City to redefine 'affordable housing'

Officials consider revising CDBG, housing incentive program

By Joseph Basco
jbasco@mrt.com

The city of Midland is working on redefining what affordable housing means in the city's inflated housing market.

Looking back at its current affordable housing programs — community development block grants (CDBG) and a workforce housing incentive program — City Council on Wednesday addressed why an update is needed.

"What I like to see us do is get to a point where, if we have another affordable housing project come before us, we're not sending the message that we're confused or don't have the answer, or do not want to support it some way because we're not sure," Mayor Jerry Morales said. "So we need to answer: What are the incentive packages, where are the funds coming from, what are our target areas?"

The city's CDBG program can either assist homebuyers with a purchase or promote development by purchasing land or making infrastructure improvements, according to a presentation to the council. The workforce housing incentive program gives developers a set amount per housing unit for the construction of workforce homes priced in a particular range.

But the last workforce incentive agreement the city made with a developer was $4,500 per unit for homes priced between $129,000 to $175,000. The median price of a home in Midland in April was $227,000, as reported today, and new homes in new subdivisions are starting in the $174,000 range.

Several other hurdles stand in the way of making affordable housing available in Midland.

"It's ridiculously hard," said District 2 Councilman John

MISD: More than 2,500 teacher applicants seek jobs

By Tessa Duvall
tduvall@mrt.com

Midland ISD has seen nearly double the normal number of teacher applicants for the upcoming school year following the announcement May 6 of a $3.25 million donation to provide new teacher signing bonuses.

Executive Director of MISD Human Resources Ed Zachary said about 2,500 applicants have applied for teaching positions, with some applicants applying for multiple jobs.

The district currently has about 6,900 applications on file for all open positions, including teachers, administrators and support staff, Zachary said.

"There's no doubt as the word has gotten out across our region and our state that it has spawned an awful lot of interest in the positions we've got available," Zachary said of the 325 signing bonuses worth $10,000 each over three years.

In addition to the new teacher bonuses, the "Big Eight" donors also provided $3 million for 1,200 re-signing bonuses worth $2,500 for all current qualified teachers who sign on for the 2014-15

Home values, supply go up in April

By Cale Ottens
cottens@mrt.com

April home values were up by 4.7 percent year-over-year in Midland, marking the 11th consecutive month of growth.

The median price of homes sold last month was $227,000, according to data published this week by the Real Estate Center at Texas A&M University.

Texas values

Five-highest April median home values in Texas

1. Fort Bend County: $258,400
2. Collin County: $257,100
3. Montgomery County: $231,200
4. Austin: $237,600
5. Midland: $227,000

Home values have not dropped year-over-year in Midland since last May, when the median price dipped $1,000 from the previous year, a decrease of less than 1 percent. The center's data include single-family homes, townhouses and condominiums.

Despite the year-over-year growth, the Tall City's median home price has dropped each month since January. The median value was $251,500 that month, the highest in Texas.

Midland now boasts the fifth highest home value across the Lone Star State, falling one spot from March. Fort Bend County, near Houston, had the highest April median price, at $258,400, the Real Estate Center's data show.

However, the median cost of a home in Midland still hovers above the state's average and remains higher than any other West Texas city.

The median price of every home sold in Texas was $179,800, about 4.6 percent higher than the same month last year.

April values in Midland were more than 40 percent higher than those in Odessa, where the median was $163,600 last month.

Additionally, the supply of homes on the market last month grew by nearly 57 percent year-over-year. The center reported 546 listings, the most since September 2012, when 551 homes were on the market.

The most recent figures show Midland had a 3.6 month supply of homes last month. But

MISD to explore Petroleum Energy Academy option

By Tessa Duvall
tduvall@mrt.com

If all goes according to plan, Midland ISD will open its High School Petroleum Energy Academy in time for the 2015-16 school year.

But before MISD can move forward with planning, the district needs to ascertain the number of students interested in the academy, Superintendent Ryder Warren said.

The current eighth-grade class has preregistered for its freshman classes, which will tell the district what endorsements and career paths the students are interested in under House Bill 5, Warren said.

Current eighth-graders will be in the first graduating class to go through high school completely under House Bill 5 requirements. If the academy opens for 2015-16, today's eighth-graders will be sophomores when they can begin specialized classes, Warren said freshman-level classes for any of the five HB5 endorsements tend to be very general.

The district is also asking community members for feedback by completing a one-question survey indicating interest in the academy. The survey is on the district's website, www.midlandisd.net, and will be available at through Tuesday.

"Students in this program would develop a solid foundation in the fundamentals of engineering and the area of petroleum service, while earning their high school diploma," the survey explains. "They would explore the engineering and service technician's dynamic field of energy involving oil and gas."

Warren said as the district plans the curriculum, it will also need to ascertain which students in the academy want to attend college and which plan to go start their career straight out of high school.

There is not a curriculum in place for the academy, Warren said. Instead, the district will partner with oil companies in the community to determine the skill set students will need to be successful in their careers.

Finally, the district must decide where the academy will be located — at one of the high schools or both, Warren said.

"We can even knock down the purple and maroon wall, and that's going to be huge for this community," he said. "If we put the Petroleum Academy at Lee, but we tell kids no matter where you put your head at night, you're going to be able to go to that. It doesn't matter where you live, we're going to let you go to that."

Warren said he hopes to roll out additional academies, such as culinary or health care, also in the 2015-16 year.

GM tells Wall Street recalls may last into summer

Associated Press

DETROIT — General Motors is telling Wall Street that a recent spate of recalls may last until mid-summer as the company continues to review unresolved safety issues.

The news comes a day after The Associated Press learned that GM CEO Mary Barra told members of Congress that the company cannot make ignition switches fast enough to keep up with demand in its recall of 2.6 million small cars.

The ignition switch problem has been linked to at least 13 deaths in crashes involving Chevrolet Cobalts and Saturn Ions. Congress and the Justice Department are investigating why GM knew about the switch problem for at least a decade but only started recalling the cars this February.

GM has undertaken a safety review that has resulted in 29 U.S. recalls so far this year covering a total of 13.8 million vehicles, more than five times the number of cars and trucks the company sold in the U.S. last year.

In a note to investors, Barclays analyst Brian Johnson wrote that he met with GM management on Wednesday, and was told by product development chief Mark Reuss that GM continues to review safety data for potential recalls and that recalls could persist into mid-summer. Johnson also wrote that it's possible that cars already subject to one recall could be part of future recalls.

Senior management will be more involved in safety, with Reuss leading a team of five people who will decide on future recalls, Johnson wrote. The company is trying to issue recalls as soon as it learns about an issue rather than waiting for more data, according to Johnson.

"This will increase the frequency of recalls, but will reduce the total number of vehicles recalled," the analyst wrote.

Meanwhile, Barra is preparing for a return trip to Capitol Hill as an investigation by an outside attorney into the ignition switch recall delays nears a close. She told lawmakers Wednesday that GM's plan to compensate victims of small-car crashes could be released at the same time as the results of the investigation, according to a congressional aide who asked not to be identified because the meetings were private.

Barra, who visited lawmakers on Capitol Hill for private meetings Wednesday, told them that GM's supply of replacement ignition switches like won't catch up to demand until July. She said when that happens, GM plans to start a campaign to persuade people to take cars to dealers for repairs, according to a congressional aide who asked not to be identified because the meetings were private.

Among the lawmakers Barra met with were Sen. Claire McCaskill, D-Missouri, and Dianna DeGette, D-Colorado. Both were highly critical of the chief executive last month when she testified at Senate and House hearings about GM's handling of the ignition switch problem. With victims' families looking on, Barra said she was unable to answer many questions until an internal investigation into the matter was complete.

HOUSING

From 1A

Love III when asked how difficult it is to have affordable housing, "when you have lots that are selling upwards of $30,000. That's $30,000 right off the bat before you even hammer one nail. So that, plus the cost of bringing in water or wastewater to a development, can be easily in the upwards of $60,000 to $70,000 without even building a structure."

Infrastructure improvements likely are a necessary step, considering that the city's eligible CDBG area lies in the south and east sides of Midland. It is in this area — the oldest part of the city — where infrastructure is either outdated or lacking some component, such as curbs.

David Diaz, executive of the Midland Community Development Corp. (MCDC), a local nonprofit that helps finance affordable housing projects, agreed that affordable housing is difficult to do in Midland not just because of the cost of development, but also because of CDBG funding.

The city will receive $730,000 from the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development for the upcoming fiscal year, $13,000 less than the current fiscal year and half of what was received in 2001, as previously reported.

"Unfortunately, CDBG funding keeps going down from the federal source," Diaz said. "Consequently, the city has less federal funds to work with, to invest in the CDBG targeted areas."

At the end of the council discussion, Morales said he would like the staff to come up with options and cost estimates that updates the programs to reflect current conditions.

Diaz said one solution to consider could be funding some of the CDBG uses out of the city's general fund and allocate the CDBG funds for the other remaining uses.

Affordable housing is necessary because housing in general is almost nonexistent, Diaz said.

"We have a lot of people who do move to Midland for jobs, and even staff that work for the city," Diaz said. "And after a few months, they're packing up again, moving to somewhere else where it's more affordable."

school year.

Zachary said the majority of new applicants are from within Texas, but the number of out-of-state applicants also has increased. This is due to the district's broadened recruiting efforts outside of Texas, he said. MISD recruits at 31 colleges and universities; about 22 are in Texas, he said.

Teachers from neighboring school districts have applied for MISD positions, Zachary said, but the district hasn't analyzed how many or from where.

"We're not targeting — not by any stretch of the imagination are we targeting — our neighbors as first-priority targets for us getting teachers in here," he said. "We have no interest in crippling anybody and going over and taking the very best that they have in their school district."

It's too soon to say if an increased number of applicants will mean an increase in the quality of applicants, Zachary said, adding that the increased competition for each position is a positive.

Superintendent Ryder Warren said it's been difficult for the district, which had a limited candidate pool in the past.

"Last summer I had four junior high principals fighting over four people for four math jobs," he said.

Warren said campus principals are "amazed" at the number of applicants they can select from.

"Some of them who have been here for a long time have said they've got more choices than they've ever had before," he said.

Principals will begin sorting through applicants and begin the interview process after the conclusion of the school year next week, Warren said. He anticipates some newly hired teachers will receive board approval in June, but the bulk of the hires will be approved in July.

Zachary said MISD will likely be able to fill all its teacher positions.

"We think that we, at this juncture, will be able to not only fill all those positions, and fill them sooner than we have in the past few years," he said.

MCSO identifies boy who was hit by SUV

From staff reports

The young boy who died Wednesday night after being hit by an SUV has been identified as Patrick Silva, according to a press release from the Midland County Sheriff's Office.

The boy was transported to Midland Memorial Hospital, where he died from his injuries.

Deputies, troopers and other emergency personnel responded to the incident at about 8:20 p.m. Wednesday.

Charges will not be filed, according to the press release, and the investigation is considered to be complete.

that figure still indicates a "seller's market," based on the Real Estate Center's estimate that a 6.5-month inventory represents a balanced market, meaning buyers and sellers are at an equal advantage.

Activity within Midland's housing market also increased last month, but not nearly at the rate of its inventory growth. Home sales were up by about 3.8 percent year-over-year, with 164 total sales, the most since March of last year.

Census: Texas has 3 of 5 fast-growing cities

Associated Press

HOUSTON — Oil equals boom — especially in population right now. And Texas, in the midst of a significant energy rush, is seeing its towns and cities burst at the seams.

Three of the nation's five fastest-growing cities — and seven of the top 15 — are in the Lone Star State, according to new data from the U.S. Census Bureau, part of a trend across the West largely fueled by an oil boom. Most of the cities are west of the Mississippi.

Now these cities need to have enough roads, schools, water and infrastructure to keep up — the growing pains of a surging population. And while it is viewed as opportunity, city planners are frazzled.

Odessa, smack-dab in the middle of the oil-rich Permian Basin, is No. 11 on the Census Bureau list. People are flooding the oil fields, booming thanks to new hydraulic fracturing technologies that allow drillers access to once out-of-reach resources.

People are lured by higher-than-average salaries, but developers can't build homes quickly enough, the schools are rapidly filling and an overburdened water supply, made worse by a long drought, is stretched thin.

"It's a challenge to continue to provide services to the rising population when you're competing with the same workforce and labor that the oil field is. So that means that the municipalities have to adjust their pay scale ... to try to attract the labor," said Richard Morton, Odessa's city manager. "We're growing, but we're not growing fast enough."

The Texas cities of San Marcos, Frisco and Cedar Park were No. 1, 2 and 4 in percentage population growth between 2012 and 2013, each growing by at least 5 percent in that time span. Utah had two of the top five: South Jordan, at No. 3, and Lehi, at No. 5.

San Marcos — a city between Austin and San Antonio — has topped the list of expanding cities with more than 50,000 people for the second year in a row, showing growth of 8 percent between July 2012 and 2013 to 54,076 people.

