Cancer 'bomb'

WASHINGTON — Researchers experimenting with mice have created a cancer "smart bomb" that attacks and kills leukemia cells without harming normal cells. The technique may be tested on humans this summer. Dr. F. M. Basin chambers seek clout in Austin

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff Writer

ODESSA — Members of the Midland and Odessa chambers of commerce hope to make Midland-Odessa a brighter dot on legislators' maps during a visit to the state capital later this month.

Plans for a joint legislative forum in Austin Feb. 21 were announced at a news conference Thursday. Local chamber representatives said they hope to gain more clout in the Texas Legislature through a concerted Midland and Odessa effort.

"This is the first time we (Midland and Odessa) are going to Austin in a cooperative effort," said Kyle Womack, chairman of the Midland Chamber of Commerce.

"They (legislators) can see the largest population center in West Texas are coming together on the issues," he said.

The Midlanders and Odessans are scheduled to meet with legislators during a breakfast organized by the Texas Association of Business and Chambers of Commerce. Gov. George W. Bush will make a presentation at the breakfast.

After the breakfast, the local participants will divide into smaller groups to visit with state representatives.

Quayle drops '96 GOP race for president

■ Former vice president abruptly reverses course, cites family concerns, fund-raising difficulties.

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Hard-pressed to attract the money and talent necessary for a strong campaign, former Vice President Dan Quayle abruptly reversed course Thursday and said he would not seek the 1996 Republican presidential nomination.

Quayle's decision came less than three weeks after he vowed to campaign aggressively as a voice for the conservative "unsilent majority" that he said was appalled at the decline of the family and the liberal bent of the social welfare system.

In a statement, Quayle said he was confident he could have waged a winning campaign if he had subjected himself to a grueling fund-raising schedule this year. "However, we chose to put our family first and to forego the disruption to our lives that a third straight national campaign would create," he said.

Advisers, associates and Republican operatives, however, said it became clear as Quayle geared up to run that the fund-raising outlook was bleak, and that he also was having a hard time convincing seasoned campaign operatives to sign on. A new, front-loaded GOP primary calendar has put a premium on early fund-raising, a difficult process cited by several others who recently bowed out, including fellow Bush administration alumni Jack Kemp and Dick Cheney.

Dan Quayle suddenly withdraws from race.

Quayle associates said recent health problems were not a factor; Quayle was hospitalized recently for blood clots and then to have his appendix removed because of a benign tumor. "He is completely recovered," said Quayle adviser Mark Goodin.

"He was extremely excited and fired up about running a campaign," said Goodin. "But the financial aspect of it threw a bucket of cold water on his enthusiasm."

The decision leaves three definite Republican candidates: Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole of Kansas, Sen. Phil Gramm of Texas and former Gov. Lamar Alexander of Tennessee. A handful of others are contemplating runs, including Sens. Richard Lugar of Indiana and Arlen Specter of Pennsylvania, as well as 1992 Bush primary challenger Patrick Buchanan. A few GOP governors and California Rep. Bob Dornan also are mulling the race.

For all his image problems in the electorate at large, Quayle was a favorite of cultural and religious conservatives who are active in GOP affairs and particularly influential in several early primary states. He is scheduled to speak Saturday night to a major conservative gath-

U.S. describes a far-flung AT&T fraud scheme that implicates 17

NEW YORK (AP) — Federal authorities on Thursday charged a former AT&T Corp. executive and 16 others in a far-flung scheme to exploit the telephone company's takeover plans.

The participants allegedly used information from the executive to trade the stock of potential AT&T acquisition targets over a four-year period. Prosecutors described the suspects as a web of friends and family spanning five Eastern states.

Some of the insider trading occurred at the height of publicity about notorious Wall Street speculator Ivan Boesky, who made at least $50 million through the illegal use of non-public tips about impending corporate takeovers.

"One of the problems in this area, why you have recurring violations, is that people are tempted by the ability to make a lot of money with little risk," said John Sturc, a former enforcement official at the Securities and

Speaker's wife defends new job, says no interest conflict

JERUSALEM (AP) — In a rare interview, the wife of House Speaker Newt Gingrich on Thursday defended her $2,500-a-month job attracting American companies to a high-tech business park in Israel championed by her husband.

"If I were going to get a political payoff, it would not be for the amount of money I am making," Marianne Gingrich told The Associated Press. "I mean, that's ridiculous."

Gingrich has acknowledged he promoted the idea of an Israeli enterprise zone where companies can operate free of most taxes. But he has said his wife was hired by the company promoting the park because of her own experience and that he never mentioned her company, the Israeli Development Export Co., in talks with Israeli officials.

He also has said her job involves no lobbying of the U.S. government and thus poses no

Atlantic paddler draws cheers, boos

OISTINS, Barbados — They laughed at Guy Delage when he set off to swim the Atlantic, his life riding on a high-tech kickboard and a supply raft bearing a fax machine and foie gras for New Year's Eve.

When the Frenchman struggled onto the white sand beach Thursday, his odyssey done, some were still laughing. They wondered if he'd really done much swimming at all. But they had to admit that whether he was really out for science or publicity, 55 days of dodging sharks, reefs and 10-foot waves was at least, well, an adventure.

Delage, 42, from Nantes in western France, was all elan when he set out Dec. 16 from the Cape Verde Islands, off the west coast of Africa. He said he was eager to experience "absolute solitude" and "a real risk of dying." He vowed: "Better to die in the jaws of a shark than in bed."

It was a considerably chastened Delage who came ashore Thursday in his gray and black wetsuit. Delage said his adventure

Suspect in World Trade Center bombing had explosives when he was arrested

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan (AP) — Police found a little surprise this week when they arrested the man suspected of mastermining the World Trade Center bombing: explosives in his bag, hidden in toy cars.

"He was found with explosives ... and chemicals used in making bombs," Interior Minister Nasirullah Babar, who supervises Pakistan's police, said Thursday as he described the arrest of Ramzi Ahmed Yousef.

Nabbed Tuesday in Pakistan, Yousef was secretly whisked to the United States in a U.S. government plane. In New York on Thursday, he pleaded innocent to 11 counts relating to the Feb. 26, 1993, bombing of the Manhattan landmark.

That attack on the world's second-tallest building killed six people, injured more than 1,000 others, caused $500 million in damage and introduced Americans to the fear of international terrorism.

Clean-shaven and dapper in a blue double-breasted suit, Yousef appeared calm and spoke fewer than 10 words during his brief appearance before U.S. District Judge John F. Keenan. "I plead not guilty," he said in English, waving off an interpreter. He told the judge he understood the indictment.

Yousef's lawyer, Avraham C. Moskowitz, denied reports that his client was cooperating with authorities and had blamed Iraq for the bombing.

The most serious charges Yousef faces are punishable by life in prison without parole. Yousef was being held without bond until his next court appearance on Wednesday.

Authorities say Yousef, who came to the United States in 1992, bought and mixed the chemicals for the bombs that exploded in a van parked under the 110-story twin towers.

Yousef, who had been living with two other bombing suspects in Jersey City, N.J., escaped the night of the bombing, using an alias to fly to Iraq via Pakistan. His fingerprints were found on two bomb-making manuals seized by authorities and on containers of bomb-making chemicals, authorities say.

Babar, the interior minister, gave several conflicting statements about the case that could not be immediately reconciled.

Last Sunday, Yousef arrived in Pakistan on a flight from Bangkok, Thailand, according to Babar. He was tailed by plainclothes police for two days, then arrested Tuesday at a Holiday Inn.

U.S. officials in Washington, however, insist Yousef was captured at a boarding house, not a Holiday Inn.

President Clinton called the arrest "a major step forward in the fight against terrorism." The State Department had posted a $2 million reward for Yousef's capture, but it was not clear if anyone would get the money.

Babar said two suitcases were found in Yousef's hotel room: one empty and the other with the toy cars.

The interior minister and other senior officials said initially that Yousef was carrying a passport and travel documents from his native Iraq. He used the alias of Ali Khan, one of them said.

But Babar said later Yousef was traveling on a fake Pakistani passport.

And U.S. officials say Yousef was born in Kuwait and now is a Pakistani citizen with Iraqi travel documents. He is either 26 or 27, they say.

The interior minister told the AP that Yousef was immediately handed over to the Americans, who whisked him out of the country Tuesday.

But he told the British Broadcasting Corp. that before being handed over to U.S. officials, Yousef was interrogated by Pakistani authorities and admitted to being involved in the 1993 Trade Center bombing.

The FBI said it almost nabbed Yousef last month in the Philippines, where he was linked to a failed plot to assassinate the pope and target U.S. airliners flying in the Pacific.

Meeting between Rabin, Arafat breaks down in disagrement

EREZ JUNCTION, Gaza Strip (AP) — The crisis in Israeli-Palestinian relations deepened Thursday after their leaders failed to agree on how to expand Palestinian autonomy without endangering Israeli security.

Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin and PLO chief Yasser Arafat did not resolve any disputes during their 2-hour meeting Thursday at an Israel-PLO command post in northern Gaza.

Reflecting the tensions, the two did not hold a joint news conference. However, they agreed to meet again next Thursday.

Rabin told Arafat he must rein in Islamic militants before Israel will talk about expanding Palestinian self-rule to the West Bank. Fifty-five Israelis have been killed by Palestinian militants since October in a surge of suicide bombings.

Rabin also refused Arafat's demand that Israel lift a 19-day closure of the West Bank and Gaza Strip imposed after a bombing attack last month by Islamic militants that killed 21 Israelis.

A tense Arafat, speaking later at his Gaza City office, complained that Israel was turning the Palestinian areas into a giant holding cell.

"If there is an Israeli wish for political separation, then we welcome it. But we will not welcome that they lock us in Gaza and the West Bank and hold the keys to the big prison," he said.

The Palestinians accused Rabin of using security concerns as an excuse not to honor an agreement to withdraw troops from the West Bank and permit Palestinian elections.

"Security guarantees should be given through the political process, and not through procrastination," said Palestinian spokesman Yasser Abed-Rabbo.

Under the Israel-PLO autonomy accord, Israel troops should have pulled out of West Bank towns by July 1994, in advance of Palestinian general elections. Delays in implementing autonomy pushed back the election date, then Israelis had second thoughts following this fall's attacks by Palestinian militants.

Thursday's summit rehashed the arguments have bogged down the negotiations for months.

"If Rabin doesn't help Arafat in proving to the Palestinians that peace pays off, Arafat will not be able to gain control over the opponents of peace," an editorial in the Israeli daily Maariv said Thursday.

"But if Arafat does not succeed in overcoming the terrorist organizations, Rabin will not be able to help him."

Prior to the summit, Arafat ordered the arrests of dozens of militants and established a military court to try those suspected of attacking Israelis.

While the two leaders met, Palestinian police raided the Gaza City headquarters of Islamic Jihad, the radical group that carried out the latest bomb attack. Police also detained three leaders of the Muslim militant group Hamas.

Serbs end talks with Croatian government

TRAVNIK, Bosnia-Herzegovina — In another sign that a wider Balkan war could develop in the spring, the Serbs holding close to one-third of Croatia have cut off talks with the Croatian government, balked on parts of an economic accord, and formally placed themselves on "war alert."

The decision, reached on Wednesday evening by the self-styled parliament of the Croatian Serbs, is intended to put pressure on Croatia's president, Franjo Tudjman, to reverse his decision to terminate the mission of the 12,000 U.N. peacekeepers in Croatia on March 31.

Since the Croatian war of 1991 ended in a tenuous truce, U.N. troops have acted as a buffer between the Serbs and the Croatian government army. Annoyed by the failure of the peacekeeping troops to disarm the Serbs, and concerned that the U.N. mandate might simply freeze the current front line, Tudjman made the decision last month.

An economic accord reached last year between Serbs and Croatia led to the opening of a stretch of highway through Serb-held territory and of an oil pipeline. But other steps relating to railroads and telecommunications have not yet been put into effect.

Borislav Mikelic, the self-styled foreign minister of the Croatian Serbs, said on Thursday: "We decided it was now necessary to delay further implementation of the economic agreement until the United Nations Security Council extends the mandate in Croatia."

As Mikelic knows, the problem with extending the troops' mandate lies not with the Security Council but with Croatia's government.

The decision by the Serbs to cut off talks and freeze economic cooperation puts Tudjman in an awkward situation. If he retreats now from his position — for example, by allowing a more limited number of U.N. troops to remain — he will appear to have bowed to Serbian pressure.

Gen. Ratko Mladic, formally the commander of the Bosnian Serbs but in practice the commander of all Serbs west of the Drina River, is a master of such preemptive decisions, which have tended to keep his opponents and the international community off-balance since the breakup of Yugoslavia.

There have been signs recently — including 62 helicopter sorties last week that almost certainly originated in Serbia — that the Serbs are actively preparing for a possibly wider conflict in the spring. Three Bosnian Serb helicopters and two light aircraft took off on Thursday from the Serbian-held town of Banja Luka in Bosnia, U.N. officials said.

The Bosnian and Croatian armies are also moving a lot of men and equipment in the current lull.

Although the U.N. Security Council has appealed to Tudjman to reverse his decision, U.N. officials here believe a withdrawal from Croatia will probably have to begin next month.

NATO would play a central role in a withdrawal, and its officials are due to meet with the Croatian government on Friday to discuss preparations, including the installation of secure telephone lines between Zagreb and Split, diplomats said.

The withdrawal would almost certainly be messy because the Serbs would try to stop it, and U.N. hostages might be taken.

Because most of the airfields and ports that the U.N. uses for its Yugoslav mission are in Croatia, its ability to operate in Bosnia would also be jeopardized by any withdrawal from Croatia.

Many of the Serbian families now living in Croatia moved to the area t more than 300 years ago, installed there by the Austro-Hungarian Empire as a military buffer against the Ottoman Turks.

Backed by the Yugoslav army, and mindful of Croatia's genocidal policies against the Serbs in the Nazi occupation of World War II, Croatia's Serbs went to war in 1991 to avoid becoming part of a new Croatian state whose government they saw as threatening.

Some clouds, low 70s on tap

Staff Report

Today's forecast calls for partly cloudy skies with a high in the lower 70s and west winds at 15-25 mph. Tonight should be partly cloudy with a low near 40.

Saturday should be partly cloudy, becoming mostly cloudy by afternoon. Highs will drop from the mid-50s to the 30s by afternoon.

After an overnight low of 30, Thursday's high reached 76, compared to the record high for that date of 88 set in 1932. The record low was 12 set in 1936.

STATE

South Texas was overcast, foggy and damp much of Thursday, while the rest of the state enjoyed clearing skies.

By mid afternoon, skies over the Hill Country and Rio Grande Valley were mostly clear, while South Central Texas and coastal sections remained cloudy.

Winds were mostly southerly statewide at 5 to 15 miles an hour with gusts to 51 mph in Guadalupe Pass.

Temperatures peaked in the 50s to 70s with afternoon highs including 52 degrees in Paris and Lufkin and 79 in Sanderson.

The forecast for North Texas was for mostly cloudy skies today with a clearing trend. Temperatures were to be in the upper 60s to mid-70s. Tonight was expected to be partly cloudy and cool with lows in the lower 30s.

South Texas was expected to have partly cloudy skies today with southwesterly breezes. Highs were to be mostly in the 60s and 70s.

Forecasters said West Texas would be mostly sunny today with highs in the 50s in the Panhandle to 70s in the Big Bend.

NATION

Arctic air pushed southward all the way to southern Florida early Thursday, dropping overnight temperatures to record lows across much of the Southeast. Up to 6 inches of snow fell in the mountains of the West.

Record lows included just 1 degree above zero at Bristol, Tenn.; 6 at Asheville, N.C.; 9 at Greer, S.C.; 11 at Athens, Ga.; 14 at Huntsville, Ala., and 30 at Orlando, Fla.

In the Florida Keys, Key West had a low of 48, cool enough to erase the previous record for the date of 49 set 100 years ago.

In the West, 3 to 6 inches of snow fell across mountain areas from northern Utah into Colorado and northern New Mexico.

At lower, warmer elevations, up to a third of an inch of rain fell around Salt Lake City. In 24 hours, up to two-thirds of an inch fell in parts of western Nevada including Lovelock and Fallon.

Southern California rainfall amounts were generally under a tenth of an inch. In central California, Bakersfield got 0.19 of an inch.

Snow showers were scattered across the upper Midwest, with some freezing drizzle in Minnesota. And generally light lake-effect snow fell along the Great Lakes from Michigan into western New York.

Wind gusting up to 40 mph whipped up blowing and drifting snow throughout the Great Lakes region.

Elsewhere, patchy, light freezing drizzle fell in northern Louisiana.

The Associated Press contributed to this report.

CLOUT: Basin's message goes to Austin

preparing a list of issues most important to us," Womack said. A general list of issues will include transportation, education, tort reform and crime, he said.

Those bringing the Midland-Odessa message to Austin will be well-represented.

"There will probably be about 100 people from Midland-Odessa to knock on the capitol that day," said Steve Late, member and past president of the Odessa Chamber of Commerce.

Those announcing the forum made clear the get-together is open to others interested in attending.

"This is not just for the Chamber of Commerce or special interest groups," Late said.

A maximum of 200 people can attend the $20 breakfast; individuals are responsible for his or her own travel and lodging arrangements.

For information on the legislative forum, call the Midland Chamber at 683-3381, or the Odessa Chamber at 332-9111.

PADDLER: Trip brought depression, anger brought him depression, fatigue, loneliness and danger. The sea paid him a final indignity Wednesday by slamming him on a reef.

There was plenty of indignity from sports journalists, too. And plenty of questions about whether he really swam the 2,400-mile route, or just rode on his accompanying 15-foot supply raft across strong westward currents.

Delage's average speed at certain points was 1.8 mph, according to the Paris-based Secour Oceanantes support group.

In daily position reports sent by radio satellite from his raft, Delage said he held onto a kickboard as he struggled through high waves for up to 10 hours a day, sleeping on the raft by night. The arrangements, along with his using flippers while in the water, prompted some condescending comments when he set out on his trip.

The French newspaper Le Monde commented in December that the venture puts Delage in "that book of records — in between the world accordion champion and the person who can eat the most snails."

A column in Wednesday's Le Figaro newspaper in Paris questioned the logic of Delage's swim but celebrated his tenacity.

The voyage was full of danger. He reported shark sightings and at one point lost his supply raft for 2½ hours and became exhausted trying to retrieve it.

Despite the lack of verification on his journey, the sheer human adventure of crossing the Atlantic alone captured the imagination of well-wishers here.

"At first Frenchmen thought he was crazy, but now we respect his inner strength," tourist Pierre Gobin said as he and about 1,000 others watched Delage swim ashore.

But a tight knot of sharp-elbowed French journalists, many of them saying they had bought "exclusive" rights from Delage for his story, left a sour impression that something else had prompted his adventure.

As Delage kicked toward shore in this south coast town, his wife, Katherine, sobbed in joy. Nine-year-old Thomas broke away from the family and sprinted back and forth on the waterline, waving the French tricolor.

Katherine breast-stroked out to meet him, and Guy took off his face mask to kiss her. Then he hugged his eldest son and 5-year-old Clement, whom he carried onto the beach.

"It's finished for me," Delage told The Associated Press. "I will do another thing now."

Years earlier, he flew across the ocean in an ultralight plane.

Delage, speaking through a thick, Walrus-like mustache, looked weary and wary as he approached a horde of international journalists and well-wishers — his first extended face-to-face exposure to people since he left.

But he relaxed as he gave interviews, and his wife sighed in relief.

"I'm just delighted," she said, "that the trip is over."

QUAYLE: Former vice president says no

ering in Washington.

Ralph Reed, the Christian Coalition executive director, said Quayle "clearly had a niche of 15 to 20 percent of the primary vote and probably 30 percent of the religious conservative vote. This leaves a huge hole in the field."

The GOP contenders rushed to fill it, and party strategists once again found themselves debating who would benefit from an unexpected withdrawal from the race.

Many said Dole would benefit most in the short-term, because front-runners generally do when another major candidate bows out. Hoping to prove that true, Dole saluted Quayle as a "courageous voice for mainstream American values."

But despite a solid, conservative voting record on abortion and other social issues, Dole is considered suspect by many religious conservative leaders. Buchanan is a favorite of this group, but not considered by most analysts to be a serious prospect for the nomination.

Reed said Gramm has an enormous opportunity, if he would add social issues to his conservative economic message.

In an interview, Gramm said he already was stressing such themes in his call for welfare reform and family tax cuts. With Quayle out, he asserted that "now there is no doubt that I am the conservative in the race."

Lugar called Gramm's assertion "self-serving" and said he hoped to appeal to Quayle's conservative constituency.

Alexander, for his part, said Quayle's decision leaves him as the most formidable candidate from outside Washington against "insiders" Dole and Gramm.

Gramm, Dole and Alexander have locked up most of the party's major fund-raisers and are busy courting GOP elected officials and key-state activists. Just Thursday, for example, Dole met with New Hampshire Gov. Stephen Merrill, an influential GOP voice in the first primary state.

