours of flight time is required to get a pilot's license, as well as passing oral, written and flight tests.

In addition to instruction, a pilot has to develop a sense for flying. "So much of flying is just feel and skill that you learn," Ms. Anderson maintained. "You've got to develop a good feel for the balloon. You've got instruments, but you can't fly by instruments because there's a six- to seven-second lapse from the time you hit the burner, so you always have to be ahead of the balloon."

"He needs to be observant and aware of the environment, watching for things such as power lines," Munger added. "He has to be paying attention."

Balloons have to follow the same flight regulations as aircraft, Munger explained. "The only difference is that balloons have the right of way, because they're less maneuverable than an airplane.

"Balloons are required to have contrasting colors so they are easy to see," he continued. "You also have to have a certain amount of visibility, because most balloonists fly VFR (according to visual flight rules, rather than by instruments). Therefore, you don't fly close to clouds, and usually you don't fly at night — you need aircraft

Inexpensive decorating ideas use wallpaper

By BARBARA MAYER
AP Newsfeatures

Are you on the lookout for some inexpensive do-it-yourself decorating ideas to perk up your home?

• Cover three mailing tubes of different heights with metallic wallpaper and slip clay or glass pots inside them. Group the three together to make an indoor planter area.

• Buy or make two different size plywood boxes. Cover each one with straw matting or other grass cloth-textured wall covering. Stack one box on top of the other for an easy and inexpensive contemporary coffee table.

• Make a decorative folding screen with two or three hinged plywood panels covered in a wallpaper pattern that matches your decor.

• Create interest at the end of a long hall by wallpapering a "garden view" or trompe l'oeil scene on the back wall.

The versatility of these simple-to-execute ideas is based on wall covering. It is this versatility that helps explain why wallpaper is coming back into fashion after several decades of being relegated to the kitchen and bathroom.

At a recent discussion in New York sponsored by the National Home Fashions League, some industry executives offered evidence that wall coverings are being used more frequently as homemakers concentrate on upgrading their quarters with do-it-yourself projects rather than moving or engaging in costly new decorating schemes.

To some extent, the ups and downs of wall coverings seem to have no rhyme or reason. As Lyn Peterson, president of Motif Designs, pointed out: "Ever since it was first invented, wallpaper has been going in and out of style with regularity."

After enjoying great popularity in the era just after World War II, wallpaper went out of fashion between the 1950s and '70s.

Last year, however, sales of approximately 125 million rolls were recorded. Though this is far below the 400 million rolls sold annually in the 1940s, the executives see definite evidence that wallpaper is once again on the rise.

Changes in the product as well as its display and selling methods have made it easier to choose and use than before. As one panelist said, "The average wallpaper and paint store of 25 years ago had 50 or so musty books stacked 4 feet high on a table somewhere in the back."

Today, said Neil Janovic, a paint and wallpaper retailer in New York, many specialty stores display hundreds of sample books in well-lighted, systematically-arranged viewing areas. In addition, many stock wallcoverings so a customer can see, touch and walk away with her choice instead of having to special order and wait for it.

According to Lionel Libson of GTR Wall Coverings, growing numbers of subtle textural wallpapers are available in colors designed to go with those current in other home furnishings products. Such wallpapers are more appropriate for the living room and bedroom than more strident and "trendy" patterns would be, he said.

"On the commercial side, wall coverings are being specified by architects and designers of large hotels and office buildings more often because they find they add warmth to the settings," said Libson.

Homemade soup super for hearty nourishment

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
AP Food Editor

SPLIT PEA SOUP

Excellent flavor and made a new way.

2-pound smoked boneless pork butt

1½ cups green split peas, rinsed in cold water

1 medium (3 or 4 ounces) onion, peeled

3 medium (each 3 ounces) carrots, pared

Leafy tops and thin stems from 2 large celery ribs

4 whole cloves

Salt and pepper to taste

In a 5-quart saucepot bring butt (stockinet cover removed) and 2 quarts water to a boil; simmer, covered, until tender when a fork inserted in center turns easily — about 1½ hours. With a large fork, remove butt and refrigerate, covered, for another meal. Measure cooking liquid and add enough water to it to make 2 quarts; return to saucepot with split peas, onion, carrot, celery tops and cloves; bring to a boil; simmer, covered, until peas are tender — about 1½ hours. Without removing vegetables or cloves, whirl in 2 batches in an electric blender until smooth. Stir in salt and pepper. Serve at once. Or chill, covered, overnight and reheat, thinning if desired, with water or fat-free chicken or beef broth.

Bissell is also a graduate of the U.S. Army Command and General Staff College at Fort Leavenworth, Kan. (1970), and Industrial College of the Armed Forces, National Security Management School (1972). He was promoted to the rank of Colonel in 1974.

Bissell studied art at Odessa College and Texas Tech University, and under noted artists Bud Biggs, Tony Van-Hasselt, Edgar A. Whitney, C. Warren Cullar, Jon Birdsong, Michael McCullough, Barbara Brown, Jim Tillotson and Zoltar Szabo.

He has entered competition in area, regional and national shows, having won awards in 21 of the last 23 shows he has entered. He received the El Paso Art Association's annual award for "outstanding service in support of the fine arts in El Paso" in 1981. He has held one-man shows in El Paso, Midland, Lawton, Okla., and Washington, D.C. He is represented by galleries in Texas, Maryland, Washington, Virginia and California.

Bissell is also a Registered Professional Engineer, State of Texas, with the firm of Parkhill, Smith and Cooper Inc., Engineers, Architects and Planners, El Paso, Lubbock and Midland.

He is a member of the National Society of Professional Engineers, Texas Society of Professional Engineers, American Society of Civil Engineers (member grade), American Society of Engineering Technicians, for which he served on the national board of directors for three years, Engineering Technologist Certification Institute in Washington, D.C., serving on the board of trustees from 1976 to 1981 and as chairman of the board of trustees from 1979 to 1981, Engineering Guidance Council, serving on the board of directors, and National Institute for the Certification of Engineering Technologists, serving on the board of governors since 1981 (term to run until 1987) and currently serving as president of the board.

Bissell and his wife Patsy have three sons, Gary, Brian and Bruce. Bissell is a member of First Presbyterian Church in El Paso, where he has served as usher captain for the past 12 years and as ruling elder in the past.

Nancy Havekost attended public schools in Dumas, graduating from Dumas High School. She attended Texas Tech Universiy, majoring in history and graduating with a Bachelor of Arts degree. She was on the Dean's list for four years.

She has entered competition in many shows in the El Paso area, Lubbock and Houston, having won numerous awards. Some of her work was selected to hang in the Texas Tech Museum during June-July, 1981. Some of the shows she has competed in include: Southwest Watercolor Society National Exhibitions, El Paso Museum of Art Annual Shows, Dos Parajos Gallery, Moore County Art Association Exhibitions, El Paso Art Association Shows, Lower Valley Art Association Shows, Women's Club Annual Shows, Surety Savings and Loan Association, Las Cruces Art Assocation Shows, El Paso Chamber of Commerce and El Paso Art in the Park.

Mrs. Hobekost is a history and English teacher for the El Paso Independent School District, and is currently teaching at Irvin High School. She and her husband Roger have two daughters, Amy and Becky. She is a member of First Presbyterian Church of El Paso, where she is a member of the choir and is currently serving on the Board of Deacons.

A reception honoring the artists will be held at the Midland Woman's Club in Hogan Park on Oct. 31 from 1:30 p.m. — 4:30 p.m. The public is invited to meet the artists at the preview of the art exhibit.

Vatican art treasures to visit U.S.

Hearst Feature Service

NEW YORK — Next February, the Metropolitan Museum of Art will inaugurate the biggest traveling exhibit of art ever — bigger than the "Treasures of Tutankhamun" of six years ago, a massive art spectacular that attracted enormous crowds of viewers. New York City will host "The Vatican Collections: the Papacy and Art" despite a major bid by Washington.

"Unprecedented in expense, risk, and possible mass appeal," Connoisseur magazine reports in its October issue, "the Vatican show promises to be the biggest museum extravaganza of our time.

"Reversing a centuries-old policy, the Vatican has agreed to send some two hundred works of art and artifacts — many of them magnificent and all the more significant for never having been lent before — on a tour that will include the Art Institute of Chicago and the Fine Arts Museums of San Francisco as well as the Met."

The Friends of American Art in Religion, a nonprofit educational organization founded in 1971, had quietly been working for years to obtain a major loan exhibition from the Vatican. And the Friends have clout in Rome. Terence Cardinal Cooke, Archbishop of New York City, is president of the group and a trustee of the Met.

THE MET'S strongest rival, the National Gallery in Washington, D.C., wanted the show too, but the Met won. Why? Lawrence Fleischman of New York's Kennedy Galleries and vice president of Friends, explains it this way:

"Where else could an exhibition of this magnitude originate in this country? Who would see it if it opened in Washington — a bunch of politicians who could care less? No, New York is the center, everybody comes here sooner or later, and the Met is the country's greatest museum. There was never any question in my mind."

THE THEME of the exhibition will be "the devotion with which the Popes have collected, protected, conserved and made available to all an incomparable patrimony of works of art and historical and cultural documents."

Philip Morris Inc. is helping finance the exhibition with a $3 million grant. Pan American World Airways will ship the valuables free of charge. The government's Arts and Artifacts indemnity program is granting a maximum $50 million coverage, and additional coverage is being arranged with private carriers.

"One thing seems certain," Connoisseur concludes. "In the wake of the Vatican show, ambitious museum directors across the country will be dreaming up even more spectacular events — a loan show of the Hapsburg collection, perhaps, or of the 7,000-piece terracotta army of the Chinese first emperor of Chin. But for now, the Vatican show may become the apotheosis of exhibitions, and visitors who are able to see the works of art are unlikely to object to the grandeur or the profusion."

HERE ARE the top 10 treasures to be displayed:

Dr. Olga Raggio, of the Metropolitan Museum, who planned the exhibition, recommends ten key works that no visitor should miss:

1. Mosaic Fragment of an Angel. C. 1310, after a design by Giotto, the first great proto-Renaissance painter.
2. The Apollo Belvedere. "One of the most important works in the show and the most important classical sculpture for the rennaissance
3. The Belvedere Torso. "This work influenced Renaissance artists and was enormously admired by Michelangelo."
4. Emperor Augustus. A marble sculpture that is "the quintessential portrait of the Roman imperial ideal."
5. The Miraculous Draught of Fishes. From a set of ten tapestries by Raphael.
6. Vestments of Pope Clement VIII. "The only complete set to survive from the late sixteenth century."
7. Reliquaries. These caskets of the eighth and ninth centuries, kept in a medieval papal chapel, the Sancta Sanctorum, were considered the holiest of holy relics.
8. Fra Angelico's Stories of St. Nicholas. "Wonderfully jeweled colors — among the most attractive works of this great fifteenth-century painter."
9. Leonardo's St. Jerome. "Unfinished, but with wonderful passages of draftmanship, pieces of landscape, and chiaroscuro."
10. Caravaggio's Deposition of Christ. "This very moving entombment is one of the artist's finest works."

By SARAH FRITSCHNER
Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

It's been 10 years since Francis Moore-Lappe wrote "Diet for a Small Planet," the vegetarian treatise on feeding the world that told readers how to combine foods to get maximum protein from minimum energy consumption.

Vegetable protein combines in such interesting ways — Mexican tortillas and beans, Mediterranean rice and nuts or sesame seeds and garbanzo beans, Chinese soybeans and rice, and American peanut butter and bread. It may not be steak, but it sure beats hamburger.

Since lentils cook faster than other legumes and don't require soaking, they are the natural choice for a quick dinner. Lentils available in a supermarket have an unfortunate olive drab color, however, so serve them with something brilliant red, orange or yellow. The lentils below top any of your favorite grains.

SWEET AND SOUR LENTILS
(2 to 4 servings)

2 1-2 cups water
1 cup lentils
1 small onion, chopped
3 to 4 tablespoons cider vinegar
2 tablespoons honey
1-2 teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon basil

Combine water and lentils and bring to a boil. Cover, reduce heat and simmer 1-2 hour. Add chopped onion and cook 15 minutes more. Add remaining ingredients, more water if lentils look dry, and continue to simmer for 10 minutes. If the lentils are not tender, add a little more water and cook a few more minutes. Serve over rice, bulgur, kasha or millet.

It is best to have a try-on fitting as soon as the major seams of a garment have been stitched. This provides an opportunity to make some fine adjustment to such items as seams and darts. When the back and front have been joined at the shoulders and sides, staystitch the armholes and necklines to avoid stretching. Expect a certain amount of snugness in these opening because of extended seam allowances. Pin up the hems and lap, and pin the openings. work from the shoulders down adjusting darts along the way. Pin all patch pockets in place to be sure of their position.

Shaker funiture, because of its elegant simplicity, can be successfully combined with contemporary pieces or used in informal colonial settings. The Shakers were a communal religious sect who produced forthright, honest furniture in the U. S. during the latter part of the 18th century. Their strict beliefs in frugality, industry and integrity carried over into their workmanship. The results was plain, unadorned, sturdy furniture that was delicate in proportion. Made of local-cherry, pine and maple, all furniture was carefully joined by mortise, doweling and dovetailing. It can be said that their furniture adhered to the modern precept that form should follow function.

tion," for a dawn take-off, it was my turn for a tethered ride. Tom offered to let me control the burner. "Turn it on for five or six seconds," he instructed.

I stared at the ground as I did so, both anticipating and dreading our ascent (like a pool player, I always like to keep at least one foot on the ground). We didn't move. Jill yelled at me to look up and keep my eyes on the burner in case the wind should shift and blow the skirt into the flames. I turned the burner on for a few more seconds, then turned back toward her to complain that we still hadn't left the ground. I was more than a little shocked to realize she was 50 feet below me.

Tom and I executed several take-offs and landings and just played with the balloon. It was fun, but I guess I had been expecting more. I wasn't to be disappointed.

It was 7 a.m. and the sky was beginning to turn pink. Jill's balloon was inflated and ready for free flight, and I was to accompany her. Tom landed and I nearly hopped out of the balloon before he cautioned me not to. It is very important not to do anything without the pilot's permission. Had I followed my instincts, the balloon would suddenly have been (OK, I'll admit it) 135 pounds lighter and would have shot up into the air.

Still a little wary about staking my life on the principle that hot air is lighter than cold, I climbed into "Celebration." The leather-trimmed basket was less than waist-high; the envelope was colored in maroon, white and light and dark blue. This balloon had only nine hours of flight time on it, and it really shined.

JILL TURNED ON THE burner and we lifted off, skimming the ground and then watching it slip away. The winds were westerly, and our course was to take us directly over the city.

My first sight was of Tom's balloon silhouetted against a breathtaking sunrise. As we rose higher, I viewed the slumbering city of Odessa nestled in the early morning haze. The next thing I noticed was that every dog in town seemed to be barking at us, and from our vantage point we could hear each one distinctly. Jill explained that the sound of the burner usually caused dogs to bark and livestock to become skittish.

"This is embarrassing," she said, as the tirade continued. "I feel bad for the folks trying to sleep late on Saturday morning.

We heard children yelling up to us. They were jumping up and down, shrieking, "Can we have a ride?"

"If you can catch me!" Jill yelled back, laughing.

We floated along at heights varying from 500 to 1,200 feet. As we changed altitudes the winds would shift and we would also change direction.

I was awed and excited by the flight. "They say the first ride is free and the next one costs $11,000," Jill said, referring to the exorbitant cost of owning and flying a balloon. "You get hooked really easy."

IT WAS FUN TO watch the reactions of people below us. Some would wave, some just stare. One man ran out of his house, yelling for us to come back so he could take a picture. I don't think he realized balloons don't have a reverse. A woman poked her head out of her mobile home to see what her dog was barking at. She looked everywhere but up, tried to quiet her dog and went back inside.

As we passed over some of the major streets, traffic would slow and weave or pull over to the side of the road. "We can be a definite traffic hazzard at times," Jill commented.

After what seemed like a few minutes (it was actually about 30) we began searching for a landing spot. Our choices were limited to areas with level, wide open spaces free of power lines, livestock and mesquite — which can tear the envelope — and with access to main roads so the chase crew could get to us.

It was perhaps 20 minutes before Jill found a good location. Even then our landing was rough — the winds had become much stronger since take-off. We hit the ground, bounced back up, were dragged for some distance and left the ground again. A couple of times I thought I would tumble out, not an uncommon occurrence. Finally we came to rest — sort of.

After landing we had to keep the balloon inflated so the chase crew could find us. The wind was blowing around the inflated envelope and kept us rocking. The basket balanced on its edge, and a couple of times was nearly on its side. It may have been a cardinal sin for a journalist to commit, but I dropped my pen and notebook and clutched the basket's rails for all I was worth. It was the most exciting part of the trip.

JILL AMAZED ME. She was able to hang on and still keep the balloon inflated — enough to keep it in the air, but not enough to lift off.

After what seemed an interminable length of time the crew arrived and Jill yanked the rip line which pulled the top out of the envelope and released the hot air. As it slowly fell to the ground I was assigned to prevent it from landing on bushes, cactus or mesquite.

Then it was time to work. As the balloon deflated we pushed the sides in until it lay on the ground like a wrinkled caterpillar. Then we lined up side by side at the mouth and Jill, leading the pack, began to squeeze the air out, slowly working her way toward the top. We followed, taking up the slack and trying to bear some of the weight — the envelope weighs about 200 pounds.

Next we proceded to pack the envelope into what looked like a huge backpack. Two people would walk the bag forward while two more stuffed the balloon into it. Jill unsuccessfully attempted to dump me into the bag and pack me in also — a gag traditionally played on rookies such as myself. I'd like to think it was my level head and quick reactions that saved me. Actually, I had seen them do it before and was looking out for it.

After the balloon was packed we all sat on the bag to squeeze out any air remaining and to enjoy a well-deserved rest. The long ride back was somewhat of an anti-climax — nobody pays much attention to a balloon that is loaded into the back of a pickup.

AFTER WE RETURNED TO our point of departure and located our entourage we all went out for breakfast. The experienced pilots — there were four in the group — swapped stories, generating a lot of interest from diners at nearby tables. I thought the exciting morning had nearly ended when I was informed about "ceremony" — a ritual in which all first-timers are expected to participate.

Ceremony began with the opening of a bottle of champagne and a scramble to see who could catch the cork — similar to the throwing of a bridal bouquet. Next I was told to kneel and face the sun while two sponsors stood behind me and my pilot knelt facing me as she recited the Balloonists' Prayer:

The winds have welcomed you with softness
The sun has blessed you with its warm hands
You have flown so high and so well
That God has joined you in your laughter
And set you gently back into the loving arms of Mother Earth

As Jill spoke the last words of the prayer a tingle ran down my neck and I felt as if I had been christened — perhaps because Tom chose that moment to anoint me with champagne.

I have a few mementos from my first flight in a hot air balloon — some photos, a certificate and the champagne bottle, signed by each person in the group. But my most treasured souvenir is remembering the thrill and excitement of that lighter-than-air journey — even if I did have to get up at 5 in the morning.

Balloon pilots endure many restrictions

lights and spotlights to see where you land."

Nature places additional restrictions on pilots.

"Very rarely do balloonists fly if the winds are over 10 miles an hour," Munger said. Landing is more difficult in high winds, because wind catches the envelope (the material part of the balloon) and may drag the basket, or gondola, for a long way.

"I don't recommend flying during the day. You have thermal conditions (a rising column of hot air caused by uneven heating of the earth by the sun) and higher winds. Balloonists like calm winds and sunny skies. Anything other than that is trouble." Most pilots prefer dawn take-offs, when winds are lighter.

Control of balloons is also limited. Unlike most means of transportation, direction is determined by which way the wind is blowing. "In a balloon you're controlled by the wind," Munger stated. "Skillful pilots have quite a bit of control." He explained that they can change their direction by changing altitudes, because the wind blows in different directions at different heights. They control altitude by the frequency or length of time the burner is on. The burner heats the air inside of the envelope. Hot air is lighter than cold, and the warmer the air, the higher the balloon will go.

Unless he is tethered (stationary), a pilot really has no control over his speed. Balloons travel at the same speed the wind blows, which means riders don't feel a breeze while in the air.

ALTHOUGH THE PROCEDURE for getting it in the air sounds complicated, it only takes 15-20 minutes to unpack and inflate a balloon, Munger said.

First the equipment is checked, then the basket is laid on its side and the envelope is removed from the bag and attached to it.

The envelope is made of either rip-stop nylon or nylon taffeta, similar to the material in a windbreaker jacket. Rip-stop nylon is a lighter weight material than taffeta, but is interwoven with heavy threads to prevent tearing.

Even though the material is fairly light, an average envelope weighs about 200 pounds, is 90 feet tall and holds 60,000 cubic feet of air. It usually has a life span of 500 hours of flight time and costs $5,000 to $6,000 to replace.

Most balloons are coated on the outside to protect them from the sun's ultraviolet rays, which will weaken the cloth. The lower part of the envelope is also treated with fire retardant. The balloon is not made of one continuous piece of cloth, but of material that has been pieced together. The seams stop tears.

Load tapes give the balloon shape, additional strength, and more even distribution of weight throughout the envelope. They are cords made of material and, in a balloon such as Lynch's Piccard, there are 12 of them which run vertically around the envelope and attach to the basket. There may also be horizontal load tapes.

RIP LINES ARE USED for dumping large volumes of air. In the Piccard, the rip line is attached to a panel in the envelope which is held in place with Velcro. Used for high-wind or emergency landings, the rip line tears this panel open, rapidly releasing the air. The rip line is also used during deflation.

Vents are smaller openings in the side of the balloon which open and close, and are used to let out smaller amounts of air when the pilot desires a slower and more controlled descent.

Once the envelope has been removed and spread out on the ground, the mouth is held open by crew members and an inflator fan is used to fill it with air. This high-powered fan, which costs about $450, fills the envelope in a few minutes.

When the envelope is partially filled with air, the burner is ignited and also aimed toward the mouth of the balloon. In the Piccard, the burner plate is about six feet from the envelope and attached by cables. What looks like three coffee cans (balloons may have one, two or three burners) sit on the plate. Liquid propane goes through coils inside the canisters, vaporizes, hits the pilot light and ignites as it is released.

Even though the temperature at the top of the balloon must be about 200 degrees to carry two people, it doesn't take long for the burner to heat the air. The burner can put out 12 million British thermal units (Btu) of heat — the equivalent of 1,250 average-sized portable space heaters.

THE PILOT CONTROLS the heat so the balloon doesn't have enough buoyancy to leave the ground before he's ready. He must step into the basket as the envelope rises, or it may take off without him.

