Nuclear plant at Glen Rose given license

■ Despite arguments about the effectiveness of its emergency evacuation plan, the Comanche Peak nuclear power plant unanimously wins its operating license.

Associated Press

ROCKVILLE, Md. — The Comanche Peak nuclear power plant won an operating license Monday from the Nuclear Regulatory Commission despite a last-minute claim that evacuation plans do not account for an increased summer population.

The five-member NRC approved the license unanimously following a 2½-hour meeting.

The Citizens for Fair Utility Regulation complained, however, that TU Electric Co., owner of the plant, had failed to adequately warn residents living near the Glen Rose plant about evacuation plans.

The activists said they were particularly concerned about an added population of children attending church camps in the area around the plant, about 80 miles southwest of Dallas.

"Not only have the churches throughout the Fort Worth-Dallas area not been brought into any evacuation planning, but those in charge, counselors, directors, etc., are only in the area during the summer months and they have no access to any information," CFUR's Betty Brink said in a statement to the commission.

TU Electric officials promised to take the complaint seriously, although they also claimed it was without merit.

Erle Nye, chairman and chief executive office of TU Electric, said he was "very pleased, very comforted and pleasantly surprised" by the NRC staff's supportive comments — "that our preparedness capabilities meet or exceed those of many other plants, was particularly significant to me."

The plant, a decade behind schedule and billions of dollars over budget, is expected to begin producing power for commercial use by summer, Nye said.

TU spokeswoman Kathi Miller said the utility is seeking a 10.2 percent, $442 million rate increase in part to recover costs of building the $9.1 billion plant.

The utility's 2.1 million customers, who live across the northern third of the state from Monahans in West Texas to Lufkin in East Texas, would begin receiving electricity from the facility 15 years after construction began in 1975.

TU Electric estimated the costs at the time at $775 million and said then that construction could be completed by 1980.

But the plant only two months ago won an NRC license to load fuel and begin low-power operations.

Comanche Peak would be the second — and likely the last — plant this year to receive a full-power operating license from the NRC, said NRC spokesman Frank Ingram. The commission last month awarded the controversial Seabrook nuclear power plant in New Hampshire a full-power license.

Won't dance

PURDY, Mo. (AP) — The U.S. Supreme Court on Monday upheld a ban on school dances in this Bible Belt town, prompting an opponent to lament a victory "for liars, cheats and hypocrites."

Opponents said they now hoped the school board would voluntarily lift the rule, but officials said they wouldn't discuss the issue until May.

The high court without comment rejected arguments that the no-dance rule was religiously motivated and violated the constitutionally required separation of church and state. A federal appeals court in September upheld the ban.

TU customers may get refunds

By David Morris
Staff Writer

An unusually mild winter could mean $64.7 million in refunds for Texas Utilities Electric Co. customers, company officials announced Monday.

TU Electric spokesman Stan Garrison said the company overcollected from ratepayers between last October and February because fuel costs were lower than anticipated.

"We had an extremely cold week in December, but we really had a mild winter," Garrison said. "The fuel factor that we collect on each year is based on temperatures and projected sales."

The company estimated that customers will receive an $11 credit per 1,000 kilowatt-hours used during the month the refund is granted.

Garrison said it would be impossible to calculate refunds based on the amount of electricity used during the period of overcollection.

"You couldn't find all the customers that were there during that particular month," Garrison said, adding that many customers have moved since the overcollection occurred.

He said he expects the Texas Public Utility Commission to grant the refund in June, July or August.

Ratepayers pay 2.19 cents per kilowatt hour for fuel, Garrison said, but fuel costs fell below that this winter.

Garrison said the refund, which has yet to gain PUC approval, is not related to a TU Electric request for a 10.2 percent rate increase.

Anne Roussos, PUC spokesperson in Austin, said the rate increase — to cover construction costs for the Comanche

Hundreds pay neglected traffic fines as city begins warrant crackdown

■ Business at Midland Municipal Court is brisk as hundreds stand in line to pay past-due fines and avoid arrest as police officers begin serving 12,500 outstanding traffic warrants.

By Brian Pearson
Staff Writer

Those scurrying to the post office Monday to mail their tax forms were not the only ones waiting until the last minute to take care of business.

As 20 off-duty Midland police officers hit the streets to begin serving more than 12,500 outstanding traffic warrants, hundreds of people flocked to Midland Municipal Court to pay their fines and avoid arrest.

"Today has been one of the busiest days I've seen in a long, long time," Municipal Judge Robin Smith said. "There's a lot of people who heard about it (crackdown) on television or saw it in the newspaper and decided to come clear their tickets."

Nora Reyes, 18, a Midland High School senior, had a look of fear in her eyes as she stood at the back of a long line at the 406. E. Illinois Ave. courts building.

"I don't want to get arrested," said Ms. Reyes, who was three days delinquent in paying a speeding ticket. "If they weren't arresting people, I would have waited a little longer to come in."

Edward Sturgeon, 55, a Midland truck driver, went to the court to pay his wife's traffic violation.

"I'd be less than a man if I let her get arrested," Sturgeon said. "I want to take care of it."

Midlanders wait in line in the Municipal Court building to pay their traffic ticket fines. The city is cracking the whip on those with unpaid fines.

Despite the inconvenience of having to spend part of his day waiting in a long line, Sturgeon said he did not view the crackdown as unfair.

"If you break the law, you're supposed to suffer the consequences," he said. "That's the way I look at it."

Duane Peters, the city's chief warrant officer, said each of the 20 off-duty police officers and four full-time warrant officers were given between 25 and 30 traffic warrants to serve Monday.

"If they run out of warrants, then they can come back and

NAB'D sets new school drug effort

■ Midland Independent School District has a "wonderful" drug policy, but Neighbors Against Burglary and Drugs feel it isn't being uniformly enforced.

By David Morris
Staff Writer

Declaring that Midland is "in denial" about school-related drug problems, Neighbors Against Burglary and Drugs (NAB'D) today announced a campaign to raise public awareness about the issue.

Penny Angelo, NAB'D chairperson, said she hopes the campaign will result in stricter enforcement of Midland Independent School District drug policies.

"They have a wonderful drug policy, but it's not enforced across the board the way it should be," Ms. Angelo said. Closing high school campuses is vital to controlling student drug use, she added.

She said she does not expect MISD to cooperate in the NAB'D campaign.

Ken Morrison, District 3 trustee, said MISD drug policy meets community expectations.

"This board has shown that it listens to the majority of the community," he said. "If the community says 'we want closed campuses,' then the board would take that into consideration."

Morrison said that while he likes the idea of closing campuses, he

Cloudy, colder conditions due

Staff Report

Today's forecast calls for mostly cloudy skies and colder with a 30 percent chance of rain, a high in the upper 60s and 20 to 30 mph winds from the north, according to the National Weather Service in Midland.

Tonight is expected to be cloudy with a 40 percent chance of thunderstorms with a low in the upper 40s, the NWS said. Wednesday will be cloudy with a 30 percent chance of thunderstorms and a high near 70.

Monday's record high of 96 was set in 1937. The record low for today of 27 was set in 1947.

STATE

Mostly cloudy skies prevailed over much of Texas on Monday, except in the southeast and along the New Mexico border.

Light drizzle fell near San Antonio to Big Bend, while thunderstorms and showers began to form in southwestern Oklahoma during the afternoon.

A weak frontal boundary was located just north of the Red River and moved little throughout the day. Strong southerly winds were converging upon the boundary, increasing the threat of strong thunderstorms.

Winds were generally in the 10 to 20 mph range, with higher speeds reported in North Texas.

Temperatures climbed into the 70s across most of the state. A warm portion of air with readings in the 80s stretched from the Southern Plains to Wichita Falls and along the Rio Grande.

The high temperature in Texas at 3 p.m. was 92 degrees at Wink, and the low was 73 degrees in San Antonio and Del Rio.

The Associated Press contributed to this report.

'Independent' Mars missions urged

WASHINGTON (AP) — Joint missions to Mars by the United States and the Soviet Union are too risky now, a panel said Monday, recommending instead that the two nations follow "a graceful path" of coordinated but independent exploration.

"The United States and USSR have no prior experience with the degree of cooperation necessary to carry out a technical project of this complexity or magnitude," said a committee of the National Research Council.

The committee said it was concerned "about relying on the consistency of the relationship over a period of a decade or more into the future."

The panel's report appeared to chill the idea frequently expressed by many experts that Mars would be explored jointly by the Soviets and Americans, doing together what would be too expensive for either nation to do alone.

The United States and the Soviets have cooperated in space in the past, most notably in 1975 when three Apollo astronauts joined their spacecraft with a Soviet Soyuz and exchanged bear hugs in orbit with two cosmonauts.

The committee was commissioned by NASA to look into undertaking missions with international partners to use robots to gather rocks and soil from Mars and bring them to Earth for analysis. The committee concentrated its study on efforts by the United States and the USSR because "they are the only nations presently in a position to take on the lead role in a major Mars program."

The Soviets have said they intend to explore Mars with robotic rovers, space probes orbiting overhead and by returned samples. A scenario often mentioned is that one nation would build a lander and a sample-return vehicle while the other would develop a roving vehicle for collecting samples and analyzing them.

Detailed Mars investigations, before any manned landing, would include robotic missions at four to six selected sites over a number of years. The committee said its recommended cautious approach "would allow a graceful path to increasingly close levels of cooperation."

The committee said it reached conclusions after considering these three levels of U.S. participation with the Soviets in a Mars venture:

■ Each country conducting programs independently.

The cost would be too high, the returns would be less than maximum, U.S. technology would benefit greatly and there would be no additional risk of transferring technology to the Soviets.

It would make no contribution to U.S.-USSR experience in technical and social endeavors and "it could also ignite a space competition similar to the race to the moon," the committee said.

'A commitment by both nations to a fully cooperative venture ... would have a greater, presumably positive impact on U.S.-Soviet relations than would options involving lesser degrees of interactions and reliance.'

— A committee report of the National Research Council regarding exploration of Mars

■ Split responsibilities and joint technical operations.

"A commitment by both nations to a fully cooperative venture ... would have a greater, presumably positive impact on U.S.-Soviet relations than would options involving lesser degrees of interactions and reliance," the committee said.

Such a venture would allow the nations to share costs while increasing returns and to take advantage of the best of both nations' space programs, such as the Soviets' lead in heavy-lift launch capability.

But a mission highly dependent on cooperative efforts would be a "potential hostage to political events that might disrupt communications and interaction between the two nations," said the committee.

■ A highly coordinated exploration program.

"The two sides would work together at all stages," said the report. "However, the two sides would conduct their own self-contained and independently designed missions."

There would be cooperation in analyzing samples and the cost would be cut in half because each side would need to commit to only half of the needed missions, said the committee. And "there would be no risk of mission failure due to technical, management or political failures."

Thee is a danger that the cooperation could "deteriorate into a race for Mars," the committee said, but the competition might even be helpful if the schedule is planned and paced properly.

TICKETS: Search for offenders begun

we'll load them up again," Peters said. The crackdown will last about two weeks, he said.

No one with outstanding traffic tickets is immune from being arrested, whether they have one ticket or 15, he said. Officers also aren't concentrating on only one section of the city at a time, he said.

"It's just all over town and all segments of society," Peters said. Although officers will serve warrants mostly in the evening hours, those with outstanding tickets may be served anytime, he said.

Those caught will be escorted to jail, he said. Unless the offenders pay their bonds, which can be up to $200 per warrant, they will stay in jail until their arraignments the next day, he said.

Whether those arrested are handcuffed will be "up to the discretion of the officer," he said.

"There's very few that we handcuff," Peters said. "These people are your neighbors: the butcher, the baker and the candlestick maker."

Smith emphasized that people could still come to the court and clear their tickets without being arrested on the spot.

The city had about 12,900 outstanding traffic warrants when Smith announced the crackdown April 9. Since then, "several hundred" people have paid their fines, Smith said.

The warrants would mean more than $1.5 million in revenues for the city in the unlikely event that all of them are cleared, he said.

Warrants issued have greatly outpaced warrants served during the past year, he said. The number of outstanding warrants is the highest in city history, he said.

Smith attributed some of the backlog of cases to having only one bailiff since January 1989, when a second bailiff retired and the city cut the position.

Since then, warrant officers have been pulled off the streets to help maintain order in the two municipal courts, also overseen by Municipal Judge Gordon Marcum, he said.

Smith said the number of cases has mounted also because some offenders fear the courthouse more than being a fugitive. Although people are allowed to go on a payment program, some are afraid to come to the court unless they have the money to pay the fines, he said.

School dance ban's opponents disappointed by court ruling

PURDY, Mo. (AP) — The U.S. Supreme Court on Monday upheld a ban on school dances in this Bible Belt town, prompting an opponent to lament a victory "for liars, cheats and hypocrites."

Opponents said they now hoped the school board would voluntarily lift the rule, but officials said they wouldn't discuss the issue until May.

The high court without comment rejected arguments that the no-dance rule was religiously motivated and violated the constitutionally required separation of church and state. A federal appeals court in September upheld the ban.

"I'm disappointed by the ruling but I'm not surprised," said attorney William Fleischaker, who represented 21 Purdy High School students and their parents who filed a lawsuit in 1986 seeking to overturn the ban in this Ozarks town.

"We knew the odds against us were pretty strong. We had hoped we could get the ear of someone at the Supreme Court and get them to review the situation. Obviously, that didn't happen," he said.

No further legal appeals are planned, Fleischaker said.

School Superintendent Sheldon Buxton declined to speculate whether the school board would again prohibit all school-sponsored dances or modify or abandon the rule.

The board was scheduled to hold its regular meeting Monday night but didn't plan to discuss the ruling, Buxton said.

"This is not the time or place for the board to gloat," said board President Glenn Garrett. "It is time for the board, administration, faculty, students and the Purdy citizens to set about healing the divisions caused by this litigation."

The student body president and several other students refused to comment as they were leaving school Monday afternoon.

"I think the students are just glad to see it all end," said Becky Woods, a high-school physical education teacher and Purdy native.

School board member Alan Keeling praised the ruling, saying it's best for the board to decide whether dances should be held. He said board members had been confident they would win the case.

Buxton said three dances have been held at the school since U.S. District Judge Russell Clark in Springfield ruled in 1988 that the no-dance rule was unconstitutional.

He said the dances went smoothly with no problems and no complaints from five fundamentalist ministers.

Clarification

In a Sunday story about a new senior citizens center in southeast Midland, it was reported that Community and Senior Services of Midland started a center in Hollowell United Methodist Church in 1987.

Community and Senior Services, through a contract with the city of Midland, did not take over the senior citizens program at Hollowell, 400 S. Marshall St., until March 1989.

The Midland Black Advisory Council, with the support of numerous community members, started the program at Hollowell on June 10, 1987. The council gave $40,000 to launch the program.

TU: PUC must consider refund request

(From 1A)

Peak nuclear power plant — will be reviewed by the PUC on April 26.

"I really don't know if we'd get a decision on that by the end of the year or not," Ms. Roussos said.

She said the PUC had received TU Electric's refund request, but did not know when the refund would be granted.

Garrison said all 2.1 million residential and commercial TU Electric customers will receive refunds, which will be credited to customers' electric bills.

He said this is the eighth TU Electric refund since April 1986. Between then and February 1990, the company refunded $499 million to customers, he said.

"It is common to all utilities in Texas because of the law," he said. "It is not uncommon to over- or undercollect for fuel."

TU Electric service covers 87 Texas counties and includes Midland, Odessa, Dallas, Fort Worth and North and Central Texas cities.

NAB'D: Closed campus essential, group says

does not believe his constituents agree with him.

"I don't believe my district would support me," he said. "And this board doesn't like to do anything that doesn't have community support."

Ms. Angelo said the NAB'D campaign, which will include television, radio and newspaper advertisements, is designed to generate such support.

"The school board has told us over the years that they don't really feel like the community feels like there is a problem," she said. "We're going to try to raise awareness of the problem."

The NAB'D advertisements, which began last weekend, feature appearances by Midland law enforcement officers.

Midland County Sheriff Gary Painter, who Ms. Angelo said will appear in an ad about teen suicide, said he supports NAB'D's efforts and advocates closing campuses.

"If it will keep one individual from using narcotics...or getting hurt in a traffic accident, then I'm for it 100 percent," Painter said. "And I think it has that potential."

Midland Police Department Deputy Chief Ron Aaron said MPD supports the NAB'D up to a point.

"We'd be 1000 percent for public awareness, but if you narrowed it down to the issue of closed campus, I don't think we'd necessarily be endorsing that at this time," Aaron said.

Aaron said MISD is making progress in the drug war and should be given some credit.

"MPD in conjunction with MISD have begun the DARE (Drug Abuse Resistance Education) program, and this is something we hope to expand from the sixth grade to the fifth and fourth grade," Aaron said.

Ms. Angelo said the NAB'D campaign will cost between $15,000 and $20,000 and is being paid for with donations.

Berkley staff seeks end to nuclear laboratory ties

Hearst News Service

BERKELEY, Calif. – Citing what they see as the abuse of the University of California's name in continuing the arms race and concern over free-speech issues, many faculty members appear ready to support a drive to cut ties with the Livermore and Los Alamos, N.M., nuclear weapons labs.

Intensive lobbying by lab scientists for new weapons and more nuclear bomb tests, despite pending arms treaties and the relaxation of tensions between the United States and Soviet Union, has inflamed sentiment against renewing the 47-year-old contract with the federal government.

Researchers at the Los Alamos and Livermore labs develop and test warheads for the nation's nuclear arsenal.

Although UC plays no role in the secret military work, the university has operated Los Alamos and Livermore since they were founded during World War II and the Korean War, respectively.

"Livermore and Los Alamos have used the UC imprimatur to bolster policies they advocate in the high councils of government, and most disgracefully so in opposing a nuclear test ban," says UC-Berkeley sociologist Todd Gitlin.

Many professors also express concern over recent incidents that have led to a congressional probe into the behavior of UC administrators and lawyers who allegedly sought to block testimony from a lab official critical of a "Star Wars" weapon program.

The professors are on a collision course with the conservative UC Board of Regents and UC President David Gardner.

In the past, the regents and administration easily have resisted arguments for ending the connection. This time, potential faculty opposition poses a far stronger challenge.

Those who want to maintain the lab ties argue that UC has fulfilled a patriotic role by putting its name on vital military research and development, while favorably influencing the quality of nonclassified work.

The opposition says the labs use the UC title as a cover for lobbying in Washington, while allowing the university little or no influence over operations, and that they repeatedly violate academic freedoms.

While the faculty can't tell the regents what to do, the board and president could not easily ignore a strong faculty vote to end UC supervision of the labs. The critical time for contract renewal comes up in September.

Mail balloting of the entire faculty will be completed before June, but professors voting at Academic Senate meetings this spring favored breaking ties by 98-20 at Berkeley; by 44-3 at UCLA; by 34-0 at Santa Barbara; and by an uncounted but large majority at Riverside. The vote was close at San Diego, with severance favored by 26-23.

UC-Santa Barbara's Walter Kohn, one of the nation's prominent physicists, helped prepare a 2 1/2-year study of the labs that concluded that UC should "phase out its responsibility for operating (Livermore and Los Alamos) while maintaining its current cooperative relationship with the laboratories in teaching and research."

UC was criticized by Rep. John Dingell, D-Mich., chairman of the key House oversight subcommittee. In a letter made available to The San Francisco Examiner, Dingell wrote current Energy Secretary James Watkins that Gardner's office was guilty of "interference" in a probe of lab activities.

Congressional investigators say they are preparing a report to be made public this spring about the treatment of a lab official, Roy Woodruff.

Woodruff was associate director for military programs until he learned that one of the Livermore lab's founders, physicist Edward Teller, had submitted what Woodruff believed to be exaggerated claims to the Reagan administration regarding the X-ray laser and the "Star Wars" nuclear defense program.

Woodruff was demoted in 1985 when he sought to counter Teller's claims with what he regarded as a more balanced view of progress on the laser.

Teachers demonstrate in Oklahoma

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — Thousands of teachers went on strike Monday to show their anger over a failed $230 million education improvement package, and many picketed at the state Capitol.

Teachers say their pay ranks 48th in the nation. The minimum beginning salary for a teacher with a bachelor's degree is $15,060.

The crowd outside the Capitol was estimated at more than 10,000 by Nancy Jewell, vice president of the Oklahoma Education Association. Other estimates ranged up from 5,000.

Hundreds of teachers clogged legislative halls inside the Capitol, lobbying for additional school funding.

"If you can read this, thank a teacher. If you can't, thank a legislator," read a sign carried by one picket.

Schools were closed in more than 145 of the state's 606 school districts, where more than half the education association's members are teachers, said association President Kyle Dahlem. The association represents 80 percent of Oklahoma's teachers.

The Tulsa school district, the largest in the state, was among those closed. Schools were open in Oklahoma City, but not in many of the capital city's suburbs.

Teachers in Oklahoma City and some other districts said they feared reprisals if they took part in the strike. School administrators supported the walkout in some areas and opposed it in others.

At the Capitol, the knob to the main door of Gov. Henry Bellmon's office was loosened because so many teachers wanted to register their presence, said Andrew Tevington, Bellmon's chief of staff.

Bellmon asked state Attorney General Robert Henry to go to court, if necessary, to block the walkout. Henry issued a statement late Monday saying it did not appear immediate legal action was warranted.

Henry said state law forbidding strikes against local school boards did not appear to apply in the case of a walkout to express dissatisfaction with legislative action.

The education association called for a five-day teacher walkout after the Oklahoma Senate failed last week to pass the school reform bill as an emergency measure, which would have put it into effect immediately.

The measure has been the work of an eight-month special session Bellmon called in August to improve Oklahoma schools.

"If you can read this, thank a teacher. If you can't, thank a legislator."

— a picket sign

The Republican governor supported the bill, but only one of the Senate's 15 Republicans voted for it Wednesday, along with seven of the Senate's 33 Democrats.

After the Senate voted Wednesday to drop the emergency clause, legislative leaders got the Senate to send the bill back to committee to keep it from going to Bellmon without the provision.

The bill mandates greater equity in the way state funds are allocated, salary increases for teachers, a school consolidation plan, and a program to close schools that don't meet accreditation requirements,

It calls for an additional $212 million for schools that could be used for teacher salaries and other items, and proposes $1,500 increases in minimum teachers' salaries for each of the next four years.

Much of the opposition was stirred by the plan for taxes to support the reforms, including a half-cent increase in the state's 4-cent sales tax and increases in corporate and personal income taxes.

Senate President Pro Tempore Bob Cullison said there were negotiations over the weekend to revive the school bill, which he had said last week was apparently dead. He said he could not comment on whether there had been any progress toward a compromise.

Ms. Dahlem said critics of the walkout should "come walk in our shoes and then tell me that what we are doing isn't necessary — that this isn't the last resort on a list of options that have all failed over long months of pushing, pulling, frustration and compromise" only for education supporters to come up empty-handed.

The walkout was supported by the National Education Association, which has 2 million members. NEA President Keith Geiger and other officials of the national group issued a statement saying there was "an educational emergency in Oklahoma right now."

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Try to be more available to your romantic partner. Loved one needs to feel that your relationship is a top priority. Your financial independence will grow, thanks to something that occurs in August. A change of environment may be essential to your health and happiness. Reconciling with a friend or relative will lead to monetary gains. Ask that very important question in December; you will not be disappointed. A new alliance adds glamor to your social life. Do not neglect longtime friends.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Greater control over your own life is a must. Be certain others understand your needs. Business communications require closer scrutiny. Do not ignore someone's opinion. Stubbornness can be costly.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Do some research before putting an important proposal on paper. What you find out could change your feelings about an idea. Constructive criticism will save you time and money.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Keep track of credit card purchases to avoid ending up with a bill you cannot pay. Financial deals and personnel matters enjoy favorable influences. Discuss a promotion in a social setting.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Take tests and enter competitions. Hard work will earn you the assignment you want. Peace of mind is linked to reducing your debts. Keep your private ambitions to yourself. Romance is chancy.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): An old friend promotes your talents. An exciting offer is possible. Adjust to a new situation instead of trying to change it. Finalize a business deal before negotiations fall apart. Postpone romance.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Look at a competitor's actions objectively and you will be able to beat him at his own game. Old friends offer a suggestion worth considering. Dress your best for a first date.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Passions run high today. Guessing could cause trouble between you and romantic partner. A phone call leaves you walking on air. A previously rejected idea finds a warm welcome.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You are easily impressed now. Approach newcomers with caution. Some requests will be granted but not those for money. Refuse to spend what you do not have. Do more things on your own.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Your creativity is at a peak. Hinting could cause trouble between you and loved ones. Say what you mean. Financial woes fade. Preparation is the key to landing a job or contract.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Steer clear of time-consuming activities that have proved unproductive. A job opportunity should be pursued immediately. Social pressures influence what you do this evening. Dieters succeed where they previously failed. Pursue romance.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Travel now and you will reap wonderful benefits next year. You could receive an award or bonus for your past efforts. Do not press an obvious advantage. New partnerships work better than old ones.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Romance dominates your thoughts. Use your talents for positive purposes. An old idea attracts new attention. Seek the advice of influential higher-ups. Teamwork is favored.

TODAY'S CHILDREN can be taught to put their stubbornness to constructive use. The playground is these Aries' kingdom. Born leaders, these youngsters quickly take charge. Little League or Scouting will hold great appeal for these popular children.

The bidding:

Pass	5 ♣	5 ♡	Pass
Pass	Pass

Opening lead: King of ♣ Every once in a while, just when you think you know all about the standard positions in the game, someone comes up with a new wrinkle. We are indebted to Terence Reese and Bridge Today for this hand.

North's three-club cue-bid did not necessarily promise control of the club suit—it was simply a forcing bid denoting slam interest. South showed a minimum opening by passing four clubs, but North was unwilling to sell out below five hearts.

