Oil futures prices climb over $17

Market at highest level in more than 14 weeks

NEW YORK (AP) — Oil futures prices have hit their highest levels in more than 14 weeks, driven upward, in part, by heavy demand for gasoline, short supplies for the kinds of crude used to make it and technical market factors, analysts say.

On the New York Mercantile Exchange, contracts for June delivery of West Texas Intermediate, the benchmark U.S. crude, closed Monday at $17.16 a 42-gallon barrel, up $1 from Friday's settlement price.

June contracts for refined products also showed strong gains on Monday. Unleaded and regular gasoline both were up more than 1 cent over Friday's closing prices — unleaded at 55.75 cents a gallon, vs. 54.38 cents and regular at 55.76, up from Friday's 54.41 cents.

In less than three weeks, crude prices have soared by nearly $4 a barrel. The rally marks a sharp reversal of the precipitous drops that took place a few months earlier, when oil was plunging from a late-November price near $32 a barrel.

The near-month contract had not traded for more than $17 since Feb. 7, while Friday's close was the first time since Feb. 14 that oil had sold for more than $16.

After hovering mainly at levels between $11 and $14 per barrel between March and April, the June contract, which closed at $13.34 on April 30, broke through $14 to $14.73 on May 2, and passed the $15 mark, at $15.21, on May 7.

Madison Galbraith, senior energy specialist at Merrill Lynch Energy Futures, said there was "a lot of refinery buying" in the crude market.

"What it comes down to is, they haven't bought it, they need it, and they're going to buy it," he said.

Over the last two months, gasoline demand has picked up, as dealers prepare for the Memorial Day opening of the summer driving season.

Refineries have increased their demand for crude by 1.45 million barrels daily since March 21. But there have also been short supplies of the lightweight grades used to make gasoline and other distillates, such as jet fuel and heating oil, said Peter Beutel, an analyst at Rudolf Wolff Futures Inc.

Two of those widely used light crude grades are West Texas Intermediate and Brent crude from the North Sea.

Many Norwegian and British rigs have been shut down for annual summer maintenance, while at the same time, refiners are still feeling the impact of the strike which shut down Norway's rigs last month, taking 900,000 barrels a day out of production, he said.

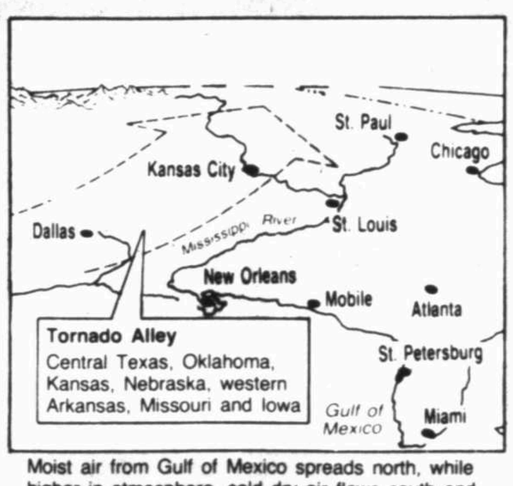

Accordingly, "the refineries are running a lot of heavier grades to make up for the lights. But the heavier grades don't have as high a yield in product, resulting in higher demand for crude overall," Beutel said.

The fact that Tuesday is the last day of trading on the June contract also helped support prices, said Edward Dellamonte, an analysts at Prudential-Bache Securities Inc.

"Generally, the futures market reflects the condition of the cash market more closely as we get toward the end of the monthly contract," he explained. "What has to happen is that the price in the cash market and the future contract must converge."

Since strong demand for both gasoline and crude is pushing up prices of crude for immediate delivery, this helped push the June contract higher, he said.

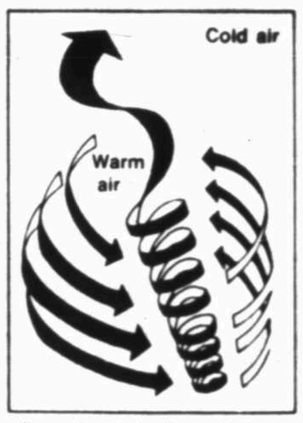

HOW TORNADOES ARE FORMED

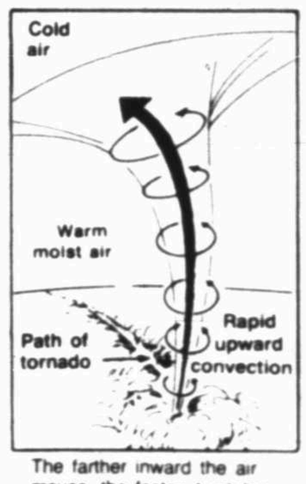

Moist air from Gulf of Mexico spreads north, while higher in atmosphere, cold dry air flows south and east, overriding warm, moist Gulf air

As the two air masses meet, the cold air sinks and the warm air rises

As cooler air is drawn in from the sides to replace the moist air, the Earth's rotation causes the rising warm air column to spin—counterclockwise in the North Hemisphere, clockwise in the South

The farther inward the air moves, the faster it rotates, creating an extremely low pressure area, thus triggering the tornado

Tornado injures six; Bay evacuated

Associated Press

High winds that stirred up 7-foot waves today threatened residents along Michigan's Saginaw Bay, where scores of people were evacuated and others were packing sandbags, officials said.

Storms that spun off at least one tornado Monday night in North Carolina destroyed seven homes and damaged 30 others, injuring at least six people west of Fayetteville, authorities said.

Meanwhile, officials in the Southeast said rain in the past two to three days was welcome, particularly for farmers, but that the region's drought, which threatens crops and has turned forests tinder-dry, is not over.

In Michigan, where flooding was concentrated in the beachfront communities of Bay County, flood warnings were reissued Monday night as northeast winds gusting to 40 mph sent water spilling onto shoreline homes.

However, the winds peaked at about 2 a.m. and had dropped to 30 mph by morning, said Sheriff's Sgt. Howard Schroeder. The winds were expected to subside to 5-10 mph tonight, said Gary Charson with the weather service in Ann Arbor.

Consumers Power Co. shut off service to 160 Bay County electric customers and 53 gas customers early today because of high winds and water, said Bob Goodwin, community service administrator for Consumers' Bay-Midland district. All service would be restored today, he said.

Some 75 to 100 people were urged to leave their bayshore homes Monday, Schroeder said, but most of them were expected to be able to move back in today.

The Michigan flooding was concentrated in Bangor, Kawkawlin, Hampton and Fraser townships, said Sheriff's Sgt. Gerald Runde.

"Most of the people have left on their own — there are some diehards who are sticking on their own," he said.

"We've had a few homes collapse," Schroeder said. "It's still a bad situation. People are buying sandbags and filling them on their own at this point."

In North Carolina, Larry Lee of the weather service said today he didn't know how many storms may have been responsible for the damage.

"They were reported to us as tornadoes," Lee said. "There obviously was damage, but we just don't want to say exactly how many storms there may have been until we look at the damage."

The damage in Hoke, Cumberland and Robeson counties was estimated at more than $150,000, officials said.

"Nobody got killed. I thank the good Lord for that," said Herman Currie, owner of Currie's Mobile Home Park, where all the injuries occurred and several homes were damaged. "I've got my trust in the man upstairs."

A 2-year-old girl was admitted to Cape Fear Valley Medical Center in Fayetteville and underwent surgery late Monday for a head injury, said hospital supervisor Gudrun McDuffie. Three other people were treated at the hospital and two people were treated at the scene, said Kemp Crumpler, an ambulance worker.

Meanwhile, in the Southeast, several days of rain "benefited lawns, gardens and farmers but we did not get any runoff," said Tennessee Valley Authority spokesman Don Bagwell. Most of TVA's reservoirs are 5 feet or more below normal, he said.

Thundershowers soaked parts of Alabama for a second day Monday, allowing worried farmers across the state to finally plan to resume planting.

About 50 missing, thousands homeless in Solomon Islands

PORT MORESBY, Papua New Guinea (AP) — Typhoon Namu battered Guadalcanal and the rest of the Solomon Islands with 115 mph winds that destroyed homes, flooded rivers and knocked out power. News reports said at least 50 people were missing and thousands were homeless.

The out-of-season storm roared in early Monday, according to Dykes Angiki, news editor of the Solomon Islands Broadcasting Corp. It did its worst damage outside the capital of Honiara on Guadalcanal, the site of the first U.S. victory against the Japanese in World War II.

A relief official was quoted as saying he feared the typhoon had blown away most homes on outlying islands, but the loss of power made it difficult to determine.

Angiki said a public holiday was declared in Honiara today to speed the clean up of uprooted trees, wrecked houses, and flooding. "It's really a working holiday," Angiki said. "The floodwaters are subsiding and teams are going around cleaning up the mess."

Namu weakened today and was heading toward Rennell Island, southsouthwest of the Solomons, according to the Brisbane Meteorological Bureau.

The Australian Associated Press in Papua New Guinea reported that at least 50 people were missing and between 5,000 and 10,000 others were left homeless in the Solomon Islands.

Some victims were believed washed out to sea, said AAP, quoting an unidentified relief official. The full extent of the damage will not be known for days, it said.

Recall try fails; Reinstatement of Gideon issue

By ED TODD
and RAMONA NYE
Staff Writers

The move for a recall election of Midland's mayor and City Council members who some Midlanders feel conspired to force the resignation of Midland Police Chief Wayne Gideon apparently is "dead."

Gideon, 51, resigned last week in the wake of a police department study by a Washington, D.C., consulting firm that the police department was mismanaged and over-staffed.

The proposed recall, strongly considered by former Midland Mayor Hank Avery, ran aground after Avery sensed the virtual impossibility of securing the required number of signatures of voters to effect a recall election, he said.

For a recall, signatures from 20 percent of the registered voters during the April 5 election must be collected 30 days after an affidavit has been filed with the city secretary. Of the 47,435 registered voters, about 9,487 signatures would have to be collected. Ten percent or 4,744 of those signing a recall petition must have voted for Mayor Carroll Thomas, Elections Administrator Bettye Calvert said. Thomas received 5,550 votes winning the April 5 mayoral race.

"This is unconstitutional," Avery said of the recall provision in the city charter. Avery is a Midland oil operator and former architect.

"This is unconstitutional because nobody can make me tell how I voted. That's what that little curtain (on the voting machines) is for. They can't find out how you voted."

Further, the provision says that the recall election must be no sooner than three months after the election. That would place any recall into early August.

"A recall election would be in August," Avery said, "and interest would be dead. It's impossible."

Avery noted that a petition had been circulated to get Gideon re-instated to his $54,000-a-year job as chief.

However, Avery surmised that Gideon's chances for re-instatement as chief were two: "poor and slim."

"That petition doesn't mean anything," he said.

Thomas, who was contacted this morning in Kerrville where city officials are meeting to discuss future city needs, said, "As far as I know everything was done legally. I don't know the basis of their desire to have a recall election. All I can say about the report is that it arrived at my first council meeting and it has excellent recommendations in it."

Even while the petitions were being circulated, word spread that former Midland County Sheriff Dallas Smith, 43, was getting primed for the police chief's job. Smith, a Republican, became sheriff in 1977 after he defeated 36-year sheriff Ed "Big Ed" Darnell, a Democrat in the 1976 general election. Eight years later, Smith's popularity dropped. He lost his bid for the Republican nomination for sheriff to newcomer Gary Painter and then was crushed in a write-in campaign in the November 1984 general elections.

"I've not been made aware of any conspiracy (to get rid of Gideon)," said Smith, who said he has been devoting his time to preparing his slander suit again Gideon. Smith claimed that Gideon helped spread rumors that Smith had beaten his ex-wife and that those rumors of a "wife beater" had contributed to his downfall.

Smith said he knew "nothing" about the study outside of news reports and "bits and pieces from other sources."

In responding to the questions if he had approached the City Council or members of the Council about his being chief or if a Council member had approached him about the position, Smith said, "I just can't talk about that. I don't have any comment."

However, both Thomas and City Councilman David Godfrey said reports about Smith were unfounded.

"There has been no discussions with anybody about becoming the chief of police," Godfrey said this morning.

Over the weekend, when Avery and others were checking into the possibility of a recall election, Avery said that Gideon was a victim of a "vendetta that has been going on a long time."

Avery, who was mayor from 1962 to 1968, said he has talked to several Midland policemen. "Their morale is zero," he said. "They don't have any confidence in the mayor, City Council and the administration.

For toddler, mail 'better than medicine'

Listening as her mother Barbara reads one of the many cards and letters she receives is 4-year-old Amanda Cooper of Greensboro, N.C.

By JODY TAYLOR

GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP) — When the mailman snaps the metal flap on the mailbox at the Amanda Cooper's home, a pair of 4-year-old eyes light up.

Amanda can't get up to see what's in the mailbox, but her squeal of joy sends her mother or sister to have a look. Junk mail is as much of a delight to the little girl as a personally addressed note, her mother says.

Receiving mail is Amanda's wish, and the Make a Wish chapter in North Carolina is trying to grant it for her. The group attempts to fulfill desires of children who have life-threatening illnesses.

Amanda has a genetic disease that causes her bones to fracture easily. She suffers from respiratory problems and cannot sit, stand or hold her head up. Dwarfism is another symptom of the disease — Amanda has grown only to the size of an 18-month-old child.

But to Barbara and Hubert Cooper, she is a happy child who has taught them lessons of patience and hope, a child who loves Kenny Rogers songs on the radio and thinks her daddy goes to work every day just to earn ice cream money.

The Coopers have four natural children who are now grown, and have cared for some 50 foster children over the past 18 years. Besides Amanda, they have adopted two other girls, one of them blind.

Mrs. Cooper said she first saw Amanda when the child was 5 weeks old. "I just fell in love with her," she recalled. "I love parenting and I'm good at parenting and I enjoy the child. My husband says I'm not happy if there isn't a baby in the house. I love proving teachers and doctors wrong."

Amanda's survival has beat the odds, Mrs. Cooper said. "For the first three years of her life, we were up with her around the clock. I learned to suction her, give her breathing treatments. For the first three years, I just was keeping her alive.

"This is a human being we're talking about who is struggling to survive. She nearly expired from respiratory problems a couple of times. But I just knew she was going to make it. The fact that she's alive is remarkable."

Despite Amanda's physical handicaps, Mrs. Cooper said she tries to teach the child to be independent, and Amanda has proven skilled at getting around by lying on her back and squirming.

"She gets all over the house," Mrs. Cooper said. "It tears my heart out but I let her do it. You have to let children be successful.... Amanda feeds herself, even though it would be easier for me to feed her."

For her part, Amanda has taught the family the importance of the moment, Mrs. Cooper said. They go to baseball games together and take occasional beach trips, because Amanda enjoys traveling.

"When you think about the enormity of life and what can happen, you just don't get upset about little things," she said. "You just enjoy the love.

"The days I spend here are totally exhausting. But these children teach you patience.

"We don't take life too seriously around here. We just have fun."

That includes opening the mail.

"Amanda can be sick and I'll go to the mailbox and come back and say, 'Guess what?' and she'll say 'Again?' " Mrs. Cooper said. "It's better than any medicine I could give her."

Pair thought missing at lake found

LIVINGSTON (AP) — The last two people believed missing after storms hit Southeast Texas lakes, killing six people, were located today, a Polk County sheriff's dispatcher said.

Three bodies were found Monday afternoon pinned beneath a submerged, upside-down boat in Lake Livingston, where a storm turned a bass fishing tournament and a sailing race into chaos Saturday, authorities said.

The victims were still wearing life jackets when they were discovered at the bottom of the lake near the dam in San Jacinto County, said Justice of the Peace Mike Jefferey.

A woman also in the boat when the storm hit Saturday drowned, but her body was found that day, officials said.

A Houston couple believed missing called authorities today, officials said.

"We had two that were unaccounted for," said sheriff's dispatcher Diana Davis. "The people have called this morning. Everybody has been accounted for this morning. The people that were thought to be missing had gone to New Mexico."

Polk County sheriff's Capt. Chuck Staton said three others listed as missing were found safe at home on Monday.

Another man drowned Saturday at the lake, about 70 miles north of Houston, and one man drowned at Lake Steinhagen, authorities said.

Those pulled from the lake Monday were identified as Norman Brisbon of Houston; James Elmer Smith Jr. 54, and his wife, Alvina Smith, 52, both of Huffman, Jeffrey said. He did not have Brisbon's age.

Brisbon's wife, Vera Mae, 57, was found Saturday.

The other person who drowned Saturday was identified as Thomas Wayne Baty, 38, of Apple Springs. Baty drowned after trying to rescue his son, Staton said.

When the storm hit, winds and choppy waters swamped dozens of boats and sent people either swimming or running for cover.

"You could see the dark clouds coming but they didn't get out of the lake. On this lake when you see dark clouds coming you better head for land," said Polk County Sheriff Ted Everitt.

Everitt said a lake advisory warning boaters about the weather was issued before the storm hit.

About 50 miles to the east on Lake Steinhagen, Austin Corbin, 50, of Beaumont, drowned when his boat sank with him and three women aboard. The women were rescued and Corbin's body was found Sunday afternoon.

"Damage is very severe is some parts. But we're still not sure of the extent of the damage," Angiki told the The Associated Press in Sydney, Australia, in a telephone interview.

Angiki did not disagree with the number of people AAP reported missing or homeless, but he could not provide accurate figures.

"We're still trying to collect information," he said. "Some places are very remote. It will be a couple of days before we know the toll."

The situation on the outlying islands of Malaita, Ulalla and Makira was unknown and could take days to determine because of downed power lines, AAP reported.

Wainga Tion, chairman of the Honiara Disaster Council, was quoted in Australia's Melbourne Age newspaper as saying damage caused by the storm made it impossible to determine the extent of damage outside Honiara.

"There has been a breakdown in communications, power supplies and trees litter the roads," he said. "The flooding has made it impossible to ascertain what has happened even outside the town."

Baptist fundamentalists often 'urban'

By RON TAYLOR
New York Times News Service

ATLANTA — Fundamentalists in the Southern Baptist denomination can trace their roots to the 1920s and the Rev. J. Frank Norris, a Texas maverick with a cowboy's instinct for fiery rhetoric.

Norris once called a fellow minister who had offended him "a long, lean, lank, yellow, egg-sucking dog" and was largely responsible for a near riot at the Southern Baptist Convention of 1947.

Although both Norris, a Fort Worth preacher, and his theology had roots in urban America, the image of fundamentalists as backwoods rubes persisted among many critics, including the mainstream Baptists who eventually drummed Norris out of the denomination.

The reality is that modern fundamentalists coming to next month's Southern Baptist Convention here are much more likely to be driving Oldsmobiles from upwardly mobile subdivisions than pickups from farm country.

According to a recent study by Dr. Nancy T. Ammerman of Emory University's Center for Religious Research, the number of Southern Baptists readily identifying themselves as fundamentalists is "significantly higher" among "newly urban" Baptists than among those who live in the country.

In her study published last week in The Christian Century, Ammerman identified fundamentalism as a response to changes in the "New South" that have "disrupted cultural patterns."

Fundamentalists, she argued, see themselves as defenders of valued traditions against the onslaught of "modernists" and "liberals" moving into the South and trying to turn it into the glittery Sun Belt.

Martin E. Marty, a University of Chicago professor and associate editor of The Christian Century, cited a similar trend in Third World countries, where progress has clashed with tradition, in 1982.

Using Iran as an example, he noted that only the Iranian elites had benefited from the technology and affluence that swept the country, while the rest of the population "only saw its traditions threatened."

In response, Marty said, "ayatollahs preached the old scriptures, women returned to wearing the chuddar, and there was a fundamentalist-based religious revolution." Likewise, Marty said, American fundamentalism is "clearly a force of resentment against 'intellectuals,' 'elites,' 'the media,' and the like, people who are at home with modernization and care little for the presumed traditions."

The American fundamentalist movement, Ammerman noted, was born during the last quarter of the 19th century "in booming northern cities" as "rural, Protestant homogeneity" was being destroyed by rapid industrialization and by the flood of Jewish and Catholic immigrants.

"Similarly, in the last quarter of the 20th century, in booming Southern cities, a new fundamentalist movement has been born and is flexing its very powerful muscles," she said.

Also similar are the issues being defended by today's fundamentalists.

The inerrancy of the Bible was one of the 14 points set forth in a doctrine by the original fundamentalists, who included members of the prestigious Princeton Theological Seminary, at the Niagara Bible Conference of 1895. The issue of whether the Bible is literally true is at the heart of the ongoing battle between Baptist fundamentalists and the moderates.

Fundamentalism was not a serious factor in the Southern Baptist Convention until the 1920s when proponents such as Norris challenged the new notion of evolution as a threat to the teachings of divine creation in Genesis. Modern fundamentalists have renewed that fight in recent years, pushing campaigns, especially in suburban communities, to teach "creationism" in public schools as an alternative to science courses featuring discussions of evolution and to purge textbooks of what they call "secular humanism."

The involvement of fundamentalists, such as the Rev. Jerry Falwell, an independent Baptist, in conservative politics also is not new. Norris rallied Texas voters for Republican Herbert Hoover against Democrat Al Smith, a Catholic. Politics also was involved when Norris fired his last salvo at Southern Baptists on the eve of their convention in St. Louis in 1947. Norris, a strident anti-communist, confronted Dr. Louie Newton of Atlanta, a longtime leader of Georgia Baptists, after Newton had returned from the Soviet Union with reports that Russians enjoyed religious freedom.

Before Newton could deliver an address that evening, Norris stood and began to ask him questions about his views on communism. Despite efforts to quiet Norris, he persisted to the point that a fight almost broke out and someone called the police to quiet the crowd.

Fundamentalists first applied their political savvy to the Southern Baptist Convention in 1979, and they have dominated ever since.

Although the two sides differ strongly on a variety of issues, Ammerman's recent survey of 415 Southern Baptist clergy and 589 lay people suggests that the line that divides the warring factions is still a fine one.

Of the survey respondents, she said, only 8 percent clearly reject the tenets of fundamentalism. "Looking at the entire range of scores, it is clear that Southern Baptists are still a very conservative lot," said Ammerman.

"The South has long been a bastion of the beliefs that characterize fundamentalism — an inerrant Bible, premillennialism (belief in a Second Coming) and 'separation' from worldly practices," Ammerman said.

However, Ammerman found enough shades of differences among the respondents to declare 32 percent of them to be "theological fundamentalists," 40 percent to be "average Baptists" and 28 percent to be "theological moderates."

While moderates worry publicly about a split in the denomination, Ammerman expressed doubt that a schism would occur and predicted that the fundamentalists' power eventually will be diminished by the economic and educational progress of the urban areas where 29 percent of Baptists have settled in recent years.

Two quakes shake eastern Taiwan

TAIPEI, Taiwan (AP) — Two earthquakes jolted eastern Taiwan within 12 minutes of each other today, loosening rocks that killed one person and seriously injured another, officials said.

The first quake, measuring 5.8 on the Richter scale, was recored at 1:25 p.m. (1:25 a.m. EDT). Its epicenter was located six miles north of Hualien, an eastern seaport 72 miles south of Taipei, the weather bureau reported.

The epicenter of the second quake, which registered 5.69 on the Richter scale, was 5.4 miles north of Hualien, the weather bureau said.

Both quakes were felt in Taipei.

Police in Ilan, a mountainous county 31 miles south of Taipei, reported that 49-year-old Lee Ah-pi was hit by a falling rock in San Shin, and died at the scene.

Police in Hualien said a tourist from Taipei was hit in the head by a fallen rock at Yientze Ko, the entrance to Taroko Gorge in Hualien. The tourist, who was not identified, was seriously hurt and was taken to a hospital, police said.

They said some windows had been shattered in Hualien.

Many of Hualien's 100,000 residents fled into the streets and hesitated to return to their buildings, police said.

People in Taipei rushed out of homes and restaurants when the quakes struck.

The Richter scale measures ground motion as recorded on seismographs. An earthquake with a magnitude of 5 could cause considerable damage in populated areas and one measuring 6 is capable of causing severe damage.

RECALL

Sherron Howland, an early supporter of the petition drive, said that the initial petition in support of Gideon was "not going to be worth a hill of beans."

"They (City Council members) are not going to pay any attention to this. They are not going to do anything," Ms. Howland said. "The only think we can do is have a recall (election).... If we can get a recall election, maybe the City Council would re-appoint him."

Sid Trevino, former Midland Police Department detective and assistant police chief, said that the "town is in an uproar" over what he perceived as Gideon's resignation by coercion. "They want to know why $75,000 of our taxpayers money was spent" for the report. "A lot of people in town did not like the way they went about it."

Dominican Republic elections board collapses after candidate's criticism

SANTO DOMINGO, Dominican Republic (AP) — The three-member Central Elections Board has collapsed under criticism from the governing party's presidential candidate, who claimed victory despite an official tally indicating he was in second place.

Vote tallying from last week's elections still had not resumed Monday night after being suspended without explanation Sunday morning. When the count was halted, opposition leader Joaquin Balaguer was ahead by 35,000 votes with 92 percent of the polling stations reporting.

Two board members resigned after Jacobo Majluta, the 51-year-old candidate of the governing Democratic Revolutionary Party, accused them of favoring Balaguer, of the Social Christian Reform Party.

Majluta said his tallies showed him leading 78-year-old Balaguer by 3,000 votes in results from nearly the same number of voting districts. He demanded a recount of the nearly 2 million ballots that had been tallied.

An elections officer said Monday morning that the vote count had resumed. But reporters who went to the board's office found it had not.

When the count was suspended Sunday, Balaguer had 799,968 votes, or 40.04 percent, to Majluta's 764,509 votes, or 38.26 percent, according to the elections board.

Juan Bosch, 76, of the leftist Dominican Liberation Party, had 351,749 votes, or 17.61 percent. The rest of the votes went to candidates of three minor parties.

All three candidates are former presidents.

The incumbent, Salvador Jorge Blanco, was not seeking re-election to a four-year term, but met Monday night with the citizens commission he named to monitor the elections. It was not known what they discussed.

Santo Domingo Mayor Jose Francisco Gomez, a major figure in the governing party, called Monday night for a new elections board to be named by the two major parties so the vote count could be resumed. There were no immediate reactions to the proposal.

Balaguer has made no public statement, and a spokesman said Monday night he would abide by his decision to await an official announcement by the elections board.

Elections Board President Caonabo Fernandez Naranjo resigned late Sunday a few hours after Majluta asked him to step aside, and board member Ruben Suro resigned Monday.

Majluta accused them of favoring Belaguer. He said the election process denied the vote to thousands of eligible Dominicans and that vote-counting was slow and inaccurate.

"We have no faith that these members of the board are acting in accordance with the law," Majluta said in a letter to the board.

Fernandez Naranjo and Suro were replaced by alternates, Ponciano Rondon Sanchez and Generoso Fernandez Molina, who agreed with Majluta that the vote tallying be halted, according to a citizens' commission spokesman.

South African currency drops after raids

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — South Africa's currency dropped sharply in value today following the military raids on three nearby countries, and hundreds of students at Johannesburg's main university stayed out of class in protest.

An estimated 800 students the University of the Witswatersrand skipped classes and gathered on a campus plaza, chanting and singing in protest against the raids.

Lt. Pierre Louw, a police spokesman, said the rally was declared illegal and officers made "a few arrests." Witnesses said some of the protesters at one point rushed at a group of police, shouting "Kill the Boers."

The university is predominantly white, but admits students of other races as well.

Foreign exchange bankers said the international outcry over the raids and fears of broader economic sanctions against South Africa were the major cause of the rand's drop in value.

The rand opened Monday morning, before word of the raids spread, at 45.8 U.S. cents. It dropped to 44.8 cents by the end of the day, and fell to 42.5 cents in early trading today.

Three people were confirmed killed and more than 15 were injured in the raids Monday morning on alleged African National Congress guerrilla targets in and around the capitals of Zimbabwe, Botswana and Zambia.

The Citizen, a pro-government Johannesburg newspaper, quoted anonymous sources as saying four other people also were killed in the raid on Harare, Zimbabwe. There was no official confirmation of the report.

In Cape Town, at the insistence of the opposition Progressive Federal Party, Parliament scheduled a special debate on the raids.

Two members of the opposition party were expelled from the chamber on Monday for refusing to withdrew remarks that the government was "sabotaging" the future of the country.

Government supporters depicted the raids as equivalent to the recent American air strikes against suspected terrorist bases in Libya.

"We hope that countries like the United States and Britain will realize, after the heat of the moment, that South Africa has acted against the ANC in order to protect its own citizens from terrorist attacks," the Citizen said.

"In this, it is no different to the United States, which launched air attacks on Libya because of the terrorist activities masterminded by Col. Khadafy."

However, Business Day, a Johannesburg financial newspaper, predicted the raids would have a severe effect on South Africa's economy, increasing pressure on foreign investors to withdraw.

Security not as stringent at some ports, reports say

DOVER, England (AP) — Undercover British police are riding ferries and Hovercraft between England and the European continent to prevent an attack by Arab terrorists, but police and news reports say security is not as stringent in some European ports.

Police searched cars and baggage at Dover and 12 other English ports on the English Channel and North Sea in the third day of a security operation that encompassed ports in seven countries.

It began following information from Interpol, the Paris-based international police organization, that a Middle East group with Libyan connections planned to detonate a car bomb on a vessel in retaliation for the April 15 U.S. bombing raid on Libya.

Libya condemns Britain as well as the United States for the raid because Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher allowed U.S. fighter-bombers flying British bases to take part.

Extra police were posted at Dover's passport control to scan passengers. At the eastern docks, police officers have been making random checks on cars, including the use of mirrors attached to long sticks to check for bombs concealed underneath.

Special undercover police also were placed on vessels making the crossing between England and the continent.

But The Times of London reported today from the Hovercraft terminal at the French port of Boulogne that security there did not appear to match the stringent precautions at British ports.

The newspaper quoted two police inspectors and two customs officers as saying they did not have enough personnel, equipment or the proper premises to conduct adequate checks.

It said the officers demonstrated several ways in which a terrorist could plant a bomb on a Hovercraft without being detected and quoted a police inspector as saying: "There is no real security belt."

A spokesman for border police in the Dutch port of Vlissingen said security in the Netherlands also was less strict than in Britain.

He said extra guards were posted on the quay serving the daily crossing to Sheerness in southeast Britain, and ordered to check cars for weapons and explosives.

Police had received descriptions of two Arabs in connection with the alert, he said.

A British police officer was in Ostend helping Belgian police forces strengthen control on Channel ferries.

Belgian police sources said Sunday that officers at the two Channel ports, Ostend and Zeebrugge, were told to watch for four Arabs driving a white Volvo. They said a car and passengers fitting the description were searched Saturday at Ostend, but released.

Kiev residents packed station after accident

MOSCOW (AP) — A Soviet newspaper today reported that worried Kiev residents streamed to railway stations after the Chernobyl accident, but blamed their fears on "enemy radio voices" it said were spreading rumors about the disaster.

Diplomats at the Swedish, British, Canadian, Italian, Danish, Finnish and Japanese embassies said their ambassadors declined a Soviet invitation to visit Kiev and an area near the Ukrainian capital where evacuees from the Chernobyl area are living.

Other Western legations, including the U.S. Embassy, were still considering the offer, but were expected to turn it down, diplomats said.

Most of the diplomats said the offer was rejected because their governments wanted to send experts, not ambassadors, to the area and wanted the experts to visit the plant itself, not just Kiev which is 80 miles south of Chernobyl.

For the sixth day, there was no update on the Chernobyl casualty toll, which American Dr. Robert Gale, who helped treat the worst radiation cases, has said was 13 dead, with 24 in grave condition.

The last official report on casualties came last Wednesday in a speech by Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev, who said nine people were dead and 299 hospitalized.

Many of the nationally circulating newspapers carried lengthy stories on Chernobyl today, focusing on various aspects of the cleanup operation but offering no detailed update on efforts to cover the ruined No. 4 reactor in concrete and decontaminate the station and its surroundings.

Student sets himself afire

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — A student set himself on fire and then plunged to his death from a fourth-floor window during a violent anti-government demonstration today at Seoul National University, a news agency reported.

The demonstration broke out after riot police moved onto the campus to disperse about 3,000 students who were listening to a leading dissident speak at a school festival.

The Yonhap News Agency said the speech by the Rev. Moon Ik-hwan was interrupted when about 1,000 police surrounded the area and the fighting began.

Police fired tear gas and about 600 students hurled rocks and other objects, the news agency said. Other sources say the number of student demonstrators was higher.

Student sources said fighting spread over wide areas of the campus of the state-run university that is considered South Korea's most prestigious school.

Iraq claims heights taken

BAGHDAD, Iraq (LAT) — Iraq said its troops captured a string of strategic heights Monday as they went into the third day of a ground offensive in the central Iranian border region of Mehran.

Iran said its forces had dislodged the Iraqis from positions north and south of Mehran and that "vicious battles" were continuing in the area, which the Iraqis invaded on Saturday.

The Iraqis were driven out of the town of Redabad, north of Mehran, in an infantry onslaught supported by helicopter gunships, Iran reported.

It said at least 220 Iraqi soldiers were killed and estimated that 45 tanks and armored troop carriers had been destroyed during the past two days.

War-crimes files released

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — The United Nations Monday gave Israel its confidential war-crimes files on 347 more people.

The Israeli Mission submitted the names of 1,379 people, but files on only 347 were found among documents of the defunct U.N. War Crimes Commission stored in the U.N. Archives.

Germans occupy embassy

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — About 70 West Germans occupied their nation's embassy Monday and said the ambassador could not leave until he asks President Reagan to order Nicaraguan rebels to release eight captured German workers.

Ambassador Joseph Rusnak said in an interview in the embassy that the Germans entered the building Sunday night and were barring him, the embassy first secretary and two West German security guards from leaving. He said they were the only ones in the embassy when it was taken over.

According to legend, Jay Gould put curse on Jefferson

Associated Press

Jefferson, Texas — a bustling riverport in the 1850s — was said to have fallen victim to a curse by railroad tycoon Jay Gould.

Legend tells that Gould came to Jefferson asking for railroad subsidies, but the town leaders, satisfied with their steamboat trade, turned their backs on him.

Gould allegedly built his railroad around the town and placed a curse on Jefferson, saying: "Grass will grow in your streets and bats will roost in your belfries."

Historian Fred Tarpley has uncovered contradictions to this story. The Texas & Pacific railroad came through Jefferson eight years before Gould bought that railroad, Tarpley revealed. Gould probably didn't even visit Jefferson before 1880. And according to newspaper accounts of the town in its heyday, city leaders were very interested in attracting the railroads.

But there is no question that Jefferson outstripped Dallas in the 1850s as a transportation hub. The riverport was a critical supply point for vast areas in the west and a trading center to which wagons hauled produce. Only Galveston on the Gulf Coast, 300 miles to the south, served as an alternate port for Texans.

Steamboats began delivering cargo to Jefferson about 1844, using a route from New Orleans along the Mississippi, Tarpley recounts.

The boats chugged through the Atchafalaya River to the Red River, running north beyond Shreveport and through Twelve-Mile Bayou to Caddo Lake, then westward along Big Cypress Bayou to wharves in downtown Jefferson.

A blockage by the Great Red River Raft, a log jam extending a hundred miles, from north of Shreveport to north of Natchitoches, La., for more than half a century allowed the steamboats to reach Jefferson, Tarpley says.

The log jam backed up water into the bayous and kept the water level especially high in the Big Cypress. Although able to navigate through the waterways around the log jam as far north as Big Cypress, riverboats were usually blocked beyond that point.

An occasional steamboat came northwest along the Trinity River to call on Dallas, but the city sought rail traffic for growth, Tarpley explains.

The Houston and Texas Central arrived in Dallas in 1872, providing a north-south rail route.

Only through legislative shenanigans did Dallas become a station on the east-west route of the Texas & Pacific.

The town was to have been bypassed by that railroad until Dallas County's state representative introduced a seemingly innocent amendment to the railroad charter requiring that the Texas & Pacific tracks intersect with those of the Houston and Texas Central Railroad within one mile of Browder Springs.

Only after the amendment had passed was it discovered that Browder Springs was near the business section of Dallas.