Between the burner plate and the mouth of the envelope most balloons have a skirt — a circular piece of material hanging down. Its purpose is to prevent the wind from blowing the flame, which could possibly cause it to blow out or scorch the envelope. There is very little danger of fire during flight, Munger said. The biggest danger is during inflation, when the burner is on its side and could start a grass fire.

The basket is also on its side during inflation. As the balloon is filled with warm air it rises, pulling the burner and the gondola upright. Baskets are made of wicker or metal, and hang from the burner plate by cables. Sizes vary, the basket in the Piccard is about 3½ by four feet.

Inside the gondola of Lynch's balloon are three propane tanks holding 10 gallons each. A balloon can fly for about two hours in the summer and 2½ hours in the winter on 30 gallons of fuel, Munger estimated. The pilots usually wear gloves when working with the propane tanks to protect themselves from burns by the supercooled liquid. For obvious reasons, smoking is not allowed near the tanks.

Other equipment that may be found in the basket is a citizens band radio (used more frequently than aircraft radios), a fuel gauge, a compass, a pressure indicator for the fuel tanks, an altimeter to measure altitude, a variometer to measure rate of ascent or descent and a pyrometer to indicate the air temperature inside the envelope.

Most balloonists fly under 1,000 feet, Munger said. "I've gone as high as a mile," Ms. Anderson stated.

THEY MAINTAINED THAT hot air ballooning is not a risky hobby. "If I really thought there was any danger in it I wouldn't do it," Munger said. "Most balloonists don't do it for heroics. Most of them are just normal people who like doing something that's different.

"There's really not too much to go wrong with a balloon. When you're flying there's nothing that can tear it." He said a pilot's main concern is watching out for power lines.

Both Munger and Ms. Anderson were at the 11th annual Albuquerque International Balloon Fiesta when four persons were killed and five injured in a balloon accident. Still, both feel ballooning is a safe sport and that most accidents are caused by human error or inattentiveness.

"There isn't that high a percentage of balloon accidents," Munger asserted. "I think it's as safe as snow skiing, or safer."

"I feel it's a safe sport," Ms. Anderson added. "You're going to have accidents no matter what you do. If you know what you're doing and are alert it's safe. Usually (accidents occur) because they (pilots) are flying where they shouldn't be or in weather conditions they shouldn't be in."

WHEN A PILOT WISHES to land the balloon, he takes longer intervals between turning the burner on and off and may leave it on for shorter periods of time. The flames are not adjustable, the burner is either on or off. About 10 feet from the ground the pilot may shut off the tank valves so there is no possibility of fire. He may either touch down — if the winds are light — or — in heavier winds — drag the basket or rip out, deflating the balloon.

"Most often the intent is, rather than hit the ground, to stop about two feet above the ground and then open the vent," Munger explained. Some pilots leave the balloons inflated as long as possible so the chase crew can find them.

The number of crew members needed depends on how windy it is. "A nice minimum is four people helping the pilot," Munger said. It is possible for one person to do it, but winds have to be relatively calm.

Lastly, the envelope is deflated and packed into its bag. "You don't really fold it," Munger explained, "you sort of roll it up and stuff it into the bag."

Despite all the restrictions imposed on balloonists by costs, weather, regulations and the nature of the sport, pilots seem to feel the hassle is justified by the enjoyment they reap, and hot air ballooning is becoming an increasingly popular pastime.

Kappa Delta Alumnae Association to hold gift show

Kappa Delta Alumnae Association will present its Eighth Annual Benefit Gift Show from 10 a.m. — 6 p.m. on Thursday at 3400 Salisbury.

The show will feature items from the Friday's Child Shop of San Miguel Square, formerly the Mary Jane Shop, and will include unique gifts, children's clothes, Christmas ornaments and decorations, and collectables.

A special attraction at the show will be Joan Lowery Nixon of Houston, a former member of the Midland Kappa Delta Alumnae Association. Mrs. Nixon, who is the author of several children's books, will be available to autograph copies of her books, which have been ordered through B. Dalton Book Sellers in Midland Park Mall.

Also featured is KD Korner, which will offer items made by the alumnae group. Included in KD Korner will be ornaments in the shape of gingerbread boys and girls decorated in the colors of each sorority (Greek), and also monogrammed in the Southwest Conference universities. Ornaments decorated for Midland and Lee High schools will also be available. Other gift items in KD Korner will be stuffed hens, cloth strawberries, Raggedy Ann and Andy dolls, other stuffed dolls, magnets, etc. A new featured item for this year in KD Korner will be cloth picture frames in all sizes, shapes and colors, including monogramming.

Anyone wishing to attend the show may call 682-3376 or 683-4387 for an invitation. Proceeds from the show will go toward a scholarship presented by Kappa Delta each year to a Midland College student.

Light entertainment

IRVING, Calif. (AP) — Infrared light will soon help entertain airline passengers through earphones that are independent of any connection to their seats.

A wireless entertainment system for commercial jet aircraft, being developed by Hughes Aircraft Co., transmits music and movie sound signals by infrared light throughout the aircraft.

Headsets worn by passengers do not have to be plugged into their seat consoles to receive the signals. Thus, a passenger may leave his seat and still hear music or a movie sound track as long as he wears the headset.

Hints For Homeowners

A TOOL WITH MANY USES

In this era of cost-conscious do-it-yourselfers, a growing number of people are taking the time to do such home "fix-it" jobs as insulating, caulking windows, and hanging wallpaper.

Many experts agree that a few, simple, inexpensive tools are all that's necessary for most fix-it jobs around the house.

Many such tools and gadgets today wear "more than one hat" and are useful for a variety of tasks. One new gadget that's winning raves from many handy homeowners is called the Widget™. It's a scraper-cutter with a single-edge, stainless steel blade in a tough plastic holder. It has hundreds of uses such as scraping paint from windows, opening cartons, trimming threads and fabrics, cutting wallpaper and even tending plants.

Yachats sports ocean, mountain view

By KIT DREYFUSS
JOHN DREYFUSS
Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

YACHATS, Ore.-You will find no yachts in Yachats.

Simple, really. The rocky shoreline and choppy seas keep pleasure boating at bay in this little town 180 miles up the Oregon coast from the California border.

What you will find in Yachats is some of the world's most dramatic coastline adjacent to 600,000 acres of still, dark forest, and 485 friendly townsfolk, all of them apparently ready to help you enjoy yourself.

In Yachats (accent the first syllable: Yah-hots), Mother Nature is the stage manager; ocean and mountain set the mood and provide most of the action.

LAND AND WATER are felicitously introduced to visitors at Cape Perpetua, three miles south of Yachats, in a well-designed and located visitor's center. Siuslaw National Forest rangers answer questions, show movies, set up dioramas, hand out pamphlets and conduct hiking tours to two coastal landmarks, Devil's Churn and Spouting Horn.

Rangers will also warn you about the hazards of observing the ocean's wonders too close, pointing out huge logs that have been tossed like toothpicks onto the beach by the powerful sea. Tidepool gazing, agate collecting, fishing and photographing must all be done with one eye on the surf.

Cape Perpetua, named by Capt. James Cook when he sighted the cape on St. Perpetua's Day in 1778, is the highest point on the Oregon coast. Its inland forest side is on display, along with informative signs, during a 22-mile scenic drive through fern-lined acres of alder, spruce, hemlock and fir. The paved roads are maintained by logging companies that also use them. If you're observant, the auto tour lands you on Yachats' main street. But the tour road is not well marked, and 45-mile accidental detours are easy to make.

TRAVEL

Once back in town you can sip a cup of coffee at Del's coffee shop or enjoy some terrific pie at the Yachats Pie and Kite Shop. Food at Beulah's restaurant enjoys a mixed reputation, while the River View Inn gets better grades.

MORE SERIOUS EATING awaits you at La Serre or the Adobe Motel restaurant.

Truly memorable food is served at the Experience on Oregon 34, three miles east of Waldport (which is eight miles north of Yachats).

Prices are reasonable, the wine list is adequate and desserts are glorious: How about a piece of cashew-kumquat pie?

Great breakfasts are a feature at the Adobe Motel restaurant, whose yellow-painted bricks were handmade from native soil years ago. Rooms with fireplaces overlook the spectacular ocean beyond a stretch of wildflower-dotted lawn and the remnants of a once huge shell mound, a relic of Indians who camped on this land.

Two small beaches in the Adobe's backyard are a site of silver smelt runs, which occur between April and October and are the source of the town's most famous tradition, the Annual Yachats Smelt Fry. Last July it attracted about 1,300 smelt-eaters for whom townspeople netted 800 pounds of smelt.

THE ADOBE'S BEACH is also hunting ground for agates, the translucent stones so prized by beachcombers and mineral collectors. The hotel also has a golf driving range. Room prices, double occupancy, go from $20 (no ocean view, no fireplace) to $42 (ocean view, fireplace).

If you do not stay at the Adobe you can choose from a wide variety of accommodations, including the Ya'tel (eight immaculate rooms, some with efficiency kitchens, priced for double occupancy from $21 to $28.35); its hostess is a blue ribbon-winning cake baker and decorator.

There are the Fireside Motel ($31.50 with no ocean view, $47.25 for fireplace rooms overlooking the beach) and the Shamrock Lodgettes, with views of the Yachats River and-or the ocean, featuring rustic units whose prices for two range from $38 to $50. The Shamrock is building a spa that will offer aerobics classes and a licensed massage therapist.

Numerous other motels dot U.S. 101 that runs through Yachats. You can also camp out: Neptune State Park at Cape Perpetua has trailer and campsites and Beachside State Park (between Yachats and Waldport) has 60 tent sites and 20 trailer or motor-home sites with electrical hookups. Tillicum Beach, a couple of miles from town, can hold 57 trailers, and there are more campsites on Oregon 34.

Any visitor in Yachats will want to see the Community Church, softly illuminated through six tall panels of resin-set agates, all gathered by Yachats' townspeople.

YOU CAN DIG for razor clams at Yachats River inlet, although you will have more luck at Waldport. You can fish streams for trout and sea-run cutthroat, for which you do need a license. Salmon fishing boats await at Waldport or Newport, about 23 miles north of Yachats.

Seal Rock, 13 miles north of Yachats, boasts a delightful tourist trap. It is Sea Gulch, with an "out back" trail through Indian and Old West scenes populated by comical wooden figures carved by chain-saw artists, who sometimes can be seen transforming cedar logs into all manner of man, woman and animal in the Sea Gulch parking lot.

Waldport, good for seal watching as well as fishing, features a bar called the Flounder Inn Tavern where cold beer goes for 60 cents a mug (a whole pitcher for half a buck on Wednesdays), and tastes especially good with "jojo potatoes" (deep-fried potato wedges) or, if you're up for them, fried chicken gizzards.

Going south from Yachats you can watch seals and sea lions at Strawberry Hill four miles down the coast. Two miles farther south is the Douglass Prehistoric Life Museum, a combination museum-store filled with ancient bones and stones, fossils, amber, ivory, post cards, jewelry, rockhound equipment and literature, all fascinating and all lovingly explained by curators-proprietors David and Sandra Douglass.

FIFTY-THREE MILES south of Yachats, Winchester Bay offers remarkable, exciting sightseeing for anyone willing to climb out on the rock jetty at Umpqua Lighthouse State Park.

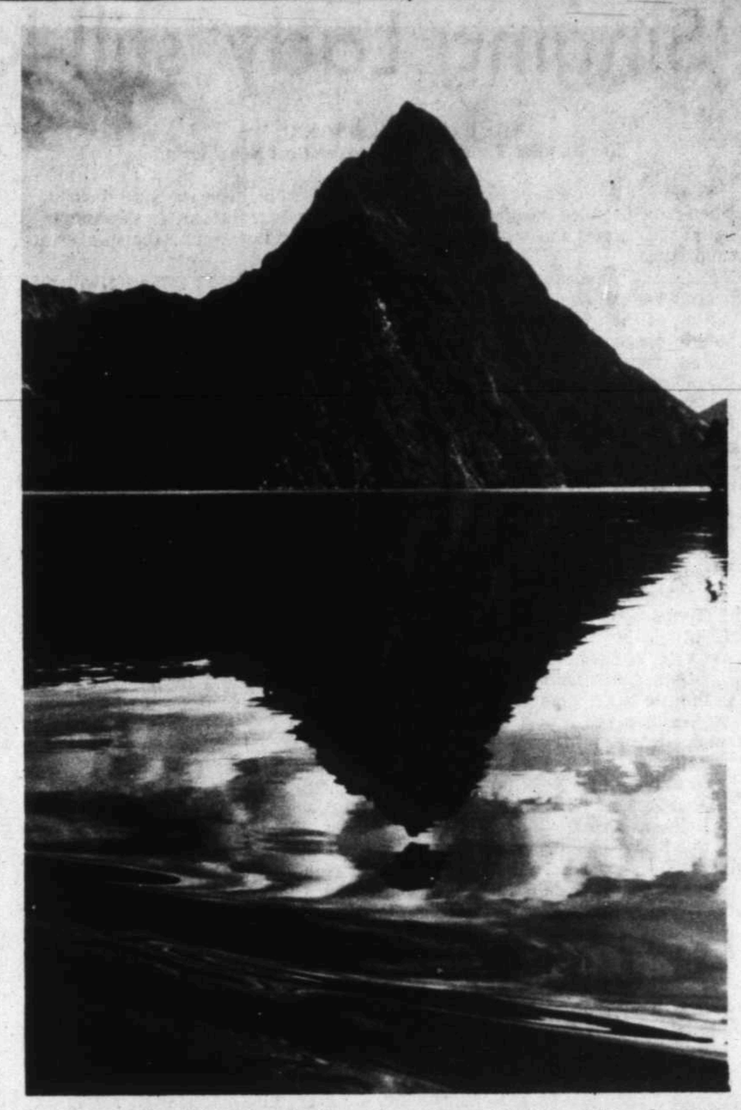
On the uphill side of U.S. 101 in Yachats lies Siuslaw National Forest, graciously supervised by the U.S. Forest Service as a multiple-use facility for hunting, fishing, camping, hiking and logging. Cape Perpetua nature trails offer interpretive signs to indicate botanical, marine and geological features.

With fewer than 500 residents, people in Yachats look to one another for shared resources of skills and sociability. Visitors are readily included in the community spirit, and concurrently expected to conform to community standards: You don't dump your ashtray in the parking lot.

The town has pride.

Residents and tourists together contribute to ebullient celebrations: an Arts and Crafts Fair in March, the smelt fry (cum square dancing demonstration, cum fiddling performance, etc.), a music festival in July, a kite festival in October.

So whether you come to town for adventure or to rest, to wander alone or to chat with friendly people, to fish or to clam or to beachcomb, there's something for you in Yachats.



Mitre Peak, rising directly from the waters of Mildford Sound, appears higher than its one-mile elevation. It is easy to see why it is one of the most photographed scenes in Milford Sound.

Tourism died with decade-old massacre

By MICHAEL CARLTON
Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

CHRISTIANSTED, U.S. Virgin Islands — It was a terrible crime: a firestorm of bullets tearing through the terrace, ripping into 15 bodies, killing eight. I was on the island of St. Croix at the time and I still remember the names of the dead — Charles and Joan Meisenger, Richard and Mattie Ruth Griffin, Patricia Tarbet, John Gulliver, Nick Beale, Aliston Lowry — and I still see their crumpled bodies scattered like rag dolls through the elegant clubhouse only yards away from the 18th green.

Although it was 10 years ago that the Fountain Valley massacre occurred, the memories are as fresh as today's breakfast: the shattered glass, the incongruity of the delicate sugar birds perched daintily beside ugly pools of dried blood, the hunter helicopters clattering low over the lovely green hills of St. Croix as the FBI stalked the killers.

It was a cruel, senseless slaughter of four American tourists and four local workers who were unlucky enough to have been on duty when the carnage began. All for $731 taken from the cash register, and a few dollars more ripped from the pockets of the tourists. That it would happen here, on a 5,000-acre estate and golf course owned by the Rockefellers, on a terrace nudged by the gentle trade winds, was almost beyond belief. As incredible as the slaughter at the Munich Olympics that took place the previous day. Madness.

The men who did the shooting, the maiming and the killing were caught, and convicted, but the crime dealt a crippling blow to St. Croix tourism — a blow so severe that the island is still recovering from its devastation. More than eight people died in St. Croix on that humid September day. Tourism died with it.

SOON THE WHISPERS swept into North America: stay away from St. Croix, whites aren't safe there. Hotels closed, and so did restaurants. Jobs were lost and more and more Cruzans left this lovely island to find work, work that was plentiful at home at one time but fled with the tourists.

St. Croix, perhaps the most munificently endowed island in the Caribbean, was a pariah.

The island has recovered somewhat, but it is still viewed with fear and loathing by those who remember the massacre, and those who have heard the rumors. In fact, St. Croix is no more dangerous than any other island in the Caribbean; the locals are no more rude than they are in Jamaica or the Bahamas; and the attitude here is, if anything, one of welcoming, of caring, of trying to erase the stigma of a decade ago.

St. Croix is a beautiful island, a place of old sugar mills and handsome plantation houses, rolling sugar cane reaching from hillside to sea, charming 18th century cities and the best duty free buys in the Caribbean. She shares, with her sister St. Thomas, free-port status (a part of the 1917 sale agreement between Denmark and the United States), so shopping here is a real bargain, especially for liquor. (You can take a gallon home duty-free and up to $600 per person in merchandise.) Unlike St. Thomas, however, the wall-to-wall crowding by tourists like that found in Charlotte Amalie is absent, for few cruise ships call at St. Croix, and few tourists walk out of the fat bellies of jets to stay here. That leaves more of this lovely island for those of us smart enough to visit her.

Discovered by Columbus and ruled principally by the Danes (although the French, Dutch, British, Spanish and the Maltese all had their stints as rulers), St. Croix was one of the wealthiest islands in the Caribbean, exporting the sugar grown on its lush plantations to markets as distant as Europe. The twin cities — Christiansted and Frederiksted — grew and prospered, with grand Victorian buildings and lemon-yellow warehouses scattered along the sparkling sea. Hotels with great verandas fronted the ocean and visitors from a thousand different lands walked along the winding alleyways and streets.

TODAY, CHRISTIANSTED and Frederiksted are two of the most endearing places of the Caribbean — miniature cities that are easily walked and explored. Sit at the piano at Comanche and drink a potent banana daiquiri, or go up the hill a bit to the Top Hat, my choice for the Caribbean's finest restaurant, and have some smoked salmon and capers in a setting as elegant as anything in Copenhagen.

Hotels are a mixed lot here with only two — the Buccaneer and Grapetree Beach — having more than 150 rooms. Like everything else on this low-key island, most of the hotels are modest affairs of 20 or 30 rooms. There are also a number of condominium units that are available for rent; they are particularly good values if you cook a few of your own meals, since food is quite expensive in the island's restaurants and hotels.

Activities on the island are typical of the Caribbean — sun, sand, surf, golf, tennis — with two exceptions. The two unique spots — Buck Island, an underwater National Park where you can snorkle in the midst of great clouds of little purple fish and see magnificent coral heads; and the Whim Greathouse, perhaps the best preserved of the Caribbean's old plantation homes — add particular luster to a visit to St. Croix.

And, yes, you should go to Fountain Valley, scene of the massacre, even if you don't plan to play the superb Robert Trent Jones course. You should go if only to marvel in the tranquility of the spot and wrestle with the question that has lingered for the last 10 years. How could anyone, at any time, commit such a brutal crime in the midst of such calm, such serenity, such beauty? May St. Croix never again be the victim of madness.

Giverny reflects passion for color

By LYNN CARRIER
Copley News Service

Stroll through the lush gardens that Claude Monet planted at his country home in Giverny and you begin to understand why the great impressionist artist once said, "I only looked at what the universe had to show me."

Giverny, a sleepy rural village north of Paris, was Monet's universe.

Art lovers, of course, have appreciated Monet's works without having to know where or how they were inspired.

But when his house and grounds, restored to their former magnificence, were opened to the public two years ago, a new dimension was opened to Monet's admirers.

The French now call the 2½-acre property the Claude Monet Museum, although this is something of a misnomer.

None of his paintings is on display there — there ace only reproductions — and visitors will find neither the pomp nor the institutional formality associated with a museum.

Instead, they will discover his personal treasures, the tangible evidence of how much Monet craved beauty in his daily life as well as expressing it through his art.

His airy two-story house, with its facade of pink crushed brick and its green shutters and trim, reflects Monet's passion for color and a cheerful warmth that any modern family would envy.

Family, in fact, was very much a part of Monet's life at Giverny. Eight children grew up there during his time — Monet's two children from his first marriage and six others that his second wife had from a previous marriage.

Much of the furniture is tasteful but simple, collected before Monet's paintings grew in demand and began to earn him an income.

The dining room is painted in two tones of sunny yellow, with a table and chairs to match. Blue-and-white china adorns the yellow sideboards, and Japanese engravings, which Monet loved to collect, han on the walls.

An old barn on the side of the house became a kitchen, dominated by blue-and-white tiles and copper pots and pans.

Surprisingly, the studio Monet built where another old barn had stood against the house was poorly lit and decorated in muted shades.

"He did most of his painting in another studio in the house," explained assistant curator, Claudette Lindsey. "This is where he would show his paintings to prospective clients and entertain his friends."

The spaniel family of dogs contains more breeds—ten—than any other. The name comes from the word Spain.

'Singing Lady' still-loved entertainer

By KAREN SINGER
Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

STAMFORD, Conn. — In Depression days, when there was no television, when radio beguiled people who didn't have a dime for the movies, the "Singing Lady" told stories and sang songs for children huddled around the speaker at suppertime.

Now, at the age of 81, the Singing Lady, Ireene Wicker, who once lived in Stamford, is seriously ill in a Palm Beach, Fla. hospital.

When she was growing up, Eilan listened to her mother's show all the time. "I was expected to comment, laudatory of course," she said. "I'm sure the things we asked about provided her with material for scripts."

FOR HALF A CENTURY, Irene Wicker captivated several generations of Americans on radio, and later on TV, with her skillful dramatization of classics and popular tales.

During the 30s, when she was on national radio five days a week for 15 minutes, the Singing Lady would tell fairy tales, American Indian legends, stories about famous Americans and stories about famous artists or composers.

"There also were the Nancy and Charlie stories," Eilan said, "'where we (Eilan and her brother, Charles) theoretically went all over the world. This was a way of introducing countries and folk and fairy tales."

A Quincy, Ill., native, Miss Wicker began acting in stock theater at age 12. In the late 1920s, whiile studying drama at the Goodman Theater School in Chicago, she landed a part on WGN's radio show dramatization of the popular comic strip Harold Teen. Before long, she also began performing dramatic parts in soap operas such as Today's Children and Song of the City.

