Ship founders in gales

24-foot seas hamper rescue; 600 aboard

■ Waters reach first deck before daybreak, authorities say; passengers are 'very much in danger.'

Associated Press

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — A Greek cruise liner with about 600 people aboard, most of them elderly South Africans, was sinking in mountainous seas off the southeast coast early today, military officials said.

At least three ships, including an oil tanker, were plucking passengers by the score from lifeboats cast off the cruise liner Oceanos, but at least 200 people remained aboard, Air Force Maj. Jerry Evert told The Associated Press.

The ship was wallowing in storm-driven seas towering 24 feet, and the passengers aboard were "attempting to launch life rafts with great difficulty," air force Brig. Gen. Dick Lord said.

Authorities said the waters had reached the first deck before daybreak.

"Our reports are that the ship is taking on water and being driven onto the shore," said navy Capt. Richard Stephen.

Air force planes and navy ships were trying to reach the Oceanos, which was reported drifting out of control off the "Wild Coast," a remote, sparsely inhabited area known for stormy weather and rough seas, he said.

The ship began foundering in heavy gales and rough seas after a powerful windstorm swept South Africa's southeast coast with winds gusting to 88 mph. That storm killed at least one person earlier and caused heavy damage.

The Oceanos had lost power after the engine room was flooded and was drifting towards shore at Coffee Bay, 80 miles due northeast of East London and 155 miles south of Durban in the Indian Ocean.

A message from the ship said, "We have heavy wa-

Bush meets on '92

WASHINGTON — President Bush consulted a brain trust of his closest political advisers Saturday on strategy for a 1992 re-election campaign and how to deal with anticipated attacks from Democrats. During the three-hour meeting at Camp David, the presidential retreat in the Maryland countryside, about 30 advisers "discussed general issues related to a presidential campaign in 1992," Bush's press secretary Marlin Fitzwater said.

Lawmakers file

DALLAS — Sixteen lawmakers have filed claims for the extra $85 in expense money they can now receive for every day they spend in special session, a newspaper reported Saturday. The requests were obtained by The Dallas Morning News under the Open Records Act.

SACRAMENTO, Calif. — In the same month it was created, the new California Environmental Protection Agency had an opportunity to boldly establish its value by supervising the cleanup of toxic spills resulting from two railroad accidents at opposite ends of the state. Instead, Cal-EPA has remained almost invisible during the cleanup of hazardous materials at the sites of the derailments near Ventura and Dunsmuir, with more established state agencies, local governments and private companies taking charge./11A.

Fox: Happy, rich

DALLAS — Actor Michael J. Fox, who stars in the new movie "Doc Hollywood," says he loves his job, family and lifestyle. Then again, it's probably easier to be happy when your income last year was about $23 million, as estimated by Movieline magazine. "I'm 30 years old, have a job I love and a great family, and am just having a good time," Fox said during a recent movie promotional stop in Dallas.

Military cuts jolt regions, arms makers

■ Weapons makers face wrenching new era.

By David E. Rosenbaum
N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — For dozens of communities, hundreds of companies, and tens of thousands of workers who have thrived off the nation's vast weapons industry, life may never be the same. But early indications are that for the nation over all, the effect of sharply lower military budgets will be less severe than many had feared.

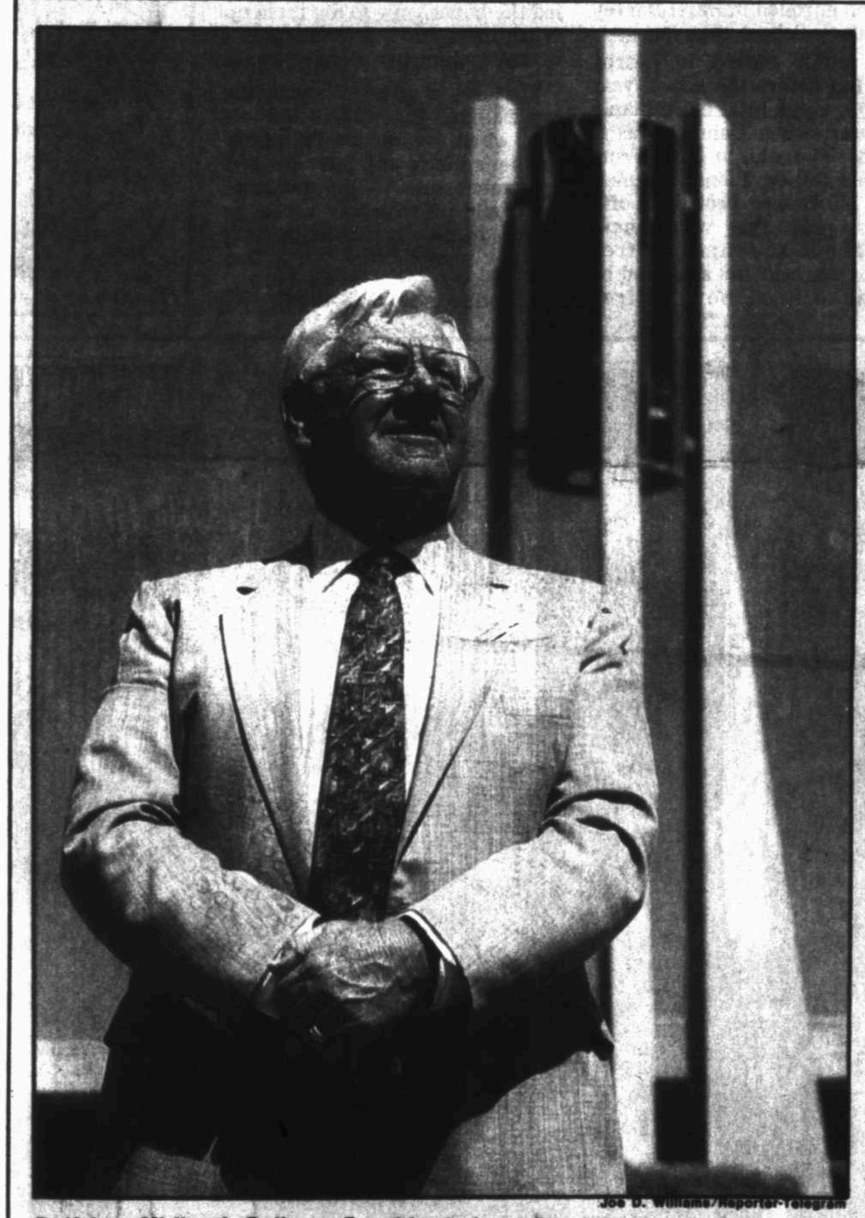

Some find the deep military cuts astonishing, some alarming, and others long overdue; but no one doubts any longer that the end of the cold war and the monstrous federal budget deficit make these reductions unavoidable.

The initial jolt for some individuals and regions has been severe, to be sure. Some towns may yet lose their largest employer. Some companies will merge, and others will go out of business altogether. Some engineers, managers, and assembly-line workers will have to find new jobs.

But more than 30 years after Dwight D. Eisenhower warned of the difficulties of restraining the military-industrial complex, after decades when threatened weapons programs found ways time and again to stay alive, many communities and companies that have relied on Pentagon money have reconciled themselves to the fact that their world has changed. Since protest would be futile, they are concentrating on adapting to the new climate.

For example, in the St. Louis area, a

A look back

Outgoing MC chief reflects

By Myra Lee Salcedo
Staff Writer

On a recent afternoon Jess Parrish sunk into a comfortable chair in Midland College's sedate boardroom.

As he surveyed the long empty table — the site of countless decisions made during his 10-year presidency — he reflected on his role with the community college.

"I know you're going to ask me what my accomplishments are and what I am most proud of," he said, smiling. "But, that's difficult to say. I am probably most proud of the the staff and faculty we have put together here."

But other than the people, Parrish said the quality of education defines the local community college.

"I am also proud of the relationship we have built with the community," he said.

The outgoing president said it is the community college's role to "be reactive to and supportive of the needs of the community."

Parrish, 63, will be stepping down from his role as chief administrator in the next few weeks. Although his successor — David E. Daniel of Pennsylvania — is scheduled to arrive on campus Aug. 12, Parrish will stay on board during a transition period through Aug. 31.

He began his tenure with the institution Aug. 1, 1981, shortly after founding president Al G. Langford retired.

New poll examines celebrity coverage

The explosion of "personality" journalism is evident in newsstands and on television. The medical condition, sex life and other intimate details of the lives of athletes, show business figures and other entertainers are being judged fair game for coverage.

Is the media going overboard in covering celebrities' personal lives or are they just giving the public what it wants?

AIDS-infected woman urges de-stigmatizing her disease

By Philip J. Hilts
N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — Belinda Mason describes herself as a "hillbilly from Eastern Kentucky, a small-town journalist and reliable Tupperware party guest," and she has written President Bush a letter.

"In these days, which will be my last, my family has become my respite from the storm," wrote Ms. Mason, who is 32. She is at home, so weak that she is "in my pajamas all the time," as she says. She is dying of AIDS.

Ms. Mason, a former reporter for a local Kentucky newspaper who also has been a short-story writer, said she will use whatever gifts and time she has to try to help others. And so on Friday, she sent the president a sort of last plea, a plea that he use his influence to keep people with AIDS from being stigmatized.

Ms. Mason was named by Bush two years ago to the National Com-

Dahmer

Nation searches for clues in life of accused mass killer

By James Barron with Mary B.W. Tabor
N.Y. Times News Service

On page 98 of Jeffrey L. Dahmer's Ohio high-school yearbook is a photograph of 45 honor society students lined up shoulder to shoulder, their hair well combed, their smiles confident.

One senior three rows from the top has no smile, no eyes, no face at all: his image was blacked out with a marking pen, reduced to a silhouette by an annoyed student editor before the yearbook went to the printer.

That silhouette was Dahmer in the spring of 1978, a couple of months before he says he killed his first person, with a barbell, 13 years before he confessed to one of the most horrific strings of slayings in modern times.

With grades that ranged from As to Ds, Dahmer fell far short of honor society standards, but he sneaked into the photo session as if he belonged. No one said a word until long after the flashbulb had popped and the shutter had clicked.

In all the years he cried out for attention, it was one of the few times he got caught. By then he had taught himself to live behind a mask of normalcy that hid his confused, often contradictory emotions. It was a mask no one pulled down until one night last month, when a man in handcuffs dashed out of Dahmer's bizarrely cluttered apartment in a tough Milwaukee neighborhood, called police and stammered that Dahmer had been trying to kill him.

DAHMER: Gruesome details emerge

Authorities say at least 17 other men did not get away; that Dahmer drugged their drinks, strangled them, cut up their bodies with an electric buzz saw; that he discarded bones he did not want in a 57-gallon drum he had bought for just that purpose; that he lined up three skulls on a shelf in his apartment, but only after spraying them with gray paint, to fool people into thinking they were plastic models, the kind an aspiring artist or a medical intern might study.

Once, he told police in Milwaukee, he fried a victim's bicep in vegetable shortening and ate it.

Some criminal psychologists see traits in Dahmer they have studied in mass killers such as Theodore Bundy, who was electrocuted in Florida in 1989 after a 15-year trail of violence investigators believe took the lives of at least 30 young women across the nation, or John Wayne Gacy, who was convicted in 1980 of the sex killings of 33 young men in Chicago.

Now everyone from detectives to radio talk-show hosts puzzles over the Dahmer case. The facts — a home where parents went through a bitter divorce; a brother he long believed was the favorite in the family; a mother who he told police had had a nervous breakdown; his own lack of close friends — stop short of explaining why he did what he says he did. But the increasingly gruesome details that have emerged about Dahmer have all led back to one basic question: who is this man?

He was an elementary-school student who stored animal skeletons in bottles of formaldehyde. A high-school drinker who swigged Scotch in early morning classes. An Army medic who convinced his buddies that he hated anything more unpleasant than taking soldiers' blood pressure. A candy-factory worker who killed a gay man in a Milwaukee hotel, packed the body into a suitcase, took an elevator to the lobby, hailed a cab and had the driver put the suitcase in the trunk.

Like Gacy and Bundy, Dahmer went undetected for years. Some of his victims came from the fringes of society, and there were so many that he could not remember them all — men he filed in his memory not by name but by their tattoos. Some of them were like Dahmer himself, people of whom society did not take much notice.

Disturbing images

He had a glib side, talking his way into Vice President Walter F. Mondale's suite and the office of humorist Art Buchwald on a school trip to Washington. But his hometown — Bath Township, Ohio, a prosperous community that was home to Firestones and other decision makers who presided over the tire factories of nearby Akron — was a tight-lipped place. Dahmer was tight-lipped about himself. And if anyone realized how unusual some of his behavior was, no one did anything about it.

"Whatever had gone on in Jeff's life, he couldn't talk about," said Martha Schmidt, a classmate at Revere High School who is now an assistant professor of sociology at Capital University in Columbus, Ohio. But she added, "It seemed so clear all along that it was someone saying, 'Pay attention to me.' "

He had been saying it for years. School records of his teachers' comments suggest that his feelings of alienation were apparent as early as first grade. His mother became ill in 1966 before and after the birth of his brother, David. "Jeff felt neglected," said a school official in Doylestown, Ohio, where Dahmer, then 6 years old, had been enrolled in Hazel Harvey Elementary School that fall.

The family moved to nearby Barberton before the school year was over, and a little more than a year later, when Dahmer was 8, they moved again, to Bath. From what his father, Lionel Dahmer, told a Milwaukee probation officer last year, that would have been about the time Jeffrey Dahmer was sexually assaulted by a neighborhood boy. Jeffrey Dahmer, in his conversations with police, has denied he was ever assaulted in that way.

Dahmer's high school record had the look of normalcy: he was in the band and played intramural tennis. But he drank. "I used to see him drinking gin," said Chip Crofoot, another classmate.

One day he went to a class with a Scotch, and Ms. Schmidt asked why he was drinking. "It's my medicine" was his reply, she said. Once again, Dahmer slipped past authority: the teacher either did not see him drinking or decided to do nothing about it, Ms. Schmidt said.

Trouble, then a killing

There was turbulence at home: the Dahmers' marriage was unraveling. One person who knew the Dahmers said that as things deterioriated Lionel Dahmer moved to a different part of the house to be away from his wife. He even jury-rigged an alarm, a string pulled across the room with keys hanging from it that would jangle if she intruded while he slept. Later Lionel Dahmer moved to a motel.

It was in the final weeks of the divorce settlement, just after Jeffrey Dahmer's high school graduation, that he committed what he has told police was his first homicide. Again, he eluded authorities: the killing went unreported until he told police about it last month.

Dahmer told police he picked up a hitchhiker named Steven Hicks and took him home for a beer. Dahmer said they had sex.

When Hicks wanted to leave, Dahmer smashed the back of his head with a barbell and then strangled him. He dragged the body into a crawlspace under the house, cut it into pieces and stored it in garbage bags. Later, he buried the bones, only to dig them up, crush them and scatter them in a ravine behind his parents' house.

That set a pattern authorities say Dahmer followed in Milwaukee, where he turned his grandmother's house and later his own apartment into killing factories: He would offer people a beer or money to pose in the nude while he took photographs. When they

Business deals may be in cards for U.S., Soviets

MOSCOW (AP) — Mikhail Gorbachev won the promise of normalized trade from President Bush and, perhaps more important, the seeds of an economic partnership with the United States.

That partnership may be unequal at first — Gorbachev recognized as much — but in the long run it may prove beneficial to both nations.

Gorbachev actually said he looks forward to being economically dependent on the United States because it would make the superpower relationship more predictable and understandable.

"We want as much economic dependence on the United States as possible," presidential spokesman Vitaly Ignatenko quoted Gorbachev as telling Bush.

Explaining the value of money and the importance of making deals will be the job of the new U.S. ambassador, Robert Strauss, a Texas lawyer and Democratic Party leader who has made a lucrative career of putting together huge financial deals.

Bush chose his 72-year-old friend for the job not for his expertise in Soviet affairs, which Strauss admittedly lacks, but for his knowledge of business and his proven negotiating skills. Strauss is expected to be confirmed by the Senate in time to report to Moscow in September.

"We're going beyond loans and subsidies" to help put the Soviet economy on track, Bush told a gathering of Soviet business people in a brand new Moscow hotel built as a joint venture between U.S. and Soviet partners. "We're offering our best expertise."

Bush pledged to encourage development of two-way trade by seeking elimination of long-standing tariffs that inhibit imports of Soviet goods and the repeal of laws that inhibit U.S. investment in Soviet projects and limit credits extended by the Export-Import Bank.

New tax and investment treaties, to be completed by the end of the year, "will create a better investment climate between us," Bush said.

But U.S. Ambassador Jack F. Matlock Jr., who is retiring this month, said the Soviets still must overcome some deeply rooted ideological concepts before they can attract the sort of foreign investment with the potential to pull their economy out of its tailspin.

First, he said, the Soviet legislature must complete the process it has begun toward legalization of private property.

"They're part way there," he said, but added that lawmakers will have to do more before foreign investors will be willing to risk substantial amounts of capital in Soviet projects.

And second, Matlock said, they must overcome their resistance to sharing rights to the country's wealth of natural resources.

"There's still a pretty strong sentiment that this is selling the birthright," Matlock told The Associated Press in a farewell interview at his official residence. "They're going to have to get over that because, if they're going to get large amounts of foreign investment, it's going to be in the energy field."

The sale of oil and gas abroad could attract an almost immediate cash flow, and "only that is going to produce the sort of foreign exchange return that will allow them to get foreign investment in other areas," the ambassador said.

Several major oil companies have been negotiating for months for the rights to help develop Soviet fields known to contain some of the richest reserves in the world. But bureaucratic delays, jurisdictional disputes and public opposition have blocked final accords.

Meanwhile, Soviet petroleum production and exports are plummeting, depriving the country of precious foreign currency income.

Bush, who made his fortune in the oil drilling business in Texas, and Gorbachev discussed the problem over lunch with Nursultan Nazerbayev, president of the Kazakhstan republic that claims some of the most desirable reserves.

White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said Bush sought to explain "the benefits of creating an environment that is open to investment and that encourages United States businessmen to pour in money in various kinds of activities."

One of the projects discussed was a proposal by Chevron, the California oil company, to develop the Tengiz field in Kazakhstan. Gorbachev announced an agreement in principle with Chevron at the Washington summit more than a year ago, but hitches have developed, and no work has begun.

Matlock said part of the problem has been a "public relations" failure in that Chevron and the government have not persuaded the people "why they need this and that it's not just foreigners exploiting it."

Officials at various levels also "have to learn something about the value of money," he said.

"If you negotiate these things endlessly hoping to get a better deal, five years from now you may get a better deal, but in the meantime you've lost five years of income, which would far supersede any marginal improvements you could get by dragging on negotiations."

Separatists' bomb threats cripple rail system

MADRID, Spain (AP) — Bomb threats by Basque separatists virtually shut down the country's rail system Saturday during the peak of tourist season, and two explosions caused minor damage.

A bomb damaged the building housing a Spanish bank in Milan, Italy, slightly injuring a passerby, and police defused another bomb in front of the Spanish Tourism Office in the northern Italian city.

The Basque separatist group ETA has claimed responsibility for attacks on Spanish institutions in Italy in recent months.

The threat, the third in as many years, is aimed at throwing Spain's vital tourism sector into chaos to force the government into negotiations over independence for the three-province northern Basque country.

Service on the suspended routes was established little by little as the day went by, a RENFE spokeswoman said.

CUTS: Initial jolt has been severe on arms makers center of the weapons industry and now nearly a year into significant cutbacks, the overall economy has shown encouraging resiliency.

One reason why the pain may not be so severe after all is that although the military budgets have grown over the years, the economy itself has grown faster. So military cuts have much less impact than they once did. The military and its suppliers now make up only about 5 percent of the $5.5 trillion in goods and services Americans produce each year.

Another reason is that many American cities and towns have diversified and become less dependent on manufacturing.

Moreover, new work may be found in a vast program the Pentagon has quietly embarked on to clean up environmental hazards at military bases.

Congress actually began cutting funds for the military five years ago. But because of the lag between the time money bills are enacted and when the funds are spent, the effects are only now beginning to be felt.

The Bush administration plans for military spending to fall by another 20 percent over the next five years. Many politicians and military analysts expect Congress to cut even more.

BALLOT: Texas voters need to read carefully to select the order the propositions would be in on their ballot," said Bettye Calvert, Midland County elections administrator.

All three propositions concern taxing exemptions for the CEDs, entities which were set up as a direct result of recent legislation.

The new law, passed by legislators this spring, is intended to shift hundreds of millions of dollars in property tax money from wealthier to poorer school districts within 188 new education taxing regions, drawn largely along county lines.

Midland, Greenwood and Andrews school districts form the Andrews-Midland CED.

Members of the Andrews-Midland CED elected to place the proposition concerning tangible property first on the ballot.

Tax experts are urging Midlanders to vote against Proposition No. 1, which calls for "the taxation of all tangible personal property, other than manufactured homes that is not held or used for the production of income."

Urging citizens to vote "No on Number One" could also cause confusion, Ms. Calvert said.

This is because voters may confuse the first proposition with the first constitutional amendment.

Voting against the first constitutional amendment will make all votes on the propositions moot.

The amendment simply gives voters the right to adopt certain exemptions for the taxing entity. Voting down the amendment will not eliminate the CED. Instead, it will shift the responsibility of deciding the tax exemptions to the governing body of the CED.

"Voting against all the amendments and propositions will not eliminate the CEDs, which seems to be a misconception that people have," said Dan Casey of the Legislative Education Board in Austin. "The CEDs were created at the state level and are separate entities from school districts. The CEDS were formed to solve equity problems in the state and share tax wealth."

Casey said the CEDs will assess and collect their own taxes.

With or without the passage of the first amendment, SB 351 will require CEDs to levy a tax of 72 cents per $100 valuation in the 1992 tax year, increasing to $1 by 1995.

The amendment will simply allow the homestead exemptions to be continued at the option of voters.

Opponents note that exempting a portion of one type of property unavoidably increases the tax burden on other types to make up the revenue lost.

Proposition No. 1 is the most controversial since it would create a new major tax on personal property.

"This would include automobiles, recreational vehicles and airplanes," said Ron Steagall, chief tax appraiser for the Midland Central Appraisal District.

Proposition No. 2 calls for "the exemption of 20 percent of the market value of the residence homestead from ad valorem taxation." It will impact districts with substantial commercial property and will shift the tax burden from residential property to business property.

"In our case, the tax burden will shift to businesses and minerals," said Joseph Baressi Jr., superintendent of the Midland Independent School District.

Proposition No. 3 calls for "the exemption of $10,000 of the market value of the residence homestead of an individual who is disabled and of $10,000 of the market value of the residence homestead of an individual who is 65 and older from ad valorem taxation."

The proposal would alleviate the impact of higher school taxes on those most likely to be adversely affected by them. But the burden would shift to other taxpayers since the exemption would be in addition to other exemptions and freezes already in place.

While the first constitutional amendment and the three propositions all concern the new taxing entities, the second amendment involves funding student loan programs.

The amendment provides for "the issuance of general obligation bonds to provide educational loans to students."

Voter approval of the amendment will authorize the Texas Higher Education Coordinating Board to sell general obligation bonds to fund state student loan programs.

"The amendment is vital to keeping approximately 26,000 students across the state in college," according to Harry Reasoner, coordinating board chairman.

If passed, the amendment would authorize the coordinating board to sell $300 million in general obligation bonds to fund the state's struggling Hinson-Hazlewood College Student Loan Program.

"Unlike state bonds for financing prisons or the superconducting supercollider, the student loan bonds would be paid back, with interest, by borrowers, not by state taxpayers," according to information from the House Research Organization.

Ms. Calvert said approximately 1,150 voters in Midland County had cast their ballots early by 5 p.m. Friday. While 16 to 35 voters trickled in daily the first week of early, absentee voting, more than 200 voters per day turned out Wednesday, Thursday and Friday.

SHIP: Passengers are 'very much in danger'

(From 1A)

ves," but gave no further details and radio contact with the ship apparently was then lost, the South African Press Association reported.

Air force Col. George Hallowes said the passengers were "very much in danger." The ship's remote location and bad weather were hampering the rescue, he said in a telephone interview with the Cable News Network.

As many as 10 military helicopters were expected to converge on the ship at first light, officials said.

The 7,554-ton Greek-registered Oceanos was on a cruise with hundreds of mainly elderly South African passengers, SAPA reported. The crew consisted of Greeks, Egyptians, Britons, Hungarians and Mauritians, it said.

The loss of radio contact with government-operated monitors in Cape Town and Durban first led authorities to believe the ship was sinking or being abandoned, officials told SAPA.

The ship left Durban July 28, SAPA said. Lloyd's Register of Ships says the Oceanos was built in 1952, was owned by the Hellenic Co. for Sea and Water Ways S.A. of Greece, and managed by Epirotiki Lines in Piraeus, Greece.

Epirotiki spokesman Alevizos Klaudatos in Piraeus said the boat was leased to TFC Tours of Johannesburg.

TFC Tours said the ship was carrying 380 passengers, 180 crew and 26 TFC employees.

The boat was making a Durban-Cape Town-Durban cruise and had left East London on Saturday afternoon before it began taking on water, he said.

Journalists in East London said the ship interrupted its cruise Thursday when a millionaire hired the vessel to host a wedding reception for his daughter.

AIDS: Woman says she has been given a stage

mission on AIDS, a panel set up to establish a national consensus on how to deal with the disease, because she herself has acquired immune deficiency syndrom.

She contracted the disease from a contaminated transfusion. Because of how she became ill, she said, she has been spared the stigma — if not the suffering — that AIDS carries.

She said she has been given a stage, bigger than that granted to others who have the disease. "If I was a young woman of color in the Bronx, I wouldn't be standing up and talking AIDS," she wrote the president. "I'd be home worrying about how to pay the rent."

Ms. Mason was infected during the birth of her second child, in 1987. The birth was an emergency Caesarean; she hemorrhaged, had her uterus removed, had a cardiac arrest, and finally lapsed into a coma for days.

Because the initial emergency occurred on a weekend, the staff members at the hospital in Eastern Kentucky who would have tested the blood to be sure it was not contaminated with the AIDS virus were off duty. Fearing that she would die if she did not have a transfusion at once, the doctors gave her one.

The blood platelets she received were contaminated.

"Because of the way I contracted AIDS," she wrote last year in a personal essay published in a newspaper, "the audiences of businessmen, church leaders and college students I speak to are spared a confrontation with the messy realities of sex and drugs."

Though she was infected by lapses by health-care workers, she said she is not angry at them. She does not want widespread compulsory testing of them, nor does she want people with AIDS to be barred from entering the country, both current proposals in Washington.

She is a sort of opposite image to that of Kimberly Bergalis, the 23-year-old Florida woman who apparently was infected by her dentist, who has spoken out angrily in favor of compulsory testing of health-care workers, telling the doctors of the Florida Health Department in a letter: "I blame every single one of you bastards."

Ms. Mason said it is too easy to feel separate from others who have AIDS. "That's the innocent-victim syndrome, and I don't like it. In my bio put out by the commission, it says I got AIDS from a transfusion, but I've asked them to take that out. I don't want to be considered different."

She and Ms. Bergalis have become two grim symbols in the social drama that is AIDS: Both are young, good-looking, white and Southern. And both are pleading with their final strength to try to change policy — though in opposite ways.

Ms. Bergalis wrote a letter to doctors that was published in Newsweek and quoted widely after her parents released it. "My life has been sheer hell," she wrote. "Who do I blame? I blame Dr. Acer and every single one of you bastards. Dr. Acer was infected and had full-blown AIDS and stood by not doing a thing about it. You are all just as guilty as he was. You've ruined my life and my family's. ..."

Ms. Bergalis' dentist, David Acer, has died of acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

Ms. Bergalis made a plea for doctors and other health workers to be ordered to get tests for the AIDS virus, to disclose the results, and stop practicing if they are infected.

The letter was inserted into the Congressional Record by Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., who has proposed a law which would jail any doctor or other health worker who is infected and continues to treat patients.

Belinda Mason's letter to Bush is not angry. "At this point in my life, there is little that you or anyone else can do for me, but I have no bitterness, and I'll spare you the terrible details of this late stage in my disease."

REFLECTS: MC's Parrish to step down soon

(From 1A)

The Ballinger native — who received his bachelor's, master's and doctorate degrees in education from Texas Tech University — came to MC after serving 10 years as the founding president of Shelby Community College in Memphis, Tenn.

Then-departing president Langford said, "Midland College is in good hands," in the Aug. 1, 1981, edition of the Midland Reporter-Telegram.

Parrish allows that the college was in good hands when he took the helm as top administrator.

"I inherited an institution which reflected good education and management," he said. "There is evidence everywhere that the first 10 years were strong. I just hoped to take the college forward."

And take it forward he did, according to MC board trustees.

"Jess was just what we needed," said John Cooper, MC board president. "We were fortunate to have him in the '80s and into the '90s. ... Jess has been a dynamic leader for Midland College these past 10 years. He has lead us through some hard times, due to things we couldn't control — the economy and oil business."

Even though the college has weathered budget cuts from the state level in past years, Parrish said, "Just when you think it is as bad as it can get, it gets worse."

Despite cutbacks or state appropriations being withheld, Parrish said "In the past 10 years we have never made it to mid-August without even knowing what appropriations will be."

The college president said budget constraints notwithstanding, it has always been his philosophy to "work with what's there."

Fortunately, foundations and individuals have been there to provide funds for the college.

Interviewed after his first semester as president in 1981, Parrish said, "I am overwhelmed with the monetary support from the community."

"That is still true today," Parrish said. "The Fasken, Abell-Hanger, and Davidson Foundations, O'Shaughnessy, the Allisons and anonymous individuals have been very supportive."

In fact, Parrish said the Allison endowed chair in the journalism department is probably the only one in the United States.

One endowment unique to MC, which was initially offered in 1986, is the Abell-Hanger Foundation grant which offers a graduation gift to students in Midland County's public high schools. The foundation picks up the tab for tuition, fees and books for a year.

Do the endowments make MC unique?

"Each college should be unique to its community if it is doing its job right," Parrish said. "In my opinion this is one of the better community colleges in the country because of the caring attitude of the people, excellent instructional team and management, the fiscal support of the community and the beautiful campus and facilities."

Parrish said one thing he won't miss is spending weekends in the capital, lobbying for MC's interests. "I know my way around the Austin real well," he said. "It will be a big relief not to spend Saturdays and Sundays and other time there when I would prefer to be at home."

The college president's efforts were instrumental in winning the Texas Edcuation Agency approval of a two-year associate degree nursing program and a recent aviation maintenance technology program for the college.

Parrish not only had a presence in Austin, but was well known among colleagues and professional organizations.

In 1985, he received the Distinguished Alumni Award from the College of Education at Texas Tech. The same year he received the Marie Y. Martin Award from the American Association of Community and Junior Colleges as the nation's outstanding community college president.

Parrish was selected as one of the nation's 100 most effective educational chief executives in a study conducted by Bowling Green State University. Later, in a University of Texas of Austin study he was selected as one of the nation's 50 most effective community college administrators.

In 1987, he was elected chairman of the Presidents Academy, an organization which served all two-year colleges and junior colleges in the U.S.

Parrish also served as chairman on the board of the AACJC, the Legislative Committee for the Texas Public Community/Junior College Association and is a past president and director of the Southern Association of Community and Junior Colleges.

He was described as "the epitome of leadership for community colleges" in the July 1991 newsletter of the Southern Association of Community, Junior, and Technical Colleges. Parrish was described as being in the "wave of educators who saw community colleges as the new force in education, made community colleges highly visible in the nation and trained the next generation of community college leaders."

"I've had some opportunities other presidents haven't had," Parrish said.

Despite his many awards, Parrish said the greatest reward of his job involves "seeing people scattered around the country in key positions and knowing I have had an opportunity to influence or help train them."

Parrish said what he will miss most about the college is "the people ... the friendships."

Ken Peeler, an MC trustee serving his 19th year on the board, said, "We have done some shifting under Jess Parrish's leadership, but the college always continued to improve. He made some great contributions."

"He is a top-notch administrator," said Fred Wright, another longtime MC trustee. "He was active in all of the college affairs locally and nationally. He has the full confidence of the faculty and has always been student oriented."

MC trustee William Kleine described Parrish as "an outstanding educator and citizen."

"I can't say enough about Jess," he said. "He has great attributes and was a fine representative of Midland and Midland College. He was a West Texan and knew how to be a part of us."

Cooper said that although Parrish "does everything vigorously," he is also accessible and easygoing.

"Everyone relaxes around him," Cooper said. "He gets the most from people and is an on-top-of-the-table administrator. You know where he is at all times. He is a good administrator and a good friend."

Parrish said he is looking forward to having more time to spend with his grandchildren, on the golf greens, painting, playing the trombone (he played in Marine Corps Band in Washington, D.C., was a high school band director and played weekends with dance bands) and possibly even pursuing thespian pursuits with the community theatre.

"Who knows, there may be a character role for me somewhere," he said.

The president said that the time to retire is before one begins to feel possessive about things. "When I start to feel like this is my college, it's a warning signal to leave," he said. "It belongs to the community. I have always been sensitive to keeping myself separated from the things I do as college president from the things I do as Jess Parrish.

"There will never be a time when things are perfect — a good time to leave," he said. "But things are in good shape, and this is a good time for a new president to come in and go forward. Daniel will do an outstanding job. He will move forward from the first day."

"Anyway," Parrish noted, "college presidents are like preachers and football coaches, they can outstay their welcome."

Fighting flares between Croats, Serbs as truce is approved

ZAGREB, Yugoslavia (NYT) — Fighting flared anew between Croat and Serb rebels Saturday, hours after Yugoslavia's collective presidency approved a plan for a cease-fire in a conflict that has claimed more than 200 lives this year.

There were reports of new clashes in Tenja, an agricultural town south of the Croatian city of Osijek, as three European Community foreign ministers continued their peace mission in Yugoslavia.

The collective presidency's cease-fire proposal calls for Yugoslavia's lightly armed federal police to monitor a truce between the Croatian forces, Serbs and the federal army. European Community officials have said they will not send observers to step between the warring forces unless a cease-fire is established.

Croatia immediately attacked the plan. Stipe Mesic, the Croat who as head of the collective presidency holds the title of president of Yugoslavia, said the plan should have required the army to return to its barracks.

Army units are now deployed on the Serbian-Croatian border and in Croatia. The Croatian government has charged that the army, with its Serbian-dominated officers corps, has attacked national guardsmen and in some instances directly provided weapons to the rebels.

"I believe the cease-fire will be breached and the war will continue until the army withdraws to barracks, until this shield for outlaws is removed," Mesic said in the Croatian Parliament in Zagreb in explaining his vote against the proposed truce.

Mesic said the collective presidency had refused his request to name the republic of Serbia as the aggressor in the fighting. The government of Serbia has acknowledged providing supplies to the rebels, but officials insist they are only helping an indigenous uprising.

After a stormy debate that included calls for a declaration of war against Serbia, the Croatian Parliament on Saturday approved a new government of national unity, which includes members of the opposition in some posts. Among those replaced were Sime Djodan, the hard-line defense minister who had been appointed only a month ago.

The European Community team continued its efforts to broker a cease-fire. Its leader, Foreign Minister Hans van den Broek of the Netherlands, has said this mission is the last chance for Yugoslavia to prevent an all-out civil war.

The three foreign ministers were in the republic of Slovenia on Saturday.

Lithuania buries slain officers

VILNIUS, U.S.S.R. (AP) — Lithuania gave seven slain law officers a hero's burial Saturday, and tens of thousands of people lined streets in the renegade republic to watch the flag-draped coffins pass by.

Investigators have not said whom they suspect in the attack against the law officers, which occurred Wednesday at a border post.

A man who said he represented a pro-Russian vigilante group, Security Service, said Saturday the previously unknown organization was responsible, according to a Lithuanian official.

Rita Dapkus, spokeswoman for the Lithuanian parliament, said the man told the Moscow newspaper Nezavisimaya Gazeta in a telephone call that the group protects the interests of ethnic Russians.

The caller told the newspaper it must stop reporting the incident "or the same thing will happen to you," she said.

Soviet and Lithuanian officials never heard of the group. The Soviet Interior Ministry was investigating, reported the Russian government-run television newscast "Vesti."

In a funeral sermon at the Vilnius Cathedral, the Rev. Jonas Boruta told the congregation, "Christ died for the love of others, and today we are mourning seven sons who gave their lives for their country and sacrificed themselves for our freedom."