Because 75 percent of the delegates will be divvied up in a six-week stretch beginning a year from now in Iowa, Republican strategists suggest candidates need to raise $20 million or more this year. Quayle had scoffed at that, saying he could get by with a smaller budget provided he surprised his rivals by winning an early primary.

But after signing on Goodin, pollster David Hill and a few other campaign hands, Quayle found it tough to recruit veteran operatives and even tougher to raise money.

"It was money and bodies," said Reed.

Quayle made the decision late Wednesday night — just hours after telling reporters in Miami he planned to file candidacy papers later this month and formally announce his candidacy in April.

Since leaving office with the Bush administration, Quayle has kept a relatively low profile while living in Indiana and pursuing business interests.

Many longtime advisers had urged Quayle not to run, suggesting he stay active in business or perhaps run for governor of Indiana as part of an effort to rebuild his image.

SCHEME: Federal authorites charge 17

(From 1A)

Exchange Commission, now a Washington-based private securities lawyer.

Six people were charged in a federal indictment and another two pleaded guilty, the U.S. attorney's office in Manhattan said. These eight people and nine others were named in a civil securities fraud action by the SEC, the federal agency that polices the financial markets.

AT&T itself wasn't charged with any wrongdoing and cooperated with the investigation that led to the indictment.

Officials provided no explanation of how the scheme was discovered. But the action marked the most aggressive crackdown on securities fraud since the Wall Street scandals of the 1980s takeover heyday that made Boesky a household name.

Officials said the 17-person ring was masterminded by Charles Brumfield, a former AT&T labor relations manager at the company's Morristown, N.J., offices, who parlayed secret knowledge of the company's takeover plans into lucrative tips to friends and family to make $2.6 million from stock purchases.

The suspects were spread throughout New Jersey, New York, Illinois, Florida and North Carolina.

Brumfield worked at AT&T for 31 years and retired last May at age 50. His whereabouts Thursday weren't clear. Telephone messages left on Brumfield's home answering machine in Palm Beach, Fla., weren't returned. AT&T officials said they didn't know how he could be reached.

Federal law prohibits insider trading, which gives an unfair advantage to people with secret information that could affect a company's stock price. This practice proliferated during the 1980s era of takeovers that frequently drove up the stock prices of target companies.

"This indictment sends a clear message that insider trading will not be allowed to erode investor confidence in the stock market," U.S. Attorney Mary Jo White told a news conference in Manhattan. "The public demands a level playing field for all investors."

Six defendants were charged with conspiracy to commit securities fraud, fraud in connection with takeover offers, wire fraud and obstruction in connection with AT&T's takeover plans between December 1988 and last year.

AT&T, the country's largest long-distance telephone company, has purchased a number of big companies in recent years and moved aggressively into the cellular telephone business.

WIFE: 'No conflict,' Mrs. Gingrich says conflict of interest with his own duties as House speaker.

Asked about suggestions of a conflict of interest, Mrs. Gingrich said: "There is no conflict. All it is is a way for people to really go after Newt."

Mrs. Gingrich, flashing a tired smile after a long flight to Israel from the United States, blamed journalists and some lawmakers for any fuss.

"It is only the media and some of the congressmen who want to smear another person in Congress who bring up these issues," she said at her employer's Jerusalem headquarters.

Except for such splashes of unwelcome publicity, Mrs. Gingrich has largely lived outside the spotlight dominated by her husband.

She's had a variety of jobs in urban planning, business consulting and home design while serving as Gingrich's confidante, a woman who tells him how his ideas seem to be playing outside Washington.

"She's a very strong woman. But she's not one who wants her ideas foisted on the nation," said Mel Steely, a former Gingrich aide and West Georgia College history professor who is writing a biography of the speaker.

During a six-day stay in Israel, Mrs. Gingrich will tour the site of the planned business park near the southern Negev Desert town of Beersheva. Companies locating there would operate free of most taxes.

Mrs. Gingrich said she has been working for the Israel Export Development Co. since August, when her husband was minority whip and the Democrats controlled the House.

She said her husband never met the company's head, David Yerushalmi.

"David and Newt have never spoken," she said. "David was the one who hired me. So there is absolutely no way of connecting David Yerushalmi to Newt."

Yerushalmi, who sat in on the interview with Mrs. Gingrich, said he hired her on merit. The two met when she was in Israel on a tour run by the American-Israel Political Action Committee in August 1993.

"IEDC never asked Newt Gingrich for anything," Yerushalmi said. "She (Mrs. Gingrich) is a very good salesperson. She understands the concepts."

Mrs. Gingrich was promoted from a marketing representative to vice president in charge of business development in January.

Yerushalmi said his company has spent $7 million preparing plans for the zone. Bidding is scheduled for next month.

U.N. voices concern over national security bill that would limit peacekeeping role of U.S.

UNITED NATIONS — A national security bill that could undermine international peacekeeping operations and fundamentally change Washington's relations with the United Nations is arousing concern among officials here, in the capital, and abroad.

The legislation, sponsored by Republicans, could be approved by the House of Representatives as early as next week, House aides and administration officials say.

Worried that the bill will pick up support among Democratic Party critics of the United Nations in both houses, Clinton administration officials and leading foreign policy experts are campaigning to organize opposition to the legislation in the Senate and among the public.

The bill, the National Security Revitalization Act, would cut U.S. contributions to peacekeeping operations, bar Americans from serving under foreign commanders except under specific conditions requiring White House certification, and demand 15 days notice from the administration when new missions are to be established by the United Nations.

It would also require that additional costs incurred by the Pentagon in support of U.N. actions be charged to the United Nations. Such costs, even if they did not involve direct peacekeeping costs, would be credited against Washington's regular peacekeeping assessment; the United States now pays 31.7 percent of U.N. peacekeeping costs, which are estimated at more than $3 billion for last year.

Parallel legislation in the Senate, where foreign policy action has been slower, has not yet reached the stage of floor debate. But similar restrictions on U.S. participation in peacekeeping operations were proposed last month by Sen. Bob Dole, the majority leader, in his Peace Powers Act of 1995.

The Clinton administration has already set set limits on placing American troops under foreign command in any peacekeeping operation.

Two former high-ranking State Department officials representing past Democratic and Republican administrations warned here on Thursday that, if the bill was passed, it could not only bankrupt peacekeeping but threaten a young and already shaky post-Cold War international security system.

At a news conference, Cyrus R. Vance, secretary of state under former President Jimmy Carter, and John C. Whitehead, deputy secretary of state under former President Ronald Reagan, called for rejection of the legislation.

Vance, who has served as a U.N. envoy and troubleshooter, most recently in the Balkans, said that if the provisions of the proposed act had been in place five years ago, "we would have been woefully impaired in fighting the gulf war."

The United States has sought a U.N. mandate for a number of American military actions, including the recent intervention in Haiti.

"Unfortunately, there are some in my country who do not fully appreciate our common interests in a peaceful world," Vance said. Benjamin A. Gilman, R-N.Y., who is chairman of the House International Relations Committee, where the bill originated, said on Wednesday that it was not "anti-U.N. or anti-peacekeeping." He said it was intended only to give the American people a better accounting of how and where money is spent.

Zedillo orders arrest of Subcomandante Marcos, other rebels

MEXICO CITY (AP) — President Ernesto Zedillo ordered the arrest of Subcomandante Marcos and other leaders of last year's Indian rebellion on Thursday, a day after federal agents uncovered what he called major weapons caches and plans for "new and greater acts of violence" across Mexico.

The surprise announcement marked a complete turnabout from the government's attempts to appease the guerrillas and persuade them to lay down their arms by promising to help the poor and clean up the country's elections.

The insurrection embarrassed the government on the very day that Mexico, Canada and the United States launched the North American Free Trade Agreement, and persistent doubts among investors about the government's ability to end the rebellion contributed to Mexico's current economic crisis.

In a surprise address on nationwide TV, Zedillo said federal judicial police on Wednesday discovered large, clandestine arsenals kept by the Zapatista National Liberation Army rebels in Mexico City and the Gulf Coast state of Veracruz.

The caches included high-powered weapons such as hand grenades, mortar rounds and explosives, he said.

Federal agents also uncovered a conspiracy for widespread violence by the rebels, Zedillo said.

Marcos, the ski-masked rebel leader and spokesman, and five other rebel leaders had been identified and arrest warrants were issued, he said.

Zedillo said the army will help federal judicial police arrest all six in the southern state of Chiapas, where the Indian rebellion erupted on Jan. 1, 1994. He also ordered the army to increase patrols in the state and take necessary action to maintain order.

At least 145 people were killed in last year's uprising until a cease-fire was called after 12 days. Several attempts at negotiating peace with the rebels have floundered, but the cease-fire has remained in effect.

Under the cease-fire, the government hasn't actively sought to capture Marcos, who attended peace talks with Interior Minister Esteban Moctezuma as recently as Jan. 15. Details of the talks, held near the guerrillas' stronghold in the Lacondon Jungle, weren't released.

Zedillo said the Zapatistas had rejected a number of attempts to reach a peace accord by his administration — some even before he took office Dec. 1.

While the government was striving to negotiate peace, the Zapatistas "were preparing new and greater acts of violence, not only in Chiapas, but in others places in the country," Zedillo said.

The Zapatistas launched their New Year's rebellion to demand better living conditions and respect for human rights for Maya-descended Indians in Chiapas and for poor Mexicans nationwide.

But Zedillo called them the leftovers "of a guerrilla group formed in 1969 in another state called the National Liberation Forces, which advocated seizing power through armed force."

National Liberation, a leftist guerrilla group, was active in the northern state of Nuevo Leon and in southern Guerrero state at the time, but was crushed by the army.

Zedillo said Marcos' real name is Rafael Sebastian Guillen Vicente, but gave no other information about him.

The enigmatic, green-eyed rebel leader had captured the nation's imagination with his articulate defense of the rebels' cause. He was the subject of intense speculation over his real identity.

Zedillo identified the other leaders only as Fernando Yaffez, alias Subcomandante German; Jorge Javier Elorreaga Berdegue, alias Subcomandante Vicente; Jorge Santiago Santiago; and Silvia Fernandez Hernandez, alias Subcomandante Sofia or Gabriela.

No background on any of the rebel leaders named was immediately available.

The president announced he would call a special session of Congress on the conflict in Chiapas. He said he was submitting legislation to grant amnesty to Zapatistas who surrendered their weapons and joined the nation's political mainstream.

Zedillo had welcomed a proposal Jan. 31 by the rebels to turn their movement into a national political party. But the rebels later announced they would not disarm.

Officials expect to see number of deaths rise in 6.5 temblor

PEREIRA, Colombia (AP) — Under an earthquake-flattened apartment building, Carmen Zamorano spent 22 hours waiting to be saved. Rescuers squeezed her hand and gave her an injection to relieve her pain.

Then, still trapped, she died.

"I have painful news for the nation," said a reporter Thursday for a national radio station that kept listeners abreast of efforts to save her. "Carmen Zamorano is gone."

The 22-year-old maid became the 38th known fatality from a 6.5-magnitude quake that hit Colombia at 1:41 p.m. Wednesday. Officials said the death toll probably will grow.

Authorities said 26 people were confirmed dead and more than 250 people injured in Pereira, a city of 700,000 in Colombia's coffee-growing region 100 miles west of Bogota. It was the hardest-hit area, though another 12 people died elsewhere in western Colombia.

More than a dozen bodies may remain buried in the five-story apartment building where Miss Zamorano died, authorities said.

Hours after she died, her employer, who had been trapped near her, was pulled from the wreckage.

"God gave me his hand. Thank God. Thank God," Mercedes Coronado moaned as she was loaded onto an ambulance.

Rescuers using search dogs dug through collapsed buildings, looking for survivors. For some, the effort was too late.

As Red Cross workers tried to reach Miss Zamorano and Mrs. Coronado, children who apparently survived the earthquake elsewhere in the building were given up for dead.

"We heard children's voices in another part of the building early on in the rescue, but haven't heard any signs of life from there for many hours," said Maj. Ramon Sosa, chief of the Pereira Fire Department.

After dawn Thursday, no one was digging in the area where the voices were heard. All efforts focused on where the living were known to be buried.

Rescuers put clothing of those buried, if it was available, in front of search dogs' noses to help them locate victims.

Searchers found Zamorano hours before she died. Reaching through the rubble, they gave her an anesthetic by injection and an IV solution and pumped in oxygen by hoses.

Suddenly she was gone, and the men who had labored to save her were devastated.

"I spoke with Carmen before she died," said Sosa, stubble on his grimy face. "Our people gave her hope so she wouldn't give up. But it was impossible. We couldn't do it."

Firemen sprayed the area with water, aiming it into the air to eliminate dust and cool rescuers.

Teams using forklifts and backhoes and digging by hand worked through Wednesday night by spotlights. As dawn broke, two exhausted Red Cross workers collapsed and were taken away on stretchers.

President Ernesto Samper arrived in Pereira on Thursday with other senior officials to inspect rescue operations and help the region recover.

The earthquake was centered about 175 miles west of Bogota, the Geophysical Institute of the Andes reported.

Fullbright, 89, former U.S. senator dies at his home

WASHINGTON (AP) — Former Sen. J. William Fulbright, whose criticism of America's "arrogance of power" in Vietnam gave intellectual substance to the anti-war movement, died Thursday at 89.

Fulbright was an early mentor to Bill Clinton, who worked as clerk in his Senate office while a student at Georgetown University and who, years later, awarded him the nation's highest civilian honor, the Presidential Medal of Freedom. If it weren't for Fulbright, Clinton said Thursday at the White House, "I don't think I'd be here today."

And Fulbright was the architect of the Fulbright scholarships, an international exchange program in which tens of thousands of students and teachers from more than 120 countries have gone abroad to study. He considered its creation, first financed by the sale of U.S. war property left overseas after World War II, among his finest achievements.

Because of it, he was particularly revered in Japan. The Arkansas Democrat was one of the few American legislators of this century whose name was known around the world.

Fulbright died of a stroke in his Washington home near the embassies of Massachusetts Avenue. He had been in frail health; an earlier stroke in 1993 limited his speech and his movements. He used a wheelchair.

As chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, Fulbright presided over televised hearings in 1966 and 1967 that gave the stamp of legitimacy to anti-war sentiments then sweeping through the streets and campuses of America. The hearings helped turn the country against the war.

While others said the fall of Vietnam would threaten U.S. security, Fulbright said the war had choked domestic reform and was "turning the Great Society into a sick society."

The hearings made Fulbright an unlikely hero to a generation a third his age — and brought him the wrath of Lyndon Johnson, who considered him a "Nervous Nelly" and vowed not to be the first president to lose a war.

Fulbright laid out his views on the war and America's world role in a 1966 book, "The Arrogance of Power."

"Gradually but unmistakably," he wrote, "America is showing signs of that arrogance of power which has afflicted, weakened, and in some cases destroyed great nations in the past. In so doing we are not living up to our capacity and promise as a civilized example for the world. The measure of our falling short is the measure of the patriot's duty of dissent."

Fulbright's greatest dismay — he said so often — had been his role in steering through the Senate the Tonkin Gulf resolution in August 1964, after two U.S. Navy vessels reported they had come under attack in that body of water off the coast of North Vietnam.

The resolution authorized Johnson to "take all necessary measures to repel an armed attack," and was cited by Johnson as the equivalent to a declaration of war. Only two senators opposed it. The genuineness of the attack has been questioned ever since.

Clinton nomination of Foster also splits Congress' doctors

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congress' five doctors are divided on the nomination of Henry W. Foster Jr. to be surgeon general, reflecting splits not only between parties but in attitudes toward abortion.

Freshman Republican Reps. David Weldon of Florida and Tom Coburn of Oklahoma, both outspoken foes of abortion, call Foster unsuited to be the country's chief public health advocate.

But Rep. Jim McDermott, a liberal Democrat and psychiatrist from Seattle, said that in performing abortions Foster did "what any obstetrician might do, all of it legal."

"There's no claim that this man is not a good physician or anything else," said McDermott, a four-term congressman. "From my standpoint, the decision shouldn't be based on whether he did this or that kind of thing. It's just another bogus argument that they're coming up with."

Two other doctors who are new to Congress, Sen. Bill Frist of Tennessee and Rep. Greg Ganske of Iowa, are reserving judgment but voicing concerns about the varying accounts Foster and the White House have given.

Ganske, a surgeon from Des Moines, Iowa, who supports a woman's right to abortion in the first trimester, said in a statement, "We may find that Foster has not leveled with the White House. The issue then becomes a matter of trust. If Foster has not been forthright with his background, then I would certainly call into question the nomination."

Frist, a cardiac surgeon from Nashville and the only doctor with a vote on the nomination, said of abortion, "It's a little unfair to Dr. Foster to focus just on that issue."

But Frist, who opposes abortion, said he wanted to know the precise number of abortions Foster performed and "the indications for those procedures."

McDermott questioned whether some would blackball a physician who engaged in fetal tissue research to find a cure for juvenile diabetes.

"Whatever his particular professional responsibility was, as long as it's ethical and within the law, to me that's immaterial," said the former Foreign Service psychiatrist. "To start trying to find a politically correct doctor who believes X, Y or Z is simply to take away from the office."

Coburn, a family practitioner who delivered up to 300 babies a year back in Muskogee, Okla., and lectured teens in schools and churches on abstinence, said, "Political correctness is the reason we have an AIDS epidemic today."

Coburn does not believe being in favor of abortion rights "automatically disqualifies someone" for surgeon general.

"But I absolutely don't think that's what we need in this country at this time," said the 46-year-old physician, who backs abortion only to save the life of the mother.

He questioned Foster's work on trying "to make a home abortion pill feasible," and wondered whether Foster stood for abstinence or safe sex.

"The safe sex message has not worked. It's full of holes," said Coburn. It's like sending kids out to skydive with parachutes that only open five times out of six.

"That's exactly what a condom is for a teen-ager. It only works five out of six times," said Coburn.

Weldon is even blunter in dismissing Clinton's choice and "the whole left-wing agenda."

No one who performed abortions should be surgeon general, he said.

"It's the taking of human life. Granted, it's not like shooting your neighbor with a sawed-off shotgun, but there's nobody in the medical profession who can justifiably stand up and say, 'It's not human. It's not alive,'" said Weldon, an internist.

He called Foster, who ran a program in Nashville that encourage teen abstinence but also distributed condoms, "an open advocate for the teaching of use of condoms to children to prevent teenage pregnancy, venereal disease and the spread of AIDS. ... That is very, very irresponsible."

"We had a sexual revolution in the 1960s that basically said that the old, Judeo-Christian, Biblical philosophy that marriage being the only appropriate place for sex was thrown out the window and we developed this free sex philosophy in our culture," said Weldon. "The birth control pill helped usher that in, and legalized abortion kind of put the final stamp on it.

"So what do we have to show for it? We have an unprecedented epidemic of teen-age pregnancy, venereal disease and now a lethal venereal disease, AIDS," he said.

Jury convicts teen in killing of two gay men

LAUREL, Miss. (AP) — A teenager was convicted Thursday of murdering two gay men in a robbery, despite claims he was trying to avoid being raped and infected with the AIDS virus.

Marvin McClendon, a 17-year-old high school sophomore, was sentenced to two consecutive life prison terms by Circuit Judge Billy Landrum. The Jones County Circuit Court jury deliberated nearly five hours.

McClendon showed no emotion as the verdict was read.

"Justice was served," said Gary Walters, father of victim Robert Walters. He hugged family members, but made no other comment before leaving the courthouse.

District Attorney Jeannene Pacific said the verdict "restores my faith in people doing what is right and what is just."

The prosecution claimed McClendon is a troubled youth who stole $100 from the men before he killed them.

Defense lawyer J. Ronald Parrish, however, claimed that McClendon shot Walters, 34, and Joseph Shoemake, 24, while fighting off unwanted sexual advances and out of fear that he might be infected with HIV.

Parrish called the verdict "a defeat for justice and people who want to keep their children safe from people trolling the streets."

"It's apparently open season," he said, "and you better keep the kids off the street."

McClendon's family left the courthouse without commenting.

AIDS tests were performed on the victims after their bodies were found near an abandoned railroad track in October.

Earlier Thursday, Landrum allowed the defense to tell jurors that Walters was infected with the AIDS virus when McClendon killed the men. Shoemake's test was negative.

"It's weighed on my mind and my heart quite heavily," Landrum said in his ruling. "I think the jury is entitled to know the whole fact in the case."

Landrum had previously ordered the test results sealed.

The case sent shockwaves through this quiet, conservative southeast Mississippi community.

McClendon's first trial was canceled last week because the 70-member jury pool lacked enough black members. The 12-member panel seated Tuesday included five blacks. McClendon is black; Walters and Shoemake were white.

Assistant District Attorney Gray Burdick said McClendon never mentioned AIDS as police questioned him after the killings.

"The only person who has introduced AIDS into this courtroom is the defense attorney," Burdick said.

