Meese: U.S. still wants to try hijack leader

WASHINGTON (AP) — Attorney General Edwin Meese reiterated today that the United States still wants to bring to trial the Palestinian it accuses of planning the Achille Largo hijacking, Mohammed Abu el Abbas, even as he was reported on the move once more.

"We still want very much to apprehend him and bring him back to answer the charges against him in this country," Meese said on the "CBS Morning News." "There is no safe haven as far as we're concerned. We'll pursue Mr. Abbas as we would any other fugitive."

Meese commented shortly after two PLO officials said in Yugoslavia that Abbas, a 38-year-old lieutenant to Yasser Arafat, had left that country. On Saturday, Italian officials allowed Abbas, taken into custody with the ship's four hijackers two days earlier, to leave on a flight to Yugoslavia.

But the two PLO officials, who refused to be identified, would not say when he left or what his destination was.

For his part, Meese would not say if the United States knows where the 38-year-old Abbas is. Nor would he say if the Reagan administration would try to intercept a plane carrying him, as it did with the Egyptian airliner flying the hijackers, Abbas and another PLO official out of that country on Thursday.

But Meese said the United States considers Abbas an "international criminal.

"It's important that he be brought back to answer for his crimes and not given immunity so he can engage in a propaganda campaign."

Abbas flew out of Italy despite a U.S. arrest warrant sent to Rome earlier in the day. White House spokesman Larry Speakes called the Italian decision "imcomprehensible."

U.S. officials worked Sunday to try to convince Yugoslavia to hold Abbas, but admitted their efforts would likely fail. Yugoslovia, a non-aligned nation, supports the Palestine Liberation Organization.

Ordeal ends at last

LONG BRANCH, N.J. (AP) — It started on a New Jersey beach where 10 summertime friends studied a brochure advertising a tranquil Mediterranean cruise and ended when an Air Force jet brought them home amid security typically reserved for a president.

Along the way, some of them were held hostage aboard their cruise ship by Palestinian terrorists and one of their number was shot to death and dumped into the sea.

The friends, whose link is the condominums they own in this seaside town, were among the passengers on the Italian cruise ship, Achille Lauro, hijacked last week by four men who said they were members of a splinter group of the Palestine Liberation Organization. Six of the 10 friends were among 11 Americans aboard the vessel when the gunmen took control.

The group's ordeal ended Saturday when the ex-hostages and the others who had left the ship before the hijacking returned to the United States from Sicily.

There, some of them had identified their former captors, now prisoners of the Italian government after U.S. warplanes intercepted the plane carrying them out of Egypt.

Many business executives say deficit making them 'nervous'

HOT SPRINGS, Va. (AP) — Many of the nation's business chiefs say they are extremely nervous about the economy and consider the enormous U.S. trade deficit the single biggest reason for those jitters.

"It cuts right across all industries and all products," says Ruben Mettler, chairman of TRW Inc. "When we compete with exports, business is weak; when we compete directly with imports, it is extremely dificult."

Mettler also heads the U.S. Business Council, which met here this past weekend to discuss the business climate with leaders of government and industry.

In its fall assessment of the economy, the council forecast another 15 months of slow growth without a recession.

But the chief topic of conversation was clearly the nation's trade imbalance — which the council's economic advisers say will reach $133 billion this year and $141 billion in 1986. And that's in spite of actions by the Reagan administration and Congress to try to equalize the trade imbalance and to nudge down the value of the U.S. dollar.

When Deputy Treasury Secretary Richard G. Darman came to discuss President Reagan's tax overhaul bill — a measure that affects U.S. business directly — many corporate officers suggested they were more interested in talking about trade than taxes.

"The value of the dollar and the trade deficit is a bigger issue by far," Mettler told reporters after the session with Darman.

James Robinson III, chairman of the American Express Corp. said the trade imbalance has had a "tremendous drag" throughout the economy — pulling down economic growth by at least two full percentage points.

After booming along at a growth rate of 6.8 percent in 1984, growth was expected to be down to 2.1 percent for all of 1985, then improve only slightly, to 2.5 percent, for 1986, according to the Business Council's economic forecast.

Two Americans win Nobel prize for cholesterol research

Brown

Goldstein

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — Americans Michael S. Brown and Joseph L. Goldstein won the 1985 Nobel Prize in medicine today for discoveries the Nobel Institute said had "revolutionized our knowledge" about cholesterol and may help prevent heart attacks and strokes.

The Nobel Institute said the discoveries of the two could lead to new treatment of cholesterol-related arteriosclerosis, which can lead to heart attacks and strokes that claim hundreds of thousands of lives each year.

"It may one day be possible for many people to have their steak and eat it too," the Nobel citation said.

Brown, 44, and Goldstein, 45, are molecular geneticists at the University of Texas Health Science Center in Dallas.

Goldstein, reached by The Associated Press in Cambridge, Mass., where he is attending a conference, said: "I was awakened by the telephone and sort of overwhelmed by it. It's obviously thrilling and exciting."

Brown, also attending the conference, said, "It's quite a shock.

"I really can only say it's a moment of great surprise and I really haven't had time to collect my thoughts. You can imagine I'm a little overwhelmed right now."

The Nobel Institute said the discoveries of the two Americans had "revolutionized our knowledge about the regulation of cholesterol metabolism and the treatment of diseases caused by abnormally elevated cholesterol levels in the blood."

Nobel officials said Brown and Goldstein found that cells of the human body have receptors on their surfaces which affect the uptake of cholesterol-containing particles called low-density lipoprotein (LDL) which circulate in the bloodstream.

The receptors discovered by the two researchers regulate the amount of cholesterol in the blood. A person with many receptors can eat more cholesterol-rich food, such as eggs and red meat, with less risk of ill effects.

The receptors, on the surface of cells, pick up the LDL particles, absorb them and break them up. All cells have receptors but the liver is especially important, Nobel officials said.

The two Americans were credited with research showing that lack of functional receptors figured in cholesterol-related illness, including familial hypercholesterolemia, an inherited form of high cholesterol levels which can cause heart attacks even in children.

Reduced numbers of receptors, they found, can lead to increased levels of cholesterol in the blood, which subsequently can accumulate in the body's arteries and cause heart attacks or strokes.

Higher education committee's first task to find source of funds

By STEVE LEVINE
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The state's top three elected officers and 16 other prominent Texans today began a comprehensive 15-month investigation of the ills that beset Texas public colleges and universities by facing the issue of where will it get its funds.

Gov. Mark White, Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby and House Speaker Gib Lewis all addressed the Select Committee on Higher Education, meeting for its maiden session today in the Senate Chambers of the state Capitol.

The resolution creating the task force directs the committee to focus its study on the finance, structure and relative need of the Texas higher education system. Taxpayers will spend close to $6 million over the next two years underwriting the operation of 37 senior colleges and universities, 49 junior colleges, seven medical schools and two dental schools.

Austin lawyer Lacy Temple, who chairs the committee, asked and answered two easy questions in a recent speech. "Do we have enough schools?" Temple asked. "Yes." "Do we need any more?" The answer was "no."

Then he left unanswered several more difficult — and politically sensitive — questions that he expects the panel to address: "Do we have too many? Are there some that should be eliminated? Are there some that should be combined?"

Port Arthur Sen. Carl Parker, chairman of the Senate Education Committee and a member of the new panel, told a recent convention of elementary and high-school administrators and trustees that reforming colleges and universities will be "three times as tough" as the hard-fought 1983-84 battle over public school reforms. Parker also served on the Select Committee on Public Education — the panel that recommended the sweeping reforms the legislature adopted in 1984.

Rural Midland boy drowns in caliche pit

From Staff Reports

A 12-year-old rural Midland boy drowned Sunday afternoon at a caliche pit south of Midland on U.S. Highway 349, a Midland County Sheriff's Department spokeswoman reported.

Sheriff's investigator Sue Rudie said divers recovered the body of Juan Martinez Lucero from the caliche pit, located northwest of Rankin Salvage, about two hours after the boy reportedly entered the water and submerged.

Witnesses said the boy jumped from the bank into the water, began to swim and then went under.

Ms. Rudie reported about 40 persons, including members of the Midland Fire Department, were at the scene trying to recover the body when she arrived. Divers from Midland and Odessa also responded to the incident.

The boy was pronounced dead at 5:15 p.m. by Justice of the Peace Charles Sprayberry. The body was taken to Ellis Funeral Home where funeral arrangements are pending.

In other weekend police activity, Ulric W. Browne III, 3801 Princeton, reported a tool box and tools were stolen from his vehicle either Saturday or Sunday while it was parked at his residence.

According to police reports, the burglary occurred between 6 p.m. Saturday and 11 a.m. Sunday. The property is valued at $300.

Institute investigated for use of punishment of severly disturbed

By DANIEL Q. HANEY
Associated Press

BOSTON — P.J. Biscardi still bites his hands, but he has stopped drinking Drano, running full speed into walls and dashing into traffic.

But the school that broke the autistic 19-year-old of his destructive habits has been ordered closed because of the slaps, pinches and cold showers it metes out along with hugs and rewards.

The school, called the Behavior Research Institute, is the center of a bitter quarrel over the use of punishment to treat severely disturbed young people.

Supporters, including many parents, say they are necessary tools to keep youngsters from hurting themselves and others.

"The children are healthier and safer than they have ever been in their lives," said Biscardi's mother, Maureen Biscardi of Burlington.

Opponents call the methods cruel and barbaric.

"The treatment the students at the Behavior Research Institute are receiving in any other context would be called torture," said Jim Gleich, director of the Massachusetts Office of Handicapped Affairs.

The institute operates a school in Providence, R.I., and seven residences in Massachusetts towns near the Rhode Island border.

The school treats youngsters with mental retardation, severe emotional problems and autism — a state characterized by hallucinations, daydreams and disregard of external reality. Most of the patients were thrown out of other treatment programs as being unmanageable.

The institute's problems began in July when an autistic man died wearing a helmet that piped "white noise" into his ears. The cause of his death has not been determined.

The state Office for Children investigated and concluded that the school used excessive and unauthorized punishments. It ordered the group homes to close, an action that would shut down the program.

The school has appealed the order. If it closes, state officials have promised to put the school's 67 patients in other institutions.

Among the violations cited by the state:

• Some youngsters were restrained by their hands and wrists and forced to stand barefoot inside a closed booth. Ammonia vapor was squirted into their nostrils and a bucket of cold water dumped over their heads. Then air and water was sprayed onto their faces. They could shut off the spray by repeatedly pushing a lever.

• During one day, a girl who repeatedly pounded her head was spanked, squeezed and pinched 1,011 times.

• Some students were denied solid food and were fed a liquid nutrient mixture. One patient lost 20 pounds over three months.

• A young man who ran away was forced to wear a helmet and the same clothes for a month and sleep without a mattress.

The punishments were described last week in a hearing before a magistrate.

"Nothing that the state has said in the hearing was shocking to any of the parents," said Claudia Soucy. "We knew exactly what was going on."

Mrs. Soucy's 17-year-old son, Brendan, autistic and retarded, had been forced to leave several other programs, which had kept him sedated with a powerful tranquilizer.

After a year at Behavior Research Institute, his worst behavior has stopped and he is receiving no drugs, she said.

Biscardi would run into walls with such force that it structurally damaged his family's home. He would drink anything: bleach, perfume, shampoo, drain solvent. Crossing the street, he had to be held so he would not lunge in front of cars.

A West Virginia State Police officer inspects the wreckage of a chartered bus after it rammed into a freight train at a railroad crossing in Bramwell, W.Va, Sunday. At least four people were killed and 25 injured, authorities said. The bus was carrying a church choir from Roanake, Va.

Four people killed, at least 24 hurt when bus rams freight train

BRAMWELL, W.Va. (AP) — A minister said he could only watch in terror as a chartered bus carrying his church choir slammed into a slow-moving train, killing four people and injuring more than two dozen, two of them critically.

"I saw it coming, but I couldn't even holler to warn the other passengers," the Rev. Louis Hardy said Sunday. "All I could do was get down on the floor and bury my face in the seat."

The brakes on the 18-year-old bus probably failed before it slammed into the Norfolk & Southern train Sunday afternoon at the bottom of a 1½-mile grade on U.S. 52, about 75 miles south of Charleston near the Virginia line, said state police Trooper L.J. McCarty.

He said the age of the bus and the absence of skid marks pointed to brake failure. "You just don't drive into the side of a train," McCarty said.

Bramwell Police Chief Richard Painter said, however, that the bus driver may not have seen the train until it was too late.

The bus was carrying 32 people from Bibleway Pentecostal Church of Roanoke, Va., to sing at the Mount Zion Church of Our Lord Jesus Christ in Haveco. The service was a homecoming for Roanoke church elder Hugh McGill, 84, one of the four killed in the crash, authorities said.

State police identified others killed as bus driver Howard Stout, 34, of Roanoke, James Conner, 48, of Vinton and George Johnston, 79, of Roanoke.

The road was dry and the weather clear as the bus descended the steep, winding road on Pinnacle Mountain and had passed a runaway truck ramp about a quarter mile before the crossing, McCarty said. He said the bus had about 100 yards of straight road before hitting the train.

The train was traveling 11 mph at the crossing, which had signal lights but no barricades, and the bus had slowed to about 10 mph before striking the train, McCarty said.

"The bus was totaled from the front end back past the first passenger seat," Painter said. "It was practically ripped off.

"It's a bad crossing. I've worked here 30-some years and can remember at least 50 major accidents there in that time. It's a terrible place."

McCarty said trucks using the road "often use their brakes all the way down, and when they reach the bottom and need to stop, there's nothing left."

Rev. Hardy said the bus driver "wasn't speeding" and had little warning.

The 40-car train, carrying ballast rock, was three-quarters of the way past the crossing when the bus rammed it, McCarty said.

Fifteen weary Americans stepped onto American soil at Newark International Airport, led from the giant Air Force C-141 transport by one of the summer friends — a grieving Marilyn Klinghoffer, 58, of New York, dressed in black.

Her wheelchair-bound husband, Leon, 69, was the only casualty of the international drama.

She stared straight ahead, her face haunted.

Met by dignitaries led by U.N. Ambassador Vernon Walters, the Americans walked to a waiting bus and were taken under police escort to a nearby hotel for their long-awaited reunions with families.

"There were tears of joy and sadness," said Sen. Alfonse D'Amato, R-N.Y., who escorted Mrs. Klinghoffer from the plane.

She had told President Reagan in a telephone call that she identified the terrorists in a lineup. "I spit in their faces and told them what I think of them," she said.

"You did. Oh God bless you," Reagan replied.

Guarded by a phalanxes of FBI agents and police, the former hostages were secluded from hundreds of journalists and onlookers.

The former hostages were interviewed separately by teams of FBI agents gathering information for possible criminal prosecution of the hijackers in this country, authorities said.

On Sunday, most of the captives kept to themselves. A few spoke, offering details of their grisly adventure and expressing gratitude and patriotic pride in the capture of their captors.

"I knew I was going to die. You resign yourself. That's all," said Stanley C. Kubacki, a Philadelphia criminal court judge who was held hostage.

Some of them on Sunday rested, did their laundry and read about themselves in the newspaper, relatives said.

"We're fine. We're going to stay home and do nothing," said former hostage Seymour Meskin, 71, of Union. "We'll take our trips locally from now on for a while."

"My parents are very tired. They're on major league jet lag right now," said Carol Hodes, daughter of former hostage Mildred Hodes, 64, of Springfield.

It had been just 12 days since the summer friends had set out Oct. 2, each paying $1,699 for a 15-day cruise to Egypt, Israel and Greece.

The travelers included the Klinghoffers, along with Mrs. Hodes, and her husband, Frank of Springfield, Meskin and his wife, Viola, of Union, Neil and June Kantor of Metuchen, Charlotte Spiegal of New York, and Sylvia Sherman of Long Branch.

What had brought the group together were the neighboring condominiums they owned at the ocean-front Beach House in Long Branch, about 20 miles south of New York.

The cream-colored, brick buildings jut out toward the ocean just a few yards away. The friends' apartments are nearly side by side.

It was at the beach near their summer homes where the Kantors and Mildred Hodes cooked up the idea for their trip. The Kantors, avid travelers, recalled a brochure advertising the Mediterranean package. The others eagerly agreed.

The Klinghoffers, the Meskins, Sylvia Sherman and Mildred Hodes — were on the ship when the gunmen took over Oct. 7.

FBI Director William Webster said on CBS' "Face The Nation" that Yugoslavians officials "have declined to detain" Abbas.

There was no official reaction from Yugoslavia.

But a government spokesman in Belgrade, refusing to be identified, said, "Mohammed Abbas is member of the executive committee of the PLO. We have good relations with the PLO and we support the Palestinian cause. You can draw your own conclusions."

U.S. officials say Abbas masterminded the attack on the cruise ship Achille Lauro in which a crippled New York City man was shot to death.

Italy says it plans to try the four hijackers, but the United States also issued warrants for the four on Saturday, charging them with hostage taking, piracy and conspiracy, Korten said.

U.S. officials said that in support of the arrest warrant for Abbas, Italy had been furnished with transcripts of conversations monitored between Abbas and the four hijackers aboard the Achille Lauro.

An official who declined to be named said Abbas was in radio contact with the four men while they were on the ship.

Abraham Sofaer, the State Department's legal adviser, said the same information was given to Yugoslavia.

Abbas and another Palestinian man who had been aboard the intercepted Boeing 737 were released late Saturday despite an agreement between President Reagan and Italian Prime Minister Craxi, Sofaer said.

"My understanding is Craxi told our president that the six would be kept in jail, and these two, particuarly Abbas, were put in the Egyptian Cultural Center and were sneaked out of there, as far as we understand, in Egyptian sailors' uniforms," Sofaer said on ABC's "This Week with David Brinkley."

NOBEL

"The discovery of the LDL receptor has broadened our understanding of cholesterol metabolism considerably and explained the mechanism behind familial hypercholesterolemia," the Nobel citation said.

"The discoveries made by Brown and Goldstein have drastically widened our understanding of the cholesterol metabolism and increased our possibilities to prevent and treat arteriosclerosis and heart attacks," the citation said.

"But their discoveries have even more far-reaching implications," the Nobel citation said, noting that their research might eventually lead to medication that could increase the number of LDL receptors and thus, in connection with diet changes, reduce the risk of cholesterol-related illness.

American scientists have captured all the Nobel medicine prizes alone or jointly since 1975, except for 1982 when it went to two Swedes and an Englishman and 1984 when it was shared by a Dane, a West German and an Argentine.

The medicine prize is one of a series of awards set up in the 1895 will of Swedish dynamite inventor Alfred Nobel and presented since 1901. Since 1901, a total of 59 Americans have won or shared the prize.

This year's prizes each carry a cash award of 1.8 million Swedish kronor (about $225,000), the highest in the 84-year history of the prizes.

It was the second Nobel prize announced so far this year. The 1985 Nobel Peace Prize was given in Oslo, Norway, last week to an antiwar doctors' organization, International Physicians for the Prevention of Nuclear War.

Nobel prizes in economics, physics and chemistry are to be announced later this week in Stockholm.

The Nobel prize in literature is expected to be announced later this week or next week.

Winners of the prizes receive them in Oslo and Stockholm on Dec. 10, the anniversary of Nobel's death in 1896.

The Nobel Institute that picks the medical winner is made up of six faculty members of Stockholm's Karolinska Institute, one of northern Europe's most respected medical complexes.

DEFICIT

Robinson said that his own credit card business is probably less affected by the trade deficit than most — after all, buying goods oversees is still a good bargain for U.S. tourists because of the still-strong dollar. He said sales charged on American Express cards increased by 15-17 percent this year. Still, he said the "use of our card has slowed down."

Harry J. Gray, chairman of United Technologies Corp., said his firm's semiconductor division is reeling under competition from low-cost computer chips, mostly from Japan. "We're limiting ourselves in that area. We just don't see a way to compete too effectively," he said.

Business leaders attending the weekend conference seemed to hold out little optimism that the trade situation would improve anytime soon.

They cited a tight linkage between the trade imbalance and high government budget deficits, high interest rates in this country and generally poor U.S. performance in manufacturing — and said improvements in these areas would have to come first before any marked improvement in the trade balance could be achieved.

But, most of all, the business leaders agreed the strong U.S. dollar abroad is taking the largest toll — and they voiced skepticism that government intervention in currency markets alone would do much to speed the dollar's fall.

"The dollar is still killing us. We have large operations abroad," said Edmund T. Pratt Jr., chairman of Pfizer Inc., a chemical and drug manufacturing firm. The strong dollar makes U.S. products expensive abroad and imports relatively cheap in this country.

But, Pratt noted that while the trade imbalance is clearly the No. 1 headache for officials of U.S. corporations these days, many other factors influence business performance — especially for a business like his.

"For us, a good flu season will cover up any bad business cycle," he joked.

In a related trade development, Bruce Smart, deputy Commerce secretary for international trade, disclosed during an appearance here that the Reagan administration is considering a fresh batch of unfair trading complaints against other nations.

Smart said an inter-agency panel that he chairs had identified at least three "egregious and large" areas of unfair trading practices against U.S. products. He declined to say which products or which nations.

He told a group of reporters that the panel, part of a six-agency task force named last month by Reagan to ferret out instances of trade discrimination, would meet again on Tuesday to firm up its recommendations.

He said that as many as five unfair trading cases might be passed along to the task force for action. These would be in addition to cases announced by the president last summer involving barriers against U.S. tobacco and leather products in Japan, insurance in South Korea, telephone equipment in Brazil and canned fruits in the European Common Market.

Following briefings from Higher Education Commissioner Kenneth Ashworth and Legislative Budget Board Director Jim Oliver, the committee was set to tackle the issues of who should pay for the committee's operations and where should the panel find its support staff.

