president, makes the presentation to Homer Wilson, left, director of operations, and R.L. (Bob) Mitchell, company president. In addition to the Chamber luncheon, Celanese hosted a banquet for its employees last night.

Celanese Concludes Celebrations; Two Top Officials Honored By C-C

By LARRY HOLLIS

The Pampa plant of the Celanese Chemical Co. concluded its observance of its 20th year with a luncheon sponsored by the Chamber of Commerce and a banquet last night to honor its employees.

Speaking at the luncheon, R.L. (Bob) Mitchell, president of the Celanese Chemical Co., of New York City, said the years in which Celanese has been in Pampa have been good ones.

Mitchell, concluding speaker for the Chamber's regular monthly meeting, said the character of the residents of the city was a great factor in the company's decision to put the plant in Pampa.

"We look for something we can contribute to the community as well as to what they can contribute to us," he added.

The factors affecting the decision to construct the plant in Pampa was the major topic of discussion for the luncheon as various officials reminisced about the plant's development.

E.L. Green, Jr., retired vice president of the Energy Group for Cabot Corp. in Pampa, was to have delivered remarks on the decision to construct the plant in Pampa, but he was absent because of illness. His remarks were read by Floyd Watson, president of the First National Bank.

Green's remarks concerned the efforts of a group of Pampa residents, including himself, to interest Celanese in moving the plant to Pampa even after a decision had been made to establish it in Dumas. After a series of meetings, Celanese reconsidered its first decision and then chose Pampa as the site.

Green received a plaque from Celanese for his assistance in bringing the plant to the city and for his longtime support of the company. The presentation was made by John Frick, first manager of the Pampa plant, now plant manager in Bishop.

The Chamber also presented a plaque to Green in appreciation for his aid to the economic development of the community. Both plaques were accepted for Green by Watson.

Mitchell and Homer Wilson, director of operations for Celanese, New York, were both named honorary "Top O' Texans" by the Chamber. Frick also spoke on the early history of the plant and discussed the persons who had exerted the greatest influence in locating the plant in Pampa and aiding its development.

About 170 Chamber officials, Celanese officials and area businessmen attended the luncheon at Pamel Hall at the plant.

After the luncheon, about 30 guests were taken on a tour of the plant facilities.

At last night's employees' banquet in the Heritage Room of the M.K. Brown Memorial Auditorium, President Mitchell again assured them of a bright outlook for the Pampa plant.

He said no major expansion was in the immediate offing, but plant operations "were expected to continue as usual."

Only two problems locally, he stated, are transportation costs and continued water supply. Both of these, he said, are being worked on with an optimistic outlook for solution.

Mitchell deplored government controls which he charged contributed to improper uses of the nation's natural resources.

The company president spoke highly of the record of Pampa plant employees in production and its safety mark of nearly 1-million man hours without a lost-time accident.

C.E. (Gene) Steel, manager of the Pampa plant, presided at the banquet and introduced 45 of the original plant employees and their wives who were honored at last night's affair. They represented nearly one-third of the 150 employees of 20 years ago.

Ray Barnard, a recently-retired Celanese employee, presented Steel a huge birthday cake with 20 candles. It was inscribed "Celanese, Happy 20th Anniversary."

John Frick, first manager of the Pampa plant and now manager for Celanese at Bishop, Tex., was presented a plaque in recognition of leadership that started the Pampa plant on its way.

In concluding his remarks to the Celanese employees, President Mitchell said:

"The Pampa plant is not seen as one that will be stagnated. It is expected to maintain its growth toward medium volume and low cost products."

"I know its success rests with the capability of each of you to meet the challenge of change which has been so well done in the past 20 years."

"There is no fear about the Pampa plant's continuation."

New HUD Secretary Named By President

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Nixon today named Undersecretary of Commerce James T. Lynn to be secretary of Housing and Urban Development and announced that Rogers C. B. Morton would remain as Interior secretary in his second-term Cabinet.

As Nixon continued his Cabinet shuffle, it was learned that Secretary of Commerce Peter G. Peterson will leave his current post next month to head a new government council in charge of all U.S. international economic policy.

Lynn, 45, succeeds George Romney as HUD secretary. Romney announced last week he was leaving the Cabinet to form a citizens action organization.

With today's announcement, Lynn continues his rapid climb in administration ranks. He left his private law practice in his native Cleveland in 1969 to become Commerce department general counsel, and was named undersecretary of Commerce in March 1971.

Morton, who resigned his seat in Congress to become Interior secretary after Nixon fired Walter Hickel, is the third Cabinet officer Nixon has announced will serve in a second term. Last week the President disclosed Secretary of State William P. Rogers and Treasury Secretary George Shultz will be retained in those positions.

White House press secretary Ronald Ziegler would not comment on the report that Peterson would take over the new government council on international economics, nor would he discuss reports that South Carolina textile magnate Frederick B. Dent would succeed Peterson at the Commerce department.

Nixon was scheduled to meet today with Shultz, who will continue to head the Treasury Department and will take on expanded duties as the administration's top economic policymaker during the second Nixon term.

The President also planned a courtesy visit today with the U.S. ambassador to Spain, Horacio Rivera.

Santa Parade At 3 p.m.

As of 11 a.m. today the Santa Day Parade was scheduled to go on as planned as a cold wave plunged into the area with temperatures expected to dip into the teens by the afternoon.

The parade was set for 3 p.m. after the organization and individual units gathered at Coronado Center.

The decision to hold the parade was made at a meeting of the Retail Trade Committee of the Chamber of Commerce this morning.

A number of trucks have been tied up because of decorations made for the parade originally scheduled for Nov. 30. That parade was postponed until today because of cold weather.

The Committee decided to go ahead with the parade so the trucks could be released for regular service.

The school superintendent's office reported shortly before noon that schools will be dismissed at 2 p.m. even if a later decision to cancel the parade was made.

Even though the Committee had decided to continue with the parade, they left the possibility open that the parade could be called off if the weather got much worse.

The forecast called for cloudy skies, fog and winds as a cold front moved through the area.

Santa Claus was to appear in the parade with some of his helpers. He was to meet with the children and distribute candy prior to the parade at Santa's House at Coronado Center and after the parade at Santa's House downtown.

Prizes and plaques will be presented to winners of the various categories at 4 p.m. Wednesday in the Chamber offices. Out-of-town judges were to judge the entries today.

High Court Rules States Can Shut Down Bars Featuring Nude Dancers

WASHINGTON (AP) — On a 6-3 vote the Supreme Court ruled today that the states can shut down bars that feature nude dancers and other "bachelorette parties."

Justice William H. Rehnquist, in a sexually explicit majority opinion, said the First Amendment freedom does not go beyond books and movies to "gross sexuality" in public.

Besides, he said, the 21st Amendment in ending Prohibition gave the states broad controls over the sale of liquor in bars and night clubs.

Rehnquist agreed with the state's appeal. He said prostitution, indecent exposure to young girls and rape flourished near California bars and night clubs in which "live entertainment" was featured.

The decision upholds 1970 regulations authorizing the state's Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control to suspend or revoke a liquor license when officials conclude there is conduct "contrary to public welfare or morals."

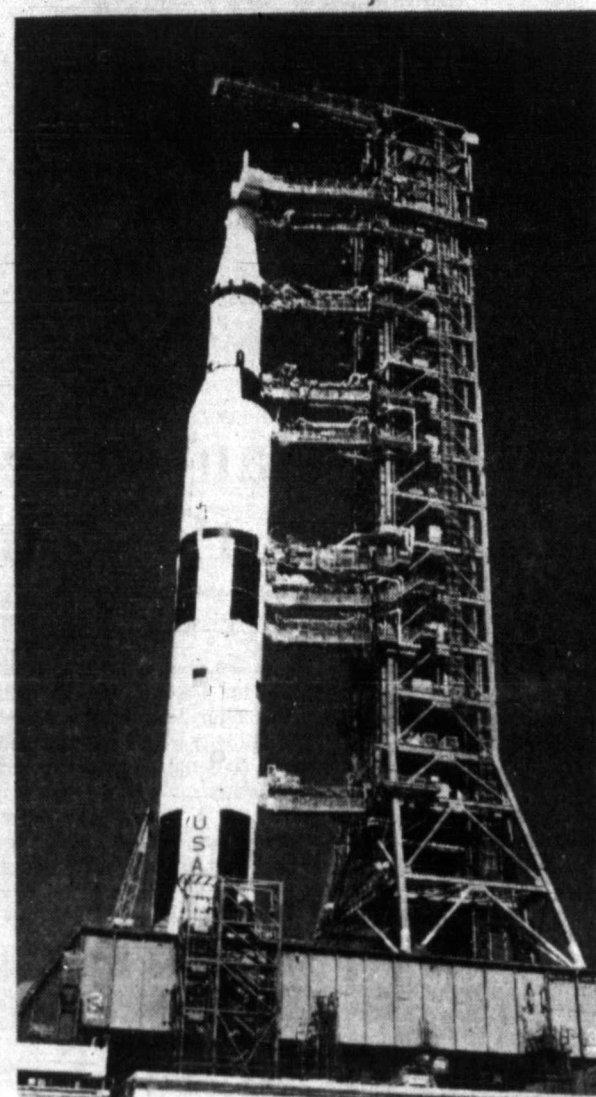

The regulation had been declared unconstitutional in April 1971 by a three-judge federal court in Los Angeles empaneled to consider a suit brought by a group of bar owners. That ruling said the state could regulate movies and nude "entertainment" only if it proved at a trial that the exhibitions were obscene.