Declarer won the opening club lead in dummy, cashed the king of diamonds and drew the outstanding trump. After ruffing the club, South returned to hand with a trump, cashed the ace of diamonds, discarding a spade from the table, then ruffed a diamond. That completed stripping the closed hand and dummy of minor-suit cards.

Since it was quite likely the spade honors were split, the way to hold your losers in the suit to two is to presume spades are 4–2 and, after forcing out the honor in the long hand, duck out the other honor. Since West had shown out of hearts and might have overcalled two no trump with 6–5 in the minors, declarer elected to play East for the short spades. So South made the reasonable play of a spade to the queen. West won and returned a spade, and the defenders took two more tricks in the suit—down one.

Reese points out that, if the suit is 4–2, declarer need not guess who has the long spades. Declarer should simply play a low spade from both hands when first broaching the suit. The defenders can take one more spade, but must then concede the game by yielding a ruff-and-sluff, allowing declarer to discard a losing spade from one hand while trumping in the other.

Travanti will lead fight against global warming

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Daniel J. Travanti, who played the cool-headed police Capt. Frank Furillo on "Hill Street Blues," would like the world to be a cooler place.

Travanti, Mayor Tom Bradley and leaders of the Sierra Club announced plans Monday to launch a national grassroots effort to combat global warming.

Travanti

Sierra Club officials said the campaign will include a series of TV announcements and the distribution of global-warming action kits.

Sierra Club members also plan to push for local and state action to cut gasoline emissions, which scientists say are one cause of global warming.

ST. FRANCISVILLE, La. (AP) — Actress Helen Hayes is on a riverboat trip down the Mississippi that will end Friday in New Orleans.

Hayes

"I feel a real sense of gratitude on this morning," Hayes said as she walked out of church Sunday. "I'm thankful that I'm here."

"I love the history aspect of riding the riverboat," she said, attributing much of her interest to the writing of Mark Twain. "On my first trip, I read 'Life on the Mississippi,' and I've been fascinated by the river ever since."

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Mona Grudt, Miss Universe 1990, says she wants to do serious things with her life and hopes that will prove the pageant is serious business.

Miss Grudt, 19, said she wants to be a pediatric nurse and "help the poor children in Africa.

Grudt

"I will try to make girls believe this is more than a beauty contest, and that you have to be something more than empty inside to win this," said the auburn-haired Miss Norway, nicknamed the "beauty queen from Hell" after the name of her hometown.

Miss USA was first runner-up in Sunday's pageant and Miss Colombia second runner-up.

Carole Gist, a 20-year-old student from Detroit, represented the United States and was the first black American to compete in the pageant. She took her runner-up status with grace.

"I still get to be Miss USA for the year, and I hope to make it the best year possible," Miss Gist said.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Actress Polly Bergen, perhaps best known to television audiences for her Emmy-nominated role as Rhoda in "War and Remembrance" and the sequel "The Winds of War," filed for divorce Monday.

Miss Bergen filed a Superior Court petition to end her eight-year marriage to New York entrepreneur Jeffrey Endervelt. The court documents cited "irreconcilable differences" as the reason for the split.

Miss Bergen, 60, and Endervelt, 50, maintained homes on both coasts, said Marilyn Reiss, publicist for Miss Bergen.

The actress was nominated for two Emmy Awards, one for "The Winds of War" and the other for "War and Remembrance." Rhoda was the wife of naval officer Pug Henry, portrayed by Robert Mitchum.

Miss Bergen was working in Louisiana on Monday on the CBS-TV pilot "Steel Magnolias," based on the movie, Reiss said.

RADNOR, Pa. (AP) — Bob Newhart, master of deadpan comedy, may give new meaning to the term in a possibly fatal finale to his CBS series, "Newhart."

Newhart's character, Dick Loudon, may get killed by an errant golf ball in the last episode, according to TV Guide's April 21 issue.

Tom Poston, who plays handyman George Utley in the 8-year-old series, told TV Guide his script for the May 21 finale had a Japanese businesman buying up the Vermont town where the series is set to build a golf course.

Loudon refuses to sell out, and his Stratford Inn ends up on the 14th hole. He steps outside one day, and ...

"We'd like to keep the suspense up till the episode airs," executive producer Mark Egan said.

"We have a surprise in the final show," was Newhart's only comment.

• • •

RADNOR, Pa. (AP) — Mike Wallace, veteran correspondent for CBS' "60 Minutes," turns 72 on May 9, but says, "I've got the zest, the energy I've always had."

And age can help, he told TV Guide in its April 21 issue.

"I'm old enough and experienced enough so that people are more willing to talk more openly to me than they used to be," he said.

Eye on cosmos may alter ideas

The Hubble Space Telescope will be earthbound at least until April 25 and perhaps longer after a technical glitch scrubbed the launch four minutes before liftoff April 10.

The delay is a disappointment, but what's 24 hours compared to 14 billion years? That's how old the light is that the magnificent instrument will be analyzing once in orbit. Or, to be more mundane, what's 24 hours compared to 44 years? That's the amount of time since the space telescope's inception in the mind of Dr. Lyman Spitzer, professor emeritus of astrophysics at Princeton University.

When the space telescope finally soars into orbit 380 miles above the earth, a new era in astronomy begins. Some scientists are saying it will be the most significant astronomical event since Galileo peered at the stars through the first telescope in 1609.

Free of the distorted atmosphere that obscures our earthbound view of the universe, the space telescope will capture pictures 10 times sharper than any ever seen. Its 94-inch mirror is so powerful it could see a firefly in Australia from Washington, D.C., 10,000 miles away.

The telescope won't be watching fireflies. It will peer into the most distant corners of the universe, picking up light from stars, quasars and galaxies as they were developing billions of years ago. It will probe for other planetary systems and for signs of other life in the universe.

At a cost of $2.1 billion, the launching of the Hubble Space Telescope is the most expensive and complex undertaking in unmanned space science to date.

Spitzer, the intellectual father of the telescope, is 75; he anticipates using the instrument of his dreams later this year. A paper he wrote in 1946 — quoted in The New York Times — describes what he and his colleagues eventually may see:

"It should be emphasized that the chief contribution of such a radically new and more powerful instrument would be, not to supplement our present ideas of the universe we live in, but rather to uncover new phenomena not yet imagined, and perhaps to modify profoundly our basic concepts of space and time."

Short of human beings traveling to the stars, it's difficult to imagine more exciting possibilities.

Europe must build itself a new home

How can a soon-to-be-united Germany fit in a no-longer-divided Europe?

Two sensible themes emerge from discussions by European and American leaders. Germany will remain in NATO, at least for several years, but with substantially reduced military forces.

And NATO members will cooperate with their neighbors to the East on new pan-European security structures to stand alongside the old alliances.

The Bush administration has been out front in advancing and elaborating these themes to meet the needs of all European states, and sensibly so. Unless future arrangements satisfy the main concerns of the Soviet Union, Germany and their neighbors, there'll be trouble.

The potential power of a unified Germany makes all its neighbors nervous. And a neutral, demilitarized Germany could unsettle Germans.

That's why Secretary of State Baker proposes that a united Germany remain in NATO. Soviet diplomats have responded with the suggestion that the new Germany belong to both NATO and the Warsaw Pact.

It's hard to believe the Soviets will hold fast to this position given what they've said many times over in recent months. They're no longer insisting that NATO go out of business, or that the United States withdraw from Europe or that Germany withdraw from NATO.

The Soviet and American positions are reconcilable. The Soviets have signaled they might allow the new Germany to be a NATO member — for a transition period. Over time, as Germany unifies, they want to phase in new collective security arrangements to bridge the rival alliances.

Germany's present leaders don't reject any of these thoughts. And significantly, they now appear willing to provide guarantees that Germany won't change its borders by force and won't acquire nuclear weapons.

The Germans are even prepared to accommodate Soviet desires to limit the size and disposition of German forces, but not if they are singled out.

At present, the German force issue is being dealt with in the 23-nation talks on Conventional Forces in Europe. These talks would limit German forces as part of overall constraints on NATO's armies and air forces.

But Moscow also intends to raise this issue in talks on German unification with the United States, Britain, France and the two Germanys. That could imply Moscow will insist on special German force limits as a condition of unification. Moscow also may press for especially low German troop levels.

As these new ideas percolate, there's remarkable congruence among Eastern and Western leaders. They recognize that the new structures they're erecting have to be built alongside the old.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today's highlight in history:

Two hundred years ago, on April 17, 1790, American statesman, diplomat, author and inventor Benjamin Franklin died in Philadelphia at the age of 84.

On this date:

In 1492, a contract was signed between Christopher Columbus and Spain to seek a westward ocean passage to Asia.

Bush crony fails to declare furs

WASHINGTON — A State Department official who is also a close friend of President Bush is being investigated for evading customs when she brought fur coats into the United States from Argentina.

Anderson

The official is Jennifer Fitzgerald, currently serving as deputy chief of protocol, a title belied by the substantial power and influence she wields at State. She has been a longtime friend of the Bush family, and a personal assistant to the president for many years prior to the current post.

State Department sources said the investigation is generating unusual interest internally, and is being handled gingerly by department officials. Several sources describe Fitzgerald as unofficially the second most powerful person at State.

Fitzgerald has declined to respond to our questions about the allegation, although we made repeated calls to her office over the last month.

The charge the State Department Inspector General is investigating is that Fitzgerald bought four furs in Buenos Aires last July when she was with a "presidential delegation" and provided an incomplete declaration of the items at Andrews Air base when she returned. The occasion was the July 8 inauguration of Carlos Saul Menem as president of Argentina. It marked the first transfer of power from one democratically elected civilian president to another in Argentina in 61 years.

U.S. Commerce Secretary Robert Mosbacher headed the official delegation, which included Fitzgerald. While in Buenos Aires, the American group visited two well-known fur outlets, Denis Furs and Charles Calfoun. Both sell mostly fox, mink and nutria.

The 57-year-old Fitzgerald has worked for Bush for more than a decade, including stints when he was ambassador to China in the early 1970s and when he was director of the CIA. When Bush came to the White House in 1981 as vice president, Fitzgerald came with him. She became his appointments secretary and, despite what sources describe as a "natural surliness," she enjoyed wide influence and a warm friendship with the vice president.

She was also unofficial gatekeeper at the time; no one could see Bush without Fitzgerald's approval. Two Bush aides resigned in 1982 in the middle of a turf battle with Fitzgerald.

Several years later, she was transferred to Bush's Capitol Hill office, where he presided as president of the Senate. "The first thing she did was totally redecorate the office," one source reported. "She came in and, without hesitation, redid the office. That's power."

Her power as deputy chief of protocol is almost fabled within the department. One knowledgeable source recalls how Secretary of State James Baker rebuffed repeated attempts by Protocol Chief Joseph Verner Reed to discuss a scheduled meeting with Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze in Wyoming last September. Through an assistant, Baker told Reed to keep out.

Enter Fitzgerald. After she contacted Baker, the protocol office became essential to the occassion.

These are among the reasons why the inspectors general investigation is being handled delicately.

The alleged charges fit into a long pattern of laxity by the U.S. Customs Service in inspecting goods being brought in by VIPs to Andrews Air Force Base. In a series of earlier columns, we reported on the problem at Andrews, where customs officials are wary of angering important officials from either the executive branch or Congress.

For instance, last December we wrote that "smuggling is de riguer for congressional scofflaws." Army Sgt. Cloyed Riddle told Army investigators "that some members of Congress and their spouses slip foreign goods into the country without so much as a mention to the customs agents."

Agents are required to collect the same forms from dignitaries that all Americans must fill out to declare foreign-made goods. Riddle told Army investigators he witnessed a number of lawmakers and their spouses who bought items abroad but declared nothing.

Anything costing more than $400 requires a 10 percent duty, although items brought back from abroad costing less than that are still supposed to be declared.

MINI-EDITORIAL — Latest estimates from the General Accounting Office state that the savings and loan bailout could reach $500 billion. The bill will be sent to every American taxpayer, his children and probably his grandchildren. Here's an alternative: Why not force the states that are most culpable, and in which the losses are concentrated, to pay the lion's share of the bill? Texas and California legislatures, bowing to lobbyists, passed laws allowing thrift executives permission to create the mayhem that followed. When your tax bill comes, why not write on the envelope: Forward to Texas.

WILLIAM SAFIRE

Soviets having trouble meeting their debts

WASHINGTON — The Soviet Union, which has always promptly paid hard cash for the commodities it purchases in the West, seems to have fallen almost one half-billion dollars behind in payments due to grain exporters in the past month.

Safire

I say "seems to" because nobody wants to talk publicly about this unprecedented payment delay — not the grain companies, which do not want to embarrass our largest customer (America sold 21 million metric tons of wheat and corn to the U.S.S.R. in the last marketing year), and not the Soviet Union, which wants to conceal this part of its economic desperation.

However, as a result of the mountain of accounts receivable, several international grain dealers have quietly stopped selling to the Soviet Union.

It means that Mikhail Gorbachev's plan to placate angry Soviet consumers by putting bread on their tables is now threatened.

His purchasing agents have turned to Japan. When Continental Grain declined to sell any more on credit ("We're being more prudent in bidding for business" is the way a company spokesman reluctantly puts it), the Japanese bought and paid for American grain and resold it to Moscow, hoping to be paid in six months or a year — in effect, acting as the Soviet's risk-taking banker.

What's happening here? Are the Soviets going broke?

Moscow's suppliers in America say no, that the delay must be merely a bureaucratic mixup. In the past, Moscow's export arm bought the grain with the backing of the Soviet Union's central bank.

But now, as a result of perestroika's housecleaning of bank officials, the excuse is given that the necessary documentation has been mislaid, or not filled out, or the banker has been fired and nobody sits at that desk anymore.

As a result, grain shipments have been curtailed; "We got paid, finally, the other day," says one U.S. grain shipper, "but most of the other guys are still being told the check is in the mail."

ABC News' Stephen Aug recently reported that the Du Pont company, our largest producer of agricultural chemicals, was not being paid on time by the normally punctual Russians.

American suppliers have accepted Moscow's explanation that the delays were due only to perestroika's necessary decentralization.

The great grain dunning raises the stakes substantially. Although the excuse is that the banker was fired and his local replacement cannot find the paperwork, the fact is that the Soviets are systematically seeking new deals permitting six-month and one-year payment delays. That spells big credit trouble.

CHARLEY REESE

Nation can no longer afford foreign aid

Unless you wish to end up in the poorhouse, you should write your congressman, senators and president and tell them while it is very nice that some countries have decided to become democratic, we can't afford to support them.

Charley Reese

For some reason, inside the Washington Beltway, it is assumed that a nation which holds an election automatically qualifies for subsidies from the American taxpayers. I have even heard some speak of it as our obligation.

Obligation, my foot. Freedom is its own reward. If people have to be bribed to be free, then let them stay under the tyrant's heel. Groveling on the ground is an appropriate place for people who love money more than liberty.

It just so happens that our federal debt has topped $3 trillion. That's $3,000,000,000,000. That's more goose eggs than you will find on most baseball scoreboards. And it's all at compound interest.

I am honestly mystified at what seems to me to be collectively insane behavior in Washington. How did the crazy notion become so ingrained that the American taxpayers have to subsidize every Tom, Dick and Harry of a country — either to keep them from going communist or to reward them for going democratic?

The Marshall Plan made some sense, even though I would still argue it was unconstitutional. One, we could afford it. Two, Europe had been flattened and it made sense to rebuild it, not only to help insure stable, friendly governments but also to create markets for our own trade. But that job is finished.

Foreign aid, however, hangs on like a heroin addiction. Today, it makes no sense at all. Most of it goes right down various rat holes or into Swiss bank accounts. Forty decades of experience show that it does not work — either to keep communists out or to keep democrats in. Yet in Washington, where there is rarely a consensus on anything, foreign aid is a sacred cow. It sure doesn't buy friendship. We are a lot more hated now after 40 years of aid.

At any rate, we can no longer afford it. When you start having to cut your own defense forces and chisel your retirees out of what you promised them, then how in God's name can you justify shipping $14 billion plus out of the country? How can you tax working men and women $197 billion just to pay one year's interest on the federal debt and then ship billions more of their tax money overseas?

The present crop of Washington politicians deserves a far worse fate than being voted out of office, but let's be forgiving and just relieve them of their jobs come November.

Let us cease checkbook diplomacy. Countries beyond our borders are not our responsibility. Why, for example, should we pay Panama because we overthrew their dictator? We're the one who rendered the service. Panama should reimburse us for the cost.

It's nice that the Nicaraguans voted the Sandinistas out of office but if they need money, let them sell the $5 billion worth of Soviet armaments they received.

I'm for spending all the billions we need for defense but not a penny for bribery or blackmail.

Joy riding on elevators dangerous sport

N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — As if the danger on the streets of New York City's meanest neighborhoods were not enough, an alarming number of teen-agers and even children as young as 6 are seeking thrills in a deadly sport high above.

Boys and occasionally girls are riding outside elevators as they sweep up and down the shafts of high-rise housing projects. Often the youngsters are badly hurt. Sometimes they die.

The most common form of the game, called "elevator action," involves riding on top of an elevator car. Sometimes, riders leap from atop one moving car to another.

In "helicopter," the challenge increases: youngsters sneak into the pit at the bottom of an elevator shaft and ride beneath the car, holding on literally for life to an electric cable less than two inches thick that travels up and down with the car.

While boys have demonstrated their virility with such games for at least two decades, officials at the New York City Housing Authority say that joy riding on elevators appears to have increased rapidly last year.

Nearly 200 people were arrested for such stunts, more than double the previous year, and about 40 were injured, also twice the 1988 total, the housing police said. Two young men were killed.

"A lot of kids do it," said Thearse Coleman, a 12-year-old who has lived in housing projects in Brooklyn and Queens. "I think they just do it for fun, for the thrill of it."

Thearse said that a group of girls recently dared her to join them on a ride above an elevator. "They said, 'You're chicken. You're chicken,'" she said. "But I just left. It's dangerous. I said, 'You're all crazy if you do that.'"

Public housing is not the only site of such games. A 19-year-old man interviewed last week on Manhattan's Lower East Side said that in his privately owned apartment building on East Fourth Street, 6-and 7-year-olds played atop the elevator until one nearly hurt himself seriously.

And last month at the University of Massachusetts in Amherst, an 18-year-old freshman, Joel B. Mangion, died after falling eight stories down a dormitory elevator shaft while riding above a car. Students said the game, which they call "elevator surfing," had been common at the university before the accident.

Officials at the Housing Authority said that a combination of boredom, the need to demonstrate bravery and peer pressure lures young people into elevator games.

"It must be the challenge," said Officer Herbert A. Sellers, one of nine members of a housing police squad that investigates such incidents and tries to prevent them. "These kids don't have enough areas to play or creative things to do."

"You can talk about the danger with a youngster, but when he is with his peers, he can be taunted into it," said Ralph Hittman, the executive director of the Boys Brotherhood Republic of New York, a youth recreation center on the Lower East Side. "These kids have a restlessness. They are running aimlessly around and they need something to do."

David Reisman, the Harvard sociologist, said the practice struck him as a more dangerous version of traditional initiation rituals like fraternity hazing, in which young people seek to demonstrate courage.

Last week, two teen-age brothers were jumping between moving elevators in the Castle Hill housing project in the Bronx when one mistimed his leap and got wedged between a steel beam and the outside wall of an elevator, Sellers said. The boy, 13, broke a leg and an ankle and suffered chest damage.

"He was lucky," Sellers said. "He was hanging upside down when he was removed."

At the Polo Grounds complex on Frederick Douglass Boulevard in Harlem, a project whose 30-story buildings are the tallest in the city, about three dozen youngsters formed a group they called LTG, or Little Tough Guys, he said. They roamed the elevator shafts seeking thrills, at least until last November, when a member died after attempting a stunt.

Apparently on a dare, Walter McMillan, who was 12, stood on a beam on the 26th floor and tried to somersault from the beam on to the top of a moving elevator, Sellers said. But Walter got caught between the beam and the elevator. His legs were crushed and he died a few hours later of internal injuries.

NATION IN BRIEF

Gallup mayor facing recall

GALLUP, N.M. (AP) — Gallup's feisty mayor, who once threatened to erect billboards proclaiming his city the nation's drunken-driving capital, was fighting for his political life Monday in a recall election.

Mayor Ed Munoz contends the liquor industry is behind the effort to drive him from office because of his campaigns against alcohol problems in this city on the edge of an Indian reservation.

But organizers of the recall say they're fed up with the longtime mayor's confrontational style, and accuse him of using his position to help friends. They noted the 62-year-old Democrat has three times offered to step outside to settle differences during City Council meetings.

"If I had been charged with malfeasance or something like that, then I wouldn't feel good," Munoz said. "But I feel good about this."

Recall organizer Linda Tiley says the mayor's proposal in February for billboards depicting a car on a road paved with skulls was just the last straw.

Four men appointed

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush announced his selection Monday of Charles H. Thomas, a career foreign service officer, to be U.S. ambassador to Hungary.

Thomas, 55, most recently served as principal deputy assistant secretary of state for European and Canadian affairs. For almost a year he has been studying Hungarian in preparation for his new assignment.

If confirmed by the Senate, he would replaced Mark Palmer, who recently retired from the foreign service for a job in international banking.

U.S. relations with Hungary have improved steadily since that nation held democratic elections last year. Earlier this month, the United States entered into a pact with Hungary that extends to the Warsaw Pact most-favored-nation trade status.

The White House also announced these appointments:

—Florida Lt. Gov. Bobby Lynn Brantley of Tallahassee to be a member of the National Commission on Agriculture and Rural Development Policy, succeeding Arthur R. Brown.

—Philip Larson of Reston, Va., a career diplomat, to be U.S. representative to the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development. He succeed Denis Lamb.

—Gerald William Ebker of Potomac, Md., an IBM Corp. vice president, as a member of the president's National Security Telecommunications Advisory Committee.

Bush starts egg rolling

WASHINGTON (AP) — Thousands of children frolicked on the White House lawn Monday, hunting wooden eggs and rolling real ones in a rite of spring that converted the presidential estate into a playground.

President Bush joined briefly in the fun, blowing a shiny whistle to start an Easter Egg Roll in which his 3-year-old granddaughter, Marshall Bush, was entered.

Actually, there were no winners or losers in the 10-yard races. All comers got wooden eggs bearing the names of George and Barbara Bush.

At day's end, Debra Romash, director of the White House Visitors Office, reported that 23,250 people came through the gates, up from about 22,000 last year.

Kilauea poses threat

KALAPANA, Hawaii (AP) — A slow but persistent lava flow from Kilauea Volcano oozed to within 800 feet of a housing subdivision Monday after destroying an isolated home the day before, authorities said.

The flow had the potential to reach homes at the western edge of the Kalapana Gardens subdivision by Monday evening, said Harry Kim, administrator of the Hawaii County Civil Defense Agency.

There are 80 homes in Kalapana Gardens and 43 others in the surrounding coastal community.

Workers empty sect's leaking fuel tanks

CORWIN SPRINGS, Mont. (AP) — The estimated size of a fuel leak near Yellowstone National Park reached 31,000 gallons Monday, and the state considered legal action against the sect that owns the leaking tanks.

Workers continued to pump out 35 tanks with a capacity of 634,500 gallons of diesel fuel and gasoline that were buried during the winter by the Church Universal and Triumphant as part of a 750-person fallout shelter complex.

The sect buried the fuel for use after an unspecified global catastrophe it believes may occur this spring.

The complex is five miles north of Yellowstone National Park and within several hundred yards of Mol Heron Creek, an important cutthroat trout spawning stream that runs into the Yellowstone River.

The estimated size of the spill was increased from 19,000 to 31,000 gallons as a result of more accurate measurements, but officials hadn't ruled out the possibility that more fuel was leaking, said Steve Pilcher, chief of the state Water Quality Bureau.

Small amounts of fuel that reached the creek Sunday were gone Monday, and no major damage had occurred, officials said. U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service officials took water samples downstream from the spill for tests.

The sect owns about 30,000 acres in southern Montana's Park County. It has sponsored several housing developments in the rural, remote area and urged its members to build fallout shelters in anticipation of a nuclear war or nuclear accident.

But the church says its concern over nuclear holocaust took second place to pollution when it discovered last week that three tanks were leaking.

"This is our home; the last thing we want is to have to deal with an environmental problem," said church spokesman Murray Steinman. Church spiritual leader Elizabeth Clare Prophet "has said protecting our ecosystem is more important than our bomb shelters."

State health officials met in Helena to decide whether to seek a court order to make sure the church carries out its plans to dig up the 35 tanks and inspect them for leaks, Pilcher said.

The state may seek an injunction either to guarantee the tanks are emptied, tested and removed, or to halt construction at the site, he said.

State officials also were attempting to determine if the spill violated the state's water quality and underground storage tank laws, Pilcher said.

"We don't have any idea where that 31,000 gallons of fuel is," Pilcher said. "If we did, we'd know how dangerous our enemy is. ... It could show up anywhere. They're going to have to begin digging and follow the contaminated soil until they find it, and either recover it or get rid of it."

Pilcher said the tanks may have ruptured because they were installed in frozen soil that shifted when it began to thaw.

By being installed during the winter, the tanks are exempt from new underground tank regulations that took effect April 1.

State officials earlier this year reopened an environmental review of church developments near Corwin Springs, saying the church concealed construction of the shelter complex during the original review, completed in March 1989.

Associated Press

Millions of taxed procrastinators on Monday rustled their receipts, coaxed their calculators and battered aspirin bottles before doing the annual tax deadline dash to the post office.

From Olympia, Wash., where a piano player was set up at the main post office to serenade the frantic; to Lincoln, Neb., where state tax agents were set up to be dunked; to long lines in Philadelphia, taxpayers grappled with Tax Day 1990 — April 16, a day later than usual because the 15th fell on a Sunday.