The seven were buried on a forested hillside in the national cemetery, alongside another customs officer killed two months ago and nine of the 15 Lithuanians killed in January when Soviet troops attacked unarmed demonstrators at the Vilnius broadcasting tower.

Another shadowy pro-Russian group, the National Salvation Committee, has admitted asking the Soviet troops to take action at the broadcasting tower.

Investigators say eight police and customs officers were forced to lie together on the floor of their border post. The killers then sprayed them with automatic weapons fire and then specifically shot each man in the brain.

One man, customs officer Tomas Cernas, survived. He is showing signs of regaining consciousness and eventually may be able to identify his attackers, said Dr. Juozas Olekas, the Lithuanian health minister.

At the request of the Lithuanian government, the U.S. government was sending an American military neurosurgeon from Germany to help treat Gernas. The surgeon was expected to arrive later Saturday, Olekas said.

Baker sees Hassan about peace talks

RABAT, Morocco (AP) — Secretary of State James A. Baker III urged King Hassan II of Morocco on Saturday to help him reel in the Palestinians, the last holdout to Arab-Israeli negotiations.

The king offered no commitment, and Baker did not ask for a report on Hassan's meeting on Wednesday with Yasser Arafat, chairman of the Palestine Liberation Organization, a senior U.S. official said.

Hassan, who met with Baker for nearly two hours at Skhirat Palace, long has sought to bridge differences between Arabs and Israelis and is considered a valuable channel to the PLO.

But the Bush administration is determined to avoid any show of interest in Arafat and his organization, even though his influence is considered significant on the Palestinians Baker is trying to woo.

Baker cast his appeal to Hassan in broader terms.

"We suggested to the king that he and his government could use their influence on anybody to move the process forward and to counsel the Palestinians not to block this process, not to pass up an opportunity which may not come soon again," the official said.

On a related subject, Baker invited Morocco to be an observer during Arab-Israeli negotiations and participate when such regional issues as water resources and the proliferation of weapons are taken up.

The king was interested but withheld a decision until he consults with other Arab governments.

The Bush administration suspended direct talks with the PLO in June 1990 after guerrillas from a faction headed by Abul Abbas staged a raid on an Israeli beach. Formerly, it has excluded the PLO from a role in a peace conference to be sponsored by the United States and Soviet Union.

State Department spokeswoman Margaret Tutwiler said Baker and other U.S. officials wouldn't talk to the PLO, which has its headquarters in Tunis, the capital of Tunisia.

"There has never been any consideration given to meeting in Tunis with anyone in the PLO — or anywhere else," she said last week, repeating that assertion daily.

However, senior PLO adviser Bassam Abu Sharif hinted Saturday that such contacts might take place when Baker visits Tunis on Sunday.

The PLO remains a significant off-stage player.

Searching for MIA remains: Difficult, frustrating, dangerous

EDITOR'S NOTE — The following is based on a pool report.

DONG NUA MOUNTAIN, VIETNAM (AP) — Teams of sweating men and women sift the yellow dirt on this mountainside for tiny metal fragments, all that remain of an American warplane that crashed more than 23 years ago.

"Imagine an aircraft moving at a high rate of speed and impacting here 20 years ago. You can expect we would not find much," said Maj. Brenda Bradley, head of the U.S.-Vietnamese team searching for the fate of an American pilot.

The U.S. government has classified the case as one of 62 in which there is some evidence the missing man may have survived to become a prisoner of war.

Called "high priority, discrepancy cases," they are at the heart of the controversy over the 2,273 Americans missing in action during the war in Southeast Asia.

Vietnam denies that there are any U.S. prisoners, but recently a photograph of three men — that at least five American families of missing servicemen say shows their loved ones — has pushed the issue into the spotlight once more.

In the Dong Nua case, witnesses to the crash said the A-7 attack plane smashed into the mountain during a night raid and exploded in flames.

The excavation began last week 25 miles west of Quang Binh province in central Vietnam. So far it has not produced any human remains, Ngo Hoang, deputy director of Vietnam's office for seeking missing persons, told reporters in a press pool organized by U.S. officials.

He said the case became placed on the discrepancy list because a photo of the missing pilot "was said to have been seen in 1980," although the picture in question hasn't been found.

The excavation still has a day or two to go, but it demonstrates the difficulties, frustrations and dangers of the effort.

The crash site is on the side of a wind-blown hill, rising 2,500 feet meters) over the plain and strewn with thick undergrowth inhabited by snakes and leeches.

It was discovered when erosion uncovered a 500-pound bomb.

Vietnamese villagers dug out the bomb to retrieve valuable material, but explosives expert Joseph Santoro of Boise, Idaho, had to go through the area with his metal detector to ensure there was no other live ordnance around.

Even if the team finds human remains, it is not certain they can be identified.

Sara Collins, the team's anthropologist, said military dental records make identification possible if even a single tooth survives, but often only tiny bone fragments can be found.

Collins, of Beloit, Wis., said all remains are returned to the United States for weeks of exhaustive analysis at the central identification laboratory in Hawaii.

Improved U.S.-Vietnamese cooperation on MIAs, however, has improved, both U.S. and Vietnamese officials said.

Wichita police arrest 321 abortion protesters

WICHITA, Kan. (AP) — Scores of clergy helped block an abortion clinic Saturday before being arrested with other anti-abortion protesters.

Some 321 demonstrators, including 81 clergy members, were arrested on trespassing charges during the protest at Wichita Family Planning Inc., police said.

About 500 people took part in the protest, police said.

Many demonstrators sat in the driveway alongside the clinic and others picketed on the sidewalk and parking lots.

The anti-abortion group Operation Rescue began sponsoring protests at three abortion clinics in Wichita on July 15. Since July 22, there have been more than 1,800 arrests, police said.

Most of the clergy protesting Saturday were from Roman Catholic or evangelical churches, said Jim Bell, executive director of Inter-Faith Ministries, an umbrella group for religious organizations in Wichita.

Bishop Eugene Gerber of the Roman Catholic diocese of Wichita was among the clergy who sang hymns and prayed at the back entrance to Wichita Family Planning Inc. He was not arrested.

"What I'm trying to make clear is that I'm in solidarity with the intent of what they're doing," Gerber said.

About 80 abortion rights supporters held a rally across the street, carrying signs that said "America Stands for Choice."

Randall Terry, founder of Operation Rescue, argued with the abortion rights supporters, who shouted at him, "Go home."

Tom Brown, owner of a bar near the clinic, said he's been losing business because of the demonstrations. Protesters hand out anti-abortion literature to his customers, he said.

"I tell these people, 'My customers are here to eat and drink. They are not here to have abortions. I don't do abortions,'" Brown said.

Shooting sparks riot

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Hundreds of residents of a public housing project hurled rocks and bottles at two sheriff's deputies early Saturday after one of the officers fatally shot a man, police said.

The man had snuck up behind the deputies and hit one of them over the head with a beer bottle while they were questioning another man who threw a bottle at their squad car, Deputy Bill Linnemeyer said.

The man, whose name was not immediately available, then snatched the deputy's flashlight and raised it to strike the officer again. The deputy's partner shot him three times in the chest after he refused to drop the flashlight, Linnemeyer said.

About 300 angry residents stormed into the streets, throwing bottles and rocks at the deputies.

Officers remained at the scene Saturday.

FTC opinion may help students trying to avoid repaying suspect loans

WASHINGTON (NYT) — Students who have been victimized by unscrupulous trade schools may have won a new legal weapon in their attempt to avoid repaying their student loans.

The possible weapon is a letter of opinion, issued a week ago by the staff of the Federal Trade Commission, that says any bank working closely with a trade school that is found to be fraudulent could be required to absorb the loss of loans that the bank issued to that school's students.

The opinion has brought alarm to the banking industry, many of whose members deal in the $12-billion-a-year government-insured student loan business.

The issue of loan repayment is arising across the country in a number of lawsuits brought by students who say they were lured into private trade schools with false claims, then denied the education they had been promised in fields like truck driving, data processing and cosmetology. The students, who are usually poor, are frequently left owing banks several thousand dollars each in student loans.

In cases where a bank has a close business relationship with a trade school, a student typically fills out the loan application at the school and never even sets foot inside the bank. The students who are suing argue that banks have often served as business partners to the schools, gaining profit from the loans while winking at the abuses, and should be held liable.

But the banks argue that federal laws aimed at encouraging them to participate in the student loan program protect them from such liability.

It was against the backdrop of those competing arguments, and with litigation pending that could involve tens of millions of dollars, that the staff of the FTC issued its opinion on July 24, siding with the students.

The staff letter is not binding on either the commission's members or the courts. But Jonathan Sheldon, a lawyer with the National Consumer Law Center, which provides legal advice to students, says the opinion will encourage more lawsuits and provide ammunition to those now pending.

Sheldon said bank liability in such cases was critical to revising the troubled student loan program, since it would force banks to stop doing business with fraudulent schools. A report issued last year by the Senate Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations said "fraud and abuse" were widespread among private, profit-seeking schools.

Ian Macoy, an analyst with the American Bankers Association, said that since the banks had never been told they could be held liable, any attempt to hold them liable now would be unfair.

"I'm alarmed by the whole issue."

DAHMER: He kept one victim's scalp because he 'liked it'

(From 2A)

wanted to leave, he became violent.

"He wanted someone to be with," said Sheriff David Troutman of Summit County, Ohio. "He was there with Steven Hicks, and he didn't want him to leave."

Military duty

After killing Hicks, Dahmer spent a semester at Ohio State University. Then he enlisted in the Army and reported for duty at Fort McClellan, Ala., in the spring of 1980. He began training to be a military police officer, but soon transferred to Fort Sam Houston in San Antonio, Texas, for a six-week course as a medical specialist, the military equivalent of a nurse's aide, a job that involved screening patients. He was assigned to the 2nd Battalion, 68th Armored Regiment, 8th Infantry Division, and was sent to Baumholder in West Germany.

Dahmer was honorably discharged in March 1981, a year before his three-year enlistment was over.

A grisly routine

From what Dahmer told police last month, fantasies of killing people that he had when he was 17 or 18 recurred after he left the Army and moved to Milwaukee, where his grandmother lived and where he eventually got a job at the Ambrosia Chocolate Co. But he told police he did not kill again until late 1984 or early 1985, when he "discovered the gay bars."

Police reports written after his arrest last month said Dahmer met his first victim in Milwaukee at the 219 Club, a bar frequented by homosexuals. They went to the Ambassador Hotel, where a room for two costs $43.88 a night, plus a refundable $10 key deposit. In the police report he did not say he had killed the man; he just talked about how the two of them got drunk and passed out. "When he woke up, the guy was dead and had blood coming from his mouth," the report said.

Dahmer told police he left the body in the room while he went to a mall, bought a suitcase, returned to the hotel, put the body inside, called a taxi and took it to his grandmother's house, where he was living. There he dismembered the body and disposed of it. The police report did not say where his grandmother was at the time.

The police report said he did not kill his next victim until roughly a year later, this time at his grandmother's house. He told police he met the man at the 219 Club and gave him sleeping pills after they had sex. Then Dahmer strangled the man after he dozed off. He said he also drugged his third victim at his grandmother's house.

Dahmer was arrested in 1986 for taking photographs of a 14-year-old boy and was convicted and sentenced to a year in jail. Once he was released after serving a partial sentence, the killings resumed, he told police. He was seeing a parole officer at the same time.

He said that in 1989 he had sex with a man, drugged him and stabbed him with a hunting knife. Then he dismembered the body in the bathtub and used hydrochloric acid to destroy the bones.

Dahmer said his next killing, two months later, followed the same routine: sex, drugs in a drink, death and dismemberment. "Subject states he began getting quicker at cutting up the bodies," the police report noted.

Until then Dahmer seems to have disposed of his victims' bodies. But in 1987, when he killed a man identified as Anthony Sears after a rendezvous at a gay bar, Dahmer kept the victim's ponytail and genitals. "He had called the hardware store and asked what would dry out a rabbit skin and they recommended acetone, which he used to dry out the scalp and genital area," a police report said. "He stated the reason he kept the scalp was because he liked it."

The last months

After Dahmer's parole-probation officer, Donna Chester, meet with him on June 25, 1990, she wrote, "Client appears to be depressed all the time." It was the third month of their every-other-week sessions in her office rather than in Dahmer's apartment.

She was unavailable for an interview last week. Her impressions of Dahmer are in an 81-page document, part of the file she kept on Dahmer, that was released by the Wisconsin Department of Corrections, a file that gives no indication that Dahmer set off alarm bells during their chats. Until his arrest, he "did not stand out" among the state's 12,000 parolees, said Roger Miller, a spokesman for the division of probation and parole in the corrections agency.

What unfolded on the pages of Ms. Chester's reports was a partial look at Dahmer's life: he seemed to talk about everything except the killings.

He sometimes expressed interest in talking about his sexual orientation, but often could not bring himself to say what was on his mind. "Client states he knows he prefers male partners but client feels guilty about it," Ms. Chester wrote.

On July 14, just days before his arrest, he told Ms. Chester he had been dismissed. He told her he had overslept after spending all day visiting his grandmother in a hospital.

Police reports indicate the killings became more frequent as things at work deteriorated. He told police that he killed on June 30, July 4 and July 19.

He told police that he knew what he was doing was wrong, and he began taking precautions against getting caught. "He stated that he used quite a bit of caution by setting up alarm systems in his apartment," a police report said. "He stated that he set up a fake video camera and told other homosexuals that he had brought to his apartment that it automatically turned on if his door opened without the alarm being turned off. He stated that this was all done in order to keep people from entering into his apartment and discovering the evidence. He also stated that he drank excessively to try to forget the nightmare."

■ Deputy: Bus driver asleep at time of crash

CAROLINE, N.Y. — A Greyhound bus overturned Saturday, injuring 31 people, after the driver apparently fell asleep at the wheel, a sheriff's deputy said.

The bus, en route to Buffalo from New York City, turned over on a rain-slicked road in Caroline, about 10 miles southeast of Ithaca, said Tompkins County sheriff's dispatcher Jeff Mead.

Thirty-one of the 38 people aboard were injured, including the driver. None of the injuries was critical.

Driver Carlos Adorno, 27, of Washington, D.C., was charged with reckless driving, unsafe lane change and not keeping his log book up to date, Mead said.

■ Two Scouts killed during mountain outing

MANILA, Utah — Lightning killed two Boy Scouts and injured a third as they huddled under a tree on a camping trip in a national forest, officials said.

A helicopter Saturday plucked five Scouts and two leaders from the camp 10,700 feet above sea level in the rugged Island Lake section of the Uintas in northeast Utah, said Summit County Sheriff's Sgt. Larry Henley.

A bolt of lightning struck a pine tree that four members of Boy Scout Troop 329 from Brigham City were huddled under during a storm early Friday afternoon, the scouts told authorities.

■ Report: Pee-wee made offer to avoid arrest

SARASOTA, Fla. — The actor who plays Pee-wee Herman tried to avoid arrest on indecent exposure charges by offering to perform a children's benefit for the local sheriff's office, a police report says.

Paul Reubens' attorney made the same offer to the Sarasota Herald-Tribune if the newspaper agreed not to publish a story on the arrest, the newspaper's editor said. The newspaper refused.

Reubens, 38, was in town visiting his parents when he was arrested July 26 for exposing himself at an adult theater. He has denied wrongdoing and is scheduled to be arraigned Friday.

Miami attorney Richard Gerstein, a former Dade County state attorney, said Friday he is representing Reubens.

"Mr. Reubens says he's not guilty," Gerstein said. "I anticipate that there will be a trial."

Cal-EPA almost invisible during crisis

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (NYT) — In the same month it was created, the new California Environmental Protection Agency had an opportunity to boldly establish its value by supervising the cleanup of toxic spills resulting from two railroad accidents at opposite ends of the state.

Instead, Cal-EPA has remained almost invisible during the cleanup of hazardous materials at the sites of the derailments near Ventura and Dunsmuir, with more established state agencies, local governments and private companies taking charge.

"Obviously, when you create a new state agency, you don't immediately wipe the slate clean and change everything," said Cal-EPA press secretary Glenn Brank.

Cal-EPA officially was created three days after the July 14 Dunsmuir spill, and would have been able to join the cleanup effort but chose to let other agencies — such as the Department of Fish and Game, the local governments and Southern Pacific — play the major roles.

Brank said Cal-EPA officials responded to the spill at Seacliff, about five miles north of Ventura. But, again, the agency did not participate actively in neutralizing and cleaning up aqueous hydrazine, a highly toxic rocket fuel component that forced the evacuation of 300 people and the closure of Highway 101.

Cal-EPA did not play a more active role both because of the newness of the agency and the localized effect of the incident, he said.

"We are not involved in Ventura. Our role right now is that we are monitoring the situation and offering what assistance we can," Brank said. The agency could have provided personnel and resources but decided it was unnecessary, he said.

"The locals are handling that situation very well on their own, and in an incident which is isolated within one county like that, the locals are in the best position to be in charge."

Ventura County Supervisor John Flynn said that while local officials did a good job in clearing hazardous wastes from the derailment site, a more active role by Cal-EPA would have helped, especially in the hours immediately following the July 28 accident.

"There needs to be a quarterback," he said. "The local groups are doing fine, but I think that kind of agency, which could move quickly and draw upon more resources, would have gotten things better organized early on. At the very beginning, it seemed like no one was in charge of just getting the word out."

During his successful campaign for governor, former U.S. Sen. Pete Wilson vowed to create a state agency that would oversee several existing offices and assume environmental protection duties previously assigned to other departments.

Wilson signed legislation creating Cal-EPA on July 17 — three days after a Southern Pacific train derailed and spilled pesticide into the Sacramento River, killing all life along a 45-mile stretch of the stream. Exactly two weeks after the Dunsmuir accident, a broken axle caused a northbound train to jump the tracks north of Ventura.

"Creation of Cal-EPA gives us one state agency, enforcing one environmental standard. That is a victory both for environmentalists and for entrepreneurs," Wilson said as he signed the bill.

The agency's budget this year is $662 million — including $1 million in new administrative costs, with the rest of the money coming from various departments now under Cal-EPA.

Wilson's press secretary, Bill Livingstone, defended Cal-EPA's slow start, saying that acting prematurely might have caused problems.

"There's a great deal of frustration and understandably so," he said. "But sometimes you just can't push too fast or you make a bad situation worse."

Livingstone said Cal-EPA ultimately will benefit local officials by creating clear lines of authority without usurping local responsibilities.

The new cabinet-level agency is charged with overseeing the Air Resources Board, the Water Quality Control Board, and the Integrated Waste Management Board and assuming regulation and control of pesticides, toxic substances and environmental health hazards from other agencies.

Officials in charge of each of those functions are accountable to Cal-EPA Secretary Jim Strock, who reports directly to Wilson. Officials say the new structure is supposed to create a streamlined, efficient, accountable state environmental authority.

But critics say the new agency simply adds to the bureaucracy rather than streamlining the process.

"The reorganization itself means nothing," said Michael Picker, West Coast Director of the National Toxics Campaign, which favors tougher regulations on the storage, transportation and disposal of hazardous materials. "Whether this does any good will depend on whether any aggressive vision and leadership goes into it, or just political posturing. I'm rather pessimistic."

Assemblyman Jack O'Connell, the Santa Barbara Democrat who represents the Seacliff area, it is too early to criticize Cal-EPA for its lack of action in responding to the Seacliff accident.

"It's only 2 weeks old," O'Connell said of the agency.

Spills spur talk of new rules

LOS ANGELES (NYT) — A pair of devastating toxic spills from derailed trains in California has spurred lawmakers to consider tough new regulations for shipping chemicals and other hazardous material along the nations's 200,000-mile network of rail lines.

To environmental advocacy groups that have long sought stricter rail-safety laws, the derailments on July 28 near Ventura and July 14 near Dunsmuir in Northern California were an inevitable consequence of what they say are weak laws and oversight.

The rail industry maintains that existing laws are sufficient, and that the industry's safety record is excellent given the fact that more than 1.5 million rail cars of toxic materials are shipped each year without incident.

Seaside homes in Seacliff, about 75 miles north of Los Angeles, were evacuated and Highway 101 was closed for five days after a northbound Southern Pacific train derailed on July 28.

The train was carrying 53 barrels of a rocket fuel component and an industrial solvent called naphthalene.

Two weeks earlier, a Southern Pacific train hauling the pesticide metam sodium derailed into the headwaters of the Sacramento River near Dunsmuir. The pesticide killed all plant life and fish along a 45-mile stretch of the stream.

Bush and advisers lay groundwork for '92 race

WASHINGTON (NYT) — President Bush gathered his core group of political advisers in Camp David on Saturday, telling them it was his intention to run for re-election in 1992 and laying the groundwork to begin raising money for a campaign starting in the fall.

Marlin Fitzwater, the White House spokesman, and others who attended said Bush did not make any specific decisions about a campaign organization at the three-hour meeting. About 25 people attended the session, including Bush's poll taker, campaign advertising consultant, press aides and close friends.

But some of those who attended said a consensus emerged from the meeting that even if a formal campaign does not begin until next year, it is time, as one put it, "to start thinking and to take seriously the idea that there will be a campaign."

"Anything started this year should be very modest in nature, because there really isn't that much you could accomplish and there's no point in getting out there when there are no serious opposition candidates," said one White House adviser who attended the meeting and spoke on condition of anonymity. "Most people who were there felt that way, including the president," he said.

Bush opened the meeting with a short presentation. As he did on Friday in his Rose Garden news conference, Bush said he was not yet prepared to make a formal announcement of his candidacy for a second term. But he was far more direct in making his intentions clear than he had been on Friday.

One advisor said, "He put it this way: 'I'm not going to try to keep any suspense on this. It's not natural to try to create the impression that I'm undecided. I do intend to run, and the only thing that would prevent me is if there were health problems, and there aren't."

In a written statement issued by the White House, Fitzwater said the president and his advisers "discussed general issues related to a presidential campgin in 1992."

The statement went on: "Although the president made no specific decisions, it was understood that political organizing and financing will begin this fall. The president said he will hold more such meetings in the fall, with other Republican leaders to discuss campaign themes and other issues."

One of those who attended the meeting said that among the issues discussed was the need to counter recent Democratic efforts to paint Bush as a globetrotting president who pays little attention to domestic affairs.

Among those who attended the meeting were Robert Teeter, Bush's polltaker; Robert A. Mosbacher, the secretary of commerce; and Fred Malek, a longtime friend of Bush — three men who are mentioned as the most likely group to head a Bush re-election campaign.

John H. Sununu, the White House chief of staff, also attended, as did Roger Ailes, who directed Bush's advertising strategy in 1988; Vice President Dan Quayle; Treasury Secretary Nicholas F. Brady; Richard G. Darman, the budget director; Mary Matalin, the chief of staff of the Republican National Committee, and Fitzwater.

Angels stay in title hunt

■ With their 8-6 win over Wichita Saturday night at Angels Stadium, the Midland Angels remain close to the top in the West Division standings.

By Joe Wyatt
Staff Writer

Breaks. The Angels are making them happen.

"We've got some breaks coming to us," said Reggie Williams, whose bat-shattering RBI single capped a four-run seventh inning that propelled Midland to an 8-6 come-from-behind victory over Wichita Saturday night at Angels Stadium.

"I can feel it," said Midland catcher Mick Billmeyer, whose third hit of the night pushed Damion Easley home with the winning run. "We're starting to get on a roll a little bit. Things are starting to go our way."

The positive start to their five-game home stand against the Wranglers keeps the Angels in the thick of the second-half playoff chase. Midland improves to 20-19, and trails San Antonio by just a half-game in the Western Division standings.

Joe D. Williams/Reporter-Telegram

Damion Easley, left, applies the tag to Wichita baserunner Guillermo Velasquez Saturday night in the first inning.

San Antonio's game at El Paso had not been completed at press time.

Hector Berrios picked up his first win for Midland, starting the seventh inning in relief of Dave Shotkoski and going 1⅔ innings of one-hit ball. Doug Robertson allowed one hit over the final 1⅓ to pick up his seventh save.

With a paid crowd of 3,334 hanging on every antic delivered by the visiting Phillie Phanatic, the Angels delivered their own form of entertainment with a three-run first inning.

But Wichita battled back to take a 4-3 lead at the end of four innings, and led 6-4 at the end of six.

Left-hander Reney Bryand, 1-2, came on in the seventh to try and protect the lead for Wichita starter Doug Brocail, but he never made it through the frame.

Mark Howie led off the seventh with an infield single and moved to second on a wild pitch. After Walt McConnell drew ball four from Bryand, Easley loaded the bases when his bloop to short left-center evaded the reach of a diving Charile Hilleman.

Right-handed hitter Larry Gonzales came off the bench to bat for Don Barbara, and his sharp single to left field narrowed the lead to 6-5.

Marcus Lawton's sacrifice fly scored McConnell with the tying run, and Billmeyer, who tripled in the fourth and singled in the sixth, lined a single to right that gave Midland the lead for good.

Whiteside makes move

Brian Adamcik/Reporter-Telegram

Benton Spradlin, four shots off leader Steve Whiteside's pace, hits from the tee Saturday.

■ Former champion Steve Whiteside is atop the Midland Men's City Golf Championship leader board, but two other past winners lurk closely behind breathing down his neck.

Tournament experience charged to the forefront Saturday, as three former winners of the Men's City Golf Championship firmly positioned themselves to make a challenge in today's final round of the 1991 version of the tourney.

Steve Whiteside, one of the tri-leaders after Friday's first round and the 1988 champ, shot a 69 Saturday to give him a 4-under 137 and the lead after two rounds of the 54-hole tournament.

Defending champion Larry Bryan posted Saturday's best round with a 67 to move to 2-under at 139, while Bill Baker, the winner of the 1973 and 1983 tournaments, shot a 68 to go 2-under also.

Bryan bogeyed just one hole in the round, while Whiteside and Baker admitted to being less consistent.

"I had a chance to shoot a 66 today, but that's just the way golf is. I'm still in good shape for tomorrow," Whiteside said after playing a back nine with two birdies and a pair of bogeys.

Baker may have missed a chance to pull even with Whiteside after four-putting the 17th, where two putts would have given him a round of 66. Still, he was philosophical about it.

"It's over with now. There were a bunch of places out there where I made long putts that saved me some

Fiesty Cuba gives USA hard time

Associated Press

HAVANA — Under the glowering gaze of revolutionary hero Che Guevara and the U.S. flag-waving of Yankee capitalist George Steinbrenner, America's backboard-busting basketball team got off to a smashing start against Cuba in the Pan American Games.

Thomas Hill, the smallest of three players from NCAA champion Duke, sent glass flying Saturday with his double-pump reverse dunk in warmups, a demolition job that brought roars of delight from the 15,000 fans packing the Sports City Coliseum.

But it was easier to dispose of the backboard than the quick Cuban team, which led most of the first half and cut a 14-point second-half deficit to two with 10 seconds left before falling 92-88.

The U.S. women's team didn't break anything more than the spirits of the Canadian team in posting an 87-70 victory to begin a quest for a third straight Pan Am gold medal. It was the 42nd straight international victory for the women's team.

Cowboys defeat rusty Chiefs

■ First round draft pick Alvin Harper catches two touchdown passes from backup quarterback Cliff Stoudt as Dallas rolls over Kansas City 24-14.

Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — One exhibition game into their pro careers, Russell Maryland and Alvin Harper are making Dallas' first-round draft strategy look mighty smart.

Maryland, the defensive tackle taken with the Cowboys' first choice last spring, more than held his own against a respected Kansas City line Saturday night in the exhibition opener. And wide receiver Harper, a supplemental No. 1 pick, caught two touchdown passes as the Cowboys beat the mistake-prone Kansas City Chiefs 24-14.

Harper caught both touchdown passes from backup quarterback Cliff Stoudt and totaled 94 yards on just three catches, including a 42-yard touchdown strike. But he was careful not to prance off the field.

"I have to keep a level head," he said. "I made some mistakes. I jumped offsides once and didn't run a correct pattern.

"The competition, that's what I enjoyed the most tonight," Maryland said. "It's a different game. I tried to play my game. I don't think about the pressure. The fans add the pressure. I don't think much about it."

The Chiefs did not score until the fourth period and lost the ball on three fumbles and an interception.

"There were some good things I saw out there and some things that weren't so good," coach Marty Schottenheimer said. "We made more than our share of mistakes in this ballgame. You just can't turn the ball over like that and be successful. We're going to work like hell to get better."

Troy Aikman, the Cowboys' No. 1 quarterback, threw a 3-yard touchdown pass to Jay Novacek on the fourth play of the second quarter following a scoreless opening period. Ken Willis capped a 70-yard drive at the end of the second period with a 25-yard field goal for a 10-0 Dallas lead. The drive consumed 10:01.

The Cowboys, coming off a 7-9 season in Jimmy Johnson's second season as coach, marched 67 yards in just four plays in the third period to take a 17-0 lead. The much-traveled Stoudt, who inherited the backup quarterback job when Dallas waived Babe Laufenberg, connected with Harper on a 41-yard touchdown strike. The rookie from Tennessee beat Charles Mincy in the corner of the end zone.

Mark Vlasic started the second half at quarterback for the Chiefs, who were 11-5 a year ago. He engineered a 7-play, 80-yard drive capped by Kimble Anders' 2-yard touchdown catch with 10:15 remaining.

The game was watched by 56,038, the largest crowd for an exhibition game at Arrowhead Stadium since 75,231 saw the Chiefs battle Green Bay on Aug. 26, 1973.

Saints 18, Vikings 3

NEW ORLEANS — Morten Andersen kicked six field goals, one to cap each of the Saints' first six possessions, and New Orleans beat the Minnesota Vikings in the exhibition opener for both teams.

The 10-year-veteran, who has twice kicked five field goals in a regular season game, had his attempt for a seventh blocked when holder Tommy Barnhardt couldn't get reserve center Brad Leggett's low snap spotted in time.

Anderson, whose 77.11 percent field goal conversion rate is the third highest all-time, was good from 36 yards in the first quarter; 29, 21 and 22 yards in the second quarter; and 46 and 44 yards in the third quarter.

Fuad Reveiz provided the Vikings' only points with a 40-yard field goal that tied the score 3-3 with 3:25 left in the first quarter.

The Vikings, behind third-string quarterback Sean Salisbury, drove from their 12 to the New Orleans 8-yard line in the fourth quarter, but John Thornton recovered a missed snap on second down to end the threat.

Bobby Hebert, a five-year starter who sat out last season vowing never to play for the Saints again, was soundly booed when he entered the game in relief of Steve Walsh in the second quarter.

Falcons 38, Rams 17

JACKSONVILLE, Fla. — Rookie Mike Pritchard caught three touchdown passes and Atlanta's defense recovered five fumbles to lead the Falcons over the Los Angeles Rams.

Pritchard, a first-round draft pick from Colorado, scored on receptions of 12 and 17 yards from Brett Favre, then finished a four-catch, 72-yard performance by scoring on a 29-yard pass from Gilbert Renfroe.

The Falcons also blocked a punt for a touchdown and Tracey Eaton picked up Marcus Dupree's fumble on the Rams' first offensive play and ran 20 yards for a TD. The exhibition opener for both teams was Atlanta's sixth consecutive preseason win.

Favre, the Falcons' second-round draft pick, completed nine of 22 passes for 100 yards and two TDs before leaving the game late in the third quarter. Los Angeles mistakes set up three of the four touchdowns Atlanta scored with him in the game, but the rookie was impressive in directing a 75-yard drive ended with Pritchard's first TD.

49ers 21, Bears 7

BERLIN — Joe Montana and Steve Young threw scoring passes as the San Francisco 49ers overcame an anemic running attack to defeat the Chicago Bears in an exhibition game at the stadium which hosted the 1936 Olympics.

Montana threw a 19-yard touchdown pass to Jerry Rice and Young had a 4-yard scoring toss to Sanjay Beach to lead the 49ers, who also got a 2-yard touchdown run from fullback Keith Henderson.

The Bears (1-1) got their only points on a 22-yard reverse by Glen Kozlowski.

San Francisco, which won its first overseas game after exhibition losses in London in 1988 and Tokyo in 1989, was never able to establish a running game, gaining only 25 yards in the first half. The 49ers are 2-0.

Montana completed 12 of 16 passes for 136 yards. He was intercepted once and sacked twice in about 20 minutes of play.

Young completed eight of 10 for 70 yards.

Jim Harbaugh started at quarterback for the Bears and completed seven of 14 passes for 77 yards.

The game drew 66,876 to the stadium in which Jesse Owens destroyed Adolf Hitler's theory of Aryan supremacy by winning four gold medals in the 1936 Olympics.

Eagles 24, Jets 10

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — Randall Cunningham exhibited his regular-season form four weeks early, leading the Philadelphia Eagles over the New York Jets by throwing over and dancing around the New York defense.

Philadelphia, which lost 17-13 to Buffalo in London last week, had little trouble with New York's regulars, although the Eagles still have a dozen holdouts, including most of their starting offensive and defensive lines. It was the Jets' opening game and the rust showed.

Cunningham was eight of 10 for 95 yards and a touchdown and ran for 41 yard on four carries. He directed the Eagles to touchdowns on their first two possessions before leaving the game midway through the second period. Izel Jenkins added a fourth-quarter TD with a 33-yard interception.

Packers 28, Patriots 7

GREEN BAY, Wis. — Don Majkowski, in his first game since undergoing rotator cuff surgery last December, threw two first-half touchdown passes to lead the Green Bay Packers over the New England Patriots.

It was the exhibition opener for both teams, and marked the NFL head coaching debut of New England's Dick MacPherson.

Majkowski, who hadn't played since he was injured Nov. 18, threw a 1-yard touchdown pass to Ed West in the first quarter. The 26-yard drive was set up when Blair Bush recovered a fumble by Patriots punt returner Mickey Washington.

Green Bay's Keith Woodside ran 7 yards for an apparent touchdown, but the replay ruled him down at the one yard line. Two plays later, Majkowski rolled out and hit West with 5:47 to go in the opening quarter.

GAMES: Cuba's Cuba wins first Pan Am gold medal

(From 1C)

Steinbrenner, the banished New York Yankees boss and a U.S. Olympic Committee official, sat appropriately to the far right of the giant blue and red mural of Che and popped up with a small American contingent to wave a tiny flag at the end.

"We had scouted Cuba enough to know they were very good," U.S. coach U.S. Coach Gene Keady of Purdue said. "They just killed us on the boards in the first half. The main thing was our kids were a little uptight, a little tentative, a little too ready as far as wanting to win."

Jimmy Jackson of Ohio State led the Americans with 22 points, and Duke's Christian Laettner scored 19. The United States has not won a major international men's title since 1986.

Keady chewed out Hill for his power dunk, which delayed the game about a half-hour. Keady said he had just told the team to take it easy dunking in warmups because the rims weren't breakaways, as they are in most U.S. arenas.

"You know how it is with children at home," he explained with a sigh. "As soon as you tell them something, just the opposite happens. I should have just shut up."

"I was shocked," Hill said of his feat. "That was the first time. I'm not that strong, but everybody thinks about doing it like Darryl Dawkins did. I just stood there because I couldn't believe I had done it."

In fact, it may not have been Hill's fault at all. The players noticed a slight crack in the backboard before warmups. When Hill hung from the rim after his dunk it may have put too much stress on the glass, causing it to shatter and send bits of glass raining down on the players.

Cuba led 50-47 at halftime, but the United States took the lead for good at 55-54 on a low move by Laettner and never trailed. After Cuba scrambled back, Terry Dehere made two free throws with 2 seconds left for the final margin.

"I was surprised by all the enthusiasm here from the fans, with the wave and everything," said Jackson. "They showed us a warm welcome and it really was a great thrill to play here."

Cuba, the man and the country, captured the first gold medal of these 11th Pan Am Games.

Alberto Cuba, at home on hilly terrain made more grueling by the intense heat and humidity, gave his countrymen an unexpected thrill by winning the closest marathon in Pan Am history.

Cuba, competing in only his third marathon, finished in 2 hours, 19 minutes, 27 seconds — just two seconds ahead of Brazil's Jose Santana.

"I thought the Mexicans were the favorites, I never thought I would win the race," Cuba said after being lofted into the air by excited fans. "I dedicate this victory to the people of Cuba and Fidel Castro."

AL West: Hands down the best division in baseball

Associated Press

All those years, the American League West vowed it would get even. For the insults, the inferiority and the indignation.

On Friday night, it finally happened. Every team went above .500.

