Snow storm blamed for at least 21 deaths

Associated Press

A huge winter storm blamed for at least 21 deaths as it trudged eastward spun toward the Great Plains today after dropping more than 2 feet of snow in Arizona, Utah and Colorado and shutting off power to thousands in Salt Lake City and making travel hazardous.

"It hasn't lost its punch yet," Pete Reynolds of the National Severe Storms Forecast Center in Kansas City, Mo., said today. "It may do so when it reaches the Plains, but it's still active in many areas."

Forecasters predicted accumulations of 6 to 10 inches in most of southern Colorado today, and 2 to 4 inches as far south as the mountains of northern Arizona and New Mexico.

Five inches of snow fell Tuesday night in the south-central Wyoming city of Rawlins. Storm watches were issued as far east as western Nebraska and northwestern Kansas.

All but about 10 of some 100 elk hunters still stranded by a 4-foot snowfall in Washington's Cascade Mountains had been contacted by late Tuesday, after searchers found the bodies of a woman in a pickup truck and a hunter lost four days, rescue officials said.

Three National Guard helicopters, bolstered by about 30 Yakima County deputies and volunteers on the ground, searched Tuesday in record 7-degree cold for the missing, most of whom were prepared for foul weather.

"I heard a story from one pilot who saw a new Thunderbird at 6,000 feet on a logging road," said Bill Lokey, search and rescue coordinator for the state Department of Emergency Management. "It was up to its windshield in snow. The people just went out and got caught."

The snow ended in Northern California's mountain counties, where deputies and ski patrols rescued at least 45 people from the Sierra Nevada by Tuesday.

Erik Holst, an El Dorado National Forest spokesman, said four people were rescued by helicopter near Loon Lake and Wright's Lake, two popular recreational areas about 70 miles east of Sacramento.

Several ski resorts near Interstate 80 over the 7,235-foot high Donner Pass and U.S. Route 50 over 7,382-foot Echo Summit started their lifts Tuesday or announced plans to do so by Saturday.

In Nevada, rescuers found two overdue hunters west of Reno but continued the search for two backpackers lost between Reno and Carson City.

The body of a man was found Tuesday in the wreckage of a light plane missing since Saturday, with three aboard, in California's Blue Canyon, but searchers presumed all three were killed, said Sgt. Keven Besana of the Placer County Sheriff's Department.

Two rescuers lowered to the wreckage from an Air National Guard helicopter late Tuesday sighted only the body of the pilot, David Perrin, 51, of Martinez. They said Perrin's wife, Judy, and their 27-year-old son Mike were not in the plane.

PALM BEACH, Fla. (AP) — The British Invasion ends today as Prince Charles and Princess Diana return to England after charming south Florida from the polo field to the ballroom on the final leg of their United States tour.

Despite some pre-visit sniping among Palm Beach high society, Tuesday's stay was as smooth as the velvet on Diana's cherry-red evening gown at the $10,000-a-couple benefit dinner at the lavish Breakers Hotel.

City Council buys laser system to analyze streets' conditions

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Assistant City Editor

Every block of paved streets in Midland will be analyzed and the data recorded on computers with a unique laser program purchased by the Midland City Council on Tuesday. And it may make Midland the only city in Texas to use the paving management system designed by Infrastructure Management Services of Arlington Heights, Ill.

For $160,000, this system will record the condition of every street, prioritize the work according to need and allow employees to keep the records updated on a computer system, according to Public Works Director Fred Baker.

Baker said he had listened to the company's representatives at national public works meetings and had talked with other cities which have utilized the company. While other cities have designed paving management programs in which the streets are analyzed and records kept, the IMS eliminates the problem of human error, he said.

In the first step a truck equipped with a laser camera on front, known as the Laser Road Surface Tester, gathers measurements on cracks, roughness, macro-texture, rut depth and relative transverse section of the pavement, according to a brochure from the company. The laser can take 32,000 readings per second.

"Survey measurements are processed and stored in an on-board computer. This computer provides extensive flexibility in collecting a variety of inventory and environmental data at the time of the surface survey," the brochure reads.

Missouri Avenue may not be made one-way street

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Assistant City Editor

A plan to make Missouri Avenue a one-way street could be abandoned in favor of designating the area a historical district while some areas north of the city may be determined unsuitable for development when a final form of the comprehensive master plan is adopted.

The Planning and Zoning Commission looked at those two issues and alternative plans for routing Green Tree Boulevard during a session this morning at City Hall. These issues came out of a series of public hearings held last month on the preliminary draft of the plan. The time schedule shows the master plan to be finalized by the commission and sent to the City Council by the end of this year.

Missouri Avenue had been included in a proposal for one-way streets during the early 1980s at

Three Midland officials will appear before grand jury

By MARK LEWIS
Staff Writer

Mayor G. Thane Akins, City Manager Jim Brown and Police Chief Wayne Gideon were to appear today before a Midland grand jury which last week investigated an alleged cover-up at the Police Department.

"They did not subpoena us, they just asked us to appear," said Gideon this morning.

The three officials said they didn't know why the grand jury wanted to see them, but some members of Midland's law-enforcement community speculated it had something to do with last week's investigation.

The grand jury heard testimony from more than a dozen police officers last Wednesday about an Aug. 25 incident in which Patrol Sgt. Vince Castillo was involved in a traffic accident while off duty. Castillo's car hit a utility pole at the intersection of Mississippi Avenue and Weatherford Street at 2:38 a.m. after he failed to complete a left turn, according to the accident report.

The officer who made out the traffic report noted Castillo appeared to be under the influence of alcohol, but Sgt. Jerry Morris took Castillo to Midland Memorial Hospital without giving him a breathalyzer test.

Officers, detectives and nurses who saw Castillo at the hospital didn't think he was drunk, according to Patrol Capt. Herman Wicker, who conducted the internal investigation. No blood test was ever given Castillo, who received 18 stitches for a gash on his forehead.

Castillo had had four beers over a seven-hour period before the accident, according to Wicker.

Midland Mothers Against Drunk Driving President Cynthia Grubb obtained a copy of Officer Davy Conner's accident report and took it to District Attorny Al Schorre, who presented it to the grand jury last week. The jurors no-billed the case, choosing not to indict Morris or anyone else for official misconduct.

Conner has been transferred to the Police Department's Midland Air Terminal unit at his own request, according to Gideon.

"I would assume that he indeed would feel more comfortable there," the chief said this morning.

"It's done as far as I'm concerned," said Akins this morning. "The police did their own internal investigation of it and did not find any evidence of wrongdoing on anybody's part, (and) the grand jury didn't either."

"As far as I'm concerned, that ends it," agreed Brown, who said he had not looked into the incident: "Whatever was in the newspaper (last week) is all I know."

Local businessman Stanley Moore dies

Moore

Stanley Cockrell Moore, 71, a prominent Midland businessman, died Tuesday at his home following a lengthy illness.

Services will be at 1:30 p.m. Thursday at the First United Methodist Church with Dr. Charles Lutrick officiating. Interment will follow in Resthaven Mausoleum, with arrangements handled by Ellis Funeral Home.

Moore was born Sept. 28, 1914, in Wharton. He served as a second lieutenant with the Texas National Guard from 1932 to 1939. He was a 1937 graduate of Rice University with a degree in mechanical engineering. He married Johnny Bullard of Sugarland in 1937.

He was the vice president of engineering for Hughes Tool Company of Houston for 12 years before forming and serving as president of Drill Collar Service Company of Midland in 1949. He formed the company when he saw the need for a service inspecting drill collars for fatigue cracks which was costing the oil industry tremendous sums of money.

In 1953, Moore formed Drilco Oil Tools Inc. and served as president with 46 employees. The company merged in 1967 with Smith Industries International of Whittier, Calif., now Smith International Inc. of Newport Beach, Calif. He served as chairman of the board of Smith International Inc., following the merger. He retired in 1976.

Suit alleges Hudson deceived his lover about AIDS condition

Christian

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A man who claims that Rock Hudson repeatedly had sex with him during his last years and concealed the fact he was dying of AIDS has filed a $14 million suit against the actor's estate and others.

The suit filed Tuesday by Marc Christian, 31, seeks $10 million from the estate plus $1 million apiece from executor Wallace Sheft, Hudson's secretary Mark Miller and two unnamed doctors, saying they conspired to hide the illness.

"He asked Rock, and Rock denied he had it," celebrity attorney Marvin Mitchelson said at a news conference he attended with a somber Christian.

Christian "learned about it the same way the rest of the world did, on the radio," Mitchelson said.

Hudson, who learned he had AIDS in June 1984, had insisted to Christian that he was suffering from anorexia but did not have acquired immune deficiency syndrome, the attorney said.

Christian lived with Hudson for 2½ years and was flown to Paris for AIDS testing last summer while the actor was hospitalized there, Mitchelson said. The tests for the presence of AIDS antibodies, indicating exposure to the disease, came out negative, but Christian still fears he will develop the deadly, sexually transmitted disease, the lawyer said.

Hudson, 59, died at his Beverly Hills home Oct. 2 of complications from AIDS, which cripples the body's immune system and leaves its victims vulnerable to infections and other diseases, including cancer.

In Christian's suit, which alleges bodily injury, mental suffering for fraud and deceit, and in a separate $10 million claim, he contends he lives in "extreme fear that at any moment he will receive a death sentence" of AIDS.

The separate actions were filed because the claim, not actually a lawsuit, requires 10 days waiting time before the estate accepts or rejects it, Mitchelson said. If rejected, the lawyer said he will file another suit alleging emotional distress as well as the other claims.

Medicare changes could cost elderly $1.1 billion in 1986

By PEGGY ROBERSON
Washington Correspondent

WASHINGTON — Changes in Medicare being considered by Congress and already ordered by the Department of Health and Human Services would cost the elderly $1.1 billion next year and limit hospitals to a 1 percent increase in reimbursement.

More than half the savings claimed in the House of Representatives' deficit-reduction measure, approved Oct. 31, would come from program changes in Medicare, the federal health insurance system for the elderly.

The Senate Tuesday resumed work on its separate deficit-reduction package, which also includes Medicare changes.

In both houses, the legislation is called "budget reconciliation," a process in which cuts are ordered and revenues raised to meet deficit reduction targets agreed to in Congress' budget resolution.

Some Medicare provisions in the House legislation would limit increases for reimbursements to hospitals to 1 percent in fiscal 1986 (which started last Oct. 1), require extra payments to hospitals that treat large numbers of poor patients, and reduce supplemental payments to teaching hospitals. The Senate would limit reimbursement increases to 1/2 percent.

At the same time, the Department of Health and Human Services has ordered an increase Jan. 1 in the amount Medicare patients have to pay to be admitted to a hospital to $492 from the current $400.

Some hospitals will hurt because of the limit on reimbursements, but most were "surprisingly acquiescent," in the words of a House staff man. "They didn't make a vigorous fight." One reason is, the 1 percent the House offered was better than the freeze the administration wanted.

Last spring, the American Hospital Association, reported profit margins were up from last year and that undercut any argument that they generally are in dire straits.

The HHS-ordered increase in the deductible to be paid by Medicare patients has nothing to do with congressional budget reduction actions, but some members of Congress are ready to step in to stop it or spread it out over several years to lessen the blow.

HHS raised the deductible because of a formula first authorized by Congress in 1965 and modified in 1969. It sets the deductible at approximately what Medicare pays for a day in the hospital.

Because hospital stays have been dramatically shortened under a cost-cutting plan that took effect last year, the cost-per-day has increased.

For example, if Medicare paid $1,000 for an appendectomy under the old system, and a patient stayed five days in the hospital, that comes to $400 a day.

Under the new system, if Medicare pays $1,000 for an appendectomy and the average patient's stay drops to four days, the cost is $500.

Rep. Edward R. Roybal, D-California, chairman of the Select Committee on Aging, is trying to reduce the increase.

"It is outrageous that the elderly's hospital deductible should increase by 23 percent next year when their cost-of-living increase is only 3.1 percent," Roybal said.

His "Fair Deductible Act," with 21 co-sponsors, specifies the deductible should not rise any faster than the elderly's ability to pay.

Roybal would use the Social Security cost-of-living increase as an indicator of ability to pay. Under his bill, the deductible would go up by $13, contrasted to $92 under the HHS formula.

Roybal is receiving dozens of calls from other members who are feeling the heat from elderly constituents asking what they can do to hold down the increase, according to his aide, Gary Christopherson.

The major problem with getting the Roybal bill passed is that doing away with the large deductible hike would cost the overburdened Treasury $3.7 billion.

To make up the difference and reduce the federal deficit by $1 billion in the bargain Roybal would impose another eight cents in cigarette taxes.

The House-passed deficit reduction legislation already extends the existing 16-cents-a-pack cigarette tax rather than let it drop by half.

But it is that cigarette tax, plus a new tax on imports to support programs aiding workers and firms hurt by foreign competition that has prompted President Reagan's advisers to threaten a veto.

PLANS

the same time two 40-story buildings were scheduled to be constructed south of the First National Bank building, commission member Mike McElwrath noted. The one-way street might have helped the traffic flow there, but the situation has changed today with those two office buildings no longer viable.

"I think there's some consideration to making this a historical district. We need to decide now if that's our intention. We want to go ahead and tell that neighborhood something, let them know if they should stay there and fix up their houses," McElwrath said.

Wall Street's designation as U.S. Highway 80 at one time had posed a problem, but the commission was told the Highway Department has changed that designation to a Spur.

Midland has problems with drainage, said Public Works Director Fred Baker, because the area is so flat. A U.S. Geological Survey map placed on the wall in the Conference Room showed the commission where the playa lakes and draws are located in the area.

Baker pointed to a large playa lake northeast of the city, saying it is more than one square mile in size and can fill up with five feet of water before overflowing. He noted that people should be discouraged from putting developments in that area.

Another large playa lake is in the vicinity of the water treatment plant on North Midland Drive, he noted.

Midland and Scharbauer Draw were shown draining a large area on the east side. And Jal Draw runs north of Odessa and east toward Midland where it connects into the Northwest Drainage Channel. Baker said Jal Draw drains a 500 square mile area. Once the area north of Odessa and west of Midland is developed, Midland can expect more water going down that channel.

To handle the increased flow of water that will come as development occurs, Baker said the only solution will be more detention basins to hold the water until it can be released into the drainage channel.

Baker suggested the map needs to be included in the master plan. "These major playa lakes need to be pointed out early."

He added that the Corps of Engineers is updating the city's flood plain map and should be completed by March. "This will show areas where development can't go," Baker said.

Four alternatives for Green Tree Boulevard were presented by Dan Sefko, a planner with the firm of J.T. Dunkin & Associates, which is drawing the master plan. After explaining each, he said the best design is the place where the street already is located.

Richard Hennessy, director of planning and community development, said homes along Green Tree Boulevard are the problem. When the plat was approved, the council indicated the homes should have a setback of 35 to 40 feet from the property line. The developer disagreed and a compromise of 30 feet was approved.

But when the homes were constructed, the builder misunderstood, thinking the 30 feet meant it should be measured from the curb, not the property line which is several feet in back of the curb. That put the homes closer to the curb.

"The houses are built too close from a psychological standpoint," he said. When Green Tree Boulevard needs to be widened, he said the central median can be taken out. And the country club will have to put in a pedestrian crossing, probably under the street, he added.

STREETS

Other cities which incorporate a paving management system use people to rate the streets, Baker said. "With this program, the rating is uniform," whereas two people would give two different ratings.

Normally, to check the condition of the paving, a hole — or plug — would be taken out of the street and sent to a laboratory for an analysis. With the laser camera, the street isn't damaged, according to the public works director. It will be checked for uneveness, cracking, potholes, rutting and rideability, he said.

The second part of the system utilizes a Dynaflect machine which tests the paving's vehicular loading. Like the laser machine, it is non-destructive, according to the company brochure. Basically, the Dynaflect tests the street's capability, determines the failure of a subgrade or surface and tells how much traffic it can carry.

This system will help the street department "make projections over a five-year period, tell us what our most critical streets are, which should be first, second and third priority and determine a cost for building or sealcoating it," said Baker.

The third phase of the program is data analysis, and Baker said with the $160,000 cost the city will be purchasing eight software programs. Once the information about all the city's streets has been compiled, these eight programs "will allow our personnel to upgrade the information," said Baker.

"One of the most beneficial parts of the program will be a block-by-block rating of the streets throughout the city," he added.

City Manager James Brown said money to pay for the program is coming out of a division established several years ago and funded by a portion of the building permit fee. This fund goes to repair streets torn up by developers, he said.

World Colleges, recipients of the $4 million raised.

"How does anyone expect anything to get done in life without trying to educate...to create an understanding of the other man's religion, the other man's customs?" asked the prince.

United World Colleges, a pet project for Charles, is composed of six schools around the world that bring together gifted students for studies that emphasize the need for world peace and public service.

Thirty-two couples who each contributed $50,000 to the fund-raising dinner were allowed to meet the prince and princess and were seated in a separate room with the royal couple at dinner.

When Diana arrived at the hotel, she was surrounded by about 100 party-goers restrained by satin ropes, many taking pictures at a furious pace. At least two women in flowing evening gowns took off their shoes and balanced on the armrests of hotel chairs for a better view.

Earlier Tuesday, Charles shrugged off an errant polo shot that hit him from behind in the right shoulder to make a second-half goal for the Palm Beach polo team, which defeated an all-star squad 11-10.

At halftime, many in the sellout crowd of 12,000 at the Palm Beach Polo and Country Club stadium in suburban Wellington chanted, "We want Di' We want Di'"

Princess Diana, watching from a special stand, wore a blue chiffon blouse and a white, blue and pink-patterned dress.

Early in the game, a single-engine plane chartered by the Irish American Unity Conference of San Antonio, Texas, flew overhead trailing a banner pleading "Charles and Diana please help to free Ireland."

After the match, Diana awarded the winning captain the 2-foot tall Princess Diana Trophy, topped with a figure of a player on a rearing horse.

When the royal couple arrived at the West Palm Beach International Airport after a flight from Washington, Gov. Bob Graham and children bearing roses and Christmas ornaments greeted them.

About 300 schoolchildren were invited to the airport for their work in helping replace library books lost in a fire last year at a school in Diana's hometown of Boothville, England.

Ten-year-old Anna Valencia of Pahokee Elementary presented Diana with a dozen red roses.

"The prince asked me, 'Have you been spending all of your money on roses?'" Anna said later.

Paul Nolte, 7, from Creel Elementary, then gave Diana an assortment of homemade Christmas decorations such as tiny angels and Santa Clauses, saying "These are for your children."

The princess, appearing surprised, smiled and told him, "Thank you very much for thinking of them." Charles and Diana have two sons, 3-year-old Prince William and 1-year-old Prince Harry.

Although there was no controversy Tuesday, Hammer's dominant role and handling of the benefit dinner rankled some leaders of the Palm Beach inner circle.

Mary Sanford, the so-called queen of Palm Beach society for years, was said by friends to be skipping the ball. Hammer had named her chairwoman of the event, but she apparently was annoyed because he had named Patricia Kluge of New York City and Charlottesville, Va., as "general chairwoman."

Mrs. Kluge and her husband, John, former owner of Metromedia television, decided to be out of the country this week after British newspapers uncovered her past nude appearance in a magazine.

Hammer, whose long-standing belief in dealing with the Soviets goes against the conservative politics dominant here, was also criticized for sending most of the approximately 500 dinner invitations to non-Palm Beachers.

HUDSON

Despite the tests showing no AIDS antibodies in Christian, Hudson probably infected him, Mitchelson alleged. Christian last had sexual relations with the star in February 1985, he said.

However, Shirley Fannin, head of the Los Angles County health department's communicable disease section, said that if a person were infected, antibodies would show up within six months. In this case, six months passed in August.

"If a person had sex with someone six months ago and doesn't have antibodies, then I think one can assume he didn't get infected from that contact," she said.

Mitchelson said he doubted the accuracy of that analysis.

"He did not have the antibodies, but the doctors have said he is a likely candidate," the lawyer said. "Many experts say that the absence of the antibodies does not necessarily exclude it and that it could show up at any time."

Since Christian does not have the AIDS antibodies, Hudson could not have contracted AIDS from him, Mitchelson added.

A woman who identified herself as a secretary in Sheft's New York City office said he was gone for the day Tuesday. Dale Olson, who had been Hudson's spokesman before the actor died, said he would relay to Miller a request for comment about the Superior Court suit.

Mitchelson has made a career representing clients in unusual partnership disputes, including Michele Triola in her palimony suit against actor Lee Marvin in the late 1970s.

The attorney didn't name the doctors accused in the lawsuit, saying he would identify them once he knows how much they knew.

Hudson's will, filed early this month, placed no dollar amount on his estate, saying only that it is valued at more than $10,000. The document left nearly everything Hudson owned to a trust fund he established 11 years ago.

Embassy employees allegedly verbally abused

WASHINGTON (AP) — Fourteen Nicaraguan employees of the U.S. Embassy in Managua were subjected recently to "psychological and verbal abuse" by Sandinista state security agents because of their alleged links with the CIA, the State Department says.

Spokesman Charles E. Redman said Tuesday the 14 underwent "long periods of intense and often abusive interrogation" and then were placed under surveillance following their release.

Redman denied any had engaged in espionage activities and said a strong protest was lodged with the Nicaraguan government.

Reagan: 'Not pessimistic,' but summit offers no easy solution to arms race

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan says he's "not pessimistic" about his summit with Soviet chief Mikhail Gorbachev next week. But, in an interview with European journalists, he didn't sound too optimistic, either.

"I understand, of course, that it's not going to be easy," the president said Tuesday. "There's a long history of meetings between our two countries, and many times, without much result."

Reagan's interview, conducted in the East Room, was broadcast to Europe in evening viewing hours.

He virtually ruled out arriving at a far-reaching arms control agreement, but said he hoped the summit might produce a signal from both superpowers to arms negotiators "that we want them to continue and to arrive at an agreement."

After talks in Moscow last week, Secretary of State George Shultz returned to Washington with the message that deep divisions remained between the two sides on arms control and other issues.

Reagan said the two-day summit, beginning next Tuesday in Geneva, will be more than a get-acquainted session. "I think there are many areas for agreement here....I'm not pessimistic about them."

The president said that bilateral issues between the United States and Soviet Union "would probably be the easiest thing that we'll face in those meetings."

Representatives of both countries are trying to work out advance agreements that can be signed on cultural exchanges, resumption of commercial air travel between the two countries and other relatively non-controversial issues.

Reagan said he looked forward to the opportunity to "sit and face each other and lay our cards on the table as to the fact that they don't like us and our system and we don't like theirs. But we're not going to change theirs. And they better not try to change ours."

Joking with the journalists, Reagan said it will be the first summit at which the American leader is older than his Soviet counterpart.

"Maybe I can help this young man with some fatherly advice," Reagan said. At 74, Reagan is 20 years Gorbachev's senior.

Both superpowers have been jockeying for an edge in worldwide opinion going into the summit. Reagan strongly hinted he will not agree to a joint communique with Gorbachev at the meeting.

"I'm not a great fan of communiques — the sort of settling on a statement in advance," the president said. Noting that discussions have been held about issuing a joint communique, Reagan said, "I think it would make far more sense if each one of us came forth and gave our own view of the meetings and what had been achieved, told frankly what had been accomplished and what hadn't."

Reagan will stop in Brussels next Thursday to brief allies at NATO headquarters and then will go directly to the Capitol on his arrival in Washington later that night to deliver a report to Congress on the summit.

While arms control will be a subject of the summit, Reagan said, "I don't envision this meeting as being one where we will get down to specific numbers and so forth."

House moves on debt crisis as summit nears

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House, spurred by pleas not to embarrass President Reagan on the eve of the Geneva summit, moved on two fronts to forestall a double fiscal calamity this week.

But there was no assurance the Republican-led Senate would fully concur with the House actions, which would put off the deadlines for tough decisions on federal spending until the second week of December.

The House Ways and Means Committee on Tuesday night approved a small increase in the government's credit line. The measure would avoid an unprecedented default by the Treasury, which already has reached its borrowing limit of $1.824 trillion and needs more cash by Friday.

The full House earlier approved a stopgap money bill, needed to let government agencies continue operating after midnight Thursday. The measure, which would expire Dec. 12, is needed because few permanent spending bills for fiscal 1986, which began Oct. 1, have been approved and signed by the president.

The government is on the brink of defaulting on its obligations — a situation that would disrupt financial markets and embarrass the nation abroad — because Senate Republicans have been blocking a debt increase unless it includes a plan to balance future federal budgets.

The House and Senate have approved competing versions of the balanced-budget plan, which would set targets to gradually reduce annual deficits to zero. Both plans would impose automatic spending cuts if lawmakers miss the targets, but the House has sought to protect poverty programs from the brunt of the cutbacks.

To keep the pressure on for the plan, originally passed in the Senate, Republicans have objected to even a short-term debt extension.

Divided spouses 'just exist'

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sandra Gubin says she doesn't live; she just exists.

The 38-year-old doctoral student at the University of Michigan is one of about 30 so-called "divided spouses" — Americans whose partners in the Soviet Union have been repeatedly denied permission to join them in this country.

Encouraged by recent congressional calls for President Reagan and Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev to address their plight at this month's summit, the husbands and wives are expressing new hope they may be reunited at last with their spouses.

"If the Soviets are serious about wanting to improve relations with the United States, there's no more simple, obvious or easy way to demonstrate that than by acting on this issue," said Ms. Gubin, spokeswoman for the Divided Spouses Coalition. "We are all hopeful."

Ms. Gubin married Aleksei Lodisev in April 1981 while studying in the Soviet Union on a Fulbright-Hayes fellowship. Lodisev was denied permission to follow his wife when she returned to the United States three months later, and they were separated for three years before she visited him in August.

Soviet citizens married to Americans usually are permitted to leave, but not always. Last year, there were about 100 marriages between Americans and Russians, and 80 percent of the Soviet spouses were granted exit visas.

Assistant Secretary of State Rozanne L. Ridgway met with 20 separated spouses in Moscow while U.S. and Soviet officials held talks on the summit agenda.

A senior U.S. official told reporters Tuesday that the issue of divided families is "one of the areas where there could be movement" at the summit meeting.

"If the U.S. and the Soviet Union can't get agreement on something this simple, it's hard to be optimistic about the complicated issues," said Ms. Gubin, whose coalition tries to call attention to the couples' problems and to mobilize congressional support.

"What we do is exist and live for the future," she said. "It's not really living."

Ms. Gubin said Soviet officials cited national security concerns as the reason for refusing Lodisev's exit visa requests, an excuse she says is meaningless, stressing that her husband has done no secret work for the government.

Nearly 200 members of Congress have signed letters urging Reagan and Gorbachev to find a way to reunite the separated couples.

Sen. Paul Simon, D-Ill., who led the Senate's letter campaign, said "no harm can come to the Soviet Union by letting these people come together, and only good" would be reaped in improved relations between the two super powers.

Among the Americans awaiting reunion with a spouse is a 26-year-old Detroit lawyer who married 15 months ago while studying in Russia. The attorney, who asks that he not be identified, said his 22-year-old Soviet wife twice has been denied exit visas, although he describes her as a naive young woman whose departure poses "no threat" to the Soviets.

He says the summit offers "the best opportunity" in years for resolution of divided spouse cases.

"There's really no reason they couldn't clear them up," he said. "I live a very unhappy life. I write and call but it's definitely not like being there."

Simon Levin, of Deerfield, Ill., has written to congressional leaders seeking help with the case of his wife and 7-year-old son, neither of whom he has seen since the boy's infancy. Levin's wife, Tamara Tretyakova, became critically ill last spring staging a nine-week hunger strike to protest Soviet refusal to allow her to emigrate.

City considers suit against oil companies

MONT BELVIEU (AP) — A fire and explosion at a gas storage complex last week was the final straw for city officials who are considering suing companies for $125 million to make this refinery town a safer place to live.

"I think it's drastic for people to have to get up in the middle of the night and run down the road in their night clothes," Mont Belvieu Mayor Fred Miller said. "All we're talking about is money here. I don't think this (lawsuit) is drastic."

City officials Monday authorized attorneys to sue and take whatever other action is "necessary to protect the public interests of its citizens."

The council hired the Houston law firm of Watt and White to handle the lawsuit.

John White, an attorney and partner with the Houston firm, said Tuesday that the city will file a motion to join an existing lawsuit filed two years ago against Warren Petroleum Co. and seven other companies.

Last week, a fire and explosion at the Warren plant resulted in the deaths of two workers and forced a town evacuation.

The city is seeking to join about 110 Mont Belvieu residents as a plaintiff in the original suit, which is scheduled to go to trial in February, White said.

Asked why Mont Belvieu is not filing a separate lawsuit, White said, "one (reason) is we can get to trial more quickly this way. Two is that we share the same facts."

He said he has not filed the request to join the suit.

"The ultimate goal of the city is to protect its citizens through whatever means available and recover damages to the city," White said. "One positive result could be improved safety procedures."

The council approved a suit seeking at least $25 million in actual damages and $100 in punitive damages.

Mont Belvieu, 30 miles northeast of Houston, is perched atop one of the world's largest salt domes. A dozen oil companies store gases used in petrochemical production in the dome.

The Nov. 5 blast at the Warren plant occurred when an underground pipeline ruptured, spewing ethane, propane, isobutane and gasoline and triggering a series of explosions and a blaze that took firefighters six hours to control.

Two welders working on the pipeline before the blast were killed. Officials from Chevron, Warren's parent company, say the exact cause of the blast is unknown, but that it may have been caused by a worker cutting the wrong pipe or failing to drain the line.

