Plan would create new cable competition

■ Controversial move would allow local telephone companies to transmit television programming.

N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — In a surprising and controversial move to promote cable television competition, the Federal Communications Commission proposed Thursday that local telephone companies be allowed to package and transmit television programming.

The proposed rules, which were unanimously endorsed and are likely to be adopted within a year, would expose cable companies to the most threatening competition yet. But they could benefit cable television customers, many of whom have seen their bills double and triple in recent years.

The cable industry vowed to fight the proposals and threatened to challenge the rules in court if they are adopted. Telephone companies, eager to enter a lucrative new business, applauded.

"Today's action will create competition and offer consumers more choices," said James R. Young, vice president for regulatory and industry relations at Bell Atlantic Corp. "Let's hope it's a beginning to the end of turf wars."

In essence, the commission recommended that telephone companies be allowed to offer a "video dial tone" over telephone lines that would carry programming produced by outside companies. Consumers could view whatever programs they pleased, and would be charged accordingly.

Initially, telephone companies would serve primarily as a pipeline, not producing the programs. But the commission said telephone companies should also be allowed to organize and package video services, as long

Bush burns lawmakers on benefits

■ President tells Congress it must give up its special privileges.

N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — President Bush unleashed a lengthy and searing attack on federal lawmakers Thursday, calling members of Congress "a privileged class of rulers" who have earned the nation's disgust following the hearings on Supreme Court nominee Clarence Thomas.

Americans were "stunned and repulsed by the spectacle" when the Senate Judiciary Committee held its public hearing with "X-rated" testimony on sexual harassment charges against Thomas, said the president.

Bush

He spelled out a series of reforms that he said Congress should adopt, and pledged to complete and enforce a new ethical code for the executive branch.

In an unusually emotional outpouring, Bush joined in the public outrage that has swept the country in the aftermath of disclosures of congressional scandals such as check bouncing and unpaid tabs in the House dining room as well as the Thomas hearings.

He lambasted "the piranha tactics of smearing the individual" at the hearings. The president quoted from a letter to him from Ronnie Perry, a real estate broker in Brunswick, Ga. Perry wrote, "It is my fear that good, honest, moral men and women in this country will no longer subject themselves to the ridicule that Judge Thomas had to face."

To reduce what he called the search for "dirt," the president called on Congress to set a six-week time limit on future consideration of the president's nominees.

Striking into the heart of legislative tradition, the president berated the lawmakers for exempting themselves from laws forbidding discrimination on the

Terminal needs repairs, officials say

By Debbie Lincecum
Staff Writer

The Midland City Council earlier this week decided to delay any action on the new construction project for three months.

With the new air terminal project on hold, city officials have identified $5.5 million in "Band-Aids" — repair and renovation work needed at the current facility. They say a decision about terminal repair or replacement will be necessary within six months.

The Midland City Council earlier this week decided to delay any action on the new construction project for three months so staffers can monitor lowered enplanement figures and concentrate on public education.

A proposed construction project would build a new five-gate terminal at a cost of $29.6 million, to be funded by Federal Aviation Administration grants and a $3-per-ticket passenger facility charge.

Ken Day, director of airports, said the aging terminal has many maintenance needs that will require attention whether a new terminal is constructed or not. Deputy City Manager Mike McGregor said the city must make a crucial decision — to undertake repair or set its sights on rebuilding — by spring.

"We have a lot of problems," Day said. "We're talking about spending that much in work without an increase in space."

At-large Councilman J.D. Faircloth, however, said the city may be overstating the urgency of repair needs.

"I'm of the opinion that we don't really

Doctor helps two die

N.Y. Times News Service

DETROIT — Dr. Jack Kevorkian, a Michigan pathologist who aroused a national debate last year with his home-made suicide machine, helped two more women kill themselves Wednesday evening, prompting threats by Michigan officials Thursday to revoke his medical license or perhaps charge him in connection with the deaths.

In the new suicides, a 43-year-old woman with multiple sclerosis and a 58-year-old woman with a severe but unspecified pelvic disorder, were attached to two new suicide devices and died within an hour of each other at a cabin in the Bald Mountain Recreation Area, about 40 miles north of Detroit.

The deaths evoked reponses ranging from outrage to support today. Several experts in medical ethics expresssed surprise and concern, one terming the latest act by Kevorkian "bizarre."

A state legislator inquired about revoking Kevorkian's license. "My feeling is we need to punch Kevorkian's lights out right now," state Sen. Fred Dillingham was quoted by the Associated Press as saying. "He's proven himself to be a danger."

The two women who died Wednesday had pleaded with Kevorkian to permit them to use his machine for two years. Kevorkian's lawyer said. One of them, Sherry Miller of Roseville,

Women's group faces senators in hearing room

WASHINGTON (NYT) — The Senate caucus room where the Supreme Court confirmation battle over Clarence Thomas unfolded was transformed Thursday into the backdrop for another tense confrontation between women and male senators.

The spirit of the encounter, one of a type that has become increasingly common on Capitol Hill, was captured by the response from a nonpartisan women's group to Sen. Alan K. Simpson, a Wyoming Republican who was a leader of his party's attack on Professor Anita F. Hill, who accused Thomas of sexual harassment.

Of the 14 men on the Judiciary Committee Simpson said, "We were portrayed as totally insensitive asses."

Gene Roddenberry

Roddenberry dies

LOS ANGELES — Gene Roddenberry, the former airline pilot who created the "Star Trek" science fiction television series followed by legions of "Trekkies," died Thursday. He was 70. Roddenberry died at Santa Monica Medical Center shortly after suffering a heart attack at his doctor's office across the street, said hospital spokesman Ted Braun. "Star Trek," which ran in the late 1960s, gained real fame in reruns of its 79 episodes. It led to six "Star Trek" feature films, a new series with different intergalactic characters and a cultural phenomenon of "Trekkie" conventions, books, clothing and lunch boxes.

Civil rights

WASHINGTON — President Bush agreed Thursday night to accept a modified version of the Senate's long-disputed civil rights bill, his chief of staff John Sununu said. The leading Republican sponsor, Sen. John Danforth, R-Mo., said the latest revision also had been accepted by the top Democratic supporter of civil rights legislation, Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass./7A

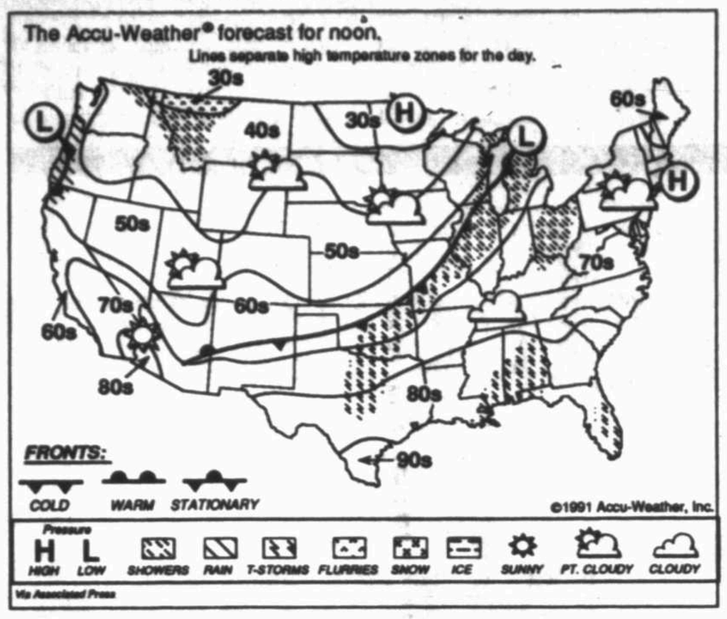
WEATHER SUMMARY



Clouds take parts of sky

Staff Report

Today's forecast calls for partly cloudy skies with a high around 80 and northwest winds at 10 to 15 mph. Tonight should be partly cloudy with a low in the lower 50s, according to the National Weather Service in Midland.

Saturday should be partly cloudy with a high around 80.

After an overnight low of 56, Thursday's high was 83 compared with the record high for Oct. 24 of 92 set in 1933. The record low for today is 34 set in 1955.

STATE

Gusty southerly breezes buffeted most of Texas on Thursday in advance of a cold front that had entered the Panhandle. A dry line across Northwest Texas separated cloudy skies ahead of the front from sunny skies behind it.

Because of the potential for turbulence, forecasters posted a tornado watch Thursday evening for North Texas.

Temperatures warmed only into the 60s behind the front, where winds were northerly, to 70s, 80s and 90s ahead of the system. Winds were mostly 10 to 20 miles an hour with gusts over 30.

At 3 p.m., temperature readings ranged from 62 degrees in the northern Panhandle city of Dalhart to 93 in the Lower Rio Grande Valley city of Harlingen.

The North Texas forecast was for mostly cloudy skies with scattered thunderstorms. Highs were to be in the 80s with lows in the 60s.

South Texas was expected to be mostly cloudy with a few widely scattered showers and thunderstorms. Highs were predicted in the 80s and 90s with lows ranging from the 60s in the Hill Country to 70s elsewhere.

NATION

Thunderstorms brought high wind and golf ball-size hail Thursday in Oklahoma. Snowshowers were scattered over parts of North Dakota and Colorado, while heavy rain threatened to cause flooding in Wisconsin.

Dense fog blanketed much of the East Coast from Virginia to Maine in the morning. The fog caused delays at airports in Philadelphia and Richmond, Va., and forced schools to open late in Delaware, Virginia and Maryland.

Afternoon snowshowers were scattered over southwest North Dakota and northeast Colorado.

Several highways in North Dakota remained icy as slush-covered roads froze overnight, causing several traffic accidents and some minor injuries, the highway patrol reported.

Thunderstorms brought golf ball-size hail with 65 mph gusts near Manford, Okla., early Thursday. A tornado was reported to have touched down in eastern Oklahoma.

Heavy rain threatened to cause flooding in parts of southern Wisconsin, where 2.75 inches fell over the town of Oregon in one hour.

An overnight storm left nearly 5 inches of snow in northwest Minnesota and 10 inches in Grand Mesa, Colo. Snow was 14 inches deep at Deer Lake, Colo., following the storm. Overnight snowfall also left up to 10 inches near Fairview, Utah.

Rainshowers and thunderstorms also were scattered over the Ohio Valley, the Great Lakes, parts of the Mississippi Valley and the Florida Panhandle.

The Associated Press contributed to this report.

AIRPORT: Terminal needs major repair work

have to do anything," Faircloth said. "We could get by for a few years. Certainly some things are needed, but (the terminal) has been usable for a number of years and it's not going to suddenly fall down."

The facility has not been well-maintained in the past because of a shortage of funds, Day said.

"Without tax money being used, you only have so much available," he said. "We have two facilities to run," Midland Airpark as well as the airport.

Most FAA grants are restricted to new construction projects and not available for maintenance, Day said.

The City Council recently approved funding carpet replacement at the ticket counters, which Day said was the minimum in needed carpet work. Councilmen were at first reluctant to spend from the airport fund's surplus with the terminal's future still uncertain, but Day said even more is needed.

"That was only a small area. We're also looking at the baggage claim and the walkover," Day said. "The carpet is just taped together. It's falling apart so badly our janitorial (company) has to remove it when they clean."

In addition, the covered parking structure needs improvements to its stability, plumbing pipes are collapsing, jet bridges need renovation and the automatic door system needs work, Day said.

"We have a heating and cooling problem that can't be fixed, we've had so many add-ons and changes over the years," he said.

"Fire protection has got to be addressed. That will keep our insurance down," Day continued. The facility, although equipped with fire alarms, has no sprinkler system.

In addition, implementation of the Americans With Disabilities Act, which takes effect in January, will require more changes, Day said. At present there are problems with the terminal ramp, ticket counters and some restroom facilities that officials said have created access difficulties for persons with disabilities.

"There's no question we're going to need to do some more things," Day said.

Faircloth said if the enplanement figures — down by 6 percent this year — improve and a construction project appears imminent, he would not advocate spending much on repairs at all. He said he would not support cosmetic improvements in "tough times."

"In terms of expending money on this, the critical point is whether or not the dollars are being 'thrown down a hole,' " Faircloth said. "If they proved to me we had to spend $5.5 million, if we put off construction for, say, five or ten years, I would probably go with it.

"I think we ought to look very carefully and see what we really have to do out there," Faircloth said.

BUSH: President calls Congress 'elite rulers'

basis of sex, age, race, ethnic background or physical disability.

"Most of these laws apply to everyone in America except members of Congress," he told an applauding group of government administrators.

"I would wager that the American people do not know that Congress has exempted itself from the sexual harassment laws private employers and the executive branch must obey," he continued. "And they have."

"This practice creates the appearance and reality of a privileged class of rulers who stand above the law," said Bush.

Pressing his point, the president, who spoke at the Smithsonian's National History Museum, quoted from a Federalist Paper from the founding of the nation, stating that Congress " ... can make no law which will not have in full operation on themselves and their friends as well as on the great mass of society."

Although lawmakers have been reeling from recent criticism, some Democrats rallied to rebut the president.

House Speaker Thomas Foley, D-Wash., said of the Bush reform call: "I just find it strange that these requests are coming from the White House ... when very often they have been the subject of exemptions at their own request beyond what Congress gets."

Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., a member of the Senate Judiciary Committee that interrogated Thomas and his accuser, said the problem in the selection of Supreme Court justices is politics, not legislative process.

"I think the only thing that really needs reform is the administration's cynical approach to the Supreme Court," said Leahy, who charged that Bush has "packed it with people with right-wing ideology."

The "advice and consent process is fundamentally sound," said Leahy. "Let us not decide that because of a political poll over the weekend, suddenly we change our Constitution."

Although the president's ringing denunciation had the sound of the beginnings of a major anti-Congress campaign theme for the coming 1992 elections, his spokesman Marlin Fitzwater insisted that was not so. The speech was a "one time event," he told reporters.

Even so, Bush laid out a list of reforms he wanted Congress to make.

He called on the Senate to ferret out by Jan. 3 who leaked confidential information about law professor Anita Hill's charges of sexual harassment against Thomas. "The American people just will not understand it if the Senate fails to bring the leaker or leakers to justice," he said.

The Senate later voted overwhelmingly for a four-month probe that will also cover leaks from its own investigation of five senators accused of intervening improperly with regulators to help former savings and loan executive Charles Keating Jr.

Because of the belief by some that the data that delayed Thomas's confirmation came from an FBI report, Bush announced that the FBI would no longer leave copies of its reports with Congress in the future. FBI agents will hand deliver reports to members of Congress, who must read them in the agent's presence and return them, said Bush. Staff members won't even be able to look at the reports and senators can't store them on Capitol Hill, Bush said.

He also called on Congress to eliminate some of its 300 committees and 40,000 staffers. He called on the lawmakers to "trim this overgrown thicket of committees and subcommittees."

WOMEN: Forum questions senate harrassment

plause, with many women pounding their fists on the table.

The senator was addressing the International Women's Forum, a nonpolitical group of professional women from around the world.

The group had been scheduled to meet on Capitol Hill over club sandwiches and apple pie long before Thomas's confirmation hearings riveted the nation on the issue of sexual harassment.

The degree to which discussion of the Thomas confirmation and sexual harassment in general dominated the event was yet another illustration of how the issue keeps reverberating through the Capitol and of how male politicians are still scrambling to figure out how to play it.

Almost every day brings a fresh example. Wednesday there were hearings on the sexual harassment of women in government jobs.

Today the Senate is expected to continue arguing about civil rights legislation that would allow women to collect cash damages in cases of employment discrimination, including sexual harassment.

And Thursday, many of the Republican and Democratic women who said they had joined the International Women's Forum for social and business reasons, were instead talking about just one thing: how they could mobilize to elect politicians who they believe would be more sensitive to women.

"I don't think they're aware of the depth of anger out there," said Joan L. Savage, an oil shale developer from Denver who said she was a Republican. "We will be single-issue voters on women's issues. Women are incensed."

As she surveyed the 300 women in the room where Thomas and Hill made their cases less than two weeks ago, Ruth Ann Leach, a columnist for the Nashville Banner, said: "The sense of outrage, of power, in this room, is palpable. Incumbents will be feeling more than heat. They'll be feeling hell."

Despite the widespread anger at senators, opinion polls show that many American women have supported Thomas's confirmation and there has been little divergence between the opinions of women and men.

After Simpson's appearance, the crowd was waiting for Sen. Charles S. Robb of Virginia, the chairman of the Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee who last week was picketed by some women over the confirmation.

But, to hisses in the audience, the hosts announced they were changing the format of individual appearances, and Robb walked to the podium with a colleague, Sen. Richard G. Lugar, an Indiana Republican.

That prompted one woman to shout at the senators, both backers of Thomas, "They're getting cold feet now!"

Both Robb and Lugar delivered remarks about foreign affairs. But when the question period came, it was clear that this was not the time or place to talk about the diminished Soviet threat.

The mood in the ornate Senate Caucus Room was at times confrontational and at times polite toward the lawmakers.

Sabra Field, an East Barnard, Vt., print maker, said, "I think Anita Hill is our hero." Then she muttered, "I figured Alan Simpson was coming because he wanted to ingratiate himself with the enemy."

Simpson, who has at times seemed to embrace his role as a designated villain of women's groups during the Thomas hearings, Thursday seemed to take a more balanced line.

CABLE: FCC plan puts TV in telephones

as they make their networks available to all programmers. The commission also opened an inquiry on whether to let telephone companies produce programs.

The idea of allowing a so-called video dial tone service has long been a favorite of FCC Chairman Alfred C. Sikes. Congress, which is weighing regulatory legislation to rein in cable prices, has shied away from the issue. Thursday's action makes it more likely that lawmakers will have to reconsider the role of telephone companies in television.

Before cable customers would feel much impact from Thursday's FCC proposal, however, most telephone companies would have to spend billions of dollars to install new fiber-optic transmission lines and switching equipment that could carry large volumes of television material.

Analysts have estimated the cost of connecting every home in the country to a fiber-optic line would be $100 billion to $200 billion and that it would take at least five years.

Most large telephone companies, including all of the regional Bell companies, already plan to replace much of their copper wire with fiber over the next two decades. The immense business opportunity posed by the $18 billion cable television market is likely to accelerate those plans.

High-capacity communications lines that reach every home in America could radically alter the distribution of entertainment and enable people to use home computers to tap distant libraries to obtain information in seconds.

"Both program providers and consumers would have choices they don't have today, without the bottlenecks provided by cable companies and without the bottlenecks of broadcasting," said Richard Firestone, chief of the FCC's common carrier bureau.

The move was immediately attacked by the National Cable Television Association, which threatened to challenge any new rules in court.

"Until and unless the telco's monopoly in voice telephony is ended, no level of government safeguards against cross subsidies will be effective," said James P. Mooney, president of the cable association.

The most controversial issue, which the FCC raised for discussion without recommendation, is whether telephone companies should be allowed to produce programming, a much bigger business than transmission.

School bus crash hurts 23 Kentucky students

PINE TOP, Ky. (AP) — A bus turned over and slid down a 60-foot embankment into a creek Thursday, injuring at least 23 high school students, authorities said.

The students were treated at four area medical facilities, and four with more serious injuries were taken to the University of Kentucky Medical Center in Lexington, 150 miles northwest of this eastern Kentucky town.

A 16-year-old boy was being treated at the university hospital for head injuries and was in serious but stable condition, said spokeswoman Mary Margaret Colliver. A 15-year-old girl was in fair condition with fractures, she said.

Two other girls were transferred to the university hospital — one with fractures, Colliver said. Their conditions weren't immediately available.

Arda Taylor, dispatcher with the Knott County Ambulance Service, said the bus driver apparently lost control in a curve on a state route. The bus flipped and slid into Willard Creek in southeastern Knott County.

Rescue squads from several counties helped transport the injured, she said, along with state police and sheriff's deputies.

SUICIDES: Kevorkian helps two women end their lives

(From 1A)

Mich., told in emotional testimony at a court hearing last January how her life had ceased to be worth living because of the multiple sclerosis she had suffered from for 12 years.

"I went from a cane to a walker to a wheelchair," Ms. Miller, a former secretary and divorced mother of two, said on the witness stand 10 months ago. "I can't walk. I can't write. It's hard for me to talk. I can't function as a human being."

