North denies administration made concessions

WASHINGTON (AP)—Lt. Col. Oliver North, who played a key role in several arms-for-hostages swaps with Iran, testified today that he does not believe the Reagan administration made "concessions to terrorists."

North, testifying for the fifth day at the nationally televised congressional Iran-Contra hearings, also said anew that he never violated the law in his tenure at the National Security Council.

"I do not believe that any of us are above the law," said the man who last week admitted shredding documents, lying to Congress in early investigations and misleading high administration officials about his role in the affair.

North's day in the witness chair was apt to be his last. Despite his riveting testimony last week, committee officials already were looking ahead to the expected appearance beginning on Tuesday of Adm. John Poindexter, the former national security adviser.

According to one memo that Poindexter initialed in 1986, President Reagan was briefed on the use of Iran arms sale profits for a series of far-flung covert operations to be kept secret from Congress.

The document, written by North and dated Sept. 15, 1986, notes that Poindexter told Reagan of plans for use of the "residuals" from the arms sale to undertake covert operations around the world. Sen. Daniel Inouye, D-Hawaii, said in a weekend broadcast interview.

Inouye, chairman of the Senate investigating committee, said the operations were described in the document as being out of the reach of Congress and normal channels of accountability.

"The question is, in what detail" did Poindexter tell the president of the operation, said Sen. Warren Rudman, R-N.H., the panel's vice chairman, appearing Sunday with Inouye on the CBS program "Face the Nation."

It was Inouye who gavelled the committees into session for another day of questioning North, but there was no immediate mention of the memo or of Poindexter.

Instead, Sen. George Mitchell, D-Maine, asked North a series of questions designed to elicit North's views about the arms-for-hostages swaps and about the broader issue of presidential authority in foreign policymaking.

Mitchell read a statement of Reagan describing the Iranian government as the "strangest collection of misfits, looney tunes and squalid criminals" since Hitler's Third Reich.

Didn't anyone ever tell Reagan that while he was saying that, his representatives were dealing with officials of the same government? Mitchell asked.

North said he never heard that subject raised in the sessions he attended with the president.

Mitchell then read back a statement

Reagan made, saying that he would never make concessions to terrorists.

Said North, "I still do not to this day believe that we made concessions to terrorists." He said the administration was dealing with moderates inside Iran in hopes of forging better relations.

Despite that statement, North testified last week that the first draft of a formal document prepared for Reagan, to authorize the secret arms sale, made no mention of a broader diplomatic purpose. It talked only of winning the freedom of hostages, he testified last week.

It appeared clear that the issue upmost in the committee members' minds would have to wait for Poindexter's appearance.

Inouye made it clear in the weekend television interview that the memo did not mean Reagan necessarily knew about the use of the money to support Nicaragua's Contra rebels, something the president has repeatedly denied.

But it did suggest the president knew about a matter some committee members regard as more serious: the establishment of a "secret government" not accountable to elected officials, Inouye said.

What North had said already in four days of testimony was discouraging, Inouye said.

"The most depressing thing I heard all week was that if the cause is right, you may do anything — cheat, lie, manipulate, mislead," Inouye said. He said that amounted to letting a key tenet of Marxism — that ends can justify means — be used to defend democracy.

"The people of the United States should look at that very, very carefully and determine for themselves: Are we for democracy? Are we for anarchy? Are we for Marxism? Are we for dictatorship? That is the question before us," Inouye said.

Constitution committee commission topic

Pampa city commissioners will consider forming a Bicentennial Committee of the U.S. Constitution during their regular meeting at 6 p.m. Tuesday.

The Daughters of the American Revolution have been contacted about sponsoring the city committee for the celebration of the 200th anniversary of the adoption of the U.S. Constitution.

The community application will be sent to the Commission on the Bicentennial of the United State Constitution in Washington, D.C. The national commission has encouraged local governing bodies to establish Bicentennial Communities and form a committee to organize celebrations and disseminate information on the nation's constitution.

In other matters under new business, the City Commission will consider:

- making three appointments to the Traffic Commission;
- adopting a resolution appointing Jerry Carlson to the Canadian River Municipal Water Authority; and
- awarding bids relative to the drilling of wells for the testing of groundwater supplies, health insurance coverage, group dental inurance coverage and the purchase of various city vehicles.

Under old business, commissioners will consider the approval of two accounts payable and the approval of amendments to personnel policies and procedures by providing for driving record criteria.

The commission also will review a recommendation of the Parks and Recreation Advisory Board regarding a proposed master plan for Recreation Park development and will hold an executive session to discuss personnel matters.

House ready to vote on airline smoking

WASHINGTON (AP)—Congress is thrusting itself into the middle of the emotional debate on passive smoking with a vote today on whether to ban smoking on shorter airline flights.

With the potent tobacco and airline lobbies lined up against him, the sponsor of the proposal, Rep. Richard Durbin, D-Ill., concedes that it will be difficult for him to prevail.

The ban would apply on flights of two hours or less. A proposal to ban all smoking on U.S. airliners was defeated twice in the House Appropriations Committee. But Durbin is saying little to appease his opponents.

"I think the rights of smokers to smoke ends where their smoke affects the health and well-being of others," he said recently.

Durbin's proposal will take the form of an amendment to the $26.8 billion transportation appropriations bill for the 1988 fiscal year, which the House considers today. The representatives are also expected to work on spending bills for military construction and for Treasury and the Postal Service later in the week.

The Senate, meanwhile, returns to work Tuesday and plans to consider the trade bill that it has labored over for three weeks. It then plans to move on to a measure that would raise the national debt and is also likely to contain measures to strengthen the Gramm-Rudman deficit reduction law.

The transportation spending bill contains money for air traffic controllers, airport modernization and expansion, road and bridge projects, and mass transit systems. It has bipartisan support and is expected to be approved by the House, but the Reagan administration has threatened a veto on the grounds that the legislation is too expensive.

Durbin's proposal would affect about 80 percent of the nation's domestic flights, according to the Federal Aviation Administration.

Opposing the bill are the Tobacco Institute, the Air Line Pilots Association, and the Air Transport Association, which represents the nation's major airlines.

John Mazor, an Air Line Pilots Association spokesman, says pilots fear that inevitably, some smokers would light up in bathrooms.

"There have been instances of finding batteries ripped out of smoke detectors back there," he said. "We can't have that."

Many lawmakers from tobacco-growing districts actively opposed the amendment, often citing smokers' rights.

Most of the major controversies on the trade bill have been solved. But still hanging are issues ranging from aid to the U.S. banking industry to a streamlining of government trade machinery.

Salesman victim of IRS computer conversion

DALLAS (AP)—A light bulb vendor who earned $12,000 in 1984 was told by the Internal Revenue Service he was an officer in a California corporation and was responsible for more than $6,000 of the company's back taxes.

The mistake was made during a conversion of records at the Austin, Texas IRS service center and, while it has been corrected, IRS officials warn that other taxpayers in Texas and four other states could be mistakenly held responsible for delinquent taxes.

Tom Martin says he knew the IRS had the wrong man when he was notified in February that he owed $6,409.12 in back taxes. The 41-year-old light bulb sales supervisor fought the bureaucracy for five months before being cleared of the debt.

"I never even visited California, but they told me to prove it and wouldn't even entertain the idea they had made a mistake," Martin said. "Their attitude was like that of an unbridled pit bull dog, and they meant to collect."

The mistake happened when the Austin center began entering the tax records of 26,000 scofflaw corporations into its master file of taxpayers in Texas, Kansas, Louisiana, Oklahoma and New Mexico last September.

The problems that conversion caused are just beginning to surface, says Marlene Gaysek, an IRS spokeswoman in Dallas.

Some of the corporations whose records have been entered owe millions of dollars each in taxes, and any taxpayer erroneously matched to such a corporation would be billed for the entire amount, Ms. Gaysek said.

Martin went to the Dallas IRS office the day after he received the delinquent tax notice and spent two hours trying to clear up the matter, he said.

He went home hoping the error would be found and corrected, but in May received notice that his 1986 tax refund of $800 would be applied toward the California corporation's debt.

Local consumers can express shopping views

Pampa residents will have their chance to express their opinions and views on shopping in Pampa next Sunday when a Consumer Attitude Survey is inserted in the newspaper.

"This is your opportunity as local consumers to voice your opinions, preferences and frustrations when it comes to spending your hard-earned money," said Main Street Project Director Lyn Moulton.

The survey is an endeavor on the part of the Pampa Main Street Project to determine consumer perceptions and habits in the immediate trade area.

Moulton said the survey will contain 20 questions relating to what consumers shop for, what they want to buy but can't, and why they can't buy it in Pampa.

"These are questions that need to be answered by the consumers so that the Pampa marketplace can respond to the consumers, who they service, and so that our local retail market can then be better patronized," Moulton said.

"Capturing local dollars is the basic goal of every Pampa merchant," she said. "The way in which these merchants attain that goal is determined by their perceptions of the overall needs of Pampa consumers."

The Consumer Attitude Survey will ask for consumers' input to aid local merchants, she said. Postage will be provided for the return of the surveys so that they may be analyzed and utilized by the Pampa Chamber of Commerce, Downtown Business Association and other interested organizations and merchants.

Moulton said the questions are easy to understand and can be quickly answered. The key point to the survey is an analysis of consumer perceptions and feelings.

"Your answers to these questions will provide information for the structuring of an improvement strategy for all levels of retail and business establishments in the area," she stated.

Moulton said the assurance of the success of the project is by participation of consumers. "Please use this opportunity to contribute to the improvement of your community," she urged consumers, encouraging them to fill out and mail in the surveys.

The questionnaire has been prepared by Johnson, Moore, Kelly and Associates, a market research team out of Baylor University.

Eight die in multiple homicide and suicide

FEDERAL WAY, Wash. (AP)—A man described as a loner by neighbors methodically shot to death his parents, his parents-in-law, his wife and their two small children before killing himself, police said.

There was no explanation for the shootings at three homes, which may have begun as early as Friday, said police in Kings County and Tacoma.

The gunman was identified Sunday as 36-year-old Daniel Patrick Lynam, 36, by the King County medical examiner's office.

An unidentified man who said he was Lynam's brother alerted police on Saturday that Lynam had killed people, and said Lynam had a history of mental illness, said King County police spokesman Dick Larson.

When police arrived at their home here, Lynam warned them to stay back, saying "I don't want to hurt you," Larson said.

About 10 minutes later, they heard a noise. They entered the red, ranch-style home to find Lynam, his wife, 2-year-old daughter and 5-week-old son dead of gunshot wounds, Larson said. He said Lynam apparently killed himself.

Reagan wants challenges on issues

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — President Reagan, telling county officials that his economic program would force Congress to "take federalism seriously," challenged his critics today to confront him on the issues instead of trying to "distract attention from the real business of government."

The president made no direct reference to the congressional Iran-Contra hearings in remarks prepared for the annual convention of the National Association of Counties.

But he said, "I have been accused in recent days of campaigning for our Economic Bill of Rights in order to distract attention from other events in Washington."

"It so happens that I have been campaigning for economic rights for more than three decades — and I intend to go on doing so for years to come,"

Fire tips and crime reporting

By BOB HART
Pampa City Manager

Here are some comments from the Pampa Fire Marshall's Office:

Be Prepared
Plan to act now so you'll be ready in case of fire.

1. Rooms should have at least two escape routes.

2. Windows should open easily.

3. Escape ladders may be needed upstairs if there is no nearby roof.

4. Fire extinguishers should be easy to reach. Know how to use them.

5. Bedroom doors should be closed to prevent fire from spreading.

6. Escape routes such as doors, windows, stairways, hallways must be kept clear.

7. Fire Department phone number should be posted near every phone in your home.

8. An escape plan should be taught to the whole family.

Make Your Own Fire Escape Plan

1. Draw up a floor plan of your house.

2. Locate nearest alarm box or nearby phone.

3. Assign jobs to family members.

4. Decide on a meeting place.

Teach Everyone How to Respond in Case of a Real Fire

1. Sound alarm and get out.

2. Feel door; if it's hot or smoke is coming through, find alternate route.

3. Stay low and crawl to an exit.

4. Wait at a meeting place; never go back into a burning house.

Do you realize that since Jan. 1, 1987, in the city of Pampa, approximately six rapes have been committed, 140 homes have been burglarized, 25 automobiles have been stolen, 166 incidents of theft from a motor vehicle have occurred, 25 guns have been stolen and more than 40 bicycles have been stolen?

