Prices post biggest decline in three years

WASHINGTON (AP) — Wholesale prices, driven down by declining costs for gasoline and new cars, fell 0.4 percent in July for their biggest decline in three years, the government reported today.

The drop last month in the Labor Department's Producer Price Index followed a 0.1 percent dip in June as the wholesale inflation gauge registered its first back-to-back monthly declines since early 1986.

The July improvement was even better than expected and bolstered the arguments of economists that inflation will be well behaved in the second half of the year, giving the Federal Reserve more room to lower interest rates in an effort to keep the economy out of a recession.

In more good economic news, the government reported today that retail sales, bolstered by an upturn in auto spending, shot up 0.9 percent in July, the biggest advance in three months, with revisions to May and June sales showing significantly more strength than believed earlier.

"We have the best of both worlds, no inflation and increasing consumer spending," said Dirk Van Dongen, president of the National Association of Wholesaler-Distributors. "Those are very good vital signs for the economy."

The news on inflation was particularly welcome because it came after a surge in prices earlier in the year had triggered fears that the country could be on the verge of another inflationary spiral.

Even with the back-to-back declines, wholesale inflation through the first half of 1989 rose at an annual rate of 5.7 percent, compared to last year's 4 percent rise.

But the acceleration in prices had been caused by higher energy and food costs. With both areas showing moderation now, economists are looking for inflation to slow substantially in the last half of the year.

The 0.4 percent July drop in wholesale prices reflected the second monthly drop in gasoline prices, which fell 7.2 percent after declining 4 percent in June.

Another favorable price development came from a 1.9 percent decline in new car prices. Labor Department analysts said this decrease reflected earlier-than-usual end-of-the-model-year discounting by automakers trying to clear out a large inventory of unsold cars.

Food costs, which had fallen a giant 0.8 percent in June, edged up by 0.1 percent in July.

Mary Alice Richard tends the grave of her daughter Charlene at a Richard, La., cemetery. Catholic Church officials expect thousands to visit this town today for a Mass honoring the girl, who some say has performed miracles since her death in 1959 at the age of 12.

Catholics want girl to be canonized

RICHARD, La. (AP) — Charlene Richard died 30 years ago today at the age of 12 from leukemia. Since her death, many believe she has helped perform miracles, and thousands now would like to have her canonized.

Worshipers were expected to begin arriving at her grave around noon today for a Mass tonight at St. Edward Church, about 155 northwest of New Orleans.

The Rev. Joseph Brennan said 4,000 were expected to attend the Mass, representing a growing sentiment among southern Louisiana Roman Catholics to have the Cajun girl made a saint.

Paul Olivier will be one of them.

"We had a child who was a year old and diagnosed as having cancer of the larynx. The doctors said it was very rare, but it was a killer. They put her life span at three, four, five months at the most," said Olivier, a retired state policeman. "Then someone told us about Charlene and we went to her grave and asked her to help us."

That was in 1970. Today Angela Olivier is a 19-year-old junior at the University of Southeastern Louisiana.

"I would say that is a sign of a miracle," Olivier said. "A prayer was answered."

There is a box beside Charlene's grave where those hoping for miracles can put their petitions. A light burns at night for those who make the pilgrimage around the clock.

Despite the growing adulation she has received since her death, Charlene was not a remarkable child, said her mother, Mary Alice.

"She was full of life. She liked sports and was always busy with something. She went to church and said her rosary, but she was just a normal little girl," she said.

MISD officials uncertain about attendance law

By BRIAN PEARSON
Staff Writer

More than 30 telephone calls from curious and concerned Texas school district administrators swamped the Texas Education Agency office in Austin on Thursday.

James V. Clark, who spent the day answering the questions, said it was the most calls he had received in one day concerning a new state attendance law.

This session lawmakers passed legislation which requires students to attend 80 school days per semester, allowing them to miss only eight days this fall and seven in the spring. A student with excessive no-shows could lose credit for the entire semester.

Students who exceed the allowed number of absences must appear before a school district committee set up to hear petitions for the semester's class credit.

But with only 24 days before the fall semester starts, school district officials apparently do not fully understand the law and how to enforce it, Clark said.

Midland Independent School District is among those unclear of how to enforce the law.

Superintendent Joe Baressi said neither lawmakers, TEA officials nor the State Board of Education have clarified details of the rules.

Among the gray areas are the specifics of who will serve on attendance committees and the criteria used to evaluate absences, Baressi said.

MC students responding to registration-by-mail system

From Staff Reports

Midland College students are responding at a record pace to a new matriculation-by-mail system with less than a week of early registration remaining, officials said.

Dr. Don Cates, associate dean of students and registrar at MC, said more than 1,900 students — almost half of the estimated total enrollment expected for the fall semester — had registered by Thursday.

"Returning students really have enjoyed the convenience of registering by mail," Cates said. "They received instructions earlier in the summer and have responded well to this change."

Cates said former students can handle all their registration by telephone, then mail in their payment for tuition and fees to complete the process.

Registration will be from 7 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Monday through Thursday in the Student Services Office, Administration Building.

Students may take part in early registration through Thursday.

First time students, those transferring from other colleges, and those receiving financial aid must register in person, Cates said.

Students planning to attend Midland College this fall, but not able to pay tuition and fees now, can obtain time permits from 7 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Monday through Thursday through Aug. 24.

Time permits assign specific periods to report for official registration, which begins Aug. 30.

Only one day has been allocated for the traditional registration process, rather than the two days usually assigned during the fall and spring terms.

Fall classes begin Sept. 5.

Persons interested in credit courses can get copies of the course bulletin from Midland banks, the Midland County Library and Student Services Office.

Train passengers recount fight for survival

GUASAVE, Mexico (AP) — Dozens of survivors of a train wreck, many bandaged and bruised, told of how they fought for their lives when their passenger cars plunged into a river, killing 112 people.

Red Cross officials said 239 people were injured, 39 seriously, when the train bound from the beach resort of Mazatlan to Mexicali near the U.S. border fell into the San Rafael River 15 miles south of Guasave Wednesday.

"We had to push and pull as the cars filled with water," said Felipe Rodriguez who was riding in one of the coaches.

"I found one of the girls, but... " he said almost sobbing in a television interview Thursday night. Rodriguez lost his wife and three daughters, ages 2 months and 7 and 12 years.

No Americans were reported among the dead, said Dan Sainz, the U.S. vice consul in Mazatlan. However, bodies were still being found, he said.

The second-class train, known as "The Burro" because it stops at every station, fell into the river in northern Mexico before dawn Wednesday when a bridge it was crossing collapsed.

A week of the heaviest rains in 50 years had flooded large areas of southern Sinloa state on the Pacific coast and a few hours before the train passed a small dam three miles upstream broke.

Federal Highways police said in a preliminary report the rain had weakened the railbeds, causing the train to sway sharply. The flood-battered narrow bridge, about 30 yards long, couldn't stand the stress and caved in.

Carlos Orozco Sosa, director of Mexican National Railways, told reporters the bridge, made of steel and wood over concrete pylons, had been inspected a month before and was found safe.

He said 600 to 700 passengers were riding the 11-car Pacific Railways train on its regular 700-mile run from Mazatlan to Mexicali, across the border from Calexico, Calif. The line is part of the government-owned rail system.

Some victims were battered to death inside the cars by the plunge. Others drowned and some were swept away by the muddy churning waters of the river, which had overrun its banks.

Some passengers died or became very sick after swallowing diesel fuel that spilled into the river from the overturned engine. Several suffered chemical burns from the fuel.

Miriam Partida Santos, 17, whose 2-year-old daughter Cynthis Anabel drowned, said it was so crowded that people were sleeping on the floor.

As the car she was in fell into the river, "we hit the ceiling and she drowned," Mrs. Partida said. "I could hear her drowning and you could hear the other people around drowning. We were drowning and the windows were closed."

"I felt it hit once and didn't pay any attention. It hit again and it fell into the water. You could hear the cars falling," said Gaudencio Carino, 33, who suffered a broken foot. "I was not asleep and conscious of everything, that's why I was able to get out."

Bush appoints Lucas to congressional liaison post

WASHINGTON (AP) — William C. Lucas, whose nomination to be the Justice Department's top civil rights enforcer was rebuffed by lawmakers, today was given another job by President Bush that does not require Senate confirmation.

The appointment of Lucas as director of the department's office of liaison services eliminates a potential confrontation between Bush and the Democratic-controlled Congress.

David Runkel, a spokesman for Attorney General Dick Thornburgh, said Lucas had been selected for the liaison post, which coordinates Justice Department activities with state and local governments and civil rights organizations.

A formal announcement was forthcoming.

Administration sources, who spoke on condition anonymity, said Bush would formally withdraw Lucas' nomination for assistant attorney general for civil rights later today. No replacement has been selected, they said.

In 7-7 tie votes Aug. 1, the Senate Judiciary Committee rejected motions to recommend Lucas' confirmation and to send his name to the full Senate without recommendation.

Bush had considered appointing Lucas to the civil rights post while Congress is in its current recess, a manuever that would have permitted Lucas to serve through 1990 without requiring a Senate vote.

However, Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell, D-Maine, warned Bush a week ago that such a move could harm the president's relations with Congress.

Bush then sought a quick floor vote on Lucas before senators left town, but Mitchell turned him down.

Lucas, who is black and served as a sheriff and county executive in the Detroit area, was widely criticized by civil rights groups for lacking the experience in discrimination cases required for the assistant attorney general post.

Lucas has recently been working in the Justice Department as a consultant.

At the White House, presidential spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said Bush "values Mr. Lucas' friendship and advice, and will seek it and use it in the years ahead."

Fitzwater said the president continues to believe that the rejection by Lucas on Capitol Hill for the high-profile civil rights post was "a very unfair judgment by Congress based primarily on political considerations."

"The president thinks he was an excellent candidate who would do a great for whoever he works for," Fitzwater said.

"He was a black leader in Michigan, who gave up the Democratic Party and joined the Republican Party. We felt his background and experience was sound, and he would have done a great job."

WEATHER SUMMARY

From Staff and Wire Reports

The forecast for tonight calls for partly cloudy skies and a 30 percent chance of showers and thunderstorms, according to the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport. The low will be in the middle 60s and winds will be from the southeast at 10-15 mph.

Saturday will be much the same with mostly cloudy skies and the chance of thunderstorms increasing to 40 percent. The high will be in the middle 80s and winds will continue from the southeast at 10-20 mph.

Thursday's high of 94 was 10 degrees cooler than the record high of 104 set on for that date in 1946. The overnight low of 67 was seven degrees warmer than the record low of 60 set for this date in 1931.

STATE

Scattered thunderstorms are possible in northern sections of the Panhandle, South Plains and Southeast Texas through Saturday.

Forecasts are calling for partly cloudy skies over most of the state through Saturday with only extreme West Texas to have clear skies through the first part of the weekend.

A slight warming trend is expected to begin Saturday and continue through Sunday over most of the state.

Some isolated fog was reported early today in the northwest Panhandle. Skies were clear over the extreme western portion of the state, the coastal bend and in extreme East Texas and partly cloudy over the rest of the state.

Some patchy rain fell during the night over western portions of North Texas as a minor upper level disturbance passed over the area. And a few scattered showers were reported before dawn over the South Plains.

NATION

Thunderstorms brought more rain to already saturated ground in the West today after downpours at Yellowstone National Park created dangerous mudslides and flash flooding in California prompted evacuations.

Rain also fell on portions of the East Coast and widely scattered thunderstorms developed over the Great Plains.

Thunderstorms stirred Thursday afternoon along the Nevada and California border, in areas that were experiencing runoff problems from Wednesday's rain. In Mono County, Calif., most of the main roads were either closed or cars had to be escorted.

At Yellowstone National Park, Wyo., three people trapped in a camper were rescued seconds before their vehicle was pulled under a mudslide Thursday evening, park officials said.

"It was a matter of seconds, virtually seconds, and that vehicle would have gone under," said park spokeswoman Joan Anzelmo after talking to a park ranger who rescued the family visiting from Mexico.

Rain hit the middle and south Atlantic coastal states, and thunderstorms were along the central Gulf Coast. A thunderstorm produced wind gusts to 58 mph at Pensacola, Fla., Thursday night.

Today's forecast called for scattered showers and thunderstorms over much of the East Coast, the Appalachians, the upper Ohio Valley and portions of the Great Lakes; numerous showers and thunderstorms from eastern New York across the middle and south Atlantic coastal states to central Florida; scattered thunderstorms over the Plateau region, much of the Rockies, and northern and western portions of Texas; and numerous showers and thunderstorms over much of Arizona and New Mexico.

Women lose more iron through sweat

Call it a physiological phenomenon: While men perspire more heavily than women, women lose more iron through perspiration.

In a study at Florida State University, analyzing the iron concentrations in the sweat of nine male and eight female collegiate cross-country runners, it was shown that iron loss was similar among both genders — despite the fact that male subjects had perspired more profusely. Given that the female runners had ingested an average of 7.5 milligrams less iron per day than the males, it was determined that their iron loss exceeded their intake.

Symtoms of such iron deficiency include general fatigue, headaches, muscle cramps and loss of appetite. Recommended daily allowances for iron are 10 milligrams for men and 18 for women, although runners may need more, because of sweating and the constant pounding of feet, the latter of which destroy red blood cells.

INFLATION —

Inflation excluding the food and energy categories fell as well in July, dropping 0.2 percent. Because food and energy prices vary widely from month to month, economists look to the inflation rate of other goods as an indication of underlying inflationary pressures.

The slight increase in food costs was attributed to a 2.5 percent rise in beef prices, which had fallen in June.

Prices also turned up after June declines for fish, pasta, soft drinks, coffee and rice.

Fresh fruit prices continued to rise, climbing 1.3 percent in July after a 1.4 percent jump a month earlier. Vegetable costs, however, took another big drop, falling 9 percent after an 8 percent June decline.

The gasoline price decline helped to mask increase of 1.5 percent in the cost of natural gas and a 0.3 percent rise in home heating oil costs.

The overall 0.4 percent July decline in the Producer Price Index for finished goods one stop short of retail was the biggest one-month drop since a 0.8 percent fall in July 1986.

The June-July drops marked the first consecutive monthly declines since a four-month period of falling wholesale prices from January through April in 1986.

The improvement in July left the Producer Price Index at 114.0, meaning that a hypothetical selection of goods costing $100 in 1982 would have cost $114.00 last month.

Economists worried at the beginning of the year that higher food and energy costs were threatening to become imbedded in permanently higher inflation rates as workers demanded higher wage increases to make up for the ground lost to rising prices.

That was a top concern at the Federal Reserve, which began moving in March 1988 to push interest rates up in an effort to dampen inflationary pressures.

The Fed's goal was to slow economic growth enough to allow inflation to moderate without pushing the country into a recession.

In early June of this year, the central bank switched course from worrying about inflation to worrying about an economic slump and conducted three modest moves since that time to lower interest rates.

Pope threatened by Islamic group

JAKARTA, Indonesia (AP) — A clandestine Islamic fundamentalist group has threatened to kill Pope John Paul II if he visits Indonesia, Indonesian authorities and church sources said today.

The Islamic movement, which calls itself Mujahiddin Fisabillillah, sent letters to Indonesian authorities and the apostolic nunciature of the Holy See in Jakarta saying "there will be a blood bath" if the pope comes to Indonesia as planned in October.

"Whether it is a prank or not, we must take all the necessary precautions," said a Roman Catholic Church official, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

The letter described the committee arranging the pope's visit as "no more than colonialist dogs during the rule of the Dutch."

Boy Scouts not prepared to find Girl Scouts at Norway jamboree

ASKER, Norway (AP) — Their motto is "Be Prepared," but some Boy Scouts say they were not ready for what they found at a rainy campout in Norway.

Half the 19,000 Scouts were girls.

"When we have a Boy Scout Jamboree in the states, it's strictly boys. We were taken a little off guard," said Charlie Hart, scoutmaster of an American troop for the children of U.S. soldiers based in West Germany.

Eight Soviet boys also were among the 2,500 visitors from 26 nations at the Norwegian National Jamboree.

"This is first time we have had Soviets at a Norwegian jamboree, and may be the first time anywhere, since the Soviets don't have scouting," said camp spokesman Per-Olav Lie.

He said the boys, members of the Soviet Communist Party Youth Organization, were sponsored by the Lions Club in Moss, Norway.

Norway formed coed scout troops in 1978, said Anne Marie Kristensen, a spokeswoman for the weeklong jamboree, which ends Sunday.

Organizers said that no thefts, vandalism or use of alcohol were reported so far at "the biggest scouting event in the world this summer," being held on 185 acres of fields 15 miles west of Oslo.

"There have been quite a few cases of puppy love...but having boys and girls together teaches them mutual respect," said Gary Andrew, of U.S. Troop 204, based in West Germany.

Dan Warren flew in from the United States as one of 30 Scouts from Troop 368, of Arlington, Mass. Warren said he discussed poetry with Norwegian Girl Scout Kirril Kaas while they shared a rain poncho.

American Boy Scout Dan Warren of Arlington, Mass., and Norweigian Girl Scout Kirril Kaas from Baerum, Norway, peek from behind their countries flags at a scout camp in Asker, Norway, where 19,000 scouts from around the world are meeting.

Steven McClenaghen, 14, of a British boys troop from Inverness, Scotland, said camping with girls "is more like the real world."

"My girls are very popular. They are the only American girls here," said Carol Butler, a California scout leader who heads a U.S. Girl Scout contingent of eight, picked from 300 applicants throughout the United States.

Coed camping was not the only suprise awaiting foreign scouts when they arrived last Sunday.

"When they said bring rain gear, we thought they meant raincoats. But when Norwegians say rain gear, they mean head-to-toe waterproofing," said one American scout slogging along a muddy trail.

A Norwegian girl cried "Mud-...mud...mud" from a soggy tent. A Greek Girl Scout shivered in the rain.

However, a troop from Switzerland said the weather was no problem.

"We got here in the middle of the night and had to set up camp in the pouring rain. It doesn't matter. We can set up these tents blindfolded, in any weather," said Marcel Zollinger, of a coed troop from Effretikon, Switzerland.

Norway's King Olav V, the Norwegian royal family and domestic celebrities visited the jamboree.

"I couldn't believe how open it was. I walked right up to the king," said Scoutmaster Alex Hodge, of Troop 419 from the U.S. Air Base at Lakenheath, England.

Norwegians may joke about camp romance, but they also engage in traditional scout activities such as hiking and outdoor skills. There is also a daily camp newspaper and radio station.

MISD

Meanwhile, the law's details are in the hands of the State Board of Education, which is not expected to address the matter until a November meeting — well after school starts.

"We're going to start the school year without knowing what the rules are," Baressi said. "It's hard to hold students accountable when we don't know what the rules are."

It will be equally tough to make students understand the attendance requirements by the time the semester's starting gun fires, he said. Students sometimes spend the first two school weeks fumbling with registration before finally attending classes, he said.

In a recent study conducted on Midland High School attendance last school year, 40 percent of the about 1,600 students would have been affected by the law, Baressi said. Lee High School's attendance rate, he said, is about the same.

"The elementary schools tend to have better attendance," Baressi said. "They also have the childhood diseases. If you get the chicken pox, there's your eight days right there."

However, Clark, assistant to TEA Commissioner William Kirby, said the state has no intentions of taking credit away from a student who falls ill or has other excused absences.

He said the only changes from the past attendance rules are the committee's creation and the 80-day attendance requirement.

The attendance committee should be comprised of a campus administrator, a teacher and possibly other school officials, he said. Students, he said, should not be penalized for excused absences, such as for sickness or school-sponsored trips.

Previously, the state allowed students five unexcused absences before they lost credit for the semester. Under the new rule, the committee will decide whether the eight or more absences are excusable, Clark said.

Baressi said MISD will need far more than one committee to hear all the district's cases, and the law does not specify how many committees a school district can create.

Clark said school administrators' confusion over the attendance law "is not their fault," but added that the state has no plans to develop more detailed information.

"At the state level they probably won't get any more specific," he said. "They want school districts to pretty much do it the way they want to.

"We feel like the law pretty well outlines what the school district ought to do. It shouldn't cause any major change in the way they operate."

Ricardo Torres, MISD executive director of secondary operations, said the law could improve attendance, with the district requiring the students to make up their absences.

"We want to use the law in a positive way, not as a stick to beat kids over the head with," Torres said.

Make-up classes for absentees affected by the law, including those with excused absences, could be held on Saturday or at night, Torres said.

With the prospect of losing their precious weekend or weeknight time, a student may avoid missing regular classes, he said.

"It's not going to be worth your while to be gone," he said. "If you only have the sniffles, you may think twice about staying home."

Torres said he doesn't expect a big jump in truancy, despite students having three extra days of unexcused absences before they lose credit.

"The law may cause some abuse if parents are not monitoring their kids," he said. "If there are ways to manipulate the system, kids are going to manipulate the system."

Campus officials will continue to call parents of absent students, who will face the same penalties for truancy, Torres said. Punishments include detentions, paddlings, counseling and parent conferences, he said.

SAINT

Brennan said it was Charlene's death that made her a saint. He was chaplain at the Lafayette hospital where she died in 1959.

"Charlene taught the world not how to live, but how to die. Thirty years ago they didn't have the pain medicine they have now and she died in excruciating pain, but in perfect grace. She became great at that time," he said.

The "miracles" began soon after Charlene's death, according to the Rev. Floyd Calais.

Calais, 62, then was the chaplain at a state hospital in Lafayette, in the heart of Louisiana's Cajun country, when he prayed to Charlene, asking her to inspire the bishop to assign him to a parish. He was soon appointed pastor of the church where the girl was buried, about 155 miles northwest of New Orleans.

"When I found out which church I had, the hair on the back of my neck stood on end," he said.

Lucy and Rogers Courville often visit Charlene's grave to thank her for saving the life of their daughter, Laurie, now 15, who was diagnosed as having cancer at age 5.

The United States has produced only three saints and canonization is a lengthy process that can take centuries.

But the Diocese of Lafayette has begun the slow process of sainthood for Charlene, Calais said. The diocese is collecting people's stories of how she helped them, the first step to establishing miracles, he said. If the Vatican considers Charlene a candidate for sainthood, she will be considered first for veneration, beatification and finally canonization.

TRAIN

Many surviors stood on top of the cars in the middle of the river, waiting until sunrise for help.

Rescue was hampered by rain and flooding. By Thursday, however, the floodwaters had receded and the level of the river was steadily falling.

