Drug policies concentrate on student role

Anti-drug education begins early

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

Midland Independent School officials are doing their part to fight drug abuse among the city's youth.

Theirs is a multi-pronged approach which focuses on education, intervention, punishment, detection and rehabilitation.

At MISD, drug education begins in kindergarten and continues through high school.

The goals of the education program are to provide students with factual information about the harmful effects of drugs, help students develop a positive self concept and decision-making skills to say "no" to drugs and help students learn healthy and productive ways to cope with stress.

In kindergarten through third grade, MISD utilizes materials provided by the American Cancer Society, American Heart Association and the American Lung Association.

The material places strong emphasis on the hazards of smoking and provides for discussion of the negative effects of other hazardous substances.

Third grade students also participate in "Stand Tall" — workshops presented by the Junior League of Midland which teach students peer pressure coping skills.

MISD sets consistent rules, penalties

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

Midland Independent School District officials took a long look at the problem of drug abuse recently and didn't like what they saw.

What they saw was a problem of staggering proportions about which they felt not enough had been done.

Although the MISD had no current local statistics about students who abuse chemicals, officials agreed it was widespread.

Now they're asking student leaders to be the first to say "no" to drugs in hopes that the word will filter down to all levels of the school campuses.

The Board of Education, assuming that students who represent the school and community in extracurricular activities would fall into the lower ranks of drug users, are relying on athletes, cheerleaders and others to encourage their classmates into making the same choices.

Extracurricular sponsors and athletic officials also will carry through that theme now that MISD has what they say they believe is a broad plan which combines education peer support and rule enforcement.

Some sponsors said they simply did not recognize even the obvious signs of chemical abuse among students in the past. Others tried to solve the problem through discipline. Others avoided confronting the problem altogether, afraid that if they did invoke penalties there might be few remaining.

MISD Superintendent Dr. Joseph P. Baressi Jr. said students didn't know where they stood with the rules because they were arbitrarily enforced.

"There wasn't any cohesive or systematic approach to it," he said. "It wasn't even from school to school, it was from person to person."

At Midland and Lee high schools, band students caught using drugs and alcohol on band trips and other events were permanently suspended from the bands.

Meanwhile, Midland and Lee high school football coaches Doug McCutcheon and Earl Miller said punishment varied among athletes for different offenses.

Parents applaud what students see as 'intrusion'

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

Midland high school students generally disapprove of a school policy that penalizes athletes, band members, cheerleaders and other school leaders if they are caught using drugs, alcohol or tobacco during nonschool-related activities.

However, their parents overwhelmingly approve of the policy, according to the results of a Midland Reporter-Telegram poll conducted last week.

Students involved in extracurricular activities and parents of such students were asked, in the non-scientific informal poll, their reaction to the new MISD policy.

Opinions used were those of the first 20 parents and first 20 students (equally divided between Midland and Lee High Schools) who were already familiar with the policy. The poll stopped when opinions from the first 20 of each group were obtained and no attempt was made to obtain a "balance" of pro and con views.

To encourage candidness, anonymity was granted to student respondents.

Respondents were asked: "Do you agree with the new Midland Independent School District policy that invokes varying degrees of punishment on students in extracurricular activities if they are caught using drugs, alcohol and tobacco during nonschool-related or school-related activities?"

Of those teen-agers polled, five say they favor the policy and 15 say they disapprove.

Of the adults interviewed, 19 say they approve of the policy.

Of the 15 students who say they disapprove of the policy, 11 say they particularly disapprove of the portion which governs nonschool-related activities.

The opinions were as follows:

— "On campus is OK, but off the campus is unconstitutional because it's our own life," said a member of the MHS band.

— "I don't think you should be allowed to do it on school trips, but if we're at the mall, we should be able to do what we want," a band student said.

— "Something like that should be decided by your parents," another band student said.

— "They should punish us if we're on campus or at school-related activities, but not at nonschool-related activities," said a fellow member of the MHS band.

— "If your on your own time you should be able to do what you want," said a member of the MHS tennis team.

Plans for new talks proceed

WASHINGTON (AP) — Preparations for a second meeting between President Reagan and Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev moved forward during talks that ended Saturday despite high-level disagreement over the Daniloff case and the American expulsion of 25 persons from the Soviet U.N. mission.

Secretary of State George Shultz said it was "difficult to think of a fruitful summit" without the case of U.S. News & World Report correspondent Nicholas Daniloff being resolved in advance.

In simultaneous early evening news conferences, Shultz and Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze said they had made progress in discussions on some of the main issues that would be discussed at a summit.

Shevardnadze, speaking at the Soviet embassy, said the superpowers were "moving forward" on arms and other issues and that he and Shultz had set "a foundation for holding a productive summit meeting."

In fact, on having Reagan and Gorbachev decide on holding a summit, he said, "the recommendations have been made, it's up to them to decide."

At the State Department, Shultz said "there were quite a few items that seemed insoluble a year ago that are working themselves out."

Reporter generates more interest than hostages, videotape charges

NEW YORK (AP) — Lebanon hostage David Jacobsen, in a videotape broadcast Saturday, said he was upset he was still a captive after the release of an American reporter jailed in Moscow.

Jacobsen, one of six Americans missing in Lebanon, said the Reagan administration is interested in the case of correspondent Nicholas Daniloff, but not his, CBS News reported.

CBS obtained the tape Saturday, said spokeswoman Ramona Dunn. There was no indication on when the tape was made, or under what circumstances Jacobsen made the tape, the network said.

"The only thing I can tell you is we obtained it in Beirut," said Ms. Dunn.

The network broadcast only an 11-second portion of the message, which was about five minutes long, because Jacobson "was saying basically the same thing over and over," said Ms. Dunn.

Lewis strengthened by Fort Worth fundraiser

By JIM WARREN
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

FORT WORTH — When Gib Lewis flies out of the hurricane in Austin and into the peaceful eye of Fort Worth, the speaker forgets about statehouse controversies.

"I'm home in Tarrant County. I feel good. I look good," Lewis quipped Thursday night at a fundraiser here.

For the first time since 1978, Lewis — in his fourth year as speaker of the Texas House of Representatives — faces a Republican opponent, K. Wayne Lee. Lee charges that Lewis has spent too much time in Austin, has forgoten about his constituents in Fort Worth and "is too liberal."

But as close to 3,000 folks crowded in the Tarrant County Convention Center, not a soul asked Lewis about taxes, higher education, retirment trust funds or any of the other pressing issues at the Capitol. Meeting a steady stream of supporters coming into the building — shaking hands, slapping backs and taking pictures — Lewis cheerfully recited strings of "Hi, how are ya" and "Glad ya could come."

"It's always somewhat rewarding to come back home, because people back home have faith in you, and say, "Keep up the good work, you're doing a good job,' " Lewis said. "They know I'll do what's right."

To punctuate his support among colleagues, Lewis flew about 100 fellow House members — many of them Republicans — to Fort Worth. Seven state senators also showed up, as did Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby, who has maintained a running, behind-the-scenes fued with Lewis during the current special session.

But Hobby, the reserved historian and mathemetician who comes from a powerful, wealthy Houston family, had nothing but praise Thursday for Lewis, the self-made milionaire and rural good-ol' boy who never finished college.

Hobby called the speaker "one of the greatest leaders this state has ever had" and said Lewis is the best speaker he has worked with. Lewis is the one man most responsible for education reform and the statewide water plan, Hobby declared.

Republican lawmakers — despite chiding from party officials — said they either will stay out of Lewis' race or back him. Only one member openly supports Lee.

Lee said the Republicans at the fundraiser "were duped" and are upset at the speaker for "using" them. Besides that, Lee said the event was no big deal.

Each cut stirs struggle in committee

An Analysis

AUSTIN — Around 9:30 Friday night, a delivery man brought a box full of sandwiches and chips to Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby's office — a late-night meal for five tired and hungry senators and their staffs.

The group had been pouring over sheets of numbers since the morning, hoping to find a package of acceptable budget cuts that would satisfy their House counterparts one floor up in the Capitol. They had sent out their latest proposal and were waiting for the House to reply.

Twenty minutes after the food arrived, one Senate staffer emerged from Hobby's office with a styrofoam sandwich box for the House negotiators. No ham, turkey or roast beef sandwich lay inside the box however.

Only pickles. Sour pickles.

"It just seemed like a good idea," Hobby said of the pickle prank.

The mischief seemed appropriate for a day filled with legislative shuttle diplomacy that never wanted to end. Offers and counter-offers flew back and forth across the rotunda. Predictions for success alternated with gloomy forecasts of failure.

He said there had been some progress made on intermediate-range nuclear forces and said he thought Shevardnadze would agree that had been "one of the promising areas."

Nevertheless, they ended their 14 hours of talks over two days — the highest level U.S.-Soviet discussions in 10 months — with complaints about the treatment of their citizens in each others' country.

Shultz said the detention of Daniloff on spy charges in Moscow is "a cloud that hangs over this." Before he was arrested on spy charges August 30, it was thought the weekend meetings would result in a date being set for the summit.

At the State Department, Shultz said there were long discussions about Daniloff and said, "It is hard to think that progress is made (towards a U.S.-Soviet summit) as long as he is there and unable to leave."

"I think it is difficult to think of a fruitful summit without these cases being resolved because they're going to wind up consuming great blocks of time," Shultz added.

Officials said the men would continue their discussions — with Daniloff on the agenda — this coming week in New York, site of the U.N. controversy.

Shevardnadze blasted the U.S. expulsion of 25 Soviet officials from the United Nations as "unlawful, irresponsible and provocative," and said, "If the American side believes that it can act arbitrarily, with impunity, it is mistaken."

"I must say this is most unfortunate; someone's malicious hand has tried to block" progress towards a summit, he said. He threatened retaliation for the expulsion of the Soviet officials from New York.

Yet, Shevardnadze said of the Friday-Saturday talks, "This work, in a way, creates a foundation for holding a productive summit meeting, and in this area, we are indeed moving forward." He also said, "It is good that common sense has prevailed as well as the understanding of the fact that ... ultimatims are unfit for our relations."

AP Laserphoto

Of Daniloff, he said: "Please give us a chance through diplomatic channels in a calm and coolheaded way, to discuss those issues and find the most wise...decision on that."

At another point he said: "So far as I am concerned, Daniloff was engaged in impermissable activities directed against the interests of the Soviet Union. If there is no resolution of that case before trial, then he will be answerable to all Soviet laws and will be tried.... We would prefer a normal resolution to this issue and the administration is aware of that." Shultz said Daniloff was not a spy.

Shevardnadze's remarks on the U.N. matter were harsh and uncompromising.

Shevardnadze welcomed reporters to the Soviet Embassy and promptly blasted the U.S. expulsion of 25 Soviet officials from the United Nations as "unlawful, irresponsible and provacative."

"If the American side believes that it can act arbitrarily, with impunity, it is mistaken," he said.

Asked about Shevardnadze's veiled warning of Soviet retaliation, Shultz said the action in which the the United States moved to limit the size of the Soviet delegation because of past espionage was unrelated to the Daniloff matter.

Shultz said he explained that to Shevardnadze and, "He argued with it."

In the midst of the Daniloff-U.N controversies, the officials seemed optimistic about summit preparations overall.

Shultz was asked if there could be preparations for the summit in light of the Daniloff arrest. "Certainly, there can be preparations and we spent a great deal of time discussing the substance of issues."

TAPE

"I was emotionally upset because Daniloff has been exchanged for the Russian spy who was working against the American people and that I was still a captive," Jacobsen said in the brief portion of the tape broadcast on the CBS "Evening News with Bob Schieffer."

The appeal apparently was the second in two weeks from Jacobsen. A letter bearing his name was released Sept. 16 by Islamic Jihad, the Shiite Moslem group that claims to hold three American hostages and to have killed a fourth.

The letter asked for negotiations over the hostages and warned that the kidnappers might kill the Americans.

In a statement released along with the letter, Islamic Jihad urged the United States to negotiate for the release of the American hostages as it did with the Soviet Union for Daniloff's release.

The letter said the price paid to free Daniloff "was the release of the Russian spy who was working against the American people and that was clear."

"This price was great compared with the price that the American government will have to pay to release us," the letter said.

The case of Daniloff, the U.S. News and World Report correspondent arrested in Moscow Sept. 30 and accused of espionage, has become a major issue in U.S.-Soviet relations.

Daniloff and a Soviet employee of the United Nations who was arrested in New York and charged with spying have been released from prison in the custody of their country's diplomats.

In Washington, D.C., State Department spokeswoman Sondra McCarty said she was aware CBS had the tape of Jacobsen, but knew nothing further about it.

The videotape marked the third time in recent weeks that photographs of Jacobsen have been distributed.

The letter attributed to Jacobsen and the accompanying Islamic Jihad communique were in a packet left outside a Western news agency in Moslem west Beirut.

The packet contained a Polaroid photograph of Jacobsen in pajamas, almost identical to one of him released with an Islamic Jihad statement in Beirut a week earlier.

Islamic Jihad, which espouses the Shiite fundamentalism of Iran's Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini, has demanded that 17 comrades jailed in Kuwait for bombing the U.S. and French embassies in 1983 be freed in return for the hostages. Kuwait refuses.

In addition to Jacobsen, 55, who was the administrator of the American University Hospital when he was kidnapped last year, Islamic Jihad says it holds Terry Anderson, 38, born in Lorain, Ohio, chief Middle East correspondent of The Associated Press, and Thomas Sutherland, 55, of Fort Collins, Colo., acting dean of agriculture at the American University of Beirut.

The group says it killed another hostage, U.S. diplomat William Buckley. No body has been found.

Two other Americans were kidnapped in Beirut earlier this month. It is not known who abducted them.

CUTS

Twenty-four days into the negotiating process that began during the first special session, the two sides had finally agreed on a $510 million target for budget cuts and on $490 million worth of reductions. Where to cut the last $20 million became the problem.

The sticking point, as it had been for the past several years, was higher education. The $2 billion-plus annual budget for universities, junior colleges and medical schools represented the largest chunk of state spending not restricted by the Constitution, state law or federal court orders.

The House originally called for $320 million in higher education cuts; the Senate wanted $118.5 million. The first round of negotiation brought a Senate offer of $195.1 million, followed by a House proposal for $255.6 million.

The stalemate lasted through Wednesday and Thursday. Both sides understood that little other action to address the state's $2.8 billion deficit — and certainly no movement in the House on a tax increase — would come without settlement on the cuts.

Friday's meeting began at 9 a.m. with the announcement of a delay. Other than a brief public skirmish in mid-afternoon, all of the action took place behind closed doors. At one point, senators proposed $10.5 million in cuts for public education as an alternative to reductions in university spending.

Finally, shortly before midnight, an hour and a half after the pickle incident, the doors to Hobby's office burst open, spilling out happy senators and representatives. They marched up the stairs to the meeting room, called the conference committee officially to order for the first time that day, and announced the compromise:

— $510 million total cut from the $18.5 billion fiscal 1987 state budget;

— $209 million in cuts for higher education, including 10.5 percent from the 35 state-supported senior universities and 9 percent from junior colleges;

— Minimal cuts for public education; and — All state agencies must "capture" money set aside for a salary increase already discarded — one-third of 1 percent of their annual budgets — to contribute to a new $13.5 million reduction.

Although higher education accounts for 15.5 percent of the 1987 budget, it "took" 41 percent of the cuts. That figure would have been closer to 45 percent without a special $18 million fund set aside to reimburse those universities where lower-than-expected enrollment last year created a shortfall in tuition income.

At the University of Texas of the Permian Basin, for example, cuts totalled $692,000. In fiscal 1986, however, UTPB lost $185,000 from tuition. The conference committee has yet to agree on the precise formula for distributing the $18 million, although UTPB should receive a proportionate share.

The House had originally set that special fund at $10.3 million and the Senate $20 million. The combination of deep House cuts and smaller tuition fund, some senators argued, would have devastated mid-sized, independent schools. If the Senate negotiators had agreed to the cuts without boosting the special fund, one senator said, the full Senate would never agree to the final package.

Rep. Mike Toomey, R-Houston, the only conferee to vote against the compromise said Texas institutions have traditionally over-collected tuition and fees. "For one year, a school says, 'We're low,' I don't panic," Toomey said.

Final numbers are not yet available, but other key budget cuts include: About $89 million from the Department of Human Services; nearly $25 million in cuts and savings from state hospitals and state schools for the mentally retarded; about $16 million from the Department of Health; and roughly $8 million from prisons and parole and probation programs.

One issue that remains unresolved, however, is a Senate demand that lawmakers take care of all of the deficit before they leave town. Although House Speaker Gib Lewis has finally agreed to push for a tax increase, the cuts and temporary sales tax increase Lewis wants would not balance the budget.

The conference committee will take up that provision and other loose ends Monday afternoon.

LEWIS

"I think it's great all those people came out for his going away party," Lee said. "The spread has narrowed so much in the last four weeks that I have all the confidence in the world that by the time the people know the truth and go to vote, I win."

Rep. Bill Ceverha, a Dallas Republican and one of the House's most conservative members, said Republicans have no reason to work against Lewis, a conserative Democrat who has made many GOP lawmakers committee chairmen.

"Gib has always been fair to us (Republicans) and to me individually," Ceverha said. Ceverha doesn't foresee Republicans backing down from their pledge to support Lewis as speaker next session, even if he is successful in pushing a tax bill through the special session.

Lee entered the race for Lewis' seat partly because the Tarrant County district voted heavily Republican in the 1984 Reagan landslide. Although most of the political insiders said Lewis was safe, the speaker nevertheless made sure his campaign coffers were full.

Lee, a successful developer and a fundamentalist Christian, hasn't been able to raise the kind of money he hoped to, but thinks what he lacks in funds, he can make up by pounding the pavement. Lewis, however, claims he polled an area before Lee walked it and after, and the speaker fared better after his challenger had gone door to door.

Lewis refers to Lee as "that crazy guy." Lee refers to Lewis as "a free-spending Austin liberal." Lewis' campaign workers say the speaker is leading by a 2-1 ratio. Lee says he has pulled within 10 percentage points of Lewis and 35 percent of the voters are undecided.

Many in Austin blamed the speaker's reluctance to support a tax increase on his campaign. But Lewis said, "Voting for a tax increase is an easy vote. It's making those cuts that's the hard vote." He denies letting his campaign affect his decisions at the Capitol.

Lewis' balancing act has put him on the spot with conseratives in the House. After the speaker predicted last week that the current special session would end with a tax increase, members of the bipartisan Conservative Coalition met behind closed doors and invited Lewis to explain his remarks.

He assured the coalition that he still wants his plan — cuts, changing accounting procedures and payment deferrals — and is not ready to support taxes. That satisfied the conservatives.

But this week Lewis conceded that taxes are inevitable because the Senate will not go along with his cash-flow/budget reduction program. The next day, pro-tax forces in the House wore dark blue "GIB" buttons. Surprisingly, he heard little public outcry from conservatives — except Lee.

"It was all a ploy," Lee said. "I predicted all along he would support a tax increase in time."

If Lewis were to lose to Lee, the race to become the next speaker would be wide open. Pundits throw out names — Reps. Stan Schlueter, David Cain, Jim Rudd, Bruce Gibson — but all agree there's no consensus candidate. And none of the representatives often mentioned will comment on a possible speaker's race — they support Lewis.

And in the meantime, Lee will keep walking the district looking for converts. And Lewis will hope his popularity will overcome his opponent's attacks.

As the sign in his district says: "In Austin they call him Mr. Speaker. In Fort Worth we still call him Gib."

From Staff Reports

The Midland Independent School District's stand against student drug abuse gained new strength in August of 1985 when trustees set four goals for creating drug-free schools through education, prevention, detection, punishment and rehabilitation.

The following is a brief synopsis of the MISD's efforts to implement a chemical abuse policy under a time frame from August, 1985 through December, 1986 and their accomplishments to date:

GOAL ONE: To approve a policy against substance abuse.

— January, 1986 — The MISD Board reviewed the district's tobacco policies.

— January — The district's discipline management plan was reviewed.

— June — The policies were revised.

— September — The policies were implemented.

GOAL TWO: To provide education on the dangers of chemical abuse.

— August, 1985 — The MISD Board approved hiring two drug counselors.

— November — Job descriptions applicable to the drug counselors were approved.

— January, 1986 — Two drug counselors were employed.

— January — Parent education programs were expanded.

— January — Student groups against substance abuse are promoted.

— February — MISD expanded and revised its curriculum concerning the prevention of chemical abuse.

— February, MISD provided preventative substance abuse training to its staff.

— June — The curriculum was approved.

— June — Parent groups and boards evaluated policy.

— August — Preventative substance abuse training was provided to all secondary coaches.

— September, 1986-May,1987 — Parent education programs were revised.

— September — MISD provided preventative substance abuse training to core and recovery teams.

— September — Brochures for parents of fourth through sixth grade students were published.

— September — Student groups against substance abuse were reviewed and approved.

— October — MISD will commemorate Drug Awareness Week.

— October — MISD will promote meetings of the approved student groups.

— December — MISD will train all professional employees.

GOAL THREE: To prevent substance abuse by MISD students through detection, discipline and counseling for offenders.

— September, 1986-May, 1987 — MISD officials implement policy with Midland Police Department drug-sniffing dogs; refer expelled students to authorities; patrol school campuses with security guards; identify student offenders; notify law enforcement agencies.

GOAL FOUR: To assist in the rehabilitation of students.

— August, 1985 — MISD secured assistance from local agencies.

— September, 1986-May, 1987 — Students reentering school after previous abuse problems were supported.

— September — A system for rehabilitation was established.

POLICY

"When we caught kids with drugs they were gone. With drinking, we looked at it differently," Athletic Director Gil Bartosh said.

The first step to developing a new approach toward consistent penalties, education and awareness was to revise the chemical-use rule.

Two weeks ago, trustees agreed to invoke penalties ranging from three-hour work details for possession of tobacco products on the first offense to various suspensions for possession or use of drugs and alcohol. The policy includes offenses that occur during school-related as well as nonschool-related activities.

The immediate response by some parents, teachers and students was negative. For others it was positive. Some voiced their objections, saying the new rule was too harsh, unenforceable and didn't deter athletes from using chemicals.

Baressi, however, defends it.

"Our job is to look out for the best interests of our kids and this policy is designed to do that," he said.

Baressi said the Board is on solid legal ground because the use of mood-altering chemicals is illegal, and the use of alcohol and tobacco by minors is also prohibited by law.

Furthermore, he said extracurricular activities are a privilege, not a right and students who choose to participate must play by the rules.

MISD Board President Bill Jackson views the policy as a positive peer pressure device which he defined as teaching students that it is all right to say no.

But the rule is only one facet of the new approach, Jackson said. There are also programs encouraging education about chemical use and abuse.

"There's a lot of evidence on the dangers that drugs, alcohol and tobacco pose over a long period of time," Baressi said.

The annual High School Senior Survey conducted by the Michigan Institute for Social Research and the National Institute for Drug Abuse noted in its latest report:

— "Nearly two-thirds of all American young people (62 percent) try an illicit drug before they finish high school.

— "Fully 40 percent have illicitly used drugs other than marijuana.

— "At least one in every 20 is drinking alcohol daily; and 39 percent have had five or more drinks in a row at least once in the past two weeks.

— "Some 29 percent have smoked cigarettes in the prior month, a substantial proportion of whom are daily smokers (19 percent)."

MISD Drug Counselor Pat Cobb said National Institute for Drug Abuse statistics also show that 70 percent of those students nationwide, who use tobacco products at an early age, go on to experiment with marijuana and other illicit drugs.

Jackson said trustees hope their consistent and uncompromising stand against drug abuse, coupled with use of school and community services for drug problems, will foster student unity and bolster prevention programs on all MISD campuses.

"We're probably going through an awakening," he said. "We've always known it's there, but now we're saying we need to do something about it."

Jackson said he believes trustees have worked out a successful game plan that will allow MISD to stop drug abuse by extracurricular activity participants while working to set new drug-free norms among students in general.

"We've made an attempt to assist students in saying to somebody who wants them to drink or smoke pot that there is a rule against it. It gives them an out."

Under the policy, students involved in sports or other activities will not receive arbitrary penalties when they are caught using drugs, alcohol or tobacco, but they will be consistent, Baressi said.

The penalities accrue from the beginning of the student's participation in junior and senior high school activities.

Students caught under the influence or in possession of drugs or alcohol during school-related and nonschool-related activities, will be suspended from extracurricular activities for two weeks on the first offense.

A second violation would result in the student's loss of extracurricular privileges for the remainder of the school year.

If, after the second violation, the student and family successfully complete a six-week chemical dependency program, the student may be reinstated in MISD activities.

Students caught using or possession tobacco products during school-related or nonschool-related activities will be required to serve a three-hour work detail on the first offense.

A second violation would result in the student being suspended from extracurricular activities for five days.

On the third offense, a student would be suspended from all activities for the remainder of the season.

Baressi said MISD principals will be responsible for investigating allegations against students.

And students are expected to enforce the no-use policy by personally confronting those suspected of using drugs.

However, students who are accused of violating the policy, will have the right to face their accuser. As is now the case with other violators of school policy, students also will have the right to state their case before the school board either in open or executive session.

MISD will not invoke punishment on hearsay alone, Baressi said.

Jackson said the policy is similar to one enacted by the Highland Park Independent School District.

Athletic Director Bo Snowdon, who was instrumental in developing the Highland Park policy, said the district implemented its policy in addition to a student assistance program for drug and alcohol abuse.

"We decided that if we want to prevent student abuse of drugs and alcohol we would have to get our student leaders involved," Snowdon said.

The policy in Dallas is in effect for students during the school day and at school-related activities.

Snowdon said the policy is a preventative approach, not a punitive one.

"We're very pleased with the community support."

Dr. Lamar Hebert, assistant superintendent for instructional services, said the MISD plan reflects the Midland school board's intent to ensure students are chemical free.

"It's the law and it gives them (students) the proper start in life," he said.

Some trustees interviewed believed the policy as it pertained to use of tobacco, should carry a more lenient penalty; others thought it (penalties for tobacco use) shouldn't. Most trustees, however, agreed penalties by themselves are not enough.

"I was concerned about the penalties for tobacco use," Trustee Fred Newman said. "It may or may not lead to other things. But, if I could help a 17-year-old not use tobacco, I would do that."

Health officials, said Jackson, have determined that cigarette smoking and the use of other tobacco products are a health hazard.

"What we're saying in this policy is, if you use tobacco, you're going to suffer consequences," he said.

Trustee Betsy Robinson, who campaigned on drug-free schools, said "I believe this community is serious about creating a chemically-free environment for our youth.

"This policy is a continuation of that process.... It can have tremendous positive effects."

Newman said penalty as punishment will help children as well as adults learn to play by the rules.

"If a problem exists and it's got to stop, then who is going to stop it?

"We may not be able to legislate morals, but we can legislate our children and mold their morals," he said.

SURVEY

— "It should be enforced during the season, but not during the rest of the school year," said an MHS football player.

— "It should be the students' business what they do off campus," said a member of the LHS volleyball team and band.

— "It will cut down on drug use among students, but I don't think it should include out-of-school activities," said an LHS senior and member of the varsity football team.

— "It's an invasion of our privacy," said a sophomore Rebelette. "We don't go into the school board's home and invade their privacy."

— "Students have the right to do whatever they want off campus. When they're on campus, the school should enforce it," an LHS band student said.

— "We should be able to do what we want in the privacy of our own home," said an LHS junior and member of the varsity football team.

Other teen-agers say they believe the policy should apply to all students not just those who are involved in school activities and should not include the use of tobacco products.

"Just because someone is in extracurricular activities doesn't mean they should be treated any differently than someone who's not," said an MHS football player.

"If the rules apply to people in extracurricular activities, they should apply to everyone," said an MHS basketball player.

"I don't like the policy because a lot of kids like to dip snuff. There's really nothing wrong with that," said an LHS football player.

Of the five teen-agers who say they approve of the policy, two indicated they do so because of health hazards involved in using drugs, alcohol and tobacco.

"Students shouldn't be taking drugs, drinking alcohol, smoking cigarettes or chewing tobacco. They harm your body," an MHS swimmer said.

"People shouldn't use that stuff. It's dangerous," a member of the LHS band agreed.

Another supporter said school leaders serve as role models and shouldn't engage in drugs at all.

"If somebody uses drugs and alcohol, they're not representing the school very well," the LHS Rebelette said.

"Athletes should be used to this by now and there's no reason why it shouldn't apply to everyone," said a member of the LHS girls' basketball team.

"I don't drink or smoke. I don't think others should either," said an LHS baseball player.

Of the parents polled, the overwhelming majority say they approve of the concept of the policy, but expressed some reservations in terms of its enforcement.

Mary Beck has two children who are active in school activities.

She said she approves of the policy because "Most of the children who participate in the band and other school activities are leaders. If they are using or abusing drugs, they'll influence others to follow."

Carol Hunt, whose daughter is a junior varsity cheerleader, said she agrees with the portion of the policy that addresses the possession of drugs and alcohol, but has reservations about governing the use of tobacco.

"If it's against the law, we have a right to step in and set policy, but if it isn't, I question whether we're taking away a right that is for the student and parents to decide," she said.

Gayle Dodson has a daughter active in the Student Council.

She said she approves of the policy because "we have to start somewhere. This is one step to turning things around for these kids. There are those kids who need this type of guidance and direction. We need to take a stand."

Molly Bedrich agreed, saying "It gives our children another reason to say no to drugs, alcohol and other things that harm their bodies."

Jackie Hamilton said she supports the policy because it is designed to stop drug abuse among all children.

"I think there is a big problem with drugs among our students. I'm all for this policy," she said.

Eleanor Morse's daughter is a member of the high school swim team.

She said she approves of the policy because "It is reiterating state law.

"We need a policy so the kids, who are involved in extracurricular activities, don't conform to drinking and using drugs," she said.

Claire Woodcock, the mother of two children involved either in National Honor Society, football or soccer, said the school needs a policy to govern on-campus activities, but questions whether the portion that governs out-of-school activities can be enforced.

"Parents have a responsibility for their children when they're out of school and that's where it should stand," she said.

Alice Busby, the mother of a band student, said "If they (teen-agers) aren't in school, that's where their (the MISD's) responsibility should end."

Kathy Wilson said "If a teacher catches my child doing something, I want to know about it. The only thing I question is whether students should be turning in other students."

Dorothy Smith, whose daughter performs with the high school orchestra, said "It's not too much to ask our students to be drug free."

Diana Weyman said she would prefer that the policy be applied to "all students, not just those who participate in school activities."

Lou Marczynski, father of a band student and athlete, agreed, saying "It should apply to all students."

Letty Craft said the policy also "should apply to teachers, administrators and school board members. This is a problem that needs to be addressed and I'm not so sure that we, as adults, are setting a good example for our children."

Catherine Taylor, the mother of a football player and debate student, said she agrees with the policy because "Kids need a socially acceptable excuse not to do something that has become the norm of their peer group."

"Alcohol is against the law if you're under 21 and drugs are against the law altogether," said Geriann Green, the mother of a high school band student.

"I'm still hesitant on the tobacco portion of the policy. I'm glad they separated it out and that the punishment is not as severe for tobacco."

Ruth Hawkins, whose son is a trainer for the LHS football team, disapproves of the policy because "The students who use drugs and alcohol are not the ones who are in extracurricular activities. They (the drug users) do nothing (do not participate)."

Julie Weis, whose son is a member of the high school basketball team and National Honor Society, said she believes the policy is "impeding our rights as parents. The school district can't enforce policy 24 hours a day."

Jeannie Johnson, the mother of a an LHS Dixie Doll and a cheerleader, said drug abuse is "wrong and it's against the law. This is a positive step that the school board is taking and I'll back them on it."

Seree Whitlow, whose children are involved in cheerleading, basketball, swimming and Prevention Using Student Help (PUSH), said "These kids need to realize that they are role models and what they do is a reflection on themselves, their school and their parents."

EMPHASIS

In grades 4-6, students are exposed to more detailed information about the hazardous effects of alcohol and other drugs. Material for this age group includes health textbooks and a new drug and alcohol curriculum, entitled "Here's Looking at You Two."

Secondary student drug education comes through Health and Science classes, plus special programs scheduled throughout the school year.

In addition, MISD last year mailed the communitywide magazine "Let's All Work to Fight Drug Abuse" to parents of every student in grades 6-10. The mailing was a joint project of Neighbors Against Burglaries and Drugs, Midland Crime Prevention Commission, Midland Parent-Teacher Association and MISD.

Staff members of MISD and parents also are part of the education program.

Comprehensive training began last year when 35 MISD employees and 35 other Midlanders participated in a week-long employees abuse prevention seminar conducted by Community Intervention, Inc. of Minneapolis, Minn.

Employees were trained to educate others in the community on how to recognize, deal with and prevent substance abuse in schools, at home and in the work place.

Afterward, MISD employees formed Core Teams on each of the district's secondary campuses to provide education to other staff members.

In July, nearly 60 MISD extracurricular activity sponsors and students participated in a two-day chemical abuse workshop designed to raise the level of awareness among student leaders of extracurricular activities regarding the problem of chemical abuse.

MISD also employed two full-time chemical abuse/awareness counselors. The counselors have provided special training to principals, other counselors, coaches, extracurricular sponsors, Core Team members and classroom teachers. The counselors also are involved in presenting programs for parent groups.

MISD has developed an elaborate process for intervening and referring chemical abusers for treatment and counseling. It also calls for follow-up of a student's progress and checking for warning signs of relapse.

Students found possessing, using or under the influence of drugs or alcohol are punished under the MISD Discipline Management Plan. Discipline ranges from detention to expulsion.

MISD staff members also are trained in detection of students under the influence of chemicals. In addition, law enforcement officials conduct unannounced searches of secondary school campuses with drug-sniffing dogs.

MISD has developed a support system to help students who do not want to use chemicals. It consists of group activities, a re-entry program and a follow-up system.

Group activities include Insight classes, Concerned Persons Groups and Aftercare Support Groups.

An Insight class is a one-day program for students with chemical-use problems and their parents. Students learn about the range and progression of chemical use and pinpoint the roles that their defenses play in their use of chemicals.

Concerned Persons Groups are support groups for persons who are concerned about the chemical use of someone close to them. The purpose of the group is to develop support for the mental, emotional, physical and spiritual health and growth of members.

Aftercare Support Groups are for any person who has returned from a primary treatment center, made a commitment to a recovery program and desires to stay straight. This group helps students initiate friendships with non-users and offers support for abstaining.

Students returning from treatment for chemical dependency receive additional support from MISD's chemical abuse/awareness counselors through conferences, ongoing contact with parents, monitoring of students' progress and checking for relapse warning signs. A monthly follow-up also is conducted.

Fading Sesquicentennial 'hoopla' no surprise

By DOUG CRICHTON

DALLAS (AP) — The Texas Sesquicentennial isn't over, but the party soon may be.

"About the only place you hear 'sesquicentennial' mentioned today is the Miller beer commercials," says Sam Garner, spokesman for the Texas Sesquicentennial Commission. "And even they probably won't be doing that much longer."

The fading hoopla isn't all that surprising, given the current budget crisis and that the historic events Texas is celebrating — such as its declaration of independence from Mexico and the battles of San Jacinto and the Alamo — occurred in the first four months of 1836, Garner says.

"We didn't expect the pace of interest to keep up with that of earlier this year," Garner says. "But that doesn't mean it's all over yet. There are still many local events planned."

Aside from the Texas State Fair that starts Friday and a 3,500-mile auto rally that begins Oct. 11 in Plano, no other statewide events are scheduled. But more than 1,000 smaller events with Sesquicentennial themes, ranging from festivals to parades and concerts, are in the works.

Officials expect interest to pick up slightly in December as Texans from Houston and San Antonio to Dallas wind up the yearlong birthday bash with "Texas Admits To Being in the Union" balls on New Year's Eve.

"From a participatory standpoint, it has been a huge success. ...More than 2,700 communities and associations organized to celebrate it. But revenue projections on product sales and royalties that had gone into the millions were a little too heady."

— Sam Garner

But officials and participants throughout the state are already calling the Sesquicentennial a success, despite a faltering economy that forced the Sesquicentennial Commission to halve its staff and cut deeply into profits from commemorative doo-dads.

"From a participatory standpoint, it has been a huge success," Garner said. "More than 2,700 communities and associations organized to celebrate it. But revenue projections on product sales and royalties that had gone into the millions were a little too heady."

Royalty income as of Aug. 31 was just over $750,000 on retail sales of about $15 million, he said.

"If we had had more money, we could have done more things," Garner said. "But considering the shape the state is in, we're tickled to death with the way things turned out."

The Lone Star State grabbed national headlines all year with its Texas-sized celebrations that included a visit from Britain's Prince Charles, the world's largest birthday cake, the biggest coordinated fireworks show and a six-month-long wagon train.

"The Sesquicentennial has helped people learn more about their heritage and made them proud of Texas, and the events of this year will be remembered for years to come," said June Holly, development director for the Harris County Heritage Society.

"It increased our publicity internationally and helped us advertise Texas as a tourism destination," said Larry Todd, director of the Texas Tourist Development Agency.

TTDA spokesman Dave Allred said officials anticipate setting another record in the number of visitors to Texas — over 40 million — as well as in the amount of money they bring in — about $16 billion.

In addition, "more people stayed at home to see their own state," Todd said. "I remember the feeling of seeing the wagon train rolling into the capital. There was not a Texan there who didn't get a lump in his throat when he saw that living image of our past."

With the State Fair's "Texas 150" theme this year, Texans will get to see a lot more of their state's past. The centerpiece exhibit in the Texas Pavilion will include copies of the U.S. and Texas declarations of independence and Col. William B. Travis' doomed plea for help from the Alamo.

The fair will also be open longer. Instead of the usual 17 to 18 days, it will run 31 days, from Sept. 26 to Oct. 26.

Other events include the Texas Heritage Excursion Rallye (a 3,500-mile road rally), the Republic of Texas Chilympiad in San Marcos, Sept. 18-21 and a hot-air balloon race called "150 and Soaring" that starts in Orange on Oct. 25.

Many of the scores of other events yet to come — such as the Chilympiad — go on each year but are operating with Sesquicentennial themes this year, Garner says.

CAPITAL SCENE

Power of words or just to hear self talk?

AUSTIN — The Texas Senate, like the U.S. Senate and senior legislative chambers in other states, is a body that prides itself on oratory — the power and prestige of the spoken word.

Senators allow themselves unlimited debate, even filibusters. Sometimes they speak earnestly trying to sway votes, sometimes to buy time and sometimes — unfortunately — just to hear themselves talk.

Several among the 31 members of the Texas Senate have distinguished themselves as masters of elocution. When it comes to pure fire and emotional rhetoric, none is better than Houston Sen. Craig Washington — when he decides to put himself to the task. Regretably, Washington is erratic in his attendance and attention to the task at hand.

Other top Senate talkers liberally mix humor with substance. Houston Rep. John Whitmire is the clown prince of the Senate. He sits just in front of the press table in the Senate, regularly zinging one-liners our way.

Port Arthur Sen. Carl Parker has a story or two or three for every occasion, and — even when he loses — leaves 'em laughing. Parker's got this story about lemmings that, well, that's a whole column in itself.

Then there's Sen. John Traeger, the grand old man from Seguin. A politician — city councilman, House member and senator — for almost 30 years, the 65-year-old Traeger will retire when and if this year's string of special sessions finally ends.

Traeger runs in streaks. Sometimes he'll sit quietly for weeks, head down, silently inhaling countless unfiltered cigarettes. Then he'll hit a streak where he has a comment, a to-the-point-but-humorous comment, on almost every subject of debate.

Like most, Traeger is better against something than for it. Other senators will stand up and spell out the terrible consequences of some piece of legislation or another. When Traeger doesn't like it, he'll pick up his microphone and growl, "This is a BAAAAD ol' bill," and you know where he's coming from.

I remember back in a 1983 special session during debate over a brucellosis control bill that Traeger thought placed too great a burden on ranchers like his friend former Gov. Dolph Briscoe. Traeger fought that one tooth and nail, going down in glorious defeat. His final comment: "That's the worst ol' bill that EVER came down the pike."

Through the years, Traeger has distinguished himself with yeoman work on such low-publicity issues as highway funding and retirement legislation. He counts a bill allowing cities to levy a 1-cent sales tax as among his greatest accomplishments in 23 years in Austin.