Not since Aug. 30, 1986, when the AL East accomplished the feat, had a division put all of its clubs over the break-even point.

Back then, the AL Worst was the laughingstock of baseball. Now, though, there's no doubt — the West is Best, by a lot.

The Kansas City Royals achieved the feat with a 6-4 victory in Cleveland. That made the Royals 51-50, but still left them in last place, 8½ games behind first-place Minnesota.

"We're stoked about being .500, but there's still a long way to go," winning pitcher Kevin Appier said. "There's no point in thinking about where we'd be in the other division, though some people here might wonder about that."

For those counting, the Royals' record would put them in a nip-and-tuck race with Detroit for second place in the AL Least.

Kansas City, like every other team in the West, has a winning record against East opposition. The Twins are best at 44-20, while California is the worst, even at 32-31.

Toronto and Detroit, meanwhile are the only East teams to hold an edge over West competition.

One indicator: through Friday, every team in the West had played at least .500 ball in its last 10 games, while no team in the East was better than .500 in its past 10.

Another one: Minnesota won 15 straight and Texas took 14 in a row. Chicago and Seattle each won eight straight and Oakland had a seven-game string. No team in the East has won more than six consecutive games.

"Look at the record," Detroit manager Sparky Anderson recently said. "They have total supremacy on the East."

Wow, they sure do. The West teams are a combined 388-327 for a .543 winning percentage.

The greatest domination by one division over the other was done in the days when the AL East ruled. Their teams in 1969, the first year the leagues split up, finished with a combined winning percentage of .567, the best ever; in 1983, the AL East wound up a total of 76 games above .500, also the highest of all-time.

Those days, all the big names were in the East — Reggie Jackson, Jim Rice, Jim Palmer and the rest. And, with more money to spend, that's where all the top free agents went to play.

In the last few years, however, a trend started to develop. Not that many people noticed at first, even as the West began to turn the tide, beginning a streak in 1987 of sending four straight teams to the World Series. In the 12 years before that, only two West teams, Kansas City in 1980 and 1985, had won in the playoffs.

Some of the big names are still in the East, guys like Alan Trammell and Robin Yount, but they're getting older. Meanwhile, other old-timers like Jack Morris and Dave Winfield have moved West and are prospering.

More importantly, the West, which put its money into farm systems for so many years, is really reaping the full benefits. Jose Canseco, Kirby Puckett and Danny Tartabull already were stars as the West began putting more players than the East into the All-Star game, and now Frank Thomas, Scott Erickson and Chuck Finley are part of the new breed.

All those good players also make for a good race. Only three games separate Minnesota, Chicago and Oakland — in the other three divisions, there's at least 4½ games between first and second place.

Texas and Seattle are just 5½ games back, with California trailing by eight and then Kansas City.

"We're not concerned with the pennant race right now," Royals manager Hal McRae said. "We'd like to play good baseball for three weeks or so, to prove to ourselves that we're a good ballclub and can win.

"It is the first step," he said. "You feel good about it, but you really haven't accomplished a great deal. We're one game over .500, but it's still last place. There's still a lot of work to be done."

Small field at Marlboro

Associated Press

BROOKLYN, Mich. — The smallest field ever for a 500-mile race will take the green flag for Sunday's Marlboro 500, although the 21 cars could easily make up in speed what they lack in numbers.

Starting with record-setting pole-winner Rick Mears at 225.169 mph and running all the way to the slowest qualifier, Canadian John Jones at 200.198, the lineup is one of the fastest in auto racing history.

In the field are 14 drivers who qualified at speeds faster than 220 mph, including Saturday qualifiers Arie Luyendyk 222.910 and A.J. Foyt 222.224.

John Andretti, driving a Midland-based Lola Chevrolet, will start from the sixth position in Sunday's race.

Luyendyk was off the track both Thursday and Friday while his car owner, Vince Granatelli, worked out a legal problem with a former sponsor.

Rangers' offense batters Brewers again

Associated Press

AL

MILWAUKEE — Rafael Palmeiro had two singles and drove in two runs during an eight-run first inning as the Texas Rangers routed the Milwaukee Brewers, 14-5.

In the last two games, Texas has pounded Milwaukee pitching for 29 runs on 34 hits. On Saturday, Milwaukee committed five errors and lost its fourth straight game.

The Rangers sent 14 batters to the plate in the first inning, which lasted 37 minutes and resulted in eight unearned runs. Texas had seven hits in the inning and was aided by three errors.

Catcher Rick Dempsey was used as the fifth Milwaukee pitcher, walking one but giving up no hits in the ninth. Dempsey also pitched in a loss to Baltimore on July 2.

Jose Guzman (7-4) gave up two runs and three hits in six innings for the victory. Kenny Rogers, the third Texas pitcher, finished.

Jeff Huson, who had two hits and scored twice in the first, singled to get things going. Julio Franco bounced to first baseman Paul Molitor, who made a wild throw to second in an attempt to get Huson. The ball rolled into left field, allowing the runners to advance.

Palmiero then singled to center, scoring Huson, and center fielder Robin Yount fielded the ball on one hop and bobbled it, also allowing Franco to score.

Molitor was charged with his second error in the inning when he failed to handle Ruben Sierra's liner. Palmiero advanced to second on the play, and then moved to third on Juan Gonzalez's fly ball.

With one out, Kevin Reimer hit a run-scoring single to give the Rangers a 3-0 lead.

After Steve Buechele's fly ball, Dean Palmer walked to load the bases. Ivan Rodriguez hit a two-run single, and Huson followed with a run-scoring single to give Texas a 6-0 lead and chase loser Bill Wegman (6-6).

Franco and Palmiero greeted reliever Julio Machado with run-scoring singles to give the Rangers an 8-0 lead.

Red Sox 4, Blue Jays 1

BOSTON — Joe Hesketh shut out Toronto for 7 2-3 innings and reliever Jeff Reardon escaped a bases-loaded jam as the Boston Red Sox beat the Blue Jays.

Jack Clark and Luis Rivera hit home runs, leading Boston past the American League East leaders for the second time within 24 hours. The Red Sox pulled to within eight games of the Blue Jays.

Hesketh (5-2), a converted reliever, gave up four hits and struck out eight. He pitched into the eighth inning for the first time since 1986 and outdueled David Wells (12-6).

Hesketh left with a 4-0 lead after issuing his only two walks of the game. Reardon relieved and after Roberto Alomar beat out an infield hit that loaded the bases, Joe Carter flied out to center field to end the eighth.

Reardon got his 25th save despite allowing a run in the ninth on Kelly Gruber's double and pinch hitter Rob Ducey's single.

The Red Sox jumped on Wells quickly. With one out in the first, Rivera lined a double and Clark connected with two outs for his 18th home run, a drive off the light tower in left field.

Twins 8, Athletics 6

OAKLAND, Calif. — Brian Harper's three-run homer capped a seven-run rally in the eighth inning and the Minnesota Twins withstood Dave Henderson's three home runs to sting the Oakland Athletics.

Jose Canseco, Mark McGwire and Harold Baines also connected for Oakland, but the six home runs were not enough to stop the American League West-leading Twins. Minnesota restored its margin to four games over the third-place Athletics.

Henderson homered in his first three at-bats for his first career three-homer game. He struck out and popped out in his final two at-bats, falling one short of tying the major league record for homers in a game. Henderson became the sixth Oakland player to hit three home runs in a game, including Baines earlier last May 7.

The Twins, with Oakland relief ace Dennis Eckersley not even warming up, tagged three pitchers and overcame a 5-0 deficit in the eighth.

Indians 3, Royals 1

CLEVELAND — Greg Swindell pitched a seven-hitter and Alex Cole atoned for a defensive gaffe by scoring the go-ahead run on a passed ball in the seventh as the Cleveland Indians beat the Kansas City Royals.

The Indians ended their six-game losing streak and Kansas City's three-game winning streak.

Swindell (7-9) allowed one earned but tainted run, walking none and striking out four in his fifth complete game. In his last 20 starts, he has walked 13 and struck out 119.

Cole, who had let Brian McRae score from second base on a sacrifice fly in the first inning, started the Indians' two-run seventh with an infield single off reliever Tom Gordon (7-10).

Orioles 6, White Sox 3

CHICAGO — Jack McDowell's rock group gave a concert earlier in the day, but it was the Baltimore Orioles who did a number on the Chicago White Sox right-hander.

McDowell, who is the lead singer and plays the guitar for a group called V. I. E. W., was hammered for 10 hits and six runs in two-plus innings in his worst outing of the season.

Tigers 7, Yankees 6

DETROIT — Lloyd Moseby's two-run double highlighted a five-run first inning and the Detroit Tigers held on to beat the New York Yankees.

The Tigers won their fourth straight game and closed to four games behind first-place Toronto in the American League East. The Yankees have lost six of seven.

Bill Gullickson (14-6) allowed three runs on seven hits in seven innings.

Mariners 9, Angels 3

ANAHEIM, Calif. — Randy Johnson struck out 11 to take over the American League lead as the Seattle Mariners stayed hot with a victory over the California Angels.

Johnson (10-7) allowed only two third-inning hits through six innings in winning for the seventh time in his last eight decisions.

Schembechler: Inadequate parking could endanger Tigers' future

Associated Press

DETROIT — Detroit Tigers president Bo Schembechler said on Saturday if a proposal isn't ready on his preferred site for the new stadium by the end of the season, the Detroit ballclub could be history.

"We'll have no choice but to look at other options," Schembechler said before the Tigers' game against the New York Yankees. "That will be a major, major decision for this franchise."

Detroit Mayor Coleman Young and Wayne County Executive Ed McNamara have promised the Tigers detailed studies later this month on both the site north of the present stadium in the Briggs community and one closer downtown. But city and county officials admit they plan to push the downtown location.

Schembechler said he saw no way the downtown Woodward Avenue site could be adapted to hold the 12,000-15,000 parking spaces needed for the stadium. The Woodward site is only 40 acres, as opposed to 177 at Briggs.

"People drive to these games. They drive from Toledo, from Jackson, from Lansing," Schembechler said. "They want to feel safe in a lighted parking lot contiguous to the stadium."

Should the Briggs proposal fall through, Schembechler said the team may go as far as leaving Michigan. But Schembechler said he doubted that would happen.

■ NL Roundup, more sports/8B

Tigers owner Tom Monaghan also stressed parking as the main concern in the team's preference of the Briggs site.

He said Friday that the desire for adequate and safe parking — and not pizza profits — is behind the team's reluctance to relocate closer downtown.

Monaghan's comments were his first in months about where in Detroit the publicly financed ballpark will be built.

Speculation abounded that Monaghan, who also owns the Ann Arbor-based Domino's Pizza, rejected a downtown site because it could create a windfall to Little Caesars Pizza owner Mike Ilitch.

Ilitch owns the Fox Theatre, across Woodward Avenue from the area where Detroit and Wayne County officials want to build the new stadium.

Monaghan scoffed at rumors that the stadium issue had escalated into a personality clash between pizza venders.

He said he can remember meeting Ilitch only once in the last 15 years and doesn't even consider him a competitor.

"I'm in delivery, and he's in carryout," said Monaghan.

An Ilitch spokesman declined to talk about the stadium issue and said Ilitch was on vacation and unreachable.

Keep focus on Dahmer's crime

The horror viewed in Milwaukee since July 22 has shocked and appalled the nation. Jeffrey Dahmer, a 31-year-old convicted child molester, has been arrested in connection with the murder and dismemberment of several young men. In his bloody, fly-infested apartment, police officers found parts of bodies, headless torsos and even several human heads inside the refrigerator. The horror continues.

Dahmer reportedly has confessed to 17 murders since 1978, including three at his grandmother's farm, and told officers that he cannibalized some of his victims and performed homosexual sex on at least one of the cadavers. For ordinary people like those in Midland, the heinous crime — liberally laced with homosexual sex, murder and cannibalism — boggles the mind. It's bad enough that 17 innocent people are dead, but all the sleazy details only makes the crime worse.

Now it appears that the focus of the story is being subtly shifted from Dahmer's alleged crimes to mistakes and shortcomings in the police investigation of incidents at Dahmer's apartment. That change of focus is not entirely irrelevant. Already Milwaukee Police Chief Philip Arreola has suspended three officers who were in Dahmer's apartment prior to July 22 and even reportedly brought a naked, 14-year-old boy back to the apartment who, Dahmer has now told investigators, he murdered shortly after the officers left.

Probing procedures in the police investigation — including police laughter and remarks about homosexuals — could help reveal whether even-handed law enforcement is being meted out or not. That is important, no doubt.

How could it all happen? How could the police fail to notice the smell inside Dahmer's apartment when they went there? Why didn't the officers investigate more thoroughly? These and hundreds of other questions will be answered as the investigation continues.

Regrettably, that attention can also detract from the investigation that needs to be conducted to determine why Dahmer did what he says he did. Those details may prove important in catching others prone to commit similar multiple murders in the future.

Yet, as important as it is to uncover the true facts about why police did what they did and failed to take steps they should have taken, that is only one auxiliary aspect of the story. Society is not responsible for any crime Dahmer may have committed. Only Jeffrey Dahmer is responsible for his actions.

The real story in Milwaukee remains Jeffrey Dahmer and his actions. Keeping the attention on Dahmer will help to make certain that justice is served.

Charging for ferry ride is doubly taxing

Maybe it was too good to be true, and maybe there is no free lunch.

Still, it's sad to see the Texas House of Representatives giving preliminary approval to a bill that would end the free ferry rides between Port Bolivar and Galveston.

Under a bill tentatively approved, the ferry would cost between 50 cents and $2 per ride, although Texans could pay a $10 annual fee for unlimited ferry use.

The fees would be assessed by a proposed Department of Transportation, which would be formed by combining the departments of highways, public transportation and aviation. The bill included recommendations by State Comptroller John Sharp, who has proposed a bold and far-reaching plan to save the state $5.2 billion through fee increases, agency mergers and layoffs.

Although the ferry rides may seem like a tempting target for lawmakers, Texans should remember that the ferry system is tax-supported to begin with. Paying to ride a ferry that is already funded by the taxpayers is not unlike paying to drive down Texas 87 or Interstate 10.

Commission's proposals reinforce single parenting

The recent report of the National Commission on Children had the merit of stressing two long-slighted themes: the desirability of stable two-parent families for children's welfare; and families' need for tax relief. These two propositions are enjoying bipartisan vogue, and that's a good thing.

On the other hand, there are two proposals the commission touts that would reinforce incentives for single parenthood.

The first would grant a large new cash benefit of $1,000 per child per years to non-working single mothers.

The second proposal would provide child-support payments out of public funds when absent fathers couldn't or wouldn't meet their obligations.

Taking the commission to task for these two terrible ideas is academic: The $54 billion annual price tag on the full basket of proposed reforms seals its fate for the time being. The report may have lasting influence, but we hope these recommendations won't.

Pork barrel grows despite huge debt

WASHINGTON — Two years ago, Rep. Stephen Solarz, D-N.Y., took a trip through the South Pacific and stopped at the Solomon Islands to schmooze with government leaders there. They were embarrassed because they had to receive the big shot congressman in an old World War II Quonset hut that they use for a parliament building.

Anderson

Not to worry. Solarz was thinking about having the federal government give the island people a monument in memory of the American soldiers who died at the battle of Guadalcanal. Why not give the islands a parliament building instead of a plaque?

That is why the current Navy appropriations bill includes $5 million for the new building. How a simple war memorial turns into a parliament building and ends up in a defense appropriations bill with no questions asked is a puzzle that can only be solved on Capitol Hill, where it isn't considered unusual at all.

Solarz figured a building would be a living memorial to the soldiers and would also be useful to a struggling democracy. As for putting it in the defense budget, a Solarz staffer told us, "everything in an appropriations bill is vague," and putting the Navy in charge of the project would assure that the job would get done sooner.

For any American taxpayer who still harbors the illusion that spending decisions are made on a more complex set of criteria, put that illusion to rest. Lawmakers routinely tuck their pet projects into giant appropriations bills where they receive little or no scrutiny. Members can add projects without hearings or in closed-door conferences, and the result is the expense of billions of dollars on projects with little or no merit.

Most of the wheeling and dealing is done behind closed doors in the House-Senate conference on appropriations. "No one has time to comb through a fat appropriations bill to find self-interest projects," one Capitol Hill staffer told our associate Melinda Maas.

Crafty lawmakers know how to use the system to slip through pork barrel projects to impress the folks back home, or, in Solarz's case, to pass out gifts overseas like some sort of globe-trotting philanthropist. Few of the projects are justified at a time of heart-stopping federal debt.

Among the voices raised in protest of the spending run amuck are those of Sen. Bob Smith, R-N.H., and Rep. Harris Fawell, R-Ill. The two men have introduced bills to stop more than $1 billion in federal appropriations. These "porkbuster" bills would rescind 325 projects that were funded by slight-of-hand. Smith defines as "pork" anything that is not subjected to congressional hearings and awarded with competitive bidding.

The "porkbuster" campaign has earned Smith some threats from his colleagues who like the old rules. Smith was ready for the criticism. "This is hardball we're playing," he said. "It's how things work up here."

Etymologies of G-string, pasties revealed

Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist announced the judgment of the Supreme Court in the case of Barnes vs. Glen Theatre — in which Justices Scalia and Souter concurred — and delivered an opinion in which Justices O'Connor and Kennedy joined. (You can concur in a judgment without joining an opinion; you cannot concur in an opinion without joining in a judgment.)

Safire

"We ... now hold," goes the law of the land, "that the Indiana statutory requirement that the dancers in the establishments involved in this case must wear pasties and a G-string does not violate the First Amendment."

Souter, who seemed in recent hearings to have led such a sheltered life, concurs: "Pasties and a G-string moderate the expression to some degree, to be sure, but . the limitation is minor when measured against the dancer's remaining capacity and opportunity to express the erotic message."

Right judgment, but for the wrong reason, Scalia held. "The State is regulating conduct, not expression," he wrote, and First Amendment scrutiny is not involved. Nor is the law's moral purpose to protect only non-consenting parties from offense: "The purpose of Indiana's nudity law would be violated, I think, if 60,000 fully consenting adults crowded into the Hoosierdome to display their genitals to one another, even if there were not an offended innocent in the crowd."

That aroused Justice White, who, in a dissent joined by Justices Marshall, Blackmun and Stevens, thundered: "No one can doubt, however, that those same 60,000 Hoosiers would be perfectly free to drive to their respective homes all across Indiana and, once there, to parade around, cavort and revel in the nude for hours in front of relatives and friends. It is difficult to see why the State's interest in morality is any less in that situation, especially if, as Justice Scalia seems to suggest, nudity is inherently evil."

Let me step in at this point, as one who infrequently cavorts nude in front of relatives and friends but who looks forward to his next thrilling visit to the Hoosierdome. Although the court's opinion twice included Indiana's no-holds-barred definition of nudity — which can be delicately summarized in family newspapers as "it ain't the teat, it's the tumidity" — nowhere in this landmark decision can the concerned public find the meanings and origins of pastie and G-string. It is as if the justices hastily assumed we all knew what these terms signify, or were determined to participate in an etymological cover-up.

Pastie. In John Ayto's Dictionary of Word Origins, to be published in September by Arcade, the root of paste is traced to the Greek verb passein, "to sprinkle"; the noun originally meant a barley porridge. Late Latin borrowed it as pasta and Old French as the basis of pastry; both words are with us today and excite no outrage except among dieters. Sometimes pasta sticks together, leading to paste in the sense of a whitish flour-and-water mixture with the character of glue, which led to the adjective pasty-faced and brings us to the noun pasties.

Pasties are coverings for the nipples of a stripteaser's (or erotic dancer's) breasts and are affixed by paste, glue, stickum or other mild adhesive. They usually glitter as if dusted by reflecting particles, recalling the earliest Greek meaning, "to sprinkle." The first Oxford citation is from the Washington Post in 1961: "Miss Mason was lying on the floor with nothing on except the scantiest of brassieres, known in the trade as 'pasties.'"

However, Fred Mish at Merriam-Webster has just come up with an earlier citation: Earl J. Abbot wrote in True Police Cases in 1954, "'Pasties' — adhesive coverings for breast points — sell at $1.50 a pair and up." (Mish adds, "Breast points?")

Got that, brother Souter? Now, brother Rehnquist, to G-string. This is not derived from the first string on a double bass, the third on the viola or the fourth on the violin.

The origin is in the American frontier. The geestring was a loincloth, or the string or thong supporting a piece of cloth enclosing the genitals, worn by American Indians and some settlers unconcerned with conventions of dress.

We would be wise to let the sap run out

It would be useful if cultural historians could pinpoint the moment when Americans, more or less simultaneously, stopped saying "wise up." Until that moment, being "wised up" was the essence of Americanism and anybody who wasn't "wised up," or at least capable of "wising up," was probably "a hopeless sap" and deserved everything that hit him.

Baker

"Sap," incidentally, is another important word that has fallen out of use. Plenty of synonyms have tried to replace it. "Airhead" is in vogue right now. But "sap" had a simple force, with a sound as businesslike as a pistol butt on the side of the skull.

Moreover, if it is totally lost to the language, Americans will never again be able to relish that moment in "Horse Feathers" when Groucho Marx interrupts his classroom lecture by telling Chico to "drill a hole in yourself and let the sap run out."

Being wised up meant being too smart to fall for the kind of people who tried to treat you like a "sap." Above I said it was the essence of Americanism, but "Americanism" was the kind of word that immediately put wised-up people on guard, as did almost all political ideas ending in "ism."

When you heard somebody turning America into an "ism" you immediately knew, if you were wised up, that this bird doing the talking was grinding a political ax and you'd better be on guard if you didn't want to be taken for a sap.

The value of being wised up was probably strongest during the Depression when people were suffering the consequences of long years of gullibility. In "Romantic Comedy," a book about the sophisticated movie comedies of the 1930s, James Harvey notes that one of the great strengths of those comedies was their wised-up view of the world.

Accepting the sentimental view of small-town life was for saps, as were the assumptions that the public was good-hearted, the cops kindly and the businessmen beneficent.

Once World War II was under way, being wised up was valued less, and perhaps even deplored since a nation trying to wage a war successfully cannot afford to have its public totally wised up.

The onset of the cold war and Sen. Joseph McCarthy made it dangerous to be wised up.

Many Americans then made a virtue of a nasty necessity, which was to behave respectfully toward people they feared, and started priding themselves on their "Americanism."

It would have been the ideal moment for a revival of "Don't be a sap. Wise up!" The style in wisdom had changed, however.

Just as deadly to the cause of a wised-up America was the serene eight-year reign of President Eisenhower with the virtue of positive thinking being preached ad nauseam.

With the Depression receding into memory, Eisenhower was leading us into an Age of Saps. It reached some kind of milestone in a press conference one day when a reporter rose to ask, "Mr. President, why do young people like you so much?"

Even Eisenhower must have winced at that, for his attempt at a reply was even more muddled syntactically than his usual press conference language. I have since wondered if he wasn't fighting an impulse to say, "Wise up, man! Don't be a sap!"

So what about the crime bill now in Congress? It really will get everybody off drugs and end all this violence, won't it?

Look out Jaw-urge, here comes Aye-uhn

I just couldn't figure it out. Here we had a Democratic governor who had just come out in favor of a reduction in government spending and against an income tax. A Democrat! Then she admonished the special session of the Legislature as if they were so many children and warned them they better look for any ways to cut spending and forget about tax increases. A Democrat!

Then it hit me. Governor Richards is going to preside over a special session of the Democrat-controlled Legislature, which vaporizes a projected $4.5 billion deficit by cutting spending and trimming state government. Then, sometime in mid-fall, she will (citing the dearth of qualified candidates) announce that she is running for president in 1992. She realizes a lot of us are still sore at George for lying to us ("Read my lips. No new taxes.") and will campaign on a platform of trimming government spending to balance the budget.

Richards will hit the president where he is the most vulnerable, and although she knows she won't win, she may make it close enough (55-45) to establish herself as the Democratic force for the wide-open '96 race.

I can already imagine the nationally televised debate. President Bush will insist that he could have kept his "no new taxes" pledge if he had not been faced with a Democrat-controlled Congress. Our governor will reply, in her nasally Texas twang, "Jaw-urge, Ah did it in Tack-sus, and Ah kin do it in War-shington."

Why shackle Bakker but not Jeff Dahmer?

I was very distraught recently when I observed, via television news, a man who killed, dismembered, and possibly ate portions of maybe 17 people, being led into a courtroom unshackled. Not even handcuffs were visible!

Not so, the scene of several months back when Jim Bakker, accused only of hustling money from literally his own company He, accused only of fraud, was led in shackled and manacled hand and foot.

Now, in no way do I approve of Jim Bakker's actions, nor do I cotton to his religious philosophy, but something is severely wrong here! We shackle and humiliate one only accused of fraud, simply because "church" is involved, and treat a vicious murderer with proper respect to his "civil rights." I think our criminal justice system is in need of repair.

Abortion as birth control is repugnant

Is abortion a legitimate method of family planning? When we permit abortion counseling and referrals in federally funded planning clinics, we are saying that it is. I believe that the majority of Americans reject this notion.

Family-planning clinics are funded to help individuals with pre-, not post-conception services. Birth control abortions are morally repugnant. Does the government have the right to force people to support with their taxes that which they abhor? In 1785, Thomas Jefferson said, "To compel a man to furnish contributions of money for the propagation of opinions which he disbelieves is sinful and tyrannical."

Jefferson was right. To force pro-life taxpayers to support pro-abortion counseling in federal family-planning clinics is sinful and tyrannical.

Stop coddling inept students, teachers?

We had some students (in junior high school) who could not read." This statement (Reporter-Telegram, July 24) was attributed to Alamo Junior High School Principal David Adams.

Why were these students in junior high if they couldn't read? The problem starts when elementary schools promote the illiterates instead of teaching them to read. This is social promotion, a farcical policy perpetrated by educators who can't or won't teach. Social promotion keeps a student with his age group, regardless of his knowledge, capabilities, and/or performance. It is a travesty inflicted upon the student, the other students, the next teacher, the parents, and ultimately upon the taxpayer.

Elementary school is the place to attack this problem. Social promotion must be eliminated or we will become a nation of illiterates.

It's time to stop coddling both the students and their teachers. We must cease promoting those who don't/can't/won't perform. And we must fire those "teachers" who don't/can't/won't teach.

Details of Clearview deal not really clear

I have today received a very nice letter from the administrator of Glenwood Psychiatric Hospital advising that my letter to you, published in the Reporter-Telegram, about the Midland hospitals incorrectly named his facility as the one taken over by the Midland Memorial Hospital board.

My written apology to him and Glenwood is in today's (July 29) mail.

However, now that I have the names straightened out I would still like to know the details of the deal made on Clearview (now called Memorial West) by the Midland Memorial Hospital (now known as Memorial Hospital and Medical Center) board. I see by the newspaper they are going to begin lobbying for another enormous tax increase to reimburse them for the indigent care provided.

Dahmer not only one with blood on hands

Certainly most of us were shocked and appalled at the recent headline news of a convicted child molester who had murdered and dismembered a number of people. The man made a choice, he chose to kill people. He must be punished for his actions.

As I see it, his timing was poor. If he, in fact, had chosen to kill and dismember these people while they were very small and yet in their mother's womb, he would not be facing punishment today. He would be looked upon as a humanitarian and would be handed a fistful of our tax dollars for his actions. He would be a free man, walking the streets.

I have seen photographs of fully formed babies that were bloody and dismembered during a "safe" legal abortion. Why the double-standard? Why is one murder acceptable and another abhorred? Some argue that a person, while inside the womb, is a blob of tissue. Yet medical science tells us otherwise. Three weeks from conception, the heart beats. At 18 weeks the nerve tissue is formed. At 20 weeks, finger-prints exists, giving him his own individual legal identity. A blob of tissue? Hardly.

Abortion is indeed the ultimate in child molestation. If we have chosen to look the other way while this atrocity is taking place daily all across out nation, then our hands are just as bloody as are the hands of the man charged in Milwaukee.

"Choice" is a very powerful, misused word.

Muscle, not money is solution to weedy lots

Midland has more problems than weedy lots! Councilmen Castro and Faircloth, among others, advocate allocating additional monies to solve the "weedy-lot problem" in Midland. We don't need more money. Recently, after the heavy rains, several parks, including Cowden Park, were flooded.

On Friday, July 26, there were between five and eight city vehicles and crews staring at the water in Cowden Park hours before the pumps were activated. Several crews left when neighbors began asking their names and questioning the necessity of them being there.

If Midland has sufficient city workers to have untold numbers standing at the city parks, leaning on shovels watching water, why can't we get the tall grass mowed? Why doesn't Castro, or the whole council, direct the city manager to instruct department heads to divert some of this potential energy to kinetic energy, and harness it to power lawn mowers and sickles? Why can't the city get a day's work for a day's wages from its employees?

MHS fortunate to have Carrens holding reins

I would like to thank and applaud the Midland Independent School District (MISD) board's appointment of Jane Carrens as principal of Midland High School. I taught with Jane at Edison Freshman School, which is now Midland Freshman. Jane is smart, compassionate, perceptive, articulate and immune to discouragement. She will be both tough and caring, open-minded and tenacious, loyal to her teachers and approachable by the community. For any Midlanders who worry that our public schools have abandoned all the "good old days" values and practices, look to Jane Carrens and other former teachers like her who are presently at the reins of the Midland Independent School District.

Now, if only our school children's parents would adopt the same values and practices, both principals' and teachers' jobs would be easier and more effective.

Bed-and-breakfast proposal

Bed-and-breakfast idea is threatening

For the past several years (since the Lancaster Home was demolished) our neighborhood has struggled to maintain it's identity as a central, older, "historic" district.

Having reached this goal less than six months ago, two new, additional "threats" to our integrity have occured.

We co-exist with multiple "institutions" quite peacefully — Museum of the Southwest, Children's Museum, Blakemore Planetarium and Haley Library. All of these places enhance our area and we are proud to be in close proximity to the Sunday night concerts, the famous Haley displays, etcetera.

However, the Skeen Auctions located immediately adjacent to this area, bring in traffic congestion and loud (microphone) noises that can be heard ("Going, going, gone!") four blocks away. Driveways are abstracted, all the alleys and corners are blocked, making it impossible for some of us to travel "J" street even though we live on it.

Additionally, we are now facing a new onslaught of businesses termed "bed and breakfast" establishments. One major lapse in logic seems to have occured both amongst the planners of these institutions and the Planning & Zoning Commission. Those of us who have chosen to live here, raise our children here, and mark the passage of years from our own homes simply do not care for further "enterprises" in our area.

There is an incredibly well organized Central Midland Neighborhood Association, and through our efforts, we have defeated many "suggestions" during the past five years. Examples include Martin Luther King Drive, the United Way campground, and a satellite High Sky Children's Ranch.

Our "home" has been in the family for four generations, and we can confidently speak for many central Midlanders who will oppose both Skeen Auctions and "Bed and Breakfasts."

City doesn't need to change rules

After a series of meetings that I have been called upon to attend — hosted by various neighbors — I have concluded that the majority of residents in my area of town, the Historic District, are seriously opposed to a bed and breakfast designation for this neighborhood.

The residents in our neighborhood are generally united in our views for keeping and maintaining this area as a one family dwelling. We do get a bit weary of always having to appear before the council to defend our position.

The Confederate Air Force celebrations scheduled for October and December sound exciting and we are in complete support of this effort. This occurrence does not, however, mean that the City of Midland should change the inner structure of the neighborhood.

Let individual families take in guests for this wonderful occasion. But do not permanently change the rules.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Sunday, Aug. 4, the 216th day of 1991. There are 149 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On Aug. 4, 1944, Nazi police raided the secret annex of a house in Amsterdam and arrested eight people — including 14-year-old Anne Frank, whose diary, which was published after her death, became a classic depiction of the Holocaust.

On this date:

In 1735, a jury acquitted John Peter Zenger of the New York Weekly Journal of a charge of seditious libel brought by the royal governor of New York.

In 1790, the Coast Guard had its beginnings as a U.S. naval task force known as the Revenue Cutter Service was formed.

In 1830, plans for the city of Chicago were laid out.

In 1892, Sunday school teacher Lizzie Borden was arrested in Fall River, Mass., charged with the hatchet murders of her father and stepmother. (Borden was later acquitted.)

In 1914, Britain declared war on Germany and the United States proclaimed its neutrality in World War I.

Today's birthdays: Britain's Queen Mother Elizabeth is 91. The dean of the White House press corps, Helen Thomas of United Press International, is 71.

Thought for today: "Love is as strong as death; jealousy is as cruel as the grave." — From the Bible, The Song of Solomon, 8:6.

Bush-Gorbachev compatability may mean U.S.-Soviet solidarity

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.
Editor in Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

Hearst

NEW YORK — The mostly successful outcome of the Moscow summit is the promise of a historically momentous new era of close Soviet-American cooperation in coping with global problems of mutual interest, at least as long as Presidents Bush and Gorbachev remain in power.

Thanks for this encouraging prospect are primarily due, in my opinion, to the compatible relationship President Bush cultivated with Mikhail Gorbachev since the Soviet leader facilitated the liberation of Eastern Europe from communist domination and launched his revolutionary reforms in the Soviet Union.

Admiration for Gorbachev's personal and political risks in striving to transform the incompetently managed, world-menacing communist empire from a ruthless totalitarian regime into a civilized nation seems to have led to an empathetic relationship between the superpower leaders.

With the signing of the first treaty to reduce by about 30 percent each nation's strategic nuclear arsenals, there was also talk in Moscow of creating a new global security structure composed of the Soviet Union and the U.S.-led Western allies. Presumably this East-West military pact would, if necessary, use joint military force to block nuclear proliferation in Third World countries and deter aggression that endangered the pact members' vital interests.

The cooperative spirit and warm friendliness that marked the summit talks between the two superpower leaders led Gorbachev to predict that Soviet-American relations will now be based on "solidarity" and "partnership." He was referring to cooperation in coping with such issues as nuclear war deterrence; Western aid to avert economic collapse, civil war and military dictatorship in the Soviet Union, as well as a Middle East peace settlement.

President Bush persuaded Gorbachev to announce joint sponsorship of a Middle East conference in October to try to achieve an Arab-Israeli peace settlement. Gorbachev tried to be helpful by threatening to withhold scheduled resumption of Soviet diplomatic relations with Israel if Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir did not participate in the conference.

The President sent Secretary of State James Baker back to Jerusalem, and last Thursday the secretary finally persuaded the Israeli hardline leader to promise "conditional" Israeli attendance.

Baker obviously hopes that between now and October he will be able to reach a compromise, perhaps by offering the PLO fanatics observer status so they could attend but not be able to veto a settlement agreement that the moderate Palestinians would accept. My hunch is Shamir will attend the conference but there will be no peace settlement in the foreseeable future unless the U.S. guarantees the security of the Jewish nation for a long time.

Not long ago, congressional and media cynics predicted there would be no Moscow summit this summer because of unsettled issues, including verification of nuclear cutbacks.

It is a great tribute to the good relationship President Bush has developed with Gorbachev that so much was achieved at the Moscow summit. They both deserve the Nobel Peace Prize.

Bucs' breakdown continues with 8th straight loss

Associated Press

ST. LOUIS — Todd Zeile led off the 10th inning with a home run and the St. Louis Cardinals sent the Pittsburgh Pirates to their eighth straight loss, 6-5.

NL

The Pirates' losing streak is their worst since a nine-game skid in August 1985. Pittsburgh's lead in the National League East was cut to 4½ games over both St. Louis and New York.

Zeile hit his eighth home run of the season on a 3-1 pitch from Bob Patterson (1-1). Lee Smith (6-2) won with two innings as St. Louis held the Pirates hitless after the sixth inning.

Milt Thompson's leadoff home run in the eighth gave St. Louis a 5-all tie. His third homer came off Bob Kipper, who relieved Doug Drabek to start the seventh.

The Pirates took a 4-2 lead in the fourth on Jose Lind's RBI double and a throwing error by first baseman Gerald Perry, and made it 5-3 in the sixth on Orlando Merced's second double of the game.

St. Louis scored in the sixth after Felix Jose and Thompson led off with singles and Tom Pagnozzi sacrificed. Jose Oquendo followed with a high chopper that bounced over the charging Lind at second base for an RBI single, but shortstop Jay Bell grabbed the loose ball and threw out Thompson at the plate.

