Death count mounts

ROME (AP) — The death toll in the bloody terrorist attacks at Rome and Vienna airports rose to 18 when two wounded Americans died today, and fears of more violence prompted Italian police to call an emergency meeting.

At least 121 people were injured in the two attacks, which occurred almost simultaneously Friday morning when terrorists opened fire with automatic weapons and tossed grenades near check-in counters of El Al Israel Airlines at the two airports.

"They have again bloodied Christmas," said Italian Premier Bettino Craxi, referring to last year's terrorist attack on a train near Bologna that killed 15 people.

Five of the 15 slain in Rome's Leonardo da Vinci airport were Americans, authorities said. A State Department spokeswoman in Washington said there are 12 Americans still hospitalized, with seven or eight others treated and released.

Four assailants were slain, three in Rome and one in Vienna, and three were captured in the two attacks. Besides the assailant, two other people died in the Vienna attack and at least 47 were injured. Authorities there said none of the casualties were Americans.

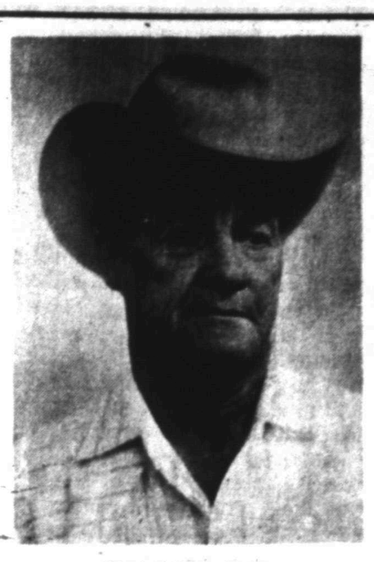

Austrian officials did not give the identities or nationalities of the terrorists who attacked there, but an Italian police official said the four terrorists that struck in Rome "without a doubt" were Palestinians but their countries of origin were unknown.

3-man race in pct. 1...

Incumbents seek re-election

The political pot for Scurry County's upcoming May Democratic primary election continues to stir as three more incumbents have announced their intent to seek re-election and the Pct. 1 commissioner's post becomes a three-man race.

Incumbents announcing with this issue their Democratic candidacy are County Clerk Beverly Ainsworth, seeking her fifth four-year term; Ted Billingsley, commissioner for Pct. 4 since 1978; and Duaine Davis, who was appointed July 29 to fill out an unexpired term as Pct. 1 commissioner.

In addition, Fred Cross has now announced his candidacy for the Pct. 1 commissioner's post. Friday, Milton Stephens announced as a candidate for this position also — making Pct. 1 now a three-man race.

Ainsworth was first elected county clerk in 1966, winning from a field of three candidates. Since that time, she has been opposed only once for re-election.

She is a native of Scurry County. She and her husband Pat live near the Fluvanna community.

With her announcement, she notes the volume of work associated with the county clerk's office, saying "I feel we've done a good job and will continue to do so."

She oversees a staff of four and is involved with such duties as voter registration, conducting local elections, documenting real estate records, maintaining birth and death records and issuing marriage licenses plus serving as clerk for both the county court and commissioners court.

Billingsley seeks his third four-year term as commissioner.

A life-long resident of Scurry County, he and his wife Fretta live at 409 33rd St. They have four children, three still residing in Snyder, Rickey, Randy and Kim.

Davis is a native of Scurry County also. He notes 32 years of experience maintaining roads in Pct. 1. For the past 12 years, he served as precinct foreman, a position he held when appointed to the commissioner's post.

He seeks election to the remaining two years of the unexpired term, which is now to expire at the end of 1987.

He and his wife Dorothy reside northeast of Snyder. They have two married children. Davis is a Baptist and a member of Scurry Lodge 706.

Also announcing for the Pct. 1 commissioner's job is Fred Cross, a previous candidate for the post during the 1983 Democratic primary.

Cross is a lifelong resident of the county who now resides in the Lloyd Mountain area. He is a graduate of Snyder High School and earned a degree in agriculture from Texas Tech University in 1960.

Last spring, he was a recipient of the Harrie Winston Award for achievement in agriculture presented at the annual Snyder Chamber of Commerce Banquet.

As president of the Scurry County Producers Association, he worked toward establishing the newly formed commodity board, now in its second year overseeing an assessment of cotton for pest control measures here.

He and his wife Ann have two children, a daughter Robin, a student at Texas Tech, and a son Matt, a student at Western Texas College.

The family attends First Baptist Church of Snyder.

Absentee to begin in Hermleigh vote

Absentee voting begins Monday for the called Jan. 18 election which will decide the fate of the Hermleigh Independent School District.

To vote absentee, individuals may cast ballots at the county clerk's office — located on the third floor of the county courthouse — through Jan. 14.

Individuals may also request a ballot be sent to them in the mail.

To vote by mail, registered voters must first request an application form for an absentee ballot.

This form must be signed and returned to the clerk's office before a ballot can be mailed.

No requests for absentee ballots can be honored past Jan. 14. Any ballots mailed can be returned to the county clerk's office through the day of the election Jan. 18, however.

Courthouse officials estimate there are 625 registered voters from Scurry County living in the Hermleigh school district. The district also includes 12 registered voters living in Fisher County.

In order to vote in the election, individuals must be registered to vote and must live within the confines of the Hermleigh School District.

Individuals who own property in the district but do not live there are not eligible to vote.

Joyful Noise starts Sesqui

A barrage of sound at high noon Wednesday will usher in the Scurry County observance of Texas' 150th birthday.

The county's Sesquicentennial Committee is requesting that the victory bell at Snyder High School be rung along with the disaster warning sirens located in various parts of town.

All residents are encouraged to join in by honking car horns or by making other forms of "joyful noise."

The state Sesquicentennial Commission has designated "Six Days for Texas" during 1986 when communities are encouraged to plan events. These will include March 2, Texas Independence Day, and April 21, San Jacinto Day.

Across the state, special events are set to get underway. In Dallas, the Cotton Bowl game will feature a special salute to the Sesquicentennial. Also, the Texas Wagon Train will begin its 2,800 mile journey across the state following opening festivities in Sulphur Springs.

Sesquicentennial memorabilia is now available through the Scurry County Sesquicentennial Committee. Several items are available through the county museum gift shop also.

The feller on Deep Creek says, "Trying times is no reason to quit trying."

During the recent grid season, FBC minister Ken Branam and yours truly traded jabs about our favorite football teams. Our team was going downhill just about as fast as Branam's Baylor Bears were going up.

Branam had indicated that he had a surprise for us, and he made his presentation just before Christmas, handing us two home-made wooden plaques with BU painted on them. He insisted that we display them prominently in our office until the Red Raiders could rise to the top.

One BU was in the traditional green and yellow colors of Baylor, while the second plaque had the scarlet and black of Texas Tech.

We're delighted about one thing--at least Branam's Christian spirit prevented him from presenting one in Burnt Orange.

A few mornings before Christmas, Sonny Greenfield of Thompson's Shoes was telling his coffee shop "friends" about a problem with his outside Christmas lights.

Greenfield would turn on the lights, and before the evening was over, they would be off. Someone suggested it might be a pesky squirrel or gusty winds.

After repeated incidents, Greenfield attempted to insure that the lights would not get unplugged as he took duct tape and wrapped it snugly around the plug. But later that evening, the lights were off.

Now that Christmas is over the truth can be told. Greenfield suspected that Bill Dryden might be involved--but this time he is innocent.

The guilty party is Tom Machen. It was Tom, carrying a ladder in his pickup to get on Sonny's house, who kept unplugging the lights.

Coffee drinkers at Louise's asked Jane Womack to come down and help the group sing a Christmas carol to Louise Rice and her staff.

After the performance, Colonial Hill's Miller Robinson asked Jane to come over and perform at his house. "I want you to sing I heard the bills on Christmas Day."

Teens killed in motorcyle wreck

PORTALES, N.M. (AP) — Two Amarillo teen-agers were killed when the motorcycle they were riding collided head-on with a pickup truck on U.S. 70 near Elida, N.M., authorities said.

Byron Dion Clay Rollins, 18, and Sheyla Gayle Wood, also 18, were killed in the accident that occurred about 7:30 p.m. Friday about seven miles west of Elida, officers said.

Summer months filled with budget, tax talk

The summer months of July and August included rounds of budget planning sessions from all local taxing entities, talks that carried a central theme — tax hikes tied to a declining tax base and the production of oil.

A noted motivational speaker and business analyst offered free seminars to local merchants, and local residents were shocked at the sudden death of a longtime county commissioner.

The county's attention was caught also by a murder trial involving a slain wife and her accused husband, and a record-setting $100,000 promise from United Way officials of Scurry County.

The following is a chronological account of events that made the news here during July and August.

JULY 4

—Snyder hosted its annual July 4th celebration here today as thousands of people thronged Towle Park for a range of "free" events.

JULY 5

—In view of a declining tax base for the county overall, each of the three county school districts will be required to increase their respective tax rates this budget year just to maintain the same budget amount as 1984, it was reported today.

JULY 8

—Charles A. Mouser, in Snyder to conduct a week-long marketing and public relations seminar, spoke to the opening session for owners and managers of businesses at 9 a.m. today.

—The board of trustees for the Scurry County Junior College District Monday night tentatively approved a budget of $5,068,697 for the 1985-86 school year, down 5.4 percent from the 1984-85 budget of $5,476,927.

JULY 9

—Charlene Light, a former instructor for both Western Texas College and the Hermleigh school district, was appointed to fill the place 1 Snyder school board seat today by a unanimous vote of the board.

She replaces Lillie Sullivan, who resigned the post June 3.

JULY 17

—The 50th annual Scurry County Rodeo opened its four-day run today. Included in the activities was the traditional downtown parade.

JULY 19

—Eldon Perry, commissioner for Pct. 1 here since 1973, died at his home early this morning, the apparent victim of a heart attack. He was 54.

JULY 29

—The Pct. 1 commissioner's court seat was filled today with the appointment of Duaine Davis, a longtime county employee and former precinct foreman.

JULY 31

—A record $100,000 budget was

Drug probe

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — A drug investigation that military officials are conducting at Wilford Hall Air Force Medical Center on Lackland Air Force Base involves about 200 airmen and civilians so far in what appears to be the largest drug probe ever at a San Antonio military installation, Air Force officials have confirmed.

"This is a joint investigation between OSI (Air Force Office of Special Investigations) and local civilian police,"

Prices recover

by The Associated Press

Continuing hopes of further declines in U.S. interest rates helped the stock market to a late-week rally which erased early-week declines.

Stock prices surged higher Friday in light trading. The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials rose 16.51 to finish at 1,543.00, which was where it closed last Friday.

Speculation that interest rates would continue to fall, which could help the economy pick up steam in 1986, attracted many buyers.

Tourists report screaming, panic during terrorist attack

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Christian pilgrims and tourists on their way to Israel said they saw hand grenades rolling across the floor and heard blasts of automatic gunfire when they were attacked Friday at the El Al check-in counter in Vienna's airport.

Several people said they tried to hide or flee in the panicked confusion. Others said they heard weeping and screaming mingled with the echo of gunshots.

"I saw five hand grenades like black balls rolling through the hall," said Rheinhard Shubert, 39, a tourist from southern Austria.

"I saw two or three people lying on the floor, and one was bleeding from the throat. I hit the floor and crept away for shelter," he said.

Three people, including one terrorist, were killed and more than 40 wounded in the attack at Vienna's Schwechat airport 90 minutes before the scheduled departure of the Israeli plane.

At the same time, a similar attack near El Al's check-in counter at Rome's Leonardo da Vinci airport killed 14 people.

Friday's El Al flight from Rome was postponed, but the plane from Vienna arrived in Israel Friday afternoon. Many of the passengers who trooped off the jet at Ben-Gurion airport were glassy-eyed and weary. Twenty-seven pilgrims on their way to Bethlehem in the Israeli-occupied West Bank were aboard the flight, and none were hurt.

Emotional friends and relatives greeted the passengers. One man leapt over a barricade and past police to hug passenger Wolfgang Weisseger. Two crying women sat on a bench in the rain and hugged.

"The airport was filled with blood. Two of our El Al security guards were badly wounded. One boy was hit in the head and others were also hurt," said Shoshana Rabinowitz, an Israeli returning home from a visit in Austria.

A visibly shaken tourist from Vienna, Rudolph Gerhart, said: "I saw a lady with her leg shot, lying on the floor, and another man on the floor with a wound. I grabbed a lady standing behind me and pulled her away to the corner. We hit the floor for a while. I heard a woman shrieking."

Rafi Harlev, El Al's director-general, told an airport news conference that he expects "problems for tourism to Israel" because of the attacks.

He said that after the recent hijackings in the Middle East, "there is no doubt, especially in the United States, that there has been harm done to tourism to Israel. I have no doubt that part of the aim to these terrorists is to harm tourism and we have to see to it that they don't succeed."

Agency offers reward for data on attack

SAN DIEGO (AP) — The Border Patrol announced it would pay a $10,000 reward for information leading to the arrest and conviction of the gunman who shot and wounded supervisory Border Patrol Agent William Beaumet.

In another development Friday, a San Diego judge issued a no-bail arrest warrant for David Lopez Arguella, 27, in connection with the attack on Beaument last Sunday in the northern San Diego County city of Vista.

Beaumet was shot five times in the legs when he attempted to apprehend a man believed to be an illegal alien, Border Patrol spokesman Ed Pyeatt said.

Pyeatt said as Beaumet moved in for the arrest, the man suddenly turned and fired at the agent and fled.

Beaumet remains hospitalized at Palomar Hospital in Escondido and will require further surgery to repair the damage from the gunshot wounds, Pyeatt said.

The warrant issued for Lopez includes allegations of attempted murder and use of a gun in the commission of a crime. The warrant also alleges assault with a deadly weapon, which stems from a shooting incident at a party shortly before the agent's wounding, Pyeatt said.

Anyone with information on Lopez, who has used the names Albert Arciga and Joel Calderon as aliases, is urged to contact either the Border Patrol's San Diego sector offices or the San Diego County sheriff's department.

RUSSELL EDWARD TURNER

Peace officer sentenced

SUEZ CITY, Egypt (AP) — A military court today convicted a police officer of murdering seven Israeli tourists in the Sinai peninsula and sentenced him to life imprisonment at hard labor, his defense lawyer said.

Under Egyptian practice, life imprisonment generally means 25 years, with one-fourth of the sentence exempted for good conduct.

The officer, Sgt. Suleiman Khater, 24, was convicted of unpremeditated murder in the Oct. 5 shooting deaths of four children, two women and a man, all Israelis, near the Sinai border crossing where he was posted.

Khater's attorney, Emad el-Sobky, said the sentence must be approved by either Field Marshal Abdel-Halim Abu-Ghazala, the defense minister, or Maj. Gen. Hassan el-Zayat, commander of the 3rd Army which empaneled the three-judge court.

Khater's lawyers can ask for clemency after the command review, but no other appeal is allowed.

The killings had strained relations between Israel and Egypt, the only Arab country at peace with the Jewish state. Israel claimed some of the victims bled to death because officers on the scene refused to allow medical help for several hours.

Although the charge against Khater is punishable by no more than a life sentence, the prosecution had asked for death under a legal technicality.

Fugitive wanted on murder charge

PORT ARTHUR--Russell Edward Turner has a totoo of the "Grim Reaper" on his right shoulder.

The tatoo has a grisly portent of the violent twist that Turner's life has taken in the last 1½ years.

Jefferson County law enforcement authorities say Turner, 33, is wanted on warrants charging him with the Sept. 21, 1984 murder of Jewel Savoy, Jr. of Port Arthur.

Investigators say Turner apparently discovered Savoy with Turner's wife inside their Port Arthur residence and allegedly chased the victim down the street, repeatedly stabbing him. Savoy eventually died from a dozen stab wounds.

Turner was arrested the same night and posted bond and was released from jail. But on April 29, 1985, a warrant was issued for Turner's arrest when he failed to appear for a court hearing.

Then on July 4, 1985, the fugitive's eight-year-old daughter Angie Marie Turner disappeared. Investigators believe the younster is with her father.

A spokesman for the Jefferson County Sheriff's Department said Turner is a known associate of the Bandido Motorcycle gang and might be in the company of some of the members.

