Quartet to perform

The Thouvenel String Quartet of the Midland-Odessa Symphony & Chorale is scheduled to perform at the Kennedy Center in Washington today as part of the Texas Festival at the Kennedy Center. Members of the quartet include first violinist Eugene Purdue, second violinist Janet Chisholm, violist Sally Chisholm and cellist Rebecca Seiver. They are the only West Texas representatives in the two-week festival, which also features Willie Nelson, the Dallas Symphony Orchestra, Rodney Crowell, the Texas Ex's Gospel Choir and the Houston Ballet.

Repaving schedule

The repaving that has narrowed traffic down to a single lane on the Andrews Highway is a state, not a city project, said Gary Saunders, the city's traffic engineering coordinator. The State Department of Highways and Public Transportation's district office in Odessa told Saunders that the road work will be finished by late today or early Wednesday. Then it will begin work repaving Front Street by midweek, Saunders said.

Rapper ices auto

TULSA, Okla. — Not to be outdone by rap rival M.C. Hammer, Vanilla Ice went out and bought a $300,000 Porsche. But the custom-built convertible needs a paint job, from pearl blue to . . . yes, vanilla. John Reaves, owner of Precision Imports, said the car was built in 1988 for a Tulsa businessman and was to be shipped this week to Ice's Miami residence. "It is an incredible piece of machinery," said the rap artist's attorney, Lawrence Friedman of Dallas. The car is one of four Porsches whose body work and design were crafted by Uwe Gemballa, Europe's premier designer of exotic cars. "The only other entertainer purported to have a Gemballa-built car is M.C. Hammer," Reaves said. "And they are archenemies. But M.C. Hammer has, of the Gemballas, what you would consider the peewee model. He's got the starter kit."

S. Africa ends race classifications

■ Despite watershed repeal, other vestiges of racial discrimination have yet to disappear.

N.Y. Times News Service

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — The law that laid the legal foundation of apartheid by classifying all South Africans by race from birth, with resulting privileges or handicaps, was scrapped on Monday by Parliament, more than four decades after it was enacted.

The Population Registration Act, enacted first in 1950 and periodically refined since, became the final pillar of statutory apartheid to be pulled down by President F.W. de Klerk, after the repeal of the three other discriminatory laws that the provided the legal framework for white domination of other South Africans.

"Now it belongs to history," de Klerk said of the system of discrimination that was introduced and for many years maintained by his National Party.

As late as 16 months ago, when de Klerk ordered the release of Nelson Mandela, the long-imprisoned leader of the African National Congress, few if any here imagined that the vital legal basis for apartheid would be so quickly swept away.

In fact, the Land Acts, which set aside 87 percent of all property for whites, and the Group Areas Act, which dictated where people could live on the basis of their race, were repealed on June 5.

The Separate Amenities Act, which let municipal officials bar blacks from parks, swimming pools, toilets, and other public accommodations, was scrapped a year ago, although the change only became effective

Farmers Market opens in Basin

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

Farmers and consumers are meeting each other halfway now that the Permian Basin Farmers Market's 1991 season is open.

Each has what the other wants: fresh things to eat and cash money. And, best of all, the exchange is sweetened with friendliness and bargains.

"The whole atmosphere is friendly," said Ken Hardin, who drove across town to buy a few goods at the first day of the market Monday. "I haven't had a watermelon in a long time."

The farmers brought their fresh vegetables and some fruit to town early in the morning to set up under shaded stalls in an open field at Carver and Front streets east of downtown Midland.

Midkiff farmer Jerome H. Hoelscher and his wife, Betty, enjoy selling, talking and listening to the folks at the marketplace.

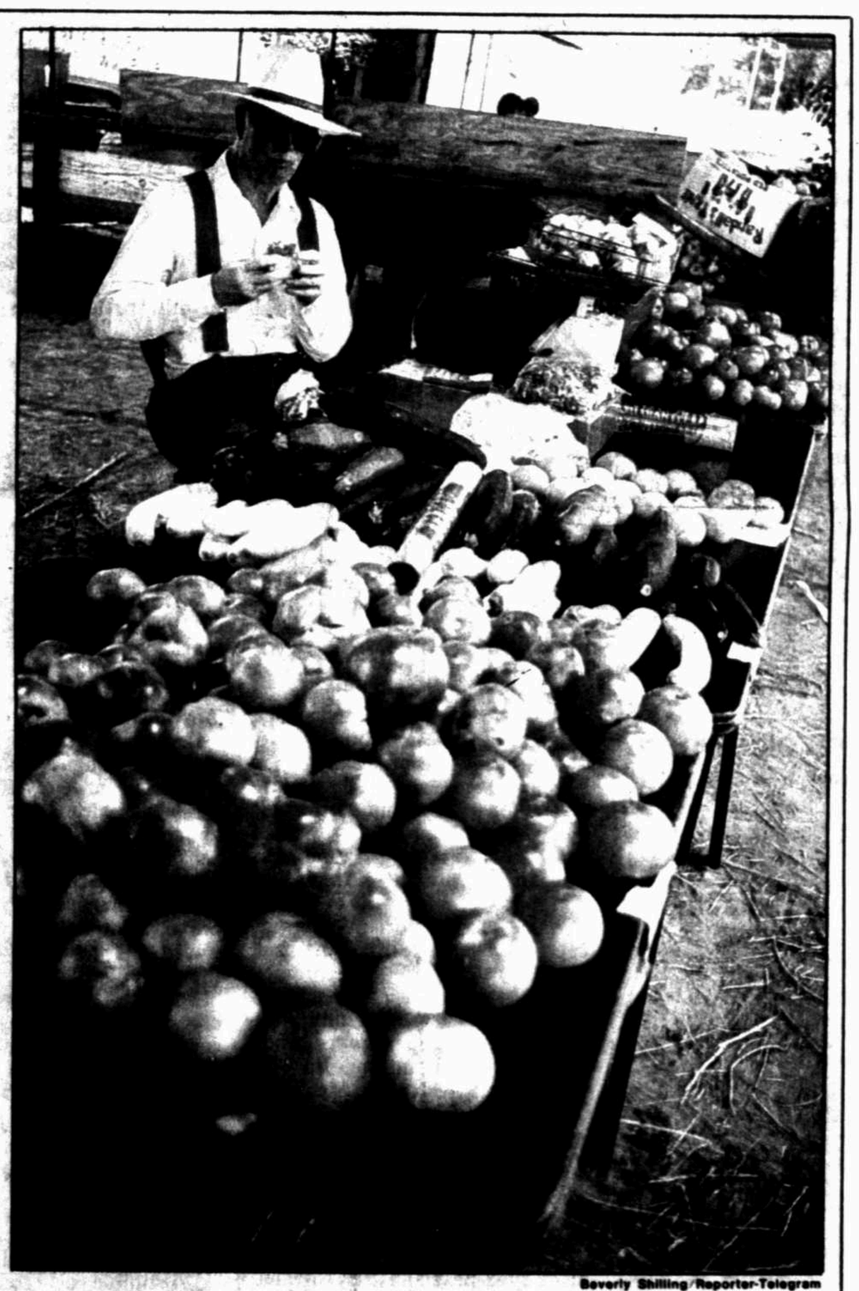

"That's one of the main reasons I come here," Hoelscher said. "I enjoy visiting. I like to talk, anyway."

Hoelscher, a retired cotton farmer, joins his wife in raising a good medley of fruits and vegetables.

"I've got to do something," he said. "I just can't stay around the house and do nothing."

The season is early. The market was heavy on tomatoes, potatoes, onions, squash, cantaloupe, watermelon, apricots and pecans, but was short on

Group: U.S. overcharges elderly poor on Medicare

WASHINGTON (NYT) — The government is overcharging poor, elderly people by more than a billion dollars a year by deducting $30 a month more than it should from their Social Security checks and failing to reimburse them for some expenses, an advocacy group reported Monday.

Social Security officials acknowledged that a problem existed involving the deduction, which covers certain Medicare costs.

But they said that, without spending millions of dollars, they had been unable to reach everyone who should be exempt from the $30 monthly charge and were entitled to more reimbursements.

It is up to those who are eligible to have the deduction eliminated and get more reimbursements to apply for them at their welfare offices.

Officials concede that for a variety of reasons, including lack of knowledge, half or more of the eligible people do not apply.

In 1988, Congress passed a measure exempting elderly poor people, beginning in 1989, from having to pay the $30

Justices make prison lawsuits harder to win

WASHINGTON (NYT) — The Supreme Court ruled Monday that hardships of life in prison like overcrowding, poor sanitation and exposure to violence do not violate the Constitution unless prisoners can show that the prison administration has acted with "deliberate indifference" to basic human needs.

The 5-to-6 decision, in a case from Ohio, is likely to make it more difficult for prisoners to prevail in lawsuits contending that inadequate prison conditions violate the Eighth Amendment's prohibition against cruel and unusual punishment.

Just how difficult will depend on how the lower courts interpret the requirement of proving deliberate indifference, a phrase that Justice Antonin Scalia's

'Boom-boom' babies end birth dearth

By Tim Schreiner
N.Y. Times News Service

Renzo Guerra, born this month in San Francisco's St. Luke's Hospital, is a boom-boom baby. So are newborns Riana King and Samir Walker.

The three infants are representatives of a double-decker demographic phenomenon: their mothers, born in the baby boom of 1946-64, are producing a boom of their own. The boom-boom babies have arrived.

Women have startled fertility experts, Madison Avenue prognosticators and kiddie doctors nationwide by delivering an unexpected and astounding number of babies in the past 30 months.

The more than 4 million babies born in each of the past two calendar years not only approaches the most prolific years of the baby boom but also marks the end of the birth dearth that began in the early 1970s.

"Forget zero population growth," said Tulane University demographer Leon Bouvier, in reference to the organization that asked women in the 1960s to have two children at most.

The baby boom that delivered 80 million youngsters into U.S. homes in the previous generation was produced mostly by young parents with pent-up desire for families after World War II.

Owner offers $1,000 reward for missing flag

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff Writer

Some Midlanders have been wondering what happened to the giant American flag that flew until recently at Mission Square plaza on Big Spring Street near Loop 250.

"Our telephone is ringing off the hook, people asking, 'Where did the flag go? Where did the flag go?' " said Jan Melton, owner of Re/Max Realty, which displayed the Stars and Stripes.

Mrs. Melton's reply is that the 15-by-30-foot, $700 flag was taken sometime between 9:30 p.m. Sunday and 7:30 a.m. Monday.

"It seems such a shame that you buy something and try to take care of it and then someone steals it," she said.

The remains of Zachary Taylor were removed from a crypt.

Zack Taylor's remains: tales from the crypt?

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (NYT) — The remains of Zachary Taylor, the 12th president of the United States, were delicately removed from the crypt in which he was buried here almost 141 years ago.

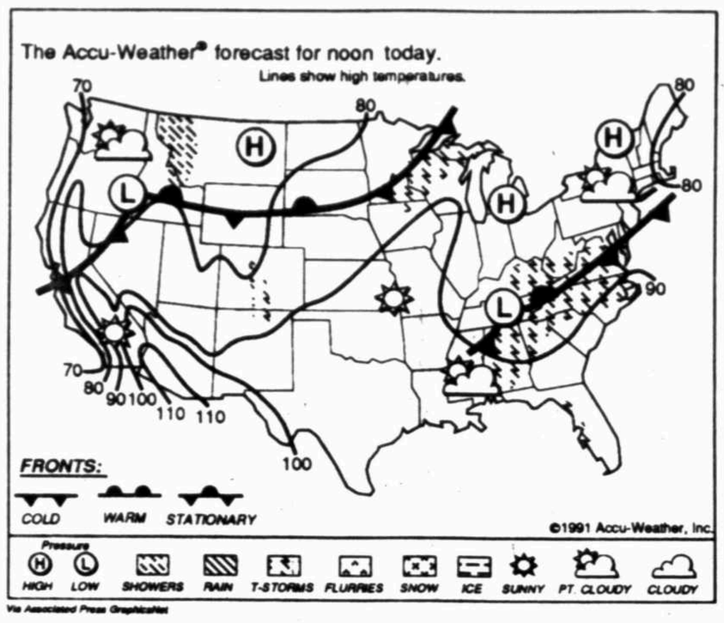

There were no bugles blown or volleys fired in salute. But four uniformed officers of the Department of Veterans Affairs stood guard as more than 200 people, many with young children at their sides, quietly looked on from 20 yards away as Taylor's flag-draped wooden coffin was wheeled to a hearse in the Zachary Taylor National Cemetery.

The remains are being examined by the Jefferson County coroner's office to determine whether Taylor was assassinated, which would make him the first American president to be

Look for mostly sunny, 100

Today's forecast calls for mostly sunny skies with a high near 100, southeast winds at 10 to 20 mph and a less than 20 percent chance of thunderstorms, according to the National Weather Service in Midland.

Tonight will be mostly fair with a low in the upper 60s.

Wednesday is expected to be sunny with a high around 100.

After an overnight low of 65, Monday's high was 94 compared with the record high for that date of 106 in 1977. The record low for today's date was 52 set in 1945.

STATE

Cloudy, warm and humid weather dominated the state Monday with some thunderstorms wetting the South Plains and other parts of West Texas.

Warm and humid conditions were typical across the state with much of North Texas under partly to mostly cloudy skies.

The Abilene area experienced thunderstorms that moved in from the South Plains.

Temperatures were mostly in the upper 80s and lower 90s by mid-afternoon.

Scattered showers and thunderstorms pelted the Big Bend, Trans Pecos and Concho Valley in West Texas. Other showers and storms developed in the extreme northern portions of the Panhandle.

Elsewhere, skies were mostly sunny in West Texas, with a high of 100 degrees at Wink. Winds were south to southwest at 10 to 20 mph.

The only moisture in South Texas was along the western gulf south and east of Brownsville.

The forecast called for isolated thunderstorms today in West Texas, except for the far west with highs in the upper 90s and 100s. Widely scattered afternoon and evening showers were expected for South Texas and the eastern portion of North Texas.

NATION

The temperature soared to 103 degrees in Phoenix on Monday and thunderstorms soaked the Midwest and South.

More than an inch of rain fell in parts of Texas, Louisiana and Florida, the National Weather Service said.

Showers and thunderstorms dampened the lower Texas Gulf coast, southern Louisiana, southern and eastern Mississippi, southern and northwest Alabama and most of Florida.

Rain also was scattered over Minnesota, North Dakota, Oregon, the Carolinas, Tennessee, Virginia, West Virginia, Kentucky and southern New England.

Thunderstorms produced 1½-inch hail at Miramar and Pembroke Pines in Florida.

More than inch of rain fell in McAllen, Texas, Fort Myers, Fla., and Lafayette, La., in the six-hour period ending 1 p.m. CDT.

The chance of brush fires in Nome, Alaska, was reduced by 1¼ inches of rain over the past three days.

The Associated Press contributed to this report.

monthly premium. Under the measure, these people also need no longer pay a $728 share each time they stay in a hospital, or pay 20 percent of their doctor's bills.

Those eligible for the extra benefits have to be over the age of 65 and have annual incomes of no more than $6,620 for a single person and $8,880 for a couple. Officials believe that about four million people meet the criteria; from one million to two million have applied for the benefits.

The advocacy group, Families United for Senior Action Foundation, said Monday that the Social Security Administration and the Health Care Financing Administration had failed to let more than 55 percent of the eligible people know that the benefit existed, and so the government continued to deduct the premiums from their Social Security checks, and continued to charge them the deductibles for their hospital stays and care from doctors under the Medicare program.

The group suggested in its report that the government was trying to save money by not notifying people.

Dr. Gail Wilensky, the Social Security administrator, denied that. "The difficulty we have is that it's hard for us to know who is eligible."

She said the agency did not know how to identify and reach the eligible people and that Congress had not provided money for a program to locate them.

If everyone eligible applied, it would cost the government about $1.7 billion in additional payments a year, the report said.

"If this benefit were for the four million richest Americans, I'd bet that the White House would make sure they got every penny of it," said Ronald Pollack, executive director of the foundation.

Rep. Henry Waxman, D-Calif., chairman of the House subcommittee on Health and the Environment, said he was "very disappointed that so many people don't even know about the benefit."

"Congress spoke very clearly on this subject — we wanted low income elderly to have their Medicare benefits. But the Department of Health and Human Services has the ultimate responsibility to get the bureaucracy to run this program so it will work. I am taking the matter up with Secretary Sullivan," he said.

He said the administration's answer that it was hard to find those eligible and no money was provided to locate them was unacceptable.

"What kind of answer is that? Saying the poor, elderly people are out of luck if they don't know the program exists."

BABIES: Demographic phenomenon under way

more complex, with major contributions from older women having their first and second children relatively late in their child-bearing years, immigrant mothers who come from countries with high-fertility traditions, young women having babies much earlier than their older sisters, and unwed mothers of all ages.

The birthrate for women in their mid- to late 30s is 50 percent higher than it was just 10 years ago. In California the rate for these "older" women has jumped 67 percent in the past decade.

"There's been a change in the norms," Bouvier said. "Older women are catching up, and younger mothers are piling up behind them."

The leading edge of the current baby production is marked by the postwar baby boomers who put off marriage, put off children, went to school, started careers and then woke up recently realizing that they had little time left to have children.

"I guess it was the biological clock," said Sin Yee Poon, a 35-year-old San Francisco mother whose first baby was born four months ago. "When you're this age, you start thinking about how many years you have left to have children without chances of complications."

Although many women continue to delay marriage, they are not postponing child-bearing. Mary Smith, 44, kept "waiting for just the right relationship, and it didn't come and didn't come and didn't come."

So Smith, who requested that her real name not be published, asked a sperm bank to inseminate her with the sperm of someone who shared her racial and educational characteristics, but not her tin ear or her family's history of troubling cancer.

As recently as a decade ago, women were much more reluctant to have children out of wedlock, said Ronald Rindfuss, president of the Population Association of America. Today, however, more than a quarter of all U.S. babies are born to single mothers.

"It's not just teenagers," Rindfuss said. "It's also women in their 30s."

Many women who started careers in the 1970s had substituted school and work for marriage and children. There was little available support to help with a child — especially day care. Their mobility had kept family miles away, and few employers offered day care.

Now, single women often have access to more day care options and the financially rewarding careers to pay for it.

Other women in their 30s who delayed having children were waiting for the right man, not the right career.

JUSTICES: Decision appears to represent a shift majority opinion left largely undefined. Prison lawsuits have been quite successful, with prisons in 38 states now operating under federal court orders to remedy unconstitutional conditions.

(From 1A)

Lawyers representing prisoners said Monday that although the decision was a setback, they were optimistic that they would be able to meet the standard that the court set.

The court has defined prisoners' rights narrowly in a number of recent decisions, particularly rulings making it more difficult for inmates, including those on death row, to use the writ of habeas corpus to challenge the constitutionality of their convictions and sentences.

The Supreme Court has addressed prison conditions infrequently, and its past cases have been somewhat confusing on what standard to apply.

The decision Monday appears to represent a shift away from focusing on prison conditions themselves toward focusing on prison officials' state of mind.

The most directly applicable past decisions, both from the Supreme Court and the lower federal courts, have treated prison officials' state of mind as irrelevant. Instead, the courts interpreted the Eighth Amendment as setting an objective standard of minimal conditions that prisons had to meet and by which prison officials were to be judged, regardless of their attitude toward the prisoners.

The Justice Department and the American Civil Liberties Union, which joined in a rare alliance in the case Monday in behalf of an Ohio prison inmate, urged the court to continue with that interpretation.

REMAINS: Coroner tests for signs of poisoning murdered.

Taylor's remains were returned to the crypt in the cemetery later in the day, said Richard Greathouse, the coroner of Jefferson County.

Clara Rising, a former humanities professor at the University of Florida, sought the exhumation to settle a smoldering doubt among some historians that Taylor died of natural causes on July 9, 1850.

"The suspicions are really in the history books," she said standing near the crypt. "Right after his death, everything he had worked against came forward and was passed by both houses of Congress."

While most historians have accepted Taylor's death as natural, Dr. Rising said she was troubled by "mysterious" occurrences surrounding his death, including unexplained disappearances upon his death of his message to Congress and New Mexico's Constitution.

The suddenness of his illness on July 4, she said, was suspicious for a man whose health was widely known to be robust. Politically, Dr. Rising added, the crisis of 1850, in which secessionist fervor was reaching a breaking point, created circumstances for pro-slavery factions that desperately wanted to silence Taylor, who wanted to bring California and New Mexico into the Union as free states.

Had he lived, Taylor would have vetoed the Fugitive Slave Act and the Compromise of 1850, two measures that ultimately stirred passions between the North and the South, said Dr. Rising, who is conducting research on a book about Taylor. "This man may have, if not prevented it, delayed or some how solved the poblems that caused the Civil War," she said.

The hermetically sealed wooden coffin still bore remnants of silver cords and blue braiding that decorated it at Taylor's funeral in Washington in July 1850, said Louise LeBourgeois, who identified herself as a great-great-great-great-grand daughter of Taylor who witnessed the exhumation.

"Being a descendant of a dead president is not something I think about every day of my life," said Ms. LeBourgeois, a 27-year-old paralegal and artist who lives in Chicago. "But actually seeing the casket there, it really brought it home to me."

Other distant relatives, who stood by as the lid of the Tennessee marble vault was opened to reveal the coffin, said they were struck by the musty smell of the crypt and the difficulty several men had in lifting the coffin out.

Originally, only small samples of hair, fingernails and bones were going to be removed from the crypt, said Greathouse. But in the crypt it was decided that the entire coffin needed to be taken to the coroner's office where it could be carefully opened since it was badly decomposing.

The casket turned out to be black walnut with a badly deteriorated lead liner, said Ben Underwood, president of Nuerath & Underwood, the funeral home that placed Taylor in the crypt.

"This is right up there with the Kentucky Derby," said Khristina Gordon, who watched the exhumation from her sister-in-law's backyard. "I got goose bumps when they brought out the casket."

Taylor's remains, the first of any American president's to be exhumed, were required for chemical tests to determine whether Taylor, a Southerner who opposed the extension of slavery, had been assassinated.

Greathouse, who is also a practicing physician, said he and other experts would test the remains for toxic levels of arsenic and other heavy-metal poisons. Arsenic, commonly available in the 19th century as rat poison, can remain in the body's tissues and boney materials for centuries, Greathouse said.

black-eyed peas and green beans.