"She heard a couple of people at the audition and thought they sounded too didactic and condescending," her daughter recalled. "'She felt story and song could be interwoven, so she wrote her own concept and did it. That was the end of the audition. They hired her on the spot."

The Singing Lady made her debut in 1931, and was first heard nationally on NBC on Jan. 11, 1932, according to "Tune In Yesterday; the Ultimate Encyclopedia of Old Time Radio."

She also had an active stage career in the Chicago area, performing in plays by Shakespeare, Shaw and Ibsen.

Wicker's popularity peaked during a grim era.

"The Singing Lady was a national symbol on radio, like Uncle Don and Jack Armstrong, the all-American boy," said Don Russell, Stamford Advocate columnist and radio-TV personality. "She was everything wholesome, everything good.

"In the Depression, radio and movies really pulled people through. That box got a lot of us through some tough times."

MISS WICKER USED her natural voice as narrator, then slipped into dialect and mood as she portrayed the voices of different characters.

"Her voice was not an opera voice, but rather the kind folk singers have," Eilan said. "She had some musical training."

The Singing Lady's fans included such notables as Shirley Temple, who once sent Miss Wicker a letter in which she reportedly misspelled singing by dropping the first 'g.' New York Mayor Ed Koch says he developed his public speaking style by listening to the Singing Lady.

Wicker also gave an eight-year-old Chicago boy named Mel Torme (now the popular singer and composer) his start in radio.

She judged him the best at a talent show contest in 1933.

"Her husband (Walter Wicker) was about to begin producing a daytime soap opera called 'Song of the City,' in which there was a character called Jimmy the newsboy," Torme said in a telephone interview from his home in Beverly Hills, Calif. "She saw me and offered me the role. Unquestionably she started my radio career, which beecame extensive after that."

MISS WICKER WROTE her own scripts, creating versions of famous nursery rhymes, fairy tales, folk tales and portrayals of the childhoods of famous people.

"She didn't believe in talking down to children," Eilan said. "She also did not approve of violence. She took violence out of all stories, but left in the clear delineation of good and evil."

Just before beginning her career in radio, Miss Wicker added an extra 'e' to her first name after being advised by a numerologist it would bring her luck.

"She says she wasn't superstitious, but it wouldn't hurt," Eilan said.

She moved to New York City in 1935, shortly before their divorce.

Six years later, she married her current husband, Victor Hammer, the art dealer and co-owner of Hammer Galleries and Knodler Galleries in Manhattan. Hammer's brother is Armand Hammer, the oil magnate and business entrepeneur.

DURING THE WAR YEARS, she worked for Civil Defense, broadcasting shows on self-defense through story and song.

Kellogg stopped sponsoring Miss Wicker in 1949 as a result of alleged Communist links, but the allegatiions were later proven false.

"She was a totally apolitical person," Eilan said. "Unlike people like Jane Fonda, she never spoke for a candidate or did things that are done quite commonly now."

From 1951-4, Miss Wicker worked for ABC television, dramatizing a puppet version of the Singing Lady show. Off-camera, she spoke through the mouths of all the puppets.

She also established a children's theater in the Barbizon Plaza Hotel in Manhattan.. Actor Jack Lemmon, an unknown at that time, was the piano player.

"She would do the voice characterizations and I would do the music," Sanders said, in a telephone interview at his Manhattan apartment. He began collaborating with Miss Wicker in 1958, as a college student. He recorded programs with her until the show was canceled — 20 years later.

"WE DIDN'T do much rehearsing," Sanders said. "She really left it up to me for the improvisational parts. She was terrific at voice characterizations. Not only the voice changed, but the face changed, too, so she would become an angry girl, a grandparent or a pussycat."

After attending Juilliard, Sanders became a concert pianist who collaborated with such artists as famed violinist Itzak Perlman.

But Sanders says even these days, when he is touring America, people will come backstage to ask him whether he is the same pianist who worked with Miss Wicker.

"There are places in the West and Midwest I never thought this program reached," he said. "So many of the people are adults who say they were brought up with the Singing Lady."

As writer, actor, producer and director, Miss Wicker won nearly every major award in her field, including the Peabody Award in 1961 for excellence in children's programming. She wrote three children's books, several music plays and songs, recorded albums of children's classics and dozens of cassettes based on her radio program.

Earwig not after ears

GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP) — The European earwig is a dark, reddish-brown insect that invades homes and bites or pinches humans, usually without breaking the skin. Despite its name, the insect does not attack ears.

The insect, ¼ to ½ inch long with pincers, is most active at night.

During the day, it hides in piles of leaves, lawns, laundry on clotheslines, doorframes and windowsills, and under refrigerators and sinks, says Spectrum Home & Garden Products.

The President who served the shortest time in office was W.H. Harrison, who only served one month, in 1841.

Carol Steele, left, a member of the Midland Symphony Guild, is giving Bob Jones, the Midland Symphony Association president, the Guild's contribution of $15,000 — the beginning of the large amount needed for the Suymphony's Maintenance Fund. The Midland Symphony Guild supports the Symphony Association with time and the money gained from projects. Members of the Guild annually give their monetary pledge to the Association in May. Because the Symphony Association was in need of assistance now, the Guild in making its contribution of $15,000 early. This gift officially opens the Association's Maintenance Fund Drive. Much more is needed for the Symphony to continue at the quality level the Permian Basin has come to appreciate. Anyone interested in giving should contact Bob Jones at Midland National Bank or call 684-8774.

Symphony Guild members donate time, financial support to Midland-Odessa Symphony, Chorale

Few would argue that one of the brightest lights in the Midland-Odessa metroplex's cultural arena is its symphony and chorale. Newcomers never fail to be impressed by the high calibre of their performances, and long-time residents point with pride to the symphony and chorale's achievements.

The Midland-Odessa Symphony and Chorale has been designated a "metropolitan" orchestra. By definition, a metropolitan orchestra sustains a budget between $175,000 and $700,000. The Symphony's present budget is approximately $540,000, which puts it in the top 7 percent of American orchestras.

Considering that it usually takes an average population of 500,000 people to support a metropolitan orchestra, the existence of such an orchestra in a combined population of 190,000 is felt by most observers to be remarkable.

In level of support, the Midland-Odessa Symphony is the largest orchestra in West Texas — larger that El Paso's, Lubbock's or Amarillo's. One must travel over 300 miles to Dallas and Fort Worth or 350 miles to San Antonio or Austin before finding an orchestra with larger support.

THE MOSC OFFERS close to 50 concerts a year, including chamber music concerts. The main concerts are nine pairs of subscription concerts, but in addition it also performs four free outdoor Pops concerts, four youth concerts in the schools to about 7,000 children annually, an annual presentation of the complete Nutcracker Suite ballet, tour concerts to nearby cities and the new Cabaret Pops Concerts.

Last season the symphony represented the United States in a tour of Mexico, including a performance at the 13th International Festival of Music in Puebla, which included appearances by such organizations as the Berlin Symphony and the Munich Chamber Orchestra. And this season will mark the release of the Symphony's first nationally distributed, commercial recording, "The Permian Symphony" by John David Earnest, available through CRI records.

The Midland-Odessa Symphony and Chorale has gained national recognition for its National Young Artists Competition, which draws promising young talent from all over the country to compete for over $8,000 in awards.

The symphony is also the home base for the world class Thouvenel String Quartet, sponsored by the Midland Symphony and Chorus Association.

A central figure in the symphony's success is its conductor, Dr. Thomas Hohstadt. Now in his ninth season with MOSC, Hohstadt came to the Metroplex from a ten-season directorship with the Amarillo Symphony and a previous stint with the Honolulu Symphony. A graduate of the Vienna Akademie fur Musik, he holds four advanced degrees and has conducted over 700 compositions.

Hohstadt has upheld the high standards set by the MOSC's founder, Dr. Lara Hoggard, a man of vision who in 1962 combined the then-modest individual orchestras of Midland and Odessa into their present structure. He was followed by other outstanding musical directors: Robert Mann, Phillip Spurgeon and Robert Kreis. Their contributions have given rise to the Permian Basin's fame as a cultural oasis.

BUT SUCH ACHIEVEMENTS would never have been possible without the key support of community leaders such as Mrs. Ruth Burton and Mrs. Bill Noel, who were instrumental in the building of the rehearsal hall at Terminal. Such volunteers have made the dream of living music a reality.

This week's presentation of $15,000 by the Midland Symphony Guild to the Midland Symphony and Chorale Association reflects an on-going tradition of financial support and behind-the-scenes hard work without which the symphony could not exist.

Without the sympnony's volunteer organizations no tickets would be sold, no music programs would be printed, no funds would be raised to pay the musicians' salaries.

It took a special combination of organizational skills and optimism to provide the network for these accomplishments, and that special combination is best personified by two of the Midlanders who founded the Midland Symphony Guild, Mrs. J. Wilmont Hunt and Mrs. J. Harvey Herd. As board members of the newly formed Midland-Odessa Symphony and Chorale Association in 1962, they were the first to foresee the need for a strong women's auxiliary to help raise funds for the Symphony.

In the spring of 1963 they wrote the by-laws for the Midland Symphony Guild and sent out 200 invitations to prospective members. As Mrs. Hunt laughingly recalls, the limited membership gave the invitations a bit of "snob appeal" and all 200 invitees eagerly responded. The first Guild meeting was held at Mrs. Herd's house in 1963, when Mrs. Sam Cobb was elected president and Mrs. Hunt was elected Chairman of the Board.

The three leaders immediately roused the volunteers into action and, as Mrs. Hunt said, "The organization has run smooth as silk ever since."

The two women credit the Symphony's first conductor with the vision of combining Midland's and Odessa's modest orchestras into one full-scale professional symphony and chorale. "He was a genius with a genius's temperament," Mrs. Herd said. "No one was brave enough to say 'no' to him. He made us do the impossible and we didn't even have time to question it."

"DR. HOGGARD HAD NEVER even conducted his own orchestra before; his experience had been as chorale director. But he wanted a full symphony orchestra with chorale and that's what he got." One of Mrs. Herd's favorite symphony programs during Dr. Hoggard's tenure included two extremely ambitious productions, Carlo Minotti's "The Death of the Bishop of Brindisi" and Carl Orff's "Carmina Burana." The program required a 50-voice choir from Texas Tech University, a 37-voice high school treble choir and five guest soloists, and costumes borrowed from St. Michael's School in Dallas. The volunteers made the arrangements and the program went off without a hitch. "As I said, Dr. Hoggard made us to the impossible," Mrs. Herd said.

"We were always optimistic and somehow things always got done," Mrs. Hunt said, recalling the somersaults she had to turn to obtain a beer license for one of the Guild's "Five Flags Over Texas" county fair-type fund raisers. And Mrs. Herd laughs when she thinks of the struggle she had transporting a set of drums that were borrowed from the high school band for one of the orchestra productions.

They have both seen the Guild prosper and grow in success over their 20-year association. Ticket sales were slow at first, and for a while musicians had to be imported from the music department at Texas Tech. It took a lot of fund raisers over the years to provide the budget needed to support the kind of orchestra and chorale Midland and Odessa wanted — fundraisers that ranged from country bazaars to fashion shows, formal balls to the bull fights the Guild sponsored one summer at Ector County Coliseum.

Today as they look back over their 20 years of service to the MOSC, Mrs. Hunt takes special pride in the MOSC and the outlet it provides for "so many talented residents to use their talents for the enjoyment of the whole community."

MRS. HERD, WHO IN her earlier years was a public school music and voice teacher, takes great satisfaction in the cntinued progress of the Young Artist's Competition and the continued inspiration the symphony provides for budding talent in the public schools. "We're now starting to have some of our own children graduate and return to Midland to play in the orchestra, and that's so wonderful to see," she said.

Together the two women continue to inspire volunteer support for the MOSC and support is still needed. As Mrs. Herd pointed out, "Midland has been lucky in having a great influx of people who were used to having the best of everything and wanted the best for their children. When I arrived here in 1940 we were a town of 9,000 people and there was nothing here. So we got to work and got what we wanted done, but there's still a world of things to do."

Designer Kenzo tones down styles

By SUZY PATTERSON
AP Fashion Writer

PARIS (AP) — Kenzo, the first Japanese to make the big time in Paris some 12 years ago with his funny and sometimes shocking fashions, has toned down his designs in the spring ready-to-wear collection unveiled here.

Wrapping up the Paris showings this week, his line on Wednesday included the popular nautical looks that are sweeping the Paris collections for spring and summer 1983.

He also threw in a couple of tight sexy jersey dresses in red or black with bare backs crisscrossed with spaghetti straps. The sexy theme is another big Paris trend.

A best-seller should be a filmy white cotton voile tucked shirt, very full in front, with a wing collar and bow tie. It's a terrific holiday item, and you don't absolutely have to wear it as Kenzo shows it — paired with a black micro-mini and black sheer stockings.

After the short minis, Kenzo's bare midriff outfits with knotted tops, big bright hip ties and swinging circular skirts in varied solids of red, ruschia, turquoise or purple polished cotton looked festive enough for any island barbecue.

He not only firmly drapes hips, but also puts a loose sarong drape on suit skirts with large, boxy jackets.

The whole looks were ethnic, but details can be matched and mixed in different ways. You might want the tucked, fitted blouse with a Javanese ensemble, with or without the wrapped skirt or overskirt in different bright prints.

Strict white maharajah suits with boxy jackets, low hip sashes and a full frontal drape look very luxurious. For more frivolous moments, choose the Indian dancer look in several layers of full skirt in reds and hot fuschia or pink cotton.

DEAR ABBY

Neighbors seldom meet, visit

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: Poor "Agnes in Culver City"! She lived in the same house for 25 years and complained because her neighbors never said hello to her.

Your suggestion that she could have broken the ice and said hello to them might have worked anywhere else in the world except in Southern California.

We lived in Northridge in the San Fernando Valley for 5 1/2 years. One New Year's Eve a couple invited the entire block to their home for a party. At 3 a.m. as the guests were leaving, we overheard one guest say, "This has been so much fun, let's plan to get together again NEXT New Year's Eve!" — DON IN FONTANA, WIS.

DEAR DON: You were topped by a lady in Fullerton. Read on:

DEAR ABBY: I was born and raised in Salem, Ore., where neighbors always welcomed newcomers with some kind of food and an offer to help them get settled and make friends.

A new family moved in next door, so I baked a lovely chocolate cake and took it over to welcome them. The Mrs. handed it back to me and said, "Sorry, I'm allergic to chocolate."

DEAR ABBY: In answer to the 11-year-old girl who complained because her boyfriend, age 12, dumped her for an "uglier" girl:

Last year our 12-year-old son had his first "girlfriend" — another seventh-grader. She invited him to school socials and other "dates," followed him to football practice and phoned him constantly. If he didn't return her calls or didn't want to go on a date, she complained. Pretty soon he became uncomfortable and began avoiding her. She pursued him. They had a fight, which ended in some name-calling. Then he refused to talk to her.

We discussed the situation with him, trying to help him understand that it wasn't his fault — that reacting with anger to the pressure she had put on him was only natural. We encouraged him to talk to her and explain that he didn't "hate" her, he was just not ready for the kind of relationship she wanted. They are now on speaking terms, but the friendship was wrecked.

I wish that girl's mother had had a talk with her about the constant phone calls and the rest of the chasing. Even if they'd both been older, that kind of behavior would have been inappropriate. At 11 and 12, it was ridiculous! Two nice children went through a lot of misery.

I've talked with other mothers of adolescent sons who report similar experiences. The fact is, boys age 11 to 15 are not ready to have a "girlfriend." And regardless of how "grown up" an 11- or 12-year-old girl may feel, she's not ready for a "boyfriend," either. The bottom line is: Mothers should not permit their young daughters to chase boys. — ONE MOTHER'S VOICE

DEAR VOICE: You have voiced an important message for which I thank you. But a still louder voice is being heard throughout the land. PEER PRESSURE!

During any given week, no less than 300 letters from "desperate" girls between 10 and 13 cross my desk with this sad refrain: "Other girls my age have boyfriends, why can't I get one? There must be something wrong with me."

Key worker for elderly gets award

By CAROL DEEGAN

NEW YORK (AP) — "Aging is everybody's tomorrow," says Ethlyn Christensen, 81, of Denver, Colo., a political activist for the rights of senior citizens. She was recently presented with the 1982 "Woman of Conscience Award" by the National Council of Women of the United States in a ceremony held here.

Ms. Christensen was selected from a group of women nominated by the governors of 39 states. She is a charter member and former head of the Denver Commission on Aging and was a delegate to the 1981 White House Conference on Aging. In addition, she helped to establish Denver's Capital Hill Health Support Council, which sponsors programs for the elderly.

In accepting her award, Ms. Christensen said that although some of the senior citizens of the United States were affluent, the largest number of those 65 and older were of middle and lower class income. Their greatest concerns were housing, health, transportation, and the need for assurance that the Social Security Trust Fund will never fail them.

Noting that there is growing attention in the United States to gerontology and geriatrics, Ms. Christensen said senior citizens were increasingly seen as an important national resource, acting not only as volunteers, but also as lobbyists for causes of concern.

As chairman of the Regional Transportation District's Advisory Committee on Transportation for the Elderly and Handicapped in Denver, Ms. Christensen worked to have the front seats of buses reserved for the elderly and the disabled; to have a special discount fare for seniors; and to provide special door-to-door service for seniors to and from their apartment complexes and neighborhood shopping centers.

She was also a key figure in the repeal of the state food tax.

Nancy Barker, president of the National Council of Women, said Ms. Christensen "has given her leadership skills and relentless energy to dozens of organizations and causes. She has devoted thousands of hours of her own time to helping senior citizens, particularly by improving transportation and health services, and by increasing political awareness of the needs of senior citizens."

The National Council of Women is a coalition of major women's organizations representing some 18 million across the United States.

Since 1962, the organization has presented the "Woman of Conscience Award" to an American woman who has made an outstanding contribution to a pressing social need. Previous award winners include Rachel Carson, Margaret Mead and Barbara Jordan. This year's award to Ms. Christensen included a $1,500 grant contributed by Clairol Inc.

AT WIT'S END

Improving vegetables

By ERMA BOMBECK

My daughter, the vegetarian, got me started on eating less meat a couple of years ago.

She harped on it so long that I got to the point where I saw Bambi's eyes peeking out from under every casserole and Elsie the cow smothered in onions and secret sauce.

She really got to me when she drew a picture of my veins on a napkin and filled in the arteries with a ballpoint pen. It was a strong argument for zucchini.

But what really tipped the scale was when she told me how much weight I would lose by cutting back on meat and eating more vegetables. "Think of all the fat that will no longer be going into your system," she said.

I knew it wouldn't be easy. To begin with, I've always had a fetish about fresh vegetables ever since I was a child and saw our dog relieve himself on a stalk of rhubarb one day in the garden. Since then, I have never eaten anything that turns the water green when you cook it.

I started with an artichoke. The only thing that saved it was the Hollandaise sauce made out of a pound of butter, eggs, lemon juice and a tad of garlic.

Next I tried cauliflower which was nothing until the cheese sauce which I made out of sharp cheddar, a little flour and a cup of cream.

Peas had all the appeal of rabbit pellets until I jazzed them up with mushrooms sauteed in butter with a shot of sour cream.

I was an absolute genius when it came to celery. A little stalk that nutritionists said that by the time you got finished chewing it, you actually lost calories, was fat city in my hands. I stuffed it with cream cheese and black olives, and surfed on it through a wave of sour cream and bacon bits.

Even Chinese vegetables are rather palatable when you fry an egg with them, dump a little brown sugar on top, and add a half bottle of soy sauce.

My daughter came to visit the other day and had the nerve to tell me I looked a little wide in the hips. I told her it was her lousy vegetables that were doing it. I spend half of my life in the kitchen trying to make them edible and what do I get for it? An inflatable body!

Simple hairstyles suit tailored fashions

CHICAGO (AP) — The straighter, simpler lines of fall fashions signal a need for hairstyles with more "tailoring" and less curl than in the past few seasons.

That's the word from the twelve professionals who make up the Helene Curtis Hairstylists Advisory Board. They believe that tailoring in hair, as in new menswear fashions, is the most important new trend.

As an example, a short style with light curl on top and closely layered sides and back, is one shape that complements almost all of the current designer fashions.

For the first time in several years, the stylecasters give the nod to medium-length hair, from chin to just above the shoulder. In the recent past, fashions favored very short or very long hair. But with daytime hemlines now reeling like yo-yos from thigh to calf, a mid-length cut seems a good, workable compromise, say board members.

A new influence on hair is hats. From floppy fedoras to saucy little berets, they topped off many a fashion look when designers introduced the new fall lines.

According to stylist Jerry Gordon of Chicago: "Hats are important, especially the cloches and other 1920s styles. They're close to the head, and hair has to be designed to fit under the hats. That's why we'll see less volume in hair this fall, and more classic straight looks like the bob."

Gordon also sees marcel-like waves, "but looser and not as contrived" as the originals, as part of the smaller, closer, hair look.

The large number of working women who are now the backbone of many fashion designers' markets and beauty salons' clientele are more important than ever as a source of beauty and fashion trends, board members point out.

"The working-woman hairstyle, something versatile and wearable on a daily basis, is a dominant influence today," says Gerald Haynes, owner of three Detroit-area salons. Another stylist cites the ever-popular bob or pageboy as an enduring classic that working women request.

Noting a change in attitude, stylist Brenda Longhofer, of Louisville, Ky., says, "Professional arrogance is gone today. Our job is to design the looks that women want to wear, and most women seem to know what they want in a hairstyle."

Rocco Altobelli, in Minneapolis, adds, "If you insist on one look or length, you limit the appeal of your work. For instance, many hairstylists like to show off their technical ability on short styles. But women themselves tend to like longer hair."

Miniature houses big business

By HERBERT J. VIDA
Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

By today's standards, a mortgage-burning ceremony for a $15,000 house is a time for tears, not cheers. But early this year everyone who knows Jackie Andrews was at hers celebrating the milestone.

They toasted an end to $390-a-month house payments. They toasted inflation, which helped the home's value double in just five years. And they toasted the new twist in creative financing that Andrew's eight-room house in Ashland, Va., helped inspire.

The $15,000, bank-financed mortgage that Andrews had obtained with no money down five years earlier was a house that measures only 5 feet by 7 feet. The house, now worth $30,000 is a dollhouse — or miniature house as they are more often called today.

The mortgage on this replica of a former Virginia governor's mansion is believed to be the first ever granted on a miniature house. Now, industry analysts say, virtually all of the new, expensive custom-built dollhouses are mortgaged — just like ordinary homes.

BUILDING, COLLECTING and financing dollhouses has become big business. With spectacular growth in recent years, miniature home building now ranks with model railroading among hobby enthusiasts, according to Tony Kohn of the Hobby Industry Association of America.