Last week's incident was not the first explosion in the community.

In 1980, about 820 million cubic feet of gases leaked from a Warren Petroleum underground well, forcing the evacuation of more than 70 families — some for as long as six months.

Last year, a Dow Chemical Co. pipeline ruptured, causing an explosion and fire that destroyed one home and damaged four other buildings.

County Commissioner Earl Porter, a former Mont Belvieu mayor and council member, said most residents who want to leave the city cannot afford the move.

"I would have moved out long ago, but I can't afford to and neither can most of the other people living here," he said. "You've got to have industry, but you also have to make sure people are safe."

Council members were scheduled to meet with Gov. Mark White in Austin today to discuss the industrial hazards facing the city and possible solutions to these hazards.

Church schools protest state's encroachment

AUSTIN (AP) — "Freedom '85" is the slogan of several Baptist church schools in Texas and elsewhere that oppose government regulation.

"Only God is Over the Church," read a sign displayed Tuesday at a rally on the front steps of the Capitol.

Several hundred people later marched to a nearby city park for another rally with former Marine Jim Lee leading them from his wheelchair.

"Jesus is Lord, Not Caesar," said a sign displayed by Gary Wagoner, pastor of the Harvest Baptist Church of Hamptonville, N.C.

"This is primarly a Texas fight, but it is a national problem," said Wiley Cameron, pastor of the Peoples Baptist Church in Corpus Christi. "We are protesting the constant encroachment of government in our schools, our homes and our day care centers."

As head of the Peoples Baptist church, Cameron takes the place of the late Lester Roloff, a fiery evangelist who fought state attempts to regulate church youth homes on the Texas Gulf Coast for six years.

In October of this year, after Roloff's death in a plane crash in 1982, the Texas Supreme Court ruled that the church-operated homes could not operated without state licenses.

The state had sued the church after Roloff refused to have three children's homes regulated by the Texas Department of Human Resources.

"One example of government encroachment is the Roloff homes," Cameron said. "These other people are here because of examples in their states."

"Save Our Children," said a sign carried by Bobby Rorrer, pastor of the Goodwill Missionary Baptist Church in Patrick Springs, Va.

Man charged with capital murder in officer's death

AMARILLO (AP) — One man has been charged with capital murder and two others are being held as material witnesses in the shooting death of an Amarillo police officer.

Randall Wayne Hafdahl, 32, of Dallas, alias Jack Douglas Cone, is being held under heavy security in the Randall County jail in nearby Canyon in lieu of $250,000 bond, Justice of the Peace Phil Woodall said.

District Judge George Dowlen set two $150,000 attachment bonds for Shawn David Terry, 22, of Denver, Colo., and Daniel Louis Helgran, 24, of Largo, Fla., who are being held as witnesses to the shooting.

The men were captured late Monday after a manhunt that spread into New Mexico.

The search began after Amarillo Sgt. James Mitchell Jr., 43, was shot in the head and chest when he approached a car that sped off an expressway and rammed into a backyard fence of a home 100 yards from the freeway, officials said.

Mitchell had just gotten off duty at 3 p.m. and was still in uniform when he was shot.

Within 45 minutes, two helicopters were in the air and hundreds of area off-duty officers were activated for the manhunt, said Ralph Fletcher, another police spokesman.

Hafdahl and Terry were arrested about six blocks from the shooting, Woodall said. Helgran was arrested in Clovis, N.M., while trying to board a freight train, police said.

Helgran waived extradition, according to officials in Canyon and Clovis.

Police Chief Jerry Neal said Mitchell had drawn his gun and was approaching the wrecked car, which he had observed driving erratically moments earlier, when he was shot.

Court papers filed in connection with the detention of Helgran and Terry said the three said they had come to Amarillo to look for work.

Project Tejas grain, powdered milk arrive in Ethiopia

NAIROBI, Kenya (AP) — Loaded with grain and powdered milk donated by the people of Texas to Ethiopian famine victims, a freighter has reached the Red Sea port of Assab, a relief agency official said.

The food supplies were purchased with part of more than $680,000 raised since March 1 through Project Tejas. State employees contributed $113,000 to the project, while other donations came from farmers, school children and labor unions.

The Iris, the Japanese freighter carrying the shipment, sailed from Corpus Christi in September and arrived at Assab, Ethiopia's largest port, Monday.

The food will be distributed by the U.S.-based Save the Children Federation.

The head of Save the Children's office in Ethiopia, Jerry Salole, said Tuesday in a telephone interview that the shipment included 3,266 metric tons of Texas hard red winter wheat and 56 metric tons of powdered milk.

Salole said the food would be taken in trucks to the Yifat-Timuga district of the central Showa region and distributed to needy people in their villages.

Since last December, when Ethiopia's drought-caused famine was at its peak, Save the Children has fed 330,000 people in the district, Salole said.

During this year, Salole said, the death rate in the district has dropped from 100 per 1,000 people to 10 per 1,000. He also said the emphasis on feeding people at their villages, rather than regional camps or feeding centers, has helped keep families together.

Commissioners release AIDS guidelines

By DAVID ELLIOT
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The Texas health and education commissioners Tuesday asked school districts to allow children with the deadly AIDS virus to remain in school.

In a joint statement with Education Commissioner William Kirby, Health Commissioner Robert Bernstein said only blood-to-blood contact or intimate sexual exposure — not casual contact with saliva or tears — can transmit AIDS.

The two commissioners released a set of voluntary guidelines which they hope school districts will follow. "Although there have been no reported cases of AIDS or related conditions in any school-aged children in Texas, we hope school districts will use these guidelines to prepare themselves to act knowledgeably, compassionately, and with concern for all their students in case such situations arise in the future," Kirby said.

AIDS, which stands for acquired immune deficiency syndrome, in the past has struck primarily homosexuals, Haitians and hemophiliacs. But doctors now report the disease is spreading rapidly in the heterosexual community.

Exceptions to the guidelines may occur for students with aggressive biting, lack of toilet training or open sores that cannot be covered. "If any of these circumstances exist, the school medical advisor, in consultation with the school nurse and the child's physician, must determine whether a risk of transmission exists," the guidelines state. "If it is determined that a risk exists, the student should be removed from the classroom."

The state based the guidelines on a similar policy which Connecticut's health and education departments have adopted. They are consistent with federal guidelines issued by the Centers for Disease Control.

To protect a child's privacy, the guidelines state, knowledge that a student has AIDS should be restricted to "those persons with a direct need to know (e.g., principal, school nurse, child's teacher.)" Last month, parents and students in the New York City borough of Queens made national headlines protesting the school district's decision to tell no one in the school the identity of a student with AIDS.

Woman convicted of shooting student vows to appeal

DALLAS (AP) — A flamboyant, eccentric woman who got 10 years probation for shooting a high school student she claimed tormented her has vowed to appeal her conviction.

Betty Minyard Stein was given the probated sentence Tuesday and fined $5,000. Immediately after the judge read her sentence, she said she would appeal.

A Dallas County jury pondered her fate for more than six hours Monday and almost three hours Tuesday before reaching a verdict on her sentence.

Earlier, the panel deliberated only about an hour before convicting her of the charge stemming from a July 24 incident in which she said she was trying to shoot out the tires of the car driven by Ward Huey III.

Huey, 18, testified she shot him in his arm after an altercation in which he cursed the woman after she told him he should be arrested for screeching his car out of a parking spot near her house.

Mrs. Stein said Huey tried to hit her with his car twice on the day of the shooting and once the day before. Other witnesses contradicted that, however, and said she was never in danger.

Both Mrs. Stein and Huey are members of prominent Dallas families. She is the widow of the founder of the Minyard grocery store chain, and Huey is the son of the president of Belo Broadcasting Co.

Black students recall pre-integration education

DALLAS (AP) — It opened in 1951 without gas, lights or running water. It didn't have a science lab or a library. In the winter, the only heat that the four dozen students could count on came from a coal-fired stove.

There were a lot of things that the one-room Lisbon School for Coloreds did not have when it opened that fall on Persimmon Road in Oak Cliff. And yet those who were there — the teachers, the students, the parents — remember it did what it was supposed to do.

"Although we had the inconveniences, we produced some excellent students from out there," recalls Juanita Buchanan, one of three teachers who taught at the school.

Lisbon School is a church now — has been for nearly 20 years. But the memory of that school and its place in the black community is being revived because all-black neighborhood schools are once again an issue in Dallas.

Today the controversy focuses on the quality of education available at three South Dallas grade schools that are predominantly black because they are in black neighborhoods. These are "super" schools, so called because their 4th, 5th and 6th grade students have special computer rooms, piano labs and calculus and trigonometry courses.

And yet, parents, teachers and community leaders aren't sure whether these schools will be successful.

Recent test scores show the black students reading below the national average.

The parents who sent their children to Lisbon School also worried about the quality of education at an all-black school. The big difference was that, in 1951, Dallas schools were segregated by law. Blacks had no options.

Anna McClellan, who was the only teacher at the school in 1951, says one of the lessons of the Lisbon School is that "it's not the facility that makes a difference. A child can apply himself regardless of the building."

Ms. McClellan, who also served as full-time principal, part-time nurse and sometimes social worker, said Lisbon produced successful students because everyone in the neighborhood worked together. Neighbors knew each other and looked out for each other, and parents were active in the school's Parent Teacher Association, she said.

Former students and parents say it worked because the teachers were dedicated, concerned and used innovative methods to motivate students.

"I can remember make-shift things such as apple and orange cartons as bookshelfs," said Mary Hogues Barber, a former student who is pursuing a master's degree in gerontology at North Texas State University.

"Lisbon worked," Ms. Buchanan says, "because of the parental supervision and lack of activities in the home. Now the children spend too much of their time watching television, and they need to spend more time doing their homework."

Tyler family hoping to cash in on its chips

TYLER, Texas (AP) — Dana Boles watches with a keen eye the process that he hopes will grow from small potatoes to big potatoes in the chips industry.

And that's no small hurdle for the Tyler resident.

With four family members running the company with him, Boles has manufactured homemade potato chips for Tyler, Longview and Dallas grocery chains about six months.

And during a trial period for the chips in most of the grocery chains, every Boles Old-Fashioned Potato Chip is carefully made.

"We're new in the business, you know, so we want to get the best out," says Boles, a former Robert E. Lee High School and Tyler Junior College student.

"These potatoes are right out of the field, right off the truck," he says, pointing to spuds on a conveyor. The conveyor carries 20,000 pounds of potatoes daily on their first step to becoming Boles Old Fashioned Potato Chips.

Handmade. Family-made.

Boles may have several reasons to smile these days.

The 29-year-old began his own potato chip business with an agreement with Brookshire's 10 Tyler stores to get shelf space for the Tyler-made product.

Using fast talking, elbow rubbing and plain, old-fashioned salesmanship, Boles has secured a spot for his product in most Tyler grocery stores.

Talk now is not of beating the competition. Instead, it focuses on when the old-fashioned, handmade potato chip will grip Tyler.

Boles knows the signs to look for, thanks to a stint at an eastern firm using the same technique.

"I went up (to Massachusetts) to learn the business," he says. "They got so big, so fast, that two months later, they found they needed 18 cookers."

Boles currently has one cooker.

"In other parts of the country, it's the fastest growing industry," he says. "The only reason we're here in Tyler was because I was brought up here."

Tyler also is a good market area, he says.

Boles says he isn't going to lower the $1.39 a bag price.

"We think it's good if we maintain our sales," he says. "Somebody always has potato chips on sale. We don't. It's a specialty product and costs more to make it.

"If we can maintain sales while everyone else is beating themselves to death, we hope maybe to increase 1 to 2 percent each week," Boles says.

The potato chip manufacturer currently is testing the market in Dallas, Longview and Tyler, serving 35-40 stores.

But the chips haven't yet convinced grocery chains to stock them in all stores. The only chain allowing Boles chips in an entire market is Brookshire's.

"But overnight, it could all explode," Boles says smiling, calculating the number of cooks per new cooker.

If one of the chains gives him permission for sales, it will mean, at best, hiring 25 employees working on two shifts.

"If we just got one account every two or three months, it would be tremendous," he says. "And we built this building with the capability of having four of those cookers."

The size of the East Tyler building also could be tripled if circumstances warrant.

Walker concealed spy involvement

NORFOLK, Va. (AP) — Arthur J. Walker, who received life imprisonment and a $250,000 fine for spying for the Soviet Union, concealed the extent of his involvement in a family-based spy ring from the FBI, prosecutors say.

Arthur Walker

Although Walker confessed that he supplied copies of two classified documents to the spy ring in 1981 and 1982, he has not been entirely truthful, Assistant U.S. Attorney Tommy E. Miller said at Walker's sentencing Tuesday.

"His version is not corroborated by other witnesses," Miller said. "There are other witnesses who have indicated further involvement by Mr. Walker."

Walker's brother, John A. Walker Jr., told the FBI over the weekend that he and his brother talked last May 17 about supplying information on Navy ship readiness to the Soviet Union, Miller said.

FBI Special Agent Robert Hunter told reporters it is possible Arthur Walker was spying before he retired from the Navy in 1973 and that he lured his brother into espionage. Arthur Walker said his brother persuaded him to join the spy ring.

John Walker, 48, a retired Navy chief warrant officer, pleaded guilty to espionage Oct. 28 and is to receive life imprisonment under a plea bargain. His son, Navy seaman Michael L. Walker, 22, also pleaded guilty to spying and is to receive a 25-year sentence under the agreement.

Miami elects Cuban-born mayor

MIAMI (AP) — Attorney Xavier Suarez became the first Cuban-born mayor of this ethnically mixed city by controlling the Hispanic vote and reaching out to the black community that had almost completely shunned him a week earlier.

"I want to thank all of Miami," Suarez said Tuesday night after defeating fellow Cuban-American Raul Masvidal in the non-partisan runoff election.

Unofficial totals with all the ballots counted gave Suarez 31,662 votes, or 56.7 percent, to 24,224, or 43.3 percent, for Masvidal.

Meanwhile, in Albuquerque, N.M., city councilor Ken Schultz narrowly defeated state land commissioner Jim Baca in a runoff election for mayor of the state's largest city.

And South Dakotans overwhelmingly rejected a plan to join with North Dakota to allow construction of a low-level radioactive waste dumpsite.

Suarez, 37, and Masvidal, 43, a millionaire banker, had eliminated six-term, Puerto Rican-born incumbent Maurice Ferre and eight other challengers in the Nov. 5 primary.

The Harvard-educated Suarez, who lost the 1983 runoff to Ferre, was to be sworn in today for a two-year term at a special city commission meeting.

Court eyes pregnant teacher's firing

WASHINGTON (AP) — In a case involving alleged sex discrimination and religious freedom, the Supreme Court will explore whether a state can prevent a church school from firing a pregnant teacher to keep her home with her baby.

The court agreed Tuesday to hear an appeal by Ohio officials who say laws against on-the-job bias apply to employment practices of church-run schools.

Ohio Attorney General Anthony J. Celebrezze Jr., urging "the elimination of sex discrimination and the guarantee of freedom of personal choice in matters of family life," said the case "pits two of our nation's most closely held and frequently fought-for principles — religion and equality."

He is challenging a federal appeals court ruling that said forcing church schools to comply with antibias laws violates religious freedoms.

The appeals court ruled in favor of the Dayton Christian Schools, which refused to renew the contract of elementary school teacher Linda Hoskinson after she became pregnant in 1979.

"What I'm hoping is that it's not going to make any difference where you work, that the law of the land is regarded as just what it is...and that individuals or organizations cannot set up a separate law," Mrs. Hoskinson said Tuesday.

House overrides fifth Reagan veto

WASHINGTON (AP) — With House GOP leader Robert Michel freeing party members to "do their thing," the House overrode President Reagan's veto of a bill reauthorizing biomedical research at the National Institutes of Health.

Tuesday's vote in the Democrat-controlled House was 380-32. That far exceeded the requirement that two-thirds of the members present vote to override. Initially, the House had approved the bill 395-10.

The favorable override vote — only the fifth since Reagan took office in 1981 — was sent to the Senate where action could come as early as today.

Refugees claim treasured Afghan art falling victim to war

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan (AP) — The war in Afghanistan is shattering much of the country's unique cultural and artistic heritage spanning more than 3,000 years, according to Afghan exiles and others here.

They claim many of the country's treasures have been destroyed in the fighting or looted from museums.

Some Afghan refugees have set up stalls on Islamabad's street to sell what they say are family heirlooms — bronze beakers, silver jewelry and intricately handworked tribal costumes — for money to survive.

Afghan exiles concerned about the problem say the destruction of Afghanistan's cultural heritage is part of the disintegration of traditional Afghan society and its loss weakens the country and its hopes for the future.

"Maybe to some people these things are just nice to look at. But they are also part of our history that tells us where we came from and what we have been," said Sayed Majroh, a former philosophy professor at Kabul University who now lives in exile in Pakistan.

More than a decade of political turmoil and war has left Afghanistan with uncounted thousands dead and 5 million Afghans in exile in refugee camps in Pakistan and Iran. Islamic guerrillas are fighting the forces of Afghanistan's Communist government and its Soviet military allies, estimated to number 115,000.

Afghanistan acquired a vast cultural heritage over the centuries because it is one of the main crossroads of Central Asia. The landlocked country was repeatedly invaded by outsiders who left their mark in the form of cities, temples and a rich artistic legacy.

An ancient Greek culture flourished from the garrisons left by Alexander the Great more than 2,000 years ago, to be followed by an early Buddhist civilization before the first of a wave of Asian and Islamic conquerors. Remnants of these civilizations survived over the centuries as the modern age largely left Afghanistan undisturbed.

Many works of art and archaeological treasures were gathered and displayed in museums in Kabul, the capital, and in large cities such as Kandahar and Herat, Majroh said. But the priceless collections have been damaged or scattered in the fighting that has effected all of the cities, he added.

Majroh and other exiles, who asked not to be named because they have relatives in Afghanistan, say they have received reports from inside Afghanistan that the Soviets have removed some Afghan art treasures to the Soviet Union. They say they have no further evidence this has happened, but they insist that no one can deny many artifacts have disappeared.

Majroh said he was involved in the 1970s in cataloging the private library of the Afghan royal family, which contained thousands of rare and unique books, manuscripts and paintings going back to the 11th century. The library, he added, was destroyed and looted after a series of coups and fighting in Kabul.

"It was a unique treasure.," Majroh said. "Nothing is left except for the stuff we think is now in the Leningrad museum."

The exiles described the Kabul museum as a storehouse of ancient Greek art that had been gathered from across Afghanistan.

The said the Communist government converted the museum into offices in 1978 and the artifacts were put into storage, during which many items were broken or disappeared.

"The museum was destroyed," Majroh said. "It was not only a human catastrophe, it was an historical catastrophe."

The exiles' claims could not be independently confirmed because Westerners, except for diplomats and a limited number of others, are barred from Afghanistan.

Many Afghan art treasures and other artifacts find their way across the border into Pakistan. Some of them apparently have been looted, while others are old family possessions being sold for food because their owners have nothing else left.

An Islamabad antique dealer with good credentials recently displayed for a visitor superb pottery and statuary he said was from the royal palace in Kabul.

"It all belonged to the kings of Afghanistan," he said. "Such treasures."

Ethiopia forces 'villagization' of farm families

ADDIS ABABA, Ethiopia (AP) — Farming families, sometimes carrying their disassembled huts on their backs, are being moved from scattered homesteads into villages under a new government program that may spread across Ethiopia.

Called "villagization," the program began without fanfare several months ago in the vast southwestern region of Harerge and is expected to begin soon in other regions. Western relief officials in Ethiopia say they became aware of it only in the past few weeks.

The program has some parallels with the government's ambitious resettlement program, which is intended to move more than a million people from drought-affected northern regions to more fertile areas in the southwest.

Relief officials say both programs further the government's efforts to collectivize the country, but they note that the villagization program will allow farmers to stay in their native districts.

An official of the Marxist government, requesting anonymity because he is not directly involved in the program although knowledgeable about it, said its goal was to move isolated farm families to new or existing villages where for the first time they they could have easy access to such basic services as education, health care and water supplies.

An official of an American relief agency said he was convinced the program was well-intentioned but nonetheless described it as "scary."

Like most Westerners interviewed about the program, he asked not to be identified because he considered the topic politically sensitive.

"We're very nervous about it, about the speed and the scale of it," the relief official said. "People are going to be moved without any infrastructure in place."

He said families selected were required to move. He also expressed fear that construction of new housing, in cases where farmers did not move their own huts, would further deplete Ethiopia's wood and brush, the removal of which promotes deforestation and soil erosion.

However, Desmond Taylor, head of the United Nations' World Food Program operation in Ethiopia, said the program might strengthen conservation efforts.

He said that by grouping farmers together, the government could exercise greater control over farming practices that cause deforestation or soil erosion, two of the factors that have contributed to Ethiopia's severe drought problems.

Taylor suggested that the reaction of Western relief agencies to the program would depend in large measure on how it was carried out. Many farmers, he said, might not want to leave their homesteads or land where relatives were buried.

The Ethiopian official said farmers moved under the program would continue to farm their own their lands, but would have to walk farther to do so.

But he added that the government felt it worth requiring farmers to spend more time traveling in order to reduce the amount of time it takes women to fetch water and children to walk to school.

"Now, many women spend six to 10 hours a day carrying water," he said.

Much of Ethiopia, which is twice the size of France, is covered with mountains or high plateaus giving way to cliffs and gorges. Many peasants must spend a day walking down and then back up steep, narrow paths in order to bring water back to their homes from some small streambeds thousands of feet below.

The official said he was aware that some Westerners were suggesting the program was coercive and acknowledged that it would probably increase government control over people's lives.

"Nobody wants to forgive us for turning communist," he said. "If people can be provided with water, medical treatment, security, why do others have to look to see if there is a negative aspect?"

The official said the program had been planned by the Workers' Party of Ethiopia and was being implemented by local government officials. The program was not directly related to Ethiopia's slowly waning famine, he said, but would enable more people to be helped faster in the event of a recurrence.

An official of the International Committee of the Red Cross who recently traveled in Harerge said he saw peasants carrying pieces of their thatch huts, called tukuls, on their backs to a new village where the homes were reconstructed.

The Red Cross worker said villagization appeared to be "part of the government's policy of shaping the country, of organizing people." But he questioned whether it might decrease agricultural production because farmers were farther from their land.

Radio station reports coup fails against Liberian head of state

MONROVIA, Liberia (AP) — The private radio station that gave the first indication of a coup attempt against head of state Samuel K. Doe reported today that the coup had been crushed, and a man who identified himself as an aide said Doe was at the presidential mansion.

But diplomatic sources were quoted as saying that some of the rebels still might be holding out against forces loyal to Doe.

A man who answered the telephone at the executive mansion early today identified himself as Capt. Bahn, an aide to Doe, and said Doe was resting in the mansion and did not wish to talk to reporters.

Radio Elwa, the private religious station that announced the coup attempt Tuesday morning, opened its morning newscast today with a renewed report that the coup "has been foiled."

"The early morning coup of yesterday led by former armed forces commanding general, Brig. Gen. Thomas Quiwonkpa, was put down by troops loyal to head of state Dr. Samuel Kanyon Doe," it said in a broadcast monitored by the British Broadcasting Corp. in London.

Tuesday night, Doe said in a statement on the station: "I'm still the commander in chief of the armed forces of Liberia and the head of state."

Doe said his troops had defeated rebels who he said entered Liberia from neighboring Ivory Coast.

Radio Elwa had been used early Tuesday to broadcast claims that Quiwonkpa was in control and that Doe was in hiding.

Doe seized power in a bloody coup five years ago with Quiwonkpa's help. Last month he was elected president in Liberia's first multi-party election since the country was founded by freed American slaves in 1847, but opposition parties charged that the election had been rigged.

Doe urged rebels to lay down their arms immediately, and told citizens not to help them.

Radio Elwa and the state-run Radio Liberia changed hands between loyalists and rebels during fighting between loyal soldiers and the rebels Tuesday.

The BBC quoted diplomatic sources in the Liberian capital of Monrovia as saying that the only reports the coup had failed came from news media controlled by Doe.

The sources, who were not identified, were quoted as saying that Doe's repeated calls to the rebels to lay down their arms indicated some might still be opposing the government.

Richard Gilbert, a U.S. Embassy spokesman in Monrovia, told Associated Press Radio in Washington in a telephone interview Tuesday that the center of the capital was calm and the government radio station had been taken back from the rebels.

But he said some soldiers who apparently were rebels still were out on the streets.

The extent of the fighting and number of casualties were not clear. Doe said in a telephone interview with NBC's London bureau Tuesday that he soldiers had kiled "about 15 rebels" who attacked the executive mansion. Witnesses said at least a dozen bodies were seen being taken to a hospital.

Doe, 35, was an army master sergeant when he overthrew President William Tolbert, becoming the first Liberian leader not descended from the freed American slaves who founded the republic.

He promised to restore civilian rule, and in the election held Oct. 15 his National Democratic Party won 72 of 90 seats in the House of Representatives.

Interest groups flocking to Geneva hoping for publicity during summit

GENEVA (AP) — Interest groups ranging from royal pretenders to homosexuals, peace groups to exiled Soviets and campaigners for Soviet Jews are flocking to Geneva in hopes of getting publicity during the U.S.-Soviet summit.

More than 3,000 journalists will gather in Geneva for the Nov. 19-20 meeting between President Reagan and Mikhail S. Gorbachev, and the lobbyists hope to capture their attention.

Public rallies already are banned near the meeting sites. By the eve of the summit, the security zone will be extended gradually to include all of Geneva and the adjacent countryside.

About 100 local, national and international peace groups plan a procession through the downtown district Saturday, shortly before Reagan arrives and before the total ban takes effect.

Organizers say participants will include groups opposed to American policy toward Nicaragua and to the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan.

Also bidding for attention will be a delegation of prominent Americans, including black leader Jesse Jackson, who will bring the superpowers a nuclear test ban petition they say has been signed by 1 million Americans.

Organizations campaigning against restrictions on the Jewish community in the Soviet Union have scheduled a rally Sunday.

On Monday, when Gorbachev is to arrive, 19 exile groups plan a rally under the slogan "No to a peace stitched with a red thread." They say it will feature a concert of "gulag (prison camp) and resistance songs."

Spokesmen for Poland's outlawed Solidarity free trade union and Moslem guerrillas fighting the Soviet-backed regime in Afghanistan also plan news conferences.

Son Sann, a leader of the guerrilla coalition fighting the Vietnamese occupation of Cambodia, is among those seeking attention.

NutraSweet consumption probed as link to epileptic seizures

BOSTON (AP) — Three people suffered their first epileptic seizures after drinking large quantities of beverages sweetened with NutraSweet, according to a researcher who concedes the link to the artificial sweetener may be a coincidence.

The apparent association between NutraSweet and seizures was reported by Dr. Richard J. Wurtman of Massachusetts Institute of Technology in a letter to the British journal Lancet.

Wurtman theorizes that NutraSweet, generically known as aspartame and widely used in diet drinks, chewing gum, puddings and other products, lowers levels of chemicals in the brain that protect against seizures.

The three cases "can only suggest an association between aspartame and seizures," he wrote. They are "compatible with evidence that high aspartame doses may produce neurochemical changes that, in laboratory animals, are associated with depressed seizure thresholds," he added.

Wurtman acknowledged that the apparent association he reported could have been coincidental. But he said doctors should question patients with unexplained seizures about their use of aspartame.

Dr. John Heyback, director of medical and scientific affairs for G.D.Searle & Co, makers of NutraSweet, said the association is probably coincidental.

"I imagine it's possible that there may be individuals who are sensitive to aspartame, although there is no documented evidence of even a single individual having a clear-cut adverse reaction associated with aspartame to date, despite the fact that hundreds of millions of people use the product on a regular basis worldwide," Heyback said Tuesday.

One of the main ingredients of aspartame is the amino acid phenylalanine. Wurtman suggests that consuming a lot of aspartame can raise levels of phenylalanine in the brain, where it interferes with the body's production of other chemicals, known as neurotransmitters, that protect against seizures.

"I think, but I can't prove it, that this will only happen in people who have a propensity toward having seizures," Wurtman said.

In the cases cited by Wurtman:

— A 42-year-old legal secretary drank four quarts of diet soda and close to a gallon of aspartame-containing lemonade each day. She reported mood changes, headaches, nausea, hallucinations, feelings of deja vu and finally a grand mal seizure. She drank no diet drinks in the hospital and her headaches disappeared for the first time in months, but returned when she began drinking the beverages.

— A 27-year-old computer programmer, who drank four to five glasses a day of a powdered soft drink sweetened with NutraSweet, suffered nighttime twitching, abnormal breathing, a severe headache and a seizure. An epilepsy drug stopped the seizures, but the other symptoms lasted until he gave up the drink.

— A 36-year-old college professor who drank a quart or more a day of aspartame-sweetened iced tea suffered a seizure while sleeping.

Hell's Angels 'rev up' cash for club's legal bills

NEW YORK (AP) — It was "hail, hail the gang's all here" as Hells Angels from across the country took over a Manhattan disco for a benefit to raise funds for members' legal defense and boost the club's image.

"We're not racketeers, we're not Al Capone, we're not Marlon Brando. We're human beings," complained New York City chapter President Butch Garcia as hundreds of bikers and their supporters packed the Limelight, a church-turned-nightspot, Tuesday night for the $15-a-head fund-raiser.

