Chinese old guard retiring

By RICK GLADSTONE

PEKING (AP) — More than 140 senior Communist Party officials resigned today, paving the way for a transfer of power from aging revolutionaries to a younger generation charged with promoting China's new open-door policies.

The resignations were announced in letters to the party's Central Committee, which was meeting in a plenary session, the official Xinhua news agency said.

Most of those who retired are Red Army veterans who fought with Mao Tse-tung in the civil war against the Chinese nationalists that ended in 1949 with the Communist takeover.

Among those who announced their retirement were Marshal Ye Jianying, 88, who resigned from the six-member Politburo standing committee, the most powerful party organ; and Politburo member Deng Yingchao, 81, China's highest-ranking woman politician and the widow of Premier Chou En-lai.

Eight other members of the 24-member Politburo also resigned, as did 64 members and alternates of the 344-member Central Committee, 37 members of the 162-member Central Advisory Commission and 30 members of the 132-member Discipline Inspection Commission, Xinhua said.

"Younger comrades of ability and political integrity may join the Central Committee, thus further promoting the succession of the new to the old in the central leading organs," Xinhua quoted the letter of resignation from the outgoing Central Committee members as saying.

Bush carries party politics to South Texas Hispanics

HEBBRONVILLE (AP) — Vice President Bush and a corps of Republican officials courting Hispanic voters came to this rural South Texas community to issue a partisan message — the GOP is the party of the people.

Bush was invited to Hebbronville by Tony Salinas, the local GOP chairman and a personal friend of the vice president.

"Vice president and Mrs. Bush mi casa es su casa (my house is your house), but by the same token I hope you don't make me the same offer because I'll take you up on that" Salinas said at the event on Saturday.

Bush said he was glad to be deep in the Lone Star State.

"I guess the thing that unites us today, transcending parties or political idealogy, is this question of family and patriotism and love of family and these are the reasons I feel so at home here in South Texas because those values.... are what South Texas are all about," he said.

Salinas, the publisher of the Jim Hogg County. Enterprise, sent out thousands of invitations throughout South Texas and about 2,000 people showed up at his ranch outside of town.

Marching bands, drill teams and Republican officials also were part of the ceremonies.

■ Bush trip looks like campaign swing — Page 2A

Also attending the event were U.S. Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas and Texas GOP chairman George Strake. They were joined by U.S. Rep. Tom Loeffler, R-Hunt, and former congressman Kent Hance, a Democrat-turned-Republican.

Loeffler and Hance are making plans to run for the GOP gubernatorial nomination next year.

Loeffler said the Republican contigent traveled to Hebbronville to prove a point.

"It means that the Republican Party is the people's party, that we really care and that we have brought better times for all Texans than ever before," Loeffler said.

Gramm, who introduced Bush, also is a converted Republican, who chastised his old party for not doing enough for the people.

"We knew the problem was the government, not America and so in the time honored tradition of democracy we changed the government...we elected Ronald Reagan and George Bush and under their leadership we've brought the inflation rate to a standstill," Gramm said.

Bush talked about the struggles of migrant farmworkers and education and that Mexican-Americans were among the most decorated in the military.

He also talked about foreign policy.

"I believe in strong good relations with our neighbors...it's absolutely certain, absolutely essential to our foreign policy, that we continue to keep these good relations and make them even better," he said about the U.S.-Mexico relationship.

"I also believe that we've got to stand up for democracy in Central America. We don't need any more Fidel Castros in Central America," Bush said.

The vice president, who also received a sculpture of a mustang, was greeted and bid farewell with shouts of "Bush, Bush, Bush," from the crowd.

"Thanks for honoring Barbara and me. It gets our hear back where it belongs and it makes me thank God for friendship," Bush said told the cheering crowd.

Weinberger: Soviets don't control troops

WASHINGTON (AP) — Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger is accusing the Soviet Union of failing to control its troops following a new military confrontation in East Germany in which a U.S. Army truck was bumped and its occupants held at gunpoint.

Weinberger on Sunday offered the first public word of the Sept. 7 incident in southwestern East Germany. He said the American unit involved was from the same unit as Maj. Arthur Nicholson, an American officer shot and killed by a Soviet guard last March outside an East German base.

The defense secretary, who for months has been denouncing the Soviets over the Nicholson shooting, demanded a Soviet apology for the latest incident, which he said was part of "a continuing series of episodes."

Appearing on CBS-TV's "Face the Nation," Weinberger mentioned only the driver of the truck-like vehicle. But the Defense Department, elaborating later, said two Americans were involved.

"The Soviets bumped his truck deliberately where we were supposed to be, and doing what we were permitted to do under a treaty that is some 40 years old," Weinberger said.

"When he attempted to get out and fix the truck they pushed him back into the truck and held him at gunpoint and detained him for roughly nine hours and generally behaved in the same way in which they did when Maj. Nicholson was killed and murdered," he said.

However, another administration official later said it was unclear if the U.S. vehicle was where it should be, and said the Soviet commander had subsequently apologized profusely for the incident.

Under a U.S.-Soviet pact, a limited number of American soldiers are permitted to travel in East Germany in return for similar rights by Soviet soldiers in West Germany.

Most of the trips — described for years as 'legalized spying," are to report on military activities on each side of the border.

Crash crew burned by sulfuric acid

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Seven workers cleaning up a sulfuric acid spill caused by a freight train derailment suffered burns today and one worker apparently was seriously hurt, authorities said.

A 52-year-old worker, Kenneth Carter, was taken to Wilford Hall U.S. Air Force Hospital and was expected to be transferred to the Brooke Army Medical Center, which has a burn unit, an Air Force spokesman said.

Cleanup crews continued vacuuming toxic sulfuric acid out of the Medina River, contaminated when a Southern Pacific train derailed on a railroad trestle late Saturday.

Airman Bryan Hollenbaugh said five other cleanup crew members were treated and released for minor burns at Wilford Hall during the early morning hours today.

A seventh worker, identified as Armando Leal, was admitted in good condition, Hollenbaugh said. Another worker suffered minor burns Sunday.

Meanwhile, an evacuation ordered within a one-mile radius remained in effect today.

The derailment sent 29 cars crashing 50 feet down to the riverbanks. At least 21 were tankers loaded with the highly corrosive acid, said Art Henson, spokesman for Southern Pacific railroad.

"It looked like beer cans just torn apart," said Carl Mixon, Bexar County fire marshal, of the ruptured tanker cars.

Officials said between 100,000 and 200,000 gallons of acid spilled into the river, killing thousands of fish, sheering off small trees on the riverbanks and creating hazardous fumes.

Workers walk away from a Southern Pacific freight train's crash site just south of San Antonio.

"It's a super mess," Mixon said.

Cleanup crews dumped 100 tons of lime into the river Sunday to neutralize the water. An additional 800 tons were scheduled to be added to the waters during the night, Henson said.

A high school about a quarter mile away from the accident site was ordered closed today.

Henson said a rock quarry close to the school and downstream from the spill was contaminated with a lot of acid.

"Obviously, this is going to be a very expensive derailment," Henson said. "Damage will run well over $1 million."

Gary Job Corps Center lifestyle questioned

SAN MARCOS (AP) — The Gary Job Corps Center, second largest of the nation's 107 Job Corps centers, was designed to create new taxpayers but instead has sometimes produced an violent, drug-ridden community, the San Antonio Light reported.

The newspaper, in a copyright story in Sunday's editions, said that scores of Gary students have found a life filled with violence, sex, drugs, racism and corruption behind the center's guarded gates.

However, Wallace Dockall, who heads the private corporation that runs Gary, denied a serious problem.

"I feel there is more violence today in the normal high school than we have here on this center," Dockall said.

Dockall, executive director of the Texas Educational Foundation, said some public schools have guards at the doors searching students for weapons. The Light quoted Dockall as saying, "We don't have that situation here."

But contacted by The Associated Press Sunday night, Dockall acknowledged the center does search its students. He said he had not read the newspaper article.

The Light reported that more than 375 pages of serious incident reports — rapes, assaults, thefts and serious drug offenses — at Gary Job Corps Center have been compiled by the Department of Labor over the past two years.

Dockall said the number of pages exaggerates the appearance of the crime problems.

Horned toad may follow fate of prehistoric beast it resembles

ODESSA (AP) — If you get down on your knees and look at a horned toad up close, "you think you're back in prehistoric times," says a professor who is pleased with a state law that protects the creatures.

"They look like a little dinosaur of some kind," said Professor Ed Kurtz, who teaches life science at the University of Texas of the Permian Basin.

State officials say the numbers of the miniature lizard, which inhabits the dry brush country of West Texas, are slowly dwindling.

Horned toads, who waddle through sand and rocks with prehistoric slowness, have an appeal that many children find hard to resist. But possession of the creatures can now result in fines or imprisonment.

"I think they're pretty attractive animals," Kurtz said. "They're fun to watch."

CHINA

"We regard it as our bound duty to the party and the cause of communism to implement this strategic decision through our action, so that the current central committee will take a giant step toward rejuvenation," the news agency quoted the letter as saying.

Xinhua said today's plenum was preceded by four days of preliminary discussions, and will be followed by a special party conference Wednesday at which "a number of enterprising and promising young and middle-aged cadres are to be elected."

Xinhua said the plenary session was presided over by party General Secretary Hu Yaobang and China's top leader, 81-year-old Deng Xiaoping.

Earlier today, an announcement on state-run television and the presence of hundreds of VIP cars and buses at the Great Hall of the People indicated the landmark Communist Party plenum was under way.

The plenum, a special 1,000-delegate party conference and a follow-up plenary session expected at the end of the month have been called to rejuvenate the party leadership and review China's five-year plan for 1986-90.

Western sources and Chinese officials have said a new generation of officials would be promoted to carry forward Deng's open-door policies.

Security was increased and a foreign journalist was asked to stop taking pictures at the Great Hall, where important party gatherings are held. Hundreds of cars and buses in the area indicated that delegates were meeting inside.

Hundreds of delegates wearing badges were seen relaxing Sunday at Miyun Reservoir Amusement Park about 50 miles northeast of the capital.

Besides Ye and Deng Yingchao, other Politburo members who announced their retirement were marshals Xu Xiangqian, 84, and Nie Rongzhen, 86. Ulanhu, a 79-year-old Mongolian who was the only member of one of China's national minorities on the Politburo, also quit.

Former army political commissar Wei Guoqing, 72; former regional military commander Li Desheng, 69; and ex-air force commander Zhang Tingfa, 68, also resigned.

Strolls show Bush at campaign best

Copley News Service

LOS ANGELES — The mariachi band was playing loudly in the background at the Hispanic Festival as George Bush demanded more hot sauce for his tamale and a nearby admirer said, almost in awe, "You really know how to eat the Mexican food."

His mouth full of beans and rice and chili relleno, Bush gulped and nodded enthusiastically, just as he had two days earlier in San Francisco's Chinatown when he strolled down historic Grant Avenue grabbing all the roast pig and egg roll he could reach and mugging happily for the television cameras.

For Bush, the two well-publicized walks were just parts of a carefully planned weeklong trip that blended such campaign-style events with official policy pronouncements designed to remind audiences of his lofty perch in Washington.

More than 900 days before the first Republican convention delegate is to be selected, George Herbert Walker Bush, a vice president who wants to be president, was giving voters their first real taste of the 1988 presidential campaign.

While such would-be opponents as Senate Majority Leader Robert Dole of Kansas and Rep. Jack Kemp of Buffalo were back in Washington mired in the daily battles of the Congress, Bush was on what could only be called the campaign trail in Kansas, California and Texas.

With the memories starting to fade of his last trip down that road — a 1984 campaign that subjected Bush to the most intense criticism of his public life — the vice president displayed some of the political strength that makes him a solid early frontruner.

But the vice president also demonstrated that weaknesses remain as he loyally subordinates himself to administration objectives even as more and more Republicans urge him to find a way to step out of the long shadow of Ronald Reagan and to establish his own political identity.

Beyond all, Bush established both that the battle for the 1988 nomination has already begun and that he is determined not to be caught napping by any Republican challenger.

"There simply is no letup between one presidential election and another," said Bush in an interview aboard Air Force II Thursday. "It seems to be the main thrust of everything, with every story reflecting the reality that I'm a likely contender for the presidency. I keep getting reminded of it."

Not that Bush wants people to forget he is a contender, though. Since his re-election as vice president, he has overhauled a staff that had been considered woefully weak, worked assiduously to rebuild relations with the press that had deteriorated badly, and formed a political action committee — the Fund for America's Future — that has already raised about $1.5 million.

"He is trying to create an aura of inevitability," said conservative political analyst Kevin Phillips.

He is also trying to use both his PAC and his presence to raise enough money for other Republicans running in 1986 congressional races that they owe him their gratitude today and their support tomorrow.

"No one can compete with a vice president in terms of raising money and building good relations with a senator or a governor," said John Buckley, press secretary to Kemp. "And Bush is using his trips well."

On the trip which ends Sunday Bush raised more than $500,000 for Sen. Pete Wilson, R-Calif., as well as appearing at fundraisers for the California Republican Party, GOP legislative candidates, the Kansas Republican Party and his own PAC in Texas.

He also conferred with California Gov. George Deukmejian as well as with top party, civic and business officials in the three states, repeatedly facing questions on his 1988 plans.

But Bush continues to insist his actions have almost nothing to do with 1988, saying he is concerned only with keeping the Senate in Republican control.

"I believe the best politics is relatively no politics — try to support the administration that I'm a part of and the president that I believe in," he told the Commonwealth Club in San Francisco.

He acknowledged, though, that, "You don't want to leave your flank exposed. You don't want to make a dumb mistake."

Quoting baseball Hall of Famer Yogi Berra, Bush said, "I don't want to make 'the wrong mistake,' so I am doing a handful of political things that have to be done to protect making a prudent decision after 1986."

That he will make the decision to run for president, there is little doubt. "I know what's beating in my breast," he said. "I guess most of the American people, including my wife, might know what that is."

Whether or not he can become the first sitting vice president to be elected president since Martin Van Buren in 1836 will be determined by many factors beyond his control such as the state of the economy. But his top people are determined to do what they can to preempt the GOP field, and they see his PAC as one way to do that.

"The truth of the matter is that there is a large group of people who have traditionally supported George Bush for whatever office he sought and they are very anxious to have a place to go and very anxious to have an organization that will be responsive to their interests and their interests are to see George Bush seek the presidency," said a top Bush strategist last week.

The PAC, he said, "serves many kinds of demands and one of them, to be sure, is to serve as an organization that provides a communications vehicle to stay in touch with these people."

Many of his top supporters have said they are frustrated, however, by polls that show Bush suffers from a problem that cannot be solved by political action committees — his public image.

To many, the 61-year-old Bush is seen more as a "cheerleader" for the president than as a man who served as a congressman, chairman of the Republican National Committee, envoy to Peking, director of the Central Intelligence Agency and ambassador to the United Nations.

"He has to at some point delineate who he is because there are tremendous questions about what he stands for," said one Republican loyal to Kemp. "At some point, he has to become his own man. The longer he waits, the more dramatic the difference he'll have to show between himself and President Reagan.

"And if there are no differences, then some ideological rudder is missing," he said. "It's hard to place him. He's got to begin focusing on himself and his own issues."

Earlier Craig Fuller, Bush's new chief of staff, had predicted that Bush would do just that and carve out some issue on which he could establish his own identity. But that has proven difficult to do, in large part because Bush is loathe to do anything suggesting differences with Mr. Reagan.

"I'm not looking for any issue," said Bush, complaining about "this real quest to drive a wedge between me and the president, to kind of spell out differences between me and the president. It's just not a game I can play."

He added, "I am not going to have the president wondering whether the vice president is out there carving out his own turf and opposing the administration."

But Bush strategists hope the vice president can adopt some issues — beyond drug interdiction, terrorism and deregulation, his current areas of specialization — that can give him an identity of his own and a link with the future.

One of these is high techology and the question of how American industry can remain competitive in a global economy. To that end, Bush visited a high-tech plant in Santa Clara and talked repeatedly on this trip about trade issues.

"This is a natural marriage of current economic conditions with his foreign policy strengths," said Marlin Fitzwater, Bush's press secretary.

More troubling than finding an issue to emphasize, however, may be the problems facing Bush as he tries to communicate his vision of the future to the voters. Bush was often criticized during his 1980 run for the presidency for talking too much about political mechanics — what he called the "Big Mo" — instead of painting his vision in broad brush strokes.

"I came in second best in the vision department," acknowledged Bush, who added hopefully that "It is less of a problem than it might be if we were starting out from scratch. I couldn't come up with a vision 180 degrees opposite the administration."

But Bush knows he faces a battle from the party's conservative wing, many of whose leaders believe the vice president is not one of them and who recall his criticism of Mr. Reagan's economic proposals as "voodoo economics."

By dint of his loyalty to Mr. Reagan, Bush has mollified many of his critics on the right, but he undid some of that progress in July when he helped the Ripon Society, a group of moderate Republicans, to raise $250,000.

"This alliance with the Ripon Society has scared the hell out of a lot of conservatives and suggests that George Bush isn't a real conservative," said John T. Dolan, of the National Conservative Political Action Committee, in a letter after the Bush speech.

Bush brushes off such criticism, noting recent polls showing him preferred by rank-and-file conservatives over Kemp and Dole.

"You can't keep everyone happy and, p.s., you shouldn't try," said Bush. "I don't think I have a problem over there."

Political analyst Phillips agrees with Bush's assessment, but he suggested the vice president faces another political hurdle that may be more challenging to overcome.

"Bush's real problem is that... there's a feeling that he's not a very exciting or interesting guy," said Phillips. "After eight years of a vice president in office, he tends to be a little boring. And George can be a little more boring than many of the others.

"They've got to come up with some pizzazz, and there's no perception that there really is very much pizzazz there," he said.

This problem surfaced last week when Bush fell far short of drawing a capacity crowd at Kansas State University, a contrast with earlier speakers such as Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., who filled Ahearn Fieldhouse. And it is compounded by the prospect of Bush becoming more and more visible in trips.

GERMANY

Since the March 24 shooting of Nicholson outside a base near Potsdam, East Germany, the United States has held a series of meetings with the Soviets to complain of harassment against members of the U.S. missions. During that time, there was another incident, involving the collision of U.S. and Soviet vehicles.

"We have had promises by the Soviets that they would tell their people not to use force," Weinberger said. "Either they're not keeping their promises or they are very poorly disciplined."

Asked why the incident had not been announced by the United States at the time it happened, Weinberger said: "We're trying our best to get the conditions corrected. We're not interested in publicity."

He said a protest had been lodged with the Soviets and "we hope that ultimately they will do what they say they are going to do and that is discipline their troops and control their troops."

He said there were reports that the Soviet mission had promised to look into the latest incident, but "we have not had an apology."

He added there had never been any Soviet compensation for Nicholson's family.

Asked if the Soviet action would have an impact on President Reagan's summit meeting with Kremlin leader Mikhail Gorbachev in Geneva in November, Weinberger said, "No. I don't think so, you just have to recognize that this is Soviet behavior. The meeting that the president has scheduled with Mr. Gorbachev should take place. I trust it will take place.

"But it ought to take place with the full knowledge by the American people of the problems we are dealing with."

Weinberger's announcement came in response to a reporter's question, and appeared to take the White House, the State Department — and even Pentagon officials — by surprise. Public affairs duty officers at all three branches initially initially said they had no information beyond what Weinberger had said.

JOBS

"We have to describe these incidents at length. That does not give any indication how many incidents (have occurred)," he said. He said he did not know how many criminal incidents had been reported in the two-year period.

The newspaper also quotes Hays County District Attorney Bill Rugeley, a self-proclaimed "big supporter of Gary."

Rugeley told the newspaper he remembers that shortly after he was elected in 1973, a gang of Gary students raped two girls "just a stone's throw from the police station."

Despite such incidents, Rugeley said, Gary students have not posed a major problem for his office.

"Most of the cases have been shoplifting or underage consumption of alcohol," he said. "I think the good that Gary's brought to San Marcos outweighs the bad."

The Gary center has been billed by supporters as a model of how one of the last remaining Great Society programs is still transforming America's disadvantaged into productive citizens.

Gary operates on an 800-acre tract on the Caldwell-Hays County line, just four miles from downtown San Marcos and 40 miles north of San Antonio.

TOADS

That appeal with humans has led to protective restrictions covering horned toads, said Amos Cooper of the Texas Parks and Wildlife Department in Austin.

Texas law, since 1977, has mandated a $100 to $200 fine upon the first conviction for illegally possessing or killing a horned toad, said Cooper.

He said violators face a $200 to $500 fine and 30 to 90 days imprisonment for a second offense, and a $500 to $2,000 fine and six months to a year in jail for a third conviction.

Only persons with special permits for scientific uses may now collect the toads, he said.

The horned toad is listed as a protected species. Parks department officials plan to include the creature in its new "threatened" species category soon, said Bruce Thompson, a parks department spokesman.

Two kinds of horned toads, more correctly called horned lizards, thrive in Texas. They are the round-tailed lizard and the Texas horned lizard, said Charles McKinney, a former UTPB professor and an expert on reptiles.

Shrinking food supplies and avid collectors have limited the toad's numbers, creating a need to protect the creatures, he said.

Before Texas passed laws about 20 years ago to protect them, large numbers of horned toads were being collected and sold, McKinney said.

TDC official: Single out violent inmates

HOUSTON (AP) — If the more violent Texas prison inmates are singled out and held in maximum security cells, knifings and homicides within the Texas Department of Corrections would be curtailed, a TDC official said.

During a current lockdown, officials are scrutinizing a group of about 2,300 inmates who fall in "close custody," a category between medium and maximum security.

This category allows some freedom of movement and it is essential that violent inmates be sinlged out and reclassified, said James E. Riley, deputy director of operations for the TDC.

The escalating warfare between gangs within the nation's second-largest prison system has resulted in seven killings since Labor Day and led prison officials to order 17,000 inmates kept in their cells in a widespread lockdown.

Gangsterism, which Riley terms a "critical problem," is a contagious situation that he said has spread from other states.

STATE

Of the two major Hispanic gangs, the Texas Syndicate has been long established, but the Mexican Mafia, which is prevalent in California prisons, has had "a dramatic increase in membership within the past 18 months," Riley said.

There are about five to 10 gangs in Texas prisons with estimated membership ranging between 600 and 1,000, he said.

When U.S. District Judge William Wayne Justice abolished the building tender system in Texas prisons, it left a power void that gang members are killing one another to fill, Riley said.

The tender system, in which inmate-guards had authority over other prisoners, was outlawed about five years ago as a reform in a suit brought against the TDC by inmate David Ruiz and others.

"We fully intend to comply with eveything that's in the Ruiz litigation. We're a very fast train moving down that road," Riley said.

"There's not another state (prison) in the nation that has the magnitude of litigation the TDC is under right now. We really are the forerunner. What happens in Texas sets the trend in what happens in the entire nation," he said.

Riley said about 3 percent of the total prison population of about 37,500 are considered violent.

Although the number of knifings in prisons has fallen this year, the quest for clout among gang members has produced more homicides this year than for all of 1984, he said.

"There will always be groups struggling for power. We'll never eliminate that, but I think we're going to have control over those groups down the road," Riley, who joined the TDC last year after 22 years in the U.S. Army, said.

"Texas has always been known as having one of the best prison systems in the country, and I think we're going to go back to that."

He predicts peer pressure will reduce gang activity.

Mexico greets 175th year of freedom

LAREDO (AP) — Mexicans and Americans jointly celebrated Sunday the 175th anniversary of Mexico's independence and San Antonio Mayor Henry Cisneros was honored for his contributions to both countries.

Cisneros, who spoke mostly in Spanish during his 10-minute speech, arrived in Laredo hours after attending similar functions in his hometown.

"In Los Angeles and New York, in Miami and Dallas, in Houston and yes, in San Antonio, tonight also is for celebrating this occasion," he said.

"The reason is because we celebrate something much more important than the birth of one nation; we celebrate human courage; we celebrate a spirit of liberty; we celebrate ideals that will live year after year," Cisneros said.

Cisneros, who served on a bipartisan commision on Latin America, was introduced as a man who bridged the gap between Anglos and Hispanics.

Early Sunday, Laredo officials met their Nuevo Laredo, Mexico, counterparts at the international bridge for a 45-minute ceremony.

A Laredo high school band played the Mexican national anthem and Nuevo Laredo's city band played "The Star Spangled Banner."

State Sen. John Sharp of Victoria was the master of ceremonies for the bilingual occasion.

"We Americans are here to join our Mexican friends and cross this bridge of friendship, to Mexican soil and to celebrate with them their day of days," Sharp said.

After the ceremony, Cisneros served as grand marshal for a parade that wound through the streets of Laredo across the international bridge into Nuevo Laredo.

In Laredo, activities have included golf and softball tournaments, music festivals and dances, a midget bullfight and rodeo and arts and crafts exhibits.

In Nuevo Laredo, the celebration began several weeks ago and will be capped Monday.

Cities across the southern United States with large Mexican American communities celebrate "dieciseis de septiembre," or Sept. 16th.

On the evening of Sept. 15, 1810, a Mexican priest, Miguel Hidalgo y Costillo called on Mexicans to revolt against their Spanish rulers.

Mother, missing son reunited in Dallas

DALLAS (AP) — Authorities said a 21-month-old boy was confused but otherwise in good condition when he was reunited Sunday with his mother, who had not seen him since a babysitter disappeared with him about six weeks ago.

Sharon Fitzgibbon, a real estate agent in Waldorf, Md., said her son, Michael, "had just gotten roused up out of bed. I think he was confused about what was going on. But he recognized me."

The baby sitter, Tammy Lynn Giles of Waldorf, surrendered to Pittsburgh police Saturday and told officers she left the boy in the care of a couple at a motel in Dallas.

Dallas police did not identify the couple, who told investigators Miss Giles had asked them to babysit the toddler several times. Police said they would not file charges against the couple.

"This girl went door to door looking for somebody to babysit for this child," said investigator Cathy Harding of the Dallas police youth division.