Joe and Sista Sepulveda, who run a 15-acre "you-pick farm" southwest of town, sold out their single flat box of black-eyed peas quickly.

"I had two (pods of) beans left," Mrs. Sepulveda said with relish, "and I ate them both."

Hardin picked up a red-meated watermelon from Seminole farmer Ocie Smith for $1.75. The melon sold for 20 cents a pound. "That's not bad at all," Hardin said.

It's still too early for okra, which is just about Hardin's favorite vegetable.

"I love it either way," he said — fried or boiled.

He said the market reminds him of his childhood outside of Ada, Okla., where he worked in the family vegetable garden.

"We always had a large garden," Hardin said. "We had a spring, and that soil was fertile."

From now on, through summer and into fall, Hardin and other people who like freshly grown fruits and vegetables can visit the Farmers Market stalls in Midland, Odessa and Big Spring.

On Mondays and Fridays, the market will be set up east of downtown Midland at Carver and Front streets.

On Tuesdays and Saturdays, it will be at the end of Princeton Avenue at Loop 250 in west Midland.

On Wednesdays and Saturdays, farmers will be selling their produce in Big Spring on the old Gibson's Discount Store parking lot across from the Veterans Administration Medical Center.

On Tuesdays and Thursdays in Odessa, the market will be set up off Golder Avenue near Dos Amigos Restaurant.

The market opens about sunrise and closes when the farmers have sold all or most of their produce or when customers stop coming by.

FLAG: Owner offers reward

(From 1A)

Mrs. Melton is upset enough at the loss to offer a $1,000 reward for information that leads to the arrest of the perpetrator.

She suspects youngsters are responsible for the theft.

"I think they wanted it to burn," she said.

"It's not the $700 but the fact that they burned it and probably laughed about it," said Mrs. Melton, explaining her anger.

"If someone stole it to fly it wouldn't be so bad."

Whatever the motive and whoever the culprits, Mrs. Melton said the dastardly crime was especially devastating because it followed Operation Desert Storm observances and Flag Day.

A photo of the flag being raised was featured in the Midland Reporter-Telegram on Friday.

"It's a sad day for Re/Max but a sadder day for veterans," she said.

Since her flag disappeared, Mrs. Melton has learned that other businesses and citizens have been victims of similar thefts. Some shopping areas even have switched to smaller flags after more impressive ones were taken, she said.

Despite the incident, Mrs. Melton said she will get an identical flag to replace the one taken.

Re/Max began flying the American flag alongside a giant Texas flag — that wasn't taken — on June 6, the day Mission Square reopened. The date also commemorates D-day, when the Allies invaded Europe in 1944.

On Flag Day, Mrs. Melton installed about $1,000 in lights so the flags could be viewed after dark.

"Now we'll take them both down at night," she said.

Theft of the flag is a Class A misdemeanor punishable by up to a year's imprisonment and/or a $2,000 fine.

Official: AIDS cases rise rapidly in developing countries

Americans have changed habits due to fears, NYT-CBS poll finds

By Michael R. Kagay
N.Y. Times News Service

Half of American adults who are single and under 45 years of age say they have changed their sexual behavior because of fear of getting AIDS, according to the latest New York Times/CBS News Poll.

The poll also found signs of increased acquaintance with victims of AIDS and of heightened public knowledge about AIDS over the past six years.

The telephone survey, based on interviews with 1,424 randomly selected adults nationwide, was conducted June 3 to 6 and had an overall margin of sampling error of plus or minus 3 percentage points.

In the survey, 21 percent of American adults said they either knew someone who has AIDS (12 percent) or knew someone who has already died from AIDS (17 percent).

When The Times and CBS News first polled about acquaintance with AIDS victims in 1985, only 2 percent said they knew someone with acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

Forty percent of all adults now profess to "know a lot" about AIDS. That is an increase from 11 percent who described themselves as knowing a lot in a 1985 Times/CBS News Poll.

Another 4 of 10 respondents in each of the polls said they had some knowledge about AIDS.

When asked whether they had changed their sexual behavior because of fear of getting AIDS, 20 percent of all adults nationwide now say they have.

That is up from 11 percent measured in a CBS News Poll taken in 1986, but about the same as the 19 percent in a 1989 CBS News Poll.

But several subgroups in the new poll reported changes in behavior at rates sharply higher than the overall level: 43 percent of single adults, 40 percent of those aged 18 to 29 years, 38 percent of blacks, 35 percent of big-city residents, and 32 percent of Hispanic respondents said they had changed their sexual behavior to reduce their chances of getting AIDS.

When single adults under 45 years of age were analyzed, 52 percent said they had changed their sexual behavior to avoid AIDS.

When pressed further to say what changes they had made, respondents most frequently cited using condoms and limiting the number of sexual partners.

The poll showed support for educating children about AIDS in the schools even during the elementary school years.

For instance, 42 percent said they thought the schools were giving children "too little information about AIDS," while 31 percent said the schools were giving children "about the right amount of information." Only 2 percent said "too much" information was being given.

Florence, Italy — Although rates of AIDS infection appear to be slowing in industrialized countries, they are rising rapidly in many developing countries. In those areas, AIDS is likely to become the leading killer of adults in their most productive years by the turn of the century, the 8,000 participants at an international AIDS meeting here were told on Monday.

By the year 2000, 40 million people are expected to be infected with HIV, the virus that causes AIDS, up from an earlier estimate of 25 million to 30 million, said a World Health Organization official, Dr. James Chin. There are now an estimated 10 million infected adults, and more than 366,000 cases have been reported in 162 countries.

By the year 2000, 40 million people are expected to be infected with HIV.

Several speakers said the infection rates were about to soar in Asia. They are already high in sub-Saharan Africa, South America and the Caribbean. But because people generally do not become sick with AIDS until about 10 years after they are infected with the virus, the full impact of the epidemic will not be felt until later this decade, participants were told.

By 2000, there will be 10 million cases of AIDS worldwide, 90 percent of them in developing countries, principally among the impoverished, Chin said.

"Increasingly, heterosexual transmission will become the predominant mode of HIV transmission throughout the world," and women will account for increasing numbers of cases, Chin said. He said the expectation was that the AIDS infection would spread more widely among people who have sexually transmitted diseases.

He added that the picture of the epidemic had clearly changed from a decade ago when AIDS was discovered and the epidemic was thought to involve primarily gay men and addicts who injected drugs.

Heterosexual transmission is expected to account for up to 70 percent of the infections and homosexual transmission about 10 percent. Intravenous drug users will account for 10 percent, he said.

There are now about half a million children who have AIDS because of transmission of the virus from their mothers in pregnancy. By 2000, about 10 million children will be orphaned, Chin said.

Dr. Vulimiri Ramalingaswami of the All India Institute of Medical Sciences in New Delhi, said, "As mother-to-child transmission increases, AIDS embeds itself in future generations and starts an intergenerational trajectory." He cited one estimate that as many as a million people were infected in India, where few cases have been officially reported.

But even as the epidemic intensifies, complacency is rising and society's commitment to AIDS is declining worldwide, Dr. Jonathan Mann, a professor of epidemiology at the Harvard University School of Public Health, said.

In industrialized countries, infection seems to have peaked in the early 1980s, Chin said, adding that the number of cases might begin to decline by 1995, when they are expected to reach a cumulative total of two million.

Lack of funds was cited as a major obstacle to stopping AIDS in developing countries.

The World Health Organization, whose headquarters are in Geneva, estimates that groups facing a moderate to high risk of exposure to AIDS include a half billion heterosexuals with multiple sexual partners; about 10 million homosexual men who have multiple sex partners; and up to 5 million drug users who routinely share drug injection equipment.

APARTHEID: South Africa's parliament scraps racial classifications last Oct. 15.

Although the laws have now been revoked, the system they maintained has become so entrenched in South African society that breaking down its separations and compartments in everyday life — at schools, jobs, or distinct neighborhoods and enclaves — remains a formidable task.

"One cannot build security on injustice," de Klerk told a joint session of Parliament after Monday's repeal, "and there is no doubt that the Group Areas Act and other laws that determined the tenure of the land, as well as the Population Registration Act, did lead to injustice." He said the end of the laws had resolved a "moral dilemma" for South Africans.

The elimination of the four laws still leaves the black majority without the right to vote.

De Klerk has promised that universal franchise will be extended in a new constitution, and has invited black leaders to join him in drafting one. As an early step, he suggested on Monday that a conference of all political parties be convened before the end of the year.

De Klerk said the proposed nonracial constitution "has to be reached by negotiation, and I want to say here today that it is within our reach within a few years. I do not for a moment doubt that we will succeed."

Monday's watershed repeal leaves South Africa without a statutory justification for apartheid for the first time since after the National Party came to power in 1948. But other vestiges of racial discrimination have yet to disappear.

For example, public schools, but for a few exceptions, remain racially segregated. Disparities between whites and blacks continue in government benefits like old-age pensions. Neighborhoods may be slow to integrate because most blacks cannot afford better houses. The African National Congress, in a statement issued on Monday night, welcomed the repeal of the Population Registration Act, but said little would change "as long as blatantly racist practices continue."

Still, the action on Monday marked the most significant milestone yet in the dismantling of apartheid undertaken by de Klerk.

The Population Registration Act, which gained international notoriety for South Africa, established four compulsory racial categories — white, mixed race, Asian, and black. The mixed-race category was subsequently expanded to include bureaucratic variations.

White officials devised tests to determine the race of South Africans by examining their eyelids, gums, nostrils, and fingernails. One test entailed sticking a pencil in the hair to see if it fell out.

The conclusion from the testing determined whether a person could vote or own land, where he could live, eat, work, and relax, and whom he could marry.

As many as three and a half million people, the vast majority of them non-white, lost their homes as part of the government's grand design for geographic segregation. Some lost their spouses or families, who were classified as belonging to a different race.

The Population Registration Act was expunged from the statute books on Monday afternoon with 38 dissenting votes out of 178 members in the white House of Assembly. Eleven members of Parliament abstained, the South African Press Association reported.

The only opposition came from the right-wing Conservative Party, which wants apartheid maintained. De Klerk accused the Conservatives, who form the official opposition in the House of Assembly, of displaying what he called "contemptuous disregard of reason and reality." He said the vast majority of South Africans rejoiced in the changes.

The end to racial classification already has applied to children born since Feb. 1, 1990, when de Klerk promised to repeal the law. But the government is maintaining racially segregated voters' rolls for Parliament, which has a dominant chamber for whites and two less-powerful chambers for legislators of mixed race and of Indian descent, but none for blacks.

Since the repeal of the Population Registration Act removed the basis for the way in which legislators were chosen and arrayed, the government introduced measures that would maintain current political institutions and practices until constitutional changes were enacted. De Klerk rebutted allegations from critics of the government that these legislative measures to keep Parliament functioning constituted a ploy to perpetuate racism in another guise.

"The government is unqualified in its commitment to the removal of racial discrimination from every law and act of government," the South African president said.

■ Judge rules VMI can remain all-male

A federal district judge has ruled that Virginia's state-supported military college may continue admitting only men, saying that the benefits of a single-sex education justify the college's 152-year-old policy of excluding women.

In ruling against the Justice Department, which brought the sex-discrimination case against the Virginia Military Institute 15 months ago, Judge Jackson L. Kiser wrote that the college "has decided that providing a distinctive, single-sex educational opportunity is more important than providing an education equally available to all.

The Justice Department withheld comment on Kiser's ruling on Monday, pending its review of his decision, .

■ Trump to place 'Castle' into bankruptcy

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. — Donald Trump will place his Trump Castle in bankruptcy proceedings and split ownership of the casino 50-50 with bondholders under an agreement announced Monday that resolves some of Trump's financial problems.

Meanwhile, Trump representatives told state gambling regulators the developer will be financially stable under a tentative deal that surrenders many of his assets to banks in exchange for reducing his personal loan guarantees to $115 million.

The deal between Trump and Castle bondholders releases the developer from about $41 million in interest and principal payments on the Atlantic City, N.J., casino that were due Monday and places the Castle in a prepackaged bankruptcy.

■ Grand jury to rule on doctor-aided suicide

ROCHESTER, N.Y. — The case of a doctor who admitted helping a leukemia patient commit suicide will be considered by a grand jury, authorities said Monday.

"The cause of death is now listed as a suicide with an overdose of barbiturates . . . and I think it's appropriate for a grand jury to decide as to whether there's criminal prosecution warranted," Monroe County District Attorney Howard R. Relin said.

Dr. Timothy E. Quill wrote in the March 7 edition of the New England Journal of Medicine that he prescribed barbiturates for a 45-year-old leukemia patient and made sure she knew how many pills to take to end her life.

Quill said the woman decided to commit suicide rather than undergo a painful and prolonged treatment that carried only a 25 percent chance of recovery.

■ Court upholds award to Hudson lover

LOS ANGELES — An appeals court upheld a $5 million award to the onetime lover of Rock Hudson, ruling the sum isn't too large to compensate for "the ultimate in personal horror," the fear of developing AIDS.

The California 2nd District Court of Appeal rejected arguments by the actor's estate that Marc Christian failed to show a likelihood he contracted the AIDS virus during sexual relations with Hudson.

A jury ruled in February 1989 that Hudson was guilty of "outrageous conduct" for concealing his AIDS diagnosis from Christian, his lover for two years. Christian said he didn't learn of the actor's illness until a few months before Hudson, 58, died Oct. 2, 1985.

Although Christian didn't contract AIDS and tested negative for the presence of the virus, the Superior Court jury and a judge found he deserved damages. Hudson's estate appealed.

Yeltsin to begin 3-day U.S. visit

WASHINGTON (AP) — Russian President Boris N. Yeltsin's visit to the United States this week is aimed at establishing his identity as leader of a sovereign European state, a Yeltsin spokesman said Monday.

The trip will be Yeltsin's first since winning last week's election as president of the Russian Republic, the largest and most powerful of the 15 republics within the Soviet Union.

Viktor Yugin, a leader of an advance team setting up the four-day trip, told a news conference here that the central Soviet government of President Mikhail S. Gorbachev sets the broad outlines of foreign policy for all 15 of the Soviet republics.

But specific elements of that policy will be up to the republics

"It is quite natural that Yeltsin will be talking about joining the European house as a sovereign entity," the spokesman said.

In a slap at Gorbachev, Yugin added that the Russian leader would not be coming "with his hand extended, as some of our leaders do, but to discuss mutually beneficial cooperation" in developing cultural and economic ties with the United States.

Another official, Andrei Kolosovsky, said the Russian government is in the process of establishing "parallel foreign relations" with those of the Soviet government. But he said he does not foresee the two governments being in competition with each other.

Yeltsin is scheduled to arrive in Washington this afternoon and meet Wednesday with the leaders of the House and Senate, his official hosts.

He meets with Bush and top administration officials on Thursday before departing for New York, where he is to address New York University and meet with leaders of the Federal Reserve Bank and business executives and human rights leaders.

Yeltsin was one of seven republic leaders who reached agreement with Gorbachev on Monday on the draft of a new Union Treaty defining the relationship between the Soviet government and its constituent republics. Six of the 15 Soviet republics are seeking independence and have refused to participate in the negotiations on the new treaty to replace one signed in 1922.

The participation of Russia, which is by far the largest and most powerful of the 15, is critical to the future of any union.

Explosion, fire kill six, injure 33

CHARLESTON, S.C. (AP) — An explosion and fire Monday at a chemical plant killed six workers and injured 33 others, authorities said.

The explosion at the Albright & Wilson Americas Inc. plant occurred shortly before noon as workers began mixing chemicals to make a flame retardant, said Terry Martin, the company's employee relations manager.

Four people were injured critically.

The blast was felt by neighbors of the plant.

"My wife and I heard a rumble, looked out the window and saw a huge mushroom cloud — sort of like an atomic bomb — and we grabbed our cameras and photographed it," said Joe Strickland, who lives several miles away.

The fire was quickly brought under control, Martin said. The cause of the explosion was under investigation. Workers were starting a procedure to blend the chemicals that is done in an enclosed mixing system, he said.

The plant, in an industrial area north of Charleston, produces phosphorus chemicals and phosphoric acid. The plant was evacuated and only firefighters and rescue workers were allowed near the scene.

At least three firefighters were among the injured.

The majority of the injured suffered burns rather than chemical exposure, Martin said.

In New Orleans, all talk is of weather

NEW ORLEANS, La. (NYT) — It doesn't take a hurricane to send tremors of dread through this low-slung city in a saucer. A simple rain will do.

And there has been a lot of it lately. It rained Monday. It rained Sunday. It rained last week. And thereby hang a thousand tales.

The worst came suddenly, in torrents, in late afternoon before rush hour on June 10. A few hours later, the flood waters were furiously flowing, hundreds of abandoned cars littered the streets, a horde of commuters were stranded, acres of inundated carpet sloshed underfoot.

"We've had about 250 percent of the rainfall we normally expect through the first five months of the year," said Bill Crouch, chief meteorologist with the National Weather Service in Louisiana.

New Orleans receives 60 inches of rain a year on average. This year, the city reached that level May 28.

U.S. airlifts first Americans; scientists say worst over

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — U.S. warships and cargo planes on Monday evacuated thousands of American military dependents from two bases severely damaged by a week of volcanic eruptions.

The huge pullout, which involved 17 warships as well as Air Force C-141 planes, heightened uncertainty over the future of Clark Air Base and the Subic Bay naval station, among the oldest and largest American facilities on foreign soil.

Scientists, meanwhile, said the worst of Mount Pinatubo's eruptions appeared to be over.

But Filipinos were left facing monumental chores. Food and clean drinking water were running low in the central and southwestern portions of the main Luzon island, which bore the brunt of the volcano's week of fury.

Looting was reported Monday near Clark Air Base, 10 miles east of the volcano, as desperate and hungry people smashed open storefronts with crowbars to find food.

The government's welfare department said 180,000 Filipinos had taken shelter in refugee centers after eruptions Saturday dumped tons of ash and crushed thousands of homes. Thousands more sought refuge with relatives.

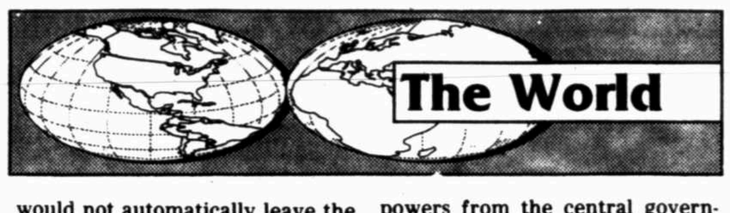

The Red Cross said at least 101 people have been killed since June 9, when the 4,795-foot volcano spewed ash, steam and super-heated rocks for the first time in 600 years.

The damage was aggravated by a typhoon. The ash buried cars, clogged streets and buckled roofs. Winds carried the ash as far as Cambodia.

Seven U.S. Navy ships sailed Monday from Subic Bay naval base with 6,200 dependents, bringing to more than 7,000 the number of Americans evacuated from Subic since Sunday, the U.S. Pacific Command in Hawaii said.

The warships were among 17 involved in the evacuation.

Soviets send union treaty draft to legislatures

MOSCOW (AP) — President Mikhail S. Gorbachev and leaders of seven republics agreed Monday on a draft of a new Union Treaty and sent it to the parliament and the republics' legislatures for consideration, news agencies reported.

Adoption of the document would mark an historic shift in the country's unifying document. Soviets were stunned two years ago when the Communist Party suggested rewriting the original 1922 treaty as a means of solving growing conflict among the 15 disparate republics.

Nine of the 15 republics are expected to sign the new treaty — leaving the six seeking independence in an undefined limbo.

Soviet officials have said failure to sign the new Union Treaty would not automatically leave the six republics out of the Soviet Union and that they would have to comply with a secession law that requires a five-year wait.

The six have said they will refuse to wait. They are Estonia, Latvia, Lithuania, Georgia, Moldavia and Armenia.

The draft would replace the word "socialist" with "sovereign" in the country's name, making it the Union of Soviet Sovereign Republics. It also shifts substantial powers from the central government to the republics.

Republics agreeing to the draft at Monday's meeting were Russia, Byelorussia, the Ukraine, Kazakhstan, Azerbaijan, Turkmenia and Kirghizia. Tadzhikistan and Uzbekistan are expected to agree but their leaders were absent.

Despite the decision to send the treaty for debate in the republic and national parliaments, key disagreements remain, Tass said. Apparently, they were left to the final negotiating.

Tass did not define these sticking points. But several hours earlier, Soviet television said Russia and the Ukraine were insistent on denying the central government the power to levy taxes. Newly elected Russian President Boris Yeltsin has said he wants to finance the pared central government through republican dues.

Gorbachev has won a major victory in gaining the agreement of his rival, Yeltsin, to send the draft for debate, even if this point remains unresolved.

Gorbachev and the republic chiefs called on the parliaments to debate the draft within two weeks. The parliaments will be asked to choose negotiators to work out a final text.

Congress Party prepares to pick Gandhi successor

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — Rajiv Gandhi's Congress Party prepared on Monday to pick his successor and form a government after it captured a commanding lead in national elections.

But partial returns indicated the party failed to win a parliamentary majority, so the new prime minister will likely preside over either an unstable minority government or a coalition.

Party president P.V. Narasimha Rao summoned senior party leaders to his home Monday evening to draw up a plan of action, party spokesman Pranab Mukherjee said.

The party should have a nominee for prime minister by the time Parliament convenes on Thursday, but Rao said a leader would not be discussed until the final election results were known. Votes were still being counted Monday night.

In Punjab state, voting was delayed until June 22 so that security forces could be be deployed to protect voters from Sikh insurgents.

Caretaker Prime Minister Chandra Shekhar, whose party was routed in the vote, asked President Ramaswamy Venkataraman to relieve him of his duties as soon as possible.

Election analyst Prannoy Roy said the partial results indicated an upswing in support for the Congress Party in the second and third rounds of voting, which took place after voting was interrupted by Gandhi's assassination.

Political leaders had predicted some sympathy votes for the party after the former prime minister was killed by a suicide bomber on May 21, the day after the multi-stage voting began.

Leaders begin negotiations on Northern Ireland's future

LONDON (NYT) — After seven weeks of haggling over procedural issues, leaders of four parties in Northern Ireland began negotiations Monday aimed at agreeing on a form of regional government for the strife-torn British province, which has been ruled largely from London since 1972.

The talks began in Belfast after the politicians agreed to the selection of Sir Ninian M. Stephen, a prominent Australian judge who has championed the plight of Aborigines, should chair an envisioned second phase of the talks.