But John Traeger drew national publicity, including a special article in Newsweek, during his famous "grandma speech" against repeal of the Blue Law last year. "You're the one that's going to tell grandma she can't eat with the family anymore," he wailed.

"You're the one who's gonna' say, 'You can't get my grandma over for dinner Sunday, 'cause there ain't no Sunday dinner.'"

History will prove he lost that one, too. But events should show John Traeger going out a winner. As chairman of the Southern Legislative Conference, he's set as his final goal a southern regional primary for presidential nominations. "Awesome Tuesday," they call it.

Traeger has traveled the country, trying to convince lawmakers throughout the South to move their states' primaries to the first Tuesday in March. National TV, the New York Times, the Washington Post, Time and Newsweek have all captured his claim. "The South will rise again."

For the northern media, Traeger is the quintessential southern politician. A portly gentleman with a shock of flowing white hair, a gravel-voiced drawl full of humorous anecdotes, outrageously quotable.

He's winning the battle. From Maryland south, only Arkansas, West Virginia and his native Texas have refused to join the drive. If lawmakers here can conclude their work on the state deficit, Gov. Mark White will probably open the special session agenda to include the primary bill.

Traeger has left the limelight to younger colleagues for this last hurrah. If it passes, though, I can hear him now.

"THIS," he'll growl, "is a good ol' bill."

Texas Bank and Trust reopens under RepublicBank Lubbock

LUBBOCK (AP) — Texas Bank and Trust Co., will reopen Monday under the umbrella of RepublicBank Lubbock after becoming the 18th bank to fail this year in Texas, officials say.

The failure stemmed from an immense volume of bad loans and "faulty lending practices," state Banking Commissioner James L. Sexton said after the bank was closed Friday.

"There was no particular sort of loan that caused the bank's troubles. There was just a variety of all sorts of commercial loans," he said. "They weren't consumer loans, they were commercial loans, and just not very well made, just not made to people who could pay them back."

Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. spokesman Ken Gorham said no customers of the failed bank will lose any money because of the transition.

"The only people who get hurt are the stockholders. No one else will be inconvenienced," Sexton said.

Texas Bank & Trust, in financial difficulty since the first quarter of this year, had assets totaling $36.1 million when it failed, said Bill Olcheski, another FDIC spokesman.

He said that RepublicBank will assume about $30.8 million in 7,500 deposits and pay a $375,100 purchase premium.

ORANGE, Texas (AP) — If those folks in the Carmel-by-the-Sea, Calif., City Hall think they can disourage John Thomas from trying to "get" Clint Eastwood, they don't know their man.

Thomas, executive director of the Orange County Association for Retarded Children, wants to get the movie-star mayor to Orange County Oct. 18, to participate in the second annual Mayor's Challenge Walk-a-thon.

The one- to five-mile run or walk at Claiborne West Park in Vidor will benefit Thomas' clients at OCARC.

Word from the small coastal town that early this year elected Eastwood its mayor has been discouraging.

But Thomas has just begun to fight.

"I don't even think (Eastwood) even knows about it, to tell you the truth," Thomas said this week, his voice reflecting disgust but not discouragement. "Those girls out there (at Carmel City Hall) are sheltering him pretty good."

Letters have been sent to Eastwood from Thomas, Pinehurst Mayor Grady Johnson — originator and godfather of the Mayor's Challenge — and other local officials, all to no avail, at least as far as hearing from Eastwood himself is concerned.

Letters have been received from Eastwood's administrative assistant assuring Thomas that Eastwood knows of the request but explaining that Dirty Harry's real-life alter ego is just too busy with city business to make any personal appearances.

The too-busy line won't stop Thomas, though.

"He's made a movie" since being elected, Thomas said indignantly.

What's worse, a shipment of videotapes sent to Eastwood by Thomas showing personal pleas for his attendance at the challenge from OCARC clients was refused at Carmel City Hall because the packages were not "official city business."

No problem for Thomas. He's arranging for the tapes to be sent back with the official stamp of one of the six Orange County cities — Pinehurst, Orange, West Orange, Bridge City, Vidor and Rose City — whose mayors are joining in the fund-raising challenge.

A "city of" letterhead over an Orange County mayor's signature should make the parcel an official communication, Thomas figures.

"We have made a darn effort. I'd just like to get a letter from him personally," Thomas told the Orange Leader. "I'm getting things stirred back up. It's time to get ugly — the effort we've made and we can't even get a darn reply."

OCARC serves pre-school and adult clients with infant stimulation programs and, for older clients, a variety of sheltered workshops.

But the depressed Orange County economy has cut into the OCARC's income. The infant stimulation program was cut in half this summer and the organization has a growing backlog of capital equipment and physical maintenance needs.

FBI recaptures convicted felon after 18 months

COMANCHE (AP) — After evading law officers for about 18 months, convicted felon James Taylor Brock was recaptured by FBI agents in Rockdale, Ga., earlier this week, police say.

Brock was tried and convicted of grand larceny and burglary of a habitation in the spring of 1985, but walked out of jail the night before he was to be transfered to the Texas Department of Corrections.

Brock had been sentenced to 60 years in the TDC.

Comanche County Sheriff W.G. "Shilo" Garmon returned with Brock about 7 p.m. Friday.

A&M offers economy ideas

COLLEGE STATION (AP) — Texas A&M University System scientists and engineers will showcase research that can help create new industries in Texas in an upcoming symposium.

Entitled the "New Economy of Texas," the Oct. 1-2 symposium will bring together public officials, entrepreneurs, venture capitalists and bankers with college scientists and scholars to discuss the commercial potential of their work, and to hear examples of research that has already moved from the laboratory to the marketplace, Texas A&M said in a statement.

MCorp to pay civil penalty

DALLAS (AP) — MCorp and the U.S. Treasury Department said Friday that MCorp, a Dallas-based bank holding company, agreed to pay a $600,000 civil penalty.

The penalty was for the bank company's failure to report more than 2,500 currency transactions as required by the Bank Secrecy Act.

Michael H. Lane, acting assistant secretary of enforcement who announced the penalty, said it represented a settlement of MCorp's civil liability under the act.

Lane said MCorp cooperated with Treasury after completing a special internal review of large currency transactions.

The company said it voluntarily notifed the Department of Treasury of cases of inadvertent omissions in reporting.

MCorp assured the department it had instituted measures to ensure future compliance with the Bank Secrecy Act.

Tower eyed for NATO job

WASHINGTON (AP) — Former Texas Sen. John Tower, who resigned in March as a member of the U.S. strategic arms negotiating team in Geneva, is being considered for a new government job, officials say.

A State Department official confirmed Friday that Tower is one of three candidates for appointment as U.S. ambassador to the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

Other contenders for the position are Donald A. Hicks, the Pentagon research director who plans to leave that job next month, and Robert C. McFarlane, President Reagan's former national security affairs adviser.

"This is one that Don Regan's going to have to decide," said the official, who declined to be identified.

Tower is on the faculty at Southern Methodist University, where he is giving guest lectures on political science this semester and is scheduled to teach a seminar next semester.

Policeman given award

AUSTIN (AP) — A Dallas police officer who has not missed work in 15 years was presented the first state Law Officer of the Year award by Attorney General Jim Mattox.

Cpt. Robert B. Baird, 39, was chosen from among 21 officers nominated from across the state for the award by a nine-member committee of law enforcement officials and members of the attorney general's staff.

Mattox, in presenting the award Friday, said Baird is an expert marksman who is personally responsible for making 120 investigative arrests and stopping 25 felonies in progress in a six-month period.

Reagan cleared in federal criminal probe in 1960s

WASHINGTON (AP) — Ronald Reagan was investigated, and ultimately cleared, in a federal criminal probe in the 1960s into suspected payoffs from the Hollywood entertainment conglomerate MCA to Reagan and other officers of the Screen Actors Guild, according to a new book.

As part of the investigation, Reagan's tax returns from 1952 to 1955 were subpoenaed by the antitrust division of the Justice Department under Attorney General Robert Kennedy, author Dan Moldea says in "Dark Victory: Ronald Reagan, MCA and the Mob."

The Justice Department sought Reagan's tax returns the week after the actor spent an afternoon testifying before a federal grand jury empaneled to investigate the suspected payoffs and any other possible criminal activity involving MCA, says Moldea. The author based portions of his book on 6,000 pages of Justice Department documents obtained 2½ years ago under the Freedom of Information Act by the entertainment industry publication Daily Variety, which ran an extensive but largely unnoticed story on the probe.

The grand jury was part of an antitrust investigation conducted by the Justice Department of alleged monopolistic practices in the entertainment industry by MCA, which was the largest talent agency in Hollywood.

New weapon so powerful Navy confused

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States is slowly deploying a weapon that offers capabilities so striking — conventional and nuclear — that even the Navy hasn't quite figured out the ramifications for its warfighting doctrine.

The weapon is the Tomahawk cruise missile — a small, unmanned missile-jet with short, stubby wings and tail that flies below supersonic speeds. The anti-ship version of the Tomahawk has a range of roughly 250 miles, and some of the land-attack versions can fly up to 1,500 miles, making the range of even the giant 16-inch guns on the Navy's battleships look puny.

Nuclear-capable Tomahawks have been with the fleet, particularly submarines, since 1984. Deployment of the first conventionally armed land-attack model began in the spring.

Cruise missiles were developed in the late 1970s. Most recently, the weapon attracted public attention with President Reagan's announcement that the Air Force would continue arming B-52 bombers with cruise missiles and thus exceed the limits of the SALT II arms accord.

As important as that program is to the Air Force — giving new offensive punch to 30-year-old bombers — the Navy's use of the cruise missile is in many respects more revolutionary.

For the first time, Navy battleships, cruisers and destroyers are joining aircraft carriers and submarines in gaining the ability to strike at targets hundreds of miles away.

With cruise missiles, enemy ships can be engaged "over the horizon," dramatically expanding the capability of U.S. surface ships to protect themselves, convoys and carriers.

More significantly, targets on land ranging from bunkers to missile batteries to parked aircraft can be attacked without jeopardizing the lives of pilots. And nuclear warheads can be sent flying against targets inside the Soviet Union by small surface ships well out to sea.

The Navy calls this "distributed offense." The proliferation of offensive punch to surface ships "complicates Soviet planning by requiring them to consider every battle group ship a potential threat," Rear Adm. Stephen Hostettler, director of the joint cruise missile program, told a Senate panel this spring.

According to Vice Adm. Joseph Metcalf, the deputy chief of naval operations for surface warfare, the implications for American strategy — both in the strategic nuclear sense as well as the conventional, warfighting sense — are sweeping.

"It's a revolutionary weapon," Metcalf said during a recent interview in his Pentagon office.

"Navies exist for deterrence. And by having Tomahawks spread out through the force...that becomes an enormous deterrent in the equation."

The Soviets, he continued, can never know whether the Tomahawk on a particular ship carries a nuclear warhead.

"And that's what deterrence is all about. War is uncertainty. And the more fog you can put into the uncertainty equation, the better off you are; the more deterrent value you have."

As for conventional war-fighting tactics: "In modern warfare, the name of the game is ordnance on target. And that is the essential impact that it's going to have on the surface Navy; instead of being a Navy with its horizons out to the limits of its guns or surface-to-air missiles, it now becomes an offensive force."

The problem facing the Navy now, Metcalf acknowledged, is to integrate tactics and capability.

A Tomahawk with a 1,000-pound warhead will not replace the striking power of jets on an aircraft carrier, he explained. But used in conjuction with attack aircraft, they could save lives by destroying defenses and clearing the way for aerial assaults.

"We're just in the infancy of that kind of tactical thought, of how do you employ it?" Metcalf said. "How do you time it relative to the use of strike weapons? What ranges do you use it at? What is the positioning of the Tomahawk launchers relative to the target and relative to the aircraft carrier which is bringing in the main part of the punch?

"Even today, we don't have a full appreciation for what Tomahawk's going to do."

That lack of appreciation is further complicated by arms control proposals. The Soviet Union, at various times, has argued that all sea-launched cruise missiles should be banned or at least kept off surface ships.

The Reagan administration has so far rejected such proposals, citing the difficulty of verifying any such ban. The administration also announced last March the Soviets would soon start deploying the SS-NX-21, their own sea-launched cruise missile, on submarines.

'Cory' compares slain husband to Kennedy, King

"Violence struck him down, but his legacy was never lost," Mrs. Aquino said. "As Senator Edward Kennedy says, 'The work goes on, the cause endures, and the dream will never die.'"

She quoted her late husband, Philippine opposition leader Benigno Aquino, as saying, "The Filipino is worth dying for," and said she accepted the honorary doctorate of law degree on behalf of her people.

Seven months after reaching "an impossible dream" and becoming president, Mrs. Aquino said: "We are encouraged to believe that our present labor to rebuild our devastated nation will succeed. ...But it is, as you say in this country, a tall order.

"Yet, we have done the impossible. Who is to say we cannot do it again?"

A crowd of 650 people gave her a standing ovation, yelling "Cory! Cory! Cory!" before she spoke. Mrs. Aquino said she was glad to be back in the state where her family lived in self-imposed exile "at a time when the prospect for change in our land still looked forlorn."

About 50 invited guests were on hand when Mrs. Aquino's plane landed at 9:33 a.m. at Logan International Airport. They included members of the Filipino community in suburban Newton, where Mrs. Aquino and her husband lived from 1980 until he returned to the Philippines and was assassinated in 1983.

She was also greeted by Gov. Michael S. Dukakis; Sen. John Kerry, D-Mass.; Boston Mayor Raymond L. Flynn; Newton Mayor Theodore Mann; and Steven Agular, a friend of the Aquino family who serves as head of the Benigno S. Aquino Memorial Foundation in Newton.

Earlier in New York, she was hailed as the George Washington of the Philippines as she tried to persuade American businesses to invest in her debt-ridden nation.

"Invest in the Philippines, not because we need your money but because it is to our mutual advantage," Mrs. Aquino told more than 900 members of the New York Economic Club and the Philippine-American Chamber of Commerce on Friday.

School principal requesting security, robbed at desk

NEW YORK (AP) — A principal who wanted security at her elementary school improved was robbed at razorpoint of $1,900 in cash and jewelry while sitting at her desk, police said.

A well-dressed man on Friday held a barber's razor to the face of Juana Dainas, 49, principal of Public School 206 in East Harlem for 13 years, and robbed her of a necklace, a bracelet, a ring and $700 in cash, said police spokesman Sgt. Peter Sweeney.

"This is such a safe school, you never expect something like this to happen," said Mrs. Dainas. But she said she has been asking the Board of Education to improve the school's maintenance and security.

Mrs. Dainas said only she and one other person were in the building at the time of the attack, almost an hour before school started.

Toyota hikes '87 prices

DETROIT (AP) — Prices of Toyota's 1987 models will average 3.3 percent higher than the prices of 1986 models, the Japanese automaker says.

The increase, announced Friday, comes after a year in which prices rose by about 9 percent because of the devaluation of the U.S. dollar against the Japanese yen.

The price of the 1987 Toyota Tercel will be increased by 1.7 percent to $5,898; the Toyota Deluxe Camry, by 5.9 percent to $10,798, said Jerry Giaquinta, a spokesman for Toyota Motor Sales U.S.A. Inc.

General Motors Corp. last week announced 1987 price increases averaging 2.6 percent above the late 1986 model-year prices.

House stolen, later found

IRWINDALE, Calif. (AP) — A one-story house that was swiped from its lot has been found after a television news report led to a tip on its new location.

Minutes after a report of the theft was broadcast late Friday, someone called the Los Angeles County sheriff's station in Altadena to report a similar house, said police Sgt. Frank Gomez.

By midnight, owner Brenda McGinnis had identified the house as hers, Gomez said. No arrests had been made.

Ms. McGinnis, 35, of San Bernardino, had been about to sell the two-bedroom house, located on a lot about 20 miles east of downtown Los Angeles, and it had been sitting on blocks for nine months before it was scheduled to be moved, Irwindale police officer Gil Cuen said Thursday.

A prospective buyer sent an appraiser to look at the house, but the appraiser couldn't find it.

Ms. McGinnis "made a beeline for the police department and filed a grand theft report. She was very upset," Cuen said.

Tear gas interrupts game

GAFFNEY, S.C. (AP) — A high school football game turned into pandemonium when someone dropped a tear gas grenade into the stands, sending spectators scrambling onto the field and injuring more than 150 people, authorities said.

The cloud of gas "settled like a blanket" on the crowd and hundreds of people trying to escape the fumes streamed out of the stands, said James Moncrief, principal of Gaffney Senior High School, where the game was being played Friday night.

Between 150 and 200 people at the game were taken to Cherokee Memorial Hospital, said hospital spokesman Carl Wren.

PUBLIC NOTICE

On Monday, September 8, 1986 the Midland County Commissioners' Court approved the 1987 County Budget and adopted a tax rate of $.1996 per $100.00 Valuation.

The 1987 Midland County Budget provides for projected expenditures in all funds of $13,060,609.00. This represents a reduction of $1,225,791.00 from the 1986 budget.

The NET REDUCTION in "effective tax rate" is calculated at $.0213 per $100.00 valuation.

Almost all property owners in Midland County will receive a decrease in their net County tax bill based on the net appraised value of their property as submitted by the Central Appraisal District.

The average Midland County tax bill will decrease by approximately 10%. This means that if your County tax statement for 1986 was $200.00 your statement for 1987 should be approximately $180.00. As stated, this example is an average. Your statement could reflect a greater or lesser change depending on appraisal value of the Central Appraisal District.

Brazilian plane crashes killing crew, Americans

SAO PAULO, Brazil (AP) — A Brazilian communter plane bound for Florida crashed into a mountain in southern Brazil, killing the five crewmen aboard, including four Americans, the plane's manufacturer reported Saturday.

Mario Vinagre, a spokesnam for Embraer, said the 30-passenger Brasilia plane had just departed from Sao Jose dos Campos when it crashed Friday afternoon. He said it was carrying no passengers.

Embraer is the state-ran manufacturer of the Brasilia, and the one that crashed was being delivered to Atlanta-based Atlantic Southeast Airlines, according to Vinagre. He said it was bound for Fort Lauderale, Fla.

Vinagre said the accident occurred just east of Sao Jose dos Campos, where the turbo-prop Brasilias are produced, and about 265 miles west of Rio de Janeiro.

An Embraer news release identified the American victims as three Atlantic Southeast employees — pilot Max Millican, co-pilot Larry Mcelwany, and maintenance technician Jay Murray — and Allen Wilson, Brazilian representative for Pratt and Whitney, the manufacturer of the plane's engine.

The company said the Brazilian who perished was Euclides Silva, an Embraer technical representative.

Vinagre said he did not know the hometowns of the Americans.

WORLD in brief

Pope: Chernobyl disaster dramatizes need for care

CASTEL GANDOLFO, Italy (AP) — Pope John Paul II said Saturday that the Chernobyl nuclear disaster dramatizes the need for higher levels of care and conscience in the use of technology.

He told a delegation from an international conference of physicists that this century has witnessed "the most wonderful feats of science," but said that with progress came decreasing levels of security and care, and increasing risks.

"After Hiroshima, the atomic fear set humanity on edge, and furthermore, the leaders of people continued to build up their terrifying arsenals," John Paul said. "And after the...(April 26) catastrophe of Chernobyl (in the Soviet Union), we must recognize that even the peaceful use of atomic energy isn't without its dangers."

He said development of science needs "a growth of clarity and above all of conscience."

Allergy creates wild man

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — An allergy to potatoes turned a "pleasant and likeable" Irishman into a wild man, a judge said in dropping assault charges against him.

Two packages of potato chips made 21-year-old Tony Doherty try to strangle his father with a tie, Judge Peter Gibson of Belfast Crown Court found on Friday.

Doherty admitted to the assault, but the judge called the case "highly exceptional" and dismissed the charges filed by police.

Doherty's allergy to potatoes, beef, onions and strawberries was discovered at a clinic in Manchester, England. His father said the family became "label watchers" for Doherty when the allergy was discovered, but then the young man moved to a hostel where he was "forced to eat the institutionalized food or starve."

The hostel food was mostly potatoes and beef and his son's personality began to change, the elder Doherty said.

Manila's stock trading up

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — Stock brokers said a big increase in trading on Manila's stock exchanges reflected new confidence resulting from pledges of support President Corazon Aquino received on her U.S. visit.

The Manila and Makati stock exchanges reported a total of 265 million shares traded Friday, compared to 135 million shares the previous day, with mark-ups in the prices of nearly all shares.

The Manila Bulletin and the Philippine Daily Inquirer quoted unidentified stock brokers as saying the trading was sparked by pledges of assistance made by President Reagan to Mrs. Aquino and the unprecedented warmth with which legislators greeted her speech to Congress.

The House passed and sent to the Senate a bill that would give the Philippines $200 million in addition to about $500 million in U.S. aid already approved for this year.

Approval of trade agenda 'major victory'

WORLD

PUNTA DEL ESTE, Uruguay (AP) — Delegates from around the world on Saturday approved the most far-reaching agenda for trade liberalization talks since the end of World War II. They included such controversial topics as barriers to foreign investment and copyright protection.

The agenda was approved by voice vote at the end of a weeklong conference of the 92-nation General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT).

U.S. Trade Representative Clayton Yeutter called it a major victory for the Reagan administration.

After heated debates and marathon bargaining at this Atlantic coast resort, GATT members agreed to discuss for the first time reductions in agricultural subsidies, restrictions on foreign investment, and barriers to trade in services such as banking and insurance.

They also agreed to draft a code dealing with copyright violations and other forms of "intellectual property rights."

In seven previous rounds of GATT talks, most recently in the late 1970s, negotiations have been restricted to commodities and manufactured goods.

"We got more than we thought," Yeutter told a news conference. "We have everything on the negotiating table that we had hoped for."

The actual trade talks are expected to begin late this year or early next year in Geneva and to last at least four years.

Yeutter said protectionist pressures from the U.S. Congress helped U.S. negotiators at Punta del Este press their case for lowering world trade barriers.

In a statement released by the White House, spokesman Larry Speakes said the new talks would be "an opportunity to expand trading opportunities for all nations."

He called Saturday's action "a significant victory for the president's strategy and a defeat for protectionism throughout the world."

Speakes said the framework agreement "offers hope to American workers, industries and farmers who suffer from the inadequacies of the international trading system. This is a significant step that can improve and strengthen GATT."

Japan also hailed the agreement. Chief Cabinet Secretary Masaharu Gotoda issued a statement in Tokyo saying Japan intends to play a positive role in making the new round of talks a success by cooperating with other countries in establishing a trading system that will contribute to peace and prosperity for the world in the 21st century.

Arthur Dunkel, managing director of GATT, told reporters, "One of the successes of this conference will be to solve in an imaginative way problems which have caused great difficulties over the past few years."

And Willy de Clerq, leader of the European Common Market delegation, said it "would have meant chaos" had the delegates failed to agree on new trade negotiations."

Getting some of the items on the agenda, however, required compromises forged in an all-night bargaining session that ended just hours before Saturday's final plenary meeting.

In one such compromise, Brazil and India dropped their opposition to including services in the new trade talks in exchange for a U.S. agreement to permit the negotiations on services to be held separately in Geneva from the talks on trade in goods.

The United States, Japan and most other industrialized nations had initially advocated a single forum for negotiations in all areas.

France backed away from its longtime opposition to discussing farm-export subsidies when the agenda wording was watered down to cover only subsidies that can be proven to have a "negative impact" on world trade.

Nations that do not subsidize their farm exports claim their farmers are at a disadvantage when competing in world markets with farmers from nations that do.

The United States, Australia, Canada and 12 other agricultural exporting nations in turn gave up their demand for a deadline to trim farm subsidies.

"This declaration does not fully meet our ideal," Australian Trade Minister John Dawkins said Saturday, but added, "With this declaration, we have placed agriculture firmly within the GATT framework."

Experts: Likely small group responsible for bombings

PARIS (AP) — Despite talk of a sophisticated web of support from hostile governments and international terror networks, experts say it is just as likely that five bloody bombings inflicted on Paris were the work of one small group, acting alone.

It is French political figures, not police, who have suggested possible links between the bombers and European terrorist groups or Middle Eastern governments out to damage French interests.

Premier Jacques Chirac has referred to possible retaliation against unspecified forces that may be "manipulating" the terrorists.

But building and planting small, powerful bombs in a bustling city such as Paris is not difficult and does not require a high-powered support network, said one terrorism specialist, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Police appear to be working under the same theory, focusing their search on nine reputed members of the Lebanese Armed Revolutionary Factions, known by its French initials, FARL.

Police issued a nationwide alert Friday, saying they wanted to question the nine in connection with bombings that have killed eight people and injured 164 beginning Sept. 8. Virtually all public places, including cinemas, restaurants and stores, say many people are staying home out of fear of more attacks.

According to police, FARL's core is the family of Georges Ibrahim Abdallah, a Lebanese Maronite Christian whose Marxist and pro-Palestinian beliefs put him at odds with the larger and more powerful Christian militias in Lebanon.

Experts who have studied the group for years say it never has had more than 25 members.

Investigators say witnesses identified a brother of Abdallah, Emile, as the man who threw a bomb Wednesday from a passing car in front of the Tati discount clothing store, killing five people and wounding 52 in the bloodiest single attack of the recent series.

Police also claim to have identified a second brother, Robert, as the man who spilled a drink on himself in a cafeteria Sept. 12, giving him a pretext to rush outside just before a package he left behind exploded.

The seven other people being sought include two other Abdallah brothers, Maurice and Joseph, another Lebanese man, Salim El Khoury, and four women — Jacqueline Esber, Caroline Esber El Bitar, Fayrouz Fayeh Daher and Ferial Daher.

Group warns bombing 'fire going to grow'

PARIS (AP) — A secret terrorist group that has claimed responsibility for five deadly bombings warned Saturday that more will follow, as the prisoner whose release the group is demanding was transferred from one jail to another.

"We have not halted our operations and we shall not halt them until freedom is achieved for the political prisoners in France," said a handwritten message delivered to a Western news agency in Beirut, Lebanon, in the name of the Committee of Solidarity with Arab and Middle East Political Prisoners.

"If not, the fire is going to grow, expand, continue and move," it said.

The statement said the organization was responsible for the latest Paris bombing, which killed five people Wednesday and injured 52 at a discount clothing store.

Previous statements issued in the group's name have claimed responsibility for four earlier bombings beginning Sept. 8, that killed three people and injured more than 100.

The committee is seeking the release of Georges Ibrahim Abdallah, jailed for weapons possession and purported to be the leader of the Lebanese Armed Revolutionary Factions. It also demands freedom for two Middle Eastern terrorists serving life sentences in France.

A Justice Ministry official said Abdallah was transferred Thursday from Fleury-Merogis prison outside Paris to La Sante Prison in the capital.

The ministry official, speaking on condition of anonymity, did not say Saturday why Abdallah was moved, but said he was transferred several times in the past for security reasons. He refused to elaborate.

Abdallah also faces charges of complicity in the assassinations of an American military attache and an Israeli diplomat.

Police have put out a nationwide alert for nine suspects in the bombings, including four women, a Lebanese man and four brothers of Abdallah — Joseph, Emile, Maurice and Robert.

Today will be partly cloudy with a 20 percent chance of afternoon thunderstorms. The high will be near 90 with winds south at 10 to 20 mph.

Tonight will be partly cloudy with a 40 percent chance of thunderstorms. The low will be in the upper 60s.

Monday will be mostly cloudy with a 50 percent chance of thunderstorms. Monday's high will be in the lower 90s.

Saturday's high of 84 degrees was 23 degrees cooler than the record high of 107 degrees set in 1953. The overnight low of 62 degrees was 22 degrees warmer than the record low of 40 degrees set in 1983.

STATE

There were scattered showers and thunderstorms over South Texas, coastal waters and the southern part of North Texas Saturday afternoon, as the eastern half of the state was partly to mostly cloudy.

Although southeastern Texas had considerable cloudiness, areas in the northwest had mostly sunny skies, and the rest of the state was partly cloudy, the National Weather Service said.

South to southeast winds breezed across most of the state at 5 to 15 mph. Sections of the High Plains had winds of 15 to 25 mph.

Temperatures at midafternoon were mostly in the 80s and 90s, with extremes of a rain-cooled 74 degrees at Austin and 94 at the Naval Air Station in Kingsville.

The forecast called for scattered mainly afternoon and evening thunderstorms through Sunday over North and South Texas and isolated late afternoon and evening thunderstorms over the southern part of West Texas. Otherwise, it should be fair and warm elsewhere through Sunday, the weather service said.

Getting off drugs has its own cost

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

"Drugs are menacing our society. They're threatening our values and undercutting our institutions. They're killing our children."

— President Ronald Reagan

President Reagan's recent televised plea for help in fighting America's war against drugs stressed the need to dry up the drug dealer's markets — get Americans off the stuff.

A noble cause to be sure. Yet some pragmatists argue it is a cause that may be unattainable.

"We (Texas) are last in the nation in terms of giving medical services to those with drug or alcohol problems," said Bob Savage, director of Midland's Palmer Drug Abuse Program.

"In Midland it's more popular for kids to do drugs than to not do drugs. So, I'd have to say at least 50 percent of the kids in Midland might be abusing drugs or alcohol right now," Savage said.

Clearview, the only medical detoxification facility in Midland, caters to those who can afford the estimated $400-a-day tab.

Dr. Joseph Wolpman, medical director at Clearview, said it can take about three to four days to "detox" a heroin addict, five to six days to detox an alcoholic and as long as two weeks to detox a valium addict.

"We've treated about 250 people since we opened last October," added Dr. Joseph Wolpman, medical director at Clearview.

"Out of that number, maybe 15 percent (roughly 37) have been charity cases," Wolpman said.

At New Horizons, a year-long, non-medical outpatient detoxification program, people pay "about one-fourth of what an in-patient rehabilitation program would cost," Director Robert Dickson said.

Suzan Conder/Reporter-Telegram

Dickson, former executive director of the Midland, Ector and Pecos county branches of the Texas Department of Mental Health and Mental Retardation (the primary source of funding for drug and alcohol abuse programs in the state) said that over the last six years, he's seen the government shift emphasis from treatment to enforcement.

Figures released by Savage show that in 1982, the U.S. spent $853 million on drug enforcement and $200 million on substance abuse treatment and prevention.

Savage said that in 1986, the U.S. projections show about $1.5 billion being spent on enforcement while only $125 million — $75 million less than four years ago — is expected to be spent on treatment and prevention.

Will financial backing like that help "dry up" the market — a market in which many can't afford the expensive detoxification centers?

What about the indigent teen-aged Midlander plagued with alcohol withdrawal-related seizures? What about the recently laid-off yuppie businessman with a nose for cocaine?

They might start their quest at the emergency room of Midland Memorial Hospital and a meeting with Alan Schroeder, director of social services at MMH.

"Many come in because they're either having or scared they might be having substance withdrawal seizures or muscle cramping and aching," Schroeder said.

"Or they've sincerely decided they want and need help," Schroeder said.

"I try to make the financial assessment and see if they would qualify under the indigent care policy guidelines.

"If I think they qualify or are sincere in their wish, I'll make a request for admission to the admitting doctor and psychiatrist," Schroeder said.

Schroeder said they are treated for symptomatic relief only — immediate relief at best, which he adds would probably cost in the neighborhood of $1,500 to $2,000.

"After the stay (which usually amounts to three to five days) they're released for in- or out-patient care most likely at Johnson Center (in Midland)," Schroeder said.

Johnson Center is the only intermediate in-patient yet non-medical detoxification center in Midland. It is run off a small grant of "less than $50,000 a year" from the Texas MHMR department.

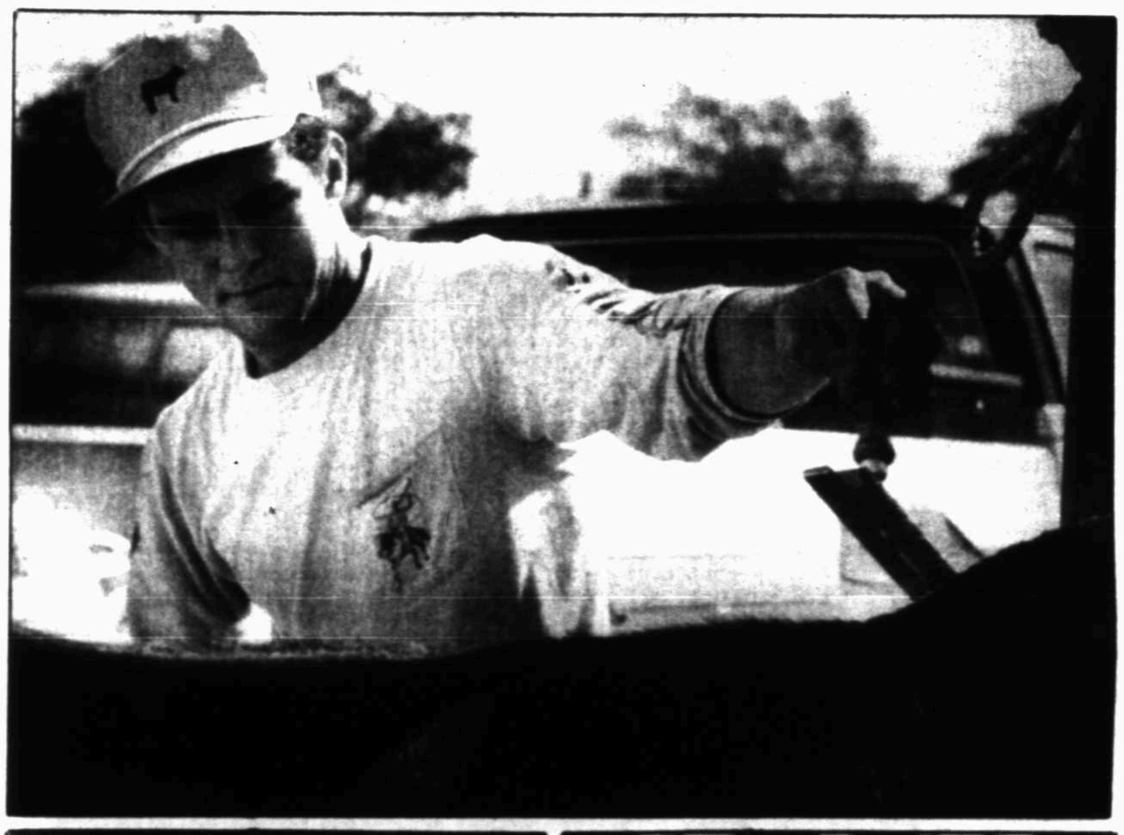

One must already be drug-free before he's eligible for admission to Johnson Center, Dickson said.

Anne Plumlee, MHMR substance abuse programs supervisor, laughed sadly when she said Johnson Center can accomodate a total of 12 patients.

"And with a turnaround time of about 90 days, you can see the problem," Ms. Plumlee said.

"If someone is eligible to pay 100 percent of the cost here, it would amount to about $30 a day. However, since I've been here, no one has ever been able to pay that amount," Ms. Plumlee said.

County grand juries, district attorneys discuss area crime

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — Ector and Midland County district attorneys and eight members of current grand juries will meet in Midland Tuesday morning to look at the result of a joint investigation of crime in the area and formulate recommendations concerning the possibility of cooperative efforts to effectively combat crime.

Ector County District Attorney Eric Augesen said the investigation has also looked at the increase in crime as it relates to drugs and alcohol in the Midland-Odessa area.

This will be the third joint meeting to be held, either of full grand juries from both counties or designated members of each grand jury.

Augesen said Tuesday's meeting will include Midland County District Attorney Al Schorre, four members of the Midland grand jury and four Ector County grand jury members.

The two county grand juries met September 10 to investigate drug problems in the two county area.

Following that meeting, Schorre said, "We're going to have to come up with some novel approach to solve the problem in both communities. We need total cooperation," he said.

Augesen said he would also like to see more cooperation between law enforcement agencies in both areas. "They cooperate when it's necessary," the Ector District Attorney said, "but I would like to see a joint effort between the two daily."

Augesen went on to say that "we've really grown to be one big city. Your problems are ours and ours are yours. We have to work as a unified force or we're letting the criminals work against us," he said.

Augesen said a computer linkup between the two cities' police departments would help track "those criminals fleeing back and forth to escape justice and would help monitor stolen goods."

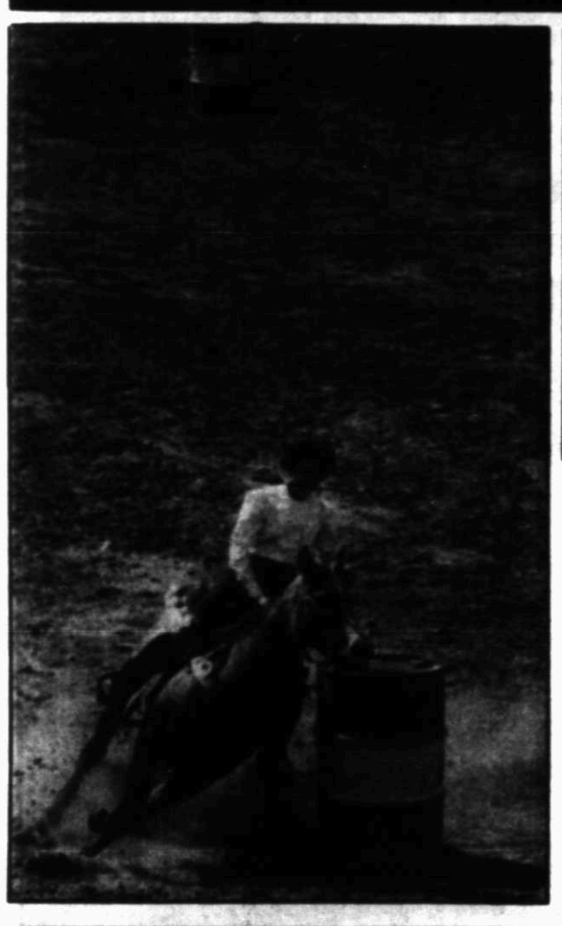

Schorre and Augesen have both estimated that "up to 90 percent" of burglaries and robberies are drug-related. According to Schorre, many other crimes can be directly traced to drug use.

Schorre termed the meetings between the two different county grand juries "unusual" and said, "I know of no other community in the state that has done this."

Augesen said the first joint meeting came about after Ector County grand jurors became aware of the correlation between the incidence of crime and drug use.

"They became interested in it and they have the power to investigate anything they choose. I'm delighted at their doing so because it's the biggest problem we have in this area," stated Augesen.

The meeting Tuesday between designated members of the two county grand juries and the two district attorneys is set for 10 a.m. in the Midland County Courthouse.

Council considers hiring psychological interviewer

By RAMONA NYE
Staff Writer

The City Council will consider Tuesday hiring a psychologist to interview seven final police chief candidates, said Deputy City Manager Fred Poe.

"We'll have this fellow interview fellows to be sure police work is the type of work that won't get to them," Poe said.

The Houston psychologist, David Wasson, will be paid travel expenses and $500 for each candidate interviewed if the council passes a resolution to hire him, Poe said.

"We just feel like it's a step that's worth the assurance it will cost," he said.

Wasson is being considered on a recommendation by the Bellevue, Wash., firm Jensen-Oldani, which is screening police chief candidates for the city.

Wasson screens law enforcement people on a routine basis, Poe said.

All candidates have been notified that finalists would be required to undergo a psychological analysis, he said.

However, some Midland candidates said they were not aware they might be required to be screened by a psychologist.

One candidate, Clayton McKinney, said although he had never been tested by a psychologist, it wouldn't bother him.

"I wouldn't be afraid to take one. I don't see what it could hurt.

"The City Council would certainly want them (the finalists) to take one," McKinney said.

McKinney, who is the head of criminal investigation at the Midland County Sheriff's office, said he was hired for that position about a year ago before mandatory psychological testing went into effect.

The sheriff's department is required by the Texas Commission on Law Enforcement Standards and Education to psychologically test all incoming officers, McKinney said.

All new Midland policemen who have never worked for law enforcement are screened by psychologists, Poe said.

Another candidate, Bob Peetz, said he also didn't know finalists would be screened by a psychologist.

GARY OTT

Another small victory for the old days?

When the man plopped down on the barstool next to me I could tell he was from out of town.

He was alone, looked weary and asked for a receipt when he ordered his drink, no doubt putting it on his expense account.