Looking down and weeping, she added, "What can anybody do? Nothing. I want the right to die."

Wednesday, she and Marjorie Wantz, a former teacher's aide from Sodus, Mich., got what Kevorkian's lawyers say they wanted. Ms. Miller's siblings flew from the West Coast early this week to see her one last time. The two women and their families met as a group with Kevorkian to discuss what would happen.

The two women said they wanted to die on a balmy day just after sunset and decided on Wednesday after hearing of the warm weather predicted, said Geoffrey Fieger, Kevorkian's lawyer.

For months, Kevorkian had declined to help them because Ms. Miller's parents and teen-age children had long been opposed and Ms. Wantz's condition had not been proven to be beyond help. By early fall, those stipulations had been met, Kevorkian's lawyers said.

Kevorkian decided to have both women commit suicide at the same time out of fear that if he helped one, he could not be assured of being able to help the other one later.

"He was afraid he would betray one if he left the other," said Fieger. "He was fearful of being stopped and leaving one to suffer."

The two women knew each other only through Kevorkian and died together in his presence. Each lay in street clothes on separate cots, covered with white sheets and attached to newer, updated models of the crude suicide machine he used last year to assist in the death of Janet Adkins, who had Alzheimer's disease.

Mrs. Adkins pushed a button that sent a sedative and then sodium pentothal into her blood. This time Kevorkian devised machines that were slightly more passive.

Mrs. Wantz went first, her husband by her side. Two strings were attached to her fingers. The first one, when pulled, activated the anesthetic. Once she was sedated minutes later, her arm fell flat, pulling the second string and sending sodium pentothal into her system.

Mrs. Wantz died as Ms. Miller watched and prepared for her own death. After Kevorkian asked Ms. Miller if she still wanted to go through with the procedure, a gas mask carrying carbon monoxide from a cannister was put to her nose and mouth. She died about a half hour later.

Her last words were spoken to her best friend, Sharon Welch, who stood at her bedside, Fieger said. "I love you," Ms. Miller is reported as saying. "I love you, too," Ms. Welch responded.

The deaths of the two women have enraged Kevorkian's opponents who say he is flouting ethics and reason.

"Here in this state, he is referred to as Dr. Death," said Dillingham, a Republican who has introduced legislation to make assisted suicide a felony.

"We're looking at somebody who wants to be Dr. God. It's a very scary concept. He violated a court order, violated medical ethics, then turns around and broadens it to the chronically ill. It makes me wonder what's next if we don't get him checked in this state."

Several specialists in medical ethics expressed astonishment. "He is a man with a cause, and the cause is immoral, unethical and very dangerous," said Arthur Caplan, director for the Center for Biomedical Ethics at the University of Minnesota.

Caplan, who testified against Kevorkian at the earlier legal proceedings, questioned whether a "banner carrier for euthanasia" could be a dispassionate judge of candidates for help in committing suicide.

The Rev. John J. Paris, a professor of medicial ethics at Holy Cross College in Worcester, Mass., called the Michigan events "bizarre," but he said that "what he's doing is precisely what will happen with the passage of Initiative 119," a proposal in Washington state to legalize assisted suicide and euthanasia now on the Nov. 5 ballot.

In Seattle, Washington Citizens for Death with Dignity, a group backing the ballot measure, said the Michigan case "underscores the fact there are currently no specific laws to govern this type of activity."

Under the Washington measure, the statement continued, physician aid in dying could be provided only to people judged terminally ill and with less than six months to live, conditions that might have disqualified both of the women in Michigan.

Margaret P. Battin, a philosophy professor at the University of Utah who specializes in professional ethics, said, "The Kevorkian case is one in which we get misled by our distaste for the Rube Goldberg nature of the apparatus."

Battin acknowledged being troubled by questions about how well Kevorkian knew the people who died or had closely examined his own motives. But the essential issue, she added, still remained "whether a physician may ever help a person whose considered choice is to end his or her life."

John A. Robertson, a professor of law at the University of Texas at Austin, said that Kevorkian's action "has shown the need for society to come to grips with the strong need of some patients to take matters into their own hands."

The Hemlock Society, a right-to-die organization also said the suicides underscored the need for laws.

"This type of ad hoc assistance in suicide for the dying is wide open to abuse because there are no ground rules and no criteria," Cheryl K. Smith, a Hemlock Society lawyer, was quoted as saying by the Associated Press.

Kevorkian brought national attention to still-unanswered questions surrounding doctor-assisted suicide when he helped Mrs. Adkins kill herself last June. The killing attracted several terminally ill people and their relatives to Michigan under the assumption that assisted suicide was permitted here.

Kevorkian, who put Michigan at the center of the moral and ethical debate over assisted suicide, avoided prosecution himself when first-degree murder charges against him were dismissed last December.

"Dr. Kevorkian is a free man, garnering the publicity he normally seeks," said Richard Thompson, the Oakland County prosecutor who failed in an attempt to make a criminal case against Kevorkian.

Imelda's return causes little public stir

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — Nearly six years after driving Imelda Marcos and her husband into exile, Filipinos are casually awaiting the return of the former first lady whose massive shoe collection became a symbol of the Marcos' excesses.

Imelda Marcos

Plans for Mrs. Marcos' visit next month have not been announced, but it could include a stop at the Malacanang presidential palace, where her 1,700 pairs of shoes and other personal items are on public display.

So far, the only sign of the scheduled visit has been a drive to collect donations for Mrs. Marcos, once among the world's wealthiest women.

"Our understanding among ourselves is to welcome (Mrs. Marcos) with solemnity and quiet dignity," said retired Brig. Gen. Pacifico de Leon, one of several former army officials handling security for Mrs. Marcos.

While courts have pursued charges against the Marcos family, the attention of most Filipinos has been increasingly focused on problems such as inflation, crumbling infrastructure and natural disasters.

The hottest topic in the local press recently has been an allegation that Foreign Secretary Raul Manglapus hired an American mercenary to assassinate opponents of President Corazon Aquino.

"I don't care what this government does or what the previous government did," said Ronald Gao, a waiter in suburban Quezon City.

Luis Tabuena, former airport manager and coordinator of the visit, said banners welcoming Mrs. Marcos will be erected two or three days before her return.

The widow of ousted President Ferdinand Marcos is expected to arrive Nov. 4 aboard a chartered jet from Honolulu, accompanied by hundreds of journalists and admirers.

Mrs. Marcos and her husband fled the country on Feb. 26, 1986, after the "people power revolution" that propelled Mrs. Aquino into the presidency. Marcos died in Hawaii in September 1989.

French workers protest wages with strike

PARIS (NYT) — With France's Socialist government already reeling from a sharp drop in its popularity, rail, sea, air and road transportation was badly disrupted Thursday by a 24-hour general strike of state employees protesting low wages and increased unemployment.

The strike itself fell well short of paralyzing the country, with most factories and offices working close to normal.

But it seemed to reflect the mood of irritation that has increasingly characterized French society as economic growth has slowed down here throughout this year.

Although French workers have a tradition of public protest, in recent months demonstrations have become commonplace in Paris for the first time since the mid-1980s. This week many French hospitals handled only emergency cases because nurses had walked out to demand higher salaries.

Further, across France, farmers have been campaigning fiercely against imports of food and wine, not only attacking trucks carrying foreign products, but also often using violence to disrupt trips to the provinces by Cabinet ministers.

This week President Francois Mitterrand's patience with the farmers ran out.

"It is unacceptable that gangs should continue to burn, attack, destroy and burn," he said. "From now on, those who are responsible for order — the police, the gendarmerie and the courts — must do their duty."

The strike Thursday brought a sharp reduction in subway and suburban rail services in the Paris area, while employees of the state-owned UTA airline blocked the highway leading to the Charles de Gaulle Airport at Roissy, forcing passengers to walk more than half a mile to the terminal area.

Dockworkers in Le Havre and Rouen were also on strike, workers at a Renault car plant at Le Mans stopped work for three hours, production of electricity fell by 20 percent because of absenteeism, and a concert by the French National Orchestra scheduled for this evening was canceled.

Cambodia peace deal opens trade options

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — The signing of the Cambodia peace accord in Paris moves the United States closer to ending its trade embargo of Vietnam and normalizing relations with its former enemy.

Vietnam has been working hard in recent years to bring an end to the trade embargo to gain badly needed Western aid. For their part, American businessmen are keen to enter the Vietnamese market before they get squeezed out by competitors.

The U.S. conditions for ending the embargo and restoring ties with Hanoi are peace in Cambodia and a fuller accounting of Americans missing during the Vietnam War.

Washington applied the Trading with the Enemy Act against Communist North Vietnam in 1964 and extended it to the whole country after the Communist victory over U.S.-backed South Vietnam in 1975.

Since then, the embargo has hurt Vietnam's flagging economy, despite efforts in Hanoi since 1986 to introduce Western-style reforms and move from a centrally planned to a market economy.

One such move, in December 1987, was passage of a law allowing foreign firms to invest in Vietnam. Nguyen Mai, vice chairman of the State Committee for Cooperation and Investment, said in August that since the law took effect, "we have signed 292 investment projects for a total value of $2.2 billion."

Meanwhile, American businessmen and some members of Congress have been increasingly critical of the embargo.

In July, a prominent American businessman in Bangkok said trade between Japan and Vietnam may reach $1 billion this year, despite Tokyo's official policy of generally backing the U.S. embargo.

Raymond Eaton, head of the Indochina Markets Committee of the American Chamber of Commerce in Thailand, said Japan has become Vietnam's second largest trading partner after the Soviet Union.

If Americans were allowed to do business in Vietnam, he said, they could participate in oil exploration, consumer products, infrastructure development, agribusiness, pharmaceuticals, communications equipment and the hotel and tourism industry.

In June, Sen. Frank Murkowski, R-Alaska, told a Congressional hearing the embargo was hurting only the United States. He said U.S. allies such as Britain, France, Canada and Japan "poured more than $1.4 billion of investment into Vietnam last year alone."

Last month, Vietnam criticized the latest one-year extension of the embargo, saying it was an "outdated policy that has been condemned even by American public opinion." Despite calls to end the ban, "Washington still rejects these legitimate demands and refuses to adopt a realistic policy."

After Vietnam invaded neighboring Cambodia in late 1978 and installed the current Phnom Penh regime, Washington made peace in Cambodia a condition for ending the embargo.

Arabs, Israel cement stands for peace talks

DAMASCUS, Syria (AP) — Arab parties to the Middle East conference reached a united hard-line stand on Thursday, but Palestinian radicals opposed to the talks seized the Lebanon offices of the PLO's main faction.

The dissidents were members of PLO chairman Yasser Arafat's mainstream Fatah faction. One Lebanese security source said the bloodless insurrection in the Lebanese port of Sidon was tantamount to a coup d'etat against what he called Arafat's policy of succumbing to pressure to attend a peace conference.

In Damsascus, meanwhile, Syria, Egypt, Jordan, Lebanon and members of the Palestine Liberation Organization staked out a hard-line position for the talks after hawkish Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir said he would attend the peace parley.

The united front ruled out separate treaties with Israel, demanded a halt to Jewish settlements in the occupied territories and insisted Israel negotiate on the status of Jerusalem.

Saudi Arabia and Morocco, which will attend the Oct. 30 conference in Spain as observers, backed the decisions by the front-line Arab states. Sources said the decisions were galvanized by Shamir's decision Wednesday to supplant his relatively dovish foreign minister and lead Israel's delegation himself.

Israel has repeatedly said it will not discuss Jerusalem or the settlements, and Israeli media reported Thursday that the Israeli delegation now would be stacked with hard-liners.

They included confidants of Shamir, hard-line legislators from his Likud bloc and possibly a representative of Jewish settlers in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip, the reports said.

The prime minister's move threatened to split his government, the most right-wing in Israel's history. Levy met with Likud supporters on Thursday, and some backers said the foreign minister would now wage an all-out campaign against Shamir for leadership of the party.

One of the Arab conference sources in Damascus, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the the participants had differed widely on some points, but after Shamir's decision they felt their best stand would be "total harmony." The source spoke on condition of anonymity.

The move by Shamir to head up the Israeli delegation will likely spur Arab states to upgrade their delegations as well, which were initially set at the foreign minister level.

The Syrians had been pressing the other Arab states who will attend the peace conference to agree not to sign separate peace accords with Israel. They do not want a repeat of Egypt's 1979 peace treaty with Israel.

Israel's treaty with Egypt, the first and only one the Jewish state has with any of its Arab neighbors, shattered the Arab alliance and neutralized the Arabs' major military power.

The Arab states want a "complete Israeli withdrawal" from occupied Arab territories, including Jerusalem, an "immediate freeze" on the construction of Jewish settlements in these territories, and "realization of the legitimate rights of the Palestinian people" who seek an independent homeland.

Officials criticize Turner's stepdad for taping reunion

WIESBADEN, Germany (AP) — State Department officials criticized Jesse Turner's stepfather on Thursday for videotaping the freed hostage's private reunion with his family and giving CBS the video to broadcast nationwide.

The stepfather, Eugene Ronneburg, and Turner's mother, Estelle, left Germany and returned home Thursday after Ronneburg was barred from the U.S. military hospital where Turner is interned and from the U.S. government-owned hotel where the Turners were staying.

According to sources, Turner probably didn't realize at first, given the emotion of the reunion, that it was being videotaped by his stepfather, and had no idea the film would be shown in the United States on national television.

The videotape — filmed inside Turner's private suite at the U.S. Air Force hospital — was aired by CBS on Wednesday and again on Thursday.

State Department spokesman Joe Reap said Turner had wanted privacy during his reintroduction to his family and that his stepfather violated department policy by videotaping the emotional scene.

"One of the most basic elements of U.S. concern for any freed hostage is his or her privacy. Yesterday Mr. Ronneburg violated that policy," said Reap.

"In order to prevent a recurrence, he (Ronneburg) was advised that he would no longer have access to the USAF hospital. Mr. Ronneburg and his wife decided to leave Germany in the aftermath of this situation," said Reap.

In an interview with the network, Ronneburg said State Department officials "called me aside and started reading me the riot act."

Cease-fire in Dubrovnik follows fierce fighting

ZAGREB, Yugoslavia (AP) — Serb-dominated Yugoslav forces pounded Croatian defenses around the Adriatic resort of Dubrovnik on Thursday and captured a town just to the south in one of the heavier attacks of the 4-month-old war.

European Community observers said federal army and Croatian defense officials agreed to a truce in the Dubrovnik region, to take effect at 5 p.m.

But Croatian National Guard commander Imra Agotic said in Zagreb that gunfire was continuing about an hour past the truce deadline.

Heavy fighting was reportedly continuing elsewhere in secessionist Croatia, while archrival Serbia seemed to dig in ever more fiercely against EC proposals to bring peace to this splintering Balkan nation of 24 million people.

Serbia and its three allies remaining on the eight-member collective presidency said they would boycott EC-sponsored peace talks in The Hague today. The 10th EC-negotiated truce, which went into effect Saturday, has collapsed.

Croatia and its neighbor Slovenia declared independence on June 25, but armed ethnic Serbs declared autonomy in regions of Croatia, and have captured about a third of the republic's territory with the backing of the Serb-dominated federal army. More than 1,000 people have died in the fighting.

Croatian defense officials said the federal army on Thursday again shelled the eastern Croatian stronghold of Vukovar, besieged now for about two months.

Karlovac, 30 miles southwest of Zagreb, came under fire from multiple-barreled rocket launchers, they said.

Zagreb radio reported heavy fighting on the central front near Pakrac, 70 miles southeast of the Croat capital.

One villager was killed and several were wounded in nearby Prekopakra, and another civilian was killed in Daruvar, just north of Pakrac, it said.

After one failed effort Tuesday, federal forces made a successful amphibious assault Thursday on Kupari, a resort four miles south of Dubrovnik, both sides said. Zagreb radio said federal army troops advanced on land to within 2½ miles of Dubronik.

North, South Korea make progress in talks

SEOUL, South Korea (NYT) — Dropping some of their extreme demands, the prime ministers of North and South Korea achieved the first modest progress Thursday in their series of talks when they agreed to try to negotiate one comprehensive accord to ease tensions.

The main step forward appeared to be North Korea's abandonment of a demand for an immediate severing of South Korea's alliance with the United States as a condition for improvement of relations between the two Koreas.

But North Korea's position was still seen as requiring that any agreement be accompanied by an effective severing of South Korean-American ties. It is highly unlikely that Seoul would agree to such a step.

Many other deep differences remained between the two countries that are technically still at war, and they appeared to have deepened this week on one issue — North Korea's refusal to permit inspections of its nuclear installations.

Two days of talks concluded this afternoon in Pyongyang, the capital of North Korea. It was the first meeting between the two prime ministers in 10 months and the fourth since the talks began 13 months ago.

Reports reaching here Thursday night said that the atmosphere was more friendly and upbeat than in the past, and some news reports were hailing the agreement as a major step forward. But diplomats and other specialists monitoring the talks were more cautious.

"It's a step forward that the two sides are speaking in a friendly way," a Western diplomat here said. "But they seem to be papering over all the differences that remain."

The two sides, led by Prime Minister Chung Won-shik of South Korea and Prime Minister Yon Hyong-muk of North Korea, agreed to meet again on Dec. 10-13 in Seoul.

The main point of Thursday's accord was that the two sides agreed to work on producing one comprehensive document on "reconciliation, non-aggression, exchange and cooperation," addressing all outstanding issues.

Until now, the North had insisted on concluding a non-aggression pact before considering any other accords. South Korea, fearing that Pyongyang only wanted an agreement it could use to support its demand for the expulsion of American troops from the South, wanted instead a "basic agreement" on trade, communications and other measures recognizing its legitimacy.

"The results of the talks are very positive, and they give hope that there will be much progress in the fifth round of talks," said Ahn Byong-su, a North Korean spokesman, at a news conference after the meetings.

Spring elections possible, Soviets say

MOSCOW (AP) — The signing of an economic accord by eight Soviet republics has boosted hopes among Mikhail S. Gorbachev's aides that national presidential elections can be held next spring, his spokesman said Thursday.

"The coming six months will be the most decisive, not only for the president, but for the republics and the people as well," said Andrei S. Grachev, who was appointed presidential spokesman after the attempted coup in August.

Fears of a strong central government drove most of the 15 Soviet republics to declare independence after the coup and still kindles opposition to a strong role for the national president and government, Grachev said.

Gorbachev has never faced a popular election. And polls taken after the collapse of central authority in August indicate he is far less popular than Russian Federation President Boris N. Yeltsin.

But Gorbachev seems to have been gaining ground since the coup, and his prestige could rise next week when he is to join President Bush in sponsoring a Middle East peace conference in Madrid, Spain.

The signing of an economic accord Oct. 18 by eight of the original 15 republics showed that fears of the central government are subsiding, Grachev said.

Bush accepts Senate's civil rights bill, Sununu says

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush agreed Thursday night to accept a modified version of the Senate's long-disputed civil rights bill, his chief of staff John Sununu said.

The leading Republican sponsor, Sen. John Danforth, R-Mo., said the latest revision also had been accepted by the top Democratic supporter of civil rights legislation, Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass.

Senate Democrats scheduled a private caucus this morning to consider the latest GOP offer. It emerged from a long day of private negotiations, first among Senate Republicans and White House officials, and later including Kennedy.

"We finally were able to get language accepted that eliminated the prospects of quotas. That's a very significant change," Sununu said.

"I spoke with the president. It appears the proposal is acceptable and if there are no additional changes to what is there, the president is willing to sign that bill," Sununu said. "It is a non-quota bill."

Details of the substance of the changes were not disclosed. Sununu said they involved several paragraphs of technical legal language dealing with a long-disputed provision establishing standards of defense for employers facing suits alleging unintentional discrimination.

In addition, the new proposal includes an adjustment in the limits on damages that victims of sexual harassment and sexual discrimination would be eligible for, according to both Sununu and Danforth.

Both commented as they emerged from a closed-door meeting in Senate Minority Leader Bob Dole's Capitol office. The negotiations there ran for more than 10 hours.

The agreement, if accepted by Democrats, would represent an important breakthrough in a civil rights debate that has been stalled for nearly two years. Bush vetoed a similar bill last year and had attacked versions sponsored by Democrats as well as Danforth's bill this year as "a quota bill."