"We're a motorcycle gang, held together by a common bond, motorcycles," he said, denying government allegations that the club also has entered the drug trade. "The media has sensationalized our image."

Club members hoped to raise $50,000 toward legal bills fast approaching $1 million, Garcia said. "To me, we stand for respect, freedom, friendship and honor."

To counter the hell-raising image of the leather-clad, booted bikers, the Angels even hired a Manhattan public relations firm to handle the media. David Lotz, of Burnham-Callaghan Associates Inc., said they were no different than any other client the firm handled.

As far as the government is concerned, the Hells Angels' unsavory image is more than justified. A number of members were charged with racketeering after a May FBI sweep of chapters in 11 states that capped a three-year probe dubbed "Operation Roughrider."

Federal officials said after the early morning raids they had recovered more than $2 million in illicit drugs and weapons, but the group's members dispute the charges despite the arrests of 33 Angels.

Hells Angels from across the country park their motorcycles outside the Limelight disco, converted from a church, in New York Tuesday night at a benefit for their legal defense fund.

"We're a highly visible group, we're a very unpopular group," Garcia, his shoulder-length hair touching his leather Hells Angels jacket, said at the benefit. "Hey, we just want to ride our motorcycles."

The bikers, whose motorcycles filled both sides of a city block outside the nightclub, received support from several rock stars, including Joan Jett and Robert Gordon, who performed, and John Cougar Mellencamp and Willie Nelson, who donated items for auction. A Harley Davidson motorcycle also was auctioned off.

Public relations people also were on hand to make sure each reporter got a shot at interviewing an Angel or two.

"Is there anyone else you need?" asked one of the few women in the club in a dress as she flitted from television crew to television crew.

Otherwise, it was leather, chains, bandanas and boots, with bikers coming from as far away as California.

"I think it was worth it to make the trip. It's for a good reason, and I wouldn't miss an event of this magnitude," said George Christie, president of the Ventura, Calif., chapter.

According to federal charges, the group also sells methamphetamines, LSD, PCP, cocaine, marijuana and "quaaludes," using a sophisticated computer system to keep track of its sales.

A federal agent testified before the Senate Judicial Committee in 1983 that the group was "the most dangerous" of all motorcycle gangs in the country.

"The trials coming up are an important thing," soft-spoken Angel Matt Zanoskao of Cleveland, Ohio, explained to reporters.

Black bishop may attract others to Roman Catholicism

WASHINGTON (AP) — Roman Catholic bishops — black and white alike — are hailing election of the first black to a major U.S. Catholic leadership post as a potential boon for attracting black converts and priests.

"Signs and symbols are extremely important," Auxiliary Bishop Eugene Marino of Washington said Tuesday, moments after being elected secretary of the National Conference of Catholic Bishops.

His election, he said in an interview, could well serve as an encouraging sign to blacks that "there is, in fact, a place for them in the Catholic Church."

Many American blacks don't feel that way now, if membership figures are any guide. Just 1.3 million of America's 26 million blacks are Catholics, compared with the denomination's total U.S. membership of 52 million out of a U.S. population of about 235 million.

The low black membership is reflected in the fact that there are just 10 black bishops out of more than 300. But even that percentage is a big increase over the recent past: Marino was only the third black American bishop in modern times when he was named in 1974.

His election as the national conference's secretary, one of the four main offices, will give him a voice in all major policy and planning decisions. And he said he will use the position to speak out "about what the church should be doing."

That includes action against racism, which he said exists as surely in the church as in society in general.

His own election could be seen as a blow against prejudice in the church. And being chosen for the position was not only "an honor and privilege" for him but could serve as "a spur to the hopes" of young blacks, he added.

Among other black church leaders, Auxiliary Bishop Joseph Francis of Newark, N.J., said the new prominence of a black bishop could draw more young black men into seminaries.

Francis, who himself won election Tuesday as chairman of a bishops' committee concerned with religious orders of men, called Marino's election "a very significant indication of the maturity black Catholics have achieved in this country."

'War' casualties

The carnage in Colombia was a reminder that the term "war against drugs" actually is much closer to truth than fiction. It is exactly that — a war.

The story line was vintage Hollywood. Guerrillas storm the Supreme Court, holding judges and employees hostage. The president refuses to negotiate. Troops storm the building. The bodies of 13 top judges, including the chief Supreme Court justice, are pulled out of the ruins — along with the dead guerrilla leaders.

This tale of tragedy could have come out of the slaughterhouse wars portrayed in "One Hundred Years of Solitude" by Colombian author Gabriel Garcia Marquez. It seems surreal and very far away. Only it's not; it's tragically real.

One source of the violence in Colombia lies right under Americans noses — the U.S. cocaine market.

As the United States is trying to support Colombia's democracy, our drug dollars are undermining it. Colombia is a prime supplier of drugs to the United States. Drug dealers and guerrillas are linked, sharing a common goal of undermining the central government, which is pushing hard to halt drug exports, at U.S. insistence.

The guerrillas blame U.S. imperialism for Colombia's poverty and injustice. But guerrilla groups in Colombia are supported by U.S. dollars — from the drug trade.

The logical question is what does the United States want from Colombia — democracy or drugs? We cannot expect to have both for much longer. President Belisario Betancur's tough campaign against drugs has undermined his truce with rebels. As one might expect, the Supreme Court tragedy has shaken Colombia further.

Americans can't do much to halt the chain of violence in Colombia, unfortunately. But we can, and must, send a clear signal that we want democracy — not drugs — from that country.

That entails getting at the source of the addiction in this country, not just punishing the supplier in South America.

The violence against the very system of law in Colombia is an example of what the combination of guerrillas and drugs can do to a country. It is a sobering lesson.

The United States must launch an even greater offensive in the "war against drugs."

Turning the SDI tide

The tide is beginning to turn among America's allies in favor of President Reagan's Strategic Defense Initiative (SDI).

This became clear the other day when Great Britain agreed to participate in the antimissile research program. It became even clearer shortly thereafter as a West German newspaper reported that West Germany plans to join its British allies as a participant after the Nov. 19-20 Reagan-Gorbachev summit meeting.

These developments are truly significant in view of the initial reluctance that greeted the President's proposal last March for the establishment of a non-nuclear, space-based research enterprise. The reluctance was based partly, and understandably, on a lack of understanding of the proposal. The issue was further clouded by the Soviet Union's propaganda ploy in calling the program "star wars," a label with something of a sinister connotation.

The accord with the British is a 20-page document approved by British Defense Minister Michael Heseltine and U.S. Defense Secretary Casper Weinberger. Heseltine said his country's involvement "would help keep Britain at the forefront of technological development."

The agreement is the first government-to-government accord since Reagan's March invitation to America's allies to join in SDI research. The timing of the agreement, and the report from West Germany, could not have been better, for it strengthens President Reagan's hand on the eve of the Geneva conclave with the Soviet Union.

The turning of the SDI tide could mean the turning of other tides flowing in favor of peace and international good will.

Another View:

An urgent pleading

A political leader can face no more urgent, heart-rending and seemingly irresistible appeal than that made to President Reagan by four Americans taken hostage in Lebanon.

Abandon "quiet diplomacy" and negotiate for our release, wrote the four, who have been innocent captives for five to 10 months in circumstances that may already have taken the lives of one if not two of their comrades.

To which the White House replied that the American policy of not negotiating with terrorists "will not change."

The president is right, though it is important to be clear about what that means.

The assertion that the United States will not negotiate with hostage-takers is no simple abstract display of pride and resolve. Hundreds of thousands of Americans are abroad at any given moment, many in sensitive places. All — some more, some less — are at greater risk if the government's conduct spreads the expectation that the United States will pay easily to reclaim those who are taken.

Scores of other governments, moreover, rely quietly on American constancy. For instance, Kuwait currently holds 17 convicted terrorists prisoner; it is evidently against their release that the Americans were seized.

If Reagan accepts the four's insistence that saving the lives of innocents "should be the primary goal," he risks immense damage to the integrity and security of a friendly state. He also sends to other would-be terrorists and other would-be friends of the United States a message of potentially devastating consequences.

To see how such a message plays out, you need only look at the weekend tragedy in Colombia. Guerrillas, evidently acting at least in part on the expectations created by the government's prior flexibility, seized the Palace of Justice.

This time, however, the government decided it could not yield easily. In the ensuing shootout, dozens of hostages were killed, including 11 supreme court justices, and the whole interior balance of the nation was upset.

American citizens, especially private civilians caught up by chance in international terrorism, have an immense claim on the compassion of their countrymen, and on the protection of their government. But they cannot have an absolute claim.

Talks or dealings of some sort, whether they are called "negotiations" or something else, may eventually have a role in their liberation. But the president must be left with adequate tactical discretion.

He alone can have the fullest available knowledge of the terrain. He alone has the responsibility to guard the national interest as well as to aid citizens in distress.

U.S. ally Hassan betrays Khadafy foe

WASHINGTON — In a shameful act of self-serving treachery, one of America's closest Arab allies — Morocco's King Hassan — handed over a courageous Libyan dissident to that country's brutal dictator, Muammar Khadafy. The betrayed anti-Khadafy exile was beaten and kicked to death by the colonel's goons on the airport runway in Tripoli, according to U.S. intelligence sources.

Jack Anderson

The victim of this high-level sellout was Omar Muhayshi, a boyhood friend of Khadafy and once a high-ranking official in the Libyan revolutionary regime before Khadafy's insane excesses led Mushayshi to join the opposition and go into exile. For eight years, Khadafy had tried everything to have his one-time friend assassinated, even offering an ex-CIA agent $1 million to arrange Muhayshi's murder. The efforts failed, and Muhayshi thought he had found safe haven in Morocco.

Some sources believe Khadafy's obsession with Muhayshi was the strongest single motive for the colonel's surprise treaty with Hassan last year. The betrayal of Muhayshi and his delivery to Khadafy were part of the quid pro quo for the cutoff of Libyan aid to the Polisario guerrillas battling Hassan for the western Sahara region. So both Muhayshi and the Polisarios learned to their sorrow the wisdom of the Biblical injunction: "Put not thy trust in princes."

According to one secret CIA report, Muhayshi turned sour on his longtime friend in 1974, when it became clear that Khadafy was wasting Libya's oil wealth on a megalomaniacal dream of becoming the leader who would unite all the Arab states under his rule. As a member of the original 12-man Revolutionary Command Council, Muhayshi "had a stormy relationship with Khadafy ... and often chafed under Khadafy's high-handed ways," the CIA reported.

But when he chose to break with Khadafy, it was primarily because of "broader differences over foreign policy and economic measures (which were) a measure of growing frustration with Khadafy throughout the regime," the report states, adding: "Although not personally liked by many of his colleagues, Muhayshi did have the sympathy of some, if not their support."

On Aug. 11, 1975, a plot by two council members and 20 military officers was aborted, and the conspirators went into hiding. Muhayshi escaped to safety in Tunisia, but most of the others were rounded up and executed the following March. Nevertheless, as the CIA pointed out, the "Muhayshi plot" was a victory of sorts, because Khadafy "lost his mystique as the 'unchallengeable' leader, an important underpinning for his brand of personal rule."

In exile, Muhayshi continued to irritate Khadafy by publishing revealing personal memories of the unstable Libyan strong man and by broadcasting radio attacks on him from Egypt and Tunisia. Eventually he sought and was granted refuge in Morocco.

Other Libyan exiles warned Muhayshi two years ago that a deal might be cooking between Hassan and Khadafy — and that it might include him. But Muhayshi paid no heed.

To his horror, Muhayshi learned too late that he was part of the bargain. Whether Khadafy's agents were allowed to kidnap him in Morocco, or whether the king's men put him on the plane, is not clear. But the result was the same. Our sources say he was stomped to death as soon as he got off the plane in Tripoli.

The sources say untold numbers of other anti-Khadafy exiles were similarly "extradited" to Libya to face the dictator's vengeance. The only reliably safe haven in the region seems to be Egypt, which remains determinedly opposed to Khadafy — and has an intelligence service sharp enough to thwart his plots against Libyan exiles.

EYE ON THE ECONOMY: Whatever happened to the Great Infrastructure Crisis? You remember the headlines a few years ago about crumbling bridges, highways and sewers all over the country. But nothing recently. The answer, unfortunately, is that the crisis is forgotten but not gone. The experts' current estimate is that there is now a $400 billion gap between the funds available and the amount needed over the next 15 years to keep the concrete from crumbling. Included in this colossal sum — which will have to be raised by either cities, states or the federal government — is $264 billion for roads and bridges, and $90 billion for water and sewerage.

FLORA LEWIS

Agreement may bring peace to N. Ireland

BELFAST, Northern Ireland — Britain and Ireland are on the verge of an unprecedented agreement about Northern Ireland, which will give the Republic a consultative responsibility in the region.

Flora Lewis

It is part of the endlessly involuted problem here that if agreement fails at the last minute, both sides would see it as an ominous catastrophe. But if there is success, few in Ulster will be pleased and most will be critical.

Most people are so dug in behind mental barricades that they look upon even a small concession from each side essential to a modest accord as a slide "down the slippery slope" to "betrayal." They argue their rival causes passionately on the basis of selective history, rather than addressing the steps that could ease their problems.

Graffiti on a Belfast wall summarizes the mood. It says, "To hell with the future and long live the past, may God in his mercy look down on Belfast."

"How sad," says John Hume, the courageous leader of Northern Ireland's Social Democratic and Labour Party who is trying to rally support for a move to ease tensions. He is a bulky man with rumpled hair and melancholy eyes and a firm determination to reach for the possible. He is working closely with Prime Minister Garrett FitzGerald of Ireland, a charismatic politician embattled against demagoguery for the sake of getting something useful done.

Few Irishmen on either side are aware that the line of partition is the last disputed border and the last case of irredentism in Western Europe. They are an anachronism. Despite a thousand bloody years of wars amongst them, other West Europeans have now managed to surmount the urge to vengeance and domination by force in favor of reconciliation, which benefits them all.

But people in Northern Ireland on both what are called the "nationalist" and "loyalist" sides, in effect Catholic and Protestant, are modern enough to complain that it's undemocratic for London and Dublin to do a deal over their heads without taking part.

The fact is that much of the opposing local factions don't want a settlement on less than unobtainable maximum terms, and those who do want the compromise haven't the strength to reach it. There isn't even a Protestant leader to stand as counterpart to John Hume, although he is convinced that there are many quiet moderates among the Protestant rank and file.

This is a classic case of the noisy and violent extremes overwhelming those who want peace. It is because they realize nothing will be achieved inside Northern Ireland without an initiative from outside that London and Dublin have come together.

Precisely because she is so tough, Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher is an asset in this effort. She has promised not to make any concessions on sovereignty, but she accepts an "Irish dimension" to the conflict, the need to involve the Republic in addressing real grievances of Northern Catholics. She won't be scared off by the ranting Protestants who insist that Ireland is a foreign country and must be dealt with only as such.

The details of the coming accord remain secret, but it is clearly a very limited step. Quite correctly, however, the Sinn Fein, which does only the necessary to veil its connection with the Irish Republican Army terrorists, and Protestant militants who have their own thugs in the Ulster Defense Association, feel it's an attempt to reduce their influence.

The big question is what they will try to do to destroy the agreement. An upsurge in violence is anticipated. The gamble in London and Dublin is that 16 years of communal violence has wearied the Northern Irish enough to make many heed the call of hope instead of the old summons to bitterness. Britain and Ireland each has its own reasons for wanting to calm the situation. Despite the tired Irish slogans, the British don't want to run Northern Ireland anymore. They want the "Irish problem" to go away and stop the drain on their money and military manpower. The Dublin government is worried about the rise of Sinn Fein revolutionaries. They profess allegiance to the Republic and its aspirations to unite Ireland, but they don't disguise their contempt for its institutions and the goal of replacing them.

Soviet spy's song no assurance of solvency!

The spook community in Washington is talking of nothing else but the turnabout of Soviet spy Vitaly Yurchenko. Only a few months ago he was the CIA's prize Soviet canary. Then, without warning, he turned up at the Russian Embassy and announced he was going home.

Art Buchwald

Forget his story about being drugged and kidnapped. The truth is that Yurchenko was not tortured but was badly handled by the CIA. It was not Vitaly's love for the motherland that drove him back to Moscow, but rather his disenchantment with the American way of life.

This is what happened. Yurchenko, while in Rome, was persuaded to defect by a CIA agent who offered the KGB officer wine, woman and song, not necessarily in that order.

"Sing to us, dear Yurchenko," the CIA man said, "and we promise you riches beyond your dreams: a safe house, $1 million in cash, a gold American Express card and a free trip to Hawaii for two, ground transportation and gratuities not included."

Yurchenko, who always wanted to see Hawaii, accepted the offer. He was immediately flown to Langley, Va., to be debriefed and tested for AIDS. As for his million dollars, the CIA people said they would invest it for him in a good tax shelter.

Then the counterespionage boys went to work. "Sing to us, Vitaly, sing to us the names of moles and double agents and spies who are still out in the cold." Yurchenko started to sing in a beautiful baritone that only great Soviet defectors possess.

All went well until Yurchenko demanded the safe house he was promised.

A CIA real estate agent took him out to the Virginia countryside. They drove up to a dirty, gray, weather-beaten cabin with broken windows, rotting stairs and a large hole in the roof.

"What's safe about this house?" Yurchenko said.

"The KGB would never think of looking for you here. We'll let you buy it for $500,000."

"Why should I pay for a house?"

"We always make our defectors pay for their safe houses. The CIA is not in business for its health," replied the agent. "Look, we're not taking advantage of you because you're a dirty commie traitor. Every house in Virginia sells for $500,000."

Yurchenko bought the shack from the CIA and received an advance of $150,000 to fix it up.

Unfortunately just when he got the house the way he wanted it the KGB found out where he lived and burned it down on Halloween. Yurchenko escaped out the back window and three hours later arrived at CIA headquarters shaking. He demanded his money be returned since the house wasn't safe at all. The matter went as high as the director of the Covert Real Estate Division, who told him that the Central Intelligence Agency had a firm policy. As long as the house was safe when the CIA sold it to a defector, the agency was not responsible for the KGB burning it later on.

Yurchenko was hurt and confused.

The CIA put him up in a Holiday Inn and said, "Sing, Yurchenko, and you'll find a BMW in front of your door and a girl like the one in the Calvin Klein ads."

So Yurchenko sang some more. He would still be singing today if the CIA had not made one tremendous blunder. They had invested the rest of Vitaly's money in a Maryland savings and loan. When Yurchenko went to make a withdrawal the cashier told him they had run out of money and slammed down the window in his face.

Enraged, the spy returned to Langley and confronted Bill Casey. The director said there was nothing he could do. "The CIA has no intelligence as to which savings and loan banks are solvent and which ones aren't. If you had come to me earlier I would have tipped you off on some good stocks."

That did it for Yurchenko. Since he was wiped out he decided to return to Moscow and face the music. His last words as he boarded the plane were, "I don't want to live in a country where your savings aren't insured by the FDIC."

Amnesty International says arrests, tortures increase in Zimbabwe

LONDON (AP) — Amnesty International said today that reports of arrests and torture of suspected government opponents in Zimbabwe have risen sharply since Prime Minister Robert Mugabe's party increased its parliamentary majority in July elections.

The independent London-based human rights group, which won the Nobel Peace Prize in 1977, said the arrests and torture were particularly intense in Bulawayo, the chief town in Matabeleland where opposition leader Joshua Nkomo has his power base.

There was no immediate comment from Mugabe's government.

Amnesty International quoted former inmates of Stops Camp, a detention center at the Mzilikazi police station in Bulawayo, as saying most detainees were held in three big cages open to the weather.

Other prisoners at Stops Camp were held in eight nearby security cells, sometimes in solitary confinement, and many were denied access to relatives or lawyers, Amnesty International said.

It said that more than 200 political detainees were thought to be kept at the Bulawayo camp and that those arrested and held without charge included public officials and supporters of Nkomo's Zimbabwe African People's Union.

Amnesty International quoted former camp inmates as saying many prisoners were reported to be beaten with whips made of rhinoceros hide, rubber hoses or sticks, often on the soles of the feet.

It said another common torture was tying a water-filled canvas bag around a prisoner's neck, causing him to swallow a lot of water and eventually lose consciousness.

It said at least 150 people were estimated to have been arrested in the Bulawayo area since July, and many of them were still being held.

Mugabe's Zimbabwe African National Union (Patriotic Front) won 64 of the 80 parliamentary seats for blacks in the June-July elections. Nkomo's party won all 15 seats from his Matabeleland province.

South African government frees activists without charging them

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — The government released five prominent activists without charge after months in jail, but critics said they remain effectively "banned" by tight restrictions on their freedom to travel, attend public gatherings and publish.

It was the first time the government used the July 21 state of emergency to authorize such restrictions on people not facing criminal charges, a spokesman for the Ministry of Law and Order said.

Anti-apartheid campaigners charged in interviews that the white-minority government was using the emergency rules to muzzle foes without resorting to formal banning orders that are widely condemned in the West.

"It's banning through the back door," said Max Coleman, whose son, Neil Coleman, was among the five activists released Tuesday night.

"This is another kind of arbitrary punishment without trial," said Sheena Duncan, president of the Black Sash women's anti-apartheid group. "If the government is going to use this very widely on hundreds of people in detention, then it is more evidence that the government is seeking to crush all opposition."

Coleman and three of the other activists — Auret van Heerden, Simon Ratcliffe and Morris Smithers — are whites involved in a variety of community groups.

The fifth activist is Rashid Saloojee, 52, the Indian president of the Transvaal Province branch of the United Democratic Front anti-apartheid coalition.

The five originally were detained nearly five months ago before the state of emergency under long-standing security rules, but continued to be held under the emergency rules.

The Ministry of Law and Order spokesman, Col. Leon Mellet, confirmed that "conditions" were imposed on the five upon their release. He said it was the first time such restrictions were imposed and he would not speculate whether other detainees might be similarly restricted.

The restrictions are valid until the state of emergency ends.

Coleman's father said his son was ordered not to enter school premises, preventing him from continuing research for a doctoral degree on labor affairs. He also was told not to leave Johannesburg without permission, enter certain buildings or assist in any publications.

Foreign governments have criticized harshly South Africa's practice of "banning" opposition activists, placing them under virtual house arrest without freedom to travel, be quoted or attend gatherings. In response to that pressure, the government lifted scores of banning orders in July 1983, and only 11 people currently are banned.

Formal bannings usual last two to five years and are issued under the Internal Security Act.

White opposition legislator Helen Suzman called the move part of "a pretty sinister trend."

"The release is not going to count for much in the outside world or in the lives of the people themselves," said Ms. Suzman, a member of the Progressive Federal Party.

"What we want is that people be free to protest lawfully against government policy. The line between subversion and lawful protest seems to be becoming thinner in this country," she said.

More than 6,000 people, nearly all blacks, have been arrested without charge under the emergency rules. Of them, more than 1,000 remain in custody, while the rest have been released.

Coleman's parents said in a statement: "Our son is only one of thousands who is a victim of the government's device of using the state of emergency to stifle all opposition to the structures of apartheid."

The Colemans run the Detainees Parents' Support Committee, which monitors arrests and detentions.

During the past 15 months of anti-apartheid rioting, the government has increasingly clamped down on public protest. More than 100 organizations in emergency areas have been banned from holding meetings, and the government has outlawed the Congress of South African Students.

On Tuesday, a private hospital reported three people were treated after being shot by police with birdshot and buckshot in clashes after a funeral for a riot victim in the Crossroads shantytown 12 miles east of Cape Town.

Verdict reached in trial

MANILA, Philippines (NYT) — A verdict has been reached and will be announced in eight days in the trial of Gen. Fabian C. Ver and 24 other men charged in connection with the assassination two years ago of the opposition leader Benigno S. Aquino Jr., one of the judges said Tuesday.

Judge Augusto Amores did not say what verdict the three-judge panel had reached, but that "it was a unanimous verdict."

Ver is widely expected to be acquitted after a Supreme Court ruling last August that excluded as evidence his testimony before a previous fact-finding commission. That testimony had formed the main evidence against him on a charge of covering up a plan to assassinate Aquino on Aug. 21, 1983, as he returned from self-imposed exile in the United States.

Anti-drug battle waged

MEXICO CITY (AP) — A special anti-drug campaign will be mounted in Veracruz state, where drug traffickers killed 24 law enforcement agents this month, the attorney general's office said.

Forty federal judicial police agents trained in combating drug traffic, backed by army troops and 18 helicopters, will stay as long as necessary to end the cultivation and sale of drugs in the state, the attorney general's office said.

Barber remembered in will

LONDON (AP) — A grateful customer left his London barber 1,500 pounds, or about $2,100, for 38 years of haircuts and pleasant chitchat.

The will of Otto Keller, who died in June leaving an estate of about $328,000, stipulated that a portion go to barber Charles Landsman "in remembrance of his cutting my hair for 38 years and in special memory of all the nice talks and jokes we had together."

Guard spokesman Dave Swearingen said the wreckage was widely scattered and rescuers believed the others had been flung from the cabin and buried in deep snow, although they saw tracks — possibly human — leading away from the site.

Tuesday's record lows also included a minus-8-degree reading at Winnemucca, Nev., while Eureka, Calif., on the northern coast, had a record low of 31 for the second consecutive day. San Francisco's 43 degrees tied a 1919 record, and San Jose, Calif., tied a 1975 mark with a 36-degree reading.

Northern Arizona's mountains were covered with more than two feet of snow Tuesday, while Flagstaff — elevation about 7,000 feet — got 10 inches of snow in five hours and closed its schools.

Schools also closed in Kingman, Grand Canyon and Williams and were let out early elsewhere as snow swept the state, toppling trees onto power lines and knocking out power to about 2,000 customers in the region, officials said.

Forecasters in Phoenix predicted the desert valley's coldest night in 13 years, with a 29-degree reading expected in the metropolitan area overnight.

Utah Power & Light Co. crews worked today to restore electricity to 1½ square miles of the Cottonwood section of Salt Lake County where nearly a foot of wet, heavy snow had knocked down lines, said dispatcher Jerry Thomas.

"Several thousand" homes were without power Tuesday in the Salt Lake City area, said dispatch supervisor Kent Jordison. It had been restored by today.

Ten inches of snow fell during the night in northern Utah at the Alta ski resort, follwing a snowfall Monday of up to 14 inches in the mountains.

Cold weather, who cares? It's better than packing

A wet cold front greeted the Midland Lee Rebels Monday afternoon as they began preparations to defend their two consecutive Bi-district playoff titles against Amarillo High, a game slated for 2 p.m. Saturday in Lubbock's Jones Stadium.

Monday's practice wasn't a comfortable situation. It was cold, but there wasn't a lot of complaining.

"I'm ready and excited to go," said defensive back Kevin Witt. "It's about time for winter to get here, but that's OK. There are a lot of teams taking inventory today and I'm glad we're not one of them."

Linebacker Jay Roach agreed prior to practice, "It's cold out there, but I'm glad we've got a chance to play in it."

THIS YEAR'S playoff trip has a special meaning to the Lee seniors. This is the first class in Lee history that has had a playoff team all three years they were in high school.

In 1983 when Lee went to the state finals, these seniors were then sophomores. Since Lee had 55 seniors on that squad, none of this year's seniors got in a playoff game. However, 17 of this year's Rebel squad had playoff experience a year ago.

"The playoffs are special this year to the seniors," said Roach, who is a playoff veteran, but as a non-starter last year. "It was a goal for the seniors to become the first senior group to be in the playoffs all three years we were in school. I'm really excited about it."

Some of Lee's returning starters know what to expect from the pressure situations the Rebels will face this week when they take to the playoff trail.

"The playoffs are fun. There is no question about that," noted Wade Wiesepape, a returning starter at center. "There is pressure involved because you don't want to go out and lose in Bi-district. You know if you lose any game, you pack up the gear the next Monday. That gives you some extra incentive to play well. There's no second chance here."

HALFBACKS RODNEY Sims and Kirk Thurman only saw limited playoff action in 1984, but are starters this time around. This is an exciting time for both of them.

"This is the big time and I'm extra ready," said Sims. "This is a whole lot different than last year. It's totally different being out on the field and I've been realizing that each week we play."

Thurman, who watched older brother Tyrone shine in the playoffs the last two years as a starter, added, "I played some last year in the playoffs, but starting is a great feeling. I feel like I have a lot more responsibility than last year. I just want to help the team and I have a chance to do that this year."

Although Lee posted a 3-1 record in the 1984 playoffs, most of the Rebels don't feel satisfied with the results. They would like to go even further.

"I hope we get to work out six more weeks," said offensive tackle Mike Little. "We only got four weeks last year and I'd like to get a couple more weeks in."

Offensive guard Ricky Lee said, "I wouldn't mind playing two more games this time around."

Defensive tackle Eddie Mancha, who didn't get any playoff action last year, is looking forward to his first playoff start, but he is already picking up what the playoff veterans are thinking.

"I hope we go all the way to state, but we can't do that unless we take one game at a time and play them one by one. Amarillo High is first, so that's our first step," said Mancha.

DEFENSVIE BACK Terry Young started in all of Lee's 1984 playoff outings, but he is looking forward to this year's playoffs with a special interest.

"I need the playoffs to get in a full season. I missed four games with an injury (wrist) and this is my chance to play some more," said Young, who was hurt in the final series of a preseason intra-squad scrimmage.

"The wrist is fine now. I'm still wearing a pad on it, but it doesn't bother me at all. It was very disppointing to miss the first four games of the season. That seemed like it was a long time to be out."

