Ferraro star on initial campaign trip

Ferraro

NEW YORK (AP) — On a Mississippi soybean farm Geraldine Ferraro was asked if she could make blueberry muffins. In a Texas news conference the question was whether she is qualified to be president of the United States.

The answer was yes to both questions.

Walter F. Mondale is the Democrats' presidential nominee, but Ms. Ferraro, the vice presidential nominee, was the unpredictable star of the ticket's first campaign swing last week from the industrial Northeast through the conservative South.

The three-term congresswoman was returning to Washington today to tend to some business in the House of Representatives and work on filling out her campaign staff.

Mondale, in his gray suit and white shirt, has been polished, reserved and familiar to the crowds. He lays out the issues.

"We have one national message to take everywhere — a message of hope, of opportunity, of opening doors," Mondale told a National Urban League meeting in Cleveland last week.

But it was Ms. Ferraro — in bright dresses, still trying to settle into her new role as a hot new national political celebrity — who usually drew the loudest cheers from the crowds.

■ Ferraro continues to attack Reagan's economic policies; Bush visits Reagan at ranch — Page 7A

At an outdoor rally in downtown Cleveland last week a band struck up "New York, New York" — as the bands always do when she is introduced.

The vice presidential candidate danced up to the microphone, caught herself and confided to the audience of about 1,600, "I've got to tell you, I just love to dance.

"And I've got to stop dancing around every time I get in front of the TV cameras."

She exclaims, "wow" or "incredible" or "fan-tastic" in response to the welcome at campaign rallies.

Her counterpart on the Republican ticket, preppy Vice President Bush, never says things like that and neither does the reserved, sometimes aloof Mondale.

However, Ms. Ferraro always reminds her audiences that she means business.

At the largest rally of the week, a gathering of about 7,000 to 10,000 in front of the Texas state capitol in Austin, she said, "What I like best about Texas is its people.

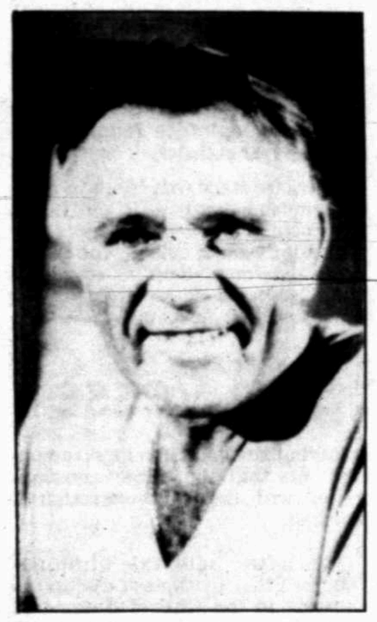
Humans aren't the only ones that like fast food. This horse nosed around an abandoned house in Houston and discovered, much to his delight, that it was being used to store hay. In the best tradition of fast fodder, he pulled up to the window and helped himself.

Richard Burton dies from hemorrhage at age 58



Richard Burton

GENEVA, Switzerland (AP) — Richard Burton, a Welsh coalminer's son who fascinated the public as much with his turbulent private life as with his acting virtuosity, has died from a brain hemorrhage. He was 58.

A renowned Shakespearean stage actor and the star of more than 40 movies, Burton lived high, drank hard and pursued a highly publicized love life that included two marriages to Elizabeth Taylor.

"He was a born actor but he was a bit wild and chose a rather mad way of throwing away his theater career. He was awfully good to people and generous," said actor Sir John Gielgud after news of Burton's death in a Geneva hospital on Sunday.

The actor was taken ill at his villa in Celigny outside Geneva and rushed to the hospital, said one of his brothers, Graham Jenkins, in Portsmouth England.

Burton's agent of 34 years, Valerie Douglas, told reporters at the actor's villa that he will be buried at Celigny. She said further details, such as the time and place of the funeral, had yet to be arranged.

She said memorial services would be held in South Wales and London but that no dates had been fixed.

Burton's wife Sally Hay, 36, personally called Miss Taylor "to spare her the media shock" after Burton's sudden death Sunday, said the actor's agent of 34 years, Ms. Douglas.

Miss Taylor was in California with two of her children, including Maria, the daughter she and Burton had adopted during one of their two marriages, said her publicist, Chen Sam.

"They are extremely, extremely upset," said Ms. Sam, weeping. She said Miss Taylor was too shocked to make a statement on Sunday.

Laurence Olivier was said to have once told Burton: "Make up your mind. Do you wish to be a household word or a great actor?" Olivier, who was to soon make a movie with Burton, called him "a very fine actor and his early death is a great tragedy to the theater world, the film world and the public."

Olivier and Burton were planning to collaborate on "The Wild Geese II," in which Olivier was to play Rudolph Hess and Burton a mercenary involved in the rescue of the Nazi leader from Spandau Prison. In the original "Wild Geese," Burton rescued an African leader.

'Liz and Dick' love affair comes to an end

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — She had the violet eyes, the Venus-like body and was called "the most beautiful woman in the world." He was the burgeoning film star and one of the most acclaimed Shakespearean actors of the age.

And if, as Shakespeare said, "All the world's a stage," Elizabeth Tylor and Richard Burton trod the boards as few others ever have.

Known as "Liz and Dick" to a generation of star-watchers, they married twice — and divorced twice — and their lavish living, stormy quarrels and loving public reunions produced an international road show.

"Maybe we loved each other too much," Miss Taylor once said.

The love affair ended Sunday when Burton died at 58 in Geneva, Switzerland, of a cerebral hemorrhage. His latest wife, Sally Hay, was with him when he died.

A spokeswoman for Miss Taylor said she was too stricken to comment.

Their romance first flared in 1962 while they made the movie "Cleopatra." Miss Taylor had met Burton before and found him talky and "rather full of himself." On their first day of work in the movie, he arrived with a big hangover.

She later recalled: "He ordered a cup of coffee to sort of still his trembling fits and I had to help it to his mouth, and that just endeared him to me."

Since they both were married, their romance caused a sensation. In Rome, she said, "We were spat at."

They co-starred in "The V.I.P.s" in 1963 before she divorced her fourth husband, singer Eddie Fisher. Burton, who was making "Night of the Iguana" in Puerto Vallarta, divorced his first wife, Sybil, and wed Miss Taylor in 1964.

He lavished on her the most expensive diamonds money could buy. They became known worldwide, winning more attention and more money, some said, than members of royalty.

They appeared in "The Sandpipers" in 1965 before "Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf?" in 1966, for which she won an Oscar.

Escaped convict dies in shootout with police

Third escapee from Tennessee's Turney Center still at large

SOMERS, Conn. (AP) — Two bank-robbing prison escapees hit a dead end after five violent weeks when the state trooper they asked for directions recognized them, setting up a shootout that left one convict dead and one critically wounded, officials said.

A third convict from Tennesee's Turney Center prison remained at large today, and authorities, believing the trio had traveled together, mounted a search in north-central Connecticut.

Their escape had already cost the lives of three searchers in Tennessee who were killed when their helicopter crashed shortly after the breakout.

William R. Prentice, Michael Hartsock, and Lohman R. Mays dashed for freedom through the pre-dawn fog July 1 after picking the locks on their cells at the prison in Only, Tenn., authorities said.

Shortly after noon on Sunday, Prentice and Hartsock pulled up to a police car on a northern Connecticut highway to ask directions to the home of Prentice's relatives, state police said.

Trooper David Waddell "realized who they were, and they realized that he knew who they were," said Sgt. Edward Dailey, state police spokesman.

Waddell began a chase, and on a dead-end road, Prentice, 29, was killed by gunfire.

Hartsock, 26, a convicted double murderer, was wounded in the chest and abdomen. He was in critical condition today after surgery at Johnson Memorial Hospital, said spokesman Michael Helechu.

A police officer and a teen-age girl riding in a passing car were also injured.

"We were hoping they could be arrested before they killed someone," said Arzo Carson, director of the Tennessee Bureau of Investigation. "We knew they were armed with automatic weapons and of course had robbed and been doing all kinds of violent crimes."

Authorities said that the escapees abandoned one stolen pickup truck and stole at least one van in Virginia; that men fitting their descriptions held a man hostage while they ransacked his Georgia home; and that they allegedly robbed a South Carolina bank of about $30,000 and robbed two men.

Prentice had "quite a list" of convictions, said his sister, Pamela Matlock of Somers. "Armed robbery, assault...shooting somebody — it's an endless list," she said Sunday night.

Prentice was serving a 30-year term for armed robbery. Hartsock was serving a life sentence for two murders. Mays, 41, was serving life as a habitual offender.

State police, alerted that the escapees might be in Connecticut, were patrolling near the home of one of Prentice's relatives in Somers.

Prentice drove a red-and-white Bronco on Sunday, Dailey said.

Wadell radioed for assistance and chased the van for about two miles along Route 83 before the convicts drove down a quiet, residential street and then onto the lawn of resident Gregory Avery.

The convicts were armed with semi-automatic pistols and two military assault rifles and Hartsock was firing from the passenger side, Dailey said.

The police were "right on their tails," Avery said. The convicts fired more shots before Hartsock fell from the car, he said, then two police cruisers rammed the Bronco and police shot Prentice.

It was all over in a couple of minutes, he said.

The injured teen-ager was riding in a passing car with her mother when she was accidentally shot, police said. Michelle Chagnon, 14, of Springfield, Mass., was treated for a bullet wound in the upper left arm and released, police said.

A police officer was treated and released after his eyes were sprayed with glass, Dailey said.

Steve Watson, deputy director of the Tennessee Bureau of Investigation, said it was possible Mays was still in the area, since the trio seemed to have remained together since their escape.

WEATHER SUMMARY

It's long shot Midland will get rain showers tonight

Like the odds at the race track, there's a 1 to 5 long shot rain will strike the Midland area tonight. The odds for rain are to drop on Tuesday.

For tonight, the weatherman at the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport is calling for a 20 percent chance of thundershowers. The low tonight is to be near 70. Winds are to be southerly at 5 to 15 mph.

For Tuesday, the weatherman is calling for isolated late afternoon thundershowers but less than a 20 percent chance of rain.

The high temperature Tuesday is to be in the mid-90s. Winds are to be southerly at 10 to 20 mph.

The high temperature Sunday was 95 degrees, while the record high for an Aug. 5 is 103 degrees in 1964. The overnight low was 68 degrees, and the record low for an Aug. 6 is 61 degrees in 1975.

NATION

Thunderstorms were widely scattered across the intermountain region early today and spread into the Rockies and along the Gulf Coast states.

Fog blanketed wide stretches of the Northeast.

Today's forecast called for widely scattered thunderstorms over the eastern third of the nation, over the Rockies and the intermountain region, with a few showers over the Pacific Northwest.

Fair skies were to prevail over the Plains, most of the Midwest, and California.

High temperatures were to be in the 80s and 90s over most of the nation, with readings of 100 to 110 in a few places in the desert Southwest and the 60s and 70s in the Pacific Northwest.

Temperatures at 3 a.m. EDT ranged from 51 degrees at Redmond, Ore., to 95 at Phoenix, Ariz.

STATE

Thundershowers were widely scattered over sections of the upper Gulf Coast early today.

A few very heavy thunderstorms were located near Port Arthur and just off the coast at High Island and the Sabine Pass.

Elsewhere, isolated rain showers developed near the Red River in North Central Texas, while high clouds streaked across the remainder of the state.

Winds were light statewide at 5 to 10 mph.

Afternoon highs in the 90s were expected, with widely scattered thunderstorms likely in northern and the extreme southwestern portions of West Texas, in Southeast Texas, along the coastal plains, and over central and eastern sections of North Texas.

Burton death shocks friends, colleagues

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Richard Burton's sudden death shocked friends and colleagues in the movie industry, where he was remembered as wild, charming, driven and — above all — a "born actor."

The scandal surrounding Burton's romance with Elizabeth Taylor — and Burton's bouts with alcohol — may have prevented him from fulfilling his promise as a stage legend, said Sir John Gielgud, who last worked with Burton two years ago on the film, "Wagner."

"He was a born actor," Gielgud said. "He chose a rather mad way of throwing away his theater career, but obviously he became very famous and a world figure through being a film star."

Wildness is not necessarily a bad quality in an actor, Gielgud said, "but he was very wild and had scandal around him all the time, and I think in theater circles that would not be approved of."

But, Gielgud added, "He was serious, charming, with tremendous skill. He was awfully good to people and generous."

Richard Harris was too stunned to speak of the death of his longtime friend.

"It's terrible, it's shattering," said Harris, starring in a stage production of "Camelot" in San Diego. Turning away from reporters, Harris waved his hands across his face and said, "I can't," and quickly walked downstairs to a stage door.

"He had a most original gift," said actress Olivia DeHavilland from her home in Paris. "I'm awfully sorry he's gone. He was a remarkable person, a splendid actor, but a rather troubled spirit."

During the making of "My Cousin Rachel" in 1952, "he would lose patience with himself and a lot of extraordinary words would come out of him," she said. "Then he would turn around and say, 'Oh, I beg your pardon,' and I would say, 'Richard, that's all right. I don't understand Welsh.'"

But Burton had been speaking English, Ms. DeHavilland said.

"We lost one of our greatest actors," said Victor Mature, who appeared with Burton in 1953's "The Robe."

"He had charisma, charm, tone...He was an ultra-professional at all times...A monstrous perfectionist. He wanted everything to be completely perfect or else he would be annoyed at himself and nobody else."

Charlton Heston said he met Burton 35 years ago when they were appearing in separate shows on Broadway. They never worked together, "but I was a longtime fan of his enormous gifts," Heston said.

"He was a marvelously gifted actor," Heston said. "He was perhaps rightly regarded the heir to Laurence Olivier and John Gielgud among the British actors of his generation."

Hal Wallis, who produced "Becket" and "Anne of the Thousand Days" — which both earned Burton nominations for best-actor Oscars — said Burton's death was "a very untimely and sad thing to hear."

"I was very fond of him," Wallis said. "He was a most professional performer during our association. He was always on the job, always there no matter what went on the day before or the night before."

BURTON

Burton's splendid baritone renderings of Shakespearean lines invariably electrified audiences and his piercing blue eyes and commanding presence riveted screen audiences of such works as "Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf?" "The Spy Who Came in from the Cold" and "Becket." But critics called several of his other 50 films mediocre or terrible.

Jenkins, saying he last saw his brother two weeks ago in London, said: "It was very sudden. He has been in tremendous form recently."

A month ago, Burton celebrated the first anniversay of his marriage to Ms. Hay, 36, a film production assistant. She was with him when he died, said Burton's other brother Verdun. "She is very upset. She can hardly speak. She is heartbroken," he said.

Mrs. Burton became alarmed when the actor failed to awaken Sunday, Ms. Douglas said today.

"She could not awaken him," the agent said. "His breathing was not correct. She called a doctor and immediately had him sent to a hospital."

Burton once said his alcoholism was "as bad as cancer." In June he declared that his legendary drinking bouts were through and announced his "semi-retirement" from acting.

But he took on a heavy work load. He played O'Brien, the interrogator, in a new film version of George Orwell's futuristic classic "1984," then a small role as a congressman alongside his daughter Kate in an American TV series, "Ellis Island."

Burton was born Richard Jenkins, 12th of 13 children of his coalminer father and barmaid mother, on Nov. 10, 1925 in the village of Pontrhydfen, South Wales.

His mother died when he was 2 and he was raised by his aunt until he came under the spell of Philip Burton, a schoolteacher who detected the youth's acting potential.

The schoolmaster trained him in the classics and helped him rub out his thick Welsh accent. Finally, he adopted him as his son, and Richard took Philip's last name.

Burton had intended to study at Oxford University and work in a mine to "toughen myself up," but a chance encounter in London led to an acting job. He made his London stage debut at age 18 in fellow-Welshman Emlyn William's "The Druid's Rest."

"In a wretched part Richard Burton showed exceptional ability," wrote The Statesmen of his first London role.

After three years in the Royal Air Force and studies at Oxford, he made acting his career. His Shakespearean roles won him swift acclaim and in 1952 he went to Hollywood to star in "The Robe."

Philip Burton recalled in an interview with the Sunday Times: "It was the first film in Cinemascope, a great event in the movie industry, and when he was cast in the lead, my goodness, that did something to him. I think that's when they really got him."

"Nobody," said the older Burton, "is more aware than him that he has done no end of junk as a result of that, and his love is the theater."

AFFAIR

The movie's plot about a battling, boozing couple seemed to typify the Burtons' real-life love-hate relationship.

"We put a lot of that on, you know," Burton once said. "Something seems to get into us. But it's really not us."

"The Taming of the Shrew" and "The Comedians" followed in 1967, with "Boom" in 1968.

In the early 1970s, the marriage began to slip, as did Burton's career.

"For about five years, I drank hopelessly," he said. "I drank and drank. Booze was taking its toll."

They separated in 1973 after well-publicized battles on the set of "The Klansmen" in northern California. They remained apart for five months while Miss Burton dated former car salesman Henry Wynberg.

Then she underwent an operation in Los Angeles to remove an ovarian cyst.

Burton, who was making a movie in Italy, sped to her bedside and whisked her out of the hospital in a wheelchair through a crush of reporters and photographers.

"I am a very happy man," he said before they flew off to Naples.

"We are back together again, and that must be good," she said.

But the reunion lasted only four months before their divorce was announced in 1974.

In 1975 he stopped drinking and they remarried. She persuaded him to return to the stage, and he replaced Anthony Perkins in "Equus" on Broadway. They divorced again in 1976.

He married former model Susan Hunt, while Miss Taylor married U.S. Sen. John Warner, R-Va. They both divorced again and rumors circulated about another reunion.

At Miss Taylor's 50th birthday celebration in London in 1982, Burton said, "I still love Liz."

"I would die for him," she said in 1983. "I think he would for me too...I think we will love each other until we die."

But she said there was "no chance" of another reconciliation and Burton married Sally Hay.

The closest the Burtons came to remarriage was in their 1983 Broadway revival of "Private Lives," in which they played a divorced couple who rekindle their romance when they meet by chance while honeymooning with new spouses.

Public rates schools better, poll shows

By CHRISTOPHER CONNELL
Associated Press Writer

An Analysis

WASHINGTON — It was barely a year ago that a Reagan administration panel warned that America's schools were awash in mediocrity. Now, a renewed surge of public confidence in the schools may make it easier for real improvement to take hold.

Skeptics may question whether there is any ground for 42 percent of the adults surveyed to tell the Gallup Poll recently that public schools deserve grades of "A" or "B" when, last year, only 31 percent felt that way.

How much has changed since April 1983, when the National Commission on Excellence in Education, in its diatribe "A Nation At Risk," likened the state of America's schools to "a unilaterial act of disarmament?"

There has been a fresh surge of activity since then, from statehouses to local school boards, aimed at raising standards and looking for ways to improve teachers' pay and performance. But most of the reforms on the table, from master teacher plans to requiring freshmen to take an extra year of math or science in high school, will need time to take effect.

As Albert Shanker, president of the American Federation of Teachers, said on NBC's "Meet the Press" show Sunday: "I think clearly the public schools have not changed that much in one year. You can't change that much in an institution of this size."

"I'm not sure that the public is aware of the fact that when you pass a law, it's not like pressing a button, that these reforms will take years before there is real payoff," Shanker said.

But he also said the public is seeing something "very real" in the piles of new legislation and the general tightening throughout America's schools.

Mary Hatwood Futrell, president of the rival National Education Association, believes the spurt in public confidence was overdue. "Public perceptions are starting to catch up with the reality," she said Saturday.

Within the profession, the annual Gallup polls on education are as closely watched as College Board test scores. And like those Scholastic Aptitude Test results which plunged in the 1960s and 1970s, the news has been bad from many of the 16 Gallup polls.

In 1974, the first year citizens were asked to grade the schools, 18 percent rated them "A" and 30 percent "B" — a plateau never again reached.

The combined total of high marks was last at 42 percent in 1976, and, after hovering in the mid-30s, it reached a nadir of 31 percent in 1983.

Now, educators who have often griped that their schools' image was worse than the reality, will surely have no complaint if the public's impression may be running ahead of the reality.

But that perception could help shape that reality. People who feel better about public schools presumably will be more willing to foot the bill for improvements.

And, indeed, another Gallup question indicates that the gap is narrowing between those who oppose tax hikes for the schools and those who favor them.

Three years ago, the poll found people set against more taxes for education, 60-30. This year, tax hikes for education were opposed 47-41, the closest margin since the original poll in 1969 when the public was unwilling to pay more by a 49-45 margin.

President Reagan may be discomfited to hear that two-thirds of those surveyed said they would be more likely to vote for a candidate who would increase spending for education, and that, by a 42-34 margin, people said Democratic nominee Walter F. Mondale would be more likely to improve the quality of education.

The poll also has some disquieting news for school reformers who have preached relentlessly for injecting more rigor in the American curriculum.

Two-thirds of the adults said high school students are not given enough work and 59 percent said elementary school is too easy. But they were opposed, 50-44, to lengthening the school year or to adding an extra hour to the school day (52-42). And by a whopping 59-27 margin, the adults turned thumbs down on tougher entrance requirements for four-year colleges.

If stricter standards result in more "F" grades being handed out in the classroom and fewer teen-agers winning admission to college, the public now so alarmed about lax standards could soon be clamoring for the schools to ease up again.

Saudi boats evacuate crew of damaged vessel

Associated Press

Saudi Arabian naval boats were sent to evacuate the crew of a Liberian-registered tanker damaged by an explosion in the Red Sea, Lloyd's of London insurance company said today.