Justice Rehnquist, in announcing the reversal, said "The department's conclusion, embodied in these regulations, that certain sexual performances and the dispensation of liquor by the drink ought not to occur simultaneously at premises which have licenses was not an irrational one."

The court's shrunken liberal bloc, Justices William O. Douglas, William J. Brennan and Thurgood Marshall, dissented.

Douglas, in a brief and restrained opinion, said the majority had drawn a generally accurate line between "expression" that should be protected by the First Amendment and "conduct" upon which officials may constitutionally act. But he said the court's ruling was based on an abstract situation since the regulations had not been applied to the particular bar owners in either civil or criminal proceedings.

APOLLO 17 SPACE VEHICLE is poised for the final manned moon mission on Cape Kennedy Space Center's Launch Complex 39-A.

Apollo Countdown Going On Smoothly

CAPE KENNEDY, Fla. (AP) — Preparations for Wednesday's last Apollo flight to the moon are "the smoothest we've had in some time," a space agency official said today as the pace accelerated on the launch pad for the 9:53 p.m. liftoff.

Astronauts Eugene A. Cernan, Ronald E. Evans and Harrison H. Schmitt slept late to adjust their biological time clocks, and expected to do some pleasure-flying in jet trainers and last-minute cramming for the flight of Apollo 17.

At 7 a.m. the downward-ticking clock reached the 28-hour mark—the official start of the terminal phase when the spacecraft and its systems receive final checks and fuel.

At 1 a.m. Wednesday, the 402-foot-high service structure will be rolled away and the Saturn 5 will stand alone, poised for the half-million mile, 13-day journey.

All systems — human, hardware, weather and rodent — were ready for America's first night launching of humans into space — and the last moon landing in the foreseeable future.

The launch crew ran into the usual number of minor and easily fixable problems — hose connections that sprung leaks, an air filter that didn't fit, a piece of scientific equipment that wasn't working right.

None of it was important enough to disrupt the minute-by-minute schedule as electronic clocks tick downward for the liftoff.

The weather outlook continues to be favorable, the space agency said. The forecast calls for partly cloudy skies with winds from 8-12 m.p.h. out of the south. The temperature in the vicinity of the launch pad should be in the 60s.

That should be good news for the 500,000 space buffs expected in the Cape Kennedy area and millions of others in a 500-mile radius who will see the Saturn 5's 2,200-foot-long tail of fire if skies are clear.

And the rodents — five tiny mice who'll give their lives for science — come aboard today in individual tubes inside a sealed aluminum canister. They'll ride in the command ship America with Evans round-and-round the moon while Cernan and Schmitt explore the combination high and lowland area of Taurus-Littrow on the surface.

Experimenters implanted water-like cosmic ray detectors under the skulls of the mice. Back on earth, the tiny natives of the California desert will be killed and their pea-sized brains examined to determine how cosmic radiation has affected brain tissue.

That experiment looks to the future when humans hope to make extended space flights, but another lunar landing by Americans is not in plans for the rest of the century except perhaps as a joint Russian-American venture.

Sharing Checks Go Into Mail

WASHINGTON (AP) — Federal revenue-sharing checks go into the mail this week and the Treasury Department advises cities and states not to be surprised if they get less than expected.

Charles E. Walker, deputy Treasury secretary, said Monday that the complex formula under which state and local government allotments are figured will not be updated until early next year.

The local governments, Walker said, should be patient until the department publishes the full information on which the checks were based.

Some 39,000 governmental jurisdictions should receive federal payments under the revenue sharing plan, approved by Congress and President Nixon this year.

The first checks will total about $2.7 billion. The present authorization is for a $30-billion program over five years.

The Treasury Department says it will make adjustments in payments where necessary once new statistics are compiled early next year.

U.S. And Red Negotiators Cancel Scheduled Meeting

PARIS (AP) — The negotiating session today between Henry A. Kissinger and Le Duc Tho was canceled this morning, but U.S. and North Vietnamese spokesmen said they would meet again Wednesday.

No explanation was given for cancellation of today's meeting. There was speculation that the announcement was a ruse to mislead newsmen, and that President Nixon's national security adviser and the Hanoi Politburo member were planning a secret rendezvous.

Eleven days ago during the last round of Kissinger-Tho negotiations, the North Vietnamese announced that the two men would not meet that day. But they slipped off to a suburban site and conferred for an hour.

Kissinger and Tho resumed negotiations Monday after a nine-day recess. They met for a total of five hours amid a complete news blackout. But officials in Washington said the talks are moving to a climax.

Gas Pipeline Across Alaska Under Study

WASHINGTON (AP) — El Paso Natural Gas Co. has disclosed it is studying a plan to build a pipeline across 790 miles of cold, rugged Alaskan countryside parallel to the previously proposed trans-Alaska oil pipeline.

Howard Boyd, the firm's chairman of the board, said Monday that El Paso's proposed 42-inch-diameter natural-gas pipeline from northern Alaska petroleum fields to a southern Alaskan port would cost about $2 billion.

The pipeline would follow a route west of Fairbanks, past Anchorage and to a point just west of Seward.

At the southern port on the Kenai Peninsula, Boyd said, the gas would be chilled into liquid and transported by ship to West Coast ports where it would be regasified "and used to meet critical energy needs of the western third of the United States."

The proposed 48-inch trans-Alaska oil line is still an unsettled controversy.

Two Inches Of Snow Predicted For Area

An arctic cold front headed into the Panhandle area this morning, bringing cloudy skies, fog and a possibility of light snow, with temperatures expected to drop into the teens by the late afternoon.

Accumulations of one to two inches of snow are expected in the Panhandle area as the air mass drops temperatures lower than they were at dawn.

Pampa had a temperature near 30 at dawn, but shortly before noon it was reading at 23 degrees, a drop of at least five degrees.

Northerly winds of 15 to 25 miles an hour with even stronger gusts made the cold air seem even colder as customers began some early shopping for Christmas.

Despite the cold weather, the city's Santa Parade was still set to go on as scheduled at 3 p.m. today.

Low tonight, is forecast to dip near 10, with a high Wednesday under gradually clearing skies predicted to be in the upper 20s.

High Monday was 37 degrees under partly cloudy skies.

Travelers advisory warnings have been issued by the National Weather Service in expectation of the snow and high winds.

The cold front brought fog, freezing rain and light snow as it headed south into the state.

Low clouds, fog and drizzle reduced visibilities down as low as zero in all sections of the Upper Texas Coast Early today, forcing shipping to a standstill. The same conditions to a lesser degree affected the eastern two-thirds of the state, the Associated Press noted.

Light rain developed across South Central Texas and the Middle and Lower Coastal Plains. Only West Texas enjoyed both clear skies and mild temperatures.

Boston Police Eye Coed Deaths

BOSTON (AP) — The deaths of four young women and the disappearance of another in the Boston area have prompted comparisons with the Boston Strangler murders of 10 years ago.

But "there's nothing to indicate these cases are all related," Boston Det. Lt. Edward F. Sherry said Monday.

Capt. John V. Silk of the Lynn police echoed the investigators' views, saying, "So far we haven't come up with anything — except that three of them went to the same school."

Sherry said a number of girls in Boston have been accosted recently while hitchhiking — a threat believed common in at least some of the five cases. They have talked to police, but the descriptions of their assailants were different in each case, he said.

However, police departments in Lynn, Brockton and Nashua, N.H., are keeping in close touch with Boston as they investigate the deaths of women in their areas in recent months.

All five girls were between 18 and 22, all residents of Boston or Cambridge, all white, all middle-class and all attractive.

Autopsies indicated that three of them were strangled and the fourth was strangled and stabbed. Rape was established in two cases, but the two other bodies were not found immediately after death, and the time lag complicated autopsies findings.

TO LOAD WHEAT

First Russian Vessel Calling At Houston Port Since WWII

HOUSTON (AP) — For the first time since World War II, a ship carrying the Russian flag docked in Houston Monday to carry part of the wheat the United States sold to Russia in a massive grain deal.

