Lead exposure estimates not alarming, experts say

By ALLEN E. HOWLAND
Assistant City Editor

High estimates of pre-school exposure to lead are cause for concern but not alarm, experts say.

The lead poisoning findings reported by the Environmental Defense Fund (EDF) Monday in Washington, D.C., are strictly statistical estimates based on the age of housing units and family income, not measurements of children, the group warned.

In addition, data was only available to the EDF on black and white youngsters, not Hispanics, so the study makes no estimate of the percentage of local Hispanic children who could have elevated lead exposure levels.

The figures also are being questioned by public health officials. Dr. Mark Rapoport, a deputy New York City health commissioner told the New York Times that the city "doesn't minimize the problem," but the organization's numbers are "substantially out of line," he said.

WASHINGTON — More than 11,100 pre-school children in the Midland, Odessa and San Angelo area may have lead in their bloodstream exceeding safe levels set by the Environmental Protection Agency, according to a study released Monday.

The report, prepared by the Environmental Defense Fund, an environmental think-tank based in New York, echoed the results of recent scientific studies that say moderately elevated lead levels in pre-school children can result in reading disabilities, impaired concentration and higher school dropout rates.

"America's future is being stolen before it arrives because of our decades-long use of lead," said Ellen Silbergeld, an author of the newest report. "Lead's toxic effects have caused millions of children to suffer permanent neurological damage."

In the United States, an estimated 3 million to 4 million children between the ages 6 months and 5 years may have dangerously elevated levels of lead in their bloodstream, according to a recent report by the U.S. Public Health Service.

Children can be exposed to lead through a variety of products including gasoline, plumbing and soldered cans.

But paint is "without a doubt the most important source of lead for American children," according to Dr. Herbert Needleman of the University of Pittsburgh, author of a recent study on the long-term effects of low-level lead poisoning.

Although paint containing lead was banned for most uses in 1977, the 3 million tons of lead paint remaining on the walls of American homes and businesses still poses a threat, said the Environmental Defense Fund study entitled "Legacy of Lead: America's Continuing Epidemic of Childhood Lead Poisoning."

Of the nearly 20,000 pre-school children in the Midland-San Angelo area, the report said that more than 7,000, or 34.5 percent, are suspected of having blood lead levels exceeding 10 micrograms of lead per deciliter of blood (mcg/dl). Another 4,100 youngsters — 27.5 percent of the 15,000 pre-school age children — in Odessa are estimated to be in excess of the 10 mcg/dl level.

The EPA says blood-lead levels of 10 to 15 mcg/dl can cause neurological damage in children.

The Environmental Defense Fund report said 9.3 percent of pre-school children in the Midland-San Angelo sample — about 1,900 youngsters — are suspected of having blood-lead levels exceeding 15 mcg/dl. The Odessa estimate is 7.2 percent — or 1,000 children — above the 15 mcg/dl threshold.

The report used data grouped as it was provided by the Census Bureau and the U.S. Public Health Service to calculate estimates on the incidence of childhood lead poisoning. Census tracts outside some of the nation's 318 standard metropolitan statistical areas were included in the data, hence the Midland-San Angelo grouping of results.

The study's authors emphasized that their figures are estimates and "by no means definitive."

The study said that poor children are especially prone to lead poisoning because they usually reside in older housing units, which often contain larger amounts of leaded paint.

The report also recommended the Celebration honors state of Israel

Even before shofar and shalom — the ram's horn call to order and Hebrew greeting of peace — rang out, anticipation filled the room.

Couples guided their children through exhibits on Soviet Jews' attempts to emigrate and the exciting work of Hadassah's hospitals in Israel. Christians and Jews purchased flash cards for learning Hebrew, olive-wood carvings and coffee mugs decorated with Israeli wildflowers. West Texans turned overstuffed pitas in their hands, trying to discern the proper method of eating felafel — a Middle Eastern sandwich made with ground chickpeas, chopped vegetables and a garlicky sauce. And all struggled to find a seat with a good view of the platform.

"A Night to Honor Israel," staged for the third time Monday at the Holiday Inn Convention Center in Midland, drew about 1,000 for an evening filled with song and dance, prayer and laughter.

Producers Jack and Judy Stone — who initiated the first celebration in 1987 after a visit to the Holy Land — served as masters of ceremonies. Mrs. Stone directed the music.

The program was acted out in front of a painted backdrop depicting tree-clad hills climbing toward Jerusalem's wall, the Old City's sun-baked structures and the modern skyline in the background. A gold-painted dome stood in silent witness of the religious change the area has experienced.

Members of Midland Boy Scout Troop 80 presented the flags of the United States and Israel and the choir and audience joined in the singing of both countries' national anthems, "The Star-Spangled Banner" and "Hatikvah (The Hope)."

Bringing greetings from Jerusalem, "the united, indivisible, eternal capital" of Israel was Mordekhai Artzieli, Consul General of Israel to the Southwest, based in Houston.

Randall Bane of Kansas City performs an interpretive dance during Monday's "A Night to Honor Israel."

Noting that Israel soon will celebrate 42 years "at home again," Artzieli said "we are no more the object of history, no more the victim of oppressors and dictators, no more wanderers in the world. We have our state."

The goals of developing, prospering and protecting that state continue, he said.

"In spite of all the difficulties, we've accomplished incredible achievements in agriculture, in industry, in gathering in exiles.

"We all should be proud," he said, but "the challenge ahead is tremendous. The fall of the Iron Curtain, the opening of the gates to Ethiopian Jews" stand as "revolutionary developments of the highest magnitude."

Israel "shall not cease in her relentless effort to establish peace," he said, and holds out hope that a two-phase negotiating process will leave the Middle East with only such battlegrounds as illiteracy, poverty and disease.

"We say let not only our deserts bloom, but let all deserts in the Middle East turn into great pastures."

Israel depends on America, Artzieli said, which "shares not only the Christian-Judaic heritage but a love for freedom and democracy, the dignity of mankind," to guide the Arab nations away from military options and open the door to diplomatic and political options to their differences.

Rejoicing in song and dance followed, with Randall Bane of Kansas City, Mo., joining local talent — a volunteer choir and orchestra and the Ariel Dancers — on the platform. Permian Basin participants represented not only a variety of Democracy hasn't reached Mideast, diplomat says

By ANNTOINETTE MOORE

The winds of change sweeping through Eastern Europe have yet to reach the streets of Damascus, Beirut or Baghdad, according to Mordekhai Artzieli, Israel's consul general to the Southwest.

"When you look at the Middle East, you see dictatorships and autocratic regimes, you don't see the process of democratization," said the Houston-based consul general, in Midland for the third "A Night to Honor Israel."

The event, held Monday at the Holiday Inn Convention Center, was organized by Jack and Judy Stone, who sponsored the first celebration in 1987 after visiting Israel.

"Israel is the only democracy in the Middle East," Arzieli said during an interview Monday afternoon. "It wants to see changes in the Arab world — democratic processes there. We believe that with democracies we have a better chance for peace."

As the Eastern bloc nations throw out their hard-line Communist rulers, the "immediate result is improved relations with Israel."

Romania was the only Eastern European nation to maintain ties with Israel after the Six-Day War in 1967.

But now Hungary, Czechoslovakia and Poland all have resumed diplomatic relations with Israel.

Water well test results available

By DAVID MORRIS

A representative of the international environmental organization Greenpeace is in Midland today in response to fears of some county residents that their groundwater is contaminated.

Meanwhile, test results are in from eight of 10 wells south of Interstate 20 sampled in early February by the Texas Water Commission, TWC District Manager William F. Lockey said today.

Lockey would not release complete test results pending notification of well owners, but he said the TWC is advising some residents to consult a physician or health authority before drinking their well water.

Results show trace amounts of volatile organics in some wells, as well as some elevated chloride and sulphate levels, Lockey said. He did not say which wells were affected or how many.

Smith, Craddick running unopposed in primary

Two of Midland's top legislators lead the field of unopposed local candidates in next Tuesday's primary elections, and both say they are determined to solve nagging problems in state and federal government.

ELECTION '90

"Residents of the 21st District care about our strength as a nation, our values as a community, and our responsibilities as individuals," U.S. Rep. Lamar Smith of San Antonio said of his priorities. "I look forward to serving the residents of the 21st District for a third term."

Smith, a Republican, is serving his second term in the U.S. House of Representatives, and is currently unopposed in his GOP primary bid for re-election.

The congressman's career was highlighted last year by his work on government ethics reform and by his service as vice chairman of the House Immigration Subcommittee.

He also introduced legislation last year to ease federal prison overcrowding and strengthen law enforcement on the the U.S./Mexico border.

Smith sits on the Judiciary and Science, Space and Technology committees, as well as the Select Committee on Children, Youth and Families.

Parmer hopes he can beat Gramm on abortion issue

By JAMES CULLEN
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — State Sen. Hugh Parmer is hoping that abortion will be the silver bullet that pierces U.S. Sen. Phil Gramm's armor in the general election in November.

But first, Parmer, a Fort Worth lawyer, must make it through the Democratic primary March 13, when he faces Harley Schlanger, a Houston consultant associated with Lyndon LaRouche.

Parmer is little-known outside Tarrant County, but he hopes the politically hot issue of abortion will fire up his longshot campaign to unseat Gramm, who is seeking re-election.

Parmer's campaign has started running 60-second radio ads pointing out that Gramm supports legislation that would forbid abortions for victims of rape or incest.

"Gramm doesn't think women should be in control of their own destiny," says the woman's voice in the ad. "When tragedy strikes a woman or a child, we shake our heads and call them victims. Senator Phil Gramm points a finger and calls them parents."

Parmer's campaign notes that Gramm has co-sponsored five bills in the past six years calling for a constitutional amendment that would ban abortions except when the mother's life was in danger.

Parmer reported $477,445 in cash on hand Dec. 31, while Gramm has amassed $6.1 million.

Larry Neal, a spokesman for Gramm, said he suspects Parmer is making his pro-abortion pitch in an attempt to infuse his campaign with badly needed cash.

"Phil Gramm is pro-life, unquestionably," Neal said. He questioned Parmer's commitment to abortion rights, but Phyllis Dunham, executive director of the Texas Abortion Rights Action League, said Parmer has been a leader in the pro-choice movement since he came to the Texas Senate in 1983.

While there have been few record votes on abortion, Ms. Dunham said, Parmer has been a key player in committee.

"I think there's no question there's a clear-cut difference between the two candidates on an issue of great importance to Texans," she said. "It can greatly affect Gramm's campaign."

Schlanger is Houston bureau chief for the Executive Intelligence Review, a magazine founded by LaRouche, who is serving time in a fed-

WEATHER SUMMARY

Temperatures to be lower

From Staff and Wire Reports

Tonight's forecast calls for partly cloudy skies and cooler temperatures with a low in the mid-30s with 15 to 25 mph southwest winds, according to the National Weather Service in Midland.

Wednesday will be partly cloudy with a high in the upper 60s and 10 to 15 mph southwest winds, NWS said.

Monday's record high of 85 was set in 1956. The record low for today of 15 was set in 1969.

STATE

A cold front and an upper level storm triggered showers and thunderstorms across the Panhandle early today.

Elsewhere, scattered showers and rain was reported across northeast and north central portions of North Texas and drizzle was reported along the coast and in South Central Texas.

Skies were cloudy over most of the state except behind the front where skies were partly cloudy.

Forecasts called for scattered thunderstorms continuing tonight across North Texas, West Texas and South Central Texas. Some of the storms, primarily in North Texas, may reach severe levels tonight.

NATION

A storm that dumped heavy snow in the upper Rockies threatened to blanket the northern Plains today, and rain was to follow the storm in the central Plains.

Along a stationary front Monday, rain was scattered from northern Texas to Nebraska and from the mid-Mississippi Valley to the upper Ohio Valley.

Moline, Ill., received a third of an inch of rain, and snow extended from northern Illinois to the lower Great Lakes region.

The storm crossing the Rockies left in its wake strong winds in the mountains and desert areas of Southern California. Gusts of 55 mph were reported Monday at the Mojave Airport.

Up to 8 inches of snow fell in Snowbird and Alta by midafternoon Monday, as a winter storm left parts of Montana, Wyoming and Utah covered in white.

Snow was predicted today for much of the Rockies, from the northern highlands and mountains of New Mexico up through the ranges of Colorado and into central and south central Montana.

USPS to request postage increase

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. Postal Service is about to launch the complex process of adding a nickel to the price of mailing a letter.

With a record $1.6 billion loss looming in this fiscal year, Postmaster General Anthony M. Frank says the increase is necessary.

He was proposing increases today in all classes of mail, with the charge for first class likely to go from a quarter to 30 cents next year. That would be somewhat more than the rate of inflation, says Frank, who promises to hold down postal service spending in coming years.

The proposal must go to the independent Postal Rate Commission, which has 10 months to consider the request, hold hearings and issue a report.

If the commission agrees, rates can go up. If not, it's back to the drawing board unless the postal service board of governors votes unanimously to overrule the commission.

Any rate increase would not occur before early 1991.

toxic coordinator, said he came to Midland Monday to gather information on the alleged Midland County water problems.

He said he has seen test results sent to some of the affected residents, and is concerned that they are not specific enough to be of any use.

"They really are so ambiguous — they identify the chemicals but they really don't identify how much there is," Liebman said.

Lockey, meanwhile, said he has "not seen anything that illustrates groundwater contamination" in the test results, although he confirmed that levels of some chemicals "exceed state standards."

"If we find it, we tell them," he said, adding that his office is sending letters to affected residents this week informing them of test results. "If they want to continue drinking it, we can't do anything to stop them."

Lockey said test results would not be released "until the well owners have been advised. These well owners are entitled to receive these analyses before they read it in the newspaper."

Liebman, meanwhile, said the state has not done enough to investigate county residents' concerns about possible contamination.

He said he would take samples from area wells himself over the next two days and have them tested by an independent laboratory in Boston.

Liebman said he did not know how many wells he would sample, but that the TWC testing had not been comprehensive enough.

In light of concerns over possible high cancer rates in the area, Liebamn said he did not think county residents were overreacting on the water issue.

"I think when you're talking about cancer-causing chemicals in somebody's children's water I think that's a case to raise...a big hullaballoo," he said. "When you're showing trace elements...that's usually an indication of bigger things to come."

ISRAEL CONSUL

Christian churches, but members of Temple Beth El in Odessa.

From the strains of the familiar hava nagila (Let us rejoice!) to hiney mah tov (Behold how good and pleasant it is for brothers to dwell together; Psalm 133:1), the audience joined in, singing, clapping and tapping feet.

Bane's ministry of creative motion has led him to Israel annually since 1984 for the Christian celebration of the Feast of Tabernacles, where he serves as director of dance and drama.

"It is eight days of celebration, of teaching and fellowship," Bane said before performing his interpretation of "Home Again" by Ramona Dicks, who serves as musical director of the feast. His sometimes-humorous depiction of "Moses and the Burning Bush" brought the audience to its feet.

Other musical highlights were a performance by LaVonda Erwin and Steve Tudor of "Hateesh-kah" by Joel Chernoff, a song based on Isaiah 49:15-16, comparing the love for Israel to a mother nursing her child, and a piano solo by Teresa Crosby on the familiar "Exodus."

Bringing the keynote address was Polly Grimes of Redondo Beach, Calif., a travel and concert promoter who serves as director of EXODUS, a multi-service ministry serving the Jewish and Christian Zionist community.

"I loved Israel when I was a little child, before there was a nation of Israel," she said. "I was raised in a Bible-believing family. Though I'd never met a Jew, I loved them."

She challenged the audience to examine Scripture, to "look at the story of Abraham," of God's promise that "his family would be as numerous as the stars in the sky, as the grains of sand on a beach." She repeated refrains from the songs sung earlier in the evening — that God's chosen people were "the apple of His eye," "engraved on the palm of His hand."

After 1948, Ms. Grimes said, "I knew God indeed keeps his promises to a thousand generations, because he restored these people to their land."

She also discovered "my roots were entwined in Jewish soil. They gave me my Messiah, my Scripture, my faith," and that "many atrocities, often in the name of Christianity" had been the only payment.

"It's time we said 'Israel, you are not alone. God loves you. We love you,' " she said. Those who share that love "are Zionists, whether you know it or not.

Some mistakenly "equate Zionism with racism," she said, while disregarding that Israel "stands on an eternal land grant from God, not a negotiable option for this world."

She cited Israel's "historical and moral rights to the land" and challenged the audience to "get into the Scripture" to interpret current events in the light of eternal truths.

"The generation that saw the darkest hour of the Holocaust also saw the brightest hour" of Israel's establishment, she said. Today's generation has seen five wars, a shattered economy and hundreds of thousands of refugees daily — 500 to 1,000 form Russia alone. Israel "needs an infusion of hope and I believe that's why we're here."

Ms. Grimes, recalling Bane's role, said a rabbi in Jerusalem told her that "when righteous gentiles come to Israel to celebrate the Feast of Tabernacles, we will know the time of the Messiah is here."

What do Christians and Jews share? "Two thirds of our Scripture, the same moral code, the same ethics, the same concern for fellow man," she said. "I know marriages that don't have that much in common."

She closed with the biblical accounts of Ruth, who followed her mother-in-law Naomi in the belief that "thy God shall be my God," and in the story of Esther, who intervened on behalf of her people.

Esther's Uncle Mordecai challenged her with these words: "If you remain silent, help for the Jews will come from some other place. You and your family will perish. Who knows but that you may have been placed on earth for such a time as this? (Esther 4:14, paraphrased)."

An offering taken during the evening was divided, with the funds to complete the Permian Basin Grove of 1,000 trees donated to the Jewish National Fund and additional monies given to organizations which will help in the relocation of Soviet and Ethiopian Jews immigrating to Israel.

The Stones now serve as regional representatives for Bridges for Peace, a Jerusalem-based Christian organization "dedicated to the building of sincere relationships between Christians and Jews, while encouraging greater concern for the Land of Israel."

Church funds confiscated

made a mistake by cutting off relations with Israel.

Artzieli

"We are having contact with Bulgaria, Yugoslavia and even with the East Germans," Artzieli said.

"In the past, East Germany's attitude has been that it was not responsible for the Holocaust," the systematic murder of six million Jews during the 1930s and '40s by Adolf Hitler's Third Reich. East Germany always has claimed it also was one of Hitler's victims.

"Three weeks ago, we had talks with the East Germans, on their initiative," Artzieli continued. "Besides their willingness to improve relations, for the first time they were ready to acknowledge responsibility for the Holocaust."

The reunification of East and West Germany "seems inevitable," Artzieli said, choosing his words carefully. "But it is of vital importance to ensure that if and when Germany will be reunited, ... it will uphold democratic changes so that ... such catastrophe as befell our people and others won't reoccur."

The Eastern Europeans are eager to restore relations with Israel, "first of all because they know that if they talk about the democratic process, Israel stands as a bastion of democracy," he said.

"Second, the Soviet Union wants to play a role in the Middle East peace process" and relations with Israel are necessary.

"Third, they — not only the Soviet Union but also the Eastern bloc countries — expect to develop economic, commercial and tourism ties with Israel.

"They believe that they can do business with Israel and that Israel can help them ... get connections in the Western world."

And the Soviet Union under the reform-minded Mikhail Gorbachev has been the catalyst for these changes.

Artzieli noted that Israel and the Soviet Union have developed diplomatic relations during the past two years, with a Soviet mission in Israel and an Israeli mission in Moscow.

Israel sent a team of doctors to the Soviet republic of Armenia in December 1988 after a devastating quake killed thousands there. Later, Armenians who had lost arms and legs in the quake came to Israel to be fitted for artificial limbs, Artzieli said. Armenian physicians also traveled to Israel to learn new techniques of physical rehabilitation.

"All of this was publicized in the Soviet Union," he continued.

Most importantly, the Soviets "have opened the gates for Soviet Jews, and they are immigrating to Israel in large numbers."

Better relations between Israel and Eastern bloc nations frustrate Arab efforts to isolate Israel and "force it to dissolve from within," Artzieli said.

Historically, Arab nations and Palestinian Arabs have opposed all Jewish immigration to Israel, he claimed.

"They pretend that they're worried about Jews from the Soviet Union settling in the West Bank and Gaza. But, actually, the Arab countries have been fighting aliyah — immigration to Israel — even before the inception of the state of Israel.

"In the '20s and '30s, when Jews fled from anti-Semitism and pogroms in Europe, the Arabs fought immigration" of Jews to what was then British-controlled Palestine.

"They had managed just before the second World War and during it, to close the gates for Jewish immigration, in order to prevent the establishment of the state of Israel.

"When Israel became a reality, they continued to fight against immigration," pressuring the Soviet Union in the 1950s and '60s to keep Jews from leaving that country, maintained Artzieli.

"And this was when we didn't have the West Bank and Gaza in our hands."

Actually, Israel has a policy of "direct absorption" of new immigrants, he said. Israel provides financial assistance to the new arrivals but allows them "to choose wherever they wish to live without interference from the government."

Last year, 99 percent of the Soviet Jews who came to Israel settled around the larger cities, including Jerusalem, Tel Aviv and Haifa. Just one percent settled in the occupied territories, according to Artzieli.

The Arabs "are fighting a cardinal principle on which the state of Israel was established," that it is a place of refuge for Jews from discrimination and persecution.

"All waves of aliyah in the past helped to strengthen Israel and to enhance the economy of Israel," he said.

The Arabs are "nervous," Artzieli continued, because now the eyes of the world are on the changes in Eastern Europe, not the Middle East, and the traditional assumption that "time is working for the Arab side is collapsing."

The Arabs fear the "Eastern bloc countries might be preoccupied with efforts to solve their economic and social problems, rather than militarily backing the Arab countries." The Syrians, for example, "cannot count automatically on the Soviet Union coming to their rescue in case they open an offensive against Israel."

While the United States and the Soviet Union are actively engaged in disarming, "the Arab countries are arming themselves to the teeth. All of this is directed against Israel.

"Therefore, the conclusion is that as far as Arab warfare is concerned, nothing has changed."

Proposals presented last month to Israeli Foreign Minister Moshe Arens by U.S. Secretary of State James A. Baker call for Israel to agree to including deportees and Arabs who could be considered as representatives from East Jerusalem in preliminary talks, according to the Associated Press.

Both ideas are a compromise with Palestinian demands for outright Palestine Liberation Organization involvement in an attempt to break a deadlock and allow an Israeli elections plan for the occupied territories to go forward.

The elections are part of an interim settlement of limited self-rule for 1.7 million Palestinians living in the West Bank and Gaza Strip. Later talks would decide the final status of the territories, seized in 1967.

"The other side is trying to include issues that belong to the later stage of the peace initiative," Artzieli said. "The PLO is trying to introduce itself through the back door ... trying to introduce elements which undercut the entire peace initiative."

But Artzieli is hopeful that improved relations between the superpowers and the democratization of Eastern Europe eventually will affect the Middle East.

"All of these positive developments might gradually convince the Arab countries that there is no military option open for them, only the political option — to sit down and negotiate a peaceful coexistence with Israel."

He stressed that Israel must remain militarily strong yet continue its "relentless efforts" to establish peace. The United States' strong support is vital because "any perception by the Arab side that the support is not there would encourage them to continue their warfare against Israel."

"No Arab leader will sit down and negotiate with a weak Israel. That is the cruel reality we live with in the Middle East."

With peace, Israel and its Arab neighbors could divert the "tremendous military budgets into the economic development which all of us need so much," Artzieli said.

"Just imagine what we could do if we could use the military expenditures to turn the deserts into green pastures."

eral prison for a fraud conviction that Schlanger said was a politically motivated vendetta.

Schlanger, who also ran for the Senate in 1984, called for repeal of the Gramm-Rudman deficit reduction bill, the freshman senator's most famous accomplishment, which Schlanger called "one of the biggest frauds ever perpetrated on the American people."

Schlanger styled himself as a moderate whose political views are closer to mainstream Texas than those of Parmer, who Schlanger said comes from the liberal wing of the Democratic party. "He doesn't have much better name recognition than I do," Schlanger added.

Parmer also would reduce the $170 billion in costs for the defense of Japan and West Germany, as well as a move away from expensive strategic and nuclear weapons programs to reflect the reduction in tensions with the Soviet Union. He also supports establishment of a national health insurance system.

Schlanger would not support cuts in the defense budget, arguing that hardliners could topple Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev. He would continue spending on the Strategic Defense Initiative and keep U.S. troops in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, while standing ready to provide economic and technical aid when Soviet troops leave Eastern Europe.

He would target insurance companies and litigation in an attempt to control health care costs and encourage the building of more hospitals.

SMITH

Kingsland attorney, who's running his first campaign for elective office.

Roberts, who is unopposed in the Democratic primary, says making government "more responsive to our needs" will be among his top priorities if elected.

A pro-choice advocate, Roberts says the federal government should stay out of the abortion issue. "For if the government can take one private choice away from us, it can take away others," he said.

"Also, we need to give fair treatment to rural hospitals and health care providers by requiring Medicare and Medicaid programs to pay the same rates as are paid to city hospitals," Roberts said.

Midlander Tom Craddick, who represents the area in the Texas House of Representatives, says the state budget weighs heavy on his mind. Fiscal matters will dominate the next legislative session, which opens in Austin in January 1991, the lawmaker said.

Education funding, which the Legislature is moving to enact in special session this month, also will be high on the agenda of lawmakers, Craddick said.

Craddick — a 12-term lawmaker who serves on the Energy and House Ways and Mean Committees, and is chairman of the House Republican Caucus — said he believes his experience in energy affairs "will be beneficial as the Legislature works to develop policies" for Texas oil and gas industries.

State Sen. Bill Sims of San Angelo says he will enter his third term with an eye toward improving rural health care.

"We have made some headway, but there is so much more to be done to protect the interests of the 25th District," Sims said. "My appointments to several key committees place me in a good position to develop effective legislation of interest to our area."

Sims, a Democrat, serves on the Senate Economic Development Committee, the Natural Resources Committee and the Finance Committee. He also serves as chairman of the Subcommittee on Agriculture, and was appointed by Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby to chair the Administration Committee, which oversees the business of the Senate.

In addition to worker's compensation legislation developed in the last special session, Sims cited other issues that will be on the legislative agenda.

"We must continue to fine-tune legislation relating to education, rural health care, diversified economic development and the protection and preservation of natural resources," Sims said. "It cannot be patchwork legislation; we have to look farther down the road to ensure the state's future."

In what was viewed as a surprise development by some, Midland attorney Charles W. "Bro" Seltzer emerged from the filing deadline with no primary opponent to replace retiring County Judge Bill Ahders.

Seltzer, former chairman of the Midland County Republican Party, said the courthouse, judiciary, law enforcement and jail will continue to require attention by county government officials.

"The citizens of Midland County have been very fortunate to have had some very intelligent and resourceful members of the commissioners court to lead Midland County through the 'boom' and 'bust' of the 1980s," Seltzer said. "I hope to be able to supply new and more aggressive leadership to the commissioners court and to help guide the county through the decade of the 90s.

Seltzer said he will work to maintain the county tax rate of 16.50 cents per $100 valuation, and also plans to be a voice in lobbying the Legislature on issues affecting county governement.

"I believe that my experience as a former assistant district attorney and as a former Midland County employee will be of a great deal of assistance in dealing with these problem areas," Seltzer said.

Other current Republican officeholders who have logged no primary opposition are Precinct 2 County Commissioner Guy McCrary, Precinct 4 County Commissioner Win Brown, County Court at Law Judge James Fitz-Gerald, County Clerk Rosenelle Cherry, County Treasurer Dee Thompson, District Clerk Vivian Wood, and 318th District Judge Dean Rucker.

Assistant District Attorney Ralph Petty is running unopposed in the Democratic primary for 238th District judge.

Correction

In the Niki Griffin letter in Sunday's Midland Reporter-Telegram, it was inaccurately indicated that Matthew Blair, a Republican candidate for Midland County Court-at-Law judge, had been convicted in the past on a charge of driving while intoxicated. Blair was never convicted on the charge. The adjudication was deferred, which resulted in the charge eventually being dismissed. The Reporter-Telegram regrets the error.

EXPOSE

High levels of lead can cause serious brain damage. But health experts say that even low levels of exposure can cause decreased intelligence, short-term memory loss and underachievement in school.

Midland Independent School District officials say their primary concern is identifying children with learning difficulties, without focusing on the potential cause of the problem.

State and federal guidelines dictate that if a child's achievement test scores are 16 points or more below their IQ scores they are to be considered learning disabled, according to Jan Murdock, supervisor of special education for MISD.

Programs also are available for students who are not classified with a learning disability but have some difficulty, she said.

Because the connection between learning difficulties and lead exposure is relatively new it is "not something we have routinely picked up on," but is a condition that may warrant investigation in some cases, Ms. Murdock said.

After a school diagnostician has prepared a report on a student, a group discussion between classroom and resource teachers, parents and administrators may reveal that lead exposure could be a potential source of the problem.

In cities with high concentrations of older housing units, which were often painted with lead-based paint before it was outlawed in 1977, screening children for lead exposure is routine.

In Chicago, for example 18-month-old youngsters are routinely tested, according to Dr. Swati Pande, a pediatrician at Midland's Children's Clinic, who trained in Chicago.

Locally, such testing is rare, but can be done, according to Mark Pace, owner of Pace Clinical Laboratory. Blood or urine samples can be sent to Dallas-area labs where specific instruments are used to determine lead contamination levels.

The cost of such a test is relatively low — $23, Pace said.

creation of a trust fund — financed by a tax on the mining and import of lead — to provide funds for lead reduction efforts nationwide.

The U.S. Public Health Service says lead poisoning in children has declined dramatically in the past decade from an estimated 8 million children in 1980 to today's estimates of about 3 million to 4 million.

That decrease can be attributed to a phasedown in use of leaded gasoline since 1982, Silbergeld said. However, she added, the situation is still "intolerable."

Assistant city editor Allen Howland also contributed to this report.

Jury selection easier in Poindexter trial

WASHINGTON (AP) — John Poindexter's low public profile compared with that of Oliver North is making it a relatively simple task to select a jury for the former national security adviser's Iran-Contra trial.

Poindexter

Seventeen women and four men were sent into a pool of prospective jurors in the first day of jury selection Monday. Only six people were disqualified, largely because they had too much familiarity with the Iran-Contra scandal.

At North's trial last year, it took more than a week to select a jury, primarily because so many prospective jurors had been exposed to North's televised testimony to Congress in which the former White House aide admitted many of the activities that eventually led to criminal charges against him.

Like North, Poindexter gave public testimony to Congress under a grant of immunity, but some prospective jurors could not recognize him in the courtroom Monday.

"He's the handsome man here with the glasses and moustache," defense attorney Richard Beckler told a potential juror at one point, beckoning toward his client seated across the room.

U.S. District Judge Harold Greene took care of the problem of exposure to Poindexter's immunized testimony before jury selection began. The judge excused 76 potential jurors who said on a questionnaire that they had been exposed to Poindexter's testimony.

Those 76 came from a total of 206 potential jurors. In the North case, all but 16 of the first 54 potential jurors indicated they had some familiarity with North's testimony on Capitol Hill.

Twelve jurors and six alternates will be drawn for the Poindexter trial from a pool of at least 40.

Greene included in the jury pool a former Bush campaign aide who years ago had been babysat by one of Poindexter's attorneys.

"Just because counsel babysat for her doesn't cast any doubt on her," the judge said.