The Internal Revenue Service did not estimate how many couples and individuals waited until the last minute. But the agency predicted that about 34 million returns — more than 30 percent of the 111 million expected this year — would be filed after April 6.

The IRS Form 4868 was one of the most-sought pieces of paper in the nation Monday as an estimated 6 million Americans abandoned hopes of meeting the midnight deadline. Filing a Form 4868, along with a check for estimated taxes owed, extends the return deadline to Aug. 15.

In Lincoln, Neb., taxpayers who felt like they took a bath could turn the tables and dunk agents with the state's Department of Revenue.

Michigan's top tax man, state Treasurer Robert Bowman, was among the procrastinators Monday.

"Morning services, Easter egg hunts and taxes: that's how I spent my weekend," Bowman said. "It proves beyond a shadow of a doubt that we are a nation of procrastinators.

"I always wait until the last minute to do my own taxes, because I spend the first three months of the year worrying about everyone else's.

Luckily, Tax Freedom Day isn't far off. That's the hypothetical day — as calculated by the Washington, D.C.-based Tax Foundation — on which all federal, state and local taxes would be paid if all income were earmarked for taxes.

Inventive Midland man breaks out of old mold

By David Morris
Staff Writer

Larry Bergen's his name and false teeth are his game.

The 65-year-old Bergen, a Midland dental technician, has spent the last 50 years practicing his craft — fashioning dentures to fill dentists' prescriptions.

"They told me when I was in school that what you're working on has got to fit a human being, so give it your best shot," said Bergen, a three-year Midland resident transplanted from Dallas-Fort Worth and Las Vegas, Nev.

Semiretirement, however, left craftsman Bergen with little to do.

"My hobby is doing things," he said, so thumb-twiddling was not an acceptable alternative to sculpting false teeth at his "E" Street workshop.

It wasn't long before Bergen realized that dental prosthetics weren't the only things he could make with his hands.

When his wife Lisa hurt her back two years ago and was having difficulty bending over to feed the family pets, Bergen said "a light came on" in his head.

His first invention — a wall-mounted, adjustable-height pet feeder — was spawned.

"I've found out since that animals also have neck problems and it's hard for them to bend down and get their food," said Bergen as he demonstrated the feeding apparatus. "This is adjustable to any level. The advantage of that, seeing that it (the food) is away from the wall and the floor, is that insects can't contaminate the food."

His next brainstorm came last summer, when Bergen was hospitalized with a serious hand infection.

"When they brought me my food it was difficult for me to hold the utensils," he said. It occurred to him as he struggled to feed himself that "people with rheumatoid arthritis must have one heck of a problem eating."

When he got out of the hospital, Bergen devised a set of utensils with spherical grips which he says are easier to manipulate than the standard knife, fork and spoon.

"That's just going to be another item in the health field for people who due to crippling diseases cutting food is a near impossibility," Bergen said.

Another inspiration came after he had occasion to smack a pesky insect with a gasoline pump nozzle he was experimenting with in his living room. Not sure what to do with the dead bug's carcass, Bergen scooped it up with the gas nozzle and tossed it neatly in the trash.

Since then, Bergen has been busily fashioning bug-smashing scooper tubes out of PVC pipes.

He said he is in the process of patenting all of his inventions, but has no illusions about any of them making him rich.

"I haven't sold any to anybody," he said. "I have a feeder at home for my dog. I have no use for

By Brenda Masengill
Staff Writer

Five years and seven nose surgeries later, Alicia Anderson of Odessa is recovering from her cocaine addiction.

Midlander Erin Cooledge, 20, who "started drinking heavily at age 13," also is on the road to recovery, she said.

Both young women attribute the return to a sober life to the chemical dependency program at Clearview Hospital in Midland, which has undergone a few changes itself of late.

The hospital, located west of the city, opened its doors for public tours Monday to showcase recent remodeling and marketing efforts.

It was the first-ever public tour of the facility, said Laurie Johnson, spokesperson for Midland Memorial Hospital, owner of Clearview.

Billed as a "preview party," the tours were designed to show "that it's not an ominous, locked-down, bars-on-the-window facility," Ms. Johnson said. "With facilities like this, there is always a mystique" about the goings-on inside, she added.

According to Clearview administrator Bob Rabidoux, a new outdoor atrium area, part of the remodeling effort, "gives the immediate feel of leaving the facility" and is used for counseling sessions as well as a place for meditation. A new baseball field has been added to the hospital's outdoor recreation program that consists of a swimming pool, tennis, volleyball, croquet, horseshoes and a running track. An indoor recreation room will soon debut, Rabidoux said.

The 49-bed facility treats both adults and adolescents, with families playing a significant role in the recovery plan, Rabidoux said. Families are required to "participate in an intensive three-day session" because they too need help "to regain emotional stability" after caring for a chemically abusing person, Rabidoux explained.

Christian faith, dedication prompts High Plains' trek

■ An Odessa pastor personifies the evangelical spirit through his trek to North Dakota.

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

Art Robles is "stepping out" ... but in the name of evangelism and with the faith of a penniless believer. He is bearing a cross.

Robles is willfully burdened by a 100-pound wooden cross, fitted with two dolly wheels to ease his load and toil. Lettering on the 7-foot-by-12-foot-cross proclaims "Jesus Is Lord" and "Jesus Is Alive."

His mission is to witness along his 1,200- to 1,400-mile walking trip to Grand Forks, N.D., to "save souls," to "get people into Heaven," and to hold "a revival in North Dakota when I get there if there is not one already there."

Robles, an ordained minister who said he has "stepped down from pastor to evangelist" of the House of Prayer in Odessa, is taking a non-paid leave of absence from the church to make the 2½-month journey.

With him, he brings no money, he said, but carries a $20 check from the church to protect him from vagrancy charges.

"God is funding my mission," said Robles, who walked the Odessa-Midland 22-mile stretch in 6½ hours on Saturday. He set aside Sunday for rest and church-going before he again took up his cross.

"I didn't come with any money," Rubles said. "The only thing I brought was a day's supply of wa-

Police search to no avail for Odessa girl

Staff Report

Law enforcement officials are unsure if foul play is involved in the disappearance of an 8-year-old Odessa girl missing since Saturday, an Ector County Sheriff's Office spokesman said Monday.

"With her missing that long, we have to lean that way," Capt. Gene Kloss said.

Gloria Castillo vanished at about 4 p.m. Saturday near her mobile home. She had been playing with her brother near the 7300 block of West 21st Street, police said.

Law enforcement personnel and neighbors searched the area all day Sunday but were fruitless in their effort, authorities said.

As of Monday, sheriff's officials had no leads, Kloss said. There were conflicting reports of an unfamiliar faded orange Chevrolet pick-up truck in the area at the time of the girl's disappearance, he said.

The Sheriff's Office is offering a $500 reward for information leading to the girl's recovery, officials said.

The girl has short black hair, brown eyes, is about 3 feet tall and weighs 70 pounds, authorities said. She was last seen wearing a blue, purple and white shirt with a blue-jean skirt, officials said.

TV anchor focus of humorous advertising campaign

The station taped Criswell's mouth shut and ran a picture of him that way in full-page newspaper ads. "Until we can give you Criswell live, you'll have to settle for Criswell taped," the ads say.

The photos launched an advertising blitz to keep viewers from forgetting Criswell during his legally fraught move from WFAA, the top-ranked Dallas station where he has worked 19 of the last 25 years.

His hiatus was negotiated by the two stations in a legal battle over Criswell's contract obligations.

He will be introduced June 4 as the new co-anchor of KDFW's 6 p.m. and 10 p.m. newscasts, joining veteran anchor Clarice Tinsley at the CBS station. The move displaces current co-anchor Steve Bosch, who will retain the 5 p.m. newscast, said KDFW General Manager Jeff Rosser.

The settlement also prohibited KDFW from using Criswell or his voice in any television ads.

Forced to improvise, Rosser said, the station chose what he termed a "risky" campaign.

"The campaign is designed obviously to cause people to talk about us ... and give us a look," Criswell said Monday. "This campaign that you're seeing now is good until I get on the air."

The campaign, designed by the Dallas agency Vergati Stevenson, portrays the anchor as comically anxious to get back on the air. The newspaper ads premiered Sunday and are being followed by ads on TV, radio, billboards and buses.

"Right now, this is the only way you can see John Criswell live at 10 p.m.," an announcer says as the camera captures a rear glimpse of a bathrobe-clad actor playing Criswell.

The lighthearted campaign doesn't take away from the seriousness of the news business, Criswell said. "The subject matter (on newscasts) often is very important, but after all, we're human beings and we shouldn't take ourselves quite so seriously," he said.

Criswell said the ads, in one sense, imitate life: he's anxious to get back to work.

"I'm driving people crazy and myself probably most," he said. "This is the longest period since I began my broadcast news career nearly 30 years ago that I have been off the air."

He said he hasn't heard from his old bosses at WFAA, and doesn't expect to. WFAA's station manager and news director were out of town and unavailable for comment, a spokeswoman at the station said Monday.

Rosser said the ads also are intended to portray KDFW as a "scrappy underdog."

The station's evening newscasts consistently have ranked behind WFAA, an ABC station, and NBC's KXAS in the Dallas-Fort Worth area, the nation's sixth largest TV market.

"We've just made it too easy for them, and they can't count on that any longer," Rosser said. "We're going to at least be in the chase."

Crane sheriffs, DPS capture suspicious men

Staff Report

Two suspects in an armed robbery of an Odessa convenience store on Sunday have been apprehended in Crane County.

Philip Gene Morrison, 26, of Ohio, and Charles Alfred Wilson, 41, of Fort Worth, remained in the Crane County Jail Monday, said Tommy Jones, Chief Deputy of the Crane County Sheriff's Department.

Both have been charged with evading arrest by the Crane County Sheriff's Department. Bond was set at $1,500 apiece on Monday by Justice of the Peace Anna Hubbard.

In addition, complaints are expected to be filed by the Odessa Police Department against the men on charges of armed robbery.

The two men are suspected of robbing the Kent Kwik convenience store at 1001 N. Dixie Blvd. at about 4:15 p.m. Sunday.

One of the suspects, wearing a blue ski mask and armed with a sawed-off shotgun, is accused of taking an undetermined amount of cash and three packs of cigarettes from the store, said Cpl. McAhon of the Odessa Police Department. The robber loaded the gun in front of the clerk apparently to magnify his demand, McAhon said.

The Texas Department of Public Safety stopped a vehicle described as the one used in the robbery at about 5 p.m. Sunday on Highway 385 in Crane County. DPS officers caught Wilson, shortly after both men fled on foot.

Morrison was captured about 9 a.m. Monday by the Crane County Sheriff's Department.

nurse, Ms. Anderson was drug tested one day. "The only way I could keep my job was to come to Clearview," she said.

With her family's participation in the program, Ms. Anderson says today "it was the best thing that ever happened to us."

She first tried cocaine five years ago at a party in Dallas. She started smoking it in 1989. From April 1989 to last February, she underwent seven nose surgeries from her use of "massive quantities" of the drug. Initially, "I just did grams, then an ounce a day," she said. Finally, she was smoking an ounce a day and spending thousands a year.

"I just liked the speed of it; it kept me going all the time," said Ms. Anderson, who worked eight years in intensive care delivery and two years in labor and delivery. "It made it (the job) not so stressful," she said. Additionally, "it made me not care if my boyfriends would hit me or treat me poorly.

"I thought I was happy; I was just high," she said.

After her parents learned of her addiction, "it was just total acceptance. They finally found out what was wrong with me."

After attending Clearview's Affirmations program, which deals with co-dependency, "I realized I could be me; I didn't have to wear a mask," she said. Although no longer at MCH, Ms. Anderson is back in nursing.

Parents were not a favorite topic during the time she abused alcohol and drugs, Ms. Cooledge told the Reporter-Telegram. At age 16, she moved out of the house and quit school.

"I couldn't stand to be around my parents," she said. "I had the attitude they were unreasonable and too strict. In reality, they were fairly lenient. They allowed me to make my own mistakes."

"We're real close now. It's a whole different relationship," Ms. Cooledge said, but the road was rough.

Before quitting school, "I was skipping classes all the time, and when I was there, I was stoned or had liquid (alcohol) lunches. I really got after it," she said.

Although she used marijuana and eventually cocaine and ecstasy, Ms. Cooledge said "alcohol was my drug of choice." Alcohol, she explained, "helped stuff my feelings.

"I really believe (alcohol abuse) was about not expressing my feelings," Ms. Cooledge said.

Although she attended other programs to help deal with her drinking, "I wasn't willing to listen to what people were telling me." In June of 1988, just shy of her 19th birthday, she entered Clearview.

Even then, Ms. Cooledge said she suffered a relapse and began drinking again after her release. "I just wasn't ready yet" to give up the alcohol, she said of the backslide. "There's a saying: until the pain gets bad enough, you're not going to change.

"I came back in March of 1989 and went through the co-dependency (Affirmations) program," Ms. Cooledge said. "There I learned to take the mask off. I worked to give the appearance of a tough broad — somebody that nobody could hurt," she said.

Through treatment, Ms. Cooledge said she learned to express her feelings, "not mask them behind alcohol." Co-dependent persons are frequently raised in "a dysfunctional family where they learn to not express their feelings, like anger. A lot of parents won't let their kids get angry, so they never learn to deal with it."

Ms. Cooledge is working on her 15th month of sobriety with hopes of someday becoming a psychologist and working with "adult children of alcoholics" as well as children affected by the disease.

money — it's a piece of green paper to me."

Still, a little extra cash would be nice, and Bergen said he's looking for someone to back his inventions with some capital.

Meanwhile, he remains fascinated with the complex process of inventing — testing building materials, experimenting with designs, applying for patents.

"The thinking of the thing is nothing compared with the detail of filing for your patent and getting it started up," he said.

Marcus Bates, a patent agent with whom Bergen has worked, said he could not comment on the likelihood of any of Bergen's inventions being patented.

He said, however, that it is hard to tell what will be a successful invention and what won't.

"You often feel that a client's patent will be issued, but until the U.S. Patent Office issues it...you really don't know," he said. "Fifty percent of the patents filed for in the patent office are never issued-...for lack of invention."

VOLUNTEERING

Join the "in crowd" — volunteer! Here are just a few of the opportunities currently available through the Volunteer Center of Midland.

■ Join Midland's own answer to people helping people. Use your knowledge of basic home repairs to assist low-income elderly or disabled on Saturday, April 29. Your expertise can range from washing walls and painting to installing vinyl floors or roofing. Projects are tailored to the team's skills. Form your own team or join one now.

■ This volunteer opportunity combines golf, sun and the outdoors. Have fun and get tan while you assist a nonprofit run its fourman scramble on Friday, April 20. No golfing experience is needed. If you can't leave home, the agency also needs phone assistance contacting teams and answering questions about the tournament.

■ Help children celebrate the arts. Volunteers will be needed to staff booths in the children's festival area Saturday, May 5 and Sunday, May 6. Have fun assisting children with simple crafts and games and then join in the other festivities. Two-hour daytime shifts are waiting to be filled.

■ Something as simple as serving a hot noon meal can make all the difference. Volunteers serve and assist with clean-up at this agency that feeds the homeless daily between 11:30 and 1 p.m. This is a flexible opportunity with a minimum commitment of once a month.

For more information on how you can volunteer, please call the Volunteer Center at 697-8781.

Sporadic rains bewilder farmers

LUBBOCK, Texas (AP) — Record rainfalls in North Central Texas have made some farmers' spirits as gloomy as the weather, while growers in the rest of the state, especially South Texas, are hoping those overcast skies will travel outward and quench their crops' arid thirst.

"If the farmers in North Central Texas don't get some open weather ... they could get into a critical situation," Doug Bierstedt, head statistician for the Texas Agricultural Statistics Service in Austin, said Monday.

"Every region of the state except for the Rio Grande Valley is reporting 100 percent normal rainfall over the last three months," Bierstedt said. "But considering the drought-like conditions over the past year, that's not much improvement."

Rodney Jacques, a spokesman for the National Weather Service in Fort Worth, said Monday that North Central Texas has received 15.15 inches of rain during the first three months of 1990, breaking the previous record of 14.62 inches set in 1932.

"The rain is delaying spring crop planning in North Central Texas and parts of East Texas and they are starting to see rust in the wheat crop," Bierstedt said.

North Central Texas, also known as the Blacklands, produces about 20 percent of the state's wheat crop, said Bill Nelson, executive director of the Amarillo-based Texas Wheat Producers Association.

Rust, a disease which plagues wheat in drizzly, overcast conditions, seeps into the grain and cuts off its water supply, causing the stalk to grow crooked before dying, Nelson said.

"There is still some good wheat in there, but damage is tending to take place," he said.

While most of the state has experienced some increased rainfall over the last three months, South Texas is still experiencing arid conditions that threaten to cripple crops for another year, said Doyle Warren, a spokesman for the Texas Agricultural Extension Service based in Weslaco.

South Texas has suffered more than three years of drought "and we're not out of it yet," Warren said.

Recent rains have helped, but they're not enough, he said.

Crops, especially cotton, need moisture at least 36 inches deep in the soil to keep growing well, but in most parts of South Texas, below 18 inches it's "dry, very dry," he said.

Don Johnson, vice president of the Lubbock-based Plains Cotton Growers Inc., which represents the nation's largest cotton-producing region, said cotton farmers are expecting to rebound from last year's crop, the smallest in three years.

"Late winter and early spring rains certainly have been encouraging," Johnson said Monday. "By no means have they provided enough moisture to make us feel fat and happy, but it is something that has been badly needed."

Carl King, a spokesman for the Texas Corn Growers Association, based in Dimmitt, said it was too early to tell if the recent rains would bulk up the state's corn harvest.

"The rain is better than it has been," King said. "I wouldn't say the drought is broken yet, because there are still isolated parts of the state that are still dry. General rain all over the state would boost the crop tremendously."

Steady rains over the Blacklands during the last three months have "waterlogged the soil," cutting off oxygen to the wheat, Nelson said.

Chemical treatments of the disease have also been delayed by wet weather, Nelson said.

WALK: Trekker tackles anti-abortion issue also

(From 1B)

Robles is no tenderfoot in faith travels.

In a year's walk in 1987 and 1988, Robles hiked 8,000 miles around the continental United States in carrying his soul-saving message. He "wore out" the wooden cross. Along the way, 279 people "accepted Jesus Christ as their Savior," he said.

"I tell them that Jesus loves them, and He died on the cross for them, and if they accept Him, they will be saved," Robles said. "You can't accept Him and lead the same life that you did. If you say you're a Christian and you live like the world, you're a hypocrite."

In his earlier journey, Robles said all of his needs were met.

"God is able to supply my needs," he said. In the 1987-88 trip, Robles said he experienced "no hunger, no thirst, and I had shelter every day. I have found money in my Bible when nobody was around. And nobody ever takes my Bible."

In preparing for the 1987-88 trip, Robles said he "sold everything I owned, paid all of my bills off, left the remaining money at the altar of the church, and took a $10 check" to protect him from vagrancy charges.

While he is walking 20 to 44 miles a day on his current walk-a-thon, Robles said that God will provide for the needs of his 27-year-old wife, Regina, and their 14-month-old daughter, Damaris.

"The same God that supported me is supporting her."

Robles is walking to North Dakota because the journey will be "across" the United States, he said.

Between his two major walks, Robles moved to Texas from California and pastored the Have Faith Ministries, which recently merged with House of Prayer in Odessa. In California, he was an Echos of Faith minister.

And since he has been in Odessa, Robles has been arrested for criminal trespass by padlocking himself to abortion clinics to protest abortions.

"I believe abortion is murder," he said. "I believe it is a human being — life inside (the womb after conception.) There's too much proof to believe otherwise."

And Robles' alluded to a Texas law on committing a "crime to protect a life" as his defense for breaking the law by trespassing in his protesting abortions even if they are legal.

"My purpose is to stop abortions and to save lives," Robles said.

But Robles, who said he was "inspired by God" through prayer to carry the cross across America, said he wouldn't be staging any abortion protests along the way. To do so likely would undermine his mission and probably would sabotage his walk-a-thon.

Early into his walk, Robles said he has been harassed by hecklers.

WEST TEXAS IN BRIEF

Harris named to fire board

Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Gov. Bill Clements Monday announced the appointment of four men, including Charles Cox Harris of Midland, to the Fire Department Emergency Board for terms ending Feb. 1, 1991.

The board provides long-term or low-interest loans or other financial assistance to local fire departments. The money may be used to purchase equipment, buildings and for scholarships to better train fire fighters.

Harris, 38, general manager of C.H. Ranch Inc., will fill a public-member position on the board.

Others named to fire service positions on the board are Howard Baughman, chief of the Del Rio Fire Department; Ernest Reesing of Alpine, associate professor at Sul Ross State University; and Ray L. Williamson of Wharton, president of Sansings Supermarkets, a volunteer fire fighter and former chief of the Wharton Volunteer Fire Department.

Harris earned a bachelor's degree from Sam Houston State University and a master's degree from Angelo State University.

He has been a member of the Texas Cattle Raisers Association and the Texas Sheep and Goat Raisers Association and the American Corrections Association.

Baby presumed dead

Staff Report

COLORADO CITY — Five scuba divers from Midland remained at Lake Colorado City State Park in Mitchell County Monday assisting in the search of a 19-month-old Midland boy presumed to have drowned.

The scuba divers — from the Midland Police Department, the District Attorney's Office and the Midland County Sheriff's Department — were sent to help look for the boy, whose name has not been released, following a boating mishap on the lake Sunday, said local law enforcement officials.

The accident occurred about 5:45 p.m. after the boat began to sink and the missing boy apparently fell out, officers said.

"The boat had too many people in it and caused the bow to go down. Water rushed into it and the people started panicking," said Wendell Bryant, Mitchell County sheriff.

The Department of Parks and Wildlife game wardens were busy, along with the Mitchell County Sheriff's Department and private citizens, dragging the lake Sunday evening from 6 to 10 p.m. The search resumed at daybreak Monday, officers said.

Robber pursues clerk

Staff Report

An early Monday morning robber, brandishing a knife, chased a local convenience store clerk who ran to his truck to avoid being harmed, according to local police.

The suspect, who is still being sought by Midland police, entered the 7-Eleven store, 807 Midkiff Road, at about 5:30 a.m., displayed a knife, demanded money and asked where the safe was located, said Lt. Jerry Morris of the Midland Police Department.

The clerk ran out of the store, entered his truck, locked the doors and attempted to leave, but was unable to because the vehicle failed to start, Morris said. The robber followed the clerk and proceeded to bang on the windows.

Unable to gain access into the vehicle, the suspect departed with about $35 he had taken from the store, Morris said.

The suspect is described as a Hispanic male, approximately 25 years of age, about 5 feet 10 inches tall with slim build and weighing about 130 to 150 pounds. He has short hair with a small mustache and goatee.

STATE

Clements enlarges legislature's agenda

By Rick Brown
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — If lawmakers are unable to craft school finance legislation to Gov. Bill Clements' satisfaction by a May 1 deadline, they at least will have the chance to avert school closings.

The governor, who has pledged to veto any reforms that include new taxes, enlarged the agenda of the current special session on Monday to allow consideration of early state payments to school districts.

The governor said he remains pessimistic that lawmakers can wrap up the process by the May 1 deadline set by the Texas Supreme Court.

Meanwhile, the Texas House today is scheduled to re-open the state budget to debate in hopes of finding spending cuts that will help pay for new aid to schools.

Key lawmakers on Monday were declaring a state lottery as a source for needed revenue a dead issue, but an increase in state fees remained a viable option.

House Speaker Gib Lewis said after polling the House floor the lottery proposal comes up short of the 100 votes needed to place it on the ballot in a constitutional election. The speaker counted only 77 votes in favor of the action, he said.

Lewis said finding a school finance solution without new taxes will be "very, very difficult" and directed attention to today's budget debate as an indication of whether any will be needed.

The Legislature is attempting to find common ground on a range of education issues to satisfy an October Texas Supreme Court ruling which said the state's school finance system is unconstitutional.

A prohibition on state payments to school districts under the illegal system is one alternative poorer districts are asking the court to impose should the state miss the deadline.

While setting in motion the means for lawmakers to avert the crisis, Clements said that "no reason whatsoever" exists for the school shutdowns. "And frankly, anyone who suggests otherwise is just playing games," he said.

House Bill 102, authored by Reps. Bruce Gibson, D-Cleburne, and Harvey Hilderbran, R-Uvalde, would allow the state to make May, June, July and August payments to districts in one lump sum on April 25.

The House Research Organization has estimated the four months of payments would total about $1.6 billion. Aid for May only is estimated at $529 million.

Officials have questioned whether the state treasury holds enough money at any one time to make the four-month payment.

Districts in danger of closing generally are those with low reserve funds, or those which depend less on property taxes for operating expenses and more on state and federal aid.

UT discrimination battle not over

AUSTIN (AP) — The new student body president at the University of Texas said Monday that campus activists have just started their battle against discrimination, after last week's protest at a fraternity house whose members were accused of racist acts.

Days after that peaceful protest, UT-Austin President William Cunningham was interrupted when he tried to deal with the racial incidents through a prepared speech.

"We have been taking it to the streets. I think that we have been bringing it to the administration's attention in a way that shows they cannot placate us," said Toni Luckett, new president of the university's Student Association.

"This is definitely a form of protest that we're going to use, among others, and that's why I was elected," said Ms. Luckett, who is black.

But Larry Dubinski, president of the Interfraternity Council, said the protesters have been "showboating."

"The whites are being very alienated this week, I think," he said. "It's got to stop being a black thing. It's got to be a university thing, because it's got to be best for all the university."

For at least the second time in recent months, a crowd of about 1,000 students on Friday disrupted a statement by Cunningham on recent racial incidents at the school.