Mayor Daniel Guerrero noted that while the city has been enjoying steady growth for years, and set aside money to keep up, not everything has gone as planned. The Great Recession and a sudden rise in costs forced San Marcos to delay major construction. Now, it is rushing to lay down new roads, expand existing ones, add bike paths and repair or replace old utility pipelines.

"So throughout San Marcos you see a multitude of construction," Guerrero said.

And then there are the biggest cities. While by population increase, New York City still topped the charts, growing by 61,440 people in 2012 to 8.4 million people in 2013, several Texas cities, including Houston grew rapidly.

Houston's surge of 35,202 people to 2.2 million in 2013 has also been fueled by oil, said Andy Icken, the city's chief development officer. The refineries, the port, the technology and many oil company headquarters are in the city and its suburbs, and employees are moving in.

That pace, he said, will not let up, and so Houston is studying how to improve a crucial network of freeways that connects the sprawling city.

"The industries are all doing well," Icken added, noting rapid growth in Houston's medical center. "That has consequences to the city of Houston."

Frisco, a suburb about 30 miles north of Dallas, has had growth "so long and sustained that we're used to it," said Mayor Maher Maso. Just 15 years ago there were only five schools in Frisco's main school district. Now, there are 56 and seven under construction, he said.

Those numbers tell the story of who's moving in. The city's median age is 34, one-third of the population is under 17 and about 10 percent are under age 5. Maso said this has translated into an active community.

"People are involved out here, they value their children's education, they value public safety," he said, noting a $775 million school bond passed with a margin of nearly 80 percent.

For Texas, though, water is a concern, highlighted by years of debilitating drought.

Conservation is key, Maso said, and his city has distributed rain-water barrels, changed reuse policies and is trying to make better arrangements to get water from a river on the Oklahoma border.

"That resource is challenging and we have to change the way we do things," he said.

Rules to combat zebra mussels expand to entire state

Boat enthusiasts using any Texas lake or river must clean, drain and dry their watercraft to combat the spread of zebra mussels and other invasive species, the Texas Parks and Wildlife Commission said Thursday, expanding an existing rule to the entire state.

Zebra mussels were first confirmed in Texas in Lake Texoma in 2009 and since then have spread through North Texas and into Central Texas. They can clog pipes and damage boat motors and spread quickly.

The mandate takes effect July 1 but officials urged boaters to embrace the practice immediately.

"The way to comply with this requirement is simple," said Brian Van Zee, the agency's Inland Fisheries Division regional director. "All you have to do is clean, drain and dry your boat. This is critical, because in their initial state, zebra mussels are invisible to the naked eye."

Authorities believe infestations are accelerated by people who don't drain and clean their boats and trailers and move from waterway to waterway around the state.

Late last year, the mussels were found in Lake Belton, 60 miles north of Austin. It marked the first time zebra mussels were documented in the Brazos River basin, nearly 200 miles south of where they had been found previously in Texas. The wildlife commission responded by expanding the draining regulation to additional counties.

Officials fear the zebra mussels could get into Lake Travis and the other Highland Lakes of Central Texas.

"So far we haven't seen any evidence of zebra mussels," David Cowan, senior water quality coordinator at the Lower Colorado River Authority, said. The agency monitors the Highland Lakes.

"The mussels not only are a nuisance, but they could pose serious operational problems for the dams, water intake structures and the general health of the lakes," he said.

The new rule requires people leaving or approaching public water to drain all water from their vessels and on-board receptacles. It applies to all types and sizes of boats whether powered or not, personal watercraft, sailboats, kayaks and canoes, or any other vessel used on public waters.

No large-scale environmentally-safe methods eradicate the mussels and it is a misdemeanor crime to possess or transport the pest.

Boy Scouts formally confirms Gates as president

Former Defense Secretary Robert Gates was confirmed Thursday as the Boy Scouts of America's new president, taking over one of the nation's largest youth organizations as it fights a membership decline and debates its policy toward gays.

The group's national council voted to approve Gates for the volunteer role at the organization's annual meeting in Nashville, Tennessee.

Gates, 70, was announced as incoming president in October. As head of the organization's executive board, Gates will become one of Scouting's most public figures at a pivotal time in its history.

"I've had tremendous opportunities in my life, but I can say without hesitation that my memories of Scouting are every bit as vivid and meaningful as what came later," Gates said in a statement Thursday. "I believe every boy deserves an opportunity to experience what Scouting offers."

Midlander funds poster depicting Wendy Davis as 'Abortion Barbie'

By Kolten Parker
San Antonio Express-News

SAN ANTONIO — A poster depicting Democratic gubernatorial candidate Wendy Davis as "Abortion Barbie" was unveiled in Los Angeles on Thursday in advance of her Hollywood fundraiser and bankrolled by a conservative Midland woman.

Kathryn Stuard told the San Antonio Express-News she donated an undisclosed amount to conservative street artist "Sabo" to create the posters, which portray Davis' face over a semi-naked Barbie doll with an exposed fetus in the womb.

The posters say: "Hollywood welcomes Abortion Barbie Wendy Davis" and have large pair of scissors next to the doll.

"It hits people with the truth," said Stuard, 53. "The artist is very edgy… I do support (Greg) Abbott but the campaign had nothing to do with these (posters)."

Los Angeles street artist Sabo, who describes himself as a conservative and a Republican in online interviews, said he created and posted 20 of the posters for Stuard.

Sabo also created art posted in Los Angeles in March depicting U.S. Sen. Ted Cruz, R-Texas, more favorably. The poster showed Cruz as a cigarette-smoking, tattooed bad boy with the title "Blacklisted and Loving It."

Cruz proudly tweeted the photo from his official account, saying: "Saw this, but noticed an error. So I wanted to make one thing clear: I don't smoke cigarettes."

Davis is in Hollywood for a fundraiser hosted by celebrities such as director Steven Spielberg. The tab for hosts is $25,000, while contributions range down to $1,000 at the "friend"-level, reported Hearst's Austin bureau chief Peggy Fikac.

Sabo sells the Cruz posters, which drew national attention, for $38 on his website UnsavoryAgents.com.

Much of Sabo's work attacks progressive leaders including President Barack Obama and former Secretary of State Hillary Clinton and is often obscene in nature.

"There are very few people in Washington that I like," Sabo said in an interview with The405Media.com. "But Cruz seems like a stand-up guy."

Stuard, who is in the oil business, has been active in federal campaigns including donations to GOP presidential candidates Rick Santorum and Herman Cain, as well as a number of conservative PAC's.

The Davis campaign quickly attempted to tie the Barbie posters to Republican gubernatorial candidate Greg Abbott in a statement:

"Greg Abbott's refusal to denounce these nasty campaign posters is offensive but not surprising," Zac Petkanas, a spokesman for Davis said in a statement. "This is just another in a long line of offensive actions and comments by Greg Abbott in an attempt to demean Wendy Davis and women across Texas."

Stuard praised conservative blogger Eric Erickson for coining the moniker "Abortion Barbie" for Davis earlier this year after the Fort Worth state senator filibustered a restrictive abortion bill.

Sabo said his name comes from a firing device in a cannon called a "sabot" in the interview. He said he served "four painful years in the Marine Corps on a tank."

Sabo's website, Facebook and Twitter accounts use the name "Unsavory Agents." He posted a photo of himself, with his face blurred out, in front of the posters.

Police seek alleged wrongly freed suspect

A suspected drunken driver now sought by police should have been charged with DWI instead of being freed after a fatal traffic accident, a prosecutor said.

Florian Quintanilla-Riva on April 4 allegedly drove the wrong way in his car and hit an SUV, according to police accident reports. An SUV passenger, Steven James, 79, died two days later.

An intoxication manslaughter charge was filed April 10, police spokesman John Cannon said Thursday .

Quintanilla-Riva, 26, after the accident spent a night hospitalized, a night jailed and was then freed, according to KHOU-TV.

Assistant Harris County District Attorney Daniel Werlinger on Wednesday told the Houston Chronicle that Quintanilla-Riva should have been charged and held on a driving while intoxicated count.

"It's my understanding they sat on him at the hospital, then put him into custody at the jail once the hospital released him," Werlinger said. "He was supposed to be booked in on a DWI, but those charges weren't ever sent to the DA's office."

Quintanilla-Riva's blood alcohol level was 0.47, nearly six times the legal limit for driving, according to court records.

His mother, Rosa Riva, said her son came home after his release from jail, stayed about a week and police did not come looking for him, she told the Houston TV station. Her son possibly could be in the family's native El Salvador, she said.

Cannon on Thursday did not provide additional comment, other than a police statement saying the search continues in the ongoing investigation.

Richard Nguyen, an attorney for the James family, said it seems like there was no accountability whatsoever.

"They're obviously devastated and saddened by the loss of Steven James, father, devoted husband, and best friend, but at the same time they feel betrayed by the Houston Police Department," Nguyen said.

Superintendents publicly criticize state testing

Several Texas superintendents have publicly criticized the state's standardized testing system ahead of next week's release of statewide scores.

Paul Jones, superintendent of the Paris school district in northeast Texas, said in a recent letter to parents that the tests known as the State of Texas Assessments of Academic Readiness reflect a "punitive, one-size-fits-all" system.

Superintendents in the Dallas suburb of Coppell and the East Texas towns of Longview and Van also recently sent letters to parents critical of the mandatory testing, The Dallas Morning News reported.

Statewide STAAR results for grades three through eight are scheduled to be released next week.

Critics of the assessments have argued that preparing for STAAR, including a concentration on test-taking strategy, has hurt classroom teaching.

"Our students are much more than a once-a-year pencil and bubble sheet test," Jones wrote to parents. "Your child means immeasurably more than just a number generated in Austin. There is no test that can assess all of what makes each child unique."

Paris has been challenged over the state tests in recent years; fewer students passed most of the exams than the state average.

Wearing his new prosthetic legs, Hero gets a taste of shrubbery Wednesday in Houston. The abandoned calf rescued from a Virginia farm a year ago and brought to Texas after it nearly died received permanent prosthetics to replace back hooves that had to be amputated because of frostbite.

HERO'S HOOVES

Rescued calf gets high-tech prosthetics

By Michael Graczyk
Associated Press

HOUSTON — Hot and tired from a three-hour drive inside a trailer behind a pickup truck, the 600-pound English Charolais calf was content to lay on the grass behind a south Houston building while a team of technicians worked on its hind legs.

When the calf known as Hero heard its name called, the 15-month-old gingerly got up, unsteadily rocked a bit, then waddled away, tail wagging, eyes wide and tongue licking. It headed across a patch of concrete toward an appetizing snack of green shrubbery a few yards away.

Hero became what may be the nation's only double-amputee calf with prosthetics on Wednesday when fitted for a new pair of high-tech devices attached to its back legs.

"I'm so proud," Hero's caretaker, Kitty Martin, exclaimed. "Look at you!"

It's the latest step in a yearlong effort that has taken Martin and the animal from Virginia, where she rescued it last year from an Augusta County farm where it succumbed to frostbite that claimed its hooves, to Texas. Animal surgeons at Texas A&M University treated Hero for several months and affixed the initial prosthetics that the calf now had outgrown.

"This is our first cow," Erin O'Brien, an orthotist and prosthetist for Hanger Inc., an Austin-based national firm that makes prosthetic limbs. She was among a team of about eight people working on the project for about two weeks.

"We did a lot of study of photos and video of cows just regular walking to see what it looks like and see if we can mimic that biomechanically," O'Brien said. "It's unusual, yes, but an opportunity."

Surgeons at Texas A&M accepted Martin's initial pleas for help, removing about two inches of bone to enable them to create a pad of tissue that would allow for prosthetics.

"Until I worked on him, I hadn't ever done it before. And I'd not heard of (prosthetics) before in a bovine," said Ashlee Watts, an equine orthopedic surgeon at the school.

Martin figures she has spent nearly $40,000 to save the calf.