A quarter of a million dollhouse enthusiasts spent more than $200 million nationwide last year in the 6,000 shops that stock miniature house kits and furnishings for them, Kohn said. And that does not include what Kohn calls "a national network of underground businesses," mostly operated by couples who make and sell miniature household items out of such things as bread dough and clay that has been "cured" in an ordinary kitchen oven. This work in the home accounts for another $100 million or so in unreported sales, Kohn estimated.

"Hobbies have always been strong during recessions, and at this particular time, ... miniature-home building is very good," Kohn said.

That is true despite the price, as Andrews's house indicates, is anything but miniature. The little structures can cost anywhere from tens of thousands of dollars for custom-built mansions — like $15,000 replica of the Russian Consulate in San Francisco that is on sale in Newport Beach, Calif., — to $19.98 for a starter kit. The average "baby house," as miniatures are called in Great Britain, goes for $200.

HENCE, THE NEED for long-term financing. In addition to the bank financing that dollhouse owners like Andrews have used, credit often is available from the miniature-home shops themselves.

"I closed an in-house $10,000 contract (on a Victorian dollhouse) . . . as close to a real bank contract as you can get without really having one," said Audrey Buchbam, of Los Angeles.

Some of the houses come furnished — with everything one would find in a normal size house, but on a scale of one-inch to the foot. (Because of limited space in many real homes and apartments, some dollhouse builders have gone to a scale as small as 1-4 inch to the foot.)

There are dollhouses with wallpaper, carpets, kitchen appliances, oil paintings and clocks that actually work. Some even come equipped with electricity, automatic garage-door openers and doorbells.

Several miniature homes around the country have double walls in which pipes have been installed to provide running water to kitchen spigots, showers and toilets, which even come equipped with recorded flushing sounds for authenticity. The water is circulated from a pump in the miniature house's garage.

AT A RECENT GATHERING of dollhouse enthusiasts at the Disneyland Hotel in Anaheim, Calif., the display of miniature furnishings includes live miniature plants, antiques, limited-edition furniture, fruits and vegetables packed in little store-marked shopping bags, pint-sized models pf people, working televisions and radios and crocheted tablecloths and napkins.

Most of the furnishings are authentic reproductions of regular-size furniture — down to the finest details, such as dovetailed drawers in desks and chests.

The more affluent and less adventuresome buy their furnishings, which can run into the hundreds and even thousands of dollars for a simple bedroom or dining room set. But many make their creations from scrap lumber, from wood obtained at miniature lumber yards in doll house shops, and even from such things as soda bottle caps, which make topnotch tops for round tables.

ALICE ROBBINS, a New Jerseyite who attended the miniature "house party" at the Disneyland Hotel, is one of the hundreds of so-called cottage crafters — those who have a mail-order or wholesale miniature-home business in their homes.

"You get a dream for a low cost and you can even afford to refurnish when you get tired of what you have," said Robbins. "Besides, you don't have to hire a cleaning woman.

"Most of us," she continued, "just used to knit, crochet or oil paint and when we found miniatures, we discovered a . . . hobby and (a way to) make some extra money. I guess you could say we create illusions."

Miniature enthusiasts who for one reason or another find it difficult to construct houses, sometimes hire others to build the structure, which they then furnish themselves. The contractors' fees can run into thousands of dollars for the more elaborate buildings.

HOBBYISTS SAY one appeal of building and furnishing miniature houses is as a pastime for an entire family or for couples whose children have left home.

"Before we started building miniatures, we hardly seemed to have much to talk about to each other," said Sydney Kerr of Torrance, Calif., "and now we're spending more time together because we both share a common interest." That interest is their second miniature home, more sophisticated than the one they traded up from. The Kerrs said they now spend much of their leisure time working on the three-story miniature house instead of watching television.

"Even a 7-year-old can help build the miniature house," said Joe Hermes, last year's president of the National Association of Miniature Enthusiasts, which is based in Los Angeles. The nonprofit association has a paid membership of 12,000 and publishes its own magazine, the Miniature Gazette, which competes with a number of other industry magazines trying to cash in on the miniature craze.

Hermes said that much of the increased interest in miniatures over the last five or six years was been from men. They have been "hiding in the closet" while they worked on miniature projects, too embarrassed to tell their friends that they were building a dollhouse for themselves, not for their daughter or granddaughter, Hermes said.

"It used to be that fathers would put together a dollhouse for their daughters, but now they're doing it for their own fantasies," Hermes said.

DINNER FARE
Agreeable Ribs & Rice
Snow Peas & Bean Sprouts
Pineapple & Almond Cakes

AGREEABLE RIBS

A sweet sauce and chewy ribs.

3 pounds (generous) fresh young pork spareribs
1-3rd cup firmly packed dark brown sugar
3 tablespoons soy sauce
1 cup clear fat-free chicken broth
1 clove garlic, peeled and halved
25-cent size fresh ginger root, peeled and slivered

Have meat cut in 1-rib lengths. Arrange in one layer in a foil-lined 15 by 11 by 2-inch roasting pan. Roast in a preheated 350-degree oven for 30 minutes; remove ribs and pour off fat; return ribs to foil-lined pan. Stir together sugar, soy sauce and broth until sugar dissolves; add garlic and ginger root; pour over ribs. Continue roasting in the 350-degree oven, basting midway, until ribs are tender but firm — 1 hour longer; baste again. If desired, skim fat from sauce; pour sauce over ribs. Serve with rice. Makes 3 servings.

Original manuscripts irreplaceable

By JACK SMITH
Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

As one of thousands of writers who have already converted to the word-processing home computer, I do not miss that preliminary product of a writer's labor — the original manuscript.

When a writer composes on a computer, his mistakes are instantly erased, without a trace, by his corrections, and there is no tortured original manuscript to betray the anguished trial and error behind the finished work.

Writing on a computer screen is like writing in water. The literary manuscript will become a historical curiosity, like the goose quill pen.

I hadn't thought much about this side effect of the computer revolution until I read a column on the subject by Prof. Toro in the Monterey (Calif.) Peninsula Herald.

"ONE WONDERS," he says, "what will become of the craft of literary historians.... To the writer whose study is the works of other writers, there are few thrills comparable to holding an original manuscript by a fine novelist or poet in his hands, the very words and paper that the great man himself sweated over.... (Prof. Toro notes that he means women authors as well as men, and uses "the generic masculine" to include both.)

"Something magic is involved in the craft of writing," he continues, "and to see the rough draft of a story or poem is to re-experience the creative process. The literary historian revels in detailing the words stricken out in favor of those that finally see print; the telltale blods of ink and spots of blood, sweat and tears on the paper...."

It could hardly be put more eloquently.

THE OTHER MORNING after reading Prof. Toro I phoned the Huntington Library to ask about their collection of manuscripts.

Within an hour I was seated at a table in a wonderfully quiet reading room at the Huntington with Sue Hodson, assistant curator of literary manuscripts, looking at some of the treasures that would be shown in an upcoming exhibition.

THE RETURN OF SHERLOCK HOLMES
VII
The Adventures of Six Napoleons

"That's Conan Doyle's original manuscript?" I asked, feeling a bit of the thrill Prof. Toro had dedscribed.

It was indeed the original, dated 1903. The story had first appeared in Strand magazine the next year, after the public had demanded their hero's return from the dead.

I began to read:

It was no very unusual thing for Mr. Lestrade of Scotland Yard to look in upon us of an evening....

So far so good. Then minor changes began to appear. He had scratched out occasion and written in evening. He had added a very, for emphasis. He had changed rushing to hurrying. He had written They had seen a man running out of a shop, and changed it to They had noticed a man running out of a shop.... (A change for the worse, if I may say so.)

He had changed seemed to be to appeared to be, for reasons known only to himself.

He had written He lay on his back, his knees drawn up, and his great black beard swelling upward.... and changed it to He lay on his back, his knees drawn up, and mouth horribly open.... (Indeed, a change for the better!)

He glared at us like a vicious wild beast had been changed to read He glared at us from the shadow of his matted hair.... (Ah, yes; much better, my dear Dr. Doyle.)

I wondered how many of those alterations had been due to Conan Coyle's whims of taste, and how many to the urgent intrusions of Dr. Watson.

KIDNAPED

Chapter 1 — I Set Off Upon My Journey to the House of Shaws

But he hadn't liked that chapter title, so he crossed it out and wrote:

Chapter 1 — I Find a Letter from the House of Shaws

And then he begins that famous story; words I hadn't read since I was 12:

I will begin the story of my adventures with a certain morning.... But he had crossed out a certain and made it April.

Then he had crossed out April and restored a certain. Then he had gone on to write in the month of May in the year 1749. But he had crossed out May and made it June and crossed out 1749 and made it 1751.

AT ABOUT THAT TIME, you might think, Robert Louis Stevenson would have crumpled his first page into a ball and tossed it in the wastebasket and tried some other vocation.

But no; he scribbled on. When I arose for the last time in my old bed.... But then he crossed that out and wrote When I took the key for the last time out of the door of my father's house....

And so it went, page after page. And I had always admired Robert Louis Stevenson's writing because it was so graceful and seemingly effortless, with an unerring choice of words.

From now on, a writer's agony will remain his secret. Nothing will remain for the archives but a letter-perfect printout and a floppy disk, from which, alas, no future historian will ever discover that his hero had feet of clay.

Armani, Ferre fashions becoming classic styles

By NINA HYDE
Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

MILAN, Italy — Two American store buyers were sitting in the bar of the Hotel Gallia playing the fashion folks' favorite new game. "Twenty-five years from now, which Italian fashion will be most memorable?" one tested the other. They bounced the possibilities around and came up with the same answer that most are coming up with these days: the oversized blazer of Giorgio Armani and the geometric cuts of Gianfranco Ferre.

But both Armani and Ferre have moved away from the designs that others call their most notable efforts. As the spring ready-to-wear shows here have demonstrated, neither is content with what he did originally to earn distinction.

"It is not right to impose a look on someone," Ferre says now. A master of clean-cut, architectural clothes, Ferre came to that style of design quite naturally. He trained as an architect before designing clothes.

"My look was too strong for the normal woman. The look of my clothes was stronger than the shape of the woman who bought the dress," he says.

A lot of that has changed with his spring collection. He hasn't abandoned the geometric cuts that other designers have tried to copy. But now he has done everything in very soft fabrics so that the woman brings about the shape of the clothes "rather than my imposing my look on her," Ferre says.

Most everything has a roomy cut with wide armholes and the emphasis on the hip rather than the waist. Ferre's fabrics are so soft the clothes sometimes seem draped on the body. Pleats control some of the fullness in his blouses and tunics.

Often the geometric scheme is carried out by combining sections of different fabrics in the same garment — a sweater that is knitted in suede, silk and linen looks at close range like a geometric patchwork. An easy-fitting white blouse for evening is silk in front, wool knit in the back. Another has pleats that tuck partially into a skirt while the rest moves separately, like a jacket.

His favorite accessory is the belt; throughout the collection, two belts hang loosely over the hips for decoration. Shoes remain flat and hats are center-creased straws.

"Given the price our things have to sell for, particularly in America, we can no longer make anything too extreme," he says.

Smorgasbord potato salad

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
AP Food Editor

This autumn, serving a home-style smorgasbord for a buffet supper may appeal to you. Sliced ham or smoked tongue, a chafing dish of meatballs, a Swedish-style potato salad and a bowl of cherry tomatoes with cucumber sticks plus a basket of rolls make a fine array.

SWEDISH-STYLE POTATO SALAD

8¼-ounce can sliced beets
1 large (about 6 ounces) red apple, unpeeled and diced into ¼-inch pieces (1 cup)
½ cup diced (¼-inch) dill pickles
¼ cup minced parsley
1½ tablespoons Dijon mustard
½ cup sour cream
Salt to taste
Lettuce
12-ounce jar herring fillets in wine sauce, drained
Garnish: Unpeeled red apple slices, minced fresh dill or extra minced parsley

Peel and cut potatoes into ½-inch cubes; turn into a 2- or 3-quart bowl. Drain beets, reserving liquid; dice into ¼-inch pieces; add to potatoes with apple, dill pickles and parsley.

In a small bowl whisk 2 tablespoons of the reserved beet liquid into the mustard until blended; gradually whisk in the sour cream until blended. Pour over the potato mixture; toss gently; add salt and toss again. Cover and chill.

At serving time, line a serving plate with lettuce and mound potato salad in center. Garnish with herring and apple slices; sprinkle dill over potato salad.

Plantation Cake still much-loved dessert

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
AP Food Editor

During World War II, Stouffer's restaurants began serving Plantation Cake. It was so popular that after Stouffer's closed, many fans of the dessert mourned its loss.

Recently a friend told me that nowadays Plantation Cake is served at the Emmeline and Hessie restaurant, St. Simon's Island, Ga. (The restaurant is named after the two ferry boats that run between Brunswick, Ga., and St. Simon's Island.) The restaurant's cookbook contains the Stouffer recipe.

Urged on by nostalgia, we tried a slightly revised version of the recipe at our house and we're passing it along.

PLANTATION CAKE

1 cup butter, at room temperature
¾ cup light brown sugar, not packed down
¼ teaspoon salt
2½ cups all-purpose flour
2-3rds cup water
½ teaspoon baking soda
2-3rds cup molasses

In a large bowl cream butter, sugar and salt. Add the flour and stir until mixture resembles coarse crumbs.

Place 2 cups of the crumb mixture in a buttered and floured 9 by 9 by 2-inch cake pan; press evenly over bottom of pan. Evenly pour ¾ cup of the molasses mixture over the crumb layer. Sprinkle ½ cup crumb mixture over molasses mixture. Evenly pour remaining molasses mixture over crumb mixture. Top with remaining crumb mixture.

Bake in a preheated 350-degree oven until a cake tester inserted in the center comes out clean — 45 to 50 minutes. Cool partly on wire rack.

Fighting insomnia

By SHIRLEY BRIGHT BOODY
Registered Dietitian
Copley News Service

Dear Shirley: I have a hard time falling asleep at night and sometimes I don't get to sleep until 3 or 4 in the morning. I work all day, and I have to be up at 7 a.m. to get to work at 8 a.m.

I am so tired all day I can hardly do my work. I am a 54-year old secretary, and I am divorced so I have to work. I have been gaining a lot of weight lately because when I can't sleep I get up and eat.

I have been going to bed later and later, hoping that I can get to sleep right away, but it doesn't seem to work that way. I sit all day and don't get much exercise because I am too tired.

A friend told me about some kind of an acid in certain foods that acts as a natural sedative. Do you know what it is or what foods have it? Can you give me any suggestions to help me sleep better?

I always read you column, and I think you help a lot of people. I sure do hope you can help me. Thank you. — Mrs. M.Y.

Dear Mrs. M.Y.: The natural substance in foods your friend is referring to is an amino acid called tryptophan and it does have a sedative effect. Milk, eggs and all red meat are high in tryptophan and it also can be purchased at your local drugstore. Ask the pharmacist to give you some recommendations.

Physical exercise is one of the best ways to fight insomnia. Get yourself started on a new program of daily exercise and get physically tired everyday. Enroll in exercise classes or even brisk walking will help.

Do not stay up late. Take warm, soothing baths before retiring and take warm skim milk or a glass of white wine to help you relax.

If you awaken in the middle of the night and want to eat something, take only skim milk and don't have high-calorie junk food around. Go back to bed and use quiet meditation to relieve your mind of fearful and anxiety ridden thoughts.

Ask your boss to let you take a few 10-minute breaks during the day. Use them to rest and relax.

My weight reduction program will tell exactly what foods to eat to lose weight and how to exercise your body for quick tone-ups.

Get some fun into your life. Recreation is very therapeutic, and so is positive thinking.

Dear Shirley: I have a 15-year-old daughter who is constantly eating dietetic food because she is so afraid of gaining weight. She eats sugarless candy and mints, sugarless wafers and is constantly chewing sugarless gum.

She has been complaining a lot lately about cramps in her stomach and diarrhea. Could there possibly be any connection between sugar-free dietetic foods and diarrhea?

Her girlfriend does the same thing and is also having similar symptoms, but her mother thinks I am wrong. What is your opinion? — Mrs. H.D.

Dear Mrs. H.D.: You are right. Sugar-free dietetic foods usually contain a substance called sorbitol that if taken constantly can produce osmotic watery diarrhea and cramping.

Tell your daughter to discontinue the sugarless candy and other sugarless foods for a week and see if her symptoms subside. Check with her doctor if you are in doubt.

Dear Shirley: Can you tell me what the word "chelated" means? I take iron in the form of ferrous sulphate and I saw an ad for "chelated iron" so I wonder if that kind is better? Is there any kind of iron I shouldn't take? — Mrs. T.W.B.

Dear Mrs. T.W.B.: Chelation is a process in which iron or other minerals are bonded to a protein or other substance supposedly to facilitate absorption. You can take it if you want to, but don't spend a lot of unnecessary extra money for it because ferrous sulphate is fine.

You should avoid enteric-coated iron tablets, however, because maximum iron absorption occurs in the duodenum and enteric-coated tablets may not dissolve until they are much farther down in the intestine, and you could lose some benefits.

If you desire information on my home weight control study program, send a long, self-addressed envelope to Shirley Bright Boody, P.O. Box 1038, Rancho Mirage,CA 92270.

Scientists experimenting with genetic engineering, heredity

By PAUL JACOBS
Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

In an ingenious series of experiments, scientists in a Baltimore laboratory have found a way to correct a hereditary defect in fruit flies so that the offspring of the defective, brown-eyed flies have normal, red eyes.

The results, reported in the Oct. 22 edition of the research journal Science, have profound implications for the study of complex organisms including man. They also suggest a new approach to improving plant varieties by genetic engineering.

The researchers — Allan C. Spradling and Gerald M. Rubin of the Carnegie Institution — point out, however, that the possibility of correcting a human hereditary defect by their method is still quite remote.

The scientists attached the genes for normal fruit fly eye color to so-called "jumping genes," naturally occurring bits of genetic material that for unknown reasons spontaneously move in and out of chromosomes. Chromosomes are the parts of a cell that direct an organism's growth and development.

THE LAB-JOINED genes were then injected into the casings surrounding the embryos of defective, brown-eyed flies. As they do in nature, the "jumping genes" were able to attach themselves to the embryos' chromosomes — carrying the eye color genes along with them.

The offspring of these flies carried the normal gene and their eyes were red.

This was not the first time that laboratory scientists have succeeded in altering the heredity of a complex organism.

A year ago, scientists in a number of laboratories began reporting that they had successfully altered the genetic machinery of mice by injecting genes from other species into newly fertilized mouse egg cells.

The experiments created a wave of excitement, but the results were not totally satisfactory.

THOMAS E. WAGNER of Ohio University and Peter C. Hoppe of the Jackson Laboratory in Maine, for example, reported that their experiments could generate mice that produced an important component of rabbit red blood cells.

But the amounts produced were small, Wagner said in an interview Thursday. The technique did not ensure that the foreign genes would be inserted in the right place to work effectively. Whether an experimental mouse would actually make small amounts of the rabbit blood protein was a matter of luck.

Scientists in several laboratories, Wagner said, are working on ways to control the experiment so that they can get functioning genes in the right place with a high degree of reliability.

Their success is dependent on their use of the jumping genes — technically called "transposable elements" — that were first discovered 40 years ago in corn by biologist Barbara McClintock.

THE ROLE of such jumping genes in nature is a matter of continuing speculation, according to Spradling.

McClintock believes that the special genes have played a vital role in the development of higher organisms, Spradling said; while Nobel-laureate Francis Crick views them as parasites — extra baggage carried along by many species throughout their evolutionary journey without any particular use to the species.

Toys important in babies' growth, development, perception of world

BALTIMORE (AP) — The toys that adults purchase for babies may not be the ones the babies would select if they could go shopping themselves. That's because parents often buy toys without having a full understanding of what appeals to babies, a behavioral scientist says.

Dr. Doris W. Welcher, who has a Ph.D in developmental psychology, points out that a baby's sight and sound perceptions emerge rapidly, so an understanding of how children develop is important in selecting toys that will best enhance their growth and pleasure.

"A baby doesn't play with toys just to while away the hours," she explains. "Toys are a very important part of learning about size, texture, shape and the way things work. The most interesting playthings are those that say to a baby, 'Pick me up and do something with me,' rather than toys that say, 'View me.'"

Mrs. Welcher, a consultant to Johnson & Johnson Child Development Products Division, is also a consultant to day care and Headstart programs. The child psychologist, in the department of pediatrics at the Johns Hopkins University School of Medicine in Baltimore for 18 years, now teaches part time at Johns Hopkins in the department of medical psychology.

Having observed thousands of babies at play, she says newborns can distinguish color from black and white and prefer to look at patterns rather than straight lines, and circles rather than squares.

She says it's important for parents to know, for example, that newborns like toys that have pictures of faces on them, toys that are bright and colorful.

Research also indicates that newborns can see only objects that are 7 to 12 inches from their eyes. Parents should realize, Mrs. Welcher says, that objects out of this range appear only as fuzzy blurs. It is also difficult for young babies to focus on fast-moving objects.

"A child's eyesight is like a camera flash," Mrs. Welcher says. "The baby looks at an object, slowly focuses on it, 'flashes' the image, then moves to something else."

It's only after about six months that a baby's eyes start operating on automatic flash, she adds. Babies can focus on tiny objects at this point, and their vision compares to an adult's.

Mrs. Welcher says newborns are drawn to toys with bright colors, the reds, the yellows, the oranges. "Babies seek information. Bright colors alert them more than drab ones, like pink or baby blue," she says.

The sound a toy makes is another important consideration when shopping for toys for the young, says Mrs. Welcher. Infants prefer crisp, clear sounds, like those associated with a bell or rattle. Babies also like variety, so a rattle that chimes or squeaks provides the most enjoyment. A young infant finds sudden, loud sounds startling and irritating.

Often parents overlook the simple pleasure babies derive from music. Mrs. Welcher says singing is still one of the best ways to help a baby get to sleep. Studies indicate that a baby's breathing and pulse rate become very regular when listening to soft, rhythmic music, possibly because it reminds the baby of the mother's heartbeats. A radio or record player is a good idea if the child has trouble sleeping.

Mrs. Welcher advises parent and other adults to observe how the children are developing before purchasing toys.

Some of the questions parents might ask are: What is my baby doing now with his hands, his legs, his mouth? What does my baby enjoy doing? What things attract my baby?

Mrs. Welcher suggests parents buy toys that are appropriate to their child's emerging skills, avoiding playthings that are either too complicated or not challenging enough.

Hints for home do-it-yourselfers

By ANDY LANG
AP Newsfeatures

Q. — An outside window sill on our house needs to be replaced because it is in such bad condition. It's a double-hung window where the top comes down and the bottom goes up. I can see how to get rid of the moulding or stoll and the apron, but can't figure out how to remove the sill and then replace it. I hope you can help.