Temple, who is also chairman of the Texas College and University System Coordinating Board, has said he agrees with Parker's statement that the committee staff should not come from Coordinating Board personnel.

Dallas billionaire H. Ross Perot, the chairman of the 1984 public school committee, has offered to finance some of the operation. He spent more than $1 million of his own money on the 1984 study.

Bell Helicopter 'shredding' evidence, lawyer alleges

FORT WORTH (AP) — Bell Helicopter Textron Inc has sparked allegations that it is destroying incriminating evidence as it revamps its comuterized accounting system, a Bell lawyer says.

The Fort Worth helicopter maker has been under federal scrutiny for possible contract overcharges to the U.S. Army, and has been trying to meet an Army demand that it make its computerized system more useful to federal auditors.

But Assistant U.S. Attorney Ronald C.H. Eddins, in a two-hour private meeting Friday with Army Undersecretary James R. Ambrose, alleged that Bell is destroying accounting data, the Fort Worth Star-Telegram reported Sunday.

"He has said to the Army that Bell is destroying evidence," said Breckenride Wilcox, a Washington lawyer representing Bell.

Wilcox said Eddins has accused the helicopter manufacturers of "running the shredder 24 hours a day."

Wilcox and Bell's top lawyer, George Galerstein, denied the accusation. Eddins declined to discuss his findings or his meeting with Ambrose.

Bell and the federal govenment have been involved in a dispute since a team of government investigators identified more than $100 million in overcharges by Bell to the government over the last five years.

When the findings surfaced, the Army slashed its monthly payments to Bell on existing contracts from $13 million to $6.5 million in July. In August, the Army began full progress payments to Bell for new contracts, although the half-payment on older contracts continues.

Army officials indicated they may impose new sanctions against the Fort Worth firm because of Eddins' information, the Star-Telegram reported.

A $233 million Bell contract for the Army Helicpter Improvement Program was put on hold until the Army studies Eddins' claims, an Army official said.

"We've got to assess what we were told and then decide what the appropriate response is," one Army officer said. "The appropriate response won't be a yawn, but it isn't necessarily going to be executions either — but there will be some response."

But while the Army is demanding a new computerized accounting system, Eddins fears the system may jeopardize his investigation, Wilcox said.

Government investigators have misinterpreted changes that Bell has made to its accounting records, Wilcox said.

'Families' fight to control border cocaine smuggling

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — As warring border gangs shift their smuggling operations from marijuana and brown heroin to cocaine, the stakes — and the bloodshed — are soaring dangerously high.

The fight among three Mexican crime "families" to control Interstate 35, a new cocaine smuggling route into the country, is fueled by profits reaped in major drug-smuggling operations, officials told the San Antonio Light.

And in Laredo and its Mexican sister city of Nuevo Laredo, the three families — the Gaytans, the de Leons and the Prunedas — have been fighting in the streets, the Light said Sunday.

The war is now in its second decade, but it is increasingly being marked by barroom shootouts, kidnappings, torture and murder, authorities said.

The Gaytans, in the early 1970s, won a battle for control along the Central Texas-Mexico border against the infamous brown-heroin smuggling empire led by Fred Gomez Carrasco, law enforcement officials said.

"We've known about the Gaytans and these other families for a long time. I knew them back when they were in the marijuana-smuggling business and I was on customs patrol," said James Kuykendall, resident agent in charge of the Laredo office of the U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration.

"But now these folks are getting into cocaine," he said.

The Mexican organizations of Miguel Felix Gallardo and Ernesto Fonseca — two of the big three in the Mexican drug world implicated in the February kidnapping and murder of a U.S. Drug Enforcement agent — are among the Gaytans' major suppliers, the Light quoted sources as saying.

In San Antonio, a major local organization led by a West Side restaurateur has been a key broker in the effort by the Gaytans and other Mexican families to infiltrate the city's cocaine market.

School prayer should be encouraged, poll respondents say

NEW YORK (AP) — Prayer in the nation's classrooms should not just be allowed, it should be encouraged, according to a majority of Americans surveyed in a Media General-Associated Press poll.

And while there is strong support for the constitutional separation of religion and government, a surprising number of Americans — 25 percent — believe church-state separation is a bad idea, the nationwide telephone poll found.

When asked, "Do you think the separation of church and state is a good idea, or not?" two-thirds of the 1,412 respondents said yes, one-quarter said no, and 9 percent were unsure.

Eighty-seven percent of the respondents favored a moment of silence in school in which students could pray if they wished.

If students were encouraged to pray during the moment of silence, 63 percent would still support it.

Three-quarters also said that prayer in schools did not violate the separation of church and state.

Support for prayer in American schools crossed every age, race, economic and political line, the poll found.

But school prayer did not have the support of the majority of Jewish respondents. Jewish leaders have expressed concern that the Christian majority could impose its religious beliefs in the schools.

Silent prayer will be allowed in public schools if a proposed constitutional amendment is passed into law. The amendment, approved by the Senate Judiciary Committee on Oct. 3, would reverse a Supreme Court ruling of June 4 that barred public schools from holding a moment of silence if students were encouraged to pray.

The amendment must be approved by Congress and ratified by 38 states to become law.

On the issue of church-state separation, Protestants were more likely than both Catholics and Jews to oppose the constitutional principle. Thirty-percent of Protestants said it was a bad idea. Only 20 percent of Catholics felt the same way. Virtually all of the Jewish respondents favored church-state separation.

On other issues:

• Eight in 10 respondents said student religious groups should have the same access to school facilities as other student groups. The issue is presently before the Supreme Court in a Virginia case where a student religious group was barred from holding a prayer meeting in a school activity period.

• A majority — 55 percent — believe parents who send their children to private schools should not be given tax breaks to to make up for the tuition. Forty-percent supported such tuition tax credits.

Thirty-one percent of the respondents in the Media General-AP poll had children in public schools, 6 percent had children in private schools, and 1 percent had children in both. Sixty-two percent did not have school age children.

Respondents in the Media General-Associated Press poll included a random, scientific sampling of 1,412 adults across the country Sept. 1-7. As with all sample surveys, the results of Media General-AP telephone polls can vary from the opinions of all Americans because of chance variation in the sample.

For a poll based on about 1,400 interviews, the results are subject to an error margin of 3 percentage points either way because of sample variations.

Young Solidarity supporters march in Gdansk, Poland, supporting the outlawed trade union's call for a boycott of Sunday's elections.

Government: 75 percent of Poles voted

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — The government said more than 75 percent of Poland's voters rejected a call from Solidarity to boycott parliamentary elections, but the outlawed free trade union claimed thousands stayed away from the polls.

Sunday's elections for the Sejm, Poland's legislature, were the first since Solidarity's creation in 1980. The communist government hoped a heavy turnout would give credence to its claim that stability had returned to Poland since the workers' revolt and the martial law measures taken to quell it.

Speaking to reporters Sunday, government spokesman Jerzy Urban said the number of Poles casting ballots would "certainly exceed" the 75 percent figure authorities reported for local elections last year. He said final results would be made available today.

However, Lech Walesa, Solidarity's former chairman, derided the balloting as "so-called elections," and said his estimates indicated more than 50 percent of the voters boycotted in his home town of Gdansk.

There was no immediate independent assessmment of the government and Solidarity claims. No independent organization monitored the balloting.

Turnout by the country's 26 million eligible voters was expected to fall short of the 98.87 percent the government reported in the last parliamentary election in March 1980.

Despite that mandate, then-Communist Party leader Edward Gierek fell from power six months later following the nationwide strikes that led to Solidarity's birth.

Solidarity, banned in 1982, said it would provide its own turnout estimates that were expected to differ widely from those reported by the government. After last year's election, it claimed the government inflated its turnout figure by 15 percent.

Urban called Walesa's figures "totally fictitious." The spokesman criticized Solidarity's methods of vote-counting and said its figures could be off by between 10 percent and 50 percent.

"The boycott was boycotted," Urban said.

"The results will give an answer to a question of how deep stabilization is running," Vice Premier Mieczyslaw Rakowski told Polish journalists after voting in Warsaw.

WORLD

Great Britain won't meet with PLO members

LONDON (AP) — The government today canceled a meeting with two PLO representatives after they refused to endorse a statement recognizing Israel's right to exist, Foreign Secretary Geoffrey Howe said.

The cancellation appeared to come at the last minute. The Foreign Office faced condemnation from the press and a Jewish group for agreeing to meet with Palestine Liberation Organization representatives following the hijacking of the Italian cruise ship Achille Lauro.

A statement by Howe said Britain was "deeply disappointed" at the collapse of an initiative it had hoped would lead the United States into taking similar action.

Howe was to have met a joint Jordanian-Palestinian delegation consisting of Jordan's deputy prime minister and foreign minister and the two PLO officials, Eliya Khoury and Mohammed Milhem.

They were invited to Britain by Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher when she was visiting Jordan last month.

Mrs. Thatcher had said the talks were needed to save the Middle East peace initiative launched this summer by King Hussein of Jordan.

Howe said the two Palestinians were accepted on the understanding that they believed in peace with Israel "and were opposed to terrorism and violence."

He said Britain received "unambiguous assurances" that Khoury and Milhem would "make this clear publicly during their stay in London."

But once in Britain, "the two Palestinians said that they were not after all willing to associate themselves with a statement agreed with the Jordanian members of the delegation which contained explicit references both to Israel's right to exist within secure and recognized borders, and to the right of the Palestinians to self-determination."

"In these circumstances we have concluded that the meeting with the joint delegation cannot now take place," Howe's statement said.

He said the world must encourage those who take "risks for peace we have been ready to do so. There can be no lasting settlement until all others are ready to do the same. We are deeply disappointed that the opportunity offered by this meeting has been missed."

He said the Jordanian members of the delegation would meet with him later in the morning.

The Jordanian Embassy said the cancellation was "rather sudden" and it had no comment. There was no immediate comment from the PLO.

The Foreign Office had refused to say where or at what time the meeting would take place, citing security reasons. Milhem and Khoury reportedly had been threatened by Palestinian extremists for accepting Mrs. Thatcher's invitation.

The meeting, which would have been the first between a senior British Cabinet minister and PLO representatives, was arranged before the Oct. 7 hijacking of the Achille Lauro.

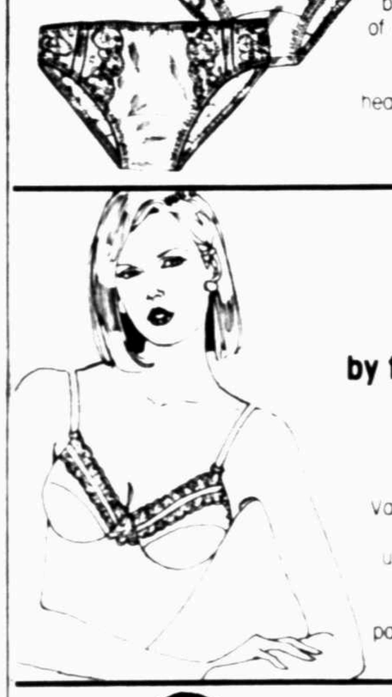

The four hijackers identified themselves as members of a PLO splinter group, the Palestine Liberation Front. The PLO has denied any involvement.

The Board of Deputies of British Jews, which represents Britain's 400,000 Jews, had renewed its appeal for the cancellation of the talks after the hijacking. An American Jew, 69-year-old Leon Klinghoffer of New York City, was slain during the two-day ordeal.

The two Palestinians arrived in London Saturday night accompanied by Jordanian Deputy Prime Minister Abdul-Wahab Majali. The fourth member of the delegation, Jordanian Foreign Minister Taher el-Masri, arrived earlier.

Head for Beirut

What are the three most dreaded words in the world?

Head for Beirut.

Besides striking fear, frustration, desperation — whatever — into the hearts of passengers and crew members on airliners in recent years, those words have been used with increasing regularity by those seeking, apparently, to make a captive world the audience for their particular cause. They've succeeded, to a degree, regularly.

With the hijacking last Monday of an Italian cruise ship which later was reported to be heading for Beirut at the insistence of the hijackers, it became apparent that not enough is being done to stop the threat of terrorism throughout the world. Now it's obvious that no government anywhere in the world can assure the safety and security of any person. Terrorism is spreading at an alarming rate and innocent people are paying the costs with their lives. In the cruise ship hijacking, a 69-year-old wheelchair-bound man named Leon Klinghoffer was brutally murdered and his body thrown overboard.

There was a glimmer of justice in the most recent incident, though, when U.S. fighter planes scrambled from a U.S. Navy carrier forced the landing in Sicily of an Egyptian airliner carrying the four hijackers of the Achille Lauro.

It's unclear at this point whether justice will be served in this latest hijacking and murder. Perhaps the tide of world opinion relative to this kind of life-threatening piracy is turning and justice will be brought to bear against those who prey on the lives and liberties of others.

There's little doubt that action is needed. There was a time at the height of the Iranian hostage crisis in President Jimmy Carter's administration when American outrage was strong enough that an attack against the country of Iran was imaginable, even justifiable. But since that time there have been numerous hijackings, bombings and killings, and the forcing down of the Egyptian airliner was the first truly forceful step taken by the Reagan administration. It has almost seemed as though the administration fears a backlash from the American people — or the world community.

What are we afraid of? Being called uncivilized, when we're fighting to protect our people from an enemy who gets his thrills from bombing airplanes full of innocent men, women and children? Or is it that we're afraid of breaking the standards of conduct for society inside own country?

Well, if that's it, enough's enough. America has played by the rules in a game in which there are no rules. Americans have been held captive, bombed, assaulted, brutalized and victimized enough. It's time for action, and the Reagan administration's forceful steps in forcing the Egyptian plane down should be only the start.

Another View:

The collapse of OPEC

OPEC seems to have collapsed. It continues to exist as an organization, but it is no longer going to try to control the world price of oil. The immediate effects will be good for the countries importing oil, including this one, but it will also be a test of their wisdom. Before the celebration begins, it might be useful to see where OPEC's troubles came from — and to ask what comes next.

OPEC — the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries — is the victim of worldwide reaction to its own ambitions. Shortages, aggravated by panic, pushed oil prices sky-high in 1979-81. OPEC then tried to hold them there. But at those prices, most people around the world decided that they could get along with less oil, and for several years consumption fell. Last year it started to rise slightly once again, but that did OPEC very little good. By then it was trying to cope with a rising threat on the other side of the equation as the new prices brought new wells into production to compete with the cartel. Mexico now produces more oil than any of the OPEC countries. Britain has become a major exporter. There are a good many other countries — for example, Brazil, Egypt and India — in which the new production is less conspicuous but has displaced very substantial amounts of imported oil.

With world consumption down and world production up, OPEC has been cutting its own exports drastically in its struggle to keep markets tight and prevent prices from falling. By this summer, OPEC's production was less than half of its 1979 level; Saudi Arabia's was barely one-fourth. But with prices still soft and most of their partners undercutting the Saudis, the OPEC countries have decided that they cannot drop their own production any farther. The attempts to enforce the cartel's rules have now ended.

The immediate prospect is more oil at lower prices — possibly much lower. That's where the test of the industrial countries' prudence and policy will arise. If they simply splash the oil around, reverting to bad old habits and burning whatever becomes available because it's cheap, they will soon push their consumption back up to a point at which markets are tight and control once again resides with OPEC and particularly with the Saudis. Can you guess what will happen then?

Earlier this year the U.S. Geological Survey published figures showing that the oil reserves in the Persian Gulf region are still by far the world's largest and the probability of finding anything remotely similar elsewhere is exceedingly low. As the years pass, with every country producing its oil at the maximum possible rates, the remaining reserves of accessible oil will increasingly be concentrated in the Middle East. OPEC has suffered a defeat this year that is severe, but not necessarily final.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Monday, October 14, the 287th day of 1985. There are 78 days left in the year. This is the Columbus Day holiday, as well as Thanksgiving Day in Canada.

Today's highlight in history:

Twenty-five years ago — October 14th, 1960 — the idea of a Peace Corps was first suggested by Democratic presidential candidate John F. Kennedy, before an audience of students at the University of Michigan. In the years that followed, more than 120,000 Americans have answered the call to go overseas to help underdeveloped nations.

On this date:

In 1066, Normans under William the Conqueror defeated the English at the Battle of Hastings.

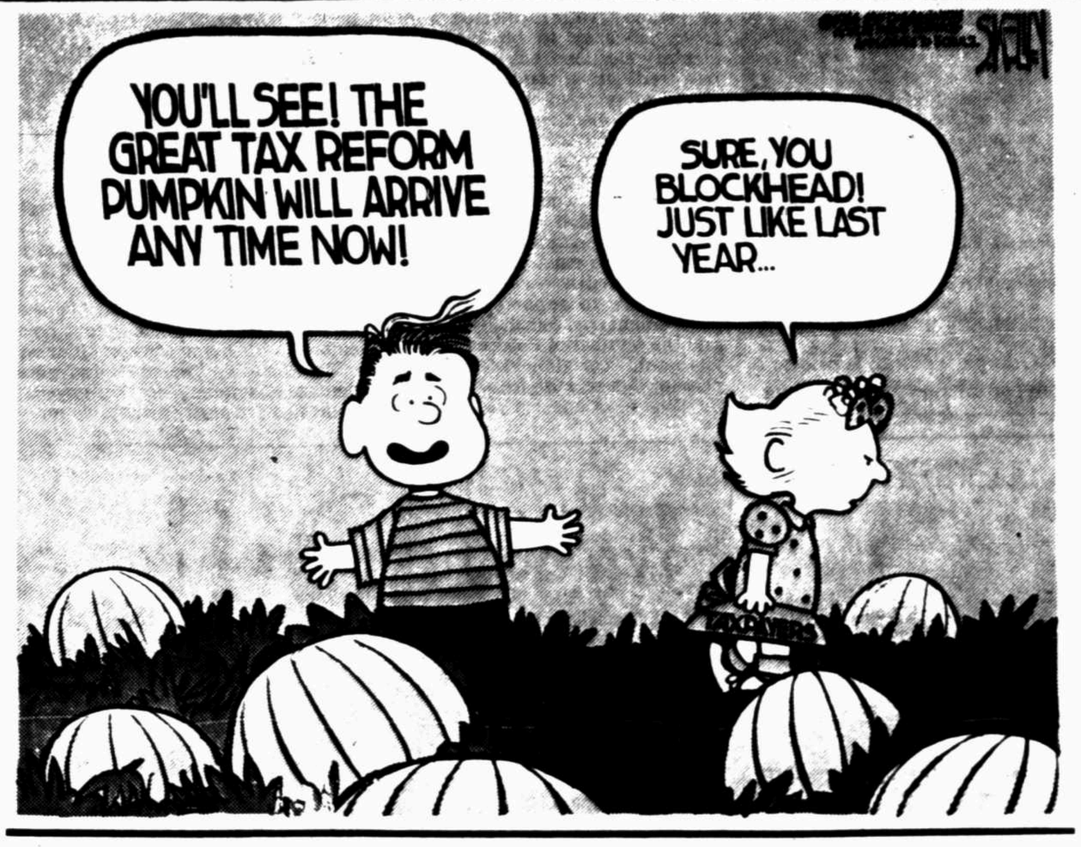

In 1586, Mary, Queen of Scots, went on trial in England. She was beheaded the following February.

In 1890, the 34th President of the United States, Dwight D. Eisenhower, was born in Denison, Texas.

In 1912, Theodore Roosevelt, campaigning for the presidency on the Bull Moose ticket, was shot in the chest in Milwaukee. Although wounded, he went ahead with a scheduled speech.

In 1944, during World War II, German field marshal Erwin Rommel committed suicide rather than face trial and execution as a traitor to the Nazi regime.

In 1947, U.S. Air Force Captain Charles E. Yeager became the first person to fly faster than the speed of sound as he tested a rocket-powered research plane in California.

JACK ANDERSON

'Intelligence' costs U.S. plenty

WASHINGTON — How much does it cost the United States to buy or steal a secret from a foreign country? $10? $10,000? $1 million?

It's one of the best-kept secrets in Washington, for unlike most other entities of the federal bureaucracy, the hydra-headed intelligence community gets to keep its budget confidential. And no one in Congress seems to worry whether the spy agencies are cost-effective in what they do.

Jack Anderson

It may seem a hopeless quest, but let's see if we can't do a pioneer accounting of U.S. intelligence gathering, and get an idea of what it costs the taxpayers for the secrets the various agencies pry out of our adversaries.

How much do we pay for the spy satellites, the human agents, the analysts who weigh the information and the computers that collate it all? And what do we get in return?

Except for the CIA and a couple of obscure military units, which devote some money and manpower to covert action, the dozen-plus federal intelligence bodies exist primarily to collect and analyze information. So their entire budgets should be counted on the cost side of the ledger.

Easier said than done, of course, but from sources familiar with the budget process and from other information we've gathered, we can make an educated guess.

The CIA's annual budget is close to $1 billion. The code-breaking National Security Agency's is much higher, about $10 billion a year. The little-known National Reconnaissance Office, whose very existence in the Pentagon is classified, spends at least $2 billion and possibly as much as $4 billion a year on spy satellites.

Then add at least another $2 billion for the Defense Intelligence Agency and the intelligence-gathering arms of the four individual military services and the departments of State, Treasury and Energy.

A significant expense, but impossible to calculate, is the man-hours spent by ambassadors and Foreign Service personnel, gathering information that is passed along to the intelligence services.

Adding it all up, a plausible estimate is that the government spends roughly $18 billion a year to collect foreign secrets.

Now how do we figure out the number of secrets this $18 billion buys? No one can say for sure, but as luck would have it, there is an obscure agency that provides the material necessary for a reasonable guess.