Offensive guard Jake Young, who some consider as Lee's most valuable player this year, noted, "We're excited about what has happened the last two years. We want to help start a tradition that can continue. We would like to do as good as the '83 bunch did. Then we would have done our part."

And suddenly the sun was out by Tuesday afternoon. That's West Texas. And so are the state playoffs.

Knicks finally notch victory; Suns agony continues

The game was called the War of the Worst, but Knicks Coach Hubie Brown begged to differ.

"We're doing about as well as can be expected considering what we have out on the floor," Brown said after the Knicks defeated winless Phoenix 103-93 Tuesday night for their first victory of the National Basketball Association season. "We have five guys injured. There's nothing we can do about that."

As evidence that the Knicks are better than their 1-8 record, Brown points to a defense that has allowed fewer than 100 points per game and the loss of only two games by more than 10 points. The problem during the 20-game losing streak that ended against the Suns, Brown said, was a lack of offensive firepower, especially since the loss of Bernard King, whose serious knee injury occurred the day after New York's last previous victory on March 22.

"We were disappointed (at starting 0-8), but we knew it would come if we did the best we can," said rookie Patrick Ewing, who led all scorers with 25 points and also led the Knicks' defense with nine rebounds and four blocked shots. "Now we have to keep on winning. Keep working hard and winning."

"We played good enough to be 6-3," Brown said. "But we haven't gotten any outside shooting. We finally got some shooting from the guard position."

Rory Sparrow, shooting 35 percent from the field before the game, hit 8-of-10 field goal attempts and amassed 16 points and nine assists for the Knicks. Ernie Grunfeld also provided an outside-shooting touch with 15 points, including a three-pointer in the third period that put the Knicks ahead to stay at 68-66.

"I give all the accolades to the players for working hard," Brown said. "They earned it. Once again we played good defensive basketball. For a change we got all the breaks at the end."

NBA Roundup

The Knicks forced 28 Phoenix turnovers, including 10 offensive fouls, as the Suns fell to 0-8, the worst start in the 18-year history of the franchise.

MacLeod admitted that he expected some rough times for the Suns this season, but that an 0-8 record is worse than he anticipated.

"We're starting two second-year players in Charles Jones and Jay Humphries, Larry Nance was a holdout and missed training camp, Rod Foster just came back from injury and Georgi Glouchkov (of Bulgaria) can't practice effectively yet because of the language problem," MacLeod said.

Rockets 127, Nuggets 119

Houston, on the strength of Lewis Lloyd's 26 points, won the matchup of Midwest Division leaders to move a half-game ahead of Denver.

With the Rockets clinging to a 120-118 lead after consecutive three-point goals by Denver's Mike Evans, Lloyd made a three-point play and followed two baskets by Akeem Olajuwon with a steal and basket to give Houston control.

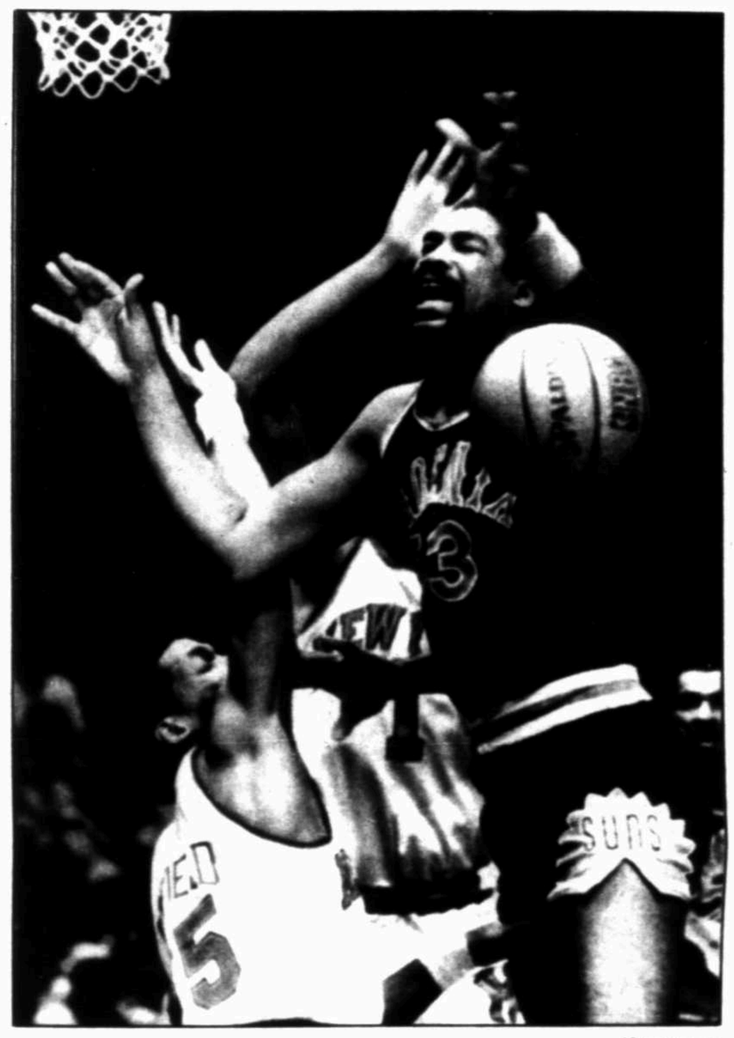

Ralph Sampson, who fouled out of the game with 20 seconds to play, scored 24 points and Olajuwon added 20. Alex English led Denver with 36 points and the Nuggets got 31 from Lafayette Lever.

SuperSonics 109, Mavericks 90

Seattle beat Dallas for the first time in seven meetings thanks to 26 points by Tom Chambers, who came off the bench to score 10 points in the second quarter.

Rookie Xavier McDaniel scored eight of his 21 points in the third quarter as the Sonics extended their lead to as many as 18 points before settling for a 74-62 third-quarter advantage.

Gibson hottest item among 'limited quality' free agents

Associated Press

Kirk Gibson of the Detroit Tigers figures to be the hottest item in a free-agent market that some baseball executives say returns less than it costs.

Operating under a new free-for-all system adopted during contract talks this summer, a record 62 free agents will be available to any team with enough money and the inclination to sign them.

While Gibson's agent, Doug Baldwin of Seattle, says he already has been approached by a number of clubs about the power-hitting outfielder, he adds there have been no talks "of any sort of substance" with any teams, including the Tigers.

"The last time we talked to the Tigers, except to say hello, was four weeks ago. They made a proposal involving three years," Baldwin said Tuesday by telephone from his Seattle office. "At that time, I told them that Kirk was not interested in talking to them or anyone else about three years.

"I told them, 'If you want to keep Kirk out of free agency or retain him in a Tiger uniform, they you need to come back to us with a five-year proposal,' " Baldwin said. "We haven't had any discussions concerning Kirk and the Tigers since that time."

Last season, the left-handed hitting Gibson, 28, batted .287 with 29 home runs and 97 RBI, while scoring 96 runs and stealing 30 bases.

ALSO INCLUDED among the free agents are relief pitchers Donnie Moore and Al Holland of California, and starting pitchers Phil and Joe Niekro of the New York Yankees, Bruce Kison of Boston, David Palmer of Montreal, Don Sutton of the Angels and Tommy John of Oakland.

Others who filed for free agency were catchers Carlton Fisk of the Chicago White Sox, Butch Wynegar of the Yankees and Steve Yeager of Los Angeles; infielders Tony Bernazard of Cleveland, Tom Brookens of Detroit, Rod Carew and Bobby Grich of California and Rich Dauer of Baltimore; outfielders Cesar Cedeno of St. Louis and Garry Maddox of Philadelphia, and designated hitters Al Oliver of Toronto and Hal McRae of Kansas City.

The deadline for filing was Monday midnight, after which players could begin to negotiate with whomever they wished. The re-entry draft was one of the free-agent provisions that was done away with during contract talks that ended after a two-day strike last August. Last year, 56 players filed for free agency, and the total this year was the most since free agency was instituted in 1976.

TEXAS RANGERS General Manager Tom Grieve said his club had no plans to pursue "free agents at this time, and we have no concrete plans to do so. There's not a lot of quality available." He said that, in recent years, there has not been sufficient "return on the dollar" to sign free agents.

Other than trying to retain its own two free agents, Gibson and Brookens, the Tigers also will bypass the free agent market. G.M. Bill Lajoie says. "We have trades in mind, and we'll go that way."

Of Gibson, Lajoie said, "The difference is the length of the contract. We don't want to commit ourselves to something long-term. That's the stumbling block. It has nothing to do with the player. It's economics."

Ken Harrelson, the new general manager of the Chicago White Sox, said he thought clubs were wrong to take themselves out of the free-agent market entirely.

"I don't believe in painting yourself in a corner," he said. "If someone is available we want, we're going to go after them. That's what free agency is there for. It's a tool."

The Angels said they expected to re-sign Moore, who had 31 saves and a 1.91 ERA last season, and also had hopes of retaining Grich and Beniquez. In addition, Angels G.M. Mike Port said the club probably would re-sign Sutton.

"He's out of the country right now," Port said of Sutton, "and he filed just as a protection for his rights because he was going to be out of the country."

The Dodgers said they were "close" to signing Yeager, and the Yankees were expected to make some sort of offer for the Niekro brothers.

Answer Box

Questions people ask and answers they get.....

After the Major League All-Star game last summer, you suggested that the game be discontinued. Your snide comment was that the National League's superiority had long since made the competition obsolete.

Well, Mr. Know-It-All, I hope you noticed that the Royals, of the American League, won the World Series over your St. Louis Cardinals.

Answer: It has always been thus. The National League concentrates on winning the exhibition game and the American League wins the World Series. It's so one-sided that, like the All-Star game, the Series should be dropped for lack of competition. And, the Cardinals are not my team and never have been.

In your Saturday forecast column you predicted the Dartmouth-Cornell game and then observed that it was a hard game to predict since sometimes the results weren't known until Monday.

I take that as an aspersion on the communications system of the northeast. As a transplanted resident, I take personal exception to the insult. Communications are probably better there than are in Texas.

Answer: No aspersions were being made of communication reliability in the northeast....see question below.

There has been much discussion of instant-replay for pro football games. Has it ever been tried before? And do you think it will come about?

Answer: It is already a fait accompli...1939 as a matter of fact. It was used in a Cornell-Dartmouth game, back when both were prominent collegiate powers. Cornell scored late in the game and won 7-3. Monday, after a review of the game films, Cornell admitted an official had erred and Dartmouth indeed had won 3-0. Cornell, it seems, had scored the deciding touchdown on what films showed was a "fifth down."

If instant-replay is adopted by the NFL, rulings will be rendered quicker than two days later. Of course, if instant-replay is adopted, the games may not end until two days later.

Whatever became of the referee who mishandled the Cornell-Dartmouth game? Was he lynched or ostracized from Society, which?

Answer: The ref for the game was Red Friesell and he became so famous that for years he received letters for years after addressed: "Fifth Down".

I would like to congratulate you for your foresightedness. I remember last winter you predicted the National Junior College Athletic Association would adopt a shot clock and, lo and behold, it has become a reality. You are truly remarkable.

Response: I know. But I must confess that the shot clock adopted is a 45-second clock, the standard shoot in 45 seconds or relinquish possession clock. My prediction was that the clock adopted would be a 15-second, no shots before 15 seconds had expired.

What do think of the 45-second rule, do you think the Chaps will ever require 45 seconds to launch a shot?

Answer: A pool has already been formed predicting when it will happen. In four games to date, the lowest the second-clock has reached was eight seconds when MC went into a stall, hoping to make the defense come out and meet it.

I never realized what a humorist you are. You are really funny. Like that prediction of BYU over UTEP and how about that Penn-Colgate game...what was it you said, 'Colgate minus eight over Penn' — Quakers stray outside the Ivy League and pay the price.' absolutely uproarious.

Response: This from a guy who went to Bates College and doesn't know the nickname of Colby, the Bobcats' traditional rival.

In the category of interceptions, one quarterback owns both the single season and career records for most thrown. Who is he and how many?

Yesterday's answer: Best start in NBA history, Knicks, 23-1 in 1969-70.

JIM MURRAY

Only immortalized block thrown by Kramer in '67

In the world of football, everyone remembers the long runs, the 80-yard passes, sometimes even the goal-line stands. They write books and songs about them. "Greatest Plays in History." "Ten Seconds to Glory." That sort of thing.

But there is only one block that makes this anthology of gridiron heroics, only one recollection in story and song of the man who won the game without the ball, who didn't take the path to greatness, but cleared it.

That block occurred on Dec. 31, 1967, on a piece of frozen tundra in Green Bay, Wis.

It sprang a guy loose for the winning touchdown, all right. If you consider 32 inches loose.

There were 13 seconds left to play, the score was 17-14 in favor of the Dallas Cowboys, the temperature was 13 degrees below zero and falling, it was third down, the offense had no timeouts left and a second straight berth in the Super Bowl was on the line.

The greatest pro coach of the ages, the legend in his own time, the Caesar of the sidelines, Vincent T. Lombardi, decided to pass up the sure tie, the 18-yard field goal, and go for the win, the one-yard touchdown.

Not everyone remembers who scored that winning touchdown – it was Bart Starr, the quarterback – but everyone remembers who laid the block and moved the dreaded Cowboy defenseman, Jethro Pugh, the critical three feet out of the play.

The Green Bay Packers were a noted offensive scourge of the gridiron, gulping up yards by the shovelful in their storied run-to-daylight offense in those days but this was probably the most important, certainly the most dramatic 32 inches in all their history.

JERRY KRAMER became the most famous right guard in history with that one wedge-out on the goal line, so celebrated some people think the deodorant was named after him. Fifteen years later, people were still recognizing him in his travels around the country.

Jerry Kramer, who came out of the mountain west to play on those great Green Bay teams of Lombardi's, immortalized them once before in a diary-type documentary, "Instant Replay," which became the most successful pro football book of its kind ever published.

He's returned now with a sequel, "Distant Replay," which is published by Putnam and is a study of what becomes of the heroes when the music dies and the cheering stops.

It's not "That Championship Season." It's not a story of psychological betrayal, not a story of a band of men-boys for whom life stopped on the one-yard line or a free-throw line 20 years ago. It's not "The Boys of Winter," a football version of Roger Kahn's "The Boys of Summer" recounting of the 1947 Dodgers. The '66 and '67 Packers, who won the first two Super Bowls, were not visited with a series of catastrophic and disproportionate personal tragedies.

By and large, these boys of winter are still running to daylight, still sweeping into end zones with the ball held high, still laying those precise, crisp blocks their coach taught so well.

It seems as if almost the whole first-string line is either in the millionaire class or living as if it were. Fortunes were made in fast-food franchises, restaurants, heavy industry. Most of Lombardi's Packers are still executive-class performers.

KRAMER IS reporting on a class reunion of the 1966 Packer team, the mythical green and gold gang that won the first Super Bowl.

Kramer thinks it's a love story but Horatio Alger would like the moral here, too.

There are a few members missing as the squad reconvenes in Green Bay for their commemorative weekend. Some are dead, others are unable to leave current posts for the long voyage home, but only one, Lionel Aldridge, is unaccounted for as the book opens.

He is traced down in the last chapter by a teammate, Ron Kostelnik, who puts aside his $18-million-a-year business to drive down and find the lost Lionel working in a Milwaukee post office.

Aldridge had hit bottom. He had had serious emotional problems and didn't stay long in one place. He was sleeping in the streets when someone lifted his Super Bowl ring from him, but he has regained his pass rush on life by the time Kramer catches up to him.

"You need anything?" Kramer asks.

"I don't need money," Aldridge tells him. "I need people. I need friends. I need family. People need people, not money."

In a sense, these old grads are still playing for the old man. When Dave Robinson, who played inside linebacker, is denied a beer distributorship, he heeds not despair but Lombardi-isms.

"The greatest glory is not in never falling, it's in getting up," he remembers the coach telling him. "I got up," Robinson tells Kramer. "I got my distributorship."

Kramer writes: "The answer has to be Lombardi. The fierceness of Lombardi – combined with the smallness of the city in which we played – forced upon us a camaraderie and a closeness that, nurtured by victory, grew into love."

A PACKER who turned to coaching uses Lombardi-isms to turn his players from uncertainty to determination. "Fatigue makes cowards of us all," he quotes the coach. "Winning is just a habit. Unfortunately, so is losing."

Willie Davis, the defensive end who became a Los Angeles business tycoon with distributorships, radio stations and a seat on the board of MGM, remembers Lombardi stressing the positive aspects of rejection.

"Willie," he asked Davis, tears welling in his eyes, "do you know I applied for the coaching job at Notre Dame twice and never got so much as an acknowledgement to my letter?"

It was Notre Dame's turn to cry by then but Jerry Kramer's book is an affirmation that leadership does not die with the leader.

The Green Bay Packers of 1967 are still trying to please the coach. In a sense, they're succeeding. As usual, they're winning. As the coach said, it's the only thing.

Mark Aguirre led Dallas with 26 points, but the Mavericks shot just 32 percent from the field in the second quarter and made only six of 25 shots in the third period.

Pistons 124, Bullets 122

Reserve forward Tony Campbell's short jumper with 22 seconds left in overtime completed a comeback in which Detroit rallied from a 15-point deficit in the fourth period.

Two free throws by Cliff Robinson gave the Bullets a 120-118 lead with 1:34 left in the extra period, but baskets by Earl Cureton and Isiah Thomas, who finished with 32 points, put the Pistons in front.

Dan Roundfield led the Bullets, losers of six straight, with 25 points. Gus Williams and Jeff Ruland, who got the final four points to send the game into overtime, had 22 each. Bill Laimbeer added 28 points and 21 rebounds for Detroit.

Lakers 119, Jazz 110

Kareem Abdul-Jabbar was on the bench with three fouls, but Los Angeles took control in the first half when Maurice Lucas came off the sidelines to score 11 of his 21 points.

Abdul-Jabbar returned to score 21 of his 25 points in the second half to lead the Lakers to their seventh victory in eight games.

Adrian Dantley scored a game-high 36 points to lead Utah. Utah Coach Frank Layden was ejected at the start of the fourth quarter after arguing a referee's call.

Bucks 132, Bulls 103

Forward Terry Cummings had five baskets during a three-minute flurry in the final quarter to break the game open for Milwaukee. The 6-foot-9 Cummings, who on Sunday failed to score in double figures for the first time in his 240-game NBA career, finished with a team-high 26 points.

Reserve guard Ricky Pierce had 10 of his 14 points in the third quarter as Milwaukee turned a 61-60 halftime lead into a 94-87 margin after three periods. Sidney Moncrief added 22 points for the Bucks.

Orlando Woolridge paced Chicago with a game-high 31 points.

Warriors 127, Clippers 115

Golden State, led by forward Purvis Short and rookie guard Chris Mullin, erased a 16-point deficit with 81-percent shooting in the second period. It was the Warriors' fourth straight victory since Short and Mullin joined the team after salary holdouts.

Golden State outscored Los Angeles 46-28 in the second period to take a 69-65 halftime lead. Short scored 12 points and Mullin had nine in the surge. Center Joe Barry Carroll led the Warriors with 27 points, Short had 26 and Mullin a season-high 19.

Trail Blazers 126, Kings 115

Portland, 8-2, put six players in double figures, paced by Kiki Vandeweghe, who scored 26 points. Clyde Drexler added 25 points for the Blazers, while 7-foot center Sam Bowie had 18 and shared rebounding honors with Kenny Carr at 11 each.

Santa Clara linebacker Cichoke dies from injury

SANTA CLARA, Calif. (AP) — David Cichoke was named his conference's Player of the Week for helping Santa Clara University clinch a tie for first place. The linebacker's game-saving tackle apparently cost him his life.

Two teammates found the 220-pound, 6-foot-2 football star dead in his room Monday, about the same time the Western Football Conference honored Cichoke for his seven tackles in Saturday's game.

"It doesn't make any sense," said team physician Dr. Jeffrey Saal. "Football is supposed to be a game. You're not supposed to die.

The 21-year-old from Portland, Ore., apparently suffered a concussion on the last of his tackles in his team's 21-19 victory over California State University at Northridge, although a coroner said Tuesday the brain hemorrhage may have started long after he left the field complaining of dizziness.

Cichoke and two other players forced a Northridge running back out of bounds two inches from the goal line on a two-point conversion attempt to save the game with 2:59 left.

Question Box

By RAY CORIO

Question: When Rod Carew gets his 3,000th hit, will he and Pete Rose be the only players to reach that milestone who are not in the Hall of Fame? Who are the players with the most hits not enshrined?

Answer: With the induction of Lou Brock (3,023 hits) Sunday, 13 of the 15 players with 3,000 or more hits are in the Hall. The missing ones are Rose, who, like Carew, is still active, and Carl Yastrzemski (3,419), who retired after the 1983 season and is not eligible to be voted in until 1989. Every other major leaguer with more than 2,800 hits is in the Hall. Vada Pinson, an outfielder with a career average of .286 from 1958-1975, is the player with the most hits, 2,757, who is not in Cooperstown. Others with significant hit totals who are eligible but are not in the Hall are: Billy Williams, an outfielder from 1959-1976 with a .290 career average and 2,711 hits; Doc Cramer, another outfielder, who batted .296 from 1929-48 and had 2,705 hits; George Davis, an infielder from 1890-1909 (.297 average and 2,668 hits), and Nellie Fox, a .288 hitter with 2,663 hits as a second baseman from 1947-65.

Question: How many times has Dennis Leonard been a 20-game winner? Is he still with the Kansas City Royals?

Answer: In his first 10 years in the majors, starting in 1974, Leonard won 136 games and lost 93, with 61 of those victories coming in his three 20-victory years: 1977, when his record was 20-12; 1978, when he had a 21-17 mark, and 1980, when he posted a 20-11 record. Now 34 years old, Leonard has not pitched since May 1983, because of a snapped tendon below his left knee that needed four operations. He has been throwing batting practice for the Royals in recent weeks, and hopes to spend two or three weeks in the minors next month. If healthy, he might be called up to Kansas City in September, when rosters increase to 40 players.

Question: In a pro football game, the Team A quarterback, facing a first down at his team's 40-yard line, throws a pass that is intercepted by a Team B linebacker. As he runs toward the end zone, the linebacker is tackled by one of the Team A running backs, who forces a fumble on the Team A 20. If the quarterback picks up the loose ball and begins to run back toward the line of scrimmage, his 40, stopping at the 35, can he now pass to a receiver who is still lurking deep in Team B's territory?

Answer: The pass would not be legal because after the interception, the quarterback was no longer a quarterback, but a defensive player, and defenders are not allowed to make forward passes. Once the ball changed possession on the intercepted pass, the continuity of the play was broken and the original line of scrimmage was no longer valid. There is nothing wrong with the quarterback-turned-defender lateraling the ball as he runs it back, but passing it would warrant a loss of 5 yards from the spot of the pass, making it first down and 10 for Team A on its 30.

Question: If a quarterback's pass is deflected at the line of scrimmage and he catches it before it hits the ground and advances the ball 5 yards before being tackled, does the quarterback get credit for a completion, a reception, a run, all three or nothing?

Answer: The play is treated as a regular pass play, with the quarterback being given a pass attempt, a completed pass, a reception and 5 yards added to his passing yardage total.

Question: How many members of the U.S. basketball team at the 1964 Olympic Games made it to the pros?

Answer: Only three of the 12 players on that team in Tokyo failed to become pros: Richard Davies, John McCaffrey and Jerry Shipp. Eight who made it to the National Basketball Association were Jim "Bad News" Barnes, Bill Bradley, Joe Caldwell, Mel Counts, Walt Hazzard, Lucious Jackson, Jeff Mullins and George Wilson. One member, Larry Brown, now the head coach at Kansas, played in the American Basketball Association. That Olympic team, coached by Hank Iba, won the gold medal with a 9-0 record and an average victory margin of 30 points. It beat the Soviet Union in the final, 73-59.

Question: In golf, how is par determined?

Answer: Ideally, par is the score expected of an expert golfer on a particular hole. In assigning the number of strokes deemed most suitable for a hole, a portion of the Rules of Golf assumes that the hole will be played "without flukes and under ordinary weather conditions, allowing two strokes on the putting green." Yardages are used to help compute par, and generally that means a par-3 hole for men will be allowed up to 250 yards from tee to hole (up to 210 for women) and a par-4 will range from 251 to 470 yards for men and 211-400 for women. The yardage is measured from the center of the tee area to the center of the green (and also from the center of the fairway in holes with a bend), always keeping in mind the line of play planned by the course architect.

QUESTION: How many major league teams has Dave Kingman been with and did he ever hit .300 for any of them?

Kingman, who came up with the San Francisco Giants in 1971, has played for seven teams in 15 years, including two stints with the Mets, one in 1977, the year Kingman also was a member of the San Diego Padres, the California Angels and the Yankees. His best season average was .288 for the Chicago Cubs in 1979, which was 50 points higher than the career average he took into this season with Oakland. Among his 153 hits in 1979, Kingman had 48 home runs, 19 doubles and 5 triples, and drove in 115 runs.

QUESTION: There are runners on first and second with two out and Team A is trailing by a run when the Team A player, a switch-hitter, takes his stance in the right-handed batter's box against the left-handed pitcher for Team B. As the pitcher gets set in the stretch position, the runner on second drifts a bit farther than normal toward third base, drawing a longer look from the pitcher. Meanwhile, the second baseman moves a bit closer to the base, anticipating a possible pickoff attempt. With the first baseman playing on the bag, keeping that runner in check, a wide gap opens between first and second base, and the batter takes advantage of it by stepping over the plate into the left-handed batter's box before the distracted pitcher notices it. If the batter then nudges the pitch between first and second for a hit, scoring the runner from second, will the game be tied?

Team B may be fit to be tied by the batter's tactic, but the game will not. A player is allowed to switch sides of the plate as often as he wants during a time at bat, but in each case he must do so before the pitcher gets into a set position or starts his windup. In this example, even though the pitcher is not looking homeward, he is prepared to deliver the ball there. Thus, as soon as the batter moves from one batter's box to the other, the home plate umpire will call him out for an illegal action, ending the inning. If there had been less than two out and the runners were moving on the pitch, they would have to return to their base.

QUESTION: When the Mets won the pennant and World Series in 1969, Nolan Ryan, Tom Seaver and Jerry Koosman — all still winning in the major leagues — were the young mainstays of their staff. When was each traded and who did the Mets acquire in return?

All three were gone less than 10 years after the championship. Ryan went first, on Dec. 10, 1971, along with two other pitchers, Don Rose and Francisco Estrada, and an outfielder, Leroy Stanton. The Mets obtained the California Angels' regular shortstop, Jim Fregosi, who lasted just a year and a half with them. Among the players in that deal, only Ryan is still a major leaguer. In exchange for Seaver, who was traded to Cincinnati June 15, 1977, the Mets acquired two outfielders, Steve Henderson and Dan Norman; a pitcher, Pat Zachry, and an infielder, Doug Flynn. Only Norman is no longer in the majors. Koosman was sent to Minnesota on Dec. 8, 1978, for Jesse Orosco, now the mainstay of the Mets' bullpen, and a pitcher, Greg Field, who never got out of the minor leagues.

The Mets reacquired Seaver from the Reds on Dec. 16, 1982, in a swap for the pitcher Charlie Puleo and two minor leaguers, but then lost Seaver a year later when the Chicago White Sox claimed him in the compensation draft.

Balanced offenses still key to NFL success

Associated Press

Two weeks ago, 13 backs ran for 100 yards or more, a National Football League single-week record. Last week 10 guys did it.

Does that, combined with liberalized pass interference rules, mean there's a new emphasis on rushing in the NFL?

Only in part.

"I don't think football has changed that much," said George Young, general manager of the New York Giants, who are 7-0 in games in which they've rushed for more than 100 yards and 0-3 when they've rushed for less. "You've still got to be balanced. A one-dimensional team won't win very much."

The statistics bear him out.

The top 10 rushing teams in the NFL are a mixed lot with a combined record of 53-47. They include the 10-0 Chicago Bears and the 7-3 New York Jets, Giants and New England Patriots. The list also includes the 1-9 Atlanta Falcons and 3-7 Indianapolis Colts.

Among those outside the Top 10 are the Los Angeles Rams, 8-2, Dallas Cowboys and Denver Broncos, both 7-3, and the Los Angeles Raiders, Miami Dolphins and Seattle Seahawks, all 6-4. It's also significant that all but the Broncos play either in warm weather cities or indoors, because some of the factors are seasonal.

"I've always thought that when you get into the second half of the season, you've got to play defense and you've got to be able to run the ball, particularly in the north where the weather's against you," said Young, a former offensive lineman. "If you can't run the ball, you've got problems."

And some of the factors simply have to do with the nature of football.

"When you get into the nitty-gritty tough games, you have to control the football," Young said. "Against the best teams, it's a game of field position. You don't have to be the best running team in football, but you've got to be able to make that third and short."

From opposite sides of the street:

— "What are you guys talking about? I don't travel in the same circles with you guys. I'm restricted. I leave home, come here, go home and stop off at a store and buy a cup of coffee." — Coach Bill Parcells of the Giants, asked by reporters about the possibility that his 7-3 team can make it to the Super Bowl.

— "The one victory is great, but you still look at your schedule and know you're 1-9 and that's very disheartening.— Tampa Bay Coach Leeman Bennett after the Bucs beat St. Louis 16-0 Sunday.