But Parrish argued that Walters and Shoemake were "trolling for sex" and that even though Walters knew he might be HIV positive, "he was going to do it anyway, the heck with who he infected."

Gay rights groups decried Landrum's ruling on the admissibility of the AIDS tests.

"Basically he has declared open season on people with HIV and other disabilities that are stigmatized," said Widney Brown, program attorney for HIV related violence with the New York City Gay and Lesbian Anti-Violence Project.

David Ingebretsen, who heads the Mississippi Chapter of the American Civil Liberties Union, said Landrum's ruling "sends the message it's OK to kill gay men who (approach you) because you might be frightened of what happens to you."

FAA authorizes airlines to collect data on mistakes, malfunctions

WASHINGTON (NYT) — After years of debate, the Federal Aviation Administration said on Thursday that it was authorizing airlines to collect and analyze data on mistakes and equipment malfunctions and to keep the information in data bases that could not be used to punish them or their pilots. This immunity would protect them even if the information showed that they had broken rules.

Until now, the Air Line Pilots Association has blocked the collection of data from airplanes' "black box" systems for fear that it would give evidence that would cost pilots their jobs. In the process, safety advocates say, the airlines have been denied information that could give early warning of problems that could cause crashes.

Airline officials, pilots, and other aviation experts said that the policy change opened the way for the airlines to gather vast amounts of data from every aircraft, whether or not it was involved in an accident, and to analyze that data to detect flight patterns that break rules, or to detect other abnormalities that could contribute to accidents. The policy was formalized in the last few days in agreements with the airlines and the pilots' union.

The data will be maintained by the airlines themselves, but the FAA will have access to it. The agency plans to use the information for safety studies.

FAA officials said the agreement came about as a result of a meeting, the so-called safety summit, of federal regulators, airline executives, representatives of pilot unions, and other industry officials held last month after a run of crashes in 1994. David R. Hinson, the agency's administrator, called the move a "landmark agreement."

European airlines have collected and analyzed this data for years, using computers attached to the black boxes. They say they have made important safety progress as a result. But in the United States, black boxes are generally only analyzed after an accident or crash.

The working sessions at last month's meeting were closed to the public, but one participant, David Stempler, of the International Air Line Passengers Association, said he was present in a workshop on data analysis where Federico F. Pena, the transportation secretary, appeared surprised to learn that the roadblock to gathering the data was the pilots' refusal until the FAA promised immunity. Pena said on Thursday that the purpose of the meeting was to insure that "we are applying our expertise, our training, and our technology fully."

Analysis of data from routine flights might have prevented the crash of a Northwest Airlink commuter plane in Hibbing, Minn., in December 1993, officials said. The plane in that crash was attempting what pilots call a "slam-dunk" landing, descending far more rapidly than the manufacturer recommended. Investigators said after the crash that the airline's pilots often landed that way. But the pattern had never been detected.

Better data might have tipped off safety officials to problems before two other recent crashes, experts say. One is the crash near Pittsburgh last September, of a Boeing 737 flown by USAir. The National Transportation Safety Board has been looking for malfunctions of the rudder controls of Boeing 737s, but it has been using data from an Air France 737, because American flag carriers generally do not have similar data.

The other crash, in Roselawn, Ind., on Oct. 31, involved an ATR-72 flown by American Eagle. Investigators focused on the tendency of ATR-72s to roll in icing conditions, and the safety board ordered a black box pulled from another ATR-72 that flew into Chicago that night, a step it takes only a few times a year. But having a bigger data base on the performance of that kind of plane in icing conditions could have given stronger clues to the problem, experts say.

European airlines have already found such data useful. For example, Captain Ken E. Hansen, the manager of flight analysis at Scandinavian Airlines System, said in a telephone interview that his airlines' planes have a computer that stores 50 hours of data on a 3.5-inch disk. In comparison, the black box, which the airline also carries, stores half an hour of data. The black box is crashworthy, and the SAS recorder is not.

Every three or four days, the disk is removed from the plane and inserted in a computer that scans it for abnormal readings, using software developed by SAS, which the airline has sold to numerous European airlines, Hansen said. The only American buyer, he said, was Pan American World Airways.

The system looks for whether the aircraft made an abnormally hard landing, which would require an inspection. It measures flap settings, heading changes, power levels, rates of descent, and other parameters.

Motorists on loop face more danger

There's good news for motorists who regularly drive on or immediately around Loop 250, according to officials with the Texas Department of Transportation. Officials say the opening of a new section of Loop 250 this spring will greatly reduce the danger to motorists that is now being experienced in that area.

In fact, the officials say the number of traffic accidents along or near the loop should decrease significantly after the new section opens in April or early May. They also expect a reduction in the excess high-speed traffic on service roads, particularly on those in the vicinity of Midkiff Road.

The new section of Loop 250 extends from a point just west of Midland Drive to east of Midkiff Road and includes overpasses at those two intersections.

Until the section of the loop is opened, however, travel on the loop or the service roads will remain extremely hazardous, and drivers in that vicinity should use extra caution. They should pay particular attention to machinery being used in the loop construction and should obey construction signs.

Traffic Sgt. Brian Bogart noted this week that Midland drivers have not obeyed construction signs, which is one possible reason traffic accidents are up in that part of the city. "It's amazing how many people totally disregard construction signs," said Bogart.

Motorists traveling on Loop 250 would be wise to pay attention to construction signs in that area as well as reduce their speed and watch for hazards they normally do not encounter. Driving will remain hazardous on different sections of Loop 250 until all the construction now in progress is completed.

Dems fight for control of political airwaves

WASHINGTON — With growing urgency and grudging admiration, Democrats are responding to the Republican revolution — or at least they're trying.

Anderson

Democrats have intensified their planning for a communications counteroffensive that will borrow some Republican-tested techniques in mediums ranging from talk radio to cable television. Although some Democrats believe their party is in trouble because of what it's selling rather than how it's being sold, recent evidence suggests the emphasis is on the medium and not the message.

"The old adage 'All politics is local' has defined our approach to communications strategy," reads an internal memo from a new communications team created by Minority Leader Richard Gephardt, D-Mo., in the House. "Democratic members have succeeded in the past by taking their individual work in the House and wholesaling it to the folks back home. However, the proliferation of media sources and the effectiveness of our opposition in nationalizing issues has made it critically important to take a group approach to defining national themes and delivering our message."

Countering the influence of conservative talk show host Rush Limbaugh is a top priority for the team, as is the possible investment in new cable programming. "Many Democrats incorrectly believe that if we just present the facts on our side of the story we will prevail, but that is not the case," says Rep. Richard Durbin, D-Ill., who co-chairs the team along with Rep. Kweisi Mfume, D-Md.

The House will be the hub of this new emphasis on media outreach. Gephardt has held numerous meetings on the subject, and helped form panels that will coordinate strategy.

"Leadership communications meetings" will take place every evening to discuss the next day's agenda and "to positively influence the daily news cycle," explains one planning memo. A morning meeting of the communications team will also be held, conducted by Durbin and Mfume.

In their zeal to retake the airwaves from Republicans, however, Democrats may have created a system that only a bureaucrat could love. Using a flow-chart system eerily reminiscent of the Clinton health-care plan, Democrats have formed a multi-layered bureaucracy to take their message straight to the people. Under the Communications Committee, for example, the chart lists five separate jurisdictions or subcommittees:

"If the Communications Team is to be successful, its efforts must be focused on big picture messages that we want ingrained in the public," the planning memo continues. "Americans are barraged with information on everything from the President to the Pocket Fisherman. We will have limited opportunity to communicate the new Democratic message."

WILLIAM MURCHISION

Some words one day may be meaningless

Editor's Note: William Murchison is ill this week. The following column was originally published in September 1991.

A couple of familiar, and usable, words are dying — of overuse. Prospects for straightening out matters are not encouraging. The first word is "conservative." What you inquire. Aren't we all conservatives now?

Murchison

Maybe we are: which, if true, is part of the problem. The meaning of a fairly well understood word has been enlarged, like a party-favor balloon, to the point of popping. A world in which KGB cretins and old-line Stalinists are known as "conservatives" — as was the case during the Soviet coup — is a world grown inexplicable. Why not equally call John Wesley an atheist, Frank Sinatra a pacifist? "Conservative" was the invention of Sir Robert Peel, the pre- and early-Victorian English statesman. He wanted a word to replace the venerable "Tory," which had lost its cachet. Benjamin Disraeli said "conservative" sounded like "the invention of some pastry cook." Nevertheless, it stuck.

Conservatives wanted to conserve good and useful things; they were unwilling to throw out babies with bath water. Careful, prudent change was the ideal to which they aspired. There is a certain smugness in the word "conservative": as if things generally were hunky-dory. How about today, though? What is it that conservatives want to conserve? Big government? Permissiveness? The welfare mentality? These are the hallmarks of the late 20th century.

In the Reagan years, the Heritage Foundation, splendid conservative think tank that it was and is, called its policy proposals "Mandate for Change." The idea was that things are crummy: Let's kick some derriere. Some of us, in those days, had great sport with Neanderthal liberals who imagined they were still living in the good old proletarian days of the '30s.

Actually big government fans are the most adamantine, the most foot-dragging of the political species. Look at the instigators of the Soviet coup. How they love the good old days of repression and darkness! How they fear the future! Old-time conservatives, by contrast, want to kick over the traces, throw bombs, raise Cain. What does this make them therefore — liberals? That wouldn't bother me. Liberal is a fine old word; too bad it's become synonymous with collectivism, but maybe if we tried to reclaim it? I don't know. I do know that the nomenclature of yesterday is becoming untenable. Words no longer convey meaning, and that's dangerous.

Ditto with "racism." There's an archaic word for you, rarely heard anywhere but on the tongue of self-styled, self-satisfied black "leaders." What does it mean, as presently employed? Everything and nothing.

Racism (racialism, in Webster's Second International) means hatred of other races. How much of that do we have going around these days? Not much, if you consider that laws and policies that empower blacks and other minorities — affirmative action, busing and so on — were enacted by whites. If whites hate blacks, why don't they act as though they did?

Some of the black "leaders" will tell you they do act like it, those who oppose tax increases, want to whittle down government, oppose expansion of welfare, etc. It turns out indeed that pretty much everything contrary to the leaders' agenda is racist. A curious side effect is the assertion, increasingly common, that blacks by definition can't be racists, only whites can. This is to counter white claims of black racism. The primary effect is to muddy prospects for ever understanding whether there is such a beast as racism. Maybe there is, but how would anyone ever know?

The English language is notoriously fluid, but I remark with sadness these instances of hyperfluidity. We approach meaninglessness here. Pretty soon we won't know what we're talking about when we talk about people's ideals. And that is a prescription for chaos.

I'll tell you what we need to conserve. We need to conserve some sense of language: its inherent meaning and its possibilities, which are frightening as well as glorious.

William Murchison's column is distributed by Creators Syndicate.

ANOTHER VIEW

President's budget must push reduction

The deficit. That's where polls consistently show Americans desire action. More so than even tax cuts.

Yet President Clinton's $1.6 trillion budget for fiscal year 1996 arrived on Capitol Hill this week with a limited amount of deficit reduction. Just $81 billion over five years.

What gives? As much as $200 billion a year is needed to balance federal spending over the next seven years. So why not more cuts now?

Also, why a so-called middle-class tax break, which could actually leave middle-class Americans further in debt in the future?

Sixty-three billion dollars will be needed to finance the president's several tax "cuts," the centerpiece of which is a $500-per-child credit for families with children younger than 13. Shouldn't that $63 billion be used to reduce the deficit? Isn't that what Americans keep saying they want?

Sure. Tax cuts that stimulate investment and savings can make sense. And the idea of credits for parents who sock away funds for a child's college costs deserves a look.

But let's be realistic. Americans are more mature than the president and Capitol Hill tax cutters assume. The Clinton 1992 theme song may have been Don't Stop Thinking About Tomorrow, but the feature about tomorrow that Americans are concerned over is debt, debt, debt.

Of course, there is some good news in the president's budget. Nearly $23 billion would be saved from revamping the Energy, Housing and Transportation departments. Also, several billion would be saved through trimming the Office of Personnel Management and reorganizing the General Services Administration.

But enough? No.

That's too bad. Reports indicate Clinton budget director Alice Rivlin pressed harder for more cuts. Only White House chief of staff Leon Panetta gave her some backup.

So where are the new Democrats? Is the president unaware that he could have one-upped Republicans by going to their right on reducing the deficit, taking on entitlement programs like Medicare? Some Capitol Hill Republicans are going to have a difficult time balancing the budget, too, by their $200 billion in tax cut pledges.

Of course, by not being more serious about deficits, the president's budget could be dead on arrival. Fiscal conservatives like Senate Budget Committee Chairman Pete Domenici, R-N.M., will now take a prominent role. They now must think about tomorrow. The deficit matters.

CHARLEY REESE

It's no surprise O.J. trial fascinates so many

I have the fastest thumb in what's left of Christendom. I can change channels before some banal TV numskull can get past "O" as in O.J. Simpson.

Reese

Simpson was never among my category of notable people before he was charged with killing his wife and another man. I know lots of people who can outrun people who are chasing them. I consider that a useful but not notable skill.

As a commentator, he was the obligatory and decorative black face, and his comments were, like those of his white colleagues, banal. A football game isn't molecular physics. All sports commentary is generally on the intellectual level of interviews with boxers. Games should be played or watched but not necessarily

In his acting roles, he played an idiot. One Broadway actor observed caustically that to be successful in film, it is only necessary that you "look right" in the role. Simpson did.

The only useful things to be learned from the Simpson trial, you can learn without watching it.

One, lawyers have made an expensive mockery of the justice system. They have taken the people's court system and turned it into the equivalent of a pit of screaming, greedy commodity traders. Simpson might as well be found guilty because when his lawyers get through with him, he won't be able to afford a room in a flophouse.

Two, the collective brain of American journalism, assuming we ever had one, has suffered a meltdown. Henceforth, no American newspaper with a shred of self-respect should ever look down its editorial nose at a supermarket tabloid or a trash TV show. Nor should any editor or publisher complain that the American people have no respect for journalism. Don't blame the American people for having better taste and better manners than most journalists.

It's also hogwash to claim that the ratings indicate that many are interested in this routine and sordid affair turned into a spectacle by money.

In the first place, no rating system measures the people who aren't watching, aren't reading and aren't interested. It can only measure the relative preferences of people who have no choice in the programming and no say in the editing. If there were a dog-per-channel, the fact that you would choose one over another doesn't mean one is anything more than minutely less offensive or boring than the rest. If you are revolted by the news content but don't cancel your subscription it may mean only that you like the classifieds and cartoons.

Editors and programmers are always using this circular reasoning game to rationalize their own bad taste: "We give people only what they want." How do you know what they want? "We give it to them, and they don't burn down the station or the newspaper."

Again, don't blame Americans for having good manners.

It is true that, on the whole, postwar America has more or less become a cultural wasteland. The arts have been largely relegated to left-wing snits and twits while popular culture has become the domain of greedy corporate barons who have the taste of an emcee in a third-rate topless joint.

Many universities have become nothing more than left-wing political indoctrination centers run by fund-raisers and aging draft dodgers. Intellectuals are defined as those who watch sea turtles lay eggs on public television and write learned pieces on the profound meaning of the lyrics of 2 Live Crew.

So it's no surprise that lots of people are fascinated by the Simpson trial. After all, in these highly cultural times, lowlifes with big incomes in Los Angeles are the nation's cultural elite. Actresses who have played the role of farm wives testify about farm policy, and I'm sure someone has consulted Sylvester Stallone on defense matters.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Friday, Feb. 10, the 41st day of 1995. There are 324 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On Feb. 10, 1949, Arthur Miller's play "Death of a Salesman" opened at Broadway's Morosco Theater with Lee J. Cobb in the role of Willy Loman and Mildred Dunnock as his wife, Linda.

On this date:

In 1763, France ceded Canada to England under the Treaty of Paris, which ended the French and Indian War.

In 1840, Britain's Queen Victoria married Prince Albert of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha.

In 1846, members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints, the Mormons, began an exodus to the west from Illinois.

In 1863, showman P.T. Barnum staged the wedding of Gen. Tom Thumb and Mercy Lavinia Warren — both of them midgets — in New York City.

In 1893, comedian Jimmy Durante was born in New York City.

In 1933, the first singing telegram was introduced by the Postal Telegram Co. in New York.

In 1942, the former French liner Normandie capsized in New York Harbor a day after it caught fire while being refitted for the U.S. Navy.

Researchers discover way to attack leukemia with no harm to normal cells

WASHINGTON (AP) — Researchers experimenting with mice have created a cancer "smart bomb" that attacks and kills leukemia cells without harming normal cells. The technique may be tested on humans this summer.

Dr. F. M. Uckun of the University of Minnesota, Minneapolis, said Thursday the "smart bomb" is actually an antibody that will attach to a receptor molecule found only on the surface of leukemia cells.

"The antibody is the missile," said Uckun, and hooked to the missile is the payload — a chemical that actually kills the leukemia cell.

"Normal tissue is not affected," he said. "Only the leukemia cells are going to die."

Uckun, first author of a study appearing today in the journal Science, said the same "smart bomb" technique for the targeted delivery of a killing chemical can also be used for some cancers of the breast, ovaries and brain.

In the study, Uckun and his team injected human leukemia cancer cells into laboratory mice that have no immune system. The cancer, called B-cell precursor leukemia, is the most common form of childhood cancer and the second most common form of acute leukemia in adults.

The leukemia cells thrived inside the mice and thus created for the researchers a way of testing the targeted therapy.

Uckun said earlier studies have shown that a molecule called protein tyrosine kinase is essential for the survival of leukemia cells. Studies also have shown that a synthetic chemical called genistein could block the action of the kinase.

But the problem was how to get the genistein inside the cancer cells. And the solution was the "smart bomb."

Uckun said that on the surface of the leukemia cells is a molecule receptor called CD19. Experiments showed a laboratory-grown antibody called B43 would attach directly to CD19, but to no other receptor. To make the "smart bomb," the researchers joined the B43 antibody with the cancer-killing genistein.

The "smart bomb" was injected into 10 mice with human leukemia and their survival rates were compared with 110 untreated mice with leukemia.

All the untreated mice died within 61 days; all the mice treated with the "smart bomb" lived for more than 120 days. Later studies on the treated mice showed that 99.999 percent of the leukemia cells were killed.

Other leukemia-infected mice received chemotherapy of the type now used on humans. Some of the drugs were effective, but none matched the "smart bomb," said Uckun.

He said the findings suggest a treatment that included cycles of first the drugs, then "smart bomb" could be very effect against leukemia.

The technique was developed during research aimed at finding out why some leukemia cells are able to recover from chemotherapy. Although many drugs suppress the cancer for a time, some leukemia cells rebound and the disease progresses, often killing the patient.

Dr. Paul Gaynon, a leukemia researcher at the University of Wisconsin, Madison, said the study was significant because it looked at why chemotherapy often fails in leukemia and then found a way to improve treatment success.

"Killing the first 99 percent of leukemia cells is easy," said Gaynon. "This may give us a way of getting that last 1 percent."

B43 teamed with another chemical already has been approved for experimental human use, said Uckun.

Simpson jurors see goriest pictures yet of murder scene

LOS ANGELES (AP) — O.J. Simpson averted his eyes and a prosecutor warned the victims' relatives, "You don't want to look," as the most gruesome photos yet of the bloody, crumpled bodies were shown to the jury in full color Thursday on a 7-foot screen.

The photos of Nicole Brown Simpson and Ronald Goldman were the backdrop as the first police officer on the scene early on June 13 took the stand, offering new details that may enable the defense to cast doubt on the estimated time of the murders at Ms. Simpson's condominium.

Among those details: A container of Ben & Jerry's ice cream was melting in the kitchen, and candles were burning in Ms. Simpson's bathroom and the tub was full, as if she had been planning a candlelit bath when death came to call.

But under prosecution questioning designed to anticipate another Simpson line of defense, Officer Robert Riske stressed that he never stepped in the blood, that he warned others not to tread on it and that he didn't touch any evidence.

He also described finding bloody footprints, as well as a knit cap and — perhaps most significant — a single bloody glove near a bush.

The defense has suggested that a racist detective moved one of two bloody gloves from the murder scene and planted it at Simpson's estate. The defense also claims police handled the evidence so sloppily that it can't be trusted.

Riske, under questioning by prosecutor Marcia Clark, gave the defense an opening when he was asked if he had been trained at the Police Academy in how to preserve a crime scene.

"They kind of gloss over it. They don't really train you," admitted Riske, a patrolman with four years of experience at the time of the crime. He said he learned the task on the job, handling some 15 homicide cases.

Under cross-examination by defense attorney Johnnie Cochran Jr., Riske also acknowledged that some investigators walked near the bodies and other evidence without wearing shoe booties or gloves, and that the phone inside Ms. Simpson's condo wasn't dusted for fingerprints before he used it.

