Investigators have Pentagon payoffs on tape

WASHINGTON (AP) — Investigators in the Pentagon bribery probe videotaped meetings in which Defense Department officials allegedly took payoffs from consultants, sources close to the two-year investigation said Saturday.

The sources said that two key figures in the investigation, Victor Cohen, deputy assistant secretary of the Air Force for tactical systems, and James Gaines, a deputy assistant secretary of the Navy, appear on some of the videotapes. However, the sources declined to say whether alleged bribes turned up on the recordings of those two Pentagon officials.

The consultants shown on the videotapes also include Melvyn Paisley, the former procurement chief for the Navy whose office was searched on June 7 by federal authorities in the investigation, the sources said.

NBC News reported Friday night that Cohen would leave the Pentagon whenever a defense consultant would call, that his meetings with consultants were recorded and videotaped and that money changed hands.

The sources, meanwhile, said that Gaines also was videotaped at meetings with consultants in which highly confidential documents relating to Pentagon contracts allegedly changed hands.

The Washington Post reported that Cohen, deputy assistant secretary of the Air Force for tactical systems, is among those cooperating in the investigation.

Sources close to the case said this past week that Gaines is cooperating in the investigation. Those sources continued to make that assertion Saturday, while other sources and the Post said that while Gaines gave a statement to investigators earlier, he is not cooperating with prosecutors at this point.

Meanwhile, Defense News reported in its June 27 editions that Paisley, when he was the Navy's procurement chief under Navy Secretary John Lehman, initiated a change that effectively eliminated all but one company from a key procurement program in 1986.

The change was to drop plans for separate competitions on all six components of the Aegis weapon system and instead go with a winner-take-all scheme. The system protects ships from airborne, surface and underwater missiles.

The result of the change, Defense News quoted several unidentified industry officials as saying, was that hundreds of millions of dollars in Navy contracts for the Aegis system went to Sperry Corp., now Unisys Corp., one of the firms involved in the Pentagon bribery investigation.

Defense News quoted sources as attributing the shift that favored Unisys to Paisley's close association with William Galvin, a consultant to the company. The publication quoted several sources as saying that Galvin had boasted about having "wired" the Aegis competition in Sperry's favor.

Meanwhile, The New York Times reported in Sunday's editions that investigators probing Northrop Corp.'s involvement in the alleged fraud appeared to be concentrating on the company's contract to build a Navy target drone, known as the BQM-74C.

The drone is one of two major projects at Northrop's Ventura division, whose offices in Newbury Park, Calif., were searched earlier this month by FBI agents as part of the procurement investigation. The Times, citing unidentified sources, said the other Ventura project, a missile known as Tacit Rainbow, was not the object of the FBI search as had previously been reported.

In related news, Rep. Barbara Boxer said Saturday that the Pentagon, defense contractors and the Reagan administration "howled" about congressional attempts to reform the procurement process, such as a ban on military procurement officials quitting and immediately going to work for the defense industry.

Nation developing a deep thirst

By CHRIS VAN WAGENEN
Staff Writer

Mother Nature is getting absentminded. Somewhere along the line, she forgot how to make it rain.

The drought. In America's Heartland, where Midwest farmers are faced with one the driest growing seasons in recent decades, this cyclical phenomenon has created an insatiable thirst.

Pick a state. Hardly one in the union has not felt the drought's impact. The thirst is real and so is the damaging toll. Mineral-rich top soil that supplies corn and wheat, cheap river transportation, recreational lakes, and yes, even basic city supplies for bathing and drinking, are drying up around the nation.

Even in Midland, where property owners may still freely water their yards, the arid spell is fast approaching kill-off stage for one of the county's largest cash crops — 40,000 planted acres of cotton.

That's bad news for farmers like Vernon Chandler, who finally began to irrigate last Thursday. "Another week or two of this kind of heat is really going to make a difference."

So is Texas Agricultural Commissioner Jim Hightower, who last week compared certain sections of the state to the 1933-36 Dust Bowl years.

"We need to be treating this as an emergency rather than just appointing task forces up in Washington, D.C., to decide whether it's dry or not," he said"

Already, 40 Texas counties have been approved for federal drought aid. More are expected to follow. "It's not a matter of this year's drought," Hightower lamented. "It's been dry through the 80s."

Fortunately, for most Midland farmers, cotton crops still are relatively young — beneficiaries of a downpour that occurred in the county a little more than a month ago.

But time is growing critical.

No where so is that more true then in northwest Midland County. "They (farmers there) haven't had any moisture at all...the storms just passed them by," said Herb Sorley, executive director of the Agricultural Stabilization & Conservation Service, an agency of the United States Department of Agriculture.

For example, unlike other sections, northwest corner pasture conditions are running 80 to 90 percent below normal.

To worsen matters, Sorley said Midland County sustained a longer-period of winds this year, which sucked what rain did fall right from the ground. "The moisture we received fell fast and hard...there were very few benefits because most of it ran off into lower places."

And that's had mixed results in the county.

According to Midland Rancher Button Estes, what the area has lacked is one general rainfall. "I've been fortunate. We had two little rains last month...that's going to let us keep our cattle."

Matching funds may be ticket to airport trees

From Staff Reports

The goal — to plant 100 trees along the two main entraceways to Midland International Airport.

The cost — $25,000.

The incentive — a $12,500 matching challenge grant put up by Midlanders Lissa and Cy Wagner.

The project, which is being backed by the city, chamber of commerce and the airport advisory board, was proposed by Airport Board Chairman Ed Vogler two weeks ago.

Vogler, who contends Midland needs to leave a better first impression on its visitors, wants to paint a sea of green along La Force Boulevard and Wendecker Street — the airports two main thoroughfares.

The Wagners, who wholeheartedly support the effort, said they're willing to donate $12,500 if the same amount can be raised through individuals and businesses.

Six Midlanders to participate in national conventions

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

Now that Michael Dukakis and George Bush seem assured of presidential nominations, what's left for the National Convention delegates to do?

Lots.

Delegates to next month's Democratic National Convention in Atlanta and the New Orleans Republican National Convention in August have a busy job ahead focusing on what role they will play in fashioning the party platforms — the documents for Bush to use against Dukakis and for Dukakis to use against Bush in the fall campaign.

Midland will be sending one delegate elected from the 21st Congressional District and four at-large delegates to the Republican National Convention Aug. 14-18.

Bush

Dennis

They are George W. Bush, son of the vice president; State Rep. Tom Craddick; Lou Brown, fourth vice president of the National Federation of Republican Women; Republican National Committeeman Ernest Angelo; and Bobby Holt, Bush's national campaign vice chairman for fundraising.

Eva Dennis, a retired special education teacher, will attend the Democratic National Convention July 18-21. She was elected as a delegate — supporting Missouri Congressman Richard Gephardt — from the 25th Senatorial District.

With one exception, all of the delegates have attended prior conventions as their reward for an average of 25 years of volunteer work.

They all started in their grass roots precincts and worked up to county and, in some cases, state level. They all have spent hours and many dollars supporting candidates for political office.

Ms. Dennis will be attending her first Democratic National Convention and also make her first appearance at the National Education Association caucus, which takes place a day before the political gathering.

"The NEA encourages its members to get involved in which ever party they belong, though it is a nonpartisan organization," she said.

Keeping her on eye on educational issues and planks affecting senior citizens, Ms. Dennis wants to see Democratic Party support in the platform for federally funded day care centers, senior citizen programs and a renewed emphasis on nuclear disarmament.

Ms. Dennis will step on to the convention floor waving the Gephardt banner, though the candidate — who dropped out of the race shortly after the Super Tuesday primaries — stands no chance of winning the nomination.

She likes the idea of a Dukakis-Gephardt ticket.

Angelo won't play as major of a role in the 1988 Republican National Convention as he did four years ago, when he headed the GOP's arrangements committee.

However, the Republican National Committee will have plenty of work for Angelo when he arrives in New Orleans a week ahead of the rest of the Texas delegation.

Seven Marines killed in copter crash

TOKYO (AP) — A U.S. Marine Corps helicopter slammed into a hillside and burned Saturday while flying in fog near a nuclear power plant, and all seven Marines on board were killed, officials said.

The Sikorsky CH-53D Sea Stallion crashed about 30 minutes after leaving the U.S. Marine Corps Air Station at Iwakuni, in southwestern Japan, said Sgt. Nolan Wells of the station's public affairs office.

Names of the victims were withheld pending notification of their families.

Cloudy skies and dense fog were reported in the area at the time of the crash on the southwest tip of Shikoko island, but it wasn't immediately known if the weather contributed to the accident.

Since 1980, at least 88 people have died in accidents involving the Sea Stallion, or the later-model Super Stallion, the largest and most expensive helicopter used by the U.S. military.

Television footage showed Japanese and American rescue workers carrying bodies in sacks over terraced rice paddies less than two miles from a nuclear power station.

Fog swirled around the hill where the aircraft crashed and burned, and it appeared to be raining lightly. The wreckage was scattered over a wide area, according to a local police official who identified himself only as Sakamoto.

Japanese aviation law prohibits aircraft from flying over nuclear power stations and other nuclear-related facilities. There are about 30 such facilities in Japan.

The law also says that aircraft which must fly over such facilities due to bad weather or to avoid a collision, must take the least hazardous course or altitude.

A Japanese Defense Agency official said in a telephone interview that he saw "little problem" with the helicopter's flight path.

"We noticed the copter took a course several kilometers away from the plant," despite the poor visibility in the area at the time of the accident, said the official, who refused to be named.

The Marines were flying to their base at Camp Futenma in Okinawa, 580 miles away, where they were assigned to Marine Heavy Helicopter Squadron 402 of the 1st Marine Air Wing, Wells said. The United States has about 20,000 Marines stationed in Okinawa.

The Sea Stallion left Iwakuni, about 700 miles southwest of Tokyo, at 9:50 a.m. and crashed at about 10:20 a.m., Wells said.

The CH-53D is capable of carrying up to 55 troops or a cargo of 32,000 pounds. The single-rotor, twin-engine aircraft is made by the Stratford, Conn.-based Sikorsky Aircraft division of the United Technologies Corp.

The helicopter has had a series of operational problems and fatal crashes.

WORLD

In November 1985, the military grounded the helicopters after mechanics in a routine inspection discovered a defect in the locknut that helps hold the rotor blade assembly to the aircraft.

Sikorsky's former chief safety engineer alleged in a March 1987 court affidavit that metal mounts on the tail rotor gearbox of the helicopter have failed or been suspected of failing an estimated 60 times since 1968. Sikorsky attorneys said the man was a disgruntled former employee who was using internal company documents in violation of his contract.

Three Marines died in a Feb. 13, 1987 accident involving a Sea Stallion helicopter in the Trabuco Canyon area near El Toro, Calif.

Gas depot closed after fire; Two dead

GUADALUPE, Mexico (AP) — Officials closed a major gasoline supply depot as two more victims of the explosions and fire there died, lifting the official number of dead to four.

One company however said 13 of its workers were missing, and a newspaper accused authorities of hiding deaths.

A press release from Pemex, the government oil monopoly, also said 18 people were injured, four of them seriously.

The disaster began Thursday afternoon when three huge tanks filled with gasoline exploded one after another. The blasts and resulting fire with temperatures up to 5,400 degrees Fahrenheit forced about 10,000 residents of this northern industrial city to flee.

It was the second explosion and fire in a month at a depot operated by Pemex. On May 24, more than 100,000 people were forced from the area around a gas and kerosene supply depot in the northern city of Chihuahua. No one was hurt, but Pemex shut down that tank farm permanently.

The Monterrey company Constructora Quiroga y Villarreal, which maintains Pemex fire-prevention equipment, gave the Monterrey newspaper El Norte the names of 54 of its workers who it said were at the plant when the tanks exploded. It said 13 of those people had yet to be found.

Maria Estella Garcia, a company secretary, said that some of the missing "possibly died, because we've been told that there are people that they haven't been able to identify because they are so badly burned."

She said she did not know if that information came from Pemex or state health officials.

One of the dead, Vicente Quiroga Garcia, was owner-manager of the company, she said. She added that his son, company manager Vicente Quiroga Villarreal, was hospitalized with severe burns.

"They're Hiding Deaths," read a banner headline in the daily newspaper El Sol. The story said an El Sol reporter sneaked into the Monterrey Green Cross morgue wearing a Green Cross jacket and saw seven badly burned bodies.

Efforts to reach Pemex spokesmen, in both office visits and by telephone, were unsuccessful. Secretaries said they did not know when officials could be reached.

Many residents were ignoring police barricades and returning home early Friday, when it appeared the last flames had been extinguished. However, they fled in panic again when a fire reignited in one tank.

Pope calls Jews', Christians' suffering 'gift'

LORCH, Austria (AP) — One day after facing severe criticism from Jewish leaders, Pope John Paul II on Saturday cited Jews and Christians killed by the Nazis and called the victims' suffering "a gift to the world."

John Paul

The Jewish leaders said they objected to the omission of any specific reference to Jewish suffering in the pontiff's speech during his visit Friday to the former Mauthausen death camp.

Roman Catholic relations with the Jews have dominated the pontiff's second visit to this Alpine nation, which is observing the 50th anniversary of its annexation by Nazi Germany in 1938.

In Vienna, 50 protesters disrupted a theater performance of "The Deputy," a play highly critical of the role of Pope Pius XII in dealing with the Nazis. The protesters said it was improper to stage the play during the pontiff's visit to Austria.

"Not far from here is Mauthausen, where Christians, Jews and others were persecuted for many reasons, including their religion," he told 80,000 people at a prayer service. "Their suffering was a gift to the world."

The pontiff on Friday visited Mauthausen, Austria's most notorious Nazi death camp, where thousands of Jews were among the 110,000 inmates who perished.

His speech there prompted immediate criticism.

"The failure of Pope John Paul to make any specific reference to the suffering of the Jews while visiting the site of the infamous Mauthausen concentration camp is a matter of deep shock to the Jewish community," said Elan Steinberg, executive director of the World Jewish Congress.

The president of the Austrian Jewish Community, Paul Grosz, added late Friday: "We had hoped that the pope would evoke in a clear manner the particularly tragic character of the Jewish situation in the context of the Holocaust."

An estimated 6 million Jews died during Nazi rule.

The pontiff cited four concentration camp victims by name, all of them Roman Catholics.

Vatican spokesman Joaquin Navarro told reporters Saturday that the pontiff had no intention of slighting Jews. Navarro said the pontiff mentioned the Jews who died at Mauthausen during a brief stop at a memorial plaque set up in their memory.

On Thursday, the pontiff met with President Kurt Waldheim despite protests from some Jewish leaders. The Austrian president has faced allegations of complicity in Nazi war crimes but denied wrongdoing.

The pope spent Friday night in Salzburg, a scenic city in northwestern Austria. He has been delivering his speeches in German throughout the trip.

In Lorch, John Paul cited concerns of workers and farmers in the area. Many of the farmers in the far northern region are having trouble staying in business, often forced to take second jobs to make ends meet.

"The church stands by you when you have social and economic problems," the white-robed pontiff said during the outdoor prayer service.

The Polish-born pope frequently has called for respect for workers' rights and warned about the potential dangers of unbridled, profit-motivated capitalism.

"These are times when the hour of darkness seems to have descended upon us," John Paul said. "We hear daily of wars and suppression, deprivation of rights and catastrophes."

Before he spoke, several local farmers and workers had stood before the pontiff to tell him of the economic difficulties they have been facing.

About 85 percent of Austria's population of 7.5 million people is Roman Catholic.

Police intervened and took two of the protesters into custody.

WEATHER SUMMARY

From Staff and Wire Reports

The National Weather Service at Midland International Airport is predicting mostly cloudy skies for today and a 50 percent chance of thunderstorms and heavy rains.

The high temperature should reach the upper 80s, and the overnight low should be in the upper 60s. Winds should be out of the south at 5 to 15 mph.

Monday should be mostly cloudy with a 40 percent chance of thunderstorms. The high should be near 90.

The record high on this date was 105 in 1953. The lowest temperature on record was 59 set in 1958.

STATE

An upper-level, low-pressure system moving across Southwest Texas prompted showers and thunderstorms across most of West Texas Saturday, while East Texas rains began fading by the late afternoon.

National Weather Service officials issued a tornado warning for Lubbock County Saturday afternoon, but no damage was reported.

Scattered thunderstorms and showers were spread across most of West Texas in a line that stretched Saturday afternoon from Childress to Abilene and south to Del Rio. The only dry spots in West Texas were the Northwest Panhandle and the far west, the weather service reported.

Partly to mostly cloudy skies accompanied by scattered thunderstorms are expected through many areas of the state through Sunday.

High temperatures Sunday are expected in the 80s and 90s, with overnight lows dipping into the 60s and 70s.

Temperatures Saturday were mostly in the 80s and 90s across the state, but a few rainy areas saw highs only in the 70s.

The 3 p.m. temperature extremes Saturday ranged from 72 degrees at Junction to 98 degrees at McAllen.

Winds on Saturday were mainly from the southeast at 5 to 15 mph, but variable and stronger winds dominated in the areas with the thunderstorms.

NATION

A cold front brought lower temperatures to the northern Plains on Saturday after days of record heat, but more than 30 record highs were posted as the hot air moved across the Ohio Valley.

Temperatures across the northern Plains were 15 to 25 degrees cooler than Friday, but there was no relief from the drought across the region.

Temperatures across the lower Great Lakes and the Ohio Valley were 15 to 25 degrees warmer than on Friday. The hottest official temperature across the lower 48 states was 106 at Elkhart, Ind.

Relief was in sight as the cold front was moving southeastward across the Great Lakes and Sunday temperatures were expected to be in the upper 70s and low 80s.

High wind toppled trees and power lines in southeastern Michigan. Nearly 10,000 Detroit Edison Co. customers, including about 7,000 in Oakland County, were without electrical service Saturday afternoon, spokeswoman Lorie Kessler said.

Showers and thunderstorms were scattered across central and southern parts of Texas into parts of Oklahoma, Arkansas and Louisiana.

Thunderstorms also developed over much of the eastern half of Alabama and northeastern Florida.

Showers and thunderstorms also were scattered from the central California coast into much of Oregon and eastern Washington. Some of the thunderstorms were capable of producing brief heavy rain, gusty wind and hail over eastern Oregon.

Showers and thunderstorms moved across parts of eastern New York state and northern Vermont, dumping more than 1.75 inches of rain at Peru, N.Y., and more than an inch at Burlington, Vt.

Thunderstorms developed across parts of northeastern and central Colorado. A tornado touched down briefly near Watkins during the afternoon but did not cause any damage.

Temperatures around the nation at 3 p.m. EDT ranged from 56 degrees at Crescent City, Calif., and Santa Fe, N.M., to 106 at Elkart, Ind. The low for the day was 40 at Gunnison, Colo.

Richards may address Democratic convention

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas Treasurer Ann Richards, said to be the Democratic Party's choice as keynote speaker for next month's convention, confirmed Saturday she had talked with the party's chairman about the job.

Ms. Richards said in an interview with The Associated Press she understood after talking Friday with Democratic Party Chairman Paul Kirk that she was on a short list for consideration as keynote speaker.

"I think that the purpose of Paul's call was to get a biography and to make sure I would be available," Ms. Richards said, adding that she told him she would be.

Ms. Richards, 54, is known as a fiery populist with a quick wit. She said she does not know why she would be considered for keynote speaker, although she added, "I'm sure the fact that I have been a Democrat all my life and active in the party, and the fact that I am the first female in Texas to hold public office statewide in 50 years" played a part.

Official announcement of the keynote speaker is expected to be made early next week.

The Atlanta Journal and The Atlanta Constitution, in their combined Saturday editions, reported that two sources — both requesting anonymity — said the party and likely nominee Michael Dukakis have agreed on Ms. Richards. The New York Times reported in Saturday's editions that Ms. Richards was the leading candidate for the job.

Kirk on Friday refused to confirm Ms. Richards' selection. But Michael McCurry, the Democratic National Committee's press secretary, said Kirk would not deny that Ms. Richards is on a short list that he will discuss with party leaders this weekend.

Ms. Richards' selection is designed to solidify the party's support among women and to send political signals to the South and to Texas, a critical state in the November presidential election, the Atlanta newspaper said.

It is a "very positive thing" for women to be allowed "roles of prominence and responsibility" within a national party, Ms. Richards said.

"Women are playing an increasingly important role in politics in this country. They are, most of them, Democrats," she said.

Ms. Richards said she could not speculate how being the convention's keynote speaker would affect her decision to run for governor in 1990.

"I'm always pleased to be recognized and to have an opportunity for some visibility," she said.

The keynote speech is to be the main event of the convention's first night in Atlanta, July 18.

Bentsen calls for jail time for guilty in defense probe

HOUSTON (AP) — U.S. Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, calling the Pentagon scandal an affront to all American taxpayers, said Saturday that anyone found guilty of taking bribes and kickbacks in the case should go to jail.

Bentsen, D-Texas, said Americans also should demand an "honest accounting of every nickel that goes to national defense.

"Day by day we see evidence emerging to suggest that hundreds of people, key people, charged with strengthening our national defense have been lining their pockets at the taxpayer's expense and taking bribes and kickbacks, peddling influence and giving away sensitive, confidential documents," he said at the 90th annual convention of the Independent Insurance Agents of Texas.

Federal investigators are looking into allegations of fraud and bribes paid by defense contractors and consultants to procurement officials in the Defense Department.

"Texans have a healthy respect for national security. We're more than willing to pay our full share for freedom — but not the commission," Bentsen said.

"The evidence of massive, rampant fraud at high levels in the pentagon is an affront to every American taxpayer and it's a betrayal of our commitment to freedom," he said.

"Those who have been bleeding out defense effort to enrich themselves should go to jail," he said, drawing applause from the crowd.

Bentsen, who is chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, also said he disagreed with President Reagan, who said Tuesday it was "understandable how such things" could happen in a government bureaucracy.

"I have supported the president in his efforts to build up America's defense, but I respectfully disagree with his assessment that the fraud is understandable," he said.

"I don't think it makes any sense to have a policy of zero tolerance on drug abuse and busts and then acknowledge the inevitability of corruption in America's national defense effort," Bentsen said.

Bentsen also said problems found in the Defense department should be addressed on a bipartisan basis.

POLITICAL

"The choice of the vice presidential nominee will be the major news to come out of the convention from the general public's standpoint," he predicted. "From the party's standpoint, the platform would probably be the second most newsworthy item."

Angelo expects that the 1988 GOP platform will be very similar to what was passed in 1984, which most observers considered to be as "solidly and responsibly conservative of a platform as any party has ever had."

Of primary interest to the committeeman, however, is the inclusion of a National Energy Policy with some "very specific proposals" that are in line with what Texas Republicans are proposing and with what the vice president is proposing as part of his energy policy.

Angelo, a St. Paul, Minn., native, has risen in the Republican ranks to become known statewide as one of the moving forces in the GOP in Texas.

In 1961 he supported John Tower's Republican bid to the U.S. Senate, helped form the Midland's Young Republican Club and also spent time as a block worker and area chairman.

In 1968, Angelo became a candidate for state senator. After nearly eight months of campaigning, he lost when tallying 40 percent of the vote.

In 1971, he was elected to the State Republican Executive Committee. In 1972, he won his first term as mayor and served another three terms before stepping down in 1980. In 1976, he was elected as a committeeman to the National Republican Executive Committee, a post to which he was re-elected at the state Republican convention earlier this month. In 1982, he again tried for state senator and lost.

Angelo, 54, was a supporter of Ronald Reagan long before the former California governor sought the presidency. Subsequently, he was asked to be the state chairman of Reagan's campaign in 1980. He then was named deputy campaign chairman.

And then came the re-election. Angelo was asked to be chairman of the arrangements committee for the 1984 Republican National Convention in Dallas.

Craddick, a 44-year-old state representative, says the 111-member Texas delegation to the national GOP convention will push to make sure the planks from the state platform are included in the national document.

"I don't know how they're going to work the committees and all that. They'll do that later on when we get down there," he said. "Basically, you go on the floor and you see the resolutions and the platform. You vote on the planks in the platform and, of course, you vote on the nominees."

Craddick moved to Midland from Wisconsin when he was 8 and finished school here. Starting in junior high, he began putting the building blocks in place for his political career. He won a seat on the student council there and later at Midland High. At Texas Tech, he served on the Student Supreme Court. He ran for president and lost. Meanwhile, between studies and his own political seekings, Craddick assisted statewide candidates in their campaigns.

Then came the political race of 1968. Frank Cahoon, a Midland Republican, had announced he wouldn't seek re-election to the State Legislature. At 24 and in graduate school at Texas Tech to finish his dissertation, Craddick filed to run in the Republican primary. He won that race at age 25 and has been re-elected to that House seat every election since.

New Orleans will be Craddick's second convention. Four years ago, he was seated as a Reagan/Bush delegate to the Republican National Convention in Dallas, which he described as a culmination in the political process that began years ago at the grass roots level with the precinct caucuses.

Mrs. Brown, who has spent 26 years working for the Republican Party, is going as a delegate to the Republican National Convention for the second time — elected to represent the 21st Congressional District.

However, it's not simply delegate work she will be doing. The 53-year-old Midlander will be adding duties as fourth vice president of the National Federation of Republican Women, a post to which she was elected in September 1987, after serving one year as secretary in 1985.

She will be assisting as a hostess at a reception for Barbara Bush and also recruit women to work in the federation's booth in the convention hall.

"This convention is doubly exciting," she said, because George Bush's home is Texas and because the Texas delegation will be seated front row center of the of the main podium — the focal point for millions of television viewers.

Mrs. Brown said she doesn't foresee a movement to change the GOP platform. Speaking as a Texan, however, she added that "We really want an energy policy. And if we can see anyway clear at the national convention to put that into the program, I would like to see that happen."

Holt predicts a well-organized, glamorous and exciting convention despite the lack of controversy seen at conventions of the past.

"I'm sure it looks a little cornball on TV with people in their hats waving flags, but that's the greatest thing in the world," he said. "There's two things that we have in this world and that's our right to have a convention as we see it and the inaugural."

The most interesting aspect of the convention to the average American will be the selection of Bush's choice for vice president, said Holt, observing that former GOP presidential candidates Jack Kemp and Robert Dole, and California Gov. George Deukmejian would make desirable running mates.

"We've got a slate of very capable people each in their own way and geographically speaking," he said.

Holt, 51, was born a third generation Midlander into a Republican family and is a behind-the-scenes volunteer, raising money for candidates in state and national races. This year he is Bush's national campaign vice chairman for fund raising after having served as co-chairman of the Reagan-Bush finance committee in 1984.

Holt served three terms on the Midland City Council, leaving in 1975. His years of politics are recorded on the walls of his office, decorated with photos of various candidates. Bush '88 literature reflects his political interest aside from his cattle and oil business.

Despite his 24 years of Republican involvement, this is only the second time Holt has been seated as a national convention delegate. In addition to raising money, he has served the party as a delegate ranging from the precinct to the state conventions.

DROUGHT

However, Estes said that situation could reverse itself if the summer fails to produce a shower or two. "It's drying out, but I wouldn't say it's critical."

In agreement was John Mabee. "It (the drought) is having an effect on cattle prices quite a bit," remarked the Midland rancher, noting that many Midwesterners have been forced to sell off large herds.

According to U.S. Agriculture Secretary R.F. Lyng, that facet of the drought will likely drive up beef prices for years.

Local experts signify July 1987 as the month the drought finally took hold in West Texas.

Since that time, only 6.75 inches has fallen in the Midland/Odessa area — far below the 13.7-inch annual average. Ironically, the year previous to that produced more than 25 inches.

No one can explain the wild swings — not ranchers, not farmers, not even the experts that are supposed to know. This one has not only baffled scientists, but old-timers as well.

Since January 1988, the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport has recorded just 3.7 this year — 2.26 inches of which came in May. This month, just .17 inches has been recorded.

Local experts say another two to four weeks of sun-drenched conditions spell certain disaster for cotton growers, like Chandler.

"We're going to run into some problems if we don't get some moisture soon" said Midland County Agent Shane Lowrie, who wonders when it will end.

"And we're heading into the driest part of the year. I suspect if we don't get any precipitation by the end of the month, it's just going to have a detrimental effect on crops."

Agreeing with that was Tomas Dominguez, district conservationist for the U.S. Soil Conservation Service. "Last year we had 14 inches, but most of that came between January and June...whatever (water) is out there, it's too deep to where the plants can get at it."

According to Don Eggleston, general manager for the Southwest Livestock Association, many farmers and ranchers are cashing in their herds.

One reason has been the upsurge in cattle feed costs — 50 cents a pound in some cases. "If it wasn't for the drought, a lot of these (people) would be holding on to their cattle."

Eggleston said the flood of new cattle — particularly certain cows and bulls — already are fetching 10 cents less a pound. Supply and demand is expected to have further impact.

Fortunately for West Texas ranchers, like Mabee, time is on their side, at least for the short-term.