"It's very significant," Sununu said. "... It looks like there's enough strong support — both Republican and Democratic — that this agreement can be brought to the floor in a relatively short period of time."

Danforth cautioned that, "There is nothing agreed to until we vote." But he said Kennedy "will recommend it to the Democratic caucus tomorrow."

Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell, after being briefed on the details of the proposal, called the meeting of Democratic senators. Deal or no deal, he said, the Senate will begin formal consideration of the bill today.

"The private negotiations have about been completed," Mitchell said. "The question is whether they will be carried forward to agreement, or whether we'll simply reach a point where no agreement is possible and we proceed to resolve the matter here on the Senate floor."

Arson units look for cause of Oakland fire

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) — With rain looming ominously in the weekend forecast, investigators continued searching for victims and clues Thursday in the aftermath of the devastating fire that swept over the Oakland hills.

One or two people remained missing, according to authorities who believe the fire — one of the worst in the nation's history — may have been started by construction workers illegally burning brush.

The blaze began Saturday, was snuffed out but flared up the next day. Before it was brought under control Wednesday, it killed 24 people, injured 148 and destroyed 2,900 houses and apartments. It caused an estimated $5 billion damage.

Arson investigators Thursday swarmed over the site of Saturday's blaze. Fire Chief P. Lamont Ewell has said that the fire is "suspicious because we've ruled out all natural causes."

Three people who lived in the hillside neighborhood where the fire began were quoted as saying the fire may have been started by construction workers burning debris.

FBI agent David Williams, one of the three neighbors, said the owner of a home in the area was having a cottage house added to his property and that the fire was started in debris cleared from the site.

An arson investigator, Sgt. Ron Hanson, said workers building a cabin near where the fire broke out have been questioned, as has the man who hired them. He said all denied responsibility but will be questioned further.

Open burning is against the law in Oakland. Violators face a misdemeanor fine of $500 and a jail sentence of six months to one year.

Ford, Mazda warn clients of auto defect

DETROIT (NYT) — The Ford Motor Co. and Mazda Motor of America warned consumers on Thursday of a potential transmission defect on several pickup, minivan and utility vehicle models built at Ford's plant in Louisville, Ky. The defect could allow a vehicle to roll even if the shift lever is in the park position.

Ford said it had not figured out the exact nature of the defect and was advising affected drivers to use the parking brake when their trucks were not in use. Ford officials said they hoped to announce a recall before the end of the year, when the company would repair or replace defective parts.

The problem affects 8,796 1991 Mazda Navajo utility vehicles, and 780,000 Ford trucks, including the 1990 Ford Aerostar minivan and Ranger pickup, as well as the 1991 Aerostar and Explorer sport-utility vehicle. A Ford spokeswoman, Kathryn Blackwell, said the problem had caused 40 accidents, four of which resulted in minor injuries.

The National Highway Traffic Safety Administration said it had opened an investigation into the problem on Sept. 16 after it had received 13 reports of transmission problems resulting in rollaway accidents. With Ford's announcement that it planned a receall, the investigation is essentially closed, an agency spokeman said.

This is the first problem that has arisen with these 1990 and 1991 transmissions, which were made at a Ford factory in Bordeaux, France. They were modified for truck use, but were also installed in other Ford products, including some Mustang, Thunderbird and Mercury Cougar models.

Ford has received no reports of transmission problems in the cars, and is therefore issuing the safety notification only to truck owners. The 1992 trucks are not affected by the recall because significant changes were made to the transmission.

Turner's release may offer hope

The release earlier this week of Jesse J. Turner, who had been held hostage by a pro-Iranian group for five years, raises hopes that the captors will indeed free all remaining Western hostages. That will be a fabulous homecoming for many families.

A recent Associated Press news article indicated that there are now four Americans, two Germans, one Italian and one Briton held hostage.

Officials have indicated that Turner's release came as the result of an "intensive stage" of negotiations between United Nations Secretary General Javier Perez de Cuellar's special envoy, Giandomenico Picco, and a hostage negotiator identified as Abu Abdullah. Perez de Cuellar has been active in lobbying for release of the Western hostages and his efforts in that regard are certainly appreciated by Westerners who have been angered, befuddled, surprised and confused at various times by the actions of the captors during the past several years.

The effort to gain the release of the others must not cease until all are freed. But even at that time, questions are likely to remain about the hostage takings and the Middle Eastern mindset that somehow rationalizes the holding of innocent civilians as a justifiable practice when relations with Western nations become strained. Such a practice, however, shows the stark difference between Eastern and Western cultures.

Obviously there is still much work to be done before the nations of East and West can fully understand — and respect — the vast differences between the two. The recent hostage releases indicate that Perez de Cuellar may be able to show the way to proceed in such an endeavor.

For now, we must hope that the remaining Americans and other Westerners are released soon. They have been held captive far too long in a "war" that most Americans simply cannot understand.

UW donations aid Scouts' activities

As a proud member agency of the United Way of Midland, the Buffalo Trail Council, Boy Scouts of America, wishes to thank everybody who supports the United Way through their gifts and volunteer service. The financial support that the Scout Council receives from the United Way enables us to better serve our youth and adult volunteer membership as well as our Chartered Organization Partners.

As anybody might realize, it takes funds to operate two fully nationally accredited camps, two service centers, and a professional and support staff to serve our membership.

Scouting strives to instill in our young people the values that are essential to our system of free enterprise — self-reliance, integrity, courage and thriftiness. The values of Scouting are the values that built our nation and they are the ones that will keep it strong.

The funds we receive whether from the United Way or individual gifts helps the Scouts to provide many programs including drug abuse materials and training for all youth members and child abuse training for all adult volunteer members. It provides the opportunity for the Scouts to conduct an annual food good turn drive that provides about 40,000 pounds of food for the Permian Food Bank or its member agencies.

The Scouting program is still an important one and is growing in Midland and nationally. Your United Way dollars help the Scouts to continue to be an important youth program that develops good character, good citizenship and mental and physical fitness.

Freewill Foster Home helps shelter children

"He who helps a child helps humanity with an immediateness which no other help given to a human creature in any other stage of human life can possibly give again." — Phillips Brooks.

I respectfully call your attention to abuse, neglect and exploitation of children. It is not only a national problem, but a local problem as well.

Freewill Foster Home, Inc. is a foster home for abused, neglected and exploited children. When the Texas Department of Human Services, Child Protective Services have to remove children from their home and place them in foster care, Freewill Foster Home is a temporary home for those children until a remedy can be reached concerning their situation. Freewill Foster Home, Inc. is an agency of United Way of Midland. United Way provides essential services for this community. It is by your generous contributions that they are able to provide these services. Please give a generous contribution to the United Way campaign. Your greatest satisfaction will come in knowing that your contribution will help to sustain not only Freewill Foster Home, Inc., but your contribution will ensure that all the agencies under the United Way umbrella will continue to meet the growing needs of this community in their service area.

Freewill Foster Home, Inc. thanks God for United Way of Midland and their caring for all people no matter what their circumstances are.

Medical perks make stomaches turn

WASHINGTON — Millions of Americans go without health insurance and gamble with their lives in the process. But on Capitol Hill there is a physician on hand every day to prescribe drugs, patch up injuries and diagnose aches and pains of the 535 members of the Senate and the House. They even have an ambulance standing by to rush them to the hospital.

Anderson

You pay for the ambulance, the in-house medical staff and even the prescriptions. It is pure socialized medicine for the elite — the same people who considered it simple noblesse oblige to bounce their checks, skip out on their parking tickets and stiff the Capitol cafeteria.

The rest of the perks get the blood boiling, but the medical perks touch on a more serious issue. The cost of health care is at the top of the American agenda with skyrocketing hospital costs and budget-busting insurance premiums. Can your representatives in Congress know what that means when they're getting a free ride themselves?

Even if sheer empathy prompted the members of Congress to look past their own comfortable status to the problems of the little people, there is substantial pressure on them from monied interests to maintain the status quo in American medical care.

Reform proposals include a nationalized health care system similar to Canada's, state-financed health plans and a mandate that employers foot the bills. But insurance companies, drug makers and other medical industries are fighting those reforms. And they have substantial influence over Congress because of their record of generous campaign contributions.

The congressional medical plan showed its most ugly side last month when a Capitol Hill staffer died of a heart attack after waiting 18 minutes for a city ambulance to come to his aid. Sitting in a parking lot at the Capitol was the members' private ambulance. The Capitol medical staff can commandeer that ambulance for emergencies involving ordinary people, even tourists, but in this case they chose to wait. The official reason was that the city ambulance had better communication equipment.

Since members of Congress don't seize up from heart attacks or other ailments on a regular basis, their ambulance is usually used as a taxi to take them to Bethesda Naval Hospital for care that the Capitol physician can't give them.

Lawmakers are already starting to push for reforms to their system of perks. Call it damage control, because the public is finally realizing just how extensive those perks are. The House bank, the scene of more bouncing rubber than an NBA playoff game, will be closed by the end of the year. And as of this month, members can no longer charge their meals at the House restaurant. Both the House and the Senate have dropped their parking-ticket exemption.

A push is also underway to force Congress to abide by the same laws as the rest of the country. Rep. Charles Bennett, D-Fla., has introduced a bill that would, for the first time, make the operations of Congress subject to the 1964 Civil Rights Act and the Equal Employment Opportunity Act. A group of freshman House Republicans is pushing to make representatives subject to the Freedom of Information Act.

Sen. Charles Grassley, R-Iowa, is leading a similar crusade in the Senate. He questions how legislators can appreciate the impact of the laws they pass if they don't have to abide by those laws. Grassley's attempts in past years have failed to get exemptions eliminated, but sources told our associate Scott Sleek that some Senate leaders are now leaning his way.

Louisiana's politics sink in swamps

Why don't we just nuke Louisiana and get it over with? Our missile crews haven't got much to do these days anyway.

The progressive element has declared that the Bayou state, which has contributed to politics such moral geniuses as Huey and Earl Long, has now really ripped its britches.

Murchison

In last weekend's gubernatorial primary, voters spurned their establishment, Harvard-educated Republican governor, Buddy Roemer, who raised taxes after promising not to, and put Republican maverick David Duke into the gubernatorial runoff with former Democratic Gov. Edwin Edwards. As the news spread, progressive mothers sent the children to bed, while progressive fathers bolted the doors against marauding reactionaries. They'd have reached down for the old hunting rifle, as well, except that progressives favor gun control.

Louisiana's apostasy is nonetheless beyond belief. Edwards is a gambler and high roller. And Duke — he's the worrisome one. Progressives may put up with gamblers but not with former KKK imperial wizards; which Duke is; though he says he has reformed; which I couldn't prove one way or the other, but I'm a Texan and indisposed to lecture other states concerning their political processes. We have a liberal governor and legislature working hard to break the taxpayers' backs.

I digress. Back to the swamps.

It's a shame about Louisiana politics; still, when you get down to it, it's a shame about politics in general. I wouldn't put it past Louisianans to feel a kindred sense of disgust with the whole political process, which in latter years has given us a $1.4 trillion federal budget, check-bouncing privileges for congressmen, and the Clarence Thomas hearings.

Frankly, the people who rip David Duke apart would impress me more were they to call for Teddy Kennedy's resignation from the Senate. On moral grounds. Are ex-Klansmen, with all their faults, the worst we have to worry about in the '90s?

Down here at the grass roots, amid the grub worms and fertilizer pellets, things look rather different than they do from the political steeple tops. A recent New York Times/CBS News poll says 68 percent of us plain-vanilla Americans support 12-year term limits for congressmen and senators.

What is the matter actually with the political process? Is it too many Klansmen and too few progressives? Or is the matter more fundamental yet?

The latter, I think. What's wrong with the political process is that there's too much of it. It's taken over the country.

Let's be honest. Do we think that the one-third of Louisianans who voted for Duke expect him to bring back public cross burnings? Maybe they just want to send a message — and can't trust the U.S. Postal Service to deliver it.

Duke professes to be against politics as usual. He denounces (as does Clarence Thomas) affirmative action and calls for equal treatment of blacks and whites. He says he is for families and old-time morality.

I am not saying he is sincere, because I plain don't know. I am saying these are responsible positions.

Government runs our lives and impairs our ability to put bread on the table, get a job, educate our children, provide for our old age. Two of every five dollars the economy produces go to government. Government efforts to coerce better race relations have set race relations back a generation. Crime is up, education down.

The legitimate task of modern politics isn't to make the system run smoothly, least of all to make it cost more. The task is to reduce government and government interference at all levels; to trim bureaucracies, widen the scope for individual initiative, and, where possible, reawaken respect for the moral norms that alone make democratic governance possible.

CHARLEY REESE

Congressional capers prune public trust

To say that the U.S. Senate has dishonored itself in the handling of the Clarence Thomas nomination is to say that water is wet and fire is hot.

Whether or not the Senate had confirmed Judge Thomas was of little interest to me compared to the destruction of the process that took place.

Reese

The Senate, because of the venality, the cowardice, the lack of honor and principles of so many senators, has allowed its advise and consent role to be turned into a burlesque of a partisan political campaign — driven by special interest groups outside the Senate.

We might as well as amend the Constitution and make the Supreme Court an elective office. Certainly as a result of the Senate's disgraceful behavior of late, any president will find it increasingly difficult to persuade people of substance to subject themselves to this form of McCarthyism. Furthermore, it now appears that senators want a nominee to outline in advance how he will rule on their pet cases. If that's to be the case, the judges might as well lay out a platform and campaign for office and leave it up to the voters to determine the outcome of cases.

That way, of course, destroys the concept of an independent judiciary. It destroys the concept of a rule of law. Destruction of constitutional government seems to be what most politicians and special interest groups want. They want what they want at the moment and to hell with rules, justice, the law, even any sense of decency and fair play. They want to substitute mobocracy for democracy.

In all my life I have never seen government at all levels so consistently contemptible, so filled with mediocrity warped by arrogance and a near-psychotic disconnection from reality.

This is a dangerous situation, and I kid you not. A functioning society must have a basic level of trust in its institutions and officials. It must have a consensus that approves of its basic laws and traditions. This trust and this consensus cannot be compelled by force or maintained by lies, patronage and cheap public relations stunts and slogans.

When this trust is destroyed and this consensus broken, then political extremism and even revolution are bred. What has preserved this country in the past was not so much those who scored political victories as those who lost.

By that I mean that as long as people have a commitment to play by the rules, even if it means losing, then you can have political peace. When winning a temporary political victory comes to mean more than living by the rules, then you go the route of the banana republic where what counts is force, where any end justifies any means.

That's the destination these vicious special interest groups and cowardly, unprincipled politicians are marching toward. If it continues unchecked the first result will be semi-anarchy followed by some form of dictatorship or even another civil war.

If that strikes you as hyperbole or just fantasy, then I suggest you start to look around and communicate with real people in the real world. You can walk down the street of most any American city and sense the latent anger and frustration that is festering and swelling, like lava and gas in a once dormant volcano.

Nothing, and I mean nothing, is more important now than to restore people's confidence in their government and in their public officials. Any politician who doesn't understand that should be dumped immediately. None of the other problems we face, and they are many and real, can be solved until confidence is restored.

The current spectacle in Washington of character assassination, check-kiting, ticket-fixing, self-indulgence, lying, and flaunting common decency and duty is cutting away at public trust like a river cuts a clay bank.

Police shoot man carrying toy Uzi

ALBUQUERQUE, New Mexico (AP) — A man shot to death by an Albuquerque policeman pointed a toy submachine gun at the officer and ordered him to "freeze," before the officer pulled his gun, Police Chief Bob Stover said Thursday.

Stover said Kevin Dale Odom, 34, was shot once when he encountered the officer after fleeing his apartment through the bathroom window.

The shooting occurred Wednesday evening as officers tried to serve Odom with a felony arrest warrant for credit card fraud and grand larceny from Lubbock.

Odom was carrying a black, plastic replica of an Uzi submachine gun capable of firing plastic bullets that probably would leave a welt on skin, said Capt. Cliff Jenkins. The replica was not loaded.

"Basically it's a toy gun," Stover said at a news conference.

Odom was shot by officer Stephen DeVoti at the back of the apartment complex while three other officers looking for him questioned a woman who answered the apartment door, Stover said.

DeVoti, a bicycle patrol officer, was on his way to work in a patrol car when he responded to a call to help the officers serve the warrant.

DeVoti was stationed at the back of the apartment complex when Odom ran around a corner and confronted him, Stover said. He pointed what DeVoti described as an Uzi automatic weapon at him and ordered him to "freeze," the chief said.

"He didn't have time to say anything," Stover said of DeVoti.

He said DeVoti, who fell to the ground and rolled toward a nearby car, pulled his .45-caliber semiautomatic pistol while he was rolling and fired one round, striking Odom.

Stover declined to say where Odom was shot.

He was taken to University Hospital, where he was pronounced dead of gunshot wounds to the chest at about 7:15 p.m., a hospital spokeswoman said.

"At the time the officer fired, he was quite sure it was an Uzi," Stover said.

The three officers at the front of the apartment were questioning Victoria Sanchez, the woman who answered the door, when they head the shot, Stover said.

Sanchez told officers she did not know Odom and that there was no one by that name staying at the apartment, Stover said.

When the officers showed her a picture of Odom, she told them she knew him, but that he did not live at the apartment and she had not seen him, Stover said. She refused to allow the officers to search for Odom.

Gun buyback program hits bullseye

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Eager gun sellers lined up at a downtown police station this week to take advantage of the city's offer to pay $50 for each firearm turned in.

The program was launched Wednesday, and nearly all the $9,500 available for it was used up.

"This was a great response, so great we ran out of money," Police Commissioner Pius Lee said Thursday. Lee said the mayor's office will free up $9,500 from the police department's narcotics fund so that the buybacks could resume Monday.

San Francisco is one of three cities that conducted successful gun buybacks since the summer.

Among the 170 weapons sold back here with no questions asked were a .357-caliber Magnum and World War II revolvers, but the response did little to silence critics who say the offer only dupes taxpayers into buying junk guns.

The brisk first-day business included pistol-toting high school students and one man with a 34-gun collection, said police Capt. Tony Ribera. Some were motivated by the cash offer but in most cases "it's just a good citizen type of thing," he said.

At least one gun was valued at $600 while others were virtually worthless, Ribera said. All guns will be traced for involvement with crimes before being melted into scrap metal.

"If you're someone who's shot by one of these, the value of the gun is irrelevant," Ribera said.

Supervisor Willie Kennedy, who proposed the program, said the brisk buyback would mean fewer violent crimes and accidental shootings. She said up to $50,000 should be funneled into the program until demand is depleted.

Congress OKs a temporary spending plan

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congress approved legislation Thursday keeping the government in business through Nov. 14, a bill made necessary by the inability by Congress and President Bush to finish their fiscal chores on time.

The House approved the legislation on a 288-126 vote, and the Senate sent the bill to the White House on a voice vote a short while later. Bush was expected to sign the bill.

Only three of the 13 spending bills needed annually to finance government agencies have been signed into law for fiscal 1992. The new fiscal year started on Oct. 1.

The enacted bills cover Congress, federal contributions to the District of Columbia, and federal energy and water programs.

The bill will allow most other federal programs to continue functioning through Nov. 14. By that time, it is hoped that most of the needed spending bills will be completed.

The legislation lets agencies function at 1991 spending, the amount in the House-passed bill or the amount in the Senate-approved bill, whichever is lowest.

Administration retreats on buying Stealth bombers, officials say

WASHINGTON (NYT) — Bowing to budget constraints and a decline in the Soviet threat, the Bush administration is retreating from its goal of buying 75 Stealth bombers, Pentagon and congressional officials say.

And even the administration's new aim, the purchase of perhaps half that many planes, may be in jeopardy, the officials say.

The administration's unpublicized shift in position, which a few leading lawmakers say they have detected, could add momentum to efforts in Congress to cancel the $65 billion program entirely.

Those efforts have picked up speed since the abortive Soviet coup in August and the politically damaging disclosure last month of flaws in the radar-evading ability of the Stealth, or B-2.

And they mean that the administration's revised goal of buying about 35 B-2s may be optimistic.

Congress has so far ordered 15 of the planes, and the House of Representatives wants to stop there. The Senate supports the administration's plan to continue building planes, at $865 million each, including the immediate goal of four planes in the fiscal year that began Oct. 1.