But who knows how many of the above-listed crimes happened and were not reported? I think it would be a safe bet to estimate that only 50 percent were reported.

Just what does it mean when you do not report a crime?

For one thing, it means that the person committing this act does so with complete immunity.

Another is that the victim has absolutely no chance at all of getting his property back. And another important thing is that it hinders police investigations to a great degree.

If the police are not aware of the fact that a crime — any crime — has been committed, how could they hope to bring the person responsible to justice and/or recover the stolen property?

Based on the information given to you, I am sure you can see the importance of bringing to the attention of our law enforcement officers the fact that a crime has been committed.

All crimes, no matter how small and insignificant you feel they may be, should be reported to the police promptly so that the investigations can be conducted in a more timely manner.

Almost half of the residential burglaries committed could have been prevented (or at least delayed) if the burglar had not found an open door or window. So, when you leave your home, even if only for a short while, make sure that the doors and windows are properly secured.

Thefts from motor vehicles are becoming more common each day. The favorite items taken by these thieves seem to be guns, stereos, radar detectors and valuables in plain view in the vehicle.

So, insure your car is locked at all times, park it in a well-lighted area at night and remove all valuables or lock them in your trunk. It takes only a very short time for a criminal to remove your belongings from your vehicle.

A large percentage of stolen vehicles would still be with their owners if they had simply removed the keys whenever they got out "for a few minutes."

As of this writing, there are approximately 40 very unhappy, heartbroken children who have lost their bicycles. As parents

There was no sign of a struggle, Larson said.

Police found the bodies of Lynam's parents and in-laws Saturday night at their separate residences in north Tacoma, about 10 miles south of here.

A .38-caliber handgun was believed to be the murder weapon, police said.

Lynam's parents and in-laws were shot in the head while sitting, said Pierce County Medical Examiner Emmanuel Lacsina. The Halls were in their 60s or early 70s, he said.

Lacsina identified the parents as 66-year-old Thomas Lynam and 66-year-old Francis Lynam and the in-laws as Jack and Willie Mae Hall, in their 60s or early 70s.

Vaughn Van Zandt, an investigator with the medical examiner's office, identified Lynam's wife as Linda Jean Lynam, 34, and their children as Jason, 5 weeks, and Shaina, 2.

Authorities were called to the Halls' apartment by a neighbor who was suspicious because rock music had been playing there through Friday night and Saturday, said Fire Lt. Clyde Nihipali.

About two hours later, Tacoma police received a call from a woman in Olympia who said she was related to the elder Lynam, and asked police to check on them, said Tacoma Police Sgt. Steve Smith.

The parents lived in a home on a bluff overlooking Tacoma's Commencement Bay, while the Halls lived in a condominium about three miles away.

Invest in a bicycle lock, put the bike in your garage, or at least get it out of sight from the street.

The 25 reported stolen guns had 25 proud, legal owners at one time. Now over half of these guns cannot be properly identified because the owners failed to record the serial numbers or mark them in any way.

Committee resumes work on state budget

AUSTIN (AP) — Finally, with a common spending figure in mind, the Legislature will adopt a state budget and tax measure — hopefully by the end of next week — House Appropriations Committee chairman Jim Rudd says.

The Legislature's No. 1 priorities have been spending and taxing since it was called into special session June 22 after the 140-day regular session failed for the first time since 1961 to adopt a budget.

On Sunday, members of the House-Senate conference committee on appropriations said they were working toward a goal of holding spending from general revenue-type funds to $27.5 billion for 1988-89.

"That seems to be the target," said Sen. Ray Farabee, D-Wichita Falls, one of five senators on the conference committee.

Rudd, chief House negotiator, said he thought Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby and Speaker Gib Lewis had agreed to $27.5 billion as "common ground they felt comfortable with" but added that he did not think Gov. Bill Clements would accept it.

The overall budget, from all funds, at that level would be $38.6 billion, compared with the original House proposal of $38.4 billion and the Senate proposal of $39.6 billion.

"I think the Senate is getting some of the things they want. I think the House is getting the bottom line they want, but I feel like the governor is probably going to veto the thing ... simply because there are two or three things that he knows the House has tried to do that we haven't done," said Rudd, D-Brownfield.

Rudd refused to specify what Clements' objections were except to say they had to do with highway funding.

A lobbyist for the highway industry said one proposal would transfer $280 million for highways to public education in 1988-89. An additional $120 million in highway money would be used to buy land for mental health facilities and prisons. The money for education would be repaid in two years, the lobbyist said.

The tentative budget goal would require approximately $6 billion in new revenue, double what Clements has said he would accept, although he has hinted he might go higher. He said recently he would sign a bill for $26.95 billion.

"We will have a spending bill and tax bill — probably, I hope, by the end of next week," Rudd said.

The major differences in the House and Senate spending proposals had to do with health-welfare-rehabilitation and higher education, and the committee wrapped up its work on the human service agencies Sunday.

The Department of Human Services would get approximately $3 billion a year, and the average monthly grant for Aid to Families with Dependent Children was maintained at $57, which would cost $790 million.

"With the economy in the state it's in, I was pleased we were able to do that," said Brian Packard, DHS associate commissioner.

Packard said although his department's budget would go up 11-12 percent, the AFDC caseload is projected to increase 15 percent over the biennium.

The Department of Mental Health and Mental Retardation would receive $1.364 billion, or an increase of over $100 million.

Rudd said he thought the committee also had a tentative agreement on higher education to spend $400 million-plus over current levels. The Senate had proposed spending $880 million in new revenue, the House $317 million.

"It's not all right, but it's necessary under these circumstances. We have to get on with the business," Farabee said of the proposed compromise. "We will move ourselves in 1989 to be in a more competitive position with the 10 largest states."

The committee quit after 6 p.m. Sunday, before taking up higher education. A Senate subcommittee planned to discuss taxes today. Farabee said part of that package would be a 6 percent state sales tax. The current rate is 5 1/2 percent.

Lawmaker forms group seeking the ouster of Justice

DALLAS (AP) — A North Texas legislator is asking for the support of other lawmakers and citizens across the state in an attempt to get a controversial federal judge to resign.

Rep. Sam Johnson, R-Plano, recently formed a group called Citizens for the Resignation of William Wayne Justice.

Justice, who has sat on the bench in Tyler for 19 years, is best known for supervising prison reforms undertaken by the state after he ruled certain inmate living conditions unconstitutional.

In other sweeping rulings, Justice has affected the state's public schools, mental health care and youth correctional facilities.

Although Justice, like other federal judges, is appointed for life, Johnson said he doesn't think his mission is impossible.

"He (Justice) is a smart gentleman. When he sees that people perceive he's being bad for Texas, I think the chances are pretty good he may decide to step down," said Johnson.

"Something has got to be done. He's gone overboard on the rights of prisoners. There's something wrong with the system, and it's all Justice."

A clerk in Justice's office said the judge had no comment about the effort to get him to resign.

Johnson recently mailed a letter to every member of the Texas Legislature and has received some positive response.

"There's no doubt in my mind the state would be better off without William Wayne Justice," said Rep. Dick Waterfield, R-Canadian. "I'm a firm believer that when you commit a crime you give up your rights. William Wayne Justice doesn't seem to believe that."

Rep. Jerry Yost, R-Longview, echoes those views.

"I think if you took a poll of the East Texas area, which I basically represent, you would probably find an astounding 70 to 80 percent of the people totally appalled at the way he has conducted himself."

But Jim Harrington, legal director of the Texas Civil Liberties Union, defends the judge and says he doesn't think Justice should feel threatened by Johnson's efforts.

"He made us face the reality of an antiquated and brutal prison system," Harrington said. "He has helped bring Texas into the 20th century, albeit yelling and screaming."

"It's a credit to how well he's done his job to provoke such vigorous objection."

The effort by Johnson is not the first aimed at persuading Justice to resign. In the late 1970s, Emmett Whitehead, a state legislator from Rusk who was enraged by Justice's rulings, introduced a bill to build a halfway house for juveniles next to Justice's house.

Whitehead also introduced a resolution that urged Congress to submit a constitutional amendment requiring election of federal judges.

Johnson plans to continue his efforts to drum up public opposition to Justice. His first mail-out, to about 3,000 people in the Tyler area, generated about $3,000 in donations, said Lisette McSoud, an aide in Johnson's office. That money will be used for additional mailings, she said.

Twelve workers fired after massive search

HOUSTON (AP) — Twelve Exxon Co. USA employees were fired and six other workers face disciplinary action because of drugs, alcohol, drug paraphernalia, weapons, and outdated or unprescribed pills that were seized during a contraband crackdown while employees worked, company officials said.

Drug-sniffing dogs were used Thursday in the sweep of company property where about 1,000 employees work in shifts, Exxon spokesman Les Rogers said. Employee vehicles also were searched.

Rogers declined to comment specifically on any of the cases.

Bruce Griffiths, an attorney for the American Civil Liberties Union, said that while the searches and dismissals were unusual, they were legal.

"In Texas, an employer can fire you at any time for almost any reason," he said.

Some employees interviewed by The Houston Post said they believed an undercover security man had been working at the offices for weeks, and that the search may have due to the arrest of an employee for drug selling and possession.

Another employee, who declined to give her name to the newspaper, said she was fired after a security guard found two marijuana seeds in the bottom of her purse.

"I feel they were using it as an excuse," she said.

Richard Blinoski Jr., 22, who had been employed as a clerical assistant at Exxon's credit card center for four years, was among the fired.

Blinoski said he was suspended with pay on Thursday, then fired by telephone on Friday after a hunting shotgun and ammunition was found in his pickup truck parked at a company lot.

"When (Exxon security guards) said they wanted to search my truck, I was told to sign the waiver or I'd be terminated," he said. When asked by Exxon officials if he had any weapons in his truck, he said he told them he wasn't sure.

"I could understand this if I had dope," he said, saying that it was legal to carry the shotgun. "I feel like I was discriminated against."

Woman heads 3-state effort to draft North for president

HARKER HEIGHTS (AP) — A grassroots effort is under way in Texas and two other states to draft Marine Lt. Col. Oliver North for president, a Central Texas woman says.

Jan Meidinger, assistant vice president and branch manager of a mortgage company in Killeen, said Sunday night that committees in Texas, Illinois and New Mexico are waiting for North's approval before they launch a full-scale campaign.

North, a former National Security Council aide, has become a national hero in the eyes of many because of his nationally televised testimony before a congressional committee investigating the shipment of U.S. arms to Iran and the diversion of profits to Contra rebels fighting the Nicaraguan government.

Mrs. Meidinger said the campaign began on Wednesday with a call to North's office by Robert K. Arundale II, chairman of the North for President Committee in Illinois, the day after North's first day of testimony.

Although the effort is partly to express support for North's position in the Contra affair, "it's also a very legitimate request for his running for president," Mrs. Meidinger told the Temple Daily Telegram from her Harker Heights home.

"I don't think our options are all that good, as far as candidates. Oliver North is as good a choice as anyone we have out there," she said.

Mrs. Meidinger said she has been inundated with telephone calls from people expressing their support for North immediately after hearing of the campaign.

"Things just snowballed. ... It's all happened so fast," Mrs. Meidinger said. "It's just a real grassroots effort and, from the calls that are coming in,

there are a lot of people for it."

She has ordered 150 bumper stickers, which will be sold at $1 each to cover costs, but the group is not yet soliciting money, she said, pending North's OK for the movement to proceed.

Mrs. Meidinger said this is the first time she has been actively involved in a political campaign but has always exercised her right to vote.

"Maybe I've never felt so strongly about anyone in the past," she said. "I really appreciate what he's saying in the hearings," she said.