Among the six who were disqualified was a Food and Drug Administration employee who said he had heard that North's secretary, Fawn Hall, shredded documents in the scandal. Hall is expected to testify at Poindexter's trial.

"If someone is shredding documents, they don't want me to know about it," said the man. "If they don't want me to know about it, I want to know why they are shredding."

Others sent into the jury pool include a postal employee who recalled Poindexter's name from North's trial last year; a retired police officer who said he would treat former President Reagan's testimony the same as that of any other witness; and a registered nurse who said she understood Poindexter had been indicted on charges of defrauding the government in connection with arms sales.

Poindexter actually is under indictment on charges of conspiracy, two counts of obstructing Congress and two counts of making false statements. The charges relate to Poindexter's alleged coverup of North's secret resupply network to the Contra rebels in Nicaragua and to Poindexter's alleged lies concerning a November 1985 shipment of Hawk anti-aircraft missiles to Iran.

Reagan gave videotaped testimony for Poindexter's trial Feb. 16-17 and Poindexter's lawyers are expected to replay it in court.

Judge rejects flag-burning law

For the second time in three weeks, the law was held unconstitutional by a federal jurist and flag-burning charges were dismissed against protesters.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Opponents of a new federal law making it a crime to burn the American flag scored another victory when a second federal judge ruled that the statute runs afoul of the Constitution.

But Monday's ruling by U.S. District Judge June Green here also gives proponents of a constitutional amendment to ban flag burning more political ammunition for their cause.

President Bush endorsed the amendment route to undo last year's Supreme Court ruling that struck down a Texas flag-burning law, saying he was unsure that the statute Congress passed instead would survive court challenges.

So far, Bush and other supporters of a constitutional amendment have been proven correct.

For the second time in three weeks, the law was held unconstitutional by a federal jurist and flag-burning charges were dismissed against protesters.

The ruling Monday by Green and a similar one Feb. 21 by U.S. District Judge Barbara Rothstein in Seattle set the stage for another fight in the Supreme Court over the issue.

The Justice Department has already filed a notice of its intention to appeal the Seattle ruling. Spokesman David Runkel said department officials had not seen the most recent decision but would seek high-court review if it were similar to the Seattle ruling.

The law provides for direct appeal of district-court rulings to the Supreme Court. Such rulings have legal effect only in the geographical area covered by the district court.

In Monday's decision, Green held that flag burning is a form of political speech protected by the First Amendment. She rejected the Justice Department's contention that the law was enacted to protect the flag, not regulate speech.

"However compelling the government may see its interests, they cannot justify restrictions on speech which shake the very cornerstone of the First Amendment," the judge wrote.

"For in protecting the flag for those who wish to wave it in support of these causes, but preventing the defendants from burning it in opposition, the government has created a regulation which cannot be justified without reference to the content of the defendants' message," she wrote.

Green dismissed flag-burning charges against Shawn D. Eichmann, David G. Blalock and Scott W. Tyler. The three were arrested last Oct. 30 after they set several flags on fire during a protest outside the U.S. Capitol.

Conviction under the law carries a one-year sentence.

"The right to dissent is sometimes an albatross which burdens our society with its offensive sounds. Yet, political dissent lies at the heart of the First Amendment's protection," Green wrote.

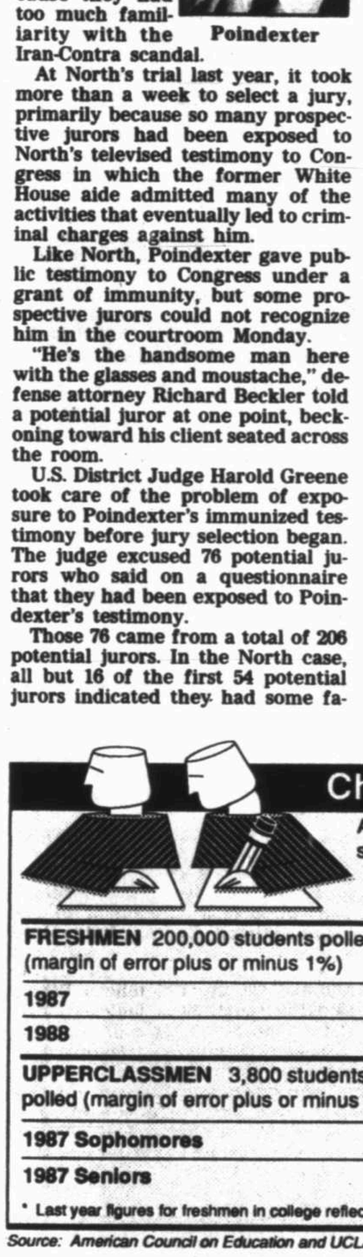

It "would not be needed if the persons who exercise their right of free expression by word and action were all pleasing, lovable persons with whom the rest of the citizens agreed," she said.

"The First Amendment, of course, makes no invidious exceptions. It provides protection for everyone, including the defendants."

William Kunstler, a New York attorney who handled both the Washington and Seattle cases for the Center for Constitutional Rights, hailed the ruling, saying: "We have knocked out an offensive statute in the area of the First Amendment."

But Kunstler predicted that there would be a long fight over passage of a constitutional amendment if both the Washington and Seattle rulings are upheld by the Supreme Court.

"We passed phase one, we are going into phase two," Kunstler said. "If we win, we go into phase three, which is this horrible amendment, which the president is sitting back and licking his chops over."

Harvard's student study shows cheating is catchy

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) — Cheating appears to be on the rise among college students, according to researchers who say the trend may be a sign of today's "make it" mentality.

Studies indicate about 20 percent to 30 percent of students cheat. Some copy from classmates' work, others plagiarize term papers or use crib sheets during exams, while others take advantage of computer technology.

"One student who was caught couldn't understand what he'd done that was so wrong," said Arthur Levine, chairman of Harvard University's Institute for Educational Management.

"His argument amounted to: 'Everyone cheats and as long as I do it well, I won't get caught and will succeed in society.'"

Forty-three percent of 5,000 professors nationwide responded "yes" when the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching asked: "Are today's undergraduates more willing to cheat in order to get good grades?"

"Perhaps the most discouraging side of the survey data is the portrait faculty paint of students, both in the classroom and beyond," the Princeton-based foundation's president, Ernest L. Boyer, wrote on releasing the study in November.

"Students read the newspaper and look at television and see plenty of examples of dishonesty in society," said Timothy F. Brooks, dean of students at the University of Delaware in Newark, Del.

"It's a massive problem and a disturbing reflection of our society."

Bush, PTA say schools need parents' 'spark'

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush is convinced — along with national PTA President Ann Lynch and Chrysler Chairman Lee Iaccoca — that parents hold the key to greater student achievement.

"Education is a national mission that must include parents," Bush told about 250 Parent Teacher Association leaders who met at the White House for a briefing Monday on the national education goals.

"After all, a school program won't kiss away the pain from an injured knee. A school program won't calm the fears of a child about to get a first shot. And a school program alone cannot instill a lifelong love of learning. But parents can spark the flame of curiosity by reading to their children, every night," the president said.

Before the White House meeting, Lynch released a survey showing that most parents are not getting involved in their children's schools. "Many parents are doing only half their job when it comes to getting a good education for their children," she said.

"I'm convinced if we get more adults dropping into the schools, the kids will stop dropping out," Iacocca said in a message accompanying the survey.

The survey found that fewer than half of the parents, about 44 percent, had visited their children's schools to participate in a back-to-school night while 46 percent attended parent-organization meetings during fall 1989.

"Too many (parents) sit at home and complain about the schools without ever setting foot through the doors to find out how they can help," said Ms. Lynch.

The most common reasons for visiting schools included attending a scheduled parent-teacher conference, which 71 percent had attended, or class or school program, which 64 percent had attended.

The survey, commissioned by Newsweek Inc. for the national PTA and Chrysler's Dodge Division, was based on a national sample of parents in 538 households with children enrolled in kindergarten through 12th grade. Ninety percent of the children were in public school with 10 percent in either private or parochial schools.

Dr. Ernest Boyer, president of the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching, suggested that parents be given at least a day or two off from work, with pay, to consult with teachers and spend time with their child at school.

"If society sees value in giving employees release time for jury duty and to vote, surely allowing parents time to be engaged in the education of their children is in the public interest," said Boyer.

While the survey showed that parents' school involvement often was low, most parents said they were very active in their children's education at home. Two of every three, 69 percent, said they discussed school topics with their children nearly every school day. More than half, 58 percent, helped with homework at least two to three times a week, and 52 percent read to or with their children at least once a week.

U.S. Army deserter feels like he 'threw 30 years of my life away'

COUNCIL BLUFFS, Iowa (AP) — An Army deserter who believes he "threw 30 years of my life away" by fleeing to East Germany in 1959 said the changes in the United States have left him slack-jawed with amazement.

Kephart

Arnold Kephart, 53, who fled to East Germany fearing punishment after wrecking an Army truck, said adjustment to U.S. society has made him feel a bit like a latter-day Rip van Winkle.

"The first time I saw one of those," Kephart said, pointing to a microwave oven, "I thought it was a TV. Then someone came along, opened it up, and put food in. I couldn't believe he was putting food in the TV."

In a recent interview at the home of his brother-in-law, Arlo Dunbar, Kephart said he regretted his decision to enter East Germany only a few weeks after settling in Schmalkalind, he town where he lived for 30 years.

"It was like you were locked up all the time. I never really ever felt at home," said the former Army private, who said he twice unsuccessfully tried to escape the country.

"I feel like I threw 30 years of my life away," he said.

Before his second escape attempt in 1975, Kephart drank "enough beer to get my courage up and so I'd have an excuse if I got caught," he said.

Three guards grabbed him as he approached the border, beat him, and sent him back to town, Kephart said.

"After that, I didn't think about trying the border again," Kephart said.

A year after the escape attempt he met his second wife, Brigitte. She is the mother of Frankie, now 12 and in the United States with his father, and Kephart's 8-year-old twin daughters, Katharina and Kathleen. He has another child from his first marriage in East Germany.

The family lived in a small house, Kephart said. Their diet was meager: bread with some bologna-like meat for breakfast, soup and potatoes for lunch. Dinner was a reprise of breakfast, he said.

"You could seldom get eggs," he said. "And the meat in the store, when you could get it, a lot of times had a bad color, like it was old."

He said the country he has returned to is a "different world."

"Here, everybody has a phone," Kephart noted with amazement in a voice heavy with a German accent.

On returning to the United States last month, the Army arrested him at the airport as he was being reunited with relatives. He was granted an other-than-honorable discharge a week later.

Kephart said he now will be try to rebuild his life in Council Bluffs, a southwestern Iowa community.

Amazon wins 11th-hour reprieve

NEW YORK (AP) — The chaotic development that is gobbling up the Amazon rain forest could finally be reined in with a new plan developed by officials of Amazon countries and leading scientists from around the world.

"That's some of the most encouraging news about the Amazon rain forest in recent years," said Thomas Lovejoy, a tropical ecologist at the Smithsonian Institution and an Amazon specialist.

"It contrasts markedly with a year ago, when there was nothing to read about conservation in the Amazon, especially in Brazil, except bad news," Lovejoy said in a recent interview.

Sixty percent of the Amazon, the world's largest tropical rain forest, lies in Brazil, but the forest also covers parts of eight surrounding countries.

Lovejoy was one of the organizers of an unusual workshop held in mid-January in Manaus, Brazil, a sprawling city of 1 million people in the heart of the Amazon. It was the center of Brazil's once-thriving rubber trade.

The workshop, which brought together all the governments and scientists with interests in the rain forest, culminated with a plan to regulate development in up to 80 percent of the Amazon region.

It was the first time that all parties concerned with the Amazon had met to pool their knowledge and agree on conservation priorities, the meeting's participants said.

AP Laserphoto

A section of the Amazon rain forest in Brazil burns as it is cleared last year. Brazil has been ambivalent about the need to conserve large portions of the Amazon, as it struggles with a teetering economy and pressures from developers and peasant farmers to clear the forest for cattle ranching and small farms.

The plan devised at the workshop has no legal force. But it has broad government support and is likely to serve as a guide for national conservation programs, participants said.

Many of the areas to be preserved will be open to so-called multiple-use development, which preserves the forest while allowing tourism and the commercial exploitation of fibers, fruits and medicinal plants.

Brazil, struggling with a teetering economy and pressured by developers and peasant farmers to clear the forest for cattle ranching or farming, has been ambivalent about the need to conserve the Amazon.

Brazil participated in the Manaus workshop, however, and the setting of priorities was "all done with the blessing of Brazil," Lovejoy said.

Tropical rain forests are giant, living warehouses for thousands of plant and animal species. The Amazon alone is home to 30 percent of the world's plant and animal species.

Towering forest canopies up to 300 feet above the forest floor are home to countless birds and insects that live their lives without ever setting foot on the ground. One group of orchid species grows only near the top of the canopy; an entirely different collection of orchids grows at the bottom.

"The bulk of the Amazon is a biological priority; there's no way of getting around that," said Russell Mittermeier, president of Conservation International and an authority on endangered monkeys.

Mittermeier emphasized, however, that the plan set realistic goals for the establishment of national parks and reserves, along with multiple-use areas where some development could occur.

It is not realistic to build a fence around 70 percent to 80 percent of the Amazon, he said. Only the most critical areas should be placed off limits to development.

Baker to go to Namibia

WASHINGTON (AP) — Secretary of State James A. Baker III will attend independence ceremonies this month in Namibia on an African trip that could thrust him into negotiations to dismantle racial segregation in South Africa.

So far, the State Department is giving few details on what could turn out to be a nine-day trip to a half-dozen countries. Spokeswoman Margaret D. Tutwiler announced on Monday only his stop in Windhoek, the capital of Namibia.

But preparations were under way for possible visits to Senegal, Zaire, Botswana, Zambia, Ivory Coast and South Africa, where the white minority government last month ended a 30-year ban on the African National Congress and released black leader Nelson Mandela from prison.

Baker is going to Windhoek to join with other world leaders as the former South African colony gains independence and Sam Nujoma, a former guerrilla leader who spent 30 years in exile, is sworn in as president.

While representing President Bush at the ceremonies, Baker will have a chance to meet with South African President F.W. de Klerk and Mandela, but he is unlikely to turn the occasion into a substantive session about dismantling apartheid in South Africa, said a U.S. official, who spoke on condition on anonymity.

Italy wants larger role on German reunification

WASHINGTON (AP) — Italy is carrying its pitch for a larger role in shaping Germany's future to the White House as the Bush administration tries to reassure the smaller European countries that their views count.

Prime Minister Giulio Andreotti technically is speaking only for Italy as he asks President Bush today to guarantee Rome a place in the U.S. formula for merging East Germany with West Germany.

But Denmark, Norway, and other small countries — as well as Poland and other victims of German aggression in Eastern Europe in World War II — have a stake in the outcome of Andreotti's talks with Bush and Secretary of State James A. Baker III.

The "two plus four" formula would have the two Germanys make most of the basic arrangements for unification. Afterward, the United States, the Soviet Union, Britain and France — the Big Four allies of World War II — would move into the planning to consider security issues and the new Germany's place in Europe.

Baker gained Soviet, British and French acceptance of the approach at an "Open Skies" conference last month in Ottawa, Canada. Last week, visiting Irish Prime Minister Charles J. Haughey worked out an agreement with Bush for additional consultations with the 12 nations of the European Community.

Still, Andreotti, who heads Italy's 49th postwar government and is in his sixth non-consecutive term as prime minister, is uneasy.

Last week in Rome, he called for closer cooperation between Europe and North America and urged Washington not to overlook its allies in negotiating German unification and other important political and security issues.

Kohl could remove specter with treaty

The specter of a united and powerful Germany asserting territorial demands once again in the heart of Europe stirs dread on both sides of the Atlantic. Why, then, is Chancellor Helmut Kohl reviving the hideous ghosts of German history by being coy about the future borders of a unified Germany?

The answer can be found in domestic political considerations, which explain but hardly excuse Kohl's studied ambiguity.

Facing elections in December, the chancellor is pandering to the descendants of the 13 million Germans who were evicted from Pomerania, Silesia and East Prussia after World War II. These territories are now part of Poland and the Soviet Union.

Although Bonn clearly has no intention of pressing claims to the former German lands, many of the so-called expellees nurture dreams of renegotiating Germany's frontiers. From a political standpoint, this group is important because it represents a big chunk of Kohl's conservative political base.

Consequently, the chancellor is striving to preserve his standing among this important domestic constituency by declining to declare unequivocally that Germany's present boundaries are inviolate. In the process, he is recklessly and needlessly fueling pervasive fears about reunification across Europe.

Those concerns are understandably strongest in Warsaw. About one-third of modern Poland was German soil before 1939. Polish Prime Minister Tadeusz Mazowiecki has called on both West and East Germany to sign a treaty endorsing the postwar border. Kohl initially rejected the Polish proposal but appears to be growing more receptive as pressures have mounted at home and abroad for an official renunciation of any German territorial claims.

The controversy sparked by the chancellor's mealy mouthed posture demonstrates the need for a formal mechanism by which a united Germany along with the rest of Europe, the United States and the Soviet Union can affirm the existing borders. The 35-nation Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe, which is scheduled to reconvene late this year, is the ideal forum to consummate such a multilateral treaty.

In the 1975 Helsinki Accords, both Bonn and East Berlin declared their support for Germany's postwar frontiers. Now, to dispel the ghosts of Germany's past once an for all as the Berlin Wall vanishes, the world needs a solemn guarantee that Europe's borders will remain secure.

Skinner uses FAA jet as private taxi

WASHINGTON — Transportation Secretary Samuel Skinner prefers his personal transportation to be first class. The Transportation Department has a luxurious Gulfstream G-IV jet that Skinner uses as if it were the family car.

Jack Anderson

The G-IV, registered to the Federal Aviation Administration, is supposed to be used primarily for training government flight safety inspectors and to carry federal accident investigators to crash sites. But FAA records show Skinner uses the plane frequently to squire around bureaucrats, members of Congress and their spouses on such urgent business as trips to the Paris Air Show.

At the same time, the FAA inspectors who are supposed to test commercial pilots are being allowed to delay their refresher courses because there aren't enough planes for training.

The case of the G-IV shows that the FAA may deserve the hammering it is getting over poor monitoring of air safety and pilot training. Government auditors have complained that planes such as the G-IV are too costly to be used as air taxis, especially when they are needed for training and especially when commercial air travel would be cheaper.

The FAA has a staff of inspectors who are supposed to be trained on the type of aircraft used by the pilots they test, and the inspectors have to take periodic refresher courses.

But federal investigators have discovered that the inspectors were being granted waivers on those refresher courses, in part because there weren't enough planes available for training.

The FAA has promised to quit granting the waivers, but the waste of money using training planes to chauffeur dignitaries goes on.

Our sources have raised particular concerns about Skinner's use of the G-IV. It is equipped with advanced computerized controls known as glass cockpit technology, now being used in a growing number of commercial jets. And not enough FAA inspectors are trained on those controls.

The G-IV has other features that make it attractive transportation — plush carpeting, lounge chairs, private telephones, a bar, a stereo and a television with VCR. The Transportation Department claims the jet was designed for corporate comforts and the frills were thrown in free to the government by Gulfstream.

The department bought the G-IV from Gulfstream last spring, telling Congress that it was needed for training and shuttling investigators to crash sites.

Records obtained by our associate Scott Sleek show that training is not the only function of the plane.

In June, it carried Sen. Frank Lautenberg, D-N.J., Rep. Bill Clinger, R-Pa., Clinger's wife and several congressional staffers to the Paris Air Show.

In May, Skinner took Rep. Hank Brown, D-Colo., to Denver so they could look at an airport project.

Last summer, Skinner took Reps. William Lehman, D-Fla., Daniel Akaka, D-Hawaii, George Miller, D-Calif., and Marty Russo, D-Ill., to London to study airport security. Wives and staffers also went along.

Don't look for any congressional committee to crack down on Skinner's joy rides. The Transportation Department purchased the G-IV with the blessing of committees chaired by Lehman and Lautenberg who have both enjoyed Skinner's friendly skies.

MINI-EDITORIAL — The U.S. District Court in the Southern District of Georgia has become the first district court to get its own flag. The issues of arrogance, pretension and expense aside, the court should be more careful about what symbols it chooses. Because it's getting harder and harder to burn Old Glory as a political statement, restless activists will be looking around for other flammable materials.

Valentine event noted

We recently had a very successful fundraising event here at the Boys & Girls Club of Midland and I would like to take this opportunity to share this information with citizens of Midland.

Each year we have a Valentine Queen and Princess contest and the girl who raises the most money for Club programs wins the title and crown. This year we had five wonderful young ladies vying for this position, Dottie Antee, Steph Beman, Marcie Garibay, Buffy Perales and Diana Reyes. With the help of their families, friends and various business supporters, the girls were very successful in their efforts to raise money to help support Club activities. The girls also put on a very exciting fashion show on Feb. 15. The culmination of the fundraising activities was our annual Valentine Coronation and Dance held Feb. 16. Diana Reyes was crowned Queen and Marcie Garibay, Princess. The other three girls did a super job and no one was a loser in the eyes of the staff here at the club.

The only unfortunate part of all of these events was the total disregard given to us by the news media. All of the media received a written press release and I followed that up with several phone calls to insure coverage of this fundraiser that is so important to our organization. These girls, who had worked so hard, deserved to have the recognition of the press, and we had so hoped that we could let the community know how proud the club is of these outstanding girls and their families. Hopefully next year!

Lastly, special thanks to Refreshment Vending, Peggy Caldaron, Yolanda Cobos, Lorenza Tucker, Greg and Sophie Sotelo, Aquilba Antee, and Ted and Irene Bowley and finally Gracie Gutierrez for helping us make our 1990 Valentine Project a tremendous success!

Meri Jo Strawn, education director

Thanks for helping youths

I never cease to be amazed at the continued support that local businesses give to organizations and agencies in Midland.

On Saturday, Feb. 24th, the Midland-Lee Youth Centers, Inc. hosted a Skate Day and Pool Tournament, and for the second time this year both Mike Thompson of Skate Stiks and Mark Wendler of Basin Billiards donated all of the prizes given to the youth throughout the day. Through Mark Wendler and Mike Thompson's generosity the Youth Centers were able to provide a safe, supervised and acceptable place for over 125 of Midland's youth.

I would like to thank Skate Stiks, Basin Billiards and all of our local businesses who support not only the Youth Centers, but all the agencies that seek to enhance the quality of life for our youth. It is people like this that enable the Youth Centers to be a continued success in Midland.

Students' efforts help

For several weeks, the geology and biology students at Midland College have been conducting a survey under my supervision for Dr. Carl Torres of the Texas Health Commission, Department of Epidemiology.

This is an optional laboratory exercise for these students and has opened their eyes to questions of environmental pollution and health. It has been an excellent learning experience and also has allowed them the opportunity to return something of value to their community.

I cannot thank each of the questionnaire participants individually, so I wish to collectively express my appreciation for the cooperation and courtesy shown my students by the people of South Midland.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Tuesday, March 6, the 65th day of 1990. There are 300 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On March 6, 1836, the Alamo in San Antonio fell to Mexican forces after a 13-day siege. All 187 defenders of the mission compound — including Davy Crockett and James Bowie — were killed.

On this date:

In 1806, poet Elizabeth Barrett Browning was born in Durham, England.

In 1853, Verdi's opera "La Traviata" premiered in Venice, Italy.

Government power freedom's greatest threat

Environmentalism is going to be the fad of the 1990s. That's clear enough. Hollywood has already adopted it as a new pet crusade. (Too bad, you hungry kids in Ethiopia, but you are out of date and out of fashion.)

Charley Reese

What ought also to be clear is that utopians of the left will use environmentalism to attack private property rights. In fact, this right is already under attack.

Most bad things are done in the name of accomplishing some good. Sometimes this is deliberate. For example, to establish peace we nuked Hiroshima and Nagasaki. Sometimes the bad is an unintended consequence of the pursuit of the good.

The unintended consequence of legally establishing equal rights for blacks in America was the great expansion of the power of the federal government. The interstate commerce clause interpretation was greatly expanded, for example. Originally, it just meant one state could not interfere with the commerce of another and to guarantee that, the Constitution assigned interstate commerce to the national government.

But to combat racial segregation in public accommodations, it was decided that if a street vendor in one state used mustard made in another, he was engaged in interstate commerce. The effect was to give the federal government carte blanche in regulating all businesses.

I don't blame the Civil Rights Act or Congress for that. I blame the bull-headed so-called states' righters. If the states had banned racial discrimination, as they had the authority to do and should have done, then the federal camel wouldn't have gotten into that tent.

Racial segregation was such an intense injustice that it had to go. Those Southern politicians who tried to maintain an evil by wrapping it in a strictly constructed Constitution brought about exactly what they claimed to fear. They made liberal and broad interpretation of the Constitution acceptable. They made a vastly expanded federal role acceptable.

And so while one evil was justly done away with, we all — black and white — may yet suffer new evils from a government which has at least partly broken out of the restraints of the Constitution.

At all times, it is the power of government which is the greatest threat to freedom. And nearly everytime, at least in our history, it is the refusal of people to do the right thing which prompts the expansion of government power. Despite Southern propaganda, the abolitionists did not bring on the civil war. It was the slaveowners who brought about the destruction of the South.

Thus, at the outset of the environmental decade, we ought to realize two things. Property rights may be severely cut back or eliminated in the name of preserving the environment. But what will help most to bring about this bad loss of liberty will be stubborn abuse of the environment by those defending property rights.

Reasonable Americans, therefore, should be on guard both against utopians who lust for unlimited government power and short-sighted, selfish corporations or people who think they can wrap abuse of the environment in property rights and thus get away with it. In our past, conservatives have blundered enormously trying to use liberty to rationalize evil behavior. Such people are not allies of either liberty or the Constitution, not to mention being indecent.

Environmentalism is not an either-or proposition. Sound environmental policies and practices can be put into place without wiping out the right to own and use property.

The right to own and use property has been called the foundation of all human rights — and correctly so. Without this right, economic independence becomes an impossibility. Without economic independence, political rights can be meaningless.

On the other hand, political and economic liberty are meaningless on a dead planet. For once, let's hope reason rather demagoguery prevails.

WILLIAM SAFIRE

Word 'swamp' is out; 'Wetlands' preferred

Francis Marion, an American general in the Revolutionary War, bedeviled the British with his surprise attacks from the marshy areas of South Carolina.

William Safire

The short, sickly looking fellow was among our earliest partisan fighters, pioneering guerrilla tactics against regular troops in skirmishes at Tearcoat Swamp and Halfway Swamp.

Because he and his small force would strike and then disappear into seemingly impenetrable bogs, through brambles that tore the red coats of his pursuers, the elusive Marion was given the sobriquet "the Swamp Fox."

Today he would be called the wetlands fox. Swamp is out; this soggy companion of ours for more than three centuries, perhaps from the Greek somphos, "spongy," is considered unscientific and slightly pejorative; the new word put forward by environmentalists and galoshes-equipped journalists is wetlands.

The Army Corps of Engineers, in chorus with the Environmental Protection Agency, begins to define wetlands as "those areas that are inundated or saturated by surface or ground water."

But that area must be capable of supporting "vegetation typically adapted for life in saturated soil conditions," which means plants ranging from cattails and bulrushes to willows and mangroves, which can grow at least part of the time in ground that lacks oxygen.

These wetlands include swamps, marshes, wet meadows, wet tundra and bogs.

As a longtime muckraker, I have been trying to unearth the moment when all this muck was upgraded in our vocabulary.

Although wet land, as two words and even one word, has been kicking around for centuries, the first citation in the plural is in The New Scientist of June 17, 1965: "Wetlands are defined to include marshes, bogs, swamps and any still water less than six meters deep."

Twenty years later, the plural word was being construed as both singular and plural: a wetlands is is just as accepted as the wetlands are.

Last month, a New York Times headline read "Over EPA Protest, White House Alters Wetland Agreement" (using the plural wetlands in the copy), while The Washington Post preferred the plural modifier and a zippier style: "Wetlands Agreement Watered Down."

"Twenty years ago," says Jon Kusler of the Association of State Wetland (singular) Managers, "almost all discussion of wetlands involved waterfalls and fisheries. Now there are concerns for water quality, flood storage, food-chain support and especially birding."

How do we wade into the differentiation that will help us make a splash in synonymy?

A marsh, a word that may share a root with marine, is wet land characterized by non-woody or herbaceous plants like cattails and similar tall grasses; these include an herb of the mallow family once used in preparing a confection called the marshmallow. (Hardly anybody uses real marshmallow root anymore; only a few old swamp foxes remember the taste.)

A mire, from the Old Norse, is synonymous with marsh, but is used more in Europe than in the United States.

Bog, from the Gaelic word for "soft," is spongy ground that is acidic; that's where gardeners turn for peat moss. The British like the synonyms heath and moor.

A swamp is land permanently or periodically saturated by water but featuring trees. The term subsumes marshes and bogs, but is not as moist-embracing as wetlands, which spills over to bottomland forests, pocosins, pine savannas and lands that the engineers say "are not easily recognized, often because they are dry during part of the year or 'they just don't look very wet' from the roadside."

What's the opposite of wetlands? No, not drylands — at the EPA, it's uplands.

In a related terminological development, the controversy over the term ground water continues.

The water in the ground that supplies wells and springs is written as two words in Webster's New World Dictionary, and as one word in Merriam-Webster's Ninth New Collegiate (because, says its editor, Fred Mish, "the preponderance of citational evidence shows it as one word").

Joe D. Winkle, in 1988 a deputy regional administrator of EPA based in Dallas, sent a memo with 12 pages of attachments to his colleagues in which he complained that "we are seeing numerous documents presenting groundwater as ground-water or ground water," and requested that the two-word style be adopted. This was sent to me by a whistle-blower within the agency with a disgusted notation: "Our tax dollars at work!"

Winkle style has been adopted by most bureaucrats at EPA, but the single word appears in the agency's news releases.

"Ground water, two words, is what is used in the name of the Office of Ground Water Protection," says John Kasper, press aide to chief William K. Reilly, "but the Ninth New Collegiate uses one word. That's the style I prefer to use in press releases." So the ground rule is to use groundwater outside, ground water inside.

Bogged down in details? Mired by memos? Swamped by work? Try explaining to your with-it boss you've been wetlanded.

NATION in brief

Atwater faces more testing

WASHINGTON (AP) — Lee Atwater, chairman of the Republican National Committee, faces more hospital tests as doctors try to come up with a diagnosis for his collapse during a speech.

Atwater, 39, and a regular exerciser, fainted as he was speaking to a group of GOP contributors Monday morning and was rushed to a hospital.

Doctors decided to keep him there "for observation," said RNC spokeswoman Leslie A. Goodman.

Atwater collapsed about 10 minutes into a breakfast talk to about 100 longtime contributors to Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas, at a Washington hotel.

Trial testing okayed

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — Human testing of a potential AIDS vaccine was approved Monday by state health officials, but researchers cautioned that development of a true vaccine will take years.

The approval was the first for human trials of HGP-30 in the United States, according to the companies that developed the drug.

Clinical trials will be held at San Francisco General Hospital and the University of Southern California Medical Center in Los Angeles, said Dr. James Kahn, who will conduct the San Francisco tests. The trials will begin in two to three months, he said.

Spy plane finds home

OFFUTT AIR FORCE BASE, Neb. (AP) — The Strategic Air Command Museum will become home to one of the 15 SR-71 spy planes known to exist when the aircraft is retired later this month.