With 1:06 to play last Sunday, the New York Jets scored to take a 17-14 lead over Miami. It put the Jets just 66 seconds away from an 8-2 record and a commanding position in the AFC East. And it put last year's AFC champions the same distance from becoming just another 5-5 team with a minimal playoff chance.

It took just 25 seconds to turn Miami into a 21-17 winner.

Lorenzo Hampton returned the kickoff 37 yards to the Miami and Dan Marino completed a six-yard pass to Mark Clayton.

Then Marino threw a 50-yard touchdown pass to Mark Duper. All Duper had to contend with was single coverage from Bobby Jackson, who had reinjured a pulled groin muscle earlier in the game and was still woozy from knocking Clayton out of bounds on the previous play.

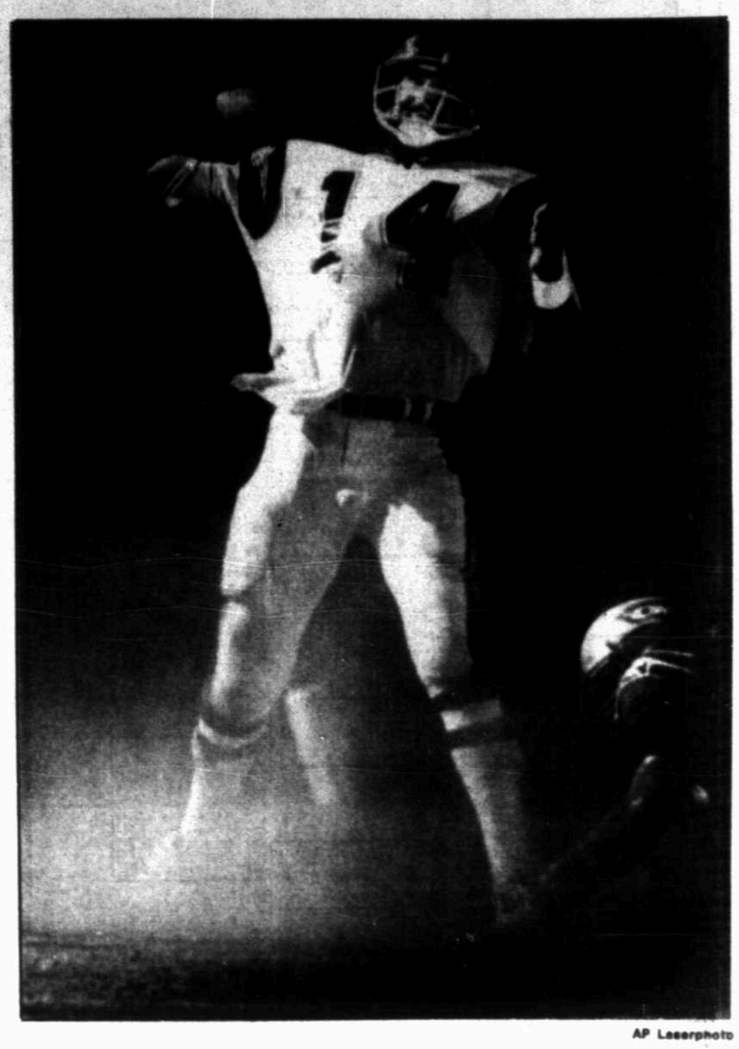

Some teams would have been content to play a prevent defense, assuming that at worst, the Dolphins would kick a field goal to tie the game and send it into overtime. But because of injuries, the Jets had only five reasonably healthy defensive backs instead of the six needed for the prevent. So they decided to blitz.

"If we had them around the 20, all right," said Jets Coach Joe Walton. "Once they had that kickoff return we felt we had to play our regular defense — what got us to 7-2 — to keep them from picking away at a zone into field goal range. We wanted to go after them and hurry them."

That's tough when the quarterback is Marino, whose record 48 touchdown passes last season were due in large part to his quick release.

On the other hand, coaches rarely win the battle of public opinion. If the Dolphins had kicked a field goal and won in overtime, Walton would have found himself repeatedly answering the same question.

Hey, Joe, why didn't you rush the passer?

USFL picks up TV contract with RCA

NEW YORK (AP) — The United States Football League, which has been unsuccessfully seeking a network television contract, announced Tuesday it has reached agreement with RCA American Communications for satellite syndication of its games when it moves to the fall next season.

The system, which the league said was the first of its kind in professional sports, will still require the USFL to sell games to individual stations across the country. In addition, some games will continue to be carried by ESPN cable.

But league spokesman Bob Rose said Tuesday: "The decision has been made that we won't be on a major network."

Marshall's '85 success fulfilling hopes of tragic '70 ending

HUNTINGTON, W.Va. (AP) — For 15 years every yard gained has been a step toward a new era and a step away from tragedy for the Marshall University football program.

Since Nov. 14, 1970, Marshall's history has been inexorably linked to the plane crash that claimed 75 lives, including 37 football players, its coach, athletic staff and several boosters.

Marshall had the worst record of ıy Division I football team during the 1970s — 22-84 — but the Thundering Herd finally has battled back to respectability as a Division I-AA team. Marshall is 7-2-1 this season, putting together consecutive winning seasons for the first time since 1963-64, and has an outside shot at a playoff invitation.

"Unfortunately it seems like all the headlines about Marshall were bad," said David Walsh, a freshman quarterback on that 1970 team and now the sports editor of the Huntington Herald-Dispatch. "It's nice to see headlines in a positive vein for once."

The pain of that night, however, still lingers.

Ed Starling, then an assistant atletic director, missed the doomed football trip because he was moving his family to a new house. Nate Ruffin, a defensive back sidelined with an arm injury, gave his seat on the airplane to a booster.

Fifteen years later, both men remember rushing through the cold, rainy Saturday night to Tri-State Airport, hoping reports they'd heard of an airplane crash were somehow wrong.

"We ran until we got to the top of the hill and all we could see was yellow flames," Ruffin recalled.

Starling, now an associate athletic director, found the site cordoned off. After being told "everybody's dead," he drove back to campus to compile the list of passengers on the DC-9.

"It was something that lingered over the players," said Ruffin, who identified the remains of his teammates. "Nobody wanted to come here for a while. Nobody wanted to land at that airport."

Ruffin, now personnel director for the Huntington Publishing Co., will speak Thursday at the annual memorial service on campus. He said he thinks Nov. 14 always will be marked on some calendars.

"It probably will become another day in the sense of Veterans Day, but some people will refuse to allow it to shut down as a remembrance day," he said.

"It will never be forgotten, always memorialized as long as Marshall stands and as long as they have sports. You cannot strike up the band or throw a football in the air without remembering that there was a team that started out and suddenly vanished.

"Now we have a team that is a winner. That is what we started out being and we ended up vanishing. The thing that got to me the worse was that my friends vanished. That is what stayed with me for so long."

Marshall, which suffered through a 27-game losing streak in the late 1960s, appeared to be on the verge of turning things around in 1970. Despite a 3-6 record after the East Carolina loss, the Thundering Herd had a record-setting quarterback in Ted Shoebridge and defensive back Larry Saunders, who Ruffin insists could have played professionally.

Marshall fielded a team in 1971 primarily consisting of freshmen and sophomores, and even though the Herd won two games that season, the football program struggled.

Starling said the success of the past two seasons "has fulfilled some of the dreams we had in 1970."

Ruffin agreed.

"It's the end of the era," Ruffin said. "We have two new coaches, a new athletic director and nearly a new president.

"No longer can people go around and blame things on the crash. We've got two winners now. The people in that crash were striving to be winners. They gave their lives for that."

Becker returns to site of last Britain loss

WEMBLEY, England (AP) — Wimbledon champion Boris Becker, who has not lost a tennis match in Britain for a year, returned today to the scene of his last defeat on British soil.

Or, his last loss, rather, came on the Supreme surface of the Wembley Arena in the $375,000 Benson and Hedges men's Indoor Championships.

The 17-year-old West German 'Wunderkind' — who became the youngest Wimbledon men's champion last July — faced Israel's Shlomo Glickstein in a first-round match today.

Seeded second for the tourney, Becker could meet U.S. Open champion Ivan Lendl of Czechoslovakia in Sunday's final.

Lendl also was in action for the first time today, meeting American Larry Stefanki in another first-round match.

Becker was ranked 128th in the world when he was defeated by France's Guy Forget in last year's second round. Going into this year's tourney, the tall, red-haired teenager was ranked No. 5.

Becker, who has won the Young Masters', Queen's Club and Wimbledon tourneys during a spectacular 1985, is hoping to win a fourth British tournament before his 18th birthday Nov. 22.

After the elimination of No. 4 seed Yannick Noah of France and No. 7 Scott Davis of the United States on Tuesday, Becker was left with only one seeded player in his half of the draw. That was No. 5 Anders Jarryd of Sweden, who played Switzerland's Heinz Guenthardt, a Wimbledon quarterfinalist this year, in his first-round match.

Other seeds in first-round action today were No. 6 Johan Kriek of the United States, who faced qualifier Libor Pimek of Czechoslovakia, and Sweden's No. 3 Stefan Edberg, who was matched against Frenchman Thierry Tulasne.

Edberg's countryman, Joakim Nystrom, seeded eighth, played a second-round match against another Frenchman, Guy Forget.

In Tuesday's matches, American John Sadri stopped Noah when the Frenchman hurt his shoulder and retired while losing 4-1 in the first set; American Mike Leach ousted Davis 6-0, 5-7, 6-1; American David Pate fought back from a 4-0 deficit in the first set to eliminate West Germany's Andreas Maurer 7-6, 6-4; India's Ramesh Krishnan downed American Tim Wilkison 4-6, 6-4, 6-4; and Britain's Jeremy Bates stopped Ben Testerman of the United States 6-4, 6-4.

Bates, one of only two hometown players to gain the 32-player field, will play the winner of the Becker-Glickstein clash in the second round.

The other British player, John Lloyd, was stopped by Sweden's Jan Gunnarsson 6-3, 6-3.

Soviet volleyball tips South Korea

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — The favored Soviet Union beat South Korea 15-8, 15-10, 15-6 for its second win against no losses on the second day of the 10-nation men's volleyball tournament at Seoul's Chamsil Gymnasium.

France overcame a poor second set and beat Argentina 15-11, 4-15, 15-8, 4-15, 15-8, to gain its first win in another group A preliminary match. Argentina, which scored Monday's 3-2 upset over the winless Korean team, suffered its first setback.

In the day's group B games, the United States, which was idle Monday, pounded Bulgaria 15-12, 15-4, 15-3. It was the first loss for Bulgaria, who had scored a 3-1 win over Poland Monday.

NYC, Chicago marathons at same time?

NEW YORK (AP) — Fred Lebow, race director of the New York City Marathon, officially announced that the 1986 race would be run Nov. 2, possibly setting up a head-on conflict with its major rival for fall supremacy, America's Marathon-Chicago.

"I can't help that," Lebow said of the possible confrontation with the Chicago race. "I can't be concerned with any other marathons. There's not only Chicago, but also a marathon in Washington (the Marine Corps Marathon) that is run the same time.

Canadiens win fifth straight

UNIONDALE, N.Y. (AP) — The Montreal Canadiens are starting to connect, thanks to a well-timed road trip and a big assist from their hot-shot rookies.

"Fortunately, it (the road trip) came at an opportune time," Montreal veteran defenseman Larry Robinson said Tuesday night following a 3-2 National Hockey League victory over the New York Islanders. "We were struggling at home and the fans were getting on us. It affected the kids. It gave us a chance to get together, to know each other."

Extending their unbeaten streak to five games — four of them on the road — the Canadiens got solid performances from three of their standout rookies, Stephane Richer, Kjell Dahlin and Patrick Roy.

Richer and Dahlin each scored a goal and Roy kicked out 26 shots in goal as the Canadiens improved their record to 7-6-2 in the Adams Division following a 4-6-0 start.

"We dug a hole for us (in the beginning of the season when the team was floundering)," Robinson said. "Now we have to get out."

Richer scored his ninth goal of the season when he knocked in a rebound, following a shot by Chris Nilan, from the side of the net at 12:08 of the first period. Dahlin scored off a neat pass from Guy Carbonneau from in front of the net at 12:57 of the second period, his eighth goal of the season, to stake the Canadiens to a 2-0 lead.

Pat Flatley's seventh goal of the season off a rebound of his own shot at the 15:07 mark of the second period trimmed Montreal's lead to a goal.

But Mats Naslund clinched it for Montreal with a wrist shot from inside the blue line on a power play at 5:42 of the final period. Mark Hamway scored his fourth goal of the season on a power play with 37 seconds left in the game after the Islanders had pulled goalie Billy Smith.

"The last five games we've been playing our game," said Montreal defenseman Chris Chelios. "Now I think everybody knows what he has to do. Before we were playing selfishly and it didn't work.

"This (game) was a big test for us. We've been really disciplined, like last year."

Islander Coach Al Arbour thought his team played well enough to win and was generally happy with the Islanders' overall performance.

"I have no complaints about our team," he said. "But they (the Canadiens) capitalized around the net, and we didn't."

Islander goalie Billy Smith was not as kind in his assessment.

"I'm not happy, that's for sure," Smith said. "You're not going to beat any goalie from the blue line, like we tried to tonight. We have to get in close and stop shooting from the faceoff circle."

NHL Roundup

Capitals 5, Oliers 2

Playing a man down against Wayne Gretzky and associates didn't do Washington much harm, with Dave Christian getting two shorthanded goals and Mike Gartner adding third to set a club record.

The Capitals, who never trailed in the game, took a 1-0 lead just 2:09 into the contest when Alan Haworth scored his 11th goal of the season. The game was the ninth straight in which he has scored a goal, a league-leading streak.

Gartner's 11th of the season, at 10:12 of the opening period, made it 2-0.

Glenn Anderson's 14th brought Edmonton within a goal at 4:55 of the second period.

Christian got the first of his shorthanded goals at 2:30 of the third period. But Gretzky scored his 12th just 30 seconds later to make it 3-2.

A power-play goal by Bob Carpenter and Christian's second shorthanded tally closed out the scoring in the final period.

Blues 4, Maple Leafs 3

Toronto, which broke a 19-year-old team record by failing to win for the 12th straight time, dropped a heartbreaker when Joe Mullen scored at 2:57 of overtime.

The victory vaulted St. Louis over idle Chicago into first place in the Norris Division.

Rick Vaive had scored at 11:24 of the third period to give the Leafs 3-3 tie and send the game into overtime.

Ron Flockhart scored twice and Mark Hunter added a goal for the Blues.

Toronto scored on its third shot of the game to take a 1-0 lead at 2:24 of the first period when Dan Hodgson tapped in a rebound. Gary McAdam had the other goal for the Leafs.

Doctors remove usable organs from Flyer goalie Lindbergh

By ROBERT McG. THOMAS Jr.
N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — Pelle Lindbergh, the Philadelphia Flyer goaltender doctors declared brain dead shortly after his car crashed in Somerdale, N.J., early Sunday morning, died Tuesday afternoon following a five-hour operation to remove his organs for transplant.

Permission to remove the organs had been given by the Swedish-born Lindbergh's parents Monday night, but surgery was delayed to give them a last few hours at their son's bedside.

"The family wants to try to help others and make whatever little good can come of this terrible tragedy," said Dr. Edward Viner, the Flyers' team physician. Viner served as a spokesman for the family at a morning news conference at Kennedy Memorial Hospital in Stratford, N.J., where the 26-year-old Lindbergh had been kept alive on a respirator since the accident.

"They have accepted the finality of his condition," Viner said. "They want more private time with him."

To protect the privacy of patients who may receive the organs, doctors and hospital officials provided no information about the potential recipients, but said they hoped to match recipients with all of the transplantable organs: the heart, lungs, kidneys, corneas, liver and pancreas.

Because organs can be safely removed for transplant only while blood is still circulating and delivering oxygen to the organs, Lindbergh was kept on the respirator during the removal surgery.

Viner said the decision to authorize the organ donation was made Monday night after Lindbergh's father, Siegge Lindbergh, arrived from the family's home in Sweden and joined his wife, Anna Lisa, who had been on a vist to the United States at the time of the accident and who had maintained a vigil at her son's bedside.

Lindbergh's fiancee, Kerstin Pietzsch, served as a translator for the parents, according to Viner. "His fiancee indicated that they were very concerned that the organs be used to help someone else," he said.

He said that the Linberghs had also expressed dismay that blood tests conducted at the hospital's emergency room had shown an alcohol content of .24 percent, more than twice the .10 percent level that is defined as the threshold of intoxication by New Jersey law.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Yields on three-month Treasury securities were unchanged, while rates dipped slightly for six-month bills in Tuesday's weekly auction.

The Treasury Department sold $6.7 billion in three-month bills at an average discount rate of 7.21 percent, the same as last week. Another $6.7 billion was sold in six-month bills at an average discount rate of 7.23 percent, down from 7.3 percent last week.

The rates for three-month bills this week and last week was the lowest since Oct. 21, when they sold for 7.18 percent. The six-month bill rate was the lowest since a 7.05 percent average on Sept. 23.

Businessmen say job training act works in Basin

By MELLA McEWEN
Business/Oil Writer

Permian Basin businessmen, Tuesday, were informed of a program that provides trained employees at a low cost and low risk, while earning tax credits.

The Permian Basin Private Industry Council, overseen by the Permian Basin Regional Planning Commission, and covering 17 counties, held a luncheon Tuesday at Mission Country Club to inform private industry and the public about its various programs and how they work.

In 1983, President Reagan signed the Job Training Partnership Act, providing for federally-funded private industry councils that provided opportunities for job training for the economically disadvantaged. The program has since begun to include programs providing alternate education programs for high school drop outs and economic development.

"This is another federal give-away program," admitted Dave Cox, owner of Freight Damage Stores and president of the Council. "Let me tell you something. It's working," he continued.

The Council continues to fulfill its original purpose of providing job training for the economically disadvantaged. Once an applicant has been certified disadvantaged by the Council, two forms of training are provided: On-the-job and classroom. Participating employers are reimbursed 50 percent of the trainee's salary during training, and receives a tax credit after training of 50 percent for the first year's salary, up to $6,000, and 25 percent for the second year, up to $6,000 for as many employees as an employer uses through the program. If special books or training is needed during on-the-job training, the employer is reimbursed.

For classroom training, applicants are given an aptitude test, and if an employer's needs require a special class, the costs are also reimbursed. Schools participating — Midland College, Odessa College and Howard County Junior College — are reimbursed for training costs.

In all cases the applicants are carefully screened by PIC, and the final decision is made by the prospective employer.

"We use the program," said John Foster, general manager of KMID-TV. "And it's as simple as their slide presentation says. The paperwork's not too bad, an extra time sheet to fill out, and a job description that only takes a few minutes. And it works."

"A problem that we face in training is that our education system is not able to do all that it would like to do, and all that we'd like to see them do. So much of the populace is functionally illiterate, who can't read or write and have no business ethics, it's hard to place them in a position," Cox noted.

To combat this problem, the PIC council has begun an alternate learning center, a pilot program that Cox said the entire state will be watching.

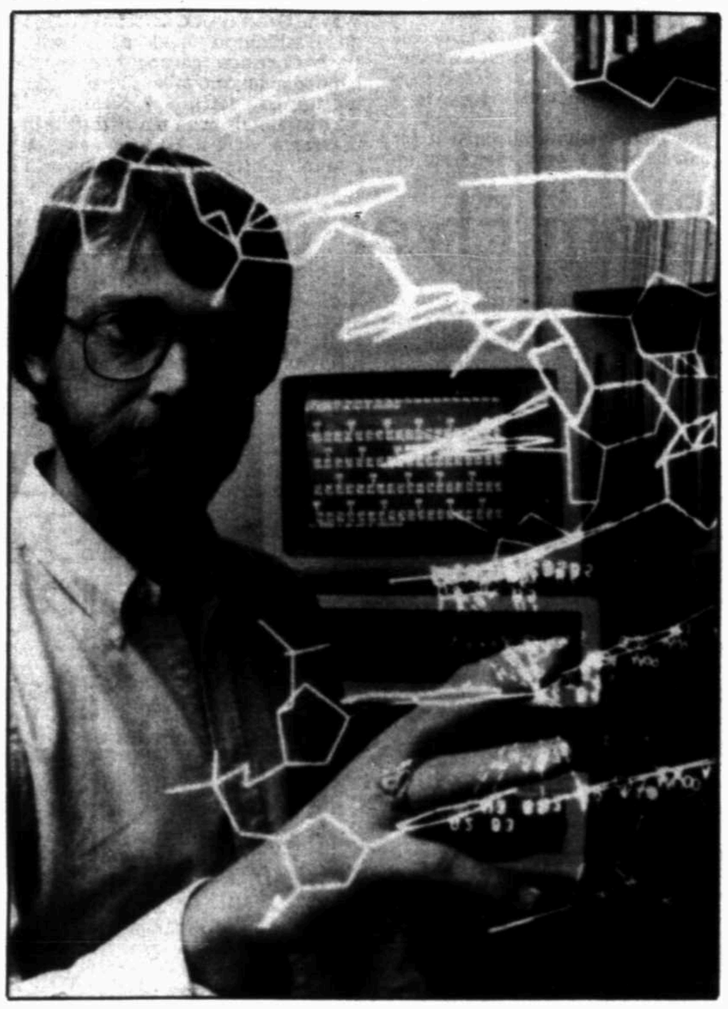

According to Joe Rutledge, chairman of PIC's Youth Committee, the program is located in InterFirst Bank, and the people don't think they're going to some dilapidated, run down area to a second hand program. It's a highly individualized program, he said, and if a student can demonstrate a mastery of a skill, he doesn't have to repeat it.

"If kids can't demonstrate mastery, they haven't learned it. And we keep that proof on file." The program teaches functional skills - how to get a job, filling out applications, and other job skills, as well as having a comprehensive competency program. "You can even take calculus in this program, if you want," Rutledge said, adding that if the program proves to be successful, as it seems to be, PIC is prepared to develop it in the rest of the 17 county area.

The youth program deals with ages 14-21, and has a trial job program for youth, setting up jobs where a person can work 250 hours, and 100 percent of the pay is funded, Rutledge said. "Forty percent of PIC funds go to youth programs," he said.

The PIC has just received a grant to establish an educational advisory commission, which would co-ordinate programs between the PIC and existing educational institutions, Rutledge announced. "It's a new relationship. We're trying to figure out how to use tax dollars together to help kids — the risk kids who have fallen through the cracks. We want to turn them around," Rutledge stated.

However, Cox noted, "If you don't develop new jobs, there's no need for training. Why train someone if there's no job to go to?" The Permian Basin, he said, needs to be more than oil, and the PIC has been instrumental in developing the Permian Basin Bid Resource Center.

Forecast shows economic indicators for largest Texas cities to improve

HOUSTON (AP) — Economic indicators for Texas' largest cities will improve with bank deposits increasing 9 percent to $40 billion in 1986, according to forecasts from Texas Commerce Bancshares Inc.

Texas will do better than the forecast if the national economy is stronger than expected and if oil prices improve.

The forecast will be too optimistic if tax reform legislation hinders the oil industry, if tax law changes discourage investment in the state and if protectionist moves trigger retaliation overseas, James L. Cochrane, chief economist for the Houston-based holding company, said Tuesday.

Houston would continue in 1986 its slow recovery from the energy recession and bring to 1.6 million the number of jobs in the area — matching the high-water mark at the peak of the oil boom in 1982.

"The early 1980s were an aberration," he said.

Construction will total $2.8 billion — $1.75 billion nonresidential and $1.05 billion residential, Texas Commerce said. The residential figure, however, is just one-third the amount during the 1982 peak.

Cochrane said the downtown office space glut has been cut in Houston to 20 percent, just four percentage points above the national average.

The holding company, the fourth-largest in the state, also forecasts a slight slowing of the rapidly expanding Dallas-Fort Worth economy, with employment up 3 percent but construction down 5 percent. Bank deposits should grow by 8.6 percent.

Austin's excellent economic growth will continue, Texas Commerce said, with employment up by 5 percent and bank deposits rising 15 percent. The construction boom, however, will abate with a 24 percent decrease.

San Antonio will continue its year-after-year "solid and steady ecomomic growth," Cochrane said.

El Paso "will generally be better in 1986 than in 1985, which itself has been a good year," the economist said.

The forecast also show the number of people holding full-time jobs in Texas next year will grow by about 200,000 — the same 3 percent rate of growth the state experienced in 1985.

"We think that will continue next year and continue throughout the decade," Cochrane said.

Most of the new jobs will occur in government, trade, service and finance areas, but not in manufacturing, he said, adding that nationally, job growth should be about 2.6 percent.

"One basic point is that Texas for a long time has had the enjoyment of doubling any national (economic) statistic," Cochrane said. "That's no longer going to be true, but we'll be 10 to 20 percent above the national level."

For the U.S. economy, Texas Commerce forecasts a 4 percent growth for 1986, with a tapering off in the last half of the year.

"I was told we're a little bit on the optimistic side," Cochrane said of his forecast. Inflation, he said, should rise slightly to about 5 percent.

American offers low Thanksgiving fares

From Staff Reports

American Airlines has announced a major pricing innovation called the 48-hour Thanksgiving Special which for the first time offers travel bargains of as little as $29 one-way during the Thanksgiving holiday weekend.

The special promotional fare, which is being offered for travel Nov. 28-30, is $29 one way for flights of 500 miles or less, $49 for flights of 501 to 1,500 miles, and $79 for flights or more than 1,500 miles. Tickets must be purchased on a roundtrip basis, are nonrefundable and are good for travel anywhere in American's system within the 48 contiguous states. Tickets must be purchased within three calendar days of making a reservation, but no later than midnight, Nov. 26.

Travel must originate any time on Thursday or Friday Nov. 28 or 29, and return trips must originate no later than noon Saturday, Nov. 30.

"This special fare offers travelers a very inexpensive way to visit friends or relatives for Thanksgiving or just get away during the holidays. At the same time it will help American stimulate traffic during a traditionally slow travel period," said Mike W. Gunn, the airline's senior vice president-passenger marketing.

Economists explore instablility risks

By PEGGY SIMPSON
Hearst Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — Leading economists, bankers and business executives disagreed Tuesday about the reasons for the perilous instability in the world's trading and exchange rates, but many of them agreed that urgent corrections are needed to avoid global financial catastrophe.

Alan Greenspan, a Republican who served as chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers under President Ford, pointed to two key risks to the economic stability.

First, he said, the attempt by one country after another, and one investor after another, around the world to diversify risk by investing in currencies other than the dollar may have the effect of actually increasing and spreading that risk.

"There also is the question," said Greenspan, "of whether the floating exchange rate has a true shock absorption built into it or, because the system worked by creating debt, we are only delaying the extent of the ultimate shock."

Greenspan spoke at a two-day conference on the international monetary situation sponsored by Rep. Jack Kemp, R-N.Y., and Sen. Bill Bradley, D-N.J., who drew an illustrious group of economic experts from this country, Japan and Europe.

That in itself dramatized the heightened apprehension about the dangers of current policy to the world financial system. Participants pointed out that the United States now is a major debtor nation, the Third World debt is an ominous time bomb and the floating exchange rate that was put in place in 1973 is increasingly criticized as part of the problem.

Some participants advocated a to return to a fixed exchange rate based on the gold standard. Others said it would be too risky, and in addition that the existence of a floating exchange has enabled the world to survive two severe oil shocks, four recessions and widely divergent economic policies within the industrialized world.

When Kemp and Lewis Lehrman, the Republican business leader who unsuccessfully ran for governor of New York in 1982, suggested that the world's monetary system worked better when it was on the gold standard. But Henry Kaufman, mamaging director of the New York investment house Salomon Brothers, said there were as many bankruptcies and instabilities under the gold standard as there are today.

The core question before the blue ribbon international gathering was what kind of adjustments might be made to the current system.

Alarm over the great volatility in the swings of money from one country to another and absorption of much of the industrialized capital into the United States, with its high interest rates, permeated the opening day of the two-day conference

Some analysts claimed that President Reagan's fiscal policies including the more than $200 billion in annual budget deficits are responsible for the global problems.

HNG InterNorth names new chairman after Segnar resigns

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — HNG InterNorth said today that Sam Segnar has resigned as chairman and chief executive officer of the energy company formed in July when InterNorth Inc. of Omaha merged with Houston Natural Gas.

The corporation also announced that it will keep its headquarters in Omaha while Houston will become the operating base for most of its major subsidiaries.

Kenneth L. Lay, 43, president and chief operating officer, is now president and chief executive officer. Willis A. Strauss, 63, former InterNorth chairman and a longtime employee, has been appointed chairman of the board.

In a statement released today by the company, Segnar, 58, said he "voluntarily resigned" from the leadership posts. The resignation was effectively immediately.

"I had announced some time ago that I would give up my position in January 1987 to become senior chairman once I felt the merger had been sufficiently digested," he said in the statement.

Although company officials had considered moving the corporate headquarters to Houston, Lay said the board of directors decided Monday to keep the headquarters in Omaha.

Strauss and Lay said layoffs are expected as the companies continue to pull their staffs together, but they said they could not specify how many employees will be affected.

Lay was elected president and chief operating officer when the companies merged. From 1984 until the merger, he was chairman, chief executive officer and director of Houston Natural Gas.

Lay is scheduled to become chairman and chief executive officer in January 1987, officials said.

Banks, businesses create lockbox network service

By SUSAN LINDSAY

Midlanders may soon be able to pay bills owed to national companies at their local bank as new technology allows businesses and banks to market a national lockbox network service.