Gov. Francisco Labastida Ochoa said 71 of the bodies identified late Thursday were flown in two military Hercules transport planes to their home states in Nayarit, Jalisco, Oaxada and Guanajuato. All bodies identified so far were those of Mexicans.

152 people wounded in Beirut shelling

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Dazed civilians stumbled out of basements and bomb shelters today to inspect damage from an overnight duel between Syrian and Christian gunners that police said killed 27 people and wounded 152.

Police said the 15-hour battle involved howitzers and multi-barrelled rocket launchers in Beirut, the surrounding mountains and the eastern Bekaa valley.

The casualties raised the toll from the five-month confrontation between Gen. Michel Aoun's predominantly Christian troops and Syrian forces to 576 killed and 1,474 wounded.

A police spokesman, who cannot be named in line with police rules, said about a dozen shells crashed into Baabda and the nearby suburbs of Hazmiyeh and Hadath today but that no casualties from that fighting were immediately reported.

On Thursday, the shelling escalated sharply after Syrian gunners started pounding the presidential palace with salvos from 240mm mortars.

Aoun moved into a bunker beneath the palace when the latest round of fighting in Lebanon's 14-year-old civil war began March 8.

In the overnight barrage, rockets gouged gaping holes in residential apartments, shattering walls and windows and triggering fires that blazed out of control and lighted up the night sky.

"Thank God we're alive," said Mrs. Khadija Alaya as she came out of a shelter with her daughter, each carrying a mattress and a pillow, to find smoke billowing from their sixth-floor apartment.

Other residents of the Moslem Tarik Jedideh district, still in pajamas and nightgowns, made their way through debris and glass shards carpeting the street to inspect their homes for damage.

The artillery battles have damaged thousands of buildings in Beirut and sent all but 200,000 of the city's 1.5 million residents fleeing to safer areas in southern Lebanon, the Bekaa valley and northeastern mountains.

"My sister fled a month ago to the Bekaa, she rented a house there. I wonder whether she's still alive after last night's shelling," said Hoda Qannine, a housewife in Tarik Jedideh, a low-income district that took the brunt of the shelling along with the city's southern slums.

The police spokesman said more than 10,000 shells and rockets rained on Beirut, the southeastern mountains and the eastern Bekaa valley in a barrage that peaked at 60 shells a minute.

He said the battlefield was expanded as Aoun's gunners opened up on Syrian army positions in the ancient town of Baalbek and other areas of the valley 40 miles northeast of Beirut.

Reliable sources in the Bekaa, speaking on condition of anonymity, said Aoun's gunners scored direct hits on at least six Syrian army outposts and artillery emplacements. A Baalbek resident who drove to Beirut early in the day said a dozen shells crashed into the city and the surrounding villages overnight.

She said Syrian army ambulances "brought casualties all night from different parts of the Bekaa" to a hospital in Baalbek run by the Iranian-backed Hezbollah, or Party of God.

The Syrian command in Lebanon refuses comment on its losses.

The current fighting began after Aoun blockaded ports run by Syria's militia allies south of Beirut with the aim of salvaging about $100 million annually in lost customs dues.

The Syrians and allied militias retaliated by besieging and shelling the Christian enclave northeast of the capital.

Aoun, 54, a Maronite Catholic, escalated the confrontation by declaring a "war of liberation" against the 40,000 Syrian troops in Lebanon. He said they betrayed their 1976 peacekeeping mandate from the Arab League by taking the Moslem side against the Christians in the civil war.

Attackers toss grenades at U.N. buildings

WINDHOEK, Namibia (AP) — Attackers armed with grenades and a machine gun damaged two United Nations buildings and killed a black Namibian security guard, police and U.N. officials said today.

The Thursday night attacks occurred at U.N. posts in Outjo, a town 210 miles north of Windhoek, police said.

"I expect all Namibians to unite in the condemnation of such acts and to reaffirm their commitment to a peaceful transition to independence," said Martti Ahtisaari, who heads the U.N. monitoring team overseeing the territory's independence process.

The attackers threw two grenades into an office which killed a 22-year-old Namibian working for a private security and set fire to the building, police said. U.N. spokesman Fred Eckhard said it appeared a machine gun also was used.

Two white men and one black man were suspected of carrying out the attack, police said.

U.N. officials reported a second attack at a nearby U.N. military base where arms are stored. There was minimal damage to the building, and no injuries, the officials said.

South Africa, which has ruled Namibia for 74 years, agreed to grant independence to Africa's last colony under a regional peace accord signed in December.

U.S. may talk with Iran on hostage issue

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Bush administration says it stands ready to talk to any party that can help win freedom for the Middle East hostages — including Iran — but it is premature to expect direct talks with the new government in Tehran.

"We want to keep the lines of communication open," White House press secretary Marlin Fitzwater said Thursday. "We are prepared to talk to any party that can help with release of the hostages, including Iran."

To talk directly with Tehran, however, he added, the United States would have to be sure it was dealing with "authoritative officials who represented the government." He suggested it was premature to expect such talks now, adding, "We're nowhere near that."

President Bush himself had nothing to say Thursday about the hostages, expect to repeat his appeal to Americans to offer a special prayer for them this weekend.

Fitzwater said the United States welcomes third-party contacts with Iran on the hostages, including a trip to Tehran planned next week by the foreign minister of Pakistan, Sahabzada Yaqub Khan.

A senior administration official said Pakistan's role could be critical in persuading Iran to pressure pro-Iranian groups into releasing kidnapped Americans and Westerners held in Lebanon.

"Pakistan is a Moslem country with access and ties to other Moslem countries, and with special knowledge of Iran's involvement" in the hostage situation, said the official, who declined to be identified.

Relations between the United States and Iran were severed in 1979 after a mob invaded the U.S. embassy and held 52 Americans hostage for 444 days.

Fitzwater, taking note of a report Thursday in the English-language Tehran Times that indirect talks would open in a few days through a third country, possibly Pakistan, said he was unaware of any "special new talks."

At the State Department, spokeswoman Margaret Tutwiler said: "If Iran is truly interested in improving relations with the U.S. and with the West, there is a very simple test: it can exert its maximum effort and its known influence to release all hostages."

And, she emphasized, Iran would must stop "its support for terrorism."

The United States already has indirect communications with the Iranian government, primarily through the Swiss, Ms. Tutwiler said.

Fitzwater said Khan and other Pakistani officials have contacts in Iran and it is the administration's policy "to leave no stone unturned" in seeking to win freedom of the U.S. hostages.

Fitzwater said he could not supply details of Khan's trip. Khan made an unexpected visit to Washington last week, where he met with Vice President Dan Quayle.

The vice president "urged Pakistan to become involved in helping facilitate the release of the hostages and to reveal to Iran information that Pakistan has accumulated on the situation," said Quayle spokesman David Beckwith.

Bush himself made no comment on the hostage matter, passing up an opportunity to discuss the situation during an appearance in the Rose Garden where he announced the selection of Army Gen. Colin Powell as the next chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

Fitzwater told reporters the United States and Israel were discussing efforts to free their hostages in Lebanon, but were not coordinating their actions.

Israeli officials had said Israel's Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir persuaded Bush in a 10-minute telephone call Wednesday to coordinate efforts to release foreign hostages and Israeli prisoners held in Lebanon.

"We've generally tried to be forthcoming with what we are doing, and they have been forthcoming with what they're doing. However, I would not characterize it as coordination," Fitzwater said.

Divorce trial over frozen embryos ends

MARYVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — A divorce trial to determine the fate of seven frozen human embryos has ended, leaving the judge to decide whether a man can stop his estranged wife from using them.

Davis

"On one hand, this case involves the ageless power of sexual reproduction. On the other hand, it involves a branch of science and man's ability to understand and control nature, which is as new as today's headlines," Charles Clifford, attorney for Junior Lewis Davis, said in closing arguments Thursday.

Junior Davis, 30, sued Mary Sue Davis, 28, for a divorce in February. He asked the court to prevent her from using the seven frozen embryos they created through an in vitro fertilization program last December. He contends he has as much right to decide their fate as his wife.

Davis wants the embryos, stored at a Knoxville hospital, to remain frozen.

But Mrs. Davis says she should be allowed to have the embryos implanted in her womb, arguing they represent her best chance of becoming a mother. She also contends Davis is asking to acquire a right not normally given to a man — the decision on whether a child should be born after he has fertilized the egg of his mate.

Blount County Circuit Court Judge W. Dale Young said he will announce a decision within 30 days.

That the embryos are outside the womb should make no difference, said Jay Christenberry, Mrs. Davis' attorney. "The journey outside the womb did not mean the return journey was to be prevented," he said.

The status of the embryos was an issue throughout the trial.

Dr. Jerome Lejeune, research director at the French National Center of Scientific Research, testified Thursday the frozen embryos are "early human beings," and have been since the moment of conception.

"Putting tiny human beings in a very cold space, deprived of liberty, deprived even of time, they are suspended as it were in a concentration camp," he said. "It is not as hospitable a place as the secret temple of a woman's womb."

DC-10s safe to fly, FAA director says

WASHINGTON (AP) — There's no evidence to warrant grounding DC-10s despite two explosive engine failures within a month, the nation's top aviation official says.

"It's safe to fly. I would fly in the aircraft today," Federal Aviation Administrator James B. Busey said Thursday, less than 24 hours after a Northwest Airlines DC-10 made a safe emergency landing in Denver with holes blasted in the housing of its tail-mounted engine.

For the second time in his first six weeks on the job, Busey defended the McDonnell Douglas-built DC-10, a workhorse jumbo jet for about 50 airlines around the world.

Three weeks ago, another explosive engine failure caused a United Airlines DC-10 to crash-land in Sioux City, Iowa, killing 111 people.

"We know of no hard facts that would lead us to take action to ground the DC-10," Busey said when asked about its safety.

He declined to draw comparisons between the Sioux City and Denver incidents, saying any decision to ground a class of airliners would be made only after careful investigation and deliberation.

"To act speculatively or on the basis of incomplete information in my judgment would be irresponsible," he said.

The United plane carried General Electric engines, while the Northwest plane had Pratt and Whitney engines.

American, Continental, Delta, Eastern, Northwest, Pan American and United Airlines fly a total of 166 DC-10s, and about 300 more are flown by non-U.S. airlines.

After Busey's statements, the International Airline Passengers Association renewed its call for grounding the DC-10, saying it's the only way to protect the public while finding out what's wrong with the aircraft.

Busey said the FAA was prepared to take any action that might be indicated by facts uncovered in the National Transportation Safety Board investigation of the Denver incident and the Iowa crash.

Investigators said the United jetliner's rear engine apparently disintegrated in flight, knocking out critical hydraulic flight controls that meet in the plane's tail section.

Powell expected to win easy confirmation

WASHINGTON (AP) — Gen. Colin Powell, tapped as the next chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, is widely viewed as an adroit politician and pragmatic commander capable of representing the U.S. military at a time of sweeping change both home and abroad.

Powell, 52, was nominated on Thursday by President Bush to become the nation's top military officer.

"I am ready to go to it and I look forward to the challenges ahead," Powell said.

He's expected to win easy Senate confirmation and make history as the first black and the youngest-ever officer to hold the post.

Powell, who served as national security adviser in the final year of President Ronald Reagan's administration, will succeed Adm. William Crowe Jr., who is retiring Sept. 30.

Bush praised Powell, a decorated veteran of two combat tours in Vietnam, as "a complete soldier" as well as a distinguished scholar.

"As we face the challenges of the '90s, it is most important that the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff be a person of breadth, judgment, experience and total integrity," Bush said. "Colin Powell has all those qualities and more."

Powell fits the mold of Bush's national security advisers, like-minded pragmatists who favor consensus-building rather than confrontation.

Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., chairman of the Senate Armed Service Committee, called Powell "an excellent nominee." Nunn said his panel will hold confirmation proceedings soon after Congress returns from recess in September.

The four-star general's associates predicted he will work hard to present all sides to the commander-in-chief.

"He was marvelous to work with, because he could deal with all the internal conflicts" that the National Security Council adviser must resolve for the president, said Dan Howard, former NSC spokesman who was recently confirmed as undersecretary of the Navy.

"Colin was an honest broker...He was very fair in presenting others' viewpoints. That doesn't mean he didn't have one, because he did. He was just very fair, and could present all sides without putting a 'spin' on it. That's a rare talent in this town," Howard said.

Such abilities will be essential when Powell is called upon to deal with the intense rivalries that can afflict the Pentagon. Contests among the services are widely expected to reach new highs as the military budget shrinks and the assessment of the Soviet threat diminishes.

As well, Powell is seen as a wise choice by those who have seen the role of chairman evolve into one where diplomacy and political finesse with Congress are as essential as toughened battlefield instincts.

More molestations reported isn't bad

Child molestation isn't a pleasant subject for a society that grew up on 1950s' television morality with programs such as "Andy of Mayberry" and "Father Knows Best." But the worry-free, loving, fuzzy-warm family relationships depicted on those programs aren't the case in every Midland home.

In fact, statistics presented in an article in last Sunday's Reporter-Telegram revealed that the number of child molestations being reported in Midland County is up considerably over the 1988 figures. That doesn't mean that there is more molestation going on this year, necessarily, although there may be some increase in that regard. It means only that the reporting of molestings has increased. That is a particularly good development, indicating the effectiveness of the work of the Victim Assistance Program of the District Attorney's office, the Permian Basin Child Abuse Prevention Program (CAPP) and the Midland County Rape Crisis Center.

"A lot of it can be directly tied to a lot more public awareness, the fact that we are educating our community," noted Tedda McAnear, who heads the Victim Assistance Program. "We need to bring it out of the closet, and we are doing that very well."

She is correct. A community that refuses to believe it harbors such a problem obviously cannot address the situation. But when the problem is recognized and groups such as the Victim Assistance Program, Permian Basin CAPP and Midland County Rape Crisis begin to provide educational programs designed to gain public support for both the reporting of child molestation cases and the proper avenue for addressing those cases — whether it be criminal prosecution in the courts or counseling for the involved parties — then something actually can be done about what has been called a "national shame" — child abuse. And child molestation is that: abuse.

But it takes the cooperation of literally everyone to make the program successful — parents, spouses, neighbors, and most importantly, the children. The statistics for Midland County show that more cases are being reported, but in this instance more crime reporting isn't bad.

It shows more people are concerned and willing to get involved to help overcome this national disgrace called child molestation.

Museum debates computer's paternity

WASHINGTON — At the Smithsonian Institution, the title "Father of the Computer" has become more a matter of politics than paternity. A Smithsonian exhibit on the "Information Age," due to open next March, will give short shrift to a man many people believe invented the first electronic computer — John Vincent Atanasoff.

Jack Anderson

Instead, the exhibit focuses on John W. Mauchly, an early computer pioneer who worked for Sperry Rand Corp., now a part of Unisys Corp., which, just by coincidence, is underwriting the Smithsonian exhibit.

Atanasoff, now 85, lives a life of quiet anonymity in Maryland. In the midst of his ground-breaking research in 1942, his country called, and he joined the Navy in World War II. By the time he got back, other geniuses had patented the idea. He now modestly says he doesn't care who gets the credit. But he has plenty of fans who do care, and they are pressuring the Smithsonian to give Atanasoff his due.

Is the Smithsonian dabbling in revisionist history to satisfy a patron? No, says David Allison, curator of the Smithsonian Computers and Information Society. He told our reporter Ken Rogerson, "We haven't discussed with any of our sponsors what will be in the exhibit."

Paul Ceruzzi, a Smithsonian historian, said IBM gave $1 million to the exhibit, and doesn't believe either Atanasoff or Mauchly created the first computer. IBM believes it did, Ceruzzi said.

In 1973, Sperry Rand and Honeywell Inc. tangled in federal court over the paternity question. Sperry Rand owned the patent of Mauchly and his co-worker Presper J. Eckert, and Honeywell was refusing to pay royalties for using the idea of a computer. The judge ruled that "Eckert and Mauchly did not themselves first invent the automatic electronic digital computer, but instead derived that subject matter from one John V. Atanasoff."

Fifty years ago, Atanasoff was a physics professor at Iowa State College, now Iowa University. In the summer of 1941, Mauchly visited him, and, according to evidence presented at the Sperry Rand trial, he saw the computer Atanasoff created. The two men corresponded for a few months. Then Atanasoff was called into the Navy. Mauchly didn't let any grass grow under his feet. He patented his computer, ENIAC, in 1946.

Atanasoff came back from the war and pursued his own research, but by then, the computer industry was off and running without him.

Alice and Arthur Burks, who wrote a book about Atanasoff, told us that the Smithsonian implies Mauchly was first by building the exhibit around ENIAC. Labeling ENIAC as the first computer in this country also means that the United States does not have the prestige of being the first country to unveil a computer. The British "Colossus" computer came along before ENIAC, but after Atanasoff's prototype.

Ceruzzi admits that Atanasoff was the inventor of the computer, but says that Mauchly and Eckert were the "effective" inventors because they patented it and made something that was useful. "We always felt like (Atanasoff) belonged in the exhibit," Ceruzzi said.

Well, maybe not "always." In the spring of 1988, a Smithsonian bulletin about the exhibit in the planning stages referred to ENIAC as the "first" computer. Then, after Atanasoff's supporters came out of the woodwork, Smithsonian literature started calling ENIAC the "largest, most powerful early computer." The Smithsonian has only recently contacted Atanasoff to get his memorabilia for the exhibit.

As the exhibit progresses, the Smithsonian says knowing who the father was isn't as important as the computer itself.

BALANCE OF POWER — Some opposition leaders in the Soviet Union are suggesting what amounts to a dismantling of the empire. They want to replace it with a federation of autonomous republics. They also want to break the government's control of property and return property rights to the people. Gorbachev met recently with leaders of three Baltic republics and is doing a balancing act for them. He agreed to help them gain economic autonomy by 1990, but at the same time he warned against runaway political autonomy. He urged the opposition leaders to restrain their demands, because too much political activity could lead to anarchy, and that would give hardliners an excuse to bring in the Red Army and the KGB to impose order.

Women could control via Tupperware Party

Women are simply too smart not to have eventually figured out the way to gain complete control of the country is to form their own political party.

It happened in Cincinnati at the convention of the National Organization for Women (NOW, by God!).

Lewis Grizzard

The convention adopted a resolution calling for a commission to study forming a new political party because of "the failure of both major political parties to address women's needs."

Said NOW President Molly Yard (no relation to the famous landscape architect, Back), "We are 52 percent of the country, and we have almost no representation."

There is the key statement. Women make up 52 percent of the nation's population, which means if there were a political showdown between the sexes, women would have unbeatable strength in numbers.

If women do go ahead and form their own party — and they are being quite foolish if they don't — here's the way a future presidential election could stack up:

The Democrats, of course, would nominate some ultra-liberal male who, if elected, would lead us into fiscal peril, while the Republicans would nominate an ultra-conservative male with a plank in his platform that called for shooting any woman who even thinks of having an abortion.

The new Tupperware Party, made up of all women all over the country, would counter with somebody like Rep. Pat Schroeder of Colorado, Cher or Sally Jessy Raphael.

Men would dilute their votes by splitting them between the two male candidates while women, hungry for power, would go en masse for the female candidate.

The only thing that could go wrong in this scenario would be the failure on the part of the Tupperwares to get out the vote.

They wouldn't have much trouble with career women, but they would have to hang around a lot of tennis courts to get those women to give up Tuesday morning doubles in order to go vote for their sister.

Gaining the White House in a walk, the Tupperwares would then turn their thoughts toward controlling Congress.

One by one, the Senate and the House would begin to fill up with women, and the men, ousted from those seats, would have to return home and resume their chiropractic and law practices.

You could expect a lot of changes if women took complete charge of the government. Let's look at specific areas:

■ Defense: The first thing Tupperwares would do is brighten up the Stealth bomber and have its all-black exterior painted mauve.

■ Human rights: Millions would be funded for research to find a way for men to have babies for a while and see how they like it.

■ The Environment: Cigar smoking and belching at the dinner table would be outlawed.

■ Animal rights: Cats would be given the vote, further strengthening the Tupperware numbers.

■ Housing: Men would be outlawed from using the guest towels.

■ Law and order: Cagney and Lacey would be appointed co-attorneys general.

■ Transportation: "We'll fly the planes from now on, you go back and serve lunch."

■ Foreign relations: "President Cher and Soviet Premier Raisa Gorbachev met today in Geneva and decided to go shopping."

Trade in U.S. shouldn't be political football

In May, $32.4 billion worth of manufactured goods were imported into the United States.

Another way to say that is that in May there was a market worth $32.4 billion for manufactured goods inside the United States that American manufacturers did not service.

Charley Reese

Still another way of saying it is that in May there was a $32.4 billion market for manufactured goods which American firms because of poor pricing, poor quality or non-existent products lost to imports.

Trade is a political football in America and it shouldn't be. Before you listen to some congressmen or senator gab about the trade deficit, ask him why he supported surrendering much of America's independence in trade matters by approving the General Agreement on Trade and Tarriffs back during the Kennedy administration.

Secondly, don't be taken in by the demagogues who want to blame foreigners for our made-in-America problems. There seems to be an organized campaign to make Japan the villain in our economic mess. Japan is 100 percent innocent.

First, no foreign product enters the United States except by permission of the U.S. government. Our politicians — not Japanese — set our trade policy. Secondly, many Japanese products are sold in America because American manufacturers choose not to make them. The Japanese have been opening manufacturing plants in the United States; American firms have been opening manufacturing plants in South Korea, Hong Kong, Thailand, Maylasia, and Mexico.

If you buy a Dodge Colt, you will be buying in reality a Japanese car made in Japan; on the other hand, you can buy a Honda or Nissan which are Japanese cars manufactured in the United States by American workers.

In terms of concern for the well-being of Americans, who's the villain and who's the good guy? Chrysler, which shuts down plants and imports foreign-made products under an American brand name? Or Japanese manufacturers who invest money and create jobs for American workers in the United States? Chrysler's multi-millionaire chief executive hustler, Lee Iacocca, wraps himself in the American flag, but it is Honda and Nissan executives who have shown greater faith in American workers. It is the Japanese who said Americans could produce a high quality product if they are shown how. It was, in fact, the Japanese who adopted quality control methods developed by an American and built a statue in Japan to honor him. American manufacturers ignored him.

What's the answer? Well, the first step is to recognize that national policy is not or should not be set by private interests — conservative or liberal think tanks, the chamber of commerce, the AFL-CIO, or the Business Roundtable.

Private interests will always advocate what is best for private interests.