The museum was a shoo-in to get one of the SR-71s because Offutt Air Force Base is home to the headquarters of SAC, which has managed the aircraft for 24 years, said Jack Allen, museum director.

The plane will be stripped of classified equipment and other gear before it is towed to the museum on the north edge of the base for permanent outdoor storage.

The twin-engine SR-71 is one of nine to be sent to museums following the decision by President Bush and Congress to retire the 1960s spy plane.

Dogs fend off moose

ROHN, Alaska (AP) — Searchers set out on snowmobiles for a dog sled team that may have been attacked by a moose during the Iditarod Trail sled dog race.

Two bush pilots reported seeing a moose stomping sled dogs along the race course Monday, but it was unclear whether racers were involved.

The defending Iditarod champion, meanwhile, mushed through heavy snow and cold wind Monday to take the lead 271 miles into the 1,160-mile race.

Attacks by hungry moose plagued racers because deep snow has made it hard to graze.

Defending champion Joe Runyan and five other veteran racers overtook Rick Swenson during the sprint Monday from Rainy Pass to Rohn, 271 miles into the race. The group passing Swenson included his arch-rival, Susan Butcher.

Museum director fired

NEW YORK (AP) — The 15-year director of the Whitney Museum of American Art has been fired amid complaints about his leadership, a proposed exhibitions a scholar derided as contemporary schlock.

The board's dismissal Monday of Thomas N. Armstrong III was announced by museum president William Woodside.

Woodside commended the director for having "enlivened and invigorated" the museum but said the board saw a need for new leadership appropriate to the "changing climate" facing private cultural institutions.

Armstrong declined to comment Monday.

His critics said the museum lacked direction under him and cited what they saw as trendy exhibitions, his failure to hire a strong chief curator and his alienation of some donors.

Woodside said a search committee will choose a new director.

Ride home delayed

EDWARDS AIR FORCE BASE, Calif. (AP) — Stiff desert winds slowed efforts to prepare space shuttle Atlantis for a piggyback jet ride back to Florida.

Gusts to 45 mph also delayed an investigation into an apparent leak of hydraulic fluid discovered before the shuttle landed here Sunday from a secret, 4½-day mission during which it put a $500 million spy satellite in orbit.

Meanwhile, Discovery was towed Monday to an assembly building at Kennedy Space Center in Florida, NASA spokeswoman Pat Phillips said.

Inside, booster rockets and the external fuel tank will be attached to Discovery, which is scheduled for launch April 12 on a mission to put the $1.55 billion Hubble Space Telescope in orbit.

Smokers' 'bill of rights' passes

FRANKFORT, Ky. (AP) — A "smokers bill of rights" banning discrimination on or off the job was approved Monday by this tobacco state's House of Representatives.

Rep. Donnie Gedling said the bill was important in a state as dependent as Kentucky is on tobacco. "It sends a message the legislature is out to protect the freedoms of all citizens, whether they're smokers or not," Gedling said.

The bill, which still must gain approval from the Senate and Gov. Wallace Wilkinson, would prohibit employers from basing employment decisions on the use of tobacco, but would still allow them to restrict smoking on the job.

Nation's snowiest town awaits spring at bottom of the drifts

VALDEZ, Alaska (AP) — Residents of the nation's snowiest town are proud of how they've shoveled, burrowed and bulldozed through this winter's record snowfall of more than 40 feet.

But after more than three months of steady snow, even the most devoted fans of winter start pining for that distant rumor called spring.

"I don't think it's ever going to melt," airplane scheduler Nettie Pike said recently while waiting out yet another storm at the Valdez airport. "This is the new Ice Age."

Streets have become trenches, walled in by 10-foot snowbanks so enduring that kids paint graffiti on them. Drifts reach halfway up second-floor windows, and six snow-heavy boats have capsized in the harbor.

Valdez, crowded onto a narrow plain by Prince William Sound, forms an ideal catch basin for the ocean-spawned snow storms that stall against the steep-walled Chugach Mountains behind town.

At last official count, snow on the ground measured 105 inches, though depths vary throughout town. In the lee of hills, the branches of buried trees claw up through snowdrifts. Downtown, bulldozers push icy boulders a ton at a time into mountains 45 feet high.

Residents don't let it keep them from their business. Interrupt their shoveling for a moment and most will say, a bit defensively, that they don't mind the snow.

"At least it's not cold," Gene McDaniel said as he tried to start his snow-blower at 20 degrees. "Over the mountains in the interior, it really gets cold. I'd much rather have this snow than 45 below."

That's not to say there aren't inconveniences.

McDaniel figured it was time to shovel his roof one night when a mass of snow sloughed off, blocking his front door and trapping him and his guests. His snow-clearing bill this season stands at $700.

Workers at the state Department of Environmental Conservation office ran out of room while plowing the parking lot, so they started pushing snow up onto a nearby pile. An angry neighbor soon arrived, shouting: "You're putting your snow on my pile. Take it off!"

Ed Nielsen, maintenance man at the Village Inn motel, said he's been shoveling steadily for a month, tunneling down to fire exits and fighting a losing battle to keep drifts from walling up the windows.

"It feels like you're in a dungeon," Neilsen said. "People start getting itchy feet and getting cranky at each other."

"People are kind of schizophrenic," said Bob Donald, director of the Valdez National Health Center. "In the summer, everyone's busy as a bee. In the winter, a lot of people sleep longer. They come home from work, eat, watch some TV and are in bed by 9 o'clock. And they still feel like they're not getting enough rest. It's kind of a self-imposed hibernation."

Attendance is up at the public library, where travel books about Hawaii are popular.

Last fall, many Valdez residents were looking forward to the slower pace winter brings. The town's population of 3,000 more than doubled last summer after the Exxon Valdez oil spill, the largest in U.S. history. But when Exxon suspended its cleanup Sept. 15, the crowds thinned, and Valdez was left to face its snow alone.

The first measureable snow fell Oct. 23. By the end of December, it was halfway up first-floor windows. January's snowfall of 158 inches broke the local one-month record, and on Feb. 13, when snowfall topped 384.7 inches, it erased the modern-day seasonal record set in 1987. The National Weather Service didn't start recording the town's snowfalls until 1972.

Last week, another storm pushed the snowfall toward the 500-inch mark, said weather service spokesman Lynn Chrystal.

Tehran paper says '90 last year for captivity

WORLD

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — A Tehran newspaper close to Iran's president said today that 1990 will be the last year of captivity for the hostages in Lebanon, and resumption of U.S.-Iranian ties is not a precondition for their release.

In a second editorial, the English-language Tehran Times said Syrian President Hafez Assad would visit Tehran soon, after an expected trip by his foreign minister, Farouk Al-Sharaa. It also denied reports that a trip by the brother of President Hashemi Rafsanjani to the Syrian capital of Damascus last week was related to the hostage question.

Syria is the main power broker in Lebanon, with 40,000 troops there.

Recent statements from Iranian newspapers saying the hostages should be released, along with optimistic assessments by Syrian and other officials, have fueled reports that a hostage release is imminent.

In Beirut today, the respected An-Nahar daily ruled out any release soon, but quoted unidentified Lebanese fundamentalist sources as saying Iran was prepared to tackle the hostage issue.

An Assad visit to Iran was expected. Syria was Persian Iran's only staunch Arab backer in its 1980-88 war against Iraq, the arch foe of Damascus. Iran and Syria are also in frequent contact over Lebanon, where they back rival Shiite Moslem militias.

The Tehran Times statement said visits between capitals was "a very normal thing," noting that the sensation on the hostage issue created by the Western media over such visits was "much too fancied."

For the second time in as many weeks, the newspaper said the 18 Westerners in Lebanon, believed held by pro-Iranian Shiite Moslem factions, should go free without preconditions.

In the past, the paper has reflected the thinking of President Hashemi Rafsanjani.

"Our own assessment indicates that this thorny issue can be sorted out in the near future in a sincere spirit by sincere people," the paper said, adding, "1990 can and will be the last year of the captivity of these hostages."

It said an effort was under way to free the hostages because "Islam in no way allows or condones the idea that people should be taken or held hostage."

In Washington on Monday, White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said there were no grounds for expecting an imminent release, but said many people outside the U.S. government were involved in talks to win their freedom.

The longest-held hostage is Terry Anderson, chief Middle East correspondent for The Associated Press, who will mark his fifth anniversary in captivity on March 16. Anderson is one of the eight Americans in captivity along with four Britons, two West Germans, two Swiss, an Irishman and an Italian.

Rafsanjani has indicated the desire to separate Iran from the hostage issue as he seeks Western technology and financing to rebuild Iran's troubled economy.

But the factions holding the hostages are said to be more loyal to radicals in the Tehran government who oppose Rafsanjani. They viewing confrontation with the West as the wellspring of the Islamic revolution.

The Tehran Times said today that there were no direct talks between Tehran and Washington on resuming relations, according to the IRNA report, which was monitored in Nicosia.

"At this hour, Iran-U.S. relations are not under discussion and such a move is also not supported by the leader of the Islamic Republic and its top officials," said the paper.

It reiterated its ground-breaking Feb. 22 statement that the hostage ordeal should be solved without any preconditions, and should not be related to resuming ties with Washington.

Ties were broken following the 1979 attack on the U.S. Embassy in Tehran that resulted in 52 Americans being held hostage for 444 days.

The paper said the visit to Damascus by Mahmoud Hashemi had nothing to do with freedom for the hostages.

Failed coup reported in Kabul

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan (AP) — The Afghan defense minister and Moslem guerrillas attempted to overthrow the Kremlin-backed government in Kabul today but failed, Kabul radio said. Pakistan-based guerrillas and diplomats said they had reports of fighting in Kabul.

In Moscow, official Soviet sources said the palace of President Najib was bombed by unidentified planes, and that there was fighting around the Defense Ministry.

Official Kabul radio, monitored in Islamabad, said Defense Minister Shah Nawaz Tanai had plotted with guerrilla leader Gulbuddin Hekmatyar and his fighters to overthrow the government.

But the attempted coup was crushed, it said, and Tanai had escaped. Security forces were searching for him and his backers.

The radio appealed to Afghans to join the military and help capture Tanai "dead or alive."

Najib has been president of Afghanistan since 1986. He has made various offers to the guerrillas, known as mujahedeen or Islamic holy warriors, to try to end the civil war that started when his Marxist party seized power in a 1978 coup.

Tanai is considered a party hardliner who opposes the peace overtures. He was implicated in a December coup attempt but never charged.

Guerrilla sources based in Pakistan said they had reports from their commanders of widespread fighting in Kabul.

"If Kabul radio says it (the coup) has been crushed, it doesn't mean it has," said a source from one of the seven guerrilla groups based here.

Pro-democracy candidates win on Soviet ballots, activists say

MOSCOW (AP) — In cities of the Slavic heartland, voters supported pro-democracy candidates who promise accountability over Communist bosses who have long controlled municipal machines through patronage, activists said.

Even in Leningrad, traditionally a bastion of hard-line Communists, pro-democracy candidates dominated Sunday's local and republic-wide elections, said editor Yelena Velinksaya of the official youth news agency IMA Press.

Most of the 1,800 contests for seats in the legislatures of the Russian federation, the Ukraine and Byleorussia remained undecided and will have to be settled by runoffs expected in two weeks.

But unofficial returns suggested that progressives made substantial gains as voters rejected conservative Communist candidates they associated with corruption and economic mismanagement.

Advocates of democracy could secure control several major city councils.

Heavy turnout appeared to favor reformers in the Ukraine and Byelorussia, where 80 percent of registered voters went to the polls, the Communist Party newspaper Pravda said today.

The newspaper said, however, that only 64 percent of registered voters turned out in Moscow, capital of the huge Russian federation. Turnout figures for the federation as a whole were not yet available.

Reformer Boris N. Yeltsin had no trouble winning a legislative seat in the Russian federation, taking 72 percent of the vote in his district of Sverdlovsk in the Ural Mountains.

Yeltsin has said he will seek the presidency of the republic, which traditionally means a place on the Communist Party's ruling Politburo.

Other reformers in the Russian federation also appeared headed for victory, as did leaders of nationalist movements in the Ukraine and Byelorussia, an outspoken television commentator in Leningrad and a defiant editor in Moscow.

"We're so happy! Such success!" said Irina Rozhenko of the Ukrainian pro-democracy movement Narodny Rukh.

Activists said strong showings in this round nearly guaranteed victories in runoff elections for candidates who want to step up the pace of reforms begun by President Mikhail S. Gorbachev.

So pro-reform candidates either had to run as Communists or on slates of grass-roots movements.

Defeat of old guard local Communist leaders probably would help Gorbachev's liberalization.

Political tension has increased in some regions as direct control from the Kremlin decreases. In recent weeks, Gorbachev has prodded the Communist Party into giving up its monopoly on power and pressed for a new, more powerful presidency.

2 U.S soldiers remain hospitalized in Panama

PANAMA CITY, Panama (AP) — Four U.S. soldiers were released from the hospital Monday after being injured in a weekend grenade attack on a disco that killed one American serviceman. Two others remained hospitalized, the U.S. military said.

CBS News meanwhile reported Monday night that a cocaine smuggling ring involving U.S. soldiers and Colombian suppliers was recently broken up in Panama.

"Senior American commanders say one American serviceman has confessed to recruiting returning G.I.'s to work as 'mules,' or couriers, to carry cocaine to the United States on military flights," the network said.

CBS said seven Colombians and two Americans have been arrested.

The U.S. Southern Command in Panama said it had no information on the report.

CBS said officials investigating Friday's grenade attack on the discotheque My Place are looking into the possibility that the bombing was connected to the breakup of the smuggling ring.

One American soldier was killed and 16 American servicemen and 12 Panamanians were injured in the attack.

The Southern Command said the two soldiers who remained hospitalized were in "stable, satisfactory condition."

Those released Monday were Spc. Ronald Sallis, 22, of Chippewa Falls, Wis.; Airman 1st Class Joseph Pelletier, 20, of Bucksport, Maine; Pvt. David C. McKinney, 28, of Amarillo, Texas; and Airman Warren A. Waters, 22, of Phoenix.

Remaining in the hospital were Petty Officer 2nd Class Charles L. Curtis, 26, of Shelby, N.C., and Petty Officer 3rd Class Calbert Malone Jr., 23, of Greenville, Miss., a Southern Command statement said.

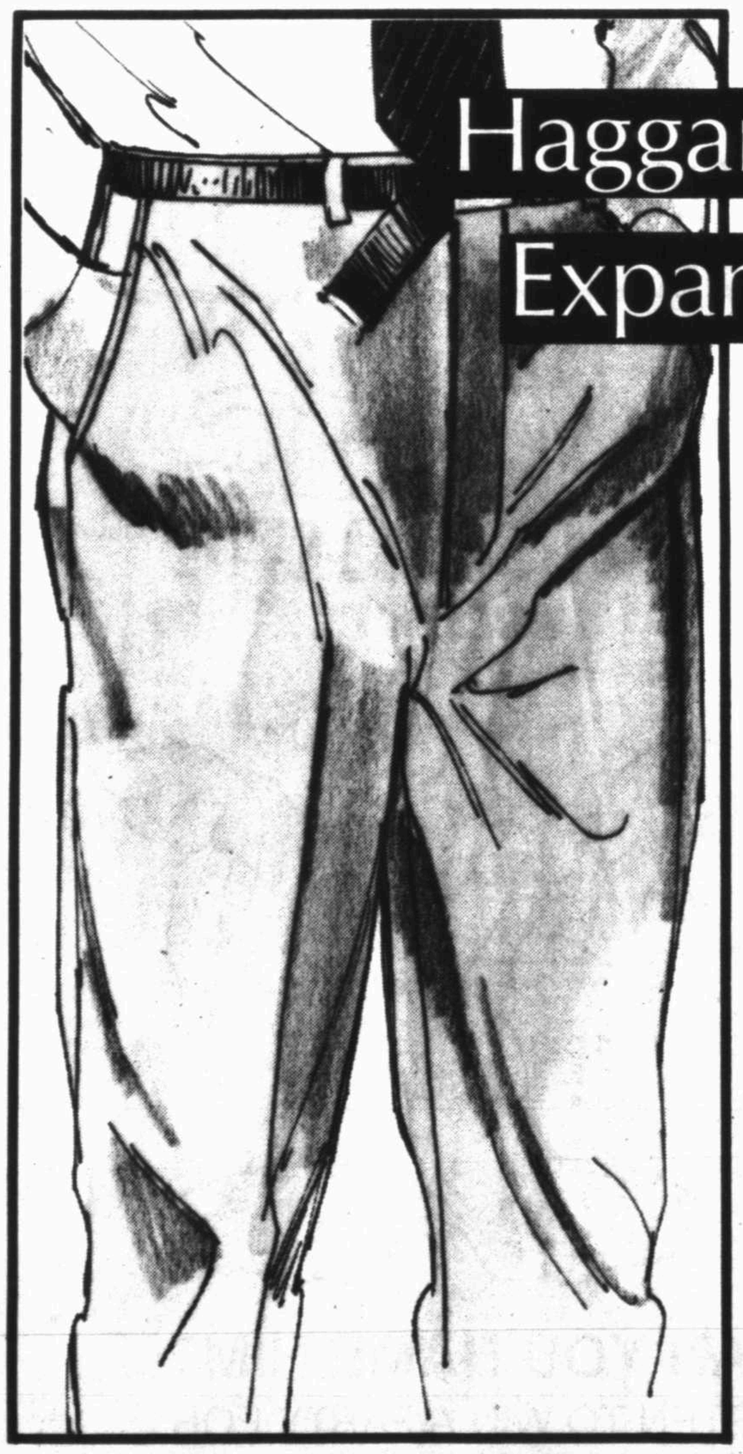

Hospital officials said another four Panamanians remained hospitalized in "stable" condition but gave no further details.

The Southern Command said Army Spec. Anthony B. Ward, 21, of Houston, died Saturday of chest and abdomen wounds at the U.S. military's Gorgas Hospital in Panama City, where the injured are being treated.

Panamanian police said they had questioned several witnesses to the bombing but announced no arrests.

Firefighter Reginald Rankin of the Midland Fire Department squeegees water Monday in a 14th floor office of the Texas Commerce Bank building, 400 W. Illinois Ave. The blaze started about 9:20 p.m. in an unoccupied office after the spontaneous combustion of some varnish-soaked rags, officials said.

Oily rags spark office fire

Staff Report

Rags soaked with an oil-based varnish were the culprits behind a Monday fire in a downtown Midland office building, Mark Hamilton, Midland Fire Department inspector, said today.

The blaze, which caused little damage, started about 9:20 p.m. in an unoccupied office on the 14th floor of the Texas American Bank building, 400 W., Illinois Ave., Hamilton said.

The spontaneous combustion of rags in a trash bucket started a fire which was extinguished minutes after Midland firefighters arrived, Hamilton said.

"The directions on one of the cans of stain said 'water soak the rags,'" he said. "There are certain oils that when just left sitting in a rag will spontaneously combust."

After smelling the smoke and discovering the fire, tenants of a law office on the same floor called emergency officials, Hamilton said.

He said the fire was mostly confined to burning trash, although there was some water and fire damage to books in nearby offices, he said.

Embattled Big Spring mayor opts to fight

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

BIG SPRING — Max Green, who seems determined to stay on as mayor despite efforts to oust him and his controversial deeds out of office, said he will "not resign" the mayor's post.

"My supporters and advisers believe that we are politically strong enough that we can win another election," Green said Monday.

He and they will find out soon enough, as the Big Spring City Council meets at 5 p.m. today at the Big Spring Airport to set the date in March for a recall election.

"I will not waste these final days of count-down before the day of the recall election," Green, a 59-year-old accountant, said in a press conference in which he declined to field questions from reporters.

"I will be suggesting new ways to improve our city government, making decisions, and asking for comments from all citizens of this community on how we can improve our current situation."

Green supporters say the mayor is seeking "accountability" in city government.

Green has been accused of acting too much like a city manager in trying to run the city and less like a mayor who is often bound to perfunctory-public relations duties, such as cutting ribbons at ceremonies and greeting visitors.

Should the recall election go in his favor, Green said he would "continue to work for efficiency" in Big Spring city government.

"This will cause me to remain as a controversial mayor."

The motorcycle-riding mayor has cause for controversy.

Green was elected mayor on May 6, 1989, by only 305 votes in defeating the incumbent, Cotton Mize, who now is a candidate for Howard County judge. Green garnered 1,420 votes to Mize's 1,115 in an election that attracted only 21.5 percent of the electorate: 11,825 registered voters in 1989.

The Mize faction was overly confident, and Green supporters turned out the vote in greater numbers, observers say.

Perhaps more than what he does, Green is faulted by his critics, including members of his own City Council, of defying procedures — the traditional ways of doing things.

"I'm very dissatisfied and unhappy with his performance in the role of mayor," said Green critic Carie Dunnam, a 28-year-old former school teacher who took the lead in soliciting signatures to effect a recall election.

"I will be suggesting new ways to improve our city government, making decisions, and asking for comments from all citizens of this community on how we can improve our current situation."

— Max Green,
Big Spring mayor

Petitioners got the signatures of at least 894 registered voters — a number equal to 35 percent of the number of voters who cast ballots in the last city election, which happened to be the 1989 Green-Mize race. Big Spring city ordinances require signatures equal to 35 percent of ballots cast in the last election to bring about a recall election, according to Lana East, assistant city secretary.

Mrs. Dunnam said that Green has "disregarded proper procedure," has favored some city councilmen, including Mayor Pro-Tem Sidney Clark and D.D. Johnston, over others, in seeking advice and counsel, and became the "catalyst" in dividing the City Council and the city.

"He is our city mayor," but, complained Mrs. Dunnam, "he takes on the role of city manager. In our form of city government, he (the mayor) is the No. 1 public relations man for your community. He cuts ribbons."

"Our form of city government can be compared to England," Mrs. Dunnam said. "You've got the Prime Minister who manages the country — oversees it. And you've got the Queen of England, who acts as a promoter of that country and attends ceremonies. Who runs the country? (Prime Minister) Margaret Thatcher."

Rather than being a ceremonial mayor, Green, for instance, took it "upon himself to clean up the police department" while the city manager, Hal Boyd, was out of town, Mrs. Dunnam said. "I've never met him. I've watched him on the Council," she admitted.

Green had "gone public" with allegations of police brutality, harassment and ill-doing, such as police gambling, rather than let city administrators check out the allegations first.

"He made the allegations public" before discussing the charges with the city manager, Mrs. Dunnam said. "The allegations were pure bunk," she said. "The allegations were laughable — a third-grader would have more common sense than he has displayed. I have been appalled by his lack of good judgment."

More recently, Green, who had campaigned on a "No Tax Max" stance in 1989, vetoed a 40 percent city sanitation rate increase, which Green interpreted as "just another tax increase."

"We need to do more work and further study before a final increase is approved," Green had reasoned. The council had favored the measure by a 4-to-2 vote.

City Manager Hal Boyd, a retired military brigadier general, said that the city, which boasts a population approaching 25,000 but some say probably is about 20,000 due to the economic downturn, is "suffering from negative press."

Boyd, who maintains a "neutral" public stance on the Green controversy, said that "regardless of the outcome" of the recall election, of utmost importance is for city leaders, administrators and staff to join others in making Big Spring a "better place to live" and to make the West Texas city "opportunistic" for industry in order to encourage economic growth.

"The city manager and staff has to continuously work and strive to maintain integrity regardless of the outcome of the (recall) election," Boyd said. "We have been caught in the middle of this thing, and we've tried to remain as neutral as possible."

Rather than being anti-Green, City Council-woman Gail Earls said that she perceives Green was an ineffective mayor.

The mayor consults some councilmen, such as Clark and Johnston, but ignores others, she said.

"I don't really feel slighted," Ms. Earls said. "If we are a unit, we

MISD excited about record level of Merit finalists

By DAVID MORRIS
Staff Writer

Midland Independent School District officials are still beaming over the announcement last month that 11 MISD seniors are National Merit Scholarship finalists, giving MISD as many finalists as Lubbock and Ector County schools combined.

Lee High School had seven finalists and Midland High School had four, more than administrators at either campus remember having in the past.

National Merit Scholarship Corp. spokesperson Elaine Detweiler said there are about 14,000 finalists nationwide, or less than one-half of 1 percent of graduating seniors.

Finalists are chosen from the ranks of semifinalists based on SAT scores, school recommendations, extracurricular activities and grade-point average, Ms. Detweiler said.

Semifinalists qualify based on performance on the Pre-Scholastic Aptitude Test taken during the junior year.

Ms. Detweiler said about 6,100 finalists will go on to win National Merit scholarships of various amounts. Even finalists who do not win money will still find their college prospects improved, she said.

"Obviously, it identifies these students as academically talented," she said. "It makes them very desirable students for colleges."

Beth Manning, LHS instructional services director, said LHS finalists are multitalented, hardworking and good test-takers.

"They are bright people, but of course we know that a number of bright people are not successful in (the area of) standardized tests," Ms. Manning said. "We do have a number of bright people who 'freeze up' on tests."

Karen Wentworth, MHS instructional services director, said the finalists there are "the finest kids you could ever hope to have in your school."

She said the students and their families deserve as much credit for making it to the finals as the schools.

"I wish we could take all the credit for them," Ms. Wentworth said. "I have no doubt that they have had outstanding teachers all the way through their schooling."

MHS finalists are:

■ Joseph Baressi, son of Joseph and Joyce Baressi. Baressi already has been accepted at Harvard University, where he would like to study economics, liberal arts or psychology.

"I have not narrowed my prospective fields of study down a great deal," Baressi said. "These fields interest me a great deal, however."

Baressi, president of the MHS Spanish Club and a varsity tennis player, also is involved with the Casa de Amigos community center and Big Brothers/Big Sisters of Midland.

■ Jay Parsons, son of Dianne Parsons. Parsons is interested in attending either Texas A&M or the University of Texas at Austin. He has been accepted at A&M, and plans a major in aerospace engineering.

Parsons, president of the MHS German club, a Boys' State delegate and member of the National Honor Society, said he is looking forward to graduation.

"I was extremely excited about receiving this honor," he said. "I have been waiting for the results for a long time."

■ Laura Kathryn "Katie" Setzer, daughter of John and Kay Setzer. She would like to attend the University of North Texas, where she already has been accepted.

Miss Setzer, a National Honor Society member and Student Council chaplain, plans a major in English with an emphasis on creative writing.

"I love to write and always have," she said. "I have a natural love for language."

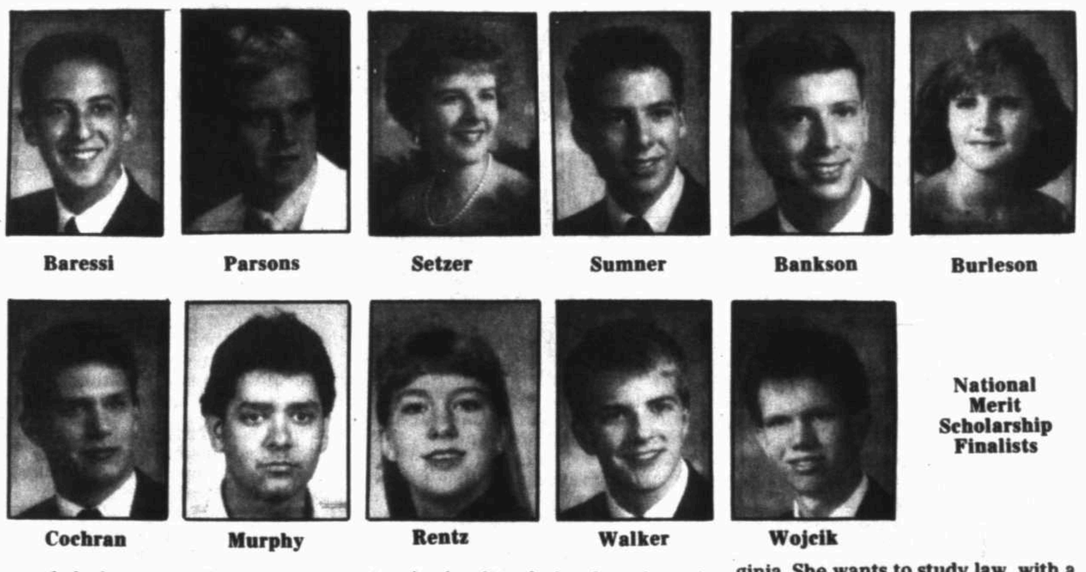

A two-year winner of the city spelling bee, Miss Setzer has been a Trinity Towers Retirement Home volunteer for three years.

■ Whit Sumner, son of William U. and Betty W. Sumner. Sumner would like to attend either Stanford or Dartmouth and has been accepted at UT.

He is interested in an economics, psychology or computer science major.

"These are the fields I find interesting," he said. "I would hate to make a hasty decision and learn that my career does not suit my interest."

Sumner, a soccer player and National Honor Society member, said he tries to keep the National Merit accolade in perspective.

Baressi | Parsons | Setzer | Sumner | Bankson | Burleson

Cochran | Murphy | Rentz | Walker | Wojcik

National Merit Scholarship Finalists

"It's nice to be distinguished, but then again I see other students who deserve just as much distinguishment but are overlooked simply because of their scores on a single test," he said.

LHS finalists are:

■ James Bankson, son of Glenn M. and Maudine Bankson. Bankson has been accepted at Texas A&M, where he plans an electrical engineering major.

"Math comes fairly easily to me, and I have been interested in electronic circuitry design for a long time," Bankson said.

Bankson is the LHS National Honor Society president, class salutatorian, and a member of the football and track teams.

"It's a wonderful feeling to receive distinction like this," he said. "I have wanted this honor for a very long time, and I am very happy that it has come true."

■ Bridget L. Burleson, daughter of Cindy Burleson. Miss Burleson is waiting on acceptances from Duke University and the University of Virginia. She wants to study law, with a background in political science or business.

"Studying law would provide me with a solid, reputable profession with financial security," she said.

Miss Burleson, a member of the varisty track team and the National Honor Society, also is a Parents Anonymous volunteer and winner of the National Council of Teachers of English writing award.

Hobby suggests 14-cent-per-pack increase in cigarette tax

By RICK BROWN
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — A 14-cent-per-pack hike in the cigarette tax would pass the Legislature "in a minute" and bring needed revenue to the state's beleagured education system, Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby said Monday.

The tax proposal, the latest money-raiser to waft out of the Legislature since lawmakers reconvened this past week, met immediate opposition from Gov. Bill Clements.

"I just don't seem to get it through to you all that there's just not going to be any tax bill as far as I'm concerned," said the governor.

The governor's continued "no new taxes" stance in the face of a state Supreme Court decision brought complaints from Sen. Carl Parker, D-Port Arthur, who called the position "bull."

Parker is co-chairman of a Senate committee attempting to hammer out legislation to satisfy the court, which found the state's school finance system unconstitutional and discriminatory against students in poorer districts.

Parker said lawmakers must heed Clements' opinion "as long as he's got that big veto stamp," but the only way to call his bluff is with "a bill lying on his desk."

The senator earlier had conjectured the "sin tax" cigarette hike might meet with Clements' approval, but the governor said that Parker is "not exactly what I'd call one of my confidants."

Joe Thrash, a Hobby tax aide, said the 14-cent hike above the current 26 cents per pack would generate about $150 million in new money. Whether the revenue could be matched with an estimated $300 million in federal aid was a open question, Thrash said, although Hobby held out the possibility.

