Carter-Begin talks ending in dead end

WASHINGTON (AP) — Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin, acknowledging that his talks with President Carter have been "difficult," nonetheless said today that peace talks between Israel and Egypt should continue.

Begin said "the world needs some patience" as the two sides try to reach agreement. "We've only started to negotiate. I don't think any peace treaty was concluded in days," he said.

But Begin, in an interview with NBC news, indicated Israel was standing firm in its refusal to make the concessions asked by Carter on the issues of Israeli withdrawl from the West Bank, establishment of a Palestinian homeland, and a halt to Israeli settlements in occupied territory.

Referring to Arab demands that Israel withdraw from the West Bank and allow establishment of a Palestinian state, Begin said "these two demands are completely unacceptable to the Israelis."

Begin said that although obstacles have diminished the optimism felt in the wake of Egyptian President Anwar Sadat's meeting with him in Jerusalem in December "I wouldn't say I am less optimistic."

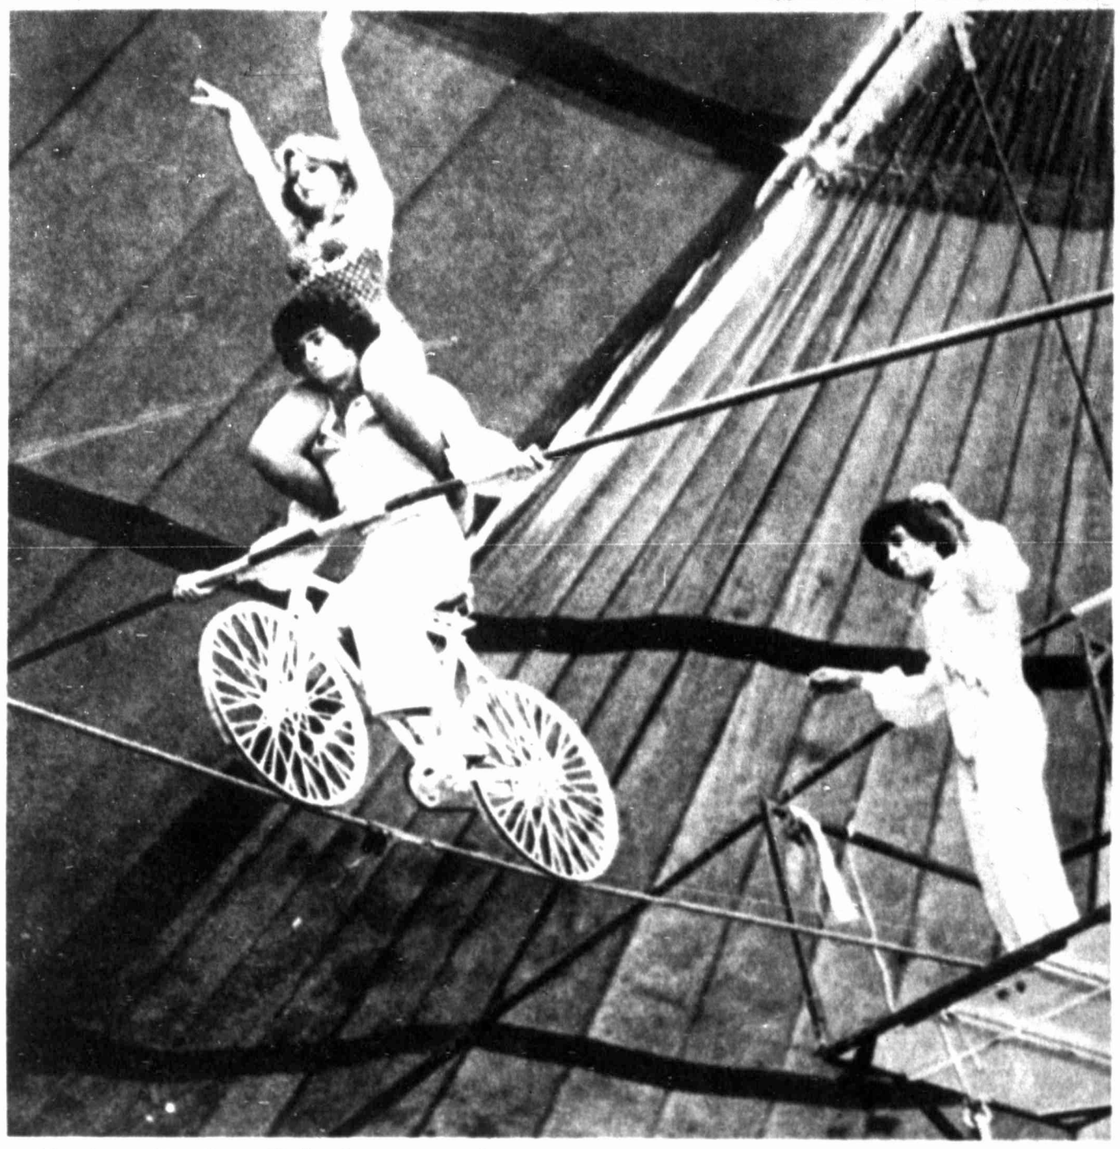

American officials, however, in analyzing the talks beween Carter and Begin, cast the situation in a much gloomier light.

Some members of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, after meeting today with President Carter, said Israeli inflexibility has dimmed Middle East peace prospects.

Sen. Jacob K. Javiis, R-N.Y., said: "I think that prospects are momentarily discouraging" and he described Carter's mood as deeply frustrated after two days of meetings with Begin.

Sen. George McGovern, D-S.D., said that "unless there is some more flexiblity on the part of Israel, I don't see any hope for a settlement." McGovern said neither the Arabs nor Israel show "the degree of flexibility it will take to bring about a settlement."

Sen. Charles Percy, R-Ill., said Israel has appeared to take a step backwards in the peace process.

Chamber board endorses expansion of golf course

The Midland Chamber of Commerce's board of directors Wednesday unanimously endorsed the proposed expansion of the municipal golf course at Hogan Park and authorized an ad hoc task force to propose solutions to Midland's downtown parking problems.

Chamber President Harrell Feldt, who put both issues before the directors, said the expanded golf course would be an effort "to keep up with the growth and development of our community."

The nine directors attending the chamber's noon business meeting in the Midland Hilton backed the April 1 $500,000 bond election that calls for adding nine holes to the 18-hole golf course.

"There is no doubt that the facility is crowded right now," Feldt said.

Feldt, an attorney and a non-golfer, noted the "importance in this day and time of recreational facilities" to serve the city and to attract new businesses and industries to Midland County.

Prior to the vote, Feldt said the chamber should take stands on issues.

"The Chamber of Commerce should study in detail and with understanding each of the bond issues as they come along," Feldt said.

He said the chamber should make public its viewpoint on issues.

"I am (also) advocating that we speak out on those (issues) that we are opposed to," he said.

Generally speaking, Feldt said the chamber should "work to improve the quality of life of the people in this community."

Chamber directors approved the ad hoc task force that might come up with "imaginative ways to solve" the congested downtown car parking problem.

Proposals would be forwarded to the Midland City Council for consideration.

Director Louis Hochman, who operates a restaurant, said people "won't come downtown" to shop due

Study says doctors averaging $63,000

WASHINGTON (AP) — Doctor bills are increasing half again as fast as the overall inflation rate and the situation may get worse, says a new government study that notes American physicians two years ago had a median income of $63,000.

The report lists several causes for the rapid increase, focusing on widespread employer-paid insurance coverage.

Unless the consumer feels the bite personally, the report says, "there is little reason to predict that physician fee inflation will not continue to outpace price increases in the overall economy."

Medical insurance, both from private insurers and the government, covers 80 percent of the population, a fact that the report says has "exempted physicians' fees from the usually restraining effect of market forces."

The Council on Wage and Price Stability study, released Wednesday, says doctor bills jumped 9.3 percent in 1977, while other consumer prices rose 6.2 percent.

The report "does a very good job describing the problem ... supply and demand don't work in medicine," commented Dr. Sidney Wolfe, head of the consumer-oriented Health Research

Troupe grief-stricken, but their show goes on

SAN JUAN, Puerto Rico (AP) — Everything was there. The frantic confusion of tumbling acrobats. Sadfaced clowns. Animal acts. Trapeze artists. Everything but the greatest aerialist of all time, Karl Wallenda.

"In the great tradition of the circus, the show goes on," the circus ring announcer said.

Thousands bowed their heads in silence for Wallenda, who had plunged to his death less than six hours earlier Wednesday during a promotional appearance for the Pan American Circus here. It was a natural end to the 73-year-old Wallenda's tragedy-filled life and the close of an acrobatic era.

"It was the way he wanted to go — doing what he loved most," said a circus official who asked not to be named.

Wallenda, carrying a balance pole and wearing beat-up slippers, had walked gracefully as he started across a 300-foot cable strung between the towers of two San Juan resort hotels. Then the wind picked up.

He was still walking, leaning into the wind at a 45-degree angle, when a gust threw him off-balance at the halfway mark. He was 120 feet above ground.

"The balance pole started going up and down, up and down, like a seesaw," said Gary Williams, a San Juan newspaper photographer who saw the accident.

Wallenda made a desperate attempt to save himself.

"He grabbed the wire with his right hand as he was sitting briefly on the wire. Only his rear end and his hand were on the wire. His feet were in mid air," Williams recounted.

"And then he fell. He just couldn't hold it."

People fainted and collapsed.

Screams of "Oh my God, oh my God" filled the air.

Police rushed Wallenda to nearby Presbyterian Hospital. The aerialist was dead on arrival at 10:20 a.m.

"Our life is show business," the 58-year big top veteran and founder of the Great Wallendas said in 1972 after the fourth member of his family perished in a high-wire accident.

"Without show business we don't

Prisoners still strike

The hunger strike by 22 inmates of the Midland County Jail was continuing today.

Sheriff Dallas Smith said he suspects the heart of the three-day strike may be an effort to get smoking privileges reinstated in the jail.

Those privileges were denied all prisoners—except trustys—two months ago as a measure Smith said was necessary to meet fire safety standards set by the Texas Commission on Jail Standards.

Smith said he had not met with the inmates since the hunger strike began but that he did read a letter of prisoner grievances.

"They (prisoners) don't like powdered milk. Well, that's fine. That's what they are going to get," Smith said. "They want basketball courts and ping-pong tables. Let's face it, they really don't want to be in jail," Smith said.

Smith said the hunger strike involves one-half to two-thirds of the 45 prisoners in the county jail.

Measure raising retirement age gets Senate OK, goes to Carter

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate passed and sent to the White House today a bill that will raise the mandatory retirement age to 70 for most Americans and eliminate it completely for federal employees.

The Senate vote was 62 to 10 after the House approved it earlier this week. President Carter is expected to sign the legislation.

"This bill is a significant milestone for older Americans," said Jacob K. Javits, R-N.Y. "No longer can an employer arbitrarily force a worker to retire at 65 if he or she is qualified to do the job and wants to continue gainful employment."

As soon the president signs the bill, Rep. Claude Pepper, D-Fla., chairman of the House Aging Committee, said he will introduce another measure to eliminate all mandatory retirement, thus allowing everybody to work as long as he is capable or as long as he can find work.

The bill going to Carter amends the 1967 Age Discrimination Act by making it unlawful for private employers to force workers to retire before age 70 as of Jan. 1, 1979.

Beginning in September this year, federal workers would be allowed to continue on the job until they are ready to retire. For most Civil Service employees the forced retirement age is now 70.

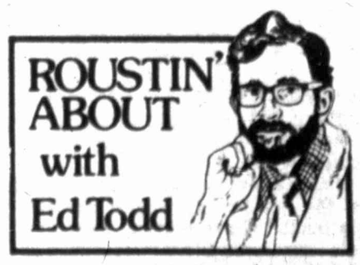

The bill applies to private sector workers whose bosses have 20 or more employees. This takes in about 70 percent of the U.S. labor force.

Employers would still have the right to discharge persons of any age for incompetence, said Pepper.

State and local governments are covered under the new age 70 retirement cutoff provisions. But there are some occupational exceptions, such

Easter brings holiday thoughts

Do the years seem to telescope into one another?

Are they like the collapsible tin cup your family took on vacation before the rise of the throwaways?

Occasionally the cup leaked or folded at the most inopportune times. And sometimes the years get jumbled, daydreams get mingled with facts and nothing is what it seems to be.

Eventually, "things" go back to normal. Like it or not, you regain perspective.

Does one day lead to another? Does time stop?

Does one holiday bring on another? No. The passing of time takes care of that.

Is a holiday a holy day? Could be. Used to be, perhaps. Is the world less holy today than it was in centuries past? Anyway, what's holy about the secular?

To the Christianized world, this is the time to reflect on the Resurrection of Christ and on the promise of a hereafter.

Easter is also the time of the bunny and the painted eggs. The department-store premise seems to be that the Easter bunny brought forth the egg. Of course, that concept would be a blow to evolutionists and to anybody who knows the difference between a rabbit and a tortoise.

More and more, holidays are becoming a time to relax and to recreate.

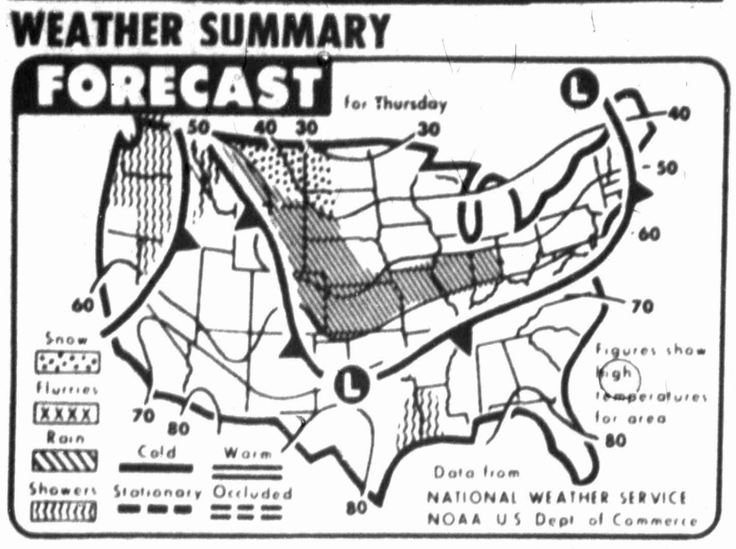

Holidays. There are plenty of them: New Year's, which is not particularly holy; Lent, the Passover, Easter, the Fourth of July, Labor Day, Halloween, Thanksgiving and Christmas which, like Easter, abounds with the extraneous.

What do they all mean? Intentionally or not, to most they provide a breather from the workaday routine. You just accept the days off, relax and sometimes do something.

But something's amiss. It's like a

as persons in high-risk jobs such as policemen or firefighters who could still be forced to retire earlier than 70.

The bill provides for some exceptions and delays.

It will permit mandatory retirement between age 65 and 70 of a person who for the two years before retirement, was employed in a "bona fide executive or high policymaking position" and is entitled to a pension of at least $27,000 annually.

In calculating the income figure for such executives, the bill excludes amounts attributable to Social Security, employee contributions and contributions of prior employers.

Colleges and universities would still be allowed to retire tenured professors at age 65 until July 1, 1982. They had argued against changing the 65 ceiling at all, but settled on the compromise in order to give them time to adjust their hiring policies.

19 arrested in drug case

ODESSA — Odessa police made 19 arrests Wednesday night on drug charges returned by an Ector County grand jury.

Police said the arrests included 12 on charges of delivery of marijuana, three on delivery of heroin charges, three on delivery of methmphetamine charges and one on a charge of delivery of LSD.

A police spokesman said the arrests came after indictments based on undercover buys over a three to four week period.

Michigan congressman indicted for kickbacks

WASHINGTON (AP) — Rep. Charles C. Diggs Jr., a Democratic congressman from Michigan for more than 23 years, was indicted today on charges of padding his office payroll, taking kickbacks and having the government pay employees of his Detroit funeral home.

The 35-count indictment by a federal grand jury charges that he defrauded the United States of more than $101,000. Each count carries a maximum penalty of five years in prison. If convicted, Diggs could also be fined upt to $224,000.

Diggs, in Mozambique when the indictment was returned, said through his office here: "I am innocent of the charges being leveled against me. I do not believe I have violated any federal or any House rule or precedent. Allegations in an indictment do not prove guilt and I am confident that due process of law will vindicate me."

Diggs, chairman of the House Committee on the District of Columbia, was scheduled to meet President Carter in Africa next week.

The indictment said the alleged scheme to defraud the United States began around July 1, 1973 and continued until March 2, 1977.

Fourteen of the counts against the congressman were for mail fraud. One count said Diggs put Jean G. Stultz, an employee of the House District Committee earning $14,667 a year, on the payroll of his own office at an additional salary of $19,000 a year.

The indictment said Diggs then "directed that this additional salary ...be kicked back and applied for the use of defendant Diggs."

Group in Washington.

The Federal Trade Commission, also looking into rising medical costs, is considering allowing doctors to advertise so consumers could compare fees. The FTC says previous prohibitions against physician advertising amount to price fixing.

The study released Wednesday says consumer spending for doctors' services rose from $2.7 billion in 1950 to an estimated $35 billion in this fiscal year.

Some 60 percent of the rise results from higher fees, the report says. The rest is attributed to population growth and an increase in the number of visits to doctors' offices for an increasing variety of services.

The medical profession is charged in the report with having restricted the number of doctors entering the profession in the past through control of medical education. That practice no longer exists, the report said.

The American Medical Association did not immediately respond to the report in general, however, saying it would issue its analysis within a few days.

survive, and we have to exist."

And so the circus here opened at exactly 4 p.m.

"This afternoon all that is missing is the physical presence of Karl Wallenda," the master-of-ceremonies said softly into his microphone. The rest of the Great Wallendas troupe — granddaughter Rietta, 17, and two nephews — were there to carry on the legacy as tears and grief were pushed aside as the circus came alive with a crash of cymbals.

Funeral services were tentatively planned for Saturday or Sunday in Sarasota, Fla., the city that was both home and headquarters for the Wallendas.

18-year-old killed in bike mishap

FORT DAVIS — An 18-year-old Pecos woman plunged 60 feet to her death when the brakes failed on her 10-speed bicycle that was going down a steep incline at an estimated 60 miles an hour Tuesday afternoon.

Susan Annette Daniel suffered massive head injuries and a broken neck in the accident shortly after 2:30 p.m. Tuesday in the Davis Mountain State Park.

She was pronounced dead at the scene by Peace Justice George D. Spencer of Fort Davis.

Texas Highway Patrolman David Byrnes of Fort Davis said Miss Daniel was riding down a steep incline with two friends from Barstow when the accident happened.

The three were riding single file with a man in the lead. Miss Daniel behind him and another woman following behind Miss Daniel, Byrnes said.

Parade honoring Lozano delayed

ODESSA — A parade scheduled in memory of Larry Lozano has been postponed until after the date has been set for an inquest into Lozano's death in the Ector County Jail Jan. 22.

Perfecto Mendoza, who had obtained a parade permit for the march, said Wednesday the march would be postponed from its scheduled date Saturday.

Mendoza also said he wants the city of Odessa to expand the permit to allow the group to move around the courthouse and that he is dropping a request for police escort. The Brown Beret, a Mexican-American organization, will provide security for the march, Mendoza said.

City's chance for rain slim

Although the smell of rain was fairly strong in Midland this morning, the weatherman said only a 20 percent chance of precipitation is predicted for the city through tonight.

Skies should continue to be partly cloudy through Friday with temperatres becoming cooler tonight. The low temperature tonight is expected to fall to the lower 40s. Friday's high temperature only should reach the upper 60s.

Wednesday's high temperature was 89 degrees, the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Air Terminal said. Last night's low temperature was 57 degrees.

Proposals to endorse the bond issue and to form the task force were recommended by the chamber's six-member executive committee.

In other business, the chamber directors:

— Appointed five new members to three-year terms on the 15-member board of directors of the Industrial Foundation of Midland. Appointed were Jim Allison Jr., Boley Embrey, M. A. Cappadonna, Bill Franklin and Ray Moudy.

— Accepted two resignations from the 24-member board of directors: those of Hampton Hodges and Herb Etheridge. Both are leaving Midland because of job transfers.

— Heard a report from Fred Tyler, the chamber's executive vice president, on a letter-writing campaign to influence Congressional voting on the Labor Reform Act. Tyler read a letter from Texas Senator Lloyd Bentsen who favors "extended debate" on the bill.

When you were a child, perhaps you asked "why this" or "why that." Maybe you got a satisfactory answer; maybe you didn't.

But one thing you knew: You wanted an answer to settle your curiosity or maybe to stimulate it even more. You weren't always after attention.

Today, you still ask "why." But not to one person. You've become wise to the ways of man; no one person has the answer. So you go to the books and other reference material compiled by many supposedly wise, knowledgable but wholly incomplete men and women sometimes called "scholars."

And you come up with answers and conflicts.

Easter.

How did the high-strung rabbit and the fragile egg get mixed up with this otherwise holy event? The egg, of course, represents new life. It's also a fertility symbol.

However it came about, the bunny is a part of the season of gravity — a season filled with phrases such as "died for our sins," "eternal life," "hope and salvation" and so on.

Perhaps the light side of Easter is just to entertain the children while the grown-ups meditate before the crucifix.

Space crew not early with excitement, enthusiasm

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) — For astronaut John W. Young, who has flown in space four times and walked on the moon, it's too early to get excited about returning to space next year.

But don't expect such reserve from Robert L. Crippen, a space rookie, who will join Young next spring in manning the first flight of America's next space adventure — the space shuttle.

"I noticed in the advance release that they called John the veteran and me the rookie," said Crippen, a Navy commander who has been an astronaut since 1969. "Well, it took me 12 years to become a rookie. I heard John say he's not excited yet but I can't help it. I'm very excited right now."

Young and Crippen were named last week as the prime flight crew for the first of six scheduled test flights of the space shuttle orbiter, tentatively scheduled for liftoff next March.

"It's too early to get excited right now," said Young, one of 12 astronauts to walk on the moon. "It's still a year away and there's a lot of work to be done."

But don't mistake Young's calm for a lack of enthusiasm.

"This is absolutely a revolutionary flying machine," said Young, who previously went into space aboard Gemini 3 and 10 and on Apollo 10 and 16.

"It's going to do things with space flight that will change the world. It's going to do things for aviation that will change aviation in ways that I think even those that are involved can't imagine. So it's going to be a very exciting mission for of us. There are no bad missions on space flights."

Young and Crippen will man the first of six orbital flights of the orbiter craft, each with increasing complexity, to test it for future flights that will include scientific experimental equipment.

No scientific equipment will be aboard the first flight, which will last 58 hours.

"It (the orbiter) will routinely put up to 65,000 pounds of payload in earth orbit 10 to 100 times cheaper than we've ever been able to do before," Young said.

"Being able to get up there routinely will make available our ability to exploit the advantages of space, which is unbelieveable — things you can't buy on earth without a great deal of expense."

Young's flight on Gemini 3 marked the first time a spacecraft changed its path. Apollo 10 made the first orbit of the moon and on Apollo 16, Young and astronaut Charles M. Duke Jr. spent 20 hours, 15 minutes on the moon's surface.

Crippen was a member of the Air Force's Manned Orbital Laboratory Program (MOL) before it was cancelled in 1969. As an astronaut, he worked in support roles on both Skylab and Apollo-Soyuz programs.

"All that's been very exciting but nothing's been equal to this," the 40-year-old Crippen said. "I knew with the space shuttle I'd get a chance to fly. But I never dreamed I would have a chance to get on the first one."

March 1979 has been projected as the tentative liftoff for Young and Crippen's flight, but there has been speculation the flight may be delayed. Young is leaving speculation to others.

The National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA) also is considering a mission in October 1979 to boost the Skylab into a higher orbit.

Stories of hallucinations prompt PCP legislation

WASHINGTON (AP) — Haunted by grotesque visions, a Los Angeles teenager gouged out his own eyes. Another drank rat poison to kill the rodents he believed had infested his body.

And a third pulled out his own teeth with pliers.

The above examples of such morbid behavior echoed through the Senate on Wednesday as Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, introduced legislation aimed at halting the illegal manufacture and sale of phencyclidine, or PCP. The drug—originally developed as a tranquilizer for elephants and other large animals—also goes under the street names of "Angel Dust" and "Hog."

Bentsen said unpublished Drug Enforcement Administration statistics show that confiscated dosage units of PCP more than doubled between 1976 and 1977, rising from 1.7 million to 3.5 million.

"The widespread use of PCP is a plague on the youth of America," Bentsen began. "The drug can kill or cripple a mind. It's the most dangerous illicit drug in use today. For the price of a school lunch, an eighth grade student can literally blow his mind, possibly forever."

Bentsen said he got the accounts of teen-agers pulling their own teeth, drinking rat poison and gouging out their eyes from the files of the Los Angeles Police Department.

"In one recent incident, a teenager murdered his mother and father with a high-powered rifle while suffering from PCP hallucinations," Bentsen added.

Bentsen also cited a recent survey by the National Institute for Drug Abuse which found one million people under the age of 18 who admitted using "Angel Dust" and a DEA report that put the average age of persons admitted to hospital emergency rooms suffering from PCP affects at 15.

Bentsen's proposed bill seeks to reduce the availability of the drug by requiring positive identification of persons purchasing piperidine, a chemical used to cure rubber and a key ingredient in manufacturing PCP.

The bill would also increase the maximum penalty for trafficking in PCP from five years and a $15,000 fine for the first offense to 10 years and a $150,000 fine.

"Any person with a few hundred dollars and perverse instincts can manufacture Angel Dust at home or in the back of a van," Bentsen said. "He runs a risk of blowing himself up in the process but this does not deter these entrepreneurs of derangement."

Whereabouts of letter may set trial's scope

TYLER, Texas (AP) — A hearing today over the whereabouts of a letter that allegedly will link paroled swindler Billie Sol Estes to a man facing kidnapping charges is expected to set the scope of the trial of promoter Don Trull.

Trull says the letter will show that Estes' secretary acknowledged the receipt of over half a million dollars for land in Smith County.

The 40-year-old Trull is charged with pouring gasoline around the Tyler office of Billy D. Pyron and then holding a Pyron employee hostage for several hours last August by threatening to ignite a cigarette lighter.

Jury selection was completed Wednesday. Testimony on the charges is expected to begin Monday.

Trull's lawyer has intimated he will try to introduce evidence that will link his client to Estes.

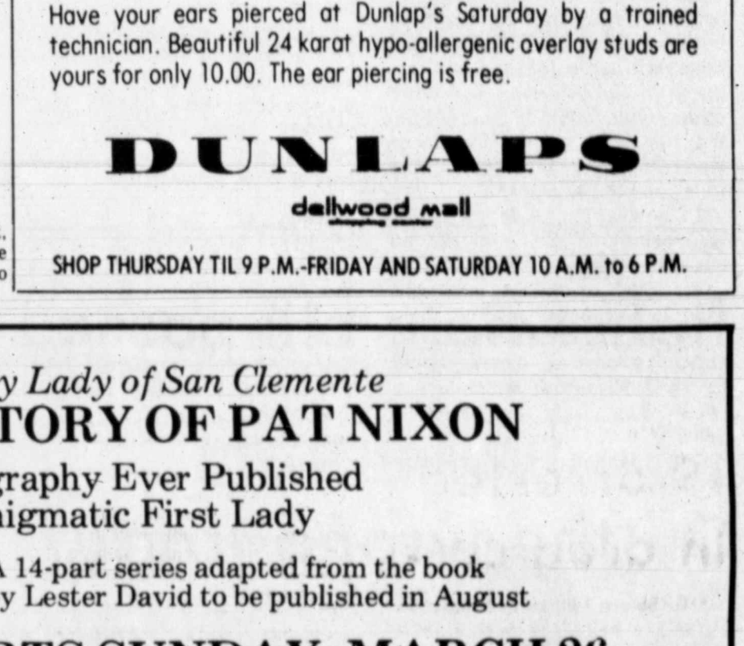

G. Brockett Irwin of Longview, Trull's attorney, has said he will seek to determine at today's hearing what happened to a letter that Trull claims he turned over to Smith County District Attorney A. D. Clark III with the other documents.

Clark has said he turned the voluminous documents over to the state attorney general's office, but reiterated Wednesday the letter in question was not among that material. State officials have said they never received the letter.

Estes is one of 55 witnesses subpoenaed by the defense.

Trull claims he did business with Pryon and Estes.

THE WOMAN BEHIND THE MASK
FINALLY REVEALED!

In her late twenties she married Richard Nixon. Once she did so and became aware of his passion for power that high office can confer, she consciously, deliberately programmed herself to help him achieve his political ambitions.

It was an awesome decision because it was to alter her life completely, making her the classic example of the woman who becomes a victim of man's single-minded drive for power.

From Pat's early childhood to the recent Haldeman disclosures, this almost all new material is detailed as never before. From her incredibly hard life as a farm girl, to a "you are there" tour of San Clemente, David delineates the true woman behind the mask.

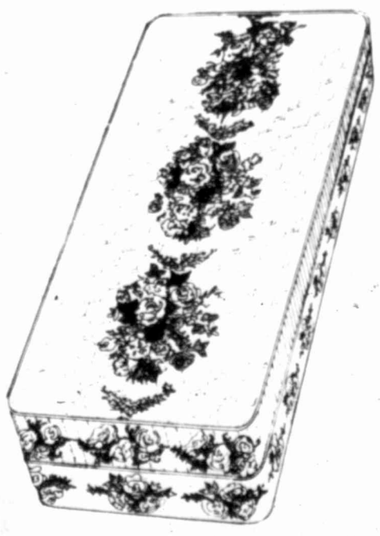

Now the full, intimate account....the good, the bad....the girlhood years....the frustrating 28 years with her husband's powerful political drive....the family....her Watergate role, and its behind-the-scenes rivalries, hate and emotion....the final tragedy....reveals the previously undisclosed story of remarkable Pat Nixon.

Bypass bureaucracy

Most everyone in Washington is agreed that inflation is pricing a college education out of the reach of many students. But not everyone is agreed on what to do about it.

Until a few weeks ago, a consensus developed around the several tuition-tax credit plans — authored by Sens. William V. Roth Jr., Bob Packwood and Daniel Patrick Moynihan and others — which would allow a straightforward tax-credit for any taxpayer paying college tuition for a dependent.

But on Feb. 8, President Carter announced his own plan, far different from the tuition tax-credit variety. Mr. Carter's plan would beef up the college work-study and the guaranteed student-loan programs. But, in the main, it would expand the Educational Opportunity grant program. Students from families earning between $16,000 and $25,000 would become eligible, for the first time, for grants of $250 each, and more money, too, would be poured into the existing grants for those students from families in the $8,000-to-$16,000 bracket.

