I Want to Know

By D. A. Davis

Why is it that our "watchmaker" named "Shoemaker"?

What is wrong with our Lynotype operators? Why is it they can't read writing? "Our" Lynotype lady gets my dope all mixed up once in a while and makes my writings sound heap more crazier than they really are. But folks, did you ever see so many mistakes they are making in our big daily newspapers? It is getting so bad you almost have to get out your pencil & a piece of paper and study the combinations out just like figuring out a cross word puzzle in order to get any meaning whatever to some of the news items these days, and I don't think it is right, folks. It looks to me like if anybody on earth should be perfect it should be a Lynotype operator.

And folks, what is going to be done about the stray stock that are hitch hiking up and down our highways these days? I made a trip to Shamrock this week and I just checked up up on the "hazards" as I went along and I counted six pigs, 3 mules, 14 head of cattle and nine hitch hikers between here and Shamrock. The pigs and mules & 4 of the cows decided to go across the road just about the time I got even with them and I had to jam on my brakes & do a little cussing in order to keep from running into them. If I am not mistaken we have a law that prohibits stock from running loose on our highway. Folks, lets not allow our dum animals to go to violating our laws. Its bad enough for us dum people to violate the laws, but if we start to letting the mules, cows, hogs & horses violate our laws we are liable to get in bad sure enough.

And I met an "old steer" out north on the Leforse road Sunday evening that just reminded me of some of these hitch hikers. The old Boy got right in the middle of the road and bristled up just like he wanted a ride to town. The only difference was the "steer" shook his horns at me instead of a fist.

And now, how are we going to solve this hitch hiking problem is what I want to know. Do you know that this thing is getting really serious? And the worst part of it the government is really incouraging it. Did you know that you can start out right now and tour the United States with nothing and come back with plenty of money and at the same time be properly clothed and fed? All you got to do is get out here on the highway and thumb a ride to Okla. City or Amarillo and you can even pick your cars. You don't have to thumb a truck or a old car and ride in them and when you get to Oklahoma City or Amarillo just hunt up thise govt. feeding & sleeping places and agree to take a bath & they will put you up for the night. All you got to do the next morning is to get out on the highway & thumb down another nice big new car and go ahead merrily on your way. Us autoist will furnish the cigars or cigaretts or drinking whiskey and a few quarters for change in case you want to go to a picture show. So folks all you got to do to live easy & have a good time is just step out on the highway & get going.

A old boy told me the other day he left home with plenty of good clothes and seven dollars in cash and he did not miss a meal or sleep cold a single night. So why worry folks why worry? Eat, drink sleep travel and be merry because this depression might blow up some of these days & you will have to go to work.

CITY DRUG INSTALLS NEW CREAM MAKER

The City Drug Store has just installed a new 18 foot soda fountain with an ice cream maker, one of the most modern electrical systems in this part of the state, at a cost of $3600.

The new cream maker will use a specially prepared mix, keeping to a scientifically blended food standard, with just the right amounts of fats and sugars. The mix will be poured in the electric freezer and made at the counter, later transferred to the curing compartment of the fountain where the temperature will be kept to 15 degrees below zero, insuring a properly made and kept food.

The fountain is equipped with hot water cleansing system, and in addition to scalding water, a chemical disinfectant is used on all fountain glasses, which are rinsed in running water, which is the best sanitary method known.

Witt Springer, owner of the store, says he will have a formal opening of the new fountain Saturday, and ice cream cones will be traded any child for an egg. One egg is good for one cone, all day Saturday. See announcement on another page.

ADVERTISING CAUSE AMARILLO FAIR SUCCESS

Amarillo, Sept. 26.—"The outstanding success of the 1934 Tri-State fair, one of the greatest from every standpoint in the fair's history, is a great tribute to the efficiency and economy of newspaper advertising and publicity," said Wilbur C. Hawk, president of the exposition, at its close here. "Sixty newspapers in the great Tri-State territory each carried newspaper advertising for several weeks on the fair with exceptionally satisfying results."