Cunningham also was interrupted by student shouts — including "UT divest" — on Jan. 15, while giving a speech on the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr.'s birthday.

Several hundred students marched last Wednesday in a protest organized by the Black Student Alliance to protest two incidents associated with a spring fraternity-sorority celebration called Round-Up.

After the march, the students gathered at the Phi Gamma Delta, or Fiji, house to protest.

The administration temporarily has suspended the two fraternities, pending an investigation. Black student leaders have called for a one-year suspension.

While students are concerned with the recent incidents, Ms. Luckett said, they want to eliminate institutional racism at the university.

"We think the way to attack the ignorance on our campus is to diversify the curriculum," she said.

Students have called on the administration to adopt a Black Student Alliance program advocating diversification of the UT curriculum and more intensive recruitment and retention programs for minority students and faculty.

Dubinski said the Interfraternity Council supports those proposals.

Blacks make up only 3 percent of the 52,000-member UT student body, and 1.8 percent of the faculty. Hispanics constitute another 11 percent of the students and 3.1 percent of the faculty.

Ms. Luckett said although racism affects everyone on campus, it is just one of the "evils" she wants to fight at UT.

"Lord knows that I won't be able to get to all of them, but I'm damn sure going to get to some of them," she said. "We're going to be dealing with real issues."

After Cunningham's speech was interrupted Friday, he held a press conference with student and community leaders to announce reforms not contained in the text of his speech.

The proposals include a re-evaluation of Round-Up by the Ex-Students' Association; hiring a race relations counselor; establishing official procedures to deal with racial harassment; and providing seminars on racial awareness.

Court rules for open records

AUSTIN (AP) — Acting on instructions from the Legislature, the Texas Supreme Court on Monday adopted rules that one court member said makes it clear that court records are open to the public, with certain closely defined exceptions.

"It makes explicit the commitment of our judicial system to openness and makes it clear that our courts, which are taxpayer-funded, are open and the records in them are presumed to be open in a way that has not been as clear as this in the past," Justice Lloyd Doggett said.

Doggett said the Supreme Court had worked toward a consensus but had resolved three troublesome proposals on the sealing of court records by 5-4 votes, including making available pretrial statements and documents if they concern public health and safety or corruption in government.

Doggett said trial judges have been routinely sealing records, especially in urban areas.

Exceptions under the "openness" proposal are provided for trade secrets and Family Code documents, Doggett said.

Morning News' intent questioned

HOUSTON (AP) — The Dallas Morning News and its parent corporation were flexing their monopoly muscles and trying to push their smaller rival Dallas Times Herald out of business with the transfer last fall of 26 syndicated features, an economist hired by the Times Herald testified Monday.

"It was done, in my view, with the knowledge that the intent was to wreck serious damage on one newspaper in the marketplace," said economist James Rosse, a Stanford University vice president and provost who specializes in the communications industry.

His testimony came as the Times Herald's $33 million antitrust lawsuit against The Morning News and its parent A.H. Belo Corp. entered a third week.

The Times Herald also is seeking unspecified punitive damages for what it contends was a monopolistic joint venture by Belo and Universal Press Syndicate. The venture, Universal Belo, stripped the Times Herald of 26 comics and columns including Doonesbury, Dear Abby and Erma Bombeck — all distributed by Kansas City-based UPS.

Rosse said his studies show The Morning News and Belo, which also publishes several suburban Dallas daily newspapers, control more than 50 percent of circulation and more than 60 percent of advertising revenues in Dallas and its six-county area.

Rosse said he believes that constituted monopoly power.

"When the market is dominated by one firm, that one large firm has the capacity to make it very difficult, essentially impossible," to compete, he said.

He said the features transfer amounted to an abuse of the monopoly power, because Belo and The Morning News knew the Dallas market situation and moved all the features "in a way to draw maximum attention."

He contended Times Herald readers who followed the departed features could react by buying The Morning News or "give up in disgust" by merely not buying. In either case, the Times Herald would be hurt.

He estimated that the Times Herald circulation, which was about 230,000 last summer, declined by 4.5 percent, or about 10,800 — worth about $415,000 a year. If that circulation isn't regained, he estimated advertising losses would amount to more than $4 million annually and net annual profits for the newspaper would fall by $2.3 million.

But under cross examination late Monday, Rosse acknowledged that his circulation loss estimates did not consider a consolidation of morning and afternoon Times Herald distributors.

Morning News attorney Harry Reasoner said that consolidation contributed to service problems cited in 40 percent of the cancellations.

Rosse said he also was unaware of the effect of a "cleaning up" of circulation lists because of an audit and a readership drop due to the poor performance of the Dallas Cowboys football team.

DALLAS (AP) — Defense attorneys and prosecutors picked a white jury Monday to decide the murder trial of a white former Houston police officer accused of killing a black woman after a 12-mile freeway chase.

Despite outcries from black protesters and civil rights groups, prosecutors say the case has nothing to do with race, so the racial content of the jury isn't important. Eight women and four men were picked.

"The State of Texas is very happy with the jury," said Don Smyth, assistant Harris County district attorney.

Family members of the dead woman, Ida Lee Delaney, felt otherwise, as the trial, which was moved from Houston because of publicity, got under way.

"They could have gotten that jury makeup in Houston. I don't even know why they came to Dallas to do this," said Ada Edwards, one of the organizers of the Ida Lee Delaney/Byron Gillum Justice Committee which came to watch to trial.

Gonzales, 25, is accused of killing Mrs. Delaney, 50, last fall while he was off-duty. Mrs. Delaney and Gillum, 24, both black, were fatally shot within two weeks of each other last fall by city police officers. The officer suspected of shooting Gillum was not indicted.

TV profile leads to DJ's arrest

Associated Press

A former disc jockey wanted for bigamy in Virginia was arrested in Houston when the sister of his newest wife saw his case profiled on television and turned him in, authorities said Monday.

Frank Van Dyke Hobbs, 53, and Maria Salazar, 41, a nurse he married three weeks ago, were on their way back to Houston from the beach in Galveston Sunday when his sister-in-law was home watching "America's Most Wanted."

Lena Garcia called the Fox network television station in Washington and said Hobbs was living in her home with her widowed sister under the alias "Hamilton Van Hobbs."

Sam's BBQ: All you can eat nightly, professional catering

Eat all the delicious barbeque and trimmings that you want each evening at Sam's Barbeque, 1113 E. Scharbauer. From five to nine p.m. Monday through Friday and all day long Saturday and Sunday, an array of mesquite cooked meats are available for just $6.95.

Sam's Barbeque, well-known for the last eight years for its fine food and catering, is located at the corner of Lamesa Road and Scharbauer.

When you try the all-you-can-eat dinner, no doubt you'll have a hard time choosing from the selections. Be sure to sample some of everything — pork ribs, sliced beef, barbeque chicken and homemade beef sausage.

Top your entree with Sam's famous barbeque sauce — thick, delicious and homemade. The sauce has been a trademark of owner Lee Hammond's family for generations.

To complement the all-you-can-eat meal, Sam's serves up some tasty trimmings. Try the pinto beans cooked in old fashioned salt jowls, the fresh potato salad made with a special old homestyle recipe, assorted relishes and thick Texas toast.

Not included in the price of the all-you-can-eat dinner, but worth saving some room for is a bowl of delicious cherry or peach cobbler.

Drinks are additional, and Sam's Barbeque offers a fine selection of domestic beers, Sutter Home wines and soft drinks.

Regular menu items as well as the daily specials are available in the evenings.

When dining at Sam's Barbeque, you will be in good company. A recent write up in Texas Monthly issued a rave review for the specialties of the house.

"Abandon hope, all vegetarians who enter here," said the writer. "The rest of us, however, will be in carnivore's heaven as we sample the perfectly turned out pork ribs and chicken quarters...The homemade sausage — all beef and hand stuffed in old fashioned casings — is definitive — the best we've had."

Owner Lee Hammond stressed the friendly, personable service Midlanders have come to expect from Sam's.

Combine the friendly service with the great food and put it with a special event and you have a catering service that's second to none. No number is too large or too small for receptions, oil company functions, church groups, picnics — all occasions that barbeque will fit in.

A typical turnkey catering job includes three meats with all of the trimmings and drinks. Desserts are optional. Plates, plasticware, cups, ices and buffet line tables are all provided.

For an estimate, call 682-1082.

Sam's Barbeque serves continuously from 11 a.m. to 9 p.m. and even those who do not care for barbeque will find something to enjoy throughout the serving day.

Fried chicken, farm-raised grain-fed fried catfish, chili, stews and hamburgers for kids as well as adults are all available.

- Mondays — sliced beef — $4.50
- Tuesdays — ribs — $4.50
- Wednesdays — sausage — $4.50
- Thursdays — barbeque chicken — $4.50

Lewellen Construction Co. offers experience, dependability

Lewellen Construction Company customer Jonnie Foreman, right and Joan Lewellen inspect some Lewellen Construction home improvements added onto the Foreman home.

As the spring home improvement season gets underway, new companies will appear on the scene. Some are reputable, some are not. Like a local insurance agent and television personality says, Joan and Bill Lewellen, owners of Lewellen Construction Company, also say, "We've been here and we'll be here."

"We have specialized since 1976 in the siding and window business," said Joan. "We know siding installation and we know which products will do best in this area."

That experience is something you can count on, as did Midlanders Jonnie and Phillip Foreman.

Owners of a nearly 70-year-old wood home for the past 27 years, they only knew too well about the inconvenience of painting and the frustration from sun damage. "It's a losing battle," said Mrs. Foreman.

They replaced the siding and all of the windows, after thinking about doing it for several years. "My husband thought that adding steel siding would change the appearance of our home," she recalled. "People who drive by have not even noticed the change to steel siding; the just think that we have painted again."

They were fortunate to find that Lewellen Construction Company had a brand of steel siding with a color to exactly match the color of paint they already had.

Mrs. Foreman was also pleased to report that their siding has received no hail damage.

The Foremans replaced all of the home's original wood windows, which were all different sizes. "We kept repairing and reglazing them," said Mrs. Foreman. "We were also concerned that replacing the windows would change the appearance." Lewellen Construction Company gave them exactly what they wanted — custom windows.

In addition, the replacement double glass windows have proven to be easier to clean. The window tilts back and she doesn't have to remove the screen. She can clean the windows from the inside.

"We had other companies approach us and were leary of them, especially the out of town ones. We were looking for a local, experienced company. A friend recommended Lewellen Construction Company," noted Mrs. Foreman.

"This was the best investment we've ever made for home improvements. We'll never make a better decision."

Joan and Bill Lewellen strive to bring West Texas homeowners the kind of materials and workmanship available only from a contractor whose goals and ideals are to produce the best.

Lewellen Construction Company offers exacting standards on all installation. Workmanship is guaranteed for ten years and all work is supervised to insure quality control.

Lewellen Construction Company specializes in:

- Steel siding and trim
- Soffit and fascia (roof overhang)
- Storm windows and doors
- Replacement windows — metal and vinyl
- Steel replacement doors
- Patio covers and carports
- Room enclosures
- Rain gutters

Joan and Bill have recently added a new product, especially for those who live in mobile and modular homes and are tired of continual problems with roof maintenance and excessive heat in the summer.

You can put a stop to roof leaks while you insulate at the same time with Solar Cap® Insulated Roof Over System. Call Lewellen Construction Company today and enjoy the year-round benefits of the Solar Cap.

- No roof maintenance
- Reduced rain and wind noise
- Lowers utility bills
- Beautifies your home

You can count on the Lewellens and their professional craftsmen. "Our value is built on your satisfaction," said Bill. "You have my personal pledge that we will stand behind the quality of our materials, and the integrity of our workmanship for as long as necessary to assure your continued satisfaction."

Call Lewellen Construction Company at 563-4520 or 686-8007 today for more information on valuable home improvements.

No more identity crisis: Tell your story on Business & Industry pages

Ever wished you could see your company's name in the headlines? Every business has a story to tell and yours can too!

The Business and Industry pages, published each Tuesday in the Midland Reporter-Telegram, give you the perfect opportunity to tell your story.

The Business and Industry pages offer advertisers a unique format. The articles and pictures on the pages let readers know what various businesses have to offer.

The pages are not just for one type of business. In fact, the pages feature consumer businesses, as well as commercially-oriented companies.

What's really amazing is that your business can be on these pages for a remarkably reasonable rate. Prices for ads start at just $19.58 (gross) per week.

Ads on this page are set up on a contract basis. The number of articles and pictures an advertiser gets is determined by the size of the ad that is run each week on the pages.

The advertiser pays only for the ad, thereby spreading the cost out over a 13 or 26 week period.

Advertisers do not have to worry about writing the articles or taking the pictures themselves. Janice Ford, the Midland Reporter-Telegram's advertising feature writer, that will take care of that.

When possible your articles will be coordinated with special events, such as grand openings and seasonal sales.

To put your business in the headlines of the Business and Industry pages, call 682-5311, ext. 120.

By Linda Anderson

When it comes to cooking, forget "kinder and gentler," and go straight for the "quick and easy." And if it's nutritious too, so much the better.

Anderson

Evidently that's what the folks at Del Monte had in mind when they developed their new line of Vegetable Classics side dishes, which are vegetable combinations in a "microwave ready" container.

The product comes in several flavor combinations — some with corn as the main ingredient, others with potatoes — but the two we sampled for taste, price and advertising accuracy were Vegetables Dijon (green beans, potatoes and carrots) and Country Green Beans (green beans, potatoes and mushrooms).

One unique thing about this product is its packaging — according to label information, the veggies are "sealed in a heat and serve tray with our unique plastic lid and cooked to perfection in a process much like putting up home preserves. This allows Vegetable Classics to store on the cupboard shelf without preservatives. Just zip open the box, puncture the plastic lid, heat in the microwave for three minutes and serve. No added steps, no messy clean up. And you get classic Del Monte quality in no time at all." In other words, these vegetable dishes aren't canned or frozen, but are prepared in a different way.

Each of the varieties we tried cost $1.69. Each is supposed to be tasty and low-calorie. (The Vegetables Dijon label claims it is made from "Blue Lake Green Beans, Potatoes and Carrots in a Grey Poupon Dijon Mustard Sauce," and the Country Green Beans are supposed to be "Blue Lake Green Beans, Potatoes and Mushrooms in a Lightly Seasoned Sauce.") Each has nutrient information on the end of its box, but it just happens to be the end where you zip open the package, so if you don't look quick, it's gone.

Both are advertised to have "No Preservatives Added" and be a "Source of Fiber." Calorie counts for both are low, too. A 9½-ounce box of the country-style contains less than 200 calories, and the same-size box of the dijon-style has less than 250 calories.

In the taste-test, I couldn't get either young taste-tester to so much as dip her fork into either variety, so I was the official taster. The Country Green Beans tasted a lot like the ones my grandmother used to make, but the Vegetables Dijon ended up in the trash. (I guess I'm not too crazy about a Grey Poupon dijon mustard sauce.)

It seems to me that these particular combinations of vegetables wouldn't be that hard to put together yourself — and for a lot less. Cans of green beans and corn and bags of potatoes don't cost that much, and you could season them to your own taste.

You can even zap them in the microwave, if you want to. Not a bad deal. Tastier, too.

Pair of videos for cat, dog lovers

By Paul Taublieb
Copley News Service

Ever thought about owning a dog or cat? I'm allergic to both, so I have to admit I couldn't care less. Still, no doubt there are a lot of you who've wondered what's involved in owning one of these creatures, and now there's a pair of videos to help you out. They're also ideal for pet owners who want to learn more about the care of their cute little charges.

The tapes, hosted by effervescent "Golden Girl" and noted animal lover Rue McClanahan, are "The Dog Care Guide" and "The Cat Care Guide" (M.R.S. Enterprises, $29.95 each).

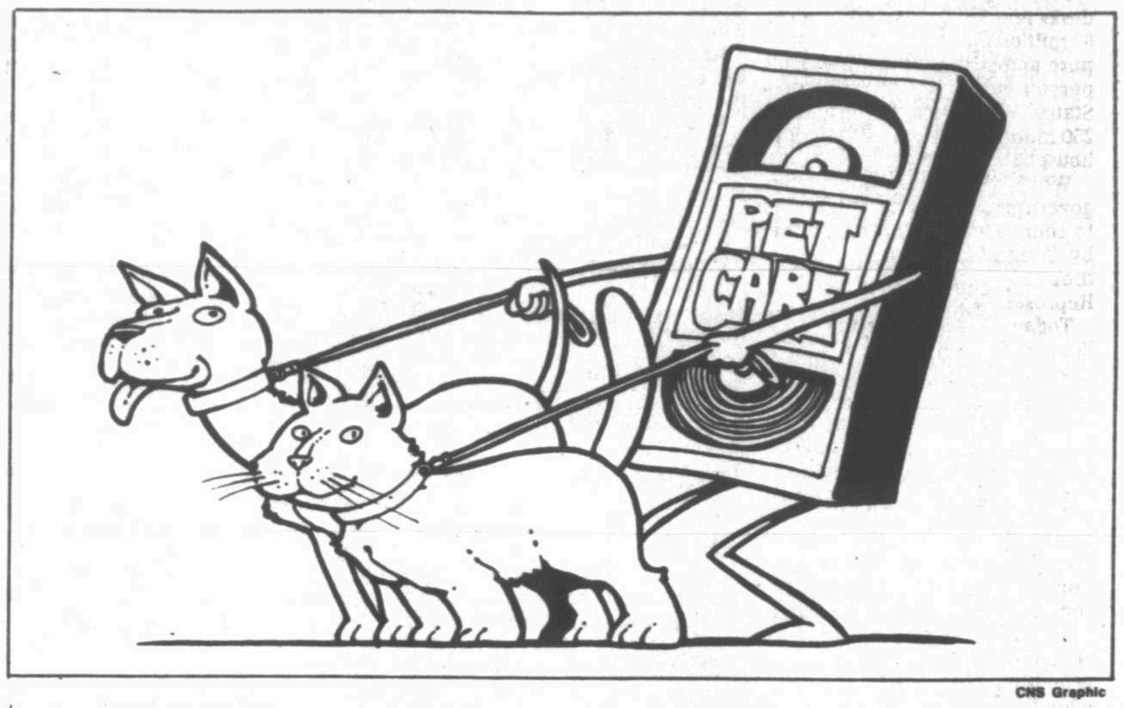
"I've always had at least one pet and usually more," says McClanahan, who does an able job in getting across information about adopting or buying a dog or cat, feeding your animal and taking care of your pet.

MORE WHO

The longest-running science-fiction broadcast in history is "Doctor Who." It has an audience of 110 million viewers in 60 countries worldwide. In the United States alone, there are 56,000 fan club members who attend 75 conventions a year.

While it is possible some of these folks have a rather weak personal life, they are clearly a devoted audience. And these devotees — as well as anyone curious as to what the hubbub's all about — will be happy to learn that Playhouse Video is adding three feature-length titles to its "Doctor Who" collection.

Available for the first time on video are "Seeds of Death," "Death to the Daleks" and "Talons of Weng-Chaing." All retail for $19.98. They join earlier releases "The Five Doctors," "The Deadly Assassin," "Revenge of the Cybermen," "Brain of Dr. Morbius," "Pyramids of Mars" and "Robot of Death," which are already available for the home market.



CNS Graphic

EPIC CLASSICS

Do you like your movies the old-fashioned way — big and splashy? Then you'll be happy to hear about CBS/Fox's new promotion, "Classic Films of Epic Proportions."

Released now in advance of Easter, these eight titles, including three making their home-video debut, are available for $29.98 each.

They include the already released (but repriced for this promotion) "The Bible," a spectacular about the creation of man starring Richard Harris, Peter O'Toole, Stephen Boyd, Ava Gardner and John Huston; "Cleopatra," featuring Elizabeth Taylor, Richard Burton and Rex Harrison in what might be the most expensive film ever made; and "Moses," starring Burt Lancaster, who parts the Red Sea.

Also in this collection are "The Robe" and "The Agony and the Ecstasy," and making their first appearance on home video, "The Keys of the Kingdom," "A Man Called Peter" and "The Story of Ruth."

VID BITS

"Erik the Viking" (Orion, $89.98) — I can see why this Monty Python-ish tale about a Viking — played wonderfully by Tim Robbins — who's reluctant to rape and pillage, bombed in the box office: It's too sophisticated and not gross enough for the average Python fan. Yes, there's plenty of goofy humor — but this is also a sweet, intelligent film. It may go a little daft at the end, but is completely delightful along the way. (Good)

DEAR ABBY

Census countdown still running

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: The largest peacetime operation undertaken by the government is upon us — the 21st Decennial Census.

Van Buren

The Census Bureau has hired 480,000 people, rented almost 5 million square feet of office space, is using 68,000 cardboard desks and will sharpen more than 9 million pencils. The mission, pure and simple, is to count every person residing in the United States. We expect to count about 250 million people and 106 million households.

Why? Why does the federal government go to all the trouble to count everyone? Because the task was mandated by Congress in 1790 for the purpose of apportionment — representation in the U.S. House of Representatives.

Today, it is used for that and for distributing billions of federal dollars a year to local projects and agencies. Nutrition programs, day care centers and transportation systems are a few.

Many times individuals don't realize programs and services they use are funded by the federal government based on census results. Therefore, it is to everyone's benefit to answer the census.

An individual's answers on the questionnaire are completely confidential. The information will not be given to the IRS, INS (Immigration and Naturalization Service), FBI or anyone else. Only aggregate, or compiled, figures will be available for public use.

So, Abby, please urge your readers to answer the census questionnaire accurately and return it promptly. For every 1 percent of the U.S. population who did not return the questionnaires by April 1, it will cost the taxpayers $10 million. However, if for some reason it was not possible to return the questionnaires by April 1, there is a grace period of three weeks! — MARVIN L. POSTMA, REGIONAL DIRECTOR, CENSUS BUREAU, KANSAS CITY, MO.

DEAR MR. POSTMA: Although it may seem too late to be discussing the census, you make some excellent points. Thank you for a wealth of information concerning census taking, the assurance of confidentiality and the importance of being prompt.

Readers, if you haven't yet mailed in your census form, there's still time. Stand up and be counted!

DEAR ABBY: We know that you are always trying to encourage kids to read more. We are fourth- and fifth-grade students in a special education program. Our teachers, Miss Eschen and Mrs. Gordon, are teaching us to read and learn about the world around us. We are also learning about the various occupations of people all over the United States and Canada.

If you would print this in your column, asking your readers to send us a picture postcard from their great cities and tell us their occupations, it would help us to learn to read and to learn more about our neighbors.

We will read the postcards and find the cities on the map. By the end of the year, we hope to have a whole wall covered with postcards. I know this will help us to become better readers.

It would be nice if your readers could pick a name from the list of kids in our class and send one of us a picture postcard showing the city it came from. Thank you very much. — JEFF, JAIME, JARED, THIETRA, JUSTIN, SAM, MICAH, DUSTIN, OMAR, DESIREE, ALEX, LUIS AND KARL

DEAR STUDENTS: You and your teachers are to be congratulated for a very imaginative technique to encourage reading and to learn more about the great cities around us.

Readers may write to the children in care of Patterson School, 400 E. Patterson Road, Santa Maria, Calif. 93455.

DEAR ABBY: "Nobody's Valentine" reminded me of my own situation — only the occasion was Mother's Day:

I became a mother for the first time in July 1987. Before Mother's Day in 1988, my husband and I talked about what to do for his mother weeks ahead of time. (My mom is deceased.)

The day before Mother's Day, we bought his mother a beautiful gift and card, and he never said one word to me until that evening, then he said he forgot to get me a Mother's Day gift because he didn't think of me as a mother!

Which one of us was pregnant for nine months, went through labor and delivery, does most of the child care for our daughter, buys the food and clothes, gets up during the night and has a full-time job?

His insensitivity is just one of the many reasons he is soon to be my ex-husband. — INVISIBLE MOTHER

People are eating them up! To order your copy of Abby's favorite recipes, send a long, business-size, self-addressed envelope, plus check or money order for $3.95 ($4.50 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, Cookbooklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054.

AT WIT'S END

Term papers are mother's terror

By Erma Bombeck

My fan mail is separated into four piles and answered according to its urgency. The last stack to get answered are letters telling me to take a hike to a war zone. These are real depressing. Just above them are letters reacting favorably to something I have written, which I want to savor like dessert. Letters with the return address of a law office printed in the upper lefthand corner get ripped open and handled just after the No. 1 priority: kids doing term papers.

Bombeck

The moment I see the youthful handwriting, I know in my heart that the kid sat down last January and wrote the letter requesting answers to his questions. Then he carried it around in his gym bag until a few days ago when he sent it to my syndicate in Kansas City. In his mind, I sleep on a cot in the office next to a typewriter and will rush back the answers by personal courier.

My concern for the requests is a knee-jerk reaction. It goes back to the years I spent with my own children. I could start the day like a normal housewife, getting breakfast for my husband and three children with the calm of Donna Reed on Valium. Then one of the kids would open a notebook at the table and say, "Mom, tell me everything you know about the history of soybeans," and I would turn into a statue of terror. I knew instinctively he was tackling a three-month research project (complete with footnotes and bibliography) due by 10 a.m.

Now here's the crazy part. Any self-respecting mother would say, "Don't come to me with your problem. You're going to fail English and not get out of school until you're 35. You want oatmeal or eggs?"

Not me. I ran around like a madwoman digging out old books, going through the garbage for newspapers in pursuit of the life of Amelia Earhart, the influence of Kabuki theater on the Western world, the day-by-day construction of the Panama Canal and the inventions of Thomas Jefferson. You'd have thought I was a contestant on "Jeopardy" trying to beat the buzzer. It's probably mothers like me who perpetuated the raw optimism that pervades young society today.