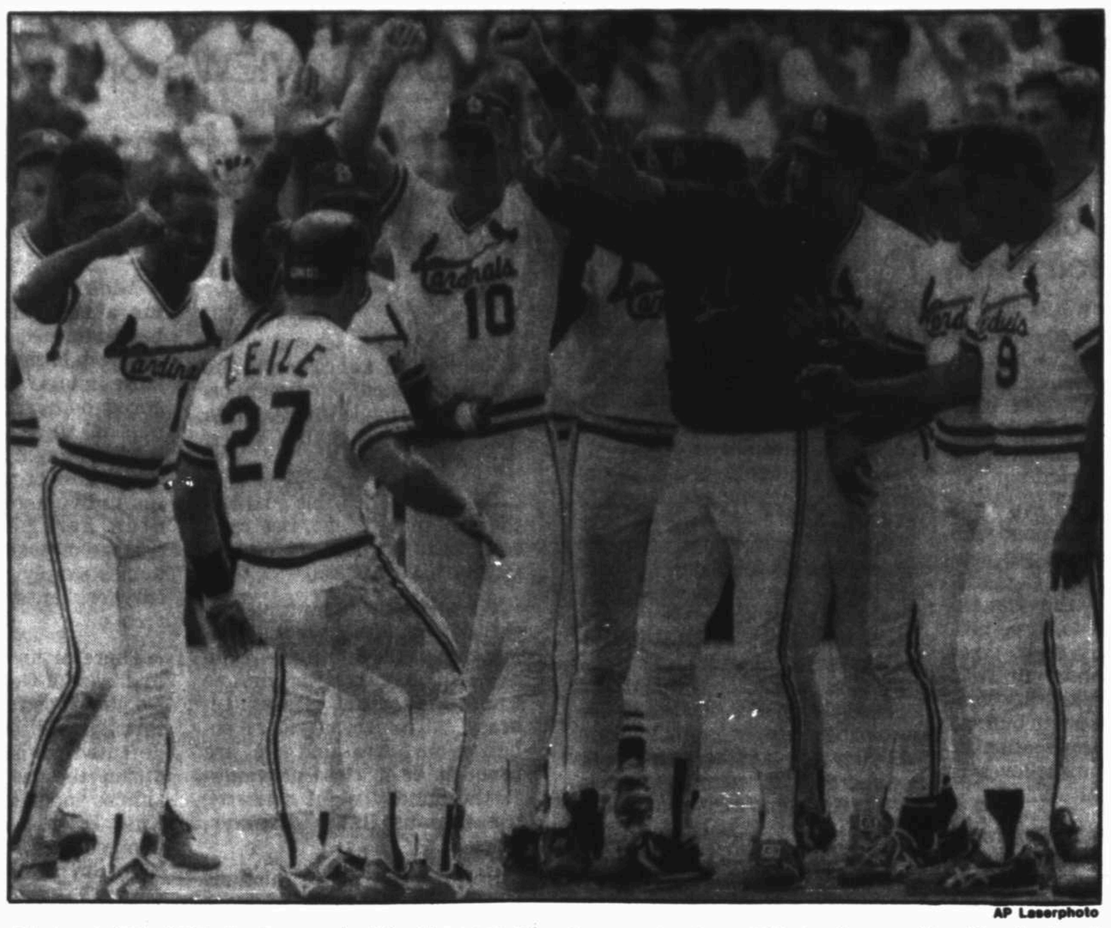

The Cardinals scored an unearned run in the fourth when center fielder Gary Redus bobbled pitcher Bryn Smith's two-out double, allowing Oquendo to score from first base.

Cubs 9, Mets 2

NEW YORK — Chico Walker homered and drove in three runs as the Chicago Cubs again roughed up Frank Viola and routed the New York Mets.

Ryne Sandberg hit his 18th home run and Shawon Dunston hit a pair of sacrifice flies as Viola (11-8) lost this season. He allowed six runs on seven hits.

The Mets have lost four in a row and nine of 11. They dropped behind St. Louis into third place in the National League East, five games in back of his fifth straight decision to the Cubs. Viola is 1-6 lifetime against Chicago, including 0-4 at Shea Stadium.

AP Laserphoto

St. Louis' Todd Zeile is greeted by throngs of teammates after hitting a game-winning homer in the 10th inning as the Cards beat the Pirates.

Giants 7, Reds 3

CINCINNATI — Will Clark, Kevin Mitchell, Matt Williams and Kevin Bass all homered off Jack Armstrong as the San Francisco Giants beat the Cincinnati Reds for their 12th victory in 13 games.

The Giants, who had their 11-game winning streak snapped by the Reds on Friday, have also won 15 of their last 19. The Reds have lost 17 of their last 23 games.

John Burkett (8-5) shut out Cincinnati for five innings before giving up three runs in the sixth. Burkett left after seven innigns giving up three runs and nine hits. Francisco Oliveras and Dave Righetti each pitched an inning.

Cincinnati manager Lou Piniella was ejected in the eighth inning when Bill Doran's apparent homer down the right-field line was ruled foul by home plate umpire Gary Darling after first base umpire Dutch Rennert had called it fair.

Padres 3, Braves 2

ATLANTA — Larry Andersen escaped a bases-loaded, no-out jam in the ninth inning and the San Diego Padres held off the Atlanta Braves.

Andy Benes pitched six no-hit innings, helped by an official scorer's change, and the Padres took a 3-1 lead into the ninth. But the Braves, held to one hit — Ron Gant's homer in the eighth — rallied against reliever Craig Lefferts.

Greg Olson, pinch hitter Lonnie Smith, Otis Nixon and Mark Lemke opened the ninth with consecutive singles, making it 3-2 and leaving the bases loaded. Andersen, however, took over and got out of trouble by retiring Terry Pendleton on a force play at the plate, getting Gant on a popup and striking out Tommy Gregg.

Astros 2, Dodgers 1

HOUSTON — Rafael Ramirez got the winning hit off John Candelaria for the second straight game, this time with a pinch-single in the 10th inning that led the Houston Astros over the Los Angeles Dodgers.

Ramirez, who doubled home the winning run against Candelaria in the ninth inning Friday night, singled with the bases loaded to give Houston its season-high sixth straight victory.

Phillies 7, Expos 1

MONTREAL — Tommy Greene, who no-hit Montreal at Olympic Stadium in May, pitched seven shutout innings Saturday, and Dale Murphy moved into 25th place on the all-time home run list as the Philadelphia Phillies beat the Expos.

Greene (8-4) gave up six hits in beating Montreal for the third time in as many games this season.

ANGELS: Series continues tonight

(From 1B)

Williams' broken-bat bloop allowed Gonzales to score the insurance run that made it 8-6.

"We've had our backs to the wall a lot of games and we just keep fighting," Williams said.

"But you've got to beat us all night if you want to win. That's the key because we know what it takes to win. I think down the stretch we're going to be all right."

Williams, like Billmeyer, had three hits as the Angels outhit the Wranglers 14-11. Tim Salmon and Williams led the RBI parade with two each.

Wichita, which fell victim to a rather unusual double play in the top of the fifth, dropped to 18-21, last in the West.

With Wranglers on first and second and only one out in the fifth, Brian Cisarik hit a ground ball toward Midland second baseman Ed Alfonzo. Alfonzo's through to Easley forced Darrell Sherman at second, but the relay to first base was in the dirt and got by Barbara.

But the ball hit the concrete in front of the Wrangler dugout and bounced directly back to the Angel first basemen, who then fired a strike to the plate where Billmeyer nailed a sliding Luis Lopez to end the inning.

ANGEL DUST: Game 2 of the five-game series begins at 6 p.m. today.

The Angels, who dropped 4-of-5 on their swing through Tulsa, rebounded to take 3-of-5 at Shreveport and now stand 4-2 in their previous six games.

Rookie surpasses vets at Buick

Marco Dawson's holds two stroke lead over Nick Faldo

Associated Press

PGA

GRAND BLANC, Mich. — Marco Dawson, a rookie on the PGA Tour, played like a veteran to take the third-round lead in the Buick Open on Saturday.

Dawson, playing ahead of some of golf's biggest names, shot 64 for a total of 200, 16-under-par, and a two-shot lead over Nick Faldo and defending champion Chip Beck.

Faldo, winner of two British Opens and two Masters championships, had a bogey on the final hole for a 65. Beck, who hasn't made bogey in 54 holes, shot 68.

Second-round leader Greg Norman, Bill Britton and Howard Twitty were at 203, one stroke ahead of Hal Sutton, Tim Simpson, Gene Sauers and Lee Janzen.

Dawson earned his Tour card by finishing 23rd at the 1990 qualifying school, his fourth try. He started the third round four shots behind Norman.

Four birdies on the front got the 27-year-old Dawson to 12-under. On the back he birdied the 13th and 14th holes to go 14-under.

Dawson had decided not to look at the electronic scoreboards around the course, so he didn't know that Faldo had taken a bogey on the last hole to finish at 14-under.

Still, Dawson pumped his fist after rolling in a 10-foot birdie putt on the par-3 17th to take the lead.

Proving the run wasn't a fluke, Dawson sank a 15-footer on the 18th to give himself some breathing room, until Sunday at least.

Faldo began the third round five shots off the lead. He started strong, making birdie on the first hole and added three more birdies before the turn. Faldo birdied three of the first four holes on the back side to get to 14-under.

With the scoreboards showing that Norman was struggling, Faldo pressed the attack. A birdie at the par-5 16th got him to 15-under. But his attempt to save par from a greenside bunker on No. 18 failed when his 5-foot putt slid by the hole. It was Faldo's only bogey of the round and just his fourth of the tournament.

Norman, who led Scott Hoch by one at 12-under 132 after two rounds, birdied the first and fourth holes. But bogeys at the par-3 eighth and par-4 10th dropped him back to even for the day. He birdied No. 11 but gave that back with bogey at No. 14.

Norman birdied the 17th to settle for 71 for the day.

Britton, who grew up playing the public courses of Staten Island, N.Y., shot 65 to go 13-under.

With $25,000, Jacobsen leads Canadian Skins

BRAMPTON, Ontario (AP) — Peter Jacobsen's first appearance in the Cadillac Golf Classic proved to be profitable Saturday as he emerged as the first-round leader with $25,000 in prize money.

Fuzzy Zoeller won $15,000 and Dave Barr and Arnold Palmer $10,000 each in the $200,000 skins format event, which also offers a potential $800,000 in hole-in-one bonus money.

Inkster's confidence high at LPGA event

Associated Press

VIENNA, Ohio — Juli Inkster's feeling like she's going to win, and that's a bad feeling for the rest of the field entering the final round of the Phar-Mor in Youngstown.

"I feel like I'm not going to lose," Inkster said Saturday after shooting a second-round 65 — lowest round of the day — for a three-stroke lead with 18 holes left at Squaw Creek Country Club.

Inkster, who has won 14 tournaments in nine years on Tour, hadn't won since 1989 before taking the LPGA Bay State Classic last week. During the drought, she took time off to give birth to a daughter, Hayley, born Feb. 4, 1990.

"Golf is 99 percent confidence," Inkster said. "Winning last week took a big load off of my shoulders. I feel like my golf game's back. Even if I don't win, I know I'm playing well. And in golf, that's what you've got to do. You've just got to grab it."

Pat Bradley, who fired her second consecutive 69 to share second place with first-round leader Danielle Ammaccapane, said she should have known Inkster would make a run.

"I read in the papers where she said this course didn't suit her game," Bradley said with a laugh. "She's making a liar of herself. You've got to beware of the ones who complain."

Still, Inkster wasn't filling out a deposit slip for the $75,000 first-place check just yet.

"Everybody's going to expect me to go out there and light it on fire again," she said. "I've just got to play my game: hit the ball in the fairway and on the green. Somebody can be in the same position I was in today and can come out and shoot a 67 or 66 or 65. ...

"I can't worry about other people. I've got to worry about what I'm doing and try not to give it away, make them earn it."

Bradley already had her strategy mapped out.

"With Julie so hot, you've got to try to come out quick and let her know you're around," she said.

Tied at 6-under and three shots back were first-round leader Danielle Ammaccapane, who followed an opening 66 with an even-par 72, and Pat Bradley, who shot her second consecutive 69.

Inkster's sand wedge was the backbone to her round.

Archer, Laoretti tied at Seniors

Associated Press

JERICHO, N.Y. — George Archer, the defending champion, shot a 5-under-par 67 Saturday, to tie Larry Laoretti for the lead after 36 holes of the Northville Long Island Classic. They have two-round totals of 135 in the Senior Tour event.

Laoretti, in a three-way tie for first place with Jim Colbert and Homero Blancas after the first round, had an eagle on the par-5, 505-yard opening hole en route to a 68.

Colbert, who had a 71, dropped into a five-way tie for third at 138 with J.C. Snead, 69; Dick Hendrickson, 68; Bob Charles, 70 and Jim Dent, also 70.

Blancas zoomed to a 76 for 143 on the par 72, 6,655-yard course.

Chi Chi Rodriguez, who has four victories on the Senior Tour this year, had 71 for 142.

According to the American Cancer Society, one out of ten women in the United States will develop breast cancer sometime in her lifetime. It is currently estimated that over 37,000 women die each year as the result of breast cancer.

Ninety percent of breast cancers are diagnosed by women or their physicians finding a lump in the breast. Women who are diagnosed with a lump large enough to feel have a 50 percent five year survival rate. A woman who is diagnosed as having breast cancer by mammography, before a lump can be felt, has a 97% five year survival rate and a 90% 10 year survival rate.

A mammogram can detect a cancer this small, ● even before it can be felt.

Guidelines For Screening Mammography Established by the American Cancer Society.

I. 35-40 years of age - One baseline mammogram.

II. 40-50 years of age - A mammogram every 1-2 years depending on breast type and risk factor.

III. 50 years of age and over - An annual physical examination and annual mammogram.

IV. Asymptomatic women under 50 years of age with significant high risk factors should be examined at appropriate intervals. These risk factors include previous breast cancer and family history of cancer.

V. A symptomatic woman should have a mammogram at any age when she experiences a mass, nipple discharge, skin changes or unexplained breast pain.

A screening mammogram is an x-ray of the breast using extremely low dosages of radiation (usually comparable to dental x-rays) and is designed to find very early cancers.

A female technologist who is highly trained in mammography will perform the examination.

The charge for the screening mammogram is $45.00. The Unit accepts cash, check, Visa, Mastercard and American Express.

MEN: Seven within five strokes

so they all even out.

"Of course, when it's all over and if I lose by one stroke, then I'll think about it," he said.

Bryan, who switched putters during this past college season at Abilene Christian, was relatively pleased after improving his opening-round 72 by five strokes. His 67 Saturday very well could have positioned him for a repeat.

"I just wanted to go out and play solid golf and stay out of trouble. Today I missed only one or two greens and I made the putts I needed to make," he said.

"It's awful bunched up at the top and there are four or five people who can come up there and win it. I'll have a chance if I do the same things I did today and make a couple of more putts."

Four strokes back are Harry Bettis and Benton Spradlin at even par 141s, while Jeff Moses, Mac McGee and Arthur Brown are bunched at 1 over.

Spradlin and Brown were tied for the lead with Whiteside after Friday, but Saturday saw Spradlin laboring to get out of the rough and Brown's usually consistent putter abandon him.

Spradlin's hooking drives gave him plenty opportunity to display his long-grass hitting ability, but also cost him two bogeys on the back nine as he finished the day at 73. Brown sturdily made his tee and second shots, but found his woes in yippily putting to a 74.

Mark Gonzalez, who shot a 69 Friday, was even more lightning-struck, as his monster drives could not save him from a round of 78.

Still, Baker confirmed Bryan's assertion that the tournament is still wide open, with one caveat — the consistent Whiteside, who shot 67-67-67 in '88, will be hard to beat.

"Somebody will get hot tomorrow (today) and might get past ol' Steve. Larry's playing well and I made some putts today. But Steve's going to be tough to beat," Baker said.

Here are the results from Saturday's round of the Midland Men's City Golf Championship. Saturday's play was the second round for the championship flight, and the first round for all other flights (holes 1-18, par 70):

Championship Flight: Steve Whiteside, 68-69—137 (-4); Larry Bryan, 72-67—139 (-2); Bill Baker, 71-68—139 (-2); Harry Battis 70-71—141 (even); Benton Spradlin 68-73—141 (even); Jeff Moses, 72-70—142 (+1); Mac McGee, 72-70—142 (+1); Arthur Brown, 68-74—142 (+1); Mike Voight, 71-72—143 (+2); Doyce Haney, 70-73—143 (+2); Wayne Youngs, 72-73—145 (+4); Burl Fuller, 73-72—145 (+4); Ty Kretzinger, 74-71—145 (+4); Greg Frazier, 73-73—146 (+5); Mike Johnson, 73-73—146 (+5); Mark Gonzalez, 69-78—147 (+6); Charles Roberts, 77-70—147 (+6); Bob Fedro, 75-73—148 (+7); Frank Tryon, 74-74—148 (+7); Mark Smith, 74-78—152 (+11); Rolly Hughes, 78-74—152 (+11); Bob Kahnk, 78-75—153 (+12); Mike Fain, 78-76—154 (+13); Randy Scharfenberg, 78-77—155 (+14); Kris Doan, 81-76—157 (+16); Matt Manulik, 79-78—157 (+16); Steve Scott, 80-77—157 (+16); J.J. County fights bugs with bugs

Midland County worker Ernie Alcantara sprinkles green lacewing larvae, mixed with rice chaff, onto a pecan trees in hopes that the lacewings will attack aphids that suck sap from trees and cause them to be less productive. Bill Decker, Midland County's facility management director, right, holds and aphid-infested leaf and a cupful of lacewings.

Curt Wilcott/Reporter-Telegram

■ Green lacewing larvae being used to combat aphids that are 'stressing out' Midland County Courthouse pecan trees.

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

The green lacewing has taken up natural arms with the ladybug and the praying mantis in attacking villainous insects in fields and orchards.

And around the Midland County Courthouse, about 10,000 lacewing larvae have been scattered in pecan and live oak trees as an experiment to combat "bad bugs," the aphids.

The lacewings' role is twofold: to help control the pesky aphids, and to cut down on the sweet honeydew, the aphids' bothersome droppings, which stick to things, such as cars parked under aphid-infested trees.

Aphids attack leaves by attaching to the phloem cells and draining the tree of much of its life-sustaining sap.

"It can stress out the trees, and when you stress out trees" like pecans, noted Bill Decker, Midland County's facility management director, "they won't produce the quality nuts" that healthy trees normally produce.

The idea of experimenting with lacewings to control aphids instead of spraying the courthouse trees with insecticides, which destroy both "good" and "bad" insects, came about after Decker had asked Debbie Benge, Texas Agricultural Extension Service entomologist, "about biological control versus insecticides."

"She researched it and came up with lacewings."

The "lace" in the insect's name comes from its two pairs of delicately transparent wings. The adult insect, which, at rest, is slightly more than half an inch long from mouthpart to wing tip, has a green body and

Texas voters to decide on amendments

AUSTIN (AP) — A constitutional amendment election looms Saturday, with voters being asked to allow homestead exemptions from property taxes to continue under the state's new educational funding system.

A second amendment on the ballot would allow bonds to be issued to raise money for loans to students at state colleges and universities.

In Proposition No. 1, voters are asked to approve homestead exemptions under the new countywide education taxing districts. Three related questions address how the exemption would be applied in the local district.

"The passage of Proposition 1 can mean hundreds of thousands of dollars in property tax savings to homeowners," said Sen. Gene Green, D-Houston, sponsor of the proposal.

But business interests say the proposal could mean a heavier property tax burden for them in some areas.

The amendment is required because the state's new school finance law created education taxing regions for school districts, drawn largely along county lines.

A property tax will be imposed in the countywide regions, and revenue will be divided among the school districts in each region. The local school districts also may levy an additional tax to enrich programs or build classrooms.

The countywide tax will be an effective 72 cents per $100 property value in the upcoming school year, assuming the new law withstands a legal challenge from property-rich school districts.

■ Local concerns expressed/1A

The proposed constitutional amendment would allow voters to exempt part of a home's market value from the 72-cent tax.

The exemptions would be similar to those school district boards now may allow, on top of mandatory statewide property tax exemptions.

In 1990, 267 of 1,052 Texas school districts granted optional exemptions to all of their resident homeowners in 1990, according to the House Research Organization. Most granted a 20 percent exemption on each homestead's value.

In 186 school districts, elderly and disabled homeowners got additional exemptions. Most got exemptions of $10,000 or less.

The exemptions amounted to $15 billion and affected more than 1 million homeowners, the House Research Organization said.

Besides the proposed constitutional amendment, the local ballot also contains proposals to specify that the local exemption for homeowners would be 20 percent of a residence's market value (Midland-Andrews CED Proposition No. 2), and another $10,000 for someone who is elderly or disabled (Midland-Andrews CED Proposition No. 3).

Another proposal (Midland-Andrews CED Proposition No. 1) would allow districts to tax tangible personal property, such as boats, cars and motorcycles.

The last proposal has raised con-

8th National Night Out Against Crime set for Tuesday

Staff Report

Midland residents are asked to let everyone know how they feel about crime this Tuesday evening during the eighth annual National Night Out Against Crime.

Every year, Neighborhood Watch Groups are encouraged to get together and meet their neighbors on this night as a symbolic gesture against criminals. Patrol officers are also expected to meet groups taking part in the activities.

According to law enforcement officials, the night out is an effort to make people aware of what's going on in their neighborhood. Knowing one's neighbor makes people more aware of suspicious activity next door or across the street — the theory behind Neighborhood Watch programs.

"A lot of times people say they saw something that looked funny but didn't report it," said Joan Lewellen, president of the Midland Crime Prevention Commission.

But it's better to be safe, she said. "We'd rather have you call the police than let something go by," Ms. Lewellen said.

Neighborhood Watch Groups wanting to participate in the National Night Out or citizens interested in forming a watch group can call the Community Relations Unit of the Midland Police Department at 685-7130 or 685-7131 for information.

New city park to have room for cruising

By Debbie Lincecum
Staff Writer

The Midland Community Services Department is working on a new park officials say should meet critical needs on the city's east side — wide open spaces, youth baseball fields and room to cruise.

"What we don't have on the east side is any large, open space for people to go," said George Logan, director of community services.

The park, planned on 63 acres south of the intersection of Fairgrounds and Golf Course roads, should include picnic areas, covered pavilions and four baseball fields, Logan said. The fields, to be built by the Midland Junior Baseball Association, are expected to meet a continuing critical need for that group, said member James Stanton.

"We're hoping to have two available next summer, because we're out of places for teen-agers to play," he said.

Cruising is another important aspect of the park's future, Logan said. A mile-long roadway planned to encircle the park will include access from four corners, and is hoped to prevent disruption of traffic in the surrounding areas while allowing cruisers to carry on their tradition.

"You'll be able to come in on Fairgrounds Road and enter a two-lane (park) road," he explained. "It's going to be wider than at Hogan, and we think it will be safer. At Hogan, there's no circulation."

The plan was a combined effort of several city departments including the police, traffic control and engineering, said Chuck Swallow, assistant director of community services.

"There are a lot of things going on here," he said. Although the park construction was initiated by the baseball association's need, its planned location and facilities should serve a large group of eastside residents, Swallow said.

"We really saw how this would fit well into the community master plan and went with it. It's a great project," he said.

A city worker clears the site of a new park planned at the intersection of Fairgrounds and Golf Course roads. The park will feature baseball fields, picnic areas and a mile-long roadway for cruising, according to George Logan, director of community services.

Its construction also fits well with some recommendations of the Eastside Economic Development Task Force, Logan said.

GARY OTT

Parents shouldn't take blame for children's failures

"You know who I really feel sorry for?" A friend, who was reading the paper, had directed the question at me.

Ott

I shrugged, took another sip of my coffee, and went back to watching a news special on Pee-wee Herman.

"I'm serious," the friend said, impatiently. Her tone of voice made it quite clear I was supposed to give her my undivided attention and act interested in what she was saying.

So I did. Sorta.

"Who do you feel sorry for?" I asked, glancing ever-so-slightly at the TV program.

"Jeffrey Dahmer's mother."

Who? My mind was still on Pee-wee Herman and his embarrassing problems.

"Jeffrey Dahmer's mother." Her impatience was about to erupt. "The guy from Milwaukee who killed all those people."

"Oh, that Jeffrey Dahmer," I said.

Now that we were focused on the same subject we officially began our conversation.

"My heart just bleeds for his poor parents," the woman said. "Can you imagine what they must be going through?"

She had a point. Parents love to brag about their children. An old family friend will bump into the parents at a cocktail party and say, "How's Robert doing these days?"

And the mother will beam and reply, "Oh, he's working on his master's right now. His father and I are hoping he will join a firm on the East Coast next spring."

Then everyone laughs and recalls what a "good boy" Robert was.

Unfortunately, the Dahmers won't get to do that at their next cocktail party.

Yeah, you've got to pity Mr. and Mrs. Dahmer. No matter what kind of parents they were, they don't deserve this. No one does.

Just think of the questions that must be going through their minds?

■ Where did we go wrong?

■ What could we have done differently?

■ Is it all our fault?

On and on it goes. Parents tend to blame themselves for their children's failures.

They shouldn't. You do the best you can during the growing up years and then at some point the child becomes responsible for his own actions. Obviously, some parents are better than others, but it is too easy to hear about this kind of tragedy and say, "He must have had a traumatic childhood."

I don't care how "traumatic" his childhood was, you don't go around cutting up bodies and eating human hearts. Anybody knows that. You can't blame it on the parents.

And for that matter, you can't totally blame the Milwaukee Police Department, the various social agencies that didn't catch the problem fast enough or even society as a whole.

It's convenient to say, "Somebody should have done something about this before it got out of hand." And in a perfect world, you would be right.

But this isn't a perfect world. There are a lot of nuts out there and I, for one, don't want police officers kicking down doors every time there's a foul odor coming from someone's apartment.

But I digress.

We're talking about feeling sorry for the parents here.

I can't help but worry about their well-being. How are they holding up? Will they ever be able to put this behind them and live a normal life?

I doubt it.

You're probably thinking, "But what about the victims' families? Don't you feel sorry for them, too?"

Of course, I do. We all do.

But in a strange sort of way I consider Mr. and Mrs. Dahmer to be victims, as well. They have been branded. For the rest of their lives they will be known as the parents of that "crazy guy in Milwaukee."

In effect, they have been robbed of every parent's greatest thrill.

They can never brag on their son again.

VOTE: Amendment election Saturday

(From 1C)

cern, said Patti Clapp, president of the Texas Association of School Boards.

"Opponents are wary of this authority because of the inability to appraise personal property and the difficulty of accessing and collecting taxes on personal items," Ms. Clapp said.

"Observers believe the administration of such a tax would cost many (county education districts) more than they would gain in revenue," she said.

Rep. Paul Colbert, a Houston Democrat and sponsor of the proposed amendment, said he isn't advocating the personal property tax. But he said it was included because some school districts use the levy.

Ninety school districts last year taxed non-income producing personal property, according to the House Research Organization.

If the constitutional amendment passes, and if local voters endorse exemptions, the effect on county education districts would vary.

Homeowners that now get exemptions would save them, although the amount might be different than it currently is.

If the district's tax base includes only residences, and it must grant new exemptions, it simply would raise the posted property tax rate to make up the money it needs, Colbert said. Homeowners overall would not get a tax break.

Homeowners would pay less if they get new exemptions and if the district includes businesses and other taxable property besides homesteads.

The business-based Texas Association of Taxpayers and the Texas Association of Business have not taken positions on the ballot proposal, spokesmen said.

But Bill Allaway, executive vice president of the Texas Association of Taxpayers, said his group opposed the measure when it passed the Legislature "because we're believers in the broadest possible tax bases at the lowest possible rates."

Brad Gahm, vice president of governmental affairs for the Texas Association of Business, said the proposals "obviously can have an impact on business, if there is a shifting of the tax burden."

He said it was difficult to assess the impact statewide.

The second amendment would authorize up to $300 million in general obligation bonds to pay for loans to Texas students attending state colleges and universities.

Harry Reasoner, chairman of the Texas Higher Education Coordinating Board, said the proposal is crucial to students who need financial aid.

"Without approval of Proposition 2, we will soon exhaust the funds we have available under the Hinson-Hazlewood College Student Loan Program to help students pay for college," he said.

"In recent months, we've had to temporarily suspend making new loans to middle-income students to make sure we had funds to loan to low-income students," Reasoner said.

Gahm sounded a cautious note: "Texans ought to be concerned about the total bonded indebtedness of the state." That total stands at $7.4 billion, according to the state comptroller's office.

golden bronze eyes.

The lacewings' larvae are the aphids' enemy.

Much tinier than the flying insect, the hairy-legged larvae are hungry organisms with sickle-shaped blood-sucking mouthparts to better "do in" their prey, the aphids.

And it's for good cause.

"It's possible that enough aphids could stress the tree to the point that it could be (adversely) affected by other parasites, fungi and other diseases," Decker said.

Lacewings are plentiful in alfalfa and cotton fields where they bite into the greenish and plump aphids, which feed on plant juices by way of tubes in their mouths.

The flying adult lacewings are mostly non-predacious. Their role is mating and laying eggs, which turn into bloodsucking larvae.

Ms. Benge, TAEX entomologist for Midland and Ector counties, had located the lacewing larvae in Las Cruces, N.M., at the Arnold Brothers bug operation.

And, at $50 a lot, she and Decker decided to try a batch of the larvae on the courthouse trees.

"It's also economical," Ms. Benge said, if the lacewings, indeed, do adopt the trees for their homes and zero in on the honeydew-dropping aphids.

Last week, a $50 batch of 10,000 lacewing larvae was spread over a dozen trees around the courthouse.

"It's economical if it works," said Decker.

The cost of treating a tree with aphid-killing insecticides is $25 to $50 per tree, Decker said.

The environmentally safe lacewing approach appealed to Decker, who was willing to give the friendly insect a chance at making inroads into the aphid population.

Charles Allen, a Fort Stockton-based TAEX district entomologist who is experimenting with lacewings in West Texas, noted that the aphid population was reduced 50 percent in a recent lacewing trial in Crane County.

In controlling aphids that attack pecan trees, Allen noted that biological control was selected over insecticides due to the lessening effectiveness of poisons to control detrimental insects.

"One of the big problems with insecticides in pecan trees is that the yellow-pecan aphid is resistant to practically every insecticide we've got," Allen said. "Its population has become resistant."

As a result, he said, biological control is about the only option left to control aphids in pecan trees.

"Biological control is a good way to go," Allen said.

But unlike effective insecticides, which can "clean out" a population of detrimental insects, biological control, such as with the predacious lacewings, doesn't knock out all of the undesirable insects.

"You leave a bunch behind," Allen said. "You do what you can do."

CITY: Drivers can cruise

The site, purchased last year by the city of Midland, had been planned for an industrial park, but was being used as an illegal dumping ground, Swallow said.

"I feel like we're taking care of a lot of problems at once and making this into a place people will want to go," he said.

"I see this as serving the whole east side," Logan said. He and Swallow said they hope it can be ready for use within two years, but timing depends on funding. The department has requested $650,000 in Community Development Block Grants to construct the park, $105,000 of which they hope to get in the next budget year.

Council member John Castro, a supporter of the new park, said the council has not decided how to fund the first installment of park construction.

"I'd like to see a combination of general fund (money) and CDBG," Castro said.

The park's fate, although still uncertain, looks positive, he said.

"It's mainly a question of what bucket the money's going to come out of," Castro said.

Final approval of funding for the coming budget year should take place later this month or in early September.

Alligator grabs young swimmer

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — Game wardens on Saturday searched Mission River in Refugio County for a 9- to 10-foot alligator that grabbed an 8-year-old Corpus Christi boy who was swimming.

Brandon Herndon was treated Friday night at a Refugio hospital for bites to his left elbow and wrist and right knee and ankle. No stitches were required.

Chris Stapleton, who lives next to the boy's aunt, said she was on her porch, watching him swim when she saw what she thought was a log pop up behind him.

"Then it dawned on me that it wasn't a log, and I started screaming," she said.

His aunt, Vernell Waldrop, waded into the water to pull him out while Mrs. Stapleton's husband, Bob, fired a .22-caliber rifle at the reptile.

Sharon Herndon credits the life jacket Brandon was wearing with saving her son's life.

"I guess the alligator couldn't get a good hold on him" because of the bulky jacket, she said. "It kept him up. The alligator had a hard time getting to him."

Texas Parks and Wildlife employees searched the river for any sign of the reptile but found nothing.

Highway construction scheduled

Staff Report

New construction is scheduled to begin this week in Interstate 20, according to the State Department of Highways and Public Transportation.

Parks and Recreation Department operates 4 pools

By Lynn Miller

Hot summer days are here and one popular method for cooling off is a refreshing dip in the sparkling, cool waters of a nearby swimming pool.

The city of Midland Parks and Recreation Department offer four pools for enjoyment during the summer months.

The Doug Russell Pool, at 900 N. Midland Drive, is the largest swimming pool in Midland and is open to the public from 2-7 p.m. daily through Sept. 2. Admission is 80 cents for those under age 19 and $1.70 for adults.

Family Night is each Tuesday and Thursday from 5-8 p.m. at Doug Russell Pool, with special rates of $2.25 for a family of up to five members. Additional members are charged 50 cents each.

Several programs are offered at the pool, including the Adult Lap Swim from noon-1 p.m. and from 5-7 p.m. during the summer months for a fee of $30. For adults who swim only during the noon hour, the fee is $20.

Swim lessons and "Learn to Dive" lessons for children are given Monday through Friday for a cost of $20 for a two-week session.

For children who know how to swim, but wish to improve their strokes or learn new ones, a summer swim league is offered at the Doug Russell Pool, for a cost of $15.

Ulmer Pool, located at 2800 W. Kentucky (across from the baseball diamond), is open daily except Wednesday until Aug. 12.

An ideal setting for an afternoon picnic is the city park located around Washington Pool at 1602 E. Indiana. The pool is open Tuesday through Saturday until Aug. 13.

Halff Pool, located at 100 E. New Jersey, is one of the less-crowded city pools and is open Sunday through Thursday until Aug. 12.

Ulmer, Washington and Halff Pools open at 1 p.m. The fee at these pools for individuals under 19 is 60 cents, with a fee of $1.25 for adults. From 5-7 p.m. each day, up to five family members may swim for $1.70.

These three pools also have summer swim leagues which practice between noon and 1 p.m., four days a week and participate in weekly dual swim meets. The cost to join the Summer League is $2.50.

Any of the four city pools are available to be rented for private parties. To register for programs or obtain additional information, contact the pool manager at any of the pools, or call 687-5560.

Panhandle population

Small West Texas towns becoming ghost towns

■ With downturn in farming, ranching and petroleum industries, many residents move to bigger cities to make a living.

By Chip Brown

SPUR (AP) — Folks in this tiny West Texas town are always quick to help a friend.

Rick Saunders, manager of United Sewing Agency Inc., in Spur, recalls the day this summer when he was desperately seeking a trailer to rush a shipment of garments to Dallas.

Albert Garcia, a local heating and air conditioning contractor, overheard Saunders' inquiry and promptly loaned him a trailer without charge.

Saunders, who had just recently moved to Spur from Dallas to supervise the sewing agency, was flabbergasted.

"He didn't even know me," Saunders said. "But he didn't hesitate to loan me the trailer. You would never see that kind of openness in the big city. I have never met a nicer bunch of people."

GARCIA SHRUGS and says sharing and helping out among local businesses is "simply a way of life out here."

Small agriculture towns like Spur are spread across the vast pancake-like plains of West Texas and they have long worked together to make life better for the residents who work in the saloon-style shops lining main street.

But the latest census figures show many of the towns are fighting a losing battle to keep those dusty main streets from becoming a ghost town.

The West Texas counties of Hall, Hemphill and Dickens are among only a handful of counties nationwide that lost more than 25 percent of their population from 1980 to 1990, according to last year's census.

Hall County, which is located in the eastern Texas Panhandle, dropped from 5,594 residents in 1980 to 3,905 in 1990, a 30.2 percent decrease.

Hemphill County, also in the eastern Panhandle near the Oklahoma border, fell 29.9 percent from 5,304 residents to 3,720.

AND DICKENS County, which houses Spur on the Texas High Plains, had 2,571 residents last year as opposed to 3,539 in 1980, a 27.4 percent drop.

Garcia would love to think that the fringe benefits of lending a hand among businesses would be enough to bring more industry to a small town. But he knows better.