So, now we have a debate joined in Washington over whether an expanded grants program or some kind of tuition tax-credit plan is the better way to help defray the rapidly rising costs of a college education. There should be no doubt about which is the better way. It is the tax-credit plan.

An expanded grants program would reflect the redistributionist ideology that pervades so many welfare and quasi-welfare programs. But a tuition tax-credit would reflect what it should — the goal of assisting and promoting education.

The grants program would require an expansion of the bureaucratic apparatus that siphons off part of every dollar between the taxpayer and the government beneficiary; in this case the student. But a tuition tax-credit would require merely the declaration of eligibility by a taxpayer on his income tax form; this way, not a drop of money would be lost.

Moreover, because students would have to "prove their needs," according to the Carter proposal, an expanded grants program would entail more forms, reviews, disclosures, paper work — in short, it would entail more of the usual nanny work of HEW. A tuition tax-credit, on the other hand, would entail merely that a student buy education services as he chooses, free of HEW supervision.

These are not the only differences, but they are the important ones, sufficient to indicate that the better approach, the tax-credit plan, is the one that has the main goal of helping education, that puts dollars undiminished into the hands of taxpayers, and that allows a student freely to enter the marketplace of education.

On the wrong track

There were 7,858 derailments on American railroads during 1977. The only consolation in that shocking statistic is that the great majority of them had only minor consequences — a delay in the movement of freight and an expense to the railroad companies. But in recent days we have seen how tragic and devastating the consequences can be — 20 persons dead and scores injured from an explosion of propane gas in one case and the release of chlorine gas in the other.

Obviously Congress did not accomplish everything it hoped with the passage in 1970 of the Federal Railroad Safety Act and the Hazardous Materials Transportation Act. Both of those acts were aimed at reducing the danger to railroad employees and the public from transportation accidents. Only last fall, the Transportation Department issued new rules for tank-car design in the event of a derailment.

The 300 federal inspectors assigned to enforce railroad safety rules may not be enough, and Transportation Secretary Brock Adams is urging that another 100 be added. That may not be a solution, either, if freight trains loaded with toxic or explosive materials continue to travel over poorly maintained track and roadbeds. The government should see that track maintenance gets higher priority in the subsidy program currently shoring up the sick railroad industry.

HEMISPHERE REPORT:

Latin governments try to muzzle the press

By WILLIAM GIANDONI
Copley News Service

William Giandoni

CANCUN, Mexico — Most Latin Americans now can read or hear or see only what their governments let them.

That, of course, is sad.

But what is really bad is that in the rest of the hemisphere, governments are considering what amounts to systems of thought control of their own.

There is not a major country in Latin America where the press, radio and television are really free, to judge by what newspaper editors and publishers told the recent Inter-American Press Association meeting here.

If bare-faced censorship does not exist, governments, whether recognized as dictatorial or not, either already have passed laws or amended constitutions or imposed restrictions that permit them control over the media of mass communication or are contemplating them. Take Mexico, for example.

Article 6 of the Mexican constitution was modified late in 1977 to include a provision that "the right to information will be guaranteed by the state."

Initially, said Alejandro Junco de la Vega, editor and publisher of the newspapers El Norte and El Sol, of Monterrey, "the great majority of Mexicans thought that this new law would give them the right to be informed by the govenment.

But then, President Jose Lopez Portillo explained that "the right of information was established in the constitution to complement freedom of expression and to the source of a series of provisions that will regulate and give the media access to information."

As Junco views it, the new provision in the Mexican constitution is an instrument by which the government can "establish itself as a judge of what people can or should know."

Not all Mexican editors take as dark a view of the situation as he does. But Junco's words are taken seriously if only because he represents the third generation of a family that has been publishing truly progressive newspapers in the industrial heart of Mexico for over half a century.

Mexico is actually one of the more attractive Latin American case histories.

The worst situation is that of Communist Cuba where the dictatorship of Fidel Castro simply confiscated independent newspapers and radio and television stations after it seized power in 1959. Now the Cuban Communists have absolute control of the media in Cuba. Cubans are fed nothing more or less than the Havana-Moscow propaganda line.

Raul Kraiselburd, 33-year-old editor of the newspaper El Dia of La Plata, a city not far from Buenos Aires, the Argentine capital, told us that there has been "increasing deterioration of individual and human rights" in Argentina recently.

Kraiselburd understands the human rights problem better than most. His father, who used to be editor of El Dia, was kidnapped by Argentine terrorists and died in the shootout when authorities finally discovered where he was being held, and his infant son, born in the United States after his grandfather's death, was kidnapped and murdered by a group that pretended to be terrorists.

Kraiselburd mentioned the names and situations of a number of newsmen who have been jailed or who have disappeared since the armed forces took power two years ago.

In Brazil, it seems, there have been fewer instances of jailings or disappearances of newsmen. On the other hand, though, there are at least five important Brazilian periodicals subject to prior censorship. Included among them are O Sao Paulo, the Roman Catholic archdiocesan weekly in Sao Paulo, and Tribuna da Impresna, a Rio de Janeiro daily of general circulation that has been under censorship for more than nine years, according to Julio C. Ferreira de Mesquita, son of the publisher of O Estado de Sao Paulo, one of Brazil's most respected daily papers.

In Chile, where the armed forces has been in power since Sept. 11, 1973, when they toppled the Marxist government of the late President Salvador Allende, the junta seeks to restrict discussion in the media of events that have domestic political significance. President Augusto Pinochet, the army general who heads the junta, has directed the committee that is preparing a new Chilean constitution to revise "legislation concerning communications media with the object of assuring respect for freedom of expression while preventing the media from destroying the institutionality, the moral principles, national values or the honor of individuals."

Colombia and Venezuela also regard independent newspapers as adversaries and have been trying to find means of controlling the media.

President Alfonso Lopez Micheslsen, for example, spoke out in mid-February suggesting that Colombia's independent newspapers be taken from their private owners and be turned into workers' cooperatives.

Venezuelan diplomats have planned an active role in the campaign to implement the UNESCO program that would permit governments to "orient the media."

George Beebe, second vice president of IAPA and president of the World Press Freedom Committee, told us that "during the UNESCO inter-governmental conferences of the last several years, the entire thrust has been toward state control of the media." Beebe, who is also associate publisher of the Miami Herald, said that "totalitarian governments, Communists, leftists, rightists and UNESCO all (are) intent on controlling words that are opposed to their policies."

That smacks of Big Brother and 1984.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

X-ray cancer hazard warning

By JACK ANDERSON

WASHINGTON — Scientists have been sounding the alarm for several years now that too much exposure to X-rays can be hazardous to your health. But many doctors and dentists apparently are not getting the message.

This is the conclusion of Food and Drug Administration officials who have been investigating X-ray dangers for over a year. Medical and dental patients, they found, are far too frequently exposed to potentially harmful levels of radiation.

Over 130 million Americans are subjected to at least one X-ray examination every year. Doctors, dentists, and hospital technicians flipped the switches on their X-ray machines an astounding total of 240 million times in 1977 alone, at a cost of over $6 billion to their patients. About one-third of such examinations, the federal officials concluded, are totally unnecessary and cost consumers a wasted $2 billion a year.

The cumulative effect of too much exposure to X-rays can cause cancer and birth defects. The latter hazard is especially worrisome to scientists. "The developing embryo is particularly sensitive to the carcinogenic effect of radiation," warns one FDA document. A one-third reduction in X-ray tests for pregnant women "would avoid approximately 90 cases of childhood cancer annually," it concludes.

During their intensive probe, the FDA inspectors came up with some startling statistics. Thirty percent of all new X-ray equipment, they found, is defective and emits too much radiation. They checked only 10 percent of the older equipment, but this was enough to suggest that the equipment may be leaking too much radiation.

Some doctors also use faulty techniques. The physicians set the X-ray levels too high, and repeat one X-ray test in 10, thus subjecting the patient to twice the amount of radiation he would get in a normal exam.

There is an underlying financial benefit, say our sources, for some doctors who order needless X-ray tests. "Many doctors with their own X-ray machines recommend tests for their patients because it means more money," one official told our associate Howie Kurtz. "The X-ray profits are much higher for doctors who have their own X-ray equipment."

Other doctors order X-ray exams merely to protect themselves against future malpractice suits in case they fail to spot an injury. This is known in the profession as "defensive medicine."

The FDA has launched a 28-state program that will attempt to reduce the public's exposure to X-rays. Federal authorities are focusing their efforts primarily on four types of X-ray tests:

— Skull X-rays. By limiting them only to those cases where they were clearly needed, officials in one Seattle hospital cut skull X-rays by 40 percent.

— Chest X-rays. Alternative techniques have precluded the need for routine chest X-rays for tuberculosis and other ailments. Nevertheless, the federal government and some businesses still require job applicants to take such examinations.

— Dental X-rays. FDA inspectors say some dentists are very "sloppy" and shoot too many pictures of a patient's mouth during checkups.

— Breast X-rays. Many such tests for cancer detection are unproductive and can be eliminated, officials believe.

The FDA investigators will reveal their findings during hearings soon to be held by Rep. Paul Rogers, D.-Fla., chairman of the House subcommittee on health.

FARM FUROR: Bob Bergland, the able, amiable secretary of agriculture, has quietly resisted the pressure from farmers to bail them out with new outpourings from the federal treasury.

In his confidential weekly report to President Carter, Bergland warned about the danger of "overreaction" to the farm crisis. He explained that the farm bill, which Congress passed last year, contains a "self-help program" that should save the hard-pressed farmers.

Under this new law, they can store their excess crops, thus keeping them off the market until prices rise. It shouldn't be necessary, therefore, for them to go on strike and halt production in order to prevent driving down prices, he contended.

The farmers are caught in a cost squeeze that has forced many of them to mortgage their farms for every dollar the banks will lend. They have been swarming over Capitol Hill clamoring for help.

But Bergland has stood up against pressure from powerful congressmen that the federal government cough up $7 million in farm aid. Bergland reported to the president that he "is urging congressmen not to panic."

Later at a closed-door Cabinet meeting, the president acknowledged that Bergland "has been under the most intense pressure for months." Carter praised his agriculture secretary for his "wise and calm handling of the farm stike situation."

RISKY REACTOR: Despite objections by congressmen and scientific groups, the Export-Import Bank of the United States recently granted a $600 million loan to the Philippines for a nuclear reactor, which is being built in a major earthquake zone and near two volcanoes.

The Westinghouse Corporation, which is supplying the components for the reactor, insists that its equipment can withstand seismic disturbances. The Nuclear Regulatory Commission, however, disagrees.

INSIDE REPORT:

Disarray is apparent behind the SALT II scenes

By ROWLAND EVANS And ROBERT NOVAK

WASHINGTON — The Carter administration's disarray on SALT was revealed over the past three weeks with a backstage interchange between Pentagon brass and the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency (ACDA), beginning in angry disagreement and ending in bureaucratic concealment.

Triggering the episode was ACDA's attempt to reassure Congress that Soviet compliance with the strategic arms agreement (SALT II) being negotiated in Geneva could be verified — a key issue in the coming fight for Senate ratification. When ACDA claimed the Joint Chiefs of Staff agreed with this dubious assurance, the balloon went up at the Pentagon. Usually tame generals and admirals were so outraged they even put it in writing.

This reflects tension behind the scenes as President Carter continues to promise a new SALT agreement. While not yet ready to go public with their misgivings, the uniformed military are unwilling to blindly rubber-stamp the treaty being negotiated by ACDA director Paul Warnke. Events of the last three weeks, hinting at deception and subterfuge, could be a foretaste of internal disputes if and when a new treaty is actually signed.

Verification is a peculiarly sensitive aspect of SALT. While arms control experts know a verifiable treaty is not necessarily a good treaty, it is one element of the hideously complicated arms control puzzle that anybody — including U.S. Senators — can grasp. If the Senate is convinced Soviet compliance can be verified, chances for ratification are good.

On Feb. 23, ACDA's paper on SALT II verification was submitted to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. As revealed in unclassified paragraphs released to the press, verification is far more reliable than experts believe (or than the unreleased classified paragraphs show). "Areas of uncertainty...are not such as to permit the Soviets to produce an unanticipated threat to U.S. interests."

What's more, the covering letter signed by Warnke asserted the paper was "approved" by the Joint Chiefs of Staff. That was news to the astonished chiefs when they read about it in the Washington Post of Feb. 25. Although the military leaders generally get along by going along, this was too much. Gen. Bernard Rogers, Chief of Staff of the Army, and Adm. James Holloway, Chief of Naval Operations, were incensed by Warnke's misrepresentation.

The result was a Feb. 28 letter to ACDA deputy director Spurgeon Keeny from Vice Adm. Patrick Hannifin, director of the joint staff. Even when bracketed by bureaucratic rhetoric, the meaning is clear: "The Joint Chiefs of Staff have not agreed to the (verification) statement." Hannifin said the National Security Council (NSC) staff was so informed Feb. 22.

"However, we understand that ACDA was not aware of this information" when it sent the letter to Congress Feb. 23, the letter continued. That softening phrase looks suspiciously like bureaucratic hedging. But the letter concludes on a tough note that "we would appreciate your setting the record straight" with the Foreign Relations Committee.

There is reason to believe ACDA had no intention of complying with this request and planned to forget about the letter. But in the habitual way of Washington, Hannifin's letter leaked right up to Capitol Hill. Some 10 days later it reached Rep. Robin Beard of Tennessee, a conservative Republican member of the House Armed Services Committee. On March 8, Beard wrote the President protesting that "Congress cannot be isolated from hearing dissenting opinions."

Since the matter could no longer be quietly forgotten, it was necessary to give Congress the idea there are "no dissenting opinions." The role fell to the member of the joint chiefs most faithful to administration policy: Gen. David Jones, Air Force Chief of Staff and acting chairman of the chiefs in the absence of traveling Gen. George Brown.

On March 9, two full weeks after Warnke's letter, Jones wrote Secretary of Defense Harold Brown explaining it all: the military helped prepare the report, but the joint chiefs "believe it prudent to withhold final judgment on the overall verifiability of any SALT II agreement until all provisions of the treaty are known." The initial anger of the chiefs and Adm. Hannifin's politely accusatory tone had become bland amiability.

Jones's letter was read into the record by Secretary of State Cyrus Vance at a closed session of the Senate Armed Services subcommittee on arms control the next day, March 10. Replying to our question, an ACDA spokesman said Vance's reading of the general's words complied with the original Pentagon request for "setting the record straight" on Warnke's misrepresentation. In short, ACDA plans to neither admit nor concede anything.

But there are still men at the Pentagon, including some four-star officers, who want no part of Warnke's siren song of assured verification. National security bureaucrats may congratulate themselves about smoothing over the disagreements, but most likely they were only postponing a showdown. The backstage disarray revealed now could erupt into open battle in the months ahead.

Moon church got money from KCIA, man testifies

CHARLES R. BABCOCK
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — A South Korean CIA agent delivered $3,000 in cash to the chief aide for Rev. Sun Myung Moon in 1976, according to congressional testimony Wednesday.

It was the first evidence that an official of the Unification Church received money from the KCIA. The House International Organizations subcommittee has been investigating alleged ties between the church and the Korean government.

Bo Hi Pak, interpreter for the Korean evangelist, said during a hearing Wednesday that he received the money in $100 bills from Kim Sang Kaun, a KCIA agent who sought asylum in the United States in late 1976.

But Pak said he took the cash only as a "favor" for Yang Doo Won, a high-ranking KCIA official in Seoul. Pak said he later passed the money on to a member of the Unification Church whom the Korean government wanted to reimburse for expenses incurred on an anti-communist speaking tour in Korea.

He could not explain why the KCIA, rather than another government agency would handle the reimbursement.

Subcommittee sources said later they did not find Pak's explanation convincing.

Meanwhile, accused Korean agent Tongsun Park appeared for the first time before a federal grand jury in Washington Wednesday.

His questioning focused on his relations with former Rep. Otto E. Passman, D-La., sources said. This raises the possibility the Justice Department is near a decision on seeking an indictment against the long-time chairman of the House appropriations subcommittee with control of the foreign aid budget.

Park is reported to have told prosecutors he gave Passman more than $200,000 over the years to obtain his support for increased shipments of Food for Peace rice to Korean.

Park received about $9 million in commissions from rice sales from 1970 to 1975.

Pak's appearance before the House subcommittee Wednesday was forced under a federal court order, according to Rep. Edward Derwinski, R-Ill., the ranking minority member of the subcommittee.

Pak had cited first and fifth amendment protection in refusing a subcommittee attempt to gain his testimony. But a U.S. District Court judge recently signed a "use-immunity" order, which forces testimony, sources said.

His appearance opened with the reading of a 50-page statement criticizing the subcommittee and press for maligning the church. He closed by reciting the Lord's Prayer. His entire testimony was recorded on video and audio tape for the Unification Church.

The articulate 47-year-old former Korean army colonel said he regretted accepting the money from the KCIA because he feared his explanation might be distorted.

Pak said he presumed the money and a six-page hand-written letter from Yang, who earlier had been the KCIA station chief in Washington, came into the United States through the embassy's diplomatic pouch.

Pak said it was the only occasion he took money from the KCIA. Earlier in the day, he had sworn that "not a penny came from the Korean government and not one direction" during the mid-1960s when he worked without salary for the Korean Cultural and Freedom Foundation.

The Washington-based tax-exempt corporation raised millions of dollars over the years for anti-communist radio broadcasts from Seoul.

During the hearing Wednesday, Rep. Donald M. Fraser, D-Minn., the subcommittee chairman, questioned Pak about several indications of connections between the Korean government and Moon church-related people and organizations. He appeared to be establishing a record for a possible perjury referral.

Pak made these points in his answers:

—He denied taking part in or knowing about meetings in the Korean Blue House in fall, 1970, where U.S. intelligence reports said his name was mentioned as part of a government-sponsored lobbying effort in the United States.

Police in Moro search arrest two extremists

MILAN, Italy (AP) — Two extremists were arrested today by police hunting for the kidnappers of former Premier Aldo Moro. One of them tried to swallow a letter with German names on it but police managed to seize part of it.

The Red Brigades, Italy's most feared urban terrorist gang, has claimed responsibility for kidnapping Moro. Police did not say whether the two men arrested today had any connection with the gang or the abduction.

The extremist who tried to swallow the letter was identified as Giuseppe Zambon, 39. Police said he was stopped here while riding in a car with German license plates.

The other extremist, Franco Berardi, 28, was arrested in a friend's Milan apartment. He had returned to Italy secretly after spending most of the past year in Paris, police said.

Berardi was wanted in connection with a string of violent disorders in Bologna a year ago.

The trial of 15 members of the Red Brigades in Turin has been recessed for one week because of Easter. The 15 are charged with organizing an armed band to overthrow the state.

Moro, 61, was kidnapped last week by gunmen who killed his five police bodyguards. The Red Brigades have said Moro would be tried by a "people's court."

Supertanker disaster leaves more than oil in wake

BREST, France (AP) — On the morning of March 16, the Amoco Cadiz, loaded with 65 million gallons of light Arabian and Iranian crude oil was 9.5 miles off the island of Ushant, off the tip of Brittany, bound north for Lyme Bay, on the south coast of England, and Rotterdam.

The 1,067-foot supertanker was in the authorized shipping lane, but the weather was about as bad as any seen in 27 years at sea by Capt. Leslie Maynard, a British safety training officer on board to conduct routine examinations and drills.

"There were tremendous seas, rain, hail, everything," he said.

Because of the gale, the automatic pilot had been switched off. A man was at the wheel, his eyes moving constantly between the compass and the rudder position indicator.

At 10:45 a.m. he told Capt. Pasquale Bardari: "The rudder is not answering to the helm."

The ship's engineers tried to switch to a back-up steering system. But the huge rudder was swinging so violently in the pounding seas that it was pumping hydraulic fluid out. Attempts to chain it steady failed when the heavy links "snapped like cotton."

Both systems were dead and the huge ship was helpless.

A tug fixed a tow line around 2:15 p.m. but it broke about 5:15 p.m.

Several more towing attempts failed, and at 10:04 p.m., according to the log Maynard kept at Bardari's request, the tanker impaled itself on the jagged rocks off the little French fishing village of Portsall.

Helicopters took the crew off. Bardari and Maynard remained aboard for several hours and were taken off only when the ship started breaking apart.

In the days afterward more than 44 million gallons of oil spewed from the supertanker's 15 holed tanks. The spill surpassed the 1967 Torrey Canyon disaster off southwest England by at least 15 million gallons.

What happened on March 16 is a subject of controversy, conflicting statements, rumors, veiled hints, shifting of responsibilitites and what one party has called "unqualified slander."

Though the tanker broke down in French territorial waters and only about 50 miles from Brest, the French navy's Atlantic zone headquarters, the navy did not go on the alert.

"This was a civilian vessel. It had a tug in attendance, and when Brest Radio asked during the afternoon if further help was needed, the tanker replied specifically that it was not," said Adm. Jacques Coulondres, French commander in chief of the Atlantic zone.

Bugsier of Hamburg, West Germany, an international towing company, said its tug Pacific did everything possible to try to save the Amoco Cadiz, but the forces of nature defeated it.

It described as "unqualified slander" press reports that the captain of the tug, Reinhart Weiner, "malevolenty delayed his assistance" because he and Bardari could not agree on a towing contract.

Harry Rinkema, an Amoco vice president who arrived in Brest from Chicago Saturday, refuses to "agree or disagree" or otherwise comment on Bugsier's statement, or to go into any details what Amoco believes occurred.

But all Amoco officials here, as well as Maynard, have stressed their high regard for the competence of Bardari and his crew.

Insurance experts here generally agree that whatever the eventual legal problems, or financial transactions between Amoco, Bugsier and Smit International, a Dutch firm retained to attempt emptying what remains of the cargo, insurance coverage is not affected by the controversy over the towing.

The ship is covered for $12 million, its cargo for $20 million, and pollution insurance held jointly by international tanker owners and oil companies could run as high as $50 million, the experts said.

One puzzling aspect of the accident is that Amoco's head office in Chicago was never aware, according to Rinkema, of the seriousness of the situation until it received a message that the vessel had actually grounded.

This was despite repeated contacts with the tanker and with Bugsier's head office in Hamburg. Because Chicago apparently did not know the imminent danger, it did not inform France officially until it was told the tanker had grounded. Rinkema said it was known Brest Radio was aware the tanker was in difficulty.

French soldier samples oil coating water of harbor at Portsall, France. He was among group of soldiers pumping oil from harbor waters. The spill from the supertanker Amoco Cadiz has become the world's largest. (AP Laserphoto)

Carter finding talk easier than task of closing bases

WASHINGTON (AP) — Like its predecessors, the Carter administration is finding it was easier to talk about reducing or closing military bases than getting the job done.

Congressional political pressure has forced changes, delays, and even some reversal of proposed base cutbacks.

The latest development came Tuesday when the Navy announced plans to base four warships at Newport, R.I., next fall to improve "the strategic dispersal of the Atlantic fleet."

About four years ago, the Navy moved 39 ships out of Newport to other bases and virtually dismantled the Rhode Island complex in what was described as a necessary economy move.

"There was political interest in putting ships back into the northeast area" one military source said. He said it was "a higher decision than the Navy's," indicating direction came at least from senior Defense Department officials if not from the White House.

An administration civilian official said: "It was political."

Similar political pressures — not only from the Northeast but from other regions as well — are reportedly slowing the Pentagon's progress toward a new round of base closings and reduction decisions.

House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., D-Mass., and a 204-member bipartisan coalition of Northeast and Midwest congressmen, have been demanding that the administration halt what they call a steady drain of military spending from their areas in favor of the South and West.

Carter's record on base actions in his first year as president is a mixed one. A month after he traveled to Massachusetts last year, the Pentagon reversed a Ford administration decision to severely cut operations at Fort Devens, Mass.

But Carter went ahead with the Ford administration's plans to close the Frankford arsenal in Philadelphia, despite a campaign promise by Vice President Walter F. Mondale to keep it open.

Senior Pentagon officials had hoped to announce a new round of closings and reductions in February. Now they hope to do so in April.

There is also speculation the administration may wait until after the next Senate vote on the Panama Canal treaties to avoid losing any senators whose support may be needed.

Keeping loan interest issue on ballot asked

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — State Democratic committee member Carrin Patman asked a district court today to block attempts to remove a loan interest referendum from the May 6 ballot.

Outcome of today's hearing will determine whether another hearing on the controversial straw poll is held March 27.

"This lawsuit is a desperate attempt by the loan companies to muzzle the voters of Texas by denying them the opportunity to express their views concerning legislation to hike interest rates on loans under $5,000," said Mrs. Patman's request for a court judgment.

On Tuesday, the Texas Consumer Finance Association was granted a temporary restraining order that, if it stands, would remove the loan interest referendum from the Democratic primary ballot. A hearing on whether the order would be made permanent was set for March 27.

"This is a play by one senator, who has been in the minority in the Texas Senate, to use his wife's personal political position to fire a cheap shot at his perennial antagonists, the Texas consumer credit industry, hoping to pressure the Legislature into rejecting even fair consideration of the interest rate issue," said Bob Duke, general counsel of the association.

The straw-poll question was approved for the May 6 Democratic ballot at a meeting of the State Democratic Executive Committee in Waco on March 13. It was offered by Mrs. Patman, wife of Sen. Bill Patman, D-Ganado.

The referendum question would let voters say if they think the 1979 Legislature should authorize higher interest rates on loans under $5,000.

The proposal was accepted by voice vote of the state Democratic committee without dissent.

The Ganado senator issued a statement Wednesday that "ungallant charges against my wife are both inappropriate and unfounded ...it is just a smokescreen designed to hide the fact that they're afraid to take their case to the voters."

The restraining order on the loan interest question does not affect a referendum on horse race betting, also approved at the Waco meeting.

The Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON — A federal judge Wednesday extended a court order prohibiting a group of Arab investors associated with former Budget Director Bert Lance from buying additional stock in a drive to gain control of a bank holding company. Meanwhile, the Lance group prepared applications for Federal Reserve Board permission to proceed later with an offer to buy ownership of the company, Financial General Bankshares, Inc. Lance is working as a consultant and financial advisor for the investors, who include a Saudi Arabian sheik and an intelligence official, and the crown prince of oil-rich Abu Dhabi.

They have purchased 28 percent of the stock in Financial General, a $2.2 billion holding company that controls 13 banks in four states and the District of Columbia.

It was learned that the Bank of America has a 24 percent interest in a London financial institution allegedly involved in the take-over effort by the Lance group. The Securities and Exchange Commission charged in a suit last week that the London concern, the Bank of Credit and Commerce International, was part of a group of buyers who failed to disclose their stock purchases as required by law.

The suit, which also named Lance, the Arabs and other investors, was settled by the defendants without either admitting or denying the allegations.

Bank of America itself has "no involvement" in the take-over attempt at Financial General, according to a spokeswoman at the bank's San Francisco headquarters. She also said the Bank of Credit and Commerce "has informed us they're not involved."

According to the SEC complaint, however, the Bank of Credit and Commerce worked closely with the foreign investors who bought the Financial General shares. At one point, the SEC said, Lance told an official of Financial General that the London bank was buying shares. Later, Lance denied the statement and said the purchases were being made by individuals, the SEC said.

Financial General management contends that the Bank of Credit and Commerce was given power of attorney and voting rights for the shares.

If this assertion is correct, it could present regulatory problems for the Bank of America. Federal rules prohibit a United States national bank from operating branches in more than one state. If the Lance group gained control of Financial General, the Bank of Credit and Commerce might be viewed as part of the new ownership. Since Bank of America owns the London bank, it might be viewed as having an indirect interest in the branches of the Financial General banks.

However, the attorney for Lance and the Bank of Credit and Commerce, Robert Altman, said the Arab investors, and not the bank, are the effective owners of the shares.

"We don't have the SEC report here yet," said the Bank of America spokeswoman. "We have no comment other than that Bank of Credit and Commerce assured us they are not involved."

Lance has obtained substantial personal loans through the Bank of Credit and Commerce in London, according to the SEC, but is not employed by the bank. The SEC said he was an adviser "for a substantial fee" to the corporation which owns 50 percent of the bank. The corporation provides investment advice to royalty and other wealthy Middle East residents.

Lance went to work as a financial adviser for the Middle East interests shortly after resigning last year as director of the Office of Management and Budget. He resigned from the Carter administration post amid controversy over his personal financial practices as a bank president before joining the government.

At Wednesday's hearing, U.S. District Judge Oliver Gasch extended a temporary restraining order that prevents Lance, the Arab investors, and the London bank from buying additional shares in Financial General.

Financial General sued the Lance group and others charging violations of the disclosure law. The suit against one of the defendants, Systematics, Inc., was dismissed Wednesday by Judge Gasch.

In other developments, staff members of a House Government Operations subcommittee have begun a preliminary investigation of the Financial General matter.

Government, university at odds over housing policy

By RONALD J. OSTROW
The Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON — According to officials and friends of Brigham Young University, the Justice Department's latest "fair housing" action is an attempt by Washington bureaucrats to impose the "new morality" on the Mormon-owned school.

On the other hand, officials in the department's civil rights division see their threat to take court action against a university requirement for sexual segregation in off-campus housing as protection for non-student apartment hunters and a way to clarify sex discrimination law.

At issue is the university's agreement with 36 off-campus landlords to restrict buildings or wings of buildings to members of one sex. The Justice Department's projected attempt to overthrow the agreement has generated more controversy than most "fair housing" cases, and has prompted introduction of an amendment to the Fair Housing act.

The legislation was offered by Sen. James A. McClure, R-Ida., who denounced the Justice Department's case as an "outrageous action" that could also affect Mormon-owned Ricks College and Northwest Nazarene College in his state.

Cosponsored by Sen. Orrin G. Hatch, R-Utah, the amendment would state that nothing in the act "prohibits a private educational institution from requiring that housing occupied by students or staff provide separate dwelling and facilities by sex."

"What a pity it is that federal legislation must be introduced to allow colleges and universities to maintain high standards of decency and morality," Hatch said.

JUSTICE DEPARTMENT officials were unwilling to be quoted by name on the controversy on grounds that their comments might interfere with a negotiated settlement of the case. But they contended privately that the McClure-Hatch amendment, plus claims that they are trying to mix the sexes, badly disorts the action they plan to take.

"Any suit that would try to put men and women in the same room would quite justly be classified as kooky," one official said. "But that is not this case at all."

In a Feb. 28 letter to H. Hal Visick, the university's vice president, Frank E. Schwelb, chief of the housing and credit section in the Justice Department's civil rights division, said he had been authorized to file suit against the agreement.

He said the authorization followed "an extensive, time-consuming and painstaking investigation" into the university's housing policies.

A department official said the university's agreement with the landlords has a "tremendous impact" on the rental market in Provo, Utah, home of the university. "Landlords can't ignore the business, or they'll go under," he said.