At the same time the ship was docking, the head of the 65,000-member National Maritime Union, AFL-CIO, Joseph Curran, said he was afraid the United States is not living up to the deal to ship a third of the grain in American ships.

The M.V. Kasimov docked at Cargill Inc. grain elevator on the Houston Ship Channel to load part of the estimated 10 million tons of wheat the United States is selling to Russia in a three-year, $75 million deal.

Curran, in an interview during a visit to Houston Monday, said he has been hearing that the United States may not hold Russia to a deal announced in November. That agreement says the wheat will be split three ways for shipment to Russia—one third in Soviet ships, one-third in U.S.-flag ships and the final third in ships of other countries.

"We've been hearing some rumors that they may be getting less as things develop," Curran said of agreement to charter American ships for the grain deal.

"There is no evidence right now that they'll be carrying less, but we're going to be watching it very closely."

Curran said he was in Texas to "fill the members in on what's going on in Washington."

and to help break ground for a new NMU hall in Port Arthur today.

So far, two U.S. ships have left the Port of Houston with wheat for Russia. The Ogden Willamette left here Friday and the National Defender sailed Saturday.

Frank J. Hemmen, manager of the Cargill elevator, said they will start loading 11,500 tons of wheat on Tuesday. The Kasimov will sail on Wednesday.

ACTION OPPOSED

NCC Sponsors Address By Anti-Semitic Black

DALLAS, Tex. (AP) — Church leaders today voiced hope that their hosting of a black militant poet, characterized by Jewish groups as anti-Semitic, won't set back Christian relationships with Judaism.

"There is no reason why it should dampen our desires to collaborate to the limit," said Dr. Edwin Espy, general secretary of the National Council of Churches, when questioned about the episode.

Jewish observers to the council's triennial general assembly registered dismay at its sponsorship of an address Monday by poet-playwright Leroi Jones, terming him an anti-white, anti-Jewish extremist. One Jewish group cancelled plans to send observers.

Jones, also known as Imamu AMIRI Baraka, told representatives of most major Protestant and Orthodox churches that unless they "support the revolution" of the poor, they will be swept out of existence, along with other "primitive, obnoxious forces of the world."

"There is no middle ground," he said.

The Rev. Dr. William P. Thompson, chief executive of the United Presbyterian Church, commented that "we need to hear strident criticism" even though it may upset most white delegates.

He also expressed hope it would not hurt relationships with Jews, and added: "Just as we need to hear what Jews say to us, and to understand it, we also need to hear others with positions different than ours, including people like Baraka."

Observers of the American Jewish Committee said they were deeply chagrined that a person "notorious for his anti-white racism and vicious anti-day after a ceremony scheduled to be attended by U.S. and Soviet officials.

Hemmen said the Kasimov's docking was "perfectly routine."

The Kasimov is the first Russian vessel to participate in moving the wheat sold to the Soviet Union. A second Russian vessel, the M.V. Metalurg Baykov, is due here later in the week.

School Board Will Discuss Campus Usage

Members of the Pampa school board were scheduled to meet at 1 p.m. today for further consideration of the future of campuses and buildings within the system.

Members of the administration and staff will supply facts and figures as they are needed for the panel to formulate decisions in the light of classroom and campus usage from the teacher viewpoint as well as their own.

This is not an action meeting, according to Bob Carmichael, president of the board. From this meeting and others in the past, members of the board will ultimately take the action necessary to bring physical plants within the system into proper perspective with developing conditions.

The meeting this afternoon at Carver Center is open to the public.

Pampans Back From Meeting In Oklahoma

Local delegates to the semi-annual circuit convention of Jehovah's Witnesses have returned from Altus, Okla., where they met with 1,302 delegates from congregations in 18 other neighboring towns.

Area personalities from each of the participating congregations were involved in the program and administrative functions transforming the Altus City Auditorium into a center of Bible education for the two-day event.

According to R.A. McCarroll, circuit supervisor for the local area, "All of our 21 convention departments were staffed by local people of the Texas Panhandle and Western Oklahoma." He added that the delegates from Pampa, Texas added to the tremendous success of the convention.

IOCC Reviews Position On Import Oil Control

HOUSTON (AP) — The 34-state Interstate Oil Compact Commission was to review today its position that the federal mandatory oil import control program should be strengthened.

The position adopted in a June resolution has drawn criticism from some congressmen who contend such endorsements violate the Oil Compact's charter to serve as a forum on oil and gas conservation matters.

A group of New England states also have challenged the legal status of oil import controls on grounds there has been no proof such imports pose a threat to national security.

A resolutions committee headed by Ben Ramsey, member of the Texas oil and gas regulatory commission, was to meet preliminary to today's final general session of the Compact's annual meeting.

The 600 federal, state and industry officials also were to hear a speech by Senator Henry M. Jackson, D-Wash., whose Interior and Insular Affairs Committee is to hold hearings in January on the nation's increasing dependence on oil imports.

John Connally, former Secretary of the Treasury, told the interstate agency Monday the nation's developing energy crisis "is going to be the tragedy of this century."

"It is tragic indeed in the state of affairs in which we live today for this nation to be dependent upon foreign sources for oil and for fuel," Connally said.

Connally said there is need for a national energy policy and that he has discussed the situation with President Nixon and that Nixon is well aware of the seriousness of the energy crisis.

"He knows very well that the impact of the crisis is going to affect us in every way."

"It is going to affect us economically, politically, militarily, and diplomatically. Future foreign policy could well be determined by energy requirements alone."

Military Court Reviews Calley Jr.'s Conviction

FALLS CHURCH, Va. (AP) — A military court has begun a review of Lt. William L. Calley Jr.'s conviction in the My Lai massacre following an appeal by Calley's lawyers that his 20-year prison sentence was too harsh.

"I think he has had his lesson—way more severe than I think is justified," said George W. Latimer, Calley's civilian attorney, in portraying Calley's actions at My Lai as those of a young officer responsibly carrying out orders.

The three-judge Army Court of Military Review is expected to announce early next year whether it will sustain the conviction and uphold the sentence, reduce it or set Calley free. The court cannot increase the penalty.

Calley, 29, was convicted nearly two years ago of murdering at least 22 Vietnamese civilians at My Lai during a search-and-destroy mission March 16, 1968. He was sentenced to life in prison but that subsequently was reduced to 20 years.

Throughout nearly six hours of oral arguments Monday, Latimer pictured Calley as the scapegoat, noting that of 25 men charged in connection with the massacre only one—Calley—was convicted.

"How long is it necessary that Lt. Calley have to serve in prison to act as a deterrent for other soldiers (not) to do the same thing?" he asked.

The defense argued that Calley should not have been convicted of any crime greater than manslaughter, contending that he acted without malice, and without malice there could be no murder charge.

"We are saying that he did not know what he was doing was murder," said Calley's Army lawyer, Capt. J. Houston Gordon of Covington, Tenn. "Rather, we are saying he thought he was doing his job."

Countered the government: "For the sake of expediency, that man summarily executed a group of people."

In asking the review court to overturn the conviction, Calley's lawyers argued that the court-martial was illegal because he was held without consent beyond his discharge date.

Six Pampans Given Awards For Services

AMARILLO — Six Pampa residents were honored recently at Pioneer Natural Gas Company's annual service award dinner at the Amarillo Country Club.

Roy E. Franke and Warren H. Wilson received awards for 20 years of service to the company and 15-year awards went to Robert E. Douthitt and Robert L. Schroeder. Vernon T. Alexander and Jerry L. Conway received five-year awards.

Burton P. Smith, president of Pioneer, presented the awards at the banquet which was one of three held by the company in different cities in its service area. This year, 216 employees, representing 3,170 years of service, are being honored.

Life without love — the only real tragedy

By Abigail Van Buren

(© 1972 by Chicago Tribune-N.Y. News Synd., Inc.)

DEAR ABBY: I get so riled when I read what some women write to you and complain about. Let me give you a sample of what my life has been like:

When I was a year old, my mother ran off with another man. My father boarded me out, and when I was 12 he remarried again and I went to live with him and my stepmother. That marriage was no good, either. My father was a big drinker and used me sexually so I got married at 14 just to get away from home. I had three miscarriages and one live child from that marriage, then my husband left me for another woman. I was only 21. Then I married again and I thought my luck had changed, but no sooner did we have a decent house and nice furniture than we got burned out and lost everything. No insurance.

Last March, I was raped by two men on my way home from work and they broke my glasses. Then my husband got laid off from work, and on the way to pick up his unemployment check some kid in a jalopy hit him and totaled our car.

Right now I am in the hospital having a hysterectomy. Every word of this is true, but there are plenty of people who are worse off than I am because I have a man who loves me and I love him. LUCKY IN OHIO

DEAR LUCKY: Bless you. Matching your experiences in one lifetime would be a job for Job.