Alien smuggler pipeline runs to Dallas-Fort Worth area

DALLAS (AP) — The smuggler pipeline that carries illegal aliens from Mexico into Texas most often ends in the Dallas-Fort Worth area, the destination of 18 men who died in a sealed boxcar, officials say.

"In my estimation, this is the busiest area in the state in terms of organized smuggling operations," said Ron Chandler, district director for the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service.

Smugglers who charge undocumented workers for passage to the promised land of economic opportunity often prey on their clients — holding them hostage when they arrive and forcing them to make monthly payments as the price for the often dangerous journey, said a Fort Worth attorney who has represented suspected smugglers while also assisting their victims.

"A lot of the coyotes are from here," Jo Ann Reyes told the Fort-Worth Star Telegram. "They are legal residents and are out to make a fast buck."

Ms. Reyes said the Dallas-Fort Worth alien-smuggling network is well-organized and that many of her smuggler clients are "very, very rough, almost Mafia-type" people who keep track of the aliens they bring in.

"I don't want to say it's slavery, but it's definitely a master-servant type of situation," she said. "Their concern is money, not lives. ... They are very dangerous people when they don't get their money."

Chandler said economically depressed Houston and San Antonio, where there is a decline in construction, have faded as favored destinations for illegal workers.

"Most come in trucks, vans and automobiles," he said. "Ringleaders hire drivers who bring them on in."

INS agents last week arrested Arturo Hernandez Garcia, 31, of the Mexican state of Zacatecas, in Fort Worth. He is being held for questioning in the deaths of 18 aliens in a locked, overheated boxcar in West Texas July 2.

Hernandez — a brother of Erinque Hernandez Garcia, the smuggler sought in the boxcar deaths — was apprehended with 12 undocumented workers at what authorities say is one of 40-50 "safe houses" in the Dallas-Fort Worth area where aliens are held until they pay their fees or are transported to their jobs.

Fort Worth resident Francisco Alvarado, who is seeking amnesty after entering the United States illegally in 1978, said he never thought of using a smuggler. "The first thing they want is the money, and most of them can't be trusted," he said.

Ramiro Pacheco, also of Fort Worth, said North Texas draws people like himself because "it's a place with a lot of work."

Using smugglers is dangerous, but it doesn't make any difference, he said, noting that he entered the country twice by walking across the border.

They and others say undocumented workers who use smugglers most often come from the interior of Mexico. Aliens who live along and near the border know how and when to cross and where to go, they say.

Prohibit statehood to federal enclave

Let's be honest — would Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., be so passionate about granting statehood to the District of Columbia if that city were populated mostly by conservatives, instead of by Democratic-voting blacks?

Kennedy and his allies might sincerely be interested in restoring citizenship rights to the "disenfranchised" citizens of our nation's capital, but one can surely detect a twinkle in their leftward-looking eyes as they dream of the bountiful crops that two more guaranteed-to-be-liberal senators could harvest between now and the fall of the Republic.

They aren't looking out for democracy — they're looking for more Democrats.

This fall the House of Representatives is likely to consider a bill granting statehood to the nation's capital. Majority leader Tom Foley, D-Wash., predicts it will be passed and, assuming the president will sign, the district dwellers will then gain a voting representative in the House, two U.S. senators and a governor.

Potential residents of New Columbia (as they would call the 51st state) have legitimate grievances, but statehood is not the cure. Population is an important factor, but it is not the only one. Sure, there are fewer people in Alaska than in D.C., but states have historically come about for reasons not solely limited to population, one of these being diversity, something New Columbia would lack (a totally urban area with, for practical purposes, only one employer — Uncle Sam).

If it isn't fair, as statehood champions argue, that sparsely populated states (Wyoming, Alaska, Delaware and Vermont) with fewer people than D.C. have two senators, why is it fair that more populous states (California, New York) have only two senators? If all we're going to look at is population, why not create a chamber that is roughly proportional and equal in its representation? Well, we have one. It's called the House of Representatives. It was intended as a counter to the perceived unfairness of small states having the same number of senators as large states. And it has worked rather well. The country's founders saw a potential weakness, an alleged unfairness, and they compromised to try to make all sides happy.

They did not try the most radical solution they could think of. They did not do what Kennedy, sponsor of the Senate bill for statehood, is trying to do.

One can reasonably argue that 700,000 U.S. citizens, who cannot vote for a senator or a voting representative, are unfairly denied representation — but there is a simpler, more fair solution than giving them a state. Let Maryland and/or Virginia annex the district, exclusive of the actual seat of the U.S. government (Capitol building, the White House, the federal buildings, etc.). Let the D.C. citizens become Marylanders or Virginians and let them then share a senator, as Denver residents must share a senator with the rest of Colorado.

Don't fix a flat tire by buying a new car. There are easier, more sensible ways to do it.

South Africa needs new plan

WASHINGTON — Is there any realistic hope for a peaceful future in South Africa? If there is, it probably lies within the pages of a book scheduled for publication in the United States this month. The book is After Apartheid, by the husband and wife team of Frances Kendall and Leon Louw.

Published in South Africa and Europe last year, the book is generating the very thing that is most needed at this point: Civilized discussion. Kendall and Louw offer a solution for the difficult problems of their beleaguered and beloved country. They propose to restructure the nation as a federation of largely self-governing cantons.

The plan is audacious, imaginative, and probably too idealistic to be accepted in the form the authors have presented it. But even if South Africa adopted no more than the Kendall-Louw proposals for economic reform, great progress could be made.

The authors make their own position clear: They love their country, and they are ashamed of it. They deplore the abuses of apartheid and want to see it totally dismantled. They believe that eventually the 16 percent of the population that is white must share its power with the 84 percent that is black, colored or Asian, but they recognize the political impossibility of overnight imposition of "one man, one vote."

A canton system, modeled roughly after Switzerland's form of government, is seen as a way around the impasse. South Africa has 306 magisterial districts with an average population of 80,000. Each of the districts already has a judicial and administrative structure in place.

James J. Kilpatrick

Each district to some extent looks after its own schools, public works and courts.

Using the existing magisterial districts as a starting point, the authors propose that a judicial commission adjust present boundaries, dividing some districts, consolidating others until roughly 200 viable units are created. Most, but not all, cantons are predominantly black.

Each canton would have its own parliament and possibly its own constitution. One canton might opt for a socialist economy, another for a capitalist plan. Several cantons might join in regional compacts for transport, pollution control, water supplies and the like.

In this system, the role of a central government would be strictly limited. The authors envision a national congress composed of two chambers. One chamber, comparable to our House of Representatives, would be elected by proportional representation. The other chamber would be composed of two delegates from each canton. Together, the two chambers would elect a five-member Cabinet to handle five areas of concern: Defense, finance, foreign relations, national public works, and the collection of national statistics. These would be the limits of national legislative authority.

Assuming that both legislative chambers would be predominantly black, the authors look squarely at the prospect — or threat — of black domination: "What most whites fear is that, given unlimited and centralized power of the kind whites have held and abused, blacks will evict whites from their homes, nationalize their businesses, and loot their property in an orgy of redistribution and revenge."

There is a good deal of evidence, the authors believe, "that this danger is more imagined than real." A handful of extremists, chiefly within the Marxist African National Congress, may hunger for such a day of reckoning, "but the majority of blacks seem to want no more than the removal of all barriers to black advancement and enfranchisement." It is not inevitable that a restructured South Africa would go the way of Zaire or Angola. The happier examples of the Ivory Coast and Swaziland, where white farmers own more than half the land, suggest that peaceful coexistence can be achieved in a multiracial, democratic society.

The proposal surely is visionary. Would it work? Ten years have passed since I was last in South Africa. Many things have changed in this period, but some things in South Africa have scarcely changed in a hundred years. Much of the culture remains tribal.

It always is easy to explain why something won't work. These two authors make a persuasive case that their plan would work. Read their book, think about it, and speak up.

Today in history

Today is Monday, July 13, the 194th day of 1987. There are 171 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On July 13th, 1863, rioting against the Civil War military draft erupted in New York City. The violence resulted in the deaths of about 1,000 people over the next three days.

On this date:

In 1787, Congress enacted an ordinance governing the Northwest Territory.

In 1793, French revolutionary writer Jean-Paul Marat was murdered in his bath by Charlotte Corday.

In 1821, Confederate cavalry commander Nathan Bedford Forrest was born in Bedford County, Tenn.

In 1878, the Treaty of Berlin amended the terms of the Treaty of San Stefano, which had ended the Russo-Turkish War of 1877-78.

In 1960, Sen. John F. Kennedy won the Democratic presidential nomination at his party's convention in Los Angeles.

In 1967, race-related rioting broke out in Newark, N.J. By the time the violence ended July 17, 27 people had been killed.

In 1974, the Senate Watergate Committee proposed sweeping reforms in campaign procedures and other statutes in an effort to prevent another Watergate scandal.

Reagan could win third term

President Reagan is limited by present law to no more than two terms, but just suppose that were not true.

If our present president could run again in '88, how would he do?

He'd win. Our best justification for that projection is that happened this spring in Britain when Maggie Thatcher won her third straight term as prime minister.

And she won big, with a comfortable 101-seat lead over all other parties combined.

The platform she ran on is virtually identical to the platform on which Reagan would run again:

Improved economy. Moderate inflation. Declining unemployment.

Reagan critics will insist that her popularity also related to her victory in the Falklands.

President Reagan could point to a similar victory in Grenada.

Reagan critics will suggest that President Reagan has "stubbed his toe" on the matter of aid to the Contras. No more than Maggie stubbed her toe in Ireland.

Both are accused of being insensitive to the poor.

What the British electorate considered of transcendent importance were the improving numbers. Other candidates — indeed previous prime ministers — have given the impression that they were merely presiding over the inevitable decline of Britain. Thatcher, instead, promoted a modern economy. If the steel industry was in decay, she would replace it with high-tech industry.

She brought inflation to a 20-year low, improved real economic growth to an annual 3.6 percent, promised as soon as prudently possible to reduce Britain's basic tax rate to 25 percent.

She reversed Britain's backslide toward socialism with privatization of industry — and with water and electricity next in line.

Her reforms in education, in public housing and in trade unions all reinforced the image of moving "onward and upward."

While it is true that she was opposed by a Labor Party that is in disarray, torn by internal dispute, that — more than anything else — reflects conservative strength.

So if Reagan were to run in '88 his present popularity polls indicate he'd win comfortably.

And while no present candidate comes close to matching Reagan's charisma, this does suggest that whichever candidate seeks the nomination should stick with "Reaganomics." Maggie did.

P.S. There's a bumper sticker seen with some frequency around Washington, D.C., which says: "Reagan in '88 — Nancy Reagan."

North emerges as great American hero

By William A. Rusher

And so, with all the ponderousness and solemnity of a circus elephant, the Iran/Contra hearings at last approach their climax: the appearance of Lt. Col. Oliver North. Earlier witnesses were essentially window dressing. It is only when the true nature of these hearings as theater is fully grasped that one can understand why we had to endure that long string of preliminary bouts before arriving at the main event.

North was, however, very definitely the committee's second choice for this dubious honor. The Democrats haven't been winning many presidential elections lately, and the idea of having a Democratic Congress team up with its cronies in the media to impeach Republican presidents is the best alternative they have managed to devise. It worked with Nixon, and it has seemed tantalizingly close to working again, if only some witness or document could be found indicating that President Reagan knew about the diversion of the Iran arms sale proceeds to the Nicaraguan contras.

Alas, it seems clear that he didn't. What, then, can possibly justify this long extravaganza, this expenditure of millions of dollars, these months of plodding hearings? Only the prosecution, conviction and imprisonment of somebody else, for some crime suitably dreadful.

Col. North, will you please raise your right hand?

As he does so, let us pause to put a few things in their proper perspective:

1. First, let us remember that North was a decorated Marine officer, seconded to the National Security Council and employed there on a whole series of highly delicate missions in the service of his country. Among the most spectacular was his part in thwarting the hijacking of the Achille Lauro and capturing its perpetrators. Another was the job of encouraging private and foreign contributions to the contras during one of those periods when Congress, in its rapidly oscillating wisdom, had decreed that no U.S. funds should be used for that purpose. He was launched on the risky and physically dangerous mission to Iran, to sound out allegedly sympathetic figures in its government and arrange arms sales, at the express orders of his superiors, including President Reagan.