Lawmakers previously have floated a half-cent increase in the sales tax as a source of about $500 million, but that idea also has prompted disfavorable comment from Clements.

Hobby has endorsed a state income tax coupled with elimination of some property taxes and the corporate franchise tax as a fairer system of providing for schools and other state revenue needs.

Parker, Hobby and Sen. Kent Caperton, D-Bryan, are sponsoring legislation that needs nearly $800 million in new state money next year and more than $1 billion each of the following two years.

Presiding over Senate subcommittee hearings on the measure Monday, Parker said the legislation would increase basic education expenditures from $1,500 per student to $1,910 next school year and $2,100 in the 1992-93 school year.

For local enrichment, the bill would provide a guaranteed yield system to reward school districts with matching state money for increasing their local property taxes beyond a certain amount.

Such a system already in place provides districts with $18.25 per student per each penny of tax effort above 34 cents and up to 70 cents.

The Hobby-Parker-Caperton bill would increase the guaranteed yield to $22 per student next school year, and it would reach $26 in the 1992-1993 school year.

Starting in 1993-94, the range of tax effort covered by the guaranteed yield program would be determined by the Legislative Education Board, a panel of 10 House and Senate lawmakers.

The added power is an example of how the legislation would remove responsibilities from the state Board of Education.

With the measure, the state board also would lose power in selecting the commissioner of education and even in choosing its own chairman.

The legislation provides that the LEB would offer a list of nominees for education commissioner to the governor, who would make the choice with the consent of the Senate.

Al Kauffman, a San Antonio attorney representing poorer school districts that won the Supreme Court decision, said the schools "probably" would take the state back to court if its remedy is based solely on the Parker legislation.

While the bill provides "a good first step" by providing more money for education, Kauffman said it offered no substantial change in the state's system of allocating education money.

Without caps in the amount of enrichment spending that wealthier school districts give to their students, "it will create additional in equities in the future," Kauffman said.

The Senate subcommittee will continue its work today, after U.S. Secretary of Education Lauro Cavazos addresses House and Senate members this morning.

Meanwhile, three House members charged by House Speaker Gib Lewis to draft that chamber's education finance bill may almost have completed the job.

DEATHS

U.E. Thorne

Services for U.E. Thorne of Mabank and formerly of Midland were to be at 10 a.m. today at the Ellis Chapel with the Rev. Bill Skaggs officiating. Interment was to follow at Resthaven Memorial Park with Ellis Funeral Home in charge of arrangements.

Thorne

He died Sunday in Dallas.

He was born Jan. 8, 1910 in Lake City, Ark., where he was reared. He attended Texas Tech in 1929-30. In 1930, he joined Magnolia Oil Company as a gas measurement engineer in Pampa. He moved to Dallas in 1948 and was with Magnolia until 1952. He worked for Myrnaill Oil from 1952-54. At that time he joined Goliad Oil & Gas Corp., and remained with them until 1964 while living in Calgary, Alberta, Canada.

He returned to Dallas in 1964 and purchased Alliance Gas Corp., which he owned and operated until his death. He married Allie Wallace in June of 1932. She died Oct. 16, 1982.

Survivors include one son, Gerald W. Thorne of Garland; one daughter, Karla Thorne Minix of Mabank; two sisters, Clella Haddock of Borger and Wanda Mounts of Tacoma, Wash.; three grandchildren; three great-grandchildren and one nephew.

The family requests memorials be directed to the American Diabetes Association.

Pallbearers were to be Bill Clay, Bobby Minix, Bobby Low Wallace, Nickey Grimes, Michael Imber and Eddy Markham.

Minnie W. Soper

Graveside services for Minnie W. Soper, mother of a Midland man, were to be at 4 p.m. today at Resthaven Memorial Park with Rev. Oscar Newell officiating. Ellis Funeral Home is in charge of arrangements.

She died Monday at a Lubbock hospital.

She was born July 14, 1916, in McCleansboro, Ill., where she was reared. She met Ted Soper in Alton, Ill., where he was a pilot for Tri-Service Drilling. They were married April 29, 1939, in St. Louis, Mo. The Sopers moved to Midland in 1949. The husband died in 1985 and Mrs. Soper moved to Lubbock that same year.

She was a member of the First Baptist Church.

Survivors include one son, Dean Soper of Midland; one daughter, Carol Fillingim of Lubbock; one sister, Lois Snover of Bethalto, Ill.; and four grandchildren.

The family requests that memorials be directed to Hospice or the American Cancer Society.

'Clay' Fellabaum Jr.

Services for Clayton "Clay" Fellabaum Jr. of Midland are pending with Ellis Funeral Home.

He died Monday at a local hospital.

Ethel Lee Duson

Ethel Lee Duson, 66, of Midland died Sunday at a local hospital following a brief illness.

Services are pending with Thomas Funeral Home.

Ina L. Mitchell

Services for Ina L. Mitchell of Midland are pending with Ellis Funeral Home.

She died Monday at a local hospital.

Watkins says DOE committed to SSC

WASHINGTON (AP) — Energy Secretary James A. Watkins says he's committed to building the super collider as originally envisioned, but won't know until June how much the design changes would add to the overall cost.

The collider's price tag already has increased once — from $4.4 billion to a current estimate of $5.9 billion — and Watkins said he expects another increase of $1 billion to $2 billion to build the particle accelerator as large and as powerful as first planned.

But a final cost estimate won't be available until June, Watkins told the House Appropriations subcommittee on energy and water development.

The cost increase — coupled with the lack of a firm figure on the new estimate — could spell trouble in Congress as supporters seek their second year of construction funding for what would be the world's largest scientific instrument, to be built south of Dallas.

"This creates some problems, yes it does. I wish the were able to give us a definite fig e, but we have been through this many times on other projects," said Rep. Tom Bevill, D-Ala., the influential chairman of the energy appropriations subcommittee.

Asked if Congress could reverse last year's commitment to building the collider, Bevill appeared unsure of the project's fate, saying: "That's always possible. No, I don't think that's going to happen. I don't know. I don't know. At this point I don't know."

Watkins said physics changes in the design of the project to build it as envisioned could increase the cost by $1.2 billion alone. Changes in labor rates could add another $300 million to the final cost.

The collider would be a a 54-mile underground ring where subatomic particles are hurled against each other to test theories about the fundamental nature of matter.

Rep. Silvio O. Conte, R-Mass., ranking Republican on the full House Appropriations Committee, criticized the collider at Monday's hearing as 54 miles of tunnel "and no practical application."

Watkins said two independent studies to determine the impact of design changes on the cost of building the particle accelerator likely would be finished in June.

Land purchases may start soon

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Energy Department is expected today to give Texas the OK to begin acquiring land for the superconducting super collider, according to published reports.

The department is ready to give the state the "footprint" for the project — the precise amount of land needed in Ellis County to build the 54-mile circumference, underground facility just south of Dallas, unnamed sources told the Dallas Times Herald.

With that information, which originally had been scheduled for release in October, Dallas, Tarrant and Ellis counties will be able to start issuing bonds to purchase property from private land owners in the Waxahachie area. The Texas National Research Laboratory Commission also will be able to ante up some of the $1 billion in bonds state voters approved to offset the project's $5.9 billion cost.

Officials say the long-awaited development will demonstrate continued Bush administration confidence that the atom smasher will be built.

Gubernatorial race spending near $25 million

AUSTIN (AP) — With one week remaining before the March 13 primary election, spending by major candidates for governor has reached nearly $25 million.

And, according to campaign finance reports filed with the secretary of state Monday, Lonnie "Bo" Pilgrim — a central figure in last year's political ethics scandal — helped Republican contender Kent Hance get a $450,000 loan.

The seven major candidates for governor have spent approximately $24.9 million for the eight-month period from July 1, 1989 through March 3, 1990, according to the finance records.

The latest reports covered the 30-day period from Feb. 2 to March 3 and are the last public disclosure of campaign donations and expenditures required before the primaries.

Republican Clayton Williams is leading the candidates in spending at $7.77 million over the past eight months.

Of the $7.92 million he has raised, Williams, a millionaire rancher and oilman, has dug into his own pocket for $5.65 million through loans to himself. Polls show Williams is leading the GOP field.

Hance is No. 2 among the Republicans in spending at $3.28 million, and helped shore up his warchest last month with a $450,000 loan guaranteed by Pilgrim, an East Texas poultry magnate, and four others.

Last year, Pilgrim caused a public uproar when he hand-delivered $10,000 checks to 10 state senators and talked to the lawmakers about workers' compensation insurance reforms shortly before the Senate was to vote on a workers' comp bill.

Reports of the alleged influence-peddling rocked the Capitol, sparked an investigation and drew national attention to the Texas Legislature and the state's ethic guidelines for public officials.

Roundup of suspects in drug case continues

Staff Report

Midland police this morning had only seven more suspects left to capture in a roundup of 32 people indicted by a grand jury in an undercover drug sweep, police reports said.

Four were marked off the list Monday, including one of whom was found already in the Midland County Jail on other charges, reports said.

Grand jurors in 238th District Judge Vann Culp's court issued indictments Friday charging the suspects with delivery of a controlled substance.

Those arrested Monday were Benjamin L. Wilson, 17, and Thomas Broom, 47, both of Midland. Bond for Edwin Dunson, 29, also of Midland and who was already in Midland County Jail on violation of parole charges, was set at $20,000.

Wilson was released on $20,000 bond, and Broom was released on $10,000 bond, officials said. Dunson was still in jail, officials said.

Odessa police said they arrested James Y. Starks, 25, in their city at 10 p.m. Monday. The Midland grand jury recommended a $20,000 bond on Starks, who was still in jail this morning, officials said.

The roundup is the result of a two-month investigation in which narcotics officials made drug buys in the 200 block of North Lee Street. The search began Friday, when officers from the Midland Police Department, U.S. Drug Enforcement Agency and the Texas Department of Public Safety descended on the area.

Number, quality of science fair entries illustrates 'high caliber'

Staff Report

Nearly 200 Midland Independent School students participated in the district's annual science fair Feb. 24 at Midland Park Mall. More than 150 projects were judged by a 32-man panel.

Elementary categorical winners and all secondary school participants will advance to the regional science fair, March 30 and 31, at University of Texas of the Permian Basin.

"The quantity and quality of participation in this year's fair is indicative of the high caliber of science instruction taking place in Midland schools," commented Jan Artley, MISD's science coordinator.

Third-grade winners were: Bonham student Katherine Chandler's "Which is a stronger base?" in the Physical Science I division, followed by Anthony Swift of Emerson and Ryan Price of Bowie; Jones' Nicholaus Collier's "Measuring Energy" and Travis' Nicole Haynes' "Magnetic Force" tied for top honors in the Physical Science II division ahead of Lindsey Suttles and the team of Julie Purves and Sarah Hopkins, all of Rusk; "Germ Wars " by Michael Amiet of Emerson won the Life Science division over Kali Gervais of Jones and Ryan Miller of Rusk; Emerson's Matt Davis took top honors in the Earth/Space Science division with "How Planes Fly," followed by Rusty Reed of Fannin and Ashley Tadt of Parker.

Fourth-grade winners were: Burnet student Tyler Rhodes' "Shock Absorbers," Kristin Backmann of Jones with 'Effect of Bleach on 10 Fabrics" and Amanda Watkins and Mary Hooper of Burnet, whose "How Soda Ash Affects Dye" tied for top honors in the Physical Science division, followed by Steve Chambers of Henderson; "Genetics" by Keith Boya of Parker won the Life Science division over T.J. Turner of Lamar, the team of Allison Murray and Erika Bucy, who tied for second and Rebecca Soto, all of Bonham; Long's Kristen Knight and Melissa Dixon took top honors in the Earth/Space Science division with "Magical Crystals," followed by Heather Hernandez and Kristin Myers of Parker; Chris Kelly of Jones was judged to have the top invention with his "Solar Water Heater," ahead of Sasha Yunginger of Henderson and Greg Morgan of Long.

Fifth-grade winners were: Fannin student Amy Elliott's "Will It Float or Sink," in the Physical Science division, followed by Matthew Cochrane of Emerson, Lisa Solberg of Santa Rita and J.J. Boazman of Houston; "Plants and Different Lights and Mediums" by Stacy Foster of Santa Rita won the Life Science division over Laura Hamblin of Fannin and the team of Stacy Allen and Bill Reis of Scharbauer, who tied for second, and Kearsten Ritchell of Houston and Jennifer Frey of Santa Rita, who tied for third; Scharbauer's Raymond Taylor took top honors in the Earth/Space Science division with "Blame It on the Rain," followed by the team of Holly Walker and Heather Walker of Bowie and Marc Rose of Fannin; Mike Waller and Jay Bazile of Santa Rita were judged to have the top invention with their "Golf Game," ahead of Michael Huff and Darrell Wojtek of Fannin and Jamie Cooper of Scharbauer.

Sixth-grade winners were: South student Dickie Russell's "Which Battery Lasts Longest" in the Physical Science division, followed by Tim Lirley and Aaron Childress of Washington, and Leslie McRae and Julie Phillips of Crockett; "Cigarettes Nicotene/Tar" by Craig Reynolds of Crockett and "The Effect of Alcohol on the Liver" by Michael Van Dyke of Washington tied for honors in the Life Science division over Chad Villareal of South and the team of Chad Hutchings and Russell Nix of Washington, who tied for second and Kate Degenstein and Robin Peterson of DeZavala and Elaine Wright of Pease, who tied for third; Crockett's Jill Roloff took top honors in the Earth/Space Science division with "Water Purification," followed by Robby Gardner of DeZavala and Colleen McCarty of Fannin; Jennifer Wisdom and Heather Mees of DeZavala were judged to have the top invention with their "Ice Cream Pedaler" ahead of Matthew Clark and Jeremy Noel of DeZavala and Stacy Smith of Pease.

MAYOR

ought to be working as a unit. Instead of calling Sidney (Clark) or D.D. (Johnston), he could have called me on the police thing. I wouldn't have supported him. That's why we have Hal Boyd — to take care of these things."

"I just don't think Big Spring can progress with him as mayor. He says he wants the city to progress, but he doesn't want any tax increase," Ms. Earls said. "I think he is trying to uncover something — something hidden — and he hasn't found it yet."

While the City Council tries to "go by the proper procedure, he (Green) has always chosen not to."

Despite the Green controversy, "I don't think Big Spring can be divided," Ms. Earls said. "The people are too good."

Green supporter Howard Walker, who owns a Harley-Davidson motorcycle dealership in Big Spring, said he believes in Green 100 percent.

"I'm a businessman and a taxpayer," Walker said, "and he is trying to do everything he said he was going to do."

But, Walker noted, "He doesn't do everything perfect."

Green does the "right thing," Walker said. "But he went about it the wrong way. He's just doing his job."

A solution to Big Spring's economic woes are not to raise taxes, Walker said, but rather to create an atmosphere which would bring in new industry and business to the community.

The mayor has fans and critics.

Verma Decker, who has lived in Big Spring since 1956, said that Green "was elected mayor by the people (and) ... he should serve his (three-year) term. And I think he it would be funny if every Council member was petitioned out of office."

Ms. Decker, 60, said that even if Green is recalled as mayor, and the City Council appoints a successor, "I doubt if they will have any better city government."

Ocey Mason, who counts himself among Green's friends, said, "I'm for what he did and what he will probably do in the future."

"The majority put him in (office) — in the first place, and they don't have any business griping about it," Mason said. The mayor's critics are mostly "jealous" of Green, who, "If he sees something wrong," such as in the police department, tries to correct the situation. "They (critics) don't know the details (of issues)."

Johnnie Lou Avery, former president of the Big Spring Area Chamber of Commerce, said that the Green controversy has caused division.

"The controversy and disharmony among our City Council and the division it has caused within the community certainly cast a negative impression about Big Spring," Mrs. Avery said.

The recall election is merely a "part of our democratic way of way," she said.

"And I believe that we, as a community, will work through our differences and will have a stronger city government and be able to carry on the business of the city.

"It's hard for a general citizen to know who is at fault or what all the problems are," Mrs. Avery said, "because so many things happen behind the scenes."

"But we must get our act together."

MERIT

ran, son of Phillip M. Cochran and Rhonda S. Cochran. Cochran plans a pre-med major at Abilene Christian Unviversity.

"I intend to receive my medical degree and then travel with either the Peace Corps or a church-sponsored mission team to either South America or Africa," Cochran said.

Cochran, a basketball team captain, also is a member of the National Honor Society and the Bio-Med Club. He is a Meals on Wheels volunteer and a member of the Church of Christ youth group.

He said he was "extremely thrilled and grateful to receive this honor" and considers it "one of the high points" of his academic career.

■ Jim Murphy, son of Marianna Murphy. Murphy plans a double major in liberal arts and math at UT, after which he plans to attend law school.

"I enjoy math, but want to practice law because I like to argue and would enjoy the challenge," Murphy said.

Murphy is a National Honor Society member and a member of the LHS Academic Decathlon team.

■ Meredith Rentz, daughter of Charles and Brooksie Rentz. Miss Rentz plans to attend Baylor University, but is uncertain of her major.

She is on the Academic Decathlon team and is a member of the Bio-Med club.

"Test taking is a skill talent, just like music or athletics," Miss Rentz said. "That I am blessed with this talent is an honor in itself, compounded by the honor of being named a merit finalist."

■ Tim Walker Jr., son of Tim and Glenda Walker. Walker would like to attend either Duke or Harvard University and has been accepted at UT. He plans a major in political science or psychology and hopes to pursue a career in the diplomatic service, film-making or writing.

A two-year editor-in-chief at the LHS student newspaper, Walker also is on the LHS debate team and a member of the National Forensic League, a Boys' State delegate and a U.S. Presidential Scholarship semifinalist.

He is a Meals On Wheels and Christmas In April volunteer.

Of being a finalist, Walker said, "I am very pleased. I hope that I can serve as an example to other students of what the pursuit of a good education can bring."

■ Brian Wojcik, son of Rene and Linda Wojcik. Wojkic plans to study computer science at Texas A&M.

Wojcik is a varsity soccer team co-captain, member of the all-district soccer team and member of the National Honor Society.

"I was very pleased," Wojcik said about being a finalist. "It was the culmination of all my work in high school."

Greyhound losing replacement drivers

Company 'not surprised' by reaction as walkout turns violent

By JOHN A. BOLT
AP Business Writer

DALLAS — Some drivers hired by Greyhound Lines Inc. to replace strikers in the sometimes violent, 4-day-old nationwide walkout have quit.

"There have been a few of them that have left, and we are not surprised by that," Greyhound spokesman George Gravley confirmed Monday after sources who refused to be identified said some replacement drivers have walked off the job.

In the company's central region, covering the northern third of the country roughly from Pittsburgh to Denver, 32 replacements have quit, the sources said.

Unions representing 6,300 drivers and 3,000 maintenance workers began the strike Friday; Greyhound estimates 700 replacement drivers are at work.

An internal message sent to Greyhound reservations and district officials said the company is being forced to lower its level of service in the central region partly because of the loss of newly hired drivers.

But Gravley said the change was forced mainly because fewer than expected replacements were hired.

As for those who quit, he said, "They knew what they were getting into. These people were recruited and they were told honestly and forthrightly ... the nature of the work. We told them that there could be times when they might be intimidated."

Shots have been fired at a bus in Chicago, a striking driver was killed when he was crushed by a bus backing up to get around a picket line in Redding, Calif., and vandalism of buses been reported around the nation.

Chairman Fred G. Currey has said Greyhound can withstand the strike in part because more than 6,500 people have applied to be permanent replacements for the drivers. Greyhound maintains it will be at full service before the end of March.

Currey said 350 union drivers are at work and the company is providing about 29 percent of its normal service, though that rate is as high as 50 percent in the Denver area. The union said only 95 members have crossed picket lines.

The strike began over wages and job security Friday when contract negotiations collapsed. No full scale talks have been held since.

In another development, a judge in Portland, Ore., on Monday barred strikers from interfering with replacements.

"The potential for someone to be injured or killed is tremendous," Circuit Judge Robert W. Redding said. Six other such orders have been issued nationwide.

Court sets aside two death sentences

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — The death sentences of two Texas prison inmates were set aside by the U.S. Supreme Court Monday in a decision expanding on a similar ruling in a Texas death penalty case last year.

The justices told the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans to reconsider the appeals of Warren Eugene Bridge, 29, and Samuel Hawkins, 46, because of a previous decision that said sentencing juries must be free to consider a defendant's mental retardation as a mitigating factor.

Last year, the Supreme Court ruled in the case of Texas death row inmate Johnny Penry that states could execute mentally retarded killers only if jurors were allowed to take the defendant's mental condition into consideration.

Mental retardation was not a factor in the Bridge and Hawkins cases, but their attorneys argued that jurors were not allowed to consider other mitigating circumstances in the sentencing phases of their trials.

Bridge's attorney, Anthony Griffin of Galveston, said he was pleased with the court's decision.

"I alleged that a jury should be allowed to consider all the (mitigating) circumstances. That may include that he was young or his background, not just retardation," Griffin said. "I don't think the jury was able to consider all the circumstances."

Bridge was 19 when sentenced to die for the Feb. 10, 1980, robbery-slaying of Walter Rose, 62, a Galveston convenience store clerk. Rose was shot four times with a .38-caliber pistol as Bridge and a co-defendant robbed the store of $24.

Rose died Feb. 24, 1980, four days after Bridge and Costa were arrested.

Hawkins, who received a stay 3½ hours before he was scheduled to be executed in December 1988, was convicted of the Feb. 3, 1976, rape-slaying of 19-year-old Abbe Hamilton of Borger. Ms. Hamilton, who was six months pregnant with her first child, was stabbed as many as 20 times with a butcher knife.

Hawkins also has a second death sentence for the abduction and slaying of a 12-year-old Amarillo girl. He became known as the "traveling rapist' after admitting to some 40 rapes, prosecutors said.

Last week, the Supreme Court told the 5th Circuit to reconsider the case of John Henry Selvage, a retarded Texas prison inmate who was sentenced to die for the 1979 shooting death of a Harris County deputy sheriff, during a jewelry store robbery.

Hightower announces Texas-Mexico initiatives

AUSTIN (AP) — Texans in the agriculture business are reaping the benefits of a new openness in the Mexican economy that has boosted direct trade across the border, Department of Agriculture Commissioner Jim Hightower said.

Farmers, ranchers and fiber growers established contacts and made deals for the first time during a meeting of the Mexico-Texas Exchange Commission held in Mexico City on Feb. 22-23, Hightower said at a news conference Monday.

"The main result of the meeting in Mexico City is not the trade deals and joint ventures and exchanges but the fact that the door is now open, the relationship is secure and the opportunity is there," he said.

"We have been seeking more than just sales. We've been seeking, really, a partnership — a partnership based on trust, on mutual gain and on openness," Hightower added.

The initiatives are significant because in the past, Mexican government agencies had overseen the purchase of agricultural products in volumes too large for the private Texas producer to supply, Hightower said.

"They're making a deliberate and very aggressive effort to privatize more of their economy, and to decentralize it," he said.

Negotiations to start the direct exchanges have been in the works for seven years. Texas signed a formal trade protocol agreement with Mexico in 1985, making it the only state to do so, Hightower said.

Agricultural trade between the United States and Mexico was worth $4 billion in 1988, he added.

"Texas' No. 1 agricultural customer is Mexico, and historically has been. That has been on the decline during the 80s because of economic problems on both sides of the Rio Grande," he said. "Basically, if we could just get the people together, they will find ways to get us out of this economic mess we've been in."

The third general meeting of the Texas-Mexico Exchange Commission was attended by 60 Texans and 150 Mexicans, including academicians and government officials who are trying to lessen Mexican government bureaucracy and initiate joint research and development programs, Hightower said.

He said deals now are in the works between Texas producers of rice, corn, beef, and dairy heifers and Mexican buyers, as well as between Texas delegates interested in buying flowers, organic coffee and produce from Mexican producers.

One of the delegates attending the exchange, Beaumont-area rice farmer Roosevelt Guillory, said he had little luck before the exchange when he tried to sell his crops in Mexico. "I want to say that after the meeting we had last week, that things are looking real good," he said.

Texas rice producers are discussing with several Mexican companies terms of sale for 30,000 metric tons of rice, valued at more than $10 million, Hightower said.

Court to decide brother's fate as mom jailed in alcohol death

EVERMAN (AP) — A court hearing was scheduled today to decide the fate of a 2-year-old boy whose mother was charged Monday in the alcohol poisoning death of the boy's 5-year-old brother.

Patricia Griffin, 31, was being held at the Tarrant County Jail on $10,000 bond on a charge of injury to a child by gross negligence in the death last Wednesday of her son, Raymond Thomas Griffin II.

A 21-year-old man also has been charged.

The third-degree felony charge against Ms. Griffin carries a 10-year prison term and a fine of up to $10,000.

Child protective services workers took Raymond's 2-year-old brother, Rasad, from Ms. Griffin's home after Raymond's death. The hearing today before Tarrant County Juvenile Judge Scott Moore will determine whether he stays in a foster home.

Everman Police Chief Roger Larm said Monday that investigators believe Ms. Griffin was negligent because Raymond did not receive immediate medical attention.

"An ambulance wasn't called until 16 hours after the original consumption of alcohol, and 12 hours after he started being seriously ill," Larm said.

The boy, police said, was encouraged to drink 10 ounces of bourbon "like a man" at a neighborhood gathering the night of March 2. Investigators said he began having convulsions at about 3 a.m. the next day, but an ambulance was not summoned until 2:45 p.m.

Doctors said the boy suffered irreversible brain damage after ingesting the bourbon and some beer and had a blood alcohol content of .55, which is five times the legal definition of intoxication in Texas.

The boy died at Cook-Fort Worth Childrens Medical Center after life support systems were disconnected.

Amarillo seeks compromise on Pantex air restrictions

WASHINGTON (AP) — Amarillo officials say they're optimistic of working out a compromise with federal officials that would keep the city airport operating despite proposed security restrictions on the airspace over the Pantex nuclear weapons plant.

Amarillo Mayor Keith Adams and other city officials met Monday with Department of Energy and Federal Aviation Administration officials over the proposed restrictions. Adams said the city's airport might have to close down unless the proposals are modified.

The measures are designed to prevent a terrorist attack on Pantex, the nation's final assembly plant for nuclear warheads and bombs.

Amarillo International Airport lies directly to the southwest of Pantex and uses airspace over Pantex that is currently unrestricted, according to Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas.

According to Gramm, the proposed restrictions would increase the minimum level for flights over Pantex from 4,800 feet to 10,000 feet. The airport is at 3,600 feet above sea level.

The proposal also would greatly expand restricted flight boundaries to the north, east and south.

The DOE has proposed alternate measures, but those require planes to land at a 39 degree angle, which pilots would find unsatisfactory, city officials said.

"I think there's a feeling there that a compromise must be reached," said Rep. Bill Sarpalius, D-Amarillo, who attended Monday's session.

"If there ever was a terrorist attack on any DOE facility, Pantex probably would be at the top of the list and they have to do everything that they possibly can to see to it there is protection there for that facility," Sarpalius said.

The city, however, has been "very, very supportive of Pantex ... and we want to continue to be supportive, but at the same time that airport is vitally important to any future economic growth of our city and we must see to it that the airport is protected," Sarpalius said.

"However, if the Department's proposal were to be implemented in its current form, operations at the airport would be severely, if not totally, curtailed, thereby rendering the airport useless," Gramm told Energy Secretary James Watkins in a March 2 letter. "If the airport were to be replaced, local officials estimate that it would cost $300,000,000 to construct."

City Manager John Ward said the Amarillo airport averages 500,000 passenger boardings a year. Military operations account for 40 percent of the airport's activities.

Garland woman honored

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush on Monday named Edith "Grandma" Lewis of the Dallas suburb of Garland, Texas, as one of his "points of light" for opening her home to young people in trouble.

She takes into her home as many as 10 young people at a time, most of them from broken families or struggling to overcome alcohol or drug abuse problems, the White House said.

BEE SMART

flimflammer (noun) — A person who knows how to trick, swindle, confuse, confound, and otherwise baffle or con others, with a line or story that is dazzling, but deceptive and nonsensical, is a flimflammer. The origin of this colloquial expression is uncertain, although it probably is Scandinavian. One thing is sure — if you ever think you are talking to a flimflammer, just turn around and walk away.

The Reporter-Telegram will sponsor the 1990 Regional Spelling Bee March 31 at Midland College.

School spelling champions from Midland, Martin, Glasscock and Upton counties will compete for the top prize of an all-expenses-paid trip to the National Spelling Bee in Washington, D.C.

This daily column on words, their spellings, meanings and origins will be published through March 30. These words are typical of those used in bees but may not necessarily be used in competition.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 7, 1990

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Stick to your principles and this will be an exceptionally good year. The path you trod in May could lead to greater financial success. Avoid jumping to conclusions in June. A transfer to another city could result in a wonderful promotion or new job. Prove your worth in a crisis and you will win influential admirers. Your social horizons expand when you do some entertaining. You gain in stature when you refuse to bow to peer pressure in November. Give romance a chance to develop at its own pace.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: auto racer Janet Guthrie, tennis star Ivan Lendl, actor Daniel J. Travanti, Tammy Faye Bakker.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): In a strange way, your competitors help you land new contracts! A loan comes through without a hitch. Romance may contain some problems. Time and patience will help heal a recent misunderstanding.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Try not to be so demanding. You will lose your bounce unless you lighten your load. Cut down on night life and concentrate on work that can advance your career. Avoid overindulgence.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): During the next few days, you will tend to view life through rose-colored glasses. A stronger appreciation for art and music is part of the picture. Devote more time to self-improvement activities.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): It is never too late to build a foundation for the future. Be more open when talking with a child. A loving heart is a special gift. You profit from someone else's mistakes.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Improving your personal appearance could win you that special job. "Woman power" affects the outcome of a competition. Travel is best postponed. A platonic relationship intensifies.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Take control of a situation that could affect your future before it is too late. Redouble your efforts to reach a cherished goal. Travel is favored. The arts influence your outlook and your spending.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): There are many things you can do to improve your work record before an important decision is made. Listen to the advice of experts. Your romantic partner makes a request you should honor.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): This is no time to act laid back. Strike out in new directions! You now have the Midas touch when it comes to making money. Purchase adequate homeowner's insurance.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Your goals are suddenly within your grasp. Do not leave a single stone unturned if in need of a loan. Help will come from a close friend. Communication between family members improves.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You have a better chance of reconciling with a friend or relative now. Your skills and perceptive observations are exactly what an influential person wants. You shine at a special meeting or party.

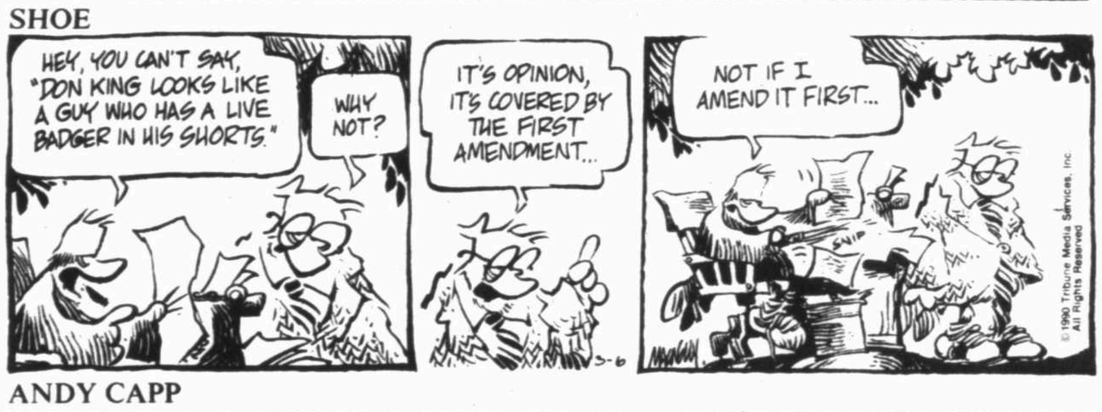

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): If romantic partner blows hot and cold, back off for a while. Attention to detail is essential if you are to achieve your business goals. A flight of fancy triggers an idea.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): A new pet could do wonders for your spirits. You will enjoy pursuing new interests. A Sagittarian brings wonderful humor into your life! Try a different approach. Look for the good in people.