Judge Lance Ito refused a defense request to play news footage of investigators walking through the crime scene. He said it was not the right time to bring it up.

The numerous color pictures of the murder scene were so graphic that the judge prevented their transmission via television. He ordered TV and still photographers not to show them.

"You don't want to look," Clark warned the victims' family members in the audience.

Simpson took notes and conferred with lawyer Robert Shapiro. Occasionally, he clutched the edge of the counsel table, looked up at the ceiling and sighed.

Riske, his voice in flat contrast to the gruesome spectacle on the screen, told jurors: "My partner and I crossed the street. We observed a female, white, in a black dress laying in a puddle of blood in the walkway."

Jurors leaned forward in their seats and took notes as they saw what Riske had seen: a pathway covered in blood, a woman's body curled on its left side, a pool of blood under her head.

"We approached the body of the female and as we got probably two feet from her body, we discovered the body of a male white laying against the north fence," Riske recalled.

Goldman's form, clad in blue jeans and a brown jacket, flashed on the screen. Next to him, the prosecutor pointed out Goldman's beeper and a white, blood-stained envelope containing the glasses the waiter had come to return.

During cross-examination, Cochran asked the officer if any photos had been taken of the candlelit bathroom or the ice cream, or if the scene had been videotaped by police. The officer said no.

The melting rate of ice cream is expected to be a key defense point as Simpson's lawyers try to show that the victims were not slain at 10:15 p.m., as the prosecution contends, but later in the night when the former football star was on his way to the airport for a flight to Chicago.

Riske recalled that he found the cardboard container of Ben & Jerry's ice cream on a bannister at about 12:35 to 12:40 a.m.

"And at that time the ice cream had not fully melted?" Cochran asked.

"No, not in my opinion," the officer said.

Cochran tried to use Riske to show evidence was tampered with. The officer, viewing photos of the crime scene, said it appeared that the envelope and glove were in different positions at different times.

Astronauts get cold fingers, cut spacewalk short

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Their fingers freezing, two spacewalking astronauts hurried back to the warmth of Discovery's cabin on Thursday, cutting short a test to see how cold they would get in the frigid darkness.

"Sounds like we put you in the deep freeze," shuttle pilot Eileen Collins apologized to Dr. Bernard Harris Jr. and Michael Foale, who spent 4½ hours in the open cargo bay, where temperatures hovered below minus-125 degrees Fahrenheit.

Throughout the test, the spacewalkers remained in the shadow of the shuttle or Earth — the coldest possible spots — to test new insulation in their 250-pound pressurized suits.

The $10.4 million suits are essentially mini-spaceships built to protect the human body from disintegration in the vacuum of space.

NASA spacewalk specialist Gerald Miller said the experiment went well; he'd actually expected the astronauts to get colder quicker.

Usually, spacewalkers spend at least some of the time basking in the sun's rays, and activity helps keep them warm as well.

Another test on modified suits is planned for this summer as designers work to outfit spacewalkers who will build an international space station later this decade.

While Harris and Foale were not in danger, their fingers got so cold that Mission Control canceled the final exercise and ordered them inside a half-hour early.

Later, Harris' eyes began burning. Crewmates flushed them with cold water.

"He's OK," reported commander James Wetherbee, adding that Harris had smelled "something funny in his suit."

Harris found white and brown flakes on the inside of his helmet visor. Mission Control instructed the crew to leave the flakes alone. NASA officials said they weren't sure what the contamination was.

For the first test, Harris and Foale were raised 25 feet above the cargo bay on the end of the shuttle's robot arm, where they hovered for about 20 minutes.

That immobility intensified their shivers. Foale's right hand was already icy inside the glove by the end of the test.

Q. What types of activities are today's firefighters doing to stay fit?

A. Mainly cardiovascular, strength and flexibility activities along with better nutrition are helping firefighters have longer careers and overall longer lives. Firefighting involves intense labor making endurance essential. There is even a national competition called "The Firefighter Combat Challenge" that firefighters train for every year. It involves climbing stairs with hoses, pulling hose up by rope, forcible entry with a sledge hammer, pulling hose along the ground and lifting and dragging a manikin to safety; all for time.

Questions about emergency medical services or firefighting should be sent to Lights & Sirens, P.O. Box 1152, Midland, Texas, 79702-1152.

Counseling week honors unsung school heroes

■ Area educators take time this week to recognize staff members many overlook.

By Gary Shanks
Staff Writer

National School Counseling Week is dedicated to the unsung heroes of the educational system, the school counselors, who are involved in furthering each child's mental, emotional and academic well-being.

The breadth and scope of the school counselor's domain has grown much in recent decades, as more emphasis is placed on the psycho-social and developmental aspects of the child's academic life.

National School Counseling Week tends to come and go without a great deal of hoopla from the community, counselors said.

However, the Sylvan Learning Center of Midland/Odessa, "in recognition of the services area counselors provide," will be catering refreshments at Tuesday's monthly meeting of the Permian Basin Counselor's Association.

These monthly meetings are working affairs where counselors earn continuing education credits and host speakers to discuss the various aspects of the profession, said Sue Conder, Bush Elementary School counselor.

The Texas Education Agency publishes guidelines for school counselors, and at least one of these professionals is present in every school in the Midland Independent School District, said Ms. Conder, president of the Permian Basin Counselor's Association. There are almost 200 members in this area-wide association, she said.

The various jobs of school counselors are divided mainly between primary and secondary schools.

Primary school counselors are more heavily involved in identifying social, emotional and other problems that might interfere with a child's ability to learn. Whereas, secondary counselors are more heavily involved with guiding students through academic decisions, explained Lee High School Counselor Sherrie Raughton.

Although both primary and secondary counselors meet with students both personally and in groups, younger students are subject to more group counseling, Ms. Conder explained.

Primary school counselors visit each classroom every month or six weeks, Ms. Conder said. In these meetings, counselors present the TEA's guidance

The notes asked those finding the Valentines to contact Wonder World so the children could learn how far the messages traveled.

Maxey Jr. pleads guilty on state burglary charges

By Tonie Miller-Uzzel
Staff Writer

A Midland man serving time in federal prison for robbery and extortion pleaded guilty recently on state burglary charges, according to the Midland County district attorney.

George Wendell Maxey Jr., 24, was transported from a federal prison to appear in Midland Jan. 13 to enter a guilty plea to state charges of burglary, according to District Attorney Al Schorre.

Maxey was sentenced to 17 years in prison to run concurrently with his federal sentence of 16 years.

Maxey was convicted in October 1993 of three charges relating to a Nov. 6, 1992, attempted bank robbery, including conspiracy to extort money from Midland American Bank, use of a weapon during a crime and use and possession of a weapon during the commission of a crime.

He broke into the home of a MAB executive, restrained her and attempted to get her to open a bank vault for him.

Another man, Andrew Gruzins, 21, pleaded guilty to the charges and admitted he and Maxey committed the crime.

Schorre said the state charges stem from an incident that happened within weeks of the kidnapping of bank manager Sue Scott.

"It took a long time to solve this case," Schorre said.

He said officers had few leads until the other case was solved.

"It was only when they broke the Sue Scott case that they solved this one. When officers started talking to witnesses and Gruzins broke and told about this," the district attorney said.

The state charge is the result of Maxey and Gruzins breaking into a house in the 1400 block of West Cuthbert Avenue in the early morning hours of Oct. 23, 1992, tying up the resident, ransacking the house and stealing money and jewelry, Schorre said.

This was the same method of operation as the Scott case, he said.

Gruzins plead guilty to burglary in November and was also sentenced to 17 years.

Gruzins is serving a five-year federal prison term.

West Texan waits on Bivins for state senate confirmation

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

AUSTIN - Peggy Sue Garner, the West Texan who was appointed to the three-member Texas Natural Resource Conservation Commission in September 1993 by then-Democratic Gov. Ann Richards, is awaiting a Texas Senate confirmation that may never be realized under the Republican administration of Gov. George W. Bush. But before Mrs. Garner's six-year appointment can be weighed by the 31 senators, she must get the confirmation go-ahead by Texas Republican Sen. Teel Bivins, chairman of the seven-member Senate Nominations Committee.

Garner

Mrs. Garner, 64, is a Democrat from McCamey in Upton County, where she had been county judge from 1975 until 1991, when then-Gov. Richards appointed Mrs. Garner to the Texas Water Commission, which in 1993 merged with the Texas Air Control Board to form the Texas Natural Resource Conservation Commission.

However, Mrs. Garner said in Austin on Thursday that she is not optimistic that Bivins, an Amarillo businessman-cattleman, will submit her name for Senate confirmation.

"I think that's where I would be 'busted' — in the committee," Mrs. Garner said. "I don't think I will ever get out of committee."

And even if she were to be subjected to Senate confirmation, Mrs. Garner said she would need a two-thirds majority of the voting senators, or 21 of 31 votes, to confirm her appointment to the $90,000-a-year job in making policy decisions for the agency that is budgeted at $440 million.

"If every Democrat voted for me, I would need four Republican votes," she observed.

Of the 31 senators, 17 are Democrats, and 14 are Republicans.

"And I have reason to believe that every Democrat would vote for me."

But Bivins indicated that he would not submit Mrs. Garner's name to the Senate for confirmation.

"As chairman of the committee, I can do that (submit her name for confirmation), but I don't have any interest in putting somebody's name out there who I know there are not the votes for," Bivins said. "I don't believe the votes are there."

Nevertheless, Bivins said Mrs. Garner "is great." And he said, "lots of things could change."

Should there be no confirmation by the end of the legislative session in May, there would be a vacancy on the com-

Court upholds compensation system for injured workers

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas Supreme Court on Thursday upheld the state's system for compensating workers injured on the job.

Legislative leaders said the decision was good news, but organized labor said it shortchanged workers.

The Legislature in 1989 overhauled the Workers' Compensation Act after business complaints that workers' comp insurance rates had tripled in only a few years.

The changes followed one regular and two special legislative sessions that saw bitter fighting between business interests and personal injury lawyers who had allied with labor. The changes mostly took effect in January 1991.

The new law increased maximum weekly benefits for injured workers. Supporters also said it would reduce costs for employers by streamlining the claims process and making it less likely that a claimant would go to court.

Opponents charged that the law would leave the fate of many workers in the hands of bureaucrats and strip from them the traditional right to a jury trial.

The Texas AFL-CIO challenged the constitutionality of the overhaul and won lower court rulings. The case had been pending before the Texas Supreme Court since last April.

Among other things, labor critics contended that the system's method of determining compensation for perma-

At a luncheon where she was named Outstanding Citizen of the Year, Odessa Mayor Lorraine Perryman receives a proclamation designating Thursday as Lorraine Perryman Day from Midland Mayor Bobby Burns.

Odessa Chamber of Commerce gives Perryman Outstanding Citizen award

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff Writer

ODESSA — For her contributions to the community, Odessa Mayor Lorraine Perryman was honored as the 1994 Outstanding Citizen of the Year by the Odessa Chamber of Commerce at a luncheon Thursday.

"This recognition means more to me right now than any of you will know," Mrs. Perryman told several hundred people at the Odessa Country Club.

The mayor acknowledged the award as special because it recognizes her "entire body of community work," not just her political endeavors.

Mrs. Perryman, serving her third term as Odessa's first female mayor, is the 37th person to be honored with the award. Past recipients include John Ben Shepperd, W.D. Noel and Tom "Pinkie" Roden.

Mrs. Perryman is a founding board member of the Greater Odessa Litterbusters, the West Texas Literacy Council, Odessa Rape Crises Center, and the Odessa College-University of Texas of the Permian Basin Scholarship Committee.

She has also served on the boards of the United Way, Main Street Odessa, Odessa Downtown Rotary Club, Heritage Holiday, Junior League of Odessa, and the Permian Basin Center for Battered Women and their Children.

Introducing Mrs. Perryman was former Odessa Chamber of Commerce president Betsy Triplett-Hurt, who gave a brief biography of the honoree in fairy tale form.

Ms. Triplett-Hurt described Mrs. Perryman during her childhood as being a quiet girl who read a lot. Mrs. Perryman's transition from a quiet girl was inspired by a speech teacher at Odessa High School, Ms. Triplett-Hurt said.

A graduate of the University of Texas at Austin and with a background in public relations and journalism, Mrs. Perryman set her sites on missions for the betterment of the community, Ms. Triplett-Hurt said. "And what missions the quiet little girl has had," she added.

Mrs. Perryman spoke of her can-do attitude in carrying out those missions. "I stand before you not as a politician but as a possibilitarian," she said.

The award plague was presented to Mrs. Perryman by her husband, Ray Perryman, who praised her visible achievements and the "confidential and behind-the-scenes" work she does to help the community.

Midland Mayor Bobby Burns read a proclamation designating Thursday as Lorraine Perryman Day. "I'm proud to present this to the finest mayor in the Permian Basin," he said.

Past honors of Ms. Perryman's include: speaker at the 1993 Texas Legislative Conference, 1992 Community Builder Award from the Masonic Grand Lodge of Odessa, 1992 Women of Distinction from the Permian Basin Girl Scout Council, 1991 Texas Downtowner of the Year, Governor's Commission for Women (appointed by former Gov. Mark White), 1984 Ada Carter Johnson Award from the Outstanding Business and Professional Women of Odessa, and the Community Statesman Award for Government.

lessons on topics such as self-esteem, motivation and achievement, decision making and problem solving, interpersonal skills, effective communication, cross-cultural information, goal setting and finally, responsible behavior.

All counselors maintain support groups, such as grief support group meetings for those students undergoing a loss from death or divorce.

Parenting classes are also offered by the counselor.

Study-skills classes are mandated by TEA, as well as teacher inservice training on drug-abuse prevention, suicide prevention and attention deficit disorder.

Counselors also coordinate — through the Americans With Disabilities Act — measures to meet the needs of any child with a temporary or permanent disability that affects their education. This does not include special education students, however.

Drop-out prevention also is the purview of the counselor. They have the responsibility of monitoring absences and sending letters to parents. The counselor serves as a liaison between the school and community agencies — and as a referral agent for a child's other professional needs.

mission, and Bush would be able to appoint a commissioner, subject to Senate confirmation. Bivins said that he had no inkling who Bush's appointee might be.

Should she not be confirmed, Mrs. Garner said she would return to McCamey .

"I'm going to come home," she said. "There are other places to go, but I don't want to go to other places."

During her tenure, Mrs. Garner said, "What I've enjoyed most is feeling that I've promoted the interests of rural Texas and West Texas. There aren't many of us on (state) commissions who are from rural areas."

Mrs. Garner said she has "accomplished some things for agriculture" and in attacking the state's solid-waste problems.

"It (agriculture) is still the backbone of the economy in this country."

And the decisions made by the commission "affected everybody in the state. If we put difficult and expensive things on local governments, they have to pay for it.

"The taxpayers have to pay for it. And so what I tried to do was consider how our decisions were going to affect the people of the state and the governments of cities and counties."

She was born Jan. 5, 1912, in Bryan.

She moved to Midland in 1950.

She married Vernon "Big Daddy" Freeman in Midland. He preceded her in death.

Mrs. Freeman received her beautician's license in 1957 from the Wilson Beauty School of Odessa.

She was a member of Macedonia Basptist Church, where she served on the Usher Board and various other auxiliaries of the church. She later joined Mount Calvary Missionary Baptist Church under the pastorate of her nephew, the Rev. Robert Lathan.

Survivors include one daughter, CaSandra Williams of Texarkana; one sister, Willie D. Lathan of Midland; three stepdaughters, Addie Taylor of California, and Jessie Lee Morris and Vernie Franklin, both of Midland; one stepson, Billy Freeman of Midland; several step-grandchildren and numerous nieces and nephews.

WORK: Injured workers receive support from court decision nent but partial disability is too restrictive.

The court's decision was hailed by legislative leaders and the insurance industry.

Lt. Gov. Bob Bullock called the ruling good news because "the workers' compensation system has been working extremely well. We have lower rates for employers, less attorney participation and better benefits for injured workers."

House Speaker Pete Laney, D-Hale Center, said the reforms reversed "years of double-digit increases in insurance costs" and improved benefits for injured workers.

"If Texas had a Dow Jones average just for state business, it would probably go up 50 points today," said Rick Gentry of the Insurance Information Institute.

Jerry Johns, of the Southwestern Insurance Information Institute, said the decision was "a victory for workers, employers and insurers ... The Legislature enacted a law which has been a model for other states to follow."

But AFL-CIO president Joe Gunn called the ruling a "bitter ending" to labor's legal challenge and pledged to seek changes in the Legislature.

"We continue to believe strongly that this law is stacked against the interests of workers. We won't rest until lawmakers produce a fair and decent system," Gunn said.

Six of the nine Supreme Court justices joined in the majority opinion upholding the law. They were Chief Justice Tom Phillips, and Justices Raul Gonzalez, Nathan Hecht, John Cornyn, Craig Enoch and Priscilla Owen.

Three justices — Rose Spector, Bob Gammage and Jack Hightower — dissented over a part of the law dealing with an injured worker's right to a jury trial.

One of the primary objections from labor was the system's use of American Medical Association guidelines in determining benefits for injured workers.

In siding with the AFL-CIO in 1993, the 4th Court of Appeals in San Antonio declared the law unconstitutional, ruling that it restricted workers' access to jury trials. That court also said the AMA impairment guidelines were unfair.

Under the guidelines, certifying physicians assign an injured worker an "impairment rating," which indicates, for example, if a worker is 12, 14 or 20 percent impaired. A jury is then required to select one of the ratings without being able to hear further testimony.

Labor attorneys argued that the procedure made a mockery of trial by jury.

Bill Whitehurst, an attorney who represented labor, had argued that the Legislature "created a scheme which we've never seen in our jurisprudence before which tries to limit the role a jury can play."

In a dissenting opinion, Justice Rose Spector wrote, "Texans have long recognized that the right of trial by jury is 'The only safe guarantee for the life, liberty and property of the citizen. Today's decision undermines that guarantee by allowing the Legislature to arbitrarily curtail the jury's role."

But the majority opinion written by Phillips said the Workers' Compensation Act, "provides for a trial by jury on the principal compensation issues: compensability of the injury; eligibility for income and death benefits; and within limits, the amount of those benefits."

Jury's note in implant trial raises possibility of mistrial, some say

HOUSTON (AP) — Jurors deliberating a $29 million breast implant lawsuit against Dow Corning Corp. and its co-owner, Dow Chemical Co., said Thursday they could not answer several of the questions in their charge.

The disclosure, in a note from the jury to State District Judge Michael H. Schneider, raised the possibility the critical lawsuit could wind up being declared a mistrial.

A hung jury could be considered a victory for the Dow companies. Like a finding for the defendants, they would not be liable for damages.

There was no indication what was confusing the jurors, who must answer 14 questions in the charge they were given Feb. 2.

"'Several' was the word they used," Richard Mithoff, one of the plaintiffs' attorneys, said. "The jury sent out a note saying they were at an impasse."

After meeting with lawyers for both sides, Schneider wrote back to the jurors telling them to answer as many as they possibly could "given the time and care put into this case."

Jurors departed late Thursday afternoon with no additional communication with the court. They were to resume deliberations Friday morning.

The trial began Nov. 16.

If questions jurors can't answer are of material issues to the case, a mistrial could be declared.

"There's different potential ways this thing can shake out," John O'Quinn, another lawyer for the plaintiffs, said.

HOW TO SAY "I LOVE YOU"
In "A Midsummer Night's Dream", Shakespeare wrote, "Saint Valentine is past: Begin those wood-birds but to couple now." True it is, as in nature birds begin to mate and sing in the Spring, so our hearts turn to love. So comes Valentine's Day. From an origin in honor of a Roman priest, St. Valentine, who was famous for his love and charity, comes this day in February. Today, we spend more dollars on this time than most any other.
How do I say it...with Flowers, a personal gift, a box of candy? Metaphorically speaking of God's love for man as a sweet love affair, Song of Solomon 6:3 of the Bible declares, "I am my beloved's, and my beloved is mine."
Love is God. John 3:16 explains, "for God so loved..." And because He loved, Jesus tells you and me as Christians, "love one another". How do I say it? Maybe a pretty card. Better, a long walk with kind words. Or, a tender hand that rejoices, and weeps. Say it, "I Love You!" It is the sweetness of the soul.

Radio station celebrates 25 years, prepares for cutbacks

By Felix Sanchez
The Houston Post

HOUSTON — Texas A&M University's public broadcasting television station, KAMU-TV, will be celebrating its 25th anniversary in a few days.

But exactly what the next 25 years at KAMU-TV, and other university-affiliated public broadcasting television and radio stations, might be like hinges on a proposed cutback in federal support for the Corporation for Public Broadcasting.

At stake is the ability of colleges and universities — even those who don't receive a penny of federal money — to provide students with the broadcasting experience of working at fully operating radio and television stations.

There are 88 public TV stations affiliated with universities across the country. Of the 629 public radio stations licensed to broadcast, 328 are linked to universities.