2. When the sales resulted in a profit, over and above what our government had asked for the weapons, North decided to have the money deposited in a CIA bank account in Switzerland. No matter what you hear to the contrary, or how often Sen. Inouye or Sen. Rudman thumps the table in red-faced indignation, it was and still is far from clear, legally speaking, whether at that point these proceeds were simply surplus U.S. cash, or something else.

3. Whatever they were, how did North treat them? Did he embark on a cruise to the South Seas, perhaps with Fawn Hall, to recuperate from his labors? Not at all. Much of the money, perhaps most of it, is still in the account. Some of it was used to buy various sorts of military aid for the Nicaraguan contras. And General Secord apparently spent about $14,000 of it on a security system for North's house, when he learned that the North family was getting threatening phone calls from anonymous enemies, of whom North understandably had a great many.

There are additional details to be filled in, but the above is approximately what North's testimony will amount to. For the grave crimes and misdemeanors therein disclosed, this man will be hammered into a pulp on the anvil of the congressional investigation. "Rogue" and "arrogant" will be among the kinder adjectives hurled at him. The massed bands of the liberal media will blare their hymn of hate.

But when it's all over, and he is on the rock pile at Leavenworth, there will still be a few of us not afraid to whisper "hero."

Contra leaders united only to impress Congress

WASHINGTON (AP) — Fractious Nicaraguan Contra leaders made a show of unity in opposition to the Sandinista government principally to impress Congress and garner support at home, according to a memo by Lt. Col. Oliver North.

They proffered a peace plan which Adolfo Calero, head of the largest Contra army, agreed to sign only because he knew the ruling Sandinistas would not agree to its provisions, North wrote in an April 1, 1985, message to his then-boss, National Security Adviser Robert McFarlane.

The memorandum attests to what the administration has never publicly acknowledged—that U.S. officials pressed the Contra factions into forging an alliance to make their movement more saleable to a Congress considering the administration's Contra aid request.

North's memo was released by congressional investigating committees Friday. It and other testimony and documents released in the Iran-Contra hearings show the administration spent considerable effort trying to unite the factions headed by Calero and other rebel leaders, a challenging task given the personal antagonisms and ideological differences among the groups and leaders.

In reference to the March 1985 Contra manifesto known as the San Jose Declaration, North wrote to McFarlane: "It is significant that this is the first time in any resistance movement in which we have achieved unity among the diverse factions opposing a communist-supported central government."

The document called on the Sandinistas to enter a peace dialogue with the Contras. In an effort to counter criticisms that the goal of the Contra leadership was to replace the Sandinistas with remnants of the oppressive, military-dominated regime of deposed dictator Anastasio Somoza, the document also stated commitment to such goals as a demilitarized society, human rights and agrarian reform.

It also called for a cease fire, lifting of the state of emergency, general amnesty and pardon for political crimes, among other concessions by the Sandinistas.

Calero was not committed to the document, North's memo to McFarlane indicated.

"The only reason Calero agreed to sign was because the criteria established for the Sandinistas were, he knew, impossible for them to meet. He personally wrote several of the democratization conditions," North wrote.

"All agreed that the objective was ... to galvanize the internal opposition and convince the U.S. Congress that the opposition was led by reasonable men."

North, in testimony Thursday to the Iran-Contra congressional committees, continued to embrace the administration posture that the United States did not control the rebels. He said the San Jose manifesto was a product of the Nicaraguans.

His April note to McFarlane said "the document was written by Calero, (moderate Contra leader Arturo) Cruz and North" in North's Miami hotel room.

Cruz and Robelo both joined the leftist Sandinista government for a time after the 1979 revolution that ousted Somoza, but then defected and joined the resistance. Calero was a Coca-Cola executive in Managua before the revolution. He had opposed Somoza but later became part of the internal political opposition to the Sandinistas and eventually left Nicaragua.

A reorganized umbrella group called Nicaraguan Resistance, with a seven-person leadership, has replaced the triumvirate.

Bork nomination is caught in Demo political undertow

By JONATHAN WOLMAN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan insists that "all this lame-duck talk is for the birds," but without the persistent Democratic chirping, Robert Bork would be wearing the robes of a Supreme Court justice by Labor Day.

That isn't going to happen. Senate Democrats, deaf to a presidential plea for midsummer speed, have set hearings on Bork's nomination for Sept. 15.

The delay pushes the matter towards the heat of the upcoming presidential campaign. Senate Judiciary Chairman Joseph Biden is staking his a more conservative Supreme Court.

Piqued by Reagan's decision to bypass moderate candidates to replace Lewis Powell, Democrats were bound to put up a vigorous challenge. Moreover, after six years of Republican rule, Democrats now control the Senate.

The stage is thus set: Liberals will argue that Reagan chose Bork because of his conservative philosophy, and the Senate can reject him for the same reason. Republicans will say the Senate's role is to evaluate qualifications, not philosophy.

Bork's philosophy is well known. For years he delivered conservative reviews of Supreme Court decisions, criticizing decisions on abortion rights and affirmative action and expressing skepticism on the scope of the First Amendment.

Democratic presidential candidate Richard Gephardt takes strong stand against Bork, saying: "Just as we were ready to put Ronald Reagan behind us, his power of judicial appointment has, like a hand from the grave, reached far into the next century to threaten all the progress of the last 50 years."

Bork seems unperturbed by the political tumult. "I may have given the impression in the past that I was pretty confident of my views, and (yet I) still changed them," he told the New York Times. "Your intellectual evolution, one hopes, will last as long as you do."

The key actors among the Democratic candidates are Biden and fellow judiciary committee member Paul Simon of Illinois.

Simon reflects the sentiment of the Democratic field when he describes Bork as academically qualified, but adds, "I do not want someone who is a rigid ideologue, and this man appears to fit that mold."

An AP News Analysis

Democratic aspirations on leading the opposition, and Senate Republican leader Bob Dole can earn grateful primary votes with a successful defense.

Given that Bork sailed through his 1982 confirmation to the appellate bench, you wouldn't expect many fireworks. Antonin Scalia, with a background as conservative as Bork's, and enjoying the same reputation for intellectual wherewithal, won unanimous Senate approval.

So, assuming he is clean of personal peccadillos and financial conflicts, Bork could hope to practically waltz onto the high court.

He may win, but he won't waltz. Democrats are loath to give Reagan a plum appointment in the troubled twilight of his presidency, especially one that could tip the balance to

Not all extend happy welcome

NEW YORK (AP) — Pope John Paul II will encounter the adoration of multitudes in his September journey across America, but he also is likely to face anger in the forms of boycotts, protests and petitions.

In Miami and Los Angeles, two stops on his 10-day, nine-city tour, the pontiff can expect to hear from Jewish groups objecting to his June 25 meeting with Austrian President Kurt Waldheim, accused of abetting Nazi war crimes.

Groups of homosexuals, American Indians and fundamentalist Christians also plan to make known their opposition to the pope's policies.

Security will be tight throughout the Sept. 10-19 trip. Secret Service officials have said they expect it will cost about $5.7 million to protect the pope, and local police also have budgeted large sums. The state of Florida, for example, has put aside $1.5 million.

In San Francisco, gay community leaders and Roman Catholic Church officials negotiated for six months before issuing a statement recently that they hope will keep the peace during John Paul's visit. The statement denounces violence while affirming critics' rights to protest.

Angered by a Vatican letter that labeled homosexuality sinful, "disordered" and "an intrinsic moral evil," some gay activists had warned the pope to stay away from the predominantly gay Castro district because of the potential for violence.

In May, church officials canceled a papal trip to a hospice for the treatment of patients with acquired immune deficiency syndrome. But the pope has scheduled a mass with 100 AIDS victims in a church a mile from the Castro.

Two killed, seven wounded in rampage

NEW YORK (AP) — Gunmen drove through three city intersections known for cocaine and crack sales and opened fire, killing two people and wounding seven, police said.

One car and at least two gunmen were involved in the eight-minute rampage, which began in Queens at 10:33 p.m. when three men and three women were shot, said Deputy Police Chief Daniel Ryan. Two of the men later died, Ryan said.

The car went to another neighborhood about a mile away, where two men were shot, Ryan said. The gunmen struck last about a block away, where one man was shot, he said.

Cocaine and crack were sold at all three spots, Ryan said.

All of the victims were in their teens or early 20s, he said.

Mother of slain child wants adult punishment for juveniles who kill

CANTON, Mass. (AP) — The shock Jeanne Quinn felt last year when her 14-year-old son was found bludgeoned to death has turned into an angry crusade against young people who kill.

After police arrested a teen-ager in the slaying and charged him with juvenile delinquency, Quinn, 35, fought successfully to have him tried for murder as an adult.

"Someone who has committed the most serious of crimes needs to have the punishment fit the crime," she said.

The woman's son, Shaun Ouillette, disappeared Nov. 20. His body was found three weeks later, clubbed with a baseball bat in the woods near his home in this small town south of Boston.

Fifteen-year-old Ronald Matthews is being held at an undisclosed location pending a trial for which no date has been set, said Norfolk County District Attorney William Delahunt.

"I want the key to his cell," Quinn said. "I want to know he can't harm anyone else's children. It's the ultimate crime — the stealing of another person's life."

Since Matthew's arrest, Quinn has testified before the state legislature in favor of a bill that would permit sentences in adult prisons for teenagers convicted of murder, vehicular homicide or manslaughter. The bill, which is pending, also would open such trials to the public.

Sound of children crying is music to this man's ears

DEAR ABBY: You will surely have the wrath of God come down on you for telling a woman: "To marry because you want to be a mother is a poor reason for marriage."

Dear God, lady, that is the principal reason for a woman to marry! If you don't believe me, read your Bible. You obviously hate children, and never had any of your own because when another reader complained about young children making a noise in church, you said, "Any good shepherd would take out the bleating lamb after the first bleat."

Not at my wedding you wouldn't, you lousy shepherd! If you were as young as your picture in the paper falsely implies, you would know what I am talking about.

I am a 63-year-old man who would rather hear children crying (or laughing) in church than listen to the sermon.

TEXAS JIM

DEAR JIM: In biblical times, we were enjoined to "go forth and multiply" because the earth needed to be inhabited. Today, with 5 billion people on this planet, overpopulation has become a major threat. And as for children who disrupt church services: One cannot blame small children for becoming bored and restless. But most churches have playrooms where children can be left with competent "sitters."

So if you prefer the sound of children's cries and laughter, I suggest you skip church and go to a playground where you won't be bothered with a sermon you didn't want to hear in the first place.

Dear Abby

P.S. I'm the mother of two, twice a grandmother, and the picture is relatively recent.

DEAR ABBY: Upon reading your column about a mother who gave away a gift her daughter had given her, let me tell you how I feel about it: Many times I have given costly gifts to family — sons, daughters and parents. I've often bought them things that I would love to have had myself, but felt I couldn't afford. I would be much less hurt if they would tell me honestly that they had no use for my gift and would I mind if they gave it to so-and-so, or would I like to have it back?

I once gave my daughter a very nice gift, and the next time I saw it, it was at her sister-in-law's. I was very hurt as I would rather have had it myself.

Would it be wrong when giving a gift to say, "If you don't want this, will you please return it to me?"

HURT IN FLORIDA

DEAR HURT: Once a gift is given, it belongs to the recipient to do with what he or she chooses.

DEAR ABBY: Why do churches, temples and synagogues keep their doors locked when a service is not being held? Why must prayer in a house of God be confined to an hour or two on certain days of the week? So many times I have awakened in the early hours of the morning trembling from a nightmare, wanting desperately to comfort myself in the shelter of a house of God, but I knew the doors would be locked to me.

Yes, I know that God is everywhere, but there are times when one feels the need to sit and be calm and comforted in a place devoted to his love. Thanks, and love.

MARIA

DEAR MARIA: I believe there are still some churches and temples whose doors are open for those who want to come at odd hours. However, in recent years, due to increased theft and vandalism, many churches have had to lock their doors because they can't afford guards around the clock.