Miss Giles faces extradition as a juvenile on Maryland charges of kidnapping and abduction. She was in custody Sunday in a juvenile detention center in Pittsburgh.

The babysitter apparently had taken the boy and hitchhiked to Pittsburgh and Phoenix before arriving in Dallas around Aug. 10, police and child welfare officials said.

Bill Betzen, a child welfare supervisor, said Sunday the boy seemed fine when he was brought Saturday to the Dallas County Emergency Children's Shelter.

"This is an unusual situation. Emotionally, I have no doubt this entire episode was very confusing to the child," Betzen said.

Authorities said the little boy and the babysitter disappeared Aug. 4, after his mother left him with his 15-year-old sister, who then asked Miss Giles to watch the boy because she needed to go out.

Betzen said when the little boy was brought to the shelter, "he was a normal, active 2-year-old running about the office."

"We admit he was somewhat confused," Betzen said. "He was calling some members of my staff 'mama.'"

Mrs. Fitzgibbon went to Pittsburgh 10 days after the kidnapping and pleaded for any information about his whereabouts. She flew to Dallas on Saturday to claim her son.

Police speculated last month that Miss Giles may have taken the baby to the Pittsburgh area because her boyfriend, Mark Flick of Pittsburgh, was released last week from a state correctional institution.

Police said Miss Giles called police on the advice of her boyfriend and told them she did not know why she took the child.

"I called and talked to the people down there and was positive before I even left the house that it was him," Mrs. Fitzgibbon said in a telephone interview Sunday afternoon.

MADD wants Houston DWI bail increased

HOUSTON (AP) — Harris County's 12 misdemeanor court judges should increase the bail for those charged with driving while intoxicated or driving with a suspended license from $800 to $2,000, a newspaper ad by Mothers Against Drunk Driving says.

In the ad printed last week, Texas MADD director Marinele Timmons suggested that anyone charged with either offense be jailed in lieu of the $2,000 bond.

The current bond rates include $800 for DWI and $200 bonds posted by bondsmen, or $75 cash bond for persons charged with suspended licenses.

The quarter-page advertisement was paid for by a group called "Friends of MADD Committee." The committee's chairman, Jerry Ribnick, heads Ribnick and Associates, a public relations firm for the Professional Bondsmen of the United States.

"I put it together and helped get the money together," Ribnick said. "We're glad to help."

About 22,000 persons were charged with DWI in Harris County last year, down from the 26,000 in 1983, records show.

Of those charged last year, about 75 percent or 16,500 were bailed out of jail by bail bondsmen and about 1,200 or 5.5 percent got personal recognizance bonds.

Bondsmen charge about $115 to $180 to post the current $800 bond, Houston bail bondsmen Gerald Monks said. If the bonds were raised, the fee would jump to $200 to $250, he said.

The MADD advertisement says judges should not release persons charged with DWI and DWLS on personal recognizance or low bonds.

The ad said 92 percent of those charged with DWI and DWLS in Harris County plead guilty or are convicted. Releasing them on low bonds or personal recognizance would "put more guilty people back on the street," the ad suggested.

Ms. Timmons said posting of bond is a legal sanction that all persons charged with DWI should have to suffer. She said MADD's main concern is that reduced bonds not be used to alleviate overcrowding in the county jail.

The Harris County jail system is under court order to reduce overcrowding and improve conditions.

Jim Oitzinger, an attorney appointed by U.S. District Judge Carl Bue to oversee improvements within the jail system, estimates that setting $2,000 bonds would increase the number of persons in jail by 300-400.

It costs $30 per day to jail a person, meaning that the annual tab would be $3.3 million to $5.8 million, he said.

There are now 4,200 persons in the Harris County Jail, which has a legal capacity of about 4,000, Oitzinger said.

Odessa officer expert on satanists

ODESSA (AP) — A college professor and reserve sheriff's officer who has researched satanic cults says there are probably 10,000 devil worshipers in Texas.

Gayland Hurst, who has also collected satanic literature and other materials, said one work, "The Book of Shadows," gives a glimpse inside the world of devil worship.

The manual contains a step-by-step guide to rites and symbols of satanic groups and its parchment pages warn satanists that losing it will cost them their lives, Hurst said.

Hurst, who doubles as an Ector County Sheriff's reserve deputy captain, said he recovered the book as evidence following a suspected crime in Odessa.

Experts estimate that there are 10,000 devil worshippers in Texas, said Hurst, who teaches a five-hour segment on satanism to students in Odessa College law enforcement classes on "Deviant Sexual Behavior."

Hurst, 50, said he taught similar classes throughout Texas and also served as consultant on about 30 Texas, Florida and Illinois crimes that investigators linked to devil worship.

Dade County Deputy Chief Medical Examiner Charles Wetli in Miami, Fla. said that he wrote letters on the subject to Hurst after the Odessan showed an interest in Miami's occult-related crimes.

"Very rarely do we see anything we can definitely relate to satanism," Wetli said, adding that Miami police often notice "all kinds of strange beads and related things, evidence of animal sacrifice."

But a recent spate of grave robbings in Dade County left Florida officials speculating over ties to the occult.

"The heads (of corpses) had been taken off" for use in caldrons by worshipers of the dead, Wetli said.

Odessa Police Detective Sgt. Richard Hirst, supervisor of the Crimes Against Persons Section, said he found Hurst's instruction on satanism "interesting."

Tony Cordova, former Fort Stockton police chief, said Friday that he called on Hurst's expertise to identify devil-worship cult members living in Fort Stockton during the 1970s.

"Some transients that were into satanic cults set up residence here for a while," said Cordova.

The FBI sought one group member, who later served a prison term, Cordova said. He said police turned to Hurst for advice after discovering in the man's house a satanic bible, a black "altar cloth" imprinted with a pentagram — or five-pointed star — and a goat's head, a sign of the devil.

"I was concerned," Cordova said. "Just prior to that, we heard rumors that a little girl that had disappeared was taken for a (satanic) sacrifice."

Two groups of satanists may be meeting in north and east Ector County, and one reportedly meets in San Angelo now, Hurst said.

STATE IN BRIEF

Texas loses tomato war

TWIN LAKES, Colo. (AP) — Colorado again defeated Texas as the fourth annual Tomato War mess ended Sunday.

Greg Adams, 22, of Aspen used a hurling arm that used to pitch for Michigan State to wallop Dave Seal, 27 and also from Aspen, in the grand finale about noon Sunday.

Of the 500 Colorado and Texas entrants who started this year's war Saturday morning, only 68 still had clean white T-shirts and qualified for Sunday morning's final rounds.

Three Coloradoans and one Texan wound up in the final battle at the Inn of the Black Wolf. Texans were outnumbered 30 to 1 among this year's entrants, the inn's owner said. On Saturday, participants were lined up in 11-member teams. On Sunday, the competition was individual.

Adams represented the defending-champion team, "Knights of the Round Tomato."

Also in the final round were Mike Hansen of Avon and J.C. Conklin of Austin, Texas.

Texas guardsmen killed

CAMP MERRILL, Ga. (AP). — A team from the U.S. Army Safety Center will investigate a helicopter crash that killed two Texas Army National Guardsmen on weekend maneuvers, officials said.

The two pilots died killed Sunday morning when their Cobra Helicopter Gunship crashed into trees and burned while on a training flight at the U.S. Army's Ranger School near Dahlonega.

Texas Army National Guard spokesman Maj. David Cottam identified the two men as 1st Lt. Kevin M. Cardwell, 23, of Round Rock, the pilot in command, and 1st Lt. Michael L. Pape, 27, of Killeen, the co-pilot.

Cottam said the accident will be investigated by a team from the U.S. Army Safety Center in Fort Rucker, Ala., and Texas aviation officer Co. Herbert Purtele.

No cause for the crash, which occurred about 9 a.m. EDT about 40 miles northeast of Gainesville, was immediately determined.

Cottam said there was no radio communication from the men indicating any problems. Hem said the last call from the aviators was to another chopper on its way to join them, and there was no emergency call.

Gays driven from park

ARLINGTON (AP) — A year after City Council ordered an "assault" to rid Randol Mill Park of homosexuals, police officials are proclaiming victory.

"The word has definitely gotten out that this not a place for gays to hang out," said Deputy Police Chief Ed Watson. "It is safe to go back."

Police say they have made only six arrests this year for public lewdness or indecent exposure as compared to 100 last year.

They also say the park is no longer listed in what they call a national "cruising guide" for gay men.

"We called them and told them to take it out," Watson told the Dallas Morning News.

On orders from City Council, police stepped up patrols in the park last year and assigned undercover officers to the area.

At the time, police said they had received numerous complaints from people who said they saw homosexual acts along the park's nature trails or had been approached by men

Welch not 'anti-gay'

HOUSTON (AP) — A January gay rights referendum and Mayor Kathy Whitmire's "arrogance of power" is what former Houston Mayor Louie Welch says prompted him to run to the position he held for 10 years.

Welch, also former president of the Houston Chamber of Commerce, spearheaded the chamber's controversial opposition to the job discrimination referendum. Voters rejected the measure by an overwhelming margin.

But the former mayor denies that he is anti-gay. He said if one of his 14 grandchildren were homosexual, "I would still love him. I can't live another person's life, and I wouldn't try to."

"I think that people who parade their sexuality no matter what it is are invading my privacy, and I think it's wrong," Welch said. "But at the chamber we had a number of people who are homosexuals and there was never a question of their talent or their salaries or any discrimination of any kind."

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠J7 ♡QJ92 ◇K106 ♣J876
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	Pass	1 NT	Pass
2 NT	Pass	?

What action do you take?

A.—Your first reaction might be that you have said all you are going to say. However, your hand is actually better than its 8 HCP might suggest. You have an honor in partner's suit and good intermediates. We would venture on to game.

Q.2—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠AK874 ♡63 ◇A105 ♣KJ6
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	Pass	1 ♠	2 ♡
2 ♠	Pass	?

What do you bid now?

A.—If you routinely bid four spades, you do not appreciate the full value of your hand. The fact that partner has made a free bid means that he is likely to be better than minimum, and your hand is certainly delectable. Start with a bid of three clubs. When partner learns that his suit is solidified, he might be able to cue-bid the enemy suit, which could propel you to a laydown slam.

Q.3—East-West vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠10763 ♡9852 ◇A83 ♣A5
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	1 ♡	Pass	Pass
Dble	2 ♡	?

What action do you take?

A.—Your hand should develop at least three tricks defensively, possibly more. Partner quite probably will produce four tricks. That looks like a sure two-trick penalty to us, perhaps even a bonanza. Double.

Q.4—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠652 ♡Q762 ◇853 ♣J102
The bidding has proceeded:

West	North	East	South
1 ♡	Dble	Pass	?

What do you bid now?

A.—It behooves you to get out of the auction as cheaply as possible. That means you should bid one spade. A pass is too bizarre for words, and you would deserve a life sentence for even thinking of bidding one no trump—that shows far more values than you have and invites partner to double any further competitive action by the opponents.

Q.5—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AK8 ◇AK7 ◇J93 ♣A1076
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♣	Pass	1 ♠	Pass

What do you bid now?

A.—With 19 HCP and good support for partner, some sort of jump is called for. The choice lies between two no trump and three spades. Both are flawed—you don't have a diamond stopper for no trump and you have only three-card support for partner's suit. We feel that the jump to two no trump is the better choice—it certainly paints a more descriptive picture of your hand.

Q.6—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠KJ ♡9872 ◇Q9 ♣J8542
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	Pass	1 NT	Pass
2 ◇	Pass	2 ♠	Pass
3 ♠	Pass	?

What action do you take?

A.—Points, schmoints. This isn't the time to worry about whether you have 7 points or 9. What matters here that is that you have three honor cards in partner's two suits, and he is looking for game. If he needs more than that on this auction, it's his bidding that needs scrutinizing, not yours.

Pageant work began when she was 6

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) — Susan Akin says her quest for the Miss America title began at age 6 in the Miss La Petite Pageant in Meridian, Miss., and was worth all the leg lifts, nights in plastic wrap and losing a boyfriend.

Susan Akin

Miss Akin, 21, a computer's pick to become Miss America 1986, said Sunday during her first news conference as reigning queen that winning had taught her "never stop dreaming."

When her name was announced Saturday night in Convention Hall here, the reigning Miss Mississippi said she thought, "I finally did it."

"This tops it all," she said. "What else could you ask for besides being Miss America?"

Miss Akin, who performs magic tricks and has studied public relations for three years at the University of Mississippi, said she had entered more than 100 pageants since becoming Miss La Petite when she was 6.

Her other titles have included Ideal Miss, Little Miss Meridian, Little Miss America and Miss University.

"I feel that today is the start of my career," said Miss Akin, who won a $30,000 scholarship and can expect to earn more than $100,000 in appearance fees during her yearlong reign.

She said she lost a boyfriend because of her concentration on winning.

"But that doesn't really matter if you want to be Miss America," she said.

Miss Akin said she tried dermabrasion, a dermatological sanding technique, in an effort to rid her right cheek of several pockmarks, but it didn't work.

Earlier in the week, she said that she used to sleep covered in plastic wrap before pageants to lose a few extra pounds of water weight.

During a news conference Sunday, Miss Akin strode smoothly through an answer about her views on abortion, saying she thinks it is a moral issue, not a legal issue, and that she believes in a woman's right to choose.

But the new Miss America appeared embarrassed and giggled when pressed for her opinion on premarital sex. After a long pause, she said it was "up to the individual," but it wasn't for her.

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — Heart transplant patient Michael Drummond, who showed mild signs Saturday of rejecting his donor heart, remained in fair condition and was "resting comfortably," a University Medical Center spokeswoman said.

Drummond's doctors weren't overly concerned about Saturday's rejection signs because "this is considered normal for a person at this time after transplant," said Nina Trasoff, a spokeswoman for the hospital said Sunday.

Drummond, 25, received heart heart of a Texas traffic accident victim Sept. 7 after he was kept alive for nine days with a Jarvik-7 artificial heart. His own heart was close to failure after it was damaged by a viral infection, doctors said.

Drummond was resting comfortably Sunday and was watching television, hospital spokesman Ed Arnold said.

CHICAGO (AP) — Jackie Gleason charmed the house at the Raccoon Club when he took up the baton to lead the Chicago Footwarmers Hot Dance Orchestra through a 1920s high-stepper.

Gleason, 69, a bandleader before becoming a full-time comedian, conducted a rendition of "You're Gonna Lose Your Gal." He had been in the audience Friday until invited onstage by bandleader and tuba player Mike Walbridge.

It was only a coincidence that the appearance took place at the Raccoon Club. Ralph Kramden, the character Gleason played in the "Honeymooners" television series, was a member of the International Order of the Friendly Raccoons.

FITZGERALD, Ga. (AP) — Erskine Caldwell, who angered many Southerners with piercing novels about the suffering of poor rural families, says he has no apologies for his works.

"I don't care anything about fame or recognition," the 81-year-old author of "Tobacco Road," "God's Little Acre" and more than 50 other books said at a press conference last week. "If one of my short stories opened someone's eyes, then I have been successful. But I don't need a monument of any kind."

Caldwell and his wife, Virginia, were in Fitzgerald for two weeks as part of a state-sponsored writers-in-residence program.

BUCHAREST, Romania (AP) — Although the Rev. Billy Graham's tour in this Communist country was not publicized in the press, 150,000 Romanians turned up to hear his sermons, a spokesman for the evangelist said.

The schedule of Graham's weeklong series of services was circulated mostly by word of mouth, spokesman Ed Plowman said Sunday. Graham is the first foreign evangelist to tour Romania since the communist takeover in 1947.

Church sources say Romania has the largest Baptist population in the Soviet bloc, with about 300,000 members.

RANGOON, Burma (AP) — Former President Richard M. Nixon visited the shrine of the world's largest reclining Buddha and met with Burmese President U Ne Win on the first day of a two-day visit to this Asian nation.

Nixon, accompanied by former Treasury Secretary John Connally, was greeted at the airport Sunday by Foreign Minister U Chit Hlaing and U.S. Ambassador Daniel A. Odonohue.

Today's agenda included a visit to Rangoon's Shwedagon Pagoda, where Nixon rang the wishing bell in 1953 when he was vice president under Dwight Eisenhower. Local belief has it that visitors who ring the bell will return to Burma.

Nixon's tour has included stops in Thailand, South Korea, Japan, China, Hong Kong, Singapore and Malaysia. He will visit Pakistan next.

NEW YORK (AP) — Joe Masiell, the singer and actor best known for his role in the musical "Jacques Brel is Alive and Well and Living in Paris," died Friday of bone cancer. He was 45.

Masiell replaced the lead in the cast of "Jacques Brel" in 1969, and thereafter performed in the show somewhere every year, according to Lily Turner, the producer. The tenor also appeared on the stage in "Cindy," "Different Times," "Leaves of Grass," "Dear World" and in the Shakespeare Festival's Central Park production of the "Non Pasquale." He was the featured artist in a musical, produced by Mrs. Turner and based on his nightclub act, "Joe Masiell Not at the Palace."

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — Muriel Burrell Smith, who created the title role of "Carmen Jones" on Broadway in 1943 and sang for other actresses in movies, died Friday. She was 62.

The mezzo-soprano and actress appeared in 1953's "Moulin Rouge" and sang songs for a sound track that Zsa Zsa Gabor mouthed on the screen. She also sang songs on the sound track for the role of Bloody Mary in the film "South Pacific."

Her biggest fame came overseas, where she spent much of her career after finding difficulties in this country because she was black.

Stylish battle

Times certainly do change. It wasn't all that many years ago — 20 or so — that the rock group, the Beatles, landed in the United States and spawned a cultural revolution that, in some respects, is still being felt. Those were the days of "long hair" which, ironically, by standards set since that time, would today be considered modest, at best.

Those also were the days of rebellion against authority and more than a few youngsters got to make a trip home from school early with note from principal to parents clutched in hand and specific instructions not to return to school until their haircuts met the dress code.

The battle lines were drawn. Young people and parents "had it out" the crises typically blew over after a visit to the local barber shop. (For the information of young readers, in those days barber shops were commonplace while hair-styling salons were rare).

Two decades later, young women in Rosenberg are being reprimanded for wearing their hair — you guessed it — "excessively short." School officials say their hairstyles are extreme and distracting, and they refused to allow the girls to attend class until their hair was restyled.

To make matters even more peculiar, this week in the Southeast Texas community parents gathered at a special meeting not to show support for the school officials, as might have been the case 20 years ago, but to protest the school's dress code. The code, among other things, says students must be neat, clean, and well-groomed, "while at the same time allow for current styles so long as they are not disruptive to the school environment."

Will this battle between students and school officials never end? Oh well, school officials should keep their faith. Now that they've finally learned to live with longer hair, all they need do is wait about another 20 years and that will be the fashionable style once again!

Saying no to PLO

Why are Israel and the United States opposed to engaging in Middle East peace negotiations with the Palestine Liberation Organization? Those who may have still been pondering that question received a clearcut answer the other day from Secretary of State George Shultz.

In an unequivocal "no" to the PLO, the secretary declared that "those who perpetrate violence deal themselves out of the peace process."

It is significant that Shultz made this remark after an extensive discussion with Israeli Finance Minister Yitzhak Modai. It demonstrates once again that officials in Washington and Jerusalem are of one mind when it comes to distrusting the PLO's terrorist leader, Yasser Arafat.

Jordan's King Hussein has been making moves to breathe new life into negotiations between Israel and Egypt and other nations in the area. But when Arafat got into the picture, and had a hand in forming a delegation to talk with American representatives, the U.S. had a right to be reluctant to talk. After all, Arafat and his gang have yet to admit that Israel has a right to exist as a sovereign state.

Shultz's suspicions are well-grounded. But he continues to seek to get negotiations back on track. While he was saying "no" to the PLO, he said the U.S. is doing "everything we can to bring about direct negotiations between an Arab interlocutor who will be able to speak authoritatively, and Israel." That flatly rules out Arafat and his terrorist troops.

Another View:

Presidential fiddling

By the administration's own estimates, the federal budget deficit is currently running at a rate of $210 billion a year; the U.S. trade balance is running a deficit of roughly $140 billion a year, and the Farm Credit System is so deeply sunk in bad loans that it is asking for a federal bailout. At this rate, the United States, which has been a major creditor nation for many years, will, within another year or two, have the largest foreign debt on earth.

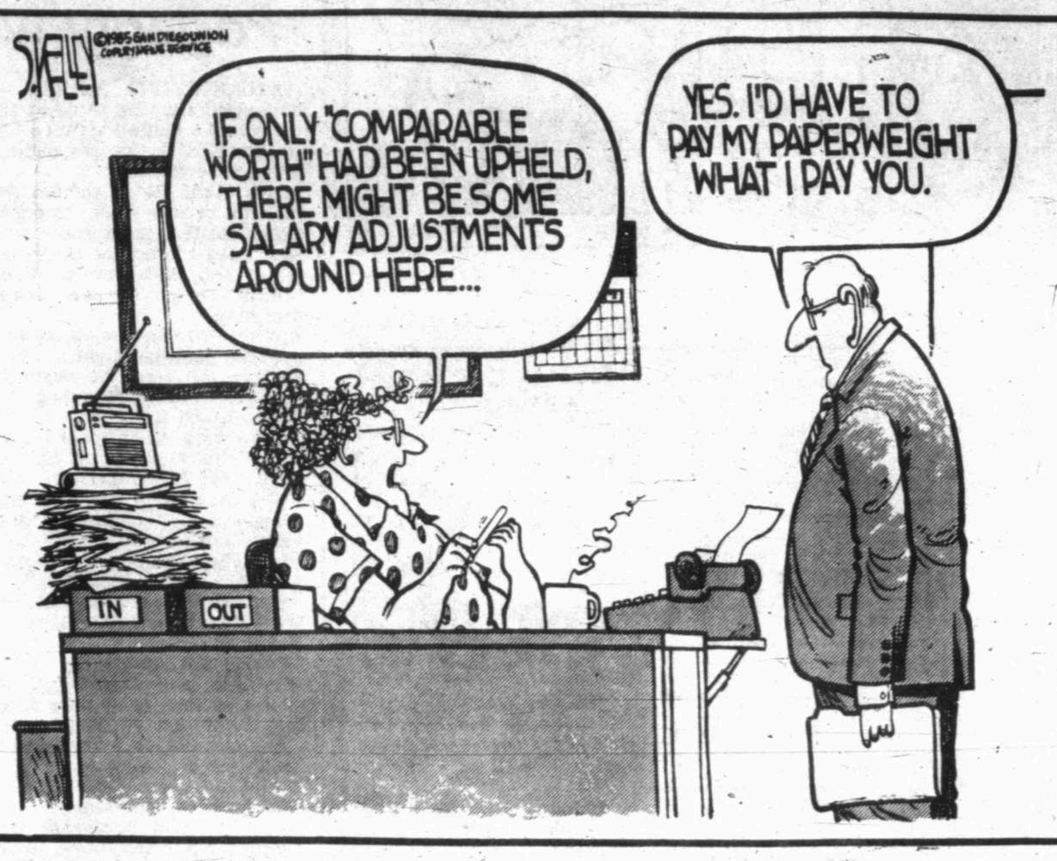

In light of all that, what is the president of the United States doing? In what his aides call "the fall offensive," he is stumping the country for tax reform. The reluctant and the doubtful in Congress, says the White House, better come along because the president remains popular — the Gallup Poll says his personal popularity is up from 62 percent to 65 percent in the past six months — but next to the deficit numbers, the poll data and the rhetoric of spokesman Speakes don't seem to impress too many, even on the Republican side. California Republican Sen. Pete Wilson, long one of the president's most faithful followers, recently declared that he had abandoned the president's peculiar priorities.

There is a widespread tendency to attribute the president's political difficulties to his lame-duck status; he cannot run again, and thus his coattails are considerably shorter than they were four years ago. But, in fact, the irrelevance of tax reform at a time like this, regardless of the merits of the president's plan, makes that issue itself something of a lame duck, a matter properly perceived by most Americans as secondary to the deficits, the high value of the dollar, and the concomitant inability of American manufacturers to compete in world markets.

House Speaker Tip O'Neill declares that this country is losing 3,500 jobs a day. That number may be neither entirely accurate nor entirely attributable to the budget deficit and the competition from foreign imports on which he blames it, but there's no doubt that O'Neill has the issue, substantive and political, and that the president does not.

The president's tax reform stumping has about it the air of a sort of premeditated activism, an effort to look presidential on something having vaguely to do with the economy without the need to do the hard work or make the tough decisions on which any real effort to deal with the deficits depends. So there is a lot of tough talk, the familiar reach for the mantle of a popular American hero, most recently Harry Truman in Independence, and the attack on unspecified "special interests." In the meantime, the special interests that resist the tax increases and that block urgently needed budget cuts — in defense, in entitlement benefits — without which no genuine deficit reduction is possible, continue unchallenged, and the jawboning on international trade that the president ought to be doing around the clock remains undone. While the president fiddles, the economy lurches toward disaster.

'Spy dust' no new development

WASHINGTON — Apparently the KGB has been sprinkling "spy dust" on diplomats, dissidents and other suspicious characters for years. As far back as 1959, an infernal chemical was reportedly used to track one of the CIA's most valuable "moles" inside Soviet intelligence.

Jack Anderson

The story of how he was caught was brought to the CIA by a KGB defector in 1964. Yet. Adm. Stansfield Turner, director of the CIA from 1977 to 1981, said he'd never heard of "spy dust." Neither had Malcolm Toon, who was U.S. ambassador in Moscow from 1976 until 1979.

While they were kept in the dark, the chemical dust was used to trace the movements of U.S. diplomats around Moscow. It has been detected several times since 1976, but its use against U.S. diplomats has increased greatly since last May.

The worry is that the stuff can be harmful to their health. It has been identified as nitrophenylpentadienal — or NPPD — which can cause cancer.