The bidding:

6 ♠	Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Queen of ♠

Don't abandon the ship just because the chances of avoiding a wreck are one in a hundred. You never know—every long shot has its day!

The bidding was short and rather aggressive. However, this hand is from a Swiss Team match, and South judged that a big swing was needed to reverse some earlier misfortunes. Thus, the blast into the spade slam had more to gain than to lose.

West's trump lead made it look like the best chance for the contract—a 2-2 spade break—would gang agley, and so it proved when East discarded a club on the second round of trumps. After considerable thought, declarer found a combination of cards that would allow the slam to sail safely into port. It would not take much—West had to hold exactly three hearts and both minor-suit kings!

Declarer cashed the ace and king of hearts, sluffing a diamond from hand, then ruffed a heart. Next, he threw West in with a trump.

The first lucky break occurred when West did not turn up with the outstanding heart as a safe exit. When West exited with a diamond (a club would have been no better), declarer played the queen from dummy and muttered a silent prayer. All was well. The queen of diamonds held, providing declarer with the entry to cash the table's two good hearts for two club discards from hand. All that remained was to cash the ace of diamonds and ruff the diamond loser in dummy and 12 tricks were in the bag.

Osmond testifies in record hearing

PHOENIX (AP) — Donny Osmond flashed his perfect teeth, autographed pictures and even sang a little for an Arizona Senate committee. But the lawmakers weren't singing his song when they voted to require warning labels on risque records.

The Judiciary Committee approved the measure 8-1 Monday.

Osmond

The recording industry opposes the bill, and Osmond, who acknowledged his "goody-goody" image, was the industry's star witness.

Osmond, wearing a black leather jacket and cowboy boots, said he always had strict morals but had written lyrics that probably would qualify for the warning labels, especially if sung with a different intonation.

The committee's audience included teen-agers with T-shirts promoting controversial groups, and many groaned at first when the pop singer got up to testify.

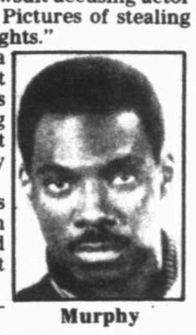

But they laughed when he said, "I'm a little out of my element." And they applauded when he finished testifying for their side after breaking into song.

The bill's supporters countered with Steve Clifford, an insurance executive who said he had founded the heavy metal group Icon.

Heavy metal "is a destructive lifestyle," Clifford said, testifying in businessman's suit and neat haircut. "It got me into drug abuse, alcoholism. I thought about suicide. I tampered with Satanism."

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — A scriptwriter became the second man in a week to file a lawsuit accusing actor Eddie Murphy and Paramount Pictures of stealing the screenplay for "Harlem Nights."

Murphy

Hafiz Farid of Newark, in a lawsuit filed in federal court Monday, claimed he sent copies of a screenplay titled "Going Straight" to Murphy, Paramount and actor Richard Pryor as early as 1989.

Farid said many of his ideas were used in the 1989 "Harlem Nights," starring Murphy and Pryor, but he received no credit or payment.

Paramount spokeswoman Deborah Rosen rejected the claim.

"We have never heard of Mr. Farid," she said. "We know of no similarity to anything Mr. Farid may have written."

Last week, Michael Greene of Hempstead, N.Y., claimed his screenplay, "A Halloween to Remember," was the real source of the movie. Greene said he submitted his script to Murphy last year but was told it had been rejected.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A woman who said she was romantically linked with Ben Vereen asked for a restraining order against the song-and-dance man after he allegedly broke into her apartment and assaulted her.

Vereen

Christine Rich filed a petition in Superior Court on Friday, alleging that Vereen, shouting profanities, kicked in her apartment door Thursday, grabbed her arm, neck and clothing and threw her to the ground.

Ms. Rich said she dialed 911 and police arrived. Police Sgt. Roger Belding confirmed Monday that Vereen was arrested for investigation of a misdemeanor assault and released on his own recognizance after about two hours.

A hearing on the restraining order was set for March 19.

Vereen battled alcohol and drug problems after the death of a 16-year-old daughter in 1987 and has become an anti-drug activist.

PALM SPRINGS, Calif. (AP) — Bob Hope, unable to attend a charity event, bought five raffle tickets at $1,000 apiece to help out — and one of them won him the grand prize, including a $50,000 car.

Hope

When host Jimmy Stewart picked Hope's name Sunday, he said, "You're not going to believe this. It's Bob Hope."

The prize was a luxury BMW, a set of luggage and a trip to Germany.

"Isn't that amazing? I never win a thing," Hope said from his desert home Monday.

Hope was performing Friday night in Texas and couldn't appear at the Beverly Hilton Hotel's "An Evening of Elegance." He bought five of the 100 tickets sold for the benefit for abused and neglected children.

It would seem the globe-trotting entertainer wouldn't need luggage or a free trip to Munich. He's made dozens of overseas trips to entertain U.S. troops over Christmas, including visits to Germany.

"You think you're kidding, don't you? I can use the luggage," Hope said. But he said he didn't know what he would do with the car.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — David Rappaport, a dwarf who starred in the series "The Wizard" and played a wily lawyer on "L.A. Law," was in stable condition today after trying to kill himself by inhaling car exhaust, authorities said.

Police officers said the 3-foot, 11-inch actor had stopped breathing when they found him inside a car on Sunday night. The engine was running and a hose connected to the exhaust pipe ran inside the car, said Sgt. Albert Dravidzius.

Officers used cardiopulmonary resuscitation to revive him, the sergeant said.

Rappaport, 38, was taken to Queen of Angels-Hollywood Presbyterian Medical Center.

No other information was released at the family's request.

In CBS's "The Wizard," which was broadcast from 1986-87, Rappaport starred as Simon Mckay, a good-willed inventor.

The actor appeared on NBC's "L.A. Law" as a lawyer who bests his opponents by playing up his short stature. He also appeared in the 1981 movie "Time Bandits."

NEW YORK (AP) — Iphigene Ochs Sulzberger, the newspaper heiress who died last week, left controlling interest of The New York Times to her four children.

Her 19-page will was filed Monday for probate.

Mrs. Sulzberger, who died Feb. 26 at age 97 in Stamford, Conn., executed the will Jan. 24. The terms of her father's will had required that her controlling interest in the Times pass to her children after her death.

A part owner of the Times, Mrs. Sulzberger left all of her stock in the newspaper and the Times Printing Co. equally to three daughters and a son: Marian S. Heiskell of New York; Ruth Holmberg of Chattanooga, Tenn.; Dr. Judith P. Sulzberger of New York, and Arthur Ochs Sulzberger of New York, the Times' publisher.

Amarillo woman finds hobby a piece of cake

By STACY WELLS

AMARILLO (AP) — Linda Kelly thinks cake making is like rebuilding a transmission.

It's just as easy to build a bad transmission as it is to build a bad cake because both take attention to detail and knowing the tricks of the trade, Mrs. Kelly said.

"But both of them are fun," she added.

Mrs. Kelly knows the ins and outs of both fields. She was known as a top transmission rebuilder in Amarillo when she retired in 1984, trading in her 10-year career as a mechanic for an icing bag.

Word of her sweet feats is spreading. Often the light in Mrs. Kelly's kitchen burns until 3 a.m. as she puts the frosting on the cake featuring a dinosaur with a huge stogie in his mouth, a 35 mm camera or a nude woman.

Creativity does not mean making little square cakes, she said.

"If they want those, they can get them at the bakery," she said.

The Boy Scouts have ordered plain cakes, she said, but she added masks and the organization's emblem because of her aversion to anything plain.

Practice has helped Mrs. Kelly perfect the slot machine or terrarium cakes she's made. On the average, she decorates three cakes a week.

Mrs. Kelly balks at the idea of baking for a living; now it is a hobby.

"I don't want to do it as a business if that means I'll have to make cakes the way bakeries do," she said. "They have to either make them with cheaper ingredients or they have to sell a million."

Mrs. Kelly's secret is not in the cakes themselves. She said she simply beats up store-bought cake mixes, although tasters swear she's lying. She has some trade secrets that improve the mixes and she adds goodies, such as chocolate chips, to make the cakes taste homemade, she said.

What makes Mrs. Kelly's cakes special happens after they come out of the oven.

That's when she gets out books and studies how to draw things, such as a 1955 Chevy.

"If it doesn't work, you just wipe it off," she said. "It's so easy."

The best thing about making the cakes is seeing people's pleased reactions, Mrs. Kelly said.

"You have the right to be proud because you put so much work into it. What's so neat about it is that it's not permanent.

"Even if it doesn't look good, it still serves a purpose. It's still not a total waste because they can still eat it," she said.

Mrs. Kelly said she happened into her hobby almost by accident when she took a cake decorating class with a friend who didn't want to go alone.

"I did a little of it on my own before then, but I didn't know how to do the fancy techniques, and I didn't have the equipment," she said.

When Mrs. Kelly and her friend entered and won the class competition, Mrs. Kelly said, she gained confidence in her abilities.

"You don't think anybody is going to think it looks as nice as you do," she said.

Three years and four blue and red ribbons in the state fair's professional division later, Mrs. Kelly says she knows she can create anything, given enough time and frosting. She claims a 4-foot-tall wedding cake that fed 250 people was the trial that proved that point.

Although she said she always has time to make cakes, Mrs. Kelly admits she doesn't have much time for anything else.

She is working on a master's degree at West Texas State University in engineering technology, working part time at a transmission service center while waiting to work full time and coordinating schedules with her husband so someone can take their children to preschool.

Then there are other hobbies, such as sewing, reading and making necklaces out of bandanas.

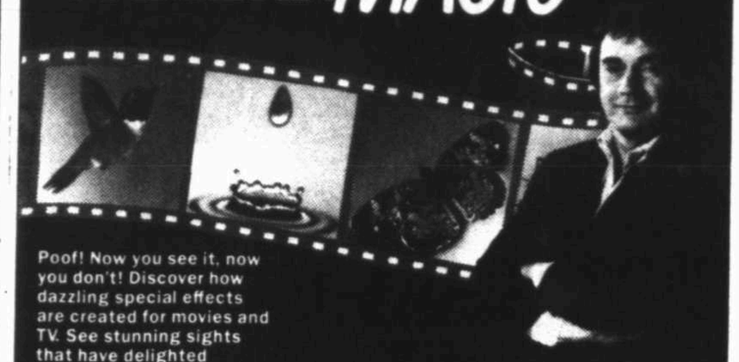

"I like to sleep," Mrs. Kelly added. "Sometimes I actually do that."

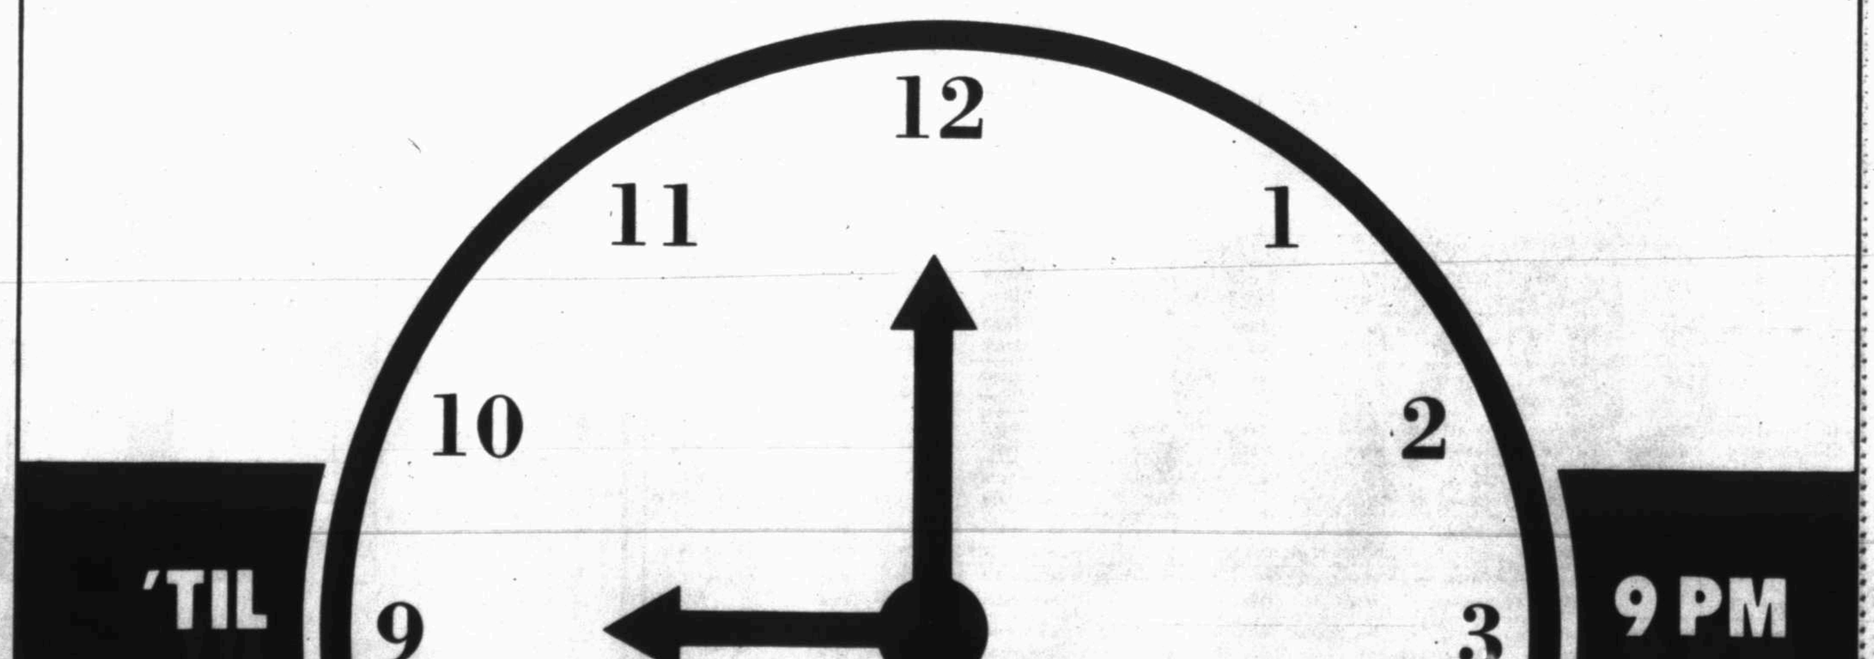

"I don't want to do it as a business if that means I'll have to make cakes the way bakeries do. They have to either make them with cheaper ingredients or they have to sell a million."

Davidson, wife making sweet music

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — TV entertainer John Davidson has given up lizards for pecan pie.

Davidson, who confronted the giant reptile as host of "That's Incredible," currently is whipping up tasty treats on cable TV's "Holiday Gourmet," a cooking show on The Nashville Network.

J. Davidson

R. Davidson

Davidson and his wife, Rhonda, make desserts on the 60-minute program, which is broadcast at various times the week before each Easter, Mother's Day, Father's Day, Thanksgiving, Christmas and Valentine's Day.

He's no stranger to cooking, and calls himself "a good assistant cook" at home.

"There are three or four recipes I keep repeating. One is Polynesian peanut butter chicken, which I found in New Zealand. And I make a mean banana french toast. But really I do my best just as a chopper and cutter for Rhonda."

TNN, which has broadened its scope and reached beyond Nashville for celebrities such as Davidson, says "Holiday Gourmet" has generated more than 13,000 letters a year from viewers seeking recipes or commenting about the show.

"Holiday Gourmet" featured country music stars making their favorite recipes last year, but the Nashville performers were dropped this season to focus more on Davidson. He joins Dinah Shore and Florence Henderson as non-country music hosts of TNN programs, which are available in 48 million households throughout the country.

On "Holiday Gourmet," three chefs prepare dishes such as roast turkey, meat loaf and pasta. Davidson and his wife tackle less complicated recipes such as alpine white pecan pie, chocolate mincemeat squares and chocolate raspberry coconut squares.

Cooking is the focus, though Davidson also sings.

The 48-year-old Davidson, who's associated with such shows as "Hollywood Squares" and "That's Incredible," says his wife may have upstaged him on the cable show.

"They (show executives and crew) were more impressed with Rhonda than me," he said cheerfully. "Everyone said, 'Your wife was great.' No one said much about me."

Rhonda, a former background singer with little TV experience, said she was surprised at the positive reception she received.

"I've always been more of a background person with no desire to be out front," she said. "I expected to be nervous, but people put me at ease because they were so warm and kind. John was supportive, too.

"I just went on the show and did my John Davidson impression. I've watched him work and seen how he deals with the audience and how he conducted himself."

For Davidson, who has sung some country songs during his career, the series is yet another outlet for showcasing his TV talents.

He just finished three years as host of "Hollywood Squares," which has gone out of production but is still seen in reruns. He was host of "That's Incredible" in 1981-86 and "Incredible Sunday" in 1988 and 1989. He had a syndicated talk-variety show, "The John Davidson Show," from 1980 to 1982. He also had "The John Davidson Show" in 1966, 1969 and 1976 as part of "The Kraft Summer Music Hall."

He believes the future of cable TV, the home of his programs on TNN and ESPN, is limitless.

"Producers have to find a place for their shows and they are turning to cable," Davidson said. "In the next five years, I think the TV dial is going to be like a radio dial. You'll have trouble knowing which is a network station or a cable station or an independent. It'll be all one happy dial and you'll turn it just like on the radio."

Davidson used to be a guest on "Hollywood Squares" when Peter Marshall was host, then ended up in Marshall's chair posing questions to the celebrities who would try to stump contestants.

Shatner shows appreciation

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Actor William Shatner, who commanded the starship Enterprise on the television show "Star Trek" to boldly go where no man has gone before, took a stroll recently — and got lost.

Jennifer Watson, an advertising copywriter for radio station WSM, said last week she gave Shatner a ride two months ago when he showed up at the station, lost on foot after leaving his nearby hotel for an appointment.

She recalled driving the actor a mile from the station to the studios of The Nashville Network cable station. She said she was embarrassed because her old car had a banana peel in it. She has since traded her old car in for a newer model.

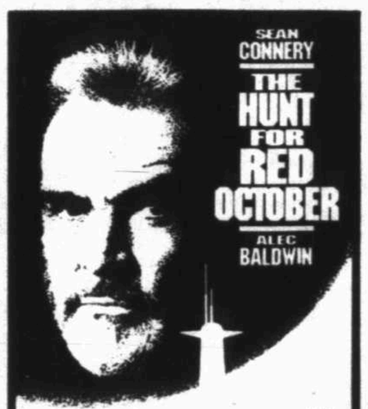

Last week, she received an envelope with a letter inside on Shatner's stationery. The letter said, "For your new car..." and had a banana peel wrapped in plastic.

Watson said the appreciative actor had apparently been alerted about her new car by some of her friends at the station.

"I just kind of yelled," she said about her reaction to his note. "I ran up and down the hall yelling, 'Look what I got.'"

Elect
NICK TAYLOR
238th District Court Judge
Republican Primary March 13

Taylor
For District Judge

Pol. Adv. paid by the Committee to Elect Nick Taylor Judge.
1101 Petroleum Bldg. Midland, Tx. 79701

Dear Citizens of Midland County:

This is my second letter to the voters of Midland County. I want to tell you about the experience and legal background that I will bring to the District Court..

Over eighty percent (80%) of the cases pending in the 238th District Court are civil cases. These cases deal with all areas of civil law. A good judge needs a broad and balanced background to decide this wide range of legal issues. I have that back-ground.

The judge's primary function is to know and apply the law with integrity and fairness. A trial court judge should not be an advocate -- the lawyers who appear before the court are the advocates. The judge's role is to rule on the legal issues and apply the law to the facts. It is not the judge's role to argue the case or present the evidence.

Over the past 26 years, I have handled cases in every level of trial court in Texas and have argued appeals in state appellate courts. I have also handled cases at the trial court level of federal courts and have taken cases to various U.S. Courts of Appeals. I had the rare opportunity of arguing and winning a case in the United States Supreme Court against the U.S. government. I have also handled matters before many state and federal administrative agencies, including the Texas Railroad Commission, ICC, FCC, FTC, FERC, SEC, IRS, OCC, Texas Securities Board and Texas Banking Commission. I have been appointed to criminal cases in both the state and federal courts.

As valuable as this trial experience may be in my practice, it is not what qualifies me or anyone else to be a District Judge. A district judge's qualifications come from his knowledge of substantive law and his expertise in identifying the controlling issues. This is what a District Judge must do.

Let me share some of the substantive areas of civil law where I have broad experience. I have devoted substantial attention to oil and gas, corporate-securities, estates & trusts, tax, banking, public finance, real estate, antitrust & unfair trade practices, contracts, employment, partnership and other areas of the law. For example, in the oil and gas area alone, I have worked on producing property acquisitions; leases; easement issues; farmouts; pooling; unitization; joint venture agreements; title examination; production payment issues; federal and state regulations; price control problems; ad valorem and severance tax issues; gas contract disputes of all types; depletion allowance issues; environmental issues; public stock offerings; acquisitions of oil and gas entities; mergers; stock agreements; business formation and dissolution; oil and gas financing; and loan work-out problems.

My practice has been in the most complex areas of the law that come before the 238th District Court.

My legal background mirrors the business activity of this county. Likewise, the majority of the cases in the 238th District Court involve substantive issues of law in the area where my practice and expertise lie. A large number of cases in the District Court deal with oil and gas and other business law areas. Over 25% of the court's pending cases are tax cases. My tax background and advanced legal studies of taxation will allow me to handle these cases effectively and efficiently. Additionally, the 238th District Court does not handle family law matters. On the criminal side of the docket, the 238th District Court handles felony (serious crimes) cases.

For the past 26 years I have been advising clients on what the law is on both complex and not so complex legal issues. This is what a District Judge must do on a daily basis and he must do so with integrity and fairness. I am prepared to be your District Judge and I am equipped for the job.

Please consider the role of a District Judge and my qualifications in casting your ballot.

Sincerely yours,

Nick Taylor

STATE IN BRIEF

Violations found at Brady track

AUSTIN (AP) — Members of the Texas Racing Commission have demanded an explanation after an audit turned up violations of the license agreement with G Rollie White Downs in Brady.

The commission also discovered that the track has severe money problems.

Commissioner Glenn Blodgett said Monday he was "shocked" to learn pharmacist David Mitchell was still involved at the state's only pari-mutuel horse racetrack several months after Mitchell had been ordered to sell his stock.

The commission ordered Mitchell to sell his stock last summer because a drug sold at his pharmacy had been used illegally on a racehorse running at the track.

Commission members were also told that the track has debts of $1.3 million and assets of only $80,000, with $1.2 million in payments due at the end of March.

The notes due at the end of March include about $245,000 plus interest in a note with the Commercial National Bank of Brady. The bank also has another note of $180,000 plus interest due in July.

Klan to stage protest

FORT WORTH (AP) — Ku Klux Klan members from Texas will be joined by chapters from Oklahoma and Louisiana in a Saturday afternoon protest of Carswell Air Force Base.

Bill Walton, the grand dragon of a Klan faction in Texas, said the protest has been called because five airmen have been dismissed by base officials because of their affiliation with the Klan.

About 10 hooded Klan members will picket each gate at the air base on Saturday, from about 3 p.m. to 6 p.m., Walton said.

Walton said he wanted to be certain it was clear that the protest only pertained to klan-related dismissals and not to recent dismissals of alleged homosexuals at Carswell Air Force Base.

Fungicide available soon

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A new fungicide that could help prevent oak wilt may be available for commercial use by summer, officials said.

David Appel, a plant pathologist at the Texas Agricultural Experiment Station at Texas A&M University, said manufacturer Ciba-Geigy Corp. is seeking permission from the Texas Department of Agriculture to release the fungicide for use by professional arborists.

Appel has researched the product three years. The substance is injected into base of oak trees at experimental locations throughout Texas.

The fungicide has been shown in many cases to prevent the spread of the disease, a deadly fungus destroying millions of trees in Texas and marching toward San Antonio, Appel said.

Mexican review welcome

AUSTIN (AP) — The general manager of the Texas Low-Level Radioactive Waste Disposal Authority says he welcomes another review by the Mexican government of a proposed dump site near Fort Hancock in Hudspeth County.

Rick Jacobi's invitation Monday followed an announcement by the Mexican consulate general in El Paso last week that he would request a second comprehensive review of the site.

A joint review team of scientific and technical experts from Mexican environmental agencies, the U.S. Nuclear Regulatory Commission and other agencies met Sept. 21, 1987, in Mexico City to discuss the Fort Hancock site.

Jacobi said that after that meeting, Mexican officials were satisfied that the site posed no threat to the Rio Grande or the agricultural lands near the river.

New car scam uncovered

EL PASO (AP) — A couple from Mesa, Ariz., allegedly used names of dead people in a scheme to buy and resell new cars until a car dealer grew suspicious and they were arrested in a raid on an El Paso motel.

Robert Lee Ferrell, 43, and Elizabeth May Smith, 30, were arrested Thursday night after allegedly offering to sell a $17,500 Ford to an El Paso dealer, said Wes Gilbreath, an investigator with the Dona Ana County, N.M., Sheriff's Department.

"When the dealership in El Paso got suspicious, they contacted our (New Mexico) Motor Vehicle Division, who then contacted me," Gilbreath said.

He said a Las Cruces dealer reported a similar case more than a month ago.

Handling of case studied

AUSTIN (AP) — The state attorney general is investigating the Texas Department of Human Services' handling of a child abuse case here in which a 2-year-old was beaten to death, a newspaper reported.

The case of Christopher Wohlers also is being reviewed by a state Senate committee that oversees the welfare agency, the Austin American-Statesman said Monday.

Christopher had come to the attention of DHS three times before the night of Jan. 2, when he was fatally beaten at his South Austin home, the newspaper said.

DHS cleared itself of wrongdoing after the child's death.

Richards' refusal seen as 'desperation'

AUSTIN (AP) — State Treasurer Ann Richards' decision to attack Democratic gubernatorial rivals over ethics — rather than simply say "yes or no" to whether she's ever used illegal drugs — shows her campaign is sinking, her leading opponents say.

With the primary election a week away, Ms. Richards on Monday blasted former Gov. Mark White and Attorney General Jim Mattox, saying they have ducked questions about their personal finances.

And while she again refused to specifically say whether she ever used an illegal drug, Ms. Richards, a recovering alcoholic, repeated a statement she has made before in the campaign: "I haven't had a mood-altering chemical for 10 years," she said.

She also said, in response to a question, she had never knowingly committed a felony under Texas law.

"I have been sober for 10 years," Ms. Richards said. "Have Jim Mattox and Mark White been honest for 10 years?"

"No one has ever raised this (drug) question while I have been managing all of the money of the state of Texas. The only time that this question was raised was when I got in the way of these boys who wanted to be governor," she said.

White and Mattox have said they never used illegal drugs, and both Monday denied any financial improprieties. They said her charges reflect Ms. Richards' fall in recent opinion polls after being the frontrunner for months.

"I feel sorry for Ann. Sorry that she is so desperate that she feels she has to lash out this way with such ridiculous and outrageous charges," White said.

"She's desperate. Her campaign's in a tailspin," said Kelly Fero, press secretary for Mattox's campaign.

Fero noted that applicants for state police forces must answer yes or no to the drug question. "I believe it's entirely fair to ask the person who wants to become commander-in-chief of all those folks," he said.

Asked during her press conference Monday about the furor over the drug question, Ms. Richards gave the same answer that she gave during two televised debates, the latest last week.

She said that her addiction was alcohol and that answering other questions might discourage other people who need treatment.

"I feel very sincerely that the continuing dialogue is very destructive. It is destructive for me. It is destructive for other people out there who might seek treatment. The important thing in this time is to put principle above politics," she said.

Ms. Richards has made public income tax returns for all years she has been treasurer. She criticized White for releasing only his 1988 return and Mattox for keeping all of his confidential.

She also said she has changed her plans and will participate in a League of Women Voters' debate Thursday night to "ask the stinging questions" she says White and Mattox have evaded.

"Did Mark White enrich himself at the public's expense the last time he held office? How does a state official move from a government salary to a $1.3 million mansion in Houston right after leaving the governor's office?" she asked.

White denied her charges, saying, "I don't even understand what she's after. My finances have been fully reported as required by law and always will be."

For Mattox, Ms. Richards said, questions need to be asked about numerous campaign contributions he has raised while in office.

"Mattox said during the debate that his $1,000 payment from (Republican gubernatorial hopeful) Clayton Williams wasn't enough to buy him. How much does it take?" she asked.

Mattox spokesman Fero said Mattox has been up front with Texas voters.

"Jim Mattox has been both sober and honest for much longer than 10 years. Her allegations are a smokescreen that tries and fails to cover the fact that she can't answer the hard questions that the press and the people are asking her," Fero said.

Most candidates feel government unhampered by meetings laws

By MICHAEL HOLMES

AUSTIN (AP) — Most of the major candidates for governor in both parties say state laws guaranteeing public access to official meetings and records don't inhibit state and local government operations, according to a new survey.

The Freedom of Information Foundation of Texas, which surveyed candidates for statewide office and the Legislature this year, said five of the seven top gubernatorial candidates responded to questions on the Texas Open Meetings and Open Records laws.

A total of 164 candidates for statewide and legislative offices were surveyed. Of Democrats, 38 percent responded, while 54 percent of Republicans replied.

The gubernatorial candidates supported the access laws.

"I believe that there are certain inconveniences which are encountered by governmental bodies in compliance with the open meetings and records acts, but these are offset by the benefits which accrue to the public through open government," said former Gov. Mark White, a Democrat.

"Both laws are important and are a necessary part of state government," said Republican Jack Rains.

"I do not favor weakening either the Texas Open Records Act or the Texas Open Meetings Act," added Democrat Ann Richards.

Also responding were Republicans Kent Hance and Tom Luce. Failing to answer were Democrat Jim Mattox, the current attorney general, and Republican Clayton Williams.

Foundation president Jack Loftis, who is vice president and editor of the Houston Chronicle, said he was disappointed that only 44 percent of all candidates surveyed answered the questionnaires.

"There are less than half of the people who are candidates who are willing to respond to a questionnaire on open government," Loftis said.

School finance plan would top agenda

By DARRYL EWING

AUSTIN (AP) — Candidates for the State Board of Education say implementing the Legislature's school finance plan will be the toughest challenge facing the newly elected panel.

Texas voters this year will fill seven of the board's 15 seats, but there's only one contested board race in the March 13 primary election ballot. Three Republicans in the Houston area are vying for the District 6 seat of Robert Cummings, 68, who has decided not to run again because he wants to spend more time with his family.