Mr. Hawk declares that this year such forms of advertising as tire covers, window cards, road signs and expensive items were eliminated from the fair budget and the entire advertising expenditure placed with the newspapers of this territory. The result was an attendance much greater than even during the prosperous years and a generally improved interest in the fair.

"This is another striking example of the results to be expected from newspaper advertising, and I deeply appreciate the part played by the newspapers of this area in making the 1934 fair so outstanding an event, especially from the standpoint of attendance from such a large territory," said Mr. Hawk.

Strange Bedfellows

By O. L. D. Timer

You have heard of the old saying that politics makes strange bedfellows. The same thing can be said of religion, philosophy, and all other kinds of isms and beliefs. It sure is funny how some folks try to make bedfellows out of lions and lambs in order to justify their own self-interests.

I once knew a man who put on a pair of boots, and with a tobacco tag hanging out of his shirt pocket, went through the motions of conducting services for a Sunday school, and I heard a man say that he taught a Sunday school class when he was drunk, and he seemed to think it was smart. A preacher told of an old Hardshell Baptist preacher who invariably took a drink of whiskey before he went to preach. Strange ideas like these in the same mind will eventually develop into extremely incompatible bedfellows.

A man with a new car and owing everybody has two strange ideas in the bed of his mind and they are bound to get along badly.

A college education and atheism make out like they are bedfellows sometimes, but they are so unlike that each keeps the other awake.

I once noticed a deacon who was working as usher in a church, smoking a cigarette on the church step, and another man, the father of a bunch of boys, start to church with his Bible in one hand and a cigarette in the other, and I couldn't help but say, "Strange bedfellows."

France, America and Russia were three in a bed during the world war but don't sleep together any more, and I heard an American soldier say that he was so worn out once when he blundered into a German dugout that he lay down and slept and got up before the Germans woke up.

Two gamblers were very envious of one another and made the best of bedfellows when there was a sucker to fleece, and I once knew an oil driller, a bootlegger, a preacher and a gentleman to ride in the same car when they all wanted to go to the same place. You have seen a drunkard and a well behaved man sleep in the same bed, but not for long at a time and with very little satisfaction.

Two boys of the same family grew up together and slept in the same bed, and one turned out to be a well rounded symmetrical Christian character and the other did everything that was wild and reckless.

Not long ago I saw an officer of the law call on a man who had been very wild and unruly, to help him carry a drunken roughneck to jail, and it made people smile as they passed.

Uncle Sam has some strange ideas in the bed of his mind in the shape of county agents showing how to grow two blades of grass where one grew before, and then turn around and plow up what he grew.

Last Christmas I picked up a photo graveure section of the Denver Post which showed the picture of Mary with the baby Jesus in her arms, and on the next page showed a bunch of practically nude women, and I couldn't help but say, "What strange bedfellows."

The idea that we can drink enough liquor, and buy enough new cars to balance the budget, and smoke enough cigarettes that the tax on them will educate the school children, and borrow money for relief, thereby discouraging thrift, initiative and resourcefulness, are a bad bunch of bedfellows, and they will pull cover, talk in their sleep, and snore so loudly that they will eventually wind up in a free for all fight, and from which recovery will be a slow and painful process.

FLAME OF THE BORDER

THE STORY

Chapter 10.—Sonya realiezs she is in the hands of El Capitan Diablo. In his stronghold she is committed to the care of an elderly Spanish woman, to await the arrival of the chief. A younger woman, Concha, views with apprehension the arrival of Stone, whom she loves, evidently a prisoner, with El Capitan Diablo.

Chapter 11.—At the Savarin ranch there is dire consternation over the disappearance of Sonya. Searching parties, working diligently, are unable to find any trace of the girl. With Serge, Marston visits the village store, the last place where Sonya is known to have been, but finds no clues. Her Navajo friends, remembering all they owe Sonya, take the trail.

Chapter 12.—Sonya bravely faces the bandit chief as he questions her concerning her knowledge of his opium smuggling activities. She denies that Stone has told her anything.