No casualties were reported aboard the Oceanic Energy in the blast Sunday, but it appeared to be the worst in a series of explosions in the key waterway where at least five other ships have been damaged since Thursday.

Sources at Egypt's port of Suez said there were reports that the vessel was sinking, and a spokesman for Lloyd's of London said mayday messages had indicated the 88,599-ton tanker was going down.

But distress calls were also monitored by a U.S. ship in the area, and a senior U.S. government official in Washington was quoted today by The New York Times as saying the tanker was not sinking.

"Some damage has been done, but our latest information is that the tanker will either be towed into port for repairs or may in fact be able to make it on its own power," the Times quoted the unidentified official as saying.

Lloyd's said the tanker was sailing in the southern zone of the Red Sea and was en route from the port of Al Hudaydah in North Yemen to Jidda, Saudi Arabia.

Shipping sources in the Persian Gulf said it appeared the Oceanic Energy was much farther into the Red Sea and international waters than the ships that were damaged last week.

Some Persian Gulf officials have said they believe the recent explosions were caused by mines or some other type of explosive devices.

Today, Egypt's defense minister, Field Marshal Abdel-Halim Abu-Ghazala, declared the Gulf of Suez "safe for international shipping," the state-run Middle East News Agency said.

Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak, before departing for Yugoslavia this morning, told reportersthat Egypt had taken "special measures to safeguard navigation in the Suez gulf but we cannot disclose them now."

Abu-Ghazala did not cite reasons for his declaration, but government sources last week said the Egyptian navy had launched a minesweeping operation in the 180-mile-long gulf, which links the Red Sea with the Suez Canal.

North Yemen's government said Sunday its patrol boats were keeping a vigilant watch in its northern territorial waters — at the southern end of the Red Sea — where the earlier explosions occurred. At least one North Yemeni minesweeper was reported to be operating in the zone.

Government officials in Sanaa, the capital, declined to comment on the latest explosion, saying it had not happened in North Yemen's territorial waters.

The officials said investigations were continuing into last week's blasts that damaged three vessels in North Yemeni waters. They identified the ships as the 11,800-ton Greek vessel Kriti Coral, the 5,150-ton Turkish Morgul, and the 7,720-ton East German freighter Georg Schumann.

The Red Sea blasts began July 27 off the Egyptian coast and spread to North Yemeni waters late last week. They have damaged at least nine vessels, according to Lloyd's.Last week, five ships reported explosions in the Gulf of Suez.

North Yemen has condemned the blasts as "criminal perpetrations" intended to destabilize the region, but it has not directly accused a specific country or organization.

One shipping company executive in Saudi Arabia said Sunday the firms were worried about the Red Sea blasts, but they were not halting their vessels until it became clear "what those blasts are and who is behind them."

The Red Sea is a vital shipping route leading to the Suez Canal. It also carries large numbers of Moslems every year to Saudi Arabia for the annual pilgrimage to Mecca and Medina.

Shippers, particularly oil transporters, have been concerned about air attacks on tankers in the Persian Gulf by Iran and Iraq, at war since September 1980.

The Financial Times, Britain's leading business daily, quoted Western observers in Cairo as saying the explosions "may be the work of a group backed by Iran." The paper quoted a Western diplomat in Cairo as saying the most obvious conclusion was that the mines are connected with the war between Iran and Iraq.

The paper said the diplomat "doubted that attempts at disrupting shipping in the Gulf of Suez were aimed directly at Egypt, but rather at causing confusion in an important seaway."

Last week, an anonymous caller claiming he represented "the Jihad (holy war) Organization" telephoned news organizations in London and said the group had planted 190 mines in the Gulf of Suez. He said it was part of a campaign against Western interests.

FERRARO

"Texans are confident, tough, can-do people. They don't make excuses, they get results. And that's the kind of vice president I'm going to be."

She reminds crowds that she believes in "hard work, and plenty of it."

The first woman on the national ticket of a major party is still trying to get used to that position, and so is everyone else.

The best example was a conversation at a wooden picnic table shaded by an oak tree on Bowmar Virden Jr.'s soybean farm outside Jackson, Miss. The event was staged for reporters and photographers to record the Mondale-Ferraro ticket's concern about farm problems.

Talk turned to Mississippi's blueberry crop.

The state's 70-year-old agriculture commissioner, Jim Buck Ross, asked her, "Can you cook a blueberry muffin?"

Mondale and the press looked on.

"Yes," Ms. Ferraro shot back. "Can you?"

"Down here," Ross said, "Men don't cook."

Later, Ms. Ferraro shrugged off the whole thing saying, "I guess this is the first time that the commissioner has met a female vice presidential candidate."

Moving on from muffins, she was asked in Austin if she thinks she is qualified to be president.

"I wouldn't be standing up here if I didn't."

Ms. Ferraro also is asked polite questions about how voters in the South will react to a woman.

"Once people in Texas get to know where I am on the issues and get to know a little bit about me personally, where I'm coming from and what I'm about, I think that we'll be able to deal with my being accepted by the people of Texas," Ms. Ferraro said.

She also played down surveys showing Southerners will reject a woman and pointed to her enthusiastic reception at a rally in front of the Governor's Mansion in Jackson.

"If Mississippi is any indication, it's wrong, wrong, wrong and I don't care what the polls say."

Plane to scan Gulf for traces of oil slick

GALVESTON (AP) — A special transport plane equipped with oil detection gear was to scan the Gulf of Mexico today for any traces of the slimy oil spill that washed ashore and nearly blanketed the tourist beaches of Galveston Island, Coast Guard officials said.

The C-130 transport plane, which uses a side-looking radar to peer into the water, was to leave the Coast Guard Air Station in Houston at 1 p.m. today for its flyover, said Coast Guard Petty Officer Joe Gibson.

"We want to make sure that there is no oil at all in the water," Gibson said.

Gibson said the plane had been used in other oil spill operations but was being used for the first time off the Galveston coast.

Late Sunday, oceanographers said most of the 1.4 million gallons of heavy Venezuelan crude that gushed out of the grounded British tanker Alvenus July 30 had either washed ashore or dissipated. Lighter oil on the edge of the crude evaporated, reducing the problem somewhat, Coast Guard officials said.

"From what we've seen so far, the worst is over. That's not to say some more isn't going to come on shore," said Debbie Payton, an oceanographer with the National Oceanographic and Atmospheric Administration.

Clean-up of the beaches, which were tar-dotted in some places and covered with a gooey sheet of oil in others, could take two weeks, Gibson said.

Bob Pavia, a NOAA scientific coordinator, said officials were examining wetlands and estuaries near San Luis Pass and Port Bolivar to determine if sheens of oil had damaged wildlife sanctuaries.

"Even if you harm an individual animal or whole group of animals — if the habitat is there — they can recover," Pavia said. "If the habitat isn't there, it makes it difficult for them to recover."

At least 10 birds and one turtle were treated at a special cleaning facility at Sea-Arama Marineworld Sunday, Pavia said.

"Any effects we see are going to be subtle kind of effects," Pavia said. "Any type of damage would be difficult to determine. We certainly didn't see anything catastrophic."

Officials were unable to determine how many tons of tar and oil were swept onto the approximately 30 miles of shoreline, Pavia said. Anywhere from 5 to 30 percent of the oil would not wash ashore because of "natural weathering processes," such as evaporation, he said.

Joe Cochran, a state parks superintendent, estimated 200 people, using road graders and shovels, cleaned up the beaches Sunday afternoon. The polluted sand being removed would be used in road construction, he said.

Cochran said the cleanup would cost "several million dollars."

The island's multimillion dollar resort industry was "looking a lot better now," said Jack Bushong, executive director of the Galveston Convention and Vistors Bureau.

Volunteers clean victims of oil spill

GALVESTON (AP) — Volunteers have begun the messy job of cleaning birds and turtles caught in the oily sludge on Galveston Island in an effort to save the animals before they die.

At least 10 birds and one turtle had been treated at Sea-Arama Marineworld by Sunday to rid the animals of the thick Venezuelan crude that coated their bodies, a process that officials say can last as long as four hours.

Damage "could have been a lot worse environmentally" from the 1.4 million gallons of oil that spilled when the British tanker Alvenus ran aground off the coast of Louisiana July 30, said Brian Cain of the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service.

"I think it's pretty good as far as the fish and wildlife go," Cain said.

Cain said damage was not expected to be measurable on oysters, shrimp or finfish in the Galveston Bay area.

At least one bird heavily soaked in oil died Friday after well-meaning rescuers tried to clean it with gasoline.

"It probably burned his eye tissue. He probably swallowed it. The fumes alone can be lethal to a bird," said Sibyl Bodamer, who is in charge of bird displays at Sea-Arama.

"I did it last time. It looks worse. It seems like I'm washing right over it."
— Karen Leski, cleanup volunteer

"Just wrap it in towels and bring it to us," said head curator John Kerivan. The reason for wrapping the bird in towels, Kerivan said, is to prevent it from preening and eating the toxic oil as it cleans itself.

"We're lucky to have a facilty like this," Cain said.

Mineral oil is applied to a bird's feather when it is first brought in to help soften the taffy-like oil. Volunteers put ointment in its eyes and on its feet and give the bird a corn-syrup solution. Later, the bird must go through a series of baths, using a special detergent designed to remove the oil.

Saturday was an all too familiar day for Sea-Arama officials, who had helped clean ducks when the Burmah Agate spilled lighter Nigerian crude into the Gulf of Mexico in 1979.

"I did it last time," said Karen Leski, the first of the volunteers to arrive. "It looks worse. It seems like I'm washing right over it."

Moroccan's criminal record should have kept him out of U.S.

DALLAS (AP) — A Moroccan national charged with gunning down six people in a north Dallas nightclub bombed the constable's office in his hometown when he was a child and had a long criminal record that should have barred him from entering the United States, federal officials say.

In a copyright story published in Sunday's editions of the Dallas Morning News, federal officials told the newspaper Abdilkrim Belachheb's troubles with the law began early in life.

Belachheb, 39, had convictions on 13 assaults, child-beating, two involuntary hospitalizations for mental health disorders and alcoholism, two jail terms and one probated sentence, according to Belgian authorities.

"We don't know what degree of fraud was involved, but if there was any fraud he should not have been admitted," said Richard Weeks, spokesman for the U.S. State Department bureau of consular affairs. "Fraud alone is a basis for deportation."

Belachheb is accused of killing six people and wounding another in a barrage of gunfire at Ianni's Restaurant and Club on June 29. Witnesses said the attack, which police called the worst mass murder on record in Dallas, apparently was triggered when a woman refused a man's offer to dance.

HIS BELGIAN wife and his second wife, Joanne O'Brien Belachheb of Dallas, both said he told them that his parents ordered him to leave home — at the age of 12 — after he bombed the constable's office in his hometown, the tiny Moroccan village of Beni-Amar.

"He was a problem child," Mrs. Belachheb told the News. "After he bombed the constable's office, his family either had to kick him out or be chased from the village. He was shuffled around between relatives for a while, then he was on his own on the streets."

At 19, he left Morocco to study welding and mechanics in Europe, the News reported. He later won a small part in a Belgian soap opera. But after convictions involving barroom brawls, beating his wife and injuring one of his children, Belachheb left behind his wife and two daughters and came to the United States, the newspaper said.

Belachheb is now jailed in Dallas awaiting an Oct. 1 trial date on six murder charges and one charge of attempted murder.

His first wife, Jenny Piot, who married Belacheb in Brussels in 1967, said she spoke to her ex-husband the day before the shootings and planned an August rendezvous in Spain.

"I WAS FURIOUS that our eldest daughter, Sabine, had failed her year in high school, and I called to tell him," she told the News in an interview in Brussels. "He's so proud of her, it really upset him...I thought afterwards that might have set him off."

Mrs. Piot described the shootings in Dallas as "unforgivable."

"If he were a total stranger, I'd say give him the electric chair. Or better yet, cut him up into little pieces," she said. "But knowing him as I do, head to toe, I feel differently."

Under Texas law, Belachheb faces a maximum penalty of life in prison if convicted.

Federal officials said Belachheb should have never been admitted into the United States.

"If we had received any information from any source that indicated his status, we would have gone after him and tried to deport him," said Larry Rowe, spokesman for the Immigration and Naturalization Service.

Government officials said that Belachheb lied about his address and denied any criminal conduct or mental health problems, the News reported.

He was granted a temporary visa to enter the United States through Los Angeles on April 22, 1981, records show. On Jan. 16, 1984, after he married a U.S. citizen, he was granted permanent legal residence in the United States.

REPRESENTATIVES of the federal agencies that reviewed Belachheb's applications for entry and legal status — including the INS, State Department and FBI — each placed the responsibility of checking his background with another agency, the newspaper reported.

When he first applied for a temporary visa in 1981, INS officials said, Belachheb apparently told U.S. consular officials in Casablanca, Morocco, that he had been living in his native country for the previous five years.

Belachheb actually had been living in Belgium until a month before he applied for the visa, the newspaper quoted Belgian police and his family and friends as saying.

Dallas police worried that efforts to quell protests may backfire

DALLAS (AP) — There is some concern among Dallas police that efforts to quell protesters at the upcoming Republican National Convention might be blown out of proportion because the city is regarded by some as a hotbed of right-wing hate, police say.

"I'm concerned that we'll have 150 arrests and it will be played up like we were out of control," said Police Chief Billy Prince.

Prince said the 2,086-member Dallas Police Department has been advised to be courteous when dealing with the public, but that "where we have to be firm, we will."

Last week, police employees, including clerical personnel, saw a 30-minute videotape which featured Prince, Deputy Chief William Newman and public information officer Bob Shaw in a discussion about what the department can expect during the Aug. 20-23 convention.

"We've never had to deal with a crowd of 5,000 people who are unhappy with the policies of a political party holding its national convention two blocks away," Shaw said.

Nevertheless, Prince said his department is "as ready as you can be," including being prepared for the possibility of riots and terrorist attacks.

He said arrests are a virtual certainty whenever groups come together at a political event, and he recalled that nearly 500 people were arrested in San Francisco during the Democratic National Convention.

San Francisco police received generally favorable reviews despite the arrests and allegations from civil liberties groups that police used excessive force and unfair bail requirements to repress protests, Prince said.

But "Dallas is not San Francisco," said Shaw.

"It's going to be hot, not quite as scenic and less of news story," he added.

Further, protesters at San Francisco often were somewhat sympathetic with the views of delegates. As the party of the current president, the Republican convention will incur more wrath than the Democratic gathering, Shaw said.

Because President John F. Kennedy was assassinated in Dallas in 1963, some still see the city as repressive and full of right-wing hate, Shaw said.

Shaw said he had received calls from reporters who wanted to confirm that police have "shoot-to-kill" orders if demonstrators breach the security fence erected around the Dallas Convention Center.

"It's put me in the position of having to answer the question, 'When did you stop beating your wife?'" Shaw said.

Officers have been advised to refer inquiries about the Kennedy assassination to the findings of the Warren Commission, Shaw said.

Lawsuit against Trans AM's maker begins

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A $50 million civil lawsuit filed by a former athlete against General Motors Corp. because of advertising that allegedly persuades car drives to perform "Smokey and the Bandit" type stunts is to start today.

Patrick Davis, 22, was left paralyzed when a 1977 Trans AM sports car slammed into a utility pole on Jan. 12, 1980, after the driver lost control on a curve while traveling 90 mph, the lawsuit states.

Davis' attorney, Pat Maloney Sr., of San Antonio, said the accident would not have happened if the driver, Harry Layer of San Antonio, had not been misled by GM's marketing of the Trans Am.

Maloney said the marketing included advertising incorporating auto stunts from "Smokey and the Bandit" and other films.

"They pander to the wild and the weak," Maloney said of GM advertising and marketing executives. "They have made millions exploiting human frailty, particularly reckless and irresponsible youth."

Davis is now confined to a San Antonio convalescent facility because of injuries suffered in the accident, Maloney said.

Actor Burt Reynolds, the star of "Smokey and the Bandit," has been subpoenaed as a witness, along with John DeLorean, the former GM engineer who spearheaded the commercial development of the Trans Am, Maloney said.

In the movie, Reynolds drove a Trans Am and left dozens of destroyed automobiles in his wake.

DeLorean is on trial in Los Angeles on federal charges of conspiring to traffic cocaine.

GM attorneys have set up temporary legal offices at a San Antonio hotel. The San Antonio Light reported Sunday that requests for comment from Thom Rumberger, chief counsel for GM, went unanswered.

Serving as co-counsel with Maloney is Sandy McMath of Little Rock, Ark. McMath won an undisclosed out-of-court settlement in a 1980 lawsuit against GM that stemmed from a 1978 traffic accident similar to the one that crippled Davis, the Light reported.

Ex-Galveston mayor dies of heart attack

GALVESTON (AP) — Former Galveston Mayor Edward "Eddie" Schreiber died Sunday of a heart attack at John Sealy Hospital in Galveston.

Schreiber, 79, was Galveston's mayor for nine years and was the first mayor to serve under the council-manager form of government in 1961.

The former mayor, whose first post came as chairman of the Galveston Policeman's and Firemen's Civil Service Commission, was known for his efforts at encouraging his fellow citizens to become involved in civic affairs.

Soviet VCRs now available

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet video cassette recorder is here at last and eager Soviets are ready to travel hundreds of miles to get one.

The daily newspaper Sovietskaya Rossiya reported Sunday that since the Elektronika VM-12 went on sale in mid-May, the rush has been on.

Not surprising. In this vast nation, only one store — the "Elektronika" shop in Voronezh — sells the new recorders. Buyers are ready to come from Moscow, 300 miles to the north, to put their name on a week-long waiting list to get a machine.

At about $2,000, the recorders cost five or six times less than Western models peddled on the Soviet black market. A Soviet who has seen one in Moscow said it's a "beautiful machine," not unlike some made in Japan.

The price of the new machine is six times the average monthly wage, meaning video is still the preserve of the Soviet equivalent of the middle class. Nonetheless, Voronezh store director E.P. Skopentsev told Sovietskaya Rossiya that more than 200 machines have been sold.

But problems remain. Chief among them, as Sovietskaya Rossiya emphasized in heavy black type, is "What To Watch?"

The Elektronika VM-12 comes complete with 10 blank cassettes, meaning Soviet buyers can record their favorite soccer match, hockey game or variety show from television — but not much more.

One customer, a ballroom dancing teacher who told Sovietskaya Rossiya he used video for instruction, complained the VM-12 needs a compatible video camera for video fans to make their own tapes.

More importantly, customers want movies. Privileged Soviets have been video enthusiasts for years because this was one way they could watch imported Western movies not usually available here. The VM-12 cannot show Western cassettes.

The trend has spread as Western videos hit the black market. Last year, Sovietskaya Rossiya reported the unmasking of a sophisticated ring that copied Western pornography and horror movies and films like "The Godfather" and "Clockwork Orange" and sold them from Odessa to Leningrad for about $400 each.

The newspaper used that incident both to underline official warnings that forbidden Western films will corrupt Soviet minds and to urge authorities to develop a homegrown industry.

Video seems to have gained more official acceptance since. Sovietskaya Rossiya reported Sunday that other unidentified Soviet cities are to start selling the VM-12 soon and that, in the fall, Voronezh will become the home of the first Soviet "video salon" with its own "brigade of video retailers."

They will be selling a video camera for the new recorder and, finally, cassettes of Soviet movies and rock stars like Alla Pugacheva in concert.

The nation's leading cultural publication, the weekly Literaturnaya Gazeta (Literary Gazette), signaled the growing acceptance of video when it chided officials in April for being too slow to realize the "fantastic opportunities" of the new medium.

Citizens of 'altered state' watch Games

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Plopping down into an easy chair might seem the easiest way to enjoy the 1984 Olympics on TV, but Californians like it when they can be a little different.

It's not just watching the Games — it's how you watch them.

Altered States Relaxation Center in West Hollywood, for instance, is showing videotapes of the Olympics in two tanks specially fitted with TV sets.

The center normally offers clients the chance to relax in water-filled 4-by-8-foot flotation tanks.

Co-owner Larry Hughes said he got the idea for special Olympic viewings while "lying there thinking I was probably the only person in the whole world watching the Opening Ceremony of the Olympics in a flotation tank."

The tanks contain 800 pounds of Epsom salts diluted in warm water.

"When you're inside the tank, you lose yourself completely," explained Mark Mikito, 24, a Hollywood martial-arts instructo.. "It's as if you're inside the bodies of tne athletes, feeling the same mental pressures, as well as the same physical pressures."

Fausta Vega of Los Alamitos had another idea.

She and her husband and two other couples rented a 70-foot, $1,200-a-day yacht, complete with French provincial furniture, satin and velvet bedroom decor, and a large TV to watch the Games while sailing near the yachting events.

"We wanted to do something unusual for the Olympics because we're into the Olympic spirit and I wanted to be sure and see the volleyball matches," Ms. Vega said. "Just to experience that feeling that you were there once, for one day."

The yacht includes gourmet meals prepared by a chef, a butler at your service, and an on-board baby sitter to care for the kids.

Snow cones help man achieve lifestyle

GAINESVILLE, Texas (AP) — When Gainesville residents step up to Billy Sims' Sno-Ball stand for a cup of lemonade or a strawberry snow cone, little do they know that the man behind the counter is a former corporate executive who holds a master's degree.

They may not know that Sims, a man who savors his freedom, worked less than 40 days last year, and spent the rest of his time sunning at his villa on the beaches in Puerta Vallarta, Mexico.