Texas Commerce Bancshares and PNC Financial Corp. of Pittsburgh have announced a network called AccelaNet and the collection sites will be Dallas, Houston, Pittsburgh and Philadelphia.

Bank officials said AccelaNet is superior to the alternative of banks establishing their own processing centers in multiple cities, because under the former method, each processing center still has to deposit and clear remittances through a local bank. The new system allows for remittances collected at each site to be immediately processed for collection and all deposit information is electronically transmitted to the customer's lead bank.

Another company expanding its services is K MART. Beginning this fall, the chain will offer gift certificates to customers and local businesses and charitable organizations.

The gift certificates in $5, $10 and $25 increments can be purchased at any K Mart store. Also, customers and businesses can order gift certificates by mail from Gift Certificate Sales at K Mart Corp. International Headquarters in Troy, Mich. in donations up to $100.

Oklahoma City-based petroleum products distributor SIMONS PETROLEUM has opened a Midland office at 13 Kerry Road.

Roger Simons is owner of the company. Monty Pulliam is West Texas Division manager.

Another new business is STEAMATIC OF THE PERMIAN BASIN, which specializes in cleaning carpets, furniture and draperies, airduct purification, fire damage restoration and water damage restoration.

Owned by Greg Perez, the store is located at 1510 W. Montgomery.

Also recently opened is CLASSICAL GREENERY, which will have a ribbon cutting ceremony at 11:30 a.m. Friday at the store in Fairmont Park Shopping Center.

The store, owned and operated by Jody and Marybeth Hughes, sells tropical plants, potted plants, silk flowers and special arrangements. The store also leases and maintains plants.

Midland Memorial Hospital's Allison Cancer Center will present a plaque of appreciation to J.C. Small, owner of SALON UNIQUE, for the money the salon raised during its Cut-A-Thon Benefit.

Hospital president Ray Branson will present the award. He will also demonstrate the new patient education program which Salon Unique's proceeds enabled them to purchase.

CONROE — As part of its consolidation effort with George E. Failing Co. of Enid, Oklahoma, Skytop Brewster Corp. will place the entire inventory of its Conroe plant on the auction block Nov. 13 and 14 beginning at 10:00 am.

The two-day event will be the first in a series of sales to be held during the next few months which will liquidate the multi-million dollar inventory of Skytop Brewster products, parts and supplies now being stocked in Conroe.

The series of sales, which begin with the November event, will eventually see the entire inventory of both finished products and ancillary parts and supplies sold.

"This is a no minimum, no reservation sale," explains Tom Crouch, a spokesman for Omni Auctioneers International, Inc. of Dallas, the principal auctioneers for the Skytop Brewster sale. "We have been instructed to sell everything. This includes an NE-12 unitized rig package, five (142 ft X 1,250,000 # - 750,000 # and 1,000,000 #) masts, two telescoping masts (103 ft x 255,000 # and 112 ft x 300,000 #) as well as various elevating sub structures, drawworks and rotary tables."

For Holiday Festivities, Make It Buffet

The holiday season is a very special time of the year, with family and friends gathering to share in the festivities. While good cheer and merriment abound, for the one who's in charge of the meal, it's generally a hectic time with numerous last-minute dishes to prepare and serve.

This challenge can be easier, however, if you do a little planning and a lot of pre-preparation. Serving buffet style can also ease the pressure of this year's holiday meal. Let people serve themselves and pitch in to help the very young and old.

Turkey gravy, always stirred up in a last minute rush, can be made easier with advance preparation. Prepare the turkey broth ahead and assemble the seasonings and the corn starch for thickening. Making the gravy with corn starch eliminates the possibilities of lumps, and assures a smooth, light gravy without a floury taste.

The source of yet another trauma, that of mashing the potatoes, can be completely eliminated by serving stuffed potatoes instead. By using a quality potato like Washington Russets, they can be baked, whipped up and restuffed in advance and refrigerated. Washington Russet potatoes are excellent for baking because they are high in solids, which means that during the baking less water needs to be evaporated, resulting in a fluffier baked potato. As the turkey rests, to make carving easier, the potatoes can be returned to the oven to puff up and take on a golden tinge.

Think ahead for the vegetable dish by assembling the ingredients for the lemon sauce. Mix corn starch and seasonings in a saucepan, cover and put it aside ready and waiting. Squeeze the lemon; rinse, trim and divide the broccoli. You can even parboil it a minute and chill in ice water, to reduce last-minute cooking time.

Dessert is the pièce de résistance of many a holiday meal. This luscious Holiday Pear Tart is one that is certain to impress your guests. Shimmering under a clear glaze prepared with pear liquid and corn starch, juicy canned Bartlett pear halves are adorned with colorful kiwifruit slices and maraschino cherries. The base for the tart is made with a rich shortbread pastry which is baked in a decorative flan pan. There is no guesswork to confront the cook when using convenient canned Bartlett pears as they are always perfectly ripened, peeled and ready to use right from the can.

The best part of any holiday meal, some say, are the leftovers. One idea, offered here, is a take-off on the popular entree potatoes so popular in restaurants around the country. Serve fluffy baked Washington Russets topped with a sauce made with the leftover turkey and gravy. All that's needed to round out the menu is a salad of canned Bartlett pears filled with cranberry sauce accented with crunchy walnuts.

TURKEY

If turkey is frozen, thaw, following time and directions given. Remove thawed turkey from plastic wrap and neck and giblets from body cavities and prepare turkey broth. At roasting time, rinse turkey with cold water and pat dry; tuck legs into hock lock or under skin band, turn wing tips "akimbo" under back and skewer neck skin to back. Place turkey breast-side up on rack in shallow open roasting pan. Place a "tent" of foil loosely over turkey to prevent over-browning. Foil may be removed during the last half hour for a final browning.

Approximate Roasting Time in 325° F. Oven

Weight	Unstuffed	Stuffed
8 to 12 lbs.	3 to 4 hours	3½ to 4½ hours
12 to 16 lbs.	3½ to 4½ hours	4½ to 5½ hours
16 to 20 lbs.	4 to 5 hours	5½ to 6½ hours
20 to 24 lbs.	4½ to 5½ hours	6½ to 7 hours

Turkey is done when meat thermometer inserted into the thickest part of thigh, next to body, registers 180° F. to 185° F. Thermometer should not touch bone. Other tests for doneness: Turkey is ready if the leg joint moves freely when the drumstick is pressed, or if juices run clear when a long thin fork is inserted into thickest area and pressed. For easier carving, let turkey stand at room temperature for 20 to 30 minutes.

Tip: If turkey is stuffed and there is some leftover, remove stuffing from turkey and refrigerate separately.

HERB TURKEY GRAVY

- Turkey giblets and neck
- 10 cups water
- 3 onions, peeled, quartered
- 3 ribs celery, cut into sticks
- 3 carrots, peeled, cut into sticks
- 1 to 2 teaspoons salt
- 3 chicken-flavored bouillon cubes
- 3 bay leaves
- 1/3 cup corn starch
- 1 teaspoon dried tarragon leaves, crushed
- 1 cup dry white wine or water

Prepare broth up to one day ahead: In large saucepot, stir together turkey giblets and neck, water, onions, celery, carrots, salt, bouillon cubes and bay leaves. Bring to boil; reduce heat. Remove liver after 20 to 25 minutes; reserve for use as desired. Simmer broth 1 hour or until liquid is reduced by half. Drain broth; cover and chill. Reserve giblets and neck to use as desired. To make gravy, pour pan drippings left from roasted turkey into large measuring cup leaving only brown particles in pan. Allow to stand several minutes until fat drippings separate from turkey juices. Spoon off fat drippings; discard. Remove any congealed fat from refrigerated broth; discard. Add broth to juices to equal 4 cups. Return to roasting pan. In small bowl, stir together corn starch, tarragon and wine until smooth; add to roasting pan. Stirring constantly, bring to boil over medium heat, scraping up brown bits from bottom of pan; boil 1 minute. Makes about 5 cups.

MAKE-AHEAD STUFFED POTATOES

- 8 (about 10 oz. each) Washington Russet potatoes
- 1/2 to 3/4 cup butter or margarine, softened
- 1/2 to 1 cup milk
- 1/4 cup chopped chives
- 1/3 cup minced parsley, divided
- Salt and pepper to taste

Scrub potatoes, pierce with fork. Bake in 400° F. oven 50 to 60 minutes or until tender. Remove top of each potato. Scoop out inside; remove skin from top piece. Mash potatoes. Add butter; beat in enough milk until light and fluffy. Add chives and 2 tablespoons parsley; mix well. Season to taste with salt and pepper. Pipe mixture into potato shells using pastry bag and star tip, or spoon mixture into shells. If made ahead cover and refrigerate. Remove from refrigerator and let stand at room temperature at least 1 hour. Place on lightly greased baking sheet. Bake in 425° F. oven 20 to 25 minutes or until lightly browned. Sprinkle with parsley before serving. Makes 8 servings.

- 1/2 cup water
- 2 tablespoons lemon juice
- 1/4 teaspoon grated lemon rind
- 1 kiwifruit, peeled, thinly sliced and halved
- 4 maraschino cherries, halved

Prepare Shortbread Pastry. Drain pears; strain and reserve 1/2 cup liquid. In 1-quart saucepan, stir together sugar and corn starch. Gradually stir in reserved pear liquid and water until blended. Stirring constantly, bring to boil over medium heat and boil 1 minute. Stir in lemon juice and rind. Cool. Spread 1 cup of pear glaze on bottom of cooled pastry shell. Arrange pear halves on glaze; garnish with kiwifruit and cherries. Brush with remaining glaze. Refrigerate. Makes 8 to 10 servings.

Shortbread Pastry: In large bowl, stir together 1 cup unsifted flour, 3 tablespoons corn starch and 2 tablespoons sugar. With hands, work in 1/2 cup butter or margarine until dough holds together and forms a ball. Press pastry into bottom and sides of 9-inch fluted tart pan with removable bottom or 9-inch pie plate. Pierce with fork. Bake in 325° F. oven 20 to 25 minutes or until lightly browned. Cool before filling. Makes 1 (9-inch) crust.

Advance preparation eases work load

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

A middle-of-the-week dinner party can throw a cook into a tizzy, especially if that cook has a full-time job outside the home.

For a successful meal, do the marketing and as much prepping as possible the evening before.

This onion-mushroom soup and these fish fillets can be prepared in advance and finished off in the broiler just before dinner.

Cut the vegetables and refrigerate. A few cooked new potatoes dressed with butter and parsley can be added to the menu.

For dessert, mound chocolate ice cream into individual serving dishes, cover with fresh or frozen raspberries and lots of whipped cream.

Here is a slightly French-inspired dinner menu.

FRENCH ONION-MUSHROOM SOUP

¼ pound butter
4 large sweet white onions
3 cups mushrooms, sliced ¼ inch thick
6 cups beef broth (fresh or canned)
3 tablespoons dry sherry
6 slices French bread, ½ inch thick
4 ounces Gruyere cheese, shredded
⅓ cup grated Parmesan cheese

1. In a large, heavy saucepan, heat butter; saute onions for 5 minutes. Add mushrooms, cook 3 minutes, stirring constantly. Add beef broth and sherry. Simmer covered for 10 minutes.

2. Place bread on a baking sheet, toast both sides under broiler.

3. Puree half the soup in a blender and return to pot. Divide soup equally into 6 oven-proof bowls. Top each with 1 slice toast, 2 tablespoons Gruyere and 1 tablespoon Parmesan cheese. Place dishes under broiler until cheese is golden brown. Makes 6 servings.

FISH WITH MUSTARD SAUCE

2 pounds thick, white-fish fillets
salt and pepper
⅓ cup heavy cream
½ cup sour cream
2 tablespoons Dijon-style mustard, or to taste
2 tablespoons small capers, rinsed

1. Sprinkle fish with salt and pepper. Place in a buttered, shallow, broiler-proof pan, cover with buttered wax paper and bake in a 400-degree oven for 15 minutes. Remove wax paper and discard juices.

2. In a small bowl, combine heavy cream, sour cream, mustard and capers. Spread over fish in a thick layer and place pan under broiler until coating is lightly browned. Makes 6 servings.

FALL VEGETABLE STIR-FRY

1 tablespoon peanut oil
salt
2 cloves garlic, minced
1 teaspoon minced fresh ginger
2 cups broccoli flowerets
1 red pepper, cut in 1-inch pieces
1 yam or sweet potato, peeled and shredded
2 cups shredded Savoy cabbage
¼ cup roasted peanuts

In a wok or large skillet, heat oil. Sprinkle with salt. Add garlic and ginger and cook, stirring constantly for 2 minutes. Add broccoli and stir-fry 3 minutes. Add red pepper, sweet potato and Savoy cabbage. Stir-fry until vegetables are just tender. Sprinkle with peanuts. Makes 6 servings.

DEAR ABBY

Sixteen-year-old boy to be father

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I am a mature 15 (going on 16)-year-old girl in love with a guy I'll call Craig. He's 16. We went together for two months, then had to break up because his ex-girlfriend told him she was pregnant with his baby. I was really upset when we broke up because Craig and I really love each other.

He just started calling me again and comes to see me quite often, and I'm getting attached to him again. His girlfriend is due in March, so he's back with her for now, but he doesn't love her, he is only interested in the baby. He told me this himself and I believe him.

My mother thinks I should stop seeing him, but I love him so much that would be hard to do. Can he get custody of his baby after it's born? What are Craig's rights, if any? His girlfriend is 16. What should I do? I've been reading your column every day for three years and I trust you, Abby. Please help me. — CONFUSED IN PENNSYLVANIA

DEAR CONFUSED: Craig's first responsibility is to the young woman who is pregnant. Apparently he was "in love" with her prior to her becoming pregnant, and although his focus now is on the baby, he seems immature and unable to accept the responsibility for his actions. Craig needs counseling, and it is now available for unwed teen-age fathers.

Your mother is right. You should stop seeing Craig. I urge you to consult Planned Parenthood so you will not find yourself in the same position as Craig's ex-girlfriend. Craig needs to learn self-control and birth control. A 16-year-old boy can become a father, but until he is able to handle the responsibility of fatherhood, he is not yet a man.

DEAR ABBY: My husband and I are having an argument with friends about what constitutes a gift.

When we don't know the needs of certain people, we send money and let them buy what they want. This saves the trouble of exchanging the gift if it's the wrong size, color, or they already have that article.

Some friends say that money is not considered a gift — only material things are. Who is right? — GIFTS OF MONEY

DEAR GIFTS: You are. Money is indeed a gift — and a very welcome one. It can be a time-saver for the giver as well as the recipient. However, it is never proper to request money. If money is to be given, it should be the decision of the giver.

DEAR ABBY: I am a volunteer driver for home-delivered meals. I also drive disabled and elderly people to doctors' appointments.

Abby, you would be surprised how many homes and apartments are without a house number! How is one expected to find the correct address? More important, how, in the event of an emergency, will the paramedics, police or firemen find the house or apartment?

Thanks for running this. — FRANK C. HARTMANN, PALOS HILLS, ILL.

DEAR FRANK: Thanks for a potentially life-saving letter. And for all you pun haters, please notice I resisted the urge to work Frank's last name into this item. (You're welcome.)

(Getting married? Send for Abby's new, updated, expanded booklet, "How to Have a Lovely Wedding." Send your name and address clearly printed with a check or money order for $2.50 and a long, stamped (39 cents) self-addressed envelope to: Dear Abby, Wedding Booklet, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038.)

Carrots versatile vegetables

By BETTY WILSON
Hearst News Service

A bag of fresh carrots can be found in just about everyone's refrigerator, with good reason. A versatile, nutritional bargain, they are low in calories and an excellent source of vitamin A. Half a cup of cooked carrots supplies more than a full day's supply of vitamin A, with only 24 calories.

One pound of raw carrots equals about 3 servings cooked. Raw carrots make good snacks and add crunch to brown bag lunches, while cooked carrots add color and flavor to soups, stews and pot roasts. Grated carrots are good in salads and as sandwich fillings, and also keep baked breads and desserts moist.

Carrots may be boiled, steamed or stir-fried. Simmer whole carrots about 20 minutes and cut carrots for about 10 to 15 minutes.

Herbs and spices compliment the mild sweet carrot flavor. Try basil, caraway seed, curry powder, dill, ginger, mace, marjoram, mint, nutmeg and parsley.

For winter storage, carrots with ½-inch stems are the best buy. Carrots need high humidity. Store at 35 to 40 degrees, as carrots freeze at 30 degrees.

FINNISH CARROT CASSEROLE
2 cups cooked brown rice
1 cup skim milk
2½ cups shredded carrots
2 eggs
2 teaspoons brown sugar
¼ teaspoon nutmeg
Salt
2 tablespoons crushed cereal

Add cooked rice to milk in saucepan. Simmer uncovered until most of liquid is absorbed and mixture is creamy, about 10 minutes.

Mix remaining ingredients, except cereal crumbs, in a 2-quart casserole. Sprinkle the crumbs. Bake uncovered 50 minutes at 325 degrees. Serves 6.

SAUTED CARROTS WITH CUMIN
2 tablespoons margarine
1 tablespoon oil
2 pounds carrots, sliced diagonally
½ cup diced onion
1 teaspoon ground cumin
½ teaspoon salt
½ teaspoon sugar
2 tablespoons chopped parsley

Melt margarine and oil in a 10-inch skillet over medium heat. Add other ingredients, except parsley. Saute 1 minute. Reduce the heat and cover. Simmer 10 to 12 minutes, adding liquid if necessary. Serve sprinkled with parsley. Serves 6.

CARROT COOKIES
1 cup shortening
¾ cup sugar
1 cup mashed cooked carrots
1 egg
1 teaspoon vanilla
2 cups flour
2 teaspoons baking powder
½ teaspoon salt
Orange frosting (optional)

Cream shortening and sugar. Add carrots, egg and vanilla. Mix well. Sift dry ingredients together. Add to carrot mixture. Mix and drop batter by teaspoonfuls about 2 inches apart on greased baking sheet. Bake at 350 degrees for 15 minutes, or until they test done. Place cookies on racks to cool. While warm, spread with frosting if desired.

To make orange frosting: Combine juice and grated peel of half an orange with 1 tablespoon margarine and 1 cup confectioners' sugar. Blend smooth.

Makes 5 dozen cookies.

Gravy lump-less

Associated Press

Lump gravy will arrive at the table looking just fine if you give it a quick spin in the blender and reheat briefly, according to Family Circle magazine. In another food tip, the magazine says if you've oversalted the stew or the soup, all is not lost. Peel a raw potato, cut it in half and drop it into the pot. Simmer about 15 minutes. It points out that this does not work for tomato sauces.

Juice poured on fruit

Peel bananas and slice into cereal bowls. Pour a generous amount of orange juice over bananas. Serve at once.

Walnuts stimulate flavor of vegetarian diet

By DIANE SAVAGE
Copley News Service

There's an old English proverb that claims: "A woman, a dog and a walnut tree; the more you beat them, the better they be."

In years past, walnut growers believed that beating a tree's branches at harvest time would stimulate the development of more nuts for the coming year's harvest. It is now known that tree beating does not lead to an increase in walnut production and the practice has died out.

As for the rest of the proverb — well, after all, it's really not in anymore in the British Isles to beat one's dog, or even one's women friends.

The walnut has been around for a very long time: Shells and whole nuts have been unearthed in prehistoric sites dating back to the Iron Age — and they've even been found preserved intact in the ruins of Pompeii.

Today, the United States is the world's leading producer and exporter of walnuts, and almost all are grown in California. I prefer to buy my walnuts in the shell, and crack them by hand. I've purchased one too many packages of pre-cracked, but stale-tasting, walnuts. It takes a little more effort but, in the end, the flavor is worth the work.

HEARTY WALNUT LOAF

3 cups whole wheat bread crumbs, packed
1 cup ground walnuts, packed
1 cup finely chopped walnuts
¼ cup wheat germ
⅓ cup tomato juice
6 tbsps. melted butter or margarine
3 large onions, minced
4 cloves garlic, minced
2 eggs, well beaten
1½ cups shredded cheddar cheese, packed
⅓ cup chopped fresh parsley
2 tbsps. soy sauce
½ tsp. each salt and pepper
¼ tsp. ground thyme

To grind walnuts, place few at a time in container of blender and process with short bursts. Empty container each time before repeating with more nuts.

Preheat oven to 350 F. In large mixing bowl combine bread crumbs, ground nuts, chopped nuts, wheat germ and tomato juice. Set aside.

Melt butter in large skillet over medium heat. Add onion and garlic and saute until translucent but not browned. Add to mixture in bowl, tossing to blend well.

Stir in eggs, 1 cup of shredded cheese, parsley, soy sauce, salt, pepper and thyme. (Reserve remaining cheese.)

Press mixture into well-oiled loaf pan. Bake in preheated oven 1 hour. Sprinkle remaining cheese over top of loaf and bake 10 minutes longer, to melt cheese.

Serves 6 to 8.

WALDORF SALAD

¾ cup diced apple
Juice of 1 lemon
¾ cup diced celery
¾ cup coarsely chopped walnuts
½ cup mayonnaise
1 medium head red leaf lettuce

In salad bowl combine diced apple and lemon juice. Toss well to coat apples (to prevent browning).

Add celery, walnuts and mayonnaise, blending well.

Wash and dry lettuce; tear into bite-size pieces. Add to salad bowl and toss well. (Add a handful of raisins, if desired.) Serve immediately.

Serves 4.

Honeybees tidier

Copley News Service

An unkempt hive can mean the difference between life and death for honeybees, so U.S. Agricultural Research Service scientists have bred honeybees twice as tidy as others. The speed with which dead bees are removed from the hive is important to bees' health because infected bees can spread "brood disease."

Californians battle Iranian nuts

Copley News Service

The battle is over nuts from Iran — not the fanatical kind that might storm an embassy's walls to imprison its occupants but the small, hard-shell variety that hang in clusters on trees and are called pistachios.

The Great Pistachio War, if seen as a only a squabble between the California good guys and Iran's Ayatollah Khomeini, might seem funny, but it is a deadly serious episode with millions of dollars at stake.

And it involves allegations of unfair trade, illegal "dumping" and efforts to deceive consumers.

The pistachio nut had been around for quite some time before California farmers in the Central Valley decided 20 years ago to stick a bunch of the nut trees in the ground to see what might happen.

They did it knowing in advance that the crop was a pain in the neck to grow, that it took seven to 10 years for trees to mature and that they then would bear nuts only once every two years.

But like most things in California's hospitable agricultural climate, the trees grew and grew until finally they grew into an international controversy.

Until California came along, the pistachio game was dominated by Iran, which still turns out about 80 to 100 million pounds of the nuts a year. A few other Middle East nations were minor competitors.

California, which started with a mere 600 acres of pistachios in its first harvest in 1976, now has 30,900 acres producing and 17,000 more planted. The state recently displaced Turkey as the number two pistachio producer in the world and began dabbling in exports.

THE ISLAMIC Republic of Iran, however, remains the world's largest grower of pistachio nuts and, with its ongoing war with neighboring Iraq and other difficulties, it is in sore need of cash. Therefore, it came crashing back into the American marketplace in 1984 after several years of being almost shoved out by the combination of inner political turmoil, California's exploding production and an abhorrence by U.S. consumers of anything from Iran because of the seizure of 52 American hostages that began in November 1979 and lasted until January 1980.

In the see-saw worlds of economics and agriculture, it worked this way: Iran, because of its political problems, lost most of its U.S. market just as the big California crops were coming on line. Now they want back into the action. The marketplace became crowded with pistachios, prices fell and domestic growers fumed.

To stay competitive, the Iranians began dropping their prices at the end of last year.

"The market fell apart," observed Roger Owen, owner of The Squire's Choice mail-order nut business in Yardley, Pa. "Prices fell about 50 cents per pound."

The discomfort of competition ignited into outrage when state growers found that Iranian nuts were being sold in packages carrying such names as "Sun Ranch" and "Pride of California" to infer that they were grown domestically.

"People believed they were California nuts," said Steve Pasternoster, a self-employed farmer and grove manager in Terra Bella, Calif.

THAT WAS the final straw in moving toward federal help.

That practice ends Dec. 18, when imports must identify the country of origin.

"We feel the American consumer needs to know where the imports come from," said Kristin Wyatt of the California Pistachio Commission. "Then they know what they are tasting."

Alarmed California growers decided to attack on two other fronts:

— Federal officials are being asked to rule that the Iranian government is subsidizing the production and sale of pistachios in violation of international trade agreements.

— Hearings are under way on charges that Iran is "dumping" pistachios on the American market at prices lower than the nuts sell for even in Tehran.

Exact figures are not available, but agricultural sources report pistachios go for $2.80 a pound in Iran and are being sold as low as $1 a pound to American importers.

U.S. producers want the tariff on imports jacked up from the present one-half cent per pound to 50 cents per pound, something that would probably price Iranian nuts out of the marketplace, according to an importer.

"We can compete with anybody at fair prices," said Pasternoster. "They (Iran) are dumping their nuts. They come in much below our grower wholesale price."

"We would compete with them, one-on-one, any day of the year," said Ron Khachigian of Blackwell Farms in Kern County, Calif. "But their prices keep dropping every darn month."

The allegation of dumping is disputed by merchants who buy pistachios both at home and abroad.

"There is really not much of a margin of difference in the final cost when all things are weighed in on comparable products, things such as seven percent shrinkage and buying in container loads," said New York importer Rocco Damato, executive vice president of the A.L. Bazini Co., who hints that huge farming operations in California are being portrayed inaccurately in news accounts of the pistachio flap.

DAMATO, WHO makes money importing the foreign nuts, said, "This is not some poor dirt farmer against that madman Khomeini. They (the California growers) want it all. I don't blame them. I would, too."

Damato puts it in blunt terms: "California wines don't have the bouquet of French wines. Eating California almonds is like chewing wood. California pistachios? Well, taste? It doesn't have it."

Khachigian admits some "traditionalists" still prefer the familiar red-dyed nut from Iran. The dye covers unattractive splotches on the shell and has become visually affiliated by consumers, who feel they aren't getting real pistachios unless their fingers get stained in shelling them.

California's campaign for its own non-dyed ivory-colored "nut with the natural tan" has not clicked with some consumers.

In Pennsylvania, Owen, whose business deals in prime crops only, declared that the Iranian nut is "nicer" but that he won't buy them because of the political image.

While state growers claim they only want the U.S. government to enforce existing laws, statistics indicate that Iran's pistachio imports are not too far beyond where they were years ago.

CALIFORNIA DID not harvest its first substantial pistachio crop — 4.5 million pounds, worth $4.6 million — until 1976. That same year, some 19.9 million pounds of Iranian pistachio nuts were imported, with a declared value at the docks of $27.7 million, or at about $1.39 per pound.

But because of the extraordinary tensions between the United States and Iran during the first years of this decade over the 444-day American hostage crisis, Iranian imports plummeted sharply, although they never fully stopped.

By 1984, California harvested some 63.1 million pounds of the nuts, a crop worth almost $60 million. From the 1983 imported figure of 787,000 pounds — the lowest figure on recent records — Iranian shipments jumped to some 21.3 million pounds, worth about $40 million, or a U.S. government-figured price of $1.89 per pound.

"In 1984, Iranian imports quadrupled from 1983 levels ... allowing Iran to triple its market share," declared Sen. Pete Wilson, R-California, who called for the Commerce Department to assist the California growers.

Although the imports from Iran did quadruple, the total imported in 1984 remains less than the 24 million pounds imported in 1979 and only two million pounds more than were imported in 1976.

"They weren't dumping, then," complained Wyatt, the spokeswoman for the Pistachio Commission. "As long as it is a fair trade practice, the (state) industry doesn't have a problem competing with Iran."

Damato, in New York, believes the Californians acted too quickly. "The new Iranian crop is weak. Because of a frost and the war, it fell short. Prices have gone up dramatically, about 50 cents per pound, in the past four weeks. If California would have waited, the market would have straightened itself out."

Walnuts replace 'Snowballs'

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
AP Food Editor

For a good part of this century, good cooks were likely to make shaped cookies called Snowballs. They were concocted from butter and sugar, egg and flour and various seasonings.

The cookie dough was easy to make — quickly beaten together until smooth, then chilled if necessary, shaped into balls and baked. The cookies were called Snowballs because after the baking they were rolled in confectioners' sugar — as snowy looking as a cookie could be.

Now that American cooks are cutting back on sugar, I notice the cookies, good as ever, are often rolled in nuts before baking. No confectioners' sugar need be added.

ORANGE WALNUT TEA COOKIES

¼-pound stick butter, cut in 8 pats
¼ cup sugar
1 large egg, separated
Finely grated rind of 1 medium orange
Finely grated rind of medium lemon
1 teaspoon lemon juice
1 cup stirred all-purpose flour, spooned and leveled
1½ teaspoons water
1 cup (about 4 ounces) walnuts, finely chopped

In a medium bowl cream butter and sugar. Beat in egg yolk, orange rind, lemon rind and lemon juice. Gently and gradually beat in flour. Tightly cover bowl and chill until firm enough to handle.

Using a generous ½ tablespoon for each, shape dough into balls. In a small shallow bowl with a fork, beat egg white and water enough to blend. With a fork dip each ball into egg white mixture, then roll lightly in walnuts.

Bake, 1 inch apart, on greased cookie sheets in a preheated 325-degree oven until bottom of cookies are lightly browned — 20 to 25 minutes. With a wide metal spatula remove to wire racks to cool completely. Store in an airtight container.

Makes about 3 dozen.