The Republican-controlled Congress is taking a serious look at taking away federal subsidies, totaling $285 million a year, to the CPB. Some argue the expenditure is a "luxury item."

Whatever the reasoning, such action would cause those stations to look for ways to increase corporate or public donations to make up the slack. Or cut back on services.

That in turn would impact colleges, like Texas Southern University in Houston, who operate stations without the benefit of Corporation for Public Broadcasting funding.

Texas Southern University relies heavily on private donations to fund its jazz FM station, KTSU, and the competition for those donor dollars would become fierce with the federal cutbacks.

"These stations are certainly very important. That's where the new talent, the next generation of public broadcasters, are trained," said Jeannie Burton, with the Corporation for Public Broadcasting in Washington, D.C.

At Texas A&M, KAMU-TV is the Public Broadcasting System outlet for Bryan-College Station. The station, along with KAMU-FM, makes up the Educational Broadcast Services network and operates on a $1.6 million budget.

Of that, 28 percent of funding comes from TV federal grants, and another 5 percent from FM federal grants. Texas A&M contributes 28 percent to the operating budget.

According to educators, a typical college-affiliated station gets about 21 percent of funding from the university, and 28 percent from federal funding.

If funding is cut, universities would be hard-pressed to make up that money, educators said.

Richard Schaeffer, assistant professor of journalism at A&M, doesn't think cutbacks will have a direct correlation on whether students will have continued access to working at KAMU-TV.

But it could mean cutbacks in the quality of production and broadcast equipment the stations are able to purchase and students train on.

And if the station had to opt for satellite programming to save money, that would eliminate local production work that students can now do.

Rick Roberts, general manager of KTSU at Texas Southern University, said the station depends heavily on listener and donor support since it doesn't rely on Corporation for Public Broadcasting funding.

"We have survived through community volunteers and student staffers. With money being cut back, you will have everybody trying to spread their dollar to all these stations." Roberts said.

"I think CPB cuts will be devastating in the sense that the people in America will no longer have another voice" to commercial broadcast stations, Roberts said.

"We saw this coming five years ago," Roberts said. For that reason, TSU moved to making the station fully viable without government donations.

John Proffitt, general manager at KUHF-FM classical radio at the University of Houston, said the station — and a PBS television station — operate strictly as a Public Broadcasting System facility and has no official university affiliation.

But Proffitt decries the proposed funding cuts — the station receives about 18 percent in federal funding — and their potential impact.

"We could weather any cuts. . . We would be able to go to the community. But in that sense, there are implications for the nationwide broadcasting system" and others fighting for the donor dollar.

Vitamin E reduces cholesterol levels, study shows

DALLAS (AP) — Men need at least 600 milligrams a day of vitamin E to reduce their levels of "bad" cholesterol, which causes heart attacks and strokes, according to a study published Thursday.

But scientists still caution that more research on vitamin E is required. And the treatment is only recommended for people at high risk of heart disease.

The new study, conducted by the University of Texas Southwestern Medical Center at Dallas, reports that doses of at least 400 international units, or 600 milligrams, a day can reduce levels of so-called "bad" cholesterol, said Dr. Ishwarlal Jialal, the study's leading author.

"What we've shown is that if people are conducting clinical trials, they should use at least 400 IU a day to see benefits," Jialal said.

Similar studies on vitamin E have been conducted, but they did not deal with dosage size.

Experts have long known that people who eat lots of fruits and vegetables rich in vitamins and other nutrients have a lower risk of cancer. Now, they're trying to isolate the cancer-preventing chemicals in such foods.

Currently, the daily intake of vitamin E recommended by the federal government is 25 IUs. One IU equals 1.5 milligrams.

'What we've shown is that if people are conducting clinical trials, they should use at least 400 IU a day to see benefits.'

— Dr. Ishwarlal, study's leading author.

Scientists have been studying vitamin E, vitamin C and beta carotene for their properties as antioxidants, which appear to protect against heart disease.

All three are called antioxidants because they prevent oxidation of molecules like LDL cholesterol. Once the LDL is oxidized, it is more easily absorbed in artery walls and built into foam cells — the first step in plaque formation. As plaque forms, it narrows the arteries and affects blood flow, establishing conditions that can lead to a heart attack or stroke.

In a May 1993 report published in the New England Journal of Medicine, two major studies from the Harvard School of Public Health found that people who take vitamin E pills appear to cut their risk of heart disease by about 40 percent.

In a December 1993 study published in Circulation, the American Heart Association's journal, vitamin E proved more potent than either vitamin C or beta carotene in preventing heart disease.

Dr. Artemis P. Simopoulos, president of the Center for Genetics, Nutrition and Health in Washington, D.C., said the new study is promising but still needs to be tested.

She said researchers must determine if the dose lowers the oxidation level and, if so, whether that leads to fewer heart attacks and deaths.

If the tests succeed, she said, the vitamin could provide "another ally in combating heart disease, instead of drugs, along with diet and exercise."

The study tested vitamin E in doses of 90, 300, 600, 1,200 and 1,800 milligrams a day in 48 healthy men.

Blood tests done after two months found that only the men who had received daily doses of 600 milligrams or more had a significant decrease in bad cholesterol.

The results of the study are published in the February issue of "Arteriosclerosis, Thrombosis and Vascular Biology," a journal of the American Heart Association.

Dr. Robert Kohn, a clinical professor of medicine at the State University of New York at Buffalo, said a recent surge of interest in the vitamin may be causing some people to head to health food and grocery stores to buy supplements.

Dallas-area health food stores report widely varying costs for a daily dose of 400 IUs of vitamin E — anywhere from 7 cents to $1.04.

But Jialal said only high-risk patients — such as those who have had a heart attack at a young age — should try the high doses, and only under the supervision of a doctor.

Kohn said the effects of prolonged ingestion of vitamin E in high doses is unknown.

Studies have shown that high doses of vitamin E can speed retinitis pigmentosa, a genetically related disease that leads to blindness.

"It's probably fairly safe," Kohn said, "but I wouldn't recommend it."

Environmental Protection Agency administrator defends air efforts

WASHINGTON (AP) — The head of the Environmental Protection Agency defended the federal clean-air law Thursday, saying her agency has taken pains in the last two years to work cooperatively with states on vehicle emissions testing and other pollution curbs.

The 1990 Clean Air Act has come under attack from members of Congress — led by several Texans — as well as governors who argue that its stringent mandates are too burdensome and EPA too intransigent.

But in an appearance before the House Commerce oversight subcommittee, chaired by Texas Republican Joe Barton, EPA Administrator Carol Browner insisted her agency is heeding calls for greater flexibility.

"By working together — industries, government, citizens and Congress — we have protected millions of Americans from cancer, heart disease, lung disease and premature death," she said. "But much remains to be done."

Forty percent of all Americans still live in areas where the air doesn't meet health standards, she said.

"The Clean Air Act gives us the opportunity to clean up our air and do it in a common-sense, cost-effective, consensus-based manner," Browner testified.

Some fear 'Information Age' will created divided nation

By Marcia Stepanek
Hearst Newspapers

'This isn't just a question of whether the poor don't have access and the rich do, but whether many members of the middle class and libraries, schools and hospitals also will have fast and affordable access to these new services.'

— Andrew Schwartzman, director of the Media Access Center, a public interest group

Julie Omelchuck, 34, lives in an affluent section of Portland's Rose City Park neighborhood. Across town, Paula Manley, 37, a coordinator at a suburban community center, lives in a less-affluent city neighborhood.

The two women know each other, are college graduates and are married to working spouses. But in Portland and other cities across America, the "Information Age" might start to separate people like Omelchuck and Manley in ways they haven't been before.

Omelchuck's upscale neighborhood will probably be among the nation's first to realize the high-tech wonders promised down the line by the coming information superhighway — the amorphous, yet-to-be-built network of fiber optics and cables that could one day zap into America's living rooms and business offices such things as interactive classroom lectures from abroad and electronic "house calls" from doctors, lawyers and teachers via two-way video services — just for starters.

But Manley will probably have to wait much longer.

According to construction blueprints drawn up by US West, the phone company that wants to build Portland's leg of the superhighway, Omelchuck's neighborhood would get wired up first.

Manley's neighborhood — and several others in the city — would have to wait indefinitely for the company to break ground and install the costly maze of underground cables and switchboxes needed to add her house to the high-speed communications network of the future.

Because of the high costs of installation — some $1,000 per home for upgraded cable or twice that for two-way fiber optic lines — economic considerations are pushing phone and cable companies to wire up some of the nation's wealthier suburbs and neighborhoods first.

Public interest advocates call the practice "electronic redlining," and they say it threatens to create a new class of information haves and have-nots in America.

Manley and other public interest advocates want the Federal Communications Commission — the agency that regulates telecommunications companies — to require low-income neighborhoods to be included in the areas wired up first to the superhighway.

And they want Congress to update the nation's 60-year-old Communications Act to require companies to set aside public "rights of way" on the information highway — enough room for noncommercial information such as two-way medical or job retraining services. They also want that information priced low enough so as to be able to help those who may need it the most.

"This isn't just a question of whether the poor don't have access and the rich do, but whether many members of the middle class and libraries, schools and hospitals also will have fast and affordable access to these new services," says Andrew Schwartzman, director of the Media Access Center, a public interest group in Washington, D.C.

Says public interest advocate Jeff Chester: "Just because the superhighway is to be built by the private sector, it does not need to be a high-priced virtual shopping mall and movie theater for the rich.

"Price the information services low and many people will use them," Chester says. "Price them high and the superhighway will become a luxury item for the wealthy, or divide the middle class into those who can afford some information and those would can afford much less."

Telephone companies such as Bell Atlantic, Ameritech, and US West — some of the firms starting to build the new superhighway — vehemently deny they are discriminating on the basis of race or income. They defend their selection of initial superhighway construction sites by arguing that they simply must go where business prospects are the best, especially in the start-up phase of a long-term building program.

"It would be impossible to deploy the service everywhere all at the same time," says Patricia Koch, an assistant vice president for regulatory relations at Bell Atlantic Network Services Inc. in Washington, D.C. "We had to start building our network someplace ... so it's being built in areas where there are customers we believe will use and buy the service. This is a business."

Yet even if equal access were guaranteed, say Koch and others, the sheer size of the superhighway project means it will take some people longer than others to get hooked up.

US West spokesman Dave Banks says his firm will spend $500 million each year until it can "build up all of our customer base." Getting everyone onto the superhighway, he says, "could take about 20 years."

In the nation's capital, the question of public access — who gets wired first and who might be left out of the information loop — is becoming a politically charged fight between liberals and conservatives.

Rep. Edward J. Markey, D-Mass., former chairman of the House telecommunications subcommittee, uses the phrase "informational apartheid" to describe the potential danger.

"We're moving to an era where phone companies and cable companies are trying to target certain income groups," Markey says. If that occurs over the long run, he believes, "we're going to wind up in a world where the best information is the most expensive — and the only high technology that a 10-year-old boy in the inner city has access to is a handgun."

The White House, while it has promoted the ideal of access for all, has stopped short of offering up any legislation of its own to determine who will pay for that ideal. And for now, the question of who should pay — and how much —to link up everyone has been left, largely, to the nation's businesses.

Part of the problem is that there is a wide gap between stating the principle of universal service and bringing it about.

"Right now, everyone — a homeless man and a CEO — pretty much pay the same 20 cents to use a telephone," says Paul Saffo of the Institute for the Future in Menlo Park, Calif. "But how are we going to define such 'basic service' in the next century? How much access to information will be considered the minimum needed for people to be real players in the society of the future?

"If 20 cents will still buy a phone call, will people have to pay an extra $2 a minute to get on their computers to find out how Congress voted, and an extra $50 an hour to get plugged into two-way classrooms in order to get retrained for a better job?"

And then there's the question of having access to all the new at-home — and later, wireless — equipment needed to link up and log on.

Information experts say a person will probably need a combination of a telephone, a television and a computer to participate fully in all the superhighway will offer in the next century. Right now, the cost of computer equipment and software, not to mention the monthly fees charged by many online networks, can be prohibitive — and not just for the poor, but also for many middle-class consumers, public libraries, schools, hospitals and other nonprofit institutions.

Robert Bonnette, a statistician for the U.S. Census Bureau, reports that 15,546 households in Seattle — 2 percent of those in the city's metro region — don't have a telephone, much less a computer. Nearly 15,000 households in Portland — or 3.1 percent — don't have phones. And only 25 percent of homes across the nation currently have a computer — though most business analysts estimate more than half of American homes will have one by the end of the decade and three-fourths will have one by 2020.

"In a society that is fed up with what it perceives as excessive government spending and taxation, there is little support for a massive federal investment to build or subsidize the information highway," says Nicholas Baran, editor of Byte magazine, an independent telecommunications monthly.

Yet for companies, he says, low-cost, universal access may be hard to provide because of the billions of dollars they'll have to shell out just to build the superhighway.

From a public policy perspective, Republican House Speaker Newt Gingrich and other conservatives agree that the new technologies will have a big impact on democracy and on the lives of all Americans.

But they worry about the potential for what they call "electronic welfare." And they worry that if the government steps in too aggressively, requiring that everyone become entitled by law to Superhighway access — and to some of the information that moves across it — such rules could put government in the welfare business all over again, handing out information and computers as another entitlement.

To guard against that possibility, Gingrich has been preparing a "cyberspace initiative" co-written by futurist and personal friend Alvin Toffler and economist George Gilder. It is entitled "Magna Carta for the Knowledge Age," and it advocates sweeping deregulation of the technology industry and calls for "liberation from rules, regulations, taxes and laws." Access, it says, "should be determined largely by the marketplace."

Unlike Vice President Al Gore, who has insisted that government must find a way to help ensure access for all to the superhighway, Gingrich believes government should step out of the way. Gingrich is also far less willing than Gore to finance demonstration projects and other joint government-industry initiatives to prove the technology and ensure its access to all.

GOP strategists are already taking aim at the Clinton administration's High Performance Computing & Communications Initiative, which provides some public money to help minorities and rural disadvantaged get on line.

For Sen. Larry Pressler, R-S.D., the fight over public access to the Superhighway is a struggle between liberals and conservatives.

FAMILY MATTERS

Journaling can be helpful to children, parents

By Jim May, Ph.D.

DEAR FAMILY: Sometime ago (and I forget just when), you suggested to someone that they get a journal for their child and help them write in it. I thought that was a good idea too, but I didn't do anything about it at the time. My 10-year-old daughter is shy and has a difficult time expressing her feelings. She is a very sweet child, but doesn't have many friends. She does well in school and is reasonably artistic.

May

I think you said it could help children learn to express their feelings if they wrote each day in a journal. If that is the case, would you give me some ideas about how I might help her get started? If you don't think it would help, would you give me some other ideas? I want to help her. - WORRIED MOM

DEAR WORRIED: Journal writing is a very good technique for children and adults to learn to express their feelings. It is a safe channel and begins a process of learning self-expression, but in order for it to be safe, the journal must be off limits to everyone except the writer - including parents. Children can also benefit from journal writing in a variety of situations, such as problems at home, at school, with friends, when traveling, and so on.

Lucia Capacchione, in her book, "The Creative Journal for Children," suggests the following general guidelines for journal keeping:

- Never force or coerce a child into keeping a journal.
- The journal is in the child's own words.
- Journal writing is best done in a quiet setting. It is helpful to establish a period of silence or relaxation before the child starts writing.
- While the journal work does not have to be done every day, the more often the child writes, the more the benefit. Daily writing is also a good way to acquire the habit and the skill.
- Children's journals must be private, personal and confidential. Children should not be forced to share their journals. Parents may want to help the child find a "safe place" to keep the journal.
- An 8-1/2x11-inch lined notebook with a sturdy binding makes a good journal.

As a common place to start, suggest that your daughter write about her day - what happened and how she felt about it. When you present the idea of journal writing to her, you may want to tell her about Anne Frank's "Diary of a Young Girl." You may want to point out some of the values of keeping a journal, including safety of expression, relaxation, encouragement of spontaneity, safe experimentation, development and reinforcement of communication skills, record of creative ideas, creativity development and help in learning about oneself.

You may also want to mention to your daughter that she can draw in her journal when she wants to, rather than just write. Other examples of journal subjects can include: How I am feeling today, Who am I?, My body-my self, I wish, When I grow up, Scary stories, My imaginary friend, My family tree, and so on. As you can tell, I believe that journal writing is a wonderful mechanism. I encourage you to discuss this with your daughter and help her get started on this exciting journey.

The following ideas on responding to an angry child are offered by the Centers for Children and Families.

- Express interest in the child's activities. Children naturally try to involve adults in what they do.
- Very young children and who are emotionally deprived seem to need much more adult involvement than other children.
- Be ready to show affection. Sometimes a hug or other impulsive show of affection is all that is needed for any angry child to regain control.
- Ease tension through humor. Kidding the child out of a temper tantrum or outburst lets the child "save face."
- It is important to distinguish between face-saving humor and sarcasm or teasing ridicule.
- Appeal directly to the child. Tell him or her how you feel and ask for consideration.
- A parent may gain a child's cooperation saying such things as "I know that noise you're making doesn't usually bother me, but today I've got a headache, so could you find something else you would enjoy doing?"
- Explain stressfull situations.
- Children often can begin to react properly once they understand the cause of their frustration.

DEAR ABBY

Adopted woman thankful she was chosen for wonderful life

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I am hoping you publish this letter because I know of no other way to deliver my message.

Van Buren

I was born on Jan. 3, 1957, at St. Mary's Hospital in Tucson, Ariz. I was given up for adoption by a young woman from the Midwest. I've never felt the need to find my birth mother, but I've always wanted to thank her.

I have the kindest, most loving parents in the world. I grew up in a very happy home where I was privileged to have all the advantages a child could hope for. My parents raised me to be proud that I was a "chosen" child. I may have been too well-adjusted; my third-grade teacher sent a note home to my mother asking her to please stop telling the other kids with such enthusiasm that I was chosen by my parents from all the babies in the world, and how unfortunate for them that their parents were "stuck" with them. The poor non-chosen kids were going home in tears because they weren't adopted!

I live in Phoenix with a terrific husband, and we have seven beautiful children. I still talk to my mom and dad every day.

So, to my birth mother, wherever you are: I know that giving me up was the hardest, most courageous thing you ever did. Thank you from the bottom of my heart for the gift of a wonderful life.

I am signing my real name for you to use if you wish. Or, if you prefer, just sign me ... SUSY IN PHOENIX

DEAR SUSY: What a heartwarming letter! Thank you for writing.

DEAR ABBY: I am a 12-year-old girl who is an avid reader of your column. I couldn't help but notice how many grandparents and other relatives complain about the lack of thank-you notes they get.

Ever since I could write, I have written long thank-you letters to all gift-givers. The rewards are great. I thought everyone wrote thank-you notes, but apparently I'm wrong. So I thought I'd contribute some guidelines:

1. Thank them for the gift; tell what you plan to do with it.

2. Mention anything interesting going on in your life (family members, pets, sports, etc.).

3. Ask questions about their life and activities.

4. If possible, include a recent picture. Or send along an interesting article or a funny cartoon.

If you follow those steps, you'll end up with a wonderful thank-you letter. And believe me, it won't go unappreciated! — WANTS TO HELP IN ST. CLOUD, MINN.

DEAR WANTS: You are a wise young lady, and I predict that you will do very well in life. I'm sharing your guidelines, which should benefit many who get "writer's block" when faced with the chore of writing thank-you letters.

DEAR ABBY: This is in regard to smokeless tobacco:

In 1967, my husband had a severe heart attack, and he stopped smoking. Several months later, his cardiologist told him that smokeless tobacco would not be harmful.

After a year or so, during a physical examination, several malignant tumors were discovered in his bladder. The urologist immediately scheduled surgery to remove them.

The urinary specialist said, "We don't THINK smokeless tobacco caused this ... we KNOW it!"

He was checked regularly from then on, and had to have tumors in his bladder removed six more times before he passed away in 1994. — MRS. BERYL FRAZIER, ARVADA, COLO.

DEAR MRS. FRAZIER: My condolences on the loss of your beloved husband. I hope you shared with his cardiologist what his urinary specialist told you: "We don't THINK smokeless tobacco caused this ... we KNOW it!"

DEAR ABBY: I have read your column for many years. Now I find myself in need of your advice.

Three years ago, I was exposed to genital herpes. I have not dated anyone since then. Recently I met a very nice man and have gone out with him a few times. We are very much attracted to each other. We're not kids — we are both over 25.

I live in a small town and people talk. I believe in being honest about this, but I can't discuss my situation with anyone. I feel totally alone, although I am sure there are others who share my problem.

My question: When should I tell this man I have herpes? — ALONE IN COLORADO

DEAR ALONE: You may feel "alone," but you are far from it. An estimated 40 million Americans have become infected with herpes — about one in four adults. Less than half of them are aware of it. As you know, the outbreaks come and go, and although they are sometimes inconvenient, they are not life-threatening.