On behalf of all these unfortunate mothers who can't sit by and watch their kids take eight years to finish high school, allow me to offer a solution. If your child is doing a term paper on my career, let me make it easy for you. (1) How much money do I make? A: Not enough. (2) Where do I get my ideas? A: I live them. (3) How long does it take me to write a column? A: It depends on how many kids interrupt me for a term paper.

The tropical evergreen Macadamia tree is a native of this country. The nuts it produces are rich in oil and have a sweet flavor similar to that of Brazil nuts. They are known here as Queensland nuts.

N.Y. Times News Service

In stride with the revolution created by facsimile machines, the U.S. Postal Service says it is going to install self-service, credit card-operated fax terminals in 209 post offices across the country over the next few months.

Fifty-four postal locations in the Northeast already have "FaxMail" terminals as part of an experiment that began last November.

About one-third of American businesses and fewer than 1 percent of American households have fax machines, said Edd Helms, chairman of the Miami-based Hotelecopy Inc.

Hotelcopy was awarded the contract to develop, install and maintain the 263 post office terminals using MCI long-distance service. It already has fax machines in 2,000 hotels in 900 cities.

If the one-year pilot program proves successful, postal officials say that depending on customer demand, fax terminals will be added to many of the 40,000 post offices in the United States.

Several post offices in rural Pennsylvania will also be tested.

Unlike most fax machines, in which documents are fed into a chamber, the postal fax terminal transmits papers on a flat surface without taking them in, a feature postal officials say is important to those concerned about privacy and damage to documents.

Documents may be sent or received 24 hours a day and there is no additional cost for overseas transmittals.

A three-minute transmission will cost $8.50, about the time it takes to send six pages.

Each additional minute will cost $1.50. Visa, Mastercard and American Express can be used, but cash cannot.

Gas container explodes, killing up to 80 on train

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — A leaking gas cylinder exploded in a moving commuter train on Monday and set off a fire that left at least 80 people dead and 65 others wounded, news reports and officials said.

Reporters at the scene said the explosion and fire killed at least 100 people.

Fire swept through two of the train's 16 cars as it traveled near Kumrahar in Bihar state, 500 miles southeast of New Delhi. The fire began at 9:30 a.m.

Firefighters eventually extinguished the blaze, but "The heat was so intense no one dared to enter the train for at least a half-hour after the fire," said S.K. Sharma, the top civil administrator in the region.

Sharma said a cylinder of oxy-acetylene gas, used in welding, was found in one of the gutted cars.

"The outer shell of the bogies (cars) was intact, but the inside was terrible," Sharma said in a telephone interview.

Mathew John, the director of safety for the Federal Railway Board in New Delhi, said two cylinders of gas caught fire. He said one of the cylinders was leaking

Ram Naresh Singh, a survivor, was quoted by Press Trust of India as saying that because "I would not be able to save anyone and would get killed myself, I jumped off the train."

The United News of India quoted local officials as saying at least 80 people died and 65 were wounded.

The Passengers Welfare Association said the train had no emergency brake.

Lithuania wants Kremlin meeting

Satellite wants Moscow to provide details of threatened sanctions

MOSCOW (AP) — Lithuania on Monday asked Mikhail S. Gorbachev to meet with the republic's president to provide details of Moscow's threatened economic sanctions so that Lithuanians can be prepared.

It would be Gorbachev's first meeting with Lithuanian President Vytautas Landsbergis, who was elected after the republic declared itself independent March 11.

In a telegram to the Soviet president, Lithuanian Prime Minister Kazimieras Prunskiene said Lithuania wants to explain to its people just what difficulties they might face if they ignore an ultimatum Gorbachev issued Friday.

He gave Lithuania 48 hours to rescind some of its pro-independence laws or face a cutoff of products the Kremlin supplies. Gorbachev did not say which items would be stopped, but Lithuania is dependent on the Kremlin for such crucial supplies as oil, gas, machinery, raw materials, chemicals and automobiles.

Prunskiene's telegram said broad economic sanctions would damage the Soviet economy as well as Lithuania's. She suggested the best way to clarify the threat would be in a meeting in Moscow with a Lithuanian delegation, headed by Landsbergis.

There was no immediate response from the Soviet president.

Another Lithuanian leader was quoted as saying the republic would be willing to pay hard currency for Soviet goods but would expect Moscow to do the same for items Lithuania exports.

Vilnius Radio quoted Prunskiene as saying Lithuanian leaders decided that "until we see definite physical measures against Lithuania's industry and economy, all contractual obligations to the U.S.S.R. must continue to be carried out by all our enterprises, so there should be no pretext for possible disruption of supplies by the Soviet Union."

The telegram was sent to Gorbachev after an emergency meeting of the Lithuanian Presidium — the leadership of the legislature — Monday afternoon.

Journalist Vilius Kavaliauskas, who spoke to a Presidium member after its meeting, said the leadership was told the republic has just two weeks' supply of natural gas and six weeks' supply of oil.

It has only enough newsprint to publish Lithuania's newspapers for four or five days, he said.

Lithuania receives all its oil and gas from the Soviet Union at prices just a fraction of those on the world market. The small Baltic republic has very little foreign currency to buy fuel from the West.

Some economic sanctions against Lithuania could backfire on the Soviet Union, Kavaliauskas quoted the official as saying. For example:

—If Moscow cut off chemical fertilizers for Lithuania, it would mean less meat and dairy products for the rest of the Soviet Union.

—If a natural gas pipeline were shut down, the Russian district of Kaliningrad, which also relies on the line, would be hurt.

—A cutoff of supplies for the Drob textile mill would disrupt deliveries to a Leningrad factory that employs more than 18,000 people.

Kavaliauskas said the Presidium member told him: "If Moscow will ask us to pay for goods in hard currency, we will agree. But we will ask for hard currency from Moscow for our products, and in balance, it's not so bad for us."

Deputy Prime Minister Algirdas Brazauskas told Vilnius Radio that "political decisions" about Gorbachev's ultimatum would be made Tuesday by Lithuania's parliament.

Vilnius, the Lithuanian capital, was quiet Monday as the predominantly Roman Catholic republic celebrated the final day of a three-day Easter weekend. Most factories and businesses were closed, according to a worker in the information office of the Supreme Council.

Romualdas Ozolas, Lithuania's deputy prime minister, went on Lithuanian television and told the republic's 3.8 million people to brace for a "hectic" week as Gorbachev's deadline expired Sunday night.

Ozolas said another pro-independence Baltic republic, Estonia, would name an ambassador to Lithuania and that Lithuania would reciprocate, according to Aidas Palubinskas of the Lithuanian Parliament's information office.

Estonia's permanent representative in Lithuania is Mart Tarmak, a member of the leadership of Estonia's Popular Front, said Harri Tiido of Estonian Radio. Tarmak was appointed to the post last week by the republic's Supreme Soviet, Tiido said in a telephone interview.

Palubinskas noted that previous demands for Lithuania to revoke its March 11 declaration of independence seem to have been dropped from Gorbachev's ultimatum threatening economic sanctions. He said that would permit more practical discussions.

Gorbachev said Friday that Lithuania's leaders must rescind "anti-constitutional" actions.

In earlier orders, Gorbachev specifically demanded a withdrawal of the independence declaration. Landsbergis repeatedly has said Lithuania would not do that.

Since Lithuania declared its independence, the Kremlin has alternated between threats and conciliatory statements. Soviet troops have occupied some buildings in Vilnius, and conscripts who refused to serve in the Red Army have been seized. Some were beaten.

London concert honoring Mandela attracts crowd of 72,000 people

LONDON (AP) — A sellout crowd of 72,000 people danced, sang and chanted "Mandela is free!" at a televised rock concert Monday night honoring Nelson Mandela and his fight to end apartheid in South Africa.

Mandela and his wife, Winnie, arrived at Wembley Stadium about an hour after the concert started, beaming and waving their fists in the air as the crowd cheered. They were joined in the stadium's executive box by Adelaide Tambo, wife of African National Congress President Oliver Tambo. Tambo is recovering from a stroke in Sweden.

The 71-year-old Mandela, deputy president of the ANC, flew to London on Sunday for the concert. It is the first major international event addressed by the black leader since he was released Feb. 11 after 27 years in a South African prison.

Waving their fists in the air and clapping their hands, anti-apartheid supporters and rock 'n' roll fans filled the stadium's wet playing field and most of the stands. A huge banner across the stage read: "The Struggle Is My Life," the title of a book of Mandela's writings and speeches.

There was a brief shower before the concert began but the sun broke through as Britain's top reggae group, Aswad, opened the five-hour concert by leading the crowd in chanting "Mandela is free!"

The lineup also featured Grammy Award-winner Bonnie Raitt, Neil Young, Simple Minds, Soul II Soul, the Neville Brothers, Simple Minds, Peter Gabriel, Anita Baker, Tracy Chapman, Miriam Makeba and Oscar-winning actor Denzel Washington. He played murdered black activist Steve Biko in the film "Cry Freedom."

While Jackson Browne and Johnny Clegg were singing "One Man, One Vote" on stage, Mandela told reporters: "Twenty-seven years ago when I went to jail I had no vote. I have come out and I still have no vote."

He said he came here "in order to speak to the entire world and urge them to maintain pressure and sanctions for dismantling of apartheid.

"The struggle against apartheid is not only being conducted in South Africa. It is a matter of international concern."

Mandela, wearing a navy blue suit and a tie striped in the black green and yellow colors of the ANC, said concerts such as this one were important for raising world awareness.

"I think artists can play a very decisive role in the fight for human rights. Artists can reach quarters not necessarily interested in politics through music, which interests everybody, so that the message can go further than we politicians can push it."

"He is in good health. His vision is clear, his objectives are clear and he's gaining world support. There will be a billion people watching this. No leader on Earth commands that kind of respect and attention in the world today," Jackson said.

Speaking before the largest audience he has addressed since his release, Mandela called for a worldwide continuation of the fight against apartheid, which denies South Africa's black majority a voice in national affairs.

"The apartheid crime against humanity remains in place. It continues to kill and maim. It continues to oppress and exploit," Mandela said.

'Dogs begin spring training

■ MHS football coach Davis Corley has his eye on quarterbacks and offensive linemen as Bulldog spring training drills begin today.

By Terry Williamson
Sports Editor

Midland High head football coach Davis Corley sends his second Bulldog edition to the practice field today at 3:45 p.m. for the start of three weeks of spring training drills and he wants two big questions answered.

"The two major things we face in spring training is finding a quarterback and some offensive linemen who want to play," says Corley. "We have a couple of kids at quarterback to look at, and we've got some good offensive linemen returning from last year, but we just don't have any depth. We've got to find some players."

Jesse Arenivas, who started on the Bullpup junior varsity team last year, will get a long look as will converted running back/cornerback David Worley.

In the offensive line, the building blocks are in place with the likes of guard Joe Phillips, guard Mark Monroe, tackle Mike Farris and center Marcus Heredia, all of whom either started last year or got a lot of playing time. And all are seniors. It is the backup positions that Corley is looking for.

"Our major weakness is depth. It looks like we may have to play a lot of kids both ways (offense and defense) this year unless we can get some of the young kids to come through for us.

"We didn't have enough players last year to field a sophomore team, but we're going to do that this year, even if it means keeping the varsity numbers down a little."

Other than quarterback, Corley will have some experienced skill people to work with since running backs Major Williams, Brent Noisette, James Lee and Worley all return. That's over 700 yards of offense, led by Lee's 331 yards last year on 60 carries.

"Our overall team speed should be better and I think we will be better overall defensively than last year, but that still has to be proven. The defensive players need to have a big spring," said Corley.

The Bulldogs return starting linebackers Ray Leyba and Larry Tompkins while Matt Wyatt and Mike Morse both had playing time at defensive end. Phillips, Monroe, Farris and Heredia all had defensive time in the line as well while Noisette, Williams, Lee, Worley and Brandon Oden have secondary experience.

But that's too many names to mention on both sides of the ball for Corley's liking, so he will be looking hard for others to step in and take a spot.

Tompkins will get a look at tight end and Oden, who was honorable mention All-District, returns at wide receiver. Oden led all Bulldog receivers last year with 26 catches for 389 yards and three touchdowns.

"Oden had a great year catching the football last year, but he isn't going to do us much good if we don't have a quarterback to get the ball to him," said Corley. "Finding a quarterback is a must."

The Bulldogs will get to show what they learned over three weeks on May 7 when they stage the annual Bill Mims scrimmage game at 7 p.m.

Bordin, Mota roll at Boston

■ Gelindo Bordin and Rosa Mota make history in Boston Marathon.

BOSTON (AP) — Olympic champions Gelindo Bordin and Rosa Mota both made history Monday by becoming Boston Marathon champions.

Bordin won the men's marathon, becoming the first Italian and first Olympic champion to accomplish the feat. Mota, of Portgual, ran away with the women's race for her record-setting third Boston Marathon victory.

The 31-year-old Bordin did what nine other men's Olympic champions failed to do by overtaking Tanzania's Juma Ikangaa at Heartbreak Hill and winning in 2 hours, 8 minutes and 19 seconds. It broke the Italian mark of 2:09:27 Bordin set in finishing fourth at Boston in 1988.

"It is not easy being an Olympic champion," Bordin said. "For three or four months, I couldn't move without people stopping me — at a restaurant, on the road, everywhere. If I didn't go, I hurt the sport."

He's about to become even more well-known. The race was broadcast live in Italy, with the announcers screaming as Bordin covered the final yards.

"Gelindo's victory on the streets of Boston brought back for me the emotions of the Olympic Games in Seoul, emotions which I thought couldn't be repeated," Gianni Gola, president of the Italian Track Federation, said. "But today the emotions were even more intense."

For Ikangaa, it was another heartbreaking defeat. It was the third straight time he has finished second at Boston. Ikangaa, a one-second loser to Kenya's Ibrahim Hussein in '88 and beaten by 50 seconds by Abebe Mekonnen of Ethiopia last year, finished 1:33 behind Bordin, in 2:09:52.

Gelindo Bordin of Italy breaks the tape as he crosses the finish line Monday to win the Boston Marathon in a time of 2 hours, 8 minutes and 17 seconds. The time was short of the record.

Rolando Vera of Ecuador was third in his marathon debut in 2:10:46, a South American record.

Mota, who also won at Boston in 1987 and 1988, led the women's division the entire way, finishing in 2:25:24. Her other winning times were 2:25:21 in 1987 and 2:24:30 in '88.

Mota finished 42nd overall and beat runner-up Uta Pippig of West Germany by nearly three minutes. Pippig finished in 2:28:03, while Maria Trujillo of Mexico was third in 2:28:53.

In the Masters division, 41-year-old John Campbell of New Zealand smashed the Masters world best, clocking 2:11:04 and finished fourth overall. Campbell, sixth in 1988 and fifth last year, erased the mark of 2:11:10 set by New Zealand's Jack Fultz in 1974.

World bests also fell in the men's and women's wheelchair divisions.

Mustafa Badid, 24, of France took more than six minutes off the previous men's mark, winning in 1:29:53. The first eight finishers also went under the mark of 1:36:04 set by Philippe Couprie of France last year at Boston.

Be sure to catch Ryan's victory tour

■ Texas' Nolan Ryan is on the way to 300 victories, making him a major baseball attraction.

NEW YORK (AP) — If the chance comes up this season, make sure to catch Nolan Ryan's victory tour.

Ryan is on the road to 300 career wins and he stopped at Yankee Stadium over the weekend to pick up No. 291. After a homestand in Arlington, his next stops are Kansas City, Chicago and Cleveland.

Watching Nolan Ryan pitch a baseball game is like going to a museum to see a Van Gogh, or to the concert hall to hear a Mozart symphony.

First, Ryan catches your senses and then your breath.

He has pitched in four decades, and each of his 42 major-league records seem to have a story to tell.

The 43-year-old Ryan has pitched a record five no-hitters, yet none may have been his best game.

"I still think one of the best games I ever pitched was against Boston," Ryan said. "I retired the last 26 hitters in a row.

"I led the game off with a walk, struck somebody out, and then Carl Yastrzemski hit a ground ball through the hole between short and third."

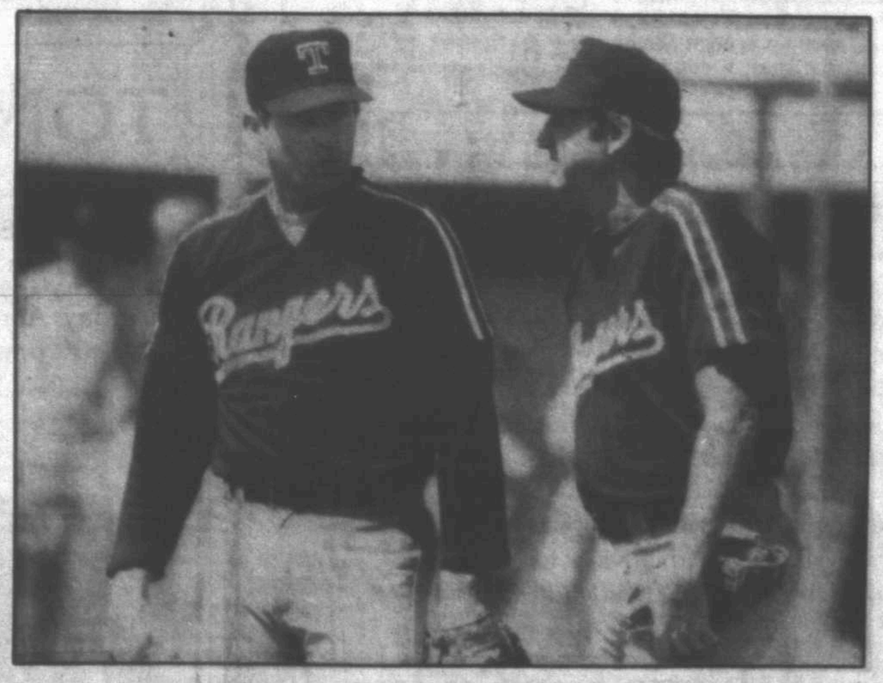
He has struck out 44 MVP winners and 19 Hall of Famers with more to come.

Ryan has also fanned Bobby and Barry Bonds and Ken Griffey and Ken Jr. He also struck out brothers Jesus, Felipe and Matty Alou.



AP Laserphoto

His last appearance at Yankee Stadium prior to Saturday was July 25, 1979, and that had a story, too.

"I hurt myself in the first inning," Ryan recalled. "I struck out two and hurt my elbow on a pitch to Reggie Jackson and that was my last pitch."

Ryan's marquee numbers are easy. He is the all-time strikeout leader with 5,084 and nine wins short of the magic 300 mark. Next on the strikeout list is Steve Carlton with 4,136.

To put it in perspective, for a pitcher starting out to reach Ryan's totals he would have to average 20 wins and 339 strikeouts for 15 seasons.

The word of Ryan's 99-mph heat hit in 1966 when he struck out 272 batters in 183 innings while going 17-2 for Greenville, a New York Mets farm club.

But he couldn't find his control with the Mets, walking 344 in 510 innings over parts of five seasons, and kept putting his blistered fingers in pickle brine. But Ryan did save a game in the 1969 World Series against Baltimore, his only championship ring.

The Mets traded him to California in 1971 along with three minor leaguers for infielder Jim Fregosi, and Ryan started his journey to Cooperstown while Fregosi prepared for his retirement.

Despite his many records, Ryan's critics, only until recently, said he was just a .500 pitcher (291-263).

"I think it's the nature of the teams I've played on," Ryan said. "Of all the clubs I've been with this club has the offensive potential to be the best team I've ever played on."

After eight seasons and four no-hitters in California, Ryan spent nine years in Houston before signing as a free agent with the Texas Rangers last year.

Midland High hosts Cooper in key league game

By Bill Price
Staff Writer

Riding the crest of an emotional District 4-5A baseball win over Odessa Permian last Tuesday, Midland High will bring a five-game winning streak to Angels Stadium today, where the Bulldogs play a key district game at 4:30 p.m. against Abilene Cooper.

MHS had been tied with Permian and Cooper for the 4-5A lead as all three teams held 6-2 league records going into Saturday. However, by virtue of their open date Saturday, the 'Dogs fell ½ game off the pace three days ago as Permian annihilated Abilene High 22-8 and Cooper dropped Odessa High 3-2.

In today's other 4-5A games, Midland Lee carries a win streak of its own (two games) into a bout with AHS in Abilene while Odessa High hosts San Angelo. Permain is open today.

For the Bulldogs, who played one their best games of the year in last week's 2-0 win over Mojo, it remains to be seen if the layoff will have any adverse effect. What the rest will not hurt, however, is the arm of MHS pitcher Gabriel Salazar (1.01 ERA in district), who has thrown 23 straight shutout innings and boasts an 8-3 overall record on the mound.

MHS, 14-7 overall, will probably see Scott Jenkins throwing for the Cougars (13-5). Jenkins holds a 4-1 record in 4-5A play, and has posted a 0.46 earned run average over that span.

District 4-5A Baseball

"I don't see any reason not to expect seeing Jenkins pitching for Cooper," said MHS coach Tim Whalen. "He's their ace and this is the game that could decide whether or not either team makes the playoffs.

"It's critical that we come back from the holiday ready to play, and we have taken some batting practice in the cage just trying to keep in the swing of things."

A key for the 'Dogs today will be lead-off hitter and rightfielder Keith Gilbreath. Gilbreath has so far had little trouble reaching base, hitting .400 and has stolen five bases in 4-5A games.

Gilbreath is followed in the order by second baseman Scott Melzer (also .400), catcher Patrick Mowles (.429) and Salazar, who leads MHS batters with a .435 average and three home runs.

JUNIOR LEE pitcher Jeff Johnston (6-4 overall and 2-3 in league action) is the probable starter for the Rebels today. Johnston went the distance in his last outing a week ago, shutting out OHS in seven innings of work.

The Rebs, 10-8 and 5-4 in loop play, are coming off a 19-9 decision over San Angelo Thursday. That score, combined with the 10-0 win over OHS, attest to Lee's ability to score runs.

Thursday against the Bobcats, Lee short stop B.J. Parrish scored five runs and drove in six more. David Schmidt still boasts the best Rebel batting average in district play, coming in at an even .500. He is followed by Brent Sanders (.476) and Brad Sanders (.370).

Brewers light up 18 against Sox

Associated Press

The Milwaukee Brewers recorded the largest shutout in the club's history, pounding out 20 hits and beating the Boston Red Sox 18-0 Monday before a Patriots Day crowd of 35,478 in Fenway Park.

Dave Parker and Greg Brock had four hits each and Gary Sheffield, Edgar Diaz and Brock drove in three runs apiece. Milwaukee had nine doubles, one triple but no home runs. Ted Higuera (1-0) allowed two hits in 6⅓ innings as he won in Fenway Park for the first time after five losses. Tom Filer and Dan Plesac finished the combined three-hitter.

AL

Mike Boddicker (1-1) gave up six runs and six hits in 2⅓ innings and Dennis Lamp followed by allowing three runs and four hits in 1⅓ innings. Rookie Dana Kiecker allowed four runs in 1⅓ innings and Mike Rochford gave up four runs in 2⅓ innings.

Blue Jays 4, Orioles 2

John Cerutti pitched five shutout innings and Toronto beat Baltimore in the first game between the teams since their season-ending series last year.

Toronto entered last season's final weekend with a one-game lead over Baltimore in the American League East. The Blue Jays won the first two games of the series to clinch the division title, then lost to Oakland in the AL playoffs.

Cerutti (1-1) gave up three hits, strick out five and walked none. Frank Wills allowed three hits and both Baltimore runs in two innings before Tom Henke got the final six outs for his first save.

Jay Tibbs (0-1), making his first appearance since July 2, allowed seven hits and four runs in five innings. He had surgery to repair a partially torn rotator cuff on Sept. 12.

Indians 6, Royals 3

Cory Snyder hit three doubles and Cleveland knocked out Mark Gubicza in a four-run second inning en route to a rain-delayed victory over Kansas City.

Ten of the first 14 Cleveland batters reached base against Gubicza (1-1), who was charged with six hits and six earned runs in 1⅓ innings.

Knuckleballer Tom Candiotti, 8-3 lifetime against the Royals, went five innings for the victory. Candiotti (1-0) gave up 10 hits and the three Kansas City runs. Al Nipper relieved starting the sixth and pitched three scoreless innings.

Mariners 6, Twins 3

Jeffrey Leonard and Ken Griffey Jr. hit two-run homers off David West as Seattle ended a five-game losing streak and won for the first time since Opening Day.

With Minnesota leading 3-2, Harold Reynolds drew a leadoff walk in the third inning and Griffey hit West's next pitch for his second home run of the season.

Seattle starter Randy Johnson (1-1) got the win despite allowing two home runs. The 6-foot-10 left-hander yielded five hits in seven innings before Bill Swift opened the eighth.

Reds remain unbeaten

Associated Press

Barry Larkin, with at least two hits in all six games, keyed a three-run first inning with the first of his four hits as the Cincinnati Reds beat the Atlanta Braves 5-3 Monday night to remain the only unbeaten team in the majors.

Barry Larkin, with at least two hits in all six games, keyed a three-run first inning with the first of his four hits as Cincinnati beat Atlanta to remain the only unbeaten team in the majors.

The Reds, off to their best start since going 8-0 in 1980, jumped on Pete Smith (1-1) for four hits in the first. They made it easy for Jack Armstrong (2-0), who ran his scoreless string to 11 innings before the Braves, losers of four straight and five of six, scored in the sixth on Lonnie Smith's sacrifice fly.

NL

Armstrong allowed five hits, no walks and struck out three in seven innings. Rob Dibble pitched the final inning for his first save.

Chris Sabo opened the game with a single and went to second on Billy Hatcher's bunt single. Larkin singled to center, scoring Sabo. After Eric Davis lined out, Larkin stole second and scored with Hatcher on a single by Paul O'Neill.