Incumbents are unopposed in the primary for the six other seats.

The current board has recommended doubling state public education spending over the next five years, said Joey Lozano, spokesman for the Texas Education Agency — from about $5 billion a year to about $10 billion.

Lawmakers are working in special session to meet a May 1 court-ordered deadline for revamping the school funding system. The Texas Supreme Court ruled the current finance system discriminates against poor school districts.

"With the court order in force, it will be imperative that the Legislature start responding ... and giving some credibility to some of the financial requests that the board has been making," said Mike McLamore of the Texas Professional Educators Association.

The board develops policy for the public school system.

James Crow of the Texas Association of School Boards predicts the state board's agenda "for the next year will be determined to a large extent by what the Legislature does."

Racing board official, his family slain

AUSTIN (AP) — Law enforcement officials would not speculate on the circumstances of the weekend deaths of a Texas Racing Commission official and his family, whose bodies were found in the family's Austin-area home Monday.

David Joost, 41, director of administration for the Texas Racing Commission, was found dead in the family's home in Buda along with his 35-year-old wife, Susan, and their two children, Eric, 10, and Lauren, 5.

Hays County Sheriff Paul Hastings said it appeared all four died of gunshot wounds, but said a cause of death would not be released until after autopsies scheduled for today.

Hays County Sheriffs Department spokeswoman Laura Vasquez said investigators found Sunday and Monday morning newspapers in the driveway, "leading them to believe the family had been dead more than 24 hours."

Hastings said officials from the Texas Department of Public Safety and the Texas Rangers had been called in to assist the Hays County Sheriff's office.

Racing commission spokeswoman Angie Roberts said the commission would not comment on Joost's death and referred all questions to law enforcement officials.

Coroner mum on Gathers autopsy results

BY KEVIN MODESTI
c.1990 Los Angeles Daily News

LOS ANGELES — It may take "a week or 10 days" to determine what caused the heart attack that killed Loyola Marymount University basketball star Hank Gathers Sunday night, a Los Angeles County coroner's spokesman said.

An autopsy was completed Monday, but medical examiners will wait for the results of toxicology tests and tissue studies before saying anything, the spokesman, Bob Dambacher, said.

Earlier, Dambacher had said a preliminary coroner's report might be available Monday afternoon.

He cautioned that the delay and the use of toxicology tests should not be taken as signs that drug abuse played a role in Gathers' death.

"Remember, to rule out is as important as to rule in," Dambacher said.

Gathers, 23, collapsed at midcourt at Gersten Pavilion, on the Loyola Marymount campus in Westchester, at about 5:15 p.m. Sunday, during the first half of the Lions' West Coast Conference tournament game against the University of Portland.

He was pronounced dead about an hour and 40 minutes later at Daniel Freeman Marina Hospital in Marina del Rey.

Earlier in the season, Gathers had fainted at the free-throw line during a Dec. 9 game against UC Santa Barbara. Found to have an irregular heartbeat, he was treated with medicine, and missed two games.

Gathers later said the medicine made him feel "sluggish," and asked doctors to reduce his doses.

In a Jan. 29 interview with the Daily News, he said he couldn't understand how athletes perform while abusing drugs.

"I'm glad I never got involved in that sort of thing in the neighborhood," said Gathers, who grew up in Philadelphia. "I tried marijuana once when I was a kid, and it was a horrible feeling. I didn't like it at all."

Dr. Michael Mellman, the Centinela Medical Center internal-medicine specialist who treated Gathers after his Dec. 9 collapse, did not return phone calls Monday to Vero Beach, Fla., where he is tending to minor-league players at the Dodgers' spring-training camp.

And a spokeswoman for Daniel Freeman Hospital in Inglewood said the cardiologist who later treated Gathers there would not comment Monday.

Instead, the Inglewood hospital released

Basketball

a statement, saying the senior forward underwent a "rigorous battery of tests" and was "monitored on a regular basis" after the Dec. 9 scare.

Should Gathers have continued to play basketball?

Loyola Marymount athletic director Brian Quinn told an ESPN interviewer Sunday night: "Complete medical clearance was granted for him to participate in all athletic endeavors, so the answer certainly would be yes."

What could cause heart arrhythmia in a seemingly healthy young athlete? Dr. Myles Lee, director of cardiac and arrhythmia surgery at Centinela Medical Center, said there are six possibilities:

— Drug abuse. Cocaine, crack and amphetamines can stimulate the heart muscle and nervous system while narrowing the arteries, a lethal combination.

— A congenital defect, extra heart tissue capable of conducting electricity, that can cause electrical impulses to reverse their normal course from the upper to lower heart chambers.

— A congenital defect in the coronary arteries.

— Severe arterial sclerosis — hardening of the arteries — which is possible even in young people, especially those with a family history of the problem.

— Marfan's Syndrome, an abnormality of connective tissue and blood vessels in the heart. Most often found in tall people — Gathers was 6-foot-7 — Marfan's Syndrome killed volleyball star Flo Hyman in 1986.

— A Berry Aneurism, a bubble in an artery that bursts, usually in the brain.

Lee said he didn't treat Gathers.

Mellman referred Gathers, instead, to Dr. Vernon Hattori, a Daniel Freeman Hospital cardiologist, according to a spokeswoman for that Inglewood facility.

Lee would not speculate on whether Gathers could have brought on his fatal heart attack by not taking prescribed medicine.

Lee said that if the arrhythmia was caused by a birth defect, it could also have been treated with surgery to remove, separate out or freeze the defective part of the heart. He said the operations are "not difficult" and are almost always successful.

Was it more than coincidence that Gathers collapsed — both times — while playing basketball?

Dr. Mason Weiss, the cardiologist who tried to revive Gathers Sunday night at Daniel Freeman Marina Hospital, said it's possible but not certain.

"People who have different problems with the heart, who are under therapy, can have cardiac arrest whether they are playing basketball or just sitting in a chair," Weiss told ESPN.

Weiss said Gathers' high level of general fitness improved the chances the player could be revived at the hospital.

"The chances were good. ... In somebody in his physical shape, every and all resuscitative measures should have been taken, and were for about an hour and a half after he initially arrested at the game," Weiss told ESPN.

"Even under those prolonged circumstances, there was still a chance he could come back. And that's why things were continued for that duration — unfortunately, all to no avail."

Visiting Dad's Office

Christopher Sasser, 2, 'helps' dad Mackey work out with his New York Met teammates in Port St. Lucie, Fla. recently. Dad is locked out of the Mets' training camp while baseball labor dispute rages.

Opening day in jeopardy, all say

NEW YORK (AP) — Both sides in baseball's labor negotiations agree that if a settlement is not reached this week, opening day will just have to wait.

Negotiators for the owners and players met Monday to discuss their positions, but said nothing was accomplished.

They'll try again today, the 20th day of the spring training lockout.

Opening day is scheduled for April 2 — less than a month away — and the clock is ticking louder every day.

"I would suspect if we don't have an agreement by the end of this week, opening day is wholly at risk," Chuck O'Connor, the owners' chief negotiator, said.

"This is the week which once and for all relates to whether the season will be affected," Commissioner Fay Vincent said.

Realizing that time is running out, the owners have even changed some of their plans for the rest of the week.

Owners canceled meetings of the Player Relations Committee and the American and National Leagues that were to have been held Wednesday outside Dallas, and instead decided to have the PRC convene today in New York.

Lockout

"There's no way we can work out an agreement if the PRC isn't going to approve it," Vincent said. "My sense is that we're going to make a determined effort to get this done, and we would have been wasting two days by going to Dallas on Tuesday."

The owners will, however, have a joint meeting in Texas on Thursday.

Vincent said the six PRC members — Bud Selig of Milwaukee, Carl Pohlad of Minnesota, Jerry Reinsdorf of the Chicago White Sox, Fred Wilpon of the New York Mets, John McMullen of Houston and Fred Kuhlmann of St. Louis — would meet this afternoon and that the first negotiating session since Feb. 24 probably would take place later in the day.

The hope was that enough progress would be made that another meeting could be held on Wednesday.

On Monday, however, there was just more pessimism and long faces from both sides.

Union chief Donald Fehr and deputy commissioner Stephen Greenberg met for two hours. Both said little was accomplished.

"Nothing would make me ... and the players happier than finding a way to go about playing baseball," Fehr said.

Greenberg, 41, is a former minor leaguer and player agent who became deputy commissioner on Feb. 1. As a player, he made it up to Class AAA in the Texas organization. As an agent, he represented pitcher Mark Langston, among others.

"I think there's a relationship between Steve and Don that goes back a long time," O'Connor said, explaining why he didn't meet with Fehr on Monday and Greenberg did.

Coogs slip past 'Horns into 2nd

HOUSTON (AP) — The Houston Cougars saved some of their best for last against the Texas Longhorns.

Carl Herrera was at his best, scoring 29 points, grabbing 16 rebounds and Byron Smith hit six of eight three-point shots, leading the Cougars to an 84-79 victory Monday night.

Their reward is second place in the Southwest Conference regular season standings and the extension of their winning streak to 11 games.

They did their best before 10,660 fans, the largest crowd ever to see a game in Hofheinz Pavilion.

"It's the best we've played in a pressure situation this year," coach Pat Foster said. "We were jacked up a lot higher than I thought we'd be and it resulted in some early turnovers."

Houston trailed early and often in the first half. Texas took a 43-41 halftime lead and the Cougars didn't lead until Smith's three-point shot with 6:55 left in the game.

Texas took the lead one more time at 74-72 on a pair of free throws by Travis Mays with 2:03 left in the game but Smith chunked in another 3-point basket with 1:34 to play and Houston never trailed again.

"This is my best game of the year," Herrera said. "I had everything going tonight. I think most teams realize now that we come to play and win. If we play hard and play smart, we can beat them again."

There is a possibility the two teams will hook up for a third time in the Southwest Conference tournament beginning Friday in Dallas.

Houston plays Rice and Texas plays Texas A&M in the first round and the winners will meet Saturday night.

"It's going to be tough to beat them three times in a row, but I think our chances are great in the tournament," Smith said.

Houston beat the Longhorns 102-93 in Austin Jan. 30.

Travis Mays led the Longhorns with 19 points and Lance Blanks added 18.

Blanks hit s 3-point basket with 1:11 to go that pulled the Longhorns to a 78-77 deficit. Derrick Daniels then scored four of his seven points in the final 32 seconds to help ice the victory.

"It was a huge game," Blanks said. "This one hurts. I hope we draw them again in the tournament."

The Cougars, who haven't had an 11-game winning streak since the 1983-84 season, snapped the Longhorns' six-game winning streak.

Smith said he felt good about his 3-point basket that put the Cougars ahead to stay.

"I felt the team needed a three and my defender (Wright) just drifted down the court and I pulled the trigger," Smith said.

Houston has a 23-6 record for the season and 13-3 in the SWC. Texas finished at 20-7 and 12-4.

MC, OC men will try again

From Staff Reports

Weather permitting, Midland College will host the Odessa College men's tennis team at 2 p.m. Wednesday.

The match originally was scheduled for last week, but rain interfered.

MC is getting its first conference play of the spring season, and will see substantial play for its men's team this week. The Chaparrals are entered in the Tyler Junior College Invitational on Friday and Saturday.

Coach Joe Williams is anxious for his students to play some matches. They have played only in the Volvo ITCA National Junior College Indoor Tournament in early January. Two players went to Minneapolis in February for a special Rolex ITCA Small College Indoor Tournament.

"We've just been playing against each other and that just helps for a certain period before it gets stale. Then you've got to see new people across the net," Williams said.

Currently ranked first in the nation, the Chaps have had only four team matches this season. They blanked Paris and Temple with 9-0 scores and defeated Tyler 6-3, all at the Odessa College Invitational last October. Their last team match was a 6-3 victory over West Texas State, also in October.

The battle between Midland and Odessa should be a dandy. Williams has been shuffling his line-up this spring. For about ten days this month, sophomore letter winner Mohamed Ridaoui will be absent to play Davis Cup for his native Morocco against Egypt.

Ridaoui suffered a severe cut on little finger of his right hand two weeks ago while washing dishes, but is recovering rapidly.

Friday, the Chaps will be facing a Tyler team that was the NJCAA 1989 co-champion in men's tennis, along with MC. Midland eventually edged Tyler for the national champion bragging rights on a points-based tiebreaker.

MC already has taken Tyler at the Odessa tournament, then captured all four titles at January's national junior college indoor event at Corpus Christi. Tyler's Joaquin Lopez took the Rolex Small College Indoor title at Minneapolis last month and is looking to establish himself as the No.1 junior college player.

MC's women don't get their next action until March 14, when they play at Odessa.

Terps thumped by NCAA for violations

COLLEGE PARK, Md. (AP) — An appeal is planned by the University of Maryland over penalties it considers too severe against its men's basketball program.

The NCAA imposed a two-year ban on post-season play and three years of probation against the basketball program, but Maryland president William E. Kirwan accused the NCAA of failing to account for Maryland's cooperation with the investigation and the school's previously unblemished record.

"Because we feel so strongly that the sanctions imposed are more severe than our infractions warrant, we intend to appeal several of the penalties," Kirwan said during a news conference on Monday.

Maryland must officially notify the NCAA of its appeal within 15 days. School officials will use that time to decide which sanctions will be contested, Kirwan said.

Maryland was cited for a lack of institutional control over the program which was found guilty of 18 rules violations during the three-year coaching tenure of Bob Wade. The NCAA began an investigation last February and sent the university an official letter of inquiry spelling out its findings in October.

The Terrapins will be barred from the 1991 and 1992 NCAA tournaments and will also be prohibited from appearing on national television next season, which apparently will prohibit the team from competing in the 1991 Atlantic Coast Conference tournament.

Maryland must also return $407,378 in earnings from the 1988 NCAA tournament, in which the Terps advanced to the second round.

"The (NCAA Infractions) Committee imposed all but the most minor of the prescribed sanctions," Kirwan said. "And, it went beyond the prescribed penalties when it imposed a second year prohibition from post-season play and a third year of probation. ...

"One is left to wonder how the sanctions could have been substantially different if we had repeated violations, been uncooperative, and failed to take decisive actions."

Kirwan said the sanctions would cost Maryland an estimated $3 million the next two years.

"To put things in perspective, the entire budget for our non-revenue sports is about $1.2 million per year," Kirwan said. "This sort of gives you a scale of the magnitude of this action. It's clearly going to place the institution in a very difficult situation with regards to maintaining its scale and scope of its athletic participation."

Steven Morgan, the NCAA's associate executive director for enforcement, said the committee did consider the university's cooperation when it decided not to impose the restrictions on recruiting or scholarships outlined as part of the NCAA's minimum penalties for major violations.

Regular season winners upset in SLC tournament

Southland

MONROE, La. (AP) — Regular season winners all turned up losers in Monday night's opening round of the Southland Conference post-season basketball tournament.

And Northwestern State's Roman Banks did it again to Southwest Texas State.

Banks scored 28 points as Northwestern State, No. 6 seed in the seven-team competition, upset Southwest Texas State, 82-58.

Northwestern has a semifinal date tonight with North Texas, which beat McNeese State, 67-62, in Monday's nightcap.

In the tournament opener, Texas-Arlington beat Sam Houston State, 72-66, to move into tonight's semifinals against host Northeast Louisiana, the regular season champion.

Tonight's winners play for the tournament championship Wednesday.

Ironically, all three of Monday's first-round winners lost twice during the regular season to the teams they beat.

And Banks continued his mastery of Southwest Texas, a team against which he scored 44 points during two regular season meetings.

"We should get Southwest Texas scheduled 19 times next year for Roman," Northwestern Coach Dan Bell said after Monday night's game.

"My shots just happened to be falling against them," said Banks, a second-team All-Southland selection who averaged 14.1 points during the regular season. "My teammates did a great job of getting me the ball."

Southwest Texas was led by Stacy Bennett's 17 points.

Center Ronnie Morgan had 14 points and 16 rebounds, and North Texas benefited when McNeese went scoreless for nearly seven minutes to open the second half.

North Texas (4-24) beat McNeese despite the 32 points and conference-record 22 rebounds of SLC Player of the Year Anthony Pullard, the 6-10 senior McNeese forward.

McNeese, which finished the season 14-13, led 33-30 at halftime before opening the second half with a scoring drought of 6 minutes and 46 seconds.

Willie Brand scored 22 points, Bobby Kenyon added 20 and the two led an early second half charge that helped Texas-Arlington (12-14) beat Sam Houston State, which ended its season at 10-18.

LaSalle's Simmons fights off grief

Associated Press

In the first half, Lionel Simmons was still in shock over the death of his close friend, Hank Gathers.

Simmons, the No. 3 scorer in major-college basketball history, made only three of seven shots in the first half and scored just eight points. He even missed a dunk and Coach Speedy Morris sat him down for a while.

"My mind definitely wasn't in it at that point," Simmons said. Being taken out, he said, gave him the opportunity "to calm down a bit and think it over."

In the second half, Simmons scored 18 points — hitting five of eight shots and all eight of his free throws — and No. 11 La Salle defeated Fordham 71-61 to win the Metro Atlantic Athletic Conference tournament and earn an automatic bid to the NCAA tournament.

"Hank would have certainly wanted us to play," said Simmons, one of several La Salle players who played high school ball with or against Gathers in Philadelphia. "He was such a competitive person."

Two other teams joined La Salle in gaining NCAA berths Monday night, Richmond in the Colonial Athletic Association and South Florida in the Sun Belt Conference.

Besides his 26 points, Simmons had 16 rebounds as La Salle (29-1) won its 21st consecutive game.

La Salle's players wore black bands on their jerseys in memory of Gathers. Others, like Simmons, had "Hank" or "44" — Gathers' number — written on wristbands, uniforms and sneakers.

"We try to tell them that life goes on," Morris said. "Those of us who could get up from those adversities are going to be the ones who are going to be successful. If we could take an example from Hank Gathers, it would be to give our best."

Simmons was at his best when it counted. His three-point play with 3:38 remaining gave the Explorers a 60-56 lead and he made four free throws to help La Salle pull away.

Damon Lopez led Fordham (19-12) with 18 points.

College Basketball

South Carolina 54, No. 17 Clemson 53

South Carolina used Jo Jo English's jumper with one minute left and a tough zone to stun Clemson in the regular-season finale for the two arch-rivals. Clemson (23-7) took a 53-52 lead with 1:28 left on David Young's jumper. The Gamecocks (14-13) countered when English drove down the right side of the lane for an eight-foot jumper, only his second field goal.

Reserve forward Stefan Eggers scored 14 of his career-high 18 points to help South Carolina take a seven-point halftime lead. Eric Sykes added 12 points for the Gamecocks. Elden Campbell led Clemson with 13 points.

"This is one of the games that we've put it all together," English said. "We used all of the team and all of our strengths and we came away with the victory.

"I made a good crossover (dribble) and I pulled up. It's a shot I've been hitting all year. Tonight it fell again."

Colonial Athletic Association

Ken Atkinson scored 25 points and Richmond won the CAA tournament for the second time in three years with a 77-72 victory over James Madison. Second-seeded Richmond (22-9) avenged the worst loss in Dick Tarrant's nine years as head coach, a 77-43 loss to the Dukes earlier this season. Top-seeded James Madison is 20-10.

"It isn't often that a team gets a chance to vindicate itself but these guys reached out and seized the opportunity," Tarrant said.

"I wish we would have beaten them by two points instead of 30 the last time," James Madison coach Lefty Driesell said. "I'm not sure our guys were as intense as they should have been."

Fess Irvin scored nine consecutive points to give James Madison a 55-52 lead midway through the second half. Atkinson scored five points and Curtis Blair three in an 8-0 run that gave Richmond the lead to stay 62-59 with 6:48 left.

Steve Hood led James Madison with 29 points. His 91 points in three tournament games broke the CAA record of 80 by Navy's David Robinson in 1986.

Sun Belt Conference

Radenko Dobras scored 24 points as South Florida earned its first trip to the NCAA tournament with an 81-74 victory over North Carolina-Charlotte. South Florida (20-10), which began its basketball program in 1971, had made it to the Sun Belt finals twice before, losing both times.

The Bulls led 67-66 with 1:59 left when the 6-foot-7 sophomore hit two free throws and a basket. Bobby Russell's basket gave South Florida the Bulls a 73-66 lead, too much for UNCC (16-14) to overcome in the final minute. UNCC's Henry Williams scored 25 points.

Others

— Elmer Bennett made all eight free throws in the final 1⅛ minutes, capping a career-high 22-point game, and Notre Dame erased a seven-point halftime deficit to beat Kentucky 80-67.

Kentucky, on NCAA probation, completed its first season under Coach Rick Pitino with a 14-14 record. The Wildcats opened and closed their season with losses to Notre Dame (16-11).

"One thing that I am most proud of is that we improved over the course of the season," Pitino said. "We need to take that into the summer and into next season."

Joe Fredrick scored 23 points for Notre Dame (16-11). Derrick Miller led Kentucky with 17.

— Temple and Massachusetts reached the finals of the Atlantic 10 tournament. Mark Macon scored 28 points and grabbed a career-high 15 rebounds as Temple (19-10) defeated Rutgers 65-57. Jim McCoy scored 25 points and Massachusetts (17-12) used a 9-2 spurt over the last 2:42 to beat Penn State 64-59.

Rice becomes Heat hero

Associated Press

The Miami Heat put Glen Rice in position to win the game with the simplist of strategies — stop Utah's Karl Malone.

That was accomplished when it mattered. But Rice still wasn't certain enough time remained for his buzzer-beating basket.

"In my mind, I didn't know if the horn had gone off as the ball was leaving my hand," Rice said Monday night after his jumper from the top of the key gave the Heat a 105-104 victory that snapped Utah's seven-game winning streak.

Miami didn't embarrass all-star Malone, who led the Jazz with 32 points, above his 30.5 average. But the Heat limited the NBA's second-leading scorer to just two points on two shots in the final period.

"We bumped him to keep him from getting position and tried to make him take bad shots or pass it out," Rony Seikaly, who scored 25 points for Miami, said. "We made a commitment in the fourth quarter to stop him."

Malone, the league's No. 5 rebounder, was limited to just one board in the final period.

"The Heat did a good job doubling Karl the last part of the fourth quarter," John Stockton, who had 21 points and 14 assists for Utah, said. "They didn't give up and they made the big plays when they had to."

Those plays put Rice, who finished with 10 points, in position for the first buzzer-beater of his career. He wasn't alone in wondering whether it would leave his hand in time.

"I could've sworn that the buzzer was going to go off before the shot," Miami coach Ron Rothstein said.

Rice scored after taking a feed from Sherman Douglas, who had rebounded a missed shot by Miami's Scott Haffner.

"I knew I had to get the shot off," Rice said. "When Scott's shot missed, I knew there couldn't be many seconds left. I just yelled for Sherman.

"I got the ball and there was no one near me. I just let it go and it felt good."

Miami, which rallied from a nine-point deficit in the final six minutes, has won three of its last six games after winning only three of the previous 30. But Rothstein sees things getting even better, particularly in view of the play of Douglas, who had 22 points and 14 assists.

"Sherman was pretty impressive tonight," Rothstein said. "It takes a player with great feeling for the game to make that play at the end."

Stockton gave the Jazz a 104-100 lead with 34 seconds left, but the Heat pulled within one four seconds later on a 3-point shot by Kevin Edwards, who scored 24 points. Stockton missed a layup with seven seconds left and Rice rebounded to set up the winning basket.

NBA Roundup

76ers 128, Clippers 105

Hersey Hawkins tied a season-high with 28 points as Philadelphia handed Los Angeles its 20th straight loss at the Spectrum. The Clippers — then known as the Buffalo Braves — last won in Philadelphia on Oct. 31, 1975.

By winning, the 76ers moved within a game of first-place New York in the Atlantic Division. The loss was the ninth in 11 games for Los Angeles.

Mike Gminski scored 25 points for the 76ers, one shy of his season high. Charles Smith scored 22 points for the Clippers.

Nets 128, Kings 111

Chris Morris scored 22 points to lead New Jersey's biggest outburst of the season and give the Nets only their third victory in 21 games.

Sam Bowie and Purvis Short, who scored 14 points in the fourth quarter, added 20 apiece to give New Jersey its second straight victory. The Nets had scored as many as 117 points twice previously.

Dennis Hopson added 16 points for the Nets, who put seven players in double figures. Chris Dudley scored 10 points and pulled down a career-high 15 rebounds.

Warriors 138, Hornets 117

Golden State's Mitch Richmond scored 30 points as the Warriors handed Charlotte its 25th loss in 26 road games this season.

Richmond scored 21 points in the third quarter for the Warriors, who had lost eight of their previous nine games. The Golden State guard was perfect on seven shots and seven free throws in the period, then sat out the final 12 minutes.

Rockets 109, Spurs 105

Akeem Olajuwon, who scored 37 points, hit the go-ahead jumper with 39 seconds remaining as Houston won at San Antonio.

Olajuwon's 15-foot fadeaway broke a 105-105 tie, and Mitchell Wiggins added two free throws with 11 seconds left to ensure only the sixth Houston victory in 30 road games this season.

Sooners claim top spot

Associated Press

The No. 1 ranking has belonged to three teams from the Big Eight this season, a fact that hasn't been overlooked by Oklahoma coach Billy Tubbs.

"It can slip real quick on you, if you've noticed what's happened out there," Tubbs said Monday after the Sooners (23-4) jumped to the top from fifth after beating the other two teams from its conference which had been No. 1 — Missouri and Kansas — within three days.

Analysts warn of oil shortages

By YOUSSEF M. IBRAHIM
N.Y. Times News Service

PARIS — Political unrest and food riots shaking major oil-producing countries, including the Soviet Union and some OPEC nations, may lead to significant worldwide oil shortages in this decade.

In the latest pessimistic assessment, a Paris-based newsletter, Petrostrategies, warned Monday about the effects of food riots and political unrest that have occurred in recent months in five members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries: Algeria, Gabon, Venezuela, Nigeria and Kuwait.

The newsletter said these turbulent developments could become of "frightening importance."

In addition to these countries, Iran, an important OPEC member, is witnessing a growing political struggle between factions of the ruling clergy.

Experts on Iran say the situation could deteriorate into civil disorder hampering the country's already-weakened oil production.

Similarly, as has been reported, the Soviet Union, which is not an OPEC member but is the world's largest oil producer, has over the past year experienced a significant drop in oil production and will almost certainly lose even more this year because of the economic chaos provoked by President Mikhail S. Gorbachev's policy of perestroika.

"The still-abundant international oil supply means that concerns raised by these developments can be put aside by consumers for the time being," Petrostrategies said in its weekly issue.

But, the newsletter asserted, the economic and political tensions undermining these countries will not disappear.

"In the context of a more fragile oil supply-demand equilibrium," it said, "they could quickly assume a frightening importance for world oil supplies."

Petroleum experts said the situation is aggravated by a steady rise in demand for oil and a failure to make the investment needed to increase production capacity in most countries with large oil reserves.

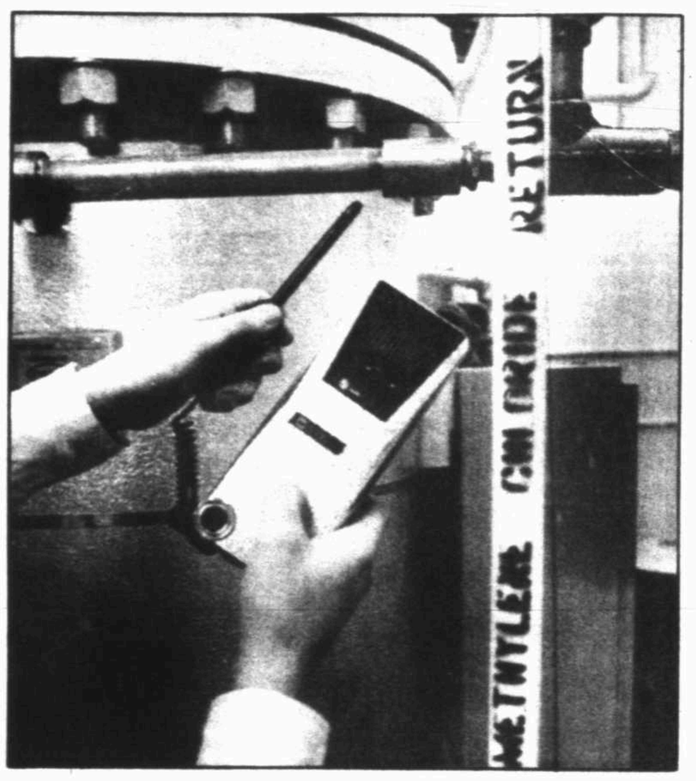

A few Arab producers, like Saudi Arabia, Kuwait and the United Arab Emirates have, however, been making sizable investments, the experts say.

PlanEcon, a Washington-based consulting firm, estimates that economic and political dislocations have caused significant losses in Soviet oil production.

An official of the firm said in an interview Monday that Soviet output dropped by 300,000 barrels a day last year, to a daily output of 12.2 million barrels.

The official said Soviet output is expected to drop again this year by

U.S. slowly phasing out ozone-depleting CFCs

By HILARY APPELMAN

ENDICOTT, N.Y. (AP) — Each year, manufacturers belch thousands of tons of chemicals into the stratosphere, eating the fragile ozone layer that protects the Earth against the sun's damaging ultraviolet rays.

Until last year, the clear skies over IBM's circuit board plant in Endicott in south-central New York belied the plant's identity as one of the largest users of ozone-depleting chemicals in the United States, releasing more than 2 million pounds of the invisible chemicals annually from its white steel pipes.

But in January, International Business Machines Corp. announced that after spending millions of dollars and years of research, the plant's emissions of ozone-depleting chemicals had been reduced almost 75 percent.

In the face of growing evidence that industrial chemicals are eroding the ozone that filters ultraviolet rays, IBM is one of a number of American companies slowly beginning to change the way they do business.

The destructive effects on the ozone caused by chlorofluorocarbons, used as refrigerants, cleaning solvents and to make bubbles in plastic foam, have been known for more than a decade.

The Environmental Protection Agency has ordered a 50 percent reduction in the use of CFCs by the end of the century, and many companies have set earlier deadlines or pledged to phase them out altogether.

But according to the National Resources Defense Council, emissions of Eastern examiner explains findings

By MARCY GORDON

NEW YORK (AP) — Texas Air Corp.'s agreement to pay its Eastern Airlines subsidiary about $280 million was not an admission that it bought assets from the airline at unfairly low prices, Eastern's court-appointed bankruptcy examiner told congressional leaders Monday.

Examiner David I. Shapiro said his report investigating dealings between Texas Air and Eastern, which concluded Eastern was underpaid by hundreds of millions of dollars, had been misinterpreted by the news media as a finding that Texas Air was liable for the money.

"I did not find that Texas Air had improperly diverted assets from Eastern," Shapiro wrote in a letter to House Speaker Thomas S. Foley and House Minority Leader Robert H. Michel. "Instead, I set forth the grounds on which such a claim could be asserted."

"The settlement is not an admission of liability by Texas Air," the letter read. "Rather, it is an agreement between Texas Air and the examiner as to what is needed to assure the economic viability of Eastern Airlines."

Shapiro declined any comment on the matter Monday. A copy of the letter, sent Monday, was obtained by The Associated Press.

A Texas Air spokesman called Shapiro's letter "a very significant clarification," while a union attorney described it as "comical."

Shapiro's report filed last Thursday in federal bankruptcy court concluded Texas Air purchased Eastern and some of its assets at unfairly low prices and owed the carrier $285 million to $403 million.