The main issues that have hung up the talks involved the selection of both the location and an impartial chairman for planned negotiations between leaders of the Irish Republic and Northern Ireland on relations between the two parts of the island. These talks would be held only if the Northern Irish politicians first reach an agreement on a form of regional government. After the second phase, talks between the British and Irish governments would be held.

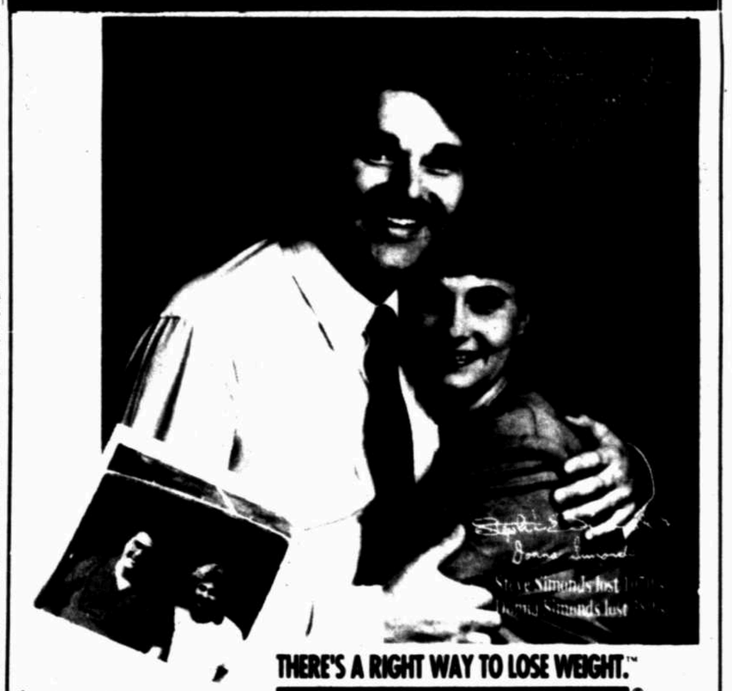

There have been a rash of terrorist attacks in recent weeks. Many were carried out by the Irish Republican Army, three of whose members were recently killed by British security forces in an ambush.

In Belfast on Monday, masked gunmen suspected of belonging to the IRA, which is trying to force the British out of Northern Ireland, shot dead a part-time soldier in the British army's Ulster Defense Regiment. That pushed this year's death toll in the province from "the troubles" to 37.

The killing Monday followed the wounding of a Catholic man in Belfast on Sunday. The shooting was the first for which the Ulster Volunteer Force has taken credit since Protestant terrorist groups began a cease-fire on April 30.

This violence seems only to have increased the resolve of most Northern Irish politicians to clear away the procedural obstacles and get on with the substantive talks. They previously agreed that the North-South talks would begin in London, would then move to Belfast for the substantive discussions and would conclude in Dublin.

Thornburgh flies partisan colors

When Dick Thornburgh became attorney general three years ago, he brought a fresh wind to sweep away the fetid partisan atmosphere of Edwin Meese's tenure. Thornburgh gave promise, as a former governor, prosecutor and assistant attorney general, of knowing the difference between politics and partisanship at Justice. As Thornburgh now demonstrates even in his coy manner of departure, he has failed that promise.

The least he could do, having declared himself a Republican candidate for the Senate, is to stop hiding behind transparent technicalities and, honorably, resign.

Those who insist that the attorney general must somehow be aloof from politics misconceive government. There is a wide range of discretion and initiative in the Department of Justice. Presidents are entitled to sympathetic advice on legislation, litigation and appointments.

There is no such wide range, however, when it comes to harsh partisanship and loose ethics.

Both tendencies were sharply evident at Justice under Meese, previously President Reagan's aide-de-camp. He had, for instance, barely survived two special prosecutors and bungled the Iran-Contra investigation.

Thornburgh, an experienced prosecutor, worked promptly to foster the department's tradition of professionalism and gave firm support to legislation like the Americans With Disabilities Act, which commanded bipartisan backing.

Yet before long, he, too, surged out of bounds into partisanship. A leading House Democrat found himself the victim of a slanderous investigative leak out of the department; the attorney general found himself strapped to a polygraph as his department fruitlessly pursued the source. When legislators balked at his death penalty bill unless it protected against racial unfairness, Thornburgh couldn't resist branding them "pro-criminal."

The attorney general can't be expected to master every case. Yet he professed detailed knowledge of the Alaska oil spill litigation. But then he had to plead ignorance of the fact that the lawsuits implicated a company in which he holds stock.

There is no current Justice responsibility more sensitive than civil rights. Allowing for sharp disagreements over, for instance, the hotly disputed civil rights bill, the attorney general has nevertheless failed to help the president put his best foot forward. More loyal than lawyerly, Thornburgh has thundered about "quotas" in language heavy with political slogans and light on evidence.

Widely known as a moderate when he was governor of Pennsylvania, Thornburgh has veered to the right. Is that a sign of national elective ambition? Such ambition is neither unprecedented nor untoward, but it does not mix well with the job of running Justice.

Thornburgh says he can stay on as attorney general for a couple of months because he's not yet formally a candidate for the Senate. But that is only because the Pennsylvania Republican Party is postponing its nominating convention — at Thornburgh's request.

The Justice Department, the administration, and Thornburgh's mixed record deserve a cleaner conclusion. A candidate for the Senate should be a full-time partisan. The attorney general of the United States should not.

Equality can mean betrayal of values

Sometimes, the growing equality between the sexes doesn't translate into improvement. Sometimes, it simply means one side has obtained the license and the nerve to unabashedly engage in some of the other side's less attractive behavior.

A case in point is a surge in opportunistic men pursuing a growing crop of "sugar mommies."

According to The Wall Street Journal, Texan Ginie Polo Sayles is cashing in big on the trend by promoting it through courses, tapes, private consultations and a soon-to-be released book.

The newspaper reports: "The first hurdle Ms. Sayles faces with her clients is getting them to discard quaint American notions that marriage should be first and foremost about love, that honesty is the best policy, even among spouses, and that work is necessary for a full life."

Sayles urges her clients to be deceptive and strategic in their dating. Her clients must keep in mind that the end — in this case, total financial dependence — justifies the means. "The ultimate goal is virtual adult adoption," the newspaper reports.

Oh, what a comfort it is to know that men can now feel comfortable — in fact, are being encouraged and are willing to pay real money — to become shallow, selfish, gold-digging sponges and that there are a growing number of sugar mommies out there willing to coddle these parasitic wimps.

It would be easy to laugh at their foolishness if their betrayal of values weren't so sad.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Tuesday, June 18, the 169th day of 1991. There are 196 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:

On June 18, 1940, during World War II, British Prime Minister Winston Churchill urged his countrymen, in a speech to the House of Commons, to comport themselves in a manner that would prompt future generations to say, "This was their finest hour."

On this date:

In 1778, American forces entered Philadelphia as the British withdrew during the Revolutionary War.

In 1812, the United States declared war against Britain.

Thought for Today: "I cannot understand any woman's wanting to be the first woman to do anything . . . It is a devastating burden and I could not take it, could not be a pioneer, a Symbol of Something Greater." — Nora Ephron, author (1941-).

JACK ANDERSON

KGB 'greets' conservative tour group

GRODNO, USSR — An American conservative leader saw the two faces of the Soviet Union up close and personal at this border crossing between Poland and the USSR. He saw the smile and the iron teeth.

Anderson

It happened before dawn when Howard Phillips, chairman of the Conservative Caucus, was hauled off a train by the KGB. Phillips was leading a group of several dozen conservatives through a high-profile fact-finding tour of the Baltic Republics. Included in the group were columnist and TV commentator Patrick Buchanan, his sister the former treasurer of the United States Angela Buchanan, and fund-raiser Richard Viguerie.

They were traveling by overnight train from Warsaw to Lithuania, which means crossing through a corner of the Soviet Union in the republic of Byelorussia — a republic that Phillips found out is not as receptive to secessionist talk as are its neighbors the Baltics.

The group had slept little because of the wheel-changing at 1:30 a.m. At the turn of the century, the Russians built their railroads with a wider gauge track so their European neighbors could not invade them by train. Now it means every train that crosses from Poland must be raised on a hoist and fitted with new wheels at the border.

Then, at 3 a.m., the train pulled into Grodno for the official shakedown of the travelers by KGB guards. Phillips and his 22-year-old son, Brad, had more luggage than the KGB thought necessary, so they were singled out for a search. The material they were carrying could not have been more incendiary to the two KGB officers.

Phillips had brought with him more than 100 anti-communist books and capitalist how-to manuals to hand out in the Baltics. There were 100 copies of the U.S. Constitution in his luggage, dozens of bumper stickers and pins reading "Victory Over Communism," and some smaller stickers, thrown in by a friend as a gag, which read "KGB Approved."

There were two KGB guards and one of them wasn't smiling. The other spoke and read English. He quietly shook his head when he saw the literature, which blatantly qualified as banned "ideological propaganda." But it appeared as though he was good-natured and wasn't ready to cause an ugly scene. The second KGB man did not speak English. He fingered some pins that said "Victory Over Communism," and asked if they were gold. He frisked Phillips and his son thoroughly. Then he found something he could read — a plaque honoring Lithuanian President Vytautas Landsbergis for his courageous stand on Lithuanian independence.

Phillips was hauled off the train into a nearby station for questioning. The tough KGB man wanted to confiscate the material and ship Phillips back to Poland. Or he could have arrested Phillips and caused an international incident. In the end, the English-speaking guard prevailed with some witting, or unwitting subterfuge. As near as Phillips could tell, the guard used some newsletters showing pictures of Phillips speaking in front of a flag at the National Press Club in Washington to convince his colleague that this man was a congressman. Phillips was allowed to go back to the train just about the time that Buchanan was ready to storm the station to make a vociferous protest.

The incident at Grodno served as a reminder of the Jekyll and Hyde mentality of the Soviet Union and of Mikhail Gorbachev himself.

MINI-EDITORIAL — It is a dreadful mistake for the United States to court Syria as a friend, despite its help during the Persian Gulf War. Syrian President Hafez Assad is every bit as ruthless as Iraq's Saddam Hussein. Assad's security forces have arrested tens of thousands of people without charges or trials. Those who survive the Syrian "justice" system tell horror stories of savage abuse. In the Tadmur Prison in the Homs Desert, detainees are whipped, kicked and punched every time they enter or leave their cells. Nothing that the Syrians offer in the way of an alliance can justify the United States ignoring that.

CHARLEY REESE

Kissinger has access to classified material

If you think I tend toward iconoclastic, you ought to read the "Rothbard-Rockwell Report," a newsletter published by the Center for Libertarian Studies (P.O. Box 4091, Burlingame, CA 94011).

Reese

Rothbard is professor Murray Rothbard, a venerable libertarian philosopher and scholar, and the Rockwell is Llewellyn H. Rockwell Jr., a young man with a brain and a pen as sharp as a samurai sword.

If either of these two gentlemen have any sacred cows, I haven't discovered them. They seem to stick strictly to principles.

Rothbard, for example, recently exposed the Kuwait connections of Kissinger and Associates, with credit to a young New York journalist, Bob Feldman.

The connections are interesting:

Kissinger went from an obscure Harvard professor to the foreign policy advisor of the late Nelson Rockefeller, and has remained a part of the Rockefeller interests. He was the foreign policy guru of the Nixon and Ford administrations.

Today he is a trustee of the Rockefeller Brothers Fund, counselor to Rockefellers' Chase Manhattan Bank and a member of Chase's International Advisory Commission. He has served on the board of CBS, Inc., and as a paid consultant to ABC and NBC.

Kissinger Associates was formed in 1982, financed with a loan from E.M. Warburg, Pincus & Co., an investment banking firm. It was reported in the New York Times that the firm had 25 to 30 corporate clients each paying $150,000 to $420,000 per year for advice and access to American and foreign officials. In other words, a high-class influence peddling business.

Kissinger was one of the leading voices for war against Iraq, following Iraq's invasion of Kuwait. He was forever cropping up on the TV shows, ponderously explaining why the U.S. must take on Iraq.

One of Kissinger's Associates — in fact, vice president — was Gen. Brent Scowcroft, who left Kissinger to become George Bush's National Security Advisor and who is credited by the New York Times as being one who advocated early a strong response to Iraq.

When he was with Kissinger, one of their top clients was Kuwait Petroleum Corp. Shortly after Kuwait Petroleum Corp. purchased Santa Fe International, Scowcroft became a Santa Fe director. Lawrence Eagleburger, Bush's deputy secretary of state, was with Kissinger Associates.

Among the directors of Kissinger Associates are T. Jefferson Cunningham III, a director of Midland Bank of Britain, 10.5 percent of which bank is owned by Kuwait. Another director is Robert O. Anderson, chairman of ARCO. ARCO and the Kuwaiti-owned Santa Fe are engaged in joint oil exploration off the coast of China. Other directors of Kissinger Associates include William Rogers, former secretary of state; former Citibank Chairman Edward Palmer. Also Bill Simon, former secretary of the treasury, an advisor to Bechtel Corp. and chairman of two firms jointly owned by himself and Suliman Olayan, a Saudi Arabian businessman.

Now get this, Kissinger still serves on Bush's Foreign Intelligence Advisory Board, which gives the sly old fox, now in the international consulting business, access to classified information.

As Rothbard concluded, ". . . you don't need to be a conspiracy theorist to see what's going on here. All you have to do is be willing to use your eyes."

The Bush policy in regard to Kuwait and China are strictly based on principle, the desire for world peace, justice, the best interests of the common man, etc., and so forth. You know the tune.

WILLIAM MURCHISON

Students need to learn that hard work pays

But wait; didn't some kids do all right on the national eighth grade math test, whose results have set off so much national hand-wringing?

Some kids did pretty well, if you want the truth.

Murchison

The lines of demarcation are cultural more than they are geographical. "None of the states are cutting it," says Education Secretary Lamar Alexander (proving that you needn't be an eighth-grader to abuse the rules of grammar). Whites and Asians outscored blacks and Hispanics, but this disparity is depressingly familiar.

Of greater significance:

1) Private-school students did better than their public-school counterparts.

2) Kids who did the most homework and attended school most often outperformed TV slugs and truants.

3) Families with books at home apparently produce better math scholars than those whose chief reading matter is the cereal box.

In other words, the old-fashioned verities still hold: Ability will out; hard work pays; an idle mind is the devil's workshop.

Seems we haven't learned a blessed thing since the days we all believed in the work ethic — possibly because there's nothing new to learn.

The job of American schools in the '90s isn't hiring more teachers' aides or squeezing bigger grants out of Washington, D.C.; it's working to reinvigorate our former regard for the fruits of effort and application.

What seems to be the problem here — that we can't focus on what we know to be true? It's too terrible — too politically incorrect — to suggest the efficacy of abstract properties like motivation and self-respect, God-given or self-instilled.

Democratic principle — as interpreted by the media and the academy — suggests equality of outcome in all things (with the notable exception of sports, where the principle of merit still reigns). Inequality seems unfair; we want the government to Do Something About It.

But don't we see? The government has been doing something. Public schools (as opposed to private schools) have spent the past 20 years lowering their standards of performance and behavior — bringing the product down to customers' levels.

Behold the results. Today, most eighth-graders can't consistently handle fractions, decimals, percentages or basic algebra.

My fellow Americans, it's time for a revolution. Enough coddling, enough shielding of kids from ugly realities — like sine, cosine and tangent. It's time for some motivation.

The great motivating engine of all time is the family — Mom, Dad, Bubba, Sis. How do we start up that engine in the age of divorce, desertion and related afflictions?

The main thing we do, educationally speaking , is give parents the right to weigh their children's educational needs and then choose a school suited to those needs. I'm talking about school choice.

Parents are too dumb to figure out where their children should attend school? The bureaucrats should do it for them? Baloney! In New York City's East Harlem District, where a nationally noted experiment in school choice goes forward, parents' opinions of the best schools match those of the administrator who runs the choice program. Test scores in East Harlem have soared since the program started.

The reopening of the American mind — what a task! Particularly when you consider whose minds are tightest shut: educators and politicians distrustful of their fellow Americans' capacities, forgetful what free men and women can do when someone sets them a challenge.

Kemp concedes '92 to Bush, Quayle, looks to '96

By Vic Ostrowidzki
Hearst News Service

WASHINGTON — One thing about Jack Kemp: He's relentlessly buoyant, boundlessly optimistic.

The former nine-term congressman from upstate New York and current U.S. secretary of housing and urban development, who was knocked out of presidential politics by George Bush early in the 1988 campaign, still harbors presidential ambitions.

A former professional football quarterback, Kemp, who is 55, admits that he dreams of being installed one day as the quarterback in the White House.

But the conservative stalwart and erstwhile Bush rival concedes that the subject is "irrelevant at the moment because President Bush and Dan Quayle will be in for the full eight years."

"I just put it (any thought of running) off on the shelf for now," he said in an interview last week. "But I'll consider it in the future if it's the right thing to do."

CHARLES JONES, a political scientist at the University of Wisconsin, said it's unlikely that Kemp will "achieve his dream. He's a terrific guy but he isn't an attractive candidate. His main drawback is that some people say they don't like him but they don't know why."

Kemp, who campaigned for Bush energetically once his own candidacy collapsed, had hoped to be tapped for the No. 2 spot on the ticket.

Instead, Bush gave him a second-echelon cabinet agency, the scandal-ridden HUD.

Kemp said in the interview he wants to leave HUD after next year's presidential election, but he declined to say what he would like to do next. His friends confide that he wants Treasury Secretary Nicholas F. Brady's job. However, insiders say Bush would never give him the post because he disagrees with Kemp's strong supply-side economic views –and doesn't want to give him too high a profile.

Meantime, Kemp charges around town and around the country spouting advice on almost everything and trying to clean up the mess at HUD linked to his predecessor, Samuel J. Pierce Jr.

REP. TOM LANTOS, D-Calif., chairman of the House Government Operations subcommittee that investigated HUD two years ago, said last week that Kemp deserves "an A plus for his efforts to root out the troubles at the department."

But the General Accounting Office, the investigative arm of Congress, also said last week that while Kemp has made a good start on attacking the department's difficulties, the "underlying causes of HUD's problems remain largely unresolved, leaving the agency susceptible to future fraud, waste, abuse and mismanagement."

WHILE KEMP has not directly criticized Bush, he claims to be the strongest advocate in the cabinet of a more active domestic policy.

"There are problems of poverty and despair and economic decline in many people's neighborhoods which the president has both a moral and political obligation to address," Kemp said.

He charged that government policies on housing, education and welfare have eliminated incentives for personal effort among inner-city dwellers.

"Our house is divided between affluence and grinding despair and poverty," he said, his voice rising.

"After spending $2.5 trillion in the war on poverty since 1964" without seeing much improvement in the lives of the poor, "the challenge of this decade to do something new," he insisted.

KEMP'S CRITICS say that the secretary has substituted windy optimism for a clear appraisal of inner city needs.

Isabel Sawhill of the Urban Institute, a Washington research center, said that exhortations about the joys of entrepreneurship and home ownership will do little for people who have never worked or whose skills can land them only minimum-age jobs.

Ed Marcinak, an urban expert at Loyola University of Chicago, said that Kemp "is in dream world when he talks of tenant ownership."

Budget Director Richard G. Darman criticizes Kemp's empowerment ideas as little more than "neo-neoism" warmed over from the 1960s.

Cellular-phone eavesdropping problem grows

N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — Graduate students in electrical engineering do it for fun. Some cellular telephone company workers do it for quality control. And repair technicians do it inadvertently when fixing cellular telephones.

They all listen secretly to other people's cellular telephone calls. Although illegal in many cases, the practice has become a telecommunications problem comparable to using computers to tap data bases illegally.

Some experts compare cellular telephones to the citizen's band radios used by truck drivers. "The technology that we're using now, sure, it's very easy to tap into," said Jagdish T. Gajjar, a professor of electrical engineering and computer science at Union College in Schenectady, N.Y. "It's more like a CB, that's how secure it is."

The lack of privacy on a cellular telephone call has been highlighted by a dispute between Sen. Charles S. Robb, D-Va., and Gov. L. Douglas Wilder over the tape recording of a conversation in 1988 that Wilder reportedly had from a cellular phone.

Mobile communications experts are among the most cautious users of cellular telephones. "If I were a politician, I would never use a present-day cellular phone," said Theodore S. Rappaport, the director of the mobile and portable radio research group at the Virginia Polytechnic Institute and State University.

"I'm careful when I use the cellular or cordless phone when I'm talking about money or about personal things with my family."

Cellular phones took their name from the way their service areas are divided into cells, each with a low-power radio transmitter and receiver, known as a base station.

By contrast, cordless home telephones and more powerful radio telephones send or receive signals from a single base station. Cordless phones use an unlicensed frequency that is so easy to tap that federal court decisions have established that it is legal to listen in.

But some state courts, including those in New York, have extended the protection of state privacy laws to cordless phone calls.

The easiest and cheapest way to eavesdrop on a cellular phone call, particularly a short conversation, is with a radio receiving device called a scanner, commonly used by hobbyists to listen to citizen's band radio conversations and communications by police and fire departments.

The cellular telephone industry minimizes the risks of eavesdropping. But it has privately made strenuous but unsuccessful efforts to persuade the Federal Communications Commission to ban scanners that can receive cellular telephone conversations, said Kevin J. Kelley, a lobbyist for a cellular equipment company who until recently was the vice president of the industry's trade association.

Even a cellular telephone can be used to eavesdrop on other conversations, although the quality is poor.

Dear Customers, Employees, and Friends of Southwest Airlines:

For 20 years now, since 1971, we've flown together and grown together.

In the beginning, we served only Houston and San Antonio from our home at Dallas Love Field. Flying three Boeing 737s, we were America's smallest jet airline.

Thanks to you, today we fly over 100 Boeing 737s. We are the world's twelfth largest airline (not too far behind Lufthansa) and America's seventh largest airline, in terms of passengers carried.

But our roots, and our hearts, remain in Texas. Last November, we proudly unfurled Lone Star One,℠ a flagship in our Boeing 737 fleet, and a high-flying tribute to the indomitable spirit that makes Texas a true state of mind.

On this, our Twentieth Anniversary, as we ride the winds of fortune into the future, we pause to thank you—our wonderful Customers, our remarkable employees, and our dear friends—for your patronage, your support, and your love.