All that Billy Sims' customers know for sure is that he serves one mean snow cone.

"You might say that I'm the gourmet of the snow cone world," laughs Sims, whose specially flavored treats attract customers from miles around. "I've had this vision from the very start — I don't want it to be just a snow cone, I want it be an experience."

For Sims, selling snow cones is the perfect lifesyle that allows him to work when he wants to and take nine months of vacation a year.

"It's the only way to go," he says. "I guess I'm nothing but a beach bum. I just do this to support myself."

Sims, a self-described "free spirit," travels the fair and festival circuit three months each year, setting up his one-man operation along carnival midways. His business takes him from the Valley to Amarillo and he works his way north as the weather warms up. No event is too large or too small, he says, for him to set up his stand and do business. "I've probably worked them all at one time or another.

"I love the carnival atmosphere — the smell of the midway, of corny dogs, of cotton candy," Sims says.

"I guess it's just the little kid in me. It's exciting. Everyone has had this fantasy of traveling with carnivals, running their own concession stand. It's a fantasy I've realized."

In October, Sims closes up shop, packs his backpack, and heads for Mexico. He has seen it all: Mexico City, the Yucatan, Mazatlan, the ruins, Cabo San Lucas, Acapulco and Cozumel, but says his heart lies in Puerto Vallarta, where he rents a little villa "just down the street from Liz Taylor" for $120 a month.

"I was just paying $65 a month, but the jerk (landlord) just doubled my rent,"he says grinning.

In the summer, Sims' travels usually take him to Colorado to escape the heat of the long Texas summers, while another favorite destination is the Caribbean.

"I just love to travel — I'm a born wanderer," he says. "It's important for me to have a balance of work and recreation."

Sims' life wasn't always as carefree.

Until 15 years ago, he was a senior statistical analyst for Ford Motor Co. in Denver, running computer operations and handling financial difficulties between dealers and the company. Despite a comfortable salary and almost assured advancement within the corporation, Sims left Ford in 1969 to pursue a master's degree in Humanities and Sciences at Southern Methodist University in Dallas. He already had a bachelor's degree in business from the University of Texas at El Paso and marketing degree from the University of Texas at Austin.

"I wanted to be the boss, to do my own thing. I never felt like I earned my salary there (at Ford), Sims says. "I've always hated authority. I do today."

While at SMU he worked as a bartender, where his talents mixing strawberry, peach and lime daiquiris gave him a taste for what he finally wanted to do with his life.

After graduation in 1974, Sims headed for Aspen, skiing and working as a wine steward in a restaurant. It was on a trip back home to Gainesville that he saw something that was to shape his future.

"I was driving through Aubrey when I saw this old two-wheeled snow cone cart on the side of the road. It was in pretty bad shape," he says. "I thought to myself, 'That's it!' and went over and dickered with the owner to try to get him to sell it to me. He did, complete with all the supplies except ice."

Using his expertise from his bartending days, and with the help of a week-long course in syrup extracts from an extract company in New Mexico, Sims was ready for business. He concocted his own specially flavored syrups and by 1978 was traveling the circuit, selling his "gourmet" snow cones and lemonade to fair and festival crowds. The response was overwhelming.

Announcer gives viewers tasty tidbits

By FRED ROTHENBERG
Television Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — The man who brightens ABC's "World News This Morning" with facts, philosophy, obscurities, puzzles and quotations gets more mail than anybody on the show, including anchors Kathleen Sullivan and Steve Bell.

Yet hardly anybody knows his name. In fact, many of the letters come addressed "Dear Sir."

But Bill Owen, the invisible announcer on ABC's early morning newscast, is making a "name" for himself, developing a following as the voice who drops lumps of deliciously extraneous information into our coffee.

"Sometimes I think the audience is just tolerating the boy and girl (Bell and Miss Sullivan) until Bill comes back," said Rick Kaplan, former executive producer of the morning broadcast and now the top producer on "Nightline."

Some examples of the tasty tidbits that Owen delivers before each commercial:

"The post office guarantees there's only one-tenth of a calorie in the glue on a postage stamp."

"Whiskey is spelled with an 'e' if it's from Ireland, without an 'e' if it's from Scotland."

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠AKJ1054 ♡J ◇AQ62 ♣Q9
The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	Pass	1 NT	Pass

What do you bid now?
A.—It is a close decision between a jump to three spades or a simple rebid of two diamonds. We think that your most likely game contract is four spades, so we have a slight preference for the jump rebid of your strong major.

Q.2—East-West vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠Q9852 ♡83 ◇762 ♣954
Partner opens the bidding with one spade. What do you respond?
A.—We realize that it takes great restraint not to raise partner's suit when you have five-card support. However, bidding two spades has several drawbacks. Partner could overbid because he expects you to have some values, or double the opponents in an unbeatable contract. Also, it could alert a defender to the fact that his partner is very short in spades, and that could be a decisive factor in the auction. The wise course is to pass.

Q.3—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AK632 ♡KQ102 ◇A83 ♣7
The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	Pass	2 ♡	Pass

What do you bid now?
A.—No heart raise will do full justice to your hand. For the moment we suggest a bid of three diamonds. When you follow that up with a jump raise in hearts, you will have completed the picture of your hand, including the fact that you have a singleton club.

Q.4—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠Q762 ♡K8 ◇Q102 ♣AK83
The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	Pass	1 ♠	Pass
2 ♠	Pass	3 ◇	Pass

What do you bid now?
A.—Partner is probing for game, and you have an excellent hand for him, including help in the suit where he needs it. To bid anything other than four spades would be a gross dereliction of duty.

Q.5—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠A1093 ♡J92 ◇AQJ763
The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 ◇	Pass	1 ♡	Pass

What do you bid now?
A.—There are four possible choices—a jump to three diamonds; a simple two diamond rebid; a raise to two hearts; and a bid of one spade. Since we do not believe that it is wise to suppress a reasonable four-card major suit, one spade gets our nod. Second choice would be a jump to three diamonds.

Q.6—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AK854 ♡93 ◇AQ72 ♣105
The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	Pass	2 ♡	Pass

What do you bid now?
A.—You do not have the strength to show your diamond suit at the three-level—that would be a high reverse and show a much better hand than South possesses. All you can do is rebid two spades.

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: World War I spy Mata Hari, comedienne Billie Burke and U.N. statesman Ralph Bunche were born on this date. Also sharing your birthday: singer B.J. Thomas, Louisiana Gov. Edwin Edwards, New York Yankee outfielder Steve Kemp and the Toronto Blue Jays' Steve Senteney. Your commanding presence attracts the attention of those who count most in business. The career outlook brightens considerably. New financial rewards are part of the picture. Home life becomes even more important to you. Let loved ones know how much you need and appreciate their support. Travel boosts profits while setting the stage for romance. Be imaginative in promoting pet projects.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Make every effort to cope with partnership changes. A luncheon date with an interesting friend boosts your spirits. Contact those at a distance for information. Loved one may be stretching the truth.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Business pressures build. Get better organized and you will come through with flying colors. A TV program provides useful information as well as entertainment. Love with a Leo is great!

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Learn to delegate more household tasks. A lofty idea could prove impractical. Postpone signing contracts and business agreements. A vacationing parent offers sage advice; follow it to the letter.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Being in the right place at the right time is the secret of your success. Old friends prove more helpful than new ones in a family crisis. A summer romance brings delight.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Concentrate on practical matters. Afternoon will bring the answer to a difficult problem. Think twice about becoming romantically involved with a business associate.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): An outing with friends could turn sour if money becomes an issue. Look for ways to improve a relationship before it withers from neglect. A good day to catch up on your work.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Your relatives and close associates are easier to deal with now. An excellent day for vacationers to loll in the sun. If at home, begin a new study program.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): A morning quarrel could result in domestic unrest. Patch things up with a friendly compromise. Cut overhead costs to improve the bottom line. An out-of-towner brings great news.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Be gracious to family members even if they disagree with you about household finances. Spend your free time making home improvements that will add to your property's value.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Do not scorn physical labor. A money-making venture could prove too risky. Postpone a business luncheon if falling behind in your efforts to meet a deadline. Romantic partner is unusually supportive.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): An excellent day for handling financial matters. Concentrate on finding new outlets for your creative talents. You may decide to go into business for yourself. Romance accelerates.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Applause and recognition will be yours today. Go ahead and ask higher-ups about a pet project; the time is right. Love blossoms when least expected.

Wanted: Reform

There's a great deal of irony in the anniversary that was observed Sunday at the entrance to New York harbor. One hundred years ago on that date the cornerstone was laid for the Statue of Liberty.

The statue has, in the past century, stood as a beacon of hope for the millions of immigrants who saw in America the hope of a better way of life. They have come to America and found their dream.

But the America that attracted them is not the America of today. Now a different set of problems, a different set of needs faces this country and the open door policy for which this country was known is in need of revision.

The question of how to revise the immigration policy is not an easy one and there are plenty of special interest groups more than willing to tell Congress how policy should be altered. Immigration control, as has been noted on numerous occasions by different individuals, is a national issue — one that affects every present and future American, and all those who still view this land as their golden opportunity. But it's also a thorny political issue that turns statesmen into mice. It is a hot political potato and, all too frequently, it's handled as such. Little thought is given to the future of the country; more to the future of political careers.

In this session of the Congress, as in past sessions, the topic of immigration policy was raised and a bill went as far as any yet has — it passed both houses and now awaits only action of a conference committee.

A number of those close to this legislation — opponents as well as supporters — say the bill will die in the committee, a victim of political inaction. This is an election year and, yes, during an election year most politicians lose their desire to do anything that might jeopardize votes.

That's sad. It's sad because immigration legislation is needed. A nation that cannot control its own borders is a nation in danger and the United States is not controlling its borders, evidenced by the flood of illegal aliens.

Perhaps the Simpson-Mazzoli immigration reform bill isn't everything to everybody. Perhaps it does treat some unfairly, or make some Americans uncomfortable. Perhaps a better bill could be drawn.

The simple fact of the matter is that it addresses a problem that must be addressed. If not addressed, the flood of illegal aliens will create social problems on both sides of the border and, potentially, further strain hemispheric relations.

The conference committee may not act this year and the legislation may go the way of all previous immigration control attempts. But at some point this country has to address this problem.

If not this year, when?

Another View:

The great robbery

The greatest robbery of the century was not staged by gunmen but by big spenders in Congress and inflationists who reduced the value of the dollar by two-thirds between 1960 and 1980.

Mondale Democrats accuse Reagan Republicans of trying to balance the federal budget on the backs of the poor.

This is some talk coming from politicians whose devil-may-care fiscal policies have been picking the pockets of the poor and middle-income earners shamelessly for two decades.

By 1980, raging inflation, fired up by reckless spending and money policies under Democrat-controlled Congresses, had cut the purchasing power of the 1960 dollar to 35 cents.

That means that just to stay even, an individual's or a family's income had almost to triple during those two decades.

A pensioner with an income of $6,000 a year, which was modest but not impossible in 1960, would be getting only a bit more than $2,000 a year in 1980.

A wage earner getting $9,000 a year would have to make nearly $27,000 a year by 1980 to stay even and an income of $20,000 a year would have to rise to $60,000.

Average monthly Social Security payments rose from $68.23 in 1960 to $334 in 1980. But in constant dollars, the 1980 average monthly payment, taking inflation into account, was only $95.42.

As for wage earners moving into higher-income tax brackets — the notorious "bracket creep" — consumed a growing portion of their incomes.

For two decades the big spenders and inflationists in Congress ignored the growing rumble of discontent from Americans who were being robbed of trillions of dollars by manipulation of the economy

Then the tax revolts of the late 1970s and the anger of millions of Americans, who were fed up with inflationary robbery, led to the election of President Reagan.

The inflationists feel the same way about him that holdup men do when they are interrupted by the sheriff.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Monday, Aug. 6, the 219th day of 1984. There are 147 days left in the year.

In 1806, the Holy Roman Empire went out of existence as Emperor Francis I abdicated.

In 1890, a prison in Auburn, N.Y., became the first to use the electric chair to execute a condemned criminal. The electrocution of convicted murderer William Kemmler created a storm of controversy over whether the punishment was humane.

In 1914, Austria-Hungary declared war against Russia, and Serbia declared war against Germany.

In 1926, Gertrude Ederle of New York became the first American woman to swim the English Channel. She left Gris-Nez, France, and arrived on the English coast some 14½ hours later.

In 1942, Queen Wilhelmina of the Netherlands became the first reigning queen to address a joint session of the U.S. Congress.

In 1965, President Lyndon B. Johnson signed into law the Voting Rights Act.

In 1978, Pope Paul VI, head of the Roman Catholic church since 1963, died of a heart attack at age 80.

Ten years ago: President Richard M. Nixon told his Cabinet that he would not resign, but would remain in office while the constitutional process of impeachment ran its course.

Five years ago: The worst earthquake to hit San Francisco in more than 50 years rocked a large part of Northern California.

One year ago: Three unions representing telephone employees went on strike against AT&T.

Today's birthdays: Comedian Lucille Ball is 73. Actor Robert Mitchum is 67. Entrepeneur Sir Freddie Laker is 62. Pop artist Andy Warhol is 57. Actor Peter Bonerz is 46.

Thought for today: "Mankind must put an end to war or war will put an end to mankind." — President John F. Kennedy (1917-1963).

JACK ANDERSON

Organized crime force eyed

WASHINGTON — Current and former members of the federal organized-crime strike force in Los Angeles are themselves under investigation by the Justice Department. They have been accused of delaying or failing to pursue grand jury action against underworld figures in California and Hawaii.

Jack Anderson

My associate Indy Badhwar has learned that the targets of the investigation are the current strike force chief, Jim Henderson, and his predecessor, Richard Crane, who is now in private law practice in Los Angeles. The investigation by the Justice Department's Office of Professional Responsibility was begun under pressure from Rep. Charles B. Rangel, D-N.Y., chairman of the House Select Committee on Narcotics. Both Henderson and Crane vigorously deny any wrongdoing.

Over the past year, a special investigator for the House committee has interviewed organized-crime figures and state and local law enforcement officials in California and elsewhere. His principal informant, however, has been Jerry Van, a self-described muscleman for California's top racketeers and arsonists.

Van, now serving a prison term on extortion and assault charges, has been cooperating with state and federal authorities since 1979. Information he has given investigators, as well as his testimony before grand juries and in criminal trials, has led to almost a dozen indictments and convictions for such crimes as murder, arson for profit, mail fraud and drug smuggling.

Federal and local lawmen describe Van as one of the most valuable and credible witnesses against organized-crime figures in more than a decade. Because of threats on his life, he is in the witness protection program while in prison.

Van also gave information to Rangel's committee. In a letter to Attorney General William French Smith, the congressman said that Van provided information "concerning allegations of official corruption and dereliction of duty relating to narcotics enforcement in the southwest area of the United States."

Rangel added: "Mr. Van's allegations are directed specifically against the Los Angeles strike force, its former chief, Richard Crane, and its current leader, Jim Henderson. Crane, supervisor of the strike force in Los Angeles for 13 years, resigned his position and went into private practice. ... When Crane's clients have problems with the Los Angeles strike force, they are rarely touched because the current chief, Jim Henderson, is a friend and former subordinate of Crane's."

Rangel urged the Justice Department to "undertake a vigorous investigation" of the charges, as well as allegations involving Eddie Nash, a convicted felon who was Van's boss. Though the allegations were first made in 1979-80, there were no indictments in the Nash case until 1983. "Mr. Van surmised the indictments only occurred when the strike force realized the House select committee was looking into the matter," Rangel wrote.

The congressman wrote that it was not his intention to "involve this committee with investigating allegations of misconduct by federal officials," and added: "I have every confidence that the Justice Department will obviate the need to do so."

Michael E. Shaheen, head of the Office of Professional Responsibility, has informed Rangel that "we have initiated an inquiry into Mr. Van's allegations."

Although federal authorities have used Van's information in selected criminal cases, until now there has been no investigation of his broader charges that organized crime flourishes in California because of ineptitude and conflicts of interest within the strike force. He had provided written detailed information — names, places, dates, times — to the strike force, the Justice Department's Criminal Division and the California attorney general's office.

Van's charges were substantiated by law enforcement officials interviewed by a House narcotics committee investigator. Regarding recommendations for indictments in two investigations code-named Coco and Firebird, a Hawaii strike force official said: "They (Los Angeles) just sat on it. People were willing to talk, we had high quality informants and excellent work by the Drug Enforcement Administration. But the Los Angeles strike force just screwed it up."

A DEA official said: "The dope part was as big as the French Connection. But it went nowhere. We were all frustrated."

Although two targets of the Coco and Firebird investigations — which involved drugs, arson, labor racketeering and white slavery — were recently indicted, the Hawaiian strike force official said the indictments were too little and too late. "We haven't made a dent on them," he said. "They're probably stronger than they were."

Footnote: Both Crane and Henderson vehemently denied Rangel's accusatfons. Crane said: "These charges are horse—, unbelievable. I run a civil practice for corporations. I've never represented anyone who was being investigated or indicted by the federal strike force."

EVANS & NOVAK

Platform draft angered envoy

WASHINGTON — When he learned that a Republican Platform draft advocated a return to the gold standard and attacked the Federal Reserve Board, U.S. Ambassador Arthur Burns in West Germany placed a trans-Atlantic telephone protest call to the Platform Committee staff.

Rowland Evans

Burns, a former Federal Reserve chairman, angrily protested the platform's "Fed-bashing." He threatened to mobilize former Republican Treasury secretaries and Fed governors to renounce the party platform if it retained its present form.

Robert Novak

The ambassador was told his views would be taken into consideration and that the language would be softened, but Burns was not entirely satisfied. He telephoned Sen. John Tower of Texas, the 1980 Republican platform chairman but not a member of the committee this year, to keep an eye on wild ideas being written into the platform.

MINI-KEYNOTE

Republican National Convention managers are so concerned about the oratorical deficiencies of White House-selected keynote speaker, U.S. Treasurer Katherine Ortega, that they have trimmed her scheduled speaking time to an unprecedented short 12 minutes.

Ortega was hurriedly selected as keynoter earlier this year by Michael K. Deaver, President Reagan's deputy chief of staff, and given instructions to polish her speaking style. That cut off a campaign by conservative Republican congressmen boosting United Nations Ambassador Jeane Kirkpatrick for the speaking role.

Besides being limited to 12 minutes, Ortega will be compared with the eloquent Kirkpatrick. Although still a registered Democrat, Kirkpatrick last week quietly was shifted from the nondescript Tuesday night. She was given a speaking slot on the convention's opening night — the same session as Ortega's keynote — to satisfy conservative demands.

PERCY BACKS DOWN

Sen. Charles H. Percy abruptly backed down from a plea to fellow Republican senators to save his Senate Foreign Relations Committee from becoming "irrelevant" when he was warned he might be in danger in his difficult Illinois re-election campaign.

Percy appealed to a closed-door Republican strategy session Wednesday for the Senate to take up the foreign aid bill approved by his committee. But Sen. Robert Kasten of Wisconsin, chairman of the appropriations subcommittee that controls actual foreign aid money, shot back with this warning: Chuck, the foreign aid bill will only hurt you for re-election.

To the surprise of fellow senators, Percy quickly changed his mind — apparently considering a fourth term in the Senate more "relevant" than the Foreign Relations Committee's clout. Agreeing with Kasten, Percy asked Kasten to join in getting Majority Leader Howard Baker to pull the bill off the calendar. A pleased Kasten praised Percy's suggestion, and they proceeded together to Baker's office.

REAGAN ON THE ROAD

President Reagan's political managers are plotting an unprecedented campaign schedule that would get him to the Republican National Convention in Dallas two days late, on Wednesday, Aug. 22, after touring Iowa, Ohio, Missouri and possibly Michigan.

Reagan will spend the pre-convention weekend at his Camp David retreat, starting his two-day campaign from there. His political strategists want him to keep the pressure on the fast-starting Democrats, who plan three days a week of Mondale-Ferraro campaigning during August.

The president's Midwest schedule is not yet totally firmed up, especially when it comes to Michigan. With automobile production triggering a major recovery, Republican strategists have wanted a Reagan visit there to court the blue-collar vote. But that enthusiasm has ebbed following the president's unprogrammed call for restraint by the United Auto Workers in current wage negotiations.

NO SOUL FOR JESSE

The reason the Rev. Jesse Jackson's rousing speech was neither preceded nor followed by the usual rousing music was 11th-hour intervention by the convention's management, controlled by Democratic National Chairman Charles T. Manatt.

Jackson's staff had requested "soul" music for his appearance, and the convention orchestra was all set to play. But the late instructions to the orchestra leader were explicit: no music for Jackson.

A footnote: The orchestra also received a late change in instructions concerning Walter F. Mondale's acceptance speech. Mondale's staff originally had requested "The Minnesota Rouser," the college fight song that was the late Hubert H. Humphrey's musical trademark. But less than 30 minutes before his speech, the Mondale camp asked instead for the theme from the motion picture "Rocky" — symbolizing Democratic underdoggery.

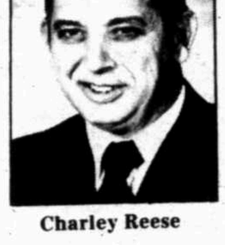
CHARLEY REESE

Evading reality hides truth

Much of the debate on public issues is as clear as muddy water. The cause is not that so many in public life are stupid but that so many of them labor so hard to avoid facing hard truths. They are like sinners trying to hide from God.