"I'm taking it as it comes... you can't plan too far ahead. This part of the country has been resilient when it comes drought...we're better equipped to recover from it."

What encourages him and others is the water table. Mabee said until the wells run dry, he has no plans to change current practices.

And that appears the same attitude the City of Midland has adopted. According to Tom Ezell, who oversees water production, the city is consuming no more than it did last year — 28 million gallons on a daily average.

"The lakes that supply us still have plenty of water. If it continues for the next couple of years, it might be a problem."

TREES

"We hope our challenge and contribution will motivate others to get involved and make this project possible for Midland and for the entire Permian Basin," said Brown.

In addition to the main entrances, Vogler said trees will be planted in other strategic areas of the airport.

"The airport is not only the first image," he said, "It also is the last thing visitors see before leaving our city. It should behoove us to be concerned about our image."

Donations for the trees, which are estimated to cost $250 each, can be made by sending a check to the Midland Chamber of Commerce, P.O. Box 1890, Midland, Texas 79702.

Soviet conference sets up political battle for change

MOSCOW (AP) — Forty-seven years after Josef Stalin dominated the last Communist Party Conference, Mikhail Gorbachev is reviving the forum in an attempt to break the party's chokehold on society and wrest control from entrenched bureaucrats.

The conference will provide a political arena for Gorbachev's battle to modernize the Soviet Union, come to grips with the Stalinist legacy and improve the living standards of the country's 284 million people.

Selection of the 5,000 conference delegates shows how Gorbachev has changed the political atmosphere and opened up new areas for discussion. A stormy debate over alleged ballot-rigging sent hundreds of demonstrators into the streets of Moscow and Leningrad to protest the delegate-selection process.

"For the first time since before the First World War, and the early 1920s, some of these things are being debated openly," one veteran Western Kremlin watcher observed. "That's really very extraordinary."

Among the delegates to the 19th All-Union Conference of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union will be a substantial number Gorbachev counts as opponents. And there are indications the 57-year-old party chief has scaled back some of the original goals of the conference.

Both Soviet and Western analysts have suggested that the delegate-selection procedures, which by Soviet standards were surprisingly open, enabled Gorbachev's conservative opponents to gain enough seats to prevent implementation of radical measures.

Gorbachev nonetheless is expected to open the proceedings Tuesday in the Kremlin's glass and marble Palace of Congresses with a call to limit the tenure of party officials and their authority over the conduct of government and the economy.

But as the first party conference since 1941 drew near, Communist officials sought to dampen expectations that the delegates representing the country's 20 million Communist Party members would do more than debate a list of recommendations or consider the personnel issues that could decide the fate of Gorbachev's reform program.

Some observers said Gorbachev may have decided, after watching the delegate-selection fight, not to risk secret ballots on his key projects.

Thirty pages of theses put forward by the party's policy-making Central Committee as a platform for discussion at the conference bear the imprint of Gorbachev's own ideas.

One theme that clearly emerges is the effort to come to terms with and overcome the Stalinist past. The theses blame the late dictator for stifling debate in the party, a "vicious practice" that continued through the rule of Leonid I. Brezhnev.

In calling for a limit of two five-year terms for elected party positions, the proposals strike at the foundation of a system of personal power and privilege built for decades by party officials.

"Some executives started thinking that they had been appointed to their posts for life," the theses said. "They considered themselves infallible, abused power and neglected the interests of rank-and-file party members and working people."

In its new role envisaged by Gorbachev, the Communist Party would retain its dominant role in Soviet society but exercise its power less directly.

"The Communist Party shall steer its political course via communists working in bodies of state authority in all spheres of society's life," the program said.

Vladimir Kluyev, party leader of the Lenin district of Moscow and a conference delegate, said the plan would leave day-to-day management to government officials and economic administrators.

But proposals to diminish the party's control over the government and economy raise the question whether the party can control strategic decisions if it gives up its authority to decide everyday matters.

Kluyev told reporters it is clear that "no organizational questions will be considered at the conference," indicating Gorbachev will not attempt to cement his leadership position by making major personnel changes, as Stalin did 47 years ago.

Soviets order workers out of Canadian embassy

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet Union shot back at Canada today in a diplomatic expulsion war by expelling the Canadian embassy's military attache and ordering 25 Soviet workers out of the Canadian embassy.

Moscow also barred seven former Canadian diplomats from returning to the Soviet Union.

Canadian Foreign Minister Joe Clark announced Wednesday that eight Soviets had been expelled and nine others previously assigned to Canada barred from returning. The Soviets retaliated the next day, expelling two Canadian diplomats from the Soviet Union and barring three others from returning.

Clark then kicked out the senior military attache at the Soviet Embassy in Ottawa and barred a former second secretary from returning.

Intelligence sources in Canada said the alleged Soviet spy ring was trying to infiltrate an electronics plant in Montreal where weapons systems for naval vessels are built.

In the latest round of retaliation, the official news agency Tass said Soviet Deputy Foreign Minister Alexander A. Bessmertynkh told Canadian Ambassador Vernon Turner that Canada had "resorted to a new hostile action" by expelling the senior Soviet military attache and barring three other Soviet diplomats from returning.

"Unfortunately, they didn't heed our advice to display a feeling of responsibility and realism or our warning that if the Canadian side moved on to further aggravating the situation, it could expect immediate further retaliatory measures," Tass said about Canada's action on Thursday.

The Kremlin's withdrawal of 25 of its 39 Soviet workers could have a crippling effect on the Canadian mission in Moscow. Soviet authorities pulled out all 260 Soviet employees from the U.S. Embassy in Moscow on Oct. 22, 1986, in retaliation for U.S. expulsions of Soviet diplomats.

The pullout forced American diplomats to do the cooking, cleaning, driving, translating and answering phones at the Moscow embassy and U.S. Consulate in Leningrad.

The Tass dispatch accused the Canadian military attache, Larry Bowen, of "engaging in activity that does not correspond to his official status," diplomatic jargon for spying. Seven former embassy diplomats were told they would not be welcome back in the Soviet Union.

Tass said the Soviet Union rejects spying charges leveled against Soviets in Canada as "ungrounded."

Earlier, Soviet Deputy Foreign Minister Yuli M. Vorontsov warned that Moscow would strike back.

"The Soviet Union is a great power that cannot allow anybody to insult it in this way with impunity. That was a totally unprovoked insult and there should be a reaction," he told reporters.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Nine killed, four missing in bombing

PESHAWAR, Pakistan (AP) — A bomb today ripped through a hotel and a tea house in the center of the old city, killing nine people and wounding four others, police said.

Police said they suspected agents from Afghanistan's communist government.

Abdul Ahmed Khan, assistant inspector of crimes, said four or five people were apparently still buried in the rubble after the blast tore through the second and third floors of the hotel as people were getting up for morning prayers.

The hotel "collapsed just like a sandwich," Khan said.

He said the 11-pound device was planted on the second floor. Explosive experts were investigating the debris.

There was no claim of responsibility but police said they suspected agents of Afghanistan's communist government.

Americans charged in plot

WASHINGTON (NYT) — Two Egyptian military officers and three Americans have been charged with a scheme to smuggle highly sophisticated American-made chemicals and other materials to Egypt.

Reagan administration officials said Friday the materials are tightly controlled because of their military value. The materials, including 430 pounds of a sensitive carbon compound which enhances the accuracy of missiles, were apparently intended for use in a program with Argentina to develop a surface-to-surface missile.

Administration officials said they were distressed by the charges, which come at a time of good relations between the United States and Egypt. President Hosni Mubarak has been the only Arab leader to support the new Middle East peace plan of Secretary of State George P. Shultz.

Fighting in Angola debated

CAIRO, Egypt (NYT) — Representatives of the United States, South Africa, Angola and Cuba have met in a second round of formal negotiations aimed at ending the fighting in Angola and neighboring South-West Africa.

But it appeared that there were strong differences Friday over a timetable under which Cuba would withdraw its troops supporting the Marxist government in Angola and when South Africa would withdraw from South-West Africa, the territory also known as Namibia that Pretoria rules in defiance of the United Nations.

Contractors give millions to key defense lawmakers

NATION

WASHINGTON (AP) — The defense contractors under investigation in the Pentagon procurement case have poured millions of dollars into the pockets and campaign treasuries of members of Congress, legally doing on Capitol Hill what would be crimes elsewhere in official Washington.

The principal beneficiaries are the lawmakers who make crucial decisions about Pentagon spending and procurement priorities through their memberships on the House and Senate armed services committees and defense appropriations subcommittees.

Last year, 37 of the 101 members who serve on the four military committees reported receiving about $137,100 in speaking fees from defense contractors publicly linked to the Pentagon probe.

All but $10,000 went to the House side of the Capitol, with 33 members — Democrats and Republicans alike — averaging $3,852 each in so-called honoraria.

The Associated Press surveyed the 1987 financial disclosure statements of committee members and campaign contribution reports filed with the Federal Election Commission for the 1988, 1986 and 1984 elections.

The reports were filed by political action committees maintained by six of the defense contractors who have been searched under warrant issued in the massive probe of alleged Pentagon procurement fraud and bribery.

They are McDonnell Douglas, the nation's No. 1 defense contractor; Litton Industries; United Technologies-Pratt & Whitney; Northrop; Cubic Corp. and Hazeltine Corp.

The survey hit only the tip of the iceberg. The companies tied so far to the probe are part of a huge defense industry, with dozens of other firms routinely making campaign contributions and paying honoraria to members of Congress.

Congressional leaders said last week that they had been told by the chief prosecutor, Henry Hudson, that no lawmakers were targets of the 2-year-old investigation or had had their records seized by the FBI.

Speaking fees are legal on Capitol Hill, but they are forbidden by law among executive branch officials. Senators can pocket up to $35,800 a year in such outside income, House members up to $26,850.

The destination of the speaking fees — often accompanied by free trips for lawmakers and their spouses to defense plants and resorts — tells a lot about where the real power of the Pentagon purse lies on Capitol Hill.

Twenty-two of the 52 members of House Armed Services Committee reported getting speaking fees from the surveyed defense contractors. This panel sets broad policy and authorizes items like weapons systems.

But a new tank is worthless unless there is money to build it, and that money on the House side of the Capitol comes from the smallest military panel in Congress, the 11-member House defense appropriations subcommittee headed by Rep. William Chappell, D-Fla.

Last year, Chappell and eight colleagues on the subcommittee reported getting $46,250 — an average of $5,138 apiece — from contractors tied to the investigation.

Chappell may head the committee, but he wasn't the favorite speaker among the contractors with subpoenaed records. That was Rep. John Murtha, D-Pa., who said he collected $8,000 for four appearances. Chappell reported $4,000.

Others on the subcommittee getting money from the surveyed contractors included Reps. Charles Wilson, D-Texas, $7,000; Les AuCoin, D-Ore., $6,250; Bob Livingston, D-La., $6,000; and Bill Young, R-Fla., $6,000.

Young's disclosure statement illustrated a practice among defense contractors, who may fight each other for Pentagon jobs but can cooperate when it comes to taking a lawmaker on a grand tour.

Between Jan. 12 and Jan. 16, 1987, nine contractors — seven of them not named in the probe — shared the costs of flying, housing and feeding Young for a trip that included visits to facilities in California and Texas.

8,000 recreate Battle of Gettysburg

GETTYSBURG, Pa. (AP) — Amid shouts of "Fire!" and the thunder of cannon, thousands of men in blue and gray stormed each other to re-enact the opening of the Battle of Gettysburg, 125 years after the Civil War's bloodiest confrontation.

A total of about 8,000 men representing Union and Confederate troops traded mock rifle volleys and cannon bursts Friday, ripping open paper gunpowder cartridges with their teeth while enemy lines closed in.

The Confederate troops pushed back the Union's black-hatted "Iron Brigade," as scores of men on both sides feigned death in the tall grass and spectators watched from a hill overlooking the field.

The participants, among them teachers, engineers, artists and soldiers, had invested $1,000 to outfit themselves with the uniform, gear and guns needed to become Civil War soldiers, if only for a day or two.

Soldiers in the 23rd New York Regiment, played by a group from Arizona, went so far as to follow Union recipes down to "hard tack," hard, flat squares of bread.

"Supposedly everything's supposed to happen according to the script...the people who won the first time will win again."
— Paul Baebler, spokesman for Napoleonic Tactics

"You might think it was made 125 years ago. It's that indigestable," said Ed Gouvier, a 37-year-old engineer from Phoenix.

Mentioning anything modern by members of the 23rd New York resulted in punishment: standing on a wooden crate at the end of one of the rows of white, canvas tents.

Gouvier said people joined the outfit for a chance to relive history, for the camaraderie, or to take part in the battles.

"I've always been a history fanatic," he said.

Steve DiCarlo, of Owings, Md., said he became a member of the 18th Virginia Regiment in part because his great-great-great-grandfather was a captain in the Confederate Army.

"My wife thinks I'm crazy," he said.

Napoleonic Tactics Inc., which sold tickets to cover its $450,000 budget for staging three days of ersatz warfare, has billed the event as the largest Civil War re-enactment ever. The consulting company was hired by the event's sponor, the American Civil War Commemorative Committee Inc.

A total of 75,000 spectators were expected to attend the re-enactment on farmland five miles south of the actual battlefield. The event ends Sunday with the restaging of Pickett's Charge.

The Battle of Gettysburg took place from July 1-3, 1863, and resulted in a total of close to 50,000 dead and wounded.

Confederate Gen. Robert E. Lee was moving from the north toward Gettysburg to get shoes for his troops and secure the roads running through the southern Pennsylvania town, said Kim Bernard Holien, a historian for the U.S. Army Center of Military History.

The Union's Army of the Potomac was moving north when the chance encounter at McPherson's Ridge touched off the bloody battle, he said.

Many of the current "soldiers" said they prepared for the battle for months because its size set it apart.

Tactical commanders for both sides met Thursday night to map out the next day's skirmish.

"Supposedly everything's supposed to happen according to the script," said Paul Baebler, a spokesman for Napoleonic Tactics.

"The people who won the first time will win again." he said.

Organizers had said the number of troops falling "dead" in Friday's skirmish would be proportionate to actual losses.

But Michael Kraus, commander of the Union forces, said troops often improvise on the field.

"It's an individual thing," said Kraus, a 34-year-old artist from Creston, Ohio.

The largest previous Civil War re-enactment was the Battle of First Manassas in July 1986, involving 6,000 re-enactors, according to Napoleonic Tactics.

Drought impact spreads to all areas; Rain still hoped for

Associated Press

The first days of summer brought record heat, little rain and wilting hopes of averting the Dust Bowl of 1988.

"Watching a drought is almost like watching paint dry," said Ron Affeldt, director of the Office of Emergency Management in hard-hit North Dakota, "but out there today, it is happening fast, extremely fast."

The impact was measured not only in failing crops but in frantic commodity trading, surging electric power demand, restrictions on lawn-watering and car-washing in dozens of towns and shipping backed up on the no longer mighty Mississippi. The river was 20 feet below its year-ago levels at Memphis, Tenn., where more than a thousand barges were stranded.

In some respects, it was already a lost summer. Rain could still save some crops, said Kansas Agriculture Secretary Sam Brownback, but "the pastures are so short they're never going to get ahead of the herd — they're past their growing."

However, U.S. Agriculture Secretary Richard Lyng said Thursday that hard, steady rain in the next two weeks could still prevent major damage and that it was still too early to commit federal money to drought relief.

In the past week, the drought was measured in many ways:

— The Department of Agriculture listed 1,455 counties, or nearly half the total, as having a drought emergency.

— The U.S. Geological Survey reported that the number of streams with normal flow in May was the lowest in six years, with only 54 percent of 191 river measuring stations at normal or better. Streamflows in California were 42 percent below average in May. The Saline River in Arkansas had only 10 percent of normal flow, while the Tombigbee River at Coatopa, Ala., was 15 percent of normal.

— Sixty-one cities had record high temperatures on Tuesday, 64 set records on Wednesday and 35 on Thursday.

— Cows were selling for 39 cents a pound, down from 51-52 cents two weeks ago, as farmers rushed to get rid of herds they could no longer feed.

— Tom George, administrator of Soil Conservation Service erosion surveys, said wind erosion damaged 13.1 million parched acres in the Great Plains this year, about three times the annual average.

— Corn prices have doubled in a month, from $1.70-$1.85 in May to $3.48 at Thursday's close. Soybeans nudged close to $11 a bushel for July delivery.

"With the corn crop, each week that goes by without rain means another 10 percent is lost," said Joel Karlin, an analyst with Research Department Inc. in Chicago. Some estimate anywhere from 10 percent to 30 percent of the U.S. corn crop already has been ruined.

While that was bad news for consumers, farmers with adequate rain and those with grain in storage stood to reap windfall profits.

"I'm afraid we're going to lose some farmers, and we've lost enough already in my state," said Gov. George Sinner of North Dakota, one of 10 Midwest governors who met with Lyng in Chicago last week.

The bottom line for consumers, the Agriculture Department said, is a 1 percent increase in food prices if the drought persists.

Grain-based foods, such as bread and pasta, were likely to increase the most, economists said. Drought was also likely to raise the price of beer. Barley, a prime ingredient in beer, has increased from $2.55-$2.60 a bushel to $4.30-$4.50 since June 6, said Marge Jones, owner and publisher of the Brewers Bulletin in Woodstock, Ill.

Confrontation over party rules avoided

Associated Press

Michael Dukakis and Jesse Jackson took steps today to avoid a contentious debate over Democratic Party rules, as party officials met to draft a platform that Dukakis will stand on in the fall.

The two Democratic presidential rivals reached an agreement to eliminate beginning in 1992 provisions that Jackson said prevented him from getting as many delegates as he deserved, according to Dukakis spokesman, Tad Devine.

The new rules, being worked on by party officials in Washington, are now virtually assured of ratification by the party's national convention in Atlanta next month. They would cut the number of super delegates by nearly half, and require that all other delegates in all other states be awarded in proportion to votes they receive.

Meanwhile, in Denver, the party's platform panel is taking up a preliminary draft document pledging that Democrats would "restore competence, caring and incorruptibility to the federal executive branch and get it working again fairly for all Americans."

Dukakis was vacationing today in Massachusetts. On Friday, he said Bill Bradley appears uninterested in being the one to run for the No. 2 spot on the ticket. And he was attacked by Republican George Bush, who said, "we don't need more taxes, we need a president who can hold the line against congressional overspending."

Jackson, who was in Puerto Rico today, has complained that his delegate total this year does not reflect his strength at the polls.

Devine said that the Massachusetts governor would have won the nomination even if those proposed rules were in place this year.

"The reason that Mike Dukakis is the nominee of the party is he was the overwhelming choice of the voters," said Devine, who is in charge of delegate selection for Dukakis' presidential campaign.

Senate GOP leader Bob Dole of Kansas and Christian broadcaster Pat Robertson, whipped by Bush in the battle for the delegates who will pick the Republican presidential nominee in New Orleans in mid-August, praised the vice president at a party unity rally Friday in Cincinnati.

"The Republican Party is united and we are not about to see the country go for a mediocre liberal like Michael Dukakis," said Robertson. "I'd accept the nomination but it's already gone," quipped Dole.

Former Secretary of State Alexander Haig Jr. said today that Bush "is the candidate of safe change."

"God help us if Michael Dukakis wins. He is the candiate of radical and dangerous change," Haig said.

Dukakis said Thursday he supports $115 million in new taxes to "make sure the state's fiscal base is solid and strong," announcing he would sign a $40 million cigarette levy and favored raising another $75 million by bringing the state's tax code into line with federal tax law changes.

In Cincinnati on Friday, Bush attacked Dukakis on the tax issue, saying: "I will not raise your taxes, period. He just has, in his home state."

NATION IN BRIEF

Doctors to debate proposals on AIDS

CHICAGO (AP) — Doctors will debate proposals for battling AIDS, overhauling Medicaid and training a new type of bedside hospital worker this week at the American Medical Association's annual policymaking convention.

Members of the AMA's House of Delegates, which convenes today, also plan to discuss a proposed ban on selling plastic handguns, a move to put warning labels on alcoholic beverages and the association's stand on mercy killing.

The meeting, which runs through Thursday, is expected to attract up to 2,000 doctors from across the country. The 420 delegates represent the AMA's 295,000 members and act as a legislature, setting policy for the nation's largest organization of physicians.

The delegates will receive more than 75 reports on problems ranging from child pornography to the health hazards of clove cigarettes.

They also will consider at least 155 resolutions on such issues as the health risks of tanning parlors and ways to revamp the nation's Medicare health insurance system for the elderly.

Jury decides on warning

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — A jury's decision that cigarettes should have carried a warning label before 1966 should encourage other lung-cancer victims to sue manufacturers, despite the fact that no damages were awarded, an attorney said.

"This is very similar to the history of asbestos litigation where at the beginning cases were lost and now liability is clearly established," said Ben Shein, an attorney for the estate of John Ray Gunsalus.

A federal jury said Friday that cigarettes manufactured by American Tobacco Co. were defective prior to 1966 because they did not have a warning label. But it said the lack of a warning was not a "substantial factor" in Gunsalus' death of lung cancer last year at age 55.

Gunsalus, a Pall Mall smoker who first lit up at age 11, worked at the Chester shipyards where asbestos was prevalent, and the case brought by his estate sought to tie the hazards of smoking to those of working around asbestos.

The case was decided less than two weeks after a jury in Newark, N.J., decided a tobacco company should pay $400,000 to the widower of a lifelong smoker. It was the first monetary award from a cigarette maker after about 300 attempts in courtrooms from coast to coast.

Stone circles puzzling

FLINTSTONE, Md. (AP) — They could have been cremation pits, cock-fighting rings, animal pens, Civil War foxholes or secret hiding places for moonshine equipment.

For more than a decade, 150 to 200 circles of sandstone rock have puzzled area residents and archaeologists. Virtually hidden by brush and poison ivy, the gray-colored rocks of various shapes and sizes are neatly arranged in circles.

But it was not until last year that some archaeologists and volunteers excavated one of the circles. "They did the dig and found zip, except for the rattlesnakes," Mash said.

Hoping to uncover clues, another group conducted a dig this spring.

"In a nutshell, we didn't discover anything. They still remain a mystery," said Charles McVeigh Jr., a member of the Western Maryland Archaeological Society. "We dug out in the center of them. We didn't go down very far before we got to bedrock. We found no artifacts. We found nothing to indicate prehistoric use."

Magnetic storm forecast

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A major magnetic storm is expected to envelop the Earth on Monday as particles spewed by giant explosions on the sun disrupt global communications, alter satellite orbits and impair electric power systems.

The warning issued Friday by the federal Space Environment Laboratory in Boulder, Colo., was spurred by a series of solar flares — huge sunspot-related explosions that hurl X-ray, electrically charged particles and hot gases toward Earth.

One of the blasts was the largest flare since April 1984, said Dale Gary, a solar astronomer at the California Institute Of Technology in Pasadena.

The laboratory issued a major magnetic storm warning for Monday and a minor magnetic storm warning for Tuesday, forecaster Chris Balch said by telephone from the lab.

The flares pose no direct threat to Earth life. But the magnetic storm could interfere with long-distance phone calls, electric power transmission, radio broadcasts, pipeline control systems and communications with airplanes and ships, said Gary Heckman, space environment services chief at the lab.

Bars struggle with rules

CHEYENNE, Wyo. (AP) — Wyoming on Friday becomes the last state to raise its drinking age to 21, confronting bar owners with a dilemma — what to do about 19- and 20-year-olds who come in legally Thursday night and suddenly become too young to drink.

The Legislature earlier this year acceded to federal pressure to raise the drinking age from 19 to 21. The increase takes effect at 12:01 a.m. Friday.

But state law allows bars to remain open until 2 a.m., and 19-and 20-year-olds expected to turn out in force Thursday night for their last chance for a legal drink.

On June 16 the U.S. Army's Recruiting Battalion for New Mexico and West Texas, with headquarters in Albuquerque, marked the 15th anniversary of the All Volunteer/All Recruited Army on July 1.

"The last man subject to the draft was inducted in June of 1973," Lt. Col. Allen Gibbs, battalion commander, said, "Legislation authorizing the draft expired on July 1, 1973, and the United States became the first major world power to depend entirely upon an all-recruited force for its defense."

A successful effort was made during a two-year transition period leading up to a recruited Army to improve the quality of military recruiting and to expand the recruiting force. Under the new system, highly qualified officers and noncommissioned officers were assigned to recruiting.

Significantly the quality of those who enlisted improved overall during this time. Several factors contributed to this improvement, such as an increase in military entry pay, modernizing the training of personnel, renewed emphasis on professionalism, and communicating these changes to the public.

"Today's soldiers are the best we've ever had," said Maj. Gen. Thomas P. Carney, head of the U.S. Army Recruiting Command.

"Myth says that the best fighter is a street-wise, anti-social dropout. But studies show most decorated soldier to be socially mature, intelligent, team players from strong family backgrounds."

Overcast sky doesn't cloud local air show

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

The overcast sky, like a giant umbrella 6,000 feet high, offered a Saturday-afternoon break from the searing sun for 20,000 people who viewed aerobatic feats in biplanes and a monoplane, thundering and crisp maneuvers by a supersonic F-15 Eagle jet, and a flying amphitheater called the Lockheed C-5A Galaxy.

"How in the world can you get it off the ground?" Bob Pheil of Greenwood mused as he beheld the nearly football-field-long jet transport at Midland International Airport.

The olive-drab cargo-troop carrier was among a mixed gaggle of U.S. Air Force and Navy jet airplanes, Army helicopters, World War II-era "warbirds" and privately owned aerobatic airplanes in Midland Air Show '88, sponsored by the West Texas Aerobatic Club.

"I wonder how it gets off the ground," Pheil's 9-year-old son, Robby, said of the transport, which was filled with aviation buffs touring the bowels of the big bird.

Robby's fascination later focused on the U.S. Air Force's McDonnell Douglas F-15 Eagle, a tight-turning fighter than can streak more than twice the speed of sound and which has more thunder than the Indianapolis 500 race-car line-up.

"It's our best (fighter) plane; it's supposed to be easier to navigate," said Robby, who plans to be a pilot.

"He's going to let the U.S. Air Force give him flying lessons," said Pheil, who is principal of Greenwood High School.

"He is all inspired to be a pilot," said his mother, Lisa.

Midland farmer Jon Baumann was inspired to get out of the cotton field and under the added shade of an Air Force heavy-duty fighter, the F-4 Phantom.

"We are full-fledged into the middle of irrigation," said the 25-year-old Baumann, who was wearing a "Spruce Goose" T-shirt which featured the image of Howard Hughes' 1947 wooden flying boat.

He came to the annual air show "just to get away from it all for a little while.

"Dad (Ervin Baumann), Alan Spinks and I used to go down to Harlingen every year" to the Confederate Air Force annual World War II-era air show, "but this is a lot closer," he said.

Changing directions may prove job skill

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

Changing majors while in college may be the most important skill a student can learn during his or her four-year stint, a survey of business and political leaders found.

Several Midlanders sitting on top of their respective heaps today all began the post-graduate lives in different professions, they said last week.

Branson

"You are going to butt some stumps along the way. Don't be concerned if you change directions...that is perfectly acceptable," said Midland Memorial Hospital Chief Executive Officer Ray Branson.

Branson began his post-Oklahoma University days as a pharmacist because he liked the combination of business and science, he said.

"But I took a hiatus from the job to decide if I wanted to continue in the science direction or the people direction," the hospital official explained.

Back in school at Trinity University, Branson studied and was awarded a masters degree in hospital administration.

The young man whose first job was picking and chopping cotton at age 12 began his hospital administrative duties as "the lowest administrator on the totem pole" in Oklahoma City's South Community Hospital.

"I tried to keep my ambition in check realizing that you've got to pay your dues," Branson said.

Devenport

Ask Judy Devenport about paying dues. The woman who today is vice president and consultant for the Earle M. Craig oil and gas firm started in the business as a secretary at Midland's McDonald Oil Co in 1958.

Though that position opened doors back then, Mrs. Devenport said: "I knew I did not wish to remain a secretary forever."

She went to the University of Texas at Austin for two years and studied business and got back to work in the oil industry. Today, as well as her consulting work, she ventures into oil and gas enterprises for herself.

It took a woman with "a lot of grit" to break into the oil business back then, in part because it "wasn't socially acceptable," Mrs. Devenport remembered.

"In today's economy get all the education you can with a broad base and then choose your direction," the oil and gas entrepreneur advised.

Though U.S. Rep. Lamar Smith began his career in government, both he and a former political opponent, Midland advertising executive Pete Snelson, worked for newspapers as reporters.

Snelson

Snelson, whose resume resembles a crazy quilt, wrote for the El Paso Times during and after his journalism studies at the University of Texas at El Paso, he said.

"Journalism has always been my field," Snelson said, adding that he received a masters degree in journalism from Northwestern University in Evanston, Ill.

Shortly after undergraduate college and the newspaper, the ad man joined the U.S. Army to fight in World War II as an infantryman and later, as a special counter-intelligence agent.