Toy trucks have been popular since 1850s

By RALPH and TERRY KOVEL

An antique auto is the dream of many collectors, but few of them ever want an old truck. But the toy makers found that children wanted toy trucks that represented real activities.

The tin penny trucks of the 1850s-1900s, as well as the still-manufactured scale models, have remained popular.

There were many tin toys made in Germany in the 1920s and '30s. Lehman, Gunthermann, Bing, Fischer and other factories made small tin delivery trucks.

Each truck had an ad for a company or product. Postal trucks, buses and fire trucks were also popular.

The company name or use was written in English, French or German depending on where it was to be sold. There was glamor in the bigger motor vehicles, and parents and their children purchased all types.

It is usually easy to date early trucks from their style. They were made to look like the newest model of the day. The toys were made with windup mechanisms so they could run on the tin wheels.

Q. What was a carte de visite used for?

A. The carte de visite was a type of photograph that was popular from the 1850s to 1900. During those years photographs of famous people, events or strange lands were not easily available.

Newspapers, books and magazines could not produce illustrations by using printed photographic reproductions at that time. The invention of a method for printing many photographs from a single negative made a new industry a possibility.

Photographers sold pictures of the famous, the bizarre, war scenes, works of art, and landscapes. For the first time the general public became familiar with the faces of kings, presidents and generals.

It is said that Napoleon III had his picture taken in Paris in 1859 and thousands of portraits were sold. The publicity generated a demand for more of the cartes de visite. Millions of pictures were sold.

A standardized form was in use from about 1854. It was a picture mounted on a piece of cardboard measuring 2½ inches by 4 inches.

The carte de visite was also called an album card. It was convenient to handle and view. The mount was sturdy and took hard use, and later could be put into albums for viewing.

The pictures lost their popularity when the printed newspaper photograph became common.

Hundreds of examples and a full history can be found in a new book, "Cartes de Visite" by William Darrah (2235 Baltimore Pike, Gettysburg, Pa. 17325, $27.50).

Q. What is a cabaret plate?

A. The collectors of Depression glass and other glass of the 1930s often use the terms found in the original catalogs. The cabaret plate is about 14 to 16 inches in diameter. It has a small raised rim and a foot. It was used to serve small cookies and cakes.

Q. My dish looks like a group of grape leaves. It is 1½ inches long. The back is marked Hampshire Pottery. How old is it?

A. Your dish was made by Hampshire Pottery of Keene, N.H. The company worked from 1871 to 1923.

Q. I have a dish shaped like two fish next to each other. It is blue, red and gold. I think it is Japanese. How can I learn more?

A. Oriental porcelains are very difficult to date. The fish shape was very popular in Japan during the 19th century. Orientals consider fish lucky.

Nineteenth-century porcelain dishes had an unglazed foot rim. That means that the raised rim on the bottom or foot of the dish should be rough on the bottom.

European porcelains had smooth glazed foot rims.

Oriental porcelains were usually decorated on the back with circles, wave-like designs and other decorations. This was rarely done by European or American potters.

A new book, "Japanese Porcelain" by Nancy Schiffer (Schiffer Publishing, $45), pictures many pieces of porcelain made from 1800 to 1950. It should help you identify your pieces.

TIP: If you have stored a quilt, twice each year take it out and refold it — in half if you had it in thirds before. This will avoid crease lines.

BECAUSE HE CARES...

The iron rules states: Do unto others before they do unto you. The silver rule reads: Do to others what they do to you.

These are rules of life many people follow. At the center of both is the determination to take care of self at whatever cost.

Jesus said, "...just as you want people to treat you, treat them in the same way." The golden rule is not selfish. It urges us to be sensitive in our relationships with others. It's the attitude of the golden rule that improves the quality of life.

WE CARE.

Supermarket celebrates rodeo days with cake

The Food Emporium knew it would have customers coming in during the rodeo days last week, so it baked a cake.

And a large one at that — 4 feet by 6 feet.

Assistant Store Manager Wade Wright said he was trying to think of something to do to help promote the Top O' Texas Rodeo, and he came up with the idea of baking the cake.

He enlisted the help of Bakery Manager Janice Layfield, who devised the recipe for the huge cake. Helping Thursday afternoon in The Food Emporium's bakery with the baking and decorating, all of which took about 4½ hours, was Reba Vansickle.

The cake was displayed Friday and Saturday near the store entrance, with customers coming in Saturday evening being treated to slices of the cake.

Decorating the cake was a miniature rodeo set, with corral, cowboys, horses, wagons, cactus and yucca plants, flags, an announcer's booth, stands filled with spectators and even a parking lot filled with cars.

Wright said the cake was baked in 12 sheets and then placed together on a large plywood board for the decorating.

So what goes into the makings of such a large cake?

Wright listed the following ingredients:

- 1½ pounds of baking soda
- 37½ pounds of cake flour
- 20 pounds of milk
- 12½ pounds of cake shortening
- 32½ pounds of sugar
- 75 ounces Butavan
- 12½ pounds of eggs
- 1½ pounds of salt

Rwanda project designed to save mountain gorilla

NEW YORK (AP) — A new approach to dealing with wildlife is under way in Rwanda through a project to save the mountain gorilla.

According to veterinarian James W. Foster, the project marks the first time veterinary medicine has gone into the wild and undertaken health management of an endangered species. The program is financed by the Morris Animal Foundation, a national volunteer organization dedicated to addressing disease and other problems of companion animals — dogs, cats, horses, zoo animals — and now wild animals.

The foundation sent Foster to Rwanda in response to a 1985 request from zoologist Dian Fossey, a fierce defender of the dwindling mountain gorilla population, who was murdered on Christmas Day of that year.

Foster has just completed a 12-month study in the east-central African nation and has begun construction of a permanent laboratory to be financed by Morris, Fossey's Digit Fund and the World Wildlife Fund.

"For the first time we can establish normal values for the gorilla," he says. "We have blood from wild gorillas which can be compared to that of gorillas in captivity which are Western lowland animals."

Rangers hope third time's a charm for Steve Howe

By JODY COX
Associated Press Writer

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — Steve Howe says he has probably taken more tests for drugs over the past six months than all major league baseball players have taken in the past two years.

On Sunday, the first day Howe was eligible to return to professional baseball after being suspended for more than two years because of drug problems, the Texas Rangers signed the 29-year-old left-handed pitcher to a minor-league contract with their Class AAA Oklahoma City farm club of the American Association.

"I'm going to take some licks," Howe said. "Yes, I did fail, but yes, you can come back, and yes, there is life after chemical dependency."

Howe has been cleared to play in the minor leagues and will pitch for the Oklahoma City 89ers until Commissioner Peter Ueberroth gives his OK for a return to the major leagues.

"There is no set timetable for Steve's return to the major leagues," Rangers general manager Tom Grieve said at a news conference.

"Steve's problems with drugs over the last few years have been well chronicled," Grieve said. "I think the one thing more than anything else that convinced us that Steve Howe was the right pitcher at the right time for the Rangers was how much time and effort he's put in to recovering himself."

"I think the initiative that he's shown has convinced us that it's not as big a gamble as people think," Grieve said.

"We've talked to Steve, we've watched him pitch and we're convinced that he deserves and is ready for the opportunity to return to his professional career."

Rangers president and chief executive officer Mike Stone said, "Steve Howe comes to the Texas Rangers organization with a yearlong history of personal commitment to his own recovery."

"Furthermore, he has readily agreed to the most rigorous after-care program possible in order that he refrain from substance abuse in the future. This program will include drug screening and other therapeutic programs," Stone said.

Howe, the National League rookie of the year with Los Angeles in 1980, played for the Dodgers until 1983, when he was fined $54,000 and suspended through the 1984 season because of continuing problems with cocaine use.

Howe signed with Minnesota, which also released him. He began the 1985 season with the San Jose Bees, an independent team in the Class A California League, but tested positive on a drug test and was suspended after he pitched before his appeal of the test was resolved.

Howe has said his drug habit reached $1,000 a day at its height and he actually used cocaine while in the Dodgers bullpen.

Howe said Sunday he used drugs as a way to escape from things.

"I had to change my lifestyle and my way of thinking to better cope with my problems. ... Now I deal with life on life's terms," he said.

Asked if he feels ready to return to professional baseball, Howe said "I wouldn't be here if I weren't sure."

"This is the last step of a success story. To me, that's what's important — I made it back," he said. "The past is the past. Let's leave it that way."

Howe at Sunday press conference.

Howe pitched briefly last month for the Tabasco Banana Pickers in the Class AAA Mexican League, allowing four hits and no runs in 23 innings before returning to California when his wife was expecting the couple's second child.

"I have played in three different countries in five months," he said.

"I could pitch anywhere right now," Howe said. "I'm throwing the ball as well as I ever have before."

National Association President Johnny Johnson lifted Howe's suspension last week when Howe's attorney, John Lence, provided documentation supporting Howe's claim that he has been free of drug use for 18 months and has been following a regular treatment program.

Johnson is congratulated after belting his fourth home run.

HoJo hammers Houston

HOUSTON (AP) — If they are to repeat as champions of their respective divisions in the National League, the New York Mets need more days like Sunday and the Houston Astros need fewer.

Howard Johnson slugged a homer and Keith Hernandez added a two-run single in the ninth as the Mets defeated the Astros 5-2 Sunday afternoon in the Astrodome in the final game of the first half of the 1987 season.

At the break for Tuesday night's All-Star Game in Oakland, the defending world champion Mets trail St. Louis by 9½ games in the National League East, while defending West Division champion Houston trails Cincinnati by 2½ games.

Johnson, the Mets' hottest hitter, now has 20 home runs and 52 runs batted in for the season, tops on the club in both categories. In three straight victories by the Mets over the Astros, wrapping up a four-game series, Johnson had 4 home runs and 4 RBIs.

"It feels good to finish the first half of the season the way I did. The schedule in the second half is in our favor, but for us to catch the Cardinals, we have to have help from some other teams," Johnson said.

"Regardless of what we've done so far, we have a whole second half of the season to play," said Mets all-star catcher Gary Carter. "It is do or die for us now, and we feel confident we can do it if we stay healthy."

The Astros need to score more runs for a beleaguered pitching staff in the second half of the season if they are to repeat as division winners.

"We have to have more runs batted in from the people who should drive them in," Astros manager Hal Lanier said after Sunday's loss. "Today was a good example. We have to score more than two runs against a good hitting team like the Mets."

The Mets grabbed a 1-0 lead off Astros starter and loser Bob Knepper (3-10) on a single by Tim Teufel, who stole second base and scored on a single by Carter.

A throwing error by Knepper allowed a fourth-inning Mets run before the Astros tied the score at 2-2 on a single by Denny Walling, followed by consecutive doubles by Jose Cruz and Alan Ashby off Mets starter and winning pitcher Ron Darling (4-6).

The Mets took the lead for good when Johnson hit a solo home run in the sixth inning, then added two insurance runs on Hernandez's two-run single in the ninth.

Report says Jackson to sign with Raiders today

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — A year ago, Heisman Trophy winner Bo Jackson said he was giving up football for good to pursue a baseball career with the Kansas City Royals.

Today, Jackson apparently is close to bringing football back into his life.

The Kansas City Times quoted Jackson as saying he would sign a contract today with the NFL's Los Angeles Raiders. The newspaper said Jackson was expected to sign the contract at a news conference at Auburn University, where he played both football and baseball.

But Richard Woods, Jackson's agent, denied that report. Reached at his Mobile, Ala., home, by The Associated Press Sunday night, Woods said, "We have not reached an agreement on a contract."

But Woods did not deny that a contract agreement is near.

"I think a contract with the Raiders is very likely," Woods told the Birmingham Post-Herald. "The prospects of him playing baseball for the Royals and football for the Raiders are excellent."

Woods said Jackson was in Atlanta Sunday night and planned to travel to the Birmingham area today to see his family. Woods said he didn't know whether Jackson planned to visit Auburn, but he denied that any announcement was scheduled there.