Public policy properly belongs to government which, ideally, can think of the common good, and it is precisely government which has failed to set an enlightened public policy and has instead set policies profitable to whichever set of private interests it catered to.

The first thing to do then is to exercise our political rights and elect people who will not sell out America's common good for private gain.

A second point to remember is that most American corporations, particularly the giants, are now controled by financiers, not by manufacturers or entrepreneurs. There exists an incredible number of interlocks between banks and American corporations.

The practical effect is this: financiers care about bottom lines, frequently preferring financial schemes to sound research and development and quality products. Their loyalty to the United States is zip. They love cheap labor and foreign environments. Only government can force them to act responsibly.

MARIANNE MEANS

It's in Bush's interest to solve Contra problem

WASHINGTON — Now that the Central Americans have agreed to a peace pact that sets a schedule for disbanding the Nicaraguan contras, President Bush should follow Sen. George Aiken's famous advice about how to end the war in Vietnam: Pull out and call it a victory.

Instead, Secretary of State James Baker III protested that the U.S.-backed guerrillas are being demobilized prematurely, before the Marxists who run the Sandinista government have demonstrated that they've seen the error of their warlike ways. Baker wants to preserve the fiction that the Contras can yet be revived as a fighting force if the Sandinistas, not famous for keeping their word, renege on the deal.

This position pleases the right wingers, who are still stubbornly devoted to the Contras. But it rings hollowly in the rest of the country, which through eight years of murder and mayhem in Nicaragua never cranked up much support for the cause to which the Reagan administration committed so much prestige.

It is very much in Bush's interest to get this problem behind him. A peaceful, if inconclusive and imperfect, political settlement in Nicaragua would put to rest one of the most divisive issues of the Reagan era and allow bipartisanship at the water's edge to flourish once again.

It has been clear that the Contras were finished since Bush and Congress worked out an agreement in April to temporarily renew funds to keep the Contras fed and housed but not armed. Winding up President Reagan's disastrous policy gracefully without conceding defeat, however, has been awkward for Bush, who as vice president fully supported Reagan's goal of militarily forcing the Sandinistas out.

The war in Nicaragua has been staggering to an end since the public discovered in November 1986, that Reagan's covert Iran-contra plot had tainted his so-called noble cause with political corruption and criminal activity.

The State Department has dragged its feet all the way.

But the peace process has been prodded along by the persistent diplomatic efforts of Nicaragua's Central American neighbors, mounting congressional opposition to the Contras and a steadily deteriorating Nicaraguan economy that is losing its financial support from Cuba and the Soviet Union.

Although Reagan and Bush call them "freedom fighters," the U.S.-funded Contras never managed to hold an inch of Nicaraguan soil, were regularly accused of killing innocent civilians and never won the hearts and souls of local residents.

Now upwards of 12,000 Contras and their families sit at U.S. expense in camps in Honduras, where their ominous, idle presence makes regional leaders nervous. The new pact calls for the Contras to scatter to their native Nicaragua or nearby countries after international monitors have been stationed to keep border peace.

The Bush administration wants the Contras to remain huddled in Honduras at least until Nicaragua holds promised elections in February, as though keeping them together until then somehow changes the fact they have been a military failure.

At times, the president's men have sounded as though they really won't be satisfied until the Sandinistas meet democratic standards that are even higher than those of their neighbors.

The Central American agreement still leaves a lot to be done and much opportunity for misunderstandings. But it represents another concrete step forward, all the more promising because it was hammered out by the Central American governments themselves.

The original hyperventilated rationale for the Contras — that the Sandinistas represented a Red Menace on the hemispheric mainland endangering our own safety and stability — has long been discredited. The supposed security threat from a tiny, impoverished country never frightened most Americans in the first place. It certainly doesn't arouse them now in the era of glasnost.

But that doesn't make it politically easy for Bush to walk away and leave the Sandinistas still in power and the Contras grumbling about an uncertain fate.

So he would do well to remember Aiken's advice to President Johnson at the peak of the turmoil over the Vietnam war. Johnson spurned it.

Several years and many deaths afterward, however, President Nixon could still see no better way out and took the advice.

Better now than later, President Bush.

ITEM: Pro-Contra ultraconservatives have taken up a new cause: They want to restore former Marine Lt. Col. Oliver North's military pension, which he lost when he was convicted of three felonies in connection with his covert campaign to sell arms to Iran and funnel funds to the Nicaraguan rebels.

They have temporarily abandoned their plans to make an issue of a pardon for North, in part because President Bush refuses to discuss it while North is appealing and in part because he's sentenced not to jail but to community service, a worthwhile activity that it is tough to whip up anger against.

The Senate almost got bogged down in a debate over North last week, but escaped for vacation by promising a vote on the question in November.

The right wingers thinks their hero deserves his pension because he has been brave in battle. They don't care that he cheated and lied in public office. But other people do: North has no more right to a federal payoff for past military service than any other criminal. He forfeited it with his betrayal of our trust.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Friday, Aug. 11, the 223rd day of 1989. There are 142 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On Aug. 11, 1965, rioting and looting broke out in the predominantly black Watts section of Los Angeles after police arrested a black man suspected of drunken driving. In the week that followed, 34 people were killed and more than 1,000 injured.

On this date:

In 1860, the nation's first successful silver mill began operation near Virginia City, Nev.

In 1909, the SOS distress signal was first used by an American ship, the Arapahoe, off Cape Hatteras, N.C.

In 1934, the first federal prisoners arrived at the island prison Alcatraz in San Francisco Bay.

In 1945, the Allies responded to Japan's offer to surrender provided Emperor Hirohito retain his sovereignty. The Allies said they would determine the Emperor's future status.

In 1954, a formal peace took hold, ending more than seven years of fighting in Indochina between the French and Communist Vietminh.

In 1956, abstract painter Jackson Pollock died in an automobile accident in East Hampton, N.Y.

In 1962, the Soviet Union launched cosmonaut Andrian Nikolayev into orbit for a flight that would last more than 94 hours.

In 1975, the United States vetoed the proposed admission of North and South Vietnam to the United Nations, following the Security Council's refusal to consider South Korea's application.

King resigns from center named after slain father

ATLANTA (AP) — The youngest son of slain civil rights leader Martin Luther King Jr. has resigned as president of the center that carries his father's name amid talk of a rift among the leadership over the center's direction.

King

Dexter King's resignation was announced Thursday by the Martin Luther King Jr. Center for Nonviolent Social Change, but no reason was given.

Civil rights leaders in Atlanta said King stepped down because of conflicts over fiscal and personnel concerns, and there were reports of a rift between King and his mother, Coretta Scott King.

Atlanta City Councilman Hosea Williams said the center was encroaching on the leadership position in the civil rights movement of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, which the elder King founded.

"The center's purpose was to perpetuate the legacy of Dr. King, but not to carry on the whole movement," said Williams, a former lieutenant of the elder King. "When they started talking about leading the movement, freeing black folk, they started competing, and both got hurt."

Mayor Andrew Young, who was an aide to the elder King in the '60s, was quoted by The Atlanta Journal-Constitution as saying the resignation was part of a family dispute fueled by a generation gap.

A King Center official, who spoke on the condition of anonymity, said Mrs. King might return to the presidency she relinquished to her son.

The King Center is a non-profit organization devoted to education about King's teachings and philosophy. It also urges action on international racial issues, especially apartheid in South Africa, and is host to the annual Martin Luther King Jr. birthday week celebration.

The SCLC has taken an activist approach to the problems of poverty and racism since it was founded in 1957 by King and the Revs. Joseph Lowery, Ralph Abernathy and Fred Shuttlesworth.

"We are the activist arm of the movement," Lowery has said. "When you do that, you step on toes and you don't become the most popular kid on the block."

The Rev. Jesse Jackson, a follower of King in the 1960s and a former candidate for the Democratic presidential nomination, said in a telephone interview from Chicago that the two groups are complementary rather than competitive.

"The fact that Dr. King remains a frame of reference for justice is mainly that his work has been institutionalized," Jackson said, referring to the center.

"The SCLC's legacy (is) direct action, challenging the racism, challenging anti-semitism," he added.

Dexter King, 28, was elected in January to take over from his mother, who remained as chief executive officer. He said he wanted to cut the center's dependency on donations and put it on a solid financial base so it could "market and disseminate" non-violent teachings.

King could not be reached at the office of his business, Visionary Development Corp.

In a statement from the King Center, board Chairman Jesse Hill Jr. did not address the reasons for King's decision.

NATION IN BRIEF

Helms proposes art censorship measure

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Jesse Helms' effort to prevent federal funding of sexually explicit artwork is being compared to prohibitions against using tax dollars for racial or anti-Semitic activities.

Lawyer Bruce Fein found himself defending Helms and at odds with a panel of art experts Thursday night at the Smithsonian Institution's Hirshhorn Museum when he questioned the propriety of using public funds for controversial art.

He asked panel members how they would feel if the National Endowment for the Arts gave $100,000 to David Dukes, the Louisiana lawmaker with ties to the Ku Klux Klan, and "he decided to make nice crosses" inscribed with the word "nigger."

Helms, who was not at the forum, was outraged by two NEA grants given to controversial artists whose work involves homosexual and anti-religous themes.

The North Carolina Republican is calling for a sweeping ban of federal funding of material that is "obscene or indecent" or "denigrates, debases, or reviles" beliefs or people on the basis of religion, race, creed, sex, handicap, age or national origin.

Study describes enzyme

WASHINGTON (AP) — A new study that describes the precise shape of a key enzyme of the AIDS virus may help scientists develop drugs to disable the deadly virus, researchers say.

Stephen B.H. Kent of the California Institute of Technology in Pasadena said Thursday that the discovery was the first accurate description of protease, an enzyme essential in the reproduction cycle of the human immunodeficiency virus, or HIV, which causes AIDS.

Pharmaceutical company representatives said drugs that block the action of protease already are being tested, but that the new study should contribute to a more detailed understanding of how the virus works.

Kent said the description will enable pharmaceutical companies to develop compounds that will "fit like a hand in a glove over the active sites of the enzyme."

Postman kills two, self

ESCONDIDO, Calif. (AP) — A mailman who went on a shooting spree at his postal office, killing two co-workers before shooting himself in the head, discussed a similar 1986 massacre in Oklahoma only two days earlier.

Mail delivery was scheduled to resume today for some 17,000 households served by the substation in Orange Glen, where John Merlin Taylor opened fire Thursday morning. Several of his co-workers say they're leery of returning.

Needy families manage during a lean summer

Hearst News Service

SEATTLE — Summertime is often an especially lean time for needy people in America.

The homeless frequently find fewer shelters available and the hungry must often cope with less assistance from private charities.

In Seattle this summer, those leaner times have been even leaner than usual because of an 81-day grocery strike that crippled private food pantries citywide. The strike ended July 30, but its effects are still being felt, and they have led to some quick thinking by Seattle residents living on the edge.

"Creative cooking," as defined by single welfare mother Bethann Walker, means finding mouth-watering ways to serve rice or beans night after night to a family of eight.

"What do you do with the rice without something to flavor it?" she asked with a sigh.

To Fred Lindsey, a single father of seven, "weight-loss program" means losing 20 pounds in two months because Seattle food banks have run low on food.

Lindsey said he tries to put the kids' needs ahead of his own. Even so, he said, his 5- and 6-year-old boys have lost four or five pounds apiece this summer.

"They're my little toothpicks," he said fondly, "but they're in good health."

Grocers, working with tight inventories and short staffs, didn't always give food banks top priority. Lisa Fishman, a VISTA volunteer with Seattle's Food Resource Network, said some grocers threw away food instead of giving it to neighborhood food banks.

Food-bank workers didn't want to cross picket lines to get the donated food, so back-door pickups had to be arranged.

Eventually, striking grocery workers got hungry and turned to food banks for help themselves, further straining the resources.

"We're still in a recovery phase," said Harold Murphy, director of the St. Mary's Food Bank here. "We have about one-third of our ordinary supply. It will take another week or two before the grocers are able to donate to our distributors."

Lindsey, 45, said he has relied heavily on food banks since a back injury put him out of work a year-and-a-half ago.

He shares a two-bedroom apartment with his seven kids, ages 5 to 19. His welfare check is $298 a month. Rent is $350.

Lawyer re-indicted on 28 counts of fraud

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Lowell Alvin Hahn, the 47-year-old California lawyer who was a federal fugitive for five years until his 1988 arrest in Midland, was re-indicted Thursday by a Midland federal grand jury on 28 counts of fraud that could land him 189 years in prison and more than $4.25 million in fines if convicted on each count.

Hahn, who worked in Claremont, Calif., near Los Angeles, was charged with credit card fraud by using the alias Jay L. Woods and reportedly racking up more than $200,000 in unpaid bills, including credits at local jewelry and department stores.

He pleaded "not guilty" in his arraignment before U.S. Magistrate Robert Sykes, begged reduction of his $200,000 cash bond, and expressed displeasure with his court-appointed attorney.

"We just don't agree on how to defend the case," Hahn said his defense attorney, Woody Leverett of Midland.

Sykes assigned Leverett to the case.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Tom Beery of Midland will present the government's case against Hahn.

Hahn has been in custody since September 1988 when Internal Revenue Service (IRS) special agents arrested him at the downtown Midland post office, where Hahn had worked as Jay Woods in 1985 as letter-sorting-machine operator.

Hahn's indictment includes charges that he tendered false and misleading information, including a fraudulent Social Security number, in applying for the U.S. Postal Service job.

Following his 1988 arrest, Hahn was returned to Los Angeles, where he was tried and acquitted on three 1983 charges that he failed to file income-tax returns. However, Hahn was convicted as a fugitive for his failure to appear in court in 1983 on the tax charges and was sentenced to one year in prison.

Shortly before he was to be released from prison, Hahn was indicted in Midland on four counts of fraud and was returned to Midland and jailed. Thursday's indictments preempt those four counts lodged in July.

In Midland, the magistrate hiked Hahn's bail from a $20,000 surety bond set in California to a $200,000 cash bond.

Hahn, a suspected "soldier" for tax protesters, appealed to Sykes to lower his bail.

"I would like reasonable bail," said Hahn, who appeared in a white prison jumpsuit. He is being held in the federal wing of Midland City Jail.

Sykes, who cited Hahn's conviction as a fugitive and his flight-risk status, was disinclined to lower the bail.

"I made a determination that you were a flight risk," Sykes said.

Hahn suggested that he had changed since his fugitive years.

"Does a person ever get a second chance?" Hahn asked. "Does a person get a chance to prove he has learned his lesson?"

Sykes reminded Hahn that the court determined he was a flight risk and that a California jury had convicted him as being a federal fugitive.

"Can I have this decision reviewed by the judge?" Hahn asked in referring to U.S. District Court Chief Judge Lucius D. Bunton, who will preside at Hahn's trial, which could be set for September.

Hahn, who had been in the Midland area at least since 1984, has been a member of the State Bar of California since 1967 and holds a law degree from the University of Illinois, according to the State Bar headquarters in San Francisco. He is listed in good standing with the Bar.

Counts in the indictment charge Hahn with using fraud in applying for credit and credit cards in 1987 and 1988 and with making charges on the credit cards and not paying off the indebtedness.

He is accused of using fraud in securing credit with MasterCard, VISA, Discover, American Express, Marshall Field & Co., Sears & Roebuck, Wanda & Tina's Jewelry, Corrigan's Jewelers, MBank USA, First City Bank, First City National Bank of Midland, Mervyn's, Boston Safe Deposit and Trust Company, and Barry's Jewelers.

In an unrelated case, 18-year-old James Allen White of Odessa was indicted for stealing $586.50 in coins in the July 30 burglary of Olney Savings in Odessa.

White, who is jailed in Midland, is represented by court-appointed lawyer Jim Hunnicutt of Midland

If convicted of burglary and theft of the financial institution, White could be sentenced up to 20 years in prison and fined $250,000 for burglary and sentenced to 10 years and fined $250,000 for theft.

White pleaded innocent of the charges in the arraignment.

Road projects on schedule

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

Engineers say two separate renovation projects on Midkiff Road are on schedule, though traffic flows remain sluggish.

A major repaving job began last Tuesday at the road's intersection with Andrews Highway.

City Council earlier this summer approved the repair project resulting from asphalt failure, engineering director Harvey Hansen explained.

The asphalt has settled and "rutted badly," he said.

To compound the matter, the asphalt years ago was placed on an already unstable sand and clay base, Hansen explained.

The bad material must be removed and replaced.

Workers have had to dig a hole about 2½-feet deep to correct the unstability problem.

The project should be finished within 21 days. Traffic will continue to be rerouted to the south side of the highway.

To the north, city and state engineers say the Northwest Drainage Channel renovations are going smoothly.

A joint $800,000 construction project was undertaken last March to enlarge the channel and install multiple flow culverts on several street sections.

The city's project is nearly complete, Hansen said.

Maxwell Drive's bridge at Midkiff Road, closed for the installation of a culvert, is reopened to traffic, he said.

An identical project underneath the street's intersection at Haynes Drive should be complete in three weeks, Hansen said.

The state's portion of the channel renovation should be finished within six to eight weeks, Texas Department of Highways Resident Engineer Lynn Passmore said today.

A culvert was installed underneath Midkiff Road.

The eastern section is complete and installation under the western half of Midkiff Road is 50 percent finished, Passmore said.

Traffic is allowed to drive on the eastern half of the road.

Renovation was needed on the culverts because they didn't facility the flow of water from the Jal Draw, west of the city.

The proposed culvert renovations should eliminate any chances of dangerous flooding up to a 10-year frequency storm, Hansen has said.

Farmers displeased with water settlement

PECOS (AP) — Texas has agreed to take $14 million from New Mexico to settle a lengthy dispute over Pecos River water, but West Texas farmers say that's barely a drop in the bucket toward paying for much-needed irrigation system improvements.

Texas Attorney General Jim Mattox has suggested the state use the money to study ways to improve irrigation and to purchase more efficient irrigation equipment for the parched West Texas area.

But Alan Zeman, a farmer in Reeves County north of Pecos, says the money won't be enough.

"It may not even pay for engineering," Zeman said.

Texas had been battling New Mexico for nearly 15 years to repay the Lone Star State for water pilfered from the Pecos River system in violation of the 1949 Pecos River Compact.

The U.S. Supreme Court in 1987 ruled that New Mexico had used 340,100 acre-feet of water between 1952 and 1986 from diversions. Texas officials estimated New Mexico made $320 million off the water during the time.

Rayburn Allgood of Barstow, Texas, president of the Ward County Irrigation District No. 1, testified that West Texas farmers had to quit planting cotton in the 1970s because of hard times and the low flow of water from the Pecos River. Texas had claimed roughly 1,415 acres of land could have been irrigated each year during the 34-year span if the diversions had not occurred.

Texas and New Mexico settled their disagreement this week in the midst of a lengthy hearing before a special water master in Denver who was to decide whether New Mexico should repay Texas in money or water.

Texas farmers had sought repayments in water or up to $900 million in cash payments. New Mexico offered varying amounts of cash instead, with the two states settling on the $14 million figure on Wednesday.

Zeman said the compact calls for New Mexico to deliver 80,000 acre feet of water a year to Texas. But he doesn't know if he can continue farming without the additional payback in water.

"My feeling was that we needed the water first, and then the money to line ditches was second," Zeman told the Pecos Enterprise.

State Rep. Troy Fraser, R-Big Spring, was displeased with the settlement.

"I'm concerned that the $14 million will go into the state treasury and the people of the Pecos area won't get their share," Fraser said. "My job is to put pressure on Mattox and the governor's office to make sure the bulk of the money stays in the Pecos Valley."

New Mexico's Attorney General Hal Stratton said that the negotiated settlement obligates New Mexico to pay Texas in full by March 1.

In exchange, Texas will drop all legal claims against New Mexico plus claims for legal fees and other costs incurred during the course of the lawsuit, Stratton said.

Grant infusion funds MC computer purchase

From Staff Reports

Parrish

Officials in Midland College's associate degree nursing program have plans to buy $20,000 worth of computer equipment with a grant given Thursday by the Helen Fuld Health Trust.

MC President Dr. Jess Parrish, gratified by the $20,000 donation, said: "As we prepare to double the size of our ADN program during the coming academic year, the equipment and software which we can purchase with this grant become even more important in assuring the continued high quality of our graduates."

The Helene Fuld Health Trust, administered by the Marine Midland Bank, N.A., of New York City, is the nation's largest charitable trust devoted exclusively to the welfare of undergraduate student nurses.

A Marine Midland Bank spokesman said the grant was made in recognition of the outstanding contributions to the nursing profession by the Midland College nursing faculty.

Faculty members include Carmen Edwards, Dr. Celia Harris, Sue Kirsch, and Nancy Shaw.

According to Dr. Eileen Piwetz, R.N., chair of the college's Health Sciences Division and a part-time instructor in the ADN program, this is the second grant Midland College's ADN program has received from the Helene Fuld Health Trust.

The first grant also was for $20,000 and was given in 1987 to establish a Computer Assisted Instruction Lab, she said.

Because Midland College was one of the first nursing programs utilizing a large amount of Computer Assisted Instruction, the college's ADN faculty was named as one of four in the nation to serve as computer software reviewers for a "Computers in Nursing" project.

Since the Helene Fuld Health Trust was established in 1969, grants have been made to nursing programs in excess of $41 million.

Nursing programs/schools in 49 states, Puerto Rico, the U. S. Virgin Islands, and four foreign countries have received grants from the trust.

Cisneros criticizes Mattox's fund-raising efforts

AUSTIN (AP) — Former San Antonio Mayor Henry Cisneros and Texas Attorney General Jim Mattox have began a war of words.

While announcing his support of state Rep. Dan Morales for Texas attorney general, Cisneros on Thursday blasted Mattox, who wants to run for governor.

In praising Morales, Cisneros said, "What is called for in this time is unquestioned integrity in the management of the highest law office of our state, and I don't believe we've had it."

Cisneros criticized Mattox's fundraising efforts and noted that Mattox was indicted on a felony charge of commercial bribery in 1983. Mattox was later acquitted.

He also labeled as untrue Mattox's comment that he chased Cisneros out of the 1990 governor's race. Cisneros was considered a possible gubernatorial candidate, but announced he would not run because of his son's health problems.

Mattox responded, saying, "The mayor obviously is talking politics and doesn't understand what this office does."

Mattox's campaign manager, Jim Cunningham, said Mattox meant no disrespect in a speech to the Texas AFL-CIO earlier this month, when he said, "I got (Lt. Gov.) Bill Hobby out of the race, and then I got Henry Cisneros out of the race."