Children given new SCOPE

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

What may be one of the better "deals" in town is going on at the old Carver High School Gymnasium where upwards of 100 children are learning the value of worth — self-worth.

"This is something that really needs to be done to help the children to interact," said Annie Dale Jones, director of the two-week program called SCOPE — Summer Children's Outreach Program Experiences — for children from pre-school through the sixth grade. "We want them to have self-esteem — to feel good about themselves and about other children."

The children, for example, resoundingly sang the lyrics "There's No One Exactly Like Me" under the direction of Laura Butler, music minister at Mount Rose Baptist Church. "God loves them all" — short and tall, fat and lean.

The weekday morning program is keyed to the theme "My World and Self-Development" and is attracting black children in southeast Midland, said the Rev. Hadley Edwards, pastor of Hollowell United Methodist Church and a SCOPE adviser. Many of the children are coming from the ranks of the 30 or more black churches in Midland, Edwards said.

"The program came about to give the children something to do," he said, "and to provide a wholesome learning experiences for the children. It appeared there was nothing to do on this (southeast) side of town for the kids."

The program, which begins its final week Monday, offers bargain enrollment fees: $1 per child per week, $2 per family per week or nothing at all if a child's family is strapped for funds.

Curt Wilcott/Reporter-Telegram

Midland children learn self-worth in a summer outreach program in the old Carver High School Gymnasium. Retired schoolteacher Annie Dale Jones is director of the project called Summer Children's Outreach Program Experiences (SCOPE).

"Walk-ins are welcome every day," Edwards said.

Within SCOPE's program are open-room classes on reading and story-telling, development of Biblical heroes and heroines, singing, exercise, and carrying out of simple laboratory science experiments.

"So many of the children are not aware of heroes and heroines of the Bible," said Ms. Jones, a retired Midland schoolteacher. "The children learn that the people who lived in Biblical days are just like them. The lived in days long ago, but they were people just like them. The children learn self-esteem by the great things they (the Biblical characters) did."

Screens wired for alarm add extra level of safety to home

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

If you have ever awakened on a summer night to a sound near your opened bedroom window, this may be for you.

"I've got a lady in Big Spring, she's a customer of mine and lives in a $250,000 house," says Charles Hageman, a sales representative for Aprotex Corp. in Midland. "She likes to sleep with the windows open."

For the Big Spring customer, and others in the Permian Basin, security companies are marketing alarm screens as an added layer of protection.

"The first ones were installed about 20 years ago here," Aprotex general manager Gary Gilbert said. "But they weren't real popular, not at all. It has become much more simple in recent years to install them."

Until just recently, the alarm screens were too expensive to be practical at anything less than a mansion-size residence, Gilbert said. Now, with a screen fabric of non-metallic material and aluminum frames, the cost has dropped, he said.

"We used to have to measure the screen and send it to the factory," Gilbert said. "It would take weeks and weeks to get them back, and half the time they didn't fit."

The screens, which look exactly like window screens, contain thin wires woven into the fabric and electrical contacts where the frame meets the window. If an intruder lifts the screen, or tries to cut it, either an audible or silent alarm is triggered.

"They give you a different utilization," Gilbert said. "When a burglar attacks an alarm screen, we will get an alarm before he gets into the house. It also gives the police department more time."

The screens are not a "stand-alone" system, and must be used as part of a larger coordinated alarm system, such as door and window contacts and interior motion detectors, Gilbert says.

The screens also are touted as a less-expensive alternative to burglar bars, which fire officials warn against because residents can be locked in their own home.

"The big advantage over window bars is in the event of a fire, you can punch them out and get out quickly," Gilbert said.

Crime prevention officers in Midland say the screens can be a worthwhile addition to a home security system.

"Basically, any alarm is good," according to crime prevention Officer Chuck Chapman of the Midland Police Department. "What these apparently give you is a first intrusion alert.

"If you have a big house, in the daytime you can open up the windows, and not worry about it even if you have to leave for a few minutes."

B. John McDaniel, crime prevention officer for the Midland County Sheriff's Department, just attended a seminar on alarm systems and technology. He says the screens are desirable if a homeowner has property valuable to justify the $100 per screen cost.

"It depends on what you're trying to protect," McDaniel said. "If you've got lots of valuables and jewelry, shoot the works. But in a modest home — unless you have a sizeable gun or coin collection — you can get by with a basic system."

According to Aprotex, a "basic system" consisting of contacts for four doors, two motion detectors and a control mechanism, costs about $900. Screens for a small home would be about $1,000 extra.

"We don't sell a lot of them," says Charles Noll of Alarm Systems, Inc. in Midland. "I think the concept is good, but the cost is high."

Screens are attractive to homeowners because "most people would like to keep the burglar out of the house," Noll says.

"So far they haven't caught on to the degree that they are really popular.

"Motion detectors are still the best way to protect something valuable in your home."

An elderly customer ordered the alarm screens for only two of her many windows, the two she opens in warm weather for a breeze.

GARY OTT

Believe it or not, I once was considered 'expert' on rock

Ott

I knew I was in trouble when one of the newspaper's younger photographers approached me the other day — while I was serving in my role as city editor — and said, "I think I'll get some color shots of David Lee Roth tonight."

"Do what?" I responded.

But I didn't.

Instead, I said, "Who's David Lee Roth?"

That was a horrible mistake. You would have thought I had just nominated Fidel Castro for president of the Young Republicans.

The outrage directed at me was intense.

"You really don't know who David Lee Roth is?" The photographer didn't know whether to laugh or accuse me of an outright lie.

I acknowledged my stupidity on the subject.

"He happens to be the former lead singer for Van Halen," he snapped.

"Oh, that David Lee Roth," I said. "By the way, who's Van Halen?"

The photographer walked away in disgust.

What I had done, of course, was show my age.

But it didn't stop me from seeking out the truth.

David Lee Roth is a bigtime rock star. He is a hero to millions of young people and his recent Odessa concert was an overwhelming success.

My research also led to another rather startling bit of information. I don't know a darn thing about today's rock scene.

It wasn't always that way.

In fact, I once was considered something of an expert on the subject. I was a fan of all the greats — the Beatles; the Grateful Dead; Bob Dylan; Grand Funk Railroad; the Allman Brothers' Band; Cream; Jimi Hendrix; the Moody Blues; Crosby, Stills, Nash and Young; and, of course, the Rolling Stones.

You name them and I listened to them.

But along the way, something happened. I lost interest.

It was a peculiar sort of thing. I'm not sure when or why it happened. It just did.

One day I was tuned into electric guitars and the next day, I wasn't.

Strange, indeed.

Actually, I blame it all on Willie Nelson. He's a multi-millionaire celebrity now, but back in 1972 he was just trying to make a go of it in Austin.

I heard his music then and was favorably impressed. It also caused me to listen to other country musicians. I liked what I heard.

They sang about things I could understand — having your poor old heart broken, drinking too much because someone just broke your poor old heart and passing out because you drank too much because someone just broke your poor old heart.

And, they could pull it off.

Rock musicians can't.

Now, tell me the truth. Can you imagine David Lee Roth singing, "My wife just ran off with my best friend and I sure do miss him"?

Of course not.

AIR

"They (aircraft) are all fascinating to me, particularly the World II types, such as Mr. (Connie) Edwards' aircraft." West Texas ranch Edwards flew in his PBY Catalina amphibian to the air show.

Not far from the Catalina was a Buecker Jungmeister, a pre-war German Luftwaffe aerobatic biplane affixed with swastika markings.

Across the way from the Catalina and the biplane was a U.S. Navy A-4 Skyhawk jet trainer — the type of aircraft flown in the film "Top Gun" as the "adversary" aircraft flying mock dogfights with the F-14 Tomcat aircraft carrier-based fighter.

"As far as maneuverability, you can't beat it," Navy Ensign Rick Ferrari said of the Skyhawk. "It's so under-powered that something like the F-16 can turn on it."

Even while the air show was in flight, Buffalo Trail Council Boy Scouts were collecting $1 a car for directing air-show traffic to parking spaces.

"Sometimes we talk community service," said Assistant Scout Master Bob Templeton, who noted that the car-directing was community service in action. "This kind of thing makes them (the Scouts) feel good."

"It tires your hands," his 12-year-old son, Star Scout Mark Templeton, said of directing traffic. Mark said he was "sort of" an aviation fan.

Out on the air field, standing on a perch, air-show narrator Jean Sorg was singing praises of aerobatic flying.

"We sometimes describe aerobatic flying as 'dancing in the sky,'" said Ms. Sorg, who is editor of "Sports Aerobatics" magazine published by the Experimental Aircraft Association's International Aerobatic Club (IAC) in Wisconsin. "It's sort of like figure skating in the sky."

Ms. Sorg described aerobatic maneuvers, from snap-rolls and loops to hammerheads and Immelmann turns, while aerobatic pilots such as Ole Olsen, Kirk Fulton, Dr. Julie Pfile, Janet Crosby and Pat Day flew precision maneuvers.

"This is not stunt flying," Ms. Sorg said. "This is precision flying. This is mastery of man over machine."

As the aerobatic flying got underway, Ms. Sorg publicly asked aerobatic pilot Pat Day's wife, Connie, how flying appeals to her.

"I don't like to fly," quickly responded Ms. Day, who is an aerobatic judge. "I work on the ground, totally. Thank you."

One flying routine featured Fred Michna in his clipped-wing Piper Cub tabbed the "Hot Czech."

Michna, an aerobatic pilot, executed a flying vaudeville act as if he were an erratic non-pilot crazily flying the airplane.

"He can do anything to that Cub than can be done," said Calvin Jones, father of Odessa aerobatic pilot James Jones.

In another routine, Ole Olsen performed aerobatic feats such as a torque roll and a 360-degree turn in his biwing Pitts Special.

In one maneuver, Olsen's aircraft tumbled wildly in the sky.

The maneuver was not standard, Ms. Sorg noted.

"That's called an 'Ole Olsen-falling-out-of-the-sky' maneuver," Ms. Sorg said.

CHANGE

Snelson also has taught at the junior high and university levelsool, one career direction that led him to become vice president of Odessa College in the 1950s.

After three years at that post, he left to open Snelson Advertising Co., a firm he operated while serving as a state representative and later a state senator.

"It seems to me that time is moving so rapidly and life gets so complex, we don't take enough time to invovle ourselves in other activities," Snelson said.

"My best recommendation is to take time to smell the roses and to realize there is a great big world out there. You should be an active participant in your job as well as in the life of community, state and nation," he maintained.

Smith

Though Smith, Midland's representative in Washington, D.C., actively participates in those three areas, there was a time when he worked in Boston, Mass., as a $7,000-a-year reporter for the Christian Science Monitor newspaper.

The representative had left the Small Business Administration after a post-Yale University governmental internship had been completed.

Smith's first job at the SBA "was highly touted" before he was chosen, he remembered. After stressful interviews and competency tests, Smith was chosen over eight candidates.

"They had made it sound like it was a fast track responsible position," the congressman remembered. A delighted Smith went to the job only to find his "desk" was a Xerox machine where he stood making copies for the first six months of his job.

"Success in early jobs is 90 percent hard work and 10 percent talent. Work hard, be patient and have faith...you need to work hard even with no assurance there will be a promotion," the U.S. representative promised.

Smith-supporter Ernest Angelo remembered his first post-graduate salary — $425 a month. It was in 1957 and he worked in Crane as a petroleum engineer trainee. "It was enough to make a car payment," he said.

The now-independent petroleum engineer spent eight years with oil companies before going solo, he said. He went independent during the downswing of an oil depression similar to that of today, he said.

To make that move Angelo, a Louisiana State University alum, had to be flexible — an important characteristic to him — and had to go into different aspects of the industry such as land work.

"But I was very much an optimist...work hard and have the right attitude to succeed," he said.

Thomas

About the time Angelo was going it alone, Mayor Carroll Thomas was going to work for Mobil Oil Co.

After graduating with a bachelors degree in geology from Texas Tech University, Thomas had trouble finding work and worked as a mud logger, he said.

The former Reporter-Telegram paper boy returned to Tech, got a masters degree in geology and went to work as a geologist for Mobil before striking out on his own as a consulting geologist.

But during the bust, he turned to work as a financial consultant for Shearson-Lehman-Hutton because "I saw it was going to be awhile until the business turned around," the mayor said.

Success means different things to different people, said Thomas, but money doesn't equal achievement.

"I think if at all possible, find some role models that you admire and would like to emmulate in your life and career," advised Thomas.

Odessa jury deliberates injury of child testimony

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — A 3-women, 3-men jury was continuing to deliberate Saturday night after hearing more than five days of testimony in the trial of Gene Stormes, who was accused of injury to a child.

Deliberations started about 5:30 p.m. Saturday.

In closing arguments Saturday, assistant County Attorney Mike Griffin challenged the testimony of pathologist Dr. Robert Bright, who testified Friday that the bruises suffered by 3-year-old Ezekiel Tijerina Jr. occurred at different times.

Jimmy Edwards, Stromes' attorney, described the former day-care center operator as "good friend," who would not abuse children in the manner alleged by procesutors.

Jimmy Edwards, Stormes' attorney, noted his client's testimony in which he stated that he had spanked about 250 children over the years, but "he never left a bruise on any of them," the attorney stated.

The paddling incident in which Stormes is alleged to have bruised the child took place Sept. 9, 1987 at the Young Sports day-care center, 621 Dale St. Stormes admitted during testimony to spanking the child. He said he gave the child "three licks, but not hard."

Stormes, who was on probation in connection with an earlier spanking incident, had his state day-care center license revoked by the Department of Human Services.

Stormes contends the child's mother, who was employed at Young Sports, asked him to spank her son. According to Edwards in closing arguments, the child had been pestering her and she went to Stormes and told him, "I've had it. I can't take anymore," the defense attorney stated.

Griffin, displaying two different paddles, noted that the paddle alleged to spank the Tijerina youngster had been destroyed before it could be obtained as evidence.

The trial began Tuesday in the County Court of Judge Jan Fisher. The judge said Friday that, if she hadn't allowed the daily trial session to run until about 10 p.m. each night, the trial might have lasted two weeks.

SCOPE

The admired Biblical heroes and heroines on the SCOPE study plan include the Apostle Paul and his fervent preaching of the Gospel, Noah and his faithfulness to God, Ruth whose salient trait was loyalty ("Whither thou goest, I will go.... Thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God") Esther who exhibited unselfish courage and devotion, and lesser known servants of God.

"They can pick one of those for which to pattern their own lives," Edwards said.

Adult leaders in the program include active and retired teachers, a librarian, and ministers. SCOPE teachers include Janet Gilbert, arts and crafts; Laura Butler and Deborah Morris, music; Golden Faye Gibbs, science; Martha Allen, Katherine Thomas, the Rev. Clara Reed, and Eddie Lane, children's literature. Lane and Ms. Morris also teach physical education. SCOPE advisers are the Rev. S.V. Ferguson, pastor of Great St. Luke AME Church; Mammie Williams, principal of Scharbauer Elementary School; James Ramsoure, retired school administrator and civic leader, and Edwards.

SCOPE sponsors include The First United Methodist Church, Hollowell United Methodist, Greater St. Luke AME Church, St. Paul CME Church, Mount Rose Baptist Church, Interdenominational Ministers Alliance, and Alpha Kappa Alpha sorority.

"Everything is well-structured," Ms. Jones said of the program. "There is no free play; everything is supervised."

The children begin each day with a blessing. They also learn "a little etiquette" as the day progresses, Ms. Jones said.

SCOPE serves to teach the children "better pride in the community — knowing that someone in the community cares. It gives them something to look forward to," Ms. Jones said. "They know that life is meaningful."

Firefighters safely extinguish small house fire

From Staff Reports

Midland firefighters extinguished small fire at a South Kentucky Avenue home at about 9:39 p.m. Friday.

Details were sketchy, but firefighters on the scene said they believed the fire was ignited by matches in a front bedroom of the one story home, located between Jackson and Lincoln streets.

The owners of the home had not yet been identified, but the department said one person in the house at the time had been slightly burned.

Four units were called to the scene. The fire was out minutes after firefighters arrived.

Monaghan, new council member, held other political offices

By LYN MILLER

The governing body of the city of Midland — the City Council — is composed of the mayor and six council members. They are the only elective officers of the city and hold office for terms of two years.

As a result of the recent election, the current city council is composed of the following members: Mayor Carroll Thomas and council members Bill Williams (District 1), Oralia Corrales (District 2), Robert L. Monaghan (District 3), Robert Rendall (District 4), Katie Heck (at large) and Gordon G. Marcum II (at large).

Rendall also serves as mayor pro tem.

Monaghan, a Midland oilman, was elected to represent District 3 in the recent election and is featured in this week's column in an attempt to better acquaint the residents of Midland with the newest member of the council.

Monaghan, who has lived in Midland since June of 1959, was born in Fort Worth. He holds a bachelor of science degree in petroleum engineering from the University of Texas as well as a doctor of jurisprudence.

He began his experience in the oil industry as a roustabout and roughneck, then went into land and legal work for Standard Oil Co. of Texas and, currently, is the president of Cal-Mon Oil Co.

Being actively involved in the community and politics, he served as Midland County Republican Chairman from 1970-76, as the regional chairman for the Reagan-Bush campaign in 1980 and 1984, as a member of the Midland County Texas Criminal Justice Council in 1973, a member of the City of Midland Planning and Zoning Commission in 1973-74, a member of the Objectives for Midland Committee in 1980 and on the board of trustees for Trinity School in 1983-86.

He was appointed to the National Petroleum Council in 1984 and was reappointed in 1986.

Monaghan is a member of the American Association of Petroleum Landmen, West Texas Geological Society, Society of Petroleum Engineers, State Bar of Texas, Permian Basin Landmen's Association and the Midland County Bar Association.

He is currently serving on the Texas Mining Council and on the Texas State Depository Board, following appointments by Gov. Bill Clements.

Monaghan has expressed his interest in serving on the city council as a continuation of his longtime desire to serve the people in Midland and feels that serving on the council will present opportunities for him to help further Midland's recovery and growth.

THIS WEEK IN GOVERNMENT

Council to begin work on budget

Midland City Council begins work on its 1988-89 budget for four days starting Monday.

The 350-page blueprint, which council members were expected to get copies of this weekend, is a cost outline of what the city and its varying departments expect in the coming year.

Council will interrupt its day-long workshop sessions on Tuesday, when its conducts its bi-monthly regular meeting, scheduled for 10 a.m.

Highlighting its agenda list are recent discussions involving the Colorado River Municipal Water District. The city, which apparently has run into a contractual snag, instructed its attorneys last week to meet with CRMWD officials.

Council also is expected to review two paving requests involving Bluebird and Cardinal lanes. Two weeks ago, city officials indicated they wanted out of the paving business, particularly on agreements involving private developers.

Council had balked at its piecemeal involvement in the Bluebird project, telling the developer they'd prefer to see the entire roadway paved at once and not in sections.

Thought to date has been assessment. Council said such a charge is not only equitable, but fair, in that each property owner would share in the cost.

Council members also will consider a resolution approving the purchase of materials as well as labor so that its code enforcement department can push ahead to remove dilapidated homes in certain areas of the city.

It also will hold a public hearing at 11 a.m. to consider a request from David Nolan, who is seeking a nightclub permit to be located at the intersection of Wall and North Baird streets.

County Commissioners

County Commissioners will open design and build cost proposals for a new jail facility when they meet in regular session, beginning at 9 a.m. Monday in the Commissioners' Courtroom, located on the second floor of the courthouse.

In other action, commissioners are expected to:

— Hear a report from Road and Bridge Superintendent Albert Stewart.

— Open bids on a central vote tabulation system.

— Hear an update on construction in the Windowpane II area and discuss upcoming grants.

— Continue the 1989 budget study.

MISD Trustees

Midland Independent School District trustees in their meeting at 4 p.m. Tuesday will present a proposed salary schedule for the upcoming school year, the agenda states.

Next year's budget will be discussed, as will the structure of the upcoming $11.8 million bond sale.

After a dinner break, the meeting will resume at 7:15 p.m. where trustees will go over test scores and consider revising the MISD discipline managment plan.

Aluminum once displayed at Tiffany's

In 1884, when aluminum was still as valuable as silver, architects chose a 100-ounce pyramid of that metal to top off the Washington Monument.

So unusual was this large piece of aluminum that it was displayed at Tiffany's jewelry store in New York before its installation.

Ending Angolan war best course

Thirteen years after the precipitate withdrawal of its Portuguese overlords, the African country of Angola lies devastated. Its economy is in ruins. The senseless civil war, which has dragged in tens of thousands of foreigners, has reached a stalemate.

On one side of the fray is the Marxist dictatorship which grabbed control of Luanda, the capital, after independence. Its army is propped up by 45,000 Cuban soldiers financed by Moscow, which also supplies its arms. The Cubans, often defeated in their skirmishes with the freedom fighters, now act mainly as garrison troops in the cities.

On the other side are the freedom fighters led by Jonas Savimbi, nominally committed to democratic principles. Savimbi's freedom movement, known as Unita, has 60,000 well-trained fighters in control of large rural sections of the country. With very little outside help, and operating from camps in the bush, Savimbi has harried the Cubans and their Soviet "advisers" with enough success to cause political observers to compare Angola with Afghanistan.

Complicating the issue even more is the presence of South African forces. Their original mission was limited to hot pursuit of radical terrorists threatening South-West Africa (Namibia), which South Africa continues to administer despite a United Nations resolution calling for the country to be given its independence. South Africa fears a Marxist takeover of South-West Africa. But, since 1984, South African troops have become increasingly involved in direct clashes with Cubans.

Now the Soviet Union has stated its willingness to help end the war, offering to act as co-guarantor of a peace settlement and becoming a direct participant in negotiations "if others want it."

The deal is purportedly simple: The U.S.S.R. would persuade Cuba to pull out of Angola, making way for an internal settlement between the puppet regime and the freedom fighters.

The United States, for its part, would induce South Africa to pull out of South-West Africa. This is easier said than done. With Congress gearing up to vote for harsh new sanctions against South Africa, and given the lack of U.S. influence in that country, it is difficult to imagine that Pretoria would be amenable to pleas for favors from Washington.

Nevertheless, we should take advantage of the Soviets' weariness with this war to urge them to assume a more direct role in negotiations and to use their leverage to hasten the withdrawal of Cuban troops in anticipation of free elections. It is of prime importance to the stability of the whole region that there should be an end to this profitless conflict, that it be followed by democratic rule in Angola.

New theory questions cause of AIDS

WASHINGTON — AIDS has become as much a political and economic issue as it has a social tragedy. Death and dying are the outward manifestations, but behind the scenes a debate is raging among scientists over whether AIDS research is following the wrong lead.

Jack Anderson

At the center of the debate is a University of California biologist who insists that the commonly accepted theory about the cause of AIDS is simply not true. Dr. Peter Duesberg of the Berkeley campus' Department of Molecular Biology has angered leading AIDS researchers by his contention that the human immunodeficiency virus (HIV) is not the cause of AIDS.

By definition, AIDS is a breakdown in the body's immune system. The victim then dies of a condition that the body cannot fight, such as cancer or pneumonia. The popular theory is that HIV is the virus that causes the breakdown of the immune system.

But Duesberg thinks AIDS may be caused by lifestyle — not that lifestyle puts a person in contact with any particular AIDS-causing virus, but that it may hamper the body's ability to fight disease.

Duesberg believes HIV is a dormant virus that cannot cause the deterioration of the immune system. He theorizes that AIDS is brought on by the type of lifestyle that includes sexual indiscretion and drug abuse. Sexually transmitted diseases and harmful drugs can, by themselves, compromise the body's immune system, he says. The AIDS epidemic in Africa, he believes, is the result of living standards that weaken the immune system. And it is factors other than the HIV virus, Duesberg asserts, that cause AIDS in people who receive blood tranfusions, and he claims there is statistical evidence to back him up.

The theory has been labeled nonsense by top AIDS researchers. But Duesberg's persistence and startling statements are gaining him attention.

Although they have not endorsed his ideas, his colleagues at Berkeley and some researchers and health advocates have publicly called for the scientific community to further investigate the cause of AIDS before wholeheartedly buying into the HIV theory. They cite a lack of proof that HIV is the sole cause of AIDS.

Dr. Joseph Sonnabend, an AIDS researcher in New York, said he suspects AIDS is caused by many factors. He and Michael Callen of the People With AIDS Coalition in New York said they are concerned that treatment theories are based solely on the HIV hypothesis. Sonnabend said his views have also drawn hostility from his peers.

The National Center for Health Advocacy in Washington also has called for more investigation. Its president, Janet Smith, told our reporter, Scott Sleek, she is "concerned" about the reaction of the scientific community to Duesberg. "Instead of attacking him, there ought to be some serious soul-searching about the real role of co-factors in AIDS and what they may tell us about how to prevent and treat the disease."

Dr. Robert Gallo, the foremost AIDS researcher at the National Institutes of Health, has said publicly that he can't respond to Duesberg's questions "without shrieking." Experts such as Gallo say HIV acts like no traditional virus, and their extensive research shows overwhelming evidence of a link between HIV and AIDS. They criticize Duesberg for asking for proof in a field where circumstantial evidence is often strong enough to pinpoint the root of a disease.

Duesberg is no amateur. He is a member of the National Academy of Sciences and is considered a pioneer in the field of viruses and cancer-causing genes. He is also a friend and colleague of the researchers that oppose his theory.

The firestorm around Duesberg is caused in part by his bold style. He has said he would gladly inject himself with HIV to prove it doesn't cause AIDS. He claims AZT, a drug used to treat AIDS, is toxic and is adding to the death toll. And Duesberg has accused the foremost AIDS researchers of collusion, suggesting that they won't rethink their theory because they have financial interests in the tests for HIV antibodies.

"Until (the cause of AIDS) is proven in scientific or logical ways, it's obvious they are out to defend vested or personal interests," Duesberg told us.

NOREIGA WAS NO SECRET — Vice President George Bush swears that he was unaware of General Manuel Noriega's drug activities until Panama's military dictator was indicted. That means Bush paid little attention to his job as head of the federal government's drug interdiction task force. The task force was given full information about Noriega.

STEVE LEVINE

Democrats urged to mend party quilt

Levine

like most post-McGovern Democrats around the country, the Texas party preaches its open-arms, equal-opportunity gospel. But as a colleague of mine observed, "Nowhere else but here does it matter MORE what you are.

"As soon as they get here, they say, 'OK, all the blacks over here, all the Hispanics over here, women up there.' "

A list of the caucuses that met during the state convention bears that out: Mexican-American, black, women, lesbian//gay, agriculture, Arab-American, teachers, labor, democratic socialists, youth, seniors and a few more. Compared to the Republicans — where one "dark-haired caucus" would have covered all the non-majority interest groups — they're certainly a mixed group.

In his spell-binding 55-minute speech to the convention, the Rev. Jesse Jackson compared the Republicans to a blanket of "one texture, one color," and the Democrats to a patch-work quilt. Each patch might have noble goals, he said. Blacks want inner-city development. Farmworkers want better field conditions. Gays want more AIDS research. Labor wants fair wages.

Working individually, Jackson screamed over and over, "Your patch is too small." He urged them to stitch the patches together into a quilt big enough to cover millions of Americans and thick enough to keep them all warm.

The Democrats know they must follow Jesse's advice if they want to win elections and achieve their policy goals. But as much as they talk unity, their party's structure seems to slip them all into separate little cubbyholes.

Take, for example, the day-long process of selecting the 64 at-large Texas delegates to the Democratic National Convention in Atlanta: 29 for Gov. Michael Dukakis, 25 for Jackson, 10 for Sen. Al Gore. You'd think all the three camps would have to do is pick the folks they want to send to the convention.

But no. It's not that easy. See, the party rules "suggest" that the delegation reflect the ethnic "population and participation in primary and general elections." That means 35 Hispanics and 32 blacks out of the 211-member delegation. It also means a 50-50 split between men and women.

But all that adjusting must be done with the final 64 selections. The first 119 delegates are elected by their state convention colleagues among Texas' 31 state Senate districts regardless of race, color or gender. The next 28 are already-chosen congressmen and party leaders. Those 147 skewed toward the white, male end of the spectrum.

So, OK. The three camps still get to pick the folks they want to send, but they've got to concentrate more on women, blacks and Hispanics. It's still not that easy. See, the candidates like to send two certain kinds of people to the national convention: those they want to thank for working hard for them and raising money for them in the primary and those with a lot of political stroke who can raise more money for them and attract lots of voters for them in the general election.

And those folks, once again, are predominantly white males. It took hours of horsetrading for the Dukakis, Jackson and Gore groups to find places for men like Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby, AFL-CIO President Harry Hubbard, fundraiser Calvin Guest and former U.S. Sen. Ralph Yarborough and still meet the suggested "representation goals."