Officers have checked out a number of possible sightings of their elusive fugitive, including locations in Houston, Vidor, Port Arthur, Lafayette, Louisiana and Randalett, Okla., but have come up repeatedly empty-handed.

Turner, who was born in Dotesdale, England, to American parents, is described as a white male, 6-1, 235 pounds, with brown hair and blue eyes. He has a number of tattoos in addition to the "Grim Reaper" on his right shoulder--a one-inch long cross on his left shoulder and a dollar sign about an inch long on the right palm near the meaty area below the thumb.

Acquaintances have told invesitgators that Turner is addicted to Mandrax, a synthetic sedative similar to Quaalude, and needs about one to two dozen tablets a day.

Turner is believed to be accompanied by his daughter, Angie Marie, a white female, with dark brown hair, brown eyes and a dark complexion.

Officials say Turner is known to carry weapons and should be considered armed and dangerous. He has worked in the past as a welder and mechanic.

The week Turner has been added to the Texas Most Wanted list. A $1,000 reaward is being offered by the governor's office for information leading to the fugitive's capture.

Anyone who might have information concerning Turner's whereabouts is asked to call the Texas Crime Steppers Advisory Council toll-free at 1-800-252-7477 or their local crime Stoppers program.

In all cases, callers do not have to reveal their identities.

Texas population jumped 15 percent

DALLAS (AP) — Texas' population grew three times faster than that of the nation as a whole over the last five years, although that trend appears to be slowing somewhat, Census Bureau figures indicate.

While the U.S. population increased by 5.4 percent between 1980 and 1985 from 226.5 million to 238.7 million, Texas population swelled by 15 percent, from 14.22 million to 16.37 million.

About 91 percent of the U.S. population increase occurred in the South and West during the five-year period, but in the last year covered by the Census Bureau report, the number of Texans increased by fewer than 300,000.

Texas ranks fifth among the top 10 fastest growing states since 1980, after Alaska (29.7 percent), Arizona (17.2 percent) Nevada (16.9 percent) and Florida (16.6 percent).

Poet Robert Frost was born in 1875.

Boat owners prepare for long siege

NEW BEDFORD, Mass. (AP) — Quick resolution is unlikely in a fishermen's strike that is costing the nation's richest fishing port at least $1 million a day and could have an impact on Boston and New York restaurants, officials say.

About 750 fishermen rejected boat owners' demands for a higher share of profits and 150 walked picket lines Friday on piers in New Bedford and Fairhaven, carrying signs that read, "On Strike" and "Unfair."

Negotiations will not be scheduled until after Jan. 1, federal mediator Austin Skinner said Friday. "I don't think anybody really wants a long strike, but there are some real philosophical differences that have created problems."

The strike will cost New Bedford's economy $1 million a day, estimated New Bedford-area Chamber of Commerce executive director James Mathis.

"It also will mean greater demand in Boston for Canadian and Maine sea products, predicted Roger Berkowitz, a Boston seafood restaurateur. "A lot of what New Bedford is doing now is going to New York and might impact that market more so than ours."

David Barnet, an attorney for the 32-member Seafood Producers Association, said that while boat owners didn't want a strike, they were prepared "for a long siege.

"During the winter months, it's cheaper to tie up than give in to demands."

Man returns after 15-year absense

LARCHMONT, N.Y. (AP) — It sounds like something even Hollywood screenwriters would dismiss as unbelievable: After a series of head injuries, the husband walks away from home, the victim of amnesia.

Fifteen years later, another blow restores his memory, and he returns to a joyous reunion with his faithful wife on Christmas morning.

James and Anne McDonnell insist that's the way it happened.

She answered the bell Christmas morning to find her husband of 25 years standing at the door.

"It was something out of the blue," Mrs. McDonnell said Friday in the lilting brogue of her native County Cork, Ireland. "He had a beard and looked like Santa Claus. I thought it was a joke, then I recognized him."

"She couldn't believe it," her husband said. "She had never given up hope. She had my clothes hanging up in the closets. She had faith that I would be back. We looked at each other in amazement. She still didn't believe it was me."

McDonnell, 64, said that on Christmas Eve he was in the cellar of a Philadelphia diner where he worked when he banged his head and the memories of his earlier life came flooding back.

He told his wife he has spent the past 15 years in Philadelphia as Jim Peters, a short-order cook, bartender and seasonal Santa for children in an orphanage.

He vanished March 29, 1971, and even though Mrs. McDonnell had him declared dead in 1976 to get on with her life, she says she kept "hoping, hoping, hoping, maybe some day" he would return.

She stayed in the same house in Larchmont and kept her telephone listing under his name just in case. Amnesia was a possibility she said she kept in mind through the years she waited, supporting herself as a nurse's aide at New Rochelle Medical Center. "He had two accidents and had head injuries. I thought, maybe, that was it."

Dr. John Bertoni, associate professor of neurology at Jefferson Medical College of Thomas Jefferson University, was skeptical of McDonnell's story.

"I would say categorically that almost all these cases cannot be explained on any organic basis," he said. "I'm not fool enough to say it couldn't happen. But the story doesn't sound like it could have happened — it's the stuff of cartoons. I have doubts about whether he really had total amnesia or about how it ended so quickly.

"I don't know how unusual it is from a psychiatric aspect. From an organic, neurological perspective this would be unprecedented, if not impossible."

The McDonnells had been married 11 years when, on Feb. 24, 1971, McDonnell fell down the back stairs of his home. The next day he lost control of his car and crashed into a pole.

A day later he complained of a headache at work and a dizzy spell caused him to fall down a flight of stairs. Then, on March 11 he suffered a mild concussion and brief unconsciousness in another car accident.

On March 29, he said, he began walking home from an errand.

"The next thing I knew I was in Philadelphia," he said. "I don't know how I got there."

He said he didn't know anything about himself, either, except that his first name was Jim. He took the name Peters from a storefront.

McDonnell said it didn't occur to him to go to the police or see a doctor.

In Philadelphia, McDonnell worked at the P&P Luncheonette, grilling hamburgers, pouring coffee and joking with the customers, said Susan Shriver, an owner of the diner.

"He told awful old jokes," she said. "And he used to wear a rag on his head and pretend he was an Arab or an old woman." Now that he's home, McDonnell said he'd like to get his old job back — chief letter carrier in the Larchmont Post Office.

Crash victim rites slated in Florida

NEW SMYRNA BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Jerry Joe King, one of the 248 Army victims of a Newfoundland airplane crash earlier this month, is to be buried in this Florida coastal community Saturday.

King, 21, a private first class, was born in Cocoa and lived most of his life in Florida although his mother and her second husband live in Fort Worth, Texas. He will be buried with full military honors

King was returning to Fort Campbell, Ky., from duty with a 101st Airborne Division peacekeeping force in the Middle East when their charter craft crashed shortly after takeoff in Gander, Newfoundland, on Dec. 12, killing all those aboard.

Teen Center sets Dec. 31 dance

Even though Teen Center Scurry County Inc. gave up the building they had been using for functions several months ago, the organization is still in force, reports Sue Smith, spokesperson.

Future events on tap include a New Year Eve'e dance slated for 8 p.m. to 1 a.m. Tuesday at the National Guard Armony. The disco dance will be chaperoned and no drugs or alcohol will be allowed, Smith said.

A meeting to discuss the dance and other Teen Center activities was to be held at 7 p.m. Saturday at the Steve Babcock residence. The group also hopes to secure another meeting site as well as additional funding, Smith said. Anyone interested in helping is asked to call 573-2366.

Teen Center Scurry County Inc. was formed to offer teenagers alternative activities to those involving drugs or alcohol. A new board of directors will be elected in January.

Messenger offered secrets to Soviets

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House documents that a messenger allegedly offered to sell the Soviets included sensitive testimony from a Pentagon official about the relative strengths of U.S. and Soviet nuclear weapons, a declassified version of the hearing shows.

The declassified version of the congressional hearing transcript also showed that the testimony by Donald Latham, assistant secretary of defense for command, communications, control and intelligence, dealt with the Navy's ability to communicate with submarines.

Randy Jeffries, 26, was a messenger with Acme Reporting Co. when he was arrested last week and charged with offering to sell classified transcripts.

Computer class for Mid-Winter WTC session

An introduction to computer terminology, programming and applications will be given in introduction to computing (CS 130) in the Western Texas College Mid-Winter session set for Jan. 2-14.

The student will write some programs using BASIC language, Britt Canada, instructor, said. Areas covered in the applications section will include data bases, spreadsheets and graphics.

Classes in the Mid-Winter session will meet from 9-11:45 a.m. and 1-3 p.m. daily except on Jan. 4, 5, 11 and 12. Because of the stringent demands of classes, students with grade point averages below 3.0 should consider carefully course requirements before registration.

Fees for the Mid-Winter courses are $46 plus textbooks. There will also be a $20 lab fee for the computer course.

Militiamen meet for signing of treaty, others delayed

DAMASCUS, Syria (AP) — Lebanon's Moslem chieftains arrived here Saturday to sign a peace pact designed to end Lebanon's civil war, but the ceremony was delayed when a snowstorm slowed the Christian militia leader's arrival, his aides said.

and his Shiite Moslem war ally Nabih Berri arrived in the Syrian capital in the early morning hours after a drive from Jumblatt's ancestral residence in Moukhtara, southeast of Beirut.

But a snowstorm sweeping through the central Lebanese mountains delayed Elie Hobeika's arrival for the signing ceremony, which was originally set for 10 a.m., aides to the commander of the Christian Lebanese Forces said.

No new time has been set for the signing pending Hobeika's arrival from Beirut, 110 miles away by car. Zero visibility made helicopter flights impossible, said the aides, who spoke on condition they not be identified.

Jumblatt, who serves as tourism and transport minister in the Lebanese government, will sign the Syrian-brokered accord for Progressive Socialist Party. Berri, the justice minister, will sign for his Shiite Amal movement and Hobeika for the Lebanese Forces.

By mid-morning, more than 35 other Moslem and Christian Lebanese politicians were in Damascus to attend the signing ceremony under the sponsorship of Syria's Vice President Abdul-Halim Khaddam, architect of the armistice agreement.

This will be the first peace accord concluded by militia chieftains who control the guns and warriors. Scores of previous agreements concluded by politicians without military powerbases collapsed in the decade of fighting that has claimed more than 100,000 lives.

Details of the new accord have not officially been spelled out. But sources close to the negotiations say it proclaims a final armistice that will be supervised by Syrian military observers while a new government is to be formed to introduce political reforms.

The reforms are designed to give Moslems an equal share with the Christians in the government, army, parliament and judiciary, all of which have been dominated by Christians since Lebanon's 1943 independence from France.

Several Lebanese Christian political leaders openly oppose the new accord.

Shooting went on 'forever'

ROME (AP) — Holiday travelers at Leonardo de Vinci airport were carrying baggage to check-in counters, sipping coffee and buying last-minute gifts at a terminal shop when the terrorists struck.

The men hurled grenades and fired submachine guns. The bullets sprayed throughout much of the 175-foot-long glass-and-steel terminal. Some witnesses said the gunfire lasted two or three minutes. Others said up to 10 minutes.

"They were shooting, shooting for the longest time," an injured Italian told the state-run RAI television from his hospital bed.

Anna Girometta, owner of a gift shop, said it "seemed to go on forever."

Most of those killed and wounded Friday were found a few steps from her shop at an expresso bar.

The military attache at the Mexican Embassy in Rome, Gen. Donato Miranda, had been sipping coffee at the bar with his secretary, Genoveva Jaime. He planned to catch a flight to Frankfurt, West Germany, from the other end of the terminal. The embassy said Ms. Jaime had accompanied him to the airport.

Both were killed.

Merlini, an airport worker, said the terrorists were "firing in all directions."

Worst hit was the corner of the terminal where the Israeli airline El Al, TWA and Pan Am have their check-in counters and where the coffee bar and new fast-food shops are located.

The three airlines were checking in passengers for Tel Aviv, New York, Athens and Brussels.

Charles Shinn, 69, of Englewood, Colo., said from his bed in St. Eugenio Hospital that he and his wife, Jeanne, were standing in line at the El Al baggage counter en route to Tel Aviv when the violence began.

"There was a large canvas bag sitting on the floor, right beside me ... and I think it was that bag (that exploded). ... It was practically right in my face," he said.

Energy aid program helps needy people

Texas Electric Service Company's Energy Aid Program to help customers facing crisis situations pay their energy bills has assisted more than 5,000 families in its nearly three years of operation, the company has announced today.

To date, nearly 94,000 customers and employees have contributed $332,865 to the fund. These funds have been used to pay the utility bills of 5,427 needy, ill or elderly customers. Funds are used to pay essential energy bills of all utilities, including the electric company.

In the Snyder area, which includes Sweetwater and Colorado City, more than $4,000 have been disbursed to some 164 needy customers since the program was begun.

Energy Aid funding comes primarily from voluntary contributions by Texas Electric customers and employees who add or pledge $1 or more to their monthly electric bill payments and earmark the donation for Emnergy Aid. An itemized statement of a customer's annual contribution, which are tax deductible, is sent with the December bill.

The Energy Aid program was begun in February 1983 to pay for essential energy services for needy senior citizens, people who are ill or disabled and families facing a temporary crisis. The energy assistance fund in administered by an independent agency. In Snyder, the fund is handled by the United Way.

"Texas Electric has always worked with customers who contact us when they have a crisis situation," said Jack Smartt, manager. "Sometimes we work out a payout arrangement. And now, thanks to the generosity of our electric customers, we also refer some customers to the United Way."

"Usually, contributions are less that $5 a month, he said, "but even small amounts add up over a period of time."

Jean Smith rejoins staff at Senior Citizens Center

Jean Smith, formerly assistant director of the Senior Citizens Center, has rejoined the staff as VIVA coordinator.

Mrs. Smith resigned at the end of June after about seven years with the center. In her new role, she will be replacing Billie Smith who has resigned to assist her husband in his business.

VIVA stands for Very Important Volunteers in Action and senior citizens who give volunteer time to community projects work through this office.

"I am looking forward to working with our volunteers and local stations who request volunteer assistance," Mrs. Smith said. "I appreciate all the support given VIVA from within the center and in the community, and I would like to hear from those interested in giving or using volunteer time. VIVA is not new to me, so I understand how important it is both to our senior citizens and the community.

The senior center will be closed Dec. 31 and Jan. 1 for the New Year holiday. It will resume its regular schedule on Jan. 2, opening at 8:30 a.m.

In 1958, the Soviet Union proposed a zone free of nuclear weapons from the Arctic Circle to the Mediterranean.

Debate over mushroom picking grows

By MIKE THOELE
The Register-Guard

EUGENE, Ore. (AP) — There's a new clear-cutting controversy simmering in the woods. But it's considerably closer to ground level than the lofty tops of the fir and spruce trees in whose shadow it's raging.

The subject is mushrooms, specifically Oregon's popular chanterelle mushroom. The golden goody from the floor of the Northwest's forests has been discovered by the world and now hundreds of tons — yes, tons — of the tasty fungus are coming out of the woods and heading to market each fall.

The commercial explosion in the picking of chanterelles and, to a lesser extent, other native mushrooms has sent battalions of pickers into the Cascades and the Coast Range. On some days, certain coastal back roads are packed bumper-to-bumper with pickers' cars.

The boom, barely five years old, has created a new economic niche for mushroom buyers, who operate throughout Western Oregon, air-freighting their wares to metropolitan markets around the United States or shipping them off to Washington to be canned for export to Europe.

By the time it hits a retail buyer in New York or Munich, the lowly chanterelle sells for upward of $15 a pound.

But action begets reaction.

Suddenly, the weekend pickers who've stalked the chanterelle with blissful success for decades are angered to find their favorite spots gleaned clean. And, from the most dilettantish hobbyist to the most businesslike buyer, there's talk of overpicking and concern about the future of the chanterelle.

"The demand has just become tremendous," says Chuck Harkins, who's commonly identified as the Eugene area's biggest and most experienced buyer. "The concern about overpicking started coming up about a year ago. The problem is that nobody really knows. Some people think if you pick a spot too much or if you pick it in the wrong way, then you'll hurt the future growth. Other people think it doesn't make any difference."