"So," he said, "we shall proceed. And Quince did not tell you that I meet the ships from China at Mazatlan?"

"No, senor."

"Nor that I bring into Mexico and along the Border merchandise of great value?"

"No, senor."

"Nor that that merchandise crosses into the United States by my little gray ships of the sky to be sent to New York on the railroad?"

"No, senor."

"You are well schooled, senorita," he sneered. "I make bold to compliment you both. You did not know that Quince is—or was—my ablest man in both countries? That he knows as much of El Diablo as El Diablo knows about himself? That he can do anything connected with—my business—from seining the sea at low tide for floats, tied to sunken contrabrand, to flying a plane? You did not know all this?"

"You Are Well Schooled, Child," He Observed.

He was leaning forward now, searching the girl's face with boring eyes tocatch the faintest change, the slightest flicker of betrayal.

"I did not, senor," she said.

"Hm," said El Diablo savagely, "and when you so quickly stooped and picked from the floor that small brass can which Senor Parks dropped from his pocket, you still did not know what you were finding?"

"No," said Sonya, "and would not now if Manuel there had not told the Senora about it—called it a five-tael can of 'black molasses'."

Manuel leaped from his seat, talking swiftly, facing his master. And somewhere behind her a woman stifled a scream. But Diablo was on his feet, his fist on the table.

"So!" he thundered, "my people talk behind me, do they? They mention that which is never to be mentioned? I shall deal with you—and you, senora—later. Now bring me Quince."

At that Sonya felt the world go round for one terrible second. She clutched the chair back tightly.

And from somewhere at the right there came the sound of marching feet, the swift step of men obeying a master. Through the dappled shade cast by the poplar trees five figures moved into her line of vision, four who walked abreast in twos and in their midst a fifth—Starr Stone, as she had seen him last, in cowboy boots and dungarees belted at his lean hips, a faded denim shirt.

He was haggard and his eyes were large in his tanned face, and his arms were bound behind him. He was a prisoner with all a prisoner's indignities heaped upon him, but his tall form was erect, his blue eyes dark with the spreading pupils. He strode toward the table with his gaze on Diablo's face and saw no other in the silent mass.

"Senor," he said.

"Senor," said El Capitan, and the smile was gone from his face. It was black with fury.

"For five years, Quince, you have been with me—my best and ablest man. You have done my bidding quickly. You have led my raids. You have put my—merchandise—safely through its secret ways. I have called and you have come, always. Always, until lately. Lately you have come on laggard feet. You have held back at my orders. You have disobeyed me. And I have now the reason. That reason is a woman. A woman whom you have set before El Capitan Diablo. Whose word has been more to you than my word. Who, through your instruction doubtless, has come upon the key of my activities. Who has caught Quatro with the goods in his own store. Who holds Diablo and all his future in the hollow of her hand. Or would so hold him had it not been for Quatro's swift action in the matter. Senor—behold the woman!"

He had half risen again, leaning with one broad hand on the table. With the other he pointed dramatically to Sonya. And like a flash Starr Stone whirled and saw her.

It was the first inkling he had had that she was not safe in her own country, and her own pursuits, and the shock of it drained his face to a ghastly pallor.

"Sonya!" his lips formed soundlessly.

"Yes," said the girl defiantly, "they took me from my horse two nights ago—kidnapped me—by airplane—and brought me here because I stumbled on the fact that Parks is their agent in the smuggling of narcotics across the line. They think you told me—that you and I have planned to double-cross this wicked bandit here—this beast who says I'm lying!"

She waved a hand at El Capitan, nodded her black head toward him.

"Ah! A beast, am I? El Capitan Diablo a beast?"

"Yes, senor—and worse," said Sonya Savarin. "You may kill me—as I do not doubt you will—but I am an American, and I do not bend to you either in body or soul. We are both Americans."

"Oh, Americans! And Americans do not double-cross?"

"No, senor."

"Well, we shall see. Quince—attention. What do you say for yourself?"