The Herpes Resource Center (HRC) has a network of approximately 100 local support groups around the country, which provide information and emotional support, and offer the opportunity to talk about your situation (or listen to others) in a confidential environment. The purpose of these meetings is to share experiences and obtain a broader knowledge of how the virus affects others who have it. Talking openly relieves much of the stress, embarrassment and confusion about living with herpes.

HRC is a program of the American Social Health Association (ASHA), whose services include a National Herpes Hotline, support groups, and a quarterly journal on herpes. For information about the services, call (800) 230-6039 or send $1 (postage and handling) to: Herpes Resource Center, ASHA, Dept. PR46, P.O. Box 13827, Research Triangle Park, N.C. 27709. (No self-addressed, stamped envelope is required.)

ASHA has recently published a very informative book, aptly titled "Managing Herpes," by Charles Ebel (available at the above address). It is priced at $19.75 (includes postage and handling).

Proceeds from book sales support the work of ASHA, a non-profit organization dedicated to stopping sexually transmitted diseases, but if the price is too steep for you, your local library may have the book, or be able to get a copy.

Now, to answer your question: Tell your friend before you engage in any intimate contact that might put him at risk.

To order "How to Write Letters for All Occasions," send a business-sized, self-addressed envelope, plus check or money order for $3.95 ($4.50 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, Letter Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054-0447. (Postage is included.)

Abigail Van Buren's column is distributed by Universal Press Syndicate.

Easy-to-bake Valentine cookies sweeten holiday

Associated Press

Just a handful of ingredients are needed for linzer squares, a sweet treat for Valentine's Day.

LINZER SQUARES

½ cup ground almonds (⅓ cup whole almonds, ground)
1 cup packed brown sugar
½ teaspoon baking powder
½ teaspoon salt
¾ teaspoon cinnamon
½ cup butter or margarine
1 egg
1½ cups all-purpose flour
½ cup raspberry jam

Beat together almonds, sugar, baking powder, salt, cinnamon, butter, egg and all but 2 tablespoons of the flour.

Remove ¾ cup of the dough; add the reserved 2 tablespoons flour. Knead together until smooth; chill until firm (use the freezer to speed up this process, if desired).

Meanwhile, using damp fingernails, press remaining dough into the bottom of a 9-inch square baking pan; spread with raspberry jam.

Roll chilled dough onto well-floured surface to ¼-inch thickness. Cut into ½-inch wide strips. Lay the strips in a crisscross fashion to make a lattice design. Bake in a preheated 375-degree F oven for 20 to 25 minutes. Cut into squares. Makes 16 squares.

Nutrition facts per square: 177 cal., 7.74 g fat, 2.32 g pro., 25.6 g carbo., 28.8 mg chol., 135 mg sodium.

Fit for decades

Fitness enthusist Oliver Huskinson, 99, exercises at his home in Linthorpe, England, after doctors ordered him to give up weight lifting recently. Huskinson, who has also been advised to give up his regular eight-mile walks, has been pumping iron since 1918, when he took it up while recovering from maleria contracted during World War I military service in the Middle East.

DR. PAGE

By Henry F. Page, M.D.

Is it your desire to resemble a Greek Adonis or a Polish "Powerful Katrinka" so as to make a nice appearance at your final viewing, or will you settle for being a pallbearer at your jogging friends' funerals? The type of exercise with which we have been concerned in this column is that which will develop physical conditioning of sufficient degree to make life longer, happier, healthier and more productive for semi-sedentary souls. All this includes the creating of less fatigue and sturdier bones, and to achieve Plato's objective: "Mens sana in corpore sano (a sound mind in a sound body)."

Page

Remember, the body comprises a temple for the soul and requires appropriate care, whereas so many present day "Temples of Health" now sprouting nationwide focus on young "jocks" and the equipment resembles a monkey island at the zoo. All that you oldsters require is a cushioned, well-fitting shoe, a bathing suit, a dust cloth and a broom. Stressful aerobic endeavors join heavy lifting and marathon running as unnecessary cardiac risks.

Prior to indulging in any exercise and after being cleared by your physician, be aware that your stomach steals a large portion of your blood for digestive purposes, and therefore wait at least one hour before commencing. (President Eisenhower demonstrated this fact many years ago when vacationing in Colorado. He developed a coronary on exercising immediately after a large lunch.) Similar to race horses, warm up with gentle stretching of arms, legs and tendons. Likewise, at the end of your 10-30 minute stint, take a couple of minutes to slow down. The older person should emphasize flexibility, strength, coordination and balance with such activity as walking, range of motion, water walking and exercises, and swimming. Other good low-intensity sports include dancing, cycling, treadmilling, housework and gardening. All this should make your heart beat faster, but not race. Chair calisthenics are particularly helpful for persons over 70 years of age and if performed with a group regularly, render pleasant social support. Exercise should be fun and thus indulged in regularly.

Danger signs include palpitation, skipping heart beats, lightheadedness, dizziness, profuse sweating or discomfort in the chest, jaw or arm. Cease and desist if such occurs and do not resume until re-examined by your doctor.

Remember, exercise plays an essential role in wellness, along with nutrition, preventive care, correction of disease and proper use of rest and sleep — all topped by motivation. There is nothing new about this concept — consider John Dryden (1631-1700):

"Better to hunt in fields for health unbought
"Than fee the doctor for a nauseating draught
"The wise, for sure, on exercise depend
"God never made His work for Man to mend!"

Henry F. Page, M.D., F.A.C.P., is health and safety consultant to Midland Presbyterian Homes.

For good health, try some high-fiber breakfast choices

By Nancy Byal
Associated Press

Cereals, whole-grain breads and fruits are among the easiest ways to add fiber to your diet. The following will help you make high-fiber breakfast choices to get your day started off right. Over the course of the day, you should try to eat between 20 to 30 grams of fiber.

CEREALS (about 1 ounce)

Whole-bran cereal (⅓ cup), 8.5 grams fiber.

100 percent bran cereal (½ cup), 8.4 grams fiber.

Bite-size bran squares cereal (½ cup), 4.6 grams fiber.

Sweetened oat and bran cereal (½ cup), 4.3 grams fiber.

40 percent bran flakes (¾ cup), 4 grams fiber.

Granola, homemade (¼ cup), 3 grams fiber.

Raisin bran (½ cup), 3 grams fiber.

Oatmeal (¾ cup cooked), 3 grams fiber.

Shredded wheat (1 biscuit), 2.2 grams fiber.

Wheat flakes (1 cup), 2 grams fiber.

Corn grits (1 cup), 0.6 grams fiber.

BREADS

Oat-bran and raisin muffin, 5.2 grams fiber.

Whole-wheat bread (1 slice, toasted), 2.7 grams fiber.

Bran muffin, homemade, 2.5 grams fiber.

Oat-bran English muffin (1 whole), 2 grams fiber.

Plain English muffin, toasted (1 whole), 1.5 grams fiber.

Plain bagel (1 whole), 1.2 grams fiber.

Waffles, frozen (one 4-inch square), 0.9 grams fiber.

FRUIT

Figs (3), 6 grams fiber.

Dried prunes (½ cup), 5.5 grams fiber.

Dried apricots (½ cup), 5.1 grams fiber.

Pear (1 medium), 3.9 grams fiber.

Raisins (½ cup), 3.8 grams fiber.

Orange (1 medium), 3.1 grams fiber.

Dates (5), 3 grams fiber.

Apple (1 medium, with skin), 3 grams fiber.

Raspberries (½ cup), 2.8 grams fiber.

Peach (1 medium), 2.4 grams fiber.

Strawberries (½ cup), 1.9 grams fiber.

Banana (1 medium), 1.8 grams fiber.

Cantaloupe, cubed (1 cup), 1.3 grams fiber.

Orange juice (½ cup), 1 gram fiber.

Grapefruit (½ of a medium), 1 gram fiber.

Irvin signs

IRVING — Wide receiver Michael Irvin agreed to terms of a five-year contract with the Dallas Cowboys Thursday night, a team spokesman said.

Spokesman Rich Dalrymple said he didn't have financial figures immediately available. The agreement with Irvin, a free agent, was reached at owner Jerry Jones' office, and included Irvin, team vice president Stephen Jones and Irvin's agent, Steve Endicott.

Jerry Jones was out of town Thursday night. The younger Jones did not immediately return a telephone call from The Associated Press.

Late last month, the Cowboys offered Irvin a four-year, $11 million contract that would make him the NFL's highest-paid receiver.

The Dallas Morning News, citing unidentified sources, had reported that the proposal given to Irvin, a four-time Pro Bowl selection, averaged $2.75 million per season.

The proposed salary would match that of Los Angeles Raiders receiver Tim Brown, who currently has the highest average salary at the position.

Irvin has made $1.25 million each of the last three years.

Rams interview

PORTLAND, Ore. — Oregon coach Rich Brooks, who led the Ducks to their first Rose Bowl in 37 years, said Wednesday that he's been interviewed twice about coaching the Rams.

"There's not really much I can say other than I obviously have met with them," he said. "No offers have been made and I don't know the parameters of the job if it was offered. It's intriguing obviously. There are good and bad things about every situation."

'Bubble day' for Lee Rebels

■ Three Midland teams have already made the basketball playoffs and Midland Lee's boys can clinch postseason play tonight.

By Terry Williamson
Sports Editor

Midland's current state in District 4-5A basketball could be simply stated: Three for the show and one on the bubble.

The Midland High boys and girls and the Midland Lee girls are in the show, so to speak, since all three have earned uncontested state playoff berths. That leaves only the Midland Lee boys still looking over their shoulder to gain entry.

So, the game today between Abilene Cooper and Lee at 8 p.m. at Chaparral Center is much like "bubble day" at the Indianapolis 500 for the Rebels.

A victory tonight will vault Lee into the state playoffs for the third consecutive season. A loss will have Lee looking at the outcome between San Angelo and Odessa Permian. Lee could still gain playoff entry if the Bobcats lose to either Permian tonight or against Midland High on Tuesday.

Lee's bubble position doesn't seem critical even with a loss since San Angelo must win out to force a tie with the Rebels. But Lee would like to get the playoff in the bag tonight, but that would mean beating league leading Cooper, who has lost only one district outing (to Midland High) this year.

"We would like to beat Cooper," said Lee coach Jon House, "but I like our position since San Angelo has to win two games to catch us even if we lose. Beating Cooper, though, would give us at least a win over every team in the district this year, and that would be nice."

Zampese pulls out of Ram coaching derby

■ Dallas Cowboy offensive coordinator Ernie Zampese decides he would rather stay in the background in Dallas.

By Denne H. Freeman
AP Sports Writer

IRVING, Texas — Ernie Zampese got out of his comfort zone.

"I've always been a background guy and I don't like an outfront position," the Dallas Cowboys offensive coordinator said Thursday after he withdrew his name from the Rams head coaching derby.

"I like to be in the back with the tapes rolling. That's what I like to do. Being a head football coach is far, far removed from that," Zampese said.

Zampese, who was offensive coordinator with the Rams for seven years before he came to Dallas to replace Norv Turner, was one of two finalists for the Rams head coaching job. The other is Rich Brooks, Oregon coach and a former Rams assistant.

The job came open when Chuck Knox was fired last month.

Zampese was interviewed twice by the Rams and was interested in leaving the Cowboys for the right price. Zampese makes about $200,000 a year with Dallas.

"I got to thinking about the reality of the job and decided there are a lot of people in this business who would like to have my job," Zampese said. "I understood going in this was really not my bag. I knew all the people with the Rams. They are good friends. I felt if it (being a head coach) could work, it could work with them."

But Zampese decided being a head

Dykstra says players should rethink position

■ Baseball Strike

BRISTOL, Conn. (AP) — Lenny Dykstra says baseball's top players are concerned about the strike and will speak soon with union head Donald Fehr.

"The players have to rethink our position, what's best for us," Dykstra said during an interview with ESPN. "It comes down to when can we make the best deal. I think we have to balance the future with the present."

Dykstra said about 20 highly paid players will speak with each other, but wasn't clear about whether they will meet at one site or speak by telephone.

"What's happened here over the last few days is I've got some phone calls and I've talked to some of the premier players in the game ... the best players in baseball," Dykstra said. "This week there's going roughly about 20 of us, get together and talk it out, let all hang out. ...

"We're running out of time. We tried to let them get it worked out and it hasn't happened. It's time to really break it down and call a spade a spade. ...

"We're probably going to get on the phone and talk. The next step is to go to New York and talk to our executive com-

Strawberry could serve 3 months

■ Former Met slugger Darryl Strawberry pleads guilty to tax evasion and is promised a jail sentence, but he may still play baseball.

By Marlene Aig
Associated Press Writer

WHITE PLAINS, N.Y. — Darryl Strawberry, the former Mets slugger whose career has been plagued by drug and alcohol problems, pleaded guilty today to tax evasion and was promised a probable sentence of three months in jail.

The plea bargain in federal court came three days after Strawberry was suspended from baseball and released by the San Francisco Giants for failing drug tests.

Strawberry could have been sentenced to up to five years in jail. The sentence discussed today is subject to change based on probation and other presentencing reports.

Besides the three-month jail term, Strawberry is to be sentenced to three months of home confinement, with an electronic monitor.

However, he may be allowed to play baseball during the season if he gets a job.

Strawberry is also to pay a fine of between $150,000 to $250,000.

Strawberry's plea said he failed to pay between $75,000 and $120,000 in taxes between 1986 and 1990.

Strawberry had pleaded innocent in December to the tax-evasion charges, which said he hid more than $500,000 in

Maxwell to appeal 10-day suspension

■ Houston guard says NBA did not know the extent of abuse by heckler in Portland.

By Michael A. Lutz
AP Sports Writer

HOUSTON — While admitting he was wrong to attack a fan, Houston guard Vernon Maxwell said Thursday he will appeal his 10-game suspension and $20,000 fine because the NBA did not fully investigate the incident.

In a statement read by his attorney, Dick DeGuerin, Maxwell said that the NBA did not know how abusive the fan became and that the league should improve its security at games.

"I hope my case and my appeal will draw enough public attention to this problem so something is done about it," Maxwell said. "Some reasonable guideline for appropriate fan conduct needs to be adopted. It shouldn't be open season on the players."

Maxwell was ejected from Monday night's game at Portland after he stalked into the stands to confront Steve George, the fan Maxwell said had been shouting racial slurs and insulting his family.

"During the game, one of the fans began heckling me," Maxwell said. "That's usu-

Mitch Richmond makes his third straight All-Star appearance Sunday.

All-Star Richmond no longer represents loser

By NICHOLAS K. GERANIOS
Associated Press Writer

SACRAMENTO, Calif. — Sacramento Kings guard Mitch Richmond was selected to his third consecutive All-Star team, but this time it's different. He no longer represents one of the NBA's losers.

"I think I can hold my head up a little higher this year," Richmond said this week. "I'll have a better weekend just knowing we are a winning team."

Last year at this time, the Kings were 14-32. This time they are 25-20, one of the most improved teams in the league.

The Kings also have a shot at the playoffs, a forum Richmond hasn't seen since he was traded from the Golden State Warriors after the 1990-91 season.

Richmond says he sometimes watches old tapes of his Golden State playoff games, "because I haven't been in the playoffs for so long."

The trade, for Billy Owens, did have a positive effect on Richmond's career, however. He went from being a good player on a good team to the best player on a bad team. In the process he became a perennial All-Star.

"I felt I should have been an All-Star with the Warriors, but it didn't happen," said Richmond, the NBA's rookie of the year in 1988-89. "I had a better opportunity to make it here with the Kings."

Richmond, a 6-foot-5 guard, is often called the best player you never heard of because of Sacramento's status as a regional outpost within the NBA. But his performances are no secret.

The fifth selection of the 1988 draft, the former Kansas State star has never averaged less than 21.9 points per game in a season, and presently leads the Kings in scoring at more than 22 per game.

The player known to his teammates as "Rock" is often double-teamed.

Rangers frosh roll

Scott Reed scored a game-high 27 points to lead the Greenwood boys to a 73-47 win over Reagan County in freshman basketball action Thursday.

The Rangers, which improved to 154-2 on the year, had four in double figures with Reed leading the way.

Larry Johansen, Jason Brooks and John Settles scoring 10 points each.

Greenwood will conclude its season Tuesday at Crane.

SJ sweeps 8th-grade play

San Jacinto Green defeated Alamo Gray 28-26 Thursday in eighth-grade girls' action.

S.J. Green, whose record moves to 5-1, was led by Amy Johnson's eight points.

San Jacinto White made it two-for two for S.J. as they defeated Alamo Red 33-25 Thursday at San Jacinto.

White's Michelle Acosta scored 12 in the victorious effort that moved San Jacinto's record to 4-2.

Abell Blue won a close game of their own, defeating Goddard 12-11. Abell's Dee Frazier threw in eight as Abell improved its record to 3-3 overall and 2-1 in conference play.

Goddard White and San Jacinto White also picked wins on Thursday.

Goddard upended Abell White 29-24 to hand Abell its first loss of the season.

Abell, now 5-1, was led in scoring by Mike'l Hunter.

San Jacinto White knocked off Alamo Red 33-25.

Red, now 0-3, was led by Kristi West with nine.

OC baseball pick

ODESSA — Odessa College has been picked to beat out Howard College for the 1995 Western Junior College Athletic Conference baseball title from a poll conducted by league coaches.

New Mexico JC is picked third and followed by Frank Phillips and New Mexico Military.

OC's Jim Chamblee, NMMI's Steve Montoya and Frank Phillips' Rich Powers are considered the top sophomores for 1995 while OC's Randy Gregory, NMMI's Paul Darrah, Howard's Tyson Lindekugel; NMJC's Terry Clemmer and FPC's Shane Langen are the top freshman prospects.

Sandstormers win three gym titles

Sandstormers' Results

9-Under: Meghann Witte: 1. bars, 6.6; 1. beam, 7.1; 1. floor, 7.7; 1. all-around 28.5.

13-14: Melanie Trumbo: 1. bars, 6.2; 1. beam, 7.65; 1. floor, 7.95; 1. all-around, 28.9.

V-ball tourney set

The Midland Volleyball Program will host a "friendship tournament" at the Greenwood High School gyms Saturday with games beginning at 8:30 a.m. and running through the day.

Teams from Midland, Lubbock, Kermit will attend with three age group divisions (under 18, under 16 and under 14).

Midland will be represented by eight teams in the three divisions with participating players coming from the Midland Lee, Midland High and Greenwood school districts.

Lubbock will enter seven teams and Kermit two.

WTC spoils MC coach's return

By Todd Stanley
Reporter-Telegram Correspondent

SNYDER - Carri Moss led a first half shooting barrage, and Tammy Wilson sparked an intense defensive press as Western Texas defeated Midland 86-72 Thursday night to end a six-game losing skid and spoil the return of its former coach.

The Lady Westerners (10-17, 3-6) came out of the gates with their guns firing, jumping out to a 20-4 lead less than six minutes into the game, while the Lady Chaps (21-6, 6-3) were riddled with bullets.

Midland fed WTC's flame with poor shooting and costly turnovers. MC shot 25 of 69 (36 percent) from the floor while committing 26 turnovers.

RosLynn Dunn helped Midland inch its way back, connecting for all 11 of her points in the first half, including a three-pointer from beyond half court at the buzzer to cut the lead to 10, 50-40, at halftime.

The Lady Chaps were able to close the lead to five, 50-45, in the early minutes of the second half. But too many turnovers let WTC stretch its lead.

With seven minutes remaining in the game and the Lady Westerners lead back to 10, freshman Donna Carrell drained a three-pointer to burst the hopes of a Lady Chap comeback, as WTC increased its lead to 73-60.

WTC's Wilson led all scorers with 18 points and teammate Moss finished with 17, including three three-pointers.

Jackie Wright added 16 for the Lady Westerners. MC received 13 points from JoAnna Kailahi. Pam Hicks and Rashunda Jarmon added 12 points.

In what was suppose to be a celebrated return to his old home, Midland coach Ron Jones was anything but enthused.

"WTC outplayed us and deserved to win," he said. "They've lost some close games and we've won some. We proved tonight there are no easy games in this conference."

No. 12 Arkansas slips past Memphis

By The Associated Press

FAYETTEVILLE, Ark. — Elmer Martin, a senior making his first start of the season, made two free throws with 32 seconds left and No. 12 Arkansas slipped past Memphis 88-87 Thursday night despite some poor free throw shooting.

The Razorbacks' Darnell Robinson missed two free throws with 13 seconds left and the Tigers (17-6) had two opportunities for the win. Robert Reed blocked Chris Garner's drive with less than four seconds to play and Mingo Johnson's 3-pointer was way off at the buzzer.

Arkansas' Clint McDaniel fouls Memphis' Chris Garner as he flies over him in Fayetteville Thursday.

The Tigers' last lead was 40-39 late in the first half and Arkansas (18-5) led 61-47 with 16 minutes left. The Razorbacks made only nine of 20 free throws in the second half and the Tigers took advantage to close within 77-75 with 4› minutes to play. That's when Scotty Thurman, who had missed six of nine shots in the second half, made a 3-pointer.