The concern ripples through all levels of the mushroom business. At the Greengrocer vegetable stand in Eugene, owner Tina Farley says concern over the chanterelle's future has caused her to limit her buying to one picker. "I don't want to be responsible for sending a dozen people out there to ruin the crop," she says.

Harkins says fear of overpicking is so great that, in some quarters, there's talk of the need for regulation — picking permits, bag limits, buyer registration and fees.

Freeman Rowe is skeptical about the dangers of overpicking. Rowe, Lane Community College biology professor who spends much of his time studying, cultivating and pursuing mushrooms, says drastic regulatory measures are being promoted in the state of Washington. There, amateur mycologists — mushroom fanciers and pickers — have announced plans to push for state legislation that would ban all commercial picking of mushrooms.

The proposal may encounter tough sledding because Washington has two major canneries that process hundreds of thousands of pounds of native mushrooms destined for Europe.

Diane Burr of Springfield is a buyer for one of those canneries, operated by the Alber Co. of Tacoma. In a good year, she buys up to 40,000 pounds of mushrooms from local pickers.

Ms. Burr is among those who maintain that chanterelles should be knife-cut at ground level, not uprooted. Those who subscribe to that view say that pulling up the plant inhibits regrowth.

Some pickers and buyers also say that entire stands should not be picked. They say some mushrooms should be left.

"There's just so much that's not known," says Harkins. "We know that mushrooms have been picked for centuries for Europe and now there's a problem with the supply. But is it because of overpicking or because of the acid rain that's killing the forests in Europe?"

Harkins, who works full time as a dealer of edible plants and buys for the domestic fresh mushroom market in major cities across the country, is more certain of the economic impact of mushrooms. For Lane County pickers, chanterelle prices can range as high as $2.25 a pound. Harkins says a good picker can haul in 4,000 pounds during the 90-day fall season.

"There are basically two kinds of serious pickers," he says. "There are foragers, who have made a living for years gathering and selling things from the forest. And there are people who are out of work and are doing it very seriously to survive."

At the academic end of the spectrum, Rowe says much of the "overpicking" debate really is a squabble about who will get the mushrooms, not about whether the plant is endangered.

"There's a fundamental element of greed that pops up when any two people go chanterelle hunting," he says. "If you watch two weekend pickers out in the woods together, you can see each of them racing to see what's behind the next stump before the other one gets there."

Rowe says his experiments with plots he has picked for years indicate that techniques such as knife-cutting or uprooting, partial picking or total picking seem to make no difference in mushroom regeneration.

"There is simply no way that anybody's going to get all the mushrooms out there," he says. "Not even if you go through the woods with a vacuum cleaner."

Model trains said keep rolling along

NEW BERLIN, Wis. (AP) — Not long after the age of the railroad was ushered in early in the 19th century, the miniature counterparts of the great steam locomotives and cars appeared, and toy train sets have been popular ever since.

Model trains have endured because they "contribute to creative play and provide a firsthand experience in dealing with 'technology' such as electricity and mechanical control," explains Frederick E. Gates, president of Marklin Inc., the U.S. subsidiary of the oldest manufacturer of model railroads and accessories. The parent company is based in Goppingen, West Germany.

An inherent ability to stimulate fantasy is crucial to the staying power of toys, says Brian Sutton-Smith, author of the recent book, "Toys as Culture."

"The great shift in modern times is from physical to symbolic play," says Sutton-Smith, University of Pennsylvania Graduate School of Education professor. "Children are more stimulated toward having imaginative ideas than ever before."

As familiarity with a toy increases, children tend to create fantasies for the toy, rather than feeling inferior to it, he adds. For example, creating a train layout — assembling track, adding landscape details — allows children to build and add into this miniature world all the details they can imagine, then to alter or invent a new layout-world.

"What makes the train so exciting as you lie down beside it and see it and hear it go by is what you have projected onto it in terms of your own fantasies and dreams of life," SuttonSmith says. "The train is made into a mirror of your mind."

Toy trains are not the private domain of children; they're becoming just as prevalent in adults' lives, Gates points out.

"We've found children love owning a model train," he says. "It can grow from a gift into a hobby, and then a chance to expand and explore the hobby as an adult.

"Such toys also provide opportunity for parent-child participation," he notes. "For example, in the case of model railroading, nearly 50 percent share their hobby with at least one other family member, according to a recent survey of model purchasers by Model Railroader magazine."

Far different from today's sophisticated train sets were the early models dating from the mid-1830s, according to researchers at Marklin, which manufactured tinplate toys and doll accessories from 1859-1891. In 1891 it produced the first "standardized" model trains.

Prior to that time, the first miniature trains, which were driven by clockwork, were of lacquered tinplate, wood or cardboard. Others were simple toys to pull or push on the floor.

Later toy railroads that ran on spirit burners were dangerous, since the spirit would often spill when rough handling by children derailed the trains, causing fires.

The first step toward railroads in systematic form came in 1891, when Marklin presented a complete railroad and track program at the Leipzig Spring Fair, according to the firm's historians. In 1900 it came out with the first electric railroad.

In 1902 the trade was presented with railroads powered by clockwork, steam and electricity in various gauges. The first transformers appeared in the 1920s, making the toys less dangerous than those taking power directly from the lighting circuit.

As the popularity of real railroads grew, the faithfulness of reproductions of locomotives and cars also grew, Gates says. Almost all the technological developments — from the track railroad to the suspension railroad — could be found in detailed reproduction in the company's line just a short while after they went into real-life service, he adds.

In 1784, Congress ratified a treaty by which Britain recognized the independence of the United States.

Veteran gives up his fast

SEATTLE (AP) — Gino Casanova, the Vietnam veteran who ended a 51-day fast when President Reagan agreed to talk to him about men still missing from that war, said he'll resume his fast if he doesn't get a firm date from the White House.

Casanova said he'd head back into the bamboo cage where he conducted his original fast if he doesn't get a response to his request for a meeting date by noon on Jan. 8.

"And this time, no water, nothing," the 34-year-old ex-Marine said Thursday. "This isn't pressure on Reagan, it's on me. I didn't enjoy the fast experience, it's the last thing I want to do again, but this thing has gone on too far."

He said he planned to begin sending daily telegrams after the first of the year, asking for a date for his promised meeting with the president.

Casanova ended his fast Dec. 5 after a telephone call from Reagan. The veteran said Reagan agreed to a meeting within 60 days to talk about missing-in-action issues.

Humorist will not leave city

ST. PAUL, Minn. (AP) — Radio humorist Garrison Keillor has bought a house for an estimated $300,000, ending speculation that he might leave the city in anger over reports about his upcoming marriage Sunday, a newspaper said Friday.

Keillor bought a 2½-story red brick house earlier this month from Leonard Lilyholm, an architect and former Olympic hockey player, the St. Paul Pioneer Press and Dispatch said.

Keillor hosts public radio's popular "A Prarie Home Companion" show, and wrote the recent best-selling novel, "Lake Wobegon Days."

Friends and associates speculated that he might soon leave St. Paul, where his show originates, after he said was upset about recent articles on his personal life.

The stories included reports on Keillor's planned marriage Sunday in Copenhagen, Denmark, to Ulla Skaerved. The two met in 1959 at Anoka High School, where she was a foreign exchange student.

Mom reunited with her son

AMARILLO, Texas (AP) — After four years of battling her native Poland, Ilona Aleksandrowicz has won a victory that carried her son across the sea and into her arms.

For the first time in years, the Amarillo woman was able to start the day Friday with her son, 13-year-old Sami. And next month, they will move to California to join her husband, Zbigniew, and be together for the first time since he fled Poland in 1981.

"It was the best Christmas present of all for me," Mrs. Aleksandrowicz said of the moment Sami stepped off a plane at Amarillo International Airport Thursday night.

Sami, who speaks no English, was all smiles as his mother hugged and kissed him Friday.

"I can't stop kissing him. He missed four years of my hugging and kissing," she said.

She has not seen the boy since 1982, when she followed her husband out of communist Poland.

Zbigniew was the first to leave in September 1981. He told government officials he was taking a two-week vacation to Vienna, but upon his arrival he entered a refugee camp.

Mrs. Aleksandrowicz applied for a passport for herself and Sami, who was then 9. Her passport was granted, but Sami's wasn't. Leaving him in the custody of her brother, she headed for Vienna.

"I knew if I wouldn't get out this time, then I would not at all," she said.

While still in Poland, Mrs. Aleksandrowicz was not silent about her objections to the communist government. She was fired from her job for anti-communist remarks.

"I didn't like it there. I mean, it was my home country, but I didn't like the government," she says.

From Vienna, the couple came to Oklahoma, where Zbigniew went to work for an oil company. After he was laid off, the couple headed for Amarillo to join a friend from the Viennese refugee camp.

Zbigniew worked a short time in Amarillo, but he became upset that Ilona was making more money in her position as manager of a Toot'n Totem convenience store.

"He didn't want me to support the family. Because I was making more money than him, he did not feel like the man of the family," she said.

So Zbigniew left for California, where Ilona and Sami will soon join him in Anaheim. Mrs. Aleksandrowicz will have to give up her job at Toot'n Totem to join her husband, but she says she doesn't mind since the move will bring the family together.

Getting Sami out of Poland wasn't easy, she said. Because she left her son in the custody of her brother,

Council seeks rollback of utility rates

PORT NECHES, Texas (AP) — The Port Neches city council has voted unanimously to adopt an ordinance forcing a rollback of Gulf States Utilities Co. rates in 10 days.

With little discussion, the council decided Friday to roll back present rates to the same rates GSU charges its Louisiana customers. The action makes Port Neches the first city in GSU's Southeast Texas service area to challenge the utility company's charges to residential, commercial and industrial customers.

Ron McKenzie, division vice president for Gulf States, said GSU would appeal the action to the Texas Public Utility Commission.

"While I'm sure tonight's action has a certain amount of political appeal, I don't think it was reflective of the rates in effect and the way they were orginally set," McKenzie said.

McKenzie said he believes other cities that participated in recent public hearings about GSU rates will follow the actions of the Port Neches council.

Mayor Gary Graham denied that the council's actions were politically motivated. He said inequities exist between the rates GSU charges its Texas customers and its Louisiana customers, and that council's actions are meant to help ratepayers in the city's jurisdiction.

"Let's start from here," Graham said. "And if they (GSU) are due an increase in revenues, we and Louisiana can grant those revenues as they deserve them."

City Attorney Harry Wright said Louisiana residential customers are subsidizing industrial rates, while in Texas, both residential and commercial customers are subsidizing industrial consumers.

The council's action requires GSU to file a schedule of charges for all of its service area with the city, after which Wright said the council will reduce electric bills to the lowest level in the service area.

Wright said that East Texas residential consumers pay about 28 percent more for their electricity than Louisiana residents, and that East Texas commercial consumers pay 17 percent more than Louisiana commercial consumers.

Wright said GSU could appeal to the PUC, but the PUC does not have jurisdiction over how a city sets its utility rates and must wait until the rate case is brought to an appeals court.

"That commission can't jump into our soup until the appellate level," he said. GSU attorney Cecil Johnson said, "The law doesn't say you can lower the rates to whatever you want them to be, it has to be based on actual costs to doing business."

Wright said the city questions GSU's position that it is entitled to collect construction costs for the River Bend nuclear plant. GSU can collect construction costs only if the company's financial stability is in jeopardy, he said.

"They have to remember we have the highest bankruptcies and 21 percent unemployment. We need some relief. They (GSU) keep pouring more hot coals on our heads," he said.

The council voted to employ the firm of O'Brien-Krietzberg and Associates as rate consultants to study whether GSU is entitled to recover construction costs. The cost to ratepayers for hiring the firm is about $1 per person throughout the service area, he said.

But ratepayers would be saved as much as $60 million if the firm proves GSU is not entitled to recover construction costs, he said.

McKenzie said the city's action to hire experts is a duplication because GSU's experts already have made the same study.

Johnson said the firm the city chose "has developed a well-earned reputation for never turning in a report that is fair to a utility."

Joyce Roddy, a Port Arthur resident who has fought to have GSU's rates lowered, said the "battle is just beginning."

"I'm so happy. This has taken me three years ... and it's finally happening," she said.

Humorist Stephen Leacock was born in 1869.

Renewed tribal feuding likely

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Rival black tribes held peace talks after at least 58 blacks died in Christmas fighting in Natal province, but more feuding appeared possible after a Zulu chief ordered "illegal residents" out of the area.

Also on Friday, police shot and killed three blacks in Cape province, and lawyers for black activist Winnie Mandela said they will file suit against Law and Order Minister Louis le Grange challenging a state order banning her from her Soweto home.

Mrs. Mandela remained in Cape Town, where she went Monday after police threatened to arrest her again for defying the banning order last weekend. She visited her jailed husband, African National Congress guerrilla leader Nelson Mandela, in Pollsmoor prison for the fourth straight day.

Johannesburg lawyer Prakesh Diar said the suit against le Grange probably will be heard Jan. 7 in Supreme Court, but said Mrs. Mandela will likely return to Soweto, outside Johannesburg, after the weekend.

Mandela is jailed for life on a conviction of plotting sabotage against the white-led government.

At least 58 black men died when 5,000 members of the Zulu and Pondo tribes clashed on Christmas in the Umbumbulu tribal district of Natal province.

On Friday, after five hours of peace talks supervised by white police, a Zulu chief said he was ordering an unspecified number of "illegal residents" to leave the area.

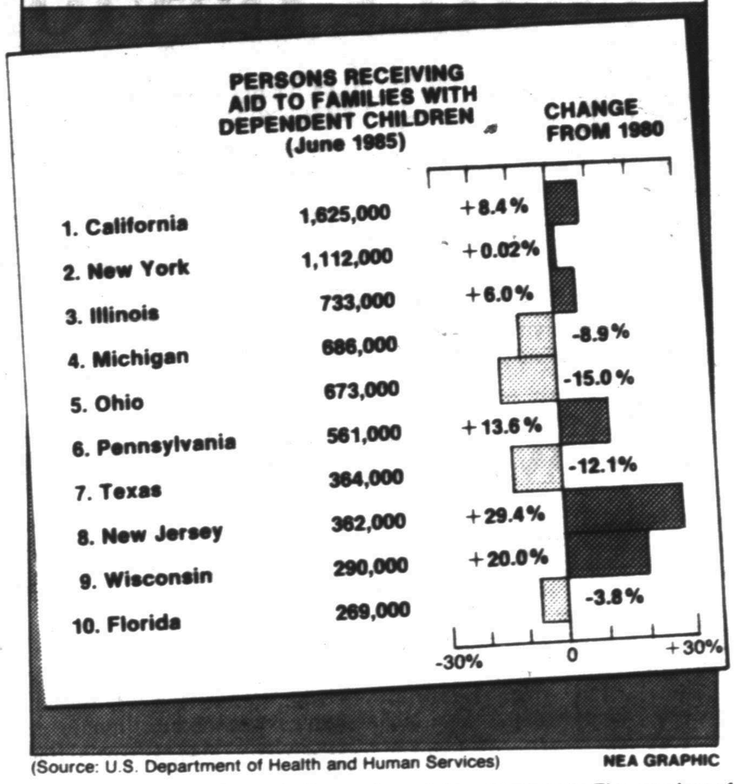

An official announcement on the talks gave no details. But the order by Chief Bhekizitha Makhanya appeared aimed mainly at Pondos who migrated from their impoverished, nominally independent tribal homeland of Transkei in the hope of finding work in Durban.

The order risked provoking further clashes with members of the 6-million strong Zulu tribe, the largest in South Africa.

The Zulu's Kwa-Zulu homeland, which has refused independence offered under the apartheid system, is overcrowded except near Durban, a large Indian Ocean port.

Vacation interrupted to tape speech

LOS ANGELES (AP) — President Reagan is interrupting his holiday today to deliver his weekly radio address and record a televised message to the Soviet people to be broadcast by state-run Soviet television on New Year's Day.

Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev will address Americans at the same time in the unprecedented exchange of greetings announced by the two governments on Friday.

The messages are to be recorded in advance and made available for radio and television broadcast in the United States.

Four El Pasoans die in fire in Indianapolis, Indiana

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — A fire that killed a Texas serviceman, his wife and two sons Friday morning could have been ignited by an electrical malfunction, an Indianapolis fire department official said.