An apparent successor to Jefferson as a trade center, Dallas lay 180 miles to the west on the blackland prairie.

The Texas & Pacific Railroad reached Jefferson in July 1873, but as it established depots in other Northeast Texas towns, trade trips to Jefferson by wagon were no longer necessary, Tarpley says.

Removal of the Red River Raft in November 1873 and a series of disastrous fires caused a dramatic decline of Jefferson's population from a peak of about 7,000 in 1872 to only about 3,000 in 1880.

Dallas, on the other hand, continued to thrive as the commercial hub of Northern Texas.

Jay Gould is also said to have placed his benediction on Dallas, Tarpley recounts, predicting the city would reach a population of 150,000 during his lifetime.

To be sure that the prophecy came true, attorney Rhodes Baker organized the One Hundred and Fifty Thousand Club.

Today, of course, Dallas is one of the ten most populous cities in the nation, while Jefferson is a small town of 2,600. But Jefferson froze in time part of its 19th-century heritage. Industrious citizens restored landmark structures and preserved the history of that once-thriving metropolis of East Texas.

Vietnamese girl to be salutatorian

By BILL LODGE

Vuong

MESQUITE (AP) — Seven years ago, at age 11, Yen Hoang Vuong survived a raid by pirates off the coast of Thailand after being smuggled out of Vietnam by her father.

Settling in a strange and faraway country, she learned English partly by watching the children's television program "Sesame Street."

Last year, along with her father and younger brother, Yen achieved U.S. citizenship.

But her most remarkable accomplishment, her friends say, will come next month when the 18-year-old West Mesquite High School senior is honored as the school's salutatorian.

She finished her four years of high school — two at Sam Houston in Arlington — with a perfect 4.0 grade-point average and membership in the National Honor Society.

"It's just really amazing what all she has accomplished in such a short time," said Bruce Shelton, a close friend of Yen's and runner-up for salutatorian.

"I really think this is the highest thing she's gotten so far. She's just something."

Yen finished second to Joseph Starr Fagner in competition for valedictory honors. Starr also had a 4.0 average, but his freshman curriculum included an honors English course. Yen could not take the course because she skipped the eighth grade, school officials said.

Yen said she always had an overwhelming desire for achievement, and it was nurtured by her grandfather, Thnong Vuon, who immigrated to Texas from Saigon in April 1975, just days before the city was overrun by the North Vietnamese army.

Vuong required his granddaughter to watch educational programs on television every day, Yen said.

"My grandfather made me watch Channel 13 every day — "Sesame Street" and all that kind of stuff," Yen said. "That helped to learn English a lot."

Yen's father, Tro Vuong, and 17-year-old brother, Larence Vuong, live in Corsicana because her father likes his job there as a mechanic, she said. When her father and brother decided to move to Corsicana two years ago, Yen chose to remain in Mesquite because she had grown close to her grandfather and liked the schools.

After her high school career ends next month, Yen said, she wants to enter Baylor University in Waco to take pre-medical courses. Eventually, she hopes to become a plastic surgeon.

She has applied for a scholarship but said she will achieve her career goals with or without it. Her friends and teachers at West Mesqutie High said they have no doubt that she will succeed.

"I think that she will do whatever she is determined to do," said Debbie Gilbert, Yen's school counselor. "If she decides she wants to stay in the medical profession, she'll get there."

"She's just one of the most outstanding students I've ever taught," said Peggy Arundale, who taught Yen calculus and analytical geometry the past two years.

"Her command of the language just floors me. I've taught students with more ability, but not with that determination, that drive, that ambition."

Zarina Delawala, a native of India and a junior at West Mesquite High, met Yen last year, and the two became friends.

Miss Delawala said she admires Yen "because she's so talented and versatile" and has a flair for designing and sewing clothes.

"She's the kind of person who will listen to you," Miss Delawala said.

Yen said she is happy with her life in the United States but often thinks of her mother, Chat Nguyen, and 20-year-old sister, Hang Vuong, who have been prohibited by the Vietnamese government from leaving the country.

She last saw her mother and sister the night she left Saigon with her father and brother in May 1979.

"My mom woke me up about 2 or 3 o'clock in the morning, and she didn't even tell me why," Yen said. "We had to take off our shoes so we wouldn't make any nosie."

That night, she and her brother and father boarded a bus that took them to a small port on the Vietnamese coast. They spent two weeks at sea with nearly 500 other people packed onto a fishing vessel.

She was 11 at the time and did not understand a word of English. But now Yen considers herself an American and is looking only to the future.

Armed Forces Day brings back memories for veterans

ODESSA (AP) — Many war veterans celebrated U.S. Armed Forces Day this past weekend, but for others, watching John Wayne gun down foreign enemies on the tube sparks more war memories than they ever wanted.

"I really don't talk much about the war unless I am asked about it," said World War II veteran Elmer Midkiff, 79.

Midkiff, a resident of an Odessa nursing home since 1983, said he'd rather stay in his room than go to the Armed Forces Day celebrations held in Odessa.

"Armed Forces Day was initiated by President Harry S. Truman in 1950. It was created to counter public indifference to the military following World War II," said Bill Tynan, chief of public affairs at Reese Air Force Base in Lubbock County.

"I guess it's a special day," Midkiff remarked with little enthusiasm, but added that nursing home activities provide him more pleasure than military ceremonies.

Midkiff was 37 when he was drafted into the U.S. Navy in 1943. He said he left his civilian job as a butcher to continue carving meat for the Navy aboard the USS La Port.

The ship carried landing equipment during the war.

"When I went in, they assigned me to be the ship's butcher. The men particularly didn't like it when I didn't chop them enough meat," he said. "They used to call me the belly robber. We patrolled the Philippine Islands and Okinawa. The men got pretty restless," Midkiff said.

But patrolling the Pacific during World War II was no ordinary boat ride, especially with the threat of the Japanese suicide pilots who lurked over the seas.

"There were a couple of them that came pretty close to hitting us, but they missed," Midkiff said.

One veteran eager to attend the Armed Forces Day ceremonies was Roberto Banda, 39, an elementary school prinicipal in Midland, who said he was a Marine aviation clerk and badly wounded during a two-year hitch in Vietnam. Part of his arm was ripped off by shrapnel metal from a 12mm rocket.

"I was stationed at Marble Mountain near Da Nang when we were attacked at the base," Banda said. "I remember I was trying to elude the rocket attack when I got hit," Banda said.

Banda woke up at a regional hospital near Da Nang.

"I woke up with a tremendous pain in my shoulder," Banda said.

The Midlander said he was "really feeling sorry for myself," until a "triple amputee" was placed in the bed next to his own. "When I looked at him, I realized I wasn't all that banged up," Banda said.

Removal of the shrapnel and muscle tissue in his right arm left it 3¾ inches shorter that his left.

Today, Banda sees his wound as a badge of freedom and Armed Forces Day as a time to remember the courage of those he served with.

"It's a time when all Americans should honor all the soldiers who fought and are continuing to keep America free," Banda said.

World War II veteran Bill Rowland, 66, who shares a room with Midkiff in the nursing home, said the honor of the day warms his heart.

"I really feel good when someone takes time out to appreciate us," Rowland said.

But Rowland said he also prefers to keep that chapter of his life to himself.

"I am just kind of a private person," Rowland said. "If Elmer don't talk about the war, I don't either."

Both Midkiff and Rowland now move about in wheelchairs.

'Few good men' to be out of kitchen

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Marine Corps has decided to get its "few good men" out of the kitchen.

In a move that one can only assume will be met with jubilation, the Marine Corps this week will begin phasing out "kitchen police" duty at its mess halls inside the United States.

The corps is the last of the nation's military services to make a move to civilian contractors for "non-specialty" kitchen help. Once completed, the change will mean that 2,058 Marines will not — at any given moment — be drawing such duties as cleaning tables, swabbing decks, scrubbing pots and pans, manning the food service line or carrying garbage.

"We need the manpower. We no longer can afford to tie up our Marines doing these tasks," says Jerry Stark, a former Marine who is now a civilian official with the corps' commercial activities branch.

According to Stark and Maj. Tony Rothfork, a Marine spokesman, the process will begin May 23 at Camp Geiger, a satellite facility outside Camp Lejeune, N.C. By the end of the summer, the mess halls at Lejeune, as well as at the nearby air station at New River, N.C., will have stopped using Marine messmen.

Contract awards should follow later this year for mess halls at such locations as Cherry Point, N.C.; El Toro, Calif.; Tustin, Calif., and Camp Pendleton, Calif. The process won't be completed until 1988, but it eventually will spread to other bases such as those at Twentynine Palms, Calif.; San Diego; Honolulu, and Beaufort, S.C.

By the end of this year, more than 1,000 Marines will have escaped mess hall detail, adds Rothfork. The idea, he says, is to "civilianize" every major Marine mess hall within the United States.

The plan will not change the status of Marines who are trained as cooks, bakers and butchers. Marines will still be preparing the food.

The changes also will not affect Marines posted overseas, training in the field or assigned aboard ships, but that number is described as small in comparison with those drawing mess detail at established bases.

Recruits in boot camp also will not escape KP duty. Rather, officials say, the goal is to eliminate mess details that normally last 30 days and prevent large numbers of trained Marines from doing what they're paid to do — maintain combat readiness.

"It is essential that we get Marines back into the Fleet Marine Force and training," says Rothfork.

When it comes to KP duty, Marines have long been the odd men out compared to their military brethren. While there are exceptions, particularly at boot camps, the Army, Navy and Air Force began the switch to civilian workers years ago.

Indeed, most Air Force mess halls haven't had any airmen routinely drawing KP duty for some two decades. The Army began the process in 1975 and is now "about 95 percent through," says Maj. Phil Soucy, a spokesman.

Rothfork says the Marine Corps does expect the change to cost more money, but added the corps will not ask Congress for additional funds because it intends to absorb the difference within its current budget.

The spokesman was unable to immediately quantify the program's pricetag. But he noted the current system in effect wastes some of the money spent by the corps each year on training Marines.

Rosie the Ribiter leaps more than 21 feet to victory

ANGELS CAMP, Calif. (AP) — Rosie the Ribiter, a spindly amphibian with a quick takeoff, leaped 21 feet, 5¾ inches to set a record and win the Calaveras County Fair's Jumping Frog Jubilee.

Sunday's victory was the second in a row for Lee Giudici, a Santa Clara elementary school teacher, who won the competition last year with a different frog. The old record, set in 1984, was 21 feet, 1⅛ inches.

Giudici, who won $1,500, is a member of a "frog team" that placed first, fourth, fifth, sixth and eighth, said fair spokeswoman Nikki Anderson.

A frog distance is determined by how far it goes from a launching pad in three hops. The "jockey" jumps, pounds and shouts behind the frog to encourage it to jump.

The competition, in its 30th year, stems from Mark Twain's famous "The Celebrated Jumping Frog of Calaveras County."

Reporting legacy

One of the most astute observers of the American political scene was Theodore White. He once was quoted as saying: "Watch a factory man shake hands. The better he likes a candidate, the harder he wipes off his hand before he sticks it out."

A richly diverse background contributed to White's skill at blending the "Everyman" with intellectual analysis. A poor boy from the Boston ghetto who graduated with honors from Harvard, White first won acclaim as a correspondent in China during that nation's epic communist revolution.

After the war, he turned his considerable acumen to the study of American politics. He is best known for his Pulitzer Prize-winning Making of the President series, which began with the Kennedy-Nixon campaign in 1960 and included the 1964, 1968, and 1972 contests.

His skill at reducing electoral politics to its bare essentials, for example the barometer of a factory worker's handshake, triggered a new style of political narrative. Journalists ritually documenting weary campaign slogans and schedules were now spurred to intimate and informal examinations of candidates, their campaign strategies, and the electorate.

This reporting of the "inside story" proved immensely popular. White's book on the 1960 contest, for example, sold more than 4 million copies, an astonishing number for a political work at that time.

He was an outstanding political observer because he gave journalists new insight into how they could best do their own jobs and, in so doing, give the American people better insight into the political process. That, of course, is the mark of an outstanding journalist in any area of reporting.

Theodore White was one of the most astute observers and chroniclers of the American scene. With his death recently at the age of 71, he leaves an extraordinary legacy: He helped change the way Americans view politics by changing the way journalists cover politicians.

Nuke mishaps avoidable

I was glad to see the questions posed in the recent editorial "Nuclear lesson." I fully agree that the American public is largely unaware of the dangers posed by the nuclear industry. And yet our media seemed to be trying to pin the blame on the Russians instead of the industry where it belonged.

Similar accidents have always plagued the industry. In 1952, Canada's Chalk River reactor exploded, with a partial fuel meltdown. At the National Reactor Testing Station in Idaho Falls, one-half of the core melted in the EBR-1 breeder reactor in 1955. In 1961, at the same station, their SL-1 test reactor exploded, killing three workmen. In 1957, the Windscale Pile No. 1 reactor in England released large amounts of radiation after a core fire. In 1961, we almost lost Detroit after a partial meltdown in the Enrico Fermi experimental reactor. And they continue to have accidents with increasing frequency.

The hazards have been proven throughout the fuel cycle, from the uranium mines to the waste storage dumps.

Which brings me to my disagreement with the editorial. It is not in any way ludicrous to think of backing away from the use of nuclear power. The sooner we realize that nuclear power is neither cheap nor safe and abandon this risky course, the sooner we will begin to take seriously the wind and the sun as clean alternatives.

The public should not accept "being informed of how to respond to the inevitable future problems." The public should insist that future problems are not inevitable.

Don't penalize everyone

Hats off to our city officials. As reported in the news article of May 11, they are hot after a solution to a problem that has vexed Midlanders for a long time. Potholes, expensive street repairs, dirty cars, flagrant waste of a natural resource ... all due to nuisance water, and all preventable.

Most of the problem seems traceable to apartment complexes and office buildings with automatic watering systems. We are all aware of particular shallow water crossings as we drive our regular routes. They are recurring, and often have an identifiable source.

While applauding the efforts to control the problem, I respectfully disagree with the proposed solution as presented. A general increase in water rates would penalize everyone for the actions of the irresponsible few. Most Midlanders are careful about such things. Sure, a walking sprinkler with a mind of its own will occasionally embarrass its owner, but that's not the problem.

Contrary to one opinion expressed in the article, the culprits can be identified. The water flows generally occur at a certain time of the day. One drives upstream until one finds water flowing over the curb and that identifies the guilty party. I have done it several times. It works.

Rather than a rate increase, I suggest an ordinance providing for a graduated series of penalties. First offense, a warning. Second, another warning and a fine. Third time, a stiff fine, a court appearance, and perhaps a daily fine until the problem is eliminated.

Very likely, the persons setting the timers on the systems are not the ones paying the water bills. Consequently, there is little incentive to reduce excess water usage. Hauling the owners of record into court would get results pronto!

Trial lawyers fighting legal reforms

WASHINGTON — The nation's trial lawyers are raising bushels of money to block legal reforms and save their Pikes Peak fees. Here are the details:

Jack Anderson

Proliferating lawsuits have caused such havoc across America that voters are demanding reforms. Millions of organizations, ranging from the American Medical Association to the Boy Scouts of America, have joined forces to stop the lawsuits that have disrupted their activities.

This has forced many state legislatures, dominated though they are by lawyers, to review the civil justice system. Any restrictions that might hamper lawsuits, of course, would hit the trial lawyers right in their bank accounts. So the American Trial Lawyers Association has mounted a counterattack to save the system that enriches them.

In California, for example, a drive is gaining momentum to revise the civil justice system. This has taken the form of a voter initiative called Proposition 51, which the California Trial Lawyers Association is rushing to head off.

Its president, Peter J. Hinton, has sent an urgent dispatch to all members entitled "A Report from the Front." Without mincing words, he notifies them that "trial lawyers will be called upon to make major contributions to defeat this initiative."

What constitutes a "major contribution" for a trial lawyer? Hinton makes that clear. "Over a dozen firms and individuals in California have already committed more than $100,000 to the fight against Proposition 51," he states. "Some have contributed as much as $300,000."

Hinton claims that the reformers are trying to reverse "centuries of law which state that the first consideration in the tort system is to make the innocent injured party whole."

He is disputed by James Coyne, president of the American Tort Reform Association, which is leading the battle to change the system. Coyne contends that U.S. courts, "with limited exceptions," held for 200 years that "a person suing could recover only if he proved that the defendant was at fault ... that one only obtained redress for cases of true negligence, not for the personal risks of everyday life."

All this changed, according to Coyne, in the 1960s. "The tort system we have today," he told us, "is vastly different. Our generation has overturned 200 years of legal tradition."

The result has been an explosion of lawsuits. This has raised the risk for those who make decisions; many no longer will serve on corporate boards, school boards, town councils, athletic leagues or other business-civic-volunteer groups.

Those who are still willing to take the risk have been forced to change the way they make decisions. They don't dare decide whether to market a new product, approve an innovation, publish an important story or take some other action based on the merits. The first question they must now ask is, "What's the chance I'll get sued?"

As Coyne put it, "In this stifling climate of anxiety over unknown risk, our economic growth, perhaps even our spirit of adventure and pioneering, will be reduced."

WATCH ON WASTE: What did Environmental Protection Agency big shots do when the inspector general told them the agency's 11 chauffeured cars were underused? Cut down on the number of cars? Don't be silly. They just made 120 more bureaucrats eligible to be chauffeured around town, for a grand total of 150. The auditors learned that the cars were used mainly during lunch hours, and calculated that the average trip cost $45, including the drivers' salaries. The inspector general suggested phasing out most of the chauffeured cars and using taxicabs at probably $5 tops per trip. It would save the taxpayers about $300,000 a year.

UNDER THE DOME: Everyone knows Congress has a tendency to throw money at problems; now high-spirited Senate aides are literally throwing money — mostly pennies — at a huge iron mobile sculpture suspended high over a marble courtyard in the Hart Senate Office Building. The Alexander Calder mobile has a flat enough upper surface to catch many of the coins winged its way, as well as skillfully propelled paper airplanes. Workers with long-handled brooms sweep the debris off periodically. Like coins tossed in Capitol Hill fountains, the money is donated to Children's Hospital here. "Some people don't grow up," commented a custodial official.

Reagan says killing sale would hurt U.S.

WASHINGTON — Aloofness of the Saudi Arabian ambassador from the fight over the current arms package for his country is the key to President Reagan's new sales pitch: If Congress kills the sale, the victim will not be the Persian Gulf oil kingdom but the U.S.A.

Rowland Evans

Robert Novak

In truth, the Saudis do not get much protection for their homeland from air-to-air, ground-to-air and air-to-ground missiles contained in the $350 million arms package. The weapons are intended to defend Persian Gulf oil enclaves from Iranian expansionism.

Thus, in his belated lobbying effort to save the deal after months of costly silence by the State Department, the president quietly warns reluctant senators of the alternative: Abandonment of the deal will heighten dangers of direct U.S. military involvement in the Persian Gulf.

This is a wise turnaround from the administration's disastrous appeal for the Jordan arms package, tied personally to King Hussein's needs. Given the Israeli-centered view of the Mideast in Congress, the administration junked the Jordanian deal. But even turning the current debate so that it centers on American needs, getting the one-third-plus-one Senate votes needed to uphold the president's imminent veto of the bill blocking the sale will not be easy. The anti-Arab climate is pervasive on Capitol Hill.

The merit of the Reagan argument becomes clearer following the upsurge of Iranian helicopter attacks on oil tankers plowing Gulf waters from the Saudi oil-loading port of Ras Tanura to the narrow Hormuz strait. They must pass the Iranian-held islet of Abu Musa. That is the base for deadly helicopter raids that have caused Mobil and other lifters of Saudi crude to postpone loadings.

The Saudi air force, including U.S. F-15s, is the only pro-Western power in the Gulf capable of knocking out the helicopters. The new package of American missiles would reinforce Saudi defense of non-Saudi regions near the Strait of Hormuz, but it would also be political evidence of U.S. intentions to contain Iran. That is the American stake that Reagan wants to drive home.

What the Saudis originally wanted were more F-15s, knocked out of the new package months ago by a decision inside the Reagan administration in response to pro-Israeli pressure. The Saudis quickly made up for it by buying British Tornadoes.

That explains why the Saudi ambassador, Prince Bandar, has appeared to behave a bit cavalierly the past month. When the arms package came to Congress for hearings in Senate and House committees, Bandar was home in Saudi Arabia. His message to the U.S. was chilling: Whether you do or do not sell us these weapons is strictly your business.

Bandar returned here last week, but he came parading his intention to stay out of the bitter battle. When asked to come to the White House by national security adviser John Poindexter to discuss the sale, he agreed only with this understanding: His embassy would play no role in begging senators for enough votes to sustain the president's veto.

If Bandar's aloof view is understandable, Secretary of State George Shultz's absence from the fray is less so and has surprised colleagues in the administration. He stayed away from congressional hearings on the sale, sending underlings to make the administration's case. One result, a White House insider told us, was that "when we tried to get the world to listen to us on the sale, no one paid any attention."

With the burden of finding 34 veto-sustaining senators dropped on his own shoulders, Reagan's argument that the sale is far more crucial to the U.S. than to the Saudis seems to be working. In his first hours on the job, he had changed the votes of three senators who voted with the majority in the 73-to-22 defeat of the arms package.

Reagan's red, white and blue trumpeting of paramount U.S. interests gives him a chance in the Senate while the Saudis sit on the sidelines. They have only one interest: how the battle will affect the delivery of five AWACS aircraft for which they have already paid $6 billion in cold cash.

Loss of the arms package, the Saudis fear, would mean kissing their pre-paid AWACS goodbye. If Congress indeed reneges on such an international commitment, the U.S. can forget maintaining special political and economic ties with the kingdom. Stepping up anti-Arab passion on Capitol Hill will bear higher costs than the loss of a few missiles.

Worries about radiation need a little logic

The accident at the Soviet reactor in the Ukraine once more demonstrates that 40 years into the nuclear age, Americans are woefully uninformed about radiation.

Charley Reese

Even if man had not learned how to split the atom, we would all be exposed to radioactivity, as indeed all humans for all time have been. Our environment is naturally radioactive. We receive background radiation from the earth and we receive more from outer space.

Radiation can be likened to so-called toxic chemicals. Actually, practically every chemical compound could be called toxic but the toxicity — or harmful effect — is dependent on dosage. Aspirin in small doses is beneficial; in large doses, it's fatal.

So, too, with radiation. It's the dosage which counts — how much you absorb over how long a period of time. One measurement of radiation is the rem. A thousandth of one rem is a millirem. It takes about 100 rems, or 100,000 millirems, to make you sick.

The average person in the United States receives about 250 millirems a year. We get a dose every time we fly in an airplane, watch color television, eat, or lean against a granite building. People in certain parts of the world, because of the composition of the earth in those places, receive as much as 1500 millirems a year.

Another characteristic of radiation is that it decreases over a period of time. When we say something is radioactive, we are actually saying that its atomic structure is decaying. Decay rates vary but roughly speaking, according to the Soviet Civil Defense manual, which happens to be one of the best references on the subject, radiation levels decrease by tenfold for every sevenfold increase in time.

If the radiation level is 1000 roentgens per hour at the beginning, then seven hours later, it will be 100 roentgens per hour; after two days, 10 roentgens per hour; after two weeks, one roentgen per hour.

I don't pretend to be an expert on radiation but we do have to apply common sense. It does not convey much useful information to say that there is a radioactive cloud. The important question is, "How much radioactivity?" Three or four millirems? Well, forget it. That's insignificant.

Exposure to radiation does increase the risk of cancer, but not as much as you probably think. The probability of dying of cancer in the United States is 16.8 percent. For every 1,000 millirems of radiation you receive, that chance is increased by .018 percent, according to studies cited by Petr Beckmann, professor at the University of Colorado, in "The Health Hazards of NOT Going Nuclear" (Golem Press, Boulder).

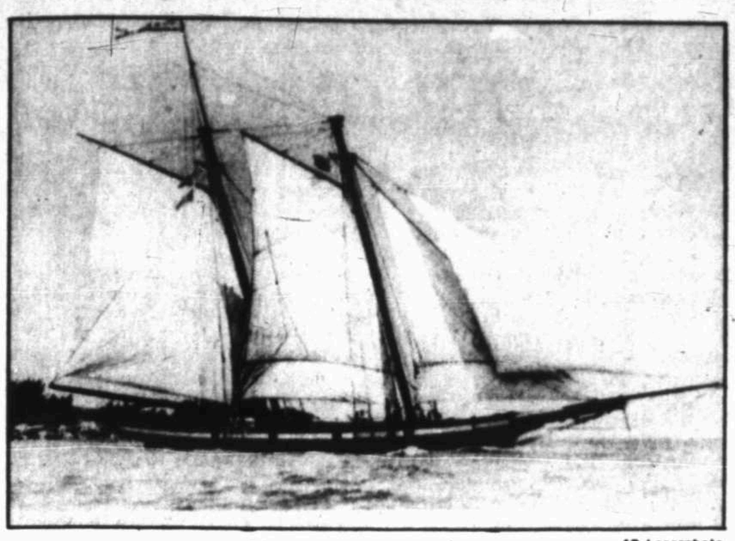

We should also keep in mind that we are never faced with a choice of risk or no risk, but always with a choice of comparative risks. Life on earth is a risky business. There are no risk-free ways to produce energy or operate an industrial society. Nevertheless it is a fact that people are living longer and healthier lives in this industrial, nuclear society than they did in pre-industrial, non-nuclear times.

Your chance of living to a ripe old age are infinitely greater if you live immediately adjacent to an American nuclear power plant than if you live in non-nuclear, non-industrialized Haiti or Guyana. When I was visiting the American Rust Belt recently, three men were killed in a coal-mining accident. That's three more than were killed at Three-Mile Island, where the U.S. experienced its worst ever nuclear power plant breakdown.

Whether we like it or not, we are living in an age of technology and we owe it to ourselves to become at least semi-literate about technology. A teacher at one of my children's schools told the students that a single hydrogen bomb dropped 468 miles away would wipe them out. That's technological illiteracy. The radius of damage from a 10-megaton bomb is 15 miles and you have to increase the explosive power by a factor of 1,000 to increase the radius of destruction by a factor of 10.

The Pride of Baltimore, replica of a clipper ship which served as goodwill ambassador for Baltimore, Md., sank east of the Bahamas last week. Four persons, including the ship's captain, are missing, officials said Monday. Eight crewmembers were rescued Monday by a Japanese tanker.

Clipper's captain lost after diving for raft

BALTIMORE (AP) — The Pride of Baltimore's captain, who dived repeatedly into the sea to release the life raft that saved eight of his crew, remained lost today with three other crewmembers, and officials said the search would continue "as long as there's hope."

Officials learned of the sinking on Monday after a Norwegian freighter rescued eight crewmembers who had drifted nearly five days on a life raft made for six people. The Pride, a 97-foot replica of 19th century clipper ship, was used to promote the city, and sank Wednesday in the Caribbean.

A search by the Coast Guard, Air Force and Navy was to continue today for Capt. Armin E. Elsaesser III, 42, of South Dartmouth, Mass., and the others.

"It's a tragedy for all of us," said Mayor William Donald Schaefer.

Rep. Barbara Mikulski, D-Md., who had christened the clipper in 1977, said the U.S. military was determined to search thoroughly for any survivors. Four Coast Guard planes, one Navy plane and a Coast Guard cutter were dispatched to the area about 300 miles north of San Juan, Puerto Rico.

In addition, Ms. Mikulski said Monday, ships in the area would be on the alert for signs of possible survivors clinging to debris or the dinghy that was seen to break free of the sinking ship.

"As long as there's hope, the search will continue," she said. "All that can possibly be done is being done. I think this is an enormous shock."

The ship apparently had little warning of the squall that sank it, although heavy weather had set in on the previous night, said Christopher C. Hartman, secretary of the non-profit Pride of Baltimore Inc.

"It simply rolled over and went under very quickly," Hartman said. "The eight who survived in our judgment did everything they possibly could."

After Elsaesser and first mate John Flanagan, 27, dived repeatedly to free the life rafts, one of the rafts broke up. Flanagan and the seven others rescued Monday spent the next six hours reinflating a second raft.

In addition to Flanagan, of Niantic, Conn., they were identified as second mate Joe McGeady, 26, of Severna Park; bosun Dan Krachuck, 22, of Springfield, Pa.; deckhand Leslie McNish, 30, of Somis, Calif.; deckhand Susan Huesman, 24, of Baltimore; deckhand Robert Foster, 25, of Alexandria, Va.; cook James Chesney, of Newmarket, N.H.; and deckhand Scott Jeffrey.

All were reported in good condition, although they were to be treated today in Puerto Rico for minor medical problems before returning home.

Nine-year-old's condition stable after rescue at sea

LONG BEACH, Calif. (AP) — A 9-year-old girl who spent at least 12 hours clinging to the wreckage of a pleasure boat was recovering today after an accident in which her mother and another woman died and three other people were missing.

Desiree Rodriguez, 9, of Riverside was in stable condition at San Pedro Peninsula Hospital, recovering from hypothermia and exhaustion, said a nursing supervisor who wouldn't give her name. The girl was found about 5:30 p.m. Monday.

"It's amazing that she's alive," said Lt. Dennis Fahr of the Coast Guard rescue center. "She was in the water at least 12 hours." He added that the water temperature was a chilly 58 degrees.

Rescuers believe the 28-foot power boat DC-II was flipped by an unexpected swell, Fahr said. The Coast Guard had yet to determine exactly when the boat capsized, but the girl told authorities it was some time late Sunday or early Monday.

Rescuers recovered the bodies of Desiree's mother, Petra, 29, and family friend Corinne Wheeler, 33, Fahr said.

A Coast Guard cutter and a patrol boat crisscrossed the seas off San Pedro searching for Desiree's father, Thomas Rodriguez, 30; her sister, Tricia, 5; and Mrs. Wheeler's husband, Allen, 34, Fahr said. Helicopters helped search Monday while daylight lasted.

Paul Strasser, skipper of a commercial sport fishing boat, said he spotted the overturned boat about 15 miles southwest of San Pedro. He saw a woman's body tangled in the wreckage, then the orange of a life preserver in the water nearby.

First Officer Mark Pisano went over the side and found Desiree.

"She was just about worn out and I'm not sure she knew what was happening right then," Pisano said. "But she was still moving, still trying to swim toward the boat. She was great."

Senate financial reports released

By DONALD M. ROTHBERG
AP Political Writer

WASHINGTON — Like many other Americans, members of the U.S. Senate contribute to individual retirement accounts, lose money farming and like to travel.

Unlike most Americans, when senators satisfy their urge to travel someone else usually picks up the bill.

A peek at the finances of senators was offered Monday with the annual release of the Senate's public financial disclosure reports.

The forms told a lot less than people might like to know about the wealthiest senators, men such as John D. Rockefeller IV, D-W.V.; John Heinz, R-Pa.; John Danforth, R-Mo.; Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass.; and Claiborne Pell, D-R.I.

For example, the best that could be gleaned from Rockefeller's filing was that his assets probably total more than $1,070,000. Forbes Magazine has estimated that the great-grandson of the founder of Standard Oil is worth about $150 million.

The Japan Institute for Social and Economic Affairs was listed by Sen. Max Baucus, D-Mont., as picking up the tab for a 10-day trip to Japan for the senator and his wife.

Baucus also listed getting reimbursement for a week-long cruise to Bermuda he took with his wife.

Such trips generally involve speechmaking. A Baucus aide, Carole Long, said she didn't know the purpose of the Japan trip or the Bermuda cruise.

Six members of the Senate Finance Committee, including chairman Bob Packwood, R-Ore., listed IRAs on their forms. Packwood is the principal backer of a tax revision, approved unanimously by the committee, that would end the deduction for most IRA contributions.

Among the Senate farmers who lost money were Mark Andrews, R-N.D., James Abdnor, R-S.D., Charles Mathias, R-Md., and Charles Grassley, R-Iowa.

Andrews listed a loss of $34,506 from his farm in Mapleton, N.D., along with an unspecified loss for his wife from the same farm. The farm's value is upwards of $250,000, and a separate livestock company is listed as worth $15,000 to $50,000.

Abdnor said he lost $144 from his farm operations in South Dakota.

Mathias owns a 370-acre farm in Jefferson County, W.Va., on which he reported a net loss of $19,483.

Phil Gramm's report reveals two gifts of guns

WASHINGTON (AP) — Texas freshman Republican Sen. Phil Gramm received two guns last year as gifts, one of them a handmade .45-caliber revolver worth $1,000, according to his financial disclosure report.

The pistol came from Mexican-American Republicans of Texas. Gramm also reported receiving a 12-gauge shotgun valued at $778 from the Alice-Jim Wells County Master Planners Association, and a $200 barbeque grill from Tony Salinas of Hebbronville.

Senators are required to report gifts worth more than $250. Democrat Lloyd Bentsen reported none.

Yearly Senate financial disclosure reports were released Monday. House reports are due out later this week.

Gramm reported his income went up during his first year in the Senate, though he still has nowhere near the wealth of millionaire Bentsen.

Bentsen appeared to have made a little less and owed a little more in 1985 compared to 1984, according to his reports. The bulk of his holdings and income was in investments and real estate, including capital gains on a blind trust worth at least $100,000.

He reported his 1985 income in a range from $491,666 to at least $862,247, including his $75,100 annual Senate salary. In 1984, he reported a range of income from $719,810 to $1,145,000.

Members of Congress are required only to report ranges of income, assets and liabilities, with an open-ended top category of $100,000 and up for income and $250,000 and up for assets and liabilities.

Though their financial situations differ dramatically, Bentsen and Gramm were not at the extremes in the Senate.

John D. Rockefeller IV, D-W.Va., likely the richest Senator, is estimated by Forbes magazine to be worth about $150 million, while James Abdnor, R-S.D., reported a $144 loss from farming.

Gramm improved his income in 1985 by between approximately $20,000 and $35,000, according to the reports.

His reported income in 1985 ranged from $114,304 to $145,800, most from his Senate salary, which was the same when he was in the House. Much of the rest of his income came from rental property.

Gramm, an economist and sponsor of the Gramm-Rudman budget-balancing law, reported fees for speaking engagements of $22,500. He charged from $500 to $2,000 per appearance. He also reported receiving $700 for articles for the Wall Street Journal and the New York Times.

Gramm also reported 19 reimbursements for trips, mostly from local GOP committees and universities.

Bentsen reported no remuneration for speaking engagements and listed one reimbursement, round-trip air fare from Washington to Abilene from an oil and gas association.

No cover-up intended, shuttle panel convinced

WASHINGTON (AP) — The presidential Challenger commission is convinced that no cover-up was intended even though some NASA documents about the space huttle were destroyed after they had been ordered saved for investigators, administration sources say.

The panel sent an FBI agent to interview officials at NASA's Marshall Space Flight Center in Huntsville, Ala., last week after learning of the document destruction there from an anonymous letter.

Although the documents concerned the shuttle's booster rockets — which are suspected of causing the accident on Jan. 28 — the panel has decided there was no attempt to conceal evidence, according to the sources, who spoke on condition they not be identified by name.

"There were documents destroyed. However, there were copies of these documents available, and they have been turned over to the commission," one source said Monday.

These sources said the presidential commission probing the accident has completed its probe into the matter. The panel also has made its findings available to the National Aeronautics and Space Administration because the space agency is conducting its own investigation in the matter.

In a separate investigation, officials at the Morton Thiokol Inc. plant in Brigham City, Utah, were interviewed Monday by investigators from the NASA inspector general's office, which is looking into the circumstances under which new job responsibilities were given to two company engineers. Morton Thiokol manufactures the shuttle's booster rockets.

The two engineers, Allan McDonald and Roger Boisjoly, were assigned new responsibilities after testifying in public that they had opposed the decision to launch the Challenger. Morton Thiokol officials say they transferred the two men as part of a reorganization, and not in retribution for their testimony.

The space agency's own investigators are trying to determine whether NASA employees played a role in the shift in job responsibilities and whether NASA employees may have tried to pressure McDonald and Boisjoly into withholding testimony from the commission.

Personnel changes resulting from the Challenger disaster continued Monday at the Marshall center with four engineers named to key posts in the redesign of the space shuttle solid rocket boosters.