'Most of our loss occurred right after 1986, when the price of oil went from about $40 a barrel to around $10. We had every house full and trailers all over the place during the boom of the late '70s and early '80s. Our population will come back when the natural gas prices come back. It's just a matter of time. The people still here were the ones who were here before the boom.'

— Micah Lewis, mayor of Canadian

"We are going down fast," said Garcia, who can recall when Spur, a town of 1,300, once had two movie houses, four car dealerships and a farm equipment outlet store. All have since vanished.

Increasing production costs and several years of only moderate yields have caused many family farms in Dickens County to shut down. And children of the families who continue to farm aren't as willing to take the risk in a slow economy.

"Kids growing up here have to go to a bigger city to make a living," said Spur Mayor Glen Williams. "The largest part of our industry is farming and ranching and there aren't too many family farms going great guns. Fewer and fewer are doing it.

"Once we lose those kids it's tough to get them back."

FEWER THAN 500 people live in Dickens, the county seat. Two liquor stores, a small grocery market and a gas station "are all that are keeping the city from blowing away," said Bill Scott, Dickens' 70-year-old mayor.

The roughly $2,000 a month sales tax created by the local merchants keeps the city running, Scott said.

Dickens County Sheriff Doyle King said tough economic times have left the town with a population of elderly residents who have chosen to return home to retire.

"The older ones are not having kids and we are burying sometimes two a week," King said. "We are dying and not being replaced."

Micah Lewis, the mayor of Canadian, the Hemphill County seat, attributes the population loss to depressed oil and natural gas markets. Hemphill County is among the top 10 natural gas producing counties in the state.

"Most of our loss occurred right after 1986, when the price of oil went from about $40 a barrel to around $10," Lewis said. "We had every house full and trailers all over the place during the boom of the late '70s and early '80s.

"OUR POPULATION will come back when the natural gas prices come back. It's just a matter of time. The people still here were the ones who were here before the boom."

In Hall County, officials have set up a tax abatement program to help lure new industry.

But Homer Tucker, mayor of Memphis, the Hall County seat, said it's increasingly more difficult to get businesses to look at a small town for relocation.

"We have several different grants and loan programs available, but getting industry to consider a small town has been a big problem," Tucker said. "A lot of them want to locate in the big metro areas because that is where their markets are."

David Morris, who spent 20 years helping develop Third World economies across the globe and currently heads the economic development board in Fisher County, says small agricultural towns cannot compete with the big cities for industry.

"Most small agriculture communities are beating their brains out competing with Dallas and Fort Worth for industry when they don't have the manpower or know-how to handle it," Morris said.

MORRIS SAID smaller towns should concentrate on becoming retirement havens.

"Areas with good medical facilities have the opportunity to recycle the elderly by bringing them to the pastoral life of rural Texas," Morris said. "Creating a sizable retirement community would then bring other smaller industry with it."

Spur Mayor Williams knows the next 10 years will be difficult, whether trying to attract industry or more retirees.

"We will survive," Williams said. "We may not make it as well as we would like to, but we will survive because that is part of the Texas spirit."

AP Laserphoto

Spur Mayor Glen Williams, posing at the town's city limits, said young people can't make a living at farming, so they are moving to the big cities. West Texas counties like Dickens, Hall and Hemphill are among nine counties nationwide that lost more than 25 percent of their population over the past 10 years, according to the 1990 census.

So How Do I Pay For It?

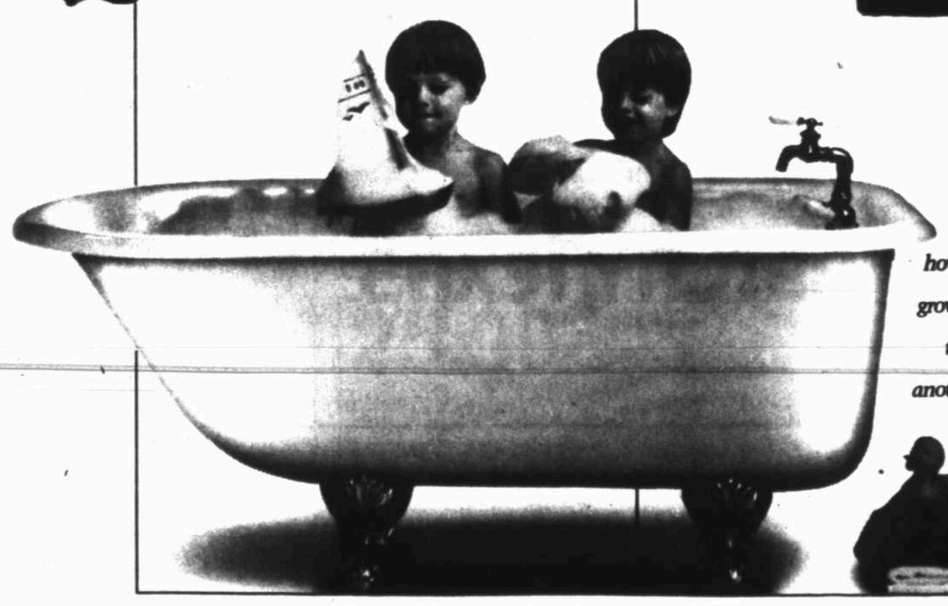

What a great idea! It'll brighten up the entire hallway. I love the shape. And it'll be easy to put in. The only real question is, how do I pay for it?

It seems I spend all of my time in the kitchen. So I decided to make it the best room in the house. Now how do I pay for it?

I can picture it now. Hardwood floors. Recessed lighting. Maybe even a stone fireplace! It'll be a great room. Now how do I pay for it?

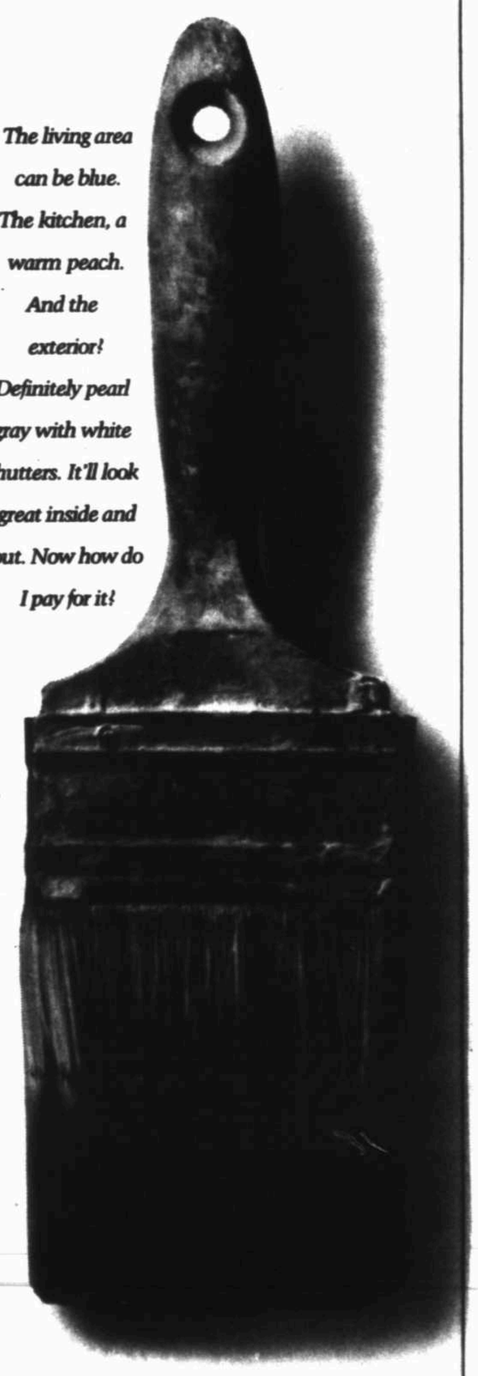

It's amazing how fast they've grown. Maybe it's time to add another bathroom. The kids will love it. And we could use the privacy. Yeah, that would be nice. Now how do I pay for it?

Just Ask.

The living area can be blue. The kitchen, a warm peach. And the exterior? Definitely pearl gray with white shutters. It'll look great inside and out. Now how do I pay for it?

LETTER FROM COLLEGE

2nd Kids' College ends with splash

H.A Tuck

Second session of Kids' College at Midland College ended with a splash on July 25 with 600-plus students happily skipping through the puddles while almost as many mothers, dads, and grandparents tried to stay dry during an afternoon of show-and-tell interrupted by downpours.

Tuck

Kids' College coordinator Jan Reed, her staff, aides, and teachers did a great job of improvising amidst the downpours.

Those who experienced the traffic gridlock at the college's two exits during Kids' College should be aware that the organizers already are grappling with that problem and feel they may have some solutions by next spring.

This is a three-hour credit course, so registration for it is handled the same as other credit courses.

Xeriscape is one of the new buzz words of society. So new it wasn't listed in the dictionary 10 years ago. Derived from the root word xeric, defined as "characterized by, relating to, or requiring only a small amount of moisture," xeriscape is growing in popularity.

Xeriscape Landscaping is one of two Continuing Education courses starting this week. From 7-9 p.m. Thursday, for $5 you can learn about xeriscaping.

Despite our eight-plus inches of rain this month, Midland really is a semi-desert region. Xericaping simply tells how we can adapt our plantings to those which require less water and, usually, a lot less care.

Also starting this week is a two-day course on First Aid/CPR. The class meets on Monday and Tuesday from 6-10 p.m. at a cost of $25.

Register for either of these classes in the Continuing Education office, Administration Building, or call 685-4518 for more information.

More than 2,000 students register for MC

Staff Report

Early registration for Midland College's fall semester ends Thursday with a record number of students already signed up.

More than 2,000 students have registered, about 100 more than at the same period last year. A final registration count of about 4,000 students is expected by the time late registration concludes.

Using an alphabetical system, prospective students are encouraged to come in the following order, according to last names: S-Z on Monday, M-R on Tuesday, F-L on Wednesday, and A-E on Thursday. Hours are 9 a.m.-7 p.m. on Monday and 7 a.m.-5 p.m. Tuesday through Thursday.

Registration procedures are handled in the Student Services area, located in the northwestern portion of the Student Center. The late hours on Monday are especially for those who work and would have difficulty coming to register at other times.

Many former and returning students are registering by telephone.

However, all students applying for financial aid must register in person, as well as first-time college students and university or college transfer students.

"Although we like for students to come according to the alphabetical system, the main thing is to come and register this week," said Dr. Don Cates, associate dean of students and registrar.

For those who don't register the final week, or will not be able to pay fees until later, there will be a formal enrollment day on Wednesday, Aug. 28.

Registration that day will be mainly by time permits, which will be issued Aug. 12-22, Monday through Thursday, from 7 a.m.-5 p.m. To complete registration, tuition and all fees must be paid.

"The registration process will take somewhat longer on Aug. 28 simply because there are more people who wait until that time. But the system is designed to handle the maximum number in relatively short periods of time," Cates said.

Fall semester classes start on Tuesday, Sept. 3, as the college is scheduled to be closed on Monday, Sept. 2, for Labor Day.

Persons wishing more information should call 685-4501.

Morales: Lawmakers should submit plans to Justice Department

AUSTIN (AP) — Attorney General Dan Morales has suggested that lawmakers submit Texas' plans for redrawing legislative boundaries for clearance from the U.S. Justice Department, instead of sending them directly to a federal court.

Legislative leaders have said they would prefer to send the redistricting plans to a three-judge panel in Washington.

However, in a letter to Lt. Gov. Bob Bullock and House Speaker Gib Lewis, Morales said it would be faster to go through the Justice Department, the Austin American-Statesman reported Saturday.

Republicans and civil rights groups have challenged the redistricting plans as unfair. Some civil rights leaders have objected to going straight to the court, saying officials are trying to protect white incumbents by bypassing Justice Department review.

Morales said either route is permissible under the U.S. Voting Rights Act. But submitting the plans to the Justice Department could allow enough time to make changes and still hold the 1992 elections on schedule, Morales said.

Using the Justice Department pre-clearance process "nearly certainly means that we will hear sooner than we would taking the federal court route about what objections, if any, the federal government has to the redistricting plans you have enacted," Morales said.

An aide to Bullock said the Senate might choose to follow Morales' suggestion. But Lewis indicated he remains unconvinced that the Justice Department route would be faster.

"The speaker thinks that they all have the same goal, and that is expediency," said John Bender, Lewis' press secretary.

"And if the attorney general can convince him that going through the Justice Department is a faster route, then he would be for it. But right now the advice that the speaker has received so far has been that going to the three-judge panel would be the faster route," Bender said.

Rep. Tom Uher, chairman of the House Redistricting Committing, also said he would rather go straight to court.

When he and his staff met with Justice Department employees last year to discuss the redistricting process, "the people up there indicated in so many words that anything we send up there would not be constitutional," Uher said.

■ Katy veterinarian draws life sentence

CORSICANA — Jurors deliberated about two hours Saturday before sentencing a Katy veterinarian to life in prison for killing his brother-in-law and nephew.

Ronald David Ludwig could have received the death penalty after being convicted Thursday of capital murder in the double shotgun slayings.

Ludwig, 37, showed no emotion Thursday when state District Judge Gene Knize read the verdict after jurors deliberated three hours.

Ludwig has been held on $2 million bond. The trial, moved to Corsicana on a change of venue, was Ludwig's second in the June 14, 1990 killings of Ennis businessman Joseph Trojacek, 31, and his 5-year-old son, Matthew.

■ Genealogical group finally meets in Austin

AUSTIN — It took them half a century, but the Austins finally have come to Austin.

The Austin Families Association of America Inc. is holding its 50th anniversary meeting at perhaps the most obvious site for the yearly convention.

And the group offered no apologies for holding meeting in cities such as Dallas, Salt Lake City and Southern Pines, N.C. for the past 49 years.

"The city doesn't really have to be historically significant," said president Harold Austin Steiner.

"But we think it's appropriate to hold the convention in Austin and celebrate our half-century of progress here because of the contributions to Texas history made by two of our more famous Austins," Steiner said.

Several of the 60 convention participants are related to Stephen F. Austin, the founding father of Texas, and his father Moses Austin, who obtained the original grant allowing Anglos to settle in Texas.

Others come from completely different clans.

■ Wedding invitations 'obligated' lobbyists

DALLAS — Several Capitol lobbyists said they felt obligated to give wedding presents to a state representative after receiving invitations that included gift suggestions.

But Rep. Parker McCollough said he didn't mean to pressure anyone.

McCollough said 30 to 40 lobbyists were among the 600 guests he invited to a reception Saturday night in Round Rock honoring his June 23 wedding. The engraved invitations included gift ideas, The Dallas Morning News reported Saturday.

The invitations said the couple had registered at an upscale Austin housewares store and at a travel agency, which some lobbyists said they saw as a solicitation for gifts.

McCollough, D-Georgetown and a member of the House Appropriations Committee, said he considered the lobbyists friends and saw nothing wrong with inviting them.

Couple takes in returned, retarded girl

DALLAS (AP) — A judge has appointed a Houston couple to care for a 4-year-old girl whose adoptive parents gave her back to an adoption agency after learning she was mentally retarded.

Visiting state District Judge William C. Black also decided that the North Texas couple who adopted the child in 1988 do not have to pay the child support sought by her court-appointed attorney, The Dallas Morning News reported Saturday.

On Friday, Black placed the toddler, Stacey, in the foster care of Tom and Jacquie Roach and ended an emotional struggle that often raised as many moral questions as legal ones.

"I've never heard of a case like this," Black said. "It's unorthodox."

Don and Rhonda Stanton returned Stacey to Hope Cottage Inc., a Dallas adoption agency, in 1988, some 19 months after caring for her.

The Stantons had agreed to adopt a healthy child. Records showed they eventually could not handle the emotional stress involved with raising Stacey.

The couple tried to return the child to Hope Cottage in June 1988, agreeing not to sue the agency, which said it would find another foster home for Stacey.

But state District Judge Harold Gaither blocked the Stanton's move because there were no couples waiting to take Stacey in.

Gaither appointed Dallas lawyer John Barr to represent Stacey's interests. Hope Cottage looked after the girl while the matter was being resolved.

In 1989, Stacey was sent to live with the Roaches, who had heard of the case through news reports.

Just after joining the Roaches, it was discovered that Stacey suffers from Angelman syndrome, a rare degenerative disease not apparent at birth.

The case had been deadlocked since 1990. The Stantons have an annual income of about $150,000, almost five times as much as the Roaches, Barr said. And the Roaches, Barr added, already care for several children, including four with special needs.

But Jeffery Coen, the Roaches' attorney, said that doesn't matter.

"They (the Roaches) feel that their position in life is to care for and love their children, and they're not interested in whether they have a million dollars to do this or not," Coen said.

The Roaches, tired of waiting for a solution to the custody problem, threatened to return Stacey to Hope Cottage if a settlement was not reached by Aug. 23.

Black's ruling Friday also cleared the way for the Roaches to change Stacey's name to Kelsey Brenna Roach.

Senate committee approves costlier budget plan

AUSTIN (AP) — A Senate committee Saturday tentatively approved a human services budget proposal potentially hundreds of millions of dollars higher than a House plan.

Members of the Senate Finance Committee said they could not immediately calculate the total amount of their suggested appropriation for the Department of Human Services.

However, Sen. John Montford, committee chairman, said the budget plan basically would continue state services at their current levels, with some increases in programs expected to serve growing numbers of needy Texans.

The House Appropriations Committee voted last week to cut $417 million from the budget the welfare department would need to continue current services for the next two years. About $200 million would be cut in state funds, while another $217 million would be lost in federal funds.

The biggest cuts would come in intermediate care for the mentally retarded, payments to nursing homes and premiums to medically needy families.

Rep. Jack Vowell, R-El Paso and budget and oversight chairman of the House Human Services Committee, said last week that the House proposal could deny nursing home care to at least 15,000 people.

Sen. Chet Brooks, D-Pasadena, said the Senate version would maintain the current amount of payments to nursing homes.

The Legislature is meeting in special session to write a state budget facing a projected $4.8 billion revenue shortfall.

Brooks said he believed the two branches could reach a compromise on welfare spending.

"There may be some middle ground in it," said Brooks, a member of the Finance Committee and chairman of the Senate Health and Human Services Committee.

Bring your active lifestyle home

Whether it's a round of golf or a few laps in the pool, this two-story contemporary/modern home was designed for those who love their recreation and active lifestyles.

Located in the Green tree Country Club Addition right off one of the greens, this four bedroom, four bath offers all the amenities a family could wish for in a home.

Elegance and style are found in the straight lines, high ceilings, and clean white walls. Touches of custom wall paper are used tastefully to give each room its own unique character and charm. Custom drapes and window coverings blend their own graceful touches to the decor creating a comfortable, relaxing atmosphere.

Open and spacious, the formal living room provides a perfect place to entertain family and friends. The brick fireplace and cozy hearth make an inviting place to create a conversation area. The beautiful, covered patio and pool area can be seen from the large windows in the living area. A jacuzzi is located near the pool, a heavenly place to ease those tired muscles after a strenuous day of activity. Here one can relax and enjoy a fabulous view of the golf course.

The formal dining room is conveniently located near the formal living room and a terrific wet bar is tucked away behind folding doors in the living area. Just around the corner is a cozy sitting room with three large vertical windows facing the golf course.

A doorway from the sitting area leads to the delightful kitchen with its beautiful dark oak cabinets, top-of-the line appliances, and charming breakfast area. Close by is the utility room. While some utility rooms are more like closets, this one is not. This one qualifies as a real room and offers cabinets with a sink and enough space for a freezer or sewing machine.

Skylights, atrium doors and an abundance of large windows throughout the home will chase away even a hint of gloom with bright, West Texas sunshine.

Stairs lead to a delightful suite which includes a large open area with a wall of built-in cabinets and book shelves and a wet bar. It also has a bedroom and its own bath. This could be a perfect place for guest quarters, a teenager who needs his own space or a home office/study. Sliding doors open out onto a terrace overlooking the pool and golf course.

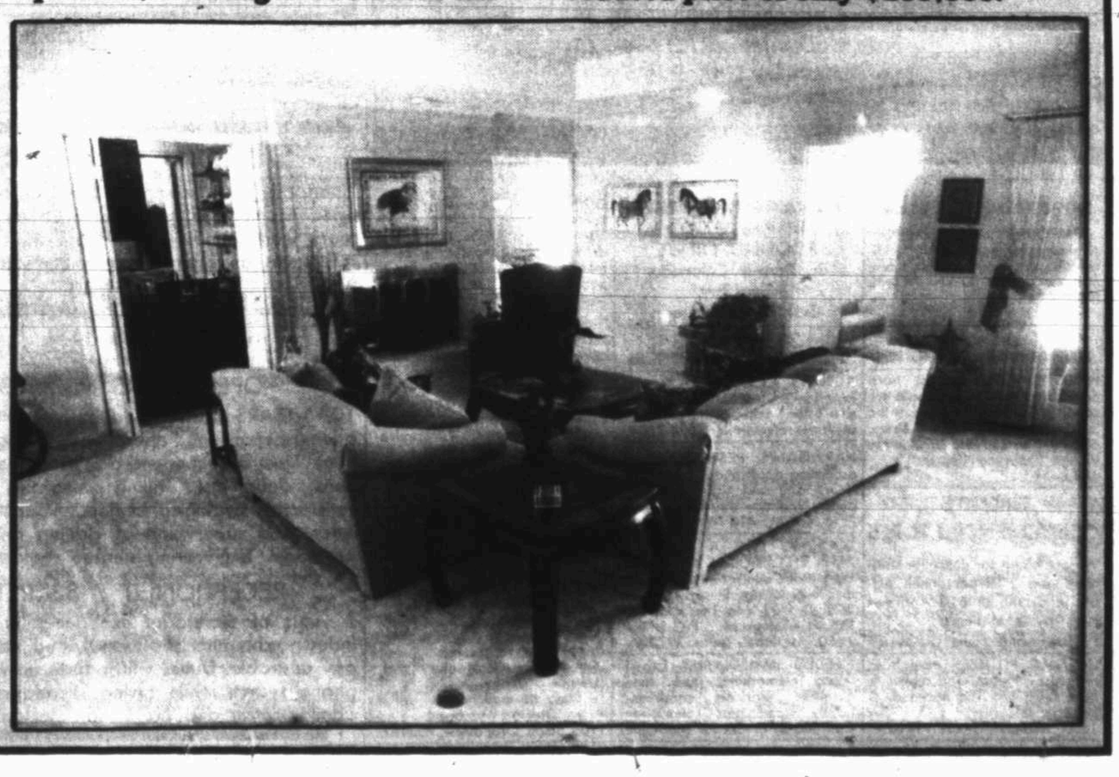

Using every inch of space efficiently, a convenient wine closet is located under the stairs.

The spacious, sequestered master bedroom suite offers a unique design with back to back his and her vanities in the bath. A huge his and her walk-in closet provides ample space for storage while a large sunken garden tub adds a touch of luxury. A large separate shower is also provided. Sliding glass doors from the master bedroom open onto the patio and pool area.

Both of the remaining bedrooms are spacious with large closets and their own private baths.

A large agrigate circle drive in front allows plenty of parking room for family members and guests while the three-car garage provides for vehicles and more.

This home is offered by Re/Max of Midland at a recently reduced price of only $189,000.

While the formal living area, right, is open and spacious, the brick fireplace and cozy hearth create an inviting conversation atmosphere.
The formal dining room, left, is located near the formal living room, with a wet bar tucked away behind folding doors in the living area.

Langston Realtors talk about . . .

Big 5 Program, new North Office

Our innovative Big 5 program, which awards a Big 5 bonus to a lucky selling agent continues to increase interest among realtors to show and sell Langston-listed properties.

Recent drawings for $1000 were won by Jo Braden, Adobe Realtors, who sold our associate Laura Manulik's listing at 2505 Keswick, by Richard Reker, Adobe Realtors, who sold Helen Pogue's listing at 2608 Cesna, and by Clemmie Sorge, Carriage Company, who sold Jim Hoisager's listing at 4406 Leddy.

Other agents who sold Big 5 properties and were eligible for entry in the three drawings were Gloria Lott, Winston Fontenot, Kaye Horchler,

Langston

Sandra McGill, Jim Hoisager, Jana Tucker, Nona Orr (2) and Roberta Aldridge of Langston Realtors; Larry Hatfield, ReMax; Anna Crawford and Dene Kelly, Dene Kelly Realtors.

The Big 5 Program was designed to increase all agents' awareness of a property and to encourage showings of that property. It has certainly provided an effective competitive edge tot he sale of our listings because more showings often mean more contracts in a shorter period of time!

The program is really very simple: the seller of a Big 5 property puts $200 in the Big 5 drawing at the time his home is sold. When five Big 5 properties have closed, one lucky selling agent's name is drawn to receive the $1000! Good odds! Good interest in selling the properties among all agents, not just Langston agents! And good, timely sales

* * * * *

Our new North office on Loop 250 and Garfield continues to be a boom for customers and sales associates alike and we are tremendously grateful for the support and good comments from everyone. The second office has given us a valuable training facility and the extra office space required by the growth of our firm. Thirteen associates have joined Langston Realtors since we made the committment to a second office and two additional agents are in training!

Langston North has been a great supplement to our long time Wall Street location, adding visibility for Langston Realtors in the extremely active north and northwest residential market while convenience and visibility on the important Airport to Downtown route has been retained by the Wall Street office.

One of the greatest benefits has been the convenience provided the many people driving around in the Polo, Saddle Club, Plantation Hills, etc. subdivisions. They've popped in for details on specific properties, for general information on he city or the market, for maps and for just a quick phone call or cup of coffee. And our Open House Headquarters promotion as a place to pick up maps and information to facilitate looking at open houses has been highly appreciated; a whole group of "regulars" are stopping by each sunday.

It's also given us two convenient locations for associates meetings, extra office or conference spaces. Whether an agent offices on Wall Street or North, they've found that the interchangeable use of staff and facilities in dual locations is great.

Still to come are the development of a Builders/New Construction Center and the expansion of our Relocation Counseling Center. Three projects are planned for later this fall after we remodel and refurbish our Wall Street offices. So, we are not resting on our laurels! With your valued support, after 25 years, we're still growing! Thanks!

THERE'S SOMETHING ABOUT A SOLDIER.

Especially if you're a woman.

Because you could be doing the most amazing things. Like being a Flight Crew Chief or a Topographic Surveyor, or learning any one of over 200 skills the Army offers.

You'll also find yourself doing familiar things like going to the movies, doing aerobics or just being with friends.

A woman in the Army is still a woman–but one with more responsibility to shoulder and more self-confidence as a result.

To get an edge that can last for life, call your Army Recruiter.

MOONLIGHTING!

The Midland Reporter-Telegram has several distributorships which need to be filled with qualified, responsible individuals.

OFTEN ASKED QUESTIONS:

Is it worthwhile for adults also?

Yes! Our current carrier force is already 90% adult and 10% youth. Morning newspaper routes are attractive for:
- ADULTS who have full-time jobs, yet want to supplement their income with a steady part-time job.
- MOTHERS who can't justify a small job and daycare, because as a carrier, you do not need daycare!
- COLLEGE STUDENTS needing a part-time job which will work with classes!
- SENIOR CITIZENS wanting regular exercise, added income, or just want to work with people, neighbors, and friends.

How much money can I make as a carrier?

Depending on the size of the distributorship from $300 to $700 monthly! Some make even more!

How long does it take?

The actually delivery takes 1 - 2 hours Monday - Saturday, and 2 - 3 hours on Sunday, again depending on the size of the distributorship. Also, a few hours a month are needed to collect from subscribers. Many carrier's choose to handle some of this by putting envelopes in subscribers' papers. Collecting in person will be necessary though!

When do papers have to be delivered by?

6 a.m. Monday - Friday and 7 a.m. on Saturday, Sunday and holidays.

Do I ever get a day off?

The job requires a 7-day a week commitment. However, carriers do take days off by finding a friend or family member to substitute for them!

RESERVE YOUR DISTRIBUTORSHIP NOW!

Midland firefighter Rusty Adams demonstrates how a victim — portrayed by co-worker Mike Pardue — can be transported on a blanket away from the scene of a disaster.

Each day as we pick up our newspapers, we read about floods, tornados, fires, earthquakes and hazardous materials spills in various parts of the world. But did you ever stop to think what would happen if one of these disasters happened to you here in the Tall City.

"We all have the 'Midland Syndrome,'" said Sarah Boering, coordinator of emergency services for the Red Cross, adding that it also is referred to as the 17-year old boy syndrome, "We all think, 'It won't happen to us.' But a disaster can happen to us."

That is why the Midland County Chapter of the American Red Cross is presenting a one-day workshop, "Assisting Disabled & Elderly People in Disasters," 8:30 a.m.-4:30 p.m. Aug. 13 in the great hall at First United Methodist Church, 305 N. Baird.

This program is part of the American Red Cross' Disaster Education Program, which is a nation-wide effort to increase the ability of citizens to respond quickly and efficiently to disasters and emergencies of all types. However, the focus of the Midland workshop is on the disabled and elderly.

THE REASON FOR this focus is that, according to statistics from Midland's Red Cross, over 32 million non-institutionalized Americans are limited in some way by chronic health conditions; over 15,000 Midlanders fall into that category.

That statistic makes it obvious why the Red Cross is interested in teaching Midlanders how to cope with the special needs of disabled and elderly people.

At the workshop, participants will be learning proper procedures of how to deal with natural disasters such as tornados, storms and heat waves, as well as man-made disasters such as hazardous material spills.

"The (enhanced) 911 (emergency) system is just wonderful.

Festivities precede Saturday wedding

By Marilyn McKnight Harrison

The wedding of Michele De France and John Matney Jr. Saturday evening at the First Christian Church was preceded by a round of parties. Beginning in April with an engagement reception, the festivities will conclude today with a brunch for the out-of-town guests prior to their departure.

McKnight-Harrison

The engagement party was hosted at the Plaza Club by Jana and Wendell Iverson, Helen Lackey and Kathryn Helton. The brunch is being held in the home of Kerry Kay (Mrs. Tom) Cook. The other hostesses are Carol Ann (Mrs. Lynn) Hunt, Mary (Mrs. Armando) Urquidez, Betty (Mrs. Don) Tomlin and Ms. Lackey.

Wedding week events began on Thursday with a "Sip 'n See" Party at the home of the bride's parents, Patti and David DeFrance. The hostesses were Cathe (Mrs. Bob) Leggott, Ellen (Mrs. Alan) Orr, Nancy (Mrs. Steve) Shaw, Katie Shaw, Judia (Mrs. Dan) Foreman and Jennifer Foreman.

The rehearsal dinner was hosted by the groom's parents, Anne and John Matney of Midlothian Friday evening at Venezia Restaurant. Dee and Ray Frazier provided lunch Friday afternoon for the bride's out-of-town family members.

On Saturday, Michele was honored with a manicure party Back Stage. Hostesses were Sarah (Mrs. Russell) Neisig, Andrea (Mrs. Larry) Bates, Marilee (Mrs. Ed) Runyan, Leigh Ann Runyan, Carol (Mrs. Jack) Steele and Laura Steele. It was followed by a bridesmaids luncheon hosted by Billie (Mrs. Jim) Ross at the Petroleum Club. Special guests included a former Midlander, Phyllis (Mrs. Linden) Welsch of Austin, and Penny (Mrs. Gary) Stephens of Los Alamitos, Calif.

Meanwhile, the groom's party was entertained with golf at Ranchland Hills Country Club, followed by a hamburger luncheon at the home of Linnie and Art Donnelly. Helping to host the event were Evelyn and Don Byerly, Jeanie and Tom Johnson, Leonore Chambers and Nita and Pete Henderson.

The wedding reception was hosted by the bride's parents at Ranchland Hills Country Club, with music provided by "Prime Time."

Other pre-nuptial festivities included a games shower at the home of Sherrilyn and Tom Blase and co-hosted by Linda and Ronnie Brice, Caroline and Rick Ganem and Gayle and Tom Miller, and a miscellaneous display shower in the home of Jacki (Mrs. Larry) Summers and co-hosted by Wendi (Mrs. Lance) Evans and Sharon (Mrs. Alan) Schroeder.

In addition, a personal and linen shower was given at the home of Sara (Mrs. Bill) Gregg, with Debra (Mrs. Mike) Pitts, Neva (Mrs. Jim) Swann, Patricia Adams, Beverly Holmes and Tacy Reddell also hosting. A holiday seasons shower was held at the home of Cathie (Mrs. Earl) Miller, with Pat (Mrs. Joe) Henderson, Nita (Mrs. Pete) Henderson, Evelyn (Mrs. Don) Byerly, Cindy (Mrs. Van Tom) Whatley and Loyce (Mrs. Bill) Martin co-hosting.

Other parties were given by friends of the bride in Dallas and by the groom's family and friends in New Braunfels and San Antonio.

Former Midlanders attending some of the parties for the bride were Glenda Rozek and daughter Lori Pollard of Denver, Colo., and Vicky (Mrs. Claude) Bufler of Upland, Calif.

BILLEE TULLY had as recent visitors from Missouri her brother and his wife, the Rev. Cleo and Josephine Boyer of Joplin, and her sister, Leola Paschal of Brookfield. They will visit friends in Justin and Abilene, Texas, and Southwest Missouri before heading to Canada for further vacationing.

Mrs. Paschal was impressed with Midland and its people, and Mrs. Tully tells us she is in hopes her sister move here.

TERESA MERRITT was hostess for a baby shower luncheon recently to honor Pam (Mrs. Jim E.) Williams. The party, held in the home of the honoree, was co-hosted by Pam's sisters-in-law, Karen (Mrs. Bruce) Freeman of Arlington and Becky (Mrs. Doug) Freeman of Houston.

The decorations selected for the shower, including the handmade cloths on the serving and guest registry tables, reflected the honoree's gift selections in the Beatrix Potter line. The home was further decorated with floral arrangements designed by Ms. Merritt.

The luncheon featured hors d'oeuvres of chilled shrimp, crab stuffed cocktail swans, finger sandwiches and stuffed cherry tomatoes, as well as an elaborate fruit plate, petits fours and mimosa punch.

Special guests included Pam's sister-in-law, Kate (Mrs. Mike) Byerley of Lubbock, and her husband's aunt, Eleanor (Mrs. Kelly) Sims of Midland.

The couple eagerly await their new arrival in late September.

WORKSHOP: Disaster assistance needed

(From 1E)

The more I work with these guys, the more I appreciate them. But in a bad situation, it could be hours before they could get to someone in need," Ms. Boering said. "In a disaster, communications are usually the first thing to go. People may not be able to call 911, so they must know what to do as an alternative."

A disaster brings with it the element of surprise, and there is the potential that the local emergency services may be paralyzed. In this event, it is imperative that individuals know how to survive on their own and know what they can do to help others until assistance services arrive.

"These elderly people are our moms and dads; they are you and me in years to come. When you think about our vulnerability, it's sobering," she said, "So, we must learn how to deal with it."

The program is the concept of Helen and David Mencher and was created in Los Angeles, where there have been many positive developments made through learning how to cope with the destruction of the earthquakes. The couple has researched, written and compiled their studies into the workbook to be used for this workshop as well as its preceding book in the series, "Disaster Preparedness for the Disabled and Elderly People."

Although the focus of the workshop is helping the disabled and elderly during time of disaster, the workbook points out that the needs of almost everyone in a disaster situation are similar and that the lessons learned will apply to guidelines for the general population as well.

FOR THE WORKSHOP, the great hall at the church will be divided into three sections, a teaching area, a work area and a resource area.

"The teaching area will be like a theater. There will be films and demonstrations by various emergency services in the city," Ms. Boering said. "The teaching area will be where we 'reach out and touch someone,' with a more hands-on approach. Then, the resource area will be where the participating services and organizations can show all the appliances, offer informative brochures and information, things like that."

"Awareness is the first step, Preparedness is the key!" the workbook states, a statement Ms. Boering couldn't agree with more.

Because Midland has a transient population, many people don't remember some of the really bad weather problems that have at one time or another plagued the area. But the recent rains probably reminded some long-time Midlanders of the flood that devastated Midland 26 years ago, Ms. Boering said. And although flood control has made a lot of improvements since that time, Ms. Boering believes we must be prepared to handle what ever Mother Nature or man-made disasters send our way.

"We should start with risk analysis," she said. "Midland is pushed as a retirement community. It is very important to assess this situation. We are having more and more Alzheimer'spatients, people are living longer. What happens to programs such as Meals on Wheels when there is a disaster or a hard freeze. With programs like Meals on Wheels, many of those volunteers are elderly people themselves who may not be able to do their normal duties in bad situations. We need to think about these things, we need to become aware."