Woods returned to Mobile on Sunday after spending the weekend in Los Angeles negotiating with Raiders owner Al Davis. Woods said he would meet with Jackson early this week and "a final decision could be made shortly. It is up to Bo."

Woods said it has always been Jackson's dream to play both sports. "The Royals have given him permission to play both sports, which is testimony to the class organization they are," he said.

Jackson announced Saturday that he wanted to play for the Raiders after baseball season ended, which would be a month into the NFL's regular season.

Avron Fogelman, co-owner of the Royals, said Jackson's contract will be restructured, and an injury clause protecting the club will be inserted should he decide to play pro football.

An escape clause in Jackson's three-year, $1.066 million contract that would have allowed him to nullify his contract with the Royals on Wednesday is now moot, the Royals' co-owner said Saturday. There has been no comment from Raiders officials since Jackson's announcement.

Jackson was asked which sport he would have chosen if Fogelman had issued an ultimatum. "I can't answer that," he said. "I don't know, I really don't know."

Jackson's announcement was met with criticism by his teammates.

Gary best Player at Seniors Open

By CHRIS DAHL
AP Sports Writer

FAIRFIELD, Conn. (AP) — With the U.S. Senior Open title in hand, 51-year-old Gary Player heads across the ocean in quest of two British Opens.

After winning the U.S. Senior Open by a record six strokes over Doug Sanders Sunday at the Brooklawn Country Club course, the South African rushed off to catch a plane for London for the British Open, which is being played this week at Muirfield, Scotland. That's the British Open for the regular tour.

"I'm playing the British Senior Open in two weeks time and I only wish I had a few more days at the British Open itself," he said. "I feel I'm playing good enough to win it. But now I'll only have two days there before it starts and with that time change, it will be difficult."

All told, Player has now won three major championships on the Senior Tour. He won nine on the regular tour.

"I know in my heart that I could still win major championships on the regular tour, but I suppose my ambition now is to win the majors on the senior tour," he conceded after shooting a final-round 66 Sunday.

The U.S. Senior Open victory was the third leg of the Senior Grand Slam he has won in only his second full year on the over-50-year-old tour. He won the Senior PGA Championship last year and the Senior Tournament Players Championship last month.

It took him eight years to win all the Grand Slam events on the regular tour. But with the Senior British Open just two weeks away, he has a chance to accomplish the feat on the Senior Tour in just a year and a half.

Player smashed the 72-hole U.S. Senior Open record of 279, set last year by Dale Douglass, finishing at 270, 14 under par.

He is the third player, along with Arnold Palmer and Billy Casper, to win the U.S. Open and the Senior U.S. Open.

Quality players neglected as All-Stars

By HAL BOCK
Sports Writer

OAKLAND (AP) — Start with the premise that life is not fair — because it's not. Add to that the problem of fitting an abundance of quality players onto the 28-man All-Star rosters and you have the ingredients of a small revolution.

Pitcher Rick Rhoden is angry. Slugger Kent Hrbek is angry. Unbeaten Terry Leach ought to be angry. Andres Galarraga ought to be seething.

None of them have been invited to Tuesday night's assembly of All-Stars despite considerable credentials. They were not overlooked. They were simply squeezed out in a numbers game.

There are inequities on both teams as the American and National League stars assemble for today's showcase workout at the Oakland Coliseum. There are always inequities.

Dave Smith and his microscopic earned run average ought to be on the National League team. Wally Joyner and his big bat ought to be with the American League. Wouldn't you like to see Reggie Jackson take a curtain call All-Star swing in his home park?

You could go on and on, offering persuasive arguments for a fistful of absentees. Egos have been dented, some unfairly. Worse than that, though, some wallets have been bruised because of All-Star selection incentive clauses.

There is, for example, the fascinating case of Cy Young Award winner Roger Clemens of the Boston Red Sox. Clemens was a spring training holdout, signing on the eve of the season with a not-so-subtle nudge from Commissioner Peter Ueberroth.

Remembering his 14-2 record at the All-Star break a year ago, Clemens cleverly built a $300,000 All-Star selection bonus into his contract. Because All-Star pitchers are picked by the team manager, and because the AL manager, John McNamara, happens also to be Clemens' manager in Boston, this created one swell conflict of interest. McNamara called in AL president Bobby Brown and asked him to select the pitching staff to avoid any conflicts.

Clemens unintentionally made the task much simpler by going a mediocre 7-6 for the first half and blowing 9-0 and 7-0 leads in two recent starts against New York and California.

Then there is the case of Terry Leach, a career minor leaguer, a fringe player at best, who gets by with guile. In the summer of the New York Mets' discontent, he has been the team's lifesaver, surrounded by the debris of a once-proud pitching staff, Leach has kept the Mets afloat, setting a club record with an 8-0 start.

No Mets pitcher — not Tom Seaver, not Dwight Gooden — has ever done better from the beginning of the season.

Understand that Leach is not the kind of arm you build a franchise around. When the Mets' staff gets healthy, he almost certainly will return to oblivion. Wouldn't it have been nice, then, for him to have an All-Star ring to take along? And unlike Clemens, it wouldn't have cost an extra cent to bring him.

NL Manager Davey Johnson, whose team Leach has bailed out, decided that would be inappropriate and left him home because he has not pitched enough innings. Johnson, of course, is the guy who decides how many innings Leach pitches.

In the Army, they call that Catch-22. Civilians just shrug and say life's not fair.

Rangers ride win streak into break

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — The Texas Rangers are still four games under .500 and 6 1-2 games out of first place, but taking a 3-game winning streak into the All-Star break seems to have done wonders for their confidence.

"I think we're one of the teams that has a good chance of having a good second half," Rangers manager Bobby Valentine said Sunday night after his team had rallied from a 4-0 deficit for a 7-6 victory over the Cleveland Indians. "Those were three good games to take into the break."

After dropping Thursday night's first game in the 4-game set with the Indians, the Rangers won the next three and are 7-1 against Cleveland this season.

"A while ago I thought we'd get to .500 at the All-Star break," said reliever Dale Mohorcic, who earned his 12th save Sunday night. "But we're so streaky. We're not in a bad position now. We've got a few teams to get over, but we're confident."

Mohorcic was the fifth Ranger pitcher in the game, which saw starter Mike Loynd knocked out in a 4-run Cleveland first.

But the Rangers retaliated with three in their half of the first against Indians starter Ken Schrom, then won it with a 3-run rally in the sixth.

"Coming back with those runs in the first innings was the key for us," said Valentine. "This was a good win."

One of the first-inning runs came on first baseman Pete O'Brien's 19th home run of the season.

"We must understand how well we've recovered from our bad start (1-10) and not go through that in the second half," said O'Brien, who had three hits and scored two runs. "If we can stay close, we can sneak away with this thing."

Jose Guzman got the victory with a rare relief appearance. He has made 15 starts and three relief appearances.

He ran his record to 7-8 with three innings of 2-hit scoreless work.

Doug Jones, 3-2, suffered the loss for the Indians in relief of Schrom. Jones came on in the sixth and faced two batters, giving up a 2-run double to Mike Stanley and an RBI single to Steve Buechele, which was the game winner.

Schmidt near perfect in Oriole win

By KEN RAPPOPORT
AP Sports Writer

It didn't take Baltimore pitcher Dave Schmidt long to redeem himself after one of the worst performances of his career. Only 42 hours, in fact.

"I wanted to erase Friday from my mind," said Schmidt, who bounced back from a nightmare outing to pitch a brilliant two-hit, 5-0 victory over the same Minnesota Twins Sunday.

Schmidt had started Friday night's game against the Twins, but was only able to get one out and gave up four runs in a game that ended in a 13-12 Orioles' victory. But Sunday, Schmidt had a perfect game for 5 2-3 innings en route to his third career shutout and second this season.

Schmidt, 9-2, pitched to just one batter over the minimum in setting his career high for victories. He struck out seven, and was perfect until Greg Gagne lofted a soft single to left.

Mike Young, who entered the game in a 1-for-20 slump, hit two two-run homers.

Yankees 6, White Sox 2

Henry Cotto and Don Mattingly homered and Tommy John pitched a six-hitter over seven innings to lead New York over Chicago.

Homer-prone Floyd Bannister, 4-8, took the loss.

John, 8-3, gave up a homer to Jerry Royster in the first inning.

Blue Jays 3, Royals 2

Jesse Barfield snapped a 2-2 tie with a run-scoring single in the seventh inning and Jim Clancy notched a career-high 11 strikeouts as Toronto beat Kansas City.

Clancy, 10-6, walked just one batter as he checked the Royals on six hits in 7 2-3 innings. Jeff Musselman and Tom Henke finished up, the latter gaining his 17th save. Reliever Bud Black, 4-4, took the loss.

Angels 5, Tigers 4

Mike Witt pitched a four-hitter over seven innings and Bob Boone had three hits as California defeated Detroit.

Witt, 11-5, struck out nine and walked five. Greg Minton stepped in in the eighth for his sixth save.

Mariners 6, Red Sox 1

Gary Matthews went 2-for-4 and drove in three runs in his American League debut to lead Seattle over Boston.

The 15-year National League veteran hit a home run in his first AL at-bat.

Milwaukee 4, Oakland 3

Greg Brock homered in the second inning and singled in the winning run in a three-run, eighth-inning rally, and Juan Nieves and two relievers combined on a four-hitter to pace Milwaukee over Oakland.

Canyon pounds Pampa

The Pampa 13-15 All-Stars were thrust into the losers bracket of tournament play following a Sunday loss to Canyon.

Canyon defeated Pampa 11-6. James Bybee was the losing pitcher, but he was also the team's leading hitter. Bybee went 2-for-3 at the plate.

The game was within Pampa's reach going into the fifth. Canyon took advantage of opportunities, though, and scored five runs jumping out to an unreachable 10-3 lead in the inning.

Pampa coach Wayne Barkley was pleased with the defensive play of Mike Cagle, Brandon Knutson and Quincy Williams.

Pampa will play the loser of the Canyon-Dalhart game Tuesday at 7 p.m. in Dumas.

Cardinals keep on winning

By The Associated Press

The St. Louis Cardinals' pitching staff has withstood a broken leg, a fractured foot, and a sore elbow this season with a lot of heart.

Last Friday, the Cardinals found out Danny Cox, 8-3, suffered a broken foot when he was hit by a line drive. That development brought Ricky Horton out of the Cardinal bullpen and into the starting rotation.

Horton responded with his ninth consecutive victory Sunday as St. Louis beat visiting San Francisco 3-2 for its 10th win in 11 games. The Cardinals enter the All-Star break with a 56-30 record and a nine-game lead over second-place Montreal in the National League East.

Horton, 5-0, allowed four hits in 6 1-3 innings in only his third start of the season.

The left-hander, who has seven saves this season, struck out three and walked one before leaving when his pitching arm was struck by Joel Youngblood's line drive in the seventh. Preliminary X-rays were negative, a team spokesman said.

Horton was replaced by Pat Perry, and Todd Worrell and Ken Dayley finished the game.

The Cardinals lost ace left-hander John Tudor on April 19 with a broken leg suffered in a freak dugout collision with New York catcher Barry Lyons. St. Louis called up rookie left-hander Joe Magrane who won five straight games before landing on the disabled list with a sore elbow.

Without Cox and Tudor, the Cards No. 1 pitcher is 37-year-old Bob Forsch, 8-3.

Braves 9, Phillies 3

Gary Roenicke drove in three runs with a home run and a double to help Atlanta beat visiting Philadelphia.

Roenicke's fifth homer in 20 starts came off reliever Doug Bair in the sixth. Roenicke's run-scoring double was off starter Bruce Ruffin, 6-7.

Expos 4, Reds 2

Bob Sebra and Andy McGaffigan combined on a three-hitter and Hubie Brooks doubled home the go-ahead run as Montreal defeated host Cincinnati.

The triumph gave the Expos their best record of the season at 47-39.

Montreal scored twice in the sixth off starter Guy Hoffman, 7-4.

The Reds have led the NL West since May 29.