Johnson's free throw made it 84-81, but he missed his second attempt. Lorenzen Wright rebounded and was fouled, but he missed the front end of a 1-and-1.

Arkansas led 86-83 when Corliss Williamson, who tied his season high with 28 points, drove to the basket. Martin, who had attempted only six free throws all year, set a screen and was fouled.

His free throws gave Arkansas a five-point lead.

■ Top 25 Roundup

Duke 77, No. 18 Georgia Tech 70

DURHAM, N.C.— Duke broke out of its month-long slump Thursday night, snapping a nine-game Atlantic Coast Conference losing streak by finally hanging on down the stretch to beat Georgia Tech.

The Blue Devils (11-11, 1-9 ACC) were on the verge of winning twice in the last two weeks, falling to No. 1 North Carolina and No. 8 Maryland by two points each. Both times, struggling Duke, last year's NCAA runner-up, just couldn't get a clutch play in the final moments without coach Mike Krzyzewski on the bench.

This time around the Blue Devils got key baskets by freshmen Trajan Langdon and Ricky Price in a span of 20 seconds as Duke cooled off the ACC's hottest team.

The Yellow Jackets (15-7, 6-4) had won three straight conference games by an average of 17.3 points without leading scorer and rebounder James Forrest, who is sidelined with a broken hand.

But after storming back from an 11-point second-half deficit to take a 68-67 lead with 2:35 left on an eight-footer by Travis Best, the Yellow Jackets committed two turnovers that cost them the game.

Langdon hit a 15-foot jumper after Best's shot, but then Best, who scored 25 points, threw the ball away on Georgia Tech's next possession. That turnover led to Price's short banker for a 71-68 Duke lead.

Drew Barry, the ACC's assist leader, then threw away another pass with 1:26 remaining. Duke, the worst free-throw shooting team in the league, made four straight foul shots over the next 19 seconds to seal the win.

Cherokee Parks led Duke, which avoided losing in Cameron Indoor Stadium for a fifth straight time, with 16 points and 10 rebounds.

After gaining its first halftime lead since Jan. 14 at 41-37, Duke went on a 10-2 run in the second half to take a 54-43 lead with 12:28 left before the Yellow Jackets staged their comeback.

No. 9 Arizona 84, No. 15 Stanford 73

TUCSON, Ariz. — Once again, Damon Stoudamire doomed Stanford, scoring 29 points as No. 9 Arizona extended the 15th-ranked Cardinal's misery at McKale Center into a second decade Thursday night with an 84-73 victory.

Stoudamire had a career-high 45 points when the Wildcats beat Stanford 89-83 in overtime a month ago. On Thursday, he dished out eight assists and scored 17 second-half points as Arizona (18-4, 8-2 Pac-10) came back from a 43-41 halftime deficit.

Stanford trailed by 15 points early but erased that by shooting 58 percent in the first half. The Cardinal shot 46 percent for the game, Arizona 47 percent.

Ray Owes added 20 points and 12 rebounds for the Wildcats, who had a 12-rebound edge.

But it was Joe McLean's only basket, a 3-pointer with 5:46 left, that put Arizona ahead for good, 70-69, after four second-half ties.

The loss was the 11th in a row at McKale for Stanford (15-4, 6-4), and its 15th straight to Arizona at home or away.

Reserve David Harbour and 7-foot-1 freshman Tim Young took on the scoring load for Stanford as both finished with 20 points.

Harbour's three-point play with 6:12 remaining pushed Stanford ahead for the last time at 69-67. Neither team led by more than four points in the second half until Stoudamire's jumper.

Rockets fall to hot-shooting Los Angeles

By The Associated Press

LOS ANGELES— Loy Vaught scored 15 of his career-high 33 points in the fourth quarter and the Los Angeles Clippers shot a season-high 63 percent from the field to beat the Houston Rockets 122-107 Thursday night.

Rookie Lamond Murray scored 26 points and Malik Sealy added 24 for the Clippers, who snapped a six-game losing streak and an eight-game skid against the Rockets.

Hakeen Olajuwon led the Rockets with 34 points.

Otis Thorpe made a layup with 4:24 remaining to help Houston, which trailed by 19 points in the third quarter, pull within 106-102. But Vaught, who had 13 rebounds, and Gary Grant hit jumpers to give the Clippers a 114-105 lead wih 1:39 left.

■ NBA Roundup

The Rockets lost despite shooting 55 percent from the field. They are 17-3 this season when making at least half their shots.

Warriots 109, Nuggets 101

DENVER — Latrell Sprewell scored 30 points and the Golden State Warriors held off two late charges to beat the Denver Nuggets.

Tim Hardaway had 25 points for the Warriors, who have won all three meetings with the Nuggets this year.

Reggie Williams scored 18 points for the Nuggets, who are 2-10 under interim coach Gene Littles. Denver's Dikembe Mutombo blocked two shots and moved within one of becoming the became the 38th player in NBA history to reach 1,000 blocked shots.

Golden State was without coach Don Nelson, who was in Arizona with his ill mother. His son, Donn, ran the team, which is 3-7 under his leadership.

The Warriors never trailed after opening the game with a dunk by Tom Gugliotta and a jumper by Victor Alexander.

Raider RB charged with felony aggravated assault

OVERLAND PARK, Kan. (AP) — Los Angeles Raiders running back Harvey Williams was charged Thursday with felony aggravated assault and misdemeanor battery after an alleged confrontation with his ex-wife.

Williams, formerly with the Kansas City Chiefs, was jailed Wednesday night after his ex-wife, Lorie Williams, told police he had beaten and threatened her with a knife in her Overland Park home.

Williams, 27, appeared Thursday in Johnson County District Court and was released on $3,500 bond.

Lorie Williams refused medical treatment after her ex-husband was arrested, police said.

Police Sgt. Dan Minteer said the two gave different versions of the incident. He would not say why Williams was at his ex-wife's house or what the two argued about.

Williams filed for divorce from Lorie Williams in September and the divorce was granted earlier this month.

The investigation into the incident is continuing, Police Capt. Jeffery Dysart said.

This is the third time in two years that Williams has been charged with assaulting women.

He was found innocent of assaulting a woman in September 1993 at a Kansas City bar.

In another case, he was charged with misdemeanor battery for allegedly grabbing Lorie Williams during a domestic disturbance April 16, 1993, at their Overland Park home.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

By Jeane Dixon

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 10, 1995

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Lasting financial success comes when you pay closer attention to details. Enlarging your residence could make better sense than buying or renting larger quarters. This summer, lay the groundwork for a real career coup in the fall. A raise or promotion will go to the person who shows the most creativity. Opportunities to increase your knowledge and express your talents abound!

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: actor Robert Wagner, singer Roberta Flack, golfer Greg Norman, opera star Leontyne Price.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Set things right with your romantic partner so that you can once again concentrate on work. Those in school need to study harder. You may be falling too far behind to catch up. Get better organized.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): An elderly person is a source of wisdom. A proposal needs further investigation before you make a commitment. Do not be obsessive about what you eat. Look for other ways to release your nervous energy.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Influential allies move into the spotlight now. Financial aid is available from an unusual source. Seek an out-of-the-way meeting place; privacy is essential.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You may have to do some financial stretching now. Cut down on overhead and everyday spending. A heart-to-heart talk will help get a relationship back on track. Maintain a loving attitude.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Paying bills promptly protects your credit rating. Be diligent. Replace outdated methods with helpful new ones. Consult a high-tech expert before buying computers. Working hand-in-glove with partner will boost productivity.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): You may be surprised by what happens today. The final outcome will favor your interests. A secret wish moves closer to being fulfilled. A special talent could bring you a second income. Count your blessings!

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Review a financial program and iron out any snags. A conservative approach will bring the largest financial gains. Strive to balance emotional strength with mental clarity. Put romance on hold until certain what you really want.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Following in someone's footsteps may not always be rewarding. Recognize your own potential as a leader. Prepare memos carefully before showing them to higher-ups. Someone important will be impressed by your turn of a phrase.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Childish spats can create a tense atmosphere. Rise above petty comments. Family jealousies are puzzling. Look for a way to reconcile estranged relatives. Romance is iffy.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Talk over a problem with your partner or mate. A candid exchange of views helps you explain your moral values. A social gathering allows you to sprout your wings as a social butterfly.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Trust your intuitive prompting in business. Turn away from eccentric ideas and serve humanity with humility. Your understanding of other people's needs may be equal to a gold mine! Friends offer good advice. Consider it carefully.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Ignoring warning signals would be a big mistake. Postpone making a major move at work until after the weekend. Take your responsibilities seriously but find time for creative play. A child-related investment pays special dividends.

Good declarer play can often be countered by stunning defense. This example won a prize in a team tournament in England.

North-South bid reasonably to a two-no-trump partscore. After the lead of a low heart, ducked in dummy and covered by the jack and ace, the contract could be made if the club suit were to produce four tricks since a second heart trick could be established easily enough. Rather than rely on that alone, declarer decided to try to combine it with the possibility of a 3-3 spade break.

After cashing the king of spades at trick two, declarer crossed to the queen of clubs and led a low spade from dummy. East won with the queen, and found a shattering riposte — a low club! That wreaked havoc with declarer's communications.

At the table, declarer elected to win in dummy with the ace and cash the ace of spades. No luck in that suit. Declarer guessed correctly to finesse the ten of clubs, and then led a heart to set up a second trick in that suit. But West was able to win the king of hearts, cash a high spade and the defenders reeled off three diamonds for a one trick set. Note that it is no better for declarer to win on the table, take the club finesse and lead a heart before cashing the ace of spades. There is now no entry to the table and the defenders can set up a second heart trick to defeat the hand.

Excuse me — Ms. Streisand's on the phone, says turn down volume

Excuse Me — Ms. Streisand's On the Phone

NEW YORK — Shortly into NBC's airing of "The Prince of Tides" the phone rang at the network's Manhattan headquarters.

Yes, it was Barbra Streisand. And could somebody turn down the volume on those commercials?

Streisand, the film's star and director, told The New York Times that she called NBC during the Sunday night broadcast and had an engineer lower the commercial sound by two decibels.

She was upset because volume on the commercials was much louder than the sound of her movie — a frequent problem when films are brought to the smaller screen, the network said.

"It's true she called, but it's a fairly standard thing," NBC spokesman Flody Suarez said Thursday. "We have producers call during shows all the time."

Streisand told the Times that the unidentified engineer followed her orders, although only after receiving assurance that she would assume full responsibility.

"He said they raise the volume all the time," Streisand said. "And I said that doesn't make it right."

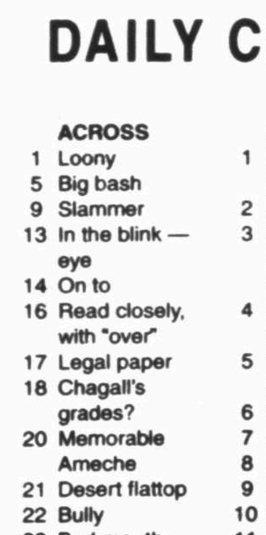
LOS ANGELES — Eric Roberts, who starred in last year's "The Specialist," was arrested for investigation of spousal abuse.



Eric Roberts is arrested in investigation of spousal abuse.

The 38-year-old brother of Julia Roberts was booked into city jail on Wednesday and released on $50,000 bail.

Officer Sandra Castello said it was unclear where the incident occurred, but it involved Roberts' wife, whose name she didn't know.

In 1988, Roberts was placed on probation for six months after pleading guilty to harassing a woman.

Roberts' performance in "Runaway Train" got him an Oscar nomination for best supporting actor in 1985. Other films include "The Pope of Greenwich Village," "King of the Gypsies" and "The Coca-Cola Kid."

BOSTON — Julia Child sampled hors d'oeuvres prepared by graduates of a food program at a homeless shelter and found everything to her taste.

"It was very good, very impressive," TV's "French Chef" said Wednesday after trying stuffed mushroom and bacon rolls, spinach quiche, chicken wings, coconut shrimp and pastries at the Pine Street Inn.

Julia Child samples hors d'oeuvres prepared by graduates.

Child was even more impressed by the one woman and nine men who had completed the inn's yearlong Food Services Job Training Program. The new graduates are finding jobs and most of last year's 16 graduates are working and living on their own.

"What you are doing here is giving people a good start," Child said. "We must not let the government put an end to such programs. We must all write our congressmen and Mr. Gingrich."

ALBANY, N.Y. — Gov. George Pataki wants to trim taxes and government — but not his hair.

The Times Union of Albany, N.Y., citing confidential medical sources, reported Thursday that New York's new Republican governor has been using Rogaine to fight hair loss since 1991.

Asked for comment on the report, Pataki spokesman Robert Bellafiore said: "We have none."

Pataki, 49 and with a slightly receding hairline, is not the first New York governor to make hair news.

In 1981, then-Gov. Hugh Carey's hair went from a statesmanlike gray to a reddish-orange hue.

"It's spring outside," Carey said in response to questions about his hair color. "My circulation always improves around budget time and has an effect upon the sebaceous roots in my scalp."

SCHUYLER, Va. — Peace and harmony once again reign in Walton country.

Operators of the Walton's Mountain Museum and Earl Hamner Jr., creator of "The Waltons" television series, have resolved their differences.

"I suspect you'll see positive things happening at the museum," James Hamner, Earl's brother, said Wednesday night.

LEE: Playoff necessary if Rebs tie Bobcats

(From 1C)

If Lee and San Angelo tie for third place there would have to be a one-game district playoff at a neutral site to determine the state playoff berth winner.

The Midland High Bulldogs of coach Jack Stephenson will be a huge fan of the Rebels tonight while Lee travels to Abilene High. The Bulldogs have already clinched and a playoff berth, but would like a shot at winning the district championship. A loss by Cooper and a win by MHS tonight would tie up the league race at the top and could set up a district championship playoff game between MHS and Cooper next weekend, probably Friday.

However, a Lee win over Cooper also places a little pressure on the Bulldogs. MHS would need to avoid losing its last two games to Abilene High tonight and San Angelo on Tuesday to avoid a potential tie for third place with Lee and another playoff battle to determine playoff seeding.

But Stephenson isn't placing hopes on all the tie possibilities since some of the outcomes are out of his control. He just wants to win the last two district games and head to the playoffs.

"We're prepared for the playoffs no matter where we finally finish up in our district," Stephenson said. "We've seen all the teams in our region and we think we can play with any of them, so it doesn't matter much where we end up. We just want to be prepared for the playoffs when they get here, and we'll be fine."

It looks like Lubbock Monterey, Lubbock Coronado and Lubbock High will be the teams from District 3-5A to go to the playoffs. District 4-5A's second and third place teams will matchup with one of those teams in bi-district. District 4-5A's champion will draw a bi-district bye and will play in the second (area) round against an El Paso bi-district winner.

PLAYOFF NOTES: Amarillo Tascosa (18-9) is the girls winner of District 3-5A and will join Midland High with a bye in the first round of the playoffs. Lubbock Coronado (21-8), the No. 2 team in 3-5A, will face 4-5A's third place Midland Lee in bi-district. That game will be played Tuesday at 7:30 p.m. in Seminole. That game had orginally scheduled in Lamesa, but was changed late Wednesday.

Abilene High, 4-5A's second place team, won't know its bi-district opponent until late tonight. District 3-5A had a three-way tie for third place with Amarillo High and Plainview playing Thursday and the winner playing Lubbock Monterey tonight. That winner will play Abilene High, either Monday or Tuesday.

Midland High and Tascosa will meet a bi-district winner from El Paso, either Friday or Saturday of next week. Midland High will have a practice game with Ozona at 7 p.m. Monday at Chaparral Center. This one is just for fun, with no pressure, but the pressure isn't far away. In other Midland hoop action, Midland Christian's boys take on Abilene Christian in a district playoff at Coahoma Friday.

COWBOY: Zampese loves Dallas

coach didn't really fit with his personality.

"When I really sat down and thought about it, I decided it was really somethi..g I didn't want to do," he said.

"I love it in Dallas," Zampese said. "It's a great town and a great organization. I came here to get a Super Bowl ring and I still think it's the best place to be."

Zampese will be with the other Cowboys coaches when they go to the NFL draft combine at Indianapolis. He said he hoped the Cowboys could sign all their free agents.

"The salary cap will make for some tough decisions," Zampese said.

Dallas owner Jerry Jones said the team is close to signing free agent wide receiver Michael Irvin.

"Everything is positive," Jones said in dealings with agent Steve Endicott. "We have a good opportunity to get something done."

Irvin has been asking in the neighborhood of $3 million a year.

Jones said keeping Zampese should help the Cowboys' continuity.

"It's gratifying that Ernie stayed with us," Jones said. "It's real refreshing to see a man that puts certain values and desires above dollars and cents. Ernie could have dramatically increased his income.

"Here's a man who could be head coaching and he is coordinating our offense. It reminds us all of his expertise and talent."

STRIKE: Philly likes Usery's proposal

(From 1C)

mittee and to Don Fehr, and to really dig deep and get inside what is the best thing for us and baseball."

Dykstra, scheduled to be paid $31,147.54 a day in 1995, is one of the few players to speak out against the stance of the union's negotiating committee, which has said it will never accept a salary cap or a tax that acts as a cap.

"Lenny Dykstra loves baseball, Lenny Dykstra is fortunate to be playing in the major leagues, Lenny Dykstra wants to play baseball in 1995," he said. "As far as going across, you'll have to ask me again in April.

"You might hear a little anger in my voice," he said later in the interview. "I am angry. I want to play baseball."

Dykstra said players should consider the solution suggested by mediator W.J. Usery. He proposed a 50 percent tax on the part of payrolls above $40 million, which is about $700,000 under the average.

"If you ask me, I think that Usery tried to do what's best for both sides; he kind of, it looks like, cut everything in half," he said. "I think there's a big chance we can get something done in his arena there with what he proposed.

"I don't know the full details, but as far as the big issues — taxation is huge, because that is basically kind of like a salary cap. But let me stress, and this is something that the players have to understand, and it's important, and that's the fact that the owners now have real concerns about the future of baseball. And they legitimately want to put a drag on salaries, and they want to change the structure of salary. It's something that they've been working on a long time, and I knew this time would come and it's here."

Fehr said he didn't fear a break in ranks.

"Players are more than welcome to have meeting," he said after the broadcast. "I have no doubt they will agree with the negotiating committee once they hear what happened at the negotiations."

Dysktra said management's plans to use replacement players had changed the dynamics of the strike.

"The owners know the replacement players are going to be a joke, but the owners want to give the player the ability to wake up in the morning, look in the mirror and dressed and say, 'I could go to that field and get paid.' For me, that's $30,000 a day, every day I wake up," Dykstra said.

"You're talking about the human element now. You're talking about a decision that is going to be a tough decision for a lot of players. This is uncharted waters for us, unlike last year in the strike, and unlike hockey this winter; even if you were opposed to your union or opposed to what was happening, you couldn't really do anything about it."

Dykstra said he didn't think much of agent Dick Moss' plans to start a United League in 1996.

"It will be weak. There's only one league and it's major league baseball," Dykstra said. "It's a joke."

MAXWELL: 'I'm embarrassed and sorry'

ally not a problem and a reasonable amount of heckling is part of the game. But he began using racial and obscene comments."

Maxwell said he restrained himself until the heckler started making references to his daughter Amber, who died in October, 1993. Maxwell prints his daughter's name on the back of his basketball shoes.

"When he began involving my daughter, Amber, in his obscene, abusive and racial remarks, I decided I had enough and I rushed into the stands," Maxwell said.

"My mistake was going into the stands and I'm embarrassed and sorry for my actions and the trouble it has caused my teammates.

"I believe the league, the team owners and the security at the arenas owe an obligation to the players to protect them from unruly fans."

George said shortly after the incident that he did not make any racial or profane remarks to Maxwell. People sitting in the row in front of George said they also heard no such remarks.

"It was clean heckling. I've done worse myself," said one fan, who did not want to give his name.

Carl Wikman, a freelance cameraman who was sitting on the floor a few feet from the Houston bench, said he heard no racist or profane comments, although his microphone dd pick up considerable profanity from Maxwell.

DARRYL: Test showed cocaine use income he received from memorabilia shows and personal appearances.

Strawberry was suspended Monday for 60 days for violating baseball's drug policy and the terms of his aftercare program. The Giants released him right after the penalty was announced.

Strawberry did not play for the first two months of the 1994 season after he admitted a substance abuse problem and sought treatment. There was speculation at the time that he had a cocaine problem, but it was never officially confirmed by representatives of baseball or Strawberry.

The Associated Press learned that cocaine was the drug Strawberry tested positive for last month.

Strawberry, 32, was once one of baseball's brightest prospects. He made eight All-Star teams during 12 years with the Mets, Los Angeles Dodgers and Giants. He is the Mets' career home run leader with 252 and led the NL in homers in 1988 with 39.