As evidence that the agreement affects non-students, the official cited the origin of the case. A non-student woman complained about the agreement after she was turned down for a studio apartment she wanted in Provo on grounds that it was only available to a man.

REPRESENTED by the American Civil Liberties Union, she brought suit two years ago in federal court, but the case was dismissed on technical grounds. The complaint then went to the Department of Housing and Urban Development, which referred it to the Justice Department.

Another cause for pursuing the case, the official said, is that sex discrimination provisions which were added to the Fair Housing Act in 1974 have not been interpreted to any great extent by the courts.

The department has brought about 15 fair housing suits that include sex as a count, usually linking it to alleged racial discrimination.

The plan to sue the university is not the first unusual litigation. The department's first suit alleging sex discrimination in housing was brought two years ago against the manager of a Washington, D.C., apartment building on grounds that men — but not women tenants — had to pay for maid service.

Dallin H. Oaks, Brigham Young's president, said the Justice Department's Schwelb told him the government is not attempting to force the school "to allow students of different sexes to live in a single apartment."

The assurance is "very little comfort if there is no legal distinction between this result and the one you are presently pursuing," Oaks wrote Drews S. Days III, assistant attorney general for civil rights.

Oaks said he also was troubled by a conflict between the department's course and the First Amendment's guarantee of freedom of religion.

"We cannot believe that our proscription against students living with or next to persons of the opposite sex is a sufficient injury to justify interference with the fundamental right of religious freedom at this church-sponsored university," Oaks said.

Placement proposed

ASHVILLE, N.C. (AP) — While riding a cab in Chicago some time ago, allergist Claude A. Frazier noticed a Bible lying on the seat beside the driver. An idea struck him: Why not a project to place Bibles in taxicabs, much as the Gideons put them in hotel rooms?

He contacted the American Bible Society, whose regional offices in major cities began studying the feasibility of placing Scripture portions in cabs around the country. Already, a pilot project is under way in Ashville. Says Frazier:

"People read newspapers in cabs. Why shouldn't they read the Bible?"

Energy plan 'unworkable'

By BROOKS KELLER

Midland banker Charles Fraser told the Downtown Lions Club Wednesday he would rather see no federal energy legislation than the passage of the "unworkable, socialistic and gravely crippled Carter energy plan."

Fraser is executive vice president of The First National Bank in Midland. He spoke to the Lions at their weekly luncheon at the Midland Hilton.

Fraser said the House of Representatives passed the Carter energy plan last August, with only about one-fourth of the members understanding its terms. The Senate has stalled what he called "this locomotive" since then.

One of the worst features of the House-passed bill, he said, is the Crude Oil Equalization Tax, a tax on domestic crude that would raise the price to the consumer to a level reflecting the current cost of imported crude.

The tax would then be refunded in various ways "to soften the blow to the consumer," he said. But none of the refund would come back to the domestic oil and gas industry, he added.

Fraser said the nation will need a supply of energy in 1985 equalling the equivalent of about 50 million barrels of oil per day.

The Carter plan envisions huge increases in the production of both coal and oil to meet these needs of

Charles Fraser

1985, he said. But stringent clean air standards in the case of coal, and a lack of incentive for capital formation in the case of both coal and oil, dooms the plan to failure, Fraser said.

The basic issue, he said, is whether the necessary increase in energy is to be achieved by private enterprise or by a fuel industry smothered at every level by federal controls.

Just returned from Washington, Fraser said that unless the more liberal House conferees can accept a compromise proposal by Democratic Sen. Henry Jackson of Washington, there is likely to be no energy bill passed in the near future.

"The Jackson compromise, although considerably more favorable than the original pricing section on natural gas passed by the House, would predictably not ever decontrol the wellhead price of natural gas," Fraser said.

"It would extend," he added, "federal controls to the intrastate markets, provide an extremely complex set of rules and exceptions resulting in massive administration problems, and continue to subject the gas industry to stringent federal controls."

In a question and answer session, he said the climate of opinion toward the industry and the oil-producing states had greatly improved in Washington since 1973. There is no more talk of conspiracies, he added.

A Lion spokesman said that teams reporting in so far on sales at the recent Pancake Jamboree had raised about $17,500 of the goal of $20,000, with several more teams still to tell their results.

Offices closed Friday

City and county offices will be closed Friday to allow employees more time to spend with their families this Easter Sunday weekend.

Skin rejuvenator: she irons out women's wrinkles

By CAROLYN COIL
Copley News Service

When your dress gets a wrinkle, you iron it out.

And that's what Adrien Arpel does to your face.

She uses a mini-iron over a paraffin treatment to force creams into dry or lined skin to soften wrinkles.

Ironing wrinkles is only one facet of Arpel's skin rejuvenation treatment which she says she put together from bits and pieces she learned in Europe.

She began her spiraling climb to fame in the cosmetics industry when she was 17 with $400 she'd saved from baby-sitting jobs.

"I went around to beauty salons and just did makeup," says the beauty authority who heads a $4.5 million firm which bears her name.

She admits she had no training and just flipped through the Yellow Pages looking for salons where she could work.

"It showed me just how unprofessionally it (being a makeup artist) can be done," she says.

But Arpel wasn't content just covering up women's skin problems. She believed there had to be something more that could be done to improve a woman's appearance.

"There needed to be something between a dermatologist and a jar of cream," she says.

"Facials felt good, but did nothing for the skin. There needed to be someone who could help you get rid of skin problems instead of glossing over them."

She began her spiraling climb to fame in the cosmetics industry when she was 17 with $400 she'd saved from baby-sitting jobs.

"I went around to beauty salons and just did makeup," says the beauty authority who now heads a $4.5 million firm which bears her name.

Because European women always have been more interested in skin care rather than makeup, she says she went to Europe to take her training.

Arpel also looked for skin treatment methods she could take back to the United States with her.

There always had been expensive salons and spas for the wealthy, she says, but she wanted a treatment for the average woman, who always has been her customer.

"I came up with the vegetable peel-off in Geneva, Switzerland, where it was used as a separate treatment," says Arpel.

The treatment removes the top layer of dead, calloused skin cells. In Geneva, clients used to stay overnight to have the peel-off, but she devised a shorter method.

A pumice stone machine from Bologna, Italy, is used to remove the peel-off and dead skin.

The machine is easier on the skin than prolonged hand-rubbing, says Arpel. "The pumice also shines the skin."

Next the skin is fed with creams to help restore skin resiliency. The creams are forced into dry skin with a brush. If the skin is oily or broken out, a honey and almond scrub is used with a stiffer brush.

The next step is a paraffin heat treatment which Arpel saw being used in Europe. She worked with an American company to develop a pure wax with a low melting point to which she could add vitamins and creams.

The paraffin seal, which is brushed on the face, helps to melt sebaceous oils, while making the skin more receptive to, and sealing in, the benefits of the skin treatments, she explains.

Lines, wrinkles and blemishes are magnified by the seal.

A mini facial iron is pressed over the trouble spots. A heated iron is used on dry or lined skin, and an iced iron is used to help shrink, tighten and close the pores on oily skin.

In Poland, Arpel found a man who used to make irons for wealthy Polish women who used to put wax on their faces and iron out the lines. He made the mini-irons she now uses.

When the wax has solidified, it is lifted off the face in one piece, taking with it the impurities removed from the skin.

The skin ironing and treatment takes only about 45 minutes.

Arpel says the contemporary woman doesn't have time to spend hours and hours on her face.

Spring shoes run gamut from sophisticated to casual

NEW YORK (AP) — Classic casuals will walk right along with romantic sophisticated looks this spring, says the Footwear Council, which sees two important fashion directions: Success Dressing and the Sporting Life.

Success Dressing for women takes dancing looks into daytime with high-stepping heels, strippy straps that wrap about ankle or instep, and baby-pale tones mixed with shiny black or metallic. The bare foot complements the swing of dirndls and the swish of silk. Very high heels and wrapped ties give proportion to the leg line.

But look also for "Mary Jane" party flats. Half-inch heels have already been selling in Paris, and are expected to become popular in the United States, the council predicts.

But the Footwear Council assures the woman who wants to play the middle ground that there will also be mid-high heels, with 1-inch to 2½-inch heights showing greatest strength. These heights have been redesigned, though — they're narrower, for a higher, more ladylike look.

Small platforms are this year's trend; clunky, sky-high versions are gone and flexible polyurethane unit bottoms, already so popular in Europe, will become more important. These are especially refreshing in colors that mix or match with the rest of the shoe.

Wedges of all heights will make big fashion inroads. The classic espadrilles will continue to rise higher; but look for mini-wedges on softly colored "little girl" styles.

Women's shoes, especially the dressier styles, will burst forth in kaleidoscopes of color. White may well be the only color to decline in importance as it is replaced by a whole spectrum of cool neutrals. Beiges, in particular, will gain strength. And black will be important, even in the heat of the summer!

Men's Success Dressing footwear fits in with the return to three-piece suits and conservative colors for business and after. Slightly higher heels, polished leather finishes and the importance of basic black indicate an elegant turn of foot.

The most classic of men's shoes — the moccasin — is being updated for spring. It will be lighter in weight and made from softer materials. The newest of this style is the tubular moccasin. This is practically an unconstructed shoe that incorporates handsewn vamps and top stitching and looks new with this year's versions of Ivy League ready-to-wear.

Interest in boots will remain constant and side zipper versions will dominate. Heel heights will rise and narrower toes will be seen in better lines.

Higher heels in business and dress shoes are also an advanced trend for men. Slip-ons and ties will be set on heels up to 2¼ inches, and there will be a few platforms in evidence.

The relaxed dressing of the Sporting Life influences men's, women's and children's casual footwear. Bright colors, easyto-wear styling and serious attention to function and comfort create a wardrobe os bottom line possibilities. The Footwear Council notes that every important casual style for spring has athletic ancestry, as even confirmed grandstanders want to look as if they're part of the action.

For women, the biggest changes will be in the design of the upper and in use of new colors in interesting combinations. "Specific purpose" shoes such as boating shoes and running styles will be worn more and more with the most casual of sportswear.

According to the council, spring 1978 presents a variety of men's casual "athletic" styles — espadrilles, clogs, meshes, sandals and wedges. Rounder toes (another "playing field" influence) cut across all groups, although wider, heavier lasts will be less popular than last year.

Most of the news in men's casuals is at the bottom. Flat soles, turned-up toes and heels have left the running track and are making tracks in city streets. Boating soles with non-skid treads aren't limited to the harbor. "Signature" treads with logos, words, numbers, are leaving their imprint everywhere.

As with the adults, "athletic" influences are by far the most important trend for children, says the council. In fact, the kids will be sporting carbon copies of what their elders are wearing.

The kids continue to hang onto their jeans and don't dress up too often, and shoes are styled to complement their rugged, everyday moods. Functional footwear will increase in importance — whether or not the youngsters are out to jog, they'll dress the part.

Unisex looks continue to dominate with the wavy bottoms, heavier lug soles, naturally finished leathers and topstitch detailing. Girls and boys will be wearing sandals, closed oxfords (for those occasions when they get dressed up), platforms, wedges, clogs and espadrilles.

In war casting, skiers would be Marines

By ERMA BOMBECK

If I were casting a war, using sports enthusiasts, there's no doubt in my mind that the joggers would be the infantry, the golfers the artillery, the swimmers the submarines, polo players the cavalry and tennis buffs the special services.

For reasons I am about to explore, the skiers would be the Marines.

It's not that they're so elite. It's just that somewhere along the line they've been brainwashed into believing that by putting big sticks on each foot, riding an open chair lift to the top of a big hill and skiing down into the arms of three ambulance attendants, they are having a good time.

AT WIT'S END

They are absolutely fearless. No snow is too deep, no blizzards too paralyzing, no distance too far. The colder it is, the more inaccessible the slopes, the more hazardous the conditions—the bigger the challenge.

My husband is a ski mercenary. He follows the snow. We happen to live in the southwestern part of the United States where the winters are comparatively mild. When storms began to wreak their devestation this winter, my husband and I watched in horror.

"It's a real blizzard," I said quietly.

"It's a 40-inch snow base," he said, "and I've got to go."

"It's not your war," I pleaded. "There's nothing you can do.

As he packed his thermal underwear, his padded mittens, and his stocking cap, I tried to appeal to his sense of survival.

"It's the flu season. You have children. Your skin is dry."

No amount of reason would keep him home. He dug out the car chains, his AAA card and was off to the front.

A week later, he returned from the wars...face burned by the sun, a bruise from a chair lift that gave him a nudge, and a service-connected limp.

"What happened?"

"I was forced to do my reverse Wishbone."

"What's that?"

"It's where someone skis across your skis, whirls you around and you are skiing down a hill backwards as both of your legs are skiing in opposite directions."

"Sounds exciting. Wanta take out the garbage?"

"In 50-degree weather? Get hold of yourself!"

Traveler heeds call of the turtle

By MICHAEL GRANT
Copley News Service

This turtle kept bobbing up in Peggy Hoskins' dreams, back in her 10-room house in suburban Chicago, and it bugged her.

She figured it must be trying to tell her something, but she hadn't a clue as to what, until one day in a pet shop it happened that she and another woman, a total stranger, stopped before the turtle display at the same time.

"Aren't they interesting," noted the woman. "I wonder what it must be like, carrying your home on your back."

Bells clanged in Peggy's head. She caught the startled stranger in a big hug, then ran from the store in search of all the recreation vehicle information she could find.

That was in June of 1974. By November, Peggy Hoskins, then 58, widowed nine years, mother of six, and not ready for the rocker, had sold the house and nearly everything in it, and put her home — a 23-foot Winnebago motor home — literally on her back. And she and her youngest son, then 14, went turtling off down the road.

Peggy is 61 now, and the Winnebago's odometer reads 28,552 miles, the sum of her travels to Florida, Texas, Mexico, Canada, Alaska and the West Coast.

Her son, weary of playing Patrick Dennis to her Auntie Mame, left her in Fairbanks last year and flew to live with his sister in Calgary, Alberta, Canada.

"He just thought he'd been with mom too long," said Peggy. "So I put him on a plane, complete with dog, bicycle, golf clubs and backpacking equipment."

Since then, she has traveled alone in the Winnebago, unarmed and unafraid.

"I have a pact with God," she said, slightly apologetically, as if accommodating a skeptic. "I used to carry a baseball bat, but it rolled around and got to be a nuisance. I threw it away. I probably would only have hit myself, anyway. Some friends in Phoenix wanted to help me buy a gun, and register it and all, but I would have been afraid to shoot it."

She has never, she said, encountered any trouble, from Mazatlan to Fairbanks.

Peggy is small, on the extroverted side, and a student of experience. She wore orange nylon slacks and jacket over a tank top. Slacks and jacket were sewn nearly all over with orderly ranks of travel patches of the sort that tourists collect.

She has a necklace, a "sterling diary" of her travels, from which hang more than 400 memento charms.

Turtle insignias adorned her blouse, jacket and shoes. She wore a silver turtle necklace. A ceramic turtle nosed about a potted plant that rested on the Winnebago dashboard. A rag-doll turtle perched on the back of one of the seats.

She tows a 1972 squareback Volkswagen behind the Winnebago. "I don't want to drive this thing around," she said, indicating the Winnebago's size by a sweep of her hand, "to go sight-seeing wherever I stop."

The VW has been towed the length of the Al-Can Highway, "1,422 miles of gravel," from Dawson Creek, in Yukon, to Fairbanks.

The Winnebago gets two and one-half miles to the gallon. She has paid, since starting her trek, from 34.9 cents per gallon in Galveston, Tex., in 1975, to $1.27 per gallon in Dawson Creek last year.

She has kept a record of her gasoline expenses, but she has never added it up. "Probably because I don't want to know," she laughed.

She has had no mechanical problems, she said, praising the Lord and knocking on wood.

The Winnebago is on its second set of tires, and she has had only one flat. That happened as she was pulling into a service station in Dawson Creek, at one terminus of the long, lonely Al-Can Highway.

The end of the road, she says, is not in sight. The turtle remains her muse.

"When I get bored or run out of funds, whichever comes first, I'll quit," she smiled. "And I don't think I'll run out of funds any time soon."

Nor, it appears, will she soon become bored.

Stickers on the back of Peggy Hoskins' "home on the road" and on her clothing show the extent of her travels.

Therapist teaches how to cope with world

By LUCRETIA STEIGER
Copley News Service

Existing inside each individual, according to family therapist Virginia Satir of San Francisco, is the real security of being able to cope with whatever happens outside.

Getting individuals or families to see this is why she has been working as an international family therapist for more than 40 years.

Satir, a warm, talkative woman of 61, defines her work as a family therapist.

"A person is a living spiritual entity capable of infinite growth," she said in an interview.

"We're one of a kind. And if we live our uniqueness, we come out individuals. Society is changing to recognize this. Society has stopped deciding what we should or shouldn't be. What I want to do is help people see the new possibilities, gain new perspectives."

She does this by helping people communicate with themselves and each other.

"Take the teen-age boy who decides that his mother or father hates him, and draws up a full bill of particulars about it," she explained. "Then the mother or father may say, 'He's not the son I wanted,' and they can go on like this, blind to their own true feelings, for years.

"As a family therapist, I help them open up new possibilities. A human being is not one thing. Not always happy or generous or sad, but many things. A woman may think of herself as a mother only, and can run into trouble with that limitation."

She takes a notebook and draws a picture of concentric rings, similar to the rings of growth across a tree trunk, and describes her impressions of the facets of a person as these rings.

"In the center, there is the I, the self, then the body and then the brain, the captain of the ship. Our feelings, which give texture to our lives, are the circle around that.

"Next are our emotions; fear, anger, love, disappointment, frustrations, the chief things which determine our behavior. The senses; the inputs.

"Next ring is our interaction with others, the pairing. We can't even propagate without the help of another.

"Then the spiritual ring; the cosmos, nature, life-force. And finally, our planetary ring, because we are interacting organisms all over the world.

"What we have to do is learn about, evolve, learn to use and expand these parts, to develop a harmonious interaction among them. I think that we, the people of today, are in the very beginning of this, that in 500 years, they'll look back and see that this is the beginning."

Satir, who fights off labels in all directions, said this new movement, if it could be called that, might be labeled as "humanistic psychology, although it is in constant evolution and emergence."

"We're just now getting into the idea of working with ourselves rather than controlling the outside world to be what we would like it to be," she said.

"We have worked for centuries on the idea of security; that if we made the outside a safe place, we would be all right but a person's very real security depends on ability to cope because we're not in charge of outside situations."

Satir throws off ideas like a child waving a Fourth of July sparkler.

"The external environment is a resource for you.

"Our country was built on the ability to cope.

"Instead of teaching children, 'Don't do that,' say to them, 'Let me explain. We'll find out how you can relate to that without getting hurt.'

"Life is a process and a system.

"Take a mother who wants to know what her teen-age daughter is thinking. She asks and asks and the daughter finally tells her. Then the mother says, 'How could you?' and the daughter never tells her again. You can start out thinking that there's a right way, or you can start out and find things that fit as you go along. The creative struggle ...

"It's never too late. I know people in their 90s still making contact with their children who are in their 70s."

Satir is author of several books, among them "Peoplemaking" and "Making Contact." She is working on two books this year, a major work to be entitled "The Third Birth" and a lesser work on "Your Many Faces."

ATTENDING a Delta Delta Delta Alumnae St. Patrick's Day party are, from left, Mr. and Mrs. Corby Considine and Mr. and Mrs. Gaylon Groce. The party was held in the Groce home, 2010 Douglas St.

DEAR ABBY

Woman left 'hanging in' alone advised to cut off dead limb

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I've been going with a married man for three years. I love him very much and I know he loves me.

Two weeks ago his wife found out about us and started raising a lot of Cain. That's when I told him to make a choice. Either move out of his home and in with me, or forget about me altogether.

He decided to stay with his family because "fewer people would be hurt." So I'm the only one who got hurt!

He told me that one day we will be married, so I shouldn't give up on him.

I feel like I got a bum deal after loving him and him alone for three years. I never looked at another man and I had plenty of chances. I wish I could tell him to get lost, but I still love him and can't bear the idea of giving him up.

My friends say, "If you love him—hang in there." Should I?—HURTING

DEAR HURTING: If you "hang in there," you will be hanging alone. A man who has cheated on his wife for three years is no prize, so even though you "love" him, he's poison. Be wise and cut him off as you would a dead limb. It won't be painless, but it will hurt less in the long run. And remember, HE made the choice, you didn't.

DEAR ABBY: My husband will be a physician in private practice very soon. He has already hired an experienced bookkeeper-receptionist to work in his office. She will handle appointments, insurance forms, phone calls and accounts.

What should my role be? Should I stay completely away from all business aspects of his work and office, or, as his wife, should I be familiar with finances, accounts, etc.? And if so, how do I do this without appearing to be nosy or bossy?"

I could easily spend a day a week at the office, helping out. How much do you think a wife needs to know about her husband's business?—DOCTOR'S WIFE

DEAR WIFE: I think every wife needs to know enough about her husband's business to make some intelligent decisions in the event of his illness or death. However, some wives choose to stay completely away from their husbands' businesses—and their husbands prefer that they do.

Much depends on how you and your husband feel about it.

DEAR ABBY: I'm a 21-year-old woman engaged to marry a 43-year-old man, but that's not the problem.

To get right to the point, I once had a short but beautiful, intimate relationship with a woman who happens to be my best friend.

My fiance knows about this and swears that if she is at my wedding, HE won't be there! Every time she calls me, or even when her name is mentioned, he becomes outraged.

Now, Abby, our intimate relationship is over and finished, and we are now simply good friends, but my fiance refuses to accept that. I am worn out trying to explain to him that I really love him and have no desire to start up with that woman again, but he doesn't believe me.

I really love both of them—but in different ways now—and I don't want to be forced to make a choice between them. What is your advice?—TORN APART

DEAR TORN: If the situation were reversed, and your fiance had had a male lover, could you agree to their continuing the friendship without feeling threatened? I can't blame your fiance for wanting this woman out of your life. And if you are "torn" and can't give up her friendship, I urge you not to marry until you get into therapy and straighten out your head.

Problems? Tell them to Abby. For a personal, unpublished reply, write Abby in care of this newspaper. Enclose a stamped, self-addressed envelope.

Now 6 Dress Sizes Smaller, I Can Tell It All.

Ms. Evelyn Hudgins of Columbus, Georgia tells her own story. NOW

Dear Mirror:

After our conversation in the department store dressingroom a few months ago, I walked right out empty handed. I took no time in calling Pat Walker-I was determined to never buy a larger size dress again. You know it's funny but until you told me all the sizes that I'd picked out were too small, I really had not thought of myself as fat.

I came back in the store the other day just to let you see how I looked since I lost from a size 16 to a size 10. You just wouldn't believe how I have toned and firmed.

Do you remember that I could hardly get my arm over my head while trying on dresses? I explained to you about my bursitis shoulder - well, now I can reach high with no pain. I have also seen much improvement in all my joints, my posture and my general well being. The compliments I have been receiving have been very nice, too. The passive treatments at Pat Walkers are just wonderful.

I'm sorry you were so busy and could not watch me try on all those beautiful size 10 clothes. It was such a joy and pleasure this time to shop for clothes that I knew would look good on me. The next time you have a friend come to see you with the same problems just have them call Pat Walker and see what they can do for them.

Pat Walker's can work for you too!

The entire process is so pleasant, so easy, and so inexpensive, you'll wish you had found the Pat Walker's method years ago.

P.S. Will be back in to see you again as soon as I lose a few more pounds.

Easy quiches cook up ahead for Easter brunch

By BETSY BALSLEY
The Los Angeles Times

A brunch on Easter? Forget it. With all of the excitement of early morning Easter egg hunts, followed by that frustrating process known as getting the family off to church, who has time to cook for company?

Ah, but that's the secret. You don't do the cooking on the great day. You do it all ahead.

The menu is super simple. It consists of a variety of quiches, a big platter of fresh fruits and whatever liquid refreshments you want to serve. Make the quiches the day before. Or select recipes that freeze well, such as the ones featured here, and make them a week in advance. Choose fruits that can be cut up and refrigerated in plastic bags overnight and most of your work is done. On Easter morning, arrange the fruit on a platter and warm up the quiches. They're really better served at room temperature or slightly warm. Cut them into thin wedges and sit back and enjoy.

PASTRY CUTOUTS

1 egg
1 tablespoon water

Roll dough scraps out to 1-8 inch thickness. Cut into fish, ducks, flowers, etc. with cookie cutters. Place on nonstick baking sheet and brush lightly with egg beaten with water. Bake at 450 degrees for 6 to 10 minutes, or until lightly browned. Cool. Freeze if desired. Use as decorations on cooked quiches.

ORIENTAL SALMON QUICHE

1 (10 ounce) package pie crust mix
2 tablespoons butter or margarine
Green onions, chopped
1-2 cup chopped celery
1 (16 ounce) can bean sprouts, drained
1 (8 ounce) can water chestnuts, drained and sliced
1 (7 3-4 ounce) can salmon, drained
1 cup shredded Swiss cheese (about 4 ounces)
4 eggs
1 1-2 cups half and half
1 tablespoon lemon juice
1 teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon dry mustard
1 teaspoon Worcestershire sauce
1 tablespoon flour
1-4 teaspoon pepper

Make pie crust according to package directions. Fit flat bottom insert into fluted sidewall of a 10-inch quiche-flan pan. Line pan with pastry, pressing it into the flutes. Trim excess pastry from top edge. Chill 1 hour.

Melt butter in a small skillet. Saute 1-2 cup green onions and celery until wilted. Combine with bean sprouts and water chestnuts and toss well. Spread mixture in bottom of pastry-lined pan. Top with chunks of salmon. Sprinkle cheese over all.

Beat eggs and half and half together. Stir in lemon juice, salt, mustard, Worcestershire, flour and pepper. Pour over quiche.

Bake at 450 degrees 20 minutes. REduce heat to 325 degrees and cook 40 minutes longer or until pastry is golden brown and custard is set. Remove fluted sidewall and place quiche on serving platter. Garnish with chopped green onions. Cut in wedges and serve hot. Makes 6 to 8 servings.

VOILA QUICHE

2 cups sifted flour
1-2 teaspoon salt
1-2 cup butter or margarine
1-3 cup cold milk
1 egg white
Voila Filling

Mix flour and salt. Cut in butter until mixture resembles coarse meal. Add milk and mix until pastry clings together. Let stand 20 minutes. Roll out dough on floured surface and fit into a 10-inch pie plate. Trim and flute edges. Brush pie shell with egg white, then fill shell with Voila Filling. Bake at 375 degrees 40 minutes. Makes 6 to 8 servings.

Voila Filling

1-2 pound sliced bacon
2 medium onions, sliced
2 1-2 cups half and half
6 eggs
1 teaspoon garlic powder
Freshly ground pepper
1 teaspoon seasoned salt
1 teaspoon dry mustard
Dash nutmeg
1-8 teaspoon cayenne
Dash Worcestershire sauce
Dash hot pepper sauce
Pinch curry powder
1-4 pound mushrooms, sliced
1-2 cups diced swiss cheese

Cook bacon until crisp. Drain, crumble and set aside. Cook onions in a small amount of bacon fat until tender but not browned. Scald half and half, then cool. Combine eggs, garlic powder, pepper to taste, seasoned salt, mustard, nutmeg, cayenne, Worcestershire, hot pepper sauce and curry powder. Beat lightly. Beat in half and half.

Sprinkle bacon in pie shell. Top with onions and mushrooms. Sprinkle cheese evenly over vegetables. Pour custard mixture into pie shell and bake as directed.

PIZZA QUICHE

1-2 pound thinly sliced pepperoni
1 (9 inch) unbaked pie shell
2-3 cup shredded Swiss cheese
1-2 cup sliced black olives
1 cup chopped green pepper
3 eggs
2 tablespoons flour
1 cup milk
Grated Parmesan cheese
1 (8 ounce) can tomato sauce with mushrooms
1-2 teaspoon salt
1-4 teaspoon basil
1-4 teaspoon oregano
6 thin rings green pepper

Saute pepperoni, covered, 2 or 3 minutes or until warmed through. Set aside. Bake pie shell at 400 degrees 5 minutes. Remove pie shell from oven and sprinkle 1-3 cup Swiss cheese over bottom evenly. Sprinkle on half the pepperoni and top with olives, chopped green pepper, remaining Swiss cheese and rest of pepperoni. Beat eggs and flour until smooth. Blend in milk, 1-4 cup grated Parmesan cheese, tomato sauce, salt, basil and oregano.

Pour into pie shell. Sprinkle with 2 tablespoons grated Parmesan cheese and top with green pepper rings. Bake at 400 degrees 15 minutes. Reduce heat to 325 degrees and bake about 40 to 45 minutes longer or until knife inserted near center comes out clean. Remove from oven and garnish outer edge of pie with prebaked pastry cutouts. Let stand 10 minutes before cutting into wedges. Makes 4 to 6 servings.

QUICHE WITH BEEF

1-2 cup diced onion
2 cups sliced mushrooms
3 tablespoons butter or margarine
Quiche Pastry Shell
1 tablespoon flour
4 eggs
1 1-4 cups milk
1-4 teaspoon pepper
1 1-2 cups shredded Swiss cheese
3-4 cup shredded dried beef

Cook onion and mushrooms in butter until tender. Drain off excess butter and turn mixture into pastry shell, reserving a few pieces of mushroom for garnish. Sprinkle flour over mushroom mixture. Beat eggs and stir in milk, pepper, cheese and beef. Pour over mushroom mixture. Garnish with reserved mushroom slices. Bake at 400 degrees 15 minutes. Reduce heat to 300 degrees and bake 25 minutes longer or until knife inserted in center of filling comes out clean. Makes 4 to 6 entree servings.

Quiche Pastry Shell

1 1-2 cups flour
3-4 teaspoon salt
1-2 cup lard
1 1-2 tablespoons water, about

Mix flour and salt and cut in lard until mixture resembles coarse meal. Sprinkle water over flour mixture. Press dough together with knife. Form dough into ball. Roll out on a lightly floured surface to a circle about 1 inch larger than a 10-inch pie plate. Fit dough into pan. Trim edges and flute with tines of a fork.

1 cup grated (medium-fine) Swiss cheese
½ teaspoon caraway seeds

Make up the pie mix according to package directions for a single shell; line a 9-inch pie plate with it, turning under the edge and fluting it. Bake on the rack below the center in a preheated 375-degree oven for 5 minutes. (Leave the oven turned on.) Scatter the frankfurters over the hot pie shell; top with the onion; set aside. Beat together the eggs and milk to blend; stir in the sauerkraut, cheese and caraway. Pour over the frankfurters and onion in the pie shell. Bake on the rack below center in the 375-degree oven until a knife inserted in the center comes out clean — 45 minutes. Let stand at room temperature for 10 minutes, then cut in wedges and serve hot. Makes 6 to 8 servings.