We owe it all to you.

Thank you one and all,

'Radar fence' completed on U.S.-Mexico border

By Joel Williams
Associated Press writer

RIO GRANDE CITY (AP) — Drug traffickers accustomed to flying their contraband in from the south now face a new obstacle: a 2,000-mile-long "radar fence" capable of tracking the entire U.S.-Mexico border.

Three helium-filled radar balloons undergoing final tests in Texas complete the network of six "tethered aerostats" designed to keep an eye on incoming aircraft along the border.

Since March, the aerostats have been watching every section of the border from California's Pacific Coast to the Texas Gulf Coast. More aerostats are planned for later to watch Gulf Coasts of Texas, Louisiana and Florida, and several in the Caribbean, according to Customs.

They feed data to the federal Command, Control, Communications and Intelligence Center at Riverside, Calif.

The most recently developed site, north of Rio Grande City in Starr County in far southern Texas, has been sending data to the Riverside center since March, according to the U.S. Customs Service, which has directed the program's development and evaluates the data.

The U.S. Air Force recently took over operations and maintenance of the network.

"We send them good radar data, and what they do with it, we never know," said Hood Goodrich, Rio Grande City site manager for General Electric Government Services, contractor for the three Texas aerostats.

Other sites on the U.S.-Mexico border are at Marfa and Eagle Pass, Texas; Deming, N.M.; Fort Huachuca, Ariz.; and Yuma, Ariz.

Despite their high-tech equipment, the balloons still have to contend with forces of nature that have delayed the network's completion by about a year. A bolt of lightning snapped the cable mooring the aerostat at Eagle Pass, southwest of San Antonio, in Dec. 1989. Its operators were forced to detonate an emergency explosive charge to bring the balloon back to the ground, but not before it had drifted about 60 miles.

General Electric technicians discovered the bolt struck at a place on the cable where it previously had been repaired. The company has since strengthened the aerostats' cables.

'We're seeing that the aerostats and the air program are a deterrent to drug smugglers flying across the border.'

— Suzanne Moore, Spokeswoman, U.S. Customs Service

In 1989, high winds ripped the Fort Huachuca aerostat from its mooring. Last year, a wind gust ripped apart the aerostat at Marfa in West Texas. Since then, the aerostat operators have kept a closer watch on weather conditions and reel the balloons in to safety if the atmosphere appears threatening.

The white, 233-foot-long, fish-shaped balloons are tethered to their ground stations with a cables made of a plastic material up to five times stronger than steel, according to Customs. The cable contains electrical lines to power the radar equipment inside the aerostats and contains other lines that bring the data back.

Made of a multi-layered fabric called Kevlar, the aerostats fly as high as 15,000 feet and provide surveillance of areas of 300 miles in diameter.

One of the problems for federal agents battling drug smugglers is that ground radar stations do not cover many remote stretches of the border. Pilots could fly low, especially at night, to avoid detection from existing ground radar, and then land on one of hundreds of rural, clandestine airstrips.

With the aerostats in use, Customs officials hope to be able to send their tracking planes to follow the smugglers to their destinations, then intercept their cargo, said Suzanne Moore, a spokeswoman for the agency in Riverside, Calif.

Although no hard figures are available, Ms. Moore said Customs officials believe the program is forcing smugglers to shift their contraband to more risky ground transportation before crossing into the United States.

"We're seeing that the aerostats and the air program are a deterrent to drug smugglers flying across the border," Ms. Moore said.

Federal prosecutor rejects offer in apparent scam

PITTSBURGH (AP) — If you're planning a mail scam, there are certain people to avoid — like a person who may someday prosecute you.

U.S. Attorney Tom Corbett, the top federal prosecutor in western Pennsylvania, said he was surprised last month by a letter saying he could make an easy $7 million by helping to get $21 million out of Nigeria.

The writer, who said he was from Lagos, Nigeria, told Corbett he could get rich quick by providing four blank, notarized pieces of letterhead stationery and his bank account number.

The writer said he could get his hands on $21 million the government thought it was paying to a construction company. He said he needed a way to get the dough out of the country.

"You don't want to send something like this to a U.S. attorney," Corbett said Friday. "He even mailed it to my office.' "

Corbett has asked the U.S. Postal Inspection Service to investigate. And he has a tip for scam targets: "You should never, ever give out your bank account number to anyone."

Texas' rich school districts get day in court

By Peggy Fikac
Associated Press writer

AUSTIN — Wealthy school districts would be ravaged by a law designed to shift hundreds of millions of dollars in property tax money to their poorer counterparts, a lawyer for several rich districts told a state judge Monday.

"What this bill is doing is just devastating the school districts that are leaders in education in Texas," Dallas lawyer Earl Luna said, as a hearing on wealthy districts' challenge to the new law opened before State District Judge F. Scott McCown.

Al Kauffman of the Mexican American Legal Defense and Educational Fund said school districts could recoup property-tax losses under the bill. Kauffman represents poor school districts that filed the original, and ultimately successful, 1984 challenge to the way Texas pays for public education.

"All of the tears are for naught, because all they have to do is raise their taxes to the level which others have already done," he said.

McCown said he would consider tax issues, including whether the law's countywide property-tax system is constitutional.

But he delayed consideration of several other questions, including whether the law provides equity and adequate funding, and whether it affects minority voting rights.

McCown said he has yet to decide whether he even has jurisdiction over the adequacy of school funding. State lawyers have said lawmakers have discretion over that issue.

The new law, passed in response to a Texas Supreme Court order to even out school districts' access to funding, creates regions drawn largely along county lines to impose a minimum property-tax rate.

School districts in each county education taxing region will share the revenue from the minimum tax.

Local school districts also may tax more, without pooling the revenue, to enrich programs and for construction.

The state guarantees every school district a certain amount of money, in state and local funds combined, for each penny of property tax, up to a certain level. Unless overturned, the law takes effect for next school year.

Wealthy districts say the law creates an unconstitutional state property tax, and unconstitutionally transfers local tax money from one school district to another.

Because the school finance law provides for each county education taxing region to be governed by an appointed panel of school board members, they also argue that the law dilutes the voting strength of minorities.

The state says the law is constitutional, and that it has no discriminatory effect on voting rights because county education boards have only ministerial duties.

Besides tax questions, McCown said he would consider in this hearing a contention by some wealthy school districts that the law is a "local and special bill" that regulates the affairs of school districts in a way not allowed by the Texas Constitution.

As to the delayed issues, McCown said he would consider them at a separate trial, after lawmakers meet in special session this summer to write a state budget that will include education funding.

That later trial would include an effort by some poor school districts to get more money for school construction, he said.

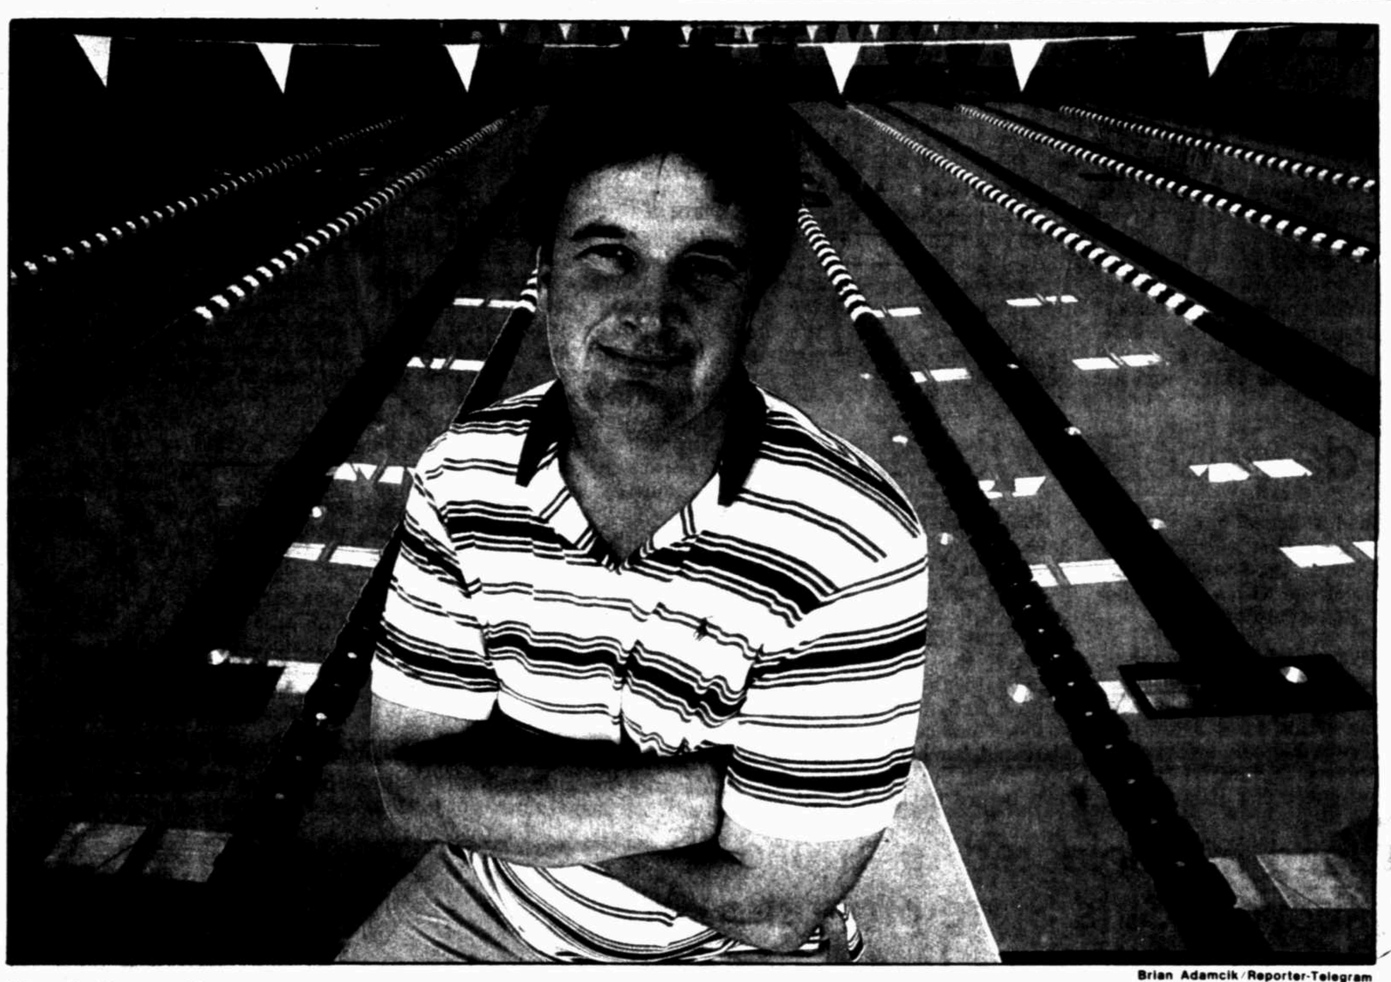

A number of poor school districts have raised problems with the bill, but say it's too early to decide whether the whole measure is constitutional. Poor districts represented by Kauffman, among others, have defended the countywide property-tax system.

COM oasis thrives under coach's care

■ City of Midland Swim Team must find $50,000 in matching funds to ensure its growth.

Thousands of adults and children have found a desert oasis in one of Brad Swendig's aquatic lairs.

In addition to his duties as swim coach and director of City of Midland Swim Team Inc., Swendig oversees the operation of the four municipal pools.

But his biggest challenge comes during the next two weeks, when his organization must raise $50,000 in order to qualify for $1 million in matching grants.

Since last November, City of Midland Swim Team Inc. has been dipping into the community pool in search of $500,000 in donations to match separate grants from two local foundations.

The Mabee and Abell-Hanger foundations each have pledged to throw in $500,000 if the organization can net $500,000 of its own contributions by July 1.

With $50,000 to go, Swendig said he can see the light at the end of the financial tunnel.

"We're still sweating it out," he said Monday. "If we come down two weeks from now and we're $10,000 short, we're out of it. But I think we're going to make it."

The swim club is hoping to expand and refurbish existing facilities at the Mabee Memorial Swim Center, 3003 N. A St., Swendig said.

TWC backs out of lawsuit against plant

■ Texas Water Commission officials give no explanation for withdrawing from lawsuit against Odessa-based Dynagen.

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

ODESSA — The Texas Water Commission (TWC) has withdrawn its request to join the Texas Air Control Board (TACB) in a 1989 lawsuit against Dynagen, officials reported Monday.

"Unfortunately," said David Preister, assistant attorney general in the AG's Environmental Protection Division, "I am not at liberty to say" why the TWC will not participate in the lawsuit against the Odessa-based petrochemical plant.

Preister was preparing to file a third amended petition against Dynagen in Judge Tryon Lewis' 161st Texas State District Court in Odessa when he learned of the TWC's pullout.

He said he'd rather not comment on what effects the withdrawal would have on the TACB's pollution case against Dynagen.

TACB violations against Dynagen have numbered in the hundreds since 1984, said TACB investigator Dr. Neil Carman.

"The solar water-evaporation ponds and the rest of the wastewater treatment system are under the primary jurisdiction of the Texas Water Commission," said Carman, who has been monitoring the Dynagen plant since 1981.

"But when the ponds begin to emit horrendous air pollution such as the citizens complained of to the Texas Air Control Board, the Texas Clean Air Act allows the Texas Air Control Board to investigate the air-pollution on industrial wastewater."

Dynagen's plant manager Tim Gorman said that the Texas Water Commission has "always been a part of some of the enforcement actions in regard to the (Dynagen) wastewater treatment facility."

Bill Lockey, the TWC's district manager in Odessa, said the pullout would not hurt environmental efforts to reduce the plant's pollution.

"Any violations that are not addressed in the lawsuit will be addressed in (TWC) administrative process," he said.

That process may rely on the

MALDEF, other groups amend redistricting lawsuits

AUSTIN (AP) — Civil and minority rights groups Monday filed new lawsuits against the state after Gov. Ann Richards allowed the state House and Senate redistricting plans to become law.

Richards also was criticized by state Republican Party chairman Fred Meyer, who called the governor's decision a "slap in the face" to minorities and Republicans.

The Mexican American Legal Defense and Education Fund, Texas Rural Legal Aid and the Texas Civil Rights Project allege the legislative redistricting plan fails to ensure enough minority representation that reflects the state's minority population.

In their amended lawsuits filed in state and federal court in Brownsville, the groups also allege that because the Legislature failed to draw new congressional and State Board of Education districts, the 1980 lines could remain in effect for another 10 years.

James Harrington, of the Texas Civil Rights Project, criticized Richards for not vetoing the state House and Senate district lines, which were strongly opposed by a coalition of black and Hispanic organizations.

"It's unfortunate that the governor hasn't paid more attention to the minority communities strongly united behind her candidacy," Harrington said.

On Sunday, Richards said she appreciated the concerns of minorities, and that is why she didn't sign the redistricting bills.

Harrington said that by not vetoing them, the result is the same — the plans are now law.

"Whether you wink at them or kiss them doesn't make the pigs any less dirty," he said.

Man accused in deadly attack pleads innocent

By David Morris

A Midland man who admitted to police that he stabbed two people — one of them fatally — last December pleaded innocent Monday to charges of murder and attempted murder.

Ivy Ray McGruder is accused of killing 23-year-old Abel Tucker Hernandez on Dec. 22 at Hernandez's house at 3411 Park Lane. He also is accused of critically injuring Hernandez's wife, 20-year-old Antricia Bedford Shaw, in the same knife attack.

Tom Hirsch of Odessa, McGruder's attorney, suggested that his client stabbed the couple in self-defense.

McGruder, 27, could face up to 99 years or life in prison if convicted. He entered his pleas during day one of his jury trial before Judge John Hyde in 238th District Court.

According to testimony, McGruder came to the Midland Police Department station with some family members around 4:45 a.m. Dec. 22 and told officers that he thought he'd killed two people.

MPD Officer Marvin Rasco, the station's desk officer on the night of the stabbing, said McGruder's brother told him McGruder had killed the Rural Hill Country community founded by freed slaves sees population dwindle

By David Matustik
Associated Press writer

PEYTON COLONY — Austin Jones, like other descendants of freed slaves who settled in Blanco County, knows what it's like to be land rich and dirt poor.

Hill Country farming and ranching were never easy, but the former slaves who settled this area east of Blanco more than a century ago had a relationship with the land that allowed them and their descendants to eke out a living with hard work.

Now, like others of his generation, Jones, 85, watches sadly as the land is gradually sold off, the young adults move away and the once-vibrant community of 480 dwindles to barely more than the 10 church-going members of Mount Holeb Baptist Church.

"It's going down — it's gone," said Jones, who lives on 2½ acres at Rocky Hill on what was once a 100-plus acre homestead.

Even the annual Juneteenth celebration will not reverse the downward population trend shared by many rural Texas communities, acknowledges town historian Hattie Mae Coffee, 82.

Juneteenth is an annual celebration originated by blacks in Texas to commemorate Union Gen. Gordon Granger's reading of the Emancipation Proclamation to free slaves in the state on June 19, 1865.

The word came two months after Confederate Gen. Robert E. Lee surrendered to Union Gen. Ulysses S. Grant and more than two years after President Abraham Lincoln's Emancipation Proclamation freed slaves in the Confederate states.

Soon after slaves were officially freed in Texas, black families began making their way to this colony 40 miles southwest of Austin to begin setting up homesteads and farms. The former slaves first came from Caldwell and Bastrop counties, but later the colony attracted blacks from all parts of the United States.

"It's hilly, but they raised something on it and made a living," Ms. Coffee said. "They farmed. They'd come into Blanco to work. They'd cut cedar — raise chickens, hogs and cattle."

In its heyday in the 1920s, Peyton Colony encompassed more than 5,000 acres.

Homesteaders originally claimed 160-acre tracts, but some farms grew to be much larger. However, the colony hit hard times during the Depression and never fully recovered.

threat of fines and other action to enforce compliance with environmental laws, he said.

Lockey was not involved in the TWC's decision, which he said apparently came out of Austin.

Dynagen has been "very cooperative" with the TWC in correcting water-pollution problems at the plant, he said.

Those alleged water-borne pollution problems "can't be solved overnight, and I don't think the attorney general expects that, either," Lockey said.

Since the TACB lawsuit was filed against Dynagen in 1989, Dynagen has agreed to build a multi-million-dollar "state-of-the-art" wastewater-treatment plant to curb pollution.

Additionally, Dynagen has agreed to clean the sludge out of its 165 acres of solar water-evaporation ponds.

Meanwhile, the TACB, through the Texas Attorney General's Office, has lodged a lawsuit against American Central Gas Companies Inc. for allegedly polluting the air west of Odessa.

In the American Central Gas Companies Inc. case, the attorney general is alleging that the natural-gas processing plant, which sweetens incoming casing-head gas, is polluting the environment with hydrogen sulfide (H2S), a poisonous gas that has an odor suggestive of rotten eggs.

The pollution case is "serious enough" that the TACB decided to terminate its administrative enforcement against the gas plant and requested that a suit be filed "immediately" to prohibit the plant from violating laws of the Texas Clean Air Act and rules of the TACB, Preister said.

Judge Tryon Lewis will hold a hearing at 9 a.m. June 28 in 161st Texas State District Court for a temporary injunction to compel the plant to abide by environmental laws and rules.

COM: Swendig must locate $50,000 by July 1

(From 1B)

and must have more room to meet their needs, he said.

Swendig, 33, has been instrumental in that bittersweet aquatic overpopulation.

A swimmer since he was 14 years old, he went on to swim competitively for Auburn University.

"I was not a gold-medal type guy," Swendig said. "I was a level behind all those guys."

Nevertheless, he made swimming a career, serving as a coach at a Houston swim club for five years before coming here in 1985.

The City of Midland Swim Team Inc. had only about 50 swimmers when Swendig arrived. The organization now has 330 children swimming year round and another 300 swimming in league competition every summer.

"A lot of our growth came through people coming here through their lessons," Swendig said. "We don't advertise that much.

"As the team improved and grew, more people came in. It has been a little bit of a snowball effect."

The center has an all-adult swim team, which competes around the state. Swim lessons and adult water aerobics also are offered.

Through a contract with the city, Swendig oversees operations at the four municipal pools: Doug Russell, Washington, Halff and Ulmer.

Swimming has become an important activity in Midland children's lives, he said.

"It's hard to go fishing or camping or boating out here," Swendig said. "There's not a lot of inherent activities out here for kids."

He said children enjoy swimming because they easily can see the fruits of their labor: faster times, stronger muscles and a lesson in how hard work reaps positive results.

George Logan, city of Midland community services director, said Swendig and his organization have excelled at churning up local interest in swimming.

"They do a heck of a job for the city," Logan said. "They're very motivated toward their employees and their swimmers. Swimming is their business and they do it very well."

Almost 20,000 children passed through the gates of the municipal pools during the 1990 summer season, Logan said. Entrance fee is $1.

Doug Russell, where 15,000 swimmers hit the water, was the most popular. Ulmer had 2,332 swimmers, while Halff had 2,000 and Washington had 500.

"A lot of these pools provide a good opportunity for the kids, many of whom don't have an apartment pool or backyard pool to go to," Logan said.

He said the pools and concession stands generate an average $39,000 annually for the City of Midland Swim Team Inc.

UT expert wins $260,000

AUSTIN (AP) — A University of Texas anthropologist who spent 15 years recording the Kaluli people of the Papua New Guinea rain forest was awarded a $260,000 MacArthur Fellowship on Monday.

Steven Feld, 41, was the only Texan among 31 people receiving the award this year.

people in self-defense.

McGruder led officers to Hernandez's house, where MPD Sgt. Ron Benton found Hernandez lying dead in the living room and Ms. Shaw lying in a pool of blood in the kitchen.

"She told me that Ivy Ray had stabbed them over some money," Benton testified.

Benton said he also found a 3-year-old child and an 18-month-old child at the house, but both children were unhurt.

MPD Detective Larry Honeycutt testified that McGruder led police to the murder weapon, a hunting knife with a 5-inch blade, after his arrest. The knife was buried in some dirt about five blocks from the murder scene, Honeycutt said.

McGruder also led police to a trash bin where he had left a metal club with which he claimed Ms. Shaw had attacked him.

"He did say that when the scuffle started ... Ms. Shaw came out of the bedroom with a pipe in her hand," Honeycutt said.