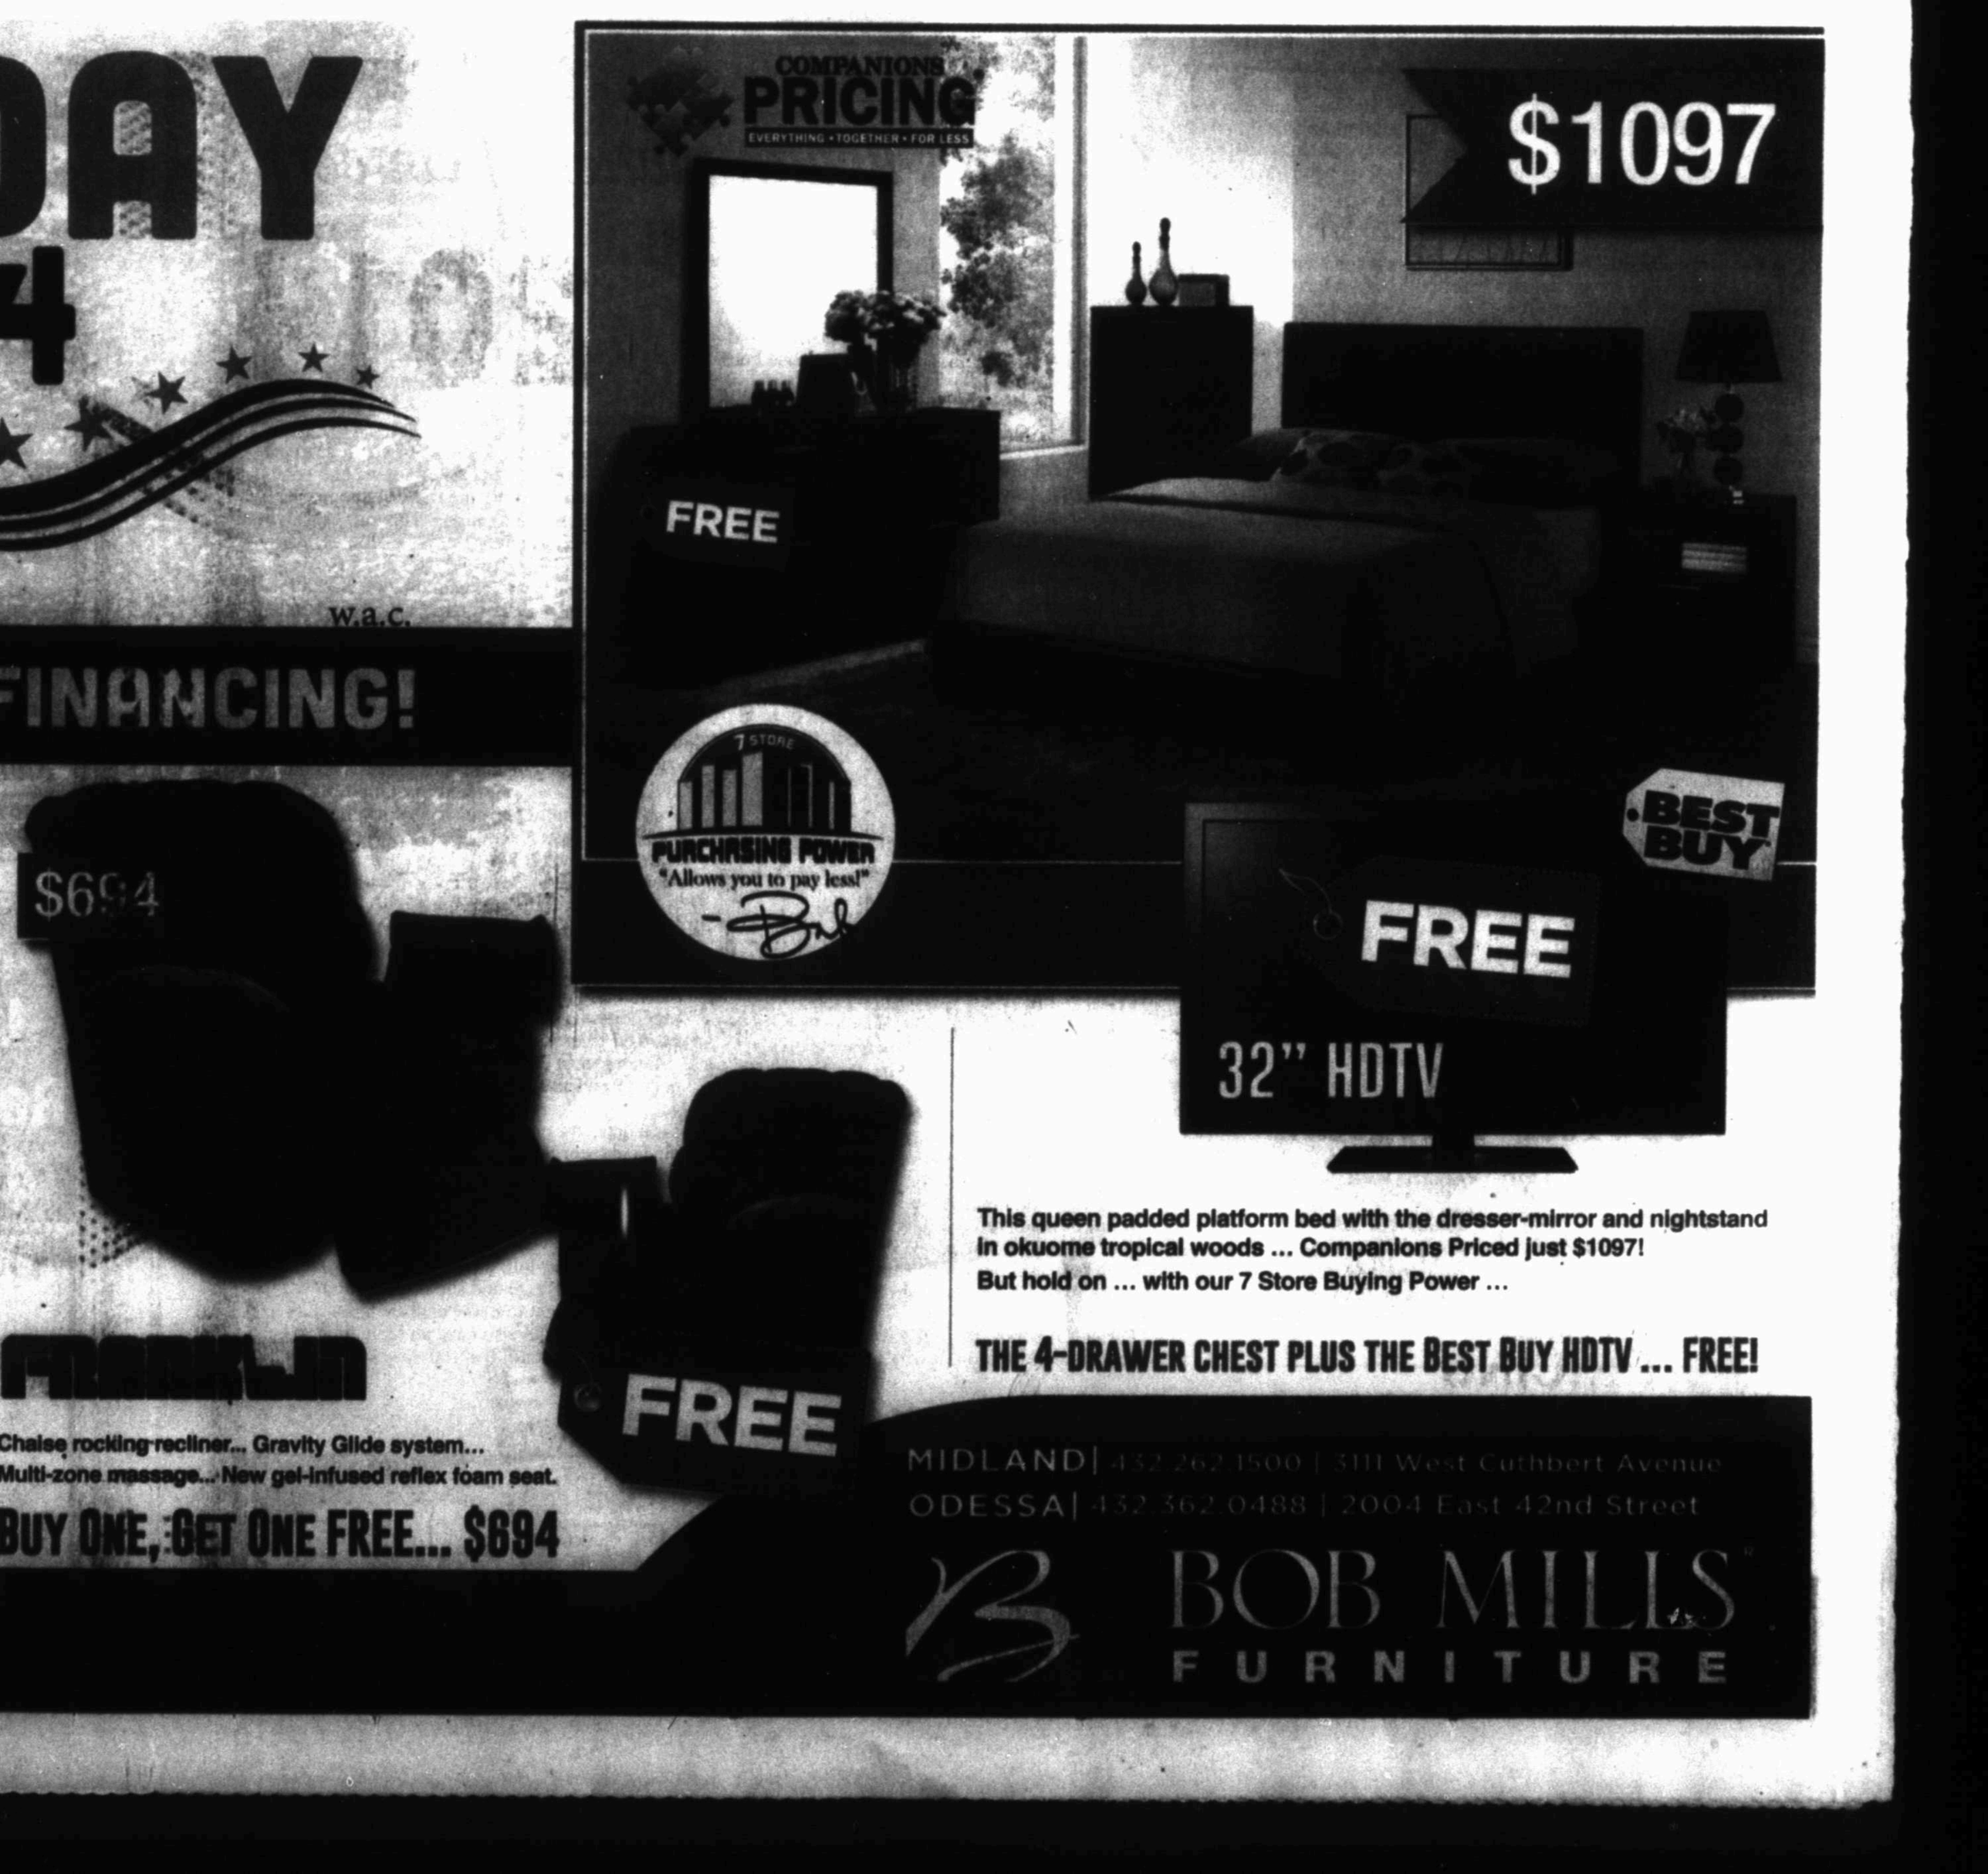
"I don't know how to explain it," she said. "I'm an animal rescuer. And he had everything against him."

Hero's hooves are custom made of urethane and titanium, the connecting components are titanium and carbon fiber and the sockets that attach to his legs are carbon fiber and acrylic resin. Martin and O'Brien declined to discuss the cost, but estimated that similar devices for humans go for between $4,000 and $8,000 apiece.

Hero's sockets are painted with black and white cow spots. "Holstein legs," O'Brien laughed.

"We like to customize legs to the person's personality," she said.

Martin, 53, a former veterinary technician and retired truck driver originally from Dalhart, in the Texas Panhandle, is moving with her husband from Greenville, Virginia, to Cameron in Central Texas. She's hoping Hero, who could grow to 1,500 pounds, can be a therapy animal for wounded veterans and special needs children.



Russia-China alliance upsets balance of power

■ It's Putin, and not Obama, who has pivoted to Asia, and the administration doesn't seem to understand what's happening

CHARLES KRAUTHAMMER

Washington Post Writers Group

On Wednesday, it finally happened — the pivot to Asia. No, not the United States. It was Russia that turned East.

In Shanghai, Russian President Vladimir Putin and Chinese President Xi Jinping signed a spectacular energy deal — $400 billion of Siberian natural gas to be exported to China over 30 years.

This is huge. By indelibly linking producer and consumer, the pipeline alone is a $70 billion infrastructure project — it deflates the post-Ukraine Western threat (mostly empty, but still very loud) to cut European imports of Russian gas. Putin has just defiantly demonstrated that he has other places to go.

The Russia-China deal also makes a mockery of U.S. boasts to have isolated Russia because of Ukraine. Not even Germany wants to risk a serious rupture with Russia (hence the absence of significant sanctions). And now Putin has just ostentatiously unveiled a signal 30-year energy partnership with the world's second-largest economy. Some isolation.

The contrast with President Obama's own vaunted pivot to Asia is embarrassing. He went to Japan last month also seeking a major trade agreement that would symbolize and cement a pivotal strategic alliance. He came home empty-handed.

Does the Obama foreign policy team even understand what is happening? For them, the Russia-China alliance is simply more retrograde, 19th-century, balance-of-power maneuvering by men of the past oblivious to the reality of a 21st century governed by law and norms. A place where, for example, one simply doesn't annex a neighbor's territory. Indeed, Obama scolds Russia and China for not living up to their obligations as major stakeholders in this new interdependent world.