A crack in the dam of administration support for the B-2, three of which have already been built, could doom the program.

House and Senate negotiators who have been trying to shape the Defense Department's $291 billion budget for the current fiscal year remain deadlocked on the B-2 issue.

What the negotiators will decide is still very much in doubt. Last year they finessed the issue by authorizing money for the B-2 program but not ordering any new planes, and both sides claimed victory. The same could happen this year, if lawmakers fail to agree on a production cap.

President Bush, Defense Secretary Dick Cheney and Gen. Colin L. Powell, the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, still publicly endorse the Defense Department's request for 75 B-2s, the last of which would be delivered by Northrop Corp., the plane's builder, by the year 2000.

Tom Hoctor, with the New York City Department of Highways, displays some of his pothole art Thursday at his union headquarters. He scours the city looking for new potholes.

Man sees potholes in new light

NEW YORK (AP) — Most people see potholes and think front end damage. But Tom Hoctor has a different perspective: He sees a tossed salad. Or a rubber duckie. Or a cup on a golfing green.

And then he photographs them.

His car loaded with "boxes of toys" and his mind filled with preconceived "potshots," Hoctor routinely scours the city's pocked streets in search of the perfect pothole.

When he finds it — and he always does — out come the toys, red traffic cones (to avoid getting hit) and his camera. The result is some funny photographs touting useless and unusual things to do with a pothole.

Hoctor, 44, of the Queens borough is a supervisor for the city's Department of Highways and an amateur lensman, although he thinks of himself as a "photographer who dabbles in highway repair." He began his unusual hobby two years ago.

"I thought about someone writing a letter to Dear Heloise: 'I've got a pothole in my driveway, what can I do with it?' ... The first thing that came to me was well, why don't you toss a salad in it?"

And so a crater down the street from the Rockefeller Center skating rink became a tossed salad, complete with lettuce, tomatoes, mushrooms, salt and pepper mills and a glass cruet.

A pit near Columbus Circle was transformed into a nest with three eggs; a fissure near Kennedy Airport became a private pond for a dime store rubber duck; and a hole in Elmhurst, Queens, became a golfer's hole in one.

Airport water tower's paint job hits snag

■ City hires new contractor to paint airport tower with CAF logo.

By Debbie Lincecum
Staff Writer

A contractual disagreement nearly drowned a city plan to celebrate the Confederate Air Force's grand opening with a painted water tower, but officials say the project now has its head above water.

Ken Jones, deputy director of utilities, said the contractor chosen to paint the airport water tower with the CAF logo recently declined the job after a two-week dispute with the bonding company.

Contractors normally must secure a performance bond — insurance guaranteeing the completion — and a payment bond, guaranteeing to pay sub-contractors. The bonding company for NG Painting of Kerrville, however, refused to accept a city contract for both, and during the ensuing negotiations, the contractor decided it wasn't worth waiting.

"It's unfortunate," Jones said. "Without the (contract), we could have paid him all at the end, but he thought he might get 90 percent finished and run out of money. Then if it took until spring to finish, he didn't want to wait that long to get his money."

The city could not have begun the process early because the water tower was needed in service. So, the council this week opted to take the second-lowest bid, from Thomas Construction Co. of Chicago, which specializes in painting bridges and water towers.

That means the price increased from NG's $87,000 estimate to Thomas' $136,000. However, the city of Odessa has pledged $42,000 toward the effort, cutting Midland's cost to $94,000.

Unfortunately, the change in contractors will delay the tower's completion until the spring. Leaders had hoped to give the tower a new face by the CAF grand opening Dec. 7, but Thomas doesn't expect to even begin the work until Dec. 1.

Jones said the new company will not change the proposed method for painting the tower, which is covered in peeling lead-based paint. They will cover the present coat with a protective layer and repaint it without removing much of the hazardous material.

Jones said newer paints, which are made without lead and other volatile materials, last about half the time estimated for the lead-based variety.

"So we'll probably have to get it painted again in 10 years. I thought there would be better technology by then to take the lead off and didn't want to get into it now," Jones said. "I think covering it is the best way."

"Our only other choice would have been to wait until fall," he said. "We could re-bid and see what we came up with. But chances are they'd be as much or more as the ones we have now."

Sue Cox of Texans Who Care brought her anti-lottery message to the Permian Basin Thursday.

Anti-lottery committee takes stand

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff Writer

The odds of being murdered on the way to a convenience store to buy a lottery ticket are greater than the chance of winning the jackpot, according to the anti-lottery group Texans Who Care.

In addition, a lottery would create more gamblers, while only saving taxpayers a few cents a day off their tax bills, they argue.

"We believe the more information people have on the lottery, the more likely it is they will go to the polls and vote against Proposition 11," said Sue Cox, in prepared comments at a news conference in Midland on Thursday.

Ms. Cox is campaign manager for Texans Who Care, a Dallas-based political action committee created to oppose gambling issues.

The main arguments of the group are that a lottery would: be an inappropriate role of government, be an inadequate and inefficient source of revenue, create a new generation of gamblers including some compulsive ones, and be a regressive tax that falls unfairly on the poor, Ms. Cox said.

Texans Who Care contends that the government should not encourage citizens to engage in destructive behavior by developing a lifelong gambling habit.

Proponents maintain that a lottery doesn't encourage the complusive gambler who seeks instant gratification and bets on the presumption of having an edge, which the lottery doesn't provide.

Chuck McDonald, a spokesman for lottery proponent Gov. Ann Richards addressed what supporters feel the lottery does foster. "The lottery encourages citizens to help fund government in economic development, public safety, jobs, and health and human resources," he said during a telephone interview.

Furthering their stand, Texans Who Care holds that a lottery would be an inadequate funding source. The projected revenue of $462 million in the first year amounts to less than 2

United Way fund-raising climbs halfway to goal

By Darren J. Waggoner
Staff Writer

United Way has reached more than half of the '91 Fall Campaign goal of $2.753 million, agency volunteers revealed Thursday at a mid-day luncheon at Centennial Plaza.

"We have two weeks left and I'm confident we will reach that goal," said campaign chairman, K. Michael Conaway.

The total of $1.499 million represents 54.5 percent of the goal.

The theme for the campaign is "Allied for Victory — the United Way." The agency started the battle against hunger, homelessness, abuse, illiteracy and the risks facing youth on Sept. 25.

Bill Rodriquez, a member of the United Way Board of Directors, told a story about how the Permian Basin Child Abuse Prevention program had helped his family. That program is one of several that is partially funded by the United Way.

"I would like to commend the volunteers of that agency. They come into homes and put up with a lot of problems that they wouldn't have to deal with," said Rodriquez. "That takes a very special person."

Two members of the gospel group The Cornerstone, M.C. Wesley and Irene Munoz, provided the musical entertainment and food was provided by Terry's Coffee Shop.

Funds raised thus far, by specific divisions include: Special Gifts, $465,564; Residential, $19,356; Retail, $36,169; Real Estate/Finance, $90,075; Business/Entertainment, $75,874; UTC, $100,620; Independent Oil, $38,255; Major Oil, $404,983; Petroleum Industry, $87,577; Education, $2,266; Government/Services, $80,747; Professional, $56,699 and CC Unit, $40,972.

On Nov. 7, the campaign finale will be held at 6:30 p.m. at Midland Center. For reservations, call 682-4358.

The 17 Midland agencies served by the United Way are: American Red Cross, Big Brothers-Big Sisters, Boy Scouts of America, Boys and Girls Club of Midland, Casa de Amigos, Community and Senior Services Inc., Family Services of Midland and Permian Basin Child Abuse Prevention Program, Freewill Foster Home, Midland Need to Read Inc., Midland-Lee Youth Centers Inc., Midland Rape Crisis Center, Palmer Drug Abuse Program, Permian Basin Center for Battered Women and their Children, Permian Basin Girl Scout Council, Petro-Plains Camp Fire Inc., The Salvation Army and select YMCA programs.

Officials tour new MHMR home

Brian Adamcik/Reporter-Telegram

Officials touring Gateway House on Thursday took a break in the home's recreation room. They are, seated, Pattilou Dawkins, vice chairman of the board for Texas Mental Health and Mental Retardation, left, and clinical specialist Lois West; and standing left to right, Permian Basin Community Centers MHMR board member Anne Parrott, local MHMR executive director Clyde McLean, program director John Standifer and state board member Ed Weyman of Midland.

■ Gateway Home is equipped with computer scanners to monitor residents.

By Myra Lee Salcedo
Staff Writer

The computer technology that allows store clerks to scan product prices will free caretakers to give constant attention to retarded children with behavior problems.

"Monitoring these children is extremely documentation intensive," said John Standifer, program director of residential services of Permian Basin Mental Health and Mental Retardation (MHMR).

With the aid of the scanners, workers in MHMR's newly completed Gateway Home can monitor children without leaving their sides.

Staff workers in the home — who will care for retarded or mentally ill children — can carry a small scanner around with them.

With bar codes on the kitchen walls, a staff worker could scan the appropriate code and punch in specifics concerning a particular activity.

"For example, at a meal, a staff member can monitor how much food a child ate, and report (by typing in) 75 percent," said Pattilou Dawkins, vice chairman of the state MHMR board.

Ms. Dawkins was in Midland Thursday to tour the three-bedroom brick Gateway Home. The recently remodeled house on Golf Course Road is decorated in muted shades of gray, slate-blue and rose.

"These children are hyperactive enough. They don't need bright colors," said Lois West, psychological associate and clinical specialist with Permian Basin MHMR.

While the immense 4,000-square-foot house appears to be typical and contemporary, every item in it was modified for safety.

The house is equipped with durable furniture, non-slip floors and wheelchair-accessible bathrooms. The drapes, if ripped from the rod, may be easily snapped back into place. Lamps are bolted into place, rooms are spacious and uncluttered, and windows can be knocked out of place without any glass breaking.

Standifer said the modifications are necessary to provide a safe environment for children who may be "self-injurious, volatile or agressive."

He said the purpose of Gateway Home is to teach children living skills — in a period of six months to two and a half years — in order to return them to their home environment.

The program director said the home will serve children with a "dual diagnosis" — a diagnosis more than mental retardation or mental illness.

"They could also have attention deficit disorders, be hyperactive or have any other social behavior problem," he said.

LHS band wins firsts in recent contests

Staff Report

The Lee High School Band marched off with awards in two recent competitions.

The LHS Band won the Outstanding Band Award at the West Texas State University Marching Festival in Canyon. They placed first out of 12 competing bands.

The band's color guard and percussion section also placed first and were named outstanding sections of the competition.

The band placed first in the 5A competition at the Texas Tech University Marching Festival and was named outstanding band out of the 47 bands competing.

Other honors awarded to LHS at the Tech festival were: outstanding color guard, outstanding drum line, outstanding twirler and outstanding drum majors.

LHS students won nine trophies for the nine events they entered.

The LHS Band will compete in the United Interscholastic League marching contest 7 p.m. Saturday at Ratliff Stadium in Odessa. The 5A bands will not compete at the state level this year.

Students will vie for top honors in Saturday's UIL marching competition as follows:

Andrews Middle School will compete in the Class CC marching competition at 9:45 a.m. Saturday.

Group to sponsor bone marrow drive

Staff Report

About 70 percent of children with deadly blood diseases, who need a bone marrow transplant to live, will not find a suitable match within their families. For minorities, the chance of finding a donor is increasingly slim, authorities say.

"Their chance goes from about 1 in 20,000 to 1 in 1 million," said Lori Carathers, a member of Candlelighters, a group for parents of children with cancer. A donor of the same race is usually the best possibility for a match, according to group information.

The group will sponsor a bone marrow drive for minorities Sunday in Midland.

The test to determine type, normally $125, will be given free from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. at Holy Trinity Episcopal Church, 1410 Ohio.

Those tested must give about two tablespoons of blood and consent to be entered on a nationwide registry. They must be between 18 and 55 years of age and in good health.

"Out of 370,000 listed on the registry, only 2.9 percent are Hispanic, 3.3 percent African-American," Carathers said. "We need so many more."

Blood drive to be held at Kmart

Staff Report

The Kmart Good News Committee and the Permian Basin Blood Center will conduct a blood drive today and Saturday from 11 a.m. to 7 p.m. at the Midland Kmart.

The demand for blood has been increasing over the past 10 years for many reasons, including increases in the number of patients requiring blood transfusions and a continuing need among older Americans.

However, the supply of blood isn't increasing fast enough to keep up with these growing demands.

While 50 percent of Americans claim to have donated blood at some point in their lives, only 4 percent to 7 percent donate each year, placing the bulk of the burden on a small group.

Donors must weigh at least 110 pounds, be at least 17 years old, healthy and should not have given blood for the past eight weeks.

A private, detailed health screening will be given before it is determined if the applicant is eligible to donate.

You cannot get AIDS from donating blood. All equipment used during the procedure is sterile, used only once, and disposed of afterwards. No equipment is reused.

The donation process takes about 30 minutes.

Teller to give Tech lecture

Staff Report

Edward Teller, an internationally known physicist, will speak at 3 p.m. Nov.1 in Lecture Hall 100 of the biology building at Texas Tech University in Lubbock.

The Hungarian-born Teller, 83, was a key scientist in the development of the atomic bomb and is considered the father of the hydrogen, or thermonuclear, bomb.

He is currently a senior research fellow of Stanford University's Hoover Institution and director emeritus of the Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory.

Teller will speak on "The Changes of Physics in the 20th Century." He co-authored "Conversations on the Dark Side of Physics" and has published more than 100 technical articles and books.

He also is known for his contributions to quantum mechanics and molecular and nuclear physics. Teller received the Enrico Fermi Medal, Albert Einstein Award, Joseph Priestly Award and the National Medal of Science.

A question-and-answer session will follow his speech.

The lecture is free of charge and open to the public.

MHMR: Group begins computer pilot project

(From 1B)

Standifer said logging behavior on scanners and computers will eliminate thick charts and burgeoning paperwork. "We will be able to see what's happening by looking at all the variables on the computer screen much quicker than by laying paperwork out and trying to compare things.

"We can analyze what's happening and say: 'Maybe if we try this 20 minutes before mealtime, we will get this certain behavior.' "

Gateway Home was funded by a $154,240 grant from special projects of Texas Department of MHMR. Grant monies were used to purchase and modify the house in order to make it conducive to intense program development.

"The changes were not designed to be cost effective," said Ms. West, who acted as consultant on the project. "The program is designed to be quality-effective and innovative for a model program."

Ms. Dawkins, vice chairman of the state board of MHMR, said the intervention program is the first of its kind in Texas. "It is also unique in the United States because of the computer equipment being used," she said.

"This will be the first project to use a scanning system at a residential setting for a variety of data collection," Ms. West said.

The computer also will provide instant billing services.

"But it doesn't matter if you have all the technology in the world, if you don't serve the child," Ms. West said. She said all the technology will be used to help children change their behavior.

"It's not that we have to change kids — we have to change how we deal with them," she said.

Standifer said the intervention program was designed to prevent certain children from being institutionalized. He said the more a child's behavior improves, the less structure the child will have.

"If we get them young enough, we can help them change their behavior before it is established," the program director said. "When you have someone who is 6-foot-1 and 200 pounds, it is difficult to cope with them. This is really a tragedy because it's not their fault. We just didn't get to them quick enough."

Ms. West said the national pilot project is designed for a maximum of three children. She said the house is expected to be staffed and ready for its first clients Jan. 1.

LOCAL/AREA REPORTS

Guilty plea

Staff Reports

John Houston Reed III pleaded guilty Thursday in U.S. District Court to a one-count indictment charging him with attempting to extort $1 million from Thriftway Grocery Stores of Odessa by threatening to put contaminated products on the shelves, federal officials said.

Reed was arrested Oct. 7 as a result of a 10-week investigation conducted by the Odessa Police Department and the Midland office of the FBI.

Sentencing for Reed is set for Nov. 26. The charge carries a maximum $10,000 fine or 20 years' imprisonment or both.

Drug charge

An 18-year-old Midland man was charged with possession of crack cocaine Wednesday night at a south Midland residence, police reports said.

Anthony Washington Blake was taken into custody at 200 S. Lee St. at 8:07 p.m.

Blake was released from the Midland County jail on Thursday after posting a $15,000 bond, jail officials said.

LOTTERY: Opponents contend insufficient revenue to be raised percent of total state revenues, opponents maintain.

"I don't see any Texans sneezing at nearly a half billion dollars," McDonald said. That amount represents what the state will net, not gross, he said. And just for the first year, he added.

Lyda Creus, spokesperson for Lone Star Lottery Committee, an Austin group that represents vendors, commented on the predicted revenue.

"It is not the cure-all to the budget problem, but it's a help and a help people want" by a 2-to-1 margin according to polls, Ms. Creus said.

Opponents say money raised will amount to only a few pennies a day in savings to taxpayers. Proponents say all the money raised is that much less citizens will have to pay in taxes.

Proponents also ask what other resources are available besides a lottery?

"We do not take a stand on which form of taxation is the best," Ms. Cox said on behalf of Texans Who Care.

In addition to the dispute whether the lottery revenue should be viewed as 2 percent of total state revenues or a half-billion dollars, there is also some difference of opinion on whether the lottery is essentially a tax.

Texans Who Care contend that the lottery would be a regressive tax — one which takes a larger share of low-income citizens' incomes than from their higher-income counterparts.

"It's misleading to call it a tax because it is not a tax in any form. A tax is mandatory and (playing) a lottery is not," McDonald said.

A lottery isn't directed only at the poor, Ms. Creus said.

"Statistics don't support that theory. It's pretty even across all income levels with perhaps the middle class playing a little more," she said.

"Play it if you want, and don't play it if you don't want," Ms. Creus said.

Sharing the view of not playing by voting against a lottery were members of the local religious community who rallied behind Ms. Cox at the news conference.

"The one thing I see as really destructive ... is the pattern of addiction that develops to wanting to win the big one," said Alan Corry, youth and singles minister with the Crescent Park Baptist Church in Odessa.

Ron Colwell, pastor of Greenwood United Methodist Church, said a lottery "would have a negative effect on the quality of life" and "threatens traditional family values."

The lottery will affect all Texans adversely, including those who don't play the game, Ms. Cox said.

Those who don't play will be targeted as potential new players by the advertisers, she said.

"The sights and sounds of the lottery will be with them wherever they go," said Ms. Cox, who illustrated her point with a photograph of six lottery signs plastered on the door of a Louisiana store.

Oil spill seminar set

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas General Land Office will host a three-day symposium next week focusing on oil spills in the Gulf of Mexico. Land Commissioner Garry Mauro said Thursday that the meeting would be the first of its kind dealing with Gulf spills. More than 1,000 participants are expected, he said. The meeting will include a trade show.

BONE: Donors sought for minorities

(From 1B)

Potential donors are encouraged to call 685-4100 for an appointment time or for more information, and Spanish-speakers can call 687-4818 after 6:30 p.m.

A similar drive will take place Saturday in Odessa at Sixth and Jackson Street Church of Christ. It will last from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Potential donors may call 335-0253.

More information about the donation procedure will be available at the drive.

Carathers said funding for the minority donor drive was provided by excess Department of Defense money left from Operation Desert Storm allocations.

Japan's reluctance on collider funding is shrewd, backers say

The State

WASHINGTON (AP) — Japan's apparent reluctance to fund the super collider is just the opening gambit of a shrewd bargainer, supporters of the giant atom smasher say.

Opponents of the $8.25 billion superconducting super collider contend it will be easier for Congress to kill the Texas project if Japan decides to forego funding.

A Japanese Cabinet member said last week, while U.S. officials were in Tokyo seeking SSC funding, that her government would find it difficult to do so. Japan also faces budgetary constraints, said Akiko Santo, director general of the Science and Technology Agency.

But Sen. Phil Gramm said Wednesday that the Japanese cannot be counted out.

"I think that any time you're asking people to put up money that they're going to first begin by telling you that money is hard to come by. Everybody except the United States government understands that," the Texas Republican said.

The Department of Energy promised Congress it would raise $1.7 billion in foreign contributions for the project. So far, the only pledge has been $50 million from India.

But Deputy Energy Secretary W. Henson Moore, who traveled last week to Japan, said Wednesday that other pledges may materialize by the end of the year.