DEAR ABBY: I thoroughly enjoyed reading your column concerning what some nurses in various hospitals around the country prefer to be called. However, there is a group among registered nurses that prefers to be recognized by a title not reflected in your column. We are known to family, friends, professional peers, and patients as "Mr."

And we represent about two per cent of the R. N. population of the nation. RALPH A. GEORGE, R. N.

DEAR RALPH: You mean that two per cent of all the registered nurses in the U. S. A. are MALE? Good night, Nurse!

DEAR ABBY: I am a registered nurse, and I was irked by the letter signed "IRKED NURSE IN N. J."—she didn't like being called "nurse" by her patients.

How about the nurse who refers to her patients as "The gallbladder in bed 6," or "The prostate in bed 9?" I think the impersonal manner with which some nurses treat their patients today is disgraceful.

LOVE BEING A NURSE

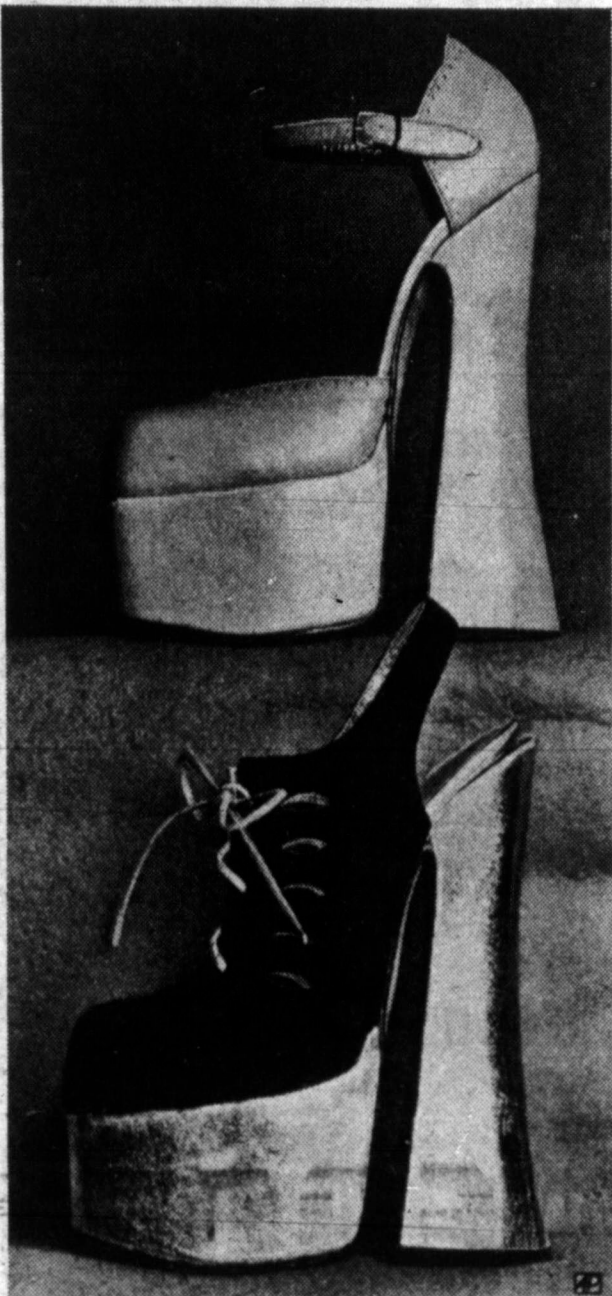

CONFIDENTIAL TO LUELLA: The founder of the BIG BROTHERS is Irvin F. Westheimer, a Cincinnati, now in his nineties. And your suggestion that black and white Big and Little Brother combinations would promote real brotherhood has not only been thought of—it's being practiced in many communities.

Problems? Trust Abby. For a personal reply, write to ABBY, BOX 69700, L. A., CALIF. 90069 and enclose a stamped, addressed envelope.

Hate to write letters? Send $1 to Abby, Box 69700, Los Angeles, Cal. 90069, for Abby's booklet, "How to Write Letters for All Occasions."

New Look For Stepping Out

REVIVAL—The seven-inch heel with three-inch platform sole may be a wild style to some, but people are buying them in droves for a "look" to complement today's new costumes. A tan leather semi-bubbled toe shown with a hand-carved heel and squared off platform is ankle-strapped and has handstitching around heel and instep. The black-suede laceup sling-back shoe also has a seven-inch heel and a three-inch platform, both in silver kid. A cutout design with silver laces is featured on face of the shoe. Both are from J. Arrowsmith, Inc.

South won the diamond lead with dummy's king and led a low heart. East played the eight and South won the trick. He played his ace of diamonds, ruffed his last diamond in dummy and threw East in with the ace of trumps.

East led the five of clubs and after a slight amount of thought, South played his seven-spot. West took his ace and shifted to a spade, but the defense had all the tricks they were going to get. South rose with dummy's ace; led a club to his king and since East's queen of clubs had fallen, South was able to return to dummy with the 10 of trumps and get rid of his last spade on dummy's club jack.

Do you see why South elected to play the seven of clubs? No, it wasn't because East held the queen and not the ace. It was because when South reviewed the bidding he remembered that East had passed in second seat. East had shown up with the ace of hearts and was marked with the queen of diamonds. WEDNESDAY, DEC. 6
Your birthday today: Material affairs promise good returns and better working conditions. Relationships develop an undercurrent of excitement. Today's natives have to find an unusual path to a settled vocation, or often change vocations.

Aries [March 21-April 19]: New approaches to old problems abound—be flexible and try one. Friends are cordial, more likely to offer cooperation.

Taurus [April 20-May 20]: Press forward along established lines, get some of the personal preparations for later changes out of the way.

Gemini [May 21-June 20]: Perhaps you find your scheme isn't going to work. Be more receptive; ask, if you do not get volunteered comment.

Cancer [June 21-July 22]: You are under observation, as it were, on matters that you may not be fully concerned about. Find a broader perspective.

Leo [July 23-Aug. 22]: Speculation brings unexpected results. Steady communication is critical—what is said once will not be repeated where you can hear it.

Virgo [Aug. 23-Sept. 22]: Stick to people who have a firm positive drive, cheerful viewpoint. Your own creative energy is strong and available.

Libra [Sept. 23-Oct. 22]: Preparations are yet to be made before you plunge into expansive ventures. New ideas and contacts prove exceptionally rewarding.

Scorpio [Oct. 23-Nov. 21]: This promises to be a middle-of-the-road sort of day, with friends able to make more than their usual quota of suggestions.

Sagittarius [Nov. 22-Dec. 21]: A variety of hidden situations inadvertently turns out to be beneficial to your interests. Avoid haste and fatigue.

Capricorn [Dec. 22-Jan. 19]: An old question is resolved by a new answer, perhaps for good. It's up to you to find a better formula.

Aquarius [Jan. 20-Feb. 18]: The experiment you try now should relate to what you need to learn. There are relatively unfamiliar people and facts to deal with.

Pisces [Feb. 19-March 20]: Much of your success today depends on how you see the drifts of circumstance and what your reactions are.

Short and Bare

The little black dinner dress, short and bare this season, can focus even more attention on the legs. Wear a pair of glittery stockings for that extra sparkle.

By BETTY CANARY

Personally, I am tired of hearing it from the Football Widows. Probably because I am the sort of person who continually counts her blessings. (We are all products of our environment, and I was brought up on two rules: Count your blessings! and Eat! Do you want to be a scarecrow? A scarecrow meant anybody under 200 pounds.)

My husband watches football on television when we are not attending the games. And, I'm glad. Being at a football game, either in the stadium or in the family room, means he hasn't made me a Fishing Widow or a Hunting Widow. (At least when he comes back to me he doesn't bring along a dead something to be skinned, scaled or eaten.)

I must mention that we're still holding hands while we watch the games. If the day comes when he holds out his hand and expects me not to squeeze it but to place yet another can of cold beer in it, then I'll know the honeymoon is over.

There are other indications the honeymoon is over, of course. A major checkpoint is:

Her saying, "Romance, shomance! I'm not freezing this winter!" Then buying a flannel nightgown and bed socks.

The honeymoon is definitely over when:

He orders his hamburger with onions without even asking if you're having onions.

She stops bothering with her contacts and wears her regular glasses all the time.

He stops talking about how feminine and darling it is, the way she's scared of electricity, and suggests she take the mechanics course down at the YWCA.

She starts dropping in at lunchtime at the old office—just in case they might want to ask her to come back during rush season.

He invites his brother to visit without asking if she'd planned for the weekend.

He joins a Friday night bowling league before asking if she's planned anything for the weekend.

He assumes she never has any plans at all.

Gang Activities Blamed For 32 Deaths In L.A.