The purpose of those goals — which grew out of the 1972 McGovern reforms and which party rules emphatically state are not "mandatory quotas" — is to do away with the remnants of discrimination, to do away with the smoke- and old-white-men-filled rooms. The idea is to make sure some women, some blacks and some Hispanics make it into the political power structure.

But how much longer will the Democrats need to do that through a system that emphasizes the differences, rather than the similarities, in their party quilt? Regardless of what the party rules say, the three presidential camps were obviously using quotas and not "representational goals."

Quotas nearly always lead to tokenism. And tokenism always leads to bitterness and anger. And bitterness and anger can tear apart Jesse's grand quilt faster than any Republican campaign strategy.

RUSSELL BAKER

Pilgrimage yields curious enlightenment

Doctor Cosmic granted me an appointment. Traveling day and night under the most exhausting conditions (8,000 miles through snake-infested airplanes on which the penalty for smoking was death), I at last found him in a rough jungle clearing.

Russell Baker

"I purposely keep the clearing rough to avoid the temptation of comfort," he explained. "Nothing is so inimical to the noble life as comfort. Socrates was wrong when he said the unexamined life is not worth living. I, Doctor Cosmic, say it is the ignoble life that is not worth living. Have you come to learn nobility?"

Perhaps, I said, for I had come to learn what Jesse Jackson really wanted.

"That's easy," he said, and started telling me what Johnny Carson was really like. Out of respect I let him finish, thereby learning that Johnny Carson is just as funny at home as he is on television, though he can get pretty grumpy if asked to get off a few brilliant ad libs right there in his parlor.

After that he told me what Ed McMahon was really like: just as jolly around the house as he is on camera while taking guff from Johnny.

"You doubtless wonder if Ed's famous desire to give away millions of dollars does, indeed, make him short-tempered with those who foolishly discard their junk mail unopened instead of slitting the envelope to learn if they have won the $10 million and the opportunity to appear in a TV commercial with Ed himself," Doctor Cosmic mused.

It was shocking to see a man as eminent as Doctor Cosmic muse in public.

"He is a pure child of nature," his press agent later disclosed. "He puts his elbows on the table while eating and, when being quite categorical in his public utterance, he asseverates."

He was, in fact, asseverating while I was in the press agent's clutches. A safari of cosmic newspaper columnists had arrived unexpectedly in desperate need of readily printable, easily compressible and quickly digestible wisdom.

The Doctor had broken off our chat and taken these authorities into the comfort of a smooth jungle clearing, leaving me to his sadistic press agent who made me watch home movies of his client doing noble works. Never mind. I'd been put to the home-movie torture before without screaming. The trick is to talk louder than the projectionist, so I shouted that it seemed ignoble of the Doctor to subject the columnists to a corrupt smooth clearing instead of the good rough one.

"Just smart press relations," said my tormentor. "Those columnists are so cosmic they get their shoes shined by prime ministers and their hands licked by headwaiters. Put them in a rough clearing and they'd get cross and write poisonous columns denouncing Doctor Cosmic as a fraud."

"Such, alas, is the risk to which a man like myself is exposed," the Doctor told me, having sent the safari away far wiser about the meaning of Gorbachev's new policies, the correct solution of the Central American problem, the secret for ending the drug problem in the United States, the only possible solution to the Middle East problem, the social significance of "Crocodile II" wiping out "Rambo III" at the box office, and why a good man nowadays is hard to find.

"My question, Doctor —"

"Yes, you wanted to know what Jesse James was really like," he said. "Both Jesse and his brother Frank were the same around the house as they were on the job. If their mother wouldn't come across with the cookie jar, saying they were already as fat as hogs, they'd stick their guns into her ribs and —"

"Actually it's Jesse Jackson I inquired about."

"The political fellow? So, your question."

"What does Jesse Jackson really want?"

The great man's contempt for this question was so intense that he would have heaped obloquy on me, but he was fresh out and didn't have a trowel on hand anyhow, so he said, "You already know the answer, as I shall now demonstrate by giving you a multiple-choice test."

He listed five answers to my question, only one of which was correct, he said.

"What Jesse Jackson really wants is (a) an ice cream cone, (b) to pitch for the Baltimore Orioles, (c) chairmanship of the War Graves Commission, (d) a permanent pass entitling him to nonstop elevator service at the Washington Monument, (e) to be the Democratic candidate for vice president of the United States."

It was easy. I'd read about Jackson's athletic skill, so I knew immediately. "Pitch for the Orioles," I said.

"You're ready to move up to cosmic columnizing," said the Doctor, and kicked me out.

GEORGE F. WILL

Court issues sentence of lifetime birth control

WASHINGTON — When Debra Forster was 11, she was raped. At about that time she began drug abuse that has included cocaine and LSD. She was married at 15; by 17 she was the mother of two boys. Not surprisingly, she was a terrible mother. Today she is 18 and the focus of a legal controversy.

George F. Will

A year ago in Mesa, Ariz., she left her infant sons, ages 18 months and six months, alone for three days in a sweltering apartment without air conditioning. She was on a binge because motherhood was, she says, too much for her. The boys were dehydrated nearly to death. She was arrested and, while in jail, gave birth to a girl.

She could have been sentenced to 30 years. Instead she was put on probation, with an especially troubling wrinkle. Her sentence of life probation not only forbids her to re-establish contact with her children, but also requires her "to remain on some method of birth control." That is for life.

One sympathizes with the sentencing judge, a woman exasperated with "babies having babies." However, this sentence is a step down a dangerous path.

Presumably, Forster will be required to furnish written evidence that she is using birth-control pills. To compel the use of a drug is an intrusive act. To compel the use of a drug that controls an important human capability, as a birth-control pill does, is especially intrusive.

When government tampers, surgically or chemically, with sexuality, it is touching personal identity. In light of the recent elaboration of a woman's privacy right, as defined in constitutional law concerning abortion, it is hard to imagine Forster's sentence withstanding the scrutiny of an appeals court.

But regardless of its constitutional standing (Forster is a Catholic, so the sentence may violate not only the privacy right but the guarantee of free exercise of religion), the sentence is morally repellent.

Compelling Forster to use birth-control pills is not as intrusive as, say, compulsory sterilization would be, not least because what the pill does can be reversed if the compulsion is removed. But intrusiveness is not made acceptable by being reversible.

The seriousness of such an intrusion is suggested by this sensible intuition: It is less troubling for government to remove a child from incompetent or abusive parents than for government to stipulate who shall not have permission to procreate.

Forster's sentence can not be considered mandatory preventive medicine. What is to be prevented — pregnancy — is not an illness. And for a court to mandate medicine for punitive purposes conflicts with the fundamental moral imperative of medicine: "Do no harm."

What the sentencing judge is trying to prevent is not a disease but bad behavior — irresponsible procreation.

But the practice of administering drugs for behavior modification has enormous potential for mischief. Compulsory medication for persons incapacitated by psychosis is not uncommon. But such involuntary medication is undertaken only when the will of the patient is presumed not to exist, or to be so attenuated that only chemical intervention can even partially restore it.

This is utterly unlike the mandating of a drug in Forster's case. There, the purpose of the drug is to incapacitate her body so that society will not have to count on her will to make her behavior better.

There are many potential uses of "chemical penology," all of them subversive of individual autonomy. Rapists could be sentenced to "chemical castration," drug treatments that reduce the body's production of testosterone. Violent recidivists could be sentenced to perpetual sedation. Perhaps drunk drivers could be sentenced to remain on a drug that would make them painfully ill if they consumed any alcohol.

Clearly many such punishments would be crueler, in the sense of more demeaning, than the normal punishment of imprisonment for serious offenses. Forster's offense was serious. She should have been sent to jail. The law should try to regulate behavior by the traditional mixture of influences: The law should appeal to conscience by stigmatizing certain behavior, and should pose a threat to be feared.

Forster's sentence is a step toward treating an offender as a creature devoid of the essence of humanity: the status of moral agent. It is a step toward reducing convicts to raw material for those people that C.S. Lewis called "official straighteners," people armed with modern technologies and a modern disregard for the free will of individuals.

It may seem perverse to say that a convict has a right to normal punishment. But alternatives to such punishment can be worse. Alternatives can dehumanize the convict by chemically nullifying the need for him or her to make moral choices.

There're no comparisons when talking about Texana

Modisett

Having lived the best part of four decades in Texas, I feel relatively at ease with what many would characterize as Texana — the very being and substance of the Lone Star State, from the lifestyle of its people, to their customs, peculiarities and personalities.

Furthermore, the fact that I have not lived away from Texas, as many have, gives me an added perception of Texas and its history that seemingly fewer and fewer people can claim. I'm not complaining about those who have lived in other states; it's just that for those who have, there's a natural tendency to compare when discussing states. It's hotter, here, they'll say. Or there's more rain there.

Fine, but the purpose here is to talk Texana and when one does that, there's no reason for comparisons. Texas is unique in a number of ways. Its geography, people, even climate varies extensively. To understand how it all fits together, you have to go beyond the physical differences and see how the state as a whole is tied up in one neat bundle. For example, consider:

■ Boots are a way of life. Or footwear, as the case may be. One could claim that "boots make the man," but then someone would say you're sexist. So to be on safe ground you have to say "boots make the man or the woman." Of course, you always could say, "boots make the individual," but that sounds dumb.

■ When a Texan goes into a restaurant for the first time, chances are he'll order either chili or a chicken fried steak. Why? Well, some people may claim that out of all the foods a restaurant serves, those two items are the most difficult to cook poorly. But I have another theory: Every Texan knows that the quality of a restaurant is determined by those two menu items.

■ If a Texan wants to strike up a conversation with a stranger, he knows that he's safe talking about a) baseball and how lousy the Texas Rangers are; b) football and how great the Dallas Cowboys are but only in the past tense; c) Willie Nelson and Waylon Jennings and where they got their "starts;" d) how the weather is changing from what it used to be; e) what it used to be like when there were still domino halls in every town, or anything nostalgic for that matter.

■ Suburbans may be the National Car of Texas, but the first vehicle on every real Texan's wish list is a new pickup.

That's only a smidgen of Texana. There's plenty more around you. Look and you'll find it.

The best part of Texas remains sitting on the front porch in the evening, watching the sun slide below the horizon and feeling the evening air take on just a hint of coolness. That's enough to make any real Texan long for Colorado!

Overconfidence costs Mitterrand assembly control

Flora Lewis

PARIS — Excessive confidence cost President Francois Mitterrand desired control of the National Assembly after his re-election triumph last month. He hasn't exactly been deprived of the fruits of his victory; he has seven years in office ahead. But he will have an extended period of complex maneuver to keep a steady hold on France.

Maneuver is his specialty, though. A French commentator noted that he is at his weakest when he wins and at his best when he loses. There are a great many tricky political and perhaps constitutional questions to face.

But the biggest question, whither France, may be the easiest to answer. Fears reported here that the country will become unpredictable, unreliable, unstable are part of the domestic political debate as various factions jockey around for new positions.

In fact there is no sense of crisis, no atmosphere of drift or serious dissension. There is wide consensus on the important foreign policy, defense and even basic economic issues, and no reason to think these questions will be reopened to challenge.

The European Community has just agreed to lift controls on the flow of capital among its 12 members, and has pledged to harmonize relevant taxation policy within two years. That is an important lock on the temptation for economic adventurism. Talk about the need for a European central bank is becoming more serious. The 1992 deadline for lifting all remaining trade barriers within the Common Market is taking on solidity and forcing adjustments. Leeway for choice by individual governments is rapidly narrowing.

So France moves into an uncharted domestic political scene firmly constrained by both international commitments and its own public opinion to keep on going in the same direction. It is likely to be inhibited from dramatic initiatives by the new intricacy of its politics, which may be something of a loss to its partners but should also be a reassurance.

Mitterrand's effective options in forming a government are to install a minority Socialist team with a program capable of commanding sufficient support from the opposition to get legislation passed, or to seek a coalition with centrists. His Socialist party and allies have 275 seats, 14 short of a majority. The tactically federated center and conservative parties have 266 seats in the new assembly. They can probably be split apart, but that will take time, reflection and bargaining.

Arithmetically, the Socialists and Communists, with 27 seats, have a majority but their collaboration is ruled out now, although left-wing Socialists still have a nostalgia for the ruptured "union of the left." Concern that too much centrism will leave room for revival of the extremes on left and right is not unreasonable, but is not the immediate problem.

Having made the mistake of dissolving parliament right after his re-election, with only perfunctory gestures toward the "opening" he had promised, Mitterrand is constitutionally obliged to wait at least one year before taking his dilemma to the voters again. He will have to make do with what he can wangle.

Even the French dislike openly flaunted cynicism from their politicians. They punished their president for it, as they punished ex-Prime Minister Jacques Chirac in the presidential election for his deals releasing hostages from Lebanon, attacking rebels in New Caledonia and other self-dramatizing acts just before the vote.

The mystery of the elections was not the voters' call to order and steadiness, but the drastic error of opinion polls. They are normally quite accurate here, and on election night their projections based on a tiny percentage of counted ballots were sound. But two weeks before, they were predicting a whopping Socialist majority of 350 to 400, which obviously influenced Mitterrand's decision. There has been no explanation of what went wrong, no apologies. A follow-up mystery is why there has been no demand for an inquiry, since the politicians were all misled.

In any case, the result will give the legislature a weight and significance it has never had in the Fifth Republic. Mostly it has been a rubber stamp. Now it will have to be taken into account, with due regard for the views of what former President Valery Giscard d'Estaing has offered as a "constructive opposition."

It's less tidy, but probably healthier, especially since France is well anchored now in Europe and has quietly but definitely improved its relation with NATO. It should be interesting to watch, but not worrisome.

North's devotion to duty commended

Having been recently transferred into the Retired U.S. Marine Corps Reserve, I am now permitted by traditional military convention to take this opportunity to express my deepest appreciation to him for his military service to our country. I also wish to extend my personal thanks to him for enduring all the gore, guff and grief attendant unto that career.

His devotion to duty and country are to be commended not scorned. In Lt. Col. North there is a Marine officer who has always held American interests "first" in his heart, not in a mean and selfish way but in an honorable and realistic way, one that knows just how rough losing can be and is dedicated to preserving our blessed nation from its many dangers.

I would also like to add my personal media-generated view of what I see in his heart and that observation is that Lt. Col. North did the very best he could have done under some extremely tough circumstances and most certainly does not deserve any sort of shabby treatment.

God willing, this will all work out and serve as his "political boot camp" from which he'll graduate and go on to much greater things. In closing I wish him and his family all the best with the undying gratitude of myself and my family. Semper Fidelis, Colonel North.

Utility companies' integrities comparable

According to Jack Anderson (Reporter-Telegram, March 22, 1988), "Since the NRC does not have the staff to fully inspect nuclear power plants itself, it relies heavily on the integrity of the utility companies to report their problems honestly."

This smacks of our stand-off with the U.S.S.R. on verification of inspecting nuclear test sites. Somehow, I feel that the relative integrities are equally comparable. Why are we putting the fox in charge of the henhouse?

MISD proves existence Good Old Boy Network

Once again, Midlanders can see a Texas institution at work: The Good Old Boy Network. I am referring to the choice of a Fort Worth (formerly of Midland) architect by the Midland Independent School District for its $12 million expansion of this city's elementary schools. The Network, alive and well since 1836, transcends city limits, extending from El Paso to Beaumont, and encompasses approximately 267,339 square miles. The MISD has proved, also one again, that for those in this Network, desired results can very often be determined by "who you know."

How can one join the GOBN? Having a mother who gave birth to you in a drilling shack while daddy was out toolpushing helps, as does a family history which puts great-great grandpa in the vicinity of San Jacinto on April 21, 1836 (and English better have been his native tongue.)

If Midland's Chamber of Commerce wants us to "Buy West Texas First," the MISD has not set a fine example to us transplanted damn Yankees. After all, when it comes to shopping, reaching for my Bloomingdale's catalog is much easier than following city detours to get to the Mall.

Leaders' praise indicates Reagan's presidency not disaster

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.
Editor in Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

Hearst

NEW YORK — This was a wonderful week for President Reagan and a particularly encouraging one for the peace and prosperity our country as a whole has enjoyed under his much-maligned policies.

At the Toronto Economic Summit, the leaders of the six other major free world nations paid a glowing tribute to the president's economic and foreign policy achievements.

The praise of his foreign partners proved how wrong were those partisan politicians and liberal media pundits who claimed his presidency was a disaster, who predicted his economic recovery program would fail and that he would never succeed in getting a nuclear arms reduction agreement with the Soviets.

In what the Washington Post described as a "triumphant farewell," the president's economic policies were credited with enabling the seven major industrialized countries to pilot the global economy to a safe landing after the October, 1987, stock market crash. His advocacy of freer trade, tax cuts and deregulation was recognized as having helped sustain global economic growth.

A joint statement congratulated the president on what he has already accomplished in his relations with Soviet leader Gorbachev, including the treaty to eliminate mid-range nuclear weapons, pursue negotiations for a 50 percent reduction in strategic missiles, carry his crusade for human rights to the heart of the Soviet empire, and generally bring about the greatest improvement in Soviet-Allied relations since the end of World War II.

British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher praised the president for playing "such an important part" in the economic success of the world economy in the 1980's.

Japanese Prime Minister Noboru Takeshita said what the president had achieved in the summit meetings during his presidency was "historic."

Canadian Prime Minister Brian Mulroney, who hosted the Toronto summit, lauded the president for his "warmth and wisdom," and said "his leadership has been strong, his accomplishments most substantial and his place in history secure."

Few presidents in our peacetime history have received such praise from other world leaders.

It is ironic that recognition of our president's successful leadership is far greater among foreigners than among many of our own people who have apparently been misled by political demagogues and liberal ideologists.

It was gratifying to me to have my frequently expressed confidence that there would be no recession this year confirmed by the economic summiteers. Prime Minister Thatcher said "the very clear message that goes out from Toronto is one of confidence" that economic growth will continue.

The conference's final communique said expanding employment, restrained inflation and lower trade imbalances were encouraging developments that are "cause for optimism."

Treasury Secretary James Baker said flatly, "There will be no recession."

Pledging themselves to continue close cooperation to maintain economic growth, the seven leaders agreed on a variety of measures including renewal of their commitment to keep the dollar stable.

Further evidence of what the longest peacetime period of economic growth in our nation's history has meant for many American families was evident in a report this week by the U.S Bureau of Labor Statistics. The report showed our middle class is shrinking, but most of those no longer in that category have moved to the upper class, not the lower. The share of families in the upper class, defined as families with $56,000 income or over, had by 1986 virtually doubled compared with 1969 — jumping from 7.5 percent to 15.3 percent.

Let us hope that between now and the time President Reagan's term expires next January, there will be greater public realization that he has been one of our most successful peacetime presidents.

Summer students adjusting well to MC's new registration system

By H.A. TUCK

EDUCATION

Early registration for Summer Session II is moving right along, with almost no trouble from the new system. Prospective students for the second summer term are asked to come to the Student Services Office in the Administration Building this week to early register.

They should come according to this schedule: A-E on Monday, F-M on Tuesday, N-R on Wednesday and S-Z on Thursday. Hours are 7 a.m.-5 p.m. each day.

As they early register, students may pay their fees and that will take care of their registrations and they won't have to return for the official registration on July 7.

Those who don't pay their fees by Thursday, June 30, will be dropped from class rolls and will have to return on July 7 to register. Second summer session classes start on July 11.

• • •

When we talked about the Chaparral golfers playing the NJCAA tournament last week we neglected the contribution of one of our staff members. Chaparral Center director Mike Stevens went with the team and served as assistant coach for the Chaps during the four-day tourney.

Some things move along at the college with such regularity we don't talk much about them. One of those programs is the Defensive Driving and Drivers Education classes which the college operates almost continuously.

Defensive Driving is offered almost every week, with one class meeting Monday and Tuesday and another on Wednesday and Thursday, each meeting from 6-10 p.m. And on the second Saturday of each month, there's a class from 8 a.m.-4 p.m. Occasionally these schedules are changed because of college vacations.

Students for these are encouraged to enroll by noon of the weekday that the class begins. Enrollment deadline for the Saturday class is on Friday noon, or by Thursday at 5 p.m. when the college is on its four-day summer schedule.

Fee for this class is only $20, which includes the text and state certificate. Successful completion can mean a 10 percent reduction in vehicle insurance rates and also can be used to remove traffic tickets from drivers' records.

With more than 100 of these classes each year, the Drivers Education program helps between 1,000 and 1,2000 local residents annually.

"One thing we want to stress is that the eight-hour session is a state-mandated requirement in order for the course to be certified," said Dr. Camille Duchesne, director of continuing education.

She also attributed the continued succcess of the program to the instructors who teach the courses on a regular basis. James Bramlett has been teaching Defensive Driving for eight years for MC and has received an award as an Outstanding Defensive Driving Instructor in Texas. Hamid Vatankhah is the newest instructor, with just a little over a year with MC. Tony Madrid also teaches on occasion and he has more than eight years of experience.

Madrid also serves as MC's Driver Education instructor, teaching three classes per year. This class is offered in September, January, and May, mostly for high school students seeking their first license. The class costs $135, which covers 32 hours of classroom instruction, and 14 hours of driving instruction (seven behind the wheel and seven as an observer).

This class is limited to 35 students and usually has a waiting list. Students in this course must be at least 15 years of age on or before the day class begins.

The classroom instruction is taught Monday through Thursday from 5-7 p.m., with driving experience scheduled separately.

A public school teacher, Madrid has been teaching Drivers Education at MC for more than 10 years.

Duchesne also noted that new drivers can obtain a reduction on their insurance costs for completing the course.

If you have any questions about either of these programs, just call the Continuing Education office at 685-4518 or visit them in the Administration Building.

Let Your Voice Be Heard

MISD'S 24 HOUR SURVEILLANCE POLICY WILL BE DISCUSSED ON JUNE 28, 1988, at 7:15 P.M. AT THE MISD ADMINISTRATION BUILDING - 702 N. "H".

According to the City Council PTA questionnaire completed by our current Board of Trustees, all Trustees except Mr. Bob Rich opposed the 24 hr. surveillance policy. Mr. Rich stated in his questionnaire that "the concept is good but guidelines are unworkable".

We, as parents, recognize that some of our Midland teenagers have drug and alcohol problems. We are against ONLY the "24 hour surveillance policy" NOT MISD'S drug, alcohol and tobacco policy as it relates to school functions and activities.

OUR PROBLEMS WITH THE POLICY:

1. During non-school hours, students are parents' responsibility, NOT MISD'S.
2. During non-school hours, it is not the teachers' responsibility to police our children.
3. The policy has been unequally enforced.
4. The policy singles out extracurricular activity students.
5. The policy has created "witch-hunts" in our schools, turning students against students.

WE ARE LOOKING FOR ALTERNATIVES TO THIS POLICY. ATTEND THE JUNE 28th MEETING. LET YOUR VOICE BE HEARD.

Six Midlanders earn mathematics honors

From Staff Reports

Six Midland students have "added" honors to their academic records through successful entry in the annual American Mathematics Competitions.

These students competed against approximately 600,000 peers in 6,108 schools around the world, including schools in Israel, Singapore, Austria and France.

In the junior high category, Skipper K. Hollar of Goddard Junior High School acheived a perfect test score. Of the 178,045 junior high contestants, only 75 attained that level.

In the high school category for grades 10 or below, two students, Joseph Baressi of Midland High School and Kris Raney of Lee Freshman High School, were named to the Merit Roll for a score of 90 or above.

Of the 389,012 contestants, only 4,312 were named to the Merit Roll. An additional 8,050 students, mainly 11th and 12th grade students, were named to the Honor Roll.

Midland High School's three person team, Chuck Brownson, Tiana Daniel and Greg Milios, placed their school among the 1,750 schools earning special commendation.

"This is a very rigorous and prestigious examination," said Bill Duncker, coordinator of secondary mathematics. "Midland should be very proud of the competitive stature of our mathematics students."

HOW THEY VOTED

Congressional Quarterly

WASHINGTON — Votes of area members of Congress on key issues during the week ending June 24, 1988.

KEY HOUSE VOTES

House votes fair housing for families with children. The House, nearing completion of a compromise fair-housing bill, rejected, 116-289, an amendment that would have deleted a provision barring housing discrimination against families with children. The defeated amendment was considered during debate June 23 on a measure to revise the 1968 Fair Housing Act, which bars housing discrimination based on race, color, sex or religion.

The family-status provision of the fair-housing measure stipulated that families with children under 18 could not be denied housing. Retirement communities would be exempt from this anti-bias provision if all tenants were 62 or older, or if 90 percent of the tenants in each unit were 55 or older and there were special facilities to serve the needs of the elderly. The defeated amendment would have deleted these provisions, instead calling for the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights to study the extent of housing discrimination on families with children and then report to Congress.

The House is expected to pass the fair-housing bill next week.

Supporters of the amendment to strike the families-with-children provision argued that the bill was inadequate in preserving housing communities for senior citizens. Most restrictions on housing for children, they maintained, applied to small apartments that were not suitable for children, anyway. "Discrimination is not right when practiced against anybody," said E. Clay Shaw Jr., R-Fla., sponsor of the amendment, "but I do not think the senior citizens who wish to maintain and live in a senior community should be told by us...that they no longer can do so."

Opponents of the amendment countered that an anti-bias provision was needed because landlords have persisted in discriminating against children, who, ironically, make up a large number of the growing homeless population in this country. The bill, they insisted, contained adequate exemptions for senior citizen housing. "When...facts show a problem to be as widespread as this," said Mike Synar, D-Okla., "and...over 75 percent of the rental housing nationwide restricts or bans children, it is time for...the federal government to weigh in and get involved."

Voting against: Gonzalez (D).

Paired No: Boulter (R).

House OKs defense spending bill. The House June 21 spent less than two hours debating its $283 billion fiscal 1989 defense appropriations bill and then passed the measure, 360-53.

The spending bill's speedy passage came months earlier than in past years because of an agreement reached during the budget summit between Congress and President Reagan last November and the lack of controversial arms-control amendments that have been the subject of long debates in past bills.

Arms-control issues were missing from the spending bill because those subjects are expected to be resolved this year in the current House-Senate conference on the companion defense authorization bill — which authorizes spending levels for defense in fiscal 1989.

Voting against: Combest (R).

Paired No: Boulter (R).

KEY SENATE VOTE

Senate delays consideration of wilderness bill. For the second time in a week, the Senate June 21 failed, 54-42, in its attempt to invoke cloture and limit debate on a wilderness bill that has developed into a floor battle over environmental concerns versus states' and community rights. The vote was six shy of the 60 needed to invoke cloture.

The controversy centers around the Great Smoky Mountains Wilderness Act that would designate about 465,000 acres in North Carolina and Tennessee as wilderness and would financially compensate residents of Swain County, N.C., for a road to family cemeteries that was flooded during construction of a dam back in 1943.

At the time, the federal government promised to rebuild the county's road on land slated by this bill to become protected wilderness in North Carolina. The U.S. government never rebuilt the road because of the extreme expense and difficulty involved, and the amount of environmental damage that would result.

The House passed the wilderness measure last September by voice vote.

Members favoring cloture said that the designated wilderness lands near the Smoky Mountains need protection from ever-expanding development. They also noted that compensating the residents of Swain County, instead of building a road through the proposed wilderness areas, would solve the 45-year-old controversy and prevent any development of the area. "Every conservation and environmental group supports this bill," said Albert Gore Jr., D-Tenn. "This legislation (also) repays Swain County.... This small and very poor county struggles to provide basic services to its people.... They deserve a cash settlement."

Those opposed to invoking cloture argued that Swain County made a deal in good faith with the federal government and that the government should fulfill its commitment to build the road. They also argue that without the road, people's access to the wilderness area will be limited — thus hurting tourism in the area. "Allowing this bill to be considered by the Senate erodes the power every senator has to protect the interests of his or her citizens," said Jesse Helms, R-N.C. "Passage of this bill tells the powerful environmental groups that whatever they want, they will get. Let the people be damned."

Voting against: Gramm (R).

MOBILE, Ala. (AP) — Kristen Logan of Mississippi beat out 49 other high school seniors Saturday night for the title of America's Junior Miss, which carries with it a $30,000 scholarship to the college of her choice.

The first runner-up was Indiana's Jody Hilger. Oklahoma's Delphine Lee was the second runner-up, followed by Idaho's Lucretia Murphy third and California's Megan Murray fourth.

Miss Logan, who sang "Somewhere Out There" as her talent category entry, also impressed the judges by winning the physical fitness category.

In olden days it was believed that the astrological figure of Mercury engraved on silver gave success in merchandising; Mars assured a soldier of Victory and Venus, beauty. These talismans were felt to be even more powerful in the hour of their planet's ascendancy.

MAKING YOUR FINANCES FIT

from Patteann Daniel

Hire Your Kids!

If you have a family business, you have an opportunity to do some family tax planning of your own: hire your youngsters! You can't pay them more than the going rate for whatever it is they do for you, y must actually pay then (and not just c dit them within a joint account, say), and you as employer and your youngsters over 18 must now pay Social Security tax on their earnings, but there are still advantages.