Charley Reese

Imagine trying to work a math problem while refusing to admit that two plus two equals four. What happens when people try to discuss an issue while hiding from the relevant facts is that they end up doing mental acrobatics. They end up producing confusion instead of understanding.

There is a flap, for example, over U.S. military readiness. A Congressional staff claims to have sidecovered that the United States is not prepared to fight a sustained conventional war. This is an attempt to manufacture a partisan issue while hiding from the truth.

In the first place, you can't discover something that has been public knowledge for years. American military professionals have been saying openly for the last seven or eight years that we cannot fight a sustained conventional war against the Soviet Union. The truth this Congressional bunch is trying to hide is that in order to have that capability we would require military conscription, a vast system of reserves, a tremendous increase in sealift and airlift capability, and enormous stockpiles of fuel, ammunition, and spare parts.

Another hard truth is that the politicians in the Congress and probably the taxpayers would never agree to fund such a capability which is why the plans have always been, as far back as I can remember, to go nuclear. People who claim to want to avoid nukes should face the fact that nukes are cheap and conventional forces are expensive.

They should also face the hard truth that all available evidence points with a unanimous finger to the fact that the Soviet Union has no intention of ever fighting a sustained conventional war. Soviet military doctrine, Soviet military force structure, and Soviet militry training all indicate plainly that the Soviets intend to fight, if they fight at all, a combined arms war using nuclear, chemical, biological and conventional arms simultaneously from day one.

Another area where hiding from a hard truth produces confusion is the Middle East. The hard truth is that the Arab nations have antirational hatred of Israel. You cannot reach a compromise between an irrational hatred and a rational deire (on Israel's part) to survive. The only kind of peace possible in the foreseeable future is a peace built on an Israel militarily strong enough to defeat any combination of Arab states. The instant Israel is not strong enough to do that there will be war.

Arab hatred for Israel was just as intense when Israel did not occupy the West Bank and Gaza. Giving up the West Bank would not appease the Arab hatred one iota.

Look at the fate of Anwar Sadat. The Egyptian president never gave up his hatred for Israel. He was just smart enough to swap a piece of paper for the Sinai. Even so the Arabs killed him. Hosni Mubarak, his successor, had done everything but formally abrogate the peace treaty and as soon as he works out his deals with the Soviet Union for arms and credit, he will do that. Our choice is to support Israel or abandon her. There is no middle ground in the Middle East.

But there are many, many hard truths some Americans work strenuously to evade. Arms control is a dangerous delusion. The Soviet Union really is an evil empire. Abortion is the killing of human beings. Private enterprise, not government, is the source of wealth. Freedom and secure property rights, not planning and controls, are the essential fuels of private enterprise. Welfare states inevitably bankrupt themselves. Without religion, no morality is possible and without morality, civilization flies apart.

Finally, it is a hard truth that no nation can survive long unless the majority of its citizens are moral, willing to work productively, live frugally, make personal sacrifices for the common good, maintain a faith in their fellow citizens and institutions, and prepare themselves psychologically and physically to fight and to destroy their enemies.

Life, based on truth, is simple. It only gets complex when you try to base it on lies and evasions. As Ayn Rand put it, however, you can evade reality but uou cannot evade the consequences of evading reality.

Anti-pollution measures add 3.3 percent to cost of goods, study says

WASHINGTON (AP) — Americans are paying about 3.3 percent more for the goods and services they buy as a direct result of the half-trillion dollars being spent this decade to meet federal clear air and water laws, the goverment says.

The Environmental Protection Agency, in a report released Sunday, said the costs of combatting pollution are adding about four-tenths of a percentage point to inflation each year as measured by the Consumer Price Index.

By 1987, the difference in what consumers will be paying as a result of federal pollution requirements will be about 6.6 cents on every dollar they spend, it said.

Officials, however, cautioned that the report measures only the anticipated costs of environmental regulation and none of the benefits.

"Since these measures do not take into account...improved public health and welfare, these forecasts exaggerate the negative impacts on inflation and economic growth," the report said.

Despite those ackowledged limitations, the study — which is required under the 1970 and 1972 Clean Air and Clean Water acts — is the first assessment since 1979 of the costs and economic impact of cleaning up the environment.

It was prepared primarily by Development Planning and Research Associates Inc. of Manhattan, Kan., under a government contract using earlier forecasts developed by Data Resources Inc. for EPA and the Council for Environmental Quality.

The report estimated the total costs of meeting the 1970 and 1972 air and water cleanup laws at $526 billion for the 10 years from 1981 to 1990, based on current practices with no allowance for innovations that might reduce the price.

The effect on the economy will be to reduce the nation's gross national product some seven-tenths of one percent by 1987 from what it otherwise would be, the report said.

The researchers noted that environmentalists often claim that the anti-pollution measures stimulate the economy and create new jobs while some businessmen argue just the oppostie.

"The truth probably lies somewhere in between," the report said. "While costs of pollution programs are high in absolute terms, the overall effects on prices, gross national product and employment are projected to be small and neither strongly positive nor negative in the long run."

For example, while corporations have blamed pollution requirements for decisions to close 155 plants at a loss of 33,000 jobs since January 1971, the cleanup laws will have stimulated some 524,000 new jobs by 1987, the report said.

Of the estimated total $526 billion in cleanup costs estimated for the decade, $270 billion is for water pollution control and $256 billion is for combating air pollution.

Nearly 71 percent of the water measures — some $192 billion — will come from government expenditures, primarily for municipal sewage treatment plants, the report said.

Peace activists mark bombing of Hiroshima

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Five thousand peace activists rallied to mark the 39th anniversary of the first U.S. atomic bombing of Japan, and to make sure the post-war generations remember the attack.

Although dwarfed by the crowd of 90,000 attending Olympic events at the Coliseum a few miles away, the attendance at Survival Day '84 in MacArthur Park on Sunday was the largest in more than a decade for an anti-war event in Los Angeles, police said.

"In sheer size, this is one of the largest I've seen," said Deputy Police Chief Lew Ritter.

Like the Olympics, Survival Day had a flame — an "eternal torch of light" carried into the park by Kenichi Yasui of Hiroshima, who was a child when his city was bombed during World War II.

"The survivors in Japan are getting older, and the people who survived the Nagasaki and Hiroshima bombs are getting smaller (in number)," Yasui, 46, told the crowd through an interpreter. "The younger people don't know what happened, and I feel we must get this message to the younger generation."

A crowd marched to the park from downtown and then observed three minutes of silence at 4:15 p.m. — 39 years to the moment, 8:15 a.m. Tokyo time, after the bomb was dropped on Aug. 6, 1945.

An estimated 118,000 people died immediately, while 60,000 died within five years.

Blues-rock singer Bonnie Raitt and other musicians performed, and vendors hawked a variety of wares including frozen juice bars called Nuclear Freezes.

The march was sponsored by the '84 Mobilization for Peace and Justice.

Ferraro calls on Reagan to 'be honest'

SALTAIRE, N. Y. (AP) — Rep. Geraldine Ferraro, continuing her attack on President Reagan's economic policies even during a weekend on Fire Island, has called on the president to "be honest" and give economic issues more than a "five-minute radio message."

The Democratic vice presidential candidate sounded her theme of Reagan's broken 1980 campaign promises, charging his promised "balanced budget" had become an additional $300 billion budget deficit.

Reagan, she said, was "going to reduce government spending, which he has not. He was going to make the government more secure, which he has not. He was going to give us a balanced budget by 1983, which he did not, and a surplus of $93 billion by 1984, which does not exist."

And, she added, Reagan is still making promises to taxpayers that he won't be able to keep.

Ms. Ferraro fired her latest salvo after attending church in the beach community of Saltaire, on Fire Island. She was returning to Washington today to tackle congressional business and to work on filling out her campaign staff.

In his weekly radio address on Saturday, Reagan said he would veto any tax bill that would raise personal income tax rates. His comments followed Walter Mondale's promise to raise taxes if elected, and Mondale's charge that Reagan also would raise taxes, no matter what he said.

Mondale, Ms. Ferraro said, is suggesting that "major corporations are paying next to nothing in taxes" and is "looking at closing the loopholes in the law and delaying tax indexes."

Ms. Ferraro called for "an extensive debate" on the economy.

She said taxpayers also have faced increased state and local taxes, "in order to make up shifts in priorities in the federal government."

"The American taxpayer has been hit for the past four years...He's got to know where it is coming from next."

Following Mass at Our Lady Star of the Sea Church, Ms. Ferraro stood outside under an umbrella held by her daughter Donna and answered questions on the role of church in politics.

"I believe in the separation of church and state. I am a member of Congress who is a Catholic. I try to separate my religious views from my standing on the issues. I think I have done that," she said.

She said she had succeeded in doing so on the abortion issue. "Abortion is the law of the land. There are people who are trying to connect my religious views with my views as a member of Congress. Of course, I am not happy with that," she said.

Despite overcast and muggy weather Ms. Ferraro got in her daily exercise with an hour-long jaunt along the surf with her husband and daughter.

Bush visits Reagan at hideaway

SANTA BARBARA, Calif. (AP) — Vice President George Bush, whose usual low profile has risen a few notches since Rep. Geraldine A. Ferraro became the Democratic vice presidential nominee, is interrupting a five-state campaign swing to visit President Reagan at his vacation hideaway.

The two men were conferring over lunch today about the status of their campaign for re-election and were almost certain to discuss the Republican National Convention that begins Aug. 20 in Dallas.

The visit was unusual in that Reagan has always guarded his vacation privacy and invites few visitors to the mountaintop ranch.

But with Democratic nominee Walter F. Mondale and Ms. Ferraro campaigning visibly, the ranch meeting gives the president a chance to have a vacation while also getting some exposure on television news.

For the second time since Reagan arrived at the ranch more than a week ago, a small pool of reporters, photographers and camera crews was being allowed to witness briefly the start of the meeting.

Reporters have only been admitted to the 688-acre ranch on two other occasions during Reagan's presidency.

Part of Reagan's campaign strategy is to try to counteract the effect of Ms. Ferraro, the first woman on a major party ticket, by stressing Bush's government experience.

After the luncheon session, Bush was expected to take another unusual step by going to the press room used by the White House press corps to deliver a personal briefing.

After that, the vice president was resuming his campaign swing that began Sunday in Seattle and Portland, Ore., and picks up tonight in Boise, Idaho.

Bush also will travel to Colorado and Kansas before returning to Washington.

ABC sports head says patriotic fever can get 'a bit old and offensive'

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Roone Arledge, president of ABC News and Sports, says the wave of patriotic fever at the Olympics "can get a bit old and offensive." And he admits that some of his own people have caught it, although he insists that their coverage is the best ever.

"I agree it has been overdone in many cases — an American overkill," Arledge said. "But with the Americans winning so many medals and the crowd response exploding as it is, we can't turn our cameras the other way."

It was an obligation to cover the story, Arledge said, that triggered the weekend flap over whether ABC's coverage was too heavily weighted toward American athletes.

The issue surfaced when Juan Antonio Samaranch, president of the International Olympic Committee, wrote a letter to Peter Ueberroth, president of the Los Angeles Olympic Organizing Committee, citing complaints of U.S. favoritism in the broadcasts and insisting that the situation be rectified "as the Games belong to the whole world."

"It was a matter blown all out of proportion," explained the executive of the network that has shown nine of the 11 Olympic Games which have been televised in the United States."There were misunderstandings all around and we took a bum rap. Those responsible agree now that complaints were unjustified.

"We have no apologies to make. We are proud of our coverage."

Arledge said the complaints originated with some influential overseas Olympic officials watching TV in their private offices or suites in Los Angeles and thinking that this was the show being beamed all over the world.

"It wasn't," he said. "They didn't realize that what they were looking at was a program geared to American audiences. The rest of the world was looking at a feed-off of our lines stressing their own national interests and using their own commentators.

"Usually we put the world feed in the various villages and venues. We didn't do it here. That proved a mistake."

After meeting with Arledge, Samaranch issued a statement explaining the misunderstanding and congratulating ABC for its "excellent electronic coverage."

Still, Arledge said he understands how foreigners unaware of the separate world feed, "seeing all the screaming fans and flag-waving in demonstrations such as I've rarely witnessed before, might feel it was a grossly chauvinistic exercise."

Senate Democrats block appropriations bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senate Democrats, angry over the administration's refusal to compromise on defense spending, are blocking action on bills to provide operating money for more than half the federal government.

Sen. Lawton Chiles, D-Fla., supported by the Democratic minority, launched a filibuster last week against a routine motion to waive budget restrictions on spending bills — a motion Chiles said is becoming too routine and is necessary only because of White House recalcitrance on defense spending.

The filibuster for the moment is blocking only an appropriations bill for the Agriculture Department. But Democrats say seven other 1985 spending bills that still must be approved by the Senate will fall victim to similar filibusters unless the White House starts showing a willingness to talk compromise.

Senate Republicans say the filibuster could force Congress to finance most of the government — including the Pentagon and the Department of Health and Human Services — through a stopgap emergency spending resolution.

"It would be too bad if it came to that," Senate Majority Leader Howard H. Baker Jr., R-Tenn., said late last week. "But it could come to that."

The Senate planned to vote today on a cloture petition that could choke off debate on the budget waiver. But 60 votes are needed to invoke cloture, and there are only 55 Republicans in the Senate.

Senate Democratic Leader Robert C. Byrd, D-W.Va., said Democrats are in no hurry to provide the five additional votes needed to end Chiles' filibuster.

"He's trying to call attention to the fact that the budget process, which is the law, is being emasculated," Byrd told reporters.

If the Senate resolves that dispute or temporarily puts it aside, another battle may take its place over President Reagan's request to increase this year's allotment of military aid to El Salvador.

Late last week, Republicans on the Senate Appropriations Committee tacked $117 million in military funds to a $6.9 billion emergency money bill which Senate leaders said they hope can be handled on Tuesday. The Senate committee action came one day after the House passed its version of the measure without any new military money for El Salvador.

Sen. Daniel K. Inouye, D-Hawaii, says he will fight the increase on the floor, but Republican backers such as Sen. Bob Kasten of Wisconsin say they hope a bipartisan attitude will carry the president's proposal through.

On the other side of Capitol Hill, the House scheduled a full slate of legislation this week, including a bill calling for a sixfold increase in the federal program to clean up abandoned hazardous waste dumps.

The House plans to begin debate Wednesday on legislation boosting the "superfund" program to $10.2 billion from its current $1.6 billion. The bill was approved late last week by the House Ways and Means Committee.

In the Senate, the Democratic filibuster involves the law passed in 1974 to bring the federal budget under control. Before then, congressional decisions on spending for government functions were made item by item, with no overall target and no attempt to match spending against tax revenues.

The Budget Act called on Congress to approve, early in the year, a budget resolution laying out target spending ceilings for all functions based on economic projections of tax income.

For the years through 1981, Chiles said, the process generally worked, with the budget resolution usually in place by May. By last year, it had slipped to June, but at least target ceilings were enacted.

But this year, there is no budget resolution because of the difference in proposed defense spending.

Panda's cub stillborn

WASHINGTON (AP) — Ling-Ling, the giant panda at the National Zoo, gave birth late Sunday to a stillborn cub, zoo officials announced today.

Dr. Robert Hoage, special assistant to the zoo director, said the infant panda appeared to be normally developed, but that its sex and the cause of death were not known. A necropsy was scheduled for later today.

The tiny cub was the result of a mating on March 19 between Ling-Ling and the zoo's male panda, Hsing-Hsing. It was only their second mating in nine years of trying.

Quake jolts Palm Springs

PALM SPRINGS, Calif. (AP) — A minor earthquake jolted a wide area of desert and mountain territory around this resort community today, but there were no reports of damage or injury, authorities said.

The 1:14 a.m. quake registered 3.5 on the Richter scale and was centered 10 miles west of North Palm Springs, said Jo Emery, dispatcher at the San Bernardino County Communications Center.

The quake was felt 50 miles west in Riverside, in the San Bernardino Mountain communities of Big Bear, Twin Peaks and Lake Arrowhead, and at Hesperia, a Victor Valley community north of that range about 70 miles northwest of Palm Springs, authorities said.

DEARBORN, Mich. (AP) — A museum dedicated to the history of the automobile wants to pay tribute to a byproduct of the car culture — the fast-food restaurant, a spokesman says.

The Henry Ford Museum in the Detroit suburb of Dearborn is making a bid to buy an original-design McDonald's restaurant.

Peres chosen to form new government

WORLD

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Prime minister-designate Shimon Peres began conferring today with potential partners in a new Labor-led government, but the rival Likud bloc refused to concede that its hold on power was over.

Peres was chosen Sunday by President Chaim Herzog to try to form a majority coalition in parliament, but Herzog urged him to seek a bipartisan government with Likud to unite the country and avoid weeks of horse-trading with the 13 small parties in the Knesset.

Peres and Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir, Likud's leader, planned to confer today on such an alliance. But the major hindrance appeared to be the question of who would head a joint government.

Likud insists that the leadership of a national unity government is a matter for negotiations.

Labor, however, insists that Peres will head the government because Herzog assigned him the task of forming a coalition, and party Secretary-General Chaim Bar-Lev today flatly ruled out possible negotiations on the leadership.

"If Likud insists on discussing the question of who will be prime minister there is nothing to talk about," Bar-Lev told Israel radio.

Shamir's deputy, David Levy, said in a television interview that Peres could not form a coalition even with other partners, and that there would be nothing to talk about with Likud unless the premiership was negotiable.

"If Mr. Peres wants to talk with us, he will announce that this subject is also open to discussion," Levy said. "If he says it is taboo and let's not talk about it, he is slamming the door...and will not be able to form any government, neither broad nor narrow."

A Likud official who spoke on condition he not be identified said his party was unlikely to settle for less than rotation of the premiership.

Labor's third-ranking leader, Yitzhak Navon, stressed that, "The president assigned the job to Mr. Peres," but other party officials said they were studying the rotation idea seriously.

Labor won 44 seats to 41 for Shamir's Likud bloc. But the distribution of the other 35 seats among 13 small parties did not give Peres enough firm supporters to establish a 61-seat majority in the 120-member Knesset.

Peres has 21 days to negotiate and present his new cabinet for a Knesset vote of confidence. He can ask Herzog for an additional 21 days if he wants. Herzog will only ask Shamir to try to form a government if Peres loses the confidence vote or hands his mandate back.

If that happens, Shamir would have the same 42-day period to form a government. And if he failed, Herzog could turn to any other Knesset member.

Meanwhile, Peres and Shamir face a period of tough bargaining.

They will have trouble filling Cabinet seats. Most commentators believe the party that fails to win the premiership will get the key foreign and defense ministries, but some portfolios have to be used to attract other parties.

They also have to work out compromises on key policy issues. A joint team is to meet to hammer out an austerity program to reduce a $22.7 billion foreign debt and projected 400 percent inflation. But the two parties may agree to freeze decisions on other controversial subjects, such as new West Bank settlements.

While negotiating with Shamir, Peres faces possible rebellion from Mapam, the left wing of his own party, which is opposed to sitting in government with Likud. If Mapam pulls out, Peres would be unable to lead a unity government at all, since Labor would no longer be the Knesset's largest party.

Shamir has problems, too. Several members of the Liberal Party, the smaller faction in Likud, were reported to be thinking of deserting Shamir for a new center bloc, which could become Labor's partner.

Bomb attack commemorated in Hiroshima

HIROSHIMA, Japan (AP) — An estimated 50,000 people observed a minute of silence this morning at Hiroshima's peace park to commemorate the moment 39 years ago when the city was devastated by the world's first atomic bomb attack.

About 118,000 people died from the heat, blast and radiation of the bomb, which exploded at 8:15 a.m., Aug. 6, 1945, in the final days of World War II. Another 60,000 people died of the bomb's effects over the next five years.

In a speech after the minute of silence today, Hiroshima's mayor, Takeshi Araki, said "the spirit of Hiroshima has permeated the whole world" in the search for an end to the nuclear arms race.

"Popular campaigns against nuclear arms have arisen spontaneously," the mayor said, and "we solemnly urge the nuclear powers to heed this international outcry."

Araki called on the United States and the Soviet Union to resume disarmament talks and said the nuclear powers should "initiate an immediate nuclear test ban, and begin to eliminate their nuclear armories."

A flock of doves filled the sky above the park as the brief annual ceremony ended.

Among the crowd were survivors of the bombing and relatives of those who died.

Three days after the bombing, a second U.S. atomic bomb killed an estimated 78,000 more in Nagasaki in southern Japan.

Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone will attend the Nagasaki memorial Thursday. The central government was represented today by Health and Welfare Minister Kozo Watanabe, whose ministry deals with the continuing health problems of the bombs' survivors, called "hibakusha."

The names of 4,315 hibakusha who died over the past year were added to a list of identified A-bomb victims' names kept inside a memorial in the center of the peace park.

A Hiroshima official said 113,271 names are now listed in the stone structure, that bears the words: "Rest in Peace, the Mistake Shall Not be Repeated."

In conjunction with the anniversary, representatives from Japan's anti-nuclear organizations are holding meetings to discuss nuclear issues facing Japan, including the June deployment of Tomahawk cruise missiles in the U.S. Pacific fleet and Soviet SS-20 missiles in Asia. An anti-nuclear rally in Hiroshima Sunday night drew a reported 20,000 people.

Solidarity leader says union activists should meet

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — A Solidarity underground leader released from prison under the government's amnesty plan says activists of the now-outlawed labor federation should meet to discuss how to bolster organizing efforts in factories.