The diplomats pick up the surveillance chemical on their skin from, say, a car steering wheel. Then they leave an invisible trail on every doorknob they touch or hand they shake. The KGB simply administers another chemical to a suspicious hand or doorknob, and the telltale NPPD becomes fluorescent.

This is how a U.S. mole, known as Col. Popov, reportedly was detected. The story, which was both a triumph and a tragedy for the CIA, is locked in the agency's "top secret" files. But here are the essential details:

Popov was an officer of the GRU, Soviet military intelligence. He made contact with the CIA while he was stationed in Vienna in 1953. Later he was transferred to East Berlin, where he continued to pass secrets to the CIA.

After he was called back to Moscow, Popov continued to provide important intelligence to the CIA through Russell Langelle, an intelligence officer working under diplomatic cover. On Oct. 16, 1959, while exchanging a note on a Moscow bus, Popov and Langelle were arrested by the KGB.

Langelle was interrogated and kicked out of the country. Popov was executed.

Not until 1964, when KGB Maj. Yuri Nosenko defected in Geneva, did the CIA learn how the KGB monitored Popov's movements. Among the wealth of information Nosenko gave his debriefers was the disclosure that Popov had been caught through the use of a chemical.

Nosenko didn't know the exact chemical agent used, but he reported that Langelle's Russian maid had dusted the diplomat's shoes with it. The KGB, using a sniffer dog, tracked Langelle to a mailbox where the police found a note he had mailed to Popov.

Footnote: We interviewed the CIA case officer, George Kisvalter, who handled Popov in Berlin. Now 75 years old, he said he couldn't comment because he is still employed by the CIA.

UNDER THE DOME: Congress, widely accused of extravagance, can be truly tightfisted when it involves its members' own money. In 1982, the House Administration Committee began charging members for extra prints by House photographers after the first five. The move was inspired by audits that showed some members had been ordering as many as 10,000 free prints. The results were revealing: The House doorkeeper's office netted only $5,600 last year from the purchase of extra pictures. Members' enthusiasm for photos of themselves has obviously been dampened by the prospect of paying for them.

KREMLIN WATCH: The flurry of press reports and public figures' statements suggesting the Soviets are allowing more Jews to emigrate has worried those who have been active in the fight against repression of Soviet Jews. The figures cited — 166 Jewish emigres in April, 174 in July — are insignificant compared with the thousands who were allowed to leave five years ago. Our sources believe the Soviets will insist on major concessions from the United States and the West before they will let Jews emigrate in any large numbers. The Kremlin thinks it has a strong card in the Jewish emigration issue and intends to play it for all it can get.

THE FUDDLE FACTORY: American diplomats can now breathe easier. The folks back at headquarters in Foggy Bottom have taken firm and forthright action to protect Foreign Service personnel from terrorist attacks: They have created a new bureaucratic entity, the Bureau for Diplomatic Security. It's headed by an assistant secretary of state, and its sole responsibility will be to build, repair and strengthen embassy buildings around the world. This should show those dastardly terrorists we mean business.

MINI-EDITORIAL: Richard Nixon's latest triumphant tour of communist China has us shaking our heads in wonderment. Who would have thought 35 years ago that the rabid Red-baiter who smeared Helen Gahagan Douglas as "the Pink Lady" would find that, in his waning years, one of the few places where he's treated with unabashed affection is ... Red China?

Hatch guarded Reagan's vote

WASHINGTON — Sen. Orrin Hatch of Utah saved President Reagan from humiliation in last Wednesday's cliff-hanging cloture vote on South African sanctions by persuading his conservative Republican colleagues that they could not sustain a Reagan veto.

Rowland Evans

Robert Novak

Strategy differences were aired at a closed-door meeting of some 20 conservative Republicans when Sen. James McClure of Idaho argued to let the bill pass. Sustaining Reagan's veto, McClure said, would end the issue once and for all. But if the bill were bottled up by a filibuster, Senate Majority Leader Robert J. Dole could repeatedly be forced to bring it up.

Hatch heeded White House concerns that a vetoed sanctions bill would probably be overridden in both the Senate and House. He pleaded with Reaganite senators to stick with the president. That persuaded McClure and converted Sen. Mack Mattingly of Georgia. Mattingly switched from pro-sanctions to anti-sanctions, as the Senate fell three votes short of imposing cloture.

SHULTZ-BAITING

When conservative Republican House members at a closed-door caucus complained to Secretary of State George Shultz about purges of politically-appointed ambassadors, he suggested that they had been fired for "incompetence." Specifically, Rep. Robert K. Dornan protested Shultz's reported plans to sack Reaganite Eugene Douglas as the administration's refugee coordinator. Although the secretary had commended Douglas for his peformance, Shultz told the congressmen that as a business executive he never allowed friendship to keep him from getting rid of incompetents and he was not going to start now.

Dornan snapped back that the purge of political appoinments means "in the State Department, there are more friends of Steve Solarz than of the secretary of state." Democratic Rep. Stephen J. Solarz of New York is a liberal, globe-trotting member of the House Foreign Affairs Committee who opposes nearly all Reagan administration policies. Shultz did not reply.

DOLE NIXES NIXON

Richard M. Nixon had just advised Sen. Bob Dole to avoid presidential cattle shows when the Senate majority leader signed on for two early ones.

Dole accepted speaking dates for the Michigan Republican conference at Mackinac Island next weekend and the Western States GOP meeting in Kalispell, Mont., the following weekend. In contrast, front-running Vice President George Bush turned down both invitations.

Dole's arch-rival, Rep. Jack Kemp, will be at both Michigan and Montana — but only after strenuous effort. To make a noon address in Whitefield, N.H., Sept. 28 and get to Montana for a speech that evening, he will have to use a variety of chartered and scheduled aircraft.

JESSE VS. CBS

CBS, fresh from surviving a takeover bid by cable television magnate Ted Turner, will soon be faced by a renewed onslaught from conservative Sen. Jesse Helms. Helms and his political manager, Tom Ellis, faded into the background while Turner attempted his takeover.

They are about to resume, not with a takeover attempt but with a proxy battle climaxing next spring at the CBS annual meeting. The campaign will seek to convince conservatives to buy the network's stock and get existing stockholders to vote against management.

A footnote: Rep. Phil Crane of Illinois may not return as principal spokesman against CBS in the Helms operation. He is seriously considering challenging the overwhelmingly popular Democratic Sen. Alan Dixon next year.

THE VP'S KNEES

George Bush, probably the best vice-presidential tennis player ever, has been ordered by his physician to stay off the courts as well as sharply curb his jogging because of ailing knees.

That word hit the vice president as it would any athlete. The ex-Yale baseball captain longs for exercise, but now will have to find some other way to get it.

One old friend has advised Bush: get into a swimming pool and start kicking. The problem is no emergency, but the result of a family weakness dating back a couple of generations.

CHARLEY REESE

Comparable worth fails market test

I hope the U.S. Supreme Court kills the idea of comparable worth as dead as a cat run over by a cement truck.

Charley Reese

Comparable worth is not merely a wrong idea. It is an injurious idea, a deliberate assault against what's left of the free market economy in the United States.

Comparable worth is the theory that jobs of similar value or worth should command similar pay. It was a feminist scheme based on the great fallacy so often found in the field of anti-discrimination — the nonsequitur. That's a fancy way of saying an inference does not follow from the premises.

In Washington someone decided that jobs in Category A were of the same value as jobs in Category B. The jobs in Category A, however, were mostly filled by women and were not paid salaries equivalent to jobs in Category B, occupied mostly by males. Therefore, the disparity in pay is because of sex discrimination.

That's the nonsequitur which a federal district judge bought in the State of Washington. His ruling would have meant Washington taxpayers would have had to shell out about $1 billion in "damages" resulting from "discrimination."

The 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, however, properly labeled his ruling nonsense and threw it out. It will surely end up before the Supreme Court.

It does not follow that jobs occupied predominantly by women are paid less because of sex discrimination anymore than it follows that if the population is 12 percent black but only 2 percent of neurosurgeons are black, then that disparity is a result of race discrimination. There are factors other than race in the choice of occupation and there are factors other than sex in the pricing of jobs.

The free market roughly prices jobs on the basis of bidding. The more people seeking a certain kind of job in a certain place, the less it is likely to pay. Thus, location of the job, the size of the labor pool at that time and place, as well as the difficulty of the job, are factors which affect salaries. Potential employees always try to get as much as possible for their labor and potential employers try to pay as little as possible. The salary agreed upon is the point of compromise arrived at by bargaining.

If in a certain location it is a lot easier to fill secretarial jobs than it is to fill groundskeeper jobs, then you will have to bid more for groundskeepers than for secretaries. The decision has nothing to do with sex. It has to do with the availability of workers. A job is worth what people will fill it for just as a product is worth what people will pay for it — no more, no less.

Aside from faulty logic ascribing sex bias to innocent market forces, comparable worth's real danger is that it must, if it becomes public policy, lead to bureaucratic determination of salaries, which is to say arbitrary assigning of values to certain jobs. This is done in the communist economies. In Czechoslovakia, for example, the party bureaucrats decree that coal miners shall receive higher compensation than doctors.

If this occurs in this country, then salaries will depend ultimately on politics, ideology, or bribery rather than on the free market process of bargaining. The idea of equal pay for equal work is defensible; the idea of equal pay for comparable work is not because there is no rational way to determine comparability in a free market society. In short, comparable worth presupposes the end of the free market.

If you are going to arbitrarily decide the comparable worth of jobs, then why not arbitrarily decide the comparable worth of products and services? Don't think that wouldn't be the next step.

Comparable worth is not a woman's issue, it is a socialist issue. The feminist angle is simply a disguise. By and large, the job patterns in the United States reflect the free choices of free people just as the salary patterns reflect the free market forces like bargaining, collective and individual, which determine them.

Patrolman's killers sought

NATION

Members of the North Carolina State Bureau of Investigation join a massive manhunt in Spring Creek Sunday, searching for two Arkansas jail escapees wanted in connection with the killing of patrolman Bobby Lee Coggins.

SPRING CREEK, N.C. (AP) — Police searching mountain forests for two "woods-savvy" fugitives suspected of killing a state trooper said they believed that the two had been contained but that they might be able to hold out for a while.

About 200 law enforcement officers with bloodhounds and helicopters combed the mountains Sunday for Jimmy Rios and a man known as William or Ronald Bray, who escaped from the Franklin County Jail in Arkansas last month.

Searchers planned to resume the hunt in the Appalachians in western North Carolina at daybreak. About 60 men were assigned to maintain roadblocks and other points surrounding the area overnight.

"It's rough mountain terrain — lots of outcroppings, lots of places to hide," said Madison County sheriff's deputy Red Penland. "There's wild apples to eat...and water in every hollow."

Highway Patrol Sgt. George Dowdle said, "We feel quite sure we have them contained. They're considered armed and dangerous. They should be woods-savvy — able to live in the mountains."

Trooper Robert L. Coggins, 27, of Bryson City, was shot to death Saturday after he stopped a pickup truck believed to have been stolen by the escapees last month.

Authorities said the two men were thought to be carrying a .22-caliber rifle and the trooper's .357 Magnum.

Officers were conducting a house-to-house search Sunday in a 20-by-10-mile area around Doggett Mountain, just north of Asheville, said state Highway Patrol Col. Jack Cardwell.

In addition to the Highway Patrol, the manhunt involved officers from the FBI, the State Bureau of Investigation, the Correction Department SWAT team, the state license and theft division, the U.S. Forest Service, local sheriff and police departments and Tennessee authorities.

"If you see anything, don't stop," one trooper warned motorists. "If someone jumps in front of you, just run over him — get going."

Coggins was shot after stopping the truck for a routine check on state Route 209, Dowdle said. Police had been told to look for a 1976 bronze and white pickup truck with Arkansas plates and one to three people in it. When Coggins requested a license check and a serial number check, he discovered the vehicle was stolen.

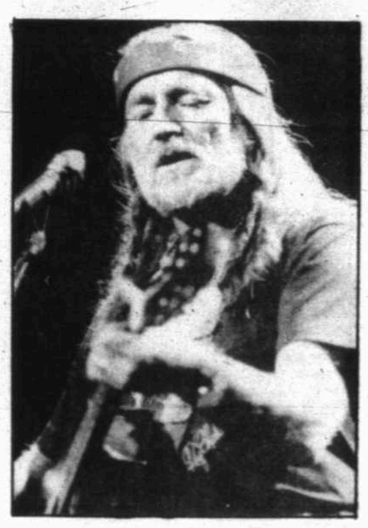

"He was found sitting in his car" about four miles south of Hot Springs at 4:41 p.m. Saturday, Dowdle said.

"I just noticed the car's blue light was on, and I saw the patrolman slumped over to the right," said Arthur Fowler of the Madison County Emergency Medical Service. "It looked like he was shot twice in the head. He had lost quite a bit of blood. His gun was gone."

The truck had been stolen late last month shortly after five inmates from the Franklin County Jail slugged a guard with a pipe and escaped.

Rios, 23, of Branch, Ark., was jailed Aug. 22 on a charge of theft of property and forgery. Bray, 21, of Lexington, N.C., was jailed Aug. 5.

FarmAid concert plans sprout quickly

AP Laserphoto

Willie Nelson and company have until Sept. 22 to finalize plans for the FarmAid concert.

CHAMPAIGN, Ill. (AP) — On this lush prairie soil where corn stalks sway slowly and summer shadows grow longer, a $50 million barn raising is about to begin.

Across America, word is spreading. In Tennessee, the call is out for music. In Nebraska, money is being collected. In Arkansas, the fried chicken is ready to be packed. And in Illinois, building details are being worked out.

Thousands are lending their tools and talents to FarmAid — the 14-hour benefit concert headlined by a who's who of the country-western and rock music world.

With FarmAid, the music community has turned from aid to Africa to help for the heartland, hoping to raise $50 million for America's troubled farmers.

"You've heard the adage that charity begins at home and I think we can take care of our own people," said Willie Nelson, the braided, bearded Texan who organized the concert.

Nelson and his friends face an enormous task. With about 77,000 tickets sold, the Sept. 22 concert is touted as the largest in country music history.

They had 36 days to pull it together.

In a wood-paneled Nashville office of Buddy Lee Attractions Inc., vice president Tony Conway puffs an ever-present cigarette and works the phones. Plywood donations should be the project for the day, he declares.

There are hundreds of details to work out. Plywood is needed to protect 143,000 square feet of new artificial turf at Memorial Stadium, home of the University of Illinois football team. Normal cost: $40,000 to $60,000.

But this is a benefit. There is no money to spare. And no time. Many concerts are planned six months, even a year in advance. With FarmAid, announced Aug. 17, thousands of workers must orchestrate their efforts in weeks.

While Conway searches for some donations, he rejects other offers.

Thumbing through his mail, he reads a letter from a New York agency that wants to send models to hand roses to performers as they leave the stage. No time, Conway says.

He also turns down some artists who want to perform. More than 100 have called. "If I was able to put everybody in the show who wanted to be in the show, it would be a week long," he said.

More than 45 heavy hitters are already in the lineup, including Billy Joel, Bob Dylan, the Beach Boys, Joni Mitchell, Kenny Rogers, B.B. King, Loretta Lynn, Waylon Jennings and of course, Nelson.

This is Willie's show. He solicited friends to appear. He decided on the $17.50 ticket price. And he'll help decide the performance schedule.

"We have told all the performers to leave their egos at home," Conway said. No limos. Dressing rooms for only two hours.

Celebrity emcees also are being negotiated, including Johnny Carson, who was born in Iowa and lived in Nebraska. "Willie wants him," Conway said. "He likes his imitation (of Nelson)."

Twenty-five miles away, down the road from Spring Hill, Tenn., site for the new Saturn auto plant, a bus with the emblem "The Storyteller" sits along the roadside.

Standing in a sun-blistered, waist-high field of soybeans, singer Tom T. Hall is telling yet one more story, this one about the American farmer.

"Debts are piled up in every part of farm country," he says in a deep baritone, reading from giant cue cards held by a sweaty film crew kneeling in the weeds.

"In all, farmers owe more than $200 billion — more than the total foreign debt of Brazil, Mexico and Argentina combined."

The commercial is one of 12 produced by The Nashville Network, which will televise 12 hours of the concert. Three hours of the show also will be syndicated. More than 100 television stations have signed up, as have 160 radio stations.

Again, people work quickly. The spots were written within 24 hours. While one film crew worked in Tennessee, others were in Iowa and Illinois.

On the road again with Willie, farmers are having their say. They meet him in Illinois and Minnesota, making suggestions for using concert proceeds.

A general plan is supposed to be ready before Sept. 22. Some proposals: low-interest loans, counseling, legal aid and lobbying. Experts say as many as one-fourth of America's farmers are in trouble.

A few farmers, such as Bob Bowman, who lives near De Witt, Iowa, will explain the farmers' plight in TV commercials.

"Unlike some of our friends in Washington, these people realize what's at stake here," Bowman said of the FarmAid stars. "It's the American way."

In an office in Omaha, Neb., 75 people are answering calls to 1-800-FARM-AID. Three hours after FarmAid was announced, the number was operating. It will continue after the concert.

The phone banks are run by the Telemarketing Corporation of America, which handled fund-raising calls for President Reagan and former President Jimmy Carter.

It also served Live Aid, the telethon for starving Africans which raised about $55 million

On Sept. 22, at least 1,000 people will field calls. About $12 million could be pledged that day, based on an average $25 donation, said George Smith, the company's senior vice president.

Normally, up to 60 percent of those who pledge money deliver. With FarmAid, Smith estimates it could be 80 percent to 90 percent.

"Willie has tremendous credibility," Smith said. "This cause is so popular and the people behind it are so well known."

In New York, publicists at the Howard Bloom Organization have worked for pop music giants such as Prince and the Jacksons. Each detail is well planned.

But with FarmAid, the clock is ticking. The concert is growing.

And there are last-minute changes. A plan for Merle Haggard and other country performers to take a whistle-stop train tour from California to Illinois was derailed over the weekend by money problems.

The press must be notified of all concert plans. They also must receive updated performers' lists.

As many as 800 press credentials may be distributed. Those who have expressed interest range from a Japanese TV network to Rural Electrification magazine.

U.S. college grads lack 'entrepreneurial spirit'

WASHINGTON (AP) — America must develop an entrepreneurial spirit and a sense of civic responsibility in its college graduates or risk losing pre-eminence in the world's economy, a Carnegie Foundation report said today.

The U.S. system of higher education is "the best in the world," but needs to change "to encourage creative and challenging thought and to stop stifling these characteristics," the study said.

The report by Frank Newman also sharply criticized the "excessive loans" many college students now are being forced to shoulder.

"A student who leaves college with a large debt burden may well feel he has already assumed all of the risk that he possibly should," said Newman, who charged that the trend toward loans may "inadvertently undercut traditional values" and make it harder for graduates to buy homes or cars.

The report also cited graduates' emphasis on materialism and lack of civic involvement, saying, "By every measure we have been able to find, today's graduates are less interested in and less prepared to exercise their civic responsibilities."

Newman's report, "Higher Education and the American Resurgence," is the latest in a volley of reform reports that began 2½ years ago with "A Nation At Risk" by the National Commission on Excellence in Education.

Newman, a former president of the University of Rhode Island, was the author of two studies commissioned by the Department of Health, Education and Welfare that influenced federal education policies in the early 1970s.

His new report calls for a reconfiguration of the current $8 billion federal student aid program, with a greater emphasis on Pell Grants and work-study funds. "More student aid should be given in return for community service," it says.

Newman, in an interview, said the United States built its economic success in the past on "a hierarchical, mass-produced society. Now we've begun to shift more and more toward creative, entrepreneurial activities."

The American economy, beset by intense new foreign competition, has continued to create millions of new jobs in recent years, but that growth has been in small businesses, not the Fortune 500 listings of the nation's largest corporations, he said.

Newman held out Henry Ford and civil rights leaders Martin Luther King Jr. as models of the entrepreneurial spirit in America.

"The most critical demand is to restore to higher education its original purpose of preparing graduates for a life of involved and committed citizenship," the report said.

There is "a dangerous, growing mismatch between the country's urgent need for civic-mindedness and the parochial attitudes of its citizens...." it said. "There are clear signs that self-interest is undermining public interest."

It cited the nuclear arms race, toxic wastes, integration, genetic engineering and reduction of crime, drugs and violence as issues that cry out for an active citizenry.

The era of radical student activism in the late 1960s has given way to an intense focus on careers and material success, it said. "Perhaps it is partly a return to normality after a tumultuous period. Certainly such characteristics as being 'well-groomed' may be considered an advantage. Being less interested in the affairs of the nation is surely a disadvantage."

Despite its advantages over higher education systems abroad that narrowly restrict access to college, the American system "far too often stifles the inherent creativity of the student," the report said.

"College education is nowhere near as exciting nor as effective as it could be. In many ways it is boring," the study said.

FTC's sun may shine on grocery rain checks

WASHINGTON (AP) — The popular but illegal practice of getting a raincheck when the neighborhood grocery runs out of an advertised item would be made legal under a proposal before the Federal Trade Commission.

While more than 90 percent of food stores currently offer rainchecks, the practice is technically illegal — although no one has been prosecuted since 1977.

Before the commission today was a staff recommendation that the agency change its rules to allow stores to either issue rainchecks or to offer substitute items at the sale price when the supply of special items runs out.

And a separate proposal would let supermarkets advertise "limited quantity" specials as long as it is clear in the ad that supplies of the product might not meet demand.

In addition, the commission was considering a staff recommendation that it drop a proposed regulation for the hearing aid industry.

That rule sought to require that hearing aid sellers offer a 30-day trial period on their products.

The FTC staff reported last month that most hearing aid companies already offer trial periods, and a survey found that in general customers are satisfied with the devices. Thus, the staff said, it is unnecessary to impose a new rule that would cost time and money to enforce.

Finally, the agency was considering a proposal to drop a plan to set up industrywide regulations to prevent organizations that set standards from engaging in activities that might restrain trade. Instead, the commission staff said, any problems in this area should be handled on a case-by-case basis.

The grocery store rule has been the most controversial of those under consideration, evoking more than 3,600 public comments after a proposal was made last year to eliminate all special restrictions on supermarket advertising.

Abandoning the food store advertising rules is no longer planned, only the amendments to the rule to make is easier for markets to comply.

Technically, the current law says that food stores must stock enough of any product they advertise to satisfy the buyers who show up to purchase it.

Stores that run out of advertised items can be fined up to $10,000.

WHAT CAN YOU DO WHEN YOUR CARPET IS FLOODED?
A "flood" can be caused by a heavy rain, faulty or worn-out plumbing, pipes burst by freezing, a faucet left on accidentally, et cetera.
In any case, you need to act quickly! A flooded carpet can be a devastating experience: carpet ruined, furniture swelling and splitting, baseboards warping and peeling, and other problems-developing all at once!
So, what should you do? First, call a carpet cleaner you know and trust. If you don't know one, call the House of Carpets and they will get one for you. Cut our losses to a minimum by taking fast action.
After calling the floorcovering specialists at the House of Carpets, or your favorite carpet cleaner, contact your insurance agent to determine whether your loss is insured. In case a replacement is needed, House of Carpets can provide you with an accurate and prompt estimate.

WEATHER SUMMARY

Conditions forecast for 8 a.m. Tuesday

Thunderstorm possibilities diminishing

From Staff and Wire Reports

The threat of more thunderstorms still looms.

But, according to the weatherman at the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport, there is only a 20 percent chance of water-laden clouds to break open and pour over the Midland area tonight.

Otherwise, the weatherman is forecasting fair weather. The low tonight is to be in the mid-60s, and winds are to be southeasterly near 10 mph.

For Tuesday, the weatherman is calling for sunny weather in the morning, partly cloudy skies in the afternoon and a 20 percent chance of thunderstorms. The high on Tuesday is to be in the upper 80s. Winds are to be southerly to southeasterly at 10 to 15 mph.

The peak temperature on Sunday was 78 degrees, but the record high temperature for a Sept. 15 is 100 degrees in 1965. The overnight low was 67 degrees. The record low for a Sept. 16 is 50 degrees in 1951.

STATE

It was a soggy Monday for much of Texas. Thunderstorms pounded the Panhandle, South Texas and the coast while fog and low clouds obscured the view in the North Texas and the High Plains.

Some of the heaviest storms fell southeast oif Dumas and in the Rio Grande Valley, northwest and east of Brownsville, the weather service said.

The weather service posted a coastal flood warning early Monday for much of the upper Texas coast, where tides were running two to four feet above normal.

According to the weather service, North Texas could expect more cloudy skies with a chance of additional thunderstorms in the east Tuesday. Highs were expected to be in the mid to upper 80s and lows in the 60s.

NATION

Much of the nation was under fair skies today, but blustery winds whipped coastal waters of Texas and Florida and threatened flooding.

Showers and thundershowers were spread along the southern Atlantic Coast and the lower Texas Coast and a line of showers and thunderstorms stretched from the south-central mountains to the northeastern plains of New Mexico.

Skies were mostly fair west of the Rockies and across the eastern half of the nation.

'College kid' shows 'em

By HARRY ATKINS

PONTIAC, Mich. (AP) — Darryl Rogers, fresh out of the collegiate coaching ranks, has instilled a new spirit in the Detroit Lions that has carried them to victories in his first two National Football League games.

"There's a tremendous positive attitude on the team right now," said Detroit quarterback Eric Hipple, who accounted for two touchdowns in the Lions 26-21 victory Sunday over the Dallas Cowboys. "Coach expects a lot out of us. He tries to understand us and we try to understand him.

"He doesn't throw fits. He's always in control," Hipple added.

Hipple passed for one touchdown and ran for another and a fired-up Detroit defense did the rest, forcing five Dallas turnovers and pulling off a goal line stand.

The Lions needed the turnovers because the Cowboys rolled up 554 yards in total offense to just just 200 for Detroit.

"It's a tremendous thing for us to have this much success at this point," said Rogers, who came to the Lions from Arizona State last winter after Detroit fired Monte Clark following a 4-11 season in 1984. "Dallas came off a big Monday night, so we got them at the right time.