Make Easter Bunny dessert

It couldn't be easier using a favorite layer cake mix and prepared frosting to make the base for this Easter Bunny centerpiece and dessert. Chocolate candies provide the magic to give the bunny face, ears and bowtie identity and bring it "to life." The same favorite candies fill individual baskets for table favors.

Bake a "Bunny" cake and decorate it for a family-pleasing Easter centerpiece and dessert. It is simple using packaged cake and frosting mix. The "bunny cake" comes to life with features and bowtie of colorful chocolate candies.

Bake the cake in 2 layers - one 9-inch and the second, 8 inches. The 9-inch layer becomes the face. The smaller layer is cut in half and a slice from each half make the ears. The rounded edges are transformed into a bowtie.

Once frosted, the chocolate candies create their magic in bringing the bunny cake "to life."

The same colorful sugar-coated chocolate candies make professional looking decorations to turn cookies into flower decorations for the holiday table. Bake favorite sugar cookies either from "scratch" or a mix with a craft stick for stem. Turn the cookies into gaily colored flowers using frosting to hold them on. "Plant" the cookies in little plastic pots filled with the chocolate candies.

EASTER BUNNY CAKE

1 package (approx. 18-1/2 ozs. yellow cake mix)
1 package (approx. 7.2 ozs. fluffy white frosting mix)
3 peanut chocolate candies
About 1-1/2 cups plain chocolate candies

Preheat oven to 350 degrees F. Grease and flour one 9-inch and one 8-inch round cake pan. Prepare cake mix according to package directions. Pour into prepared cake pans. Bake 25 to 35 minutes or until wooden pick inserted in center comes out dry. Cool in pans 10 minutes. Remove from pans and finish cooling on wire racks.

Prepare frosting mix according to package directions. Cut the 8-inch cake in half crosswise, then cut a strip 2" wide from cut edge of each half to use for ears. Place the 9-inch cake on a large tray at least 17" x 12". Arrange the 2 strips on one side of round cake for the ears. Opposite the ears, arrange the remaining pieces of cake, rounded side down, to make a bow tie.

Frost sides and top of all cake pieces. For eyes, use 2 brown peanut candies. For the nose, use an orange peanut candy. For mouth, use 5 orange plain candies. For whiskers, stand dark brown plain candies on edge in rows starting from the nose. Fill in centers of ears with 2 rows of orange plain candies. Outline the bow tie with rows of assorted plain candies. Makes a cake 17 inches long and 12 inches wide.

FLOWER POT COOKIES

Slice refrigerated sugar cookie dough according to package label. Place half of the cookies 2 inches apart on an ungreased baking sheet. Place end of small craft stick on dough to center of cookie. Top with second cookie. Bake in moderate oven 350 degrees F. until done and lightly browned, 10 to 12 minutes. Cool slightly. Remove from sheet and cool on wire rack. Decorate with frosting around edge of cookies. Press plain chocolate candies into frosting. Fill small flower pots with plain or peanut chocolate candies. Stand cookie flowers in pots.

Senator Muriel Humphrey speedy cook

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
AP Food Editor

Muriel Buck Humphrey recently took on the duties of a U.S. Senator, filling the seat left vacant by the death of her husband, Hubert H. Humphrey. Now our newest Senator from Minnesota sits on two key committees and is co-sponsoring four bills.

I've heard that Mrs. Humphrey is no stranger in the kitchen. But what kind of cooking has she done? What kind is she likely to do now? Would her way be of help to other women with many responsibilities?

To find out, I looked into the Congressional Club Cookbooks, of which there are nine different editions. The first, published in 1927, has a foreword by Mrs. Herbert Hoover. The latest, the 1976 Bicentennial edition, a foreword by Betty Ford.

The club was chartered in 1908 by an act of Congress "to promote acquaintanceship among its members, to facilitate their social intercourse, and to promote a place of meeting which may help to secure for them the advantages of life in the Nation's Capital." The membership is composed of the wives and daughters of members of Congress, the Cabinet and the Supreme Court. During the years Muriel Humphrey spent in Washington with her husband, she contributed to the club's cookbooks.

Mrs. Humphrey's recipes are geared to a busy life. They are speedy and they're honest. She doesn't pretend to be a "gourmet." Although one of her dishes is an epicurean combination of pheasant and wild rice, it is linked to Minnesota's food resources.

It figures that Mrs. Humphrey, for some of her entertaining, would value a popular nonalcoholic beverage. Her Spiced Tea duplicates the Russian Tea that has been so successfully served for years and years at The Mansion, the Raleigh residence of North Carolina's governor.

DINNER-IN-A-DISH A LA MURIEL HUMPHREY

2 tablespoons butter or margarine
1 medium onion, thinly sliced and separated into rings
2 green peppers, seeded and sliced into rings
16-ounce can whole-kernel corn, drained
1½ teaspoons salt
1 pound ground beef
2 eggs
¼ teaspoon black pepper
4 medium tomatoes, sliced
½ cup fine dry bread crumbs mixed with 2 tablespoons melted butter

In the hot butter in a 10-inch skillet lightly cook the onion and green pepper; stir in the corn and ½ teaspoon of the salt; set aside. Mix together well the remaining 1 teaspoon salt, the beef, unbeaten eggs and the black pepper. Into a buttered 2-quart casserole (about 8 by 3 inches) put half the corn mixture. Top with half the meat mixture. Add half the tomatoes. Repeat layers in the same order. Sprinkle with the buttered bread crumbs. Bake in a preheated 375-degree oven for 45 to 60 minutes. Let stand at room temperature for about 10 minutes before serving. (There will be some juices in the bottom of the casserole; the meat will be compact and pale in color.) Makes 4 to 6 servings.

YOU ASKED ABOUT IT

By MINNIE BERNARDINO
The Los Angeles Times

Q. I have often heard that certain animal by-products such as some internal organs are used in the making of commercial hot dogs. Just what exactly are these by-products?

A. According to the National Hot Dog and Sausage Council, there are a certain number of meat by-products which are permitted but generally restricted to the lower-priced hot dogs or frankfurters. The by-products referred to are lips, heart, tongue and snout, all of which are wholesome clean muscle tissues and good sources of protein. The following are the tissues that are not permitted by the U.S. Department of Agriculture in any product: the eyes, lungs, all glands, udders, intestines and tissues of this type.

Q. I have successfully been able to grow some alfalfa sprouts after buying some seeds and equipment from the health food store. Now I have an unexpected surplus of sprouts. Can you give me a method for storing these without spoiling?

A. According to a preserving reference book called "Putting Food By" (Hertsberg, Vaughan and Greene), there are two ways to handle safe storage of legume sprouts at home.

First, the sprouts can be oven-dried, then canned dry. To do this, the book tells us to: Pick over the sprouts, discarding damaged or spoiled ones, and save the husks. Wash thoroughly, being finicky as all get out if the sprouts have grown on soil. Drain and pat dry between layers of clean paper toweling. Oven-dry in a single layer on a baking sheet for 1 to 3 hours at 325 degrees, stirring occasionally. Keep hot. Use pressure canning and hot pack only: Fill clean hot jars (use only 1-2 to 1 pint jars with 2-piece self-sealing screwband lids) with hot dried sprouts, leaving 1-2 inch of headroom. Add no liquid. Put on lids, screwing bands firmly tight. Process at 5 pounds (228 degrees), 10 minutes for either size jars. Remove jars, then cool slowly.

The other method for preserving sprouts according to the book is by freezing. Wash the sprouts, remove husks and blanch in one layer at a time over vigorous steam for 3 minutes. Cool quickly in ice water, drain and then pack in moisture-vapor proof freezing bags or containers.

Q. I've kept some squares of unsweetened chocolate in my cupboard for several months and I noticed when I started to use them for a chocolate cake recipe that they have turned a dull gray. Could these have been stale or could they have acquired some flavor and texture changes also? I had to get a fresh package to use in my chocolate cake.

A. Chocolate turning dull and misty is not an uncommon occurrence in these products. The Nestle people tell us that chocolate has a rich content of cocoa butter and therefore should be stored in a cool dry place at a temperature of not over 78 degrees. If the temperature rises a few degrees above, the cocoa butter will begin to melt and rise to the surface of the chocolate as a shiny coating. As the chocolate cools agian, the cocoa butter turns a misty gray color which is known as "bloom." While this does not affect the flavor of chocolate, bloom dulls the rich brown chocolate color. Don't hesitate to use chocolate which has bloomed, for in melting, it regains its attractive color.

Q. How long can one keep hard-cooked eggs in the refrigerator? I'm preparing some Easter eggs.

A. Unpreserved hard-cooked eggs should keep in the refrigerator for 10 days. Store in the shell or shelled individually wrapped in foil or plastic food wrap and label eggs "cooked."

Raisins favorite ingredient in Hot Cross Buns

HOT CROSS BUNS

1 cup milk
2 tablespoons butter or margarine
1 package active dry yeast
¼ cup warm water (110 to 115 degrees)
4 cups flour
⅓ cup sugar
1 teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon cinnamon
1 cup raisins
½ cup candied fruit
2 eggs, well beaten
1 egg yolk diluted with 1 teaspoon water for topping
Lemon Icing

Scald the milk, stir in the butter and cool to lukewarm. Dissolve yeast in the ¼ cup warm water. Sift flour with the sugar, salt and cinnamon. Combine the flour mixture with raisins and candied fruit; stir in the eggs, cooled milk and yeast; blend well. Turn dough out onto a lightly floured board and knead until smooth and elastic (5 to 8 minutes). Place in a greased bowl, turning to grease top. Cover; let rise in a warm place until doubled in bulk, about 1½ hours.

Stir down dough, pinch off pieces, and form smooth, rounded balls about 1½" in diameter. Place balls of dough on greased baking sheet about 2" apart. Brush each bun lightly with diluted egg yolk. Snip a 12" deep cross in center of each bun with greased scissors. Let buns rise in a warm place until doubled in bulk, about 30 minutes. Bake at 400 degrees for about 8 to 10 minutes or until lightly browned. Cool on wire racks about 5 minutes. Then, with a spoon or the tip of a knife, drizzle icing on cross. Makes 30.

Lemon Icing: Combine 1 cup powdered sugar, 2 teaspoons lemon juice, and 1 teaspoon water; beat until smooth.

Homemade bread rising in favor among people

By JEANNETTE BRANIN
Copley News Service

Nothing gives a homey atmosphere to a house any quicker than the smell of yeast breads baking.

Any number of women would tell, were they to be open about it, that men find the fragrance of yeast bread more alluring than imported French perfumes.

Other women would tell you that baking bread is good mental and emotional therapy. It fulfills the urge to create.

Epicures extoll the virtues of natural ingredients, and persons interested in increasing fiber in food have discovered homemade bread is the most palatable way to achieve it.

Check the label on any bread you buy at a store. If one of the ingredients reads "nonnutritive fiber," it means the bread contains cellulose, an inert substance derived from wood. Cellulose, first cousin to sawdust, is in that bread.

Here is a standard bread recipe, with no chemicals, no emulsifiers, no "fresheners," just good B vitamins (niacin, thiamine and riboflavin) plus the mineral, iron:

BASIC WHEAT BREAD

2 cups enriched flour
2 pkgs. dry yeast
1 cup milk
1 cup water
One-fourth cup oil
One-fourth cup honey
1 tbsp. salt
1 egg at room temperature
4 to 4.5 cups whole wheat flour

Stir together two cups flour and yeast. Heat milk, water, oil, honey and salt over low heat until warm (125 to 130 degrees). Add liquid ingredients to flour-yeast mixture and beat until smooth, about three minutes on medium speed of electric mixer or 300 strokes by hand. Beat in egg. Stir in whole wheat flour to make a moderately stiff dough. Turn onto lightly floured surface, cover with bowl and let rest 10 minutes. Knead until smooth and satiny, about five to 10 minutes. Cover and let rest 20 minutes.

To shape loaves, divide dough in half. Roll each half into a 7x14-inch rectangle.

Roll up from narrow side, pressing roll into dough at each turn. Press ends to seal and fold under loaf. Place in two greased loaf pans, 4.5x8.5 inches; brush with oil. Let rise in warm place until doubled, about 60 to 75 minutes. Bake in preheated 400-degree oven for 35 to 45 minutes; cover tops with foil to prevent excess browning. Remove immediately from pans and brush with melted butter or oil.

But let's get back to the idea that baking bread at home is fun, soul-satisfying, and rewarding in the appreciation received from family and guests. Here's an easy one to start with, an egg-rich sweet bread:

SALLY LUND

3.5 to 4 cups unsifted flour
One-third cup sugar
1 tsp. salt
1 pkg. active dry yeast
One-half cup milk
One-half cup water
One-half cup margarine (one stick)
3 eggs at room temperature

In a large bowl thoroughly mix one and one-fourth cups flour, sugar, salt and undissolved active dry yeast.

Combine milk, water and margarine in a saucepan. Heat over low heat until liquids are very warm, 120 to 130 degrees. Margarine does not need to melt. Gradually add to dry ingredients and beat two minutes at medium speed of electric mixer, scraping bowl occasionally. Add eggs and one cup flour, or enough flour to make a thick batter. Beat at high speed two minutes, scraping bowl occasionally. Stir in enough additional flour to make a stiff batter.

Cover; let rise in warm place, free from draft, until doubled in bulk, about one hour.

Stir batter down and beat well, about one-half minute. Turn into a well-greased and floured nine-inch tube pan. Cover; let rise in warm place, free from draft, until doubled in bulk, about one hour.

Bake at 350 degrees about 45 to 50 minutes, or until done. Remove from pan and cool on wire rack. Best when served warm.

Amy prefers simple lunch: soup and sandwich

By MARIAN BURROS
The Washington Post

Like thousands of other American children who prefer home cooking to the meals served at school, 10-year-old Amy Carter often takes her lunch.

But when Amy heads for her fifth-grade classroom at Stevens Elementary a few blocks from the White House, she packs food made by a professional chef, the same one who prepares the meals for her father the President, the first lady and for official functions, too.

That doesn't mean Amy's lunch pail (sometimes it's a brown bag imprinted with her name) is filled with haute-cuisine delights.

On the contrary: Like her parents she prefers a sandwich and soup, though she is reported to have a weakness for Spaghetto-Os. A piece of fruit and a homemade cookie complete the lunch; milk is available at the school.

In at least one previous administration it was made quite clear to the kitchen that soup from a can was preferred. The same people liked packaged cookies, too.

But the soup for Amy, as well as her parents, comes not from cans, but from Chef Henry Haller's stock pot in the big, stainless-steel White House kitchen.

Soup and a sandwich have been the standard lunch for the Carter family since the President was a Plains, Ga., peanut farmer and Mrs. Carter kept the books at their peanut warehouse.

Now when they have guests for lunch, the soup may be accompanied by a salad instead of a sandwich — chicken, salmon or fruit. Often, according to Haller, the salad is made from leftovers. Except for official luncheons, it's never more elaborate than that.

The sandwiches are standard: tuna; roast beef; breast of chicken; country ham and cheddar cheese; grilled cheese, tomato and bacon; meat loaf, which, on white bread, is Amy's favorite.

In a way, the soups are old-fashioned standbys, too: chicken noodle, barley, lentil. But these days it's hard to come by the kinds of soup Henry Haller makes — rich, flavorful broths, chock full of vegetables and meat.

The chicken soup you get in most restaurants and out of most cans tastes as if the chicken simply marched through, on the way to the next batch. Some commercial chicken soups don't contain any chicken at all; some beef soups have never been in touch with a cow.

Few people have the patience or the time to cup up a lot of vegetables, make a stock or allow the soup to simmer slowly for a couple of hours in order to achieve fullbodied flavor.

The Swiss-born Haller, who has been White House chef through four administrations, is very particular about how his soup looks as well as how it tastes.

Vegetables are added to the stock at different times, depending on how quickly they cook. If they are cooked too long, Haller says, "they don't look attractive, and they lose nourishment. I don't want them to be cooked to smithereens." While the Carters are "very open-minded about food," Haller says, "they don't like overcooked vegetables."

He dices the vegetables for the soup into small pieces of fairly uniform size, not only because he thinks "they look better," but because they cook more evenly. "For me it is the same work," he explains as he chops briskly without even looking at the cutting board.

Before the vegetables go into the soup they either are sauteed in butter or simmered in just enough stock to cover, which Haller says "adds greatly to their flavor."

The herbs and spices, he says, "can vary with your own taste, but make certain that the seasoning is added while cooking the soup. Taste it from time to time during the cooking process. Don't add all the salt when the soup is already cooked because then the soup will never taste the same."

Haller's soups are hearty without being heavy. Every spoonful is loaded with vegetables and meat. With or without a sandwich, they make a substantial lunch or light supper. All of them may be prepared a day ahead and reheated. Some cooks prefer soup on the second day when the flavors have had more time to meld.

All of Haller's stocks are made from scratch, but it is possible to substitute bouillon. If that is done, however, the salt must be adjusted accordingly.

CHICKEN NOODLE SOUP
(Makes 2 quarts)

2 teaspoons butter
Juice of 1-2 lemon
2 carrots, peeled and cut in julienne strips
2 stalks celery, cut in julienne strips
1 cup fresh mushrooms, cut in julienne strips
1 cup finely slivered red or green pepper
2 quarts hot chicken stock
4 ounces fine egg noodles
1 cup cooked chicken meat, cut in slivers
1-4 teaspoon white pepper
Salt to taste
2 tablespoons chopped parsley

Melt butter in saucepan; add the lemon juice, carrots, celery and mushrooms. Simmer vegetables, covered, for 5 minutes; then add chicken stock and gently boil soup for 15 minutes. Add noodles and red pepper, salt and white pepper. Simmer soup for 10 minutes longer. Add chicken pieces and parsley. Taste soup for flavor and serve piping hot.

BEEF SHANK AND VEGETABLE SOUP
(4 quarts)

3 quarts beef stock
1 1-2 pounds finely diced beef shank meat
1 cup finely diced onions
2 cloves garlic, finely chopped
1 bay leaf
2 cups diced celery
1 cup peeled, diced carrots
2 cups sliced leeks (2-3 of green part removed; remainder cut in quarters and diced)
1 cup diced green pepper
1 cup diced white turnip
Salt to taste
2 cups fresh tomatoes, peeled, seeded and diced or 1 pound can whole tomatoes, chopped
6 twists of pepper mill
1 tablespoon chopped parsley

Simmer diced beef with onions and garlic in 2 cups of beef stock for 20 minutes. Add the bay leaf and all the vegetables except the tomatoes. Cover and simmer for 10 minutes. Add the rest of the hot beef stock and salt; simmer soup for one hour, covered. Then add tomatoes and pepper. Adjust seasonings and simmer soup for 15 minutes more. Add chopped parsley and serve with garlic-cheese slices.

Mexican doughnuts taste chewy inside

By MARJORIE RICE
Copley News Service

Churros are fried Mexican doughnuts, chewy inside and crisp outside.

If you use a fluted tip, and have the oil at the right temperature, the churros should turn out just right.

To get the right oil temperature, try a test churro before you fill the pan full. And follow the recipe exactly.

(I tried reversing the process, adding boiling water to the flour instead of flour to the boiling water, and came up with a bowl full of glue.)

MARIA MEDRANO'S CHURROS

2 cups flour
One-fourth tsp. salt
2 cups water
1 tsp. vanilla
Oil for frying
Sugar
Cinnamon

Bring water, salt and vanilla to a boil. Add flour all at once. Beat vigorously until dough pulls away from the sides of the pan and forms a spongy ball. (You can achieve this by hand; I used a heavy-duty mixer and dough hooks on one batch and it was too sticky.)

Heat oil. You'll have to test a churro to find the best temperature — the results should be chewy inside, crisp outside.

Place dough into a pastry bag with a large fluted tip. Don't use any other kind of pastry tip. Pipe dough out into the hot oil (watch for splatters) in strips or in a coil. Fry until golden brown; drain. (A splatter screen will keep down the splatters.) Roll drained churros in sugar and cinnamon, tapping off excess. Continue until all dough is used. These are best when still warm.

Note: For a richer churro, add one egg and use one-fourth cup less water.

SPANISH BISQUE

2 avocados
One and two-thirds cups (13.75-oz. can) chicken broth
3 tbsps. lemon juice
Three-fourths tsp. salt
Dash cayenne
Dash garlic powder
1 cup light cream
Garnish (see below)

Puree avocados with broth, lemon juice and seasonings. Blend in cream; cover and chill. Serve with your choice of the following garnishes: crumbled crisp bacon, chopped toasted almonds, buttered almonds, buttered croutons, chili relish (mix two tablespoons minced onion with two chopped canned green chili peppers and three chopped canned pimientos), diced tomato, diced ham, slivered prosciutto, finely chopped hard-cooked egg or chopped anchovy filets.

SOPA DE ESPINACA

2 avocados
1 (10-oz.) pkg. frozen chopped spinach, cooked and drained (one and one-half cups)
One and one-fourth cups chicken broth or bouillon
1 cup heavy cream
One-half tsp. each, salt, onion salt
Dash white pepper
One-fourth tsp. grated lemon peel
3 tbsps. lemon juice
Garnish of lemon slices, sieved hard-cooked egg

Puree avocados with the spinach in a blender or food processor. Blend with remaining ingredients, cover and chill thoroughly. Garnish with lemon slices and sieved hard-cooked egg. Serves six to eight persons.

Italian government decrees terrorism penalties

The Los Angeles Times

ROME — The new government of Italy Tuesday decreed life imprisonment for anyone convicted of a kidnapping in which the victim dies.

The new penalty is part of a package of 12 revisions in the penal code designed to control terrorism. They were given final approval at a session of the Council of Ministers that lasted almost five hours.

Action on the emergency measures came five days after the kidnapping of Aldo Moro, president of the Christian Democratic Party, and at a time when no significant clues have been announced as to his whereabouts.

Sen. Francesco Bonifacio, minister of justice, told reporters that the measures were necessary "given the need to defend the society."

The decree law with its dozen articles was to take effect on publication at midnight Tuesday but can be overturned later by parliament. That is not likely, however. Bonifacio said that the measures have the full support of the parliamentary majority created last week, a majority that includes 92 percent of the members with the entry of the Communist Party into that grouping.

New provisions both tighten penalties for terrorist activities and make easier the work of the police, with provision for holding prisoners up to 24 hours without formal charges and interrogation at the time of arrest without defense counsel being present.

Kidnapping will bring a 30 year penalty under the new law, with life imprisonment if the person kidnapped dies. In Italy, only the president of the republican can cut short a life sentence. There is no death penalty, although the Moro kidnapping brought some new proposals for restoration of capital punishment.

Special provision is included in the new law to reduce the prison term of anyone involved in a kidnapping who breaks with the kidnappers and helps bring about the release of the victim.

New and more severe penalties are provided for recycling ransom money, for any action endangering public utilities, research materials or computers.

The work of police is to be facilitated in a number of ways:

—Permission for wire tapping will be made easier.

—An exchange of privileged material between police and the judiciary will be permitted in certain cases, including terrorism.

—Interrogation of prisoners will be permitted without provision for defense counsel being present, although this will be limited to the time of arrest.

—Persons may now be held up to 24 hours while their identification is confirmed.

Under another section of the law, all rentals or sales of property must now be reported, and the purchaser or tenant must be required to provide identification. This law has been made retroactive to last June 30, a decision apparently designed to help ferret out the place where Moro is being held, but it is a provision that may produce enormous bureaucratic problems.

"We have acted in rigorous respect of the constitution," Bonifacio said.

Federal government to begin experiment in minority hiring

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — In June the federal government will kick off a controversial five-year hiring experiment aimed at building a "more representative" work force by setting aside up to 20 percent of the jobs in agencies for women and minority-group members.

The so-called Sugarman Plan (named for Civil Service Commission Vice Chairman Jule Sugarman) will require agencies to have "goals" and "timetables" for increasing the number of "underrepresented" minorities in various occupations.

Persons hired under the "special-emphasis" program would not necessarily have to come through regular competitive-merit channels. But they could be converted to career federal-job status in 24 months if they perform satisfisfactorily.

Sugarman is the point man of the Carter administration pushing for innovative work programs. His main thrust in the No. 2 job at the CSC — the government's personnel and merit-system agency — has been to increase the number of women and minorities in job fields now dominated by white males.

CSC Chairman Alan K. Campbell has stressed that the special-emphasis hiring plan will be accomplished with goals set by agencies and is not a "quota" system. Sugarman believes that in some cases — in occupations like teaching and library sciences — white males will be found to be "underrepresented" and therefore eligible for the special-hiring help.

Under the program, which has drawn fire from a number of sources, agencies will determine the race, sex and ethnic makeup of employees in various occupations.

If any group is found to be "underrepresented," then agencies may hire people from the underrepresented group outside of normal competitive civil-service channels. Up to 20 percent of the job openings in those fields may be earmarked for "special-emphasis" hiring.

Determination of underrepresentation would be based on the number of women and minorites in those federal-job occupations and compared with either their numbers in the general work-force population, or their numbers enrolled in college programs in those various career disciplines.

A recent CSC memo to all agencies say that "current competitive examining procedures have not resulted in a representative work-force" in many federal occupations.

Pine Belt attracting industry, gaining 'vision'

EDITORS NOTE: For nearly 30 years, people of the lush East Texas Pine Belt lived with the nightmare that one day the oil would be gone. El Dorado would become just so many sleepy, burned-out boom towns. Today, however, the area is experiencing a renaissance of sorts, and the nightmare is nearly over.

By DON HARRISON
Associated Press Writer

"Vision. That's what we got now," boasted the oilman.

"Back in the 30s, everybody was too busy gettin' rich to think very far ahead. But it's changed. We got a mixture of young people with the oldtimers now...We got vision."

The unabashed testimonial comes courtesy of Kilgore native E. K. "Buster" Dickerson, a grandfatherly, self-appointed spokesman for his town and the Pine Belt in general.

Dickerson was here when the derricks stood so thick women used them as clotheslines poles. He watched as the wildcatters and the "boomers" — 15,000 of them in a week's time in Kilgore alone — moved in. He watched them leave, too. Those who stayed knew the time would come soon enough when they would have to broaden the area's economic base or die.

Unlike the oil boom, however, the change was not made overnight. It is still under way.

Oil, the still-strong natural gas fields and lumber continue to play leading roles in the area's economic structure, which is loosely bounded by Harrison, Smith and Angelina Counties.

Foundries, light manufacturing and a thriving retail community have now been added. There is also a stablized population base and even the potential for a new energy boom from the vast, untouched lignite deposits known here as "brown gold."

"I think the swing started about 10 or 15 years back," said East Texas Chamber of Commerce Director Jim McAuly. "People realized the quantity of oil and gas was not going to be an everlasting thing."

McAuly said the first step was repairing the area's sagging county road system.

"Once the roads were fixed, industry was able to get in here and take a look at our natural resources and then things just started to snowball," he said.

In the past decade, virtually every Pine Belt city of 10,000 or more has boasted a continuous population increase. Single-family building permits are at alltime highs in such seedling communities as Longview, Tyler, Lufkin, Nacogdoches, Marshall, Kilgore and Palestine.

The Longview Standard Metropolitan Statisticial Area (a unit used to measure population and socio-economic growth in an area that includes at least one city of 50,000 or more) has ranked no less than third behind Dallas-Fort Worth and Houston in industrial development the past six years.

Specific reasons for the growth depend on who is talking. Energy experts credit the oil, gas and lignite deposits.

William Kaiser, a University of Texas geologist, wrote for the Longview Morning Journal: "In East Texas, more than 900,000 acres are under lease for lignite exploration with 17 different companies holding at least 5,000 acres each."

Forestry officials point to the huge Piney Woods tree farms. National forests stretch across 663,830 acres in 12 East Texas counties. The industry flourishes, in part, because of the area's annual 47 inches of rainfall.

City officials brag on their tax rates, abundant surface water supplies and low unemployment, which is about 5.5 percent area-wide.

Another less easily defined reason for the migration appears to be the number of moonlighting farmers who work in industrial plants. Bernard Weinstein, an associate professor at the University of Dallas, said his studies show the labor force in big cities is shrinking.

"Skilled people are getting hard to find," he said. "This is one of the reasons you find these plants and factories in the smaller SMSAs or out by themselves. Farmers, a lot of the smaller, independent ones, can't make a living on the land anymore so they are working part-time in the factories."

Weinstein also cited the Pine Belt's location as yet another attraction. He said the area is ideally located for industries that ship products East to New Orleans, north to Oklahoma and Arkansas and all Texas points.

Cosmos Tablet's branch plant in Palestine is typical of the many small manufacturing firms that have left the big city for the Pine Belt. Hershel Norris, company president, said location was the "prime reason" for leaving Houston last year.

"I think you'll find this is a trend with a lot of companies," he said in a telephone interview from his Birmingham, Ala., headquarters. "There was, of course, the location, but it was a lot of things. A smaller company is sort of lost in a big city.

"In a smaller community there are advantages from a labor standpoint, a feeling of belonging and easy travel, which you don't have in a city like Houston."

Most of the branch plant's 30 employees are local people. Norris said the few who moved from Houston to keep their jobs are pleased with the comparatively rural lifestyle.

Veteran Longview industrialist Bob Cargill considered all the aspects of the area and boiled it down in this way:

"You know when a company moves in around here, it doesn't dare leave and try to take its employees with it. They'll just drag up and quit. When we get 'em here, we make East Texicans out of 'em."

Knievel may land in hospital

LOS ANGELES (AP) — An old motorcycle injury may land daredevil Evel Knievel into the County-USC Medical Center for further tests if the cause of the pain he is reportedly having cannot be found.

Knievel was transferred from Wayside Honor Farm Thursday, where he is serving a sixmonth sentence for beating his former press agent with a baseball bat. He was taken to the County Jail medical facility for a physical examination after complaining of pain, said Sheriff's Deputy Jim Borland.

The stuntman has already served a little over 10 weeks of his sentence. He was sent to the honor farm, where he has been assigned to the nursery at the agricultural facility.

Kilgore 'nester' trying to resurrect town

KILGORE, Texas (AP) — Sunlight filtered through the windshield of the big green Cadillac Fleetwood, glinting off Buster Dickerson's diamond rings.

The towering green canyons around this oil-rich East Texas town whipped by in a blur of pines broken only by rolling meadows on either side of the two-lane country road.

"This here's my land, far as you can see on both sides of the road," he gestured, the diamond on his right hand winking furiously. "Right up there is the old home place. We were farmers, all of us dirt poor."

He was born E.K. Dickerson. It says so right on the caddy's walnut dash just below the sign where he thanks you for not smoking.

"Hell, I've given up everything at least once," he drawled. "Gave up drinkin' two years before I gave up smokin'. Whiskey. Sterno. Shoot. You name it. I drank 'em all."