The Information Security Oversight Office makes an annual count of all government agencies' classification decisions — how many documents they stamp confidential, secret and top secret. Its latest report puts the number of these "original classification decisions" at 881,943 last year.

The problem with this figure is that the great bulk of it refers to made-in-U.S.A. secrets the agencies want to protect, not secrets coming from overseas. Domestic secrets are usually classified confidential or secret, and these levels comprise 98 percent of the classification decisions, according to the oversight office's report. The remaining 2 percent — or 17,789 — were classified top secret.

Even making the unlikely assumption that all 881,943 decisions involved foreign secrets, it would factor out to $20,409.48 per secret, according to our calculator.

But if we rate intelligence-gathering agencies only by the hottest stuff they get — the top secrets — the cost works out to a little more than a million bucks for each one.

TASTE IN THE PENTAGON: Assistant Defense Secretary Richard Perle is nobody's fool. When he filled out the routine "trivia questionnaire" for newsworthy officials, he evidently wanted to discourage reporters from inviting him out for a burger and a beer. He listed his favorite food as "fresh beluga caviar," his favorite wine as "Romanee Conti" and his entree of choice as "grilled breast of duck." In the same sly vein, Perle listed his favorite game as "politics" and his favorite saying as, "We hold these truths to be self evident (and so on)."

• • •

UNDER THE DOME: Rep. Ken Gray, D-Ill., got stuck with a bundle of unused tickets to Inauguration festivities last January, and paid the $3,283.20 bill out of his own pocket — temporarily. He was then reimbursed from his campaign fund.

MINI-EDITORIAL: Some of our more liberal critics can't seem to understand how we could have been so critical of the late Nicaraguan dictator Anastasio Somoza and equally censurious of his Sandinista successors. One of our political heroes, Thomas Jefferson, expressed it much better than we could 185 years ago: "I have sworn upon the altar of God, eternal hostility against every form of tyranny over the mind of man."

Bush carries peace plan to China

WASHINGTON — Among the documents Vice President George Bush carried when he left Washington for Beijing Thursday were papers posing a possibility that would have seemed a fantasy only a few years ago: sending a Peace Corps unit to communist China.

Rowland Evans

Robert Novak

Bush has obtained through diplomatic channels a secret Chinese plan to request Peace Corps volunteers. That not only suggests the closer Beijing-Washington relationship but a tacit admission by China that it is not a superpower but a largely undeveloped country in need of help.

A footnote: The vice president's conservative critics were claiming that he added insult to injury of the Nationalist Chinese regime on Taiwan by his timing. Bush's trip began on Oct.10, the Taiwanese national holiday.

DISTAFF CABINETMAKING

Just as conservatives were ready to celebrate the replacement of liberal Margaret Heckler as secretary of Health and Human Services (HHS) by California Reaganite conservative David Swoap, they have confronted White House concern over removing another woman from the Cabinet.

Worried about the female Cabinet composition reduced from three to one if Heckler is replaced by a man, senior White House staffers went on a search for a woman. They have come up with Ann McLaughlin, deputy secretary of the interior and wife of television talk show host John McLaughlin.

Ann McLaughlin, who previously was a key adviser to Donald T. Regan as assistant secretary of the Treasury, is a skilled administrator with conservative views. But she is not a part of the conservative movement, which prefers Swoap (a former HHS under secretary who now is California secretary of Health and Welfare). McLaughlin previously was passed over for two Cabinet portfolios, Interior and Energy.

NON-BOSS GORBY

French President Francois Mitterrand and his top aides were surprised that on several occasions Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev said he would have to consult his colleagues before commenting about new proposals they raised on trade, diplomacy and other bilateral questions.

That meant one thing to subtle French leaders long schooled in statecraft: Gorbachev has not yet "consolidated" his full control over the Soviet hierarchy and cannot make policy on his own.

However, on detailed arms questions Gorbachev displayed a thorough knowledge of figures and formulas. In this area, he proved more knowledgable than Mitterrand and far more so than the man who will face him across the summit table next month in Geneva: Ronald Reagan.

DOLE'S DELAY

Although he has complained all year that the White House has not spent enough time on deficit reduction, Senate Majority Leader Robert J. Dole delayed consideration of the Gramm-Rudman deficit-reduction bill for nearly a week.

White House chief of staff Donald T. Regan was ready late in the week of Sept. 23 to sign onto the budget-cutting scheme by Sens. Phil Gramm of Texas and Warren Rudman of New Hampshire. But Dole protested that it would not work and might well prove counterproductive in trying to pass the debt-limit raiser.

At the congressional leadership meeting with President Reagan on Oct. 1, however, Dole signalled he had changed his mind. An expert vote-counter, he correctly estimated that the tide had turned for Gramm-Rudman and would pass the Senate easily. But privately, the majority leader harbors grave doubts about the scheme's effectiveness.

MORE MOLES

A private letter to President Reagan by Sen. Jesse Helms, warning that the Central Intelligence Agency is underestimating Soviet strength, asks for a "broadened inquiry" into possible additional "moles" burrowing inside the U.S. intelligence apparatus.

Helms' suspicions go beyond two Soviet agents recently uncovered inside the CIA. Wide penetration by the Kremlin could prove extremely costly to the U.S., causing underestimates of the full potency of the Soviet military machine. Helms has criticized CIA analysis for being too benign.

The senator's letter warned that Soviet camouflage of its rapidly-expanding ICBM force and other weapons systems, including submarine pens, is badly distorting American knowedge of the Kremlin's arms buildup. Helms told Reagan that Soviet "camouflage, concealment and deception" of nuclear weapons is the most serious case yet of Soviet treaty non-compliance.

Analyzing attitudes revealing

PARIS — One angry contributor to my abundant ration of hate mail denounces the presumption of trying to tell Americans about other people's views of the world. In rasping terms, he asks a reasonable question, in effect: How can you know what Europeans think?

Flora Lewis

The problem that's been bothering me is how people — especially government decision-makers — can fail to know so much that seems obvious to observers on the spot.

Basically, both questions are about whether it's better to console an audience with what it wants to hear or to provide unpleasant warnings in time for useful judgment.

First, though, is the factual issue of how major trends in international affairs can be discerned. There has been a tremendous growth of sources of information. So while predictions are always dicey, there is less excuse now than ever before to misread situations as they stand. Politicians are necessarily in the business of assessing public opinion. They can be wrong or stubborn, and forced out of business. But talking to enough politicians from opposing parties gives an independent observer a basis for measuring attitudes of a far larger number of people than a pollster can sample.

Every now and then, an election comes along to provide a test. Reading election results, of course, can be as confusing as reading tea leaves on specific issues, but they do decide where the power lies.

Then, there is the local press. It may be biased, clumsy, make mistakes. But major papers and magazines don't keep publishing if they don't succeed in reflecting what their readers want to know about and are talking about. When the French weekly Le Point has a mushroom cloud and the title "Is there a danger of war?" on its cover, as it once did, it certainly shows a widespread apprehension, not an editor's whimsy.

A relatively new source of information on underlying issues throughout the democratic world is the proliferation of institutes and think tanks. Many are modeled on America's Council on Foreign Relations, or the British-based International Institute for Strategic Studies. These groups publish all kinds of reports and are always holding conferences where people from different countries and different disciplines argue out an issue. In this way one can get exposure to a wide spectrum of expertise, prejudice and judgment.

Beyond all that, a traveling reporter seeks out people with knowledge and crosses the path of many people willing to talk. When all these different sources echo the same themes, it's sheer bull-headedness to insist on the contrary. So much for whether it's possible to document European fears about American policy. It is.

Based on results of a comparative poll in nine countries, the International Herald Tribune said, "The Reagan administration came to office in the firm belief that what the allies wanted from Washington was a strong America willing to stand up to the Russians. They were wrong. The West Europeans wanted a strong — and consistent — American government that would talk to the Russians." All the rest of the evidence supports this.

Why then does it seem to come as a surprise? In addition to all these public sources, the administration has secret reports from the State Department, the CIA, the Pentagon and elsewhere.

There are times when an outsider is tempted to suspect they aren't good reporters. It usually isn't so. A specific test was the grievous misreading of Syria's position in Lebanon in 1983 that it would not accept the Israeli-Lebanese agreement withdrawing its troops.

U.S. embassies all around the Middle East were clearly aware that ignoring Syria meant new trouble. Didn't they tell Washington? The answer American diplomats gave was yes and no. They did report, but they didn't harp on it too insistently because officials who warn that a pet Washington idea won't work risk being put down.

There is always a problem between the field and headquarters in any organization. The center has to take much more into account than its local agent. But if it doesn't trust him, it wears blinders. British, French, German, other foreign services don't seem to suffer as acutely as American diplomats in getting their messages heard, even if their recommendations aren't accepted.

There is a blockage in the U.S. government reporting system that can cost lives. Secrets and leaks aren't the problem. The significant political information about the world America shares is not hard to gather, just hard to swallow for those who want to make it fit their sense of omnipotence.

Americans spending less time in hospital, new statistics show

WASHINGTON (AP) — Americans are spending progressively less time in hospitals, with the average length of stay dropping to 6.6 days last year, according to new government statistics.

That's down from a national average of 6.9 days for each hospitalized person in 1983 and 7.1 days in 1982, according to the National Center for Health Statistics.

Overall, the center said 37,162,000 Americans — excluding newborns — were hsopitalized last year for one reason or another. That total is for short-term hospitals. That would exclude such places as mental institutions, nursing homes and longe-term convalescent institutions.

That total number of hospitalizations was down from 38.7 million a year earlier, although close to the annual average for the 1980s. The general trend over the years has been for gradual increases in the actual number of hospitalizations, as the general population has grown.

As in the past, women outnumbered men in entering hospitals, 22.3 million to 14.9 million, but the males spent slightly longer in the hospital than women, 7.0 days compared to 6.3 on average.

The overall hospitalization rate for women was 184 per 1,000, about 39 percent more than the male rate of 132, "because of the large number of women in their childbearing years who are hospitalized for deliveries and other obstetrical conditions," the study said.

Excluding childbearing from the statistics drops the female hospitalization rate to 152 per 1,000, only about 15 percent higher than for men.

"The length of hospital stays for females was shorter than that for males primarily because the average length of stay of the 3.9 million women who were hospitalized for deliveries was only 3.4 days," according to the study.

For women hospitalized for non-obstetrical reasons, the length of stay was 6.9 days, nearly the same the men's 7.0.

Southerners were the most likely Americans to enter a hospital last year, with a rate of 168.8 per 1,000 people, slightly ahead of residents of the North Central region. who had a rate of 167.9.

Residents of the Northeast had a hospitalization rate of 149.3 per 1,000, while 138.7 out of every 1,000 Westerners entered a hospital.

However, once in the hospital, Northeasterners stayed the longest, at 7.8 days on average. They were followed by North Central residents at 6.9 days, Southerners at 6.1 and Westerners, 5.7.

The study also found that the bigger the hospital, the longer the stay, peaking at 7.5 days in hospitals of 500 beds or more. Larger hospitals are more likely to offer treatment for more complex illnesses, requiring longer stays.

Length of stay declined gradually to only 5.3 days in facilities with fewer than 100 beds.

Diseases of the circulatory system were the most common reason for hospitalization last year, affecting 238.6 of every 10,000 Americans. That includes heart disease, blood vessel disease and stroke.

Digestive problems came second at 183.6 per 10,000, followed by injuries, 148.1; respiratory diseases, 143.5 and kidney, urinary and genital disease, 132.9.

As to length of hospital stays, broken hips were the longest, averaging 15.8 days, followed by mental psychosis, 14.5 days.

Man hiking to show Army he has 'right stuff'

Noreen Pepke of New Haven Mich., offers her son Allen, 18, an apple along a road in the Detroit suburb of Warren. Pepke began a 526-mile trek to Washington on Sunday to prove that medical problems with his feet should not keep him out of the Army.

WARREN, Mich. (AP) — An 18-year-old man plans to prove that his foot problems should not keep him out of the Army by lacing up his combat boots and hiking 526 miles to the nation's capital.

"It's never limited me from anything, ever," Allen Pepke of New Haven, Mich., said Sunday just before beginning the first leg of his trek.

He was carrying a letter asking President Reagan to intervene on his behalf.

Pepke, 18, sought to join the Army twice since leaving high school but was rejected because of what officials said were unacceptable medical problems with his feet. He said his goal was to become a military pilot.

He said he had not heard the results of his appeal to the Military Entrance Processing Command in Chicago and planned to begin his hike to prove he had the right stuff for soldiering.

"I'm walking 40 miles a day," he said during a telephone interview from his church, The Unity Church of Today. "I plan on walking to Washington in 15 days."

Pepke said he would wear Army fatigues, a back pack and combat boots to help illustrate his point.

His mother, Noreen Pepke, and a family friend will accompany him in an auto, he said.

Pepke said he had a dermatological affliction that causes his feet to peel. He said that after an Army doctor in Detroit diagnosed it as psoriasis he sought opinions from two of his own doctors.

Farrakhan 'frightening man,' rival leader says

WASHINGTON (AP) — Louis Farrakhan is a "frightening man" whose "rhetoric of hate" has harmed his followers, a rival Black Muslim leader says.

Wallace Deen Muhammad, son of Nation of Islam founder Elijah Muhammad, says he plans a nationwide speaking tour later this year to try to counter a recent 10-month, 14-city tour by Farrakhan, The Washington Times reported in today's editions.

Farrakhan's racist comments have divided the black community and led to public misunderstanding of Black Muslims, Muhammad told the newspaper in a Chicago interview.

"His words are wrong. His philosophy is wrong. His position is wrong, and his strategy is wrong," said Muhammad.

Farrakhan's anti-Semitic remarks were widely reported during the last presidential campaign, in which he supported Jesse Jackson's unsuccessful bid for the Democratic nomination, and in subsequent speeches.

Muhammad, 51, describes himself as the spiritual leader of about 100,000 Black Muslims in America.

"I feel a desperation inside of me to set the record straight," Muhammad said. "We Muslims have a sense of moral responsibility and commitment. We are not radicals. We are not against any religious group. We are not against any race. And that should be our message."

Muhammad was named as a successor to his father by leaders of the Nation of Islam in 1975. He changed the name of the group to the American Muslim Mission.

He said under his leadership, the group moved toward more traditional Islamic practices, opened its doors to all races, and disbanded its security forces. The organization was dissolved in May, leaving its 200 worship centers across the country autonomous, Muhammad said.

Farrakhan left the group in 1977 and formed his own organization, which he called the Nation of Islam.

Diet Pill Sweeping U.S.

New Super "Dream Pill" Lose Weight As You Sleep!

No Dieting — Eat All You Want

NEWPORT BEACH, Calif. — An amazing new super "dream pill" has recently been developed and perfected that reportedly "guarantees" that you will easily lose up to 10 pounds in 10 days. Best of all, it allows you to "eat as much as you want of your favorite foods and still lose a pound a day or more starting from the very first day until you achieve your ideal weight and figure."

This remarkable new diet pill combines two natural substances which cause adults to lose weight fast by "tricking" the body into acting like a teenager. These nutritional substances, called L-arginine and L-ornithine, stimulate the body's production of growth hormone. Dr. Robert Harris, a specialist in nutritional medicine in Stafford Springs, Connecticut, was recently quoted as explaining: "Growth Hormone may be what's responsible for allowing teenagers to down thousands of calories in hamburgers and other foods and still be thin as a rail.

"Growth Hormone is present in people up through the teenage years, then slowly diminishes with age. But L-arginine and L-orthinine make the body 'think' it belongs to a teenager again, allowing adults to eat as much as they want — and still be thin and wiry."

"Pill Does All The Work"

According to the manufacturer, "the pill itself does all the work while you quickly lose weight with NO starvation 'diet menus' to follow, NO calorie counting, NO exercise and NO hunger pangs." The pill is not a drug! It is 100% safe consisting of natural amino acids just like those found in the foods you eat everyday.

Life Extension Authors Confirm Results

Durk Pearson and Sandy Shaw, graduates of MIT and UCLA respectively, introduced these miracle substances to the public in their runaway best selling book, Life Extension. They discovered the weight-loss effects by accident. Sandy fell and broke her foot and started taking L-arginine because of its well-known healing qualities. Much to her amazement Sandy lost 25 pounds of fat and put on 5 pounds of firm-toned muscle in six weeks. According to Durk's calculations, the pill caused Sandy to lose 400 times as much fat as she would otherwise have lost — without dieting!

Lose Weight While You Sleep

One beautiful thing about these miracle pills is the ease with which they work. You don't have to count calories and you don't have to follow special diets or eat special foods. You don't even have to exercise. The best time to take the pills is just before you go to bed at night. That way, the pounds melt away even as you sleep. You wake up every morning, slimmer, happier and feeling younger!

The super dream pill is already sweeping the country with glowing reports of easy and fast weight loss from formerly overweight people in all walks of life who are now slim, trim, and attractive again.

Extraordinary Guarantee

Place your order now. If you are not completely satisfied with the thinner "new you" simply return the empty container for a full refund of your entire purchase price. No questions asked. Now what could be fairer than that?

STATE

A slow-moving cold front marched southward through the Lone Star State today, triggering showers and scattered thunderstorms, while fog blanketed the East Texas area.

The front angled across Northwest Texas from just south of Wichita Falls to south of Lubbock, the National Weather Service said.

Scattered thunderstorms dotted most of the central and east parts of the Panhandle and South Plains. Much cooler air followed the front, dropping readings into the 40s in the Panhandle and the 50s across most of the South Plains.

Winds behind the front shifted to the north at 10 to 20 mph. Low cloudiness covered Texas behind the front along with patches of drizzle.

Temperatures ahead of the front ranged from the 70s to 50s in far Southwest Texas. Clear skies covered the Rio Grande and lower valley and upper and lower coastal sections.

Mostly cloudy skies covered the rest of the state. Scattered thunderstorms developed over the Coastal Bend and over the gulf waters to the south and southwest of Galveston.

It should be mostly cloudy and cooler statewide through Tuesday. Scattered thunderstorms were expected to spread into North and South Texas by tonight and throughout most sections on Tuesday before ending from the west to east late Tuesday.

NATION

Rain dotted broad sections of the nation from the Northwest to New England today while sections of Colorado had snow and a tropical depression off the South Carolina Coast moved out to sea.

Showers and thunderstorms spread across the southern Plains, lower Mississippi Valley and lower Ohio Valley.

Showers dotted eastern sections of the Carolinas and New England, the upper Mississippi Valley, the central Plains, the Pacific Northwest and northern Arizona.

Snowshowers spread across the central and northern mountains of Colorado and the Front Range, prompting a travelers' advisory for higher elevations.

A tropical depression that formed from the remnants of Tropical Storm Isabel chugged out to sea today, the National Weather Service said.

The depression with winds of 35 mph formed off the South Carolina coast Sunday.

IRVING- Even though running back Tony Dorsett beat the Steelers on a stunning 56-yard pass play down the middle to help Dallas to a 10-3 halftime lead, it looked as though Pittsburgh might deny his bid for 10,000 career yards rushing.

Going into the game, Dorsett needed only 31 yards. At half the former Heisman Trophy winner from Pitt had only three yards and it took nine carries to get that many.

But this wasn't the Steelers of old. While defensively stubborn, offensively without Terry Bradsahw, Franco Harris and Lynn Swann, the Johnstown Refugees might have been more descriptive. And in the second half, the Cowboys got their ground-game going.

Things opened up on the ground in the second half and Dorsett not only made the 10,000-yard club a select six, but broke loose on a 35-yard scoring run and wound up 113 yards rushing for the day.

DALLAS WON 27-13 to go 5-1 in the NFC East and opened a two-game lead in the division as the defense limited the Steelers to 84 yards rushing and intercepted three passes shared the day's plaudits with Dorsett.

"I'll still take the victory over Pittsburgh," said Dorsett when asked about the milestone day. And a victory over Pittsburgh is something Dallas hasn't savored since 1972.

The run that put Dorsett in select company came in the third quarter and was a 19-yarder around the left side that upped his careeer total to 10,014.

His thoughts on the run that ended with cornerback Donnie Shell knocking him out of bounds? "Just hold on to the ball. That's all that was on my mind."

The significance for Tony? "All I know is that I'm in a group with the other 10,000 yard rushers. I accomplished a milestone in my career and it was a great day for the Cowboys."

The touchdown pass from White in the second period was almost as significant for Dorsett. "I've been telling them for nine years I'd like to become more involved in our passing game. Coach Landry made the adjustment for that play before the game. He said if they were in a man coverage to run straight down the middle and something might open up."

"In man-to-man they are vulnerable," quarterback Danny White concurred.

White explained that the passing game is an important part of the Dallas running game and "it was the short quick passes to the outside that opened up the run for us in the second half, by taking the Pittsburgh line backers to the outside."