Sabo and Larkin added a run-scoring hits in the ninth.

Sabo, Hatcher and Larkin ran their hitting streaks to six games for the Reds, batting .316 as a team entering the game. Larkin, batting .571, is 15-for-28. He went 4-for-5 Monday night, adding singles in the third, eighth and ninth.

Armstrong, who pitched six scoreless innings in beating Houston last week, gave up Atlanta's first run in the sixth when Oddibe McDowell led off with a double, moved to third on a grounder and scored on Lonnie Smith's fly to right.

Pete Smith allowed nine hits — five after the first — walked one and struck out eight in 7⅓ innings. The Braves closed the gap in the ninth on a two-run double by Ernie Whitt.

Cardinals 6, Pirates 4

Terry Pendleton had a two-run double and Jose DeLeon and five relievers combined on an eight-hitter, leading St. Louis over troublesome Pittsburgh.

Jose Oquendo and Vince Coleman also had RBIs as St. Louis, 5-13 against Pittsburgh in 1989, ended a six-game losing streak against the Pirates that dated to last year.

John Smiley (0-2), still recovering from off-season elbow surgery, retired the first two hitters before Todd Zeile walked and Pedro Guerrero singled. Pendleton doubled down the right field line, scoring both when the ball struck the bullpen fence and caromed away from Bobby Bonilla.

The Cardinals made it 4-0 in the fourth on doubles by Brunansky and Oquendo and Coleman's RBI single.

DeLeon (1-0), winning for the second time in five career decisions against his former Pittsburgh teammates, allowed two hits in 5⅓ innings, including a two-run homer by Bonilla in the fourth. Bonilla has two homers and five RBIs in his last two games.

Smiley gave up seven hits, walked two and struck out four in six innings in becoming the first Pittsburgh starter to allow more than three earned runs.

The Pirates have scored seven runs in losing three of their last four games and have managed only three runs and 15 hits in their four losses.

Mets 10, Cubs 1

Frank Viola extended his scoreless streak to 13 innings and Howard Johnson doubled twice to drive in three runs.

Viola (2-0) struck out eight, walked none and allowed four hits before Alejandro Pena relieved and got his first save for New York. Viola had combined with John Franco on a five-hit shutout last week against Pittsburgh.

Mark Carreon drove in three runs with a two-run homer and an RBI single. Carreon and Mike Marshall had three hits apeice.

Monday's game was a makeup of a contest postponed by the owners lockout. The Cubs and the Mets begin a three-game series in New York on Tuesday.

Cubs starter Steve Wilson (0-2) allowed three runs and five hits in 5⅓ innings.

Barry Lyons gave the Mets the lead with an RBI single in the first and New York made it 3-0 in the sixth on Johnson's first double and Carreon's RBI single.

The Mets broke open the game in the seventh, taking a 9-0 lead on Johnson's two-run double, Marshall's two-run triple and Carreon's two-run homer — all with two outs.

Ryne Sandberg hit an RBI double off Pena in the seventh and Darryl Strawberry hit a run-scoring since off Dean Wilkins in the ninth.

Expos 5, Phillies 4

The Montreal Expos took advantage of four walks and Spike Owen's first home run to score three times in the seventh inning and beat the Philadelphia Phillies 5-4 Monday night.

With the Expos trailing 4-2, Owen started the seventh by homering off Terry Mulholland, who was relieved by Jeff Parrett. He loaded loaded the bases on walks to pinch-hitters Mike Aldrete and Larry Walker and a bunt single by DeLino DeShields.

Tim Raines singled home pinch-runner David Martinez with the tying run, but DeShields was thrown out at the plate by right fielder Von Hayes. Todd Frohwirth relieved Parrett (0-2) and issued back-to-back walks to Tim Wallach and Andres Galarraga to force Walker home with the go-ahead run.

Giants 3, Dodgers 1

Mike LaCoss pitched a four-hitter — only the third complete game this season in the majors — and Will Clark drove in two runs.

LaCoss (2-0) struck out four and walked three as he went the distance for the first time since Sept. 24, matching his total of complete games for each of the past two seasons. The victory snapped San Francisco's three-game losing streak.

LaCoss, who gave up an unearned run, retired the first nine Dodgers. He held Los Angeles hitless until Mike Scioscia's one-out single in the fifth.

Fernando Valenzuela (0-2) allowed six hits and three runs over six innings. It was his 18th defeat in 33 career decisions against the Giants, who have beaten the left-hander more than any National League team.

Angels lose sixth in seven tries

Staff Report

WICHITA, Kan. — Midland pitching allowed seven walks and 12 hits, including Charlie Hilleman's second home run in as many games, as the Wranglers handed the Angels an 8-0 loss Monday.

Hilleman, who hit only five homers all last year in the Texas League, has two in two nights against Midland, including the game winner Monday.

Mark Holzemer, 0-2, took the loss after giving up three runs on five hits through 4⅔ innings. Only two of those runs were earned as the Angels committed four errors in the game.

Midland dropped to 1-6 for the season while the Wranglers moved to 3-4.

Ricky Bones, 1-1, was the winning pitcher for Wichita, a team that stranded 13 base runners in the game. Brian Wood pitched the final three innings for his first save.

Ruben Amaro had three hits, and Frank DeAngelis hit two doubles for Midland. But the Angels stranded all eight of their base runners.

Midland will get another chance at the Wranglers tonight when Joe Grahe, 0-1, goes up against Wichita's Pedro Martinez, a southpaw making his first professional start. Game time is 7 p.m.

NBA goes into its annual mathematical dance

Associated Press

Three into two won't go.

Armed with that mathematical axiom, the NBA season enters its final week with the last two playoff berths in each conference up for grabs and three teams doing the grabbing.

In the East, Indiana, Cleveland and Atlanta are battling for the 7-8 slots and in the West, the struggle comes down to Denver, Houston and Seattle. And just as vital is whether the survivor finishes seventh or eight.

Consider that the eighth place team in the East draws defending champion Detroit in the first round. Finish eighth in the West and the prize is a first-round date with the Los Angeles Lakers.

In the East, Indiana owns the seventh-place edge at the moment and spends the rest of the week with games at Philadelphia Wednesday, at home against Detroit Friday and at Washington Sunday.

Atlanta has New Jersey at home Tuesday and finishes with a game at New York Friday and a home date with Miami Saturday. Cleveland plays three games on the road — in Milwaukee Tuesday, at New Jersey Wednesday and at Orlando Friday before finishing at home Sunday against New York.

The West race has a head-to-head confrontation this week with Houston at home against Denver Thursday. Just one game separated the two going into Tuesday's games with Denver at Minnesota and Sacramento at Houston.

Denver spends the week at home, against San Antonio Friday and Minnesota Sunday. Besides Sacramento and Denver, Houston has a road game in Dallas Friday and finishes at home against Utah Sunday. Seattle plays the Los Angeles Lakers at home Tuesdat and the Clippers on Friday. In between, there's a road game Thursday in Sacramento and the Sonics finish Sunday at Golden State.

As vital as each game is for the teams battling to make it into the playoffs, there are a couple of showdowns at the top of the standings.

Philadelphia has a 1½-game edge over Boston in the Atlantic Division. With the right set of circumstances — the Celtics play Chicago twice and Orlando while the 76ers meet Indiana and Detroit — Boston's game Sunday at Philadelphia could decide the Atlantic crown.

In the West, San Antonio went into the final week with several incentives. The Spurs were two games behind Utah in the Midwest. A first-place finish means opening the playoffs at home against the seventh-place survivor of the Denver-Houston-Seattle tangle.

Finishing second in the division could push San Antonio as low as fifth in the conference standings and force them to open on the road against Phoenix. That could make Sunday's regular-season finale against the Suns particularly significant.

The Spurs also needed two victories in their final four games to complete the best turnaround in NBA history, a 33-game reversal from last season's 21 wins. Boston had a 32-game improvement in 1980, Larry Bird's rookie season.

Robinson sinks 25 in Spurs' victory

Associated Press

David Robinson is feeling better, which isn't calcucated to improve the disposition of San Antonio's remaining opponents.

The Spurs' sensational rookie bounced back from his worst game of the year with 25 points and 12 rebounds Monday night, helping San Antonio tie the NBA record for the most improved team with a 110-101 victory over the Charlotte Hornets.

"The virus is bothering me very little now. I'm just a little weak. Now I've got a day to rest and get it together," said Robinson, who scored a career-low five points against Sacramento on Saturday night when he was suffering from a stomach virus.

The Spurs are 53-26 after winning only 21 games last season. The 53 victories ties the club record and the 32-game improvement ties the Boston Celtics, who did it in 1979-80, Larry Bird's rookie season.

Robinson struggled with his shot for most of the game, hitting just 4-of-15 in the first three periods before going 4-of-5 in the fourth quarter.

"I settled down in the second half and let the game come to me," Robinson said. "I got a lot better shots. I had a couple of plays run for me and I posted up real well.

The Spurs also pulled within 1½ games of idle Utah in the race for the Midwest Division championship. The Spurs have three games remaining, including a home date Wednesday night against, the Jazz, who have four games left.

"They aren't that far ahead and we're 2-2 against them this year," Robinson said. "If we win against them and win our last two games we will put them in a tough position. It's up to us now."

Knicks 119, Heat 102

Kiki Vandeweghe and Patrick Ewing combined for 28 points as New York scored a season-high 46 points in the third quarter and beat Miami.

The Knicks had two more points in the third period than they did in the entire first half, breaking away from a halftime tie by outscoring Miami 46-26 in the quarter for a 90-70 lead. It was the Heat's eighth consecutive loss.

New York made 16 of 23 shots in the third period and Vandeweghe, who was 0-for-6 and failed to score in the first half, was 6-for-6 and scored 15 of his 22 points in the quarter. Ewing scored 13 of his 25 points in the period and didn't play in the final 12 minutes. The previous highest quarter of the season for New York was 45 at Miami on Feb. 23.

Grant Long led the Heat with 17 points and Billy Thompson had 15.

The Knicks almost established a season high for scoring in one half with 75 points in the second half. Their high was 76 at home against Boston on Dec. 9.

The score was 18-18 after one period and 44-44 at halftime, two of the 14 ties in the first half during which both teams shot 43 percent.

The largest lead by either team in the first two periods was 42-37 with 2:57 left after Miami scored seven consecutive points. A steal and layup by Maurice Cheeks, a three-point play by Ewing and another layup by Cheeks helped the Knicks even the score at halftime.

Pacers 111, Bulls 102

Chuck Person scored 33 points, nine in the fourth quarter, and Indiana earned only its third NBA playoff berth in 14 years by defeating Chicago.

The victory was a present for Coach Dick Versace, who celebrated his 50th birthday. The Pacers' other playoff appearances came in 1980-81 and 1986-87.

Chicago's setback gave the idle Detroit Pistons their third straight Central Division title and assured them of a second consecutive Eastern Conference crown, as well. The Pistons are 57-22 to the Bulls' 53-25. Detroit has three games left, Chicago has four, but the Pistons have clinched the season series.

The Pacers outscored the Bulls 7-2 in the final 2:02 of the third period and took an 85-78 lead into the final quarter.

Foreman to try again

STATELINE, Nev. (AP) — George Foreman continues his boxing comeback tonight against one of Mike Tyson's sparring partners, hoping a victory will bring him closer to a matchup with the former champion himself.

"I'm a better fighter and I've got some tricks up my sleeve," Foreman said. "I've got a plan to beat Mike Tyson."

Foreman also is a former heavyweight champion who's 65-2 with 61 knockouts in a career that began 21 years ago. He faces unheralded Mike Jameson, 17-14 with six knockouts, in a scheduled 10-round fight at Caesars Tahoe.

Foreman recorded his first pro victory in 1969 when Tyson was two years old. He stopped Joe Frazier in the second round to win the championship in January 1973, then lost the belt to Muhammad Ali on an eighth-round knockout in October 1974. After five knockout victories, he lost a 12-round decision to Jimmy Young in March 1977, and left the ring for 10 years.

Since his return in March 1987, Foreman has won all 20 of his fights, 19 by knockout, including stopping Gerry Cooney in the second round Jan. 15.

In the last three years, he has heard all the questions about his age — he says 41 — his weight — he says 250 pounds — and the quality of his opponents.

"I'm the geriatric marvel," Foreman saaid. " I want to be heavyweight champion of the world and nobody can stop me. I'll fight until I'm 42, 43, 44, then I'll retire. Then I'll come back when I'm 50 to give you guys something to write about."

He said he was controlling his weight by training and dieting. "I used to eat a dozen eggs for breakfast. Now that I'm on a diet, I only eat 11," he said.

And of his opponents, "People have said I was only fighting guys on respirators. That's not true at all. I never fought anyone unless they were six days off the respirator."

The 34-year-old Jameson is making something of a comeback himself. After being knocked out by Tyson in the fifth round Jan. 24, 1986, he lost five 10-round decisions then retired after a two-round no-contest Aug. 9, 1987, against the same Jimmy Young who sent Foreman into retirement. Jameson has spent the last three years as one of Tyson's sparring partners.

Foreman has his hopes set on a fall fight with Tyson and a showdown with new heavyweight champ James "Buster" Douglas some time next year. Before either, however, he must beat Jameson. Foreman's banter turns serious as he insists he's not taking his foe from San Jose, Calif., lightly.

"He's an opponent who thinks he can come in and whip me. This is an age of upsets," he said. "Look at how much of an underdog Douglas was. All of a sudden, he's a winner."

STANLEY CUP PLAYOFFS

Hawks eliminate Stars

Associated Press

Wayne Presley and Jeremy Roenick each scored a pair of rapid-fire goals in the second period Monday night and the Chicago Blackhawks rolled to a 5-2 victory over the Minnesota North Stars to win their Norris Division semifinal series in seven games.

The Blackhawks, the regular-season Norris champions, will open the division finals at home Wednesday night against the St. Louis Blues, who eliminated the Toronto Maple Leafs in five games.

Presley tied the game 1-1 three minutes into the second period and put the Blackhawks ahead to stay at 4:06 with his fifth goal of the series. Both came from directly in front of goalie Jon Casey, the second on a short wrist shot during a delayed penalty.

Roenick knocked in his own second round at 12:41 for a 3-1 lead, then scored again at at 14:06, giving him five goals for the series.

Greg Millen, who was pulled for the third time in Game 6, was outstanding in goal for Chicago, stopping 30 of 32 shots.

The Blackhawks were in trouble during the first period. They fell behind 1-0 on Don Barber's power-play goal, then went down two men when Keith Brown took a high-sticking major for cutting Barber at 14:51 and Denis Savard got a major and was ejected for drawing blood when he high-sticked Neal Broten at 17:37.

That gave the North Stars a chance to break the game open, but they failed to cash in. The Blackhawks were two men short for 2:18, but the Blackhawks' penalty-killers, urged on by ear-splitting cheers from the sellout crowd, combined with Millen to keep Minnesota from adding to its lead.

There was 2:37 left on Savard's penalty at the start of the second period, but Barber drew a hooking penalty 22 seconds into the period, short-circuiting the rest of the power play.

The North Stars capitalized on their first power play of the game for the only goal of the opening period. Dave Manson drew a cross-checking penalty at 8:47 and Barber tipped Brian Bellows shot from the point past Greg Millen at 9:02.

The North Stars closed the gap to 4-2 when Ulf Dahlen scored at 9:58 of the third period.

Oilers 4, Jets 1

Mark Lamb put Edmonton ahead to stay with a breakaway goal late in the first period and the Oilers beat Winnipeg, becoming only the seventh team in NHL history to win a playoff series after trailing 3-1.

The Oilers, who blew a 3-1 lead and lost to Los Angeles in the Smythe Division semifinals last year, will get a chance to avenge that loss in the division finals, beginning Wednesday night at the Northlands Coliseum.

Lamb took a pass from Glenn Anderson and beat Stephane Beauregard at 17:52 to give the Oilers a 2-1 lead. After a scoreless second period, Esa Tikkanen gave Edmonton a two-goal lead at 5:09 of the final period before Lamb set up Jari Kurri's fourth goal of the series with 2:12 remaining.

Anderson gave the Oilers a 1-0 lead when he beat Beauregard, one of the Jets' two rookie goaltenders, at 8:54 of the opening period. But Thomas Steen fired a wrist shot from the right wing past Bill Ranford 27 seconds later for the Jets' lone goal.

Ranford, who looked shaky in the Jets' 7-5 series-opening win but improved with every game, stopped 26 of 27 shots. Beauregard finished with 21 saves.

Cavs finally ink assistant as coach

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. (AP) — Assistant Jeff Jones was named Monday as Virginia's basketball coach, ending a search that saw three more prominent coaches turn down a chance to succeed Terry Holland.

The 29-year-old Jones, who becomes the youngest coach in the school's 84-year history, became an assistant for the Cavaliers in 1982 and played under Holland in 1979-82.

"Any success that we accomplish will be built on the foundation he has established," Jones said of Holland, who left after 16 years to become athletic director at Davidson. "There will be some changes, but I promises you that the physical and mental toughness and pride with which players wear the Virginia jerseys will continue."

During the coaching search conducted by athletic director Jim Copeland, Providence coach Rick Barnes turned down the job and Xavier's Pete Gillen and Standford's Mike Montgomery turned down overtures about coming to Virginia.

"I got a little lucky," Jones said. "Some things fell into place. But I'd like to think that hard work for Coach Holland has prepared me for this task."

Jones called the period of the search "a little bit of an emotional roller coaster. I've tried not to let my emotions get too high, or too low. But when the season was over, it was hard to keep and even keel."

Copeland said Jones "has an uncanny grasp of the technical and strategic aspects of the game."

A native of Owensboro, Ky., Jones was the Cavs' point guard during the Ralph Sampson era. Those teams were 102-28, won the 1980 NIT and reached the Final Four in 1981. Jones still holds the school record for career assists at 598.

In the summer of 1974, Holland took over a Virginia program that had never sent a team to the NCAA tournament and had produced winning records in just four of the previous 25 years.

Aggies, Raiders ink basketball talent

Associated Press

Texas A&M and Texas Tech signed two key basketball players Monday with A&M landing Hardin-Simmons' Tommy French and Tech hauling in Stacey Bailey of Western Wyoming.

French, last season's player of the year in the Trans-America Conference, was signed Monday to a basketball letter of intent with Texas A&M University.

Because H-SU is dropping out of the NCAA after this season into NAIA play, its players are eligible to transfer before next fall without losing any eligibility.

The 6-5 French, who will be a senior, averaged 21.4 points and 4.9 rebounds for the Cowboys last season. He hit 63 percent of his field goals, including 56 percent from outside the 3-point line, and hit 73 percent of his free throws.

H-SU recruited French from Clarendon Junior College, where he averaged 25 points as a sophomore. His most prolific game in junior college was a 62-point effort against Western Texas College.

He was all-state and honorable mention all-America as a high school player in Albuquerque.

Myers said he hopes to use Bailey's talents to inject some life into a team that had the worst record in Tech history last season at 5-22, including a winless SWC slate and winless 1990.

Bailey will be one of Tech's top seven or eight players next season, Myers said.

Futures inch up

Oil prices also got a boost from news that ministers from three OPEC countries would meet informally Tuesday to discuss the weakness in world markets due to an abundance of crude.

The May contract of West Texas Intermediate edged up 7 cents to $17.85 a 42-gallon barrel after retreating 28 cents on Thursday. The June, July and August crude contracts had stronger increases.

Much of the renewed buying Monday appeared to be technical in nature and didn't reflect a shift in sentiment toward the energy market, analysts said.

Dollar closes up

Abboud

HOUSTON (AP) — First quarter earnings of First City Bancorporation of Texas increased by more than 240 percent from the same period a year ago — an increase attributed mostly to hefty gains from the sale of its credit-card business.

Earnings for the first quarter ending March 31, totaled $90.1 million, or $4.46 per share — more than triple the $26.2 million, or $1.09 per share, posted for the 1989 period, First City announced Monday.

First City Chairman A. Robert Abboud said the sale of the credit card business and other changes made during the quarter significantly helped increase the Houston-based bank holding company's financial reserves.

California gas demand questioned

■ California has been offered as the most promising of natural gas markets for New Mexico and the Permian Basin, but some question if the demand is that strong.

Associated Press

SANTA FE, N.M. — The future for natural gas demand looks bright, the head of an interstate pipeline said.

Bill Wise, president of El Paso Natural Gas Co., told New Mexico's third annual gas marketing conference in Santa Fe that the market for natural gas in California is "still exceptionally attractive."

Wise said utilities will need more gas to generate electricity, and the market for gas use in cogeneration and enhanced oil recovery is strong.

He said increasing environmental concerns bode well for greater natural gas demand.

But Mike Florio, an attorney for a California consumers group, said demand projections for the California market tend to be inflated.

He said one gauge for forecasting demand, the California Gas Report that compiles utilities' projections, can be misleading.

He said utilities project high growth because they want to add generation to their rate base.

Florio said California can't grow that fast anymore and that regulators are launching new conservation efforts.

He said environmental concerns should cause industry to shift from oil-burning to gas, but that not much oil is being burned anymore in California.

He said there are lots of opportunities in the state but added that gas industry marketing people are "running wild."

"It's not as if suddenly the state of California will be one big blue flame," he said.

Five separate new pipeline projects have been proposed to deliver natural gas to California from Canada, Wyoming and the Southwest. Wise said he expects at least one new non-Southwest pipeline.

He said California regulators are pushing diversity of supply, and that El Paso's job will be to compete aggressively so other companies will limit their expansions.

Bush modifies offshore policy

■ In an effort to quiet environmental concerns, President Bush is departing from Reagan policy and making radical concessions that will see less offshore leasing and exploration in months to come.

N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — Hoping to quiet the furor over offshore oil drilling, the Bush administration is abandoning a Reagan-era policy of opening huge sections of the nation's outer continental shelf to leasing by the oil industry.

Federal officials now drafting the Bush administration's first long-range plan for ocean exploration say they will offer fewer offshore acres for prospecting and concentrate on areas considered likely to produce oil.

The new approach, which represents a fundamental shift in strategy, will also call for fewer sales of oil and gas leases and may provide financial incentives to coastal communities to make nearby drilling more palatable.

"It will be this administration's first opportunity to lay forth its policy on how it is going to do business in the oceans in the 90s," said Barry A. Williamson, director of the Interior Department's Minerals Management Service, which oversees the offshore program.

Under former President Reagan, then Interior Secretary James Watt in 1982 outraged environmentalists when he put the entire 1.4 billion acres of the coastal shelf on the auction block and sped up the leasing process.

His successor, Donald Hodel, made about half as much territory available for leasing in a 1987 plan opposed by conservationists and coastal states.

Williamson said he would like to find a middle ground by consulting more closely with local officials and by better defining the areas available for leasing.

"I think especially in places like California and the East, we need to focus our efforts and go at those areas where the resource assets are high and where the environmental interests and assets are manageable," he said.

The federal change in tack comes in response to mounting resistance to offshore drilling in many quarters due to fear of environmental damage.

Congress has imposed drilling moratoria on 84 million acres off Southwest Florida, much of California, Alaska, New England and the mid-Atlantic region.

Lawmakers are currently moving to extend those bans and include the Pacific Northwest and North Carolina, where residents are fighting a plan by Mobil to drill an exploratory gas well 47 miles offshore.

A proposal by U.S. Rep. Barbara Boxer, D-Calif., to permanently bar drilling along most of the coast except for Louisiana, Texas and Alabama has drawn almost 60 cosponsors.

Iacocca loses bonus still earns $3.4 million

N.Y. Times News Service

DETROIT — Lee A. Iacocca's salary as chairman of Chrysler Corp. rose last year, but his total compensation fell slightly, to a still-handsome $3,406,629, because he was not paid a bonus, according to an annual proxy statement released last week by the company.

This is the first time that Chrysler has withheld executive cash bonuses since 1982, when the company was struggling back from the brink of bankruptcy.

Iacocca said in March that cash bonuses would not be paid to Chrysler executives for 1989 because of poor corporate earnings.

The No. 3 auto maker's net profits declined by 65.8 percent last year, to $359 million.

Profit-sharing payments to Chrysler's hourly work force were also canceled for 1989.

But Chrysler's board authorized setting aside $22 million out of 1989 earnings, the full amount permitted under the company's incentive compensation plan, for executive cash bonus awards in subsequent years.

Cost of living stable

Staff Report

Midland's cost of living was relatively stable in March, posting a one-tenth of one percent increase, according to figures released by ClayDesta National Bank. Annualized, this month's rate of inflation would equal 0.1 percent.

However, bank officials point out that, despite March's slight increase, it was the second consecutive increase.

■ Transportation costs rose for a third month in a row, posting a 1.6 percent hike in March. The increase was fueled by higher gasoline prices, which had fallen in February.

■ Breaking a three-month upward trend was food at home, which posted the sharpest decrease in March, falling 0.8 percent. Increases in meat prices were offset by lower costs for produce, shelf items and alcoholic beverages.

■ It cost more to eat out in Midland for a second month in a row, with food away from home prices rising 1.1 percent in March. The increase was due to higher prices on main dishes prepared with chicken and with beef.

■ Clothing prices reversed February's trend and fell 0.5 percent in March, thanks to lower price tags for children's apparel, and for women's wear.

■ Tall City residential utility bills rose 0.9 percent in March, reversing February's decline. Gas bills fell 0.6 percent after two months of increases, but were offset by electric rates that rose 2.8 percent. Water rates remained stable.

■ Health care was 0.1 percent higher in March due to higher prices on nonprescription medicine. This was the third consecutive monthly increase in this category.

■ Housing costs remained stable for a second month, with a 2 percent decrease being calculated in local housing costs for the last year.

Michigan gas rules stands

■ The supreme court has ruled that Michigan industries can buy their gas directly from natural gas pipelines rather than in-state firms.

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court today refused to order a Detroit steel company to buy natural gas from a Michigan supplier rather than through an interstate pipeline.