THE WORKSHOP WILL emphasize the importance of networking within neighborhoods and organized groups, such as church congregations. "We need to get back to the neighborly contact, gathering phone numbers, knowing who to call if an emergency arose, having relatives' numbers to call to notify them of their loved ones' conditions. These are the types of things we need to do before something happens," Ms. Boering said.

During the workshop, there will be demonstrations and discussions about how to assist someone confined to a wheelchair during a disaster.

"You can't just pick these people up and carry them out," said Ms. Boering. "If you take their wheelchair, they are immobile. You have taken away their freedom of mobility. So you have to do everything possible to treat that person and their wheelchair as one. It doesn't always work, but you have to be aware that that chair is part of the person and do you best to keep them together."

Among other topics covered during the workshop will be what types of stress to expect from a victim and a disaster worker, lifting and carrying techniques for those who are non-ambulatory, understanding disorientation and communication, assisting those in need of life support systems such as dialysis or oxygen, assisting those with sight or hearing impairments, aiding a disabled child, psychological first aid in disaster and assisting the mentally handicapped. There also will be discussions about the meaning of disabled and about common emergency and health terms used during disaster times.

PARTICIPANTS WILL learn what are the most important items to take with you in case of disaster. "One thing most people don't even think about in a disaster is their medication. But if you are a person on heart medication, or an epileptic, or even taking medication for a temporary illness, you must have your medication with you," Ms. Boering emphasized.

"You should also have identification with you and some kind of notification of any health problems in case you are unable to speak. This information should state all problems, such as you are an epileptic or that you have a heart problem, or what ever. That way the health care professionals can give you the best care possible," she said.

Because Ms. Boering is a firm believer in creating awareness about what could happen in the case of a disaster and how individuals should deal with it, she said there is no limit for attendance — "Only God can limit this class." However, advance reservations are requested to ensure there are enough supplies for those attending. "We'd also like to have a ball park figure for lunch reservations," she said.

There is a $10 registration fee that is applied to a workbook and supplies, and includes lunch at the church.

"We are cocoonists," Ms. Boering said. "We have expectations of being safe on our own little island. People have got to become aware and prepare.

"This is my crusade, and when I get a hold of something, it's 'Katie, bar the door.' "

Cadillac Ranch is a sight to see

By Rick Smith
Associated Press

AMARILLO, Texas — We park along Interstate 40 and march off across the bare, brown field like pilgrims on a quest.

We are not alone.

Ahead of us walks a retired couple from Florida who "read about this years ago and always wanted to see it."

Behind us strolls a thirtysomething father, toting a toddler on his shoulder.

"We were just driving along and saw this," the father says. "What the heck is it?"

Cadillac Ranch.

No marker marks the spot, no billboard announces its presence, no tacky souvenir shop obstructs the fine, flat Panhandle view.

But, for 17 years, the sight of 10 Cadillacs buried nose down in a farmer's field has attracted a steady stream of interstate travellers.

Most see the line of half-buried autos from their own cars as they whiz past.

But a few stop for a closer look.

"Why?" asks the elderly Florida woman as the ever-irritating Panhandle wind whistles off-key across the cars' gaudy tailfins.

My friend Jerry, a Cadillac Ranch scholar, tells her that the cars were buried in 1974. An eccentric Amarillo millionaire commissioned a group of San Francisco artists to do the sculpture.

Mix oodles of Texas money with California oddness and this is what you get.

"Sculpture?" the woman says, aghast. "It's junk."

Yes. And no.

Originally, the idea was to show the rise and fall of Cadillac tailfins from 1948 to 1964, Jerry says.

But, over the years, the cars suffered a demoliton derby's worth of wear from vandals and bad weather.

The tailfins took a backseat to the improbable sight of 10 cars planted in a bare-as-winter field.

That suits the ranch's creator just fine.

"I have a theory of art," Stanley Marsh 3 said in a 1984 interview. "I like art that comes as an abrupt surprise."

Cadillac Ranch, he said, is "not for people who know about it. It's for the guy driving in from Tucumcari, his kids are crying, the air conditioning isn't working, his wife is upset, and, then, all of a sudden, there it is."

But is it art or an eyesore?

Up close, the Cadillacs look as dingy and sad as a broken dream.

But, from a distance, from the highway, the long line of cars, all mystically tilted to the east at exactly the same angle, exert a magnetic pull on the imagination.

"What a waste of time!" the Florida woman says, marching back to the highway.

But the young man and his son linger for the better part of an hour, circling the Cadillacs. Studying their graffiti-encrusted carcasses.

Listening to the music of wind on tailfins.

SEEDS FOR THOUGHT

Almond trees fruitful this year

By Deborah A. Benge

What! You have an almond tree — and it has almonds! It is a rare event for us to actually have almonds, but this year we do have an almond crop.

Benge

Almonds are in that same group of plants referred to as stone fruits — peach, nectarine, apricot and plum. In fact the almond tree can easily be confused as a peach. The leaves are very similar and the young developing fruit will look like a peach, at least during early development. The basic difference between the two is with peach you eat the fruit flesh and with almond you eat the seed.

Almonds are very specific when it comes to producing annual crops of good quality almonds. In the U.S. it is restricted to specific sites in California and the Mediterranean area. Production in those areas is possible because of slight chance for frost and prolonged rainy periods during the bloom and fruit development.

Here in the Permian Basin we might have an almond crop about once every five years, with an occasional light crop in between. The almond is the very first deciduous fruit tree to bloom in the spring. It will bloom about a month before peaches, needing only 800 chilling hours to break dormancy. That should tell you something, since we often loose our peach crops to a late spring freeze.

The almond tree shouldn't be thought of as a worthless fruit tree in the Permian Basin, just because we seldom get a crop. The tree itself can be very beautiful during its early spring bloom, when it is covered by masses of white blooms. Since it seldom yields a crop, the almond, like an apricot tree, might better serve the home gardener being treated as an ornamental. So, instead of pruning them to the severe open vase center shape that is recommended, you may want to prune it like an ornamental.

The almond is a longer lived than the peach, having an average life span of 15 to 20 years. In the landscape this short lived characteristic needs to be kept in mind. The tree grows fast providing shade when planted 15 feet away from a south or west facing window. The mature height is about 20 feet with a 15 to 20 foot spread.

Almonds require care similar to that of the peach. It does especially well in light sandy soils, with good drainage and full sun. The tree will tolerate dry conditions better than peach but it still responds well to regular irrigation. Almonds also respond well to nitrogen applications, about one to one-and-a-half pounds of actual nitrogen per tree per year.

The almond will have the same problems as the peach. Nematodes, peach tree borer and iron chlorosis are all potential problems.

In a fruiting year it must have a long hot growing season. Excessive rain and humidity during a crop year can cause poor nut development and blossom and fruit infection by brown and green fruit rot organisms.

Almonds, with just a few variety execptions, need another variety for pollination. Nonpareil is the variety we should grow in our area. If you can find it grafted onto Nemaguard root stock it would be helpful, but finding it may be difficult.

Most almonds will be ready for harvest in August and September, although we've received several calls in the extension office indicating many are already ready for harvest. Harvest needs to be done as quickly as possible. As soon as some of the nuts in the interior of the tree begin to have their husks split, harvest should begin. Delay of harvest will result in a loss of the crop, nuts shrivel and become covered in a fungus.

When you see the hulls crack open, nuts should be shaken or knocked off of the tree. Remove the husk right away and place the nuts in the sun to dry for a few days. The remaining curing time should be under a protected airy porch or shed. A properly dried kernel will snap into rather than bend. As soon as almonds reach that point they can be stored in the refrigerator or in a cool, dry, well ventilated place for up to six months.

So, when that peach tree of yours turns out to be an almond — you'll know what to do.

Tips can make travel easier for children flying alone

Associated Press

According to the airline industry, more than 500,000 children fly alone each year — the majority of them during summer vacation time. Kids must be at least 5 years old to do so — 8, if they have to switch to a connecting flight.

Ladies' Home Journal magazine offers these tips to parents who want their children to arrive safely:

■ When making reservations, specify that the child will be traveling alone. On most direct flights, airline personnel will escort the child on and off each plane and watch him during the flight at no charge. For connecting flights, they may charge $25 per connection. Ask what the policy is first.

■ Whenever possible, request a non-stop or direct flight, and don't book the last flight of the day, to avoid overnight delays from cancellations. Shop for the best fares and service — with air travel down markedly, some analysts predict that this summer might bring greater discounts than airlines have offered in years.

■ Inquire about children's meals. With 24 hours' notice, most airlines can provide a child with a meal he just may eat — be it hamburgers and hot dogs on Delta or chicken nuggets on TWA.

■ If the child has never flown before, plan a short visit to the airport ahead of time.

■ Pack a change of clothing, snacks, disposable towelettes, books and games, and any medications in a carry-on bag.

■ Make sure the child has several copies of his identification and travel plans with him. Also include the name, address and telephone number of the person meeting him. Put this information in a few places — a jacket pocket, a carry-on bag, checked luggage.

■ Arrive early at the airport and allow ample time to fill out the unaccompanied-minor forms the airline will issue. Stay at the gate until the child's plane actually leaves the airport.

■ Give the child some cash, including coins, so he can make phone calls, if necessary.

■ Introduce the child to airline personnel — the supervisor on duty, the flight attendants. These are the people he should turn to if he has a problem.

■ Make sure the person meeting the child gets there early. Tell the airline exactly who will be meeting the child — and insist he not be released unless that person shows the proper identification.

Robotic dionsaurs visit Houston museum

HOUSTON — The Houston Museum of Natural Science has invited a gang of 15 unruly dinosaur robots for an extended visit Sept. 21-Jan. 12, 1992. Dinamation, the popular exhibit of life-like robotic dinosaurs, will take up residence on the main level of the museum.

The exhibit consists of 15 moving, growling, scowling, creatures brought to life with the aid of pneumatic innard and latex skin.

With this hideous complexion and menacing roar, Pachycephalosaurus will send the faint-hearted running scared. New this year will be a full-size, 45-foot long Tyrannosaurus rex, towering 15 feet above the ground, craning his neck as he scouts for a snack among the crowd of onlookers. Also new is a nest of Parasaurolophus eggs with a proud mother beaming over a young hatchling, just emerged from its shell.

A non-moving Pteranodaon, a bird-like prehistoric creature, will also be on display in the Alfred C. Glassell Jr. Hall of Paleontology on the museum's main level. The Pteranodon will be located near the museum's fantastic exhibit of the real thing: replicated, fossilized wing bones of the largest flying creature ever discovered, Quetzalcaotlus northropi, which had an unbelievable wingspan (larger than an F-4 fighter jet) of 40 to 50 feet.

Dinamation robots owe their realistic movements and appearances to computerized pneumatic (compressed air) innards, foam latex exterior and Hollywood-style make-up. The noisy monsters, set in an eerie, mist-filled swamp, take you back in time 65 million to 225 million years ago, into the Mesozoic era. In the exhibit, dinosaurs of the Triassic, Jurassic and Cretaceous periods are seen together, although they actually lived in different times.

There is a special charge for this exhibit in addition to regular Museum admission. Total charges for museum admission and Dinamation are $5 for non-member adults, $4 for non-members children under 12, $2 for museum members, $2 for members' children under 12.

The Houston Museum of Natural Science, a non-profit organiztion, is located in Hermann Park across from Miller Outdoor Theatre. The museum is open noon-6 p.m. Sundays and 9 a.m.-6 p.m. Mondays through Saturdays. The Gift Shop and Restaurant are open daily. For more information, including group rates, call 639-4600.

Returning troops offered free admission to park

ARLINGTON — Members of the Armed Forces who served during Operations Desert Shield and Desert Storm are invited to visit Six Flags Over Texas free of charge during August as the theme park stages a "Lone Star Salute to the Troops."

Park president Bab Bennett said, "Now that most of the troops are back home, we want to say 'thanks' to them and give them a chance to 'get away from it all' as our guests for a day in the park.

"As an added treat for youngsters in the military families," he said, "we will be bringing in the Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles for nightly concerts August 2 through 11."

Bennett said the offer of free admission will be good on every operating day during August except Saturdays.

The invitation is being extended to all active military, active reservists, National Guard members and those members of their families who carry military identification cards. Their children age 9 and under, who do not carry ID cards, will also be admittted when accompanied by their card-holding parent.

Inactive reservists who were called to duty during the Gulf crisis, but who do not have military ID cards, should present their certificate of release or discharge from active duty along with their driver's licenses. The members of their immediate families — spouse and unmarried children living at home — will also be admitted.

Credentials must be presented at the special military ticket windows just past the regular tickets booths. All family members must be present at the window for the tickets to be issued.

The families of those still deployed may also attend by presenting their IDs.

Even non-royal couples get a 10-year review

By Jenny Vogt
N.Y. Times News Service

When Prince Charles married Lady Diana 10 years ago July 29, the sheer romantic splendor of it all gave the world new hope that happily ever after wasn't just for the books.

So much for that fantasy.

Amid suggestions by some that the couple's marriage is sinking as fast as a royal curtsy, some counselors suggest there's a lesson for the rest of us: No matter who you are, the 10-year mark is likely to be one of the most difficult milestones in a marriage because society still expects such couples to fit the fairy-tale mold.

In 1988, the median length of an American marriage that ended in divorce was 7.1 years, while in England and Wales the median length was 9.7 years, according to the Center for International Research, a division of the U.S. Census Bureau.

"There's something in our culture about when a decade comes around. Society expects a lot," said Karen Shanor, a Washington, D.C., clinical psychologist who specializes in relationships. "So often our romanticism clings to 'Leave It to Beaver' and 'Cinderella,' but in fact it's really understanding ourselves and what seems to work best for us as a couple that is best."

The good news is that the 10-year mark is also a time of opportunity, a chance to confound society's expectations with creative new approaches to marriage, Shanor said. This includes re-evaluating priorities from a more realistic perspective than the one they had as dewy-eyed newlyweds, she said.

"Interestingly enough, Charles and Diana are grappling with some of the same issues we're all grappling with: How do we deal with society's expectations of what we should be doing as a couple? Ho ever, we're luckier than Charles nd Diana because we don't ha the whole world watching so w have more flexibility and can be more creative," Shanor said.

"I suggest to people I'm counseling that your marriage is your own and, except for the ideal of sexual fidelity, everything else is open to how it works best for you. If it works best to have separate bank accounts, then do it. If it means living in different cities for jobs for a while, then do it."

Florence Kaslow, a West Palm Beach psychologist and marital and family therapist, recommends couples see their 10-year anniversary as an opportunity for a tuneup.

"What do you do with your job? You have a performance review. Well, do the same thing with your marriage . . . The more you have of successful planning and resolution, the healthier the marriage is," Kaslow said. "The pitfalls these couples face are allowing boredom to set in, being taken for granted, being overly involved in children, houses, careers and activities such as sports to the detriment of the marital relationship."

This process of freshening a marriage also can mean ignoring certain expectations society has about couples and finding a personal formula for marital happiness. Shanor calls one such expectation that couples always appear happily in public together "the Noah's Ark Syndrome."

"It's time to get back in touch with your individual likes and talents," she said. "Recognize that being part of a couple we don't have to be continually together or interested in all the same things."

Kaslow recommends couples seek a proportion of togetherness and separateness that satisfies each spouse. At a minimum, though, she recommends couples spend an evening alone together each week, and one or two weekends each year.

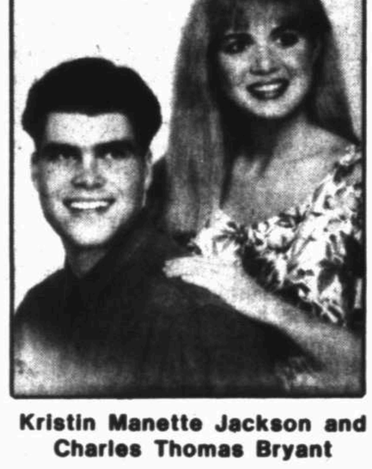

"It's when everything is shared so there's no breath of fresh air coming from separate sources or nothing is shared that the relationship is likely to come into trouble with some anger, resentment coming in," Kaslow said.

"Be creative about marriage instead of fitting into old, obsolete molds and fantasies," Shanor added. "It's a real challenge to create our own marriage. It's also fun."

Photograph garden

NEW YORK (AP) — While your flower garden is in full bloom, develop a thorough gardening diary using instant photography, says Elvin McDonald, secretary of the American Horticultural Society and author of more than 40 gardening books, in order to have a visual reference on how to repeat successes, not failures.

McDonald also suggests making instant photos of a space you plan to turn into a garden.

Bridal registries found in unusual places

N.Y. Times News Service

Although department stores still have the best-known bridal registries, many other kinds of stores have entered the market. New York's Metropolitan Museum of Art, for example, has found its bridal registry, in existence since 1980, to be a tidy source of income.

Other businesses from sporting goods stores to art galleries have tried the tactic as a way to guarantee sales.

"In the last year or so, the business has grown. It's not our main source of income, but it's still a nice piece of change," said Judith Block, manager of the museum's registry.

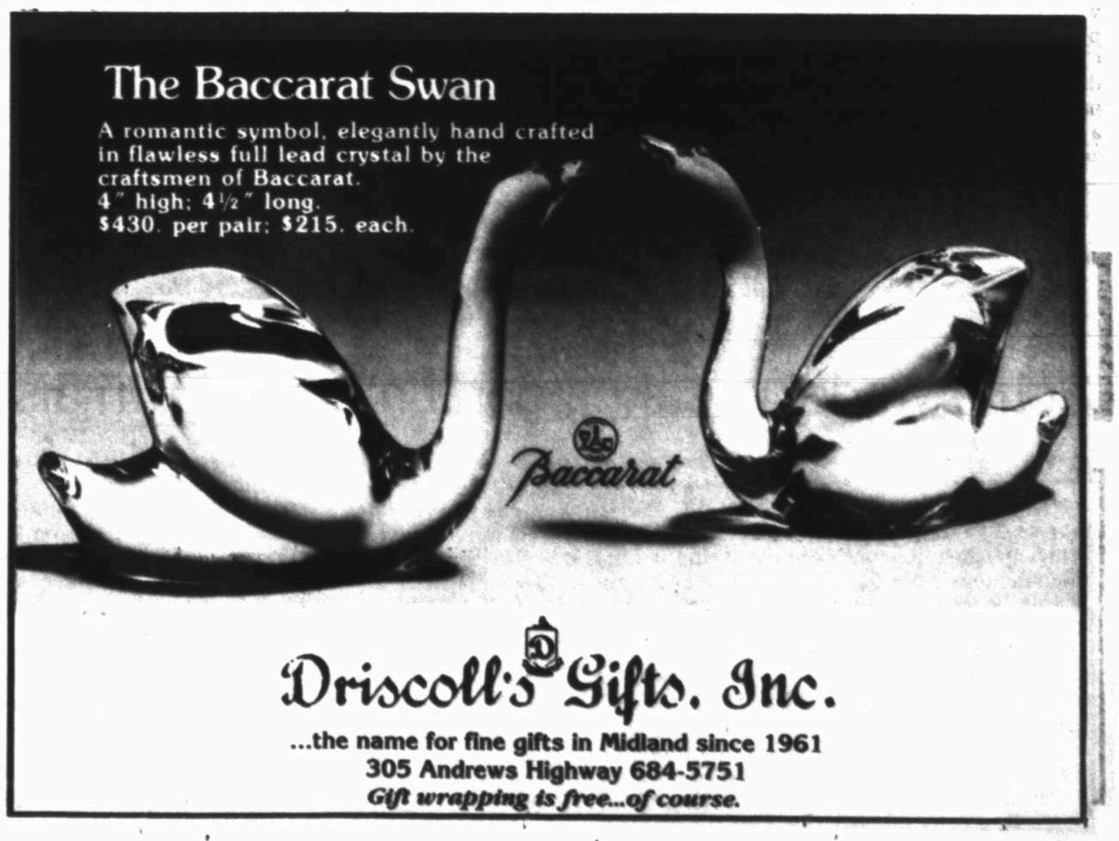

Ms. Block said original china and glassware are still the best sellers, but that brides-to-be are also registering for art books and other unique items from the Museum store.

And Janice Hartoch, a development officer for the University of California at Santa Barbara, plans to register at a wine store for her October wedding. "My fiance made a special request," she explained.

Unfortunately, the concept does not seem to work everywhere. Liberty Travel attempted a registry program two years ago, allowing couples to register for the cost of their honeymoon at any of its 168 agencies.

"The idea was to set up a program like Bloomingdale's or Macy's, because we believe the honeymoon is the new couple's single biggest purchase other than furniture or fixtures for their home," said Steven Heydt, a senior vice president in charge of marketing for the chain.

The response, however, was less than enthusiastic. "They wanted a little more privacy in the transaction than we anticipated," admitted Heydt. The now-unadvertised program remains in place, but only a very few couples take advantage of it, he said.

McPherson's anniversary honored

Mr. and Mrs. Mace McPherson of Midland celebrated their golden wedding anniversary Saturday with a barbecue at the home of Mike McPherson. Hosts were the couple's children and their spouses.

McPherson and the former Gwen Wofford were married Aug. 24, 1941, in Long Beach, Calif. They have three children, J. Kay Finkbeiner of Midland, M. Simone Baker of Denver, Colo., and Mike McPherson of Midland, as well as seven grandchildren and two great-grandchildren.

The couple lived in Lockney; Belin, N.M.; and Hobbs, N.M., before moving to Midland in 1951. They were in the dry cleaning business. They are members of the Church of Christ, VFW, American Legion, Elks and Eagles.

Survey says women like jerks

The horrible truth: Women teach men that nice guys finish last

By Shann Nix
N.Y. Times News Syndicate

Listen up, ladies.

You know all those nasty little things men do to drive you nuts? Like showing up late and never calling and maybe glancing over your shoulder while you're talking to make sure that someone more interesting hasn't just walked in?

Get this — they're doing it on purpose. They're teaching each other how to do it. And they're doing it because they think women want them to.

And they may have a point.

In 1970, two-thirds of women surveyed for a Roper Organization Poll agreed that "Most men are basically kind, gentle and thoughtful." Last year, only half of the 3,000 women surveyed in an identical poll agreed. Forty-two percent went so far as to call men "basically selfish and self-centered."

Why is it that half the population seems to have mutated into mean, manipulative, oversexed, egocentric, aloof, lazy rogues? Could it be as simple as basic behavioral psychology — they're getting rewarded for it?

Say it isn't so.

"The Alan Alda model which many men tried and believed in just didn't work," says Michael Lafavore, executive editor of Men's Health magazine in New York.

"Many women who thought they wanted that ended up being a mite bored. So the guy gets a mixed message — he thinks, 'I cooked dinner, I volunteered to clean the house, I went to see 'Thelma & Louise' with her, and she dumped me for the body builder at the health club. Where did I go wrong?' "

"AS FAR AS women are concerned, better that I should be Al Capone than a nice guy," says Arthur O., a 40-year-old surgeon from San Francisco who withheld his last name for fear someone would identify him as a nice guy.

"Nice is the kiss of death. Nice is vanilla. Nice is a four-door Volvo. Nice means you get swatted like a New York roach."

Men today say they're wising up to one of the most boggling mind-benders of the '90s — that no matter how much a woman protests that she wants a chicken-soup cooking, flower-bearing, card-sending, hand-holding sensitive type, what really makes her socks roll up and down is someone — well, a little less nice.

"Nice guys are doormats," said Liz DeLauro, 42, a San Francisco art dealer.

"They're wimps. Just too easy. It's disgusting. I always go for the arrogant, worldly, passionate bad boys — the kind it's a challenge to get."

DeLauro is not alone, says Dr. Judy Kuriansky, who literally wrote the book on the subject, called "How to Love a Nice Guy."

"You know the feeling when you keep falling for the 'hot guy' who doesn't necessarily want you and ignoring the perfectly reasonable, kind, hard-working 'nice guy' who does," writes Kuriansky. " 'Why do I keep ending up with the wrong man?' is often answered by 'because the wrong man always turns me on!' "

"WOMEN DO GIVE men a double message," Kuriansky said in a telephone interview from New York. "They tell men, 'Be vulnerable,' and then label them as weak. It's a matter of finding the right balance — being sensitive needn't mean being a doormat."

But achieving that delicate balance isn't always easy.

For men spelunking in the murky caverns of '90s romance, survival may demand lessons on how to be a little less nice.

"If women weren't attracted to jerks, they would die out as a species," says Kevin Madden, 28, an electronics engineer from South San Francisco. "Being called a nice guy is the death knell in the dating scene. You watch the jerks getting all the action.

"So, you learn. People do what works."

Tim, a 30-year-old bartender who also asked that his last name not be used lest his cover be blown, put in his time as a nice guy — long, long ago.

"I used to be a hopeless romantic, treated women like gold," he said. "But after getting burned and dumped enough times, I learned that if you blow them off, they come back for more. Even a monkey in a cage can learn that much."

Nor are women completely blameless for this education process, says Kuriansky. "If all women were jerk busters, if they all blackballed and said no to men's jerky behavior, guys wouldn't do it. They do it because it works."

HOW DID WE GET into this schizoid mess — nice guys acting like jerks to attract women who say they like nice guys but secretly lust for jerks?

Think of the culture as a drunken driver, swerving madly from one roadside ditch to another. Appalled by the rhino-skinned patriarchs of the '50s, the woman's movement demanded (and got) kinder, gentler men who were in touch with their feelings, changed their fair share of diapers and never forgot Mother's Day.

This was dandy. Except that — sorry guys, and thanks for trying — many women are finding that they're just not turned on by these Gentlemen Georges.

Jennifer Witherington sure wasn't. "God knows I've tried to go out with the right people," says Witherington, 30, a special-events planner in San Francisco. "I dated a man who gave me presents and flowers, always called, always did what I wanted, paid for everything, sensual, sensitive — every girl's dream.

"I dumped him for Jerry here, who calls me 15 minutes before he wants to see me, never pays for anything and goes out and parties all night when I'm sick.

"But Jerry's exciting, unpredictable — I just think Jerry is incredibly sexy and the other guy just wasn't."

IN HIS RUNAWAY best-seller "Iron John," Robert Bly writes, "The male in the past 20 years has become more thoughtful, more gentle, but by this process he has not become more free. He's a nice boy ... but many of these men are not happy.

"They had learned to be receptive, but receptivity wasn't enough to carry their marriages through troubled times. In every relationship something fierce is needed once in a while."

Confusion occurs when men substitute a superficial shellacking of jerk-hood for their missing internal "fierceness." A thin skin of wimp-be-gone will impress no one for long; nor is it, says Kuriansky, likely to bring the nice-guys-in-hiding much joy.

"Nice guys just shouldn't try to be jerks," says Kuriansky. "All they'll accomplish that way is to attract the wrong kind of woman, who wouldn't want them as they are — who won't appreciate who he is in his soul."

Some wedding cakes don't march down aisles of tradition

N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — Weddings often take on a fantastical air: ethereal brides swathed in lengths of tulle; rambunctious little boys, dressed as ring bearers, transformed into still, solemn creatures.

At a window exhibit that opened recently at Asprey, a gift store in Trump Tower in Manhattan, the wedding cakes no longer resemble cakes. They look like boxes, baskets and pottery.

"The exhibit is a salute to brides," said Robin Raw, president of Asprey New York, a subsidiary of the British company Asprey, which sells porcelain, flatware and jewelry. It is also, Raw said, a ploy to lure brides to register at Asprey, which is co-sponsoring the exhibit with Bride's Magazine.

"The cake symbolizes the finale of the whole ceremony, the party, the event," said Sylvia Weinstock, the owner of Sylvia Weinstock Cakes Ltd. in Manhattan. "It almost competes with the dress." Mrs. Weinstock made a cake that looks like a series of baskets, from which flowers cascade.

Her specialty is icing flowers. She buys fresh flowers from the flower market in Manhattan and takes them home, where she opens them up and studies them in detail as botanists do.

Josiah Wedgwood's 18th-century pottery inspired a cake by Cheryl Kleinman, a Manhattan cake designer. The three-tiered cake, shaped like a temple, is the familiar Wedgwood dusky gray-blue trimmed with white neo-classical motifs. A cherub perches on top, while dancing maidens decorate the second tier, and acanthus leaves the third.

Lavishly wrapped hatboxes form the theme of a five-tiered wedding cake by Colette Peters. The top, third, and bottom layers have gold-striped lids, tied with a bow. The second and fourth layers are iridescent white, with a diamond-shaped quilted pattern, where the interstices of the diamonds are marked with silver balls.

DEAR ABBY

Free of cancer at last, man frees wife as well

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: More than a year ago, you published a letter from "Mac in Oregon." He told you about his life and his battle with cancer and said he hoped his wife would not spend her life alone after he died.

Van Buren

Well, Mac lost his battle on May 30. He fought long enough to show great courage, but not so long as to destroy those he loved. He was as unselfish in death as he was in life.

I knew Mac for 42 years. He taught me about life, love, truth and mercy, and left me (and others) with sweet memories and a treasure trove of lessons about what is truly important. He wasn't rich, powerful or famous, but he was my dad. Rest in peace, Mac — we love you still. — TIM McSWAIN, LINCOLN PARK, N.J.

DEAR TIM: My heartfelt sympathy to you and your family. And now, as a tribute to Mac, I'm printing your father's letter that appeared in my column on April 24, 1990:

DEAR ABBY: Thank you for supporting the widow who started dating three months after her husband died. You were right to say, "The time to show respect for one's spouse is while that spouse is living." Here is my story, and there must be thousands of husbands (and wives) who feel as I do.

My wife and I had many good years together. We raised kids, lived through joyous good times and horrendous bad times.

I am in my 18th month of chemotherapy for various cancers. I may live three months or five years. It doesn't matter how short or long my life will be, but it's reasonable to assume that I will die before my wife does.

I have had a more rewarding and fruitful life than I probably deserve, for which I am grateful. But the day I die, my last thoughts will be regret that I shall leave her alone. It's sad to know that after so many months of total concentration on my welfare — days of putting up with my misery and never letting me see her own misery — her reward will be to be left alone.

Abby, she is not the kind of person who should be alone. So I tell her now, and I want my kids and all my friends to listen: "As soon as you possibly can after throwing my ashes off the boat into the Pacific, wrap the memories of our life together around you — and begin a new life. If three days, or three months after I'm gone, you find a man who will love and cherish you for a few years as I have for so many — go for it! You've earned it." — "MAC" IN OREGON

DEAR MAC: Your sincerity rings true, leaving me uncharacteristically speechless. Thanks for a two-hankie letter.

DEAR ABBY: You have stated twice in your column that both of the Wright brothers were bachelors.

Wilbur Wright died at the age of 45, a bachelor. Orville Wright lived to be 77 years old and married late in life. His wife was not as old as he was, but they had no children.

You were correct in stating that the Wright brothers do not have any direct descendants. — HELEN L. THOMAS

DEAR HELEN L. THOMAS (not to be confused with Helen Thomas, veteran White House correspondent for United Press International): Thank you for attempting to set the record straight.

The New Encyclopedia Britannica, Volume 19, Page 1033, states: "Both the brothers died bachelors."

Everything you'll need to know about planning a wedding can be found in Abby's booklet, "How to Have a Lovely Wedding." To order, send a long, business-size, self-addressed envelope, plus check or money order for $3.95 ($4.50 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, Wedding Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054. More female employees relocating

WILTON, Conn. (AP) — By the year 2000 it's expected that one out of every three employees relocated by their companies will be a woman.

Basing this estimate on a 10-year market research study, Harvey Auger, president of PHH Homequity, said corporate transfers of women jumped 60 percent over the past five years and now account for 16 percent of all employee moves.

Auger attributed much of the gain to women attaining upper management positions in ever-increasing number.

"Ten years ago," he said, "the number of women being relocated was too small to measure."

Modesty dies when children are born

By Erma Bombeck

Since Demi Moore's Vanity Fair appearance, which gives new meaning to "mother of all covers," I've read a host of male reactions to it. They range from "disgusting" to "shocking" and back again to "breathtakingly beautiful."

Bombeck

As a mother, I feel bound to tell you you're missing the point. This is Demi Moore's second child. I'll repeat that. This is Demi Moore's second child. Translated, that means modesty is no longer a word in her vocabulary.

I am willing to bet that before the birth of her first offspring, she wore weights in the hems of her maternity tops. She demurely crossed her legs at the ankles at all times and requested two sheets in the gynecologist's office. All that changed when she entered the hospital to deliver.

There is a stream of men we have never seen before who whip in and out of our hospital rooms like they are caught in a revolving door. They invade our bare chests with stethoscopes and throw back the sheets to "take a look at what we have here." They thump, probe, squeeze and push on every part of our bodies. They interrupt our baths to inquire about our irregularities and watch us struggle with hospital gowns that are too small to set a cocktail glass on.

There should be a sign over every delivery room in the country: HERE ENTERS THE LAST MODEST WOMAN ON THE FACE OF THE EARTH!

When I delivered my second child, I shared a room with a young woman giving birth to her first. She was so modest she referred to her pregnancy as "something in the oven." When she was examined, she turned her head to the wall and bit her lips until they bled.

Two days after she delivered, she approached a man in the hall and said, "Doctor, I'm nursing. Does this look normal to you?" and proceeded to drop her robe. A nurse guided her to her room and told her she had just bared herself to a maintenance man.

The loss of modesty is a given. You have no control over it. From that day on, your body is never your own. Your children will not only watch you when you shower, they will bring along their little friends. When you are using the bathroom, they will unlock the door with a shish kabob skewer. You sit at the breakfast table with your robe open. It doesn't matter anymore.

After I left the hospital following the birth of my first child, I somehow knew I'd never be the same again. At that time what I was feeling didn't have a name. After this summer, I suspect it will be known as the Demi Moore syndrome.

Postal Service to offer postage-paid envelopes

By Barth Healey
N.Y. Times News Service

An unlikely stationer, the U.S. Postal Service, will print return addresses on envelopes embossed with either a regular 29-cent stamp, which shows a blue star, or a flashier 29-cent one emblazoned "Love."

Post offices can supply the order form and Notice 18, "Printed Embossed Stamped Envelopes from the USPS." Delivery takes about six weeks.

The envelopes come in two sizes, 3⅝x6½-inches, or 4⅛x9½-inches, and can be ordered with windows to show the addressee; the minimum order is 500 envelopes.

The cost is $156.40 for 500 of the smaller envelopes with the regular stamp (or 31.3 cents each, including postage) and $158 for 500 of the smaller "Love" envelopes (or 31.6 cents each).

Boxes of larger envelopes, or envelopes with windows, cost a few dollars more.

Printed return addresses are also available on 11.1-cent embossed envelopes used by nonprofit organizations like PTAs and civic organizations.

For some, act of shopping becomes addictive behavior

By Daniel Goleman
N.Y. Times News Service

The couple had a combined income above $350,000, but neither of them could control the urge to go on spending sprees.

Finally, at the end of one month they found themselves penniless, their credit cards to their limit, their checking account overdrawn. They did not know how they would find the money to eat for the last few days of the month.

So, in desparation, they cashed in their last liquid asset: travel and hotel awards they had earned for airline travel. The couple flew to Hawaii and stayed there in a hotel with a prepaid meal plan. And so they survived another month.

The tale of the Hawaii trip came to light during a meeting of a self-help group for compulsive spenders that the couple had joined to fight their buying habits.

Of course, most of the stories told by members of the group were far more grim; rare are the compulsive spenders with such elegant solutions to their desperate finances.

Those in the self-help group are part of a growing number of compulsive spenders, for whom shopping has little or nothing to do with the specific objects purchased. Instead, new studies are finding, the trip to the store has become a ritual assurance of love and self-worth, offering an escape from loneliness, despair and anxiety.

WHILE MANY shoppers occasionally make a purchase for such reasons, the new research focuses on those who continually act against their own better judgment, making purchases that they ignore or regret afterward. The research offers a methodical diagnosis of the problem, analyzes some of its psychological causes, and suggests what treatments might be most effective.

The problem cuts across all income levels.

"We find compulsive shoppers with incomes under $10,000 a year, and over $300,000 a year," said Dr. Thomas O'Guinn, an associate professor in the College of Communications at the University of Illinois. His research has found that for compulsive spenders of all income levels, an average of 40 percent of household income after mortgage or rent goes to pay for past purchases, as against 22 percent for the general population.