Richard Longerich, the fire department's public information officer, said investigators are looking at the possibility an electrical malfunction sparked the blaze in the eastside Indianapolis house. Investigators said they found a number of fuses by a fuse box in the house.

Firefighters were called to the two-story brick house at 5:10 a.m. and found smoke and flames pouring from a window, authoriites said.

The victims were identified as Staff Sgt. Joseph Douglas, 31, of Fort Bliss, Texas; his wife, Barbara, 30; and their sons, Joseph Jr., 3, and Cameron, 2.

Officials said the family was staying with Mrs. Douglas' parents, Wallace D. Fortner, 68, and his wife, Cleo, 63, for the holidays.

The Fortners, sleeping in a downstairs bedroom, escaped from the house by climbing through a first-floor northside window, authorities said.

District Fire Chief Douglas Walker said all four victims were sleeping in an upstairs bedroom and were overcome by smoke.

Fireman Earl Ridout said he found three of the victims on the floor and the fourth, believed to have been Cameron, in a crib.

Douglas was taken to Community Hospital where he died at 6:15 a.m. His wife died at Wishard at 7:15 a.m. Cameron was dead on arrival at Methodist and his brother died 15 minutes later.

Judging from the destruction in the kitchen, the fire apparently had been burning for some time before firefighters arrived, Walker said. He said that if there had been smoke alarms in the home, the tragedy might have been averted.

Pvt. Justin Reuter of the fire rescue squad said the heat of the fire was so intense that it melted the oxygen mask straps on the back of his head.

Fortner said his daughter and her family had packed their car and were planning to leave Saturday to visit Douglas' mother in Florida before returning to Fort Bliss near El Paso.

Fortner said he was awakened by "very harsh and choking black smoke. I went out of the bedroom window in my underwear. Then, I helped my wife out and started yelling for help."

A neighbor heard Fortner and called the fire department.

"I have no idea what happened," Fortner said. "I heard Joe (his son-in-law) up on the roof hollering for Barbara."

"Then, I heard nothing," he added.

Mrs. Douglas' brother, Larry Fortner, was visibly shaken when he arrived at his parents' home.

Larry Fortner and his family, who live in Duluth, Minn., also were spending the holidays in Indianapolis. They were staying with his wife's relatives when he was informed of the tragedy. Fortner is editor of the Duluth News-Tribune & Herald.

Actress wants to meet Turner

NEW YORK (AP) — Actress Cybill Shepherd adores actor Alan Alda, loves talk show host Dick Cavett and really likes actor Matt Dillon, but cable television mogul Ted Turner is the man she most wants to meet.

Miss Shepherd, star of ABC-TV's "Moonlighting, commented on 32 well-known men in an article in Us magazine's Jan. 13 issue.

Turner "looks attractive and intriguing," she said.

However, she said she has seen only photographs of him. "Maybe if I saw him moving around, I wouldn't be so interested."

HUD plan offered

DALLAS (AP) — In a court-ordered plan to remedy segregation in East Texas public housing, the U.S. Department of Housing and Urgan Development stresses voluntary compliance by local authorities and rejects any major changes in the housing administration.

The plan was submitted in response to U.S. District Judge William Wayne Justice's finding that HUD and local authorities have caused or condoned segregation throughout a 36-county area in East Texas.

That area has been involved in a 5-year-old civil rights lawsuit.

In their filing last week, HUD officials said their voluntary compliance efforts — implemented after Justice ordered in December 1983 that projects in Clarksville and Red River County be integrated — already have shown measurable success.

"In 27 authorities (including Clarksville) previously found in apparent non-compliance, the number of one-race projects has been reduced from 67 to 22," HUD officials said in the filing.

Seventeen of those 37 housing authorities have been found by HUD to be in compliance with civil rights rules — based on the extent of integration and the attitude of the authorities' leadership, HUD officials said.

But the plaintiffs' attorney said Friday that though HUD may have achieved token integration at some sites, it has failed to quickly resolve the central problem: the continued existence of housing sites that clearly are "racially identifiable."

Attorney Michael M. Daniel said that on that basis, HUD's proposal is "woefully inadequate to deal with massive constitutional violations" Justice found in a July 31 ruling.

Daniel also criticized HUD for lacking goals or quotas that could be used to measure a housing authority's success or failure at integration.

'Great win for our conference...'

Teaff's Baylor Bears dominate LSU

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) - Baylor Coach Grant Teaff was out to prove a point against LSU in the 27th Annual Liberty Bowl and his Bears backed their coach to the hilt by dominating 12th-ranked LSU to turn in an impressive 21-7 victory.

"The thing we wanted to do was prove the Southwest Conference is a great football conference," Teaff said after Friday night's victory.

"It was a match between two teams that finished second in their leagues. This was a great win for us and our conference," Teaff said.

The victory over the Southeastern Conference Tigers climaxed a Cinderella season for the Bears, who finished 9-3 after being picked to finish as low as seventh in the nine-team conference.

LSU, which finished a 9-2-1 campaign, never really got untracked and remained in the contest as long as it did because of a defense that refused to quit.

"Baylor just outplayed us on both sides of the ball," said LSU quarterback Jeff Wickersham. "I think we played our worst game of the season offensively and that Baylor has one of the best defenses we've played this year."

While Wickersham was having his troubles, Baylor's alternating quarterback tandem of Cody Carlson and Tom Muecke shredded the LSU defense with a precision passing game.

Carlson sandwiched a pair of scoring passes around field goals of 23 and 35 yards by Terry Syler to lead the Bear offense.

The 6-foot-3, 193-pound junior completed 9 of 12 passes for 161 yards and was named the game's MVP.

Carlson found Matt Clark with a 5-yard scoring toss in the first quarter and put the contest away with a 15-yard scoring strike to John Simpson and a 2-point conversion pass to Clark in the fourth quarter.

Baylor senior quarterback Tom Muecke hit 9 of his 18 pass attempts for 113 yards, while Simpson accounted for 117 yards with three receptions.

Baylor overcame an early 7-0 deficit to lead 10-7 at the half and then throttled the Tiger offense for most of the second half as they put the contest away.

LSU's Norman Jefferson shocked the Bears early as he returned a Buzzy Sawyer punt 79 yards for a touchdown, a Liberty Bowl record.

Jefferson hauled in the punt at his own 21-yard line and found an alley down the left sideline. The Tiger junior shook a pair of potential tacklers at the Bears' 30 as he handed LSU a 7-0 lead with 5:17 remaining in the opening quarter.

Jefferson's run broke the old punt return record of 63 yards set in 1974 by Maryland's Bob Smith against Tennessee.

After Jefferson's TD scamper, the Tigers were unable to penetrate any further than the Baylor 30-yard line.

Baylor amassed 489 yards in total offense and 26 first downs to only 192 yards and nine first downs for the Tigers.

"I think this was our best defensive performance of the year," said Baylor junior cornerback Ron Francis, who recovered a fumble and intercepted a pass during the game.

"It appeared we really shut down their running game and that was a big key for us. This win will really give us a lot of momentum for next year and it should really help our recruiting," Francis said.

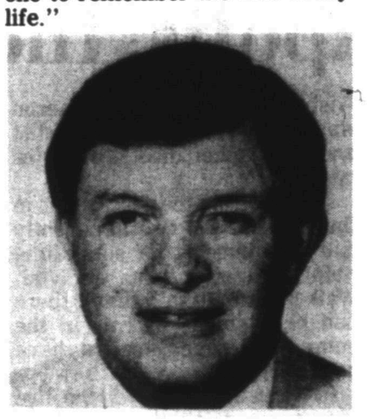

LSU Coach Bill Arnsparger blamed himself for the Tigers' loss.

"It is my responsibility to have us prepared to play. We were disorganized in every phase of the game. I did a poor job," Arnsparger said.

"We failed to take advantage of the opportunities we had," the LSU coach said. "We were beaten on well-thrown ball and well-run (pass) routes."

Baylor senior offensive tackle Mark Cochran was thankful to end his career on a happy note.

"This win is so sweet," Cochran smiled in the Bears' dressing room. "I've always heard that you always remember your last game, so I have a good one to remember the rest of my life."

'Bo' will remain in football, believes Auburn Coach Dye

DALLAS (AP) - Does Pat Dye know something Bo Jackson isn't telling?

Speculation that Heisman Trophy winner Jackson might choose professional football over professional baseball took a bullish turn on Friday with the Auburn Tigers arrival in Dallas to begin Cotton Bowl workouts.

Coach Dye, who has been close to Jackson's decision-making through the All-American running back's career, predicted Jackson will choose football in 1986.

"I'd say he will probably play football," said Dye. "I think he could realize the most money upfront quicker in professional football.

"He knows he can play pro football. He doesn't know for sure about his baseball career."

Jackson seemed somewhat surprised his coach had speculated about his career.

Jackson recovered and said "Well, everybody has their own idea. I'll decide the first of the summer."

Jackson will play on the Auburn baseball team in the spring. He batted .401 with 17 home runs last year.

Dye said Jackson "has the greatest eye-hand coordination of any athlete I've ever seen. He is a gifted guy with tremendous speed.

"I don't care what he does. I just want to see him happy. I love my kids. I'd like to see 'em all become bank presidents."

Dye said Auburn was proud to be a part of the Cotton Bowl's 50th anniversary game.

"We're going to try to enjoy the occasion and the festivities," said Dye. "We're not going to ride herd on anybody while we're here. We just hope our players are mature enough to take part in the parties and things and still realize the real reason why we are here."

Auburn will be trying for its fourth consecutive bowl victory. It's the Tigers' first appearance in the Cotton Bowl.

Texas A&M's is making its first appearance in the Cotton Bowl in 18 years.

"I think you will see a great football game," said Dye. "A&M is a hungry football team. I'm not sure our folks are as hungy as A&M and that's probably my biggest concern."

The 16th ranked Tigers are two-point favorites over the 11th rated Aggies, who are going to their first bowl under Coach Jackie Sherrill.

"A&M reminds me a lot of Alabama," said Dye. "The Aggies have tremendous team speed. They have a giant offensive line and their quarterback (Kevin Murray) is like playing against Doug Flutie only Murray is a better passer."

Tiffin may figure in Aloha outcome

HONOLULU (AP) - Alabama's strong-legged kicker Van Tiffin could, as he has in the past, figure prominently in the outcome of the 15th-ranked Crimson Tide's Aloha Bowl matchup against Southern California.

Tiffin's latest field goal - from 52 yards as time expired Nov. 30 - cost arch-rival Auburn a top-ten ranking. His fourth three-pointer of the game gave 8-2-1 Alabama a 25-23 victory over the Tigers, who wound up ranked 16th at 8-3 and in the Cotton Bowl against Texas A&M.

Tiffin has proven himself to be one of Coach Ray Perkins' most valuable performers under pressure the last three seasons. Tonight, Tiffin will get his final chance this season when the Tide meets the 6-5 Trojans.

The 5-foot-10, 163-pound junior from Red Bay, Ala., has scored a Tide-record 234 kicking points since 1983. That includes 46 of 71 field goal attempts, and a perfect 96 of 96 in extra point kicks. His longest kick is a school-record 57 yarder earlier this season.

The extra-points, when combined with Peter Kim's 54 and five by other kickers preceeding Tiffin at Alabama, represent a national collegiate record of 155 consecutive PATs.

The game, which begins at 7 p.m. CST Saturday at 50,000-seat Aloha Stadium, had sold approximately 35,000 tickets by Friday night.

Last year, Southern Methodist's Brandy Brownlee and Notre Dame's John Carney each kicked a pair of field goals as the Mustangs beat the Fighting Irish, 27-20. Carney made an Aloha Bowl record 51-yard kick, while Brownlee knocked a 47-yarder.

Simmons still trying to run past injuries

HOUSTON (AP) - Three seasons ago, University of Texas Coach Fred Akers thought by this season running back Edwin Simmons would be a Heisman Trophy candidate.

Simmons thought he'd have established himself as a premier runner.

But going into Tuesday's Bluebonnet Bowl battle against 10th ranked Air Force, the only statistical lead is in fumbles.

Three knee operations, the advice of doctors who told him to quit football and the long road back, have not deterred Simmons from making a comeback.

"I like to prove people wrong and I guess I've done that to this point," Simmons said. "Lots of people outside the program told me I was washed up. No one expected anything from me this year.

"But I never thought of quitting.

"I'm kind of like our team. Nobody thought our team would do anything this year and no one thought I'd do anything either."

Simmons hasn't been able to play a full game this season but he's the team's No. 3 rusher with 369 yards on 86 carries.

He's working on overcoming a team-leading nine fumbles.

"That's the thing that I still have to work on the most," Simmons said. "Most of my fumbles have come when I was trying to get that extra yard. But I'm improving."

Simmons spent two weeks during the summer working out in Houston with Tom Williams, a former Houston Oiler assistant coach who now operates a workout facility here and then survived two-a-days with the Longhorns.

Simmons' injury-marred career is even more magnified because of the high hopes that he would be the next Earl Campbell, a Longhorn Heisman winner.

Simmons appeared on his way to rewriting Campbell's records with 100-yard performances in his first two college games against Rice and Oklahoma.

But seven days later he dislocated his left knee cap against Arkansas and most of the talk about Simmons since then has been about medical problems and not athletic skills.

Simmons will go into the game as the Horns' No. 3 rusher with 369 yards on 86 carries, the best single season figure of his career.

Sunday wild card matchups to feature key inside battle

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. (AP) - The last time Bart Oates and Michael Carter bumped heads was in the 1980 Holiday Bowl.

Carter played for Southern Methodist and was named defensive player of the game. Oates was the center for Brigham Young. He didn't win anything, but his Cougars took a wild 46-45 decision behind the passing of Jim McMahon.

Oates again will be willing to accept team honors Sunday when his New York Giants meet the defending Super Bowl champion San Francisco 49ers and Carter in the National Football Conference wild-card game at Giants Stadium.

"In terms of playing against the best, I'm getting a chance to play against one of the best at the nose guard position in Michael Carter," said Oates. "That's evidenced by the fact that the players voted him to the Pro Bowl."

Despite missing several games this season, Carter has recorded 47 tackles and seven sacks, while helping the 49ers' limit opponents to just 105.2 rushing yards per game.

"He's a good, hard worker who has quickness, speed and strength," said Oates. "You find a lot of nose guards good in one of those areas, but not the others. He has them to a degree that most other nose guards in the league don't."

A fifth-round draft pick in 1984, Carter has emerged this season as one of the top defensive players in the league.

"Michael is one of the real bright spots on our club," 49ers Coach Bill Walsh said. "He is an outstanding nose guard and conceivably the best man in that position in the league. He is a powerful, explosive man."

He also is a player many National Football League clubs passed over because of his track and field background as a shot putter. He was the silver medalist at the 1984 Summer Olympics.

"There is a natural question with a track and field man of how intensely they want to play football and whether they are willing to make the physical sacrifices," Walsh said. "I guess there was a general feeling he would not like to play football."

Walsh said many pro scouts may have given bad reports on Carter because of the style of defense played by SMU. It was a slanting and looping style that

Men's cagers schedule meeting Monday night

The Snyder men's basketball league will meet to discuss league fees, roster limits and scheduling Monday night at 7:30 in the Scurry County Boy's Club, it has been announced.

League games will be held at Travis Gym. A "Top 4 Tourney" will be played at Scurry County Coliseum following the regular season.

All teams interested in participating in the league should be represented at Monday's meeting.

For further information, contact Russell Gafford t 573-7998 or Greg Gafford at 573-4136.

49ERS VS GIANTS

had Carter out of position on many plays because he moved so quickly.

"I can't say we spotted that and other teams didn't," Walsh said. "But that was justification for some of the bad games he had. He is truly a great talent."

It's a talent the Giants will have to overcome to defeat the 49ers for the first time in six games. The most recent loss came last year in the second round of the playoffs when San Francisco ousted the Giants 21-10.

New York was held to just 87 yards rushing in that game, and Coach Bill Parcells says the team that controls the running game this year, probably will win.

The Giants come into the game with their most productive ground game ever, led by halfback Joe Morris, who gained a club-record 1,336 yards. As a team, the Giants picked up 2,451 yards on the ground.

"They have a great runner and they have been taking full advantage of it," Walsh said. "Where they used to depend on the pass, now they can make much more happen. It will be our job to corral Joe because he can make plays happen."