Busch Clash marks debut of unproven Monte Carlos

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. (AP) — The Busch Clash is more than just a big-money, made-for-TV race this year. The 50-mile dash marks the debut of Chevrolet's new, unproven Monte Carlos.

Five of the sleek Chevys will duel with 10 Ford Thunderbirds and one Pontiac Grand Prix in the race for $340,000 in prize money, awarded in 10-lap segments and worth a potential $70,000 to the overall winner.

The outcome should give more than a little hint about how much of a threat the Monte Carlos will be in the Feb. 19 Daytona 500.

"I feel like the new Monte Carlos are going to be good for us," said Sterling Marlin, defending Daytona 500 winner and one of a record-tying 16 starters in the Clash. "We'll know about 1 o'clock what we've got, and I'm kind of anxious to get out there."

One o'clock would be about an hour after the race starts.

The other Monte Carlo drivers in the race include two-time defending Winston Cup champion and five-time Clash winner Dale Earnhardt, defending Clash winner Jeff Gordon, Ward Burton and defending Busch Grand National champion and David Green, who got into the Clash by winning the most poles in that series.

Geoff Bodine, who picked the No. 1 spot in the Clash in Thursday's blind draw for position, will lead the Ford contingent. Earnhardt drew the No. 2 position, followed by Ford drivers Ted Musgrave and Jimmy Spencer, Gordon and Thunderbird driver Todd Bodine, the race's wild card entry, selected from among last year's second-round qualifying leaders.

Loy Allen Jr., the 1994 Daytona pole-winner, will start seventh in a Ford, alongside Greg Sacks' Pontiac and just ahead of Marlin and Ford driver Bill Elliott. Burton is next, followed by Thunderbirds driven by Rick Mast, Ricky Rudd, Mark Martin and Rusty Wallace, with Green having drawn the final starting spot.

"The Monte Carlo appears to be a pretty good race car, but we don't quite know how it will be in a race," said Earnhardt, who in 1991 became the first and only driver to win both heats of the Clash, coming from 14th to take the second segment.

"This race don't give you enough time for any type of strategy. That's what I like most about it, I guess," added Earnhardt. "It's one race where fuel mileage, tire wear, nothing like that comes into play. You just put your foot to the floor and go.

"I like that," concluded a grinning Earnhardt. "I like it a lot."

Three other drivers were eligible for the race, but Harry Gant retired at the end of the 1994 season and both Chuck Bown and Ernie Irvan still are recovering from head injuries.

Pohl, Edwards share Buick lead

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Dan Pohl and Joel Edwards had final shots that were as impressive as the weather that greeted the first round of the Buick Invitational.

Pohl and Edwards finished 7-under-par 65s with 18th-hole eagles and joined Phil Mickelson, Chris DiMarco and Jerry Haas atop the leader board at Torrey Pines on Thursday.

Edwards, playing in the first group on the South Course, made a 15-foot eagle putt on the par-5, 498-yard 18th. Pohl, who has been hampered by chronic back problems, was in the second group and had a more sensational finish, chipping in from 60 feet for eagle.

Pohl's eagle came after birdies on 15, 16 and 17.

"Up until that point, it was a very comfortable ball-striking round," Pohl said. "Then it just took off."

Pohl said that when his back is troubling him, he has a difficult time figuring out the distance he needs on his shots.

But when he's healthy, "I feel I've got a lot more control of my distance with my iron shots, and that's really critical for me," he said.

Pohl, who hasn't won a tournament since 1986, hit 18 greens in regulation and missed only two fairways.

Edwards had a strong finish, too, with four birdies on the back nine in addition to his eagle.

"My round started slow. Nothing happened," said Edwards, who followed a bogey on the par-4 4th hole with consecutive birdies.

"I got it going on the back side. It was solid. I'm still shaking over the eagle. Rounds like this don't come often."

Payne Stewart, David Ogrin, Brad Faxon, Brandel Chamblee and Bob Burns were one stroke back at 66. Defending champion Craig Stadler was tied with nine others at 67.

Peter Jacobsen, who won last weekend's AT&T National Pro-Am at Pebble Beach, was one of 16 players at 68.

The first of three tour stops in Southern California began with optimum conditions: a gorgeous sunny day with little breeze on the seaside courses. There could be rain by the weekend, though.

"The golf course is in great shape," said Mickelson, who played Torrey Pines while growing up. "I hope it doesn't rain and soften it up too much. It's really in the best shape that it's ever been.

"The scores are going to be low because the fairways are immaculate and the greens are rolling the best they have," he added. "Any putts, you really feel like you can make it."

Last weekend, rain forced the cancellation of all practice rounds at Pebble Beach, and lift, clean and place rules were in effect.

At 7,000 yards, the South Course is 408 yards longer than the North Course, which is considered to be two or three shots easier. Both play to par 72.

Those who played the South Course on Thursday will play the North Course on Friday, and vice versa. The final two rounds will be on the South Course.

Mickelson, the tournament winner in 1993, and DiMarco both played the North Course. DiMarco, in his second year on tour, had three straight birdies before three-putting the 172-yard 17th for a bogey 4. He made a 12-foot birdie putt on 18.

Mickelson played a solid round with seven birdies. He missed three short putts, including one on 18 that would have given him the lead alone.

"I was disappointed with my last putt, but I'm very comfortable with the way I'm rolling it," said Mickelson, who won the Northern Telcom Open three weeks ago.

Haas also had seven birdies on the North Course.

Kwan: from backdrop to favorite

■ U.S Figure Skating

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — In skating circles, it is referred to as "the incident." It had a profound effect on the sport of figure skating, which saw its popularity soar into another galaxy.

It forever changed the lives of Nancy Kerrigan, the victim, and Tonya Harding, the conspirator. And it pushed Michelle Kwan into the spotlight, pulled her back out of it, shuffled her around through a soap opera played out before a worldwide audience.

A year later, Kwan and her coach have relatively good memories about the whole situation.

"I think she was hardly invisible as a result of that incident," Frank Carroll said Thursday during the U.S. Figure Skating Championships, in which Kwan is the favorite. "I think it was probably one of her biggest assets, just the publicity, because as famous as the other two girls became, she rode right on the coattails of that success.

"For Michelle, that incident was nothing but a positive. It was a dreadful incident, but I don't think it was negative for Michelle at all.

In the end, I think Michelle benefited from that incident."

How? Kwan's presence became a cause celebre in Norway. Would Harding be thrown off the U.S. Olympic team? Would Kwan replace her? Would Kwan be allowed to join the team as an alternate, just in case?

For a 13-year-old who hadn't yet achieved all that much in skating, this was pretty heady territory. News reports throughout last February speculated on Kwan's status, even though neither she nor Carroll expected her to skate in Lillehammer.

"After it was over at nationals," Carroll said, "and we knew that Tonya had won, and we knew that Nancy Kerrigan was second in the world championships and our major hope for a gold medal, we pretty much knew Michelle, who was second at Detroit, would not be on the team if Nancy recovered."

They were summoned to Norway by the U.S. Olympic Committee, just in case, but, of course, Kwan never got to skate.

"That was very exciting," Kwan said. "I wouldn't say it was frustrating, I guess I was happy being there. ... Just seeing the Olympics was an honor."

Carroll was asked if the honor of being national champion should have been bestowed on Kwan for her second-place finish at Detroit. Harding's crown was stripped when she was suspended for life by the U.S. Figure Skating Association.

Prices slump

NEW YORK - Oil prices edged lower in moderate trading Thursday amid continued concerns about a buildup in supplies due to mild winter weather.

The March contract for home heating oil, which plunged 1.23 cents per gallon on Wednesday, lost another 0.33 cent to settle at 47.65 cents a gallon on the New York Mercantile Exchange.

Also on the exchange, light sweet crude oil for delivery in March settled at $18.24 per barrel, down 6 cents. The contract fell 16 cents on Wednesday.

George J. Gaspar, an oil analyst with Robert W. Baird & Co. in Milwaukee, said this week's American Petroleum Institute report on oil supplies was still negatively impacting the market.

The API report, which was released Tuesday, said crude oil stocks rose to 324.6 million barrels from 320.5 million last week. It said supplies of heating oil and other distillates had fallen 1.1 million barrels to 135.7 million barrels but that the level was sharply higher than a year ago.

Meanwhile, natural gas prices rallied on the New York Merc. The March contract, which rose 1.7 cents Wednesday, settled at $1.489 per 1,000 cubic feet, up 5.1 cents.

Magazine sold

NEW YORK (AP) — K-III Communications Corp., which built a nearly $1 billion media and publishing business through acquisitions over the past six years, is selling Premiere magazine and a children's book business, industry sources say.

K-III on Thursday declined comment on whether it plans to sell either Premiere, a 600,000-circulation magazine that covers movies and the filmmaking business, or its Newfield business, which markets children's books directly to consumers.

The operations represent the first sizeable assets that privately owned K-III has sold since it was founded in 1989

Dollar little changed

NEW YORK (AP) — The dollar fell slightly against key currencies in quiet, directionless trading Thursday as dealers awaited January wholesale price data for indications on the direction of the U.S. economy and interest rates.

In late New York trading, the dollar was quoted at 98.90 Japanese yen, down from 98.95 late Wednesday.

The dollar also was changing hands in New York at 1.5286 German marks, down from 1.5314.

Other late dollar rates in New York, compared with late Wednesday: 1.2935 Swiss francs, down from 1.2960; 5.2860 French francs, down from 5.2933; 1,617 Italian lire, up from 1,615; and 1.3978 Canadian dollars, up from 1.3961.

The British pound was quoted at $1.5577, up from $1.5538.

Stocks fall

NEW YORK (AP) — Stocks put in a mixed performance on Thursday amid fears that inflation data due out on Friday will prompt another runup in interest rates.

The Dow Jones industrial average fell 2.69 to 3,932.68, posting its third consecutive single-digit loss after rising for five straight days on strong volume.

Advancing issues edged out decliners by 1,136 to 1,092 on the New York Stock Exchange. Big Board volume was moderately heavy at 325.55 million shares as of 4 p.m., up from 317.91 million on Wednesday.

The NYSE's composite index fell 0.46 to 261.21. The Standard & Poor's 500-stock index fell 1.00 to 480.19.

The Nasdaq composite index rose 1.67 to 785.44. The American Stock Exchange's the market value index rose 0.39 to 446.33.

Support sought for energy legislation

■ Railroad Commissioner Williamson seeks industry support of energy initiatives.

By SUSAN HIGHTOWER
AP Business Writer

DALLAS (AP) — The chairman of the Texas Railroad Commission urged members of the energy industry Thursday to support the commission's legislative package of tax breaks and other production incentives.

"This is a very aggressive legislative package. It won't happen unless each and every one of you is supportive and actively involved," Barry Williamson said at the eighth annual Texas Energy Update in Dallas.

About 150 people attended the conference, sponsored by the Independent Petroleum Association of America; Texas Independent Producers and Royalty Owners Association; North Texas Oil and Gas Association; Deloitte & Touche; and Akin, Gump, Strauss, Hauer & Feld.

The commission, trying to shore up declining production, has been promoting its proposed incentives since last summer. Some eight bills have been filed containing the proposals, Williamson said, and hearings have been scheduled for some.

Some of the bills offer tax incentives to encourage new wells and marginal production. Others are aimed at increasing research.

"Money in the pockets of producers can cause good things to happen," Williamson said.

Texas already has offered some incentives to producers, including granting a full severance tax exemption for 10 years when production is revived from a well that's been inactive for three years. One proposal before lawmakers would lower that inactive well time limit from three to two years.

In 1992, 368 idle wells were brought back on line. In the 14 months following the enactment of the measure in September 1993, some 3,600 wells were brought back on line, ultimately adding more money to the state's coffers, Williamson said.

Under a measure aimed at slowing the plugging of up to 10,000 Texas wells a year, the Railroad Commission would become a repository for wells that would have been plugged because they no longer make money.

Another incentive would give producers credits, or chits, for each barrel produced from a new well. The chits then could be sold, traded or used to permanently avoid paying severance taxes on marginal wells.

One bill would provide severance tax exemptions for using new technology that increases production. That legislation is aimed at helping independents cope with the high costs of technology, as the major oil companies that have led research in the past shift their production overseas.

D. Alex Mills, executive vice president of the Wichita Falls-based North Texas Oil & Gas Association, said state incentives and federal regulatory reform are important to the oil and gas industry as it wrestles with low prices.

"Everybody in the oil and gas business is operating on a very thin margin right now," Mills said.

Interest rates slow rise in home values

WASHINGTON (AP) — Rising mortgage rates curbed demand for existing homes last year and sharply trimmed increases in housing values, a real estate trade group reported Thursday.

The National Association of Realtors said only 80 of the 133 metropolitan areas in its survey posted gains in median home prices in the fourth quarter, compared to the final three months of 1994.

And in most of these, the appreciation ranged from 0.1 percent to 6 percent, compared with typical increases of between 5 percent and 10 percent two years earlier.

Nationally, the median price of an existing home in the final three months of 1994 was $107,900, just 0.8 percent above the same period a year earlier. Prices ranged from $357,000 in Honolulu to $55,000 in Waterloo, Iowa.

The median is the midpoint, meaning half of the homes cost more and half cost less.

"Higher rates are shaking up the market," said Edmund G. Woods Jr., president of the real estate group. "As more people are shut out and demand tapers off, prices tend to either stall or rise more slowly."

Indeed, the group said, demand slackened throughout most of the nation as mortgage rates climbed throughout the year. Sales fell in each of the four regions.

According to the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corp., 30-year, fixed-rate conventional mortgages averaged 9.1 percent during the October-December quarter, compared with 7.64 percent in the same period of 1993.

That increase would boost the monthly payment on a $100,000 loan by $103, from $708.83 to $811.83.

Sales of existing single-family homes, town houses, apartment condominiums and cooperatives fell 6.7 percent at a seasonally adjusted annual rate, to 4.31 million from 4.62 million a year earlier.

Only four states — Delaware, Michigan, Arizona and Minnesota — recorded gains. Sales were unchanged in Florida and figures were not available for Alaska and Georgia.

Sales plunged at double-digit rates in 24 states and the District of Columbia, including drops of 22.8 percent in Vermont, 22.3 percent in Maryland and 21.4 percent in Colorado.

But despite the sales declines, a few areas bucked the trend of slower appreciation.

The median price in the Raleigh-Durham area of North Carolina shot up 14.7 percent to $124,500. It rose 14.6 percent in the Salt Lake City area to $102,200, and 11.3 percent in Albuquerque to $114,500.

Apple sues Microsoft, Intel over software

By N.Y. Times News Service

Apple Computer Inc. has sued Microsoft Corp. and Intel Corp. for allegedly copying parts of a popular Apple software program used to display video, graphics and sound on computers.

Apple said Thursday it is seeking damages against the two companies and was demanding that they stop distributing several products, mostly for developers writing software for the Windows operating system. Apple said those products use software code that Apple markets as QuickTime, a program commonly included with software and CD-ROMs to allow them to display video.

Microsoft said it could not comment immediately on the suit. At Intel, spokesman John Thompson said: "As far as we're concerned, frankly, it's not enough lines of code to argue about, and we'll rewrite it. We'll go re-engineer the code. It's a few weeks' worth of work." At the same time, he said, Intel denies illegally copying Apple's code.

The companies had been in discussions about the dispute before Apple filed suit.

Apple said its lawsuit focuses on "several thousand significant lines of programming code from Apple's QuickTime for Windows that accelerate digital video in the Windows system and give the impression of continuous motion," with a smoother and more video-like quality than using Windows alone.

Apple said it added Microsoft and Intel to a suit it filed Dec. 6 in US District Court in San Jose, Calif. against The San Francisco Canyon Co.

Apple said that in April 1992 it contracted with San Francisco Canyon to assist in converting QuickTime for the Apple platform to run on the Windows platform. In July 1993, Apple said, San Francisco Canyon signed a separate deal with Intel to deliver a program to accelerate the processing of video images on the Windows platform.

Canyon delivered a product to Intel in August 1993 which contained code that it "copied verbatim" from Apple's QuickTime for Windows, Apple alleged. Intel, in turn, contributed the code to Microsoft for a joint development program called Display Control Interface, Apple said.

Apple said it asked for a court order to prevent Intel and Microsoft from distributing Display Control Interface and Microsoft's Video for Windows Developer Kit. Apple said the two companies had declined to halt distribution of their "offending" products despite learning of the alleged infringement two months ago.

Ula Hartner, an analyst with First Marathon Securities Ltd. in Vancouver, said the suit reflects the importance of QuickTime to Apple's goal of creating technology standards for multimedia products. "They were really betting on this to differentiate themselves," she said of QuickTime.

She said Apple is determined to defend its aknowledged leadership in the burgeoning field of multimedia. "It's the first signal to me that Apple wants to get more aggressive," she said.

Nevertheless, Hartner added, the legal case is not going to be easy to prosecute, if it indeed ends up in court.

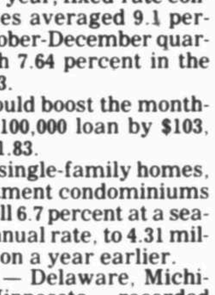
Annual contributions to spousal IRAs nondeductible

By Bill Doyle

Q. My wife and I are in our 50s. My annual salary exceeds $50,000, and I am covered by a retirement plan at work. I do not contribute to my own individual retirement account. My wife is not employed.

May I establish an IRA for my wife? If so, what is the maximum amount I can contribute annually for her? Would that amount be a deductible or nondeductible contribution?



Doyle

A. You're really out of luck on all IRA counts.

An IRA cannot be set up for your spouse alone, because she does not have a salary or other "taxable compensation."

You could establish a spousal IRA, into which up to $2,250 could be placed each year. But those annual IRA contributions would be nondeductible. Because your family's adjusted gross income - Line 31, Form 1040 - tops $50,000, you cannot make deductible contributions.

The one bit of silver lining is that the money the IRA would earn in interest, dividends or appreciation would be deferred from income tax until withdrawn at some future time. At that point, the portion of the withdrawals coming from earnings would be taxable, while the portion coming from nondeductible contributions - on which tax already has been paid - would not be taxed. In that situation, calculating what percentage of IRA withdrawals are taxable and nontaxable can be a bear of a bookkeeping chore, if your IRA sponsor does not provide that information. Unfortunately, some do not.

Such complications were brought on by the Tax Reform Act of 1986. Before that legislation was passed, any American with taxable compensation could set up an IRA and make tax-deductible contributions. Here's hoping the new Congress will restore those "universal IRA" provisions.

Q. We are just back from our honeymoon and want to plan our financial future carefully. I am convinced we should start an IRA. With a $35,000 salary, I will be entitled to an income tax deduction on my entire annual IRA contribution.

My wife is not employed, and we have no plans for her to get a job. So, a spousal IRA is obviously the way to go.

Can the entire $2,250 I contribute to the IRA each year go into my wife's IRA?

A. No. A spousal IRA is actually two accounts in one. One is for the spouse who has taxable compensation; the other for the unemployed spouse. When you contribute money to one, you must contribute to the other.

You can divide the total annual contribution any way you choose, provided you do not contribute more than $2,000 to either one. For example, you could place up to $2,000 in your wife's account and the rest of the money into your account.

Q. I just turned 59 1/2, making me eligible to withdraw IRA money without penalty. I would like to transfer all my IRAs into something from which I can draw the interest monthly.

I know I would have to pay regular income tax on the interest I then receive. But would I have to pay tax on the principal?

Is there such an investment where I can do this?

A. You would not have to pay income tax on the principal you leave in your IRA. Only the money withdrawn from an IRA is taxable. Your plan is to withdraw only interest. So that is what will be taxable - for some years, anyway.

Money taken out of an IRA before age 59 1/2 is subject to regular income tax and a 10 percent penalty tax unless you are dead, disabled or receive the money in installments at least once a year over a five-year span - or until you reach 59 1/2, whichever is later.

Between ages 29 1/2 and 70 1/2, you are permitted to withdraw any amount you please from your IRA and pay only regular income tax. After passing 70 1/2, you are required to make withdrawals based on your life expectancy or the joint life expectancy of you and your IRA beneficiary.

Most IRA sponsors - banks, savings and loans associations, credit unions, brokerage firms, mutual funds and insurance companies - would be delighted to combine your IRAs into one account and handle all the paperwork necessary for such "trustee to trustee" transfers.

A note of caution: If your IRAs are in certificates of deposit at various banks, S&Ls and credit unions, before you move that money, check to be sure there will be no early-withdrawal penalties. There is no government requirement for such penalties on IRA CDs after age 59 1/2. But some flint-hearted bankers lay them on anyway.

GRANDMOTHER CLOCK

In the early days of our country this clock would have been reserved for the very wealthy. Now, with our easy-to-follow pattern, you can economically build this 6-footer for your own home. Lay the full-size pattern parts onto the wood, trace and cut out. Our materials list, parts schedule and an exploded drawing simplify construction. The clock movement and dial are available separately.