The tall man standing in the mottled shade looked long in his master's face. What years of wrongdoing, of obedience, of fear, were in that look only they two might say. For a long time it held between the wild blue eyes, the deadly black ones.

Then Starr Stone turned to Sonya.

"A misstep in my early youth—it doesn't matter now what it was—put me in the power of El Capitan Diablo. For my freedom's sake I cast in my lot with him. For my life's sake I could never leave him afterward. I have raided, burned, and pillaged, but I have never killed a man nor harmed a woman or a child. I have been his brains in smuggling, his ablest lieutenant, as he says. But now I'm through.

"With death as my sure reward for what I'm saying, I say here and now, before these witnesses, that I am done forever. Done with all wrong and all evil. That the leopard changes his spots at last. For the love of you in my soul I am made over new. They will kill me soon, and I hope they'll send you with me with all my heart—though hell itself can hold no torture for me to compare with the knowledge that I have brought you to this. That will be more punishment than my lost soul can bear. Oh, Sonya, forgive me for what I've done to you."

"Forgive you?" panted the girl, half sobbing. "Forgive you? I glory in you! And we'll go together, never fear! If not one way, then another. It will not be a long good-by, I promise you."

"Soul's covenant," said Starr Stone.

"Soul's covenant," she answered.

But here El Capitan leaped to his booted feet his fist on the table again.

"It will not?" he rasped. "You think it will not? Carramba! El Capitan Diablo has yet the final word. You to the winds and the vultures, Quince, and moy you remember many things in the—the interval.

"You," he turned to Sonya and leveled a finger at her, "I give to that one among my men who rises to this Quince's empty place. Manuel, my compliments, the lady. I believe you like a white-skinned woman with curls in the hair. And after you—the rest. And that, as they say across the Border, is that. Take them both away."

The four men moved to surround their prisoner, the marching feet passed swiftly, and Sonya watched the tall bronze head go out of the shade into the sun—around a corner.

The world and all it held turned dark before her just as the senora reached out a motherly arm.

She dimly heard Manuel saying, "Careful, senora, careful—she is mine."

Love's Sacrifice

When she opened her eyes again it was dark in the deep-walled room, and she lay on the ancient bed. For a while she lay in a sort of stupid peace, gathering her faculties, which seemed to have been scattered to the four winds.

And then suddenly the values of life dropped into their appointed places, like the brilliant colors in a kaleidoscope, and she knew where she was and what had happened.

El Capitan had spoken, and she was still a prisoner, the property of a dapper Mexican bandit with predatory eyes and laughing, thin lips. Manuel the aviator. And Starr Stone was gone—oh, heaven! Gone to that ghastly fate which lurked in the poignant words, "you to the wind and the vultures." The wild blue eyes that had darkened and changed under the mandates of life, the long hands with their tender touch, the lips so warm upon her own!

STUDENTS

There are three types of students in every school. The first type is the go-getter. He is always doing something for himself or others. He is the one who works hard and gets the honor. He is also interested in all school activities.

How wonderful our school would be if we were all of this type!

The second group is made up of those students who intend to do great things some day. A member of this group is the dreamer. When he sees others winning honors, it inspires him and he determines to do something equally good. But somehow he never seems to get around it. Once in a while he does try something, but he gives so little effort to it that he can do nothing but fail. If he does win some honor, he is saisfied and does not try again. Too many of us belong to this group.

The third type is the laggard. He does not even care to do anything or win any honor. He does not boost his school but finds fault with everything in his whole life. He never works, because somebody else will do it if he doesn't. The laggard is seldom if ever missed when he is gone.

The go-getter decides what he wants and goes after it. He boosts all worthy things. The dreamer is not sure what he wants, or ,if he is, he hasn't ambition enough to go after it. The laggard's only desire is to be nobody and to be let alone, and he usually is. Are you a go-getter, a dreamer, or a laggard? — "National School Paper Press."

The Tigers are working hard to be ready to defeat the Irishmen on Sept. 28.