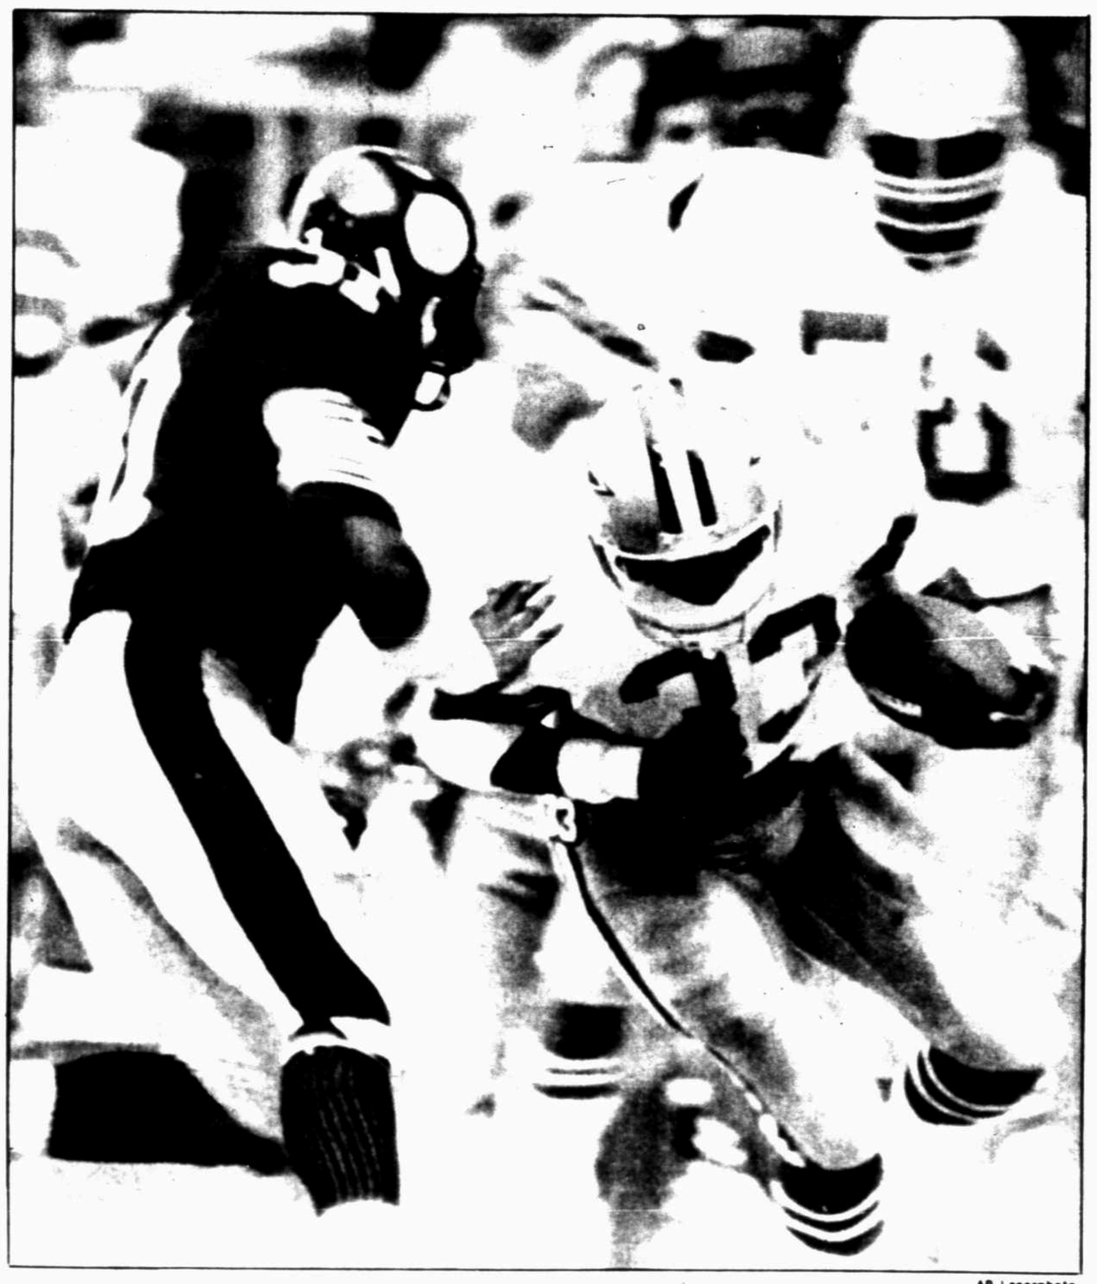

AFTER LINEBACKER Gene Lockhart intercepted David Woodley and returned it 19 yards for a TD, Dallas led 20-3 with 14:10 gone in the third period. But the dormant Steelers threatened to make a game of it on a 34-yard field goal by Gary Anderson and a one-yard TD run by Walter Abercrombie to wrap up an 85-yard drive on which Woodley and wide receiver Calvin Sweeny clicked on a 69-yard pass to the Dallas two. That made it 20-13 Dallas with 6:45 of the final period gone.

However, Dorsett sewed it up by capping a memorable afternoon on a broken play touchdown run of 35 yards, on which White threw the key block, to give Dallas a 27-13 lead with less than six minutes to play.

"Danny looked good on the play," grinned Dorsett, who started right, found a crowd of well-wishers, so reversed direction and ran to the far side of the field. "I think the block surprised him. On long runs, it's usually a receiver downfield who shields off the defensive player. In this case it was Danny."

Anderson got Pittsburgh on the score board first with a 48-yard field goal with 40 seconds gone in the second period. It was the last time Pittsburgh led. Dorsett's 56-yard reception straight over the middle between two defenders came less than two minutes later.

Dallas Cowboy Tony Dorsett runs into the record books on this carry as he becomes only the sixth player in NFL history to break 10,000 career yards rushing. Dorsett gained 19 yards on the play before being forced out of bounds by Pittsburgh's Donnie Shell.

Payton leads Chicago to 26-10 defensive win over San Francisco

Associated Press

The Chicago Bears handed the San Francisco a line of two and the National Football League champions had no responses ready.

The Bears, behind superlative efforts by both their offensive and defensive lines, remained unbeaten Sunday with a convincing 26-10 decision over the 49ers. Chicago, 6-0, avenged a 23-0 loss to San Francisco in the NFC title game last season by sacking 49ers QB Joe Montana seven times. Walter Payton had a pair of touchdown runs and Kevin Butler booted four field goals.

"I give our offensive and defensive lines all the credit," said Bears quarterback Jim McMahon, agreeing with Coach Mike Ditka's decision to give both lines game balls. "We controlled the line of scrimmage."

Elsewhere Sunday, the Los Angeles Rams also remained unbeaten with a comeback 31-27 victory over winless Tampa Bay.

Bears 26, 49ers 10

Chicago moved to a 16-0 lead and never was challenged by San Francisco's anemic offense. Montana passed for only 160 yards on 17 completions in 29 attempts, and the 49ers' runners managed only 67 yards. The Bears' offensive line opened massive holes for Payton while the defense continually pressured Montana.

"When the 49ers beat us last year, they didn't show much courtesy or dignity," Payton said. "They said negative things about our offense after shutting us out. We thought about that all during the offseason and the preseason."

And they did something about it Sunday, dropping the champs to 3-3.

"We were beaten about as badly as we ever have been," said 49ers Coach Bill Walsh. "There isn't any way you can be a Cinderella team forever. We're now in a position in which we must be considered as a very average football team."

Rams 31, Buccaneers 27

Tampa Bay threw a scare into the Rams but fell victim to a pair of touchdowns on interceptions of Steve DeBerg passes. LeRoy Irvin and Carl Ekern returned second-half pickoffs for scores, Irvin's for 34 yards and Ekern's for 33 yards.

The Los Angeles defense held James Wilder, the NFL's leading rusher, to just 29 yards. Eric Dickerson, who scored on a 6-yard run in the second quarter, finished the day with 75 yards.

"Today's game was about as wild and chaotic as I've ever seen," said Rams Coach John Robinson. "I'm just happy to get out of town with a win."

Redskins 24, Lions 3

It's easy to admire the durable Riggins, at 36 still a force at fullback. He joined Jim Brown as the only backs to rush for 100 touchdowns in a career when he scored three times and ran for 114 yards. Riggins scored on runs of one, five and 25 yards and moved within three of Brown's 106 rushing TDs.

Riggins' third touchdown was the 113th score of his career, lifting him into a second-place tie with Lenny Moore on the NFL's all-time touchdown list.

The Lions, who have lost 11 straight to the Skins, have never beaten them in Washington, a 13-game slide that dates back to 1937.

NFL Roundup

Bengals 35, Giants 30

Despite the second most prolific passing game in league history, Phil Simms could not bring New York a victory. Simms set three team marks as he completed 40 of 62 passes for an astounding 513 yards. Only Norm Van Brocklin, with 554 yards for the Rams in 1951, had more.

But Simms was intercepted for a third-quarter touchdown by James Griffin, then fumbled away the ball two plays later at the Giants 1. The Bengals also sacked Simms seven times for 70 yards in losses.

"It doesn't mean much," Simms said. "When we look at the game (films) tomorrow, all I'll see is what I screwed up. We gave away too many opportunities to win this game."

Simms' counterpart, Cincinnati's Boomer Esiason, led his team to a 21-0 lead against the NFL's top-rated defense. Esiason hit his first eight passes, two for scores — 16 yards to Cris Collinsworth and 27 yards to James Brooks.

Chargers 31, Chiefs 20

Mark Herrmann might not make the San Diego fans forget the injured Dan Fouts, but he's certainly easing the pain of Fouts' absence. The backup quarterback threw two touchdown passes and went 6-for-6 in an 80-yard drive to the go-ahead score. He finished with 26-for-36 for 320 yards.

It was San Diego's first divisional win in 12 games, dating back to the Chargers' triumph over Kansas City on Dec. 11, 1983.

"I'm so happy to get my first win here," said Herrmann, who was acquired in an off-season deal with Indianapolis. "We needed it so badly."

Seahawks 30, Falcons 26

Seattle fell behind winless Atlanta but rallied on Dave Krieg's fourth TD pass, a 12-yarder to Paul Skansi. Krieg took the Seahawks 86 yards in 16 plays to Skanski's touchdown and wound up hitting 33 of 51 passes for 405 yards.

Cards rip Dodgers to tie series at two

ST. LOUIS (AP) — After basking in the playoff limelight for the second time in three years, Tito Landrum labeled it deja vu with a twist.

"I would have to say that tonight will be indelible, but they're two different things," the St. Louis outfielder said following his record-tying, four-hit performance in the Cardinals' 12-2 triumph Sunday night over the Los Angeles Dodgers in Game 4 of the National League playoffs. "Tonight, being thrown in there at the last moment might have been the best thing. I sure didn't have time to worry."

Like his teammates, the 30-year-old Landrum arrived at Busch Stadium expecting Vince Coleman to start in left field.

Two hours before game time, a near-disaster drastically shifted that plan. Coleman was caught in a 1,200-pound motorized tarpaulin that was being rolled onto the field after batting practice.

"I was getting ready to walk down the stairs, and I heard the screams. I saw Vince lying on the ground," Landrum said. "My first reaction was I hope he didn't break his ankle or his leg. I realized that I would be inserted in the lineup."

Once in Manager Whitey Herzog's revised lineup, Coleman's replacement wasted little time in making his presence felt.

His RBI single started the Cardinals' nine-run second inning, the biggest uprising in playoff history. Before the inning ended, Landrum had singled again to tie another standard set earlier in the frame by the Cards' Jack Clark.

Landrum also singled in the fourth and eighth innings and drove in three runs.

"I'm not going to change my format now," said Landrum, admittedly a free swinger at the plate. "I've been successful at it too long. I see the ball, and I hit it. I try to react. Too many times I've hurt myself by thinking too long."

Landrum's first brush with the limelight came in 1983 when, as a Baltimore Oriole, he hit a 10th-inning home run to defeat the Chicago White Sox in the deciding game of the American League playoffs.

Although Landrum was the center of attention, he was by no means the only Cardinal hitting star on an evening when St. Louis totaled 15 hits in squaring the best-of-seven series at two victories apiece.

Clark had three hits, Terry Pendleton added three RBIs and Tommy Herr drove in two runs with a single and a sacrifice fly. The Cards sent 14 batters to the plate in their big inning, belaboring Jerry Reuss and relievers Rick Honeycutt and Bobby Castillo for eight singles.

"The balls they hit, the majority were on the ground," Los Angeles Manager Tom Lasorda said. "Everyone was finding holes."

As Cardinal hitters swung from the heels, St. Louis left-hander John Tudor kept the Dodgers off-balance with his pinpoint control.

He didn't yield a hit until Steve Sax doubled down the left-field line to start the Los Angeles sixth. Bill Madlock homered leading off the seventh, and Tudor left at the end of the inning with a three-hitter.

Herzog, who plans to start Tudor in the seventh game if the series goes that far, said he had been tempted to lift him even earlier.

"But we were down 2-1 in games. I didn't want to take any chances," Herzog said. "If he'd had a no-hitter going after seven, I would have left him in there."

Lasorda shook off the defeat and said the playoff is now a "best-of-three" series.

"I'll let you know tomorrow afternoon," the Dodgers' pilot said when asked if he thought Los Angeles would rebound in today's fifth game.

Clark, like Landrum, said the Cards had reacted positively once the shock of Coleman's injury had worn off.

"We may have been a little bit inspired. It was such a freak thing. As it got closer to game time, we were in there joking and kidding with him," Clark said. "He seemed to be in good spirits. He let us all know we should just go out and play."

St. Louis' recovery from 4-1 and 8-2 setbacks in the first two games at Dodger Stadium may be typical, Clark added.

"Thinking back, Ozzie (Smith) said it best when he said that we don't seem to play well after a day or two off. We seem to play better when we have our backs against the wall. We're just looking forward to winning tomorrow and going back to LA with the lead."

Kosar hurts Oilers in 21-6 victory rally

HOUSTON (AP) — When the Houston Oilers came out for the second half against the Cleveland Browns with a 6-0 lead, Oilers Coach Hugh Campbell had a good feeling.

But "we should have smelled blood," Campbell said.

It turned out to be their own.

Bernie Kosar, starting his first National Football League game Sunday, opened the wound with a 68-yard touchdown bomb to Clarence Weathers on his first pass of the third period, and the Browns swarmed in for the kill that ended in a 21-6 victory.

"Once we see some success, we're like sharks smelling blood," Browns nose guard Bob Golic said. "We had seen Houston play well against teams like Miami and others, but we'd also seen those same teams come back and beat them."

Royals keep hopes alive with 2-0 win

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Something the Kansas City Royals joked about all season has turned into reality. They seem to play their best only in times of greatest stress.

Leading the American League West by 1½ games, Kansas City lost three straight to Minnesota and dropped into second with a week to go. Only then did the Royals turn it around, taking three of four from front-running California in a pressure-packed showdown to capture the title.

On Sunday, down three games to one in the best-of-seven American League playoffs, the Royals came up with a 2-0 victory on Danny Jackson's eight-hit, six-strikeout pitching.

Now it's back to Toronto, where right-hander Mark Gubicza duels Blue Jay right-hander Doyle Alexander Tuesday night in Game Six. Game Seven, if necessary, will unfold in Toronto Wednesday night.

"I don't know what it is about this club, but we just seem to do better when our backs are to the wall and people are giving us up for dead," said Hal McRae, the Royals' designated hitter and unofficial captain. "If we've got breathing room, that's when we can't get our breath."

"We've been this way all year," said Manager Dick Howser, who admitted he's never had a team behave quite like this. "We've had some stretches where we couldn't win to save our necks. But teams and managers that worry about losing are home watching on television. We've always found a way to bounce back."

Rebels need new start

From Staff Reports

The Midland Lee Rebels lost a tough football game Friday against Odessa Permian, a game that cost them undisputed possession of first place in the District 4-5A standings. Now that the big TV game is over, it's time to turn thoughts toward the Big Spring Steers this Friday.

The Rebels fell to 4-2 overall and 2-1 in 4-5A play, leaving them in a three-way tie for second place with San Angelo and Odessa High. Permian leads the league with a 6-0-1, 2-0-1 record.

Lee came within five yards of a potential victory against Permian, missing on a fourth-and-three situation in the final five minutes of the game. Since the Panthers had missed an extra point earlier in the ball game, if Lee would have scored they would only have needed to kick the PAT to win. That, and the defense stop Permian's final possession.

The Steers, 27-15 losers to Abilene Cooper, fell into sole possession of last place, trailing Midland High and Cooper. Big Spring is 1-5, 0-3, while the Bulldogs are 3-3, 1-2 and the Cougars are 1-5, 1-2.

The Rebels already have two of their toughest league games out of the way this year, having played Permian and San Angelo so far, but that doesn't mean it gets any easier.

Rebel coach Jack Tayrien is fond of the saying, "on any given night, any team in this district can win."

The only time that statement doesn't seem to be true is when Permian is playing — the opponents very rarely win — and Big Spring, who are working on their second straight winless 4-5A season.

On the ground, the Rebel attack is led by Rodney Sims with 349 yards followed by Tommy Wood at 299 and Tuey Rankin at 241. Rankin, however, hasn't played for two games because of a shoulder injury and it isn't know if he'll be back for the Steers.

Also, Kirk Thurman has 205 yards.

In Rankin's absence, Rodney Johnson has been guiding the Rebels and is doing an effective job. He's already by far surpassed Rankin in passing yardage, 296-123, and has thrown the ball only five times more.

Overall this year, the Steers have generated very little defense to go with a fair offensive attack. Big Spring has scored 118 points but has allowed 194.

Lee has played both sides of the ball well, scoring 160 and giving up 53.

ELSEWHERE AROUND the league Friday, the Midland High Bulldogs travel to San Angelo to take on the Bobcats, Odessa Permian is at Cooper and Odessa High hosts Abilene High.

The Bulldogs, at 1-2 in 4-5A play, no longer have any room for error and will have to play their best game of the year to take out the strong Bobcats and keep playoff hopes alive. Two losses can be made up in this district, but three seems almost too much too hope for.

The Bulldogs are lead by quarterback Matt Marcum, who has completed 55-of-128 passes so far this year for 867 yards and four touchdowns. The only problem the MHS senior has seen has been in the form of interceptions with 11.

Marcum's favorite target this year has been Kenny De La Garza, who has 20 catches for 257 yards and three TDs. Also, Bobby Williams has 11-for-215 and Jake Madrid 10-for-135.

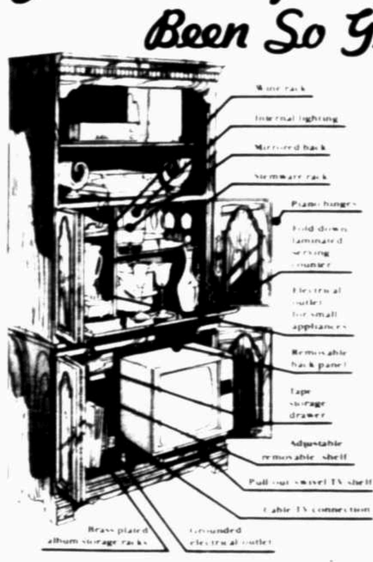

On the ground, backup halfback Anthony Adkinson leads the Bulldog rushing corps with 302 yards while starters Mark Johnson and Jake Madrid have 268 and 250 respectively.

The Bulldogs have given up two more points than they've scored this year, 120-118, while San Angelo is third in the league in defense, allowing only 37 points. On the other side of the ball, the Bobcats have scored 134, fourth in 4-5A attacks.

ODESSA PERMIAN and Odessa High are the top two offensive teams in 4-5A play, scoring 200 and 182 points respectively in six games.

The Panthers are second in defense, allowing only 36 points — trailing only Abilene High's 33-point effort. The Bronchos have proven they can be scored upon, giving up 100 points, but not outscored often.

Baylor vs. Texas A&M

Bears, Aggies in battle of leaders

Associated Press

The Baylor Bears are for real and they aren't as nice as their cute little cub mascot who drinks soda after every touchdown.

The Bears, snapping a four-game losing streak to Southern Methodist, clawed their second consecutive Southwest Conference opponent on the road to setup a big showdown Saturday night in Waco against surprising Texas A&M.

Baylor is 3-0 and and being closely hounded by Arkansas and A&M, each 2-0, after Saturday's round of SWC jousting.

Baylor took a 21-14 bite out of SMU in Texas Stadium while Texas A&M piled up its most points ever against Houston, winning 43-16 in Kyle Field. Arkansas kept its record spotless by whipping Texas Tech 30-7 in Lubbock.

Rice won its first SWC game since 1981 by downing Texas Christian 34-27.

Texas, which is 1-0 in SWC play, tumbled from the unbeaten ranks with a 14-7 loss to Oklahoma in their annual Red River rumble.

"They'll be hanging from the rafters in Baylor Stadium when we play the Aggies Saturday night," said Baylor Coach Grant Teaff. "It's going to be quite a game."

Teaff said the SMU game convinced him that his Bears are a Top Twenty team.

"I'd vote for us in the Top Twenty," said Teaff, whose Bears are already ranked No. 19 in The Associated Press poll. "For us to have a good year we knew we'd have to win on the road against some good teams. We're beginning to exhibit the characteristics of a good football team."

Baylor lineman Kevin Marsh said, "When you knock off somebody like SMU then other teams have to look up to you."

It doesn't get any easier from here, Teaff said. "That's the way of life in the Southwest Conference. Next week will be for all the marbles just like this week was for all the marbles. The great thing for us now is that SMU is our ally. They're going to beat some people land help us out down the road."

The A&M-Baylor game overshadows a big traditional showdown, Texas-Arkansas. ABC-TV will televise the game from Fayetteville at 2:30 p.m. Saturday.

In other games, Rice is at Texas Tech at 12:04 p.m. in the SWC's TV game of the week, SMU is at Houston at 2 p.m. and TCU hosts North Texas at 2 p.m.

Aggie Coach Jackie Sherrill said his team "deserves to be in the Top Twenty." The Aggies lost their opener to Alabama and have been unranked all season.