Wladyslaw Frasyniuk, a member of the Solidarity underground's national leadership who was released from prison July 27, said Sunday a meeting should be held "to create a group close to (Solidarity founder Lech) Walesa which would be able to lead union activities openly and officially."

"We should think how to help organize structures and activities in factories," said Frasyniuk, who was contacted by telephone at his apartment in the southwestern city of Wrocław. "There are self-government bodies and unions in factories, but too few."

Frasyniuk said it would be "very difficult" to plan the meeting because some prisoners have not been released and others are undergoing medical treatment.

"There won't be any earlier date than September since one still has to talk to the people from factories and to activists in the regions," said Frasyniuk, who was chairman of the union's Lower Silesia chapter and a co-founder of the underground Temporary Coordinating Commission of Solidarity after martial law was imposed in December 1981. He was arrested in October 1982.

The government says the amnesty approved by parliament July 21 will free 652 political prisoners, including three senior Solidarity officials and three union advisers still held at Warsaw's Rakowiecka Prison.

In another development, a close friend of Adam Michnik, a prominent Solidarity adviser who was freed Saturday, said the 38-year-old dissident historian told him he refused to walk and had to be physically carried to his apartment after security police drove him in a car from Rakowiecka Prison.

U.S. promotes new policy at population meeting

MEXICO CITY (AP) — The United States, promoting a new policy that suggests poor nations can cope with population growth through economic progress, joins 139 other countries at a U.N.-sponsored population conference opening today.

The U.S. policy paper prepared for the conference says too much government control and planning in Third World countries held back economic growth that could have led to a birth rate decline. It emphasizes "sound economic policies" over population policy.

However, Rafael Salas, secretary general of the week-long conference, said there is a worldwide consensus that governments should intervene to affect population growth.

James Buckley, the head of the U.S. delegation, said at a news conference Sunday that while the Reagan administration "recognizes that many nations face critical prolems as a result of population trends that must be dealt with on an urgent basis, it does not believe that we face a global crisis."

"I think we Americans will be laughed out of the conference if they stress that theme; it's absurd," former World Bank president Robert S. McNamara said in New York.

The World Bank has predicted that the earth's population will double to nearly 10 million by 2050, a rate that McNamara said was "disastrous" and would destabilize poor countries, where most of the growth is expectd to occur. McNamara appeared Sunday on CBS-TV's "Face the Nation."

Buckley said the new U.S. policy also calls for a cutoff of financial aid to organizations that promote abortions in other nations. He declined to go into detail on how the government would define "promote."

He said the policy supports family planning efforts, including education and distribution of contraceptives. "What we oppose is a program that forces parents to make decisions with respect to numbers of their own children against their will," said Buckley, a former U.S. senator from New York.

"We fully recognize the sovereign right of each nation to determine for itself its own policies in this and other matters, but we believe that others should recognize that we have the sovereign right to determine under what conditions we will extend help," he said.

WORLD in brief

Gunman hijacks plane

MARSEILLE, France (AP) — A man armed with a sawed-off shotgun and a knife surrendered today after hijacking a French cargo plane and forcing it to return to the Marseille airport, authorities said.

They said the gunman had demanded to be flown to San Francisco. His identity was not known, but officials said he spoke German, and a representative of the West German consulate in Marseille was at the scene.

The plane, a DC-8 belonging to the SFAIR freight company, took off from Marseille this morning for Djanet, Algeria, with a cargo of construction material. Airport officials said the plane, with a crew of six, returned to Marseille about 30 minutes later after the gunman appeared.

Officials said they believed the hijacker slipped unnoticed into the plane's cargo bay early today.

India to buy new MiGs

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — India has completed a deal to purchase from the Soviets new MiG-29 Fulcrum fighter jets to counter U.S. aircraft sold to Pakistan, a government source says.

The source, who spoke Sunday on condition of anonymity, said the first MiG-29s may join the Indian air force by the end of this year.

During Soviet Defense Minister Dmitri F. Ustinov's visit to New Delhi in March, India urged Moscow to sell them the improved MiGs to counter the sophisticated F-16 warplanes sold to rival Pakistan by the United States.

The Soviet Union is India's main military supplier. After the United States approved a $3.2 billion package of military and economic aid to Pakistan, India signed a deal with France last year to buy 40 Mirage aircraft.

Guerrillas kidnap diplomat

TOKYO (AP) — A Japanese diplomat said here today that the Afghan guerrillas who held him captive for six weeks had treated him "very gentlemenly," according to a Japanese Foreign Ministry spokesman.

Koichi Umezawa, 31, an administrative attache at the Japanese Embassy in Kabul, was kidnapped by Moslem guerrillas June 22 near the Afghan capital while sightseeing.He was released Thursday at Pershawar, a Pakistani town bordering Afghanistan.

DILLARD'S WELCOMES THE AMERICAN EXPRESS® CARD

Williams' putt fails, Boyd wins City 'gift'

By BRUCE CASTLEBERRY
Sports Writer

When C.E. Boyd left the 10th green after dropping a putt for par, he headed straight for the eleventh tee box.

Boyd had no idea that Alan Williams would miss an 18 inch putt on the first hole of a sudden death playoff in the Championship Flight of the Midland City Championship golf tournament Sunday at Hogan Park Golf Course.

But miss Williams did. And only Boyd was more surprised than Williams. "It was a gift," said Boyd. "I never dreamed he'd miss that little putt."

Williams and Boyd both finished regulation with two-day totals of 138. Williams fired 69s on both days, but Boyd had to come up with a 67 Sunday to force the extra hole.

It was a strange end to a very exciting and challenging championship. Williams, Harry Bettis and David Pritchett entered the final round tied with 69s. Pritchett and Bettis faded somewhat, Bettis closing with a 143 and Pritchett scoring 141.

Defending champion Bill Baker had a 143.

BETTIS AND Williams are playing buddies, and walking up the sudden death hole, Bettis speculated about each golfers' chance. "I think the advantage goes to the guy who goes first," said Bettis. Both Boyd and Williams reached the green in two, with Williams' shot north of the pin, uphill about six feet away.

Boyd had dropped his shot to within four and a half feet of the pin to the immediate right of the flag.

Williams lined his putt slightly to the left of the hole about 18 inches away. Bettis called the shot for Boyd: "I had a putt just like his today. If he misses it, it'll be to the right of the hole. It doesn't turn as much as it looks."

And Boyd did just that, pushing the ball past the hole, then tapping in the par.

All Williams had to do was sink the easy one. He had already dropped a pressurized eight-footer on 17 that set up his playoff with Boyd. Williams had even joked about the putts as the two approached the green. "C.E. asked me before if I wanted to just trade out the putts," said Williams. "He's a hell of a putter."

Indeed. Boyd claimed the Texas state amateur putting crown last year at the LaJet Classic in Abilene.

THE VICTORY capped a remarkable comeback for Boyd in his first entry into the Reporter-Telegram sponsored City meet. After carding a 71 Saturday, Boyd vowed to attack on Sunday. "I just didn't want to play conservative," he said, "Yesterday, I was two or three under par a couple of times, and then I'd start backing off. I'm getting old; I geuss he just felt sorry for me."

Certainly Williams did not feel sorry for himself after two solid rounds. "I just never even thought about it, I don't know how it happened that the ball stayed up. If the ball doesn't go in the hole, you lose. I'll take the same score next year and let them shoot at it.

"I'll be back," said Williams. Both golfers are members of Green Tree Country Club, and along with unseated champ Baker are pushing for greater participation in the event. The argument postulated by the golfers is that the city championship would be more truly representative if all competitive golfers took part.

"There's no participation from the other country clubs," said Williams. "It was a good field this year," Boyd added, "They should try and get more people involved."

Williams and Boyd will likely return, so interested parties take note.

Regardless, the City tournament provided a few select golfers to rise to the heights. "But, you've still got to go to work on Monday win or lose," said Boyd.

Here are the finishers by flight after the final round of the two-day Midland City Golf Tournament at Hogan Park Golf Course.

American women surge forward in Olympic track

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Carl Lewis, already the possessor of one gold medal, got a big jump on the field in his quest for a second one. And Joan Benoit and Evelyn Ashford took big steps in restoring American women to the forefront of Olympic track.

The big jump Sunday was in long jump qualifying — 27 feet, 2¾ inches, to be exact, 11 inches longer than anyone else. And he wasn't really trying. He just stripped off his warmup suit, loped down the runway, qualified, waved, put his warmup suit back on and that was that.

The long jump final will be held tonight. And Lewis, of Willingboro, N.J., who won the 100-meter dash Saturday night, was set to run today in heats and quarterfinals for the 200 meters. His fourth event, the 400 relay, will be run Saturday night.

HEADING INTO today's competition, the United States had 92 medals, 43 of them gold. West Germany was second overall with 30 medals and Romania, third with 29, was runnerup in gold with 15.

As swimming and gymnastics bowed out of the Olympics during the weekend (and some swimmers and gymnasts bowed out of Olympic competition), synchronized swimming, sort of like judging Esther Williams movies, made its debut today.

The women's marathon made its Olympic debut Sunday and Benoit won it with remarkable ease, beating Grete Waitz, the first time the Norwegian marathoner has finished other than first. It also was the first U.S. women's Olympic gold medal in track since the 1968 Mexico City Games.

"It was a real honor for every woman in this race today," Benoit, a 27-year-old from Freeport, Maine, said. "It's been a long time coming. We certainly proved we could run the distances."

No one proved it more dramatically than Gabriella Andersen-Schiess of Switzerland, who staggered into Memorial Coliseum and across the finish line in 37th place, almost unconscious from dehydration.

Ashford, of Roseville, Calif., won the gold in the women's 100 meters with relative ease, surpassing the Olympic record with her time of 10.97 seconds to the 11.13 by Alice Brown of Altadena, Calif. "I was stunned at first," Ashford said. "I didn't realize at first what I had done . . . I won — and I was under 11 seconds. I wanted to be under 11 seconds." She also owns the world record of 10.79 seconds.

Like Benoit and Ashford, Edwin Moses of Laguna Hills, Calif., had little trouble in winning his race — his 105th consecutive victory in the 400-meter intermediate hurdles in 47.75 seconds, just off the Olympic record of 47.64 he set eight years ago at the Montreal Games and well off his world mark of 47.02.

"I just feel very fortunate to be able to be around for eight years and be able to repeat after that long," the 28-year-old Moses said. "After not being able to go in 1980 (when the United States boycotted the Moscow Games) it really just sweetens the whole victory."

SUNDAY'S OTHER track-and-field medalist was Finnish javelin thrower Arto Haerkoenen.

Also Sunday:

— The cycling competition was closed out with the United States — Ronald Kiefel of Denver, Roy Knickman of Colorado Springs, Colo., Davis Phinney of Boulder, Colo., and Andrew Weaver of Coral Springs, Fla. — winning the bronze behind Italy and Switzerland in the 100-kilometer road team event.

— Meldrick Taylor of Philadelphia, at 125 pounds, 132-pound Pernell Whitaker of Norfolk, Va., and Jerry Page of Columbus, Ohio, 139 pounds, all scored unanimous decisions. But Robert Shannon of Edmonds, Wash., at 119 pounds, was the first American boxer to lose, stopped in the third round by Sung-Kil Moon of South Korea. Also losing at 119 pounds was Star Zulu of Zambia, beaten by world champion Marizio Stecca of Italy.

The U.S. women's basketball team, led by Anne Donovan's 14 points, clobbered Canada 92-61 to move within one victory of a gold medal. The American women will play the title game Tuesday night against South Korea, which they beat 84-47 earlier in the tournament. The U.S. men's team plays West Germany tonight in the quarterfinals.

The U.S. women's volleyball team also is one victory shy of a gold medal following its 15-14, 15-9, 15-10 sweep of Peru. It will play China Tuesday night. "We should go into the match loose and proud," U.S. Coach Arie Selinger said. The Americans beat China in four sets last Friday night.

JULIANNE McNAMARA of San Ramon, Calif., shared gold with Ma Yanhong of China on the uneven bars, Mary Lou Retton of Fairmont, W. Va., won silver in the horse vault and bronze for the uneven bars and floor exercises, and Kathy Johnson of Huntington Beach, Calif., won bronze on the balance beam. She immediately announced her retirement, saying she hopes to coach, judge or do television commentary in the sport.

The U.S. swimmers on Saturday night matched their feat of 21 gold medals in the 1968 Games, then announced a wave of retirements, among them Rowdy Gaines of Winter Haven, Fla., and Steve Lundquist of Jonesboro, Ga., who were denied a chance to compete in Moscow four years ago and who were half of the medley relay team that set a world record en route to this 21st gold.

"These Olympics take away all my bad memories," Gaines said. "Before the Olympics, my only regret in swimming was that I didn't get to go to Moscow for the 1980 Olympics. Now that's completely forgotten." George DiCarlo, Nancy Hogshead and Tracy Caulkins also said they were retiring.

Caulkins was one of five American triple-gold medalists. "I wish the East Germans had come," Caulkins said. "It might have made our victories a little more satisfying. But in years to come people won't remember who was here."

Millions share in marathon agony

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Pain shouted from her contorted body, but her numbed mind drove her toward the finish line.

Gabriella Andersen-Schiess has no memory of those final tortured steps at the conclusion of Sunday's women's marathon. But the millions who witnessed her Olympic bravery — and shared her agony — will never forget it.

"I don't remember it a whole lot," said the 39-year-old Swiss-born ski instructor. "I got within four kilometers and then I blacked out."

She staggered into the Coliseum for the final 500 meters of the 26-mile run and slowed to a dazed, grotesque plod. Her lame left leg dragging, she weaved aimlessly, almost leaving the track.

Instinctively, she continued, propelled by applause from the near-capacity crowd of 77,000.

When her grim struggle ended in collapse as she crossed the finish line, attendants stopped her fall, cradling her limp body.

Taken off the track in a stretcher, Andersen-Schiess was treated for dehydration and given intravenous fluids by Olympic doctors, officials said. She did not require hospitalization.

However, the wrenching conclusion to the first women's Olympic marathon sparked debate over whether officials should have stopped her for her own good.

Canada's team physician, Doug Clement, questioned the wisdom of allowing Andersen-Schiess to continue.

"If it would have been a Canadian athlete, even in first place, good God, you shouldn't let that happen," he said.

"There were tears in my eyes. I was saying 'My God, what a mess this is.' It was the dilemma of all time. Do you tackle her and stop her or do you let her go and have blood on your hands?"

But Dr. Anthony Daley, chief physician for the Games, declared, "Meet officials did the right thing by allowing her to continue," Olympic officals reported.

Later, after being returned to the nearby athletes' village at the University of Southern California, she was alert and said during an interview that she recalled little about the last two miles.

"I couldn't really think rationally at that time," she said. "My actions were by instinct and reflex ... I would rather have finished in a normal manner.

"I remember coming into the stadium and I thought I could finish," said Andersen-Schiess, who resides in Sun Valley, Idaho.

Asked if officials should have allowed her to finish, she replied:

"I don't know. I don't feel too bad now, so I don't think there's any lasting effect," she said. "I'll probably be a little weak for a while, but I can walk around now and I feel fine."

Needing 16 minutes to cover the final mile, she finished 37th in a time of 2:48.42. Six of the 50 competitors dropped out of the race, which was run under near-ideal conditions, officials said. Almost half the race was run near the ocean and the temperature at the Coliseum was 76 degrees.

Frank Robinson fired by Giants

ATLANTA (AP) — Frank Robinson said after he was fired as manager by the San Francisco Giants that he listened to others and took the wrong approach.

Giants owner Bob Lurie said Sunday he had fired Robinson to give the team a better chance to start winning and position itself for 1985. Robinson was replaced by veteran coach Danny Ozark.

Robinson stressed his mistake in heeding the advice of others and changing his approach from that of demanding taskmaster to one who stressed patience and tolerance.

When asked what he would have done differently, he said Sunday: "I would have been myself. I would not let people talk me into being something other than what I am. I would not have accepted poor play, mistakes, excuses. I was a little too easy. I think that would have made a difference then. It won't make any difference now."

Lurie said he never asked Robinson to change and didn't know who did.

"It was a very difficult decision, but it was up to management to make it," Lurie told reporters before Sunday's game between the Giants and the Atlanta Braves. The Giants won the game but remained in last place in the National League West with a 43-64 record, 22 games behind first-place San Diego.

Robinson told the San Francisco Chronicle that one of his problems was a personality conflict with General Manager Tom Haller.

"I would like to have had a closer communication . . . It wasn't a good working relationship," Robinson said.

Lurie maintained Robinson was a part of the decision-making process. "He was well aware of any player movement, and he was involved whenever any trade was contemplated," Lurie said.

Robinson was hired Jan. 14, 1981, to replace Dave Bristol as the Giants' manager. He compiled an overall won-loss record of 268-277 with the Giants. He became the first black manager in the major leagues when he took over the helm of the Cleveland Indians in 1975. He was fired in 1977.

Dodger homers sink Midland

Associated Press

SAN ANTONIO — The San Antonio Dodgers used home run power from Cecil Espy and Ralph Bryant to down the Midland Cubs by a 7-2 margin here Sunday night in Texas League action.

The Cubs now trail the series with the Dodgers by a 2-1 count with games left today and Tuesday.

Bryant's three-run homer and Cecil Espy's two-run homer paced San Antonio's victory over Midland. Midland countered with a solo blast from Tony Woods.

San Antonio had 13 hits to only five for Midland.

Tulsa's Bob Gergin hit probably the longest single of his life in the second inning of the Drillers' first game of a doubleheader with the Jackson Mets.

Gergin knocked the ball out of the park for an apparent home run Sunday, with teammates Gorge Gomez and Whitney Harry on base. Gomez and Harry scored, but not before Gergin passed Harry while making his home run trot, causing the hit to be changed officially to a single.

Jackson rallied for a 9-6 victory in the opener, with Tulsa claiming a 2-1 victory in the second game.

In another league game, El Paso defeated Beaumont 2-1. Shreveport and Arkansas were idle.

Bill Max hit his eighth homer of the year and Dave Cochrane his 19th to lead Jackson in its victory. Ed Hearn's bases-loaded triple highlighted a four-run sixth inning for the Mets.

In the nightcap, Tulsa scored its runs early. Greg Tabor scored on Ben Murphy's first-inning sacrifice bly, and Harry scored on a wild pitch by Jackson's Bill Fultz. Billy Beane's home run in the seventh was Jackson's only run.

El Paso got its first run against Beaumont after Mike Felder walked with two out in the fourth. Felder stole second and scored on a single by former Beaumont player Dan Purpura. In the eighth, Juan Castillo walked, raced to third on Stan Davis' single and scored on Felder's sacrifice fly.

Beaumont's James Steels led off the ninth with a double, moved to third on Mark Gillaspie's single and scored on Mark Parent's sacrifice fly.

Eastwood stock climbs with second tour win

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — Bob Eastwood, a balding, 38-year-old veteran who played for 12 full seasons without a victory, now is a 2-time winner on the PGA tour.

"I have no explanation — but I love it," Eastwood said after his scrambling closing round of par 72 Sunday was enough to provide him with a 2-shot triumph in the Danny Thomas-Memphis Classic. He finished with a 280 total, eight shots under par on the 7,282-yard Colonial Country Club course.

"I love the feeling of being a winner," said Eastwood, who first joined the tour in 1969, had his career interrupted by military service and then — finally — scored his first victory earlier this season in New Orleans.

"It was good to get that first win," Eastwood said. "But this one may have been harder. This was tougher to win because I wasn't hitting the ball as well as I was at New Orleans.

"I had to think better, manage my game better.

"I think I'm a smarter player now. I have the experience, know more about what I'm doing."

As a double winner, Eastwood joins Tom Watson, Tom Kite, Greg Norman, Peter Jacobsen and Gary Koch as a multiple winner on the American tour this season.

The victory was worth $90,000 from the total purse of $500,000 and pushed Eastwood's earnings for the year to a career-high $188,794.

Loren Roberts, who had led or shared the lead through the first three rounds, fell victim to a closing 76 that sent him reeling back to a tie for fifth — still the highest finish of his three-year career.

With Roberts fading, Eastwood took the lead alone with an 18-foot birdie putt on the fifth hole. He held the top spot the rest of the way, but had to survive a late challenge by Mark O'Meara, who closed to within a single stroke of the lead with a two-putt birdie-4 on the 16th.

Playing in front of Eastwood, O'Meara challenged the water on the par-5 18th, and paid the penalty. His second shot caught the pond and his last chance was gone.

He finished in a tie for second at 282 with Ralph Landrum and Tim Simpson. O'Meara had a 69, Landrum closed up with a 67 and Simpson had a 70 in the hot, muggy weather.

Roberts was tied with Mark Lye, who had a 71, at 283.

Bill Kratzert, rookie Willie Wood and Roger Maltbie, each with a 71, were next at 284.

Miller repeats LPGA title

WHEELING, .Va (AP) — Alice Miller held her game together Sunday after a near disastrous bogey on the 13th hole to capture the West Virginia LPGA Classic for the second straight year.

Miller shot a final-round even-par 72 to defeat Vicki Singleton and Beverly Klass by two strokes. Miller, a Marysville, Calif., native, finished with a 7-under-par 209 in earning her third LPGA title in her six-year career.

Singleton, the first-round leader after shooting a tournament record 6-under-par 66, moved to within one shot on the 13th hole with a birdie. On the same hole Miller hit her drive into the woods and after a penalty shot was able to save a bogey with a tough 10-foot putt.