And Oates knows the only way the Giants can make things happen is by moving Carter and the rest the 49ers defense.

"They have some personnel up front that step up and stuff the run," Oates said. "It's going to be a real challenge for us. I think we surprised ourselves with the degree of success we had against Pittsburgh last week.

"I think if we go out and not worry so much about what they are going to do, but what we are going to do, we're going to be okay."

Penn coach talking with Rice officials

HOUSTON (AP) - Jerry Berndt has been considered for other head coaching jobs during his five-year tenure at Penn, but he says none has turned his head as much as the vacant head coaching position at Rice University.

"I never let it get this far in the other places," Berndt said Friday after touring the Rice campus. "I have an outstanding job now, and it would take something really special for me to leave Penn."

Berndt, 47, was interviewed in Philadelphia by a member of the Rice coaching search committee.

He was interested enough in the job to come to the city for a tour of the campus and city with his wife Pat.

Berndt reportedly was a finalist during the recent coaching vacancy at the University of Pittsburgh and has also been considered at other universities.

Berndt, 47, is the latest coach to interview for the job vacated by Watson Brown, who resigned Dec. 5 with four years remaining on a six-year contract worth an estimated $1 million.

Berndt said he liked the academically oriented atmosphere of the Southwest Conference school.

"Rice's philosophy is a little more like my philosophy," he said. "You can't coach in the Ivy League if you don't put emphasis on academics."

Berndt said he liked much of what he saw after his tour of the Rice campus.

Motta gets 700th NBA loss as Dallas loses in overtime

by The Associated Press

It took veterans Kiki Vandeweghe and Jim Paxson a while to get started, but once they got hot it became a milestone loss for Dallas Coach Dick Motta.

Vandeweghe and Paxson combined for just nine points in the first half as the Mavericks led Portland by as many as 17 in the first quarter. They finished with 30 and 29 points, respectively, to lead the Trail Blazers to a 142-133 overtime victory Friday night.

The loss was Motta's 700th as a National Basketball Association coach, and he joined a club of which Gene Shue is the only other member.

In other games, Washington edged Atlanta 111-109, Cleveland defeated Detroit 119-105 and Seattle beat Golden State 114-102.

Vandeweghe led a third-quarter surge that turned a 13-point deficit into a 13-point Portland lead in nine minutes, and Paxson scored 23 of his points in the second half. Dallas rallied in the fourth quarter with the help of three three-point baskets by forward Dale Ellis, who finished with 17 points.

In the extra period, Vandeweghe scored five points and Paxson three as the Blazers outscored the Mavericks 14-5 to register their second win of this season in Reunion Arena.

Clyde Drexler had 20 points and Sam Bowie 17 points and 15 rebounds for Portland, while Sam Perkins had 26 points for the Mavericks. Mark Aguirre scored 18 for Dallas despite suffering a six-stitch cut over his left eye in a first-quarter collision with Vandeweghe.

Bullets 111, Hawks 109

Jeff Malone scored eight of his 31 points in the last 4:16, six of them during an 11-0 Washington streak that wiped out a six-point deficit against Atlanta.

The Bullets led by as many as 15 points in the second quarter, but the Hawks rallied and finally took a 92-90 lead early in the final period. Atlanta, which got 35 points and 14 rebounds from Dominique Wilkins, extended the margin to 101-95 before Malone's basket started the 11-point run.

Cliff Robinson scored 19 points for Washington, which broke a three-game home losing streak. Kevin Willis scored 17 for the Hawks.

Cavaliers 119, Pistons 105

Cleveland handed Detroit its seventh loss in eight games as World B. Free scored 29 points and Roy Hinson 22.

Upstart SMU rallies to pin OSU in tournament opener

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) - If Southern Methodist coach Dave Bliss' young Mustang basketball squad thought he was unhappy with their play in a first half against Oklahoma State that saw them trail by two points, they must really have expected a tirade during a timeout when the team fell behind by 8 points within the second half's first four minutes.

But, Bliss said, "I didn't get mad at them" during the timeout. "I'd already done that a halftime. We just had to start moving more. We were just standing around."

Whatever it was he said, though, it sparked the Southwest Conference's Mustangs, now 8-1, into a spurt that saw they take the lead for good by midway through the second half.

Kevin Lewis, who led Southern Methodist with 27 points, keyed the rally with 8 points to regain the lead on route to a 78-71 victory over Oklahoma State on Friday night in the opening game of the All College basketball tournament.

Eighth-ranked Oklahoma played Cincinnati in the tournament's late game.

The Mustangs held off the Cowboys down the stretch with clutch free throw shooting. That was a complete reversal from the first half which saw the Cowboys parlay clutch shooting from the line for their 27-25 halftime lead.

Southern Methodist hit only 36 percent of its shots in the first half and Oklahoma State only 32 percent.

"That was the worst first half of basketball we played in three or four years," Bliss said. "... We had a terrible first half. We were just playing haphazard basketball."

Oklahoma State's Paul Hansen said his Cowboys "fought real hard for a while, but things just evaporated.

"We really needed some free throws in the second half, but we never got them," he said. After 17 trips to the line in the first half, the Cowboys only had four chances for free throws in the second half.

"We also gave up a lot of second and third shots," Hansen said. "I can't believe our rebounding could be that atrocious. I'm more concerned about the breakdowns on our offense than on our defense.

"The difference between winning and losing is who stays the toughest the longest," said Hansen who saw his Cowboys fall to 5-4. "That's what's killing us."

Butch Moore had 15 points for the Mustangs and Terry Williams finished with 20.

Terry Faggins led the Cowboys with 22 points and Muhammad Akbar had 14.

UTEP shocks Georgetown

EL PASO, Texas (AP) - Quintan Gates scored 12 of his 18 points after halftime as Texas-El Paso stunned 5th-ranked Georgetown 78-64 in a non-conference college basketball game Friday night.

It was Georgetown's worst loss since a 94-73 setback to Alabama in 1982. Both teams are now 9-1, although Texas-El Paso was not ranked going into the contest.

UTEP broke open a close game in the second half with six unanswered points - two free throws by Jeep Jackson and baskets by Lem Clanton and Gates - that gave the Miners a 57-47 lead.

Jackson and Dave Feitl scored eight points apiece in the first half to put UTEP ahead 34-33 at halftime. Jackson's 20-footer with 40 seconds left in the first half gave UTEP a lead it never relinquished.

Georgetown led for much of the first half. The Hoyas' biggest lead was 27-22 after Reggie Williams canned a pair of free throws.

Williams, who led all scorers with 22 points, scored 10 in the first half.

Feitl contributed 14 points for the Miners, and Jackson had 10.

Georgia Tech drills Texas

ATLANTA (AP) — John Salley and Duane Ferrell each scored 17 points as No. 7 Georgia Tech buried Texas 90-55 in the first round of the Cotton States Classic college basketball tournament Friday night.

The Saturday night final will match Tech, 8-1, and Navy, a 67-64 winner over No. 20 DePaul.

Salley erased Texas' last lead, a 7-5 advantage, with a slam dunk less than four minutes into the game. Ferrell then hit a 17-foot jumper and the Yellow Jackets ran off another seven straight points for a 16-7 lead.

The Jackets, hitting 67 percent of their shots from the field, built a 46-31 halftime lead and pulled away steadily after intermission.

Tech's Mark Price added 16 points. Craig Neal had 12 and Tom Hammonds 11.

Patrick Fairs scored 14 points to lead the Longhorns, 5-5. John Brownlee added 12 and Wayne Thomas 10.

Aggies fall to Pittsburgh

NEW ORLEANS (AP)- Charles Smith scored 24 points and led the University of Pittsburgh from an 8-point first half deficit to a 79-62 victory over Texas A&M in the opening game of the two-day Sugar Bowl College Basketball Tournament Friday night.

Tennessee played Southwestern Louisiana in the second game of the night.

Pitt trailed 21-13 with seven minutes left in first half when Smith led a 10-2 surge to tie the game at 23-all with 4:53 left in the first period.

The half ended with Pitt holding a 37-33 advantage, but that quickly became a 10-point edge three minutes after the teams resumed playing. Midway through the second half Pitt was up by 18 at 57-39, and Smith had 20 of his game-high 24 points.

Pitt, representing the Big East Conference, is now 7-2 for the season, while the Aggies of the Southwest Conference are now 6-5.

Don Marbury had 18 points to lead A&M scoring, and Jimmie Gilbert had 15.

At airports...

Security to be tightened

By The Associated Press

Shocked American families, plunged into sudden grief after terrorist attacks at two overseas airports were "trying to stick together and go on living," while security forces tightened watch at U.S. airports.

Among those killed in the attack at the check-in counter of the Israeli airline, El Al, at Rome's Leonardo Da Vinci Airport were Natasha Simpson, 11-year-old daughter of Victor Simpson, The Associated Press news editor in Rome; John Buonocore Jr., 20; and Don Maland, 30, of New Port Richey, Fla., the State Department said.

Simpson, en route to New York with his family, and his 9-year-old son, Michael, were wounded and hospitalized in satisfactory condition. His wife, Daniela, who works for Time magazine, escaped injury.

"We're taking it, I guess as best as we could," said Buonocore's brother, Todd, 16. "We're trying to stick together and go on living."

"We are instant celebrities ... today it's news, but tomorrow, and for the rest of my life it's our grief to live with," Cecile Buonocore, 49, said of her son's death. "I thought it was all just a bad dream and I'd wake up and I would see my son alive."

Authorities at New York's Kennedy International Airport said security would be tightened at the airport; in Los Angeles, police said they would increase security for an El Al flight arriving Sunday.

"There's going to be more officers," said police Sgt. Paul Jensen, a watch commander at Los Angeles International Airport.

The El Al counter at the Vienna airport was also attacked in the simultaneous assaults. No Americans had been identified as being among the victims in Vienna.

Mark Maland, 37, whose brother, Don, was fatally wounded in the attack in Rome, was among those wounded.

When the assault began, "We could hear the pop," Maland, an attorney from Elizabeth City, N.C., said in an interview with NBC News from his hospital bed.

"But it kept going pop, pop, pop, pop, pop, pop, and you thought, 'Shoot them. Shoot them. Kill them.'

"Finally the shooting stopped and nobody moved and nobody moved, and then my brother, he yelled to me and said, 'Huh, Mark, are you OK.' And I said I had been hit in the leg," said Maland, listed in satisfactory condition with a broken leg.

Buonocore was an exchange student in Italy from Dickinson College in Carlisle, Pa., Debbie Cavin, a State Department spokeswoman, said.

Veteran newsman's daughter is killed

ROME (AP) — Natasha Simpson, the 11-year-old daughter of Rome Associated Press News Editor Victor L. Simpson, was among the 14 people killed in the terrorist attack at the Rome airport.

She was shot to death Friday when five terrorists using automatic weapons and hand grenades attacked people in the international departure terminal at Leonardo da Vinci Airport.

Her 43-year-old father, who sought to shield her body with his own, was shot in the hand. Her 9-year-old brother, Michael, sustained abdominal injuries. Both were reported in satisfactory condition at Rome's St. Eugenio Hospital.

Simpson and his wife, Daniela Petroff Simpson, 40, also a journalist, and their children were preparing to board a plane to the United States for a vacation when the attack occurred.

Natasha was a straight-A student in the sixth grade of Marymount International School, where her brother is a fourth-grader. A natural athlete skilled in swimming and skiing, she also recently wrote a four act Christmas play with a friend.

The two children had looked forward to their trip to the United States, where they were to go skiing and visit relatives and friends. But the day before leaving, Natasha had expressed fears about traveling, saying, "I hope we don't get hijacked."

RETIRING VP HONORED — Retiring Snyder National Bank Vice President Cecil Boren (center) was honored by his fellow bank stafferes with a come and go reception Friday in the bank lobby. Report says Louisiana leader to propose casinos, lottery

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Louisiana Gov. Edwin W. Edwards will call on the state's legislature to create a state lottery and to establish New Orleans as a gambling center by legalizing hotel casinos in the city, according to sources close to the governor.

A report in Saturday's editions of The Times-Picayune, The States Item said gambling on cruise ships operating out of New Orleans also would be legalized under the proposal.

Edwards' plan is designed to head off state budget deficits, the sources said. The governor is said to see his gambling proposals as a means of generating $300 million to $400 million a year in state revenue, including as much as $150 million from a lottery.

Edwards' proposal to a special session of the Legislature, scheduled to convene in January would allow major hotels to operate casinos in Orleans, Jefferson and St. Bernard Parishes, according to sources.

The Legislature is empowered to define gambling, which means it could legalize casino and cruise ship gambling by a majority vote in the House and Senate.

The state-run lottery would require an amendment to the state constitution, which prohibits lotteries. Consitutional amendments must be approved by a two-thirds vote in the House and Senate as well as a majority of the state's voters.

Edwards has scheduled a news conference for Jan. 6 in New Orleans to announce his proposal for a 10-day special session that he has said would begin Jan. 21.

If casino and cruise ship gambling is legalized in New Orleans, the city would become the only gambling center in the South and a rival to Las Vegas, Nev., and Atlantic City, N.J.

If approved, the proposals likely would not provide revenue in time to offset the expected deficit of about $150 million for the fiscal year ending June 30, but Edwards is said to be counting on budget cuts, revised revenue estimates and other measures to eliminate that shortfall.

Recent projections put state revenues for 1986-87 at $200 million to $390 million less than what is needed to finance government at a standstill level.

The governor reportedly has told close associates that his proposal would revive the New Orleans area economy, with the lottery and casinos providing 70,000 jobs.

The 11 casinos in Atlantic City employ 35,000 people, said Fen Montaigne, a Phildelphia Inquirer reporter who has covered Atlantic City.

Gross revenue for the industry is $2 billion, with $160 million of that going directly to New Jersey in taxes, Montaigne said. A law has just been passed that will bring another 1¼ percent of gross revenues to the state.

Nevada collected $243 million in taxes from its 1,934 licensed casinos in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1985, an analyst for the Nevada Gaming Control Board said.

A survey this year of casinos that generate more than $1 million each annually showed that the 145 largest casinos in the state employed 104,800 workers, Chuck Anderson said.

Edward's casino proposal is considerably broader than a suggestion by French Quarter merchants that one European-style casino be allowed in the Quarter, possibly in the Wildlife and Fisheries building on Royal Street.

Under Edwards' proposal, national hotel chains reportedly would be invited to bid on franchises for the casinos. The casinos would operate under the control of a state gaming commisssion.

All the elements of the reported proposal have consistantly failed legislative tests in the past.

Edwards reportedly may try to win legislative approval by suggesting that the whole package be placed before the voters even though only the lottery plan need be ratified in a statewide election.

Kindness works for sick animals

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Sometimes, the best prescription for sick and orphaned animals at the San Diego Zoo is a little human care and kindness. They get that from "Mama Jo," who oversees the zoo nursery.

JoAnn Thomas, known around the zoo as "Mama Jo," takes care of ailing animals, changes diapers, mixes formula and pets the creatures that need human attention to get well.

When the baby animals come to Thomas and her four colleagues at the nursery, they usually have been orphaned or are undernourished. In some case, the babies have been rejected by their parents and have to be hand raised.

"You want to give them all the extra help you can," said Thomas.

Scurry County Folks...

By Vicki Brown

Although Christmas Day celebrations center on the birth of Jesus Christ, it is not uncommon to find friends, neighbors or relatives who share their own birthday on that date as well.

But Christmas Day this year marked a milestone for Dora Louise Bell — her 110th birthday.

Although she has diabetes, an enlarged heart and other health problems, she remains mobile and capable of taking care of a limited number of her needs. Because Mrs. Bell's memory fails her at times, her daughter Ruth Davis related her mother's past.

Born Dec. 25, 1875, in Brownsboro, Mrs. Bell is the daughter of John and Rachel Proctor. She had "a bunch of brothers and sisters. Her mother died when she was just a little girl," Ruth explained.

"I remember a story she used to tell us. One day when she and her dad were out somewhere, they saw falling stars and didn't know what they were. She and her dad ran under the edge of somebody's house to get away from them," she laughed.

"I don't remember much more about the stories she told, but I think she really had a hard life," she added.