Honeycutt told the five-man, seven-woman jury that McGruder did not complain of any injuries at the time of his arrest. However, photographs taken by evidence officers showed that McGruder had a cut on one of his hands.

Hirsch said he may attempt to have some of the blood samples taken from the murder scene analyzed to see if any of the blood belonged to his client.

Midland District Attorney Al Schorre, the prosecutor in the case, said the other evidence against McGruder made a blood analysis unnecessary "for a complete and fair hearing." He added that Hirsch did not request blood tests before the trial.

Fire injury

Staff Report

ODESSA — A 61-year-old Odessa man was critically burned during a propane truck fire Monday, fire and hospital officials said.

Truitt Woodall, the driver of the truck, was in serious condition with second degree burns over 38 percent of his body at the burn unit at University Medical Center, Lubbock, Monday evening, a hospital spokesperson said.

Woodall was injured from a fire flash coming from the front part of a propane truck about 1 p.m. Monday at Friday's Welding Supply, 2324 Farm to Market Road 715, fire officials said.

Firefighters extinguished the fire in less than an hour and damage was not extensive.

Cause of the fire was still under investigation Monday, said Dale Little, county fire marshal.

Woodall, an employee of Frank's Fuel in Odessa, was transported by private vehicle to Midland Memorial Hospital before being transferred to the Lubbock hospital.

Arrest

A Midland man was arrested Sunday evening in connection with the sexual assault of a woman that occurred early Sunday morning, police said.

Jimmy Darnell Fennell, 20, of 1911 Nash Ave., remained in jail Monday in lieu of a $2,500 bond set by Justice of the Peace Keith Jobe, jail officials said.

According to police reports, a 20-year-old woman told police she was awakened when someone touched her between 3 p.m. and 4 p.m. at a southwest Midland residence. The woman was then sexually assaulted.

The man reportedly entered the residence through the front door, but it is not known whether the entry was forced.

Police arrested Fannell without incident at his home on a warrant issued by Jobe.

Accident

ODESSA — A 12-year-old boy remained in stable condition at Odessa Medical Center Hospital Monday after falling off the trunk of a car travelling about 40 to 50 mph earlier that day, according to the Department of Public Safety.

Ernest Castillo Rios suffered muliple head injuries when he fell from a 1989 Buick two-door in the 7100 block of Venetta Street about 8:50 a.m., officials said.

The driver of the car, Orlando Urquidi of Odessa, fled the scene of the accident, officials said.

■ Texas' largest S&L fraud case goes to court

DALLAS — Jury selection began Monday in the retrial of D.L. "Danny" Faulkner and five others accused in a multimillion-dollar scheme that is Texas' largest savings and loan fraud case to go to court.

The selection process will take several days for a trial expected to last well into fall, attorneys said.

"We're looking for a group of jurors who can be fair against the backdrop of a case that's received more publicity than any other in this town since the Kennedy assassination," said Mike Fawer, Faulkner's attorney. "That's no overstatement."

Faulkner, a developer and former owner of Empire Savings and Loan Association in Mesquite, and the others are accused of stealing more than $130 million from the thrift through a series of real estate deals.

The "I-30 condo scandal," named for the properties east of Dallas that were central to the deals, was one of the first cases to signal the problems of the savings and loan industry in the 1980s.

■ Hearings set on Franklin Mountains State Park

EL PASO — The Franklin Mountains are finally getting attention from state officials who plan to turn the range that shadows El Paso into the nation's largest urban park.

Though a state park for over a decade, little has been done to the area.

The Texas Parks and Wildlife Department will conduct hearings in El Paso next week to draft a master plan for the park, which will include 33,381 acres of canyons, springs, wildflowers and wildlife.

"It's an essential event in the whole effort to protect the mountain," said John Sproul, president of the Franklin Mountains Wilderness Coalition. "It's pivotal to the future of the park. It's going to determine how the land is cared for and how it's used."

Seemingly barren from afar, the Franklin Mountains are covered with an abundance of wildflowers, cottonwood trees and lush greenery near springs that seep from the mountains. They also provide habitat for mule deer, bobcats and an occasional mountain lion.

■ Austin, organizations take 15 RTC properties

AUSTIN — The city of Austin and some non-profit organizations Monday took 13 houses and two vacant lots given by the federal savings and loan bailout agency.

The properties were assets of failed savings and loans assumed by the Resolution Trust Corp. The agency plans to give away 800 homes as it drives this month to dispense properties valued at less than $100,000.

"These properties ... represent almost no value to RTC, either because of their condition or because the cost of holding them, whether that's maintenance, taxes or insurance, is so high," said RTC Southwest Regional Director Carmen Sullivan.

The RTC is eager to be rid of homes valued at less than $100,000 because they are costly to keep up and require a great deal of effort to sell.

Another 3,000 such homes have been placed in the agency's affordable housing program, in which qualified middle- and low-income buyers can receive substantial mortgage and repair assistance.

■ 17-year death row inmate dies in electric chair

HUNTSVILLE — A killer who spent 17 years on death row was executed early Monday after telling his executioners to "start things rolling."

Jerry Joe Bird, 54, was convicted of murdering an antique-gun collector in 1974.

He was the 40th person put to death in Texas and the 147th in the nation since the U.S. Supreme Court's 1976 ruling allowing states to resume capital punishment. Texas has executed more people than any other state.

Bird mouthed, "Hi" to his mother, and then said: "Go ahead. Start things rolling."

A friend, Karla Scott, blew him a kiss and huddled beside his mother.

Bird was pronounced dead at 12:21 a.m., 12 minutes after the lethal drugs began to flow.

■ Observatory scientist wins NASA award

AUSTIN — A University of Texas astronomer has received the National Aeronautics and Space Administration's highest civilian award.

Harlan Smith, 66, was given the NASA Distinguished Public Service Medal over the weekend.

The award stems from Smith's successes during his 25-year tenure as director of UT's McDonald Observatory in the Davis Mountains of West Texas.

Colleagues say Smith, who has been fighting cancer since January, has done more than help others collect data from telescopes and report on those findings.

They describe Smith as a crusading astronomer who has helped arouse public interest in observing the Texas skies by making it simple and fun.

Smith joins Carl Sagan, James Michener and a handful of other recipients of the NASA award.

San Angelo rallies behind Goodfellow

AP Laserphoto

San Angeloans paint posters in support of Goodfellow Air Force Base. Residents are fighting to have the base taken off the government's list of proposed closure sites.

SAN ANGELO (AP) — For 50 years, Goodfellow Air Force Base has been a leading economic provider and a symbol of this conservative, defense-minded West Texas city.

So local residents have responded with a call to arms at the announcement that Goodfellow may be closed as part of a nationwide downsizing of the country's military bases.

Two members of the Defense Base Closure and Realignment Commission have scheduled a public hearing today on the possible closure of Goodfellow. And a troop of local support is ready.

"If they close Goodfellow, it's not going to be for a lack of support," said Jeannie Beck, a volunteer who helped put together dozens of four-foot tall signs reading "Save Goodfellow." The signs have been sprinkled all over the city.

Mrs. Beck, who has lived in San Angelo all of her life and whose father was stationed at Goodfellow, said the city is protecting the base like a member of the family.

"It's a marriage relationship," she said. "The base personnel fit right into the community. We need each other."

Volunteers have dedicated thousands of hours to saving Goodfellow, decorating the city with red, white and blue ribbons and shiny bumper stickers.

Signs reading "Save Goodfellow" can be seen on most every business marquee in the city. And hundreds of residents will line the route of the base closing officials with banners and balloons.

Two weeks ago, city officials handed out postcards at local churches to be returned with supportive comments and given to base closing officials.

About 12,000 of the cards have been collected.

Dozens of retailers are expected to close Tuesday afternoon to allow employees to attend the 3 p.m. public hearing, which was moved from city hall to a civic auditorium to accommodate more people.

City officials say attendance could reach 5,000.

"The business we'll lose during the hearing doesn't mean anything compared to the loss of the base," said Brad Morris, general manager of Lynn Alexander Autoplex, one of the area's largest car dealerships.

"Our closing for a few hours can be looked at as an investment in our future," Morris said.

Economic impact statements show San Angelo's unemployment could surge from 6.5 percent to 15 percent if the more than 4,000 personnel at Goodfellow and their families are forced to leave.

San Angelo would lose $181 million in regional income and at least three schools would close, according to reports compiled by the city.

Officials say the city's mostly agriculture and oil-based economy could not survive losing Goodfellow, San Angelo's leading employer.

"You can't ignore the economic impact," said San Angelo Mayor Don Butts. "It would be devastating."

City leaders and residents were shocked when Goodfellow was added to the list of base closure candidates at the beginning of this month by the base closure commission.

Goodfellow was added as a possible substitute for Denver's Lowry Air Force Base on the final list after several Colorado politicians suggested closing Goodfellow would be more cost-effective.

Despite the finger-pointing, city officials say they refuse to get into a catfight with Colorado leaders.

"We are going to represent our case on its own merits," said Doug Kinsinger, head of San Angelo's Chamber of Commerce. "We are not going to get into an antagonistic competition."

According to Air Force figures, the Pentagon would spend more than $160 million to close Goodfellow, compared to a little more than $200 million to close Lowry.

But the economic impact of the base closing would hit San Angelo much harder than the Denver area, the Air Force figures show.

Lowry comprises 3.5 percent of Denver's economy, while Goodfellow makes up 18.2 percent of San Angelo's.

"The numbers and statistics will be the deciding factor," said Mrs. Beck. "But the outpouring of support should have an effect."

Sens. Lloyd Bentsen and Phil Gramm testified Monday in Washington before members of the base closure panel on the closure of Goodfellow and Kingsville Naval Air Station, both on the commission's list.

Three other Texas military installations are on a "hit list" drawn up by the Pentagon: Carswell Air Force Base in Fort Worth, Bergstrom AFB in Austin, and Chase Field Naval Air Station in Beeville.

Bentsen, D-Texas, urged the commission to consider closing Lowry AFB, instead of Goodfellow.

"Closing Lowry would save the Air Force $54 million every year, almost twice as much as could be closed by closing Goodfellow," he said.

Bentsen also said Chase and Kingsville both offer the needed air space, superb flying weather and close proximity to areas of operation.

Texas officials remember the Alamo

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas officials want back from Mexico a flag that may have flown during the bloody battle of the Alamo, and they have asked President Bush to try and retrieve the banner during free trade negotiations.

Gov. Ann Richards, without signing the measure, allowed a resolution to take effect Sunday that asks Mexico's President Salinas de Gortari to either give the flag back or loan it to Texas "as a gesture of goodwill."

The flag was used by the New Orleans Greys, a volunteer outfit in the Texas Revolution against Mexico, according to The Handbook of Texas.

Given to them by a group of East Texas women, the Greys left the flag at San Antonio when they went on to Goliad and Refugio. The banner was captured by Gen. Antonio Lopez de Santa Anna when the Alamo fell March 6, 1836 and was taken to Mexico City, the handbook said.

ComLogic provides system for environmental analysis

ComLogic Corporation, a local computer systems sales and service organization, has developed a computer mapping software package that is proving instrumental in analyzing groundwater contaminants in area water wells. The software, IGI SmartMAP, was developed through an associated software development company, Intelligent Graphics, Inc. (IGI).

Jim Banister, manager and programmer for IGI, stated, "SmartMAP was developed to provide automation of mapping and facilities management. SmartMAP is a full featured Geographic Information System (GIS) and allows attachment of text data to graphical data, thereby allowing automatic modification of the map to display user selected data such as well depth, date drilled, levels of contaminants as measured and so forth."

"The user may then analyze the map data and generate paper maps labeled with specific data from the internal database. For instance, one map may show well owner, date drilled, and the level of nitrates in the water. The next map produced may show well depth, local water table and chloride level and show only wells where chlorides exceed a certain amount. Contours can be produced on any numeric field in the database. These maps can be produced in only minutes where hand-labeled maps would take days to produce."

Mark Hoelscher of the Martin County Underground Water Conservation District, who has been using the software for over a year, said, "With SmartMAP I am able to make analysis of gathered data and produce maps with contours of contaminants showing the problems developing in our groundwater that would have been impossible without SmartMAP due to our limited staff."

"I looked at other GIS systems and found none with the specific tools I needed to produce my maps without extensive modification and programming time. SmartMAP is extremely easy to use, yet has the power of systems costing many times more."

IGI SmartMAP is also in use in the oil industry, using its unique capabilities to track production history, maintenance and costs of oil and gas wells. The user can simply query the map and extract data based on his questions. Questions such as "Show me all wells that production was greater than XXX and are operated by YYY," SmartMAP will then generate a map meeting that criteria. The map may then be automatically labeled with any user selected data in the database. Similar queries may be made with maintenance or cost qualifiers. The actual text data may reside on a remote mainframe computer or be stored locally.

An additional feature of SmartMAP is its ability to open a window on the map screen and display scanned documents such as leases, photographs, or mechanical and wiring diagrams.

J. David Ross, president of both ComLogic and IGI said, "The applications are endless for SmartMAP; we have an electric utility in Lubbock that is using the product to map their facilities. They are able to track brands and serial numbers of transformers, locations of current and proposed power lines, customer location and usage history, then generate maps and drawings for maintenance crews."

"We are getting interest from all over the world. Demonstration systems of SmartMAP are now in Japan, England, Spain, Denmark and the Virgin Islands."

"I will personally be servicing the account in the Virgin Islands," said Ross, "that is, if the stockholders don't find out."

ComLogic supplies complete turnkey systems, including training and hardware service. IGI SmartMAP runs on high-end PCs and on Sun Microsystems workstations. It is a networkable, multiuser and full 3D package.

Further information on SmartMAP and complete systems can be obtained through ComLogic in Midland at 687-2626.

Berg Motor Co. Parts Dept. measures quality with genuine GM parts

For genuine General Motors parts and professional advice from an experienced staff, turn to the Berg Motor Company Parts Department.

Located within the Berg Motor Service Department at 3205 West Wall, the Berg Motor Parts Department carries a large inventory of genuine parts for GM cars, including Oldsmobile, Cadillac, GMC, Buick, Chevrolet and Pontiac.

Furthermore, Berg's Parts Department is well prepared to handle the needs of Mitsubishi car owners, following the addition of the line nearly one year ago.

Perhaps the most noteworthy reason for the continued success of the Berg Motor Company Parts Department is the experience of its employees Frank Flournoy, Clifford Watlington, Sherry Sutton and George Scott. Midland car owners have come to depend on these people for experience and friendly service.

Flournoy, with 25 years of service with the Berg Motor Parts Department, attributes the success of the department to the dealership's style of management. "We are associated with an excellent, stable and well-managed dealership," he noted. "Our dealership is service oriented."

That commitment is evident in the Berg Motor Parts Department, where Flournoy and his staff work diligently to meet your car parts needs.

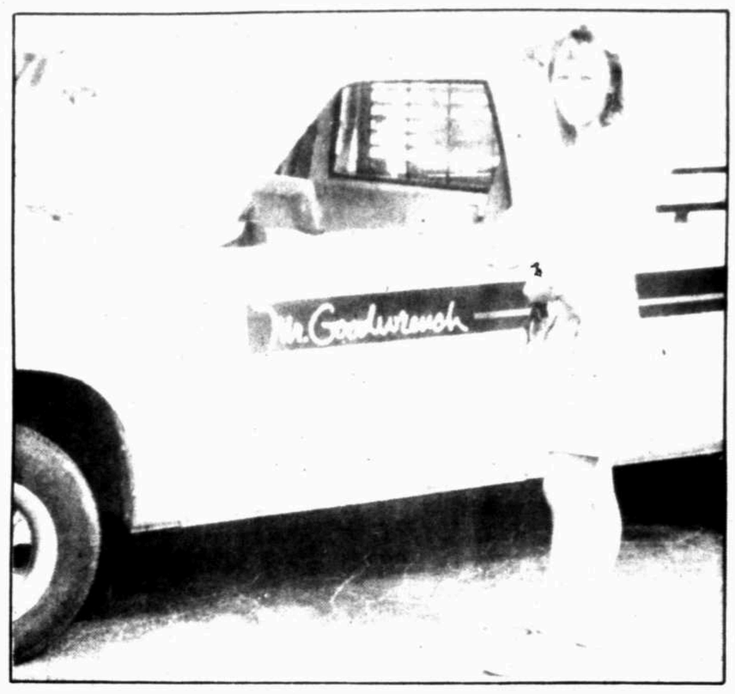

You might even call his staff "parts pacesetters." Assistant Manager Clifford Watlington has 14 years of service with the company. Sherry Sutton, whose responsibilities include delivery and stocking of inventory, has nine years of service. Counterman George Scott is new to Berg Motor Company, but has been associated with the parts business for 18 years.

"Quality can be measured in genuine GM parts," assessed Flournoy. "Our pricing is competitive; however, the simple fact is that our customers know that quality usually costs a little bit more."

"History has shown us — and our customers continually tell us — that they get more for their money at the Berg Motors Parts Department."

For example, customers will appreciate the 12 month or 12,000 mile warranty on just about any part in the Berg Parts Department inventory. Furthermore, engines carry a three year or 50,000 mile warranty.

The Berg Motors Parts Department welcomes both retail and wholesale customers.

Store hours are 7:30 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. Monday through Friday. Midland customers may reach the Berg Motor Parts Department at 694-1721. Odessa callers may dial 563-1479.

At Berg Motor Company, the motto is "We're your kind of people," and the Parts Department is certainly no exception. Please call or stop by today!

The Lee Thompson Co.: Your comfort is our business

School is out. The pool is open. Father's Day has just passed. The temperature has reached the nineties and above.

We all know it...summer is here.

We depend on our air conditioning systems to get us through these hot West Texas summers. In order for our systems to function properly, though, they must be serviced.

Here at the Lee Thompson Co., Inc., we pride ourselves on being able to offer our customers personalized, friendly service. For example, one of our service technicians is on call seven days a week to take care of any air conditioning emergencies you may have.

Furthermore, we offer our customers maintenance agreements which guarantee priority service in an emergency no heat or no cool situation. These customers also enjoy the additional benefits of reduced operating costs, discounted repair bills and extended equipment life.

Over the years, air conditioning systems do break down, though, and need to be replaced. If you are in this dilemma, we offer free, no obligation home energy audits. Based on his twenty years of experience, Lee Thompson, owner, will give you an honest, straight-forward appraisal of your situation.

Are you afraid of being pressured into buying something you don't want? Lee admits he's not a good "salesman." He just likes to present the facts and options and then leave it up to customers to make their own decisions.

Don't let thoughts of cost stop you from calling Lee, either. If it is not in your best interest to purchase equipment from us, Lee will tell you so. If you do need the equipment, but finances are a problem, Lee can offer you the option of a financing plan. Lee's job is to provide you with enough information in order to make a sound decision.

What are you waiting for? When you buy equipment from The Lee Thompson Co., Inc., we will provide you with a written 30 day TOTAL customer guarantee, along with the normal equipment warranties. If you are not completely satisfied with our equipment and our work, we will either correct your concerns or refund your money and remove the equipment at no cost. Either way, you can't lose.

We are not offering you anything "free." We are not offering you "0 percent financing." What we are offering you is economical operation through the installation of high efficiency equipment. We are offering you personalized service.

We are offering you the peace of mind that is a result of dealing with people who care about you and desire to please you. We are offering you "value" at a "fair" price. We are offering you comfort.

So call Lee this summer at 682-0538 and allow us to service your air conditioning needs. Then put your mind at ease.

Mailroom & Office Services offers Alcatel Friden quality

The owners of Mailroom and Office Services want to introduce you to the quality and dependability of Alcatel Friden mailroom equipment. From left are Harold and Mary Gillam and Boyd Bowen.

Give your mailroom a turn for the better with quality products and service from Midland's authorized Alcatel Friden dealer, Mailroom and Office Services. The company is located within a longtime Midland business, Gillam House of Printing, at 2423 West Indiana.

Since 1930, Alcatel Friden has been a major manufacturer of mailroom equipment. Today it has a well-earned reputation for state-of-the-art technology in electronic postage meters, precision postage scales, parcel shipping systems and folding inserters.

If you do not own an Alcatel Friden mailroom product such as a postage meter, for example, please consider the top ten benefits of moving your business up to metered mail:

■ Professional appearance. Metered mail really looks like business mail. That means added prestige and more respect.

■ Faster processing. With metered mail, your letters actually avoid two processing steps at the post office, and get to their destination faster.

■ Money savings. Why waste money just by adding one more stamp to "play it safe." A postage meter gives you the exact amount everytime.

■ Improve accountability. With a postage meter you can automatically keep track of every penny spent on mailing.

■ Improve productivity. Metering mail eliminates sealing envelopes, finding and licking stamps. This leaves more time for everyone to do their job better.

■ Save Post Office time. There's no standing in the stamp line with a postage meter.

■ Free self-promotion. Use a postage meter to add your own personal touch to every piece mailed. A customized postmark ad helps get your message out.

■ Improved morale. Licking stamps not only tastes bad, it's also demoralizing to employees. With a postage meter, workers take greater pride in their job.

■ Meter stamps always stick. With a postage meter, you get the peace of mind knowing mail gets to its destination.

■ Professional consultation. Your vendor has the expertise to help you stay ahead of new regulations and choices.

Consider Mailroom and Office Services for the following:

Even the smallest mailers make business mail look like business mail with a Friden Alcatel postage meter. It links with scales for one-step operation.

Shop for the best rate and eliminate over-postage with a Friden Alcatel electronic postage scale that's accurate to 1/64th ounce.

Use a Friden Alcatel shipping system to get shipments out fast, and to add an undetectable "mark-up" to every package.

Record and allocate postal charges with a Friden Alcatel system that classifies costs by client, class or whatever you choose.

Mailroom and Office Services is owned by Midlanders Harold and Mary Gillam and Boyd Bowen. They joined forces earlier this year to acquire the Alcatel Friden dealership for West Texas and eastern New Mexico. Many Midlanders know Harold and Mary, of course, from Gillam House of Printing, in business for 31 years.

In addition, the Bowen family had the Friden agency as well as extensive experience in mailing equipment services.

The new partnership has already gained an established customer base throughout the area.

Mailroom and Office Services can offer you great lease rates on mailing and shipping systems for virtually any size of office. As a local business, it can respond to your inquiries without delays or referrals.

Now that you know you have an alternative for mailing machines, parcel-shipping systems, folder/inserters, letter openers and even mailroom furniture, please call 683-1740. Turn to Mailroom and Office Services before you sign your next lease!