LOS ANGELES (AP)—"I'm going to kill you tomorrow," the young voice warned the teacher. "I'm the leader of the Brims and you hurt my partner, so I'm going to kill you."

The threat might have been forgotten in years past—a student saying something over the phone he never intended to carry out. But few teachers in south-central Los Angeles would disregard the remark now.

Youth violence—much of it blamed on warfare between black youth gangs—has increased sharply in some areas, resulting in some 32 deaths in Los Angeles this year and leaving high school campuses tense. Los Angeles police officials say gang-related deaths have tripled over figures for each of the last three years, and administrators and parents report that nongang members are carrying weapons to school to protect themselves.

The gang war situation is a "very, very critical problem right now," says Compton police Sgt. Art Camarillo.

The list of incidents have been many and have included beatings, shootings and robberies.

Five students were wounded, one seriously, as they stood near a homecoming float at Jefferson High School. Police said the youths apparently were shot from a passing car.

Students at Locke High School reported seeing several students, believed to be gang members, carrying shotguns on campus. A student with a shotgun later was arrested at a nearby hamburger stand after allegedly threatening to kill another youth.

Three youths armed with clubs and sticks entered a classroom at Manuel Arts High School and took $185 from teachers and students.

A "nest at a bridal shower in suburban Long Beach was shot in the abdomen and killed. A 15-year-old youth from nearby Compton was taken into custody.

A 15-year-old Compton youth was shot and killed in what was believed to be a fight between two rival street gangs.

Two other youths were wounded and another was beaten unconscious.

In the latest incident, another 15-year-old youth, Eric Anthony Gates, was shot and wounded last Wednesday night at a Compton intersection. Gates was listed in good condition at a hospital, with two gunshot wounds in the right leg. A 16-year-old youth was arrested near the scene of the shooting, police said.

Police blame the outbreak on the availability of firearms and what seems to be a cycle in gang activities.

"It's worse now than ever before," said Sgt. Camarillo, who grew up in Compton.

"When I was growing up in the community, there were gangs, but it was different. We used to have a lot of feet, fists, sticks and stones, but they don't kill people too often. Firearms are the things nowadays."

A Los Angeles city schools spokesman blamed the incidents on "one or one-half per cent of young people who are involved in gang activities."

"We are not seeing kids taking up arms in a general way," he said. "We don't think there is that much more potential violence than before. It's just that gangs are so much more active."

Camarillo noted another effect of the gang wars.

"It's having a hell of an effect on the community, because people are scared to come out and enjoy their facilities, such as parks," he said.

One expert sees increased police action as only a stopgap measure, stressing that gang activity is as much a product of big city ghettoization as prostitution, drugs and other crime.

"The gang is really just the product of other things in ghetto life," said Dr. Malcolm Klein, chairman of the University of Southern California's sociology department and author of "Street Gangs and Street Workers," a study of the value of assigning social workers to work with individual gangs.

"If we continue to have the kind of urban structure we have, we are going to have gangs," he added.

Arab Countries Pushing For Oil Price Increase

Lagos (AP)—Here's a good four letter word to remember the next time you notice the cost of gasoline pinching your pennies.

The word is "OPEC"—Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries—which just wrapped up a two-day conference in this steamy West African capital.

OPEC made clear its 11 members, who produce over 80 per cent of the world's oil exports, intend to dig deeper into your wallet in coming years.

Put simply, OPEC wants to get as much money as it can out of the developed, industrialized nations of the world.

It's nothing personal, but OPEC represents oil-rich under developed nations that want to become modern and grow prosperous.

They know they are still dependent on continued investment and expertise from the developed world to get ahead, say oil experts here. So they won't, as one put it, "kill the golden goose," but just fleece it a little.

They are going to charge as much as possible for their oil and, one way or another, ultimately plan to take over the foreign-run oil companies operating in their countries.

Then they will have the last say on the supply of the world's most important source of energy.

So at the meeting here, they voiced support for Iraq, which seized foreign oil operations last summer.

And they moved closer to setting up a $220 million fund to protect OPEC nations from possible punitive measures by angry oil companies upset with OPEC policies.

OPEC comprises Libya, Iraq, Iran, Kuwait, Saudi Arabia, Abu Dhabi, Qatar, Algeria, Nigeria, Indonesia and Venezuela. Ecuador is expected to join up next year.

These countries were almost meaningless to the United States a few years ago when Americans could live on their own oil resources.

In the next 10 years, as global demand for oil increases, there won't be enough to go around.

Oil industry experts predict the United States by 1985 may have to import more than half the oil its people and industries consume.

So OPEC countries, sitting on huge pools of oil, are beginning to call the shots in the volatile, international oil business. They want, as Nigeria's military ruler Gen. Yakub Gowon told OPEC delegates here, to "master the technology of the oil industry."

That is the only way, Gowon said, to "ensure that the resources derived from exploiting our petroleum endowments make the maximum impact in changing our economies into fully modernized ones, guaranteeing to our citizens a decent and rising standard of living."

Because of the changing world oil scene and increasing demand, some compromise between the needs of the consumers and the suppliers will have to be reached, oil analysts say.

Some OPEC members, such as Saudi Arabia, Libya, Iraq, Abu Dhabi and Qatar, depend almost entirely on oil revenues for survival and future progress.

When OPEC was first formed 12 years ago it concentrated on getting higher prices for the oil of member countries.

But with its new-found strength, due to growing demands for oil, OPEC members are now aiming at a takeover of the oil operations in their countries.

The governments of Libya and Iraq, for example, have simply nationalized some of their foreign-run oil operations as "acts of lawful sovereignty."

Other countries appear to have found a more moderate formula for winning a greater say in the oil industry while maintaining better relations with the oil companies.

Saudi Arabia, which has the world's richest known supply of oil, recently hammered out such an agreement with seven major western oil companies in New York.

Four other OPEC countries—Abu Dhabi, Qatar, Iraq and Kuwait—were also involved in the negotiations.

The agreement calls for each country to get a 25 per cent initial participating interest in the oil operations in their countries. This participation will escalate to a controlling 51 per cent by 1983.

All five Persian Gulf states except Iraq have agreed in principle to this formula, thrashed out by Saudi Arabia's Harvard-educated minister of petroleum, Sheikh Ahmed Zaki Yamani.

Iraq may agree later after it resolves its current dispute with oil companies over nationalization.

Murder In Afghanistan Halts UNICEF Walk

NEW YORK (AP) — Two Minnesota brothers set out 2½ years ago to walk around the world in behalf of UNICEF. They were more than halfway to their goal—having covered 8,000 land miles—last month and might still be going if a gang of murdering bandits hadn't jumped them near Kabul, Afghanistan.

Now the survivor, David Kunst, is making plans here to pick up again where he and his slain brother John left off. David keeps with him a handwritten note on yellow lined paper that John wrote as they trekked into eastern Turkey a year ago.

The brothers from Waseca, Minn., had been warned by officials about the dangers of the area in winter—danger from wolves and possibly from people—and John had jotted down his thoughts about their decision to go ahead.

"It's like a play," he wrote, "with all the actors playing their parts right up to the tragic ending."

Last Oct. 22, nearly a year after he penned the note, 25-year-old John Kunst played his part to the tragic ending and died in the dust along a road in a rugged gorge in Afghanistan.

But Dave, 33, back in New York and still recuperating from his own bullet wound from the bandit attack, is determined it will not be the end. He is busy in a United Nations Association office making plans to resume the march at the very spot where the bandits attacked to go on through Pakistan, India and China and then back to Minnesota.

He's even going to try to persuade another brother, Peter, to circle the second half of the globe with him on foot.

Dave and John originally started out in June 1970 just to do something for "education, experience, adventure," something that had never been done, the surviving brother recalls, but soon decided to give more meaning to their walk around the world by doing it to promote UNICEF—the United Nations International Children's Emergency Fund.

"We thought about the peace movement," he said, "but then we thought if we walk for children, not too many people are going to say something against children. One lady in Ohio told us 'I've read about you guys. It's a great adventure, but you're walking for the wrong organization—it helps Communist countries.' We just said 'We're walking for children, not Communists.'"

A woman in Minneapolis gave them the idea of walking with a mule, not only to carry their provisions and call attention to their project, but also to ward off people thinking they were hitchhikers. So "Willie Make It" the mule joined them as far as New York, where they sent the mule home, got a plane to Lisbon and acquired "Willie Make It II" with the help of Portuguese tourist officials.

In Ankara, Turkey, they acquired "the greatest thing that happened to us in a year and a half," a wagon for the mule to pull, supplied by Turkish tourist officials. At an American Air force base 50 miles from Istanbul, officers provided them a cover for the wagon so they would have shelter when they stopped to eat or sleep.