At 13, Dora married 21-year-old W.B. Bell. The couple lived in Dallas where W.B. served as pastor of Little Flock Baptist Church on Bexar Street.

"Daddy was a minister and mother was a real missionary," Ruth said. "I remember how she would clean, cook and wash when someone was sick."

The couple raised 15 children — 14 girls and one boy. Only four daughters remain. Besides Ruth of Snyder, Mrs. Bell has two daughters in Dallas and one living in Midland.

The children didn't always find life easy with a pastor-father. "We had to always stay put," Ruth remarked. "We had to be set aside from other kids and couldn't do what they did. If it wasn't in the Bible, we couldn't do it."

She explained that most of the family's activities necessarily centered around the church. "We stayed at church from morning to night on Sunday and went to every meeting through the week."

The older the children became, the more responsibility they shouldered as members of the congregation. "When we got to be teenagers, we all had offices. We'd been there so much, we knew them by heart," she laughed.

Ruth explained that in addition to his church work, her father served as a 33rd degree Mason. Mrs. Bell was an Eastern Star member as well.

Birthdays falling on or near Christmas can often be swallowed in the traditional festivities surrounding the holiday. Those people whose birthdays fall on that date often hear, "This present covers both Christmas and your birthday."

But Mrs. Bell's family makes the day special for her. "We would usually go to one of the sisters' homes to celebrate Mother's birthday first. Then we would all go back to her house for Christmas," Ruth said.

Although both celebrations this year occurred in Ruth's home, plans included a special birthday cake.

After her husband died some 15 years ago, Mrs. Bell remained in Dallas with her youngest daughter Dorothy. Dora often visited another daughter, Lillie Archer, who lived in Snyder during that time.

Four months ago, she moved here to make her home with Ruth.

Mrs. Bell said she enjoys watching television and making an occasional "trip to town." She also enjoys visits from family members. Ruth counted 36 grandchildren, 80 great grandchildren, 102 great-great grandchildren and one great-great-great granddaughter among Mrs. Bell's family.

When asked the secret of her longevity, Mrs. Bell leaned forward, thinking hard. With a smile, she declared, "God just intended for me to live this long."

When Andrew Jackson was inaugurated as president, a group of admirers presented him with a 1,400-pound Cheddar cheese, which he displayed in the White House vestibule for nearly two years while it ripened.

Then the president held open house and the cheese disappeared in two hours.

The first American factory for making Cheddar went into production in 1851 in the state of New York.

All cheese is made from milk, be it from cows, sheep, buffalo or reindeer. But practically all American cheese is made from cow's milk, which must be pasteurized.

Today, nearly half of the cheese consumed in this country is processed. The result is a bland mixture of natural cheeses of different ages, ground fine and blended by heating and stirring. The finished product, in the opinion of some consumers, tends to be insipid.

This doubtless explains the public's enthusiasm for natural cheeses such as Cheddar.

As a matter of fact, some Cheddar is also mild, but those who prefer it with a bite can get excellent Cheddar, produced mainly in New York, Vermont, Wisconsin and Oregon.

A good luncheon dish featuring Cheddar is this recipe for a casserole.

2 tablespoons butter or margarine
¼ cup finely chopped onion
2 cups water
½ teaspoon salt
½ cup quick grits
½ teaspoon Worcestershire sauce
Dash Tabasco
Black pepper to taste
1¾ cups grated sharp Cheddar cheese
3 tablespoons soft butter
2 egg whites

In small skillet melt 2 tablespoons butter over moderate heat. When foam subsides, add the onion and cook 4 or 5 minutes until translucent but not brown. Bring 2 cups water to boil in 1-quart pan. Add salt and slowly pour in grits, without allowing water to stop boiling. Boil 1 minute, stirring constantly. Reduce heat to medium and cook 2 minutes. Add the onions, Worcestershire and Tabasco, a little black pepper and 1½ cups grated Cheddar combined with 3 tablespoons soft butter.

Preheat oven to 400 degrees. Grease 1-quart casserole. With wire whisk or rotary beater, beat egg whites until they form stiff peaks on beater when it is lifted from bowl. With rubber spatula, thoroughly fold egg whites into grits mixture. Pour into casserole and sprinkle the top with remaining grated cheese. Bake in middle of oven about half an hour, until mixture has puffed and browned. Serve 4 to 6.

When giving count is paramount

By James Jacoby

Letting your partner know how many cards you have in a suit is often crucial to defense. The normal procedure is, when following suit, to play your lowest card to show an odd number of cards, while to show an even number, you play a high card first and later a low card. Look how this method of signaling helped West make a good defensive play to defeat today's contract.

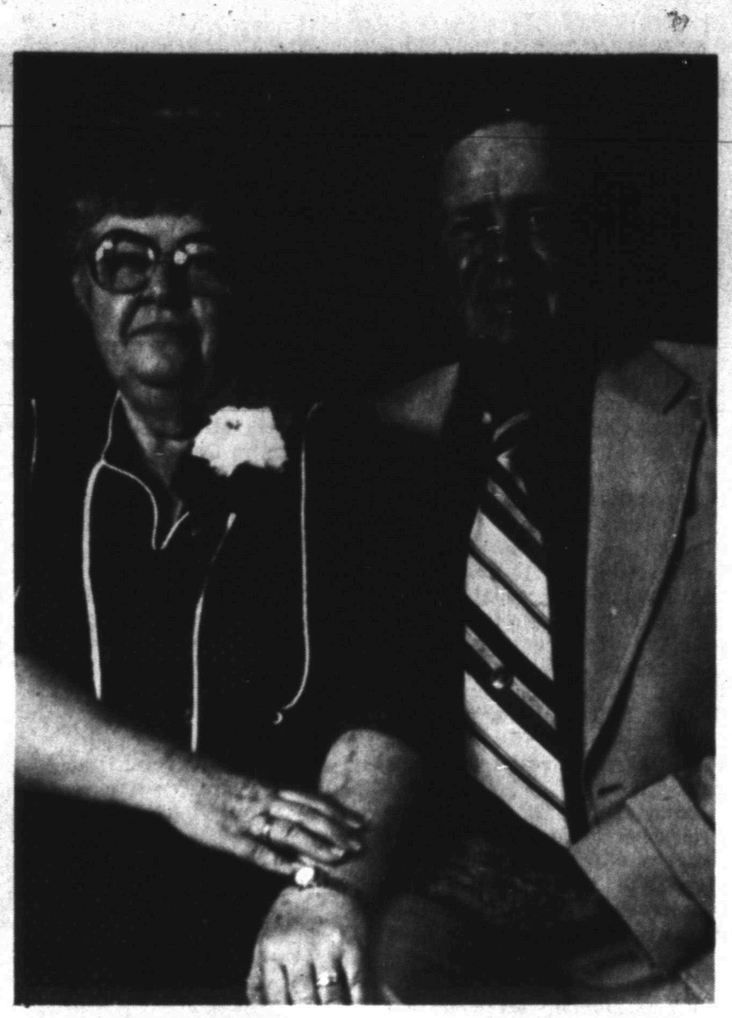

West led the jack of hearts. Declarer won and played a club to the dummy to take the spade finesse. When declarer led dummy's spade queen, East followed with the two. Since this card showed that East held an odd number of spades, it was easy for West to let dummy's spade queen hold the trick. Naturally declarer called for dummy's jack next and let it run. Now West gathered in the king and continued hearts. South could no longer get to the dummy to take the club finesse and went set one trick.

If West had hesitated before ducking the spade king, South might have figured out what was happening. West must be ready to duck smoothly when his partner's carding gives him the count. I'll mention also that it would be highly improper for West, without the king of spades, to make a pretense of thinking about holding off in order to mislead South. The tradition in bridge is that the cards you play can be deceptive and misleading, but your mannerisms should not be.

POSITIVE OUTLOOK HELPS AVOID CHRISTMAS DEPRESSION

Perhaps because we feel like we're supposed to be happy during the holidays, then feeling depressed can be even more of a burden.

Actually, a report from the Journal of the American Medical Association show a relatively low level of depression during December compared with other months. Their statistics show that the number of suicides, psychiatric hospitalizations and even letter to advice columns is relatively low in December. The pattern of major psychiatric illness declines before Christmas, although these problems show an increase in January.

But it's clear that in spite of the statistics, many people do become depressed at Christmas time. The causes could include guilt from overindulging in food or drink, the absence of a family member, overspending the family budget on gifts and entertainment, increased contact with disliked relatives and even the public merriment that makes being depressed more painful.

According to the Texas Medical Association, the symptoms of depression include a sad mood; indecisiveness and lack of confidence; feelings of hopelessnss; anziety; suicidal thoughts; irritability; loss of appetite or sleep; inability to carry out a daily routine; headaches and fatigue.

Here are some ideas for dealing with Christmas depression:

—What's good for you the rest of the year also applies during the holidays. Get enough rest and eat and drink in moderation.

—Don't be trapped by unrealistic expectations that the good feelings associated with Christmas will magically solve personal or family problems.

—Appreciate the positive things about the season. It does, after all, give you the chance to do something special for family and friends and to spend more time with them.

'Amistad' at work in two cities on border

EDITOR'S NOTE — Border dwellers call it "amistad," a mutual friendship and cooperation among the people living in neighboring towns separated by the 1,950-mile boundary between the United States and Mexico. In Columbus, N.M., and in it's twin city of Palomas, Mexico, you can see amistad at work.

By JULES LOH
AP Special Correspondent

COLUMBUS, N.M. (AP) — Pancho Villa led 1,000 illegal aliens across the border here one morning in 1916, shooting the villagers and torching their homes.

International relations have improved since then, of course. Illegal entry, however, has only gotten worse, if not nearly so dramatic. Nowadays, nobody hollers "Death to the gringos!" They just slip across quietly, in numbers that would make Pancho Villa envious.

Ironies and contradictions abound in the strange world of the American-Mexican border. Still, it does seem odd that the site of a bloody raid — the last attack on the U.S. mainland by foreign forces — should also offer one of the frontier's best examples of what border dwellers call "amistad," mutual friendship and cooperation.

"We couldn't get along without them and they couldn't get along without us," Charles Hudson was saying.

"Columbus and Palomas are like one town, separated by a fence."

You hear that sentiment about twin American-Mexican cities repeated all along the 1,950-mile border. You find it in the rote of tourist pamphlets. But in Columbus, and in its twin city of Palomas, Mexico, you can see amistad at work.

Columbus is a quiet village of 500 people off by itself in a country of sagebrush and distant serrated mountains and wintering birds.

Palomas, on the other side of the border, is a bustling city of 1,200 alive with children and song, quite in contrast with Columbus. Columbus is the sort of town that has a chalkboard in front of city hall to announce its big events and news:

"Johnny Sepulveda is out of intensive care." "Yard sale at Burgess residence." "Happy birthday Ruth Carson."

But, yes, the two towns do get along.

For example, Palomas has no fire engine, Columbus has.

So when a fire breaks out in Palomas, Columbus's volunteers jump aboard their pumper, roar three miles down the road, siren screaming, and sail through the border crossing, Mexican authorities waving them on.

Charles Hudson is a member of the Columbus village board. He wears scuffed boots, faded jeans and a tooled leather belt that says "Chuck." Like many residents who are not Hispanic, a minority, he came here to retire, got involved, and now spends more hours on village affairs than he did breeding horses in California.

"There's much more here than the memory of Pancho Villa," he says.

Yes, but not at first glance.

The town's one saloon is the Pancho Villa Cantina. Its only two-story building — no, there is one other, the schoolhouse — is the old railroad depot which has become the Pancho Villa Museum. The ruins of old Camp Furlong, whence Gen. Blackjack Pershing took out after the bandit, without success, is now the Pancho Villa State Park, a hideaway among desert flora for campers, picnickers and quail.

All named for the man who butchered 18 Columbus townspeople and soldiers, wounded a dozen more (and lost about 175 men himself), in his unprovoked raid of March 9, 1916.

When Hudson arrived in town six years ago he looked around, swallowed hard, and with some other veterans lost no time in establishing the Gen. John J. Pershing American Legion Post 1916.

Hudson also was one of the founders of the Palomas-Columbus Lions Club.

"As far as I know," he said, "it is the only international Lions Club in the world. Our building is in Palomas. We have, currently, 27 members, 14 Americans and 13 Mexicans."

Amistad.

The current president of the Lions Club is Ed Clark. He is proud of that but more proud, at this time of year, of another role.

Clark is a retired carpenter. He came to Columbus from Arkansas eight years ago hoping the mile-high desert climate would ease his arthritis. It did. He says he wishes he had come years earlier.

He is a big man, 6-feet-1 and 225 pounds, with a big white beard, a big rich laugh. He favors a big blue hat and bib overalls. Once a year he puts on a red suit and becomes — well, of course, Santa Claus.

Just before Christmas, jars for coins appear in the cantina, the museum, the bank. By Christmas they collect about $1,500.

With this they buy sweets and gifts and clothes and load them on the fire engine and take them into Palomas on Christmas Eve and distribute them to wide-eyed children.

Next day, Christmas, they load pickup trucks with more gifts and drive 24 miles down dirt roads through the huge Johnson ranch to a point where a squat brown adobe village of about 200 Mexican families nestles against the international boundary.

There, amid cheers, Ed and his wife Frances, dressed as Mrs. Santa Claus, pass their treasures over the boundary fence.

The cluster of adobe homes is known locally as Josefa. The name does not appear on any map. It is a colonia, a gathering of squatters.

Some years ago the Mexican government granted people land there if they would settle it, much like the homestead grants on the American frontier. But you don't see any farms around the colonia. How do they make their living?

Virgil Speer smiled wanly.

"Four buses a day run from the Mexican interior to Palomas. Josefa," he said, his tone that of a patient schoolteacher, "is a staging area.

"It's a place where illegals going north gather to wait for somebody to guide them — to Albuquerque, Denver, Chicago, wherever. They pay a fee for that hospitality. They pay another fee to the guide, the coyote."

Speer is the Border Patrol agent in charge of 33 officers who patrol 54.5 miles of the international boundary, the southern edge of Luna County, New Mexico. Parts of this strip of the border are so rugged and inaccessible that the United States has not even bothered to put up a fence.

The fence at Josefa has a convenient gate, for local traffic back and forth. But it is easily watched by the Border Patrol. Serious immigrants cross elsewhere.

SLIMMING DIET

"We eat more often when we're not hungry, but bored, tired, depressed or nervous," says Laurel Branen, Univ. of Nebraska nutritionist. "Think how you'll feel after eating. Chocolate cake will make you feel full, fat, and guilty," says Branen. "Fresh fruit makes you feel refreshed, satisfied, in control. Eat those foods that let you feel happy - for a sensible and slimming diet."

Brigham Young's biography tells of family relationships

VISALIA, Calif. (AP) — Mormons may wince at the family discussions Brigham Young had with some of his 55 wives, but a history professor describes his biography of the church leader as accurate and sympathetic.

Newell Bringhurst wrote "Brigham Young and the Expanding American Frontier" as part of a series of American biographies issued by a Boston publishing company.

"The books are mostly about ex-presidents, their wives or other political figures from the East Coast," said Bringhurst, whose book was distributed recently in college bookstores. "But they're not just biographies. They're all tied to a larger theme."

Young serves as an archetype of the expanding American frontier, starting with his birth in Vermont in 1801 and spanning his pioneering role in church and Western settlement in the 1840s to his death in 1877.

"I use a lively, anecdoctal style," said Bringhurst, a history instructor at College of the Sequoias in Visalia, 170 miles north of Los Angeles. "I tried to bring out the human interests. The man had 55 wives and 57 children. As you can imagine, there were some highly complex interfamily relations that developed to keep everything organized."

Young either was or became a master of organization under the circumstances, Bringhurst concluded.

"This shows up in other things, too," he said. "Even his detractors admit he directed the best organized mass migration in American history."

Bringhurst, a lapsed Mormon, conceded that his description of family relationships might upset devout members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

"Brigham Young was a prophet of God in the church, and I'm not sure how the broad spectrum of church members will take the book," he said.

Of Young's many wives, 16 bore his children. Many of the wives were women to whom Young gave his name and protection.

Aura of mystery surrounds gypsies today

EDITOR'S NOTE — Gypsies have long been surrounded by an aura of mystery and suspicion. They are, indisputably, different. Even today they follow ancient ways not well understood in the modern industrial world. But an anthropologist who has studied Gypsies closely dispels some stereotypes.