The extension gives TBS the rights to 12 games during the 14-week season and marks the eighth straight year TBS will televise SEC games.

Arm surgery

NEW YORK (AP) — Dave Dravecky will have surgery today for the fourth time since cancer was diagnosed in his left pitching arm in 1988, and he is resigned to having the arm amputated.

However, by Monday, it still was not determined whether amputation would be necessary.

"Amputation is very likely, but there is a slight possibility that it won't happen," Sealy Yates, Dravecky's agent, said.

Yates said the operation would be performed by Dr. Murray Brennan, chairman of the Department of Surgery at Memorial Sloan-Kettering Cancer Center. Dravecky entered the hospital Monday.

"Dave is resigned to the amputation, he said he's ready for his arm to come off," said Jonathan Petersen, director of media relations for Zondervan Publishing House, co-publisher of Dravecky's autobiography, "Comeback."

Playoff turns out a Payne

■ Payne Stewart won a two-stroke victory over Scott Simpson to win the highest-scoring U.S. Open playoff in 64 years.

By Bob Green
AP Golf Writer

CHASKA, Minn. — Payne Stewart, he of the outlandish fashions in clothes, won the 91st U.S. Open Golf Championship in even more outlandish fashion Monday.

It is necessary to go back to the days of hickory sticks, to the days when knickers were even more in vogue, to find scores higher than those compiled by Stewart and Scott Simpson in their playoff for the American national championship.

Stewart won it with a 3-over-par 75 against a 77 by the stricken Simpson, who — once again — blew a two-stroke lead over the last three holes at the Hazeltine National Golf Club, including putting his tee shot on the par-3 17th into the water.

Those scores are the highest in an 18-hole Open playoff since Tommy Armour beat Lighthorse Harry Cooper 76-79 in 1927.

Outlandish? It was so outlandish that:

— Stewart won despite making only one birdie over his last 33 holes.

— He won the playoff despite making as many bogeys (four) as he had in the four rounds of regulation play combined.

— He made only a single birdie in the playoff, but still made up four strokes over the last three holes, wiping out a two-stroke Simpson lead.

— There were three two-stroke swings on individual holes, two in Simpson's favor.

And, perhaps most outlandish of all, Stewart bounced a tee shot off a rock and out of the water on the eighth hole.

"When that happened, I thought, 'Maybe it is your day,'" Stewart said.

It was his day.

It was far from an artistic one, however. In fact, from the standpoint of a golfing purist, it was downright ugly at times.

"It wasn't outstanding golf," Stewart admitted, "but the golf course was very difficult today.

"It tested your patience, it tested your ability, it tested your fortitude. I'm fortunate to be the champion."

SMU's Payne Stewart celebrates his 2-stroke playoff victory over Scott Simpson in the U.S. Open Golf Championship Monday.

But the mistake-prone playoff lacked nothing in drama, particularly over the final three holes, the homecoming stretch that proved to be Simpson's nemesis.

On Satuday, he came to those three holes with a two-stroke lead, bogeyed twice and came away in a tie for the lead.

On Sunday, he came to those same holes, again in front by two. Again, he bogeyed twice, dropped into a tie and set up the playoff.

The same situation existed on Monday. When the 1987 Open champion stood on the 16th tee, he was two in front.

"After the 15th hole, I thought I had a great chance," Simpson said.

But this time he was unable to salvage a tie. He bogeyed in. Stewart had his lone birdie of the day on the 16th, a four-stroke swing on three holes and the grandest victory of his career.

For Simpson, eight bogeys and a playoff loss and the blown lead on the last three holes was something entirely different.

"It's a little disappointing to lose the U.S. Open two days in a row," Simpson said with his characteristic, wry smile.

"I feel sorry for him," Stewart said, "just as I felt sorry for Mike Reid when I won the PGA Championship" in 1989.

After a variety of adventures by both players in sand and water and trees and trash, they straggled to the 16th tee with Simpson in his customary position, two strokes in front.

Stewart stood there with the desperate need to make something happen and a string of 30 consecutive holes without a birdie behind him.

"I'm thinking, 'Same song, second verse,'" Stewart said.

And that's when it all began to change. Appropriately enough, the par-4, 384-yard 16th, the signature hole at Hazeltine, proved to be the turning point.

On each of the two previous days, Simpson had bogeyed the 16th after hitting an iron off the tee into the left rough.

This time, with the wind blowing left to right, his 1-iron tee shot found the fairway and he flew his approach some 35 feet below the hole.

Stewart hit a 2-iron into the fairway, but was blocked from a clear shot to the green by a tree. He played an 8-iron over the tree to about 25 feet.

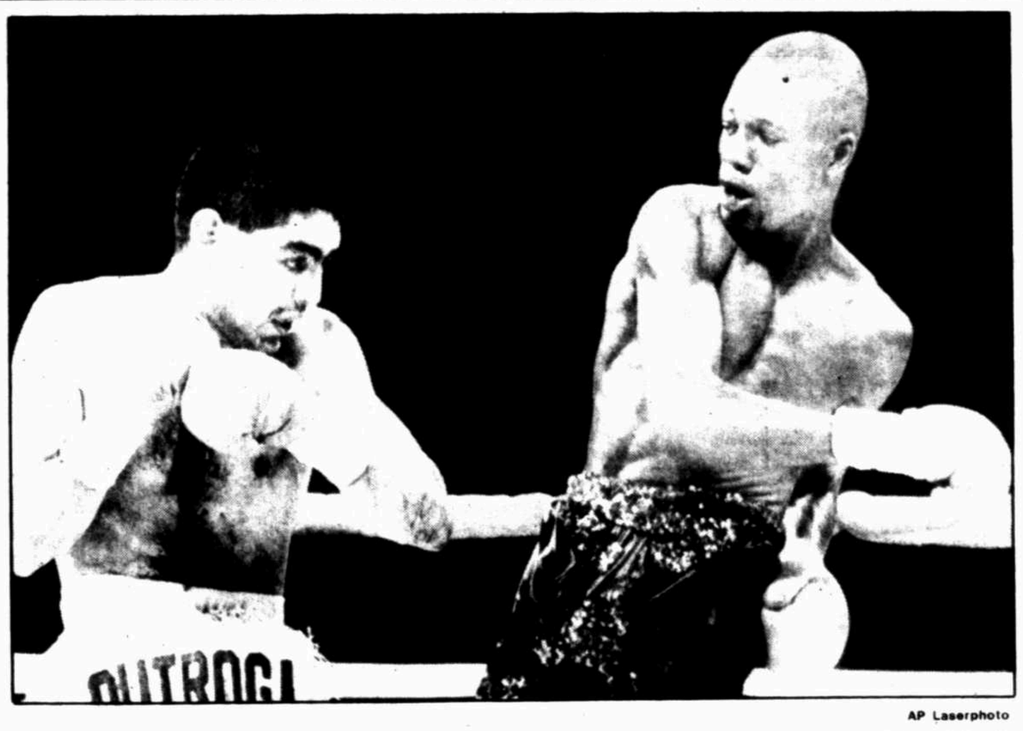

After Simpson missed his long, lag putt, Stewart rapped his into the back of the cup for a birdie-3.

Simpson then missed from about 4 feet and, suddenly, they were tied. This two-shot swing was in Stewart's favor.

Simpson, noted among the other touring pros as a man who rarely makes mistakes, who rarely backs away, obviously was shaken.

After Stewart put his tee shot on the green on the par-3 17th, Simpson pulled his 4-iron into the water. He dropped his

Robert Quiroga, left; and Akeen Anifowoshe during fight Saturday that sent Anifowoshe to the hospital with critical head injuries where he remains today.

Ban sought for six-ounce gloves

■ After a critical boxing injury, the IBF orders investigation into gloves used in the fight.

DALLAS (AP) — The head of the International Boxing Federation said he has instructed his medical advisory council to look into a weekend junior bantamweight title bout in Texas and determine if the use of six-ounce gloves should be banned in the future.

"Many jurisdictions in South America, the Orient, Europe, where they have small guys fighting, they have always used six-ounce gloves, and this is the first time we have ever had a hullabaloo over it," IBF president Robert Lee said Monday from IBF offices in East Orange, N.J.

Kid Akeem Anifowoshe, a Nigerian living in Las Vegas, began vomiting blood and collapsed after losing a 12-round unanimous decision Saturday to Robert Quiroga of San Antonio.

Anifowoshe regained consciousness Sunday at Baptist Medical Center in San Antonio after undergoing emergency surgery to relieve pressure on the brain. His condition remained critical but stable Monday.

"I am not sure if the gloves had anything to do with this fight. It was a hard-fought battle and both fighters were banged up pretty good," Lee said.

"On the same card, two others fought with six-ounce gloves and they were not banged up so bad. If it happened in one case, why didn't it happen in the other?

"But our main aim is to make the business safe, and we have to rely on medical people and people with good, old-fashioned horse sense to point us in the right direction," Lee said.

Quiroga also went to the hospital after Saturday's fight and was released after treatment for head injuries he suffered in the bruising, bloody fight.

"I'll never fight again with six-ounce gloves," Quiroga said after making his third successful title defense.

"I'll ask the IBF to stop doing it. This is my fourth fight with six-ounce gloves and we just don't need them. You can score as much and fight the same kind of fight with eight-ounce gloves," Quiroga said.

The state of Texas prohibits the use of gloves under eight ounces, but waived the rule because of the IBF mandates their use on all weight divisions under 127 pounds. After the fight, Texas officials said they did not believe another fight with six-ounce gloves should be permitted in the state.

History should keep Minnesota streak low-keyed

BALTIMORE (AP) — No matter how poor the competition has been, the Minnesota Twins figure 15 straight wins can't be a fluke.

"It's certainly not time to be patting ourselves on the back or beating our chests," says Jack Morris, who has won his three starts since the club-record streak began June 1. "But the confidence that grows out of this streak will help us in a lot of ways.

The Twins were three outs away from their 16th straight victory before Baltimore rallied for three ninth-inning runs and a 6-5 win on Monday night.

But Minnesota's streak is still the longest in the majors since Kansas City won 16 in a row in 1977. The American League record of 19 is shared by Chicago (1906) and New York (1947).

Skeptics have been quick to point out that all 15 wins have come against teams playing under .500 — seven against Cleveland, three each against Baltimore and New York and two against Kansas City.

The Twins play three games this week in Baltimore and four in New York.

"If we weren't beating them," first baseman Kent Hrbek said, "they wouldn't be in last place."

True enough. The Orioles managed to take two of three from Toronto over the weekend while the Twins were beating up on the Indians. The Orioles' victory on Monday night moved them out of the AL East cellar.

The Twins' sudden turnaround from last year's last-place finish actually began May 28, when they beat Texas to stop the Rangers' 14-game winning streak. Before Monday night's loss, they had gone 18-1, compiling a team batting average of .286 and a team ERA of 2.09.

They're the perfect example of a team on a roll. Veterans like Kirby Puckett (.355 in his last 124 at bats), Hrbek (.353 in June) and Brian Harper (.356 in June) have provided the foundation, while contributions have also come from newer players such as Shane Mack (.342 in June) and Scott Leius (.476 in June).

"I don't think there are a lot of people who expected us to play this well, except the guys in this room," Morris said. "When you win this many games in a row, I think guys have the feeling, 'Hey, we are good. We can play.'"

Even their mistakes somehow seem to work out. Against Cleveland on Sunday, reliever Rick Aguilera blew a save by yielding the tying run in the eighth inning, but he hung around long enough to get the win when Minnesota scored twice in the 10th inning.

"We've been getting good breaks, but that just comes with playing good baseball," Aguilera said. "I think the guys have a great approach about the whole thing. No one's really getting too wrapped up in it.

"Sometimes when you're not playing real good, a bad break hurts. When you're playing good ball, you tend to get the breaks. I don't know really how that works."

Aguilera wasn't as lucky Monday night. He blew a 5-3 lead in

Lowly Birds end Twins' streak at 15

Associated Press

BALTIMORE — The Baltimore Orioles snapped Minnesota's 15-game winning streak as Randy Milligan's two-run double with two outs capped a three-run ninth inning on Monday night for a 6-5 victory.

Milligan's double came off Rick Aguilera (2-3), who had pitched three innings on Sunday and got the victory in a 4-2, 10-inning win over Cleveland.

David Segui began the ninth with a single. Pinch-runner Juan Bell took second on Brady Anderson's single and both runners advanced on Mike Deveraux's sacrifice.

Pinch-hitter Joe Orsulak's sacrifice fly made it 5-4 and the Twins defied conventional wisdom by intentionally walking the potential winning run, Cal Ripken. The strategy backfired when Milligan drilled a 1-2 pitch into the gap in left-center. Ripken scored without a throw.

The Twins, who lost for the first time this month, were foiled in their effort to match Kansas City's 16-game winning streak in 1977.

Mark Williamson (1-2), who pitched the last 1⅔ innings, was the winner.

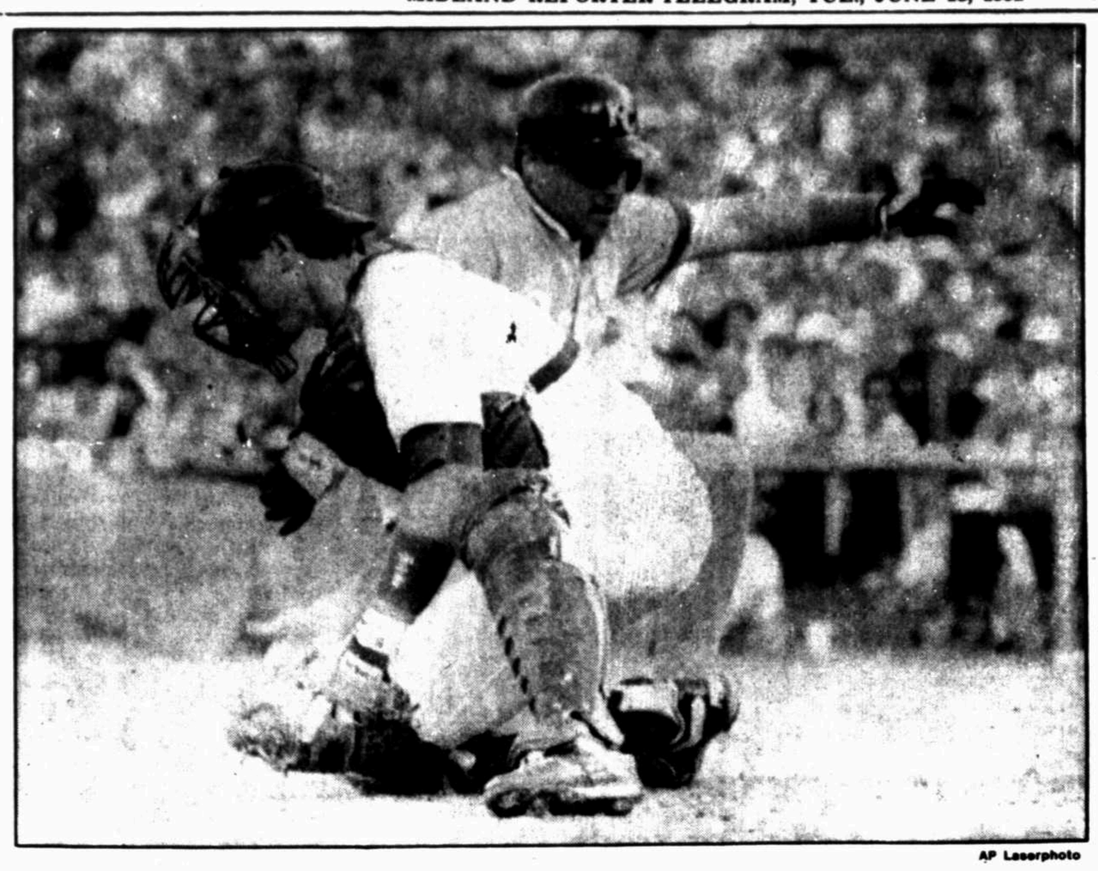

Hot-hitting Kirby Puckett drove in the tying run and scored the go-ahead run in the seventh inning as the Twins came back from a 3-1 deficit. He went 3-for-5 to increase his average to .355 in his last 124 at bats and .327 for the season.

Minnesota, which finished with 14 hits and at least one in every inning, added another run in the eighth on Al Newman's RBI single.

Twins starter Allan Anderson pitched 6 1-3 innings before Steve Bedrosian helped him out of a jam. Bedrosian got double plays with a runner in scoring position in the seventh and eighth.

The Twins overcame the 3-1 deficit with two runs in the fifth. Mike Pagliarulo doubled, took third on a single by Newman and scored on an RBI single by Chuck Knoblauch. Newman came around to score on groundouts by Shane Mack and Puckett.

Puckett doubled with two out in the seventh against Mike Flanagan and scored on a single by Kent Hrbek, who has 17 RBIs in his last 21 games.

Former Midland Cub Carmelo Martinez scores a run for the Kansas City Royals Monday as Texas Ranger catcher Mike Stanley tries to get to the ball in the second inning.

AL Roundup

Chili Davis gave Minnesota a 1-0 lead in the second inning with his 15th homer of the season, but Baltimore moved in front with third-inning solo homers by Devereaux and Ripken.

Baltimore made it 3-1 with an unearned run in the fourth on Bill Ripken's sacrifice fly.

Rangers 10, Royals 9

ARLINGTON — Texas won its seventh straight game as Gary Pettis' bases-loaded bloop single in the 10th inning capped a six-run comeback for a victory over Kansas City.

Left fielder Gary Thurman made a sliding attempt to catch Pettis' two-out bloop, but trapped it as Steve Buechele scored the winning run.

Texas' Ruben Sierra drove in five runs with a three-run homer in the eighth and a game-tying two-run single in the ninth to erase Kansas City's 9-4 lead.

Mike Jeffcoat (2-1) pitched two innings of one-hit relief for the win. Jeff Montgomery (1-3), Kansas City's fifth pitcher, gave up eight hits and three runs over 2 1-3 innings.

Juan Gonzalez started the winning rally with a one-out single. After Buechele hit into a fielder's choice, John Russell singled to right. Mario Diaz walked to load the bases before Pettis' hit gave the Rangers their second straight extra-inning victory. They beat New York 4-3 in 15 innings on Sunday night.

Siarra homered off reliever Mark Davis in the eighth inning to cut the lead to 9-7. His two-out, two-run single off Montgomery tied the game.

Kansas City broke a 4-4 tie in the seventh on Gary Thurman's two-run single and appeared to put the game away when Carmelo Martinez hit a three-run homer in the eighth.

Brewers 5, Athletics 0

MILWAUKEE — Don August pitched a five-hitter for his first shutout in two years and Billy Spiers and Jim Gantner sparked a five-run fifth inning.

August (5-2), backed by four double plays, won his fifth straight game but first since May 28. The right-hander recorded 20 ground-ball outs in pitching his first shutout since a 6-0 defeat of Baltimore in June 1989.

Monday night's victory was the Brewers' third in the four-game series against the Athletics.

The Brewers batted around in the fifth off Mike Moore (8-5), who allowed only one hit in the first four innings.

Angels 4, Red Sox 2

BOSTON — Wally Joyner lined a two-run double in a four-run fifth inning and Mark Langston earned his ninth victory as California avoided a four-game sweep by beating Boston.

Langston, now 9-2 after going 10-17 last season, held the Red Sox hitless for for four innings, gave up two runs in the fifth and left after allowing six hits in seven innings. Mark Eichhorn took over to start the eighth but was replaced after Wade Boggs' two-out single by Bryan Harvey, who got the last four outs for his 16th save as the Angels snapped a season-high four-game losing streak.

Greg Harris (2-7) allowed seven hits, including five in the decisive fifth inning, and took the loss despite finishing with nine strikeouts, matching his career high last accomplished in 1982.

Langston struck out five and walked two as the Red Sox dropped into a virtual first-place tie with idle Toronto in the AL East.

Expos trip up Astros in 16

NL Roundup

Associated Press

MONTREAL — Tim Wallach singled home Marquis Grissom with one out in the 16th inning Monday night, giving the Montreal Expos a 3-2 victory over the Houston Astros.

The Expos were outhit 12-6, but they came back from one-run deficits in both the ninth and 11th innings to win their fourth straight game.

Grissom led off the 16th inning with a single against Curt Schilling (3-5) and was sacrificed to second by Delino DeShields. After Ivan Calderon was walked intentionally, Wallach lined a 1-1 pitch into left field for the game-winning hit.

Jeff Fassero (1-1) pitched one inning for the victory.

Luis Gonzalez drove in his second run of the game with a one-out double in the 11th for Houston. But Montreal took advantage of second baseman Casey Candaele's error on a potential double-play grounder to set up an RBI groundout by Dave Martinez.

Dodgers 6, Cubs 4

LOS ANGELES — Juan Samuel and Kal Daniels homered in the sixth inning as Los Angeles built a six-run lead and went on to beat the Chicago Cubs, increasing their lead in the National League West to four games.

Mike Morgan (7-5), took a four-hit shutout into the eighth inning before tiring. His bid for his eighth career shutout ended when Shawon Dunston homered in the eighth and Morgan was charged with three more runs in the ninth.

Los Angeles jumped on Shawn Boskie (3-6) in the first with the first of two three-run innings en route to its 13th victory over the Cubs in their last 17 meetings. Murray drove in two with an opposite-field double into the left field corner and he scored when Lenny Harris hit a hard single off the glove of first baseman Mark Grace.

Phillies 4, Braves 3

PHILADELPHIA — Dale Murphy's 433-foot home run with one out in the eighth inning gave Philadelphia a victory over Atlanta.

Reliever Mitch Williams (1-3) pitched the final 1⅔ innings for the victory, striking out three, while Juan Berenguer (0-2) gave up Murphy's game-winning homer as Atlanta lost its fourth consecutive game.

Phillies starter Tommy Greene, who homered to tie the game in the fifth, allowed all three Braves runs on six hits in 7⅓ innings.

Philadelphia took a 2-0 lead in the first on John Kruk's ninth home run of the season.

Atlanta's four straight singles led to three runs in the fourth.

Terry Pendleton led off with a single, moved to third on Ron Gant's single and scored on Dave Justice's hit to right field. Sid Bream singled in Gant, and Justice scored while Jeff Treadway grounded into a double play.

The Phillies tied the score in the fifth when Greene hit an 0-2 pitch from Steve Avery for his first major-league home run.