About 6 percent of people fall into the category of compulsive spenders, according to a 1989 study by O'Guinn and Dr. Ronald Faber, a researcher in the School of Mass Communications at the University of Minnesota.

They define compulsive spenders as people who say they are continually unable to control the urge to buy despite the overwhelming burden of debt.

They base their estimate on the extent of the problem on data from 386 people who have joined self-help groups and from a comparison survey with a random sample of 285 people.

They used the first group to determine a profile of a compulsive spender and then questioned those in the random sample to estimate how many there were in the general population.

RESEARCHERS SAY the problem seems to be more common among women than men: in self-help groups for compulsive spenders, about three-quarters of participants are women, said O'Guinn. But, he added, "Women may be more likely than men to admit the problem or seek help. The true proportion may be closer to 60 percent women, 40 percent men."

Other researchers see the problem as extremely common.

"Almost all of us are compulsive buyers to some extent, some more than others," said Dr. Alain D'Astous, a business professor at the University of Sherbrooke in Quebec.

One hallmark that immediately sets compulsive shoppers apart is repeated purchase of things they do not use or even hide away.

"It's not the products they buy, but the process of buying that matters to them," Faber said. "When you ask them, 'Can you tell us about something you bought that was really meaningful?' they typically can't think of a thing, even though they've spent tens or hundreds of thousands of dollars."

Researchers are finding the emotions that drive people to compulsive spending have much in common with those seen in people with other addictive habits.

One of the most marked is low feelings of self-worth; shopping seems to be used to bolster sagging self-confidence. That may be the reason that interaction with salespeople matters so much to compulsive shoppers, O'Guinn said.

"They'll tell you about a shopping binge: 'I knew I shouldn't have bought this, but I didn't want to hurt Maggie's feelings,'" he said. "When you ask, 'Who is Maggie?' They'll tell you she's the clerk at Neiman Marcus. Some of them will list shopping clerks among their best friends."

Faber added: "Clerks give some compulsive shoppers a much needed feeling of importance, of feeling good about themselves. One woman said her most valued possession was a thank you note from a clerk from a store where she often shopped."

Another factor that abets the compulsive shoppers' habit is an unusually strong ability to fantasize.

"They can easily dissociate spending from its consequences," said O'Guinn. "That's how they rationalize going over their credit card limit or writing bad checks. They're easily capable of deluding themselves with a vague fantasy that they have some extra money coming in."

Shoppers often fantasize that they have more money than they really do, O'Guinn has found. Their fantasies of affluence are often fed by going to expensive stores. "They're drawn to stores that allow them some escape from their every day reality," he said.

COMPULSIVE SHOPPERS also score high on tests of neuroticism. They are not only more anxious and depressed, on average, than most people, but they use shopping to soothe themselves. Many go on shopping binges when their feelings are hurt.

For still others, a strong psychological undercurrent in their shopping is a desperate need for approval. Most of what these shoppers buy is not for themselves, but for other people, like their children.

The patterns that mature into compulsive shopping may begin in childhood, some researchers say.

In studying compulsive shoppers, D'Astous found that they tended to have had little control over the impulse to buy and their parents did little to encourage control. Many remembered that even as children they spent whatever money they got immediately, and that their parents bought them whatever they wanted.

In a 1990 study of 394 teen-agers, D'Astous found that those teen-agers who already showed signs of compulsive shopping rarely consulted with their parents before buying and had parents who seemed unable to control their own shopping impulse.

These teen-agers were also unusually susceptible to influence from their peers and had relatively low self-esteem.

There are several distinct types of compulsive shoppers, Faber and O'Guinn have found.

For example, "binge buyers" are set off on a shopping spree by some upsetting event, such as being stood up on a date.

"They binge only occasionally, but when the do, they buy great amounts," Faber said. "One woman would buy from catalogues, binging three or four times a year. Once, when a fight with her husband upset her, she ordered $5,000 worth of clothes from an L.L. Bean catalogue. She was never able to wear most of them."

ANOTHER TYPE, "daily shoppers," feel the compulsion to go to the store every day, and become nervous and tense if they do not go. Even if they do not buy large amounts every day, their steady purchases add up quickly.

"One woman would get up, get her kids off to school and her husband off to work, and leave for the mall at 9:30," Faber said. "She'd be there when the stores opened at 10, and sometimes make two or three trips back home to unload before the kids got home at 3."

Less common are the "multiple buyers," people who repeatedly buy several of the same item.

Typical was a woman Faber interviewed who said that "the clerk was so nice, I felt I should buy three raincoats," adding, "I might leave one somewhere, or one might be dirty when I need to wear it."

Elizabeth A. Edwards, a graduate student at the University of Michigan who is studying several hundred compulsive shoppers, said compulsive shopping "fits the addictive cycle, where you find that shopping relieves tension, so that the next time you feel anxious you go out and shop again. And because the shopping itself intensifies pressures, it feeds on itself."

Dr. Carla Perez, a psychiatrist in San Francisco, said people can benefit from a self-help group or therapy "if your life centers on spending to feel better."

She said, "If buying is the high point of your day, then you're a compulsive spender whether you think so or not."

Perez, who has run therapy groups for compulsive spenders, added: "The problem can exist even in people whose debts aren't out of hand. The key question is whether you are spending for all the wrong reasons."

SHE MAKES SEVERAL recommendations for overcoming the problem in her book, "Getting Off the Merry-Go-Round" (Simon & Schuster, 1990).

Beyond obvious measures, like reining in expenses, she suggests joining a self-help group. The largest reliable group, Perez said, is Debtors Anonymous.

Shop "only when you feel calm and are using a list," Perez said. "Take time to carefully mull over each purchase, waiting to buy it another day if you are not sure; have someone else shop for you if you are feeling weak or certain stores are too high risk for you."

Rosemary Wells shows off some of the items relating to the tooth fairy at her home in Deerfield, Ill. Wells has been researching the mythological creature for 20 years and has a collection with 500 items, surveys and articles on the subject.

Expert discovers going price for lost tooth is $1

By Cliff Edwards

DEERFIELD, Ill. (AP) — Brace yourself: Rosemary Wells has spent 20 years researching the tooth fairy, and among her findings — the going rate for a tooth under the pillow is one inflation-eroded dollar.

Wells, who runs a desktop publishing business at home, has assembled surveys, articles and some 500 tooth-fairy items — including dolls, pillows, paintings, cartoons and stories — to understand the myth of the dental sprite who dispenses money for molars.

"It's a rite of passage, a very important time in a child's life," she said.

Wells found out through a survey of 2,324 dental patients across the nation that 88 percent of parents use or plan to use the tooth fairy concept with their children. She also found that the going rate is about $1.

Of course, inflation gums things up. A buck in 1991 is worth only 9 cents in 1930 dollars, when a kid got an average of 21 cents, Wells said.

No one knows what the tooth fairy looks like, but almost everyone has ideas.

"You've got your basic Tinkerbell-type tooth fairy with the wings, wand, a little older and whatnot," Wells said recently. "Then you have some people who think of the tooth fairy as a man, or a bunny rabbit or a mouse."

The Chicago-based American Dental Association, after several hours of brushing up on the subject, issued a no-comment.

The tooth fairy's origins are obscure, Wells said. As far as she can tell, tooth fairy lore really took flight around the turn of the century.

"It's tied to the right of passage, a stage in growth of the individual. The time when we mark off the child's first tooth. It's remembered in every culture and predates Christianity," Wells said.

"Our cultures remembers it with the tooth fairy. Some cultures have a rat or mouse, or they throw it to the sun or they might bury it or a mother keeps it in her apron. The Japanese throw it in the air, hoping the new tooth comes in straight and good."

Wells, a 60-year-old PhD in English, began researching the topic in the early 1970s when she was teaching scientific writing at Northwestern University Dental School's dental hygiene department.

Dr. Irene Goldenberg, family psychologist in the psychiatry department at the University of California at Los Angeles, said myths and rituals play an important part in a child's development.

"This one is a nice one because it makes something good happen from something that might be painful or frightening, and it even makes parents feel better when they do something to make a child feel happier," she said.

"Of course, it's one of the more outrageous myths," Goldenberg added. "That's why we have the expressions, 'She still believes in the tooth fairy' and 'If you believe in that, you believe in the tooth fairy.'"

The other part of the tooth fairy's mission — the part that many dentists like — is promoting proper care of teeth.

The Kentucky Dental Association once set up a tooth fairy hotline that got so many calls that officials had to give her "laryngitis" before the campaign was over.

One folklore researcher thinks parents are teaching their children the wrong lesson with the tooth fairy.

"The tooth fairy is modeled after the exchange ritual of our capitalistic society," said Tad Tuleja, director of the undergraduate writing program at the University of Massachusetts in Amherst. "Children learn to take an item, even a part of their body, and exchange for coins."

'Smart' products: Mental boosters or scam?

By Lisa M. Krieger
Hearst News Service

SAN FRANCISCO — It's 2 a.m. at the beach, and a tribal gathering of 400 young adults is taking place beneath the full moon. They dance joyfully to the primal beat of computer-generated music blasting from a huge sound system.

This is not the usual drunken boogie-till-you-puke party. These young people are fueled by equal doses of exuberance and something very new: powdered "smart" drinks with dashing names like Psuper Psonic Psyber Tonic and Energy Elicksure.

Enthusiasts say these "smart products" sharpen their mental abilities. Critics call them nothing more than a money-making scam.

Known on the street as "smart drugs," most are in fact souped-up vitamins or amino acids, called nutrients, sold legally through a rapidly expanding distribution system. Others, however, are potent drugs available in the United States only through a doctor's prescription. Legal in other countries without a prescription, these drugs can be easily purchased through the mail.

WHATEVER THEY are — and their effectiveness is widely debated —"smart" products are attracting new converts daily. Last spring, hundreds turned out to hear former '60s Yippie Jerry Rubin speak on the nutrients in San Francisco. The nutrients are available at the Smart Lounge in San Francisco and at the city's hipper private parties.

"Drinking one or two, we can stay up and enjoy all the energy, the music, the creative environment," says Neysa, a tawny 20-year-old.

Unlike LSD or other hallucinogenics, "smart products" create no sensory pyrotechnics. Unlike Ecstasy, there's no crumbling of inhibitions. They lack the high of marijuana or the numbing effects of alcohol.

Enthusiasts say the sensations derived from smart nutrients and drugs are clarity, ultra awareness and high-octane energy. With evangelical zeal, users describe "26-hour-days," and "incredible productivity," all without jitters or unpleasant "crashes."

"It's transformed my life," says Mark Rennie, 41, an attorney, artist, entrepreneur and, now, a "smart" salesman. "Seventy percent of people who try it come back for more.

"This is a huge wave. I've been a trend surfer for 20 years, and let me tell you, this is big," says Rennie, who sells nutrient drinks called "Wow,"and "Be Your Best," distributed by Dallas-based Omnitrition International Inc. He also sells five other product lines.

And although he does not distribute the prescription drug Hydergine, used to treat mental decline in Europe, he has tried it and calls it "as close to a miracle drug as there is."

THE DRUGS AND nutrients work in "mysterious" ways and are "hard to quantify," enthusiasts say. As Ken Kesey said of an earlier generation, "Either you're on the bus or you're off the bus."

In the United States, researchers are trying to treat Alzheimer's disease by using drugs that improve the brain's ability to get energy from oxygen and glucose.

What's not known is whether the drugs actually boost mental clarity when taken by young, healthy people — or if they are even safe. The long-term studies simply haven't been done.

"You've got billions of years of evolution fine-tuning the system — and it works. If you're going to say, 'Oh boy, I'm smarter than million of years of evolution,' you better know what you're doing," warns a University of California-San Francisco professor of psychiatry, who requested anonymity.

As for the nutrients, scientists doubt whether they work at all. They credit any increased mental zippiness to a "placebo effect" —users are so convinced the substance will work that it actually does.

A UCSF clinical pharmacist, who also requested anonymity, says: "Whether the normal person gets smarter has never been tested scientifically. Most of (these nutrients) are not terribly toxic unless you take tons."

The American Council on Science and Health cautions: "Although amino acids are natural substances, they may be harmful when consumed in pure form or in large amounts."

THE U.S. FOOD and Drug Administration does not make a fine distinction between smart drugs and smart nutrients. If claims are made that any substance, even a nutrient, boosts mental abilities or carries any other claim that it can change body or mind, the FDA considers it a drug that must clear strict regulatory requirements.

FDA spokeswoman Mary Margaret Richardson gets livid when she hears about either smart drugs or nutrients. It doesn't matter if the product happens to be a vitamin or mineral, not a drug, she says.

"We have absolutely no drugs approved for (the purpose of mental enhancement)," she says. "If there are false claims being made that something affects the structure of function in the body, that's a violation of the Food, Drug and Cosmetic Act."

Omnitrition, the main distributors of smart nutrients, does not claim its products affect the mind — although its salespeople do. Rather, Omnitrition packages and sells such products as "Wow," "Focus" and "Be Your Best" as "nutrients for the brain."

"We market a complete line of nutritional food products that are very tasty," said the company's attorney, Ruth Ann Box. "Only one of our products has a slight stimulating effect in that it contains the same amount of caffeine as a cup of coffee."

HOWEVER, UNAUTHORIZED literature distributed by Omnitrition salespeople in San Francisco makes strong claims. For "increased physical and mental alertness ... (take) 'Wow' or 'Go for it' twice a day," says one handout.

But the only true miracle of smart products is the skyrocketing profits of investors, say critics.

Omnitrition, which reportedly sells the products to thousands of salespeople around the country, had sales of $6 million in June, $4 million higher than in April, according to an inside source.

Salespeople say they attend training sessions, watch videotapes, and buy into the business by purchasing inventories of smart product.

The heavy sales pitch turns off some would-be sympathizers.

"I took it for a couple of weeks and didn't feel anything, honest to God," said one woman who was inspired to buy $100 worth of products after hearing Rubin at the Whole Life Expo in May.

"There's dollar signs in their eyes," she says. "What's in these products? How do they work? How are they made? They didn't answer our questions."

BRIEFING

Count mixed

The rig counts were mixed this past week, according to Baker Hughes Inc.

The company reported that the Permian Basin lost one rig, dropping to 93, while the U.S. rig count posted an increase of 17 rigs. The U.S. tally is now 845.

Of the oil producing states, Texas posted the highest gain, eight rigs. The steepest drop was in Louisiana, which lost seven rigs.

Sims appointed

AUSTIN — Senator Bill Sims, D-San Angelo, has been appointed by the Governor to serve on the Interstate Oil Compact Commission.

The purpose of the Compact is to conserve oil and gas by preventing their physical waste. As the Governor's appointee to the commission, Senator Sims may execute agreements for the State of Texas to extend the compact.

Sims will work with the commission to find methods, practices, circumstances and conditions for bringing about the conservation and prevention of the physical waste of oil and gas. Sims will also make recommendations to the commission for the maximum reecovery of oil and gas.

Area wells sold

FT. WORTH -- Arch Petroleum, Inc. announced an agreement has been reached to sell 197 producing wells in the Permian Basin and Southeastern New Mexico.

Plains Petroleum Operating Company has agreed to purchase the interests in the wells for $18.5 million cash.

Prices lower

A tank stands ready to take production. Oil prices were mixed during the week, climbing higher on unfounded rumors of refinery fires and lower U.S. gasoline supplies and falling amid supply and demand pressures. After posting a 26-cent rise Wednesday, prices retreated 41 cents to $21.27 Thursday after a sell-off due largely to internal forces. The posted price went as high as $20.50 before closing at $20.00.

Seminars talk water and H2S

By Melia McEwen
Staff Writer

Two topics of prime concern to both West Texas citizens and energy producers will be covered at seminars presented by the Texas Railroad Commission. Both seminars will be at the Midland Hilton this week.

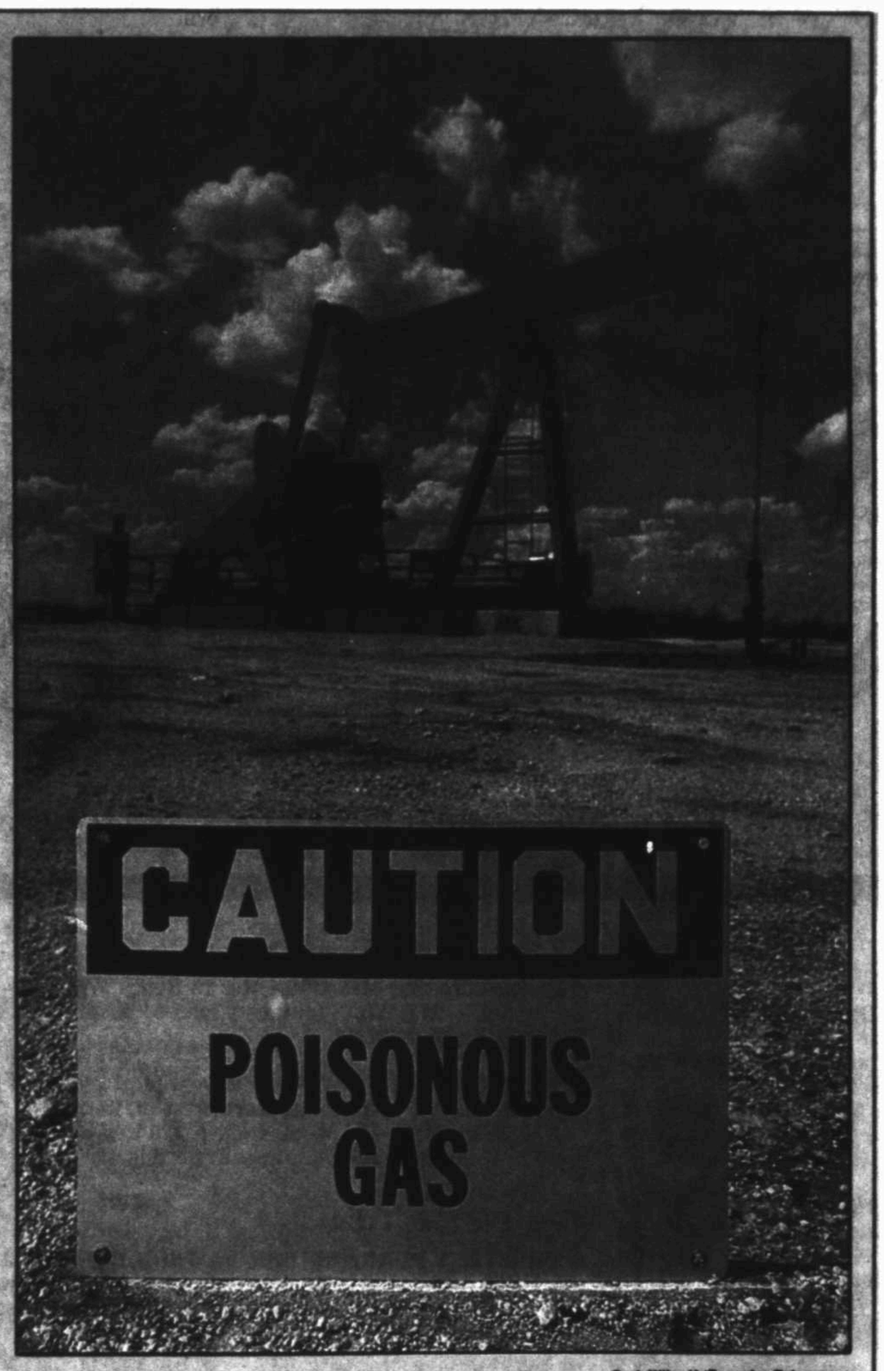

The first seminar will be Wednesday from 7:30 a.m. to 4:15 p.m. and will cover water protection, an important subject in arid West Texas. Mark Henkhaus, district director with the Railroad Commission, said the purpose of the seminar is to show operators methods they can use to meet commission pollution prevention rules.

The second seminar, to be held Thursday from 7:30 a.m. to 11:45 p.m., will cover hydrogen sulfide safety. Henkhaus pointed out that this topic is of major concern in the Permian Basin, because "in West Texas we do have a significant H2S presence. Most West Texas production has H2S." He cited as examples the Foster and Cowden oil fields, both of which are situated under the city of Odessa.

Hydrogen sulfide is a colorless, transparent flammable gas that can accumulate in low places. In concentrations as low as 10 parts per million it has an unpleasant rotten egg-like odor; it starts making a person ill in concentrations of 100 parts per million and can kill within minutes in concentrations of over 700 ppm.

A variety of commission rules, regulations and forms will be covered in

Economist rethinks oil tariff

By Chris Van Wagenen
Staff Writer

In May 1990, the Federal Reserve Bank of Dallas suggested a 25 percent import tariff as one of three remedies the U.S. should examine in light of an ever-growing dependence on foreign oil.

Yucel

The study, written by Mine Yucel, a Fed senior economist and Carol Dahl, an associate professor at Louisiana State University, suggested failure in attacking the problem could have an adverse effect on the U.S. economy.

That was 13 months ago.

Today — five months after Operation Desert Storm — the U.S is no closer to a national energy strategy.

As for the Fed study, like many before it, solutions that took into account a tariff, gasoline tax and $5 a barrel subsidy for producers has faded into obscurity.

Even Yucel, who had favored the tariff as a means of easing U.S. vulnerability, dismissed the suggestion, opting instead for a fourth option that still fails to address producer problems.

"At the time I thought it (a tariff) was the best way to go, and I still think it might work, but now I'm leaning toward the idea of a gasoline tax with (reserve) increases in the Strategic Petroleum Reserve."

Although the Fed report was completed long before the Iraqi invasion of Kuwait, its purpose remains relevant. How prepared is the U.S. in event of an oil supply shock?

Yucel said it's clear now that the 1990 study failed to take into account one factor — that being the Strategic Petroleum Reserve located on the Texas Gulf Coast.

When President Bush authorized the opening of the reserve during wartime operations, Yucel said the order had an unusual calming effect on the general population, offsetting a nationwide buying binge.

She now believes U.S. holdings in the reserve should be increased from 560 million barrels to 1 billion barrels, coupled with another increase in the gas tax.

Yucel said such action would not only decrease consumption at the pump, but address emission problems relevant to the Clean Air Act.

"That looks like the best way to go about it," said the economist, referring to the fact that the U.S. now imports nearly 42 percent of its oil.

And that figure, according to the authors, could double within 20 years time if current conditions persist.

However, Yucel said computer models used in the study didn't reflect what could occur if additional exploration and production is eventually permitted in certain offshore shelves of California and the Alaskan Natural Wildlife Arctic Refuge.

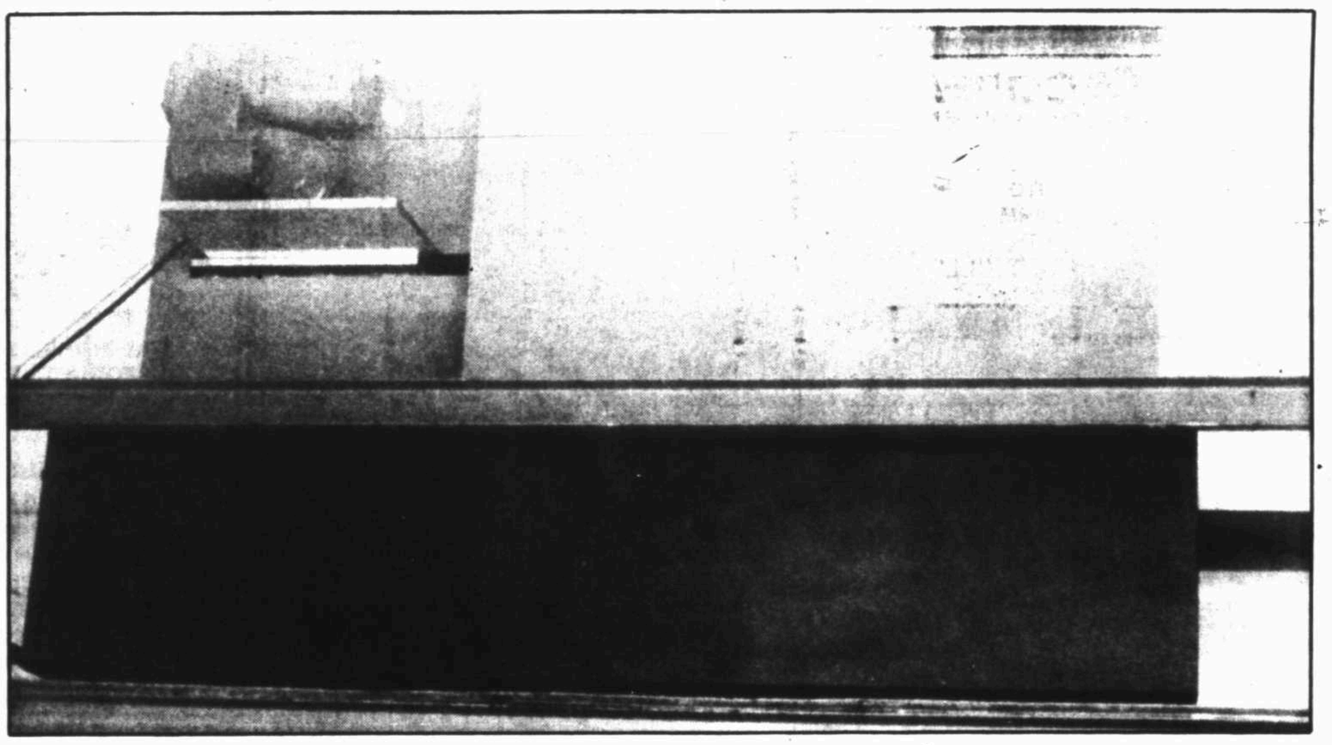

"If those areas are opened and the finds there are significant, that could soften the (speed of) decline we now face," she said.

That decline, according to the study, would most certainly occur using either the $5 a barrel subsidy or tariff.

In the case of the subsidy, the study claimed that such support would act as a catalyst in increasing domestic supplies, leading to an earlier depletion of resources, eventual higher costs for U.S. producers and consumers and curtailed production in the later years.

Although the subsidy would cut import shares in the early years by encouraging exploration and production, the

Pumped up over heavy crudes

By Chris Van Wagenen
Staff Writer

It's a matter of economics.

For years, standard pump jack technology has been used to lift medium to low gravity crudes from marginal production wells at a cost ranging from $8 to $10 a barrel.

But now one California company thinks it has a better idea — an idea it believes can produce the same amount of oil at a cheaper rate.

After five years of research and development, Concord-based Cablelift Oil Corp. is preparing to unveil a patented technology during a 30-day demonstration project scheduled later this month at a Bakersfield lease operated by California Crude Oil Co.

"We've been out in the field (experimenting) with this, now we're ready to demonstrate what we have," said Cablelift President Michael Ennis, a former Texan who started the company in 1985.

With assistance from Texas A&M University, Cablelift developed and downsized a system designed to lift lower API grade crudes (from 10 to 28) at a fraction of the cost of a standard pump jack.

Texas Crude to drill in Peru despite ruckus

By Anne Pearson
Hearst News Service

HOUSTON – Texas Crude Exploration, targeted by environmentalists who don't like its plan to drill for oil in a Peruvian nature preserve, says its executives plan to go to Peru in late August to sign the controversial exploration contract.

The ruckus that erupted early this year is over Texas Crude's plans to explore Peru's Block 61, located in Pacaya-Samiria, a nature preserve in northern Peru.

Environmentalists from Lima to Washington claim PetroPeru, the government oil company, is illegally offering Texas Crude the block, which they say was put off-limits by the Peruvian Congress last year as part of a new environmental act.

Al Curry, operations manager for Texas Crude, said on Monday the contract is legal because it has the approval of eight government agencies, the Congress and the president of Peru.

Fernando Sanchez Albavera, Peruvian minister of energy and mining, last week called it "a closed case," Curry said.

"At this point, we don't have any reason not to sign" the contract, he added.

Meanwhile, environmental groups are keeping up the pressure.

Curry said he met with two representatives of Houston Rainforest Action last week and twice has asked to speak to a membership meeting about the Peruvian venture. Leaders of the group have refused to give him a hearing at their general meeting, he said. Houston Rainforest Action plans a demonstration for Aug. 1 at the company's Travis Street offices.

Environmentalists say the reserve is one of the last refuges of the nearly extinct Amazon manatee and is the breeding ground for important species of turtles and fish.

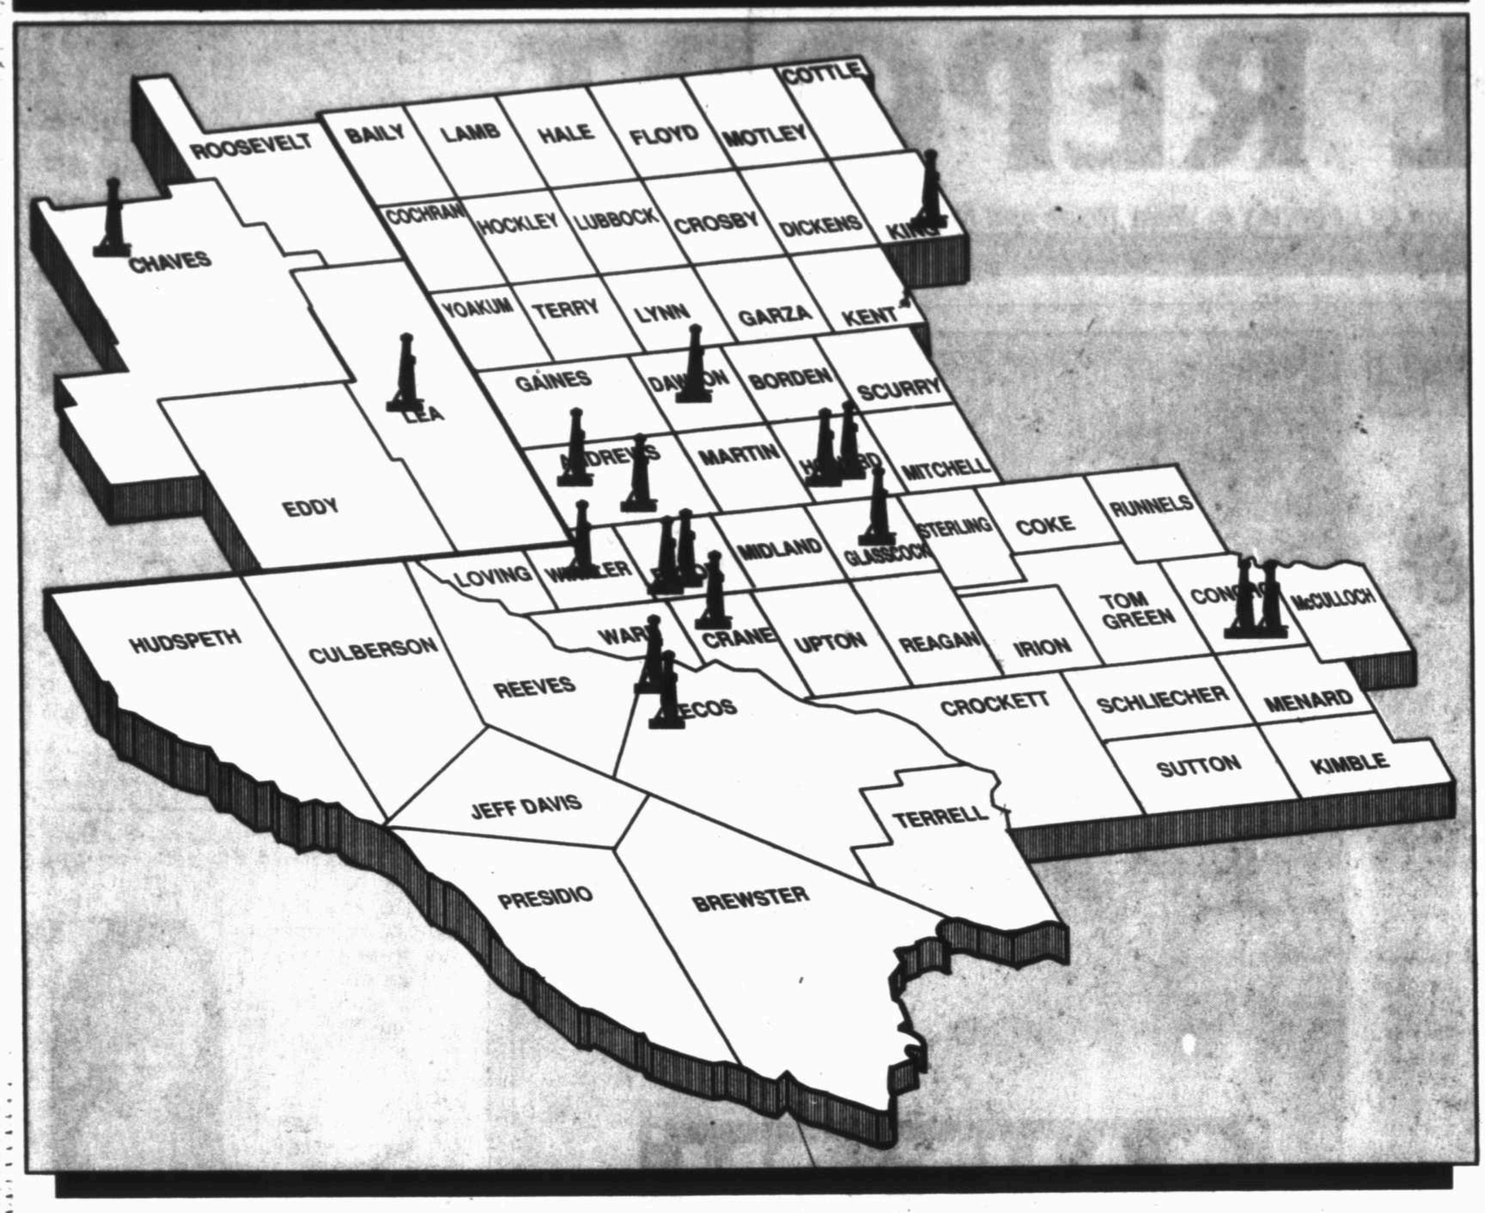

They claim an oil spill there would devastate the ecosystem because the water moves so slowly.

Texas Crude would have the right to look for oil in a 2.5-million-acre area, but Curry said that even if his company makes significant discoveries, such as those made by Conoco in Ecuador, it would clear no more than 1,000 acres of land.

Though there are no guarantees there will never be an accident, Curry said, "U.S. companies can (operate in the rainforest) and minimize the damage."

Curry said the only reason his company is waiting a few more weeks to sign the contract is that it first wants to see new regulations springing from a July 1990 law that environmentalists claim makes exploration in Block 61 illegal.

Halliburton profit falls

DALLAS (AP) — Halliburton Co. said its second-quarter profit fell 31 percent to $32.2 million due to a drop in oil and gas drilling activity that reduced income of its energy services division.

The company earned 30 cents a share on revenue of $1.79 billion during the three months that ended June 30. During the same period last year, Halliburton earned $47.1 million, or 44 cents a share on revenue of $1.69 billion.

Thomas Cruikshank, chairman and chief executive officer of Halliburton, said the reduced profitability of its energy services business "largely reflects curtailed spending by our customers in gas producing areas of the United States."

Energy services had operating income of $40.5 million in the quarter compared to $64.2 million last year. International business was up but not enough to make up for a decline in the United States, the company said.

Oil issues little changed in 42 years

By Harry Spannaus

A friend of mine brought me a worn and yellowed copy of the Midland Reporter-Telegram that he had found behind the back of his desk drawer when he removed the drawer for cleaning. The energy section was entitled the "Petroleum Pioneer Edition" and had some very interesting articles about oil and gas activities. Try these for size.

Spannaus

■ January 2, 1949: The oil industry began the new year by cutting crude oil production. The Texas Railroad Commission cut the daily crude allowable by 250,985 barrels; production had averaged 2,515,700 barrels per day previous to this reduction.

■ March 15, 1949: The Texas Railroad Commission directed its fourth consecutive slash in crude oil production. January production was cut by 250,000 barrels, February by 66,000 barrels, and March by 200,000 barrels. The April orders to cut another 234,211 barrels per day would bring Texas daily production to 1,994,360 barrels. The order for reducing crude production was made by the TRC after operators and crude purchasers had asked for such reductions due to a surplus of stocks and declines in demand.

■ May 1,1949: Washington, D.C. The need for government regulation of prices for crude oil and products as a permanent peacetime measure is suggested in a sweeping attack against the oil industry by the Interior Department. The heart of this new, secret analysis is an accusation that the industry cannot be trusted to set prices that are fair to the public.