At 58, Buster Dickerson is a dinosaur in a sweat-stained Stetson, suede jacket, baggy green britches and boots. He's a Kilgore "nester" and hellbent on resurrecting his town, which once boasted "the world's richest acre."

In fact, he figures he owns about a fifth of the downtown area — not bad for an ex-sharecropper.

"Yeah, I got me a couple of motor homes, couple of yachts, a big one and a little one. Even had a 14-passenger airplane but I couldn't get nobody to go around with me. I'm the only one around who's retired so I sold it," he laughed.

Buster made his money in real estate and servicing the thousands of oil rigs during the 40 years following discovery of the legendary East Texas field in 1930.

But even in leaner days — when Texas Rangers patrolled the streets and rowdy oil field roughnecks were locked up in Kilgore's three churches because there was no jail big enough — young E.K. Dickerson knew how to get by.

"Everybody had 'em a toll road back then," he chuckled. "The weather was so bad in the early 30s the wagons tore up the roads. Two oil companies helped me build this lil' old bridge. I guess the whole thing, road and all, was only about 100-150 feet long. Their roustabouts got to cross for free. Everybody else it was two bits."

In 1939, more than 25,000 wells pumped 144 million barrels of crude from the field. Today, the number is less than half. So those from whom legends and tall tales grew are dead. Others moved on. It's the movers who upset Buster.

"I'm a nester," he explained. "I was here before the oil and I'm still here. Boomers are those people who came in with the oil. Lot of 'em left after they got rich. But there's still lots of money here. This town's got money you wouldn't believe."

It could be that a sizable chunk of it belongs to the man in the big green car, but that's about as much as he'll allow.

"Oh, I put no value on that," he said. "I been rich all my life in friends. Money? No. I have no idea. I'm comfortable. I'll say that."

Buster lives with his wife and "my half-wolf dog" outside of town. They are off on a tour of the Orient in May. Whatever is left when he's through traveling, wheeling and dealing, he says goes to Kilgore Junior College.

But in the next instant, the mood changes to one his old wildcatter friends would better recognize.

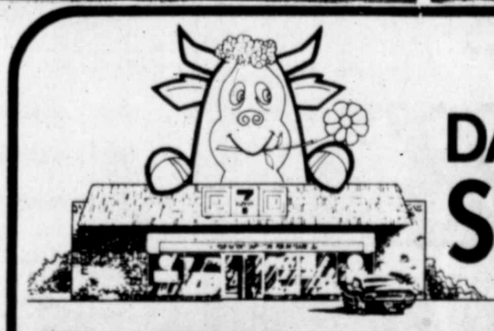

"Yessir. I'm gonna leave all my money to the college," he roared. "But I'm gonna try like hell to spend ever last dime of it first."

Bicycle parking becomes problem in Japan

TOKYO (AP) — So many Japanese are riding bicycles to railway stations these days — and leaving them there while they take the train to work — that a serious, sometimes dangerous, problem has been created.

A recent survey by the Ministry of Construction showed that more than 2,000 railway stations across the country were overcrowded with parked bicycles. Most of the problem sites were in suburban areas of major cities.

At Sengendai, Saitama prefecture in northern Japan, sidewalks were so cluttered with bikes at rail facilities that people had to walk in the streets, risking being hit by cars, the survey said. About 5,000 bicycles were parked there illegally every day, it added.

The number of bicycles owned in Japan has soared from around 10 million just after World War II to 45.5 million today, one for every 2.6 persons in the country and 1.3 per household. Officials said Japan, about the size of Montana, now lagged behind only the United States in terms of numbers of bike users.

In 1973 the annual production of bicycles in Japan increased to 9.4 million, approximately double the output of the two previous years. The oil crunch and ensuing business slump brought the figure down to 5,850,000 in 1975, with 90 percent of the output going to the domestic market.

The three major cities of Tokyo, Osaka and Nagoya are the ones most affected by the parking problem, officials said.

Construction Ministry spokesmen said plans were being worked on in an attempt to ease congestion in those metropolitan areas, but they admitted it was not something that could be solved overnight.

The government is preparing to provide the equivalent of about $24 million in its fiscal 1978 budget in subsidies to local and municipal governments to construct parking plazas.

Part of the popularity of bicycles in Japan, as in other countries, has been because of concern about pollution and energy conservation.

College offers vaulting course

Vaulting, using real horses instead of a piece of gymnastics equipment, will be taught in a course, offered by the Midland College Department of Community Services, beginning Tuesday.

James Bramlett, director of the Department of Adult and Continuing Education, said Becky Clark, who has taught similar classes in California five years, will be the instructor. She has competed in a number of national contests.

The eight-week course covers basic gymnastics exercises and rider conditioning. Eventually, students will learn how to perform gymnastics on a moving horse, including kneeling, flagging, jump and kick, stand and flank and the roll.

After the first class meeting, students will begin active participation and will be given a list of necessary equipment and dress.

Classes will be held from 6 to 7:30 p.m. Tuesdays and Thursdays in the college gymnasium lobby. Because of the spring holiday, there will be no preregistration. Instead, persons who wish to sign up for the class may do so at the first meeting. The cost is $24.

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Alcohol is drug

Dear Dr. Solomon: A friend of mine says there has been an increase in thyroid cancer because of X-ray exposure. I'm quite concerned because when I was about seven or eight I had some X-ray treatment for my tonsils. Is there anything I should do?—Peter L.

Dear Peter: Thyroid cancer has increased somewhat during the last two or three decades, although it is still fairly rare (about 1,150 deaths from it during 1976 and 8,100 new cases, according to estimates). The increase does seem to be mainly due to the irradiation treatment given to children to shrink their infected tonsils, adenoids and thymus glands from the 1920s to about 1955.

A person like you who has had this radiation treatment should be examined by a doctor, to make sure that everything is all right. Don't panic. The National Cancer Institute points out that the incidence of malignant tumors is low—most of the tumors are benign. And there is a high probability of cure if a malignancy is found.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I have been reading that the kids nowadays aren't as apt to be taking drugs as they were a few years ago but that they are all drinking more. Do you think this is actually any better?—Emory S.

Dear Emory: Not really, because alcohol itself is a drug. And one drug leads to another—as shown in a striking survey just published in the "Archives of General Psychiatry." The study was conducted among more than a thousand teen-agers in the New Haven, Conn., area by Leroy C. Gould, Ph.D., and colleagues at Yale University.

They found that high school students using drugs were often indulging in several different kinds at the same time, and that there was a definite pattern of going up the ladder to more dangerous drugs. The order of progression started with alcohol and then went on to marijuana, hashish, barbiturates, amphetamines, LSD, mescaline, cocaine and heroin.

Three-fourths of the students took alcohol with friends, away from home. Over half had tried marijuana. One-third had experimented with hashish, and 18 percent were currently using it. Eighteen percent had used barbiturates; another 18 percent, amphetamines. Twelve percent had tried LSD, 10 percent had used mescaline, 6 percent had been on cocaine and 2 percent on heroin.

Should teen-agers drink? You can argue that the older teen-agers should learn how to drink on special occasions, with emphasis on moderation. This probably works best within a strong family and cultural tradition. But on the whole I'd say the best thing for a young person is to skip the whole drug scene, alcohol included.

Professor, designer works 'worlds apart'

BLOOMINGTON, Ind. (AP)—Max Rothlisberger, 63, has two jobs—worlds apart.

He is professor of stage design in the opera department of the Indiana University School of Music here. He is also chief designer for the opera at his home in Zurich, Switzerland.

In 1977, he made at least four trans-Atlantic flights between jobs.

"Dean Charles Webb has asked me to give up the Zurich residence," Rothlisberger said. "But I need the European background, so I may have the impressions and the stimulation of what is going on here. I see all kinds of interesting theater. I have worked all around Europe, and as long as it is possible to combine that and IU, I will do it."

The artist joined the university's faculty in 1973 as visiting professor and was raised to full professor in 1977.

Business not ready to help cities, survey says

By NANCY L. ROSS
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — A survey of 350 of the country's largest corporations reveals that big business is not now prepared to make a big commitment to the future of America's central cities. Among the principal deterrents to urban expansion are high taxes, high crime and poor public services, government regulations, discouraging modernization of facilities, and lack of a willing and able work force.

At the same time, the survey, titled "Large Corporations and Urban Employment," shows that a few companies are successfully making sizable invstments and initiating bold programs in decaying downtown areas. There is no indication of how many firms fall into each category.

One purpose of the research, performed by the subcommittee on the city of the House Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs Committee, was to ascertain what industries plan to expand or contract their urban operations over the next five years, and to determine what government policies influence those moves. Chairman Henry S. Reuss, D-Wis., said the data would be forwarded to White House officials involved in formulating a national urban policy.

Of the Fortune 800 biggest industrials and nonmanufacturing companies solicited, 352 responded. Two hundred of these proved to have substantial business in central cities and to be willing to impart their views on urban employment. However, virtually none answered Reuss' question about their plans, explaining either the information was proprietary or the answer depended on unforseeable economic conditions. While none mentioned plans to leave the city, few if any spoke of moving in.

Reuss declared, "The responses show an encouraging commitment by many corporations to preserve and create central city jobs, and justify some optimism about the economic future of the cities. The stage is set for an aggressive government-led program to increase private sector programs against unemployment." However, an aide confided that the subcommittee was disappointed in the small commitment expressed.

Reuss conceded that the many industries that already have moved to the suburbs are unlikely to participate in the back-to-the-cities movement, so the question becomes how best to encourage those still in downtown areas.

The clearest message in the letters reaching the subcommittee is that, if the Carter administration wants to encourage business to stay, expand and move back to the city, government will have to eliminate or modify some of the impediments it has put in the way.

Nearly one-third of the corporations complained about high property, business and personal income taxes in the cities. One-third also blamed the inferior quality of public transportation and education. Municipal schools turn out potential employees with inadequate skills and also inhibit recruitment of middle-level executives with families. At least one corporation in four mentioned uncoordinated or onerous government environmental and safety regulations.

Corporations, Reuss observed feel that recent expansion of welfare and unemployment benefits as well as the necessity of paying the minimum wage to undertrained and undereducated workers have impeded hiring in the central cities. Also, federal job-training programs seem "insensitive" to the need of business.

A frequent complaint involved the Clean Air Act.

Atlantic Richfield wrote, "It appears to be national policy to cease or limit growth in air-polluted areas." The firm called on the Environmental Protection Agency to relax its standards a bit to allow a company to build up credits for reducing pollution at existing plants that then could be traded off against pollution from new facilities. In short, the corporation wants a better balance between promoting industrial growth and improving air quality.

While Republic Steel is most worried over the threat of price controls, the Mellon Bank wrote that federal restrictions on branch banking were prohibiting it from establishing offices in the centers of other Pennsulvania cities besides Pittsburgh.

In summary, wrote General Motors Vice President Robert F. Magill, "There are major conflicts between the goals of environmental, energy, economic, employment, social and many other efforts. If appropriate types of industrial development are to be enticed into major urban areas, major economic incentives must be introduced to balance the built-in disadvantages."

Only a few contributed specific suggestions for encouraging business to maintain or locate operations in central cities. General Electric Vice President P. S. Peter advocated an urban bank and certificates of necessity, which would enable a private investor to recover an investment in a new or rehabilitated plant at a rate of at least 20 percent annually over a five-year period.

Committee member Millicent Fenwick, R. N.J., declared, "For a long time, business enjoyed a period of euphoria, but now we are bumping into reality. American industry is no longer competitive." She said she was not disappointed at the survey, which showed that some companies were doing "surprisingly well" in central cities.

In general, those industries that expressed the greatest confidence were banks, utilities and insurance companies, primarily because they said they could not afford to move.

Other reasons given were a desire to retain services of employees who might not want to relocate out of the city, closeness to service suppliers and subcontractors, and social responsibility. Whereas many corporations bemoaned the presence of an insufficiently experienced and motivated work force in the cities, at least one of those staying in the metropolis cited the availability of a large pool of semiskilled and skilled employees as plus.

Among the most bullish on the central city were Ralston Purina in St. Louis, Control Data in St. Paul, Seatrain Lines in Bedford Stuyvesant, Philip Morris in Manhattan and Ohio Edison in Akron.

The utility's president wrote, "Our commitment to the continued vitality of the central cities is best illustrated by our recent decision with respect to the location of our general offices. Our headquarters in central Akron, which we had occupied since the 1920s, had become intolerably overcrowded and outmoded. Our studies indicated that it would be cheaper to move to new quarters than to attempt to remodel the old.

Democrats in 13th district await GOP primary

By GARTH JONES
Associated Press Writer

Democrats of the 13th Congressional District will sit back May 6 and see what kind of candidate Republicans select to oppose two-term conservative Rep. Jack Hightower of Vernon in November.

Right now Hightower, former state senator, is an odds-on favorite to gain a third term from the district that includes most of the Panhandle and stretches east to Vernon and Wichita Falls.

The GOP primary contest pits Larry Kelly, 34, owner of a seafood restaurant in Amarillo, against Clifford Jones, 53, a Perryton farmer.

Associates of Hightower expect him to keep a low profile while Kelly and Jones settle their intraparty contest.

However, both Republicans spend much of their time campaigning against Hightower instead of each other.

"Hightower is a nice guy who is basically very ineffective in solving the needs of the district," said Kelly.

Kelly said he was entering the race because "the residents of the district need a more effective, more conservative voice in Washington."

Jones, who calls Kelly a "bartender" and Hightower a "fence straddler," said he got into the race because "I'm after Carter, labor, the bureaucrats — all of them, I want to clear them all out."

Both Republicans said they are opposed to the Panama Canal treaties and both think the U.S. House should have a say in the treaty decision, not just the Senate.

Kelly, an Amarillo resident for the past three years, is a native of Morse in Hansford County. He said his rural background gives him a clearer view of the farmers' problems.

Jones organized the American Agriculture movement in his hometown. He suggests that the real solution lies in "limiting imports. Farmers are subsidizing the whole world. Somebody has got to let them know what we think. Congress is not protecting the individual."

Kelly was one of those who filed suits against Potter County Sheriff T.L. Baker and County Commissioner Bob Hicks in December seeking their permanent removal from public office.

Jones also made headlines in December as spokesman for a group of Texas, Kansas and Oklahoma oil and gas producers who threatened to halt production until domestic prices were allowed to rise to world levels.

Hightower easily defeated Republican Bob Price in the 1974 Watergate landslide then beat off a Price return match in 1976.

Hightower makes farm problems a big part of his campaign saying that urban congressmen must be taught that agricultural and energy producers and consumers are dependent on each other.

"The beleaguered farm economy threatens the strength of the national economy," he said. "No more serious problem faces our country than the plight of agriculture. The costprice squeeze on farmers and ranchers threatens to grow steadily worse."

Hightower says he has tried to be a strong voice the past three years for energy production growth.

"I have spoken and voted for energy proposals that would increase our energy supplies and therapy protect the interests of producers and thereby protect the interests of producers and consumers," he said. "I have spoken and voted against programs that would increase federal involvement in energy production and that would promote energy conservation through the artifical means of taxation."

ATLANTA (AP) — "You are sentenced to write a research paper, make an apology, give two weekends of volunteer service ..."

Rex Ruff, president of the Georgia Council of Juvenile Court Judges, doesn't think he is doing anything innovative with his sentencing in shoplifting cases. He believes he is simply doing something that makes sense.

And statistics suggest Judge Ruff's approach is working. In 1976, 212 cases of shoplifting came before his court, but as of Sept. 1, 1977, he had dealt with only 87.

Lance remains in good stead with Democrats

The Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON — Despite new government allegations about Bert Lance's financial activities, Democratic Chairman John C. White describes the former budget director as "the Carter administration's "closest thing to a folk hero" and says he hopes Lance will continue as a major party fund-raiser.

Lance, moreover, remains a close advisor to President Carter. Even as the Securities and Exchange Commission was preparing to take civil action last week against lance and others for allegedly violating federal law in a stock-buying scheme to gain control of a bank-holding company, Lance was lobbying senators on Carter's behalf to ratify the Panama Canal treaties.

Lance's continuing involvement with the president and his party since resigning under fire as budget director last September has caused uneasiness among some Carter advisors, who feel Lance could again become a serious political liability. In addition to the new SEC case, Lance is under continuing investigations into his past banking and financial practices by both the SEC and the Justice Department and no end appears to be in sight for either probe.

White, in a luncheon session with several reporters Wednesday, said:

"Most people feel that Washington did a job on Bert Lance, whether that's true or not. Once you get out of Washington, Bert Lance is the closest thing to a folk hero this administration has."

Some Carter advisors, aware that it was the earlier controversy over Lance that gave the administration its first political black-eye, have discussed ways to keep the former budget director away from the Oval Office. None have dared to broach the subject directly with the president, however, and his close relationship with Lance has continued.

As a result, these advisors fear, fresh controversy over Carter's ties to Lance could flare up in the weeks ahead and aggravate the president's already serious political problems.

Democratic party leader White clearly does not share that view.

Asked Monday if Lance would continue directing fund-raisers, such as the million-dollar affair he directed at Carter's request in Atlanta on Jan. 20, White smiled and said, "I hope so."

(Carter has committed himself to attend at least four more major fund-raising dinners this year, including one in Texas and another in California in late June, according to White.)

"I'm a personal friend of Bert Lance's," White said. "I think he's a great guy. I hope to be in touch with him soon."

Reminded that Lance is being investigated by a grand jury in Atlanta, White, former deputy U.S. secretary of agriculture and before that a 13-term Texas state commissioner of agriculture, said: "Anybody who does very much in public life these days has been investigated by a grand jury. I've been investigated twice myself."

In his case, White said, it helped to have the investigations because they disproved some allegations that had been made against him.

As for Lance, a Justice Department spokesman said "there is no quick end in sight" into the investigation into his tangled financial affairs and allegations of illegal banking practices. "It is very complicated," said the spokesman, pointing out that the Internal Revenue Service, the SEC, and the Justice Department's fraud section and public integrity section are all involved in the probe.

Dr. Geoffrey Stanford, hailed as a foremost authority on waste management, will be the featured speaker in Midland Tuesday at th meeting of the West Texas Association of Soil and Water Conservation Districts.

More than 200 farmers, ranchers and school, city, county state and federal officials are to attend the meeting that gets under way at 10 a.m. in the Midland County Exhibit Building, said Alvey Bryant, a director of the Midland Soil and Water Conservation District.

Dr. Stanford, of Cedar Hill, is a director of the Greenhills Center for Studies at the Interface Between Town and Country and is chief scientist for Agro-City Inc., an association of planning consultants.

Currently, he is advising cities and counties on management plans for their waste.

Gray is involved with the use of effluent from the city of Lubbock.

Hefty is a consulting specialist in the techniques and equipment for composting sewage sludge and municipal refuse.

Registration for the meeting, which is open to the public, will begin at 9 a.m. Midland Mayor Ernest Angelo Jr. will extend welcome.

J. D. Crawford, president of the West Texas association, will introduce Dr. Stanford. Crawford is a Midland insurance agent and farmer.

Cloud seeding funded

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN—Federal funds totaling $685,500 have been received by the Department of Water Resources for a series of cloud-seeding experiments this summer in the High Plains Cooperative Program (HIPLEX) east of the Permian Basin.

The Federal funds will be supplemented by $100,000 in State funds appropriated by the 1977 Legislature.

The HIPLEX program is a cooperative effort between the State of Texas and Bureau of Reclamation of the U.S. Department of the Interior.

Taking part in weather modification experiments this summer will be Texas A&M, Texas Tech, Meterology Research, Inc., and the Colorado River Municipal Water District, which has sponsored an independent cloud-seeding program for increasing rainfall in the Big Spring-Snyder area since 1971.

Big Spring will be headquarters for the field program, scheduled for June and July, DWR reports.

While HIPLEX will concentrate on collecting radar, rainfall, and satellite data, CRMWD will use an airplane to seed tops of selected clouds during the "field exercise," DWR says.

Carter reviews smoking hazards

By FRANK CORMIER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — If you think smoking is good for you now, you may be bursting with good health if President Carter and his administration come up with a new cigarette.

At least, that's the impression Carter conveyed to some listeners during his recent visit to Winston-Salem, N.C.

As it happens, Winston-Salem is the world headquarters of R. J. Reynolds Industries, a leader in the cigarette business.

Of course, politicians have been known to tailor their remarks for local consumption, which may have been the case with Carter in Winston-Salem.

Inviting questions from local reporters, the president was asked if he quarreled with the anti-smoking campaign of Joseph A. Califano Jr., the secretary of health, education and welfare.

After saying he had no quarrel with Califano, Carter said tobacco "in some instances is damaging to our nation's health, particularly among very young children and those who have respiratory diseases."

The non-smoking president added that Califano has "only a $30 million budget on tobacco," two-thirds of which is earmarked for research. He concluded:

"Certainly no one need fear the emphasis on research that will make the use of tobacco in the future even more safe than it has been in the past."

Speaking of smoking, Carter recently told a capital city audience:

"I wanted to bring a breath of fresh air to Washington. I told my Cabinet that I wanted to get away from the smokefilled rooms. Joe Califano was the only one that heard me."

•

From Winston-Salem, Carter proceeded to Savannah, Ga., where he may well have set a single-day record for campaignstyle activities.

Baby-kissing is nothing new for the president. But Carter managed to kiss year-old triplets, which was new.

Later, in what seemed a rather unusual move, Carter paused to extend his hand to a medium-sized, fuzzy brown dog being held by a man in a baseball cap that bore the legend, "For the Love of Benji." Dog and president exchanged shakes.

The president no longer insists that he carry his own luggage on and off airplanes, as he did during the campaign.

When he left Georgia on Monday after a weekend rest at St. Simons Island, he mounted the front ramp to Air Force One empty-handed.

Meanwhile, a smallish steward labored up the back ramp carrying two garment bags and two sports-equipment bags containing tennis rackets.

One garment bag bore a cardboard notice: "President's Black Tie."

Court agrees to consider welfare fraud case appeal

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — The Texas Court of Criminal Appeals has taken under consideration a Dallas welfare fraud case that could affect 15,000 similar prosecutions over the state.

Lawyers for Veronica Mangrum, 29, Dallas mother of three, asked the court Tuesday to throw out the case against her. They asserted that the new state welfare fraud law is defective.

She was charged under the old law of defrauding the state welfare department of $361 by not reporting part-time employment.

Under the new law, welfare fraud over $200 can be prosecuted as felony theft. Under the old law welfare fraud was a misdemeanor.

However, the defendant's lawyers pointed out that the 1977 Legislature forgot to add a "savings clause" to the new law which would allow prosecution of cases filed under the old law after it was replaced by the new one.

"A repealed statute has no force in law," they argued.

Assistant Travis County Attorney John Roberts said there are about 200 welfare fraud cases pending in Austin alone under the old law.

Lawyers said prosecutors in Austin, Dallas and Houston have stopped pursuing welfare fraud cases pending outcome of the Mangrum appeal.

Hogs' Sutton to ignore zone against Kentucky

ST. LOUIS (AP) — In spite of a scare thrown at Kentucky by Michigan State last week, Arkansas does not plan to flag down the Wildcats with a zone defense when the two collegiate powers collide.

Razorbacks Coach Eddie Sutton pledged that Wednesday while weighing his fifth-ranked team's chances against No. 1 Kentucky in Saturday's semifinals of the NCAA basketball tournament at the Checkerdome.

"At this point of the season, I don't think anybody's going to put any tricky plays in or just ditch what has gotten them to where they are," Sutton said from Fayetteville, Ark., during a telephone news conference.

"We're basically a man-to-man basketball team," he added. "What's going to be a key as far as we're concerned is defensive board play. I think it's the biggest problem we'll face with a team like Kentucky."

While Sutton rejected defensive alterations for Kentucky, 28-2, which got by Michigan State 52-49 for the Mideast Regional title, Wildcats Coach Joe Hall was equally against change.

"There are things I feel are effective against his club that we're just not capable of doing," Hall said of Arkansas, 31-3.

"Quickness has been a problem for us," Hall said, alluding to problems Kentucky might face if it attempted to capitalize on the apparent weaknesses of its foe against pressing defenses.

"We usually make a substitution when we need more quickness, but we don't always solve that problem," Hall conceded. "Most of us feel at this stage of the game we usually go with what our team does best regardless of what we think upsets the opponent."

The sentiments on strategy voiced

SPORTS

by Hall and Sutton were echoed in large part by Notre Dame Coach Digger Phelps and Duke Coach Bill Foster, whose teams will clash in the other half of Saturday's doubleheader.

"I just think that we've got to play with what brought us here," said Phelps, whose No. 6 Irish, 23-6, flattened three opponents, including third-ranked DePaul 84-64, en route to the Midwest title.

"Obviously, that's our depth and our being physical. We're not looking to change any of that," he added. "I think in discussing Duke that Bill Foster has done an excellent job of getting his kids to play basketball.

"They play smart basketball. They're very well drilled in moving the ball down the floor. They pass as good as any team I've seen. Offensively, it's obvious that (Jim) Spanarkel is their money man."

Duke's Foster, a longtime friend of Phelps, returned his rival's compliment, labeling the Irish "a very deep club."

"I think the interesting thing in watching Notre Dame is that they are a combination of a power team, maybe to a large degree, but they're also a very, very well disciplined team. Their defense moves around very well, and this what we'll see on Saturday afternoon."

"I hope not, and I don't think so," Foster responded when asked if his No. 7 Blue Devils, a young team featuring freshman starters Gene Banks and Kenny Dennard, had not jelled a year earlier than expected.

"We had a good pre-season and than it carried over into the (Atlantic Coast Conference) league," he added of Duke, 26-6. "Each passing game, I think, added a little bit and we got more confidence in what we were doing. It snowballed."

Kentucky, while appearing in the NCAA semifinals an eighth time, will be seeking its fifth national title as Arkansas, Duke and Notre Dame vie for their first.

Arkansas nudged Fullertson State 61-58 last week for the regional title in the West. Duke, meanwhile, prevailed in the East by disposing of Villanova 90-72.

"We've gone to five straight regionals and only UCLA has done that," Notre Dame's Phelps said of his team's emergence from the role of an alsoran to the championship circle.

"I think everybody in the final four has got a shot at it," he said. "You just play your next opponent. You play for a moment like this. I'm just taking it as it comes."

Rebels return to win column

By BOB DILLON

It was strictly batting practice for Robert E. Lee Wednesday afternoon.

The Rebels pounded out 15 hits in roughing up the touring Waco University High Trojans, 16-7, at the Lee diamond.

Lee, still smarting from its 3-0 loss to Odessa High on Tuesday, rapped out 10 extra base hits off the road-weary Central Texas team which was playing its fourth game in three days.

University had split split games with Pecos on Monday night and knocked off Andrews, 4-2 on Tuesday.

The Trojans were in the game until the fourth inning when Coach Ernie Johnson's Rebs broke open a 7-7 tie to score three runs. Then in the fifth, the Tall City outfit kept ringing out base hits all over the place in scoring five more runs. For good measure, Lee added one more run in the sixth to wind up the long contest which took almost three hours to play.

TERRY WILLIS and Clay Calhoun knocked in eight runs between them with Willis plating five and Calhoun three. Tyler Alcorn also knocked in three runs while Craig Van Horn netted two runs-batted-in.

Lee started quickly off Mark Williams in the first inning by scoring four runs. Todd Clements, who had three of the 15 hits, was safe on a bunt single, stole second, went to third on a throwing error by Williams on a pickoff attempt and scored on Van Horn's long fly to deep center.

Calhoun walked along with Alcorn and Don Rasure rammed a double into right to score Calhoun for a 2-0 lead.

WILLIS FOLLOWED with a two-run double into left for the 4-0 advantage.

The Trojans came right back off starter Jeff Hatfield to score three runs to get back into the game. Walks to Arnold Yglecias and Larry Blain got Hatfield into a jam. Williams singled and centerfielder Ted Casarez ripped a bases-clearing double.

Lee added one more run in the second for a 5-3 lead without benefit of a base hit.

Waco U. then took the lead in the third inning with a four-run outburst on only two hits with Yglecias' double the big blow.

With one out in the bottom of the third, Rasure walked and Willis slammed his second home run of the year over the 360-foot sign in left-center, to tie the game, 7-7.

THE FUN was just beginning for the Rebels as they came up with three more runs in the fourth. Clements tripled into left and scored on Calhoun's single for an 8-7 lead.

Tommy Ruiz came in to relieve Williams and Van Horn moved the runners down on a sacrifice. Alcorn rapped a double to score Calhoun and Willis knocked in the other run on a sacrifice fly to right.

In the fifth, Pat Moore legged out a base hit and Clements doubled him to third. Calhoun blasted a two-run triple and Van Horn followed with a run-scoring two-bagger.

After two were out in the sixth, John White doubled to the 390-foot sign in center and scored on Richard Josefy's single up the middle.

Lee is now 10-5 on the year going into its District 5-4A game with San Angelo in San Angelo Saturday, while the Trojans take a 7-7 record to Abilene today.

DIAMOND DUST: Trojan outfielder Ted Casarez, who knocked in four runs against the Rebels with a double and single, suffered an injury in the fifth inning when dove for a line drive. He was playing with a broken finger and reinjured it... Waco University slept in the Lee Fieldhouse Wednesday night before heading down the road to Abilene today for the doubleheader with the Warbirds... Coach Al Bishop had to save ace pitcher Ricky Lanningham to throw at Abilene today in one of the games. He beat Pecos Monday night, 10-9...Lee has three games next week, playing Abilene Cooper and Lubbock Monterey Tuesday and Wednesday and Big Spring Saturday, with all of them at home.

Busby is satisfied with throwing

By The Associated Press

There's a vast difference between pitching and throwing but Steve Busby is so happy to be throwing he won't mind if it takes a little longer for him to start pitching.

Oh, Busby has taken the mound during a couple of Kansas City's exhibition games this spring, which was more than he did all last season, when he underwent a serious shoulder operation. And he was encouraged Wednesday even though the St. Louis Cardinals rocked him for nine hits and three runs in the first four innings of an 8-0 exhibition victory over the Royals.

That was just throwing.

"I really threw the ball better," said the Royals' one-time mound ace. "At times I had good velocity. I threw only one breaking pitch for a called strike and I have to be able to throw it for strikes. My location was terrible on a lot of pitches. I got too many up."

That's called pitching.

"What I have now is enough velocity, enough movement. I threw some fast balls that were the way they were before I hurt my shoulder. I think they're close enough not to make a difference. If this were April 1 I'd be real concerned. But I think I'll be able to pitch and get guys out in a couple more outings."

The Royals were held to five hits by Eric Rasmussen, Buddy Schultz and Pete Vuckovich.

Another comeback pitcher, Detroit's Mark Fidrych, had better results than Busby. The Bird gave up just three singles in six innings as the Tigers trounced the Toronto Blue Jays, lifting his spring record to 4-0.