What Mattox meant, Cunningham said, "was that he will be in the race no matter who gets in there."

Shooting suspect remains at large

From Staff Reports

Richard Dale Ruth, the man who allegedly shot 31-year-old John William Pace at a northwest Midland apartment complex Tuesday morning, remains at large today, the third day since the warrant was issued for his arrest.

Pace, who identified Ruth as his ex-wife's boyfriend, remains in serious condition in Midland Memorial Hospital's critical care unit, a hospial spokesman said this morning.

He was shot in the back and neck about 5:30 a.m. Tuesday near Pace's apartment in the Treemont Apartments at 5216 Tremont Ave.

According to Midland police, Pace had identified Ruth as his assailant en route by ambulance to the hospital and again at the hospital.

Montford candidacy could quiet Democrats' concerns

By RICK BROWN
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Conservative and moderate Democrats seeking a standard bearer in the gubernatorial race may have more to contend with than a late start in fundraising and name identification games.

Increasingly, they fear a candidate from their branch of the party could not win the primary because strong liberal special interest block voting seems to lock out "mainstream" candidates, they say.

Rep. Billy Clemons, D-Lufkin and an informal leader of about 45 moderate and conservative House Democrats, calls the idea his "great, great fear." It would indicate "that people like myself have been taken over," he said.

Beaumont Rep. Mark Stiles says he sees "more and more a situation where the only thing the Democratic Party calls on me for is to raise money."

If it is not impossible now for a conservative to win the nomination, he says, "it's close to becoming impossible."

Republicans say that conservatives no longer have a place in the Texas Democratic Party. "The party has left them," in the words of Rep. Tom Craddick, R-Midland and dean of the 58-member House GOP delegation.

But even with no avowed middle- or right-Democrat yet announced for the governor's race, the conservatives aren't ready to concede Craddick's point.

"If it were January (the end of the candidate filing period), it would be unhealthy," said Sen. Bill Sims, a San Angelo Democrat, but time remains for the right conservative to jump into the race.

One considering the leap is Sen. John Montford of Lubbock, who has been approached by Clemons and others on the subject.

Montford, in his sixth year in the Texas Senate, chairs the Senate State Affairs Committee and has worked on such important legislation as the state water plan approved in 1985.

Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby tapped Montford during the recent special session to help forge a compromise on workers compensation refrom legislation. That the session ended without a law won't hurt Montford, Clemons said.

A recent car accident that broke one of Montford's ribs has prevented him from meeting with the legislators, but he remains interested in the proposition that he acknowledges is "a tall order."

In addition to the moderate label he carries, Montford has the handicap of a home base in the sparsely populated South Plains.

Should he run, he envisions a campaign that is "low dollar, issue oriented and high visibility."

While other announced candidates have spoken of a primary run costing about $3 million, Montford would try to bring his in at "less than a million," he said.

"The strategy would be get in a runoff first...bring East Texas and West Texas together and do well in the Valley."

But Clemons thought the dollar figure low. "He's going to have to buy some name recognition," he said.

While Montford may be an "attractive candidate" to conservatives, former Gov. Mark While, with name recognition already established, Sims said, would be "more attractive."

White, who was defeated by Clements while seeking a second term in 1986, is thought to be on the verge of announcing another try for the office.

But East Texas lawmakers felt burned by the previous White administration, Stiles said. If elected again, "He's going to have to work with our representatives, and he's going to have to return our phone calls," said Stiles.

Clemons said he "probably could go with" White, but thought the "blot of loss on him already," may hurt the former governor.

Some conservatives blame the national party first when asked how they came to their predicament. National presidential campaigns were where the "too liberal" labels first began to stick.

Still, Montford acknowledged that statewide, "there are mainstream Democratic problems in getting the type of candidates that we need."

Democratic Party Chairman Bob Slagle, a Sherman attorney, saw the conservative's concern as "a positive thing."

But he said he was "not thrilled," with remarks that the party's two announced candidates, Treasurer Ann Richards and Attorney General Jim Mattox, are too far to the left to win in November.

"I could probably point you to liberals who would worry whether John Montford could win," he said.

Hobby wants tougher rules on lobbyists

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Bill Clements is considering whether to include lobby ethics reform on the agenda of the fall special legislative session, a spokeswoman said.

Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby said Thursday he wants to require lobbyists to submit more in-depth records, and he has asked the chairman of the Senate State Affairs Committee to make recommendations on such legislation.

"The statutes are vague, confusing and contradictory. People, including myself, have a difficult time (interpreting the law)," Hobby said.

Hobby said he has asked Sen. John Montford, a Lubbock Democrat who heads the State Affairs panel, to investigate the matter and report back with recommendations.

"I'd like to see some legislation requiring more specific reporting by lobbyists and what members (of the Legislature) they are entertaining," Hobby said.

Currently, lobbyists are required to register with the Secretary of State and submit monthly reports when the Legislature is in session. They are required to report how much they spend on entertainment and gifts, but not on whom they spend it.

Hobby said he would like Clements to put lobby reform on the agenda of the fall special session.

Secretary of State George Bayoud, whose office handles lobby reports and registration, said Clements wants to keep the focus of the special session on reforming the worker's compensation system. But he added, "There may be a strong possibility that he (Clements) would add it to the call."

Rossanna Salazar, Clements' press secretary, said, "It is under consideration, but no decision has been made."

In the growing controversy over lobbyist-supplied trips and entertainment for Texas lawmakers, Travis County District Attorney Ronald Earle met Wednesday with legislative leaders over possible revisions in state ethics laws.

Attending the meeting were Hobby; Bayoud; Rep. Stan Schlueter, D-Killeen; Mike Millsap, top aide to House Speaker Gib Lewis; and other legislative staff members.

"I think this (lobbying) situation at present is out of hand, and I told them that," Earle told the Austin American-Statesman.

Hobby said there was general agreement among those at the meeting that something needed to be done.

Lobbyists spent more than $1.86 million on entertainment and gifts to lawmakers during the five-month regular session.

In addition, Travis County prosecutors are investigating the delivery of $10,000 checks to several state senators on the Senate floor by East Texas businessman Lonnie "Bo" Pilgrim.

Reports have also uncovered a number of lobbyist-paid vacations taken by lawmakers and members of the governor's staff.

Teens help battle Corpus Christi's illiteracy rate

CORPUS CHRISTI, Texas (AP) — Maria Ybarra, 57, wants to become a United States citizen, but she can't because she doesn't know how to speak, read or write English.

She is being tutored in reading and writing by 14-year-old AnnaLiza Villarreal.

Mrs. Ybarra and Miss Villarreal are part of a new program designed to combat illiteracy in Nueces County and provide summer work for disadvantaged youth.

"Our goal with this program is to increase the reading level of the teen and the illiterate person," said Linda Lopez-George, executive director of the Corpus Christi Literacy Council.

Miss Villarreal is one teen-age tutor out of seven who were referred to the Corpus Christi Literacy Council by the Private Industry Council, a jobs training group, as a possible candidate to teach other people how to read and write, said Ms. Lopez-George.

The PIC sponsors the Summer Youth Employment and Training Program, which offers summer employment for economically disadvantaged youth as an encouragement for them to remain in school, continue their education or otherwise find employment.

The program is for people between the ages of 14 and 21, said Billie O'Dowdy, special projects manager for the jobs training program.

She said this is the first time the Literacy Council has asked for workers in the summer youth program, which this summer has found employment for 1,063 people.

Five of the teen-age tutors are from the summer program, said Ms. Lopez-George. These teen-agers are paid to tutor either an adult or someone their own age in reading and writing English.

The citizenship test involves several questions given orally in English, said Pam Hinojosa, an instructor at the Jobs for Progress, a job training agency that prepares people applying for citizenship.

"The questions can be anything from 'How many stripes are on the flag?' to 'What do the stars represent?' " Ms. Hinojosa said.

There are about 47,000 people in Corpus Christi who cannot read or write, said Ms. Lopez-George. Most people who decide to learn to read and write later in life do so to advance at their present job or because they are tired of saying 'I can't read' to their families, she said.

Chris Clay, 15, a Miller High School sophomore, became a tutor because he wanted a summer job and thought the experience would be fun.

"It's been easy," he said. "Some of them (adult students) know how to spell and read a little."

Ms. Lopez-George said the teen-age tutors must be between the ages of 13 and 19. They go through the same 10-hour training program as the adult tutors, she said.

AP Laserphoto

The training consists of lectures and tapes describing the adult learner and the teaching methods. The Laubach method, which uses pictures to represent each letter, allows tutoring for reading to begin at 0 level, said Ms. Lopez-George.

The method is self-paced and also incorporates phonics and practice in everyday literacy tasks, such as writing checks, filling out an application, reading signs and bus schedules.

Since the teens have not been exposed to working with other people, Ms. Lopez-George said, extra time is taken to teach the teens sensitivity.

Ray High School graduate, Amanda Zamora, 17, knows about sensitivity because she wants to study psychology at Del Mar College.

"Being a tutor is helping me learn how to work with people," she said. "I'm also learning how to be patient."

Several of Miss Villarreal's students can speak English. "They are easier to work with," she said.

The people who cannot speak English need more time to learn the pronunciations of letters and words. Miss Villarreal said Mrs. Ybarra has trouble sounding out the English alphabet because she mixes the sounds with the Spanish pronunciations of the alphabet.

Mrs. Ybarra said, with Miss Villarreal interpreting, that she was kicked out of the fourth grade at the age of 9 because she was taller and bigger than the other students.

She said she really liked school, but had no choice. At that time, her town had only one school up to the fifth grade, and the school administrators usually discriminated against the young girls.

Mrs. Ybarra married at 26 and moved to the United States with her husband 33 years ago. She said she never found the time or need to learn English because she was busy raising her children and would ask for help if she couldn't read something.

Only Spanish is spoken at her home, and her children are bilingual. Mrs. Ybarra has been working as a cleaning woman for the past four years to earn her own money for household expenses.

She manages to ride the bus despite her inability to read English. She asks the bus driver what streets the bus passes and then asks if she can be dropped off at a particular place.

She said she started working to get out of the house, and it doesn't bother her that she cannot read and write. Her main goal right now is to become a U.S. citizen.

Miss Villarreal said she will help Mrs. Ybarra prepare for the citizen test, but it will be a while before Mrs. Ybarra is ready to try again.

"Some students, like Maria, say they are sorry to be wasting my time," said Miss Villarreal. "I just tell them that I enjoy helping them."

As part of the requirements to be a teen-age tutor, said Ms. Lopez-George, the teen-agers must apply for a library card and choose a book to read for the summer.

"We didn't put a restriction on the kind of book they have to read," she said, "just as long as they keep reading."

The idea to use teen-agers as tutors came to the attention of the Literacy Council's 25-member board of directors in April, said Ms. Lopez-George.

She had already done some research on the possibility of using teen-agers by contacting the Literacy Council of Alaska and the Literacy Volunteers of America in Danbury, Conn.

The Literacy Council is hoping to use teen-age tutors on a year-round basis. Ms. Lopez-George said there are 300 active adult volunteer tutors.

With such a high number of applicants wanting to be assigned a tutor, she said, it's hard finding a person willing to put in the hours and days it takes to teach someone how to read or write.

"Some tutors move or develop scheduling conflicts," she said. "Others will help one student reach the fifth reading level and move on."

Authorities may move sister of AIDS victim to foster home

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — State officials say they are considering taking custody of a 6-year-old boy whose 9-year-old sister contracted AIDS as a result of abuse by her parents.

Officials say the girl, who is dying of AIDS, had contracted the deadly virus by being injected with drugs as a form of punishment. Her mother, an intravenous drug user, has died of the disease and her father is dying of the disease.

A prosecutor said Thursday the child may be moved to a foster home because officials are concerned that the brother may be carrying the virus.

"The department (Texas Department of Human Services) is moving to see if the state has grounds to place in foster care the 9-year-old girl's little brother," Assistant District Attorney Richard Garcia said. "Tests have been ordered to see if the 6-year-old also is carrying the AIDS virus, but tests so far indicate he is not."

District Judge Tom Rickhoff earlier this week ordered the dying girl placed in foster care following a closed hearing. Officials say the girl, who was also allegedly sexually abused, has less than a year to live.

The judge also ordered the investigation into the well-being of the younger brother and has transferred the case to state District Judge John Specia. The Texas Department of Human Services will report to Specia at a later date on the boy's condition, officials said.

Social workers said the girl has been taken to a foster home.

PARTY

Even with the problems, Stiles, Clemons and others say that for them, changing parties is out of the question.

Sims spoke philosophically of the "cyclical" nature of politics and added that GOP victories on the national level are nothing new. Republicans carried the state as far back as the Eisenhower-Stevenson races of the 1950s.

But what is new are the inroads Republicans are making at local levels and the number of voters who are turning out for Republican primary elections.

More than a million voters cast GOP ballots in 1988 Super Tuesday voting, nearly twice the number that participated in the 1986 primary, state GOP Chairman Fred Meyer of Dallas said. In 1978, the party counted 158,000 primary ballots.

But those votes didn't all come from Democratic ranks. The biggest boosts are coming from first-time voters. GOP figures indicate the party holds a 2-1 advantage within the 18-36 age group.

While Democrats may be able to make a comeback within that group as the debate on abortion heats up, left-leaning party members would do well to allow the coalition to steer toward the center, Clemons said.

"If they're true and loyal Democrats, they should be interested in winning and select mainstream candidates," he said.

Officials may scrap 'friendship' plates

DALLAS (AP) — There's really no need to be unfriendly about it anymore. The director of the Division of Motor Vehicles says the motto "The Friendship State" will probably never appear on Texas license plates.

"I'm going to recommend that we have no slogan so we can kill the controversy," Dian Neill told The Dallas Morning News.

State highway commissioners indicated they would go along with her recommendation to drop the motto and a powder blue outline proposed for new plates.

The highway department has received more than 1,000 telephone calls and several thousand letters opposing the slogan after commissioners gave approval to the proposal last month.

"Friendship" was the state motto adopted by the Texas Legislature in 1930, and people have criticized that label as "wimpy." The state's nickname is the "Lone Star State."

The State Department of Highways and Public Transportation Commission will reconsider the tag motto at its Aug. 29 meeting.

"I think all of the slogans will be removed," said Commissioner Ray Stoker of Odessa.

Stoker, however, hasn't ruled out the possibility of making a slogan optional — at an extra cost of $30 — for drivers who want one.

Most of the money generated through the additional fee would be used to renovate the state Capitol in Austin, Stoker said.

Although more residents favor the "Lone Star State" as a license plate motto, objections have surfaced.

Leland search ended in areas where distress signals detected

ADDIS ABABA, Ethiopia (AP) — Rescue workers today found no trace of U.S. Rep. Mickey Leland's plane in areas where two distress signals were detected, and they resumed looking along its intended flight path, the U.S. Embassy said.

The Houston Democrat and 15 other people were aboard the twin-engine Twin Otter when it disappeared Monday on a flight from Addis Ababa to the Fugnido refugee camp, 480 miles to the southwest near the Sudanese border.

Leland, chairman of the House Select Committee on Hunger, was one of nine Americans aboard the flight.

James Haley, an embassy spokesman, said rescue workers on foot and in planes scoured rugged highlands north and southeast of Ethiopia's capital where the distress signals were detected by satellites Thursday and early today.

Two giant C-130 Hercules cargo planes left the capital shortly before 7 a.m. to check the areas, but by midday they were diverted to a region several hundred miles southwest of Addis Ababa. That put the main area of the search back along the intended flight path of the plane.

"They have pretty well exhausted those areas, and they're going back and concentrating the search to the southwest of" the capital, Haley said.

Haley said U.S. authorities increased their count of those traveling with Leland from 13 to 15. No reason was immediately given.

In Washington, officials with the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration said a satellite was unable to detect a third signal when it flew over the area later this morning.

By midmorning bad weather had forced suspension of the aerial search in an area near Goba, 85 miles southeast of the capital, where the first signal was detected. Heavy clouds, rain and low visibility have prevented evening aerial searches since the rescue mission began four days ago.

Both signals detected by the satellite were significantly off the plane's intended flight plan, and officials have said they may have come from other sources. However, Haley said bad weather may have forced Leland's pilot to seek a different route to the refugee camp.

The latest signal, detected about 1 a.m. (6 p.m. EDT), was read as coming from about 100 miles northwest of Addis Ababa, directly opposite the direction Leland's party was headed when its plane disappeared in bad weather.

Thursday's signal was about 90 degrees off the line of the flight plan.

The Canadian-built plane, which seats up to 20 passengers, was owned by Ethiopia's government relief agency. It was equipped with an emergency locator transmitter, a device usually mounted in the tail of an aircraft and activated either automatically by impact or manually by the pilot.

Depending on its type, an emergency locator transmits either an intermittent or steady signal on a fixed frequency, allowing searchers to pinpoint the location of a downed aircraft.

For the last three days, the search has centered on inaccessible regions in southwestern Ethiopia where peasants reportedly heard planes circling remote fields.

President's son watches as star pitcher misses historic no-hitter

ARLINGTON (AP) — Texas Rangers majority owner George W. Bush, who prefers the American League pennant race to the Texas gubernatorial race, was ecstatic as he watched Nolan Ryan come to within two outs of being the first pitcher in the history of Major League baseball to throw six no-hitters.

The president's son was seated in his front-row grandstand seat only a few feet from the Rangers dugout Thursday night when Ryan took a no-hitter into the ninth inning only to have it broken up by a single by Dave Bergman of the Detroit Tigers.

Rangers manager Bobby Valentine took Ryan out moments later after he gave up a double to Matt Nokes. The crowd of 35,226 gave Ryan a loud standing ovation and followed it with chants of "Nolan, Nolan" until the 42-year-old pitcher came out of the dugout to acknowledge the cheering crowd.

The Rangers won the game, 4-1.

Bush had been rumored as possible Republican gubernatorial candidate for the race to replace Gov. Bill Clements, who has said he will not seek another term.

But Bush announced earlier this month that his interest in baseball would keep him away from the political arena and in the ballpark instead.

"I have had time to think and sort things out, and at this time, I am not a candidate for governor in 1990," Bush said on Aug. 1. "For now I want to focus my obligations to the Texas Ranges baseball team and more importantly on my responsibility as a father and as a provider."

Ryan's close call left Bush excited and he heaped praise on the veteran pitcher who had been wooed away from the Houston Astros during the tenure of former owner Eddie Chiles, who sold the team to a group headed by Bush.

"This is the fourth time this year he's almost done it (thrown a no-hitter)," Bush said. "To have a Texas hero like Nolan Ryan bring a no-hitter into the 9th inning before a full house, this is the best that there is."

Asked how he felt to have someone older do something like this, Bush said, "Actually he's one year younger, but my arm aches for him."

"We've probably still got 40,000 after the game shouting 'Nolan, Nolan.'" Bush said.

Asked if he believes Ryan could still get the historic sixth no-hitter this season, Bush said, "That's a possibility."

"Getting 5,000 career strikeouts is more likely," Bush said. "Hopefully, he'll stay around for his 300th win next year. He's the epitome of baseball. Whatever he wants to do is fine with us — in any capacity."

Former Mexico president's relative detained by INS in San Antonio

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — The brother-in-law of former Mexico President Luis Echeverria was whisked away to spend another night in jail as federal authorities held him without bond pending an immigration hearing.

Ruben Zuno-Arce, 59, of Mascota, in the Mexican state of Jalisco, was being held without bond late Thursday by U.S. Immigration and Naturalization officials until exclusion proceedings against him took place, said Gary M. Renick, INS assistant district director for investigations.

The immigration service initiated the proceedings after a background check indicated possible ties to narcotics trafficking and prompted questions about whether he should be allowed to remain in the United States, authorities said.

No charges had been filed against Zuno, whose wife is the sister of the former president. Zuno was taken Thursday night to the Comal County Jail in New Braunfels because jail space was available there, INS officials said.

Zuno traveled by plane from Mexico to the San Antonio International Airport on Wednesday and applied for admission to this country, authorities said. He presented a passport and border crossing card and said he was here on business and to visit friends, according to INS officials.

People bearing border crossing cards are permitted to stay in the United States up to 72 hours, usually to visit friends or shop.

Immigration authorities placed Zuno in "deferred inspection status" and allowed him to leave the airport, Renick said.

A computer check indicated Zuno might be linked to narcotics trafficking investigations, Renick said. He declined to provide further details.

INS detention officers arrested Zuno about 8:45 p.m. Wednesday outside an Albertson's grocery store in San Antonio and placed him in exclusion proceedings, according to officials.

Humberto Hernandez Haddad, Mexican consul general in San Antonio, said his office was told some type of criminal legal action would be taken. Zuno has retained the services of local immigration attorney Pete Magaro.

Hernandez said Zuno travels to San Antonio frequently on business to sell fruit.

There's nothing wrong with being an aggressive bidder. However, you and your partner had better possess sound play technique if you still want to be solvent by year's end.

North's sequence showed a limit raise in spades (10–12 points) with only three trumps. However, because of the square hand, no intermediate cards and lack of a spade honor, we feel a raise to two spades would have been more than adequate. That would probably have been the final contract.

West led the queen of hearts and declarer, Dora Brechner of New York and Tel Aviv, was not thrilled with her contract. However, there were some chances. The queen of hearts was allowed to win the first trick, and the heart continuation was ruffed. Declarer ducked a club and West shifted to a diamond.

Declarer rose with dummy's ace and finessed the queen of trumps, breathing a sigh of relief when that held. After cashing the ace of trumps, she crossed to the king of clubs and ruffed another heart. To avoid having a winner ruffed should a defender be able to discard a diamond, declarer cashed the king of diamonds, then the ace of clubs. When West showed out but could not ruff, all was well. Declarer's last club was ruffed in dummy and the king of hearts was led from the table. Whether or not East was able to ruff this trick, declarer's last trump was destined to become the fulfilling trick. As the cards lay, East had to follow and declarer was able to score her trump by ruffing. On the last trick, the defenders had a field day—West's winning diamond was topped by East's master trump!

Duchess of York weaves family into upcoming children's book

NEW YORK (AP) — The Duchess of York put some of herself and her family into her first book, a children's tale called "Budgie the Little Helicopter."

The book, to be published by Simon & Schuster in September, tells the story of a schoolgirl who is kidnapped and held for ransom.

Duchess of York

"There is a little of the Duchess in all the characters — particularly in Budgie, who is as adventurous as she is," said her editor, Denise Johnstone-Burt, childrens' book editorial director at the publishing house.