"Our defense played extremely well," Rogers said. "We had interceptions every way possible. The defense made the offense look good because they got them such good field position."

Hipple, who completed 10 of 23 for 141 yards, flipped a 21-yard scoring strike to Jeff Chadwick at 4:24 of the first quarter and ran 1 yard for a TD at 2:33 of the third quarter.

James Jones scored the Lions' other touchdown at 2:59 of the third quarter. Eddie Murray kicked field goals of 34 and 46 yards to round out the Lions scoring.

The Cowboys, who appeared flat after their emotional Monday night victory over Washington, didn't score until the fourth quarter when Gary Hogeboom came on for injured Danny White.

Dallas Coach Tom Landry made it clear, however, that he had not soured on White.

"I don't think I'll have to make a lot of changes, unless I really don't know this football team," Landry said. "That was one of the worst third quarters I've ever seen in my life."

No illusion, Vikings are now 2-0

Statistics are playing some tricks in the National Football League again, but it's no optical illusion. The Minnesota Vikings are 2-0.

The Vikings, who upset Super Bowl champion San Francisco last week despite being outgained 489 yards to 268, defeated Tampa Bay 31-16 Sunday while losing the yardage battle again.

"There are a lot of ways to win, and sometimes they're not very pretty," said Vikings Coach Bud Grant, who was coaxed out of retirement after the team went 3-13 under Les Steckel last year. "There's no prescribed way to win. Every week, the script is different with us."

In other games, Miami bombed Indianapolis 30-13; the New York Jets routed Buffalo 42-3; St. Louis beat Cincinnati 41-27; Washington edged Houston 16-13; the Los Angeles Rams downed Philadelphia 17-6; Chicago tamed New England 20-7; Denver downed New Orleans 34-23; Green Bay nipped the New York Giants 23-20; San Francisco beat Atlanta 35-16; and Seattle outlasted San Diego 49-35.

Pittsburgh plays at Cleveland tonight.

Grant, whose many successful Minnesota teams were known for their opportunistic special teams, is using that formula again.

Rufus Bess, who forced three fumbles against the 49ers and recovered one against Tampa Bay, blocked a third-quarter punt to set up a touchdown that gave the Vikings a 24-3 lead.

Despite the loss, Tampa Bay got 113 yards rushing and 13 pass receptions from James Wilder, but he fumbled twice.

49ers 35, Falcons 16

The defending Super Bowl champions, down 10-0 at halftime and faced with the possibility of an 0-2 record, rebounded for five second-half touchdowns, two by Roger Craig, to beat Atlanta.

Flags stop Oilers

By IRA ROSENFELD

WASHINGTON (AP) — The same penalty flags that allowed the Houston Oilers to soar last week were their undoing Sunday as they fell to the Washington Redskins 16-13 under a sea of yellow flags.

Last week, the Oilers were aided by a pass interference call in the end zone to come from behind in the fourth quarter to beat Miami.

The Oilers were penalized a dozen times for 111 yards, including two touchdowns that were called back and a 51-yard pass play that would have given the visitors a first down at the Washington 9-yard line.

"We had five big plays called back. That always hurt's you, especially on the road," said Houston quarterback Warren Moon, who completed 12 of 28 passes for 137 yards and one touchdown.

"You can't give away that many big plays and expect to win," said receiver Drew Hill. "We beat them, we just didn't beat them on the score."

Following the callback of their second touchdown, the Oilers still had a chance to tie, but Tony Zendejas' 33-yard field goal attempt with 4:23 to play hit the right upright and bounced wide.

"I hit it straight it just didn't break in," said Zendejas, who was traded by the Redskins to Houston this summer.

The Redskins, thrashed Monday night in Dallas, 44-14, used the power running of George Rogers and John Riggins early against the Oilers, scoring on their first three possessions. The team bogged down after the quick start but still held on for the team's first victory of the season.

"It was just a guts job, especially after after a short work week where there were bad thoughts, feelings and depression," said Redskin Coach Joe Gibbs.

Gibbs admitted to some early season scoreboard watching and was genuinely pleased as the results of the Dallas loss to Detroit was posted.

"We were struggling in their for awhile. I think all of our players got a little excited by that (the Dallas score). I think that gave us a little lift."

Rogers, playing his first regular season game in Washington since being obtained in a trade with New Orleans this spring, rushed 15 times for 78 yards including a 31-yard touchdown.

Riggins, who became only the third player in NFL history to carry the ball 3,000 times (rush and reception) in a career, carried 16 times for 84 yards.

The Redskins, despite dominating play for much of the first half, led by just 16-10 at intermission.

Beaten by 30 points just six days ago in the season opener in Dallas, the Redskins broke on top quickly, scoring on their first three possessions.

Quarterback Joe Theismann, coming off the worst outing of his career, was good on all three of passing attempts in the opening drive, the last a 17-yarder to Calvin Muhammad for the touchdown, as Washington led 7-0 five minutes into the game.

After Theismann tossed to Art Monk for 9 yards, Riggins rushed five consecutive times for 48 yards. Rogers picked up the final 33, including a 31-yard run for a touchdown after he broke out of a pack of would-be tacklers at 25-yard line.

TED BATTLES

Thievery runs rampant in D.C.

The Imposters on TV were down 26-0 and you knew this wasn't their day when the Pontiac hosts stopped Dallas on the goal line and later Raphael Septein missed a field goal.

Down 13-0 in the first half, the Oilers weren't much of an alternative, but a switch of channels would tell how bad it was in the second half.

Hey, 16-13, isn't that bad and when a defensive back picks off a Joe Theismann pass and puts it in the Redskins end zone, that puts the Oilers ahead. But what's this, a yellow flag?

What transpired from that point on was evidence that seemed to confirm charges of rampant thieving and corruption in the nation's capitol. Far be it for me to criticize men in stripes, they have enough troubles without that, but from TV replays none of the charges against the Oilers were substantiated. In fact, it looked these guys might be trying to qualify for a government contract.

The Oilers had three touchdowns called back, well one was a 51-yard pass completion to the Redskin nine.

THE OILERS beat the Redskins worse than the Cowboys did the week before in everything but the score. The difference was this one was in Washington. You don't intercept the Skins six times, let alone run them into the end zone, in Kennedy and you don't complete sideline passes and home running backs who fumble the ball while going down are, of course, already down.

If the Cowboys think they had troubles playing 12 men in Pontiac—yes, the Lions were caught again, and no telling how many times they weren't caught— they should have been in Washington where 12 would have seemed like an even break to the Oilers.

Houston didn't show much of a running game and the one time Larry Moriarity—Doyle ought to be able to do something with a name like that—broke into the secondary and appeared headed for the ramp at the end of the stadium, a timely shoulder nudge by a person in black and white, directed him into the arms off an off-balance but friendly Redskin who had been watching the play.

IF THAT wasn't bad enough, Tony Zendejas missed two field goals that would have tied it, but he did move into the lead for the Neal O'Donoghue Award for 1986. Neal's performance this year hints that he's ready to surrender the honor to someone more deserving this year.

The NFL is providing one service this year that is enlightening. The officials not only are in stripes, but they wear numbers. It was assumed that it was to provide identification. Maybe so, but from the game, it also was an obvious indication of their rank among their peers....like an AP Top Twenty.

Let's see, there was a No. 100, a No. 72, a No. 39 and then the high numbers.

No telling what frustrations the Oilers might have suffered in the first half, since the Cowboys were suffering frustrations of their own on another channel. Still, a late night replay of George Rogers' first half serialized touchdown run brought a "I guess they don't call a play dead when the forward motion is stopped anymore" from the narrator.

Once justice had prevailed in Washington, it was time to flip back to Pontiac to check on the extent of the rout. Arrival was just in time to see quarterback Gary Hogeboom—quarterback?, where'd they get him?— dash into the end zone to leave Dallas behind 26-21 with just 20 seconds left. What's more, he had accomplished it all, 'twas said, after a tardy fourth-period arrival.

Oh well, the Cowboys lost, but the Dallas writers are already dusting off last year's most pressing issue...the Quarterback Controversy, Part II.

El Paso Eastwood vs. Midland Lee

Ron Jaap/Reporter-Telegram

Midland High end Bobby Williams reels off good yardage for the Bulldogs after catching a pass. The Purple Pack is now 2-0 with victories over Lubbock Monterey and Andrews and will travel to Lubbock for Estacado Friday night while Midland Lee faces El Paso Eastwood in its first home game of the season.

4-5A wins five, but ego suffers

From Staff Reports

Even though District 4-5A teams won five of eight encounters against outside foes last Friday night, the district's ego did take a bit of a beating.

Midland Lee, which had just moved into the state's Top 10 rankings by Associated Press, got bumped off in impressive fashion by Temple, which avenged a 35-7 shellacking it took at the hands of Lee a year ago.

The Rebels will try to rebound this week against El Paso Eastwood in the 1985 home opener Friday at Memorial Stadium. It will be Lee's last non-conference game before hosting San Angelo in a possible sellout the following week.

Eastwood was a 25-8 loser to El Paso Coronado, a team Odessa Permian defeated 28-7 in its season opener on Sept. 6.

Big Spring, a 41-12 loser to Lubbock Estacado, and Abilene Cooper, a 33-3 loser to Wichita Falls, were the other losses the district suffered last Friday. Both of those teams are winless after two starts, leaving the district with an overall 11-5 mark against outside foes.

Still, District 4-5A had some other close calls. Midland High's unbeaten Bulldogs scored a touchdown on a 39-yard pass from Matt Marcum to Kenny DeLaGarza with 1:17 left to play to score a narrow 19-13 win over Class 4A Andrews.

Lee's Rodney Sims, who gained 103 yards against Lubbock Coronado, found the going rough against Temple, gaining only 26 yards on eight carries. Temple really dominated Lee, outgaining the Rebels by a 290-115 margin in total yards.

MHS' Marcum increased his lead in the passing department. He passed for 217 yards against Lubbock Monterey and came back with 206 yards against Andrews for 423 total yards in just two games.

If passing is what you like, the MHS-Andrews game was the place to be as the two teams combined for 367 passing yards and three TD touchdowns. The Bulldogs may need another strong passing performance this Friday when they travel to Lubbock to face Estacado, another 4A team that owns victories over Plainview and Big Spring, both 5A schools.

Abilene High may get another good firm test this Friday in a road trip to Longview. AHS opens district play against Permian and it's looking more and more like the Eagles may be a power to contend with.

In other 4-5A games Friday night, Odessa High will host Hobbs, N.M.; San Angelo will host Fort Worth Dunbar; Cooper will host Temple and Big Spring will host Lubbock Monterey.

Permian hosts Fort Worth Eastern Hills in a Saturday game as Ratliff Stadium is the site of a doubleheader this week with both OHS and Permian at home.

Sept. 27 marks the opening of 4-5A play as Lee will host San Angelo in the key opening night outing in one of four games that are possible sellouts at Memorial Stadium.

Other opening night games will send MHS to Big Spring, Permian to Abilene High and Cooper to Odessa High.

Two teams from 4-5A will gain the state playoffs. Odessa Permian and Midland Lee have been the two teams the past two seasons while Permian and San Angelo were the two playoff teams in 1982, the first year that the UIL allowed each district to send two teams to the playoffs.

Odessa High also had a close call against El Paso Austin before taking an 18-7 victory. The Bronchos, trailing 7-6 at the half, had to score 12 points in the fourth quarter to earn a come-from-behind victory.

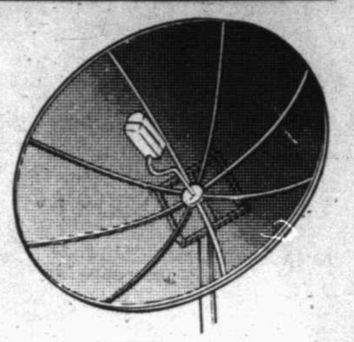

Despite Odessa Permian's 62-0 win over hapless El Paso Hanks, it may have been an expensive victory for the Panthers. Permian quarterback Rich Fletcher injured a knee in that game and it is not known just how long he will be out of the lineup. However, Permian, ranked No. 1 in the state by AP, should easily hold that distinction with 62 points and 90-0 point edge over two weeks.

Two other 4-5A squads also posted shutouts Friday, giving the league four blankings this year. The most impressive shutout was probably posted by Abilene High, which blanked Sweetwater, the state's No. 2 ranked 4A team, 18-0. Powerful San Angelo clipped the wings of Killeen in a 14-0 decision as Don Hall continued to rack up big yardage.

Hall, who leads the district in rushing, added 153 yards against Killeen to the 181 he gained against Hereford in Week No. 1.

UT opens against team that lost to Northwestern

From Staff Reports

Hey, how'd you like to be opening the football season against a team that just lost to Northwestern?

The University of Texas Longhorns, champing at the bit two weeks in a arrears of the nation's other teams, three if you count Brigham Young, which already has three games under its belt, gets to open against the Missouri Tigers from the Big Eight at Austin Saturday.

Missouri, which usually plays people like Notre Dame, Oklahoma, Illinois, Nebraska...most anybody...respectable, lost to Northwestern, which seldom plays anybody respectable, 27-23.

True, Missouri ranks only fourth in the Big Eight pre-season, behind Oklahoma, Nebraska and Oklahoma State, but a loss to Northwestern is still the biggest upset of the season so far.

The chortling, of course, stopped when somebody reminded the Horns that they are coming off a less-than-spectacular 7-4-1 not-at-all-Texas-like season and a 55-17 humiliation in a first year bowl game in Anaheim, Calif.

Last year Texas finished third in the Southwest Conference, not what was expected after an opening game win over Auburn, a height the Steers never really attained the rest of the season.

Eight offensive and six defensive starters are back from that team.

After losing four of its last five games last year, Coach Fred Akers 73-21-2 after eight seasons at Austin, is expected to open things up this year. The idea is to do something to ease the drudgery that apparently catches up with UT late in the season.

Two seasons ago, Texas had the national championship in its hands in the closing minutes of the Cotton Bowl game against Georgia only to have it slip through its fingers when a punt was fumbled.

Texas has a 41-6-1 record for the first half of his eight seasons, but the tedium shows in the second half where the Steers are 32-15-1.

If it's a new-styled offense Akers is planning, Missouri is a good team against which to try it out.

The Tigers are also digging out from a disasterous season in which they were supposed to contend for the conference title, but finished fifth at 2-4-1 and 3-7-1 for the season.

Woody Widenhofer replaces Warren Powers to oversee the rebuilding task which will center around a nucleus of five offensive returnees and three defensive veterans.

Quarterback Marion Adler, a 5-11 182-pound senior, keys the offense. Not bad for a guy who walked on as a punter and with 1,875 yards this season can pass Phil Bradley as the career recordholder.

Widenhofer has introduced a pro-style offense and the fact that Missouri lost its top three receivers last year was probably one of the reasons for the loss to Northwestern.

Jon Redd, the team's top rusher (668 yards), is back along with a strong offensive line led by John Clay, and guard Phil Pettey.

As for Texas, Akers can introduce all the new offense he wants, but if running back Edwin Simmons is healthy, he won't need any subtefuge to hoodwink the opposition.

Simmons is an All-America prospect, but has been plagued by chronic knee miseries since leading Texas to a win over OU two years ago.

As back ups, Ronnie Robinson and Jerome Johnson are still around.

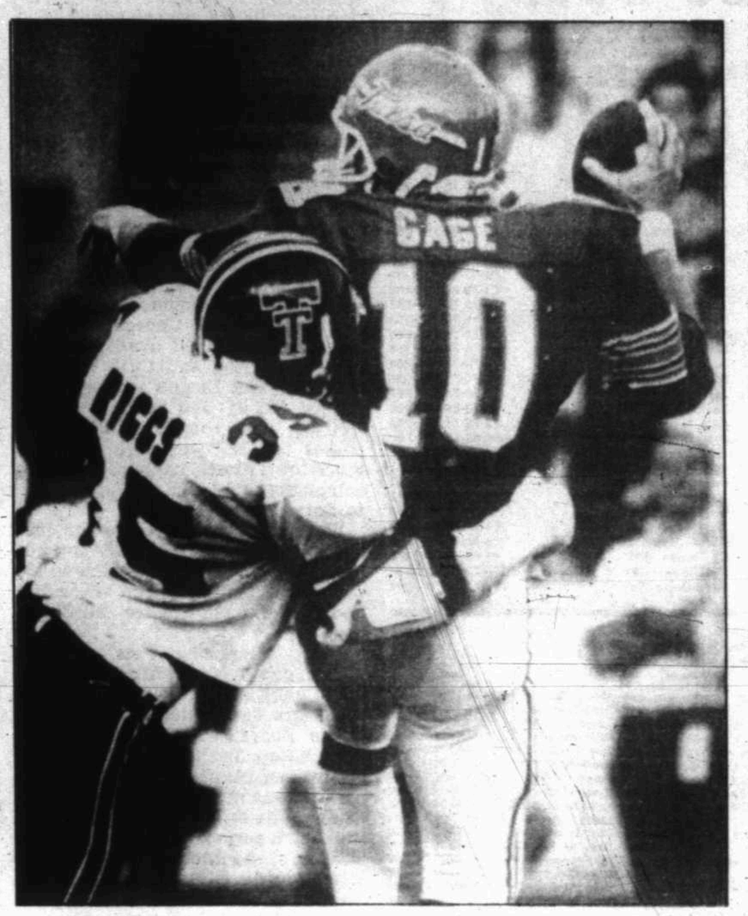

So is Todd Dodge, who completed only 47.6 per cent of his passes last season, and was intercepted 19 times. His competition will come from sophomore Shannon Kelly.

If it's an air game the Steers are planning, one of the key ingredients will be junior tight end William Harris, 34 catches for 637 yards. Also back are Bill Boy Bryant, Kelvin Epps, and Kevin Nelson..

As usual Texas has line talent running out its ears....Gene Chilton at center plus John Stuart and Bryan Chester in the offensive front. End James McKinney heads the defense. And while Steven Braggs, James Lott and Tony Tillmon ease the loss of a Jerry Gray in the secondary, if the Horns have a defensive weakness, it's a linebacker.

And in Missouri, Texas, like Midland Lee, may be getting more than it expects. Like Temple, the Tigers may have been looking beyond that opening foe and at the bigger game ahead.

New threat emerges in TCU's opening victory

By DENNE H. FREEMAN

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — You've heard about Texas Christian All-American running back Kenneth Davis. Now meet sophomore quarterback Scott Ankrom.

Tulane did Saturday night.

Ankrom, making his starting debut, took the heat off Davis. He scored on two touchdown runs and flipped a scoring pass while Davis rushed for 152 yards in a 30-13 intersectional victory over the Green Wave.

The speedy Ankrom scored on runs of 19 and 1 yards and winged a 20-yard scoring pass to Ricky Stone as late-starting TCU pleased a crowd of 31,572 fans, largest gathering for a non-conference opener in the school's history.

"Scott Ankrom played like a sophomore quarterback with a heck of a lot of talent," said TCU Coach Jim Wacker. "He just needs to settle down some, and I think he did that in the second half.

"I know I'm glad he's a Horned Frog because he's just going to be a great quarterback for us," Wacker said.

Wacker said Ankrom's scoring run just before the half "was the biggest play of the ball game. We needed that one."

Tulane led 13-10 at halftime with the Horned Frogs scoring in the final minute on quarterback Ankrom's 19-yard scamper. The Green Wave built a 10-0 first quarter lead on Wayne Clements' 32-yard field goal and Ken Karcher's 2-yard scoring run.

Ken Ozee kicked a 42-yard field goal for TCU which Clements matched with a 41-yarder. But it was all TCU in the second half.

Ankrom rushed for 122 yards on 21 carries and passed for 142 yards by hitting 10 of 17 attempts.

The Horned Frogs took a 17-13 third quarter lead on Ankrom's short run then struck twice for touchdowns in the fourth period on the Ankrom-to-Stone connection and Tony Jefferey's 1-yard scoring run.

"Thank goodness for Kenneth Davis," said Wacker. "Whenever we would need a first down, we would just get Kenneth the football and watch him break eight tackles."

Wacker blamed himself for TCU's sometimes sputtering offense.

"The head coach made some terrible calls," he said. "If we had a smarter head coach, we'd have seven more points."

Davis had high praise for his new backfield mate:

"I think Scott impressed a lot of people. They hadn't seen much of him. But I tell you what I wasn't surprised at all because I've seen him play and I knew what he can do. He's going to be a great quarterback."

Ankrom said the pressure was about what he expected.

"I felt good," he said. "I really wasn't nervous going into the game. I made some mistakes but that's how you learn."

VIKINGS

Craig, who rushed for 107 yards on just 11 carries and caught six passes, scored San Francisco's first touchdown on a 9-yard run and added a 62-yard sprint in the fourth period for a 21-13 49er lead.

Dolphins 30, Colts 13

Miami, which has never started a season 0-2 in 16 seasons under Coach Don Shula, overcame a slow start to rout Indianapolis.

The Dolphins trailed 7-6 in the second period after Mike Pagel's 2-yard touchdown toss to Pat Beach for the Colts, but quarterback Dan Marino ignored his first Orange Bowl boos to complete 29 of 48 passes for 329 yards and two touchdowns.

Seahawks 49, Chargers 35

Seattle's balanced attack, featuring Dave Krieg and Curt Warner, outscored San Diego's pass-oriented offense led by Dan Fouts.

Krieg, who completed 22 of 32 passes for 307 yards, threw five touchdown passes, including scoring completions of 34, 15, 30 and 7 yards to Daryl Turner.

Warner carried 28 times for 169 yards and two more TDs for the 2-0 Seahawks, while Fouts threw 43 passes, completing 29 for 440 yards and four touchdowns for the Chargers, 1-1.

Bears beat Pats

Chicago's defense stifled New England until late in the game to keep the Bears undefeated.

The Bears sacked quarterback Tony Eason six times and intercepted three of his passes, but the Patriots averted a shutout when Eason hit Craig James on a 90-yard pass play in the fourth period. Three of the sacks and one of the interceptions were by Bears middle linebacker Mike Singletary.

Cardinals 41, Bengals 27

Neil Lomax, who fumbled on St. Louis' first play to set up a Cincinnati touchdown, came back with two scoring passes for the Cardinals.

Lomax threw TD passes of 27 yards to Earl Ferrell and 25 yards to Roy Green and set up another touchdown with a 42-yard pass play to Stump Mitchell.

Rams 17, Eagles 6

Henry Ellard returned a punt 80 yards for a touchdown and Charles White ran 17 yards for another score, while Los Angeles forced seven turnovers to beat Philadelphia.

White, subbing for Eric Dickerson during his contract holdout, gained 144 yards on 36 carries for Los Angeles.

Packers 23, Giants 20

Eddie Lee Ivery's 1-yard touchdown with 4:07 left put Green Bay ahead after New York overcame a 17-6 deficit with two straight TDs.

The Giants rallied from 11 points behind in the second half on Phil Simms scoring passes of 20 yards to Don Hasselbeck and five yards to Lionel Manuel.

Broncos 34, Saints 23

Denver's John Elway threw for 353 yards and four touchdowns to riddle New Orleans' usually stingy secondary.

Elway hit Butch Johnson on a 62-yard play for Denver's first touchdown and later added scoring passes of 26 yards to Clint Sampson, 10 yards to Gene Lang and two yards to Clarence Kay.

Jets 42, Bills 3

Freeman McNeil set a team record with 192 rushing yards as New York routed Buffalo and equaled its biggest margin of victory.

McNeil ran 69 yards for a touchdown on the first play of the second half after scoring on runs of 6 and 13 yards in the second quarter.

The Jets, who beat Houston by 39 points in a 1966 game, intercepted four Vince Ferragamo passes as the Bills were held without a touchdown for the second straight game.

Blue Jays did what they had to do..to Yankees

Associated Press

The Toronto Blue Jays did what they had to do. They went into New York, won three of four games at Yankee Stadium, and left town in first place and feeling confident.

"A lot of people expected us to fold, and we didn't," right fielder Jesse Barfield said Sunday after the Blue Jays scored six runs in the third inning and went on to beat the Yankees 8-5. "We're still No. 1, but it's not over yet."

The triumph gave Toronto a 4½-game lead in the American League East over second-place New York. It was the third straight victory for the Blue Jays after losing the opener of the four-game series.

"This was a big game," said Toronto Manager Bobby Cox. "A 4½-game lead is a lot better than 2½. We won three of four here, but the season's not over with."

The Blue Jays knocked out Ed Whitson, 10-8, in the third inning and went on to an 8-0 lead. Cliff Johnson, an ex-Yankee, singled home two runs in the third and finished with three RBI.

Winner Doyle Alexander, 16-8, gave up only one hit over six innings. Alexander, another ex-Yankee, left in the eighth after giving up two runs.

Late in the game, the Yankees announced that they had acquired knuckleball pitcher Joe Niekro from the Houston Astros in exchange for a young pitcher and a player to be named later. The deal reunited Niekro, 40, with his knuckleballing brother Phil, 45. They have not played together since pitching for Atlanta in 1973 and 1974.

Cardinals 5, Cubs 1

Cesar Cedeno went 5-for-5 and drove in four runs, two with a homer, as St. Louis maintained its one-half game lead over New York in the NL East.

Cedeno, who also had two doubles, is 19-for-36 with 12 RBI since the Cardinals acquired him from Cincinnati in late August. His two-run homer in the seventh inning broke a 1-1 tie.

Danny Cox, 16-9, scattered five hits over seven innings. Todd Worrell finished up with two innings of hitless relief.

Mets 6, Expos 2

Danny Heep hit a three-run homer in the first inning. Mookie Wilson homered and doubled twice and Howard Johnson added a solo home run to lead New York.

Ron Darling, 16-5, won his sixth straight decision. He gave up five hits in 7 1-3 innings. Jesse Orosco finished up for his 16th save.

Heep's seventh homer followed an RBI single by Gary Carter. Wilson hit his fifth in the ninth inning.

Tim Wallach homered for host Montreal.