"But we never rode in the cart," says Dave. "We have scrolls from every mayor of every town, stamped and signed, and everyone from truck drivers to tourist bureaus, testifying that we walked."

In western Yugoslavia, they had acquired a mongrel dog and named it "Drifter," but it was killed by Turkish sheep dogs trained to kill wolves. A newfound American friend in Ankara gave them another dog, and an embassy official arranged to have a little dog house built under the wagon, so the little dog could jump in and ride when it got tired.

Across most of Afghanistan, the American walkers had Afghan police protection, Dave says, and "John and I agreed that Afghanistan was one of the best countries we'd been through, as far as officials were concerned."

"They met us at the border, and sent police to check on us as we walked. At Hurat they gave us breakfast, put us up at a hotel, and the governor gave us an official banquet."

"The police followed us almost to Kabul, but we thought we had got through the dangerous part. We could have called for police protection through the gorge, but we never really wanted police. I can't explain it, but you want to do it yourself."

About 6 o'clock the night of Oct. 22, Dave suggested they pull the wagon off the road for the night. They were cooking dinner in the wagon when the dog began barking.

"John said there were six Afghans walking down the road," Dave recalls, "and I said 'Watch 'em. We finished eating, and were sitting there talking when we saw headlights up the road quite a ways, and I said 'It's probably a truck broken down.'"

"About 9 or 9:30 I looked out a little peekhole and the truck had parked about 200 feet from the wagon, and I said 'It must be the same truck in trouble again.' Three guys got out and looked under the hood."

"Then John said the same six Afghans were coming back. I had a shotgun they had given us in Ankara for the wolves the winter before and I loaded it."

"When the six Afghans got by the truck, they seemed to rush over and grab the driver and his helper and I said 'I think they're robbing the truck.' They took the driver across the road and I asked John if I should jump out and shoot up in the air, and he said 'No, you're not in the United States.'"

As five of the men came toward the wagon, Dave argued with his brother over whether to shoot first, and after shouting the Afghan word for "Go Away," Dave fired the gun in the air.

"They jumped back and spread out," he said. "A shot was fired—I don't know why. I think it was a signal shot, and I said we should get under the wagon but John said no, we should walk up the mountain."

But before they could do either, more shots rang out and both brothers were wounded. The bandits yanked Dave's wristwatch and belt off, and threw a mattress over him.

"I could hear them going through the wagon," Dave recalls. "Then the truck started up and it must have scared them—they took off. I went to my brother and tried to feel a pulse, but I had a feeling he was dead. I told myself I had to get help and I tried to stop several trucks, but they wouldn't stop. I thought of the mule and went back to the wagon and untied the mule, then stood on a water jug and tried to mount, but the mule wouldn't cooperate."

"I remembered we had gasoline, and I thought I'd spread it across the road and ignite it—then they'd stop. But in the wagon everything was scattered all over and I couldn't find the gasoline. So I went back to the road and went down on my knees, holding my side. I was really bleeding by then."

It was 3:30 in the morning before a jeepful of Afghan soldiers rescued Dave and took him back to Kabul to a hospital.

The bandits had taken clothing, a Persian rug given them by Iranian tourist officials, a gift bag from the Afghans, field glasses, a tape player, three cameras, and "of course, the shotgun."

They left behind the food, despite Afghanistan's drought and famine, because, Dave says, "They don't trust canned goods."

But the next day the wagon was still there and the mule was nearby, munching on the sparse grass. Willie Make It II is now in an Afghan stable and a UNICEF official in Kabul is paying out of his own pocket to take care of the mule and wagon until Dave can start the second half of the trip.

His greatest pleasure on returning to the United States was to find out that his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Al Kunst of Clear Lake, Iowa, approve of his plan to go on.

Asked why he wants to, Dave pulls out another scrap of yellow paper on which John had written that there were many reasons for the trip.

"But of them all," John wrote, "The search is the most important."

FONDUE FOR FUN

The fondue pot is a simple route to holiday hospitality. When the beef cubes are bubbling so will be the conversation. Prepare plenty of steak, cut in 1-inch cubes and place in refrigerator until ready to cook along with accompanying sauces. Pour oil into fondue pot to a depth of 2 inches and place over direct heat on range and bring to 375 degrees F. Remove and place over alcohol burner or canned heat to maintain temperature. Spear steak cubes, one at a time, and hold beef in hot oil until cooked to desired degree of doneness. For rare allow approximately 1 minute; medium, 2 minutes. If oil cools so it no longer bubbles briskly when meat is added, reheat on range to 375 degrees F.

A Watchful Newspaper

EVER-STRIVING FOR THE TOP O' TEXAS
TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Our Capsule Policy

The Pampa News is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessing. Only when man is free to control himself and all he produces can he develop to his utmost capability.

The News believes each and every person would get more satisfaction in the long run if he were permitted to spend what he earns on a volunteer basis rather than having part of it distributed involuntarily.

Surgeon, Incise Thyself

A spokesman for the Internal Revenue Service asserts that "about 99 per cent of the people could do their own income taxes if they just sat down and wrestled with the forms."

The statement is correct as far as it goes, but it doesn't go far enough to indicate the complete picture. For example, the regulations that tell you how to fill out tax forms run into volumes.

So if you plan to "wrestle" with your own tax forms, you had better wrestle with the regulations first. For without a good reason for doing what you did, you may find yourself at the wrong end of an accusing finger pointed by your friendly IRS spokesman who told you to be your own tax accountant.

By way of a specific to show that tax-returning is not simple, an associate described to us a conversation regarding a challenged deduction that he had made. It seems that a roof blew off a dwelling that he had rented to another party. The storm occurred in the latter part of one year. He received and paid the bill in the next year. His tax accountant counted the cost of restoration as an expense for the year in which the roof blew off. The IRS auditor questioned this handling.

"Normally, a large item like that should be capitalized and spread out over a number of years," the auditor said.

Why should it be capitalized?" the taxpayer asked. "The property isn't worth anymore with the new roof than it was with the old."

"Your mean you're taking it as a casualty loss?" the auditor asked.

"Yes, it was a casualty loss."

"In that case you should have had an appraisal of the damage as compared to the fair market value before the damage." The IRS agent was not trying to nitpick. To the contrary, he was trying to be helpful. In fact, his advice was better than that given by the tax accountant. For procedure would have resulted in a $10,000 paper loss, because the property would have appraised that much lower without the roof. The tax accountant's procedure on the other hand showed only a $600 expense.

The point is, that a decision of this type is a highly refined matter on which two sharp minds may very often disagree. There have been several tax suits on the same issue that were resolved one way in one appeals court and resolved a different way in a different tax court.

Of course, it doesn't take too much brains to pay taxes. The rub comes in trying to determine what taxes are due, under Caesar's rules. Sure, anybody can fill out a tax form, provided he doesn't mind paying more than the IRS rules exact.

John Doohan's Journey

Australia is a land of wide open spaces and, in its history, a considerable chunk of socialism. But for John Doohan it wasn't socialist enough. Doohan was a welder in Perth, a port city on the West Coast. He wanted to move to the Soviet Union, his idea of a closer approach to Utopia.

Moreover, he was able to persuade his wife. So the family packed up. With three children and one grandchild, they sailed on a Soviet promise. John had been promised a job by Soviet authorities at $360 a month plus fringes. The family landed at Leningrad. There the family head learned his promised job was not in a Russian city, but in a remote settlement in Siberia.

Daughter Catherine, 22, didn't take to the cold weather too well. She had been wearing a mini-skirt. She thought the Russian cities looked drab. Two of the younger children got sick. They found the food to be different, and they disliked it. And they thought they were being watched all the time.

Ten days after arrival, the parents decided they had made a mistake. Passing through Moscow on the way to Siberia, they stopped at the Australian embassy. "We want to get out," they said. Soviet authorities didn't mind. They let them go.

That's where the news report ends. We don't have any way of knowing what John Doohan thinks. Maybe Australia looks a lot better to him now. Maybe he is eyeing the map in a search for paradise someplace else on earth. Maybe he has decided that the prospects of a Utopia are dim. Perhaps, he just quit thinking about the matter all together.

The will to persevere is often the difference between failure and success.—David Sarnoff, former president of Radio Corporation of America

Courage is the best gift of all; courage stands before everything. It is what preserves our liberty, safety, life, and our homes and parents, our country and children. Courage comprises all things; a man with courage has every blessing.—Plautus

Schooling Lack Linked To Poverty

By RAY CROMLEY

WASHINGTON (NEA)—If we are not to see third, fourth and fifth generations of the same families on welfare, this nation had better find out what is different about poor families and how to assist and encourage them to help themselves. The record to date is not good.

If guiding this generation of families out of poverty proves too difficult a task, perhaps we can learn, at least, how to help their children break out of this prison.