Dodgers 12, Cubs 0

Bob Welch pitched a four-hitter and Mickey Hatcher drove in four runs with a homer and two-run single as Los Angeles routed Chicago at Wrigley Field.

Welch, 9-5, struck out five and walked one.

The Dodgers managed only nine hits but Chicago pitchers Les Lancaster, 2-1, Ron Davis and Ed Lynch walked eight.

Pirates 4, Padres 2

Bobby Bonilla became the second player to homer into Three Rivers Stadium's right field upper-deck seats, a two-run shot in the fourth inning, as Pittsburgh beat San Diego.

Would you repeat that, please?

Cleveland Indians Joe Carter, left, and first base coach Bobby Bonds disagree with first base umpire Nick Bremigan's ruling that Carter was out during a pickoff play by the Texas Rangers in the third inning in Arlington, Sunday.

Collins hopes for offer

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — He doesn't miss coaching yet, but he isn't ruling out the possibility that someone could lure him back into the business, former Southern Methodist University football coach Bobby Collins says.

"I don't know if I'll ever coach again," Collins told the Fort Worth Star-Telegram. "Right now, I don't miss coaching and like life the way it is."

"I guess this is the easy part since football season or training camps haven't gotten underway yet. I'm sure it will be a lot tougher then. I will probably get a little edge. I've been involved with football all of my adult life, so of course, I'll miss it."

Collins settled in his hometown of Laurel, Miss., with his wife Lynn after resigning under fire in December with a $500,000-plus settlement from university officials.

So far, he said, he has had no offers to coach on either the collegiate or professional levels.

"I'm not closing the door on any possibilities," he said. "It would take the right situation. And, I don't exactly know what that situation might be at this point."

Since leaving SMU, Collins has lived a serene life, just 25 miles from the University of Southern Mississippi at Hattiesburg, where he compiled a 48-30-2 record in seven years of coaching there before going to the Mustangs.

He says he doesn't like to look back on the pay-for-play scandal that marred his coaching tenure at SMU.

"You can't look back and I'm glad that I stuck through the situation," he said. "I never have believed much in looking back and you can't live your life that way."

Following the resignation of Collins and Athletic Director Bob Hitch, SMU was penalized by the NCAA for recruiting irregularities and continued cash payoffs to players after earlier NCAA penalties.

Among other penalties, the NCAA abolished the school's 1987 football season, and the university later decided not to field a team in 1988.

Collins, who coached the Mustangs for five seasons, refused to answer questions about SMU, nor would he talk about his financial situation or how he has been treated by the Dallas or Laurel communities.

Collins said he would like to be remembered as a winner.

"A winner who looked out for the best interest of his players," Collins said.

"But that sounds like I'm giving up, and we don't know what the future holds," he said. "I don't think now is a good time to be reflecting on how I would like to be remembered."

Olympic Festival underway

By TOM FOREMAN Jr.
AP Sports Writer

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — Hill Carrow has brought down the barriers of intense athletic rivalry between Raleigh, Durham and Chapel Hill and combined their resources for a two-week period — the U.S. Olympic Festival '87.

When the three towns are mentioned in the same breath, it is usually in the heat of collegiate battle between North Carolina State, Duke and North Carolina. But through July 26, the cities will link to serve as host, along with Greensboro, for 3,000 amateur athletes competing in 34 sports.

"They don't think of them as a conglomeration. They think of them as separate entities," said Carrow, executive director of North Carolina Amateur Sports, the organization formed in 1984 to bring this year's festival to the Triangle.

Wrestling competition at North Carolina Central University, also in Durham, was to open the festival today. Official opening ceremonies are scheduled for Friday.

The UNC campus will host basketball, gymnastics, water polo, volleyball, field hockey, fencing and baseball.

Couple trades high-tech lifestyle for ranching

By KRISTI MONTOYA
Plainview Daily Herald

FLOYDADA (AP) — When visitors arrive at the big iron gate just off the highway, they are greeted at Potts Ranch by a waving Texas flag, symbolic of the spirit necessary to settle on these 30,000 acres once known as Burleson Ranch.

Located 20 miles east of Floydada, the ranch was first settled by Henry Harrison Campbell from Ennis County, and later by Marisue Potts' grandfather, J.C. Burleson. Mrs. Potts and her husband, Frank, now live in a house built on these 5,000 acres of the ranch, called Potts Ranch.

It wasn't an entirely smooth road to the peaceful self-built and designed two-story brick house on the hill in which they now live with their five children.

Following Potts' graduation from Texas Tech in 1963, they moved to San Jose, Calif., where he went to work for IBM. After three years, he graduated from Stanford, and went to work in the General Motors research lab in Detroit, Mich. After returning to California for two years, they went to Tulsa, Okla., where Potts worked for TEXEL.

After Mrs. Potts' father became ill in 1971, the couple returned to the South Plains, where they had grown up. Potts is the son of Emily Potts Johnston of Floydada. They moved into a small sharecropper's house on the ranch and proceeded to build their home.

After two years there, a fire destroyed all but the basement, and Mrs. Potts remembers she thought seriously about leaving the ranch. "After the fire, I just said 'let's go, let's get out of here. I can't stay here.'"

But she says her husband encouraged her. "He said we had put down roots here, and we were going to rebuild. We were going to raise our kids here."

Although she was brought up on this ranch, neither of the Pottses were skilled in the various — and sometimes "gross" — duties of ranching and raising cattle. However, with a little instruction from her father before his death from cancer in 1975, the couple was able to become remarkably adept at everything from cattle branding to castration.

Such a lifestyle greatly contrasts that of "a typical high-tech" California couple, but that's the way they always intended it to be. "We always knew we were going to get out in the country some day. We always intended it to be this way," says Mrs. Potts, adding the only telephone the couple has is located in a barn three miles away.

They still return to Los Angeles periodically on business, which makes the return home much sweeter. "We were in Dallas recently, and out there on the freeway it was so much like Los Angeles again — everybody was trying to get around everybody else and giving you the 'sign' if you got in their way. I just thought 'why do we have to get upset about this, people?'"

Potts is president of Mohango, a mechanical design center based on the ranch. He also is a mechanical design consultant with Los Angeles-based MACE, and has recently written a textbook.

The long, winding roads stretching throughout the brushy acres give Mrs. Potts a taste for what might have been, particularly, what has been.

Directing her four-wheel-drive Bronco across the bumpy, makeshift backroads of the ranch, Mrs. Potts recalls a story for practically every landmark passed, including the old linecamp house which used to sit on the line separating the Jingle Bob Ranch — run by the Hall Brothers — from the Matador Ranch.

Reconstructed in the 1920s, it is remembered for two genuine shootouts as well as for the few years it served as a childhood home for Marisue Burleson Potts. "It was really hard on my teenage ego for a while to move down here to this," she says. "Daddy used to spend so much time out here on the ranch that Mother finally said 'OK, I give up. I'll move out there.' She didn't want to move out of the new house they had built."

Bullet holes still remain in a tree stump outside to serve as a reminder of rougher and harder times on the range.

"You always hear stories about how mean these guys were. How they yelled at everybody or beat their kids and all. I believe it. They had to be mean or tough to live out here in this country. It wasn't easy."

As she approaches the remains of an old dugout house, she pulls up, near a pecan tree planted by the home's first inhabitants. "I like to sit here and think about what it must have been like," Mrs. Potts says. "A man came out here at the turn of the century with his wife and three very small children. Around 1903, they were just about to starve, and he went to find anything they could eat."

"The story goes that he was chasing a rabbit and ran into its hole. When he stuck his hand down to grab it, there was a rattlesnake down there, and he died of the snake bite. You can still see over there where he was building a fence, and they planted these pecan trees. He also dug that water well. He was really trying to make her (his wife) as comfortable as possible," Mrs. Potts says.

"A lot of the stories up here are kind of sad like that, but it was just such a tough life."

Informal talks scheduled as strike looms

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — The Directors Guild of America held out little hope that an 11th-hour meeting today with movie and television producers would avert the first strike in the union's 51-year history.

If the threatened strike at NBC, Warner Bros. and Columbia Pictures takes place, the Alliance of Motion Picture and Television Producers has vowed to lock out all guild members, a move that could spread to CBS and NBC.

"The employers in this multi-employer bargaining unit have a solidarity pact under which a strike against one is a strike against all," said Carol Akiyama, a producers' spokeswoman.

Warn responded, "It's really too bad that the employers would punish the people who work in and around the entertainment industry with this threat of a lockout simply because they, in their greed, are attempting to reduce DGA minimum compensation."

He said guild members would report to work at studios other than the three targeted for the strike, approved Saturday by the union's national board.

Both sides agreed to the last-ditch talks in an informal, four-hour meeting Sunday. The 8,500-member union's contract with producers expired June 30.

"We are not optimistic," guild spokesman Chuck Warn said in a telephone interview. Warn said the union was ready to begin striking at 6 a.m. Tuesday.

He said the guild made the strike selective in part to spare as many non-guild members as possible from layoffs or other effects of a work stoppage.

Ms. Akiyama said the two sides agreed to meet again today.

The biggest issue remains residuals, the money paid for rebroadcast of movies and television shows, worth $47.8 million to directors last year. Directors claim producers want to roll back the fees.

Ms. Akiyama said the producers wanted minor changes in residuals to recoup rising production costs.

Producers said they offered wage increases totaling 8 percent over three years, but directors wanted hikes of up to 40 percent for some jobs.

The first prime-time television program that would be affected by the strike would be major league baseball's annual All-Star Game on Tuesday. NBC said it would broadcast the game as scheduled, using replacement workers.

The union apparently targeted NBC for the strike because of the network's vulnerability. NBC has been struck by 2,800 members of the National Association of Broadcast Employees and Technicians since June 29.

Swaggart Ministries drops lawsuit plans against Texas lawyer

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP) — Jimmy Swaggart Ministries won't press its defamation suit against a Texas lawyer who later maintained reporters took his statements out of context, according to the Baton Rouge Sunday Advocate.

Austin attorney Russell R. Graham wrote a letter to Frances and Jimmy Swaggart on July 2, saying his statements in a Feb. 2 letter to Judge John C. Martin of Conroe, Texas, were misconstrued to imply that Swaggart was using funds from the Baton Rouge-based ministry for personal purposes.

The Conroe Independent School District, the city of Shenandoah and Montgomery County contend that Swaggart-owned radio station KJOJ owes $157,000 in county property taxes. Graham represents the Montgomery County Appraisal District and Review Board.

"I know of no evidence that Jimmy Swaggart is siphoning or skimming funds for his personal gain or personal use," Graham wrote to the Swaggarths.

"Statements in court papers have been taken out of context by certain members of the press and have been misused to suggest incorrectly that there is evidence that Jimmy Swaggart is diverting funds and realizing improper private gain from Jimmy Swaggart Ministries," he wrote.

"Certain members of the press and certain publications have attempted to create a story or scandal out of this purely legal dispute," Graham wrote. "I am disturbed that this lawsuit was used for the purpose of sensationalism, and sincerely hope that this letter will help put this matter at peace."

Graham also wrote that he will suggest sealing the court records "to prevent any further distortions of fact."

Jimmy Swaggart Ministries' general counsel Jerald Ogg Jr. said last week that Graham's letter stopped the ministry's plans to seek damages for defamation of character.

"Jimmy felt it had crossed the line," Ogg said of the remarks. "We're used to potshots, and you pretty much expect that in the public arena. This went to his personal integrity."

Names in the News

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. (AP) — Entertainers Zsa Zsa Gabor and Donald O'Connor were among the celebrities honored for helping build the City of Hope Medical Center into the sprawling complex it is today.

Officials of the hospital, which began 75 years ago in tents and now has 50 buildings on 93 acres, also presented diamond jubilee awards Saturday to Lynn Redgrave, Jane Russell, Florence Henderson, Brock Peters and Peter Marshall.

The organization presented the award July 4 to R. Brinkley Smithers, a Mill Neck, N.Y., philanthropist who has spent 40 years fighting alcoholism in the United States.

VAIL, Colo. (AP) — Former first lady Betty Ford has become the second American honored by a Soviet-U.S. organization for fighting drug and alcohol abuse.