Reds 10, Dodgers 6

Gary Redus hit a three-run homer and Nick Esasky delivered a two-run double during a nine-run explosion in the sixth inning that carried Cincinnati over Fernando Valenzuela and Los Angeles.

The Reds overcame a 6-1 deficit against Valenzuela, 17-10, to earn a split of the four-game series and remain 8½ games behind first-place Los Angeles in the National League West. The Dodgers' magic number for clinching the division is 13.

Rookie Tom Browning, 17-9, got the victory.

A's 4-2, Royals 2-7

George Brett hit a three-run homer and Bud Black pitched a four-hitter to help Kansas City salvage a double-header split in Oakland.

In the opener, Mike Heath's three-run homer broke a 1-1 tie in the fourth inning and sent the A's to victory.

The split left the Royals 2½ games ahead of California in the AL West.

Brett tied a career high with his 25th home run. The blow gave Kansas City a 5-1 lead.

The A's beat Charlie Leibrandt, 15-8, by scoring four unearned runs in the fourth with the aid of Leibrandt's throwing error.

Angels 12, Rangers 4

Reggie Jackson hit a three-run homer in the first inning and Doug DeCinces later hit a two-run homer that powered California past Texas.

Jackson, who finished with four RBI, hit his 24th home run of the season and the 527th of his career off rookie Jose Guzman, 0-2.

Larry Parrish and Duane Walker homered for the Rangers.

White Sox 6, Mariners 3

Carlton Fisk and Harold Baines drove in two runs each and Dave Wehrmeister pitched 4 1-3 innings of scoreless relief to lead Chicago over Seattle.

Baines picked up his 98th and 99th RBI of the year with a run-scoring single in the second and a sacrifice fly in the fourth. Fisk got his 95th and 96th with a double and single.

Astros 2, Padres 1

Glenn Davis set a Houston team record for home runs by a rookie with his 15th of the season, a solo shot that broke a 1-1 tie in the eighth inning.

Davis broke the mark of 14 set by Joe Morgan in 1965.

Earlier in the game, Jose Cruz of the Astros got his 2,000th career hit.

Tigers 4, Orioles 1

Shortstop Cal Ripken's throwing error allowed Barbaro Garbey to score the go-ahead run from second base and Lance Parrish followed with a two-run single as Detroit scored three times in the eighth inning.

Mike Young hit his 27th homer for Baltimore.

Twins 5, Indians 2

Bert Blyleven, facing Cleveland for the first time since he was traded to Minnesota last month, got the victory in allowing seven hits over eight innings. Blyleven, 14-15 overall and 5-4 with the Twins, struck out seven and raised his AL-leading total to 179.

Mark Salas homered and doubled for Minnesota.

Red Sox 4, Brewers 2

Jeff Sellers won his major-league debut by scattering eight hits over 6 1-3 innings. He gave up two runs, one of them unearned.

Pirates 5, Phillies 4

Johnny Ray tied the game with an RBI double and Denny Gonzalez hit a bases-loaded, infield single as Pittsburgh rallied for two runs in the eighth against Philadelphia.

Winner Rick Reuschel, 13-7, pitched his seventh straight complete game.

Mike Schmidt hit his 29th homer and had a run-scoring single for the visiting Phillies.

Braves 4, Giants 1

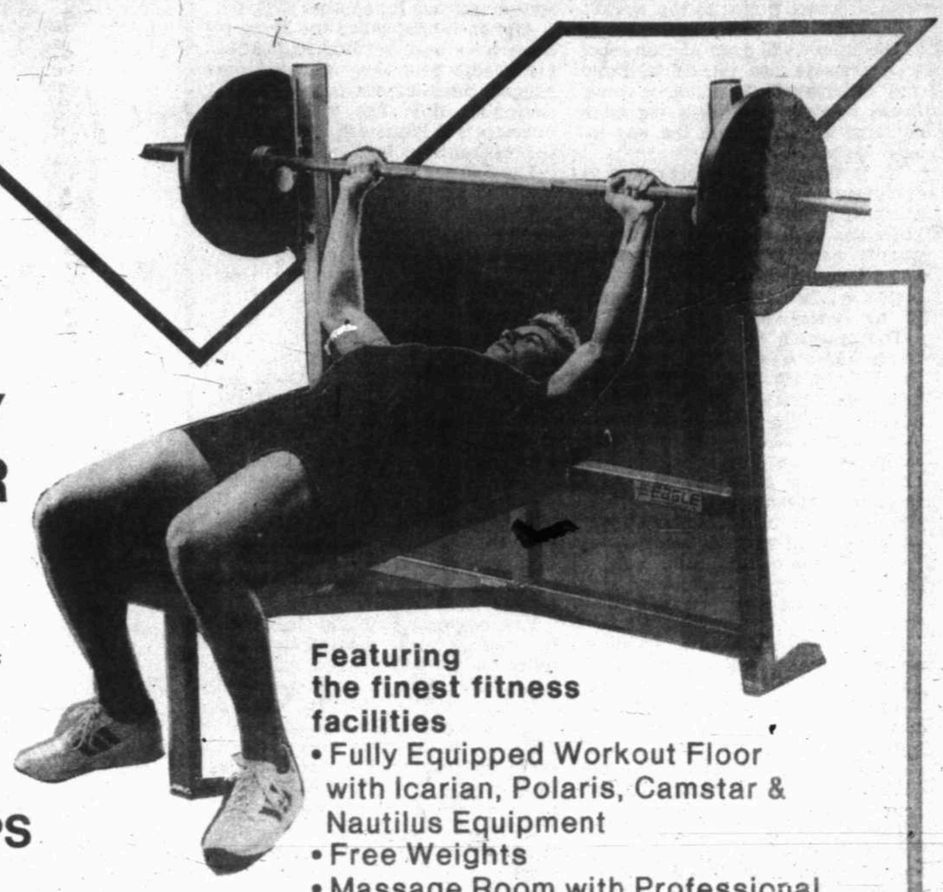

Steve Bedrosian scattered five hits over six innings and Claudell Washington drove in two runs to lead Atlanta past visiting San Francisco.

U.S. funds to publicize Afghan, Soviet struggle

WASHINGTON (AP) — Guerrillas in Afghanistan are about to get money from the United States government for a public relations campaign intended to bring their struggle against Soviet troops to the world's attention.

The money will train Afghan rebel journalists to use television, radio and newspapers to advance their cause. Reporters will be given minicameras to photograph the war inside Afghanistan.

"It is the goal of this project to facilitate the collection, development and distribution of credible, objective and timely professional-quality news stories, photographs and television images about developments in Afghanistan," said a notice in the Federal Register.

The program will be overseen by Uncle Sam's own propaganda arm, the U.S. Information Agency. Congress appropriated $500,000 to hire experts and may provide more later.

In making the money available, Congress all but instructed USIA to consider an organization like Friends of Afghanistan, a new group whose board includes former Carter administration national security adviser Zbigniew Brzezinski, known for hard-line anti-Soviet views.

USIA has solicited proposals, due Sept. 25.

Friends of Afghanistan includes other American foreign policy luminaries such as Lawrence Eagleburger, a former undersecretary of state, and Dr. Zalmay Khalilzad, a Columbia University political science professor and some-time paid adviser to the State Department on Afghanistan.

The American effort will enable the rebels to disseminate "the message to the world of what is going on there," said Sen. Gordon Humphrey, R-N.H., who proposed the idea to Congress. "The Soviets, unfortunately, have largely succeeded in their efforts of hiding that war from the people of the world and from world opinion," he said.

Humphrey, who thinks the Reagan administration has failed to provide enough assistance to the anti-Soviet fighters, told the Senate in June that the project was cleared with the National Security Council. Congress' understanding is that the administration may ask for another $500,000.

Afghan rebels, called the Mujahadeen, have been battling 100,000 Soviet troops who have occupied the rugged, mountainous country since December 1979. The rebels' headquarters is in Peshawar, Pakistan, on the Afghanistan border.

The Federal Register said the project is aimed at helping media representatives "overcome substantial obstacles" in bringing the story to world attention and to train Afghans "to develop an independent, self-funded media organization."

As a first step, USIA hired John O. Koehler, a former Associated Press administrator, to travel to Pakistan, Paris and other capitals to assess the needs both of problems guerrillas face in telling their story and of Western journalists trying to do the same thing.

Most Western reporters assigned to cover the Afghan conflict are based in Pakistan and manage to slip over the border occassionally for a first-hand look at the war.

"It's a story that hasn't been told," Koehler said.

Koehler was paid $9,000 plus $4,600 in expenses for his month-long feasibility study. He said he will also look for "people who are trainable."

Rosanne Klass, director of the New York-based Afghanistan Information Center, said the project could be helpful in promoting the story and persuading the Western press "to start using this stuff."

Congress' suggestion that it wanted the USIA to turn to the Friends of Afghanistan to run the program has angered other groups with similar ideas.

"If that is not a conflict of interest, I don't know what is," said Karen McKay, executive director of the Committee for a Free Afghanistan. The group, based in Washington has held seminars on the issue and sought to promote the Afghan cause.

Widow marks soldier's claim to 'Kilroy was here'

HALIFAX, Mass. (AP) — "Kilroy was here," World War II's most enduring graffito, was first penned by a shipyard worker who was just trying to prove he was doing his job, says the widow of James J. Kilroy, who died in 1962.

Margaret Kilroy, 81, said her husband came up with the idea for the phrase after his superiors questioned his work as a rate-setter at the Fore River Shipyard in Quincy during the war.

"Jim didn't like that," Mrs. Kilroy said in a recent interview. So, he printed "Kilroy was here" on the ships he inspected.

Soldiers everywhere were familiar with the words.

NATION IN BRIEF

Prison numbers swell

WASHINGTON (AP) — The number of inmates in federal and state prisons reached 490,041 by June 30, a record high resulting in part from tougher sentencing by judges, the government says.

The roster of state and federal inmates grew by 26,183 names, or by 5.6 percent, from Jan. 1 to June 30, nearly equaling the total increase for all of 1984, said the Bureau of Justice Statistics.

In a report released Sunday, the bureau said nearly one-third of all state prison inmates were held in four states — California, with 47,075 inmates; Texas, with 38,028; New York, with 34,597, and Florida, with 28,309.

Bureau director Steven R. Schlesinger said that "although prison overcrowding is a problem in many areas of the country, incarcerated offenders are at least temporarily unable to victimize the public."

"Possible explanations for this record increase include a reduction in inmates released early from prison, greater use of mandatory sentencing laws and tougher sentencing practices by judges," Schlesinger said.

Total prisoner population on June 30, the bureau said, ranged from a low of 415 inmates in North Dakota to the high of 47,075 inmates in California.

Pandas may visit zoo

SAN DIEGO (CNS) — San Diego Zoo officials are hopeful that a pair of giant pandas on exhibit at the Toronto Zoo will be detoured to San Diego before they are returned to China this fall.

"I'm optimistic," said Sheldon Campbell, president of the Zoological Society of San Diego. The society operates both the Zoo and the Wild Animal Park near here.

Although disappointed in the past, Campbell said the Zoo's efforts to borrow the pandas were boosted last November when a pair of endangered golden monkeys were sent to San Diego for a five-month visit. It was the first time the golden monkeys had been exhibited outside Asia, and the visit helped cement San Diego's relations with the Chinese.

The Zoo's campaign to obtain pandas began at least 10 years ago. Efforts were intensified in 1979, when the Zoo sent its first delegation to China, Campbell said.

Inmates 'saw' way out

PLYMOUTH, Mass. (AP) — Five inmates sawed their way through a window and jumped over a fence to escape from the Plymouth County House of Correction.

"Any escaped inmate is considered potentially dangerous," but there was nothing to indicate the five were violent or armed, said William Renny, chief of Plymouth County sheriff's deputies.

Renny said the five escaped between 8:15 p.m. and 10 p.m. Sunday by sawing through a bar covering a window in an old laundry room. He said they then lowered themselves about 12 feet to a courtyard and apparently climbed up the side of a building, crossed to the other end and jumped into an area where it was easier to get over the fence.

Murder suspect found

HOWELL, Mich. (AP) — A man captured after an extensive manhunt in Florida was returned Sunday to face arraignment on charges of abducting and killing a 13-year-old boy whose nude body was found in central Michigan.

Ronald Lloyd Bailey, 26, waived extradition and was flown from Marion County, Fla., Sunday to a holding cell in Livingston County Jail after his was arrest Saturday, said Michigan State Police Sgt. Gary Mihalek.

Michigan authorities charge Bailey with one count of murder and one count of kidnapping in the abduction and slaying of Shawn Moore, 13, whose body was found Friday.

Police say the youth was abducted while riding his bicyle near his home. A coroner determined his death was a homicide, although an autopsy failed to determine the cause of death.

Vet gets Bronze Star

CAPE CORAL, Fla. (AP) — A soft-spoken World War II veteran who received a Bronze Star 44 years after he earned it said he saw his fellow soldiers beheaded and buried alive during the infamous Bataan Death March.

Thomas Fagan of Cape Coral was captured by the Japanese in the Philippines on his 20th birthday in April 1942. He was forced to march four days in 100-degree heat while suffering from malaria. Thousands perished on the march.

He said he was still haunted by the memory of seeing a fellow soldier buried alive, his captors throwing a log on top of the makeshift grave "so he couldn't get out again."

Friday, more than 44 years after his capture, Fagan opened his mail to find the Bronze Star, the nation's fourth-highest military decoration.

Radon source sought

WASHINGTON (AP) — A government survey will evaluate potential health risks to residents of three states from the naturally occurring radioactive gas radon, an Environmental Protection Agency official said.

"We're trying to find out how significant the problem really is," said Sheldon Meyers, director of EPA's office of radiation. "We're trying to find out where the high levels of radon really are."

Radon is emitted from underground uranium deposits which researchers have found can cause lung cancer with prolonged exposure. Radon-related health risks were first discovered among uranium miners.

Preliminary state surveys have found radon seeping into homes in Pennsylvania, New Jersey and New York, from uranium deposits in a geological formation known as the Reading Prong.

Saudis purchase planes

NEW YORK (AP) — Saudi Arabia bought more than $4 billion worth of British fighter planes after President Reagan assured King Fahd that the United States would not object to the sale, according to a published report.

The New York Times, in today's editions, quoted unidentified sources as saying the Saudi king did not want to anger the United States, Saudi Arabia's principal arms supplier.

The Saudis had decided not to wait any longer for 40 to 48 American F-15 fighters that had been promised them by Reagan last December but whose sale repeatedly was delayed because of Israeli-backed opposition in Congress.

Ticking away

Carol Warrington marks the tires of a car parked in a specified time zone. Next time she passes, if the car is there past the time limit, she can write out a parking ticket.

Gloria Teichmann places a parking ticket on the windshield of a car which violates a parking ordinance, such as overparking, parking in a yellow zone or parking in an area not designated for cars.

The red flag signals the money in the meter didn't go far enough and is the sign that attracts the eyes of the parking control attendants.

They're a fact of the modern world. It's one of those things that comes with living in a city, whether in Dallas, San Francisco, New York, London, Berlin or even Midland.

Along with long days, traffic jams and missed appointments comes a worldwide source of irritation — parking tickets. They can put a frown into a good day and make a bad day explode.

They're just little slips of paper stuck onto the windshield of a vehicle. But it's your vehicle. And they tell all the passersby that you violated the law and now owe the city so many dollars. It's like being a child again and being reprimanded by your mother in public.

Each city has its own method of issuing parking tickets. In Midland those pale gold-colored envelopes designed for the convenience of the violator (put the money inside, close flap and drop into nearest mailbox) are handed out by what the police department terms "parking control attendants."

Generally, the public refers to them as "meter maids." But Capt. H.M. Wicker with the Midland Police Department said the people who walk the miles of downtown blocks day after day do more than just check the parking meters. "They issue tickets for any illegal parking."

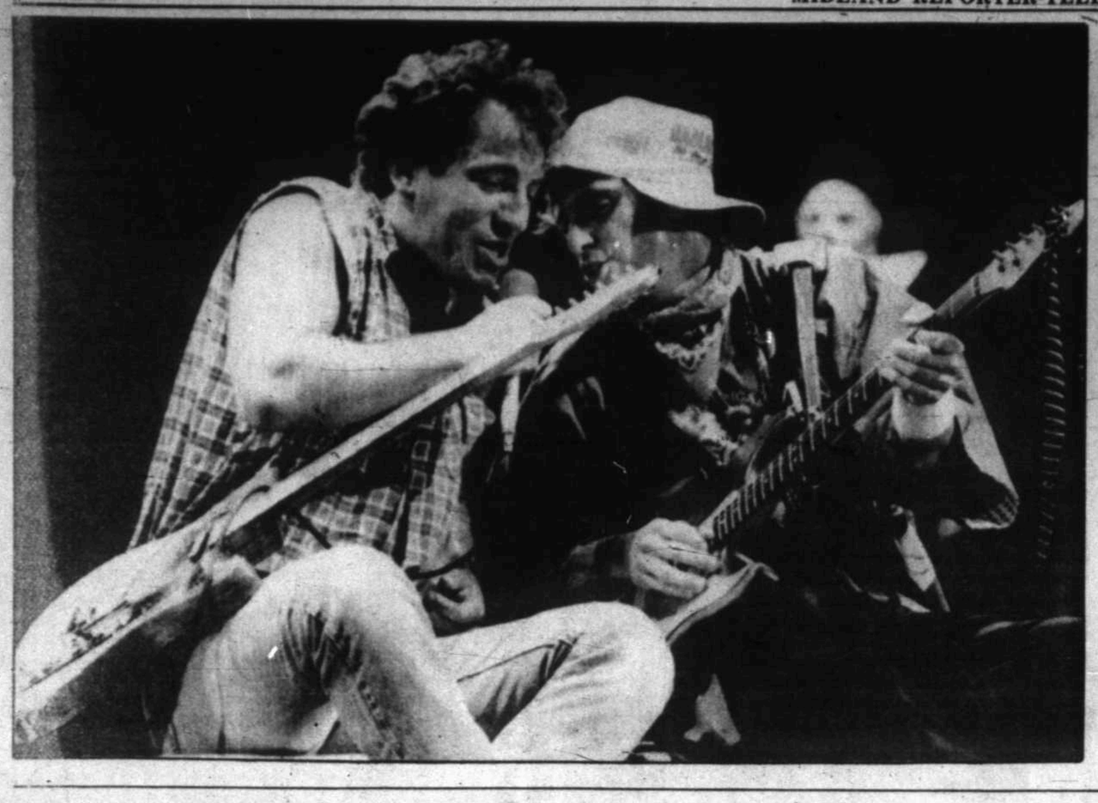

Issuing of tickets has been expanded to outside the confines of downtown, said Wicker. "We can now go on private lots and issue parking tickets to people parked in handicapped zones" who are not handicapped. "It irritates me to see a 17-year-old pull up into a handicapped space and park just to run into the store. The public also should call us on these people."

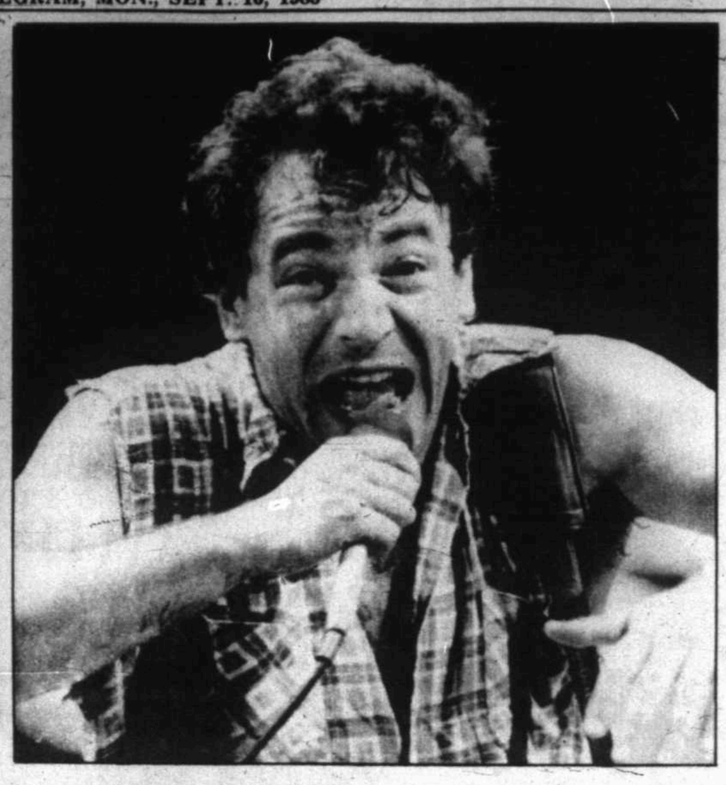

In the past Midlanders have displayed a tendency to ignore those slips of paper, tossing them into the street or onto the floorboard of their car. Others — like an obedient child — eventually pay the ticket.

For the constant violators who never pay their tickets, Midland's Municipal Court has found a solution to remind them of the errors of their ways. With the installation of a new computer system, the violators are being sent notices telling how many tickets have been issued, how much is owed and why the violator should pay up by check at Municipal Court. "This is the only notice you will receive. Please take care of this within 15 days of the date of this notice," reads the computer-written letter.

The first notices were mailed out Aug. 30, according to Municipal Court Judge Robin Smith.

Gramm, Bentsen trade views on trade

By KATHRYN BAKER
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Texans Lloyd Bentsen and Phil Gramm are considered by their colleagues to be among the most knowledgeable members of the Senate when it comes to the complex and often partisan issue of trade.

In separate interviews, Gramm, a freshman Republican, and Bentsen, a four-term Democrat, voiced very different ideas about the U.S. trade imbalance, its effect on jobs and on what should be done.

"I am opposed to protectionism," said Gramm, who has a Ph.D. in economics, in an interview last week in his Senate office. "The Democrats are trying to cast this as a jobs issue. In reality, the issue is fair trade."

"I've been a free-trader all my life ...but there's been a change," said Bentsen, who is ranking minority member on the Senate Finance subcommittee on international trade, said in an interview in his office the same day.

Bentsen is the Sehate sponsor of a bill that would impose a 25 percent tariff on goods from countries whose exports exceed imports by 55 percent.

Gramm opposes tariffs and favors negotiation and stricter enforcement of current laws against "dumping" — the selling of foreign goods in the United States at below-market prices.

Gramm said trade restrictions in the United States will only result in restriction of overseas purchases of U.S. goods.

"If you listen to the Democrats, it's as if people sell things here and then take the dollars and eat them," said Gramm. "Nobody wants dollars to eat. They don't eat good. So they take the dollars and invest them, they take the dollars and they lend them, they take the dollars and they buy.

"What we have got to do is not stop world trade and produce another depression as we did in the 1930s. What we've got to do is work to try to make the system fairer," he said.

Bentsen said the foreign competition in many cases has an unfair advantage due to government subsidies and cheap labor. Their unfair trade practices, he says, are costing American jobs.

Sen. Phil Gramm

Sen. Lloyd Bentsen

"What we have got to do is not stop world trade and produce another depression as we did in the 1930s. What we've got to do is work to try to make the system fairer."

— Sen. Phil Gramm

"...You've got to buy time. Otherwise you lose your world market share of the business, and when you lose it, it's hell to ever get it back.

—Sen. Lloyd Bentsen

"We're charged sometimes with shoddiness in merchandise and for some of our merchandise that's true," Bentsen said. "Or with management mistakes, and sometimes that's true. All those things have to be corrected, but in the meantime, you've got to buy time. Otherwise you lose your world market share of the business, and when you lose it, it's hell to ever get it back.

"You have one of these international companies move a half-billion dollar plant abroad, that's not going to come back in this century," he said.

"If you listen to the Democrats," said Gramm, "America is losing millions of jobs. But yet, in the last three years, we have created 8 million net new jobs, more than Japan and Europe put together. More than Europe has created in the last 20 years. More than we have ever created in any three years/in the 20th century."

"For us to go to a debtor nation for the first time since 1914," said Bentsen, "and to see that escalating where by 1990 we'll owe over a trillion dollars in debt because of our trade deficit — to foreign countries we'll owe it — we can say to Brazil and Mexico and Poland, 'move aside, you're pikers.'"

"The truth is," said Gramm, "that nations owe us tremendous amounts of money and the only way they can pay their debt is to run a surplus. You can pass all the laws you want to and you can't change that."

If the Bentsen bill is passed, said Bentsen, "I think that we'd never have to put on a tariff. The Japanese are not going to run off their number one customer. They're too smart for that. They would cut their surplus by 5 percent and avoid the tariff. It's a lot better than trying to tell them what to ship to us or what not to ship."

"Any tariff, whether it's the 25 percent tariff that's been proposed by some, or whatever, is paid by the consumer, not by the foreigners," said Gramm. "Most studies show that tariffs and quotas cost about $50,000 to the consumer for every job in the protected industry that they save, and yet a job is lost somewhere else because something is not being bought, money is not being invested."

Texan finds love in 'soap'

WACO (AP) — For Baylor graduate and former Wacoan Lou Ann Gideon, there's only one thing keeping her life from being perfect.

After years of struggling, she's landed a choice role in the daytime drama "Search for Tomorrow." She's grown to love New York City, found a great little church, finally met the man of her dreams and he's proposed.

The only trouble is, he's on a competing soap opera, "Loving," at the exact same time HER soap opera is on.

Oh well, five out of six ain't bad. And she admits she's pretty happy about a career that took her from being a Baylor Homecoming Queen to star of a New York City soap opera.

Her statuesque, exotic good looks helped her land a commercial agent in New York and she appeared in Midol, Crystal Light, "National Enquirer" and a number of regional commercials in short order.

"'Search for Tomorrow' was the second soap opera I was sent to," she said. "I had to screen test twice for it. They narrowed the original field down to four, but the network decided to re-open the casting process once again. Fortunately, they asked me to audition again."