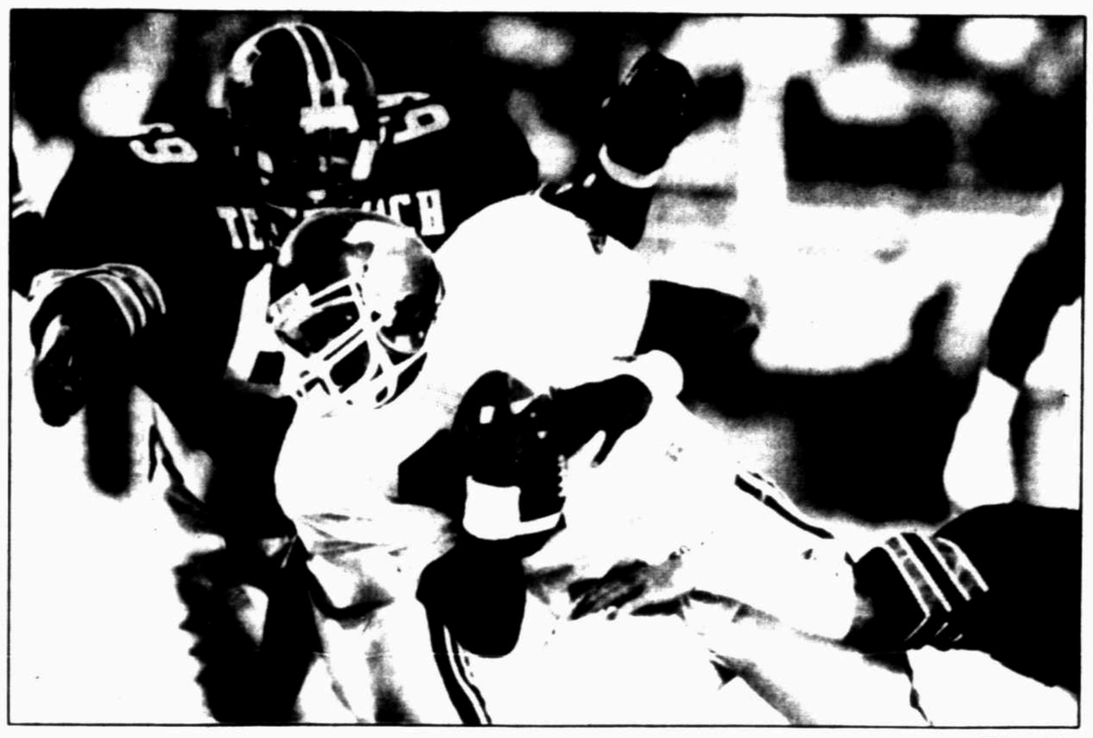

TCU Coach Jim Wacker has seen his team fall off the cliff after he suspended seven players.

"I guess it can't get any worse," said Wacker. "We just have one basic problem. We're not a very good football team."

Rice Coach Watson Brown said, "I'm proud that the idea of winning their first conference game is off the backs of our kids."

For Arkansas, it was their ninth straight victory in Lubbock and 13th victory in the last 14 games against Texas Tech.

Texas was held to four first downs by Oklahoma, fewest by a Longhorn team since they got three in 1939 against Texas A&M.

ROYALS

If ever a team seemed ready to hang its head and accept death, it was the Royals. On Saturday night, Charlie Leibrandt pitched brilliantly against Toronto's Dave Stieb and took a 1-0 lead into the ninth. But the Blue Jays rallied for three runs — beating bullpen ace Dan Quisenberry for the second time — to close to within one victory of Canada's first World Series.

Less than 24 hours later, though, the Royals came out smoking. Lonnie Smith, breaking out of a series-long slump, doubled off starter Jimmy Key and stole third. Then George Brett, who would be held hitless, grounded to short to bring in the run.

Frank White bunted perfectly leading off the second and wheeled into third on a single by Steve Balboni. Darryl Motley's sacrifice fly scored White with what turned out to be the final run in another pitching gem.

"We were looser than I expected us to be," said White. "If I had been the other team, considering the way we lost the night before, I don't think I would have expected us to be as aggressive and confident as we were. But that's the personality of this team. It's been that way all year. We just seem to do better when our backs are to the wall."

CARDS

Today, the Dodgers planned to start second-game winner Fernando Valenzuela against veteran St. Louis right-hander Bob Forsch.

Sunday night's loss was the 36-year-old Reuss' seventh in NL playoff action without a victory, including three setbacks while with the Pittsburgh Pirates.

"We're going to take this as one game. You win some and you're going to lose some. You lose sight that they (Cards) played extremely well," Reuss said. "They hit, and the hits found the holes. I thought I was throwing the ball good."

Sports in Brief

Auto Racing

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — Al Unser Sr. sped off Sunday and left the fastest field in the history of Phoenix International Raceway in winning the Dana 150 Indy-car race and moving past his son into the season point lead.

The elder Unser, 46, dominated the 150-lap race, beating second-place Al Unser Jr. by more than a lap on the one-mile Phoenix oval.

Mario Andretti was third, followed by Danny Sullivan, Michael Andretti and Bobby Rahal, all one lap behind the winner.

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — Jeff Andretti outdueled Davy Jones Sunday to win the Bosch-Volkswagen Super Vee season finale at Phoenix International Raceway, while Ken Johnson wrapped up the series championship with a fourth-place finish.

The winning margin was .04 of a second. Andretti, who took first-place money of $5,000, averaged 101.448 mph in the race, which was slowed by three caution periods.

WATKINS GLEN, N.Y. (AP) — Jon Milledge of Campbell, Calif., took the checkered flag in the Seagram's Cooler 24 Hour Firestone Firehawk Finale at Watkins Glen International Sunday in his team's Porsche 944.

The four-man team held the lead for the last 431 laps of the 527-lap race which started at 1 p.m. Saturday and ended at 1 p.m. Sunday. It was the first 24-hour race at the Glen and the final event of the Firestone Firehawk series this year.

SYRACUSE, N.Y. (AP) — Brett Hearn, of Kinnelon, N.J., staved off late challenges from Jack Johnson and Bob McCreadie to capture the Schaefer 200 championship for modified cars at the New York State Fairgrounds here Sunday.

Hearn's break came when the leading car, driven by McCreadie, of Watertown, N.Y., took a mandatory pit stop after lap 65. Hearn, who had taken an early pit stop, took over the lead and held on to win the 200-mile race in one hour, 43 minutes and 57 seconds.

Golf

LAKE BUENA VISTA, Fla. (AP) — Lanny Wadkins equaled the course record of 9-under-par 63 Sunday to overcome a 5-stroke deficit and win the $400,000 Walt Disney World-Oldsmobile Classic golf tournament by two shots.

Wadkins, who finished the 72-hole event at 21-under-par 267 to earn the $72,000 first prize, matched the best round over the Magnolia course since Hubert Green carded a 63 in 1973.

Third-round leader Scott Hoch, who started the day five strokes up on Wadkins, saw his lead melt despite shooting a 3-under 69.

No-pass, no-play' nearing six-week grading period

Associated Press

Texas high school football players, band members and cheerleaders will find out this week if they can read, write and add well enough to continue playing, marching and yelling.

Under guidelines of the state's controversial "no-pass, no-play" rule, students must pass all subjects at the end of the first six-week grading period to be eligible for extracurricular activity during the second six weeks.

Controversy over the rule led to postponing the state high school baseball playoffs this summer when one state district judge ruled it was unconstitutional.

Another state district judge said the law was constitutional and ordered the playoffs to resume. The State Supreme Court later affirmed that the law was constitutional.

Grades from the first six weeks are due this week, and University Interscholastic League and Texas High School Coaching Association officials, coaches and school administrators are anticipating more confusion and possibly more court action.

NFL

There were four touchdowns, a field goal and a safety in the final quarter.

"We gave up the lead, but we didn't quit and die," said Seahawks running back Curt Warner. "This isn't a game for doubters. We were confident when we were in the huddle on that last drive."

Patriots 14, Bills 3

Steve Grogan, who hadn't played quarterback for more than a year, replaced injured Tony Eason (separated left shoulder) and gave the Patriots a 7-3 lead with a 16-yard TD toss to Irving Fryar in the third period. He finished with 15 completions in 19 attempts for 282 yards, dropping Buffalo to 0-6.

"Without a doubt, the performance of Steve Grogan was the thing that turned us around," said Patriots Coach Raymond Berry. "He came into a tough situation and really lifted the football team."

Broncos 15, Colts 10

John Elway hit 17 of 36 passes for 239 yards and set up a Denver touchdown with a 45-yard pass completion. He also rushed for 49 yards, keeping drives alive with scampers of 22 and 15 yards in the third quarter.

"He came out, scrambled from the pocket and got us some first downs in key situations," said Denver Coach Dan Reeves. "He's a big strong guy. He's hard to bring down and he has the ability to make the big plays."

Packers 20, Vikings 17

Last week, Minnesota Coach Bud Grant gambled and lost on a fourth-down play at the Rams 1. This week, he went for a tying field goal with 1:24 remaining. Jan Stenerud's 18-yarder made it 17-17, but Green Bay then marched 66 yards for the winning kick, a 22-yard field goal by Al Del Greco with seven seconds left.

"It was completely different," Minnesota quarterback Tommy Kramer said. "There, we had a chance to win on the last play. Here, there's a minute and whatever left. Your defense has got to stop them. The Packers did a good job moving down the field."

Eagles 30, Cardinals 7

Philadelphia's anemic offense, which had scored only 46 points in its previous five games, broke out as QB Ron Jaworski, starting for the first time since being benched for rookie Randall Cunningham after a debacle on opening day, threw three touchdown passes. Jaworski completed 18 of 28 passes for 243 yards, and Paul McFadden kicked field goals of 39, 21 and 52 yards.

The Philadelphia defense held St. Louis to 73 yards rushing and forced QB Neil Lomax from the game with three sacks and two pass interceptions. Defensive end Greg Brown had three sacks.

Raiders 23, Saints 13

Marcus Allen ran for two touchdowns in a span of 3:33, scoring from the 11 and the 8.

The Saints turned the ball over four times. The Raiders needed to move only 40, 26 and 43 yards on its three touchdown drives.

The game was played before a disappointing crowd of 48,152 at the Los Angeles Coliseum.

DALLAS

Rafael Septein added a 28-yard field goal two seconds before intermission and a 39-yarder 11:18 into the third period for a 13-3 lead.

Lockhart's TD return came in the final minute of the third period. The TD interception was a career first and came after Woodley relieved starting quarterback Mark Malone, who had been unable to get the Steeler offense in gear.

Woodley blamed the interception on miscommunication. "We had Cunningham going on a hook and Abercrombie on the flat. Clinkscale pulled off on Abercrombie, and left Cunningham open. I was trying to get the ball to Cunningham when Lockhart just stepped in front of it."

"When they got us down, and knew we were going to have to throw, they were coming on just about every other play....and we weren't picking up the blitz."

"Coach (Ernie) Stautner and Coach (Gene) Stallings decide when we run the blitz," related defensive back Michael Downs. "It was working today, so we did it a lot more than in the past."

MALONE HAD a bad day and missed a wide-open John Stallworth behind the Dallas defense in the first half. Malone had the single coverage he wanted. Defensive back Ron Fellows had no help from the post.

"It's a long pass and takes a little time to develop. You can see him coming out and wait until he starts on a definite line. If that doesn't happen, then you throw a little earlier. You anticipate the area where he's going to be. I anticipated deep, because that's what we worked on all week. When he came out, he came out flatter and that's tougher to adjust to than the deep pattern," Malone explained.

White again had a big day for Dallas, completing 25 of 36 for 269 yards. He completed his first 10 in a row.

"When you've got a guy like Tony, it's just a matter of time before the running game clicks. Today we had to pass to get the linebackers out of the blitz. We didn't change anything at half. They change their defense.

Despite the two-game lead over St. Louis and the Jersey Giants, the Cowboys must travel to Philadelphia Sunday to play the team that humbled the Cardinals.

OILERS

The Browns, 4-2 and sitting atop the AFC Central Division, started smelling success when Weathers drifted behind Oilers cornerback Richard Johnson, hauled in the pass and then evaded safety Bo Eason at the 15 en route to the touchdown.

That gave the Browns a 7-6 lead, erasing Houston's first-half edge on field goals of 50 and 27 yards by Tony Zendejas.

Weathers had three catches for 146 yards and his other two receptions set up touchdown runs of 6 yards by Kevin Mack and 5 yards by Earnest Byner.

Kosar got his first chance to start in the regular season because starter Gary Danielson suffered a shoulder injury last week. Kosar hit only three first-half passes but finished with eight of 19 pass completions for 208 yards.

Terri Fritts polishes the shoes of a customer at her booth, The Great American Shoe Shine Co. at Midland Regional Airport.

Shine, mister?

It's Friday evening at Dallas Nights and the post game football crowd is slowly filtering in.

As the football fans fill up the bar, business in one smoke-filled corner picks up.

To the tune of "Cotton-Eyed Joe," a petite blonde begins her work of massaging, caressing and polishing various forms of animal flesh molded into boots and shoes.

"Used to be, you could come up here and she would wiggle to the music. But she doesn't do it anymore," laments one regular customer, known as "PG."

For three years, Sandy Acy has been making a living by applying a 22-step cleaning, massaging and polishing process to boots.

The 36-year-old former bank teller says she became a shoeshiner because, "It's something different to do. It's a lot more fun. A lot more money and a lot more guys."

Terri Fritts, who manages a local branch of the Oklahoma-based Shoeshine Company of America at the Midland Regional Airport, agrees.

"It's an art. It's a lot of fun. You have fun while your making the money," the 22-year-old said.

And these women are making the money by sometimes getting tips as large as $50 on $4 shoeshines. Both Ms. Acy and Ms. Fritts say they can bring in up to $135 a day slapping various cleaners and polishers on anything from lizard- to eel-skin boots. Shines take an average of seven minutes for regular boots and up to 15 minutes for exotic boots.

Ms. Fritts says her $60 to $135 income from a 6½ hour shift is three times her former clerk's salary.

"I bought me a car. I've got everything I've ever wanted and I never had that before," she said.

However not just anyone can shine shoes, Ms. Acy said. Although she has hired two men to work at her "Bootdusters" booth, they haven't lasted long. The majority of her customers — men — would rather have their boots shined by women, she said.

"It doesn't seem to bother women for a woman to shine their boots as much as it does men, for men to shine their boots," Ms. Acy said.

Ms. Fritts added, "I haven't really had any men apply. They don't seem to last too long at it." Ms. Fritts has two employees and Ms. Acy has one employee.

It also takes a certain type of woman to shine shoes, Ms. Acy said.

"There's something about a girl shining shoes. She has to be very outgoing and she has to like men. Because when guys start drinking, they start talking and they don't care much about what they are saying," Ms. Acy said.

Being attractive is another quality shoeshine ladies need, Ms. Acy said.

"I hire on looks because, that's how they make money. That's how they draw men to the chair," she said.

There are three reasons why men get shines, Ms. Acy said.

"One, to get up and look at the shiner and to talk to the girl, two, for the massage, and three, for the shine itself."

Ms. Acy said her customers try to pick her up all the time with lines ranging from "My dog died yesterday and I need a friend" to "Are you married?"

"Yeah, there's a lot of that," agreed Ms. Fritts. "You just try to change the conversation or something," Ms. Fritts said.

Both women said they try to avoid dating their customers, but Ms. Acy said, "I don't usually make a habit of dating customers or fellow employees, but it happens."

Despite flirtatious customers, Ms. Acy said she has only thrown a couple of men off her chair.

"They get in there and try to tell me how to shine their boots. We're professionals. But some of these guys get up there and act like we don't know how to do it," Ms. Acy said.

Along with the money, Ms. Fritts said shoeshining has physical benefits. She added polishing shoes has built up her arm muscles and some of her shirts no longer fit her in the sleeves.

"It's a lot of work. You get hot and sweaty and you get your hands dirty," Ms. Acy said.

However, Ms. Acy said she's can't leave shining.

"Shoeshining gets into your blood. I tried to quit and give it to the girls, but I had to go back. I'm addicted," Ms. Acy said.

Using the tools of her trade, pictured at far left, Peggy Carter, top left, demonstrates a 22-step boot polishing process on a customer. An average shine takes about seven minutes to complete. At bottom left, Sandy Acy finishes up by whitening the threads on a pair of western boots.

Pathologist questions waste permit renewal

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — Odessa pathologist Dr. Robert Bright late last week recommended that the hazardous waste disposal permit of CECOS International Inc. not be renewed because too many unknowns exist to assume injection of long-lasting chemicals might be safe.

The Texas Water Commission public hearing in the Ector County Courthouse will resume at 9 a.m. Wednesday after being recessed late Friday afternoon by hearing examiner Doug Roberts.

The CECOS injection well is located on the far end of East Murphy St., a short distance north of Interstate Highway 20 and south of the OIDC industrial park. The waste disposal site is surrounded by the City of Odessa but not within the city limits.

Responding to a question from Odessa attorney Michael McLeaish, a party in the Texas Water Commission hearing on permit renewal, Bright said, "Anytime you put that many chemicals in a holding tank, which is essentially what injection into a formation is, it is virtually impossible to tell what reaction or interaction may be," he said. "It would probably take a chemist a lifetime to determine what might happen as a result of mixing various chemicals," stated Bright, who has numerous degrees in chemistry, molecular biology and training in forensic and tumor pathology.

Concerning testing the loads of chemicals received for injection into the old well, Bright said, "If you put all those chemicals into a pot it would be difficult to determine what you had.

"I DONT'T THINK I could design a system that would tell you what chemicals are being put into that hole," he said.

Answering questions from Jim Haley, who represents the TWC executive director, Bright said he does not object to deep well injection of hazardous waste but, in this case, objects to the siting of this well because of its proximity to a populated area.

Earlier testimony by CECOS district manager Ray Sonnenberg said more than a hundred different specific chemicals are accepted at the site for underground disposal.

Bright, who told Browning Ferris Houston attorney Louis Zimmerman that he "did a lot of soul-searching" before agreeing to testify because he relies heavily on people employed by industries that generate hazardous waste.

"It's not good to get on the wrong side of some of the major industries," said Bright.

The Odessa pathologist said there is a "medical consensus that there is more cancer risk in this community than experienced nationally."

Bright also said a study is now being done to determine the extent of cancer in the new-born children of parents living in petroleum-petrochemical oriented communities.

Ector County Judge Jan Fisher, a party in the hearing as an individual and a county official, questioned CECOS vice president Jack Lurcott extensively about the company's degree of corporate social-community responsibility.

LURCOTT SAID Browning Ferris Industries, parent company of CECOS, showed corporate earnings in excess of $1 billion last year. Concerning liability insurance carried by the company to cover any accidents that might occur, Lurcott said the company carried only the $10 million required.

Judge Fisher suggested CECOS and BFI "is only interested in compliance with minimal regulatory requirements."

The county judge, attorney McLeaish and his wife, K.T. McLeaish, Mary Lou Parsons, Energas representative B.F. Clark and Robert Weil, an insurance salesman, have been admitted to the permit renewal hearing as parties, with the right to present evidence and question witnesses.

In a statement Wednesday, the first day of the hearing, McLeaish, who lives about 2 miles from the CECOS site, related how he had contracted cancer and lost a kidney, and said his cancer may or may not have been caused by fumes from carcinogenic chemicals handled by CECOS that periodically pervade the southeast Odessa area where he lives.

Ms. Parsons, Ector County Republican Party chairwoman, stated she too had contracted cancer she believed might have been caused by chemical fumes released during disposal of toxic waste by CECOS.

MS. FISHER RELATED how her child born in December 1984 recently died of a form of blood cancer doctors believe was not hereditary, but environmentally related.

McLeaish says he wants to see the hazardous waste disposal plant moved 30 miles away from Odessa.

Responding to questions from Ms. Parsons Friday, Lurcott stated it would cost more than a million dollars to relocate the plant.

Testimony Thursday by Houston geologist Larry Heinline, employed by Ken E. Davis & Associates, the company that services the CECOS well, showed that injection of hazardous wastes into the San Andreas limestone formation is safe, that the injected chemicals can't migrate to threaten underground water supplies.

Questioned by Ms. Fisher, Heiline modified his statement to say, geologically speaking, the chemicals couldn't migrate because of the nature of the rock formations between the chemicals and underground water.

In his testimony Friday, Bright raised questions concerning the integrity of geologic formations, though he admitted he was not a geologist.

"The nature of geologic formations is such," he said, "that we must assume it is not intact and, given the durability of substances, it is reasonable to assume these chemicals could find their way into our ecosystem."

Bright was questioned by Haley about waste injection wells operated by El Paso Products Co. He said he had no opinion on those wells because he did not know what chemicals were being injected into those wells. If provided a list of the chemicals, Bright said, he would offer his opinion.

LURCOTT, RESPONDING TO questions from McLeaish Friday about criminal charges filed in Ohio concerning hazardous waste disposal violations, said two company officials have been indicted.

McLeaish was referring to a November 1984 incident at a CECOS hazardous waste disposal landfill where contaminated rainwater was allegedly released over a four-day period.

May 30, 1985, a Cleremont County grand jury handed down 96 indictments against CECOS, its parent firm Browning Ferris, and one former and one current CECOS official. Each defendant was named on 24 specific counts.

Waste plant concerns Austinites

AUSTIN (AP) — Groups concerned about the spread of the deadly chemical dioxin say they are worried about waste-to-energy plants like one being planned for Central Texas.

Citizens in Austin and other cities are demanding answers before the construction of such plants, which burn wastes to generate electricity.

The Austin plant, in the design stage, would be capable of burning 600 tons of waste a day and producing up to 20,000 kilowatts of electricity as a byproduct, officials said.

The plant was tentatively planned to be built north of the Colorado River next to Austin's Hornsby Bend sewage sludge facility.

Many experts consider the plants to be alternatives to landfills in disposing of trash. But critics said the plants might produce dioxins in the burning of certain plastics and other wastes.