Demjanjuk defense attorney to fight dismissal at hearing

JERUSALEM (AP) — Defense attorney Mark O'Connor said a special court hearing will be held Wednesday to determine if John Demjanjuk knew what he was doing when he fired O'Connor as lead counsel in his Nazi war crimes trial.

However, court spokesman Yossi Hassin said the hearing was only "to formalize" the dismissal of O'Connor of Buffalo, N.Y.

Speaking at a news conference Sunday, O'Connor said he found Demjanjuk, a retired Ohio auto worker, "crestfallen, confused" at their last meeting and would not leave the case unless ordered to do so by the court.

"Until the court discharges me, I have full responsibility for my client and his life," O'Connor said.

The Ukrainian-born Demjanjuk, 67, from the Cleveland suburb of Seven Hills, is accused of being "Ivan the Terrible," a brutal guard who operated the gas chambers at Treblinka death camp in Nazi-occupied Poland. About 850,000 Jews died at the camp in 1942 and 1943.

Demjanjuk says he is a victim of mistaken identity.

The hearing was scheduled after O'Connor requested it in a letter to presiding Judge Dov Levine. O'Connor said the hearing would insure "Mr. Demjanjuk is advised directly" that the dismissal could affect his defense.

On Saturday, Demjanjuk's son, John Jr., said his father knew what he was doing when he signed a June 30 letter dismissing O'Connor. He said the letter was delivered by hand to O'Connor on Friday, but O'Connor said he learned of his dismissal through "hearsay and rumors."

Infighting among the three-member defense team prompted the firing of O'Connor, the defendant's son said. Most conflicts have involved O'Connor and Israeli attorney Yoram Sheftel, who publicly challenged O'Connor's expertise.

In the letter of dismissal, Demjanjuk wrote: "I am totally dissatisfied with your conduct of my defense, your conduct with my family and your conduct with defense funds." O'Connor has represented Demjanjuk for five years.

Demjanjuk has been in solitary confinement at Ayalon Prison outside Tel Aviv since he was extradited from the United States in February 1986.

He is scheduled to testify July 27, when the defense opens its arguments.

Demjanjuk's son-in-law, Ed Nishnic, has complained that O'Connor failed to account for $200,000 he has spent on the trial so far. Nishnic added that he wasn't accusing the attorney of wrongdoing.

O'Connor declined direct comment on the money.

Off-duty officer shoots robbery suspect

DALLAS (AP) — An off-duty Dallas officer confronted an armed robber and shot and wounded the would-be robber, police say.

Officers said Curtis Ray Nolen, 26, of Dallas, was listed in serious condition early today at Parkland Memorial Hospital where he was being treated for gunshot wounds in the arm and chest.

Nolen has been charged with aggravated robbery and attempted capital murder, police said.

Officer Antonio H. Medrano was having dinner with his wife early Sunday at Garmo's Restaurant when the man walked in and ordered a beer.

The man then forced the waiter to a cash register at the rear of the store and demanded money, police said.

"Everyone stay where you are," the waiter said the man shouted as he waved a pistol.

The waiter was filling a bag with money when Medrano crossed the room and identified himself.

Police Sgt. Mia Sullivan said the man raised his weapon in the direction of Medrano and Medrano fired a single shot, striking the man in the arm.

New law sparks violent protest by 10,000

DHAKA, Bangladesh (AP) — Police swinging batons charged 10,000 people protesting a law giving the military more power in local governments, and witnesses said more than 100 were injured. Government opponents called a general strike today.

Witnesses said more than 40 people were detained during Sunday's clash, but police said today 19 were arrested. Five journalists, including an Associated Press correspondent, were injured later when rioters stoned their car in Dhaka.

Many shops were closed today as workers stayed home to honor the dawn-to-noon general strike, which virtually shut down the city. Truckloads of police dressed in riot gear patrolled the capital.

Although the city was generally quiet, witnesses said police used bamboo truncheons to disperse a group of pickets in Dhaka's central Farmgate commercial district. Eight protesters were arrested. Witnesses also said pickets set a car on fire in a residential area.

An opposition eight-party alliance called today's general strike to protest the new law and the clash with police on Sunday.

The 330-member Parliament, dominated by President Hussain Muhammad

Ershad's Jatiya Party, passed the law Sunday. Soon afterward, a crowd gathered at the city's main square and began a march toward the Parliament.

The protesters marched about a mile before encountering a police cordon about three miles south of the Parliament building.

Police said they charged the demonstrators after the crowd attacked officers. Witnesses said, however, that the procession was peaceful and police moved in when the marchers tried to pass the cordon.

Sunday's demonstration was the biggest anti-government protest since Nov. 10, when demonstrators clashed with police after Ershad lifted 4½ years of martial law following Parliament's passing a bill absolving his government of legal responsibility for the period.

The law passed Sunday allows the government to appoint a military representative to each of the nation's 64 district councils, giving the military a say in local administration and development programs.

Two former Cabinet members were among those injured during the march on Parliament, witnesses told the AP.

Witnesses said that among those detained were three former Cabinet ministers and Pankhaj Bhattacharya, a leader of the left-leaning National Awami Party.

The opposition politicians were released three hours later.

Authorities said today that seven police had been injured in the clash with demonstrators. Police did not release casualty figures for civilians.

AP correspondent Hasan Saeed suffered a broken hand Sunday and a CBS News cameraman was hospitalized with head injuries after a stone-throwing mob attacked the car they were riding in with three other reporters.

Opposition parties called for more street demonstrations across the country Tuesday.

Resignations of prime minister, seven ministers accepted by Chun

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — President Chun Doo-hwan accepted the resignations of his prime minister and seven ministers today in a shakeup aimed at installing a broader-based government before presidential elections.

In another development, opposition leader Kim Young-sam accused the government today of not carrying out promised reforms. He demanded freedom for all political prisoners by Friday and an amnesty for all political offenders.

Officials said Chun had named Kim Chung-yul, a former air force commander and defense minister, to replace outgoing premier Lee Han-key.

Chun has promised to maintain a neutral position in the upcoming presidential elections, and said he will not favor his own Democratic Justice Party. He stepped down from the party presidency last week.

A presidential spokesman said the Cabinet changes reflected "President Chun's intention to give the Cabinet a new appearance . . . in carrying out national tasks such as fair management of the political timetable needed to fulfill a genuine democratic development."

But the new ministers also included two former army generals, including a noted hardliner and close Chun ally who took over the key defense post in the 23-member Cabinet.

The prime minister and Cabinet ministers have limited authority under the country's strong presidential system.

The main opposition Reunification Democratic Party immediately rejected the Cabinet shuffle, charging the new ministers would favor the government.

Opposition leaders have called for a neutral government while negotiations are under way on revising the constitution to allow direct presidential elections.

Chun agreed to accept opposition demands for direct elections and other democratic reforms on July 1. The president acted after 18 days of nationwide anti-government demonstrations.

The new prime minister was defense minister in the late 1950s after serving as chief of staff of the Korean air force, and was a former Korean ambassador to the United States.

Chun also replaced the ministers of home affairs, education, defense, sports, communications, science and technology, government administration and a minister without portfolio. Chung Kwan-yong was moved to home minister from the government administration portfolio.

Lee, the outgoing prime minister, cited poor health in asking to be relieved of his post. An obscure law professor, Lee was appointed in May.

In one surprise move, Chun appointed Chung Ho-yong as defense minister. Chung, a close friend of the president, was removed as home minister when the Cabinet was last reshuffled in May to atone for the police torture killing of a dissident student.

Chung, a former army chief of staff, is widely regarded as a hardliner within the government.

Most of the new ministers are relatively unknown. Many of them are government officials and civil servants rather than politicians.

Earlier today, Kim, head of the main opposition Reunification Democratic Party, told a news conference that he wanted the government to free all political prisoners, including alleged Communists. The demand represented Kim's strongest verbal challenge to Chun.

More than 500 political prisoners have been released since July 1, and the government has pardoned 2,335 people convicted on various political and anti-government charges since the early 1970s.

The government says there were 1,100 political prisoners, but the opposition has put the figure at up to 3,000.

The government's effort "has made it impossible not to question whether these things are intended to silence temporarily the people's voices of protest and denial," Kim said.

Kim said the government "must offer its apology before the people and seriously reconsider its course of action" should his demands not be met by Friday.

At the news conference at party headquarters, Kim also outlined a timetable for elections later this year. Chun agreed to institute the elections to replace the electoral college, which critics said favored the government.

Recall failure puts mayor, city council back on track

GALVESTON (AP) — The mayor and city council were back on track today after failure of a weekend recall vote to oust them in a dispute over a half-finished city trolley.

Opponents of the $12 million trolley called it a special interest project intended mostly for tourists at a time when residents face decaying roads, inadequate police protection and other urban problems.

Mayor Jan Coggeshall and four other members of the seven-person City Council who faced recall said the trolley would spur tourism and development in the coastal city, whose heyday as a port and shipyard are long past.

City Secretary Patsy Poole said 8,635 voters, or about 28 percent of the city's 31,000 registered voters, cast ballots in the recall election. About 62,000 people live in the coastal resort city.

Ms. Coggeshall withstood the recall attempt by a margin of 56 to 44 percent, with 3,749 voting for her recall and 4,779 against.

The margins were similar against recall of the four city council members.

John Sullivan's vote was 3,674 (44.1 percent) for recall, 4,658 (55.9 percent) against; Barbara Crews, 3,322 (40.2 percent) for, 4,939 (59.8 percent) against; Daniel "Sonny" Nelson, 3,700 (44.6 percent) for, 4,602 (55.4 percent) against; and Steve Greenberg, 3,489 (42.2 percent) for, 4,781 (57.9 percent) against.

Pete Fredriksen, a spokesman for a group known as "We The People," which organized the recall effort, said the election sent a strong message to city government, since in 10 of the 20 precincts the vote to recall the mayor was greater than the vote against.

"Our point has always been that it is not enough to just elect representatives, you have to keep the pressure on," Fredriksen said. "We hope they start listening to the people's concern in Galveston — streets, the economy."

Jim Mabe, a co-founder of "We The People," said the election showed the power of affluent parts of the electorate.

"It's a hollow victory for them, from the beginning we said it was an election of the special interests against the poor," Mabe said. "The special interests came out and voted, and the poor didn't and that's what happened."

Council member Crews acknowledged the divided vote.

"There are some differences in the voter turnout and the responses in the different areas of the community," she said. "I think we need to pay attention to that."

Council member John Sullivan said the vote indicates that citizens feel the forum to express opposition to those in office is in regular elections, not recall elections.

"They used it (recall), because they just disagreed, and they should wait until the next election," Sullivan said. "The citizens have said, 'you've done that wrong, wait until an election if you want to get rid of them.'"

The trolley is being built with a combination of federal, state and private money. It is expected to be completed and operational sometime next year.

Opponents claim the project will never pay for itself and will be a fiscal drag on the city.

On Jan. 17, Galveston voters approved a measure requiring a vote on all future mass transit projects. City officials said that since contracts had been signed and work begun on the trolley, no vote on the project was required.

Trolley opponents organized the recall, saying the project did require voter approval.

Possible grand jury probe to be discussed

DALLAS (AP) — A prosecutor says he will meet Tuesday with Dallas Police to consider the possibility of asking a grand jury to investigate the April attack on the wife of a prominent minister.

Margaret "Peggy" Railey, wife of the Rev. Walker Railey, former senior pastor of the First United Methodist Church of Dallas, was attacked in the couple's home April 22. She has been in a coma since the attack and was transferred last week from Presbyterian Hospital to a Tyler area nursing home.

"We plan to meet with the police just to determine if we should subpoena any witnesses," Norman Kinne, Dallas County's chief criminal prosecutor, said Sunday.

The prosecutor said police asked last week about the possibility of calling the victim's husband before a grand jury to resolve what they say are inconsistencies between statements he made shortly after the attack and evidence obtained by investigators.

Police say Railey is not a suspect in the case, but they say his failure to meet with investigators to answer questions about the case has brought their investigation to a stand-still.

The minister said he had received threatening letters before his wife was attacked.