By JOHN BARBOUR
AP Newsfeatures Writer

Like the chameleon, the Gypsy changes his coloration to blend with the background, but deep in his heart he never changes.

Even today, almost a thousand years after their appearance in Europe, the world's five to six million Gypsies keep their arcane ways.

Yet the world changes about them. Some find their old talents lack a market and sink into poverty. So a people who traditionally don't work for wages because it infringes on their freedom now find themselves filing for welfare.

Tourists freshly back from Europe say some are turning to thievery, which only reinforces the old stereotype of cheat and fraud, the origin of the word "gyp."

As the century wanes, these nomadic people face yet another crisis, another challenge to their ancient ability to survive.

So reports Dr. William G. Lockwood, a University of Michigan anthropologist, for whom the Gypsies are a fascination, a study in ethnicity, a people that keeps its identity despite a self-imposed diaspora that has kept them on the move for centuries.

"Until the late 19th century, Gypsies were literally slaves in the area now called Romania," Lockwood says. "And in this century, half a million were murdered by the Nazis. Even today, you can see signs on shop fronts in Europe that say 'Closed To Gypsies.' Is it any wonder that some among them have adapted by resorting to petty crime?"

They have been treated with suspicion wherever they go. There is an Anti-Gypsy crime unit in southeastern Michigan. Lockwood rejects as unfair the publicity that goes along with it. He says the Gypsy commits no more crime than any impoverished minority.

He has Gypsy friends in the professions: an accountant, a symphony musician, a professor in linguistics.

The Gypsies left their homes in northern India about 700 A.D. Not much is known of them before then.

Above the Fold

By Donny Brown

Christmas Eve night we got the hiccups.

They were the result of extended family-related visiting and the food and drink that accompanies such things.

In our case, this included a fistful of questionable stuff — chips stabbed into a dip made of watercrest and very large slices of onion, skip pea salad, the inevitable cheese ball and two glasses of some vintage vino which, while admittedly served out of a gallon jug, at least had a cork stopper rather than a screw-on lid.

So after the presents were all opened, after the drive back home, after things were starting to wind down for the traditional Christmas Eve long winter's nap, we encountered our problem.

What should have been a sigh of relief turned out to be a gulp of air which accidentally forced its way back up the gullet.

Then there was that indefinable "feeling" — akin to when you know you're going to sneeze — which precedes a bout of the hiccups.

We waited, performing a brief internal scan of our vital parts. Then we expressed ourself — "Hic!," followed by a brief period of silence and a second exclamation, "Hic!"

We had a roommate in college who once got the hiccups on a beautiful spring afternoon — a Saturday. He then clocked approximately one "Hic!" every 20 seconds or so for the following 24 hours.

That is approxiately 4,320 "Hic's."

By Sunday afternoon, he was convinced he was never going to stop and he sought medical aid. He told us they gave him some sort of shot. And while he seemed cured, the look on his face made us believe he wasn't convinced.

As he was telling the story, we must have acquired a goofy grin, because at one point he noted, "And it wasn't funny either."

Ever since, a case of the hiccups sparks in us an uneasy feeling — not quite a panic, but a vague sense of foreboding.

Sitting there waiting for the next "Hic!," you envision what your poor old body is going through.

The sense that all of your innards are being squeezed by each contraction — which seems 10 times harder than the beating of your own heart.

This plus the irritating knowledge that you can't control your own parts — as if suddenly your ears were to start waving at strangers.

And the unspoken question which follows every "Hic!" "What if I can't stop?"

In the end, the oldest trick in the book worked. We took a glass of water and swallowed gulps as quickly and as often as our throat muscles would allow.

When we were through, the hiccups had gone away.

Coming back from the kitchen, the wife asked, "It's Christmas. What are you looking so unhappy about?"

I could have told stories about narrow brushes with incurable maladies and the always present uncertainty of life. But, it was Christmas Eve and we wisely elected to keep out mouth shut.

Happy New Year! Carol C. Bullard

Country Life

By Deanie Francis Mills

There's something about throwing away an old calendar and hanging up a new one that gives one pause for reflection. Although farmers and ranchers live their lives by the seasons, and not by a calendar, each January 1 provides a fresh opportunity to gather their inner resources and face a new year.

We are halfway through a decade that has seen farmers and ranchers through some of the toughest challenges of the century. Many of them didn't make it. Farming and ranching families who have passed the tradition down for generations have seen their lives go up on the auction block.

Who would have thought, a generation ago, that one piece of farm machinery would cost almost as much as a three-bedroom house? Yet, if the farmer does not buy that piece of machinery, he falls behind in the high-tech race.

Walk through any bookstore or library in the section on nutrition and diet, and every book you pick up preaches on the evils of eating beef. What's a cowboy to do...start raising chickens?

It's not just inflation and bad press that have hit farmers and ranchers. It's rising interest rates and falling land prices. It's a shakey cow market and no market for cotton at all. It's trade deficits and screwed-up governmental bureaucrats and bankers whose hands are tied.

There's no room for a young man to make mistakes. One bad judgement call and he can be wiped out.

But the cruelest blow of all has come from the one thing that farmers and ranchers have loved the most: nature. Old-timers say that the drought of the eighties was worse than anything they saw in the Dust Bowl days.

And what the drought didn't do to Texas, floods did to the south, while blistering cold took care of the Midwest.

Two years ago the state of Iowa saw 100 farm foreclosures. Last year 1,000.

Support groups are springing up all over the country for young people who have lost a way of life, or who are coping with the death of a loved one from suicide. Food banks are opening up to lend a hand to an independent people who have been stripped of all pride.

West Texas, which has spent a generation wrapped in the safe cocoon of the oil business, is seeing even that security shaken to the core.

So what is that farmer and rancher thinking this New Year? What is keeping him from burying his face in his hands in despair?

The country family faces the new year with that same quality that has sustained them for centuries: hope.

Each farming and ranching family puts the old year, and all its trials behind them, and holds to the hope...the faith...that this year will somehow be better, that the market will turn around, that the spring will bring good rains, that the fields and pastures will recover and produce, that they'll be able to get ahead. This year, they say, is bound to be better than the last one.

It's that hope, that faith, that is the strength of farming and ranching families. It gives them the resilience to face blows that could destroy someone else. It's that same quality that settled this great land in the first place.

With that hope, and that faith...no matter what happens...they will survive.

SDN Week in Review

SUNDAY
December 22

The first political announcements for the coming election year were revealed Sunday.

Earl (Hassie) Sneed, Pct. 2 commissioner, indicated he will not be a candidate for re-election.

Announcing for his post were two county men, Jerry House and Alfred Kohl.

Announcing for a new term was County Treasuer Billy Wayne Thompson.

MONDAY
December 23

Snyder's Joe W. Sentell won the seven-day Hawaiian cruise given away in the second annual Christmas Give-Away sponsored by Snyder merchants and the chamber of commerce, it was reported Monday.

Sentell was one of 44 finalists selected by random drawing at each of the 44 stores participating in the sweepstakes program.

Pct. 3 Commissioner C.D. Gray Jr. Monday proposed to fellow court members the possibility of adding two more members to the Cogdell Memorial Hospital board.

"I think it would be good public relations to have eight members on the board," he said. "It will get more people involved with our hospital and will give our hospital more public exposure."

The appointed election judge for Voting Pct. 13 was granted a request Monday for additional personnel to conduct the Hermleigh school election ballot Jan. 18.

Jerry Clift asked Scurry County commissioners for the additional five persons to assist during the voting.

Those appointed were Foster Watson, Anna Mae Perry, Albert Kuss Jr. and Ted Morales Jr.

TUESDAY
December 24

In excess of 32,000 bales have now been ginned in Scurry County as the 1985 cotton harvest nears 70 percent complete.

The count reported Tuesday was 32,161 bales ginned.

Local ag officials have predicted a total count this year of up to 48,000 bales.

Last spring, some 59,000 acres were planted here in cotton.

It is estimated from 55,000 to 57,000 of these acres will eventually be harvested.

The average salary paid to professional staffers at Western Texas College is below the state weighted average for public community colleges, according to figures released by the Texas College and University System Coordinating Board.

The average salary for faculty members in general academic programs was listed at $29,916 for the 49 community colleges in Texas.

At WTC, the average figure was $26,682, it was reported Tuesday.

WEDNESDAY
December 25

Closings were the rule in Snyder Wednesday as Christmas Day was observed.

THURSDAY
December 26

Local customers for Texas Electric might receive an unexpected Christmas gift after the holiday as the utility company has made application for authority to refund about $78 million to its customers.

Under the company's proposal, residential customers are expected to receive in March an average refund of $12.50.

Pct. 3 Commissioner C.D. Gray Jr., who proposed to fellow commissioners last Monday the addition of two more seats on the Cogdell Memorial Hospital Board, fielded a mixed response regarding the proposal from hospital board members Thursday.

The board of managers of Cogdell Hospital Thursday approved the acquisition of two new items of hospital equipment — a cardiac monitor for the facility's critical care unit and a new telephone system for the radiology department — at a combined cost of some $7,000.

FRIDAY
December 27

The first challenge of an incumbent county office holder for the May Democratic primary surfaced Friday with the official announcement of Milton Stephens for the Pct. 1 county commissioner's post.

Stephens will seek to oust Duaine Davis, who was appointed July 29 to fill the unexpired commissioner's term for Pct. 1.

Employees of the Snyder National Bank honored one of their own with a come-and-go retirement reception all day Friday at the bank.

Cecil Boren, who has spent almost 40 years with the bank, retired effective the bank's closing Friday.

Woman is leading crusade to save rain forest land

EDITOR'S NOTE — When Gertrude Blom first journeyed into the Lacandon rain forest, it covered 5,200 square miles and was populated by 2,000 people. Today the jungle covers only 2,400 square miles and the population is 200,000. At an age when most people have long retired, Mrs. Blom is leading a crusade to save what's left.

By MONTE HAYES
Associated Press Writer

SAN CRISTOBAL DE LAS CASAS, Mexico (AP) — After years of battling injustice in Nazi Europe and Mexico, Gertrude Blom at age 84 is locked in a struggle to save the last great stretch of tropical rain forest in North America.

For the last 40 years she has focused her attention on a vanishing world — a group of 400 Lacandon Maya Indians and their endangered jungle homeland in Chiapas, Mexico's southernmost state on the Guatemalan border.

Mrs. Blom, born in Switzerland, is a photographer, explorer, self-taught anthropologist and ecologist. But most of all she is a fighter. Dozens of government officials in Mexico, her chosen homeland, can attest to that.

"I saw the rain forest attacked in the '60s," she says. "I watched the destruction and for me it became a new fight."

Until last year the achievements of this formidable woman were little known outside Mexico.

In 1984 the University of North Carolina Press published "Gertrude Blom: Bearing Witness," a collection of stunning black-and-white photographs. The book is filled with images of a sad and haunted people and of a ravaged landscape — tree trunks stacked like corpses, a charred and burning forest, smoke-shrouded, lifeless hillsides stripped of vegetation.

Critics have compared her to great documentary photographers like Dorothea Lange and Eugene Smith. Under the auspices of the Smithsonian Institution, an exhibition of her photos, "People of the Forest," is on a three-year tour of the United States.

Mrs. Blom arrived in Mexico in 1940, after 20 years as a journalist, political activist and fighter against fascism in Europe. In 1943 she entered the Chiapas rain forest as a member of the first government expedition to make contact with the Lacandon Mayas, a group that had not been conquered by the Spanish or converted by Christian missionaries.

"They were independent, proud people, generous people, hospitable people," she recalls.

Most of the Lacandon men still let their long black hair fall over the shoulders of kneelength white tunics. But with the exception of one small group, all have abandoned their traditional values and religion since 1943.

When Gertrude Blom first journeyed into the Lacandon rain forest, it covered 5,200 square miles and was populated by 2,000 people. Today, loggers, ranchers and land-hungry settlers are rapidly eradicating the final 2,400 square miles of the jungle, and the population has soared to 200,000.

In her book she writes:

"The jungle is burning, the great trees are being destroyed, and the land is enveloped in a sinister darkness. No one cares ..."

Roads slice through the jungle. The national electric company wants to flood parts of it for a hydroelectric dam. The national oil company is exploring for petroleum.

At an age when most people are content to stick close to their rocking chairs, Mrs. Blom goes tramping through the smoke-filled jungle each year for two to three weeks to document the latest devastation.

Mrs. Blom, a testy but warm woman who likes nothing better than a good argument, has become an institution in Chiapas. In recognition of her work in defense of the Lacandones, in 1971 the government bestowed on her the rare honor of Mexican citizenship.

She holds court in this fogblanketed colonial town high in the pine-clad mountains of Chiapas to the west of the Lacandon forest. Her home is called Na-Bolom, "House of the Jaguar."

In addition to being a guesthouse for visitors with a serious interest in the area, NaBolom also houses a library and a museum of Mayan archeology and Lacandon culture.

"The Lacandones still come all the time," she says. "This is their house. I have special rooms for them. They can sit down at the dinner table near an ambassador, and if the ambassador doesn't like it, he goes, not the Lacandones."

Peter Gott, M.D.

DR. GOTT

Chelation is experimental

By Peter H. Gott, M.D.

DEAR DR. GOTT — Chelation has been around for many years now, and yet the medical profession still has not used it to full advantage. Last year I was found to have atherosclerotic irregularity in the distal abdominal aorta. Now, after my second chelation treatment, my left leg has cleared up and I can walk with no distress in that leg. My right leg is not completely cleared up, but I can walk several blocks before experiencing distress. I believe every doctor should mention chelation as an alternative to surgery.

DEAR READER — Chelation therapy (the use of chemicals to bind minerals in the body) has been used effectively to treat heavy-metal poisoning. However, to date, chelation treatments have not been proved to be consistently effective and safe for arteriosclerosis.

This therapy is currently considered to be experimental. Neither I nor the majority of other doctors recommend chelation in preference to other types of treatment. Although future research may show chelation to be beneficial for certain conditions, there are no conclusive data now available to cause the average physician to recommend it in a case such as yours.

DEAR DR. GOTT — My 70-year-old grandmother has "splenic flexures" from being constipated from some pills she was taking. She still has some abdominal pain. What should we be doing for this problem?

DEAR READER — As the large intestine curves downward at a 90-degree angle in the left upper abdomen, air can be trapped in a knuckle of bowel beneath the spleen. Thus, the "splenic-flexure syndrome" is a ubiquitous and uncomfortable entity. Fortunately, treatment is simple. Your grandmother will need to avoid gas-producing foods (cabbage, beans, carbonated beverages) and consider using an anti-gas compound like simethicone. If these measures are ineffective, her doctor may wish to relieve her discomfort by prescribing medicine.

DEAR DR. GOTT — How accurate is a thyroid diagnosis based on the thyroid-deficiency and basal-temperature tests? I have thyroid-deficiency symptoms; however, the T3 and T4 show I am within the normal range.

DEAR READER — There is no longer any justification for the use of basal temperature, basal metabolism or the blood test known as PBI (protein-bound iodine) in the diagnosis of thyroid disorders. The actual amount of circulating thyroid hormone can now be measured by two blood tests, called — in medical shorthand — the T3 and T4. If your T3 and T4 are normal (and the lab has not made an error), you do not have a thyroid deficiency; your symptoms may be coming from another source.

Various medicines can interfere with T3 and T4 analysis and, of course, one set of values proves nothing. But if, on repeat testing, your blood-thyroid levels are normal, you will have to look at other possible causes for your problem.

If you have questions about MENOPAUSE, you can get answers in Dr. Gott's new Health Report on the subject. Send 75 cents plus a long self-addressed, stamped envelope to P.O. Box 2597, Cincinnati, OH 45201. Be sure to ask for the Health Report on Menopause.

Years ago, health tonics were widely believed to be beneficial agents that helped cure disease. They made people feel better. They were popular over-the-counter medications.

Tonics have been replaced now with new formulations. Since scientists discovered that alcohol was the major ingredient in many tonics, the public developed scorn for old-fashioned brews. Yet elixirs and tonics are still very much with us — under different names.