Merle Moden, a member of the Electric Utility Commission, has raised the issue to city Electric Department officials that dioxins, which are a type of chlorinated hydrocarbon, could go up the smokestack, contaminate the environment, and pose a health hazard.

Store 'videoprints' children for free

From Staff Reports

Parents in Midland will have the opportunity of having their children videoprinted during a national community service campaign, aimed at educating the public about child abuse and abduction.

The National Video store, located at 3323 N. Midland Dr., is one of over 550 National Video stores in the United States and Canada to offer the child safety program — "Operation Safe Child."

On Oct. 22-24, the Midland store will videoprint any child free of charge. It involves a two-minute video tape interview with the child, in which the child is asked simple questions and walks around.

"The purpose of a Videoprint," said Bruce Davis, manager of the local store, "is to capture the voice, movements and mannerisms of the child which make him or her unique. So if it ever becomes necessary, parents will have an accurate identification record of their child which can be immediately aired on television for public exposure."

To have a child videoprinted, parents can take a VHS 1/2-inch blank tape to the store. They can also be bought there.

In addition to videoprinting, National Video is offering free overnight rental of a family-oriented video called, "Strong Kids, Safe Kids." This film helps parents teach children to stop molestation or abduction before it has a chance to start. It is hosted by Henry Winkler.

Operation Safe Child also includes free literature with helpful safety hints for parents and children.

Suspects held in jail without charge

BEAUMONT (AP) — An Orange County teen-ager arrested for burglary of a vehicle waited 58 days in jail without formal charges, and 60 days before being indicted.

A 23-year-old high school dropout accused of burglary spent 43 days without being formally charged in the Orange County jail. She finally was released and got a hearing with a justice of the peace after passing a note to a jail guard explaining her situation to the justice.

Those scenarios have become typical at the county jail in this coastal city because of policies carved by Orange County District Attorney Steve Howard, the Beaumont Enterprise reported Sunday in a copyright story.

Texas law says a charge or indictment must be filed within a reasonable amount of time, but Howard says the term "reasonable" is ambiguous.

Howard says his office has 120 days to prepare for trial in a felony case under the state's Speedy Trial Act, and he interprets that as allowing him 120 days to indict or formally charge a person.

"I think he (Howard) doesn't understand the law or he's selectively following it," said Jim Herrington, an Austin lawer with the Texas branch of the ACLU.

And E. Robert Larson, an ACLU lawyer in New York, said holding people without filing formal charges could be a violation of the 14th Amendment.

But Howard said he has not violated prisoners' rights.

"I don't think it's a good idea for people to be in jail," he said. "I'm interested in seeing people arraigned on a daily basis."

The newspaper said Howard's office also is bypassing the legal step of filing charges through a justice of the peace, where the accused could request an examining hearing.

Instead, cases now are usually taken directly to a grand jury, it said.

Flash of neon captures artist's fancy

AP Laserphoto

Neon artist Janie Burns of Lake Jackson, Texas, works on one of her creations in her studio, a steamy garage where she creates while she dreams of Las Vegas, the neon artist's mecca.

LAKE JACKSON, Texas (AP) — The neon signs in Las Vegas, Nev., rise 10 to 15 stories above the one-story businesses where they perch. The weight of the towering sculptures can rip off a storefront, so buildings are made extra strong.

Neon martini glasses and argon stars flash on the city streets and on the faces of people who come to blow their money. Hot pink arrows and iridescent showgirls beckon them to come inside, have a drink, put a coin in the one-arm bandit.

Every artist has a mecca. For actors, it's New York or Los Angeles. For country-western singers, it's Nashville.

Gamblers and neon artists have Vegas.

Janie Burns of Lake Jackson says someday, when she's making money off her work, she'll fly up there for a look.

In the garage, her neon studio, no fans or drafts diminish the slowly rising temperature. Air currents will make the gas flame fluctuate and heat the glass unevenly.

The glass tube gives a little shriek at the quick scratch of a metal file. Ms. Burns snaps the tube in two. She holds a piece over an invisible flame, moving it side to side and around. Every so often, the heat ignites an impurity in the glass and flashes a blue or pale yellow light.

The glass becomes pliable, she lifts it out of the flame, and lets gravity pull it into the curve she wants, maybe the first bend in the letter T. She sets it down on a sheet of asbestos paper where the pattern is drawn, to cool the tube in the right shape.

For the next bend, she repeats this process and has to double back to cross the T. Neon work must be done in reverse so the bends will be in the back and the front will be flat.

This can get confusing, and H-O-T, with its double backs and curves, is one of the hardest words to spell, Ms. Burns says. A completed one — well, almost complete — sits on her work table. One leg of the H is broken off.

"They're very easily broken and you can't cry over them," she says.

Her small sculptures, lengths of glass tubing with interesting twists, have electrodes at each end. Plug one end in, and the electrical current travels through the gas toward the other end, exciting the molecules of neon or argon into a buzzing glow.

Neon is orange. Argon is blue. Mercury added to argon creates a more intense color, but that's about it as far as gas colors go. Helium and krypton were used in the old days, but they burned too hot.

Colored and color-coated glass provide the variation. Put neon in a baby-blue tube and you've got hot pink, Ms. Burns says there are about 40 different combinations. That's nearly as much variety as you get in a three-tier box of crayons.

Her smooth seams between letters, glass thorns on a neon vine, are the work of an artist who has found her niche. Ms. Burns began working with neon early this year, after a long search for a creative outlet.

"I considered myself to be one of those frustrated artists who hasn't been able to find the artistic medium they're suited for," she says.

After graduating from high school in Boling, where she lived on a farm with her parents, Ms. Burns earned a degree in art education from the University of Houston.

She taught school for a number of years in West Columbia, then moved to Missouri City where she worked for a graphic artist and in a photo finishing lab, all the while trying a bit of everything: ceramics, photography, custom-design jewelry, painting. Only sculpture was a little more satisfying than drawing.

"I enjoyed doing all of that but it just didn't last."

The graphic artist in Missouri City designed signs, some of them neon. Ms. Burns, curious about working with glass, began scanning the yellow pages for sign companies that might be able to put her in contact with a neon artist.

She stumbled upon the Texas Neon Workshop, an eight-week course in Houston that taught her the basic bends and how to pump the tubes with neon. She's been doing it ever since.

"I feel like I've finally found the medium I want to work with," she says.

Woman killed in one-car accident

From Staff Reports

BIG SPRING — A 26-year-old Big Spring woman was killed early Sunday in a one-vehicle accident one mile east of Big Spring at Interstate Highway 20 and Moss Lake Road, a Texas Department of Public Safety spokesman reported.

Pronounced dead on arrival at Malone Hogan Hospital was Sherry Massey Bishop, 26, of Big Spring. Funeral arrangements are pending at Nalley, Pickle & Welch Funeral Home.

According to reports, Ms. Bishop was traveling west on I-20 about 2:30 a.m. when the 1982 Datsun she was driving crossed the Moss Lake Road overpass, passed a truck, over-corrected across the outside lane and struck a guard rail.

Reports said the vehicle went over the guard rail, down a concrete embankment and landed on a north service road.

Hightower says cuts in FFA chop down farming's future

DESOTO (AP) — Texas state government is acting as foolish as a farmer who eats his seed corn rather than planting it to raise next year's crop, Agriculture Commissioner Jim Hightower says.

In remarks prepared for a dedication speech Sunday for a new Future Farmers of America building at the DeSoto school, Hightower was highly critical of cuts made in FFA support by the Texas Education Agency.

Recent education reforms and legislative budget cuts "have crippled the FFA in Texas so severely that the survival is in doubt for the first time in its 57-year history," Hightower sad.

"We're talking about one of the most useful, most productive, most popular education programs in existence," Hightower said.

"More than 55,000 Texas students participate in FFA today and some 1.5 million Texas kids have been educated by the program since it was first organized in 1928. It has helped one generation of students become our next generation of family farmers, which all rely on to put three squares a day on our tables."

Hightower said vocational agriculture "is not some frivolous extra-curricular activity but an intra-curricular program that can be as integral to a student's education as calculus or world history."

Hightower said last year's FFA administrative budget within the Texas Education Agency was $861,000.

This year, because of legislative and intra-agency cutbacks, FFA is being forced to operate on less than a third of that, he said.

"TEA has merged all seven of its vocational programs — agriculture, health, distributive education, cooperative training, homemaking, office education and industrial arts — into one and they must split an inadequate operational budget of $1.6 million," Hightower said.

"Vocational agriculture is being treated like the runt of the litter and is being shoved aside to die," Hightower said.

Hightower said the Texas Department of Agriculture was committed to maintaining a healthy FFA program.

"We are holding meetings with the State Board of Education, TEA staff, the governor's office and any other state official who can help us find a sensible way to re-establish the vigor of the FFA in Texas," Hightower said.

"We also must work closely with all state legislators to see that FFA is prperly funded by the next session of the Legislature."

Aspirin a day may keep heart attack away

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — An aspirin a day could reduce the likelihood of a heart attack by 20 percent to 50 percent for some heart patients and save as many as 50,000 lives a year, says Health and Human Services Secretary Margaret M. Heckler.

In announcing government approval of new labeling guidelines for the drug, Heckler told a news conference: "We used to say an apple a day keeps the doctor away." But now, she said, "For some of us, an aspirin a day may keep a heart attack away."

Heckler said that the action follows a review of seven large studies by the United States and other nations that confirmed the beneficial effects of giving aspirin to some heart patients. The practice already is followed by many cardiologists.

As a result of the review, Heckler said that her department had authorized aspirin producers to give doctors information that one aspirin tablet daily — the equivalent of 325 milligrams — will reduce by one-fifth to one-half the likelihood of heart attacks for 30,000 to 50,000 patients.

Those patients include those who already have suffered a heart attack or others, primarily men, suffering from recently worsened chest pains, known as unstable angina.

At the same time, Heckler announced her department's approval of a "revolutionary" new implanted device that she said could save an additional 10,000 to 20,000 lives annually by delivering a life-restoring electrical jolt when the heart suddenly stops.

She said that the device, known as an implantable defibrillator, automatically does what rescue squads do "if they get there in time."

The two developments represent "dramatic new progress" against death from heart disease, Heckler said. "There will be a little less pain, a little less suffering, by those who already have too much," she said.

In recommending one aspirin tablet daily for certain heart patients, Heckler noted that the studies did not show whether aspirin would help prevent heart attacks in healthy people.

"A lot of us need to stop smoking, eat better, lose weight and exercise sensibly," she said.

Although the studies Heckler cited involved mostly men, other department officials said that there was reason to believe that women with similar heart conditions also would benefit.

Dr. Joseph M. White, president of the Aspirin Foundation of America, said that the industry was pleased by the agency's ecommendation. "It's a positive thing" that involves "one of the world's oldest, safest and most effective medications," he added in an interview.

Similarly, Robin Mills, president of the Bayer Aspirin Co., said his company was "delighted" and would immediately begin expanding its medical advertising. The labeling applies only to physician information and not to consumer products.

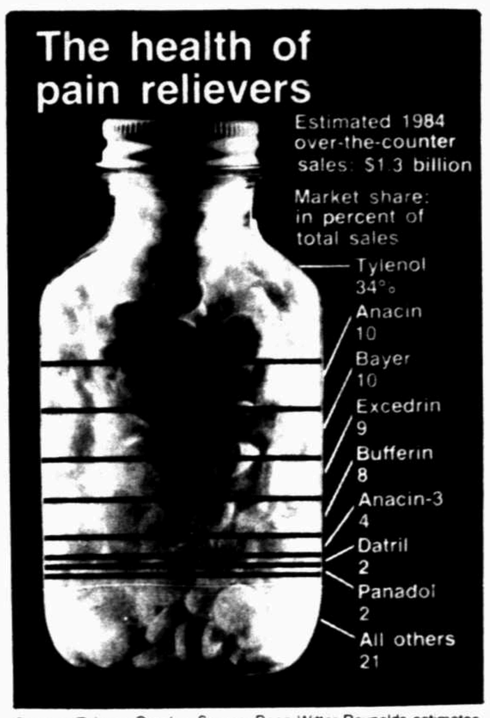

The new implantable defibrillator that the department approved is the size of a deck of cards, weighs 1.5 pounds and costs $15,000. Produced by Cardiac Pacemakers of St. Paul, Minn., a subsidiary of Eli Lilly, the device would be surgically implanted in a patient's abdomen and attached to the heart muscle with wires.

Microcircuits would monitor the patient's heart and generate an electrical charge whenever the rhythm becomes irregular. In contrast, a pacemaker generates low-level electrical stimulation to speed a chronically slow heart to its normal heart rate of 72 beats a minute.

Gauged to respond to acute emergency situations, the device is being recommended for heart patients with tachycardia, an abnormally rapid heart rate, and fibrillation, a condition where uncoordinated heart muscle contractions suddenly cause the heart's pumping action to stop.

Department officials said that both of these ailments, which can result from past heart attacks or heart disease, can cause a heart attack. Of the 1.2 million people who take medication for those conditions, about one third do not respond to the drugs and thus could be candidates for the implant.

The department said that the mortality rate from heart attacks involving those 400,000 patients was as high as 66 percent.

Old painkiller linked to bladder cancer

BOSTON (AP) — A now-restricted painkiller that once was part of many over-the-counter pills has been linked to rare bladder cancers in young women who abused the medicine, according to a report published in the New England Journal of Medicine.

Phenacetin was commonly added, along with caffeine, to many popular brands of aspirin compounds. It was banned for use without a prescription two years ago because of concern that it might cause kidney damage.

Pharmaceutical companies began removing phenacetin from their formulas in the early 1960s, even though they often didn't change brand names, including Anacin, Excedrin, Empirin and Bromo-Seltzer.

DEAR ABBY

Witness search stalls organ donor's generosity

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I sent for a donor form from the Living Bank because I wanted to donate my organs after my death. I received the form, but I can't get any witnesses to sign it.

My husband said, "You can't imagine how hard it would be for me to agree to something like that."

The rest of my family refused because they are afraid some doctors might get "scalpel happy" and start removing the organs they need before I'm dead.

I took the form to church five Sundays in a row trying to get two witnesses for my signature, but nobody would sign it. They said I might need all my parts at the Resurrection, and they didn't want to be responsible for my being resurrected without a badly needed organ.

The only person who was willing to sign is my son, and he's only 17. What else can I do, short of standing on a street corner soliciting signatures from total strangers? — KATHERINE IN GEORGETOWN, TEXAS

DEAR KATHERINE: Your husband needs to understand that willing one's organs after death in order to improve the quality of life for the living is one of the most noble and generous acts a person can perform. Besides, YOU own your body — your husband doesn't.

The possibility that some "scalpel-happy" surgeon might "murder" a patient for his parts is unrealistic, as a patient must be pronounced dead by two doctors before a death certificate is signed.

And as for "needing" all your organs for the Resurrection, the benevolent act of willing one's organs after death has been approved by most religions, so should you return to live again in the body of your previous life, trust the good Lord to miraculously restore or replace the missing parts.

Please give my regards to your 17-year-old son, who apparently inherited his mother's generosity and compassion.

DEAR ABBY: I just returned from a beautiful party. The hostess was a 96-year-old woman. Seventy guests attended, including her 98-year-old brother.

I am sending you a copy of the invitation. Perhaps you may want to share it with your readers. I thought it was delightful. — A.C.

DEAR A.C.: So did I. It's what I would call a real celebration of life. And here it is:

"The other morning I was daydreaming, and I thought, 'I'm 96, and who knows when I'll go. All my children and grandchildren and sisters and brothers and nieces and nephews and friends and neighbors will come to my funeral, and there'll be a big party, and I'll miss all the fun.' So I was thinking — let's have the party now, while I'm still here to enjoy it.

"Please come. Don't wait for the funeral."

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1 – As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠J542 ♡A8654 ◇J5 ♣72
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South
1 ◇	Dble	?

What action do you take?

A. – We realize that, for his takeout double, East quite possibly has four cards in each major suit. Nevertheless, we suggest that you bid one heart. Experience has shown that, unless you make your normal bid in this situation, you could find yourself in a very awkward position as the bidding develops.

Q.2 – As South, vulnerable you hold:
♠A1074 ♡A92 ◇65 ♣KQJ8
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ◇	Pass	1 ♠	Pass
2 NT	Pass	?

What do you bid now?

A. – There is no question about going to slam. However, six no trump might not be the right spot. Partner could have four clubs on this auction, so it behooves you to first probe for a 4-4 fit by bidding three clubs. If partner does raise clubs, choose the suit slam.

Q.3 – Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠10873 ♡Q9852 ◇KJ ♣A8
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ◇	Pass	1 ♡	1 ♠
2 ♡	2 ♠	?

What do you bid now?

A. – Your hands are going to fit very well. Partner has at most one spade and your honors in his suit are pure gold. Don't put any strain on partner. Jump to four hearts. A bid of three hearts would be competitive, rather than showing strength.

Q.4 – Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠K2 ♡A983 ◇AQ9 ♣AJ105
The bidding has proceeded:

West	North	East	South
Pass	Pass	1 ♠	Dble
Pass	2 ♠	Pass	?

What do you bid now?

A. – Obviously, your alternatives are a bid of two no trump or a raise to three clubs. We feel it is a little aggressive to suggest a no trump contract with only a single stopper in the enemy suit. Therefore, we would raise to three clubs. If partner shows any signs of life over this forward-going move, we will, of course, rebid three no trump.

Q.5 – Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠KQ1097632 ♡83 ◇7 ♣J6
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
3 ♠	Pass	4 ♡	Pass

What action do you take?

A. – When partner bids over your preempt it usually implies some sort of a fit for your suit. The one exception is a bid of four hearts over a three spade preempt – that is natural. Since you have tolerance for partner's suit and he might have none for yours, you should be delighted to pass.

Q.6 – Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AK954 ♡KJ62 ◇K104 ♣5
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	Pass	1 NT	Dble
Pass	2 ♡	Pass	Pass

What action do you take?
A. – While partner cannot have much, he must have a smattering of values and some cards in hearts. Therefore, we would make a penalty double. If that doesn't suit partner, he can always retreat to two spades.

Thatcher enters sixth decade quietly

Thatcher

LONDON (AP) — Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's 60 years represent "no great age in politics," a leading British newspaper said, noting that President Reagan is 74 and Chinese Leader Deng Xioping is 81.

Mrs. Thatcher "is blessed with a natural energy and strength of purpose guaranteed to take her well beyond pensionable age in the service of her party and country," the Sunday Times said in an editorial Sunday, the prime minister's birthday.

Besides laurels in the press, more than 200 birthday cards and dozens of bouquets of flowers piled up at No. 10 Downing St., the prime minister's London residence.

Mrs. Thatcher celebrated the occasion at home with her family.

Rostropovich

NEW YORK (AP) — Cellist-conductor Mstislav Rostropovich showed his dedication to humanity by sheltering dissident Soviet writer Alexander Solzhenitsyn, the Creo Society said in awarding him the Albert Schweitzer Music Award.

The Soviet-born virtuoso, music director of the National Symphony Orchestra of Washington since 1977, was presented the award Sunday by Rhena Schweitzer Miller — the only child of Albert Schweitzer, the theologian, medical missionary, organist and winner of the Nobel Peace Prize.

The society specifically cited Rostropovich, 58, and his wife, soprano Galina Vishnevskaya, for the "politically dangerous but humanitarian gesture" of sheltering Solzhenitsyn at their dacha outside Moscow from 1969 to 1973.

Although Rostropovich was forced into exile from the Soviet Union, "instead of becoming bitter, he opened his heart to those who needed his help," Mrs. Miller said.

Rostropovich and his wife were granted exit visas for exile in the West in 1974, and were stripped of their Soviet citizenship in 1978. Solzhenitsyn was expelled from the Soviet Union in 1974, and settled in Cavendish, Vt.

AHMERST, Mass. (AP) — Young people in the United States could help their counterparts in South Africa by learning more about the country and its policy of racial segregation, the daughter of South African Bishop Desmond Tutu said.

"Our struggle cannot fail because it is a just one," Naomi Tutu said Sunday in a speech at Hampshire College.

The daughter of the black Nobel Peace Prize winner said the students could help in the battle against apartheid by working on behalf of boycotts aimed at the South African government and by increasing material assistance to the South African Refugee Fund.

College campuses have been the scene of protests against apartheid in recent years.

Since 1977, when Hampshire College became the nation's first college to adopt a South Africa-free investment policy, more than 60 colleges and universities have rid themselves of some or all of such holdings, according to the American Committee on Africa, a New York-based anti-apartheid lobbying group.

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Social and cultural barriers, including the view that women are still considered the primary parent, has caused the disparity between the number of men and women judges, Supreme Court Justice Sandra Day O'Connor said.

"Women have come a long way," O'Connor told the annual convention of the National Association of Women Judges on Sunday. But she said the "number of female judges remains disproportionately small," at only 4 percent.

Prospective employers often assume that women are more likely to leave their jobs to rear families, said O'Connor, who in 1981 became the first woman to be appointed to the Supreme Court.

Such problems, have helped bring women lawyers together, however, O'Connor told the group she helped found in 1979. "The experiences of each new generation of women judges have enduring values for those who follow," she said.

Olson

SANTA MONICA, Calif. (AP) — The ashes of game show announcer Johnny Olson, whose "Come on down!" called contestants to the stage in "The Price Is Right," will be flown to his native West Virginia.

Olson, whose 40-year career spanned radio and television, died Saturday of a brain hemorrhage at St. John's Hospital in Santa Monica, said nursing supervisor Maureen Freudider. He was 75.

The man with the famous voice was seldom seen and never played host of the shows. After he appeared before the camera on "The Price Is Right" to promote prizes for the contestants, "he said people recognized him...all over the world," Marc Breslow, a longtime friend and the show's Emmy Award-winning director, said Sunday.