The Chinese and Russians can only roll their eyes. These norms and rules mean nothing to them. They see these alleged norms as forms of velvet-glove imperialism, clever extensions of a Western hegemony meant to keep Russia in its reduced post-Soviet condition and China contained by a dominant U.S. military.

Obama cites modern rules; Russia and China, animated by resurgent nationalism, are governed by ancient maps. Putin refers to eastern and southern Ukraine by the old czarist term of "New Russia." And China's foreign minister justifies vast territorial claims that violate maritime law by citing traditional ("nine-dash") maps that grant China dominion over the East and South China seas.

Which makes this alignment of the world's two leading anti-Western powers all the more significant. It marks a major alteration in the global balance of power.

Putin to Shanghai reprises Nixon to China. To be sure, it's not the surprise that Henry Kissinger pulled off in secret. But it is the capstone of a gradual — now accelerated — Russia-China rapprochement that essentially undoes the Kissinger-Nixon achievement.

Their 1972 strategic coup fundamentally turned the geopolitical tables on Moscow. Putin has now turned the same tables on us. China and Russia together represent the core of a new coalition of anti-democratic autocracies challenging the Western-imposed, post-Cold War status quo. Their enhanced partnership marks the first emergence of a global coalition against American hegemony since the fall of the Berlin wall.

Indeed, at this week's Asian cooperation conference, Xi proposed a brand-new continental security system to include Russia and Iran (lest anyone mistake its anti-imperialist essence) and exclude America. This is an open challenge to the post-Cold War, U.S.-dominated world that Obama inherited and then weakened beyond imagining.

If carried through, it would mark the end of a quarter-century of unipolarity. And herald a return to a form of bipolarity — two global coalitions: one free, one not — though, with communism dead, not as structurally rigid or ideologically dangerous as Cold War bipolarity. Not a fight to the finish, but a struggle nonetheless — for dominion and domination.

To which Obama, who once proclaimed that "no one nation can or should try to dominate another nation," is passive, perhaps even oblivious. His pivot to Asia remains a dead letter. Yet his withdrawal from the Middle East — where from Egypt to Saudi Arabia, from Libya to Syria, U.S. influence is at its lowest ebb in 40 years — is a fait accompli.

The retreat is compounded by Obama's proposed massive cuts in defense spending (down to below 3 percent of GDP by 2017) even as Russia is rearming and China is creating a sophisticated military soon capable of denying America access to the waters of the Pacific Rim.

Decline is not a condition. Decline is a choice, Obama's choice. And it's the one area where he is succeeding splendidly.

OUR VIEW

Why won't Davis debate energy issues in Midland-Odessa?

Laurels

■ For Lynn and Les Sinclair. The former Midanders are huge supporters of Habitat for Humanity. The couple, who now live in Katy, set a goal about eight years ago to fund the construction of one Habitat home. They have reached that goal with the help of their employer, ConocoPhillips — which matched the Sinclairs' contributions. The donations were made anonymously and placed in a fund set up by Habitat until enough accrued to build an entire house. As construction was to begin on the home, the Sinclairs agreed to let Habitat share their story as a way to inspire others. We want to thank the Sinclairs, who in the words of Habitat Executive Director Alynda Best, "really understand and support affordable housing for families." We expect to see the local foundations and large companies step up when there is a need in the community, but it's gratifying when individuals do the same.

Arrows

■ For Greg Abbott. Yes, we understand that when Democrat Wendy Davis called for six debates before the November gubernatorial election, she did so looking like a candidate down double-digits in the polls. One area where we will agree with Davis is that six debates would offer proper opportunities to get information to the voters. We also believe that Abbott would hardly be a novice in a debate format, so why not?

We hope that Abbott will split the difference (he called for two earlier this week). Have four debates, including one strictly about education, one on border issues and one on energy. Many Republicans believe Abbott would carry the conservative baton more effectively than current Gov. Rick Perry, so why should debating Davis be a problem? It wouldn't. It's time for Abbott to step up.

■ For Wendy Davis. So how does she call for six debates in different parts of the state and not have one in Midland-Odessa? For a second, picture officials debating energy issues in our state inside the Wagner Noel Performing Arts Center. Somehow Davis thought Lubbock or El Paso would be more appropriate West Texas locations. Is it because Davis sees friendlier political territory elsewhere or because she doesn't recognize the impact the oil industry and the region are having on the state? Probably both. The Reporter-Telegram attempted to contact Davis about the schedule. Her spokesperson did not return our call.

Clinton's health matter of concern

■ If Hillary becomes presidential candidate, she has duty to disclose any ill-effects of fall or concussion

CAL THOMAS

Tribune Content Agency

Karl Rove, the bete noir for Democrats (and some Republicans), has dared to raise questions about Hillary Clinton's health.

The New York Post first reported a conversation between Rove, former White House Press Secretary Robert Gibbs and Dan Raviv of CBS News about Mrs. Clinton's fall and concussion in December 2012. Rove was quoted as saying, "Thirty days in the hospital? And when she reappears, she's wearing glasses that are only for people who have traumatic brain injury? We need to know what's up with that."

Bill Clinton defended his wife saying she is "in better shape" than he is, but confirmed that it took "six months" of "very serious work" to recover from her concussion. A State Department spokesperson said it was 30 days. Which is it?

The physical condition of a president, or one seeking the office, is a fundamental issue in any campaign and in every presidency. Virtually every president since George Washington has had health issues, some minor, some major. Not all presidents or their staffs were forthcoming about them.

In 2002, The Atlantic Monthly compiled a list of presidential health cover-ups: "Concealing one's true medical condition from the voting public is a time-honored tradition of the American presidency. William Henry Harrison, who died of pneumonia in April of 1841, after only one month in office, was the first Chief Executive to hide his physical frailties. Nine years later Zachary Taylor's handlers refused to acknowledge that cholera had put the President's life in jeopardy; they denied rumors of illness until he was near death, in July of 1850, sixteen months into his presidency. During Grover Cleveland's second term, in the 1890s, the White House deceived the public by dismissing allegations that surgeons had removed a cancerous growth from the President's mouth; a vulcanized-rubber prosthesis disguised the absence of much of Cleveland's upper left jaw and part of his palate. The public knew nothing about the implant until one of the President's physicians revealed it in 1917, nine years after Cleveland's death."

Perhaps the most famous cover-up occurred with Woodrow Wilson. In 1919, during his second term, Wilson embarked on a national tour to promote the World War I peace treaty he had personally negotiated. During the trip, Wilson experienced headaches and fatigue. The tour was aborted and Wilson returned to the White House where he suffered a stroke.

Wilson's inner circle, including his wife, doctor, private secretary and even the secretary of state, hid his condition. They told the press and cabinet the president had suffered a nervous breakdown. No one was allowed to see him, not even his vice president. Wilson retired from the White House in 1921 and died three years later.

That sequence of events couldn't happen in today's saturated media environment. Or could it?

John F. Kennedy suffered from multiple health problems. Among the cover-up conspirators was Kennedy's doctor, Janet Travell, who is credited with the idea of JFK's rocking chair to ease his back pain and to convey a positive image.

Bill Clinton refused to release his medical records to the public. Barack Obama released a one-page letter from his doctor testifying to his "excellent health." Both men admitted to using recreational drugs in their youth, though Clinton ludicrously claimed he didn't inhale. Obama smoked cigarettes.

Just as most candidates for high office feel compelled to release their tax returns (Mitt Romney was a rare exception), all candidates, especially candidates for president, should publish their medical records.

If Hillary Clinton's concussion was not serious and there are no concerns about its long-term effects; if the glasses she now wears are not to correct double vision or other lingering symptoms attributed to her fall, then there is no problem. But if the reverse is true and she is covering it up, the public has a right to know and she has a duty to tell us. The media also have an obligation to keep up the pressure until the truth is known.

5 hints about November election from AP-GfK poll

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Nearly half of Americans don't care very much which party wins control of Congress after the elections this fall, according to the latest Associated Press-GfK poll. Here's a look at five findings from the poll that could be meaningful come Nov. 4.

So who does care?

Those who said they care a good deal which party wins control of Congress in November are evenly divided on which party they want to see win; 45 percent prefer Republicans, 44 percent Democrats. These engaged adults are nearly twice as likely as others to describe themselves as Republicans (45 percent call themselves Republicans vs. 23 percent among those who don't care very much about party control). They lean more conservative generally on social and economic issues.

Just over half describe themselves as middle class (55 percent), 7 in 10 are white and 53 percent are female.

Independents feel especially detached

Turnout among each party's ideological core may lead one or the other to victory, with independents increasingly disenchanted with both parties. In the poll, 78 percent of independents said it doesn't matter which party wins control of Congress, and 79 percent wanted their incumbent voted out. Both figures have increased since March.

But that disaffection isn't translating into action. Independents aren't as enthusiastic about the election as Republicans or Democrats, particularly those at the ideological core in either party.

Six in 10 liberal Democrats said it matters a good deal who wins in November, as do 77 percent of conservative Republicans. Among independents, just 20 percent said the same.

Targeted groups not hit yet

Both Democrats and Republicans are vying for support from women and Hispanics in their 2014 campaigns, yet the poll suggested that outreach may not yet have sold either group on the importance of this election. Democrats have an overall advantage among both groups as the preferred party to wind up in control of Congress next year. Among Hispanics, however, just 41 percent said it doesn't matter which party controls Congress.

Top issues

Nearly 9 in 10 call the economy an important problem (86 percent) and it's the only issue in the poll that a majority considers "extremely important." The economy tops the list of issues among those who care deeply about the election's outcome, as well as those who don't. From there, priorities diverge.

To the disengaged, health care is more vital than the federal budget. Those two issues are about even in importance among people who care deeply about the election.

About 7 in 10 call gas prices a top issue.

Immigration is far more important for those who care deeply about the outcome (60 percent) than those who do not (43 percent), but the environment merits a top rating from majorities in both groups (56 percent among those who care, 55 percent among those who don't).

On Obama, little change

President Barack Obama's approval rating holds steady in the new poll, with 43 percent approving and 56 percent disapproving of how he's handling the presidency. Obama's approval is about the same among those invested in the election as it is among those who don't care much about the outcome.

But there were two issues tested in the poll on which the president's approval ratings fell. On handling the environment, less than half now approve of the president's performance — 48 percent in the new poll compared with 56 percent in a December AP-GfK poll, and positive ratings for his handling of unemployment have dipped to 40 percent from 45 percent in January.

Chris Davidson Opportunity Park to move to northwest Midland

■ New park will be part of the Bush Tennis Center

By Megan Lea Buck
mbuck@mrt.com

When native Midlanders Jan and Steve Davidson decided in the late 1980s to build a park that would be accessible to all children, including those with disabilities, they didn't expect to garner community support and funding so quickly.

After working with the MARC board and securing a location for the proposed park, Steve Davidson set out to talk to other Midlanders and share the couple's vision of a park that would allow their young son, Chris Davidson, to play alongside other children. Chris had muscular dystrophy and wore leg braces. Carrying an architect's 3-D model of the park around with him, Steve Davidson raised more than $650,000 in 90 days. Every person he talked to supported the project.

The Davidsons, who now live in Colleyville, call it a testament to the character of their hometown.

"If it's good for the community, if it impacts children, people just step up," Steve Davidson said.

The Davidsons were back in town Tuesday to announce plans for a new Chris Davidson Opportunity Park, to be located on 3.3. acres west of the Bush Tennis Center on Briarwood Avenue.

Henry Energy LP presented the Bush Tennis Center with the deed to the land where the park will be built. Though the new park will not be located inside the Bush Tennis Center, it will be part of the center and the center will be responsible for its maintenance.

With a focus on inclusiveness, Bush Tennis Center officials said the park is a welcome addition to the nonprofit sports center.

"... (T)he Bush Tennis Center exists so that everyone can experience the game of tennis," said Valerie Acosta, executive director. "You don't get an opportunity to have something that mirrors what you do like this. We don't have a cookie cutter kid out here playing tennis. We want them all."

The original park is located next door to MARC's office buildings on "A" Street and Ventura Avenue. MARC is currently undergoing a capital campaign to construct new buildings

When life throws you a major curveball, like the loss of a job, home or relationship, it can be hard to recover. You may not feel like you can go on, but fortunately, God is there. When all appears to be lost, you can count on God to comfort you and give you the strength to carry on.

Obituaries

Edwin Joseph Krupa

Edwin Joseph Krupa passed away Wednesday May 15, 2014 at Highgate House in Wenatchee, Washington. Memorial services will be held at 10:00 a.m., Saturday May 24, 2014 at Nalley-Pickle & Welch in Midland, Texas with the gravesite service to follow at Greenwood Cemetary.

Eddie was born August 13, 1924, to Joe and Violet Krupa in E. Chicago, Indiana. He grew up, lived, and worked in Indiana until July 10, 1943 when he joined the U.S. Army Air Force and became a Belly ball-turret-gunner on a four-engine B-17 Flying Fortress called the "ice Col Katy". It was the hottest spot in the heavy bomber, no protection, no room for a parachute. The saving grace was the Flying Fortress itself the B-17 could take any punishment. As he said, "It will bring you home." And it did.