Black male sought in Odessa kidnapping

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — Police today continued to seek a man described as a short black male who kidnapped a 23-year-old Odessa woman and threatened to kill her if she didn't have sex with him.

According to police spokesman Rusty Baker, the woman who lives in the 2300 block of E. 46th Street, told investigating officers her car had stalled at the intersection of East 46th and Everglade in northeast Odessa about 5:15 a.m. Sunday and she got out to see what was wrong.

As she looked at her car, she said, someone grabbed her from behind and forced her into a two-tone blue van. The man, whom she described as having a short Afro hairstyle, demanded she have sex with him and threatened to kill her if she didn't.

The woman told police the man drove to the Andrews Highway and headed north. After he passed under the State Highway 158 overpass, she said, he turned west, crossed over a cattle guard and drove some distance before he stopped. She told officers she managed to jump out of the car and hid behind some bushes while the man drove around the area for about two hours trying to find her.

The young woman said when she determined the man had left the area she made her way to a home about a half mile away. Ms. Morgan said the residents allowed her to call a friend, then drove her into Odessa and she called police.

Police this morning also continued to investigate an early Sunday morning shooting on the city's southside.

Baker said 23-year-old Eddie Rodriguez and his wife of 311 Lindberg were with some friends at 221 Shell, just around the corner from their home, when a car containing an unknown number of individuals drove up.

Rodriguez's wife started yelling at the men, according to investigating officers, demanding to know why the individuals had killed her uncle.

Someone in the vehicle drew a .45-caliber gun and began shooting, with bullets hitting two vehicles.

No one was injured, but police are seeking the individuals involved on charges of aggravated assault.

Thirteen Midlanders arrested on misdemeanor gambling

From Staff Reports

A police department raid on a southside residence early Sunday resulted in the arrest of 13 persons on misdemeanor gambling charges.

Midland police Lt. Hank Norton said the incident was reported about midnight Sunday at 405 S. Mineola by state liquor officials who had been investigating complaints of beer and whiskey being sold at the residence without a permit.

Norton reported two packs of playing cards, dice and about $164 cash were confiscated at the scene. The names of the arrested were not released. They were scheduled to be arraigned today.

In other weekend complaints, four stereo speakers and clothing, together valued at $415, were reported stolen during a burglary of an automobile while it was parked Saturday or Sunday at 516 N. Loop 250.

Donna Littlefield, 516 N. Loop 250, told police the burglary occurred between 10 p.m. Saturday and 7:30 a.m. Sunday.

Kathleen Marie Shebat of Mishawaka, Ind., reported a spa pump, worth about $400, was stolen between Aug. 1 and Sunday during a burglary at 2303 Hermitage Court, according to police reports.

A bicycle, valued at $300, was stolen either Saturday or Sunday from the Tony McAdams residence, 2601 N. A St., police reported. The theft occurred between 11 p.m. and 9 a.m.

TICKETS

The 18,000 notices represented about $130,000 in unpaid tickets from the last two years, he said.

Apparently, the notices have opened the eyes of some violators. "We've been overwhelmed with the response. We have such a backlog now we haven't been able to get it on computer and see how much we have." Smith said one person owed $800, which was paid in cash.

Even before the new computer notices, the Municipal Court was pursuing violators who owed more than $200, such as the person who owed $2,000, he said.

First, the court employees try a court summons. Then a warrant. And if those don't work, the court has the violator's vehicle towed in. That usually brings in the violator, who pays his back tickets, according to Smith.

Municipal Court has been hooked up to a computer system for about two years now, said Smith. Wicker also noted that with all the tickets listed on computer, if a parking control attendant notices numerous tickets in the car she can call the court and have the vehicle checked out. That puts an alert to the court.

Once the mass of paid parking tickets is sorted out and analyzed, Smith said he hopes to send out notices every 30 to 60 days.

But even with the increased payment of tickets, Smith said the issuing of parking tickets "is a losing proposition. The money tickets bring in doesn't pay the salaries of the people or the costs involved. It's one of those governmental functions that has to be performed. Without controls, it would be chaotic downtown."

But it might not ruin as many citizens' days.

Guardian Angel Sliwa arrested in Hollywood

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Guardian Angels founder Curtis Sliwa, arrested for blocking traffic in a drug-troubled Hollywood neighborhood, said from a jail cell that residents were fed up with police inability to curb crime.

The Guardian Angels were called in to patrol the area last week by residents dissatisfied with police response to an escalation in drug trafficking, Sliwa said Sunday.

Taking photos of children anything but 'a snap'

Copley News Service

Two-year-old Spencer Fine is crawling around the bottom of Dennis Brooks's tripod-mounted camera, getting tangled in the wires.

Brooks, meanwhile, is talking to another toddler about to have his photo taken at a preschool. The kid in the chair is trying to get away, so Brooks offers him the cord to the flash.

"This young man is going to take the picture," he tells the other children in the room while Spencer gets more tangled in the equipment.

The boy in the chair presses the button, the flash goes off and while the toddler's attention is riveted on the camera in front of him, Brooks steps back, quickly looks into the viewfinder, grabs the cable release and snaps a photo, adroitly sidestepping Spencer in the process.

Spencer crawls away and Brooks adds one more child portrait to the 25,000 or so he's taken in the last 10 years, proving once again that being slightly acrobatic is as much a part of being a child photographer as having a good eye.

IN A PINCH, a little chutzpah comes in handy, too.

"In a minute I'm going to ask you to dive back," Brooks tells one of the parents, Penny Levy, whose daughter, Elizabeth, is crying in the chair. The only reason she is in the chair at all is because Mom is kneeling beside her.

With the shutter release in one hand, Brooks gets the child's attention by running a feather duster across her face.

"Dive, Mom. Dive," he orders.

Levy lunges away from the chair toward the floor and Brooks snaps away. Meanwhile, someone has bumped into the white curtain reflector, and it begins to teeter toward Elizabeth. Brooks catches it in time.

Brooks, 40, can do almost anything. You almost have to, to be a photographer who specializes in child portraiture.

Take Maurice Roy, 30, a photographer of 14 years.

"Children love to inflict pain," said Roy. "About two weeks ago, I had a problem child who was withdrawn, so I dared the child to step on my foot. He did, and I kept saying, 'Ouch.' The child starts smiling and you win them over."

A CHILD PHOTOGRAPHER is part psychologist, clown, comedian, mime and playmate who can wheedle, bribe, coax, flatter, cajole, make funny sounds and fib a little.

"Most of all, you have to be ready and willing to make a fool of yourself," said Dennis Haynes, 34, who's been doing it for only a year.

Photography, that is.

In his short time in the business, Haynes said he already has crawled around the floor many times.

"You have to get down and talk to them, play with them and not care what you look like. Somebody could take great blackmail photos of you," he said.

You also have to love kids — or, at the very least, tolerate them. Most of those surveyed said they actually preferred working with children.

"When a 16-month-old girl being carried out by her mom blows you a kiss over her mother's shoulder, you kind of melt," said John Rauch, 49.

Of course, they also do it for the money.

"This is the backbone of the business for us," said Brooks. "It can be very lucrative."

AN AVERAGE FEE for a session in the home or studio can range from $70 to $100 for about an hour's work. Prints are extra, and by the time Mom and Dad decide on a particular combination of 8-by-10s, pocket-size and wallet photos, they could end up spending $200 to $250.

Depending on the package, having your child photographed in class, as Brooks was doing, may range from $6 to $35.

"When I started out, there were three, maybe four people doing preschools. Now there are 15, and most of them started in the last year or two," Brooks said. "Traditionally, it's been a market that hasn't been exploited."

A lot of their peers have steered clear of the field because of its hectic nature — somewhat akin to being a driving instructor and slightly less nerve-racking than defusing a bomb.

Case in point: Rodney Dangerfield in "Easy Money." His occupation: child photographer.

But Rauch counters: "I don't do weddings. I don't like them."

Roy admits you "need a lot of patience," but that's usually reserved for the parents.

"PARENTS ARE MORE the pain in the neck. They have a preconceived notion of how a child should look," he said.

Added Virginia Curtis, 37: "The biggest problem is when they try to get the kid to look up and smile and it's usually in the wrong direction." Often, she said, "we're selling what people expect rather than what's there."

Said Roy: "You please the parent, please yourself and then take the picture how you see it."

But the way Haynes sees it, "It's the kid you need to make happy. If you don't, it will show in the picture."

Here's how some of them get the most from their subjects:

• Beverly Keane, 37: "I try to become a child so I can understand what they're trying to tell me. A lot of strange noises come out of the camera. For instance, I use a hand puppet. I call him 'Mr. Rabbit,' and he helps me take the picture."

• Brooks: "You have to understand that kids are in control. When you get to the 3-year-olds you don't have to do anything because at that age they're generally cheerful and happy and it's fun for them to get up and participate. ... With a 2- to 2½-year-old, you joke with them a little bit, but if you prolong it, the hand goes to the crotch or the mouth and it's all over."

• RAUCH: "A 3-YEAR-OLD walks in, very apprehensive. I basically ignore them, test the waters to see how they will react. I don't talk baby talk. I talk to them like a real person. I mellow them out. Sometimes I'll show them a toy and tell them they can play with it afterward. It's called rewarding or bribery."

• Roy: "When working with babies, never wear white clothes or stand over them. You don't want them to think they're going to the doctor."

• Curtis: "Some kids will work for food, some for money. Some kids will do anything for a dime."

• Joe Butts: "I had one 6-year-old girl where we spent two hours in sitting and changing sets and backgrounds. The child had a Raggedy Andy doll. Suddenly, she spun around and said she wasn't going to do it anymore. She clutched her doll, first in anger, then pensive. Her expression was magnificent. I moved my light and kept shooting and captured a portrait that was very special.

"Her mother said she looks like that every time she goes out and leaves her at home."

Above all, be prepared for surprises.

Roy was posing three children on a rock when a tarantula crawled into the lap of one of them. Despite the interruption, he continued the shooting after slapping the insect away.

Another time, however, he had to cancel a session after one of his subjects dove into the ocean. Roy was photographing Mom and the four kids on the beach when a wave swept her purse away and her son swam after it.

BACK AT THE preschool, Brooks is recreating Romper Room by sitting down with his 12 subjects in a circle and telling them there is nothing to having their photo taken and that after they finish he will give them "happy face" stickers that smell like strawberries.

"Do you want to be first?" he asks a little girl.

"I want my mommy," she answers.

Brooks tells a boy who is making like a jack-in-the-box: "You can sit down."

"I don't want to sit down," says the boy.

Suddenly, another girl jumps up and darts toward the door.

Brooks: "Where are you going?"

She: "I'm going to get mommy."

Undaunted, Brooks continues.

"What do sheep say? Do sheep go, Ruff ruff?"

"Noooooo," comes the unanimous reply.

"Do sheep go, Meow?"

"Nooooo," again.

"Do they go, Baa?"

"Yessss," say all the little ones.

The ice is broken as much as it is going to be, and the children take their turns before the camera.

Afterward, six mothers gather the class for a group shot outside.

AFTER SOMEONE lures Spencer Fine back from watching a man unload a Pepsi truck nearby and one of the mothers, clutching two children like rag dolls beneath each arm, works her way into the group, Brooks looks through the lens, raises an arm and instructs the subjects.

"Hi. This way," he says.

His hand is on the shutter release.

"Hoooooooo," he says.

He snaps the picture.

But Elizabeth Levy has wandered from her mother's grasp.

Brooks goes through the motions again.

"Hoooooooo," he says.

Snap.

"That's the toughest," he says later, as a class of 4-year-olds files into the school for its photo session.

"It kind of goes downhill from here."

'Hyperactivity' still mystery affliction

Hearst News Service

For one group of youngsters, learning is more problematic than for most. With varying degrees of affection, these children are referred to as fidgety, overactive, rambunctious or holy terrors.

These youngsters have what psychiatrists call attention deficit disorder or hyperactivity, a cluster of behaviors that includes excessively high motor activity and problems with concentration and attention. The typical child with this disorder acts fidgety, cannot sit still and cannot pay attention in school. He reacts to any and all stimuli and is therefore distracted by anything extraneous. He is easily angered and upset and flies into rages and temper tantrums, especially when he does not get his way.

THERE ARE MEDICATIONS and behavioral and learning therapies that recent studies show to be highly effective in controlling hyperactive behavior, but much about the disorder, including its cause and precisely how many children are affected, is still largely unknown. Hyperactivity is much more common among boys than girls, but estimates of the number of children affected vary from 5 percent to 20 percent of school-age children. One reason for the wide disparity is inclusion in the statistics of mildy overactive children alongside children who are clinically hyperactive.

Dr. H. Thompson Prout, associate professor in the State University of New York-Albany's school psychology program, thinks the conservative estimate of 5 percent of school age children is closest to the mark.

"Very early thinking going back to the 1940s was mild brain damage," Prout said. "More current thinking looks at a couple of causes. Some research suggests a neurological difference, not damage necessarily, but a difference. There is also good data to suggest a genetic link. Some data still suggest an allergic response. Basically, they don't know."

AT ONE TIME, allergic reactions to certain foods were thought to play a major role in hyperactivity. But in recent years the benefits of diet modification for hyperactive children have come into dispute.

In March, Dr. Clifton T. Furukawa, clinical associate professor of pediatrics at the University of Washington School of Medicine, reported to an American Academy of Allergy and Immunology conference that sugar is not related to hyperactive behavior. The study concluded that hyperactive children would probably benefit more from the help of a psychologist or a behavioral pediatrician than from a sugar-free diet.

Suspicions that sugar was a culprit and that restrictive diets could help hyperactive children became popular in the 1970s after the late Dr. Benjamin Feingold postulated that 30 percent of hyperactive children demonstrated significant improvement in behavior when placed on a special elimination diet program. Feingold recommended a diet that removed most desserts and convenience foods containing synthetic food colors and flavors.

"THERE HAVE BEEN several well-controlled studies testing the Feingold diet," Prout said. "When researchers looked at groups of children, they didn't see any difference. But with a small portion of the children in the experimental groups, there seemed to be significant changes. The general conclusion is with some children — probably a small proportion of those who are clinically hyperactive — the Feingold diet may work."

As between medication and behavior and learning-based therapies, "it is not clear which is more effective. Looking at the literature, you can make an argument for either side. Both work, both have advantages and disadvantages. The best thing in favor of behavioral intervention is it tends to target the specific problem the child has. For example, if the problem is running around the room, you can focus on that."

Behavior therapy might take the form of a teacher praising a child for paying attention to the assignment he's working on, thereby reinforcing attending behavior. Learning therapy tries to teach the child ways to be less impulsive by stopping and thinking. For instance, if there is a math assignment, the child is taught to read the instructions before plowing into the problems.

STIMULANT DRUGS, which have the paradoxical effect of slowing hyperactive children down, have been used as a form of treatment for more than a decade. Ritalin and Dexedrine are the drugs prescribed most often.

"These kids need help in a variety of areas," said Dr. Carl Mindell, clinical professor of psychiatry at Albany (N.Y.) Medical College. "It does appear a large percentage of kids are helped by medication, but medication by itself doesn't cure anybody. It makes the child more responsive to what people ask of him. Medication makes it possible for the child to listen to his parents, if he wants to, by increasing his capacity to sustain attention."

That means parents have to make special efforts to articulate their expectations to the hyperactive child and make clear the consequences of misbehavior.

IN AN ARTICLE on "The 'real' hyperactive child" in Consultant magazine, Dr. Ivan Fras, a psychiatrist, said parents of hyperactive children should be told to:

• Provide a greater amount of simple, consistent guidance than they would for an average child.

• Stop expecting the child to assume as much responsibility in matters of independent judgment as a normal child of the same age.

• Protect the child from overstimulation, particularly their own emotional upsets.

• Plan ahead to avoid situations where the child will be frustrated.

That advice notwithstanding, family life is generally more stressful with hyperactive children.

"These kids, even with medication, will generally get into more trouble than other kids," Mindell said. "It's a very frustrating disorder for the kids and the parents. Nobody's wild to be yelled at a lot, and they do get yelled at. They experience many more failures in living up to parents' and teachers' expectations, so their self esteem is often damaged.

"PARENTS INITIALLY think it's the kid's fault. The kid thinks it's his fault. Often, just the diagnosis in itself can be useful. It takes the onus off the child and makes it easier for the parent, too."

'Tricky' mothers encourage healthy dietary preferences

Hearst News Service

Wise mothers can outsmart their children and trick them into actually liking foods that are good for them.

Two experts, Annette B. Natow, Ph.D., R.D., and Jo-Ann Heslin, M.A., R.D., answer some of the most-asked questions from mothers in this month's issue of Redbook, explaining how to get a child to eat right without tears or tantrums, fancy foods or fuss.

Toddlers between the ages of 1 and 3 tend to be finicky eaters, the experts say, but patience and offering good food choices can lay the foundation for healthy eating habits.

What about the toddler who refuses to eat meat?

"It is better not to make an issue of a child's refusal to eat a specific food — just be sure you are providing substitutes while continuing to offer meat to your child, and one day he'll surprise you by eating it," Natow and Heslin wrote.

Toddlers can be encouraged to eat vegetables by serving them in unfamiliar form, such as creamed or in matchstick pieces. Serve raw vegetables at the start of a meal when the child is hungriest. Some fruit, such as peaches and apricots, have many of the same nutrients as vegetables.

"Ages 4 to 6 are crucial to a child's nutritional development — it is during this period that eating patterns and attitudes about food form," the experts wrote. "Reinforcing good habits now can help your child eat wisely for a lifetime."

They advise:

• Don't use food as a pacifier or a reward, nor withhold it as punishment.

• Don't worry about a child eating too little. If your child's growth rate is normal, he is eating enough.

• Set a good example. Children copy their parents' likes and dislikes.

• Limit the amount of undesirable foods you keep in the house. Have on hand plenty of juice, fresh fruit, nuts, yogurt and popcorn.

• Don't force your child to eat a food he dislikes, but insist the child eat three different foods at each meal.

• Don't be afraid to set limits. Say no to unhealthy foods and explain why the child should eat healthy ones.

School-age children need special care.

"Because children between the ages of 7 and 10 start growing at a rapid rate, they need more nutrients, pound for pound, than adults," the experts said. "Yet they're so active they may forget to eat."

They advise starting out with a healthy breakfast, packing a good lunch and being understanding at dinner.

Children in the preteen years have special needs — particularly calcium, iron, vitamins A and C, thiamin and riboflavin.

"The time of greatest growth and nutrient needs — ages 11 to 13 — is one in which kids often could not care less about healthy eating," Natow and Heslin wrote in Redbook. "Rather than preach, focus on the preteen's interest in being slim, attractive and athletic, and take into account food preferences."

Parents help children establish positive self-image

Associated Press

The most important thing a child needs in order to grow up successful cannot be bought with money or guaranteed with love — it is a positive self-image.

Many children feel unattractive, stupid or incapable, according to an article in this month's issue of Redbook, and parents of such children should examine their own behavior rather than that of the child.

Dr. Wayne W. Dyer, in his book "What Do You Really Want For Your Children?" (Morrow), outlines the major mistakes parents make that undermine children's self image.

• Avoid telling children either that they are bad or that they are good. Children should not be given the message that they are bad people when it is their behavior a parent is criticizing, nor that they are good people only when they behave the way their parents dictate.

• Don't use unkind pet names for children, such as Shorty, Klutz or Chubby. They reinforce a child's obvious flaws.

• Treat children as individuals. Continually comparing a child with others deprives her of the feeling she is unique.

• Give children responsibility or you will send the message that they cannot do things correctly and shouldn't try.

• Avoid criticizing children when they make mistakes. "Of all the ways to motivate a child," Dyer said, "criticism is perhaps the least useful and the most damaging."

• Allow children to speak for themselves, instead of speaking for them.

• Don't talk in front of children as if they weren't there.

• Touch, kiss, hold, wrestle and play with your children and tell them, "I love you."

"Children who are not fondled or touched begin to see themselves as unattractive and ultimately begin to doubt their own lovability," Dyer said.

Dreams encouraged

EATON, Pa. (AP) — In a national art program that encouraged grade-school children to daydream and draw, the prevalent themes were scientific advancements, excellence in sports, and ecology.

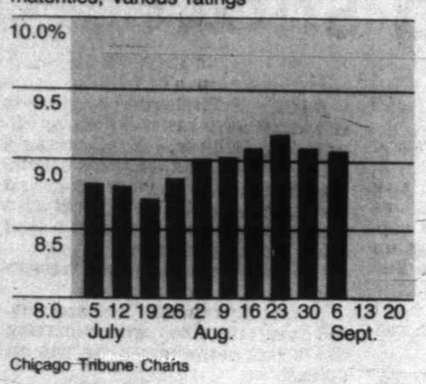

The "Dream-Makers" program, created by Crayola, centered around historical figures who dared to dream, and encouraged children to illustrate their own aspirations in artwork.

Dollar mixed

LONDON (AP) — The U.S. dollar was mixed in early European trading today amid uncertainty over the direction of the American economy. Gold prices were lower.

The dollar took a sharp knock on Friday after publication of new figures on industrial production, retail sales and producer prices, which fueled investor worries about the U.S. economy's second-half performance.

Those worries persisted today in moderately active trading, dealers reported.

But the dealers added that investors seemed even more concerned with figures still to come, particularly Wednesday's index of housing starts and Friday's "flash" Gross National Product estimate from the Commerce Department.

—2.9042 West German marks, up from 2.9010 late Friday

—2.3993 Swiss francs, up from 2.3900

—3.2565 Dutch guilders, down from 3.2625

—1,941.00 Italian lire, down from 1,942.50

—1.3733 Canadian dollars, up from 1.3710

In London, the British pound was quoted at $1.33, cheaper than Friday's 1.3365. Sterling was coming under pressure because of fears expressed by Saudi Oil Minister Ahmed Zaki Yamani in Britain last week of a new crude price war, dealers said.

Markets in Japan were closed for a holiday.

Gold opened in London at a bid price of $319.50 a troy ounce, compared with late Friday's $320.50. At midmorning today, the city's five major bullion dealers fixed a recommended price of $318.85.

In Zurich, the bid price was $318.80, down from $321.50 late Friday.

Earlier, in Hong Kong, gold fell 31 cents to close at a bid $320.16.

Economic reports predict no recession in 1986

NEW YORK (AP) — The government issued a spate of encouraging economic reports this past week, prompting private economists to call August the best month the country has had in a year — and to predict we will escape a recession in 1986.

The brightest report came Friday from the Labor Deparment, which said wholesale prices fell 0.3 percent last month, the steepest drop in more than 2½ years.

The decline in the Producer Price Index, the fourth in the last 12 months, means wholesale prices so far this year have risen at an annual rate of just 0.8 percent.

Separately, the Commerce Department reported Friday that retail sales rose 1.9 percent to $116.1 billion last month. That was the best showing in four months.

Later on Friday, the Federal Reserve Board reported that output at the nation's factories, mines and utilities rose 0.3 percent in August following no gain the previous month.

"The three reports together were indeed encouraging news indicating that the economy had a stellar performance in August, the best performance in about a year," said Allen Sinai, chief economist at Shearson Lehman Brothers Inc. in New York.

David Wyss, economist at the forecasting firm Data Resources Inc. in Lexington, Mass., said: "Certainly it's the best news we've had in quite a while. I think August is the strongest month we've had since last summer."

These statisctics come on top of the Labor Department's report the previous week that the jobless rate fell from 7.3 percent to 7 percent in August — the lowest level in five years.

Sinai and Wyss particularly liked the price report.

"It's a big plus for the economic expansion to have inflation low at this point in the cycle," Sinai said. "If inflation remains under control, business expansion can go on a long time."

Low inflation should encourage consumer buying, he said. It could also prevent the Federal Reserve Board from tightening its grip on credit, which would push up interest rates and crimp business spending.

The nation's money supply has been growing at a rate way above the Fed's upper target, sparking fears the board will become restrictive. The Fed reported on Thursday that M1, as it is called, jumped $1.4 billion in the last week of August.

"The report on producer prices was certainly good news for the economy overall," Wyss said. But, being more bearish than Sinai, he said: "Almost all of that drop in consumer prices is a drop in food prices, which illustrates the extremely dismal state of the farming sector."

He added: "The other side of that price picture is that profits are getting squeezed." Hurting profits, too, is the high dollar, he said.

He also threw a bit of a damper on the retail sales gain: "Almost all of it was autos. For a month when we had hoped for some good back-to-school sales, that's a little disappointing."

There was a 7.1 percent increase last month in sales by auto dealers, who have been offering attractive — and temporary — financing deals to carbuyers.

The automakers reported on Friday that domestic auto sales for early September rose 56.9 percent compared with a year ago, shattering a 30-year-old record for the period.

Sinai noted that retail sales in August, excluding autos, were still up — albeit a slim 0.4 percent.

"Consumer spending will probably continue to propel economic expansion," he said.

What Sinai said he liked about the indsutrial production gain was that "it was fairly generalized."

The Fed said the latest increase in industrial output matched the strongest advance this year, but was still far below the increases of up to 2.5 percent posted in the early stages of the recovery from the 1981-1982 recession.

"Employment looked so good in August, that we were looking for a little bit more" of an industrial production increase last month, Wyss said.

"Overall, the reports are encouraging," he added. "But I think they don't remove our underlying worries that the situation is still unstable."

Still, he said, "Right now, we think we will have a slowdown, and escape recession."

Sinai said: "There's no denying that August was a fine month for the economy. Overall, it looks like we are launched onto a higher growth path. The issue now is how much."

However much, he added, "It should dispell fears of a possible recession."

GM, Ford seek lower milage averages

WASHINGTON (AP) — For the first time in a decade, the average gasoline mileage of new cars sold in the United States may not increase this year, even though the best cars are doing even better at the pump.

The 1986 mileage champ, the Chevrolet Sprint ER, is rated at 55 miles per gallon in city driving and 60 mpg on the highway, according to tests released Sunday by the Environmental Protection Agency.

The figures are the highest ever recorded. But the two biggest automakers, General Motors and Ford Motor Co., are seeking to lower the government's required manufacturers' fleet average for this year, so the average for all cars may not increase as it has in the past.