From there Miller shot even par on the sweltering Speidel course. She got another break on the 17th when she was allowed to drop out of a sand trap because of casual water in the bunker. The course had been pounded by rain for two days.

Singleton bogeyed the 18th hole to shoot a final-round 73 while Klass had a par on the 18th to finish even par for the day. Both were 5-under 211 for the tournament.

Singleton had birdie putt opportunities on the last three holes to tie the tournament — the last one from 30 feet — but could not convert.

"After making birdie on 13 I started to get a little excited. My heart leaped up. At that point I just wanted to maintain what I was doing," said Singleton. "On 18 I thought I hit it hard but not hard enough." Maybe if I had hit hit it a little harder, I could have put some pressure on Alice."

Miller earned $22,500 for her victory in the $150,000 tournament. Finishing 4 shots off the pace were Judy Clark, Vickie Alvarez and Cindy Pleger. It was the first time in six years that a winner was decided without a playoff.

Lockers dominate tourney

From Staff Reports

Midland Country Club's annual Father-Son golf tournament turned into a real family affair and the Locker family dominated the event.

Walt and Mike Locker posted a two-day point system score of 202 to win the championship while Walt teamed with son Gus for a 194 to take second place.

W.C. and Clayton Hubbard took third with a 192 total.

Al and Reece Boudreaux won the first flight with a 180 and was followed by Tim and Tim Jr. Thompson, 177; and Dr. Dean and Robert Strack with a 175.

Clay and Mike Courter won the second flight with a 161 total while J.C. and Ralph Williamson were second with 151 and Charles and Wes Perry third with a 149.

In the third flight, Tommy and Richard Thomason captured top honors with a 144 and were followed by Joe and Bill Wallace with a 137 and James and David Logan with a 134.

Craig and Lance Campbell won the fourth flight with a 125 while Alex and Trey Clarke took second with 123. Third went to Horace and Robbie Robb with a 118.

Navratilova's streak still intact

Associated Press

Martina Navratilova's winning streak is 43 but the world's top women's tennis player had to work for her latest success.

Gigi Fernandez, the 1983 NCAA finalist currently ranked No. 110 in the world, gave Navratilova her toughest threat in the $150,000 Virginia Slims of Newport tournament before losing a 6-3, 7-6 (7-3) decision.

Fernandez had the satisfaction of winning more games and keeping Navratilova on the court longer — 67 minutes — than any of the champion's previous four opponents.

"I thought I'd play the game I played all week, a grass court game," said Fernandez, who will represent Puerto Rico in the Olympic Games this week. "I thought if I returned serve well, I'd give her a good match."

Moreland's slam keeps Chicago Cubs in first place

Associated Press

Baseball Roundup

Keith Moreland's grand slam and one-hit relief pitching by Rick Reuschel led first-place Chicago to a 4-3 victory over the Montreal Expos, the eighth triumph for the Cubs in 10 games.

Chicago's Ryne Sandberg continued to contribute in a way, even though it was Moreland who hit the grand slam.

"I've been using a Ryne Sandberg bat all week," said Moreland, "I guess I needed one with his name on it. Maybe I ought to be sleeping with it."

Moreland was joking, but when Sandberg cracked his bat fouling off a pitch, Moreland said: "I ran to the bat rack to make sure he didn't grab the one I've been using."

USING THE Sandberg model, Moreland has collected 11 hits in 19 at-bats in the last five games, including two doubles, three homers and seven runs batted in.

Moreland's second career grand slam came in the third inning with two outs off Dick Grapenthin, who had been called up from Indianapolis to fill in for David Palmer, who was placed on the disabled list earlier in the day with a stiff shoulder.

"I was looking for a fastball sinking in," said Moreland. "That's what he threw me the first time around. I didn't hit it that well, I didn't crush the ball. I think the wind helped it."

In other National League games, Jeff Leonard's grand slam in the top of the ninth inning gave new Giants Manager Danny Ozark his first victory of the season as San Francisco defeated the Atlanta Braves 7-4.

George Foster's two-run, 10th-inning single following a key error by Pittsburgh shortstop Dale Berra lifted the New York Mets, behind Sid Fernandez and reliever Wes Gardner, to a 3-1 victory over the Pirates.

Cardinals reliever Neil Allen walked John Wockenfuss and Ozzie Virgil with the bases loaded in the eighth inning to force in the tie-breaking runs as the Philadelphia Phillies defeated St. Louis 6-3. Von Hayes added his 12th homer in the ninth for two Philadelphia insurance runs.

Steve Sax's throwing error in the bottom of the 11th inning allowed Cesar Cedeno to score the winning run and gave the Cincinnati Reds a 2-1 victory over the Los Angeles Dodgers.

IN BASEBALL'S only night game, Steve Garvey slammed three hits, including a two-run homer, and Kevin McReynolds drove in three runs as the San Diego Padres defeated the Houston Astros 9-5.

The victory was the Padres 10th in their last 12 games and gave them a 9½-game lead over the second-place Atlanta Braves in the Western Division race.

In the American League, Tom Brunansky drove in three runs — two of them with his third home run in as many games — and Ken Schrom scattered six hits over 7⅓ innings as the Minnesota Twins downed the California Angels 4-2 and reclaimed first place in the torrid AL West.

The Tigers lost their fourth straight game as Pat Sheridan keyed a four-run first inning with a two-run homer and the Kansas City Royals beat Detroit 4-0 to sweep their double-header and the weekend series.

In the first game, Dane Iorg doubled home two runs with two out in the ninth inning to break a tie and lift the Royals to a 5-4 victory.

In other AL games, Ray Fontenot pitched hitless ball for 5⅓ innings before allowing Brook Jacoby's infield single, and Mike Armstrong and Phil Niekro completed the one-hitter as the New York Yankees blanked the Cleveland Indians 4-0 for their eighth consecutive victory.

Toronto's Cliff Johnson set a major-league record by hitting the 19th pinch-hit home run of his career in the eighth inning, breaking a tie and giving the Blue Jays a 4-3 victory over the Baltimore Orioles.

ROOKIE AL Nipper allowed three hits over the first eight innings and Tony Armas and Rich Gedman belted solo home runs, leading the Boston Red Sox to a 4-2 triumph over the Texas Rangers, their 14th victory in 20 games.

Chicago's Greg Luzinski ran his RBI streak to eight consecutive games with two run-scoring singles, leading the White Sox to a 7-0 victory over the struggling Milwaukee Brewers as Richard Dotson and Ron Reed combined on a shutout.

Mike Heath, Carney Lansford and Jim Essian hit home runs, offsetting the damage done by several Oakland mistakes, as the A's beat the Seattle Mariners 5-4.

Pack rookie steals show

White, Hogeboom fight to standoff

IRVING, Texas (AP) — With all eyes focused on the Dallas Cowboys quarterback battle between starter Danny White and challenger Gary Hogeboom, a Green Bay Packers rookie from Wisconsin almost stole the show.

White and Hogeboom dueled to a draw in Dallas' 31-17 victory over Green Bay Saturday night in Texas Stadium, according to Coach Tom Landry.

But sixth-round draft choice Randy Wright almost captured the quarterback spotlight all for himself.

"I THOUGHT the kid did a good job, a real good job," said Packers head coach Forrest Gregg, who was making his debut with Green Bay.

"We had a couple of fumbled snaps and we have to eliminate that," Gregg said. "He had good composure out there. Overall, I was real pleased with his performance."

Wright completed 10 of 15 passes for 119 yards and led the Packers from a 14-7 deficit to a 17-17 tie before giving way to reserve David Whitehurst. Wright also fumbled two snaps from center that were recovered by Dallas.

"I'm just going to take it one day at a time," said Wright. "I'm just trying to get experience and learn about the NFL."

Starting quarterback Lynn Dickey tallied 146 yards on 9-of-15 passing, including a 12-yard touchdown pass to wide receiver John Jefferson for Green Bay's first touchdown, before yielding to Wright in the second quarter.

For Dallas, the first half could have been called "The Danny White Show," leading reporters in the press box to prepare obituaries for the long-running Cowboys "quarterback controversy."

WHITE COMPLETED 11 of 19 passes for 150 yards and one touchdown and directed three scoring drives.

Hogeboom, who entered the game with the score tied at 17-17 in the third quarter, responded by completing 10 of 16 passes for 115 yards. He led a band of second-string players to two fourth quarter touchdowns to win the game, 31-17, and keep the competition for the starting job alive.

"They both looked good," said Landry. "We had a lot of busted plays with Hogeboom but he showed well in taking them in for a score anyway. That's a plug for him.

"(And) White looked good. Green Bay kept most of their first-line players in the game in the second quarter while Danny was working with the second unit, and he still took us in for 3 points in the final two minutes of the half."

Asked if one player had an edge over the other, Landry replied, "I'm not creating edges, OK."

Both players played one quarter with the starters and one with the substitutes.

"I was very pleased with my performance. I had fun out there and I won the game," said a confident Hogeboom, who opened his challenge for the starting quarterback job last year but lost to the veteran White after the second pre-season game.

"I've got a lot of confidence in what I can do and in what the team can do," said White.

Green Bay fullback Jessie Clark led all rushers in the game with 51 yards on 8 carries and one touchdown.

For Dallas, rookie linebacker Eugene Lockhart, whose fierce hits in training camp have earned him the moniker "Mean Gene the Hitting Machine," led all tacklers with 10.

ED "TOO TALL" Jones recovered an Eddie Lee Ivery fumble — one of three Green Bay fumbles — at the Packers' 32 and set up the Cowboys' first score, a 5-yard, first-quarter touchdown run by Tony Dorsett. White completed a 94-yard drive with a 4-yard scoring pass to Ron Springs and Rafael Septien kicked the extra point to make it 14-0.

Green Bay tied the scored with two second-quarter touchdowns. The first was Dickey's scoring pass to Jefferson, and the second was Clark's 11-yard touchdown run.

Field goals by Septien and Green Bay's Eddie Garcia tied the game at 17-17.

Fullback Timmy Newsome scored the tie-breaking touchdown for Dallas with 9:39 to go in the game. Rookie running back Johnnie Salters added the insurance touchdown with 2:35 left on a 3-yard run for the final 31-17 score.

Mary Lou Retton's gold medal efforts have helped put U.S. gymnastics on the map.

Retton sets up new course

By Randy Gray
Copley News Service

LOS ANGELES — Mary Lou Retton not only won the biggest title in women's gymnastics, she ushered in a new course for her sport, according to her coach.

"The butterflies time is over," Bela Karolyi said Sunday at a press conference. "Now you've got to have strong competitors. And she's a little 'dozer."

Karolyi was quick to correct any idea that he was comparing 4-foot-9 Retton to a bulldozer.

"Don't get me wrong," he said. "Look at her. You can see she in no way resembles a 'dozer. She has beautiful, graceful movements.

"BUT WE have had competitors flitting about like butterflies with no athletic movements — and winning medals.

"Now we want people who do gymnastics. That's the name of the game. We need girls who can support the physical aspect of gymnastics. Mary Lou is quick, strong and coordinated."

Retton was asked if she thought she fit her coach's power image.

"Take the floor exercise, for example," she said. "It takes some of both. You have to have 'dance ability,' too. But some people aren't the butterfly type. I'm not the butterfly type. Each person is a little different."

Mary Lou was all smiles, and bubbling, as usual, between winning her all-around gold medal and the individual apparatus competition.

"I'm going to love it," she said, in answer to the question as to how she's going to deal with all the adulation that is sure to come.

"I like the exposure. I think it's neat. I think all the athletes should draw some kind of exposure for all the hard work."

Retton said she has no thoughts of giving up gymnastics for a more normal teenage life. She'll be back in the gym in early September, although there are no official meets on the schedule the rest of this year.

"I'm going to continue on," she said. "I'm only 16 and I have a long way to go.

"I don't miss the normal life. Other girls my age don't have a chance to travel and see the rest of the world like I have. I love what I'm doing. I'm fortunate to have the ability, and the opportunity to use it."

SHE'S NOT the homesick type.

"It's all been worth it," she said. "I had to move away from my family (in Fairmont, W. Va.), but I was so excited, it was easy for me.

"I've had no time for boys. Boys can wait. Not too long, but they can wait."

Retton said the most rewarding thing that has come from her all-around gold medal has been the reaction of the other athletes at the Olympic Village.

"Some of them have stopped me and told me I inspired them to do well. That is really wonderful to hear."

During her competition, she said, she got a big boost from the crowd.

"The crowd helped me 100 percent. When I needed a 10 on the vault to win, the crowd was behind me, and that helped me to do it."

Mary Lou said she will be happy to see more and more girls getting into gymnastics because of her.

"Having the Olympics here in this country is great," she said. "There are so many talented little girls out there to be trained for 1988 or 1992."

"We're on the right trail to build an even more powerful team in 1988," said the former Romanian team coach, the coach of a previous Olympic heroine, Nadia Comaneci.

"Mary Lou is such a hard worker. She never said, 'No, I can't do it' when I asked her to do something different or to put in extra work.

"She was the only one to compete (in the all-around) with no major mistakes, and the only one to make it to all four finals in the apparatus.

"SHE HAD only two years to build up to be an Olympic champion. The last two months, I got the feeling she was going to get it. And I think she had the same feeling."

Mary Lou would go no farther than to say she was confident.

Karolyi said Mary Lou broke the mold of Nadia in style and personality. He said he had to work with two completely different people.

"Nadia never talked much," he said. "She was not open. I communicated with her mainly through eye contact, but I felt I was guiding her precisely in doing it.

"I built up better communication with Mary Lou. She expresses herself, good or bad. And that makes my job easier.

"Both of them are great competitors."

Gymnast Johnson retires after taking bronze medal

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Kathy Johnson, at 24 the oldest member of the U.S. gymnastics team, retired Sunday after winnng a bronze on the balance beam in the Olympic apparatus finals.

The blonde gymnast from Huntington Beach, Calif., also won a silver medal with the U.S. team last Wednesday.

She has worked 13 years to stand on the victor's platform.

"You can imagine the crowd, the lights, the cameras but you can't imagine the feeling," she said.

Tears filled Johnson's eyes as soon as her feet hit the mat on a dismount from the balance beam, where she earned a 9.85 to clinch the bronze.

"I felt very solid. I expected 9.90 or 9.95. But it wasn't the medal, it was that I did it, that I hit the routine," she told reporters.

Sunday night was a comeback for Johnson. In the all-around competition Friday, she fell from the beam and tumbled off the mat in the floor exercises, knocking her from fourth to 10th in the standings.

"I thought it was all over after that but tonight I gained knowledge about myself. I can dig deeper. I didn't give up."

Johnson attributed her fall Friday to her effort to win a perfect mark of 10.

"Tonight I went at it one move at a time. It's like golf. If you stare at the rough you'll hit the ball there. I knew I couldn't worry about falling or I would fall."

Johnson is six years older than the next oldest team member — Julianne McNamara, who finished with a gold on the uneven bars and a silver in floor exercises.

12-year-old rape victim finds attacker two years later

By SCOTT KRAFT
Associated Press Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The air was February cool and filled with drizzle, daylight was fading and a man standing under an elm tree at the corner of a neighborhood park was beckoning to 12-year-old Susie Dixon.

He forced her into his car, drove to an alley and raped her. Then he disappeared into the San Fernando Valley.

For the next two years, two months and two days, Susie, her mother, her father, her four sisters and her brother stalked the quiet streets of the valley.

With Susie's pencil sketch of the brown car and its driver their only clues, they hunted one automobile in a valley of three-car garages and more than a million people. One brown needle in the haystack of Los Angeles.

For 792 days, there were no picnics, no trips to Disneyland, no backyard gardening — only a search that became one family's obsession.

BEFORE IT ENDED, in April 1984, the hunt would consume the family. Susie saw her assailant's face in dreams. Her parents attended the wedding of a stranger in hopes of finding the man who fit the description. They followed cars down dead-end alleys and into driveways. Her sisters, pencils and paper in hand, staked out freeway ramps.

Before it began, the Dixons led a rather ordinary suburban life in their $250,000 chocolate brown house. The home, with a tile roof and three-car garage, sits on the crest of a hill, the brown Santa Susana Mountains visible from the backyard pool.

Frank Dixon's hobby had been his fertile backyard where trees and shrubs produce oranges, lemons, plums, figs, kumquats and pomegranates. Quiet, gray-haired and 54, he owns an investment business in the neighborhood.

Lucy Dixon's life had centered on the family. With six children, and a seventh on the way, she cooked meals, carted youngsters to school and shopping malls, piano lessons and part-time jobs. She is 39, slim, tanned and dark-haired.

All that began to change on Feb. 10, 1982.

Susie, a seventh grader with long dark hair, had stayed late at school to practice flag routines with the drill team. She decided to walk the 2½ miles home.

She passed familiar landmarks — McDonald's, two shopping centers, an Exxon station. At the edge of Mason Park, she saw the man standing under an elm tree. "Tracy," the man called. Then again. "Tracy."

Susie stopped. "That's not my name," she said. "I'm Susie."

"OK, Susie," said the man, now close enough to touch her. "I have a gun and I want you to close your eyes and come with me."

AN HOUR LATER, still carrying her schoolbooks, Susie walked into a supermarket and told clerks what had happened. They called the police.

That night the hunt began.

At their request, and to protect the privacy of the rape victim and her family, the Dixons' first and last names, and the names of other relatives, have been changed here. Their story was verified by Detective Edward Evans, of the Los Angeles Police Department.

In the Dixons' den that night, the clues — everything Susie had told the police — tumbled out. She hadn't seen the license plate, but she sketched the shape of the man's car. It was box-like, she said, and dark brown.

She remembered the interior, too. A slanting armrest. Brown-checked cloth upholstery. A stick shift that had "hairbrushes" beside it.

On Saturday, Susie and her parents drove to a Mazda dealership in nearby Sepulveda. They had decided to try to identify the car.

"It was just a way of doing something," Mrs. Dixon said. "Everybody's advice was just to block it out of our minds and forget it. We just couldn't."

SUSIE RAN FROM car to car while her parents talked to the salesman. The Mazdas and Oldsmobiles on the lot weren't square enough, Susie said.

"Suddenly, it dawned on us," her father said. "It must be a Mercedes."

So they drove back across the valley to Roscoe Avenue, where car dealers stand bumper to bumper. AMC. Volkswagen. Ford. Dodge. Plymouth. Mercedes.

They stopped at J.M. Bess Mercedes-Volvo. In the back of the lot where the used cars are kept, Susie found it.

"That's it! That's it!" she yelled to her father. It wasn't the same color, it didn't have the same interior, but it had the slanted armrest and the "hairbrush" — bristles on both sides of the stick shift.

It wasn't a Mercedes. It was a Volvo.

The Dixons returned five times. They asked the salesman about gear shifts. They asked about colors. They asked about upholstery. They never let on why they wanted to know.

SUSIE FOUND the brown paint in the salesman's catalog. It was not available on newer cars and had only been used for three years, as had the "hairbrush" gear shift.

The upholstery was the key. It had been available only one year — 1980.

"That was more than we had had any hope of getting," Mrs. Dixon said.

They worked on the man's description. He had been wearing dark slacks and a beige jacket with brown elbow patches. The composite, drawn by a police artist with Susie's help, "could have fit a thousand people," Mrs. Dixon said.

The family moved into action.

Mrs. Dixon drove to the park every afternoon at 4. Perhaps, she thought, he would return and try again. Her older daughters, then 14, 16 and 19, sat on the grass beside the car. They usually stayed until dusk.

DIXON WAS KEEPING an eye out for brown Volvos in his business trips in the region, covering an area 120 miles across.

At night, the family would compare notes and decide where to look the next day.

Even at the grocery store, Mrs. Dixon was on the lookout. She studied the men in front of her in line. Every man became a target.

Four months later, another girl was molested by a man fitting the same description at the same park. "We knew we were on the right track," Mrs. Dixon said.

She became a fixture in the park. Police officers patroling in unmarked cars nodded and smiled as they passed her. They knew why she was there.

Summer arrived. A hot summer. The red-yellow smog rolled in over the Hollywood Hills, filling up the valley day after day. The temperature often soared above 100.

Mrs. Dixon, by now five months pregnant, sat sweating in her Chevette, her small children strapped into the back seat.

"I ONCE WANTED TO be the storybook mother, but I had stopped being a good Mommy," Mrs. Dixon said. "My future stopped. I began living day to day."

They used to go to Disneyland two or three times a year, but they stopped going anywhere as a family — except to hunt for the stranger.

ON THE AFTERNOON of April 12, 1984, Mrs. Dixon was at the neighborhood elementary school, two blocks from the park. She and her daughter Mary, by then in first grade, were crossing the street, hand in hand, when a car, going very slowly, passed in front of them.

The first thing Mrs. Dixon saw was a beige jacket, draped over the front seat. Then she noticed the car was a Volvo. The right color. The right year. But she never looked at the driver's face.

"I told myself it was probably just a father picking up his child," she said. But she couldn't let it go. He seemed to be cruising the school.

She raced to her car and followed the man. He made a U-turn and they passed. She made a U-turn and took up the trail again.

THE CAR MADE a second U-turn. So did Mrs. Dixon. When the Volvo made another U-turn on a side street, then another and another, she got excited.

But she needed that license number. With one hand on the wheel, she searched her handbag for a pen and a scrap of paper. She couldn't find either. She panicked.

"Mary, remember this number!" she screamed.

The brown Volvo made another turn — and disappeared.

Mrs. Dixon rushed home. She wasn't sure of the number, but she called the police and reported it anyway.