Scratch 'em, Tigers!

FOOTBALL FIELD LIGHTED

A a result of untiring efforts of many, the McLean football field is one of the best in the Panhandle. The new lights and fence are installed and completed. By the next game the field will be officially named and dedicated. It is a thrill to see the Tigers battle on the good old home grid now that it is in such good condition.

F. F. A. BOYS ACTIVE

Last week the vocational agricultural students had rope making for their practice work, and a very keen interest was shown in the work. The boys brought binder twine from home and made ropes for home use at much less cost than bought rope would cost. Ropes 90 feet long were made, ranging from ¼ in. to ⅞ in. in diameter.

SERMONETTE

By Rev. Stephen M. Tuhy
Lutheran Pastor Oviedo, Fla.

Text: "Behold, to obey is bettear than sacrifice."—1 Samuel 15:22b.

WHOLE-HEARTED OBEDIENCE DEMANDED BY GOD

Pastoral duties are not all joyful, especially when a hard-hearted sinner is to be reprimanded or taken to task for a misdomeanor. It is true, "to err is human." Even pastors have a difficult time in keeping their records clean, because they are tempted by the devil, even more so than the average person, because the Evil One fights the hardest where he thinks he can do the greatest amount of damage. But, when a pastor reprimands a sinner, he does so, not as a sinner himself ,but as a representative of the Almighty God.

Samuel, an aged prophet of God, had a difficult task to perform when he was sent to King Saul and reprimand him for disobedience to God. Saul was given orders to destroy the enemy of God and of Israel completely. He did not destroy everything. He brought some sheep and oxen which he claimed he intedded for sacrifice to God. But God wanted those sheep and oxen sacrificed just where they were. He wanted His commands obeyed completely.

Because of his lack of complete obedience, Saul was to lose his office as King of Israel. The verdict was announced to Saul by Samuel: "Because thou hast rejected the word of the Lord, He hath also rejected thee from being king." This verdict was spoken after Samuel impressed upon Saul that "to obey is better than sacrifice."

Outward ceremonies and rituals are meaningless if they are not performed from a pure and believing heart. God wants the heart first. He wants whole-hearted obedience and not half-hearted or occasional obedience. Numerous prayers and sacrifices to God are of no avail when those offering the sacrifices are doing it as a matter of show or compulsion. Each person must be sincere and devout in his convictions and actions toward his God.

Many people pay their church dues but do not attend church. God wants people to attend church and worship Him publicly as well as privately. A good church member will go to church and also pay his dues and besides give as much as possible for missions and church donations. A half-hearted member may pay his dues but sleep during services or stay at home and idle away his time, thinking that his church dues will carry him a long way. But, God does not want dues with a corrupt heart! God prefers obedience to His laws and unconditional faith than dues and donations. "To obey is better than sacrifice."

Some mortals brag about their church membership and many of the activities in which they participate, but—deep down in their hearts they may be hypocrites! Outward sham and display will not get them anywhere. God wants active church workers. But genuine workers will not brag about their accomplishments or about the amount they have contributed doing the past years! Avoid hypocrisy and surrender your heart completely to God. He wants YOU.

GOD IN HEBREW HISTORY

Lesson text, Prov. 16:18; Hebrews 11:6; Matt. 6:32, 25:40; 1 Sam. 3:9; 2 Kings 22:14; Romans 13:10; Amos 5:4; John 3:16; Micah 6:8; 2 Chron. 16:9; Psalms 24:3, 4, 145:13; Isaiah 55:1 Golden text, Psalms 145:13.

There are probably none who would attempt to deny the fact that God's hand appears constantly in the guidance of Hebrew history. The children of Israel were God's children and He guided them into prosperity and caused their nation to bloom as a beautifully flowering plant. God directed His people as to how they were to live and as to how they were to serve Him and render to Him the kind of service He demanded. All that God asked the people to do was to heed His word and to obey His commands. God was powerful enough to attend to their prosperity whether their need was immediate food and water, or whether it was the victory in some battle. God never failed His people in their hour of need when they had followed Him.