Today's products are marketed primarily for cough, colds and congestion. They contain new chemicals, but the chemicals are still diluted with alcohol. More than 500 proprietary medications contain alcohol in concentrations of up to 68 percent (136 proof). Many are liquid vitamin mixtures.

This alcohol is not innocuous. It can increase gastric acidity, depress brain function and produce dangerous reactions in recovering alcoholics. Of more potential importance are the long-term effects of administering alcohol-containing compounds to young children.

Prescription drugs may contain alcohol — for example: Donnatal Elixir (23 percent alcohol, plus phenobarbital), Elixophyllin Elixir (20 percent alcohol), Quibron Elixir (15 percent), Benadryl Elixir (14 percent), Propadrine Elixir (16 percent) and Terpin Hydrate Elixir (42 percent).

More significantly, common nonprescription liquid preparations contain high concentrations of alcohol: Dristan (12 percent), Nyquil (25 percent), Vicks 44 (10 percent) and Geritol (12 percent). Children are frequently given Novahistine expectorant (5 percent), Phenergan expectorant (7 percent), Tylenol Elixir (7 percent) and Cheracol (3 percent).

Alurate Elixir (20 percent), Amytal Elixir (30 percent), Bentyl-PB syrup (19 percent), Broncho-Tussin (40 percent), Cenalene Elixir (15 percent), Choledyl Elixir (20 percent), Coldene Elixir (adult; 15 percent), Creo-Terpin (25 percent), Dexamyl Elixir (25 percent), Dolanex Elixir (23 percent), Elixodyne (20 percent), Geriplex-FS (18 percent), Gerix Elixir (20 percent), Gevrabon (18 percent), Hybephen Elixir (16.5 percent), Isuprel Compound Elixir (19 percent), Keralyt (19.4 percent), Lanoxin Pediatric Elixir (10 percent), Lomotil liquid (15 percent), Lufyllin Elixir (20 percent), Mini-lix Elixir (20 percent), Mundrane G.G. Elixir (20 percent), Norophylline (20 percent), Organidin Elixir (24 percent), Peri-Colace syrup (10 percent), Pertussin Plus (25 percent), Prolixin Elixir (14 percent), Synophylate Elixir (20 percent), Theo-Guaia (20 percent), Theon Elixir (28 percent), Uritone Elixir (20 percent), Valarian (68 percent).

Many consumers are concerned about the overuse of alcohol in medicines. Fortunately, many reputable drug companies share this concern and are manufacturing alcohol-free medicines. Some common liquid medicines that contain no alcohol are: Actifed-C expectorant, Codimal expectorant, Conar A, Glycotuss syrup, Hycomine Pediatric syrup, Omni-Tuss suspension, pyribenzamine expectorant, Romex, Silence is Golden Cough Syrup, Sorbase Cough Syrup, Triaminicol Cough Syrup and Tussionex suspension

You may ask: What purpose is served by this boring index of medication? The answer is: I believe we need to know the constituents of medicine we feed to ourselves and our children. One tablespoon of a 20-percent alcohol preparation is the equivalent of one ounce of wine. If, in the appropriate case, an alcohol-free medicine is desired, the patient should have the right to choose. The recent reaction to reports that some so-called "alcohol-free" beers actually contain alcohol (albeit in amounts of less than 0.5 percent) focuses attention on labels that are misleading or downright dishonest.

A two- or three-teaspoon dose of a 25-percent to 50-percent-alcohol cough medicine can be quite a belt for youngsters. Even the sound sleep, so popularized in TV ads, that results from the use of an over-the-counter adult cold remedy may be due more to the alcohol content than to the supposedly active ingredients. This type of medicine can be disastrous for a person who is trying to kick a drinking habit.

Therefore, know what you want, read labels on medicine bottles and check with your doctor. Even better, check with your pharmacist. This is the kind of information he or she is trained to provide.

Miracle cures sought at Lourdes, France

EDITOR'S NOTE — Something happens to you in Lourdes, pilgrims say, and no one can leave unchanged. The Roman Catholic Church has recognized 64 cures over the past 125 years as miraculous. But most people come to Lourdes to share in what Emile Zola called "almost a new religion."

By ELAINE GANLEY
Associated Press Writer

LOURDES, France (AP) — Every day at 4 p.m., thousands of the sick and handicapped file past the souvenir shops with their plastic Virgin Marys and electric halos to enter the valley of the grotto for prayer, song, and the hope of a miracle.

The procession, with many borne on stretchers, enters the sprawling white basilica where a Roman Catholic Mass is said and the sick are blessed. Doctors are on hand to examine any who claim an immediate recovery.

But a miracle "is not the most important thing," says the Rev. Joseph Bordes, rector of the Lourdes Sanctuary.

"The real miracle is to find faith, prayer, love, confidence in oneself. We all are handicapped."

The church has recognized 64 cures at Lourdes as miracles since 1862, four years after a village girl named Bernadette Soubirous, gathering stones in the grotto, said she had had visions of the Virgin Mary. There have been 6,000 claimed recoveries.

It has been 15 years since the last miracle occurred, but at least eight sudden recoveries were claimed during this year's pilgrimage season, from April to November. That was fewer than usual but was enough to nurture the hope that, as the bishops and doctors pass through the crowd, God will intervene where earthly powers could not.

"Lourdes is a special place suspended between heaven and earth," says Efthemia Dakes, a nurse from a Bayonne, N.J., who for the 12th year was accompanying the American National Rosary Pilgrimage for the Sick and Handicapped.

Nestled in the soft green folds of the Pyrenees and flushed with the waters of the Gave River, Lourdes is the world's largest Christian city of pilgrimage. But it clearly has its worldly preoccupations.

Standing on streets with names like Paradise Avenue, the 400 hotels in this town of 18,000 residents in southwestern France outnumber those of all other French cities except Paris and Nice.

Some 600 souvenir shops with names like "Rosary Palace" and "Pax Mundi" offer everything from traditional religious artifacts to the statues of the Virgin Mary with flashing halos and plastic bottles shaped like the Virgin Mary for gathering the coveted grotto water.

Religion is the main industry in Lourdes, and it is profitable enough to allow the seasonal workers to close their shutters for the five-month period that the Sanctuary around the grotto shuts down.

"That is the paraphernalia, the props, that a lot of people live by," says the Rev. Joseph Allen, spiritual director of the National Rosary Pilgrimage. "Once you enter the gates, you can drop the props."

The "props" are the accoutrements of a carefully orchestrated "happening," at once theatrical and pious, which the 19th-century French writer Emile Zola called "almost a new religion."

The Sanctuary, the 86-acre domain of Our Lady of Lourdes, operates on a $6 million annual budget, all raised through contributions. Lourdes has six official languages and dozens of flags, those of the national pilgrimages.

On any given day of the pilgrimage season, Lourdes welcomes 2,000 sick and handicapped people in five hospitals and three hospices. More than 4 million people from up to 150 countries make their way here each year. That's twice the number of Moslems who make the pilgrimage to Mecca.

They are drawn in part by the supposedly curative powers of the grotto water, an underground stream found by Bernadette during one of her 18 visions of the Virgin Mary recognized by the Roman Catholic Church.

The water is pumped into baths and through spigots for the pilgrims. The Sanctuary bottles and distributes it to the four corners of the world.

Crutches allegedly cast off by invalids who suddenly could walk hang outside the grotto.

Though church authorities make no claims for the water's curative powers, Dr. Theodore Mangiapan, head of the Sanctuary's Medical Bureau, says the majority of cures follows contact with the water.

The team of doctors at the Medical Bureau compiles dossiers on sudden recoveries in the first step of a long, meticulous process toward determining whether a miracle has occurred. If the team finds no medical explanation for the recovery, the dossier is sent to a second team of international specialists. If they cannot explain the cure, the dossier goes to the local bishop who has the authority to declare a miracle.

Serge Perrin of Angers, France, regained his vision while visiting Lourdes in 1970. His recovery was declared a miracle in 1978, the last recognized by the church.

Paul Russell, 32, of Kendall Park, N.J., lost the use of his arms and legs in a car accident in 1972. He has come to Lourdes for nine straight years. On the first trip he "partly" hoped for a cure, but now, he says, the fact that he hasn't been cured doesn't leave him feeling deprived.

"There's a lot more going on here," he says.

"We're all the Lourdes family," says Nurse Dakes, known as "Aunt Sis" to her fellow pilgrims. "If I could win the lottery, I'd spend my life here. Caring for the sick is a special privilege here."

In 1969, 25 crew members were killed when the world's largest warship, the U.S. carrier Enterprise, was ripped by an explosion while on maneuvers off Hawaii.

Farmers' Sad Plight Gives Light Verse a Heavy Punch

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1985 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: This came with my insurance company's newsletter. Being from Iowa yourself, you must feel for the poor farmers. How about giving this a run? I don't know who wrote it.

LAKE HELEN, FLA.

DEAR LAKE: It's wonderful. And I wish the author would please surface and take a bow:

LAST WILL OF MR. FARMER

I leave:

To my wife my overdraft at the bank—maybe she can explain it.

To my banker my soul—he has the mortgage on it anyway.

To my neighbor my clown suit—he'll need it if he continues to farm as he has in the past.

To the ASCS my grain bin—I was planning to let them take it next year anyway.

To the county agent 50 bushels of corn to see if he can hit the market—I never could.

To the junk man all my machinery—he's had his eye on it for years.

To my undertaker a special request—I want six implement and fertilizer dealers for my pallbearers. They are used to carrying me.

To the weatherman rain and sleet and snow for the funeral, please—no sense in having good weather now.

To the grave digger—don't bother. The hole I'm in should be big enough.

DEAR ABBY: I am a 25-year-old woman, but I've been told that I could pass for 19 or 20. I have been going with a young man who is in his teens, but looks older.

We are lovers and the whole shebang. What I need to know is, can I be arrested or get into trouble with the law because of his age?

GLORIA
(NOT MY REAL NAME)

DEAR GLORIA: You do not indicate in which state you reside, but if you are experiencing "the whole shebang" with a minor, you could certainly be in trouble with the law. Check with a lawyer.

DEAR ABBY: I answered an ad for employment (office) and in the ad was "Smokers need not apply." I had been a heavy smoker, but had not smoked for over a year, so I applied and got the job.

I won't go into the details, but after working there for four months, I found myself in a very stressful situation and smoked a cigarette to calm my nerves. Yes, I know it was a bad mistake, but it is too late now, because I now have the habit as bad as I ever did. The point of this letter is this:

I've never smoked in the office, but I do leave the office several times a day to go down the hall and have a cigarette. To make a long story short, I was called in and given my two weeks notice. Employment terminated. Reason: I smoke.

A friend of mine (who works for a lawyer) told me I can sue my employer for discriminating against me for a personal habit. Can I?

SMOKING IN PRIVATE

DEAR SMOKING: You can sue anybody for anything you want to sue for, but whether you can collect or not is a big question. Consult a lawyer for the best legal advice.

DEAR ABBY: A reader suggested changing the expression "making love" to "making babies" as a way to reduce the growing number of unplanned pregnancies.

How about also changing "copulating" to "populating"?

JIM AND DIANE PANTHER,
PALATINE, ILL.

UNION UNITED METHODIST CHURCH

"And so I am giving a new commandment to you now—love each other just as much as I love you. Your strong love for each other will prove to the world that you are my disciples." John 13:34,35

AN INVITATION

To all who are and need a Savior-
To all who mourn and need comforting-
To all who are weary and need spiritual rest-
To all who are friendless and desire companionship-
To all who are strangers and long for a church home-
To all who are afflicted and need the Heavenly Physician-
To all who are in doubt and are seeking for light-
To ALL who wish a place of fellowship and worship-

This Church opens wide its doors and in Jesus' Name says "WELCOME"

Your Birthday

Dec. 29, 1985

Joint ventures could prove profitable for you in the year ahead. But you must be selective about the other members of the team. Align yourself with people who know how to make money.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) Being overly curious could draw you into a friend's complicated affairs today and put you on the spot. Don't poke your nose into situations where it doesn't belong. Major changes are ahead for Capricorns in the coming year. Send for your Astro-Graph predictions today. Mail $1 to Astro-Graph, c/o this newspaper, Box 1846, Cincinnati, OH 45201. Be sure to state your zodiac sign.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) Important decisions should not be rushed into today, especially if what you decide has an effect upon someone else who isn't present.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) To make a good impression on others today, strive to be self-reliant. Don't ask people to do things for you that you can handle yourself.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Be mindful of your budget today and don't let your extravagant whims encourage you to buy merchandise or things other than necessities.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Try to avoid discussing issues today that could anger your mate. If distasteful subjects are introduced, it could spoil the day for both of you.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) It will prove unwise today to try to force your ideas on others. If they're not buying what you have to sell, additional pressure won't do the trick.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Normally you're a careful and competent manager of your resources, but today you could be a wasteful spender, especially for things that bring you instant gratification.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Others may make heavy demands on your time and talent today. In fact, you might alter your plans for their benefit, but not your own.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Today you might be a bit too sensitive for your own good. This could cause you to be defensive and build walls to keep others out.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) It's to your benefit today to strive to live within your means. Don't let friends involve you in activities that are out of your reach financially.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov.22) Keep your assertiveness in check today if you want others to cooperate with you in furthering your personal aims. Aggressiveness may cause them to back off.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) Nothing worthwhile is likely to be achieved today if your plans are fuzzy. Focus on specific objectives and don't scatter your forces too thin.

Dec. 30, 1985

In the year ahead, people you have helped in the past will do all they can to further your worldly interests. There are three people in particular who will play key roles.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) Something good that you haven't been counting on is in the offing for you. It will be of a financial nature and it could pop to the surface today. Major changes are ahead for Capricorns in the coming year. Send for your Astro-Graph predictions today. Mail $1 to Astro-Graph, c/o this newspaper, Box 1846, Cincinnati, OH 45201. Be sure to state your zodiac sign.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) This is a day when important decisions should not be made hastily. For the type of results you desire, weigh every angle carefully.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) For the present, your greatest advantages will come through the use of new techniques or methods. Put your ingenuity and resourcefulness to work for you.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) You will earn the respect of people with whom you associate today if your words have a ring of sincerity. Avoid flattery in any form.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) It's best at this time not to involve outsiders in your family's financial affairs. Although they'll try to be helpful, they could still complicate matters.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Pay heed to the advice or suggestions of partners today because their ideas could improve upon yours. Make it a collective effort.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Financial conditions are likely to be a mixed bag for you today. For the sake of your budget, try not to spend more than you're taking in.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) If you have important things you hope to accomplish today, don't let an idler attach himself to you. Dead weight will slow you down.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Act upon hunches you get today for doing things that will benefit your family. Your insights should work out very well.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) Build your hopes today upon realistic premises. What you desire can be brought into being, provided your methods are practical.

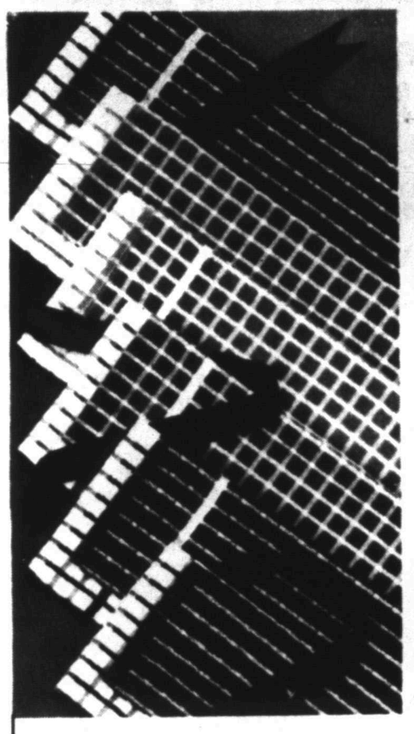

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov.22) Lady Luck is likely to materially reward you today in unusual ways. Your windfall may be triggered by a unique set of circumstances.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) Temporarily set aside routine projects today and experiment with something new that you've been eager to tackle.

On Jan. 12, 1935, Amelia Earhart, an American woman aviation pioneer, set a record of 18 hours, 16 minutes for a solo flight from Hawaii to California. Born in 1898, she achieved fame as the first woman to cross the Atlantic by air — as a passenger in a flight from Newfoundland to Wales in 1928. She died after her plane vanished while she was attempting a round-the-world flight in 1937.