Then she went back to the school. She pulled out of the driveway, started down the street and saw the brown Volvo coming toward her. He must have seen her Chevette tailing him at the school and followed her home.

"WE PASSED SO CLOSE," she remembered. "His arm was resting on the car door and I could have touched him."

Instead, she looked at his license number and realized she had remembered it wrong. She dug into her handbag. All she could find was a silver envelope, which had contained a department store gift certificate. She carved the number on it with her fingernails.

She returned home and made another call to the police. An all points bulletin was issued. The Dixons began their wait.

That night, the family was excited. "We had one thing that we had never had before — a license number," Mrs. Dixon said. They knew it wouldn't be over until the man was caught. But they had done their job.

A week passed without the police calling. Evans could not find a photograph on file with the driver's license, and the license address was no longer valid.

BUT EXACTLY TWO weeks later, at midnight, the telephone rang. It was Evans. He told the Dixons the man in the brown Volvo was in jail. He had turned himself in when officers "made it known" he was under investigation, Evans said.

Albert M. Alegrete, 33, a salesman from Panorama City in the valley, has pleaded not guilty to 23 felony counts, ranging from kidnapping to child molesting, and is in jail awaiting a preliminary hearing. The charges involve attacks on five girls aged 11 to 15. One of them was Susie.

A week later, Mrs. Dixon found John on his bicycle in the street. She scolded him for going outside the fence.

"Why Mommy?" he asked. "He's in jail now."

Mrs. Dixon looked down the empty street. She thought of children who used to play everywhere, children who now play indoors and behind locked gates.

"Honey," she said, "he's not the only one."

Southern women's image viewed as rights drawback

By PATRICIA A. PAQUETTE
Associated Press Writer

KINGSPORT, Tenn. (AP) — The image of the Southern lady is a myth and has impeded women's rights in the South, says an East Tennessee State University professor who has spent several years researching the subject.

"The myth (is that she) is this vaporous creature who has some supernatural power over men and that she just sort of wallows in leisure and that nonetheless, she's supposed to be helpless and needs male protection," said Dr. Margaret Ripley Wolfe, 36, an associate professor of history.

"The Southern lady of reality was a much more interesting character than she was painted ... The real Southern woman, the mistress of the Southern plantation from which this image supposedly derives, was an extremely hardworking individual in terms of supervising slaves and managing the household."

Many Appalachian women worked on farms or in tobacco fields and "they considered themselves ladies," she said.

"You have an image on one hand that is not reality, but that's the sort of thinking that's perpetuated. Those images are held up as goals to which women should aspire.

"The Southern lady of reality was a much more interesting character than she was painted ... The real Southern woman ... was an extremely hardworking individual ..."

Dr. Margaret Ripley Wolfe

"If one truly aspired to conform to that image, it would limit one's life considerably," Ms. Wolfe said, adding that she doesn't think there is anything wrong with being a homemaker, provided the woman is satisfied and has her own interests.

"There is a lot of mystique that perhaps the Southern woman is different, and that's because of the filmmakers, the Hollywood image, the Scarlett O'Hara image," she said.

Scarlett O'Hara is the heroine in "Gone With The Wind," Margaret Mitchell's novel about life in the South during and after the Civil War.

"This myth of what Southern ladies were has impeded rights for women in the South," she said, noting that only four Southern states ratified the women's suffrage amendment.

"If you're talking about a male-dominated society, if you're talking about one with all these notions of Southern male honor, chivalry, if you're talking about a racist society, and a South that's pretty much dominated by conservative politics, then what is possible for women within that kind of society?" Ms. Wolfe said.

And attitudes toward women haven't changed much in the past 50 to 60 years, "as revealed in voting patterns at the state legislative level," she said. The South as a bloc has "pretty much opposed" the Equal Rights Amendment, she said.

Women's rights organizers will have to work harder for grassroots support in the South than in other parts of the country if ERA is to succeed, she said.

Ms. Wolfe has a doctorate in urban history and is writing a book about Kingsport. Having grown up in nearby Hawkins County, she said she became interested in the image of the Southern woman because of her Southern heritage.

"Several years ago, I began taking a look at this image," she said. "And then I started asking myself, what happened? Did a schism occur? Did women manage to break out of that image?"

Although she emphasizes that she isn't a women's historian, Ms. Wolfe has written many articles on Southern women. Her book will examine the roles of Southern women in the 20th century, especially the period between the world wars.

"I'm studying how Southern women began to create some kind of public lives for themselves, how they began to extricate themselves from some of this imagery of the Southern lady, how they became involved in reform crusades — not only to help themselves, but to help blacks, to help laborers in the South," she said.

Many of the Southern radicals in the 1920s and 1930s were women who began working through their church organizations, she said.

"They were very important in redesigning the South, sort of turning it around," she said.

DIET CENTER®

Dear DietCenter, I am 7 years old. I just finished the Diet Center program. I lost 35¾ pounds and 66½ inches. I can do my school work better. I can dance better. I can run faster. And now I like myself.

Kristin Wameling

Sherry Wameling writes . . .

I am Kristin Wameling's mother. Last April, she started the Diet Center Program. Kristin is now a very different little girl in many ways. She lost her weight and inches, but the rewards go deeper than just reducing. She has even improved her school work.

Now, the smiles and outgoing personality can't even be measured. The kids on the school bus don't call her "Fatso," and she has her lifetime dream: designer jeans and pretty outfits.

During this time, I also lost 100 pounds. Now I can truly say we are a Diet Center Family. So thanks for letting us accomplish what no other diet could do . . . we're a healthy, new family! We love you!

DEAR ABBY

Being chaste may mean not being chased

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I'm a 54-year-old financially independent professional woman who has had many suitors. The list includes a film producer, a psychiatrist, a novelist, a banker and a chief of staff in a large hospital. I enjoy the company of men, but I am celibate. My problem: These relationships end when I tell them I'm celibate.

These men and I have found each other mutually interesting. I wonder why they don't continue seeing me and get their sex elsewhere. I'd like to meet some gay men or celibates like myself, of equal social position, who enjoy female companionship. Where do I find them? — NOT FRUSTRATED IN L.A.

DEAR NOT: Try the Gay Community Services Center or the Catholic clergy. But why not give sex another chance? You could wind up happily married to a film producer, a psychiatrist, a novelist, a banker, or a chief of staff in a large hospital.

DEAR ABBY: I see by your column that the U.S. Postal Service goofed when it put the wrong colors on the rump and tail feathers of the American bald eagle. However, it doesn't make a whole lot of difference if the feathers are dark or white.

Now let me tell you about a more serious mistake made by our government that has yet to be corrected on a national scale: I wonder how many people know that the first battle of the American Revolution took place on Oct. 10, 1774, at Point Pleasant, which is now in the state of West Virginia. This was six months and eight days BEFORE "the shots heard 'round the world" were fired at Lexington and Concord.

I am very much annoyed that our history books still state that the opening battle of the American Revolution took place at Lexington and Concord on April 19, 1775.

Can you help me and other proud West Virginians to set the record straight once and for all? — FURIOUS IN WEST VIRGINIA

DEAR FURIOUS: This historical gaffe is strictly "for the birds." (Here we go again!) May I respectfully suggest that you enlist the help of your U.S. senator, Robert C. Byrd.

DEAR ABBY: You just saved my summer! You had a letter in your column about the duck hunters using Avon's Skin-So-Soft as a mosquito repellent. I have always used that product, but this summer I didn't order any, and now I know why the bugs are having a feast every day on my person!

In past years when I used Skin-So-Soft I never had trouble with mosquitos. I never knew it was an insect repellent, but that's exactly what it did for me. I've already ordered a bottle.

Thanks a million. — GRACE IN SACO, MAINE

DEAR GRACE: You're welcome. (P.S.: For the record, I have no stock in Avon Co.)

DEAR ABBY: "Downhearted" complained because she and her husband had not had sexual relations in seven months. She wrote, "I know he's not cheating on me because he never goes anywhere except to work, and then he comes directly home."

I'm retired now, but I used to work with a middle-aged woman who for years would meet her married lover at a sleazy little hotel every day on her lunch hour. — CANADIAN

Shazalynn Cavin concentrates on her movements and balance during Ballet Midland's two-week workshop at Bingham Dance Center.

Instructor Rudy Jenkins is caught in mid-movement as he demonstrates a pirouette for students attending the workshop.

For communities tucked away from the major ballet centers, summer workshops which bring in guest instructors provide students an avenue to the larger world of dance.

Armed with a repertoire of works dating back to the 1800s such as "Giselle," 1841; "Sleeping Beauty," 1890; and "Swan Lake," 1895; today's instructors need dancing as well as teaching experience to pass along to students the skills necessary to become a dancer in this highly competitive field.

Ballet Midland, formerly Permian Civic Ballet, is completing the second week of a two-week workshop featuring guest instructors Rudy Jenkins, currently a freelance instructor who taught at his own studio in Houston for 24 years after performing as a dancer for a number of years; Penny Hatch, principal dancer with Florida Ballet; Nicolas Pacana, premiere danseur with Atlanta Ballet; and former Midlander Susan Clark, principal dancer with Atlanta Ballet.

Jenkins, Miss Hatch and Pacana took time between classes to talk about teaching their first love — ballet.

During his 24 years of teaching five classes a day to a total of 124 to 130 students a year, Jenkins would instill in his students as much history of dance as he could. However, he kept his talking to a minimum.

"When you're working on technique, you really don't have a chance to say too much. One teacher in New York, (Maria) Swoboda, told me that a teacher who talks too much is a bad teacher.

"The reason is that you have to stay warm all the time and a person can only accept a certain amount of criticisms and use them. So I usually give them one or two things at a time as I see they need it, and I don't lecture or give a lot of things for them to hear."

Although ballet has been his life for more than 30 years, Jenkins does not watch or attend ballet performances as he once did.

"I saw ballet when we had such wonderful people — stars — and everybody was different. Now, they're pretty much the same. They all are great technicians, but you can't tell one from the other.

"I went when there was (Alexandra) Danilova, (Nathalie) Krassovska, (Dame Alicia) Markova, (Tamara) Toumanova, (Mia) Slavenska and (Tatiana) Riabouchinska. All of these people were wonderful and all different. You could go and see six Swan Lakes because six different people were doing it."

Teaching expression is Jenkins' greatest concern in ballet today.

"You tell the students, 'Don't look nothing. Look anything but nothing.' And you still don't get anything in the expressions. I noticed here, though, they smile more readily and react quicker than they do even in Houston or in Vermont (Jenkins just finished guest teaching at Svetlova Ballet Academy, Dorset, Vt.)."

Ballet style varies among the schools in different countries. American style is energetic and fast; British is more reserved; Russian is exuberant, forceful and delivered with more freedom; French is chi-chi and decorative; Italian is more stylized; and the Danish excel in high jumps.

Memorial donations may be made to the First Methodist Church of McCamey.

Man charged in shooting death released on bond

By LAWRENCE BUDD
Staff Writer

ODESSA — The 18-year-old Hispanic man charged with the weekend shooting death of 15-year-old Irineo Bersosa Duran was free this morning on $10,000 bond.

Christopher Phillip Lopez, the 18-year-old brother of one of those killed in late June in the continuing feud between southside Hispanic families, was released after posting $10,000 bond.

He is charged with the murder of Duran, who was riding in a car with others reportedly linked to the feud, when Lopez allegedly opened fired on the passing vehicle about 1:15 a.m., Saturday.

Duran reportedly had no involvement in the continuing battle involving the southside families. He was pronounced dead at the scene, having suffered several gunshot wounds including at least one to the head.

The shooting occurred in the south Ector County development known as South Ranchito. The car carrying Duran was fired on at the intersection of Atwood and Benito early Saturday morning. A carbine taken into custody by the sheriff's department is the alleged murder weapon.

Lopez is the brother of Ronald Don Lopez, who was one of two 19-year-old men slain June 23 on a southside street. Also killed in this exchange was Juan Moreno, 19, with 15-year-old Jessie Hernandez suffering stab wounds.

Brothers Jose Perez Mendoza, 29, and David Perez Mendoza, 35, have been in jail since the June shootings down the street from their home on Autumn St. Bond for Jose Mendoza was set at $20,000 for Moreno's shooting, while David Mendoza's has been set at $100,000 for both slayings.

The June shootings have been linked by police to a beating a younger Mendoza brother suffered at the hands of a group allegedly including the older Lopez several days before. Reports from the beating indicate Johnny Mendoza, 17, was beaten after Lopez asked him if his family was responsible for the May 27 gunfire into the Lopez home which wounded the mother, 37-year-old Jessie Lopez.

District Judge Gene Ater said at a pre-trial hearing to the Mendoza's murder trial Friday that a metal detector would be placed at the single entrance to the courtroom during the trial and that friends and enemies of the Mendozas would be instructed to sit on opposite sides of the courtroom.

Boy mauled by lion undergoes rabies shots

DALLAS (AP) — An 8-year-old Garland boy who was mauled by a 70-pound mountain lion at Big Bend National Park underwent a series of rabies shots and was in good condition, Parkland Memorial Hospital officials said.

David Vaught said he prayed when the mountain lion clasped its jaws around his head and pinned him to the ground Thursday while walking with his family in the park, located in far West Texas.

"I didn't cry," David Vaught said from his bed at Parkland on Saturday. "I just put my head between my knees and said prayers."

The mountain lion suspected of mauling the boy was killed Friday and lab tests completed Saturday showed human hairs in the animal's stomach and determined the big cat was not rabid, said park ranger Bob Andrew.

But the boy's parents, Cris and Kimetha Brown, said doctors told them the tests might not have detected the almost always fatal disease in its earliest stages.

"The cougar attacked my son. That was one in a million," Mrs. Brown said. "It did that to my child, and if there is a one in 500 chance that he could get the virus, I'm sure not going to risk it."

The attack was the first known injury resulting from a lion attack since the park opened in 1941, said Bob Huggins, a National Park Service officer.

The boy was in fair condition at Parkland Hospital late Sunday after receiving three rabies shots Sunday morning, said hospital administrator Kyle Raffaniello.

She said Vaught was scheduled to receive another shot this morning before being transferred to another Garland hospital to be closer to his home.

"Right now he's sore and he's scared. He just keeps reliving the whole thing," Mrs. Brown said. "He's in a lot of pain, and of course, those rabies shots are no fun, but he's OK."

Texas professor organizes pro-evolution book lobby

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A radiology professor claims to have organized 70 scientists from 23 Texas colleges and universities to lobby the state Textbook Review Committee to urge the recommendation of books that adequately address the theory of evolution.

Dr. Martin L. Meltz of San Antonio said his network of educators has focused on exposing flaws in the arguments raised in the past by Mel and Norma Gabler of Longview, nationally known evolution critics.

During public hearings last month, the Gablers argued that some science books to be purchased for the 1985-86 school year did not adequately address the Biblical theory of creationism.

His group has found flaws in the Gablers' research, Meltz said Saturday.

Meltz said the Gablers provided erroneous information to support their argument against scientific evidence that Meltz said supports the theory of evolution.

"In the past, the Gablers were able to get away with this because scientists were not involved in the book review process," Meltz told the San Antonio Light.

"That absence is no longer the case, and if the Gablers want to continue to have impact on the textbook review process, they're going to have to stick to the honest facts, and do a good job."

Meltz said he has submitted extensive comments on the controversy to the textbook committee, which is preparing a list of books recommended for use in Texas public schools.

Odessa woman hospitalized in van-pedestrian mishap

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — A 31-year-old woman was listed in stable condition this morning, suffering from injuries she sustained Saturday afternoon when a van reportedly pushed her and two other pedestrians through the window of an Odessa clothing store.

Freda Ann Milan, 31, Odessa, was said to be stable condition at Medical Center Hospital, where she was receiving treatment for multiple fractures to various parts of her body, cuts and abrasions.

Ms. Milan, three-year-old Jessie Ray Milan, and nine-year-old David John Cunha were injured in front of the Anthony's Department Store at 3138 Andrews Highway when the 1981 Ford van driven by Eva B. Adkisson, 38, Odessa, jumped the curb and pushed them through the store's plate glass window.

Ms. Adkisson, who suffered cuts and bruises, told police she mistakenly thought the van was in park when she applied the gas pedal to keep the air-conditioner running before entering the store.

The younger Milan, who lived at the same residence as the woman still in the hopsital, and Cunha were treated and released. Ms. Adkisson was cited for failure to control speed to avoid an accident with a fixed object.

Midlander killed in auto accident

From Staff Reports

IVAN — A Midland man was killed and two Odessans were hospitalized when their vehicle rolled over near here about 7:30 p.m. Sunday.

Pronounced dead at Stephens County Hospital in Breckenridge was 25-year-old Joel Glenn Wigginton of 813 Devonian.

In serious condition at Hendrick Medical Center in Abilene were 25-year-old James Stixner of Odessa and Thomas Wade Harrill, no age available, also of Odessa.

According to the Department of Public Safety, the men were westbound on FM 1148 about seven miles west of Ivan when their vehicle left the road and overturned, ejecting all three occupants.

It was not immediately determined who was driving the vehicle. Wigginton's body was taken to the Melton Funeral Home in Breckenridge.

Police seek man in motel holdup

From Staff Reports

Police are looking for a man who held up the Best Western Motel, 1000 W. Interstate 20, and got away with an undisclosed amount of cash late Saturday night.

A motel employee told officers a black man armed with a chrome-plated pistol walked in and demanded the money about 11:30 p.m. Saturday. No other details were immediately available.

Cars' tires slashed in motel parking lot

From Staff Reports

In complaints to city police, an employee of the Apollo Motel at 3307 W. Front said tires on five vehicles parked on the motel lot early Sunday morning were slashed. Damage was estimated at $2,000.

Doug Pawnell of 5107 San Antonio told officers a battery, tools and stereo equipment worth in excess of $2,000 were stolen from his vehicle while it was parked at his residence Sunday.

And a vacant house at 1307 E. Oak was reported broken into and $3,550 worth of household appliances was taken. The burglary occurred sometime in the past two months.

PIROUETTES

To teach style and technique, Miss Hatch says she was "trained with a combination of different things and that's what I use. All my teachers have been different combinations — I had one teacher that was pure Royal Academy and I found that sort of stale — so I try and take the best of what I've learned and combine it."

All three teachers have had training in other dance forms, but prefer teaching and performing ballet.

After receiving much of his classical training at the University of Houston, where he worked with Roland Guerard, Paul Stephenson and Alexander Kotchetovsky; Ballet Theatre Workshop, New York City, where he worked with Lucia Chase, William Dollar and Robert Joffrey; and Festival Ballet, London, where he worked with Anton Dolin; Jenkins spent from 1954 to 1959 working in musical comedy and revues. He danced in "Carousel," New York City Center, where he worked with Agnes de Mille; in the national touring company of "Music Man" with Forrest Tucker; and at the Moulin Rouge, Los Angeles, in the Patricia Morrison Revue; as well as dancing in a character company, Lazowsky's, in New York City and, performing on various national television shows, such as the Imogene Coca Show and the Fred Waring Show.

Jenkins, who says he was fortunate to have excellent teachers, didn't begin dancing until he was 22. He chose ballet and it remains his first love, he says, "because I loved dancing to classical music."

An unwilling student at 6, Miss Hatch had changed her mind by the time she was 12. "I really knew that was what I wanted to do whether it was going to be teaching or dancing," she says. "It's always changing just like any art form. It's wonderful to do things that are really classical and really old. And it's exciting when you're creating new things."

"I like the feeling of it," says Pacana, who is from Cebu City, Phillippines. "Ballet has so many movements, that's why I enjoy doing it."

Since beginning lessons at the age of 16, Pacana has danced with several companies including Boston Ballet, where he was the second lead during the three years Rudolf Nureyev guested with the company. He was also among the dancers who represented the United States to the 1980 Moscow Ballet Competition.

For the young, who think they might want a career in ballet, all had suggestions about what it takes to get there.

Jenkins says, "I tell all the parents not to push the child; let the child decide. And I never have taken them to New York or done anything like that because the person who is going to do it has to be so determined that they're going to do it anyway. It always has to come from the child. It's like (Galina) Ulanova says, 'Talent is work.' You can be very talented and be lazy and you won't get anywhere. It's work."

"It's important that you get good training as far as technique," says Miss Hatch. "It's also really important that you get good training as far as discipline because the lifestyle of a dancer is very, very disciplined."

"Nowadays the boys start dancing when they're 5 or 6," Pacana says. "Before they reach their 20s, they have to be in a company, if they're lucky. It also depends on hard work, who you trained under and your stamina."

Too many dancers and too few jobs equal a highly competitive ballet world.

"You're very lucky to ever get a job," says Miss Hatch, who took time out from dancing to get a college degree.

To become a great dancer takes, Jenkins says, "Hard work and a good technique, personality, style and quality. And I always prefer quality over quantity."

Ballet dancers' skills result of hours of hard training

GEORGIA TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

Although ballet, like other dance forms, may tell a story, express a mood or reflect the music, a ballet dancer's technique and special skills differ greatly from those of other dancers. It takes years of weeks spent in hours of training for dancers to perform gracefully and without any sign of strain or effort the many ballet movements which are unnatural for the body.

It was not always so.

Training students for professional careers through dance schools and workshops, such as the one currently being presented by Ballet Midland at Bingham Dance Center, was unheard of 500 years ago.

Historians trace the beginnings of ballet to the cultural center of the Renaissance — Italy in the 1400s. Italian city-states had become rival art centers as well as competing commercial centers. As a form of competition, dukes staged costly and fancy entertainments which included dance performances.