Thirty-seven missions he flew, including the Normandy invasion on D-Day. Eddie was honorably discharged as a staff sergent on October 17, 1945, and married Sue King on October 18, 1945, whom he had met after the war while stationed at the Midland Army Air Force base.

They remained in Midland and he went to work for Texas Electric Service Company, where he eventually received his master electrician license. He worked there for 35 years then started his own company "Lightening Electric."

Eddie was involved in Little League Baseball, Junior Achievement, Christmas in April and was always willing to help out anyone in need.

He enjoyed bowling, golfing, and traveling with his wife Sue. They made several trips to Hawaii, Alaska, Australia, New Zealand, Fiji, and Germany. He loved his family and animals especially dogs they always held a special place in his life.

After losing his wife of 62 years from a long battle with Altzheimers, he moved in with family members and enjoyed spending time with daughters, grand daughters and all of his great grand children.

He is survived by his sister, Barbara Casey Orban of Wylie, Texas; his daughter, Carolyn Davenport and husband Doug; grandsons, Eric and David; granddaughter, Diane; great granddaughters Riley, Morgan, and Danielle; great grandson, Jared, all of Cleveland; and his daughter Toya Smith and husband Bruce of Houston, Texas; his granddaughter, Kesha Milne; great grandsons, Austin, Carson, and Peyton of Dryden, Washington; granddaughter, Keri Marks; great granddaughters, Molly and Rebecca of Snoqualmie Pass, Washington; granddaughter, Michelle Smith; great grandsons, Noah, Myles, and Sylas of Wenatchee, Washington.

He will be making his last flight home from Washington to Texas where he will be laid to rest at Greenwood Cemetery with his wife and baby boy Edwin Michael, who lived only one week; they will now be reunited.

As his pilot would say after every mission, "We've got our work done for the government. We've done our job for our country. Now, let's go home."

There will be a viewing at Nalley-Pickle & Welsh Friday May 23, 2014 from 6:00-8:00 p.m.

Anthony Mazzola, former Hearst magazine editor, dies

Hearst Newspapers

NEW YORK — Anthony T. Mazzola, former editor in chief of Town&Country and Harper's BAZAAR, and the curator of Hearst Corp.'s fine art collection, died May 21 in New York. He was 90.

Mazzola, the editor who defined affluence and style for millions of readers at the two magazines for 44 years, started his career at Hearst as an art director.

In 1948, at the age of 25, Mazzola joined Town&Country as the youngest art director in the magazine's history. He held that post for nearly two decades, ultimately becoming editor in chief in 1965. Town&Country is the longest continuously published general-interest magazine in the United States, having been founded in 1846.

Building on what he once described as his "fascination with trends," Mazzola's Town&Country began to reflect the current events and social reorganization then affecting elite American society as the nation mourned the assassination of President John F. Kennedy and grappled with civil rights, the Vietnam War and the first stirrings of modern-day feminism.

Mazzola said he was captivated "not by what's happening, but why."

While still the magazine's art director in 1964, he published a tongue-in-cheek "It's Fun to Be Rich" issue. In 1966, his first year as Town&Country's editor in chief, he put the Rolling Stones on the cover of what was widely held to be the bible of conservative, blue-blooded America. The ensuing controversy prompted Hearst's executives to ask him, "Young man, do you know what you're doing?"

"I think so," he replied.

In fact, Mazzola did.

By maintaining a meticulous balance between creating an exciting magazine and conveying the dignity of the subjects he presented, he broadened Town&Country's appeal and honored its audience. "People make fun of money," he once said, "but everyone forgets the good that money has done."

High court seems divided over birth control rule

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court seems divided over whether companies have religious rights that should exempt them from the health care law's birth control mandate.

The case involves family-owned companies that provide health insurance to their employees, but object to covering certain methods of birth control that they say can work after conception, in violation of their religious beliefs.

Tuesday's arguments at the court focused mainly on the question of whether profit-making businesses have religious rights. The Obama administration said they don't, but lawyers for Hobby Lobby and Conestoga Wood Specialties argue that a 1993 federal law on religious freedom extends to businesses as well as individuals.

If the justices agree, they would have to decide whether the government policy is crucial and is put in place in the least objectionable way possible.

Justice Anthony Kennedy, whose vote could decide the case, showed interest in the argument that the companies could stop offering health insurance and instead pay a tax of $2,000 per employee. That route might allow the court to sidestep the thorniest questions in the case.

for executive offices, an autism resource center, child development center, pediatrician's office and gated playground. The new construction will require use of the land that is the current park.

"In 1989, when MARC constructed, dedicated and opened Chris Davidson Opportunity Park to the public, it was one of only three completely accessible parks in the United States," MARC Executive Director Charlotte Bosecker said in a prepared statement. "The park has served its purpose for the last 25 years by providing a wonderful recreational space for individuals both with and without disabilities in our community."

The Davidsons' vision for the park was inspired by a similar structure in Dallas, where Jan Davidson would take her son when they visited Scottish Rite Hospital.

"I would come home and tell Steve, 'Gosh, this park is fabulous," she said. "One time he came with me and said, 'Wow, this is amazing.'"

After watching their son play on playground equipment with other children, and seeing the empathy other children learned by interacting with peers with disabilities, the couple knew they wanted a similar park in Midland.

Chris Davidson died before construction of his namesake park was complete.

"When we dedicated that park in May (1989), I know that child was with us," Jan Davidson said.

The park originally was dedicated as Opportunity Park. The MARC board renamed it for Chris Davidson 10 days later.

"We're very appreciative of MARC's efforts over the past 25 years," Steve Davidson said.

MARC has no immediate plans to demolish the park, said Bosecker, noting the nonprofit is still in the fundraising phase of its campaign.

The Davidsons also are kicking off their fundraising efforts for the new park. They estimate they will need to raise about $3.3 million to clear the land and build the park.

"We want the whole city to be involved in this park," Jan Davidson said, noting the project will benefit from donations of building supplies and labor as well as money. "We want everybody's help, every single person in this city."

Donors to the original park and the new project will be recognized at the new park. With 25 years of advancements in knowledge and care for children with disabilities — and with their own experience as parents and now as grandparents — the Davidsons are planning several upgrades to the park. The couple is talking with parents of children involved in Midland Children's Rehabilitation Center to learn what their families would want in a park, and parts of the play area will be designed to benefit children with autism spectrum disorders.

The park will be open from dawn until dusk, will be well-lit and surrounded by a fence and video surveillance to prevent vandalism — which has been an ongoing problem at the original location. With parents and caretakers in mind, the Davidsons made it a priority to include plenty of shaded sitting areas at the park.

"We're going to do it right," Steve Davidson said. "It's going to be a place all of Midland can enjoy."

The couple plans to spend time in Midland fundraising for the park. The time frame for construction will be decided at a later date.

The Davidsons expressed their gratitude to Jim and Paula Henry and the Bush Tennis Center for their support, patience and encouragement throughout the process of securing a location for the new park.

"These people out here have gone to bat for us like you wouldn't believe," Jan Davidson said. "This is my dream — 3.3 acres on the front of Briarwood, the prime spot. It's the greatest gift a mother could ask for."

Palestinian refugees pin hopes on pope's visit

By Mohammed Daraghmeh
Associated Press

DHEISHEH REFUGEE CAMP, West Bank — Pope Francis will spend less than half an hour in this Palestinian refugee camp during a jam-packed Holy Land tour this weekend, but residents hope even a brief visit will shine a light on what they say is their forgotten plight.

Some 190,000 of the West Bank's 2.4 million Palestinians live in refugee camps and face tougher conditions — including higher unemployment and overcrowding — than their neighbors in towns and villages.

Many feel increasingly neglected by the Palestinian self-rule government and the United Nations agency responsible for their welfare. Resentment can be seen in the rise in stone-throwing protests by camp youths and a recent two-month strike of thousands of local employees of the U.N. aid agency demanding higher wages.

Underlying the discontent is fear of open-ended limbo. Israelis and Palestinians remain far apart on a solution for the refugees who were forced or driven out in the war over Israel's 1948 creation and today, along with their descendants, make up more than 5 million people scattered across the West Bank, Gaza, Jordan, Syria and Lebanon.

Last month, another round of Israeli-Palestinian peace talks ended in failure.

"Through time, the suffering in the camps has grown," said Ishaq al-Natteti, 66, who was only a few days old when his family was uprooted from what is now Israel and has spent his life in Dheisheh, a camp of 13,000 people near Bethlehem. "There's no return to our homes and land; no real life, no space, no jobs, no services, no economy."

The pope will visit a Dheisheh community center for about 20 minutes on Sunday and will meet dozens of children from three camps.

Francis said Wednesday that his visit to Jordan, Israel and the West Bank is "strictly religious," tempering expectations that he might take sides in the Mideast conflict. Israelis and Palestinians have been trying to harness the pilgrimage to highlight rival narratives.

Some argued that Christianity cannot ignore one of the world's most entrenched refugee problems.

"Truly, the Palestinian refugees are the dispossessed of the earth, a people languishing in exile," said Chris Gunness of the U.N. Relief and Works Agency for Palestinian refugees. "There cannot be peace in the Holy Land until they are delivered from their dispossession and exile."

The pontiff will meet the refugee children at Dheisheh's Phoenix Center, which hosts workshops and weddings and also offers a library and a computer center. A meeting hall has been decorated with large posters illustrating Dheisheh's history, including dusty streets with donkey carts in the 1950s and a tall chain-link fence that blocked off the camp in the 1980s to prevent stone-throwers from striking Israeli cars.

MHS' Rushton continues to prove himself on the field

James Durbin/Reporter-Telegram

Midland High's Braden Rushton hits during a March 15 game against Abilene Cooper at Zachery Field.

By Len Hayward
lhayward@mrt.com

About the only thing Barry Russell knew about Braden Rushton before the start of baseball workouts was that he was a pretty good football player.

Other than that, Russell had no idea what kind of baseball player he was. But in one throw during the team's tryout in January, he knew Rushton was a player he needed to take a closer look at.

During an outfield drill at the tryout, Rushton easily handled a ball, and then sent a throw on a line from about 250 feet that was a little different than some of the other throws Russell was seeing that day.

"We hit a ball to him, and all of the sudden he comes up and throws it, and I'm thinking, 'That's going to hit me,'" Russell said. "I told the little girl next to me to get out of the way, and it bounces on the plate.

"I said, 'Crap who is that?' One of the coaches said that's Rushton, he's the kid who moved in."

Since that day, Rushton found his way into Midland High's lineup as the No. 5 hitter and a right fielder, and he will be in the lineup this weekend when the Bulldogs take on Flower Mound Marcus in a Class 5A regional semifinal at Concordia University in Austin. The first game is scheduled for 7:30 p.m. today.

MIDLAND HIGH VS. FLOWER MOUND MARCUS

When: Game 1, 7:30 p.m. today; Game 2, Noon Saturday; Game 3, if necessary, 30 minutes following Game 2.

In fact, nearly everybody in the Midland High athletic program didn't know much about Rushton when he arrived in August of last year after his family moved from Olympia, Washington.

Rushton's cousin, Mike, is an assistant football coach at Midland High, but it's always hard to judge a move in. Rushton played three sports at North Thurston High School, a Class 3A school in Washington of about 1,200 students, however playing football and baseball in Texas can be much different.

But it didn't take long for Rushton to blend in on the football field and

Defense shines in Midland High spring game

By Len Hayward
lhayward@mrt.com

It didn't take Midland High coach Craig Yenzer long to identify the theme of Thursday's spring game at Grande Communications Stadium: defense.

Midland High's defense, which had some struggles a season ago during a 5-5 campaign, showed a little more aggressiveness up front, and it paid off through much of the scrimmage Thursday.

The Midland High varsity offense mustered two scores in two quarters of play, and both came on long plays late in the scrimmage.

But other than those two plays, the Bulldogs' running game struggled for yards and quarterbacks Ryan Goodrum and Brady Bolger didn't have much time to make decisions with the football.

"That was our mindset to start quick, and that was our biggest concern coming in here," said senior-to-be linebacker Emilio Solis. "The issue for us was starting off, and we wanted to get to it. We proved a point that we can start fast and make plays."