Fidrych, who gave up just one single in four scoreless innings against Pittsburgh his previous outing, lowered his earned run average to 0.60.

"He was throwing more changeups and sliders today," Manager Ralph Houk said. "He wasn't as sharp as he was against Pittsburgh. But this was his fourth time out and it was time to work on other pitches. He had good stuff.

"I was going to pitch him five innings, but he didn't throw enough pitches. He wound up with 66. He should be ready for 75 or 80 now."

Elsewhere:

—A trio of ex-Texas Rangers helped the Atlanta Braves to a 7-0 victory over their former club. Tommy Boggs allowed one hit in five innings, Jeff Burroughs homered and Eddie Miller had two hits and stole a base. Rob Belloir and Dale Murphy also homered while Boggs and three relievers held the Rangers to three hits.

—Gene Tenace homered twice and Dave Winfield also connected, powering the San Diego Padres over the Chicago Cubs 4-1. The victory was the fourth straight for the Padres and second since Roger Craig replaced Alvin Dark as manager.

—Bobby Valentine's two-run homer in the bottom of the ninth gave the New York Mets a 2-1 triumph over the Cincinnati Reds. Tom Seaver hurled six scoreless i nings for the Reds, yielding two hits and striking out six.

—Chicago's Ken Kravec, who hadn't been scored on all spring, took a 4-0 lead into the fourth inning when the Philadelphia Phillies erupted for five runs and went on to defeat the White Sox 10-5.

—Baltimore and Los Angeles committed six errors apiece and the Orioles edged the Dodgers 9-8 with a four-run rally in the bottom of the 11th inning.

—Jack Clark's two-run homer with two out in the top of the ninth gave the San Francisco Giants a 7-6 victory over the California Angels and the Seattle Mariners pounded out 23 hits and clobbered the Oakland A's 19-4.

—Dave Goltz hurled eight strong innings as the Minnesota Twins downed the Houston Astros 5-1 and Butch Wynegar's tie-breaking two-run single in the seventh inning helped another squad of Twins edge the Montreal Expos 5-4.

Hogs' Delph reinstated

FAYETTEVILLE, Ark. (AP) — Marvin Delph, the leading scorer in University of Arkansas basketball history, was again eligible today to compete in the NCAA basketball championships after being declared ineligible for about 24 hours earlier this week.

Frank Broyles, University of Arkansas athletic director, said he took the action to declare Delph ineligible after it was discovered that people in Delph's hometown of Conway, Ark., raised funds to send the basketball star's parents last week to the NCAA West Regionals at Albuquerque, N.M.

Meeting by telephone conference call at Broyles' request, the NCAA Subcommittee on Eligibility voted Wednesday to reinstate Delph, just three days before the Razorbacks, 31-3, take on the Kentucky Wildcats, 28-2, in the NCAA national semifinals at St. Louis Saturday.

The committee consists of John Tonner of the University of Connecticut, John Eiler of East Stroudsberg State, and El Malen of Pomona Pitzers College.

David Berst, head of the NCAA rules enforcement department, said the fund raising action fell under a rule called "the extra benefits rule."

Broyles said neitheer Delph, basketball coach Eddie Sutton nor anyone else at the school knew of the fund raising operation until they read about it earlier this week.

Charles Blanchard, an official of the First State Bank of Conway, said the money raising program was launched by the Conway Chamber of Commerce early Friday morning after Arkansas disposed of UCLA, 74-70, in the West semifinals.

"We advertised on the radio station and raised approximately $1,100 in about eight hours. In short, we did everything that we wouldn't have done had we known this was a violation of NCAA rules.

The Delphs have now returned all of the money raised to the donors, Blanchard said. It cost them about $550 to fly to Albuqueque in time for Saturday's contest.

Ulysses Delph, father of the cager, works in the street department for the city of Conway. Mrs. Delph is the head of the home economics department of Arkansas Children's Colony, a large state center for handicapped children.

Rainsberger haunts K-State

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Kansas State University football fans, who thought they'd heard the last of Ellis Rainsberger, got an unpleasant surprise Wednesday when the university announced the Big Eight conference had placed it on probation because it gave out too many scholarships last year.

Rainsberger, who resigned after a player misidentification scandal, was the head coach when the excessive number of scholarships were given out, said Dick Haines, a university spokesman.

Big Eight Commissioner Chuck Neinas said no sanctions were yet attached to the probation.

K-State President Duane Acker said the terms and length of the probation would be decided during the conference's May meeting.

"We want to ascertain the party or the parties knowingly involved in the violations, and we want to perfect our recordkeeping and cross-checking systems so similar violations will not reoccur," Acker said in a prepared statement.

Under National Collegiate Athletic Association rules, teams are allowed to sign 30 players each year and have 90 on scholarship at a time. KState signed 43 last year, Acker said. To insure compliance with the rules, teams have to report the scholarships they give out to the conference.

But Acker and Robert Snell, the school's Big Eight faculty representative, both said the school discovered the violation and reported it to the conference. "We went to them," Snell said.

Snell said the "inconsistencies" were discovered when the university checked its records in early December.

"I don't think they were all signed by Rainsberger," Snell said. "No head coach signs all of them. The assistant coaches do some of the recruiting."

The university managed to keep the violations a secret from the time they were discovered nearly four months ago until the announcement Tuesday.

Rainsberger, who is now coaching in Canada, was unavailable for comment.

He resigned at the end of a 110 season after the university admitted two players, who played in a junior varsity football game, were misidentified in an apparent attempt to preserve their non-playing status so they could be redshirted.

"In early December, when we became aware of the violations, we recognized we should limit the number of 1978 football recruits to 17," Acker said in the statement.

"When we interviewed Jim Dickey for the position of head coach at K-State, we made it a condition of his employment that he could sign no more than 17 players to scholarship this year.

"In late December, we discussed with the Bir Eight Conference our discovery and our self-imposed limitation."

Robinson learns to cope

BRADENTON, Fla. (AP) — If you believe the 1977 Most Valuable Player balloting, the 11th best player in the National League was a "substitute" by the name of William Henry Robinson.

Two of the writers in the voting listed Robinson third on their ballots. What it all adds up to is that the Pittsburgh Pirates' Bill Robinson has obtained recognition 12-years late.

It's history about Robinson's highly publicized entrance to the major leagues with Atlanta in 1966, his trade the next year to the New York Yankees where he was greeted as the next Mickey Mantle. He flopped, slipped back to minor league oblivion in 1970, finally emerging with the Philadelphia Phillies in 1972.

The Phillies got one good year from Robinson, then virtually gave him away to the Pirates for Wayne Simpson, a pitcher with arm problems. The deal may be the worst made by usually shrewd Paul Owens, the Phillies general manager, and Pirates G.M. Joe Brown came up smelling like a rose.

Robinson finally had learned to cope. He helped the Pirates win the National League East in 1975 and has ben an integral part of the team the last two years when it was runnerup to the Phillies.

Actually, Robinson never has had a position he could call his own. In Pittsburgh, he has played the outfield, first base and third base. He's the club's insurance policy. Anybody hurt? Anybody in a slump? Need a clutch hit? Just call Robinson.

Last season, he was the team's regular third baseman in spring training until the acquisition of Phil Garner from Oakland. He returned to his spot as a fourth outfielder. Then, when first baseman Willie Stargell was injured, the Jack-of-all-trades Robinson took ovesr the job.

Robinson, at 34, played like the Robinson of 24 had been expected to play. He hit .304 in 137 games, had 26 homers and batted in 104 runs. He hit two grand slam homers in three days and was successful in 26 of 33 chances to score runners from third. He played four positions during the season.

"I really don't care about being a so-called star," Robinson insisted. "The word is a bunch of garbage. The only superstars I've ever known are my parents. My dad worked 30 years in a steel mill, missed just one week. That's a star to look up to."

Pittsburgh Manager Chuck Tanner is rewarding Robinson for his contribution with his first regular job. Robinson will open the 1978 season in left field.

Robinson is being paid like a star, despite his dislike of the word. He has the security he's always wanted. He has the regular job he has always coveted. What do you give a guy who has everything?

"It would be nice to make the (1978) National League All-Star team," Robinson said. "I've never even been on the ballot. And I'd like to play in the World Series."

Boredom, injuries plague Fran

NEW YORK (AP) — Age, boredom and injuries have caused veteran quarterback Fran Tarkenton to doubt he'll be back with the Minnesota Vikings next season.

"There is no more than a 50-50 chance I'll play," said the 38-year-old Tarkenton, the National Football League's career leader in passing yardage and touchdowns.

"Right now, I couldn't pass the team physical to play again," he added Wednesday, referring to a chronic knee injury, a torn cruciate ligament that has bothered him since 1976. Tarkenton missed the last five games of the 1977 season with a broken right leg, but says that injury has mended.

"My knee isn't ready, though," he said, "and the cruciate isn't a good percentage operation.

The quarterback's mental outlook also has changed.

"I get bored," he says. "I live for the day of the game and that's all. I love the day of the game, but I'm bored during the week. We spend a few hours at practice and a few hours at meetings. It's not very invigorating.

"I'm used to spending 10-12 hours a day on my behavioral systems business," he said at a news conference promoting the release of a book written by his business partner.

In 17 seasons with the Vikings and New York Giants, Tarkenton has passed for 43,535 yards, completed 3,341 of 5,895 passes and connected on 317 for touchdowns — all tops in the NFL.

Beard shocks defending champ

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (AP) — Young Jackie Beard didn't get upset when he drew the veteran defending champion in the early going of his first Golden Gloves Tournament of Champions.

"Everyone here's a champion," said the 16-year-old high school junior. "I didn't expect to fight no sissies."

And Beard certainly showed he wasn't a sissy as he stole the spotlight Wednesday night. The slick little 119-pounder from Jackson, Tenn., shocked 21-year-old Wayne Lynumn of Chicago, Ill., by outpointing his heavily favored opponent in a second round bout.

"It was close," said Beard, who qualified for the national tourney last year but couldn't compete because of a broken jaw. "He had the first round but the other two could have gone either way. I beat him by going inside. I just kept making him move back."

While he said he wasn't in awe of his better known opponent, Beard did admit it was "a thrill to beat the champ who won it last year. This is the biggest win for me since I started boxing."

Beard was one of 181 boxers representing 32 teams from throughout the nation and Canada who were featured in a marathon card of 133 matches Wednesday night that lasted more than seven hours and didn't finish until early Thursday morning.

The 133 bouts, divided among three rings that were used continually, included first and second round bouts in six of the 11 weight classes. The other five divisions will have first and second round battles tonight. All quarterfinals will be held Friday night, while the semifinals are set for Saturday and the championship struggles for Saturday night.

Topping tonight's card of 100plus bouts at the University of New Mexico Arena will be 125-pounder Bernard Taylor and 178-pounder Rick Jester. They, along with Lynumn, were the only defending champions in tourney, and they will be trying to avoid the same fate as Lynumn.

In the team race all eyes will be on Pennsylvania to see if the defending champions can hold off several powerful teams who are out to unseat them.

Pennsylvania finished the first two rounds in a three-way deadlock for first place with Las Vegas, Nev., and Omaha, Neb., with each scoring nine victories for nine points. Close behind were Washington, D.C., and Detroit, Mich., with eight points apiece and Fort Worth, Texas, Elizabeth, N.J., and Milwaukee, Wis., with seven each.

Beard's shocker was about he only upset of the night in individual competition as other favorites like Greg Page and Davey Lee Armstrong rolled along.

Page, the powerful Louisville, Ky., heavyweight whose favored to win the title after finishing second a year ago, had what he thinks will be his toughest fight of the tourney. After a quick first round knockout of Des Moines, Iowa's Randy Rempt, Las Vegas' Tony Tubbs took him the distance in a close fight that Page won on a decision.

"He's the next to the best one in the tourney," said Page. "I'm the best."

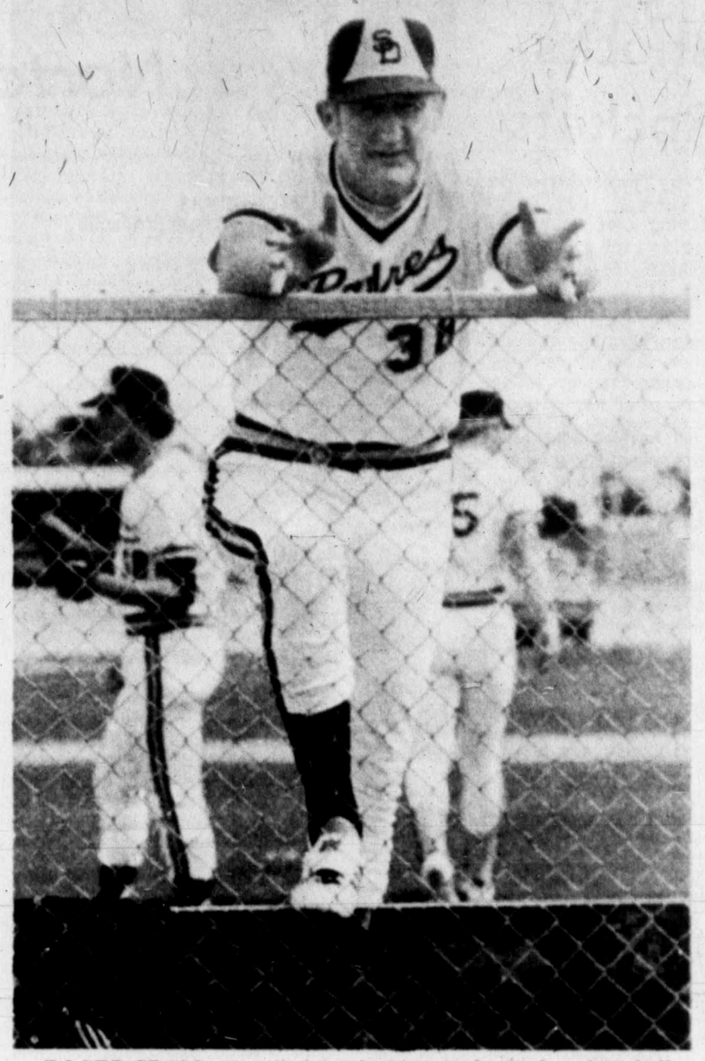

Armstrong, a quick-as-a-fly 132-pounder who finished fourth at 125 pounds in the Olympics at Montreal, stopped Mark Lemerick of Indianapolis, Ind., in the third round of his first fight. But, like Page, he was pushed to the final bell in his second bout with Los Angeles' Irleis Perez giving him a good test.

Olympian Louis Curtis of Washington, D.C., and Las Vegas' Richard Sandoval appear on a collision course in 106-pound division. Curtis outpointed Jackson's Fred Perkins and stopped Kansas City's Jessie Meza Jr. in the third round, while Sandoval outpointed Fort Worth's Sammy Fuentz and then stopped New Mexico's Richard Lopez in the second round of a wild, free swinging crowd pleaser.

Rocky Lockridge of Las Vegas, who was beaten in the 119 finals by Lynumn a year ago, was impressive in stopping Kansas City's Fred Magdaleno in the second round and outpointing Columbus, Ohio's Robert Cook. Lockridge was hoping to get a rematch in the championship bout with Lynumn but may have to settle for a title clash with Beard.

In the 147-pound division, Jeffrey Stoudemire of Cleveland is the man to watch and he showed his stuff by taking decisions over Toledo's Farris Gamble and Hawaii's Samule Alameda. Carlos Garrett of Springfield, Ohio, and Chuck Robinson of Las Vegas also turned in two fine performances in advancing to the 147 quarterfinals.

The 165-pound class looks wide open with several fighters including Fort Worth's Wilford Scypion, Detroit's Nathaniel Akbar, Pennsylvania's Vaughn Hooks and Omaha's Vaughn Kirkland looking especially good in the first two rounds.

'Horns celebrate NIT victory

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — The newly crowned National Invitational Tournament champion Texas Longhorns went their separate ways Wednesday to salvage some of their spring break and celebrate their title — the first ever for a Southwest Conference team.

The 17th-ranked Longhorns, the SWC co-champions, demolished North Carolina State 101-93 Tuesday night in New York's Madison Square Garden in a surprising finale for a team that was picked in some preseason polls to finish fifth in the SWC.

Texas Coach Abe Lemons, who needled and wooed the Big Apple with his one-liners, headed to St. Louis for the NCAA finals, where the SWC's Arkansas is one of the final four teams.

Sophomore Ron Baxter, the co-Most Valuable Plaer with Jim Krivacs, and starter Tyrone Branyan headed home to California. Starting guard John Moore went home to Pennsylvania.

Gary Goodner and Krivacs, who riddled the Wolfpack for 33 points, were the lone starters among the handful of players who arrived here Wednesday afternoon on a burnt orange jet.

"We all went our different ways to celebrate," Goodner said. "I'm happy that we went up East and showed them that Texas has a real good ballclub."

"It's a great feeling to go out with a championship," Krivacs said.

The remnants of the team were greeted at the airport by Austin Mayor Carole McClellan and about 200 fans.

Earlier, U.S. Sen. John Tower, R-Texas, said in a congratulatory telegram to the Longhorns: "No longer will the Southwest Conference be taken for granted on the national basketball scene. The Eyes of Texas, and indeed the nation, are upon you for the exemplary manner in which you performed in winning the NIT championship."

The university's famous tower, which is lighted orange in honor of Texas sports championships, shone orange Tuesday night over a campus left virtually deserted by the spring holidays.

The Longhorns, left out in the cold for a NCAA tournament bid when they lost to Houston 92-90 in the finals of the SWC post-season tournament, rolled over Temple, Nebraska, Rutgers and North Carolina State to the 41st NIT title.

The NCAA chose Arkansas, the other SWC co-champion, for an at-large berth, leaving Texas in the NIT.

The 26-5 Longhorns, using a superlative fast break, had a 17-point lead over North Carolina State shortly before halftime and built it up to 24 points early in the second half.

"I didn't even have to coach that one," Lemons, smoking a victory cigar, said after the game. "I've got smart kids and they know what they have to do. I don't have to work them that hard. In fact, this is the easiest team I've ever coached."

"The moon just wasn't right for North Carolina State," Lemons added. "They're a tough team. They played us hard ...but the lights went out for them."

Car wash could improve Rose

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — There are days when Bernie Stowe would like to run Pete Rose through a car wash.

"Pete is the dirtiest player in baseball," said Stowe, who has served as equipment manager of the Cincinnati Reds for the past 11 years. Stowe was referring to Rose's affinity for finding ways to look like a soot-covered chimney sweep.

"That belly slide is really tough on shirts," said Stowe, who was a batboy for the Reds when Rose, the Reds' 11-time All-Star, was 6 years old.

Stowe's job is to make sure members of the Big Red Machine look like a million dollars.

"We probably order more uniforms than any other big league team," he said. The Reds take pride in their spotless image, a policy that took root when Bob Howsam became general manager of the club in 1967.

"He's a stickler for presenting the best possible image," said Stowe, a rotund little man who is often the instigator of clubhouse horseplay.

His job isn't easy or inexpensive. The laundry bill alone totals a king's ransom.

"Wrigley Field in Chicago is the toughest park to stay clean," said Stowe. "They've got black dirt in their infield. The players get dirty just sitting on the bench. We have to send out everyone's uniforms to the cleaners after every game, even if they didn't play."

Outfitting a baseball club can quickly add up to astronomical sums.

Every winter he orders 85 new white uniforms and 85 road grays at a cost of about $12,000. "The pant and shirt go for $70, a cap is $8.50, and our red wool socks are $8.50 a pair. We're the only club in either league that still uses wool socks. They are expensive, but they look very good," he said. Players provide only shoes and gloves.

Some players, like Rose and slugger George Foster, are rougher on uniforms than others.

"Foster is the hardest guy on the team when it comes to wear and tear on pants. He slides in such a way that he tears up three or four pair of pants a year," said Stowe.

The artificial surfaces at many ballparks have cut down the laundry bills, but produced unforeseen new costs.

"If an outfielder slides on his knees while making a catch on astroturf he'll melt a hole in the nylon material the size of a half dollar," said Stowe.

The Reds were among the first teams to wear their names on the backs of their uniforms, and the move keeps Stowe and his helpers scrambling when a new player arrives hours after a trade.

"When we got Mike Lum in a trade, we were in San Diego and I couldn't find anyone who would sew on his number and name," Stowe recalled. "I taped on his numbers and colored his name on the uniform with metholate. Luckily, he didn't get in the game."

Lasorda improves pen, but weakness remains

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. (AP) — Notes from the baseball spring training circuit:

Tom Lasorda, Manager of the National League champion Los Angeles Dodgers, explained his club's signing of free agent reliever Terry Forster.

"After last season, we evaluated our club and decided we had two weaknesses — the bullpen and the manager. Forster improves the bullpen but we haven't done anything about the manager though."

More Lasorda: "It's tough to cut a player in spring training, but it's easier for me to cut them than for me to be cut."

The Texas Rangers have borrowed a page from the Cleveland Indians. When ABC televises the Rangers against the New York Yankees for its first Monday night game, fans will receive: "I Hate the Yankeees hankies," to wave at the world champions.

When the Indians tried that same promotional gimmick last season they swept a doubleheader from New York.

Whitey Herzog, Manager of the American League West champion Kansas City Royals, laughs about the All-Star team.

"We had one guy (third baseman George Brett) make the team last year and we didn't have any other player in the top six vote-getters at any position. But we won a 102 games. That must make me a genius."

Everywhere Baltimore Manager Earl Weaver looks he sees his ex-coaches managing against him. There's Billy Hunter, Weaver's longtime third base coach at Texas, and George Bamberger, who tutored the Orioles pitchers, at Milwaukee.

It caused a scandle when Bamberger left because the Birds had allowed minor league pitching instructor Ray Miller to join the Texas organization.

"When George went to Milwaukee we asked Texas to let us talk to Miller. I'm glad he agreed to come back to us."

First baseman Mike Jorgensen is with Texas because of his friendship with pitcher Doc Medich. Both were free agents after last season.

Evert, Wade survive strong challenges

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Top-seeded Chris Evert and Wimbledon champion Virginia Wade survived strong challenges Wednesday night to win matches in a $100,000 women's pro tennis tournament here.

Evert overcame the challenge of 19-year-old Czechoslovakian Reginia Marsikova 4-6, 6-3, 6-0 to reach the quarter-final round in defense of her title here.

Evert was in danger until the middle of the second set when she reached stride and won nine straight games to capture the match after trailing in six of those games.

"Once ahead at 4-3 in the second set, I felt I could pull out the match. It was a real challenge for me," said Evert. "Hereafter, I'll have to try to start out faster than I did tonight. Sometimes I need excitement to play my best tennis."

Wade completed the first round of play by defeating Kristien Shaw 7-5, 6-2 in a vigorously contested match of an hour and 12 minutes.

"I was surprised at how hard she was hitting the ball," said Wade of the strength shown by her left-handed opponent.

Wade carried the first set in the 12th game with a cut stroke down the sideline after her lead of 5-3 had been wiped out.

Denver starts printing tickets

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Bob Lurie, co-owner of the San Francisco Giants, said Wednesday after hearing that major league baseball tickets were being printed in Denver, "That's fine. It's certainly positive."

Lurie added, however, that he wished he could be as positive as Marvin Davis, the prospective buyer of the Oakland A's who said he was "90 per cent sure we're going to get the ball club."

Davis, a Denver oilman, has ordered tickets printed for the American League team he hopes to operate in the season which opens in two weeks. He said he expects to have an announcement Friday concerning the transfer of the franchise.

The last Lurie had heard, baseball was demanding that A's owner Charles O. Finley pay $2 million by Thursday to get out of his Oakland Coliseum lease and Finley was steadfastly refusing to pay any more than $1 million.

"I haven't talked to Charlie today," said Lurie. "I'm waiting to hear from a lot of people."

Other baseball owners, including Lurie and his partner Bud Herseth, were to put up $1.25 million under the proposed plan to meet the Oakland Coliseum's demand for $3.25 million to free the A's from their lease.

Possible compromises, besides Finley giving in, were for the owners to pay more or for the Coliseum to reduce its figure.

The Giants will play 40 games a season in Oakland if the A's leave, paying rent at two stadiums but hoping for added attendance that would make operations profitable. The National League team has lost about $3 million the past two seasons under the Lurie-Herseth ownership, and Finley says he lost about $2 million during that period.

Problems the Giants would face as a two-city team include finding 40 available dates in Oakland.

Sparky still sparks at mention of Dodgers

By ROSS NEWHAN
The Los Angeles Times

TAMPA — The morning rain drove Cincinnati manager Sparky Anderson off the field and onto a stool in the corner of his clubhouse office. He put his back to the wall and said:

"When we made the deal for Vida Blue, (Dodger manager) Tom Lasorda came out and said that it didn't matter, that he'd beat us anyway, that he'd beat us even if we resurrected Lefty Grove.

"Now we don't have Blue (the deal was voided by commissioner Bowie Kuhn) and we haven't resurrected Lefty Grove.

"Tommy has no excuses if he doesn't beat us."

The rain drove Cincinnati second baseman Joe Morgan off the field and onto a bench in front of his locker. He mopped his face and said:

"We still put eight people on the field who can do more things than the eight of any other club. In the total picture, with the changes we have made in our pitching, we have a better club than the Dodgers."

THE RAIN drove Cincinnati third baseman Pete Rose off the field and into a clubhouse Ping-Pong game with Tom Seaver. Rose lost, walked to his locker and said:

"We know about Steve Garvey's consistency. We know Ron Cey is among the top five in RBI consistency. What we don't know is if people like Dusty Baker and Reggie Smith and Steve Yeager can repeat the years they had in 1977.

"Maybe I'm wrong, but on an overall basis I think we have more players who have performed more consistently than the Dodgers. If you put the teams next to each other and had every player perform up to his capability, to his career statistics, we would win."

The two-time world champions finished 10 games behind the Dodgers in the National League West last year.

IF THIS reflected an internal disorder in the Big Red Machine, it is not apparent now. The glow of a new spring seems only to enhance the renowned names above the lockers here in the camp called Redsland. The talk is of how a rebuilt pitching staff and the wounded pride of 1977 will work in favor of a team that, despite its runnerup finish, still led the league in team defense and was second in runs scored and team batting average.

The players disagree some with changes initiated by Anderson to counter what he believes was a "country-club atmosphere" last spring. But they react with laughter to the word games their manager plays with Lasorda, exchanges that may have now gone beyond harmless needles.

"I recall the story you did with Tommy at the end of last season," Anderson said, "in which he repeated everything I had said during the summer and made the point that I had helped motivate the Dodgers. This year I'm keeping my own file.

"We have a friendly rivalry that I don't think will ever be otherwise. The Dodgers have good people and a lot of them are my personal friends, Tommy included.

"I TRY to take the kidding in stride, to not get too high or too worked up about it, but Tommy should learn to bite his tongue before saying things like the reason the Dodgers had the lowest percentage figure among the four division winners was that they had no competition.

"He may have meant that they didn't play up to their capability the second half because we didn't put any pressure on them, but I can't read between the lines. He said only that the Dodgers had no competition, which is something we never said even when we were beating the Dodgers by 20 games in 1975 and by 10 in '76.

"In my opinion, the Dodgers still have to play catch-up with us. They may be wearing rings that the organization gave them as a token for making the playoffs, but the big stone still isn't there, it still isn't a World Series ring.

"What happened last year wasn't a true test and didn't really prove anything because of the way we had to completely rebuild our pitching during the season. This year will be the test and the Dodgers are going to have to beat us two years running, which no one has done in my eight years here."

Anderson ran a hand through his white hair, reflecting perhaps on the five division titles, four pennants and two world championships his team has won in those eight years.

"IF THAT'S not competition," he said, "I don't know what is. Vince Lombardi once said that a team should be judged on its longevity, on the number of years it plays at a championship level. The Dodgers haven't won a World Series since 1965. They've reached the World Series only twice in my eight years and lost both times. Not only haven't they dominated the National League, they haven't dominated the Western Division."

Anderson said, however, that he did not mean to take anything away from what the Dodgers accomplished last year.

"What the Dodgers did last year," he said, "wasn't luck. They beat us and they should have beaten the Yankees in the World Series. They were the better team.

"I mean I'm the first to say that the Dodgers will give us all the competition we need. We won't have to look around corners for more. Last year they were 12 up by the middle of May and we never put any pressure on them. If we can stay with them until the middle of June we'll be all right. If you go back and look at the Dodgers' second-half record since I've been here you'll find that they are little more than a 500 team. Aside from blowing us out early last year the Dodgers didn't do anything unusual. They were the same second-half team they've always been, with the difference being that this time we were either incapable or unprepared to take advantage of it.

"If they beat us again it will only be because they have more talent. It won't be because we are going about it as if this was a country club. We have rejoined the world of baseball. We are going to use these six weeks to get mentally prepared, as well as physically. If they beat us after this we are going to have to take a solid look at our talent."

ANDERSON implied that in addition to what some have said was the inevitable breakdown of a thin pitching staff, the Reds probably fell victim to some degree to its bounty of rewards and recognition; that it failed to work hard and keep its mind on business; that the result was a breakdown in fundamentals, a series of blown signs, erratic relays, poor bunts and wasted chances to advance a runner. He said he blamed himself as much as anyone and that if it happens again he should be fired.

"Last year," he said, "I didn't leave the complex and get to the stadium for our exhibition games until they were in the second or third inning. This year I'll see every pitch.

"Last year, we didn't work on signs until the final 10 days of camp. This year we will have worked on them every day.

"Last year, I looked at our young pitchers in the A games and used the regular rotation in B games. This year it will be just the opposite. The starters (Seaver, Paul Moskau, Bill Bonham and Fred Norman) will work every fourth day no matter what and they will continue to work that way when the season starts."

Jabbar shocks Rockets

By The Associated Press

Kareem Abdul-Jabbar has been having some problems lately, but you couldn't tell it from his performance against the Houston Rockets Wednesday night.

All the big guy did was score 31 points, grab 14 rebounds and block eight shots to lead the Los Angeles Lakers to a 124-106 National Basketball Association victory.

"I haven't been hitting my jump shot recently, but I was tonight and it complemented my other shots," said Jabbar, who is just 24 points shy of the 20,000 mark, a feat accomplished by only eight other players.

"They tried to play aggressive defense against me, but I think I can hold my own against any center in the league."

Houston Coach Tom Nissalke agreed with that.

"He is the greatest basketball player of all time," Nissalke said. "When he is making tough shots like that there is not much you can do to stop him."

The Lakers scored nine consecutive points early in the third quarter to overcome a 59-54 Houston lead and never were headed. Despite Calvin Murphy's 36 points, the Rockets dropped their 13th consecutive game.

Elsewhere, the Kansas City Kings upset the Philadelphia 76ers 120-108, the Boston Celtics defeated the Cleveland Cavaliers 105-99, the Washington Bullets trounced the New Orleans Jazz 124-109, the New Jersey Nets downed the Chicago Bulls 105-99 and the Seattle SuperSonics turned back the Buffalo Braves 97-92.