There are, of course, many theories on how this could be done. More promising, however, is a five-to-six-year study paid for by the U.S. Labor Department and carried out by Ohio State University to determine the characteristics of potential recipients of family assistance payments. The study is not the definitive word on the problem, but it is a first step.

The Ohio State research indicates that poverty correlates with lack of education. Lack of education, in turn, correlates with a low level of education of the father or head of household and with a childhood spent in an area where educational opportunities were limited.

Those who had fathers with a low level of education, but who nevertheless were able to break away from the poverty circle, were the youngsters who, one way or another, managed to gain more years of schooling than their fellows.

In these cases, vocational training and more formal academic education were both strong pluses.

A relationship was found between premature withdrawal from high school and broken homes or early marriage.

The Ohio State research team also found: —That for women at least, the poor are less likely than the nonpoor to have lived with both parents when they were teenagers.

—A relatively high percentage of poor families are large in size and have no male breadwinner.

—The poor tend to be in worse health than the nonpoor.

The studies further suggest to the Ohio State team that, at least in the case of 45-59-year-old men in poor families, the problem of poverty may be less a matter of unemployment and more a lack of earning power.

Three out of five men, 45-59 years of age, white or black, living in poverty in families with at least one child, worked 50 to 52 weeks a year in the group and period surveyed.

Another 21 per cent worked 27 to 49 weeks. Ten per cent worked one to 26 weeks and 9 per cent did not work at all.

The median workweek was roughly 40 hours; but 10 per cent of the poor blacks and 20 per cent of the poor whites worked at least 3,000 hours in the year covered, which adds up to fifty 60-hour weeks in the year.

The researchers, rightly or wrongly, came up with the conclusion that by and large the poor wanted to work and that neither inability to find jobs nor unwillingness to take employment was the problem. The poor, in all too many cases, are poor primarily because they do not have a breadwinner trained for the skills needed to bring home the income required to pay for family needs.

BRUCE BLOSSAT

Trim White House Problems? No Way

By BRUCE BLOSSAT

WASHINGTON (NEA)—When President Nixon talks now of trimming back his White House staff and giving his department heads greater voice and authority, it is not unfair to remind the country that he said the very same thing in 1968, before he took office. This is not said to question his sincerity either then or now.

But it is a simple fact that he did not bring it off when he assumed the office in 1969, and a good guess is that he will find it extremely difficult to do so this time, though his intent seems earnest enough. In the first instance, in late November of 1968, I wrote that what Mr. Nixon was promising would not work out, and the reasoning offered then strikes me as still applying.

What intervenes here are the hard facts of life—the steadily mounting difficulties attached to managing a huge government in an ever more populous country.

Scholars who might be called basically White House watchers, and there are quite a few, generally note that the White House as an establishment has grown steadily in size, function and power since the days of Franklin D. Roosevelt.

Many things lie at the core of this trend. In times of crisis, the call from the country is for action. As the one great representative of all the people, the president is looked to as the initiator, the innovator, and the man who can make the engine go.

From Roosevelt's time on, we have lived on an almost continuous diet of crisis. For him it was both domestic and foreign, with the Great Depression and World War II. Then it was that the White House made its great leap forward.

But the troubles and the tense days did not end when Roosevelt died and the big war ended. Since then we have had two more wars, innumerable economic recessions, flare-ups all over the globe. Often many at a time. So it ran through the presidencies of Harry Truman, Dwight Eisenhower (whose years are mistakenly remembered as "placid"), John Kennedy, Lyndon Johnson.

The White House thus became the great locus of power, the center of national management, not least because so many problems were "foreign" and the president's authority in this realm is legally great.

You can argue, from good evidence, that the natural consequence of presidential and White House growth is diminished power and influence in both the federal bureaucracy and the congress. On its face, the proposition has to be true. Yet there is more to the matter than that. The bureaucracy burgeoned as government grew along with an enlarging nation. It became an almost immovable glacier. Presidents puzzled over how to make it move. The late Robert Kennedy, then attorney general and confidant to his brother, once told me: "We can't figure out how to get things going at state."

So the White House became the driving engine, the prod. Add to the trend the fact that so many problems seemed to slash across department lines, to intertwine with each other, and need decision at the top. It is still that way, and no words from Mr. Nixon can change it.

As for Congress, its decline has other causes than White House enlargement. Its mechanisms are obsolete in a trigger-quick age. Its men still can rise up on occasion and assert themselves to thwart a mistaken or over-reaching president. But most of the time their "action" has the look of a permanent blockade. They have yielded up their power.

The presidency is where the action is, and so it will be.

Buying on time is what you do when you hock your watch.

Inside Washington

House to Rap Zumwalt on 'Discipline Crisis'

By ROBERT S. ALLEN

WASHINGTON — A lot of people in and out of the Navy are going to be jarred by the report of the special House Armed Services Subcommittee investigating the widely-headlined "discipline crisis."

Foremost among them will be Adm. Elmo Zumwalt, modish Chief of Naval Operations. His knuckles will be rapped for "going too far, too fast."

While the investigators' report is still in preparation, three factors are being singled out as largely responsible for the series of violent racial outbreaks and numerous instances of deadly and costly sabotage on warships:

—Adm. Zumwalt's fanfare "liberalization" policy was ill-conceived and too precipitate—especially in certain "racial equality" aspects.

—Enlistment of a large number of young ghetto blacks basically unsuited for military service, particularly in the highly mechanized and technical Navy, due to below-par educational and social qualifications.

—Lax and unsound recruiting practices and procedures largely resulting from the Navy's difficulty in obtaining needed personnel because of the approaching end of the Vietnam war and the virtual elimination of draft demands. As one committee member tersely put it, "Too many of the wrong kind of youths were signed up."

Pointedly noted as significantly relevant is that in some months this year around 20 per cent of Navy recruits were black. Blacks constitute approximately 12 per cent of the population.

The three-member investigating panel was signally impressed by the frank testimony of Comdr. Frank Schaub, executive officer of the aircraft carrier Constellation, who played a leading part in dealing with the vehement demonstrations by black activists while the $1,000-ton warship was on maneuvers off the California coast.

Pulling No Punches Schaub's forthright comments are singled out as especially pertinent. One telling highlight is as follows:

"The policy of minority recruitment is poorly conceived and wholly unfair. Under this system, encouragement is given to the recruiting of educationally deprived personnel who are then placed in competition with others better educated and better fitted to meet operational requirements and standards. As a result, the inadequacies are assigned to duties of a mental and low-grade nature."

"They aren't necessarily stupid. It's just that they haven't got the education or capacity to handle electronic and technical equipment. You can't turn over a device or machine worth a million dollars to someone who is liable to ruin it through ignorance and inability."

Significantly, since the outbreak of the widely publicized shipboard disturbances and demonstrations, the Navy has quietly instituted two important corrective measures:

(1) Drastically tightened up educational and other eligibility requirements for recruits; at least two years of high school are now mandatory. (2) The number of black recruits was cut to around 9 per cent last month—lowest ratio for some time.

The investigators' report will highlight one grim and startling statistic:

In the past six months, 23 men have lost their lives in fires and explosions aboard Navy vessels—with some of these tragic incidents clearly due to arson and sabotage.

In Adm. Zumwalt's closed-door testimony, he flatly denied that "permissiveness" was responsible for sparking racial clashes and fatal "accidents." He vigorously defended his policy of "liberalized reforms" and contended "discipline is not being sacrificed."

Other officers, on the carriers Constellation, Kitty Hawk and other warships, bluntly and emphatically refuted the Chief of Naval Operations. The investigators' report will quote them as asserting:

"Unquestionably, some reforms and changes are necessary. But too much was undertaken in too short a time. When sailors challenge an officer's proper order and stage riots and demonstrations, that is not 'racial trouble.' That is mutiny, and it has to be dealt with as such. If we're going to have an efficient and combat-effective Navy, it has got to be a disciplined Navy. Anything less than that spells certain disaster."

The investigators' indicated criticism of Adm. Zumwalt already is evoking congressional approval.

Says Rep. H.R. Gross, R-Iowa, ranking member of the Foreign Relations Committee, "There will always be violations of regulations and discipline in any branch of the military service, but when violations become wholesale and are racially and politically motivated, there must be an immediate end, no matter how drastic the punishment. If Adm. Zumwalt is so liberal and soft that he can't enforce discipline in the Navy, he should get out or be tossed out."

On The Market Soon to be put up for sale to NATO and other U.S. allies are those "smart" bombs you've been reading about being used to destroy bridges and other difficult targets in North Vietnam.

Defense Secretary Melvin Laird has approved the sale of these laser- and television-guided missiles, and in a couple of months specialists will brief potential buyers on which "smart" weapons are available. A number of NATO and other countries have evinced keen interest in obtaining them.