During the two quarters of the scrimmage for prospective varsity players, the defense had eight three-and-outs,

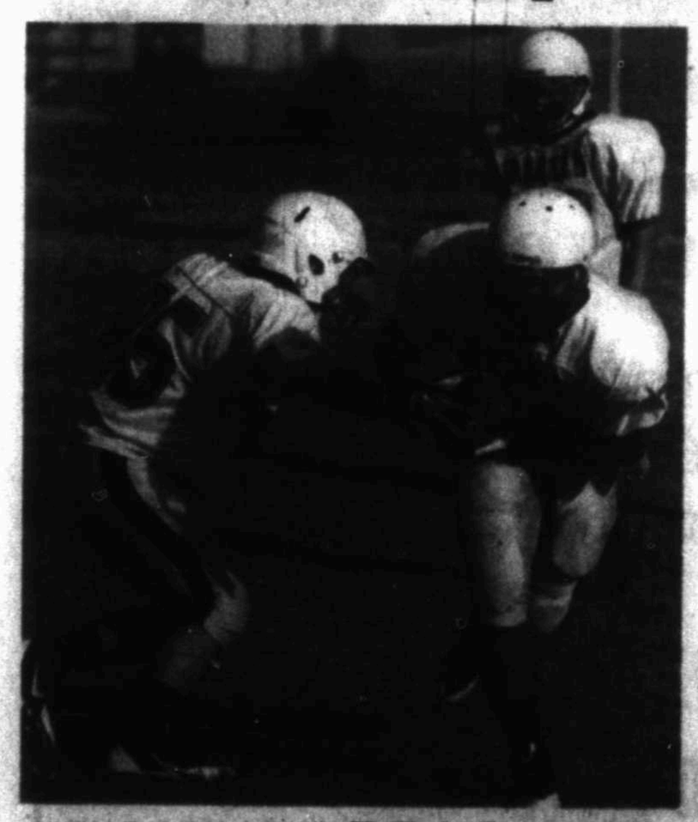
Lee shows discipline heading into spring game



Tim Fischer/Reporter-Telegram

Lee football players practice handoffs during the first day of spring practice on April 29 at Lee High School. Lee's annual spring game is set for today.

By Len Hayward
lhayward@mrt.com

Lee football coach James Morton has been on the lookout during spring workouts for things beyond what happens on the field.

Last fall, a key to a 9-3 season, the in the Morton era and one of the best in a decade, the Rebels were focused on things beyond football such as discipline and accountability.

Morton did have some concern entering the spring because the team was losing a handful of key players on both sides of the ball. But as the Rebels get ready today's spring game at Grande Communications Stadium, he's seen a team that has matured in less than a month.

"All the intangibles of being responsible and being more disciplined, that part has been really good," Morton said. "There was a big concern with this group, and how we would grow and mature in that area. From that standpoint it's been good."

Morton did admit there is still some work to do on both sides of the ball as far as schemes, but jumping over the hurdle for things such as maturity and discipline is a good start for a team that will have plenty of new personnel at key positions next season.

The game

LEE SPRING GAME

When: 6:30 p.m. today
Where: Grande Communications Stadium

"There's a real correlation to it (during the spring and fall)," Morton said. "During the offseason you are establishing your identity of who you want to be and how you want to play, and how you want to represent Lee High School. You are able to develop those habits and they are going to carry over with you."

Being able to establish those "intangibles" in the spring will be important for Lee today and next season.

Andrews native Chad Campbell hits off the the 12th fairway during the Zurich Classic on April 24 at TPC Louisiana in Avondale, La.

Campbell looking to regain form at Colonial

By Drew Davison
MRT correspondent

FORT WORTH — Chad Campbell is trying to get back to his old form.

It's been a rough couple years for the Andrews native, but he is working diligently on getting his game back to the world-class level it once had been.

Maybe this will be the week where Campbell begins his turnaround at the Crowne Plaza Invitational at Colonial. He is familiar with the course and got off to a solid start, posting a 1-under 69 in the opening round on Thursday.

"I hit a few bad shots at the start of the round and the end of the round, but (I'm) happy with 1-under with the way I played," said Campbell, who now resides in Colleyville with his wife and four boys. "This is one of my favorite courses to play. I love the tradition, love the course and am comfortable out here."

Campbell is also happy to be playing in this week's tournament. He lost his fully exempt status on the PGA Tour by finishing 136th on the money list last season and needed a sponsor's exemption to get into this year's Colonial.

Campbell, who also played at Midland College, has "conditional status" on the tour, which means he gets starts either on sponsor's exemptions or in less-prestigious tournaments with larger fields. Campbell could have burned his career money exemption to get into more fields, but felt he'd play enough tournaments to regain his status.

"If I play well, I'll get my card back," Campbell said. "If not, I can use it next year. We'll wait and see. But it is hard this year not to play some of the tournaments I love to play."

It would have been difficult to imagine Campbell being in this position a few years ago. He was on the brink of becoming a major champion and regarded as one of the top players in the world.

Only five years ago, Campbell had a golden opportunity to win the 2009 Masters. It might have even been a better opportunity for him to become a major champion than the 2003 PGA Championship.

At the '03 PGA Championship at Oak Hill Country Club in Rochester, N.Y., Campbell was in the final group on Sunday. He had shot a 5-under 65 in the third round, which put him tied atop the leader board with Shaun Micheel.

But, in the final round, Campbell shot 2-over to finish second to later on the baseball field. Rushton found his way on the football field as part of Midland High's defense as a linebacker, and a few months later was starting on the baseball team.

RUSHTON

From 1C

Rushton doesn't say a whole lot off the field or on it, but he's also opportunistic. He said during two-a-days in football, he felt like he had a chance to play, and a few days after the baseball tryout he knew the Bulldogs had an opening in the outfield.

It was up to him to take advantage of the opportunities and earn those spots.

"After the first couple of tournaments, I saw there was a opportunity and I was the one who capitalized on it and just continued," Rushton said. "I feel like I had the experience competing against someone."

Rushton has been a nice addition to the lineup for the Bulldogs. He hit .367 during the District 2-5A season and was third on the team in hits with 18 along with seven RBI.

He's hit .300 in the playoffs so far, but where he's also shined is on defense. Rushton made a diving catch against Amarillo Tascosa last week that saved at least two runs, and also ended the game against the Rebels.

"A lot of those kids were football guys, and he had such a good football season that he gained their respect right off the bat," Russell said. "He goes 4-for-4 in the first scrimmage we had, and he caught every ball. He made a great catch against Lee, and he's made some really good catches."

One of the best parts for Rushton in playing baseball this spring is that he has been able to find his place as part of a tradition-rich baseball program, and being a part of athletics has made his transition to Midland High that much easier.

"We have the high expectations of winning that I've noticed with all the years of Coach Russell coaching," Rushton said. "It think it's very cool coming to a school with more tradition with their baseball program than my other school."

Now he's a key part of trying to continue that tradition.

MIDLAND HIGH VS. FLOWER MOUND MARCUS

Format: Best-of-three series

When/where: Game 1, 7:30 p.m. today; Game 2, Noon Saturday; Game 3, if necessary, 30 minutes following Game 2, Tornado Field, Concordia University, Austin

Records: Midland High 26-9, Flower Mound Marcus 30-7

Last playoff series: Midland High def. Amarillo Tascosa, 2-0 (4-2, 2-1); Flower Mound Marcus def. Lewisville Hebron, 2-0 (11-5, 2-1)

Notes: The Bulldogs are returning to the regional semifinals for the first time since 2011 and the seventh time since 2001. Midland High earned its spot this week by sweeping District 2-5A rival Amarillo Tascosa last weekend in Abilene. Lance White and Jackson Lancaster each picked up complete-game pitching victories last weekend. During the playoffs White is 3-0 with a save and a 2.85 earned run average. ... Like the Bulldogs, the Marauders, who won District 5-5A, have relied on pitching and defense through much of the playoffs. Connor Dotson, a West Virginia signee, pitched a complete game in the series clincher against Hebron last week. Dotson gave up one run on five hits with seven strikeouts. Junior Jack Cushing won the series opener, giving up five runs on eight hits with five strikeouts. "We are pitching well, and that's been the anchor of our team, pitching and defense," Marcus coach Jeff Sherman said. "We've had some lulls in our hitting, but we are starting to manage that a little bit." ... Midland High coach Barry Russell said Marcus has a similar pitching staff to Tascosa, but he said the difference is in how they hit. "They swing it very well, and they are just a typical Metroplex team," Russell said. "They are very confident." ... This will be the first meeting between these two teams in the playoffs. ... Sherman said this weekend's road trip will be the first significant road trip for the team this season. All of Marcus' previous playoff opponents have been Metroplex schools.

Johnson wins first pole of the year at Charlotte

By Steve Reed
Associated Press

CONCORD, N.C. — Jimmie Johnson is hoping he's on the verge of turning around a disappointing season.

The six-time Sprint Cup champion won the pole Thursday night for the Coca-Cola 600, turning a lap at 194.911 mph at Charlotte Motor Speedway in the third round of NASCAR's knockout qualifying format.

It was the first pole of the year for Johnson, who has yet to win a race this season.

"It certainly shows that we're going to be strong this weekend," Johnson said. "I don't know that it sends the same message that winning two or three races will send. But I would love to rattle off two or three wins and have people fear the No. 48 as they have in the past. I don't think a pole position does that to the garage area, but you have to start somewhere."

Brad Keselowski qualified second and will start on the front row for the seventh time this season. Kasey Kahne was third, followed by Danica Patrick and Clint Bowyer.

Sprint Cup points leader Jeff Gordon's struggles in practice runs carried over to qualifying. He didn't make it out of the first round of qualifying and will start 27th — one spot behind last week's All-Star race winner, Jamie McMurray.

Johnson has won six Sprint Cup races at the Charlotte, twice from the pole.

He said he isn't concerned that he hasn't won a race this season, which would secure a spot in the Chase for the Cup. What has bothered him is the lack of consistency.

"We have been close to some wins and been pathetic at other tracks," Johnson said.

Johnson was asked if he agrees with the notion that some detractors have enjoyed the fact that he hasn't won yet.

"I think there are some people getting satisfaction out of it," Johnson said. "But if I win, I win too much. If I don't win, they say you aren't winning enough. So it doesn't matter what I do, I can't win."

Johnson was a non-factor in the All-Star race last week at the track in his bid for a three-peat. He said his crew changed the setup in his car this past week, borrowing some advice from teammate Kasey Kahne.

"We learned some things from last week," Johnson said.

Keselowski said he was bummed he got beat out for the pole — again.

It was the sixth time this season he has qualified second.

"It's like kissing your sister," Keselowski said.

Patrick will start in the top 10 for the third straight week. She was fast throughout the qualifying session with the top lap in the second round of 194.595.

But her lap in third round was more than one second slower.

Joey Logano, who is off to the best start of his young career with two wins this season, will start eighth and will be considered one of the favorites on Sunday.

Logano has already won twice this season and has historically run well at Charlotte with three top-five and six top-10 finishes in 10 career Cup starts at Charlotte.

Track temperatures reached 106 degrees at the start of qualifying, but cooled significantly as the sun set behind the grandstand and the speeds picked up dramatically.

Drivers had problems in the first two turns early in qualifying complaining their cars were tight, and had to adjust on the clock.

Under the new format all cars are allowed 25 minutes to qualify with the top 24 based advancing to 10-minute session in round two. From that group, the top 12 advanced to the final, five-minute round.

"The great thing about the new qualifying sessions is there are multiple opportunities to get it right and that is a good thing," Keselowski said. "That is why it is so much fun."

OKLAHOMA 9
TEXAS TECH 8

OKLAHOMA CITY, Okla. — Oklahoma eliminated No. 21 Texas Tech with a 9-8 victory Thursday at the Phillips 66 Big 12 Championship at Chickasaw Bricktown Ballpark.

The Red Raiders (40-18) had an 8-3 lead that was erased by the Sooners' (29-28) eighth and ninth inning efforts that plated three runs in each frame to take the victory.

Tech was led by sophomore outfielder Tyler Neslony, who tied a school record for Big 12 Championship play with four hits going 4-for-5 with a double, run scored and two RBI.

Tech reliever Cameron Smith (7-2) took the loss allowing three runs on two hits with one strikeout and three walks while OU reliever Kindle Ladd (5-3) earned the win throwing a scoreless frame with a strikeout and walk allowed.

Tech, who has its first 40-win season since 2004, will now await the NCAA D-I Championship Selection/Road to Omaha Show that will reveal the post-season brackets on Monday, May 26 at 11 a.m. on ESPNU.

Rangers rout Tigers on day of bad news for Texas

By Noah Tristar
Associated Press

Rangers	9
Tigers	2

DETROIT — On a day full of bad news on the injury front, at least the Texas Rangers could enjoy a victory.

Shin-Soo Choo homered, Chris Gimenez had four hits and the Rangers rolled to a 9-2 victory over the slumping Detroit Tigers on Thursday.

This was supposed to be Prince Fielder's first game back in Detroit after the Tigers traded him in the offseason, but the big first baseman didn't make the trip because of a herniated disk in his neck that could keep him out the rest of the season.

Fielder is expected to have surgery Tuesday. General manager Jon Daniels announced that after the game.

Manager Ron Washington had already finished talking to reporters by then.

"You just want to go out there and give yourself a chance, hope your pitching staff gives you a chance," Washington said. "We understand not every day we're going to be able to put nine runs up, especially against this team."

Yu Darvish (4-2) allowed two runs and six hits in seven innings, striking out six and walking three.