A. — The trick is not to try to remove it in one piece. Instead, saw it through close to one jamb, then do the same on the other side. The large piece that remains in the center can now be lifted up. The parts still there can be taken out with a hammer and chisel or any other tools that seem appropriate. If the pieces become stubborn, simply chop them apart, since you won't need them again. You can then make or buy a sill replacement, being sure you cut it to size or buy one that you can trim to fit. It's a fairly simple matter to hammer the sill into place, using a piece of scrap wood as an aid, but you should seal the new sill first so it won't soak in moisture. If necessary, use a wooden wedge to make the sill fit tightly. Once everything is in place, use thin nails to keep the sill secure.

Q. — I am looking for the cheapest and best way to color some unfinished furniture with stain and varnish. The furniture will be in a child's playroom and need not be finished as an expert would do it.

A. — The cheapest way to get the result you want is with a varnish stain which, as its name implies, is a combination product that stains and varnishes in one operation. However, it will not give you the best result, although it will be passable if you work very carefully. The most important part is that you do not overlap the varnish stain as you apply it. For the best result, you must apply the stain, a sealer and the varnish, each separately and after the previous coat is thoroughly dry. Some wood finishers even apply a sealer below and over the stain.

Q. — I am sure you have answered this question before, but I need a reply now. How can white spots be removed from a table top?

A. — It would have helped if you had mentioned what caused the white spots. First try rubbing with spirits of camphor. If that doesn't work, try lemon oil, then vegetable oil. Sometimes, they will disappear if you rub them with the ashes from a cigarette or cigar. Powdered rottenstone also will work sometimes. Ditto powdered pumice and a little oil. With all of these treatments, there is a possibility the finish in that area may be dulled and will have to be touched up.

(The techniques of using varnish, shellac, lacquer, stain, bleach, remover, etc., are detailed in Andy Lang's booklet, "Wood Finishing in the Home," which can be obtained by sending 50 cents and a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope to Know-How, P. O. Box 477, Huntington, NY 11743. Questions of general interest will be answered in the column, but individual correspondence cannot be undertaken.)

Oil show had something for everyone

By LESLIE HAINES
Energy-Business Writer

The 1982 Permian Basin Oil Show offered something for everyone: automated drilling rigs and cutaway Christmas trees; antique automobiles and computers which spoke Arabic and made drawings of E.T., the Extra Terrestrial; 1/4 scale models of gas processors, and trucks, BOPs, rigs, rigs and more rigs.

All manner of visitors and exhibitors were at the four-day oil country fair, which ended Saturday. A robot spoke of sucker rods and tried to pull a beer from a spectator's pocket.

More than 400 petroleum pioneers, each with at least 30 years in the oil patch behind him, checked in at the Pioneers' Lounge on the grounds and received certificates of recognition in appreciation for their contributions to the industry.

The eldest was a man who began work in 1911 as a driller for the Blowout No. 1 Company in Elk City, Oklahoma. On another application to be a pioneer, one old-timer wrote that his job description was "flunky."

Manufacturers, suppliers and service companies were at the show for different reasons. Established firms which operate in other industries wanted to tell oil country they are breaking into the oil and gas industry with a new product line, or are changing with new ideas or new management. New companies introduced themselves to the public, hoping to grab some of the market share.

• • •

Perhaps the exhibitor who should have won the award for coming the farthest to participate was Marco Seattle, a firm which manufactures oil skimmers, (they helped skim the Ixtoc, offshore Mexico spill), equipment for the tuna fishing industry, and now, oil/gas/water separators for the oil patch.

This was the company's first Permian Basin Oil Show, but Marco is no stranger to the Basin. For almost two years, Marco has been field testing its new Flo-thru Separators in a field near Snyder, Texas.

In mid-December of this year the firm will be delivering a large installation of 10 units for a complete revamping of a waterflood there for a major company, according to Bill Lerch, Marco vice president.

The company manufactures a fully automated separator which removes oil and solids from produced water at rates up to 16,000 BWPD.

The separator uses a patented foam pack as its separation medium and normally needs no chemical additions.

Marco has shipyards in San Diego, Cal., and Seattle, and subsidiaries in Panama, Peru and the Canary Islands. Its marine division makes net handling equipment, winches, power blocks and other mechanical equipment for tuna boats.

"In 1971, we got involved with the oil industry through our marine oil skimmers, which were at the Santa Barbara and Ixtoc spills, and also at the burning of the Burma Agate in the Galveston Ship Channel," Lerch said.

In the Permian Basin, the company is represented by Tex-Mex Industries in Midland, Hobbs and Snyder.

NDT Systems Inc. of Midland-Odessa was displaying its drill pipe console for inspection of used pipe from 2 3/8- to 5 1/2-inch OD pipe at the show. The company, a Pengo subsidiary, manufactures and sells electronic, non-destructive pipe inspection units for sucker rods, new and used casing and tubing, and other tubulars.

NDT has had its ups and downs this year, like many equipment manufacturers (it laid off several workers earlier this year), but company officials still deem it vital to be at trade shows around the country.

On the plus side, NDT opened a new training facility in Houston and moved its manufacturing operations to a new plant south of Midland Regional Air Terminal.

"We have been very selective in where we go, where the activity is, where we feel out customers will be," said sales manager Herb Norman. Company officials wanted to re-structure the display booth, but held off because of costs involved. Norman estimated the 10-by-10 foot booth cost $5-7,000 to build and maintain for the duration of the show, when out-of-town employees' expenses were taken into consideration.

NDT was an exhibitor at the OTC Show in Houston in May, the Casper, Wyoming Show in April, and in February, was in Singapore for the Far Eastern Expo, a smaller version of Houston's show. Norman spent a month in the region, making sales calls in the Philippines, Indonesia and Malaysia.

Most exhibitors were aiming to show off new products and attract new customers, but to Carolyn Pauree, new president of Tubeco company out of Crane, the show was an opportunity to make personal contact with as many oil field people as possible. Her goal: letting them know the company changed ownership three weeks ago.

Pauree, Tubeco's secretary-treasurer for many years, said she has restructured the firm from top to bottom, bringing in Tommy Franks as vice president-marketing, and hiring two new board members, revamped accounting and legal staff and two new engineers. One will be over the Tubeco foundry in Crane, the other will oversee fabrication.

The firm, operating in Crane for the past 20 years, is the only one in the nation which makes AISI and ASTM-certified, cast steel oil field anchoring devices, used for tie down equipment for pump jacks and workover units. Its anchors are also used extensively in the utility and telephone industries to secure poles and other structures.

Tubeco, with about 45 employees, holds six patents for the steel anchors. It also makes 50,000 and 100,000 pound testers used by both its reserach and development department and by customers to test the anchors, Pauree said.

Business is done in 20 states and also in several foreign countries. At the Permian Basin Oil Show, representatives of a major oil company stopped by to discuss their plans for shipping Tubeco anchors to Trinidad, Pauree said.

A trade show is always a showcase for young companies attempting to become known and grab a share of their targeted market area. For members of the Co-Exx Pipe Company team, this year's oil show was no exception.

The Big Spring firm is about a year old and manufactures 3408 high density polyethylene pipe used in gas, oil, CO2 and water transportation. It is one of only two firms in the world to successfully co-extrude 3408 resin into a three-layered pipe, according to plant manager Joe Langford and president Granville Hahn.

The Big Spring facility uses a fully computerized and automated system to manufacture the API—approved pipe, which can be extruded in external or internal layers to combat paraffin build-up. Langford said he sees the pipe being especially useful in the Permian Basin as more and more CO2 is used for tertiary recovery techniques.

P.E. pipe is normally one third the cost of steel pipe, and suffers less corrosion and paraffin build-up. Plastic pipe has had a reputation for freezing and cracking, but Co-Exx claims it has solved that problem by extruding the pipe three times, Langford said.

The firm was created in July 1980, and the first pipe was produced in December of that year. Dies for six and eight inch are in place and the product line will thus be expanded in early 1983.

A major Houston-based independent operating in Howard County replaced 125,000 feet of steel pipe with Co-Exx pipe and has had no further problems, according to a video presentation at Co-Exx's booth.

Latest reports reveal dismal conditions

By ROBERT BURNS
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — If anyone needed convincing that the summer business quarter was a dismal one, the newest reports on corporate profits should end all doubt.

And the picture looks even worse when you consider that results for the July-September quarter are compared with earnings from a year earlier, a quarter in which the economy was sinking into the current recession and profits were sliding.

The manufacturing sector of the economy is a shambles. For many of these companies the news is not of a decline in profit but of no profit at all.

Consider:

—Republic Steel Corp. lost $74.6 million. The company said its production of steel was the lowest for any quarter, in the absence of a strike, in more than 40 years. Among other steel companies, Armco Inc. reported a loss of $122.6 million, Inland Steel said it lost $45.1 million, and Kaiser Steel lost $24 million.

—Allis-Chalmers Corp., a farm equipment manufacturer, lost $63.5 million compared with a profit of $7.9 million a year earlier. Caterpillar Tractor Co., the nation's biggest producer of earth-moving machinery and equipment, lost $28.1 million. In the same period last year Caterpillar had a profit of $174.1 million.

—Aluminum Company of America lost $14.4 million. To compensate, the company has cut production, laid off workers and reduced its stock of unsold aluminum. Its chairman, W.H. Krome George, complained: "We still see no significant increase in aluminium demand, and we believe that when the recovery comes it will be gradual."

Some business executives wondered aloud if, indeed, a recovery was near.

"From where I sit," said Andrew C. Sigler, chairman of the forest products company Champion International Corp., "I don't see any signs of a rebound either in housing or in the general economy. The only news is that things don't seem to be any worse."

Sigler's company reported a 32 percent drop in third-quarter profit, and several other big forest-products concerns reported profit drops of a similar size.

The pain was not universal. Some companies fared well in this year's third quarter: major banks and investment firms were big gainers, and profits were up at many communications, computer and consumer products companies, too.

While many companies had braced themselves for the problem of declining profits, a growing number of concerns are throwing in the towel and declaring bankruptcy.

Dun & Bradstreet Corp., which keeps track of such things, said this past week that 554 commercial and industrial concerns failed in the second week of October. That was a slight decline from the previous week's 598, but it pushed the total for the year so far to 19,724 — the most for any full year since the Depression.

The comparison of 1982's business failures with those of the 1930s is weakened by the fact that there are far more businesses operating now than 50 years ago.

For business as a whole, 1982 has not been the kind of year the Reagan administration was counting on to make its economic program work. With interest rates high and operating profits down, business has been slow to make the investments in technology needed to improve its competitiveness in world markets.

"Even the optimists find the outlook for investment spending quite gloomy," Chase Manhattan Bank economist Douglas L. Bendt said in the bank's latest report on international finance.

In other business and economic developments this past week:

—The United States and its Common Market allies agreed on new limits for European steel shipments to the U.S. market, heading off a possible trade war and avoiding punitive duties that were to take effect if an agreement was not reached by Thursday. President Reagan and U.S. steel executives hailed the agreement.

—The government reported that the economy expanded at a weak annual rate of 0.8 percent in the third quarter, far less than is necessary to absorb the widening pool of unemployed and below the second quarter's 2.1 percent growth rate. A group of 37 financial executives polled by the Conference Board said they expected the nation's output of goods and services to jump to an annual growth rate of 2.3 percent in the fourth quarter and 2.8 percent for all of next year.

—Braniff International and Pacific Southwest Airlines announced a tentative agreement to form a joint venture in which some of the planes, employees and routes of the failed Braniff would be operated by Pacific Southwest. For Braniff, which filed for court protection under federal bankruptcy laws last May, the agreement provides an opportunity to generate revenue to pay creditors.

—The government reported that the nation's builders started work on 14.4 percent more houses in September than in the month before. Construction starts on single-family houses rose to the highest annual rate since July 1981. Separately, the government said manufacturers used just 69.1 percent of capacity in September, down 0.5 percentage points from the month before.

—The Securities and Exchange Commission staff charged that several major brokerage firms brought themselves to the edge of financial disaster by helping members of the billionaire Hunt family of Texas speculate in the silver market in 1980. The New York Stock Exchange censured and levied a $400,000 fine against Bache Halsey Stuart Shields Inc. for its role in the handling Hunt silver contracts. Bache accepted the fine and censure without admitting or denying any wrongdoing.

—Chemical Bank cut its prime lending rate to 11.5 percent, but no other major banks followed the lead of the New York City bank. Several economists and bank executives had predicted this past week that the prime rate would fall to 11 percent by the end of this year. It stood at 16.5 percent as recently as mid-July.

Oilfield service industry likely to change

HOUSTON — The structure of the oilfield service and supply industry will change substantially during the next few years, an executive of a leading international research and management consulting firm says.

Bruce Putnam, manager of Arthur D. Little's Energy Services Section, said the oilfield service and supply industry will see changes in the number of participants through both consolidation and bankruptcy. In the long term, he said, the industry also may see shifts in the roles of various customers and suppliers.

Speaking at a seminar on strategic planning for the energy industries conducted by Arthur D. Little, Putnam said, "the oilfield service and supply industry will require different strategies as it becomes a more mature industry with only a modest growth rate."

"If, as we believe, corporate strategy selection is largely a function of industry maturity and competitive position," Putnam said, "then external stimuli which changes maturity and/or the competitive intensity within the industry usually require a change in strategy to counter threats or exploit new opportunities."

When defining the maturity of an industry, Putnam said, at least eight factors are usually considered. They include: growth rate, growth potential, product lines, number of competitors, share distribution, customer loyalty, entry barriers and technology.

Maturity and competitive position are two key elements in defining the strategic planning practice, the Arthur D. Little official said.

During the 1974-81 period, as oil prices rose, the oilfield service and supply industry's maturity position sifted from early/mid-mature back to one of the late growth, Putnam said. This was characterized by a major change in growth rate, increase in number of competitors, and changes in technology. In addition, the spread widened within the industry between mature businesses and less mature or growth businesses.

"At present," Putnam said, the industry seems to be shifting in a more mature direction."

Arthur D. Little's assessment of the oilfield service and supply industry suggests that:

The experiences of this past year will make investors and participants alike more cautious in their plans and review.

The increasing competitive intensity of the oilfield service and supply industry, coupled with a shift in maturity, make the need for careful planning even more important.

Technology will play a larger and more important role in many areas ·

Wallace says oil show is evidence of a can-do attitude

By LESLIE HAINES
Energy-Business Writer

The 1982 Permian Basin Oil Show is evidence of the basic can-do attitude that has made this state, and West Texas in particular, an energy leader and a great place to be, oil show honoree Mack Wallace told a large crowd at Friday's opening ceremonies.

Wallace, a member of the Texas Railroad Commission, said it was a tragedy and a national disgrace, however, that the United States still imports 5 million barrels of oil per day, and thus is not yet energy independent.

"Nothing exemplifies the greatness of this state more than when I see determined men and women working to produce energy — which is the lifeblood of this nation — in the face of adversity," Wallace told the crowd.

That adversity takes the form of federal government regulation and intervention, and regional rivalries which hamper the oil and gas industry, Wallace said.

"Crude oil prices are set in Saudi Arabia, and natural gas prices are set in Washington, D.C., and I don't like either one," Wallace said.

He called for immediate deregulation of natural gas prices, and declared there is no oil glut in America.

"The fact of the matter is, there is a market for every drop of crude oil produced in America today. The alleged glut does not apply to American production, because we are still importing crude oil into this country at the rate of five million barrels of oil per day. This summer, imports as a percentage of the total U.S. petroleum supply amounted to 33.2 percent and cost an estimated $40 billion."

Wallace rejected the pessimism about the future of energy production in Texas, as caused by falling rig counts, company closings and lay-offs, saying that significant oil and gas reserves remain to be found here.

From the Permian Basin itself comes 57 percent of all the crude oil produced in Texas, Wallace said, so area residents have every reason to be proud of their accomplishments. There are more than 70,000 producing oil wells and 7,000 producing gas wells in the Permian Basin, he added.

Wallace said the Permian Basin Oil Show comes at a good time, because it shows a positive attitude, "not a can't do it, let's wait until another year" attitude.

At a meeting with the press after his speech, Wallace said regional differences were a real threat to American energy independence, citing Washington Governor Spelling's successful blocking of the Northern Tier Pipeline, which was to have transported oil from Port Angeles, Wash., to Minnesota through 1,500 miles of pipe.

That pipeline had been proposed as an alternative after California Governor Jerry Brown nixed the Long Beach-Midland pipeline earlier, Wallace added.

"This regional conflict has got to stop. The interior states of the Union have a vested interest in coastal ports, and in coastal states cooperating. Where would this nation be without Texas' ports, and her oil and gas?"

Wallace said the federal government needs to give oil operators an incentive by opening up federal lands and offshore leases to further exploration.

"They opened the Georges Bank, off the coast of New England, in spite of the environmentalists. They didn't find anything, but at least now we have inventoried it. You and I have a right to know what our energy reserves are, to know what's under there."

Reed Co. reports record rig inventory

Reed Rock Bit Company has issued its 30th consecutive U. S. Rotary Rig Census with a historical review of its survey from 1955 to 1982. The comprehensive census reporting active and available domestic rigs by depth capacity, ownership status, power transmission and foundation is published in the current edition of Drilling, a Wellsite Publication.

The 1982 Reed census shows a domestic rotary rig fleet expanded to its largest size ever (5,644 rotaries available for 3,000 feet and deeper drilling). Fleet size has tripled during the past ten years with 841 rigs added during the past year. The census was taken during the first few weeks of August.

There were 3,225 rigs listed as "active", meaning that they were drilling during the census period or had been drilling within the 30 days prior to the survey. These "active" or gainfully employed rigs comprised 57.1 percent of the fleet.

The utilization rate, comparing rigs actually making hole with those available, showed an average of 2,690 rigs or 47.7 percent during the 1982 census.

The 1982 census concludes rig efficiency will continue to improve while U. S. drilling activity during the next 12 months will begin a climbout from its 1982 drop. Reed and Drilling magazine also concluded that domestic fleet growth is unlikely for the next several years as the fleet is restructured and upgraded for improved efficiency.

Drilling fund sales

ANNAPOLIS, MD. - Lead by a sharp decline in drilling fund investment, overall sales of SEC-registered oil and gas programs fell 36 percent during the first nine months of 1982.

Annapolis-based Investment Search Inc., which specializes in the analysis and evaluation of oil and gas programs and monitors industry statistics and trends, slightly lowered its estimate for the full year to $2,101.1 million indicating a 28 percent decline in overall sales from 1981.

Investment Search President Arthur Jerrold King said, "Our projections still indicate that overall sales for 1982 will be second only to the record set in 1981, and 15 percent higher than 1980, the third best year. For the year, we are now projecting drilling fund sales at $956.2 million, off 53 percent from 1981; income fund sales of about $1,011.0 million, up 29 percent, and sales of other types of programs at $134 million, up 35 percent.

Investment Search statistics show oil and gas program sales of $1,459.2 million for the first nine months, 36 percent less than the $2,286.1 million raised during the same period in 1981. The total includes $742.0 million in sales of drilling funds, off 54 percent from the first nine monlths of last year. Sales of income funds (those formed to acquire producing properties), continued strong and totalled $710.7 million, up 12 percent from $63₁.2 million in the first three quarters of 1981. Other types of programs - which include royalty funds, completion funds, and lease acquisition programs - raised $6.5 million, a decline of 87 percent from $49.96 million raised in the first nine months of 1981.

"Drilling funds have taken an undeserved beating this year," King said. "I believe that a lot of investors are missing out on some very attractive opportunities with some very good drilling program sponsors.

"Income funds appear to be the hot product — at least for now — and everyone is jumping on the train. Program sponsors who as recently as six months ago would never consider marketing an income program are now doing so. The field could be very crowded in 1983."

Investment Search predicts that in 1982 income fund sales will slightly exceed drilling fund sales for the first time.

In the drilling fund category, Dyco Petroleum of Minneapolis is still the leader after nine months with $90 million raised. (The company's 1982 offering was fully subscribed in June). The Stone Oil Corporation of Lafayette, Louisiana, is second with sales of $52.1 million.

The nine-month leader in the sale of income funds is: Petro-Lewis Funds, Inc. of Denver with $365.9 million. Damson Oil Corporation of New York City is second with $176.8 million.

Institutions demonstrate power

By CHET CURRIER
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — In the stock market rally of the past 10 weeks, the nation's investing institutions have given a demonstration of enormous power.

However much analysts might differ on many other points about the remarkable surge in stock prices, most agree on who started it.

"The initial buying thrust came from institutions, not the public," said William Helman at the brokerage firm of Smith Barney, Harris Upham & Co.

Institutions active in the stock market include banks, mutual funds, insurance companies, college endowment funds and, most important of all, pension funds and their advisers.

Thom Brown, an analyst at Butcher & Singer Inc. in Philadelphia who argues that the market is just beginning a long-term advance, says, "pension fund assets, now accumulating at the rate of $200 billion a year, will be a major factor supporting this secular upswing."

There is, likewise, little dispute that the institutions' increasing presence has been the biggest reason for the surge of trading volume to a once-unthinkable rate of 100 million-plus shares a day on the New York Stock Exchange.

Since 1975, when brokerage commissions on stock trading were freed from their old fixed schedule, institutions have been able to get sharply reduced charges from brokers vying for their business.

Because it now generally costs them less than ⅛ of a point, or 12½ cents, a share to buy and sell, they are naturally inclined to do more trading, analysts say. And volatile markets for all securities — bonds as well as stocks — have encouraged trading strategies rather than a conservative "buy and hold" approach.

As the rally churned ahead in the past week, the Dow Jones average of 30 industrials climbed 38.36 to 1,031.46, only about 20 points short of its record closing high of 1,051.70 reached on Jan. 11, 1973.

The NYSE's composite index rose 2.94 to 79.68, and the American Stock Exchange market value index gained 12.72 to 326.60.

Wall Streeters, naturally, are elated by the dramatic rise of both stock prices and trading volume. "It all seems too good to be true," said Heinz Biel at Janney Montgomery Scott Inc.

"How can stock prices go up so much so fast in the face of continuing dreadful business news and miserable corporate earnings reports? Is it all a mirage?

"Perhaps it is, but the stock market rarely behaves in a way that seems rational. If it did, it would be so much easier to predict its future course.

"What the market now seems to be telling us is that the seeds are already in the ground for an economic recovery which may well be stronger and more soundly based than some of the gloomy, but very vocal, Wall Street economists predict."

Amoco supporting geological research

CHICAGO — Amoco Foundation, Inc. has announced a $200,000 grant for a project designed to increase the understanding of North American geology.