Date bread has 'nutty' flavor

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
AP Food Editor

Linda West Eckhardt, author of the recently published "The New West Coast Cuisine" (Tarcher), has updated America's favorite Quick Date Bread.

It's easy to understand why this quick bread has been popular for years and years. It has distinctive, nutty and sweet flavor, stays moist and cuts well. Just the sort of loaf that is good to serve at snacktime with milk, tea or coffee. Or to offer at brunch instead of the usual pecan ring, Danish pastry or cinnamon buns.

Mrs. Eckhardt updates her date bread by using honey (instead of brown sugar) and rye flour (instead of whole wheat flour) with the usual white flour. If rye flour isn't on your kitchen shelves, don't hesitate to replace it with whole wheat flour instead. That's how we tested Mrs. Eckhardt's loaf and the result was very good.

The recipes in "The New West Coast Cuisine" are divided into attractively named chapters ranging from "The Soup Kitchen" to "The Pasta Soup Shop" to "The Bakery." The last chapter (from which the Quick Date Bread comes) holds other interesting recipes — from sesame tortillas, saffron challah and whole wheat breads to chocolate desserts.

As Mrs. Eckhardt writes, her recipes reflect "a marriage between the natural-foods movement and classic cooking techniques" which has produced a new generation of West Coast cooks.

Because "The New West Coast Cuisine" celebrates the interesting foods now available on the Coast there is a section on where these foods may be bought via mail order.

LINDA'S ECKHARDT'S QUICK DATE BREAD

1 cup chopped dates
1 cup chopped walnuts
¾ cup boiling water
2 large eggs
1 cup mild honey
1 tablespoon soft butter
¼ cup brandy
1 teaspoon vanilla
1 cup unbleached white flour
1 cup rye flour
½ teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon soda

Preheat oven to 350 degrees. Grease and flour one 9 by 5 by 3-inch loaf pan. Set aside.

Pour ¾ cup boiling water over dates. Set aside; don't drain.

Combine flours, salt and soda. Stir into egg mixture along with walnuts, just enough to blend.

Cool on a rack. Don't slice until bread is completely cool.

Store in a tin. Good plain or with orange Neufchatel cheese. From "The New West Coast Cuisine" by Linda West Eckhardt (Tarcher).

Kiwifruit tasty treat all year

Hearst News Service

Mark Houston, president of the California Kiwifruit Commission, says he hopes kiwis will go beyond their notoriety as a faddish, exotic fruit and become as accepted as apples or grapes.

But Houston concedes that some serious education efforts will be needed before kiwis are regarded as just another delicious, healthful treat. Many potential buyers are intimidated because they aren't sure how to select, ripen and store kiwis.

Actually, he says, there's nothing difficult about caring for kiwis, although they are a little unusual.

The kiwi you buy in stores, he says, may not be ripe, because kiwis are usually picked at the mature yet hard stage. You can tell by gently squeezing the fruit. If it gives slightly to gentle pressure, the kiwi is ripe. If it is still hard, don't be afraid to buy it — you can ripen it at home at an accelerated pace.

Just store the kiwi in a plastic bag or fruit ripening bowl along with other fruits such as apples or bananas, and keep it at room temperature.

While ripening, bananas and apples naturally emit a gas to which kiwi are highly sensitive. They react by getting ripe very fast themselves, which is why grocers are urged not to store kiwi next to apples or bananas.

Auto fumes have the same effect on kiwis, and shippers and handlers often use electric forklifts to protect the fruit from ripening too fast.

Properly handled, kiwis can be kept in peak condition by professionals for as long as eight months. You don't need to do that in your home, though, because kiwis are available all year around.

The California season lasts from October through May and then the New Zealand season coincides with the remaining months.

If the kiwi you bought is hard, and you don't want to use it right away, you can ripen it gradually in the refrigerator over several weeks.

On the other hand, if the kiwi in your market is slightly soft, it is ripe already, and it is ready to eat. You can store it for a few days, but not near other fruits. And if you smoke, keep away from the fruit bin. Kiwi reacts to cigarette smoke just as it does to the gas from ripening apples and bananas.

Whatever shape the kiwis were in when you bought them, do allow them to ripen before you eat them. The sweetness in kiwis comes late in the ripening process, and the difference of only a few days can almost double the tangy-sweet flavor.

Kiwis are quite nutritious, an excellent source of vitamin C and, to a lesser extent, other important vitamins and minerals. Kiwis are great for calorie counters, too. The average kiwi contains only 43 calories.

Here are a few tips from the experts at the California Kiwifruit Commission:

• Although kiwis may be used in salads, entrees or desserts, don't use them in a gelatin mold — the fruit contains an enzyme which prevents the gelatin from setting.

• Another enzyme causes composition changes when kiwi is used with milk. Kiwis are delicious with ice cream, but dishes combining ice cream and kiwis should be served immediately after the two are combined.

• Some glazes used to top fresh kiwi recipes will become somewhat watery if allowed to stand, so glazed desserts and the like should be served immediately.

• The enzymes in kiwi make a good meat tenderizer.

Kiwi desserts popular

Hearst News Service

Preparing kiwi is a snap. Just remove the fuzzy brown skin with a paring knife (or a carrot scraper) and then cut them in wedges, slice them or dice them. They cut into neat discs in a food processor and are small enough to fit handily down the feed tube.

Probably the most popular use of kiwi is as a dessert. Just peel and slice them and pour a little Triple Sec over them, and you have a refreshing light dessert in less than five minutes, perfect for the surprise or spur-of-the-moment guest, or for serving on that day when you come back exhausted from work.

Another easy kiwi dessert is to provide bowls of sour cream, and some brown sugar. Guests can dip kiwi wedges into the sour cream, then the brown sugar and pop the result into their mouths.

Or serve the kiwis with other fresh fruit, accompanied by crisp cookies. Other kiwi dessert ideas include:

KIWI TARTS

Spoon softened cream cheese into tiny baked tart shells (a handy way to do this is to use a pastry tube). Top with a slice of kiwi, drizzle with melted apple jelly and chill thoroughly.

KIWI ROMANOFF

Drizzle sliced kiwi with orange liqueur. Spoon into stemmed goblets and top with a dollop of whipped cream. Or layer kiwi with vanilla ice cream in a parfait glass. Serve immediately.

Kiwis also are wonderful with salads. They work well as part of a tossed green salad, in fresh fruit or in chicken or turkey salad, which should be served at once before the kiwi's enzyme action ruins the texture.

KIWI AND RICE SALAD

2 cups cold cooked rice
2 kiwi, pared, sliced and quartered
¼ cup each shopped green onion and celery
¼ cup each sliced ripe olives and radishes
1 hard-cooked egg, diced
Oil and Vinegar Dressing (recipe follows)
Kiwi slices for garnish
Spinach leaves

Combine the rice, sliced and quartered kiwi, onion, celery, olives, radishes and egg. Toss the mixture with Oil and Vinegar Dressing and chill for at least ½ hour. Serve on bed of spinach; garnish with kiwi slices. Serves 6.

Oil and Vinegar Dressing:

Combine 3 tablespoons each oil and red wine vinegar, ¼ teaspoon salt and ⅛ teaspoon each pepper and crushed basil. Makes about ⅓ cup.

KIWI DAIQUIRIS

1 kiwi, pared and quartered
2 or 3 teaspoons sugar
1 tablespoon lime juice
1 or 2 ounces rum (optional)
1 drop green food color (optional)
8 ice cubes, crushed
2 kiwi slices

Puree all ingredients except kiwi slices in blender or food processor until smooth. Pour into 2 stemmed glasses. Garnish edge of each glass with kiwi slice. Serves 2.

KIWI GELATO

1 cup water
½ cup sugar
½ cup light corn syrup
3 or 4 kiwis, pared
5 teaspoons lemon or lime juice
¼ teaspoon grated lemon or lime zest

Combine the water, sugar and corn syrup in a saucepan. Cook and stir for 2 minutes or until the sugar is dissolved. Puree the kiwi in a food processor or blender. Add lemon juice, lemon peel and sugar mixture.

Pour the mixture into a shallow metal pan and freeze for 1 hour or until firm but not solid. Spoon the mixture into a chilled bowl and beat with electric mixer until light and fluffy; return to pan. Return to freezer; freeze about 2 hours or until firm enough to scoop. Makes about 2½ cups.

TIP: Kiwi Gelato can be frozen in an ice cream freezer according to manufacturer's directions.

'Dog bones' yield excellent homemade soup

By MERLE ELLIS

"Do you have any dog bones?" The question often was asked in the market where I learned my trade. My dad had a standard response, "No, ma'am, but I think I might be able to find some bones for your dog."

We used to give them away back in those days, and many, if not most of them, I would bet, went to make soup stock. You could feed a family for next to nothing with a few "dog bones." They were the basis for all sorts of inexpensive and wonderfully nutritious soups. They also were essential for making marvelous sauces back in the days when people didn't mind spending more than 20 minutes in the kitchen.

They don't give away "bones for the dog" these days. In fact, bones of any kind are almost obsolete. One major supermarket chain has announced that in the not-too-distant future all of the meat in their meat case will be boneless. Too bad! What is my dog going to do? What about my stock pot? How will I ever make a sauce? No good kitchen can function without a supply of stock.

Fortunately, there still are a few cuts of meat in most markets that contain enough bones to make a good stock. Bone-in chuck roast is one. Chuck roast with the bone in is one of the best buys in any market. You can use the meat for all kinds of dishes from pot roast to stew to chicken-fried steak — and save the bones for stock. If it isn't available in the market where you shop, I would seriously consider shopping somewhere else.

Beef shank, even without the bone, is perfect for stock. If you can find it with the bone in, so much the better. Veal shank and veal breast still usually have bones and, of course, there is chicken from which to make stock.

What would we do without chicken stock? Recent research conducted by the Mayo Clinic confirms what every Jewish mother, every Chinese mother and, probably, every other mother has always known — chicken soup is good for what ails you. It helps soothe the jangled nerves that may cause migraines, and may be the only sure cure for the common cold.

Maybe stock for soups and sauces can be a time-consuming project, but it doesn't have to be. If you will look under the cupboard or in the dark recesses of some closet somewhere you very probably will discover a pressure cooker that somebody gave you as a gift. They were very big a generation ago, almost everybody's grandmother gave them one, and they still are one of the most versatile time-saving utensils in any kitchen. But, like bones, they seem to be becoming obsolete. Too bad.

Many people approach a pressure cooker, if at all, with trepidation. They have heard horror stories from days gone by of split pea soup on the ceiling and such. But fears are without formation. Today's modern pressure cookers are as safe as any piece of kitchen equipment. All you have to do is follow instructions. And they are fast. With a pressure cooker you can make a pot of stock that would take all day by conventional methods in just over half an hour — if you can find some bones.

If you can't, you might check the frozen food case of your local supermarket. You may be lucky and find some San Francisco Stocks — brown stock, white stock, fish stock and demi-glace — made in the classic French tradition by Pat Shannon, an enterprising cook from San Rafael, Calif. They are fantastic, a little more expensive than making your own, but great to have on hand. They are not widely distributed yet but, hopefully, they will be before all of the dog bones disappear.

QUICK STOCK

2 to 3 pounds bones (beef, veal or chicken, with a little meat attached)
2 carrots, cut in hunks
2 stalks celery, cut in hunks
1 onion, cut in quarters, each quarter stuck with 1 whole clove
1 bay leaf
6 peppercorns
1 teaspoon thyme
1 small bunch parsley
Water

Combine all ingredients in a pressure cooker. Cover with water. Be sure the cooker is no more than ¾ full. Close cover securely. Place pressure regulator on vent pipe. Place cooker over high heat until pressure regulator jiggles. Reduce heat to medium and cook for 20 to 30 minutes. Remove from heat, let pressure drop of its own accord. Remove cover and strain stock. Stock will keep about one week in the refrigerator or 6 months or more in the freezer.

NOTE: When making beef stock, you'll get a more desirable brown color if you brown the bones in a hot oven before proceeding.

Homemade goodies available by mail order

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — A few years ago the only way to buy many homemade foods was to travel to some remote American farmhouse or suburban cottage hundreds of miles away. Even city dwellers, who can buy almost anything else in their shops, cannot find these regional favorites. Thanks to an impressive array of delivery systems, however, such high-quality foods are now as near at hand as the telephone or the mailbox.

Pleasant Valley Dairy cheeses from Ferndale, Wash., for example, are sold only at the back door of the farmhouse, 90 miles north of Seattle, and by mail. Summerfield Farm veal, which is raised in Boyce, Va., is not available in retail shops but can be ordered by telephone or letter. The only way to buy the Custard Company's coffeecake and brownies, besides using mail order, is to visit the Farm Women's Market in Bethesda, Md., on Saturday morning. Without mail order, it would take a trip to Seattle to get Mother Sperry's fine plum puddings and a pilgrimage to Petoskey, Mich., to find the old-fashioned, spicy liver sausage that American Spoon Foods sells.

Since these unusual products make perfect gifts, especially for the hard-to-please, they are almost tailor-made for Christmas.

Items for gift-giving this holiday season were ordered from more than 30 of the many purveyors of mail-order foods. Ten were eliminated because the food did not arrive at the time promised, did not arrive at all or, when it came, did not meet the quality standards established for inclusion on the list that follows.

Size does not appear to bear directly on the quality of a mail order house, its product or its service. Often, however, the smallest companies are the most caring and easiest to deal with when placing the order or when registering a complaint: They are anxious to please.

When things do go awry, consumers can take recourse through a Federal Trade Commission regulation — if, that is, the order was placed and paid for by mail or if the order was placed by telephone and paid for by mail. (Legislation passed this year in New York State extends legal protection to consumers who place telephone orders to companies doing business in the state.)

For mail-order companies based in the United States, the law requires either delivery of merchandise within 30 days of the order's receipt or an explanation of the delays. The supplier can take longer than 30 days if the allowable response time is stated conspicuously in advertisements. It is most important, then, to keep a record of orders placed, especially the date and method of payment.

If a company is not heard from within 30 days of an order, call or write and ask for an explanation. If the explanation is not satisfactory, you have the right to cancel your order and the company is supposed to refund your money in full. If the company fails to comply, report it to the Better Business Bureau, the Federal Trade Commission or Mail Order Action Line, c-o DMA, 6 East 43d Street, New York, N.Y. 10017.

The Federal Trade Commission has leaflets on mail-order shopping. To receive free copies, write to Public Reference Branch, F.T.C., Sixth Street and Pennsylvania Avenue NW, Washington, D.C. 20580.

The bidding:

1 ♠	Pass	2 ♠	4 ♠
4 ♠	Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Five of ♠.

Top level bridge is exhausting because it requires 9-10 hours of total concentration each day. On this hand, which cropped up some years ago in the Trials to select the U.S. Team for the world championship, both defenders fell asleep on a play that they would consider automatic if they were fresh.

The auction in the two rooms was similar. Despite vigorous competition from East, the South hand was too strong distributionally to be shut out of the bidding after North had supported spades.

In both rooms the opening lead was the five of clubs. Both Easts won the king and cashed the ace, on which West discarded the four of diamonds, then continued with a third club. In both rooms South sluffed the king of hearts. No matter what East did next, declarer was in command. He would win any return and make the rest of the tricks.

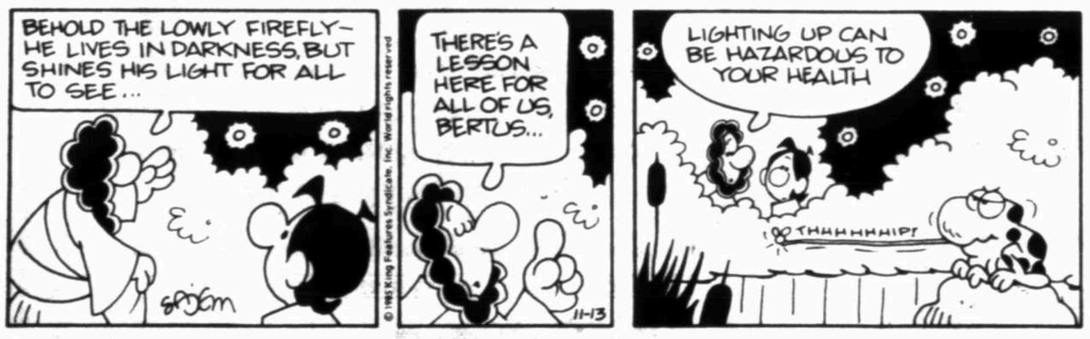

We are sure that, by now, our eagle-eyed readers are eager to stake their claim in the next Trials. All of you have no doubt realized that East missed an easy opportunity to defeat the contract.

After winning the second club, East should cash the ace of hearts. That not only completes the defensive book, it also allows West to signal how he would like the defense to continue. If West does not have a trump that is high enough to overruff declarer but has a heart trick (he has already denied a diamond card), he can advise partner of that by following to the ace of hearts with a high spot-card. Here, however, when South follows to the heart with the king and West contributes the three, it is easy for East to revert to clubs, and West scores the setting trick by overruffing with the king of spades.

Jerry Lee Lewis, after stomach surgery, must put damper on rock'n'roll show

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — Singer Jerry Lee Lewis, one-third of his stomach gone because of ulcer surgery, will have to tone down his rock 'n' roll act for a while, an associate says.

"If I have to put a hook on him on stage and drag him off after a certain length of time, I'll do it," said J.W. Whitten, the 50-year-old singer's road manager.

Lewis, known for his energetic performances and hectic private life, was in satisfactory condition Tuesday after a four-hour operation at Methodist Hospital.

Dr. Gerald Liberman, the singer's physician, said the surgery removed the lower third of Lewis' stomach "which included a very large ulcer."

"He had no problems during the procedure," Liberman said.

He said Lewis will be released from the hospital in about two weeks.

Sarah McCarver, the singer's mother-in-law, said Monday that doctors gave Lewis a 50-50 chance of surviving the operation.

"That was a misunderstanding," Liberman said.

He said Lewis lost "a significant amount" of blood because of the ulcer but was not in imminent danger of dying. Lewis was admitted to the hospital Friday.

He has suffered from ulcers for several years and was hospitalized for two months in 1981 because of a torn stomach lining. Relatives said he nearly died during surgery to repair that tear.

Lewis, a singer and piano player, began his recording career in Memphis in the 1950s and is known for such songs as "Whole Lotta Shakin' Goin' On" and "Great Balls of Fire."

Since 1975, he has engaged in a running battle with the Internal Revenue Service, and Whitten said the singer has been under a great deal of stress, partly because of his tax problems.

Lewis was acquitted in federal court last year on charges of income tax evasion, but the IRS still has liens against him totaling $1.7 million.

Lewis is married to his sixth wife, Kerrie, 22.

His fifth wife, Shawn, 21, died of a drug overdose in 1983, less than a year before his latest marriage, and his fourth wife, Jaren, 39, drowned in a swimming accident while suing him for divorce in 1982.

In 1957, Lewis married a 13-year-old cousin, Myra, who divorced him 13 years later saying he drank too much and ran around with other women.

Whitten said Lewis' next scheduled performance is at a fund-raiser for the March of Dimes in Memphis on Dec. 17.

Vasquez Rana

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Mexican newspaper publisher has been selected to purchase United Press International in an agreement with the news service, the Wire Service Guild and a committee of UPI's key creditors.

The agreement, in which publisher Mario Vazquez Rana joined forces with a rival bidder, Houston real-estate developer Joe Russo, is subject to approval by a bankruptcy judge, UPI Chairman Luis Nogales said in announcing the agreement at a news conference Tuesday.

Nogales said Russo had dropped his separate bid to buy UPI and would be a minority partner with Vazquez Rana in the company renamed New UPI Inc. Specific terms of the agreement were still being worked out, Nogales said, although UPI's financial advisers said the deal would total more than $40 million.

Vazquez Rana, 53, a self-described "international man" who owns Mexico's largest group of newspapers as well as major business and industrial interests, said he had wanted to buy UPI for three years.

"We are sure we are going to run UPI in a good way," he said in describing the partnership that began "by chance" when he and Russo, 53, met in a UPI hallway on Monday.

"Their partnership combines the resources, the newspaper experience and international stature of Mr. Vazquez with the resources and strong organizational skills of Mr. Russo and his companies," Nogales said.

Vazquez Rana, speaking in Spanish through an interpreter, promised the wire service would remain in the United States.

NEW YORK (AP) — TV talk show host Phil Donahue says he regrets now that he spanked his five children.

"There's an unbecoming attitude we have about kids," he said in an interview in the current issue of Ladies' Home Journal, "that they're really kind of dumb, and we've got to hit them like little jackasses in order to shape them into responsible people."

By the time his four sons were in high school, he said, he couldn't hit them any more "because they were all bigger than me. So I spent a lot of time screaming."

Donahue said he controlled teen-age drug and alcohol abuse in his home by installing a pool table, welcoming his sons' friends and allowing beer drinking.

"A minimum drinking age of 21 sets a totally unrealistic expectation, I think, and consigns millions of young people to breaking the law," he said. "The problem is that when you drop it to 18, highway deaths go up."

STANFORD, Calif. (AP) — Graduating seniors at Stanford University, who last year recruited New York Gov. Mario Cuomo to deliver their graduation address, want Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev this year.

The list of nominees also includes President Reagan; comedian Bill Cosby; former Soviet foreign minister Andrei Gromyko; Bishop Desmond Tutu of South Africa; and Linus Pauling, emeritus professor of chemistry at Stanford who has won two Nobel prizes.

By Tuesday, more than 200 seniors already had signed petitions endorsing Gorbachev as their choice and more names are added every day, said Mark Fleischauer, an organizer of the "Draft Gorbachev" movement.

Despite the list of student recommendations, university President Donald Kennedy gets the final choice.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Fourteen-time Grammy winner Stevie Wonder, electric guitar pioneer Les Paul and heavy metal vitruoso Eddie Van Halen will be the first musicians immortalized in the "Rock Walk," a Hollywood-style pantheon of rock 'n' roll immortals.

The walk, set aside for cement handprints and signatures, was to be unveiled today at the Guitar Center, a musical instrument store and Sunset Boulevard fixture for 21 years, officials said.

Quick meals available for cooks in a hurry

By MARIAN BURROS
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Ten years ago a good buy at the grocery store was at the top of most shopping lists. Today it seems to have taken a back seat to convenience.

More and more these days people are simply unable or unwilling to devote hours to the daily preparation of food. This is confirmed not only by the ever-growing popularity of items such as precooked frozen foods and carryout dishes but also by several recent surveys indicating that the quicker food can be put on the table, the better.

Doreen Mott, associate director for consumer services at the Good Housekeeping Institute, said, "We used to feature a 30-minute dish. Now it's a 30-minute menu and people keep writing to ask, 'Could you get it down to 20 minutes?' "

It's hardly surprising then that, according to the Market Research Corporation of America, the number of shops selling exclusively prepared foods is rising steadily, or that consumption of so-called gourmet frozen dinners such as Armour's Dinner Classics, Swanson's Le Menu, Benihana Frozen Dinners and Stouffer's Lean Cuisine has almost quadrupled in the last year, to 140 million individual servings.

NOR IS IT surprising that a nationwide survey conducted earlier this year for the Food Marketing Institute showed that fewer supermarket shoppers are using coupons, seeking advertised specials or taking the time to comparison-shop. Nowadays, the survey showed, a choice of market is often based on the speed of the checkout counters.

In addition, many shoppers indicated they will buy packaged meat rather than take the time to request a different cut, or will patronize a convenience store rather than a less expensive supermarket, because it is quicker.

So where does this emphasis on speed leave the cook who still wants to put fresh, home-cooked food on the table? Can it be done in 30 minutes a night, or, better still, in 20 minutes?

The answer, based on a week's worth of experimentation in the kitchen, is yes, it is possible to put a first-rate meal on the table in 20 minutes, and it can be done without resorting to frozen dinners or, unless you want to include a prepared dessert, carryout food.

There are, however, some requirements.

The first is a reliance on others to do some of the preparation. That doesn't mean hiring a kitchen helper; it means purchasing ingredients that are partly prepared and finishing them yourself. This method of food preparation has even been given a name: step cooking.

IN THE MEAT department of most markets, for instance, beef is prepacked as kebabs as well as steaks and, of course, is ground; chicken comes either as boneless breasts or nuggets, bite-size pieces of white meat; turkey breast comes boneless, in slices or ground; lamb is cut as chops and veal is scalloped.

Most fish is sold as fillets or steaks. Some, like shrimp and crab, come already cooked. None of these ingredients take more than 15 minutes to cook.

As for starches, fresh pasta, thin and small dried pasta, rice, bulgur and small new potatoes, all cook in less than 20 minutes.

Raw and blanched vegetables are readily available by the pound at salad bars in fruit and vegetable markets, supermarkets, delicatessens, even some fast-food restaurants. These can not only be used for salads but also incorporated into dozens of cooked dishes that include enough protein to make a substantial main dish.

FOR THOSE WHO are sulfite-sensitive, it is important to ascertain whether the store uses the preservative to keep the produce fresh; a number of salad bars now display signs saying "no sulfites."

Fresh garlic packed in oil is also available in the refrigerator case at many supermarkets; some of these preparations contain salt or preservatives, so the label should be checked carefully.

There are a few good-quality canned products that are indispensable, too: tomatoes, tomato puree and tomato paste; canned corn and canned beans (here again, the label should be checked for preservatives).

Also useful are frozen chicken and beef stock bases as well as canned chicken soup; in the natural-food section of many supermarkets and in natural-food stores, varieties of these are available that contain no salt, sugar or monosodium glutamate.

ANOTHER REQUIREMENT is that your kitchen be stocked with certain utensils. The food processor is one; nothing can chop or slice vegetables as quickly. It does not need to be full size; the newer, less expensive miniprocessors are adequate for a family of two or three.

MISD OKs search for two drug counselors

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

The Midland Independent School District moved one step closer to implementing a district-wide chemical abuse program Tuesday, when trustees voted unanimously to conduct a nationwide search for two counselors to provide educational activities that will prevent substance abuse before it occurs.

Trustees said, however, that the implementation of the program may be delayed if the search does not produce qualified applicants.

Trustees in August voted to hire at least two drug counselors to work with students who have experienced substance abuse problems in all MISD schools. The counselors were to be hired as soon as possible and be in place by the second semester.

The counselors, according to Trustee Ron Britton, will be charged with providing educational activities designed to prevent substance abuse before it occurs.

Britton has said MISD trustees "acknowledge that there is a drug problem in our community that impacts our students at all levels. We strongly encourage the authorities to strictly enforce all existing laws and ordinances dealing with the sale and distribution of drugs and alcohol."

He proposed that the district act as quickly as possible to hire the counselors to implement the program.

"I'm feeling a sense of delay or the community feels we're delaying," said MISD Superintendent Dr. Joseph P. Baressi, "but I don't want to act so fast that we don't hire the best qualified person for the job."

He impressed upon trustees the importance of maintaining "continuity within the system."

"If we don't feel comfortable with the applicants, we may be better off waiting until next school year," he said.

Trustee Fred Newman, concerned that MISD might be "creating another bureaucratic position," said "maybe we should be looking at someone who is not only well-versed in behavioral problems, but also is experienced in treating substance abusers.

"The first thing you have to do is identify who the user is," he said, "and all the knowledge, and all the books, and all the psychology won't help you do that."

But Baressi argued that MISD will not "operate a hospital. We're not going to treat anybody. Our responsibility will be in the areas of intervention and referral."

He said applicants must hold a master's degree in psychology, counseling or related field and demonstrate knowledge in chemical dependency intervention. He or she also must possess previous public school and chemical/substance abuse program experience.

Baressi said the salary for the 11-month position will be based upon the training and experience of the individuals selected.

He said the counselors will serve a three-fold purpose, in that they will oversee areas of consultation, direct services and indirect services.

As consultants, the counselors will act as resources to teachers concerned about the student use of chemicals and to parents concerned about their child's use of chemicals. They also will assist central office staff in preparing curriculum on chemical abuse.

In addition, both will provide short-term one-to-one counseling to identify chemical abuse problems; arrange for intervention and referrals of students for further evaluation and treatment; provide peer group support in each building when warranted; make parent, referral and follow-up contacts; plan for student re-enty into school programs and follow-up contact after treatment; maintain confidential student records; and establish group counseling for students, parents and staff.

Finally, the counselors will serve as a liaison with other community agencies concerned with chemical abuse; serve as the district's resource persons on information released to the public through the media; assist in the evaluation of the chemical abuse program; and oversee the activities of the building level support teams, Baressi said.

Program will help prevent sexual abuse

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

The Midland Independent School District is one of 30 Texas school districts selected to participate in a pilot program designed to educate school-aged children in protecting themselves against sexual abuse, the board learned at its Tuesday meeting.

Gov. Mark White in June signed into law a bill mandating the training of educators "to recognize and respond to signs of abuse or neglect in students." The law went into effect this school year.

In view of the law, the Texas Congress of Parents and Teachers applied for and was subsequently awarded a grant from the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services to implement a children's anti-victimization project.

The personal Safety Protection Project will educate school-aged children in protecting themselves against sexual abuse.

Texas PTA will implement the project through the coordination of public school administrators and principals, teachers and counselors and parent participation.

Central to the instruction will be the development of a three-person team (principal, teacher and PTA facilitator) designed to:

— Provide specific personal safety skills in the classroom;

— Train and orient school personnel in the PSPP curriculum guide; and — Train and orient parents of the children who are receiving the instruction about the curriculum itself and provide follow-up reinforcement techniques to be used in the home.