We were in one of those hotel lounges that are always semi-dark, feature middle-of-the-road music and cater to hordes of businessmen — mostly salesmen — who are in town for just a day or two.

When his drink arrived he gave me a brief nod. I returned it and lit a cigarette. Then I looked away.

"You from around here?" He obviously wanted to engage me — or anyone for that matter — in conversation. Spend enough time in places like this and you can usually tell when someone is in the mood to chat. He definitely was.

I complied, though it was a somewhat reluctant gesture. "Yeah. How about yourself?"

"Connecticut."

"Long way from home, aren't you?"

"Yep, and I'm ready to get back," he said in a voice that indicated he certainly meant it. "I have a wife and a new baby at home and I sure do miss them."

I smiled. "What kind of work are you in?"

He gave an answer but I can't remember what it was. Something in sales, I'm sure. To be honest, I was growing bored with conversation. I was halfway expecting him to bring out the most recent photographs of his child for me to admire.

He didn't. Instead, he asked me about the hair on my face. "How long have you had your beard?"

Slightly taken aback, I said, "Oh, I don't know, six or seven years, I guess."

"I used to have one, too. It was down to here," he said, pointing at the bottom of his chest. "I didn't cut it for five years."

"I bet your boss liked that," I said, jokingly.

He acknowledged my attempt at humor and then stated the obvious. "I was a hippie. I did a little artwork now and then, but mostly I was unemployed. Just got by, is all I did."

Hearing the word "hippie" made me chuckle. I never could figure out where it came from — someone who is hip, I guess.

"How'd you end up in a three-piece suit?"

"I'm not real sure," he said, bumming a cigarette from me. "It was gradual. I got a job working for a small advertising firm. It was a relaxed atmosphere, but I still had to trim my beard and cut my hair. Then I started wearing dress slacks and sports shirts. I did hold out against ties, though."

"A small victory for the old days?"

"Yeah, I guess you could say that. The only problem was, the pay was lousy. And, I was getting ready to get married. I needed more money. I asked for raise, but they said 'no.' Then my boss called me in and said if I would transfer into sales, he could give me more money."

"And now you wear three-piece suits and hang out in places like this," I said, unequipped to fend off a grin.

"You got it," he replied.

"Any regrets?"

"Sometimes," he admitted. "I miss the creative end of the business. Back then, it seems I had more individual freedom. My personal appearance was less important and more emphasis was put on my work. It was more satisfying. I could see the direct results of my efforts. Now, everything is more impersonal."

He paused briefly and ordered another drink.

Then he shrugged and said, "Of course, there's always the other side of the coin. I own my house and can buy things for my family that I never could before. We take nice vacations and I can offer opportunities to my daughter that would have been unthinkable just three years ago. In the end, I guess money talks."

It does. It does, indeed.

"The state has made drastic changes in it's funding emphasis," Ms. Plumlee said.

Ms. Plumlee and Dickson both explained that a few years ago, state hospitals which treated substance abusers as well as mental patients had some trouble with lawsuits resulting from alleged mismanagement of their facilities — the closest one to Midland being the Big Spring State Hospital.

The state hospitals settled out of court, Dickson said, and in an effort to upgrade the facilities, shifted financial emphasis to care of the mentally handicapped as opposed to substance abusers.

With this, came mandates on medical detoxification programs which ultimately ousted Johnson Center from the ranks of a medical detoxification center and into its present status as non-medical, Dickson said.

This funding shift has forced Big Spring State Hospital to cut its 80-bed capacity for substance abusers to 40 beds, Savage said.

Budget cuts and the policy changes that have more than halved Austin State Hospital's alcohol and drug abuse treatment services are depriving hundreds of potential patients of hospitalization, staff members contend.

The residential treatment program was reduced from 60 to 20 beds, the center lost one of its two buildings and the staff was cut from 76 to 31.

The cuts came as hospital officials ordered the unit to quit admitting patients who volunteered for treatment, said unit director Dr. Carl Morgan. Under that change, only court commitments — patients ordered to the center by a judge — are accepted for treatment.

"It's a tragic situation," Dan Bowie, executive director of the Greater Austin Council on Alcoholism and Drug Abuse, said. "We are talking about people's lives, not just shifting numbers. We are providing less and less service to more and more people in need."

So, in essence, if a Midlander has a drug or alcohol problem and doesn't have the money required for a medical detoxification program his options — at best — include: 1) a short stay at MMH to get symptomatic relief and 2) a long wait until one of the twelve beds at Johnson Center becomes available.

There are related programs, usually free, that provide a forum for counseling such as Alcoholics and/or Narcotics Anonymous, Wednesday night meetings at Johnson Center and a few church programs.

Should taxpayers bear the brunt for helping fellow citizens get off drugs?

Savage said many may say something to the effect of, "Those lazy bums...why don't they just quit..."

But "people need to realize that substance abuse is a disease — just like any other disease you can think of," he said.

And Wolpman said someone may not feel he should have to pay for people to get off drugs, but they could end up paying for it in the form of having their house burglarized by a drug addict in need of money for a fix or perhaps a drunk driver killing a family member.

"We're stopping roughly 10 street crimes a day when we cure one drug abuser," Wolpman said.

"We have to accept the fact — drug abuse affects all of us, not just 'them,'" Wolpman said.

At Dublin plant, Dr Pepper's still bottled the old-fashioned way

By PAUL LONG

DUBLIN (AP) — A photograph of S.H. Prim stares sternly across the office of the 95-year-old Dr Pepper bottling plant in Dublin, directly at a modern-day adertising poster for the soft drink company.

Prim, pictured in a three-piece suit and watch chain, founded the Dublin bottling plant — reportedly the oldest Dr Pepper plant in the world and one that clings stubbornly to tradition.

Prim was an original Pepper, and he didn't need a T-shirt to prove it.

Billie Kloster has carried on Prim's traditon for 51 years. Prim hired Kloster in 1933 as a bottle sorter. Kloster was 14, and he sorted those bottles for a dime an hour.

The 68-year-old Kloster is general manager of the bottling plant. It has been at 105 E. Elm since 1891.

Kloster says Dr Pepper was first bottled in Dublin. Company officials say they can't verify that, but they have no records to disprove it. One thing's for sure: Few things have changed at the Dublin plant.

And that's good for Dr Pepper freaks. Kloster still uses pure cane sugar in his brew. Most plants about 10 years ago switched to a cheaper corn syrup blend.

But you can only get it within a 40-mile radius of Dublin.

"That comes from way back in the horse and buggy days," Kloster said. "You couldn't deliver very far that way. I'm sure Mr. Prim picked up a pencil and drew a 40-mile circle around Dublin."

That plant serves Erath County, Comanche County, Hamilton County and parts of Hood and Eastland counties.

Kloster said several "regulars" who pass through town on business usually stop at the plant to pick up some old-fashioned Dr Pepper.

"This lady from Waco was in here one day trying to sell me some insurance," Kloster said. "Of course, I didn't need any. Anyway, I gave her a bottle to sample and handed her a carton for her dad because he was a longtime Dr Pepper fan. Her husband and son wanted to know why she didn't bring some for them. So next time she was here she picked up some for them.

"Another time an ol' boy was in here trying to sell me a copying machine. Of course, I didn't need one. Well, I gave him a couple of cases to take back to Fort Worth. He gave his boss a sample, and next time he was through here he had to pick up some for his boss."

Kloster said his plant and its 10 employees produce about $1 million a year in sales. Out of about 500 plants nationwide, Dublin ranks 18th in sales, just ahead of Newport, Ark., and behind Mount Pleasant, Texas.

The Dublin plant doesn't put Dr Pepper in cans, just bottles. It would be too expensive to replace the ancient bottling equipment. The new machines wouldn't fit in the old plant, which also produces Diet Dr Pepper, Sun Crest Orange, Frostie Root Beer, Nu Grape and 2 Way lemon-lime.

When the bottle-washer goes on the blink — a clanky machine made in 1946 — Kloster said he often visits a machine shop to have a part made.

"We just have to improvise," he said. "We use baling wire a lot."

The plant is owned by Prim's daughter, Grace Lyon. She's in her 80s and lives in a nursing home.

"She wants to keep the plant going as long as she's alive," Kloster said. "That's the only reason I'm staying. I could have retired three years ago. I've been here so long, I would hate to see it close. It's in my blood."

He said he doesn't know the future of the plant, say, five or 10 years from now. "That'll be up to the lawyers," Kloster said.

Prim had every reason not to hire Kloster. The Depression gripped America, and employers weren't hiring.

Wednesday's meeting will begin the annual six-week fundraising campaign which continues through Nov. 13.

This year a goal has not been set, rather "our goal is to raise every last penny we possibly can," said Wageman, who is heading up this year's campaign.

Wageman suggested that setting a goal would be disappointing especially if it was not met.

"I don't want to presume any amount. We need as much as we can get," Wageman said.

The Kick-Off luncheon also will feature results from this summer's Pilot Campaign, which started in mid-July. The Pilot Campaign included 19 companies that raised funds to give the General Campaign a head start.

Companies participating in the Pilot Campaign included City of Midland; ClayDesta National Bank; Compressor Systems, Inc.; Elcor Corp.; First City National Bank; HBF Corp.; Lynch, Chappell, Allday and Alsup; Magantex Corp.; Mervyn's; Midland Memorial Hospital; Midland Reporter-Telegram; Pennzoil; Petroplex Savings; RepublicBank First National; Southwestern Bell; Sun Exploration; Texas American Bank; TESCO and Texas Instruments.

Agencies to be funded by the United Way of Midland in 1987 are American Cancer Society; American Red Cross; Big Brothers/Big Sisters; Casa de Amigos; Boy Scouts of America; Boy's Club of Midland; Petro-Plains Camp Fire; Council on Alcoholism; Family Services of Midland; Midland Rape Crisis Center; Palmer Drug Abuse Program; Permian Basin Center for Battered Women and Their Children; Permian Basin Girl Scouts; Salvation Army; YMCA and United Way of Midland.

Man finds dynamite

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — Odessa police reported a man living at 1205 Bonham found two sticks of dynamite Saturday in an alley dumpster.

The man, whose name was not available, found the dynamite around 11:46 a.m. Saturday, police said.

The dynamite was disposed of at the Odessa police range, police said.

The investigation continues and no further information was available Saturday night.

Orange residents upset about contamination

ORANGE (AP) — Residents living near the county landfill have filed a complaint with the Texas Water Commission, asking the agency to investigate the source of lead found in their drinking water.

Several of the hundreds of residents potentially affected say they fear their drinking water is contaminated by the toxic metal, and that a test in December 1983 showing unusually high levels in one well has kept them concerned.

"We have 500 to 600 people living around this dump, and I think you ought to be concerned when it affects that many people," said Roland Wallace Norwood, whose drinking water in one test contained .12 parts per million of lead.

That level, found in Norwood's 95-foot-deep well, is more than double the safe level set by the U.S. Environmental Protection agency under the federal Safe Drinking Water Act. It is six times greater then the revised acceptable level recently proposed by the EPA.

The residents filed their complaint Friday, and on Thursday night, Norwood spoke during a Texas Water Commission hearing on the protection of groundwater supplies.

He said two follow-up tests in 1984 showed the lead level to be within the existing safety limits.

Commission spokesman Bill Colbert told Norwood the commission staff is equally concerned about possible lead contamination of drinking wells and that the commission's staff in Orange would investigate.

The Norwoods have long complained to Orange County officials about the operation of the landfill south of Interstate 10 between Orange and Vidor.

Norwood said he now is satisfied with the landfill operation, but added, "Now we're wondering about the batteries, with the lead and acids, that go in there, and how is it going to affect our health."

About 40 residents and local officials attended the hearing Thursday, where members of the water commission and Texas Water Development Board gathered comments on a plan to declare all of Orange County and a section of northern Jefferson County one of 17 critical groundwater areas in the state.

Water commission staff attorney Wade Russell said the water commission believes all those areas face the possibility of critical threats to either the supply or quality of groundwater used for drinking or by industry.

He said if study shows those concerns are valid, the state agencies might propose formation of an "underground water conservation district" in those areas.

Creation of the district, election of directors and in most cases any bond issues would be subject to approval by residents.

State officials set an Oct. 20 deadline for public comment on the issue.

The bar was broken into Saturday.

In other sheriff's reports, a $275 mower was taken from the yard of Raymond Edward Blevins, Route 3, Box 700-116. The mower was taken sometime between 3 a.m. to 5 a.m. Friday.

COUNCIL

"I have not been informed of any of their policies or procedures of the methods they are going to use to select the chief of police," Peetz said.

Peetz, who is a criminal justice program coordinator at Midland College, would not comment on his feelings about undergoing psychological screening.

"My application for chief of police is a personal thing between me and the city. I have no comment concerning any of the policies or procedures concerning the selection of the chief of police," he said.

Two other Midland candidates, Maj. Sid Corley, the acting police chief, and Patrick Fuller, an investigator with the Midland County District Attorney's office, were unavailable for comment.

Policemen are analyzed to make sure they are suitable to carry a gun and have contact with the public.

Although the new chief will have mainly administrative responsibilities, a psychological screening is important, Poe said.

"He's more in an administrative position, but he still has the same capability of all the other officers," Poe said.

Youth gets chance to set an example

That drugs, of both the old-line and new "designer" varieties, are damaging at least, and literally destroying, at most, the minds, bodies and lives of America's young people is an accepted fact. That they are doing the same to large numbers of them in Midland is no less true.

So what's new? One thing is the recently approved policy aimed at stemming drug and alcohol abuse among Midland school students. And while its intent is to reduce abuse among all our young people, it will focus on those participating in the many extracurricular activities in Midland's two high schools.

Thus, it will be directed toward those young men and women who, by their choice, go beyond what's required and who have taken the additional steps of becoming involved in athletics, band, choir and a host of other activities available to them. Among them are most, although not all, of the top achievers in our schools and those rated by their peers as being the best liked and most admired.

On the basis that membership and participation in these areas is a privilege, the board has toughened up and made consistent both the rules of conduct necessary for participation and the disciplinary action that will be taken if those are broken.

The hope of the board, and the real intent of the policy, is that it will encourage those visualized as leaders to set an example, that it will make it easier for them to "say no" to drugs and and that a ripple-down effect will result in drugs and alcohol becoming "socially unacceptable" forms of entertainment among our young.

Idealistic? Perhaps and even if that happens, as we hope it does, it will not happen quickly, of course, and school officials realize enforcement will be neither easy nor 100 percent possible. They also expect objections on the part of some students and parents, at least toward that part of the policy directed to student behavior beyond school hours and outside school-related functions. Likewise, there are bound to be some who would question the wisdom of a policy that includes the use of tobacco products, addictive and damaging to health though that can be, with alcohol, marijuana, amphetamines, hallucinogens, heroin and cocaine, although the penalties differ.

Even so, we believe the action is an important one in that it goes to the heart of the drug problem of young people — the area of peer pressure. In the September issue of Reader's Digest, six pages are devoted to an article entitled "Kids Against Drugs" and in it the point is made that most parents, while recognizing the role peer pressure plays, have no conception of how strong it is among the targeted age group, its strength compared to being "almost like an alcoholic living in a bar."

The new policy, only part of MISD's overall anti-drug program, comes at a time when similar efforts are being made on the national level through the leadership of President and Mrs. Reagan, in Congress via a host of proposed pieces of legislation and, perhaps more importantly, throughout the nation in cities, large and small, where young people themselves are addressing this growing tragedy. Their organizations include PUSH (Prevention Using Student Help) which already has a presence in Midland's junior, freshman and senior high schools.

Other acronyms spell out the growing number of young people becoming involved in the battle against drugs — TNT (Teens Needing Teens), PEP (Peers Educating Peers); SOS (Support Other Students); and STOPP (Students to Offset Peer Pressure).

During a time when drugs are being manufactured quickly and sold more cheaply, when new forms, more powerful than those that preceded them, are becoming easier and easier to obtain, action at the community level is no longer merely desirable. It is a must.

We hope Midland's policy will send a message to all our young people that those who choose to "say no" are NOT nerds or twits or wimps but that, whatever their academic ranking, they are really the smart ones and they care about their minds, their bodies and their lives.

Perhaps, as a result, an increasingly large number of Midland's students will realize that health and happiness are no more compatible with drug abuse than fun is synonymous with it.

Bill Jackson, MISD board president, says the greatest favor that can be done for children is to make it easy for them to do the right thing. If the new policy makes it easier for only a few of Midland's young people to "say no" to drugs, will it be worth the effort and whatever cost in personal freedom it involved?

We believe it will be.

It's time to toast U.S. Constitution

WASHINGTON — One year from now, the United States will celebrate the bicentennial of the Constitution — the supreme law of our land, the framework of the freedom Americans enjoy.

Jack Anderson

With Chief Justice Warren Burger in charge, it's safe to predict there'll be none of the Hollywood hoopla that attended July's extravagant salute to the Statue of Liberty. Frank Sinatra croaking a ballad to a piece of parchment sealed under glass? Three hundred Elvis look-alikes gyrating around the Archives Building in Washington? Forget it.

The Constitution's "visuals" are hopeless for our video age. It would take genius almost equal to that of James Madison and the other framers of the venerable document to convey the excitement of the revolutionary ideas and ideals contained in the Constitution. As inspirational documents go, the Constitution can't compete with the Declaration of Independence, with its ringing denunciations of tyranny and the heroic vision it conjures up of a courageous band of rebels thumbing their noses at the greatest earthly power of their time.

The Declaration was the inspiration that rallied patriots to a desperate cause, and became the soul of the new nation. But it remained for the Constitution — dry as dust, lawyerly, weighted with political compromise as the Declaration never was — to put flesh and muscle on the bare bones of the struggling young republic. The Bill of Rights, added soon afterward, was the heart, and the Constitution emerged as a living document, a testament to freedom that has been often imitated but never matched.

We would do well to remember the importance and the meaning of the Constitution in these days of impatience with the sometimes querulous demands of civil rights advocates and dissenters. The principles on which the Constitution was based are in danger of being eroded, if not washed away, by the wave of sentiment for "law and order." It is often those who pay the loudest homage to the Constitution who are the first to forget that it guarantees protection for everyone — the downtrodden and despicable as well as the dynamic and devout.

Two unrelated events bring this into perspective: an interview with President Reagan on what the Constitution means to him, and the arrest of U.S. News & World Report journalist Nicholas Daniloff in Moscow on trumped-up espionage charges.

What the president said and what the Soviets did are compelling justification for our view that the Constitution is our greatest national treasure. We could survive as a nation without Yellowstone National Park, or even the rich farmland of the Great Plains. But we could not survive without the freedoms that the Constitution guarantees us.

A question we asked the president triggered his thoughts about the Constitution. Reagan is not renowned as a scholar, but he has a knack — an instinct, maybe — for grasping the essentials in a form that most of his countrymen readily understand. We asked him about the Founding Fathers.

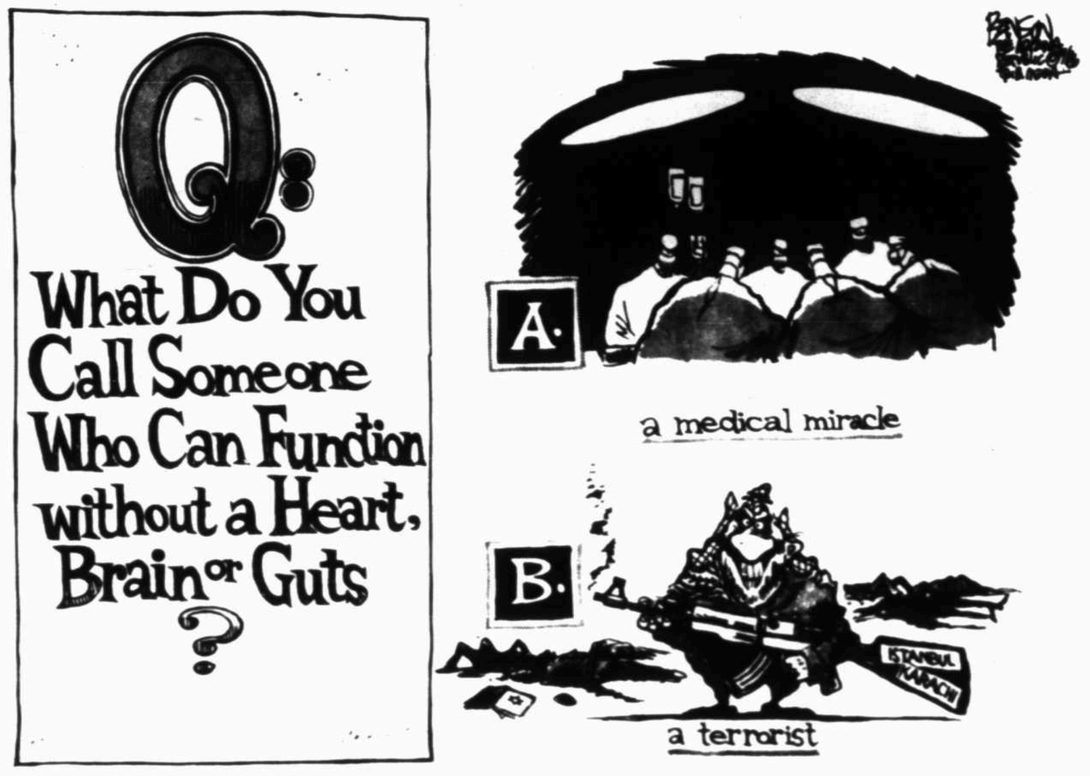

"The world has never quite seen their like at a key point in history," Reagan said. "That revolution was more than the kind of revolution we've seen in other countries. ... That was a philosophical revolution. They weren't just rebelling against a king. They sat down and those men — some of them from professions, some of them from trades, some of them farmers — but between them, they said for the first time in the history of mankind, 'Government is the servant of the people.'"

"Our constitution says, 'We the people' grant the following powers to the government and the government can have no other powers except those we have listed herein."

And that, Reagan concluded, makes all the difference in the world.

So let's toast the Constitution — with vodka, if that's your choice — and thank God for what a few good men gave us 199 years ago.

GEORGE F. WILL

New novel not a look at law as it's practiced

WASHINGTON — Robert Service, the lawyer who is protagonist of Louis Auchincloss' new novel, "Diary of a Yuppie," keeps flowers in his office "because they are my idea of what is at once civilized and savage." The legal profession, as he practices it, is decidedly more the latter than the former.

George F. Will

Many Americans feel that lawyers are morally problematic. That notion is writ large in NBC's new series, "L.A. Law." Such distrust of the legal profession involves uneasiness about some national premises.

Lawyer-bashing was a literary sport long before Dickens' "Bleak House." Television is always imitative and "L.A. Law" plumbs the (we are supposed to assume) shallows of lawyers' souls as they misbehave, stirring up conflict to stir up business. Such lawyer dramas often are football for the psychologically sedentary — outlets for emotional aggression. Our adversary system of law can, of course, be much grander than the "L.A. Law" caricature of it. And even the most reptilian characters in "L.A. Law" are not as interestingly dislikable as Robert Service.

Butter would not melt in his mouth, from which come self-assessments that are astringently unflattering, yet complacent. Service (note the droll choice of a name; Auchincloss leaves no stone unthrown in laboring his point) is under 40. He thinks, dispassionately: "I guess you have to have been born after World War II to be a real skunk."

But the questions that interest Auchincloss, and make lawyering so interesting, go to the heart of American values. They are: Is there an "ethic of self-interestedness"? Are there moral restraints on such an ethic?

A fictional lawyer is a useful foil for exploring those questions because a lawyer is paid to be an energetic servant of, not a moral auditor of, his client's interests. Service's "Diary" of self-absorption begins, suitably, with the first person singular pronoun: "I have been working such long hours on this last corporate takeover...." An older lawyer disapproves of the takeover trade: "The old robber barons at least covered our land with rails and factories. But their successors simply devour one another." But the older man has a bleak anthropological explanation for young lawyers' enthusiasm for takeovers: "Maybe its your generation. God is dead, and the frontier is gone, and there are no wars to fight, and a man must still use his fangs and claws. After all, there has to be some fun in life!"

When the older lawyer objects to Service's use, on a client's behalf, of damaging personal information scavenged from an adversary's wastebasket, Service asks: "Isn't it our duty to use every fact at our disposal?" Repelled by the older lawyer's fastidiousness, Service betrays his old firm by founding a new one for fierce young lawyers "who would do anything for a client that could be lawfully done."

Service says that in today's moral climate, law is a game. The game has strict rules, the breaking of which involves penalties but no moral opprobrium, any more than it is considered immoral to be offside in football.

Money is power and power involves moral responsibility, so the pursuit of money is a subject for serious literature, and Auchincloss has made it his specialty. His story of the yuppie lawyer raises a question especially pertinent in a conservative decade: If free markets are morally mandatory social arrangements, should they be free from all but minimal moral as well as governmental regulation?

The central question of American life concerns the moral limits on an ethical principle: The principle is the pursuit of happiness through the exercise of self-interest. American public philosophy and rhetoric has always featured a breezy frankness and an easy conscience about, aggressive self-interestedness. The Constitution uses a physics of interests (separation of powers; rival institutions checking and balancing one another) to regulate social aggression.

But Americans are and ought to be permanently uneasy about the question of limiting aggression on behalf of private interests. The uneasiness often expresses itself in depictions of lawyers as especially amoral, as hired guns offering allegiance only to the highest bidders.

However, the swinish behavior of some characters in "L.A. Law," and the minimalist ethic (anything not illegal is permissible) of Auchincloss' yuppie, are especially repellent precisely because there is a higher ethic implicit in the logic of the law, just as a controlling ethic is inherent in the practice of medicine.

Medicine has a morally directing goal: health. The controlling objective of the law is justice. It is served, not mocked, by an adversary process because that process has evolved an elegant ethic of reasonableness (particularly, fidelity to precedent), and professional standards of due process in serving clients.

Looking down on others is the lazy person's path to self-esteem. Scorning lawyers is a luxury enjoyed by persons whose moral self-satisfaction derives from living down to standards less exacting than those by which most lawyers strive to live.

No chain saws?

Oxfam America, a private relief agency, was given permission last year to send seeds and agricultural implements to Nicaragua. This was possible because "humanitarian" aid is exempted from a United States trade embargo against the Sandinista regime. But last week, a similar application was rejected by the State Department because "such transactions are inconsistent with current United States foreign policy." The deeper inconsistency is the administration's double standard regarding the slippery word "humanitarian."

Reading the fine print of Oxfam's application, the department determined that two chain saws, mimeograph machines and spare parts for farm equipment could be used for military purposes by Managua. It also faulted as "incorrectly described" Oxfam's listing of the beneficiaries as a Catholic social action group and an agricultural college; the Catholics were "popular Catholics" and the school a government agency, which according to state makes them fronts for the Sandinistas. That may be so, though Oxfam disputes it. But Washington's idea of "humanitarian aid" becomes wonderfully elastic when the aid is for the Nicaraguan rebels. After Congress balked last year at supplying weapons to the "contras," the administration won approval for $27 million in such "humanitarian" aid as boots, uniforms and food supplies. That turned usage on its head; as defined in international conventions, "humanitarian" aid is for civilian victims of armed conflict, not combatants.

It may also be that Oxfam's purposes are political: to register dissent from a Nicaragua policy that many other Americans also oppose. But the United States is not a totalitarian state, and the administration itself actively promotes private contributions to the "contra" cause. The amount involved is small — $41,000 in seeds and equipment — but the principle isn't. Instead of straining at gnats while it swallows camels, the administration should reverse this petty decision. If chain saws are the problem, Oxfam offers to drop them from the shipment.

RUSSELL BAKER

There are things anti-smokers don't tell you!

After I stopped smoking I caught a cold that lasted a year and a half. Then I started getting fat. I had never been fat before, and didn't much like it, though it wasn't as bad as the 18-month cold.

Russell Baker

The anti-smoking zealots never tell you these things can happen to you after kicking the habit. They are like Karl Malden, who is always telling you how happy American Express will be to replace your stolen traveler's checks but never bothers to tell you that if their serial numbers are stolen too, you're out of luck, sweetheart.

All right, no salesman ever won the gold watch and 10-day trip to beautiful Waikiki by dwelling on the down side of life, and the anti-smoking people are selling, just like Karl Malden, Cliff Robertson and the Rev. Jerry Falwell, all of whom use the same pitch: do it their way and you will be very, very happy.

I am not very, very happy about being a non-smoker. True, after nearly two and a half years off tobacco I have lost all desire to resume and will concede that it was a wasteful and messy habit. This is not the same as being happy.

In fact, I was distinctly unhappy about having to take the trousers of my Sunday suit to Kim the tailor the other day. I'd been unable to fit into those pants all summer. I could do it last spring, but sitting down was nearly impossible.

The last time I'd tried — at a dinner party — the intense pain around my waist reminded me of the antepenultimate scene in "Captains Courageous," in which Spencer Tracy, having been cut in two by steel cables, suppresses what must have been a compelling urge to scream and manages, instead, to smile at Freddie Bartholomew.

"Why are you smiling like Spencer Tracy?" asked my hostess that night at dinner. I couldn't tell her it was because something about my present situation made me marvel at how little she resembled Freddie Bartholomew: I was too busy trying not to faint.

Despite that incident I didn't go immediately to Kim the tailor. The 18-month cold, after all, had finally given up and left me alone. Maybe the fat would do the same.

At this stage I knew that giving up smoke was a lot harder than its advocates intimated. They conceded there would be a little suffering as the body contended with its nicotine addiction and conditioned reflexes, but they didn't bother to mention other ordeals to come, such as the 18-month cold.

You can't blame them. These people believe they are on a noble mission. To rid the world of smoke. To save millions from smoky deaths. Crusaders find it even easier than the rest of us to behave unscrupulously, because whereas the rest of us do it only for money or lust, crusaders, having a noble cause, can say they're treating us unscrupulously for our own good.

So I figured the 18-month cold was a natural result of giving up tobacco, which the anti-smoke folks had kept secret for my own good. The fattening that took over after the cold quit was probably the second natural consequence, about which those sly Samaritans had also neglected to warn me.

So maybe, like the cold, the fat would also go away after a few more months, and then I could again take a walk without the sensation of carrying heavy luggage.

I was wrong. The fat did not go away. Instead, I went to Kim the tailor. "I'll let it out an inch and three-quarters," he said, but maybe you'd like me to open it up an extra inch for the 10 pounds you'll put on this winter."

"Absolutely not. I shall diet."

"That's what they all say," Kim said. "You ought to try smoking. Much better than dieting for holding the weight down."

So now it's on to dieting, and I'm afraid. Afraid of changing my diet, my faithful old diet that carried me safely through the Great Depression, three major wars, the onset of the television and nuclear ages, and the rebirth of conservatism. I don't feel easy about giving up a winning diet.

And suppose I lack the willpower to do it. They said it would be hard to stop smoking, and it was, but I did it. Though they didn't say it would be hard living with the 18-month cold, it was, but I did it anyhow. Though they didn't say it would be hard wearing a smoke conqueror's abdomen in my Sunday suit, it was, yet I did it through an entire dinner without fainting.

I know about dieting, though. Know it's even harder than giving up smoking. I didn't go through the agony of giving up smoking so I could experience the higher agony of dieting. I shall tell Kim to let out the waist that extra inch. In many a fat man there is a thin smoker who finally ran out of willpower.

Modisett

Pete Snelson tells the story confidently but with a sheepish grin that betrays his embarrassment at talking about compliments he has received.

He was speaking to a group in San Antonio, the former state senator recalled, when a woman addressed him.

"I like you just the way you come across — you're confident, dignified and you have a manner that makes me trust what you say and your actions," she told Snelson.

Snelson probably felt a little uncomfortable being made the object of such attention. He's been in politics since 1960 and previously held the distinction of being named one of the "deans" of the Texas Senate, but he seems more comfortable talking to others about their concerns than being made the object of someone else's concern.

Still, it shouldn't have come as a surprise to the man who for two decades represented the people of Midland and the remainder of West Texas in the state senate in Austin. Snelson is a good listener, a man who has called West Texas home all his life and who is equally at ease walking small town streets or discussing the intricacies of a major congressional race.

He spent 20 years in the State Capitol, before losing a bid for the Texas Land Commissioner's seat. When current U.S. Rep. Tom Loeffler announced he would seek the Republican nomination for governor, supporters asked Snelson to seek the Democratic nomination in that race. So, now Snelson wants to communicate the district's needs and concerns to the leadership in Washington, D.C. Like providing stability to the vital oil industry.

"A nation of this size cannot allow such a basic strength area to be dismantled," he argues. "You know we've got to have gasoline and kerosene or whatever to run our tanks and our planes."

But for all his old school Texas conservatism and political savvy, Snelson also is an anachronism — a Democrat running for the congressional seat in a district that is largely Republican during a time in which being a Democrat may not be viewed as particularly advantageous.

That doesn't discourage Snelson. He believes he will win the election by knocking off former Bexar County commissioner Lamar Smith of San Antonio. What's more, he may be able to do exactly that — foiling the designs of those who a number of years ago drew the 21st Congressional District to ensure retaining its Republican integrity.

The 21st District still has that "Republican integrity," Snelson concedes but quickly adds that there's more involved in this particular race. Part of it is familiarity with the candidates. Pete Snelson is a familiar name in Midland and in San Angelo, but also in Kerrville and throughout the Texas Hill Country. The sprawling land mass that comprises the 21st District — 25 full Texas counties and part of a 26th — has been Snelson's backyard for more than two decades. He feels comfortable in this land. And, obviously, the residents of the region feel comfortable with Snelson looking after their interests in government.

As for switching his involvement from state to the federal government, Snelson says he anticipates no difficulties. A congressman, he says, is basically a communicator — taking the concerns and interests of the region to government — and, he adds, "...of course that's been my lifelong role."

Lifelong because, prior to his entry into the world of government, Snelson studied and eventually taught journalism. Before coming to Midland in 1955 and founding Snelson Advertising, he was vice president of Odessa College. Earlier he had served as assistant professor of journalism at the University of Texas at El Paso.

There are other aspects to Pete Snelson's life many West Texans may not know. One is that he fought with the 44th Infantry in World War II and received the Bronze Star and Purple Heart for wounds received in combat in France. Another is that he was honored by being elected president of the Texas Jaycees for 1957-58 and later was named by the U.S. Jaycees as "Outstanding State President."

More than anything, though, the political arena has been Snelson's life and that's why seeking the congressional seat seems to come to him so naturally. One of the undisputable plusses for Snelson in his campaign is that he has never waged political battle on a partisan platform, although he is a Democrat and doesn't feel obliged to explain away that affiliation.

"Good people are needed in both parties," he says.

As justification for his belief that he will win in November, Snelson says he anticipates more split-party voting this November than in previous Texas elections. There is validity to the claim that Texas voters look at the candidate and not the party label, he contends.

Traveling throughout the district, Snelson says he particularly enjoys talking to people in one-on-one situations. That's likely because he is personable, putting those around him at ease immediately and gaining their confidence through his sincerety and interest.

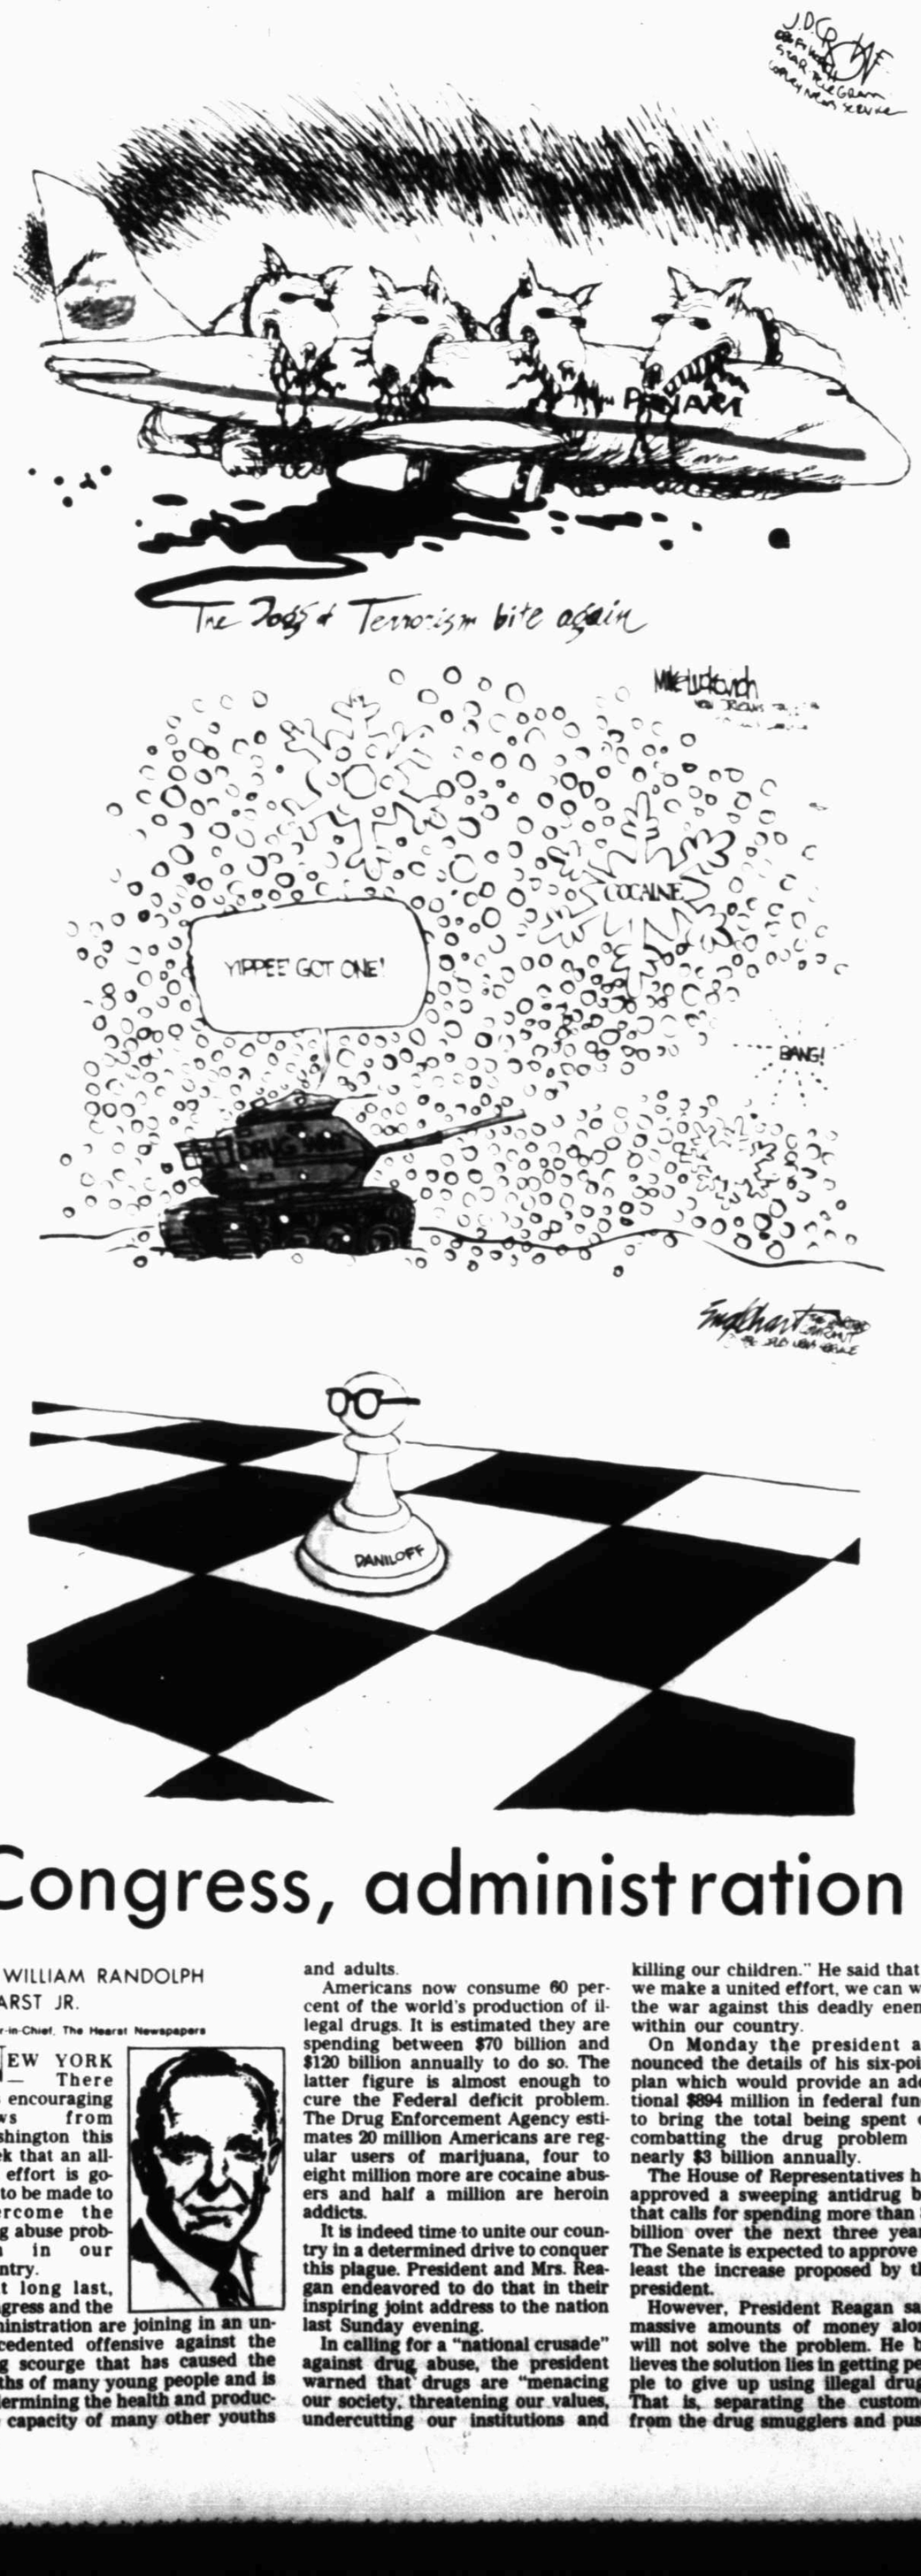

"People like to look up to people in office, but at the same time they like to be on the same level with you," Snelson says.