J. Wayne Littles, who was associate director in the science and engineering directorate at Marshall, was promoted to deputy director of that group. He replaces George Hardy, who retired after he was identified as one of the Marshall engineers who opposed postponing the Challenger launch.

Judson A. Lovingood, formerly deputy manager for development in the space shuttle projects office, was named associate director of the science and engineering directorate.

Jerry W. Richardson, manager of the space telescope project, was named to Lovingood's former job as deputy manager for development in the space shuttle projects office.

James C. Blair, a member of the Challenger accident investigation task force, has been named deputy manager of a team that is redesigning the solid rocket booster for the shuttle.

In the probe into missing documents, sources reported last week that William P. Rogers, chairman of the presidential commission, dispatched an FBI agent to the Marshall center and informed NASA officials about the claims in the anonymous letter that documents had been destroyed or discarded.

Such action would violate an order issued by NASA headquarters immediately after the explosion to preserve all records — including handwritten personal notes — for investigators, and was viewed within the agency and in Congress as a potentially ominous turn in the probe into the nation's worst space disaster.

The materials involved were weekly engineering reports on problems with the solid rocket boosters. Copies of the reports were circulated to a large number of officials at the Marshall center.

The commission has devoted considerable effort to probing the difficulties with the boosters, which have long been viewed with concern by officials inside the space agency.

Nicaraguans again among 'opposition'

EDITOR'S NOTE: The opposing forces in Nicaragua are examined in this, the second of a six-part series on that Central American nation.

By LIZ BOWIE
Hearst News Service

MANAGUA, Nicaragua — Andres Zuniga has been fighting dictatorships in Nicaragua since he was a young man.

In the 1970s, he spoke out against the regime of Anastasio Somoza Debayle. For that, he was arrested by Somoza's army, tortured and imprisoned for months.

When Somoza was finally overthrown seven years ago, Zuniga, a microbiologist now in his 40s, assumed his country was headed for peace and democracy.

Instead, he says, he has found himself again at odds with the government in power. According to Zuniga, the Sandinistas who replaced Somoza have found new ways to oppress the Nicaraguan people.

Zuniga says the Sandinistas have muzzled government opponents, confiscated private property, and promoted militarism rather than dealing with poverty in a country where the average wage-earner makes less than $3 a day.

"We went from the extreme right to the extreme left," he said.

Today, Zuniga is part of a group of Nicaraguans who speak out against their government, but still hesitate to support the violent tactics of the U.S.-backed Contra guerrillas who are trying to overthrow it.

Zuniga would prefer to work within the system for a more moderate form of government. But he believes President Reagan's support for the Contras keeps pressure on the Sandinistas that allows him to be able to continue his non-violent struggle for change.

Zuniga is not alone.

There are many people in Nicaragua who, although not willing to condone the Contra violence that has plagued their country, are opposed to what they see as a repressive and undemocratic Sandinista government.

For any of these anti-Sandinista factions, admitting allegiance to the Contras would guarantee them, they say, a ticket out of the country, or worse: imprisonment for conspiring to overthrow their government.

Much of the opposition leadership in the country has come from the Catholic Church hierarchy, which is outspoken in its attack on what it calls the "Marxist" Sandinistas.

But there is also vocal opposition from private businessmen and formerly wealthy landholders whose large holdings were confiscated since the revolution.

Some still hold significant amounts of land, but have seen their position threatened by the Sandinista party, which describes the revolution as one for the worker and has tried to redistribute some of the land and wealth throughout this small, impoverished nation.

There is also La Prensa, which though restrained by government censorship, has at times been allowed to express a significantly different point of view from the government-operated newspaper, Barricada, and the privately operated El Nuevo Diario, which is generally supportive of the Sandinista government.

Reflecting the many Nicaraguan families that are politically divided, all three papers are edited by members of the Chamorro family, which has dominated the Nicaraguan publishing industry for decades.

On another opposition front, there are many Nicaraguans who complain about a myriad of economic problems and hardships that they link to the revolutionary government.

They may or may not blame the Sandinistas directly for those problems, but they say they are tired of waiting hours in line for a bus, tired of not having enough corn, rice or toilet paper, and tired of salaries that don't keep pace with spiraling prices.

And another group the government must contend with is the large Miskito Indian population on the Atlantic Coast — which even the Sandinista government admits to treating badly in the past — who are now accepting arms from the Contras, but distrust both sides.

"The government has promised a lot, but unfortunately most of the (Miskitos) don't believe the promises," said George Frederick, a Miskito Indian who is working on programs to help his people.

Daniel Bonilla, a director of COSEP, an association of private businessmen in Nicaragua and a haven for anti-government views, shares Zungia's disillusion with the once-promising revolution.

"This government does not believe in private property," Bonilla said. "It has allowed some of it up to now for reasons of expediency. But sooner or later, all private enterprise will disappear. It has been dwindling down gradually."

A coffee-grower who farms several hundred acres of mountainous countryside and who asked not be identified, said 10 coffee farms were confiscated by the government in April.

The farmers, he said, had been paid half of what they should have received for their land.

Shortly after the 1979 revolution, these opposition leaders said, the government confiscated 40 percent of the country's private farmland. Gradually, more has been seized and redistributed. Now the government and farming cooperatives own 60 percent of the land.

The businessmen also argue that private enterprise produces more efficiently than the government.

"We used to export rice, beans and corn," the coffee-grower said, "Yesterday, I could not buy a tortilla because there was no corn available."

The coffee grower also pointed to a dramatic drop in the amount of coffee exported since the revolution.

Miguel Barrios, director general of agrarian reform in one of Nicaragua's war regions, agrees with the coffee-grower that the government has confiscated land, and some of it, he admits, was done unfairly in a post-revolutionary fervor.

But land ownership, Barrios argues, was unfair.

"Two percent of Nicaraguan families owned 40 percent of the land before the revolution, and thousands of families didn't own any land," he said.

One of the goals of the revolution was to give land to the campesinos, or peasant farmers. To do that the government had to confiscate some land from the wealthy to give to the poor, he said.

Barrios said production has dropped, but it is often because of the number of people and amount of resources the government must use to fight the war with the Contras. The campesino living in the war zone has a hard time farming with a gun in his hand, he said.

Press censorship is another complaint against the Sandinista government. All three papers must submit their pages to a government office before they are published.

Jaime Chamorro, publisher of La Prensa, said his newspaper has been unable to publish 40 times in the past four years because so much material was censored.

He also charges that the government controls circulation and advertising of La Prensa, while giving government workers lower rates on Barricada.

His brother, Xavier Chamorro, publisher of El Nuevo Diario, is less critical of the government, but does not like the censorship either.

"At the heart of the revolution is a demand by the Nicaraguan people for a new life, and we defend those new aspirations" while being critical of mistakes the Sandinista government makes, Xavier Chamorro said. Press censorship, he said, will be lifted when President Reagan stops fighting the Sandinistas.

While Xavier Chamorro says that freedom of speech exists for the great mass of Nicaraguan people, others point out the fear many opposition leaders feel when they express differing viewpoints.

Zuniga talked openly, but said that he believes he and other leaders will be killed if Nicaragua is invaded by the Contras.

Zuniga worked with the revolution, he said, until the government was taken over by the Sandinistas — the strongest faction of the revolutionaries who fought Somoza. A microbiologist, he had a good job in the Sandinista government, setting up new programs in Nicaraguan hospitals. But, he said, then the Sandinistas began making political appointments.

"I was trying to look for people with experience, but they said you have to chose people with the Sandinistas.... I resigned and began to fight again," he said, with only a hint of bitterness.

The new government, he said, only puts up with his outspoken opinions now because they are less radical than the Contras'.

But the mountain coffee-grower who complained of ruined exports is not so sure that the war with the Contras will distract the government from arresting vocal opponents like himself and Zuniga.

"I am always afraid, day and night. Everybody is afraid. They could be accused of being a Contra and go to jail," the coffee-grower said. But he continues to fight. "Because if I quit I will be considered a chicken. I am not a chicken.... This is my country and my town and we don't want to leave."

WEDNESDAY: Role of the church

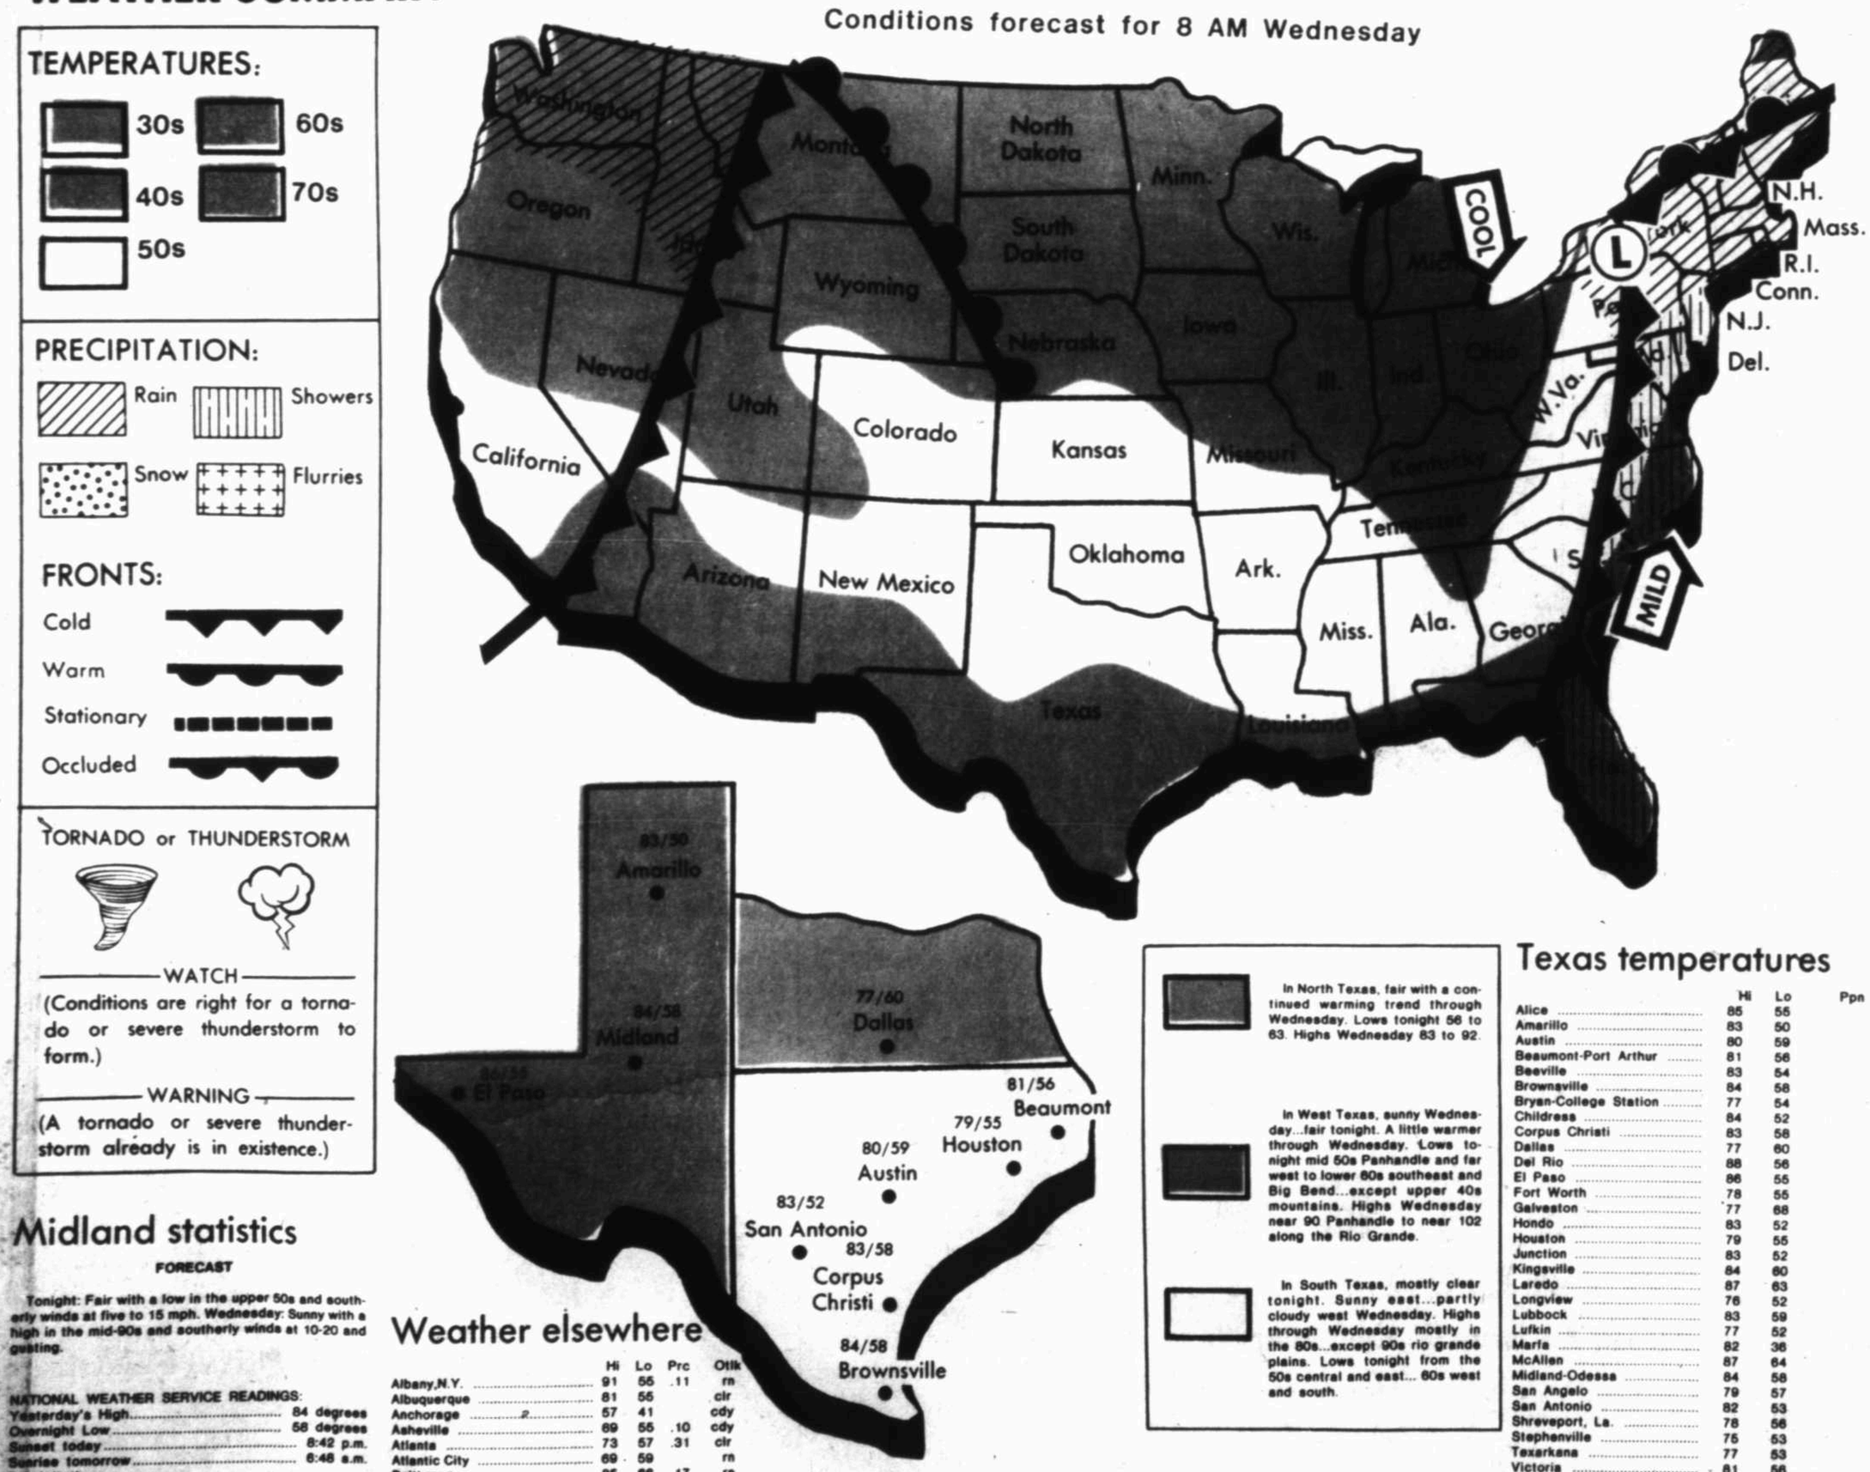

Andres and Yvonne Zuniga, left, pose with their dog Frenchie. Zuniga, who had stood in opposition to the "extremes" of the Somoza regime, feels his nation has gone "from one extreme to another" and finds it necessary to voice his differences with the Sandinistas as well. Above, political prisoners prepare for a day of labor at a work farm in Esteli.

Chap netters behind, but still on NJCAA title path

Ron Jaap/Reporter-Telegram

Midland College's Moniek Margaroli shows her backhand in a 6-2, 6-0 win over Abraham Baldwin's Angie Poppel during first round action in the national NJCAA women's tennis tournament Monday.

By ERIC SCHURER
Sports Writer

Midland College trailed a quartet of teams in the chase for the National Junior College Athletic Association tennis tournament after the first day of play, but nobody seemed to be worried about it.

And for good reason.

With four singles players and two doubles teams topping the pre-tournament seeds, the top-ranked Chaparrals drew a total of eight byes Monday. And those points cannot be picked up until a first round match is won. For all three MC doubles pairs, that means this morning's matches count double — if they win.

TODAY'S MATCHES began at 9 a.m. at both the Midland College courts and at the Midlander. Wednesday, the field is narrowed to the semifinals to be played at the MC courts only.

As expected with the large field, "mismatch" was the password on the opening day of the four-day championship. And the Chaparrals came out on the right end of their share of lopsided decisions.

"It's very hard to keep your game in shape when playing matches like that," said Sarah Swan, a 6-0, 6-0 winner in No. 3 singles.

"On Wednesday I expect the matches to get much harder," said Charissa Pruim, also a straight-set winner at No. 6.

One easy winner was freshman Moniek Margaroli at No. 1 singles, and that had to prove a relief for MC coach Joe Williams.

Margaroli, a native of Holland, is the top-ranked juco singles player in the country, but her play the last month of the season was a mystery to Williams. The peak of his dismay came at the Region V tournament in Odessa last month when Margaroli, a heavy favorite to take the title, was knocked off in the first round.

But Margaroli, perhaps feeling slighted as the tournament's fourth seed, cruised to a 6-2, 6-0 victory over Angie Poppel of Abraham Baldwin Agricultural College (Ga.) at the Midlander. And she says she is now ready to play the type of tennis that earned a scholarship to Oklahoma State and the No. 1 ranking.

"The day I lost, I didn't really think about it. But a few days after regionals, I started thinking 'What am I doing...it's stupid what I'm doing,'" Margaroli said.

Chicken Night opens Angels' 12-game homestand

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

Midland's Angels open a 10-day, 12-game homestand at 7 p.m. today in gala fashion. The menu will feature Chicken Delight and, if Midland Manager Joe Maddon has his way, the dessert will be Tulsa Mousse.

The Drillers, a farm team of the Texas Rangers, are in Midland for the first five games of the homestand. In the Oil City, Midland made off with four of the five games, two by narrow one-run margins plus a 5-0 combination shutout by starter Rafael Pimentel and Randy Harvey.

Arkansas will follow Tulsa into Midland and what happened to Midland when the teams met in Little Rock wasn't nearly as satisfactory. The St. Louis Cardinal farmhands took two of the three games played, both by two runs, the same margin by which Midland managed its win.

When the Travelers come to Midland, the two games rained out in Little Rock will be made up as part of doubleheaders, thus the 12-game stand.

A bumper crowd is expected for tonight's appearance of the famed San Diego Chicken, but Matt Perry of the Angels front office says there are still plenty of tickets. "With the Chicken you can't tell anything by the advance sale. It's a walk-up-to-the-ticket office crowd as a rule."

Before the Arkansas Travelers muffled Midland's offense, the Angels compiled some pretty impressive road statistics. Mark McLemore went 9-for-19 against Tulsa with seven stolen bases. McLemore went 0-for-12 against Arkansas, the first time this year he has really been shut down. Prior to that second baseman from San Diego had missed hitting safely in only four Midland games...a major reason the Angels are in the thick of the Texas League West pennant race.

First Baseman James Randall pounded out two homers at Tulsa to raise his total for the season to seven, tying him with Glenn Walker for the club lead.

Hottest bat at Little Rock belonged to outfielder Brian Brady, who went 4-for-10....

HALO HOOPS— The Midland Angels and Boosters held their annual golf day at Hogan Park Monday, an off day in the Texas League, and C.E. Boyd, John Hotchkiss, C.W. Ellis, and Jim Smith were the winners with a seven under par for the scramble. Second place went to Terry Clark, David Heath, Dee Carter and Charlie Loper while the team of Glenn Walker, John Chambers, Billy Williams and Greg Frazier was third, both with six unders. A card playoff decided the position...

Going into tonight's game, Midland holds a precarious .001 percentage point lead over Beaumont and El Paso with a month to go in the first half race....

The three off days in a row should help Midland's pitching staff, which was a tattered, tired and stormed tossed crew when it left for the trip East. Starters Doug Banning and Phil Venturino are both on the disabled list while lefties Randy Harvey and Mike Butler have been added to the staff....One of the bright spots has been the way Rafael Piminetel, signed on for relief work, has filled in as a starter....

Aggies down Baylor to win SWC tourney

COLLEGE STATION (AP) — Maury Martin singled in the winning run to cap a five-run seventh in ing as Texas A&M downed Baylor 7-6 Monday to win the Southwest Conference baseball tournament.

The Aggies will take a 44-21 record against South Florida at 3 p.m. Thursday in an NCAA South Regional tournament in Tallahassee, Fla.

A&M, co-champions of the regular SWC season, won the tournament with three straight victories, beating Arkansas 4-0 and Baylor 8-0 and 7-6.

Baylor southpaw Blaine Beatty, who turned back Texas 13-5 on Friday, held the Aggies through six innings and was nursing a 6-2 lead as A&M came to bat in the seventh.

Jeff Schow led off with a solo homer over the leftfield wall. Then with one out, Scott Livingston singled, went to second on a wild pitch and scored on Mike Scanlon's single up the middle to make it 6-4.

Pat James' hard grounder hit Scanlon for an automatic second out. Fred Gegen worked Beatty for a walk to move James to second. Then Don Wren's grounder was first bobbled by second baseman Shawn McAfee and then got past rightfielder Brad Douglas. Both James and Gegen scored on the two errors and Wren raced around to third.

Bruce Aguilar came on to relieve Beatty (10-4,) and Martin singled between third and short to score Wren.

The victory went to lefthander Pat Wernig (8-4,) who came on for starter Gary Geiger in the second inning. The Bears then had a 4-1 lead.

ABC explores Texas' 5A title game

AUSTIN (AP) — The University Interscholastic League has been contacted by the ABC-TV network about televising the state's Class 5A championship football game, UIL Director Bailey Marshall said Monday.

"I think they heard about the Midland Lee-Odessa Permian football game last year where KTPX-TV pre-empted the World Series and a survey showed that 80 percent of the viewers were watching the football game," Marshall told the Texas Associated Press Sports Editors convention.

Bailey said the network's call was only for information and not a proposal.

"They just said they were looking at some things and this was one of them and they'd get back to us," Marshall said.

Marshall also defended the UIL's policy concerning limitations on basketball camps in the state.

The UIL, the governing body for extracurricular high school activities in the state, does not permit varsity athletes to participate in summer basketball camps.

"I'll put our basketball programs up against those in any other state," Marshall said.

Bill Farney, UIL assistant director, said summer basketball camps often cause problems at recruiting time.

"You take a kid that can't buy a stick of gum and suddenly he's shows up for a summer camp at a school with new shoes," Farney said. "Then when it comes to recruiting, it's not so surprising that he ends up going to that college."

Schools can practice basketball five-on-five for nine months of the year and athletes who have not played on a varsity team can attend summer camps, Marshal said.

Wrigley Field thrown out of baseball playoffs

CHICAGO (AP) — Forget Wrigley Field. Chicago Cubs fans will have to change their tune to "Meet me in St. Louie, Louie ..." if their struggling baseball team makes the playoffs this year.

The Cubs have been ordered to play any post-season "home" games in St. Louis because there are no lights at Wrigley Field.

The Cubs, whose major obstacle to a playoff series had been their 14-20 record, were told Monday by the National League to move post-season games to Busch Stadium where there are lights.

"It is very regrettable and sad for the fans," Lawrence Gunneis, attorney for the Chicago Tribune Co., which owns the Cubs, said.

He said the owners "made the best effort we could last year" to overturn city and state laws banning night baseball in Wrigley Field and he was uncertain whether they would try again.

But the president of a group that opposes lights in the stadium said the threat to move was "an obvious ploy" to gain sympathy for the Cubs efforts to install lights at Wrigley Field.

"They hope this will make people angry enough to get the laws that protect our neighborhood repealed," Mark Atkinson, president of Citizens for Baseball in Sunshine, said. "I think Cubs fans are smarter than that."

The National League said the proposal for the Cubs to move playoff games to Busch Stadium was adopted unanimously by the league's teams. Television contracts require night telecasts during post-season play, and Wrigley Field is the only stadium without lights.

"I've said for four years it's going to happen," Dallas Green, the president and general manager of the Cubs, said, adding it would take "a small miracle" to get lights installed in time for this season's playoffs.

"It was not our decision," Green said. "We've worked very hard to make people understand and it hasn't worked out yet."

Austin: Land of midnight run

I know that Austin is our state capitol and deserves our respect, money and the host role for the state track, tennis, baseball, basketball and golf finals. But this is a weird place, folks.

Not only does this city have Gov. Mark White, but it rains in Austin. In fact, it pours when it rains in Austin. How can a West Texas athlete cope with rain? More to the point, how can a West Texas sports writer cope with rain?

Aren't we supposed to be created equal, all under one Lone Star? The state capitol must be in another state. Can it be possible that those poor souls in the Alamo died 150 years ago so we can have the state track meet in Austin?

ON SATURDAY, rain forced a five-hour delay in an already crowded schedule, forcing athletes to compete until 12:54 a.m. Sunday morning. Writers were asleep in the press box before it was over. Stories were written and sent to towns like Harlingen, Midland, Denton, Fort Worth and Ennis before the meet had ever closed. It was a 15-hour marathon. Can you imagine sitting through eight straight mile runs? It's cruel and unusual punishment.

One participant, a girl I think was from Class A Apple Springs, told me, "This is the first time I've ever stayed up this late before, much less run this late. I'm glad my mother didn't come or she might have pulled me out of my event."

And athletes aren't equal either. Houston Sterling's Carlette Guidry, a junior, won four events. That makes eight state championships for her in two years and there is talk that she will add five more next year. That's 13 state titles by one person. West Texas athletes didn't get crowned once Saturday in eight divisions. Aren't West Texans part of this state?

AND THE rain... It took me two hours to figure out what that stuff was falling from the sky. I had Vietnam flashbacks, but this time without rain gear. No one in West Texas even owns rain gear.

When the rain hit Austin Saturday around 1:30 p.m., many fans refused to leave their seats. It would appear that track fans love their track. The truth, however, was that the fans left in the stands were from West Texas. They just wanted to tell everyone back home what it's like to sit in the rain.

The hotel was nice as you would expect in a state capitol, but there was no time to enjoy it. Tennis begin at 9 a.m. — that's morning — and the track at the same time. By 2 a.m. Sunday and what seemed like three days of work, the hotel looked good. Then you find out your roommate snores — West Texas style. West Texans do win snoring championships without competition.

BUT LEAVE it to Midland Lee track coach Eddie Wolski to help make the trip bearable. Wolski told me to meet him in Llano at noon Thursday for barbeque.

"I don't know the name of the place, but it's right across the street from the Pizza Hut and Dairy Queen in an old abandoned filling station," Wolski had said.

After about two pounds of the best brisket I've ever eaten, I was ready for Austin with no rain gear.

And by the way, in Austin there's this great little store where you can by a cheap jacket when in trouble. I don't know the name of it, but it's right across the street from...

Williams would have said the same thing, though perhaps not as kindly. In Margaroli, Williams sees a supremely talented player that has not yet played up to her ability since early in the season. He is hoping she uses the NJCAA tournament as a springboard back to that early season form.

"She had to improve, her back as against the wall," said Williams. "Mentally, her concentration on her game has been much better the last few weeks."

Margaroli agrees, citing a week's layoff after regionals as the tonic for her ailing tennis game.

"I had a lot of time to do homework and catch up on things. I deliberately didn't play. It really took my mind off tennis. I feel much better, I've worked very hard the last two weeks. I enjoy tennis again.

"There is nothing to think about but nationals now. It's going to be tough, it's a challenge, but I'm willing to work hard to go for it."

And that could spell trouble for the rest of the field.

Toronto's Stieb tumbles to 0-6

Associated Press

Career victory No. 300 proved an elusive milestone for Phil Niekro, so he can understand the anguish Dave Stieb is feeling as the Toronto pitcher goes after triumph No. 96.

"It's so frustrating it's kind of hard to describe," Stieb said Monday after Niekro pitched the Cleveland Indians to a 6-4 victory over the Blue Jays. "The worst part of this is right now, right after the game."

"I'm just trying to figure out, 'Why?' When is it going to end?"

Stieb, who led the American League in earned run average last season, fell to 0-6 with a 6.33 ERA after nine starts. He gave up five runs on 10 hits and struck out six, but walked five as the Indians snapped a five-game losing skid and halted Toronto's three-game winning streak.

Niekro, who evened his record at 3-3 with career victory No. 303, struck out four and walked three in his first appearance at Exhibition Stadium since beating Toronto on the final day of the 1985 season for his 300th career triumph. But because that victory came four starts after his 299th victory, Niekro understands Stieb's frustration.

"If you get knocked down, you have to get right back up," Niekro, 47, said of Stieb's early-season woes. "If he feels like he's defeated, it's a tough feeling to shake. But he's going to win if he keeps getting back up. He'll come out of it."

George Bell staked Stieb to a 2-0 lead with a two-run double in the first inning, but the Indians came back with a run in the second, three in the third, one in the fifth and one more in the ninth.

Damaso Garcia's run-scoring single in the fourth and Cliff Johnson's solo homer in the eighth had pulled Toronto to within a run before Joe Carter provided some insurance for Cleveland by driving in his third run of the game with a single in the ninth.

Mel Hall keyed Cleveland's 13-hit attack, going 4-for-4 with a double and triple. He scored three runs and drove in one, and Chris Bando drove in two runs.

"The last at-bat it (hitting for the cycle) crossed my mind," said Hall. "I had the green light to go for it on 3-0, but I didn't get the pitch I wanted."

Hall drew a walk from reliever Jim Acker and pinch-runner Brett Butler promptly moved into scoring position for Carter by stealing his ninth base of the year.

Despite his success against Stieb, Hall praised his opponent by saying, "You don't want to wake him up. I don't know why he's 0-6 throwing the way he is."

Toronto Manager Jimy Williams said he's lost no confidence in Stieb, but is at a loss to explain his misfortune.

"All I can do is give him the ball again five days down the road," said Williams. "If I'd lost confidence in him, I would have pulled him after four or five innings. But he battled and kept us in the ballgame. We just couldn't get to Niekro."

Stieb, meanwhile, must take Niekro's advice and keep battling.

"If I wasn't throwing well, I'd be the first to tell you," Stieb said. "I know I pitched bad the first three or four starts, but I've pitched well the last three or four.

"I feel I'm pitching well right now, but that's no consolation. It still doesn't cut it with me. Wins are the bottom line. Last year I won the ERA championship (2.48) and went 14-13. To me, that's no good."

Baseball

Royals 6, Rangers 4

George Brett hit a pair of RBI singles and Frank White homered as Kansas City downed Texas in a fight-interrupted game.

Mark Gubicza, 2-4, pitched six innings and won his second straight game and Steve Farr finished up for his third save.

Bobby Witt, 2-3, took the loss. The Rangers' rookie hit Willie Wilson with the first pitch of the game, and Wilson then stole second and scored on a single by Brett.

White hit his fourth homer leading off the fourth and Wilson delivered a two-run single later in the inning.

Pete Incaviglia hit his eighth homer for the host Rangers and Gary Ward hit his second.

Kansas City's Rudy Law and Texas third baseman Steve Buechele got into a fight in the eighth inning after Law slid into third. Buechele shoved Law, and Law swung back. Both benches emptied, but the two players were quickly separated.

Red Sox 8, Twins 7

Jim Rice drew a bases-loaded walk with two outs in the bottom of the ninth inning, forcing home the tying run, and Mark Sullivan was then hit by a pitch, giving Boston its victory over Minnesota.

Twins reliever Ron Davis entered the game to start the ninth with Minnesota leading 7-6. But after retiring the first two Boston batters, Davis walked Marty Barrett and gave up a double to Wade Boggs that sent Barrett to third.

Bill Buckner, who hit a home run and an RBI single earlier in the game, was then intentionally walked, loading the bases. Rice fouled off five pitches before walking on a 3-2 delivery. Sullivan was hit in the thigh by an 0-1 pitch from Davis, 1-4.

Joe Sambito worked the ninth for Boston and won his first decision of the season. It was Sambito's first major-league victory since 1981.

Kent Hrbek hit a two-run homer and Tom Brunansky followed with a home run, keying a five-run fifth inning that gave visiting Minnesota a 7-4 lead. Hrbek also had an RBI double in the first.

Angels-Orioles, Ppd.

The game was called in the bottom of the second inning with the visiting Angels leading 1-0 on Ruppert Jones' home run. The game will be made up Thursday afternoon in Baltimore.

The rainout marked the second straight day the Angels had a game postponed while leading. On Sunday, the Angels were ahead 2-0 on Wally Joyner's home run when their game in Detroit was rained out in the third inning.

TCU revenue bargain unorganized

FORT WORTH (AP) — Texas Christian University's television revenue bargain with the NCAA was unprecedented — and, judging from the first reactions, unorganized.

TCU agreed to return $343,203 in television revenues from the 1983 and 1984 seasons in exchange for being allowed to appear on television in 1986. But it appears neither the National Collegiate Athletic Association nor TCU has worked out the logistics of the bargain.

The NCAA admits it doesn't know how the money is going to be collected or distributed.

This case deals with an athletic department but exemplifies a little-known system the NCAA has been using with individuals. When a student-athlete accepts illegal benefits, she or he is ineligible under NCAA rules. But a student can "buy back" eligibility by repaying the illegal benefits.

Who ensures that the repayment is actually made? Apparently the parties involved police themselves.

"It's up to the school to see that it's done," NCAA legislative assistant Steve Horton said. "We don't have the time to see whether it gets done or not."

Two recent cases — at Southern Methodist and Baylor — indicate some of the problems in the process for student-athletes.

At East Tennessee State, Albert Sams, one of three players making paybacks, said he was told by then-basketball coach Barry Dowd that he did not have to return the money. The NCAA had told Sams he had to pay back $250 he said he received from Dowd.

"Coach (Dowd) said I didn't have to pay him back if it was him," Sams said.

Dowd denied making the payment and telling Sams he didn't have to pay back the money.

"He (Sams) has a short memory," Dowd said. "I don't recall saying that."

Sams ended up making the payment and it went into the general athletic fund because the origin of the money could not be determined, associate athletic director Janice Shelton said.

SMU athletic director Bob Hitch said the NCAA gave SMU the responsibility of making sure a student-athlete paid back the price of Cotton Bowl tickets obtained from a booster in violation of NCAA rules.

"They (the NCAA) did not ask for copies of the check," Hitch said. "It was left up to the university."

"But we could ask for a receipt at any time," Horton said.

They usually do not.

And sometimes the university does not oversee the repayment.

For example, several Baylor basketball players were told to repay a Waco travel agency for airline tickets they received in violation of NCAA rules. The players were to pay the travel agency that was cited for dispersing illegal benefits when the program was placed on probation in January.