The Amoco commitment to the Geological Society of America Foundation (GSAF), Boulder, Colo., involves eight annual $25,000 grants, beginning this year. Amoco Foundation is financially supported by Standard Oil Company (Indiana).

Amoco funds will be used to help the GSAF Sponsor the "Decade of North American Geology" project, which began in 1980 in preparation for the Geological Society of America's centennial celebration in 1988. The project's purpose is to create a comprehensive synthesis of the geology of the continent and adjacent oceanic regions.

The project is an international effort involving all sectors of the North American geological community. A new base map for North America, created by the United States Geological Survey, will serve as the base for new geologic, tectonic, gravity anomaly, magnetic anomaly, and lineament maps.

More than 40 North American geologists have been involved in the planning for 27 volumes of regional geological synthesis that will complement the maps. Several hundred more geologists will be involved in writing chapters for the volumes.

The syntesis volumes, maps, and 24 continent-ocean transects will provide timely information and establish a base for a fresh look at the continent, the GSAF said.

The GSAF also said every effort is being made to foster the integration of geological information and cross-disciplinary communication among geologists and geophysicists. Project officials are also seeking to make the published products available to the broadest possible audience, including graduate students, faculty members, and professional geologists.

The GSAF said that by the end of the decade, the North American effort could serve as a model for international cooperation in regional synthesis.

In addition to the North American project, thre GSAF funds geology research, lectures, seminars, publications, and educational courses. It also provides scholarships and educational loans.

Partitions are cool, oak paneling is out

By JOHN FLINN
Hearst Feature Service

SUNNYVALE, Calif. — In high-tech corporate offices on the San Francisco peninsula these days, an oak-paneled corner office with a view isn't the perk it used to be. To be cool, you've got to have partitions.

Steven Jobs, Apple Computer's whiz-kid chairman, has partitions. William Hewlett and David Packard, co-founders of Hewlett-Packard, have partitions. So does just about everybody else, it seems.

Partitions are movable, fabric-covered panels. They're the key to "open landscaping," the office-interior revolution that has swept Silicon Valley and is spreading elsewhere. Interior walls, it seems, are about as popular inside computer firms as inquisitive Japanese agents.

But some employees complain that partitions are the most annoying addition to the office since Muzak. They're particularly galling to middle-level managers who don't understand the "less-is-more" approach to corporate status. Among their biggest fans, though, are secretaries and clerks who would otherwise have no office at all.

"It seems like everybody's jumping on the open-landscaping bandwagon," said Carl Brosius of Griswold, Heckel & Kelley Associates, Inc., a nationwide office-interior consulting firm. "Companies that can put more people in a space are better able to survive than those that have 200-square-foot offices for everyone."

German interior designers invented the concept 20 years ago as the office of the future. Open landscaping was said to improve communication within an organization. In effect, everyone would have an open-door policy. It would help rapidly-expanding companies shuffle their people almost as quickly as they could sketch out a new corporate hierarchy.

Not every firm is crazy about partitions. Some companies that jumped on the open-landscaping bandwagon reportedly are starting to get nostalgic about their walls and are reconsidering, Brosius said.

Among the experts in office design who have soured on the use of partitions is Jeff Pfeffer, professor of organizational behavior at the Stanford University School of Business.

"The evidence is quite clear that people don't like them," he said. One problem, he explained, is that they increase communication past the useful point. Although partitions are designed to muffle sound, employees say they become privy to every conversation in neighboring offices.

The things they hear often are more interesting than their own work. One employee at a computer software company said that she spent the better part of one morning listening to her neighbor arrange a drug deal over the phone. An Apple employee said that he has listened while the person in the office next to him looked for a new job.

In an effort to discourage such eavesdropping, many firms have turned to the use of "white sound" – background noise created for its own sake. The idea is to raise the ambient noise level to the point where people have trouble making out the words of their neighbors' conversations.

But sound is no substitute for privacy, workers say. Some have taken to blocking the entrance to their offices with rope or a chair to discourage visitors. Others use an extra partition and seal off their workspace completely.

Although they won't always admit it, many upper-level managers resist open landscaping because of the loss of prestige. Ladder-climbing company officials who have spent their entire career aspiring to a plush corner office have trouble accepting partitions.

To soothe corporate egos, some firms have found ways to attach status to partitions. At the Lutheran Brotherhood, a church-run insurance company in Minneapolis, upper-echelon managers get a better grade of partition than their subordinates. Clerks and secretaries are supplied with comparatively drab partitions of fabric and laminate. Middle-level managers get nicer fabric and particle board frames. Top management surrounds itself with designer partitions framed in teak and rosewood.

Hance honored

Rep. Kent Hance has earned the "Guardian of Small Business" Award - and an endorsement for re-election from the National Federation of Independent Business (NFIB) for his outstanding voting record on small-business issues.

The nation's largest small-business group presented Hance with the award because he voted with a majority of NFIB members 76 percent of the time.

In announcing the award, NFIB President Wilson S. Johnson said, "The voting record of Rep. Hance this Congress demonstrates that he is responsive to the needs of his state, because small businesses create the majority of new jobs and if left to flourish, will be a major factor in restoring economic growth."

House members were rated on 22 recorded votes duing this session of Congress. Issues ranged from cutting the budget to raising unemployment taxes and forcing the government to pat its bills on time.

Old rig, new rig popular attractions

By LESLIE HAINES
Energy-Business Writer

Two of the most popular exhibits at the Permian Basin Oil Show were fortunately set in close to each other, affording show-goers a chance to look down the years and realize how much the drilling industry changes.

Yet it remains, in its pure form, the same — drill that hole straight, and fast, so the company man can't complain.

Within yards of each other, an 80-year old cable tool rig was "making hole" and a new automated drilling rig was making a connection, without a derrick man, monkey board or tongs and chain on the rig floor.

Bob Taylor and W. W. Allman, both of Crane, spent long days on the F. E. "Pop" Harrison No. 1 standard cable tool rig on the show grounds. In explaining the innards of the old rig, which is at least 80 years old, they often pointed to a small model of the latest cable tool rig, located just a few yards from their own rig floor.

"It's sort of like a Model T Ford and a new Lincoln Continental," said Allman. "They're both made by the same manufacturer and built to do the same thing."

Drillers Taylor and Allman have been a team since 1944, when Taylor moved to Crane. Allman had been there since 1926 or '27. Together, they poked many holes in the Crane field; Allman was the superintendent on the discovery well in the Cowden Field near Odessa.

Young rig hands especially loved probing the old gents' memory banks. One young roughneck heard Allman telling how long he had been in the oil patch, (well over 50 years), and piped up, "Well, I've got 15 years behind me now."

The two exchanged hands, not only to shake on it, but to show each other their missing fingers — almost a badge of belonging in the blue collar part of the oil world.

Naturally, other oldtimers told tales and swapped lies with the two drillers.

When asked how deep they were drilling, Allman said with a grin, "Well now before I tell you, let me sell you an interest in it."

Taylor said they were at 100 feet, with just enough weight on the string to keep the line straight. "You know how to tell a good jar head (cable tool) driller?" he asked.

"You go to the bar, and if a man's well dressed and has a new can of Mail Pouch chewing tobacco, then that's him.

"You know how to tell if a cable tool rig hand is lying? If his lips are flappin'."

The main object of displaying the old rig was to inform the public and make people walk away from the rig happy, Taylor said.

Nodding toward the Apache automated rig nearby, Taylor said, "It's faster, but more expensive, naturally. The less time you spend out of the hole, the faster you can drill."

This type of rig, with no rotary table, no traveling blocks, no elevators and no monkey board, has been around for years, primarily used for drilling for sulphur and some other minerals, but according to Chris Hisel, MR production superintendent, automated rigs in the last three to five years have been modified and applied to oil and gas drilling more and more.

In these tight economic times, the rigs are attractive because they cost less and drill faster. The two- or three-man crew saves labor costs; no casing crew is needed either. It takes only about three or four hours from rig-up to spud-in.

Hisel said MR decided on the rig for several reasons: lower costs and safety being the main ones.

"With bids going now on a footage basis, it's really competitive out there. This rig is less expensive with one less man, and we can make one third less connections per foot of hole drilled because we use range-three pipe (43-foot sections).

"Rather than be a 'me-too' company, MR would like to offer innovation to its customers, so we bought this," he said.

Hisel said the company expects there to be fewer accidents on the Apache than on conventional rigs, because no one has to stand beneath a lot of heavy traveling equipment or use swinging chains. With a three-man crew able to operate the rig, the company has eliminated the fourth man, "who is usually the least experienced anyway, and the one likely to get hurt if an accident occurs."

S&L move OK'd

AUSTIN — Savings and Loan Commissioner Alvis Vandygriff has announced formal approval of an application by Citizens Savings and Loan Association, Midland, to move a branch office.

The branch office is to be moved from No. 1-35 Delwood Plaza, Midkiff Road and Illinois Avenue, to the Midland Regional Air Terminal.

The Savings and Loan Commissioner has also annouced approval of an application by Home savings Association, Odessa, to establish an office at University and Tripp, Odessa.

Growth still possible

HOUSTON —Survival and growth are possible for even weaker participants in the oil refining and gas processing industries during a time of economic recession. This hopeful note was sounded recently by Christopher E. Ross, manager of Arthur D. Little's Houston Office, at a seminar on strategic planning for the energy industries conducted by the international research and management consulting firm.

Ross cited propane gas retailers as an example of firms who had moved ahead through positive actions.

"Several propane retailers have been able to increase sales volumes through acquisition of small 'mom and pop' outfits", Ross said. "Through consolidation of the acquired distribution facilities, they then have been able to improve profitability."

These companies have out-performed others, he said, because they have concentrated their resources on a clear strategy while others have attempted to diversify. Such successes, he noted, have occurred in an industry that otherwise "appears to have lackluster potential."

Faced with today's soft economy, the first step that companies in the gas pipeline, oil refining and gas processing industries should undertake, according to Ross, is a strategic assessment. "The objective of this strategic assessment," he said, is to consider all realistic options open to a business unit and then to select a strategic directional thrust, a set of functional strategies and a detailed list of programs designed to implement these strategies."

The starting point is called a situation analysis, Ross said. "This is not just a forecast," he said. "The situation analysis tries to isolate all those factors in the external environment which might impact the hydrocarbon supply industries.

"The emphasis is not so much on trying to discern what will happen, but more to identify how different possibilities might change the overall environment for the industry, the basis of competition within it, and the relative impact on different participants."

Factors affecting market dynamics include supply and demand, interregional dependence, market structure in terms of the nature of the participants, and the effect and direction of government intervention.

After identifying the forces acting on the industry and assessing the strategic opportunities that may emerge, the next step for companies is a competitive analysis, Ross said. This includes segmenting the market both regionally and by trading channel.

"We then need to identify the criteria for competitive success within the industry," he said. He divided possible criteria into marketing, supply and corporate issues, noting that while the criteria listed under marketing and supply are largely predictable, corporate criteria can vary widely.

"If, for example, a history of government regulations has led to a concentration of legal people in senior corporate positions," he said, "then risk-taking may well be inhibited. On the other hand, if the background of the company is in trading, there may be an aversion to necessary investment in fixed assets and in setting up durable marketing channels."

The strategic assessment process, Ross said, includes comparing the position of the company with its competition in the various market segments.

Banking board asked to resolve automatic teller dispute

By BILL KIDD
Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The State Banking Board has been asked to resolve a dispute involving three banks on how to assess fees for sharing an automated teller machine — the second ATM dispute to be set for consideration by the board this year.

The dispute involves First Bank & Trust, Bryan, and two College Station banks (College Station Bank and Republic Bank — A&M). Earlier, the board dealt with a dispute among the three banks over the question of "equal prominence" in advertising at the ATM.

Department of Banking general counsel Archie Clayton told the board the current dispute involves whether charges for use of the ATM should be divided equally among the banks, or be on a per-transaction basis, and whether the entire cost or only that of a commercial night depository should be considered.

First Bank thinks all the costs should be considered, but the other banks don't feel that conforms to the Texas ATM statute, which requires that charges "shall be reasonable, fair, equitable and nondiscriminatory among banks."

The statute also provides that "any charges imposed shall not exceed an equitable proportion of both the cost of establishing the unmanned teller machines, including provisions for amortization of development costs and capital expenditures over a reasonable period of time, and the cost of operation and maintenance of the machine, plus a reasonable return on those costs, and those charges shall be related to services provided to the bank or its customers."

Clayton says the ATM involved is an MPACT system machine, with the College Station banks' customers using it only for cash dispensing and balance verification.

The Bryan bank has been using the machine for deposits and in conjunction with the commercial depository as well, he reports.

A hearing on the matter has been set in Austin for Oct. 27, before hearing examiner O.A. Cassity.

The Air Control Board has set its hearing on proposed permit fees for new facilities capable of emitting air pollutants for 8 a.m. Nov. 5, prior to the regular board meeting (set for 10:30 a.m.), at the ACB's offices, 6330 U.S. 290 E., Austin.

Written and oral comments will be received but must be submitted on Nov. 5, the ACB reports.

"These comments as well as those received as a result of the hearings held May 25 and 26, and June 1 and 2, will be considered by the Board prior to any final decision on the proposed (regulation) changes," the agency says.

But, it cautions, "in light of the extensive record already developed in this matter, oral testimony should be confined to new material regarding the particular type of permit fee system which should by adopted."

The State Board of Insurance has proposed to reorganize the agency for fiscal 1984-1985 and has submitted the plan to the Legislative Budget Board and Governor's Budget and Planning Office for review and comment.

The changes are to become effective Sept. 1, 1983, and include creation of a legal and compliance program, and reduction of the number of activities reporting directly to the Commissioner of Insurance.

A new section on "insurance-related activities" will have jurisdiction over such matters as health maintenance organizations, premium finance companies and prepaid legal corporations.

In another matter relating to SBI, the agency has set meetings for 9 a.m. Nov. 3 and 5 in Room 414, State Board of Insurance Building, 1110 San Jacinto, Austin, on proposed legislation for 1983.

A number of the proposed changes are described as "housekeeping" items, and some items, including "problems to the temporary life agents licensing statute," haven't been completed and will be considered later.

One area of legislation being considered is increasing capital and surplus requirements for new insurance companies, with SBI arguing that the minimum of $100,000 isn't adequate.

The amount would be increased by two to eight times over current requirements.

Also to be considered are proposals for increasing the amount of credit insurance for persons under group credit life, accident and health insurance, and exempting banks, savings and loan associations, and credit unions from requirements that they obtain premium finance licenses.

The board met earlier this year to receive suggestions on legislation, and now has some of those suggestions in bill form.

Mexican officials demand thorough investigation of Pemex

By JUAN M. VASQUEZ
Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

MEXICO CITY — Government and opposition party leaders have demanded a thorough investigation of charges that officials of the Mexican oil monopoly, Pemex were involved in a $116 million bribery scheme.

The corruption investigation, which has been under way for eight months, could become the largest and most significant of its kind in Mexico's history.

The case involves allegations that several U.S. companies conspired with Pemex, a government agency, to pay kickbacks on the sale of field equipment, primarily used in the discovery of natural gas.

According to the attorney general's office, investigators detected overpricing of 35 percent in the sale of some equipment to Pemex by Crawford Enterprises Inc., of Houston between 1977 and 1980.

The government said total sales by Crawford to Pemex for the three years amounted to $647 million, of which at least $97 million represented alleged overpricing.

Further, the government said, it had proof that Crawford Enterprises paid $19 million to a Mexican company called Grupo Delta SA as part of the kickback scheme.

It alleged that $12 million of this amount was passed on to Pemex officials as part of the payoff plan, under which they received a kickback of 4.5 percent on all purchases from the Houston company.

Although it was not made explicit in the government charges, it appeared that the $19 million was separate from the $97 million in alleged overpricing.

So far, the only persons who have been officially accused of wrongdoing are the directors of Grupo Delta, a company formed in September 1977 and accused of being the intermediary in the kickback conspiracy.

Three of the directors have been jailed for alleged violations of income-tax reporting laws. The former president of Grupo Dela, Ricardo Garcia Beltran, is being sought.

Two former high-ranking officials in Pemex also are being sought for questioning, although the Mexican news media have reported that both have fled the country. They are Ignacio de Leon, former assistant director for marketing, and jesus Chavarria, the former assistant director for exploration. According to one government source, De Leon owns a home in Aspen, Colo., and may have taken refuge there.

According to a statement by the attorney general's office, Chavarria and De Leon were the recipients of the kickbacks from Crawford Enterprises.

In a court hearing in Los Angeles on Sept. 20, the two men were identified in a related case as the recipients of payoffs from Crawford.

In that hearing, C.E. Miller of Anaheim, Calif., entered guilty pleas on behalf of himself and his company, C.E. Miller Corp. of Irvine, Calif., to one count of aiding and abetting bribery of two Pemex officials.

The Pemex case came to light in the United States as part of a larger federal investigation into illegal Mexican business payments by U.S. companies.

Ruston Gas Turbines, Inc. of Houston, another Crawford subcontractor, also has been charged with bribery of Pemex officials.

The Crawford company is a target of the U.S. investigation, but to date, only the Miller and Ruston companies have been charged. Crawford spokesmen have denied that the company engaged in wrongdoing.

In Mexico, the case carries substantial political implications. Jorge Diaz Serrano, a close friend of President Jose Lopez Portillo, was the director of Pemex from 1977 until July 1981. He is now a federal senator from the state of Sonora.

HOUSTON (AP) — A judge has ordered any indictment linking a former purchasing manager for Mexico's petroleum monopoly to an investigation of a Houston-based oilfield equipment firm "in any other capacity other than defendant" sealed for 10 days.

The action by U.S. District Judge Carl O. Bue Thursday was prompted by a lawsuit filed by Ignacio DeLeon Martinez, 58, of Mexico City.

DeLeon Martinez sued the U.S. Justice Department, a federal grand jury and eight federal officials, claiming he would be "irreparably harmed" by forthcoming indictments.

Bue granted a temporary restraining order and ordered that any indictment mentioning DeLeon Martinez "in any capacity other than as a defendant" be sealed for 10 days.

DeLeon Martinez claimed the U.S. attorney filed a document Sept. 20 alleging the Houston company promised to pay him and another former Pemex official "five percent of the purchase order value of any compression equipment contracts" between the two firms.

"My name has been linked ... in a manner to indicate that I was the recipient of offers to bribe or in fact the recipient of bribes.

"As a result of these disclosures, I have become the source of much newspaper reporting and investigation in Mexico. My family, friends and many business acquaintances have suffered because of these false and harmful rumors," he said.

DeLeon Martinez resigned from Pemex when his boss, Director Jorge Diaz Serrano, quit in June 1981 in a squabble with President Jose Lopez Portillo over the price Mexico would charge for oil exports.

HOUSTON — Mexico's president-elect, Miguel de la Madrid, is soon to receive a report that is sharply critical of Petroleos Mexicanos, the state oil company, Petroleum Information International says in its October 18 issue.

Well-informed sources in the Mexican capital say the report, compiled by the de la Madrid transition team, concludes that Pemex, by international standards, is grossly inefficient and top-heavy with management that is badly distributed.

According to the report, Pemex staffing levels appear to bear little relation to productivity, with Pemex's Northern Zone cited as an example, PI International, a weekly publication that deals with worldwide oil and gas developments, says.

The zone, with production of 50,000 barrels of oil a day, employs almost as many people as the Southern Zone (which was recently subdivided), where more than 90 percent of Mexico's petroleum is produced.

PI International says the report points out that of 11 members of the Pemex board of directors, six are government representatives and five are from the Oil LWorker's Union, headed by Joaquin Hernandez Galacia. The union, like much of the labor movement in Mexico, is linked closely with the government because of its affiliation with the ruling institutional Revolutionary Party, PI International reports.

Political observers in Mexico City say that de la Madrid, who has a reputation as a strict disciplinarian, "sooner or later" will have to "tackle" the powerful oil union leader.

Stripper oil exemption

By DONALD J. MASSOGLIA

The Economic Recovery Tax Act of 1981 provides an exemption of certain stripper oil production from the Windfall Profit Tax (WPT). The exemption becomes effective on January 1, 1983, and applies to oil removed from the premises after December 31, 1982.

Prior to January 1, 1983, stripper wells were classed as Tier II (unless they could be classified as Tier III, under one of its provisions) and taxed at a rate of 60 percent (30 percent for independent producers).

The exemption applies only to working interests held by independent producers. Oil attributable to royalty interests will not qualify for the exemption. The one thousand barrels per day amount of combined Tier I and Tier II oil qualifying for independent producer rates is not reduced by the volume of stripper oil qualifying for the exemption.

A special transfer rule exists, which may result in disallowance of the exemption. Under this rule, the interest in the oil must have been owned by an independent producer at all times since July 22, 1981. An overriding royalty interest owned by an independent producer may be converted into a working interest without loss of the exemption. However, once an owner is disqualified as an independent producer for a given calendar quarter, the exemption will not apply to that interest at anytime in the future.

To qualify for the exemption, the oil must be removed from a stripper well property, within the meaning of the June, 1979 Department of Energy (DOE) oil price control regulations. Under the DOE regulations, stripper oil is oil produced from properties on which the average daily production per well has been 10 barrels or less for any consecutive 12-month period after 1972.

For purposes of determining the average daily production, production must not have been lowered in order to obtain stripper well qualification. The production must have been maintained at the maximum feasible rate, in accordance with applicable conservation standards throughout the entire qualification period. Once the property has satisfied the twelve-month production test, production may subsequently exceed 10 barrels per day without loss of the exemption. In other words, "once a stripper always a stripper."

The IRS has not yet issued regulations on the stripper exemption. In the absence of such regulations, producers should certify that production from specific properties qualify as exempt stripper oil. The certification should contain the name, address, identification number of the producer and should be signed and dated.

If oil currently qualifies as both newly discovered oil and stripper oil, the oil must be certified as Tier III oil. Does this mean that the oil must be recertified as Tier II in order to qualify for the exemption? No, the oil does not have to be recertified as Tier II.

The statutory definition of Tier II, which provides that such oil does not include Tier III oil, is not applicable for determining whether oil qualifies for the exempt status. Since exempt stripper oil is defined under the DOE regulations, the exemption certification is the only recertification required. If a producer has flexibility with respect to the timing of the removal of stripper oil, consideration should be given to delaying the removal until after December 31, 1982 so as to take maximum advantage of the exemption.

Ledet, Oklahoma City, was named vice-president of drilling operations, and Edwin R. Teeples, also of Oklahoma City, has assumed the position of vice-president in charge of contracts and aquisitions.

The company will engage in contract drilling whereever wells are to be drilled. Headquarters will be in the Blanks Building, Midland. A yard will be maintained in Elk City, Okla.