Mets 10, Reds 6

NEW YORK — Howard Johnson and Hubie Brooks hit two-run homers and Ron Darling won for the first time in 37 days.

It was hardly an artistic success for either team as the Mets squandered much of a 10-1 lead and the Reds made three errors, two by outfielders.

Darling (3-4), who last won on May 11, got off to a smooth start but finished by allowing three runs and seven hits in six innings. Doug Simons relieved and helped the Reds get back into the game by giving up three runs in the seventh, including Bill Doran's lead-off homer.

Pirates 3, Padres 2

SAN DIEGO — Gary Redus hit his first home run of the season and doubled twice, and Doug Drabek won his fourth straight decision as Pittsburgh beat San Diego.

Redus, who has been platooned at first with Orlando Merced, homered off left-hander Bruce Hurst with one out in the third for a 3-0 lead. Redus, whose last homer was on Sept. 14 at Montreal, also hit leadoff doubles in the first and eighth innings.

Drabek (6-7) beat Hurst (7-4) for the second straight time in 11 days with relief help from Bob Kipper, Stan Belinda and Vincente Palacios. Drabek was a 1-0 winner over the Padres June 7 in Pittsburgh.

Loughery lands job with Heat

MIAMI (AP) — Kevin Loughery took his sixth NBA coaching job Monday when he was named to that post with the Miami Heat.

Loughery, an assistant with the Atlanta Hawks, will not join the Heat until after the June 26 NBA draft. And Miami co-owner Lewis Schaffel was not happy with the arrangement.

"To say that we're very happy about it, we're not," Schaffel said. "We have no choice but to comply."

Schaffel said he had talked to the NBA about the delay, but was told there was nothing the league could do.

The Hawks said they did not want to release Loughery until after the draft because he had been "part of the decision-making process," said Schaffel.

He said the Heat also planned to consult with Loughery about the draft and trades, raising an apparent conflict of interest, but that there were apparently no rules against it.

Ron Rothstein, who coached the team in its first two seasons to a 42-122 record, resigned after last season.

The Heat then turned to one of the most experienced coaches in the league in an effort to improve the club that went 24-58 in 1990-91.

Loughery, who was the head coach of the Hawks from 1981-83, also coached the Philadelphia 76ers, New Jersey Nets, Chicago Bulls and Washington Bullets. His record is 341-503. He also coached the New York Nets to an American Basketball Association championship.

Astros to consider 'outside' buyers

HOUSTON (AP) — Houston Astros owners, unsatisfied with attempts so far to sell the team, will entertain offers from cities without baseball franchises who may move the team, the investment banker managing the sale said Monday.

Louis Sussman, senior managing director of Salomon Bros. in Chicago, also said a "quite well-known" potential buyer had been negotiating with the Houston Sports Association and was committed to keeping the team in Houston.

Sussman held a news conference to dispute recent reports that a suitable offer was on the table from a local group headed by Ben Love, former chairman of Texas Commerce Bancshares, and Robert Onstead, founder of the Randall's supermarket chain.

"There is no, I repeat no, offer on the table for any Houston group to purchase the Astros," Sussman said, noting that an offer made by the Love group was unacceptable because it was contingent upon financing, the group refused to disclose the source of its equity and they did not want the deal to include three hotels near the Astrodome.

Sussman said attempts to negotiate that offer were rejected.

Jeff Love, Ben Love's son and part of the local group, said last week that "we again acknowledge we have a very serious interest. We have no approached this in either a cavalier or quixotic way."

National League owners have said they will not support any move by HSA President John McMullen to sell the team to out-of-town buyers who could move the team. Commissioner Fay Vincent said he would study the issue of team relocation.

Sussman said the lack of local interest from potential buyers and the reluctance of the city to commit to a certain number of season ticket purchases may force the team to look elsewhere.

Second-place Wichita hands Angels 6-2 loss

Staff Report

WICHITA, Kan. — Even with El Paso clinching the first half title of the Texas League Western Division Sunday, the Wichita Wranglers kept dishing out misery to Midland with a 6-2 victory over the Angels here Monday night.

Wichita is now 38-26 for the year, good enough for second place and five games off El Paso's pace with four games to play in the first half. The Angels moved to 27-37 with the loss.

Midland starter Alan Sontag gave up each of the Wranglers' six runs, all earned, in 4⅓ innings of work. Though he gave up just four hits, Sontag (1-2) walked five batters in the stint and hit another with a pitch.

Midland is now 0-7 at Wichita's Lawrence-Dumont Stadium this season, and 3-20 dating back to the start of the 1990 season.

The Angels will play the remainder of the first half here in Wichita, with four games of the six-game series left before mid-season.

Two 'A' teams stay unbeaten

Staff Report

Teams from Mid City and North Central Little Leagues kept slugging it out in the winners bracket of the A League city baseball tournament Monday, as the Mid City Angels downed the North Central Royals 5-2 and the North Central Astros defeated the Mid City Orioles 13-2.

The Mid City Angels and North Central Royals are the remaining undefeated teams in the tournament.

In losers bracket play Monday, the Northern Reds handed the Western White Sox an 8-4 loss, eliminating the Western team. Also, the Towers Astros took their exit from the tournament as the Eastern A's beat Tower 7-5.

Up to this point in the tournament, Lancaster Park and Windlands Park served as playing sites for the A League games. But the remainder of the double-elimination tournament will be played at Lancaster Park.

In today's play, winners bracket teams take a rest while losers bracket games feature the North Central Royals against the Northern Reds and the Mid City Orioles playing the Eastern A's. Both games are scheduled for 6 p.m. today.

The championship game could be decided as early as Friday night if a winners bracket team wins out, but an "if" game would be played Saturday if needed.

OPEN: Tony Lema is back

club on the tee, his shoulders slumped, full of the knowledge that it was happening all over again.

"I thought it was in the water," Simpson said, then added good-naturedly "maybe I could have hit a rock and stayed up there."

After a drop, he bounced a shot off a bank to the right of the green, watched the ball run within 12 feet and then made that putt to save a bogey.

Now, he was one behind with one hole to go, the long, uphill par-4 18th.

When Stewart's tee shot found the bunker on the right of the 18th fairway, it appeared Simpson still had a chance.

But he ran his tee shot through that same bunker and into deep bluegrass rough. His advantage turned into a disadvantage. Stewart in the bunker was almost certainly in better position than Simpson in the rough.

Stewart's 5-iron missed the green well to the right, about 70 feet from the flag and in ankle-deep rough.

From his lie in the rough to the right of the fairway, however, Simpson could do no better than run his 7-iron approach through the green to deep grass behind the putting surface.

When Stewart chipped within 4 feet, Simpson knew he needed to make his shorter chip — from perhaps 25 feet — to have a chance.

He missed, the ball sliding about 8-10 feet beyond. When he missed that par putt, the tournament was over.

Stewart rolled in the putt he didn't have to have and became the 16th man to score victories in both the U.S. Open and the PGA.

"Any time you win it's sweet, and it's doubly sweet when it's a major," Stewart said.

Then he treated the international press to champagne, a la the late Tony Lema.

"I wanted to show y'all that I'm a nice guy," he said. "Sometimes I've come off as arrogant ... but if you get to know me, I'm a pretty nice guy. And, by God, I'll buy champagne any time you want it."

Outlandish.

the ninth, with the tying and winning runs scoring on Randy Milligan's two-out double following an intentional walk to Cal Ripken.

Manager Tom Kelly wants to continue winning, but he'd just as soon ignore the streak and all the associated statistics.

"That stuff's all nice, but it's irrelevant to winning the ballgame today. And that's what's important, winning the ballgame," Kelly said. "We try to stay focused on the ballgame itself. The numbers are immaterial."

Averitts win MCC tournament

The Averitts won the first flight of the two-day scramble with a low net score of 114. Joel and Shirley Mays, and Charlie Gaines and Ruth Ann Dunnavant also posted scores of 114, but the Averitts claimed the No. 1 spot by virtue of a scorecard playoff.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

By Jeane Dixon

TUESDAY, JUNE 18, 1991

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Highly capable and supremely self-confident, you can deal with almost any situation that might arise. Your one weakness may be a tendency to fly off the handle when faced with even the mildest criticism. A desirable employment offer comes your way by late October. Domestic bliss can be yours by Christmas if you are willing to work for it. A project you undertake in early 1992 promises new benefits for mankind.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: columnist Sylvia Porter, actress Isabella Rossellini, Beatle Paul McCartney, critic Roger Ebert.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Home life is more settled and rewarding now. If tired or "blue," plan a quiet evening. A busy work day could take more of a toll than you realize! Mate is understanding and supportive.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Extra demands may be made on your time. Your determination to attain success will not go unnoticed. Those connected with entertainment or the arts make great gains.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Concentrate on developing your creative talents and you can earn extra income. Family life will be more harmonious if you exercise greater tact. New developments in romance will thrill you.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Avoid making any major moves until you have consulted your mate or partner. A letter or phone call fills you with joy. You are able to move ahead at a steady pace.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): New financial gains stem from your past efforts. Perseverance is the key to success. Promises you have been counting on may not be honored. Diplomacy is required to avert destructive quarrels.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Devote more time to private matters and draw closer to loved ones who live at a distance. Imaginative ideas can be psychologically as well as financially rewarding.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Prestige may be easier to come by than money. Change for the sake of change can be dangerous. Refuse to alter your plans unless certain that doing so will provide long-term benefits.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Stay close to home base today. Unexpected developments will require careful handling. Protect yourself. Do not sign anything meant for another person's signature.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You could make a real difference in someone's life now. Listen attentively. Your influence is much greater than you think. Romance is on a smoother course. Make intelligent compromises.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Your willingness to try new methods and procedures stands you in good stead with higher-ups. Show appreciation to your loved ones for their steadfast support.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Be more selective when choosing your associates. Some so-called friends could be trying to bring you down. Keep your guard up, but resist the urge to retaliate. Their maneuvers are likely to backfire.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): A favorable day for tackling home repairs and domestic chores. Some recent pressures have been removed and you can do pretty much as you please. A special outing would brighten your evening.

TODAY'S CHILDREN are vivacious, curious and quick to change their minds. They have so many interests that they may not know what to tackle first! Many of these Geminis will have two, or even three, careers. Eager to be the first to try something new, these children may jettison old methods or traditions without much thought. Encourage them to think things through before making sweeping changes.

For most players, the 50 percent chance offered by a finesse is good enough. Expert technicians are seldom satisfied with a line that rates to lose half the time.

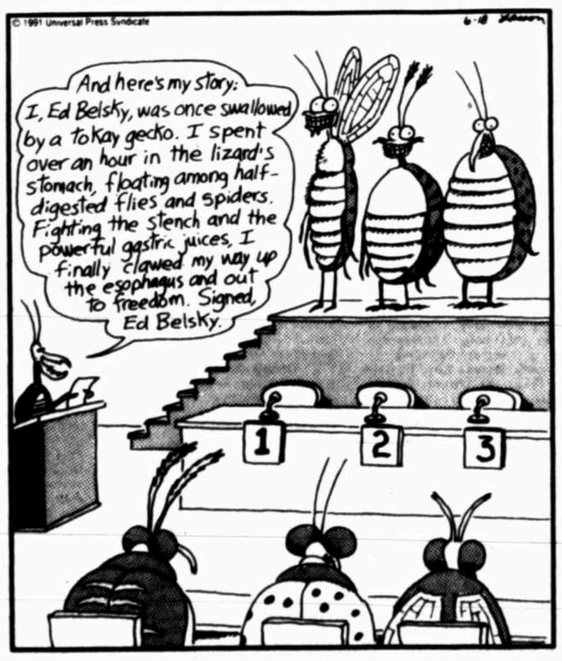

West's jump to three hearts crowded the auction and North-South did well to get to the slam. When South did not leave partner the option of doubling four hearts, North felt the spade fit and prime cards in the other three suits merited one move toward slam, and South needed no more encouragement.

West led the king of hearts and shifted to the eight of diamonds. An easily satisfied declarer will draw trumps and then try the club finesse—down one. Slightly better technique is first to see if either defender started with specifically Q J x in diamonds. Declarer wins the diamond shift in hand, draws trumps and then cashes the king of diamonds and ruffs a diamond. As the cards lie that, too, is doomed to failure.

Actually, if declarer wins the diamond shift in hand and leads a trump, he can almost claim the slam. When East fails to follow to the first trump, nine of West's cards are known—three spades and probably six hearts. If West has four diamonds as well, the club finesse is sure to work. If West is short in diamonds, it does not matter who holds the queen of clubs.

Correct is to draw trumps to prevent West from ruffing a diamond, then cash the king of diamonds and ruff a diamond. When West shows out, simply run all your trumps, discarding the queen of hearts when West holds onto the ace and coming down to the ten of diamonds and ace and another club in dummy, and K J 5 of clubs in hand. You know West has the ace of hearts and East has the queen of diamonds, so neither defender can hold three clubs. Cash the ace and king to drop the queen. If West has followed to all three rounds of diamonds, cash the king of clubs and lead the four. If the queen has not appeared, finesse the jack to cater to the unlikely possibility that West started with specifically a 3-5-4-1 shape.

Gerald McRaney, Delta Burke to renew vows after 2 years

RADNOR, Pa. — Two years after they tied the knot, actors Gerald McRaney and Delta Burke plan to renew their vows next weekend in a more modest ceremony in their native South.

Burke

McRaney, star of the CBS series "Major Dad," and Ms. Burke, formerly of CBS' "Designing Women," were married in 1989 in a Los Angeles extravaganza featuring Scottish bagpipes, trumpet fanfares and 400 guests.

They will renew their vows June 23 an an undisclosed location in New Orleans, where they take vacations, McRaney said in the June 22 issue of TV Guide.

"I like the idea of doing it from time to time just to reaffirm the ritual if nothing else," McRaney said. "It causes you to think about the reasons you did it to begin with."

Ms. Burke, who was recently dropped from "Designing Women" after a lengthy battle with producers she said accused her of being overweight, said the marriage is blossoming.

"I love (McRaney) more than I ever did before," she said. "I'm more comfortable with him than I was before, and I feel incredibly secure."

WINDSOR, England — Queen Elizabeth II on Monday installed King Baudouin of Belgium as a knight of the garter in a ceremony at Windsor Castle.

After lunch off gold plates, the knights of the oldest English order of Christian chivalry joined their sovereign in the annual procession to the installation service in St. George's Chapel.

Baudouin walked with the Queen Mother of Britain and the Duke of Kent, while the queen was escorted by the Duke of Edinburgh. Prince Charles did not attend. Charles has canceled his public engagements for the rest of the month because of back pain.

LOS ANGELES — Actress Farrah Fawcett bought the house next door reportedly to accommodate an overflow of house guests.

Fawcett

Ms. Fawcett and Ryan O'Neal, her costar in CBS situation comedy "Good Sports," live at her longtime Bel-Air home on a 2.8-acre hilltop tract.

Ms. Fawcett bought an adjacent 2.4-acre ranch house for $1.69 million, saying she needed the extra three bedrooms and two baths for her guests and her household staff, the Los Angeles Times reported Sunday, citing unidentified sources.

PHILADELPHIA — Space shuttle astronaut Guion "Guy" Bluford predicts the next millennium will be marked by mankind's exploration of distant worlds.

It will be "a period in which man will permanently step off the planet and begin the migration to distant worlds," Bluford said in a commencement address Sunday at Drexel University in his native Philadelphia.

Bluford, the first black astronaut in space, also called for more attention closer to home, citing the need for more fuel-efficient cars.

He praised Drexel students for building a solar-powered car that completed a 1,600-mile trip from Florida to Michigan last summer.

NEW YORK — Broadway producer David Merrick was arraigned Monday on charges he was carrying too much unreported cash as he boarded a flight to London.

The 78-year-old Merrick, who suffered a stroke several years ago, hobbled into the courtroom and said nothing during the brief proceeding. He was accompanied by his 37-year-old girlfriend, Natalie Ting Teresa, who was with him at the airport last week but not charged with wrongdoing.

Merrick, best known for such blockbuster Broadway hits as "42nd Street," "Hello Dolly" and "Promises, Promises," was arrested Wednesday at Kennedy International Airport. Police said he was carrying more than $140,000 in undeclared cash and traveler's checks as he was about to board a flight to London.

Americans can take as much money as they wish out of the country, but amounts over $10,000 must be declared on forms, the U.S. Customs Service says.

The crime is punishable by up to five years in prison and a $250,000 fine.

U.S. Magistrate Michael L. Orenstein let Merrick remain free without bail.

"Two years ago, Faye Dunaway, Jane Fonda and Cher bought the same suit from me. On Faye Dunaway, with a white blouse, it was aristocratic. On Jane Fonda, with a T-shirt, American. On Cher, with antique lace under, absolutely modern. Stupid to me when the press says, 'Versace is sexy. . . . Versace is brash.' It is the woman inside they are describing."

Fashion designer Gianni Versace, in European Travel & Life magazine.

NEW YORK STOCK EXCHANGE

ANALYSIS

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market wavered in a narrow range today, showing little follow-through after Friday's strong gain.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, up 35.33 points on Friday, rose another 4.02 to 3,004.47 by 2 p.m. on Wall Street.

But losers outnumbered gainers by about 8 to 7 in nationwide trading of New York Stock Exchange-listed issues, with 678 up, 774 down and 557 unchanged.

Investors have shown some sporadic bouts of optimism lately about the chances for an economic recovery without any drastic revival of inflationary pressures.

But many analysts have warned that stocks seem vulnerable to disappointments should the upswing in business conditions falter or long-term interest rates keep rising.

Prices rebound

Oil prices rebounded Monday on the New York Mercantile Exchange, due largely to technical factors. Still, the market is being pressured by ample crude supplies and sluggish demand for gasoline.

West Texas Intermediate climbed 27 cents to close at $19.94. The move prompted local crude purchasers such as Permian Corp. and Texaco Trading and Transportation to raise the posted price to $18.75, up 25 cents.

Natural gas for July delivery fell 3 cents to close at $1.262 per 1,000 cubic feet.

NGPA meeting

The Natural Gas Producers Association will meet Thursday at the Petroleum Club, beginning at 11:45 a.m.

Guest speaker will be M. Edwin Ireland, president and chief executive officer of Gasmark Inc. He will discuss changes in the California market and its effects on Permian Basin gas producers.

Reservations should be made by noon Wednesday by calling 682-4030.

Dollar mixed

NEW YORK (AP) — The dollar closed mixed in narrow, technical trading Monday as currency specialists awaited fresh trade and economic reports due later this week. Gold was higher.

With no significant economic developments in the U.S. or abroad, currency trading responded to technical factors, analysts said. A similar trend surpressed activity in the U.S. stock and bond markets.

The dollar is experiencing a period of consolidation following a strong run-up in recent weeks, traders said.

In London, the British pound fell to $1.6258 from $1.6395 late Friday.

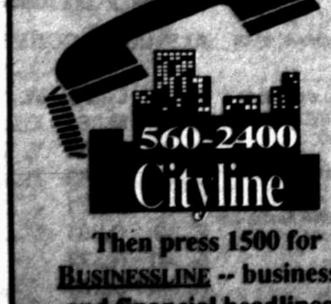

Other late dollar rates in New York, compared with late Friday's rates, included: 1.7955 German marks, up from 1.7940; 1.5435 Swiss francs, up from 1.5395; 6.0975 French francs, up from 6.0970; 1,337.00 Italian lire, down from 1,337.25; and 1.14175 Canadian dollars, down from 1.1432.

In Tokyo, the dollar closed at 140.93 yen, down 0.14 yen from last Friday's close.

Gold fell in London to a late bid price of $367.75 a troy ounce from $367.90 bid per ounce late Friday. In Zurich, the metal rose to a closing bid of $366.75 from $366.50 late Friday.

On the New York Commodity Exchange, gold gained $1.10 per troy ounce to close at $368.20.

Silver bullion rose in London to a late bid price of $4.43 a troy ounce from Friday's $4.41. On the New York Comex, silver gained 1.8 cents to $4.436 per troy ounce from Friday's levels.

SEC chief: Insurance industry needs monitoring

■ Tougher standards can be accomplished by tightening state regulatory programs, Breeden says.

By Bill Virgin
Hearst News Service

SEATTLE — Securities and Exchange Commission Chairman Richard Breeden concedes that the insurance industry may need closer monitoring but he believes it's up to Congress to decide if it should be done by federal regulators or by the states.

Breeden said the current system of regulating insurance companies lacks the "capability to provide national oversight and standards," which will be necessary as insurance, much like banking, becomes a global financial services industry. He was here last Friday to visit the SEC's local office.

The insurance industry has been rocked by the financial crises of several companies that invested heavily in junk bonds. Some critics contend the industry's problems are due to the lack of broad federal regulation. While the SEC monitors stock insurance companies and securities-style insurance products, most insurance regulation is done by the 50 states.

Breeden said that tougher standards for the industry could be accomplished by tightening state regulatory programs.

On other issues, Breeden said:

■ He is not concerned that U.S. stock exchanges are being left behind in the race to 24-hour trading. Breeden said the recent expansion of trading hours at the New York Stock Exchange is merely a first step in the process.

Increasing trading hours is a recognition that investors have access to many U.S. stocks 24 hours a day in various markets around the world. U.S. securities amount to nearly $4 trillion, which Breeden said "is an awful lot of money to have parked away for 17 1/2 hours a day."

■ He supports expansion of banking powers but warned against counting on such moves to cure that industry's financial difficulties. Noting the enthusiasm banks have expressed for getting into the securities business, Breeden said: "Securities firms lost $160 million last year. This is not a formula for a short-term boost in earnings."

■ He continues to support a proposal that banks and thrifts provide information on what their assets are worth at current prices. Financial institutions contend the "mark to market" idea will make their balance sheets subject to severe fluctuations.

Bush's welcome kicks off annual logging symposium

More than 70 exhibitors display wares inside, outside Midland Center.

By Mella McEwen
Staff Writer

A surprise letter of welcome from President George Bush started off the 32nd Annual Logging Symposium of the Society of Professional Well Log Analysts Monday morning at the Midland Hilton.

The symposium is hosted by the Permian Basin Well Logging Society, assisted by the Midland Chamber of Commerce and M Squad, and is expected to draw approximately 1,000 delegates and their guests and exhibitors.

"It's exceeded our expectations," said Kevin Schapel, co-chairman of the symposium.