"Nobody ever really saw who he was until 'The Price Is Right,' but they had heard him for 40 years," Breslow said.

"He never missed a show in 14 years," Breslow said. "And, in July, when they had the daytime Emmy awards, they saluted him for his 40 years in the business."

Olson had flown from Lewisburg, W.Va., to Los Angeles on Oct. 6 to resume taping of "The Price Is Right," Breslow said.

"He must have figured something was wrong after he got in his car," Breslow said Sunday. Olson was found slumped over the steering wheel of his parked car in a Santa Monica neighborhood between Los Angeles International Airport and the hospital, he said.

He never regained consciousness, Breslow added. Olson's wife of 46 years, Penny, was in Los Angeles on Sunday arranging a cremation, he said. The ashes were to be taken to Lewisburg on Tuesday or Wednesday.

No services were planned, he said.

Olson came out of semi-retirement in West Virginia this year, Breslow said, because "he really liked working.

"Doing 'The Price Is Right' was the most fun he had," Breslow said, "and he did his job better than anybody."

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Alabama could become the first act in country music history voted entertainer of the year four times if the group continues its hot streak at the Country Music Association annual awards.

The band, which has sold more than 20 million records, also is a finalist for top vocal group, instrumental group and album of the year for "40 Hour Week," in the 19th annual music awards show tonight.

The show is scheduled to be aired from 9:30 to 11 p.m. EDT on CBS from the Grand Ole Opry House, with a radio simulcast on the Mutual Broadcasting System.

Alabama, known for hits such as "My Home's in Alabama," "Love in the First Degree" and "Mountain Music," already has won the top entertainer award one more time than anyone else in country music.

But Ricky Skaggs could end Alabama's three-year reign. He is a finalist for the top award.

Other finalists for entertainer of the year are Lee Greenwood, Reba McEntire and George Strait. Ms. McEntire would be only the fourth woman to win the honor since it was first presented in 1967. The other three are Loretta Lynn, Dolly Parton and Barbara Mandrell.

Dollar mixed

LONDON (AP) — The U.S. dollar was mixed in quiet trading today because of the Columbus Day holiday in the United States. Gold rose in Europe and fell in Hong Kong.

Dealers predicted trading would heat up during the week in the tug-of-war caused by encouraging U.S. economic figures and central banks' intervention to weaken the dollar.

In London, the British pound was quoted at $1.4113, compared with $1.4087 Friday.

The Bank of Japan intervened mildly during Friday's Asian dealings and the U.S. Federal Reserve was reported to have sold over $200 million to buy yen in New York.

Gold opened in London at a bid price of $327 a troy ounce, compared with late Friday's $325.75. At mid-morning, the city's five major bullion dealers fixed a recommended price of $326.60.

Pickens defends oil deals

EAST LANSING, Mich. (AP) — Texas oilman T. Boone Pickens defended his business practices, saying the oil and gas company mergers prompted by his purchases of large amounts of those companies' stock have benefited shareholders.

The higher prices have given shareholders money that management had been using for its own purposes, sometimes inefficiently, the Mesa Petroleum Co. chief said Friday in a speech at Michigan State University.

"It's interesting to see how stockholders' money is used for management purposes," Pickens said, citing the $25 million purchase of a piano-equipped airplane for the chief executive officer of Unocal.

"He says it relaxes him," Pickens said. "I guess so."

In the last three years, Pickens has bought large amounts of stock in Supron, Cities Service, General American Oil, Superior Oil, Gulf, Phillips Petroleum and Unocal.

Those companies have fought him with large amounts of money, which Pickens also called a violation of shareholders' rights.

"Those offers should go directly to stockholders," he said, adding that he would let shareholders vote immediately on any offer to buy Mesa.

"If you run the company right, the company's not vulnerable to an offer," Pickens said. "We won't spend a dime to keep an offer away from the stockholders. I'm very much opposed to people spending money to keep their job."

Pickens acknowledged that he was among the stockholders for whom he was trying to make money, saying: "I'm not altruistic to the point that I'm trying to shape up the industry for all mankind. The profit motive is the drive. Nobody should apologize for that."

Pickens told about 300 business students that he also might attempt to take over what he called poorly managed companies in industries other than oil and gas.

McPizza

WEST CHESTER, Pa. — Customer Greg Roberts holds two of the McDonald's Corp.'s latest taste sensation, the "McPizza" outside the corporation's West Chester, Pa. store. McDonalds is conducting an "operational test" in fewer than 10 stores nationwide to see if the "McPizza" will catch on. The 3 1/2 ounce "McPizza" includes provolone and mozzarella cheese, ground beef, pepperoni and pizza sauce in a pocket of dough.

Retail gas prices continue to drop

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Pump prices have declined for the 14th straight week, surpassing a drop in wholesale gasoline prices for the first time since last spring, oil industry analyst Dan Lundberg says.

An Oct. 11 survey of 17,000 gasoline stations nationwide showed the overall price for all grades of gasoline dipped to $1.20, compared to $1.21 on Sept. 20, Lundberg said Sunday.

While retailers saved an average 0.84 of a cent on their gasoline costs, they passed on an average 1-cent savings to customers, Lundberg said, adding it was the first time since April "that the dealers have dropped their retail prices more than the amount of their suppliers' reduction."

Since the beginning of summer, retail gasoline prices have dipped about 4 cents a gallon, despite predictions that increased summer driving would force them up, he added.

Lundberg speculated that dropping gasoline prices may invite a contemplated federal excise tax on the fuel.

"Every drop in the price of gasoline at the nation's pumps is an indication a tax increase may be less noxious," he said.

The gap between self-serve and full-serve prices continued to widen, Lundberg said.

At self-serve pumps, regular leaded cost $1.08 per gallon nationwide on Oct. 11, down 1.32 cents since Sept. 20, Lundberg said. Regular unleaded cst $1.16 a gallon, down 1.31 cents, and premium unleaded was priced at $1.29 per gallon, down 1 cent, he said.

At the full-serve pumps, regular leaded gasoline was $1.31 per gallon, regular unleaded was $1.38, and premium unleaded cost $1.44, Lundberg said. The average savings over Sept. 20 was only 0.63 of a cent per gallon, he said.

A total of 76 percent of retail gasoline sales are through self-serve pumps now, compared to 67 percent in 1981, Lundberg said.

Texas top state in oil, gas taxes

AUSTIN (AP) — Revenue from oil and gas taxes in Texas totaled $4.6 billion in 1983, which is $2.5 million more than paid in second-ranked Alaska, according to a publication from the state comptroller's office.

The October issue of "Fiscal Notes" said, however, Texas ranked fifth among the top 10 energy states on a tax-per-barrel basis.

Texas state and local governments collected approximately $2.35 per barrel of oil and gas produced in 1983. (Gas production was converted from thousand cubic feet to equivalent barrels of oil to make comparisons.)

Colorado collected more tax per barrel of oil and gas produced than any other major energy state, an estimated $3.72 per barrel. Louisiana collected the least, about $1 per barrel.

The article said the tax-per-barrel figure takes into account different tax rates by state and local governments and includes both direct and indirect taxes.

UAW set to strike Chrysler

HIGHLAND PARK, Mich. (AP) — Chrysler Corp. and the United Auto Workers union negotiated through the weekend but reported little progress toward a new nationwide contract that would avert a strike by 70,000 workers at midnight Tuesday.

UAW President Owen Bieber, in brief remarks to reporters Sunday, said a U.S. strike is unavoidable if the talks don't pick up.

"Unless things change, we will not make it by Tuesday," Bieber said. "Nothing's happening. Let's hope we get moving."

The current contract, as well as a separate one for 10,000 unionized Chrysler workers in Canada, expires at midnight Tuesday.

Company and union officials in Canada were as pessimistic as their American counterparts on the prospects of reaching agreement without a walkout.

Union officials said that, despite meeting late into the night both days, Chrysler failed to address their main demands: curbs on subcontracting work to outside shops and the company's acceptance of pattern contracts settled a year ago at General Motors Corp. and Ford Motor Co.

Negotiations were scheduled to resume today at Chrysler headquarters here.

The UAW wants strict curbs on the subcontracting of work to other companies, a practice known as outsourcing. The union estimates that Chrysler makes only 30 percent of the parts in the cars it sells.

Robert White, president of the United Auto Workers of Canada, which is negotiating its first major contract since splitting from the parent U.S. union, also was pessimistic.

"The light is getting dim," White said Sunday night. "Time itself is running against us." He has said the Canadian workers will strike at midnight Tuesday if no contract is reached.

Wage parity with workers employed by the Canadian subsidiaries of GM and Ford is a main issue in Toronto.

The U.S. workers want parity, too, but the UAW has placed equal importance on outsourcing and establishment of job security funds to pay for retraining and relocating workers in a rapidly changing industry.

UAW members at Chrysler make $13.23 an hour on average, only 6 cents less than their GM and Ford counterparts.

IS AMERICA BANKRUPT?

Massive deficits are now threatening to alter our financial future permanently.

Biggest jackpot in Megabucks

BOSTON (AP) — A $20 million prize is expected to pit nearly 90 percent of Massachusetts' adults against the 1.9 million-to-1 odds against winning the biggest lottery jackpot in state history, a lottery spokesman says.

There hasn't been a winner in the semi-weekly Megabucks drawing since Oct. 2 and the money from drawings without winners was rolled over to the next drawing, David Ellis, spokesman for the Massachusetts Lottery Commission, said Sunday.

Stock market mixed

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market put together a modest advance today in activity dominated by takeover news and rumors.

Trading was quiet, with many investing institutions and other businesses closed in observance of Columbus Day.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials rose 3.47 to 1,343.41 by noontime on Wall Street.

Gainers held a 7-5 lead over losers in the midday count of New York Stock Exchange-listed issues.

Analysts said many investors were impressed with the market's showing late last week, when it rallied despite International Business Machines's report of lower earnings for the third consecutive quarter.

To some observers, that suggested that the market was less vulnerable to disappointing news on corporate profits than it had been in recent weeks.

However, it was generally believed that it would take at least a few more days to test that optimistic thesis. Today's trading was not expected to register any significant message with so many market participants absent because of the holiday.

IBM stock rose ⅜ to 126 in today's activity.

General Foods climbed ¾ to 119½. Philip Morris said that the legal 15-day waiting period had passed for its $120-a-share tender offer to acquire General Foods, and that no inquiries had been received from government regulators dgsmngthat time on antitrust matters.

Beatrice, recently rumored to be a possible takeover candidate, gained ⅞ to 42⅜.

Chase Manhattan, which reported sharply higher third-quarter profits, added ½ to 54⅛.

The NYSE's composite index of more than 1,500 common stocks was up .31 at 106.87. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index rose .43 to 223.24.

Volume on the Big Board came to 31.70 million shares at noontime, against 27.05 million at the same point Friday.

BUSINESS MIRROR

Protection-free trade battle has big cast of characters

By JOHN CUNNIFF
AP Business Analyst

NEW YORK — At least five well-defined personality types are involved in the protection vs. free trade battle: economists, special pleaders, politicians, fatalists and realists.

There are even more types, but these five suggest the difficulty faced by the nation in trying to articulate a sensible policy on trade with other nations, since scorn for each other's position is sometimes all they share.

The economist maintains that his is the most educated position. He supports free trade, and backs his thesis by referring to earlier debacles resulting from trade restrictions.

It will cost consumers dearly, he says, if the United States seeks to protect its industries by limiting imports. Not only will consumers be deprived of low-cost goods, but domestic manufacturers will be free to raise prices.

Moreover, he adds, restrictions imposed by the United States would provoke other nations into doing the same to American goods. Then, he concludes, everyone will suffer — not just the consumer, but the entire world economy.

The special pleader expresses astonishment at such an argument, which he considers insensitive and inhumane. He claims the economists live in an abstract world removed from the realities of human suffering.

"Imports deprive Americans of jobs," he shouts, and he can shower you with statistics that seem to prove his case.

He has plenty of facts to support his argument: shrinkage in domestic industries, jobs lost, entire geographic areas decimated. He is less persuasive about the reason why. Is it American inefficiency? Or unfair competition?

The politician has a very strong point of view on the issue, often taking what he says is the humane position — in support of restrictions as a way to save jobs — although critics claim he is only interested in getting re-elected.

It is a subject on which he can thunder, particularly if his community is small and hurt by imports. In some instances he hardly can be blamed, since his constituents believe strongly that their problems result solely from imports.

Fatalists wear long faces, even if they are unemotional. They are concerned with the human issues, they maintain, but they contend also that there isn't very much that can be done about the situation.

Typically, they assert that if world trade is to bring benefits in the long run then it is destined to hurt some people in the short run. They say it is inevitable that labor-intensive jobs will shift to the areas of lowest wages.

In the place of these "old" industries, they continue, newer, more efficient and productive industries should be developed utilizing the latest technology. By this process, they say, everyone eventually is upgraded.

True, they add, some people will be hurt during the transition, but this is the price to be paid. Perhaps, they conclude, governments should develop retraining programs to fit them for new jobs in the new industries.

The realists, self-described, are equally certain of the correctness of their position. Not everyone recognizes them as realists, but they support their position by taking a middle road. They believe that other personality types speak some truth. But they seek solution rather than retaliation.

They recognize that nations everywhere already utilize trade barriers, even if these nations contend otherwise. They see only destruction in raising even more barriers, preferring compromise and positive actions, such as lifting government restrictions on Alaskan oil shipments to Japan.

They urge American manufacturers to raise their competitiveness by cutting costs. They urge Washington to lift regulations that might raise the price of U.S. goods. They urge enforcement of U.S. patent laws abused by foreigners.

Meanwhile, they seek to continue pressure on America's trade partners to lift those restrictions on American goods in their countries.

It is from such disparate groups, largely unappreciative of each other's position, that the United States seeks to develop a sensible trade policy, one that will lessen the horrendous U.S. trade imbalance.

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

Your investment may have been rescued

By BILL DOYLE

Q. In 1981 and 1982, I invested a great deal of money with National Investors Life Insurance Co. in single premium deferred annuities. That company went into "rehabilitation" in July 1983 and my investment has been in limbo.

I am very concerned about this and worried that I will never get my money back. Is anything being done for people who invested in those annuities?

A. National Investors Life is one of the six insurance company subsidiaries of Baldwin-United Corp. that issued some $4.2 billion of annuities to 165,000 people. Baldwin-United went bankrupt and its insurance subsidiaries were taken over by the insurance commissioners of the states in which they are headquartered — Arkansas and Indiana.

The sorry saga of Baldwin-United and its subsidiaries has dragged on for more than two years. However, a recent development should rescue your investment, if everything works out as planned.

Under an agreement signed by virtually all parties involved, Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. will offer to exchange its own annuity contracts for those issued by Baldwin-United subsidiaries.

It is anticipated that those Metropolitan annuities will accumulate interest at rates ranging from 8 to 6.3 percent. That's way lower than the sky-high rates of as much as 15 percent originally promised by the Baldwin United subsidiaries but better than the 5.5 percent those annuities have been getting.

People who bought those annuities from brokerage firms who signed the agreement are expected to get 8 percent, those who bought from insurance agents 7 percent, those who bought from brokerage firms who have not signed the agreement 6.3 percent.

In exchange for accepting these rates, you and other holders of those annuities will be asked to agree not to press lawsuits against the outfits that peddled the annuities.

Summed up, it looks as if you'll have to wait a while longer but that you finally will be "made whole" on what has been a very worrisome investment.

• • •

Q. Exactly what is a "rehabilitation" of an insurance company?

A. That's a technical term, roughly translating as "bankruptcy."

When an insurance company gets into dire financial straits, its assets are seized by state regulatory authorities, who then take on the chore of attempting to salvage what they can for policy holders and annuitants.

• • •

Q. My concern is the risk involved in a retirement annuity I have obtained through an insurance company. I am told this is covered under the "state's plan" — not by by federal deposit insurance, as is the case with banks and savings and loan associations. What are the risks involved?

A. You shouldn't count on any state plan to bail you out, in the unlikely event the insurance company with which you have that annuity goes belly up. In 29 states there are funds created by insurers to pay off policies and annuities of failed companies. But only one of those state funds — in Arizona — provided any money to holders of annuities issued by subsidiaries of Baldwin-United Corp.

This isn't meant to throw a scare into you. Bankruptcies in the insurance industry are rare. The vast majority of insurance companies are solid financial operations.

Nonetheless, the hard fact is that an annuity or insurance policy is only as safe as the company that issued it.

• • •

Q. Isn't it true that a person who has an annuity can withdraw an amount equal to the amount he paid in and not pay income tax on that money, because that's counted as a withdrawal of principal — not interest?

A. That was true, for annuities issued before Aug. 14, 1982. But the Tax Equity and Fiscal Responsibility Act of 1982 closed that tax loophole.

Now, any withdrawals from annuities issued since Aug. 14, 1982, or even from money put into old annuities after that date, are counted as interest payments and are subject to income tax. Those withdrawals can be hit with an additional 5 percent penalty tax, if the annuity hasn't been held for 10 years or the annuitant is under age 591/2.

Turnpike dials toll-free number

NORWALK, Conn. (AP) — After nearly three decades of toll collections, motorists are driving the Connecticut Turnpike for free as the state opens the toll booths both cursed as death traps and environmental hazards and praised as sources of income.

"We're as happy as we can be," said Raymond Vallerie of Vallerie Transport in Norwalk, which runs 150 trucks to Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, and Massachusetts and will save nearly $100,000 a year in toll charges.

The company also will benefit because it no longer will have to pay for wear and tear on truck brakes due to the forced stops at tollbooths, he said. "Braking is expensive. We felt the price of the toll is not the biggest cost of the toll booth."

Tolls ended at 11 p.m. Wednesday on the turnpike, one of the most heavily traveled roads in the nation, with 90,000 vehicles a day — up to 20,000 of them big trucks. Every few miles or so, drivers had to stop and dig into their pockets for change — $1.50 for trucks and 35 cents for cars.

Partly because of the eight toll plazas, the turnpike is one of the most dangerous stretches of Interstate 95. The plazas have been blamed for a number of serious accidents, including a fiery crash in 1982 when a tractor-trailer slammed into a line of cars at one toll station, killing seven people.

With the accidents in mind, state lawmakers voted in 1983 to remove the tolls from I-95 and two Hartford-area bridges by Jan. 1, 1986, but Gov. William O'Neill decided Saturday to shut down the tollbooths earlier.

"The bonds are paid off and it is feasible to remove them posthaste and it shall be done," he said.

Drivers of the first trucks and cars allowed through the tollbooths without paying honked their horns in appreciation.

Report backs critics of Marines' mission

By TIM AHERN
Associated Press Writer

An Analysis

WASHINGTON — When the U.S. Marines were sent to Lebanon three years ago, they were to be part of a peacekeeping force in an area of the world which has known precious little peace over the centuries.

Reagan administration critics argued it was a mistake to send military troops on what was essentially a diplomatic mission. The U.S. goal was to end the fighting that followed the Israeli invasion of Lebanon and eventually rid the nation of all foreign forces.

Those critics were given new ammunition last month when the House Armed Services investigation subcommittee released a declassified, 654-page transcript of its November 1983 hearings on the disastrous terrorist attack on the Marine barracks near the Beirut airport.

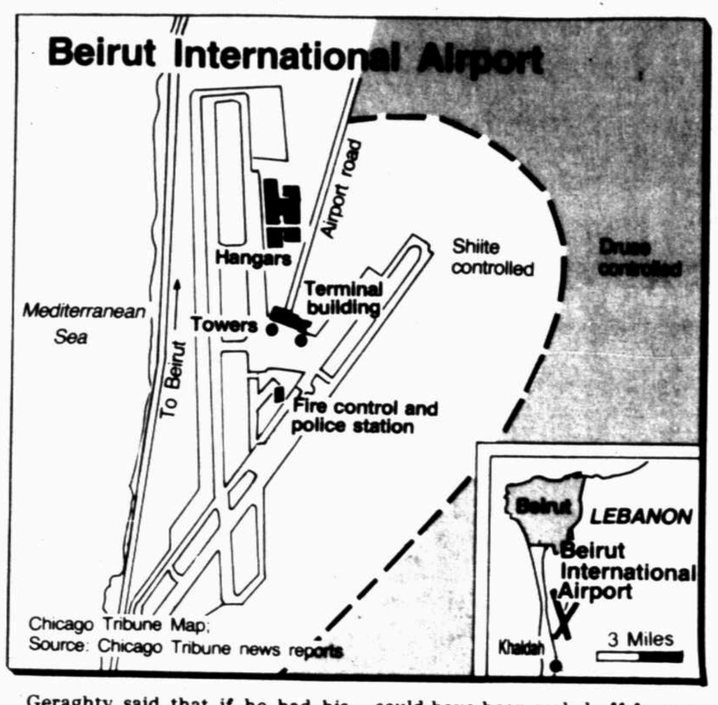

At 6:22 a.m. on Oct. 23, 1983, a terrorist drove a truck loaded with six tons of explosives through the open front gate of the Marine compound, past two guard stations and Marine sentries with unloaded weapons and through the front door of the barracks. The explosion collapsed the building and killed 241 military personnel, most of them while they slept.

What emerges from the transcript of the hearings is confusion, particularly over how the Marines were supposed to "show the flag" and reassure the shaky Lebanese government.

The 1,800 Marines were headquartered in a flat area in a building next to a busy roadway. Any of the hundreds of cars and trucks that passed by daily could have carried a bomb — a method of attack which has been favored in recent years by Mideast terrorists. Finally, a vehicle did.

The sentries at the gates to the Marine enclosure carried unloaded weapons because of the danger that an accidental discharge of a gun might hurt a civilian, according to the testimony. As to why the gates were open, no one had an answer.