Sprints are imported by General Motors Corp. from Suzuki Motors of Japan. The three-cylinder minicar was sold only on the West Coast for 1985, but GM is spreading it throughout the country this year. Suzuki will start selling cars under its own name, though none with such a high ranking.

Last year's champ, the Honda Civic Coupe HF, is ranked second despite improving its mileage on EPA's tests for 1986 — 52 mpg and 57 mpg for one model, compared with 49 mpg and 54 mpg for the best of Honda's 1985s cars.

The only U.S.-built model in the top 10 cars this year is a diesel-powered Ford Escort FS, with an engine built in Japan, rated at 41 miles per gallon in the city and 49 on the highway. That puts it ninth, or fifth if ties are not counted.

The best gasoline-powered domestic model is the Wisconsin-built Renault Alliance-Encore line, 35 mpg in the city and 44 mpg on the highway.

The thirstiest of all cars is the Rolls-Royce Silver Spur limousine, rated at 8 mpg city, 10 mpg highway. Rolls escapes the special "gas-guzzler" tax this year — its cars are now too heavy, more than 6,000 pounds, for the tax to apply, according to EPA analyst Greg Dana.

Dana said he was unable to predict what the average for all cars would be this year because of the big automakers' request to the Transportation Department to roll back the federal fuel standard.

The two companies want the standard set at 26 mpg instead of the current 27.5 mpg. If it isn't changed they could be faced with large fines, possibly reaching several hundred million dollars, unless they find a way to shift their customers away from powerful — and more profitable — large cars.

The fleet average is calculated before the new deflation factors are used and assumes that 55 percent of the mileage is rolled up in city driving.

If the Transportation Department grants the rollback request as planned, Dana said he expects the average to be about the same as this year's estimated 27.2 mpg. Otherwise, he said, the average could increase slightly.

The 27.2 figure is the highest ever recorded and almost double the 14 mpg of the 1974 model year, the pit of a long decline reflecting a gradual growth in car weight and fuel-hungry accessories such as air conditioning.

Ex-money launderer says tellers 'friendly'

WASHINGTON (AP) — "Friendly" bank tellers who didn't ask questions made money launderers welcome in the Dallas-Fort Worth and Houston areas, according to an ex-money launderer now serving time in a federal prison.

Wearing a black hood and robe to conceal his identity, the man, code-named "Mario," testified before the House Ways and Means oversight subcommittee, chaired by Rep. J.J. "Jake" Pickle, D-Austin.

He told Pickle that he and his cohorts had exchanged drug money for cashier's checks in 15 states, including Texas, where they sent a scout to see how easy it would be to pass cash in Dallas-Fort Worth and Houston-area banks.

"He would come back and report to us if the people were friendly. Obviously, people in Texas are friendly," Mario said.

He said money launderers, who call themselves "smurfs," stay away from banks where tellers are overly suspicious or ask for identification.

Legislators say prospect for passing merger legislation slim

Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — The prospect for passing legislation in 1985 that dramatically would alter the rules governing mergers and acquisitions is slim, House and Senate sources agree.

After many hours of hearings to explore the impact of mergers on the economy, corporate America, shareholders and communities, legislators are drafting proposals that focus on relatively minor changes in the rules governing the takeover process. Most of the proposed rule changes are designed to correct inequities in the process rather than to slow the pace of takeover activity.

The Reagan administration's free-market philosophy has discouraged legislation that would make takeovers more difficult. In addition, Congress' inability through hearings to answer questions including, "Are takeovers good or bad for the nation?" has discouraged radical proposals.

"At this point, there's just not enough evidence — on either side — to support a major overhaul," said Rep. Timothy Wirth, D-Colo., chairman of the House subcommittee on telecommunications, consumer protection and finance.

"I'm still uneasy about the long-term effects of all of this activity, especially the consequences of the increase in leverage in our economy. I'm also concerned that shareholders are treated fairly in this process by both bidders and management," Wirth said.

Although a controversial giant takeover attempt could shift legislative attention, House and Senate sources predicted new takeover rules would be a lower priority in Congress this fall than measures to reform taxes, the troubled government securities market and trade.

One takeover rule that some legislators hope to change is the "13d rule" that allows investors to wait 10 days before notifying the Securities and Exchange Commission and the public that they have acquired 5 percent or more of a public company. During the 10-day period, investors are allowed to increase their holdings, so that an investor may own more than 5 percent of a company by the time of the initial filing. Measures to shorten this 10-day period to about 48 hours, known as "closing the 13d window," have been drafted.

The takeover defense used by Unocal Corp. to stop Mesa Petroleum Chairman T. Boone Pickens Jr.'s hostile takeover bid earlier this year would be outlawed by certain legislative proposals. Unocal stopped Pickens by launching an exclusionary tender offer in which the company offered to buy back shares from all stockholders except Pickens. The SEC has asked for public comment on a proposal that would bar exclusionary tender offers in the future on the grounds that all shareholders ought to be treated equally.

The use of high-yield securities known as "junk bonds" to finance hostile takeover bids led to legislative proposals last spring that would have restricted their use. House and Senate sources said proposals now being drafted, which have a higher likelihood of passing, will not restrict the use of junk bonds in takeovers, but will limit the ability of federally insured savings and loan associations to invest in them.

There is concern in Congress that S&Ls under financial pressure to generate higher yields might agree to purchase too many of the high-yielding securities without sufficient regard for their risk. Proposals are expected to limit, rather than eliminate, the ability of S&Ls to invest in junk bonds.

BUSINESS BRIEFS

Bell Helicopter plans 8-day layoffs of 1,800

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — Bell Helicopter Textron Inc. says it will lay off 1,800 of its 2,700 production workers for three to eight days beginning Wednesday.

A letter to employees said the temporary layoffs are needed to conduct a "wall-to-wall" inventory.

The inventory is tied to the company's efforts to revamp its accounting system to satisfy the federal government, Bell's biggest customer, the Fort Worth Star-Telegram reported Sunday.

The U.S. Army said in July it was cutting in half its monthly progress payments to Bell until the company corrected its accounting procedures and rectified what the Army said were overcharges to the government.

Progress payments, which at the time were about $13 million a month, are for production work completed and design work done on military helicopters.

Those payments are now $6.5 million a month.

The Army has given Bell until Sept. 30 to change its accounting procedures.

Bell said that about 1,000 of its production workers will be laid off for eight days and another 800 employees will be laid off for three days.

General Dynamics reaches pact with union

WARREN, Mich. (AP) — A United Auto Workers official says a tentative agreement between the union and General Dynamics Corp. will be ratified, while local leaders argue that the pact offers few gains and will be rejected.

The contract agreement was reached at 2:45 a.m. Sunday between General Dynamics, the nation's third-largest defense contractor, and the UAW, which represents 5,000 workers in three states, company officials said.

"We expect it will be turned down," said Sandy Jasmin, financial secretary at UAW Local 1200 in Warren. She said UAW bargainers forfeited three floating holidays and agreed to reductions in cost of living allowances.

"It's a fair contract that will be approved by the membership," union Vice President Marc Stepp said. Members of the UAW's General Dynamics national council are to vote on the pact Wednesday.

Arizona nuclear plant restarted after error

WINTERSBURG, Ariz. (AP) — The Palo Verde Nuclear Generating Station's Unit 1 reactor, which shut down Thursday night because of an error by plant operators, has been restarted, a spokesman said.

"Unit 1 was back up as of about 1 p.m.," Dan Canady, a spokesman for the Arizona Nuclear Power Project, owners of the plant, said Sunday evening. "Operators are in the process of returning it to 50 percent. They hope to accomplish that sometime tomorrow (today)."

Canady said the reactor was operating at 50 percent of its capacity Thursday night when operators made an error during a testing procedure and it automatically shut itself off. At the time, the reactor was within days of completing a series of tests while operating at the 50 percent leve.

The shutdown was caused by the way operators initiated a planned systems check, designed to take the Unit 1 turbine and generator out of power production and force the reactor to draw power from other lines, Canady said.

Apple ready to launch computer venture

WASHINGTON — Apple Computer Co. co-founder and chairman Steven Jobs told Apple's board of directors at a meeting last week that he was launching a new computer venture, according to sources at Apple.

There have been persistent rumors that Jobs would attempt to start a new company since May, when the 30-year-old executive was stripped of all operating responsibilities by Apple chief executive officer John Sculley as part of a major corporate restructuring. Jobs had been in charge of Apple's Macintosh personal computer operations.

Stock market mixed

NEW YORK (AP) — Stocks were mixed in morning trading today following their broad decline last week.

Auto, airline and financial issues led the gainers, while oil stocks retreated.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, having skidded 28 points last week, recovered 1.12 to 1,308.80 after two hours today.

Declines held a 6-5 lead over advances on the New York Stock Exchange, whose composite index fell 0.16 to 105.69.

Big Board volume totaled 31.50 million shares at noon EDT, against 48.94 million at that hour Friday. Some traders were said to be absent today because of Rosh Hashana, the Jewish new year.

Much of last week's setback was attributed to futures-related selling by brokerage houses. The firms bought futures contracts on stock indexes and simultaneously sold the indexes' underlying stocks to take advantage of their price differences.

The so-called "program selling" is likely to buffet the market again this week but then should abate after Friday, when September contracts on index futures, options and various individual stocks all expire, analysts said.

On the economic front, meanwhile, the Commerce Department said the nation's broadest measure of foreign trade, the current account, registered a near-record $31.8 billion deficit in the second quarter.

The shortfall 4.9 percent higher than the $30.3 billion imbalance suffered in the first three months of the year.

In a separate report, the department said business inventories inched up 0.02 percent in July following a 0.3 percent June gain, while total business sales rose 0.9 percent in July following a 2.3 percent June decline.

And the Federal Reserve said the nation's factory use totaled 80.5 percent of capacity last month, up from a revised 80.4 percent in July. The previous month's operating rate initially was placed at 80.8 percent.

Oil stocks fell rose following a report that Saudi Arabia concluded deals with three major U.S. oil companies that could lower the price of its oil and raise production.

The Middle East Economic Survey, an oil and economic publication published in Nicosia, Cyprus, said the deals with Exxon, Texaco and Mobil have been "confirmed beyond doubt." The companies declined comment on the report.

Exxon fell ½ to 50⅝, Mobil lost ½ to 28½ and Texaco dropped ¼ to 35.

The prospect of lower oil prices helped boost airline stocks, however. AMR rose ⅜ to 42½, UAL was up ⅜ at 52⅝ and Delta gained ⅛ to 43⅝.

Polaroid was unchanged at 31 after a 1.23 million-share block crossed at that price.

At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index fell 1.03 to 223.56.

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

Keep checking for bond tables, they'll be printed eventually

BY BILL DOYLE

Q. I own a number of different corporate bonds, all of which are listed on the New York Stock Exchange. Two of those bonds have not appeared in the "New York Bond" quotations of any newspaper I can find for more than two weeks. To whom can I write to complain about this?

A. Nobody. But don't feel frustrated.

The most likely reason those bonds haven't been included in New York Stock Exchange bond listings is that they haven't been traded on that exchange recently. That's not unusual.

Although thousands of corporate bonds are listed for trading on the New York and other exchanges, many trade on exchanges infrequently. Newspaper tables list specific corporate bonds only when those bonds are traded on exchanges.

Most corporate bond trading is done by big institutional investors who buy and sell those bonds "off board" in the over-the-counter market. A particular corporate bond might be actively traded in the over-the-counter market and not be traded on an exchange where it is listed for months.

There's an interesting sidelight to this. There's usually one transaction on an exchange in every corporate bond around the end of every three-month period. That enables institutional investors to establish firm prices for quarterly portfolio valuation purposes.

So, keep looking at newspaper bond tables. Price quotations of your bonds will show up, sooner or later, unless those bonds have matured or have been called for early redemption.

If you have the bonds in "bearer" form, you won't know about a redemption call until you try to cash an interest coupon. Check the companies, your broker, bank or Standard & Poor's Corp.'s Called Bond Record, which you'll find in many public libraries, for that information.

Of course, if your bonds are in registered form, you'll be notified about redemption calls.

Q. Bear with me for this example.

I buy a 12 percent, $1,000 face value corporate bond. The bond pays $60 interest twice a year. I buy it three months after the interest payment date. I pay $1,030 — a $1,000 market price, plus $30 accrued interest.

What is my "basis?" How do I handle the interest on my income tax return?

A. Your basis is $1,000. If you sell that bond, the difference between your $1,000 basis and the proceeds from the sale will be your profit or loss, which you report on the income tax return you file for the year of the sale.

Like most "marketable" bonds — those purchased and sold in the marketplace — this one trades "and interest." That means the buyer pays the seller the interest that has accrued since the last interest payment date — $30, in this case.

You pay income tax on $30 of the $60 you receive as the next semiannual interest payment. Of course, you and the Internal Revenue Service will receive a Form 1099 showing you got the whole $60.

You can square that away when you report the interest on Schedule B of this year's Form 1040.

List the $60 interest and any other taxable interest you receive. Add it up. Below that amount list the $30 you paid to the bond's seller with the notation "accrued interest." Subtract that $30 from your taxable interest. That tells you the amount of taxable interest you report on Schedule B's line 3.

Q. A $5,000 bearer bond I owned was called for redemption. I found this out seven and a half months after the redemption date, when my bank, at which I had submitted the semiannual interest coupon for deposit, was informed and returned the coupon to me.

I got the bond from my safe deposit bank and asked my bank to send it in for redemption. More than two weeks after that, my bank called to say the bond had been returned, because the coupon that had been sent back unpaid was not included. I then took that coupon to my bank, so that it could be sent in with the bond for collection. I finally got my $5,000 eight and a half months after the bond's redemption date.

Who had the use of my money for all that time?

A. The bank that acts as trustee for that bond issue.

Krugerrands not likely rare or illegal even if imports banned, investors say

By JOHN C. GIVEN
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Like it or not, some coin collectors and gold speculators found themselves drawn into the nation's growing anti-apartheid furor last week when President Reagan announced his list of proposed sanctions against South Africa.

The issue involves Krugerrands, the one-ounce South African gold coins that dominated the U.S. market until the protests against that country's racial segregation system began picking up steam.

Last week, Reagan proposed a ban on Krugerrand imports, subject to consultation with U.S. trading partners.

Political and moral issues aside, what does this do to Krugerrands as an investment?

If you own any already, should you get rid of them, lest they some day become "illegal," or hard to sell at anything but a big loss?

Or, taking a contrarian point of view, is this a good time to buy, in hopes that, should imports be stopped, demand for existing coins will increase?

The answer, industry observers and dealers say, is probably no on both counts.

On the first question, Reagan proposes only to ban imports of Krugerrands — not to prohibit sales of those already in this country.

"If you believe in gold, then keep your Kruggerrand. If you have a social conscience then sell it," said Alan Posnick, vice president of Manfra, Tordella & Brookes, a large dealership.

"Will it become illegal to own them? This is America in 1985. I don't think that's going to happen," he added. "The government is not going to be going through everybody's safe deposit boxes."

As for the second question, dealers said there is little point in buying Krugerrands in hopes that an import ban will make existing ones "rare" in the United States.

The reason is that there are "something between 20 million and 25 million" in the nation today, said Howard Segermak, president of the Industry Council for Tangible Assets, a Washington-based national association of commodities and precious metals dealers.

As for the coin's value, Joel D. Coen, who operates a dealership under his own name, said: "Gold is gold is gold. The worst that could happen is that it could be selling at some point just under 'spot.'"

"Spot" is the price it costs to buy an ounce of gold on the open market. In trading coins, consumers pay a premium on top of the going gold price to buy a coin, and, when selling, another premium, which is based on the going coin market price and the dealer's own needs.

For example, "if gold were selling at $300, we would usually buy Canadian Maple Leafs (one-ounce gold coin) at $309 and sell them for $312," Posnick said. "Under normal circumstances, the Krugerrand would be the same thing. But now there is bad news. It's like a stock. The demand is down. So now, when gold is at $320, we are buying Krugerrands at $320 and selling them at $325."

Although the premium for buying the South African coins used to range between 3 percent and 4 percent, there have been times in recent weeks when it has dipped below the spot price for gold bullion.

"If too many came in, we would have to take them at a slight discount and refine them to put them back into bars again," said Luis Vigdor, executive vice president at Manfra, Tordella & Brookes, another dealer.

Vigdor said he feared that if an import ban went into effect, "a lot of people will feel uneasy about having Krugerrands, and will decide to switch."

All things being equal, this could mean a loss of premiums for investors. But if gold prices were higher than they were when the coin was purchased, the premium loss would be wiped out.

In normal times, Coen said, if he has to refine coins, "I stand ready to pay 97.5-to-98 percent of the price of gold."

Vigdor said he worries about a worst-case situation, such as happened in 1979 and 1980, when gold soared to $875 an ounce and silver hit $52.50.

"People couldn't get those prices. It was a disorderly market," he said. "And sometimes, people take advantage.

"I can see an old lady walking in to some store with a few Krugerrands and some salesman saying, 'My God! They're illegal. I'll take them off your hands for 75 percent of their value' — and she'd be happy to get rid of them," Vigdor said.

Bill would compensate ill asbestos workers

WASHINGTON (AP) — An estimated 500,000 workers who contract diseases from exposure to substances like asbestos and benzene each year could be eligible for federal compensation under a bill being considered in the House.

The legislation, introduced in July by Rep. Pat Williams, D-Mont., would cover payments to stricken workers with a federal occupational disease insurance fund built with mandatory employer contributions.

The insurance fund is designed to operate like the existing state-run workers compensation system, except it would be controlled solely by the federal government.

Williams, whose western Montana district is dotted with lumber mills and mines operated by union labor, said the new program is needed because workers compensation requires unreasonable evidence that workplace exposure caused a disease or injury.

"It is often difficult, if not impossible, to prove a direct causal link for many occupational diseases," Williams said. "Occupational cancers, for example, often have very long latency periods from the time of toxic workplace exposures to the onset of disease. In the case of asbestos, the latency period can be as long as 30 years."

Williams said most employees exposed to hazardous substances are able to collect for damages only through lengthy, expensive court cases.

But some business executives argue that Williams' bill is too expensive and isn't strict enough.

"Every time a somebody gets sick, you can't blame the boss," said one executive with a Pennsylvania-based chemical company. "This plan puts the burden of proof on the company instead of the injured worker."

Williams' bill, pending in the House Education and Labor Committee, would establish a compensation system for asbestos workers harmed by exposure on the job.

Britain considers more Soviet expulsions

Thatcher meets with foreign minister, home secretary

LONDON (AP) — Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher met separately today with the foreign minister and home secretary to discuss whether Britain would expel more Soviets in response to the Russians' ouster of 25 Britons.

The British Broadcasting Corp. said the government was believed to be considering options including "ordering more Russians to leave Britain, lowering the permitted level of (Soviet) diplomatic representation or imposing further restrictions on the movements of Soviet diplomats and officials in this country."

The Soviet action came Saturday, two days after Britain's Foreign Office announced asylum had been granted to Soviet Embassy counselor Oleg A. Gordievski, whom it identified as head of the KGB secret police operation in London.

The Foreign Office said 25 Soviet diplomats and other personnel whom Gordievski had identified as spies had until Oct. 3 to leave Britain.

The Daily Telegraph, a pro-Conservative Party newspaper, said the Soviet expulsions seemed designed to demonstrate "Stalinist resolve" by the Kremlin and its new leader, Mikhail S. Gorbachev.

Press Association, the British domestic news agency, said Mrs. Thatcher, Foreign Secretary Sir Geoffrey Howe and Home Secretary Douglas Hurd had reached a decision during a meeting late Sunday, but were keeping it secret.

An aide to Mrs. Thatcher confirmed the three had met, but refused to give details.

Press Association said the quickly arranged session and the inclusion of Hurd indicated the British were planning retaliation. As home secretary, Hurd has some responsibility for security matters involving foreigners in Britain.

London newspapers said the decision would likely be announced before Mrs. Thatcher departs later today on a four-day trip to Egypt and Jordan.

The Sunday Telegraph, a strong backer of the prime minister, reported that Britain "was ready to hit back ... and send home more Russians."

In background briefings for reporters, British officials said a list of further possible expulsions had been drafted in the event the Soviets made more than a token response to the explusion of their 25 diplomats, correspondents and service personnel.

A British official had told reporters Mrs. Thatcher's Conservative government was prepared to retaliate for even one expulsion by the Soviets.

The swiftness and severity of the Soviet retaliation appeared to have surprised and angered the British, prompting speculation Mrs. Thatcher would retaliate in kind.

"I'd rather expected something more of a token response," said Sir John Killick, British ambassador in Moscow when Britain expelled 105 Soviet officials for spying in 1971. The Soviets replied at that time by expelling 18 Britons.

Killick, in a British Broadcasting Corp. interview, said Gorbachev, the Soviet Communist Party secretary, "as a new leader, has a domestic need to show himself to be tough, not to be a weak man."

"A second very important (reason), I suspect, is they wish to create a kind of deterrent effect, lest other countries follow suit," Killick said.

Liberal leader Bengt Westerberg celebrates his party's doubled share of seats following weekend elections in Sweden.

Only Liberal Party gains ground in Swedish vote

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — Prime Minister Olof Palme secured a fourth term in office in a general election that trimmed his party's power and left it more reliant on Sweden's small Communist Party.

Every major Swedish party lost seats in the Sunday election except the Liberal Party, which more than doubled its representation, from 21 to 51 seats.

"We've won the victory for the welfare state," Palme said.

Conservative party leader Ulf Adelsohn, who had promised to cut Sweden's high taxes and deregulate the economy, said Swedes faced a "cold shower" under Palme "but they've chosen it themselves."

With results counted from the 362 major balloting districts, Palme's Social Democrats and the supporting Communists held a projected 178 seats to 171 for the three opposing non-socialist parties.

Palme's party was projected to lose seven seats, leaving it with 159 against the non-socialists and as a result more dependent than before on the 19 seats of the Communists, who lost one seat.

The Conservatives were expected to hold 76, a drop of 10 and the Center Party 44, down 12.

The 58-year-old prime minister told reporters that the election result was not a major shift.

"It's a situation that we have lived with earlier," he said. "During 41 of 47 years in government we have been a minority government.

"In vital questions there will really be no difference," he said.

Communist leader Lars Werner had promised during the campaign that his party would seek no ministerial positions if it gained influence in the vote.

"This is an enormous success for the workers' movement," he said. "We will have to sit down with the Social Democrats and discuss how to handle the new majority in a sensible way."

South Africa reports scattered riots

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — A passenger in an ambulance fired on a crowd of attacking blacks, killing two, and another black narrowly escaped being set on fire after he was doused with gasoline by a mob, police said today.

Police headquarters reported scattered rioting in three of South Africa's four provinces late Sunday and early today, but gave details on incidents in just two of the regions.

In Tembisa black township northeast of Johannesburg, a passenger in an ambulance shot at a crowd trying to storm the vehicle and possibly rob its occupants, police said. Two blacks were fatally wounded.

It was not immediately clear if the ambulance was carrying a patient or who the passenger was who opened fire.

Also in Tembisa, police said a mob poured gasoline over a black man and prepared to set him on fire, a punishment for blacks suspected of being police informants or collaborators with the white-minority government. The man escaped, police said.

Tembisa, a community of more than 200,000, is one of 15 black townships of the East Rand, the industrial belt east of Johannesburg. Nearly all of those townships, whose population totals more than 1 million, have been caught up in a year of anti-apartheid rioting that has killed more than 700 people nationwide.

In the only other incidents mentioned today by police, five black men were arrested after allegedly stoning a supermarket in Zwide, outside Port Elizabeth in the eastern Cape Province, and a black man was arrested near Paarl in the western Cape after police vehicles were hit with rocks.

In violence over the weekend, police said that blacks had besieged a police armored personnel vehicle in East London's black Duncan Village township, bringing it to a standstill as they tried to steal gasoline. Officers fired on the mob, wounding three.

On the political front, the government shrugged off criticism from white opposition newspapers that modest reforms of apartheid announced last week had come too late to head off limited U.S. sanctions announced by President Reagan.

President P.W. Botha said the government would restore citizenship to some blacks considered citizens of independent tribal homelands, and a presidential commission recommended scrapping laws aimed at keeping blacks out of white areas.

The changes make no dent in domination of 24 million voteless blacks by 5 million whites, or in an array of discriminatory laws covering housing, education and most public transportation.

Chris Heunis, who as minister of constitutional development is responsible for drawing up constitutional changes, said Sunday the moves were not an attempt to ease international pressure for reform of the race laws.

"It was part and parcel of what is good for South Africa ... It is a process not finalized in one particular day or a year," Heunis said in a telephone interview.

"It was not directed at reaction internationally," he added, underlining the official stance that South Africa will not bow to dictates from abroad.

Durban's Sunday Tribune called last week's announcements "unnecessarily late" and added they were "groping in a moment of great national woe."

Johannesburg's Sunday Times said: "Properly packaged and delivered with some semblance of flair at the right time and in the right place, the reforms ... could have turned the tide of history."

South Africa seeing little advantage in mineral trade

WASHINGTON (AP) — South Africa supplies the lion's share of several "strategic" minerals to the United States, but the embattled white minorjty government has been unable to make that a significant political advantage.

The prevailing view, as expressed in official studies, is that the United States could do without the metals far more easily than any South African government could do without the revenue.

A study by the congressional Office of Technology Assessment last spring urged American businesses to lessen their dependence on South African materials, and some companies have begun looking for alternatives.

South Africans and some U.S. conservatives argue that the racially torn country's resources are too vital for U.S. strategic interests to risk losing, but few predict South Africa would cut shipments to the West.

"Mainly it's an argument they use to scare the Americans," said John Matisonn, editor of the Washington Report on South Africa and observer of that country. "The cost to them would be extraordinary."