There is no question but that at the same time the above is true, God never came to the aid of His people when they had failed to heed His commands. Many were the times they lost their battles and were embarrassed by unnecessary difficulties because they had failed God. In fact, anyone who studies God's word knows that not only did God withdraw His protective hand from His people when they had gone off to idolatry, but that He also raised up nations against them and caused them to be defeated and punished in most terrifying ways. Some have felt that this was not fair. Yet God never failed to warn His people and point out to them the way that they might escape punishment by honoring and serving Him. When they refused to obey, God did them as we do a child that deliberately refuses to obey our commands. God used the rod on Israel so that until this day wherever one may find a Jew, he worships one God, Jehovah.

God is plenteous in His mercy. But as God raised up nations and cast down nations in olden times He has the power to do the same thing today. And those who are closest to Him in study of His word and His spirit know that He still has that same power and uses it.

Gentile nations have no more lease on the right to wickedness than did the Jews of olden times. Because Jesus came to His own and His own received Him not, He turned to the Gentiles. The Gospel has been given to us to carry to a lost world. God has told us our duty in His final revelation to mankind, the New Testament. If we are willing to follow Him in spirit and in truth and witness to the world the message Jesus has for the world, He will bless us. If we will not, He will punish us. There is no refuge where one may hide from His punishment, but there is mercy in His heart where a contrite and humble soul may find peace, rest, guidance, and in surrender to the will of the Master, safety.

Mr. F. W. Boreham, in writing concerning the "ifs" of history, says: "Nobody can read these formidable ifs—if Napoleon had won the battle of Waterloo; if the Armada had been triumphant; and so on—without feeling that there is some stupendous force working through the episode of history. The great events on which the lives of men and nations hang are not determined by twists of chance or by freaks of fate." He says further: "Nations do not rise and fall by chance. Battles are not decided by the big battalions. Like the stars in their orbits, the mighty movements of men are marshaled and directed. The chariots of history are not running wild, the reigns trailing loosely over the horses backs. They are driven, firmly driven; skilfully driven; and driven by a divine hand."

No nation need think that it has the power to shape its own destiny. It would seem that history would have taught nations that, had they never known the word of God. There are some things upon which nations grow, and other things upon which they slip down. I have repeated many of these things time and time again. It would be impossible to repeat all the things that lead a nation to destruction, but there are some that are before our eyes continually. Saloons have always kept that part of our nation in subjection which patronized them. Today we have a sorrowful picture when something like 90% of our restaurants on an average have been turned into saloons. Not only men, but women and children are daily by the millions acquiring the habit that will sooner or later deprive them of their self respect, manhood and womanhood and make drunkards of them. It will ruin any nation. A people of automobiles, ball games and pleasure trips that desecrate God's day set apart unto Himself will cause Him to withdraw His protective hand from a people. A nation that is more interested in material prosperity than in obeying the commands of the Master cannot expect His blessing of prosperity. In short, men who think on and serve everything but God cannot expect His hand of blessing, for it is turned away from them. Serve Jehovah and He is faithful and good to protect and care for us.

MUCH LIKE A MONSTER

Carrido Canabal, Governor of the Mexican state of Tabasco, declaring that it is "against the race and treasonable to the state" for women to bob their hair, warns them to desist. Which only goes to show that Carrido Canabal has never heard of William Prynne (1660-1669), English Puritan and M. P.

William Prynne crusaded against bobbed hair three centuries before Governor Canabal ever thought of it. English gentlewomen, he said with horror, "are now growne so farre past shame, past modesty, grace and nature, as to clip their haire like men with lockes and foretops, and to make this cut the very guise and fashion of the times."

Bitterly he admonished them: "Even nature herself abhors to see a woman shorne or polled; a woman with cut haire is a filthy spectacle, and much like a monster . . . it being natural and comely to women to nourish their haire, which even God and nature have given them for a covering, a token of subjection, and a natural badge to distinguish them from man."—Literary Digest.