Kings 120, 76ers 108

Bill Robinzine, Tom Burleson and Scott Wedman accounted for 37 points in the third quarter. Philadelphia was ahead 5958 at the half but Robinzine, Burleson and Wedman outscored the 76ers 37-19 in the third period. Ron Boone led Kansas City with 24 points and George McGinnis had 28 for the losers. Philly lost Julius Erving early in the first quarter with what appeared to be a minor knee injury.

Celtics 105, Cavaliers 99

Sidney Wicks' three-point play with 1:04 left helped boost Boston to a comeback triumph. The Celtics, who trailed 89-81 with under six minutes left, tied the score at 97 on a jumper by Dave Bing, who led all scorers with 24 points, including nine long-range shots in the second half. Dave Cowens hit Wicks with an alley-oop pass and Wicks dunked the shot and added a free throw for a 100-97 lead.

Bullets 124, Jazz 109

Kevin Grevey scored 30 points, Bob Dandridge 23 and Mitch Kupchak 22 to lead Washington. The Bullets were ahead by as many as 18 points in the second quarter but the lead was down to three at the start of the fourth period. Kupchak, who had only five points at halftime, scored 17 of the Bullets' 27 points in a nine-minute stretch as Washington pulled away in the final quarter.

Pete Maravich, the NBA's leading scorer, hit six of nine shots and scored 12 points in 25 minutes of play. That was twice as long as he played Tuesday night in his first game back after a knee injury.

Nets 105, Bulls 99

Rookie Bernard King scored 33 points and grabbed a career-high 18 rebounds for New Jersey. John Williamson added 23 points as the Nets posted their fourth victory in the last five games. The loss dropped Chicago three games behind Milwaukee in the battle for the final Western Conference playoff berth.

After Cazzie Russell's jump shot gave Chicago a 93-91 lead with 4:38 to play, the Bulls missed their next 11 shots.

SuperSonics 97, Braves 92

Gus Williams, who scored 17 of his 25 points in the first half, got the Sonics untracked in the second quarter, scoring 11 points as they turned a 30-18 first-quarter deficit into a 55-48 halftime lead. The Braves tied the score at 61 in the third period and led 83-78 early in the fourth quarter but ran off nine straight points to take the lead. Randy Smith paced Buffalo with 31 points.

Norton wins title on phone

By JIM MURRAY
Los Angeles Times Syndicate

Max Schmeling won the heavyweight championship of the world lying on his back, holding his stomach and yelling for a doctor. But nobody ever won it by phone until Ken Norton.

Lots of guys have got the title by split decision. But nobody ever got it by committee before. John L. Sullivan would have been mortified.

I mean, you're supposed to win the heavyweight championship in Yankee Stadium or Philadelphia's Sesquicentennial Stadium or Boyle's Thirty Acres or something. You don't win it in your living room. You're supposed to be there, at the very least. Ken Norton won it in Mexico City. He was in L.A. at the time.

THEY DO this all the time in the lighter weights. Pass the title around like a hot diamond. But they've never done it with the heavyweight championship before. The heavyweight champ was as sacred as the pope. You bloody well had to knock him unconscious in front of a lot of witnesses to get his title.

The whole thing really is silly. Years ago, when there were thousands of fighters for every dozen there are today, they had a rule you had to defend your title every six months. No one ever did.

Listen! Jack Dempsey was one of the most-storied champions of all-time, right? Well, Dempsey didn't have a title fight from 1923 till 1926. He spent three years on a vaudeville tour. Gene Tunney, who beat him in 1926, fought only once a year. Schmeling fought only once a year. So did Jack Sharkey when he got the title. So did Max Baer. James J. Braddock, as champion, didn't fight for over two years.

BOXING is run by two jurisdictions today, which is to say it's not run at all. As Confucius say, one ruler is dictatorship, two rulers is anarchy. The World Boxing Association and the World Boxing Council get along like two women wearing the same dress at a party. But, commissioners now arrogate to themselves the power not only to tell the champ how often to fight but whom.

Muhammad Ali fought more times as champ in a month than guys like Dempsey, Sharkey, Baer and Braddock fought in a year. He even fought Ken Norton three times, and, if they fought 30 more, each fight would end up 7-6 with two even. Ali, with eroding skills and thickening wasteline, wanted to vamp between major title shots by fighting the likes of ex-Olympic champions for pocket money.

He fought Leon Spinks the way Dempsey might have fought carnival fighters on stage in Sheboygan. I mean, these fights were just kind of complicated concerts. Except, Ali put his title on the line. So Spinks won. Caruso sang Carmen but Carmen won. The piano slammed on the maestro's fingers.

JUST BEFORE the fight, Ali had wearily signed a letter agreeing to a fourth fight with Ken Norton if they allowed him to fight Spinks. Spinks signed the same agreement. It's easy to sign away something you don't have, and don't expect to get. Spinks also signed a piece of paper giving the promoter, Bob Arum, his next six fights if he beat Ali.

When Spinks did beat Ali, nobody in his right mind in the fight game ever expected him to honor his commitment to fight Ken Norton. It would be like setting fire to $5 million, the difference between what an Ali fight would draw and a Norton fight. Promoter Arum thought he'd solved the problem neatly by offering Norton $200,000. When Norton refused, as he surely would this pittance, Arum and the new champ would be off the hook with the WBC.

But Norton accepted. Norton never was fooled by a sucker punch, in or out of the ring. He faded the shooter.

So Arum went to Plan B. He had Ali take to the airways, CBS, to make an almost tearful plea he be allowed a Spinks rematch.

The presumption of everyone, probably including Leon Spinks himself, is that Leon Spinks is an interim champion. Already, he's only got half a title, and he hasn't even laced on a glove yet. But Norton is heavyweight champion on paper only. When they said the only way a champ can lose his title is in a ring, they didn't think they meant a telephone.

Rockets lose; Murphy excels

By The Associated Press

Calvin Murphy is not too short to make it in the National Basketball Association, after all.

"They said I was too small to play in high school — I made All-America," recalls Murphy, the Houston Rockets' guard who is listed at 5-foot-9 but is termed by Coach Tom Nissalke as "about 5-6."

"Then they said I couldn't play in college," said Murphy. "I made All-America three years running. Then they said I couldn't play in the pros, but I proved I could."

That he has. While injuries have turned the Rockets from 1976-77 champions of the Central Division to 1977-78 cellardwellers, Murphy has enjoyed his finest season since joining the Rockets, then based in San Diego, in 1970.

He averaged 17.9 points per game over his first seven years in the NBA, but this season he is scoring at a 24.8 clip to rank seventh in the league. That includes a career-high 57 points against the New Jersey Nets Saturday night.

"I have never seen Calvin Murphy play better," says Portland Coach Jack Ramsay. "The world is getting a chance to see this year what a tremendously talented player he is."

"Calvin has been unbelievable," adds Nissalke. "I've coached some great guards — James Silas, Fred Brown, Ron Boone, Donnie Freeman, George Gervin — but the things he's done for us have been unbelievable. We use plays that were designed for big guards, but Calvin just shoots over people.

"And his attitude has been something. With all the problems we've had this year, I've never seen him dog it, not even in practice. He's always the first one out there shooting around."

Nissalke's words were echoed by Rockets General Manager Ray Patterson.

"The impact Calvin has had on the Rockets and in the community over the past seven years is immeasureable," says Patterson. "Particularly this season, when injuries really decimated our club, Calvin's inspirational play and leadership has been a consistently bright spot for the Rockets' fans."

Murphy's fans will get a chance to honor the 29-year-old backcourtman Friday night. Several presentations will be made to Murphy in recognition of his contributions to the team and the Houston community during ceremonies prior to the Rockets' game against the Kansas City Kings at the Summit.

At halftime, there will be a performance by "The Marching Thunder," a local baton twirling and drum corps Murphy helped organize.

"I was bullied into it," he recalled with a grin. "All six of my mother's sisters were twirlers and they thought it was the thing for me to do. There was some teasing when I was in junior high, but I wasn't bothered much because they knew I would punch them out. I had a reputation of handling myself pretty well."

He still does. Murphy is a solid 165 pounds and is one of the stronger players in the NBA. If a fight breaks out, he is one playre not to pick on.

He's a rugged performer, the Rockets' all-time leader in games, minutes played, scoring, assists and steals. He's the third-leading free throw shooter in NBA history, once hitting 56 in a row.

"Calvin's so quick that our guards have to give a little, and that's all he needs," says Washington Bullets Coach Dick Motta. "He's a great shooter. You can't devise a strategy. It's simply one-on-one."

Murphy realizes that circumstances — especially the wave of injuries that have riddled the Rockets — have a lot to do with his big season.

"It wouldn't be fair for me to gloat over my scoring average," he said. "I'm the key man right now, so it's not hard for me to produce like that."

And he has produced. Murphy has come a long way since being ignored by every club in the NBA, lasting until the second round of the 1970 draft despite averaging 33.1 points per game during his collegiate career at Niagara.

"I think being 5-9 has made me the player I am," he said. "It's forced me to work twice as hard to succeed, since I know that no one is going to give me anything. I'm going to have to do twice as good to prove myself."

Midland Schools Athletic Director Sam Cox is seeking volunteers to help out with the District 5-4A track meet to be held at Midland's Memorial Stadium April 14.

Field events will begin at noon with running preliminaries scheduled for 1:30 p.m.

"We are seeking folks who have had experience in track and/or are knowledgable about track," Cox explained. "We can use them in area in which they specialized or know something about."

NCAA ducats scarce for loyal followers

LEXINGTON, Ky. (AP) — Newspapers this week have been replete with classified advertisements for tickets to the National Collegiate Athletic Association tournament in St. Louis.

Some have been plaintive, some desperate, others smug. Most were from sellers, but there were several from fans wanting to buy. One ad offered four tickets to the Kentucky Derby in trade.

Everyone, it seemed, wanted to meet in St. Louis, where Kentucky, Arkansas, Duke and Notre Dame will battle for the national basketball championship.

Wednesday's Lexington Herald and Lexington Leader featured several such ads:

√ "Wanted — NCAA Tickets. Impoverished recent UK grad needs one or two reasonably priced NCAA tickets. Desperate ... Ask for Jim."

"For Sale — 4 NCAA finals tickets ... Make offer."

The second ad carried an Indiana phone number. Others were placed from Missouri, Wisconsin, Tennessee, Virginia and two from Georgia. There were several, of course, from around Kentucky.

A call to a Lexington listing turned up a man who had succeeded in rounding up eight sets of the coveted ducats, which included tickets for both semifinal and final rounds in St. Louis.

He said he bought four from a man in St. Louis and the rest from the manager of a J.C. Penney Co. store in Milwaukee — "He sent 'em COD and I got 'em this morning" — at a total cost of $400. He kept four sets and sold the rest for $200 each — a neat $400 profit.

"If I'd had 20 sets, I could have sold 'em," he said in an interview. "In fact, the darned phone's been ringing off the hook all day. It's unbelievable. People have got more money than they've got sense."

The man said it was his first experience with ticket scalping, which is illegal in Kentucky.

AIAW to have change

LOS ANGELES (AP) — No matter what happens, there will be a first-time champion in the AIAW basketball championship tournament, which begins tonight at UCLA's Pauley Pavilion.

Immaculata won the first three championships from 197-274 and Delta State captured the last three titles. Until last year, when Louisiana State finished second and Tennessee third, no large college had ever finished among the top three teams.

Neither Delta State nor Immaculata are among the semifinalists this year. The final four are Maryland and Wayland Baptist, who meet at 7 p.m., PST tonight and host UCLA and Montclair State, who battle in the second semifinal contest.

The winners meet for the seventh AIAW title Saturday night following the third place game.

Two of the finest players in the history of women's collegiate basketball, Ann Meyers and Carol Blazejowski, will probably be matched against each other in the UCLA-Montclair State game.

Meyers has earned All-American honors three times while Blazejwski, twice an All-American, is the all-time leading scorer in women's collegiate basketball.

The 5-foot-9 Meyers, considered an outstanding defensive player, averages 18.5 points and 9.4 rebounds and also set a single-season UCLA record in assists. Denise Curry is the Bruins' leading scorer with a 20.4 average.

Point guard Tara Heiss leads Maryland, averaging 14.1 points and 8 assists. Three other Terps — Kris Kirchner, Jane Zivalich and Betsy Bailey — are averaging between 12.5 and 12.8 points per game.

Five Wayland Baptist players have double-figure scoring averages, led by Jill Rankin, 14.7 and Marie Kocurek, 13.7.

The Bruins bring a 25-3 record into the tournament. Montclair State, of New Jersey, is 24-6, Maryland is 26-3 and Wayland Baptist, of Texas, is 33-3.

The Bruins qualified for the final four by whipping Stephen F. Austin 86-60 in the Western Sectional championship game. Montclair State qualified by beating Queens College 75-60, Wayland Baptist earned its berth with a 72-55 victory over North Carolina State and Maryland advanced by routing Southern Connecticut 93-53.

McGuire finds new home

By The Associated Press

Al McGuire, New York scrambler-turned-college basketball coach-turned-businessman, has found fame, if not fortune, as a weekend basketball analyst with NBC.

Will success spoil Al McGuire?

"The only difference about being a celebrity is knowing how much to tip," says McGuire. "Before, when the kid brought my bag up to the room, I used to get by with $1. Now they know me. Now I'm into $2 or $3."

McGUIRE, WHO retired under the most dramatic circumstances last season after his Marquette team won the national championship, spends his time these days as vice chairman of Medalist Industries, a $100-million company that makes athletic equipment.

On the weekends, however, he joins Dick Enberg and Billy Packer on NBC's excellent college basketball broadcasting team.

McGuire is a free-wheeling, entertaining commentator who says what he thinks. And he enjoys his work ... as long as they pay him.

"WHEN I put on my 'sincere suit' — you know, the three-piece job—I feel I should be paid," he says. "Whenever I appear in a room with more than four people, I should be paid. That's the way I feel.

"It's enjoyable but it's not my profession. It's a weekend cakewalk. I take it seriously, though, and I do my homework. People think i's glamorous but if it's a job you have to work at it. I don't care if you're a lifeguard. I was a lifeguard one year in Rockaway Beach. I would sit around in the sun and the sand and the surf and I got sick of it. I enjoyed it the first day and the last day, but those 80 days in between it was work."

McGUIRE HAS added a new dimension to NBC's coverage this year. He is one of the truly unpredictable commentators on TV. You never know what he will come out with.

Enberg handles the play-byplay and Packer analyzes strategy.

"Billy P. is a true analyst," says McGuire. "He can explain the passing game and the shuffle, whatever. I get into the human end of it more with my Brooklyn accent. I try not to use any words a shoeshine kid can't understand."

McGuire says NBC has not tried to tell him what to say or how to say it.

"I don't talk with any of the top brass at NBC," says McGuire. "They said they wouldn't try to change me and they haven't. And they (the directors) don't talk to me in my ear. That would drive me crazy.

"I REALLY admire Enberg. He's a real pro. If people would just realize they are constantly talking to him. One time they were taking him out for a break, you know, counting down ... five seconds ... four ... three ... then all of a sudden they tell him, 'one minute.' I would've gone crazy but he didn't bat an eye, he just kept on talking.

"I mean, that's like doing a 360 with a slam dunk."

McGuire and the rest of the NBC crew will be in St. Louis this weekend for the NCAA semifinals Saturday afternoon and the championship game Monday night.

"I'll probably be a little nervous at the beginning, kind of like a Catholic priest at a Bar Mitzvah," he says, "but I'm looking forward to it."

And the McGuire prediction?

"I gotta stay with what I'ce said all year, Kentucky. This is the last hurrah for those seniors. That club is so physical and they're extremely confident right now. I gotta stay with them for No.1."

NBC HAS committed a record 10 cameras, including two hand-held models, and 85 people to its NCAA coverage this weekend. Producer George Finkel and director Harry Coyle are both basketball veterans, Coyle having directed all the NCAA finals since 1969.

NBC is expecting some big numbers, specially on the Monday night game. The five highest-rated basketball games in television history and seven of the top ten have been, surprisingly, college contests. The all-time leader is the 1975 title game between UCLA and Kentucky.

Curt Gowdy, whose contract reportedly guarantees he will work the NCAA championships, has been added to the Enberg-Packer-McGuire triumvirate for the semis and finals. Gowdy will probably work the Notre Dame-Duke game while Enberg will call the Kentucky-Arkansas contest. Packer and McGuire will appear on both telecasts.

But what will be most interesting is to see how the network parcels out assignments for the championship game. Four people chatting away during one basketball game just won't work out. The NBC brass is still wrestling with the problem and it will be intriguing to see how they work it out.

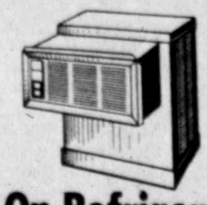

Women advance

FLORENCE, S.C. (AP) — South Carolina State and Biola of California have advanced to the semifinals of the Association of Intercollegiate Athletics for Women's national small college tournament at Francis Marion College.

South Carolina State improved its record to 27-3 Wednesday with a 100-98 upset of defending champion Southeastern Louisiana, now 27-4.

Biola, 26-6, moved into the semifinals against South Carolina State after a 96-60 victory over Pepperdine, 29-5, Wednesday.

The other semifinal game will be played Friday between the winners of Thursday's games between Berry of Georgia and Midland Lutheran of Nebraska, and High Point of North Carolina and William Penn of Iowa.

Sports in brief

TENNIS

LAS VEGAS, Nev. — Italian tennis player Corrado Barazzutti did not show up for his opening round match at a $200,000 tennis tournament.

A spokesman for the World Championship Tennis organization said it was reported Barazzutti left Rome two days ago en route to Las Vegas, and nothing has been heard from him in the meantime.

In the night's matches, fourth-seeded Eddie Dibbs defeated 43-year-old Australian Ken Rosewall 6-3, 6-4 and Cliff Drysdale posted a 6-1, 6-2 victory over Tim Gullikson, a last minute substitute for Barazzutti.

PHILADELPHIA — Topseeded Chris Evert and Wimbledon champion Virginia Wade survived strong challenges to win matches in the $100,000 women's pro tennis tournament here.

Evert overcame Czechoslovakian Regina Marsikova 4-6, 6-3, 6-0 and Wade defeated Kristien Shaw 7-5, 6-2.

In other matches, No. 7 seeded Wendy Turnbull of Australia ousted Terry Holladay 3-6, 6-4, 7-6 and Rosie Casals bested JoAnne Russell 6-2, 1-6, 7-5.

ATLANTA — Mareen "Peanut" Louie defeated Caroline Stoll 6-2, 5-7, 6-4 in a $35,000 women's tennis tournament.

In other matches, Pam Shriver downed Julie Anthony 6-3, 57, 6-2, and Renee Richards bested Sharon Walsh of California 4-6, 7-5, 6-2.

BOWLING

MILWAUKEE — Larry Laub climbed from seventh into the lead after two rounds of a $100,000 Professional Bowlers Association tournament.

Laub averaged 232 for the first 12 games, fashioning an 8pin lead of 2,788 over firstround leader Fred Jaskie.

Henry Gonzalez was third with 2,776 while Craig Cutsor and Boysie Huber were tied for fourth at 2,736.

HORSE RACING

HALLENDALE, Fla. — Sensitive Prince, $3, outbattled Believe It down the stretch to score a head victory in the $36,950 Fountain of Youth Stakes at Gulfstream Park.

ARCADIA, Calif. — Xmas Box, 6-20, and Tacitus, $4, won their respective divisions of the San Marino Handicap at Santa Anita.

Nicklaus takes rest

HILTON HEAD ISLAND, S.C. (AP) — His own game is building to a peak, Jack Nicklaus is among the missing and Tom Watson is fighting a slump, so Hubert Green could be the man to beat in the $225,000 Sea Pines Heritage Classic.

"You never know what's going to come out of the bag," Green shrugged in typically non-commital fashion before teeing off today in the first round of the four-day tour over the testing, 6,655-yard, par-71 Harbour Town Golf Links.

His credentials, however, are all in order and Green noted: "I've been playing pretty well for a while." And, "I really like the golf course. It's a good test. It's tight, makes you use every club in the bag."

The current U.S. Open titleholder, firmly planted among the game's premier performers, has several things going for him in the chase for a $45,000 first prize.

He demonstrated his mastery of the tough little layout along Calibogue Sound with his 1976 victory. He's already won once this season, in Hawaii, and is coming off an extremely strong finish in last week's Tournament Players Championship. He's fourth on the current money-winning list with $72,499 and, with a victory, could join the list of men who have won more than $1 million.

But that's not his goal.

"Money is important, sure," Hubert said, "but winning is what it's all about. If you are playing well and winning, the money will come."

Nicklaus, who finished 2-1-2-1 in his last four starts, is not competing. Johnny Miller and Jerry Pate withdrew. And Watson, the 1977 Player of the Year and dominant figure early this season, is having some problems.

He is bothered by a neck injury and trying to regain his form after a three-week break. He has missed the cut in his last two starts after an earlyseason spurt in which he won twice and collected more than $100,000.

GRIMSLEY'S SPORTS WORLD

CBS' Wussler is scapegoat

By WILL GRIMSLEY

NEW YORK (AP) — The man who choreographed the now notorious "winner-take-all" tennis matches insists that CBS' Robert Wussler has been made the scapegoat of the latest sports scandal.

"They have made him look like John Dillinger," said Bill Riordan, tennis entrepreneur and former manager of Jimmy Connors. "He has been splattered with all kinds of dirt over nickel-and-dime stuff.

First as manager of the top-ranked Connors and later as promoter of the nationally-televised programs, Riordan shoulders much of the blame for any misunderstanding among viewers of the big-money matches which sent Connors against Rod Laver, John Newcombe, Manuel Orantes and Ilie Nastase over a period of three years. He denies any intent to deceive.

"I wanted the matches to have the concept of a heavyweight title fight," he said. "Head-to-head for a big purse, the winner to go on to take on another challenger. I am sure Wussler was not aware of all the intricate details."

When it was revealed that the matches were not actually "winner-take-all" but carried appearance money provisions also for the losers, the House subcommittee on communications got into the act and the Federal Communications Commission issued a sharp reprimand to CBS for deceiving the public and violating payola rules.

Wussler, who rose from vice-president in charge of sports to president of the network, subsequently fell back to his old job as head of CBS sports and then last week resigned. Reports were that he was the fall guy.

"Ninety percent of the testimony used in the Congressional hearings came from my files," Riordan said. "I requested the opportunity to appear before the committee. I was never called. It was a star chamber proceeding. They were out to nail Wussler.

"The committee chairman (Rep. L.L. Van Deerlin, D-Calif.) said at the outset that there was no question of the integrity of the matches. But words like 'deception' and 'payola' have been bandied adout.

"Involved were two minor codes — code 317, specifying that a network must publicly reveal any gratuities to a third party, and code 508, a promoter agreeing to ancillary payments must notify the network. This involved Caesar's Palace, site of the matches.

"The FCC brought up such trivial things as a complimentary suite for CBS at Caesar's and an agreement to have the TV cameras show signs and scoreboards publicizing the hotel.

"Maybe there was a comp or two. Showing commercial signs is common practice. But this was penny-ante stuff in a multimillion-dollar operation."

The first match, Feb. 2, 1975, sent Connors against Rod Laver. The TV deal with CBS was negotiated by Barry Frank of Tennis Championships, Inc., an arm of Mark McCormack's Trans-World International, a management firm. Connors received $100,000 as winner, Laver $60,000.

Riordan took over the promotion for the subsequent matches — against John Newcombe April 25, 1975; Manuel Orantes, Feb. 28, 1978, and Ilie Nastase, March 6, 1978.

The Nastase match was held in Puerto Rico. During the process, Riordan broke with Connors and Frank moved to CBS as an aide to Wussler and later director of sports.

Farrah still gets mail at 'Angels' hangout

By DICK MAURICE
Copley News Service

If death and kidnapping threats aren't enough, "Charlie's Angels" are being plagued with a flood of pornography letters.

According to a reliable source at ABC, the network has been receiving tons of obscene mail. The amount of this mail has been so staggering that the network has had a rough time keeping secretaries on opening it. They've had a number of gals quit because they just couldn't take reading such "sick" mail.

Even though FARRAH FAWCETT-MAJORS is no longer on the show, she still receives the biggest bulk of letters.

Add to JOAN RIVERS' growing number of enemies, "Hollywood Squares"' PAUL LYNDE. Like CONNIE STEVENS, Paul finds Joan very ungrateful, rude and inconsiderate.

Paul was a friend of Joan's and even appeared free for her in her newest movie, "Rabbit Test." What did Paul get from Joan for doing this huge favor? Nothing! Not even a thank you.

Diet expert Tom McCauley claims he helped Paul lose 45 pounds but the game show personality gave all the credit to Weight Watchers. What's funny is Paul put back that 45 pounds plus.

Wonder if Tom or Weight Watchers would like to take credit for that?

ODESSA — Pity poor Noah — no one wanted to go on that long ocean voyage with him. None of his family, at any rate.

Playwright Clifford Odets' humorous treatment of the Old Testament story of Noah and the flood, "The Flowering Peach," currently is having performances at Permian Playhouse, Odessa's community theater. It emerges as fresh and interesting — and often heartwarmingly-funny— entertainment.

A review

Noah is only human. He drinks too much, argues with his wife, has disagreements with his sons. But when he is commanded by God to build the Ark, his faith and determination cannot be shaken.

On the other hand, Mrs. Noah and the couple's three sons are somewhat less than enthusiastic about the prospect of life aboard a floating zoo. Not one of them especially relishes trading the sure thing (a comfortable life on dry land) for the unsure. They exhibit everything from grudging obedience to outright rebellion against the stubborn old patriarch. But in the end, they fall in line.

The first act of Odets' play centers around the construction of the Ark and the preparations for the long trip, ending with the embarkation as the rains descend. The second act treats of the Ark's actual voyage and the eventual landing on the slopes of Mt. Arrarat, a voyage that made emotional inroads on the family and required some drastic adjustments and re-evaluations of interrelationships.

"The Flowering Peach" was directed by Jane Crum, who recently was appointed interim managing director of the Permian Playhouse. She has done a highly creditable job with the production, giving it careful and thoughtful staging.

The stars of the show are, of course, Noah and his strong-willed wife, Esther, and they are excellent in their respective roles. Mary Lou Berggren, as Esther, comes on especially strong in her characterization. Bill Weir, as Noah, has to be the "heavy," the visionary with unswerving dedication to the task at hand, but he has his lighter side and provides some excellent comedic moments.

The couple's three sons, Shem, Ham and Japheth, are played very creditably by Vance Elliott, James Rymer and Mark Phillips. Wives of two of the sons, Leah and Rachel, are portrayed by Patrice Zap, while Goldie, a young lady with a questionable background, is played by Debi Cureton. They all do well in their assignments. Bit players in the show include Richard Calloway and Dorothy Feazell.

Sets for director Crum's production were done by Cathleen McNulty, PPH technical director, who also provided the effective lighting for the show. Kerry Pell designed the simple but appropriate costumes.

"The Flowering Peach" will have final performances at 8 p.m. Friday and Saturday at the Playhouse, 310 W. 42nd St. Seat reservations for either performance may be made through the box office, 362-2329.

'Don Giovanni' to be broadcast

NEW YORK — World-famous diva Joan Sutherland heads the cast of "Don Giovanni", in the Easter weekend broadcast of Mozart's acclaimed operatic drama.

The Saturday performance from the stage of the Metropolitan Opera House in New York City's Lincoln Center will be heard over the Texaco-Metropolitan Opera Radio Network, beginning at 1 p.m. CST.

Two additional performances set

ODESSA — "Godspell," the famous rock musical, is being held over for additional performances this weekend at Odessa College.

The musical, staged and directed by Dr. Dorothy Dodd of the OC theater arts faculty, was scheduled to close last weekend. The holdovers this weekend are in response to public demand.

"Godspell" will be presented at 8 p.m. Friday and Saturday on Stage II, located in Deaderick Hall on the OC campus. Tickets are $3 and will be for sale at the doors before the start of each performance.

Bea Arther is, isn't like 'Maude'

By DICK MAURICE
Copley News Service

TV's fast-talking "Maude" is in real life an avid gardener, gourmet cook and incessant reader.

Married for 27 years to theatrical director Gene Saks, Bea Arthur is the mother of two sons, Matthew, 17 and Daniel, 14.

Tony Award winner (for her role in the 1966 Broadway production of "Mame"), she lives with her family and two dogs in Pacific Palisades, Calif.

MAURICE: Are you and Maude Findlay alike?

ARTHUR: I think so. Maude's tall, gray hair, low voice. I'm Maude when I play her.

I suppose our backgrounds are about the same; educated, upper middle class, rather liberal. My liberalism is quieter than Maude's; she speaks out. A New York cab driver told me the other day I wasn't like Maude at all; I was too quiet.

My family isn't Maude's. She's had four husbands and has a grown daughter who is divorced, whereas I've been married 27 years.

My husband is a stage and film director, and we have two sons.

I have an inside insecurity which never shows. Not a shrinking violet, but not aggressive like Maude. I get a bad piece of meat at the butcher, I won't take it back. My husband keeps telling me if anybody has the appearance of authority, I do, so use it. But I can't.

MAURICE: How did you get to play Maude?

ARTHUR: Maude started as a lark. My husband had a job to do in California, and we were going to stay a week.

Norman Lear (producer of "All in the Family") heard about it, called me and said, "Why don't we write you into an Archie Bunker episode?".

MAURICE: Why did you go into acting in the first place?

ARTHUR: Why I went into acting? I guess I needed it.

My parents didn't think much of it and nobody in our family was ever in the business.

I have two sisters. But around the family and among friends I was always the witty one. I did imitations of Mae West, things like that.

Finely trained horses performing a variety of show-stopping routines are among many featured attractions in the Carson & Barnes Circus, coming to Midland for performances at 4 and 8 p.m. Wednesday under auspices of Tall City Lions Club.

Circus includes big menagerie

More than 200 wild and domestic animals of several dozen species are included in the menagerie of the Carson & Barnes five-ring circus, coming to Midland for performances at 4 and 8 p.m. next Wednesday.

The Carson & Barnes show, being sponsored here by the Tall City Lions Club, is America's only circus that offers patrons a visit to the huge traveling zoo in the price of admission. There is no extra charge to view the inhabitants of the menagerie.

Features of the zoo are the elephants — approximately two dozen of them. Both Indian and African varieties are included in the herd.

The wild animal display includes Canadian black bears, lions, tigers, leopards, a laughing hyena, cougars and wildcats.

And even though the Carson & Barnes Circus has gained a special reputation worldwide for its collections of animals, the management has spared no expense in bringing the finest human talent under its canvas big top. The show features top performing talent from Latin and Central America, Mexico, Asia, Europe and, of course, the United States.