First, because this will be earned income, rather than from investments, it will be taxable only at the child's own rate, probably the minimum 15 percent.

Second, this earned income can be invested in an IRA, where it can grow, tax-deferred, until the money is needed for college. As long as your child is over 14 by the time the money is taken out, it will be taxed at the lower rate, not at your higher one. Even with a 10 percent penalty on distribution, tax deferral makes this form of saving worthwhile.

Third benefit: your youngster gets a start in the family business.

Braniff stockholders vote in new board

DALLAS (AP) — Braniff Inc. stockholders voted in a new board of directors Saturday after the Dallas-based airline was sold to BIA Acquisitions, a New York investment group.

Stockholders elected the new board after officials announced Braniff's parent company, Dalfort Aviation Inc., sold the airline to the investment group led by Paine Webber Group Inc. of New York in a leveraged buyout valued at $111 million.

Dalfort, which is owned by the Pritzker family of Chicago, had been negotiating the buyout with the Paine Webber group for two weeks. The group offered Dalfort $7 per share in cash and a pro rata share of 20 percent of the restructured company for each share of Braniff common stock.

Dalfort turned down an offer the group made about four months ago.

Braniff vice chairman and chief executive officer J. Patrick Foley said the company's new board of directors and management were to be in Dallas Monday.

Four men who resigned Friday as executives of Piedmont Airlines reportedly are set to join former Piedmont chairman William Howard in Braniff's new management. Under Howard's leadership, Piedmont grew into the ninth-largest U.S. airline and was consistently among the most profitable carriers.

"I believe those who are coming in know the business," Foley said. "If you analyze what Braniff is today and what Piedmont was 10 years ago, you can see very similar airlines."

Foley told the Dallas Times Herald he was unaware of BIA's plans for Braniff, which has had losses of about $20 million in the past two years.

Foley said part of the financing for the buyout would come from sale of some of the company's assets. He said he expects BIA will then proceed with market expansion to overcome 1987 operating losses of $8.1 million.

Reports earlier said Fort Worth-based American Airlines was considering the purchase of $40 million of Braniff's assets, including terminal gates at Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport.

The BIA buyout was expected to be finalized and new directors elected Friday, but company officials postponed the stockholder meetings twice without explanation.

There was speculation that the investor group was trying to find additional financial backing for the transaction, but Foley said Saturday the delays were caused by paperwork problems.

But he believes the group will keep Braniff's headquarters in Dallas and he expects Braniff to expand its operations by buying more planes for the Kansas City, Mo., market.

Earlier in the week, a Braniff spokesman said existing directors would not stand for re-election to the board if Dalfort sold the airline before the end of the stockholders meeting.

The company's new board includes Jeffrey R. Chodorow, a real estate investor who is a principal in the Philadelphia-based investment firm CoreGroup Inc.

Other new board members include CoreGroup principals Gerald Broker and Larry D. Yogel, New York real estate investor Arthur G. Cohen and one of his associates, Steven M. Terk, attorney Marvin Tepper and Joseph Steuert, managing director of Paine Webber's investment banking division.

Petra Perez of Taft points to the place on the ceiling that she claims was left with the image of Jesus after he appeared to her and healed her of her arthritis.

Visitors flock to South Texas home to see image of Jesus in ceiling

TAFT, Texas (AP) — Hundreds of South Texans have visited in recent weeks to see what Ricardo and Petra Perez say is an image of Jesus Christ in the ceiling of a room in their home.

The image, formed by shadows in swirls of ceiling plaster, is of the face and "sacred heart" of Jesus, Ms. Perez says.

Visitors have left candles and tacked up written prayers in the room. Ms. Perez said the image is best viewed while kneeling down and looking through a window.

Ms. Perez said the image, which is similar to a devotional picture she owns, appeared in March after she saw an apparition of Jesus. She said the apparition cured her of arthritis, but her husband didn't believe her and told her not to tell anyone.

"I believe it, too, now," said Ricardo Perez, who is moving the kitchen of his home because of the steady stream of visitors.

About 10 visitors a day have been coming since the image appeared in the modest home at the edge of Taft, a town of about 4,000 people located 30 miles north of Corpus Christi.

"Some days, it's slow," Perez said. "But every day they come."

Many residents of Taft, including the Perezes, are Roman Catholic, but church officials have not visited the Perez home or taken a stand on the authenticity of the image.

"I've purposely stayed away from this thing," said Rev. Ed Kircher, of the Holy Family parish in Taft.

"The best proof is time," Kircher said. "If people start making money, then you know something is wrong. ... If something is authentic, then there is a reason and the reason is permanent."

Dallas voters take stand on rail system

DALLAS (AP) — Dallas voters headed to the polls Saturday to decide what may be the most controversial issue in years: Should the city speed up its plans for a 93-mile light rail system by permitting the Dallas Area Rapid Transit to buy $1 billion in bonds.

DART, the regional transit authority, proposes borrowing $1 billion for the initial construction phase. If approved at the polls, the bonds will be paid back from a one-cent sales tax collected to pay for the operation of DART. The final pricetag for the light rail system is expected to reach about $3 billion.

Polls show area voters are evenly divided over the issue. And voters on both sides say that if the bond proposal fails, the rail system may never be built.

Supporters say the trolley-like rail and subway is as important to the area's development as the coming of the railroad more than a century ago and the recent construction of the Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport.

"At stake is economic growth, jobs, mobility for our people, environmental health and the image of our city as not being the can-do city it claims to be," said Dallas Mayor Annette Strauss, who heads support for the measure.

City officials insist the area needs the rail to help get rid of its traffic problem.

Between 1964 and 1984, the number of trips taken daily by Dallas-Fort Worth area motorists doubled from 4.9 million to 9.8 million. Traffic along the infamous North Central Expressway has risen 40 percent during the same period.

But opponents claim the proposal will prompt high taxes and not alleviate traffic jams. They say a number of post-World War II rail systems have ended up costing more and serving fewer riders than projected.

Rather, opponents suggest building more highways and establishing better traffic management plans, such as express lanes for buses.

Attorney resigns after woman solicits complaints against him

DALLAS (AP) — All Mrs. Lee F. Scott wanted was for a contractor to finish a retainer wall on the family's lot at Cedar Creek Lake, so she paid her attorney to take the case to court.

Scott

The Scotts lost round one of the fight, but the attorney said he would appeal — if the Scotts would pay him $218 for copies of trial records.

The Scotts sent the money but the attorney decided against the appeal. And he never told the Scotts of his decision.

"He never did anything," Mrs. Scott said.

She did, though.

Mrs. Scott ran ads for one month each in the Athens Daily Review and Cedar Creek Pilot. The ads read, "Dissatisfied with Attorney Jim Hurley?" and "Do you feel you were mistreated by Attorney Jim Hurley?"

The ads gave the post office box number for Mrs. Scott, 67, of Gun Barrel City, and her husband, 76, and requested that writers include their assigned case numbers.

"I received over 100 letters of people who had complaints claiming wills he hadn't filed, money taken, and so many other things," she said.

"Each time I received letters, I replied back to them saying to send their complaints, in their own words, to the (bar) grievance committee," she said. "That's what the state bar told me to do."

The efforts paid off. Hurley resigned March 14 in lieu of disbarment proceedings brought by the State Bar of Texas, which filed suit in Travis County last year. Bar officials say more and more Texas attorneys are being disciplined because of complaints about their practices.

A bar's district grievance committee found that Hurley had committed professional misconduct and had failed to complete action in a number of cases involving "willful or intentional neglect of a client matter," said Steven D. Peterson, general counsel for the State Bar of Texas.

There were six specific client complaints, plus state bar allegations, against Hurley. He failed to respond to four specific grievance committee complaints after he was notified of them, Peterson said.

In the Scott case, Hurley had prevailed in a suit on their behalf against the contractor. Hurley intervened in the contractor's divorce in an unsuccessful attempt to collect on the judgment.

Then, Hurley agreed to appeal the intervention ruling, obtaining payment from the Scotts to pay for the trial record. But, without notice to his clients, Hurley later decided the action was useless and allowed the appeal to be dismissed. That's what prompted the Scotts to complain.

"I have never seen a complainant putting ads in the newspaper, soliciting complaints," Peterson said. "We have obviously had more complaints than just Mr. Scott's. As far as the state bar case is concerned, it (the ads) had an effect.

"The same way good lawyers get their names around, tending to their clients' responsibilities and rights, the same also works negatively."

"The old saw for years and years was that it was a closed system — attorneys protected other attorneys," said Larry Fitzgerald, state bar communications director in Austin.

"But now we have members of the public, as well as attorneys, on our local grievance committees. Statewide, one-third of grievance committees are citizens. It is the public's window to the process."

Through mid-April, the latest figures available, there were 10 other resignations and 26 disbarments in Texas, Peterson said, compared with nine resignations and six disbarments in a year-long 1986-1987 period. The bar's fiscal year is June 1-May 31.

"We have been busy," said Peterson.

The state bar also has created a client security fund to help clients who lose money at the hands of dishonest lawyers.

With 49,600 licensed lawyers in the state, attorney dishonesty is the exception rather than the rule. But disbarments — the most severe attorney discipline — increased from stepped-up enforcement and clients' awareness of rights.

Officials say more signatures needed for gambling issue

GALVESTON, Texas (AP) — A group seeking a non-binding election on legalization of casino gambling needs 1,344 more signatures to force the city council to put the issue on a ballot, officials said.

But a spokesman for the group, which supports establishment of a casino-hotel district on this resort island, said he believes enough signatures already have been turned over to the city.

Galvestonians for Economic Development will challenge the requirements the city used to disqualify 3,600 signatures, group spokesman Pete Fredriksen said.

GED needed the signatures of 10 percent, or 3,484, of the city's registered voters to bring the gambling issue up for a straw vote for the third time in four years.

Two weeks ago, the group's leaders turned in almost 5,700 signatures, saying they had checked to make sure that more than 3,500 of the people who signed the petitions were currently registered voters.

But Galveston City Secretary Anna Lee said the group failed to have petition signers fill in all the information required by the state.

Ms. Lee said state law requires each person who signs the petition to print and write his name, as well as provide a voter registration number, address and the date on which the petition was signed.

She said one or more of the five required pieces of information was not provided by 3,600 people who signed the pro-casino gambling petitions.

Election officials in the Texas Secretary of State's office advised Ms. Lee that all the information must be supplied by signers if the petitions are to be certified as legal, she said.

Police say children may have seen mother killed

HOUSTON (AP) — Two small children, including a 3-year-old girl whose throat had been slashed, may have seen their mother stabbed to death police and relatives said.

Police were questioning the woman's former live-in boyfriend on Friday night, who relatives said had threatened her life after she kicked him out of the house.

Lottie Mae Nora, 33, the mother of four, was discovered shortly after 11 a.m. by a relative drawn to the woman's home in northwest Houston by the cries of Nora's children.

Quarshon Ophelia Nora, 3, suffered a slashed throat during the attack and was listed in stable condition in Ben Taub Hospital, spokeswoman Bernice Davenport said.

Nora's younger daughter Jasmine, 1, was found unharmed. Jasmine is the daughter of the former boyfriend, relatives said.

Investigators said the ex-boyfriend, who had lived with Nora for about two years, turned himself in to police around 8 p.m.

Homicide Sgt. Mike Kardatzke said the man, 30, had called relatives earlier in the day and reported that he didn't know why officers were looking for him because he doesn't know what happened.

Kardatzke said relatives told investigators that the man and Nora had been having problems.

Felix Mottley said he and his brother were walking to a store when they heard the cries of the two children from a front bedroom in the house.

Mottley, 27, who is Quarshon's uncle, said he tried to enter the house through the front door but found it locked. He said he went to the rear of the house where he had to remove a fan from a window to enter.

"After I got in, I peeped through the curtains of one bedroom and saw Lottie's body lying next to the bed with nothing on but a shirt which was pulled up to her shoulders," Mottley said.

Mottley said he took the children to his mother's home and an ambulance was called for Quarshon.

Ophelia Mottley, 61, Quarshon's grandmother, said the blood on the child's shirt was still wet when she arrived at her home.

"I imagine she seen him kill her momma, and you know that's cold," the woman said. "That's a cold blow for a child to see her mother get killed. She'll remember it for a long time."

Kardatzke agreed: "The long-range effects (on the child) may not be known for some time. You never can tell how a child will react to something like this."

Once the child recovers sufficiently, investigators will question her about the incident, Kardatzke said.

Former sheriff supporter calls for officer's removal

ORAN, Texas (AP) — A former supporter of Orange County Sheriff James Wade filed a lawsuit calling for the removal of the law enforcement officer who has been indicted with 10 counts of conspiracy and drug law violations.

Pat Perez, of Vidor, claims in the removal lawsuit that Wade committed official misconduct when he violated a judge's order that the sheriff not communicate with his deputies.

Wade is being held by federal officials in the Angelina County Jail in Lufkin.

U.S. Magistrate Earl Hines ordered him jailed on June 1 after finding that Wade, through his wife Neva Wade, communicated with deputies to sell a drug-sniffing dog. U.S. District Judge Howell Cobb had ordeded the ban on the communication.

Wade took a leave of absence from his $29,000-a-year post in May, shortly after being indicted by a federal grand jury, but remains on the county payroll.

Orange attorney Clay Dugas, who filed the lawsuit for Ms. Perez, said the lawsuit also alleges that Wade can't perform his job as sheriff while he is in jail, the Houston Chronicle reported.

Ms. Perez could not be reached for comment, but Dugas described her as a former Wade supporter who now wants to see the sheriff out of office.

Wade lost a bid for re-election in the April Democratic primary runoff to Huel Fontenot of Bridge City. Dugas backed Fontenot. Fontenot is unopposed in the November general election. Wade's term runs through the end of this year.

Tax reform top issue at meeting

AUSTIN (AP) — The 1989 Legislature may go down in history as the one where significant tax reform began in Texas, but it won't overhaul the whole system in one shot, a top lawmaker said Saturday.

"A moderate start is all we can expect and all we should want," said Rep. Dan Morales, D-San Antonio, vice chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee.

Morales predicted that in the future, the 1989 session "will be looked upon...as the session where the initial steps toward structural reformation of our taxes were made."

Speaking during a panel discussion before members of the Texas Press Association, Morales said the state needs a tax system that can provide money for the kind of government Texas will need by the year 2000. But such a system can't be built in a single 140-day legislative session, he said.

That kind of change would require overcoming "decades worth of inattention in five months," he said.

Joining Morales were Sen. Bob Glasgow, D-Stephenville, vice chairman of the Senate Finance and Economic Development committees, and Rep. Stan Schlueter, D-Killeen, chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee.

All three serve on the Select Committee on Tax Equity, which for a year has been examining the state's tax system and listening to experts' opinions on how it could be improved.

Schlueter said the phrase "tax reform" may have a nice ring but that it doesn't mean lower taxes.

"Reform means tax shift. It does not mean less (tax) burden," he said. "We know what the problems are, yet no one has been bold enough to step forward and tell you what it's going to do to you."

Noting that lawmakers have raised taxes by $7 billion in the past five years, Schlueter said they would be skittish about raising taxes again.

"We need to say exactly what we're going to do with the money (raised)," he said.

Perot blasts company for objections to pact

DALLAS (AP) — Billionaire businessman Ross Perot accused his former company, Electronic Data Systems Corp., and its General Motors Corp. parent of trying to kill his newly formed computer services firm, Perot Systems Corp.

Perot's comments Friday come on the heels of mounting government and industry scrutiny of Perot Systems' $500,000, no-bid contract with the U.S. Postal Service, The Dallas Morning News reported.

EDS, other competitors and Washington lawmakers have complained that Perot Systems' contract to review and recommend cost-cutting procedures to the U.S. Postal Service may unfairly favor Perot Systems.

"It is a turf battle generated by GM and EDS to try to kill the company," Perot, of Dallas, said. "They will win the first round. (But) the fight is on."

The General Services Administration Board of Contract Appeals heard testimony Friday to determine whether the contract should be suspended, revised or revoked. The GSA board has 45 working days to issue a ruling. A preliminary ruling could be issued as soon as Monday.

Park rangers held libel

CORPUS CHRISTI, Texas (AP) — A federal judge, who ruled that park rangers at Padre Island National Seashore were negligent in failing to arrest a drunken driver, awarded $7.5 million to a man who was later hit by the driver.

U.S. District Judge Spencer Williams of San Jose, Calif., granted the award to Randy William Crider, 33, of Corpus Christi, who lost an arm and a leg in a head-on collision with the driver in 1983.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Wayne Campbell in Corpus Christi said the U.S. Interior Department, which oversees the federal parks, and the local U.S. Attorney's office, would decide whether to file an appeal of Williams' decision within 60 days.

"We think that the $7.5 million is fair, but no amount of money can compensate for what Randy Crider has suffered," Ben Sley, Crider's attorney, said Friday. "This, however, will give him the chance at a meaningful life."

Crider was riding his motorcycle on Flour Bluff Drive on July 24, 1983, when he was struck by a car driven by John Lee Landry. Crider lost an arm in the accident, and a leg was amputated later because of injuries received in the crash.

College to resolve issue

CORSICANA, Texas (AP) — The state has ruled that Navarro College should not have accepted $1.3 million for courses taught in nursing homes, but college officials hope they can resolve the matter before a state panel meets to discuss the issue.

Navarro interim president Larry Reed said Friday that the college is trying to solve the problem before the Texas Higher Education Coordinating Board takes up the matter in meetings July 21-22.

"We are in the process of consulting with our attorney about what should be done before and during the meeting," Reed told the Corsicana Daily Sun. "Our hope would be that it could be resolved before the board meeting."

Dr. Kenneth Ashworth, commissioner on the 17-member higher education board, said the panel will determine how much money the college should repay the state.

"I think it's a safe presumption to say that the Coordinating Board will ask for funds to be returned," Ashworth told the newspaper.

Austin restaurant closed

AUSTIN (AP) — An organism that indicates the presence of sewage was found in water from wells used by a popular Lake Travis restaurant, health department officials said.

The Captain's Club has been voluntarily closed since June 16 when health officials received hundreds of calls from people reporting symptoms of food poisoning after eating at the restaurant.

Tyson-Spinks: The $38 million championship

The Champ

By ED SCHUYLER JR.
AP Boxing Writer

ATLANTIC CITY — For several years the core of Mike Tyson's world was 20-foot square.

Tyson, who will be 22 Thursday, came off the streets of Brooklyn and out of a reform school into the sphere of boxing guru Cus D'Amato, who told him he could be the best fighter in the world.

He listened to D'Amato and he learned and as he ran the lonely roads around Catskill, N.Y., his mind's eye could see him winning the title.

On Nov. 22, 1986, Tyson knocked out Trevor Berbick and became the youngest man to win the heavyweight championship.

Suddenly, the boundaries of Tyson's universe have expanded and he is faced with being a man of the world as well as a champion of the world.

He is newly married and there have been reports that his marriage is already on the rocks. His wife, actress Robin Givens, had a miscarriage and Tyson blames it on the turmoil going on around him and media coverage of it.

He also has become a fighter with an awareness, if not a complete understanding, of his financial worth and prospects.

Speculation has arisen over whether the problems of Tyson the man will effect the performance of Tyson the fighter.

"I'm a professional. I'm the best heavyweight in the world and nobody can beat me," said Tyson, who has a 34-0 record, with 30 knockouts, and became the first undisputed champion since Leon Spinks upset Muhammad Ali in 1978.

D'Amato, who had become Tyson's legal guardian died Nov. 4, 1985. Then Jim Jacobs, a D'Amato disciple who was Tyson's co-manager and confidant, died last March 23.

"Jim would have said, 'What do you want to do, what's the problem,'" Tyson said of the recent confusion, sounding like a man left in the dark by his advisers.

"People I'm associated with should treat me special," Tyson said. "Don't treat me like a commodity."

Tyson's manager, Bill Cayton, who was Jacobs' business partner, has accused promoter Don King of trying to steal Tyson from him. Meanwhile, Tyson's wife and her mother, Ruth Roper, have questioned Cayton's handling of Tyson.

Cayton said he has a boxer-manager contract with Tyson which has 3½ years remaining and a personal services contract with three years left. He said those contracts will be enforced and, he believes, with Tyson's approval.

"I'm not committed to anything I don't want to be," Tyson said, adding that he might split with Cayton but that it was possible "the relations can be saved. We will talk about it later."

Tyson has been especially stung by stories about his family.

"I've been reading a lot of negative press," he said at a recent news conference. "Whatever

Spinks versus Tyson: a battle of champions

Mike Tyson is officially recognized as the heavyweight champion of all three major boxing organizations (the World Boxing Association, World Boxing Council, and the International Boxing Federation). Michael Spinks is the undefeated fighter who dethroned Larry Holmes, last holder of the unified title, and some still consider him an unofficial champion. The fight is scheduled for June 27 in Atlantic City.

It's fear of the unseen opponent — the risk which accompanies any fighter into the ring — and Spinks willingly talks about it.

"He's just honest, that's all," says his trainer, Eddie Futch. "Other fighters have it. They just don't talk about it."

Listen:

"If I could do something else as well, I would do it . . . I can get hurt," Spinks said several years ago before even he could envision the success he has achieved the ring.

Listen:

"It's what I do for a living."

Listen:

"I've never run from anybody. I've never been afraid of anybody to the point of not trying to win.

"I got my courage from boxing with Leon," said the 31-year-old, recalling gym sessions as an amateur with brother Leon, who won and lost the heavyweight title in fights with Muhammad Ali in 1978.

"Leon was awesome."

Monday night at the Atlantic City Convention Center Spinks will fight heavyweight champion Mike Tyson, a 21-year-old whose fists and demeanor in the ring have given him an aura of a fighter who will not be denied.

"He's totally awesome," Spinks said. "I can't blame anybody for really not wanting to be in there."

"I could use a tag team if I get tired," said Spinks, who also approaches his hard trade with the kind of dry humor born of hard times.

Michael and Leon Spinks came out of a St. Louis ghetto to win gold medals at the 1976 Olympics at Montreal and become the only brothers to win the heavyweight title. Leon was undisputed champion, while Michael held the International Boxing Federation version.

The brothers' careers have passed, going in opposite directions. Leon now fights for minor purses years after the promise of boxing riches, which never materialized for him.

"Leon gets very emotional when I fight," Michael said.

— March 18, 1983: Michael is fighting Dwight Muhammad Qawi for the undisputed light heavyweight championship at the Convention Center and Leon is prowling the working press section in a black cowboy hat shouting encouragement to his brother. Between the sixth and seventh rounds, Leon, his hat askew, rushes to Michael's corner to offer advice. Michael looks down and says, "Straighten your hat, Lee." Leon does.

"Leon cares a lot for me," Michael said.

Jackson elite winner

By BILL GRIMES
Sports Writer

Bob Jackson spends his school year watching younger athletes as a football, basketball and track coach in Jal, N.M.

The youngsters spent Saturday morning watching Jackson. From behind.

The 29-year-old Jackson won the mens elite division of the Midland Mile with a time of 4:34, easily outdistancing teenagers Mike Garza and Kane Harris.

Jackson was a cross-country and track standout at Eastern New Mexico University, but stopped running during his first three years as a Jal coach. Since his return to the sport, he has stamped himself as one of the top runners in the Permian Basin.

Jackson has reconciled himself to the fact that summers are his prime time for competitive running, though many of the major races are during the school year.

"Summertime is my time to run and race," he said. "During the school year, I'm always teaching and coaching.

"I've trained really hard the last couple of weeks," he said. But he really wasn't pointing toward Saturday's mile.

"By the Septemberfest race, I'd like to run in the 31s (for 10,000)," Jackson said.

Garza, who won the mens open race earlier Saturday, said his double wasn't a factor in his inability to stay with Jackson for the elite race.

Connors looking sharp

By PETER ALFANO
New York Times News Service

WIMBLEDON, England — All the years may have robbed him of a step. There's a foot injury that will heal only when he retires, and some of the sting may have gone from Jimmy Connors' racquet as well.

But age has not robbed him of willpower, a refusal to give in that borders on stubbornness. At 35, there is little that Connors enjoys more than victory on the tennis court.

Saturday, the opponent with the first-hand view of this was Derrick Rostagno, a promising young Californian who is ranked No. 86 in the world and who remembered first becoming interested in the game when Connors was at his peak.

"He comes up with things you haven't seen before," Rostagno said. "Tennis is an art and he's an artist. It was thrilling, a pleasure to play against."

More than one person in the crowd of about 6,000 at Court 1 had seen this before: Connors doggedly coming from behind, turning a gentleman's game into a test of stamina as much as expertise. "My game has always been to stay in until I die," said Connors, who some suspect will never officially retire, preferring to fade away.

This time, Connors overcame a 2-1 deficit in sets to outlast Rostagno, 7-5, 4-6, 4-6, 6-2, 7-5, to advance to the round of 16. The match lasted 4 hours, 2 minutes. "I got plenty of court time," Connors said afterward. "I won't have to practice tomorrow."

This was the 10th time in 17 years at Wimbledon that

Wimbledon

Connors had played a five-set match. He now has won eight of them, his two losses coming to Bjorn Borg in finals. Connors in five is almost a sure thing in tennis, even now, when youth is no longer on his side.

He did have experience on his side but, as he said later, that would not have meant a thing if he could not hit winners. Rostagno was not intimidated; he could blame his defeat on tactical mistakes, not big-match jitters.

On Thursday, Rostagno survived a grueling five-set match against another Californian, Marty Davis, winning, 16-14, in the fifth set. (Tie breakers are not played in fifth sets at Wimbledon.) He wasn't tired Saturday, Rostagno said, but he wished the crowd had been a little less blatantly in Connors' corner.

Connors, once a villain on these grounds, would not apologize for the fans' behavior. "I think 90 percent of the people here were 35 and over," he joked. "But that will be good experience for Rostagno. He'll know what it will take to have the crowd behind you, what has to be done to earn that admiration."

Tenacity has a lot to do with it in his case. Connors faced break points in the first and third games of the fourth set, but eventually held, then found his touch, winning the set handily to force the climatic fifth. When he broke Rostagno to lead, 4-2, the result appeared to be a foregone conclusion.

Youmans suspended indefinitely

By JOHN NELSON
AP Sports Writer

NEW YORK — Floyd Youmans, the troubled Montreal Expos pitcher who underwent alcohol rehabilitation last fall, was suspended indefinitely by the commissioner's office Saturday "for failing to comply with his drug testing program."

Although Commissioner Peter Ueberroth confirmed that Youmans had been undergoing "periodic drug testing," his office would not say how Youmans had violated the program.

Youmans had been scheduled to pitch Saturday night against Pittsburgh.

In a brief statement, Ueberroth said the suspension "is indefinite pending further evaluation."

On March 30, Ueberroth suspended Eddie Milner of the Cincinnati Reds after he admitted using cocaine. Milner, who had undergone rehabilitation last season, returned to action on June 19.

The Expos revealed on Thursday that Ueberroth's office had been investigating Youmans for several days, but club President Claude Brochu refused to say whether the investigation had anything to do with drug testing.

On Saturday, club spokesman Rich Griffin said Expos officials met with Youmans after the suspension was announced and "it hasn't been decided yet what the next step for Floyd is."

Griffin said the Expos would help Youmans with "anything that might come up in terms of medical assistance."

Youmans will remain in Montreal but will not be with the team, Griffin said.

Ueberroth's statement said Youmans had been undergoing testing "as part of the aftercare process" of his rehabilitation program. Although Youmans' reasons for entering rehabilitation last October were never specified, the pitcher has talked about an alcohol problem.

NBA Draft: Danny and the Question Marks

NEW YORK (AP) — The NBA college draft, reduced to three rounds and increased to 25 teams, will be held Tuesday with a long list of question marks following Danny Manning.

Manning's selection by the Los Angeles Clippers was clinched on May 21 at the NBA lottery.

"He will definitely make us a better team," Clippers general manager Elgin Baylor said of Manning, the college player of the year who led underdog Kansas to the NCAA title. "He's a terrific player and a fine young man. He's definitely going to have an impact."

Joining the draft this year are two expansion teams, the Charlotte Hornets and the Miami Heat, who will pick eighth and ninth, after the seven spots determined in the lottery.

The draft will be reduced from seven rounds to three this year and two in 1989, a concession made by the league in the April 25 collective bargaining agreement with the players.

The Clippers, who also have the No. 6 pick in the first round, will look to improve on this season's 17-65 record. But the Indiana Pacers, who won the second choice, will be building upon a 38-victory season that just missed being good enough to make the playoffs.

General Manager Donnie Walsh said the Pacers' high draft position, coupled with their close proximity to playoff status, could lead them to select 7-foot-4 Rik Smits of Marist.

"We're considering him heavily," Walsh said. "We haven't made up our minds, but you don't get a chance to get a center often, especially in the team position we're in. We missed the playoffs in a tiebreaker.

"We might not, in fact we hope we won't, have the chance again to draft a big center."