And, he said, Congress has not pressured DOE over the lack of foreign commitment.

"We're certainly under no pressure as I speak now ... that tells us that something's going awry in the Congress," Moore said. "Quite the contrary."

And, he added, "I want to say right now that there aren't countries around the world standing in line to give us money for this project."

"We're optimistic it's going to happen. It's not going to be easy and we never said it was."

The Soviet Union, Canada and South Korea are strong candidates, he said. European countries are taking more of a wait-and-see attitude and will not commit funding until the project is just about completed, he said.

SSC foes last week cheered news that Japan may withhold funding, saying it would give them more leverage against the project, which they say is siphoning money from other science programs.

But, Gramm said, "If I were one of those that was hoping to kill the SSC ... I wouldn't be popping the champagne yet."

The House last year capped collider spending at $5.5 billion. With Texas' $1 billion contribution, that still would leave about $1.7 billion to be raised by foreign sources.

The Senate, where support for the collider is stronger, passed no such limit and said the SSC's future should not be contingent upon foreign participation.

"The truth is, Congress is very much of two minds about foreign participation," Gramm said. "Congress wants foreigners to send their money but they don't want foreigners to play an active role in the project."

But Rep. John Bryant, D-Dallas, a collider supporter, said he questions the benefits of foreign participation.

"No one should share in the fruit of research unless they share in the cost of building and operating in a significant way," he said. "If this thing is going to produce world-changing scientific discoveries, our nation ... ought to benefit from this it. We ought not give those benefits to countries that just pay a pittance toward the project's overall cost."

FAMILY MATTERS

Tell-it-all neighbor breaks friend's confidence

By Jim May, Ph.D.

DEAR FAMILY: A while back, I shared a very personal, painful experience with my very good friend and neighbor. A few days later, another neighbor came to my house to repeat to me word-by-word what I had told my good friend and to ask, "Don't you know your friend's husband is the neighborhood gossip?" She also offered that this man had been fired from his job because he was such a gossip and because he blatantly bragged at work how he abused his insurance policies. This man was laid off about two years ago. He once told, in a group conversation, how to go about getting new carpet and new roofing from insurance companies.

May

I feel devastated in so many directions. I find myself dodging all my neighbors, especially this man. I feel like my good friend has died. My heart actually flutters when I think about not truly having a close friendship in which I could confide in this neighbor. I also am bothered with the idea of an informative neighbor. How or when can I stop kicking myself becaue I should have known this would happen? Please help me to help myself. TOO ASHAMED

DEAR ASHAMED: You seem to have made the all-too-common mistake of sharing yourself with someone who was not worthy of your trust. Your "friend" proved not to be trustworthy.

Mistakes are for learning, not for shaming or "should haves," and in this situation, hopefully you learned not to share personal matters with this friend. She now belongs outside the boundary of "personal sharing." You can make the choice as to when (if ever) to change the boundary with her again.

One more available option is confronting her about breaking your confidence. If you do decide to confront her, be prepared to lose her as even a casual friend. A potential positive in confronting her is that she would at least know why your friendship has changed.

Learning who we can trust is a difficult process. Please learn from this experience, but don't stop trying to find a true friend worthy of your trust. Hold your head up high; you have done nothing wrong.

DEAR FAMILY: I have two friends in my bridge club who I like very much, but I need to know something. When you get either of them at your table, they often talk about "my kid says." I thought that they meant one of their children, but I asked another of my friends and she said they were talking about themselves. She said that it was something about them going to some kind of group meeting. She didn't know much beyond that, but she said she just acted like she knew what they meant and went along with them.

I would like to know if you know what they are talking about. It is very confusing for me. CONFUSED

DEAR CONFUSED: Your friends are referring to their "Inner Child." The concept of a "child within the adult' is expressed so beautifully by Dr. C.G. Jung as follows: "In every adult there lurks a child — an eternal child, something that is always becoming, is never completed, and calls for unceasing care, attention, and education. That is the part of the human personality which wants to develop and become whole." This concept is often expressed and becomes a working principle for adults involved in recovery programs, such as Adult Chidren of Alcoholics.

Your friends must feel very good about the bridge group, since they feel safe enough to share a part of their "child" with the group. Ask one of them about "their kid" the next time the opportunity presents itself. Consider reading Dr. Charles Whitfield's book, "Healing the Child Within," for further information. You are a part of a beautiful process — allowing that "child part" of us that was not permitted to grow to come forward in a safe environment and play.

DEAR CONFIDENTIAL: Please go to your physician before you have sex with your husband. Your symptoms are common to several sexually transmitted diseases. Simply because the symptoms disappear for a day or two does not mean that the potential disease has gone away. You made a mistake, but do not compound the mistake by infecting an innocent party. Please consider talking to your clergy and/or a professional counselor. This is a painful experience to try and process by yourself.

DEAR ABBY

Snake owner makes case for her pets' charms

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: After reading your article about people who are afraid of pets, I had to write. I have dogs, cats and also snakes — all boa constrictors. While I was growing up, my brothers would come in from working the fields and get a big kick out of throwing snakes on me. I made up my mind I wasn't going to be afraid, so I studied up on snakes and learned everything I could about them — that's how I started keeping snakes as pets. Now I'm invited to bring my snakes to schools and talk to children so they can decide for themselves whether snakes are good or bad.

Van Buren

Snakes make loving pets. I took my 6½-foot boa constrictor everywhere with me until she got so big I could no longer sneak her into my blouse. Boa constrictors are non-poisonous. They're intelligent, too. When I ask for a kiss, she kisses me on the corner of my mouth.

Once, when she was on the couch with me, she heard someone coming into the house through the sliding glass door — so she went right after him! (Afterward, the police refused to come in to make the report.) Dogs intimidate people by growling and showing their teeth, but most folks are terrified at the sight of a snake!

Snakes are much easier to care for than a dog or cat. They eat only once every eight or 10 days, and they're not slimy like most people think — they're smooth and silky.

Before closing, I want to commend you for telling the reader who was terrified to discover a snake coiled up in the corner of her attic, "Why kill it? People don't realize that snakes eat mice and rats, and they're good for the environment." — KAREN SMALL

DEAR KAREN: Snakes have gotten a bad rap ever since one made its debut in the Garden of Eden.

A few more reasons why snakes make good pets: They're quiet, you never have to walk them — and you'll never have to worry about anybody stealing them.

DEAR ABBY: "Not Perfect," who says non-smokers should assess their own bad habits before looking down at smokers, seems to think that being an irritant to others is an inevitable part of life. Baloney! The smell of cigarette smoke is repulsive, which is why, for 17 years, I carefully abstained around non-smokers.

Now that I am an ex-smoker, I still have plenty of bad habits, but I am grown up enough to shield other people from them. A partial list: I do not snap my gum, hum overtures or make noxious nasal noises in public. When my windows are open, I keep my stereo down. It is not unreasonable for me to expect such consideration in return, or to be outraged when I don't get it.

No smoker who exercises good manners should be treated like a leper. However, people who light up around strangers, as someone recently did in front of me in the post office, deserve to be treated like the insensitive clods they truly are. — IMPERFECT BUT POLITE, STATE COLLEGE, PA.

DEAR IMPERFECT: You are right — it is simply a matter of "good manners," which calls to mind this time-honored quotation by Jonathan Swift (1667-1745), the witty English author of "Gulliver's Travels": "Good manners is the art of making those people easy with whom we converse. Whoever makes the fewest people uneasy, is the best bred in the company."

"How to Be Popular" is an excellent guide to becoming a better conversationalist and a more attractive person. To order, send a long, business-size, self-addressed envelope, plus check or money order for $3.95 ($4.50 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, Popularity Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054. (Postage is included.)

Some forgetfulness normal, some not

By Dr. Herman Weinreb
Associated Press

When older adults start forgetting things, they often fear the worst — Alzheimer's disease or "senility." But a minor increase in forgetfulness is a natural part of aging for most people.

It is very common for people as they enter their 60s to develop a syndrome known as age-related cognitive decline.

In addition to slower speed of recall, there is a decrease in retention of non-critical information. This episodic memory, the ability to remember recent events such as what you had for lunch yesterday, or the name of a movie you saw last week, declines slightly with age naturally.

As with other organs in the body, the brain becomes less efficient with age. There may be a gradual loss of nerve cells in parts of the brain, so information is processed a bit more slowly.

Just as one's motor functions, such as walking and reflexes, become slower, so do one's mental processes. But only slightly.

Whether forgetfulness is a serious symptom or not is largely a matter of degree.

Forgetting the name of someone you see infrequently is normal. Forgetting the name of a loved one is serious. Forgetting where you left your keys is normal. Forgetting how to get home is serious.

Severe short-term memory loss, an inability to think clearly or express oneself, difficulty in remembering basic information such as your address or the letters of the alphabet, and personality changes are all warning signs of possible organic or psychiatric disorders that may be causing memory impairment.

If any of these symptoms are present, a professional evaluation is warranted in order to rule out a brain disease such as Alzheimer's. In some instances, memory loss problems can be caused by a variety of other factors — some reversible — including medications, depression or anxiety, vitamin B-12 or thyroid deficiency.

Memory loss may also be brought on by minor strokes, a nervous system infection, Parkinson's or Huntington's disease, a tumor, or anemia, or can even be a symptom of alcoholism or drug abuse.

But worrisome memory loss shouldn't be accepted as an inevitable consequence of aging. The cause should be diagnosed, as it may be treatable, and simple memory techniques can be used to improve memory performance.

The best way to keep your memory going well is to be as intellectually and socially active as possible.

Dr. Herman Weinreb is an assistant professor of neurology at New York University Medical Center.

Personal Care can mean personal freedom

By Dr. Henry F. Page

Statisticians now inform us that the average life expectancy in this country increases seven hours every day. Whether this unexpected dividend in elder years becomes a blessing or a curse depends on the content of those years. We no longer live in a fatalistic world and it is now possible to plan a rational future resulting in an improved life-style and positive existence.

Page

It is true that some seniors enjoying vigorous health and strong social support can maintain successful independent living up to the age of 112. Unfortunately, some others are afflicted with various chronic disease states that require full-time nursing and medical support in one way or another.

Between these two extremes lies another group on which we will now expound. These individuals have a particular need of rational support because their supply of energy is limited. The stress of just coping with the pressures of daily living and maintenance of their habitat exhausts their physical and mental potential, and over a relatively short period of time will push them into the full nursing category.

Personal Care can provide the liberating answer to their problem and can add 10 years — more or less — of happy, productive existence to their life-style. This includes freedom to socialize and join the main stream of human activity including brief touring trips, attending theatrical and musical events, and becoming bridge masters and enjoying other mentally challenging activities.

Personal Care provides environmental security; an administrator, an activities director and nursing supervisor to coordinate services such as transportation, meals, housekeeping, assistance with the activities of daily living; and 24-hour protective oversight. This includes possible assistance with hygiene and occasionnal help with shoe laces, garmets or medical appliances; monitoring of medications; guidance when occasionally confused; and staff help to resolve conflicts of situational stress.

It is this type of support that liberates enough of each individual's energy to enjoy the activities mentioned and help him or her to cope with more benign challenges. Consider Personal Care not a plank from which to fall into the depths of despond, but rather as a spring board to many light hearted enjoyable years.

Benefit supports meals for elderly

AVENTURA, Fla. (AP) — Twenty-five top chefs cooked at a benefit for a program that provides hot meals to homebound elderly people.

The chefs, 17 of them from Florida, celebrated "new world cuisine" at the second annual Meals-On-Wheels-Miami benefit recently at the Turnberry Isle Resort and Club.

Meals now are brought to elderly people only on weekdays; the chefs' goal was to raise money to provide weekend and holiday meals.

Among the chefs and their dishes were Robert Del Grande of Cafe Annie in Houston, yellow tail in green chile sauce; Emeril Lagasse of Emeril's in New Orleans, country boudin cakes with Creole mustard sauce; and Allen Susser of Chef Allen's in Aventura, rock shrimp star fritter with mango ketchup.

Study lists sites

COLUMBUS, Miss. (AP) — A study using such information as crime rate, taxes and recreational opportunities has identified 10 communities it says are ideal for retired people.

The Mississippi Department of Economic and Community Development study used criteria set by developers to determine places with potential as retirement communities, said Lynda Penton, associate director for research and information with the department.

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 25, 1991

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Tackle projects in order of their importance and you will get better results. New funds become available beginning in December. A relative may try your patience early in 1992. Remain unruffled. It is imperative not to touch your savings in March. A project to benefit children or your community will hold strong appeal next June. You make an excellent advocate for a special cause or group. Romance deepens as the summer of '92 comes to an end.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: historian Henry Steele Commager, explorer Adm. Richard Byrd, artist Pablo Picasso, actor Tony Franciosa.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You may be thinking about expanding your business or taking on a new partner. A lawyer or accountant can give you excellent advice. Take a chance on love — you have nothing to lose.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): The tempo of business picks up today. You enjoy meeting new people. Display your special talents. Branch out in a different direction, but guard against acting overconfident.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Relatives and friends play an increasingly important role in your personal affairs. Take time to learn skills that will increase your earning power. Mate is supportive.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Good luck continues to favor your efforts. If extra money comes your way, set some aside for later on. Postpone a romantic interlude while you pursue several platonic relationships.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Consolidate recent gains this morning. Fortuitous developments are featured this afternoon. Strengthening a business alliance will help you achieve lasting financial security. Good humor will offset rising tension over an emotional involvement.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Someone makes a big effort to appeal to your charitable side. As long as the cause is worthy, respond generously. If engaged in confidential work, heed a warning that certain revelations will be made.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Entertaining demanding business clients can be costly. You may have to ask yourself whether this is really worthwhile. Avoid throwing good money after bad. Romance is chancy. Lie low.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Clever maneuvers behind the scenes should bring in extra cash. You could get that special job opportunity that you have been waiting for. Romance is sweet the second time around.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You could be more sensitive than usual today. Guard against flying off the handle. Everyone will be in a much better mood by this evening. Do not let the past haunt you.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Seize the initiative at work and try to stay in the saddle until you have achieved a principal goal. The competition is not at full strength today. Keep your savings in the bank.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Trying to decide whether you can believe in someone close to you could tear you apart. Keep your own behavior above reproach. You are a tower of strength for someone in trouble.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): What you do with your money is your own business. But what your mate does with it concerns you both. An open discussion is vital. Lost possessions mysteriously reappear.

The feud between Trump Coup Tommy, normally an inept declarer except in those cases where trumps broke badly, and Votmai Tinkinov, the Russian emigre who impressed with the speed rather than skill of his play, was growing steadily worse. This hand did little to ease tensions. They both held the South cards in a team match at the club.

Whether by design or accident, Tommy bid the hand well. When North, one of the better players in the club, committed the hand to slam and investigated the possibility of a grand slam by cue-bidding the enemy suit despite the fact that the whereabouts of the trump ace was unknown, Tommy realized that card was enough to go all the way.

West led the king of hearts. Both declarers ruffed in dummy and led the king of clubs to learn the bad news—East now held a long trump. Votmai started running diamonds. East refused to ruff, discarding three spades and heart. At the end, declarer could not prevent East from ruffing a spade for down one.

Tommy was made of sterner stuff—this was the kind of situation in which our hero excelled. He displayed impeccable technique. Before starting on the diamonds, Tommy cashed the ace of spades!

This simple maneuver made all the difference in the world. If East refused to ruff, declarer would be able to discard all four of the remaining spades in the closed hand on the table's diamonds, then ruff a spade for the fulfilling trick. If East ruffed, declarer would overruff with the ace, draw trumps and then score the king of spades for the 13th trick.

Florida won't prosecute Hedy Lamarr in shoplifting

SANFORD, Fla. — Former film star Hedy Lamarr, who was caught leaving a drugstore this summer with unpaid items in her purse, won't be charged with shoplifting.

"We reached an agreement we felt was in the public's best interest and her own best interest," Assistant State Attorney Charles Tabscott said. "It just boils down to a case in which prosecution is really not justified."

Miss Lamarr, 76, shops with a companion because she cannot see well enough to read labels or price tags or handle money, said her lawyer, Joerg Jaeger. Miss Lamarr thought she had paid for the $21.48 worth of laxative tablets and eyedrops found in her purse in August, Jaeger said.

He met with prosecutors Wednesday and signed an agreement promising she would not break any laws for a year. If she does, said Tabscott, theft charges could be filed.

Miss Lamarr, who lives in the Orlando suburb of Altamonte Springs, did not comment on the case.

NEW YORK — Helen Reddy says she was a he several times before she crooned "I Am Woman."

"I've been a man many times. That's what I'm trying to atone for now," Reddy, a believer in reincarnation, said in an interview scheduled to air today on the "Geraldo" show.

Reddy

Among her past appearances as a male were stints as a 12th century stable boy and a horse-riding bodyguard for an aristocrat, Reddy says.

"I first saw a past life transgression when I was 17, and that's more than 30 years ago," said Reddy, 50. "I've seen a lot of them. I had an out of body experience when I was 12. I've always had some sort of psychic sense, but I didn't really delve into past lives until my teens."

The singer doesn't see her current incarnation as the end of the road: "I keep coming back. I can't seem to get it right. I just keep coming back and back and back."

VENTURA, Calif. — Zsa Zsa Gabor, who spent time in jail for slapping a policeman, was back in court again this week, to settle a lawsuit she filed against her accountant.

Miss Gabor, 73, sat in a courthouse corridor, reading a copy of The National Enquirer while her attorney settled the case in private Tuesday.

"Right this very moment I'm supposed to be in wardrobe fittings for a television show I'm doing — 'Fresh Prince of Bel Air,'" the actress said. "But when you're a star, you know, everyone wants to take you to court."

Attorney Harrison Bull, representing Miss Gabor, would not discuss terms of the settlement of the lawsuit, nor would the defendant, Robert L. Lanham.

Miss Gabor's $225,000 lawsuit claimed Lanham defrauded her out of a $55,000 investment. Lanham told her the 1989 investment would yield $200,000 in less than two weeks, the lawsuit said.

Miss Gabor served a three-day jail sentence in July 1990 after being convicted of slapping a Beverly Hills police officer who stopped her Rolls-Royce in June 1989.

NEW YORK — You don't have to read far into Norman Mailer's new novel, "Harlot's Ghost," to be a critic. He dangles a participle in the 1,307-page novel's first sentence.

"On a late winter evening in 1983, while driving through fog along the Maine coast, recollections of old campfires began to drift into the March mist, and I thought of the Algonquin tribe who dwelt near Bangor a thousand years ago," the book begins.

Mailer

Good reading, bad grammar. The 68-year-old Mailer has the recollections both driving and drifting.

"Norman and I discussed that explicitly. It must have gotten past the copy editor," said Random House vice president Jason Epstein. "It was marked to be changed. Norman has a habit of dangling modifiers."

The sentence will be corrected in subsequent printings.

HEMPSTEAD, N.Y. — Former New York Jets football star Mark Gastineau pleaded guilty Thursday to a reduced charge of harassment for punching a patron in a bar.

Gastineau, 35, of Woodmere was fined $200 by District Judge Richard LaPera, said Ed Grilli, a spokesman for the district attorney.

Gastineau was not required to admit guilt to a specific offense during the brief court proceeding but simply to state that he was present in the bar when the incident occurred in May, said prosecutor James Clarke.

He had been charged with assault, a misdemeanor that carries a maximum penalty year in jail and $1,000 fine. But he received a conditional discharge, which requires him to stay out of trouble for a year, Clarke said.

"Mr. Gastineau is happy the matter is resolved so that he can get on with his boxing career," said Gastineau's attorney, Robert Simels.

Gastineau has pursued a boxing career after walking away as a defensive lineman from the New York Jets in mid-season in 1988 to be with actress Brigitte Neilsen. The relationship broke up and they have a 2-year-old son.

Lawmen seek gun-wielding man, sons who chased black students

WILLIS (AP) — Authorities were searching Thursday for a white man accused of chasing a group of black middle school students with a gun, sparking at least two days of racial tension in the town.

The conflict allegedly began when Raymond Roberts Jr., a used car dealer, and his two teen-age sons brandished shotguns, rifles and pistols as they chased as many as 17 black students through the woods Tuesday near C.C. Hardy Middle School, witnesses said.