"Those students paid the travel agency," Baylor athletic director Bill Menefee said. "That money did not go through the athletic department.

"I asked the travel agency (Brazos Valley Travel) to send me a receipt when the money had been paid. The NCAA has not asked for it, but I have it on file if they do.

"The university's word is taken by everybody."

Another problem the NCAA has is deciding whom the money should go to — or deciding who should decide.

In the case of TCU's $343,203 "bargain," there is no indication of where the money will go once it reaches the NCAA.

David Berst, director of the NCAA's enforcement division, said Friday that the money it will be "allocated through regular channels."

Steve Morgan, the NCAA's assistant legislative director of compliance and enforcement, later said there are no regular channels.

"I guess the executive committee will make that decision ultimately," Morgan said. "It could go to administration expenses or a number of things. Now I'm not saying we're throwing it to the wolves."

TCU athletic director Frank Windegger said he doesn't have any idea when the money will be paid or how it will be paid. Neither does the NCAA.

When a student-athlete returns illegal benefits, the money is supposed go into the school's general athletic fund if a coach is involved — or back to the booster or business if either can be identified, NCAA legislative official Doug Johnson said.

If the source of the benefits cannot be identified the money goes to the charity of the athlete's choice.

But several cases have indicated that problems can be involved.

Baylor basketball player Michael Williams received $100 from a booster during Christmas of 1984. Williams' mother repaid the money, sending a check to the Baylor athletic department. The money is still there; no one is sure where it should go.

Ewing NBA's top rookie, Spud Webb gets votes

NEW YORK (AP) — Patrick Ewing's goals for his first professional season were to help the New York Knicks win and to earn the Rookie of the Year award.

He had to settle for one out of two.

Ewing missed 32 games because of injuries to his right knee, left ankle and left elbow, and key teammates Bernard King, Bill Cartwright and Pat Cummings missed all or most of the season with injuries. As a result, the Knicks finished with an NBA-worst 23-59 record.

The 7-foot center, however, had the best statistics in the league among first-year players and that was enough for him to be named Rookie of the Year.

Ewing, who averaged 20.0 points and 9.0 rebounds in 50 games, received 36 votes from a nationwide panel of media members, more than double his nearest competitor. Xavier McDaniel of Seattle and Utah's Karl Malone were second and third, respectively, with 16½ and 14½ votes.

Four other rookies also received first-place votes. Spud Webb of Atlanta had four, Manute Bol of Washington and Charles Oakley of Chicago three each and Benoit Benjamin of the Los Angeles Clippers one.

"My rookie season was disappointing in some areas," Ewing said Monday at a news conference announcing the award. "It was very hard to watch your teammates and not be able to play. I felt I played well, but I hope I can play more games and that the team will be better next season."

Ewing said if King, sidelined the entire 1985-86 season with torn ligaments in his knee, and Cartwright, who played only two games with stress fractures in his foot, can return on a full-time basis, the Knicks will have a contending team.

History sides with Rockets

INGLEWOOD, Calif. (AP) — History and the powerful Houston Rockets are working against the Los Angeles Lakers, who are on the verge of becoming the 17th consecutive NBA champion to fail to successfully defend the crown.

"We're not out of it, but we're reeling," Lakers center Kareem Abdul-Jabbar said. "If I were on Houston, I'd be very confident right now."

However, the 39-year-old Abdul-Jabbar, who has scored more points than any player in NBA history, expressed some optimism, saying, "We've been in all the games. It's not like we've been swamped."

NBA

The Rockets dropped the opener of the Western Conference finals to the Lakers 119-107, but won the next three games by scores of 112-102, 117-109, and 105-95 to take a 3-1 lead in the best-of-seven series. The fifth game will be played Wednesday night at the Forum.

"I don't think they can win three in a row," said Houston center Akeem Olajuwon, the star of the series so far. "(But) I don't think they'll give up. They're a very experienced ball club."

Only four teams in NBA playoff history have come from a 3-1 deficit to win a series, each time in the conference finals. And no NBA team has won consecutive champsionships since Boston accomplished the feat in 1969.

One of the teams to rebound from a 3-1 series deficit were the Lakers, who did it against Phoenix in the Western Conference finals in 1970.

The last team to do it was Boston against Philadelphia in the Eastern Conference finals in 1981. The Celtics then beat Houston in the finals to win the NBA title.

The coach of that Boston team? None other than current Houston Coach Bill Fitch.

"All I know is if we win the next one, we win the series," Fitch said. "I've been in a locker room where we've been down 3-1, and I'm wearing a (championship) ring."

Should the Lakers win Wednesday night, a sixth game would be played at the Summit in Houston Friday night. A seventh game, if needed, will be played at the Forum next Monday.

"Either we do it now or we sit there at home and watch them play the Celtics on TV," Earvin "Magic" Johnson of the Lakers said. "There's got to be some answer — but I haven't found it ..."

One answer for the Lakers would be to contain Olajuwon. The 7-foot Nigerian is averaging 31 points, 12 rebounds and four blocked shots per game in the series.

"When he gets the ball down low, there is no man in basketball that can stop him," Johnson said. "He does it quicker than anybody. When he gets the ball inside, he's got his shot up."

"He is phenomenal," Houston's Jim Petersen said. "He really has carried us."

Lakers Coach Pat Riley praised Olajuwon's efforts, but added, "It's not a one-man team. ... If it was, they wouldn't be here (ahead 3-1) today."

Riley is aware of his team's predicament. Nevertheless, he made a bold prediction.

"We're going to win Wednesday, and then come back (to Houston) in Game 6 and put the pressure on them," he said. "I'll be revved Wednesday. The players will be revved. it'll be interesting."

Riley had some words of advice for reporters after the Lakers were beaten by the Rockets in Sunday's fourth game.

"If I were all of you, I would be wary before you shovel the last bunch of dirt over our faces. Anybody goes ahead now and hammers the last nail in the coffin might be sorry."

Bulls fire Albeck

CHICAGO (AP) — Jerry Reinsdorf made it clear he wants his Chicago Bulls to play the game of basketball his way, and that's the reason he fired Coach Stan Albeck.

"I have an idea how the game should be played, and I'd like to try it," the owner of the National Basketball Association franchise said Monday.

"There's no question about it — Stan Albeck is a competent NBA coach, and when we first got together I thought we had a common understanding how the game should be played," Reinsdorf said. "I'm not saying I'm right or I'm wrong, but I'd like to try it."

Reinsdorf also made it clear that Doug Collins, former Philadelphia 76ers guard, is his choice as Albeck's successor.

"We have a chance to get a good coach, one who could be outstanding. We are talking with him and if we reach an agreement, we could announce it later in the week."

Reinsdorf spent most of last weekend meeting with Collins in Tempe, Ariz.

On Monday, Albeck criticized the firing, saying: "It's not fair. I think it was completely uncalled for, but I'm probably biased. With the number of injuries we had — well, it was an absolute bizarre year."

Reinsdorf said his concept of playing the game is "no one-on-one, no isolation, very little dribbling and tenacious team defense."

"Basically, I'd like the game to be played the way the (Boston) Celtics play and the (Los Angeles) Lakers play," Reinsdorf said referring to two of the three teams still active in the playoffs.

Reinsdorf said the Bulls' 30-52 record this past season is "not representative of Albeck's record as a coach" because of injuries and other distractions including superstar Michael Jordan's missing 64 games because of a foot injury.

Jordan returned late in the season and helped the Bulls gain a playoff berth before they were eliminated in three straight games by the Celtics.

Albeck was the Bulls' third coach in as many seasons, and his successor will become the Bulls' ninth coach in 10 years.

Reinsdorf took control of the Bulls last year. He fired Rod Thorn as general manager and hired Jerry Krause, who was named chief of basketball operations.

Krause fired Kevin Laughery as head coach and hired Albeck, signing him to a three-year contract at $250,000 a year with only the second year guaranteed.

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: The key to expanding your horizons is to expand your thinking. Be open to new ideas and helpful suggestions. Choose business and romantic partners with special care to prevent embarrassing revelations later on. You cannot afford to confide in someone who shoots from the lip. A change of residence holds great appeal. Look at several properties before making up your mind. An unexpected gift or windfall could bring new attention from the media.

CELEBRITY BIRTHDATES: Irish tenor Dennis Day, author Harold Robbins, "Perry Mason" and "Ironside" star Raymond Burr, Mr. T of "The A-Team," Peggy Cass, the Minnesota Twins' Kent Hrbek, "Fats" Waller.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Doing business in distant places may not live up to your expectations. Errors can be expensive, especially when dealing with precision instruments.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Listen to the concerns of a disgruntled associate and you will gain valuable good will. People at a distance are your strongest allies. Cut expenses by performing more services for yourself. Entertain at home.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Do your work in a different way. New data and procedures will increase profits if properly applied. You discover something you did not know about an old friend. An apology may be necessary.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Newly available facts and figures clear up a confusing issue. Good luck is in the air. Helpful new agreements can be negotiated. You meet a kindred spirit.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Your co-workers look to you for leadership. Be generous with your time. Someone with a keen sense of humor makes a delightful dinner partner.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Your enthusiasm is contagious! Co-workers are only too happy to climb aboard your bandwagon. Do not let your optimism lead you into risky speculation.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You can increase your resources by working at home. Exceptional work will be rewarded with extra pay. Guard against making hasty decisions. To reduce expensive travel, make better use of the mail and phone.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Figures can be confusing. Make certain the information you are given is based on facts, not wishful thinking. Be alert to the possibility of deception.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Keep abreast of the latest developments in your field. A self-improvement project begins to pay off. Think before you act. This may not be the right time to make a major move.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A professional is willing to share his or her expertise for a price. Joint funds deserve careful handling. Consult partner before making an investment. Group social activities hold more appeal than usual.

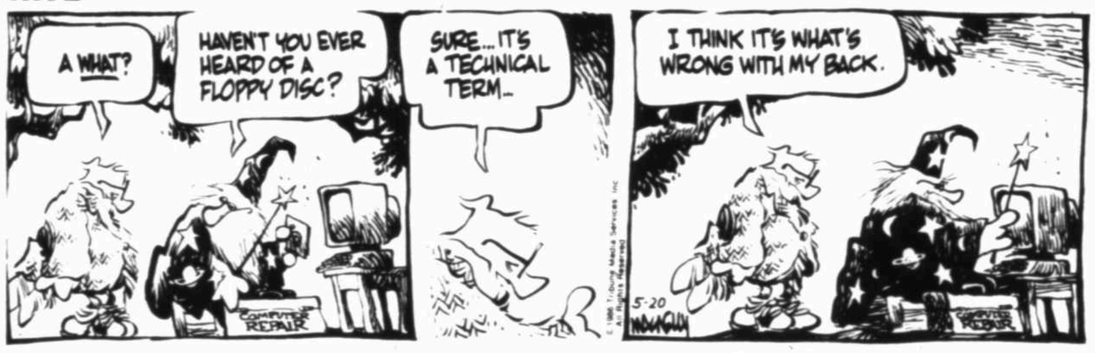

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Investigate an investment opportunity personally. It could prove very worthwhile. Curb a tendency to eat or drink too much. A visit with an older person confined to hospital or home proves very rewarding.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Take a second look at an old plan or neglected project. A little effort may be all that is needed to rejuvenate it. Fatten your bank account by making new contacts and consulting experts.

Even the strongest teams can no longer take their opposition for granted. In the recent Vanderbilt Team Championship, played in Portland, Ore., five of the top 16 teams were eliminated fairly early in the competition. And the team seeded ninth not only made it into the finals, but were leading after three quarters before succumbing to the third seed.

A team including the two top Americans on the World Bridge Federation rankings, Bobby Wolff and Bob Hamman of Dallas, and four other players with many national titles to their credit, fell to the 25th seed in the second round. Leading by 10 International Match Points with only 16 boards to play, their unheralded opponents went on to win by 36 IMPs. The opening lead on this board accounted for 11 of those.

The auction shown is that of Hamman-Wolff. In their methods, the opening bid of one no trump showed 13-17 points, the response of two diamonds was forcing Stayman and the rebid of three no trump showed 13-14 points and either 3-3-2-5 or 3-3-3-4 distribution.

Since North had shown length in the majors and South had denied more than three diamonds, West knew that it was almost certain that his partner held four or more diamonds. Therefore, he led the ace of diamonds and continued with the jack, and the defenders took the first five tricks. (Slightly better would have been an opening lead of the jack of diamonds, retaining the ace as an entry in case it was needed.)

The auction in the other room was somewhat less revealing. West chose to lead the nine of hearts, and declarer took all 13 tricks when every suit broke favorably.

Minnie Pearl's price once too high for singer Roy Acuff's touring show

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Minnie Pearl, whose price-tagged hat and country comedy have become a Grand Ole Opry standard, says country star Roy Acuff once fired her from his touring show.

Miss Pearl was cut from Acuff's show in 1941 during a stop in Mount Olive, Ky., she said Monday in her weekly column in the Nashville Banner. "He told me he was cutting back on his act. He was making it easy for me," she said.

She said Acuff is now her best friend.

Eastwood, who was elected mayor of Carmel-by-the-Sea two months ago, has been scouting locations around San Clemente for "Heart Break Ridge," an action film about the Marine Corps.

Eastwood, who will co-star with Marsha Mason and direct the film, was spotted last week at several taverns and at nearby Camp Pendleton Marine base.

The star of a host of spaghetti westerns as well as "Dirty Harry," "Pale Rider," and "Tightrope," will play a gunnery sergeant in "Heart Break Ridge," said Marco Barla, a publicist for the film.

NEW YORK (AP) — Grammy award-winning singer Billy Joel turned professor briefly, performing a new song for a college class and answering questions about show business.

Joel played "Baby Grand," to be on his as-yet-unreleased album, "The Bridge," as his wife, model Christie Brinkley sat in the audience at the New School of Social Research on Monday night holding their 4½-month-old daughter, Alexa.

"I love it. I've seen tapings of his other seminars. I'm curious to see him live," Miss Brinkley said before Joel walked onto the stage.

Joel, who was invited by a Guitar Study Center class, told the aspiring musicians to make tapes at home, stay on track by listening to the radio and saying "I know I can write something better than that," and not show up at a producer's office singing "Have I got a song for you."

NEW YORK (AP) — NBC's peacock, which has shared corporate billing with the letter "N" for several years, is flying solo as the network's new logo. In an unpublicized move, the "N" was unceremoniously dumped.

The new symbol has six feathers instead of 11 and the bird's head now faces to the viewers' right, rather than left, said Bud Rukeyser, NBC's executive vice president for corporate communications.

The deposed "N", controversial in itself when it was unveiled in the 1970s and eventually uncovered as the same symbol as Nebraska public television, will move into logo retirement, joining the Olympic rings that were incorporated into ABC's visual identity before the 1984 Olympics.

In an interview Monday, Rukeyser referred to the former NBC symbol as "the proud N."

NBC's new logo actually was unveiled May 12 during the broadcast of "NBC's 60th Anniversary Celebration." It now is NBC's regular symbol on the air and official network stationery. Rukeyser said old letterheads still may be used by NBC staffers. The proud "N" is not entirely in disfavor, he noted.

In full-color glory, the new peacock also will be engraved next month into NBC's corporate headquarters in New York, welcoming all visitors.

"A logo is not meant to be changed frequently," Rukeyser said. "This new logo, we anticipate, will be our new logo indefinitely."

Rukeyser said former NBC President Fred Silverman had wanted to get rid of the "N", but he himself was ousted in 1981 before a full logo change could be made. As the third-place network, NBC had more serious problems than its logo-identity crisis.

"It was a combination of NBC doing well and our 60th anniversary, so it seemed like a good time to straighten this thing out," Rukeyser said.

During Silverman's tenure, the peacock, which had been NBC parent company RCA's symbol for color TV, was combined with the "N". (In a settlement, NBC had paid Nebraska public TV for rights to the "N.")

"But it really was a design nightmare," Rukeyser said.

Rukeyser said the rounded peacock and the hard-edged "N" caused visual design conflicts and that the detail of 11 feathers, when reduced in size, caused it to become unrecognizable as a peacock. Now, the six feathers reduce better and they all will have different colors, one for each of NBC's six broadcast divisions.

AUSTIN (AP) — Musician Willie Nelson has been discharged from Seton Medical Center after surgery on his left thumb, and therapists fitted him with a special splint to allow him to resume performing.

Nelson, who broke the thumb when he fell off a bicycle about 10 days ago, is suffering some pain but otherwise doing just fine, said Dr. Bob Walters, a hand surgeon who operated on Nelson.

Hospitalized since Friday, the singer was discharged on Sunday, hospital officials said.

"Everybody at the hospital fell in love with him. Everybody from the nurses to the housekeeping staff was impressed with what a warm, genuine person he is," Walters said.

Wednesday, May 21, 1986

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: The key to expanding your horizons is to expand your thinking. Be open to new ideas and helpful suggestions. Choose business and romantic partners with special care to prevent embarrassing revelations later on. You cannot afford to confide in someone who shoots from the lip. A change of residence holds great appeal. Look at several properties before making up your mind. An unexpected gift or windfall could bring new attention from the media.

CELEBRITY BIRTHDATES: Irish tenor Dennis Day, author Harold Robbins, "Perry Mason" and "Ironside" star Raymond Burr, Mr. T of "The A-Team," Peggy Cass, the Minnesota Twins' Kent Hrbek, "Fats" Waller.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Doing business in distant places may not live up to your expectations. Errors can be expensive, especially when dealing with precision instruments.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Listen to the concerns of a disgruntled associate and you will gain valuable good will. People at a distance are your strongest allies. Cut expenses by performing more services for yourself. Entertain at home.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Do your work in a different way. New data and procedures will increase profits if properly applied. You discover something you did not know about an old friend. An apology may be necessary.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Newly available facts and figures clear up a confusing issue. Good luck is in the air. Helpful new agreements can be negotiated. You meet a kindred spirit.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Your co-workers look to you for leadership. Be generous with your time. Someone with a keen sense of humor makes a delightful dinner partner.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Your enthusiasm is contagious! Co-workers are only too happy to climb aboard your bandwagon. Do not let your optimism lead you into risky speculation.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You can increase your resources by working at home. Exceptional work will be rewarded with extra pay. Guard against making hasty decisions. To reduce expensive travel, make better use of the mail and phone.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Figures can be confusing. Make certain the information you are given is based on facts, not wishful thinking. Be alert to the possibility of deception.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Keep abreast of the latest developments in your field. A self-improvement project begins to pay off. Think before you act. This may not be the right time to make a major move.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A professional is willing to share his or her expertise for a price. Joint funds deserve careful handling. Consult partner before making an investment. Group social activities hold more appeal than usual.

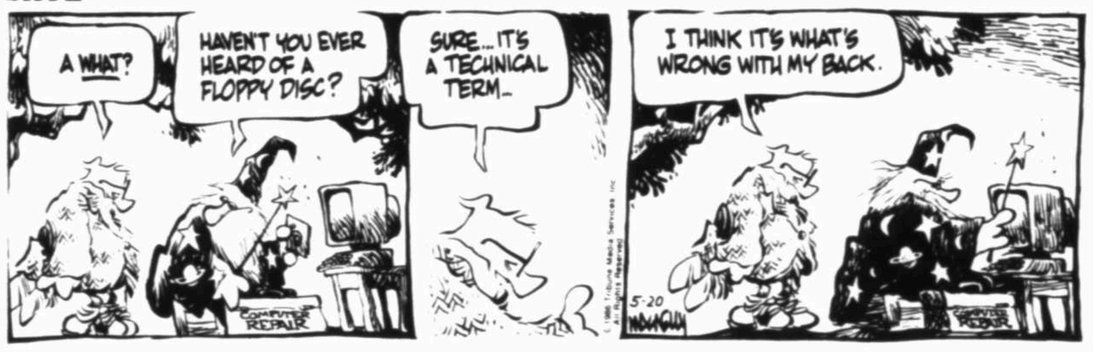

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Investigate an investment opportunity personally. It could prove very worthwhile. Curb a tendency to eat or drink too much. A visit with an older person confined to hospital or home proves very rewarding.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Take a second look at an old plan or neglected project. A little effort may be all that is needed to rejuvenate it. Fatten your bank account by making new contacts and consulting experts.

Opening lead: ?

Even the strongest teams can no longer take their opposition for granted. In the recent Vanderbilt Team Championship, played in Portland, Ore., five of the top 16 teams were eliminated fairly early in the competition. And the team seeded ninth not only made it into the finals, but were leading after three quarters before succumbing to the third seed.

A team including the two top Americans on the World Bridge Federation rankings, Bobby Wolff and Bob Hamman of Dallas, and four other players with many national titles to their credit, fell to the 25th seed in the second round. Leading by 10 International Match Points with only 16 boards to play, their unheralded opponents went on to win by 36 IMPs. The opening lead on this board accounted for 11 of those.

The auction shown is that of Hamman-Wolff. In their methods, the opening bid of one no trump showed 13-17 points, the response of two diamonds was forcing Stayman and the rebid of three no trump showed 13-14 points and either 3-3-2-5 or 3-3-3-4 distribution.

Since North had shown length in the majors and South had denied more than three diamonds, West knew that it was almost certain that his partner held four or more diamonds. Therefore, he led the ace of diamonds and continued with the jack, and the defenders took the first five tricks. (Slightly better would have been an opening lead of the jack of diamonds, retaining the ace as an entry in case it was needed.)

The auction in the other room was somewhat less revealing. West chose to lead the nine of hearts, and declarer took all 13 tricks when every suit broke favorably.

Minnie Pearl's price once too high for singer Roy Acuff's touring show

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Minnie Pearl, whose price-tagged hat and country comedy have become a Grand Ole Opry standard, says country star Roy Acuff once fired her from his touring show.

Miss Pearl was cut from Acuff's show in 1941 during a stop in Mount Olive, Ky., she said Monday in her weekly column in the Nashville Banner. "He told me he was cutting back on his act. He was making it easy for me," she said.

She said Acuff is now her best friend.

SAN CLEMENTE, Calif. (AP) — Actor-turned-Mayor Clint Eastwood is getting back to the business of making movies.

Eastwood

Eastwood, who was elected mayor of Carmel-by-the-Sea two months ago, has been scouting locations around San Clemente for "Heart Break Ridge," an action film about the Marine Corps.

Eastwood, who will co-star with Marsha Mason and direct the film, was spotted last week at several taverns and at nearby Camp Pendleton Marine base.

The star of a host of spaghetti westerns as well as "Dirty Harry," "Pale Rider," and "Tightrope," will play a gunnery sergeant in "Heart Break Ridge," said Marco Barla, a publicist for the film.

NEW YORK (AP) — Bernadette Peters was named by the Drama Desk as best actress in a musical for "Song & Dance," and Lily Tomlin won the best actress award for her one-woman play "The Search for Signs of Intelligent Life in the Universe."

The Drama Desk awards, announced Monday, also honored Sam Shepard's "A Lie of the Mind" as outstanding new play of the 1985-86 New York theater season, while "The Mystery of Edwin Drood" won eight awards, including best musical.

Among the others winners were Ed Harris as outstanding actor in "Precious Sons," Joanna Gleason as best featured actress for "Social Security" on Broadway, and in the off-Broadway production of "It's Only a Play"; and Joseph Maher as top featured actor for "Loot."

The Drama Desk is an organization of theater critics, reporters and editors.

NEW YORK (AP) — Swoosie Kurtz has won an Obie for her portrayal of a demented housewife in a revival of John Guare's "The House of Blue Leaves," and playwright Wallace Shawn was honored for his play "Aunt Dan and Lemon."

The Village Voice awarded the Obies on Monday for the best of the 1985-86 off-Broadway season.

Among the other recipients, Kevin Kline and Edward Herrmann were honored for "sustained excellence in performance," and Richard Foreman was named best director for his work on "Largo Desolato."

• • •

NEW YORK (AP) — Grammy award-winning singer Billy Joel turned professor briefly, performing a new song for a college class and answering questions about show business.

Joel played "Baby Grand," to be on his as-yet-unreleased album, "The Bridge," as his wife, model Christie Brinkley sat in the audience at the New School of Social Research on Monday night holding their 4½-month-old daughter, Alexa.

"I love it. I've seen tapings of his other seminars. I'm curious to see him live," Miss Brinkley said before Joel walked onto the stage.

Joel, who was invited by a Guitar Study Center class, told the aspiring musicians to make tapes at home, stay on track by listening to the radio and saying "I know I can write something better than that," and not show up at a producer's office singing "Have I got a song for you."

NEW YORK (AP) — NBC's peacock, which has shared corporate billing with the letter "N" for several years, is flying solo as the network's new logo. In an unpublicized move, the "N" was unceremoniously dumped.

The new symbol has six feathers instead of 11 and the bird's head now faces to the viewers' right, rather than left, said Bud Rukeyser, NBC's executive vice president for corporate communications.

The deposed "N", controversial in itself when it was unveiled in the 1970s and eventually uncovered as the same symbol as Nebraska public television, will move into logo retirement, joining the Olympic rings that were incorporated into ABC's visual identity before the 1984 Olympics.

In an interview Monday, Rukeyser referred to the former NBC symbol as "the proud N."

NBC's new logo actually was unveiled May 12 during the broadcast of "NBC's 60th Anniversary Celebration." It now is NBC's-regular symbol on the air and official network stationery. Rukeyser said old letterheads still may be used by NBC staffers. The proud "N" is not entirely in disfavor, he noted.

In full-color glory, the new peacock also will be engraved next month into NBC's corporate headquarters in New York, welcoming all visitors.

"A logo is not meant to be changed frequently," Rukeyser said. "This new logo, we anticipate, will be our new logo indefinitely."

Rukeyser said former NBC President Fred Silverman had wanted to get rid of the "N", but he himself was ousted in 1981 before a full logo change could be made. As the third-place network, NBC had more serious problems than its logo-identity crisis.

"It was a combination of NBC doing well and our 60th anniversary, so it seemed like a good time to straighten this thing out," Rukeyser said.

During Silverman's tenure, the peacock, which had been NBC parent company RCA's symbol for color TV, was combined with the "N". (In a settlement, NBC had paid Nebraska public TV for rights to the "N.")

"But it really was a design nightmare," Rukeyser said.

Rukeyser said the rounded peacock and the hard-edged "N" caused visual design conflicts and that the detail of 11 feathers, when reduced in size, caused it to become unrecognizable as a peacock. Now, the six feathers reduce better and they all will have different colors, one for each of NBC's six broadcast divisions.

AUSTIN (AP) — Musician Willie Nelson has been discharged from Seton Medical Center after surgery on his left thumb, and therapists fitted him with a special splint to allow him to resume performing.

Nelson, who broke the thumb when he fell off a bicycle about 10 days ago, is suffering some pain but otherwise doing just fine, said Dr. Bob Walters, a hand surgeon who operated on Nelson.

Hospitalized since Friday, the singer was discharged on Sunday, hospital officials said.

"Everybody at the hospital fell in love with him. Everybody from the nurses to the housekeeping staff was impressed with what a warm, genuine person he is," Walters said.

Dollar falls

LONDON (AP) — The dollar fell against most major currencies in early trading in Europe today. Gold prices eased.

Dealers said, however, the outlook for the dollar was bearish. Its performance was also likely be affected by the U.S. first quarter Gross National Product figures due to be announced later today.

In Tokyo, the dollar fell after a two-day rise to a closing 167.30 yen, down 0.85 yen from Monday's close of 168.15. Trading ends in Tokyo before Europe's business day begins.

Later, in London, the yen continued rising and the dollar was quoted at 166.60.

Other dollar rates at midmorning, compared with late rates in London on Monday:

–2.2130 West German marks, down from 2.2250

Gold opened in London at a bid price of $340.40 a troy ounce, compared with late Monday's $340.50. At mid-morning, the city's five major bullion dealers fixed a recommended price of $340.30.

In Zurich, the bid price was $340.35, down from $343 late Friday.

Earlier, in Hong Kong, gold fell $1.59 to close at a bid $340.83.

Interest rates rise

WASHINGTON (AP) — Interest rates on short-term Treasury securities rose sharply in Monday's auction to levels not seen since late March.

The Treasury Department sold $7 billion in three-month bills at an average discount rate of 6.22 percent, up from 6.07 percent last week. Another $7 billion was sold in six-month bills at an average discount rate of 6.28 percent, up from 6.10 percent last week.

The rates were the highest since March 31, when three-month bills sold for 6.35 percent and six-month bills averaged 6.32 percent.

The new discount rates understate the actual return to investors — 6.41 percent for three-month bills and 6.58 percent for six-month bills.

In a separate report, the Federal Reserve said the average yield for one-year Treasury bills was 6.65 percent last week, up from 6.49 percent the previous week. This interest rate is often used to change rates for homeowners with adjustable rate mortgages.

Economy shows surprisingly strong growth rate

Many analysts had predicted GNP would be revised downward

WASHINGTON (AP) — The economy grew at a surprisingly strong annual rate of 3.7 percent in the first three months of the year, a five-fold increase over the previous quarter, the government reported today.

The Commerce Department said the gross national product, the broadest measure of economic health, turned in its best performance since a similar 3.7 percent increase in the first three months of 1985.

The news on inflation was even better. A price index tied to the GNP rose at an annual rate of 2.5 percent from January through March, its best performance in almost two decades.

While the Reagan administration predicts a 4 percent growth rate for all of 1986, today's upward revision from last month's 3.2 percent estimate caught analysts by surprise. Many had predicted that the first quarter GNP rate would be revised downward to 2.5 percent or lower.

Still, the stronger-than-expected growth was not likely to impress many analysts, who believe the economy will not show a sustainable rebound in activity until the second half of the year.

Analysts noted that the biggest factor pushing the GNP upward was a revision in the pace at which businesses were adding to their inventories.

The change added $7 billion to GNP growth, but many economists expect this will subtract from growth in the current April-June quarter as businesses are forced to work down unwanted inventories, especially a record high level of unsold cars.

Many analysts believe the economy will limp along in the current quarter at a growth rate of around 2 percent, very similar to the 2.2 percent growth turned in for all of 1985.

They do not expect a sustainable rebound in growth will occur until the second half of the year, when they believe the favorable effects of the dramatic plunge in oil prices and lower interest rates will spark revived growth.

They contend that the 3.7 percent GNP figure hides various weaknesses in the economy, especially in the manufacturing sector.

A companion report today said that after-tax profits of U.S. corporations fell by 4.9 percent in the first quarter to an annual rate of $139.5 billion. This was the biggest decline since a 23.8 percent drop in the first three months of 1982 in the midst of the last recession.

The first quarter increase in GNP growth represented a sharp rebound from growth at an annual rate of just 0.7 percent in the October-December quarter last year.

Much of this change came from a swing in the country's huge trade deficit, which analysts also believe is only a temporary improvement.

Imports, which were rising at an annual rate of $26.7 billion in the final three months of 1985, fell at an annual rate of $1.4 million in the first three months of the year.

Non-OPEC producers willing to cut output

NICOSIA (UPI) — Non-OPEC producers are willing to reduce their oil output by a total of about 700,000 barrels a day in a bid to help OPEC stabilize oil prices, the Middle East Economic Survey (MEES) said Monday.

Prospects for a global production accord now look somewhat brighter following a series of contacts made by key OPEC ministers with independent oil-exporting nations and the new Norwegian government's apparent policy change in favor of some sort of collaboration with the cartel, MEES said.

As a result of these developments, there is a feeling among leading OPEC strategists that the 13-nation group already can count on voluntary output reductions totaling about 700,000 barrels a day from those non-OPEC exporters that have thus far indicated a willingness to cooperate with OPEC in stabilizing the market, the authoritative oil journal said.

MEES did not identify the non-OPEC members that are prepared to rein in output.

The cutbacks would include some contribution from Norway but not as yet Britain, which still refuses to join forces with OPEC to prop up prices and has ignored entreaties of the new Norwegian government, MEES said.

In December the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries — led by Saudi Arabia — abandoned production restraints in an attempt to recapture its "fair share" of the world market from outsiders, particularly Norway and Britain.

MEES did not rule out "some change of heart in London."

It pointed out that OPEC circles "note with satisfaction that the U.S. administration — no doubt under the impact of the distress of the domestic U.S. oil industry — appears to have moved from a position of outright hostility to a neutral stance as regards the efforts of others to bring about a global OPEC-non-OPEC deal on production control."

RRC won't revoke rules on Red Cave formation

AUSTIN (AP) — The Railroad Commission on Monday rejected a proposal to revoke its requirement that oil operators in the Red Cave fields identify the gas-oil contact before completing wells.

The commission acted on a recommendation by hearing examiner Don Walker, who told commissioners that the gas-oil contact issue "goes to the very essence" of a hearing on the Red Cave formation, which underlies portions of Potter, Moore and other Panhandle counties.

The oil and gas regulatory agency called the hearing to consider rescinding its rules for the Red Cave fields and to consolidate the two fields into one.

At the beginning of the hearing May 6, Celeron Oil and Gas Co. urged the commission to issue an interim order revoking the requirements set out in its July 8, 1985, letter to all oil operators. In that letter, the commission instructed operators not to perforate oil wells above the gas-oil contact. The gas-oil contact is considered the dividing line in gas and oil formations.

Since the letter went out, the production of casinghead gas, or gas produced by oil wells, reportedly has dropped significantly throughout the Panhandle. Lawyers representing oil operators said the gas-oil contact rule has created tremendous confusion in the Red Cave fields.

Celeron attorney Brian Sullivan said operators in the two fields had been unable to determine a single gas-oil contact.

Commission studies also have indicated that the two fields are unique in that gas-oil formations frequently are found at the same depth.

The commission hearing on possible rule changes for the fields is expected to last another month.

Texaco will buy Seagull's interest in pipeline system

HOUSTON (AP) — Seagull Energy Corp. officials say Texaco Chemical Pipeline Co. plans to buy Seagull's interest in a joint venture that owns a pipeline system for more than $17.1 million.

Both companies equally own the joint venture, which includes a 280-mile system of four pipelines that transport liquid petroleum feedstocks between industrial areas in Southeast Texas, Seagull officials said.

Seagull has received formal notice of Texaco Chemical's intended purchase, which will take place Jan. 1, 1987, Seagull announced Monday.

Under the terms of the joint venture agreement, Texaco Chemical can purchase Seagull's interest at the beginning of a calendar year by giving written notice prior to June 30 of the prior year.

"The $17.1 million gain will permit us to strengthen our balance sheet, thus providing the company additional flexibility in pursuing other opportunities," said Seagull Chairman Barry J. Galt in a statement released Monday.

Seagull officials expect to negotiate a new agreement to continue as operator of the pipeline system.

In addition to transporting hydrocarbon products and petrochemicals, Houston-based Seagull is involved in oil and gas exploration and production, along with distribution, transportation, marketing and processing of natural gas.

Coke to market iced tea

CHICAGO (UPI) — Officials of the Coca-Cola Co. say the next "pause that refreshes" will come from fountains dispensing ice tea in Texas, Louisiana and Oklahoma.

Announcement of the new product line was made Sunday at the 67th annual National Restaurant Association trade show. The show, which started Saturday at Chicago's McCormick place, includes 17,000 exhibitors specializing in the food service industry.

Coca-Cola's ice tea, using the brand name Refresh, is geared toward the restaurant trade and the brew will be dispensed from fountains, much like soft drinks are in restaurants. There are no plans at the present to market the tea in cans or bottles.

"We are offering the food service industry an iced tea that, research indicates, tastes as good as fresh brewed without the work," said Edwin R. Mellett, executive vice president of Coca-Cola USA.

"Refresh brand iced tea provides our customers an alternative to brewing their own tea from tea bags, eliminating labor time and waste associated with a fresh brewed product."

The tea will be dispensed from post-mix dispensers which can be used in conjunction with 1-gallon jugs or bag-in-box 5-gallon syrup packages to suit various volume needs.

Mellett said the iced tea will be on the market, beginning in July, in Texas, Louisiana and Oklahoma.

He said the tea concentrate will produce a consistent product because it will be used in fountain dispenser, a technique which reduces mixing and temperature errors.

"Compared to other post-mix teas, we have a yield advantage and a clear taste advantage," Mellett said.