The Rangers broke through quickly against Detroit rookie Robbie Ray (1-1), who lasted only 3 1-3 innings. Ray allowed seven runs, nine hits and four walks, and the AL Central-leading Tigers lost their fourth straight.

Ian Kinsler, who was traded to Detroit for Fielder in an offseason blockbuster, went 1 for 3 in his first game against the Rangers.

The Tigers breezed to a 27-12 start before being swept in a three-game series at Cleveland.

Star right-handers Justin Verlander and Max Scherzer were both knocked around in that series, and a 13-inning finale against the Indians taxed the bullpen.

Ray's start Thursday made the situation even worse, and infielder Danny Worth ended up pitching the ninth inning for Detroit.

Worth, throwing a knuckleball, actually struck out two in a scoreless frame.

"That was a lot of fun," Worth said. "Obviously, you don't ever want to be needed in that spot, but once I got out there, I enjoyed it."

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. — Sean Rodriguez hit a three-run home run with two out in the 11th inning to lift Tampa Bay.

Rodriguez's team-leading fifth homer came off Luke Gregerson after Desmond Jennings' two-out single had tied it against Dan Otero (4-1).

INDIANS 8
ORIOLES 7, 13 INNINGS

BALTIMORE — Carlos Santana doubled in two runs with two outs in the 13th inning, and Cleveland won its second straight 13-inning game and fourth straight overall.

Ryan Rayburn and Lonnie Chisenhall homered for the Indians, whose winning streak ties a season high. Three of Cleveland's last four games have gone extra innings, including a 13-inning win over Detroit on Wednesday night.

WHITE SOX 3
YANKEES 2

CHICAGO — Chris Sale retired 18 of 19 batters over six scoreless innings in his return from an arm injury for Chicago.

The left-hander retired the first 17 hitters after missing more than a month because of a flexor strain in his pitching arm, and Chicago hung on after Mark Teixeira singled in two runs against Ronald Belisario in the ninth.

MARLINS 4
PHILLIES 3

MIAMI — Christian Yelich hit a two-out, bases-loaded RBI single in the ninth inning Thursday to give the Miami Marlins their fifth walkoff win of the year, and they beat the Philadelphia Phillies 4-3.

The Marlins won despite squandering a 3-0 eighth-inning lead. They took the series and improved to 19-6 at home, best in majors.

CARDINALS 4
DIAMONDBACKS 2

ST. LOUIS — Allen Craig drove in the go-ahead run with a two-out double in the seventh inning and St. Louis completed a three-game sweep.

The sweep was the first of a three-game series this season for St. Louis, which has won seven of eight.

METS 5
DODGERS 3

NEW YORK — Jonathon Niese hit an RBI double to provide himself some much-needed run support, and the New York Mets took advantage of two Dodgers miscues to end Zack Greinke's remarkable runs-allowed streak and beat Los Angeles 5-3 Thursday night.

Juan Lagares had a go-ahead RBI single in the seventh off Chris Perez (0-2) and Niese (3-3) pitched seven sharp innings for New York, which won for just the sixth time in 20 games this month and avoided a three-game sweep.

NATIONALS 1

PITTSBURGH — Edinson Volquez allowed one run in six sharp innings and Pittsburgh edged Washington.

Volquez (2-4) ended a three-game losing streak by limiting the Nationals to three hits, walking two and striking out four. Mark Melancon worked the ninth for his eighth save. Andrew McCutchen drove in two runs for the Pirates and made a sliding grab with two on in the ninth to end the game. Josh Harrison added two hits for Pittsburgh.

GIANTS 2
ROCKIES 2, SUSPENDED

DENVER — The game between the Colorado Rockies and San Francisco Giants was suspended after the second rain delay, with the score tied 2-2 in the bottom of the sixth inning.

A makeup date was still being determined. The Giants next visit Coors Field on Sept. 1-3.

BRAVES 5
BREWERS 4

ATLANTA — Ryan Doumit's pinch-hit single brought home two runs, capping a three-run seventh inning that carried the Atlanta Braves to a 5-4 victory over the Milwaukee Brewers on Thursday night.

The Braves trailed 4-1 heading to the bottom of the sixth.

WEDNESDAY'S LATE TEXAS SCORE
ANGELS 2, ASTROS 1

ANAHEIM, Calif. — Jered Weaver pitched a two-hitter for his first complete game in nearly two years and Albert Pujols hit a go-ahead home run in the sixth for Los Angeles.

Weaver (5-3) went the distance for the 12th time in 241 career starts and first time since Aug. 6, 2012, when he beat the Athletics 4-0 with a four-hitter. The three-time All-Star struck out five, walked one and retired 17 of his last 19 batters — including 10 straight after giving up a leadoff homer to George Springer in the fourth. Weaver is 5-1 with a 1.70 ERA over his last seven starts.

5 Things to watch in today's Lee spring game

THE QB BATTLE, PART 2

This battle is a little more intense than the one at Midland High. Hunter Coleman and Jon Schwalbach play a similar style, so consistency could be key for both players in trying to earn the job. They know they've got big shoes to fill, and beginning to fill those shoes starts today.

PLAY CALLING

Scot Halfley has been with the Rebels for a little less than three weeks, and how he's acclimated to the players and their strengths will be interesting to watch. To the outside observer, it's always tough to tell if a play caller is different from another, but it will be fun to see how different Halfley is than Cliff Watkins.

KALEB NUNEZ

The junior-to-be tight end is arguably the best returning receiver in District 3-6A next season. Expect him to see plenty of balls thrown his way today.

DEFENSE

Morton said on Wednesday that the offense had some success against Lee's defense in its most recent intersquad scrimmage, and today defensive side of the ball might be looking for some redemption. A solid defensive front is key for that growth, but there are still lots of question marks in the secondary.

THE WEATHER

The forecast is calling for scattered thunderstorms this evening, so the players and coaches could be dodging both rain drops and taking cover if there's lightning. Don't expect a long delay if lightning stops the game because it likely won't be restarted.

Compiled by Len Hayward

Lee

From 1C

The Rebels will have to fill key spots at quarterback, wide receiver and all through the secondary on defense. Who will fill those spots won't likely be decided today or even this spring, but it did offer the coaching staff a chance to find out who might work where.

At quarterback, Morton said over the final three weeks of the spring it's been a two-player race between junior Hunter Coleman and senior Jon Schwalbach.

Zyan Burditt, the senior who battled with Caden Coots for the job last season, has made the move to cornerback, and could also play wide receiver, and Morton said even be in a package or two in the backfield.

"Zyan, he typifies how this team has taken over the team concept," Morton said. "After the first week, we moved him to corner and he embraced that. He's had a good camp at corner."

Meanwhile, Morton said the battle between Coleman and Schwalbach, has been good, and they are both growing into the position.

"We've seen big improvement from day one," Morton said. "But you've got to be vocal and you got to be that guy to lead, and not just knowing what to do but getting the other guys to do it and being that leader on the field."

As far as defense, Morton said he's seen some good athleticism from that side of the ball but much get better at tackling.

For Morton, though, those are things that can be worked on in the future, and he does feel a little more comfortable about the makeup of his team heading into next season.

"There's a direct correlation between kids being disciplined in their personal life and being responsible and carrying that over to Friday night," Morton said. "As I told them, it's kind of like a car that shines on the outside. I want to know what the motor is made of and what's inside. They've handled everything real well, and that's been a real plus."

Defense

along with a turnover when Blake Humble intercepted a pass.

In the scoring system used on Thursday night, those eight three-and-outs and the turnover gave the defense 51 points.

"I thought watching the defense, I thought team speed showed from that perspective," Yenzer said. "I liked the way we were swarming, and I liked the way we were getting to the football. Even when we get a guy open, he doesn't stay open very long."

Offensively, the Bulldogs struggled to run the football. The longest runs were a 38-yard scamper by Raekwon Anderson and Darius Reed had a 22-yard run. But other than those two runs, the offense didn't put together many runs longer than three or four yards.

Meanwhile, through the air, both Goodrum and Bolger had some solid completions, but both were under enough pressure to make things tough at times behind a young and developing offensive line.

The two quarterbacks were a combined 12-of-33 with two touchdowns. Goodrum connected with Eric Havestock on a 64-yard TD, and Bolger threw a 64-yard TD pass to Kahlyn Winn on the final play of the scrimmage.

"We tried to get a lot of different kids an opportunity to make a play tonight," Yenzer said. "Right now, I'm really pleased with where the defense is. When the defense is playing good, man, the offense has to get better, and they are going to get better."

For now, though, the defense could revel in its game on Thursday night, and head into the summer with some momentum.

"I think the biggest thing was competing ... competing this spring," Solis said. "You could feel the excitement, and practice went by faster. Everything I think was just fun out there. Spring ball went by so fast. It's always about competing ... competing."

Galchenyuk nets OT goal, Canadiens beat Rangers

By Ira Podell
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Alex Galchenyuk tipped in a pass at the right post 1:12 into overtime, and the Montreal Canadiens overcame a late tying goal and beat the New York Rangers 3-2 in Game 3 of the Eastern Conference finals Thursday night.

Montreal cut New York's series lead to 2-1, and can tie it Sunday night at Madison Square Garden before heading home for Game 5.

Galchenyuk, playing only his second game of these playoffs after returning from an injury Monday, deflected a feed from Tomas Plekanec to win it.

Dustin Tokarski was sharp throughout in his second NHL playoff game in place of injured goalie Carey Price, making 35 saves.

New York had its five-game winning streak snapped, and its run of six straight victories over the Canadiens also ended. The Rangers fell to 1-1 in overtime in these playoffs. The Canadiens are 3-1.

Montreal was poised to win it in regulation after Danny Briere scored with 3:02 left in the third, but Kreider matched him when his shot hit the sliding right skate of Canadiens defenseman Alexei Emelin in the crease and caromed past Tokarski, who thrust his head upward in disgust as Madison Square Garden shook.

Tokarski was playing in his second straight game because of a series-ending injury sustained by Price, who was barreled into by Kreider in Game 1.

Briere's goal was also aided by an opposing defenseman, as Ryan McDonagh nudged the puck past goalie Henrik Lundqvist.

Canadiens defenseman Andrei Markov tied it at 1 for the Canadiens in the second period after Carl Hagelin staked New York to the lead in the first.

Tokarski, in his second career playoff game, was sharp throughout. He protected the lead with 55 seconds left, denying Martin St. Louis' drive from the right side with a lunging save, but couldn't close it out then. He stopped 27 shots in a 3-1 loss on Monday in Game 2.

Lundqvist made 22 saves, but couldn't pull out this win.

The Rangers grabbed the lead in the first period that featured only one goal but hardly lacked for action.

By the time Hagelin put New York in front with a batted shot, there had already been one injury as the result of a questionable open-ice hit by Brandon Prust, and an ejection after Daniel Carcillo sought revenge on Prust — a former Rangers fan favorite — for his earlier leveling of Derek Stepan.

Prust landed a blindsided shot to Stepan's chest with his shoulder just 4:48 in, knocking down Stepan, who remained on the ice for several moments before skating off. Stepan returned later in the period. Prust heard boos the rest of the game.

Carcillo's night ended about three minutes later when he rammed Prust from behind in back of the Canadiens net. Carcillo earned a penalty for charging, and Prust ended up in a fight with Derek Dorsett. At some point, Carcillo had an altercation with linesman Scott Driscoll and was ejected.

The Rangers killed off the penalty, and soon after got on the board.

Hagelin raced up ice on a 2-on-1 with St. Louis and sent a pass to him on the right. St. Louis fired a quick shot that was blocked in the crease by defenseman Josh Gorges, but the puck popped up in the air. Hagelin deftly batted it in for his fifth of the playoffs — tied for the team lead — with 4:42 left in the first.

CAMPBELL

From 1C

Micheel, who posted even par to win.

At the '09 Masters, Campbell was in even better position going into a three-way sudden-death playoff with Angel Cabrera and Kenny Perry, who had the tournament in hand before bogeying his final two holes.

Campbell, who shot a 7-under 65 for the first-round lead and 3-under 69 in the final round, was in the best position on the first playoff hole. He was the only one in the middle of the fairway off the tee, but his approach shot found a greenside bunker. He two-putted from there for bogey and was knocked out.

Which major does Campbell feel he had the best shot at?

"That's a good question … probably had my best chance in Augusta," Campbell said. "On the Masters, I kind of got lucky to get into the playoff with Kenny bogeying those two holes. But it was my best chance because I had it right in the middle of the fairway, good chance at birdie and unfortunately made bogey."

Campbell had other successful major championships, including a fifth-place finish at the 2011 British Open, but has played in only one of the last 10 majors.

It's been a tough decline for Campbell, who turns 40 at the end of the month. But he remains optimistic that he can get back to that level in the near future.

There might not be a better week for it to happen than in his backyard.

"You never know when it's going to happen or when it's going to turn away," Campbell said. "I've worked pretty hard at every aspect of my game and don't feel like I'm that far off.