For Pete Snelson, establishing that level of rapport only involves being himself. From hometown Grandfalls to downtown Midland, to bustling San Antonio, Snelson's amiable nature keeps him from meeting many strangers. He's as comfortable in the district as though he's traveled throughout it his entire life. But then, he has.

Channel 2's reports unfair to restaurants

I am not in the food business but I do make my living as a businessman in the Permian Basin.

The recent outbreak of shigellosis in the area caused us all concern as most of us, I am sure, had acquaintances who were afflicted by it in some manner.

The outburst concerning this, created by Brian Wood and Mike Barker on KMID-TV, Channel 2, in which without really knowing the facts, they immediately pointed an indignant finger at area restaurants, is a typical example of the yellow journalism to which we have all been subjected by area television newscasters, particularly those on Channel 2.

They not only vilified the restaurants, but also the scientists on the local boards of health by intimating that these people were purposely withholding information.

Both Brian Wood and Mike Barker have the job of reporting the news. They are not licensed to demonstrate their personal indignation or ire concerning it. They are neither businessmen nor scientists and their actions demonstrate that they are not even reporters.

Midlanders can add their prayers for peace

Everywhere we turn people are talking peace, writing peace, and religious groups knock on our doors to speak to us of peace. It seems to be one thing on which the human race is in agreement. We must have peace or perish.

We are not alone. The "Million Minutes of Peace International Appeal," which began Sept. 16 and will continue through Oct. 16, will unite our prayers at the same time each day in 42 countries all over the world.

This global initiative is capturing the imagination of people all over the world because it is designed with the purpose of bringing together people from diverse backgrounds in a program to espouse and support peace, and to unite us once each day for a month of prayer.

The unifying and symbolic component of the program is that individuals, families, and community groups will essentially donate to the appeal, Minutes for Peace, through positive thoughts, meditation, or prayer.

The appeal will climax on Oct. 16 at large public programs in major cities of the world. A spectacular international celebration will be held in New York City on Oct. 22 at the Cathedral of St. John the Devine. This event will be followed by a thematic international presentation of multi-minutes of peace to the Secretary General of the United Nations on United Nations Day, Oct. 24.

For those who wish to participate locally, our time to join with millions around the world will be at 6 a.m. each day through Oct. 16.

If you wish to register the time you, your family, church or group wish to donate to Minutes of Peace, you may write P.O. Box 2492, New York, NY 10163, or phone 212-557-6251 or 718-424-3091 from 9 a.m. until 8 p.m. each day.

Are we ready to give up our rights to choose?

I've been patiently waiting for someone to come to Bill Kent's defense. So far I've seen only one letter that supported Mr. Kent's purpose. How sad.

I think it's important to state that this is not a religious issue. This is an issue of constitutionality.

To quote an out-of-character Rev. Jerry Falwell in a sermon he gave on March 21, 1965..."Does the 'church' have any command from God to involve itself in marches, demonstrations or any other actions, such as many ministers and church leaders are so doing today, in the name of civil rights reforms?..."

So far we've all had the right to read or not read any material we choose. If certain publications are to be banned, what's next? Is someone going to go through the library and choose which books we can and can't read? It's happened before...

Law enforcement car wanted for big splash

This letter is in regard to a telephone call I made today to the editorial department.

Last week I was coming from south going north on Andrews Hwy. somewhere between the school and Carrows (closer to Carrows, I might add). The street was dry and traffic was going normally. I was on the left and along came a car that deliberately raced through an area on the right side and hit a hole or opening in the road and splashed my car.

Yesterday I went to get my car washed as usual. The carwash couldn't get the spots off and I was told I would have to have a special job done on it. It would cost about $67 and they didn't know if that would do the trick.

I really am asking if you know of a cream-colored police or sheriff car with a gold badge marking on the door. I went to the Sheriff's department at the courthouse and to the police station, but it was not their type of emblem. I would also like to add the sheriff in the car was a pickle-puss. He just stared at me and I stared back at him. He hit that hole so hard it made my windshield so I couldn't see through it.

The head sheriff at the courthouse said it might be an out-of-town sheriff, they had some helping with traffic at the school, or it may have been one just passing through. The emblem on the door was marked "Sheriff" in large, black letters. He sure was rude. My Cougar is a mess, even the windshield has markings after two washes.

County commissioners display their 'wisdom'

The county commissioners have again shown their "wisdom" to the electorate of Midland. At their Sept. 9th meeting, they criticized the Midland Sheriff's Office for the 960 hours of overtime accrued providing law enforcement. They further criticized the cost of $6,500 for liability for the department's helicopter (again to provide law enforcement). Yet, they had already found it absolutely necessary to fund yet another study for the purpose of determining the criminal justice requirements for the next 20 years.

A 20-year predictive study works about as well as the five-year plans the Russians had (and remember, they had total control!). I am certain there exists more than one county employee with the ability to ferret out a few thousand square feet of office space convenient to the courthouse. $57,000 would pay for such office space and the support requirements for a considerable time. I'm sure that any manager of a downtown building would be more than happy to negotiate such a lease and might provide free parking! In view of the above decisions, we could additionally save in excess of $125,000 per year by adopting a policy from the city government. Simply rescind the salaries of the commissioners. After all, the City Council members and the mayor all serve for approximately $25 per month and they have the responsibility of a much greater number of personnel, buildings, and budgets!

City holds annual car glass chipping contest

I see it is that time of year when the City of Midland sponsors its annual car paint and glass chipping contest, by providing a rock surface in a loose condition on streets and roads.

I personally would rather contribute toward utilizing a roller to put these rocks in place rather than having them thrown on the front and undersides of my car and on my windshield, and perhaps some of the cost of purchasing this rock could be reduced, as more of it would actually go into the pavement rather into people's yards, parks and driveways.

This is another example of the disregard that some of the City of Midland employees have for those who furnish their salaries through taxation.

Students make mess of areas around offices

I have just returned from the doctors' offices at the corner of Illinois and C Street. I have never seen such a mess, and I mean mess, around their offices. We complained last year to the school about the students eating their lunches and throwing their trash on the ground and tromping it into the ground. It seems something could be done to stop this. Maybe like making them clean it up.

These are high school students; they are near to becoming men and women. Do they not have any respectability?

You are already ill when you go to the doctor's office and when you see all that garbage, you feel worse. Can we stop this? Talk about Clean Midland!

Congress, administration join fight against drug use

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.
Editor-in-Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

NEW YORK — There was encouraging news from Washington this week that an all-out effort is going to be made to overcome the drug abuse problem in our country.

At long last, Congress and the administration are joining in an unprecedented offensive against the drug scourge that has caused the deaths of many young people and is undermining the health and productive capacity of many other youths and adults.

Americans now consume 60 percent of the world's production of illegal drugs. It is estimated they are spending between $70 billion and $120 billion annually to do so. The latter figure is almost enough to cure the Federal deficit problem. The Drug Enforcement Agency estimates 20 million Americans are regular users of marijuana, four to eight million more are cocaine abusers and half a million are heroin addicts.

It is indeed time to unite our country in a determined drive to conquer this plague. President and Mrs. Reagan endeavored to do that in their inspiring joint address to the nation last Sunday evening.

In calling for a "national crusade" against drug abuse, the president warned that drugs are "menacing our society, threatening our values, undercutting our institutions and killing our children." He said that if we make a united effort, we can win the war against this deadly enemy within our country.

On Monday the president announced the details of his six-point plan which would provide an additional $894 million in federal funds to bring the total being spent on combatting the drug problem to nearly $3 billion annually.

The House of Representatives has approved a sweeping antidrug bill that calls for spending more than $4 billion over the next three years. The Senate is expected to approve at least the increase proposed by the president.

However, President Reagan said massive amounts of money alone will not solve the problem. He believes the solution lies in getting people to give up using illegal drugs. That is, separating the customer from the drug smugglers and pushers. He considers this the most important part of his new program. "Nothing," he said, "would be more effective than for Americans simply to quit using illegal drugs."

Achieving this goal should, he feels, be the main objective of the national crusade. He and Mrs. Reagan hope that every individual, every family will dedicate themselves to doing something in their own neighborhood to discourage the use of illegal drugs, such as volunteering their services to local schools in anti-drug activities.

Another of the main points in the president's program calls for the expanded public awareness and education in the schools about the dangers of drug abuse. He has directed the Secretary of Education to issue a pamphlet to provide parents, school officials, students and communities with reliable and practical information about the problem of school-age drug use and what can be done to achieve drug-free schools.

Joe Kingsbury Smith, our national editor in Washington, reminded me that when Gen. Eisenhower first took over as commander of NATO forces in 1950 and was striving to secure European public support for the Atlantic Alliance, he favored establishment in every village, town and urban district of 12 "apostles" to preach and promote understanding of the need for NATO. This might be a good idea for the anti-drug crusade here at home.

One of President Reagan's proposals which has aroused considerable controversy is drug testing of federal employees who hold security sensitive positions. Civil liberties' groups and public employees' unions have protested that this would be an invasion of privacy.

Why would any decent American, especially one involved in national security or air travel safety, object to being tested to provide assurance that he or she was not a user of illegal drugs? I think the same applies to the private sector, especially in defense-related factories.

According to Pentagon officials, illegal drug use in the armed services dropped 67 percent after testing became compulsory. A recent Newsweek-Gallop poll showed a strong majority of high school teachers and students, air pilots, government workers and professional athletes favored drug testing. So the public doesn't seem to be as opposed to it as the civil libertarians media pundits would lead us to believe.

Let us join with President Reagan and Congress in doing everything we can as individuals to support the national crusade to free our homeland from the drug scourge, and continue to do so as long as it is necessary to win this war.

MISD names new administrators

From Staff Reports

Two new elementary school principals and an acting high school principal are on staff for the new school year in the Midland Independent School District.

MISD trustees also made several other new administrative appointments.

Appointed acting principal at Lee High School was Henry Kitzman.

Kitzman joined MISD in 1964 and served as teacher and coach at San Jacinto and Edison (now Midland Freshman High School). He served as assistant principal at Goddard before becoming assistant principal at Lee High School in 1976. He earned his bachelor's degree from Southwestern University and his master's from Southwest Texas State University.

Replacing Kitzman as acting assistant principal at LHS is David Dennis who has been a teacher, counselor and dean in MISD since 1973.

Dennis has a bachelor's degree from Texas Tech University and a master's from Phillips University.

Assuming Dennis' duties as acting dean at San Jacinto Junior High School is Paul Brooks who earned both his bachelor's and master's degrees from East Texas State University.

Brooks previously worked in the MISD bilingual education office, for the Region 18 Education Service Center, Midland College and in school districts in Greenville, and Balboa, Canal Zone.

The new elementary school principals are Kathleen Baker and Dr. Marillyn Odum.

Ms. Baker, who is serving as principal of Houston and West, earned her bachelor's and master's degrees from The University of Arizona. She is currently a doctoral candidate at Texas Tech University.

Prior to her appointment as principal, Ms. Baker served as administrative intern at Rusk, Milam and West Elementary Schools. She was a teacher at Santa Rita and Lamar Elementary Schools and also taught at two elementary schools in Arizona.

Ms. Odum comes to Midland from the Fairfax County Public Schools in Great Falls, Va., where she served as elementary specialist, assistant principal, staff specialists, resource teacher, and reading specialist.

She has also served as reading lab director and as a social studies/language arts teacher with the Dallas Independent School District. Ms. Odum earned her bachelor's and master's degrees at The University of Texas at Austin and her doctorate from Peabody College of Vanderbilt University. She is serving as principal of Jones Elementary.

Other new administrative appointments for the 1986-87 school year include Dr. Grace Osadchuk as fine arts supervisor, and Bill Maurer and Carroll Calhoun as administrative interns.

Ms. Osadchuk, who joined MISD in 1985 as a music teacher, earned her bachelor's from Northeastern Oklahoma State College, her master's from North Texas State University, and her Ph.D. from The University of Oklahoma. She had previous teaching and administrative experience in school districts and colleges in Texas, Oklahoma, Mississippi and Louisiana.

Ms. Calhoun joined MISD in 1970 after earning her degree at McMurry College.

Maurer, who earned his bachelor's from Temple University in Philadelphia and his master's from Pennsylvania State University, joined MISD in 1985. Previously, he taught in Forsan and in Pennsylvania. He is a doctoral candidate at Texas Tech University.

FBI probing Fort Worth police

FORT WORTH (AP) — The FBI, at the U.S. Justice Department's request, is probing the city police department's use of electronic surveillance, raids on bars and nightclubs and other tactics, the Fort Worth Star-Telegram reported Saturday.

City Police Chief Thomas Windham confirmed Friday that federal officers met with him about the investigation, but said he is "confident that members of the police department have in no way violated the law."

A Sept. 17 letter from Linda K. Davis — chief of the criminal section in the Justice Department's Civil Rights Division — says the FBI is investigating potential civil rights violations by Fort Worth police.

Ms. Davis' letter, a copy of which the Star-Telegram obtained, says the investigation will center on bar raids, the department's policy on obtaining information on Tarrant County residents through the use of interview cards and its use of electronic surveillance equipment.

LETTER FROM COLLEGE

Concert to be presented

By H. A. TUCK

Dr. Michael Jordan, coordinator of vocal music and choral conductor at Midland College, is presenting a free recital Thursday at 8 p.m. It's being held in the Allison Fine Arts Building auditorium and the public is invited to attend.

Jordan's program includes both contemporary and traditional vocal presentations.

Late registration is over at long last, with another record enrollment for MC. I guess the reason it seems to last so long is that pre-registration started Aug. 4 for three weeks; the two registration days were Aug. 26 and 27. That was followed by late registration Sept. 1 until Sept. 17. That totals up to six and a half weeks of getting everyone signed up for classes.

The headcount did improve quite a lot, but the real jump was in the contact hours. There are more full-time students than previously, which helps account for the larger classes and the full parking lots almost all day and every night.

"Book of Days," an exhibition of about 50 photos displayed at the McCormick Gallery on the campus, is drawing a number of viewers and differing comments.

This exhibit remains through Oct. 2. McCormick Gallery is located in the Allison Fine Arts Building and is open to the public without charge. Gallery hours are 1 to 5 p.m. Sunday, 8 a.m. to 10 p.m. Monday through Thursday, 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Friday, and 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. on Saturday.

Tech claims 14-7 victory over New Mexico

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

LUBBOCK — It wasn't the track meet folks have come to expect from these two, but Texas Tech's 14-7 win over New Mexico remained faithful to the series' tradition of suspenseful finishes.

Some 36,520 showed up at Jones Stadium remembering, perhaps, the 29-24 UNM come from behind win two years ago and Tech's rally from a 31-10 deficit with 16 minutes left last year for a 32-31 win. And the Lobos' vaunted offense, which last week pushed BYU to the limit before losing 31-30, served to fortify those expectations.

And sure enough, Tech took a 14-0 lead into the final quarter only to have Quarterback Billy Rucker, ranked in the nation's Top 10 offensive threats, drive the Lobos 99 yards for a TD with 6:43 left in the game.

The score came on a 26-yard Rucker pass to slotback Terance Mathis.

TECH APPEARED heading for the clincher on a drive that carried from its 20 to the UNM 17, but a fumble gave Rucker one more chance from his own 10 with 2:12 left.

Defensive end Calvin Riggs snuffed out New Mexico's hopes by nailing Rucker for an eight-yard loss on third and 12 and Tech took over with 48 seconds left.

Riggs' big play making was fitting, for this was a game dominated by a Tech defense led by ex-Midland Lee Rebels Riggs, Linebacker Michael Johnson and defensive end Eddie Kittle, who helped keep Rucker bottled up for three quarters.

Johnson had 10 unassisted tackles, a total of 13 tackles, two for losses of 12 yards and one sack for a loss of nine yards. Riggs had two pass sacks for 11 yards in losses.

And while Tech's offense continued to cough and sputter, it put enough points on the board to win, which was the important thing after last week's 61-11 debacle at Miami.

AFTER A fumble stopped Tech at the UNM 12 in the first period, the Raiders abandoned the 50-plus-pass-a-game offense to go 66 yards, grind it out style, to send Ervin Farris over from the three with 32 seconds left in the half.

The drive took nine plays, only one pass completion and on four successive running plays, Farris and Isaac Garnett, another ex-Lee Rebel, ate up yardage like the aerial attack is supposed to do, 49 yards.

Tech appeared pinned deep in its own territory when 5-3 Tyrone Thurman, the Smurf from Lee, took a punt, ran a one-man weave along the 10-yard line until he found an opening and then darted to the 34 to launch the drive.

The second TD covered 64 yards with quarterback Billy Joe Tolliver completing four passes in the six play drive, the payoff pitch 30 yards to Wayne Walker.

Tolliver hit 20 of 45 passes for 213 yards while Garnett, 12-for-83, and Farris, 14-for-76, fueled a 226-yard rushing effort. Walker and Thurman each caught five passes.

Meanwhile, Rucker was confined to 76 yards on 23 rushes, mostly scrambles when he found his receivers covered, but the left-hander from Gallup still managed to complete 116 of 23 for 184 yards, the longest 13 yards.

"The big thing," said Tech Coach David McWilliams, "is that we were able to win in the last quarter. The offense got a good drive at about the six-minute mark. We stopped ourselves with penalties and then came the fumble.

"When we had to have the big plays, Tolliver came through, especially on the crucial downs."

And New Mexico Coach Joe Lee Dunn was naturally disappointed, "But give them credit. That's the best we've been defensed in two years. I don't think that 14-7 score was indicative of how bad we got beat."

Longhorns escape Tigers' second half effort, 27-25

COLUMBIA, Mo. (AP) — An all-Texas first half was followed by an all-Missouri second half. But what counts, noted Longhorn Coach Fred Akers, is when you put the two halves together and come out with a pulsating, 27-25 Texas victory Saturday.

"A win is a win is a win," Texas Coach Fred Akers said after the Longhorns were outscored by 22 points in the second half. "As hard-fought as it was, we really do appeciate it. You have to admire Missouri. They came back in the second half and capitalized on some huge errors we made. Hey, they had a lot of momentum in the second half and I really admire the way they fought back."

Texas quarterback Bret Stafford led the Longhorns on three touchdown drives in the first half, then Missouri's Ronnie Cameron scored twice and tossed a short touchdown pass to make a game of it.

"I thought Cameron played a heck of a game," Akers said. "If he stays healthy, Missouri is going to win some ball games."

Missouri, which finished 1-10 a year ago, dropped to 1-1.

"A year ago we might have rolled over," Missouri Coach Woody Widenhofer said. "This football team is going to gel. I feel like we can play with the big guys now."

"We really screwed a lot of things up the first half," Cameron said. "We were running around not really knowing what we were doing."

It was a costly victory for the Longhorns. Linebacker Bobby Duncum was lost for the season with a knee injury and defensive back Richard Peavy suffered a dislocated shoulder that will shelve him for perhaps six weeks. In addition, guard Jack Westberlund will missed at least two weeks with a shoulder injury.

"I'm anxious to get back to Texas," Akers said.

The Longhorns, 1-1, led 24-3 at halftime and seemed on their way to an easy victory. But Cameron uncorked scoring runs of 10 and 68 yards and threw a 5-yard touchdown pass as Missouri outscored the visitors from the Southwest Conference 22-3 after intermission.

Stafford led long touchdown drives on Texas' first two possessions. Tim McCray caught a 2-yard scoring pass to cap an 82-yard march, then Darron Norris' 1-yard plunge finished a 13-play, 89-yard march.

Texas' Jeff Ward kicked field goals of 49 yards in the first half and 39 in the second, pushing his career total to 50 and wiping out the school record of 49 set by Russell Erxleben in 1975-78.

Steven Clark's five-yard touchdown reception from Stafford gave Texas a 24-3 lead in the first half. Then Cameron, a 6-1, 190-pound sophomore, ran 10 yards for a score less than one minute into the third quarter and added a 68-yard scoring romp with 43 seconds left in the third.

Sooners flex muscles before showdown with Miami

Associated Press

NORMAN, Okla. — Lydell Carr and Jamelle Holieway scored two touchdowns apiece in a 35-point first half that carried top-ranked Oklahoma to a 63-0 intersectional victory over Minnesota Saturday.

The victory sends Oklahoma, 2-0, into a meeting next week with No. 2 Miami, which was idle. Minnesota fell to 1-1.

The Sooners rolled to 523 yards in total offense, including 458 on the ground. Minnesota was held to just 49 yards on the ground and 97 through the air.

Carr, a junior fullback, had runs of 40 and 3 yards that gave Oklahoma a 14-0 lead with four minutes remaining in the first quarter. Holieway, a sophomore quarterback, scored on runs of 5 and 12 yards, and tight end Keith Jackson rambled 66 yards on a reverse for Oklahoma's other first-half score.

Michigan 31, Oregon St. 12

ANN ARBOR, Mich. — Michigan quarterback Jim Harbaugh, like the rest of the Wolverines, responded to a halftime chewing out by Coach Bo Schembechler and turned in a solid second half to defeat Oregon State.

Harbaugh passed for two touchdowns and ran for another as the No. 3-ranked Wolverines escaped an underdog's ambush for the second successive week.

Harbaugh hit 14 of 18 for 171 yards with one interception, breaking a string of 149 tosses without being picked off.

The victory, before a crowd of 104,748 in Michigan Stadium, improved the Wolverines to 2-0, while the Beavers fell to 0-2.

Alabama 21, Florida 7

GAINESVILLE, Fla. — Mike Shula engineered two long third quarter scoring drives that carried fourth-ranked Alabama to a victory over No. 13 Florida in a SEC game.

David Casteal scored the go-ahead touchdown on a 4-yard run at the end of a 15-play, 91-yard drive that included only one pass — but it was a key one.

Faced with a third-and-six situation at the Florida 34, Shula shoveled a pass to Kerry Goode who went 12 yards for the first down.

Penn St. 26, Boston College 14

FOXBORO, Mass. — D.J. Dozier scored on a 17-yard pass and a 7-yard run and set up another touchdown with a 35-yard dash as fifth-ranked Penn State capitalized on Boston College mistakes for the victory.

Dozier's long run set up Steve Smith's 8-yard scoring sprint on the Nittany Lions' first series. Penn State, 2-0, built a 12-0 halftime lead on a safety and Massimo Manca's 33-yard field goal early in the second quarter.

The Eagles, 1-2, cut the advantage to 12-7 when Shawn Halloran, who replaced injured quarterback Mark Kamphaus for Boston College's final series of the first half, launched a 44-yard scoring bomb to Darren Flutie.

Nebraska 59, Illinois 14

CHAMPAIGN, Ill. — Cornerback Brian Davis intercepted Illinois quarterback Shane Lamb's opening pass and raced 32 yards for a touchdown and the sixth-ranked Nebraska Cornhuskers went on to rout the Illini.

Nebraska, which led 14-0 after two minutes and two Illini turnovers, got two touchdowns each from halfback Keith Jones and quarterback Steve Taylor in improving its season record to 2-0.

Illinois, unable to run against the Cornhusker defense, scored on a seven-yard TD pass from Lamb to Jerry Reese in the second quarter and a 17-yard pass from Brian Menkhausen to James Gordon in the fourth quarter.

Washington 52, Brigham Young 21

SEATTLE — Chris Chandler passed for four touchdowns and ran for a fifth as seventh-ranked Washington crushed No. 11 Brigham Young University, the Cougars' worst football defeat in 13 years.

The last time the Cougars lost by a bigger margin was in 1973, when they were beaten 52-12 by Arizona State. The victory for Washington avenged a 31-3 loss to the Cougars in Provo, Utah, last season.

Chandler, a redshirt junior, teamed with Lonzell Hill, son of former NFL star wide receiver J.D. Hill, for touchdown passes of 27 and 12 yards, and threw 11 yards to Darryl Franklin and 6 yards to Rod Jones for scores, all in the second quarter.

Miami, Ohio 21, LSU 12

BATON ROUGE, La. — Terry Morris hit Andy Schillinger with an 82-yard scoring pass play in the third quarter and a defense led by tackle Bob Getz made it stand up as Miami of Ohio upset eighth-ranked Louisiana State University.

Getz blocked a first-quarter punt that led to Miami's irst score and recovered a fourth-quarter fumble when LSU, with backup quarterback Mickey Guidry was attempting to rally for the victory.

On the first play from scrimmage after the blocked punt, Morris hit Schillinger on a 39-yard pass touchdown play.

Miami got its second touchdown on a one-yard plunge by fullback Tom Graham in the second quarter following a fumble recovery by linebacker Jeff Anderson.

LSU was inside the 5-yard line of Miami three times in the first half, but could come away only with a 20-yard field goal by Ron Lewis.

Auburn 45, East Carolina 0

AUBURN, Ala. — Junior quarterback Jeff Burger passed for two touchdowns as 10th-ranked Auburn rolled over East Carolina.

Burger connected on second-quarter scoring passes of 51 yards to Lawyer Tillman and 48 yards to Trey Gainous.

Clemson 31, Georgia 28

ATHENS, Ga. — Clemson placekicker David Treadwell kicked a 46-yard field goal with no time remaining to boost the Tigers to a victory over No. 14 Georgia in an error-plagued game.

Trojans stun ninth ranked Baylor, 17-14

WACO (AP) — Don Shafer kicked a 32-yard field goal through driving rain at the gun Saturday, rallying the underdog Southern California Trojans to a 17-14 college football upset over the ninth-ranked Baylor Bears.

Shafer's winning kick came during a lightning and thunderstorm as Southern Cal, whose offense was stymied through most of the game, scored 10 points in the final four minutes of the game.

Ken Henry's leaping 12-yard reception of a touchdown pass from Rodney Peete with 3:50 to play tied the game at 14 for the Trojans.

Baylor, now 2-1, punted and Peete drove the Trojans to the Bears' 13. With the thunderstorm approaching, Baylor kept calling timeout until Shafer made his dramatic, wind-whipped kicked.

Reserve QB guides Cougars to upset

STILLWATER, Okla. (AP) — Reserve quarterback Mark Davis came in for an injured Gerald Landry to spark a second-half Houston surge, and the Cougars went on to defeat Oklahoma State, 28-12, in NCAA college football Saturday.

Junior fullback Sloan Hood rambled 111 yards on 19 carries and scored two touchdowns for Houston, which improved to 1-1. The Cowboys fell to 1-2.

Hood, at 5-11 and 223 pounds, picked up 88 yards in the first half, plunging in from the one for Houston's first score early in the second quarter.

Landry, the Cougars' senior signal caller, completed four of six passes before being sidelined with a hip pointer. Davis, a junior from Dallas, stepped in on the second series of the second quarter and launched a 23-yard scoring pass to flanker Dwayne LeBlanc.

Oklahoma State junior quarterback Ronnie Williams, who was benched after the first half in favor of freshman Mike Gundy, completed only two of 11 passes and gave up an interception that led to a 49-yard touchdown strike down the right sideline from Davis to flanker Paul Smith.

Sun Devils blitz Mustangs, 30-0

TEMPE, Ariz. (AP) — Darryl Harris rushed for 119 yards, including a 22-yard touchdown, while cornerback Anthony Parker returned a punt 65 yards for another score as 18th-ranked Arizona State beat error-prone Southern Methodist 30-0 in a non-conference football game Saturday night.

It was the first time the Mustangs have been shut out since 1980, when they lost 14-0 at Texas Tech.

The Sun Devils, 2-0, led 14-0 at halftime and were aided by three crucial SMU turnovers.

TCU downs Kansas State, 35-22

FORT WORTH (AP) — Quarterback David Rascoe ran for two touchdowns and passed for another as Texas Christian defeated Kansas State 35-22 in an intersectional college football game Saturday night.

Rascoe ran for 25 yards for a touchdown in the first quarter before tossing a shuffle pass to Tony Jeffrey that the running back turned into a 30-yard scoring play early in the second period.

The sophomore quarterback set a TCU record for consecutive completed passes when he hit on his first nine attempts. His only incomplete pass in the first half killed a TCU scoring drive on the Kansas State 1 with 1:10 left before halftime. Rasoe rushed for 135 yards on 20 carries and completed 11 of 18 passes for 136 yards.

The Horned Frogs, who constructed 80-yard scoring drives on their first three possessions, also got a 1-yard touchdown run from Tony Darthard on their opening possession.

Rascoe also scored on a 3-yard run with 5:35 left in the third quarter.

Jeffrey, who set a Southwest Conference record with 343 yards rushing against Tulane last weekend, scored on a 6-yard run early in the third quarter. His score was set up by Bobby Davis's 72-yard run on the first play from scrimmage in the second half.

Jeffrey finished the night with 54 yards rushing on 17 carries.

BEARS

Baylor's Charles Perry had scored on a 3-yard touchdown run with 7:24 left to give the Bears a 14-7 lead. USC strong safety Tim McDonald, who returned a fumble 99 yards for a touchdown in the second quarter, was flagged for an interference penalty that set up the score.

Linebacker Ron Brown hit Perry's arm and the ball popped into the air near the Trojans' goal.

McDonald grabbed the ball and outran Matt Clark to the end zone. It was the longest return in USC history by a yard. Charles Phillips returned an interception 98 yards for a score aganst Iowa in 1974.

Clark had scored for the Bears in the first period on a 1-yard run.

USC had only two first downs — both by penalties — in the first half and one yard rushing.

The Trojans didn't get another first down until the fourth period.

Clemson, 1-1, which overcame five turnovers, marched 34 yards to the Georgia 30 in the final 1:11 to set up the game-winning kick. Tailback Terrence Flagler had a key 16-yard run in the drive and quarterback Rodney Williams added a 15-yard run.

Treadwell had an opportunity to win it with 10:19 remaining but missed on a 39-yard attempt.

N. Carolina 10, Florida St. 10

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — Florida State kicker Derek Schmidt missed three field goals, the last one a 36-yarder with eight seconds left, as the 15th-ranked Seminoles had to settle for a tie with North Carolina.

The Seminoles, 1-1-1, got their lone touchdown on a 28-yard pass from backup quarterback Peter Tom Willis to freshman Ronald Lewis with 2:32 left in the third period. Willis then passed to Herb Gainer for the two-point conversion to put Florida State in front 10-7.

But North Carolina, 2-0-1, knotted the score at 10 when Lee Gliarmis kicked a 24-yard field goal with 12:14 left in the game to end a 12-play, 59-yard drive.

Arizona 41, Oregon 17

EUGENE, Ore. — Alfred Jenkins passed for 233 yards and David Adams rushed for more than 100 yards for the third consecutive week, leading 17th-ranked Arizona to a victory over Oregon.

Adams, a 5-foot-6 tailback who carried the ball 31 times in the game, had 101 of his 130 yards at halftime as Arizona, 3-0, built a 24-7 lead.

Michigan St. 20, Notre Dame 15

EAST LANSING, Mich. — Michigan State quarterback Dave Yarema threw a 40-yard scoring pass to flanker Mark Ingram and cornerback Todd Krumm returned an interception 44 yards for another score as the Spartans downed 20th-ranked Notre Dame.

Chris Caudell added two short field goals for Michigan State and Krumm made a crucial interception at his own 17-yard line to thwart a final Notre Dame threat with less than two minutes to play.

The Irish got a field goal from John Carney, a 38-yard scoring pass play from quarterback Steve Beuerlein to tight end Joel Williams, and a 5-yard scoring run by fullback Anthony Johnson.

Scott lowers Astros' number to four

HOUSTON (AP) — With a 300 strikeout season a possibility for Mike Scott, the Houston right-hander is taking a casual attitude about reaching that mark.

"I know it's within range, but I'm not going to go out and beat myself to get it," Scott said, after he struck out 11 in seven innings in the Astros 10-6 win over the San Diego Padres.

Arkansas fights for 34-17 win over Tulsa

FAYETTEVILLE, Ark. (AP) — Arkansas quarterback Greg Thomas flipped his second touchdown pass of the game to Derrick Thomas and set up another TD with a 30-yard run as the 12th-ranked Razorbacks held off Tulsa 34-17 Saturday.

The 11-yard touchdown pass to D. Thomas gave Arkansas a 24-7 lead early in the third quarter and were the only points either team scored against a southerly wind that gusted from 17 to 22 mph.

The Razorbacks scored 10 points in the final 2½ minutes of the first half when Donnie Centers made a spectacular catch of a 44-yard TD pass from Thomas and Kendall Trainor kicked a 55-yard field goal.

Arkansas improved to 2-0. Tulsa is 2-2.

On Tulsa's first possession after the scoring pass to Thomas, Gage hooked up with Ronnie Kelley on a 58-yard touchdown pass. Kelley had clear sailing when cornerback Richard Brothers missed a shoestring tackle.

A short punt gave Tulsa possession on the Arkansas 48, and the Hurricane immediately moved to the Razorback 1. Reggie Hall blitzed Gage into a bad pitch and a 7-yard loss. Tony Cherico hurried Gage into a bad pass and Tulsa had to settle for a 27-yard field goal by David Fuess.

That defensive stand extended to 47 quarters the Razorbacks' streak without allowing a rushing touchdown.

COLLEGE STATION (AP) — Texas A&M's Ira Valentine, subbing for injured starter Roger Vick, scored two touchdowns in a 34-point first half explosion to lead the 16th-ranked Aggies to a 48-28 victory over North Texas State Saturday night.

The victory gave the Aggies their first victory of the season after a 35-17 season-opening loss to Louisiana State.

Aggie quarterback Kevin Murray hit Rod Harris on a 50-yard pass play on the first play of the game to set up Valentine's 12-yard touchdown run to start the avalanche.

North Texas' Ralph Roberson provided the only break in A&M's first-half scoring barrage by returning an interception 45 yards for a first-quarter touchdown.

Barr holds onto one-shot GMO lead

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Canadian Dave Barr shot a 3-under par 69 Saturday to maintain his lead after the third round of the $400,000 Greater Milwaukee Open.

Barr, at 14-under, held a one-stroke lead over South African David Frost.

Barr, the second-round leader, began the day at 11-under par 133, a two-stroke edge over Frost and Morris Hatalsky.

Barr birdied Nos. 1, 4, 7 and 9 to complete the front nine at 32 on the par 36-36 72, 7,030-yard Tuckaway Country Club course in suburban Milwaukee. He cooled off on the back nine with a 1-over 37.

Following Frost at 12-under were Tour veteran Buddy Gardner, whose two eagles helped him shoot a 67, and Joey Sindelar, who carded his second straight 67.

Four players — Ronnie Black, Tom Purtzer, Corey Pavin and 1983 GMO winner Hatalsky — finished the third round at 11 under.

Barr birdied No. 9 after hitting the green with a fine iron shot from a group of small trees about 20 yards right of the fairway on the par-4, 430-yard hole. He holed a 20-foot uphill putt to make the turn at 15 under. His back-nine bogey came on No. 13, a 381-yard par-4.

PGA champion Bob Tway, trying to become the Tour's leading money-winner with a good finish here, carded a 67 for a three-round total of 206, 10-under par. Tway trails Greg Norman by more than $23,000 on the money list.

First prize at the GMO is $72,000. A third-place finish, worth $27,200, would put him over the top.

A victory at the GMO also would secure Tway's hold on $500,000 in bonus money by increasing his edge in the Vantage Cup competition, which awards points to top finishers in PGA Tour events.

"I don't approach it any different," said Tway, a four-time winner on the Tour this season. "I know I've got to go out and shoot as low as I can."

WHAT DOES 2.9% ANNUAL PERCENTAGE RATE GMAC FINANCING REALLY MEAN TO YOU?

FIRST This is the lowest set of finance rates ever offered by GMAC.

SECOND Probably the most important thing is that there is no dealer financial participation that will affect your cost. As a matter of fact we still have units at the old price (units built before April 11, 1986) that can be bought at prices below invoice prices.

THIRD Even though we have sold over 80 new units on this program we still have over 80 new units left to choose from.

FOURTH We will post special sale prices in all our 86 GMC inventory to show we mean business.

HERE IS AN EXAMPLE:

1986 GMC SIERRA CLASSIC

- Factory Air
- 305 V-8 Engine
- Automatic Transmission
- Power Steering
- Power Brakes
- Tilt Wheel
- AM/FM Stereo
- Tinted Glass

and much much more!

Offices in the home

As our society becomes more and more complicated and high-technology moves into the work place, a quiet room at home to bring extra work or even keep up with household expenses, becomes increasingly necessary.

This week's feature home, located in Trinity Estates, contains approximately 4,500 square feet of living space, including an office guaranteed to make you enjoy working.

Deep mauve carpeting throughout the house is beautifully contrasted in this room with a dark wood desk and leather furniture. This room has plenty of space for a computer system, no crowding necessary. Shuttered windows on two walls allow just the right amount of light into the room. Partitions on a third wall conceal (or open to) a wet bar with refrigerator.

Located at 3403 Choate, this week's featured home is truly charming. Light gray walls in the sunken living area create an atmosphere of elegance. Through accessories and wall hangings the present owner has mixed the colors of blue, gray, teal and burgundy with a stunning effect. Ron Morgan, of Jackson Morgan Interior Furnishing, was consulted in all phases of decorating this home.

Please see OFFICE, Page 2D

Photos, clockwise from above: This beautiful office on the first floor has lots of room and a wet bar is hidden behind moveable partitions on the right.

Deep mauve carpeting throughout the house has been accented with light gray wallpaper and accessorized in blue, gray, teal and burgundy.

This room, decorated for a young girl, is one of three bedrooms upstairs. One of the rooms is currently being used as a playroom and all the rooms feature versatile cabinet space.

OFFICE

A loft with built-in bookshelves overlooks this room, accenting the cathedral ceiling. A small private patio, visible from both the office and den areas, is the perfect place for the intimate brunches for two.

An equally graceful den features a glass wall overlooking the large backyard, including a 16x35 foot pool (enclosed with iron fence for safety).

Plantation shutters regulate the light to this room, but the beauty of the backyard will make you want to leave them open all the time.

A sand box and sequestered play area, along with a large patio area make this the perfect place for afternoon pool parties or weekend barbecues with family and friends.

Two large pantries with room for a freezer and a laundry room with sink and built-in ironing board help to make this kitchen efficient yet beautiful.

A bathroom with shower are accessible from the pool for children and guests and the two car garage includes a workshop with built-in cabinets and large work station area.

A kitchen desk to keep those household accounts in order includes built-in bookshelves for cookbooks and light reading material.