Midland City Council PTA President Geriann Green said the grant will cover all costs of implementing the program.

Republican woman backs political caucus

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Assistant City Editor

When Doris Wallis Towne joined the Republican Party, she said it was the leader in advocating women's issues, including equal rights and pro-choice.

Today, the parties have flip-flopped but Ms. Towne continues to voice her support of women's issues. She still is a member of the Republican Party, but she is advocating political action through the Women's Political Caucus, a non-partisan organization.

During a talk Tuesday night at the Midland Women's Political Caucus meeting in RepublicBank First National, Ms. Towne spelled out the caucus' three primary issues: support of the Equal Rights Amendment, pro-choice and child care. Another primary function is to educate women about the political process, and Ms. Towne described how that knowledge has helped in getting legislation passed that has been toned down from what the radical arms of both political parties had proposed.

For many years, Ms. Towne said she thought she could fight the battle alone. But after reading reports about the "hairy-legged women" attending the National Women's Political Caucus national convention in San Antonio, "I decided it was time I couldn't get it done alone."

By staying non-partisan, however, it also meant not supporting either presidential ticket in the 1984 election, she said. Although pleased to see the Democratic Party select a women as its vice presidential candidate, Ms. Towne said she was also disappointed it wasn't the Republican Party which took that first step.

"The Republican Party has had many women who have worked their way up and all had the ability to be vice president," she said.

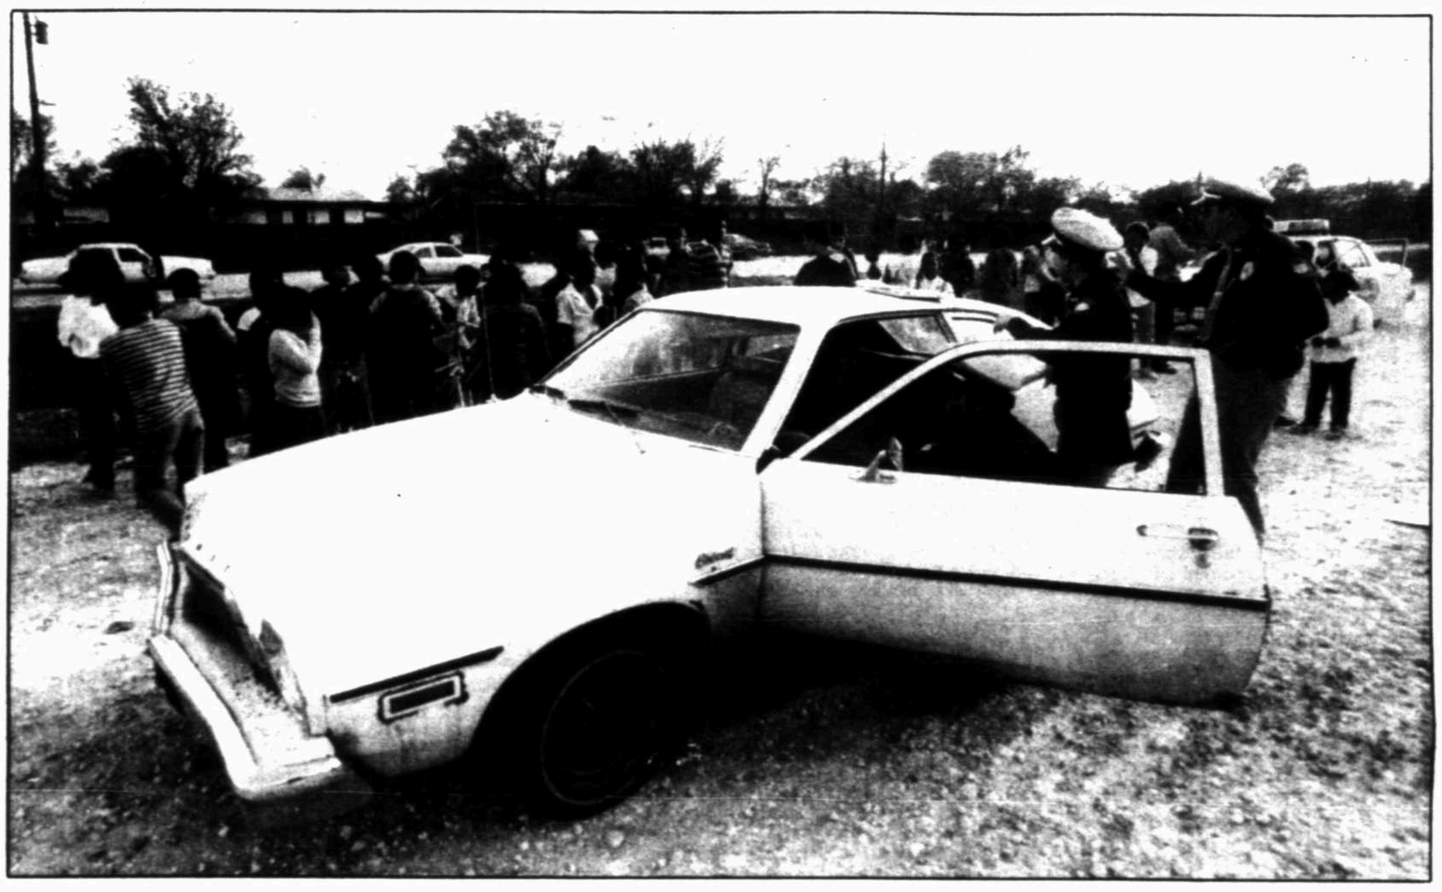

Ms. Towne has been a vocal opponent of the pro-life group and recalled one political convention where the "usual person stood up to put forth the amendment to forbid abortions. I stood up and gave a unity speech. I asked why are we fighting the same battles? Why not have adequate child care and medical care?"

On a roll call vote, the amendment was defeated, she said. "The Harris County delegation doesn't want to talk about it, nor does (State Republican Chairman) George Strake."

The issues of abortion and equal rights boil down to economic issues, she said. "Until society learns that a woman is in control of her own body, that 3 percent of birth control doesn't work and most men won't agree to abstinence, I am tired of the other side referring to itself as 'pro-life.' I also am pro-life and (for the) quality of life.

"I spent five years teaching mentally retarded children," said Ms. Towne.

Car chase

Midland police officers check a Pinto after a lengthy Tuesday afternoon car chase ended about 4:30 p.m. at Scharbauer Draw near Benton. The Pinto's occupants, a 22-year-old Midland man and a 39-year-old Midland woman, were expected to be charged today with evading arrest and theft. The chase began when police spotted the car, which resembled one used earlier Tuesday afternoon in the theft of 24 pairs of children's jeans from Betty's Boutique in San Miguel Square. The jeans were valued at $600, police said.

Ex-legislator addresses Odessa women's group

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — The first black woman ever elected to the Texas Legislature from Dallas County Tuesday night was in Odessa to address a meeting of the Permian Basin Women's Political Caucus at the Holiday Inn Parkway.

Eddie Bernice Johnson told about 25 persons, including three men, attending the meeting that, while women represent a voting majority in the country, women do not represent a majority in any political body.

"The ERA thrust is not with us at this time," she said when asked about the current status of the equal rights amendment, but she noted that "our numbers are too great and attitudes too positive" for ERA to simply fade away. But, she added, "We will never be where we were."

Asked about President Reagan's support of women's rights, she said the president has, in effect, paid lip service to the issues, but his actions have not supported his words.

Ms. Johnson, who served three terms in the Texas Legislature, from 1972 through 1977, said she decided to re-enter the political arena when she "looked around and saw that many problems exist that need to be addressed." She said she will formally announce her candidacy for the 23rd Texas Senatorial District seat now held by State Sen. Paul Ragsdale, whom she expects to seek another term, in December. She said she also expects Jessie Jones of Waco to be a candidate.

Ms. Johnson is optimistic about the outcome of the May 3, 1986, Democratic primary, noting that she defeated three opponents to win her first term in the Texas House in 1972.

Mall's first owners file for bankruptcy

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

An Arizona partnership which originally owned Permian Mall in Odessa has filed for reorganization under Chapter 11 of the U.S. Bankruptcy Code.

The bankruptcy proceedings do not involve Permian Mall, which was opened in February 1980, and its approximately 100 shops and stores, including specialty and department stores.

"It doesn't affect Permian Mall at all," said David Long, mall manager. "That's the old ownership of the mall," which has been purchased by Carlyle Limited Partnership No. 12, a public company, he said.

Carlyle is a $350 million enterprise.

"We have no financial problems that I know of, other than we want more money like everyone else," Long said.

"We're really not filing bankruptcy nor is anybody pertaining to Permian Mall," he said. "We are not experiencing any financial problems."

The mall, located off 42nd Street in Odessa and near the older Winwood Mall, was billed as the "largest enclosed regional (shopping) center between Dallas and El Paso" at its opening five years ago on an 89-acre tract. According to 1980 accounts, the mall encloses 820,000 square feet in climate-controlled conditions and was developed by C&A Developers of Scottsdale, Ariz.

Wadley, I Street will be undergoing changes

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Assistant City Editor

The intersection of Wadley and I Street began a metamorphosis this morning and when completed it no longer will resemble its old self.

One group will close off I Street north of Wadley and start taking out the I Street bridge today while on Thursday morning another group will close that intersection down to two lanes on Wadley — one each way — to install a sanitary sewer. The first project is to allow flood water to flow easier down the Northwest Drainage Channel; the other is to install a connection to the sanitary sewer line.

The City Council on Tuesday approved the tearing out of I Street leading into Midland College and Whitney where they cross over the Drainage Channel. Those two sites dammed up water during the Oct. 9 and 17 rains, which subsequently ran over the channel and flooded some houses.

Assistant Public Works Director Mike Butler said he would start digging out I Street bridge this morning and completing the job might take about three weeks. The speed is being slowed because the city is trying to salvage 12 36-inch pipes and a 24-inch pipe installed under that bridge, he noted.

The council also approved excavating the channel to the depth and width recommended in a 1979 engineering study and that job will be advertised for bids. Public Works Director Fred Baker said excavation work previously had been done by developers who needed the fill dirt.

Questioned about constructing a low-water crossing or a high-water bridge on Whitney, Baker said the bridge would make the roadway much higher than the houses while the crossing would result in a severe dropoff from the garages of nearby houses.

Royals' reception not overdone, say many Midlanders

By RAMONA NYE
Staff Writer

For the past four days, since they first arrived on American soil, Prince Charles and his wife, Diana, have dominated headlines and news broadcasts.

Due to constant press coverage of the royal visit, Midlanders were asked this week, "Is too much fuss being made over the visit?"

Eight out of 14 of those polled said they did not think too big a deal was being made over the couple's visit to the United States. However, five people said too much fuss was being made over the royal visit and one man said he didn't know Prince Charles and Princess Diana were visiting the United States.

A part-time waitress, Willie English, of rural Midland, was one of those interviewed who thought the royal visit wasn't a big deal.

"I understand the fact that they're royalty and have a high social place, but when you get right down to it, they put their britches on the same way," Ms. English said.

John and Celil Frazar, 4514 Crenshaw Drive, also said too much fuss was being made over the visit.

"We had quite a battle a number of years ago to get away from that," said Frazar, who works at the National Weather Service.

Mrs. Frazar added, "I think we have important people in our country we can make a fuss about. All that money could go to the poor, instead of doing all that for royalty."

Greg Brandt

Helen Reed

Douglas Gossett

William Sessoms

Zora Henson, a housewife of rural Midland, said, "They're just people like anybody else. I don't think they should make that big of a deal about it. Would they make that big of a deal about you and I, if we went over there?"

Greg Brandt, a post office worker from Odessa, said, "I could really care less. I think it's overdone. I don't see what is interesting."

Bill Conner, a salesman from Greenwood, said the press and American reaction is just what he expected.

"They don't visit over here every day, so you'd expect people to go gaga. If I had a chance to go see them, I would," Conner said.

A loan officer, Helen Reed, 3313 W. Ohio, said, "I think it's kinda neat. I always enjoy reading about them...It maybe goes back to Princess Grace...We were all thrilled with having an American as a princess."

Pastor Douglas Gossett, 908 S. Loraine, said, "They're representatives from England and should be treated with respect."

Technician William Sessoms, 1307 E. Estes, said attention to the royal couple is a tradition in England that appears to have carried over to the United States.

"I've spent time in England. It's tradition, they make fuss over people over there. They like that sort stuff."

Homemaker Heather Trumbauer, 5101 N. A St., said, "I enjoy reading articles and stuff about them. A certain percentage do, whether they like to admit it or not."

Mark Hall, a salesman from Odessa, said, "I think it's good relations with the United States and England. We need all the friends we can get."

Salvation Army offering 'Dress-A-Live-Doll'

From Staff Reports

Christmas often inspires the awareness of the needs of others. This spirit of giving prevails each year in Midland when citizens participate in the Salvation Army's favorite Christmas program, "Dress-A-Live-Doll" by providing new clothes for hundreds of local needy children, from infancy to 12-years-old.

Many of these children have only worn used garments and have never experienced the joy of new clothing that fits them, according to Salvation Army officials. The "Dress-A-Live-Doll" program constitutes purchasing a complete ensemble for a child, including socks, shoes, night clothes, underwear, sweaters, dresses, pants, and jackets or coats. Expenses may be expected to be approximately $75 to $100 per child and are tax deductible.

Individuals, together with family or friends, office staffs, civic organization members, and local church Sunday school departments or classes are traditional outfitters of one child or several children. People from nearby towns also participate.

The Salvation Army staff visits families recommended for help to determine the needs and clothing sizes of the children. Any child who is an infant or up to 12 years old in each family recommended will be included.

Persons interested in participating in the "Dress-A-Live-Doll" program may call the Salvation Army Office, 683-3614, before Dec. 2. Following the request to dress a child for Christmas, a clothing size information sheet pertaining to that particular youngster will be mailed to the donor. This information sheet will bear the child's first name and an identification code number and may be presented to several local stores who have initiated discounts for the project's participants. There is no personal contact by the donors with the child and anonymity for all parties is assured.

Merchants offering discounts are Upstairs-Downstairs, Sears Roebuck and Company, Anthony's Department Store, and Payless Shoesource.

All clothing purchased for each child should be gift wrapped in several packages, identified by the code number and child's first name taped on each box, then placed in a plastic bag. The gifts of clothing must be delivered to the Salvation Army office, 300 S. Baird, by Dec. 17, for delivery to the children before Christmas.

This Salvation Army Christmas project idea originated in Midland in 1974. Fifty children benefitted in its first year. Last year the Dress-A-Live-Doll program enabled 743 underprivileged Midland children to be completely outifitted with new clothing.

The success of this program is reflected in a donor's comment that she had always wanted to help a particular person in need at Christmas but never knew specific individuals. The Salvation Army in Midland provides an opportunity to such a donor and a means for children in poor economic circumstances to be comfortably clothed for school.

Chairman for the 1985 "Dress-A-Live-Doll" is Mrs. J. Paul Karcher, a member of the Salvation Army Board. Major Harvey Harwell is the commanding officer.

PERMIAN

Long expressed misgivings that publicity on the bankruptcy and the partnership, coincidentally named "Permian Mall, an Arizona general partnership," might affect the mall adversely and could give rise to rumors. The upshot would be "to make something story-worthy that's not story-worthy."

The partnership filing for bankruptcy reorganization includes Richard Campbell, Robert Campbell and Frank Campbell, all of Scottsdale, Ariz.

The Campbell partnership apparently still owns acreage in tracts of 33 and four acres near the existing mall.

The partnership's creditors, according U.S. Bankrupty Court Records on file in the U.S. District Court Clerk's Office in Midland, include the First National Bank of Chicago, which claims a $1.87 million judgment; the Texas Comptroller of Public Accounts, which is demanding $6,222.51 in sales taxes, and the Texas Employment Commission, which claims $1,741.98 in unemployment taxes. Those creditors hold the 20 largest unsecured claims in the case, according to the records.

Creditors include the Internal Revenue Service, the Campbell partners, the Ector County tax assessor-collector, the city of Odessa, the Ector County Independent School District, the First State Bank of Abilene, the Texas Comptroller, FRC Enterprises of Scottsdale, Ariz., Texas American Bank of Fort Worth, First National Bank of Chicago, Massachusetts Mutual Life Insurance Co., Gary Dee Jones of Scottsdale, Ariz., and the Texas Employment Commission.

Bob Hoblit, an Odessa attorney who represents the Arizona partnership in the bankruptcy, said Tuesday that he "really can't talk about the case right now."

Three people held in armed robbery will be released

From Staff Reports

Three people arrested by Sheriff's deputies at an Interstate 20 rest stop Tuesday night were expected to be released this morning because the man who accused them of robbing him at gunpoint failed to press charges, according to Sheriff's Investigator Jim Newsom.

The man had claimed the three — two men and a woman passing through town — had picked him up at an I-20 rest area east of town in Midland County and robbed him of $30 at gunpoint before dropping him off at a Midland convenience store. Sheriff's deputies and investigators later arrested the three back at the rest area, but decided to release them this morning when the complainant failed to appear to press charges, Newsom said.

In other reports, a $13,000 drill bit was reported stolen by James Price, 3803 Suncrest. Price told police the bit belonged to Diamond Oil Well Co., County Road 126 West. It was stolen Monday, reports said.

Lola Igou of the Permian Basin Graduate Center reported missing a $2,999 computer, which was taken sometime between Nov. 6 and Monday from an unlocked safe, reports said. The Center is located at 105 W. Illinois.

Hazel Bishop, 1101B N. Carrizo, reported the loss of an $1,100 antique hanging-coil lamp belonging to her son, Joe Bishop, in a burglary which occurred sometime between Nov. 4 and Friday. Also taken were tools and drills worth about $1,000, reports said.

Delores Valencia, Route 9, Box 9735, reported the loss of a $500 videotape recorder in a Tuesday burglary. There is a suspect in the case, according to Sheriff's Office reports.

Four tires and wheels worth a total of $811 were reported stolen by Robert H. Christensen of Berg Motor Co., 3205 W. Wall. The tires and wheels were taken from three different Sierra pickups sometime between Monday and Tuesday, reports said.

A fire in the kitchen of a house at 1103 Tarlton Tuesday caused heavy damage to the kitchen and heat-and-smoke damage throughout the house belonging to John Roundtree, according to fire reports. The fire was apparently started by overheated grease on a stove. It was reported at 6:16 p.m., reports said.

WADLEY

The plan also calls for excavating the channel from Whitney to Maxwell Street with the possibility of closing Maxwell at the channel. But that wasn't included in the council's action and will be considered at the Nov. 26 meeting.

The sewer line will be tying into the Silkwood Addition north of Midland College to serve that area and Air Park once the airport is moved to its site northeast of the city, according to Baker.

"The contractor will pursue the work through the weekend to get Wadley back to full capacity by Monday," he said. "People utilizing Wadley should use alternate routes."

Because Wadley will be reduced to one lane of traffic each way, Baker said I Street crossing Wadley will be closed to avoid traffic stopping at that intersection.

In other action, the council hired Guy McCrary & Associates to serve as the city's public information program, sent proposed amendments to the Minimum Airport Standards back to the Airport Board for consideration on the insurance coverage section, approved a tract at Big Spring and Marienfeld streets to be developed into a park.

The council will meet at 7 p.m. Tuesday in City Council Chambers to discuss refinancing methods for water revenue bonds and a package of 10 other bonds.

Elderly Midland woman raped, robbed at knifepoint

From Staff Reports

A 74-year-old Midland woman was raped and robbed at knifepoint in her home Tuesday by a masked assailant who escaped with $200, according to police reports.

The woman told police she was watching television about 9:40 p.m. when the man suddenly appeared, dragged her into a bedroom and assaulted her after holding a knife to her throat and threatening to kill her. He then took the money and left, reports said.

The suspect was described by the woman as being a black man about 35 years old, six feet tall and 160 pounds, reports said. The assault occurred in a home in southeast Midland.

Earlier Tuesday evening, a Midland liquor store clerk reported an assault by a man who came in the store, fondled her breasts and left when she pulled a gun, reports said.

The woman told police the man came in the store about 8:50 p.m. wearing a gray, sleeveless sweatshirt, blue jeans and tennis shoes. He pulled the sweatshirt over his head, came up to the woman and turned her around by the shoulder, then reached around and squeezed her breasts, reports said. He then left when she pulled a gun.

She described the man as having a reddish brown mustache and hair, and a pot belly. A man resembling this description is believed to have been involved in similar incidents before, according to police.

TOWNE

Twelve anti-choice bills were introduced in the last session of the state Legislature and a coalition of Democrats and Republicans spent an entire day writing and re-writing a bill that would regulate abortion clinics, which resulted in a compromise between the two sides, according to Ms. Towne.

This bill regulates women's clinics where abortions are performed. The State Health Department first thought the clinics would number 70, but found only 35, she said.

When State Rep. Dan Kubiak, D-Rockdale, complained to her about the advertising being done by clinics which perform abortions, Ms. Towne reminded him the state had not allowed the county facilities to perform the medical procedure. This opened the door for free enterprise, resulting in the clinics and their advertising, she told him.

Abortion, she said, will be the major issue in the next presidential election, explaining that "it comes down to economics." For women in the business world, the reproductive cycle can still be a hindrance.

"I had to promise in my first teaching job I wouldn't get married for five years. They consider marriage and children when it comes to training and promotions."

Although she realizes the ERA won't be pushed in the near future, Ms. Towne said for her the amendment means "a chance for women to accept the responsibility of citizenship. The women's groups aren't going to be fighting for the ERA anytime soon. We learned you have to be in charge of state legislatures and so we're back to electing qualified women to office."

Although her views have differed in recent years from the GOP platform, Ms. Towne said the party has allowed her to participate actively within it. She has sold buttons saying: "I am a Republican woman; I want my party back," and an apron charging: "Clean up politics; elect a woman to office."

She also is a precinct chairman in Harris County and works on the county GOP public affairs committee. While she has learned how to maneuver through the political process, it is the Women's Political Caucus that is her outlet, she said.

Though its membership is still heavily Democratic, Ms. Towne said, at the last national caucus convention there were more than 100 Republican women.

"Everything that happens affects women," she said, "and we'd like to educate all women to that."

Joanne DeWitt, chairman of the Midland chapter, said that although she is "strongly Democratic, I believe the only way for women to advance is through non-partisan efforts."

CAUCUS

The major issues in the campaign, she said, will be who can "out-leadership" the other, who can best relate to the diverse constituency of District 23, which includes the Oak Cliff area of Dallas County. Noting the state's economic problems, she said she believes business survival and maintaining the state's tax base will be critical issues facing future legislative sessions.

Concerning problems facing legislative committees that oversee state agencies, Ms. Johnson said those who operate agencies tend to go along with directives while the Legislature is in session but, once the session ends, go back to business as usual.

Ms. Johnson, who was active in the Dallas integration movement, recalled the time when black people shopping in Dallas stores weren't allowed to try on clothes before buying them.

Concerning her part in the integration movement, she described herself as "part of a group of people that helped bring change."

Ms. Johnson served with the U.S. Department of Health, Education and Welfare during the Carter Administration under HEW Secretary Joseph Califàno, and with the office of the U.S. Surgeon General as executive assistant to the administrator for primary health care from 1979 to 1981. From 1977 to 1979, she was HEW regional director in Dallas, with responsibility for primary health care in a five state region.

Odessa council considers windmills

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — Council members, during a work session following the regular meeting, heard a proposal for an ordinance to govern construction and use of windmills within the Odessa city limits. Under the proposed ordinance explained by planning department assistant Kathy Kunkle, the construction and use of windmill electrical generators in residential areas would be prohibited, primarily because of noise problems and the land area required for safety reasons.

Ms. Kunkle noted that specifications for wind generators, such as the two constructed at Joe White Lincoln-Mercury in east Odessa, recommend windmill blades be at least "30 feet above the nearest obstacle to windflow," which means most towers on which windmills are mounted wind up being about 100 or more feet tall.

A setback required by the ordinance is to assure that, should a tower fail and fall over, there would be sufficient property on which it could fall so that the lives and property of others would not be threatened.

The proposed ordinance, under which permits would be required for construction, would require each installation to have "overspeed" controls that would halt operation of the windmill when wind speeds exceed about 50 mph.

In prohibiting use of windmills in residential areas, the ordinance appears to address only conventional-type wind generators and makes no allowances for other types of wind generators or advanced technology that might be utilized safely in populated residential areas.

Odessa planning director Judy Miller said the ordinance was being proposed because her office has had several inquiries concerning installation of wind generators.

Odessa jury considers fate of man charged in murder

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — A 358th District Court jury of nine men and three women was expected to begin deliberations before noon today to determine if a 35-year-old man is guilty of murder.

Harry Lynn Herring, 6410 Ector Ave., was the final witness to testify in the trial that began Tuesday morning.

Herring, represented by Odessa attorney Royal Caswell, is accused of fatally shooting 28-year-old Allen Dale Smith and wounding his 30-year-old estranged wife, Leslie Faye Herring, Feb. 3. Herring admitted he shot Smith but contended he had acted in a fit of passion.

Earlier, Mrs. Herring testified she and her husband had separated Sept. 30, 1984, and that she intended to get a divorce. She further testified that, prior to the shooting Feb. 3, she, Smith and two other couples had been at a local night club, then left and went to the apartment of one of the women.

She testified Herring entered the apartment, passed her on a stair landing and then she heard shots. She also stated Herring came back downstairs to the living room, where she was lying on the floor near a couch, and said, "You're next, bitch," then shot at her. The bullet struck her in the thigh, she said.

Smith was shot three times with a .357 caliber Sturm Ruger revolver and was pronounced dead at Medical Center Hospital about 2½ hours later. The bullets struck him in the back, left arm and abdomen. Dr. Robert Bright, a forensic pathologist, testified Smith died from loss of blood.

District Attorney Eric Augesen showed the weapon to Mrs. Herring and she stated it appeared similar to the one her estranged husband had in his hand.

Jurors were scheduled to hear final arguments in the case when District Judge Bill McCoy resumed the trial at 9 a.m. today.

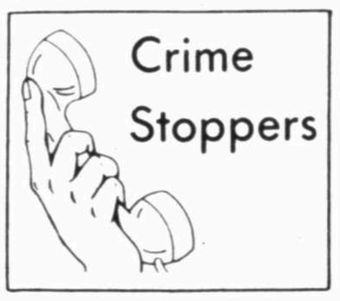

Single-engine plane crash kills Odessan

PAMPA (AP) — A single engine airplane crashed in dense fog near the Pampa airport, killing an Odessa man, the Texas Department of Public Safety reported today.

Officers said Claude Roger Garner, 61, was alone in the Beechcraft Bonanza and was making a final approach for landing late Tuesday at Perry-Lefors Airport when the plane crashed into the ground.

Garner was pronounced dead at the scene, officers said.

Crime Stoppers seeks data in oilfield thefts

This week Crime Stoppers is seeking information on stolen oilfield equipment.

On Oct. 10, someone entered a Phillips Petroleum oil lease in east Midland County and removed a skid-mounted, Wisconsin brand 3x3¼ model AEH pump and an eight-horsepower Briggs and Stratton engine.

Two similar skid-mounted circulating units were taken Oct. 14 from two Exxon leases in east Midland County. The first was a 3611 HB Roper Pump and a five-horsepower Briggs and Stratton engine. The second was a Roper brand equipped with a 2x2 Roper pump and an eight-horsepower Briggs and Stratton engine.

Evidence found at the scene indicates the same people were responsible for all three thefts, investigators believe.

Crime Stoppers will pay $1,000 cash for information leading to the arrest and indictment of the thieves. Call 694-TIPS in Midland or 333-TIPS in Odessa. Callers need not reveal their identities to collect the rewards.

Foul-mouthed toy leaves Texas family speechless

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

HAWTHORNE, Calif. — "I'm gonna play the cow now, OK?"

Cynthia Caler, a 29-year-old housewife and mother in Friendswood, Texas, was demonstrating her daughter's most interesting toy over the telephone. It is called "See and Say, the Farmer Says," an educational plaything from Mattel Inc. that provides preschoolers with a lesson in the words and sounds of various animals. The "cow," for example, is supposed to say, "The cow says, moooo."

But this particular cow said something that may not be entirely suitable for a family newspaper: "This is the (expletives deleted): moooo."

In the background, 20-month-old Amanda Christine Caler squealed with laughter.

"Now I'll play the pig, OK?" Cynthia said.

The pig said the same thing as the cow. It even mooed. And in the background, Amanda squealed with laughter.

Cynthia Caler does not share her daughter's mirth. It may be Mattel, but it is not swell, by her reckoning.

Ms. Caler said that it was only after Mattel executives at their headquarters here proved slow in making amends that she decided to take the case of the foul-mouthed toy to the public.

Recently, a resolution seemed at hand. Spencer Boise, Mattel's executive vice president of corporate affairs, offered apologies and explanations for the delays. He also said that there were no plans to recall the toy; it is believed to be an isolated incident, and company engineers have a theory about what happened with Amanda's toy.

Meanwhile, Cynthia Caler is offering to sell the profane plaything to the highest bidder. So far, she says, she has had an offer of $3,500.

Cynthia and Gary Caler did not spend $8.95 for this toy back in July so that Amanda could learn foul words. But that is exactly what has happened.

"I'll tell you when I got angriest, and you can put this down on the record, word for word," Cynthia Caler said. "It's when my little girl ran up on the couch and jumped up and down and screamed (expletives deleted), (expletives deleted), (expletives deleted.)"