Roberts apparently was angry about a fight between one of his sons and a group of black students, Willis Police Chief Joe Nelson said. The son attends Hardy.

Late Wednesday night, a group of angry residents set fire to Roberts' mobile home, Nelson said. The fire damaged the structure beneath a bathroom in the home, but a burst pipe helped douse the flames.

"The whole city's upset," Willis Mayor Edgar Straughter said Thursday. "We are in the process of getting this man (Roberts). Just as soon as we bring him in, things will be back to normal."

Police in Willis, a town about 50 miles north of Houston, said Roberts remained at large Thursday. A warrant for Roberts was issued Wednesday charging him possession of firearm on school property, a third degree felony.

Many Willis residents were angry because police did not detain Roberts when he gave a voluntary statement to officers on Tuesday.

But Nelson said there had not been enough evidence to obtain a warrant until Wednesday afternoon, noting that Roberts had denied the black students' allegations.

Black parents met with school officials Wednesday morning, and a crowd of people remained near Willis' city hall and police station during the day.

Annette Harris said her 12-year-old daughter, Tashika, told her that Roberts fired a gun at her Tuesday, but the weapon did not discharge.

"My daughter said it didn't fire, but just clicked," Ms. Harris said. "She said they told her to kneel down, but she didn't kneel. She ran. She said they told her that white people were here before them and that they'd better respect white people or they'd kill them the way Martin Luther King was killed. It was all racial, just racial."

"I had a friend waiting on me outside after class and when I came out, he and Steven (one of Roberts' two sons) were waiting outside," said Fred Michaeux, 15. Roberts "said he was tired of us niggers messing with him. We laughed, and he started pulling a gun out of his boot. We took off running before he got it out."

Manda Lively, assistant superintendent of the Willis Independent School District, said the 750-student middle school campus was "just as calm and peaceful and normal as everything can be" Thursday.

"Students apparently aren't scared. I have had some calls of course from some concerned parents," Ms. Lively said. "Of course, you're a little apprehensive, but everything seems to be as normal."

She said a Willis police officer would be posted at the Hardy campus for several days, and additional security would be provided to students before and after school.

The mayor said he believed Roberts' alleged actions to be "an isolated incident," and not a sign of simmering racial tensions in the town.

Many of Willis' 2,900, residents are black. But blacks make up only about 11 percent of the school district's 3,000 students, which includes several area towns, Ms. Lively said.

Teen unapologetic about hoax, cites increased awareness about AIDS risk

DALLAS (AP) — A teen-ager says the hoax she started about a woman intentionally spreading AIDS among men has raised awareness about the deadly disease, and she has no apologies for her action.

The 15-year-old girl's letter, signed only "C.J." and published in Ebony magazine, prompted calls to Dallas radio stations by other women claiming to be C.J.

Police this week said one woman, a 29-year-old medical school employee, was being tested for the virus.

Natasha Johnigan, whose brother's initials are "C.J.," told the Dallas Times Herald she invented the story after watching a close friend, who was a church choir director, suffer for months from AIDS.

"I wanted people to be aware of the disease," Ms. Johnigan told the newspaper in an interview. Her mother, Noble Johnigan-Scott, was by her side.

"I came up with the idea while I was sitting in my room looking through all my Ebony magazines.

"I always read the 'Ebony Advisor' column and wanted to compose a letter that everyone would pay attention to. So I sat down and wrote what was in my heart," she said of the May letter, published in September.

Worldwide attention that the letter generated in Dallas' black community was what Ms. Johnigan said she wanted.

The W.H. Adamson High School sophomore said her friend died in August of AIDS. Ms. Johnigan, a black student from Dallas' Oak Cliff community, said she was tired of hearing jokes and careless remarks about the disease.

The Dallas County Health Department, after the letter's publication, set up a phone line to answer public inquiries. Authorities later subpoenaed the letter from the magazine to run a handwriting analysis.

Police said no charges have yet been filed in connection with the hoax. But if the older woman tests positive for the virus, she could be charged with knowingly transmitting AIDS, a third-degree felony.

Ms. Johnigan-Scott said she is proud of her daughter and supports her message.

'I wanted people to be aware of the disease. . . . So I sat down and wrote what was in my heart.'

Hoppel honored

Midland Angels general manager Monty Hoppel has been named Texas League Executive of the Year for 1991. The award caps off a record setting season which saw Midland make the playoffs for the first time in nine seasons, while setting a franchise paid attendance record of 180,616.

The 1991 season was Hoppel's second as the Angels' GM. During his stay, the Angels have set two attendance records.

The award is Midland's second consecutive post-season recognition. Last year, the club received the Texas League Organizational Award for overall excellence based upon the club's performance during the 1990 season.

Kings shear Sampson

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — The Sacramento Kings bought out the remaining two years on Ralph Sampson's $2 million per year contract Thursday, releasing the injury-prone center to become a free agent.

The Kings declined to disclose the terms of the buyout.

"I am very ecstatic with the way things worked out," Sampson said in statement issued by the team. "I only wish it could have happened sooner."

Sampson, 31, described his two years with the Kings as "very difficult." During that time, the former All-Star played only 51 games. Last year, he played in a career-low 25 games and started only four.

He said he hoped to join another NBA team as a player or coach.

The Kings acquired Sampson in September 1989 from the Golden State Warriors for forward-center Jim Petersen, with no cash involved.

Sampson was a three-time college player of the year at the University of Virginia and quickly became an NBA leader after the Houston Rockets drafted him in 1983. He was named most valuable player of the 1985 All-Star Game and was a member of the All-NBA second team in 1984-85.

However, he sustained an assortment of injuries beginning with a bruised back during a fall in March 1986. He underwent three operations on his knee in 1987 and 1988.

Last February, he was sidelined with a foot injury and didn't play the rest of the season.

■ The inside track to the playoffs is on the line as Odessa High battles Midland Lee at Memorial Stadium tonight.

By Terry Williamson
Sports Editor

It's get down and dirty time in District 4-5A football. Throw out the ball with a playoff ribbon tied on it and see who comes up with the travel package.

Midland Lee (2-1 in 4-5A) and Odessa High (2-2) meet at 8 p.m. today in Memorial Stadium in a game that both coaches agree is a key to their respective seasons.

"This will make or break the season for us," claims Lee head football coach Earl Miller. "If we lose this one, we just have a mathematical chance of getting into the playoffs. Win and we're almost in. It doesn't get any bigger."

Bill Barron, in his first year at the helm of the Bronchos, knows there is no tomorrow for his team.

"This is our only chance to stay in the hunt," Barron says. "We won't be favored, but our kids are excited about having the opportunity to play in a game like this."

Odessa High features a team that has been long on points and short on defense. The Bronchos feature running back Brad Givens, who is the most feared runner in 4-5A and comes into the game just 113 yards shy of breaking the 1,000-yard rushing mark. He also leads the league in scoring with 104 points on 17 touchdowns.

"The Bronchos are better than most people think. They will play you to death — or maybe I should say, they will play us to death. Our only district loss last year was to them and we traditionally have had a hard time winning against OHS, even in the years we were pretty stout," Miller said.

"Speed does wonders for you. We can't let Givens get that big play on us. We had the same problem against Permian. They just ran around us with their speed. We've worked more on containment this week. I'm just glad to have them on the grass instead of the carpet over in Ratliff (Stadium)."

Lee does not have any one individual that has the offensive reputation of OHS' speedy Givens, but Lee does throw eight

'Dogs try to solve Permian

■ Winless Midland High seeks to unravel mystic Mojo, as the Bulldogs visit Ratliff Stadium to take on No. 3 Permian.

By Bill Price
Staff Writer

ODESSA — While No. 3-ranked Odessa Permian will surely be a heavy favorite over Midland High tonight, Panther head football coach Tam Hollingshead said he should have little trouble motivating his team.

When the opening whistle sounds at 8 p.m. in Ratliff Stadium, the fact that Permian is 7-0 overall and 3-0 in District 4-5A while the 0-7 Bulldogs are still seeking the first win has little bearing on Permian's motivation, according to Hollingshead.

"We don't look at those kinds of things when we look at an opponent. We look at what they do well and make sure we take care of our business every week. And ever since the Odessa High School game (a 42-21 OHS win over MHS) they started doing some productive things offensively," he said.

Hollingshead does admit, though, that "a win this week would enhance our chances for making the playoffs a great deal."

While Hollingshead tries to assure the Panthers of MHS' threat, Bulldog head coach Davis Corley is hard pressed to find a chink in the Mojo armor.

"They don't have many. They've been playing exceptionally well and are coming off a year of probation (Permian was banned from the 1990 playoffs for conducting early workouts). I think that makes their kids work that much harder," Corley said.

Atlanta goes up 3-2 in World Series

■ The Atlanta Braves dominate Minnesota 14-5 Thursday, taking a 3-2 edge as the World Series heads back to Minneapolis.

Associated Press

ATLANTA — The Atlanta Braves made it look easy for a change. Now comes the hardest part.

The Braves breezed within one game of the World Series championship Thursday night, blowing away Minnesota 14-5 when Lonnie Smith and David Justice homered again and Mark Lemke hit two more triples.

Justice drove in five runs, Smith became the first player since Reggie Jackson in 1977 to homer in three straight Series games and Brian Hunter also homered as Atlanta ripped 17 hits in taking a three games-to-two edge.

It was the third-highest score in Series history and the biggest offensive show in 31 years, since the New York Yankees beat the Pittsburgh Pirates 16-3 in Game 2 of 1960. It followed two straight games in which the Braves won in their final at-bat on close plays at the plate, and it gave the 50,878 fans one last chance to chop, chant and cheer. They did it all night in a three-hour celebration.

"This being the last home game of the season, we felt we owed the fans something," Ron Gant said after getting three hits and scoring three times. "This is the kind of game we needed. We needed to break out."

Now, though, the Braves have to leave the Southern comfort for Minnesota's great indoors as they aim for

Prep football more popular than NBA

It was interesting to see the results of the recent survey of the Sports Marketing Group of Dallas on what Americans considered to be their favorite sports in order of preference.

Williamson

It wasn't too surprising to see NFL football and NCAA football as the top two items, but high school football ranked No. 6 overall, and that was one step ahead of the ever rising NBA, which is gaining in popularity with each passing year.

No one would be surprised that high school football would have such stature in Texas, but evidently the prep scene is very popular nationwide.

Only two other high school sports ranked in the top 114 sports by order of popularity. High school basketball ranked 20th overall, behind minor league baseball and just ahead of men's gymnastics. High school baseball ranked 33rd, following rodeo and just ahead of olympic baseball.

Midland just hosted AirSho'91 and it was interesting to see that air shows ranked 37th on the list.

Midland College will be interested in noting that men's college basketball ranks 14th, but college tennis is way down on the list at 93rd.

High school volleyball, tennis, track, swimming and soccer didn't crack the top 114 list, but I'm not sure that would hold up in Texas. Track, for instance, draws rather well for some of the big meets and is the third overall drawing sport for Texas high schools, even ahead of baseball.

These types of lists are fun to look at and chance to provide some coffee shop chatter. Invariably, you won't agree with the list, but the overall ramifications can be significant.

Newspapers are increasingly seeing tighter news holes and it is hard to ignore what fans see as "popular" sports. Each section of the country is continually trying to see what the fans want to read about in their local newspapers and hard decisions are having to be made on where to utilize the sports staff and space available on a daily, weekly and seasonal basis.

For instance, is too much attention being paid to high school football by the West Texas media? This new survey would suggest that newspapers in this area are giving readers what they want.

It might also suggest that too much space is being given to sports that didn't even crack the top 114 items of popularity.

But now back to football with a look at tonight's games in District 4-5A:

Midland Lee 28, Odessa High 17: The rest of the season is meaningless after this game, unless the Bronchos have a surprise up the sleeve. It says here the surprise isn't quite big enough. The overall series: Lee 16, OHS 14.

Odessa Permian 50, Midland High 0: Mojo is undefeated and state-ranked. MHS hasn't won a game and that alone is wearing on a team that must face one of the very best. Sixty-two points is the greatest margin of victory in District 4-5A history. Permian leads the series 29-3.

San Angelo 34, Abilene Cooper 14: The Bobkitties will earn a Big School playoff berth. San Angelo leads the overall series 22-7-1.

Redskins look to break Giants jinx

By Dave Goldberg
AP Football Writer

Which way does the law of averages work?

Is it time for the Redskins to beat the Giants, to whom they've lost six straight games and nine of the last 10 non-strike games?

Or does the law of averages make it time for the 7-0 Redskins to lose, particularly at Giants Stadium Sunday night in a game that New York has to win?

The oddsmakers are confused — the Giants opened as a one-point favorite and are now one-point underdogs.

That's probably closer to reality — the Giants haven't exactly overpowered the Redskins, even in their best years, and this isn't one of their best years. In fact, the six straight New York victories are by an average of five points and they've gotten a lot of favorable bounces.

"They've been pretty much scripted the same way," says Washington center Jeff Bostic. "They make a play in the fourth quarter and we don't."

Take it one step further.

In October, 1991, the Redskins are simply a better team. So it may not matter by the fourth quarter.

REDSKINS, 24-17

Raiders (plus 6½) at Kansas City (Monday night)

The Chiefs stumbled in Denver — they always do.

The Raiders stumbled twice against the Chiefs last year, nearly costing them the AFC West title.

So who's more motivated?

CHIEFS, 20-13

San Francisco (minus 4) at Philadelphia

Two years ago the 49ers came into Philadelphia and Joe Montana threw four touchdown passes in the fourth quarter to beat the Eagles.

Montana's not around this year. Neither is Randall Cunningham.

Steve Young was a reasonable facsimile of Montana last week. A limping Jim McMahon, who's supposed to be back this week, is not a reasonable facsimile of Cunningham.

49ERS, 20-10

Chicago (plus 6½) at New Orleans

Pro Picks

SAINTS, 16-6

Dallas (plus 2) at Detroit

Detroit has been outscored 80-3 in games played outdoors. Indoors, it's likely to be a race between Barry Sanders and Emmitt Smith to see who gets to 200 yards first.

Make it Barry.

LIONS, 37-34

Cincinnati (plus 13½) at Houston

Sam Wyche will find a way to keep this entertaining, even if his team doesn't.

OILERS, 41-10

Green Bay (plus 2½) at Tampa Bay

Nobody really cares about this game, but the over-under on the crowd is 20,000.

BUCS, 9-5

Minnesota (minus 2) at Phoenix

The Cards (24,124) beat that 20,000 figure last week, but the Vikings beat them 34-7 in Minneapolis two weeks ago.

CARDS, 34-7

Denver (minus 6½) at New England

The league took over the Pats last week and they won.

Does that make Paul Tagliabue unbeaten as an owner?

BRONCOS, 27-23

Pittsburgh (plus 1) at Cleveland

Is Bill Belichick neck-and-neck with Dick MacPherson for coach of the year?

Not yet.

STEELERS, 20-17

Rams (plus 2) at Atlanta

The only consistent thing about Jerry Glanville's teams is their inconsistency.

FALCONS, 16-10

San Diego (minus 6½) at Seattle

The only consistent thing about the Chargers is they find away to lose.

The only consistent thing about Dave Krieg is ... see Glanville above.

MHS: Bulldogs haven't beaten Permian since 1973

(From 1C)

"The amazing thing is that they have a number of kids playing both ways, but they have a lot of depth. Just watching the film you can see they have a lot of weapons."

Weapons like fullback Malcolm Hamilton, a 192-pound senior who is second in 4-5A rushing with 699 yards and has scored 14 touchdowns. His backup is sophomore John Williams, whose 228 yards in a 68-0 win over Alamogordo, N.M., has propelled him to a 574-yard season total. Tailback Tim Ross has also added more than 400 yards to the Panther arsenal.

"We've got to try to contain them. Their speed is such that they get down the sideline on a lot of people," Corley said.

If Permian's ground game can be stopped, something that hasn't happened this year, senior quarterback Stormy Case has shown the ability to guide a strong passing game.

Case, whose older brother Stoney quarterbacked Permian to a 16-0 record and the state championship in 1989, has thrown for 844 yards and has 962 all-purpose yards. His prime target has been split end Will Wagner.

Wagner has hauled down 13 passes for 222 yards and five TDs, while tight end/defensive end Tony Daniels presents Case with another target.

Should the Bulldogs pull off what would be one of the biggest upsets in years, it would be the first MHS win over Mojo since a 21-8 decision in 1973. Permian leads the all-time series 29-3 and posted its largest margin of victory over the 'Dogs in a 51-0 game two years ago on Ratliff's synthetic turf.

The Bulldogs, hampered by injuries all season long, will once again come into a game limping.

In last week's 48-0 loss at San Angelo, quarterback Geoff Simmons and wide receiver Dewayne Culpepper suffered injuries. Simmons and Culpepper teamed for more than 250 yards against OHS.

But Simmons' playing time will be determined at game time after a shoulder injury last week. Should Simmons miss the game, either Brad Heidelberg or Antwan Goodley will fill in.

Culpepper is listed as questionable for the Permian game after suffering a deep thigh bruise and a bruised leg bone above the ankle against San Angelo.

"We've just got to hope for an upset. We are going to play hard and hope to have a little success," Corley said.

REBELS: Bronchos are averaging 359 yards a game

backs at you who are averaging over four yards per carry.

Barron knows that his defense will have to rise tonight if the Bronchos are to have a playoff shot.

"We've scored a lot of points and Brad Givens is a big part of that. I'm sure that Lee will try and stop him, so we've got to have some other people come through," Barron said. "Our quarterback Erik Hartman has done a good job of throwing the ball."

"Lee may have the most physical offensive line from tackle to tackle in the nation. We've been a finesse team for the most part and have given up a lot of points, but to have a chance against Lee, we are going to have to stay in the trenches with them. We can't give up the big play and we can't let their offense grind out four yards a time all night. And they've done that to a lot of people this year."

Odessa has the second ranked team in the district in total offense, averaging 358.6 yards per game compared to Lee's fourth place 268.9. Lee, however, is the second ranked defensive team, giving up only 187.4 yards per outing while OHS is dead last, yielding a whopping 355.1 yards.

Miller doesn't know how his team is going to react following a 33-0 loss to Permian and a 31-0 victory over the University of Chihuahua.

"I really can't anticipate how the kids will react. I wish I knew," Miller said. "I just hope we have the character and intelligence to understand our situation. This is a critical game for us.

"I do expect Odessa to understand its situation. They always do against us and it will entice them to play their best game of the season. If we beat them, we will have to beat them at their very best."

Miller said that offensive guard Max Stuart has not practiced this week with a bad ankle and may not play. Defensive end Bret McNeill, who has been playing with a broken wrist this year, had surgery this week on a knee and is probably out for the season. Nathan Lambert will move into that position from the secondary.

Should Lee lose to OHS, it looks like the Rebels will have to beat San Angelo in two weeks by one more point than they lose to OHS in order to get into the playoffs for the ninth consecutive year. A Lee win will insure that Lee makes the playoffs again if San Angelo beats Abilene Cooper tonight as expected.

Big 10 suspends Indiana's Mallory for one game

Associated Press

CHICAGO — Indiana football coach Bill Mallory has been suspended for one game because he criticized game officials and conference personnel, the Big Ten Conference said Thursday.

Mallory said he will skip Saturday's game against Wisconsin rather than pay a $10,000 fine that would have been levied against the school's television revenue.

Mallory was publicly reprimanded and censured by the conference for his criticism of officiating during the Hoosiers' 24-16 loss at Michigan on Saturday.

"There were crucial calls that certainly had a bearing on the outcome of the game," Mallory said during his weekly news conference Monday. "To me, that should not be tolerated.

"To just sit back and accept it — I just can't. I'm not going to," he added. "Usually I don't pop off about officiating."

Miami's Smith returns to practice

MIAMI (AP) — Miami Dolphins running back Sammie Smith, upset by fans' chants after a critical goal-line fumble Sunday, was back at practice Thursday determined to finish the year in top form.

Smith, who was fined $1,500 for skipping Monday's practice, wasn't looking beyond this season despite reports Tuesday that he might ask for a trade.

"I'm going to work hard the rest of the year and try to help this team win football games," he said. "After the season, whatever takes place, takes place."

Smith returned home to the Orlando suburb of Zellwood to seek emotional support after his fumble all but sealed Miami's 17-13 loss to Houston.