The U.S. is the only nation that has operational "smart" bombs.

Russia is known to be developing this type weapon, but apparently still hasn't perfected it.

The Air Force is working on a "smart" bomb for use against armored vehicles.

Known as the "Maverick," it is an electro-optical guided weapon which in tests has proved highly effective against tanks and armored personnel carriers. NATO and other countries are particularly desirous of buying this weapon.

Foremost among them are Iran and Israel.

Love makes the world go round, but marriage stops it from spinning dizzily.

Tiny Fault Causes Ford To Recall 900,000 Cars

DETROIT (AP)—A tiny pin costing less than a penny is the villain in one of the auto industry's latest recall campaigns, this one involving more than 900,000 Ford cars.

The campaigns are annoying and costly to the auto industry—and admittedly virtually unavoidable despite industry efforts to make sure that all the nearly 15,000 parts of a car are defect-free.

Recalls have been part of the auto industry since 1915 when Buick recalled some roadsters to correct fastenings which slipped and allowed the gasoline tank to fall off.

They have gotten considerable attention since 1966 when the National Highway Safety Bureau was set up. One of its first directives was that auto manufacturers should report promptly any defect in a car which relates to the safety of its occupants.

In the first 30 months after enactment of the law, more than 11 million vehicles were called back for a variety of reasons, ranging from faulty gas tank caps to a defective cam which could cause an auto accelerator to jam.

The current Ford recall is typical of the king-size headaches that the tiniest of items can cause the industry.

It came to light when a couple of dealer garages reported that, in checking over the steering shafts on a car, they found a key "torsion rod lock pin" was missing.

It is a big name for a little pin, whose absence conceivably could cause an auto to wobble down the highway or result in a jammed steering mechanism.

The report prompted Ford's product reliability center to start an intensive check on 76,000 steering units in company possession last September after the defect was discovered. After a detailed study, Ford determined that about 200 cars nationwide might be faulty.

One report indicated "a malfunction of a single machine at the company's Indianapolis parts plant" caused the omission.

A Ford spokesman said, however, the fault "could be due to a machine or process failure or human error. Sometimes you cannot pinpoint the fault."

He added, "We know only that the first bad units turned up after a change in process at the Indianapolis plant last March."

Whatever the case, Ford, in September, sent letters to owners of some 900,000 1972 Torinos, Montegos, Fords, Mercurys, Lincoln-Continentials, Continental Mark IVs, Rancheros and light pickup trucks.

The costs of the recall campaign were estimated at over $1.5 million. This included, for example, the 900,000 letters which were mailed as certified mail at 37 cents each.

Ford, as provided by the law and its company policy, accepted responsibility for defective items and paid the costs of the dealer garage inspection of the cars to see if the pin was missing.

The Constitution of the United States makes no mention of a Cabinet.

Worry Clinic

By-George W. Crane, Ph.D., M.D.

Hal says that doting mamas and indulgent papas help produce the litterbug teen-agers on our highways. They also are accessories to the murder, rape and arson crimes of their children! So ignore Dr. Spool's malarkey and play the parental game properly!

CASE V-562: Hal D., aged 29, is a highway police officer.

"Dr. Crane," he protested, "will you please warn American mothers about litterbugs?"

"For we find our beautiful highways polluted with empty beer cans, as well as other debris discarded from automobiles by thoughtless teen-agers."

"And it is our experience that these same careless litterbugs are a by-product of the failure by mothers to make their children clean up their rooms or even put their toys away, while toddlers."

"In former days, we posted signs threatening to fine men for spitting on the sidewalks."

"Their mothers should have taught them better in their own homes!"

"And we police officers can't be 'wet nurses' to the millions of litterbugs unless the mothers help out."

LITTERBUGS
Hal is quite correct. Dr. Spool's lax doctrines of child training are malarkey!

You parents (especially you mothers) must train your toddlers in approved social habits long before they reach kindergarten.

See that they put their toys in a convenient toy box or the shelves of a bookcase in the nursery.

Praise them for their good deeds but also punish them for the bad!

That's an inexorable rule of animal trainers, who can often make seals, dogs and even elephants behave far better than many American children!

Even our schools are being invaded by this same Dr. Spool permissive ideology.

Good parents should always imitate animal trainers, whose motto is:

"Always reward the good but also always penalize the bad action and permit no exceptions to occur!"

New Star on the Chess Horizon

Five-Year-Old Met His Master on TV

By Linda Kay Richardson

NEW YORK — (NEA) — Chess has become the new national pastime and high on the list of the game's folk heroes is Shelby Lyman, TV's first chessmaster and nationally syndicated columnist for Enterprise Features, U.S. chessmaster Lyman has inspired thousands to learn the game through his spoken and written lessons, but he never imagined he'd be the mentor of a bright, energetic five-year-old who is fast becoming one of the brightest little stars on the horizon of the chess world.

Young Robert LeDonne watched Lyman on New York's Channel 13 this summer while the Fischer-Spassky match was being fought to the last move in Iceland. Fascinated by Lyman's nonstop narration of the event and by his continual demonstration of possible moves, Robert insisted that his father, TV news editor Bob LeDonne, find the family's chess set and teach him how to checkmate. That step took about five minutes.

To his parents' amazement, Robert, who had not yet reached his fifth birthday, remembered and used the moves made by Lyman on the air in games with his father. Soon the lad had mastered enough knowledge of the chess board to challenge and defeat — all the 13-year-olds in the block. When Robert whipped the dentist across the street, his dad decided he'd seen enough.

Lyman called the Marshall Chess Club in Manhattan and talked with Bruce Pandolfini, U.S. chess master and one of Lyman's telephone experts during the Fischer-Spassky telethon. Pandolfini invited the family to visit the club and sat down with Robert at a chess table, scarcely knowing what to expect. Pandolfini was frankly astounded.

"Robert's first game had the contours of a grand master's game," he later reports. "The boy is extraordinary... and so normal."

When club members, many of whom are U.S. masters themselves, learn how Robert had acquired his skill, they quickly call in Lyman. The first meeting of teacher and student in person is pretty normal, too.

Lyman: Hi, Robert.
Robert: What's your name?

NO HARD FEELINGS after the match, chess prodigy Robert LeDonne acknowledges his master, Shelby Lyman.

Lyman: Shelby.
Robert: Shelby Lyman? Want to play chess?

And so they play. Robert makes some moves demonstrated by Lyman on TV almost six months ago, but he also throws in a lot of others.

Lyman: Who taught Robert the "smother mate"? (an extremely advanced move).
Pandolfini: Well, I showed it to him a week ago, but he's never used it in a game before.

That's how it goes for a while, with Joyce LeDonne, Robert's mother, and Marshall members watching in credulously from the sidelines. Pretty soon Robert wants to play a game of "five minute" chess with Lyman.

The following scene is too much. Robert all but sits on top of the timer. He makes an opening move and slams his hand down on the clock to stop it. Bang! Shelby moves. Click. Robert parries. Pow!

Eventually Robert makes a wrong move. Shelby asks if he really wants to do that. Glancing up slyly, Robert makes the right move.

"He does that all the time," exclaims Pandolfini. "Just to put us on!"

Someone comments on Robert's dexterity, which includes not only his attack on the timer, but his way of handling the pieces and aggressively wiping them off the board when he makes a conquest.

Turning to Mrs. LeDonne, Robert asks, "Mom, when I was a baby, did I knock the pieces off the board like that?"

Warm smiles all around. After the session, Lyman talks about Robert with obvious delight.

"I've tried to teach six- and seven-year-olds who couldn't grasp anything compared to Robert," comments Lyman. He has pure ideas, is objective, and looks at the game maturely. He knows what's going on and won't let someone pretend to lose to him.

"Robert's biggest problem is seeing all of the board at one time, because of his size," adds Lyman.

Before chess came along in Robert's young life, there was the excitement of monopoly. He mastered that game a year ago when he was four. According to Bob LeDonne, "Robert had to learn to add numbers in his head at that time, because he didn't know how to write."

Other than that, Robert is in kindergarten and already is a good reader. But he also likes to swim, digs worms in the summer and tussles with his younger brother. How is he able to understand the complicated mental game of chess?

Robert's father philosophizes, "perhaps it is simply that children have fertile minds and, with motivation, can excel in almost any field. Robert is only one example. We're grateful that he was able to watch Shelby on television and learn something as educational and worthwhile as chess."

Robert LeDonne is now under the sole tutelage and sponsorship of the Shelby Lyman Chess Institute, a non-profit organization founded to teach not only children, but older people, youthful students in ghetto areas, those in jail or on drugs and others who might miss the opportunity to learn about the game through conventional means.

Lyman ascertains that Robert regularly shows up for lessons twice a week at the Institute's headquarters in New York City where he is learning "faster than most adults."