"But you never know with this game. If you ever think you've got it figured out, that's when you're done. So keep working hard with it."

Q: Why are there no cloudless days over the U.S.?

The sheer size of the country is one reason. With more land mass, there's a greater chance that someplace you will have some clouds and storms, said Brent McRoberts of Texas A&M University. "But adding to that is a constant flow of weather systems moving across the U.S., and these almost always have clouds somehow associated with them," he explained. "This applies to the continental U.S., but especially is true with Alaska and Hawaii, where either rain or snow is almost a daily occurrence, and of course, you won't have sunny days in those conditions. So it's safe to say that somewhere in the U.S. at any given time, there are storms of some type, meaning the chance of a cloudless day across America is probably near zero."

Weather Whys is a service of the Department of Atmospheric Sciences at Texas A&M.

Hardworking couple reluctant to help freeloading relative

DEAR ABBY

Write Dear Abby at www.DearAbby.com or P.O. Box 69440, Los Angeles, CA 90069. Her column is distributed by Universal Press Syndicate.

DEAR ABBY: My spouse and I, after many long years of school, advanced degrees and work in the corporate world, are now retired. We are (we hope) financially secure.

Both of us have siblings who were less successful for various reasons. What obligation do hardworking people have toward their less successful siblings, especially one who has been a freeloader his entire life?

"Rusty" sponged off his aging parents to keep from having to earn a decent living. We feel sorry for him, but it's the bed he made for himself years ago when he took shortcuts. We're afraid if we give him a hand, he'll expect an arm next time.

As far as I'm concerned, only Rusty's laziness prevents him from getting a part-time job to help pay the bills. If we give him money, we'll have to do it for the other siblings on both sides.

I know this sounds uncharitable, but we worked for 40 years and struggled through everything life had to throw at us. We saved every penny we could and invested wisely. How do we deal with family members who can take care of themselves, but don't? — ANONYMOUS IN AMERICA

DEAR ANONYMOUS: You decide on a case-by-case basis, unless all of your family members are like Rusty. And if they are, you sympathize, but don't subsidize.

DEAR ABBY: Most of my childhood was spent with my grandparents, who raised me until I moved out at 21. I have always regarded them as my true parents because they were always there for me.

My biological parents were also a part of my life. I would visit them on weekends. I love them, too, and appreciate that they allowed me to have a stable childhood with my grandparents.

I am engaged to be married next summer, and I need to decide who should walk me down the aisle. I'd like my grandfather to have that honor, but I don't want to hurt my father by not asking him to do it.

What should I do when the time comes to make the decision? — NAMELESS IN THE MIDWEST

DEAR NAMELESS: Consider asking both of them to walk you down the aisle. I'm sure it would touch not only their hearts, but also those of your guests to see you honor your grandfather, who was your "weekDAY father," as well as your dad, your "weekEND father."

DEAR ABBY: Organized religion has caused me many difficulties throughout my life. I would like to distance myself from it as much as possible. I consider myself a "religious independent." I believe in God, but I don't believe organized religion has anything to do with God.

My question concerns my funeral. Since a funeral is an organized religious ceremony, is it possible to have one without clergy being present? Have you heard of anything like this, and what would you suggest? — WASHINGTON, D.C., READER

DEAR READER: Instead of a funeral, many people choose to have a "celebration of life," independent from religion. Make sure your family and friends understand your wishes, then talk to a funeral home director and make preplanning arrangements.

Opening lead: King of ♣ West's pre-empt would not be everyone's choice. Many would bid just two clubs. North's free raise was an overbid, but he would be faced with a tough choice on the next round if he passed. He just "got it over with".

The king of clubs was allowed to hold the first trick. West continued with the two of clubs — an obvious suit-preference signal — indicating a possible entry in diamonds, the lower-ranking of hearts and diamonds.

South won the second club and paused to consider his next play. West had shown up with the king-queen of clubs, and by inference, the king of diamonds. Surely he would not also hold the king of spades for his pre-empt. The problem was the lack of an entry to dummy. A club ruff would certainly be over-ruffed. Should South just bang down his ace of trumps and hope to get lucky?

South found an elegant solution. He led his remaining club and discarded a low diamond from dummy. West exited with the king of diamonds. South won and ruffed a diamond in dummy as a hard-won entry for the trump finesse. Declarer proudly led a spade to the queen, but was crestfallen at the result. South resolved to use this hand in his campaign for president of the Unlucky Experts Club.

JACQUELINE BIGAR'S STARS

The stars show the kind of day you'll have: 5-dynamic; 4-positive; 3-average; 2-so-so; 1-difficult

HAPPY BIRTHDAY for Friday, May 23, 2014:

This year you seem to be in the right place at the right time. You are able to verbalize exactly what is on your mind and have the other person receive the message clearly. You also are capable of communicating in many different styles, when needed. If you are single, romance becomes a distinct possibility after July. You have a newfound charisma that seems to attract others like a bear to honey. If you are attached, the two of you will cruise into one of your special years together. Just let it all flow. ARIES is lucky for you.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) ★★★ By midday, you'll perk up and feel as if the world is your oyster. With that drive and determination, you seem to weather any potential storms. Return calls, clear your desk and complete whatever you must to go cruising into the weekend. Tonight: Others like your ideas.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) ★★★★★ You could be taken aback by a domineering friend. At a certain point, you will need to establish some boundaries. You might feel limited by this situation. Use the afternoon to respond to calls and emails. Know that you are on top of your game. Tonight: A much-needed timeout.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) ★★★★ Take care of what is important to you. If you get tangled up in a situation that you cannot get out of, simply adapt your schedule. A meeting could spring up during the day. You will be delighted to meet up with someone you haven't seen in a while. Tonight: Find your friends.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) ★★★★ Use the morning for any talks. You might decide that someone is simply too difficult to speak with. In this case, postpone the talk or let someone else make the call. A boss, parent or older relative might need some of your time in the afternoon. Tonight: A must appearance.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) ★★★ Finally someone will share what is on his or her mind. As a result, you will experience a sense of relief. Mentally, you will feel freed up to take a risk. Make calls and catch up on others' news. Consider taking a weekend trip in the near future. Tonight: Hang out with your pals.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) ★★★★ You might be best off deferring to others for the moment. Though you have a lot of people in your life, one person remains your major concern. Plan a late lunch with him or her, or perhaps get together some time during the weekend. Tonight: Love the one you are with.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) ★★★★ Dive into your work, and get as much done as possible. Consider a new offer or a different job in the proper perspective. You might have received a lot of mixed messages as of late, but others have been stressed out as well. Tonight: Go along with someone else's suggestion.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) ★★★★ The Romeo or Juliet within you emerges, perhaps because it is Friday. At some point during the day, you will need to settle down and get some responsibilities cleared out. Once you are in work mode, you will accomplish a lot. Tonight: Be true to yourself.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) ★★★★ You will move past any sluggishness by noon. You have the ability to make a difference with a problem or with difficult interactions. Use your time well this evening. Someone might want to have a long-overdue chat. Tonight: In a flirtatious mood.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) ★★★ Know exactly what you want from a roommate or a domestic matter. You clearly are sure of yourself, and you are unlikely to be responsive to a change in goals. As a result, others will bend to your will. Tonight: Keep your mindset, though your focus might be on something else.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) ★★★★ You have a way of turning a difficult situation into a positive interaction. You know what you want, and you will edge someone into seeing your point of view. Return calls and stay caught up with your emails. Know what you want. Tonight: Reach out to a loved one.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) ★★★ Use the morning to clear up an important matter or some work responsibilities. You might want to be slightly more frivolous and indulgent in the afternoon. Be aware of what you have to offer. A family member or loved one will open up. Tonight: Let off steam.

Gasoline prices have familiar look as summer approaches

Associated Press

NEW YORK — The price of gasoline looks familiar this Memorial Day. For the third year in a row, the national average will be within a penny or two of $3.64 per gallon.

Stability wasn't always the norm. Between 2003 and 2008 average retail gasoline prices more than doubled, reaching an all-time high of $4.11 per gallon in 2008. Prices then collapsed as the U.S. plunged into recession. But after a two-year run-up between 2009 and 2011, the price of gasoline has remained in a range of roughly $3.25 to $3.75 per gallon.

Drivers can handle that, according to AAA, and are ready to head out for Memorial Day driving trips in the highest numbers since 2005. "It is unlikely that gas prices will have a significant effect on travel plans compared to a year ago," AAA wrote in its annual Memorial Day forecast.

Steady gasoline prices are largely the result of relatively steady crude oil prices, even though there has been a long list of global supply disruptions and political turmoil that typically would push the price of oil higher.

Sanctions have sharply cut output from Iran, once the world's third largest oil exporter. Libya went through civil war, and labor and political disruptions continue to limit its exports. Venezuela's oil output has been steadily declining for a decade. Most recently, the conflict between Russia and Ukraine is raising concerns that sanctions will impact production or exports from Russia, the world's second largest exporter after Saudi Arabia.

But rising crude output in countries such as the U.S., Canada and Brazil have offset the declining supply elsewhere, helping to keep prices steady.

Approaching this Memorial Day, the national average is $3.65 per gallon, according to AAA, OPIS and Wright Express. Last year on the holiday it was $3.63 per gallon. In 2012 it was $3.64.

The story is similar with other fuels. Through the first quarter of this year airlines are paying $3.03 per gallon for jet fuel — exactly the same they paid on average for all of last year, according to the Bureau of Transportation Statistics. The average price of diesel, $3.93 per gallon, is a nickel higher than last year.

Averages only tell part of the story, though. Tom Kloza, chief oil analyst at the Oil Price Information Service and Gasbuddy.com, compares the national average price of gasoline to the average temperature of the country — outside your door it's almost certainly hotter or cooler than the average.

This year, drivers in the Midwest, Great Plains states and the Rockies are paying quite a bit less than they did a year ago on Memorial Day weekend. The Minnesota average of $3.49 is 78 cents lower than last year, the biggest drop in the nation. Drivers in North Dakota, Nebraska, Oklahoma, Iowa and Kansas are all paying at least 50 cents per gallon less.

That's because last year some big Midwest refineries were taken offline to be upgraded to handle cheaper Canadian crude oil. That work is done and the refineries are churning out a lot of fuel, pushing down prices in the region.

The story is different on the coasts, though. Refineries there have to pay higher prices for global crude, and more refineries are seeing downtime in Texas and Louisiana than in recent springs, according to Kloza. Gulf coast refiners supply much of the nation, and especially the coasts, with fuel.

Pennsylvania drivers are paying $3.77 per gallon on average. That's 27 cents higher than last year, the biggest increase in the country. Drivers in the Carolinas and Alabama are paying at least 20 cents more than last year, though they are paying less than the national average.

As usual, California drivers are paying the most in the lower 48 states, at $4.15 per gallon, about 10 cents higher than last Memorial Day weekend.

Across the nation, all U.S. drivers will likely be paying less in the coming weeks, the result of a typical seasonal decline between late spring and early summer.

"Temperate-to-lower prices is the most likely path for the next couple of months," Kloza says. "And then in hurricane season you just cross your fingers."

Oil dips below $104

The price of oil drifted lower Thursday, a day after hitting a one-month high.

Benchmark U.S. crude for July delivery fell 33 cents to close at $103.74 a barrel on the New York Mercantile Exchange. On Wednesday, oil gained $1.74 to close at $104.07.

Brent crude, a benchmark for international oils, slipped 19 cents to $110.36 on the ICE Futures exchange in London.

The U.S. oil price hit a one-month high Wednesday after a report from the Energy Information Administration showed that U.S. crude oil supplies dropped 7.2 million barrels in the week ending May 16. The drop was bigger than analysts expected and due mostly to lower crude imports.

At the gas pump, the average price for a gallon of gas edged up to $3.65. That's down 2 cents from a month ago and 1 cent less than at this time last year.

Platinum rises

Platinum and palladium settled at their highest prices this year Thursday as a mining strike in South Africa continues to cripple production.

Platinum for July delivery surged $18.20 to settle at $1,493.10 an ounce. Palladium for June rose $6 to $836.45 an ounce. That's the highest settlement price since Feb. 2011, according to FactSet data.

Copper and precious metals also traded higher Thursday. Copper for July rose 2 cents to $3.14 a pound. Gold for June gained $6.90 to $1,295 an ounce, while silver for July rose 18 cents to $19.52 an ounce.

Economic data on US, China boost stocks

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Stocks got off to a good start Thursday and held onto their gains, carving out a modest increase for the second day in a row.

During a slow week, stock investors drew encouragement from some positive news on the economy and housing. Improved earnings from Dollar Tree, Best Buy and other retailers also helped the market.

Major U.S. indexes appeared headed for a slight rise even before trading began. A survey from HSBC suggested a slowdown in China's economy was flattening, and May's reading on China's manufacturing sector was the best in five months.

"A revival in China is good for emerging markets, good for global growth and therefore good for stocks, and not so hot for bonds," said Krishna Memani, chief investment officer at Oppenheimer Funds.