The company operates four rigs capable of drilling 25,000 feet, and two rigs rated at 18,000 feet. Five are currently active in the Anadarko Basin. One is stacked.

Blanks said the acquisition will enhance his exploration efforts, affording the opportunity to drill deals in the deeper basins around the country.

FRESH HOT COPY
Too much advertising is full of epic but empty prose. What's needed is copy that burns its way through, etching itself into the memory of the reader.
At Witherspoon, copy is tight. Powerful. Dramatic. It's what should be said, in print or on the air — no more and no less.
Recently, ADWEEK/Southwest magazine chose Witherspoon as one of only six "hot shops" in a five-state region. Consider us when you're looking for copy that comes out smokin.'

Amendments are needed

When voters go to the polls Nov. 2 to cast their ballots for the federal, state, county and precinct nominees of their choice, they'll also be asked their preference on six proposed amendments to the state constitution.

After careful consideration of the various proposed amendments, study of manuscripts from the Texas Research League and Texas Legislative Council, and consultation with officials in the office of Gov. Bill Clements, The Reporter-Telegram believes all six amendments should be approved. Following is a brief description of each proposed amendment and its anticipated impact:

Amendment No. 1

This is the amendment hammered-out during a second special session of the Legislature in May of this year. The amendment will provide four functions:

— It will repeal the 10-cent per $100 assessed value statewide property tax supporting construction of state universities;

— It will validate the already enacted statutory "repeal" of that tax effective Jan. 1, 1980;

— It prohibits the state from levying ever again a statewide property tax; and — It authorizes the legislature to make direct appropriations for construction at 17 universities and colleges around the state, which formerly had received construction funding from the property tax.

This amendment basically was drafted in response to a threatened court challenge of elimination of the property tax brought by the affected universities and colleges which had lost construction funds because of the property tax decision. During the same second special session in which this amendment was formulated, legislators appropriated $151.5 million for the colleges and universities because they had lost construction funding.

If this amendment is approved, the colleges and universities will receive that amount of construction funding, but the dilemma over further funding in the future will remain.

The college construction financing issue will only be settled when legislators devise a long-term policy. That should be an item of major importance in the 1983 legislative session.

Adoption of this amendment will complete the process of state withdrawal from property taxation that began with a lawsuit filed in 1978.

Amendment No. 2

"The constitutional amendment to authorize the legislature to provide assistance through the appropriations process to needy persons and to place a ceiling on payments for needy dependent children at one percent of the state budget."

Currently the constitution limits state appropriations for cash assistance programs to $80 million per year. This amendment would raise that ceiling to $320 million.

It should be noted that this amendment does not require the Legislature to appropriate at that level; it just makes possible appropriations of more than the current $80 million ceiling.

This amendment is important when viewed in the context of President Ronald Reagan's "New Federalism" initiative. Under his proposal, full responsibility for the Aid to Families with Dependent Children program would be transferred to the states. In such an instance, Texas would be unable to continue the AFDC program because the state constitution limits Texas to participation in joint programs with the federal government.

In such a case — and with no provision like Amendment No. 2 — all AFDC cash assistance in the state would end and human suffering undoubtedly would increase.

Amendment No. 3

"The constituional amendment exempting implements of husbandry (agricultural machinery and equipment) from ad valorem taxation."

This would provide an exemption of all farm machinery and equipment from local property taxes regardless of value or the nature of ownership — whether small family farm operations or large corporate-type farms.

The plight faced by the agriculture industry overall makes this amendment a reasonable one. It's estimated the exemption will result in a loss to state coffers of only $2.15 million in local property tax revenue for 1983. Farmers need that tax relief to help them keep their heads above water in these difficult economic times.

Amendment No. 4

"The constitutional amendment authorizing the legislature to provide terms not to exceed four years for members of governing boards of certain water districts and conservation and reclamation districts."

Under this amendment, water districts could hold elections for their directors every four years instead of each two years as now is required. The current terms create too frequent elections, which increases both costs and voter apathy.

Four-year terms will allow water district directors to become more knowledgeable and, thus, better administrators.

Amendment No. 5

"The constitutional amendment to abolish the office of county treasurer in Tarrant and Bee counties."

This proposal merely will give voters in the two aforementioned counties "approval" to hold elections in their own counties to determine whether they would benefit by abolishing the office of county treasurer.

It may seem strange that voters in all of Texas' 254 counties have to be consulted before the local voters in two counties can vote to make a minor change in their county government structure. But it's a holdover from the days when county government was the "fundamental law" of the state.

Amendment No. 6

"The constitutional amendment increasing the maximum interest rate allowed on state general obligation bonds to a weighted average annual interest rate of 12 percent."

The present rate of interest on general obligation bonds is 6 percent. These bonds cannot be marketed, however, because 6 percent is an unrealistic rate ceiling in today's economic climate.

This amendment would increase the ceiling to 12 percent and, thus, allow the sale of $59.25 million in state bonds already authorized but unsold because of the low rate ceiling.

Amendments 5 and 6 are proposed due to antiquated provisions in the state constitution which — while being essential under current law — are a nuisance to the state's voters. They point to the need for a cleanup of the constitution.

Until the document is revised, Texas voters can expect to face these type of unrealistic requirements just to keep the state abreast of the times.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

WASHINGTON — With the Iran-Iraq war threatening to dissolve the entire Persian Gulf area into chaos, the Reagan administration is desperately trying to figure out a way to keep the Soviets from moving in to pick up the pieces.

Jack Anderson

Fortunately, the United States has a staunch ally in a perfect strategic position from which to outflank any Russian move south from the Caucasus toward the gulf: Turkey.

With this in mind, a team of top administration officials recently made a secret week-long trip to Turkey for high-level talks. The team, known as the High Level Defense Group, spent a day in Ankara in discussions with their Turkish opposite numbers, then toured eastern Turkey.

One purpose of the tour was to scout out possible sites for airbases that could be used by the United States. The mountainous eastern third of Turkey is ideally situated for surveillance of the troubled, vital region. It is bounded by the Black Sea, Soviet Georgia and Armenia, Iran, Iraq and Syria.

Secret plans have already been drawn up for three additional airbases in eastern Turkey. The administration intends to present a major request for the construction funds to Congress soon.

One base would be located at Mus, about 150 miles southwest of the Soviet and Iranian borders, even closer to northern Iraq and Syria. A major U.S. base there would be in a position to checkmate any invasion into northwestern Iran through the trans-Caucasus corridor between the Black and Caspian Seas. This has been the historic Russian invasion route, and is considered the likeliest direction of attack toward the Persian Gulf.

The Turks, of course, are not unaware of their strategic importance to U.S. policy in Europe and the Middle East. They have demanded a price for their cooperation, in the form of increased military aid.

There is little doubt that the Turks are in dire need of military help from someone. A high-level Turkish diplomat told my associate Lucette Lagnado that his country's armed services are struggling along on obsolete and obsolesecent weapons, like F-100 fighter planes.

American strategic planners who inspected Turkish bases during the secret military tour confirmed the diplomat's gloomy assessment, as did State Department sources.

So the Pentagon is drafting a major "force modernization" for the Turkish armed forces, whose numerical strength in NATO is second only to ours. The Turkish army's artillery and tanks will be upgraded; the navy will get some new frigates, and the air force will get newer planes.

Both administration and Turkish sources have confided that the biggest roadblock to this ambitious expansion of the existing U.S.-Turkish bases-for-aid agreement is Congress.

For years, under pressure from the powerful and persistent Greek-American lobby, Congress has been reluctant to beef up the U.S. commitment to Turkey, Greece's centuries-old rival in the eastern Mediterranean. The lobbying on behalf of Greece has been second in effectiveness only to the Jewish community's efforts on behalf of Israel.

Justification for congressional coolness to Turkey has taken the form of pointing at the Turkish seizure of more than half of Cyprus, and the military overthrow of civilian government in Turkey itself. (Interestingly, neither the Greeks' insistence that they are entitled to all of Cyprus nor their years of rule by a military junta dissuaded Congress from providing military aid to Greece.)

But the Reagan administration is a little more hopeful of surmounting the Greek lobby's predictable opposition this time. The president's pro-Turkish arguments will include the fact that a referendum is scheduled for next month that should eventually lead to a return of civilian rule in Ankara.

Perhaps most persuasive, though, will be the strategic argument focused on the threat to the Persian Gulf. Some administration sources pointed out that Turkey's reliability as an ally is in sharp contrast to the timorousness of the Saudis and other potential allies in the vital region.

And unlike our volatile Arab allies, the Turks have never shown a reluctance to stand up and be counted against Soviet expansionist tendencies. Though there have been touchy situations in U.S.-Turkish relations, the Turks' basic friendship and support for the United States has remained steady.

"Turkey is extraordinary," a high-level administration source said. "It is an authentically pro-Western Moslem country."

He added: "Whereas some strategic planning in the Persian Gulf is a fantasy, planning in Turkey is of the sort that makes for real deterrence of Soviet military might."

The Turks have not shown the reluctance of the Saudis and others to take sides in the East-West rivalry; they have not tried to take on the protective coloration of "non-aligned" status.

As a final argument to quiet the fears of Greece and its influential friends in this country, the administration strategists are prepared to suggest that the plan to beef up the Turks as an anti-Soviet bulwark will actually be to Greece's advantage.

The argument here is that the plan to provide military muscle to the Turkish armed forces, coupled with establishment of more airbases in eastern Turkey, will shift the balance of Turkish military might to the east — in other words, away from the Aegean and the perennial confrontation with Greece.

Whether this argument will deflect the Greek lobby and its friends in Congress remains to be seen. The administration and the Turks hope it will.

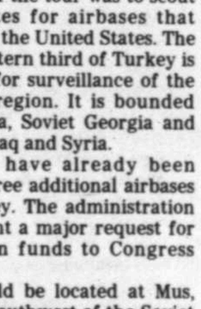
GEORGE F. WILL

'Breezy' opponent can't match Danforth

ST. LOUIS — Harriett Woods bubbles warmly, like Welsh rarebit, when explaining all the nice things she will do for everyone if she defeats Republican Sen. John C. Danforth. But her policy pronouncements are as airy as cotton candy.



George F. Will

Woods, 55, a state senator, is earnest and ingenuous and brimming with the wish to do good works. But her campaign, when not featuring ad hominem attacks, consists of sustained wishful thinking — a stark unwillingness to face choices. Hence her campaign, with its strategic silences about real dilemmas, illustrates the grinding difficulty of government in this decade.

She demands "sharp reductions" in the federal deficit. But she says no cuts are necessary in social programs — and she favors various new programs, and subsidies for industries.

Reading, earnestly but confusedly, from a badly typed page that is a tossed salad of numbers, she promises huge defense cuts. But her numbers are for a fiscal year for which appropriations will be finished before the next Senate convenes. She endorses 6 percent growth in defense spending. But the president's request for obligational authority (which is what Congress can control, year-by-year) for the next four fiscal years comes to less than 7 percent growth. The difference between her number — did she pick it at random? — and the president's would not alter the country's economic course.

Her answer to the Social Security problem is to deny that there is a serious problem. Well, if you make sufficiently unrealistic assumptions (about economic growth, employment and demographics), any problem can be made to disappear, on paper. But Missourians must wonder: If, as sober Democrats and Republicans agree, Social Security needs help, who is most apt to restore its health — a doctor who treats ailments seriously, or one who just prescribes wishful thinking?

Woods is not cynical, but she does not have an inkling of an idea how agonizingly difficult are the decisions confronting senators. She lives in a mental world without costs, where numbers, when needed, seem plucked from thin air.

The pell-mell pace of a candidate's life makes thought difficult, and a challenger often starts from a low base of information. But we dare not let that become an excuse for a kind of campaigning that does not treat voters as adults capable of comprehending hard choices. Woods has been at this for a year. It is October, America's month of seriousness. If America's problems are as serious as she says — and they are much more serious than she seems to understand — we can not afford to settle Senate contests with slapdash promises and name-calling.

Woods' television ads contain unexceptional sentiments ("There is something wrong....It's not right....I'd like to change it.....") and nothing else. She harps on the fact that Danforth, 46, is wealthy, calling him "aloof," an "aristocrat" who has a "patrician, do-good-but-we'll-make-the-decisions" style. Does she propose to be a senator who does not make decisions? Does she blame him for having wealthy parents?

She is properly proud of having campaigned for Stuart Symington, a fine Senator from Missouri for four terms. Symington was more patrician, in manner and background, than Danforth is. If Missourians have forgotten Symington, there may be political mileage in Woods' George Wallace-style rhetoric. But if she had her way, the likes of Franklin Roosevelt (and many others, from George Washington to Adlai Stevenson and John Kennedy) would be excluded from public service.

"Aristocrat"? I have joined Jack and Sally Danforth at a Jerry Jeff Walker country-music concert, where "aristocrats" were not admitted. "Aloof"? Fiddlesticks! I have seen him striding through one of Washington's stuffiest establishments wearing a crimson Cardinals' baseball cap.

The Senate is like a lot of institutions: 20 percent of the members do 80 percent of the work. Danforth, a leader on the committee (finance) with the most talent and most complicated business, is among the 20 percent. If you asked Danforth's 99 Senate colleagues to list the 10 most respected senators, only one name probably would appear on every list: Danforth.

Some of the weakest senators were elected in 1980 on Reagan's coattails. It would compound the institutional injury were any of the strongest to lose in 1982 because of a Reagan undertow. Danforth is leading. The show-me state can show the nation that the times are too serious for unserious campaigning.

ART BUCHWALD

Just don't report it to the EPA!

"Environmental Protection Agency. May I help you?"

"Yes, somebody is pouring toxic sludge in my back yard."

Art Buchwald

"I'll connect you with Mr. Digging in our mudslide division."

"I don't want to talk about mudslides I want to talk about toxic substances."

"We've combined toxic wastes, mudslides and killer ants in one department, as an economy measure. Mr. Digging is on the line."

"Digging, I want you to know that someone is dumping toxic sludge in my back yard."

"So?"

"So what is the Environmental Protection Agency going to do about it?"

"How much waste is being dumped?"

"Three truckloads and the driver says he's going back for more."

"Well it has to be dumped somewhere."

"I thought your job was to see that the citizen was protected against the dumping of toxic substances in residential areas."

"It is. Where do you live?"

"In North Carolina."

"Did you call the Denver office to lodge a complaint?"

"Why should I call Denver?"

"It handles all poison waste complaints for North Carolina. At least it did until we shut it down for economy reasons."

"Then what good would it have done me to call Denver?"

"Well, since I've got you on the phone and Denver is closed, where do I call?"

"Let me see. St. Paul, Minnesota, is closed; Portland, Oregon, is closed; Albuquerque is closed. Here's one that is still open — in Baton Rouge, Louisiana."

"Give me their number."

"What do you people do in Washington?"

"We're involved in getting the government off people's backs. We weigh the price of environmental protection against the price to industry and then decide, cost-wise, whether we should enforce the regulations or not."

"I thought you were mandated to protect the environmental health of the country."

"We are, but we have priorities."

"What kind of priorities?"

"The Clean Water Act for one. We've lowered the pollution levels permitted by communities who discharge sewage into lakes and streams by 50 percent. This will save the taxpayers over $2 billion, at no hazard to the people."

"Who says so?"

"What about acid rain?"

"The jury is still out on acid rain. There are rumors it stunts trees, and kills wildlife, but we only have the word of people who live in the Midwest, Northeast and Canada for that. We're not going to go on a fishing expedition just because the water in Maine tastes like shaving lotion."

"Okay, let's get back to my problem. What are you going to do about the toxic waste they're dumping in my back yard?"

"Have you thought about selling your house?"

"Yeh, but who is going to by it with poison all over it?"

"If you don't report it to the EPA, who will ever know?"

SPEAKING OUT

Association may help parents of deaf children

By CHARLES R ARCHER

Midessa Association of the Deaf, Inc., is an organization devoted to promoting the welfare of the deaf in the vicinity of Odessa and Midland by actively promoting and advancing their educational, vocational, economical and social standards. The association meets every fourth Saturday evening at the Hogan Park Activities Building for fellowship and business. There is always a variety of activities ranging from dominoes to card games, ping pong, putt-putt, contests and parties. Everyone is kept up-to-date concerning the latest developments in educational and vocational matters, but something is missing.

Where are the deaf children who attend the public schools in Midland and Odessa and their parents? Communication between the adult deaf and the parents of deaf children is vital to the growth of a parent's understanding of their children. We want to help the parents of the deaf child see the whole of the problem of raising a deaf child, not just bits and pieces. Deaf parents of deaf children and deaf adults, from whom a hearing parent of a deaf child could learn so much, are too often ignored.

There are no professionals among the adult deaf in this area, so if the parents of deaf children who are professionals such as lawyers and Certified Public Accountants, would pitch in and help the adult deaf solve their problems, there would be fewer problems for their own children when they grow up.

Do the public schools have a qualified diagnostician to evaluate the deaf child? A 1976 position paper of the International Association of Parents of the Deaf noted currently many local and public schools lack qualified diagnostic staff for making the placement, lack supportive services, lack trained personnel, lack necessary amplification equipment and a desirable visual environment, lack an understanding of total communication which may be essential for communication with students, and in many cases lack financial resources for the education of deaf children and lack committment.

Professional diagnosis of the deaf child is essential to facilitate opportunities for proper education before critical periods are reached, after which adequate education is difficult if at all possible.

I am frequently asked if I can read lips. To this I reply, "Do you know sign language?" A common misconception about deaf people is that they all read lips. Very few people can read lips well enough to understand speech, even under optimum conditions. Information collected during the 1972 National Census of the Deaf Population indicated that 21.4 percent of deaf adults who completed one or more years of senior high school considered their lipreading ability to be poor to nonexistent. "In fact, even the best speechreaders in a one-to-one situation were found to understand only 26 percent of what was said and many bright deaf individuals grasp less than 5 percent," according to Legal Rights of Hearing Impaired People, Gallaudet College Press.

There was a time when the deaf had no access to the telephone, then along came Teletypewriters (TTY's) and Telecommunication Devices for the Deaf (TDD's). With a TTY or TDD a deaf person now can type over the telephone lines to another person who has a TTY or TDD. But the deaf had no way to contact emergency help, such as police, fire or hospital, because those agencies had no TDD's. When a deaf person's home caught fire, chances were it would burn to the ground if no one was around to phone for help.

With the coming of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973, things started to change. As amended in 1978, Section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act reads: "No otherwise qualified handicapped individual in the United States...shall, solely by reason of his handicap, be denied the benefits of, or be subjected to discrimination under any program or activity receiving federal financial assistance or under any program or activity conducted by any Executive Agency or by the United States Postal Service.

This means that any agency, such as a hospital, fire or police department receiving federal funds, either directly or indirectly, must provide interpreters and TDD's for the deaf or hearing imparied.

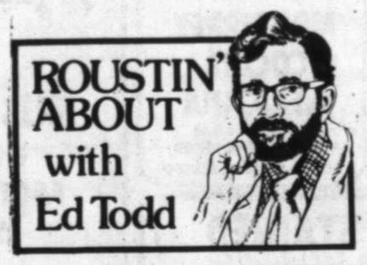
Midland Fire Department has a TDD and the deaf have a secret number which they can call for help. The fire department will relay calls to the police, hospital, sheriff or Department of Public Safety. Midland Memorial Hospital has a TDD for the use of deaf patients.

The hearing person takes the telephone for granted, but the deaf have to buy a TDD costing $600 to $1,000 to enable them to use the phone. Most of the deaf in Midland have old Model 15 TTY's loaned to them by the Lion's Club, but they are wearing out.

Before the deaf can really understand television, they have to buy a decoder costing $289, which captions some of the movies. You can see that it is pretty expensive to be deaf.

"Speaking Out" columnists are invited to submit articles on subjects of their choice. They should be limited to 850 words or less.

Taxpayers must act to get action from government



Even at inflated prices, everybody wants to get his money's worth. Taxpayers, who expect the improbable, wish for a semblance of responsibility in government; they expect that the money they once called theirs would be spent as if taxpayers were not a renewable resource. But it isn't.

Governments are notorious for boondoggles. On a far smaller scale, so, too, are the citizen-taxpayers. But the taxpayer is, as a rule, only open to the purview of a select few: the spouse, the law, the boss, the Internal Revenue Service, and the Almighty on Judgment Day.

The B-1 bomber bombed out. Politics, in a perverse sense, won out. Taxpayers lost millions. Fine exercise in waste.

The War on Poverty was blitzed; the Beautify America campaign fizzled, and now the aspiration to clean up the air, to keep the wilderness intact and to clean up the water may be on the wane.

Now, there's the "well, we'll see" approach to be taken to Midland's planned spending of $20 million to pipe wastewater from one place to another in hopes — probably vain — that what's pollution in one place won't be contamination in another. It likely will get the Fickle Finger of Fate Award from a really concerned segment of the population.

Again, as usual for a government which acts on immediacy rather than on forethought for the people's welfare, the solution is ignored for reasons that would get a flat F, maybe a low D, in a class on logic. Thank you, Mayor G. Thane Akins and City Councilmen. You goofed. You seem not to take the water crisis very seriously.

The absolutely frustrating faded street lines are, once again, despicable. The faint lines, the utter lack of synchronized traffic lights, and the baffling one-way streets are other signs of city planning which are mini-boondoggles. The one-way streets, if they didn't suddenly convert to two-way routes, might be acceptable if they were properly marked.

Consumers Union certainly would find the situation not a good buy and probably would rate it unacceptable. But some of that might change if an enterprising lawyer comes across a tragic case — a death or injury traced to faded street lines or to the one-way mess — and bleeds the city and taxpayers of money. It could happen. Recall the million-dollar Jezek case? The youth was totally incapacitated and eventually died from a traffic mishap which the jury and appellate court ruled was ultimately due to an intersection obstructed by weeds and bush. As a result, has the city cleaned up its other blocked-to-clear-vision intersections? Hardly.

Now, the intent isn't to ignore the good points of the city, which affords its citizenry with running water, flush toilets, paved streets and police and fire protection.

Of course, there's not enough fire hydrants and water, not enough stiff building codes and fire ordinances, and certainly not enough citizens who are openly concerned about the welfare of themselves, their children and city. If they'd get off their sweet-and-sour duffs and take a little action and do some thinking, they could effect wonders from City Hall and the Courthouse.

If we — you and I — do something about our own sorry state on the homefront, then the state and federal governments would be forced to take the cue and to take action. Do nothing and you get nothing. The buck stops at the grassroots.

Studies bring about change in education

By BILL KIDD
Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Probably no subject has been studied so much, or so often, as public education.

Probably that's because the subject affects so many people, and involves such a substantial commitment in terms of public resources.

In the late 1940s, the Gilber-Aikin Committee began its report on public education in Texas by calling attention to the fact that a million babies had been born in previous years and those children would soon be entering Texas' schools.