Occidental cuts budget, slashes jobs

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — Occidental Petroleum Corp. announced Monday it has eliminated 2,000 jobs and slashed its oil and gas exploration budget for the second time this year because of lower oil prices.

These two reductions have cut the oil giant's 1986 capital spending budget by 35 percent, company spokesman Philip Wallach said.

Before international oil prices began to slide, Occidental had planned to spend $1.5 billion for oil exploration and production.

In its latest reduction, Occidental cut $150 million from its oil and gas exploration budget to bring projected 1986 spending to $950 million.

The personnel cuts, most of which occurred in the company's oil and gas pipeline divisions, were made to reduce job duplications in Occidental's consolidation of MidCon and United Pipeline operations and to streamline the company's overall pipeline operations.

Occidental stock was up 25 cents to $27.50 a share on the New York Stock Exchange in the early afternoon Monday.

Dr. Armand Hammer, Occidental's chairman and CEO, said the spending cuts complete the "third step" in the company's efforts to ease the economic strain of lower oil prices.

In March, Occidental cut its capital spending budget by 25 percent from $1.5 billion to $1.1 billion.

Louisville papers sold to Gannett

Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — In its third major newspaper acquisition in 16 months, Gannett Co. Inc. Monday announced an agreement to purchase The Courier-Journal and The Louisville Times for about $315 million.

Owned since 1918 by the colorful and sometimes contentious Bingham family, the Louisville newspapers became the object of an intense rivalry in recent years, with heirs to the fortune feuding over how to manage what had become a prestigious regional newspaper operation.

"It is not easy for me to see the Courier-Journal and Louisville Times pass from my family into other hands," Barry Bingham Sr., chairman of the Courier-Journal and Louisville Times Co., said in a prepared statement.

"Change is an inevitable rule of life, however. I subscribe to the biblical instruction that there is a time to sow, a time to reap. My distress is mitigated by the character of the owners who will now guide the destinies of our newspapers, The Gannett publishing company and its chief executive officer, Allen Neuharth," Bingham's statement said.

After purchasing The Des Moines Register for about $200 million in January 1985 and The Evening News Association, the parent company of The Detroit News, for $717 million last August, Neuharth said, "It feels like winning the Triple Crown."

"There were three big newspaper races ... this past year. Naturally we were pleased that Gannett won them all," Neuharth said. "Fittingly, Louisville is a sparkling jewel in that crown."

The purchase of the Louisville property enhances Gannett's position as one of the largest media companies in the country, with revenues of $2.2 billion in 1985. Gannett, already the nation's largest newspaper group, said its daily paid circulation will increase to more than 6 million with the purchase of the Louisville papers.

When the Bingham family announced in January that the paper would go up for sale, many of the big newspaper companies in the country expressed interest. However, when the bids were opened last week, there were fewer than half a dozen offers. The New York Times Co. and Hearst Publications, both companies that had expressed some interest, declined to bid.

Also bidding were The Washington Post Co. and The Tribune Co. of Chicago. In Louisville, after rumors that Washington Redskins owner Jack Kent Cooke had also offered to buy the paper, the executive editor, Paul Janensch, told the staff that Cooke was "not the winning bidder." Cooke told The Post that he had not bid for the properties.

Chrysler silent on reports of import plans

DETROIT (UPI) — Chrysler Corp. Monday refused to comment on published reports that it is considering a joint marketing agreement with Italian automaker Fiat S.p.A. and a plan to import subcompacts from a Nissan Motor Co. subsidiary.

Automotive News, a weekly industry publication in Detroit, said Fiat has confirmed that discussions between it and the No. 3 automaker have been under way since the Turin Auto Show last April.

The publication also reported Chrysler is talking with Nissan to sell the Japanese carmaker's 1.3-liter March model in the United States under a Chrysler name.

"We are not going to comment on speculative reports or rumor," Chrysler spokesman Douglas E. Nicoll said. "We feel no useful purpose is served."

Chrysler is reportedly interested in Fiat's T4 model, known as the Croma in Europe. But any possible deal between the two automakers would probably center on new models since current ones including the Croma are not designed to meet U.S. standards.

Reports of Chrysler's talks with Nissan came from an Japanese manufacturing publication that said Nissan may have its Taiwanese affiliate, Yue Loong Motor Co., build the March model for Chrysler.

Chrysler already has a 24 percent interest in another Japanese automaker, Mitsubishi Motors Corp., but that firm does not make a car in the 1,000 cc class.

BUSINESS BRIEFS

Economists forecast higher economic growth

WASHINGTON (AP) — The lethargic U.S. economy is about to rebound with substantially higher growth that will last through 1987, the National Association of Business Economists says in its latest forecast.

The survey of 330 of its members, released Monday, found them more optimistic than they were just three months ago because of the plunge in oil prices and interest rates. Some of the economists have boosted their growth forecasts by as much as two percentage points for 1986 and 1987.

Largest union authorizes strike against AT&T

WASHINGTON (AP) — American Telephone & Telegraph Co.'s largest union has authorized a strike against the company, with less than two weeks before the expiration of the current labor contract.

Members of the Communications Workers of America, by a 6-1 margin, on Monday authorized a strike against AT&T — a move often seen in labor-management negotiations as June 1 contract deadlines for about 155,000 workers draw near.

Flight attendants call off strike against TWA

NEW YORK (AP) — Thousands of flight attendants have canceled a nine-week-old strike against Trans World Airlines in hopes of forcing the airline to recall them, but the company says it won't rehire all the strikers.

"We told them this was going to happen," TWA Chairman Carl C. Icahn said Monday.

Icahn had authorized the airline to hire replacements for the 6,000 flight attendants who went on strike March 6 over disputes on wage and work-rule concessions.

The executive board of Independent Federation of Flight Attendants decided Saturday to stop the strike because talks remained deadlocked and the union was losing leverage as the airline hired more replacements.

Honda raises automobile prices 2.3 percent

DETROIT — Honda, with the fierce loyalty of its customers apparently undiminished by repeated price increases, said Monday that it is raising its prices for the third time in less than six months.

Analysts predicted that the other major Japanese auto makers — which have all raised prices twice since last winter — will quickly follow, and that consumers will swallow hard and keep right on buying imports.

Honda again blamed the rapid appreciation of the Japanese yen against the dollar. To recoup its rising costs, the auto maker increased prices an average of 2.3 percent, or $238, over the prices set in March.

Lear Petroleum posts loss

DALLAS (SWN) — Lear Petroleum Partners, L.P. reported a loss of $24.2 million for the first quarter of 1986. Contributing to the loss was a non-cash charge of $22.8 million related to the write-down of the book value of the Partnership's oil and gas properties. The write-down resulted principally from the continual decline in crude oil and natural gas prices. The partnership reported a loss of $26.6 million in 1985's first quarter, which included a write-down of $25.7 million. The net loss from operations, excluding write-downs, was $900,000 in 1985's first quarter and $1.5 million in 1986.

Working capital provided by operations of $5.1 million in 1986's first quarter compared with $8.4 million cash flow in 1985. Revenues in the most recent quarter of $10.8 million compared with $14.5 million in the previous year.

For purposes of calculating the value of the partnership's crude oil reserves, $26 per barrel was used at year-end 1985 and $12.50 per barrel was used at the end of the first quarter of 1986. The decline in crude oil prices accounted for approximately 60 percent of the total write-down.

The write-down has no effect on the partnership's cash flow, the tax basis of its assets, or the expected tax treatment of cash distributions. The partnership will distribute $.75 per unit on May 26, 1986. This distribution is a tax-deferred return of capital.

The decline in cash flow relative to 1985's first quarter reflects lower natural gas and crude oil prices and lower crude oil production. Natural gas prices averaged $2.87 per Mcf in 1985's first quarter and $2.23 per Mcf in 1986's first quarter. Average crude oil prices declined from $25.44 per barrel in 1985 to $19.98 per barrel in 1986. Natural gas production increased from 45.0 million cubic feet per day in 1985 to 46.6 million cubic feet per day in 1986.

The partnership's capital expenditures for the first quarter of 1986 of $1 million compared with working capital provided by operations of $5.1 million. Excess cash flow from operations was applied to debt reduction. Total debt declined from $66 million at year-end 1985 to $59.5 million at the end of 1986's first quarter.

Anadarko makes major gas find

HOUSTON (SWN) — Anadarko Petroleum Corp. has completed testing of the Whiskey Springs Federal A-1, a significant natural gas and condensate discovery well located in Uinta County, Wyoming.

During a 24-hour production test, the exploratory well flowed 10.3 MMcfd of gas and 1,185 barrels of 48 gravity condensate through a 22/64-inch choke at a flowing tubing pressure of 3,600 psi. Perforations are between 14,858 and 14,884 feet in the Dakota formation.

Anadarko, the operator, has an approximate 36-percent working interest in the discovery and in 1,320 surrounding lease acres. Two development wells have been staked, and further additonal drilling is planned.

OIL & GAS DIGEST

Texas Eastern markets out of gas contracts

HOUSTON (SWN) — Texas Eastern announced today that its natural gas transmission division has invoked market-out provisions in a number of its gas purchase contracts, reducing the price it pays for gas under the affected contracts to $1.85 per MMBtu (plus contractually authorized taxes) from a previously applicable price of $2.25 per MMBtu. The market-out price is effective June 1, 1986.

In conjunction with this gas cost reduction, the Houston-based pipeline company will file a request with the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC) to pass through the purchase gas cost savings to the pipeline's customers by lowering its commodity rate approximately $0.19 per MMBtu. Although the commodity rate varies according to customers' geographic locations, the new commodity rate for Texas Eastern's largest customers in the New York area will be $2.10 per MMBtu.

Bayou Resources shows lower revenues, profits

HOUSTON (SWN) — Bayou Resources, Inc. reported net income attributable to common stock for the first quarter of 1986 of $37,253 ($.04 per share), as compared to net income of $72,038 ($.08 per share), for the same period in 1985. Revenues were $786,314, down from $876,972 in the first quarter of 1985.

Average oil and gas prices received during the first quarter of 1986 were approximately 30 percent below the levels of the first quarter of 1985. Reductions in oil and gas prices experienced since March 31, 1986 will continue to put significant downward pressure on the Company's revenues and earnings for the remainder of 1986.

Saxon, limited partnership revenues lower

DALLAS (SWN) — Saxon Oil Co. announced a 1986 first quarter net income of $90,787, compared with net income of $188,314 ($.01 per share), for the same period in 1985. The company's affiliated Saxon Oil Development Partners, L.P. announced first quarter net income of $724, compared with net income of $866,894, or $.21 per unit, for the same period in 1985.

Due primarily to the severe drop in oil prices in early 1986, total revenues for the first quarter of 1986 declined approximately 49.9 percent from the same quarter of 1985. The partnership's total revenues for the first quarter of 1986 declined approximately 27 percent from the comparable period in 1985.

Loss before income tax benefit was $2.3 million for the quarter, compared with a loss before income tax benefit of $2.4 million in the second quarter of the previous year. Substantially all of the company's income tax benefits for financial reporting purposes were utilized during fiscal year 1985.

For the same period in 1985, restated to reflect the effect of a $6.7 million windfall profit tax refund, the company recorded net income of $350,000, or $.01 per share, on revenues of $30.7 million. Porosity was 17 percent and tested at a calculated rate of 104 barrels of oil per day. Dunoil holds a 35 percent working interest in the well and a like interest in the offsetting 1,700 acres.

Accounting change shows gain for Conquest

HOUSTON (SWN) Conquest Exploration Co. reported earnings for the first quarter of 1986 were $611,000, $.03 per share, compared to a restated loss of $2,609,000, $.12 per share, in the first quarter of 1985. Effective Jan. 1, 1986 the company has adopted the successful efforts method of accounting for its oil and gas operations. Previously, the company had used the full cost method of accounting. Prior period financial statements have been restated to reflect successful efforts.

The cumulative effect of the change in accounting principles was to reduce the company's book assets and shareholders' equity as of Dec. 31, 1985 by $66,659,000. INVESTOR'S GUIDE

Trust accounts not part of banks' assets

By BILL DOYLE

Q. I have arranged to have my will administered by the trust department of a large bank. A testamentary trust established in the will specifies that 5 percent of what I leave will be given annually to the heirs I have named as trust beneficiaries. After 21 years, the balance will be distributed and the trust will end.

How safe will the trust be? The bank says it is "bonded." But suppose the bank fails during the 21-year period. Will the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. cover any part?

A. The arrangement you have has to be counted as just about the safest arrangement you can make. Bank trust departments handle things such as that all the time, with seldom a slip-up.

Doyle

Now, no one can tell you with absolute assurance that some Light-Fingered Louie at that bank won't dip into the trust over 21 years.

However, in the very remote possibility of thievery, auditors, bank examiners and other regulators should catch it. And the beneficiaries of the trust show the common sense of keeping track of all records of the trust's assets and disbursements.

Trust accounts are kept separate from other things a bank holds and are not part of the bank's assets. If the bank goes belly up, its creditors would not be able to touch the trust you leave behind.

FDIC insurance will cover any money in a deposit account at the bank, up to $100,000.

• • •

Q. The bank where I have my accounts and at which I was planning to set up a trust for my heirs was caught and fined for failing to report large cash deposits and withdrawals. To me, that indicates the people who run the bank are not entirely honest. Do you agree that I should move my money to a different bank?

A. That's a tough one. An awful lot of banks have been nabbed for not reporting currency transactions of $10,000 and more. Huge fines have been levied. Some bankers have been prosecuted and put in the slammer for "laundering" money from narcotic and other underworld dealings.

The banks usually protest that these deals were "inadvertent" and/or a "misunderstanding" of the rules, which are aimed at cracking down on organized crime.

To date there's no evidence that honest bank depositors have suffered because of the culpability or just plain stupidity of bankers who handle "hot money."

Assuming you're satisfied with the service you're getting from that bank, there's no firm reason to pull your money out. But I'd think twice about setting up a trust fund there.

• • •

Q. A savings and loan association at which I have several certificates of deposit is being acquired by a bank. I am worried that federal deposit insurance might be replaced by state deposit insurance after this merger takes place. Can that happen?

A. In theory, it could happen in states where there is state deposit insurance. In practice, it's most unlikely.

When a S&L drops Federal Savings & Loan Insurance Corp. coverage or a bank drop Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. coverage, depositors must be informed in advance.

Even then, federal deposit insurance does not stop immediately. It continues for two years on deposits existing at the date of insurance termination, less subsequent withdrawals. Also, federal deposit insurance remains in effect for all CDs, right up to their maturity dates.

I have to say your worries are misplaced. Any S&L or bank that drops federal deposit insurance would have to be run by a bunch of nitwits.

• • •

Q. A few years ago, I transferred $13,000 of my savings to a certificate of deposit for my grandson, in a gift to minors account. The CD will mature soon and, with accrued interest, is worth $16,000. My grandson has reached the age of majority and would like to return this money to me.

When I receive this, will I have to pay income tax on the $16,000, or just on the interest each year?

A. After the money is returned to you, you'll have to report as taxable income the interest it earns annually, whether you put it in a CD or any other place.

As you outline things, you made a $13,000 gift to your grandson and he's about to make a $16,000 gift to you. There's no income tax on gifts.

Your grandson will be required to file a federal gift tax return, as you were when you made the gift to him. But it's unlikely there's any gift tax liability.

A gift tax return is supposed to be filed on any gift of more than $10,000 — $20,000 when a married couple makes a gift jointly.

Sims, Craddick address taxing issues

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

The Texas Democrat admires the Texas Republican, and the Republican thinks highly of the Democrat.

However peculiar, the twain met in public and exchanged courtesies.

"I think Tom (Craddick) is one of the brightest stars we have in the Texas Legislature," Democratic Texas Sen. Bill Sims of San Angelo said of the Midland Republican state representative. "Tom tells it like it is."

Craddick and Sims were among the speakers on Monday at the Tax Assessor-Collectors Association of Texas 1986 annual conference in the Holiday Inn Holidome in Midland.

West Texas humorist Paul Patterson of Crane perked up a session with his wit and folksy humor, and tax consultant Don Rowlett of Austin lit into the serious and human side of tax collections and common courtesies.

Sims noted that "you can tell" that his friend Craddick "doesn't have an opponent" in this election year. "He talks about taxes. Those with opponents don't talk taxes."

Craddick, who was first elected to the Texas House of Representatives in 1968, spoke of rising taxes, reform in school discipline, cutbacks in spending, and the economy.

"THEY ARE GOING to have problems with the local tax base," Craddick said of Midland taxing boards. "The tax base is dwindling." He noted that people are leaving the community because of the oil slump and expiring jobs. "We've got empty houses," he said, "but nothing like Houston." He said Houston has "more empty office space than Philadelphia has office space."

To bolster the state budget, which is suffering due to depressed oil prices, Craddick said some people "advocate a corporate income tax."

Craddick doesn't. And he opposes any personal state income tax.

"I don't think you'll pass one without the other."

He said legislators would review the lottery and pari-mutuel horserace betting as generators of state revenue. Craddick, a Midland businessman, predicted that the Texas Legislature will "try to balance the budget" in 1987. Last year, the legislators "did a fair job" in cutting down the budget.

"The Texas Legislature is going to have to buckle down," he said, "and will discuss money and taxes, taxes, taxes, taxes, taxes and then corporate reform after that."

Sims predicted that Democratic Gov. Mark White, who is being challenged in the November general elections by former Gov. Bill Clements, a Republican, will not hold a special session of the Legislature in this election year to discuss taxes and the budget.

"WE ARE GOING to have a tax-increase," said the rancher-businessman. Even so, "We have to try every way in the world to do it (save money)."

Sims noted the responsibilities which state officials have in carrying out their duties. And if they are remiss in doing so, "Then we may have to get some other people to do it."

And he addressed waning school discipline and the importance of teaching and learning.

"You can't train a mule 'til you get its attention," the senator said.

Sims focused on two of his favorite topics: the land and its water.

Civilization this century virtually has ruined the land through mismanagement and overuse, and the influx of population and the failure to recycle water have placed burdens on water resources.

"We're always going to have a problem with water in West Texas," he said. Further, East Texas "is outgrowing its water."

"Texas has just about been denuded of (original) vegetation by us 'smart guys'" who exploit the land, allow its erosion and decline and dump "more dirt" into Texas rivers.

"We must be very aware of our environment."

"Nobody else can do it (conserve soil and water) but us," Sims said. "We've ruined it, and it's up to us to take care of it."

HUMORIST Paul Patterson tried his cowboy wit on the tax collectors and their staffs.

Patterson, a 77-year-old retired schoolteacher, playwright and author of the book "Crazy Women in the Rafters," made a play on the Biblical scripture "God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise."

"All I need," quipped Patterson, "is somebody foolish to confound."

He found humor in the legendary Billie Sol Estes, the Pecos businessman who made his fortune in nonexistent fertilizer tanks and wound up in prison and not so rich.

"Billie Sol Estes was supposed to deliver fertilizer but didn't," said Patterson. "I'm not supposed to deliver fertilizer and do."

He's tales and one-liners hit upon various subjects:

— "Speaking of keeping abreast of the times reminds me of Mae West," he said.

— "I know where I am," he said, "but I don't know who I am."

— "Every automobile I've owned since 1939 has come out with an air bag in the front seat."

— "Yesterday will be just as big a mystery as tomorrow."

— "Our neck of the greasewoods was chock-full of old bachelors."

— And he spoke of a "washed up cowboy but not washed off."

— Of former student Diana Earp of Crane, Patterson said after his talk: "I taught her more than I know myself."

Austin tax consultant Don Rowlett reminded the Texas tax collectors of the importance of courtesy in conducting their business.

"You can't talk ugly with a smile on your face," he said. "Smile and you can't talk ugly."

Customers — taxpayers — at the tax-office counter and on the telephone merit attention and courtesy, he said.

"The taxpayers are not an interruption of our work. They are the reason we are there."

"If people have the confidence to come to you, try to work with them," Rowlett warned of idle threats of prosecution of taxpayers who fail to pay taxes.

"If you say you are going to do something and don't do it, you have just lost the war."

Big Spring hospital bought by NHC

By RON GILMORE
Staff Writer

BIG SPRING — Ownership of Big Spring's only hospital, Malone-Hogan, has passed from a national hospital chain in Tennessee to yet another chain in Alabama, officials announced Monday afternoon.

"We purchased Malone-Hogan as part of a package from Hospital Corporation of America," said Cheri Kelly, assistant to the chairman of National Health Care Inc. The Dothan, Ala., firm bought the hospital and five others in a $41 million deal which closed Wednesday.

All of the hospitals, including one in Hillsboro, two in Alabama and one in Kentucky, are rural hospitals.

"We have certain criteria we look for when we are purchasing facilities," said Ms. Kelly. "We have had some success in 'turning around' rural hospitals. We seem to have found our niche."

According to Ms. Kelly, NHC prefers to expand in "communities where we can be the major provider of services."

"We also look at the amount of income, population and other statistics," she said.

She added that NHC had a history of making changes in the hospitals they acquired, but only in "the community's interest."

"We normally do make significant changes in the interest of the community," she said. "We'll investigate and assess the situation and then decide what must be done."

Ms. Kelly also said the firm rarely changes administrators or staff.

"We don't purchase a little rural hospital and then forget about them," she said.

Nor did she see any immediate changes in store for Malone-Hogan's alcohol/drug treatment center, which has aggressively sought the Midland-Odessa market.

"We have drug abuse programs, home health care agencies, pharmacies — all kinds of services," she said. "We'll just have to assess the situation."

According the Big Spring Herald, Steve Phelps, chairman of the board for NHC, the hospital purchase from HCA "was the result of a close relationship" and would involve "no drastic changes."

Negotiations for the purchase which took more than a month, followed a secret visit by two executive officers who traveled to Big Spring and "scouted the community," without identifying themselves.

"Their intention was to determine if Malone-Hogan served a viable market," said Phelps.

Joe Bohr, chief finance officer, was one of those investigating the purchase for NHC.

"We were quite pleased with Big Spring," he said. "We thought it was a good place to put our money."

One selling point, said Bohr, was the "good industry mix and diversification" in the city.

Bohr also said he considers Malone-Hogan to be "the prized apple of the bunch" out of NHC's new acquisitions.

"The hospital will be heavily marketed to the local community," he added.

NHC announced Wednesday it had signed a letter of intent to acquire Malone-Hogan. The four-state acquisition also includes seven medical office buildings and one home health agency.

In Midland, Physicians and Surgeon's Hospital administrator Dick Liley, said he was unfamiliar with NHC although he had heard of them.

P&S was previously owned by HCA, but was purchased in a joint venture between a group of local physicians and ClayDesta Corporation last year. Both P&S (formerly Parkview Hospital) and Malone-Hogan were sold by HCA as a result of a Federal Trade Commission ruling last year. HCA was ordered to divest itself of the two hospitals and others due to a monopoly situation.

Midland Memorial Hospital administrators were unavailable for comment.

Taylor County, Abilene may combine law enforcement

ABILENE (AP) — Taylor County authorities and officials in this West Texas city may combine law enforcement operations under one roof if adequate plans and funding for a facility can be obtained.

County commissioners were expected today to consider a proposal to deed part of an old store building to the city for use as a city police station.

County officials told the Abilene Reporter-News they probably can budget the money needed to renovate their part of the Thornton's building, which would become the sheriff's office.

Rick Childers, Abilene assistant city manager, said a fall bond election could raise their part of the renovation money.

County Judge Jess Holloway said the city would pay the architect's fee for renovations under the plan. The city and county would pay their own share of renovation costs.

Holloway said the sheriff's department would have the south end of the building and the Abilene police the north.

Commissioners will examine the proposal at today's 10 a.m. meeting.

The county presently has about $300,000 in its fiscal 1986 budget for new construction, said Holloway.

Abilene Police Chief Warren Dodson said the Thornton's location would give his department three times as much room as the present city hall location.

Taylor County Sheriff John Middleton said the present sheriff's department office, at the old county jail, has to maintain a 50-year-old building.

The county received the store property, worth about $1.5 million, in February as a gift.

Nominations open for Petroleum Hall of Fame

From Staff Reports

Nominations to the Petroleum Hall of Fame in Midland are now being taken for the fall election, according to Petroleum Museum president Russell J. Ramsland.

The deadline for receiving names, along with biographical sketches, is Monday, June 2. Those names received after the deadline will be held over until 1988.

Six persons, including the committee chairman, are appointed by the museum's governing boards to serve as members of the Hall of Fame Committee. This committee will review files of those persons whose names have been submitted as candidates.

According to the museum's by-laws, anyone, living or deceased, who has made "outstanding contributions to the development of the petroleum industry or has served as a worthy example to those in the industry" may be nominated to the Petroleum Hall of Fame. Four honorees are inducted at one time. A team or partnership is considered as one. Any associate, friend or family member may submit a candidate's name. Proposals may include newspaper clippings and letters of endorsement from others. Neither wealth, nor the absence of wealth, are considered as factors in the election.

In 1968, the late Frank T. Pickrell of El Paso, vice president and general manager of Texon Oil & Land Company, which drilled the Santa Rita No. 1, was elected as the initial honoree. Since then 64 men have been inducted into the nationally recognized Petroleum Hall of Fame. The 1986 election will be held in late fall. The inductees and their families, friends and associates will be honored at a dinner in spring, 1987.

Criteria and guidelines for submitting names of candidates may be obtained by contacting Mrs. Betty Orbeck, staff liaison member to the Petroleum Hall of Fame Committee, The Petroleum Museum, 1500 Interstate 20 West, Midland, 79701, 683-4403.

Midland man remains in critical condition

From Staff Reports

A 24-year-old Midland man injured early Saturday morning in a traffic accident remained in critical condition this morning, according to a Midland Memorial Hospital spokeswoman.

Ronald John Hardy, Route 7, Box 976, suffered internal injuries and broken bones after the 2:55 a.m. Saturday accident on State Highway 349 about 30 miles north of Midland in Martin County, according to the Department of Public Safety.

Police Roundup

Killed in the same accident was 25-year-old Franklin M. Smith, 1902 N. Midland Drive.

According to DPS reports, the two men were in a southbond 1983 GMC pickup when it left the road and overturned three times, ejecting them both.

In other reports, a 1985 Ford Tiempo valued at $10,000 was reported stolen Monday by Mary Salas from a location near 3329 W. Wadley, according to Midland police reports.

Gordon Brown, 1219 E. Jax, reported the loss of a $450 videocassette recorder, a $365 cable-converter box and a $200 remote-control unit in a Monday burglary, according to police reports.

Andy Mancha reported a burglary at 2309A W. College in which a $550 gas range with ovens was taken. The burglary occurred sometime between Friday and Saturday, reports said.

A Midland couple arrested Sunday remained jailed in lieu of bonds of $50,000 apiece after being charged Monday with possession of a controlled substance.

Benjamin Badillo Rodriguez, 27, and 23-year-old Olga Quiroz Rodriguez were arrested Sunday after sheriff's investigators found an unspecified amount of suspected cocaine in a home on County Road 1213 South, reports said.

Campaign for secession ripped Texas apart

Associated Press

The campaign for secession from the United States ripped Texas apart, and though at the advent of the Civil War many Texans fought to protect their land, it was because the Confederates gave them little choice.

Perhaps Sam Houston best symbolized this profound dilemma. Asked to take the oath of the Confederacy, then-Governor Houston sat quietly in the basement of the Capitol.

Presbyterian minister William Baker recounted the incident of March 16, 1861: "I remember as yesterday the thrice repeated call — 'Sam Houston! Sam Houston! Sam Houston!" but the man sat immovable, in his chair below, whittling steadily on." He soon was removed from office and replaced by Lt. Gov. Edward Clark.

Houston believed secession would bring "ruin and civil war." He foresaw the inevitable. But as historian Walter L. Buenger notes in his book "Secession and the Union in Texas," Houston soon came to feel that he could only side with his beloved Texas.

Although stating at one point, "I was for preserving the Union," he finally declared, "The time has come when a man's section is his country."

The victory of Abraham Lincoln and the Republicans in the presidential election of 1860 led to the secession of seven Southern states from the Union in the winter of 1860-61.

Slave-holding Southerners believed their plantation culture and economy would collapse with the new demands for freedom and equality that Lincoln championed.

Texas, which had only joined the Union in 1845, was the first state of the lower South to withdraw from the Union and become one of the Confederate States of America.

In this election, held on Feb. 23, the voters endorsed secession by 46,129 to 14,697. Support for secession was particularly strong in East Texas and along the Gulf Coast, where slaveowners were concentrated, historian Ralph A. Wooster says.

Opposition to secession, and ultimately to the war that followed, was strongest in two clusters of counties in central and north Texas, both frontier areas populated by non-slaveholders whose cultural roots were outside the Deep South — Germans in the central Texas counties and farmers in north Texas who had migrated from the upper Southern or Northern states.

In the civil war that followed, some Texas Unionists successfully withdrew from public life and remained neutral. But others, S.M. Swenson, the "father" of Swedish migration to Texas, and James P. Newcomb, editor of the "Alamo Express," among others, were virtually driven out of the state.

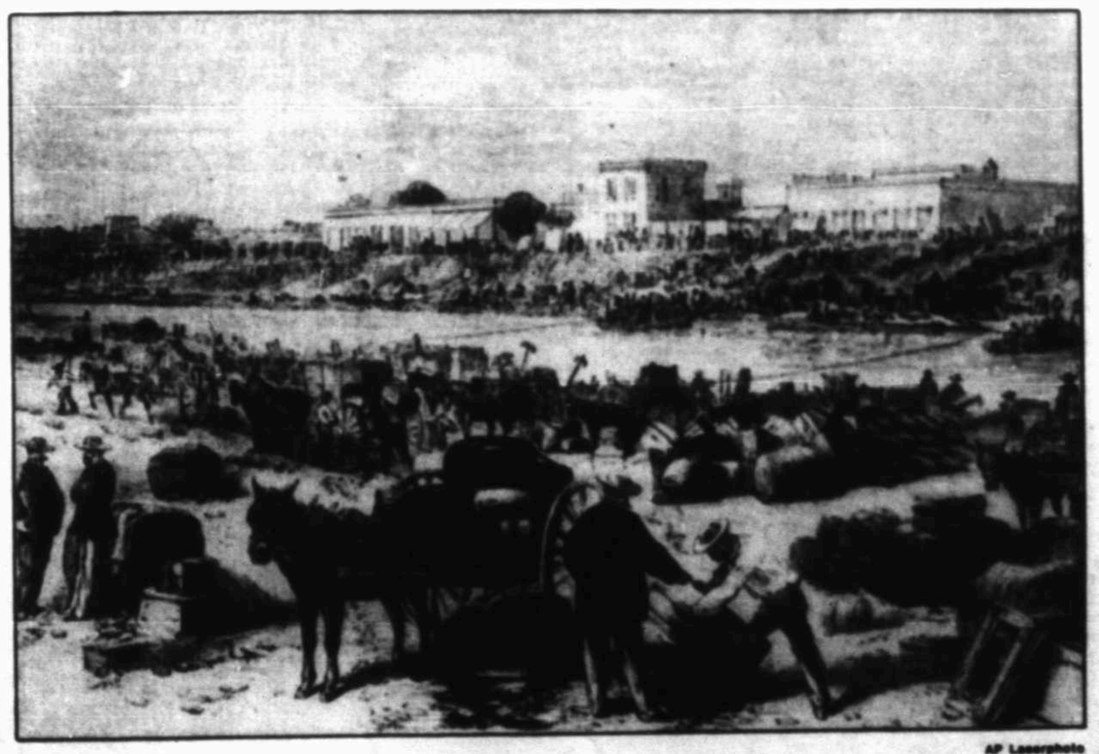

Edmund J. Davis, a district judge, recruited and organized what became the First Texas Cavalry Regiment in the Union army. Former congressman A.J. Hamilton made his way to Washington, where he later was appointed military governor of Texas.

But many Unionists, such as James W. Throckmorton, a convention delegate who had voted against secession, put their personal feelings aside and joined the Confederate Army.

More than 60,000 Texans served in the Confederate army, many on battlefields far from their home state.

Texan Albert Sidney Johnston was the highest-ranking field officer for the Confederates at the time of his death at Shiloh in April 1862. John B. Hood commanded one of the most highly regarded units in Robert E. Lee's army of Northern Virginia, Hood's Texas Brigade, and later was commander of the Army of Tennessee.

He is also survived by a brother-in-law, Dr. Danny Watts, formerly of Midland.

Checkpoints snare illegal aliens, narcotics

By DAVID SEDENO

FALFURRIAS (AP) — Rogelio Gonzalez sits in a customized mobile home, peering through binoculars at a line of cars and tractor-trailers on U.S. Highway 281.

Outside, colleague E.J. Olivarez, turning his head to avoid the blowing dust, walks to the driver's side of a car with tinted windows.

The driver rolls down the window and Olivarez, a U.S. Border Patrol agent, asks, "Where were you born?"

After a brief exchange, Olivarez looks inside the car. A minute later, his curiosity satisfied, he waves the car past him and motions the next one to proceed.

About 30 miles away, Border Patrol agents are doing the same work — checking cars, mobile homes, tractor-trailers and pickup trucks in search of illegal aliens.

The checkpoints, located 7 miles south of Falfurrias on U.S. 281 and 15 miles south of Sarita on U.S. 77, are viewed as backups by the U.S. Border Patrol.

Agents at the two stations are supposed to catch illegal aliens who made it past agents in the Rio Grande Valley, about 100 miles south.

Agents continuously arrest illegal aliens walking near the checkpoints and hiding in trucks and cars. Recently, the agents have been involved in confiscating narcotics.

The job is dangerous because smugglers — whether they're hauling narcotics or illegal aliens — are frequently armed, authorities say. Fortunately, they add, no one has been hurt.

"The agent is exposed out there as he is checking the traffic," said Silvestre Reyes, chief of the McAllen Border Patrol sector which controls the two checkpoints. "Really, you don't know what the next vehicle coming up will be carrying. It could be somebody smuggling narcotics, somebody smuggling illegal aliens."

Relying on their experience, agents ask personal questions, listen to people's speech, look at their clothing and check inside and around their vehicles.

They also may ask for identification and to see inside the trunk or trailer. Jokes about how many illegal aliens or pounds of narcotics are in the trunk aren't tolerated, nor is lying about citizenship.

"They know what to look for," said supervisory agent Al Martinez. "Something always gives them away."

The McAllen sector checkpoints are among five permanent stations on highways leading from the Texas-Mexico border.

During the past six months, the McAllen sector arrested 52,000 illegal aliens and confiscated nearly $33 million in narcotics.

The Falfurrias station netted 3,600 illegal aliens and seized $19.2 million in narcotics. The Sarita station had nearly 8,000 arrests and $5.6 million in narcotics seizures, authorities said.

The Falfurrias station quadrupled its narcotics seizures from the same period last year and the Sarita station nearly tripled it.

Illegal aliens try to circumvent the checks by going around the highway, but many times they trip sensors that alert agents, Reyes said.

"The checkpoints are an integral part of our enforcement strategy which means that illegal alien smugglers are going to try to circumvent them," Reyes said. "They'll try and hide their illegal-alien cargo in trucks or vans or different types of compartments. And it's a stimulating challenge to the officer to work under those type of conditions."

Once outside the area, illegal aliens or narcotics traffickers have numerous routes from which to choose to avoid authorities.

During the past year in Falfurrias agents seized 281 pounds of cocaine hidden in a false compartment in a tractor-trailer and more than 2,000 pounds of marijuana hidden under 600 bales of onions in another big rig.

Those arrested almost never put up a fight.

"When they get caught they're real calm. Usually almost all of them have records and they don't want to make it worse on themselves," Gonzalez said.

The narcotics arrests and seizures are seen as a mixed blessing. Falfurrias residents recently said they feared their community would get negative notoriety because of record seizures in the area. U.S. 281 has been dubbed by some as "Marijuana Highway," Martinez said.

In Sarita, however, more money is being pumped into the economy because of cash and vehicles confiscated.

"Some people say Falfurrias is getting a bad reputation because of the narcotics, but actually it's good because we are getting the seizures," said Martinez, agent in charge of the Falfurrias station. "In a way, I think it makes Falfurrias look good."

The Falfurrias station — located off a two-lane highway — is staffed and cars are checked 24 hours a day, except during bad weather.