It was the second consecutive week that Smith, a third-year player from Florida State, fumbled on the goal line.

Smith said some time fishing and thinking helped turn the incident into a positive experience.

"God says forgive everyone so I forgive the fans for how they acted out there," he said. "I got a lot of support, but the support that meant the most has come from Coach Shula and my teammates."

He said he wouldn't have missed practice Monday if he had thought Don Shula was unaware of his intentions. Shula said he sympathized with Smith but fined him the maximum for an "unexcused absence" to prevent setting a precedent.

"That was a very difficult time in Sammie's life," said Shula, who is preparing the Dolphins during a bye week for a Nov. 3 game at Indianapolis. "The fans have a right to boo and criticize, but I didn't like the meanness and ugliness that crept in at the end."

Smith, who has rushed for 56 yards on 21 carries in two starts after recovering from a knee injury, said the incident has given him a different perspective.

"Before last week my priority was getting back on the field and getting back to the playoffs and going to the Super Bowl," he said. "Now, my number one priority is the Lord. I know he'll stay there for me even if no one else does."

MCHS spikers advance to regional

Staff Report

The Midland Christian School girl's volleball team advanced all the way to the regional round of the playoffs before dropping a seasaw, three-game match to Lifegate Christian, Saturday.

MCS, which captured first place in district play, reached the regional round with a 15-3, 15-8 bi-district win over Keystone of San Antonio.

However, Lifegate ended the Lady Mustangs' season at 12-4 with a 15-6, 13-15, 15-5 win at regionals.

Four MCS spikers were named to the All-District Team, including Tammy Hull at hitter, Amanda Miller at setter, Leslie Carruth at back line, and Hendi Hutton as server. The team is coached by Kathi Hutton.

Also, the MCS junior varsity completed its season with a perfect 10-0 mark. Team members were April Sheppard, Amber Akins, Misty Jackson, Christina Bettes, Erika Tannich, April Fuller, Missy Lacy, Kristi Cox, Kim Womack, Lisa Neimeyer and Claire Wright.

Griggs rolls 12th 299 in 728 series

Staff Report

Bert Griggs has set a Midland bowling record for "near misses."

Griggs, while bowling in the Petroleum American League at Cactus Lanes on Oct. 15, rolled a 205, 224, 299 for a 728 series. This was the 12th time that Griggs has rolled a 299, missing the perfect 300 mark by one pin.

Still, he didn't go away empty handed. Griggs will receive a 299 ring, a 700 patch and a 100 pins over average watch from the American Bowling Congress.

Griggs was bowling on a 186 average.

TIP OF THE WEEK
By Jan. 1, the American Bowling Congress will make the bowling centers go to a mandatory lane dressing in a long-oil form.
This long-oil pattern will change everything about your game as you have known it for the past several years. With long-oil, the ball will slide longer and hook less. Therefore, you will need to make the necessary changes in your strike ball as well as your spare ball.
Re-vamp your game. From your normal starting position, move your feet to the right until your ball reaches the pocket. Then when you have found the pocket, move your feet three boards to the right for the 2-pin, six boards to the right for the 4-pin and nine boards to the right for the 7-pin.
For spares on the right, move feet three boards left for the 3-pin, six boards left for the 6-pin and nine boards left for the 10-pin.
You will need to allow more time for the ball to reach its target, so make moves accurately. Reverse these instructions for left-handers. Be patient and practice. You may find that your scores will actually improve.

Holyfield sets Nov. 23 date for Damiani

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Heavyweight champion Evander Holyfield, who was to defend his title next month against Mike Tyson until an injury sidelined the challenger, will meet Francesco Damiani in Atlanta on Nov. 23, promoter Dan Duva announced Thursday night.

The unbeaten Holyfield will be returning to his hometown and to the site of his first world title fight to meet Damiani, a former WBO champion, at the Omni.

The Holyfield-Tyson fight, expected to be the richest fight in history, was scheduled for Las Vegas on Nov. 8. It was postponed when Tyson sustained a rib injury and promoters were unable to reach a rescheduling date.

Tyson is scheduled to go on trial in Marion County Court in Indnaiapolis on Jan. 27 on a charge of rape and related charges.

"We were unable to find a date in January to reschedule the Holyfield-Tyson fight that would be acceptable to all parties," Duva said Tuesday after meeting with representatives of TVKO and Caesars Palace and with Don King, Tyson's promoter.

Last Friday, Judge Patricia J. Gifford of Marion County Superior Court denied a request by lawyers for Tyson to delay the trial.

Duva said any fight with Tyson would be rescheduled "for sometime after January 1992."

Holyfield, 29, won the undisputed heavyweight title on Oct. 25, 1990 when he stopped James "Buster" Douglas in the third round. He defended the title against George Foreman in April to run his record to 26-0.

Damiani, 33, the silver medalist for Italy in the 1984 Olympics, won his first 27 professional fights and then was stopped by 1988 Olympic gold medalist Ray Mercer on Jan. 11.

The Holyfield-Tyson fight could have grossed more than $100 million and attracted more than 2 million homes taking the pay-per-view telecast. Holyfield was guaranteed $30 million and Tyson $15 million, with both expected to make more on percentage deals.

Holyfield will get about $8 million for the Damiani fight while the challenger will get about $750,000, according to the promoter.

SERIES: Braves need just one win for championship

(From 1C)

their first Series championship since they were in Milwaukee in 1957. Minnesota is 0-9 in Series road games and the Twins have lost 14 straight dating to the 1925 Series, when the franchise was in Washington, but they are 6-0 at home in the Metrodome, including two wins last week.

"We know it's going to be tough," Justice said. "They're a different team at home. Now they'll have the DH. But I think we can win one of two up there."

The Braves became the eighth World Series team to win three in a row after dropping the first two. Six of those previous seven teams went on to win the title — the glaring exception being the 1987 St. Louis Cardinals, who went to Minnesota and got stung twice by the Twins in the only World Series where the home team won every game.

"All I know is it's the same scenario setting up as in 1987," Twins manager Tom Kelly said. "Hopefully, it will be the same thing."

Steve Avery, the NL playoff MVP, will face Scott Erickson in Game 6 Saturday night. They were the starters in Game 3, and neither got a decision on a day the Braves won 5-4 in 12 innings.

The Braves led 5-0 after five innings before the Twins chased a suddenly wild Tom Glavine with three runs in the sixth.

Atlanta broke it open with a six-run seventh triggered by Smith's leadoff homer, and added three more in the eighth with Hunter's homer putting an exclamation point on the evening.

Justice's homer, off the top of the left field fence and just beyond Dan Gladden's leap, touched off a four-run burst in the fourth that saw the Braves hit for the cycle in a span of only five batters. The spurt featured a single that hit a runner, a triple off Chili Davis' glove in right field and Rafael Belliard's rally-capping RBI double.

Atlanta added a run in the fifth on Justice's RBI grounder, giving Glavine two more runs than he got in his previous three postseason starts combined.

But Glavine, after pitching like a 20-game winner for five innings, suddenly fell apart in the sixth.

And it was Glavine, not the Twins' hitters, who was the biggest culprit — he walked four batters, including two with the bases loaded.

Kent Mercker relieved with the bases still loaded, one out and Atlanta ahead 5-2. He got an RBI groundout from Kent Hrbek, now 0-for-6 with runners in scoring position in the Series, but the Braves escaped further damage when Lemke made a nifty pickup of Greg Gagne's hard one-hopper to second and softly tossed to Sid Bream for the last out.

Kevin Tapani, who outpitched Glavine in Game 2, stopped Atlanta on a lone single until the fourth, when the game began to come apart.

Ron Gant opened with a sharp single that got the fans cheering, and they stayed up when Justice followed with his second home run of the Series. Only two of his 21 homers this year went to the opposite field, and this one made it when it hit the top of the 10-foot fence, inches past Gladden's reach, and bounced out.

Tapani, one of the best control pitchers in baseball, then threw four straight balls to Bream, and the Braves tried to put on more pressure with a hit-and-run play. Greg Olson did everything perfectly — almost — as his grounder to the right side nipped Bream for an out.

That brought up the left-handed Lemke and he looked out toward right field, where Davis was standing. Davis did not start in the outfield all season, but with right fielder Shane Mack in an 0-for-15 skid, and because Davis homered as the DH off Glavine in Game 2, Twins manager Tom Kelly started him.

Davis, who has led the AL in errors and tied for the NL lead, had not gotten a ball all evening, and had spent the whole night pounding his glove in anticipation when Lemke sent a long drive his way.

Davis got a late jump and reached the ball in the right-center field gap, right near the wall. Davis made a backhanded try and the ball glanced off his glove for a triple and a 3-0 lead.

Three tied for Independent lead

Associated Press

THE WOODLANDS (AP) — Jeff Maggert and Steve Jones completed their weather-delayed first rounds with 7-under-par 65s Thursday, joining Robert Wrenn to share a one-shot lead in the $800,000 Independent Insurance Agent Open.

Wrenn completed his round Wednesday before morning fog and afternoon lightning forced postponement of the first round until Thursday.

Maggert played five holes on Wednesday and had teed off on No. 6 when lightning stopped play. He returned to the hole Thursday, hit a six-iron to within eight feet and sank the putt for a birdie.

Maggert went eight under par with three holes to play on Thursday but he three-putted the final hole of the day to fall into the tie. Jones got in three holes on Wednesday, finishing with a 15-foot birdie and he started off Thursday with two more birdies.

The trio held a one-shot lead over Tour rookie Dicky Thompson, who was on the final green when play was stopped on Wednesday. He returned to the course with only his putter and two-putted from 45 feet for a 6-under par 66.

Ten other players, including hometown favorite Billy Ray Brown, were in a group another stroke back with 67s.

Maggert, who grew up playing at The Woodlands where his parents live, two-putted from 15 feet on the par-5 No. 15 hole. That put him eight under for the tournament and he had par-saving putts on Nos. 17 and 18.

"It was a solid two days of putting," Maggert said. "I had a 50-foot chip and a couple of 30 foot putts. That was the essence of the round. I put a lot of shots close to the hole."

Maggert's final shot on Wednesday went off the tee into trees on the par-5, 577-yard No. 6 hole. He pitched out of the trees, hit a six-iron to the tree and sank the eight-foot putt for a birdie.

"That started the day right when I went from a tough par to a birdie on the first hole," Maggert said.

Jones played in a threesome with Ben Crenshaw and Mike Reid.

"It helped playing with them because we were all putting so well," Jones said. "Birdies were flying everywhere."

The tournament originally was scheduled for April 1-7 but was postponed until this week because of continued rain that flooded the course. Tuesday's pro-am and the start of Wednesday's round were delayed by fog. Lightning Wednesday afternoon forced postponement until Thursday.

Wednesday's delays will extend the tournament through Sunday.

Twins troubles in right field exposed

N.Y. Times News Service

ATLANTA — The Minnesota Twins knew they would have to live without the designated hitter once the World Series moved to Atlanta for the third, fourth and fifth games. The Twins did not know they would have to try to survive for three games without their right fielder, for all intents and purposes, not to mention their first baseman, too.

But the combination of DH Chili Davis' absence and the horrendous slumps of Shane Mack and Kent Hrbek caused such major flaws in the Twins' overall offensive plan of attack that Manager Tom Kelly was forced to make some drastic moves in an effort to inject some offensive punch back into his lineup and escape Atlanta with one victory.

So Kelly told Davis to dust off his outfielder's glove and handed him Mack's right-field position. Then he sat back and hoped that: (a) Davis' bat, which had accounted for two home runs and four runs batted in only seven times at bat in the Series, would ignite the Twins and (b) the player who committed 19 errors in his last full season in the field would not be exposed as a poor outfielder by the Braves hitters.

Kelly's second move was to push Hrbek back down to the seven-hole in the lineup, the same spot the Twins first baseman occupied in the Series opener and in Game 2. Hrbek had luck in that slot in Game One, collecting a double and home run.

Kelly had to hope that it would be cozier than the No. 3 spot had been for Hrbek in Game 3 (he was 1 for 6) or the cleanup slot had been in Game 4 (he was 0 for 4).

The moves paid precious few dividends for Kelly and certainly did not produce enough offense to overcome poor Minnesota pitching or a rampaging Atlanta offense, which tatooed the Twins and sent the series back to Minnesota with the Braves a game up.

The risk Kelly assumed by allowing Davis to replace Mack because of the latter's 0-for-15 performance and 7 strikeouts had everything to do with defense, not offense. And Davis showed a tentativeness on a single to right-center by Greg Olson in the second inning, slowing up as center fielder Kirby Puckett charged and fielded the ball in front of him.

Davis was completely exposed as a defensive liability in the fourth on a long fly ball to the wall in right-center by Mark Lemke. It was a tough play and Davis did manage to get a glove on the ball at the base of the fence. But he did not catch it and it ticked off his gloved hand, rolling away, allowing Lemke to come away with a run-scoring triple.

In defense of Davis, his position was almost untenable from the beginning. He had only played the field twice this season for a total of three innings. Those appearances were all made as a left fielder.

Davis last played the field regularly in 1989, when he was the left fielder for the California Angels. That's when he committed 19 errors, 14 of them in the first half of the season, an extraordinary amount for an outfielder.

Neither Davis nor Hrbek made the Twins forget their offensive woes completely, either. Davis did advance a runner from second to third with a long fly ball to center in the fourth inning. And he did draw one of four walks issued by starter Tom Glavine in a three-run Twins sixth.

In that same inning, Hrbek, batting with the bases loaded and one out, grounded out, driving in a run.

Prices rebound

NEW YORK (AP) — Energy futures prices rebounded in active, technical trading Thursday to recover some of the losses posted the previous session.

West Texas Intermediate for delivery in December, which lost 39 cents on Wednesday, rose 23 cents to settle at $23.49 per barrel on the New York Mercantile Exchange. Other contract months also rose.

Andrew Lebow, an analyst with E.D.&F. Man International Inc., characterized Wednesday's losses as a brief corrective phase to an extended rally that pushed up the per-barrel price by more than $2 in about a month.

Bank fails

BEDFORD — Federal regulators Thursday approved the assumption of deposits of First National Bank in Bedford to a new bank called First International Bank.

First National's sole office will reopen Friday as First International Bank. First National is the 29th bank to fail in Texas this year and 105th in the nation.

The bank had assets of $22.4 million. First International Bank will assume about $21.6 million in 3,900 deposit accounts and purchase about $19.6 million of the failed bank's assets at a discount of $1.6 million.

Bedford is a suburb northeast of Fort Worth.

Dollar weakens

NEW YORK — The dollar closed lower Thursday following a new round of statistics showing poor performance in the U.S. economy.

In Tokyo, the dollar fell to a closing 131.33 Japanese yen from 131.45 yen at Wednesday's close.

In London, the British pound rose to $1.7125 from $1.7056 late Wednesday.

Other late dollar rates in New York, compared with late Wednesday's rates, included: 1.7000 German marks, down from 1.7113; 1.4880 Swiss francs, down from 1.4970; 5.7990 French francs, down from 5.8365; 1,270.50 Italian lire, down from 1,279.00; and 1.12625 Canadian dollars, down from 1.12775.

Stocks retreat

NEW YORK (AP) — Stock prices staged a broad retreat Thursday, faced with new signs of economic weakness.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials dropped 24.60 points to 3,016.32, extending its loss since the start of the week to 60.83 points.

Declining issues outpaced gainers by more than 2 to 1 on the New York Stock Exchange.

Economy weakens, analysts say

■ Factory orders plunge; unemployment claims rise.

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Factory orders for durable goods plunged in September for the second straight month and claims for unemployment insurance climbed to the highest level since May in what analysts cited as fresh signs of a weakening economy.

"If you wanted to shift the tea leaves in the most optimistic way, there's not much to make you feel good," said Joel Prakken, an economist with Laurence H. Meyer & Associates, a St. Louis forecasting service.

The Commerce Department said orders for durable goods — usually expensive items expected to last more than three years — fell 3.2 percent, to $121.5 billion, paced by the steepest decline in defense orders in more than seven years.

Orders also sank a revised 4.1 percent in August, to $125.5 billion, worse than the previously estimated 3.9 percent drop.

"September orders for durables reveal a recovery that is still on the skids and shows few signs of strength," said economist John M. Albertine, head of a Washington forecasting company.

"This gloomy-looking figure, in conjunction with other statistics such as higher unemployment claims ... indicate the sustainability of the expansion is in question," said Sung Won Sohn, an economist with the Norwest Corp. in Minneapolis.

The Labor Department said Thursday that new applications for unemployment insurance rose 29,000, to 452,000, during the week ending Oct. 12, the highest level since May.

And the Federal Reserve said Wednesday that a survey by its regional banks pictured a "weak or growing slowly" economy in September and early October, with manufacturing "still improving although at a slower pace in some areas."

"So far, industrial production really has been the main source of economic strength," Sohn said. "But this durable goods report indicates that production may not go up and may falter."

The Fed survey also found the Boston and St. Louis regions "noted growing weakness in defense industries" — a finding reflected in the durable goods report.

The often-volatile defense orders plummeted 48.9 percent, the steepest drop since a 51 percent decline in April 1984. Orders totaled $5.5 billion, the lowest level since falling to $5 billion in November 1990.

Some analysts said the reduction in defense spending associated with the end of the Cold War would continue to plague the manufacturing sector.

"It's part of a trend," Sohn said.

Excluding the defense category, orders rose 1.1 percent.

The transportation sector, which also varies widely from month to month, sank 13.9 percent, to $29.6 billion, on top of a 9.1 percent tumble in August. Excluding that sector, orders rose 0.9 percent.

The report said decreases in aircraft, shipbuilding and tanks offset an increase in motor vehicles.

IBM sues computer marketer

NEW YORK (AP) — International Business Machines Corp. sued a leading marketer of computers Thursday, claiming it cannibalizes IBM mainframes, counterfeits parts and sells or leases them to unsuspecting customers.

The lawsuit against Comdisco Inc. marked IBM's second major legal action against another computer company in recent weeks. It also stood in stark contrast to the friendly strategic alliances IBM has struck recently with some competitors such as Apple Computer Inc. and Wang Laboratories Inc.

"The gloves are off," said Sam Albert, an independent computer consultant and former IBM software executive. "I think the IBM company, unlike in past decades when it was viewed as a monopolist, is now viewed as an underdog. They're losing market share. They're fighting for their right."

The world's biggest computermaker has been suffering through an earnings slump while trying to protect the trade secrets that historically have given it a dominant edge.

The IBM suit against Comdisco, filed in federal court in Chicago, claimed the Rosemont, Ill., based company was secretly disassembling IBM mainframes, counterfeiting memory cards and reselling or leasing them. The suit alleges the parts don't comply with IBM standards and are likely to fail.

"This is an outrage and must be stopped," William O. Grabe, IBM vice president and general manager of the company's domestic marketing and services division, said in a statement.

John Reilly, an IBM spokesman, said the company was seeking unspecified monetary damages and a court order to halt the alleged actions.

Telephone requests for Comdisco comment on the suit were referred to Philip Hewes, the company's general counsel, who did not return two calls by Thursday evening. He was said by a secretary to be in a meeting.

The IBM suit claims the company "has lost the ability to control the quality of the memory products marketed under its trademark, and its goodwill and reputation have been imperiled."

Board fights bus line's bankruptcy end

McALLEN (AP) — Attorneys for the National Labor Relations Board argued to a bankruptcy judge Thursday that Greyhound Lines Inc. should not be allowed to emerge from its Chapter 11 restructuring.

But Greyhound and creditors' attorneys told U.S. Bankruptcy Judge Richard Schmidt that the company's stock value would be harmed if the emergence is delayed.

Schmidt on Oct. 10 confirmed Greyhound's plan to restructure more than $600 million in debt. The NLRB and the union representing Greyhound's striking drivers objected to the plan, specifically its treatment of the company's potential liability in a back-pay dispute with the drivers.

Since Schmidt's confirmation, the company has moved forward with plans to emerge from the protection of bankruptcy by the end of the month. The judge indicated he would rule on the NLRB's request for a stay on Monday.

If Schmidt denies the request, the board may appeal to a district judge and then to the 5th Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans. Greyhound may appeal to those courts if Schmidt approves the request.