Smits, from the Netherlands, is considered a raw talent who flourished in a second-echelon college program.

"He definitely would change the look of our team," Walsh said. "He weighs 250 pounds, but on his frame he could go up to 300 without hurting him."

Smits averaged 24.7 points, 8.7 rebounds and 3.9 blocked shots and shot 62.3 percent from the field as a senior. He had similar statistics as a junior.

"He's raw and he's going to need work, but Patrick Ewing didn't really come into his ow until his third year," Walsh said. "Why should we judge Rik Smits any harsher than Patrick Ewing?"

NBA scouting chief Marty Blake believes that Smits has outstanding potential and deserves to be one of the top five players selected.

"He is a big-time first rounder who I think will be a real force in the NBA in three or four years," Blake said.

"I know the competition will be much tougher than anything I've faced in college," Smits said. "Much of the time I was playing against people 6-8."

After the Clippers and Indiana, the first-round draft order, barring trades, will be Philadelphia, New Jersey, Golden State, the Clippers, Phoenix, Charlotte, Miami, San Antonio, New York, Washington, Milwaukee, Phoenix, Seattle, Houston, Utah, Atlanta, Chicago, Dallas, Portland, Cleveland, Denver, Boston and the Los Angeles Lakers.

The 76ers have a pressing need for a shooting guard and have narrowed their choices to Hersey Hawkins of Bradley, Rex Chapman of Kentucky and Mitch Richmond of Kansas State.

"Both Hawkins and Chapman are considered excellent players and each has his plusses and minuses," owner Harold Katz said.

Katz called Chapman a Jerry West-type guard, while Hawkins is a better inside threat.

The 6-3 Hawkins averaged 36.3 points as a senior, the highest NCAA average in 11 years, leading the nation by nearly eight points per game.

Chapman, who elected to leave Kentucky after

Council title and is being pounded into submission by Larry Holmes in the third round. Out of the audience and on to the ring apron bounds Michael.

"I wanted to stop the fight," Michael said. "My brother was hurt."

Michael's feelings of real hurt for his brother stem from the problems success brought to Leon.

"The only problem Leon had was being too nice," Michael said. "You shouldn't hang out and let the public get into your life."

Leon's out-of-the-ring problems have been publicized. Michael has had some minor problems, but has been pretty successful in maintaining his privacy and that of Jennifer, his 5-year-old daughter. Jennifer's mother, Sandy Massie, was killed in January when her car was hit by an auto operated by a drunk driver.

Spinks was able to keep his career on track, something he couldn't do when Leon upset Ali for the title Feb. 15, 1978.

After having six fights in 1977, Spinks fought only twice in 1977.

". . . with Leon's quick success, I was staying in the background," Spinks said. "People would say, 'Mike get out of the way; I got to get to Leon.' It didn't bother me because I was concerned for Leon, too."

Spinks fought only once in 1979, but that was due to a knee injury.

Finally, in 1980, after having split with promoter Bob Arum and joining Butch Lewis, who once worked for Arum, Spinks started down the path that would lead to his making boxing history.

On Sept. 22, 1985, Spinks, a 6-1 underdog, won the IBF heavyweight title on a 15-round unanimous decision over Larry Holmes at Las Vegas, Nev.

He beat Holmes in the rematch on a split decision, knocked out Steffan Tangstad and appeared headed for a showdown with Tyson in the final of the HBO television heavyweight unification series.

Spinks and Lewis opted, however, to leave the series to fight Gerry Cooney, a move that led to Spinks being stripped of the IBF title.

"He's an exceptional perimeter shooter, but beyond that he's got enormous physical talent," 76ers general manager John Nash said. "He can pull up and take the shot, but he can also dunk on the fastbreak."

But NBA insiders say Chapman and Hawkins are unprepared for the defensive demands that will be placed on them in the NBA.

New Jersey general manager Harry Weltman has a list of potential choices that includes Chapman, Hawkins, Smits, Richmond, 6-8 forward Chris Morris of Auburn and 6-10 forward Charles Smith of Pittsburgh.

Weltman said the 1988 draft is difficult to assess because it has depth but few potential star players besides Manning.

"This is like preparing a fighter," Weltman said. "You don't want to peak until you step into the ring. This is maybe the toughest draft, at least the most difficult in terms of pegging players to certain teams. It also is open to more trade possibilities that any other."

Weltman said the Nets probably won't trade to get a higher pick.

"Surrendering something just to move up two spots doesn't make sense," Weltman said. "No player excites us to the degree that we must have him."

Potential first-round centers besides Smits include 6-11 Rony Seikaly of Syracuse, 6-11 Eric Leckner of Wyoming, 7-0 Will Perdue of Vanderbilt and 7-1 Tito Horford of Miami and the Dominican Republic.

The top forwards besides Manning, Smith and Morris are 6-9 Tim Perry of Temple, 6-9 Harvey Grant of Oklahoma, 6-6 Jerome Lane of Pittsburgh, 6-7 Derrick Chievous of Missouri, 6-9 Mark Bryant of Seton Hall and 6-6 Dan Majerle of Central Michigan.

Leading guards in addition to Chapman, Hawkins and Richmond are 6-5 Jeff Grayer of Iowa State, 6-3 Rod Strickland of DePaul, 6-3 Gary Grant of Michigan, 6-7 Willie Anderson of Georgia and 6-8 Ricky Berry of San Jose State.

Chapman, Horford, Lane and Strickland are early entry candidates, along with 6-10 Charles Shackleford of North Carolina State.

TYSON

good relations I've had with writers, throw it away because you've been writing bull... My wife and my mother-in-law — they're being cut to pieces. It's new to them. It hits a nerve."

Givens is here with Tyson. "I love her to death," he said.

Despite the turmoil, Tyson did appear trim and relaxed at an interview this week.

"The closer it gets to the fight, the happier I am," he said. "I'm a professional. Whatever happens — your mother dies, someone you loves dies — the show must go on."

However, a lesson on human nature seems to have been driven home to him.

"I should have known from my background," he said of the turmoil around him.

Tyson, who never knew his father, was born in Brooklyn's tough Bedford-Stuyvesant section. He was 10 when his mother, Lorna, moved the family to the just-as-tough Brownsville section.

Before knocking out Tony Tubbs in the second round March 21 at Tokyo in his first fight abroad, Tyson said, "Even though I'm married, I'm a fighter and I don't have a life. I like it. It's exciting. Ketchel (Stanley Ketchel, a roustabout who became the middleweight champion in the early part of the century) and those guys ran away from home and become famous.

Tyson was taken away from home and became famous.

In 1979, the 13-year-old Tyson was sent to the Tryon School for Boys, a juvenile delinquent center in upstate New York. There he was introduced to boxing by Bob Stewart, who also introduced him to D'Amato, who had guided heavyweight Floyd Patterson and light heavyweight Jose Torres to world titles.

D'Amato took Tyson in his home at Catskill, N.Y., and in 1981 became his legal guardian.

Tyson became a good enough amateur to be invited to the 1984 Olympic Trials, but he was beaten out for a berth on the team by Henry Tillman, who went on to win a gold medal.

Turning pro in in 1985, Tyson, who sees himself as a throwback to rougher, tougher eras in boxing, fought on a throwback scheduled. He fought 14 times that first year and 13 times in 1986, in which he won the WBC title by beating Berbick in his final match.

After beating James "Bonecrusher" Smith and adding the WBA title, he beat Pinklon Thomas and then outpointed Tony Tucker Aug. 1987, for the undisputed championship, which he has defended three times.

As success has piled up, so has the money. Tyson has made more than $25 million from his seven title fights and Monday night his total could reach the neighborhood of $50 million. That's a neighborhood light years away from Brownsville.

Four straight for Angels

From Staff Reports

WICHITA, Kan. — The Midland Angels rapped four hits in a three-run eighth inning to score a come-from-behind 6-3 win over the Wichita Pilots here Saturday and extend their lead over the second-place Pilots to two games in the Texas League-Western Division.

After Jim Tatum smacked a two-run home run in seventh to give Wichita a 3-2 lead, Jim McCollom and Lee Stevens got the Angels started in the eighth with back-to-back singles.

Jeff Manto missed on a bunt attempt, then Wichita reliever Mike Mills moved the runners to second and third with a wild pitch. Manto then singled home McCollom.

Manto took over the Texas League home run lead with a solo shot in the fourth, his 19th. Also, both Stevens and C.L. Penigar extended their hitting streaks to 10 games each.

AL Roundup

NEW YORK — Jack Clark hit a tie-breaking, two-run homer in the third inning and helped Tommy John to his 282nd career victory as the New York Yankees defeated Cleveland and handed Greg Swindell his fifth consecutive setback.

Swindell, 10-6, the first major league pitcher to win 10 games this season but winless since May 30, had lasted a total of five innings in his two previous outings, yielding 10 runs and 15 hits.

This time, he went six innings, yielding three runs and eight hits. He came away a loser when Don Mattingly singled with two out in the third, extending his hitting streak to 17 games, and Clark followed with his 14th home run for a 3-1 lead.

It was the sixth home run off Swindell in 12 1-3 innings after he gave up four in his first 101 innings.

The 45-year-old John, 5-2, gave up one run on eight hits in 7 1-3 innings. He walked none, struck out five and recorded 14 of 22 outs on grounders. John left with two runners on base and one out in the eighth, and Cecilio Guante retired Joe Carter and Ron Kittle and finished for his ninth save.

The Indians failed to hit a home run for the first time in 14 games. Cleveland, losing for the 11th time in the last 16 games, dropped two games behind the second-place Yankees in the American League East. New York, winning for just the third time in 11 games, trails Detroit by two games.

White Sox 10, Rangers 5

ARLINGTON — Dave Gallagher hit two home runs and Greg Walker and Ron Karkovice also homered as Chicago beat Texas.

Dave LaPoint, 6-7, pitched 8 1-3 innings for the victory. He took a four-hit shutout into the ninth but was chased as Texas scored its five runs.

Ivan Calderon hit a sacrifice fly in the first inning. Gallagher opened the second with his second homer this season and Karkovice squeezed home another run against Ray Hayward, 4-5.

Ozzie Guillen and Gary Redus had sacrifice flies in the fourth. Gallagher hit a two-run homer in the fifth and Karkovice hit his second homer in the sixth.

Walker's two-run shot in the seventh was his first homer in 169 at-bats since May 4 and made it 10-0.

Texas scored in the ninth on Larry Parrish's two-run triple, an RBI double by Steve Buechele and run-scoring singles by Steve Buechele and Mike Stanley.

Tigers 7, Blue Jays 2

TORONTO (AP) — Gary Pettis hit a three-run homer, and Darrell Evans added a solo shot as the Detroit Tigers ended Dave Stieb's streak of nine straight victories, beating Toronto.

Doyle Alexander, 7-4, scattered eight hits, struck out six and walked one in eight innings, and Guillermo Hernandez pitched the ninth.

Kelly Gruber homered for Toronto.

Red Sox 10, Orioles 3

BOSTON (AP) — Jim Rice broke a tie with a two-run single during a seven-run eighth inning as the Boston Red Sox took a victory over Baltimore, spoiling Cal Ripken's 1,000th consecutive start for the Orioles.

Athletics 4, Twins 3

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) — Jose Canseco hit his major league-leading 19th homer, a three-run shot in the third inning, and his four RBI gave right-hander Bob Welch and the Oakland Athletics a victory over the Minnesota Twins.

The A's, who lead the second-place Twins by six games, trailed 2-1 in the third before Canseco's two-out blast off Allan Anderson, 3-4.

Welch, 9-4, yielded seven hits and three runs, while striking out five, in 7 1-3 innings before Dennis Eckersley came on to earn his American League-leading 23rd save.

Angels 7, Brewers 3

ANAHEIM, Calif. — Mike Witt overcame a shaky start and won his fourth consecutive decision as California beat Milwaukee.

Witt, 6-7, gave up 10 hits, walked none and struck out seven in his fifth complete game. He allowed two runs on three hits in the first inning and then retired 15 of the next 16 batters. He struck out the side in the ninth.

Royals 7, Mariners 3

SEATTLE — Kansas City took advantage of three errors to score five runs in the ninth inning and Bret Saberhagen pitched five-hit ball for eight innings as the Royals defeated Seattle.

With the score tied at 2, Danny Tartabull walked to lead off the ninth and Mark Langston, 5-8, fielded Kevin Seitzer's bunt and threw wildly. Frank White followed with a bunt that first baseman Steve Balboni misplayed and then threw poorly for a double-error, allowing Tartabull to score.

NL Roundup

HOUSTON — Mike Krukow pitched a three-hitter and Jose Uribe doubled and tripled and drove in two runs as the San Francisco Giants defeated the Houston Astros 4-1 Saturday night.

Krukow, 6-4, struck out four and walked one as he pitched his first regular-season complete game since July 29, 1987, at Los Angeles. After giving up an RBI triple to Rafael Ramirez with one out in the fifth, Krukow retired 14 out of the last 15 batters.

It was only the Giants' fifth complete game of the season but second in a row against Houston.

San Francisco took a 1-0 lead against Danny Darwin, 3-6, in the second when Mike Aldrete led off with a single and scored on Uribe's triple down the right-field line and added a run in the third on Brett Butler's third home run.

Houston cut the deficit to 2-1 in the fifth when Ramirez's triple drove in Buddy Bell, who had singled.

Braves 8, Padres 4

ATLANTA — Dale Murphy hit a two-run single during a four-run fifth inning and Atlanta beat San Diego in a rain-delayed game.

The victory was the Braves' third straight, matching their longest streak of the season. San Diego lost its third in a row.

Trailing 4-3, Atlanta scored four times in the bottom of the fifth, which was interrupted by a 40-minute rain delay. Four singles, including one by Murphy, knocked out Jimmy Jones, 5-7. Andres Thomas hit an RBI double and Ron Gant had a sacrifice fly.

The Padres had taken the lead earlier in the inning, scoring three times on run-scoring singles by Shane Mack, Garry Templeton and Tony Gwynn in chasing Tom Glavine.

The Braves got to Jones for three runs in the second with the aid of a throwing error by third baseman Chris Brown on Bruce Benedict's grounder with one out. Gant followed with a single and Glavine walked to load the bases.

Albert Hall, who had three hits, then hit a two-run single and Ken Oberkfell had a sacrifice fly.

Atlanta added another run in the sixth off reliever Dave Leiper on Ken Griffey's RBI single.

The Padres first run came in the third when Brown, who had three hits, led off with a single and eventually scored on Templeton's groundout.

Cubs 5, Mets 2

CHICAGO — Ryne Sandberg's third hit of the game, a tie-breaking single in Chicago's three-run eighth inning, carried the Chicago Cubs over the New York Mets in a game played in 103-degree heat.

Shawon Dunston opened the eighth with a single off reliever and loser Rick Aguilera, 0-3. One out later, Dunston stole second, and Andre Dawson was walked intentionally before Sandberg singled sharply to center, scoring Dunston.

Pirates 5, Expos 1

MONTREAL — John Smiley pitched a five-hitter and Barry Bonds doubled to spark a four-run third inning as the Pittsburgh Pirates defeated the Montreal Expos.

The Pirates rallied against Brian Holman, making his major-league pitching debut.

Dodgers 6, Reds 4

The Dodgers won for the seventh time in eight games and solidified their hold on first place in the National League West. The fourth-place Reds have lost five of six and fell 8½ games back, their biggest deficit of the season.

The Reds started with a flourish, knocking Valenzuela out of the game in the first inning for the first time in his eight-year career. Barry Larkin led off with his seventh homer, Eric Davis hit a two-run homer, and Paul O'Neill followed with a solo homer for a 4-0 lead with two out. Brian Holton, 3-1, retired pitcher Jose Rijo to end the inning.

Birdies propel Nelson

PGA

By ED SHEARER
AP Sports Writer

MARIETTA, Ga. — Larry Nelson had one of those days when he thought he could birdie every hole. He was almost right.

Nelson missed a PGA Tour record and left the door slightly ajar for others when he bogeyed the final hole Saturday, but he still carries a four-shot lead into the final round of the $700,000 Atlanta Golf Classic.

"I felt I would birdie every hole on the back side," Nelson said after shooting a 6-under-par 66 that gave him a 54-hole total of 195, 21 shots under par on the Atlanta Country Club course.

"I got into a rhythm," he said. "I thought I had a chance to get 30 (under for four rounds) when I stepped up to the 18th tee."

Instead, Nelson hit his worse shot of the day, pulling his tee shot into a ditch on the left side of the fairway and ultimately taking his only bogey of the day and his second of the first three rounds.

Nelson was in position to break the PGA Tour record for most shots under par for 54 holes before taking the bogey 6 on the 18th hole, one he had birdied in each of the first two rounds.

It left him with a 21-under-par 195 total, one shy of the PGA Tour under par mark of 22 set by Gay Brewer on a par 71 course at the Pensacola Open in 1967.

"I really felt like it was possible when I stepped to the 18th tee," Nelson said of reaching 30-under for the tournament. "Now I have to shoot 63 tomorrow. No problem."

"We need to tie Larry Nelson to his bed and not let him come out to the golf course," Bobby Wadkins said.

"I played a solid round and got caught up watching Larry make birdie," added Wadkins, who had a 68-201 that left him in third place.

"I don't think we're playing for second place yet, but if I was betting money, I'd bet on Larry Nelson."

Nelson, the reigning PGA champion who has led from the start in quest of his 10th career victory, held the lead over Paul Azinger, who shot 66-199.

"I hope to have a good frame of mind and put pressure on Larry," Azinger said.

The soft-spoken Nelson, who has a home adjacent to the 18th fairway on the Atlanta Country Club course, was never in danger of losing his lead on the rolling hills of the 7,008-yard layout.

Sheehan at summit for ladies

By RALPH BERNSTEIN
AP Sports Writer

WILMINGTON, Del. — Patty Sheehan shot a 2-under-par 69 Saturday for a two-stroke lead after three rounds of the $500,000 McDonald's Championship.

Sheehan has a 10-under-par 203 after three rounds of the LPGA tournament over the 6,366-yard, par 71 DuPont Country Club.

In second place was rookie Dottie Mochrie, fresh out of Furman University, who carded a 70 for a 54-hole total of 205.

Another stroke back in the struggle for a $75,000 first prize was Kathy Postlewait, a 14-year veteran who shot 69 in the third round for a 206. She ranks 17th on the money list at $77,605.

Also at 209 are Jan Stephenson, with a 68 Saturday, and Debbie Massey, with a 69.

Sheehan, the tour's eighth leading money winner this year with $124,956, led by as much as five strokes after four holes of the third round.

But a pair of bogeys on 13 and 14, and tenacious play by Mochrie reduced it to two through 13. Mochrie had a chance to slice it to one at 13, but missed a birdie putt.

Sheehan, 31, has had an up and down season. She has won once and had seven top 10 finishes. But she missed three cuts and finished 31st and 63rd.

Saturday, she birdied the 15th to boost her lead to three.

Henning fires 66 to pace Seniors

By OWEN CANFIELD
AP Sports Writer

OKLAHOMA CITY — Harold Henning, the third-leading money winner on the Senior PGA Tour, shot a 6-under-par 66 Saturday to take a two-stroke lead after two rounds of the $250,000 Southwestern Bell Senior Pages Classic.

Henning, a one-time winner this season, had eight birdies — including four in a row — and two bogeys as he finished with a two-round total of 9-under 133.

"All I know is I'm going away with a big check tomorrow," said Henning, a native of South Africa. "It may not be the winner's, but it'll be a big one. I fancy my chances."

Alone in second place was Gary Player, who had a 4-under 68 to finish at 131. Bruce Crampton shot a 68 to move into a third-place tie with two of the first round co-leaders, Bobby Nichols and Gene Littler, at 6-under-par.

A large group of players was four shots back, led by leading money winner Orville Moody and Roberto DeVicenzo. DeVicenzo's 3-under 69 gave him a 139 total and the Super Seniors championship, which is open to players 60 and older.

Chi Chi Rodriguez, another of the first round co-leaders, played the first three holes in 3-over par to drop to 1-under. He regrouped after that, however, and will begin Sunday's final round at 5-under.

Henning started the day with a birdie on the first hole, but gave the stroke back with a bogey on No. 3. Then he rattled off birdies on Nos. 7, 8, 9 and 10 to move 4-under for his round and 7-under for the touranment.

Henning said a key hole was the par-5 eighth, where he drove into the trees, hit a 9-iron out and chipped to four feet for his birdie.

"It might easily have been a six," Henning said.

The family room was designed to be the center of family activity. This room has paneled walls, and a wall of bookcases and cabinets, with doors that open to reveal a wet bar. The wet bar has glass shelves for displaying bar accessories and a wine rack. This room is brightened by a wall of windows and a door which leads to the backyard. This lovely, low-maintenance yard features a covered patio and the yard is surrounded with flower beds that are cascading with colorful flowers.

A guest room is located next to the family room. This room has a nice view of the backyard and a large walk-in closet. The private bath has a floral wallpaper in shades of rose, blue and tan and features a marble vanity and built-in shower. This room could also be used as a computer or exercise room, if the homeowner desired.

The kitchen and breakfast room are situated off the formal living and dining area. The kitchen is decorated in a soft rose, blue, tan and taupe wallcovering and has all Whirlpool appliances. These appliances include a trash compactor, ceramic cooktop, dishwasher, microwave and self cleaning oven. The kitchen cabinets are specially designed to please any gourmet cook and the cabinets are open to the ceiling and are ideal for displaying silk plants and accessories.

A hall next to the living room leads to the sequestered master bedroom. This sunny room has two large windows and could easily accommodate a sitting area at one end of the room. A door opens onto a private courtyard that features a hot tub and is the perfect place to relax at the end of the day.

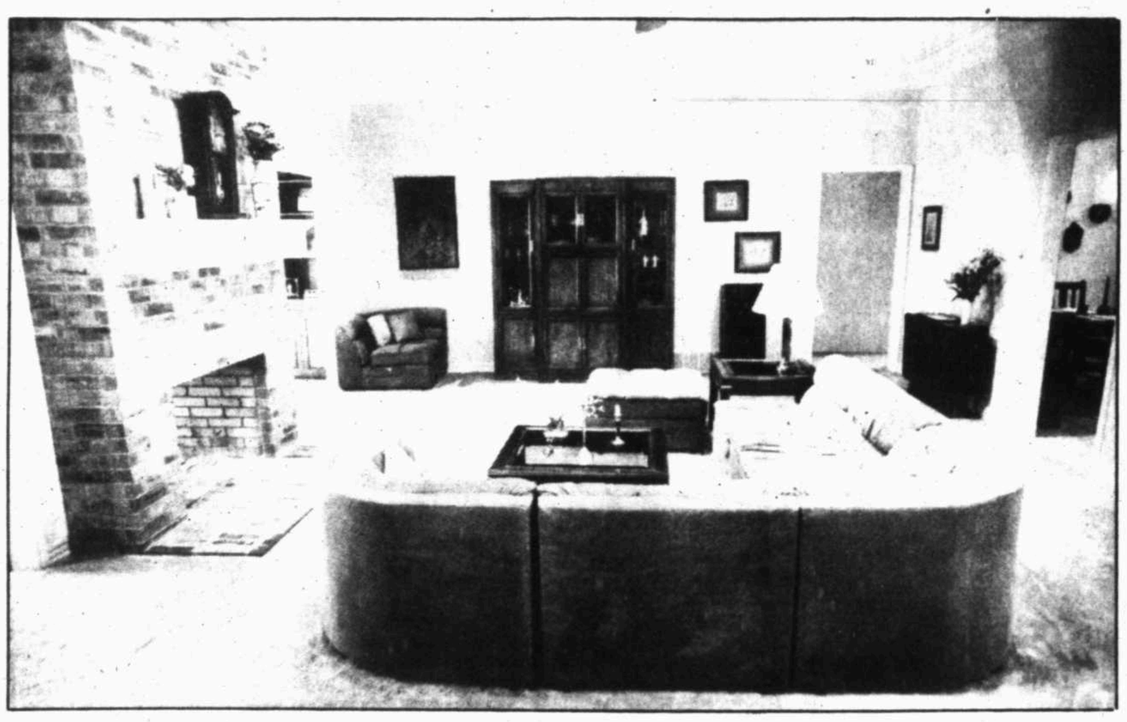
The design of the master bath would delight any homeowner. The walls are papered in a soft floral design that enhances the marble vanities and tub. The entrance of the bath features the ladies dressing area that includes a make-up vanity and a large walk-in closet with built-ins for shoes, sweaters and purses. A marble vanity that is highlighted by two shell-shaped sinks with gold fixtures lines one wall and a gorgeous tub with a planter filled with silk flowers is positioned along another wall. The bath also includes a built-in shower and another walk-in closet with built-ins.

The utility room and two car garage with automatic openers is also located in this part of the home. The utility room has a sink, built-in ironing board and space for an additional refrigerator or freezer.

The home's other two bedrooms are located to the left of the foyer. Both of these room focus on large windows and have spacious closets and ceiling fans. These rooms share a charming hall bath that is decorated in a lovely blue wallcovering with an unusual placement of a matching border at the ceiling and floor. This bath has a vanity with two marble sinks with gold fixtures and a tub/shower.

The other amenities of this three year-old home are an intercom system, a security system and a sprinkler system.

This open designed home contains approximately 3,200 square feet and would be well suited for many families. The home is being offered by Dene Kelly Realtors for $179,000.



One of the main highlights in this week's home is the design of the formal living and family rooms. The formal living focuses on a dual-fireplace, which divides these two rooms, with over-sized doorways which lead into the family room. This room also has two skylights and a ceiling fan.

The entrance of the home flows into the formal dining room to the right and leads into the formal living room. This room is brightened by a large window and features a lovely chandelier and tile floor which is ideal for displaying an elegant oriental rug.

One of the best - and currently most popular - investments in home remodeling is the installation of decorative windows, according to several leading trade publications. As in new buildings, the addition of arched windows in particular reportedly enhances both the appeal and the value of the house. Which is all very well, but none of the housing experts mention what you do to cover the windows once they're installed.

Actually, there is a solution to those beautifully shaped, empty, problem windows; a solution that is not only esthetically pleasing; but offers the added asset of providing privacy and energy efficiency as well.

One fabric shade that is on the market today is double pleated in a honeycomb fabrication that is soft enough to be formed into a variety of shapes, and firm enough to hold those shapes, whatever they may be. They're perfect for the half-arched over-windows in the typical arched window configuration. They can be fanned out to fit the exact shape of the fan-light, as those windows are called. They can also be fitted into the lower window either to pull down in the conventional manner; or to be pulled up from the bottom, if greater privacy is needed. A nice asset, they can cover windows 14 1/2 feet wide and up to 12 feet high in one seamless expanse with no visible tapes or cords.

The air space in the honeycomb is a natural insulator keeping the outside weather out and maintaining the preferred inside temperature.

Best of all, they come in a soft color spectrum keyed to today's newest home fashions color palettes and with correlating muted checks and stripes that are not only lovely to look at but add luminous glow to the room as the sun streams through the translucent fabric. For homeowners who want a consistent look from the outside of the house, there is also a duo-tone option. A white surface can face outward to the street while inside there can be the color or colors of choice.

So , for homeowners - or home buyers - there's no longer any necessity to debate - arched or no arched. The problem is covered.

Langston Realtors Talk About...

New home market, roof replacements

Q. I read that hew residential construction was down on the national level. What about Midland? C.C.

Langston

A. You are right about the national picture; in May construction of single family units in the nation plunged to its lowest level since August 1984. Happily, however, the construction of new homes in Midland continues at a steadily increasing pace with a 10.4 percent increase in units and a 10.8 percent increase in volume during the first five months of 1988 as compared to 1987. I think the fact that this is occurring in spite of rising interest rates is a good indicator of the strength of our local market's trend for recovery.

One has only to drive through the newer developments to witness this mini boom. While we will concede that this recovery may be partially artificial, created as a result of pent up demand from the city's down years, we feel this artificiality is increasingly less important to the recovery in the new construction market.

Today's typical new home buyer is in mid to upper level management and views new construction as a more stable and desirable investment. Residential resales, especially in the $100,000 to $200,000 price range, need to be highly maintained and nicely decorated (no strong colors), then have the advantages of full landscaping, attractive window coverings and established neighborhoods to compete against this strengthening new construction market.

A buyer considering a new home would do well to enlist the services of a Realtor. We have several agents in our office who specialize in new and custom construction; they are very experienced and adapt at helping a buyer select a financially stable and quality builder, then they work with the buyer and contractor to find a lot, choose a livable and resalable plan, secure the best interim and permanent financing, negotiate contract details and find interim housing if needed. If you have an interest in a new or custom home, call and I will be happy to refer you to those of our associates who are especially experienced in the new construction market.

Q. We have a wood shingle roof that needs to be replaced because of the recent hail storm. We are considering replacement with another material; will this affect the value of our home? G.L.