"There is sufficient evidence to warrant the bringing of charges that (12) transactions provided Eastern with less than fair consideration or reasonably equivalent value," the report said. "...The court could therefore appropriately authorize litigation of these 12 claims..."

Texas Air agreed at the time to pay Eastern $280 million in cash and assets, but vehemently objected to Shapiro's findings and said it had not engaged in any wrongdoing.

Mobil assists MBCE with business center

By MELLA McEWEN
Business/Oil Writer

The Midland Black Chamber of Entrepreneurs' efforts at building a business resource center got a boost from one of its corporate members at Monday's monthly meeting.

Clem Johnson of Mobil Oil Corp. presented the chamber with a slightly used Panasonic videocassette recorder and a color television.

"These are just two of many things we plan to give the chamber," he told members. He added that, in order to continue getting gifts from corporations, the chamber would need a tax identification number.

MBCE President Robbyne Fuller answered that the chamber is working on getting a tax ID number, and thanked Johnson and his company for their support.

Vice President for Scholarships Michael Hocker reported that the chamber is drafting a scholarship application form for the local high schools so students can begin applying for the MBCE scholarships.

In reviewing activities of February, which was Afro-American History Month, MBCE Vice President for Cultural Affairs James Fuller expressed his pleasure at members' response to a joint project with Lee Freshman High School's social studies department.

MBCE members visited Leonard Monroe's classes and discussed Afro-American contributions during the era of the "New Deal" created to recover from the Great Depression during the early 1930s.

"The activity I'm most proud of, in addition to bringing (artist) Brian Joseph, is the participation of chamber members in this program," he told members.

Fuller also reported that the chamber's story-telling hour on Saturdays at the Northeast YMCA were going well, and that he was pleased with the response there.

Upcoming events on the chamber's calendar include:

- Celebration IV, set for sometime in April, May or June.
- Bringing in the Alvin Ailey Dance Troupe, tentatively set for late October.
- Mini-trade show and business card exchange, in September.
- Bringing in the Boys Choir of Harlem, April 1991.

February auto sales fall 8 percent

By PAUL C. JUDGE
N.Y. Times News Service

DETROIT — Sales of domestic cars and light trucks fell 7.9 percent in late February, dimming hopes that a sales surge at the beginning of the month had signaled an end to the automobile industry's sales slump.

"The industry still has not emerged from the woods," said Maryann N. Keller, auto industry analyst with Furman Selz Mager Dietz & Birney.

"The fact that sales are down in February compared with January is not a good sign."

The lackluster results were still encouraging to some analysts, who noted that vehicle sales actually picked up after a dismal reporting period in the middle of the month.

"The auto industry has reduced inventories dramatically, and it looks poised for a very nice second quarter," said John V. Kirnan, an analyst with Kidder, Peabody & Co.

On a seasonally adjusted basis, cars sold at an annual rate of 6.8 million for the month, down from 7.1 million a year ago and well below the January sales rate of 7.5 million. But the seasonal rate marked an improvement from December, when cars sold at a rate of 6.5 million.

Sales of light trucks, which account for nearly a third of vehicles sold in the United States, also declined by 10 percent in late February. For the month, light-truck sales dropped 6.7 percent.

Sales of cars and light trucks, including imports, fell 4.6 percent in the month, to a total of 725,153 cars and 330,694 light trucks.

The sales results for February suffered by comparison with last year, when the big automakers kicked off a round of incentives that resulted in higher sales.

Some analysts suggested that big discounts in January had contributed to the monthly sales decline, by drawing buyers who might otherwise have waited and bought cars in February.

But dealers reported that they were still holding back on orders for many new cars and trucks, as showroom traffic and sales volume dwindled during a normally slow month.

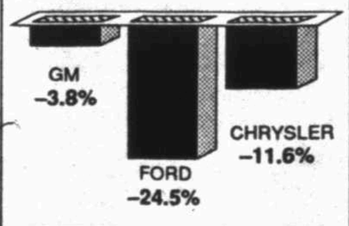

Some analysts suggested that potential buyers were concerned about a slowing economy, postponing new vehicle purchases.

"It's more of a weakness in consumer confidence rather than a downturn," said Richard T. Curtin, director of the University of Michigan's survey of consumer attitudes.

Ford Motor Co.'s car sales plunged 24.5 percent for the 10 days, and Chrysler Corp. suffered an 11.6 percent downturn in car sales.

Lockheed chief urges support of current board

N.Y. Times News Service

Lockheed Corp. chairman Daniel M. Tellep, facing a proxy fight for control of the company, says shareholders should vote for the present management team because it has taken "decisive" steps to become competitive, cut costs and move into new markets.

The company's shareholders will vote at Lockheed's annual meeting on March 29 between Tellep and the current board and a slate nominated by Dallas investor Harold C. Simmons.

"Harold Simmons has yet to reveal his ideas for the future of Lockheed," Tellep, 58, said Saturday.

Tellep said Simmons should have to make a financial offer for the company rather than just seeking to install his own board of directors. "He wants to take control without (paying) a control premium."

Simmons was not available for comment, said Largent Parks, a Simmons spokesman.

"The perplexing thing about the whole situation is that we've met two times and spoken on the phone, but he's not given me ideas on his plans," said Tellep, who became chairman of the nation's eighth-largest defense contractor slightly more than a year ago.

The Simmons investor group now holds almost 19 percent of Lockheed's stock and has nominated a 15-member slate that includes former Texas Sen. John Tower.

Tellep said Lockheed would consider buying Simmons' shares at current prices, but would not pay a premium to any one shareholder — such as Simmons — in an effort to head off takeover bids.

The Lockheed chairman said the firm's board would review the Simmons group's latest proposal. Simmons has asked that Lockheed's board take up a resolution to ban "golden parachutes," large cash and benefits packages for top executives who lose their jobs in a corporate takeover.

In its proxy statement to shareholders, Lockheed notes that its severance agreements include $5.8 million for Tellep and an additional $8.5 million for other top officers.

Energy futures post gains

Energy futures prices dropped 7 cents in midmorning trading to $21.51. Futures rallied Monday with prices of wholesale gasoline and home heating oil posting sharp gains.

Traders scrambled to buy contracts for petroleum products on the New York Mercantile Exchange on the assumption that Exxon Corp.'s suspension in operations at a New Jersey refinery could cause temporary tightness in regional supplies.

The contract for April delivery of unleaded regular gasoline surged 2.83 cents to 59.30 cents a gallon, expanding on Friday increase of 0.66 cent. Contracts for delivery further in the future also advanced, but more moderately.

Among other refined products traded on the New York Merc, home heating oil for April delivery soared 2.12 cents to 57.99 cents a gallon after a jump of 1.24 cents on Friday. Later contracts were up by slightly smaller amounts.

The April contract for West Texas Intermediate, the key grade of U.S. crude oil, rose 23 cents to close at $21.58 per 42-gallon barrel following Friday's rise of 18 cents. Later contracts posted slightly larger gains.

Andrew Lebow, a broker at E.D.&F. Man International Futures Inc., said strength in products led the energy markets higher.

He said Exxon's decision to suspend tanker and barge operations at its Bayway refinery in Linden, N.J., will idle the refinery, reducing daily refining capacity in the New York harbor area by 130,000 barrels. Total capacity in the area has been estimated at 465,000 barrels a day, he said.

Exxon indefinitely suspended the operations in the wake of two oil spills in waterways surrounding the refinery this year.

Dollar mixed, Gold prices up

LONDON (AP) — The dollar was mixed against most other major currencies in European trading today. Gold prices were up.

Dealers said the dollar still was smarting from Monday's heavy central bank interventions to stem the dollar's rise.

Despite the interventions, dealers said, the dollar still was very well supported.

Exchange Rates

- 1.4969 Swiss francs
- 5.7395 French francs
- 1.9095 Dutch guilders
- 1,253.00 Italian lire
- 1.1885 Canadian dollars

"The only people really selling the dollar are the central banks," said Graham Leverton, corporate adviser at Bank of America in London.

In Tokyo, where trading ends as Europe's business day begins, the dollar fell 0.45 yen to a closing 149.50 yen. Later, in London, it was quoted at a higher rate of 149.70 yen.

Other dollar rates at midmorning compared with late Monday:

In London, British pound rose to $1.6530 from $1.6390 late Monday.

Gold opened in London at a bid price of $404.50 a troy ounce, up from $403.75 bid late Monday. At midmorning, the city's major bullion dealers fixed a recommended price of $404.80.

In Zurich, the bid price was $405.00, up from bid $403.25 late Monday.

Stock market drifting lower

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market drifted lower in a quiet session Monday, failing to extend last week's run of five consecutive gains.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, up 96.17 points last week, dropped 10.81 to 2,649.55.

Big Board volume totaled 140.11 million shares, against 164.33 million in the previous session.

Declining issues outnumbered advances by about 5 to 4 in nationwide trading of New York Stock Exchange-listed stocks, with 684 up, 830 down and 466 unchanged.

Volume on the floor of the Big Board came to 140.11 million shares, down from 164.33 million in the previous session. Nationwide, consolidated volume in NYSE-listed issues, including trades in those stocks on regional exchanges and in the over-the-counter market, totaled 168.64 million shares.

Analysts said recent hopes persisted that the economy might avert a recession and start growing at a revived rate as the year passed.

But traders also appeared edgy over the interest-rate outlook, especially if business activity should pick up.

Rates rose in the credit markets. Prices of long-term government bonds fell about $10 for each $1,000 in face value, putting their yields in the 8.64 percent-8.70 percent range.

In addition, brokers said, buying interest quickly died down when it became evident that last week's advance in stock prices wasn't carrying over into Monday's session.

On the agenda for the markets Tuesday is a government report on factory orders for January, which are expected to show a big decline.

American Express ranked among the volume leaders, down 1⅞ at 27½, and Shearson Lehman Hutton fell ⅝ to 11⅞. Over the weekend American Express announced plans to reacquire the publicly held shares of Shearson through an exchange of stock.

Besides American Express, losers among the blue chips included American Telephone & Telegraph, down ½ at 39⅞; General Motors, down ¼ at 45¾; General Electric, down ⅝ at 61¾, and Exxon, down ½ at 46¼.

BUSINESS IN BRIEF

Japanese risking closed U.S. trade market

WASHINGTON (AP) — U.S. Trade Representative Carla Hills said the Japanese "risk having our market closed or at least gravely limited" if they fail to open trade barriers to U.S. exports.

Two key senators made similar comments Monday, suggesting a protectionist trade war, as Bush administration negotiators admitted making "little progress" so far in cracking Japanese trade bars.

The negotiators said it is too soon to predict whether President Bush's weekend summit with Prime Minister Toshiki Kaifu will produce results but that the Japanese now "must move rapidly to provide solutions."

Shearson to close 50 brokerage offices

NEW YORK (AP) — Shearson Lehman Hutton Inc. is closing as many as to 50 retail brokerage offices nationwide as part of across-the-board cutbacks under parent American Express Co., the investment firm said.

Shearson also was said Monday to be trying to sell its troubled Balcor real estate management subsidiary, which has more than $1 billion in real estate loans and direct investments outstanding in a shaky market.

The reductions are part of an overhaul being engineered by American Express, which over the last two months gradually has moved to take full control of Shearson, its Wall Street investment subsidiary.

Motorola announces new computer line

NEW YORK (AP) — Motorola Inc. unveiled a new computer line that the technology company hopes will propel it into the industry's major leagues.

But some industry analysts said Monday that Motorola could end up alienating companies that buy its computers for resale under their own brand names.

Others questioned whether Motorola stands a chance in the highly competitive computer field.

U.S. interest rates go against world trend

An analysis

By LOUIS UCHITELLE
N.Y. Times News Service

When interest rates go up in one major industrial country, must they also do so in others?

The recent rise of West German, Japanese and American rates, in tandem, has given that impression.

But plenty of room still exists for the United States to control its own interest rates, even going against the trend in other countries.

The United States, in fact, has been quietly going against the global grain for more than a week.

While people buying German and Japanese bonds have insisted upon somewhat higher interest rates in return for their money, those buying American securities have settled for rates that have remained essentially unchanged since late February.

"Interest rates in one ocean bay are affected by rates in another bay," said Paul Samuelson, the Nobel laureate in economic science. "But they don't mingle perfectly. There is considerable room for differences."

The differences stem from such distinctly national phenomena as whether investors consider a particular country a safe place to put their money and whether a nation's inflation rate is rising or falling.

These differences, however, did not show themselves in January, when German and Japanese interest rates suddenly rose and American rates went up with them.

THE PHENOMENON seemed to confirm the often-cited "pool of money" thesis, which holds that a worldwide pool of savings exists, one that moves easily across borders, seeking the highest rate of return, as measured by interest rates.

The rates are offered to attract money for such things as financing the American budget deficit or the rebuilding of East Germany.

There is such a worldwide pool of savings and it does move across borders, but not as easily as theory suggests and not in such single-minded response to the highest bidder, economists say.

The problem is the demand for loans is rarely as great as the worldwide supply of savings, so rates do not have to rise to compete for funds.

"Using the concept of funds flowing across borders to explain interest rate movements is a trap," said Peter L. Bernstein, an economic consultant. "Rates can change in one country or another without any great demand for money."

As if to demonstrate the point, American, German and Japanese rates have begun to decouple, marching once again largely to their own tunes.

Economists cite two major reasons for the divergence.

One is safety or, more specifically, whether investors feel sure that money invested in one country's securities will not suddenly disappear or suffer an accident.

RIGHT NOW, concern is growing about the safety of money in Japan and Germany.

Japanese stock prices have plunged in recent weeks, suggesting the Tokyo stock exchange might be flirting with a crash.

And investors are nervous about the economies in Eastern Europe.

In these uncertain situations, American securities are often thought of as a safe place to park money, even though Japanese and German interest rates keep rising, as they have in recent days to lure the money to Tokyo and Europe.

The second reason why interest rates go in different directions is the most important, involving a distinctly national phenomenon that money brokers everywhere refer to as their "expectations" about inflation.

"Right now, they expect the inflation rate to rise more in Japan and Germany than in the United States," said Nicholas Sargen, chief of bond research at Salomon Brothers.

BETTER TO buy an American bond that pays 8.5 percent interest and count on the American inflation rate of 4.5 percent to remain unchanged.

If the expectation about the American inflation rate turns out to be correct, then only about half the purchasing power of the income from the Treasury note would be eaten up.

The "real" return would be 4 percent (the 8.5 percent yield minus the 4.5 percent loss to inflation) while the real return on the German bond would be only 2 or 3 percent.

Interest rates on German and Japanese 10-year bonds have risen by one-quarter to one-half a percentage point since Feb. 22, reaching 7.12 percent Monday in Japan and 8.97 percent in Germany.

But the rate on 10-year U.S. Treasury notes has held steady at just above or just below 8.5 percent, closing yesterday at 8.63 percent.

Americans, and also foreign investors, have gone for the higher "real" return on American securities, and as they bought the dollars needed to purchase them, the dollar rose in value.

Never mind actual inflation is less of a problem in West Germany and Japan today than it is in the United States.

THE ANNUAL inflation rate in the United States is now 4.5 percent, compared with rates in Germany and Japan of less than 3 percent.

But the expectation is inflation will get worse in Japan because of its booming economy and in West Germany because of the financial strain in rebuilding East Germany.

A third factor that makes interest rate movements a national rather than global phenomenon is the power of the major central banks to manipulate interest rates on short-term securities.

Changes in these rates usually influence long-term rates, independently of international forces.

Alan Greenspan, chairman of the Federal Reserve, weighed in on this point in Congressional testimony last week.

He said while there is influence from rising rates in Germany and Japan, "the presumption it ties our hands and makes our monetary policy ineffective is a very large exaggeration."

If all this is true, why then did American, German and Japanese rates rise in unison from early January through mid-February?

Three factors came together in December to create the global rise in rates.

ONE WAS the view the American economy had finally gotten as weak as it was going to get and would rebound in the new year, pulling up the American inflation rate as the demand for goods intensified.

Simultaneously in December, rates rose in Japan because a new chief of the Bank of Japan called attention to the potential for a higher inflation rate in that country, and tried to head it off by pushing up Japanese interest rates.

Also in December, expectations changed in West Germany.

The Berlin wall was breached and suddenly there was talk of extending the West German currency to East Germany, giving 15 million East Germans, in one fell swoop, the wherewithal to buy West German goods.

OZONE

two chemicals that are as yet unregulated — methyl chloroform and carbon tetrachloride — together account for 33 percent of the man-made, ozone-destroying chlorine in the stratosphere.

As long as they are used, the ozone will be unable to recover even if CFCs are phased out entirely, the Washington-based environmental interest group says.

Spokeswoman Deborah Sheiman said the group is particularly concerned about methyl chloroform, a chemical used primarily as a metal cleaner and degreaser, which has not been widely acknowledged as a threat to the ozone.

"Most of the attention has been on the CFCs," Sheiman said. "We're hoping to turn that around. We believe that methyl chloroform has got to be controlled if we're going to repair the damage to the ozone hole."

Although about 200 companies reported reduced methyl chloroform emissions in 1988 — the latest year for which figures are available — almost as many increased emissions, Sheiman said.

At IBM's vast 88-building complex in Endicott, the company uses methyl chloroform in production of computer circuit boards.

In 1987 and 1988, the plant emitted more than 1 million pounds of methyl chloroform, about 2 percent of the total amount of the chemical used at the plant, environmental engineering manager Dennis F. Whittaker said.

Last year, IBM substituted a water-based solvent for methyl chloroform in one production line, resulting in an 89 percent reduction in methyl chloroform emissions, down to 121,000 pounds, Whittaker said.

The new process, which IBM is implementing at plants in Texas, Japan and West Germany, was developed after more than five years' collaboration between IBM engineers and suppliers, Whittaker said. He estimated the cost of research, development and engineering changes at about $40 million.

"It takes a long time and it's a tremendous investment," he said. "It's not something you do to improve your profit line."

Methyl chloroform still is used in the company's advanced technology line, where more complex boards for mainframe computers are produced. IBM has not found a substitute precise enough to use in that process, Whittaker said.

"We're working on it," he said. "We need a breakthrough. It's hard to schedule an invention."

Pratt & Whitney of East Hartford, Conn., reported the highest methyl chloroform emissions in the country in 1987. The aircraft engine manufacturer has committed to reducing those levels by 80 percent to 90 percent in the next four years by switching to alkaline cleaners, spokeswoman Peggy Kay said.

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

No increase for FDIC

BY BILL DOYLE

Q. Do you feel that federal deposit insurance on bank and savings and loan accounts should be increased from $100,000 to $500,000?

Doyle

A. No. My feelings and those of many other observers of the financial scene are just the other way about. At its present level of $100,000 per depositor per institution, federal insurance has been a contributing factor to the failure of many "thrifts" — S&Ls and savings banks.

With that amount of deposit insurance, individuals know their money is safe. Lots of people send their money to depository institutions paying the highest interest, often through securities firms and other "money brokers" who collect fat fees from thrifts.

Until regulatory authorities finally got off their duffs and began to crack down, that encouraged the high-binders — sometimes downright crooks — running shaky thrifts to put the money into very speculative ventures.

They gambled with depositor's money. When a speculation paid off for an S&L, its operators pocketed big salaries, perks and other profits. When a risky venture failed and an S&L went bust, its operators knew federal insurance would pay off insured depositors.

It was a "Heads, we win; tails, the government loses" situation for thrift managements playing that game.

Don't misunderstand. I am not saying the $100,000 level of federal deposit insurance was the biggest reason for the mind-boggling $166 billion — and rising — cost of the S&L bailout. But it was a contributing factor.

Q. According to a story I read, Congress is considering changing the rules on federal deposit insurance at banks and S&Ls. Does this mean it will be reduced from $100,000?

A. Not likely. Too many depositors, read that as "voters," would be screaming mad if deposit insurance is reduced from the $100,000 level at which it has stood since 1980.

However, a couple of changes might be enacted.

One would have depositors at a failed bank or S&L share part of the loss through a deductible similar to that on medical insurance. That might prompt people to keep their money away from shaky institutions.

Another would have the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. and the Savings Association Insurance Fund levy higher premiums on institutions that have risky investments and/or low-quality balance sheets.

Q. Our Social Security benefits go directly to our bank. Sometimes, our monthly bank statement does not show a credit for the SS benefit that particular month. Then, the bank will credit our account for SS benefits twice on the 31st of the following month. We lose interest for a full month on the delayed credit.

I realize the amount is small, but it means much to us. Is this standard procedure at some banks. If irregular, what can we do?

A. It most certainly should not be standard procedure. A Social Security Administration spokesman says he "has never heard of anything such as that."

SS direct deposits are done by electronic funds transfer — wired to your bank. They are scheduled to arrive and be credited to your account on the third of the month, but sometimes reach there a bit earlier.

There is no reason in the world why any SS payment should reach your account late. Besides losing interest, you cannot withdraw that SS money until it is credited to your account. One of the beauties of direct deposit is knowing exactly when the money will arrive at your account.

It's time for you to visit that bank, talk to an officer there and find out what's going on. If you get no satisfaction, contact your local SS office.

WARN

anywhere from 300,000 to 500,000 barrels a day.

In a report published last month, PlanEcon said the Soviet trend is "unlikely to be reversed any time soon."

It cited the inability of the Soviet economy to improve its own oil industry, failing to supply such essential materials as "pumping equipment, pipes, drilling equipment to the oil fields, etc."

Vahan Zanoyan, a senior energy expert at Petroleum Financial Co., a Washington-based consulting firm, was also pessimistic.

"In four years or so, you could see the energy situation approaching critical mass if the political undercurrents we are witnessing continue to gather momentum," he said.

"One must remember that every time we had a major oil crisis it was because of politically motivated reasons — the 1979 Iranian revolution and the 1973 Arab oil embargo."

These warnings coincide with a widespread consensus among petroleum experts that unless investments on the order of $60 billion are made during the next five years to increase production capacity in key petroleum producing countries, oil prices will surge above the current average of $18 a barrel.

Some experts say that to keep pace with growing demand, production capacity must increase worldwide by 5 million or 6 million barrels a day beyond the current output of about 51 million barrels a day.

Many OPEC officials, including the organization's secretary general, Subroto, once the Indonesian oil minister, contend that OPEC lacks the money to do the job, and they have called upon the West to make it available.

Iran alone is reckoned to need some $50 billion to restore its oil industry to where it stood when the Gulf war began in 1980. The fighting wrought such damage that Iran's capacity was cut in half, to 3 million barrels a day.

No major Western country has been willing to lend Iran even a fraction of the amount needed.

World demand for oil has been growing at about 3 percent a year in the last few years.

Zanoyan said that in 1986 OPEC had spare capacity of 14 million barrels a day. Today, that is down to 2 million barrels.

"To sustain the present growth in demand for oil, we will require investments vastly superior to those of the past decade," said Alirio A. Parra, managing director of Petroleos de Venezuela, the state-owned oil company, and a senior OPEC official.

"If there is a lack of investment, there will be severe strains on the whole supply and distribution chain in the petroleum industry," he said.

Lenders plan two-step mortgages

By DAVE SKIDMORE

WASHINGTON (AP) — Many lenders will soon offer a new type of mortgage designed to appeal to home buyers who expect to move within seven years but want the security of a fixed-rate mortgage in case they don't.

The loans, called two-step mortgages, are a cross between an adjustable-rate loan, where the rate can change every one, three or five years, and a traditional 30-year mortgage, where the interest rate does not change for the life of the loan.

In the first step of the new mortgage, borrowers pay an interest rate up to three-eighths of a percentage point lower than on a 30-year, fixed-rate loan. After seven years, the rate is reset at 2.25 to 2.5 percentage points higher than the rate on 10-year Treasury notes.

On a typical mortgage of $83,000, home buyers currently would save $23 a month, or $1,932 over the first seven years. However, the rate for the remaining 23 years of the mortgage likely would be somewhat higher than on a new 30-year loan taken out at readjustment time.

For instance, if the rate on a 7-year-old, two-step loan were readjusted now, it would be 10.75 percent to 11 percent — one-half to three-quarters of a percentage point higher than fixed 30-year mortgages.

But in this case, unlike a refinancing, the borrower would pay no additional fees or charges at readjustment time.

The Federal National Mortgage Association, or Fannie Mae, said it would begin buying two-step mortgages from a handful of lenders today. It said it expected them to be widely available later in the spring.

"It's a mortgage designed for the 1990s," said Fannie Mae President Roger E. Birk. "In this mobile society, homeowners move and, therefore, repay their mortgages about every seven years."

Birk said two-step mortgages are aimed at military families, people transferred regularly by corporations and first-time home buyers who expect to buy a better home within seven years.

"Very clearly this is marketed at people who expect to move but want to be protected in case they don't," Fannie Mae spokesman Gene Eisman said.

The loans likely will be particularly popular in California, where people move frequently and home prices are among the highest in the nation, Eisman said.

Fannie Mae is a congressionally chartered, but shareholder owned, company that helps finance about one of every eight home mortgages in the nation. It buys mortgages from lenders. It packages some into securities for resale to investors and buys and holds others.

Coca-Cola set to test sweeter cola product

N.Y. Times News Service

The cola wars appear about to heat up again.

Coca-Cola Co. is set to test a new product, called Coke II, that the company will advertise as sweeter than Coca-Cola Classic, marketing executives say.

That strategy, a challenge to Pepsi-Cola, a sweeter product, led Coca-Cola to near-disaster in 1985, when it introduced New Coke, a reformulated version of its venerable cola drink.

But the Atlanta company said it is planning Coke II as a line extension, not as a replacement for Classic.

Shearson to pay $1 million damages

WASHINGTON (AP) — An arbitration panel has ordered Shearson Lehman Hutton to pay damages totaling more than $1 million to three Oklahomans who claimed their broker made unauthorized trades and churned their accounts.

An arbitration panel of the National Association of Securities Dealers ordered Shearson to pay $994,766 in compensatory and punitive damages and lawyers' fees to Temple, Okla. farmer Walter Earl Cox and his wife, Ardenia F. Cox.

In a decision late last month, disclosed Monday, the panel also awarded separately a total of $60,694 in damages and fees to Mrs. Cox and her mother, Cuba E. Read, of Comanche, Okla.

The treble compensatory damages stemmed from claims made by the Coxes under the civil provisions of the federal racketeering laws.

Both awards came in response to claims made against one-time Shearson registered representative Lindy Kent Ridinger of Wichita Falls, Texas.

The Coxes' lawyer, Frank Lewis, of Phoenix, Ariz., said the decision was the first he knew of where both punitive and treble damages were awarded as well as attorney's fees.

The NASD, which oversees the over-the-counter stock market, also supplies the majority of arbitrators for brokerage-client disputes: more than 3,600 case last year, compared to 1,100 handled by the New York Stock Exchanges and about 100 by other groups.

The three customers alleged in a complaint first filed in August 1988, that Ridinger and Shearson "engaged in unauthorized trading of their accounts; that their trading accounts were churned and that the trades placed in their accounts were highly speculative in nature."

Shearson denied the accusations and Ridinger, who was fired June 2, 1986, never responded to the charges, according to documents of the NASD.

Churning, which is illegal under Securities and Exchange Commission rules, is unnecessary trading in a client's account, which increases the broker's commission but does nothing or actually harms the client's position.

Ridinger was formally censured by the NASD, barred from associating with its members "in any capacity" and fined $50,000. He was not reachable for comment.

"While we don't agree with the decision in this particular instance, it has done nothing to shake our confidance in the arbitration process which we feel is an equitable and efficient manner to resolve disputes of this nature," said Steve Faigen, a Shearson spokesman in New York.

Many brokerage houses — like Shearson — require customers, upon opening accounts, to sign agreements that they will take disputes with the house to arbitration rather than court.

Last year the U.S. Supreme Court, in cases involving Shearson, upheld the legality of compelling customers to sign arbitration agreements as the price of doing business.

Several members of Congress have criticized the practice as unfairly restrictive.

"What's important about this award," said Deborah Masucci, director of arbitration for the NASD, "is that it shows arbitrators are willing to make such awards where the conditions are egregious."

American to build pilot school

GRAPEVINE, Texas (AP) — A multimillion-dollar training center for commuter pilots will be built by American Airlines and American Eagle near the company's Flight Academy at Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport, sources close to the airline say.

The Dallas Times Herald reported today that formal announcement of the construction of the school will be made today.

The sources said the facility will cost $60- to $70-million and should be completed by the end of 1990.

A company announcement said when completed it will be the most advanced facility of its kind for the training of commuter airline pilots.

Sources said American decided to invest in the new training center because it has hired more than 1,000 commuter pilots in the past five years and it needs to train pilots for new aircraft such as MD-11s, Fokker 100s and Boeing 757s.

NCNB Texas donates $1 million to SMU center

DALLAS (AP) — NCNB Texas has donated $1 million to Southern Methodist University for an economic studies center.

The Richard B. Johnson Center for Economic Studies will be a part of the university's Dedman College of humanities and sciences, the school announced.

The gift on Monday brings to near completion a $1.9 million campaign to underwrite the center in the renovated Umphrey Lee Building at SMU.

The center is named for the late Richard B. Johnson, former economics department chairman who in 1959 instituted the doctorate in economics — the university's first doctoral program.

He also established the Southwestern Graduate School of Banking at SMU.

"This gift is of particular importance to SMU because it affirms the support of the Dallas business community for the goals the university has recently put in place — goals that emphasize the value of the liberal arts in education and the centrality of Dedman College to our distinctive educational mission," SMU president Kenneth Pye said in a statement.

The Johnson Center includes administrative and faculty offices, classrooms and labs for the economics department.

McCaw finals Lin Broadcasting buy

SEATTLE (AP) — McCaw Cellular Communications Inc. said Monday it had completed its $3.38 billion acquisition of a controlling interest in LIN Broadcasting Corp., extending its influence in the booming cellular telephone industry.

McCaw said the completion of its tender offer for 21.9 million shares of LIN Broadcasting Corporation at $154.11 per share gives it a 51.9 percent interest in LIN. McCaw previously owned about 5 million shares of LIN.

In New York, LIN announced it had replaced its chairman and chief executive officer and elected a new board of directors dominated by McCaw, which is headquartered in Kirkland, Wash., a Seattle suburb.

"Our major regional cellular systems in conjunction with LIN's major markets provide the building blocks for creating the independent, seamless national cellular telephone network we have long envisioned," Craig O. McCaw, chairman and chief executive officer of McCaw, said in a statement.

About 46.3 million LIN shares were tendered. Based on the preliminary count, the proration factor would be approximately 47.3 percent.

The proration determines what percentage of shares offered by each stockholder will be accepted for payment at the price McCaw offered. Additional shares will be returned to the owner.

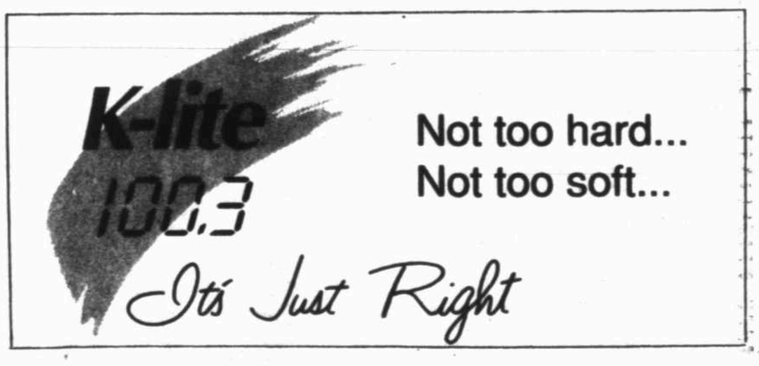

McCaw said the final proration on the shares will be announced by March 13, at which time the funds McCaw paid Monday to the depositary, Chemical Bank, will be distributed.