Greyhound, the nation's only intercity bus line, filed for bankruptcy in June 1990, three months after its drivers went on strike over wages and benefits.

The NLRB filed a complaint against Greyhound, charging it with unfair labor practices that prompted the strike and seeking back pay for the drivers. That complaint is being heard by an administrative law judge in Milwaukee.

Greyhound's reorganization gives any amount won by the drivers through the NLRB complaint a low priority for repayment in contrast to its other debts.

Greyhound attorney Oscar Cantu of Houston argued a delay could threaten the company's financial health as well as affect its creditors.

"We're very confident the judge will deny the injunction," Cantu said after the hearing.

David Snodgrass, a Dallas attorney representing unsecured creditors, said the delay could cost potential investors when Greyhound stock is listed on the American Stock Exchange.

"This market will in fact not be excited if a stay is granted," Snodgrass said.

The company's reorganization calls for a stock offering, 95 percent of which will go to unsecured creditors, who are counting on its value to rise to recover their claim against Greyhound.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Stock funds out-perform bonds in long haul

By Bill Doyle

Q. When I retire in a year or so, I will receive regular pension payments and a tax-sheltered lump sum. I'd like to keep the lump sum deferred from income tax and invest for some growth by rolling it over into an individual retirement account.

Doyle

Are some investments better than others for IRAs? How do stock mutual fund and bond mutual funds compare for IRA purposes?

A. Over reasonably long terms, say, five, ten or more years, mutual funds holding stocks as investments have performed better than funds with bonds in their investment portfolio. In some short periods, however, bond funds have prduced superior results.

This should come as no surprise. You simply have to look at the general trend in stock prices and bond prices over past decades. Despite some wild swings at times of stock market stress — especially during the "Crash of 1987" — the general trend in stock prices has been up.

That should encourage you to put part of your retirement money into a stock fund. But I would caution against going whole hog. The risk of severe drops in stock prices is still there. Retirement time naturally calls for cautious investing.

Mutual funds holding bonds as investments are generally more suitable than stock funds for most retired folks. Such funds collect interest from the bonds they hold and pass that money along to fund shareholders in the form of dividends.

Dividend yields from bond funds are higher than dividen yields on most stock funds. And the majority of retirees are more interested in income than in growth in value of their investments.

Q. You prefer no-load mutual funds, on which there is no commission charge, over load funds. Well, I find that management fees run from 1 percent to 1.5 percent on no-load funds, compared to much lower 0.25 percent to 0.5 percent management fees on funds with front loads charged at the time shares are purchased.

Assuming a no-load fund and a front-load fund earn equal amounts before management fees, would it not be better to invest in a front-load fund for a long term, say, 20 years?

A. It would be, if your figures were correct. They are not. Unless you swallowed some fund salesman's line whole, it's hard to imagine where you got those numbers.

To begin with, the management fee is only part of a mutual fund's annual expenses. The typical management fee is 0.5 percent. When other costs are added, the total is called the "expense ratio" and is expressed as a percentage of the fund's assets. For example, a fund with $100 million assets and $1 million annual expenses has a 1 percent expense ratio.

It stands to reason that, everything else being equal, a fund with a low expense ratio will produce better investment results than a fund with a high expense ratio.

Even though there are a handful of exceptions, most no-load funds do not have higher expense ratios than load funds. You can check that out by reading the "Panorama" section of the Wiesenberger Investment Companies Service manual, which you will find in many public libraries.

Q. In light of the many illegal and unscrupulous occurrences in the financial world — junk bond scams, bank fraud, stock manipulation, etc. — what prevents an outside brokerage firm handling the purchase and sale of securities for a mutual fund from encouraging aggressive trading and offering substantial kickbacks to fund management?

I don't trust anyone anymore.

A. Your last point is obvious.

There are all kinds of laws and regulations against the practice you outline. The Securities and Exchange Commission banned mutual fund "give-ups" more than 20 years ago.

But there's no denying shady brokers and crooked fund managemet people could operate such a scheme — if they were willing to run the risk of getting caught, fined, banned from the securities business and put into the slammer.

Wall Street shows strength, despite gloomy economy

NEW YORK (AP) — Wall Street is racing toward its best year since the 1987 stock market crash, with firms hiring brokers, companies rejoining the financial markets and brokerage stocks soaring to all-time highs.

The revival in the securities industry follows one of its most depressing years ever. In 1990, the firms that stoke the engine of American finance lost money and their own share prices plummeted.

This year, however, profits are projected at more than $4 billion before taxes, which would be the most since a record $5.5 billion in 1986 at the pinnacle of a roaring decade.

Some Wall Street executives believe the industry's four-year recession is ending, and firms are adding employees for the first time since the crash, including 10 percent more stockbrokers, or about 6,000 for the year.

That is Wall Street's most convincing sign of recovery. The industry shrunk by more than 50,000 jobs nationwide after the crash.

"All the industry vital signs have been good," said Ben H. Griswold IV, chairman of the Baltimore brokerage Alex. Brown Inc. "It certainly was a very good year in nine months."

Resurgent stock market activity — particularly by individuals fleeing money markets and certificates of deposit because of depressed interest rates — and a revival of corporate stock and bond underwriting have fed the new prosperity.

Four years of determined cost-cutting also has helped, especially now that market activity is slowing. Industry profits have declined in each quarter this year, from nearly $1.5 billion in the first quarter to about $900 million in the last one.

While expenses have risen as firms dole out larger commissions because of the buoyant trading, executives said they have been outpaced by revenue growth, Wall Street's benchmark for whether spending is getting out of hand.

"The companies seem to be doing a pretty nice job of cost control," said John Keefe, an analyst with Lipper Analytical Securities Corp., which follows Wall Street firms. "It's really a question of whether the underwriting environment holds up and whether the trading environment holds up."

From July to September, trading on the New York Stock Exchange fell 11 percent from the first half of the year to 162.3 million shares daily, reducing firms' trading commissions.

Underwriting, in which Wall Street firms sell investors stocks or bonds issued by companies seeking to raise money, slipped from record levels.

The third quarter also included the stain of another embarrassing scandal, this one involving illegal government bond trading at Salomon Inc.

Compaq reorganizes sales, cuts workforce

HOUSTON (AP) — Compaq Computer Corp. said Wednesday it is reorganizing its sales divisions and implementing a $135 million restructuring plan that calls for laying off more than 12 percent of its workforce.

"All of it is tied to making Compaq more focused and more competitive for the future," Compaq president Ron Canion said.

The announcement came as the computer manufacturer reported a third-quarter loss of $70 million, or 82 cents a share. Compaq had a net income of $124 million, or $1.38 cents per share, for the quarter ending Sept. 30, 1990.

Some 1,440 of Compaq's 12,000 employees in 69 countries will be laid off, with 440 of them coming from the Houston area.

"It was very carefully considered. We looked at every alternative to lowering our costs" before deciding on the layoffs, Canion said.

"We have maintained our aggressiveness and our strategy," Canion said. "We were not going to cut back on our staff and not be able to deliver quality on our products. We're thinking about doing things differently from the past and ... by doing things more efficiently, reduce our overall workforce."

In addition, Compaq will reorganize the company into two distinct product divisions: personal computers and systems.

"The products division gives us the ability to focus more on the product and be more efficient," Canion said. "The reorganization acknowledges the changing nature of our business, and thus will allow us to become even more targeted in new product development, time to market and customer support. Operations have been streamlined to increase the company's cost competitiveness."

Rick Martin, a New York computer company analyst with Prudential Securities Inc., said the product division is a more significant indicator for Compaq's future than the layoffs.

"They're reorganizing their company. That's a permanent strategic change. They are separating their personal computers from their high server systems," Martin said. "That's going to make them more competitive in PCs," and put new emphasis on the high server systems, he said.

Martin said Compaq previously used the same dealers to handle the personal computers and the larger systems, and the larger systems suffered. The division will allow them to focus their marketing efforts and provide better support services, he said.

While 85 percent of Compaq's revenue now comes from the personal computer market, Martin said he expected that to drop to below 75 percent by next year as sales increase in the high-server system division.

EARNEST KIKER

Agricultural seminar scheduled in Lubbock

Several items causing concern among farmers, ranchers, agribusiness and governmental officials will be discussed during a meeting in Lubbock on November 4 at the Texas Agricultural Forum.

Kiker

The meeting, at the Holiday Inn — Civic Center, is one of a series held each year for leaders of government, business and agriculture. Sessions begin at 7:45 a.m. and adjourn at 4 p.m.

Sessions are open to anyone.

Four legislative leaders, a banker and two business and growers' organization executives, will lead the day's discussions.

Dan Pustejovsky, Texas Ag Forum chairman, will give the welcoming address.

State Senator John Montford of Lubbock will discuss financing of state agricultural programs.

Prospects for a boll weevil eradication program in Texas will be examined by State Senator Steve Carriker of Roby and Jim Ed Miller, chairman of the Texas Pest Management Association.

The impacts on Texas agriculture and economy of proposed free trade agreements with Mexico will be analyzed by Harvey Rosenblum of Dallas, senior vice president and director of research with the Federal Reserve Bank of Dallas.

During the luncheon, State Representative James E. "Pete" Laney of Hale Center will provide a legislative update. A panel of Laney, Carriker and State Senator Bill Sims of San Angelo will respond to questions from the audience.

Issues of animal and property rights will be addressed by Sims. Concerns about seed labeling will be discussed by Buz Poage, All-Tex Seeds in Levelland, and Lois Wales, vice president of Texas Women in Farm Economics (WIFE) and a member of the Texas Corn Producers Board.

Registration for this forum is $25 and can be paid at the door. For more questions contact Ed Smith, Extension Economist, Marketing & Policy at (409) 845-1751 or the Extension office at 687-1351.

The 1991 Permian Basin Pecan Seminar and Trade Show will be held in Gardendale on Saturday. It will be held at John and Nadine Sims' orchard, 5655 Marigold. The fee will be $15 (a barbeque lunch is included).

The programs will include presentations and demonstrations on water management, weed identification and control, biological insect control and orchard floor management. Other topics include varietal freeze and pollination problems, irrigation and moisture measurement, and the role of computers in orchard management. Equipment and hardware will be on display.

This program is being approved by the Texas Department of Agriculture for continuing education units required for private and commericial pesticide applicator license holders. An additional fee of $5 will be charged for those desiring the CEU's.

For addtional information contact Debbie Benge, Ector/Midland Counties Horticulturist at 445-3071 or 687-1351.

Agricultural work continues to attract aliens

By Jennifer Dixon
Associated Press writer

WASHINGTON — American agriculture is still a magnet for illegal aliens seeking work in the United States, despite immigration reforms that made it illegal for employers to knowingly hire them for ranch and farm jobs, analysts say.

Backers of the sanctions in the 1986 Immigration Reform and Control Act had hoped that by drying up the supply of cheap, foreign labor, farm employers would be forced to mechanize or improve working conditions and wages to recruit a legal workforce.

While it's debatable whether that has happened, government and private analysts believe the law has failed to stop illegal aliens from finding work on the nation's farms and ranches.

Some officials say the widespread availability of phony documents is to blame. Others say it's a lack of strong enforcement on the border or the law's requirement that the Immigration and Naturalization Service obtain a warrant for open field searches, hampering the agency's ability to police farms for illegal workers.

Analysts assume illegal workers are entering agriculture because the shortage of workers that had been predicted when the bill passed in 1986 never materialized, despite the fact that one-fourth of all farm worker jobs must be replenished every year.

"Today, labor-intensive agriculture is once again expanding in the Southwestern states with the help of recent immigrants from Mexico, but today's handmaidens of expansion are farm labor contractors," said a new book, "The Paper Curtain," published by the Urban Institute Press and Rand Corp.

"The seasonal demand for agricultural workers remains high, and all indications are that new and vulnerable immigrant workers continue to be drawn into seasonal farm work, largely through the recruitment activities of the (farm labor contractors)," said an analysis in the book by Philip L. Martin and J. Edward Taylor.

Martin is a professor of agricultural economics at the University of California at Davis, Taylor is an assistant professor of agricultural economics at the university.

They concluded that further growth in farm labor contractor employment could mean low wages, unstable employment and poor working conditions for farm workers.

Activists criticize pilot whale hunters

TORSHAVN, Faroe Islands (AP) — Faroese have hunted whales since the 12th century, and swear they will continue despite criticism heightened by news photos of women and children helping butcher the beached mammals.

They kill for food, not commerce.

A pilot whale can feed a village for months. The rich meat, often wind-dried and eaten in thin slices with salted blubber, is a staple of the diet on this volcanic archipelago midway between Scotland and Iceland.

Hunters drive herds of pilot whales into shallow bays for the kill. Conservationists and animal rights groups say the summer and fall hunts are wasteful and inhumane, but they are a way of life to the 47,000 islanders.

"We were called 'bloodthirsty barbarians' and the hunt 'a ritual-blood sport,'" said Kjartan Hoydal, director of fisheries in Torshavn, the Faroese capital.

HOYDAL SAID that description is wrong.

"The difference with other whaling is that the pilot-whale drive is non-commercial," he said in an interview. "We kill for our own consumption and no more."

The Faroese have kept detailed records of the hunt since 1584 and the island government says there are 100,000 pilot whales around these Danish islands and Iceland. The yearly harvest by Faroese is 1,000 to 2,000.

"Even though they are not endangered, it's a matter of principle for us to have the islanders stop the pilot whale killings," said Jens Ole Hojmann, a maritime ecology campaigner for Greenpeace in Copenhagen, the Danish capital. "It's a matter of keeping the ecological balance whole."

"We reject the argument that it's an old traditional hunt when you look at the Faroese society, with a high standard of living and driving around in large cars."

There is no hunting season, but most of the killing takes place from June to September, when there is abundance of squid, the favorite food of pilot whales.

FROM LOOKOUTS atop the sheer cliffs, spotters search for herds of whales, which can number 20 to 2,000.

A herd is sighted and, "Grindahvalur!" The word goes out by telephone and radio.

"We drop whatever we're doing and rush to the boats," said Petur Gunnarson, a 62-year old fisherman.

Islanders maneuver their small motorboats into a wide semi-circle and drive the whales into the nearest of 21 bays authorized for the kill. When the whales ground in the shallows, men with foot-long knives jump into the waist-deep water, cut arteries behind the head and slit the neck.

If the whales are too far from shore, gaffs are used to drag them closer.

Carcasses are pulled from the bloodied water, cut up and divided among villagers according to written rules dating from 1298.

PILOT WHALES grow to about 23 feet in length and often weigh more than 4,000 pounds.

About one-fourth of the islanders' annual meat supply comes from the whales, according to official statistics.

In response to international and local protests, the Faroese Parliament banned commercial whaling in territorial waters in 1985.

The same legislation outlawed the use by hunters of harpoons and spikes, which were condemned for causing the whales unnecessary suffering and prolonged agony. Only long knives and gaffs are permitted.

Justinus Olsen, a veterinarian, said the gaff "has been widely criticized for causing unnecessary suffering, and we ask the hunters to use it as little as possible. The killing is more humane and quicker than before."

Guns have been tried, Olsen said, "but we need big calibers to kill instantly and they are too heavy to carry in the cold waters."

A GROUP of hunters armed with knives can kill several hundred whales in 10 minutes.

Only men take part in the kill, but women and children help with the butchering on shore.

"There are no professional hunters," and the older generation passes on the skill to the young, Hoydal said.

Hojmann of Greenpeace remains optimistic.

"I think it's a matter of a couple of generations before they drop the pilot whale hunt," he said. "The younger generations are losing interest."

Doctors find unusual virus in AIDS patient

HOUSTON (AP) — A team of researchers from the Texas Medical Center is reporting the discovery in a human of a virus previously known to exist only in monkeys stricken with AIDS.

The findings, disclosed in the November issue of the Journal of Virology, are based on studies of an AIDS patient treated at M.D. Anderson Cancer Center in Houston.

The patient, a homosexual, died last year after undergoing treatment beginning in 1989.

"We don't know that it is significant, really," Dr. Richard Ford, head of molecular pathology at the University of Texas, said Thursday.

"It's more for the scientific community that this interesting patient did come into our hospital a couple of years ago. He had a bizarre type of AIDS-related lymphoma. We were able to isolate a virus that previously had been associated only with monkeys."

Ford, along with Robert C. Bohannon and Lawrence A. Donehower of the Division of Molecular Virology of Baylor College of Medicine, have found no similar viruses in any other patients. Researchers are confident the subject of their research had no previous contact with monkeys.

"We've begun to do testing with other groups that we think may be at risk," Ford said. "But we don't know how it's transmitted and so far it has not been associated with any human diseases.

"Right now, it's just a curiosity and a potentially interesting finding, but the ramifications of it we don't know at this time until we're able to do further work."

As early as 1970, researchers have isolated in monkeys viruses that are virtually identical to the human immunodeficiency virus, commonly known as HIV. The virus, when injected into juvenile monkeys, causes an AIDS-like syndrome in the infected animals.

The viruses, known as Type D retrovirus, never have been associated convincingly with humans and any similar discoveries were blamed on laboratory contamination, the three researchers wrote in the Journal of Virology. They noted in their report that they took extensive care and did multiple tests to ensure that laboratory contamination would not influence their research.

"It's something we're very cognizant of," Ford said. "Before the paper was published, we had to convince a lot of skeptical people that was not the case."

The Houston patient, a 32-year-old man, was admitted to M.D. Anderson after complaining of abdominal pain, fever and night sweats for several months. He tested HIV positive and a bone marrow biopsy detected cancer.

He underwent chemotherapy treatment and, despite some remission, died nine months later.

Researchers said they detected unusual cells in tumors and found in examining them under an electron microscope they contained large number of retroviruses.

State commission disbands division for AIDS counseling

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas Commission on Alcohol and Drug Abuse has disbanded a division that oversaw 11 clinics that counsel and test alcohol abusers and intravenous drug users for the virus that causes AIDS.

The division also provided training on acquired immune deficiency syndrome to hundreds of Texas substance abuse counselors.

The commission will continue to provide education on the human immunodeficiency virus, which causes AIDS, to counselors by hiring private contractors or non-profit agencies to run the seminars, said David Tatum, the commission's deputy executive director.

Outreach clinics will not be affected by the cuts, he said. They are in Amarillo, Austin, Beaumont, Corpus Christi, Edinburg, El Paso, Fort Worth, Longview, Lubbock, Midland and Temple.

Local program director Barry-Lee Cole was unavailable for comment on the cutback Thursday.

Bill Britcher, commission information officer, said, "What this really impacts is the training services that we provide. Those services will have to be contracted out. The services at the clinics should be unchanged."

Dennis Ciscel, an HIV and substance abuse educator for the state who used to work for the commission, said of the cut, "It is a great loss. This no doubt will have a far-reaching impact."

The commission's HIV division employed six people. Their jobs were among 20 administrative positions cut this fall because of state budget limitations on administrative costs, Tatum said. All 20 have been offered other positions at the commission.

MOONLIGHTING!
The Midland Reporter-Telegram has several distributorships which need to be filled with responsible individuals.
OFTEN ASKED QUESTIONS:
Is it worthwhile for adults also? Yes! Our current distributor force is already 90% adult and 10% youth. Morning newspaper routes are attractive for:
• ADULTS who have full-time jobs, yet want to supplement their income with a steady part-time job.
• MOTHERS who can't justify a small job and daycare, because as a distributor, you do not need daycare!
• COLLEGE STUDENTS needing a part-time job which will work with classes!
• SENIOR CITIZENS wanting regular exercise, added income, or just want to work with people, neighbors, and friends.
How much money can I make as a distributor?
Depending on the size of the distributorship from $300 to $700 monthly! Some make even more!
How long does it take?
The actually delivery takes 1 - 2 hours Monday - Saturday, and 2 - 3 hours on Sunday, again depending on the size of the distributorship. Also, a few hours a month are needed to collect from subscribers. Many distributors choose to handle some of this by putting envelopes in subscribers' papers. Collecting in person will be necessary though!
When do papers have to be delivered by?
6 a.m. Monday - Friday and 7 a.m. on Saturday, Sunday and holidays.
Do I ever get a day off?
The job requires a 7-day a week commitment. However, distributors do take days off by finding a friend or family member to substitute for them!
RESERVE YOUR DISTRIBUTORSHIP NOW!