A. In my opinion, some of the new high grade composition materials (Timberline, etc.) are equally as attractive and desirable as wood shingles, plus have the advantage of being more fire resistant. However, I did check with several of the city's appraisers as to retention of value and all expressed the same opinion: installation of a composition roof should not adversely affected the price, saleability or appraisal of a property if (1) there are other composition roofs in the neighborhood, (2) a high grade material is used and (3) a complimentary darker color is selected.

If you have any questions on real estate that you would like answered in this column, you are invited to call or write me at Langston Realtors, 1908 West Wall, Midland, Texas 79701, (915) 682-9495.

Two new associates at Chaparral, Realtors

By JILL HANCOCK
Advertising Feature Writer

Kenneth R. Pettis and Becky St. John are new associates of Chaparral, Realtors who are dedicated in helping Chaparral be a full-service real estate company, said David Pine, president.

Rick Pettis is challenged by his involvement with a real estate company on a long term basis, as well as being a team member who can grow with that company.

Pettis

"I have been involved in real estate since 1971, after a year in outside sales with Litton Industries. During that time, I have been instrumental in the development, sales and construction of various commercial and retail projects," explained Pettis. "I have built single family custom homes in the $60,000 to $260,000 range and have handled various commercial projects in both Dallas and Midland."

Pettis was also a leasing manager of a 140,000 square foot office project in Dallas and over a period of three years, achieved and maintained an occupancy rate of over 95 percent. The largest lease that he negotiated was a five year, $2,000,000 "Triple Net" lease for a 78,000 square foot office building.

"My experience with the Dallas Petroleum Center included the responsibilities of contract negotiations for the building. I co-authored the financing package and was responsible for leasing," said Pettis. "I have been a real estate broker since 1974 and formed K.R.P. Real Estate - a real estate brokerage and consulting company that was involved with the development, sale and purchase of real estate that ranged from raw land to income producing property."

Subsequently in 1974, Pettis formed K.R. Pettis, Inc., a construction company with the purpose of designing, building and selling single family homes. He operated these companies in Dallas from 1974 until 1978 in Dallas and then moved these operations to Midland.

"My experience as a general contractor exposed me to everything from retail tenant finish out to the redesign and refurbishing of the sub-structure and peripherals of medium size drilling rigs," concluded Pettis. "I feel that my background in commercial and retail projects, in addition to my contacts with national real estate syndictions and insurance companies will enable me to be an asset as a real estate agent at Chaparral."

Pettis is a co-founder of Greater Midland Football League and of Clarick Properties.

Prior to her association with Chaparral, Realtors, Becky St. John had been in real estate for four years after receiving her license in 1978. She then became affiliated with the mortgage and loan department at Banc Home and became a licensed insurance agent in 1986.

St. John

"During the time that I was affiliated with Banc Home, I also kept up with my real estate interests. In November of last year, I become associated with Home Realty which is a division of Banc Home. My move to Chaparral will enable me to be a part of a full-service real estate company and I am looking forward to many new opportunities that this affords me," she explained.

St. John is a native Midlander who enjoys the flexibility that a career in real estate affords her. "Even though the hours a Realtor must keep at times can be more than an eight to five job, I like being able to schedule the hours that I work," said St. John.

"Purchasing a home is one of the greatest investments a person makes in their life time and this decision can be a very emotional one. I enjoy getting to know both the buyers and sellers and enabling a smooth transition for everyone involved," concluded St. John. "Chaparral, Realtors will give me the opportunity to be as successful as I am capable of being and to achieve many new goals."

St. John is a member of the Midland Board of Realtors, the Texas Association of Realtors and the National Association of Realtors. She is also a member of the Uptown Chapter of Business and Professional Women.

Realtor aids family in finding builder

When Mike and Cheryl Johnson were first told by their company, Chevron, that they would be transferring from Houston to Midland, the game plan seemed simple enough. Mike called Don Harvey, Realtors at the recommendation of his Relocation company, and became acquainted with Helen Mason, who is a sales associate with Don Harvey. Mike described what they wanted in a home to Helen over the phone. Then Mike came in a little early and spent three days looking with Helen before Cheryl arrived.

But when Cheryl arrived, she and Mike could not find the one home they could both completely agree on. So, Helen introduced them to several home builders including Kelly Young, owner of Kelly Young Construction and the builder they finally chose to work with. "This way they could build their own home, from the ground up, and have it exactly they way they wanted it," said Helen.

"We took some basic plans that Mr. Young had and modified them until we had everything just the way we wanted it," said Mr. Johnson. A lot of credit needs to Kelly Young for the way he worked with us until we got everything just right."

Helen said, "Cheryl did a great job picking everything out in really just one day before having to return to Houston."

"In some ways, this has been one of the easiest things I've ever done," said Cheryl. "But I couldn't have done it without Helen. Once I had picked out the papers, carpet, paint and such, I went back to Houston and never saw the house again until it was finished."

The fact that it snowed the first day of their homefinding trip represented only the first fateful intervention of nature. The day they actually moved in, was their 10th anniversary as well as the date of our recent hail storm. Damage to the house was minimal, but Mike's truck also sustained damage. But now, they're completely settled and snug in their beautiful new home in Polo Park.

Mike was originally born in Canada when his father was stationed at a naval base in Newfoundland. When he was only five weeks old, they moved to Oklahoma and later to Houston, where his father completed his degree at the University of Houston. After his family moved to Illinois, Kansas, Midland twice and Hearn, they returned to Houston where Mike finished high school.

Cheryl was born in Shreveport, Louisiana and lived there till age 12, at which time her family was transferred to Houston. Cheryl and Mike both attended the same school where they met and became high school sweethearts.

Mike went on to Texas A&M to complete his degree in Mechanical Engineering. In 1978 he went to work with Gulf Oil in Houston.

Cheryl attended Sam Houston, Texas A&M and the University of Texas Nursing School. Cheryl later worked as a surgical nurse at St. Lukes in Houston and in a Neo-natal Intensive Care Unit in Hattisburg, Mississippi. Their son, Brian, was born while in Mississippi and their daughter Shannon was born in Houston.

"I was really glad to get back to west Texas and Midland and I'm very excited to be a part of the Chevron project here," said Mike. "But, I guess the move is a little easier for me, since I've lived here before, than it is for Cheryl and the kids. Cheryl's family and all their kids are still in Houston."

"But we've certainly found the people of Midland to be very friendly," added Cheryl. "And this area we've moved is very new and nearly everyone here is new just like us. Everyone seems anxious to make new friends and its very easy to get acquainted."

When asked what they would miss most about Houston, besides family and friends, Mike and Cheryl said, "The Astrodome and Blue Bell ice cream." We can't match the Astrodome, but we do have Angels baseball when they have the urge to attend a live game. And if any of you out there know the nearest place around for finding Blue Bell ice cream, maybe you could help out and let the Johnsons know about it.

Now Pick.

It's tough when they look so similar. And so with apartments. Many communities look similar, but looks can be deceiving. So how do you pick the good apple in the bunch?

Begin by looking at a Balcor Community. Saddle Club Apartments have been individually designed for their location. And developed to be worthy of the highest honor you can give it - to call it home.

But there's more...something at the core of each Balcor Community that can't be seen at all. And that's a passion for service. Saddle Club management professionals will go out of their way to ensure that your neighborhood is what you expect it to be. The very best.

So look beyond the first blush on the apple. And you'll pick Saddle Club every time.

Expect the Best.

Timeless Texas ...

Think of a "classic" and what do you imagine? The music of Bach, Beethoven, Brahms? The ceiling of the Sistine Chapel or Michelangelo's statue of David? The works of Shakespeare?

Well, you'd be right, but limited, in your thinking. Every society establishes for itself its own version of the classics, while maintaining an appreciation of the best the past has to offer.

A classic, as defined in Webster's New World Dictionary, is "1. of the highest class; being a model of its kind; excellent; standard; authoritative; established; ...5. famous or well-known, esp. as being traditional or typical ..." In other words, to be qualified as a "classic," an object or trend must have been around long enough to become the standard by which all others in its class are judged.

According to information from Piper-Heidsieck Champagne — a classic in its own right — some classics from more recent times include the Beatles, clothing from Brooks Brothers, suits by Chanel, L.L. Bean, Monopoly, Steinway pianos, "Nutcracker Suite" and "The Wizard of Oz," Margaret Mitchell's famous book, "Gone With the Wind," and of course, Classic Coke.

Other contemporary American classics include '66 Ford Mustangs and '57 Chevrolets, the Beach Boys, popcorn, Hollywood and the proverbial "hot dogs, Mom and apple pie."

BUT REGIONS can have their own unique "classics," and West Texas is no exception.

Take, for example, the pickup truck. These vehicles may be 30-year-old rust buckets held together with bubble gum and string, or flashy new models complete with 4-foot-tall tires, or small imported versions with owner's manuals printed in Japanese — it doesn't matter. A pickup is a pickup is a pickup and can be a necessary working truck or a chrome-laden status symbol — but it is the vehicle of choice for many West Texans.

Pickups often come with gun racks, tool boxes or dogs in the back, but to be considered truly well-adorned, a pickup should sport bumper stickers, either philosophical or advertising. Radio station call letters are popular bumper stickers, as are such sayings as "If you don't like the way I drive, get off the sidewalk!" and "I love my (type of dog)" and "Oil feeds my family and pays my bills." Sometimes even faded "I'm mad too, Eddie!" signs can still be seen on bumpers.

And as for the drivers of these vehicles, West Texans' favorite clothing is just as characteristic as their trucks, from head gear to footwear. It's a distinctive fashion look and one which is widely copied in other areas of the country.

Classic hats worn in West Texas are not just any fedora or Indiana Jones-inspired chapeau. No, the only hat to wear in this region is the cowboy hat. Black, white, straw or felt (depending on the season), West Texans take pride in the heritage represented by their hats. Hats can be fancied-up with feathers, hat bands or pins, but most are worn plain and unadorned.

Cowboys hats must be worn, of course, with cowboy boots. The West Texas boot wardrobe ranges from working boots to dress boots, and is acceptable wear in every place from the oil field to a dance or church. But whether ragged and worn or made from the trendiest leather and bedecked in gold trim, boots are traditional in this area, and have been for generations.

Residents wearing such classic head- and footwear are required (almost by law, it seems) to wear leather belts with their names tooled on the back. It's classic.

WEST TEXAS women wear boots, hats and belts too, but they also have other options — such as tennis shoes without socks, full skirts and fluffy, fluffy hairdos. Never mind what Paris, Milan, New York or Dallas declare to be the "latest in fashion" — West Texas women know what's comfortable in hot, dry weather. Besides, haute couture Paris fashions look ridiculous on women who are dancing the Cotton-Eyed Joe, one of the area's favorite forms of recreation.

Besides dancing, other popular forms of recreation include any water sport, such as boating, swimming or waterskiing (when you live so far from water, anything done "at the lake" is viewed as an improvement); driving real fast and shooting guns at birds, deer, cardboard boxes or beer cans.

But the Number One best-loved, classic pastime in West Texas is high school football. Ten thousand fans can turn out for a game, even when the home town's total population is 3,000. Traffic to and from the game can be so backed up that have the devotees miss the entire first half and parking can be so tight that West Texans (who wouldn't dream of walking anywhere when they can drive) start arriving at the stadium at 3 p.m. for a 7 p.m. game. When football season starts, everything else is secondary.

Have you heard...?

By MARILYN McKNIGHT HARRISON

After a hectic schedule, actress-singer-dancer Ann Jillian and her husband, Andy Murcia, breathed a sigh of relief when they arrived in Midland and had a day to relax before her appearance at the "Survivors Day" celebration held here last weekend. It was sponsored by Allison Cancer Center, Midland Memorial Hospital, American Cancer Society and Texas Oncology, P.A.

The couple stayed at the Midland Hilton, and Andy enjoyed comparing notes with the hotel's security director, Robert Cortes. At the time Andy met Ann, he was serving as director of security for Chicago's noted Ambassador East Hotel. Now he is his wife's manager.

Although the current writers' strike is putting her acting career on hold, Ann stays busy with a number of club dates and personal appearances. Before coming to Midland, she sang with the Atlanta Symphony and appeared at Trump Plaza in Atlantic City. When the couple left the Tall City, they were anticipating a two to three week rest at their Los Angeles home before resuming their busy lifestyle.

On their day off here, the gracious pair, who are ardent devotees of Mexican food, enjoyed lunching at Rosa's Cafe. That evening they were wined and dined at Green Tree Country Club by Midland Memorial Hospital officials, president Ray Branson, and his wife, Meg; Jack Steele, vice president of public realtions and development, and his wife, Carol, and direcror of public relations, Laurie Johnson and her husband, Gary.

The blonde actress, herself a cancer survivor, was honored with a wine and cheese reception at Allison Cancer Center following her appearance at Theatre Midland, where she addressed a full house of cancer survivors and their families.

During her brief stay in Midland, Ann also met with another survivor, little Jessica McClure, whom she praised for enduring her ordeal in the well by singing "Pooh" songs.

PATSY YEAGER took a trip down memory lane recently when she returned to her hometown of Pawhuska, Okla. She was accompanied by her daughter, Patsy Hinchey, and Donna (Mrs. John) Yuronka.

Highlights of her trip included visits to her former home, her father's doctor's office, the Episcopal Church, which she attended as a girl, and a nearby community, where she taught school after attending the University of Kansas. She also was entertained at lunch by childhood friends. The threesome visited Patsy's niece in Tulsa before returning home.

Patsy moved to Pawhuska in 1911 at the age of ten from Sedan, Kan., where she was born.

CONTRATULATIONS TO Marcy Ritchey and Doug Tull, who were married Saturday afternoon in Episcopal Church of the Holy Trinity. A reception followed at Polo Park Clubhouse.

Festivities leading up to th. wedding began last weekend when Doug was honored with a bachelor party in Las Vegas. The event was hosted by his father, C.C. Tull; Bobby Heinen and Bobby Stevens. Meanwhile, Marcy was feted with a bachelorette party in Austin. It was hosted by Susan (Mrs. Bobby) Stevens and Carrie (Mrs. John) Larsen of Odessa.

Doug's aunt and uncle, Clarece and James McCain, entertained with an ice cream social at their home last Sunday evening. La Bodega Restaurant was the setting for the rehearsal dinner given Friday evening by the groom's parents, Betty and C.C. Tull. Doug's sister and brother in-law, Candy and Mike McPherren, hosted a brunch Saturday for out-of-town family members at their residence.

AND BEST WISHES to Paula Ireland and Greg Collins, who exchanged marriage vows Saturday evening at First United Methodist Church. The bride's mother, Shirley Ireland, hosted the wedding reception at her home.

A bridal luncheon was given Friday in the home of Roberta Fraser and her daughter, Alyson Aldridge and co-hosted by this columnist. The groom's parents, Elaine and Bill Collins, gave the rehearsal dinner Friday evening at their home.

Paula was honored earlier with a miscellaneous shower given by Sheri (Mrs. Eric) Lewis and Connie (Mrs. David) Lewis in Sheri's home.

CLASSICS

And although high school marching bands that perform during the games' half-time festivities are part of this West Texan recreational pursuit, it isn't necessarily their favorite classics in music. When a song is in your heart — at least in this part of the state — chances are it's by Waylon Jennings, Merle Haggard or Mel Tillis. Oh, sure, there are some young upstarts, such as George Strait or Randy Travis, who can sing a good song, but for a classic tune, you need someone who has been around a while and who can wring out those teardrops. That's country. That's classic.

Permian Basin residents enjoy the same kinds of foods as the rest of the country, but their favorites include hamburgers the size of hubcaps, served with french fries oozing in grease (ketchup on the side, of course); chicken-fried steak with mashed potatoes and cream gravy; enchiladas, tacos and other Tex-Mex specialties topped with mountains of salsa, jalapenos and sour cream; Dr Pepper; and anything fried.

But in spite of the image of pick-up-driving, jeans-wearing, country music fans who love football games, West Texans' most well-known trait is what is sometimes called their "neighborliness." We may not be considered as fashionably dressed or as well-fed as residents of other regions, but we can be counted on to donate time, money and commitment to such projects as Palmer Drug Abuse Program, Permian Basin Center for Battered Women and Their Children, and Ronald McDonald House. We may not drive glamorous cars or attend classical concerts and plays, but we know how to support clean-up campaigns, scout troops and PTA. We may not be "into" ancient Greek philosophy or Roman architecture, but we know how utilize every resource available to rescue a little child trapped in a well.

Historic church preserves atmosphere of earlier time

PATTON (AP) — Out at Patton Baptist Church on Hog Creek, 25 miles northwest of Waco, the trees are rustling and the birds are chirping. A storm is brewing but hasn't quite cooked up yet.

Patton Church seems the definitive little country church.

Its gravel lane is lined with vines and trees and winds up to the church site four miles south of Valley Mills just over a small bridge. Picturesque with the burbling creek, pecan trees and a pretty 3-foot-tall well, the church sits spanking white and humble on an expanse of green lawn.

No parking lot here. No big converted school buses and big marquees. Just the church, an open tabernacle and a quiet country day.

It's all familiar to Agnes Goodwin.

Mrs. Goodwin, who attended Patton Church for 32 years, and her daughter Kathy Rowlan have completed a history of the church in honor of its recent designation as a Texas historical site.

"I was baptized when I was 12 in Hog Creek," Mrs. Goodwin said. "Most people at that time were baptized there."

Mrs. Goodwin and her husband, Tom, live in Waco and attend Western Heights Baptist Church, but they remember when they walked down the aisle of Patton Church on Dec. 20, 1941, to exchange wedding vows.

Patton Church was formed as Walnut Grove Baptist Church of Christ in 1872.

At first the church had daytime meetings once a month. Most people traveled in wagons to the church, Mrs. Goodwin said. The preachers throughout the church's history often were young men from Baylor University.

In 1889, the church was renamed Patton Baptist Church. Mrs. Goodwin says she believes members met in the schoolhouse until they moved to land purchased nearby for $5 from Richard Simpson. The land was deeded to the church in May 1897.

Mrs. Goodwin is Simpson's great-granddaughter.

With its worn green Broadman hymnals in place and wooden pews gleaming softly, the inside of the church looks as if it belongs to another time.

"The well that was used by the schools ... one man in particular told me he remembers when he was a child standing by the well to be protected from the north wind. He was shorter than the well," said the Rev. Pat Cummings, pastor.

The church was formed by down-to-earth farm folk, he said, and probably one of the most admirable things about it is the fact that money is not solicited.

'Desert creep' feared

Copley News Service

Only 13 percent of the world's land now produces food, says Mohamed A.F. Kassas, an Egyptian plant ecologist who has been wrestling with the problem of "desert creep" for decades. If desertification continues at its present rate, "you can eat up the 13 percent within the next hundred years," he said. "It's as bad as that."

DEAR ABBY

Woman tempted to teach man manners

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I can't believe I am writing to ask you a question that most people would perceive as stupid, but here goes: Should I offer to show a man who is in his late 20s the correct way to hold his knife and fork while cutting meat?

He is married, and a fairly successful salesman with good manners, but when he cuts meat, he makes a "fist" of his left hand and holds the fork straight up — like a 4-year-old child.

Others have noticed it, and I'm amazed that no one has called this to his attention. Should I? — TEMPTED

DEAR TEMPTED: How well do you know him? Is he a close friend? A casual acquaintance? A relative? Or perhaps a co-worker? Unless you are absolutely certain that he would welcome your instructions, back off.

This advice holds true for those who are tempted to offer unsolicited but well-intended advice, such as: "You should do something about that wart (or mole) on your face" or, "Replace that missing tooth in front" or, "Get a nose job" or, "Lose some weight."

However, it would be an act of kindness quietly to let a person know there's a piece of broccoli on his tooth, or a piece of toilet tissue clinging to his left shoe or his zipper is open.

DEAR ABBY: I saw a program on TV recently where it was suggested that to keep love alive, husbands should give their wives a 20-second kiss three times a day. It horrified me beyond words. Most husbands cannot give their wives a "little kiss" without dragging them right to the sack! (That's during the daytime — then comes the night!)

I have been divorced for 25 years after 14 years of marriage — how many women can hack it? Now if I feel like kissing someone, it can be enjoyable with no dragging!

I wonder what other women's opinions are in regard to this? — AVID ST. PAUL READER

DEAR AVID: Here's mine: Appetites (for everything) vary vastly. The more alike a couple's appetites are, the more compatible. Show me a man who likes corned beef every day while his wife prefers squab, and I'll show you a couple who rarely eat together.

DEAR ABBY: Regarding unprofessional remarks made to patients, and violations of privacy by so-called "office nurses," please keep in mind, Abby, that many of these workers are not registered nurses — they are just called so by either themselves or the physicians for whom they work.

An education in nursing does not automatically guarantee tact, but we nurses do learn subtle ways of posing embarrassing questions to patients.

A former nursing instructor of mine resented the free use of the title "nurse" for anyone wearing white in a doctor's office, so she got her point across by merely asking, "And from what school of nursing did you graduate?" — M.V., R.N., B.S.N., ALBERTSON, N.Y.

DEAR M.V.: Thanks for the important reminder: All that glitters is not gold, and all who say, "Yes, Doctor," are not nurses.

"How to Be Popular" is for everyone who feels left out and wants an improved social life. It's an excellent guide to becoming a better conversationalist and a more attractive person. To order, send your name and address, clearly printed, plus check or money order for $2.89 ($3.39 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, Popularity Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054. Postage and handling are included.

Old song favorite

Some 80 percent of wedding couples request "Here Comes the Bride," according to Hank Lane, Great Neck, N.Y., whose 21 orchestras have played at some 15,000 parties in 10 years. Others prefer Bach or Vivaldi, although he's also had requests for the Beatles' "When I'm 64" and "Ease on Down the Road," from the Broadway musical, "The Wiz."

Canada prepares for celebrity wedding

EDMONTON, Alberta (AP) — It's going to be the summer of love in Edmonton as hockey star Wayne Gretzky and movie actress Janet Jones prepare to exchange vows in what is being described as Canada's version of a royal wedding.

Gretzky, the Edmonton Oilers' outstanding center, and Jones, who starred in "American Anthem" and posed semi-nude for Playboy magazine, are to be married July 16 in a ceremony expected to attract celebrities from the worlds of hockey, show business and politics.

The blonde, athletic couple have found themselves in the center of as much excitement as that which surrounded the Oilers' Stanley Cup victory last month.

In a city that takes great pride in its hockey team, this wedding is turning into big news. While many of the details have been kept secret, some have started to leak out in lengthy newspaper stories that resemble old-fashioned society columns.

While Gretzky and the Oilers were battling for the Stanley Cup, Duguid and Jones were planning menus, music, flowers and a hundred other details.

Duguid says the theme will be classic white and the ceremony will be traditional.

Though Gretzky is an Anglican and Jones a Methodist, the ceremony will be held in St. Joseph's Roman Catholic Basilica in downtown Edmonton. Gretzky's first choice, All Saints' Anglican Cathedral, was too small.

Reports say Jones's gown, covered in streams of hand-sewn beads, will cost about $40,000.

Although the gown will come from Tinseltown, Gretzky and Jones have put their faith in Edmonton firms for most of the wedding arrangements.

While Gretzky likes to joke that he, his best man Eddie Mio, a former Oiler goaltender, and his 10 groomsmen will show up in sneakers and shorts, he has in fact ordered black tuxedos from a local tailor.

One of Duguid's major concerns is security, especially as the bride and groom move through downtown Edmonton from the church to the Westin Hotel, where the reception will be held, in a rented white Rolls-Royce arrayed in flowers.

With 22 attendants and another 700 guests tailing along behind the Rolls, the trip could easily turn into an impromptu parade. Duguid says she has made subtle arrangements to keep the couple's peace and privacy intact and to keep gate-crashers out of the party.

Gift-givers will have a tough time topping the groom's gift to the bride.

"Do you want to know what he gave me?" Jones gushed. "It's a Corniche Rolls-Royce convertible, cream color with tan interior."

The value? $250,000 or so.

Despite all the fanfare surrounding their day, Gretzky and Jones say they want to keep the wedding a personal affair.

"They are not out to make it the social event of the season," Duguid said. "They want to have a celebration for family and friends, and that's pretty much who's on the guest lisst.

In-laws can be a problem

Associated Press

In-laws — whether meddlesome and domineering or indifferent and unsupportive — can be a prime problem in troubled marriages.

In-law relationships are cited as a major problem by a quarter of all those seeking marital counseling, according to an article in the current issue of Cosmopolitan, and they are mentioned as a secondary concern by another 60 percent.

One of three issues usually is involved. One or both spouses aren't really separated from their parents; loyalty is divided between partner and parents, or a partner's inner anxiety, like a problem with her own parents, is projected onto an in-law.

Parents-in-law can provoke anxiety early-on.

"A wedding is not just the union of two individuals but the marriage of two families, each with its own history and style," said Howard Weiss, social psychologist at the Ackerman Institute for Family in New York City.

"With the incorporation of a new person into the family, those histories are undergoing a revolution. This produces normal friction. How the wedding preparations are made and who makes the decisions often set the rules for how all the parties will continue to behave."

Severe in-law problems usually are confined to the early years of marriage and are often related to an overly involved parent-child relationship — a relationship that may seriously disturb the other spouse.

"The problem can be either the parent's or the child's," said psychotherapist Laura Singer. "The young adult may be breaking away, making her own moves for the first time, and still shaky in terms of being her own person. She wants to stay enmeshed with authority figures.

"Similarly, there is often a need on the parents' part to maintain the pretense that they're still needed. Either situation can cause strife — especially with an independent spouse who sees things differently."

Women may complain inappropriately to their mother's about their husbands. Men also can be overly dependent on parents.

"Problems in early marriage often reflect an inability to separate from the family of origin and form one's own family," said psychologist Ann Winton.

Separation problems may feed into the problem of divided loyalty and money may be the wedge.

Singer said that if "kids ask for money, parents may take it as a sign they're unable to fend for themselves and will interfere more," causing real resentment.

"If a spouse feels his or her view is not valued, or things are being worked out without his being consulted, this is interpreted as a breach of loyalty," Weiss said.

A third problem involves the young spouse who projects feelings about his or her own parents onto the in-laws, seeking the support or nurturing he or she didn't recieve as a kid.

Problems with in-laws may recede with the arrival of a baby, who can become a focal point around which grandparents and parents can rally.

Family therapists agree rapprochement with in-laws should be a high priority goal.

"In-laws are a rich source of support if one can resolve the issues of control and separation and can develop an appreciation for the differences," Singer said. "Sometime those differences can be very exotic and marvelous."

Second marriages have special style

From Staff Reports

Second marriages are a common occurrence these days and many of the past traditions are changing. Still, it helps to know some of the more acceptable styles of second marriages according to experts in the field.

If it is the bride's first marriage and the bridegroom's second, the ceremony can be traditional. The wedding can be as elegant and formal as the bride desires. Of course, depending upon the couple's religious beliefs, they may wish to consult with their clergy regarding any restrictions for divorced persons.

If it is the bride's second marriage, the ceremony usually is less formal and includes only the family's close relatives and friends.

When both the bride and the bridegrrom have been previously married, the ceremony is informal, perhaps taking place in a simple chapel, a family members home, hotel or club. There can be a maid of honor and best man, but no bridesmaids.

Honeymoon guide advises planning

Associated Press

If you're planning a honeymoon in Europe, be sure to request a full-sized bed ahead of time, advise the authors of "The Bride's Honeymoon Travel Guide," written by the editors of Bride's magazine.

Many European hotels feature "Lucy-and-Ricky-style twin bed boudoirs," the book says, "and on a honeymoon this can be pretty depressing."

If traveling by ship, it is added, be sure to check out the sleeping accommodations or "you may find yourself and your spouse in bunk beds."

The guide, published by G.P. Putnam's Sons, includes travel packing tips, ways to budget time and money, advice on passports and visas — and a quiz couples can take to help determine their "travel personalities" and compatibility.

Weddings recorded for posterity

Associated Press

In the old days there were two ways of making sure a wedding was recorded for posterity: Hire a professional photographer or rely on Uncle Bernie and his Brownie.

Today, there are two choices: Hire a professional videographer or rely on Uncle Bernie and his camcorder.

With the increasing costs of getting married, a lot more to-be-weds are relying on Uncle Bernie and his camcorder. And Bernie's chances of coming up with professional results are much better than they ever were in the past, given the almost foolproof operation of modern camcorders.

Come up with a shooting script. It's important to know what's going to happen beforehand. Make sure it's permissible to shoot if the wedding ceremony is going to take place in a house of worship. Some churches prohibit any kind of camera, video or otherwise.

Make sure the camcorder's batteries are fully charged. And take along a spare battery and a charger if possible. The next time a camcorder runs out of steam in the middle of the vows won't be the first time. Also be sure to have sufficient videotape.

Remember, the idea is to put together a chronology of the day's happenings not just a tape of the actual "I do's."

Use a zoom lens to get those intimate close-in shots of participants' faces, especially during the most emotional moments. The zoom lens also allows the videographer to get close-in shots of the ceremony itself without being physically obtrusive. The objective in all cases is to be as unobtrusive as possible.