The Sarita station — located off a four-lane, divided highway — does not have set hours of operation.

"Many people do know it's here," said Martinez. "They think we get so much traffic and they know you aren't going to check every single vehicle. So they're saying, 'I'm going to be one of the lucky ones that can't be caught'."

In late 1863, Lt. Dick Dowling and only a few Houston Irishmen overcame extraordinary odds and defeated a large Union military force attempting to take Sabine Pass on the Texas coast. In effect, Dowling's group halted a federal invasion of the state.

The last battle of the war was fought in Texas at Palmito Ranch near Brownsville on May 13, 1865, when Confederates commanded by John S. Ford defeated Union forces trying to capture Fort Brown, Wooster recounts.

From captured prisoners, Ford learned Gen. Lee had surrendered at Appomattox Courthouse in Virginia more than a month earlier.

Texans, like the rest of the nation, now faced the task of healing a society fractured by war.

Budget shortfall threatens colleges' quest for excellence

By PETER APPLEBOME
New York Times News Service

HOUSTON — A few years ago, Texas universities were the talk of American education — ambitious, oil-rich behemoths that were making a conspicuous effort to establish citadels of academic excellence capable of challenging the nation's best schools.

But with Texas facing a $1.3 billion budget shortage, the state's universities are confronting a new era of spending cuts, relatively flat faculty salaries and construction curbs. And the state's top schools are having difficulty filling some of the endowed faculty positions created with such fanfare only a few years ago.

At the least, officials say, the budget crunch brought on by falling oil prices will mean lowered expectations, reduced resources and perhaps closings or consolidations of smaller, less-known campuses. At the most, it could derail the hopes for greatness that institutions like the University of Texas at Austin and Texas A&M University in College Station built up in the boom years.

"I think we're at a crossroads in education," said the state's commissioner of higher education, Kenneth H. Ashworth. "We can't go on limping along at the level of state support we have for this year. Texas is in danger of slipping out of the mainstream of American higher education."

The situation is a radical change from the heady days of the early 1980s when the University of Texas and Texas A&M were getting nationwide attention for adding endowed positions and luring big-name scholars from top schools across the country.

Texas' problems result from at least three causes, officials say. The most conspicuous is the decline in oil prices that has ravaged the state budget. The second is an educational structure in which campuses were created as much for political as educational reasons, resulting in what many officials say is a bloated, redundant university system that is draining resources.

The third is the state's historic aversion to financing social programs, which places it near the bottom nationally in per capita social spending.

Faculty salaries at state universities have sunk 4.4 percent below the national average after catapulting above the national average in the boom.

Total state spending for education in the current budget in Texas rose by only 3 percent, one of the lowest rates in the nation.

Colleges and universities this year were asked to comply with Gov. Mark White's request for a 13 percent cut in spending by state agencies. That has meant hiring freezes, minimal salary increases and other cuts throughout the system.

With other states like California, Michigan, Massachusetts and Illinois making a renewed commitment to higher education, Texas is in danger of losing the momentum it gained in recent years, officials say. For smaller campuses, the effects could be dramatic.

Dr. Robert L. Jones, vice president for administration at the University of Texas at Tyler, a campus of 3,500 students in eastern Texas, said the school is already losing faculty and contemplating program cuts. "At a small school, when you take that percentage cut, you really erode your resources," he said.

For other state schools, the effects could mean more than budget trims. Officials say there is a huge amount of duplication among the 100 publicly supported colleges and universities, eight medical schools and three dental schools that can no longer be afforded.

Man released after girl admits lying about rape

HOUSTON (AP) — A Houston man who spent 10 months in jail was cleared of charges after a 10-year-old girl admitted she accused him of rape to distract her mother from a poor report card, his lawyer said.

Prosecutors on Monday dropped the charge of aggravated sexual assault of a child against 33-year-old Michael Chandler.

In an August trial, Chandler was convicted of sexually assaulting his former girlfriend's 10-year-old daughter. He was jailed in April after the girl alleged he had raped her Dec. 28, 1984.

State District Judge I.D. McMaster sentenced Chandler to eight years in prison.

Chandler remained jailed until Feb. 4, the day after the girl's mother called defense attorney Wayne Hill to say her daughter had lied.

"The girl had come to her crying, wanting to make right what she had done at the trial," Hill said.

Hill said the girl told her mother the lie because she had a bad report card from school and wanted to distract her.

Chandler said he remembered watching a television program with the girl about sexual abuse of children and said he thought that might be where she got the idea to accuse him.

He said juries are all too ready to believe the complaining witnesses in such cases. "The deck is stacked against you," he said.

The girl's testimony was the only conclusive evidence during the trial. Since she didn't report the alleged rape until months later, a doctor could not tell whether she had been raped.

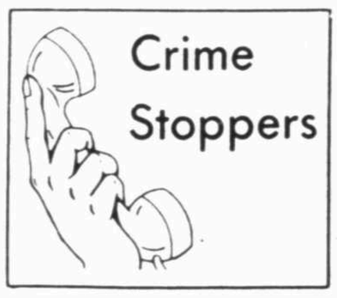

Crime Stoppers seeks data on woman's attempted murder

This week Crime Stoppers is seeking information about the attempted murder of an Odessa woman.

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — Ector County sheriff's and police narcotics deputies acting on a Crime Stoppers tip Monday afternoon raided a residence in far West Odessa, confiscated a quantity of narcotics, recovered some stolen property and arrested a man and two women, according to police reports.

Police spokesman John McAhon said Peace Justice R.G. Hungerford Friday issued a search warrant based on information from a Crime Stoppers' tip.

McAhon said officers, who executed the warrant about 2:25 p.m. Monday, arrested a 33-year-old man, a 30-year-old woman and a 20-year-old woman. They were scheduled to be arraigned in municipal court late this morning on drug possession charges.

Raiding officers found about a half ounce of a substance believed to be methamphetamine with an estimated street value of $3,000, McAhon said, as well as "a couple of hits of acid," with a street value of about $100. Officers also recovered a three-wheeled off-road vehicle reported stolen earlier in Andrews County.

Two of the suspects were arrested on charges of possession of methamphetamines and the 20-year-old woman was jailed for possession of LSD.

The Monday afternoon raid occurred in the 12000-block of Citation in far West Odessa.

Defense claims witness not held against his will

KERRVILLE (AP) — Defense attorneys in the organized crime trial of a Hill Country rancher and two others accused of kidnapping drifters and forcing them into slavery have challenged the implication that a prosecution witness was held at the ranch against his will.

On trial are Walter Wesley Ellebracht Sr., his son, Walter Wesley Ellebracht Jr., and former ranch worker Carlton Robert Caldwell. They are accused of conspiring to commit aggravated kidnapping and murder in connection with the death of Anthony Bates at the Ellebracht Ranch in March 1984.

Daryl Hunsacker, a prosecution witness who has been on the stand since last week, has testified about alleged torture sessions at the ranch. He has said he was forced by the Ellebrachts to stay at the ranch.

Defense attorneys implied that Hunsacker could have escaped from the ranch if he had wished.

The junior Ellebracht's attorney, Ray Bass, introduced a receipt that the elder Ellebracht got when he and Hunsacker went to a large San Antonio store to have a chainsaw repaired.

"It was a big warehouse and weren't there a lot of people inside?" Bass asked. "It was easy to get lost in there — lots of people, lots of machinery to hide behind."

Hunsacker said he was too scared to tell anyone about his ordeal or to try to escape.

Bass played several short segments of recordings of alleged torture sessions, some using electric cattle prods, at the ranch that Hunsacker admitted taking part in. Hunsacker was asked to identify the voices on the tape, which was filed with screams, threats and sexual references.

At one point, Richard "Racehorse" Haynes associate Dan Cogdell loaded a cattle prod with batteries and told Hunsacker to step down from the stand during cross-examination.

Haynes is representing the senior Ellebracht.

"Come on down here," Cogdell said, readying the prod.

"No! Not while you have that in your hands," Hunsacker insisted.

"No, I want you to hold it," Cogdell said.

But Hunsacker refused, and at least a dozen courtroom spectators applauded when Judge Thomas Blackwell denied Cogdell's request.

Court was recessed about 5 p.m., soon after the outburst.

Cogdell said he had intended to have Hunsacker shock him. "It's inherently incredible that he (Hunsacker) can sit up there and talk about how he participated in torture sessions for five days and then turn around and claim he wasn't responsible for the death of Bates," Cogdell said.

"I wanted him to demonstrate on me the truth or untruth of his inconsistency. I went to college and I was in a fraternity. I got shocked by a prod and I'm still here."

Judge administers lawyer's oath to wife

AUSTIN (AP) — Katherine Kelley-Miller is a new Texas lawyer, thanks to an oath administered by her husband, Judge Chuck Miller of the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals.

An enthusiastic kiss accompanied the judicial ceremony Monday in the staid surroundings of the state's highest court of criminal appeals.

Presiding Judge John F. Onion said it was the first time in the 90-year history of the court for a judge's wife to become a lawyer.

"I wish we had a videotape of this for the records," Onion said as the special session of the court ended.

Later, at the Frank Erwin Special Events Center, at the University of Texas, Chief Justice John Hill of the Texas Supreme Court swore in 670 other new lawyers who passed the State Bar exams last February.

Miller told the special appellate court session that his wife's legal education has not been without incident.

For one thing, Miller said, she missed one semester because of an automobile accident in which she suffered several broken bones "but six months later she took and passed the bar exams."

And then in the last semester the Millers' house burned down, the judge said.

"It has been quite an experience," he said.

Mrs. Miller, 30, said she will continue her present employment as an assistant in the Travis County attorney's office.

Among those at the larger ceremony was Paul Alexander, 40, who has been paralyzed from the neck down since he was 6. He has spent much of his life in an iron lung. Much of his time now is spent in a wheelchair.

He took the oath Monday from his wheelchair.

Alexander has worked periodically for State Rep. Alvin Granoff, D-Dallas, in Austin.

Arms proposal result of 'Star Wars', expert says

HOUSTON (AP) — The recent Soviet arms reductions proposal in Geneva is a dividend paid from the United States' research into the so-called "Star Wars" defense program, the director of that program says.

"It's not the kind of reduction proposals that are even, but it is a reduction proposal," Air Force Lt. Gen. James A. Abrahamson said.

In an address Monday to The Forum Club of Houston, Abrahamson said the Soviets also are keeping up the debate about the Strategic Defense Initiative "to help talk ourselves out of it.

"When they talk about the dangers...they are aiming at public reaction," he said.

Abrahamson took issue with the nickname "Star Wars," saying it is damaging American public perception of the project.

He said surveys show 60 to 70 percent of Americans support construction of a defense system to protect them from enemy missiles. However, as soon as the term "Star Wars" is introduced in the question, support dwindles to 40 to 50 percent, he said.

"There you can see the danger of the 'Star Wars' label on the program," he said.

Abrahamson's 45-minute address to 600 people was interrupted briefly by about a half-dozen hecklers who burst into the hotel ballroom, chanted slogans and threw what appeared to be flour on several of the people in the audience.

"Prevent World War III no matter what it takes!" one of them shouted.

"That is what we're about," an unruffled Abrahamson said after the protesters fled. "What is the real area of concern here is what is the right means in order to achieve that end. I don't mind that."

He said the goal of the system is to shift the nation's priorities from offensive weapons to defensive weapons.

"We have a gun pointed at the forehead of the Soviet Union with our finger on the trigger and vice versa they have a gun getting bigger and more powerful and more potent and their finger is on that trigger aimed at us as well," he said. "We have been relying for several decades on this concept that this is stability, that this is the best way to preserve this society. That is what the president is starting to question."

Abrahamson said the program also is designed to destroy Soviet missiles on the way up and before they reach the United States.

"We would like to find the technical means and destroy them there," he said. Other facets of the system would build a layer of protection and a "clean-up hitter" to remove any missiles which might get through, he said.

Lasers "equal to two or three sticks of dynamite" are being researched because they are able to speed thousands of miles very quickly, Abrahamson said. A Titan missile was destroyed within two seconds in tests at White Sands, N.M., but "we've got to do much better than that" because the Soviets already have six to 10 ground lasers equal to the White Sands one, he said.

"When they say they say they are not embarked on this kind of research, it's a little disingenuous," according to Abrahamson.

He put the cost of the U.S. research at $25 billion to $30 billion and said a decision whether to implement the system will need to be made by the early 1990s.

Playboy victim of 'sexual McCarthyism', Hefner says

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Playboy magazine founder Hugh Hefner says the popular men's publication has been the victim of "sexual McCarthyism," and Playboy Enterprises Inc. is suing U.S. Attorney General Edwin Meese and his Commission on Pornography.

"We're talking about the suppression of images and ideas with which some small portion of the population disagrees," Hefner said Monday. "If we start doing that in our society we're talking about something very, very scary."

Playboy accuses the defendants of acting to censor and suppress distribution of Playboy through a blacklist. The American Booksellers Association and the Council on Periodical Distributors Associations joined in the suit filed Friday in U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia.

The lawsuit accuses the commission of sending letters to bookstores and major drug and convenience store chains in February, notifying them they had been identified as vendors or distributors of pornography.

Playboy contends Southland Corp., parent company of 7-Eleven stores, as well as Thrifty Corp., People's Drug Stores, Rite Aid Drug Stores and other retailers and distributors stopped selling Playboy after receiving the letter from Alan E. Sears, executive director of the Commission on Pornography.

"When a federal official makes this type of statement the great majority of the population doesn't realize...it's a moral position," Hefner said. "It's a form a sexual McCarthyism."

Named as defendants were Meese, Sears, the 11-member commission, Ralph E. Kennickell, Jr., public printer of the United States and Donald E. Fossedal, federal superintendent of documents.

Neither the attorney general nor the commission had any comment on the lawsuit, said spokesmen in Washington.

In a letter dated Feb. 11, Sears said the commission had received testimony indicating the recipients allegedly were involved in the sale or distribution of pornography.

The lawsuit alleges the letter threatened and intimidated those who received it. It also contends the commission intends to publicize a list of people and companies identified as distributors of pornography with the expectation that it would bring social and economic pressure on those listed.

The lawsuit seeks to stop the commission from issuing such a list. It also seeks a court order compelling the commission to advise recipients of the letter that the commission does not consider Playboy obscene and does not contend they could be prosecuted for handling it. It also seeks unspecified monetary damages.

Hefner said he didn't know how much money Playboy had lost.

Hefner contends the commission's action is an outgrowth of a campaign by the Rev. Donald Wildmon, executive director of the National Federation for Decency. The United Methodist minister from Tupelo, Miss. testified before the commission.

Meese formed the Commission on Pornography a year ago.

State highways can't be named after persons

AUSTIN (AP) — The reason the state highway commission doesn't name roads, bridges, streets or highways for a person — living or dead — is simple: It's against the law.

The Legislature enacted the law in 1971, four years after the commission had adopted the prohibition as department policy.

Although the law prohibits signs other than numbered signs along a roadway, the highway department may erect special sign-names at entrances or intersections.

For example, in Austin, Loop 360 is known locally as the Capital of Texas Highway, and the department can erect Capital of Texas Highway signs at entrances or intersections for guidance. But only the numbered sign, Loop 360, may appear along the loop.

Also, local governments may furnish memorial markers to the highway department, which can be placed in areas "most suitable to the department's maintenance operation." This would include rest areas or scenic overlooks.

In an effort to find out why the department needed a policy or law against certain highway signs, inquiries were made to a dozen current and former highway officials, including Dewitt Greer.

Greer, 83, joined the department in 1927 and later served on the highway commission, retiring in February 1981. His knowledge of Texas highways is encyclopedic.

Nevertheless, asked why the prohibition came into being, Greer said, "I don't remember. Count me out."

Others, such as Dr. C.V. Wootan of the Texas Transportation Institute at Texas A&M University and Gene Robbins, former president of the Texas Good Roads Association, also drew blanks.

Still others, however, speculated that the department was getting too many requests to name highways for prominent persons.

"It was probably decided that it was a good thing to have a law to keep jokers from getting roads named after them when they were going off the commission. They have a tendency to try to perpetuate themselves," said one longtime commission observer who asked that his name not be used.

"It was probably decided that it was a good thing to have a law to keep jokers from getting roads named after them when they were going off the commission. They have a tendency to try to perpetuate themselves," said one longtime commission observer who asked that his name not be used.

One person's memory and a highway department memorandum indicate that it was a case of too many applications from local communities.

"There were so many applications, yes," said John Waller, who retired in 1967 as chief engineer for maintenance operations.

One who followed Waller in that job, Byron Blaschke, wrote all district engineers in May 1982, "We are receiving a considerable number of requests by local governments to name highway routes in honor of or as a memorial to someone and to have the name appear on highway signs."

Blaschke called attention to the law, the commission's 1967 order and the Manual of Uniform Traffic Control Devices, which states that any "unauthorized sign placed on the highway right-of-way by a private organization or individual constitutes a public nuisance. All unofficial and non-essential signs should be removed."

"It is very important that the use of highway names on expressway and freeway guide signs be consistent throughout the state," Blaschke said. "Such signs are highly visible to the traveling public, and if they are improperly used, it becomes very difficult to explain to another organization, group, or elected representative why other similar signs cannot be erected."

Archie Sherrod, who retired as chief engineer of maintenance operations in 1977, said, "If every highway was named after somebody, there would be an awful lot of signing, and it would be very expensive."

Not to mention confusing.

Chief maintenance engineer Milton Dietert said, "We need something out there continuous for the motorist to follow. If we signed names, our maps would change continuously."

The law seems to work because apparently there have been no attempts to change it.

"I don't see how you can have a better system," said Robbans, the former Good Roads president.

Laredo readies for Frontier Days

LAREDO (AP) — A fiesta commemorating the founding of this border city and a victory for the Mexican Army includes a parade through downtown, a rattlesnake roundup and outdoor dancing.

The annual Frontier Days on Friday, Saturday and Sunday will also feature an arts and crafts fair at the Laredo Civic Center.

A parade will leave City Hall Square at 10 a.m. Saturday and wind its way to the civic center.

Officials said the fiesta will showcase many elements of the border culture. Scheduled are a contest for the longest, heaviest and shortest rattlesnake and a performance by the Ballet Folkloric De Laredo.

The fiesta, sponsored by the Laredo Mexican American Chamber of Commerce, starts at 3:30 p.m. Friday at the civic center with a trade fair including arts and crafts exhibits and food concessions.

Events the rest of the afternoon will feature clowns, a rattlesnake roundup, games including a boot run, and comedians.

An outdoor dance at 9 p.m. Friday will include music by Johnny Rodriguez.

The Ballet Folkorico will perform at 7 p.m. Saturday at the civic center. Martin High School Ballet Folklorico will perform at 7:30 p.m. Sunday.

A battle of the conjuntos bands is planned along with an outside dance at 8 p.m. Sunday.

The celebration commemorates the founding of Laredo on May 15, 1755, by Don Tomas Sanchez, an officer with the Royal Army of Spain; and the Cinco de Mayo (5th of May) battle between the French and Mexican armies on May 5, 1862.

Columba Bush, daughter-in-law of Vice President George Bush, will be honored at Frontier Days and be named Alcaldesa de la Villa de San Agustin. The Alcaldesa is the mayor.

Cardinal stakes its reputation on quality commercial electric systems

When Midland County Courthouse was remodeled in 1972, Cardinal Electric Company, 2800 W. Front, did the electrical work. When you need a company that can handle a commercial-size job, call Cardinal, 683-5138.

It's experience that counts

Cardinal Electric Company, a 21-year-old Midland firm, has built its reputation on quality electrical service for commercial projects. From the engineering and design phase all the way through to routine service work, Cardinal has established its name as one of the best in the field.

There's a great deal of difference between electrical systems for residential construction and that for commercial buildings. Cardinal's team of experts has dealt solely with commercial installations since the business was started in 1965.

Companies both in the Permian Basin and beyond have called on Cardinal for commercial electrical systems. The company has been called to projects throughout North, South, East and West Texas, as well as Oklahoma.

In Midland, Cardinal Electric Company has provided the expertise and skill needed to complete and service the electrical systems in a great number of commercial-size projects.

When the extensive remodeling was done at the Midland County Courthouse in 1972, Cardinal Electric did the electrical work. This is just one example of the magnitude of work that this Midland firm is prepared to handle.

Cardinal also did the electrical system for the City Hall and the Deparment of Public Safety building. In addition, Cardinal's expertise was called upon when the Midland Air Terminal was remodeled.

The list goes on and on. Public buildings, privately-owned commercial buildings, in-town and out-of-town projects show the expertise and reliability of Cardinal Electric Company.

In addition, Cardinal's Commercial Service Department offers service on all types of commercial buildings, whether Cardinal did the original electrical system or not.

For unmatched expertise and friendly service you can count on Cardinal Electric. You'll find the experts at 2800 W. Front, 683-5138, Monday-Friday, 8 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Cloud 9: If your furniture isn't becoming to you then it should be coming to us

Harry Rawlings, owner of Cloud 9 Fine Upholstery at 4313-A W. Illinois, points out that having quality furniture re-upholstered can be considerably more economical than buying new furniture of high quality. Re-upholstery can also help people enjoy family heirlooms for years and years. Whatever your reason for having upholstery work done, make sure you get the quality craftmanship your furniture merits, go to Cloud 9 Upholstery.

Years of experience go into Harry Rawlings work. In 1963, when Rawlings was working as a park ranger at Yosemite, he began doing upholstery work as a hobby. Rawlings said that his furniture became old and "dilapidated." The Rawlings lived at the park, and "it was so hard to transport it to town, I thought, 'What the heck, I'll do it myself,' " Rawlings said.

By the time he finished his own chair and sofa, Rawlings said the neighbors had begun to say, "Well maybe this old boy has got something going." The work began to pour in.

Finally, Rawlings left the park and bought a shop on the coast. He worked with several master craftsmen and learned even more about quality upholstery work. While in California Rawlings and his wife did upholstery and drapery work for a number of celebrities.

If you watch Rawlings work you won't be surprised that he is well known as a fine crafstman.

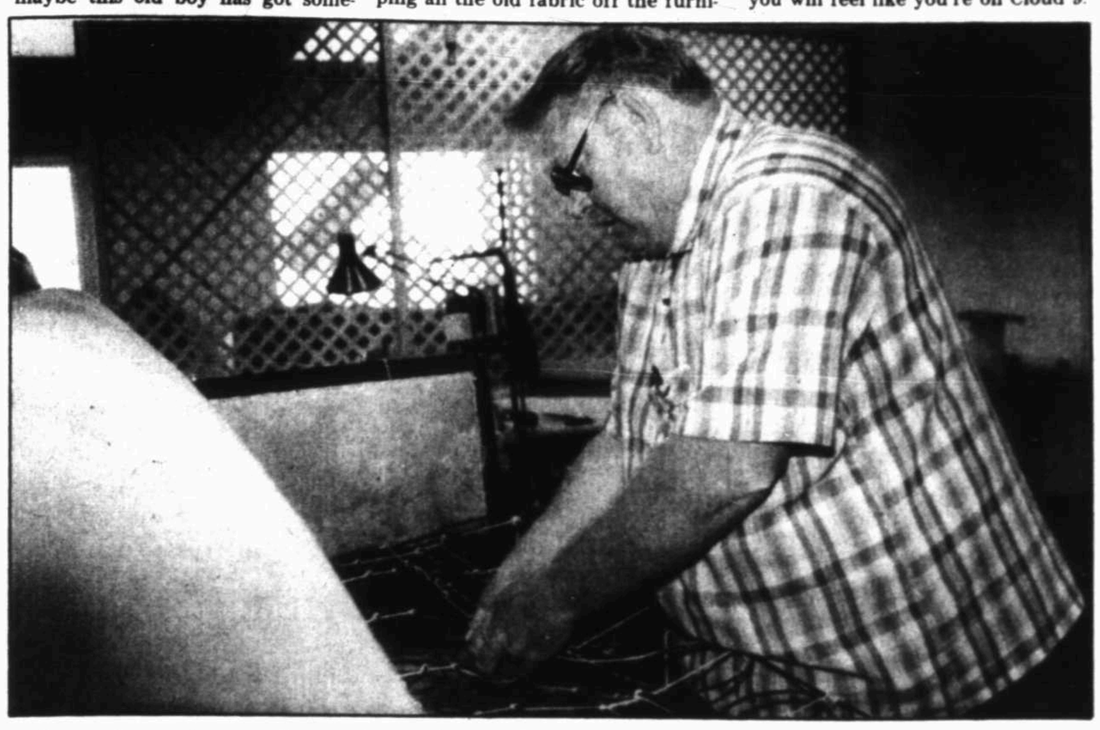

He has a wide selection of quality fabrics for his customers. Some fabric is in stock and designs that must be order will generally arrive within a few days. Once a customer has selected a fabric Rawlings can give an estimate. To assure accuracy he will make an appointment to go to the customer's home and see the furniture to be covered. (He does offer free pickup and delivery.)

When he is ready to start work he picks up the furniture and takes it to the shop. Then, he begins by stripping all the old fabric off the furniture. With the frame exposed he begins rebuilding the furniture. Webbing, springs and padding are checked. If this process reveals problems that could not be seen when the estimate was given, Rawlings will call his client to get approval on additional work. Webbing can be replaced, springs re-tied, more padding can be added and the frame can be strengthened. So that when Rawlings finishes in three to four days, the item will look AND feel like a new piece of furniture.

Headboards, cornice boards, lawn chairs, office panels and walls can even be professionally upholstered at Cloud 9.

Rawlings is usually in the shop from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m., but it is best to call 694-1480 or 697-7306 before you go. He may have to be out giving an estimate. This way keeps overhead down, thus offering his customers quality work at reasonable rates.

Best of all, when you sit on a piece of furniture that Rawlings has done, you will feel like you're on Cloud 9.

Years of experience go into each upholstery job Harry Rawlings does at Cloud 9 Fine Upholstery, 4313-A W. Illinois. Call 694-1480 for more information.

Lanham's Nursery and Landscape Supply has variety of sod in stock

Lanham's Nursery, Midland's headquarters for flowering plants, trees, shrubs and landscape supplies, now has sod in stock for you.

Bermuda, Fescue and Raliegh St. Augestine grass are available for you to choose from. Lanham's has a wide variety of the most popular Bermuda grasses. If you prefer a St. Augestine grass, registered landscape architect Bob Lanham recommends Raliegh St. Augestine. In tests conducted at Texas A&M University Raleigh survived at temperatures 5 - 10 F degrees colder than other varieties of St. Augustine. After the cold weather of winter, Raleigh recovers more rapidly than other varieties, quickly resuming its characteristic rich green color. Thus, this disease-resistant, cold hearty grass is highly suitable for Texas lawns.

Lanham Nursery and Landscape Supply is careful to stock a wide variety of plants that are native to this area or well adapted to dry conditions.

Lanham's has a colorful variety of flowering plants that will really brighten up your yard. They even have hanging plants in baskets.

Bob has a few hints for those who have been working hard to make their yard an enjoyable place to be.

First, he says be sure and watch for bettles, aphids, fleas and ticks. Because of the warm winter the insects are out in full force. Lanham Nursery, Midland's complete landscape supply store, has a wide selection of insecticides, including ready-to-use insecticides and herbicides for the home owner that doesn't like mixing concentrated chemicals and water.

It's also time to fertilize, Bob says. Using a fertilizer which has added iron or sulfur will help keep grass green longer.

Bob also reminds people not to water in the middle of the day. The combination of sun and harsh water may cause leaf burn or death. Watering early or late in the day will also limit the amount of evaporation.

In addition to healthy plants and helpful hints, Lanham's is proud to offer a wide variety of medium and commercial grade tools. Nancy Lanham says they offer quality tools that a homeowner can depend on for a lifetime. Shovels, rakes, Nelson sprinklers and supplies, hoses and hose repair kits are just a few of the items you will find. Lanham's has one shovel that is guaranteed for a lifetime.

One thing that makes Lanham's different from many nurseries is that it does have a complete stock of landscape supplies including stepping stones, flower bed edging, steel edging, landscape rock, railroad ties and boulders.

Even PVC parts are kept in stock so if you have a problem with your sprinkler system on Saturday or Sunday, you don't have to wait until Monday to get the needed parts.

Bob announces that very soon they will have a special chemical in stock which will remove grass without damaging shrubs or ground cover plants. This is a real break through, so stop by the store for details.

You will always find a knowledgeable person on hand at Lanham's Nursery and Landscape Supply to answer your questions. In addition, Lanham's has a complete rack of free gardening tip materials. If you have a question about your yard, you'll probably find the answer on this rack of helpful hints.

Lanham's Nursery and Landscape Supply is open Monday through Saturday from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. and Sunday from noon to 5:30 p.m.

Quality Automotive Repair certainly lives up to its name

One of the most frustrating experiences of any car owner is trying to find a good mechanic that will give them a fair deal. And, with all the new electronic auto gadgets it's hard to know whether or not you are being treated fairly. At Quality Automotive Repair, 607 S. Big Spring, you can count on owner Hank Petrilla to be honest and fair with you.

Hank, who has close to 15 years of experience as a mechanic with much of that time being spent in the oil field, opened the shop in November, 1985. He says they pride themselves in doing good work, whether the repair is minor or major, for a domestic or foreign automobile.

Though price is important, there's more to a fair deal than that. A cheap price for cheap parts and slip-shod work is hardly a bargain. That's why Quality Automotive Repair uses the name brand parts, recommended by each auto manufacturer. And, when Quality does a tune-up, you get more than a new set of spark plugs.

The experts at Quality Automotive Repair are also careful in their diagnosis of your car's problem. Hank explains that many customers have mistaken a rough ride as evidence that a tune-up was needed. Though this is true in many cases, in newer models it may indicate that there is a electronic component failure. For that reason Hank says, "We are trying to educate the public about the problems involved with these new computer cars."

Hank has completed a training school and is constantly attending auto seminars to be able to skillfully repair cars with electronic components.

The people at Quality Automotive Repair realize that doing without your car while it is being repaired is tremendously inconvenient. For that reason, they make every effort to get your car out by 5:30 the day you bring it into the shop. Parts may slow this down, but you can count on them to do their best.

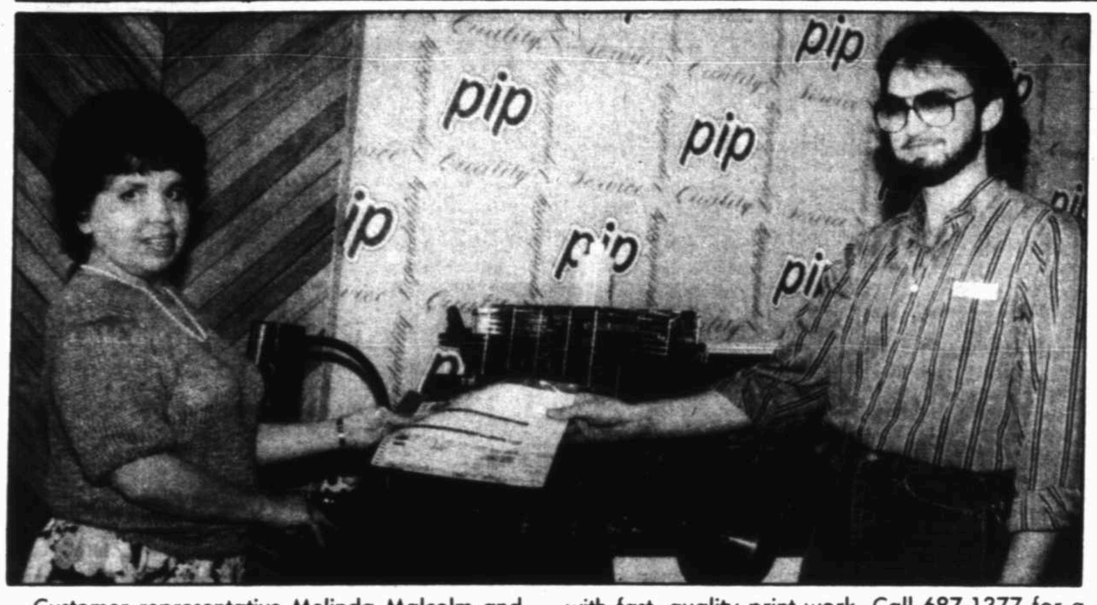

Hank says they open each morning at 7:30 and close at 5:30 p.m. Quality Automotive Repair's convenient location just a few blocks from downtown makes it easy to drop your car or pickup off on the way to work. However they also offer free pick-up (unless towing is necessary) and delivery service.

Of course, their prices are also fair. "They'll get a fair deal out of it. I think most of the time if they'll compare our prices, we're comparable or a little less expensive," Hank says. To make payment even easier, MasterCard and VISA are accepted.

Estimates are free, so next time you need a tune-up or repair work done, go to Quality Automotive Repair. You'll find they certainly live up to their name.

The experts at Quality Automotive Repair, 607 S. Big Spring, are determined to give you timely, outstanding service at a fair price. If you want to know you're being treated fairly, go to Quality.

Customer representative Melinda Malcolm and manager Rayburn Davis at P.I.P. Instant Printing, 409 Andrews Highway, are ready to assist you with fast, quality print work. Call 687-1377 for a free quote on your next printing job.

There is no job too large or small for P.I.P. Instant Printing

What do you think of when someone mentions a quick printer?

Lots of Xerox copies in a flash?

Well, Jack Hampton owner of P.I.P. Instant Printing in Midland says, that's partially right. However, that's only the beginning of the list of services which PIP offers.

In addition to quality Xerox copies, P.I.P. offers offset printing.

"With a modern Itek plate maker and an AB Dick offset press, our staff can handle anything from 25 copies of a one-page resume to 20,000 copies of a two-sided flyer," Hampton explains.

The people at P.I.P. are problem solvers as well. If you need to put together a flyer for a campaign or a booklet for your organization, they'll help you plan it.

P.I.P. prints envelopes, post cards, business cards, letterheads, invitations, tickets, invoices, NCR (carbonless) forms, booklets, reports, church bulletins, newsletters and more.

Then when the printing is complete, PIP can meet all your binding needs. Folding, collating, drilling, cutting, stapling and padding can all be handled by P.I.P.'s experts.

"New customers are often surprised at the wide range of services we offer," Hampton says.

The fact is no job is too large or too small for PIP.

Whatever the printing job is, you can depend on P.I.P. to do quality work.

Moreover, P.I.P. is committed to delivering quality printing work on a timely basis. P.I.P. meets your deadline, usually providing same day or next day service. Jobs requiring typesetting, paste-up or art work take a little longer than camera-ready copy, but P.I.P. always promises fast service.

You can count on Rayburn Davis, manager of Midland's P.I.P. Instant Printing and customer representative Melinda Malcolm to give you the friendly service you deserve. They'll be glad to give you a free estimate on your next printing job. Just call them at 687-1377 or go by 409 Andrews Highway. P.I.P. is open 8:30 a.m. to 5:30 p.m., Monday through Friday. Churches enjoy a ten percent discount at P.I.P. Instant Printing.

And, every time you have photo copying or printing done at P.I.P. in the next few months, you'll be helping in the fight against birth defects.

P.I.P. is donating ten cents of each job brought in between March 15 and June 15 to the March of Dimes National Telethon Against Birth Defects.

So, whatever size your printing job, remember P.I.P. can handle it.!

Chem-Dry cleans 'impossible' stains, protects against resoiling

Chem-Dry, the carbonated carpet cleaner, has come to Midland, announce owners Doy, Shirley and Barry Beck. Chem-Dry, a company with national acclaim, is ready to help you attack the soils and stains in your carpet and to defend your carpet from its two worst enemies — dirt and oily residue.

Chem-Dry is the product of years of research and development. This revolutionary carpet cleaning discovery has been labeled a "miracle product."

What makes Chem-Dry so remarkable? After pre-vacuuming, Chem-Dry experts apply a product that contains CO2 to produce millions of sparkling, effervescing, carbonated bubbles which quickly penetrate each carpet fiber, dissolving dirt, grease and pet stains in seconds. Acting as tiny propellants, these bubbles actually lift dirt to the surface for extraction.

The penetrating cleaner removes practically any type of stain (grease, oil, printers ink, gum, paint, even pet stains) without leaving residues behind.