New Ugandan rulers struggle to discipline army

By Jerry Gray

KAMPALA, Uganda (AP) — The new military rulers of Uganda are struggling to bring discipline and control to the ranks of the army, a problem that helped bring down the civilian government of President Milton Obote in a coup July 27.

The new government says it has started to whip the army into shape. And it has pledged to end atrocities blamed on troops during previous regimes and the frequent looting and robberies by soldiers.

"Already, I can tell you that the impact of this is being felt and there is a difference," Foreign Minister Olara Otunnu told a recent news conference. "Clearly, problems which have been going on for a long time cannot be resolved overnight. What is important is a commitment, a determination to tackle the problems."

One immediate goal of Lt. Gen. Tito Okello, the head of state, and his Military Council is to instill public trust in an army that had been a tool of persecution under former rulers, including the now-exiled Idi Amin, and has robbed and killed tens of thousands.

Mistrust of the military also is based on a belief of many Ugandans that the army still has most of the leaders who served under Obote. Okello was armed forces commander under Obote, and Paulo Muwanga, now executive prime minister, was vice president and defense minister.

AN INCIDENT Aug. 14 underscored the people's lack of faith in the military.

Rumors that guerrillas of the National Resistance Movement were on the outskirts of Kampala sent residents into a lunchtime panic. Hundreds of people abandoned their jobs and many rushed home to gather belongings before fleeing the city.

The "guerrillas" turned out to be policemen looking for unlicensed peddlers.

In a radio broadcast following the panic, Defense Minister G. Wilson Toko urged people to stay calm and vowed that the army was "ready and capable of containing any eventuality."

But in some areas of Uganda, army troops have given up the fight against the guerrillas. According to the reports of travelers, soldiers simply surrender their weapons when guerrillas have shown up.

The lack of discipline and order in the 18,000-member army is evident in Kampala itself.

Near an anti-aircraft gun set up near the center of the capital one recent day, soldiers were sprawled on the grass, some dozing and others listening to music blaring from a large radio.

Elsewhere in the city, soldiers lounged about, some in "flipflops" — cheap rubber shower thongs — spending much of the day chatting and ignoring the security duty which they had been assigned.

At one roadblock, a soldier clad in an oversized uniform and appearing to be in his teens was in command of the unit. He demanded, and received, a cigarette before he would allow a car to pass his checkpoint.

So young a soldier is not uncommon and is one reason for the army's indiscipline.

THE MILITARY in Uganda, as in many black African states, has become for millions of youths what the professions, business and elective politics have been in the industrialized West — the pathway to power. Well over a third of Africa's more than 50 nations are led by soldiers.

But much of the Ugandan army's indiscipline can be traced to the country's leaders.

In 1966, four years after Uganda gained its independence from Britain, Obote achieved the presidency with the help of the army's chief of staff, Idi Amin.

On Jan. 25, 1971, Amin led a military coup against Obote and began an eight-year reign of terror that left hundreds of thousands of Ugandans dead, many murdered by government troops.

Amin purposely created disunity within the army to prevent anyone from establishing a power base which might threaten him.

He bought the loyalty of many top officers with expensive cars and homes and used Cabinet appointments to cut other officers from their military contacts.

On a continent where loyalty to one's ethnicity is often stronger than allegiance to nation, Amin used tribalism to play one group against the other.

Obote returned to power a second time in 1979 after Amin was chased from office and into exile by a rebel army backed by Tanzanian troops.

Obote adopted some of Amin's tactics, using the army to suppress his enemies and playing on tribalism.

SINCE THE coup, thousands of skeletons have been found of people presumably killed during Obote's second term. The discoveries have lent support to claims by church leaders and human rights groups that thousands of Ugandans, perhaps as many as 300,000, were tortured and killed by the army as it tried to quash an insurgency.

J. Tamale Mirundi, a reporter for the Kampala newspaper Munno, said he discovered more than 2,100 skeletons himself during a visit to Luwero, a town 40 miles north of Kampala which was the center of anti-government guerrilla activity during Obote's regime.

"Residents of the area said that every day soldiers of the Ugandan army would deliver people in trucks from the surrounding areas and execute them," Mirundi wrote in Munno, a newspaper backed by the Roman Catholic Church. "Many of the victims would be heard at a distance as they cried and wailed for mercy."

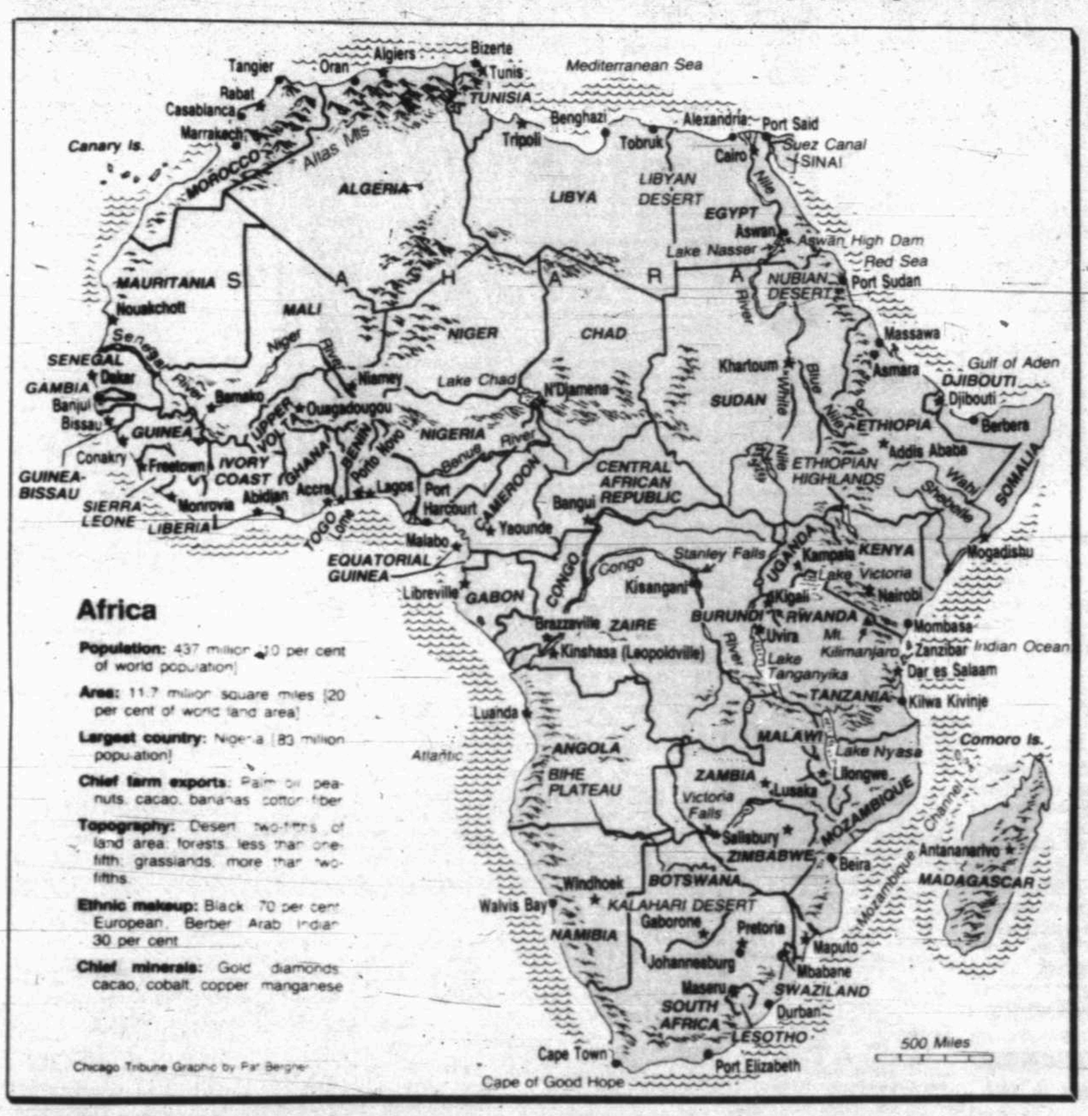

Once Uganda's rulers have unleashed the army, they have found it difficult to control it. Obote, in the waning days of his government, had clearly lost control of the army.

It was Obote's attempt to regain control by naming one of his Langi tribesmen, Brig. Smith Opon Acak, as army chief of staff in 1984 that precipitated his downfall. The move caused a split along tribal lines between the Langi and Acholi, the two tribes that composed a majority of government troops, and a mutiny by top officers

Characters in South African drama talk but fail to listen

By JAMES F. SMITH

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — The leading characters in South Africa's bloodstained drama often engage in a dialogue in which everyone talks but nobody listens.

The white players speak in a kind of apartheid code, with such euphemisms as "minority rights," meaning white control, and "influx control," or keeping blacks out of cities. The blacks are more direct, shouting, "Amandla!" — Zulu for "power."

At stake in this halting dialogue is whether more than 30 million people work out an accommodation that suits a wide range of ethnic groups, or stagger on amid periodic riots, or consume themselves in a final, brutal revolution.

The players are split into two main groups, those working within apartheid's structures and those operating outside the system. And the factions themselves often are internally divided on such issues as civil disobedience, anti-South Africa economic sanctions and the pace of reform.

Here is a look at the principal actors:

NATIONAL PARTY

The white governing party first took power in a narrow election victory among white voters in 1948, and has never lost since, holding two-thirds of the seats in Parliament. It won on a pledge both to preserve white rights and to promote the then-rural, Dutch-descended Afrikaners, who make up about 60 percent of the nation's 5 million whites. It has institutionalized apartheid, Afrikaans for "separateness."

English-speaking whites dominated business and industry, were wealthier than the Afrikaners and tended to be more liberal. Those distinctions have blurred since 1948. But the English speakers and the Afrikaners attend separate schools, have separate TV and radio programs and travel in separate social circles.

MODERATES

The Progressive Federal Party, backed by about 18 percent of the white electorate, is led by an Afrikaner, Frederik van Zyl Slabbert, but the party is still dominated by English speakers, such as veteran Helen Suzman. The "Progs" oppose South Africa's sweeping security laws, and discrimination in housing, education and citizenship, and want a national convention — including black guerrilla leaders — to work out a new future. But most join the "Nats" in opposing a one-man, one-vote solution, fearing the black majority of 24 million would swamp the white minority.

FAR RIGHT

Ultra-conservatives are split between the Reformed National Party and the Conservative Party, both Afrikaner-led breakaway groups from the Nationalists. Together, the two command about 15 percent of white support for policies of strict racial segregation and white domination.

In common Western terms, President P.W. Botha's Nationalists are solidly right-wing, the Progressives are centrists and the Conservatives and Reformed National Party are on the far right.

ASIAN AND MIXED RACE

Last September, the government inaugurated new houses of Parliament for the 850,000 Asians and the 2.8 million people of mixed race, called "coloreds" in South Africa. These legislators are excoriated as sellouts by apartheid foes, who say the new constitution not only excludes blacks but makes coloreds and Asians "junior partners" in apartheid.

UNITED DEMOCRATIC FRONT

The largest anti-apartheid coalition, the two-year-old UDF claims more than 600 affiliate groups with over 2 million followers. Local civic associations, grassroots groups set up in most black townships as rivals to the pro-government councils, are the backbone. Arrests and detentions without trial have hurt the UDF, but it is decentralized and less vulnerable to such action.

AFRICAN NATIONAL CONGRESS

The ANC is the main guerrilla group fighting white rule from exile. Banned in 1960, the ANC went underground and began an armed sabotage campaign. The ANC also is working to stir up mass opposition to make the townships "ungovernable." The government says the UDF is merely an internal front for the ANC, whose leader, Nelson Mandela, has been serving a life prison term since 1964 on charges of plotting sabotage.

GATSHA BUTHELEZI

Leader of the 6 million Zulus, Buthelezi is chief minister of the Kwa-Zulu homeland, and therefore a target of criticism by more militant activists who oppose the homeland system, which denies blacks rights in South Africa. But Buthelezi is an outspoken foe of apartheid, and his large ethnic following, backed by the disciplined, 1-million-member Zulu Inkatha organization, makes him a potent force.

BLACK CONSCIOUSNESS

Steve Biko founded and led the movement from the late 1960s until his death from head injuries in police custody in September 1977. With the motto, "Black Man, you are on your own," Biko rejected white help in the liberation struggle. The Azanian People's Organization, using its favored name for the future South Africa, is the latest group extolling Biko's philosophy.

CHURCHES

Anglican Bishop Desmond Tutu, who won the Nobel Peace Prize last year, is the best known of many churchmen working for peaceful change. Because detentions have weakened other organizations, churches have stepped into the void, taking a more vocal role in urging change. Tutu and others say their influence among younger, more militant blacks is declining. The largest black church, the Zion Christian Church, is pro-government, but has almost no visible political role.

The largest Dutch Reformed church, the Nederduitse Gereformeerde Kerk, supports separation of races but says all races must be treated equally.

TRADE UNIONS

Regarded as a potential political force, the emerging black unions have focused on building up economic muscle. Legalized in 1979, black unions claim more than a half-million members, and increasingly have taken stances in political disputes, for example backing a two-day general protest strike last November that kept about 800,000 workers off the job.

BLACK SASH

A small band of mainly English-speaking, well-to-do women, Black Sash has won the respect of blacks throughout the country. It has set up aid centers for blacks, worked in the townships and helped rural blacks fight removal to the homelands from "white" areas. Sash picketers brandishing anti-apartheid placards can often be seen on city street corners.

Famine threatens millions in area known as potential breadbasket

EDITOR'S NOTE — In Sudan, often touted as Africa's potential breadbasket, famine threatens more people over far wider, more remote regions than in Ethiopia. What went wrong epitomizes the tragic ironies of African hunger.

By MORT ROSENBLUM
AP Special Correspondent

KHARTOUM, Sudan (AP) — A U.S. official shook his head, close to tears: "You work so hard to get the food...and it just sits. You don't know where to turn. It just kills you. We have passed the point now, and there is no way kids won't die."

Because the United States could not do what it promised, he acknowledged, perhaps hundreds of thousands of children will starve. It is not so clear who is to blame.

"How far can an outsider go, coming in and running the country for Sudan?" demanded another U.S. official, also fraught with grief. "They promised the railroad would work. It didn't."

The largest country in Africa dramatizes the nightmare faced not only by famine victims but also by those who seek to help them. The factors that brought famine to Sudan are now blocking efforts to relieve victims.

Sudan, recently a food exporter, was once expected to feed most of the Middle East. The Blue and White Niles water rich land from the tropical south to the Egyptian border.

From 12 years ago, foreign aid has increased by 11,700 percent, to about $800 million a year, a total surpassing $5 billion. The World Bank alone has put more than $1 billion into mechanized farming, irrigation and infrastructure.

The railroad, dating back to Lord Kitchener 90 years ago, consumed $180 million of World Bank funds.

Now Sudan faces a famine with wider dimensions than Ethiopia's, and relief reaches victims at a trickle. Half of its 22 million people are short of food, spread over an area the size of the United States east of the Mississippi.

U.S. aid officials here foresaw food shortages in February 1984. Despite optimistic U.N. and European forecasts, they pleaded with Washington for massive aid. The grain is now here, overflowing the port and railheads.

BUT THE rains have started, filling dry riverbeds and cutting off many of the 3.5 million people in Darfur Province who desperately need food. Wet grain is rotting by the roadside. One-tenth the needed grain is reaching the west.

Meantime, millions suffer in the south and central regions.

Early this year, U.S. officials decided the dilapidated railroad was the only way to move food along the crucial stretch from Kosti on the Nile to Nyala, 560 miles west.

Many experts disagreed at the time. Richard Copeland, disasters coordinator for the British agency, Oxfam, said, "The Americans should have assumed the railways would not work and used trucks as a backup."

U.S. planners argued that roads were also in terrible shape, and at least 3,500 trucks would have had to make constant 14-day round trips through deep sand, to ferry the needed 1,800 tons a day.

Now, however, a European Economic Community airlift can carry only a fraction of that at 10 times the cost per ton. "An airlift is throwing money down the damned commode," said Ken Willis, an American logistics contractor.

EEC officials criticize the U.S. reliance on the railroad, but they acknowledge they, too, acted slowly. Now all Western donors are rushing to bring in more trucks and to rehabilitate the railroad. In July, Washington approved $8 million to import 10 new locomotives.

But new rains washed out a bridge, sweeping away a locomotive and grain wagons and killing two people.

"IT'S TOO late, we're like Alice in Wonderland, running to stay in one place," said Elbert Gregory, a British Save the Children Fund engineer, recently arrived to repair Darfur roads. "I'm just starting what we should be finishing."

With trucks a vital necessity, U.N. officials say their $20 million transport program has been paralyzed since June. They say Washington promised them local currency earned by the sale of U.S. grain. The delay is partly because some commodities to be sold have not arrived. And Sudanese authorities have not deposited funds already earned.

Relief officials complain the Americans contracted for truck delivery with a single broker, Arkel Talab, a U.S.-Sudan group headquartered in Baton Rouge, La. U.S. officials prefer that other agencies not compete for a limited supply of trucks.

WESTERN OFFICIALS are bitter at the Sudanese politics behind the problems.

The railroad, though lacking spares and locomotives, continued to carry sugar, cargo and passengers while grain backed up in yards.

"In Ethiopia, the problem is that government controls everything," observed one European ambassador. "In Sudan, the government controls nothing."

But Sudanese — and independent Western economists — say donors were too anxious to please government officials, approving ill-conceived projects on unrealistic scales.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Lech Walesa waves to thousands of Solidarity supporters from the parapets of Czestochowa's Jasna Gora Monastery before a Sunday Mass.

Walesa joins workers' rally

CZESTOCHOWA, Poland (AP) — The largest pro-Solidarity crowd to gather in nearly a year chanted slogans and carried more than 100 banners to a Mass ending an annual two-day pilgrimage to Poland's holiest religious shrine.

Lech Walesa and other leaders of the outlawed trade federation joined about 50,000 others Sunday at the Jasna Gora monastery in Czestochowa, about 130 miles south of Warsaw, home of the Black Madonna icon.

The annual workers' pilgrimage was initiated in 1983 by Jerzy Popieluszko, a Roman Catholic priest who was killed last year by three secret police officers. It was the largest pro-Solidarity crowd to gather since about 250,000 people attended Popieluszko's funeral last November.

"I knew there were a lot of us, but I didn't know there were so many," Walesa told The Associated Press as he looked down from the monastery's parapets at the crowd in an adjacent field.

"It shows that we will never give back our August, that we will find methods and ways to defend August," he said, referring to August 1980 when the government signed the Gdansk agreements with striking workers that led to the formation of Solidarity, the Soviet bloc's first independent trade union federation.

New rate 'small price to pay'

MINETT, Ontario (AP) — U.S. citizens should view an increase of up to 2 percent in their electric bills as a "small price to pay" to fight acid rain, according to Canada's environment minister.

"We have to do similar things here," the minister, Tom McMillan, told a news conference Sunday, on the eve of a massive conference of scientists studying acid rain.

Canadian and U.S. scientists agree that about half of the acid rain falling in eastern Canada originates in air pollution in the United States.

The Canadian government for years has been pressing the U.S. government to reduce that pollution by half and for its part has announced it will halve its relevant air pollution by 1994.

McMillan said the best cost estimates he had seen of U.S. measures needed to control the chief pollutant — sulfur dioxide emitted by power plant and industrial boilers — would increase the average U.S. electricity bills by 1.5 percent to 2 percent.

Grenade kills 18, hurts 91

LALA, Philippines (AP) — A grenade was hurled from the balcony of a crowded movie theater onto the lower floor, and 18 people were killed and 91 injured in the blast and panic that ensued, police said today.

Sgt. Macedonio Ceniza, police station commander in Lala, on Mindanao island 500 miles south of Manila, said in a radio interview that five people were killed outright in the explosion Sunday and 13 died in hospitals.

He said 91 people were hurt, and hospital officials in nearby towns said 44 of them remained hospitalized today.

Some of the victims were hit by shrapnel, while others were trampled in the panic that gripped the spectators following the explosion, said Ceniza, interviewed over commercial radio station DXDD in nearby Ozamis.

Earlier broadcasts from DXDD had reported 35 deaths.

Heavy rains hit parts of India

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — Torrential rains lashed Uttar Pradesh, India's most populous state, killing at least 25 people over the weekend, news reports said.

The Press Trust of India reported that landslides, a boating mishap and mudslides claimed at least 10 live in several districts of Uttar Pradesh, and that 15 people died when a wall collapsed in Lucknow, about 260 miles southeast of New Delhi.

Another news agency, the United News of India, said the wall collapsed onto some shanties in Lucknow, killing members of two families.

The deaths Saturday and Sunday raised the three-month monsoon death toll to 95 in Uttar Pradesh, the news agency quoted officials as saying.

Uttar Pradesh has a population of about 110 million.

Many buildings were flooded and shelters were opened for families evacuated from low-lying areas, news reports said.

Fighting continues in Tripoli

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Moslem militiamen battled with artillery, rockets and mortars in the northern port city of Tripoli for a second day today. Police said 28 people died, including 10 soldiers killed in their sleep when mortars hit their barracks.

Sixty-eight people, 40 of them soldiers from the Lebanese army's 2nd brigade, also were wounded in the fighting, police said.

Two mortar rounds crashed into the brigade's barracks on Tripoli's outskirts overnight, and later four more mortars and six rockets hit the complex. Police said that the shells that hit the barracks probably were strays because the army has been on the sidelines during the militia fighting.

Police reported earlier that three militiamen and two civilians also had been killed. They raised the death toll later, but provided no information on how many civilians and how many militiamen had been killed.

The fight between Moslem militias for control of Tripoli pits the Tahweed Islami militia, trained and equipped by Yasser Arafat's Palestine Liberation Organization, against the Syrian-backed Arabian Knights.

Officials said most of the militia casualties were from Tawheed Islami, which advocates the creation of a fundamentalist Moslem state in Lebanon.

Mexico, Guatemala shaken

MEXICO CITY (AP) — A strong earthquake shook southern Mexico and Guatemala early Sunday, but no damage or injuries were reported.

The National Observatory in Guatemala City, capital of the Central American nation, said the quake registered 6.8 on the Richter scale, indicating ground movement strong enough to cause severe damage.

The Tacubaya seismological station in Mexico City measured the tremor at 5.5. The station said it was unable to pinpoint the epicenter, but estimated it was about 185 miles southeast of the Mexican capital.

The quake was felt in Mexico at 1:58 a.m. from Mexico City, Puebla and Tlaxcala states east to the cities of Jalapa and Veracruz in the Gulf of Mexico state of Veracruz, and south through Oaxaca state, the Tacubaya station said.

At the Oaxaca state police center, Fermin Galan said that judging by radio reports from around the state, the earthquake was felt quite strongly in the north toward the Gulf of Mexico coast and less strongly near the Pacific coast. No damage was reported, he said.

The Richter scale measures ground motion as recorded on seismographs.

Ex-analyst continues testimony

THE HAGUE, Netherlands (AP) — A former CIA analyst who claimed President Reagan approved a plan for the invasion of Nicaragua resumes his testimony today in the World Court case brought by Nicaragua against the United States.

The United States is boycotting the proceedings before the tribunal officially known as the International Court of Justice, and contends the United Nations organ lacks any jurisdiction in the matter.

On Friday, David Macmichael, an intelligence analyst on contract to the CIA from 1981 to 1983, said the U.S. intelligence agency prepared a plan envisioning the infiltration of 1,500 armed men into Nicaragua to destablize the leftist Sandinista government.

He claimed the plan, drafted in 1981, was approved by Reagan, but did not say whether it was ever implemented.

Greek stand upsetting allies

By ROBERT BURNS

BRUSSELS, Belgium (AP) — The refusal of Greece to take part in NATO war games in Western Europe has upset the allied military command.

Gen. Bernard W. Rogers of the U.S. Army, the top allied commander in Europe, has said the absence of Greece puts in oubt its readiness to fulfill its commitment to the Western defense in a time of crisis.

The Greek holdout is linked to a bitter feud with Turkey over territorial claims in the Aegean Sea that divides the two countries. Greece has not participated in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization exercises since Prime Minister Andreas Papandreou took office in 1981.

In Athens, a government spokesman, Costas Laliotis, charged that the NATO war games are "more for a political aim than for military preparedness" and said Greece puts its own troops through exercises much more difficult than NATO's.

Rogers and other NATO military officials put great stock in the annual Autumn Forge exercises, which were started in 1975. Each year Rogers' headquarters in southern Belgium holds an elaborate briefing for reporters at which officials describe the aims of the maneuvers and stress the importance of unity among the allies.

During September and October, more than 150,000 allied land, sea and air forces will be fighting mock battles, practicing mine-laying operations, simulating chemical weapons attacks and carrying out other exercises from the icy north of Norway to Turkey and the Black Sea. The maneuvers are a key test of allied troops' ability to work together.

Thirteen of the 16 NATO nations are participating, including France, which is not part of NATO's integrated military command. Besides Greece, the two other non-participants are Iceland, which has no armed forces, and Spain, which is not part of the NATO military structure.

At a news conference at Supreme Headquarters Allied Powers Europe, Rogers urged Greece to end its holdout against the NATO exercises.

"Not participating in those joint combined exercises causes Greece to be less prepared to serve within the alliance in the southern region should there be a confrontation with the Warsaw Pact," Rogers said. The Warsaw Pact is the Soviet bloc's counterpart of NATO.

Rogers maintained that the Greek military had something to learn from joining in the mock battles and other maneuvers.

Greece has said it will not participate in war games, or allow any to be held on its soil, so long as NATO continues to refuse to use the north Aegean island of Lemnos in the exercises.

Most cars today use a new body design called "Unibody". the days of the heavy steel frame have come and gone.

These new "Unibody" cars have advantages and disadvantages. One of the disadvantages is that they cannot be repaired using the same tools and techniques as those used on cars with steel frames. All wrecked "Unibody" cars should be repaired with special frame and welding equipment.

We at Sloan Brothers Buick have all the new frame and welding equipment. We can repair all cars to their original factory specifications.