Col. Timothy Geraghty, the Marine commander on the scene, told the congressional investigators that putting the Marines at the airport "had attendant vulnerabilities simply because of the amount of traffic in proximity of our positions..."

Geraghty said that if he had his "druthers," he would have taken his men to nearby high ground which could have been sealed off from potential attackers.

But deployment at the airport had been approved by U.S. military leaders higher up the chain of command, the committee was told by Philip Habib, President Reagan's special Mideast envoy.

While Geraghty said he and his fellow officers were constantly aware of terrorist threats and were continually trying to improve security, none of the top-level military officials who visited the compound had any specific ideas for better protecting the men.

However, that claim was disputed by Army Gen. John Vessey, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, who told the investigators he had suggested increasing the number of sandbags around the compound.

The security situation had changed for the Marines during their stay, a number of witnesses testified. When the Marines first arrived, they were generally greeted warmly and felt relatively safe, Geraghty and other military men said.

But as the bewildering array of factions continued fighting each other throughout 1983, the Marines slowly stepped out of their role of not taking sides and began helping the embattled Lebanese government, which was simply considered another faction.

A key turn of events occurred in late September 1983, when U.S. Navy guns were fired in support of Lebanese government forces pinned down at Suq el Gharb in the Chouf mountains outside Beirut.

It was Geraghty who authorized that gunfire, realizing, he told the investigators, that it "was a departure from our neutral peacekeeping role."

But Geraghty said he expressed "reservations" about the action "because it clearly changed our neutral role."

Vessey told the investigators, "It is impossible for us to institute a military solution to the political problems of Lebanon with the forces we have on the ground."

Later, he said: "A Marine infantry battalion is trained to charge up a hill and maintain a position. So, the mission is a strange one for them."

After the attack, most of the Marines were pulled back aboard Navy 6th Fleet ships cruising up and down the Lebanese coast. Although Reagan insisted the U.S. goals hadn't changed, the Marines were permanently withdrawn four months later. In Lebanon, the fighting and killing still goes on.

Meir Amit, retired chief of Israel's secret intelligence service, the Mossad, points to the most recent of the names of the 360 dead intelligence agents engraved on the walls of the newly opened memorial outside of Tel Aviv. The most recent death was that of Zeev Biber Bar-Lavie, the organization's top expert on Jordan, who died in February.

Heroes of Israeli intelligence honored at unique spy center

EDITOR'S NOTE: The following story was submitted to the Israeli military censor, who ordered several changes.

By DAVID NORDELL
Associated Press Writer

"It's not sad and dead, not stone and steel, but alive and full of content, a place to continue the tradition of intelligence into the next generation."
— Retired Major Gen. Meir Amit, former director of Israeli intelligence

RAMAT HASHARON, Israel (AP) — The 360 men and women whose names are carved into the sandstone walls of a maze in this Tel Aviv suburb constitute the real heroes and heroines of the hidden world of Israeli intelligence.

The Center for Special Studies is the only place of its kind in the world, said retired Maj. Gen. Meir Amit. It is a public memorial to fallen spies, counterspies and intelligence officers. It's also a place for the public to learn, within limits, what intelligence is about.

For years Israel's spies were mainly unknown and unsung. Only reluctantly did Israel's secret agents come out of the cold, even in death.

"By the nature of things we have an aversion, an allergy to publicity," said Amit, who was director of military intelligence from 1961-63 and head of the Mossad, Israel's equivalent of the U.S. Central Intelligence Agency, until 1968.

Since Israel gained its independence in 1948, thousands of Israeli soldiers have been killed in action or during training. Every unit maintains a memorial for the families to remember their loved ones and for the new members to draw inspiration from the example of their predecessors.

The insistence of the agents' families on a similar memorial brought the center into existence, Amit said. He and other retired intelligence agents organized the project and raised $2 million, more than half of it from donors abroad.

The center, opened three months ago, is not a typical memorial. "It's not sad and dead, not stone and steel, but alive and full of content, a place to continue the tradition of intelligence into the next generation," Amit said.

The center includes a maze, which Amit said "represents the complexity of intelligence," and a building with an auditorium for lectures and conferences. It also contains a computerized library which will eventually hold all of the service's unclassified files.

The center has organized seminars for retired spies to pass on their experience to the new generation. There are even lectures for school children about intelligence work, complete with a film called "The Intelligence Experience."

And what of the dead? A few, Amit said, are not commemorated in the maze because their exploits or identities are still too sensitive. At least one had not been revealed as an intelligence agent until his name appeared on the walls of the maze: Yaakov Barsimantov, an Israeli diplomat gunned down by terrorists in Paris in April 1982.

Only the date of death is engraved next to the 360 names. Nothing indicates whether they belonged to the Mossad, the army's intelligence corps, or the "Shin-Bet," the internal security service; whether they died under torture, were hanged, died in battle or in their beds.

The only criterion for being included, said Amit, was that the person had to be an intelligence professional who died during active service.

The names include Eli Cohen, who was Israel's most famous spy.

In the guise of Kamil Amin Taabes, a Syrian emigre businessman returning home from South America, Cohen befriended Syrian leaders, becoming so close to them that they took his advice on security matters and considered him a candidate for defense minister.

The Syrians caught Cohen after tracking his radio transmission signals with Soviet direction-finding equipment. Cohen was hanged in a Damascus square on May 15, 1965; his body is buried in Syria.

Not all the operations were so successful. Shmuel Azzar and Moshe Marzouk were hanged in Cairo in 1955 after their espionage and sabotage operation went wrong.

The repercussions eventually led to the resignation of then-Defense Minister Pinhas Lavon and touched off a political scandal that affected Israeli politics for more than a decade.

At least one spy died without the other side realizing he was an Israeli. Syrian-born Yaakov Buka'i was sent into Jordan as a Palestinian refugee with the false identity of Najib Ibrahim Hamuda. The Jordanians executed him in August 1949, believing he was a spy for another Arab state.

The names are arranged around five small courtyards, each representing a period between Nov. 29, 1947, when the United Nations decided to partition Palestine, and today. Each successive group has more names, testimony to Israel's growing dependence on intelligence and to the growing risks.

There is also a sixth courtyard, still empty. "Here we have the reserve," Amit said. "To my great regret, we have to be prepared."

Neighbors divided by Green Line share Lebanese tragedy of civil war

EDITOR'S NOTE: In normal times, they might have been neighbors with at least a nodding acquaintance, but in Beirut's war they are on opposite sides of the front line. Here is an account of how two families — one Moslem, the other Christian — survive the daily shooting and shelling along Beirut's notorious Green Line.

By ED BLANCHE
Associated Press Writer

BEIRUT, Lebanon — Zeinab Mekdad is a Shiite Moslem, a widow and mother of seven children. Jean-Marie Malhame is a Maronite Christian with a wife and five offspring.

They've never met and are unlikely to. But they share the dangers of living on the Green Line that slices Beirut in two and is a daily battleground in Lebanon's 10-year-old civil war.

Mrs. Mekdad, 55, and her family of grown-up children live on the fringe of the predominantly Shiite suburb of Bourj el-Barajneh, just 300 yards from the Green Line in west Beirut.

On the Christian east side, Malhame lives in the squalid ground floor of a deserted apartment building less than 100 yards from the line in the Ein el-Rummaneh quarter.

The once-bustling working class neighborhood is where the civil war began April 13, 1975, when Christian gunmen massacred a busload of Palestinians.

It's been on the front line ever since, a desolate place of ruined buildings, earthen barricades and wrecked cars. Bourj el-Barajneh is its mirror image.

The Green Line is where militiamen on both sides shoot it out daily, but especially at night.

They kill each other sometimes. But mostly they kill civilians.

When the shooting starts, Mrs. Mekdad and her family help her 85-year-old crippled mother, Kafa, from their cottage in a lemon grove to the grubby, fetid basement of a deserted fruit-packing factory.

They climb down an iron ladder with 30 rungs into the gloomy concrete-lined basement through a manhole with a rusting iron lid. There they sleep on mattresses on tables, away from the gunfire.

"On bad days, we sit and joke," said Mrs. Mekdad. She still wears black in mourning for her husband who was killed by a stray shell two years ago as they ran from the cottage to their refuge.

"We say things like, 'If we get killed, where in the world are they going to be able to dig our graves in all this mess?'"

Like many Beirutis, they have a TV set and radio in their shelter, so they can keep in touch with what's happening above ground.

They keep the shelter stocked with food and water. It's uncomfortable, but about as safe as anyone can get this in this city at war.

Most Beirutis spend days in basements or bunkers when the shelling is intense. The better connected even have telephone extensions to keep in touch with relatives.

"I suppose we'll all have to die from the shells one day," said Mrs. Mekdad. "But I thank God we're still alive, so we can't complain."

In a recent shelling, about 20 artillery rounds exploded outside their cottage, ripping the lemon trees apart, killing their chickens and their dog.

A tank manned by Shiite Amal militiaman rumbled up about 100 yards from their house and started firing on Christian positions.

Christian gunners, with spotters in the shell-pocked high-rise blocks a half-mile away, scored a direct hit. The tank blew up, sending shards of shrapnel scything in all directions.

"We're living just this side of death," said Hussein, 23, one of Mrs. Mekdad's sons. "You never know when they're going to shell us."

Ali, 28, the eldest son, misses going out like young men do.

"I love playing football and swimming," he said. "But for two years I haven't been able to do either of them. I can't take the chance of being away from home if the fighting starts."

His sister Hala's nerves are shattered. She's 25. She despairs of things ever getting better.

"Every time I hear a bang I just fall apart," she said. "I go numb and I can't say a word."

Malhame, the Maronite Christian family head, lived on the third floor of an apartment building in 1975 after he got married, just before war broke out. He moved four times to escape the fighting, but couldn't find anywhere that was safe.

Now, with five children, four girls and a boy, all born since the war began, he's back where he started. His family shares the seedy apartment with rats and the cockroaches.

The apartment is barricaded by shrapnel-peppered oil drums filled with earth and piles of old sandbags.

An old fan wheezes, barely stirring the air. Like thousands of other Beirutis, hard hit by the war and the collapse of Lebanon's economy, Malhame, an electrician, pirates electricity by hooking into a municipal power cable outside.

Everyone more or less lives in the back room, the one furthest from the Green Line.

"When the shelling starts we close the door and sit by the wall. The children used to be afraid. But they're used to it now. When we hear a tank roll up we take the children to the window to watch it fire its cannon," he said.

"When the shelling stops, I go to work. But when it gets too heavy and the guns are booming all the time, this is my solution," he said, pulling a bottle of whiskey from the refrigerator.

"Then I don't hear the shelling any more. I've seen a lot in this war. I've seen men shoot their own brothers. I smoked hashish for a while, but it didn't do any good."

He laughed bitterly. "Now I'm a good Maronite. I read this."

He reached for a Bible on top of a closet. The book was covered in dust.

He said his eldest daughter, Natalie, suffers from epilepsy. The doctors, he said, told him it was "caused by the war."

His wife, Josephine, 35, sits poring over the dog-eared family photo album. She pulls out pictures of herself and her husband in happier days.

She shows a photo of them at a party just before the war. They're smiling, carefree. Life was good.

"Look what the war's done to us," she sobbed. "Look at the pictures and you can see. I just thank God we're still alive and we haven't lost our minds."

Mother tries to escape fighting but finds no safe hiding place

By SCHEHERAZADE FARAMARZI
Associated Press Writer

BEIRUT, Lebanon — Amneh Khalifa has spent three years trekking around Lebanon with her eight children trying to avoid the fighting that has torn the country. But she has found no hiding place.

Her odyssey has taken her full circle. It started with the 1982 massacre of Moslems in Beirut's Chatilla refugee camp by right-wing Christians and then returned her to the same camp in May when it was attacked by Shiite Moslem forces.

She lost her husband and two sons in the 1982 massacre. Her shanty home was destroyed in the Shiite attack in May.

"I feel like a bird," she said in an interview. "As soon as it builds a nest someone comes and destroys it. But if God gives us another chance, I'll build another nest."

Mrs. Khalifa is 37. Her face is lined, her eyes have the patina of suffering, her hands flutter nervously when she speaks.

She is a Palestinian refugee and the Palestinians who had been entrenched in Lebanon now are targets for everyone — Israelis, Moslems, Christians, and even Syrians.

Mrs. Khalifa is known as Um Hussein, Arabic for "the mother of Hussein," the name of one of her two sons slain with their father the Chatilla massacre Sept. 16, 1982.

She fled her rented house in Chatilla to stay at her brother's home nearby. She also sent one of her children, Salam, now 8, to live with her sister-in-law in south Lebanon.

In September 1983, when government forces and militiamen fought in Beirut, the refugee camps, battered before by the invading Israelis, were hit again.

Um Hussein said she overheard neighbors saying they were worried another massacre might take place.

"If I hear there'll be fighting, I lose my nerve," she said. "I just want to get out. I've gone through it all and suffered greatly. Three of my men have died."

Helped by a neighbor, she took her children south to stay with relatives in a refugee camp in Tyre. They stayed for five months. Then "we got word that it was quiet in Beirut. So we came back."

She had not been in Beirut for long when she heard rumors of army dragnets for Palestinian men. Since she had a 15-year-old boy, Hamed, she took her family to a nearby Palestinian hospital and, with 20 other families, hid in the X-ray department for 15 days.

In April "I heard things were going to be bad in the camp."

"I hear people talk on the street or in the shops. I listen to news on the radio and when it isn't good I just run away. I don't even pack. I go as you see me now."

She paid 750 Lebanese pounds ($45), just about all she had, for a taxi to take her to her brother's home in a refugee camp outside the port of Tripoli. She and her children and 16 members of her brother's squeezed into two small rooms.

They returned to Beirut a month later so the children could take school examinations — and walked into a five-week battle when Shiite Moslems attacked the camps to smash Palestinian efforts to rebuild the power base they lost in Israel's 1982 invasion.

"We hid in the bathroom when the shooting started," she said. "When it eased it a bit, we went to our neighbor's and spent the night on the floor. This is what God has written for us. We can't do anything about it."

Bush tells Chinese imports won't be cut

AP Laserphoto

Vice President George Bush and Chinese Vice Premier Wan Le mimic the dance steps of a children's group welcoming Bush and his wife, Barbara, back left, to Peking Sunday.

PEKING (AP) — Vice President George Bush today assured Chinese leaders President Reagan would veto protectionist legislation that would cut Chinese textile imports, but said pressures for such laws had become "tremendous."

On the second day of Bush's six-day official visit to Peking, a major Chinese publication also criticized continued U.S. arms sales to Taiwan as a threat to Sino-American relations.

Three hours of "frank and friendly" talks between Bush and Premier Zhao Ziyang in the Great Hall of the People focused primarily on trade, the vice president's press secretary, Marlin Fitzwater, told reporters.

He said the two leaders also touched on U.S. arms sales to Taiwan, the Nov. 19-20 summit between Reagan and Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev, and other issues.

Peking claims that the Jenkins trade bill, passed by the U.S. House of Representatives and in the Senate, would cost China over $500 million a year in lost textile exports.

"We understand your concern about protectionism, but remember that the pressures on the U.S. Congress are tremendous," Bush told the Chinese, according to his press secretary's account.

"We will try to resist those pressures," Bush reportedly added.

Bush was quoted as sauying Reagan would veto measures like the Jenkins bill, but said the U.S. government will also take action to combat unfair trade practices, "particularly with respect to Japan where we have a huge trade imbalance."

A commentary today by the English-language government weekly, Peking Review, said Washington's Taiwan policy risked "serious and potentially critical setbacks" in Sino-U.S. relations.

It followed blunt comments at a welcoming banquet Sunday night where Premier Zhao told Bush relations were "not satisfactory" because of old obstacles, a reference to Taiwan.

When the Taiwan issue arose in Bush's talks with Zhao, Fitzwater said, "the vice president simply pointed out that our arms sales to Taiwan had been decreasing each year."

Sales are expected to total $760 million this year, down from $780 million in 1984.

The comments by Zhao and the Peking Review underscored a new urgency by Chinese Communists in settling the problem of reincorporating Taiwan, the enclave of the rival Nationalists since the 1949 Communist revolution drove them off the mainland.

The Nationalists still consider themselves China's legitimate rulers.

Protest to hijacker's release irritates Italy

An Analysis

By SAMUEL KOO
Associated Press

Maxwell Rabb, U.S. ambassador to Italy, expresses anger at a PLO hijacker's release.

ROME — Strong U.S. protests over Italy's release of a PLO official accused by the White House of masterminding the hijacking of Achille Lauro has irritated Italian government leaders, as well as chilling relations between the two nations.

"Never in 40 years of the Italian republic has something of this nature been seen," said Turin's moderate La Stampa newspaper, commenting on the current climate in U.S.-Italian relations.

Central to the disagreement is Italy's decision not to detain Mohammed Abbas, a Palestine Liberation Organization official who was escorting the four pirates when the jet carrying them from Egypt was forced down by U.S. warplanes in Sicily.

Italy arrested the four hijackers for trial in the ship's seizure and the slaying of one of its passengers, 69-year-old Leon Klinghoffer of New York City. But they turned down a U.S. request to detain Abbas on an American warrant for allegedly masterminding the hijacking.

After meeting with Foreign Minister Giulio Andreotti, U.S. Ambassador Maxwell Rabb said Sunday the release of Abbas, a lieutenant of PLO chairman Yasser Arafat, was "incomprehensible to the government of the United States and to the people of the United States."

Both Premier Bettino Craxi and Andreotti reacted with irritation.

In a press statement, Craxi said: "When all the facts are known and examined with objectivity and with the necessary serenity, you will see then that the decision taken by the Italian government, in the complex situation with which it was presented, was just and wise."

Andreotti bristled at suggestions that Italy might be viewed as being "soft" on international terrorism.

Defending Italy's commitment to fighting terrorism, he said that while the problems created by the hijacking were difficult, "the situation would be much more serious if the ship were still in the hands of the hijackers."

It was Andreotti who enlisted the PLO to help put an end to the two-day hijacking of the ship after it was seized off Egypt last Monday.

Asked his views on the U.S.-Italian disagreement, one senior European diplomat in Rome said, "The United States is forcing Italy, one of its best allies, into an untenable position."

"You don't want to push valuable allies like Italy and Egypt too far," said the diplomat, who spoke on condition he not be identified. "They also have domestic and foreign problems of their own."

Another diplomat from a NATO country noted that the Socialist premier's five-party coalition, in order to survive, has to deal with both the right and left.

The Communist Party, Italy's second largest political force after the Christian Democrats, called the U.S. interception of the Egyptian plane "grave."

On the other end of the political spectrum, the Republican Party, a coalition partner headed by Defense Minister Giovanni Spadolini, has been critical of the government's close ties with the PLO.

For decades, Italy and the United States have maintained close relations. Those ties have been strengthened under Craxi, Italy's first Socialist premier who has been in power for more than two years.

In 1979, Italy became the first NATO country to consent to the deployment of U.S.-built cruise missiles to counter Soviet SS-20s.

Italy's dispatch of a 1,500-man peacekeeping force to Beirut in 1982 after the Israeli invasion was seen as a concrete Italian support for U.S. Middle East policy.

The only thing that should make you more nervous than investing is not investing.

It's simple. If you invest, you stand the chance of making a lot of money. If you don't invest, you stand no chance at all. The fact is, with inflation and taxes, by not investing you could be losing money. And that's enough to make anyone nervous.

At Integrated Resources, we put together the investments that can put you at ease. Whether in real estate, cable TV, equipment leasing, annuities, or stocks and bonds, we'll tell you exactly which investments are right for you based on your individual needs. To say nothing of your wants.

Granted this may sound like an empty promise, but it's not. We've helped fill the needs of tens of thousands before you.

If you'd like to find out more, just give us a call. It's a lot more productive than sitting around worrying.

WORLD in brief

Quake hits Soviets

MOSCOW (AP) — An earthquake struck the Soviet Central Asian republic of Tadzhikistan, leveling factories and office buildings and causing "loss of life," the official news agency Tass reported today.

Tass did not say how many people were killed or injured, or give an assessment of the damage. But the Sunday quake was described as "strong," and the report of deaths indicated that the casualty toll may be heavy.

"The earthquake resulted in the destruction of production and office buildings, housing and socio-cultural and welfare facilities in Kairakum and in Khodzhent district," Tass said. "There is loss of life and there are injured. The necessary aid is being given to the quake victims and emergency rescue operations are being conducted."

Tass said the earthquake measured 8 points on the Soviet 12-point scale at its epicenter. The worst quake in Soviet history — a force 9 — leveled the city of Ashkabad in October 1948.

U.N. ponders Arafat

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — Action was scheduled today on a General Assembly resolution inviting PLO chairman Yasser Arafat to attend the 40th birthday celebration of the United Nations.

U.S. officials say President Reagan could cancel his participation in the ceremonies if Arafat attends.

Arafat has not been invited to attend the Oct. 14-24 ceremonies. But a resolution introduced by India and five other non-aligned countries would have the General Assembly invite Arafat and Sam Nujoma, president of the South-West Africa Peoples Organization, which is fighting South African administration of the territory.

Encephalitis strikes

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — An outbreak of encephalitis has claimed 79 lives in the northern state of Uttar Pradesh, the Indian Express newspaper reported today.

About 300 people are hospitalized with the disease in two districts of India's most populous state, the daily said.

Medical teams have been dispatched to the stricken areas from the state capital, Lucknow, and special hospital wards have been set up to handle the crush of patients, the Indian Express said.

Encephalitis is a general term used to describe an inflammation of the brain and spinal cord, characterized by headache, lethargy and convulsions. Rabies and herpes viruses, among others, are common causes.