Since that time, governors, lieutenant governors, and speakers of the House of Representatives have appointed special committees and instructed standing committees to look at public education, and to recommend ways to improve it.

And sometimes it's a little hard to work up much enthusiasm about another study on public education.

But those studies have helped to bring about changes in the public education system through the years, even if that progress has been, at times, irregular and incomplete.

Fifteen years ago, for instance, the Governor's Committee on Public School Education was calling for use of "actual property values" in determining state aid to local school districts.

That committee, headed by attorney Leon Jaworski, argued that there were wide-spread disparities between the calculation of local ability to support the Foundation School Program and local ability as shown by actual property values.

A move to get districts to use actual property values, and to see that those values were determined in a uniform way statewide, resulted in the overhauling of the Property Tax Code through the famous "Peveto bill," and to establishment of the State Property Tax Board.

No one would argue that all the inequities in the use of property taxes to support public schools have been solved by the Legislature in the past few years.

Some, indeed, would argue the Legislature has created a new set of problems to replace the old ones.

But the State Property Tax Board is working (in fact, is working this month) to eliminate problems in the system, hearing appeals from local school districts which believe some errors have occurred in calculations of their taxable wealth.

And probably few people would argue that no improvements have taken place since the Jaworski group issued its report in 1967.

That report also noted that a public opinion poll showed "most Texans believe they already have good schools, but they are willing to pay higher taxes for further improvement."

That attitude, the report commented, cut across geographical, socio-economic, age, sex and ethnic categories.

In the 15 years since that report was made, there appears to have been a shift in attitude by Texans to some extent.

Many seem to feel that the quality of schools has declined somewhat — and that changes need to be made.

Just what those changes should be is a matter of debate — with calls for returns to the "basics" (the definition of which may vary from person to person), or for more training to make students capable of entering employment when they leave school, or for special instructions of various kinds.

The Select Committee on Public Education, an 18-member panel created by the Legislature and chaired by Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby, recently issued its report on what it feels should be done for public education by the 1983 Legislature.

Briefly stated, that committee recommends higher salaries and better fringe benefits for teachers, strengthening requirements for high school students seeking to get their diplomas, and using the Permament School Fund to guarantee school construction bonds.

Practically every committee looking at public education in the past has recommended improving teachers' salaries — and many also have argued for improving the quality of instruction for students.

Raising salaries, of course, isn't a cure-all for public education. Nor is saying that students should be made to learn more.

Education involves work — often difficult work — on the part of students and teachers, and a continuing commitment by the society as a whole to education.

That commitment is evidenced by all those reports — and it's to be hoped that 15 years from now there'll be another report suggesting what can be done to make Texas schools better than they've been in the past 15 years.

Price of freedom

To The Editor:

I would like to respond to some recent comments by Mr. Eddie Chiles about all of the faults he has found with our country.

I would like to set the record straight, Mr. Chiles, just in case you do not realize that we Americans have been through three wars in less than 40 years. Perhaps you also do not realize that it takes money — lots of money — to fight a war. I am tired of hearing you and others like you complain about the "poor liberals" and what they have or have not done.

Where were you wealthy conservatives when our country needed manpower to fight for democracy and freedom? As a matter of fact, what are you doing for our great country now — beside complaining?

It appears to me that if you wealthy conservatives in this country were paying your share of taxes instead of looking for loopholes, our national debt would not be nearly so great.

Did you know, Mr. Chiles, that we, the citizens of the United States, had to pay the British government $1 for every coconut tree we damaged or destroyed in the South Pacific during World War II? This expense was merely incidental to the billions of dollars spent to defend our country against aggression, but our existence as a free and democratic nation makes our investment "darn well worth it."

Yes, Mr. Chiles, millions of American men and women were willing to pay the price — in money and blood — for our nation's freedom. The veterans of our great country bore a tremendous share of the price for our freedom. Yet, in listening to your commentary several weeks ago, I was shocked to learn that you would have the veterans of all wars to help pay our national debt through forfeiture of certain benefits. Mr. Chiles, the veterans of this country went to war in an effort to prevent our grandparents, parents, spouses, children and grandchildren from suffering. Therefore, I find it extremely difficult to understand why any true American would want to blame our elderly, social security recipients and children for our soaring national debt.

In my judgment, the only people who would enjoy listening to your program on the air live in Moscow.

Furthermore, I am proud of our space program and the high technology which has grown out of it. We are head and shoulders above any other country in space technology, and I'm sure we will remain in that position.

If it were not for Americans working together, all of us, including our president and his cabinet, might be where Lech Walesa is today. I ask you to join me and be thankful that we live in a free society.

Never good review

To The Editor:

I would like to know who is paying off Georgia Temple, or who she has blackmailed into believing she is a competent critic of the entertainment events of Midland. I fail to understand how anyone can still be employed as a critic when that is exactly what she does whenever she writes a review — she criticizes everything, whether the actual event was any good or not.

I am particularly writing in regard to any musical event that performs in Midland. Georgia Temple is the only one that ever writes up a review, and in my opinion, it is as if no one has written one at all because what she has to say is not worth my time to read. Any musical concerts, whether country or rock and roll, whether they perform at Chaparral Center, Ector County Coliseum, or the Stardust, and whether they are number one or one hundred in the eyes of the public, never get a good review from Georgia Temple. There is constantly something wrong with the individual or group, with their sound system, with their clothes, or with the audience themselves. I would hate to have to stake my future career on the review that Georgia Temple gave me.

Don't get me wrong, I can remember four — and only four — times that a performer has been given a good write-up by Ms. Temple, and I have attended nearly all concerts and read every review written after the concert. The four have been Alabama, Jerry Jeff Walker, Tom Jones and Chicago. I do agree with her on these four performances, because they all left the audience feeling that they were given their money's worth, and this is what is important. However, anyone else that has come to town has been cut down, degraded, and torn to shreds by Georgia Temple's supposed critical ability.

For example, she stated that Sylvia, when appearing at the Stardust, should take singing lessons. How can such a statement be made when every song the lady puts out turns to number one in a short time? Furthermore, when Lee Greenwood appeared in Midland, also at the Stardust, she did admit that he showed fantastic talent in his musical abilities with the saxophone and in his ability to relate to the audience, but she complained endlessly about the noise coming from the microphones and speakers during his first set; she then ended the article by saying she could not vouch for the quality of the second set because her ears would not let her stay to listen to the second set due to the incredible amount of noise from the sound system.

I think Ms. Temple needs her ears checked out anyway, and not because of noise from microphones and speakers. I did not hear of any complaints from the people in the audience that night that Lee Greenwood appeared, and moreover, the applause and reception that he received throughout his performance did little to support Georgia Temple's biased statement.

If The Midland Reporter-Telegram cannot find another use for Ms. Temple's "supposed" journalism abilities in the reviewing area, then can't we, as the readers, at least be allowed another critic's opinion every once in awhile. It would at least balance out the consistently bad reviews any performers that entertain in Midland receive, and I am sure they would appreciate a different viewpoint, also.

Friends of UTPB

To The Editor:

In the present campaign for the Governor's Office, the Democratic candidate has made and is making several erroneous statements concerning Gov. Clements' position on four-year status for UTPB which I would like to correct with the facts.

It was reported to Friends of UTPB, of which I am a member, that in the early summer (June, as I recall) during a campaign trip to Andrews, Gov. Clements stated that if UTPB made it through the procedure of obtaining approval for four-year status from the Board of Regents, Coordinating Board and the Legislature, he would certainly sign the bill into law.

On Tuesday, Oct. 19, I was privileged to be among a group of approximately 40 people from Odessa-Midland who met with Gov. Clements at the Midland-Odessa Symphony and Chorale Building at Terminal at 3 p.m. Gov. Clements there, emphatically stated in no uncertain terms and in language that even a 3-year-old could understand, that he fully supported four-year status for UTPB and he reiterated what we Friends of UTPB have always known...that he always had. He said he had no idea where the thought or statements to the contrary had originated.

Gov. Clements has supported four-year status for UTPB all along. His Democrat opponent is a newcomer to the question and has actually only recently pounced upon the erroneous statements concerning Gov. Clements' position seen in The Odessa American on Tuesday Oct. 5 and attributed therein to Dr. Rippey of UTPB as an opportunity to make some political hay.

I don't really think those Permian Basin residents who are concerned about four-year status for UTPB need become dependent on the efforts to be expended by the Democratic challenger for the Governor's Office. I firmly believe that, in our system, truth will win out and that justice and right will prevail. I have the utmost confidence that the intelligence of the voting public will reward Gov. Clements' honesty, integrity and demonstrated business ability in office with another term as our governor.

For school prayer

To The Editor:

Three cheers for Mrs. John McBride in her letter to you entitled "Halloween Horror."

Prayer in our public schools has been proclaimed abominable by our judicial system. In so doing, the groundwork for Satan has been proclaimed. Will this affect our Christian children in the future? Will this cause one to be expelled or even perhaps arrested for praying in public? Oh surely not. "This can't happen in America." Can't it? Such a decision opens the door for laws that could be enforced.

During the Senate hearings on Jesse Helms' amendment for school prayer, one senator made the statement that to allow prayer in schools by amendment would undermine our court system. It is my opinion the court system undermined God. The God I know says, "I will, therefore, that men pray everywhere, lifting up holy hands, without wrath and doubting; "I Tim. 2:8 (King James version).

Praying anywhere is protected and preserved by the 1st and 9th Amendments to the Bill of Rights, United State Constitution and Article 1, Sections 6, 27, 29 of Texas Bill of Rights.

Fellow Americans, Texans and patriots, we had better do something now, not later. If federal judges were elected we could solve that problem. We do elect presidents and senators who appoint these judges. Write your congressmen regularly and let them know that you are not going to let this issue die nor tolerate violations of constitutional rights of the people!

Fashion critique?

To The Editor:

When reading Georgia Temple's critique on the opening night of "Deathtrap," I particularly noted her interest in the winter clothes, summer shoes.

I'm so glad to see she is interested in fashion. Could you possibly arrange to transfer her to that department?

Shirley Raimer

To The Editor:

Well I see that Midland's equivalent of Howard Cosell, Georgia Temple, has done her usual slash-and-tear job on Midland Community Theatre's latest offering, "Deathtrap." I don't know if Georgia Temple wears a hairpiece or smokes cigars, but her constant flow of caustic criticism certainly reminds me of Cosell.

One final thought: If, at some time in the hopefully distant future, Georgia Temple makes it through the Pearly Gates, I wonder if the program will meet with her standards of approval?

Both sides of story

To The Editor:

By publishing the AP story in your paper on Oct. 19th, "Deputies to guard padlocked church," without any editorial comment upon this evil wicked and illegal action on the part of the sheriff and judge of Cass County, Nebraska, you have left the impression in your readers' minds that your newspaper tacitly accepts and approves the nazification of America. Is this good and fair reporting of news? No, sir it is not! A good newspaper would have tried to present the Baptist side of this story as well as the so-called "liberal" establishment's side.

What is the Baptist side of the story? Briefly there are three reasons why Pastor Dennis Corle of Faith Baptist Church in Nebraska and his congregation started up their own Christian school five years ago. I myself gave written testimony on their behalf. Let me repeat the arguments I then used.

First, Christian parents of Faith Church refuse to send their children to public schools because they will be taught the myth of mega-evolution, i.e. that this world originated by chance rather than by God's creation;

Second, the Christian parents of Faith Baptist Church do not want their children brainwashed by non-Christian teachers in liberal secular humanist morality. Why should Christian children be taught sex education from a completely unbiblical and pagan point of view from textbooks written by SIECUS and Planned Parenthood which advocate premarital sex, masturbation, even incest and abortion!

Third, the Constitution of the United States nowhere permits either the federal government or the states to hold a monopoly upon the education of the nation's children. In fact nowhere in the Constitution is there any legal right given to local, state or federal officials to establish public schools. Any such claim to control education or to certify Christian schools is a brutal violation of our First Amendment freedom to the "free exercise of religion."

Siding with Jane

To The Editor:

It is time that those of us who make our living in the oil and gas industry who have not agreed with Jane Fonda's position on nuclear energy and other environmental matters re-think our position.

If she and her associated movement are successful in halting construction of nuclear power plants and shutting these operations down, that leaves only two alternatives, and really one that is readily available fuel for electric power generation — that is, primarily, natural gas. My premise is that if we can fire the boilers with natural gas we will be able to produce more gas. It would be beneficial to the oil and gas industry at this time, since there is a significant surplus.

It is now time for us to reconsider Jane Fonda. I wonder how Jane will feel about us as her new ally?

Grateful organizers

To The Editor:

The organizers of Midland's Oct. 16 CROP Hunger Walk at Windlands Park wish to thank The Midland Reporter-Telegram for its splendid press coverage.

We also wish to thank the many walkers and their sponsors for their enthusiastic participation in the event. Final figures are not yet available but it is safe to say that the total amount of funds raised will be of the order of $3,000.

And finally, for those who did not walk but could have, we hope to see you next year.

Basin Aviation introduces Crusader to Midland

Technology. That is the key factor in today's world. Man is always looking for ways to improve that which he already has. In the last 100 years, the world has seen more improvement than in the whole history of the world previous. Less than 100 short years ago, it would take you months, even years to travel across the vast land called "America." Now, man has broken the sound barrier, and it takes only a few short hours to cross the country. Technology is the heart and soul of today's society. And true to form, Cessna is right there in step with the world, making quality innovations, always looking for ways to improve upon the already fine line of aircraft they make. Cessna now introduces to the Midland area, through Basin Aviation, the Crusader.

The Cessna Crusader IS quality innovation and value in a beautiful all-new twin. From the sleeek nose to the majestic tail, the Crusader is a study in beauty and aerodynamic excellence. It contains a collections of design features you would expect only in a larger, more expensive aircraft. Cessna's Crusader is unlike any other in general aviation. Innovative quality by skilled engineers makes the Crusader the light twin for the 80's... and beyond.

Although the Crusader is Cessna's lowest priced twin, it features cabin-class comfort for six and the versatility that has only been associated with larger, more expensive aircraft. Ease of handling makes it the logical choice for trade-up from either single engine or other light twins. Its economical price and maintenance accesibility makes it an airplane that proves it is worth every single hour of flight time.

Fully IFR equipped, the Crusader can carry six, including baggage, for up to 560 nautical miles. With four, plus baggage, and full fuel at maximum cruise power, the Crusader has a range of 835 nautical miles, making it the most economical of any six place twin. It represents a new class of aircraft, built from the ground up with great consideration for today's performance and efficiency needs.

The Crusader represents a combination of the best. Never before has such a wide variety of design and manufacturing innovations appeared together in one new airplane. Cessna has taken what they have learned about improved aerodynamics, manufacturing and styling— all the best and latest developments— and put them into the Crusader. The Crusader has advanced wing technology that has been developed from Cessna's 400 series twins. Landing gear from the turboprops. Bonding technology developed on their most advanced models and proven over years of service. All in all, the Crusader represents the vanguard of aircraft technology.

Basin Aviation is the full line Cessna dealer for West Texas and New Mexico. They carry their airplanes in stock so that the customer may see and actually fly the plane before he buys it. They also have one of the most complete facilities around, with factory-trained personnel on hand to maintain the airplanes they sell. They have knowledgeable personnel on hand to demonstrate the plane you are interested in and help you to choose the plane best suited for your needs.

Basin is the professional airplane company for any need you may have in that field. But Basin does not stop with the sale of an airplane, you get first-rate service, too. Basin is a local company with local servicemen, eliminating costly time spent waiting for a repairman to be flown in. To see the Cessna Crusader with its quality innovations, or any of the other planes you may be interested in, contact Don Thornton or Larry Law at 685-7000. Try the friendly, efficient service and you will see why more and more people are turning to Basin Aviation as THEIR airplane dealer.

Larry Law (left) and Don Thornton proudly present the Cessna Crusader to Midland. The Crusader is the newest in Cessna's fine line of aircraft, and promises to be perhaps the best light twin ever made. If you are in the market for a small plane, contact Don or Larry at 685-7000.

Private offices foreign to Japanese

By ANDREW JAFFE
Hearst Feature Service

LOS ANGELES — When Toshiaki Yamamoto was posted here to be general manager of the regional office of NKK America — the Japanese steel giant — the biggest adjustment he had to make wasn't to freeway driving or smog. It was to working in a private office, shut off from his staff by walls and doors — the traditional barriers of executive America.

Perhaps nothing is so dramatic about the contrast between Japanese and American management styles than the way the two cultures design their executive offices.

In Japan, up to 50 members of a department will be arranged in one big room, with each desk — including that of the section supervisor — cheek-by-jowl with the next. The department head or general manager gets to sit apart, usually on a raised dias against one window, but he or she remains on display, his every action or conversation observable by everyone else in the room.

Privacy is a virtually unknown quantity in the Japanese workplace. If a staffer has a telephone argument with a client or a spouse, his colleagues know about it immediately. If a sales rep is about to close a deal, his success or failure wil be instantly monitored by all the other reps in the office.

By contrast, the American system seems excessively individualistic and lonely to the Japanese posted here.

"I am uncomfortable being cut off from my staff," explains Yamamoto, ensconsed in a small, tasteful office. "If I want to have a conversation I either have to call one of them into this office or go out and find them. In the Japanese system, they would be seated next to me all day long."

In the year that Ryosuke Zakoh has been general manager of Fuji Bank's Los Angeles office, he has refused to sit in his private office. Instead, he has installed himself in a corner of the office's main room. Zakoh is getting ready to move his office, but the plans show him stationed with an open desk, with a private office reserved strictly for receiving guests. "Privacy may be preferable," Zakoh says, "but our system is better for convenience and communication in smaller spaces."

Yamamoto believes the different office designs also reflect different management philosophies. In Japan, workers have ill-defined job titles; the emphasis is on teamwork and group performance. In America, however, white collar workers are more territorial, with clearly defined specialties or "turf" never to be trespassed by other workers.

"We try to bring up our people as generalists, often moving them from job to job at one level before promoting them. You emphasize specialties," he says. "You might say the way to the top for us is a spiral, while you try to walk up the ladder."

Yamamoto admits that the arena-like Japanese office design encourages gossip and idle chatter, but he thinks whatever is lost in wasted time is made up for in added efficiency through a team approach and improved morale. "It may look like we are wasting our time," Yamamoto comments, "but by sitting so close together, the staff is more likely to help each other."

According to Dr. Gordon Berger, director of the East Asian studies center at the University of Southern California, the Japanese learn to live in an unprivate world from birth.

"Space is always at a premium. Even in their homes, the Japanese live close to one another, separated only by a thin wall," says Berger. "The Japanese have to learn how to find ways of being alone without being shut off physically from one another."

Not all Japanese who have been exposed to the American office system, think the Japanese plan is superior, however. Seiichi Noto, manager for engineering and technology at NKK here, says he prefers having a private office and secretary, because "psychologically, it makes me feel more free from my boss."

But Hitoshi Watanabe, a NKK marketing specialist, says that the "touching desk" system allows the Japanese to apply a "group task force" system to business problems. "The Japanese tend to make friends of their colleagues at the office. That is part of the reason the Japanese task force system is so successful," said Watanabe.

"By being so close together all day," says Berger, "when the assistant general manager proposes a plan, it has the backing of everyone under him. At some point they all have to put their stamp of approval on it.

Berger cautions that the system is centered on the Japanese culture and would not automatically benefit American companies or even Japanese companies which employ many American workers.

"I think there may be instances when specific applications could be useful on a task force basis. I myself like being able to be in my own office rather than under scrutiny of others.

Con man's skills teach

By LESLIE HAINES
Energy-Business Writer

The very qualities that made Frank Abagnale a successful con artist worth $2.5 million, now enable him to be an effective speaker at banking and retailing and anti-crime seminars — charm, wit, intelligence and persuasiveness.

Soon, they will be portrayed by actor Dustin Hoffman in a movie based on Abagnale's best selling autobiography, "Catch Me if You Can."

Catch him they did, finally, after Abagnale had successfully posed as a Pan American Airways pilot, stock broker, sociology professor, state prosecuting attorney and chief pediatrician at a southern hospital.

Abagnale spoke in Midland last week to a seminar sponsored by the Midland chapter of the American Institute of Banking.

About 400 bankers, tellers and retailers came to hear Abagnale tell them how he managed to write millions of dollars worth of phoney checks, and how to spot con artists and fraud in their own establishments. The audience included 17 employees of the First National Bank of Monahans, and several bankers and tellers from Odessa also.

Abagnale said he was not proud of his "accomplishments," which include four years' stay in a federal penitentiary. He was parolled from a 72-year sentence because he was under 21 years of age when he committed his five-year crime spree.

After being fired from two legitimate jobs of two years' duration each, when his employers found out about his record, Abagnale realized he had to do something to change his reputation. His parole officer suggested he give anti-crime seminars, and that is how he got started in his current line of work, almost six years ago.

"I am not reformed, I am not rehabilitated, I am not born-again," Abagnale said after the seminar. "I am not acting now out of guilt, really, but I do want to tell people how they can avoid being conned by people like me.

"I feel I owe it to them — where else but in America could a person like me do what I did, serve time and be let free, and be able to travel freely and own a business, as I do?"

Abagnale has since paid back every cent he stole from banks. His company, Frank W. Abagnale & Associates, in Houston, manufactures and sells "anti-con" training aids to banks and retail organizations. He himself makes about 200 seminars a year, telling people how to authenticate a check, spot counterfeit money and travelers' checks, and defuse quick change artists.

President Ronald Reagan has asked him to serve on a committee for the Justice Department's Anticrime Effort. He frequently lectures to law enforcement groups of all kinds, and to high school distributive education groups also.

"Don't judge a transaction by the appearance of the person handing you the check," Abagnale stressed. The appearance of the check itself is the most important thing.

To prove his point, he recounted the story of the time he actually wrote a check on a paper napkin and had it cashed.

"It was easy. I pulled up in a chauffered Rolls Royce. The driver opened the door for me, and stood inside the bank's door while I went inside. I was wearing a $400 cashmere suit and gloves. I looked impressive, and that intimidates people. I explained to the teller that I was in a hurry, and had forgotten my checkbook. Could I please just write my name and account number on a paper napkin?

"The teller said she wasn't going to not cash my check."

Abagnale said three things must be on a check to insure it's validity: a proper federal reserve bank code at the bottom of the check, at least one side of the check must be perforated, and the number codes on the bottom of the check must be written in magnetic ink which does not glare or reflect light when the teller holds the check at a certain angle.

Many times, a bad check is passed more because a teller or store clerk is not alert, than due to the fact the con artist is clever.

Abagnale showed slides of typical con checks that had been cashed again and again. One was endorsed "I. Screwed You," and was actually cashed for $40.