The court, without comment, let stand rulings that Michigan officials cannot require the steel company to purchase gas from an in-state supplier.

The steel manufacturer, National Steel Corp., had been the second largest natural gas customer of Michigan Consolidated Gas Co. until July 1988 when National began buying directly from Panhandle Eastern Pipe Line Co.

For more than 50 years Panhandle has supplied Michigan Consolidated and other utilities in that state with natural gas through a pipeline that runs from Texas to Michigan.

National said it will save $10 million a year by bypassing Michigan Consolidated and purchasing directly through Panhandle. National buys the gas from a producer in Oklahoma and pays Panhandle to transport it.

The Federal Energy Regulatory Commission authorized Panhandle to build a separate pipeline to provide gas directly to the steel company.

The Michigan Public Service Commission challenged the federal commission's authority to let the pipeline company bypass the Michigan supplier.

The state commission said allowing major natural gas users to bypass the state supply system could devastate Michigan's economy, adding that small businesses and residential customers would have to bear the full cost of paying for the supply system.

Arbitrator settles broker, customer dispute

By Jane Bryant Quinn

Quinn

NEW YORK — Johnny, you'll recall, was Frankie's man. When he done her wrong, she didn't spend a lot of time sorting out her options.

She shot him.

Nowadays–had Johnny been her stockbroker — a more socialized Frankie might have dragged him into arbitration. It's a hearing for people who want to kill, but will settle for restitution rather than blood.

Arbitration is run by the various securities and commodities exchanges to handle customer complaints. Typically, you go before a three-person panel and state your case. The arbitrators' decision is final. You usually cannot appeal.

Arbitrators' decisions are now made public, thanks to pressure from the Securities and Exchange Commission, which regulates the industry. Case summaries (sometimes including written decisions) disclose both the name of the offending broker and his or her firm, so you can see exactly who has been doing what to whom. And you can find out whether a particular arbitrator tends to favor the broker or the customer.

When someone wins an award against a broker for more than $5,000, that information is entered in the computerized Central Registration Depository (CRD), which contains a broker's personal history and disciplinary record. You can get your own broker's CRD, as well as the entire CRD of the brokerage firm, from your state's securities administrator. If you can't find the telephone number, you can get it from the North American Securities Administrators Assn. (202-737-0900).

Arbitration panels are starting to award punitive damages in the states that allow it. This comes as a terrible shock to the brokerage industry, which thought it was safe from these big fines. Punitive damages are assessed when the broker's behavior is so outrageous that conscience recoils from merely requiring that he or she give the money back.

What's more, an Oklahoma City panel in January brought in the first RICO (racketeering) award, in a case against Shearson Lehman Hutton. The total award: $1.1 million. RICO cases involve such things as securities fraud and cost an offender triple damages.

Punitive damages don't really deter abuses, says New York City attorney Stuart Goldberg who specializes in securities arbitration. For an amoral broker, making money from a trusting customer is simply too easy. "The most profitable thing you can do is rip off the elderly," Goldberg says.

But the risk of huge awards may encourage more brokerage firms to settle certain cases before arbitration. Since last May, at least 11 awards (not all of them punitive) came in higher than $1 million, says Richard Ryder, editor of the Securities Arbitration Commentor in Maplewood, N.J.

Former stockbroker Mary Calhoun, who now sits on arbitration panels, thinks that the threat of publicity may also be leading some firms to settle. They don't want their customers to learn how horrible some of the cases really are.

Yet another change in rules makes it easier for complaining customers to get records out of the brokerage house.

Stocks Close Mixed After Giving Up Early Gains

By JOYCE M. ROSENBERG
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Prices closed mixed on Wall Street Monday after the stock market was unable to hold on to a broad advance prompted by a better-than-expected earnings report from International Business Machines Corp.

The Dow Jones industrial average closed up 11.26 at 2,763.06 after having been up more than 41 points early in the session.

Declining issues ran slightly ahead of advancers in nationwide trading of New York Stock Exchange-listed stocks, with 714 up, 778 down and 510 unchanged.

Volume on the floor of the Big Board came to 142.81 million shares, slightly higher than 142.47 million in the previous session.

Nationwide, consolidated volume in NYSE-listed issues, including trades in those stocks on regional exchanges and in the over-the-counter market, totaled 173.64 million shares.

The market surged higher at the opening after IBM reported first-quarter earnings of $1.03 billion, or $1.81 per share, up 9 percent from $950 million, or $1.61 a share, a year earlier. Revenue was up 11 percent to $14.18 billion from $12.73 billion.

The results surpassed most analysts' predictions of earnings per share of between $1.35 and $1.70.

Investors moved into the market enthusiastically after hearing the news — Big Blue's announcement dispelled some concerns that corporate profits for the first quarter would be disappointing. The stock market has been held in check in recent months because of companies' poor results in 1989.

The Dow Jones average was up by around 25 points for much of the day, although the broader market began to retreat. Then, in the last hour, program selling brought prices even lower.

IBM led the NYSE most-active list, rising 3¾ to 110⅞.

Earnings reports also affected the performance of other stocks. Eli Lilly tumbled 1¼ to 67¼ after releasing first-quarter profit figures that fell short of analysts' forecasts.

Banking stocks fell after reporting their first-quarter earnings declined. Chase Manhattan fell 1⅝ to 27¾ and J.P. Morgan slipped ¾ to 34¾.

Among blue chip issues, AT&T was unchanged at 41⅞, Philip Morris rose ⅜ to 42⅝, and General Electric gained ¾ to 66¾.

As measured by Wilshire Associates' index of more than 5,000 actively traded stocks, the market rose $2.917 billion, or 0.09 percent, in value.

Arch gains property in Winkler

Staff Report

FORT WORTH — Arch Petroleum Inc. has gained ownership of working interest in an oil and gas property in Winkler County.

The company's ownership was confirmed after settlement of arbitration/litigation proceedings in a dispute over ownership rights to property acquired from the Amon G. Carter Foundation and Carter Foundation Production Co. in February 1989.

Arch also announced that it has acquired various working interests in approximately 200 oil and gas wells in the Keystone multipay field in Winkler County for $5.9 million.

The acquistion includes the remaining 50 percent working interest in wells currently operated by Arch as well as non-operated working interests in the Keystone Holt Waterflood Unit. A preliminary estimate of proved reserves associated with the acquisition is in excess of 15 billion cubic feet equivalent.

QUINN: Arbitration more complicated

(From 5C)

In the past, you sometimes had to beat the ground and foam at the mouth to get information essential to your claim. Speaking of another case involving Shearson, Calhoun says: "The firm got amnesia about delivering its compliance manual." The manual spells out its policies on making investment recommendations.

A compliance manual is a useful document. It might, for example, say a client's money shouldn't be concentrated in just one stock. If your broker did so, you've got a good case.

Orlando attorney Robert Dyer thinks that the new procedures for getting documents and other evidence are a great help. But Goldberg argues that they've made arbitration more like a full-fledged lawsuit–longer, more complicated, and subject to abuse.

The broker's attorneys, he charges, are "grinding up fees" by demanding excessive records and unnecessary depositions. They're making it more expensive for a customer to pursue a case.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

All U.S. securities backed by government

By Bill Doyle

Q. In February, I purchased a $140,000 face amount U.S. Treasury bill through my bank. It is a 52-week T bill due to mature Feb. 20, 1991. Because T bills are sold at a discount, my purchase price was $129,683.

Are T bills guaranteed by the government to the ultimate amount — $140,000, in my case — on the expiration date or only to my $129,683 purchase price?

Doyle

A. All U.S. Treasury securities — bills, notes and bonds — are guaranteed for principal and interest by the full faith and credit of our federal government. When your T bill matures, you will receive $140,000. There is absolutely no doubt about that.

A T bill is a discount security. The U.S. Treasury Department sells new T bills at a discounted price below face value and redeems them at face value upon maturity. The difference between the discounted price at which you bought the T bill and the higher face value amount you will receive next Feb. 20 is your interest.

Treasury notes and bonds are different. They are current interest securities. The Treasury Department sells notes and bonds at or very close to face value and redeems them at face value when they mature. Meanwhile, interest is paid every six months.

Q. I placed my order to buy a T bill at my bank. The transaction was handled by the bank's brokerage firm affiliate. The statement I received shows my T bill account is carried by still another brokerage firm, which is a member of, SIPC, the New York Stock Exchange and other exchanges.

In case the firm holding my account becomes insolvent, a la the savings and loan debacle, will I be able to recover my investment plus interest?

A. Yes, indeed. In the unlikely event that brokerage firm goes bust, SIPC will make you whole. That acronym stands for Securities Investor Protection Corp., which was established by act of Congress in 1970.

When a brokerage firm fails, SIPC sees to it that securities and cash the firm holds for its customers are returned to each customer — up to a limit of $500,000, no more than $100,000 of which can be cash.

SIPC does not protect brokerage customers against "market loss" — the value of their securities falling. Because a T bill is the only thing that brokerage is holding for you, you have no worry on that score.

If your Treasury securities were being held by your bank, as is often the case, you would still be safe. If the bank went under, your Treasury securities would not be counted as part of the bank's assets and could not be touched by the bank's creditors.

Q. We are a group of senior citizens who have been buying U.S. Treasury securities for many years. We still receive semiannual interest checks from notes and bonds purchased years ago. We are used to that and like it. On more recent issues, however, the interest is put directly into our bank accounts and we must pay the bank a nominal fee each time interest is due.

I'm told this is called "book-entry." Everyone in our group much preferred the old system. Why is the new system being used?

A. Basically to save money for the federal government. Under the "Treasury Direct" system, which was phased into operation in 1986 and '87, fancy engraved certificates no longer are printed for newly issued U.S. Treasury securities. Nor are interest checks printed, mailed, cashed, returned, stored, etc.

Everything is recorded on computers. Interest is paid by electronic funds transfer. There's no worry about lost or stolen certificates and checks. It's really a good system, once you get the hang of it.

Because you pay fees to your bank, it's clear you buy Treasury securities through the bank. You can avoid that fee by opening your own Treasury Direct account.

BUSH: President abandons Reagan offshore policies

(From 5C)

Given the current climate and a string of highly-publicized tanker spills, the oil industry appears willing to accept less opportunity to explore as the price to be paid for moving into any new territory at all.

"If we could get access into exploring in some of these frontier areas, we can show the technology is there and it can be done safely," said Paul Kelley, vice president of Rowan Companies, Inc., a Houston-based drilling contractor.

The scaled-back leasing program will be unveiled in the five-year plan for 1992-97 being crafted by the Minerals Management Service.

Due in March, the draft has been delayed pending a decision by President Bush on recommendations from a special task force that studied leasing off Florida and California.

Despite speculation the president might reveal his decision during a visit to the Florida Keys next Sunday on the observance of Earth Day, aides say they expect no final word at that time.

"All indications are that it will be a couple of weeks yet," said White House press aide Steve Hart.

While they anxiously await Bush's decision, foes of offshore drilling welcomed signs that the Interior Department is rethinking its leasing policy. But one said it might be too late.

"The politics of the issue and people's sensitivity to the issue has kind of passed this by," said Andy Palmer, who directs the Washington office of the American Oceans Campaign. "A lot of people now believe there shouldn't be any leasing at all."

But critics say it made it difficult to do meaningful environmental studies because of the huge expanses of ocean bottom involved.

For instance, a planned November 1991 sale of 14.5 million acres off Florida's Gulf Coast covers diverse ecological systems stretching from the state's Panhandle to near its southern tip.

"Area-wide leasing is a plan that has failed," said Ann Whitfield, director of the Florida Public Interest Research Group. "Moving from area-wide leasing to site-specific leasing is a step toward reducing the risk to the coastline."

But she and others said it is likely drilling opponents and the industry will still clash over sites companies want to explore such as in California, where rigs need to be kept close to shore.

Torchmark calls for American General proxies

HOUSTON (AP) — Torchmark Corp. began calling for proxies Monday for a slate of five independent nominees to American General Corp.'s board who face selection at the Houston-based insurance and financial firm's annual meeting May 2.

The action follows Thursday's ruling by the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals that stayed a preliminary injunction prohibiting Torchmark from soliciting proxies for directors.

American General has argued that nominees for the board had to be presented by March 3, or 20 days after it notified shareholders of its annual meeting.

But the three-judge panel questioned the validity of the March 3 date since American General's Feb. 15 report did not mention vital information — including the fact American General had expanded its board from 13 to 15 members.

Orchids thrive in greenhouse in East Texas pines

AP Laserphoto

Many of the orchids R.E. Post grows had their first roots in the jungles of South America, where the plants grow on trees. Post retired from his pharmacy job in Houston and returned to his native Texarkana to pursue his hobby.

R.E. Post, when he retired two and a half years ago, returned to his hometown and built a greenhouse and home on a 100-acre site of rolling hills north of Texarkana.

Some of the orchid blossoms are more than 7 inches across, colored not only shades of purple but red, yellow, orange and white or combinations of tints of hues.

"I give our friends flowers," Post said. "My greatest pleasure comes from sharing them."

His wife, Guyla, said he once provided 2i0 blooms for volunteers to give to hospital patients. One of the blooms proved to be a last gift for a terminally ill woman who died with a fragrant, brightly-colored orchid on her pillow.

The orchid's fragrance is always a surprise to most people, Post said. The greenhouse is filled with a subtle perfume, caught suddenly when visitors turn their heads toward a flower.

Before his retirement, Post worked as a pharmacist at M.D. Anderson Hospital in Houston, and his wife was an administrative assistant in radiology.

When he retired, they moved from a Houston townhouse to the piney woods, and he built his greenhouse and home. He said he had been building this particular greenhouse in his mind for years.

'They are very predictable bloomers. You know just what each one will do. Some bloom only every other year. Hybrids are more complex so clones are used now to get very predictable blooms.'

—R.E. Post
Orchid grower

There are 25,000 species of orchids, and many come from Hawaii, but the majority of his flowers are from Brazil, Argentina, Guatemala and Colombia, Post said.

"The cultivation of orchids goes back a long time," he said. "An Englishman, William Cattleya, imported foliage plants from South America. He used the orchid plants just for packing because their leaves are not attractive. When the plants arrived in England, Cattleya threw the orchids down under the counter. And then they bloomed. What a surprise that must have been."

He was lucky to get blossoms so quickly. Grown from seed, it takes six years before orchids bloom.

Orchids are not ordinary flowers — not only because of their beauty, but because they grow very slowly, the plants never get large and in their native environment, they grow on trees.

Post said they are not parasites but epiphytes, air-growers.

To simulate their environment, Post said orchids are not grown in soil but in chips of bark. He used fir chips from California. The orchids thrive in Texarkana because of the climate and the water. He used his own well water that is free of added chemicals.

In 1956, Post started his hobby very modestly.

"A friend gave me a plant and it turned out to be easy to grow," he said. "I gradually increased to six or seven plants and built a window greenhouse in the east window of the bedroom. Four years later, I built two greenhouses and had 4,000 plants."

When he retired, he culled his plants down to 600 he considered the best. One of those is 75 years old.

"It is really part of that plant. The plants grow forward with sheaths at the edge that each produce one bloom. After it produces its flower, it doesn't bloom again, so it is cut and the back portion is thrown away. Then the plant grows a new one. That plant has been growing that way all those years. It was registered and named in England 75 years ago."

The plant is the parent of a hybrid Post has had named for him. He showed the furry lip of a plant from the South American jungle, which had produced pollen that he put on another orchid. The hybridization resulted in a flower with a ruffled lip but was more colorful, blending the best of two varieties.

In the jungle, the orchids absorb dew and bird droppings, Post said. The roots and stems are like blotter paper and absorb moisture and keep it so they can stand long, dry periods. The tubes under the stems pump up with water and store it.

Post averages about two hours a day taking care of his orchids. This time of year, he also does some repotting before the heat comes. Orchids do not bloom in the heat of June, July and August.

"They are very predictable bloomers. You know just what each one will do. Some bloom only every other year. Hybrids are more complex so clones are used now to get very predictable blooms. I have only six or eight plants that have not bloomed yet, but I had culled mine down to those that are above average. Some are hybrids that bloom in the spring and others flower in the fall. They are keyed to the length of the days. So when the days get shorter, one set blooms, when they get longer, another group blossoms."

During the vernal equinox (the first day of spring), when the sun crosses the celestial equator, and days change length, some orchids were in a brilliant blossom for their brief moment in the sun.

Prosecutors seek answers in wake of Poindexter trial

WASHINGTON (AP) — John Poindexter faces a possible grand jury appearance after his June sentencing on Iran-Contra convictions, sources say, as prosecutors chase elusive information vital to writing a final report on the Reagan era scandal.

New testimony from both Poindexter and former National Security Council staff deputy Oliver North could be compelled under a grant of immunity from prosecution, the sources said. They said the investigation is far from over.

While such grand jury appearances might provide missing links to the coverup and help prosecutors close the books on the more than 3½-year-old scandal, new indictments would be unlikely, they added.

That was the consensus drawn from a series of interviews with sources in and out of government in the wake of Poindexter's conviction Saturday on conspiracy, obstruction and lying to Congress.

These sources, who discussed the case with The Associated Press on condition of anonymity, said Poindexter's weekend convictions are significant because they provide a focus for the next, and possibly final, phase of the Iran-Contra prosecutors' criminal probe.

The conspiracy conviction was the first courtroom confirmation that Poindexter, North, late-CIA director William J. Casey, national security adviser Robert McFarlane and others worked illegally together.

The conspirators' goals, the investigators have said, were to conceal from Congress evidence of the diversion of Iran arms sale money to the Contras, the U.S. role in a Hawk missile shipment to Iran and North's military support for the Nicaraguan rebels during a time when direct or indirect U.S. aid was banned.

Iran-Contra prosecutor Dan Webb referred questions to Walsh. Mary Belcher, a spokeswoman for the Iran-Contra prosecutor's office, said Walsh would not comment on matters which may or may not pertain to grand juries.

Nevertheless, North, Poindexter, and possibly former CIA station chief Joseph Fernandez, may be compelled to give grand jury testimony about the scandal, the sources said. All three testified to Congress after being granted immunity from prosecution.

Getting immunity for North would give Iran-Contra prosecutors their first opportunity to conduct a wide-ranging interrogation of the former Marine officer outside the constraints imposed by a courtroom trial setting.

The former national security adviser, like North, gave immunized testimony to Congress in 1987, saying he didn't inform President Reagan about the diversion of Iran arms sale proceeds to the Nicaraguan Contra rebels.

But Poindexter didn't testify at his own trial, and a grand jury appearance would be the first opportunity Iran-Contra prosecutors have had to question him in that setting.

North's personal notes scribbled in spiral-bound notebooks would provide the grist for a lengthy list of questions about the former National Security Council aide's daily conversations on the Iran and Contra initiatives.

Portions of the notebooks were available to congressional investigators after North attorney Brendan Sullivan supplied them to Congress. North was forced to turn over all of the notebooks to prosecutors a year ago.

North's notebooks for 1984 through 1986 contain thousands of pages of contemporaneous daily jottings listing whom he talked to, when and the outline of the discussions. Parts of them were released publicly by Congress, but most have remained secret.

Iran-Contra prosecutors are likely to be interested in:

—His meetings with Elliott Abrams, at the time an assistant secretary of state for Inter-American affairs, and the CIA's Alan Fiers.

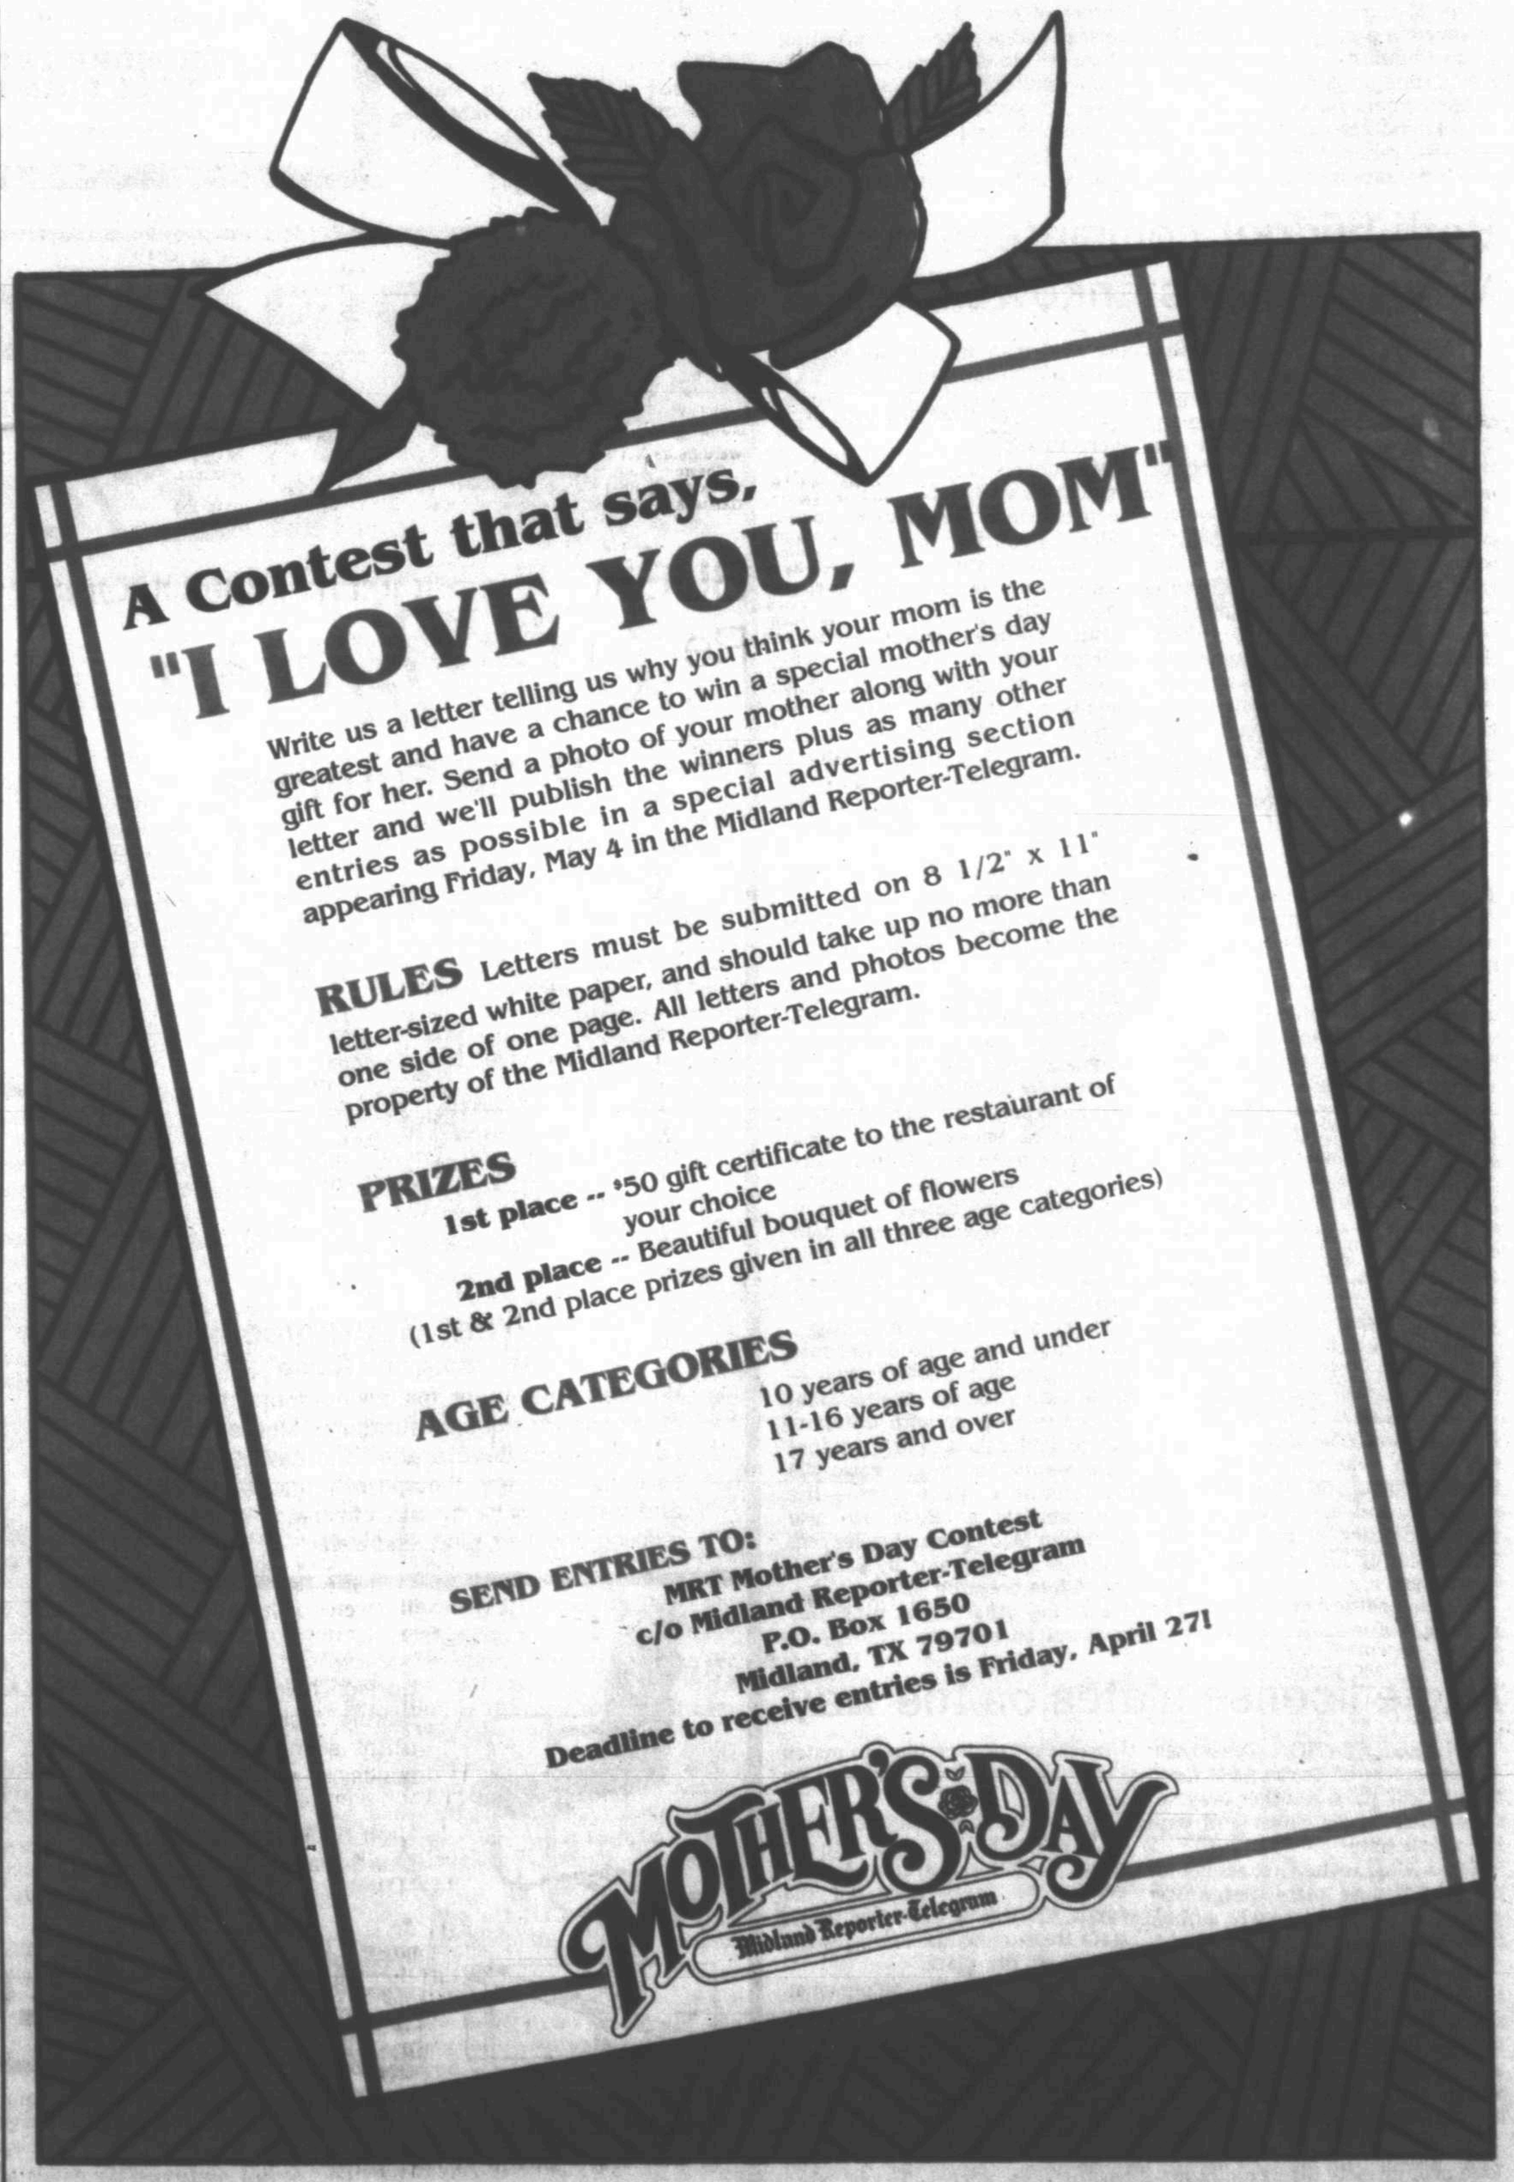
Gregg, now the U.S. ambassador to South Korea, has said he did not know of North's involvement with the Contra resupply operation until Aug. 8, 1986. Gregg said he didn't share information with Bush about North's role until December 1986.