Doy explains that even odor-causing bacteria can be handled by Chem-Dry's M-24 product.

One customer explained it this way. "I had my carpets cleaned by steam cleaning twice inside six months to rid them of cat urine odor. I finally called...Chem-Dry as a last resort before recarpeting the house. My carpets are like new...no odor...the color is like new...black marks that kept returning after steam cleaning have not returned."

Customers' carpets dry within 60 minutes and absolutely DO NOT RESOIL!

Compare this to the old methods. Steam, shampoo and drycleaing processes leave an oily film which can cause irreverisble carpet damage and attract dirt and grime at an astonishing rate. The oil-based surfactants, soaps and detergents cling to carpet fibers even after repeated vacuumings and water/steam extraction attempts. The residues will never completely dry, remaining behind to clutch at toes, dirt and anything else that passes by.

On the other hand, Chem-Dry's revolutionary process actually protects your carpet from future soiling. Chem-Dry Carpet Protector (CCP) will destroy the oily residues left behind from steam or shampoo cleaning. When it's appied it will absorb the sticky residues so they can be vacuumed out of the carpet. The CCP left behind stays in the carpet fibers to protect against resoiling.

Barry points out that Chem-Dry makes carpets velvety soft and fluffy. Even dull colors in aging carpets are brightened.

Not only do the Chem-Dry experts have an unparalleled product, they also have an undying commitment to customer satisfaction. Many other carpet cleaners with old-fashioned methods scurry sheepishly from job to job, requireing disclaimers and lability waivers before they even touch your carpets. At Chem-Dry, they are prepared to be brazenly and progressively BETTER!

Chem-Dry makes carpets come back to life and you can't lose!!! If you are not pleased, you don't pay. It's that simple. If any stains reappear, the Chem-Dry experts will return free of charge and remove them. Their goal is complete customer satisfaction.

And their rates are comparable, sometimes even less, than companies using inferior methods. With Chem-Dry, your carpets stay cleaner long — and that's an added savings.

Protect your carpet investment call Chem-Dry, 699-3037. And, watch for their red alert!

Doy (left) and Barry Beck, owners and operators of Chem-dry of Midland, are proud of Chem-Dry's success and dependability. To find out how Chem-Dry's revolutionary carbonated carpet cleaner will protect your carpet from resoiling call 699-3037.

Coldfoot Services: Farthest north truck stop in U.S.

EDITOR'S NOTE: About 150 trucks a day move up and down the road which links Alaska's giant Prudhoe Bay oil fields with Fairbanks and the rest of America. Most of them stop for food and fuel at an unusual truck stop which many of them helped to build. But now it's up for sale.

By DEAN FOSDICK

COLDFOOT, Alaska (AP) — Dick Mackey, champion sled dog racer and roadhouse operator, has the wanderlust again. But first he has to sell Coldfoot Services, "the farthest north truck stop in America."

With a name like that, how do you make it sound like a hot property?

But the name is appropriate for this remote roadhouse deep in Alaska's interior, 258 miles north of Fairbanks and 59 road miles above the Arctic Circle. Temperatures in winter generally drop to 25 degrees below zero and remain at that level for months.

Still, there are rewards in running the only rest and refueling stop between the Yukon River and Beaufort Sea, on a 359-mile stretch of road built 11 years ago to support construction of the trans-Alaska pipeline.

"It's what I envisioned Alaska being like before I came up here from New Hampshire," says Mackey, 53. "You're in the middle of the Brooks Range. You're sitting at Gates of the Arctic National Park.

"It's the most beautiful place you could want," he said. "But to sell it, I suppose we'll have to find someone who can appreciate those things and still want to run a business."

Mackey said he's been "on-again — off-again" about getting rid of the operation, which includes a 24-hour restaurant, gasoline and diesel pumps, a 54-bed motel, machine shop, wrecker, post office and lighted runway.

"We're handling it now by word of mouth. If somebody comes along, then we'll sell. It was appraised at two and a half million. I'd probably ask a million and a half."

Coldfoot Services is nothing like the gleaming glass and steel truck plazas sprawled over or alongside Interstates in the Lower 48. It's half-dozen buildings — a collection of shacks, shops, house trailers and the restaurant — sitting on a 20-acre site used as a gravel pit when the Haul Road was built.

"We started with a school bus and a tent in 1981," Mackey said. "In that time, we've gone from putting a dollar bill in our pockets to putting the whole operation on a computer.

"But the thing that has made it so great is that the truckers helped build it. And I mean literally. When we stood the front wall up on the restaurant, 17 truckers were here to help us. They'd stop on their way up or back and ask us how we were doing, or when the roof was going up.

"We're remote, but we live quite comfortably. We have showers, indoor plumbing, a phone, television.

"The problem is, if you need something immediately, there's no way. You improvise or wait until the part comes in."

One example of "making do" came a few years ago when a generator quit for five days, he said.

"Truckers would take turns pulling up to the window and shining their spotlights through so we could keep cooking," Mackey recalls.

An average of 150 trucks a day move up and down the road, which links the giant Prudhoe Bay oil fields with Fairbanks and the rest of America.

"We serve close to that many meals daily," Mackey said. "The only time we don't see anybody stop is when they're northbound with a hot (priority) load. They'll generally stop on the way south, though."

From the Brooks Range north to the oil fields, the state restricts use of the road to commercial and industrial users. A checkpoint is set up during the short Arctic summer to turn back motorists driving without a state permit.

Although tourists make up a growing part of Mackey's business, he agrees that casual traffic should be kept off Atigun Pass, at 4,800 feet, the highest point on what's now called the James Dalton Highway.

"If a recreational vehicle got stuck crossways up there, it could turn into quite an accident the way the trucks barrel through," he said. "Truckers would have a difficult if not impossible time stopping on that downhill run.

"I've always said I'd need another wrecker if they opened the pass to tourists."

Although the Mackeys are known around the region for their hospitality — among other things, they dish up free dinners for all comers at Thanksgiving and Christmas — Dick may be better known as a world-class musher.

He won the 1,100-mile Anchorage to Nome Iditarod Sled Dog Race in 1978, and his son, Rick, won the classic in 1983. Another son, Lance, entered the Junior Iditarod, a 120-mile event, in February.

Dogs and dogsleds are fixtures around the camp and it isn't uncommon to see one of the Mackeys running a string of dogs over a snow-packed track that winds around the buildings.

But Mackey, who has gone from railroad employee to ironworker to roadhouse operator, appears to have that wanderlust in his eyes again.

"I'd hate to part with this," he said. "It's like a big marriage, working with the truckers. One big family. You go through their weddings, their divorces, their kids. But I guess I'm ready to move on to something else."

Son of Jordan's Hussein inherits father's taste for daredevil sports

AMMAN, Jordan (AP) — Prince Abdullah bin Hussein has no trouble jumping out of airplanes or driving tanks, but he says his first ride in a racing car "scared the hell out of me."

The sensation appealed to King Hussein's eldest son, who seems to have inherited his father's taste for daredevil sports.

With only five car races under his belt, Abdullah has become a serious competitor in high-speed sports-car rallies, winning a recent local event and placing third in the international Rothman's Jordan Rally on April 25.

"It was a very intelligent drive," said Martin Holmes, a British racing journalist who covered the 680-mile rally.

The stocky, 24-year-old Abdullah finished well behind two of the top drivers in the Middle East, Saeed al-Hajri of Qatar and Mohammed bin Sulayem of the United Arab Emirates. But it was a vindication for the prince, whose first efforts at rallying were marred by accidents and mechanical breakdowns.

"I wanted to show people that it's actually my driving ability...I think we had a reputation of driving fast and breaking down," he said in an interview after the race.

The prince said he might enter two more races this season — possibly in Cyprus and Dubai — but he has few illusions of becoming a full-time professional.

"I couldn't afford it financially and I couldn't have the time."

His rallying efforts are restricted by his service as the commander of a tank company in Jordan's army and by his duties as second in line to the throne, such as meeting visiting dignitaries and handling charitable affairs.

King Hussein and Crown Prince Hassan, the king's brother, both left the country during the 1985 Jordan Rally, leaving Abdullah in charge. A breakdown early in the race prevented him from becoming a racing regent.

Abdullah attended high school at Deerfield Academy in Massachusets, then followed his father to Britain's Sandhurst military academy.

Like his father, the prince enjoys fast cars, parachuting and scuba diving. Abdullah said his palace guardians forced him to give up flying ultralight aircraft for safety reasons.

Abdullah hasn't yet followed his father into jet fighter planes, but he said he plans to take a helicopter course soon.

"I like things that are different," he said.

His introduction to rallying came in 1983, when Hajri, the Qatar racer, gave him a ride in his rally car.

"I was so amazed by his driving ability. I was in midair, I thought, most of the time. I'd never experienced anything like that. It scared the hell out of me."

Abdullah said he likes rallies because they aren't predictable.

"You never know when you're going to go flying over a wadi (gulch) and find a herd of camels or sheep or a tractor."

In this year's race, he smashed into a wall while chasing another car in a cloud of dust. "We thought we had a straight," he said with a grin. "It turned out to be a sharp right."

The collision dropped him back to 10th and he drove a controlled race to gain ground and finish third.

Blindness doesn't stop man from practicing law, waterskiing

MONROE, La. (AP) — Gilbert Brown was legally blind when he left his job as a bartender to become Louisiana's longest-tenured prosecutor. He's now 69 and completely blind in one eye, but still practices law and goes waterskiing on all but the coldest weekends.

Always legally blind, Brown could see well enough to get around, but people discouraged his early ambitions to be a lawyer and more than a few lifted eyebrows when he took up skiing.

"I was told by almost everybody I couldn't be an attorney and I almost gave it up, but not because my sight wasn't good. The problem was that I was making so much money as a bartender going through school that I almost decided to stay in the bar business."

Brown reminisced about those days during World War II when he was working his way through Louisiana State University Law Center at Baton Rouge.

"I could see well enough to mix drinks and I was making $12.50 a week and room and board at Beechum's, a place that used to be just off the campus. That was good money then and I had a decision to make."

He decided on law and got fellow law students to read for him.

"The first reader failed and I passed, and decided to move here to practice," said Brown.

"I graduated in 1942 and opened an office. In 1948, I went to work for the district attorney and retired in 1976. At the time I retired, I had been a prosecutor longer than anyone else in the state."

Brown then stepped into private law and is an active member of a civil law firm.

As a prosecutor, he worked on murder cases and said he decided that capital punishment isn't an answer.

"The death penalty probably always will be in litigation," he said. "I don't believe it prevents homicides. Homicide is the result of passion and anger, and to that extent, man doesn't reason or plan it in most cases. It happens. As for those who plan it in cold blood, if they get a good attorney, they can get off. I also have religious reasons for my opposition to it, but I understand that you have to render to Caesar what is Caesar's."

Brown asserts that despite his handicap, he has led a normal life. He took up waterskiing in the early 1950s as a way to enjoy recreation with his young children.

"I was attracted to it and my two kids weren't. I stuck to it. Until a year ago, I skied every month in the year. Now, I'm slowing down. I'll skip December and February."

Naturally, as a veteran, Brown uses only one ski. "I slalom. I managed it the first time I tried. The kids were 11 and 12 at the time and they couldn't. They dropped out over the years but my wife and I still go. She runs the boat.

"I have retired from driving the boat. I quit after someone remarked that I nearly hit two swimmers. I said, 'What swimmers?' When they pointed them out to me, I quit that part of it."

He said it's a little more difficult these days because he's completely lost sight in one eye.

He has no plans to give up his law practice, however.

"As long as I can match the firm's quality, I'll stay," he said. "I don't plan to retire.

But the practice has changed.

"Lawyers prepare themselves better now. The technique is different. The chief tool now is discovery. You can get so much information from the other side. For years we didn't have that. You took your witnesses and went with it. The results were not as good then. But, you didn't have much malpractice then.

"These days, the trend is to sue somebody. You used to settle arguments with a fistfight and that was that. Now, they fight but they sue. There's been a change in people. They want money in great quantity as quick as they can get it.

"Law has gone from protection of society to protection of the individual. The focus is different."

Architect Gerald Moorhead designed this Houston church with the altar at the center of the 300-seat sanctuary. With only four rows of pews, the church permits more people to be close to the altar and lends a feeling of intimacy to a family-oriented congregation. He said the stylish The King Church, a Lutheran Church in America Congregation, is an example of post-modern architecture and the design accommodates the other buildings of the church.

Architects: Most churches don't meet congregation's needs

HOUSTON (AP) — Churches need architects to design buildings that meet the diverse needs of their congregations, say a group of Houston-area architects.

Architects can mean the difference between hodgepodge development that soon will be inadequate and custom plans that produce facilities that will last longer, said Houston architects Bill Merriman and Gerald Moorhead.

The two are leading the effort of the Houston chapter of the American Institute of Architects to educate churchgoers about the building process.

Many churches build with little or no input from architects, said Merriman, a partner with Ray Bailey Architects Inc. in Houston.

Those churches may reason: "We don't care about our physical facility. We want to put all our money into outreach. We don't want to put our money into a building," Merriman said.

But hiring an architect won't necessarily increase a church's construction costs, Merriman said. An architect actually might save a congregation enough money to pay his or her own costs, he said.

Some Houston area churches have opted to erect inexpensive metal buildings for their houses of worship, said Merriman. He criticizes these groups — not because they chose to use inexpensive materials, but because, he says, they didn't attempt to create a building with an image that says, "This is where you worship God."

"A skillful architect can work with any building budget," he said.

Moorhead, who has his own architectural office in Houston, said there isn't a trend toward low-budget churches, despite Houston's faltering economy.

Nor is the sluggish economy, and its negative effect on building in general, the reason these architects are focusing on churches, he said.

Merriman and Moorhead said they and other members of the Liturgical Architecture Committee want to educate the public. The group of nine architects from the AIA formed the committee two years ago to discuss church architecture and conducted an all-day seminar on liturgical architecture earlier this month at St. John the Divine Episcopal Church. The seminar, featuring architects, pastors and builders, focuses on the various steps in building.

Merriman and Moorhead, who said a major part of their work involves church architecture, co-chaired of the committee.

Moorhead said many members of church building committees have little or no experience with construction. They don't realize that an architect can design a building to meet the particular needs of a congregation and create options for long-range planning, he said. Instead, many of these commettees turn to a contractor who employs an architect or designer. Through this "design-build" arrangement, church members are more likely to get a standardized plan that isn't especially designed for their congregation's long-term needs, Moorhead said.

Moorhead and Merriman cite some of their own buildings as examples of what happens when a church hires its own architect.

Moorhead was project architect with Charles Tapley Associates of Houston when that firm designed the new sanctuary at Christ the King Lutheran Church, a Lutheran Church in America congregation.

He calls the stylish sanctuary an example of postmodern architecture and notes that the design accommodates the other buildings of the church and its surroundings. The sanctuary, completed at a cost of $600,000 in 1982, was designed so the altar is the center of the sanctuary. Moorhead said that arrangment, with only four rows of pews, permits more people to be close to the altar and lends a feeling of intimacy to a family-oriented congregation.

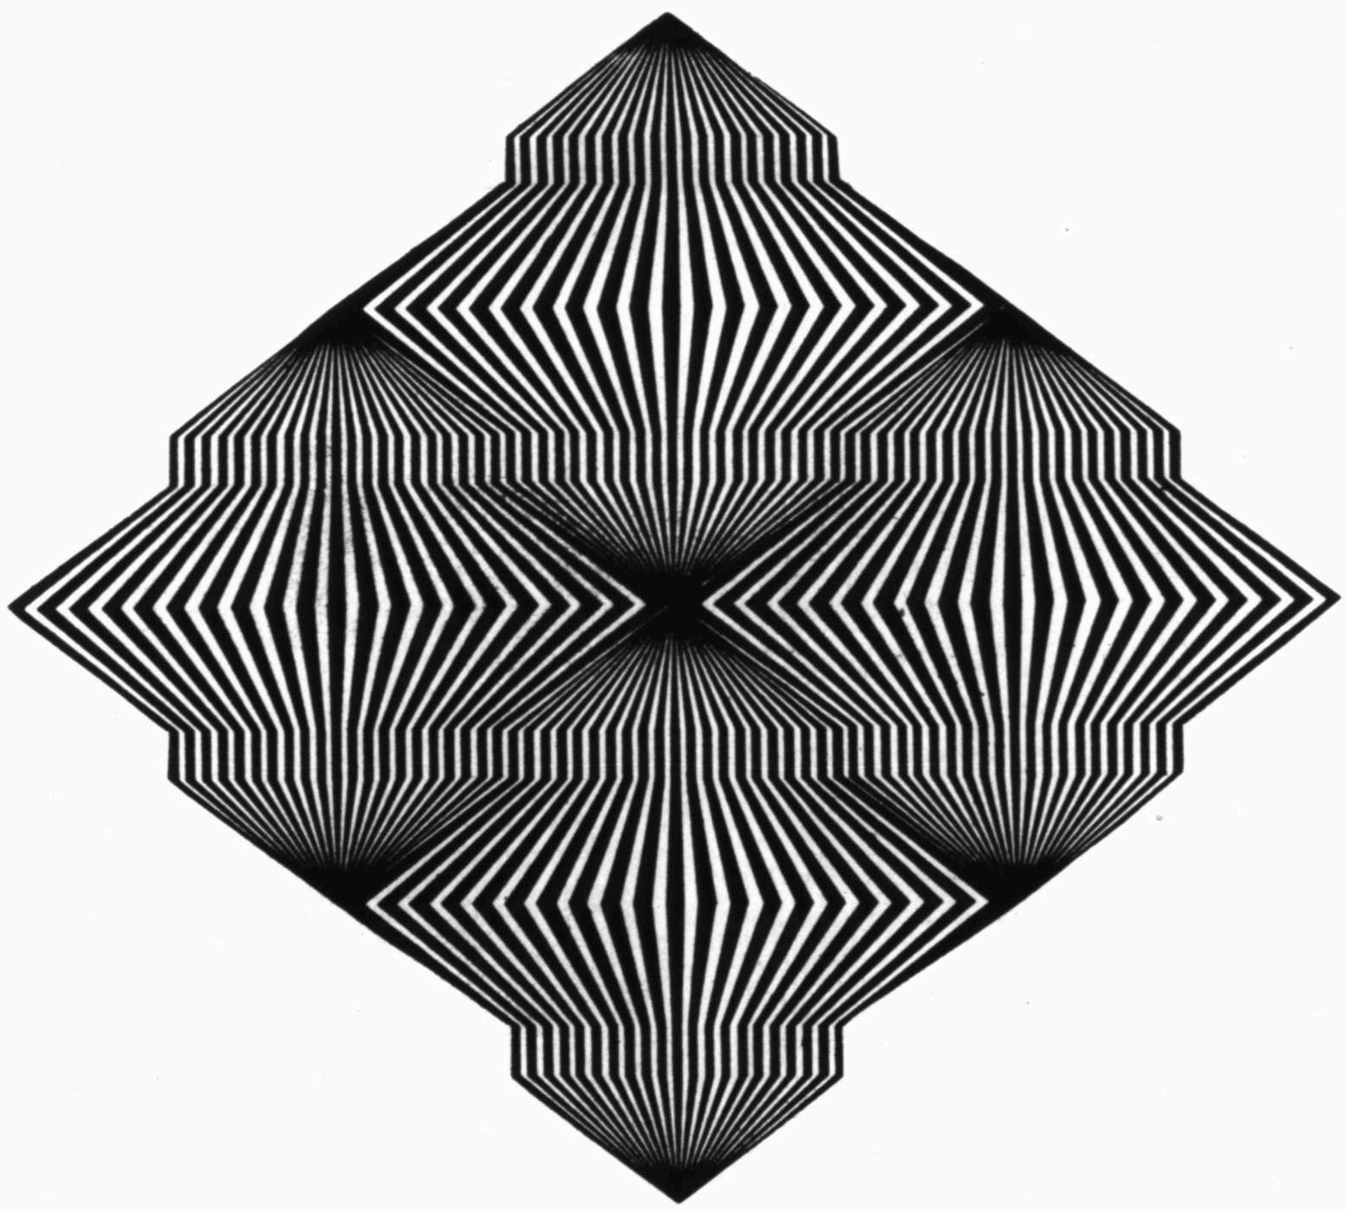

"They really like the sense of family and togetherness they can get when they're all in here together," Moorhead said. The wood roof deck was given extra heavy insulation to provide a four-second reverberation, accoustically ideal for a congregation with an active choir and instrumental music program, Moorhead said. Although more modern in style, the new 300-seat sanctuary resembles the appearance of the church's previous 200-seat sanctuary, now used for education classes.

When Merriman and the others at Ray Bailey Architects began designing a new parish hall for St. John the Divine Episcopal Church, they were confronted with a problem: the church's gym. A flat-roofed structure didn't fit the design of the church's sanctuary, chapel and education building. In this way, the parish hall, constructed in 1980 at a cost of $1.4 million, provided a link between the other buildings at St. John the Divine and created a "unified design," Merriman said.

The architects also added a covered drop-off that made it more convenient for churchgoers to walk from their cars to the sanctuary's less prominent entrance, or "back door." At St. John the Divine, as with most churches, more people go in the "back door" than through the more recognizable front doors, Merriman said.

The front doors give the church a symbolic presence in the community. But the architects worked to make the "back door" more practical.

"There's still a gracious way to enter the church for people using the church on a day-to-day basis from the parking lot."

Royal ring may make rubies red-hot

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Diamonds may be forever, but rubies and sapphires are for sometimes. One of those times is now, many jewelers think. When Prince Andrew of Britain presented a pigeon blood ruby and diamond ring to Sarah Ferguson to seal their engagement, jewelers readied themselves for a surge of interest in rubies. After all, they had noted increased interest in sapphires when Prince Charles gave a sapphire and diamond engagement ring to Lady Diana Spencer in 1981.

"A ring like Diana's became the thing to have," says Bill San Filippo, assistant manager of Cartier. "We did a whole line of diamond-surrounded sapphires, rubies and emeralds. They were very popular, but sapphires were the most popular. The trend lasted about a year and a half. We believe that Sarah's ruby will start a new trend."

THAT VIEW is echoed by Edward Green, managing director of Garrard's, the crown jeweler that made both royal rings.

"There's no doubt this will increase the popularity of rubies," Green said in a telephone interview from London. "The ruby will never take over from the sapphire because the sapphire is cheaper, but Sarah Ferguson's ring will set a new fashion. The royal family do set trends here — and elsewhere in the world. We've seen that with the Princess of Wales."

"Although Queen Elizabeth had a plain diamond," he added, "Princess Anne had a sapphire. The diamond engagement ring has never been the tradition in England that it is in the States. And we're seeing more and more colored stones now."

Prince Andrew had specifically asked for a ruby, Green said. "He believed a ruby would suit Sarah — with her red hair and all."

Royalty notwithstanding, the vast majority of engagement rings sold in the United States are diamonds. According to the Diamond Information Center, nearly three-quarters of all first-time brides in the last decade have flashed diamonds on the third finger of the left hand.

"Nothing ever has and nothing ever will replace the diamond as an engagement ring," says John Loring, senior vice president and design director of Tiffany & Co. "Sapphires are the second most poplular stone. They've enjoyed great popularity since Princess Diana got a sapphire."

"I've no doubt," he added, "that the ruby will increase in popularity now, but it will never catch up to the sapphire for one very simple reason: A first-class ruby is a very precious object indeed and not as easily affordable as a sapphire."

A DIAMOND may cost 50 percent more than a comparable sapphire and 40 percent more than a comparable ruby, yet most brides would rather settle for a smaller diamond than break with tradition. It's generally the older, more sophisticated bride-to-be who chooses a colored stone to make an individual statement. In recent years, rings that combine diamonds and colored stones have never accounted for more than 6 percent of engagement ring sales to first-time brides and 8 percent to second-time brides. But when retail jewelry sales are $15 billion a year, small percentages are not overlooked by jewelers.

At Fortunoff, they're gearing up for a rush on rubies, although it isn't expected to come until June, when the big engagement season starts.

"After Diana's engagment, we immediately began to sell sapphires," said Helene Fortunoff, "and sapphires have remained popular in all kinds of jewelry. Now we're getting ready for rubies. The ruby surrounded by diamonds we're calling the princess style."

Crown jewelers visit America

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — In the market for a pair of $1.5 million earrings? A ship's model centerpiece for $85,000? A gilt epergne crowned with the feather symbol of the Prince of Wales for $90,000? A matched set of emerald and diamond jewelry for $700,000?

These trifles are among the treasures that Garrard, the crown jewelers of England, brought to New York recently to whet the acquisitive appetites of gilded locals. The 250-year-old company, which has made engagement rings for the recent royal brides, is on its first trip to the colonies with a collection of antique and contemporary wares.

"I hope we sell some of the bigger pieces so we don't have to carry them back across the Atlantic," said Brian Holloway, the silver buyer, eyeing the gilt ship's model that measures nearly three feet in length and height.

"The Victorians were fond of this sort of thing," he said. "The superstructure lifts off and the hull can be used to store napkins and condiments. Smaller versions were used to hold wine."

"Some pieces of jewelry can really excite you, and these really do," he said, taking the $1.5 million diamond earrings from the showcase. Each earring consists of five pear-shaped diamonds arranged like flower petals. "It's very rare that you can assemble such stones," Green said. "They range from three to six carats each, for a total of 47 carats. We're going to have to find the customer for these."

The epergne, which stands nearly three feet high, is an 1850 reproduction of one in the royal collection that was made in 1745 for the Prince of Wales. A lion, a unicorn and trumpeting mermen support the base, with winged cherubs supporting the next level and festoons and miniature lanterns and pineapples embellishing the whole.

All the jewelry and precious objects are for sale, said Edward Green, managing director, who brought the collection here to make Garrard's name known to a new audience. His own special interest, he said, is the jewelry, which ranges from delicate diamond pins and necklaces of the Victorian era to contemporary sparklers.

LOS ANGELES — Princess Stephanie of Monaco's teeth were chattering. Whether it was from a bad case of nerves or the chilly rain that pelted her swimsuit fashion show wasn't clear, but her highness was decidedly uncomfortable as she fielded questions about her current livelihood — fashion design.

Personal questions, the crowd of mostly fashion reporters was told, were off limits. When Princess Stephanie was queried about her singing career, she tersely noted that her pop single "Irresistible" is "doing well."

Asked whether her name was advantageous in the fashion business, she quickly glanced at her partner, Alix de la Comble, before replying: "In the beginning, there were people who came to see the line out of curiosity. But if the suits weren't nice, they wouldn't have bought them."

The 21-year-old royal and the 31-year-old de la Comble said they chose to design a bathing suit line called Pool Position because they wanted something to wear to the beach. It's a plausible motivation in Stephanie's case. In the past she was known to upset her father, Prince Ranier, whenever she went swimming topless.

The prince did not finance the design team.

"We used our money and had some help from our families. My father did not finance this at all," Stephanie emphasized. "We wanted to do this on our own."

Princess Stephanie and de la Comble met in 1984 when both were design assistants at the House of Dior in Paris, under the wing of couturier Marc Bohan.

Essentially, they learned "how to organize a collection from start to finish" from him. They unveiled their first line in Monte Carlo last July, to rave reviews.

Not surprisingly, couture silhouettes surface throughout the Pool Position collection of maillots, robes and headbands.

The swimsuits, which drape and mold to the body, include one-shoulder versions, halter and layered styles. There's even a leather suit and one with a turtleneck. They also fetch a princely price — from $80 to $136, while robes cost anywhere from $151 to $295.

Eventually, the partners could turn their talents to a clothing collection; de la Comble designed the outfits they were wearing —a yellow-and-navy striped duster coat, yellow blouse and navy skirt for Princess Stephanie and a navy duster, white blouse and navy skirt for herself.

Meanwhile, the audience got an opportunity to see how the maillots performed when wet. For the show's finale, the models jumped into the pool. The suits were so revealing, once they emerged they might as well have been topless.

'Mascot Ascot' a mad hatter

By GWEN JONES
Hearst News Service

Londoner David Shilling began designing hats for his Mum to wear to the Ascot races. One year he whipped up a 4-foot-high Breton for her. Another time he created a style in the shape of a coconut tree, complete with little stuffed monkeys. Then there was the Christmas tree chapeau, decorated with baubles and beaus.

The outrageous headwear earned Gertrude Shilling the title "Mascot Ascot," and they called me the Mad Hatter," recalled the 33-year-old designer. Once Shilling's handiwork caught the attention of the Ulster Museum in Northern Ireland, which mounted an exhibit of his designs in the late '70s, people began to take him seriously. Since then, his hats have been displayed at the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York and in London's Victoria & Albert Museum.

Meanwhile, his custom business has grown to include an international clientele headed by Princess Diana. The hat-conscious crowd apparently agrees with Shilling that what a woman wears on her head is as vital as what she puts on her body.

"I can understand why women didn't want to wear hats nine years ago," Shilling said. "They were dull, heavy and bore absolutely no relationship to fashion. I decided that hats should be lightweight and in the colors of the moment."

Although Shilling's hats may be lightweight, the same can't be said for his prices. The average tag is $1,000, which doesn't include shipping and duty. The hats are available strictly through his London salon.

British appear at Apparel Mart

DALLAS — The body-conscious thread that tied the recent European collections together resurfaced in Dallas when 18 British designers left the London catwalks to show their creations to Southwest buyers at the Dallas Apparel Mart.

The roster included top English design names — Janice Wainwright, Benny Ong and Gina Fratini — as well as nine of the talented newcomers represented by Amalgamated Talent.

For fall '86, these Brits opt for fitted, feminine forms. Curve-catching bodices, daring cut-out fronts, scooped backs and narrow skirts define the English point of view of next season's dressing.

The look can be as bare as David Fielden's blue tutu dress with its tight, sequined, bustier top and explosion of thigh-high, black lace ruffles. Or as shape-defining as the sassy, wool jersey suit at Benny Ong (one of Princess Di's favorite designers), with its straight, knee-grazing black skirt and fitted, peplum jacket.

The British designers craft their fall collections from a variety of fabrics. The sister design team of Amy and Grace Li cut a cheeky, bustier dress from silk denim. The second-skin dress slips a few inches above the knee to showcase an expanse of leg. Their trenchcoat dress of taupe glazed silk boasts broad shoulders and cinches neatly at the waist with a thin belt.

This season, the English embrace dark, somber shades such as gray, black, terra cotta, navy and burgundy. To lighten the look, they rely on rich jewel tones — sapphire, jade, amythest, teal — as accents.

Blindness doesn't stop man from practicing law, waterskiing

MONROE, La. (AP) — Gilbert Brown was legally blind when he left his job as a bartender to become Louisiana's longest-tenured prosecutor. He's now 69 and completely blind in one eye, but still practices law and goes waterskiing on all but the coldest weekends.

Always legally blind, Brown could see well enough to get around, but people discouraged his early ambitions to be a lawyer and more than a few lifted eyebrows when he took up skiing.

"I was told by almost everybody I couldn't be an attorney and I almost gave it up, but not because my sight wasn't good. The problem was that I was making so much money as a bartender going through school that I almost decided to stay in the bar business."

Brown reminisced about those days during World War II when he was working his way through Louisiana State University Law Center at Baton Rouge.

"I could see well enough to mix drinks and I was making $12.50 a week and room and board at Beechum's, a place that used to be just off the campus. That was good money then and I had a decision to make."

He decided on law and got fellow law students to read for him.

"The first reader failed and I passed, and decided to move here to practice," said Brown.

"I graduated in 1942 and opened an office. In 1948, I went to work for the district attorney and retired in 1976. At the time I retired, I had been a prosecutor longer than anyone else in the state."

Brown then stepped into private law and is an active member of a civil law firm.

As a prosecutor, he worked on murder cases and said he decided that capital punishment isn't an answer.

"The death penalty probably always will be in litigation," he said. "I don't believe it prevents homicides. Homicide is the result of passion and anger, and to that extent, man doesn't reason or plan it in most cases. It happens. As for those who plan it in cold blood, if they get a good attorney, they can get off. I also have religious reasons for my opposition to it, but I understand that you have to render to Caesar what is Caesar's."

Brown asserts that despite his handicap, he has led a normal life. He took up waterskiing in the early 1950s as a way to enjoy recreation with his young children.

"I was attracted to it and my two kids weren't. I stuck to it. Until a year ago, I skied every month in the year. Now, I'm slowing down. I'll skip December and February."

Naturally, as a veteran, Brown uses only one ski. "I slalom. I managed it the first time I tried. The kids were 11 and 12 at the time and they couldn't. They dropped out over the years but my wife and I still go. She runs the boat.

"I have retired from driving the boat. I quit after someone remarked that I nearly hit two swimmers. I said, 'What swimmers?' When they pointed them out to me, I quit that part of it."

He said it's a little more difficult these days because he's completely lost sight in one eye.

He has no plans to give up his law practice, however.

"As long as I can match the firm's quality, I'll stay," he said. "I don't plan to retire.

But the practice has changed.

"Lawyers prepare themselves better now. The technique is different. The chief tool now is discovery. You can get so much information from the other side. For years we didn't have that. You took your witnesses and went with it. The results were not as good then. But, you didn't have much malpractice then.

"These days, the trend is to sue somebody. You used to settle arguments with a fistfight and that was that. Now, they fight but they sue. There's been a change in people. They want money in great quantity as quick as they can get it.

"Law has gone from protection of society to protection of the individual. The focus is different."

Architect Gerald Moorhead designed this Houston church with the altar at the center of the 300-seat sanctuary. With only four rows of pews, the church permits more people to be close to the altar and lends a feeling of intimacy to a family-oriented congregation. He said the stylish The King Church, a Lutheran Church in America Congregation, is an example of post-modern architecture and the design accommodates the other buildings of the church.

Architects: Most churches don't meet congregation's needs

HOUSTON (AP) — Churches need architects to design buildings that meet the diverse needs of their congregations, say a group of Houston-area architects.

Architects can mean the difference between hodgepodge development that soon will be inadequate and custom plans that produce facilities that will last longer, said Houston architects Bill Merriman and Gerald Moorhead.

The two are leading the effort of the Houston chapter of the American Institute of Architects to educate churchgoers about the building process.

Many churches build with little or no input from architects, said Merriman, a partner with Ray Bailey Architects Inc. in Houston.

Those churches may reason: "We don't care about our physical facility. We want to put all our money into outreach. We don't want to put our money into a building," Merriman said.

But hiring an architect won't necessarily increase a church's construction costs, Merriman said. An architect actually might save a congregation enough money to pay his or her own costs, he said.

Some Houston area churches have opted to erect inexpensive metal buildings for their houses of worship, said Merriman. He criticizes these groups — not because they chose to use inexpensive materials, but because, he says, they didn't attempt to create a building with an image that says, "This is where you worship God."

"A skillful architect can work with any building budget," he said.

Moorhead, who has his own architectural office in Houston, said there isn't a trend toward low-budget churches, despite Houston's faltering economy.

Nor is the sluggish economy, and its negative effect on building in general, the reason these architects are focusing on churches, he said.

Merriman and Moorhead said they and other members of the Liturgical Architecture Committee want to educate the public. The group of nine architects from the AIA formed the committee two years ago to discuss church architecture and conducted an all-day seminar on liturgical architecture earlier this month at St. John the Divine Episcopal Church. The seminar, featuring architects, pastors and builders, focuses on the various steps in building.

Merriman and Moorhead, who said a major part of their work involves church architecture, co-chaired of the committee.

Moorhead said many members of church building committees have little or no experience with construction. They don't realize that an architect can design a building to meet the particular needs of a congregation and create options for long-range planning, he said. Instead, many of these commettees turn to a contractor who employs an architect or designer. Through this "design-build" arrangement, church members are more likely to get a standardized plan that isn't especially designed for their congregation's long-term needs, Moorhead said.

Moorhead and Merriman cite some of their own buildings as examples of what happens when a church hires its own architect.

Moorhead was project architect with Charles Tapley Associates of Houston when that firm designed the new sanctuary at Christ the King Lutheran Church, a Lutheran Church in America congregation.