A large master bedroom with 10' ceiling complete the list of rooms downstairs. This light and airy room with two walk-in closets also includes a large bath with two vanity areas.

Upstairs are three bedrooms besides the earlier mentioned loft/library.

The present owners have turned one of these into a playroom, with plenty of cabinet space throughout.

An especially beautiful room, decorated for a young girl, is precious in light blue. Draped window hangings are the focus of this room, with plenty of room for play or study. This beautiful home is listed at $395,000 by Remax of Midland.

UPI Business Writer

DALLAS (UPI) — Home improvers typically redesign the kitchen for greater efficiency and the living room for aesthetics.

Office designer Andre Staffelbach likes to use the kitchen efficiency concept when redesigning the office of today to improve worker productivity.

"Aesthetics is important but in today's environment you also are looking at improving productivity," said Staffelbach, a Swiss-born design expert who founded his business in Dallas 20 years ago.

"Study after study has shown that office design definitely improves productivity. The days of glamorous offices are over. Now the stress is on task efficiency, proper environmental setting, ease of communication and job satisfaction," he said.

"Any enclosure affects employee productivty. Today's businesses have to change and react very quickly when economic conditions dictate. The office has to be flexible enough to adapt to these changes without adding to the overhead."

It is this approach that has helped his Staffelbach Designs and Associates Inc. grow from a one-man operation to a 65-man corporation in the last 20 years with offices in Dallas and Kansas City.

"From zero to about $4.5 million last year and about $60 million worth of projects on hand," said the 47-year-old designer while explaining his firm's growth. His clients include IBM, Mobil Oil, American Airlines, Cadillac Fairview, Lomas & Nettleton and Southland Investment Properties.

"We don't advertise. Eighty percent of our business is from repeat business, 15 percent from referrals and only five percent from new business.

Office design for Staffelbach is simplicity, maximum use of space for maximum productivity, giving the employees what they need, and making the environment as natural and colorful as possible since "most of us spend more waking hours at work than anywhere else."

Cost of space is becoming a critical factor in today's economy, he said. It now costs between $15 and $30 per square foot to rent office space in major cities. Furniture costs are between $18 and $40 per square foot.

"Before, we helped office space to build up. Now we are helping to build down. Today businesses want to pay only for what they need. You need to find the most economical use of space without affecting productivity."

It took three years for his firm to design the 342,000-square-foot corporate headquarters of American Airlines at the Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport, he said.

The final design was able to meet the airlines' priorities of long-term ownership, job function and task orientation in addition to providing the 1,300 employees with an aesthetically pleasing environment in balance with the surrounding unspoiled lakes and natural wooded hillsides.

In designing the data center of Lomas & Nettleton, Staffelbach said the most important need was for quiet concentration by the programming, marketing, management and clerical departments to process some $30 billion of mortgages a year.

Staffelbach said in any office design the key factors are noise control, minimum relocations, temperature control and glare, storage and comfort.

"Managers and professional and technical workers give top priority to control of noise and minimizing relocations. Managers' third preference is temperature control while professionals put comfort in the third category. Clerical workers stress storage at the top followed by relocations, noise and temperature."

While the the advantage of noise control is obvious, Staffelbach said reducing relocations is important because 28 percent of office workers are relocated twice annually and nine percent three to six times annually.

"Any office design must have a balance of all these factors so all parties can benefit and at the same time make it a happy experience for all," Staffelbach said.

Luxury bath is big splash

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Consumer interest in more luxurious decor does not stop at the living room, or the bedroom, for that matter. It goes right into the bath, down to the faucets and accessories on the sinks and tubs.

"Consumers are interested in maintaining a prestige home and are concerned with the appearance of their bathrooms," says Alex Kalbouss, vice president and general manager for Epic, Indianapolis-based manufacturers of faucets and accessories for bath, kitchen and bar.

"Many of them will spend thousands of dollars to create a total look for their bath, and they want it to be perfect right down to the soap dishes," he says.

When it's time to reroof, look for fire-resistant, heavyweight

By The Associated Press

It's probably time to raise the roof, if your home has celebrated its 15th birthday.

One way to give it new life — and fire resistance — is with reinforced asphalt shingles.

An estimated eight out of 10 homeowners who are building new homes or reroofing choose asphalt shingles, most reinforced with fiberglass, according to Edward Haney, fiberglass marketing manager for PPG Industries.

The fiberglass makes shingles fire resistant, he says, adding that they "will not easily ignite, readily spread flames or emit burning embers that could contribute to the spread of a fire.

How can you tell if your home needs a new roof?

"Shingles should be replaced if they are curled and blistered, worn or torn on ridges and in valleys, have nailheads protruding or show patchy color from worn-off ceramic granules," says Haney, who adds that the most prestigious are the new three-dimensional, or multilayered, fiberglass ones.

"These shingles are thicker and layered and create deep shadow lines that enhance a home's appearance.

"A roof of three-dimensional shingles adds to a home's curb appeal and value when selling it."

In choosing the shingles, Haney advises, the first consideration should be the weight, remembering that the heavier the shingle, the longer its life.

The extra weight is mostly asphalt, and 280 to 350 pounds-per-square products can offer up to 10 years to the life of a roof, he says.

Asphalt shingles usually have an approximate weight of 215 to 350 pounds per square, with a square equalling the number of shingles that will cover 100 square feet of roof.

To determine the number of shingles needed, calculate the total square footage to be covered, add 10 percent for error and then divide by 100. This gives the number of squares of shingles needed. A typical 1,000-square-foot roof requires 11 squares.

Haney points out that shingles are packaged in bundles — with three, four or five bundles per square, depending on shingle weight — and if shingles are to be transported to a job site, it is important to know the number of bundles.

Like many specialities, roofing has a jargon all its own.

Valley — the internal angle where two sloping roofs meet.

Flashing — the metal or roll roofing used to prevent water seepage around any intersection or projection in a roof, such as vent pipes, chimneys, adjoining walls, dormers or valleys.

Asphalt shingle product lines usually include hip and ridge shingles designed to fit neatly over the triangular points where two roof planes intersect.

Fascinating Facts

By Bob & Bill Drummond, Licensed Master Plumbers
Felt makings is one of the primitive arts antedating weaving. Since the industrial Revolution controlled mechanical operations have superseded the labor customarily done by the ancients. By the modern method wool is carded in thin webs which are then piled in successive layers to the thickness required for the finished piece. After being moistened the layers are placed between the platens of a flat bed press to be hardened. The felt is then fulled or shrunk to more closely compact the fibers. Finished felts are produced in a range of consistencies from soft cloth to a sheet as dense as wood.

Heart Answers
"Skipped" Heartbeat
A "skipped" heartbeat is sometimes used to describe an irregularity, or arrythmia, in the heartbeat rhythm. Heartbeats or contractions normally start from spontaneous excitation of a special group of cells known as the pacemaker node. The heart beats only as much as it needs to in order to pump the proper amount of blood. If it beats twice in too rapid succession (an arrythmia) it may then pause briefly to pick up the normal rate of beating. These arrythmias are generally not harmful, and do not require treatment unless they occur frequently and cause alarm or discomfort.

Tile can be a great value

It's no accident that the lobby and other floors of so many commercial buildings are made of ceramic tile.

American-made ceramic tile is attractive, durable, easy to care for and, when considered over its useful life, extremely economical, says the Tile Council of America, Inc.

According to a study by Schart-Godfrey Inc., an independent construction-cost consulting firm, "ceramic tile is concluded to be the most economical of all permanent and long-use finishes considered for both walls and floors, over a selected 40-year life cycle."

Of all the flooring materials studied, Schart-Godfrey found that ceramic mosaic, quarry and glazed floor tile were the least costly at $1.35-$1.39 per square foot annually and that "these permanent finishes offer the greatest ease in maintenance and last the life of the building."

It is the attributes of attractive appearance, durability, easy care and economy that has led to the growing use of ceramic tile for floors, walls, countertops and as accents in many American homes.

Ceramic tile won't dent, fade, rot, peel, blister, warp or splinter and it never needs waxing.

American-made ceramic tile has other attributes as well. Unlike most foreign brands, the American version comes with matching trim pieces to give the project a finished look. The installation of ceramic tile in a room or through an entire house is an excellent way to give any home the look of stature and prestige.

ceramic tile is glazed—glass-like surface which can be shiny, matte or textured—or unglazed— the natural tile which may be mixed with pigments. Ceramic mosaics are tough one or two-inch tiles that are mounted on mesh or paper.

For walls and backsplashes, use glazed wall tile and glazed or unglazed ceramic mosaics. For floors, use glazed or unglazed floor tiles which are heavier than wall tiles. The glazed versions have matte or textured finishes.

Elsewhere, ceramic tile can be used as an accent or focal point to highlight such areas as patios, flyers, swimming pools, window sills and fireplaces.

Available in a broad range of colors and styles, ceramic tile can be purchased from distributors, dealers and contractors.

Low Down Payment And No Closing Costs. They Open Up All Kinds Of Possibilities.

The Best Deal In Town.
- 3% down payment if priced at $50,000 or less. If over $50,000 3% on first $25,000, 5% on balance
- Financing example as of 9-12-86: $50,000 purchase price, 3% down, $48,500 loan at 10.125% Annual Percentage Rate, 360 monthly payments of $431.00
- No closing costs
- VA homes priced for quick sale
- Call for information on open house
- Call brokers below for information on investor financing

The dream of homeownership can come true. Because, for a limited time only, down payments for these properties are only 3%.

What's more, there are no closing costs, so you save even more. You pay only normal prepaid items; we pay the rest.

Plus, your new loan is assumable once. So later on, if you decide to sell the house, a qualified buyer can assume your loan as long as it's more than 12 but less than 48 months old.

With all this going for you, you can probably afford more home than you planned. So look over the list; make your calls. But hurry. You may never have another chance to get the best deal in town.

LET'S TALK REAL ESTATE...

Remember the children's challenge: "Put up or shut up"?

Well, that's just what we are doing! Since early spring we have been sharing with you our belief that while Midland may no longer be soaring, it is certainly not sinking. Rather we feel the recent period of adjustment, though difficult for many, has probably put our city in a stronger position for renewal growth.

And because we do believe in that growth, we have "Put up!" Our recent commitments include:

A 30% increase in sales associates an expanded Corporate/Relocation Service Department a new listing sales processor a new training director a new corporate caller an expanded market share

Midland, we have been growing with you for 20 years! Together let's work for 21!

Joanne Langston

LONGING FOR NAILS?

Text by ELIZABETH EDWIN

Photos by JERRY MENNENGA

Many women want to grow long, glamorous fingernails but just can't seem to get them to grow past the end of their fingertips. They admire from afar the beautiful hands of friends at parties or of models on the pages of the latest fashion magazines and wish they too could have nails of uniform length and perfect shape.

What many of these women do not realize is that this is not an impossible task. It isn't necessary to be able to grow fingernails, you can buy them.

With that statement, the first thought that comes to mind for most is FAKE NAILS, and many immediately respond "No way!"

But before negating the possibility, realize there are methods far more advanced than the five-and-dime variety of preformed, glue-on-top-of-the-nail fingernails that will pop off in the middle of a romantic dinner.

Manicurists have several techniques to create a Cinderella story for even the toughest case of stubs.

Spectrum, plastic tips, silk and linen wraps and sculptured nails are various methods of extending or strengthening one's nails. When the chosen process is finished, the result will be ten nails perfectly shaped and colored to the wearers specifications.

While these methods create a beautiful result, be sure you are willing to pay a price, in time as well as from the pocket book, for the luxury of having beautiful nails. Prices range from an average of $12.50 for a manicure that takes an average of 30 minutes to $65 for nail tips and spectrum which takes approximately an hour to an hour and a half. Nail wraps can take as long as two hours.

Each method begins with the basic manicure to prepare nails for the processes to follow.

FOR A manicure, the manicurist will remove existing nail polish from the nails, usually with a lanolin-based remover without acetone. Removers containing acetone will remove polish faster, but will also dry-out nails, making them brittle.

Nails are then shaped with a file to the length desired. A Harper's Bazaar article advises that nails are less likely to split if shaped fairly straight across with corners rounded. The magazine also warns that nails are apt to tear if filed after a bath when they are wet. A hint for weak nails is to file while still wearing old polish for extra strength.

Next, fingertips are soaked or messaged with cream to soften the cuticles so they can be trimmed. The next step is to message nails, cuticles and hands with cream. Margaret Valdez, a manicurist at Backstage, recommends massaging the nail toward the cuticle — a practice that is easily done at home as well. This boosts circulation and promotes growth of the nail.

Before applying polish, Chris Walker of Christine Valmy said she usually cleans nails to remove any oils before applying polish. This will help the polish to adhere better.

POLISH IS generally applied in three steps. First a base coat is applied. Second, two coats of color polish are painted over the nail and, third, a top coat is applied to seal the color and the prevent chipping and peeling.

For nail-bitters and those whose nails simply will not grow, plastic nail tips may be the answer for lengthening.

To apply nail tips, the basic steps for a manicure are followed until just before the polish is applied. At that time, the plastic tips are fitted over the nail and glued in place. More glue is added to the ridge between the nail and the tip and then the ridge is buffed lightly until smooth. The tip is then trimmed to the desired length and shaped.

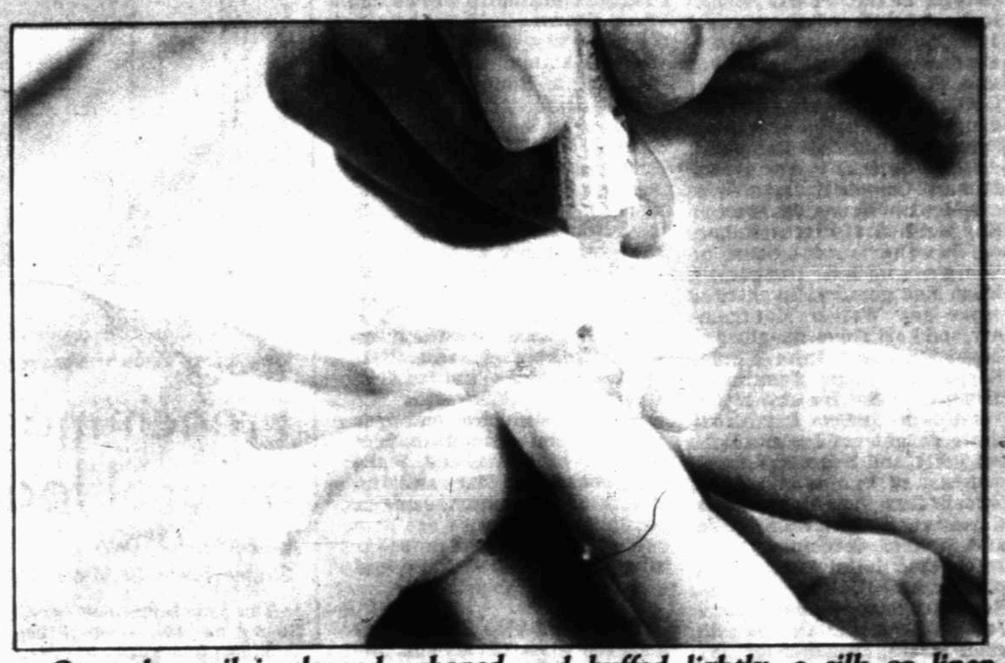

Once the tips are in place there are several options for strengthening the new length.

Spectrum nails can be applied over the tips. This method is also called gelled or light-cued and is very new. The process involves painting, like polish, a gel finish over the nail. Valdez usually uses two coats of the gel. After each coat, the nails are placed under an ultraviolet light for for two to three minutes to cure the gel. Reports say that the light-cured nails last longer and Valdez believes they are not as damaging to the nails as some of the other processes used because there is no buffing on the nail.

Another procedure that can be used over tips is nail wraps. Wrapping a nail consists of using nail glue to adhere a piece of silk or linen material over the nail. The material is then trimmed exactly to fit each nail and more glue is applied to the top and edges of the nail. Each nail is then filed and buffed to a smooth finish and polish is applied.

Please see NAILS, Page 2E

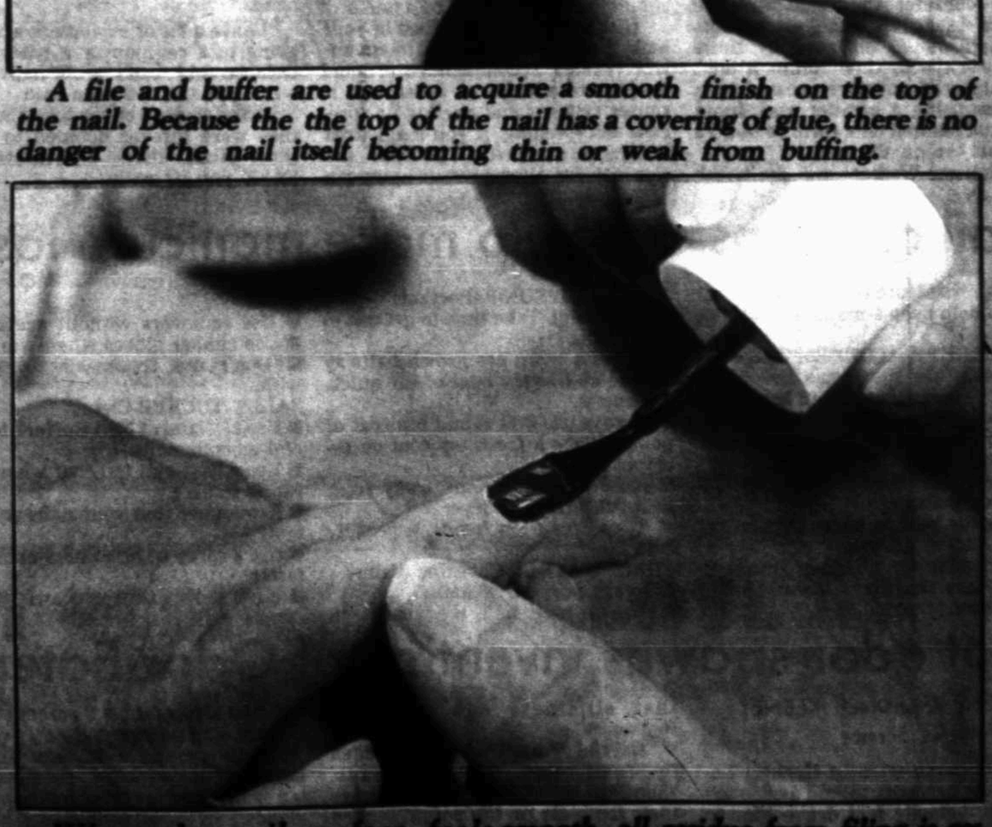

Once the nail is cleaned, shaped and buffed lightly, a silk or linen wrap is applied with a strong holding nail glue to provide an extra layer of support. The wrap is applied away from the cuticle to prevent damage.

The wrap is then trimmed to fit each nail. Glue is applied on top and around the edges of the wrap to form a sealed covering over the nail. If nail tips are applied the wrap is applied over the nail and nail tip.

A file and buffer are used to acquire a smooth finish on the top of the nail. Because the the top of the nail has a covering of glue, there is no danger of the nail itself becoming thin or weak from buffing.

When the nail surface feels smooth, all residue from filing is removed, and a base coat, two coats of colored polish and a top coat are applied to create beautiful, well-groomed hands.

French manicure creates natural look for fingernails

By BARBARA DeWITT
Copley News Service

This year fingernails are supposed to look natural — even if they aren't.

Some of us will go to great lengths this year to make our nails appear au naturel, spending as much as $1,000 in 1986 to have any number of foreign materials applied to them.

Porcelain, plastic tips, silk wraps and coats of acrylic are the popular methods of extending one's stubs into a set of well-manicured talons, and when the drill gets turned off and the dust settles (from filing), the sometimes painful task is only half complete.

Looking perfectly natural also calls for an application of an opaque base coat, a coat of translucent pale pink polish topped off with a coat of clear polish.

To be ultra-current (last year the word was trendy), you'll plant yourself in the manicurist's chair for about two hours to get artificial nails and a French manicure. That includes painting only the tips of the nails white before applying the translucent pink coat.

While acrylics will continue as the traditional approach to artificial nails, there's a new method, called light-cured, that's going to catch on fast, simply because the result is more natural looking.

Already one of the best-selling products in this category is French Glow, which was developed in the Los Angeles area by Mickey Schneider and Sandra Allred.

Schneider, who is the owner of DuBunne Salon in suburban Torrance, says her product has sold well across the country since she put it on the market last August.

It's a completely different approach to artificial nails and can be used over existing nails or plastic tips on nails that are badly chewed.

"French Glow is so natural," says Schneider, "that only your manicurist knows for sure. They don't need to be drilled or buffed. They come out shiny and stay that way," she says, explaining that with most acrylics if polish is removed the nails take on a dull, yellow finish and therefore have to be continually polished.

Taking me through the steps of this newfangled process, Schneider said that a gel is applied like nail polish, rather than wrapped (with silk fibers) or brushed on (with a mixture of powder and liquid).

After each coat of this gel, the nails are placed under an ultrviolet light for 45 seconds. Most people need two coats, but someone who's hard on their nails may need up to four coats, she added.

The light looks like a miniature body tanning bed, but is not nearly as strong as the ultraviolets used for tanning or germicidal purposes, says Schneider. "It's in the harmless zone," she says, "but strong enough to cure the gel onto the nail by a polymerization process."

Light-cured nails may be the manicure of the year. They are supposedly kinder to the human nail bed (no chemical primer or rough filing is necessary) and much faster to apply.

An average "set" takes a maximum of one hour to apply and "fills" take about half an hour, says Schneider. That's compared to three hours for acrylics and two hours for a "fill," which is a touch-up given every two weeks to cover the nail outgrowth.

While prices are about the same for most artificial nail applications — $50 for initial application, $25 for fills — light-cured nails last longer. Schneider says a client can go three or four weeks before needing a touch-up, depending on how well she cares for them.

Sylvia Gipson of Reflections said the buffing is not dangerous for the nail because it is the glue that is being buffed, not the nail.

Although the process of application is the same for silk and linen wraps, there are some differences.

A silk wrap is a thin material that appears almost transparent once applied. Clear or very light colored polish can be worn with these wraps whereas, the linen wraps are a stronger woven fabric and can be seen with light colored polish. Although many consider the linen wrap to have a disadvantage, they are stronger and should be worn by those who work with their hands a lot.

Sculptured nails are created by a process using a powder and liquid formula painted on a form to build a nail on top on the nail.

Although Walker will do sculptured nails, she warn customers that the buffing required on the nail can cause it to become paper thin.

"If the sculptured part of the nail comes loose and water gets under the form it forms a fungus on the thin part of the nail," Walker said remembering a woman who lost her nails because of the fungus.

"If I do a persons nails that has the fungus, I have to discard all of my tools I used to prevent spreading it to someone else who might have a cut or thin nails," said Sally Tucker of Cletus'. "It's caused by air and moisture getting under the nail. It should be taken care of by a doctor."

"If there is any difference in your nails, you should tell you manicurist," Valdez recommended. "Some people are allergic to polish and it causes redness and peeling or soreness and swelling. If you manicurist knows you are having a problem, she can look for alternatives so you can have pretty nail."

Valdez also recommends letting your own nails grow, removing the tips and using one of these methods for strengthening.

But if there is an important occasion coming up, instant nails are possible, but Gipson advises giving yourself as much advance time as possible.

"People need time to get use to them," Gipson said. "It is very different. They need to be taken car of. They feel very different. They make you feel like you have beautiful hands."

"I have a lot of customers who are going to a reunion or a party, and because they can't grow nails they want nail tips," Gipson said.

So for those women who thought they were forever doomed to have short stubs, there alternatives to FAKE pop-off nails.

Nail care tips can help make manicure last

MARGARET VALDEZ-Backstage
- If nails are short, tips should be relative short also to avoid breakage.
- Consider spectrum nails because they do not require buffing the nail for application.
- Always use a base coat and top coat for polish.
- Message nail to boost circulation and promote growth.
- Buff nails for a shiney finish. It also helps strengthen nails and helps circualtion.

SYLVIA GIPSON-Reflections
- Be careful. Take time to get use to your nails.
- When a wrap has grown halfway off the nail, to the edge of the quick, replace it.
- Always use a base and top coat of polish. Place a fresh top coat on every other day.
- Keep fresh manicure away from heat, like from a dryer.
- Keep cream on hands, especially cuticles.

CHRIS WALKER-Christine Valmy
- Avoid sculptured nails.
- Use a base and top coat with polish.
- Use removers without acetone.
- Use rubber gloves when working.
- Don't use fingernails to scrub with.

SALLY TUCKER-Cletus'
- Use a "Natural Nail Buffer" to file and smooth nails.
- Use a base and top coat when polishing nails.
- Remember that your nails are not tools.
- Use a spray or oil to help nails dry faster.
- Keep polish and glue away from cuticle so it can breath.

Foot odor spawns invention of Odor-Eaters

By IRENE GARDNER KEENEY
Hearst News Service

For research scientist Herbert Lapidus, the necessity to find a cure for his wife's smelly feet drove him to the laboratory.

Lapidus, director of Research and Development for Combe Inc., makers of Johnson's Foot Care Products, is the father of Odor-Eaters, insoles that eliminate bad smells in footwear.

"Marriages have been threatened by foot odor," Lapidus says. "Spouses have been told to leave their footwear on the porch, begged not to remove their shoes while driving the family car, or ordered never to leave their sox in the hamper."

The cause of all this disharmony is bromihidrosis, a perspiration problem that affects some 5 percent to 10 percent of the population.

"Their perspiration just smells horrible," he explains. Perspiration is a saline fluid secreted by the sweat glands. "In most people, it's clean, almost sterile. It's the reaction of bacteria in the nutrients in perspiration that produces the odor. But for those with bromihidrosis, the perspiration smells as soon as they sweat."

Copley News Service

It sounds like the pitch for a bad sitcom: See, these two get married, and he's Lutheran, she's Disciples of Christ, and — oh, yeah — here's the kicker, they're both ordained ministers.

Or wait. How about this for a courtroom series? They meet in college, marry after a whirlwind three-month courtship, he finishes law school and goes into practice, she has two children and becomes his secretary. But she wants more, enrolls in law school, becomes an attorney herself and they work in the same firm for three years, until he's tapped as a judge. Lots of fodder there. Should run for years.

No sell? Then what about a movie of the week on those turbulent early years of a couple breaking into the medical profession. She's an older woman, say, by two years. They're both pursuing internal medicine. She makes it through those tough residency years and spends a year establishing herself with a medical center, all the while watching him struggle through what she remembers all too well. Two doctors in one house. Wow! Toss in a pregnancy for added tension.

THE PLOT twists could turn fast and heady. Just think: the competition, the professional envy, the using each other as rungs on the ladder of success — Oops! Was that your head?

TV could have a field day with such scenarios. Reality is a different story.

To hear those living the above capsulizations talk, life under the same roof with both partners in the same profession can have as many riches as potential pitfalls. Which one you stumble across depends on how you approach the relationship.

As marriage and family counselor Diana Brennan says, "If you've got two healthy egos, two people with self-esteem, two people who know they're emotionally separate, then they can get through any problems of possible competition or issues like, 'Do we talk about work outside the office?'"

There are, she says, potential trouble spots, either intrinsic or heightened, for couples who both don the same career hat: professional lives usurping private ones, shoptalk becoming all-talk, impulses to lord over less-advanced partners, and so forth.

BUT ON the plus side, such duos — whose numbers should grow as more women gain footholds in the work world — can enjoy the benefits of a mate who knows firsthand exactly what they have been up against all day, Brennan says, someone with an understanding ear who more than likely has fielded a similar experience.

"For me, there's no doubt in my mind that the difficulty of the past few years has been much easier by the fact that Miriam has been through it herself, and we can joke about the hard times," says Robert Rottapel, who cares for patients in the third year of his internal medicine residency at the Veteran's Administration Medical Center in West Los Angeles.

"She can remember the stories from when she went through it. It doesn't change the fact that I think she's frustrated, and I'm also frustrated (by the demands upon them), but it certainly helps, and she's also extremely supportive."

The two met and married a couple of years ago when Rottapel was a med student and Miriam Myers was in a residency program at a Washington, D.C., hospital. At the time, Rottapel had made a vow to himself to avoid romantic liaisons with those of the same profession.

"IN PRINCIPLE, I didn't have any interest in marrying someone in medicine, so I never dated medical students or nurses or doctors. I thought I wanted to marry someone in a different field, because medicine is all-encompassing, and for many people, although they may be interested in the rest of the world, their knowledge of the rest of world is fairly limited. ... So it makes sense that I would be attracted in principle to people who fulfill my other interests, be they academic areas or music or art or social issues."

So why did he bend his principle?

"I fell in love with Miriam," chuckles Rottapel, 30, sitting next to his expectant wife.

"I had similar feelings about doctors," says Myers, who for the last year has been assigned to the Manhattan Beach, Calif., office of the Hawthorne Community Medical Group. "I had a lot of stereotypically bad images of doctors. You know: They sit around at parties and talk about cases. I also had a little bit of a prejudice against doctors. But over the last few years a lot of people I've met have been doctors and they've become very good friends, so that kind of broke that image for me."

CNS Graphic

In the long run, the two say, sharing the same field has made life easier because so much is understood without explanation.

"BECAUSE PRE-MED, med, the whole thing is a 10-year process, it's a whole socialization," says Myers, 32. "In some ways, both of us having been through that, it's almost like marrying someone of your own religion. There's a certain common language that doesn't have to be explained, that we both immediately understand."

David Berkedal and Sally Welch don't share the same religion, but they do share a marriage, a 1-year-old son, James, and sometimes their two related careers. Berkedal has been pastor of Christ Lutheran Church in Compton for nine years, and Welch became an ordained Disciples of Christ minister in 1982. They married in 1983, brought together by their work on a board dealing with media issues for the Southern California Ecumenical Council.

What from the outside may seem inherently incompatible works for them, they say, because their career emphases are different and they tactfully "agree to disagree" on opposing religious views.

WHILE BERKEDAL has a congregation, Welch focuses on ecumenical work, guest preaching and teaching at various sites. A major thrust of her church is to bring the various denominations together, a goal perhaps personified by her own marriage. And because the Disciples of Christ "have no creed but Christ," Welch says she enjoys a flexibility that allows her to appreciate her husband's affiliation.

"He's more liturgical than my group is and I am in spirit," says Welch, who attends Berkedal's church during those times she is not herself preaching.

Religious issues aside, the two still face the same situations of other dual-career couples in the same profession.

"Sometimes I think there's some professional competition there," Berkedal allows slowly.

"I don't feel that at all," responds his wife.

"Maybe I'm saying it wrong," Berkedal says. "But if I were to make a decision and you were to say, 'I'd do it differently,' I'd feel that that's something I'd have to take more seriously than from someone who hadn't had a similar professional background. ... When it's coming from a spouse who has had a similar-professional background, it becomes a professional opinion, so it's more inclined to be interpreted as, 'You're wrong, this is the better way to do it.'"

This could happen more readily in relationships in which one partner is further along in his or her career.

"That would be a real natural," Brennan says. "'Let me sit you down and tell you how to do it, let me tell you how I did it, 10 easy steps to be as successful as I am.' Sure," she laughs. "... Again, that comes from not feeling 100 percent OK about yourself and needing to lord over the other person."

JOHN AND Elfriede Shook say that has never been a point of contention with them, though John got something of a head start in his career in law when Elfriede put her work on hold to have children, Michael, now 24, and Victoria, 18.

The couple met during college and married three months later when John was 22 and Elfriede 19. He finished law school and spent six years as trial counsel for United California Bank (now First Interstate Bank), going into private practice in 1974. Elfriede, meanwhile, mothered the two children and later went to work in John's office.

In 1976, she returned to law school and passed the bar in 1980. For three years, she and John worked as attorneys in the same firm, until John was appointed to the bench in 1983. Today he is the supervising judge of the criminal department in Compton, Calif.

When they practiced together, she never lusted after the big cases her husband received, she says, "because I was free to help him, do research for him, make court appearances for him when it was necessary. I was always part of the case. He depended on me to help him out."

"I THINK so many people who are married go their separate ways at 7:30 in the morning, and then they meet at 7:30 in the evening, have dinner, sit down and read the paper, then watch television and go to bed," says her husband of 25 years. "And you have this breakdown in a lot of marriages, and it's due to a failure to communicate. I think when you're working together and you have common goals and interests, you of necessity communicate with each other. I think that's good and healthy, and it provides you with an opportunity to really get to know your spouse. I think couples who are working in the same profession are lucky in that respect."

He does not subscribe to the theory that too much togetherness can be a bad thing. "I think quite to the contrary," he says. "I think it's very important to the longevity of a marriage to have a lot of things in common."

The Shooks agree with the other couples in believing that their demanding professions cannot be put aside at the front door.

The key, Brennan says, is to also develop outside interests that both partners can bring into the relationship, keeping it fresh and free of stagnation.

"If all of her friends are doctors and all of his friends are doctors, there can be the sense of becoming ingrown. It's real important for each to make a conscious effort to find interests outside the professional field and to develop friends and so forth in different areas," Brennan says.

WHETHER A COUPLE is sharing a career or each is pursuing a different field, the issue of salaries can crop up. With a shared career, though, it may be more sensitive — especially if the woman brings home a bigger chunk of the bacon.

"We'd like to think in the '80s that we're beyond that," Brennan says, "but I deal with enough couples now who certainly, from all the outer trappings, look like your liberated yuppies — unisex and the whole thing. But men still have that real deep, traditional belief that 'I am the main provider,' so, yes, that could be a problem. ... There's that cultural division of: This doesn't seem right. The man should be older and taller and make more money."

Berkedal, in summing up the situation of dual-career, same-profession couples, says simply: "It's like any other marriage. There are things that could be problems, but it's all in how you approach them. I'd say there are more pluses."

Businessmen offer old product, new package

Anthony Bachman and Richard Kane have established a company that wraps the contraceptives in packages with amusing messages.

One package is printed with the words, "For the man who has everything." Another says, "Yuppie Love." Still another, designed like an envelope says "First Class Male" and, in smaller print, "Return to sender."

"We want to appeal to the youth of America to make it cool to hold them in their pockets or their purses," said Bachman, 31.

With Kane, he co-founded the 2-month-old company called A and R Marketing, which has the slogan, "Creative condoms — the practical, practical joke." The company is based in Royal Palm Beach, Fla., west of West Palm Beach.

The businessmen said they were inspired by sex therapist Dr. Ruth, who approaches the subject of sex in a frank manner and urges others to do the same.

Kane and Bachman hope to boost business by donating 5,000 of the specially packaged condoms to Planned Parenthood in West Palm Beach. They say the contraceptives will be packaged in containers that have a picture of a road with a sign saying, "Plan ahead. Use condom sense."

A spokeswoman for Planned Parenthood confirmed that the group expects to receive the donation, which is about worth $6,500, The Miami Herald reported. But the organization wants to make sure the containers are in good taste before distributing them.

Bachman said the company has distributed 25,000 condom packages nationally through card shops. He said it wants to sell the product to drug stores.

Tips given to prevent burglaries

NEW YORK (AP) — Over 2 million households will be burglarized this year, according to Bureau of Justice Statistics.

In over 40 percent of burglaries, the thief enters through an unlocked door or window. There are some simple things to do to secure the house without spending a lot of money, says Family Circle magazine.

- Install bright outdoor lights and connect them to automatic timers.
- Close drapes and curtains when away and hide all valuables.
- Install wide angle peepholes and deadbolt locks on all doors.

MISTER ROGERS

Pass time with past

By FRED ROGERS
WITH BARRY HEAD

When you're in a situation with, say, a 2-year-old, and you just have to wait for something, how can you make the time pass without restlessness, whines, scoldings or frayed tempers?

Well, you might have brought a favorite book along ... but maybe you didn't. Or a favorite toy ... but maybe that got left at home, too. There are hand games and finger games that you may remember from your own childhood, but often these diversions don't seem to work for very long.

Storytelling can be one of the best ways to keep a child's mind busy. You may be able to remember one you and your child have read together, or you may be able to make up one, but there's another alternative a young mother demonstrated recently: remembering a real-life story together — reliving an event you know your child can remember. In that remembering may be the greatest source of diversion of all.

This mother and her "almost 2" were waiting on a bench for a bus that was to bring the child's father back home. The bus was late, the noon hour was hot, the little boy made it clear he was hungry.

The scene had all the elements for trouble, and 15 minutes into the wait, trouble seemed just moments away. The boy grew tired of counting trucks that passed (and of course he couldn't count very high), and "I want something to eat!" became a more and more insistent and whiny refrain.

"Do you remember when we had to wait for Daddy at Kennedy Airport?" the mother asked, and with that the magic began. The boy nodded a little uncertainly — an uncertainty that suggested his mind was suddenly divided among the lateness of the bus, his hungry tummy and the remembering of the time at the airport.

"What did we see while we were waiting?" his mother asked. "Airplanes," the boy said. "How many airplanes," his mother asked, taking her son onto her lap. "Lots of airplanes!" the boy exclaimed, making a gesture with his arms that took in the whole sky. "One, two, three, four, five, six, nine, ten, thirteen, fifteen, eighteen..."

"And do you remember how we had to wait ... and wait ... and wait ...." Bouncing her knees up and down, she began a swaying body rhythm on each "wait" that made her son smile.

"And then we went inside with all those people, and we had to wait ... and wait ... and wait ...." Now, as the boy bounced and swayed on his mother's knees, his mouth formed "wait ... wait ... wait ...."

"And then the big doors opened, and people started coming out, and we looked for Daddy, but we had to wait ... wait ... wait ...." By this time the boy had a sly, expectant smile, and his eyes were locked to his mother's as he anticipated what was coming.

"And then who did we see?" "Daddy!" the boy shouted, and both mother and child clapped their hands.

The trouble was, the bus still wasn't in sight. "Honey," the mother said, "I know you're hungry, and we'll get something to eat just as soon as ...." Her son interrupted her: "Tell me the part about Kennedy Airport again!" he commanded.

So the mother began again from the beginning, spinning out a much more elaborate story, adding as many opportunities for the bouncing and swaying and the "wait ... wait ... wait ..." parts as she could. Before she was half way through, the bus did arrive, Daddy did appear, and together they did go off to get something to eat.

"You're a really good waiter, Alex," his mother said as they walked away. With his mother's help, Alex certainly was able to become a good waiter. His mother's attitude and practical tip will be serving Alex all of his life.

Location of new home important

Associated Press

The selection of your new neighborhood may eventually make more difference to you than the design choices you make in your new home. After all, neighborhood not only affects the market value of your home, it also shapes the way you live, where your children go to school, and how long your commute to work takes, advises Better Homes and Gardens Home Plan Ideas.

As you evaluate a neighborhood as a potential location for your new home, keep these points in mind:

■ Neighborhoods can be appreciating in value, deteriorating or remaining stable. If a new development is being filled in with lower cost housing, things are on the decline. Easy-to-spot signs of deterioration in established neighborhoods include run-down homes and lots of "for sale" signs.

■ Community services, such as police and fire departments, public transportation, and shopping outlets add to the convenience of your location. Take special note of the services you may need or want nearby, such as a hospital, day-dare center, or library.

■ If you have children, consider the availability of good schools. The local school district office should be able to provide you with figures on class size, scores on standarized achievement tests, and the amount of money the district spends per student each year.

■ While the mortgage payment is the primary cost in home ownership, taxes will be a big expense. Some areas figure property taxes on the year just past, so you might not have to pay anything but lot taxes (a few dollars) for the first several months you own your new home. The local assessor can estimate how much the taxes will be. If you live in a new development, property taxes will probably climb in the future as services are added to the community.

■ It's important to the value of your home to know how local zoning and building regulations work. In some communities, local politicians grant exceptions so regularly you'll have a difficult time accurately predicting the nature of new growth.

Stripping ruins funiture value

By CECILIA GOODNOW
Hearst News Service

If you want your old furniture to last long enough to become antique, treat it right and avoid a few cardinal sins, the largest of which being the urge to strip and refinish it.

"We strongly urge you to not strip your furniture," says Jim Reiss of Seattle's Museum of History and Industry. "It ruins the furniture."

Stripping also destroys much of the historical value of a piece. If you simply must strip a piece, however, Reiss suggests you do it by hand rather than using a chemical stripper. But first, try a coat of wax. Wax often works wonders on dull, lifeless finishes, he says.

Wood furniture, whether new or refinished, should be sealed with natural finishes such as varnish or shellac to allow the wood to breathe, Reiss says.

Sun is another problem. Furniture thrives on constant temperature and even, constant humidity, so avoid placing it in direct sunlight or next to heat registers.

Workers rank dental benfits, cost-of-living adjustments top

NEW YORK (UPI) — American workers who were asked to select two employee benefits they do not already receive thought first of their wallets — and then of their teeth.

Survey findings released by the Roper Organization show that the benefit employees most want is an automatic cost-of-living adjustment to their salaries. The second most popular benefit is a dental care insurance plan that would offer coverage similar to standard medical-health plans.

"Time after time, our data shows that workers would choose more money over non-monetary benefits," states the survey report in Roper's "The Public Pulse." And "as pointed out (previously), dental plans are already one of the fastest growing new benefits in the corporate world."

The third and fourth selections were "rather surprising," said the report in Roper's "The Public Pulse." The workers' third choice was "the option of taking a 2- or 3-month sabbatical every 5 years. The fourth choice was a 4-day work week.

Sabbaticals and 4-day work weeks were especially popular among two groups:

- workers in executive and professional positions and
- workers in the Northeast and the West.

This finding suggests that "employers should be particularly sensitive to local needs and desires," said the report, and should incorporate special leave benefits to ensure "keeping and attracting key managerial and executive personnel."

Marriage penalty intact in tax reform bill

By JOSEPH MIANOWANY

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Two-earner couples wondering if they could avoid a marriage penalty under the new tax reform bill by filing separate returns are out of luck, according to details of the plan released.

An 80-page summary of the bill prepared by the Joint Committee on Taxation outlined a number of details in the legislation for the first time, including its tax treatment of married couples filing separate returns.

The summary, prepared by congressional aides, filled in some of the blanks that were left because of the haste with which House and Senate negotiators approved the plan Aug. 16.

The summary showed that married couples filing separately would be treated the same, or worse, as if they filed a joint return.

The task of drafting the massive legislation is expected to take a couple more weeks. The bill must then be approved by the House and Senate before it can be sent to President Reagan.

Overall, it appeared the 80-page summary of the bill contained few surprises.

Thermostat tips to help cut cost

By WILLIAM R. GREER
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — When it gets cold, the simplest way to cut heating bills is to turn down the thermostat when no one is home or when everyone is asleep.

Thermostats have long been able to change the temperature of a home all by themselves, but now, for the extremely temperature conscious, some elaborate electronic models can be programmed to change the thermostat setting six times a day, seven days a week.

Of course, a homeowner has to remember to program these computerized thermostats. But if that seems too much bother, there are thermostats that come preprogrammed.

The Honeywell Magic Stat 1000, for example, has four schedules stored in each unit's memory. One reduces the temperature from 5 to 10 degrees, depending on the homeowner's choice, for 7½ hours at night, and then returns it to the previous setting. A second program reduces the temperature at night for 7½ hours, returns it to the normal setting in the morning for 1½ hours, drops it again later in the day for 6 hours and returns it to normal for 9 hours in the evening. The two other programs lengthen or shorten the periods during the day but still lower the temperature for 7½ hours at night.

The programs cannot be changed, and the temperature cannot be reduced by more than 5 to 10 degrees. Installing the new thermostat requires no rewiring. An existing round mechanical thermostat can simply be unscrewed from its wall plate, and the Magic Stat 1000 can then be attached to the plate with three screws.

Of course, before the Magic Stat 1000 can do its job properly, a homeowner has to choose one of the four programs, but that only involves flipping two switches.

The suggested retail price for the Honeywell Magic Stat 1000 is $44.95, and it is for sale at a number of stores in the Northeast, among them Rickel Home Centers in New York and New Jersey and Pergament Home Centers on Long Island.

College students create empty nest

By ALICE NOLAN
Hearst News Service

As a new crop of college freshmen begins to make the transition to their campus homes, they leave behind many an anxious parent hovering uncertainly over an empty nest.

The transition for the parents is often more difficult than for their children. For many parents, the departure of the children is a catalyst that leads to depression and sometimes divorce.

"Give yourself some time. Usually the parents' reaction to the separation should be over by the end of the first semester," psychologist Dr. Rod Ruppel advises.

"It is one of those transitions that will cause stress and cause a person to make adjustments, but these adjustments can be positive and produce growth in healthy ways, not just create problems," Ruppel said. "Most of the time the parents don't need professional help, but if depression persists they should seek some counseling."

Psychologist James C. Ronning says the mother and father may need marriage counseling because they have grown apart.

"The No. 1 thing I've run into are the cases where the couple has been married for a number of years and they've made the mistake of centering their lives around the children, rather than letting their relationship be paramount," he explains.

Another observation relates the empty nest to symptoms of female menopause. Depression associated with menopause occurs at about the same time as the children leaving, and the two may be more related than was previously believed, Ronning says. The woman who has put all of her energy into child-rearing may be left wondering what her purpose is and what contribution she will make to life.

"This can be worked out in several different ways," Ruppel says. "Going back to school, getting involved in new activities, looking for a job."

One of the most helpful things parents can do is to talk about their feelings, Ruppel says.

"Anticipating a change usually causes more anxiety than the change itself. But if parents are willing to talk openly about their feelings, they will be more prepared for those feelings. Also they should try to view as many positive aspects of the transition as they can. List the pluses, not the minuses."

When parents recognize that going off to college and separation from them is a necessary step for their children in terms of their development as responsible adults, Ruppel says, they are more likely to view the separation in a positive light.

"Some feel they need to have a real strong control over the kids. They need to form a sense of new purpose. They will be more of a friend to the kids," Ruppel says.

"I think the bottom line is the quality of the relationship between the parents and between the parents and the child," he said.

Welcome to Real World 101.
You'd be surprised how many college students go from highlighting textbooks to highlighting the classifieds. The fact is, a staggering number of graduates are unable to secure a career in their field of study.
That's why there's a nationwide program for college students called Cooperative Education. It allows students to alternate studies at the college of their choice with paid, practical work experience in the career of their choice. So Co-op Education students graduate with more than a degree. They have practical knowledge. And a competitive advantage in a crowded job market.
If you're a student, you should seriously consider the Co-op Education Program.
Because after years of studying in college, the last thing you need is another reading assignment.
Co-op Education
You earn a future when you earn a degree.

MR. FERRIS' WHEEL

Text by LINDA ANDERSON

Graphic by SUZAN CONDER

Like the telephone, basketball and Coca-Cola, the Ferris wheel is an American invention.

Tall and inviting, Ferris wheels are a familiar sight no self-respecting fair or carnival would operate without. For a fee, a child can circle around and around in a Ferris wheel. He can pretend he's flying ... and if he's lucky, the wheel will stop when his car is at the top and — for an instant — he can be king of the world and gaze down on his subjects.

But today's carnival ride is different than the original Ferris wheel, which was invented almost a century ago through the tried-and-true method of Yankee Ingenuity.

The year was 1892. Civic-minded American architects and civil engineers gathered in Chicago to discuss what kind of fabulous structure could be constructed for the 1893 World's Columbian Exposition to take place in "the windy city." Of course, this proposed structure would have to be more spectacular than the Eiffel tower, which had graced the 1889 Paris Exposition.

According to writer Jack Fincher in an issue of Smithsonian magazine, "a tall, slim fellow with a bushy, black mustache" and the colorful name of George Washington Gale Ferris Jr. "secretly vowed to meet the awful Eiffel challenge."

According to legend, Ferris sketched out his wheel so perfectly that "despite a complexity of stresses and strains, not a single change need ever be made," Fincher wrote.

NEVER MIND that the idea behind such a wheel was not a new one — wheels carrying people or things are found throughout history. Never mind that the wheel itself is such an ancient invention that its origins aren't clear. Ferris might have reinvented the wheel, Fincher wrote, but "at least the man had reinvented it big."

The original Ferris wheel was enormous — 250 feet in diameter, that's 26 stories high. It turned on a 70-ton axle that was 45 feet long, and was driven by a 1,000-horsepower engine. Each of its 36 passenger cars could carry 60 passengers, making it possible for as many as 2,160 people to ride at the same time.

However, unlike many of today's smaller models, the original wheel was permanently fixed in place, "suspended between 140-foot-high steel towers anchored in 20-foot-square concrete blocks each sunk 35 feet deep in the earth," Fincher wrote. "Fully loaded, the wheel would weigh 1,200 tons, or as much as three Boeing 747s."

Of course rumors and speculation about the wheel's strength, safety and even its workability abounded. But as history proved, it performed beautifully and was a complete success. About 1½-million people paid the outrageous fee of 50 cents to ride Ferris' wheel through two complete revolutions, a trip lasting about 20 minutes.

But the wheel's brilliant reign at the Exposition gave way to a series of grimmer realities. Ferris and the Exposition traded lawsuits in a fight over the wheel's profit, a permanent home for the huge structure was difficult to find and finally — perhaps the most crashing blow — "an Illinois bridge builder named William Sullivan went home ... and designed what Ferris had not: a portable wheel."

Wheel 'Ferris' of the fair

Ferris wheel enthusiasts might want to visit the Texas State Fair in Dallas, this year scheduled for Sept. 26-Oct. 26.

"We have two small Ferris wheels," said Mary Ellen Tyler in the State Fair concessions office, "then we have the Texas Star."

The Star is 21 stories high, she said — 212 feet 6 inches tall. "It is the tallest wheel in the Western World." It's 44 gondolas can carry six passengers each. "It's a very safe ride — it's a beautiful ride."

The 15,000 red, white and blue light bulbs on the Star are computer controlled to display a brilliant light show.

The Star was was transported in the summer of 1985, first traveling by sea from Reggio, Emilio, Italy. Then it took 20 trucks with 40-foot trailers to load the wheel to Dallas, Ms. Tyler said. It required nearly 600 yards of concrete and 35 tons of reinforcing steel.

As a permanent fixture on the fairgrounds, the use of the Star can be rented for special occasions, she said, such as the Texas-OU weekend.

FERRIS

What is now an American tradition was not a financial gain for the man whose name it bears. "Aside from the honor of having it named for him, Ferris would never realize a penny from the resulting multi-million-dollar spin-off," Fincher wrote.

But Sullivan's company, Eli Bridge Company, still manufactures and sells the wheels.

The family-owned business has been in operation for decades. "My grandfather made his first (Ferris) wheel in 1900," said Lee Sullivan, president of Eli Bridge Company and grandson of the company's founder. The firm moved to Jacksonville, Ill., in 1918, and has been at that location ever since.

For Ferris and his original wheel, the picture was not so pleasant. After years of broken plans, crumpling dreams and a debt of more than $400,000, Ferris' wheel was auctioned off to a junk firm for $1,800. Ferris himself died in November, 1896, at age 37.

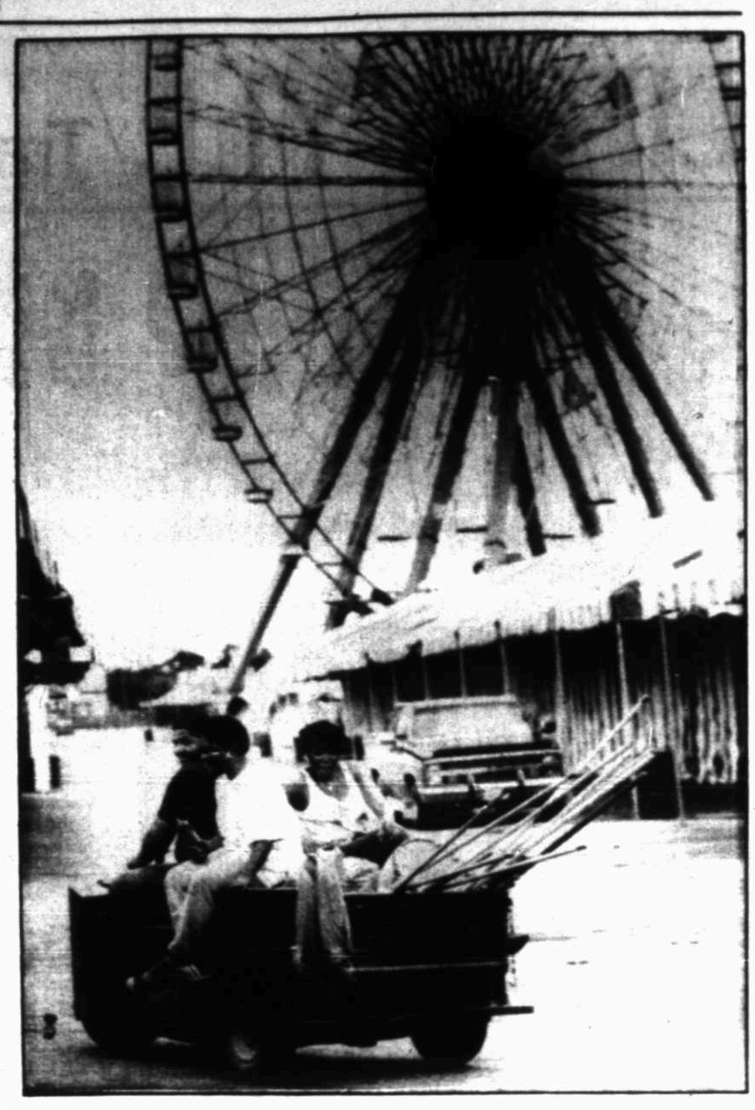

"Spared a junkyard funeral," the huge wheel, dismantled and shipped to St. Louis, enjoyed one last ride at the Louisiana Purchase Exposition in 1904. Its run was successful, but its overhead was too high, and in 1906 — abandoned by its owners and accused of cluttering up the landscape by St. Louisians — the original Ferris wheel was brought down by a 100-pound charge of dynamite.

Eli Bridge Company is still a family-owned business and still manufactures Ferris wheels, but production is limited, Sullivan said. "This year we've made four."

The company has clients "all over the world," Sullivan said. "We are in the process of delivering one (Ferris wheel) to Saudi Arabia."

Eli Bridge Company (which does not make bridges at all) manufactures Ferris wheels 40-feet, 42-feet and 55-feet in height, as well as "kiddie" models which are about 16-feet-tall. Prices are $53,555 for a 40-foot model, $55,240 for a 42-foot, $79,150 for a 55-foot and $39,080 for a kiddie-sized. "We sell ground-mounted to parks and trailer-mounted to carnivals," Sullivan said. The company also makes a hydraulically-operated model in both adult and kiddie sizes. Other company products are the scrambler, a kiddie scrambler and a swinging ride.

The Ferris wheel is an American invention that enjoys world-wide popularity. The largest wheel currently in operation is in Mimeji Central Park, Mimeji City, Hyogo, Japan, according to the 1986 Guinness Book of World Records. It stands 278 feet 10 inches and carries 46 cars. This grandchild of Ferris' original wheel was built in 1984.

Travel agents charging for once-free services

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

Are travel agents going to start charging fees for services they once offered vacationers for free? Some agents recently have begun imposing fees for booking low-cost airline tickets, arguing that otherwise they actually lose money on each transaction. Belair Travel of Bowie, Md., for example, now charges $10 to book any flight costing under $90. The fee is waived, however, if you are also buying a tour package or other travel arrangements.

It is too soon to tell how many other agencies will start charging for services, but the idea has sparked widespread debate among travel agents. Traditionally, agents have provided most of their services free to customers, earning their income from standard commissions paid by airlines, hotels and tour operators. But low-cost air fares in recent years have made commissions far less profitable than they once were.

As a result, more and more travel agents are experimenting with a variety of fees to compensate for lost income. However, as Paula Key of Devon Walker Travel of Washington points out, introducing new fees can be risky in the competitive travel industry, and many agents are adopting a wait-and-see policy.

DEVON WALKER is seriously considering the possibility of charging clients a planning fee for the time it takes to prepare individually designed tours, she says. "But in a city like Washington, where there's a travel agency on every corner, we don't want to be the first one out there."

Certain charges have long been standard at many, if not most, travel agencies — for example, reimbursement for long-distance phone calls the travel agent may have to make to confirm a hotel reservation.

Now, however, the travel industry is in transition, and there is no easy way of knowing in advance who charges what fees — or if an agency imposes any at all — except by asking. A good rule of thumb is that if you are buying a standard advertised tour or cruise package, you probably won't pay an extra fee. But you might expect to pay for any specialized services you request.

THE EXPERIMENTAL and the longstanding fees you could encounter when using a travel agent to book your next foreign or domestic vacation might include:

■ Booking, service and cancellation fees: Travel agents have been hit hard financially by the proliferation of discounted air fares following the deregulation of the nation's airlines. As promotional air fares plummeted, so have their commissions from the sale of tickets.

Agents contend that it costs them about $20 in time and labor to process a single airline ticket, but on a $150 round-trip fare (not unusual today) their customary 10 percent commission brings in only $15. An agent's costs increase when customers change their mind and a new ticket has to be issued. If a client cancels, they may have earned nothing for their efforts.

Philip Davidoff of Belair says his firm introduced the $10 booking fee for flights under $90 not, as one might expect, for additional income but to discourage customers interested only in buying a low-cost ticket, which he sees as a money-loser. He estimates that the fee has affected only about 1 percent of his business. If those clients go to some other agent, "that doesn't bother us."

Belair Travel waives the $10 fee (non-refundable) for its regular business accounts as well as customers who buy tours in conjunction with the flight or spend $3,000 or more a year with his firm.

ACCORDING TO Davidoff, who is a nationally known travel consultant, the booking fee flourished this spring in the Denver area because of an air-fare war in which some tickets sold for as little as $9 — commission, 90 cents. Since then, he has not seen much evidence of a strong trend among other agencies in the Washington area to introduce similar fees.

However, Travel Weekly, a trade journal, says the practice "is catching on in other cities, including Seattle and Phoenix, and among a smattering of agents elsewhere." It still considers Denver the center for such fees, which also include charges for issuing frequent-flyer awards, for cancellations or for rebooking a ticket if the fare drops. An agent's cancellation fee may be imposed on top of any penalty charged by an airline or tour operator.

■ Itinerary-planning or counseling fees: Many travel agents believe they should be considered professionals who ought to be paid for their time and expertise much the way lawyers and architects are. Mackey Travel of New York, which holds this view, has for some time been charging a minimum of $25 per person to help clients plan a vacation. It is not refundable, even if clients change their mind about going.

MANY TRAVEL agents deal primarily in pre-packaged tours and cruises. The agent reaps a profitable commission on a transaction that can be concluded quickly. But other travelers want an agent's help in putting together a specially designed, independent trip, such as a two-week drive through the British Isles with lodging at a different hotel every night. Making these hotel and travel reservations, says firm president Mackey Arnstein, may take several hours or even days. She charges according to how much time she expends.

Some customers bring in a list of preferred hotels, which saves them money, but others expect her to make suggestions. Often they will ask for such specific advice as what restaurants to dine at while on their vacation. She believes these clients should "pay for my knowledge."

Cynthia Newman of Waters Travel Service of Washington similarly charges an itinerary-planning fee. A client may come to her office, she says, with an idea that "they want to go to the Riviera and then maybe drive to Paris." Working out this kind of independent itinerary takes time, she says. And her staff has to travel frequently so that they have the background to make acceptable suggestions. Her price for this extra help depends on how long it takes to complete arrangements, but generally she charges a minimum of $50 for several hours of work.

■ No-frills fee: This very specialized charge is, in effect, the very opposite of an itinerary-planning fee. The idea of Marian Lieberman of Washington's World of Travel, it rewards travelers who do all of their own planning by saving them money. "You don't pay for advice you don't need," she says.

HER FIRM charges a specified fee to book a package tour or cruise, and then it remits to the customer the firm's commission, usually 10 percent. As she explains, if you see a tour or a cruise advertised for $3,200, and you know exactly what date you want to sail, you can book the cruise with her. She will charge you $100 for handling the booking, and then she will return to you her $320 commission. The savings amounts to $220 on the trip.

It definitely is a no-frills service. "We won't tell you where to shop," she says, or help obtain any visas required, except to direct you to the proper authorities.

She says she can offer "virtually any vacation (tour, cruise or ticket) that is normally sold to the public" at similar discounts. Her schedule of fees is $30 for trips up to $700; $50 for trips between $700 and $1,500; $100 for trips between $1,500 and $5,000; and $150 for trips over $5,000. A group of four traveling together or a family pays only one fee, provided their itinerary is identical. She charges a $25 cancellation fee, in addition to any cancellation charges levied by a tour operator or airline.

IF YOU ARE not sure where you want to go, she will send you brochures and direct you to the library, tourist offices or newspaper travel sections to do your own research. "The only person we can't help is someone who says, 'I want to go to someplace warm.' "

According to Lieberman, her firm has spawned 16 other affiliates across the country. There is, she says, "a significant segment of the market" that does not need the advice and time of a traditional travel agency. Travel-Letter, a publication of Consumer Reports, called the no-frills operation a front-runner "in what may become a significant factor in the purchase of travel services."

■ Reimbursements: If you ask a travel agent to make reservations for you at a series of small hotels in Europe, you may have to pay for whatever phone or telex charges may be required, often $5 or more per reservation.

Such costs usually are incurred if the hotel does not have a toll-free number (in the United States and Canada) or, in the case of foreign hotels, if it does not have a representative in the United States. Some agents may ask for authorization to charge the long-distance calls to your phone number.

■ Markups: Some hotels do not pay commissions to travel agents. If you have asked an agency to book you into such a hotel, it may add on its own commission to the daily cost of the room. As a result, when you check in to the hotel, you may notice you are paying a higher price than the hotel's posted rates.

As a travel agent, Mackey Arnstein, who supports such markups, believes, "You're entitled to a profit."

Lack of American tourists hurting European economy

PARIS (AP) — European travel officials missed the Americans this summer.

The "stayaways," Americans who didn't travel to Europe during the tourist season that begins in late spring, are expected to cost France $800 million by the end of the year.

Dutch officials estimate they have lost about $110 million.

"This is serious because Americans tend to spend more than others," said Bret Annerer, vice director of the Interlaken tourist office in Switzerland.

European hotels catering to Americans have been severely hit. The Intercontinental in Paris, for example, reported 60 percent of reservations made by Americans were canceled.

Overnight stays in Sweden fell by 35 percent in May and June, said Birgitta Olausson of the Swedish Tourist Board.

In Austria, the number of U.S. hotel guests dropped by 60 percent in June, according to the Austrian Hoteliers Association said. Denmark recorded a 26.7 percent decline in American guests in May.

On the whole, European travel officials said the number of U.S. visitors along with the revenues they bring dropped by 30 to 60 percent. The falloff in visitors started after U.S. warplanes bombed Libya and the Chernobyl nuclear accident in the Soviet Union in April.

Not all Americans, of course, were put off.

In London, Olive Leonard Pruski, a tourist from New Orleans, said she was too busy sightseeing to worry about terrorism or fallout from the Chernobyl accident.

"Our only concern is finding our way around London," said Mrs. Pruski, who was visiting Trafalgar Square with her daughter and granddaughter.

The Europeans reacted quickly to the decline in American tourism and began aggressive advertising campaigns, offering discounts on hotels and airfares in an attempt to coax the Americans back.

In Venice, Italy, where U.S. tourism was down 60 percent, a campaign called "Supper at the Palace" was launched. Two dozen Americans each week enjoyed a romantic, elegant evening out, with the bill paid by the tourist bureau and hotel owners' association.

France capitalized on its ties to the U.S. Statue of Liberty celebration. Air France offered free charter tickets to couples buying tickets by July 4, the Galleries Lafayette department store gave a 10 percent discount to U.S. customers on that day, and the tourism minister made rounds at the big Paris hotels, greeting American guests.

The tourism problem in France had been compounded by U.S. resentment of the French government's refusal to let American jets fly over on their way to targets in Libya.

Now tourism officials in several countries are cautiously saying the worst is over. Although official figures are not in, hotel bookings and airline reservations have rebounded.

"The signs of a recovery are unmistakable," said Aafke Huininga of the Netherlands Bureau for Tourism.

"We already see a silver streak on the horizon, as bookings by individual tourists begin to rise slowly again for the coming months," agreed Karl Heinz Mueller, a marketing analyst for the Austrian Tourist Promotion Board.

But no one has predicted a return to the banner year registered across Europe in the summer of 1985, when the dollar was worth about 40 percent more in international exchange.

"Europe now becomes very expensive and this keeps them away," said Stael Von Holstein of the Association of European Airlines in Brussels.

"Many have already been to Europe when it was cheap and this is why they don't come a second time when they think there might be nuclear dust around," Holstein said.

Heinz Illi, director of the tourist office at Lucerne, Switzerland, said the main problem was the decline of the dollar, not fear of terrorism or radiation.

Fair set for longer run

DALLAS (AP) — Chinese acrobats, apple pie-toting moms and some 4 million people will begin their descent on a renovated Fair Park this month when the State Fair of Texas celebrates its 100th birthday and the state's 150th.

"This is a special show for a special year," says State Fair spokeswoman Nancy Wiley. "Where else could you see an original Magna Carta a few yards away from pig races?"

An expanded 31-day version of the State Fair, dubbed "Texas 150" in honor of the state's Sesquicentennial, opens at the 277-acre park Sept. 26 and continues through Oct. 26.

Renovations that are part of an $18 million Fair Park facelift aren't quite complete, but by month's end, visitors will find new sidewalks, parking lots, paint jobs, trees, fountains and elaborate flower beds.

Even the auto building, an unheated, uncooled hulk of a structure since the original burned in 1942, was restored to match its art deco sister building across the esplanade.

Police officials say there are other, less tangible improvements. Because of an unprecedented 22 assaults and two murders at the fair last year, patrols are being beefed inside and around the park.

Capt. Dwight Walker says more than 115 officers in cars, on horseback and on foot will patrol the park's perimeter, and Ms. Wiley adds that shuttle buses will let visitors off inside the fence, not outside like last year.

"I think it's going to be a safe fair this year," Walker says. "We're going to be prepared for any eventuality, and lighting at the park is much better this year than last."

Not since the Centennial Exposition of 1936, when Texas was celebrating its 100th anniversary of independence from Mexico and Fair Park was almost completely rebuilt to accommodate the 178-day fete, has the State Fair run so long.

It usually lasts 17 or 18 days, and the last experiment with a longer run — 1984, when it was 24 days — almost drowned under 17 days of rain. Ms. Wiley says the fair length will return to normal next year.

The centerpiece of "Texas 150" will be the Texas Pavilion exhibits, which will fill the Hall of State with historic documents, photographs, maps, artifacts and other items that trace the Lone Star State's heritage.

Besides the 7½-century-old Magna Carta, the pavilion will include copies of the U.S. and Texas declarations of independence and Col. William B. Travis' final letter from the Alamo.

Then there are all the home-cooking, handicraft and livestock competitions that make a state fair a state fair. And Big Tex will be pumped back up and moored near the main esplanade to make it a truly Texan state fair.

But there will also be some foreign spice: a 17,000-square-foot China Pavilion will feature a replica of the Great Wall of China, eight shows daily of the Incredible Acrobats of China and on-going artisan displays.

In addition to the usual auto show that will preview the 1987 car models, the National Aeronautics and Space Administration is building a mock-up of a space station that will also display space suits and other gear.

The smash musical "Cats" has been booked into the Fair Park Music Hall for a 24-performance run, and the top price, $40 tickets are sold out, Ms. Wiley said.

As for the fair itself, ticket prices have gone up slightly this year from 1985's $4 for adults and $1 for children. The cost is the same during the week but rises to $5 and $2 on the weekends, Ms. Wiley said.

Tour planned

New York Times News Service

When autumn comes to Japan covering the hillsides with brilliant leaf colors and inspiring chrysanthemum displays, a tour will wind through the countryside, focusing on traditional crafts while offering participants a view of Japan's historical and modern attractions as well.

Leaving Los Angeles Oct. 14 and returning Nov. 4, the tour will incorporate a visit to Mashiko, a pottery center with 150 kilns; to Shizuokoa, site of a memorial museum devoted to Serizawa Keisuke, a renowned textile artist who holds the Japanese Government designation of National Living Treasure; and to Ogimachi, an area where some 500 households carry on the craft of paper making that has been associated with the region for more than a millennium.

Based on double occupancy, the tour is priced at $4,235 a person, not including round-trip international air fare, estimated at $1,050 from Los Angeles. The price includes all accommodations, daily breakfast, 14 lunches, 10 dinners, bus and train transportation, entry fees, tour guide, tips and taxes. Study: How parents handle divorce affects children

By JAMIE TALAN
Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

The effects of divorce on children are far more devastating and long-lasting than researchers previously thought, according to new studies. Yet the findings show that it is not the divorce itself that matters, but how the parents handle the separation and then whether the child is able to develop meaningful relationships with both parents.

Twelve million children under 18 now reside in homes marked by divorce. Researchers have found that these descendants of divorce have lower academic scores, problem friendships and emotional turmoil years, perhaps decades, beyond the initial parental separation.

Some new information suggests that these problems are more prevalent in boys. Researchers are now attempting to find out why this sex difference is so great, and what could be done to circumvent these behavioral, academic and emotional problems. Also, other psychologists have identified which children fare best in homes of divorce, and why.

ACCORDING TO John Guidubaldi, a professor of counseling and school psychology at Kent State University in Ohio, the problem may simply be that boys lack a male figure to identify with in the home. About 90 percent of children of divorced parents are brought up by their mothers.

This finding, though not surprising, may lead to some necessary changes in the custody arrangements, Guidubaldi said. For example, he found that boys who grew up with their fathers, an admittedly small percentage of subjects in his study, adjusted better than those who grew up under the sole direction of their mothers. However, boys did just as well if they were in contact with the non-custodial male parent, or if the mother was satisfied with the parenting and emotional support of the father.

But how serious were the differences between children of divorce and children of intact families? To find out, the researcher compared about 700 children in the first, third and fifth grades. Half the children were from divorced homes, half from intact families. No parents had remarried at the time the study began.

THE AVERAGE length of separation was four years, enough time for the initial shock of separation to subside.

The first- and third-graders of families of divorce, Guidubaldi found, had lower grades, poor teacher assessments and spent more time in the school counselor's office. These children were also more likely to repeat a grade.

Also, they did more poorly on virtually all the social competency indicators, including teacher rating of peer popularity, the child's degree of withdrawal and dependency, inattention, negative feelings about oneself, impulsivity, etc.

Something unusual began to emerge in the girls by the fifth grade. The girls, it seems, showed virtually no differences from girls from intact families. In fact, the girls of divorce were more directed in assuming responsibility for their future.

These studies may be distorted by a major flaw: The negative effects may very well be a result of the loss of income the family suffers after the male parent leaves the home, rather than the divorce or how well the parents get along.

STATISTICS PAINT a grim picture for the newly divorced woman. Although her ex-husband's income goes up 42 percent in the year following a divorce (presumably, he is not supporting his wife and children in the style they were previously accustomed to), her income shrinks 73 percent. The median annual income of divorced heads of household is $10,000 to $15,000, compared to $25,000 to $30,000 for intact families.

Guidubaldi actually suspected that the loss of income was contributing to the problems of children of divorce. When he controlled for income by comparing groups of intact and divorced homes with equal salaries, he found that the differences between the two groups — intact and divorced — were virtually nonexistent, except in academics. He attributes these academic problems to any burdens the children might face at home. After all, most children of divorce recall how the custodial parent complains that the check is late, or it's never enough, etc. These statements on the home front, said Guidubaldi, have an impact on school performance.

"This may be an important factor for some children," said the researcher. It could mean that children had less to worry about when they felt financially secure and thus had more time to devote to schoolwork.

GUIDUBALDI WENT on to look at factors that may promote better adjustment. He found that kids who have structured lives — less television, regular mealtimes with parent, early bedtimes — did better than children from unstructured, chaotic home environments. Also, a positive relationship with a grandfather (for boys) was predictive of healthy adjustment.

"Although the crisis is painful, over the long range, we don't have any data to say that there are any negative effects if parents can keep a fairly cooperative relationship going," Guidubaldi said.

Although each child of divorce is unique, researchers have come upon some similarities in the way children of certain ages react to a divorce in the home.

Judith Wallerstein and her colleagues at the Center for the Family in Transition in Corte Madera, Calif., have completed a long-term study of 131 children of divorce of different ages. They identified feelings — from sadness to outright anger — that varied depending on the age of the child at the time of separation.

Children in the study ranged in age from 3 to 18. The researchers found that young children, primarily under 5, believe that a parent's absence means they did something wrong. Children of this age, the study found, regressed in behaviors like thumb-sucking and bed-wetting, actions that researchers suspect may be symbolic of the need to go back in time.

AT THE NEXT level, Wallerstein found that 5 to 8 year olds are old enough to begin to understand the difference between parental conflict and their own behavior. Although they may continue to shoulder some of the blame, they can also better understand that the problem is with the parents, and not them.

These children, the researchers found, had strong fantasies of a family reunion. Children of this age group are cunningly naive: They may run away or act out in school, actions they believe will bring their parents together.

By the time a child approaches adolescence, he or she may be trying to separate from parents. The divorce couldn't come at a worse time. According to Wallerstein's study, a divorce can seriously impair the child's movement through this period. Instead, the young person may feel more burden from the custodial parent to help take on some of the family chores.

In the study, half the growing children suffered a decline in school performance and had problems when relating to peers. Many expressed anger that their parents have disrupted their lives.

The California researchers followed the children of divorce for 10 years. At the five-year mark, one of the more significant findings was that one-third of adolescents suffered moderate to severe depression. After 10 years, the psychologists were surprised to see that half the children (many now teen-agers and beyond) still fantasized a reunion between their parents.

Good parenting — whether both parents live in the home or not — seems to act as a buffer for children of divorce, according to Irwin Sander, a professor of psychology at Arizona State University.

Dancing provides good exercise

NEW YORK (AP) — Dancing till dawn — or for at least 30 minutes — can help you get fit, according to Better Homes and Gardens Magazine.

It says Dr. Betty Rose Griffith and her associate, Phil Martin, put college couples through the paces for 30 minutes. After a five-minute cha-cha warm-up, the couples did four minutes each of the Viennese waltz, samba, polka and two sessions of the East Coast swing before cooling down with five minutes of cha-cha.

Students measured their pulse rates for 10 seconds between dances; 44 percent of them maintained their heart rate in the exercise benefit zone — defined as 60 to 80 percent of their maximum heart rate.

"The polka really can get your heart rate up there," says Griffith, past president of the National Dance Association. She recommends dancing 30 minutes, three times a week. She adds that expert dancers reach the exercise benefit zone easier than people who are less skilled.

IT'S YOUR LIFE

Retirees should fight procrastination

By STEVE EDWARDS

A friend used to say, "Why bother doing something today when you can put it off until tomorrow?" These words were the words I wanted to hear when I wanted to put something off, and I used the philosophy. Why bother doing something you really don't want to do at the time, when there's a tomorrow?

Part of this attitude is good. Americans live such frantic and fast-paced lives, it can be healthy to slow down and move at a slower gait. Yet it is equally important, especially during middle-aged years and retirement, that this attitude isn't carried too far. Procrastination may be enjoyable, but so is a sense of doing.

By definition, procrastination is nothing more than putting off until later what should have been done yesterday. Because we take pleasure in setting our own pace, it's easy to see that procrastination is a problem for both sexes in all ages.

As a boy, I washed dishes many times late at night, after all the ball games were finally concluded. Still do — housecleaning just doesn't carry the same sense of urgency as sporting events.

There are times, though, when this attitude can create serious problems. Procrastination in work or school is not desirable. A retired person who is floundering because he didn't plan ahead is a prime example. What was earlier delayed now creates some very serious concerns about his "facing up" to what is at hand.

Research has shown that women tend to put off things out of fear that they will be viewed negatively. A woman might want to give a party, try a new style of clothing or change her hairstyle, but resist doing so out of fear of a negative reaction.

Men, on the other hand, often delay important self-development activities because, they reason, since their principle job is to earn money, they don't have to worry about doing the other things necessary for a happy and fruitful life. In fact, workaholics are among the biggest procrastinators in our society because they believe their preoccupation with their professions allows them to neglect many other aspects of their lives.

Procrastination can be boiled down to three basic causes. The first is self-doubt. Some individuals just aren't sure of themselves and so they spend much time hesitating and second guessing.

The second, which is closely linked to the first, can be called frustration tolerance — people don't want to hassle themselves and their real priority is being comfortable rather than changing that which they are accustomed to.

The third basic cause of procrastination is lack of problem solving skills. In other words, some people simply haven't developed the ability to handle the day-to-day challenges.

Surprisingly, perfectionists are more susceptible to delaying than any other single group. Some are discouraged from beginning projects because they set impossibly high standards. Other perfectionists hesitate making decisions for fear they'll be wrong, so they postpone things and fall further behind. This delay often creates an inner frustration because schedules are not met.

Procrastination in retirement often means in putting off health-related actions, such as seeing a physician, losing weight or beginning an exercise program. Many retirees put off taking action on health-related problems so long that frustration, stress and self-disgust arise, and they end up in emergency situations that might have been avoided.

One important way to change a procrastinating attitude involves the commitment to change, but doing it in a slow and definite manner. It means setting one definite goal which is measurable and accomplishing that goal before moving on to the next. Too often we set goals too high or which cannot be measured.

To bring about greater self-esteem in our lives, start with simple basic tasks which can be completed, such as yardwork, gardening or painting a small portion of the house. Be flexible with your time, but leave enough to be able to accomplish set goals. No matter the age, doing and accomplishing are still important to personal development.

If you are a procrastinator, try to understand the possible harm you're doing to yourself and those around you. Begin now to set your goals and to eliminate putting off until tomorrow what you should have done yesterday.

Smokeless tobacco targeted in Cancer Society's ad campaign

By JAMES LITKE
Associated Press

CHICAGO — A graphic photo of a cancer-ravaged victim to illustrate a campaign against smokeless tobacco is being used by the state chapter of the American Cancer Society.

"There is a horror here, and it has to be portrayed. Tender advertising is just not going to get through," spokesman Stanley Tannenbaum said Tuesday. "We know that drawing on our experience with cigarettes."

But, said Tannenbaum, a Northwestern University advertising professor and a member of the society's public-information committee, "it's a 90-degree turn in our approach."

Dr. Joseph Canzona, a member of the chapter's oral cancer committee, said the campaign was necessary because smokeless tobacco, and especially snuff, has proved appealing to youths, despite medical studies linking its use to oral cancer.

"Just as we start to reap the tangible rewards of our efforts to combat cigarette smoking, we find a dangerous upswing beginning with smokeless tobacco," he said.

Canzona said a study of Florida schools has shown that nearly 40 percent of males and 4 percent of females in grades eight through 10 used smokeless tobacco.

He said it is as important to focus on the hazards of smokeless tobacco as to steer people from cigarettes. And he repeated a pledge by U.S. Surgeon General C. Everett Koop that continued vigilance is needed to halt the "tragic mistake of replacing the ashtray with the spittoon."

Canzona said school-age youngsters would be the primary target of the advertising campaign.

"Most young people who start with smokeless tobacco start with snuff," he said, "and that's especially distressing because the evidence implicating snuff as a causative agent of oral cancer is a lot stronger than it is for chewing tobacco."

American Cancer Society spokeswoman Patricia Brennan said only the campaign's TV segment would be used nationally.

The poster showing the cancer-ravaged chin of a young smokeless tobacco user who later died of oral cancer will be distributed only in Illinois, said Tannenbaum.

"We obviously can't respond directly to the ads because we haven't seen them," said Ron Williams, a spokesman for the Smokeless Tobacco Council in Washington. "But if the intent of their program is to discourage youths from using smokeless tobacco products, then we are in agreement and we support that goal."

According to a national survey conducted by the society, males who are moderate users of smokeless tobacco are at four times greater risk of developing oral cancer than those who don't. The risk factor increases seven-fold among heavy users.

Tannenbaum said sales of smokeless tobacco have increased by 11 percent per year since 1974 and that there were more than 22 million users in the United States as of 1980.

ASK DR. RUTH

Bride-to-be should not regret flingless life

By DR. RUTH WESTHEIMER

Q. I have gone with the same guy eight years, since I was 17, and now we are going to get married. I never had sex with anyone else and I regret that. Before I go into this for life, shouldn't I have the experience of sex with someone else? At least one other guy? One reason I ask you is that I even feel guilty wanting another experience because he keeps saying he's glad I have had no other men.

A. It is a fact that we can feel guilty about breaking eggs or throwing out old matchbooks with three matches unused. Your regret is nothing to be guilty about, but don't tell him. He doesn't have to hear from you about that. Now — should you have sexual experience with other men before you marry? No. It could do great damage to your marriage to this man who values you.

Perhaps there really is a sacrifice on your part here. It is one well worth making for the promise of a good lifelong relationship. Be mature about this. That means knowing what you want and paying for it. If you are not ready for that payment, you are not ready to marry.

Q. You know what the housing problem is. Our solution was to share a pad — strictly as rent-sharers, no sex. One night she has the bed, I have the couch; next night, switch. The trouble is, people keep kidding us about our sex life and ask how come we both date other people, aren't we scared of infection, aren't we jealous, etc.

A. People are born curious. Also, they're born teasers. Teasing has its place in life, even if it hits on nerves sometimes. You can cool people off about this by not reacting. Just say, smiling, playfully, "None of your business." That can't make anyone mad, angry and still it does remind them that it really isn't their business. Let me ask you this: If you switch beds like that every night, do you keep switching the sheets, too? I know — none of my business.

Q. I'm a fanatic about my boyfriend not seeing other girls, especially some of these gorgeous chicks who make me feel lumpy. This isn't the usual joke. I act like a nut. I tear magazines out of his hand if there is a girl in a naked-type bathing suit, and I don't mean in a girlie book but a general magazine. Last night I stood in front of the TV screen so he couldn't see a girl in a commercial. Maybe it's because all my other boyfriends cheated on me?

A. Maybe. Only was that what happened, or did you make them crazy with your jealousy? What you are talking about certainly is not a joke. A man might be flattered, briefly, by your being so jealous of him, but in a little while he'll think "Who needs this?"

Go see a mental health professional. It doesn't have to send you to the poorhouse. Call your mental health center near you, make a date, discuss your problem and your ability to pay at the same time. I'm not saying you're crazy — just that, like so many people, you need to talk a problem over with an informed person who has time for you.

Q. We have had sex in the past when this didn't happen, but lately my girl gets completely frigid when we start to have sex. She won't even pet. Is this something she should go to a sex therapist for?

A. Maybe the two of you should see someone, a relationship counselor maybe, but right now what you have to do is have a talk with her. You have to ask her what is going on in her head when she rejects you like that.

To me it sounds as if she really may not be the one for you, and I speak not as a highly trained sex therapist but just as any sensible person would on hearing what you say. Maybe she is mad at you about something and you can do the right thing, make promises and she won't be mad. And perhaps, my friend, this relationship has run its course. They aren't always meant to last.

Researchers: Teen pregnancies will rise

NEW YORK (AP) — More than 1 million teen-agers will become pregnant this year and a half-million will bear and keep their babies, according to statistics gathered by Ladies' Home Journal magazine.

Of those teen-agers, only one in three will have used contraceptives, according to the Alan Guttmacher Institute and other family planning researchers.

Though European teen-agers are as sexually active as Americans, the article said they have fewer pregnancies because birth control information and contraceptives are more accessible.

"Other countries have a far more realistic approach," said Su Yates, a former Guttmacher researcher. "They say: 'Our kids are having sex. Let's make sure they don't get pregnant.' In our country, we're still trying to pretend our kids aren't having sex."

The average American girl is now sexually active at 16 and the average boy at 15, said the article in the magazine's October issue. The growing number of teen-age pregnancies resulted in state and federal governments paying out an estimated $16.7 billion in welfare payments to teen-age mothers last year, the magazine said.

But not all researchers believe increased information about contraception is the answer.

Kathleen Sullivan, who heads a Chicago program called Project Sex Respect, believes adults should be teaching teen-agers about abstinence, not birth control.

"Sex draws teen-agers into emotionally charged relationships they're not ready for," she said. "They never learn to communicate — and no amount of contraceptives is going to cure that."

DEAR ABBY

Abusive men scorned, not supported

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I read with interest any and all articles I can find about abused wives and children. I've read literally hundreds of them, and they all have one thing in common, a total disregard for the other party involved — namely, the abuser. Men who physically abuse their families are in dire need of help and support.

The abused wife and kids have shelters, financial support, counseling, support groups and sympathy. What does the abuser have? Nothing but public scorn. He is made to feel ashamed, hated and less than human. He is locked up and kept away from his family. How do I know how an abuser feels? I am one. For three years I beat on my wife, but never without provocation. I never enjoyed hitting her, but I couldn't help myself. Afterward, I felt sick to my stomach.

I need as much help as my wife, but there is no help for me. We are now separated and a divorce is pending. I love her and I love my kids, but I have lost them because of a few violent attacks on them. I am begging you for your help, Abby. I can't afford professional help, but I know I need it real bad. — HURTING IN FRESNO

DEAR HURTING: The person who admits that he needs professional help has taken a giant step in the right direction. You're wrong to say that you can't afford it — you can't afford to be without it. Counseling is available for both the abused and the abuser in some shelters for battered women. If it's not offered where you live, contact your local mental health facility. Counseling is available for everyone, and it's as near as your telephone book — at a price you can afford.

DEAR ABBY: I was recently married at a most beautiful wedding. My parents were divorced 10 years ago, and since that time they had barely spoken a civil word to each other. They both attended my wedding, and were not only polite to each other, they were downright friendly! Abby, it was the best wedding present either of them could have given me.

Please print this in hope that other divorced couples may see themselves, and realize it's possible to put aside their hostilities and bitterness for just one day for the sake of their child. It made my wedding day perfect in every way. — NEW BRIDE

DEAR BRIDE: Here's your letter with a message to divorced parents: "Read and heed, and you will compound the joy of a joyful occasion."

DEAR ABBY: You missed a chance to educate the 15-year-old "Oregon Smoke Hater." May I present some information to this young lady?

Dear Smoke Hater, please don't be so hard on your mother because she smokes and then tells you not to. As hypocritical as this may seem, she has her reasons.

I quit smoking two years ago, so I know how hard it is to quit. Smoking is both a physical and psychological addiction — a double whammy! Some experts say that smoking is harder to kick than heroin. And harder to give up than alcohol. If a person smokes one pack a day, at approximately 15 "hits" per cigarette, that amounts to 300 "hits" of tar and nicotine a day. Does that sound like an easy habit to break?

I started smoking 22 years ago because my friends did. There was some talk about it being bad for your health, but nobody made a big deal out of it. I never dreamed I'd become addicted. (No one ever believes he is going to become addicted to anything.)

I finally quit because I had to, and I will never smoke again. My lungs are damaged and I recently watched two beloved relatives die of lung cancer.

Don't be so hard on your mother when she tells you not to smoke. She's trying to help you do what she couldn't do. She's trying to tell you that the easiest way to kick a habit is not to start. — BEEN THERE

AT WIT'S END

Remote control leads to power struggle

By ERMA BOMBECK

There was a time when I honestly believed that the hands that held the car keys ruled the world. This was the summit of power, the E.F. Hutton of authority, the guardian of destiny.

That was before the remote television tuner came upon the American scene. Believe me, there is nothing to compare with the force of holding the evening's television viewing in the palm of your hand.

Every night after dinner there is a scramble for the tuner. There's my husband, Darth Vader, who regards the electronic device as his personal "force" of good over evil. I'm sitting there watching "Dallas" and just when Sue Ellen says, "Miss Ellie, I've got to sort things out. I thought for a few days I'd go to..." a 90-pound walrus flashes on the screen and Bill Conrad's voice says, "...the Bering Sea with thousands of other bulls to mate."

Instinctively, I know he has changed the channel again without even asking. I know in my heart that as long as he holds that square box in his hand, I will never get back to Southfork.

One of our sons has the distinction of never once having seen a commercial in its entirety. As soon as regular programming ends and a pitchman comes on, he begins to jump from one channel to the next. It's one subliminal experience after the other as denture creams, breakfast cereals and wine coolers all run together.

Another family member hides the tuner under a different pillow each night. When you are comfortably engrossed in a deep, meaningful film, Liv Ullmann suddenly turns into Bea Arthur who turns into Frank Gifford, who turns into the Boston Pops, who turns into two wrestlers. When you try to explain that Liv was at a crisis in her life and was about to make a major decision about her baby, you are told, "I'll turn it back. I just want to see what's on the other channels."

When Liv is finally returned to you, the kid has grown up, married and is talking about his mother in the past tense.

I've never vied for power in the family before. Pointing a box at the garage door and saying "Open!" was never a big deal for me. Standing at the supermarket on the rubber mat and watching the doors slide back and forth wasn't something I planned for a Saturday afternoon, but holding that television tuner and realizing I alone control what is flashed on the screen brings out the Iacocca in me.

The other night I got control of the tuner and held onto it only by holding it in front of me like an exorcist and yelling "Back! Back!" to the angry mob.

I thought life was supposed to be lonely at the top.

CLOCKWORK

Unique business just keeps ticking along

By MELLA McEWEN
Business/Oil Writer

It is well known that Midland sits in the center of the nation's largest oil reserves, with a wide collection of petroleum expertise. However, few know the city is also home to some of the nation's best antique clock collections, says Charles Adams.

The latter fact has resulted in a unique business for Adams who runs The Right Time, an antique clock sales and repair shop in Dellwood Mall. It's not a quiet store. The showroom air is filled with the soft ticking of some 90 clocks, emphasized by an occasional chime, an estimated 40 clocks in the back of the store standby to tick when one leaves the store.

The store, owned by Adams' father, Craig Adams, and his uncle, Dan Jones, grew out of an interest in antique clocks by Jones and the rest of the family. It opened in July of 1985 with clocks from Scotland, England, Germany and France and the U.S. The owners also have a natural gas measurement business, called Charts, Inc. One day, one of the employees, Houng "Joe" Luu, repaired the time clock. "That's when we discovered he had that talent," Adams recalls. Luu now works at The Right Time, as the clock repairman.

"We buy one to five clocks a month," he says, adding that his uncle and aunt, who is from Scotland, make annual trips to the British Isles and bring back merchandise.

The antique clocks are fairly easy to come by, he says: "The Europeans are different — they want new stuff. They think we're crazy for wanting these

Computer measurements protect gas revenue flow

By ALLEN E. HOWLAND
Business/Oil Writer

Improvements in electronic flow computers (EFCs) as an option for measuring gas well flows have enabled several area companies to replace mechanical circular chart and strip recorders with EFCs, particularly at remote gas well and plant sites.

PETROLEUM TECHNOLOGY

Warren Petroleum Co., a Tulsa-based division of Chevron USA Inc., has replaced approximately 300 mechanical recorders with flow computers in its Western area covering eastern New Mexico and West and West Central Texas.

Horserace economy feels oil downturn

Maybe the resort racetrack in the mountains of southern New Mexico — long a favorite with West Texans looking to beat the heat — wasn't a clear winner. But it wasn't a loser, either, attracting nearly 300,000 fans over a 3 1/2-month season.

That was within 1 percent of the gate for the last two seasons, a figure that pleases H. Rick Henson, general manager of Ruidoso/Sunland Inc.

"That's a pretty good figure, compared to everything that's going on," Henson said. "If the economy had been good, we'd have had a banner year."

The parimutuel betting handle was down a little, 3.88 percent below last year, Henson said. And sales in the souvenir-boutique shop were off 20 percent, he said.

"It shows people were a little more choosy. They weren't being as loose and free with their money," Henson said.

The Ruidoso track, unaccustomed to down years, was affected in 1986 by the oil and gas slump, agriculture and devaluation of the peso in Mexico, Henson said.

Its location puts it close enough to Juarez to attract visitors from northern Mexico.

The track, noted for Quarterhorse racing, also runs thoroughbreds.

"It has not devastated Ruidoso," Jeffers said. "We have the same amenities, the same environment. But we're not seeing the boom economy like we saw."

Even so, visitors are still coming to Ruidoso, a town of 9,000 that swells to 30,000 on some summer weekends like Labor Day for the running of the All America Futurity.

"I know that our traffic counts were up for June and July," Jeffers said. "Our office is busier this year. The lodging people were extremely busy. We have seen a great many people interested in camping."

But Jeffers says he gets "mixed reviews" from business people, including restaurateurs, some saying it was a good summer, others saying it was flat.

From 1979-84 Ruidoso was on a roll, its real estate market expanding and the population growing by 7 percent a year, Jeffers said.

Now they are feeling the pinch. More real estate is being listed for sale, but property values are down, along with sales. "And we are having an out migration, particularly in the building trades," Jeffers said.

Potato venture puts oilmen 'in the chips'

Adding peanut oil to crude oil deals

By DEANNA J. NEAL
Business/Oil Writer

Midlanders Jim Heck and Doug Ferguson deal in oil. And while times are tough in the crude oil business, they hope a new-found venture in peanut oil will become a profitable sideline to their petroleum projects.

Groff's Texas Style Potato Chips, a new-to-Midland potato chip, boast a secret recipe enhanced by cooking in peanut oil which produces a distinctive flavor. The chips are taking the market by storm and Ferguson and Heck, a pair of 31-year-old entrepreneurs, are responsible for their arrival on store shelves in Midland and Odessa.

Heck, a partner in Heck Exploration, fell in love with the chips on a trip to Houston, where they have been top sellers for several years. "I really liked the chips and so I brought several bags back with me."

He introduced Groff's to his family and friends, only to discover that Ferguson, an independent landman with whom he works closely, had not only sampled the chips and liked them, but had even been to the factory where the chips are made in Brookshire, northwest of Houston.

"We noticed on the back of the bag that you could order a case and have them shipped out to you, so we began doing that, and anytime we knew someone was going to Houston we would make it a point to pick up several cases," says Heck.

"Our frustration with the non-availability of the chips led us to ask too many questions on one of our orders. Eventually we met with the people at the Groff's plant and asked what it would take to get the chips into Midland stores," he adds, explaining how the distributorship came about.

Kent Porter/Reporter-Telegram

ENTREPRENEURS

And that began what neither partner could have guessed would lead to becoming the West Texas distributors of the product. "We certainly didn't go down there with expectations of returning as distributors. But suddenly, two big trucks and a warehouse later, we're 'in the chips', says Ferguson."

At the time Jim and Doug first became interested in the chips, Groff's was a mom-and-pop organization, with capabilities of making only about 30,000 bags of chips each month. "They had a primitive operation — still cooking in a big vat and a guy with a lawn rake standing there flipping them over," Doug recalls.

"You couldn't get them outside of the Houston area and we figured there were more people like us who liked the chips and were doing just about anything to get them," he adds.

Vintaged natural gas: Its time is up

Vintaging has a way of improving the value of many things. Vintage wines are an example; so are rare books, stamps, coins and antique cars. Not so for natural gas. For some strange reason, the older this valuable commodity is, the less it's worth.

Gas discovered in 1952 burns the same in a gas furnace as gas discovered in 1986, but 1952 gas can be officially locked into a price of 30 cents per Mcf, while 1986 gas sells for up to $3 per Mcf. It's called "vintaging," or the pricing of natural gas by the year it was discovered.

Here's the illogic behind the concept:

■ Old gas was discovered years ago at a substantially lower finding cost and has already paid out, therefore it should sell for less than newly discovered gas which required the drilling of deeper and more expensive wells.

■ If all old gas were suddenly allowed to be sold at true market value, it would cause utility bills to soar, therefore we will lock in old prices forever at 1954 levels and blend them with the new gas prices to protect the consumer.

Now, here's an item for Ripley's Believe It Or Not: There is actually a large contingent of liberal congressmen and bureaucrats who think this makes perfectly good sense.

But vintaging of natural gas makes about as much sense as going into the woods and pricing trees by their size. Can you imagine how much hell the lumber industry would raise if it was told a two-by-four from one tree was worth 15 cents a foot, but only three cents a foot if it comes from a different-sized tree right next to it.

The bottom line is this: It's time to put an end to the stupidity of vintage natural gas. Natural gas prices should be decontrolled totally and immediately. The petroleum industry is badly strapped for cash flow and with a dominant share of gas producers in a survival mode, it can no longer afford to subsidize lower utility bills in the Northeast or anywhere else. It is time natural gas consumers started paying full market price for all natural gas.

So what if natural gas utility bills go up! Groceries, automobiles, newspapers and homes have all gone up since the fifties when natural gas sold for 30 cents per Mcf. Did the Congress step forward to "vintage" homes when real estate prices went through the ceiling. I wonder what kind of armed revolt would have resulted if the government had created "vintage" housing. Say, they required homes built in the fifties to be sold today for the same price at which they were built in 1954 — to keep down housing costs. Unthinkable? Of course it is, but the oil industry has had so many underhanded federal deals pulled on it for so long, that the outlandish has become commonplace. We have almost lulled ourselves into thinking that somehow ridiculous schemes such as Windfall Profits Taxes and vintaged gas are normal.

But let me assure you. The notion of vintaged natural gas is just as stupid today as it was in 1954 when the seeds of the concept were planted by a U.S. Supreme Court decision that gave the federal government the power to regulate the price of natural gas at the wellhead. The actual concept of vintaging, however, was born later in the 1960s, when the Federal Power Commission (now FERC) created the meaningless designations of old and new gas. By 1978 the concept was a full grown monster, with 15 different vintages and prices for natural gas, and it was called the National Gas Policy Act. More than 30 years later, the monster is still with us. Today, natural gas has the dubious distinction of being the only U.S. primary fuel and one of only a handful of commodities under federal price controls.

If there are some in the petroleum industry today that want no part of a federal import tax on crude oil, per-

U.S., Basin rig activity edges up slightly

Rig activity in the nation and in the Permian Basin picked up slightly during the previous week, with both counts posting modest gains.

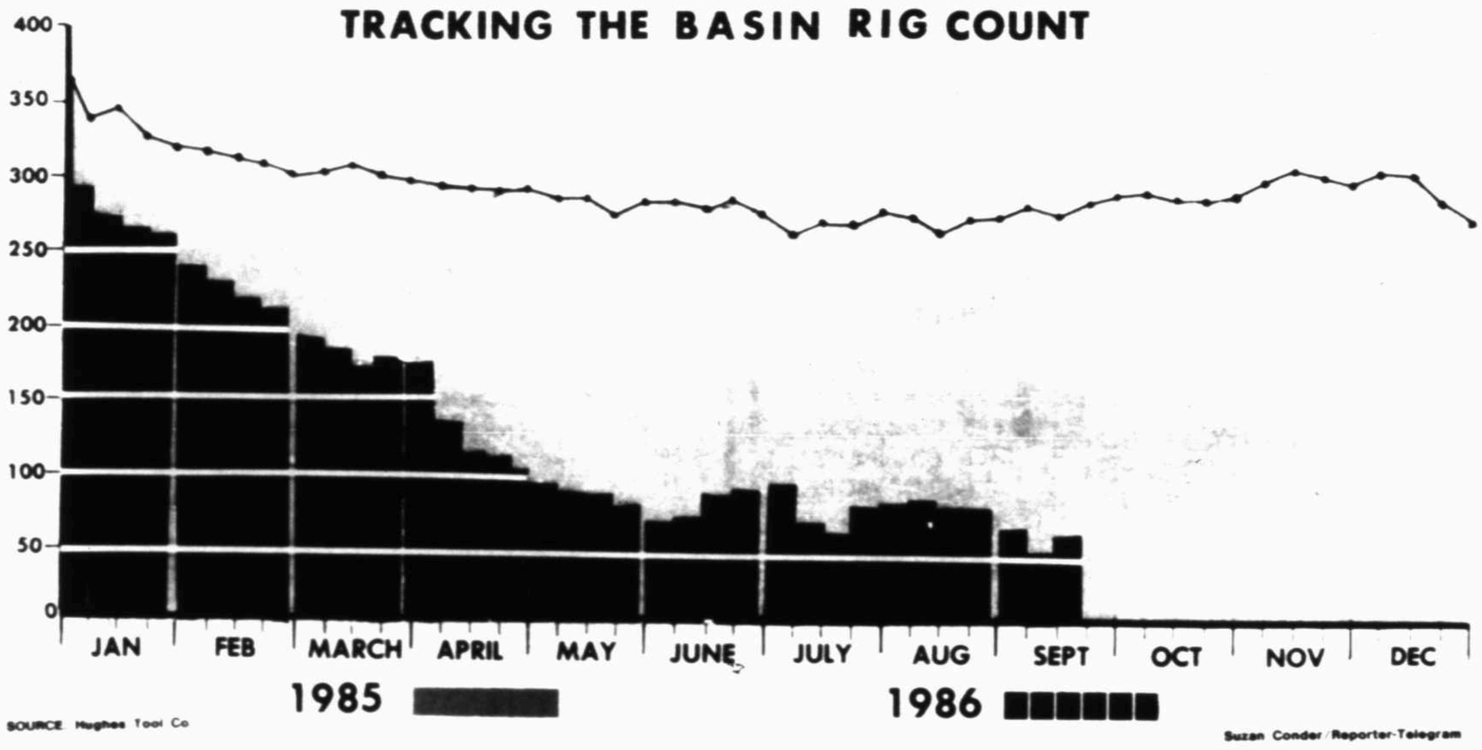

Locally, Basin activity increased with an additional six rigs drilling for oil and gas. Hughes Tool reported 291 rigs making hole in the Basin one year ago. Much of the decline was seen in Andrews County, where there were about 30 rigs working last year at this time, compared to only 8 presently drilling.

Midland County has five rigs working, while Ector County rigs total two.

Nationally, Ohio and New Mexico managed to regain some lost activity, each adding five to the previous week's total. Wyoming slipped by four to post the biggest loss of activity this week. Texas remained steady at 215. That compares with 623 rigs drilling in the state a year ago.

Catalog features union-only items

NEW YORK (AP) — Consumers who look for the union label but like to shop by mail soon will have a catalog that lets them do both.

Marc Schechtman, son of a union accountant and grandson of a garment worker and organizer, is putting up the money for a catalog featuring only union-made products. The AFL-CIO, the nation's largest labor organization, says it is the right idea at the right time.

"I think there is a groundswell of people looking for American products," said Marilyn Toro of the AFL-CIO's union label and service trades department. "We are taking it one step farther, saying, look for the union label.

"We are trying to save our jobs and if we are saving trade unionist jobs we are also saving American jobs. I think even people aside from trade unionists will want this catalog."

The catalog itself is also union-made. Schectman's employees are represented by Local 37 of the Office and Professional Employees International Union.

Schechtman estimated he will put up as much as $1 million before the catalog turns a profit. For its part, the AFL-CIO is promoting the project, and has sent out advertisements to be printed in about 8,000 union newsletters under the AFL-CIO umbrella, Schechtman said.

"The AFL-CIO is treating us like a favorite son," he said.

Since the ad campaign began, Schechtman says his company, American Union Shopper Corp., of Fairfield, Iowa, has been getting about 1,000 requests a day. The first issue, a small version with only 45 products, is expected to be mailed the first week in October. The first full catalog with about 24 pages is due in November.

Among the companies and products represented in the first catalog are London Fog raincoats, Dingo boots, Rival food slicers, Proctor Silex cookware, Oster blenders, Westbend appliances, Mr. Coffee coffeemaker and CorningWare cookware.

Manufacturers pay for inclusion in the catalog in hopes of cashing in on their union ties.

"What every company wants is customers and if the AFL-CIO represents anything, it is a large group of customers," the 35-year-old entrepreneur said. The AFL-CIO has 15 million union members and retirees.

"It is helping the manufacturers to promote their product as well as providing an excellent service to our members who are looking for union-made products," Ms. Toro said.

Schechtman said catalog prices will be at least 10 percent below the manufacturer's suggested retail price, plus handling and postage.

Investors angling for big profits from redfish

PALACIOS, Texas (AP) — Four or five Texas A&M graduate students were up to their knees in muck as they slowly pulled a weighted net along a narrow ditch. A balding man, dressed in a Mexican wedding shirt and slacks, watched the progress intently from the bank of the 33-acre pond, now drained dry except for the water-filled ditch being dredged by the students.

Silvery mullet leaped over the proceeding net, but that was OK. When the men reached the end of the section they were dredging, the net was pulled up to reveal the prize: five redfish averaging 2 1/2 pounds.

It was a day of hectic activity on this normally quiet tract of land west of Palacios as landowners, investors, Texas A&M students and others gathered to harvest this much sought-after fish.

That's right. Harvest. The 2,000 acres of land owned by a trio of Houston businessmen is host to the only private redfish grow-out operation in the country, said Dr. Jack Castle Sr., one partner in the venture.

Castle talked enthusiastically of the project — a joint venture between himself, partners Leslie Appelt and Don Culwell and the Texas A&M aqua-culture department — as he supervised the harvesting operations recently.

"Two years ago this started as a plaything rather than a business," said Castle, who originally leased the Palacios land as a duck-hunting site. "From that point (the early redfish experiments) we were surprised as to what we were capable of doing... the growth of the fish was phenomenal."

Marine Extension Agent Willie Younger connected the investors with the extension service's aquaculture knowledge, as well as with the Texas Department of Parks and Wildlife, which supplied fry to stock the ponds; Texas A&M; and the U.S. Soil Conservation Service, which aided in pond designs.

"Texas A&M provides the manpower and records the data. We pay salaries for the individual (managing the farm)," as well as the cost of building the ponds and feeding the fish, said Castle. "The people we're working with know more about this than anyone in the world," he proclaimed.

Though he declined to pinpoint the investment in the project, Castle did allow that overall costs over the two years have exceeded one half million dollars. Construction of a new 100-acre pond has been halted temporarily, said Castle, because of expenses incurred to comply with U.S. Army Corps of Engineers permit rules.

Despite the current "in-the-red" status of the venture, Castle said the whole point of it is eventually to make money. And the experimental nature of the project means that others can benefit from the mistakes and insights of the Palacios-based enterprise, he said.

Younger agreed that information from the project will be available to prospective redfish farmers via Texas A&M.

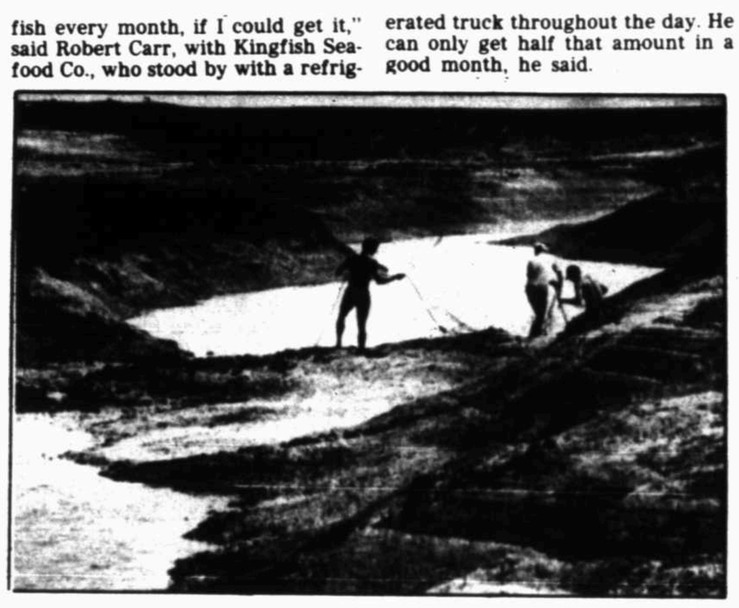

By noon of harvest day, about 750 pounds of fish had been harvested and Castle, Appelt and Culwell were pleased.

"I'd say there's a good gamble of 1,500 fish," Castle said. "We'd be pleased, jumping up and down at that number." The future of the project "depends on the harvest today... if we're going in the right direction," said Castle.

But the afternoon proved less productive than the morning, netting only about 50 more pounds of fish for a total of 800 pounds, about 300 fish, according to John Clark, a Texas A&M graduate student who has worked on the farm 10 of the past 15 months.

The individual fish averaged about two to three pounds, but an occasional six-pounder showed up, Castle said. The larger fish were escapees of an earlier harvest in November 1985.

"I could sell 300,000 pounds of redfish every month, if I could get it," said Robert Carr, with Kingfish Seafood Co., who stood by with a refrigerated truck throughout the day. He can only get half that amount in a good month, he said.

Volunteers from Texas A&M University assist in a redfish harvest at an experimental pond west of Palacios, about 90 miles southwest of Houston. About 800 pounds of the popular fish were harvested from the drained 33-acre pond.

Court rules no excuse for naps

DES MOINES, Iowa (AP) — The Iowa Supreme Court says it's not OK to fall asleep on the job, no matter how good an excuse you have.

This week the court reversed an appeals court decision granting unemployment benefits to a man fired for napping on company time. It sent the case back to the Iowa Department of Employment Security.

He had contended that he deserved the benefits because he couldn't help falling asleep. He said he had been working a lot of overtime, and back pain caused him to lose sleep at night. So he snoozed at work.

But the high court said the state agency was within its rights in concluding that being fired for sleeping on the job automatically disqualifies a worker for jobless pay.

Gulf coast could see recovery begin next year

AUSTIN, Texas (UPI) — An economic recovery along Texas' 32-county Gulf coast region could begin by next year if oil prices don't tumble further, the state comptroller's office predicted.

But the comptroller's monthly "Fiscal Notes" said the Gulf coast area will have lost 128,000 nonfarm jobs before its economy turns around.

"Short-term recovery in the region depends on stabilizing oil prices," the report said. "Long-term prosperity depends on continued expansion into industries other than oil and gas."

The report noted the Gulf coast faced a much steeper oil price drop in 1986 than the one that caused a recession in 1982-83.

The region's total oil industry employment — in drilling and production, refining, transportation and marketing — is less than 290,000, down 31 percent and more than 130,000 jobs from its peak of 421,000 in the fourth quarter of 1981.

The report said the comptroller's office expects the Gulf coast's total nonfarm employment to fall 3.7 percent this year compared to a 5.4 percent drop in 1983.

"But employment in the region will grow faster than the state average in 1988 and 1989, especially in manufacturing and construction," it said. "The comptroller forecasts manufacturing job gains — energy-related and otherwise — beginning in 1987."

old clocks." said Adams. Prices are set by adding the purchase price, and the cost for repair and labor. Prices range from $75 to $600, with some selling for as high as $1,200.

Most of the clocks date from the late 1800s, but one was made between 1720 and 1740 by Thomas Moore of Ipswich. "It took us a year to date that clock," Adams notes.

The clock, also known in collector's circles as a lantern clock, is one of two in the shop that aren't for sale at the present time. The second is a Tiffany & Co. clock that was made by Tiffany's grandfather, according to Adams. "We're still trying to determine how much the clock's worth," he says. Also in the store are two phonographs — an RCA and an Edison — and a set of 78 rpm records.

The predominant way to date an antique clock is by the maker's name. "We do get into some interesting fox chases looking for dates," Adams says. A clock marked 'George Smith' or 'Smith & Clark' or 'Smith Co.,' for instance, will give experts a pretty accurate idea of when the clock was made. Another way is whether the clocks were made with screws and nuts or with pins. "Clock makers used pins until the middle 1800s," he explains.

Antique collectors look for clocks made by Gustav Becker, Tiffany or Seth Thomas, and there are other sought-after names such as Ithaca, Ansonia, Ingraham, Waterbury and Sessions. "We have at least one of each brand," Adams says. He notes that there are a number of antique stores full of antique clocks, but "we're the only store that sells only clocks in this area. All the others are gone." He admits there is another similar store in San Angelo — owned by his uncle.

He points out that antiques can be a good investment. "They may stop appreciating, but they don't depreciate."

PITTS

haps it is because they still have the taste of NGPA in their mouth.

That a coneept so stupid could endure so long in a democratic republic stands as a testimony to the political power of the liberals and the weakness of conservatives in Congress during this period. But now, under conservative leadership, as the nation struggles to free itself of unneeded, unjust federal controls, we may be seeing the last days of vintaged natural gas.

FERC is moving to remove some price controls administratively. The present administration has sent a bill to Congress to remove remaining price controls, and President Reagan has promised to work for total decontrol of natural gas. The time is indeed ripe to bring this illogical exercise to an end.

But there is an even better reason to "devintage" natural gas. The Department of Energy has estimated that the recovery of natural gas would increase by 27.7 trillion cubic feet, and that production from these reserves would add the equivalent of about 631,000 barrels daily of domestic crude oil by 1995. Equivalent barrels found and produced within our borders are barrels that will not be imported.

The industry has an opportunity now to rid itself of a monster, and it must not be so detracted by the gloom of low oil prices that it diminishes its attentions and efforts to finally kill, once and for all, this ignoble concept.

CHIPS

Both men stress that this is not one of those "we didn't have anything else to do, so we started selling potato chip" stories.

"The oil business has been, and still is, our primary business and takes up most of our time. We just really wanted the chips in the Midland market and this is what it wound up taking to get them here."

But both agree that since things have happened the way they have, they will work hard and are confident that the Groff's distributorship will be a profitable venture for them and the small group of Midland investors who helped them get the project off the ground.

Naming the new company Macrochips, Inc., they put their first chips on the market on June 23 and are now in more than 80 stores in Midland and Odessa, including many of the larger supermarkets.

One thing that astounded the pair was the size of the market franchise they were given. Says Ferguson: "We are authorized to cover 53 counties from Palo Pinto County, west to El Paso."

The two admit they have had a lot to learn about the ins and outs of the distribution business, so have concentrated their initial market to the Midland and Odessa area. "Once we have all the wrinkles ironed out and know what we're doing, we'll attempt to expand our operations," says Ferguson. "We do plan to be in San Angelo very soon, in El Paso by February 1987 and in all 53 counties by this time next year."

Innovative ideas and help from Jim's brother, Doug Heck, in computerizing much of their operations lessened the effort of starting-up the business, but the partners were still amazed at the amount of time they have donated to the mushrooming business.

Groff's has already outgrown one outdated facility, expanding into a new $2 million, 21,600 square-foot manufacturing plant capable of putting out a million bags of chips each month.

The chips are made from a recipe that includes potatoes from the Red River Valley, special seasonings, and cooking in peanut oil. Heck notes that peanut oil, which contains no cholesterol, gives the chips an old-fashioned flavor and crispness similar to chips cooked in hand kettles on the kitchen stove.

The thick chips are available in seven flavors — regular, no-salt, barbeque, jalapeno, cheese and jalapeno, cajun and the newest flavor, sour cream and onion.

"By far, the best seller has been the jalapeno flavor. This particular flavor vaulted the company into one of the biggest success stories in Houston markets and many grocers there say it is the single most popular chip sold," Heck remarks.

To be sure, competition is tough and taking on Frito-Lay, the major distributor, is a big job. Ferguson and Heck insist that their best advertising comes from giving bags of Groff's away. They are confident that most people who try the chips will like them, and begin looking for them at their supermarket.

"We have set up display tables, offering free samples of our chips in local supermarkets and that has been successful. We also plan to give free bags away at local sporting events," Heck states.

To date, Macrochips is putting well over 1,000 bags of chips on the shelf each month, and sales have doubled since June. "It's just a matter of time until we can get in every store in every town — including the Exxon station in Mentone," Ferguson says.

They are working on ways to increase the efficiency of their operation and are currently setting up a computerized, automatic calling system. "Then instead of hitting every store twice a week, just because we think it's time, we'll only stop when we receive a call that we need to stop," Heck explains.

Heck is also keeping an eye on the competition, comparing size and price margins of similar products sold in Midland and Odessa in order to provide the best value to local shoppers.

If their belief in the product is any indication of its success in West Texas, Macrochips and Groff's are destined to tap a productive reservoir of added profits for a pair of oilmen — equally suited to crude or peanut oils.

EFCs

"There is a variety of thought on how to integrate the erratic or banded chart. Nevertheless, you are always working with an estimate," McDowell says.

"On the other hand, EFCs eliminate integration time required by mechanical recorders and improve their accuracy of measurement by taking readings based on very short increments of time."

Fred Van Orsdol, manager of gas measurement for Warren, cites several key considerations in converting to an EFC: ease of operation and servicing; reliability; accuracy; audit trail data; security; and user compatibility.

Of these considerations, accuracy is most critical. Measurement accuracy of the EFCs used by Warren has been verified by an outside testing consultant to plus or minus 0.5 percent of flow.

Flow rates are sampled at one-second intervals by the EFC, which measures static and differential pressures and temperature. These readings are integrated 3,600 times an hour and stored in the unit's memory.

McDowell notes that electronic metering avoids many of the problems inherent in mechanically driven circular or strip charts. "Pens freezing or running out of ink, charts snagging or tearing and clocks stopping can all cause an error in flow measurement and integration with a mechanical recorder," he says.

In addition, EFCs are designed for unattended operations, and do not require on-site data collection. Data can be transferred by radio or computer modem link or a direct cable connection.

Units equipped with radio retrieval equipment can generally be interrogated from up to 500 ft. away, which makes the EFC suitable for geographically or topographically isolated sites.

Even without remote retrieval capabilities, well operators can reduce labor, because an EFC can hold up to 35 days of hourly data, while mechanical recorder charts must be changed every seven to eight days.

Many of the company's West Texas EFC installations use solar power cells. "The solar power system is an excellent choice for running the EFC during the day while recharging the batteries for night use," Van Orsdol says. "Even in winter, we've yet to have any problems collecting enough solar power."

Van Orsdol expects Warren to double the number of EFCs in operation in its West Texas area to 600 within the next two years. Installations are economically justified on an individual basis and payout on the units can range from a matter of days to more than two years.

He says that payout depends on the volume and value of the gas being measured and the magnitude of the error being corrected by the EFC.

EFCs are used for on-line flow measurement and allocation as well as for wellhead monitoring. One upcoming installation will see 28 EFCs put into the Warren's Como gas plant in Hopkins County, in East Texas.

HORSES

Al Lane, executive officer for the Board of Realtors in Ruidoso, agreed. "It has definitely knocked our sales down some." He declined to cite figures, saying they were confidential.

What's felt in West Texas spills over into New Mexico, said Lane, a native of Turkey, in the Texas Panhandle. "Let's face it, West Texas is our people. These are the Texas mountains."

Lane said that in the late 1970s a real estate appraiser estimated that 85 percent of Ruidoso's residential ownership rested with Texans. "I doubt that it's changed very much," he said.

This year has been a shock, Lane said. "We've never had a down."

He said the last time Ruidoso had anything like this was "many, many years ago" when Walker Air Force Base was closed at Roswell, about 70 miles to the east.

"For many years it was impossible to do anything wrong up here," he said.

But Lane is optimistic. "Things are beginning to look better, with oil prices up."

Henson, who manages both Ruidoso Downs and Sunland Park at El Paso, said he's looking forward to next season. "We're looking for a strong recovery."

He's not even worried about the possibility that Texas might approve parimutuel betting for horse and dog tracks. In fact, he hopes it passes.

"It'll help Ruidoso," he said. "It'll expose racing to a large metropolitan area. It'll bring a better quality of thoroughbreds to the mountains."

And Texans will still come to New Mexico to escape the heat, even with race tracks in their home state, he said.

Using metric system could stimulate trade

NEW YORK (UPI) — America's reluctance to convert to the metric system contributes to the growing U.S. trade deficit, a manufacturing design consultant said.

"I am not saying that is the only reason," said Stan R. Jakuba, "but it is one of the reasons."

Jakuba, president of S.R. Jakuba Associates of West Hartford, Conn., said many foreign purchasers do not want or cannot use products that are not made to metric measurements.

"When we deal with these people we should be talking their language. I believe metric is the global language of industry and commerce," said Jakuba, who was in New York to address the Fall National Design Engineering Show & Conference.

When other English-speaking countries — primarily Britain, Canada and Australia — retained the British Imperial System of measurements, American exports to those nations rose even as they dropped elsewhere, Jakuba said. But when those countries adopted metrics, "that trend declined and is now following the worldwide trend."

Jakuba said the automobile industry has been forced to to adopt the metric system because of its international character, and car makers have found converting saves them money by bringing them into line with world standards.

General Motors Corp., which Jakuba said recently completed its conversion, spending around $9.5 million or "less than 1 percent" of the estimated cost of changing its measurements from the familiar U.S. Customary System of inches and feet. "Their annual savings due to metrics exceeds that cost many times," he stated.

"General Motors didn't go to this metric thing because the government told them to," Jakuba said. "They had economic reasons."

Jakuba said Americans generally do not care for the metric system.

Texas trails in developing foreign trade

DALLAS (AP) — Texas is lagging behind other states in its effort to stimulate international business and investment, an official at the Texas World Trade Council says.

"We're entering this game late," said Ralph Thomas, TWTC vice chairman and senior vice president of Fayez Sarofim Co., an investment counseling firm in Houston.

The TWTC, which held its second meeting last week, was created by the Legislature in 1985 to promote foreign trade and investment, to develop new programs for international trade and to provide trade information.

"Other states have been doing this for 30 years. I can't tell you how late we are," Thomas said.

"We started with Mark White, who was the first governor of Texas to be involved in economic development and the first governor to go to Japan.

Holiday Inn Country Villa Convention Center

Open To The Public

Advanced reservations with Luncheon Fee to be made to the PBPA Office by September 30, 1986.

An on-going program of public service presented by the Permian Basin Petroleum Association and the Midland Reporter-Telegram.

Lamar Smith

Pete Snelson has been in business in Midland for the past 31 years as the founder and president of Snelson Advertising Agency.

His public service began when he was elected to the Texas House of Representatives in 1960 and to the Texas Senate in 1964. He chose to retire from the Senate to make a race for Texas Land Commissioner in 1982, which he lost in a run-off after leading the ticket in the first primary.

At the time he completed his service in the Senate he was the dean of that body; chairman of its education committee; a member of the Finance Committee and one of its five conferees in the Senate-House joint conference committee which prepared the final version of the state budget. Also, he was a long-time member of the powerful Legislative Budget Board. He is a former Chairman of the Oil and Gas Committee and the Intergovernmental Relations Committee.

Also, Snelson represented Texas on the Southern Regional Education Board which administers a 14-state compact on higher education for 12 years.

P B P A

Lamar Smith is the Republican nominee for Congress in the 21st District. He led a field of six candidates in the primary election and then won the runoff election in June. Both primary and runoff elections set GOP records for turnout.

He has served as Republican County Chairman, State Representative, and County Commissioner. While on Commissioners Court, the San Antonio Express-News gave Lamar the title, "Watchdog of the Treasury." San Antonio Monthly Magazine said Lamar has earned a reputation as a "man of integrity" and as someone who "puts good government ahead of good politics."

Lamar was Tom Loeffler's Alternate Delegate at the 1984 Republican National Convention, Phil Gramm's County Chairman in 1984, and Treasurer of the Reagan-Bush Bexar County Victory Committee in 1980.

The Republican nominee has worked in Washington for the small Business Administration, been a business and financial writer for a daily newspaper, practiced law, and now owns and operates a ranch in South Texas.

Lamar is 38 years old, married, and he and Jane have two children.

Q. I think Mickey Rourke is a terrific actor. Please tell me all about him.

K.W.
Trenton, N.J.

A. Philip Andre Rourke, 30, was born in Schenectady, N.Y., but his parents split up when he was 7 and he moved with his mother, grandmother, brother and sister to Miami. A year later, his mother remarried, to a widowed policeman. Mickey didn't like him and he had five sons who didn't like Mickey. Not surprisingly, Mickey became withdrawn and began hanging out on the streets with increasingly tough friends, playing football and getting into minor trouble.

At 14, the family moved from the lower-class area of Liberty City into a middle-class section of Miami Beach, and he began to feel even more displaced — a tough guy in the midst of goody-goody, manicured kids. His reaction was to stay out of classes and barely graduate from high school.

Instead he put his energy into amateur boxing at a local gym. He lacked the discipline to really make it as a boxer, though, so again, he started hanging around on the streets with an even tougher crowd that packed guns. He backed off, worked briefly as an electrician and then, at 19, on the spur of the moment, decided to become an actor and move to New York.

He studied acting with a passion in New York. To support himself, he worked as a bouncer in a transvestite club, the manager of a massage parlor, a pretzel vendor, a Good Humor man and various other jobs.

Eventually, he was cast in a few off-Broadway plays but his rebellious nature constantly put him at odds with directors and he was fired time after time. He was admitted to the famed Actors Studio, but, again, found himself at odds with the approach of studio founder Lee Strasberg, and left.

His private acting coach finally screamed at him to do something about a career and it clicked. He left New York, moved to Los Angeles and began to get work in TV. Those parts led to small parts in films such as "Heaven's Gate" and "1941".

His next film, "Body Heat," in which he played an oddly sympathetic arsonist, brought him his first critical attention. It also brought him other roles, in "Diner," "Eureka," "Rumble Fish," "The Pope of Greenwich Village," the notorious "9¼ Weeks" and "Year of the Dragon."

Currently, he has a film, "Angel Heart," due for release and is starting another, "A Prayer for the Dying," in London this month. He has another project, "Homebody," based on his experiences as a boxer in Miami — he wrote the script — in production, and there are still tentative plans to do a film of the life of gangster "Legs" Diamond.

Cates

Q. I think Phoebe Cates is beautiful. Please tell me about her.

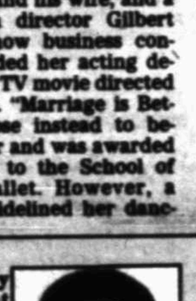

John DeFino
Union City, N.J.

A. She's 22, from New York, one of three daughters of TV producer-director Joseph Cates and his wife, and a niece of film director Gilbert Cates. The show business connection provided her acting debut, at 10, in a TV movie directed by her father. "Marriage is Better." She chose instead to become a dancer and was awarded a scholarship to the School of American Ballet. However, a knee injury sidelined her dancing career at 14 and she returned her sights to acting.

She modeled, did some TV commercials (mostly for jeans and acne medications) at at 18, was cast in a short-lived series called "Mr. and Mrs. Dracula." After being spotted dancing in Studio 54, she was also cast in a film she'd rather forget, a "Blue Lagoon" knockoff called "Paradise."

After "Paradise," she was determined to learn how to act so she joined a theater company, the Actors Circle, and then did the films "Fast Times at Ridgemont High," "Private School" and "Gremlins," and the TV miniseries "Lace" and "Lace II" along with the TV movie "Baby Sister."

Cosby

Q. A family heirloom is at stake here. My sister tells me that Bill Cosby's doctorate degree is in education and is not an honorary degree. When did he complete the minimum six years of college necessary for a doctorate? Also, what college did he attend? I thought he dropped out.

Josie Spillane
Waterbury, Conn.

A. He dropped out of Temple University in his junior year, but in 1970, was admitted to a special program at the University of Massachusetts that allowed students who had dropped out of undergraduate school to get graduate degrees and in June 1977 he was awarded a doctorate in education.

The degree has come under attack, though, by a former professor at the school who claims that he rarely saw Cosby on campus, that his credits were earned largely through appearances on shows such as "Sesame Street" and "Electric Company" and that the dissertation committee meeting to hear his thesis consisted of a dinner party at Cosby's house.

A spokesman for Cosby, however, insists that the degree is real, that he did attend classes and that he saw him take classwork on the road with him. "This guy is just trying to stir up trouble," he says.

A. Please give me some information on Chris Sarandon. I saw him in the TV movie "Liberty" recently.

Jodi Babcock
Lompoc, Calif.

A. He's 43, from Beckley, W. Va., where his Greek immigrant family owned a restaurant, the Eatwell Cafe. He's a magna cum laude graduate of the University of West Virginia, and has a Masters in Drama from Catholic University in Washington D.C. where he met and married his first wife, Susan Sarandon.

After graduation, they moved to New York, in 1969, he got a role in the soap "The Guiding Light," and in two musicals on Broadway, "The Rothschilds" and "Two Gentlemen from Verona." It was his role as Al Pacino's lover in the film "Dog Day Afternoon" that really got his career going.

He's been working ever since, in the films "Lipstick," "The Sentinel," "Cuba," "The Osterman Weekend," "Protocol" and "Fright Night," and on TV: "The Day Christ Died," "A Tale of Two Cities, "You Can't Go Home Again," "This Child is Mine" and the recent TV pilot "The City."

Q. Can you tell me about Michael Ironside from "V" and "Murder in Space," such as where he's from, what else he's done and how he got that scar under his left eye?

K. Benoit
Corner Brook, Nfld., Canada

A. He's from Toronto, where he still lives when he's not in California, made his TV debut in a CBC production of "Look Back in Anger" and has acted in the Canadian films, "I, Maureen," "Off Your Rocker," "Scanners," "Visiting Hours," "American Nightmare," and the American film "Spacehunter."

He's also been in episodes of "Hill Street Blues" and "The A-Team," and is currently shooting the film "Extreme Prejudice" with Nick Nolte. Regarding the scar: "He went through a window as a kid," explains an aide, "but he really doesn't like to talk about it too much."

Q. Could you please tell me what films Jeanette MacDonald and Nelson Eddy made together? I thought they were wonderful.

Alonzo J. Bowen
Lindsay, Calif.

A. Their first was "Naughty Marietta" in 1935, followed by "Sweethearts," "Maytime," "New Moon," "The Girl of the Golden West," "Bittersweet," "Rose Marie," and "I Married an Angel," their last, in 1942. With the exception of a joint TV appearance in 1958, they then pursued solo careers until her death in 1965 and his in 1967.

Prima donna

Opera singer Marilyn Horne has the distinction of being the only living singer named to a New York Times list of Metropolitan Opera all-time great voices. "I enjoyed that for about 10 minutes, then realized the responsibility that came with it," she says.

By CAROL BRYAN
King Features

"You don't have to be fat to be an opera singer!" Marilyn Horne will tell a lecture audience. "I'm trying to avoid eating," she says, leading the way to the kitchen. She opts to forgo the temptations of her favorite restaurants for the diet, posted on her refrigerator door.

The only thing chocolate-covered is Ms. Horne, from brown turban and dark glasses on down. She is a beautiful woman — two feet away from looking every inch a diva; but puce running shoes zap that.

Her Central Park West apartment doesn't stand on appearances either. Pocketbooks are piled logically by the front door; there is a "Thank You For Not Smoking" sign; and portable humidifiers go full-steam, protecting the voice several critics have described as the greatest in the world.

Memorabilia of history's musical greats watch over a rebuilt 1900 Steinway grand in a corner of her comfortable, light-swept living room. She shows off photos and original letters of Malibran, Pasta and McCormack, and a Caruso book titled "How to Sing."

When told she doesn't need the book, she smiles in protest. "Sure, I need it. I could never learn all there is to know about singing."

Her response is equally matter-of-fact to being the only living singer named to a New York Times list of Metropolitan Opera all-time great voices. "I enjoyed that for about 10 minutes, then realized the responsibility that came with it."

It is a kind of responsibility she hasn't felt until recent years — since reaching opera superstardom after a wide-ranging and gradual climb.

In the early years she dubbed movie soundtracks, imitated Kay Starr and Peggy Lee on cut-rate records and sang with the Roger Wagner Chorale. Then her stunning 1960 San Francisco Opera debut caused a critic to assert that a good deal of the future of opera in America lay in her hands.

The mezzosoprano has since sung to frenzied acclaim in every major opera house in the world.

Ms. Horne describes the ascent to superstardom as becoming more secure but more nervous. "I began to feel all of these pressures coming in on me. As you get more and more well-known, people start talking about you in superlatives. You begin to fill houses and get high fees. I feel I've got to justify those high fees.

"And they're expecting me to sound like they think I should. All of this is on top of my first responsibility, which is to present the music, composer and text really well. And the biggest pressure is the one I put on myself — to live up to what I am striving for."

She must also consider striving in terms of the sheer physical strength needed to sustain a performance. Especially if she is portraying one of opera's heroic male roles written for or traditionally sung by a female.

She considers these fiendishly difficult "pants parts" her specialty. Even though Ms. Horne faithfully does calisthenics, she worries that her knees will give out. Her stage business is usually loaded with the up-and-down gallantries of paying respect to royalty, declaring love for a lady or sword-thrashing the foe of the evening.

Critics acclaim her unrivaled vocal brilliance but sometimes find her 5-foot-2½-inch well-rounded figure a block to the masculine illusion. The supreme test was put to Boston audiences in 1965 when she sang a bearded general while six months pregnant.

"I don't think anybody's going to believe that I'm a male onstage, but I think, for that brief time, at least the accents I'm giving to the words and dramatic action say it. I think I'm able to present a pretty good imitation of what a male would be like.

"You draw out of your own experiences — and don't ask me how I do that to play a male, because I don't know. A tremendous amount of what I need comes from the costuming. The minute I pull on those boots and get into that sword, helmet and breastplate, I begin to feel the transformation.

"But I must obviously have those masculine strengths within my personality — that kind of toughness when I need it, and meanness maybe, that's in there. We're finally coming to a realization that the line between male and female is very fine anyway. I think we've all got it in us. Maybe it's just easier for me to bring it out.

"I don't feel so much that I become the character. I like to think that I let the character become me. I'm simply acting that character instead of Rosina or Carmen. It's just acting," Ms. Horne says, having never had a lesson.

"It's fascinating to hear singers say, 'Oh, I read what Freud had to say about this or that.' I consider myself an intellectual also, but what it really comes down to is singing well." To this end, Ms. Horne once studied Barbra Streisand's style of delivery to learn the vocal nuance of "controlled abandonment."

Her own approach to a role is straightforward and instinctive. She starts with the music because the sentiment is often immediately dictated, and then studies the words to see what she finds in them. She'll look for hidden meaning and listen to the stage director's suggestions, but she trusts the music and words to automatically bring about much of the interpretation — including the weight, color and mood of her voice.

Foundation can make wishes come true

By BARBARA NANESS
King Features

Children shouldn't have to die. But it's a fact of life that thousands succumb each year to such devastating diseases as cancer, muscular dystrophy and cystic fibrosis. Stricken children often have little to look forward to but chemotherapy, intravenous feedings and constant bedrest.

The Make-A-Wish Foundation can change that.

The non-profit organization has a single goal — to grant wishes, however outlandish or impossible they might seem, to children suffering from grave, life-threatening illnesses.

The only criteria, according to Linda Kaplan, executive director of the Arizona-based group, is that the children be under the age of 18 and afflicted with an illness that, as certified by a physician, will prevent them from reaching adulthood.

"When a child is terminally ill," says Ms. Kaplan, "his world is turned upside down. He stops believing in miracles. What we do is turn possibilities into realities for them. We make dreams and fantasies come true. And for a short time at least, we make the child a little happier, his days a little brighter."

Make-A-Wish was founded in 1982, when a 7-year-old Phoenix boy who was dying of leukemia said his dream was to become a policeman. The state Department of Public Safety made him an honorary policeman for a day, complete with custom-made uniform, helmet, badge and even a helicopter ride. He died a few days later. But before he did, the ailing youngster lived out a fantasy he'd never imagined possible.

It was the impact and magnitude of that child's unequaled delight that provided the impetus for Make-A-Wish. Chapters are currently forming in Australia and the United Kingdom, and a Canadian group is in the process of affiliating with the 51 Make-A-Wish chapters that have sprung up throughout the United States.

Thousands of volunteers toil 'round the clock, giving selflessly of their time, efforts and talents — teachers, truckdrivers, secretaries, housewives, executives, shopkeepers; young and old, rich and poor. The one thing they have in common is that they are all generous and compassionate.

"When something reaches way down inside you and grabs at your heart," says Jane Martens, "you just know you have to help in some way."

Ms. Martens, who founded the Washington, D.C., chapter more than three years ago, is national vice president of wish granting. A high-school teacher and mother of a healthy, active toddler, the energetic young woman says she "always wanted to do some sort of service work," but wasn't sure just what.

"When I read about Make-A-Wish," Ms. Martens recalls, "I knew it was for me. The rewards are unbelievable — and immediate. Seeing the smiles on these children's faces provides such emotional gratification. It makes me feel like a fairy godmother."

"It also," she adds, "has had a tremendous impact on my life in terms of my own priority system. Some of the things I used to worry about now appall me. When you can bring a little sunshine into the life of a child who is dying, it suddenly seems trivial to worry about whether you have the right shoes to match a certain dress."

Ms. Martens says each child is approached as a "potential winner," rather than "someone being granted a deathbed wish."

"We're always hoping," she explains, "that the wish we grant will have therapeutic value. Maybe, by giving the child something to look forward to, we can give him a little extra time. Unfortunately, we know we'll lose most of them. But at least we've lessened their pain and suffering for a little while."

Not all volunteers, Ms. Martens points out, work as closely with wish recipients as she does. There is a slew of administrative work involved in planning wishes, which are completely arranged and paid for by Make-A-Wish.

According to Mary Anne Johannsen of the Kings County division, Nassau-metro New York chapter, volunteers "are always scrounging for donations."

"I'm not just talking about money," says the effervescent Brooklynite. "We need everyone and everything. Sometimes people don't even realize who they know or what they can offer us."

An extensive wish bank, she says, includes everything from pledges for discounts on limousine services and airlines, to complimentary accommodations at hotels and motels, and promises from celebrities, who are often called upon to make an appearance.

"We have to have these things at our fingertips," Ms. Johannsen says. "The only thing we don't have is time. When we want something, we want it now!"

Requests for Make-A-Wish services come from a variety of sources — teachers, doctors, nurses, relatives, friends, and in some cases, even the children themselves. Each is carefully reviewed by a board of directors, and the child's condition is confirmed by his doctor. Then the wheels are set in motion. There are telephone calls and visits to attend to, people to track down and travel arrangements and purchases to be made.

The most popular wishes are for trips to Disney World and Disneyland. Other requests involve spending time with a favorite sports figure or performer. Many children, notes Ms. Kaplan, ask for things like stereos, computers and videocassette recorders — "things that help whittle away the long hours they spend in bed." But volunteers must be prepared for anything and everything.

MARILYN

The process is the same for some of the music she sings in recitals. She takes a line from "Jeanie with the Light Brown Hair" as an example. "The words 'sighing like the night wind and sobbing like the rain, waiting for the lost one who comes not again,' I relate to myself.

"What I feel then are my own emotions for the loved ones that I've had who will never come again." Both parents died relatively young. Her older brother, to whom she was extremely close, was tragically killed in a mid-air plane collision.

"Concentration is the biggie. It's the whole ball game after breath support. I've had times I've had to drag myself to wherever I'm singing because I was not in a great mood, had problems in my life or was tired or sick. But when you go on that stage and start concentrating, everything else goes out of your mind and it can even end up a really superlative performance.

"I've never had to describe my feelings when it's all together and working like that. Certainly, there's some kind of joy.

"Usually, I am aware of special emotional rewards during the quieter, more precious moments of a recital, and even then the experience is rare and fleeting.

"It happened one time when I was singing a particularly beautiful song about evening by Schumann. Suddenly I had this incredible feeling that I was in the right place at the right time, the audience and I were communicating, my accompanist and I were together and the world was wonderful. I felt nature, God and the whole spiritual thing. If anything, music makes me believe there is some great force out there.

"And you can't deny acoustics are going to make one hell of a difference. Koussevitsky said it: 'The best performances are given in the best halls.' I may be feeling like I could conquer the world vocally, but if I get in a hall with poor acoustics, it ain't gonna happen."

When a critic says it didn't happen, she usually takes it philosophically. "Nobody can really tell me how I've sung. I know."

What if someone tells her it was great and she knows better? "Well, I just keep my mouth shut!" Ms. Horne breaks up in that hearty, gut-bellowed laugh of hers, then turns wide-eyed and serious. "It's possible that even though I was not feeling my most comfortable vocally, I could have compensated for that interpretively. They might have felt that."

Because Ms. Horne refuses to give less than she is capable of, there have been times she has lost trust in herself as an artist. How does she restore her confidence? "Work. That's the only solution. Just work on it."

It happened when she was singing the Handel opera "Rinaldo" at the New York Metropolitan. "I was not happy with my rehearsals (we didn't have enough) or my earlier performances. But I just kept working on it and thinking about it, trying to figure out what was wrong.

"It turned around for me after Henry (conductor Henry Lewis, her ex-husband) heard me sing it. Every singer needs somebody who is dead honest, who tells the absolute truth. Henry pointed out little things, tiny details, and they set off all kinds of bells in my head because we speak the same lingo after all of these years."

From the time Ms. Horne started voice lessons, at age 5, her father, a semiprofessional tenor, expected this level of commitment. She felt a responsibility to please him. He challenged — even provoked — her to achieve the fullest, healthiest potential of her voice at each stage of its development.

Teacher William Vennard considered himself merely the keeper of her voice. "I think that was very modest, because I learned a tremendous amount from him. You know, a good student will make the teacher a better teacher.

"By the last years I studied with him, I was running my own lessons. I would come in with so many things I wanted to try out that it become a wonderful give-and-take situation."

Vennard encouraged experimentation and Ms. Horne made discoveries — like how to trill — on her own, by "fiddling around vocally but also thinking a lot about it."

Though always driven inexplicably to develop and use her voice, the feeling became stronger in her late teens, when she realized music was her life. "That was when I took the ball from my father." It was not until shortly before his death, when she was 22, that he was convinced she had everything it would take to become an opera star.

"I always knew, as much as one can, that I would be an opera singer." She remembers feeling apart from the other kids. "I felt I had something they didn't have, but I was happy about it. When I was 11, we moved from Bradford, Pa., to Long Beach, Calif., and I finished out the semester as the new kid with no friends.

"But with the next semester came a music class. The very first day we were in there, the teacher asked us all to sing something. I really knew my power was there and I thought, 'This is where I'm going to get you.' I thoroughly knew I had this one thing different from everybody else."

When singing helped make her a popular school leader, she recalls her father saying, "Just remember, peanut, they only like you for your voice." His intention was not unkind, but to prepare her for one of the realities he felt she would face as a famous singer.

"I've always known my voice was the entree, but I feel pretty secure at this point that I have appeal and worth apart from singing. Maybe it's an attraction in the beginning, but eventually the true person come through.

"You know, not too many people want to stick around with anybody who's a stinker — even if he's got the greatest voice in the world. I'm fortunate to have a few really close, wonderful friends. Most, strangely enough, are out of music. They have demonstrated to me that they love me for me, and that singing doesn't make the difference.

"I can't imagine what it's going to be like if I don't have this thing I've always had. It would seem very strange without it." When asked if she worries about it, she answers tentatively, "Not at the moment, I don't."

She has made a pact with her close friend and accompanist, Martin Katz, who will say, "That's it" when the time has come. She admits the transition could be traumatic.

But the music won't stop. She considers it an absolute necessity to make her life whole. "I didn't know that for a long time. I was so busy chasing it that I didn't realize what it meant to my soul. I know that's what drives me rather than fame and fortune. There are easier ways of getting that. It's so difficult to do all of this."

There are scattered questions about private life: How she spends time alone (reading, TV, at the piano); other interests (her 21-year-old daughter Angela, politics, social causes); appreciation of other art forms (she adores ballet and owns a fine collection of contemporary art).

All answers are qualified. She says repeatedly, "But I've so little time for that," and adds at one point, "and I don't have nearly enough time to be with the people I love."

For the past 12 years, her romantic relationship has been with a charming and dignified colleague who understands this life. Greek basso Nicola Zaccaria (for 25 years the leading basso at La Scala) — she calls him Nico — always seems patient and supportive in Ms. Horne's public arena.

Now in the busiest years of her career, Ms. Horne coolly operates a juggling act from a frazzled appointment book. It is stuffed to the hour with a global stretch of professional obligations which could include as many as three performances a week. What she plans as a feasible yearly schedule, with proper rest breaks, often falls to the eraser.

Many hours must be devoted to study and memorizing, which Ms. Horne often does late at night in bed "because the phones finally stop." Since she programs herself heavily to learn new music, her obligation here is almost superhuman. But so is her memory. Ms. Horne says she can cram with the TV going (it is often tuned to sports) and also field other distractions.

"This may sound stupid, but I don't seem to study well in clutter, which, believe me, I have. I feel I can relax and really get down to work in a room that's been tidied up."

To save her voice, she frequently studies silently, either with a Yamaha keyboard or earphone and a Walkman, where she listens to prerecorded accompaniment and mentally plugs in her voice.

On performance days, the only sounds she lets out above a whisper are musical. She will not talk on the phone except to give a one- or two-word answer. "I don't want to have to concentrate on anything else or have any business question thrown to me. If it's an opening night and I'm nervous, I'm not too thrilling to live with."

Ms. Horne prefers going to home to unwind after a performance. She hates receptions and begs off unless it is extremely important. "After greeting people backstage and spending the time it takes to get ready, I'm always late. Often there is no food, and I haven't eaten since that afternoon.

"The talking is the worst part after spending so much vocally. It means that the next day I will be even more tired and I don't always have time to recuperate. More than likely, I'll be on an airplane by 9 or 10 o'clock, headed for the next destination..."

She usually holds open house after performances, seeing anyone who wants to come backstage. This experience can be a revelation if one has only witnessed her casual but regal poise in recitals or the Mack truck determination with which she charges into male roles.

One night after a concert at Carnegie Hall, she has changed into shirt and slacks and sits behind a battered old table, welcoming a crane-necked press of nearly 200 fans. She manages to create, in her warm, buddy-like way, a few moments of one-on-one privacy with every person who approaches.

Trendy words and a sprinkle of salt combine with an underlying aura of feminine vulnerability. Occasionally, the famous, low-flying Ms. Horne chuckle permeates the room and bounces on out the door to the end of the long line. She cheerfully signs autographs — piles of them for some people — and lays on a few special hugs.

Her onstage rapport with the public is equally successful. A critic recently credited Ms. Horne with achieving the performer's dream — being able to shape and control an audience. "If that's so, I think it's because of relaxation and knowing the territory. But I am not aware that I am playing the audience. Really, I'm not.

"This may sound naive, but I always feel that I'm going out and have a real visit with them because they are all my friends and we are going to work together.

"You know, some performers have a killer instinct. Their attitude is to slay the audience. But I do it just the opposite. Giving love — and receiving it — is extremely necessary for me. Love is the important thing in my life.

"And of course after all this time I know my audience. I know what is required. By now there are very few things I will face that I haven't already confronted. Occasionally, something new will arise and I'll say, 'Well, that is amazing.' But it no longer fazes me.

"I really have to sacrifice a social life. It is almost non-existent. I set goals — mountains — for myself that I have to scale." She reels off as much left to do as she has already accomplished and mentions teaching as a future possibility. She has always successfully helped and advised young singers. "I think it's important to be friendly and helpful to them. Besides, being aloof and inaccessible is not my style."

WISH

Like the girl who wanted to meet Snow White. To her delight, the fairy-tale princess paid her a visit. Or the little boy who asked for a California king snake. Athough it was the wrong time of year to find the unusual breed, resourceful volunteers somehow secured one.

One 15-year-old girl, when asked what she would want if she could have anything in the world, requested nothing more than to spend her last days with her mother — who was single and had to work. Make-A-Wish arranged for a leave of absence and paid the woman's salary.

Recently, an avid football fan, afflicted with cystic fibrosis, wanted to visit the Dallas Cowboys. Make-A-Wish came through, sending the boy and his family to the season's opening game. Before he died, the youngster realized his dream of not only meeting his idols, but cavorting with them on the field.

Such thrilling experiences, Ms. Kaplan notes, are not only beneficial to the children, but offer relief and respite for weary family members as well. The entire family, she stresses, is an integral part of every wish.

"The families," she points out, "are dealing with the very worst thing that could ever happen to them. The loss of a child is a tragedy that takes a lot out of everyone. We always encourage immediate family members — or special people in the child's life — to participate in a wish. They're the ones who are taking care of the child. They share his pain, and they need a break too. Being a part of the wish takes some of the burden off them for a little while."

John and Bau Green lost their son Phillip this past March. He was only 3. But afflicted with neuroblastoma (a cancer that attacks the nervous system), the youngster had endured enough pain and suffering to last a lifetime. Before he died, Phillip joined a group of 39 young cancer patients and their families who visited Disney World through the efforts of Make-A-Wish.

The trip was coordinated by Kim Hughes, president of Parents & Children Fighting Cancer, a support group run through Walter Reed Medical Center in Bethesda, Md. Ranging in age from 6 months to 15 years, the youngsters were in various stages of the disease — "from recently-diagnosed to dying," says Ms. Hughes. "In fact, one of the 40 originally scheduled to go didn't make it."

Ms. Hughes admits she had doubts, at first, that such a monumental project could be arranged and carried out.

"None of us," she says, "wanted to get our hopes up. We were afraid it would somehow fall through."

Afterwards, however, she praised the "attention to detail" and "red carpet treatment" afforded her group. "Everyone involved with Make-A-Wish," she says, "was simply wonderful."

"They took care of everything you could imagine. This may sound corny, but they all gave 200 percent. They're the most enthusiastic, sincere people you'd ever want to meet."

For the Greens, the fantasy of that dream trip to Disney World lasted long past the five glorious days of carefree fun and entertainment. The family was granted a brief but memorable respite from the progressively debilitating disease that had robbed them of so many of life's pleasures.

"For a few days," recalls his father, "Phillip was able to forget he was sick. In fact, we all were able to. At the time, we didn't know how much longer he would live. You can't imagine the pleasure we got from watching him enjoy himself. His face just lit up at everything he saw. And he had such a good time being with the other children. It meant an awful lot to us."

Green says he videotaped the experience, and when his son's condition deteriorated to the point where he couldn't get out of bed, the family spent many hours playing the tape and reliving that unforgettable week.

Phillip is gone now. But like the thousands of others whose lives have been touched by the Make-A-Wish Foundation, his parents have some wonderful memories.

'Avenging Force' violent, illogical

By MYRA LEE SALCEDO

Salcedo

After the summer block-busters and before the Christmas re-leases, there is that time of year when movie releases are often mid-dle-of-the-road. The best films are being held back in anticipation of Christmas box of-fice sales.

Canon Film's latest action thriller definitely fits into the pre-Christmas release category. Billed as "the action film of the year," "Avenging Force," keeps its promise for action with non-stop stunts. Though much of the action is excessively violent and the plot often illogical, martial art fans may find the film enjoyable.

It opens with a haunting scene of a swampy Louisiana bayou. The beautiful photography of vast sections of green, moss-draped trees and the tranquility of singing birds is soon rent asunder by a man in combat fatigues falling on his face in the muddy waters of the blissful bog.

The sudden jolt of his body crashing to the ground sets the pace for the rest of the film — plenty of action and blood. When he rises, we see that the man in the fatigues is injured and bleeding. He is being followed by a man in a black ninja-type suit and hood, his face is covered by a full white mask and he is wielding a bloody sword.

The injured man is joined by another, also running from the ninja/hunter. From all directions of the swamp, men in strange garb, weird masks and bizarre weapons (looking like a heavy metal band lost in the swamp) close in on the two men.

Before you can say, "Bruce Lee," the injured man has been impaled on a tree by a strange, two-pronged weapon in a stom-ach-churning scene. Blood is al-ways prevalent in "action" films, but this one goes the whole yard when we are afforded a view of the serrated edges being twisted around by the hunter.

After the other man is pounced on and strangled by a thin wire, the group of hunters jubilantly remove their masks and congratulate each other. Who are these derranged men?

They are the Pentagle Five, a racist, right-wing vigilante group and they are out to kill Larry Richards, played by newcomer Steve James. Richards is run-ning for the United States sen-ate. He is also black.

The ringleader, in a rebel-rous-ing speech, declares that "we live in dangerous times, para-noid economic times that will bring civil disorder raging in the streets," — and the Pentagle Five intend to be there in the thick of it. The slimy five fear "gun control, Mexicans coming across the border, yellow-bellied liberals, 'Commies,'" and...well, you get the picture.

The plot includes a vengeance-obsessed hero, Michael "Ameri-can Ninja" Dudikoff as Matthew Hunter, an ex-Secret Service Agent who's parents were killed when a bomb planted in their car exploded. Hunter is left to care for his 12-year-old sister on his Louisana ranch which he leaves when he hears that Rich-ards, his former partner, is re-ceiving death threats from the Pentagle.

Add to the plot, CIA agents, martial arts experts, an attempt-ed assassination during Mardi Gras, fires, rain storms, mudw-restling, and people dropping like flies and you have ...AC-TION!! Plenty of it, which unfor-tunately doesn't make up for weak plot. None of the characters ever get developed. They are all flat; good thing, most all eventually get "offed" any way.

However, some terrific vil-lains, John P. Ryan as the warped aristrocratic Pentagle leader and some fine photogra-phy in spots may lift this above the Chuck Norris level.

Boss to be back in time for holidays

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The Boss is coming back, just in time to reap the Christmas harvest for Columbia records.

Bruce Springsteen is putting the final touches on a five-album set, "Bruce Springsteen and the E Street Band Live, 1975-1985," which Columbia says will be out in late autumn.

The material spans the group's entire recording career. It also will be released simultaneously in album and compact disc.

Moore pulls out of PBS production

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Mary Tyler Moore has pulled out of her first role for public television after learning that Universal has marketing rights for the home video and foreign theatrical versions.

Miss Moore had planned to work for scale in a PBS production of Arthur Miller's "All My Sons." She would have played the central role of a grieving mother caught in a war-torn family's moral crisis.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

By Jeane Dixon
Monday, September 22, 1986

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: The more new projects you start, the greater your chances of suc-cess. An investment should soon bring larger returns. Partnerships do better than expected! You get a clearer picture of where you stand. Any financial losses can be re-solved in October. Expand a sav-ings program. Children may cloud the money picture. Know your priorities.

CELEBRITY BIRTHDATES: Actor Scott Baio, singer Debby Boone, director-teacher-actor-au-thor John Houseman, the New York Mets' Wally Backman, San Francisco slugger Jeff Leonard, boxer Ingemar Johansson, Tom Lasorda of the Dodgers, actor-di-rector Erich von Stroheim.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Pace yourself so that you will have the energy you need to complete a variety of projects. Sharing author-ity will help a business grow faster.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Straighten out a misunderstanding that could upset a business rela-tionship. Ride with the tide, saving that big move for a more appropri-ate time. Romance sizzles.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Fight off feelings of gloom by immersing yourself in work. Use the lunch hour for a self-improve-meht project or recreation. A pa-tient, loving attitude can help re-store a romantic partnership.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You are about to enter a new arena where you will have no trouble competing. Big things are expected of you. You will not disappoint those who are counting on you.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Keep careful notes on any business ne-gotiations, they could save you embarrassment in the future. Someone could try to cast a roman-tic spell over you this evening.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Your concern for a child is justified, but you could make things worse by acting on impulse. Your ability to manage money is tested. Hang on! Extra cash is on the way.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You may be approached about joining a large corporation. A new romance thrives. Family members draw closer together. Handle a money problem wisely and domestic ten-sions will fade.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Be more flexible and there will be fewer emotional upsets. Showing your love for a dear friend is more important than making a point.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Stay positive and the competi-tion will never overtake you. Plan a meeting with clients or customers to discuss what must be done to increase revenues. A well-thought-out strategy wins support.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Base your decisions on facts, not wishful thinking. Sacrifices you make for others earn you a special kind of loyalty. Children will influ-ence what you do today. Be gener-ous with an aide.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Good things begin to happen! Be careful not to take out your anxie-ties on those who work for or with you. Big business transactions are successful. Deal with top officials.

DEAR MR. COREN

Q.—I have followed with inter-est your discussion of the lead against a suit contract of the ace vs. the king from holdings head-ed by the A-K. Both seem to have drawbacks. Why, then, haven't more players adopted Rusinow leads? — J.L., Philadelphia, Pa.

A.—First, let's consider the draw-backs of the lead of either the king or the ace from A-K combinations. Suppose you and your partner lead the king from that holding, as well as from king-queen. Now suppose that partner leads the king and you hold J-10-x. In front of you, dummy has three low cards in the suit.

If partner's lead is from the king-queen, you want to encourage him to continue the suit. If it is from the ace-king, you want him to shift. You have no way of knowing which.

If you lead the ace from A-K, you eliminate that particular problem. However, now you don't know whether partner's lead of the ace is from that combination or from A-x-(x). Again, there will be many situations where you won't know whether to signal partner to con-tinue the suit or to discourage him. All you have done is to replace one problem with another.

Almost half a century ago the late Sidney Rusinow proposed a so-lution that has a lot of merit and few, if any, drawbacks. He sug-gested leading the second of touch-ing honors. This applied to the opening lead only. Thereafter, one reverted to normal leads. His struc-ture of leads was:

Ace: denies king.

King: from A-K. Third hand should signal with the queen or a doubleton.

Queen: from K-Q. Third hand should signal with the ace or the jack, but normally not with a dou-bleton. That is to prevent partner from continuing the suit should de-clarer, holding the A-J, duck the first trick.

Jack: from Q-J.

Ten: from J-10.

Nine: from 10-9.

With more than two touching honors in a suit, the correct lead is still the second. Usually, it is then correct to continue with a lower honor to the next trick, or the next time the suit is played.

If the opening leader has the two honors without a supporting card, the top card should be led. Thus, lead the ace from A-K bare, the king from K-Q bare, etc.

Rusinow's method is inherently sound. I don't know why it hasn't proved more popular. It is used with great success by practitioners of the Roman Club system.

PUZZLE ANSWER

'Bus Stop' audition scheduled

ODESSA — Auditions for Permian Playhouse's production of William Inge's "Bus Stop" will be held at 3 p.m. today and at 7:30 p.m. Monday at the Playhouse.

There are roles for five men and three women.

This comedy is set in the region Inge knows best — the plains of Kansas, also the background of his Pulitzer Prize winning "Picnic."

All of the action of "Bus Stop" takes place in a roadside diner in a small town 30 miles west of Kansas city, where the passengers of a bus take refuge until a blizzard blows over.

The cast of characters includes Cherie, the cabaret songstress; Bo Decker, the brash young cowboy; Grace, the amorous cage-proprietress; Carl, the bus driver; Dr. Gerald Layman, the reprobate professor; Elma Duckworth, the vulnerable adolescent girl; Will Masters, the sheriff; and Virgil Blessing, the cowboy's fatherly pal.

Technical staff also is needed. For more information, scripts and schedules call the Playhouse, 1-362-2329.

Board of directors of KERA will meet

The next business meeting of the board of directors of North Texas Public Broadcasting, Inc. (KERA Channel 13, KCTN Channel 2, and KERA 90.1) will be Thursday, 7 to 7:30 p.m. at the Dallas Hilton, 5600 N. Central Expressway in Dallas.

Painter Robert Groth to conduct workshops

Illustrator and painter Robert Groth will be in Midland Oct. 7-11 conducting workshops and attending a reception and art showing in his honor at Stehle-Reed Fine Art.

Groth will be teaching two three-day workshops, each at a fee of $75, at Stehle-Reed's gallery, 1507 Industrial. The workshops are limited to the first 20 people. Hours are 10 a.m. to 1 p.m. Oct. 8-10 and 6 to 9 p.m. Oct. 7-9. To pre-register, call 682-6892 or 689-6889.

The public is invited to attend a reception and art showing in Groth's honor Oct. 11. Over 25 of Groth's work will be on display during the show at Stehle-Reed.

Groth was born in Chicago in 1908. In 1933, he was discovered by the new and fashionable Esquire Magazine, which sent him on world travels as a graphic chronicler of history. He saw Adolph Hitler in Berlin in 1934 and did a portfolio of Russian sketches the first year the USSR was opened to world travelers.

Groth's first war assignment was as a World War II correspondent for the Chicago Sun, where he made the front page with the first account of the liberation of Paris in 1944. The next day he conducted the first interview with Pablo Picasso, and he later was with the Russians at the fall of Berlin.

Groth subsequently covered the United Nations units in the Korean action, France's Indochina War, U.N. participation in the Congon insurrection, fighting in Santo Domingo and the Vietnam War, the latter for the U.S. Marine Corps.

Fellow war correspondent and friend, Ernest Hemmingway said, "If John had made his drawings any closer up front, he would have had to sit in the Krauts' laps."

Groth wrote and illustrated two books on his war experiences, "Studio: Europe" and "Studio: Asia."

Also known as a sports illustrator, Groth did a whole series on Eskimo sports and games, folk sports and festivals of Europe and bull-fighting in Spain. "John Groth's World of Sport," published in 1970, features a selection of his sketches, drawings and paintings of unusual and exotic sports in "the world's far corners."

Through the years, Groth has illustrated a number of books, including classics for the Limited Editions Club. Among these were "Gone with the Wind," "All Quiet on the Western Front," the "Short Stories of O. Henry" and "The Grapes of Wrath."

Groth's works are represented in the collections of the Metropolitan Museum of Art, the Chicago Art Institute, New York's Museum of Modern Art, the Library of Congress, The University of Texas, the Atlanta Historical Society and the Dallas Public Library.

He currently lives in New York City and is an instructor at the Art Students League, a post he has held for the past 43 years.