Abrams, Fiers and North met frequently during a congressional ban on military aid to the Contras which required the CIA to withdraw from its role of supplying the rebel force.

Abrams told Congress he and others knew that North was connected to private fund-raising efforts for the Contras, but "most of us were careful not to ask North lots of questions."

Fiers said he was aware of some of North's activities on behalf of the Contras and opposed a few, but "I could not be my brother's keeper." His job, said Fiers, was "keeping the agency (the CIA) within the bounds of legality and propriety. That was my task. That is what I tried to do."

Fiers, then head of the CIA's Central American Task Force, said he didn't know until late 1986 the full extent of North's involvement with the Contras.



Greening of corporate America makes good sense

Hearst News Service

WASHINGTON – General Motors Corp. has resisted federal mileage standards for automobiles ever since the Environmental Protection Agency began setting fuel efficiency rules in 1974.

But as public concern grows in the wake of the Exxon oil spill and other environmental calamities, General Motors is taking out ads to boast of its environmental achievements, including increased fuel efficiency for GM cars.

The automaker's campaign is part of the burgeoning effort by major U.S. corporations to improve their environmental records –or public perceptions of those records – as U.S. business scrambles to keep up with opinion polls showing that environmental issues are dear to the heart of the American public.

In recent weeks, this public concern appears to have been heightened by the trial of the Exxon Corp. tanker skipper for running aground in the Gulf of Alaska, the 20th anniversary on April 22 of the first Earth Day, the congressional debate on changes to the Clean Air Act and the continuing scientific debate over global warming.

A USA TODAY poll published Friday showed 83 percent of the American public is concerned about the environment – and most respondents said they were more concerned today than they were five years ago. Most of those polled said they would be willing to pay more for products that can be recycled, pay more taxes to cut pollution and accept a lower standard of living in exchange for a cleaner environment.

Those kinds of answers are bound to get the attention of business executives and marketing specialists who constantly pore over polling data in their search for information about consumer desires. Also, studies of the demographics of the "green" movement show affluent consumers have ardent environmental interests.

H.J. Heinz Co., the food conglomerate that owns best-selling StarKist brand tuna, was facing a boycott of all of its products by environmentalists upset at the killing of dolphins by tuna fisherman. The boycott was to be announced Saturday at a rally across from the White House.

Heinz beat them to the punch and announced on Thursday that StarKist won't buy tuna caught with methods that kill dolphins. In fact, StarKist cans on grocery shelves will be stamped "dolphin safe." Bumble Bee and Chicken of the Sea quickly followed with similar announcements.

When the marketplace speaks, business listens.

Worried about another oil spill like Exxon's mess in the Gulf of Alaska? Well, Conoco Oil Co. offered the reassuring news this week that it is ordering two new tankers with double hulls to protect against spills.

Nervous about the erosion of the ozone layer by chloroflourocarbons in refrigerant? E.I. du Pont de Nemours Co. and other chemical companies are searching for substitutes.

Litter and landfills bugging you? Manufacturers of plastic garbage bags are responding, inspiring such trade names as Hefty Degradable Trash Bags and Envirogard Tall Can Kitchen Bags. However, the environmental group Greenpeace has challenged claims that these products degrade in the same way that plant and animal products decompose, even though the plastic in fact breaks down into smaller bits of plastic.

H.J. Heinz recently announced a new plastic ketchup container that the company says can be recycled, as opposed to its old plastic ketchup container, which cannot.

Air pollution? Shell Oil Co. has introduced a new unleaded gasoline to help reduce pollution in 10 cities, including the nine identified as having the worst air in the country. The brand costs 2 cents a gallon more to make and Shell said the company will absorb all or part of that cost in order to stay competitive.

Other oil companies with similar plans in smaller markets include Marathon Oil Co., Phillips Petroleum Co. and Atlantic Richfield.

Documentary focuses on sculptor

VERNON, Texas (AP) — The lights are hot, the tape is rolling, but the subject doesn't blink an eye.

It's show time at the Red River Valley Museum as Dr. Jill Meredith of Duke University and a crew of cameramen from North State Production Service turn, tilt and change the object of their attention to get the best possible angle.

On this particular day, it is a sculpture of Amon G. Carter Jr. — late publisher of the Fort Worth Star-Telegram and son of its founder — as a youth in Culver Military Academy uniform that is before the camera.

While it might not be considered a production of Hollywood magnitude, the film they are making is certain to provide insights into the achievements of Electra Waggoner Biggs, the artist who created the Carter bust and other sculptures of the American West.

The 25-minute documentary — financed in part by grant from the Texas Committee for the Humanities, a state program if the National Endowment for the Humanities — will detail the career of the Texas artist, rancher and oil heiress who is perhaps best known for her landmark statue in Fort Worth of Will Rogers and his horse, "Soapsuds." The work, "Riding into the Sunset," stands in front of the Will Rogers Memorial Coliseum in the city's cultural district.

The video production also coincides with the completion of a new installation at the Red River Valley Museum that documents the history of Texas ranching. This exhibit in the Waggoner Room, expected to be finished in mid-June, contains 20 sculptures by Mrs. Biggs and the mural of the Waggoner Ranch by Fort Worth artist Adrian Martinez.

When completed, the Waggoner Room exhibit also will include artifacts loaned by local collectors, including saddle, roundup and branding equipment, guns and other ranching items. Along with the opening of the room, a public screening of the film is planned.

The artistic biography video will consider the art works and artistic career of Mrs. Biggs from an historical perspective by presenting them within the context of a 100-year tradition of bronze sculptures of portrait likenesses and Western themes.

The video will include conversations with Mrs. Biggs in her studio, living room and outdoors on the grounds of her home as she discusses her early training and exhibitions, her major commissions and their subject, her working methods, her artistic concerns and her relationship to the American and European traditions of sculpture. Intercut will be visuals of Mrs. Biggs' works in her studio, at the museum and in Fort Worth and Sherman along with still photographs of works in private collections.

The video is expected to be broadcast statewide through the Public Broadcasting Service and local cable stations. Stations which have expressed interest in showing the film include those in Dallas, Odessa, College Station, El Paso, Houston and Austin as well as stations affiliated with Vernon Regional Junior College, Texas Tech University, Central Texas College, American Texas University, Midwestern State University and Amarillo College.

Public screenings are also being considered at Texas Tech, Duke University and the National Museum of Women in the Arts, as well as other institutions that have sculptures by Mrs. Biggs.

Both budget committees ignore Moynihan, Rostenkowski plans

WASHINGTON (AP) — House and Senate budget committees are moving toward adoption of fiscal 1991 deficit-reduction plans that ignore eye-catching proposals by two of Congress's most influential members.

The Democratic chairmen of the two panels, which are well behind schedule, hope to produce separate $1.2-trillion spending blueprints for next year by late this month. But neither will reflect Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan's plan to cut the Social Security payroll tax or Rep. Dan Rostenkowski's call for a combination of widespread spending cuts and tax hikes.

Instead, House Budget Committee Chairman Leon Panetta, D-Calif., and his Senate counterpart, James Sasser, D-Tenn., are prodding their Democrat-dominated committees to compose similar packages that rely on more traditional formulas.

Plans considered likely to emerge from each budget panel would shrink the deficit by $37 billion, relying on roughly equal amounts of defense cuts and new taxes and lesser savings from cuts in Medicare, payments to farmers and other domestic programs.

"I'll be able to get a budget resolution out of committee," Panetta said last week after two weeks of closed-door meetings with panel members. "It will take a lot of work on the (House) floor, but we will pass it there, too."

The decisions to snub Moynihan, D-N.Y., and Rostenkowski, D-Ill., reflect different judgments.

Congressional leaders believe Rostenkowski's proposal to save $55 billion next year by freezing Social Security and other domestic programs and by raising income taxes and other levies is medicine that is simply too harsh for most lawmakers.

"There are no votes there," Panetta said of the plan advanced by the chairman of the tax-writing Ways and Means Committee. "Rostenkowski would have much greater impact if there were votes there to support it."

But his proposal to slash the payroll tax would shrink federal revenues by $55 billion, a cut that members of Moynihan's own party complain would make next year's anticipated $101 billion federal shortfall even larger. The Gramm-Rudman Act sets a deficit target of $64 billion for fiscal 1991, which begins Oct. 1.

"We're going to have enough difficulty meeting the budget targets without coming up at this juncture with a revenue loser," Sasser said.

For their parts, Moynihan and Rostenkowski insist that their proposals are still alive. Moynihan said last week that he expects a Senate vote on his plan in May and that he expects to win. Rostenkowski said he believes his proposal stands as good a chance as anything Panetta can piece together.

Panetta's and Sasser's committees will begin writing their budget plans in earnest when Congress returns from its Easter recess next week.

So far, Panetta is considering a plan that would hold defense spending to about $295 billion — $11.5 billion below the amount needed to keep up with inflation, and $8 billion less than President Bush wants. He would raise $14 billion in new, minor taxes — the same amount as Bush. He also would cut Medicare and other federal benefit programs by $3.5 billion, while boosting housing, childrens' and other social programs by about $6 billion.

Aggie license plates on the way

COLLEGE STATION, Texas (AP) — Supporters of Texas A&M next month will have another way to show their Aggie Spirit and pay for scholarships.

Texas A&M is the first school to have its license plate design approved as part of a newly authorized state program.

"We fully expect to be first in the number of students, former students and friends who choose to show their spirit and school loyalty in this new way," said Robert Smith, vice president for finance and administration.

The plate will have the ATM logo prominently displayed in maroon and the words "Texas A&M University" in dark blue, to match the other letters and numbers on the plate.

The fee for the collegiate license plate will be $30, in addition to the motor vehicle registration fee, according to Texas A&M. Of the funds, $25 will be deposited to the state treasury to the credit of the school on the plate.

The plates also may be personalized. But those buyers must pay the usual extra $40 for the special letters and numbers, plus the $30 dollar collegiate fee.

The plates will be available in May, but orders already are being taken at county tax assessor-collector offices across Texas, said Smith.

MEXICO CITY (AP) — A spokesman for the Roman Catholic church on Monday blasted a latter to the pope by more than 400 Mexican priests, saying that it contained "Marxist-Leninist elements."

The letter, printed in Monday's editions of the Mexico City daily La Jornada, addresses the economic and social problems of indigenous peoples, peasants and workers.

"Sometimes, those who write these letters do not present evangelical proposals, but Marxist-Leninist elements ... the class struggle is not Christian and generates violence," Genaro Alamilla, spokesman for the Roman Catholic Church in Mexico, said at a news conference.

In their long letter to Pope John Paul II, who begins a visit to Mexico on May 6, the priests say, "The painful experience of the poor hurts us."

The letter says that Mexico's economic crisis "has sharpened the pain of the vast majority of our people, every day increasingly poor. The priests who live with the indigenous peoples and peasants are witnesses to the economic and social abandonment in the countryside over the past decade."

In their letter, the priests also criticized Mexico's policy to open the economy to increased foreign investment.

Monsignor Alamilla criticized the letter, saying that the pope's visit "does not have a political or economic connotations, but pastoral."

He also said that church officials are hoping that the Mexican government reforms its constitution to allow closer relations with the church.

Children of refugees remain in legal limbo

By Jo Ann Zuniga

HOUSTON — The teen-age boy shrugged, displaying the nonchalance of youth, as he told stories of death and misery in his native El Salvador.

"We became accustomed to that — blood on the street. People were always dying," he said.

This 17-year-old boy and 20 other young people from Nicaragua, El Salvador and Guatemala are living temporarily in three Houston area shelters. Most are awaiting deportation.

They are among the subjects of an eight-month study, funded by a $25,700 Hogg Foundation grant, that will assess the long-term psychological effects of the violence they witnessed in their homelands and the hardships they endured on their journeys to the United States.

David Rosales, the local administrator for Catholic Charities' Undocumented Juvenile Foster Care program, sadly calls some of them "walking time bombs."

"There have been some children as young as 10 or 11 years old, who traveled alone or with smugglers over long distances," Rosales said. "They have stories of assassinations in their countries, torture, raids and forced recruitment into the military."

Rosales said some of these young immigrants suffer from post-traumatic stress syndrome, an affliction common among Vietnam veterans who witnessed and participated in the horrors of war.

Julio, now 18, became a soldier in El Salvador at age 12. On a recent day, he calmly tended to the red roses adorning the front yard of a shelter.

"When he first came here, I thought he was epileptic. A word or a noise could set him off for two or three hours, but we found out they were anxiety attacks," said Lucy Won, a foster parent at the shelter.

At 16, he made his way to the United States. He has been ordered deported but is trying to appeal.

A 16-year-old Salvadoran in one of the shelters said he left his home when his father was killed for being active in a right-wing political group. His father was shot in the street, but neighbors said he bled to death because they were afraid to retrieve his body for several hours.

"I attended some of the (political) meetings, too, and I didn't want to place my mother in danger by staying," the boy said.

He has been in this country about 15 months. He has a hearing scheduled in May on his appeal of a deportation order.

Rosa Urquiola is a consultant with the Justice Department's Community Relations Service, which oversees the shelters. She said the proportion of young refugees from El Salvador is increasing in the wake of bloody battles that sent peasants fleeing from their homes there last November.

Last year, 1,347 Central American minors awaiting deportation or court hearings passed through the Houston shelters and another three shelters in the Brownsville, Texas, area. The average waiting time is 18 months, and the young people receive education and counseling while they live in the shelters.

The Houston shelters are operated by Catholic Charities under a contract with the Immigration and Naturalization Service. The program, now receiving $400,000 annually in federal funds, has assisted about 300 youths since it began in November 1988.

A two-story house donated for six months by a Catholic women's group for use as a shelter, has been painted by the immigrants, and the atmosphere there like that of a foster home. A cereal box on the kitchen counter and jars of peanut butter atop the refrigerator are luxuries not usually found in detention centers.

The program helps them to forget the trauma in their lives with a daily school routine. At noon, the boys eat lunch in the cafeteria alongside senior citizens from the neighborhood.

Won, the foster parent, recently watched over the youths while some finished their homework. Others completed court case forms with the help of a social worker, and some asked permission to play soccer in a neighborhood park.

Latimer, a 17-year-old Nicaraguan, has lived in the United States for a year. He had been living in Guatemala, where he had gone to escape former Nicaraguan President Daniel Ortega's government.

"I belonged to a group of youths who believed in democracy," he said. "A lot of my friends were incarcerated, and I didn't want to stay." He is one of the lucky ones who have received political asylum.

King releases 7,700 inmates in goodwill Ramadan gesture

RIYADH, Saudi Arabia (AP) — The government said Monday it had freed nearly 7,700 inmates, including all political prisoners, as a goodwill gesture marking the holy month of Ramadan.

There is "not a single political prisoner" in the kingdom, according to an Interior Ministry announcement broadcast by state-run Riyadh radio, because King Fahd had declared amnesty for 7,681 prisoners.

The gesture was made possible by benefactors who donated about $87 million to help pay the public and private debts of some prisoners, the ministry said.

In a report on Saudi Arabia issued in January, the London-based human rights group Amnesty International said more than 700 people were detained without trial from 1983 to 1989, mainly Shiite Moslems, including Iranian-backed fundamentalists.

The report said at least 100 people were seized last year and named 66 held in three prisons.

Those still jailed were being held for capital crimes or were convicted and awaiting sentencing.

Capital crimes under Islamic law include murder, punishable by beheading; adultery, punishable by stoning; and thievery, punishable by cutting of hands from the wrist. In recent years, beheading was also decreed by Moslem theologians for drug smuggling.

The amnesty included Saudis and foreigners, but no breakdown was released. It referred to an unspecified number of foreigners detained for various misdemeanors, financial crimes and public law violations. It said their embassies were asked to prepare for their deportation, as is customary.

It is a tradition for rulers in Islamic countries to issue amnesties during Ramadan and other Moslem occasions. Islamic law also allows for benefactors, sometimes anonymous, to settle prisoners' debts as an act of charity.

Neighboring Gulf countries have already announced their amnesties for Ramadan, but they have not exceeded 200 prisoners.

The Saudi statement did not identify the benefactors. In neighboring United Arab Emirates, President Sheik Zayed bin Sultan Al Nahyan personally underwrote the debt of the 150 prisoners released in the capital Abu Dhabi.

Nepal's king seeks interim coalition

KATMANDU, Nepal (AP) — King Birendra on Monday asked the once-banned Nepali Congress Party to form an interim government to rule until the first free elections in nearly three decades are held.

A leader of the party, Ganesh Man Singh, met with Birendra and said the king indicated he would give up his wide powers. Singh said after the meeting that parliamentary elections would be held within a year.

Birendra approved Krishna Prasad Bhattarai as the new prime minister pending the vote, Singh said. Bhattarai is acting president of the Nepali Congress Party.

The events capped a day of political victories for the Nepali Congress Party and its ally, the seven-party United Left Front. They led nationwide pro-democracy demonstrations that began in February.

The palace press secretary was not available for comment.

Earlier Monday, Birendra dissolved the nonpartisan national assembly and announced the resignation of the 10-day-old government of Prime Minister Lokendra Bahadur Chand, clearing the way for the new interim government.

The concessions followed the king's decision April 8 to lift the 29-year-old ban on political parties in an effort to appease the pro-democracy movement, which included violent clashes between protesters and police.

Singh then suggested Bhattarai as the new government leader, and the United Left Front agreed, the statement said.

It added "Mr. Singh repeatedly emphasised the great benefits the country shall derive if his majesty very gracefully accepted the role of a constitutional monarch of a parliamentary democracy."

Singh later said Birendra expressed his inclination toward changing the country to a constitutional monarchy. "He did not say in explicit terms but favored the idea," Singh said.

N.Y. Times News Service

NAIROBI, Kenya — The Ethiopian military government, unable to dislodge rebel troops from a crucial Red Sea port and losing ground to another group of insurgents who have moved to within 100 miles of the country's capital, is now fighting for its life, Western diplomats in Addis Ababa said on Monday.

And while the rebels continue to pile up military and psychological victories, the Soviet Union, Ethiopia's traditional arms supplier, has refused to allow the government of Lt. Col. Mengistu Haile Mariam to use Soviet aircraft still based at Addis Ababa airport.

The refusal has severely strained the transport of troops to Asmara, the besieged, government-held northern city and the staging point for efforts to retake the port of Massawa.

Unable to retake the port — four or five counterattacks in the last several weeks are believed to have failed, with about 12,000 Ethiopian troops killed, wounded, and captured — the government is now bombing Massawa, the diplomats and officials in Washington said.

The port, Ethiopia's main access to the sea and the major delivery point for acutely needed relief food for drought-stricken peasants, was bombed four or five times by the Ethiopian air force last week, the officials said.

Tens of thousands of tons of foreign-donated food have been destroyed by bombing since mid-February.

The government's position has continued to weaken since the Eritrean People's Liberation Front, which has been fighting for the secession of the northern province of Eritrea for nearly three decades, took Massawa in mid-February.

After that, the Tigrean People's Liberation Front, which is fighting to overthrow the Mengistu government, captured important towns in northern Shoa Province, which includes the capital.

In testimony to a Senate committee in Washington two weeks ago, the assistant secretary of state for African affairs, Herman Cohen, described the increasing civil conflict in Ethiopia as "possibly the largest in terms of combattants and the most destructive conflict in the world today."

As the Soviet role continues to decline — Soviet officials have told Western diplomats in Addis Ababa that the current military assistance program, which runs out at the end of this year, will not be renewed — Israel has stepped in. Western officials say Israel is helping Mengistu militarily, although not as much as the leader would like.

So far, the severe famine that had been feared for northern Ethiopia has been averted, but aid officials say that in order to prevent large-scale starvation, large amounts of food still need to be delivered.

A main reason famine has been avoided so far has been the surprisingly successful delivery of Western-donated food through Sudan to the worst affected areas by the increasingly sophisticated relief agencies of the two rebel groups, Western aid officials said.

THE WILD WEST

Imagine your child reliving the days of the old West in this Fort Apache playhouse. It even has a watch tower and secret sliding door. The 2" x 2" post and beam construction is designed to take any kind of 'horse-play'. The playhouse measures 4' x 4' x 4', not including the tower. The plan contains photos, drawings, a materials list and cutting schedule. Traceable letters for the sign are also included.

PART-TIME $$$$$ AVAILABLE

April 2 the Midland Reporter-Telegram became a morning newspaper instead of an afternoon newspaper. As a result we have several routes which need to be re-filled with qualified, responsible individuals. Due to this one-time large number of routes available, now is the best time ever to obtain a route in your area!

Often asked questions:

Is it worthwhile for adults also?

Yes! Our current carrier force is already 60% adult and 40% youth. Morning newspaper routes are attractive for:
- ADULTS who have full-time jobs, yet want to supplement their income with a steady part-time job.
- MOTHERS who can't justify a part time job and daycare, because as a carrier, you do not need daycare!
- COLLEGE STUDENTS needing a part-time job which will work with classes!
- YOUTHS who are involved in afternoon school functions, but want to work!
- SENIOR CITIZENS wanting regular exercise, added income, or just want to work with people, neighbors, and friends!

Depending on the size of the route(s), from $150 to $500 monthly! Some motor routes make even more, although currently none are available. Depending on your service record, you may qualify to move up to a motor route later!

The actual delivery takes 1-2 hours Monday - Saturday, and 2-3 hours on Sunday, again depending on the size of the route(s). Also, a few hours a month are needed to collect from subscribers. Many carriers choose to handle some of this by putting envelopes in subscribers' papers. Some collecting in person will be necessary though.

When do the papers have to be delivered by?

6:00 am Monday - Friday, and 7:00 am Saturday and Sunday.

Do I ever get a day off?

The job requires a 7-day a week commitment. However, carriers do take days off by finding a friend or family member to substitute for them!