He calls the stylish sanctuary an example of postmodern architecture and notes that the design accommodates the other buildings of the church and its surroundings. The sanctuary, completed at a cost of $600,000 in 1982, was designed so the altar is the center of the sanctuary. Moorhead said that arrangment, with only four rows of pews, permits more people to be close to the altar and lends a feeling of intimacy to a family-oriented congregation.

"They really like the sense of family and togetherness they can get when they're all in here together," Moorhead said. The wood roof deck was given extra heavy insulation to provide a four-second reverberation, accoustically ideal for a congregation with an active choir and instrumental music program, Moorhead said. Although more modern in style, the new 300-seat sanctuary resembles the appearance of the church's previous 200-seat sanctuary, now used for education classes.

When Merriman and the others at Ray Bailey Architects began designing a new parish hall for St. John the Divine Episcopal Church, they were confronted with a problem: the church's gym. A flat-roofed structure didn't fit the design of the church's sanctuary, chapel and education building. In this way, the parish hall, constructed in 1980 at a cost of $1.4 million, provided a link between the other buildings at St. John the Divine and created a "unified design," Merriman said.

The architects also added a covered drop-off that made it more convenient for churchgoers to walk from their cars to the sanctuary's less prominent entrance, or "back door." At St. John the Divine, as with most churches, more people go in the "back door" than through the more recognizable front doors, Merriman said.

The front doors give the church a symbolic presence in the community. But the architects worked to make the "back door" more practical.

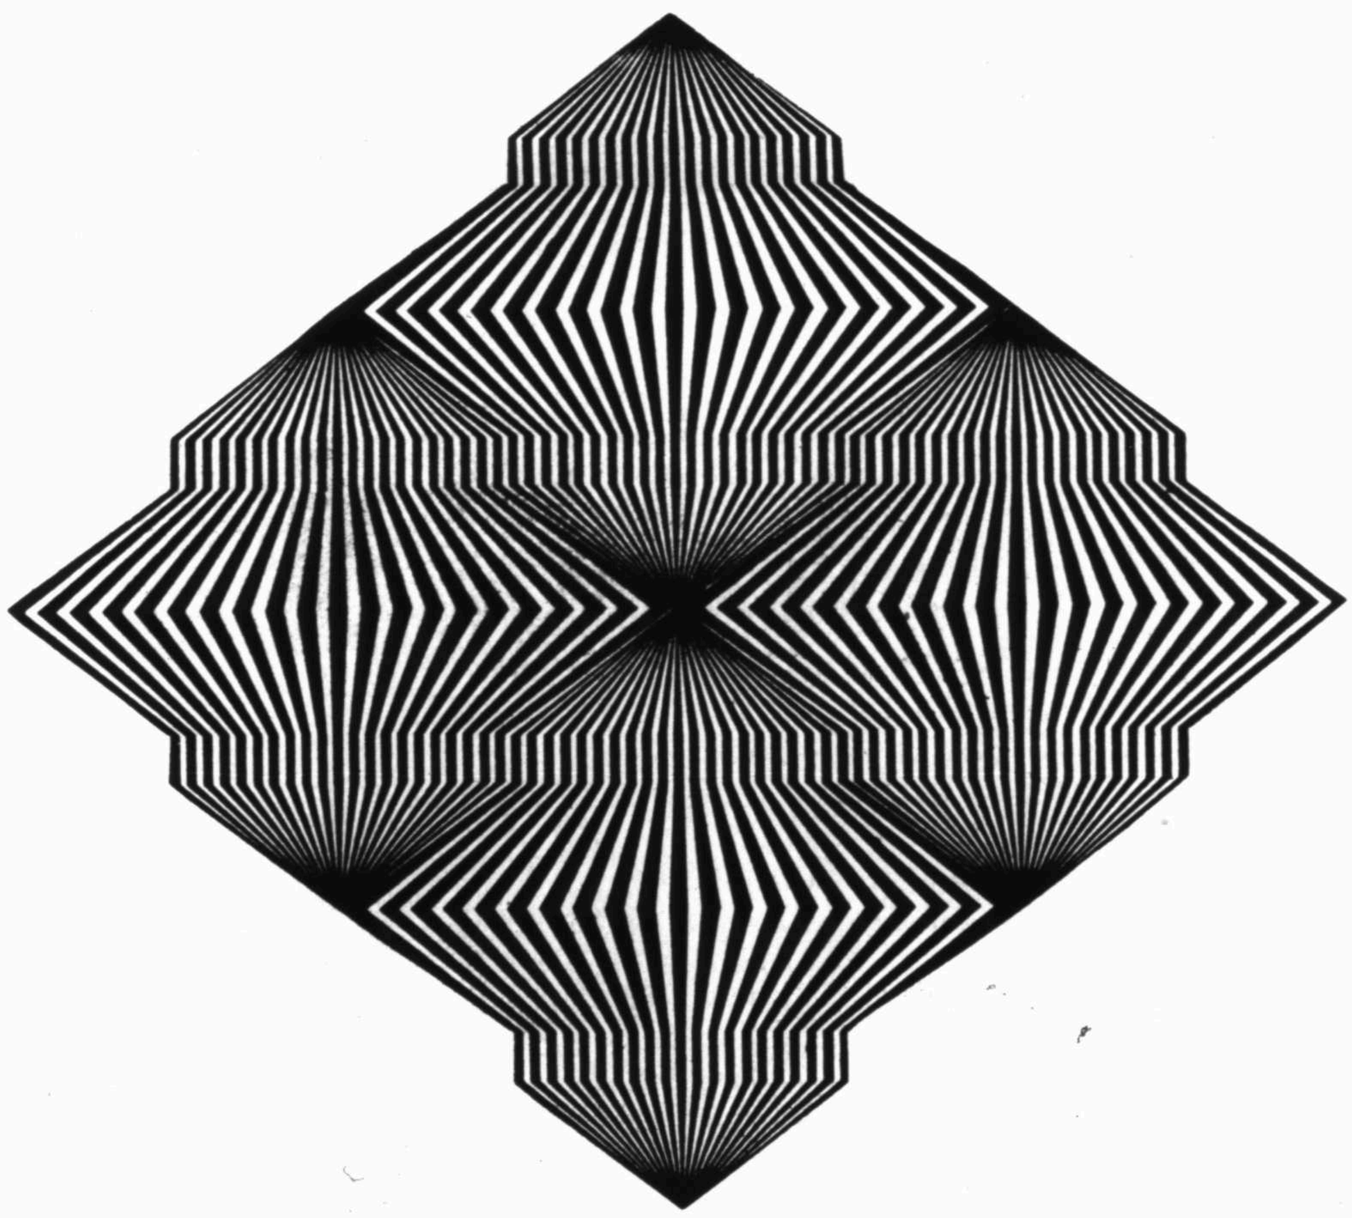

"There's still a gracious way to enter the church for people using the church on a day-to-day basis from the parking lot."

Royal ring may make rubies red-hot

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Diamonds may be forever, but rubies and sapphires are for sometimes. One of those times is now, many jewelers think. When Prince Andrew of Britain presented a pigeon blood ruby and diamond ring to Sarah Ferguson to seal their engagement, jewelers readied themselves for a surge of interest in rubies. After all, they had noted increased interest in sapphires when Prince Charles gave a sapphire and diamond engagement ring to Lady Diana Spencer in 1981.

"A ring like Diana's became the thing to have," says Bill San Filippo, assistant manager of Cartier. "We did a whole line of diamond-surrounded sapphires, rubies and emeralds. They were very popular, but sapphires were the most popular. The trend lasted about a year and a half. We believe that Sarah's ruby will start a new trend."

THAT VIEW is echoed by Edward Green, managing director of Garrard's, the crown jeweler that made both royal rings.

"There's no doubt this will increase the popularity of rubies," Green said in a telephone interview from London. "The ruby will never take over from the sapphire because the sapphire is cheaper, but Sarah Ferguson's ring will set a new fashion. The royal family do set trends here — and elsewhere in the world. We've seen that with the Princess of Wales."

"Although Queen Elizabeth had a plain diamond," he added, "Princess Anne had a sapphire. The diamond engagement ring has never been the tradition in England that it is in the States. And we're seeing more and more colored stones now."

Prince Andrew had specifically asked for a ruby, Green said. "He believed a ruby would suit Sarah — with her red hair and all."

Royalty notwithstanding, the vast majority of engagement rings sold in the United States are diamonds. According to the Diamond Information Center, nearly three-quarters of all first-time brides in the last decade have flashed diamonds on the third finger of the left hand.

"Nothing ever has and nothing ever will replace the diamond as an engagement ring," says John Loring, senior vice president and design director of Tiffany & Co. "Sapphires are the second most poplular stone. They've enjoyed great popularity since Princess Diana got a sapphire."

"I've no doubt," he added, "that the ruby will increase in popularity now, but it will never catch up to the sapphire for one very simple reason: A first-class ruby is a very precious object indeed and not as easily affordable as a sapphire."

A DIAMOND may cost 50 percent more than a comparable sapphire and 40 percent more than a comparable ruby, yet most brides would rather settle for a smaller diamond than break with tradition. It's generally the older, more sophisticated bride-to-be who chooses a colored stone to make an individual statement. In recent years, rings that combine diamonds and colored stones have never accounted for more than 6 percent of engagement ring sales to first-time brides and 8 percent to second-time brides. But when retail jewelry sales are $15 billion a year, small percentages are not overlooked by jewelers.

At Fortunoff, they're gearing up for a rush on rubies, although it isn't expected to come until June, when the big engagement season starts.

"After Diana's engagment, we immediately began to sell sapphires," said Helene Fortunoff, "and sapphires have remained popular in all kinds of jewelry. Now we're getting ready for rubies. The ruby surrounded by diamonds we're calling the princess style."

Crown jewelers visit America

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — In the market for a pair of $1.5 million earrings? A ship's model centerpiece for $85,000? A gilt epergne crowned with the feather symbol of the Prince of Wales for $90,000? A matched set of emerald and diamond jewelry for $700,000?

These trifles are among the treasures that Garrard, the crown jewelers of England, brought to New York recently to whet the acquisitive appetites of gilded locals. The 250-year-old company, which has made engagement rings for the recent royal brides, is on its first trip to the colonies with a collection of antique and contemporary wares.

"I hope we sell some of the bigger pieces so we don't have to carry them back across the Atlantic," said Brian Holloway, the silver buyer, eyeing the gilt ship's model that measures nearly three feet in length and height.

"The Victorians were fond of this sort of thing," he said. "The superstructure lifts off and the hull can be used to store napkins and condiments. Smaller versions were used to hold wine, which was poured out of the prow."

The epergne, which stands nearly three feet high, is an 1850 reproduction of one in the royal collection that was made in 1745 for the Prince of Wales. A lion, a unicorn and trumpeting mermen support the base, with winged cherubs supporting the next level and festoons and miniature lanterns and pineapples embellishing the whole.

All the jewelry and precious objects are for sale, said Edward Green, managing director, who brought the collection here to make Garrard's name known to a new audience. His own special interest, he said, is the jewelry, which ranges from delicate diamond pins and necklaces of the Victorian era to contemporary sparklers.

"Some pieces of jewelry can really excite you, and these really do," he said, taking the $1.5 million diamond earrings from the showcase. Each earring consists of five pear-shaped diamonds arranged like flower petals. "It's very rare that you can assemble such stones," Green said. "They range from three to six carats each, for a total of 47 carats. We're going to have to find the customer for these."

DEAR ABBY

Marriage requires strong foundation

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: This concerns the American woman signed "Moonstruck," who was in love with an Iranian man and wanted to marry him. I married a man from a Middle Eastern country so perhaps I can give her some advice.

We have been married for 15 years and I couldn't want a better husband, but not all American women have been as lucky with men from foreign countries. Here are some things to consider:

1. What kind of visa does he have? If he already has a green card, he's probably a good bet. Some men marry American women just to get permanent resident status in this country. An American woman should be cautious about marrying someone who is on a tourist or student visa. She should also be aware that if she does marry a foreigner with a criminal record or who is considered to be an undesirable alien, he could be deported even if he is already married to an American.

2. How long have you known each other? Marrying someone from a different country, especially if there are language barriers and vast cultural differences, can create serious problems. Don't rush into marriage. Get to know each other very, very well. If it's love, the waiting won't hurt.

3. Could you be happy living in his country? You may have to if things don't work out for him here. Although most Americans think this is the greatest country in the world, many immigrants cannot adjust to living here. And if the political situation in his country changes for the better, he may want to return and take you with him. How would you feel about that? — THE VOICE OF EXPERIENCE

DEAR VOICE: Thank you for a valuable letter.

DEAR ABBY: A few years ago I wrote to you requesting a copy of your booklet titled "What Every Teen-ager Ought to Know." This booklet has been very popular; in fact, one of the health teachers here at school uses it in her class.

For that reason I am requesting six more copies. I agree, it contains what every teen-ager ought to know. — BONNIE L. RAASCH, LIBRARIAN, C.B. VERNON MIDDLE SCHOOL, MARION, IOWA

DEAR MS. RAASCH: Thank you for what I consider high praise. The teen booklet has also been used at both Baptist and Catholic summer camps. Many teachers have suggested that it would be even more helpful if it were given to children ages 10 to 12. Our children are maturing physically much earlier today than they did 25 years ago. To order, send a check or money order for $2.50 and a long, stamped (39 cents), self-addressed envelope to: Dear Abby, Teen Booklet, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038.

DEAR ABBY: In your advice on car thieves, you missed an obvious point. When the prospective buyer asks permission to test drive the car by driving it around the block, be sure you are in the car during the test! — MORT EISENBERG, DEL RAY BEACH, FLA.

DEAR MORT: Surely you jest. A person risks more than auto theft when he or she gets into a car with a stranger.

(Getting married? Send for Abby's new, updated, expanded booklet, "How to Have a Lovely Wedding." Send your name and address clearly printed with a check or money order for $2.50 and a long, stamped (39 cents) envelope to: Dear Abby, Wedding Booklet, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038.)

Indian artist designs investments to be worn

Copley News Service

Six silver-crafted feathers hang from a round pendant of turquoise and coral that is linked to a shell necklace.

If the sun is just right, short bursts of light bounce from the silver like tiny ladyfinger firecrackers.

It is an inanimate object, but it speaks of life. And it speaks of death, myth and stories told around campfires far into the night.

The necklace is just one of many pieces of jewelery lighting up the reputation of Ray Tracey, an American Indian artist and actor, these days.

In recent years, Tracey's jewelry has been exhibited in museums, galleries and stores throughout the nation, most notably at the Museum of Natural History in Los Angeles, the John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts in Washington, D.C., the Arrowhead Gallery in Houston and the Heard Museum in Phoenix, Ariz.

"I've gotten ideas from 'Star Wars,' from stories my grandfather told me or what nature may tell me ... anything that flows," said Tracey, a full-blooded Navajo, who lives with his wife and four children in Gallup, a town of 15,000 high in the butte country of western New Mexico near the Arizona border.

TRACEY HAS a studio and jewelry manufacturing business there but, he said, most of his time of late is spent on the road exhibiting his work, from California to New York City.

Tracey designs every piece and turns it over to his staff of 12 craftsmen to reproduce.

He was 8 years old when he made his first piece of jewelry, a turquoise ring that "looked pretty bad, but my mom kept it," he said. If he learned anything, it was that he had a flair for art.

He took a detour for a few years to study civil engineering at the University of Utah and Brigham Young University but lost interest. Too much math, he said. But more than that, "I wanted to create things," he added.

He focused on jewelry.

"Most jewelry is repetitious. It's already been made before," he said. "The first jewelry was made by cave people out of bones. What you're doing is reinventing the wheel over and over again."

The difference comes in the design.

"If you can design something that flows with the person and doesn't detract or come off as gaudy, it will accent a person's face and his or her daily life."

GAUDY JEWELRY "gets in the way," said Tracey. "If you have a nice slick piece of jewelry that accents the face, the ears, the eyes, it brings self-esteem to the person."

Tracey calls his creations "simple elegance." Their designs are simple and straightforward and they are elegant enough to be worn for formal occasions.

"I fight stereotypes all the time," he said. "People will look at my jewelry and say that was really nice Indian jewelry, but I try to promote my jewelry as artwork that can be worn, not as Indian-made."

Much of Tracey's work fits the definition of high fashion and is designed to be worn with a tuxedo and evening gown as well as casual clothes.

"Our jewelry is not hell-bent on tradition. We want to go out of the bounds of tradition," he said.

Common cold no longer respectable illness

By ERMA BOMBECK

It's time we all were honest about the common cold.

How many people do you know who take their colds to bed, drink lots of fluids and get plenty of rest?

Everyone knows the first thing you do with a cold is to get it up, shower it, shave it (if it is male) and get it on the road to somewhere. Ninety-eight percent of the population take their colds to work with them, 70 percent take it to the theater, 40 percent take their colds to visit sick people in the hospital, and some treat theirs to a hockey game, a ride in an open convertible or a marathon. Anything to get the cold's mind off itself.

Once you dress a cold, put eyeliner on it and splash it with Giorgio, it doesn't look so bad and you can palm yourself off as well.

There was a time when the cold was taken seriously. Gentle hands tucked you between clean sheets and brought you trays of food, took your temperature and pulled the blinds to let you sleep.

I was in a deep sleep the other morning when my husband said, "Are you going to sleep all day?"

"I have a cold," I said.

"Everyone in the country has it. A lot of it is going around."

"That's what they said about the bubonic plague and they let you sleep in."

"You're not going to let a common cold flatten you out, are you? Just get up and move around and you won't think about it."

"Mine is uncommon. It doesn't want to be entertained."

"I want to listen in to your conversation when you call and tell someone you can't write a column because you have a cold."

"I'm telling you, I can't pry my eyes open, my body is burning up and my hair hurts."

"I suppose that means you're not going to pick up the film I dropped off last week."

I honestly don't know what it takes to immobilize people anymore. Not only is the cold not taken seriously, but other illnesses and infirmities are no longer put to bed nor do they invite compassion. Remember when a broken leg kept you from flying to a business appointment in L.A.? Hey, you just leave a little more time to drag from Gate 6 to Gate 42. Dental surgery is a long lunch hour, and women plan their deliveries around a holiday weekend.

Frankly, I'd like to see the Common Cold restored to the respect and prestige it once enjoyed. Think how wonderful it would be to sneeze and have someone guide you by the elbow to a chair. Or cough and in the next instant see fresh flowers by your bedside. Or to have your boss say, "Stay home, stay warm and call when you feel like getting dressed."

Until that happens, a cold is just another gift that keeps giving.

Accessories accent spring's clean lines, trim shapes

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

DALLAS — Spring's clean lines and pared-down shapes are meant to be dressed up. Not with ruffles and frills but with a sense of humor, a shot of bold brights, a touch of classicism. Take your pick. The season's accessories have their many moods.

"Any time you have clothing this minimal," says Shelle Bagot of The Gazebo in Dallas, "a bold accessory is mandatory. There's nothing timid about these shapes."

Nothing as diminutive as a chain necklace this time around. Necklaces are worn in multiples. Earrings are chunky hoops with enough room for a pattern. Bracelets are extra-wide cuffs that circle the wrist in brightly painted wood or twisted links of silver or gold.

• Classic Cache: These are ladylike with a capital 'L.' Whether the real thing or simply look-a-likes, they recall the elegance of Grace Kelly, the timelessness of Chanel and Hermes. The Classics are more sophisticated than preppy, but conservative all the same.

Look for details such as patent leather trim, buttons, chain link swags and big bows. Colors range from rich nauticals of navy, red and ivory to pristine pastels of pink and yellow. All are accented by gold.

• Plane Geometry: Even those who never understood the difference between an isusceles triangle and a rhombus will be able to grasp spring's geometric angle. It's a well calculated mix of bright color bits against a black background. Abstract speckles and swirls reflect the futuristic influence of the Memphis movement.

Playfulness reigns supreme here. Mobile earrings pivot into a variety of shapes depending on your whimsy. Triangular chips of color team up with bright fake gems for the ultimate in twinkling, three-dimensional pins and earrings. Plastic numbers add up to more fun on the crown of an angular straw hat.

• Ethnic Twists: Last year's Raj rage gives way to a more primitive edge in accessories. Spring's foreign flavor harks back to African, Aztec and Egyptian roots. The mood comes through most obviously in rough-edged prints from stenciled wood-carvings to graphic sunbursts and hieroglyphic drawings.

The back to nature bent follows through in the earthy color palette — from sandy beige to deep terra-cotta. These rich tones accent the spring's heavy concentration of neutral khakis and rustic batik prints.

• Hot Hues: Spring's passel of prints in tropical shades begs for eye-popping colors that give subtlety the slip. Bold, bright mixes — not monochromatic overkill — make the strongest statements.

• The Silver Standard: When warm weather rolls in there's nothing like the cold glint of silver to cool you off. Its clean white gleam is well suited to summer because it stands out against a tan.

Sunglasses test market's friendly skies

NEW YORK (AP) — The newest sunglasses to soar onto the market this spring is the new Boeing collection by Carrera.

The high-tech specs include a special key to adjust nose pad supports and tension shock absorbers. They come in a red velour lined case and have a silver-plated guarantee card to ensure "the perfect construction of the glasses."

Each pair is made of fine German silver and has five inner layers of 20-karat gold plating. After each pair is thoroughly checked, they are embossed with their own serial number.

Gerhard Waldschutz, president of the Austria-based Carrera optical company, called the licensing agreement with Boeing historic. "Never before has a firm of such size and stature licensed its name to a packaged goods firm."

The Boeing Carrera line is sold in selected optical stores, ski and sport shops and major department stores. The suggested retail price for the classes ranges from $145 to $200.

New designs simple

New York Times News Service

Ricky Vider used to work for the Israeli Consulate in Los Angeles until "one day I just made a line of clothes," she said. The wool trench coats, simple black turtlenecks and leggings, organza skirts and blazers decorated with velvet squares, and big white shirts for men now on display in her showroom for fall look Japanese but have an American sense of humor.

Gail Roberts has chosen to design in France, she said on a recent visit, "because it's not like Seventh Avenue, where you need $1 million to be heard."

Casey seeks spy charges against NBC

By BRYAN BRUMLEY

WASHINGTON (AP) — CIA Director William J. Casey is trying to tighten the tap against leaks of U.S. intelligence secrets by seeking criminal charges against NBC-TV for reporting that U.S. submarines eavesdrop in Soviet harbors.

Casey said Monday that the NBC report, if true, violated a 1950 law against the willful disclosure of U.S. ability to make and break codes, and that he had referred the matter to the Justice Department.

John Russell, a spokesman for the Justice Department, said he had no comment on the matter. Network spokeswoman Sharon Metcalf said "NBC has referred Casey's allegation to legal counsel to review," and had no further comment.

Casey's action appeared to be part of a wider Reagan administration effort to plug leaks in government. The administration has recently dismissed a Pentagon executive suspected of disclosing covert arms transfers to insurgents in Afghanistan, and fired a State Department speechwriter who leaked a classified cable from the U.S. ambassador to Argentina critical of comments made by House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill, D-Mass., on a visit there.

NBC, on its "Today" show Monday morning, said accused spy Ronald W. Pelton may have given the Soviets information about one of the National Security Agency's most sensitive secrets — a project code named "Ivy Bells." The network said that under the program, U.S. submarines eavesdrop inside Soviet harbors.

NBC did not repeat the original story in its Monday evening news broadcast, but did report Casey's action.

Pelton went on trial Monday on charges of selling the Kremlin secrets he obtained through his job at the NSA, which is thought to be Washington's largest but most clandestine intelligence organization, collecting and decoding communications for the Pentagon.

Casey also has threatened editors of the Washington Post with prosecution if they published a story the newspaper has prepared on the Pelton case, the newspaper said in today's editions. The Post said it is still weighing Casey's objections to the story.

In his statement, Casey said:

"We believe that the assertions, if true, made by James Polk on the NBC 'Today Show' this morning violate the prohibitions in 18 USC 798 against publishing any classified information concerning the communications intelligence activities of the United States. My statutory obligation to protect intelligence sources and methods requires me to refer this matter to the Department of Justice."

Casey recently threatened to prosecute several news organizations for reporting that U.S. intelligence officials had intercepted communications by the Libyan government linking its agents to the bombing last month of a West Berlin disco.

After the reports, "the Libyans stopped using these communications, and this is bound to put other peaceful citizens in jeopardy," Casey said last Thursday in a speech before the annual meeting of the American Jewish Committee.

Casey told the meeting he did not favor prosecution in the West Berlin case because "the milk has been spilled," but would use the law to protect other intelligence secrets.

Casey had asked the Justice Department to block The Washington Post from publishing an article about U.S. intelligence capabilities, but was turned down, the newspaper reported last Sunday.

The "Comint" (communications intelligence) law cited by Casey was enacted in 1950 to protect U.S. codes and code-breaking capabilities. To date, it has never been used against a news organization, although several spies have been sentenced under it.

Pelton has been indicted under Comint, and the statute was used in 1954 to win a seven-year sentence against another NSA employee, Joseph S. Peterson Jr., for giving secrets to a Dutch friend.

Perhaps the best known Comint case involved Christopher Boyce, convicted in 1977 on charges of selling thousands of secrets to the Soviet Union and sentenced to 40 years in prison.

Congress passed the 1950 Comint law with no debate two years after President Harry Truman signed a secret memorandum creating the NSA, James Bamford has written in his book on the agency, "The Puzzle Palace."

The Comint law traces its geneaology to government efforts to block disclosures about a predecessor of the NSA, MI-18 or Military Intelligence 18, a cipher unit formed during World War I to monitor and decode foreign communications.

The unit was disbanded in 1929 by Secretary of State Henry L. Stimson, who declared that "Gentlemen do not read each other's mail."

The head of the unit, Herbert O. Yardley, subsequently worked with a free-lance journalist to produce a book, "The American Black Chamber," detailing the activities of M-18.

After failing to block publication of Yardley's book, the government impounded the manuscript to a sequel by Yardley describing the interception and decoding of Japanese messages during the 1921-22 disarmament conference.

Fruit frequent source of toxins, Great Lakes area study shows

By PAUL RAEBURN
AP Science Editor

MACKINAC ISLAND, Mich. (AP) — Food, especially fruit, is the most frequent source of human exposure to toxic chemicals such as dioxin and PCBs in an area bordering the Great Lakes, a new study shows.

"Everybody thought it was drinking water," said the director of the study, Katherine Davies of the Toronto Department of Public Health.

She found, however, that although drinking water contained a variety of toxic chemicals, most human exposure came through food. And the statistics held up even when contaminated Great Lakes fish were excluded from samples.

Food grown in southern Ontario outside Toronto provided 85 percent of the PCBs, dioxin, DDT and other chemicals to which residents of the city are exposed.

The remainder of the exposure to these hazardous substances came from air and drinking water, Davies said Monday at the Second World Conference on Large Lakes.

She cautioned that the study was only a preliminary one that may not apply elsewhere.

Foods were analyzed for their toxic content after being separated into five categories — meat and eggs; milk; above-ground vegetables; below-ground vegetables; and fruit.

Fruit had the highest levels of dioxin and another class of hazardous industrial byproducts called dibenzofurans, she said. But it wasn't clear why fruit should be especially affected, she said.

The findings are significant outside the Toronto area because the pollutants in the food probably are being carried thousands of miles before being deposited on Ontario.

Davies believes particles of DDT, which has been banned in the United States for about 15 years, are becoming airborne in Central America and carried from there to Canada.

"In Canada, we need a much better system of monitoring food," she said. "That's probably true in the United States, too. We need to look at why these things are staying around."

In another study presented at the conference, Frank D'Itri, a chemist from Michigan State University, noted that levels of DDT are remaining constant in the Great Lakes after falling significantly during the 1970s. Some other toxic substances could be increasing in the lakes, although it is too soon to know for sure, he said.

NATION IN BRIEF

Cokeville will reopen school

COKEVILLE, Wyo. (AP) — Pupils who spent three hours as hostages before a bomb blast that burned scores of children and adults still dream of the attacks and say "it's gonna be scary going back" when school reopens this week.

"When the school building, the teachers and the students are ready, that's when we'll open the school," Cokevill Elementary School principal Max Excell said Monday night. Teachers were to begin planning today for classes.

Three hundred to 400 family members of the former hostages attended the meeting as local psychologist Dr. Nohl Sandall and nine specialists discussed the trauma of the incident that left David and Doris Young, who held 150 pupils and teachers for $300 million ransom, dead.

"What we're expecting is changes in patterns of sleeping, unusual dreams, or a preoccupation or fear associated with the school building," Sandall told the families, who applauded the courage of the teachers involved.

"Thanks for risking your own lives for the kids' sake," read a large card signed by many members of this tiny town near the Idaho border.

Memorial held for climbers

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — Hundreds of mourners turned out at memorial services for four of the nine climbers who died following a sudden blizzard on Mount Hood, and doctors said two survivors were getting better.

Brinton Clark, 16, was well enough Monday to inquire about her companions by asking, "Sick?" Dr. William Long said, reading from a statement from the parents. She was told the others were ill.

Her condition was upgraded to good and she could be discharged from Emanuel Hospital in 10 days, said Long, who described her as "emotionally fragile."

Giles Thompson, 16, who lost both legs below the knees in an operation Sunday, was taken off a respirator at Providence Medical Center after he awakened, said spokeswoman Sister Margarita Acosta.

"He is alert and responsive. His family is with him," Sister Acosta said. The Longview, Wash., teen-ager's family was expected to tell him about the amputations because he was not alert enough to be told before the operation.

Woman can't be scoutmaster

MILFORD, Conn. (AP) — A state judge has told Catherine Pollard that she can't be a scoutmaster, but the 67-year-old woman isn't giving up.

"The Boy Scouts are behind the times. They are a marvelous organization, but they have to get with it," Mrs. Pollard said Monday.

A few hours earlier, Derby Superior Court Judge Joseph J. Chernauskas had released a decision saying state law can't force the Boy Scouts to accept women as scoutmaster.

"I'm not going to let them get away with it," Mrs. Pollard said. "We are going to take this to the state Supreme Court."

Mrs. Pollard first asked the Boy Scouts to officially make her a troop leader in 1974, 24 years after she became involved with the organization and a year after she started running a local troop because no man could be found to do it.

When the Boy Scouts rejected her request, Mrs. Pollard took her case to the state's human rights commission. In 1984, the commission said she could lead a troop, but the Boy Scouts then appealed that decision to Chernauskas.

Teacher 'surprised' by action

JACKSON, Mich. (AP) — A teacher who bucked her union to challenge the public school system's job-security plan for blacks said she was surprised when the U.S. Supreme Court struck down the arrangement.

"I can't believe it," said Wendy Wygant, one of eight white teachers in Jackson who contested the school district's affirmative action policy when they were laid off before black teachers with less seniority.

"We were prepared for the worst," the 32-year-old kindergarten teacher said Monday after the Supreme Court struck down Jackson's layoff policy.

The high court's 5-4 ruling said Jackson's plan for laying off teachers was not based on convincing evidence of past racial discrimination.

The ruling cast into doubt similar policies adopted by other school districts in Michigan and other states, lawyers said.

Locomotives modern on inside

ROANOKE, Va. (AP) — Some of the nation's largest railroads are updating their fleets with locomotives that look like the old model but are actually high-tech machines that are cutting fuel and maintenance costs.

When Norfolk Southern Corp. receives the 75 locomotives it has ordered, nearly a tenth of its 2,302 engines will contain microprocessors that monitor their operation, said Donald W. Mayberry, assistant vice president and chief mechanical officer for locomotives.

The computers, which are able to cut fuel consumption by adjusting or shutting off machinery when it is not needed, have contributed to an 8 percent decrease in fuel use during the past two years, Mayberry said.

Burlington Northern Railroad has about 50 microprocessor-equipped locomotives, and Union Pacific Railroad just bought 60, officials said. Each engine, produced by General Motors Corp. and General Electric Co., costs at least $1.25 million, officials said.

Walker glad son 'had guts'

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Spymaster John Walker was "happy I actually had the guts" to join his spy ring, Walker's son testified during the espionage trial of walker's Navy buddy, Jerry Whitworth.

Michael Walker testified Monday that his father never told him how he got involved in espionage or about others he'd recruited, although John Walker did mention his daughter, Laura, who has said her father tried to recruit her.

Michael, 23, also said he didn't believe his mother at first when she told him his father was a spy for the Soviet Union.

"She was drinking heavily at around midnight," he said. "...She just brought it up — 'Your father's a spy for the Soviet Union.'"

"Gradually, I became interested, obviously. The money was good," Michael Walker said. "He was happy I actually had the guts to do it."

Michael, who has pleaded guilty to five espionage-related charges, also said his father asked him to talk to his mother, Barbara, in 1983 so that she would not turn them in. John Walker has testified that his wife had regularly threatened to expose his activities unless he gave her money.

Arms foes need 'convincing'

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration says it has not mustered enough votes yet to salvage a big arms sale for Saudi Arabia and must do "a lot of convincing" to get members of Congress to switch their votes.

Reagan has until midnight Wednesday to veto a congressional resolution of disapproval against the $354 million sale of missiles, including shoulder-fired Stingers.

An administration official, speaking Monday on condition of anonymity, said the White House could count 30 Senate votes against an override of Reagan's veto, four votes short of the number needed to sustain the president if all members are present. Another official, also speaking privately, called the 30-vote estimate "pretty optimistic."

Deaver leaves for South Korea

WASHINGTON (NYT) — Michael K. Deaver left Monday for a one-week business trip to South Korea, delaying his return appearance before a congressional committee that is examining conflict-of-interest charges against him.

Deaver, the former White House deputy chief of staff who is now a lobbyist, is being investigated by a congressional committee and the Justice Department to determine whether his lobbying activities and his White House ties violate conflict-of-interest laws.

Brock draws mixed reaction at Teamsters convention

By MATT YANCEY
AP Labor Writer

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — Labor Secretary William Brock drew cheers when he said he was addressing the Teamsters convention even though its president faces racketeering charges, but delegates listened in stony silence as he asked if it isn't "just plain time to clean house."

The 2,000 delegates gave their embattled president, Jackie Presser, a thunderous standing ovation on Monday when he accused investigators in Brock's department, a Senate subcommittee and "certain elements of the media" of waging a five-year vendetta against him.

Presser, 59, called the labor racketeering and embezzlement indictment handed up Friday against him and two other union officials a desparate attempt "to embarrass the working men and women of our great international union."

His election Wednesday to another five-year term is considered foregone, despite accusations he took part in a "ghost workers" payroll padding scheme to embezzle $700,000 from his Cleveland local.

Brock, who often speaks off the cuff when addressing unions and congressional committees, stuck word-by-word to a carefully prepared text in telling the Teamsters they have lost the public's trust and are perceived as "bound to stay in trouble."

"As secretary of labor, it isn't easy to hear about mobbed-up locals or pension fund abuse — misuse of members' blood and sweat," Brock said. "It's impossible for me to ignore that; it's necessary for you to address it."

The delegates listened in dead silence just minutes after giving the labor secretary a rousing ovation when he said he had rejected advice to cancel his appearance because of the Teamsters chief's indictment.

"To have accepted such advice would have implied a contempt for one fundamental principle ... that every person is and must be considered innocent until proven guilty in a court of law," he said. "Having said that does not make my talk any easier. These are difficult things to say but these are difficult times for the Teamsters."

Brock recalled that the Republican Party, of which he was chairman in the late 1970s, lost public trust after Watergate and said, "The relatively few of us who were left...had to ask some hard questions, the hardest one 'Why?'

"The truth was that a few people had made mistakes, some big mistakes. But the perception was that the whole party was rotten, and that simple was not so. You've got some of the same problems today."

He said the union should address its institutional processes, such as the way it elects officers, "which make it easy for some who want to exploit members to do so."

Locals "where crime interests reign and members' interests are ignored or trampled" should be put into trusteeship, Brock said. "Are there areas where good people have been silent too long — where it's just plain time to clean house? If so, do it."

Aides said Brock had outlined the thrust of what he wanted to tell the Teamsters a month ago, well before Presser's indictment but after a White House commission concluded that the union has been "firmly under the influence of organized crime since the 1950s."

Presser's only response to Brock's remarks was to tell the delegates, "You can't ask for much more than that."