The former Sarah Ferguson, who holds a private pilot's license and a helicopter license, also created a character called Lionel the Lynx, a larger, more experienced helicopter than Budgie. Her husband, Prince Andrew, a pilot in the Royal Navy, frequently flies Lynx helicopters.

Then there's the rust-colored cat called Fergus. And the duchess and Prince Andrew also are seen greeting Budgie when he returns from an adventure.

ORLANDO, Fla. (AP) — Actor John Newton, who portrayed television's Superboy but had real-life problems with traffic cops, is hanging up his cape.

The Superboy syndicated television series begins its second year of production Monday with a new actor who will replace Newton, officials said.

Newton played a college student who becomes the boy of steel to assist the downtrodden, like his father, Superman. Executive Producer Ilya Salkind on Thursday introduced Gerard Christopher as the new Superboy.

Newton had contractual and professional differences with Salkind and Viacom Enterprises, the distributors of the TV series, officials said.

Newton was not entirely truthful with the sheriff and a judge in Orlando when he convinced them to tear up a traffic ticket earlier this year. He told them he had no other traffic violations and that his Superboy image would be hurt if a careless-driving citation was allowed to stand.

Later, it turned out that Newton had at least four other traffic tickets and his driver's license had been suspended twice since 1982.

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — Imprisoned soul singer James Brown lost the 20 days off he had earned for good behavior after officials found $40,600 in cash and checks in his jail cell, authorities said.

A state Department of Corrections committee on Thursday ordered Brown to turn the $600 in cash over to the state. The 20 days off of his six-year sentence that he had earned for good behavior also was reinstated.

Brown

Inmates are allowed no more than $50 in prison.

The Internal Revenue Service last month confiscated $40,000 in checks found in Brown's cell. The IRS claims he owes about $11 million in back taxes.

Brown is serving a six-year sentence for aggravated assault and failing to stop for police, convictions that stemmed from a car chase in September. Officials are still investigating how the singer obtained the money.

Brown was tranferred from the minimum-security State Park Correctional Institution to Stevenson on July 19 after the money was found. He was returned to the State Park facility Thursday afternoon, officials said. Both prisons are in Columbia.

The "Godfather of Soul" has been imprisoned since December.

DETROIT (AP) — Aretha Franklin's agent says Detroit public school officials jumped the gun when they said the Queen of Soul planned a benefit concert to raise money for music programs.

Franklin wants to help restore music for the schools but hasn't promised the concert, said the Rev. Cecil Franklin, the singer's brother and agent.

Franklin

Superintendent John Porter said Tuesday that Franklin offered to give the concert to help raise $1.25 million. But Cecil Franklin said Wednesday his sister only said she would make a donation or be part of a concert involving other musicians.

"There are several other entertainment groups involved," he said. "They approached her and asked if she would be willing to assist them and she said yes."

Music programs were eliminated from middle and elementary schools in an effort to cut $50 million to balance the 1989-90 school budget. Passage of a tax increase that goes before voters Sept. 18 would restore the programs, Porter said.

CENTRAL CITY, Ky. (AP) — The Everly Brothers are coming home for a benefit concert to help this western Kentucky coal town revive its foundering economy.

Organizers hope 20,000 fans will travel to Central City this weekend to hear Phil and Don Everly sing favorites such as "Bye Bye Love," and "Wake Up Little Susie."

It's the second annual concert featuring the Everlys, who spent their childhood summers in the area.

Proceeds from Saturday's concert will go to the Everly Brothers Foundation to provide college scholarships and improvement money for Central City, whose economy has been crippled by the shutdown of coal mines during the last decade.

The Everly Brothers recorded their first record in 1955. Two years later, they recorded their smash hit, "Bye Bye Love."

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — Gov. George Deukmejian will join celebrities such as Elizabeth Taylor, Walter Cronkite and Joan Rivers when they help publisher Malcolm Forbes celebrate his 70th birthday in a castle in Tangiers.

Deukmejian, who'd never had a passport until his second term as governor, also will attend to state business in New York before and after the Tangiers bash.

Spokesman Kevin Brett said Thursday the state is paying for the New York trip, but Forbes is paying for the trip to Tangiers, where he has a castle.

Among the 800 other guests for the party on the weekend of Aug. 18 will be Henry Kissinger, Barbara Walters, Oscar de la Renta and Lee Iococca.

Deukmejian was the focus of a Forbes Magazine cover story in 1984 titled, "How to Tame a Beastly Budget."

FAMILY MATTERS

Parents agonize over their son's alcoholism

By JIM MAY, PhD

May

DEAR FAMILY: You have answered a lot of letters about alcohol and drug addiction, but none of them are my situation. My 16-year-old son is an alcoholic. You don't know how hard it is for me to say that, much less write it. My son has told us in those "family week" treatment sessions that he had been drinking since he was 13 and we didn't even know it.

We didn't become really aware that there was a problem until last year when he started sneaking out at night. Until then, we really didn't know that anything was going on. His grades weren't as good as they used to be but we thought that was just normal teenage rebellion. We have talked and talked to each other about this and neither of us can remember anything that we feel was out of the ordinary until the sneaking out started.

When he started sneaking out, we started trying to force him to stay in. We tried everything that we knew how to do. We grounded him, we locked his window, we took away his telephone and television, we even threatened to send him to live with his grandmother.

He stopped sneaking out, but as soon as he was ungrounded he started getting into other kinds of trouble. He and some friends were charged with a M.I.P. (Minor in Possession). He said that it was "only" alcohol and unfortunately we were relieved that at least he wasn't on drugs. We came to learn how wrong we were. Then he started skipping school.

As things went on, he started showing real signs that he was in trouble. He began to come in drunk. After the third time, we took him to (treatment center) and checked him in. We did everything that we could to support him. We went to every meeting. We joined Al-Anon. When he got out we put him in Al-Ateen. We made him go to meetings.

He came home drunk two months after he got out of treatment. He swore he would never do it again. But he did a week later. We put him in a longer term treatment facility and he's still there.

Our hearts are broken. We have experienced so much pain, guilt and frustration over all of this. We constantly ask ourselves what have we done wrong? What should we have done differently? Al-Anon is helping us address those questions, but we still feel so guilty. (Son's name) is our youngest. Our other two children are both in college and doing fine. They tell us that it's him, not us. I just hope and pray that they are right.

I am sorry that this letter is so long, I didn't mean for it to be. What else can we do to help our son? — HEARTBROKEN

DEAR HEARTBROKEN: Start by helping yourselves. You have done all that you could do. The guilt you are experiencing is natural and normal; experience it but don't let it paralyze you.

The "why" question is difficult to address without professional or trained assistance. I encourage you and your husband to focus on the future through a 12-step program.

Your involvement with Al-Anon is a great start. Both of you should start right away working on a 12-step program. Step One, admitting that we are powerless over someone else's addiction, is a crucial step. Ego wants us to believe we can do something about it if we would only try a little harder to help. We must admit that we don't have that power; God does.

It's not as easy to do as it sounds, but in the surrendering of control, we win. Step Two tells us that a Higher Power outside of ourselves can restore us to sanity. Your son has created one reality for you; let God create another, a healthy reality for you.

We make the decision to turn our lives over to the care of God in Step Three. We must fight the urge to go off by ourselves to hide our shame.

Thank you for sharing your experiences with others. For interested parents, there is an Al-Anon Parent's Group and a Palmer Drup Abuse Progam Parent's Group that can help. Call Al-Anon at 682-8162 or PDAP at 685-3645.

Superwomen are being trashed

By PATRICIA DIBSIE
Copley News Service

CNS Graphic

SAN DIEGO — Joanne Kezas is host of a weekly television show for the '80s woman that's not about how to be the perfect mate, have a hard body, raise perfect children and climb the corporate ladder all at the same time.

In fact, this local cable show, "Women at Work," is exactly the opposite.

"There's no law that says a woman can't have it all, but there's no law that says a woman has to want it all," said Kezas, program director for mental health services at Alvarado Parkway Institute.

A recent program "The End of Superwoman: The Staying-Home Trend," examined why some women are opting to stay home and raise children instead of holding full-time jobs, taking tennis lessons and Jazzercise classes, and raising families.

"Exhaustion will be the death of the 'Superwoman' image women are trying so hard to emulate," Kezas said. "Women are beginning to realize that we tried to be superwomen for external rewards, we wanted other people patting us on the head, validating us as human beings. We didn't take the time to ask ourselves what we wanted to look like, what kind of personal relationship would give us pleasure and what kind of job would give us passion.

"That's what this show is asking women to think about."

It's not that the woman of the '80s is willing to settle for less, according to Kezas. If anything, today's woman wants more — but more on her terms and not on society's terms.

"All of that need to have a hard body, status job, wonderful relationship and perfect children isn't making today's woman happy, just frustrated," Kezas said. "We think if we get this and this and this, then we'll be fulfilled and happy. What women really need is unconditional love for themselves."

That's something Kezas said she had to learn through years of trial and error. Now 50, Kezas admits she is a self-taught graduate of the Betty Friedan "Feminine Mystique" cult of the '60s. That was the landmark book that launched thousands of would-be modern women into the age of independence. Pre-Friedan, Kezas had gone to college to get a husband and not an education.

"I received a nursing degree but got married right away and never worked," she said. "I only went to college to have something to back me up in case my husband died. Divorce never entered my mind. I never really considered that I'd have to work someday."

But in 1966, a friend gave Kezas a copy of Friedan's book. It "changed my life. I woke up and thought, 'There's more I want.' I started back to school to get more education and eventually ended up in the work force, divorced and on my own, raising three children." Kezas earned a bachelor's degree in nursing.

Kezas said the divorce was inevitable.

SUPERWOMEN

"There was so much about me I had hidden from him and from me, I was a whole different person by the time we decided mutually to end the marriage. I needed to experience being on my own; I didn't think I could grow the way I needed to grow and stay married. Not all women get divorced when they make major changes, but for me it was right."

They were all changes that turned out to be healthy decisions for her.

The change in the '80s woman's lifestyle that Kezas sees is that women get to set their own priorities. Kezas thinks women are beginning to take a realistic look at their lives and are ready to make some healthy decisions about setting priorities. Her TV show is a forum offering various points of view by different guests each week.

Femininity in the work place was a recent topic of discussion.

"Women climbing the corporate ladder gave up some of their femininity and became somewhat masculinized," Kezas said. "Everything we viewed as powerful that would eventually allow us to excel, we copied.

"Unfortunately, we picked up a lot of bad habits from men. We were like babies learning to walk. When trying to be assertive, many women overshot the mark and became too aggressive — in effect, sabotaging themselves.

"Women are prone to sabotaging their successes, thinking they won't be pleasing to others if they're too successful or earn too much money."

Kezas talks about fashion on her show.

"The whole femininity issue deals with relearning how to dress as women — no more suits and ties. We're beginning from the outside, working inside to become more comfortable with our femininity."

Kezas said some women are telling her they long to return to an era when they didn't have any power. They want to be taken care of.

"But when a woman is offered the opportunity to be taken care of, on the condition that she give up this recently acquired power in the workplace, the answer is almost always no," she said. She applauds women for this.

Kezas is rewriting her part in life and tailoring it to her individual wants and needs. There are a lot of '80s women rewriting their life scripts, she said.

"And the part of 'Superwoman' is being written out. No more perfect wife, adoring mother, busy executive and body beautiful all roled into one."

Experts provide answers to common questions about sunscreen

Associated Press

This season questions about sunscreens and sun care are a big concern for those who enjoy the great outdoors.

For up-to-date answers, Ladies' Home Journal asked the experts to reveal the real sunscreen story.

Most people want to know what Sun Protection Factor (SPF) is safe. According to Frank Akin, senior director of Coppertone Clinical Research, an SPF of 15 is sufficient for most people as long as it is applied thoroughly. Those with sensitive skin or fair skin that always burns and people who live or vacation in tropical climates need an SPF higher than 15.

The experts offer pointers for risk-free sun fun:

■ Smooth sunscreen on clean, dry skin before venturing outside. Apply a generous, even coat. Don't forget back of neck and legs, shoulders, hands and feet.

■ If face, chest or back are acne-prone, stick with an oil-free, noncomedogenic lotion that won't clog pores.

■ For dry complexions, a sunscreen boosted with moisturizers is best.

■ Retin-A users have to be ultracareful and wear a high SPF sunscreen at all times, even under makeup.

Companies provide employee-assistance substance abuse programs

New York Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — The comprehensive push for a drug-free America now includes more than a few nudges from corporate America.

Many companies have discovered that providing employee-assistance programs that include drug- and alcohol-abuse treatments for workers in need can save the company dollars and employees their careers.

Apparently, when it comes to substance abuse in the workplace, altruism and the bottom line can co-exist peacefully.

A survey conducted by the Washington Business Group on Health, an education and research organization for major corporations, has revealed that approximately 80 percent of Fortune 500 companies have some policy to help employees who have substance-abuse problems.

Many of those companies have found it is more cost-effective to permit employees to combat their chemical dependency, regain their health and return to work than it is for them to fire substance abusers and go through the sometimes costly process of hiring and training new employees.

"Employees who become dysfunctional on the job because of drugs or alcohol function at 50 percent of their capacity," said Gudrun Tune, an employee-assistance program administrator for GTE Corp.

"If you get help for someone so they are productive again and functioning at 100 percent, you save 50 percent across the board in salary.

"That turns out to be millions and millions of dollars for a company, in addition to helping save lives and improving the quality of employees' lives on and off the job."

Lockheed Aeronautical Systems has saved millions of dollars by retaining substance-abusing workers and allowing them to enroll in a variety of treatment programs since initiating its employee-assistance program eight years ago.

Jack Rose, administrator of Lockheed's program, said, based on a study group of 43 employees who participated in rehabilitation in 1984, the company saved $1.6 million through, among other things, improved worker performance.

"All the studies have shown significant savings to the company," he said.

Employee-assistance programs (EAPs) vary in different companies. GTE's substance-abuse portion of its program stipulates that employees discuss their problems with an EAP counselor, who then consults a physician and determines with the individual which treatment would be most effective.

Depending on the severity of the problem, the employee would enlist in an outpatient or inpatient program at a hospital. He would then be screened periodically over a specified time period.

"If an individual needs to take time off, we would work with the employee's supervisor and inform him that the employee is taking sick time off," Tune said. "Our services are confidential."

In addition, Tune said that if an employee enrolls in an EAP-approved program, the treatment is free of charge to that employee. Other companies have insurance plans that cover part or all of the expense.

Even though many industry experts believe it makes economic sense for companies to allow employees time to correct their problems and return to work, Dr. Gerald Rozansky, medical director of the Lifestarts program at Centinela Hospital, said some company managers still look down at employees who have difficulty with substance abuse and are hesitant to work with them.

"Employers may react like, 'I don't want one of those around here,'" Rozansky said. "But a person who cleans up his problem is a valued employee."

Valued, of course, if he cleans up his abuse and stays clean. Most employers aren't anxious to give employees a blank check or blank time schedule.

Rozansky estimates that 65 percent of adults who participate in the Lifestarts program "who continue to get the right kind of support" kick their drug and alcohol problems completely.

Rose said Lockheed employees who are referred to various programs through the company's EAP have a 70 to 75 percent rate of recovery.

According to Rod Libbey, vice president and manager of the drug- and alcohol-abuse programs at Bank of America, one of the reasons for the company's "approximately 75 percent success rate" with substance-abusing employees is the relatively stable work environment.

DEAR ABBY

Mosquito bite cannot spread AIDS

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I have a question to ask and don't know who to ask. If you don't know the answer, you can at least find someone who does. Please don't dismiss this as a dumb question:

We are told that AIDS is contracted through body fluids or through needles passed around by drug users. We live in an area where there are lots of mosquitoes. Is it possible for a mosquito to bite a person with AIDS, then infect another person by biting them? In other words, can mosquitoes spread AIDS? — DUMB QUESTION FROM ARKANSAS

DEAR QUESTION: There is no such thing as a "dumb question." There are, however, stupid (not "dumb," please — dumb means mute) people who remain uninformed because they are too embarrassed to ask. The answer to your question is no, AIDS cannot be spread by mosquitoes.

DEAR ABBY: For shame! (And fie on you!) You told "Happily Married" (who wrote to pick a bone with you about not having disclosed a previous divorce): "There is nothing wrong with revealing the truth. Hiding it is deceitful, and, therefore, shameful."

Abby, what's happened to you? In the past, you have said that a person's past is not material for the "confession box" between partners. Now you are saying that no matter what the consequences, the truth should be revealed.

You goofed, but I love you anyway. — CAROL B. IN BELLEVUE, WASH.

DEAR CAROL: Whoa — back up. Please don't put words in my typewriter. Never did I say no matter what the consequences, the truth should be revealed.

In the case of "Happily Married," her father had forbidden her to even date a man in whose family there had been a divorce, so when she met the man she wanted to marry, she asked him not to disclose the fact that his favorite aunt had been divorced!

I was trying to make the following point: There was nothing wrong with revealing THAT PARTICULAR TRUTH. Divorce is not necessarily a dark and dirty secret. It's nothing to be ashamed of. Hiding it, in my opinion, was deceitful — and, therefore, shameful.

DEAR ABBY: I would like to address my comments to the couple who signed themselves "Married Without Children."

You wrote: "We are both career-minded, have never felt the need to have a child, and we like our life the way it is."

That's fine. But did you ever think what one of you will do after the death of your mate? You are alone, with no children to care for you, help you or turn to in time of need.

Children are a treasure to us who have them. Think about it! — A FRIENDLY READER

DEAR FRIENDLY READER: I don't want to appear "unfriendly" or unduly critical, but having children because you want to be "cared for," or to be assured of someone to "turn to in time of need" is not, in my opinion, the reason to have children.

I would hope that couples have children because they WANT them, with no thought of "self."

DEAR ABBY: What would you think of a grown man who was an ardent football fan of a certain college — so much, in fact, that he brought a portable TV into the back of the church during his cousin's wedding ceremony and watched the game? — UPSET IN PITTSBURGH

DEAR UPSET: The man was rude. Somebody should have kicked him in the end zone.

Dravecky beats Reds despite 'Lombard St.' scar

Dave Dravecky...return gives Giants big lift.

By RAY RATTO
San Francisco Chronicle

SAN FRANCISCO — All talk of miracles aside, Dave Dravecky really did pitch well.

Never mind the cancer and the rehabilitation and the therapy and the pink scar that looks like Lombard Street at sunset and the eight standing ovations and all the things that made Thursday's 4-3 Giants victory over Cincinnati a singular moment in this season. Even if Dravecky was working on four days' rest rather than 439, he gave the Giants a lift on performance alone.

The man threw eight innings. He gave up four hits. He walked only one batter and went to three-ball counts on only four. He threw 92 pitches over eight innings, 58 (63 percent) for strikes. If it hadn't been for a hanging, back-door slider to Luis Quinones in the eighth inning, he'd have thrown a complete-game shutout and made a shambles of reality as it is commonly understood.

And to top it off, the Houston Astros got slapped around in San Diego to make the Giants' lead in the N.L. West a better-rounded three games.

Of course, there was more than enough time for euphoria. The Giants understood they were seeing something more than a standard August baseball game against a team miles off the pace.

"I've seen a lot of things in baseball," manager Roger Craig said. "I've been in five World Series. I saw Don Larsen pitch a perfect game. But I don't think there was ever as much excitement as I felt today. I was the biggest fan in the stadium, and I'm supposed to be standing back managing the game."

"I was working on Dave Dravecky's adrenalin," said Steve Bedrosian, who pitched an old-time blow-'em-away Bedrosian ninth inning to obtain his 15th save. "It was amazing. All the things he's been through these last 10 months ... I'm proud of him, and I'm proud to have been a witness to it."

"It took me about three innings to get into the game itself," first baseman Will Clark said. "The first two innings, the crowd was really into the game and they stayed in it. I got into it eventually, but it took me awhile. I hadn't seen this kind of emotion at this place since the playoffs in 1987. The emotion was definitely there."

"I was lucky," said third baseman Matt Williams, who drove in three of the Giants' four runs, including a two-run fourth-inning homer that gave the Giants the run they needed to guarantee Dravecky's win. "The first two balls were hit right at me, so it was easier for me to get into the game right away. The whole game was amazing. It felt like it lasted three minutes."

Actually, it lasted two hours and nine minutes, minus time deducted for two ninth-inning curtain calls. And Dravecky made it look too clean. You're up, you swing, you're out, you sit. Over and over again.

He retired 21 of the first 23 men he faced, allowing only a double down the left field line by former teammate Joel Youngblood in the second and a two-out walk to Joe Oliver in the fifth. By the end of the seventh, Dravecky's pregame talk of a miracle sounded more and more like you-ain't-seen-nothing-yet.

"I didn't feel nervous at all," Dravecky said, maybe fibbing just the tiniest bit. "Once I threw that first pitch in the bullpen, I felt real good, very relaxed, and very surprised as well."

And the transition from minor-league hitters in Stockton, Reno and Tucson to your garden-variety Eric Davis looked effortless.

"That was the struggle I went through initially," Dravecky said. "But when I got back to the big leagues, that alone put everything into perspective. There was no real reason to fear anything."

In the meantime, the Giants were working over rookie righthander Scott Scudder for all four of their runs. Scudder allowed only four hits, but all for extra bases and dotted by seven walks, three of them intentional.

Pat Sheridan sliced a tripled down the left field line in the second and scored on Terry Kennedy's slow roller to second for one. Clark doubled, Mitchell was walked and Williams doubled off the diving Davis' glove in dead-center for two, and Mitchell walked and Williams hit his sixth homer of the year in the fifth for four.

But no good surgeon's-table-to-glory story works without a little glitch, which occurred in the eighth. Benzinger's broken-bat single and a double down the left field line by rookie Scotti Madison put runners at second and third for Quinones, who spun on a 2-1 slider that Dravecky called "a back-door slider that turned out to be a home-run slider." It went over the fence in left to make it 4-3.

Fast-Pitch tourney begins at Hogan

From Staff Reports

The Stanley's Exxon softball team of Midland won its first-round game to highlight opening-night action in the 1989 Amateur Softball Association 16 and under girls fast-pitch national softball tournament Thursday at the Bill Williams Softball Complex.

Stanley's defeated Puerto Rico 5-4 late Thursday to advance to a winner's bracket game against the Boulder Valley (Colo.) Comets that was scheduled this morning.

Other Permian Basin teams suffered first-round losses, however. The Blue Diamonds of Midland lost 5-2 to the Glendale (Ariz.) Caseyettes, while the Odessa Desert Stars dropped a 9-8 decision to the Taunton (Mass.) Blue Devils.