The new nine-member LIN board, elected early Monday, includes three independent directors named by the outgoing LIN board and six directors associated with McCaw.

The new board set March 20 as the record date for the distribution to LIN shareholders, other than McCaw and its affiliates, of $425 million of McCaw Cellular Class A common stock as a dividend.

LIN expects to distribute the stock to stockholders of record, other than McCaw and its affiliates, on or about April 2.

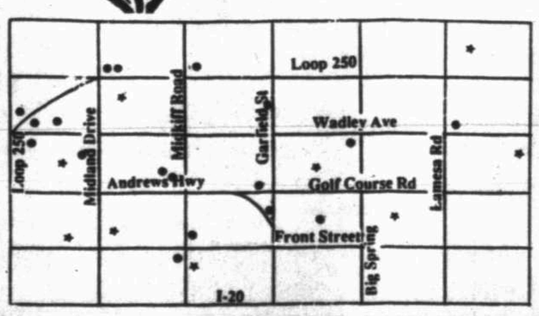

The board also elected Craig O. McCaw as chairman of the board and chief executive officer of LIN and Paul H. Stolz as president and chief operating officer.

'Easy does it' for spring menswear

By NANCY MILLER LEWIS
Copley News Service

The newest fashions for men this spring have characters.

That's right, characters. Depending on the look, it could be any of a cavalcade of well-known names. Try Ricky "I Love Lucy" Ricardo, knicker-wearing pro golfer Payne Stewart, F. Scott Fitzgerald's elegant Jay Gatsby or bandleader Don Ho. Heck, even gangster Al Capone sneaks in a few times.

The common thread in all of this far-flung character stuff is the ease with which the clothes fit: There are lots of activewear styles with elastic or drawstring waists; both shorts and jeans are cut more generously (particularly through the thighs), and many jackets have been "deconstructed," some to the point that they look suspiciously like heavier-weight shirts (and that sort of reminds one of jackets from leisure suits, but never mind).

Much of the clothing also features lightweight materials such as rayon and cotton. Lots and lots of linen has returned as well (and that sort of reminds one of lots and lots of ironing, but, again, never mind).

THE RICKY Ricardo theme, a takeoff on '50s fashions, was most readily identified by the widespread use of maize (a deep golden tone) that was often either color-blocked with or trimmed in black. When the color-blocking was featured on a waist-length jacket, the look was definitely Ricky-at-home. When the maize was trimmed in black in a collarless jacket ("collarless" is another spring-fashion buzzword), the combination was more reminiscent of another character — that of Bill Dana's elevator operator, Jose Jiminez of "The Danny Thomas Show."

Moving into the '60s, the flower-power movement can be in full bloom for spring '90 with Don Ho-type Hawaiian prints often found in camp shirts and walking shorts. Of course, the garden can grow at its own pace in the wardrobe — from a single hippie-type flower on a T-shirt to floral ties and vests or sweaters with a flower intarsia.

Tom Julian, associate fashion director for the Men's Fashion Association, notes that the softer and looser spring silhouettes, in addition to features such as intarsias, have crossed the line from women's clothing into menswear.

"This isn't the androgynous look, though," Julian stresses. "It used to be that menswear influenced women's wear, but now we're seeing a reverse of that trend."

TRADITIONAL FOR spring are the elegant double-breasted blazers and many solid white ensembles that are the trappings of literature's consummate millionaire, Jay Gatsby. This year's double-breasted jacket is a six-button version and is popular in both suits and as a separate blazer.

The all-white ensembles, which usually consist of sportswear separates, would not easily be confused with hospital garb because of the use of textures. A white sweater, for instance, may be composed of blocks of a certain stitch, while slacks may feature a nubby weave — like that of slubbed silk.

The mention of the Gatsby look brings up several other important points:

Spring's suits usually come in one of three popular styles: double-breasted, three-button sack or, when the more traditional, two-button jacket is employed, it is usually updated by adding a vest. Yes, the three-piece suit is making a comeback.

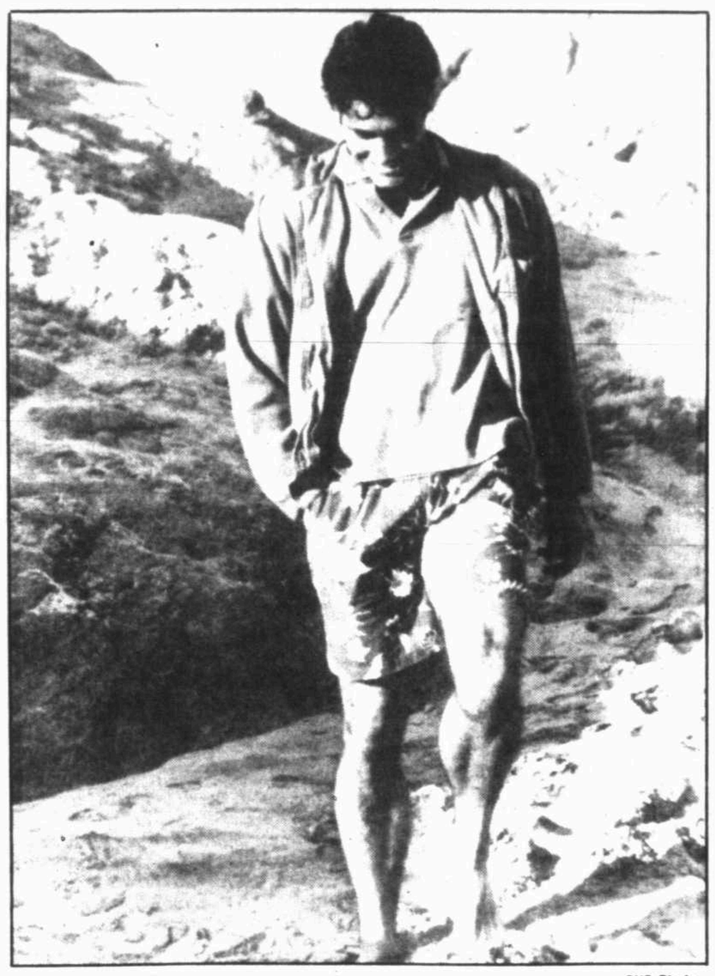

When pastel-colored double-breasted suits combine with solid-colored ties and spectator shoes, one remembers why Al Capone was considered a notorious criminal.

Taupe, an elegant foil for white, was popular in many of spring's collections. It turned up in its many shades again and again in suits.

The most trendy accent color has to be red — but not fire-engine red. Try tomato, raspberry and look for a shade called "chili" to be especially hot.

Since the '70s, sports have played an especially important part in fashion. Everything from aerobics clothes to cyclists' gear has gotten at least a tip of the style hat. The sport of the '90s, then, appears to be golf.

AND WHILE not every man will want to greet the new decade a la Payne Stewart in knickers, the trends toward longer, looser shorts, the return of the blouson jacket and the many varieties of golf shirts and V-neck sweaters indicate that golf clothes should be as at home at the green grocer as on the greens at Pebble Beach.

Men's spring clothing softer, gentler

Copley News Service

If you hate to shop or simply just don't want to blow a bundle on spring clothes, Tom Julian, associate fashion director of the Men's Fashion Association, lists this trio of items as absolute necessities for updating your warm-weather wardrobe:

- A silk-and-wool sport coat "to lighten up the business wardrobe."
- Knee-length walking shorts.
- Something with a floral print, whether a tie, sweater, camp shirt, shorts or vest.

"The average guy should also buy something made of rayon — something that is softly constructed," Julian says.

Dermatology conference considers latest in skin care

Associated Press

A special conference sponsored by the American Academy of Dermatology has revealed the latest information on skin care. Better Homes and Gardens magazine reports on the conference on psoriasis, the sun and moles.

Scientists are looking to keratin, a naturally occurring protein in the skin, as the key to a cure for psoriasis. New studies show psoriasis patients have two distinct forms of keratin in their skin. These protein pairs cause the epidermal cells to reproduce too quickly, resulting in the itchy, red, scaly patches characteristic of the disease. Scientists are hoping this finding will lead to ways to alter the keratin and slow the growth of skin cells to normal levels.

Meanwhile, several treatments are available to ease psoriasis discomfort. A relatively new therapy uses a drug called etretinate (brand name: Tegison). Although the drug reduces psoriasis symptoms, it also can produce arthritis-like side effects in some users.

A more established treatment, and one less likely to cause troubling side effects, is a combination of the drug psoralen and ultraviolet light exposure. Ask a family doctor or dermatologist about them.

Dermatologists at the conference also noted that longtime sun worshippers can repair the damage they've done to their skin. Dr. James Leyden, professor of dermatology at the University of Pennsylvania, says studies show that laboratory animals were able to regenerate skin that had been sun damaged — provided that skin was kept protected from the sun's harmful rays. Leyden and others feel a similar repair process may occur in human skin, too.

Many dermatologists recommend a year-round approach to sun protection. The aging effects of the sun occur in winter as well as summer, though the damage is less. Still, anyone who is outdoors a lot in winter would do well to cover up or use a sunscreen.

On the issue of moles, dermatologists believe they are serious business and not just a minor flaw. Watching moles, they said, could save one's life. Most often, moles are just the result of some damage done to the skin by the sun.

But when a mole changes color or becomes larger or multicolored, it could be a warning sign of skin cancer.

Fashions for spring have soft, feminine look

BY TRISH DONNALLY
N.Y. Times News Service

As we enter the 1990s, soft silhouettes in body-skimming styles replace the hard-edged, second-skin fashions of the '80s.

A tender palette prevails with a dominance of face-powder pale neutrals. Fragile fabrics are used in sporty silhouettes. And the bra becomes outerwear.

In spring fashions, you'll find a relaxed attitude, reflected by tunics, fluid trousers, short sarong-draped skirts and long, languorous jackets. Clothes gently follow the female form, yet nothing is uncomfortably tight.

What looks newest are fragile fashions that suggest rather than flaunt sexuality, such as those by Romeo Gigli. His clothes are made of exquisitely embroidered textiles, including cropped silk pants and wrapped halter tops that have a rich tenderness to them. The feeling is totally different from the aggressive, dress-for-success looks of the '80s.

And, more than it has since the '50s, the breast takes center stage.

Jean Paul Gaultier and Azzedine Alaia have long been known for designs that emphasize the bosom. This season, Calvin Klein includes the sparest strapless dresses with twisted tops that form a brassiere.

Young Spanish designer Sybilla Sorondo makes dart detailing like pie wedges of material that come together in a blatant conical pattern over each breast on her '50s-style dresses.

In the extreme, Yves Saint Laurent's Paris collection last October showed togas that totally exposed one breast.

WHAT THIS all means to you is not that you're going to go topless, of course, but it might mean you'll dare to show a little more cleavage than usual. It does not mean you'll wear sheer blouses to the office, but you might wear an ultra-sheer blouse under a buttoned-up blazer. And in the evening, many women will opt to look unabashedly seductive.

Fashion is more traditionally feminine than it has been in decades. There's a de-emphasis on broad shoulders. In fact, one of the most popular looks is a simple slip dress, which shows your shoulders at their sexiest. Even structured jackets have very subtle shoulder pads, if any at all.

Jackets have become the most versatile items in a modern woman's wardrobe. The newest ones have soft, rounded silhouettes and provide the comfortable slouch of a sweater. Some are meant to take you directly from the boardroom in the morning to the ballroom at night.

One great jacket can top many looks — walking shorts, chiffon skirts, sarongs or fluid trousers.

Karl Lagerfeld put a classic, creamy white Chanel jacket over a draped chiffon, pearl-trimmed gown when he presented the spring collection in Paris. It was the same style jacket he used to top bicycle shorts.

Speaking of bike shorts, the influence of street fashion on high fashion is stronger than ever. Watch for hot-colored, quilted Chanel fanny packs, white-sequined backpacks and decorated running shoes.

JEANS TAKE on a new character when made of parchment-colored lace the way Rebecca Moses shows them. Lace is a leading fabric in spring fashions, but not in fussy silhouettes; rather in sporty styles.

Take the blue lace car coats by Charlotte Neuville, for example. Or the white lace tank tops by Carmelo Pomodoro. He pairs these with simple, ribbed rayon skirts.

When clothes are simple, as they often are for spring, accessories become more elaborate. Earrings graze shoulders this season, with delicate charms dancing to and fro. These will be great on a date if you're young and gravity hasn't yet taken its toll.

But older women seldom need another long line to optically pull their faces downward. Chin-skimming earrings are better for mature women than shoulder dusters.

As you enter stores this spring, you may be over- or underwhelmed by the sea of beige tones — white, sand, buff, blond, taupe and rose — that prevails. White is often worn with navy or black. The neutrals tend to be worn head to toe.

But spring's palette includes much more. You'll find warmer tones, including terra cotta, curry, cinnamon and wheat; traditional springtime pastels — mint, peach and sunshine yellow; and shocking brights, if you look.

There are plenty of prints in store, too, including a spring garden's worth of florals, bold stripes, polka dots and abstracts.

And, as we see every spring, you'll find a strong dose of nautically inspired fashions. They'll range from those with nautical flag or seashell prints to styles with gold charms of anchors and stars.

WHEN FACED with a wide range of choice, many people feel most comfortable turning to the familiar, and designers consistently include nautical fashions in their spring lines.

This is also why cowboy chic lives on and on. Ralph Lauren and Norma Kamali are among designers revisiting the Wild West this spring.

To complement the soft focus of spring fashions, makeup takes a soft, smoldery turn, too. Smoky eyes and summer berry-red lips look pretty, if these match your complexion.

The '90s are a time to express your individuality. With the wide selection of fashions available, ranging from Old World opulence to New Age simplicity, let your personal style shine.

World Modeling Association names San Angelo man

From Staff Reports

SAN ANGELO — Terry Mikeska of Mikeska Productions, 1003 W. Beauregard in San Angelo, has been appointed president of the World Modeling Association. Since his appointment, he has been busy moving the home office of the association from New York to San Angelo.

Mikeska worked in the New York home office of the association for two years as assistant to the former president and founder Ruth Tolman. His responsibilities included acting as the performing arts director and as tour director for groups of models who attended WMA events in Canada and overseas. He became acquainted with the World Modeling Association in 1984 when attended the convention and won the Performing Arts Competition with his piano entertainment.

He also has conducted World Model Workshops and Photographic Sessions for local models. Two of his models recently won first and second place in the English Leather Calendar Girl Challenge.

"The city of San Angelo, his family and friends can be proud" of his accomplishments, said Mrs. Tolman.

NICK TAYLOR FOR DISTRICT JUDGE

We all know that it is much easier to point a finger and identify a problem, than to roll up our sleeves and develop a solution.

Nick Taylor knows that Texas has a crime problem and he has taken it upon himself to be part of the solution. Nick's helping hand has made it possible for an innovative Violent Crime Prevention Program, to expand from teaching in a backroom at the Midland YMCA to a special class now being offered at the University of Texas at Austin.

As a security professional I believe that Nick Taylor understands how to deal with crime. Please join me in supporting Nick Taylor. "Your vote will be part of the solution."

Fall collections begin shows in Milan

By DANIELA PETROFF

MILAN, Italy (AP) — If Gianni Versace was daring last season when he hiked his hemlines 10 inches above the knee, this time he's darn right fresh with skirts so tiny they no longer cover anything.

The peek-a-boo effect of the new fall-winter collection presented in Rome on Sunday was no accident. The flamboyant designer, favorite son of the showbiz crowd, presented them in a variety of styles from derriere hugging jersey dresses and skirts, to elaborately embroidered silk cocktail gowns.

Also super short was the 1990's Versace version of the loose trapeze dress first launched in the 1960's.

Gianni was a bad boy when it came to his evening wear too, slitting the side of a floor length gown straight up the leg. The same gown has a plunging backline which joins the slit at the waist in a single snap. What happens if the snap were to pop is anybody's guess.

Apart from a few raised eyebrows, mainly from the staid Milanese crowd on the first day of the four day ready-to-wear collections, the general consensus was that whatever Gianni does he does so well he can get away with it.

One of the things Versace does best is jeweled embroidery, which this season he uses heavily to divert attention from the many bare spots in his collection.

Thus a tiny A-line silk dress, which is really no more than a slip, becomes a sumptuous cocktail gown when Versace stiches a myriad of shimmering crystals and pearls in the form of a heart down the back or across the front.

Bustier tops made up entirely of encrusted jewels give substance to the micro skirt below, while simple silk stretch pants turn into sophisticated evening wear when decorated with paisely or floral prints shaped entirely out of rich sequins.

Plumage on hemlines and waistlines are another filler in the collection.

To further make up for the skimpy styles underneath, the Versace jacket is loose and full with wide sleeve and generous shawl collar, in bright shades of blue, green, yellow and red.

Speaking of red, Versace uses cardinal red heavily in his new winter fashion, throwing down the gauntlet to fellow Italian designer Valentino, who up to now had the monopoly on the rich and elegant shade.

The four-day Italian ready to wear shows got off to a fresh start Sunday morning with the Emporio Armani (a Giorgio Armani label aimed at the younger set) fall-winter 1990-1991 collection full of fun ideas for the chilly months ahead.

According to Armani, heavy knit sweaters will be worn over jackets next winter, boots will reach the thigh to protect legs bared by melon shaped mini skirts and bermuda shorts, and jump suits will be knitted and worn with a scarf tied around the waist for extra coziness.

During the trend-setting Milanese fashion week such top Italian names as Krizia, Ferre, Fendi, Missoni Gennyi and Byblos will present their new winter wears. Most of the shows take place in the fashion pavillion of the modern trade fair on the outskirts of Milan.

Enterprising students travel far on a dream

By ERMA BOMBECK

Some will say this is a story about a bunch of kids at Thome School in Rock Falls, Ill. Others will remember the kids' teacher and his creativity. Still others will recall the creation of a doll-like character called "Elwood."

Bombeck

It's a story about dreams.

Dreams are hard to instill in children. You can't lick them, unwrap them, buy them, or put them on a shelf for your mother to dust every week. Dreams live in your mind, and sometimes no one knows they're there. Doug Hand wanted his sixth-graders to know about dreams and how important they are in growing up. But how do you tell kids they can be anything they want to be, go anyplace they want to go and turn fantasies into realities?

Enter Elwood P. Dowd (the fictional name of Jimmy Stewart in "Harvey," who traveled with a 6-foot invisible rabbit). Elwood is a 4-foot, 4-inch duplicate of a little boy, complete with tennis shoes and hat. Maybe the entire sixth-grade class couldn't pick up and go in search of dreams, but Elwood could go and the kids could live vicariously through his travels. The children made a list of people they wanted to meet and places they wanted to visit.

A couple of weeks ago, I got a letter from a member of the class, Rachel Blackert, asking if Elwood could visit with me.

A note came with him: "When I first started to travel seven years ago, a lot of people didn't think I was real. That's because Mr. Hand said those people don't believe in a lot of things 'cause they lost their imagination. He says people believe in me now because I believed in myself and I didn't give up. Every person I meet that believes in me makes me all the more human."

The governor of Illinois in 1986 thought he was human enough to christen him a Republican. Ed Bradley and the staff of "60 Minutes" posed with him for a picture. Sen. Paul Simon of Illinois took Elwood to a staff meeting in Washington, D.C., and the Lone Ranger treated him to a commercial shoot. And that's only a small number of the people Elwood has met. The stuffed boy has his sights on Johnny Carson and the White House.

Mr. Hand, whose ultimate dream is to have Elwood visit with Jimmy Stewart, says: "There's nothing wrong with dreaming. Kids learn to take a chance. They learn to try and not to give up if they fail the first time. That's a valuable lesson in life for a child to learn."

I would hope that one day Elwood would arrive at the White House or NBC in Burbank in his UPS box. You don't have to fiddle with him much. Just sign his autograph book, pose for a picture or two, and maybe send a note saying how he spent his day. The kids provide the excitement and the imagination. After all, isn't that how we all started out? With a dream?

DEAR ABBY

Joseph Stalin's word as bad as stench at Yalta

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I laughed when I read your article dealing with the Yalta Conference and the alleged strong body odor of Joseph Stalin. How could anybody know who was responsible for the stench under those circumstances?

Van Buren

Being fluent in Russian, I was there with a team of interpreters from the U.S. Navy, and I can verify that the accommodations, insofar as cleanliness was concerned, left a lot to be desired.

What we Americans missed the most were showers and bathrooms. (Mr. Churchill called Yalta "the worst choice in the world — good for typhus and lice which thrive in those parts." He was right.)

President Roosevelt was assigned the only private bathroom at Yalta. All the others had to go down to one of the minesweepers docked at the port in order to take a shower.

No comments were made regarding body odor, as that would have been most impolite and inappropriate in the diplomatic process.

However, if anything stank at Yalta, it was Stalin's word — which proved to be worthless! — ANDREW SAWCHUK, LA HABRA, CALIF.

DEAR MR. SAWCHUK: Thanks for the interesting history lesson from an eye (and nose) witness.

DEAR ABBY: Am I the only one who is bugged by this? I'm referring to kids from Little League, 4-H, Pee-Wee Hockey — you name it — setting up camp outside the local mall or supermarket panhandling for donations.

I'm not saying that the causes are not worthy, but what kind of lesson is this teaching our young people? What happened to the days when most kids' groups earned their funds through paper drives, bake and rummage sales, etc.?

I'm the first to buy Girl Scout cookies when they ring my bell, and when there's a benefit car wash, I usually line up. Perhaps I'm old-fashioned, but when kids expect a donation simply because they are wearing a band uniform and thrust a collection can under your nose — sometimes without even saying a word — I respectfully decline.

Abby, I realize it's not the kids' fault; they're just doing what their leaders and coaches tell them to do. Maybe this practice would be less widespread, however, if adults behind these kids knew there are more people out there like me who disdain this practice. Are there? — BUGGED

DEAR BUGGED: I see your point, and I agree with you. But times have changed; no parent in his or her right mind is going to allow his children to go unsupervised from door-to-door (except for their immediate neighbors) to sell cookies or to collect for any cause.

DEAR ABBY: What is the difference between SAYING you will do something and PROMISING to do it? — MUNCIE, IND.

DEAR MUNCIE: If the person's word is good, there is no difference.

The facts about drugs, AIDS and how to prevent unwanted pregnancy are all in Abby's new expanded booklet, "What Every Teen Should Know." To order, send a long, business-size, self-addressed envelope, plus check or money order for $3.95 ($4.50 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, Teen Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054. (Postage is included.)

JOHN M. CASTRO ENDORSES
NICK TAYLOR FOR DISTRICT JUDGE

I am area manager of a utility. I support Nick Taylor for several reasons.

Nick Taylor cares deeply about victims of crime. I have worked side-by-side with Nick with the Midland Rape Crisis Center.

Another reason I support Nick is his extraordinary range of legal experience. For example, he is head of the tax, as well as other departments at his firm. He is recognized as a leading tax expert in West Texas. 25% of the pending civil cases in the Midland District Courts are tax cases. Also of great value to our community is his expertise in Business and Oil and Gas Law for 26 years. He has broad, well balanced experience.

Please join me in voting for Nick Taylor on March 13 in the Republican Primary

Comet Cleaners offers fast, easy hints for spring cleaning

Easter will be here before you know it, and often, this holiday season brings in out-of-town guests. Billie Jo Corbell, owner of Comet Cleaners, says you can be ready for them fast and easy.

■ Starting with one room at a time, gather in your bedspreads, dust ruffles, pillow shams, drapes and even small rugs. Then bring them in before 9 a.m. Monday through Saturday, and have them dry cleaned for pick up that afternoon.

In just one day, one room in your house is done and you can move on to the next one.

■ Billie Jo also adds that a good hint is to have your household items done together since sometimes there is a slight color change in the fabric. Bedspreads, dust ruffles and pillow shams are the most important to remember to have cleaned.

■ Another helpful hint is to stop color loss by keeping the hot afternoon sun from shining on bedspreads everyday.

The Comet Cleaners March special is comforters any size, dry cleaned for $16.99. The regular price is $20.00 to $25.00.

Comet Cleaners dry cleans on Saturdays until 11 a.m. for your convenience and stays open until 5 p.m. — so make Saturday your house cleaning days.

To help keep your clothing investment intact, Billie Jo says that when you put away your winter wardrobe, have it cleaned and moth proofed first. She and her staff see a lot of moth damage here in Midland. Comet Cleaners offers free moth proofing for its customers — just let them know. The damage does not always show up until the garment is cleaned and it's too late when the damage is done. Remember, don't take a chance with your expensive wools.

Billie Jo opened the first Comet Cleaners on Midland Drive in September 1982 and now there are four locations to choose from.

"Drop your pants" at Comet has been a logo special since the day Comet opened.

Billie Jo and her family have been West Texans all their lives and chose to make Midland their home and the home of their business.

At Comet Cleaners, you can expect same day service on drycleaning and laundered shirts and jeans. One hour service is available at the 3108 W. Cuthbert and 2606 N. Midland Drive locations.

Another Comet advantage is the handy drive through service at each location. Mothers with children or those in a hurry to get to work will appreciate this added convenience.

Other Comet Cleaners specials and services include:

■ Handy drive through service at each location.

■ Minor alterations (hems, zippers and mending) in before 9:00 a.m., out by 5:00 p.m. Monday through Friday.

■ Major alterations and professional tailoring Monday through Friday.

■ Hand wash (professional finish)

■ Wedding gowns cleaned and boxed (starting at $59.99 and up)

■ Leather and suede cleaning.

■ Draperies.

■ Leather and suede cleaning.

■ Free repairs on minor needs and a small charge on some garments.

■ Pants everyday special — three pair dry cleaned for $3.99.

■ Dress shirts .99 cents each.

■ Same day service (everyday Mon.-Sat. and one hour cleaning upon request.

■ Member of International Fabric Care Institute.

■ Free personal consultation upon appointment.

■ Deodorizing (no heavy solvent odor.)

So come by any of the four Comet Cleaners locations and see for yourself the Comet difference. Stores are located at 3108 W. Cuthbert, (one hour service available) 2606 N. Midland Drive, (one hour service available) 2106 N. A Street (package mailing, UPS and gift wrapping available) and 3308 W. Illinois (Nickel Cleaners — also offers unique jewelry). For further information, please call the main office at 689-9723.

Try the handy drive through service as well as one hour or same day service at Comet Cleaners, 3108 W. Cuthbert. Enjoy excellent service also at the other fine Comet Cleaners and Nickel Cleaners locations in Midland.

ICS offers help, answers questions on Medicare, insurance filing

A low annual fee takes care of filing assistance for all your medical claims for the year, regardless of the number of doctor's visits or hospital stays. Call 694-2375 and ask for Nelle Drummond, standing, or Carole Walker, owner for more information.

Are you facing stacks of doctor bills and Medicare forms which seem to grow bigger and more confusing each week? Can you tell which doctor has been paid by Medicare or your secondary insurance and which ones you have to pay?

ICS Insurance Assistance can help if these questions sound familiar to you or if you are helping a friend or a relative try to sort through confusing medical paperwork.

New owner Carole Walker and her assistant, Nelle Drummond have extensive Medicare experience. You can count on their many years of medical office work for handling all the problems that can occur from incorrect filing.

One of the newest ICS services which will certainly appeal to doctors is the electronic Medicare filing service. It was designed to save doctors valuable time and money. Call 694-2375 for more information.

With ICS, there will be no more mystery and confusion about what, where and when to file claims. You won't have any more questions, such as, "Have I received all the benefits I should?"

While ICS can't make an insurance company pay you, it can smooth the way for you by acting on your behalf, by making inquiries and by doing all the legwork for you.

ICS can handle all of the problems that may develop from incorrect claim filing. They make sure that every claim is followed through from Medicare to your private insurance companies, and then they organize it into a manner that is easy to understand.

Your file is available any time you have a question or would like to check on the status of any claims, and your file is kept completely confidential. When using the services of ICS, you can be assured that all insurance checks and information come directly to you.

A low annual fee of $150 per person per year, plus sales tax, takes care of filing assistance for all your medical claims for the year, regardless of the number of doctors' visits or hospital stays.

Another ICS advantage is for those who are homebound because of surgery or illness, Carole or Nelle will come to your home to pick up and deliver paperwork. Just call 694-2375 and set up an appointment.

In short, let ICS take care of these problems:

■ Filing all medical claims with Medicare and all of your private insurance companies. If your doctor files Medicare, ICS will file your supplements.

■ Handling office charges, hospital and clinic charges — all of your medical bills for the year.

■ All problems or questions that may arise.

■ Making sure you receive all the benefits you can from your private insurance coverage and Medicare.

■ At your request, will consolidate all your information and give you a yearly report for tax purposes and review.

■ Eliminating the worries.

Carole and Nelle encourage you to call ICS at 694-2375 and let them free you from the annoying rules and regulations of insurance filing.

Jack Sherman celebrates five years in Midland

This month marks the fifth anniversary for Jack Sherman Chevrolet, Inc. Operation began for Jack Sherman as a Chevrolet dealer on March 1st 1985. Two other automobile lines, Geo and Saab, have been added to the dealership since Jack's arrival.

Jack and his wife Dolly moved to Midland in late 1984 from California. After retiring as an executive with Chevrolet Motor Division, Jack brought with him 31 years of expertise with Chevrolet. "Customer Satisfaction First" is the basis by which Jack operates the dealership and has strived to instill this in each of his 78 employees.

Jack has served as president of the Midland New Car Dealers Association and also served on the Chevrolet National Dealer Council in 1987 and 1988. His involvement in community affairs has been extensive having been associated with or on the board of directors of Junior Achievement, Better Business Bureau, Chamber of Commerce, Greentree Country Club, Permian Basin Petroleum Association, Midland Odessa Health & Retirement Endeavor (MOHRE), Downtown Rotary Club, and the Hispanic Chamber of Commerce.

PART-TIME JOB$ AVAILABLE APRIL 1

Effective April 2, the Midland Reporter-Telegram will become a morning newspaper instead of an afternoon newspaper. As a result we have several routes which will need to be re-filled with qualified, responsible individuals. Due to this one-time large number of routes becoming available, now is the best time ever to obtain a route in your area!

Often asked questions:

Is it worthwhile for adults also?

Yes! Our current carrier force is already 50% adult and 50% youth. Morning newspaper routes are attractive for:

- adults who have full-time jobs, yet want to supplement their income with a steady part-time job.
- youths who are involved in afternoon school functions, but want to work!

How much money can I make as a carrier?

Depending on the size of the route(s), from $150 to $500 monthly! Some motor routes make even more, although currently none are expected to be available. Depending on your service record, you may qualify to move up to a motor route later!

How long does it take?

The actual delivery takes 1-2 hours Monday - Saturday, and 2-3 hours on Sunday, again depending on the size of the route(s). Also, a few hours a month are needed to collect from subscribers. Many carriers choose to handle some of this by putting envelopes in subscribers' papers. Some collecting in person will be necessary though.

When do the papers have to be delivered by?

6:00 am Monday - Friday, and 7:00 am Saturday and Sunday.

Do I ever get a day off?

The job requires a 7-day a week commitment. However, carriers do take days off by finding a friend or family member to substitute for them!