■ May 8, 1949: Independent oilmen seek answers on imported crude. Independent oilmen gathering in Houston at the mid-year meeting of the IPAA want Congress to answer the question: "Are domestic petroleum markets to be surrendered to foreign oil?" According to the IPAA, crude imports had forced domestic production to be cut back by 1 million barrels daily. January and February 1949 imports were placed at 35,947,000 barrels, an increase of 6,399,000 or 24.4 percent over the same period in 1948. (Note: Monthly figures suggest imports at 6 million barrels per day.) Conversely, crude oil exports for January and February totaled 20,606,000 barrels (343,433 barrels per day), a 15.1 percent increase over a like period in 1948.

■ April 2, 1949: Congressman Ken Regan of Midland discussed the dangers of the present volume of foreign oil imports at the annual convention of the Texas producers and Royalty Owners Association in Houston.

Well, some things have changed and some have not. The foreign crude oil import fiasco is still haunting us. The politicians are still shouting and raving about the threat of imports on domestic oil and gas and/or U.S. security but no one is really doing anything about it and they can't until the administration's policy of cheap oil regardless of the source is changed.

There have been dozens of bills introduced in the Congress proposing an import fee of some kind on foreign crude oil. Independents have never come out in strong favor of a fixed or variable import fee because it's simply more government overregulation. The Independent Petroleum Association of America never supported such a fee until the last couple of years — the main support came from the state and regional oil and gas associations which were mostly made up of independents who were not influenced by the majors with foreign production and other considerations to weigh in their decisions to not favor taxes on crude oil imports.

In Texas we have another hang-up regarding import fees. Senator Gramm (R) is against and Senator Bentsen (D) is for. While some may consider this a 50/50 split, I can assure you it is not. Its trade-off really sides with the non-producing state majority, which holds a 4:1 advantage over the producing state minority. In this case, it's a decisive defeat for import fees, which is further kindled by the Bush Administration's rejection of the idea.

The variable import fee is not really a bad idea. We have import fees on wine, shoes, shingles, automobiles, candy, etc. Why not crude oil? A variable import fee on crude oil can act to raise the value of both domestic and imported crude oil and/or it can act as a floor price to insure the value of crude oil never falls below a predetermined level. It really stabilizes much of the world crude oil market value and it eliminates the price volatility the industry has complained about since the crash of crude oil prices in spring 1986. A guarantee of a floor price will assist the banks in making energy loans, it will revitalize outside investment capital and it will provide finders of oil, the independent, some certainty (positive psychology) that a chance exists for making a profit in a business of high risks and chance.

Many opponents of a floor price argue that it would hurt economic growth because low energy prices are good for the economy. This is also alleged to be the federal government's position, but it's a conflicting policy when the Feds raise gasoline taxes without really caring if the price increase to the consumer would hurt economic growth or not. To some, this argument also overlooks the economic harm resulting from oil price volatility which discourages investment, reduces labor, adds to unemployment, cuts state and federal tax revenues, etc. But we are back to the 4:1 ratio disadvantage again. Heads they win — tails we lose.

I find it difficult to choose what is best for the industry. The administration finally has admitted that the free market is not the answer to oil price stability. By now we all know there is no free market when the majority of the world's oil reserves and supply are owned and controlled by governments, not free enterprise.

So what has changed from the petroleum issue situation of 1949? Not much. Crude oil imports are increasing. The influence of foreign oil heavily influences crude oil price. The need for governmental price regulation (floor price) is still being suggested as one cure for a faltering domestic industry. Domestic oil and gas producers are still not trusted by the majority of Congress or by the public in general. The only thing different is that the TRC no longer has to cut Texas crude oil production allowables because we can't come close to producing our supply demand. Why? Because just like in 1949, too much influence by foreign oil, too much control by foreign governments, too much volatility and unfairness in oil and gas prices, too much distrust by Congress and the public and too little influence by oil and gas to get anything of value accomplished to make the U.S. more energy self-sufficient and less dependent on foreign crude oil. Will we ever get a crude oil import fee or floor price? I doubt it unless supplies become so scarce that the total nation becomes desperate and places panic-type demands upon the Congress to intervene in the "free market" process.

Even with a subsidy, Yucel said it still wouldn't be enough to offset what the U.S. is currently buying from other countries. "We've basically used up our reserve base over the years, so we're always going to be looking toward imports."

Gulf Coast towns vie for mini-refinery

ABBEVILLE, La. (AP) — The Port of Vermilion and the Port of Iberia are among three finalists for a $150 million Arco construction module project.

The project, which Atlantic Richfield Companies designed for use at its northern Alaska Oil and Gas Drilling and Production Operation at Prudhomme Bay, will involve $150 million in labor and construction over 30 months.

The third finalist is Freeport, Texas.

"It's our version of the Super Bowl, World Series and the NBA finals," said John Oubre, director of the Port of Iberia. Arco called the administrators of the three finalist ports of Wednesday, officials said.

Thirty site proposals were submitted to the California-based company, from which the three finalists were chosen. Officials predict the project could employ as many as 800 to 900 full-time workers, and as many as 1,100 at peak construction times.

"It's a great honor and reflects well on the port's structure in Louisiana that two could be selected from this state," said Jay Campbell, director of the Port of Vermilion.

The construction modules built at the chosen port will be "mini-refineries" to be used in the discovery, development and processing of oil and gas at Prudhomme Bay in Alaska, Oubre said.

Contractors handling the project for Arco will tour the finalist sites, and will make a final decision sometime this fall. Actual construction could begin as early as Spring 1992.

Freeport already has an infrastructure, and with access to deep water channels in the gulf, could give the two Louisiana ports some stiff competition, Oubre said.

SEMINARS: Cover two important topics

(From 1F)

"No one really knows about us or our technology, but five years ago who knew about horizontal drilling," said Ennis, who has built a company based on other similar systems dating back to 1897.

What Cablelift's own design from the past is a patented 1½-inch beaded cable that can pull up-hole a 3-inch diameter column of oil from depths as low as 3,000 feet.

Constructed in three modules, the 600-pound unit is directly attached to the well casing using a pulley-connected drill string capable of drawing on three times its own weight.

Ennis said because the module, itself, is encased, any oil, gas or water that doesn't enter the collecting sump at the top drains back down the casing. "So as far as the environment concerns go, there are no leaks."

"I know the larger oil companies could probably care less about marginal resources like these, but I think it (the technology) could benefit a lot of independents who still operate strippers," said the 41-year-old president.

Ennis, who worked as an aeronautics engineer for American Airlines during the 1970s, said he always had an interest in the oil business, but went searching for a different niche.

Thus evolved Cablelift, a company comprised of 12 stockholders. "All of them have been involved in a piece of (developing) this...and they've all been involved in the oil business to one degree or another."

Ennis said what now costs $8 to $10 a barrel using a pumpjack, cost $2 to $3 a barrel using Cablelift's patented technology that utilizes a three-horsepower motor.

Although the system hasn't been tested in Texas, Ennis said plans are to look at wells in the state at depths of 1,500 feet once results of the Bakersfield demonstration have been compiled.

"After all," he reasoned, "Texas is number two when it comes to heavy crudes. The whole idea is we want to efficiently produce five to 10 barrels a day."

Cablelift's system is capable of efficiently producing anywhere from two to 40 barrels per day.

"It really depends on two things. The size and the diameter of the column and the speed of the cable. There are more problems getting into the borehole (because each is different) than with the lifting process."

Ennis said he believes much of what producers shut-in can be salvaged. Cost of a fully-installed Cablelift system runs between $6,000 and $10,000.

Over the years, Ennis said a number of cable lift technologies have been applied to problems applicable to heavy crudes. Some used belts. Some used link chains.

But the technology, according to Ennis, really didn't gain notoriety until the early 1980s, when a man named Owen Jackson proved that such a system could efficiently lift heavy viscosic oils.

However, all of them faced problems related to the use of a weight at the bottom of the hole. When a chain or belt broke, it fell to the bottom of the well making fishing almost impossible.

Ennis claimed Cablelift's uses a pulley attached to a rigid drill string which allows for easy retrieval, thus eliminating the problem.

It also differs from other systems using belts or chains which only oil would adhere too. That's because like a pump jack, Cablelift's system produces oil and water thus maximizing existing production in place.

Ennis said the technology will not work with API gravity oil above 28 degrees because lighter crude will not adhere to the cable.

"But then this is cost efficient management of a marginal resource...a lot of producers could stick this (system) on and produce that five to 10 barrels at an economical rate," he said.

the water protection seminar. The objective of the seminar, according to a brochure advertising it, is to review commission rules and regulations on water protection devised by the commission. The commission is charged by statute with the responsibility to protect surface and subsurface water from pollution that might result from activities associated with the exploration, development, and production of oil, gas or geothermal resources.

Among the topics covered at the seminar will be Statewide Rule 8, which covers water protection, Rule 9, concerning disposal wells, Rule 13, covering casing of a well, Rule 14, covering the plugging of a well, and Rule 46, covering water injector wells. Also covered at the seminar will be commission forms such as Forms W-14, H-1 and H-5.

"Operators need to be aware that the commission is enforcing its environmental protection rules and seminars like this will show them what is required of them to comply with these rules," Henkhaus said.

Discussion leaders for the water protection seminar will be Lori Wrotenbery, assistant director, Underground Injection Control, Leslie Savage, geologist with the UIC, Noel De La Rosa and Fernando De Leon, engineers with the UIC, and Bill Hall, assistant director, field operations.

The H2S safety seminar will present an overview of Statewide Rule 36, which Henkhaus said was written "for the protection of the general public from H2S gas. This rule exists only for the protection of the public." Not only will the session discuss Rule 36, which covers oil, gas and geothermal operations in H2S areas, but aspects of field operations, H2S safety precautions and equipment, and Form H-9, Certificate of Compliance.

Henkhaus said that, as a rule, area operators are in compliance with commission rules for both water protection and hydrogen sulfide. In regards to the latter, he said, "Operators complying with Rule 36 have, in several instances, prevented harm to the public."

The H2S safety seminar will be presented by Henkhaus and Wayne McClung of the Midland office, and Bill Hall.

Cost of the water protection seminar is $50 per person, and $25 per person for the H2S safety seminar.

PBPA gives 1991 Top Hand award

The annual Permian Basin Petroleum Association "Top Hand Award" will be presented to Carlton Beal, Sr., during the Association's President's Banquet at its annual meeting in Midland on November 8, 1991.

Beal

Beal formed Beal Trobaugh and Associates (BTA) in 1954. He developed the proprietorship over the years with his four sons into a joint venture operation which today employees over 80 people with offices in Midland and Denver.

BTA has become one of the Southwest's largest family-held independent oil and gas exploration partnerships.

His membership in professional societies, to name a few, include the American Petroleum Institute, the American Associaton of Petroleum Geologists, the Western Geophysical Association and the Independent Oil Producers Agency.

Tenneco posts quarter loss of $14 million

HOUSTON (AP) — Tenneco Inc. blamed the recession Wednesday in announcing a $14 million loss for the second quarter, a dramatic decline from the $206 million posted for the same period last year.

The diversified company's loss amounted to 15 cents per common share for the three months ended June 30, compared with earnings of $1.61 a share for the 1990 second quarter.

Revenue slipped 2.8 percent to $3.5 billion for the quarter from $3.6 billion a year ago.

Mitchell Energy plans gas storage facility

THE WOODLANDS - Mitchell Energy & Development Corp., has announced that is building a natural gas storage facility near Beaumont.

PB-KBB Inc., has been contracted to design and build the facility, and Winnie Pipeline Co., a subsidiary of Mitchell will, own and operate the facility.

Construction will begin in 1992 for this 10 year project. The facility is expected to house 24 billion cubic feet of storage gas.

Fina honored for restoration efforts

The Soil and Water Conservation Society honored Fina for its work to protect and restore the wetland of South Louisiana.

Fina was presented the Good Land Use Award at the annual meeting of the Louisiana Association of Conservation Districts.

"We are taking action to solve environmental problems at many of our locations," said Fina president Ron W. Haddock.

In Louisiana, Fina manages over 7,000 acres of marsh. Through an extensive program Fina has stabilized water levels and improved for fish and wildlife.

Maxus Energy suffers loss during quarter

North Dakota yields significant find

Staff Report

LOS ANGELES — Pacific Enterprises Oil Co. has announced the successful completion of an oil well that confirms and significantly extends the limits of a field it discovered in North Dakota's Williston Basin.

The PEOC-operated well, the SE Russian Creek No. 13-17, drilling on the Simon Butte Prospect (Section 17, T141N, R95W) in Dunn County, was completed in March in the Interlake formation in the interval between 11,500 feet and 11,528 feet.It tested initially at a rate of 570 barrels of oil per day on an 8/64 inch choke at a flowing tubing pressure of 1,400 psi.

The Simon Butte field was discovered in September 1990 with the PEOC-operated SE Russian Creek No. 42-18.

Since March the No. 13-17 has produced more than 100,000 barrels of oil flowing at rates as high as 1,700 barrels per day, indicating the likelihood of a significant oil reservoir, the company said. Currently the well is choked back, producing 840 barrels of oil per day on a 14/64 inch choke at 760 psi.

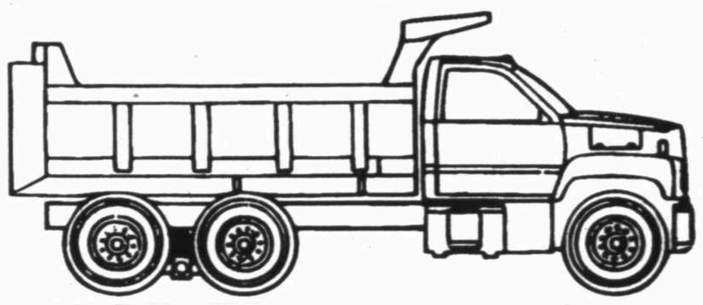

PEOC owns 7,360 gross acres (4,300 net) on the prospect.

Smoke, flame and crashing cars are all part of demolition derbies like the one annually held at Twin Cities Speedway. This year's competition is scheduled for Saturday, Aug. 17. Adult tickets are priced at $10; free children's tickets are available.

Bam, boom, wham!

By Georgia Todd Temple
Staff Writer

A hush falls over the crowd as the announcer says, "Gentlemen, start your engines." Suddenly, the sound of metal crushing metal fills the air. Fans cheer as cars begin hitting cars. Flames shoot into the sky. The fans go wild.

This scene is not taking place in a movie. It's happening in real life.

Demolition derbies have been drawing Texas crowds for decades. When the gates open at Twin Cities Speedway at 5 p.m., Saturday, Aug. 17, destruction derby drivers will have come from as close as West Texas and as far away as Grand Rapids, Minn.; Las Vegas, Nev. and Boulder, Colo.

In the lineup will be a team of Houston drivers who are returning for a second chance to walk away with the prize money. Some would call it a feud. Others would say it's a vendetta.

Houston-native Johnny Patke, who is sponsored by McClurg Auto Parts of Snyder, simply refers to it as a "good grudge."

Patke, 38, and four other Houston drivers competed in the 1990 demolition derby at Twin Cities Speedway. Only one driver placed. Wayne Jones, received 10th place and left Midland-Odessa with $500.

Following the 1990 derby, the cars loaded on the transport trailer for the trip back to Houston looked as if they were destined for the junkyard.

"They didn't want us Houston boys coming down there and picking up their money," Patke said, remembering last year's competition. "So, we got a good grudge against them now."

Patke, who drives a Chevy station wagon, said he was envious that those competing in derbies at the Twin Cities Speedway can drive Chrysler Imperials.

"They outlawed them down here in Houston. They are just such a good, good car. You can beat on them and beat on them, they just don't quit. Those older model Imperials, they were just tough, tough cars."

Patke, who has been competing in demolition derbies throughout Texas for more than a decade, said he was working on alleviating part of the problem he feels he faced last year during the derby. He's calling on his friends.

"We have to have more help down there," Patke said.

Among Patke's friends is one driver whose reputation precedes him wherever he goes. His name is Red Shanks, known

Turner plays tough private eye

By Dana Kennedy

NEW YORK (AP) — If you like your movie stars to act like movie stars, Kathleen Turner doesn't disappoint. She sweeps into a hotel room, flashing a dazzling smile and attended by an entourage, all of whom fade in the background as she steps forward to shake hands.

Even when she bends over to allow a makeup artist to minister to her mane of blond hair before the photo shoot, Turner remains the center of attention.

"You want me to stand where, here? Or a leetle over there?" Turner asks the photographer in her trademark flirtatious growl, affecting one of many accents in her repertoire. She's the daughter of a Foreign Service officer who moved his family all over the world.

But if you're expecting a spoiled diva, Turner, 37, will surprise you. Even though she's in the middle of a battery of interviews to promote her new movie, "V.I. Warshawski," about a tough female private eye, she fields questions and poses for pictures as gamely as an eager young starlet.

This single-minded professionalism may explain why Turner, who began her career as the quintessential struggling New York actress, succeeded so dramatically where many others have failed.

Within a month, she landed an agent, who also became her boyfriend. Within four months, she had a part in an off-Broadway play, within seven months she got a role in the soap opera, "The Doctors," and within nine months was on Broadway. in "Gemini."

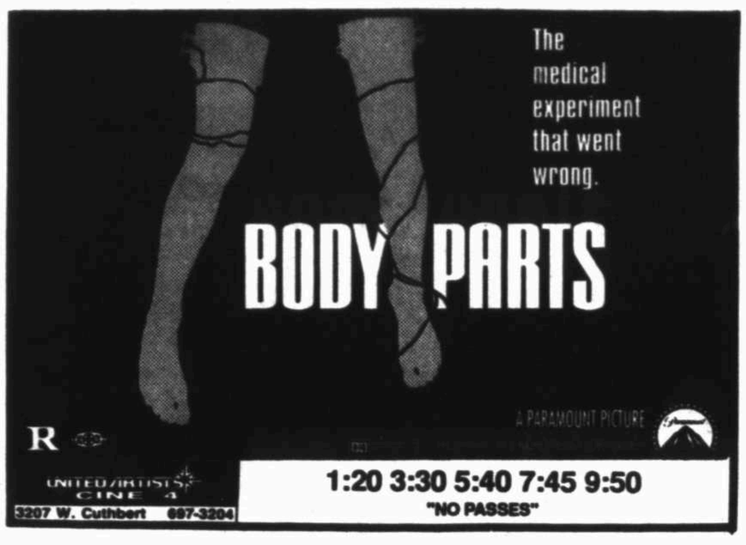

"You make up your mind that this is the career you want and you go on the attack," said Turner. "Your mission is to go on every audition until you get a break, and I did."

Almost as effortlessly as she conquered New York, Turner made the jump to feature films in what remains her most memorable role: the femme fatale Matty Walker in "Body Heat."

Turner's momentum has continued with starring roles in "Prizzi's Honor," "Peggy Sue Got Married," "Crimes of Passion" and last year's "War of the Roses." Among her less successful films have been "The Man With Two Brains" and the Burt Reynolds vehicle, "Switching Channels."

"V.I. Warshawski" is based on Sara Paretsky's series of Chicago-based mystery novels. The cast is basically unknown; the biggest name is veteran character actor Charles Durning.

Turner hopes the movie, about a tough-talking, bone-crunching private eye, will help Hollywood see women as more than male appendages.

ENTERTAINMENT IN BRIEF

■ 3 'TEXAS' actors have local roots

CANYON — A number of members of the 1991 "TEXAS" cast have roots in Midland.

They are Amber Adams, Alyson Aldridge, Fritz Anders, Todd Barclay and Eric Overstreet.

Aldridge

Anders

Overstreet

Miss Adams, who plays the leading lady role, is the granddaughter of Midlanders Mr. and Mrs. Al Bonton.

Miss Aldridge, a dancer in the production, is the daughter of Midlander Robert Aldridge. She attended Midland High School and Midland College.

Barclay, an actor, is related to Ira Moore and Ruth Neutron.

Overstreet, a technician, is the grandson of Al Overstreet, and the nephew of Mr. and Mrs. Buddy Cole and Mr. and Mrs. Ken Overstreet, all of Midland.

The outdoor drama "TEXAS," which plays nightly during the summer in Palo Duro Canyon, is the story of the settling of the area. It is presented by a cast of 80.

Centered around seven principal characters, "TEXAS" reveals how their eventual collaboration leads to the coming of the railroad and the formation of a new town.

Towering 600-foot cliffs serve as the backdrop for the open-air theater where every rock, bush and path behind the stage is part of the productions. Among the hundreds of props are a real train, an antique surry, a covered wagon and a windmill.

Noted for its spectacular sound and light displays, "TEXAS" uses the latest technology to bring the original ideas of Pulitzer Prize winning author Paul Green to life. An explosion of color highlights the finale as fireworks signal the end to each performance.

More than 2 million have seen the production since its beginning in 1966.

For tickets write "TEXAS," Box 268, Canyon, Texas 79015 or call 1-806-655-2181. Reservations need to be made as early as possible.

■ MOSC receives grant

The Midland-Odessa Symphony & Chorale has received a grant from the Unocal Foundation in support of the Youth Education Program.

The program includes 38 in-school concerts for the students in grades four through six in both the Ector County and Midland County public schools.

"Begun in 1983, the Youth Education Program allows musical growth oppoirtunities, often otherwise unavailable, to many young people in our area," said Susan Leshnower, a representative for the MOSC. "These concerts reach many culturally and economically disadvantaged students and introduce them to the world of symphonic music. The symphony considers itself a partner with the schools in the music education of the children in Midland and Odessa."

"The Midland-Odessa Symphony & Chorale makes a significance contribution to the quality of life in the Permian Basin," said David J. Kinzelman, vice president of Union Oil Company of California's Southwestern Division."We are impressed by the large number of students who are enriched through the Youth Education Program and are pleased to assist the Midland-Odessa Symphony in bringing symphonic, chamber and choral presentations into our schools."

"Companies like Unocal help us fund a broad range of musical activities at a high artistic level, a subscription series with classical and pops concerts, the Thouvenel String Quartet chamber music series, and the Lone Star Brass Quintet series," said Jerry Caddel, president of the board of directors of the symphony. "We are very grateful to Unocal for their interest in making an investment in the arts in our community."

For more information about the symphony and its upcoming season, call the MOSC office, 563-5269, for a brochure.

■ Jazz Classic slated

Tickets are now on sale for the 15th annual Midland Jazz Classic, set for Oct. 3-6 at the Holiday Inn Country Villa.

The annual event is presented by the Midland Jazz Association.

Musicians who have been invited to perform at this event include Clark Terry and Warren Vache, trumpet; Bill Watrous and George Masso, trombone; Scott Hamilton, Flip Phillips and Abe Most, reeds; Howard Alden, guitar; Paul Smith, Ralph Sutton and Buddy Weed, piano; Jack Lesberg, Milt Hilton and George Mraz, bass; and Jake Hanna, Jimmie Smith and Grady Tate, drums.

"It's a beautiful lineup," said Midlander Bobby Crues, a member of the Midland Jazz Association and a former professional dance band musician. "We have a new face this year and some that haven't been here for at least two years. We feel it's a well-balanced lineup."

Admission to the classic has increased $10 per badge and will be $135 for the four-day event.

"We have been able to hold our seat prices without an increase for nine years; however, higher-than-ever expenses and other circumstances are weighing heavily on our ability to present this excellent jazz party," said a release from the MJA.

"The price of transporting musicians to Midland has more than doubled since our last badge price increase, and technically oriented expenses continue to rise. We do give our thanks to the Holiday Inn Country Villa for holding steady their fees for houseing the Classic and to our wonderful corps of volunteers who annually give their help, without which we could not continue operate."

For more information or to purchase a badge for the classic, write the Midland Jazz Association, P.O. Box 4045, Midland, Texas 79704.

■ Disc jockeys compete

NASHVILLE — The 1991 Broadcast Personality of the Year finalists have been announced by the Country Music Association.

All interested full-time country air personalities in the United States and Canada were eligible to enter.

The finalists in the small market category include Permian Basin residents Dana Carole and Mike Lawrence of KGEE, Odessa.

Judging is conducted in two rounds by an anonymous panel of leaders in the broadcast industry. The first round determined this year's finalists. The second round will decide the winners in each market category. Categories include large market, more than 1 million metro; medium market, 250,000 to 1 million metro; and small market, under 250,000 metro.

Winners will be recognized on the CMA Awards Show to be telecast live Wednesday, Oct. 2, on the CBS network.

■ Dunn song to be aired

Radio station KNFM has announced it will play Holly Dunn's song "Maybe I Mean Yes."

"In an effort to give the Permian Basin an opportunity to decide for themselves whether or not they like the song, KNFM will not censor 'Maybe I Mean Yes' by Holly Dunn," said Julie Rich, music director for KNFM.

"She has requested that stations pull the song from their playlists due to the controversy concerning the misinterpretation of the song content," Ms. Rich said.

She added that radio stations have been asked across the country to decide whether or not they will play the song.

"The song has tested well with KNFM listeners and because of that it will not be pulled from our playlist," Ms. Rich said.

DERBY: Drivers win first event entered as The Undertaker. When he came to Twin Cities Speedway approximately 15 years ago, he walked away with first prize, a habit he has most places he goes. His success almost caused a riot, not among the drivers, but among the fans.

"They wanted to string me up for winning," Shanks recalled in a telephone interview. "Think about getting killed by 15,000 people."

Despite the countless derbies he's driven in since his first one in 1962, he remembers his experience at Twin Cities Speedway. The derby lasted an hour and 45 minutes and had no less than 138 cars entered in it.

"We had fun when we were up there," Shanks said, referring to himself and a friend of his who walked away with second place in the derby.

"We didn't have no problem with the drivers. The problem was with the spectators. When you win you're no good, but when you lose, you're OK," Shanks said, referring to the treatment many drivers receive when they compete outside their own marketplace.

Shanks, who after years of winning the derbies held in the Houston Astrodome now promotes the annual Pace-sponsored demolition derby held there, hasn't decided if he will compete at Twin Cities Speedway this August.

"If I decide to come, they'll know I've been there whatever I do," said the 51-year old, who got his nickname many years ago when officials said over the loudspeaker, "Red Shanks will undertake anything."

His car speaks for itself.

"It's black with 'The Undertaker' on the side," Shanks said. "I intimidate them."

Shanks, who also drives a race car, said he's not a poor loser.

"If they beat me, good for them," said Shanks. "I won't get mad if they beat me. I like everybody. They don't like me coming because it gives then less chance of taking money home. It don't mean I'm going to win. It changes the odds."

Shanks, who has been accused of having a sixth sense when it comes to driving derbies, said he believes preparation has made the difference for him.

"Little things beat you. A lot of cars ain't real pretty, but they work. 'I can be beat just like everybody else."

Another important ingredient which makes the difference in derby driving is the vehicle.

Patke said, "It's harder to find the cars that I would like to derby with." He said that he looks for older model "cars that still had leaf springs under the rear end — '76 down."

A '77 model car has "coiled springs, and they ain't worth a darn. They ain't as strong in the back end as one that's got a leaf spring up underneath there. You take older cars and hit newer cars and you'll tear them in half. These newer cars have more plastic on them than anything."

Patke is part owner in his father's salvage yard business, Patke Auto Parts. His father is not a derby fan.

"He kind of gets upset with me when I go way out of town to go to a race, and I tell him, 'It's not a race. This is not a race car.' And he says, 'It's the same thing. It's noisy.'"

Not only does Patke not race, he said, he has "no desire" to race.

His children and his girlfriend, Cynthia Aylor of Houston, fall into a different category than his father when it comes to derbies.

"All my kids are excited about it," said Patke, who lets them drive on the 13 acres which surrounds his house. "They have themselves a ball with it, do donuts and everything with it.

"My girlfriend drove in derbies before, and she's won a many of them, too," Patke said, referring to the women's derbies. "She's a hard-headed woman. She thinks she can compete with the men all the time."

Patke recalled the most frightened he's been in a derby car was not when his car caught on fire, which has happened several times, but when it rolled over on its roof with him inside. He laughed as he recalled foolishly releasing his seat-belt when he was upside down.

"I fell down and hit the bottom of the roof," Patke said. "I climbed out, and we turned it over. I did not see the other car that hit me, and my wheels was turned hard to the right. When that car hit me, it just went over."

Patke said the most dangerous hits on the track during a derby are the ones the driver doesn't expect.

"The hit that you don't see, that's the one that hurts you. The ones that you see that are coming, you can muscle up, tighten up, can take that hit. No problem. The one that hits you blind-side, that's the one that hurts you."

Besides winning numerous derbies and living in Houston, Shanks and Patke have something else in common. Both won the first derby they ever entered.

"I was scared as hell," Patke said. "I was scared and shaking till I got hit, and it kind of made me mad, and I forgot all about being scared then."

Shanks said he was nervous then and hasn't stopped being nervous. "You're always nervous," he said. "Every time."

Patke remembers that first win "changed his life."

"It just made me feel so good and so happy. I could have cried, I do believe. It just felt like starting a new life over again."

Despite all the talk, Patke is looking forward to returning to Twin Cities Speedway.

"The guys in the derby were all nice guys. I'm glad to come and be willing to derby with them."

As he thinks back over last year's derby at Twin Cities Speedway, Patke said, "When the derby was over, we all sat there and talked. When I was leaving, I told them to watch out for next year.

"We would have done the same thing if they came to Houston. We would have jumped on them right away and that's what happened.

"When they say, 'Start your engines,' then you're on your own. The out-of-towners get it first, then it goes on among home-folk."

YOUR HOROSCOPE

SUNDAY, AUGUST 4, 1991

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Consider going into business for yourself. If you are willing to work the long hours involved, there is no limit to how far you can go! Although a family crisis will demand your attention in November, December marks the beginning of a new romance. Postpone buying or selling real estate in early spring. You will enjoy greater social prestige by next May.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: pitcher Roger Clemens, Queen Mother Elizabeth, journalist Helen Thomas, biographer Kitty Kelley.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Follow an urge to get out and about early in the day. Other people will be delighted to see you. Relax at home during evening hours. Catch up on your professional reading.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Be more discriminating when choosing business or romantic partners. An expert's advice is worth the fee. A shaky relationship is more apt to deteriorate than improve. Join forces with an older person.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Your curiosity about a dream, business idea or fascinating subject could lead to an interesting discussion today. Express your love for someone openly. Romance thrives on mutual respect.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Seek unusual forms of recreation. A trip to a nearby but never-visited attraction could be just the ticket. A long walk would also do you a world of good. Daily exercise is essential.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Stop dwelling on the past and walk through the doors opening to you now. Family and home concerns are emphasized during this period. A loved one shares a confidence. Keep secrets.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): New alignments and collaborations increase your sense of well-being. Home life becomes more harmonious. Develop an artistic talent for enjoyment. A lively newcomer could turn your thoughts to romance.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You and your loved ones need to show greater sensitivity to each other's needs. Compromise is better than ruthless independence. Be more discreet about past romantic entanglements. Emphasize your future together.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Your mood is brighter and you have higher expectations today. Important talks appear on your schedule. Friends can help you achieve your aims. Romance may have to take a backseat to career.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov.22-Dec. 21): Even if you are on cloud nine for one reason or another, tend to practical matters promptly. Meet your obligations on time. Be completely aboveboard in all of your business dealings.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You have an interest in out-of-the-ordinary activities now. If you want to get away from the crowd and follow your own desires, do so. A delightful evening for romance.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): When contemplating a major project, look beyond the hard work involved. You can handle it! Concentrate on the financial rewards and improved lifestyle you will enjoy. Meditating brings you peace of mind.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): New faces and places are a source of inspiration now. Adventure beckons. A short trip will prove especially enjoyable. Choose your companions with care and consult a travel agent for the best fares.

Opening lead: Six of ♠

We don't know who irritates us more: the player who never returns partner's suit, or the one who always does. Both seem to forget that what distinguishes homo sapiens from the lower species is the ability to reason. Consider this hand.

North had a choice of rebids at his second turn: raising partner or rebidding the diamonds. With such excellent three-card support and a ruffing value, the raise stands out.

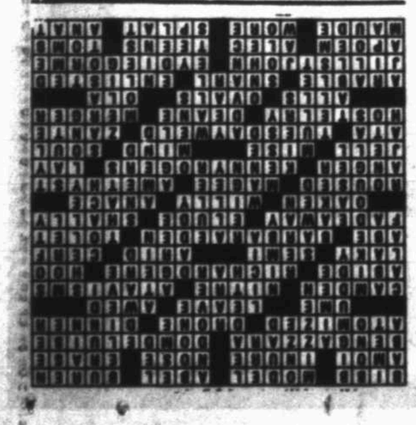

When this hand was played at rubber bridge, West took the first trick with the ace of spades and shot back another spade. A delighted declarer took the rest of the tricks—one spade, six hearts and five diamonds—instead of the nine that were South's limit had East not played mechanically.

When dummy comes down, East can see that the best he can hope for from partner is one of the four missing kings—declarer must surely hold at least three kings for his jump to game after a single raise from opener. If that king is in spades, the most the defenders can do is hold declarer to his contract by taking two spade tricks and the ace of clubs. If West holds either red-suit king, it is finessable and all the defenders could do would be to cash the ace of clubs and concede declarer the contract with an overtrick.

The only hope for the defense is that West has the king of clubs. Thus, at trick two East should have laid down the ace of clubs. That would have brought an enthusiastic come-on from West in the form of the nine of clubs, and a club continuation would have led to an inevitable one-trick defeat.

We are changing a hoary rubric. Henceforth, it will read: "Always return partner's suit unless common sense tells you there is a better play!"

Princess Stephanie pursues singing career as excuse to talk about her

NEW YORK (AP) — For a fleeting second, Princess Stephanie looks as if she will live up to her image as a spoiled jet-setter: She slouches on a sofa in her hotel suite, smoking cigarettes with a sulky expression and stretching her long legs on the coffee table.

Princess Stephanie

But when she opens her mouth, the princess vanishes. She is replaced by 26-year-old Stephanie Grimaldi, who may be the daughter of Grace Kelly and Prince Rainier of Monaco but talks and acts so normal it's as if she grew up in Kansas.

Though her first language is French, she fluently speaks American-accented English and calls herself "50 percent American." She talks candidly and without pretense.

She wears a white jersey, black jeans, silver-tipped cowboy boots and sports the kind of jewelry associated more with a New Jersey mall rat than with European royalty. Clunky silver rings adorn her fingers and one thumb, with several cloth wish bracelets on her left wrist.

"The truth is that I'm a very down-to-earth person," she said. "I've been called a brat but that's an insult to my parents. They didn't raise a brat. I'm not an immature, insensitive person."

Stephanie ostensibly is giving interviews to promote her first English-language record album, titled simply "Stephanie." Her first album was a major hit in France and a single from the album, "Irresistible," went to No. 1.

Though she has worked on the second album to the exclusion of much else for the past three years, she clearly has another agenda.

"I'm pursuing this career as an excuse to talk about me. I want to be recognized for me," she said. "With my songs and music, it's a way of sharing things with people that really have to do with me."

To hear her talk, the gilded life of a modern princess is more a prison than a pleasure.

"It's hard growing up in the limelight," she said. "People invent stories. They call me a man-eater. An innocent date with a friend becomes a major scandal. I don't even like all those jet-set parties."

She co-wrote the lyrics on "Stephanie" with her former boyfriend, Los Angeles record producer Ron Bloom. She hopes the music conveys a message.

"I get really frustrated being stuck with this image that I got when I was 18," she said. "People tend not to take me seriously. It was normal then to go out and have fun but I'm not like that anymore. Through this I hope people will see I'm a true person, not just this flake."

Even allowing for tabloid hyperbole, Stephanie's past has more than fed the gossip mill. Her notoriety began on a tragic note when her mother died in a car accident after suffering an apparent stroke while driving her daughter to their palace in Monte Carlo.

"I was 17 — it was a hard age to lose her," Stephanie said. "My mom was my best friend."

One of the songs on her new album, "Words on the Wind" is dedicated to her mother.

"I truly believe she's a part of me and that she's given me that extra confidence," Stephanie said. "I hope the song is a way to help someone else who's lost a loved one."

Stephanie appears both jaded and amazed by the press coverage of her family. She rolls her eyes when pointing to a copy of the latest issue of Paris Match which features a picture of her and her sister, Princess Caroline, on the cover.

"Here we are on the cover of one of the world's biggest magazines and we're just going shopping! Like, that's an international event?"

She is bitter, though, about how Caroline, 34, has been treated since her husband, Stefano Casiraghi, was killed in a speedboat accident last fall.