The dancers were not professionals; they were noblemen and noblewomen of a duke's court who danced to please their ruler and to stir the admiration and envy of his rivals.

This form of entertainment was taken to France in 1547, when a member of the ruling family of Florence, Catherine de Medicis, became queen of France. It was her chief musician, Balthazar de Beaujoylulx, whom ballet historians credit with staging the first ballet, "Ballet Comique de la Reine," a 5½-hour spectacle performed in 1581 in honor of a royal wedding.

Paris became the capital of the ballet world through "Ballet Comique de la Reine" and in 1661, King Louis XIV of France, who loved to dance himself, established the Royal Academy of Dancing.

However, the dances performed then share little in common with the classical ballet seen today. Dancers then used masks and wore bulky costumes and wigs to illustrate or explain a plot or theme.

Change came when, in 1760, French choreographer Jean Georges Noverre urged dancers to express these things using only their bodies and faces.

Then, during the early 1800s with the coming of the Romantic Period, ballet took on many of the characteristics of what is now considered classical (stressing purity and harmony of design) ballet.

Female dancers learned to dance on their toes. Romantic ballet presented women as ideal and, for the first time, gave them greater importance than men. The first romantic ballet, "La Sylphide," staged in 1832 by Italian choreographer Filippo Taglioni, set a new style in costuming for women — a light skirt which ended halfway between the knees and ankles with arms, neck and shoulders bare.

Once they were freed from bulky costumes, ballet dancers seemed to defy the law of gravity as they floated through the air in long, slow leaps.

Toxicologists involved in probe of San Antonio hospital

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Two toxicologists instrumental in convicting nurse Genene Jones in the death of a Kerrville child are now involved in investigations of infant deaths at a San Antonio hospital.

In a telephone interview with the San Antonio Light Saturday, Dr. Fredrick Reiders of Philadelphia confirmed he and Dr. Bo Holmstedt, a Swedish toxicologist, are working on suspicious infant death cases at Medical Center Hospital in San Antonio.

Reiders said he was working on the case with investigators from the Bexar County district attorney's office, but declined further comment, the Light reported.

"I have been told by the district attorney's office not to comment on the case in any shape or form," Reiders said. "I will say that I'm involved in the case."

Kerr County District Attorney Ron Sutton relied heavily on expert testimony from Holmstedt and Reiders to convict Ms. Jones, a licensed vocational nurse, in the murder of 15-month-old Chelsea Ann McClellan.

The trial, which resulted in a 99-year prison sentence for Ms. Jones, was moved to Georgetown from Kerrville on a change of venue.

Ms. Jones later was indicted by a Bexar County grand jury, which accused her of injuring a newborn by injecting the child with the blood thinner heparin. The alleged incident occurred while Ms. Jones was a nurse in Medical Center's pediatric intensive care unit. No trial date has been set.

Her indictment was part of a massive continuing 19-month investigation of infant deaths at Medical Center Hospital between 1978 and 1982.

July grocery prices jump three percent

By COTTEN TIMBERLAKE
AP Business Writer

Grocery prices jumped 3 percent in July, according to The Associated Press' monthly marketbasket survey, but economists called the rise "an anomaly" and said it was not likely to become a trend.

Most of the overall increase came from large jumps in pork chop and butter prices and despite a continuing decline in the price of eggs.

"It's an anomaly," said Michael K. Evans, an economist who heads an economic forecasting firm in Washington, D.C. "I would still look for inflation to remain fairly moderate for the second half of the year. I would not expect sustained increases," he said.

Donald Ratajczak, an economist at Georgia State University in Atlanta, said: "I don't think this is a trend. I'd be surprised if you don't register a decline next month."

He added, "I do not think you'll see this reflected in the CPI (the government's Consumer Price Index). I think in the CPI there will be very moderate increases in food prices."

The marketbasket bill rose in 11 cities an average of 4.4 percent. It declined in only one city, Los Angeles, by 8.8 percent. In Salt Lake City, the bill was unchanged.

In the previous month, the overall bill rose 0.65 percent.

A look at the overall number of items in the AP survey showed more items rose during July than during June. Here are the percentages of increases and decreases:

	June	July
Up	27	29
Down	22	20
Unchanged	47	48
Unavailable	4	3

Pork chop prices jumped an average of 14.9 percent.

Chuck Levitt, a livestock analyst with Shearson Lehman-American Express Inc. in Chicago, said, "This year, the decline in slaughter seasonally was one of the sharpest in recent years because of the liquidation of hogs that occurred in the aftermath of last summer's drought."

The drought raised the cost of feed, prompting farmers to slaughter their livestock, he said, and by June 1 the national inventory of hogs and pigs was down 9 percent from a year earlier. The number of hogs slaughtered in July was down 14 percent from a year ago, he said.

The price of butter jumped an average 4.6 percent.

Levitt explained: "The government at the end of last year devised what they call a paid-diversion program on dairy. What this program did was tell the dairy farmer that, 'If you slaughter your cows, don't milk them (beforehand). We will pay you for the milk they would have produced if you didn't slaughter."

He added: "They started to slaughter their dairy cows and what it did was cut into the production of dairy products through the spring into the summer period. If they have less milk they may keep it as milk."

The price of milk tended downward during July after tending upward in the previous month. Levitt said the recent decline might be seasonal, with less people drinking milk in July. Ratajczak said milk prices might increase next month.

Egg prices, continuing their decline, fell an average 3.8 percent, not including Detroit, where the price of eggs has been abnormally high. They fell an average 2.9 percent in the previous month.

The Associated Press drew up a random list of 15 commonly purchased food and non-food items, checked the price at one supermarket in each of 13 cities on March 1, 1973, and has rechecked on or about the start of each succeeding month. One item, chocolate chip cookies, was dropped from the list several years ago because the manufacturer discontinued the package size used in the survey.

No attempt was made to weight the AP survey results according to population density or in terms of what percentage of a family's actual grocery outlay each item represents.

The day of the week on which the check was made varied depending on the month. Standard brands and sizes were used when available.

Conrail buyer may be picked

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration, nearing the end of its search to find a buyer for Conrail, has narrowed the prospective purchasers to two bidders, the Alleghany Corp., and a group headed by hotelier J. Willard Marriott, according to government sources.

Transportation Secretary Elizabeth Dole is said to be pushing for a decision on a buyer, which will be sent to Congress for final approval, by the end of the week. Several sources said a selection could come within days, although critics have said the sale is moving too quickly.

Department spokesmen refused to comment on the Conrail discussions except to say that no decision has been made and that all six bidders announced several weeks ago are still under consideration.

Conrail, formed by the government in 1976 after the bankruptcy of six railroads left the Northeast without rail service, is the country's fifth largest railroad in terms of freight revenue and miles of operation. It has tracks in 15 states from New England to Virginia and as far west as Missouri.

Last month, the Transportation Department received offers from 14 bidders, but that number quickly was pared to six.

In recent negotiations, the Transportation Department pressed its demand for $1.2 billion and various tax concessions for the railroad and outlined a list of demands to assure Conrail remains intact and is not resold for a quick profit.

Negotiations were said to be intense between the government and representatives of both Alleghany and the Marriott group. Additionally, labor representatives are playing a critical role, pressing demands with both bidders.

"The bidder that labor picks is the one that is going to get this thing," said one congressional source who has kept close tabs on the Conrail discussions.

He and the other sources spoke under the condition that they not be identified by name.

A proposal by unions representing Conrail workers still is on the table, according to these sources, but remains little more than "a negotiating tool" after a key investor, the Tische family of the Loews Corp., backed out of the deal.

The unions want at least 30 percent ownership in the new Conrail — up from 15 percent labor ownership now — three of 10 seats on its board of directors, provisions for job security and profit sharing.

Those demands have prompted L. Stanley Crane, Conrail chairman, to express concern in discussions with members of Congress that labor may be given too much power in the new Conrail, threatening the ability of management to keep Conrail profitable.

But even with Crane's support, the sources said it may be difficult to win congressional approval this year since Congress is expected to be out of session much of the time because of the election.

HNG sells subsidiary

HOUSTON — Houston Natural Gas Corp. has completed the sale of its Liquid Carbonic Corp. subsidiary to CBI Industries Inc., for $407 million cash, plus the assumption by CBI of certain liabilities.

The two companies earlier had signed a definitive sales agreement, subject to certain conditions which now have been met.

The consummation of the agreement represents a significant step in HNG's reorganization program announced in March. The restructuring plan involves the sale of the company's industrial gases business and the disposition of most or all of its marine and coal businesses. Proceeds realized will be used by the company to expand its principal businesses of natural gas transmission and sales and oil and gas exploration and production and for other corporate purposes.

St. Regis, Champion merger applauded

NEW YORK (AP) — The proposed $1.8 billion merger of Champion International Corp. and St. Regis Corp. is receiving favorable reviews on Wall Street so far as the fit is concerned.

The merger would create the largest forest-products concern in the United States. Together, Champion and St. Regis would have posted 1983 revenue of $7.03 billion, exceeding the $6.47 billion in revenue recorded by the current industry leader, Georgia-Pacific Corp.

Combining St. Regis and Champion also would create the largest U.S. paper producer, and it is likely the resulting company would challenge International Paper Co. as the biggest owner-controller of U.S. timberland with about 7 million acres, analysts said.

St. Regis, based in New York, agreed to the merger this past week to avoid an unwelcome takeover bid by publisher Rupert Murdoch, who threatened to launch a tender offer to raise his 5.6 percent stake in St. Regis to 50.1 percent. Murdoch said Friday he would not pursue his bid in light of the Champion-St. Regis agreement.

Champion proposed paying $55.50 a share for as much as 60 percent of St. Regis' common stock and $81.03 for each of its 2.1 million preferred shares. Each remaining St. Regis common shares would be exchanged for 2.85 Champion common shares.

The companies' fit is considered favorable because they overlap in few sectors of the forest-products market. Champion Chairman Andrew Sigler has said their paper operations in particular are diverse, with Champion specializing in printing and copier paper and St. Regis specializing in coated magazine paper and newsprint.

Dollar declines in trading; Gold higher

LONDON (AP) — The dollar declined against all major currencies except the French franc in early trading today. Gold prices rose.

In Tokyo, where trading ends before it begins in Europe, the dollar slide more than two yen to close at 241.45 yen compared with Friday's closing 243.85 yen.

A dealer in the Japanese capital attributed the decline to the dollar's weekend fall in New York, where traders sold dollars believing that U.S. interest rates had peaked.

SEC asked to study Albertson's

A shareholder group asked the Securities and Exchange Commission Monday to investigate what it said was the failure of Albertson's Inc., the nation's eighth-largest supermarket chain, to report that an Idaho bank owns more than 5 percent of the company's stock.

The Food and Allied Trades Department of the AFL-CIO, which is a stockholder in the Boise, Idaho-based company, filed a complaint with the federal agency claiming that Albertson's failed to disclose in its 1984 proxy that Idaho First National Bank is the owner of 7 percent of 34.85 million outstanding shares. The SEC requires parties owning 5 percent or more of a company's stock to file a disclosure form with the agency.

In a letter to John M. Fedders, the SEC's director of enforcement, Robert F. Harbrant, president of the union group, said, "The issues raised in our complaint have much wider implications" than a single disclosure error.

An SEC spokesman said that anagency typically does not acknowledge or comment on the receipt of such a letter or complaint. In addition, the agency's staff must conduct an examination of facts before recommending that the SEC begin a formal investigation.

Executives of Albertson's in Boise could not be reached for comment on the complaint, which was announced late Monday. Albertson's operates 109 stores in California.

The union group recently solicited proxies from Albertson's shareholders in an unsuccessful attempt to force management to amend the company's bylaws to permit a simple majority vote of Albertson's stockholders to remove the entire board of directors. The current requirement is 75 percent.

In calling for an investigation, the Food and Allied Trades Department claimed that Albertson's should have disclosed the relationship between Idaho First National Bank and its Boise-based holding company, Moore Financial Group Inc.

Commodities see low prices

NEW YORK(AP)—The futures market is paying American farmers a wry compliment this year: they're the best producers in the world. But the back side of the compliment is that the market is saying so with low prices.

Prices have been falling steadily since early July, and the message for farmers is that they're doing a good job — perhaps too good a job for their own well being.

The price of the corn contract for delivery in December has fallen to $2.86 a bushel on Friday from $3.12¾ a bushel at the start of July. Soybeans for delivery in November fell during the same period to $6.31½ a bushel from $7.28.

Corn prices have fallen back to the same level of June 1983, when the markets were fully aware that the nation's surplus of corn was more than 3 billion bushels.

That was before the worst drought in the last 50 years and the most extensive crop production ever run by the government. This year the corn surplus — before crops are harvested — is expected to be 500 million bushels, barely a month's supply.

Stock market gains

NEW YORK (AP) — Stock prices rose sharply in heavy trading today as last week's record-breaking rally kept rolling ahead.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, up 87.46 points last week, climbed 17.23 to 1,219.30 by noontime today.

Gainers outnumbered losers by more than 4 to 1 among New York Stock Exchange-listed issues.

Volume for the first two hours of trading on the Big Board totaled 98.90 million shares. In Friday's unprecedented activity, 119.57 million shares changed hands by noontime.

Analysts said many investors who had been caught off guard by the market's sudden rally last week were scrambling to buy stocks.

They noted that money managers at many investing institutions were fearful of missing out on any further gains in the market.

The rally got its start as a belief spread on Wall Street that long-term interest rates had passed their peak and were headed lower. That view has been reinforced by a series of recent statistics signaling an apparent slowing of the pace of economic expansion.

Cotton

NEW YORK (AP) — Cotton futures No. 2 were lower at midday dealings today.

The average price for strict low mid- dling 1 & 1-16 inch spot cotton advanced 143 points to 65.46 cents a pound Friday for the eight markets, according to the New York Cotton Exchange.

Midday prices were $2.75 to $4.55 a bale lower than previous close. Oct 67.70, Dec 68.33, Mar 69.95, May 71.15, Jul 71.75, Oct b71.50, Dec b71.00.

BUSINESS MIRROR

Myths about housing don't seem to die or fade away

By JOHN CUNNIFF
Business Analyst

NEW YORK (AP) — Like harmless old ghosts in the attic, housing myths seem to be comfortably ensconced and not likely to fade away.

There is, for example, the widely held notion that housing prices are high because lumber and other materials cost so much, and because labor charges have soared.

It isn't so. In 1949, labor and materials made up 69 percent of the cost of a new single-family house. By 1969, according to the National Association of Home Builders, the percentage had fallen to 55, and by 1982 to 45.

It is true that zoning requirements, and sometimes pressure from producing companies, keeps certain components from being replaced by less expensive materials, but all in all there has been a relative decline in materials costs.

In fact, new and usually better materials make up the typical new house. Twenty years ago houses were still being built with little regard to energy efficiency. Today, the typical new house has 2,500 square feet of insulation.

Labor, as a percentage of total costs, has been kept down by various factors, one of the more important being the improvements in productivity. Many components are now factory made, for example, rather than assembled on site.

The real culprits in today's housing costs are financing and land.

In 1949, financing accounted for only 5 percent of the total cost. By 1982 it had tripled to 15 percent. In the same time span the share attributable to land rose to 24 percent from 11 percent.

Tremendous confusion also exists about the prices at which houses sell, often because one source uses the average price of new housing and another source cites a median price.

At a time when a wealthy individual might erect a million-dollar waterfront home while less financially fortunate people settle for a $50,000 backwater cottage, the average misleads. In this instance, the average would be $525,000.

On a nationwide basis the average price might now be over $100,000, but the more meaningful median price is between $75,000 and $80,000. Last year the median was $75,300. In March of this year it was $78,700.

Since the median sits in the middle — half the total higher and the same percentage lower — it means there still exists a good deal of affordable new housing, in spite of warnings from government officials and real estate agents.

Increasingly popular, for example, are small houses at relatively low prices that offer immediate shelter and the possibility of expansion through the owner's sweat equity, or physical efforts.

Shell finishing is also gaining increasing acceptance. In some instances the housing company finances and erects a shell for the buyer, and then finances all the interior components as the owner completes them himself.

No matter how you calculate the expenses, to compare today's housing prices with those of yesterday can be misleading, simply because the typical house today is far different from that of yesterday.

In 1983, 70 percent of new single family homes were equipped with central air conditioning. In 1972, only 43 percent were so equipped. More of today's houses have fireplaces and swimming pools too. And they have more living space.

But they don't have attics.

Pregnancy no immunity against breast cancer

Dear Dr. Solomon: Is it possible for a woman to get breast cancer while she is pregnant? If it is possible, what can be done about it that will help the mother without harming the baby? — Ms. D.A., Tucson, Ariz.

Dear Ms. A.: Pregnancy does not provide immunity against the development of breast cancer and the earlier it is diagnosed, the better the prognosis.

If a woman does develop breast cancer while she is pregnant, efforts are made to treat the condition to the greatest extent possible while avoiding any harm to the baby. This includes the use of chemotherapy.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I'm a do-it-yourselfer, and a good one if I do say so. But I know that no matter how careful I am when I use glue in my carpentry or other work, that at some time or other the piece is going to work loose. That is why I was surprised to read that glue is used in hip replacement operations. Don't doctors realize that the cement will eventually loosen up and the thing will have to be done over? — Mr. G.W., Stamford, Conn.

Dear Mr. W.: Physicians are all too aware that the cement used in hip replacement procedures will eventually break down, causing the implant to loosen. Until recently, however, the alternative was not to do the operation at all, and I don't know of any patient who would have considered this a satisfactory alternative.

Now, however, a new procedure that does not rely on cement may be possible. With the new technique the prothesis is constructed so that the surrounding tissue grows into it, making it almost a part of the body.

One disadvantage of the new procedure is that it takes time for this growth to take place. Therefore, a patient's activities may have to be limited for as long as six months after the surgery, compared with the three months that is ordinarily required when cement is used.

For Selma, Baltimore, Md.: Patients with rheumatoid arthritis may benefit from techniques that enable them to feel more in control of their disease and, therefore, of their lives. This, in turn, may help them function more adequately at home and on the job.

The techniques include biofeedback and relaxaton training, among others. For example, an ability to achieve deep relaxation may help a patient deal with the pain and disability that are associated with rheumatoid arthritis.

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

Hang on to municipal bonds

By BILL DOYLE

Q. A friend told me that, because I am on Social Security, I will have to pay federal income tax next April 15 on the interest I receive from my municipal bonds. I own $27,000 of municipals and was planning to buy another $15,000 because the interest from such bonds has always been tax free.

My income is more than $40,000 a year. Should I sell my municipal bonds and put the money in bank savings certificates and U.S. Treasury securities?

A. Not unless you're concerned about the safety of your particular bonds. Despite the well-documented reneging of interest payments on $2.25 billion by Washington Public Power Supply System and some other municipal bond defaults, most such bonds are considered reasonably safe investments.

By making the switch you ask about, you would have to pay income tax on all the interest you would receive from savings certificates and Treasury securities. You won't have to pay tax on all your municipal bond interest.

Your friend's information is a bit off base. There is no direct federal income tax on interest from municipal bonds — debt securities issued by states and their political subdivisions. The word "direct" has to be stressed because, beginning this year, there is what can best be described as a "backdoor" tax on municipal bond interest collected by Social Security recipients. You have to pay that tax no later than the due date for your 1984 income tax return. For most people, that's April 15, 1985, the date your friend mentioned.

The new arrangement calls for Social Security recipients to have "thresholds" — $25,000 for individuals, $32,000 for married couples filing joint returns and zero for married couples filing separate returns. You calculate that by adding up your adjusted gross income, half your Social Security benefits and your total municipal bond interest.

If the resulting number is higher than your threshold, you have to pay federal income tax on the portion on your Social Security benefits that exceeds the threshold. Boiled down, this means you might have to pay income tax on up to half of your Social Security benefits — in addition to whatever tax is due on your taxable income.

Including municipal bond interest in the calculation evidently will push you over the threshold. As a result, you'll pay tax on income that formerly was tax free.

Technically, you'll be paying federal income tax on part of your Social Security benefits — not on your municipal bond interest. Nonetheless, it is a roundabout way for the federal government to tax some municipal bond interest.

* * *

Q. I am a senior citizen receiving Social Security and my investments are mostly municipal bonds. I was shocked to learn about the new law that, in effect, will tax some of my municipal bond interest. Do you think there is a chance this law will be repealed?

A. Several attempts have been made to repeal that section of the Social Security Amendments of 1983. To date, none has been successful.

* * *

Q. Interest from municipal bonds, which normally is free from federal income tax, must be included in arriving at the "modified adjusted gross income" figure to determine if a Social Security recipient must now pay income tax on part of his Social Security benefits. How about tax-free dividends? Must they also be included in that calculation?

A. That depends on the source of the tax-free dividends. You do not have to add back the annual "dividend exclusion" of $100 per taxpayer and $200 for a married couple. You do not have to add back the annual qualified public utility dividend reinvestment exclusion of $750 for an individual and $1,500 for a married couple. Nor do you add back any "return of capital" dividends. Those items are subtracted from your total income, before arriving at your adjusted gross income.

However, if you receive tax-free dividends from a mutual fund or unit trust holding municipal bonds, that's a different story.

The fund or trust collects tax-free interest from the bonds and passes your share on to you as dividends. Because that's a pass-though of tax-free interest, you have to add those dividends into your calculation of modified adjusted gross income.