The circus will set up its tent at the intersection of Midland Drive and West Illinois avenue for the pair of performances next week. Tickets will be for sale at the gates before the start of each show.

A special art exhibition is being planned to formally open the McCormick Gallery of Midland College's new Fine Arts Building.

Featured will be paintings by Fritz Scholder and William Schenck, widely-known Southwestern artists, and contemporary Raku pottery by West Coast artisan Paul Soldner.

The exhibition will open to the public at 2 p.m. Sunday and continue on view through April 10.

The gallery will be closed this coming Monday, but will be open weekdays and Sunday afternoons thereafter. Weekday vsiting hours are 9 a.m. to 9 p.m. Weekend hours are 2 to 5 p.m.

Soldner recently conducted a special pottery workshop at Midland College and the Raku pieces which he has on display in the new show are representative of the current direction his pottery is taking.

Eleven paintings, six by Scholder and five by Schenck, have come to Midland College on loan from the Elaine Horwitch Galleries of Santa Fe, N. M., and Scottsdale, Ariz., and from the artists.

Whatever you say, dear

Lack of warmth was seldom a problem when the Chicken Ranch was a house of prostitution near La Grange in south Texas. But chilly indoor temperatures at Dallas' Chicken Ranch Restaurant, featuring parts of the old bagnio, have forced the closing of the eating establishment. —The Associated Press

"We're eating out tonight, George," his wife Marie announced as he stepped inside the door. He hadn't even had time to take his coat off.

"We're not," he said. "I'm tired." George was tired.

"You're no such thing and we are eating out," Marie said sternly. "I gave the dog what food there was in the refrigerator. There isn't a scrap in the house." George opened the door of the refrigerator and saw for himself. Empty. No compromise, no quarter.

"I can't believe you did that, Marie," he said. "Simply unbelievable."

"You'd better believe it," she said, shoving him and the kids through the door. "I'm not slaving over the stove for you seven nights a week any more."

"Seven nights a week!" George ejaculated. "You must be having an hallucination. You haven't cooked me a decent dinner in 16 years."

"Just what do you think you're doing?" said Marie as her husband climbed into the driver's seat. "You don't suppose I'm going to ride with YOU, do you?" She forced her way into the car behind him and pushed him across the seat.

"Your driving scares me," he said meekly, surrendering, as always.

"Larry's. I'm in the mood for chicken."

"I had chicken for lunch," George said.

"Then you must have been munching your fingernails again," said Marie, laughing raucously. The kids (James, 10; Linda, 8) laughed, too. Only two, and there would be no more. Marie was making damn sure of that.

They reached Larry's Chicken Place, an old restaurant which had been losing business badly to the chains. Larry Davis had tried everything and finally stumbled on a solution: the Rooster Club, a discreet addition adjacent to the kitchen. Business now was looking up considerably.

"Four for dinner?" the headwaiter said to George.

"That's right," he said. "That's right," Marie said. "I'll do the talking, George," she said.

"Yes, dear," George said. The headwaiter gave George a look of contempt and led them into the dining area.

"Would you prefer a table or a booth?" he asked Marie. There was no shortage of either.

"A booth," she said, knowing her husband would rather sit at a table.

"I'd prefer that you did, too," Marie said, laughing. The kids laughed, too. So did the headwaiter.

"Legs!" said James eagerly.

"Legs!" said Linda eagerly.

"Dark Meat Special!" said George eagerly.

The waiter returned and Marie ordered for everyone. She got the kids what they wanted and ordered white meat for George.

"Nobody cares what you think, George," Marie said.

Ten minutes went by. Twenty. Thirty. No chicken.

"Go find out what's holding things up, George," Marie said. "We've waited long enough."

"Yes, Marie," George said. He walked to the rear of the restaurant, turned a corner and opened what he thought was the kitchen door. It wasn't the kitchen door; it was the door to the Rooster Club.

"Well, uh..." George stammered. "Is this the kitchen?" He couldn't believe his eyes.

"It's the Rooster Club," said the girl, "but if you want to call it the kitchen, it's OK by me."

"Well, uh..." George stammered. "I was actually..." The girl put her arm around his waist and whispered something in his ear.

Twenty minutes later George Ramsey emerged from the Rooster Club and returned to his family. Their food had at last arrived, and, indeed, everyone had all but finished eating. George's White Meat Special lay untouched.

"Where on earth have you been, George?" Marie shouted. "We're all through and ready to go." George calmly sat and began eating his ice-cold chicken.

"I hate white meat," he said.

"You haven't answered my question, George," Marie snapped.

"I've been looking for the headwaiter," he said, keeping his wits about him.

"For 20 minutes?" said Marie. "Well, that just figures. You probably got lost."

"In a manner of speaking," George said.

"Well, if you think we're going to sit here and wait while you eat, you're very mistaken." Marie reached for her purse. "Waiter, our check, please," she bellowed.

"Was the chicken good?" George ventured once they were out the door.

"Absolutely delicious, George, and well worth the wait," she said. "I have news for you. We're coming back here, and often. I'm through slaving over that stove for you."

"Whatever you say, dear," said George.

With a pratfall, a Tarzan yell and one last tug of the ear...

By LEE MARGULIES
The Los Angeles Times

HOLLYWOOD — There was one last Tarzan yell . . . one last pratfall ...one last spat between Eunice and Mama . . . one last rendition, tearfully, of "I'm So Glad We Had This Time Together" . . . one last tug of the ear. And then Carol Burnett was gone, voluntarily putting her weekly television series behind her after a smashing 11-year run.

The emotion-packed taping of the 286th and final installment of The Carol Burnett Show Friday evening (which will air as a two-hour special on CBS March 29) brought out several hundred of the star's loyal fans and a host of celebrities, including one she hadn't expected: Jimmy Stewart, her favorite actor, making his first visit to the show.

His surprise appearance elicited a scream and then tears from Miss Burnett, and she was further moved when he explained why he was there. "Thank you," Stewart said, "for the wonderful, wonderful, beautiful times you've given all of us these 11 years — and I'm frankly speaking for all of us, all the millions."

No one was about to steal the night from the star, however, and the TV funny lady went out in style. Dressed as the charwoman character whose striptease routine helped propel her to national fame so many years ago on The Gary Moore Show, Miss Burnett said her goodbys on camera, sang her theme song, then walked slowly across the empty stage and, with a final wave, disappeared from view.

"There will never be another operation like this," a glum Ed Simmons, the show's producer and head writer for the past five years, had said earlier that day. "It's been like a family. Maybe we'll all get lucky one day and find another show as good and as much fun, but we'll never find anything better."

Some of her fans felt the same way.

"I think she's a great artist, a great performer," said Steven Peck, 38, who attended the taping with his son Ron, 19, and had a special reason for wanting to be there. "In your life you see eras pass and I think the era of this type of show is diminishing fast," he said. "I wanted to see it as it is rather than in reruns."

Their wholesome image of the show might have shattered had they been able to attend a run-through Friday afternoon to hear Miss Burnett, Tim Conway and Vicky Lawrence liven things up with some very salty — and very funny — ad libs.

"God, I wish we could show this one on the air," Carol said to her costars at one point.

"Maybe in 11 more years," Miss Lawrence offered.

"In 11 more years," Carol agreed. "On PBS."

But even the R-rated humor seemed to be a manifestation of the tension of the day, an attempt to lighten the mood of sadness that pervaded the studio and which no one was talking about much. "It's like kids getting out of school: We might as well throw a tomato," Conway suggested.

The graduation analogy was also used by Miss Burnett in describing to the Los Angeles Times the preceding day how she felt about leaving her show after 11 years.

"You remember when you graduated from high school or college and you knew you wouldn't see the same people?" the red-haired comedienne asked. "It's a happy-sad occasion. The sad part is that I won't be seeing the same people on a day-to-day basis. There are people here who are closer to me than some of my relatives. The happy part is that we are forcing ourselves to go on to other things. I think 11 years of doing the same thing — especially in show business — is a long time. A long time. We've done it very well, but it's time. You can get so secure doing the same thing that you don't know."

It was the desire to move on to other career endeavors and not the show's poor ratings this season that determined her decision, Miss Burnett insisted.

"If I had wanted to leave because of the ratings, I would have left, oh, about eight years ago," she said, "because we were up and down during the whole course of this show. We've been on Mondays, Wednesdays, Saturdays, and now Sundays; we've had good ratings and bad ratings. It's been a roller coaster the whole time. So that had nothing to do with it."

Joe Hamilton, the show's executive producer and the star's husband, said Carol had talked about quitting for the past five years. "She was close two years ago and again last year, and when we sat down this year and started talking, we realized what else can we do in this format? We've done just about everything you can do with this kind of show."

Everyone — including CBS — seemed to agree that The Carol Burnett Show could survive several more years but Miss Burnett concluded that the writers would have more and more difficulty coming up with sketches she hadn't done before and decided it would be better to end the show while she still enjoyed it.

Even Vicki Lawrence, who hadn't been thinking of a career in show business when she was plucked out of high school to play Carol's sister when the show debuted in September, 1967, felt the time had come to break away.

"For me the show ended last year in a lot of ways — when Harvey (Korman) left," she said. "I really missed him. I don't feel it's been as strong a show this year; there's been nothing that I've been that proud of this year. It's time for us to go other ways."

Conway concurred, although he said he would have come back next year without a moment's hesitation if Miss Burnett had wanted to continue. "If Carol wanted to drive a bus I would have ridden on it," he said.

None of the three stars will be out of sight for long. Miss Lawrence will be making a pilot for a CBS situation comedy. Conway has a deal to write and star in three motion pictures for the International Picture Show Co., will be hosting a comedy special on CBS next season and is thinking about a weekly variety series for the fall of 1979.

Miss Burnett, who costars in the as-yet-unreleased Robert Altman film "A Wedding," will act in another of Altman's movies this fall and will star in a TV movie for next season based on Erma Bombeck's "The Grass Is Always Greener Over the Septic Tank." Another TV movie, based on Laura Hobson's "The Tenth Month," is being written for her and she will do a musical special for next season with Dolly Parton.

New 'Don Quixote' to make debut

By ALAN M. KRIEGSMAN
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — For the second time in two years, American Ballet Theatre has chosen to unveil a major new production in Washington. The present one, like the "Nutcracker" of 1976, is the work of the company's celebrated dancer, Mikhail Baryshnikov, who now offers us an ambitious new version of the Russian ballet classic, "Don Quixote."

The new opus will have its world premiere Thursday evening in the Kennedy Center Opera House, with settings and costumes by Santo Loquasto and lighting by Jennifer Tipton. Heading the cast will be Baryshnikov himself as Don Basil and Gelsey Kirkland as Kitri; the key nondancing roles of Quixote and Sancho Panza will be taken by Alexander Minz and Enrique Martinez. In the pit will be the distinguished British conductor John Lanchberry, reportedly on the verge of being named musical director of ABT.

Baryshnikov is calling the ballet "Don Quixote or Kitri's Wedding," intending the second half of the title to indicate the lighthearted nature of the work. "It's a romantic comedy, nothing else," he says, and he once thought of subtitling it "a romantic vaudeville."

For most balletgoers, mention of "Don Q" conjures up images of the flamboyant pas de deux by that name which is one of the standard showpieces of classical ballet—Baryshnikov dances it with Leslie Browne in the movie, "The Turning Point."

This virtuosic duet is all that has remained in western repertory of a full-length ballet originally choreographed by Marius Petipa in Russia in 1869. The Petipa "Don Quixote," as amended by Alexander Gorsky and others, has been seen in this country during visits of the Bolshoi Ballet.

The ballet public is familiar with two other relatively recent full-length versions, the Rudolf Nureyev production, made into a motion picture in 1973, and the quite constrasting, serious and sumptuous George Balanchine version created in 1965. The Baryshnikov ballet, however, though it is closely modeled on the Petipa-Gorsky staging, is in a different vein altogether from these other modern rescensions.

One thing they all have in common is the Cervantes novel. But the Balanchine version aside, these ballets have shunted Quixote himself into the position of catalyst for the action, rather than its heroic center, and taken as a plot a little ancillary tale in the book about a village girl, Quiteria (who becomes Kitri in the ballet) and her lover, the barber Don Basil. Thus Baryshnikov's scenario too, following Petipa, gives us a story not of unquenchable idealism but of true love victorious over parental obstacles.

Baryshnikov has attempted to weave the role of Quixote and the Basil-Kitri story into a tighter unity than in previous versions, and to this end he begins the ballet with one of his innovative scenes, a brief prologue. Don Quixote and Sancho Panza are seen entering from opposite sides, and then, against the background of a windmill, Quixote sees a vision of Dulcinea (also a nondancing role), his image of ideal womanhood.

Then Kitri, Basil and all the subsidiary characters are introduced, and in masks, almost in commedia dell' arte fashion, they enact in miniature the story that is to follow — Kitri's love for Basil, her father's attempts to pair her off with the rich Gamache, and the wiles the lovers employ to achieve their happy union. Amor (Cupid), who is one of the characters, shoots all with his amorous arrow, whereupon they disappear, and Quixote sets out in quest of his vision.

In the succeeding first act, the basic predicament is set forth in detail, against the colorful hubbub of the town marketplace — the attachment of Kitri and Basil, the objections of the father and Gamache. Basil and Kitri flee to a gypsy camp, the site of the opening scene of Act II. It is here that the paths of Quixote and Kitri intersect, for seeing her in front of the windmills, he confuses her with Dulcinea and attacks them to protect her. There follows a dream sequence in which the woman in Quixote's life — Dulcinea, Kitri, a beautiful street dancer — all seem to merge.

Things come to a head in a tavern scene, wherein Gamache and Kitri's father arrive in pursuit of the lovers. To skirt defeat, Basil feigns suicide, and at the urgings of Kitri, Don Quixote persuades the father to permit Kitri to wed the "dead" Basil as a gesture.

Persian items on loan

AUSTIN — Items on loan from 16 museums, including such world-famous institutions as the Louvre in Paris, the Brooklyn Museum, the Metropolitan Museum in New York and the Boston Museum of Fine Arts, make up an important exhibition now on public view at the Michener Gallery in the Harry Ransom Center of The University of Texas.

"Ancient Persia: The Art of an Empire" is the title of the show, designed to illustrate how the structure of the ancient Persian Empire influenced its art. The exhibition spans a period from 550 B.C., shortly after Cyrus the Great's first major victories, to 330 B.C., when Alexander the Great burned Persepolis. The 150 items in the display include stone reliefs and sculptures, weapons, jewelry, metal vessels, coins and tablets.

The exhibition and a series of lectures under way while the show is on view is supported by a grant from the National Endowment for the Arts. Local sponsors include the UT Center for Middle Eastern Studies, the UT Art Museum, the College of Fine Arts and the UT Comparative Studies Program. The exhibition will be on view here through April 16, open to the public daily, including Sunday afternoons. Admission is free.

The second segment of the annual Student Art Festival opens soon at Midland's Museum of the Southwest.

This portion of the festival showcases the creativity of junior high high school students in the city. The collection of art works will remain on view at the museum, 1705 W. Missouri Ave., through April 11.

The art festival is presented each year under sponsorship of the museum, the Midland Independent School District, the City Council of the PTA and the Junior League of Midland, Inc.

On view at the museum since the festival opened early this month are works created by elementary students in the city's public and private schools.

The Museum of the Southwest is open from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. each weekday, and from 2 to 5 p.m. on Sundays. There is no admission charge.

Stayman convention may serve as rescue

By ALFRED SHEINWOLD

The Stayman Convention is used primarily to look for the best game contract after an opening bid of one notrump, but it can be used instead as a way of getting out of notrump.

North's response of two clubs promises nothing in clubs butasks the opener to bid a major suit of four or more cards. If South has no major suit, he bids two diamonds.

In this case, South bids two hearts, expecting the bidding to continue toward game. But North passes, and two hearts becomes the final contract.

South should make two hearts without any trouble, but the normal club opening lead would defeat one notrump.

SINGLETON IN CLUBS

The time to use the Stayman Convention as a rescue bid is when you have a singleton or void in clubs, a horribly weak hand, and reasonable length in the other three suits. You are willing to pass whether the opener bids two spades, two hearts or two diamonds.

Don't use the Stayman Convention as a rescue if you are short in some other suit since then you will be strapped if your partner bids two of that short suit. Likewise, don't look for a rescue if you have a few high-card points; let your partner play the hand then at one notrump.

DAILY QUESTION

Partner opens with 1 NT, and the next player passes. You hold: S-J964; H-93; D-A82; C-KJ93. What do you say?

ANSWER: Bid two clubs, the Stayman Convention, asking partner to bid a major suit of four or more cards. If he bids two spades, you will raise to four spades; if he bids anything other than two spades, you will bid 2 NT.

Court rules out five-man juries

The Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court, limiting a nationwide trend toward smaller juries, ruled Tuesday that criminal defendants must be tried by at least six jurors — half the traditional jury of 12.

A unanimous court struck down a Georgia law that permitted five-member juries in misdemeanor trials. Two other states — Virginia and Louisiana — recently adopted similar laws allowing five-member juries.

Juries of six or nine now are permitted in most states, mainly in civil and criminal misdemeanor cases. And recent decisions by the justices themselves approved trend towards juries of less than 12.

But the court in Tuesday's decision drew the line at six — at least in criminal proceedings — concluding that anything less violated constitutional guarantees to the right to a fair trial by an impartial jury.

Nonetheless, the justices were unable to agree on the reasoning for their decision, issuing four separate opinions to support the court's judgment.

Justice Harry A. Blackmun, joined by Justice John Paul Stevens, issued an opinion citing a number of statistical studies comparing the results of 12-member juries with smaller juries and concluding that smaller juries "are less likely to foster effective group deliberation."

Blackmun said the studies also indicated that the smaller the jury, the greater the risk of convicting the innocent. He noted, too, that smaller juries reduced the defendant's chances of convincing one juror to hold out in his favor and thus force a hung jury and a mistrial.

Justice Byron R. White said he believed the Georgia law was unconstitutional because a five-member jury would fail to represent a fair cross section of the community.

Justice Lewis F. Powell Jr., joined by Chief Justice Warren E. Burger and Justice William H. Rehnquist, said it was difficult to draw a line between six-member juries — permissible under previous court rulings — and five-member juries. But, he said, "...a line has to be drawn somewhere if the substance of a jury trial is to be preserved."

Justices William J. Brennan, Jr., Potter Stewart and Thurgood Marshall agreed the Constitution required juries of more than five in criminal trials. But they disagreed with a majority holding that the defendant who challenged the legality of five-member juries in this case — Claude D. Ballew, convicted of distributing obscene material in Fulton County, Ga. — could be subjected to retrial with a larger jury.

Blackmun relied heavily on studies comparing the results of 12-member juries against smaller juries — including mock trials where the verdicts reached by students, acting as jurors, were compared to verdicts rendered in actual cases. "Correct" verdicts were more frequently reached by 12-member juries, Blackmun said, suggesting that "the risk of convicting an innocent person rises as the size of the jury diminishes."

Powell, in his opinion, criticized Blackmun's reliance on such statistical studies, saying they "merely represent unexamined findings of persons interested in the jury system."

Juries of less than 12 have been used increasingly throughout the United States in recent years, particularly in civil cases. Their advocates say they reduce the likelihood of deadlocked juries, save time for the courts and save money for the taxpayers.

In 1970, the Supreme Court approved the use of juries as small as six, concluding that a jury that size would provide defendants the same protection against overzealous prosecutors and biased judges as a jury of 12. In 1973, the court upheld six-member juries in federal civil trials.

Couple seeks grandson's body, news of daughter

WALLIS, Texas (AP) — When James Skidmore left here March 28, 1977, with his wife Carol and stepson Lynn, he told Carol's parents — John and Clara Ward — they were flying to Tennessee for a week "to put their marriage back together."

The last the Wards heard from Carol was an April 8 telephone call when she told them she "just didn't know" when they would be coming home.

"I had a feeling something was wrong then," Mrs. Ward said in a telephone interview. "Carol had this big German shepherd dog where they lived in Sealy, and she just wouldn't go away and leave it like that."

On May 5 Polk County, Tenn., authorities pulled the body of a young boy from Parksville Lake in the southeastern part of the state. But the Wards knew nothing about it until they talked with Skidmore's parents in Rossville, Ga., on May 8.

"That night we put out two APB's through the police here, but the Tennessee authorities said our grandson's identification didn't match the body they found at all," Mrs. Ward said. "So we were relieved and relaxed. The body was buried there on March 22."

The Wards are now trying to have that body returned to Texas for burial, but they feel they are fighting a losing battle.

"On June 1, our son-in-law took his life in Harrison, Ark., and the Boone County sheriff called and asked for our grandson's birth certificate," Mrs. Ward said. "He said they needed it to clear up some kind of mystery, but I said 'don't worry, the body they found was not our grandson.'"

On June 13 Sheriff Buck Green called Mrs. Ward back and told her the FBI had confirmed the body did belong to her grandson. Mrs. Ward said neither she nor her husband ever identified the body in any way other than the description they provided in the missing persons bulletin.

Five-year-old Lynn Dale Mahaffey was Carol Skidmore's son by a previous marriage. Carol, 27, married Skidmore, a Sealy, Texas, carpenter in the summer of 1976. Skidmore had also been married before and had four children.

Mrs. Ward said she talked to Tennessee Bureau of Investigation agent Wayne Atkins the day after Green told her Lynn was dead.

"They didn't give us any explanation, but I asked him to please send us the death certificate so we could have the little body shipped back here," Mrs. Ward said. She and her husband are still waiting for the certificate.

The Wards are accepting the FBI's word that the body pulled from the lake was Lynn's and they say now they have given up hope of ever seeing Carol alive again.

"We're just wondering if anyone is looking for Carol," Mrs. Ward said. "We know she has to be dead. She was so close to Lynn, she did love him so, that anyone who wanted to get to him would have had to get her first."

Mrs. Ward said she has had a call into District Attorney Richard Fisher in Cleveland, Tenn., for three weeks. He has not returned the call.

Mrs. Ward said there are many unanswered questions but she and her husband have only gotten "second and third-hand information."

At one time it was reported police had found a set of false teeth in the bushes near the lake where they found the boy's body. Mrs. Ward said she understood her son-in-law wore false teeth but has no idea whether anyone ever tried to trace the teeth to Skidmore.

Saudi Arabia sounds price increase warning

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — King Khalid of Saudi Arabia has told President Carter that oil prices may have to be raised if the U.S. dollar continues its decline in world markets.

The Saudi leader said in a recent letter that his nation, in effect, had resisted several efforts within the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC) to raise prices, but the United States could no longer be sure that the Saudi view would continue to prevail.

ENERGY

Authoritative sources stressed that Khalid's letter was not threatening, and that in fact, "it was very well reasoned." They said the anti-inflation program that President Carter now has under consideration had not been triggered by the Khalid letter.

The declining dollar, which contributes to inflationary pressures here by boosting the cost of imported goods, also has had an adverse impact on the oil cartel. For OPEC, which sells its oil for dollars around the world, a cheaper dollar amounts to a cut in their prices, and a loss of real revenues.

Officials conceded that a series of three government announcements of steps to shore up the dollar — most recently, an accord with West Germany — have not yet had the desired results, and that "some more definitive signal of a fundamental nature is going to be needed."

Congressional approval of an energy conservation bill is cited as the most important signal. But pressure has also been increasing on Carter for a stronger anti-inflation program that might give foreign exchange markets more confidence in the dollar.

Carter has been urged to take stronger anti-inflation steps by Federal Reserve Chairman G. William Miller, and by both Republican and Democratic members of the Judiciary committee. Additional anti-inflation measures have also been urged by the Government's own wage-price watchdog, Barry Bosworth, director of the Council on Wage and Price Stability.

As part of a new basket of actions dealing with inflation, the Administration reportedly is considering a Government task force to see how American exports might be stimulated.

An intensified export drive, some administration officials believe, would cut down the U.S. trade deficit, which is one of the sources of pressure on the dollar.

An export program, officials said, could lead to some new form of tax incentives for exports, in effect reversing current Carter administration policy.

White House officials have been working on various anti-inflation options with the hope of making something public by Thursday. But officials caution that that date might "slip," because final decisions have not been made by the president.

The idea of an export task force has been pushed by the Commerce Department, and endorsed by Special Trade Representative Robert S. Strauss.

"The answer to this nation's problems," Strauss said in an interview, "is not in restricting imports, and making the buying public pay more money when they're already choked by inflation, but the answer is a tremendous thrust from an export program."

But other officials, who concede that it would be useful to sweep away any artificial impendiments to exports, caution that any benefits would not be gained in the short run, and certainly not quickly enough to ease current pressure on the dollar.

Pothole fillers using garbage

By AMY KIDD
Austin Bureau

AUSTIN—As you drive past a road crew filling potholes with that nondescript black stuff, does anything look familiar?

It might be the garbage you set out last month.

Highway construction engineers aren't exactly turning refuse to riches, but they're experimenting with municipal garbage as a paving material in repair projects around the country.

Only one of those projects has been completed in Texas, although others exist in Washington and Maryland. But Dr. William Ledbetter, research engineer at Texas A&M's Transportation Technology Institute, says "littercrete" has a good performance record compared to that of more conventional paving systems.

As part of an experimental project initiated by the Federal Highway Administration, a 200-foot strip of Bingle Road in a semi-industrial Houston area was topped with a mixture of incinerated municipal garbage, asphalt and lime. Adjacent to that strip, standard mixture of asphalt and limestone rock was poured.

Three years later, neither side shows signs of major stress. "It (the littercrete side) has done just as well as the control section adjacent to it," Ledbetter says proudly. Minor cracks have appeared in the top "wearing course" applied over both strips, he adds, but the understructure remains solid.

Ledbetter remains guardedly optimistic about the future use of littercrete, saying two major problems prevent its more widespread use: municipal trash incineration presents a pollution problem—and even in large cities, there just isn't enough trash to go around.

"If all the garbage in Houston were to be incinerated, that would be enough residue to take care of the patching and maintenance work," Ledbetter estimates—but not enough for major construction, since burning consumes 85 per cent of the garbage by volume.

Money abolished in Phnom Penh

By MICHAEL DOBBS
Special to The Washington Post

BELGRADE — Almost three years after the Communist takeover of Cambodia, the National Bank in Phnom Penh is a heap of ruins. Safe deposit boxes lie apparently untouched beneath piles of rubble. Nobody seems to care whether they contain money or not.

A party of four Yugoslav journalists just back from Phnom Penh — the first foreign reporters other than Chinese or Vietnamese to visit Cambodia since the Communists came to power — found that like everything else associated with the old regime, money has simply been abolished.

"In Cambodia," wrote Maroje Mihovilovic in the Zagreb Daily Vjesnik, "there is no money, no post, no television, no public transport, no telephone exchange, no university."

Phnom Penh, once a beautiful, French-accented city with a population that by 1975 had been swollen by war refugees to more than 2 million, has been reduced by Cambodia's new rulers to a village of less than 20,000.

THE CITY'S imposing villas and mansions are inhabitated by soldiers and peasants living squartter-style amid their chickens and other animals.

Much personal property has simply been abandoned. Mihovilovic wrote: "In the courtyards of many houses, one sees ruined furniture and the shells of cars. The outskirts of the city are like automobile graveyards."

Dragoslav Ranchic of the Belgrade paper Politika reported: "At Phnom Penh airport lie the remains of Lon Nol's American airplanes. Turning to rust, they are evidence of a war, but also of a change in attitude toward the past and traditional values." Lon Nol led the U.S.-backed government that was defeated by the Communists.

There is only on store in Phnom Penh. Open two days a week, it serves the diplomatic corps — Cambodia has relations with China, North Korea, Albania, Cuba, Egypt, Laos and Yugoslavia. Scotch whiskey, American butter, and French wine are still on the shelves — and payment is strictly in U.S. dollars.

Some of the houses still have television antennas — even though no television programs have been broadcast in Cambodia for three years. The main medium of information is the radio station, The Voice of Democratic Kampuchea, which broadcasts news, directives and commentaries interspersed with revolutionary music.

DESPITE OFFICIAL claims that illiteracy has been all but eliminated, there is little to read. A newspaper, The Revolution, is published three times a month and a magazine even more irregularly. Even the classical Mardist textbooks have not been published and the national library is neglected and littered with old furniture.

Claiming that the cities are breeding-grounds for parasites, the new rulers have put all their efforts into developing the countryside. Pol Pot, the Cambodian premier and Communist Party secretary, said in a two-hour interview with the Yugoslav journalists: "We evacuated the cities to solve the food problem and to give the nation confidence in the revolution. Confidence would have been lost if people had died from starvation in the cities."

He also said that the "American imperialists" had a plan to create chaos and disorder in Phnom Penh following their withdrawal.

The new order in Cambodia is based on the village and in particular on two social units — the agricultural cooperative and the mobile brigade. Together these provide the engine of the country's economic development.

The journalists visited the Leay Bou cooperative in the southern Takeo Province, made up of about 10,000 people. Mihovilovic said that life there was totally communal: "Property such as bicycles, sewing machines, domestic animals are held in common. Each cooperative has a clinic and an elementary school. Everything is done communally — from eating (in huge communal halls) to bringing up children."

MEMBERS OF the cooperative receive no money; they are paid approximately a kilo (2.2 pounds) of rice per day and a pair of black pajamas a year. New wooden houses are being built in the village.

The journalists found no shortage of food in the cooperatives they visited. Cambodia is in any case a rich agricultural country; apart from rice, there has always been plenty of fruit and fish.

The mobile brigades are composed largely of young people working in teams of up to 20,000 people. The brigades travel from one construction project to another, staying in a single place only during the rainy season.

According to the Yugoslav reports, enormous efforts are being invested in building dams and dikes to increase rice production and thereby strengthen Cambodia's self-sufficiency.

Workers in the mobile brigades, who included former Buddhist monks and schoolchildren, said they worked from 6 a.m. to 10:30 a.m. and again from 1:30 p.m. to 5:30 p.m. They have three rest days a month but those are mainly taken up with political education, they said.

DECEASED Illinois State Sen. Norbert A. Kosinski (D-Chicago), who died of an apparent heart attack on March 10, won an overwhelming victory over his opponent in the primary election. Kosinski, 59, was stricken while on the podium of a fund-raising campaign rally in Chicago. (AP Laserphoto)

SAFE BUY USED CARS from VILLAGE LINCOLN-MERCURY
3915 W. Wall 697-3115

Buying a used car is no joke.

There have probably been more jokes told about used cars and used-car salesmen than practically any other subject. But when you buy a used car, it's no joke!

In fact, it's serious business!

Used cars are a very important part of our business. We maintain an excellent selection of hand-picked used cars. Then we price each one competitively. Finally, our reputation for service comes with every car at no extra cost. Here are some examples:
