Senate approves Craddick's texting ban

Midland representative: 'We are elated to get it done this time'

By Stewart Doreen
sdoreen@mrt.com

The Texas Senate on Friday passed Rep. Tom Craddick's bill that would ban texting while driving.

Craddick

Craddick told the Reporter-Telegram that the Senate passed the bill 23-8 after amendments were passed. Those amendments included being able to use GPS while operating a vehicle and listening to music through a phone, according to Craddick.

With all the amendments out of the way, according to a Texas Tribune report, Judith Zaffirini, the bill's Senate sponsor, said, "I have waited 10 years to make this motion: I move final passage of HB 62.

After the bill passed, according to the Tribune, Craddick walked across the Capitol to hug Zaffirini and thank the senators for their votes. After lingering for about 15 minutes, he mouthed "thank you" to Lt. Gov. Dan Patrick and walked out.

Craddick said he will concur with the changes to House Bill 62, which received 114 votes in the Texas House.

This is the fourth time Craddick has introduced a texting-while-driving ban.

"We are elated to get it done this time," Craddick told the Reporter-Telegram.

In 2011, Craddick had authored a proposal that was passed by both chambers. But then-Gov. Rick Perry vetoed the measure, saying it would "micromanage the behavior of adults."

In 2013, Sen. Robert Nichols, head of the Senate Transportation Committee, wouldn't allow a committee vote on Craddick's bill.

In 2015, Craddick's bill passed the House with a 104-39 vote. However, Zaffirini could not get the 19 votes needed to bring the bill to the floor for debate.

"Nineteen votes to bring it up ... is a hard hill to climb," Craddick said.

Craddick said the bill's passage through both legislative bodies is a testament to many people who repeatedly made the trek to Austin to tell their stories about how those who texted while driving impacted their lives. He said those stories aren't easy to tell and they made a difference. "This is a landmark moment for public safety in Texas. For myself and many this is a good day because this statewide ban on texting while driving will save the lives of Texans," Craddick said. "For others, the day is bittersweet; it is a reminder that this legislation comes too late and came with a cost. I think of the Texans who lost their lives to these preventable crashes and unnecessary tragedies; I dedicate this bill to their memory."

Craddick said he expects Gov. Greg Abbott to sign the bill. Craddick said that during a recent trip to Midland, Abbott told those in attendance that he would sign it into law.

Lastly, Craddick, the dean of all Texas legislators, was excited for the bill's passage because he believes it will have an impact on safety. He said in a November article that 482 deaths that occurred on Texas roadways in 2015 were due to distracted driving. He also cited a Texas A&M study that he said indicated 95 percent of people will respond and obey a law that has been created.

"If 95 percent of people obey laws, we will see a lot less texting on Texas roads," Craddick said.

Midland unemployment is at 3.5 percent

■ Rate is half point lower than March, 1 point lower than year ago

By Mella McEwen
mmcewen@mrt.com

Midland's labor market continues to dig out of the deep hole resulting from the steep decline in oil prices that began in the second half of 2014.

The Texas Workforce Commission said Friday April unemployment in the Midland metropolitan statistical area (MSA) fell a half point to 3.5 percent from 4 percent in March and is a full point below the April 2016 rate of 4.5 percent.

Odessa reported a similar sharp decline — as did most of the commission's MSAs — falling to 4.9 percent from 5.6 percent in March. Odessa's April 2016 unemployment rate was 6.5 percent.

Willie Taylor, chief executive officer of the commission's Workforce Solutions Permian Basin, attributed the decline to seasonal factors.

He speculated that the commission may have adjusted its measurements to account for the decline in population after oilfield activity slowed amid low oil prices.

Noting that his office oversees 17 Permian Basin counties, Taylor said the population fell in every single county.

But the labor market still is showing improvement, he said.

Reeves County, which sits in the heart of the highly active Delaware subbasin, had 58 rigs, an increase of three. Its count was 19 higher than the next-most active county, Midland, which added a single rig this week for a total of 39.

Other counties with double-digit rig counts were Loving (30); Martin (25); Howard (19); Eddy, New Mexico (26); Lea, New Mexico (26); Upton (17); Reagan (16); Glasscock (12); Pecos (12); Ward (11); Andrews (10); and Culberson (10).

Dawson, Fisher and Schleicher counties saw renewed activity this week; Dickens and Terry counties ceased activity.

The Permian's Texas total was 308, up four.

The nation's most active basin had 137 rigs a year ago.

Texas & New Mexico

Texas' rig count rose to 459 after eight rigs were added. The Eagle Ford in South Texas saw the addition of two rigs, raising its total to 58. The Barnett in North Texas bumped one higher to seven. The Haynesville had 40 rigs, up one. Eleven rigs were in East Texas;

LOCAL BRIEFS

FROM STAFF REPORTS

Former Mayor Mike Canon to run for Senate again

Former Midland Mayor Mike Canon on Friday announced his intention to run for a seat in the Texas Senate.

Canon ran for the Republican nomination against current state Sen. Kel Seliger in 2014. Seliger collected 52.52 percent of the 70,029 votes, according to the Secretary of State's website.

"Senate District 31 is the most conservative Senate district in the state of Texas. The citizens of our district deserve a state senator that shares their conservative values," Canon said in a statement. "In the Senate, I will fight to secure the border, lower property taxes, protect unborn life, preserve the Second Amendment, and strive to reduce the size of our state's government."

Canon, who was Midland mayor from 2001 through 2008, already has a campaign website — mikecanonforsenate.com.

Seliger was first elected to the Senate in 2004. Senate District 31, according to Seliger's website, spans 37 counties from the Panhandle to the Permian Basin and includes Amarillo, Midland, Odessa and Big Spring.

Crime Stopper's tip leads to arrest for weapon at LHS

A Crime Stopper's tip from a Lee High School student led to another student's arrest for possession of a prohibited weapon, according to a press release from Midland ISD. The report of a gun on campus initiated an immediate response from law enforcement. The investigation revealed the gun was not on campus at that time, but may have been on campus earlier in the day.

Following the report, campus administrators and Midland ISD police officers responded swiftly and without any interruption to the regular campus schedule, according to the release.

Parents were notified of the incident after law enforcement officials concluded their initial investigation. The investigation has been handed over to the Midland Police Department.

"We are thankful the Crime Stopper's tip came in and for the clear details given which led to the student being taken into custody in such a quick manner," said Judi Tarlton, LHS associate principal.

Doctors worry as Texas lawmakers give ok to vaccine restrictions

By Paul J. Weber
Associated Press

AUSTIN — Texas moved closer Friday to restricting emergency immunizations given to children removed from troubled homes, worrying doctors and handing a political victory for vaccination opponents in a state where the number of families forgoing shots is soaring.

Vaccination critics are trying to build a foothold in Texas, and the state's Republican-controlled House has now signed off on prohibiting doctors from administering any immediate immunizations— other than for tetanus — for children newly taken into state custody.

Doctors argue there are real implications.

During a pertussis outbreak last year in North Texas, Dr. Anu Partap of Dallas said she didn't hesitate to give vaccinations to new foster children who were removed from homes for abuse or neglect. But she said that couldn't happen again under a bill that is now likely to head soon to Republican Gov. Greg Abbott's desk.

"If I had a 6-month old in my clinic, delaying a shot has more risk than spending time looking for vaccine records," said Partap, an assistant professor of pediatrics at UT Southwestern Medical Center, who also serves as director of the Rees-Jones Center for Foster Care Excellence at Children's Health.

More than 44,000 parents in Texas filed personal-belief exemptions last school year to shield their children from vaccinations, a nearly twentyfold jump from 2003. That was still less than 1 percent of students enrolled but the rising number still troubles doctors.

Anti-vaccination efforts have moved from the fringes in Texas to the floor of the Statehouse behind increased political organization, including a political action committee called Texans for Vaccine Choice, and elected allies with libertarian streaks.

"All you got to decide for yourself, is it the parent's decision to decide or the state?" Republican state Rep. Bill Zedler said on the House floor earlier this month during a debate over a similar provision. "And vaccines are not in any case emergency in nature."

Texas and 17 other states allow philosophical exemptions to vaccines. California used to let students forgo vaccinations for similar reasons — only to approve some of the country's strictest vaccine requirements last year. That law eliminated religious and personal beliefs as reasons for opting out of mandatory immunizations.

The most common immunizations protect against measles, mumps, and rubella, or German measles, as well as diphtheria, tetanus, whooping cough, polio and hepatitis A and B. State health officials said Friday they could not immediately provide how many children in state custody received vaccination within the first few weeks of being removed from a home.

Peter Hotez, director of the Texas Children's Hospital Center for Vaccine Development in Houston, said the state is heading in the wrong direction.

"We're at the point where nothing is going to happen until we have a catastrophic measles outbreak," Hotez said.

Seliger: College admissions bill is 'dead'

■ There aren't enough votes to pass measure that would put limits on Top 10 Percent Rule, senator says.

By Matthew Watkins
Texas Tribune

Texas' Top 10 Percent Rule for college admissions appears poised to survive another legislative session, according to the author of the leading bill to repeal or peel it back.

Senate Higher Education Chairman Kel Seliger, R-Amarillo, said he doesn't have enough Republican support to get Senate Bill 2119 to the Senate floor. That means the issue is likely dead for 2017, he said.

"There weren't the votes," Seliger said.

Currently, any student who graduates in the top 10 percent of his or her high school's graduating class receives automatic admission to any public university in the state except the University of Texas at Austin, where the threshold is 7 percent. Seliger initially proposed repealing the rule entirely. He later updated his bill to keep the rule in place, but in a more limited way. Under the latest version of his bill, each school could cap automatic admissions at 30 percent of its incoming freshman class.

That would significantly impact admissions at UT-Austin, where about three-quarters of each freshman class is automatically admitted. Many suburban parents and students from competitive school districts loathe the bill because they say it makes it harder to gain admission into UT-Austin.

Seliger wanted to change the rule because it represented "big government." The universities, not the state, should be in charge of setting admissions standards, he said. But Seliger couldn't get the 19 votes needed to get the item up for consideration on the floor of the 31-member Senate.

He said the reason the bill wasn't getting the necessary votes "is because of self-professed small government Republicans."

The Top 10 Percent Rule was created in 1997 to increase diversity at state schools. The thinking behind it is that not all high schools are created equal. Schools in poor urban or rural areas tend to have fewer resources than the wealthy suburban schools. The poorer students come from less-educated families and tend to do worse on the SAT. Sometimes they can't afford extracurricular activities. But none of those disadvantages matter under the Top 10 Percent Rule.

UT-Austin, meanwhile, has raised complaints that the rule eliminates its freedom to compile its student body to its choosing and restricts admission to largely one metric — class rank.

Most Democrats still support the bill. But Seliger said he was dismayed to learn that there were not enough Republicans on board.

"This is one of the worst examples of big government because we have got the Legislature determining admissions to one university to no real end," he said.

Seliger said he didn't know of any other avenue to get a change to the rule approved in the Capitol this session. But he said he expects the issue will come up again in the 2019 legislative session. The situation could soon become magnified at Texas A&M University, too, he said. The share of top 10 percent students enrolled at A&M is nearing 60 percent.

UNEMPLOYMENT

come in applying for jobs, and that's a good sign," said Taylor.

He estimated that unemployment claims in April fell to 1,180 from 4,600 in April 2016.

The civilian labor force continues to improve, closing the gap between year-ago levels to about 300: 86,865 in April 2017 compared to 87,184 in April 2016. The number of employed jumped almost 600 to 83,833 from 83,296 last April, and the number of unemployed plunged almost 800 to 3,032 from 3,898 last April.

Midland added 200 jobs from March to April. A 300-job gain in the leisure and hospitality sector and 100-job gains each in the mining, logging and construction and the other services sectors was offset by 100-job losses each in the trade, transportation and utilities, the education and health services and the government sectors.

For the 12 months between April 2016 and April 2017, Midland added 400 jobs. The mining, logging and construction sector, the area's dominant industrial sector, added 1,300 jobs, and the government sector 200 jobs during that time. Also adding jobs were the education and health services, leisure and hospitality and other services sectors, which added 100 jobs each. Those gains were offset by the loss of 1,000 jobs in the trade, transportation and utilities sector, 200 jobs in the professional and business services and 100 jobs each in the manufacturing and the financial services sectors.

"We really need to continue, for our region, to diversify, Taylor said. "It's the thing to do. We have a strong medical sector, education, but we need to continue to diversify."

Statewide, the unemployment rate held at 5 percent in April, while national employment fell to 4.4 percent. Over the last year, the state has added 258,900 jobs, including 30,400 in April.

Amarillo reported the lowest unemployment at 3 percent, while McAllen-Edinburg-Mission posted the highest rate at 8 percent.

Texas AG asks EPA to halt environmental court battles

By Brendan Gibbons
San Antonio Express-News

Texas Attorney General Ken Paxton has asked the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency to stop the clock on more than a dozen lawsuits it has pending against the agency over new regulations. In a letter sent this week, Paxton urged the EPA, now run by former Oklahoma Attorney General Scott Pruitt, to reconsider 12 rules related to climate change, clean air and wetlands protection. With briefing and motion deadlines pending in many of the cases, the letter asked the EPA to direct Department of Justice lawyers to suspend the cases while the EPA reviews the rules. This would save Texas and industry groups legal fees, it argues. The letter comes in response to an EPA request for comments on dismantling policies established during President Barack Obama's administration through "regulatory reform." Pruitt's EPA is acting on a March 1 executive order by President Donald Trump to "alleviate unnecessary regulatory burdens placed on the American people."

Texas advances new abortion limits despite court defeats

Texas' Republican-controlled Legislature is advancing tough new limits on abortion, striking back after the U.S. Supreme Court gutted many tough restrictions on the procedure it passed previously.

The Texas House voted Friday to ban a commonly used second-trimester abortion procedure known as dilation and evacuation. That's despite similar laws being blocked by courts in Alabama, Oklahoma, Kansas and Louisiana.

That contentious provision was added to a bill requiring burying or cremating fetal remains from abortions, even though a federal judge has already blocked an existing Texas state rule mandating the same thing.

The bill also bars the sale or donation of fetal tissue.

The hit on the prison-borne gang, headquartered in San Antonio, comes as part of an investigation that has lasted more than two years. The arrests occurred in San Antonio, Hondo, Uvalde and other nearby towns.

Today in history

By The Associated Press

Today is Saturday, May 20, the 140th day of 2017. There are 225 days left in the year.

Today's highlight:

On May 20, 1927, Charles Lindbergh took off from Roosevelt Field in Long Island, New York, aboard the Spirit of St. Louis on his historic solo flight to France.

On this date:

In 1932, Amelia Earhart took off from Newfoundland to become the first woman to fly solo across the Atlantic. (Because of weather and equipment problems, Earhart set down in Northern Ireland instead of her intended destination, France.)

In 1956, the United States exploded the first airborne hydrogen bomb over Bikini Atoll in the Pacific.

In 1961, a white mob attacked a busload of Freedom Riders in Montgomery, Alabama, prompting the federal government to send in U.S. marshals to restore order.

In 1996, the U.S. Supreme Court, in Romer v. Evans, struck down, 6-3, a Colorado measure banning laws that protected homosexuals from discrimination.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY for Saturday, May 20, 2017: This year you will learn to handle stress differently. You'll want to control the tension rather than have it control you. Some of you might opt for a change in your lifestyle, whereas others will admit to enjoying the hectic pace. If you are single, someone of significance could stroll into your life anytime from now through summer. Be open to this possibility. If you are attached, sometimes the two of you go to battle over nothing. Know that there are better ways of handling your nervous energy! PISCES can be very irritating to you, especially at work.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) ★★★★ Recent issues can be more easily discussed, as there seems to be less resentment involved. Share your feelings without blaming the other party. Opportunities arise because of a discussion. You might find that others are more willing to open up. Tonight: Tap into your sixth sense.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20)
★★★★★ Zero in on your priorities, and understand your limits. You might feel obligated to throw yourself into whatever is going on. Be careful not to swallow your anger or ignore your feelings. You could find yourself acting out as a result. Tonight: Off to a movie or a concert.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20)
★★★ You could feel tense and not know what to do with your energy. Understand that this high level of stress will pass, given some time. Your sense of humor allows you to detach from the here and now. Laughter will prove to be very healing. Tonight: Be the star of the day.

CANCER (June 21-July 22)
★★★★ Your imagination seems to dominate, no matter what is happening around you. Your anger might be suppressed, yet it still seems to motivate you. You could overindulge with ease, not realizing what is motivating you. Tonight: If feeling out of whack, slow down a bit.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22)
★★★ Your high energy seems to be contagious; no wonder others like to be around you. Your charming personality could melt someone else's resistance. Do not be surprised if some anger heads your way. Know that these feelings need to come out. Tonight: Say "yes" to an offer.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)
★★★★ You can't deny your popularity. Recognize that you might be somewhat extravagant right now, which could cause you a problem. You are likely to have several opportunities to make more money. Stay within your budget no matter what. Tonight: Let someone else take the lead.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22)
★★★ Treat today as a 24-hour period designed just for you. Be reasonable, and let go of a need to get as much done as you can. Once you relax, you will feel much better. You might even decide to be a bit lazy for a change. What's wrong with that? Tonight: Be naughty and nice.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) ★★★★★ You have a unique style or way of doing things. Allow your imagination to take the lead, but avoid wandering into territory that is too wild even for you. Try not to swallow any anger, and help a loved one or dear friend do the same. Tonight: Act like a teenager again.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21)
★★★★ Stay centered and know what is going on around you. You might feel challenged by someone else and by his or her choice of words. Understand that this person probably didn't have the intention of putting you on the defensive. Remain open. Tonight: Throw a party!

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)
★★★★ Return calls and emails before making any plans. You will make a better choice as a result. Try not to push yourself so hard. An older relative is likely to demonstrate his or her caring. This person also might have a surprise up his or her sleeve! Tonight: Be more flexible.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18)
★★★Be aware of the costs of proceeding as you have been. Your budget could be subject to change. Know that you can say "no" at any given time. A friend might feel as if you are upset with him or her. Do your best to clear the air. Tonight: At a favorite spot with favorite people.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20)
★★★★ You might be dealing with some changes to your domestic life. This transformation could be emotional and physical. Be open to making an adjustment, if need be. Your imagination not only fuels your plans, but it also benefits those around you. Tonight: Paint the town red.

Weiner pleads guilty in sexting case, could go to prison

By Larry Neumeister and Tom Hays
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Former U.S. Rep. Anthony Weiner, whose penchant for sexting strangers ended his political career and sparked a probe that upended the presidential race, pleaded guilty Friday to a sex charge, tearfully apologizing for communications with a 15-year-old girl that he said destroyed his "life's dream in public service."

Weiner, who could go to prison, pleaded guilty to a single count of transmitting obscene material to a minor. He admitted exchanging online messages with the girl beginning in January 2015 and "sharing explicit images and encouraging her to engage in sexually explicit conduct."

"I have a sickness, but I do not have an excuse," he said.

In court, the 52-year-old former Democratic congressman paused repeatedly as he fought back tears and tried to compose himself. He said he knew the texting was "as morally wrong as it was unlawful."

Pleading to the charge, which requires him to register as a sex offender, could bring a sentence of up to 10 years. But Weiner is likely to serve much less time if he is sentenced to prison.

In a plea agreement with prosecutors, he agreed not to appeal any sentence between 21 and 27 months in prison. His lawyer can request leniency at a sentencing scheduled for Sept. 8.

In a written plea agreement, prosecutors said aggravating factors such as the age of the victim would have called for a prison sentence of up to 14 years under sentencing guidelines were it not for the plea bargain and a 10-year maximum penalty on the charge.

Wearing his wedding ring and a dark blue suit with a maroon tie, Weiner read from a prepared statement after U.S. District Judge Loretta A. Preska addressed him: "Tell me what you did, sir."

He said he "compulsively sought attention from women who contacted me on social media" beginning with his service in Congress and continuing through the first half of last year.

"I engaged with many of them in both sexual and nonsexual conversation," he said. "These destructive impulses brought great devastation to my family and friends and destroyed my life's dream in public service. Yet, I remained in denial even as the world around me fell apart."

Weiner said he began getting mental health treatment in the fall, when he said he "came to grips for the first time with the depths of my sickness." He said he continues to follow the treatment daily.

"I had hit bottom," he said. "Through treatment I found the courage to take a moral inventory of my defects."

Weiner apologized to "everyone I have hurt," including the girl he "mistreated so badly."

Finished speaking, he wiped his eyes with tissues.

Weiner was already in federal custody ahead of the hearing, which lasted less than half an hour. Afterward, he shook hands with prosecutors, telling them: "Thanks, guys. I appreciate your service."

He then went down the courthouse elevator surrounded by his lawyers and court officers and left the building. He said nothing to reporters. His wife, Huma Abedin, was not in court.

Abedin, a top aide to Democratic presidential candidate Hillary Clinton last year, separated from Weiner in September after revelations he had sent more sexually charged messages online.

That same month, the FBI began investigating Weiner after the North Carolina girl told the news website DailyMail.com that she and Weiner had exchanged lewd messages for several months.

She also accused him of asking her to undress on camera. Phone messages left Friday with the North Carolina girl's father were not immediately returned.

As part of his plea, Weiner agreed to forfeit his iPhone. In a statement, attorney Arlo Devlin-Brown said his client had "apologized, offered no excuses and made a commitment to make amends." He said the plea agreement reflected a resolution "on terms far less severe than could have been sought" because the circumstances lacked the kind of aggravating factors often present in similar cases. He added that Weiner remains "focused on his recovery."

China, Japan extract combustible ice from seafloor

By Matthew Brown
Associated Press

BEIJING — Commercial development of the globe's huge reserves of a frozen fossil fuel known as "combustible ice" has moved closer to reality after Japan and China successfully extracted the material from the seafloor off their coastlines.

But experts said Friday that large-scale production remains many years away — and if not done properly could flood the atmosphere with climate-changing greenhouse gases.

Combustible ice is a frozen mixture of water and concentrated natural gas. Technically known as methane hydrate, it can be lit on fire in its frozen state and is believed to comprise one of the world's most abundant fossil fuels.

The official Chinese news agency Xinhua reported that the fuel was successfully mined by a drilling rig operating in the South China Sea on Thursday. Chinese Minister of Land and Resources Jiang Daming declared the event a breakthrough moment heralding a potential "global energy revolution."

A drilling crew in Japan reported a similar successful operation two weeks earlier on May 4 offshore the Shima Peninsula.

For Japan, methane hydrate offers the chance to reduce its heavy reliance of imported fuels if it can tap into reserves off its coastline. In China, it could serve as a cleaner substitute for coal-burning power plants and steel factories that have polluted much of the country with lung-damaging smog.

The South China Sea has become a focal point of regional political tensions as China has claimed huge swaths of disputed territory as its own. Previous sea oil exploration efforts by China met resistance, especially from Vietnam, but its methane hydrate operation was described as being outside the most hotly contested areas. Methane hydrate has been found beneath seafloors and buried inside Arctic permafrost and beneath Antarctic ice. The United States and India also have research programs pursuing technologies to capture the fuel.

Estimates of worldwide reserves range from 10,000 trillion cubic feet up to 100,000 trillion cubic feet, according to the U.S. Energy Information Administration. By comparison, total worldwide production of natural gas was 124 billion cubic feet in 2015, the most recent year available. That means methane hydrate reserves could meet global gas demands for 80 to 800 years at current consumption rates. Yet, efforts to successfully extract the fuel at a profit have eluded private and state-owned energy companies for decades. That's in part because of the high cost of extraction techniques, which can use large amounts of water or carbon dioxide to flood methane hydrate reserves so the fuel can be released and brought to the surface.

Radioactive contamination found on clothes of Hanford worker

Associated Press

RICHLAND, Wash. — A worker at the Hanford Nuclear Reservation in Washington state got radioactive contamination on his clothing this week during an incident at an underground waste storage tank that indicated a possible leak.

Contractor Washington River Protection Solutions said the worker was removing a robotic device out of the space between the double walls of Tank AZ-101 on Thursday evening. Monitors detected radiation at three times the expected level, and the workers left the area, said the company, which operates the storage tanks for the U.S. Department of Energy.

Radioactive contamination was found on one worker's protective clothing, which was removed, the company said. Monitors showed no further contamination on that worker, and all members of the crew were cleared to return to normal duty, the contractor said.

Hanford is near Richland, Washington, and for decades made plutonium for nuclear weapons. Millions of gallons of the most dangerous wastes produced by that work are stored in 177 underground tanks, many of which are decades old and have leaked.

This incident came after last week's accident in which the roof of a tunnel that contains nuclear waste partially collapsed at Hanford, prompting the evacuation of nearby workers. No one was injured in that event, and Hanford officials said no airborne release of radiation occurred.

But Washington Gov. Jay Inslee said Friday he was alarmed by the two incidents.

"The risks at Hanford to workers and the environment are all too real, and today's news is just another illustration of how tenuous the situation is."

Bob Ferguson, Washington Attorney General

"It is another urgent reminder that Congress needs to act, and they need to act quickly," Inslee said. "We expect the U.S. Department of Energy to immediately investigate and report on the source of contamination."

Washington Attorney General Bob Ferguson said the latest incident strengthens his resolve to force the Department of Energy to finish the cleanup of the sprawling site. That cleanup is forecast to last until 2060 and cost an additional $100 billion.

"The risks at Hanford to workers and the environment are all too real, and today's news is just another illustration of how tenuous the situation is," Ferguson said Friday. "This isn't the first potential leak, and it won't be the last."

Oil price jumps 5 percent this week

By Trevor Hawes
thawes@mrt.com

The price of oil reentered the $50s on Friday and in doing so snapped a four-week skid of declining prices.

West Texas Intermediate contracts for June delivery closed the week at $50.33 a barrel, up 98 cents (1.99 percent) on the day and $2.49 (5.26 percent) for the week. WTI spent 20 trading days below the $50 mark and hit a year low of $45.52 in the process on May 4. The price rose $4.81 (10.64 percent) since the year low.

Despite being back in the $50s, WTI is still down $2 (3.82 percent) for the year. The average price is $51.03 and has reached a high of $54.45 this year. Friday marked 2017's 96th trading day. The price has been in the $50s 61 times.

Plains Marketing posted prices also were higher this week. The Reporter-Telegram tracks WTI "all other areas" and West Texas sour. On Friday, WTI posted fetched $46.75 a barrel, up $1 (2.19 percent) on the day and $2.50 (5.65 percent) for the week. Sour was priced at $42.70, up $1 (2.4 percent) Friday and $2.50 (6.22 percent) for the week. The spread between the two crude grades has held at $4.05 for the past 15 trading days.

WTI posted is down $2 (4.1 percent) for the year and has had an average price of $47.51. The year high is $50.75, while the low is $42. Sour is down 50 cents (1.16 percent) this year. It has been priced as high as $46.20 and as low as $37.95. Sour's average price is $43.20.

In other futures trading Friday, July contracts rose $1.01 to $50.67, August jumped $1.01 to $50.92 and September was up 99 cents to $51.13. The nearest contract in the $55s is June 2024 at $55.13. There aren't any contracts in the $60s.

RIG COUNT

the rest were in Louisiana.

Half of the Granite Wash's 10 rigs were in the Panhandle; the other five were in Oklahoma. The basin lost one rig this week.

Offshore rigs in Texas held steady at one.

New Mexico's rig count rose one higher to 56. Its three non-Permian rigs were in San Juan County in the northeastern part of the state.

At this time last year, Texas recorded 173 rigs and New Mexico recorded 18.

United States

The U.S. crossed the 900-rig mark after the addition of 16 rigs pushed its count to 901. Of that tally, 720 were searching for oil, up eight; 180 were exploring for natural gas, up eight; and one was listed as miscellaneous, unchanged.

The offshore rig count rose two to 23. All were in the Gulf of Mexico, whose count rose three. The inland waters count was unchanged at four. On land, there were 874 rigs, up 14.

By drilling trajectory, there 759 horizontal rigs, up 17; 76 vertical rigs, down one; and 66 directional rigs, unchanged.

The U.S. had 404 rigs a year ago.

Most active

Basins with the highest rig counts were the Permian, the Eagle Ford, the Cana Woodford (53), the Marcellus (45) and the Williston (44).

States with the most activity were Texas, Oklahoma (122), Louisiana (56), New Mexico and North Dakota (44).

Grassroots activists seek to regain local control over oil and gas drilling

By Max B. Baker
Fort Worth Star-Telegram

Sometimes it takes a little plant food to get a grassroots network to grow.

Two years ago, after Texas lawmakers passed House Bill 40 limiting local control over oil and gas activity, activists pledged to form what they called the Texas Grassroots Network to monitor the energy industry and find ways to influence public policy — locally and statewide.

Well, the idea didn't take root, mostly because the drop in drilling activity made it hard to get people interested, said Sharon Wilson, regional organizer for Earthworks, an environmental advocacy group.

They couldn't even get things together in time for the current Texas legislative session, which is scheduled to wrap up at the end of the month, she said. As a result, two bills backed by activists didn't make it very far, Wilson said.

But now drilling activity is coming back — particularly in the Permian Basin — so Wilson and about 25 of her colleagues are gathering at a Dallas hotel this weekend to learn more about community organizing tools and how to network.

"We're looking to get back local control," Wilson said. "People all over the state feel like industry has overstepped ... People want to decide for themselves what is best for their families."

On the agenda are topics like 'Developing an issue campaign: Failure to plan means planning to fail,' 'Understanding, mapping and analyzing power relationships,' and 'Building and maintaining healthy local groups.'

A more active organization might have helped bills like one sponsored by state Rep. Terry Canales that would have allowed cities to prevent a new oil or gas well from being drilled within 1,500 feet of a school or child-care facility. There also was legislation filed by state Sen. Judith Zaffirini, D-Laredo, calling for a similar setback plus a hearing at the Texas Railroad Commission, which regulates the oil and gas industry.

Both bills died without a vote, she said.

"We do know that pressuring the representatives and senators works and if they don't respond they can be replaced," Wilson said. "We'll be giving these groups the tools to stay connected and work together to get back some local control and bring some balance back."

Trump to Muslims on first foreign trip: Drive out terrorists

By Vivian Salama and Johnathan Lemire
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Donald Trump will use his first visit to the Middle East to call for unity in the fight against radicalism in the Muslim world, casting the challenge as a "battle between good and evil" and urging Arab leaders to "drive out the terrorists from your places of worship," according to a draft of the speech obtained by The Associated Press.

Abandoning some of the harsh anti-Muslim rhetoric of his presidential campaign, the draft of the speech, slated to be delivered in Saudi Arabia on Sunday, envisions new partnerships with America's traditional allies in the Middle East. It notably refrains from mentioning democracy and human rights — topics Arab leaders often view as U.S. moralizing — in favor of the more limited goals of peace and stability.

"We are not here to lecture — to tell other peoples how to live, what to do or who to be. We are here instead to offer partnership in building a better future for us all," the document said.

Trump left Washington Friday afternoon for Riyadh, the first stop on his maiden trip overseas trip as president. The marathon trip will also take him to Israel, the Vatican, Belgium and Italy. The trip is a key test of the president's diplomatic skills and a chance to add substance to a foreign policy he has described broadly as "America First."

Two different sources provided the AP with copies of the draft of his remarks, billed as a marquee speech of the trip. One version, obtained late Thursday, included edits with comments from an administration official, indicating it was still a work in progress.

The White House confirmed the draft was authentic, but cautioned the president had not yet signed off on the final product.

"The president has not seen this draft," White House spokesman Sean Spicer said. "This is one of five drafts that have been written by various people. He continues to take input and is writing a final version." Trump's campaign was marked by his anti-Islamic rhetoric and his administration has twice tried to impose a travel ban on several Muslim-majority countries. "I think Islam hates us," he said at one point. The draft of the speech includes no mention of "radical Islamic terrorism" — a phrase that candidate Trump regularly criticized opponent Hillary Clinton and President Barack Obama for shying away from. His speech calls terrorism a widespread problem plaguing everyone who loves peace.

He positions himself as an "emissary for the American people, to deliver a message of friendship and hope," according to the draft.

"This is not a battle between different faiths, different sects or different civilizations. This is a battle between those who seek to obliterate human life and those who seek to protect it," the text reads. "This is a battle between good and evil."

Trump may seem an unlikely messenger to deliver an olive branch to the Muslim world.

Only a week after taking office, he signed an executive order to ban immigrants from seven countries — Iraq, Iran, Syria, Sudan, Libya, Somalia, and Yemen — from entering the United States, a decision that sparked widespread protests at the nation's airports and demonstrations outside the White House. That ban was blocked in federal court, prompting the administration to sign a second one.

The second version, which dropped Iraq from the list, is also blocked in court, though Trump has said the measure is needed for the nation's security. As a campaigner, he called for a "total and complete shutdown" of the entry of Muslims to the United States "until our country's representatives can figure out what the hell is going on," insisting that a sizable segment of the Muslim population has "great hatred toward Americans."

His Saudi speech is aimed at the nations represented at an Arab and Muslim leaders' summit.

Trump intends to condemn Syria's President Bashar Assad for committing "unspeakable crimes against humanity" and Iran for contributing to spiraling violence in Syria.

"All nations of conscience in the Middle East must work together to roll back Iran's destabilizing influence, restore a more stable balance of power in the region and pray for the day when the Iranian people have the just and responsible government they deserve," the draft reads.

Iran and Syria were not invited to the summit, and they are not part of a regional military alliance that Saudi Arabia is establishing to fight terrorism. The kingdom backs efforts to topple the Syrian government, which counts Iran and Russia as its closest allies.

White House officials have said they consider Trump's visit and his keynote address a counterweight to President Obama's debut speech to the Muslim world in 2009 in Cairo. Obama called for understanding and acknowledged some of America's missteps in the region. That speech was denounced by many Republicans and criticized by a number of the United States' Middle East allies, including Israel, as being a sort of apology. Obama aides have continued to defend it. Administration officials believe Trump's decision to begin his trip in Saudi Arabia sends a powerful message to the kingdom: The strained ties that marked U.S.-Saudi relations under Obama are over.

Report: FBI probe moves into White House

By Erica Werner and Eileen Sullivan
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Donald Trump told Russian diplomats last week his firing of "nut job" James Comey had eased the pressure on him, even as the FBI's Trump-Russia investigation had moved into the White House, according to reports Friday that pursued the president as he began his maiden foreign trip.

White House hopes that Trump could leave scandalous allegations at home were crushed in a one-two punch of revelations that landed shortly after his departure. A Washington Post report, citing anonymous sources familiar with the matter, said a senior Trump adviser is now considered a "person of interest" in the law enforcement investigation into whether Trump's campaign associates coordinated with Russia in an effort to sway the 2016 election.

And The New York Times reported that the president told Russian officials he felt the dismissal of his FBI director had relieved "great pressure" on him. The White House has said the firing was unrelated to the FBI's Russia investigation.

Late Friday, the Senate intelligence committee announced that Comey had agreed to testify at an open hearing at an undetermined date after Memorial Day.

Comey will certainly be asked about encounters that precipitated his firing, including a January dinner in which, Comey has told associates, Trump asked for his loyalty. In the Oval Office weeks later, Comey told associates, the president asked him to shut down an investigation into former national security adviser Michael Flynn.

Comey is known to produce memos documenting especially sensitive or unsettling encounters, such as after the February meeting.

Comey turned down an invitation to testify before the Senate Judiciary Committee. The new headlines were a fresh indication that Trump would not be able to change the subject from what appears to be an intensifying investigation reaching toward the president and his inner circle.

The White House repeated its assertion that a "thorough investigation will confirm that there was no collusion between the campaign and any foreign entity."

It did not deny the Times report that Trump was critical of Comey to the Russians the day after he fired him.

The Times reported Trump noted the Russia investigation as he told Russian Foreign Minister Sergey Lavrov and Ambassador to the U.S. Sergey Kislyak of his decision to fire Comey.

"I just fired the head of the FBI. He was crazy, a real nut job," the Times reported that Trump said during the May 10 meeting. "I faced great pressure because of Russia. That's taken off."

White House spokesman Sean Spicer called the president's rhetoric part of his deal-making.

"By grandstanding and politicizing the investigation into Russia's actions, James Comey created unnecessary pressure on our ability to engage and negotiate with Russia," Spicer said. "The investigation would have always continued, and obviously the termination of Comey would not have ended it. Once again, the real story is that our national security has been undermined by the leaking of private and highly classified conversations."

As for the separate report of a "person of interest" under investigation, the Post said the senior White House adviser "under scrutiny" is someone close to the president but did not name the person.

Among Trump's senior White House advisers are several former campaign officials, including his son-in-law Jared Kushner, Steve Bannon, Stephen Miller and Kellyanne Conway. In March, Kushner volunteered to answer lawmakers' questions about meetings he had with Russian officials during the transition.

A spokeswoman for House Speaker Paul Ryan said he would not discuss information provided in classified briefings and said the House Oversight committee had already asked for documents related to Comey's firing.

Earlier this week, the Justice Department appointed former FBI Director Robert Mueller to take over the federal investigation in an effort to re-establish independence from the White House.

Deputy Attorney General Rod Rosenstein told Congress Friday he stands by a memo he wrote bluntly criticizing Comey. But he made clear it was not his intention for Trump or other White House officials to use the document to justify firing Comey, which is what they have done.

In closed-door meetings with lawmakers on Thursday and Friday, Rosenstein said he wrote the memo after Trump told him one day before the May 9 firing that he wanted to dismiss Comey. Rosenstein said that though he was personally fond of Comey, "I thought it was appropriate to seek a new leader."

The Justice Department on Friday released the text of Rosenstein's opening remarks for the briefings on Capitol Hill.

Trump has said he plans to nominate a new FBI director soon, but there was no announcement Friday.

The appointment of Mueller as special counsel has drawn generally favorable comments from Democrats and from some Republicans as well. But lawmakers at both congressional sessions expressed frustration that Rosenstein would say little in answer to their questions about his actions — or others' — before Comey's firing.

"There was considerable frustration in the room," said Rep. Seth Moulton, D-Mass., a member of the Armed Services Committee. "This renewed my confidence that we should not have confidence in this administration. I don't think (Rosenstein) did a lot to bolster our confidence in him today."

The White House has struggled since Comey's firing to explain the chain of events that led to it and the Justice Department's involvement in that decision. Trump has insisted at times that the decision was his alone, but he also has pointed to the "very strong" recommendation from Rosenstein.

Rosenstein made it clear to the lawmakers that he drafted his memo only after Trump told him of his plans to dismiss the FBI director. "My memorandum is not a statement of reasons to justify a for-cause termination," he said. But he added, "I wrote it. I believe it. I stand by it."

The memo focused on Comey's handling of the Hillary Clinton email investigation, particularly the FBI director's decision to divulge details to the public at various junctures during her presidential campaign against Trump. Rosenstein denounced that decision as "profoundly wrong and unfair." Trump has reacted furiously to the appointment of a special counsel, a prosecutor with wide authority to investigate Russia's interference and other potential crimes uncovered. However, at a combative news conference Thursday, he fell short in trying to resolve questions about investigations into his campaign and his first four months in office.

Asked point-blank if he'd done anything that might merit prosecution or even impeachment, Trump said no — and then added of the lingering allegations and questions: "I think it's totally ridiculous. Everybody thinks so."

Grady's Gibson makes it back-to-back at state

From staff reports

COLLEGE STATION — Grady junior Dominic Gibson is bringing another state championship plaque back to Lenorah.

Gibson successfully defended his Class 1A boys singles state championship Friday by defeating Slidell's Stone Coston, 6-1, 6-0, in the title match during the UIL State Tennis Tournament at the George P. Mitchell Tennis Center.

Gibson won his three state tournament matches by a combined 36-5 margin to secure consecutive Class 1A boys singles state titles.

"Each one is special is in its own way," Gibson said of his 2016 and 2017 championships. "The first time I won it was more relief that I finally did it, and then this time, it's just pure joy that you get to do it again and experience everything."

Gibson, a three-time state tournament participant, used his experience to his advantage in Friday's championship match.

Gibson said Coston was a capable USTA tennis player with a tough serve and good ground strokes. But Gibson said he wasn't overwhelmed by the magnitude of the match.

"I think I was more relaxed than the other kid and I think I handled the pressure a little better," Gibson.

Gibson said he has grown since his 2016 state title when he defeated Water Valley's Jared Urbantke, 6-0, 6-1, in the championship match.

Gibson said he played with more discipline at this year's tournament at Texas A&M.

"Last year my game wasn't as quite as mature," Gibson said. "I was a little impatient. I did show flashes of it this year during this tournament, but especially in this finals match, I was extremely patient, extremely calm and just waited for errors to come my way from the other side of the net.

"I didn't hit very many winners, maybe five winners at the most. But the rest were just errors on his part that helped me out."

Grady tennis coach Chris Short praised Gibson for being beyond his teenage years in the manner in which he handles himself.

"He is a very mature young man," Short said.

Gibson said that hard work alone, which include countless practice sessions with private coach Justin Delgado, is what helped him garner two state gold medals. The Wildcat already has his sights set on a third.

"I'm really happy that I got another state championship under my belt, hopefully I'll get another one next year," Gibson said. "I need to put in the work and bear down and focus and it will all come together."

Dynamic duo wins it all

MHS girls doubles team takes state, completes 45-0 season

From staff reports

COLLEGE STATION — The number 45 will always have a special meaning for Midland High girls doubles team Kate Daugherty and Allison Stewart.

Daugherty and Stewart defeated Houston Cypress Falls' Polina Radchenko and Rylee Braeden, 6-2, 4-6, 6-3, to claim the Class 6A girls doubles state championship during Friday's UIL State Tennis Tournament at George P. Mitchell Tennis Center.

Daugherty and Stewart became the first MHS girls doubles team to win a state title in 45 years since Terre Cowden and Susan Stolz accomplished the feat in 1972.

Daugherty and Stewart also capped a perfect 2016-17 high school tennis season with a 45-0 record.

Friday's triumph was quite the encore for Daugherty and Stewart, who had been chasing a state championship for three years.

"It makes everything that we've done thus far so worth it," Daugherty said. "Last year coming so close, it just made it all the more better this year as we went out there and just played even better than we did last year. We grew so much. To win it with Allison and go out with bang my senior year is unbelievable."

Daugherty and Stewart cruised through the first day of the state tournament, winning their quarterfinal and semifinal matches by a combined score of 24-3.

Daugherty and Stewart carried their momentum into Friday's state championship match, rolling through the first set over the Cypress Falls' pair.

However, the MHS duo encountered trouble in the second set and ended up dropping its first set of the postseason and its first since the Allen Tournament on March 25.

The Midland High girls doubles team of Kate Daugherty and Allison Stewart pose with their gold medals after winning the Class 6A girls doubles state title at Texas A&M's George P. Mitchell Tennis Center in College Station on Friday.

Midland High's first-year tennis coach Carmen Stewart, Allison's mother, stepped in between the second and third sets to get the pair back on track.

"They were playing the game those girls wanted them to play," Carmen Stewart said. "Kate was having to hit a lot of ground strokes and that's not Allison's and Kate's game. Allison's and Kate's game is getting to the net and being aggressive at the net.

"I just said, 'Go back to your game. You're letting them take charge right now. You girls got to get out there and you get to the net first and you put away shots first. Don't get suckered into their game that they want you to play.'"

Daugherty and Stewart hadn't encountered much adversity during the 2016-17 tennis season, but they used their three years of experience to handle a stressful, pressure situation Friday.

"We haven't had many of those moments this year, but last year we faced the same moments and fell short last year," Daugherty said. "This year what really changed for me personally was my attitude, just getting out there and not being negative. We went out there and played each point separate from each other. We would lose one point and just forget about it. We kept fighting for every point and every opportunity we had."

Tied 1-1 in the third set, Daugherty and Stewart held

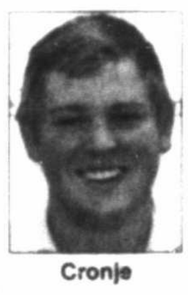
Chaps finish 4th in Poss' final national tourney

From staff reports

GARDEN CITY, KAN. — The Midland College men's golf team was hoping to send longtime coach Delnor Poss out on a high note at the NJCAA National Golf Tournament but sometimes the challenges of the sport can be tough to overcome.



Cronje

The Chaparrals couldn't give Poss a national championship but they'll send Poss out with a fourth-place finish with a four-round total of 1,183 after a tough final round. Rival Odessa College won the title as the Wranglers fired a 293 at Buffalo Dunes Golf Course in the final round on Friday to finish with a 1,166 total, four shots ahead of Indian Hills Community College. Eastern Florida State was third with a 1,172 total.

This was the final tournament in the illustrious career for Poss, who spent 40 years at the college. During his time as the men's golf coach he led the Chaps to four national championships and 30 straight trips to the national tournament.

"It's a melancholy moment," said Poss, who will now enjoy retirement. "(Volunteer assistant coach) Brian Gilley has been a friend and associate through all this time and we have been to a lot contests together. Knowing that this will be the last competition against coaches you respect and have known throughout your career is not always pleasant but it is something that has to happen at some point. The wonderful experiences we have had and the many exceptional performances by teams and individuals are something you can reflect on and be proud of. I can't say it's a sad moment because of the exciting and exceptional moments that we've had."

Unfortunately for the Chaps, they had their worst round of the tournament with a 16-over par 304 on Friday.

"We just didn't play well," Poss said. "We had our chances and we didn't take advantage. We certainly would have liked to have liked to have finished in third place. It was an exciting day until the last four holes. We had too many bogeys and double bogeys."

MC sophomore Stefan Cronje finished in a tie for fourth in the medalist standings to earn first team NJCAA All-American honors as he finished with 71-72-72-76—291 total. Indian Hills' Ricky Sanders won the medalist title with a 285 total. OC's Adam Blomme was

Midland RockHounds' Sanchez makes return after scary injury

By Will Korn

It was an abrupt and terrifying pause in what figured to be a promising 2017 season for Midland RockHounds right-handed reliever Jake Sanchez.

Pitching at home against the San Antonio Missions on April 23, Sanchez was struck in the head by a 100 mph line drive off the bat of Missions' Noah Perio in the ninth inning. Sanchez sustained a busted right eardrum and remained down on the grass just in front of the mound for several moments.

At that point, Sanchez was over a year into his career-transforming conversion from being a middling starter to a hard-throwing, dominant reliever. Prior to his injury, he had allowed only two hits and struck out 11 in six innings with Midland. He missed the next 23 games.

"I remember everything, luckily," said Sanchez, who originally signed with the Chicago White Sox in 2013 as an undrafted free agent out of Iowa Wesleyan. "It's just stuff that happens that we can't control if it does or doesn't. It's part of the game. I can only thank God and I was extremely lucky that nothing serious happened.

"The ball was struck pretty well and a lot of people thought it tipped my glove or my shoulder, but it hit me straight in the head. I was fortunate enough that someone was watching over me."

After progressing thorough concussion protocol, Sanchez returned to the mound for the RockHounds in Thursday night's 6-5 road loss against the Frisco RoughRiders. His first appearance in nearly a month, Sanchez spun a scoreless ninth while striking out one.

The 27-year-old from Brawley, California, said that with his fiery and competitive nature, being sidelined for that much time was emotionally difficult. But he knew his body would welcome the rest — something he hadn't had much of since his first year with the RockHounds in 2015.

"It definitely was something that was tough to swallow, but at the same

Greenwood blanks Pampa to open playoff series

From staff reports

ROSWELL, N.M. — Vance Martinez and Stace Bell combined on a three-hit shutout to lead No. 22-ranked Greenwood to a 1-0 victory over Pampa in Game 1 of its Class 4A regional quarterfinal playoff series, Friday at New Mexico Military Institute.

The Rangers (24-7-1) and Harvesters (17-10) resume their series with Game 2 at 1 p.m. CDT today. If necessary, Game 3 will follow 30 minutes after the conclusion of the second game.

Martinez was victorious after striking out seven over 6 2/3 scoreless innings, while allowing three hits and three walks. In the first, Martinez escaped a jam with no damage after the Harvesters had runners on third base and second with no out after the Rangers committed two errors on one play.

Bell recorded a save after he got Pampa's final batter to fly out to left field during a three-pitch at-bat in the seventh.

GHS scored its only run in the second inning when Josh Reyes plated Dawson Merryman with a one-out sacrifice fly.

Merryman reached base by error following a leadoff walk by Martinez.

Pampa starting pitcher Cody Scarlett took a tough-luck loss after holding the Rangers to only five hits.

"They did a really job of keeping us off balanced," Greenwood coach Stephen Rodriguez said. "We took advantage of their one error. Other than our two errors on one play, our defense was really clean."

The Greenwood-Pampa winner faces Godley, which swept its series against Stephenville, in the regional semifinal round at a time, date and location to be determined.

serve on a hard-fought point to take a 2-1 advantage, and then broke serve to take a 3-1 lead, which proved to be the two points that turned the match around.

Allison Stewart said the large Midland contingent, which traveled to College Station to cheer them on, helped keep their spirits up during the match. One Midlander televised the match on a live Facebook stream.

"There are so many people from Midland who came out to watch and congratulated us and wished us good luck before we left," said Allison Stewart, a junior. "I think that had a lot to do with it. It shows how great the atmosphere at Midland High is. A lot of my friends watched my match in class on the board. How cool is that, that their teachers let them watch some of their friends play the state tournament in College Station."

Daugherty and Stewart became the first Midland High doubles team to win at state since boys pair Luke Morrow and Harper Essex won the 1989 championship.

Daugherty and Stewart are the third MHS girls pair to win it all, joining the 1972 champions, and Barbara Lain and Betsy Worden, who were the 1961 state winners.

"To end that drought at Midland High is just really cool for us to give something back to Midland High, especially me being a senior just to give them something to remember me by, but also for the school to be remembered by," Daugherty said.

the runner-up with a 289, while OC teammate Van Thomas was third with a 290.

"We had some pretty tough conditions today and I don't think everybody on the team played the golf we wanted to play," Cronje said. "I'm happy with the fourth-place finish but the whole team wished it could have done better. The team would have wanted to have Coach Poss go out on a high note. It's sad to see him go, but it is what it is."

MC freshman Michael Salazar finished in a tie for 10th place individually with 295 total to earn second team all-American honors.

"I played all right, but I was putting well and getting around the greens OK," Salazar said. "I knew we could have done better today but it just wasn't anybody's day today."

Poss tipped his cap to Odessa College, which played consistently well throughout the tournament and led in three of the four rounds on the way to capturing its ninth national title and first since 2005.

Poss said the fact that his team put itself in contention going into the final round was all he could ask for.

"This has been an enjoyable group of young men that Brian Gilley and I have had the pleasure of working with," Poss said. "During their careers at Midland College, they placed third at the national tournament last year and fourth this year, and they won back-to-back regional championships. So there are a lot of things they can point to their careers to show what they accomplished at Midland College."

Rangers beat Tigers 5-3, extend win streak to 10 games

By Larry Lage
Associated Press

DETROIT — The Texas Rangers are the hottest team in baseball.

That hasn't done much for them in the standings because they're in the same division as Houston, the best team in the majors so far this season.

Mike Napoli and Joey Gallo hit homers, giving Texas enough offense to help it hold on for a 5-3 win over the Detroit Tigers on Friday night and a 10th straight victory.

"We don't talk about a streak or anything," Napoli said.

Even though the second-place Rangers have baseball's longest winning streak since Boston won 11 straight late last year, they have made up just two games on the AL West-leading Astros, who have a 6 1/2 game cushion. Texas manager Jeff Banister insisted he doesn't pay much attention to the standings because it is too early in the season.

"It's still May, right?" he asked.

Nick Martinez (1-2) gave up one unearned run and four hits over five innings, ending an 11-start winless streak that dated to Aug. 5, 2015. Matt Bush earned his fifth save in six chances, but it didn't come easy. He struck out Alex Avila with runners on the corners and two outs after shortstop Elvis Andrus' throwing error allowed the Tigers to pull within two runs.

Daniel Norris (2-3) allowed five runs and seven hits while striking out eight over 5 2-3 innings. He has won only one of his last six starts.

Detroit, without Miguel Cabrera and Victor Martinez, struggled at the plate with only one run in the fourth, sixth and ninth innings. Martinez missed his first game on the paternity list and Cabrera sat out a third straight game with an oblique strain.

They're streaking

Texas has its longest winning streak since an 11-game run in 2010 and is four wins away from matching a franchise record set in 1991.

Paying the price

Norris had a rough night and Texas took advantage. He hit Shin-Soo Choo to load the bases in the third and walked Andrus to force a run home in the two-run inning.

Norris fell behind Napoli in the fourth and he sent a 2-0 pitch over the wall in left field for his ninth home run.

Norris also threw two balls without a strike against Gallo before he sent a line drive deep into the seats in right field for a two-run shot that put the Rangers up 5-2 in the sixth inning.

"We were going away, but (Gallo) covers the plate so well and he crushed it," Norris said.

Trainer's room

Tigers: Cabrera, who said he is feeling better, said before the series opener that he may play this weekend. After the game, Ausmus said he would be "shocked," if Cabrera didn't play today.

Silver lining

Francisco Rodriguez and Anibal Sanchez, who are part of Detroit's much-maligned bullpen, combined to pitch 3 1/3 innings of scoreless relief.

"That was a really encouraging sign," Tigers manager Brad Ausmus said. "Obviously, they've taken some heat early in the season."

CHICAGO — Jett Bandy and Domingo Santana hit two-run singles.

On an afternoon with a 46-degree temperature and 37 wind-chill at the start, Bandy walked and scored on Orlando Arcia's bases-loaded infield single for a 4-3 lead in the fifth. The game was delayed 1 hour, 59 minutes in the top of the sixth, and Santana boosted the lead with his single just after the delay.

Arcia had three hits and an RBI single off Mike Montgomery (0-3) as the NL Central leaders won for the 10th time in 12 games.

Chicago dropped to 21-20 as Cubs pitchers walked 10.

Wily Peralta (5-2) struck out five over two scoreless innings, and Carlos Torres worked the ninth for his first save.

Nolan Arenado had a two-run homer off Wandy Peralta. Amarista kept it going with an RBI single during his second at-bat in the inning, matching his career high with four RBIs. Colorado sent 14 batters to the plate and piled up nine hits overall.

The Reds have lost seven straight, their longest skid since they dropped 11 in a row last May.

Maikel Franco and Freddy Galvis had two hits each for the Phillies, and Cameron Rupp hit a three-run homer in the ninth.

Trevor Williams (2-3) gave up allowed three runs and four hits in 5 2/3 innings

NEW YORK — Jacob deGrom (3-1) dominated until dealing with a torn callous on the ring finger of his throwing hand in the seventh, then escaped a no-out, bases-loaded jam that inning to help New York avoid what would have been its first eight-game skid since losing 11 straight in 2004.

After multiple visits by Mets coaches and a trainer, DeGrom survived the seventh with a strikeout, a juggling catch by shortstop Jose Reyes on Ben Revere's bloop into short left and Cameron Maybin's flyout. Jerry Blevins got two outs in his major league-leading 25th appearance. Paul Seward recorded an out in the eighth and Addison Reed pitched the ninth for his fifth save.

Ricky Nolasco (2-3) allowed two runs, one earned, over six innings. Los Angeles had won four straight.

Michael Conforto led off the seventh with his team-high 11th homer.

SANCHEZ

time I can look at it as a blessing in disguise," Sanchez said. "I got rest that I really didn't have. I think I've had a total of about two weeks off in the past two years."

Midland manager Fran Riordan said Sanchez' aggression on the mound after the injury was impressive. Some pitchers might have shown hesitation upon their return, but Sanchez did anything but.

"If there is anybody who is mentally strong enough to not make that an issue, it's Jake," Riordan said. "He's a pretty tough kid physically and mentally. But to see how he handled himself, how he went after hitters and attacked just like I've seen him do before, it proves the fact that he's pretty special when it comes to toughness."

The scare was part of what has been quite an adventurous last eight months in professional baseball for Sanchez.

Last September, Sanchez helped the RockHounds clinch their third straight Texas League title with three saves in four games in the championship series against Northwest Arkansas.

Less than two months later, Sanchez traveled south from his hometown to pitch for Aguilas de Mexicali of the Mexican League, where he allowed only one run in 31 2/3 innings. Then in March, he pitched two scoreless innings for Mexico in the World Baseball Classic, where he had an opportunity to pick the brains of major league pitchers and fellow countrymen such as Miguel Gonzalez, Sergio Romo and Yovani Gallardo.

"It was an awesome experience. It's an honor to actually represent Mexico and put that jersey on," Sanchez said. "I've done it before in the Caribbean series, but to do it on the stage of the WBC that we had, it was an honor. It's tough to explain the emotions, especially with our bracket being in Mexico and being in front of our home crowd. It was definitely something special."

Now that Sanchez has returned to action, he's made it clear that nothing about him will change after what was perhaps one of the gruesome moments of his life.

"I'm ready to go to help the team in any way," Sanchez said. "I didn't change my mentality. I'm still the same pitcher but I'm just excited to be back with the guys."

Encarnacion's 2-run homer helps Indians beat Astros 5-3

By Kristie Rieken
Associated Press

HOUSTON — Edwin Encarnacion hit a two-run homer and Jason Kipnis and Lonnie Chisenhall had solo shots to help the Cleveland Indians to a 5-3 victory over the Houston Astros on Friday night.

Cleveland starter Trevor Bauer (4-4) continued his dominance against Houston, yielding five hits and three runs while fanning a season-high nine in 5 2/3 innings to improve to 7-0 in seven career starts against the Astros.

Encarnacion's home run off Charlie Morton (5-3) tied it at 2-all in the fourth and Kipnis gave the Indians the lead with his home run in the fifth. Chisenhall made it 4-2 with his homer in the sixth before Carlos Correa got Houston within 1 with a home run in the bottom of that inning.

Chisenhall sent home another run with a sacrifice fly in the eighth that pushed the lead to 5-3.

Cleveland's bullpen threw 3 1/3 scoreless innings capped by a perfect ninth by Cody Allen to help the Indians improve to 14-0 when leading after six innings. Allen has converted each of his 11 save opportunities this season and 20 in a row dating to Aug. 18.

Morton tied a season high with eight hits and the three home runs he gave up tied a career high.

Zaza Pachulia expected to be enemy No. 1 for Spurs fans

By Janie McCauley
Associated Press

Pachulia

OAKLAND, Calif. — Stephen Curry pulled Zaza Pachulia aside and made one thing clear to the Warriors big man: We got your back.

Other teammates echoed that message.

Pachulia will most certainly receive a villain's welcome for Game 3 of the Western Conference finals Saturday at AT&T Center regardless of whether he's on the court or not, simply because he was involved in the play that injured Kawhi Leonard in the series opener.

Leonard, whose status for Game 3 remained unclear Friday, didn't play in Game 2 after re-injuring his tender left ankle in the third quarter of Game 1 when he came down on Pachulia's foot after shooting a long jumper.

San Antonio lost 113-111 without him, squandering a 20-point halftime lead, and Spurs coach Gregg Popovich was peeved. The next day, Popovich called the play "dangerous" and "unsportsmanlike" and insisted Pachulia has a history of such.

"Zaza's got a thick skull, so I know when he gets out there he's going to be able to play," Curry said. "I know guys in the locker room have told him, 'As best you can, block out as much of this noise as possible because it doesn't matter. We know what kind of person you are, be apologetic for Kawhi about what happened but you don't have to apologize for your intent on how you're guarding that play, whatever you want to call it.' So, moving on, he'll be ready, he'll be the same Zaza, confident: That's what we expect, and he knows that we have his back. And hopefully that'll go a long way. I talked to him. I don't think he needed to hear it but just knowing that we all have his back is, I think, huge, especially at this juncture with the spotlight and microscope that everybody's under."

Without Leonard, the Spurs took a 136-100 thumping in Game 2, prompting Popovich to question their belief and effort. Asked Friday whether San Antonio might come out differently Saturday, Pop said succinctly, "I believe that."

The Warriors sure expect it.

"A team going home down 0-2, they're going to come out with a lot of energy, and especially a team like the Spurs who never quits," Green said. "At the end of the day, they're going to go in with the mindset they feel like if they just go take care of their home court it's a series. We've obviously been here before, we know what it takes to go win on the road. It's just about us."

Leonard and Pachulia were listed as questionable Friday, along with key Warriors reserve Andre Iguodala. Popovich said Leonard had only shot the past couple of days. Pachulia bruised his right heel and missed the second half Tuesday, while Iguodala sat out Game 2 and all but 10 minutes of the opener with soreness in his left knee.

Leonard said his ankle is "still not ready," but he didn't rule out that it could be much improved by game day. He said he won't play if he can't be his usual strong self and use both legs to take quality shots and not force things by being off-balance.

Asked again whether he thought Pachulia's play was dirty — initially having said he didn't consider it intentional — Leonard said he's spending his energy on getting healthy.

"I'm not worried about that," he said.

Warriors coach Steve Kerr's health has improved enough that he traveled to Texas with the team, an encouraging sign after he returned to practice for the first time in more than three weeks last Saturday following a May 5 procedure to repair a spinal fluid leak. The reigning coach of the year then attended Games 1 and 2 behind the scenes but spoke to the Warriors before the game and at halftime.

Cavs send Celtics to record loss, 130-86, lead series 2-0

By Jimmy Golen
Associated Press

BOSTON — LeBron James scored 30 points, Kevin Love had 21 points and 12 rebounds, and the Cleveland Cavaliers steamrolled the Boston Celtics 130-86 on Friday night to take a 2-0 lead in the Eastern Conference finals and tie an NBA record with their 13th straight playoff victory.

Cleveland led by 14 points after one quarter, by a record 41 at the half and by 46 after three. Even with James and the rest of the starters sitting out the fourth quarter, the 130 points was the most ever scored by the franchise in a playoff game.

Kyrie Irving had 23 points for the Cavaliers, who return home with a chance to finish off the Celtics in Cleveland. It would be the third straight sweep this postseason for the defending NBA champions, who also won the last three games of last year's finals.

Game 3 is Sunday night.

The Celtics played the second half without Isaiah Thomas due to a strained right hip. But the game was already out of reach by that time.

With both teams going to their benches early in the fourth quarter, the only suspense was whether the Celtics could avoid the worst playoff loss in franchise history. The Orlando Magic beat them by 47 points in the first round of the 1995 postseason.

Still, it was the Celtics' worst home playoff loss ever.

Thomas finished with just a pair of free throws, missing all six shots from the field; he also had six assists. Rookie Jaylen Brown scored 19 for Boston, Avery Bradley had 13 and Al Horford had 11 points and five rebounds.

The game tipped off about 15 minutes after the three finalists for NBA MVP were announced, and James wasn't among them. It's the first time since 2008 that he won't finish in the top three.

But James, who's won the award four times, still has a chance for a fourth NBA title — and second in a row. Maybe Golden State can figure out a way to slow him down, or San Antonio if it can come back in the West. The Celtics haven't found a way, and they're running out of time.

James had 22 points in the first half, when he also collected six assists and had three blocked shots, including a chase-down rejection of Bradley that was reminiscent of the one against Andre Iguodala in Game 7 of the NBA Finals.

NHL playoffs greatest show in sports at the moment

By Paul Newberry
Associated Press

■ COMMENTARY

If you're not a hockey fan — and we know there are a LOT of you out there — it might be a good time to reconsider.

The NHL playoffs are the greatest show in sports at the moment.

You certainly won't miss anything by flipping away from the NBA.

While the hoops postseason is blighted by one rout after another, the NHL is putting on a stellar show that should be drawing much higher ratings.

Even Charles Barkley, the NBA analyst for Turner Sports and never one to temper his viewpoint, has jumped on the bandwagon.

"Thank God for the NHL playoffs," Barkley said last week on TNT's postgame show. "That's what I'm watching in the back instead of these blowouts."

The NHL is providing everything the postseason is supposed to be about. Gripping drama almost every night. Passionate players willing to skate through a wall if that's what it takes. A sense that just about any team can win the Stanley Cup if the puck bounces the right way.

Through 75 playoff games, a staggering 47 were decided by a single goal — including 26 that required sudden-death overtime. That's only five off the record for most one-goal games in a single postseason, set in 2007.

Beyond that, 16 games had a two-goal margin. Only 12 could be classified as blowouts, the margin three goals or more.

On Thursday night, Game 4 of the Western Conference final provided another nail-biter. The Anaheim Ducks built a 2-0 lead. The Nashville Predators tied it with two goals in the final 6 1-2 minutes of regulation. The Ducks got the winner at 10:25 of overtime when Corey Perry's shot ricocheted into the net off Nashville defenseman P.K. Subban.

That's what it's come down to in these playoffs.

A lucky bounce here and there.

Then there's the NBA, which still draws the bulk of the sports-watching eyeballs at this time of the year.

It's not nearly as deserving.

Certainly not this postseason.

Through the first 68 games, only 28 came down to single-digit margins, and just a handful were decided by the final shot. Overtime games? Only three — the same number of games that were decided by 30-plus points.

The drama factor was basically indiscernible.

The teams that met in the last two NBA Finals, Golden State and Cleveland, were breezing toward a three-peat rematch. The Warriors are 10-0 in the postseason, while the Cavaliers took a 9-0 mark into Game 2 of the Eastern Conference final at Boston on Friday night.

The NHL is not nearly so predictable.

The Washington Capitals, who had the best regular-season record, have already been eliminated. Ditto for the Chicago Blackhawks, who had the best record in the Western Conference but were swept in the opening round by Nashville, the lowest-ranked team in that side of the draw.

The Ottawa Senators, who are facing Pittsburgh in the East final, had only the sixth-most points in their conference.

There's something to be said for a bit of uncertainty.

No wonder Sir Charles is watching the NHL in his spare time.

"Anything can happen," Barkley said during a phone interview on the NHL Network. "Not just this year in the NBA, where we know the Warriors and Cavaliers are gonna play for the finals, but most of the time, you know until you get deep in the (NBA) playoffs, the games are not gonna be that competitive. But it's not that way in hockey."

Before we get too carried away, it's worth noting that the NBA does a much better job of promoting, protecting and showcasing its stars.

We all want to see LeBron vs. the Splash Brothers in the finals, while the NHL could end up with Ottawa vs. Nashville for the Stanley Cup — a ratings buzzkill if there ever was one.

Despite efforts to open up the game, the hockey playoffs still tend to degenerate into a defensive-minded slog that is virtually unwatchable at times. Instead of the free-flowing style that was prevalent in the 1980s — most beautifully displayed in the 1987 Canada Cup final between Canada and the Soviet Union, where every game ended up 6-5 and two of them went to overtime — teams are much more defensive these days, knowing that's the best way to level the ice.

Ottawa is the most extreme example. Eight of the Senators' first 10 victories in the playoffs were decided by a single goal, with all but one of those going to overtime.

Sometimes, you can get too much of a good thing.

But we'll take that over the NBA playoffs, where the average postseason margin was nearly 13 points.

We'll let Barkley have the final word.

"The Stanley Cup playoffs," he said, "they are the best thing in sports."

Sidney Crosby, Penguins beat Senators 3-2 to tie series

Associated Press

OTTAWA, Ontario — Sidney Crosby had a goal and an assist and the resurgent Pittsburgh Penguins beat the Ottawa Senators 3-2 on Friday night to even the Eastern Conference finals at 2-2.

Crosby had only one point as the defending champion Penguins dropped two of the first three, leading to questions about his health following a jarring concussion in the second round.

Matt Murray made 22 saves in his first start of the playoffs after Marc-Andre Fleury was chased in the first period Wednesday night in the Penguins' 5-1 loss in Game 3. Brian Dumoulin and Olli Maatta added goals to help Pittsburgh take a 3-0 lead midway through the second period.

Clarke MacArthur and Tom Pyatt scored for Ottawa.

Game 5 is Sunday in Pittsburgh.

Starting for the first time in more than six weeks, Murray made a strong stop on Mike Hoffman less than two minutes into the game and denied Viktor Stalberg on a pair of follow-up opportunities.

Fleury started the first 15 games for Pittsburgh with Murray mostly sidelined by injury.

Pittsburgh opened the scoring with 46 seconds left in the first period when Maatta went down the left side and fired a short-side shot past on Anderson. Crosby set up the play.

Hall of Fame trainer Lukas backs Pletcher in Preakness

By David Ginsburg
Associated Press

BALTIMORE — There once was a time when Hall of Fame trainer D. Wayne Lukas would feel absolutely awful about not having a horse in the Preakness.

Standing outside the stakes barn at Pimlico Race Course on Thursday, his signature cowboy hat planted squarely on his head, the six-time Preakness winner seemed genuinely comfortable with the situation.

"I'd be awful selfish if I was kicking the dirt and saying, 'Damn, I don't have one,' as good as this place has been to me," Lukas said.

Though he doesn't have a horse in the race, he does have a friend in it: Former assistant Todd Pletcher, who will be saddle Kentucky Derby winner and Triple Crown hopeful Always Dreaming on Saturday evening.

"I can relish that and enjoy that, too," Lukas said.

That's what happened at Churchill Downs, when Lukas had no entrant but was overcome with joy while watching Always Dreaming approach the finish line.

"I went crazy when they were at the 5/8 pole," Lukas said. "I was banging and tipping over chairs. My wife said, 'I've never seen you that excited,' and I said, 'That's our guy.'"

Pletcher worked under Lukas for well over half a decade before going out on his own in the winter of 1995.

"We had the strongest stable in the world, probably, and to leave a secure assistant job was a tough decision to make — and an intimidating one," Pletcher recalled. "I didn't really know what to expect. I was just hoping to accumulate enough horses to get going and establish a reputation."

Turns out, Lukas and Pletcher are as successful individually as they were as a team.

Lukas, 81, has won 14 Triple Crown races and owns 20 victories in the Breeder's Cup. Pletcher has captured the Eclipse Award seven times as Trainer of the Year, won the Kentucky Derby twice and made millions of dollars.

"He's created his own legacy and made some changes that he thought were right," Lukas observed. "I see a lot of our organization in the way he runs his barn. It's pretty obvious he had that discipline."

Lukas knows his hard-working, success-driven protégé was bound to do well regardless of his schooling.

"I don't want to take a lot of credit for his career, frankly," Lukas insisted. "I think he's his own person and he was going to be good if he never met me. And he probably helped me as much as I helped him."

Pletcher isn't so sure.

"If you work for someone for seven years, you certainly learn a lot of things from him," the 49-year-old said. "I always thought one of his many strengths was when he got a horse in form, his ability to maintain them in form for a long time."

Lukas this week is running 3-year-old Aquamarine in the $200,000 Chick Lang and 3-year-old filly My Sweet Stella in the Hilltop on grass. Both are owned by Zayat Stables, which two years ago won the Preakness with Triple Crown winner American Pharoah.

Though he's well past retirement age, Lukas remains active in the sport and fully expects to mount a horse in the 2018 Preakness.

"My 2-years-old are impressing me," he said. "I think we'll be back here next year, I really do."

Always Dreaming looks very much for real as Preakness awaits

By Beth Harris
Associated Press

BALTIMORE — Always Dreaming has run away from the competition in four consecutive victories this year, winning by a combined 23 1/2 lengths.

The dark bay colt was never challenged in winning the Kentucky Derby by 2 3/4 lengths on a sloppy track at Churchill Downs.

Whether he does it again in the 1 3/16-mile Preakness at Pimlico on Saturday depends on a good trip, the tactics by his nine rivals and a little luck. Always Dreaming is the early 4-5 favorite under jockey John Velazquez.

"Always Dreaming hasn't had many obstacles to face," said Corey Lanerie, who will ride Derby runner-up Lookin At Lee. "Maybe he's that good that he won't encounter trouble. But you never know."

After three consecutive days of 90-plus-degree heat, the forecast calls for a high of 68 and cloudy skies today when the race goes off about 5:48 p.m. CST.

Always Dreaming is a victory away from setting up a bid for the Triple Crown. Two years ago, American Pharoah became the first horse to sweep the Derby, Preakness and Belmont in 37 years.

"I'm someone who has been in a lot of races and lost a lot of races, so I know you don't want to be overconfident," trainer Todd Pletcher said, "but I do feel very, very good about the way he's coming into it."

In the Preakness, Always Dreaming will break from the No. 4 post, a spot that has produced 13 winners but none since Curlin in 2007. One spot over on his outside will be Classic Empire, last year's 2-year-old champion who finished fourth in the Derby after getting knocked around coming out of the starting gate.

"If anything, I have a greater respect for Always Dreaming," said Mark Casse, who trains Classic Empire. "I think he's going to be tougher to beat than I thought he would be going into the Derby."

As the Derby champ, Always Dreaming will have a bulls-eye on his back in a smaller field going a shorter distance than two weeks ago.

"I would imagine that they are going to target us and the target is right next to you," Pletcher said. "We're just focused on hopefully breaking cleanly and smoothly and letting him run to the first turn a little bit."

Neither Velazquez nor Pletcher has won the Preakness. Velazquez is 0 for 7, with his best finish being second in 2011 aboard Kentucky Derby winner Animal Kingdom. Pletcher is 0 for 8, with his highest finish coming in 2000 when Impeachment was third.

Conquest Mo Money, a 15-1 shot, has consistently run at or near the lead in his five career races. Always Dreaming and Classic Empire have also shown speed.

Casse's ideal scenario involves Always Dreaming and Conquest Mo Money dueling in the early stages. If the pace is too fast, it gives closers a chance to make a winning run at the end.

"We sit behind and watch," he said.

Even with Always Dreaming's dominance this year, eight of the past 12 Derby winners did not win the Preakness.

There's a posse of contenders that would love to extend that history.

One of them is Conquest Mo Money, who supplemented to the Preakness for $150,000. He could use his speed to pressure Always Dreaming early or go for the lead outright. Another is Cloud Computing, who figures to be sitting just off the leaders.

Lookin At Lee is a closer who could come running late under Lanerie.

"I love the way my horse finishes," he said. "He's taken on everything you could throw at him."

Other closers looking to pounce are Gunnevera (10th in the Derby), Hence (11th in the Derby) and new shooters Multiplier, Senior Investment and Term of Art.

Spieth out at Nelson; Kokrak has career-best 62, leads by 5

By Stephen Hawkins
Associated Press

IRVING — While big-hitting Jason Kokrak has an AT&T Byron Nelson record five-stroke lead through 36 holes, he knows that is only halfway with plenty of other players who could make a weekend charge.

That includes top-ranked Dustin Johnson. But not local favorite Jordan Spieth after he missed the cut Friday for the first time at the tournament where he made his debut as a 16-year-old high school junior.

"Yeah, a bit shocking that's how it happened," said Spieth, who missed the cut by a stroke after a 5-under 75 that included a 9 at the par-5 16th hole after he hit two tee shots out of bounds.

Kokrak, ranked 128th in the world, shot a bogey-free 8-under 62 for his career-best scoring round and matched the Nelson's 36-hole record at 12-under 128. No one has ever had a bigger lead there after two rounds than his five strokes over Billy Horschel (65), who finished with three consecutive birdies.

"It's 36 holes. You've got the No. 1 player in the world chasing you, you've got x-number of other players that are outstanding players," Kokrak said, when asked about having wiggle room. "Same game plan, just give myself birdie opportunities."

Maybe as surprising as Kokrak's big lead halfway through the last Nelson to be played at TPC Four Seasons is the 23-year-old Spieth, the 2015 Masters and U.S. Open champion, done playing this week.

Spieth also missed the cut last week in The Players Championship. He last missed consecutive cuts in 2015.

With a 3-over total after the horrendous 16th hole, and needing at least one birdie, Spieth's 17-foot birdie try at No. 17 curled by the cup, and he missed a 14-footer on 18.

"It didn't need to happen. Just playing fine and I tried to just, you know, press it to try to reach the green in two, and then I tried to do it again," Spieth said, referring to the par-5 16th.

Kokrak finished with a nice par save after driving way right at the 18th. The ball landed in the rough closer to the first fairway with a temporary concession stand between him and the hole. He didn't take potential relief because that line would have put him directly behind a tree, but he hit the ball back in the fairway short of the green before chipping to 6 feet.

"I made a lot of birdies out there but it was nice," Kokrak said. "Just keeping a clean card is always a goal."

The only other time Kokrak had the 36-hole lead in 146 career PGA Tour starts was at the 2016 Northern Trust Open, where he ended up with a career-best tie for second.

HOPING TO SPARK A CHANGE

Baylor head football coach Matt Rhule answers questions from the media March 16 in Waco.

Matt Rhule wants to send very clear message in declaration of Baylor's future

By Ben Baby
The Dallas Morning News

FORT WORTH — Matt Rhule hopped out of a black SUV on Commerce Street a few minutes before noon Thursday, the midpoint of an exhaustive two-day travel itinerary.

Between breakfast in Tyler and dinner in Midland, the first-year Baylor coach was having lunch at the City Club of Fort Worth in a room filled with donors. Rhule, along with athletic director Mack Rhoades, were making stop No. 4 on a seven-city tour that spanned 48 hours.

For Rhule, this tour isn't just about meeting alumni or raising money. It's a declaration of Baylor's future.

"I want to make sure I'm very clear," Rhule said. "That doesn't mean we don't ever respect, talk about or learn from the past. But our future is rising up out of our past."

During the two-day tour, Rhule and Baylor were once again confronted by the school's sexual assault scandal.

On Wednesday, another former Baylor student filed a Title IX lawsuit against the university. A woman alleged as many eight football players drugged and raped her in 2012. The university told the Waco Tribune-Herald it has been in contact with the victim's lawyer to resolve the situation and called any assault "reprehensible and inexcusable."

In an interview following his off-the-record speech to the donors, Rhule said he's been on the forefront of combating sexual assault and gender violence during his four-year tenure as Temple's coach.

During the tour, Rhule said he tells crowds about building a culture of excellence where several things matter. When he rattles off the list that includes things like grades and community service, he references football last.

The coach said that he also makes it a point to reference Baylor's recent history and the things that went wrong, something he said he did in Fort Worth on Thursday.

He understands he can't just worry about winning football games and neglecting everything else.

After all, that's one of the primary reasons Baylor got rid of former coach Art Briles — who led the Bears to national prominence — and hired Rhule last December. But on the flip side, Rhule said on-field success has to mirror a rising GPA and the roughly 700 hours of community service between January and March.

During his speech on Thursday, Rhule's voice boomed through the ballroom's doors at times. He elicited laughs and received a lengthy ovation at the end, before a few fans lined up to say hello and take photos.

In a few hours, he was off to Midland to talk to more Baylor donors over dinner before ending the night in Amarillo, covering more than 671 miles for the day.

Four years from now, Rhule hopes he's talking about Baylor as the example of how to fix and move past the issues that have plagued the university over the last year.

Months before his first game as Baylor's football coach, Rhule's current message of change and progress is one that seems to be resonating with alumni and the future of the football program.

A stunning re-marriage: Phil Mickelson and Colonial

By Mac Engel
Fort Worth Star-Telegram

■ COMMENTARY

FORT WORTH — Fort Worth-area residents should have planned on watching Ben Hogan play Hogan's Alley again before Phil Mickelson ever returned. Second only to Tiger Woods, and possibly Tim Love, Phil is the last person we thought would come back to Fort Worth for its annual PGA party.

Despite winning the tournament twice, Phil was done with Colonial. Colonial wanted to be done with Phil.

The last time Phil was here was 2010. He left with his feelings clearly hurt. He missed the cut. Phil doesn't miss cuts. Or he didn't back then.

He didn't care about the lengths to which the club had gone to make him feel special, most likely because most courses did the same thing. At that point he was used to red carpets in the showers and toilets at all of the clubs where he played, other than the ones at the British Open, the PGA and Augusta National.

"With the (course) redesign, I'm afraid I won't be playing it (Colonial) anymore," Phil said in 2011. "It doesn't give me a power advantage. I know all the shotmakers will be there every year. But I don't see any of the long hitters playing there anymore. There's no decision-making now. It's all irons, irons, irons."

It was a tee-shot blast at course designer Keith Foster, and a tone-deaf comment about his own game. Phil sounded like a coward.

But this week the PGA told Colonial that Mickelson will play again in the Dean & DeLuca Invitational.

Tourney executives had no idea this was coming, and are not searching for any explanation. Maybe this is just about preparing for the 2017 U.S. Open, scheduled for June 11 in Erin Hills near Milwaukee.

The Phil who will return next week is not, however, the Phil who left in 2010. He's no longer one of the most dominant players in the world.

His arrival is a major win for the tournament. With the scheduled appearances of Jordan Spieth and Master's champ Sergio Garcia, the tournament will have the names that events of this stature covet.

Nonetheless, Lefty should never have left.

In 2008, he won his second Colonial with one of the most memorable shots in the history of the event. The famous "Phil Flop" — an approach behind a wall of trees that hit the green and led to a tourney-winning birdie on 18 that should be commemorated on the course with a plaque.

In 2009, he was scheduled to return to Colonial to defend his title. His wife, Amy, had just been diagnosed with breast cancer and he elected to remain with his spouse. The tournament then organized a "Pink Out" for Phil's wife where everyone was encouraged to wear pink.

At the time, he was also the spokesman for the tournament's then title sponsor, Crowne Plaza Hotels.

In 2010, Phil returned and played like garbage. He shot a 71-73 and went home to San Diego, one day before the Colonial's scheduled Pink Out III. With that missed cut, Phil missed a chance to be the top-ranked player in the world. Tiger Woods had been on top for the previous 259 weeks.

Immediately after the tournament, Phil was polite about his experience at Colonial.

About one year later, after his contract with Crowne Plaza Hotels had expired, his rhetoric magically changed. Crowne Plaza officials were not completely happy with Phil's commitment.

Those "fabulous" course changes were suddenly not so good, and Phil was done with Colonial.

Time passes, minds change and hearts soften. Phil is 46. He has 42 career PGA Tour victories but his last win came at the British Open in 2013.

Colonial has changed, survived and, in some ways, thrived without Phil.

Let's forget the breakup and just remember the good times, and hope that he makes a few more in his latest run on Hogan's Alley.

Top dollar: Browns sign Myles Garrett, 1st overall pick

By Tom Withers
Associated Press

CLEVELAND — Myles Garrett's first sack as a pro is filled with money.

The No. 1 overall pick in last month's NFL draft, Garrett signed his four-year rookie contract with the Cleveland Browns, who gave the speedy defensive end an estimated $30.4 million package that includes a $20.3 million guaranteed signing bonus.

Garrett

One week after displaying his dazzling skills at the team's rookie minicamp, Garrett got the business side of things out of the way by signing his deal Friday. The Browns posted a video on Twitter of the former Texas A&M All-American filling out the contract's paperwork while Seal's "Kiss From A Rose" played in the background.

The Browns are counting on Garrett, whose outside interests include writing poetry and paleontology, to energize their turnaround. Cleveland went 1-15 last season, has had just two winnings seasons since its 1999 expansion reboot and hasn't been to the playoffs in 15 years.

Blessed with a running back's burst, Garrett recorded 32½ sacks in three seasons for the Aggies. He was limited by a sprained ankle last season but still played at a dominant level, and the Browns didn't pass up the chance to take him in a draft loaded with defensive talent.

Garrett was impressive during the club's rookie minicamp, showing off his ability to blow past blockers and pressure quarterbacks.

"Did you see that guy come off the edge that one time?" coach Hue Jackson said following a practice. "Holy smokes. Oh my gosh. The guy has flashed and shown exactly why he was drafted where he was drafted. What we have to do is continue to let him be who he is and play the way we think he can. It is exciting to see. I haven't been around a lot of guys like him. It is fun."

Garrett has also displayed an easygoing personality and eagerness to succeed. He knows there are high expectations as the first overall pick, but he isn't hiding from them.

"I'm not worried about what people expect from me or what they think I am going to do," Garrett said. "My expectations are definitely higher than what most others have for me. I hold myself to that every single time I step on the field, whether I'm going against whoever is out there for rookie camp or if I am going against the very best or if I am just trying to learn the playbook or just being a great man in general."

Garrett caused a stir shortly after being drafted when he said he was targeting Pittsburgh quarterback Ben Roethlisberger for his first sack. The Browns open next season against the Steelers, their longtime rival who has overpowered Cleveland in recent years.

And while Garrett's comments could fuel the Steelers, he didn't backtrack on his remarks.

"I think that was kind of blown up, but I stand by it," Garrett said. "We are looking to get after it. Why should I be afraid of saying those kinds of things? That is what any team would say or any player would say. You are trying to make a name for yourself. You are trying to go out there and win games just like they are. They are not going to shy away from the challenge and neither are we."

Not long after Garrett's deal was finalized, the Browns signed rookie defensive tackle Caleb Brantley, a sixth-round pick.

Brantley arrived in Cleveland with a battery complaint hanging over him, but earlier this week, prosecutors in Florida dismissed his case, saying there was "no reliable evidence upon which an arrest or prosecution would be warranted or legally justified."

NASCAR hopes softer tires return the magic to All-Star race

By Jenna Fryer
Associated Press

CONCORD, N.C. — It's the 25th anniversary of "One Hot Night," the All-Star race that made the nighttime spectacular must-see TV.

NASCAR is hoping Saturday's night running can replicate some of the magic from that 1992 showcase.

That year was the first time the exhibition dash-for-cash was held under the lights at Charlotte. There was a full moon, a raucous crowd of more than 100,000 and a wild ending in which the winner was unconscious when he crossed the finish line. The driver, the late Davey Allison, went to the hospital and his damaged car did not go to victory lane.

Nothing will likely top that race, celebrated recently by Charlotte officials at the track's prestigious speedway club. Allison was represented by Larry McReynolds, his crew chief at the time.

NASCAR is in need of another memorable night. Why not Saturday? The All-Star race this year has the makings of one they will talk about it for 25 years — if the drivers treat it that way.

NASCAR has some good on-track competition right now, and the $1 million made-for-TV event is a chance to showcase the storylines. There's a changing of the guard and a youth movement afoot, and some of the older stars need to prove their relevancy. There's no better stage to just throw it all to the wind than this race that doesn't matter.

As always, there's a convoluted format that will lead to one 10-lap shootout for $1 million. This year, only 10 drivers will be allowed to compete in the final sprint.

The big shake-up is a softer tire and Goodyear officials seemed to be pretty excited after a Friday practice session. Stu Grant, Goodyear's general manager of world-wide racing, thought the "bonus tire" was considerably faster but wasn't sure what importance track position will have on Saturday night.

Grant said the tires are built to last at least one 20-lap run, so it was up to teams to decide when they wanted to use that softer batch. If a driver elects to use the tires in the final shootout, he must start at the rear of the field.

When to use the tires becomes the pivotal question of the race because some will race with them just to ensure a spot in the final 10. Others will save the tires for the shootout, as they try to weave through traffic to regain track position and chase the money.

It's literally checkers or wreckers, and a real chance for NASCAR to recapture the hype surrounding "One Hot Night."

Dale Earnhardt Jr. has indicated the drivers have long asked for a softer tire — it has more grip but an unpredictable life span — so the gamble of briefly using a different compound Saturday night appeals to many. It could long-term lead to a second tire from Goodyear, but short-term has to deliver a real show Saturday night.

"I think the hardcore fans like that piece of strategy," Earnhardt said.

Rainy practices make pole favorites hard to find at Indy

By Michael Marot
Associated Press

INDIANAPOLIS — Sebastien Bourdais took a deep breath Friday.

After an early race-day exit last weekend and an engine change Thursday night, he moved into position to contend for the Indianapolis 500 pole.

The Dale Coyne Racing driver jumped to the top of the speed chart with some extra horsepower, posting the fastest lap of the week at 233.116 mph. Now the Frenchman and everyone else in Gasoline Alley must wait to see if the constantly changing leader board creates a wide-open pole shootout this weekend.

The practice sessions haven't provided much help sorting out what to expect in qualifying.

Many teams started the week in race trim, rather than using the quicker, lighter qualifying setups. The result: Five different drivers from five different teams found themselves in the No. 1 spot on the leaderboard.

And until drivers got the extra boost Friday, the fastest lap of the week came from Jay Howard — a 36-year-old driver, whose only career Indy start came in 2011. He went 226.774 on Thursday.

The weather hasn't cooperated, either.

After dealing with high winds Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, rain washed out more than 2 1/2 hours of what was expected to be a busy final full day of practice before the first day of qualifying.

More rain is expected Friday night, which could leave drivers with little rubber on the track when qualifying begins Saturday. More rain is expected both days of qualifying, too.

The one constant, of course, is everybody expects Team Penske again to be in contention again.

IndyCar Grand Prix winner Will Power and three-time 500 winner Helio Castroneves have alternated the first five pole wins this season and finished one-two in practice Tuesday.

"You put 33 drivers running to the limit, we're talking about knife's edge," Castroneves said. "We're going through four corners for four laps and absolutely doing everything you can to hang onto the last lap, or the last two laps."

Old friend's sudden withdrawal causes a crisis of confidence

DEAR ABBY

Write Dear Abby at www.DearAbby.com or P.O. Box 69440, Los Angeles, CA 90069. Her column is distributed by Universal Press Syndicate.

DEAR ABBY: My best friend, "Ann," abruptly ended our friendship seven years ago and I still can't get over it. We were friends from the time we were in first grade until we were 48. We were inseparable as children; she was the maid of honor in my wedding; and though we've lived 3,000 miles apart for most of our adult lives, we maintained a close friendship through phone calls and yearly visits.

Then Ann got mad about something I said and stopped returning calls. Finally, when I asked her what was wrong, she emailed me that our friendship "wasn't working" for her and she "wished me well." Around the time she stopped talking to me, she also cut ties with two other friends, and a couple of years later, stopped talking to her father. So this is a pattern with her.

I have solid relationships with my husband, grown kids, co-workers and other friends. Still, I can't shake this sense of loss. I miss Ann and think of her every day. I need closure, but don't know how to get it. She won't return phone calls or emails.

Losing her makes me feel like every other relationship is at risk. I now live in fear of alienating or angering my other friends. How can I overcome these emotions and get on with my life? — SUFFERING IN SAN FRANCISCO

DEAR SUFFERING: You can get past this by scheduling some sessions with a therapist, or talking to your clergyperson. Surely by now you realize that Ann may have some issues. Please don't make them yours. Your other friends are not clones of this woman and are not likely to react in the extreme way she does. While counseling may not lessen your sense of loss, I hope it will give you a measure of peace of mind.

DEAR ABBY: My daughter's "Great Aunt Sally" sent her a high school graduation card and check a year too early. Sally is her grandmother's sister on her dad's side. Her dad and I are no longer together, but I'm still friendly with his mother and aunt. Her dad is not the right person to handle this, so it's up to us.

We don't want to offend or embarrass Aunt Sally by returning the check. Should I have my daughter return it with a thank-you note explaining the error? Or should I have her keep it and send a thank-you note letting her aunt know that her thoughtfulness is appreciated? Since this lady has a great sense of humor, I'm leaning toward the latter, but I don't want to keep something that isn't yet earned. Help! — MOM OF AN ALMOST-GRAD

DEAR MOM: A gracious thank-you note is, of course, in order. Your daughter should keep the card and the check, and mention in her note that she graduates next year, because if Aunt Sally hears it from another relative, she may wonder why your daughter didn't tell her herself. If Aunt Sally has the sense of humor you say she does, she will take the news in stride.