The Blue Diamonds will face the Kansas City (Mo.) Elite-Orange County (Calif.) Athletics loser in losers bracket action at 5 p.m. today, while the Desert Stars will try to stave off elimination against (Dallas) Texas Rose in a 2 p.m. start.

In other first-round action, the Fountain Valley (Calif.) Case XX Batbusters began defense of their 1988 crown with a 10-0 shutout of the Northhampton (Pa.) Thunder.

Also, Levittown (Pa.) beat Richland Hills 7-5; Gwinnett (Ga.) beat North Platte (Neb.) 4-2; Manchester (Mo.) beat Eugene (Ore.) 3-0; Sacramento (Calif.) beat Texas Rose 7-0; San Diego (Calif.) beat Chalfont (Pa.) 5-2; Moline (Ill.) beat Binghamton (N.Y.) 4-1; San Jose (Calif.) beat Mankato, Minn 10-1; the Comets beat the (Grand Prairie) Texas Angels 3-2; and the 1988 runnersup Gordon's Panthers beat the Pasadena Illusions 2-1.

Play continues through Sunday.

Stanley's-Puerto Rico

Stanley's scored three runs in the first inning, before plating the winning run in the fifth inning.

Niki Heath had two hits for Stanley's, while Kristy Rains, Gina Natividad, Heather Copeland, Karen O'Neal and Tonya Penny had one hit each.

Penny threw a six-hitter for Stanley's.

Blue Diamonds-Caseyettes

The Arizona team got all the runs they needed in a three-run first, but the Diamonds made a run at the win in the seventh inning on walks to Tecka Dent, Shelly Marshall and Tracy Pierce, and a two-run single by Tara Avilar.

Valdez tames M-Angels, 7-2

By BILL GRIMES
Sports Writer

Chris Cron hit another home run and Frank DiMichele pitched well enough to win for the Midland Angels, but Rafael Valdez and the Wichita Wranglers pushed the Haloes back into a tie for second place in the Texas League West with a 7-2 win Thursday night at Angels Stadium.

Fortunately for both Midland and Wichita, the last-place San Antonio Missions knocked off El Paso 7-2 to keep the Diablos' lead at one game over the Angels and Wranglers — who square off again in the third of a five-game series at 7 p.m. tonight.

Not only is Valdez new to Class AA baseball, but the 21-year-old Dominican is new to pitching. Nevertheless, Wrangler skipper Pat Kelly compares the righthander to former Wrangler Andy Benes, now with the parent San Diego Padres.

"He's got such a super arm," Kelly said.

THE ANGELS weren't in a position to argue Thursday. Valdez allowed a hit an inning in his seven-inning stint, but the hosts could manage only single runs in the third and sixth innings.

"My slider broke well and my fastball was faster than when we were at Wichita," Valdez said. "I was more sharp tonight than since I was called up."

Valdez has posted a 1.63 earned run average in his three Class AA starts, after finishing 10-5 at Class A Riverside. He threw a perfect game and a one-hitter in his last two starts for Riverside.

And to think he didn't originally want to make the switch from shortstop.

"But they said I'd have a better chance to make the majors as a pitcher," Valdez said. "They said I might be a long time in Double A as a shortstop."

THE SAN Diego organization boasts 21-year-old Carlos Baerga at shortstop. Baerga, now at Class AAA Las Vegas after spending a year in Wichita, is expected to ultimately replace the veteran Garry Templeton with the big club.

So it was off to the mound for Valdez, not soon enough for some of the brass.

Even rivals cheer Arnie's 2-back 68

By GORDON S. WHITE Jr.
N.Y. Times News Service

HAWTHORN WOODS, Ill. — Ben Crenshaw walked out of the scorer's tent after signing his card for a round of 4-under-par 68 Thursday, looked back at the Kemper Lakes golf course and said, "Go, Arnie!"

Everyone, including his fellow competitors, was delighted by the sight of Arnold Palmer making a serious move in the first round of the 71st PGA championship.

When Crenshaw uttered his words of support, Palmer had just run five consecutive birdies on the front nine and was moving into the turn at 5 under par.

A couple of hours later, Palmer, who will be 60 next month, finished his round with the same score as Crenshaw, two shots off the early lead.

Palmer might have tied Mike Reid for that early spot atop the leader board, except he drove into the bunker right of the green on the par-3 17th and had to take a bogey 4, then missed the green at 18, chipped and two-putted for bogey 5.

"Anything he does is wonderful for the game," said Crenshaw of the golfing legend who won 61 tournaments on the Professional Golfers' Association Tour, but never the PGA championship.

Reid, the man they call "Radar" because of his deadly accurate drives, was in at 6-under-par 66 on this 7,197-yard course outside Chicago, which played a bit easy Thursday. There was no wind and the huge greens were holding well.

Tom Watson, who had a successful British Open three weeks ago by finishing fourth, shot 67. Just as Palmer finished, another member of the Big Three, Jack Nicklaus, was making an impressive move at 4 under through 12 holes.

But the story of the day was Palmer, who had called forth his army and had them happily marching to his tune once again.

"Everybody says you're getting too old," Palmer said afterward. "But a guy recently asked me, 'If you didn't know how old you were, how old would you think you were?'

"Twenty-nine."

Watson will be 40 on Sept. 4 and Nicklaus will be 50 in January. For one day, at least, the three who were the last individuals to dominate the world of golf were awakening memories. Each was king before the younger one came along to replace him. And Nicklaus, the middle man, had many a battle down to the wire with both Palmer and Watson.

"Isn't it great that three guys two decades apart are doing this?" Palmer said. "It would be something if the three of us stay on the leader board till Sunday. We did that 20 or 30 years ago. That would get people's attention."

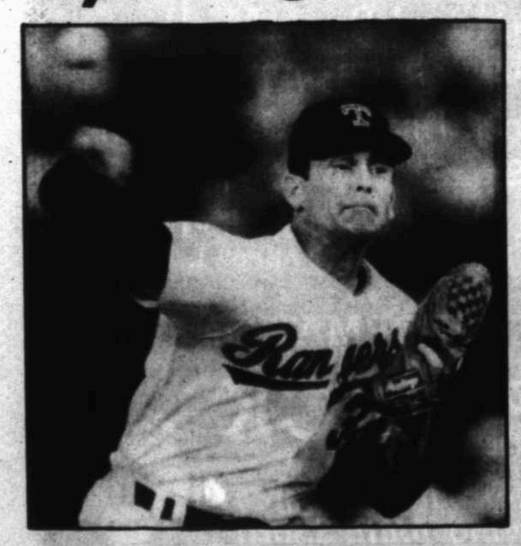
Ryan gem spoiled two outs away



Nolan Ryan courts fame again.

Associated Press

Nolan Ryan, who once threw four no-hitters in a two-year span, now has five near-misses in two seasons.

For the fifth time in his career, Ryan lost a no-hit bid in the ninth inning when Dave Bergman singled with one out as the Texas Rangers beat the Detroit Tigers 4-1 Thursday night.

"Don't get me wrong. I was glad I got the hit," Bergman said. "I was doing the best I could, but I was almost feeling, 'What am I doing on the same field with Nolan Ryan?' "

Bergman, a .260 batter, lined an 0-1 pitch for an opposite-field single to left.

"Anytime you come that close you're disappointed, but I realize the last six outs are the toughest," Ryan said. "In that situation, you just hope if they hit the ball good, they hit it at somebody."

Three other times this season, the 42-year-old Ryan took a no-hitter into the eighth inning, and he also went 8 1-3 innings with a no-hitter last season when he was still with the Houston Astros. But in each case he failed to pitch his sixth no-hitter and become the oldest to throw a no-hitter.

Cy Young was 41 when he did it in 1908. Ryan threw his record fifth no-hitter for Houston in 1981 after he pitched four in a two-year span for California from 1973-75.

Ryan, whose fastball was timed at a high of 96 mph, lost this no-hitter on a breaking pitch.

"I knew he was trying to turn the ball over a lot, so I was staying back, waiting on the ball a little more," Bergman said. "He happened to throw a ball where I was swinging."

Ryan, 13-7, struck out 13, giving him 4,986 for his career, and won his 286th game. He also passed the 200-strikeout mark for the 13th season and the 10-strikeout mark in a game for the 193rd time in his 21-year career.

After Bergman singled, Matt Nokes followed with a double. That finished Ryan, who threw 149 pitches on a 78-degree night, cool for Texas in August.

"Early in the game, I didn't have command of my pitches," Ryan said. "The cool weather helped me take it into the ninth. If it was as hot as it was the last time I pitched here, I'd have been gone by the sixth or seventh."

Back road trips prove rewarding

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

If you are going by auto this vacation, pick up one of those magazines describing "10 Great Auto Trips".

Those sampled thus far are a rewarding enough....Back Roads of Vermont, The Outer Banks of North Carolina, the High Road to Taos and Turquoise Trail in New Mexico, the Blue Ridge Scenic Drive in Virginia, The Great Smokies, the Coast of California along Big Sur and a stop at San Simeon....

There are others and I'd take 'em all, if time and distance weren't a consideration.

But they aren't the only scenic drives, and you don't have to take a plane trip and rent a car to reach them.

In fact, I'm compiling a list of my own. It's easy. Just shun the Interstates.

FOR EXAMPLE, going to the Metroplex for the weekend? Swing north from Abilene through historic Albany and its classic Texas courthouse and unique football stadium in native stone and travel east through Breckenridge and Mineral Wells. If you are totin' a boat trailer, there's Hubbard Lake and Possum Kingdom.

Come back through Granby and Stephenville, south from Fort Worth. Granby is a tourist mecca, replete with restored downtown square, antique shops and a lake big enough for excursions.

Be sure and stop by the Chamber of Commerce and go upstairs and visit the old jail. One look is enough to keep a town clean of crime.

Just one suggestion. Avoid Monday. It's the day the town recovers after the weekend tourists leave.

DURANGO to Silverton to Ouray is no secret, but Telluride, Colo., to Moab, Utah, takes you from the Alps-like majesty of the old mining town to the spectacular red rock desert with the dramatic LaSal mountain backdrop of Utah, as seen in the latest Indian Jones adventure.

Once at Moab, the traveler has the choice of two National Parks, Arches, Canyonlands or a trip down the Colorado to Lake Powell. Drive to the edge of town in searrch of the golf course and you'll find a city dump with a view paralleled only by the view from the city dump at Oberammergau.

THREE YEARS ago on a trip from Midland to Flagstaff, our "let's do something different" trip took us north from I-10 at Lovington, N.M., to Phoenix.

It's a part of still-unspoiled Arizona, unless you object to the open mine cooper pit at Miami.

Along the way, Safford and Eastern Arizona College (where Billy Hatcher high jumped 6-10 between innings) are at the foot of Mount Graham, more impressive than its 10,700 foot elevation, since Safford is around 2,900 feet. A hiker to Mount Graham's peak will pass through seven ecological zones. Mount Graham will be the site of one of the star gazing telescopes in the near future.

I must confess that the fact that Globe-Miami once had a team in the Arizona-Texas Class D baseball league proved one of the lures for the sidetrip. Both are flirting with ghosts.

Globe is a desert San Francisco. The hills on which it is built are Tuckerman Ravine steep, enough pitch for a cable car.

Passing through Miami during a Sunday afternoon thunderstorm, the Bleak, abandoned downtown reminded of a worn out Pennsylvania coal mining town. Compared to Miami, Globe's downtown area was thriving.

FOR THE outdoorsman, the Roosevelt Dam offers fishing, boating and camping . It's the world's highest all-masonry dam and first Federal reclamation project.

The road drops out of the Superstitions and returns to reality at Apache Junction offering a disillusioning view of smog shrouded Phoenix some 50 miles to the east.

EVEN more remote than the aforementioned is the latest discovery, for which the foregoing set the stage.

It's a trail that leads from the Rio Grande turnoff just south of Hot Springs, N.M., into the Mimbres foothills up 9,000 feet or more over the tortuous esses and wrap-around curves of the still primitive Black Mountain range to Silver City.

It's a trail of ghost towns like Hillsboro and Kingston, pillaging Apache raids, the restored, but aesthetically abused brothel, and the tragedy of Tyrone, the Million Dollar Ghost Town.

But space dictates that drive must wait for next time....

Toran tested three times over legal limit

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Los Angeles Raiders safety Stacey Toran had a blood-alcohol level more than three times the legal limit when he died in a car accident, the coroner's office said Thursday.

Results of the toxological examination showed that Toran's blood alcohol level was at .32 percent, county coroner's spokesman Bob Dambacher said.

Under state law, the legal limit at which a person is considered to be driving under the influence of alcohol is .10 percent.

"That's the only drug found in his system," Dambacher said. "Everything else proved negative."

Toran died Saturday when his car hit a tree.

To reach a blood alcohol level of .32 percent, a 154-pound person would have to quickly drink 10 bottles of beer or 10 ounces of whiskey, according to the American Medical Association's "Family Medical Guide."

Toran weighed about 200 pounds, so he presumably would have had to have consumed more alcohol to reach the .32 percent level.

"Wow. That's getting almost to the unconscious level," said Dr. Ernest Noble, professor of alcohol studies at UCLA. "For a guy who weighs that much ... to get to the .32 level, that would be approximately 16 drinks" within a half-hour to an hour.

"A lot of people, when they reach that level, pass out," Noble said. "This poor fellow must have been extremely out (of it) when he was driving. In my experience, I've rarely seen people hit that high of a level."

PGA

Nicklaus has won each of golf's four major tournaments and has taken five PGA championships in his career. But Watson, like Palmer, has never won a PGA championship, though each has won the three other majors at least once: the Masters and the United States and British Opens.

Watson missed seven driving fairways Thursday. But he finished strongly with a chip into the cup from the fringe for a birdie 3 on the 18th hole. That became the shot that put him ahead of Palmer.

The 67 equals the best start Watson ever had in a PGA championship. He shot that score in the opening round of the 1978 tournament at Oakmont outside Pittsburgh.

Watson was impressed by Reid, though. "Mike hits a four wood straighter than I hit an eight iron," he said. "Mike is a fooler. He doesn't hit that short anymore and he hits so very, very straight."

Reid missed only one faiway and in that case easily saved a par 5 at the 11th hole. Usually you do not ask Reid how many fairways he missed. You ask him how many water sprinkler lines he missed. He's that straight.

But he has a reputation for being short.

"I think something not stated often enough is that perfect golf is perfect distance and perfect direction," Reid said. "That's kind of a forgotten value in golf. My reputation as a short hitter suits me fine. But I'm hitting a little longer now, about 250 yards off the tee."

RYAN

After Manager Bobby Valentine relieved Ryan, he walked to the dugout to a standing ovation from the crowd of more than 35,000. Ryan then stepped back onto the field to acknowledge the cheers.

Jeff Russell relieved and got his 25th save, giving up Chet Lemon's RBI grounder.

Texas got a run in the first on Harold Baines' RBI double off Doyle Alexander, 5-13. Ruben Sierra's 19th home run in the sixth, Chad Kreuter's second homer in the seventh and Pete Incaviglia's 15th homer in the eighth made it 4-0.

Mariners 3, Angels 2

California fell into a virtual first-place tie with Oakland on the eve their three-game series as Jim Presley led off the 10th inning with his 11th homer for Seattle.

Presley, who also beat the Angels on July 31 with an eighth-inning homer, handed the loss to Chuck Finley, 13-8. Finley struck out 12 and held the Mariners to three hits through nine innings, including a two-run homer by Henry Cotto.

Mike Jackson, 4-5, worked out of a ninth-inning jam and Mike Schooler, on his 27th birthday, pitched the 10th for his 23rd save.

Athletics 4, White Sox 1

Oakland prepped for the California series as Storm Davis shut out Chicago for six innings and Dennis Eckersley earned his 23rd save in 25 opportunities.

Davis, 12-5, allowed six hits in six innings and won for the ninth time in his last 13 starts.

Brewers 10, Indians 3

Milwaukee routed Cleveland as Joey Meyer drove in a career-high five runs, Robin Yount had four hits and Charlie O'Brien had three RBI singles.

Ted Higuera, 8-4, won his fifth straight start, allowing two runs on 10 hits in 5 2-3 innings before leaving because of a sore left ankle. He has an ERA of 2.02 in the five starts.

Meyer knocked in three runs with a two-out double in the first inning.

ANGELS

make him a pitcher," Kelly said. "Maybe it was because Gary was a shortstop-turned-pitcher when he played."

Whatever the reasons for the switch, Valdez' performance ruined a strong outing by DiMichele, 3-5, who allowed eight hits and five runs in seven innings. Several Wrangler hits were of the seeing-eye variety, however.

Midland manager Max Oliveras said it's nothing new for the Angels to run up against good pitching when they get a good mound showing of their own.

"DiMichele did a good job, but everytime we get a pitcher that does well, it seems like the other team gets the same thing."

THE MIDLAND skipper again decried his team's lack of clutch hitting.

"Even though we're getting nine or 10 hits, we're not getting the big hit with two outs."

The Angels left runners in scoring position three times in the first four innings. They had the bases loaded in the second, but Gary DiSarcina grounded to short to end the threat.

Then with runners on first and second in the third, Cron singled to score Ruben Amaro. But Bob Rose was trapped in a rundown between second and third for the second out of the inning, though Cron made second base on the play. Dan Grunhard then struck out.

In the fourth, Mark Howie and newcomer Jamie Nelson singled, but DiSarcina hit into a 4-6-3 double play to end another threat.

Meanwhile, Wichita scored two in the third and one in the fifth for the runs it needed to win. But the Wranglers went on to add one in the seventh on Jose Valentin's first Texas League home run, and three in the eighth.

HALO HOOPS: The Angels get to face another Class AA newcomer in tonight's game, as Jeremy Hernandez will make his first start for Wichita after spending most of the season at Riverside. Chris Beasley, 5-3, will start for Midland.

Nelson caught his first full game for Midland Thursday, while left-handed reliever Tim McCoy made his Midland debut with two out in the eighth inning Thursday.

Nelson, with major league service at Milwaukee and Seattle, was hitting .220 with two homers and 13 RBI at Edmonton. He replaced John Orton, who was promoted to the major league California Angels earlier this week.

McCoy was promoted from Class A Palm Springs, where he was 5-7 with a 3.16 ERA in 28 games. He had struck out 111 in 122 innings. Lefty Jim Townsend was demoted to Class A Quad City to make room for McCoy.

Also on tap is the removal of reliever Jeff Richardson from the disabled list before the end of the homestand Sunday. Richardson has seven saves in 11 appearances, but hasn't been able to pitch for almost a month.

Mets teasing, or ready to make move?

Associated Press

Are the New York Mets really making a move on the National League East, or is this just another tease?

The Mets, who have flirted with first place all season, looked like the real thing Thursday, sweeping a doubleheader from the St. Louis Cardinals, 5-1 and 6-4.

Kevin McReynolds homered in both games and the Mets, cheered on by a sellout crowd of 48,712, won for the seventh time in eight tries. New York pulled to within 3½ games of division-leading Chicago, while St. Louis fell 5½ behind.

"The feeling I get is that we are having fun," Manager Davey Johnson said. "McReynolds is kind of streaky and so is Darryl (Strawberry). They have picked a good time to get hot."

For now, though, they are the hottest team in baseball. And tonight, Frank Viola makes his Shea Stadium debut against Scott Terry.

McReynolds hit a solo homer and Keith Miller had a two-run double in the third inning of the opener. The Mets beat Jose DeLeon, 11-11, for the first time in four decisions this season.

Ron Darling, 10-9, gave up seven hits and an unearned run. He has pitched consecutive complete games for the first time in his career.

Phillies 16, Cubs 13

Philadelphia and Chicago, who have played the two highest-scoring games in major-league history, got into another wild one at Wrigley Field.

Ricky Jordan drove in four runs and helped the Phillies rally from an early 10-3 deficit. The Cubs outhit Philadelphia 18-17 with two home runs by Ryne Sandberg, who has five homers in his last four games.

In 1922, Chicago beat the Phillies 26-23. In 1979, Philadelphia won 23-22. Both games were at Wrigley Field.

Jordan hit a two-run single during a four-run seventh that put Philadelphia ahead 16-13.

Jeff Parrett, 9-4, the fifth Phillies pitcher, held the Cubs hitless over the last three innings. The Cubs used six pitchers and Steve Wilson, 5-1, got the loss.

John Kruk, Randy Ready and Darren Daulton also homered for Philadelphia. Sandberg, Dwight Smith and Shawon Dunston each had four hits for the Cubs, and Jerome Walton extended his hitting streak to 21 games.

Padres 13, Astros 3

Tony Gwynn drove in four runs and had three of San Diego's 17 hits against visiting Houston.

The Padres are 58-57, the first time they've been over .500 since June 6. Garry Templeton, who homered, and Roberto Alomar each got three hits.

Greg Harris, 5-6, gave up six hits in eight innings. He has seven major-league victories and is 4-0 against the Astros.

Bob Forsch, 3-4, again got pounded as he started in place of Mike Scott, who leads the majors in victories but has a pulled hamstring.

Destrade homers as Lions top Orions

TOKYO (AP) — Orestes Destrade, formerly with the New York Yankees, hit his 12th home run of the season as the Seibu Lions beat the Lotte Orions 4-0 Thursday night in a Pacific League game.

In another Pacfic League contest, the Nippon Ham Fighters rallied for seven runs in the eighth inning to beat the front-running Orix Braves 8-7.

Braves starter Guy Hoffman, formerly with the Texas Rangers, gave up just six hits and one run.

Cards, Seahawks clash tonight

Associated Press

Most of the big names and a lot of others will be missing from the lineup when the Phoenix Cardinals play the Seattle Seahawks in an preseason game tonight.

NFL

Injuries and training camp holdouts have taken their toll on both teams.

Phoenix will be missing quarterback Neil Lomax, special teams captain Ron Wolfley and halfback Stump Mitchell. Also sidelined with injuries are offensive guard Joe Bostic, defensive tackle Steve Alvord, rookie defensive end Jeff Hunter and wide receivers Andy Schillinger and Mark Bellini.

The Cardinals also must play without two unsigned veterans — offensive tackle Luis Sharpe and tight end Jay Novacek — and three first-round draft picks who have yet to sign, including quarterback Timm Rosenbach.

Seattle has six unsigned starters and injuries will sideline linebacker Brian Bosworth and running backs Curt Warner and John L. Williams.

NFL Notebook

Wayne Martin, 6-4, 284 pound defensive end from Arkansas, signed a four-year contract with the New Orleans Saints, reducing the list of unsigned first-round NFL picks to 19.

"We paid a lot of money for him but that's what you have to do these days," said Jim Finks, president and GM of the Saints. "We met the market and the market is steep now."...

Atlanta's efforts to sign Dallas quarterback Steve Pelluer are being hindered by compensation talks with the Cowboys. The Cowboys are seeking a high pick in the 1990 draft and a wide receiver from the Falcons, but Atlanta officials feel that's too much.

Pelluer said: "I definitely want something to happen pretty quick. I mean, there's an exhibition game Saturday, and I still have to learn a new system wherever I'm going to play."...

Pro Bowl center Kent Hull, fourth year Mississippi State, ended his holdout and agreed to a Buffalo contract....

Miami DB Jarvis Williams moved from free to strong safety with reluctance, but he's glad to be reunited with the player who forced the switch — rookie Louis Oliver, with whom he started at Florida. "I hope it's like that for years to come," Williams said. "I think it'd be great for the team, because we play well together." Williams, Dolphins' rookie of the year and outstanding DB last season, started all 16 games at free safety. But the faster Oliver will play there now.

Green Bay rookie QB Anthony Dilweg had the highest IQ test score among quarterbacks drafted last spring and he led the ACC in passing and total offense in his only season as a starter. He will play the second half tonight against the Jets, "I've been looking forward to this since I was 10 years old." His grandfather, Lavvie Dilweg, played on the Packers' first three NFL championship teams from 1929 to 1931. His grandmother was an Olympic swimmer, and his father played football at Marquette in Milwaukee.

Many people already knew Dilweg from his work as a vendor at a minor league baseball park in Durham, N.C., when he became the subject of a story in a national magazine...

Robinson drops AD for Veep

GRAMBLING, La. (AP) — Eddie Robinson, the winningest college football coach in history, is giving up duties as athletic director at Grambling to become vice president for athletic relations.

Grambling president Joseph Johnson said Thursday that Fred Hobdy, associate athletic director to Robinson the past three years, will take over Robinson's post.

Johnson said the change will take place sometime "in mid-August."

He said Robinson had requested the move, and it was not a demotion.

Grambling's basketball program for men recently was placed on NCAA probation for one year because of what the NCAA called major, intentional violations of regulations despite the school's diligent efforts to prevent violations.

Bob Hopkins, men's head basketball coach for three years, resigned in June amid the NCAA investigation.

Hobdy served as head basketball coach from 1957-86.

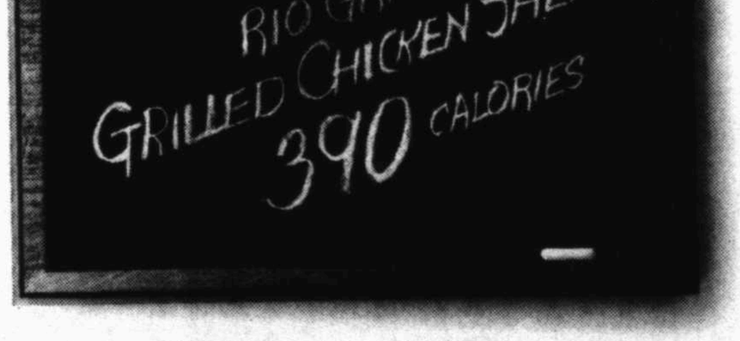
Our summer menu items have been drastically reduced.



This summer at El Chico, we're offering weight loss courses.
You see, we've introduced two special dishes that are remarkably low in fat, cholesterol and sodium. So low in fact, they've been endorsed through the Living Lean program at the Cooper Clinic Aerobic Center.
But rest assured, we haven't cut back at all on the fresh, authentic Tex-Mex flavor. That's one reduction we would never make.

Big East's 6 personal limit bows to stars

By GEORGE VECSEY
N.Y. Times News Service

It was clear that American civilization was doomed when they showed the film clip a few months back. The vice president of the United States, off on one of his educational field trips, stopped to shoot hoops at a military base.

The television showed the vice president taking part in a half-court game with some servicemen. He started on the left side, held the ball in both hands, and sort of hippety-hopped along the baseline like Peter Rabbit making off with one of Mr. McGregor's cabbages.

It was the kind of no-dribble drive currently favored by Michael Jordan, Dominique Wilkins and the rest of the astronauts in the National Basketball Association. The only difference is that they can dunk, so of course no referee ever calls walking on them.

Judging from the brief film clip, the vice president of the United States cannot dunk. Yet not one man-jack of a soldier, or sailor, or Marine, or whatever they were, had the courage to shout, "Yo, Mr. Veep, that was traveling."

STANDARDS are falling everywhere, even in half-court games, and it was apparent again this week when the Big East Conference voted to allow six personal fouls per player per game.

For as long as undergraduates have been playing basketball, the limit was always five fouls per scholar. Forty minutes of playing time. One every eight minutes.

And if the young savant happened to be a bit grabby that night, the local John F.X. Condon would intone, "That was his fifth personal foul!" and fans would applaud, and sometimes even opponents would give him a respectful five as he trudged to the bench, where the trainer would hand him a dry towel and teammates would pat him on his learned rump.

It was the kind of ritual that seemed to fit basketball's role as a winter exercise between cram sessions: Well done, old chap, but not quite an A this time. A little more time in the reserve library in the spring semester should bring you up to snuff.

TO BE fair, this six-foul business began as a local option from the National Collegiate Athletic Association, and the majority of Big East coaches jumped for it the other day.

The six-foul rule will tell you everything that is wrong with college sports, and it will also tell you why Johnny can't read, why Janey can't add, and why Joey hasn't a clue where Luxembourg is. No fundamentals. No attention to details. No discipline.

Personal fouls are assessed to penalize sloppy or dirty defensive play. Sometimes fouls are part of the strategy, but there is a limit, and everybody knows it.

You don't have to be Plato, Socrates, Aristotle or Dick Vitale to know there is a message in this. The Big East is expanding its limit of personal fouls to keep stars like Alonzo Mourning or Derrick Coleman from sitting on the bench because they went for one too many head fakes.

COLLEGE administrators like to tell us that athletics are part of education. The kids. You always hear about "the kids." This six-foul business admits that half the "kids" on the bench are just spear carriers in this opera. The bosses do not want to see some anonymous eighth man leaping from the bench when a big star gets in foul trouble.

They are saying this is not a team game, this is not a game of rewards and penalties, of learning and versatility. This is a star game, this is show time. Give "the kids" an extra foul. Let 'em play. What's the harm?

The harm, said Jim O'Brien, the coach at Boston College, who voted against six fouls, is that "the lesser teams work hard trying to get the other team's big man out of the game and now this just increases the better team's chances."

Better? Not necessarily. The Big East has been at its best when a Rollie Massimino or a Rick Pitino exploited some weakness in the opposing defense. Next season in the Big East, craftiness, wiliness, caution, patience and technique are being downgraded.

WHODUNIT? They won't admit it, but it could be some television biggie whispering in the ear of Dave Gavitt of the Big East: "Hey, we're paying you all this money. The least you could do is guarantee us some quality minutes from the stars we've been plugging all week."

You think this is paranoid?

Television long ago interjected the commercial timeout right in the middle of somebody's momentum, and there are forces loose in the world that will not rest until interleague games forever mess up the continuity of baseball.

Just remember: When the Martians take over America, and docudramas replace journalism, and alumninum bats reach the major leagues, and Jimmy doesn't know where Canada is, the point of no return was no walking calls, and six personal fouls in the Big East Conference.

Hughes sets pace

YORK, England (AP) — Australian Bradley Hughes shot a 10-under-par 62 Thursday, equaling the course record, to take the first-round lead at the $480,000 Benson and Hedges International Open golf tournament.

Hughes, 22-year-old Australian rookie of the year, had 10 birdies to finish two strokes ahead of countryman Peter Senior and Britain's Gordon Brand Jr.

Stock market reaches record high

From Staff Reports

In New York this morning, the stock market pushed ahead in active trading, bidding to reach record highs with encouragement from unexpectedly favorable news on inflation.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials climbed 14.04 to 2,726.67 in the first half hour of trading, surpassing the closing peak of 2,722.42 it reached on Aug. 25, 1987.

Gainers outnumbered losers by more than 7 to 2 in nationwide trading of New York Stock Exchange-listed issues, with 832 up, 220 down and 420 unchanged.

And though the market continued to break records, Midland stock brokers don't anticipate another crash as occurred in October 1987.

Kerry Marker with A.G. Edwards & Sons in Midland, said the primary reason for the rising Dow Jones average is a decline in the producer price index for the second month in a row.

J.R. Manning with Edward D. Jones in Midland, attributes the activity to the fact that the economy is not in a recession, inflation is "moderating" and companies' price earnings are "still good."

A representative with Rauscher Pierce Refsnes Inc., agreed, noting interest rates are dropping, and foreign and domestic money that has been on the "sidelines" is now being placed into equity.

All three brokers don't anticipate another crash because market conditions are not the same as they were in October 1987.

In October 1987 price-earnings ratios of stocks were at an all-time high, between 20 and 21, while they're resting at 12-13 now. In addition, the market was "overpriced" in October 1987, but now it is more realistically priced, they said.

The three brokers predict the market would close today high, near or above the October 1987 average.

In New York this morning, volume on the Big Board came to 39.31 million shares as of 10 a.m. on Wall Street.

The Dow Jones industrial average made a short-lived run Thursday afternoon past its peak of two summers ago, but then fell back in late trading.

This morning, analysts said buyers drew some fresh inspiration from evidence that inflationary pressures have eased significantly as the economy has slowed.

The Labor Department reported that the producer price index of finished goods dropped 0.4 percent in July, posting its biggest decline in three years. Advance estimates in the financial world had called for the index to be unchanged or modestly higher.

Interest rates fell in the credit markets after the figures were reported. Prices of long-term government bonds rose nearly $10 for each $1,000 in face value, putting their yields just below 8 percent.

Conservation group highlights toxic releases

WASHINGTON (AP) — Two dozen plants accounted for a third of all the highly hazardous industrial chemical releases reported in the United States in 1987, a national conservation group says in an analysis of government figures.

The National Wildlife Federation analysis released Thursday showed that 500 plants in 44 states disposed about 7.5 billion pounds of toxic waste through burial or release into the air, water or public sewage system.

The two dozen plants in 13 states released 3.5 billion pounds of toxic waste in 1987, the report said. The material included chemicals and metals, some 39 of which are considered carcinogenic.

The emissions are legal, but legislation pending before Congress would curb many of the releases by setting tighter standards for toxic industrial waste.

Seven of the 12 biggest producers of toxic wastes use burial for disposal, while five inject wastes deep into the ground. Industry defends that method of disposal, but environmentalists disagree.

Increasingly, such disposal methods "threaten the nation's ground water which supplies drinking water for almost 50 percent of Americans," the federation said.

"Which community will see disease outbreaks from polluted surface and ground water? What species of fish or wildlife will be threatened by acute or chronic toxicity? No one knows," said federation president Jay Hair.

In a preface to the report, Hair said its purpose was "to emphasize the scope of toxic (release) problems."

He cautioned that the figures themselves provide no accurate way to predict health or environmental effects, but he said they make clear "we are dumping too many chemicals into our environment at too high a level."

No. 1 on the top 500 list was the ALCOA plant in Point Comfort, Texas, which reported 465 million pounds of toxic wastes in 1987, almost all of it buried at the facility.

A dozen facilities each reported more than 100 million pounds of wastes were released, while 118 plants reported disposing at least 10 million pounds, the study said. Each

Texas plants top 'Toxic 500' list

WASHINGTON (AP) — The ALCOA plant in Point Comfort, Texas, leads the National Wildlife Federation's list of 500 plants nationwide with the largest releases of toxic chemicals into the environment.

Six Texas companies were among the top 18 plants on the federation's "Toxic 500" list, four of them in the top 10. Only one other state, Louisiana, had as many plants in the top 25, with six.

The federation said the Aluminum Company of American plant in Point Comfort released more than 465 million pounds of toxins. Most of the toxic chemicals were buried, and the greatest single toxin was aluminum oxide, which the federation said appears to irritate and damage the respiratory system.

Other Texas plants in the top 10 were ALCOA's Rockdale plant in Milam County, ranked third with releases of 329 million pounds; Monsanto Co.'s plant in Alvin in Brazoria County, ranked seventh with releases of almost 176 million pounds; and the E.I. du Pont de Nemours and Co.'s Du Pont Beaumont Works plant in Beaumont, ranked eighth with releases of 169 million pounds.

The other top ranking Texas plants were BP America's BP Chemicals-Green lake plant in Port Lavaca, ranked 11th with releases totalling 108 million pounds, and Interesin Corp.'s plant in Houston, operated by CDF Chimie North America Group, N.Y., ranked 18th with toxic releases totaling 72 million.

Retail sales jump 0.9 percent in July

WASHINGTON (AP) — Retail sales, paced by renewed spending on automobiles, rebounded 0.9 percent in July after falling the previous month, the government reported today.

The Commerce Department said sales increased to a seasonally adjusted $143.7 billion last month following a 0.1 percent decline in June. The June sales had been revised to $142.4 billion from the $140.8 billion originally reported last month.

The department also revised the May retail sales sharply to an 0.8 percent increase, rather than the 0.1 percent decrease previously reported. It said the revision was due to responses from additional retailers.

Retail sales are viewed as a measure of economic health since they account for about one-third of the nation's economic activity.

The economy has slowed over the past year as the Federal Reserve drove interest rates higher to head off inflation. Spending on durable goods — big-ticket items such as cars expected to last more than three years — has been particularly affected by the Fed's credit-tightening measures.

The Fed switched course in June, however, and since then has nudged interest rates lower in an effort to keep the economy out of a recession.

The Commerce Department said auto sales, which fell 1 percent in June, bounced back 2.7 percent last

Drilling safeguards suggested

WASHINGTON (AP) — Improved environmental safeguards are needed before any oil exploration can occur in three disputed sites off the California and Florida coasts, a task force said today.

The task force, charged with recommending to President Bush whether to open the three sites for oil exploration, made clear in a progress report that it has made no decision on whether drilling should be allowed.

But it said that before a decision is made, additional restrictions are needed to "reduce the environmental impact" of such drilling. It outlined a long list of options aimed at improving environmental safeguards, but said no decision has been made on which ones to recommend to the president.

In February, Bush directed the task force to examine the environmental concerns surrounding the proposed oil drilling on the two California sites, which together cover nearly 8 million acres off the state's northern and southern coasts.

He also asked for a review of plans to sell leases for oil development in a third site, covering 14 million acres in the Gulf of Mexico near the Florida Everglades.

There has been strong opposition to opening the three areas to the oil companies because of fear that drilling would endanger nearby environmentally sensitive areas. The concern intensified after the massive oil spill from the Exxon Valdez tanker last March in Alaska.

The task force, headed by Interior Secretary Manuel Lujan, has conducted nine hearings so far and a recommendation is to be made at the end of the year.

Energy futures rise 13 cents

From Staff Reports

Energy futures prices were $18.72 this morning, up 13 cents from Thursday's close. Posted prices were up 25 cents, to $17.50.

On Thursday, energy futures finished higher on the New York Mercantile Exchange as the market shook off the lethargy of recent days and made some of its best gains.

The September contract for West Texas Intermediate, the benchmark grade of U.S. crude oil, rose 38 cents to $18.59 a barrel after rising 9 cents in Wednesday's session. The October contract gained 32 cents Thursday to close at $18.29.

Among refined products traded on the exchange, September unleaded gasoline rose 0.85 cent to 51.43 cents a gallon and heating oil for September delivery advanced 0.78 cent to 50.21 cents a gallon. Refined products for delivery later in the year showed smaller gains.

Energy brokers said reports of tighter crude oil supplies and improved refining margins in Europe helped push prices up.

A report that British Petroleum Co. PLC might discontinue spot sales of Alaska North Slope oil also helped buoy prices.

"A lot of people on the West Coast swap Alaska North Slope oil for WTI," said Jack Unger, trader with Merrill Lynch Energy Futures. "Now that might not be available so they have to grab for crude to put in their refineries."

Light trading pushes up dollar

LONDON (AP) — The dollar was higher in light trading in Europe late this morning, with investors waiting for the release of U.S. economic figures later in the day before making additional dollar purchases.

Gold prices fell.

The figures to be released later today were the U.S. producer price index for July and retail sales figures for the same month.

Trading was slow as investors waited to see if the figures suggested that U.S. interest rates wouldn't fall further, traders said.

In Tokyo, where trading ends before Europe's business day begins, the dollar rose 1.05 yen to a closing 140.10 yen. Later, in London, it was quoted at 141.05 yen.

In London, the dollar gained strongly against the British pound. It cost $1.5988 to buy one pound, compared with $1.6280 late Thursday.

Gold opened in London at a bid price of $365.30 a troy ounce, compared with late Thursday's $365.75. At midmorning, the city's five major bullion dealers fixed a recommended price of $364.40.

In Zurich, the bid price was $364.50 compared with $366.35 late Thursday.

Earlier, in Hong Kong, gold fell $1.51 to close at a bid $365.55.

Silver fell in London to a bid price of $5.15 a troy ounce, down from $5.16 on Thursday.

BUSINESS IN BRIEF

New government group closes three S&Ls

WASHINGTON (NYT) — The new government body formed to purge the savings industry of insolvent institutions closed three of the nation's most hopelessly distressed savings and loan associations on Thursday night.

The three, all small, were on the list, now numbering 262 ailing institutions in 33 states, to be dealt with by the Resolution Trust Corp. The cleanup effort began in earnest on Wednesday when President Bush signed sweeping legislation that, among other things, provides the money to rid the industry of institutions whose collective losses were mounting up at the rate of about $20 million a day.

For the three institutions handled on Thursday night, the agency arranged takeovers by nearby banking or savings companies.

Thursday night's moves were not seen as establishing any policy pattern since officials have said early resolutions would be relatively simple. The large complex deals await the establishment of official policy by the agency's oversight board.

The institutions involved on Thursday were in Texas, Illinois, and Florida.

CHICAGO (AP) — UAL Corp.'s decision to entertain buyout offers triggered another surge in its stock price as speculators bought shares in anticipation of a bidding war for the airline company.

UAL's stock rose $7.25 to $251.12½ a share Thursday on the New York Stock Exchange, reflecting speculation that richer proposals for the parent of United Airlines would emerge.

A third indicted trader, Robert Mosky, 33, pleaded innocent to charges of racketeering conspiracy, mail and wire fraud and violating the exchange act.

Transco chairman seeks help with $37 million fine

MOBILE, Ala. (AP) — The chairman of a Texas-based pipeline firm fined $37 million for building a 125-mile-long natural gas line across southwest Alabama without proper permits asked U.S. Sen. Richard Shelby for help.

But a spokeswoman for the Alabama Democrat said Shelby was not in a position to assist with the fine imposed on the Houston-based Transcontinental Gas Pipe Line Corp., a subsidiary of Transco Energy Co.

Transco Chairman Jack Bowen flew to Washington Aug. 2, seeking some relief from the $37 million fine imposed July 28 by the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission.

The company has until Aug. 28 to tell the agency why it should not be fined or have the pipeline shutdown for allegedly plowing through 22 archeological sites in southwest Alabama during construction of the pipeline.

In a statement last month, a company spokeswoman said no regulations were violated in the pipeline construction.

"It was planned with careful attention to minimizing the environmental impact of its construction and operation to protecting the archeological significance of the area," Transco president George S. Slocum said in the statement.

Transco spokeswoman Suzanne Thomas said Wednesday that Bowen's trip to Washington was not just to visit Shelby.

"Transco management and their representatives have interviewed numerous concerned parties including both state and federal officials to get a fuller understanding of the issues at hand," Ms. Thomas said. "The company will continue to work constructively toward an early and equitable solution to the matter."

Attorney Vincent Kilborn of Mobile represents landowner Jay Altmayer, who filed a federal complaint after some of his property was condemned during the pipeline construction.

Altmayer has appealed the condemnation to the Alabama Supreme Court.

Kilborn said Altmayer feels strongly about losing his land to the Texas-based pipeline because a few years ago another pipeline that cuts across some of his property exploded.

The Alabama Public Service Commission did not regulate the Transco line because circuit courts ruled it handled interstate gas, according to PSC spokesman Jim Tolbert.

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

Investor can't 'shift' mutual fund to other investment

By BILL DOYLE

Q. I have had $5,000 in a mutual fund for several years. The fund invests mainly in common stocks of electric, gas, and telephone utility companies. I have left my dividends in the fund to be reinvested and have paid income taxes on those dividends.

Now, I would like to shift the balance of this fund account, which has grown to about $7,000, to another type of investment — postponing more taxes to a later date. I would like something other than a mutual fund. What do you suggest I do?

Doyle

A. There is no way you can do what you would like to do. In order to "shift" the balance of the fund account elsewhere, you will have to redeem the mutual fund shares you own. The redemption of fund shares is a sale. The difference between the dollar amount of the redemption and your cost basis will be a profit or a loss.

From the numbers you supply, it is obvious you will have a profit on the redemption. That profit will be taxable as a capital gain, which you will be required to report on your income tax return.

Your cost basis is the $5,000 you originally invested, plus all the dividends and capital gains distributions you reinvested to purchase additional fund shares. Those reinvestments increased your basis and will reduce the profit you will realize when and if you redeem.

Let's say you reinvested $500 of dividends and $500 of capital gains distributions. Add those numbers to your $5,000 original investment and your cost basis is $6,000. And let's say you redeem all your fund shares for $7,000. That gives you a $1,000 profit, subject to tax as a capital gain.

You can't duck or postpone the tax due past next April 15, when your 1989 federal income tax return must be filed.

You could defer that tax, if your mutual fund holdings were in an individual retirement account, Keogh plan or other tax-deferred retirement account. Because you mention paying tax on your dividends, that clearly is not the case.

Q. When reporting the redemption of mutual fund shares on Schedule D of Federal Tax Return Form 1040, how do I list the purchases I have made by making new investments on a regular basis and reinvesting dividends every three months for many years?

I phoned the Internal Revenue Service and the woman who answered told me to use just one line to report the sale. But, if the IRS checks my return and calculates the number of shares times the market price on any one date, they won't get the correct purchase cost. The shares were bought on many different dates, at many different prices.

A. The IRS lady was correct, but she should have expanded her answer. You do use only one line to report the redemption of all your shares of a mutual fund. In column (b) under "Date acquired" list the first and last dates on which you purchased fund shares.

For example, if you made your first investment in that fund on Feb. 3, 1975 and your last investment or reinvestment on March 4, 1987, write it as "2/3/75-3/4/87." If you can't squeeze that in, write is as "2/75-3/87."

Q. I was shocked to learn that the mutual fund in which I invested more than two years ago will charge me for cashing in my shares. The "contingent deferred sales charge," as it is called, will be 3 percent in my case. Looking into this, I learn that charge starts at 5 percent the first year and drops one percentage point a year before it finally disappears.

I call this highway robbery. Can you defend it as normal business procedure?

A. No. You haven't been reading this column. I call it a rear-end load, because it's a kick in the rump to shareholders who redeem. I have consistently warned shareholders to steer clear of funds with such charges. There are lots of true no-load funds.

You have no one to blame but yourself. You could have learned about that rear-end load and other charges simply by reading the fund's prospectus — before investing.

STOCKS

Among actively traded blue chips, Ford Motor rose 1 to 51⅛; American Telephone & Telegraph ⅝ to 40⅝; International Business Machines ⅜ to 117⅞, and Dow Chemical 1¼ to 99½.

The NYSE's composite index of all its listed common stocks rose 1.12 to 195.09. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index was up .29 at 382.53.

On Thursday, the Dow Jones industrial average climbed 26.55 points to 2,712.63.

Advancing issues outnumbered declines by about 7 to 5 on the NYSE, with 829 up, 648 down and 512 unchanged.

Big Board volume totaled 198.66 million shares, against 209.90 million in the previous session.

On Thursday, with about a half hour to go in the session a wave of buying pushed Dow Jones's average of 30 blue chips past the record closing high of 2,722.42 it reached on Aug. 25, 1987.

But then it settled back to finish at 2,712.63, up 26.55 from Wednesday.

Advancing issues outnumbered declines by about 7 to 5 in nationwide trading of New York Stock Exchange-listed stocks, with 838 up, 653 down and 511 unchanged.

Volume on the floor of the Big Board came to 198.66 million shares, against 209.90 million in the previous session. Nationwide, consolidated volume in NYSE-listed issues, including trades in those stocks on regional exchanges and in the over-the-counter market, totaled 231.69 million shares.

Most broader market indicators have already surpassed their 1987 peaks in the past few weeks.

Brokers said many investors were waiting for the venerable Dow to join them, however, in a kind of official certification that stocks had fully recovered from the '87 crash.

At the same time, some traders apparently opted late in the session to use the nearrecord levels in the Dow as an opportune occasion to cash in on the market's recent gains.

TOXIC

facility reported at least 2.6 million pounds of toxic releases.

The Environmental Protection Agency made the raw data available last month after receiving reports from more than 18,000 facilities.

The 480-page federation analysis said the 7.5 billion pounds of toxic material released by the 500 facilities was about 70 percent of the total 10.3 billion pounds reported in 1987, the latest year for which figures were available.

ALCOA had three other plants among the top 15 on the list of those releasing the largest amounts of toxic material, including its Rockdale, Texas, plant, which was No. 3 with 329 million pounds of wastes, most buried on plant grounds.

The National Steel Corp. Great Lakes Division plant at Ecorse, Mich., was the second biggest disposer of toxic wastes at 423 million pounds, almost all buried a few miles away.

The buried wastes at the two Texas ALCOA plants, as well as the National Steel Corp. plant in Michigan, consisted largely of aluminum oxide, a chemical that can damage the respiratory system and may contribute to brain damage.

According to the study, five companies each reported more than 30 million pounds of toxic emissions released into the air in 1987, part of the roughly 2.6 billion pounds of such wastes sent airborne by all companies reporting to the EPA.

Amax Magnesium, owned by Amax Inc. in Rowley, Utah, released the most material into the air — 68 million pounds of toxics, mostly chlorine.

Kennecott Utah Copper, the mining company owned by British Petroleum, accounts for the largest amount of toxic metal waste, most of it copper but also arsenic, chrome, barium and zinc compounds. Most of the 158 million pounds of wastes are buried on Kennecott property.

The three companies that released the largest amount of toxic chemicals into water are in Louisiana.

Two Agrico Chemical Co. plants — in Uncle Sam and Donaldsonville, La. — were ranked No. 1 and No. 3, disposing 59 million pounds and 44 million pounds of chemicals respectively, mostly phosphoric acid.

The Arcadian Corp. of Geismar, La., ranked second with 54 million pounds of mostly phosphoric and sulfuric acid.

DRILLING—

The report said that during the hearings, most of more than 650 witnesses and some 11,000 written comments have expressed intense concern about the potential environmental harm that could be caused by oil exploration at the three sites.

"Many people expressed the view that while they would suffer the losses from any environmental effects of oil and gas development, they stand to gain few, if any, of the potential benefits," said the task force. At the same time, the group noted, oil and gas industry spokesmen disputed the environmental concerns and suggested the risks are minimal.

The task force said various "restrictions designed to reduce the environmental impacts of oil and gas development" should be considered before deciding whether to allow drilling.

Options cited by the task force include the widespread use of buffer zones between drilling sites and environmentally sensitive areas, and an array of proposals to protect against oil spills or control damage if a spill should occur.

Other options include requiring oil from the three areas to be transported to shore by pipeline and not tanker; that oil companies hold a special bond to assure adequate compensation for spill damage; that permanent emergency response teams be established with adequate equipment, manpower and training, and that tankers, if allowed, be limited in size and have double bottoms.

Agriculture secretary seeks end to farm export subsidies

AGRICULTURE

WASHINGTON (AP) — Agriculture Secretary Clayton K. Yeutter is stepping up his call for a global agreement to end export subsidies for farm goods as the end of the current round of international trade talks looms.

"The economic case for reform can hardly be more compelling," Yeutter told the U.S. Feed Grains Council on Monday. "The resistance is political."

U.S. negotiators have been pushing the European Community in the current Uruguay Round of trade talks to set a deadline for ending all practices that distort agricultural markets. Thus far the Europeans have declined.

The negotiations, aimed at updating the 97-nation General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, have 18 months to run.

"The EC view seemingly is that such distortions should continue forever — a most discouraging outlook indeed for the developing countries and for European consumers," Yeutter said.

Yeutter, U.S. trade representative before taking over at the Agriculture Department this year, is a long-standing critic of export subsidies. His remarks in Chicago contained a new barrage of choice rhetoric on the issue.

He described the current system of subsidies under which governments pay farmers and exporters to slash prices and thus stimulate overseas sales as a game of "fool's monopoly" and said the place to "put an end to this madness is the Uruguay Round of Multilateral Trade Negotiations."

Yeutter also acknowledged in effect that the United States is often an active player in the subsidy game. "Our European colleagues have said repeatedly that there are no angels in agriculture trade," he said. "The question is, how do we get closer to heaven?"

He took aim at two lingering criticisms of the American position in the talks. "There are some who say that the U.S. proposal is unrealistic — that governments cannot and should not get completely out of agriculture," he said. "But that is not the U.S. proposal."

Yeutter reiterated that the United States has no complaint about financial supports for agriculture as long as they avoid distortion of global markets. "We have called only for the elimination of trade-distorting measures over a period of time sufficient to allow farmers to adapt to the new environment."

He also scoffed at the complaint that the negotiators have never agreed on a definition of which practices are "trade distorting." "We have 18 months, the final stage of the Uruguay Round, to decide that," he said.

Yeutter, however, left no doubt as to his view. "Perhaps the most vivid example is grain," he said. "Ten years ago the EC had net imports of nearly 20 million tons. Now the EC has net annual exports of about 30 million tons. Their stated goal was self sufficiency. But that goal was reached long ago."

"The Community now uses billions of European currency units to unload its surplus production on the world market, undercutting lower cost competitors.

"In contrast the U.S., most unwisely, has unilaterally disarmed itself by taking vast amounts of land out of production. That action has helped support prices everywhere, but the result has been a loss in market share."

WASHINGTON (AP) — Squalid living conditions in poverty-ridden "colonias" along the Mexican border was the topic of a July 25 chat between Agriculture Secretary Clayton K. Yeutter and House Agriculture Committee Chairman E. (Kika) de la Garza, D-Texas.

The colonias, or shantytowns, often lack such basic facilities as safe drinking water, elementary sanitation and paved streets. Several are located in de la Garza's district in South Texas, and the chairman has come under increasing pressure to do something about them.

Consumer advocate Ralph Nader criticized de la Garza at a committee meeting two years ago over the painful situation in the colonias, and community activists have turned up the heat since then.

Weather-related disasters to impact economy by $3.5 billion

A projection of effects of weather-related factors during 1989 on Texas crops and livestock indicates the impact of the Texas economy could top $3.5 billion. This figure is the result of estimates compiled by the Texas Agricultural Extension Service to emphasize the disaster that many Texas farmers and ranchers are facing as a result of unfavorable weather conditions, including drought, hail and floods.

Kiker

Dr. Zerle L. Carpenter, extension service director, said that loss estimates were projected for major commodities and geographical areas by county extension agents serving all 254 counties of Texas.

"The impact of the drought and other related problems already is a grim reality in south and west Texas and throughout most of the state's wheat area," Carpenter said.

He said research indicates that the total economic impact on the production and agribusiness sectors of the state for each $1 of farm product sales is about $3.10.

"Therefore, the so-called domino effect of weather-related losses through rural towns and the urban centers will result in significant impacts to the entire state," Carpenter said.

He said the wheat loss situation primarily is the result of cold weather early in 1989. The corn, sorghum and cotton situation is mainly the result of drought and is focused in the western and southern part of Texas, although major hail damage has occurred in the South Plains.

Carpenter said the livestock analysis reflects added costs to producers of maintaining livestock during the drought above normal costs. This also is concentrated mostly in South and West Texas, he said.

Additional livestock production costs that are drought-related are projected at about $507 million.

Total crop loss projections are estimated at about $975 million.

The biggest loss is expected to be in the cotton crop with about $465 million estimated. The wheat loss is estimated to be about $350 million, while the sorghum crop loss is projected at about $80 million.

Loss estimated to the Texas corn crop is about $70 million and the unfavorable weather is expected to trim the rice crop by an estimated $15 million.

Carpenter said the total crop loss and livestock cost estimate to the producer is projected at $1.4 billion. The economic impact of projected crop and livestock losses is estimated at more that $3 billion, he said.

Dr. Carl Anderson, extension service economist, said all farm and ranch marketing cash receipts in 1988 totaled about $10.95 billion.

He said a marked increase in grain prices and a large cotton crop boosted crop sales substantially last year, while somewhat higher prices for cattle, broilers, wool, dairy and poultry marketings helped increase livestock sales.

The agricultural production system in Texas is estimated to have an economic impact of about $35 billion. The entire food and fiber production, processing and retail marketing chain has about twice that impact, Anderson said.

Carpenter said the economic situation for agriculture for the remainder of 1989 will depend on weather conditions where crops are still in various stages of production.

But for many producers in South, Southeast and far West Texas where the drought has persisted severely for the past two years, it has already meant shattered dreams and devastation.

"The drought will worsen the rural crisis and its impact on Texas' people and towns. The agricultural industry's general health or problems will reach well beyond the farm and ranch gate," Carpenter said.

The report was coordinated by Dr. Chester Fehlis, state leader for county extension program, in cooperation with Dr. Roland Smith, extension economist in agribusiness and marketing.

Feeding cows fish found to produce more milk

WASHINGTON (AP) — America's cows may be in for a treat — European-style seafood dinners that scientists say could prove the secret to a substantial increase in milk production.

"Fish meal is a super cocktail of amino acids for cows," boasts Kelsey Short, marketing manager for a Louisiana-based ocean-fishing company gearing up for sales to the dairy industry.

Cows need hefty doses of protein to produce the amino acid building blocks required to make milk protein.

Those who favor fish meal say cows can make better use of the protein it contains than the proteins in the solvent soybean meal supplement often on the menu at the nation's dairy farms.

The complex, four-part digestive tract of the cow finds it easier to transform fish meal into amino acids.

European cows have been getting the fish meal supplement for some time and results of a recent study of 20 Holstein cows at the Agriculture Department's U.S. Dairy Forage Center in Madison, Wis., were favorable.

Cows produced an additional 3 pounds, or 1.4 quarts, of milk daily when fed with high-quality alfalfa silage mixed with one pound per day of fish meal protein supplement, according to Glen A. Broderick, a dairy scientist with USDA's Agricultural Research Service.

The cows themselves seemed contented enough with the new diet, the department said. It said fish meal is acceptable to the animals when mixed into their regular feed ration.

And dairy farmers may be contented, too, when they see the price tag.

Fish meal does cost 11 cents more per day than solvent soybean meal. But tests showed the cows were producing an additional 36 cents worth of milk a day a current prices, according to Broderick.

He said the 25-cent difference would amount to $12 a day for the average Wisconsin farm with 48 cows. Cows fed on fish meal in the study also gave milk with 4 percent more protein, meaning it would yield slightly more cheese, the main use for dairy production in the upper Midwest.

As for consumers, marketing manager Short scoffs at the notion that they would notice any difference.

"The two most common myths about feeding cows fish meal are that the cows won't eat it and that the milk will taste fishy," he said. "Both of these myths have been thoroughly researched and found to be untrue."

Meanwhile, Broderick plans future studies to compare fish meal with other high-protein feeds, such as expeller, or heated, soybean meal and roasted soybeans.

Japanese prime minister says report is untrue that he had illegitimate child

TOKYO (AP) — Prime Minister Toshiki Kaifu, chosen to restore credibility to his scandal-plagued governing party, today said an unsubstantiated report that he fathered an illegitimate child was untrue.

Kaifu told reporters he has asked the Nagoya Times to apologize and publish a retraction.

Kaifu

"I was very surprised. It's groundless," the 58-year-old prime minister said when asked about the report at a news conference.

The report was published last week in the daily newspaper when Kaifu emerged as the main candidate to replace Sousuke Uno, who was accused of keeping mistresses.

On Thursday, the day Kaifu's Cabinet was sworn in, a weekly magazine published an article saying it had looked into the report an illegitimate child and was unable to substantiate it.

But the article in the Shukan Post magazine recounted the allegation in detail, and the issue was advertised in major newspapers.

Neither the Nagoya Times nor the Shukan Post identified the woman who purportedly had a child by Kaifu, who is married with two grown children. The Shukan Post said it had found the woman and her husband in Hokkaido, Japan's northernmost main island, and that they had refuted the rumor.

A Nagoya Times editorial staff member, Hideo Nagasaka, told The Associated Press by phone that Kaifu's secretary had called this morning to protest the story and ask for a retraction.

But the newspaper was still looking into the allegation and would not immediately comply with Kaifu's demand for a retraction, Nagasaka said.

The paper's story quoted unidentified political adversaries of Kaifu as saying a woman in Hokkaido had a daughter by Kaifu about 20 years ago.

As happened when allegations of sexual misconduct surfaced against Uno, the story began to get wider attention in Japan after some foreign media reported that Kaifu's morals were under attack in the Japanese media.

In Uno's case, the weekly Sunday Mainichi published a detailed interview with an unidentified former geisha who said Uno had paid her to be his mistress, then mistreated her. The allegation was not reported in the major national newspapers or on television until it had been published abroad several days later.

An opposition lawmaker embarrassed Uno by asking him in Parliament if he was suitable to represent Japan abroad when his morality was under fire.

The identity of the former geisha later was revealed when she was interviewed on television and repeated her criticism of Uno's character. The scandal contributed to his short-lived tenure as prime minister.

Kaifu has promised to carry out political reforms to help his Liberal Democratic Party overcome the legacy of an influence-buying scandal that forced Uno's predecessor, Noboru Takeshita, to leave office June 2.

Uno then took over as prime minister but announced he would resign the day after the Liberal Democratics took a beating in the July 23 election in the upper house of Parliament.

That set off a search for a replacement, and Kaifu was chosen to try to restore the Liberal Democrats' popularity.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Swimmer crosses strait using butterfly stroke

VICTORIA, British Columbia (AP) — A 28-year-old marathon swimmer has become the first person using the butterfly stroke to conquer the 19-mile wide Strait of Juan de Fuca separating Vancouver Island from Washington state.

Vicki Keith completed the crossing from Port Angeles, Wash., in slightly more than 14 hours Thursday. About 3,000 people cheered her conquest of the busy shipping lane.

"I just want to get some warmth," were the first words Keith uttered, shivering uncontrollably but uninjured.

Keith, a swimming coach from Kingston, Ontario, was in the 50-degree water six hours less than she had anticipated, but she was unable to crawl out of the surf at the end of the swim and had to be helped ashore.

She is the first swimmer to make the crossing using the butterfly, one of the most demanding of swim strokes. Five others have made the swim using the freestyle.

"I have never, ever swum that hard in a swim before in my life," she said after the swim. "I was concerned about staying in the water too long."

Experts have said that most people wouldn't survive three hours in the strait, which is several degrees colder than the English Channel.

Bad weather had prompted Keith to postpone her swim from Wednesday to Thursday.

Boy survives electric shock

OSLO, Norway (AP) — A 10-year-old boy survived a 22,000-volt electrical shock with help from the same man who saved him from drowning eight years ago, according to news reports.

Isak Turi climbed a 22-foot-high electricity pylon in the northern village of Oteren Monday and touched the power line. The shock jolted him to the ground with his hair and clothes on fire, the Oslo newspaper Verdens Gang reported Thursday.

Paul Bakke, a neighbor, ran to smother the flames, the newspaper said.

A spokesman for the regional power company was quoted as saying it was amazing that Turi, the son of a reindeer herder, survived.

Bakke told Verdens Gang that eight years ago he saved Turi when the boy nearly drowned in a spring flood.

"Isak has always been a tough kid who will dare anything," Bakke said.

Turi was in stable condition at a local hospital, the newspaper said.

Foreigner convicted of bribery

KHARTOUM, Sudan (AP) — A military court convicted a foreign national of illegally possessing $3,200 and trying to bribe a police officer, and sentenced him to 15 years in jail, news reports said.

Al-Guwat al-Musalaha, the armed forces daily, did not specify the foreigner's name or nationality in the report Thursday. It also did not say when the trial was held.

Shortly after a June 31 military coup overthrew the government of Prime Minister Sadek el-Mahdi, new junta leader Lt. Gen. Omar el-Bashir said his priorities included reforming the economy and fighting corruption.

Among other tough measures, the junta ordered people to exchange all foreign money by July 31 or face trial by a military court, and threatened the death penalty for hard-currency dealers.

Malaysia to sell jet fighters

KUALA LUMPUR, Malaysia (AP) — Defense Minister Tengku Ahmad Rithauddeen told reporters today that Malaysia plans to sell 48 Skyhawk jet fighters now in storage at an air base in Tucson, Ariz.

Malaysia bought Skyhawks that had been mothballed by the U.S. armed forces about 10 years ago, refurbished about 35 of them and now is using them here.

It stored 48 of them at the base for future use, but now has decided to buy Tornado fighter planes from Britain.

Among the countries now using Skyhawks are New Zealand, Indonesia, Israel and Singapore.

2nd Soviet ship may visit U.S.

ISTANBUL, Turkey (AP) — The captain of a U.S. warship that recently visited the Soviet port of Sevastopol said Thursday there will be more contact between the U.S. Navy and the Soviets.

The next one might be a call by Soviet warships at the West Coast of the United States, said Cmdr. Ronald C. Bogle, captain of the guided missile frigate USS Kauffman.

The Kauffman has anchored at the Bosporus strait, which splits Istanbul, on its return from Sevastopol last week. It will head for the Mediterranean, where the U.S. 6th Fleet is based.

The vessel was escorted by the guided missile cruiser USS Thomas S. Gates on the first U.S. naval visit to that port since World War II and the first to any Soviet port since 1975.

Thousands of Soviets welcomed the U.S. sailors, showering them with gifts and attention.

Islamic fundamentalist freed

CAIRO, Egypt (NYT) — An Egyptian court has freed one of the country's best-known Islamic fundamentalists and 23 followers pending further hearings into charges that he incited political violence.

Previously, the fundamentalist, Sheik Omar Abdel-Rahman, a blind 51-year-old cleric, was held in prison during slow-moving hearings after his arrest April 7 in the town of Fayoum, where Islamic militants fought with the police.

But defense lawyers argued that he should be freed on health grounds because he suffers from diabetes and heart problems. The court's unexpected decision Thursday prompted his supporters to chant Islamic verses proclaiming: "God is great! There is no God but Allah!"

Center won't be at Auschwitz

WARSAW, Poland (NYT) — Expressing bitterness over recent Jewish protests, Cardinal Franciszek Macharski, who oversees the diocese that includes the site of the Nazi death camp at Auschwitz, has announced he is abandoning plans to construct a center for Christian-Jewish dialogue near the site.

Macharski said his decision was made in reaction to recent demonstrations by Jewish groups against the continuing presence of a convent on the site despite an agreement to remove it.

"Such attitudes and actions make it impossible for me to continue to construct the center," Macharski, archbishop of Cracow, said in a statement published by the official Polish press agency Thursday.

Aquino to visit U.S. in November

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — President Corazon Aquino will visit the United States in November for talks that are expected to include debt relief and the future of American military bases here, it was announced today.

A statement from the presidential press office said Mrs. Aquino will arrive in the United States Nov. 9, but gave no length for the visit. Presidential spokeswoman Deedee Sytangco said Mrs. Aquino would visit Canada before traveling to the United States but that the schedule had not been completed.

"President Corazon Aquino has accepted the invitation of President Bush to make a state visit," the statement said.

Mrs. Aquino last visited the United States in September 1986, seven months after she took power in the popular uprising that toppled President Ferdinand Marcos.

The November visit was announced following a meeting between Mrs. Aquino and a three-member delegation from the U.S. House of Representatives.

"We discussed her coming to the United States," said the delegation's leader, Rep. Patricia Schroeder, D-Colo. "We're very excited that she's coming, and we want to make her visit very successful. She's very nice to us."

Major issues facing the two countries include the Philippines' nearly $30 billion foreign debt and the future of the six U.S. military bases, whose lease expires in 1991.

U.S. officials have said the Philippines probably would become the second country after Mexico to benefit from American strategy for reducing the debt burden of developing nations.

But some Filipino officials believe the country should forego debt reduction in favor of increased borrowing because of the country's economic growth potential.

The United States and the Philippines are expected to begin talks later this year on whether to extend U.S. military base operations beyond 1991. Any agreement would require two-thirds approval of the 23-member Philippine Senate, where anti-base sentiment is strong.

Mrs. Aquino has refused to say whether she supports keeping the bases. She said this week that she may wait until September of next year before informing Washington of her decision.