More than 70 exhibitors were displaying their wares inside and outside the Midland Center, across the street from the Hilton. The center was a beehive of activity as delegates from all over Texas, as well as such states as Louisiana, California, Kentucky and Connecticut milled through the exhibits.

Logging companies were offering tours of their trucks, parked outside the center. Inside, a variety of companies had booths offering giveaways such as stickers and pens, or food such as candy, doughnuts and coffee. Many of the exhibitors were high-tech companies, displaying new software that would allow engineers and analysts to computer-generate reservoir simulations, well stimulations or digitize log data for use in computer interpretation as well as hardware that would allow for continuous printing of graphs or logs.

The symposium has even attracted visitors from other countries — France, Great Britain, Canada, Venezuela, and China are represented.

One visitor from Venezuela works for a research company that he said is indirectly related to well logging. He said he and a friend who came to Midland with him were going to spend the day getting an overview of the exhibits, then begin visiting specific companies.

He explained that the software was of primary interest to him and his company. Pointing to a poster of a reservoir simulation displayed at one of the booths, he said, "We don't have things like that (at home). But perhaps I could use something like it in my research."

The symposium kicked off Sunday with a 5K run that set a record, according to Schepel. "We had 150 runners," he said.

The symposium continues today and Wednesday with a variety of technical papers being presented at the Hilton. The exhibits also will remain open through Wednesday.

Spouses can look forward to a walking tour of historical Midland today as well as tours of the Museum of the Southwest and Petroleum Museum and a cooking session with Chez Vous.

The awards banquet is scheduled for tonight in the Hilton ballroom, preceded by a cocktail reception from 6:30 to 7:30.

Texas dairy farmers going broke; Congress tunes in WASHINGTON (AP) — Texas dairy farmers have run out of money to repay loans or buy fertilizer for the next hay crop, and some are being driven off their land by the lowest milk prices in more than a decade, says Rep. Jim Chapman.

"They're calling the bank and saying 'Send out the trucks and load up the cows, we can't hold on any more,'" said Chapman, a Democrat from Hopkins County, home to more to more than 500 dairy farms, most of them family operations.

"Every week, dairy men are going broke in Texas and across the country," said Chapman, who was scheduled to testify Tuesday before a House committee investigating options for managing the nation's milk supply.

Rising production and declining exports have helped push milk prices down for dairy farmers and are expected to average $11.60 per hundred pounds in 1990-91, the lowest level since 1978-79.

"We have a tremendous financial catastrophe in dairy country," agreed Rep. Charles Stenholm, D-Stamford, chairman of the House Agriculture Committee's dairy subcommittee.

Stenholm, who represents Erath County, Texas' other major dairy producing county, said he hopes to have legislation to manage the nation's dairy inventory on President Bush's desk by early August. The subcommittee plans to begin marking up legislation following Tuesday's hearing.

Chapman said farmers can't produce milk at today's prices and face summer, when cows produce less milk than the rest of the year, with little cash on hand for their leanest months.

"They've been squeezed all through the first part of the year, and that squeeze will become intolerable through the summer months, which means they will be unable to come anywhere close to meeting the expenses of operating," Chapman said.

"It's going to force dairy farmers, some of whom have been farming for two generations or more, out of business."

Chapman said East Texas dairy farmers don't even have the money to pay for fertilizer for their second and third hay crops of the year.

Chapman accused the Agriculture Department of being oblivious to the problem, and said the Bush administration's approach to dairy management in the 1990 farm bill has been "a prescription for disaster."

Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, agreed the USDA had "sure failed to stand up for farmers on this one."

"From every indication they're happy with the things are and they stand as a major hurdle for those of us in Congress who are pushing for price supports that will allow Texas dairy farmers to stay in business," Bentsen said.

By the USDA's own figures, revenues for dairy farmers will drop by $3 billion this year, according to Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., chairman of the Senate Agriculture Committee.

A USDA report Friday concluded that no new dairy plan is better than the four milk inventory management alternatives that were studied by the agency.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Some risk needed to get additional income

By Bill Doyle

Q. My wife and I are retired. My Social Security check is $946. Her's is $426. We own our home, two late model cars and have no debts. We have approximately $24,000 in Series E, U.S. Savings Bonds, and $66,150 in certificates of deposit at 6.6 to 7.8 percent. The larger CD will mature in 1992, the smaller one in two months. My individual retirement account is $30,785.

Doyle

Very soon, I will receive a lump sum of about $50,000 from a retirement plan and will roll it over into an IRA within 60 days to keep it tax deferred.

We need $1,000 monthly to supplement our combined SS benefits. Is it possible to accomplish this, with safety?

A. It will be virtually impossible to get that much absolutely safe additional income from your CDs and IRAs, without taking on some risk. With $146,935 in CDs and IRAs, $12,000 a year works out to 8.17 percent. Now that interest rates are down, new rock-solid investments such as CDs and U.S. Treasury Securities pay less.

You could obtain the income you want by taking on a slight degree of risk in such things as Government National Mortgage Association — GNMA or Ginnie Mae, for short — and/or federal agency securities. There, you could be sure of getting the interest and collecting the securities' face value when they mature.

However, you would run a "market risk." That means the value of the securities in the open market could fall and you would take a loss if you sell before the securities reach maturity. But that would hurt you only if you sell. Keep those securities until they mature and you're safe.

You can get details on GNMAs and "agency" securities from securities brokerage firms. In your case, they are well worth a look.

Assuming you want no risk whatsoever, you can fall back on your E bonds. By exchanging those bonds for Series HH U.S. Savings Bonds, you can continue to defer paying income tax on the accumulated E bond interest.

HH bonds now being issued pay 6 percent annual interest. On $24,000, that's $1,440. Let's say you get 7 percent — $10,285 — on your new CDs and IRAs. That and the HH bond interest would give you $11,725 annually, just a bit shy of the $1,000 a month you seek.

Another alternative would be to gradually redeem the EE bonds, cashing one or a couple only when you are strapped for cash.

Q. I take issue with the advice you gave an elderly man who has $30,000 to $40,000 in savings and who needs income to cover monthly bills. You recommended he keep $5,000 in an interest-paying checking account and the rest in CDs. You added, "Make sure the (CD) interest will be automatically transferred to the checking account," as the money might be needed "for quick withdrawal."

It is my experience that all banks and savings and loan associations permit withdrawal of accumulated CD interest at any time with no hassle and, of course, no penalty.

Isn't it better to leave the money, until needed, in CDs drawing higher interest than to move it to a checking account paying lower interest?

A. Of course it is — if the bank or S&L allows CD interest to be withdrawn at any time. Despite your experience, many do not. And some offer CDs with the arrangement you describe and also offer CDs from which withdrawal of interest is prohibited until maturity.

Depositors who might need the interest before their CDs mature should get the details of this on each CD before they lock their money away for the term of the CD.

Your point is well taken. So, I will amend the previous answer to tell readers who might need the income to leave their interest to accumulate in a CD, if — and only if — interest withdrawal at any time is specifically spelled in the CD's provisions.

DEAR ABBY

Lump in breast puts fear in woman's heart

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I recently felt a lump in my breast. It doesn't really hurt, but I know it's there. I stand a very good chance of having cancer because my mother passed away five years ago with breast cancer.

Van Buren

Right now, I'm trying to handle it on my own, but I'm getting cross and downright hateful with my husband and children. I love them dearly. I know this can't go on forever.

I watched my mother die a very slow and painful death, but just the thought of going to a doctor scares me. On the other hand, if I do go to a doctor and he says it's cancer, he might have to remove my breast, and if he does, I'm scared my husband might not love me anymore, or he might leave me.

What should I do? — SCARED TO DEATH

DEAR SCARED: Do not wait another minute! Call your doctor. Tell him exactly what you have told me, and make an appointment to see him as soon as possible. Early detection has saved the lives of many with cancer. Don't think of anything except getting to your doctor for an examination immediately.

I am sorry you didn't sign your name, because I want very much to talk to you. Please write again after you've seen the doctor. I want to stay in touch with you.

DEAR ABBY: After nearly 10 years of marriage, I told my husband I was leaving. Before I even found a place to move to, he kicked me out. After I relocated, we started seeing each other again, and within a week, we were back where we started — fighting.

They say there's a very fine line between love and hate. I still don't know which side I'm on. I have filed for divorce, but I feel lonely and hurt. He was fantastic in bed, and just the thought of being intimate with another man nauseates me. Also, why risk AIDS for sex that may not be any good?

Abby, after 10 years, I wouldn't even know how to act on a date. I can't live with him, but I can't live without him. Is this normal for someone who has just split up, or do I need help? — IN LIMBO IN TACOMA

DEAR IN LIMBO: Not being able to live with or without someone is an old refrain I hear often. And the love/hate ambivalence is as old as the hills. Your feelings are normal — and you do need help. Get professional counseling. If money is a problem for you, check with your local YWCA and ask if they offer free counseling.

DEAR ABBY: As parents of children who are 35 and 44, it seems awkward — even ridiculous — to refer to them as "our child" or "our children."

In current usage, a "child" is a very young person. In searching for a more grown-up word for them, we finally agreed on "chult" — a contraction of adult and child — or "chults" for adult children.

What do you (and your readers) think? — OHIO PARENTS

DEAR PARENTS: I doubt if "chult" would catch on. When referring to your adult offspring, why not say "our son" or "our daughter"?

By popular request, Abby shares more of her favorite prize-winning, easy-to-prepare recipes. To order, send a long, business-size, self-addressed envelope, plus check or money order for $3.95 ($4.50 in Canada) to: More Favorite Recipes by Dear Abby, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054. Searching for lost items is mission impossible

By Erma Bombeck

I do not have a compulsive personality. Honest. I can let a phone ring off the hook without answering it and feel nothing. I can sit behind a woman with a label sticking out of her dress and not even be tempted to tuck it in. You know how some people line up all the bottles in their medicine chest facing forward? I'm not like that.

Bombeck

But there is one thing that drives me nuts. Don't tell me something is lost. It doesn't matter if I want it after it's found; I cannot stand the idea of something out there hiding from me.

I figured out once that I spend half of my waking hours looking for things. It's a mission. At any given moment, I am involved in hunt and search for glasses, car keys, recipes, checkbook or telephone numbers. I once spent three days looking for a snapshot of me in my high school graduation gown. When I unearthed it, I couldn't remember why I was looking for it in the first place.

The kids say I drive them crazy. One day one of them (I can't remember which one – they all look alike) was playing halfway across town. Another kid came up and said to him, "Your mother is looking for you." My child left first base, ran across the field, hit the highway, cut across four back yards, got chased by a dog, cut his foot, and when he appeared at the door breathless and exhausted, panted, "What do you want?" I said, "Nothing. I just wanted to know where you are."

My husband knows I have this flaw and plays it like a violin. I'll be enjoying life when he will walk through a room and mumble, "You haven't seen my kick-around pants have you?"

While my mind races to recall where I've seen his kick-around pants, he disappears into the bathroom. I beat on the door and ask, "How long have they been missing?"

"How long has what been missing?"

"Your kick-around pants. How long have they been gone?"

"I don't remember. A couple of days ... weeks ... maybe last year."

"What color are they?" I press.

"Gray. No, blue."

"What is it? Gray or blue? How can I find something if I don't know what I'm looking for?"

For two solid weeks, I search for those lousy pants. I check the garment bags, the storage boxes and the drawers. I check every hanger to make sure a shirt hasn't been put on top of them. I check in my closet to make sure they didn't get hung there by mistake. I move the washer and dryer and check behind them. I go through the mound of hand-washables and call the cleaners. I find them in the trunk of his car and put them in his closet.

He says, "Pitch 'em. They're falling apart."

Animals get new toys at Los Angeles Zoo

N.Y. Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — Polar bears dive for "frozen pizzas" of fruits, vegetables and fish; tigers and leopards bat "bunny balls" of frozen rabbit pelt; while monkeys hang around the "cricket dispenser" waiting for their favorite snack-time insects to emerge.

Life behind bars has become a lot more pleasant for the animals at the Los Angeles Zoo.

A new program at the zoo is designed to keep the captive animals more active and improve their quality of life. Not only are the toys and treats entertaining, they also prompt the animals to natural behaviors such as foraging and hunting, researchers say.

"We try to come up with imaginative ways to feed the animals so that they're not bored," said Marjorie Fuchs of suburban Sherman Oaks, a volunteer at the zoo. "What we're doing is keeping them busy foraging like they do in the wild, rather than having them sit down to dinner like they usually do at the zoo."

Thaya duBois, the zoo's assistant director of research, said the that necessity for safety, good hygiene and animal health have often resulted in barren exhibits and nutritious but unexciting diets.

The zoo's behavior-enrichment program provides the animals with toys, games and snacks that usually keep them busy at least throughout the morning and early afternoon hours. The project is headed by duBois, who is helped by animal keepers, gardeners, and about a dozen volunteers — including professional toy designers.

"Part of the challenge is thinking of things to keep them busy all day long," duBois said. "It's hard — really hard."

Tree stumps and logs in some of the bear exhibits have been riddled with holes and are stuffed with honey, applesauce and raisins.

It keeps even the sloth bears from becoming slothful. Using their snouts as vacuum cleaners, they noisily slurp up the sticky snacks.

The bears and orangutans play with "boomer balls," hard plastic spheres about the size of a volleyball filled with nuts and raisins that rattle around inside and sometimes fall out to be eagerly eaten.

The monkeys got swing sets made of chain and logs, while the larger primates play with bamboo rattles filled with tasty morsels that spill out at random intervals.

Drills — short-tailed and bright-cheeked monkeys — scavenger though big piles of wood chips searching for mealworms, one of their favorite meals

Hitler plans quick victory, but winter catches army

By Kevin Costelloe

BERLIN (AP) — Adolf Hitler's armies invaded the Soviet Union in ideal tank weather. He counted on a quick victory, but there was too little time and Josef Stalin soon had a formidable ally: the Russian winter.

An estimated 3 million soldiers launched the attack June 22, 1941, on a 1,000-mile front, the longest in military history. After the initial confusion and disorder, the Soviet army fell back, destroying anything the Germans could eat or use.

Winter caught Hitler's forces unprepared and the blitzkrieg that had conquered Western Europe in a few lightning thrusts gradually came to a halt.

The turning point in what may have been the Nazi dictator's greatest miscalculation came in February 1943, when his tired, hungry, freezing Wehrmacht was defeated at Stalingrad.

By the time the campaign ended, the siege of Leningrad had become synonymous with starvation and the horrors of war. Etched indelibly into human memory was the image of German soldiers, frozen to death in their tracks, piled like logs on roads outside Moscow.

On the 50th anniversary of the invasion, relations have changed. The historic enemies appear determined to forge a common future.

"The aggression against the Soviet Union was one of Hitler's most stupid moves," said Wolf von Baudissin, 84, a retired lieutenant general and authority on peace and security issues.

Good relations with Moscow are necessary today because "we are vitally interested in the internal stability of the Soviet Union," he said.

Germany has been a leader in supporting Mikhail S. Gorbachev's attempts to reform the Soviet Union.

In the late 1980s, "Gorbymania" swept what was then West Germany and he was given a hero's welcome in Bonn. Last winter, Germans sent food to help fight hunger in the Soviet Union.

Still, traces of hatred and distrust remain.

German war veterans remember working as slaves in Soviet prison camps, where they were plagued by vermin, freezing cold and lack of food. Many of their comrades died in the camps.

Eastern Germans, freed from 40 years of communist rule, denounce the Soviet occupation of their country.

Kremlin officials constantly remind Germans and the world of the millions of Soviet soldiers and civilians who died in World War II. Some put the figure at 20 million, others at 27 million.

A German television broadcast in May on the delivery of food to the former enemy included this comment by an interpreter outside a Soviet woman's house: "She says she can't take the food package. Her husband died on the front."

The ZDF television network has teamed with Soviet television to produce a six-part anniversary documentary on the invasion, to be broadcast in both countries.

Its title in German translates as "The Damned War: Operation Barbarossa." The Nazi offensive was named for the 12th century Holy Roman Emperor who tried to extend his German dominion into Italy.

Valery Korsin, the Soviet co-director, said the war "caused immeasurable suffering to the Soviet people," but they know "German war widows looked at their fallen husbands' death certificates with eyes just as red with tears as those of Russian war widows."

Hitler's attack caught the Kremlin by surprise and the invaders quickly seized 500,000 square miles of Soviet territory.

With the early success, German strategy shifted from just taking Moscow to include the capture of Leningrad in the north.

German tanks advance into the Soviet Union, after leaving a Russian village in flames, according to information released by German officials with this photo dated Nov. 8, 1941. Adolph Hitler's armies invaded the Soviet Union in ideal tank weather on June 22, 1941. The Nazi dictator went on to face disaster in this World War II campaign when his soldiers had to face the harsh Russian winter and starvation.

As Germans attack, Soviets report chaos

By Brian Friedman

MOSCOW (AP) — His forces were in chaos, the Soviet commander wrote, and many of his soldiers joined civilians in fleeing the German assault. Josef Stalin dismissed the general and had him shot.

Gen. Dmitri Pavlov's message and other documents unearthed from Kremlin archives by Col. Gen. Dmitri Volkogonov, a military historian, are being made public as the Soviets re-evaluate the war 50 years after it began.

A German force of 3 million men crossed the frontier on June 22, 1941. Pavlov, the Soviet commander in the region, wrote to his superiors of "disorganization and carelessness" by senior officers, of soldiers who turned and ran.

It was a short war for Pavlov. Stalin spared him for only 10 days.

The newly discovered documents portray the dictator as overconfident before the invasion, which led to disastrous Soviet losses in casualties and territory.

Communist Party hard-liners in the Defense Ministry still use the war to glorify the Soviet system. They predict grimly that the Soviet Army's withdrawal from Eastern Europe invites another disastrous invasion.

Volkogonov and other reformers, in contrast, question "why the price that this war exacted was so high: 27 million deaths."

"The reason is not just the mistakes of Stalin, not just because of the miscalculation of diplomats, not just because Hitler was an evil genius, but because of the flaws of the totalitarian system itself," Volkogonov said in an interview.

Gen. Gregory Govan, defense attache at the U.S. Embassy, said the Soviet military "is more reluctant than other parts of society to give up their attachment to this old way of thinking."

"The Soviets have declared a defensive doctrine, as in 'We will take the first blow', but some people are lining up against this doctrine, saying 'Look what it got us in '41 — it almost destroyed the country.'"

Volkogonov, 63, is a former deputy head of the army's main political directorate. He was removed four years ago after writing a biography of Stalin that was denounced as anti-communist.

He then directed the Institute of Military History and undertook a 10-volume history of the war. Four volumes are finished and the first was distributed in March to the military, party and government leadership.

"This volume was found to be anti-Soviet and anti-communist," Volkogonov said. "They didn't care that we wanted to tell the truth, what the war was really like. ... Even now, there are some people in this country for whom the truth about this war is not wanted."

Marshal Sergei Akhromeyev, a military adviser to President Mikhail S. Gorbachev, called the historian a "blackener of history."

Volkogonov quit the history institute in protest. He now is a deputy in the Russian republic's legislature and an adviser to Boris Yeltsin, president of the republic.

His purpose in releasing the documents, he said, was to show "the main hero of the war wasn't the party or the system or Stalin, but the people: the martyrs, those who suffered the colossal losses in order to gain victory."

He quoted Stalin as saying in May 1941, the month before the invasion: "I think Germany will never begin a war before next spring."

Texts of speeches and directives indicate, however, that Stalin at least had suspicions about Hitler's plans.

While reading a May 5 speech by Hitler, he underlined a passage about Germany's intention to fight wherever and whenever it deemed necessary. The next day, Stalin ordered the army's political directorate to prepare the troops "to carry out ... an offensive and crushing war."

Stalin called up 739,000 reservists as June began, but Volkogonov said he did not take the army's advice to declare a full combat alert and move troops to more strategic areas. The proposal was made by Marshal Semyon Timoshenko, the war commissar; Gen. Georgi Zhukov, the chief of staff, and Pavlov, the Byelorussian district commander.

"If this had been done, the maximum Hitler could have accomplished would have been to penetrate our territory 100-200 kilometers (60-120 miles), and 80 million people would not have fallen under occupation," Volkogonov said.

The invasion began at 4 a.m. June 22, striking hardest at the central section of Pavlov's command. Before the day was out, 1,200 Soviet aircraft were destroyed, communications were cut and German armored units were deep in Soviet territory.

In flowing longhand strokes, Pavlov wrote:

"The experience of the first day of war shows disorganization and carelessness of many commanders, including senior officers. They begin to think about fuel supplies and munitions only at the time when the cartridges are running out.

"The majority of vehicles are busy with the relocation of families. In addition to this, they are accompanied by many soldiers — in other words, the people who should take part in combat.

"The wounded are not evacuated from the battlefield. Soldiers and commanders have no organized rest. While retreating, they leave cattle and food stocks to the enemy."

Neither Stalin nor his staff knew exactly what was happening in the first days of the war, Volkogonov said.

Each side announces the invasion

Associated Press

Germany announced its attack on the Soviet Union immediately, but the Kremlin waited hours to tell its people their country had been invaded.

Seven hours after the invasion began, Vyacheslav Molotov the Soviet foreign minister, went on the air to announce the "robber attack" launched "in spite of the fact that there is a non-aggression pact between Germany and the Soviet Union."

The statement by the man who signed the pact in n 1939 was published the next day in Izvestia and Pravda, the government and Communist Party newspapers respectively. A week earlier, both had carried a dispatch by the official news agency Tass denying Germany was preparing for war.

Stalin waited 10 days to address the nation.

In Berlin, Foreign Minister Joachim von Ribbentrop, who had signed the non-aggression pact for Germany, announced the invasion to journalists at 6 a.m. and said: "Germany was no longer willing to watch idly the serious threat at its eastern border."

Hitler canceled plans to make an announcement in the Reichstag for fear the act of convening its 700 members would give the Kremlin early warning.

Joseph Goebbels, his propaganda minister, read a Proclamation to the German People on the radio in which Hitler said the "counter-attack" was forced on Germany despite its "unselfish attempts to relieve tensions."

Failure to act "would not only be a crime against the German people, but against all of Europe."

I know there is a man out there looking for some fun and companionship. He must be in early to mid 30s, no smokers or drug users. Financially secure and take care of himself. He must like kids and enjoy going to movies, out to eat, or just spending time with someone special. I am a petite, divorced, single parent and tired of the bar and club scene. I own my own home and would like to find someone special to share my life with. Please call and leave phone number. I would really like to get to know you.