Interview participants. Ask for comments about the bride and groom. A separate microphone could be a good idea.

Get all of the "boilerplate" shots, such as the group shot of the wedding party, shots of the rice being thrown, the bride kissing the groom, etc., but als try to be as candid.

One advantage the amateur has over the professional is an intimate knowledge of the participants which can result in a very intimate video document of an important event.

But though Dean would rather be out on the range, his music always brings him to the bandstand one more time.

The 57-year-old musician has gained regional popularity, but has not fared as well financially as some of the other country entertainers, including superstar George Strait, who once requested to sing with Dean's band but was rejected.

Dean's band still plays the song that continues to bring in the bucks, but not much publicity.

"To this day, we play the 'Cotton-Eyed Joe' twice a night and sometimes three times a night," he said. "If you're a country-western band, and if you come to Texas, you'd better know how to play the 'Cotton-Eyed Joe.'

"There are several versions of the 'Cotton-Eyed Joe,' but ours is a magic mix and I don't think it can be duplicated."

"Cotton-Eyed Joe," a mixture of fiddle, guitar and drum rhythm, has been around as long as people can remember.

It has been played in jukeboxes at roadside cafes and in honky-tonks from Texas to Montana. It gained even more popularity after it was featured in the movie "Urban Cowboy."

The song is closely associated with a dance in which several two-steppers, with their arms around each other's waists and shoulders, move counter clockwise, taking several steps forward and a few backward as they kick up their heels.

The rhythm intensifies and the pros are quickly separated from the amateurs.

The song is known throughout the country, and is synonymous with Texas, but Dean admits few people know the artist's name.

"There were times when people would try to impersonate me to make some money," he said. "People didn't know my face, so it was hard to convince them that I was the real Al Dean."

Last year, the Texas Juke Box Dealers presented Dean with its first classic music award for the most-played jukebox record in Texas.

Bud Daily, secretary-treasurer of the Daily Inc. record distributing company, has distributed Dean's "Cotton-Eyed Joe" recording for almost a decade and is surprised by its continued success.

"There must be several hundred versions of 'Cotton-Eyed Joe' that have been recorded down through the years, but Al Dean's has just outlasted them," Daily said.

"I don't know what it is, but there is a certain chemistry that comes together — the beat, the sincerity with which the music is played, the sincerity with which a singer projects and the sincerity that comes together that makes the record.

Dean's road to success started in rattlesnake-infested Freer a community midway between Corpus Christi and Laredo.

In 1952, at age 22, he became the lead singer of the Texas Teen-agers, a group of mostly high school kids who played in south Texas. When they split up about two years later, Dean recorded a few songs on his own in San Antonio, but with little success.

Then, in 1967, he scraped up several thousand dollars, traveled to Nashville and recorded his first album, "Texas to Nashville," which had "Cotton-Eyed Joe" on it.

The album was on Dean's independent "KIK-R" label, and he had to work to get disc jockeys to play it.

He was rejected, but later released "Cotton-Eyed Joe" and "Jalisco" as a single. Soon after, a San Antonio radio station began playing the country tune, and requests came in for more records.

Dean recalls a certain day on the road with his band.

"I remember we were at the Dilley rodeo one day and some kid comes up to the bandstand and says that he would like to sing a song with us," Dean recalled. "I told him flat out, 'No. We don't let people from the floor sing with the group.' It turned out to be a young George Strait."

Dean said he still doesn't regret that decision, even though Strait has gone on to garner numerous country music awards.

"I'm just a cowboy at heart," he says. "Give me a pair of posthole diggers, some barb wire, a poor old horse and an old cow to look after and I'm happy."

Procedure lengthens short limbs

DALLAS (AP) — A medical technique developed in Siberia 37 years ago but only recently introduced to the United States allows patients to lengthen too-short limbs with a wrench, tightening wires attached to their bones.

Pins as slim as bicycle spokes connect the bone to hoops that surround the exterior of the limb and the hoops are attached to each other by long screws, said Richard Treharne, a bioengineer.

The patients actually do some of the work themselves, lengthening the screws a tiny fraction of an inch each day by turning nuts on the end of the screws with a wrench. They check in with their doctors about once a week.

The procedure was developed in Siberia by Soviet physician Gabriel Ilizarov to mend limbs of World War II casualties.

But it didn't reach the United States until 1981, Treharne said.

Treharne is employed by Richards Medical Co. in Memphis, Tenn., a company which markets equipment used for the procedure.

Through a 1- or 2-inch incision, an orthopedic surgeon cuts the outer layer of the bone to be stretched, leaving the blood supply undisturbed.

As the bone cut heals, it is pulled apart slightly, stretching the tissue and stimulating the production of more bone.

The process has to be almost perfect — not too slow but not too fast.

"What we are doing is reproducing the natural growth process," Treharne said.

Practitioners say the proper growth rate is about an inch every 10 weeks. If the bone is stretched too slowly, it will heal before the desired length is reached. But if it is stretched too quickly, blood vessels and nerves will not be able to keep up.

Working out helps ease stress of working

NEW YORK (AP) — A recent survey shows regular exercisers are least likely to rate their jobs as stressful, according to the Reebok Aerobic Information Bureau.

It says the conclusion is that of Dr. James M. Rippe of the University of Massachusetts Medical Center, who surveyed over 1,100 CEO's for an upcoming book on corporate health.

Elderly need to have confidence in doctors

By STEVE EDWARDS

Edwards

Because people are living longer, many elderly individuals have difficulty finding a doctor to suit their particular needs.

For any patient, it is important for a physician to have good communication skills, sensitivity and patience. With elderly people, these qualities are essential in order for the patient to feel confident about their doctor.

It also is important for the physician to understand the aging process and older people's problems.

Because of their increased chances of chronic illnesses, multiple medications and other medical problems, older patients have a critical need to find a qualified doctor who is professionally competent, personally compatible and connected with a good hospital.

Elderly individuals may find it advantageous to have an internist in general charge of medical care.

An internist, who is today's equivilent of the family doctor, is equipped to deal with the chronic illnesses of the elderly, and knows when to call on specialists for consultation or treatment.

Patients should have an internist in charge of their medical needs before they seek the advice of specialists.

■ Was the initial visit long enough? It takes time to take a good history; to learn family medical idiosyncrasies, unusual incidents and common complaints; and to perform standard tests.

The doctor should be tolu about social and economic circumstances. A one-to-one conversation will allow the doctor to discover the patient's personality and anxieties.

All these points are important factors in the physician helping the patient. If the visit is too abrupt or too mechanical with little dialogue, then the doctor may not be desirable for the older patient.

If this is the case, unless the physician's expertise as a specialist is a necessity or it is an emergency, the patient may want to find another doctor.

■ During later visits, does the physician provide enough time and attention to the problem?

Doctors should be reasonable about answering questions and explaining procedures to the patient.

■ Does the doctor know the limits of his expertise?

Patients are sometimes upset when the doctor calls in another physician or specialist. However, a good doctor knows when to call for help when he needs it.

This broad medical support is good and is not as a sign of a doctor's shortcomings.

■ Does the physician object if the patient wants another opinion?

Many insurance companies now make it mandatory for second medical opinions concerning radical treatment or surgery, and patients should feel free to request one.

Better communication will result when patients lose their awe of doctors.

Find a physician who is truly interested in you, and cooperate in your own treatment.

Your chances of living a longer, healthier life depend upon this relationship.

Many women marry to beat biological clock

By ERMA BOMBECK

Bombeck

More people will get married this month than any other month during the year.

Many of these ceremonies will be performed to silence the ticking of what has become known as the bride's biological clock. This new timepiece of the '80s supposedly features an alarm that one day goes off unexpectedly like the buzzer on "Jeopardy," signifying that a woman's childbearing years are over.

As Yogi Berra said, "It isn't over till it's over." Josimar Carnauba of Brazil had 38 children, the last one when she was 54 years old. An American, Ruth Kistler, gave birth to a daughter in 1946, when she was 57 years and 129 days old.

I was in a supermarket recently when a woman with two children was patiently explaining to her toddler in the cart why he must stop teething on a package of raw hamburger. As she was doing this, an older child wrapped her body around a bubble gum machine and screamed, "Gimmee, gimmee." When the mother took the hamburger out of the hands of the child in the cart, he angrily kicked his feet, making connection with a pyramid of oranges and scattering them all over the floor. She looked at me and said, "I'm glad I had them when I was older. I couldn't have handled this in my 20s."

There is no doubt in my mind she believed this. She figures she has triumphed over the biological clock and is home free. She doesn't know yet about the biological calendar.

Let us suppose a woman has her first child at the age of 45. When her son outgrows naps, she will start taking hers. When the kid is cast as a bad tooth in a dental hygiene musical at school, she will be sitting in the audience fighting hot flashes. When he is ready for his temporary driving permit at age 15, she will be a 60-year-old woman popping estrogen and trying to figure out if her deafness is caused by the car radio or just natural evolution. When she goes to bed, he will be going out, and when she is getting up, he will be coming in. His acceptance to college and her Social Security check will arrive on the same day.

If he marries at the same age she did, she'll be 88 and probably won't be able to stay up for the reception. And baby-sitting at 92? Think about it.

City of culture, color ...

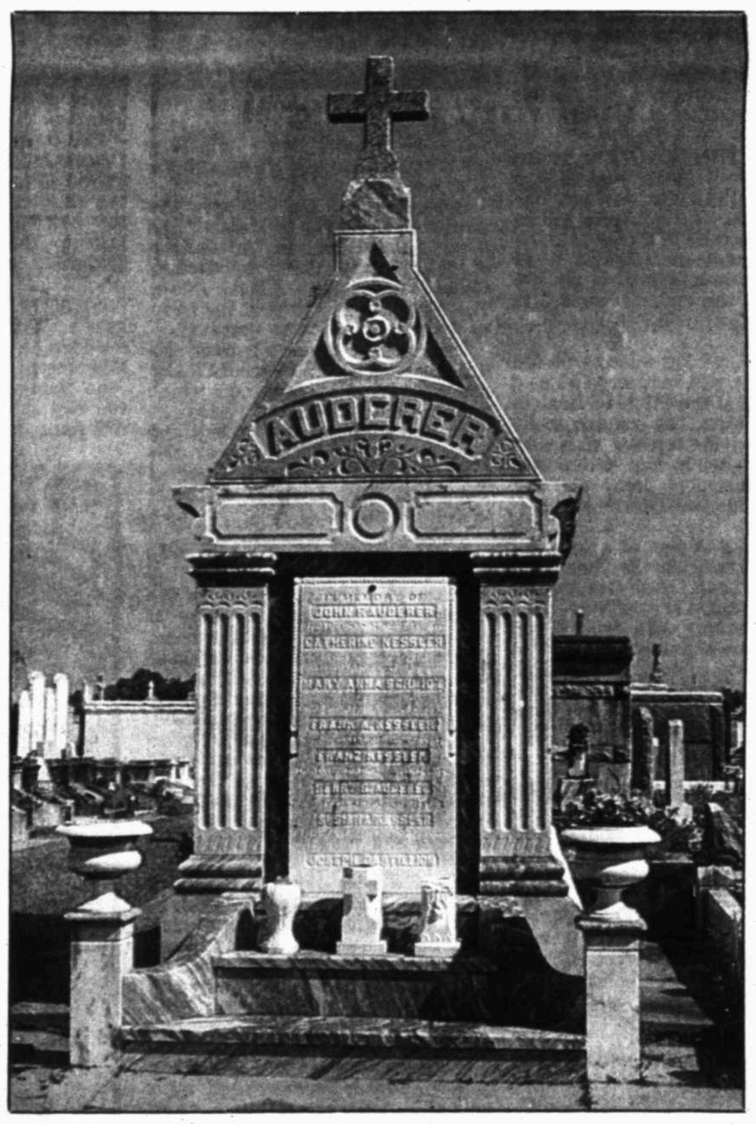
Text and photos by Myra Lee Salcedo



Like approaching an unfamiliar spicy Cajun dish, a first-time visitor to New Orleans may approach the city with a certain amount of apprehension and intrigue. The city is like an exotic Cajun fare — exciting, surprising and mysterious — never bland.

Savoring the blend of French culture, black heritage, history and romance of the city is best done with a sense of discovery and an adherence to the old adage "nothing ventured, nothing gained."

Many visitors to the area expect New Orleans, the home of Mardi Gras and jazz, to harbor Cajun-country bands and Southern belles in big hoop skirts standing on verandas of plantation homes — and the true picture of the city isn't far off.

New Orleans is filled with street performers, hot dog vendors, horses and carriages, heavy traffic, steamboats, streetcars and tall, narrow buildings adorned with lacy wrought iron grillwork. Southern belles in Scarlet O'Hara garb grace some doorways of restaurants and bars, hired by the management to attract customers.

Jazz music blares from clubs in the French Quarter at all hours. Trumpeters lean over plant-filled balconies and serenade passers-by while weeping willows sweep the streets and gently sway in moisture-laden breezes.

New Orleans entrepreneurs offer alligator swamp tours

By MYRA LEE SALCEDO
Lifestyle Writer

In addition to walking tours of the French Quarter and the standard bus tours of the city, New Orleans offers sightseers some off-the-wall guided tours for the adventurous and the stout of heart.

Visitors who really want to experience Louisiana may cruise the backwater bayous and swamps befitting of a movie set. Some tours offer opportunities to meet the colorful Cajun people first hand. Others practically guarantee to bring sightseers within "petting distance" of alligators.

Next to the historical district tours, the swamp tours are the most popular, according to the New Orleans Chamber of Commerce. The Louisiana swamps are among the most mysterious areas of unspoiled wilderness left in the United States. They also are the home of one of the oldest cultures in North America — the Cajun culture. The Cajun French-speaking immigrants of Louisiana still maintain a way of life that has scarcely changed since they came from Nova Scotia almost 200 years ago.

The swamp tours and most of the specialty guided tours are expensive (from $17.50-$65 per person, with the average price being $40 each) and many don't include lunch. Participants should also be prepared to set aside an entire day for a specialty tour; some tours begin at locations 40 minutes away from New Orleans and provide a pick-up service from area hotels.

CNS Graphic

Tours vary in length from 1½-10 hours and participants should allow for traffic problems on land or river. Boats on the Mississippi River occasionally get held up at docks lengthening tour times.

There are tours to fit every budget and interest, many which are limited only to one's sense of adventure. Most tours require at least a 24-hour reservation notice before departure. A sample of a few tours available follow:

■ MINI SWAMP TOUR — Ideal for visitors with a tight schedule who want to get the flavor of Cajun Country in two hours. The tour includes the Louisiana Swamp Exhibit, a brief orientation of Cajun and New Orleans history and a tour of St. Charles Ave., the city's most opulent thoroughfare. Cost is $18 for adults. Children (2-12) $12. Departs 9:30 a.m. and 1:30 p.m. For information call (504) 899-2027.

■ FULL DAY SWAMP TOUR — This 6¼-hour tour explores swamps and takes visitors to meet Cajun people in their home environment. Points of interest include a Cajun fishing village, a Cajun dance hall and the Destrehan Plantation (the oldest surviving plantation in the Mississippi Valley). Cajun delicacies are served for lunch. Cost is $45 per person. The tour departs 9 a.m. daily. For information call (504) 899-2027.

■ SWAMP PARADE TOUR — This tour visits cypress swamps, antebellum homes and slave buildings, swamp gardens, a cemetery and close-up views of alligators, (so close-up they are fed marshmallows from a boat). It includes a Cajun dinner and tours of private antebellum homes. Cost is $40 per person and advance reservations are required. For information call (505) 465-4707.

■ ZAM'S BAYOU SWAMP TOURS. Explores Cypress swamps and bayous accessible by small crafts only. Points of interest include Bird Island and the Gator Bait Trading Post. Tour guides are native trappers and narrate Cajun history during boat rides which are available daily with group rates. Two-hour tours are $10 per person and three-hour tours are $20 per person. Tours leave from Kraemer, La. For information call (504) 633-7681.

■ VOODOO WALKING TOUR — This tour includes a stop at the Voodoo Museum in the French Quarter, the Voodoo Spiritualist Church, a Voodoo Drugstore, a purportedly haunted house. Cost is $15 per person and tours depart at 1 p.m. daily. Offshoots of the Voodoo Walking Tour include the Graveyard Tour of five of New Orleans cemeteries for $20 and the Black Heritage Tour for $15. Voodoo rituals are extra and food offerings are suggested. For information call (505) 523-7685.

NEW ORLEANS

When the sun goes down, Bourbon Street transforms into a boisterous haven of jazz, with dancing and cavorting in the streets (which is said to be tame compared to a Mardi Gras evening).

No matter what one expects of New Orleans, a city draped in hanging moss and dripping with Southern history, it does offer what the natives call lagniappe — a little something extra.

The profusion of Louisiana swamp tours available (see related story) are not surprising. These tours offer to take sightseers to "voodoo country," to Cajun dance halls, or within "petting" distance of an alligator. Each of these tours promise to provide a little more excitement than the average tourist bargains for.

The swamp tours and riverboat cruises complement the city, which seen from the air is a baffling complex of lakes, bayous, marshes, swamps, bays, islands and tributaries. New Orleans was once covered entirely by water before the Mississippi River — the largest, mightiest river in the United Sates — retreated. It is the only major United States city that lies under sea level. At high tide the whole city, which is below river level, is protected by an extensive system of dykes and levees. New Orleans also has more annual rainfall — 59 inches a year — than any other U.S. city except Miami and Mobile, Ala.

Indians named the immense Mississippi "The Father of Waters," and it was immortalized in "Adventures of Huckleberry Finn" by Samuel Clemens in the guise of Mark Twain. The River is only a part of the history which engulfs New Orleans.

The French influence is easily noticed by viewing the Historical markers, brochures and some tours which are provided in the French language only. Reminders of the French and Spanish occupations are most pronounced in the French Quarter (composed of 90 blocks in the heart of New Orleans).

IN COLONIAL DAYS, the French Quarter was surrounded by fortifications and inhabited by the Creoles, a name given to those of French, Spanish, or other European parentage. The Louisiana Purchase was signed in the Cabildo in the French Quarter's Jackson Square, named for General Andrew Jackson.

New Orlean's European architecture, narrow streets (many only wide enough for one lane of traffic) and buildings with triple balconies and courtyards are reminiscent of cities in Spain and France. The European tradition of dining al frescoe (outdoors) also is evident, especially at the restaurant Cafe du Monde, which has a large outdoor dining area under awnings facing courtyards filled with flowers and foliage.

Restored antebellum plantation homes abound in and around the outskirts of the city and add a touch of romance to New Orleans.

The nearly untouched swamps and bayou country, surrounded with tales of buried treasure, also have an aura of romance. At one time, they served as hiding places for privateers, smugglers and the pirate, Jean Lafitte.

Some of the Cajun villages in the swamp areas have changed little over the past 200 years. The Cajun people's rugged style of living and seclusion from civilization appeals to the adventurous of heart. Many of the Cajun tours are lead by alligator hunters, Louisiana's answer to "Crocodile Dundee." The tour guides sport names like "Papa-Gator," "Wild Bill" and "River Runner" Johnson.

Myra Salcedo/Reporter-Telegram

The swamps and Bayous of New Orleans still harbor thousands of alligators. In fact, for brave souls, there are alligator tours which claim to allow participants to toss marshmallows to the reptiles from a boat (hopefully, a very large boat).

NEW ORLEANS' colorful history goes back to 1718, when the city was founded on a sweeping curve of the Mississippi River by Frenchman Jean Baptiste Lemayne. He named the city in honor of Philippe Duc d'Orleans, Regent of France at the time. Lemayne's intention was to dominate the mouth of the river and thereby secure all of the Louisiana land, which was then a vast area lying between the Mississippi River and the Rocky Mountains, from the Spanish and English.

In 1880, however, Napolean, who was short of funds while fighting Britain, sold Louisiana to America for $15 million through Thomas Jefferson, the third president. Although the price was a huge sum at the time, it was for a large area. The New Orleans territory purchased later was divided into the states of Arkansas, Missouri, Nebraska, Iowa, South Dakota, part of North Dakota, Minnesota, Kansas, Oikahoma, Colorado and Wyoming.

One of the most modern points of interest in New Orleans is the Superdome. Some city tours include visits to the Superdome and New Orlean's above ground "city of the dead" cemeteries. Most of the tombs are built above ground because of the high water table. The rows and rows of miniature church and building-shaped tombs resemble a virtual mini-city from the roadside.

Aside from sightseeing, New Orleans also is a haven for shoppers. The Riverwalk boasts 140 shops and restaurants situated on the banks of the Mississippi and over 100 shops in the Jackson Brewery, the historic renovation of a turn-of-the-century brewhouse. The Jackson Brewery also faces the main dock for most of the Mississippi River boat cruises.

Aside from the abundance of stores, including such characteristic shops such as the Banana Republic, and Mardi Gras mask shops, New Orleans abounds with restaurants. K-Paul's Louisiana Kitchen was made famous by Chef Paul Prudhomme. During the summer months, there is a continuous waiting line in the street from before it opens until it closes.

DINERS CAN EXPECT to wait at least one hour to be seated and the Cajun and Creole entrees start at $25.

Another popular restaurant is Ralph & Kacoos Seafood Restaurant near Bourbon Street. The immense two-story restaurant is lavishly decorated with Madri Gras capes, masks and posters. Each dining room has a different theme and the bar is designed in the shape of a ship. Though always busy, the wait is minimal and prices are reasonable.

Another well-known eaterie, the Cafe du Monde in the French Quarter, serves only beignets (small square doughnuts sprinkled with powdered sugar), milk, coffee, fresh-squeezed orange juice and cafe au lait. The open-air cafe, which faces a courtyard of ivy-covered walls, has seating under a roof decked with ceiling fans. Cafe du Monde, which opened in the 1860s, has a beautiful view of Jackson Square. French speaking waiters and waitresses bustle about in crisp white outfits and starched pillbox hats, adding to the atmosphere of another time and place.

For history buffs, there are cathedrals, and 19 museums to see, including the Confederate Museum which houses Civil War memorabilia and the Germaine Wells Mardi Gras Museum with exhibits of Madri Gras king and queen costumes from 1937-1968.

No matter what visitors choose to do in New Orleans, the laginnape, or the "little something extra" one may be in need of the most is a little extra time.

Louisiana in 'Reconstruction' era

CONVENT, La. (AP) — After the Civil War, the once-elegant plantation mansions along the Mississippi River hid their poverty behind moss-draped oaks, their spacious lawns overgrown with weeds.

The Reconstruction era saw house after house fall into ruin, victims of an economy destroyed by the war and the end of slavery.

Finally, the 1950s brought the oil boom and a stable national economy and people began looking for ways to invest and enjoy their money. Homes on the National Historical Register became tax shelters and those antebellum mansions were purchased by the dozens and restored.

Now, a new "reconstruction" era has come to Louisiana, one created by another war of sorts, an economic one that sent the price of oil to the bottom.

Historical landmarks throughout Louisiana have fallen on hard times, especially those operated by the state government, which faces an accumulated deficit of $2 billion.

One of them is owned by O. J. Daigle, who remembers trudging down the dusty river road as a youngster, with little money and no thought of a future, past a wonderful old house named Tezcuco.

Daigle eventually prospered because his mother sold newspapers to send him to college. He bought Tezcuco, which was built in 1855 by a Mexican War hero, and restored it to its original grandeur.

"When I was a boy I hated what had happened to Tezcuco," says Daigle, a retired major general who headed the Louisiana National Guard and made his fortune in real estate and the auto business. "The owners put a tin roof on the house because it was cheap and they'd keep painting it different colors — green, red, you name it."

ALAS, TEZCUCO is up for sale again, with a price tag of $1.9 million, along with another mansion Daigle owns in Natchez, Miss.

"It's the economy. Times are bad and it's a buyer's market," sighs Billy Wilcox, whose St. Francisville real estate firm is also trying to sell other antebellum homes.

History is taking it on the chin in other ways, too.

Across the state, the museum system has been cut from over $3 million in operational funds to $1 million and even the famous Cabildo in the French Quarter — seat of government in 1795 — is open only on a part-time basis.

"Not all of our buildings are open. The ones operating are open Wednesday through Sunday," said state Museum Director James F. Sefcik. "The Cabildo is open on that basis. We just don't have enough staff. But, these are tough times and we have to recognize that."

Roy Boucvalt, a Wyoming physician, has offered to donate Mintmere Plantation, dating from 1857, to an Iberia Parish cultural district if the district will assume a $237,000 mortgage on the land.

But the parish, like the state, is hurting for money and has not yet taken up Boucvalt on his offer.

And, across the Mississippi River from Daigle's Tezcuco, the awesome Oak Alley can be bought for just under $5 million.

"They were good tax shelters and they still are," says Zeb Mayhew, one of seven heirs joining a foundation to sell Oak Alley, which is perhaps the most picturesque home in the state.

THE HIGHLIGHT of the place is the lane leading to the front entrance, one created by 28 live oak trees thought to be up to 250 years old.

More than 70,000 tourists paid $5 each to visit Oak Alley last year and those fees plus bed-and-breakfast money pay for the day-to-day operations, Mayhew says.

However, he says, the mansion doesn't take in enough money to pay for major maintenance work.

The house and outbuildings are owned by a foundation set up to take donations to preserve Oak Alley. "But people aren't as interested in saving old houses as they are in helping the poor, the starving," Mayhew says. "I certainly understand that."

Nearly all antebellum homes are open to tourists for fees and many of the owners take in bed-and-breakfast guests.

But not all of the homes command the big prices.

In downtown St. Francisville sits Propinquity, built in 1809 and used in the Civil War as a sanctuary for Confederate soldiers, who stayed in the cellar as the Union Army rolled by. The asking price is $250,000.

His real estate firm also is trying to sell Rosebank, built in 1808 and used as an inn for travelers on the Natchez Trace. The two-story estate with stately columns can be purchased for $750,000, Wilcox says. The 10-acre estate also includes two smaller houses.

DAIGLE WANTS $250,000 for the antebellum house in Natchez. "It was owned by Governor Holmes," he says. "He was governor when Mississippi was a territory. I had it open for tourists but closed it years ago because I couldn't find a good manager."

Daigle and owners of the other properties aren't worried about ultimately selling the houses because there are many people around the nation like Frances Kermeen, who owns The Myrtles in St. Francisville.

"I'm from California and I took a trip down the Mississippi River about nine years ago on a steamboat," Kermeen says. "I heard this house was for sale and knew immediately it was for me."

Kermeen left what she called "a mellow" California lifestyle and settled in at The Myrtles, which was built in 1796 by General David Bradford, who fled his native Pennsylvania after leading the ill-fated 1794 Whiskey Rebellion.

"I live in this house. I love it here," Kermeen says. "Sometimes I won't leave the house for a week."

She operates a bed-and-breakfast operation, gives guided tours and has plans for a large hot tub on the grounds for guests.

"I'm fortunate," she says. "I have other sources of income. I can afford this lifestyle."

Tarot classes in French Quarter

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — The trappings look right: A little shop in the French Quarter where books on the occult line the wall and crystal balls catch the last strands of sunlight in the window.

Eight students have assembled for a six-week course on tarot card reading at the Bottom of the Cup Tea Room.

The tarot is the ancient deck of cards used to tell fortunes. Once considered the "devil's deck" its secrets were closely guarded, and those who used it were branded witches.

Adele Mullin, the proprietress of the tea room, says some people still fear the cards, but not many. And judging by her latest group of students, interest in the cards is no longer confined to witches, warlocks and gypsies.

Only one hopes to become a full time "reader," as those who tell fortunes through the tarot are called. The others say they're only interested in learning more.

"I'm just curious," said Inez LaMonte, a hairdresser who drives 70 miles for the once-a-week classes. "When someone has read my cards for me, they've always been very accurate."

Ms. Mullen, who looks more like the elementary school teacher she once was than the fulltime fortune teller she has become, says she began teaching the classes several years ago.

"I get doctors, business people, street cleaners. You'd be surprised at who's interested in learning," Ms. Mullen said.

Ms. Mullen says the more common deck of traditional playing cards is based on the tarot, which has 78 cards divided into four suits. The tarot can be dealt in a number of patterns that are then read to reveal a person's fortune.

Although Ms. Mullen claims that anyone can learn to read the cards, she admits not everyone can translate the message they recieve from them.

"Some people can't relax and learn to trust their own sense of what's there. They can give you a literal reading of the cards, but they can't go beyond that and tell you how it applies to you," she said.

"I want to learn to read so I can tell my friends' fortunes," Gail Voss said. "I think that will be a real kick."

Texaco chief big booster for Midland economy

Alan McDaniel brings super division to Midland

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business/Oil Editor

If a poll was taken to determine which individual has had the greatest positive impact on the Midland economy in the past 10 years, the name Alan McDaniel would probably be somewhere near the top of that poll — if not the top.

Since coming to Midland eight years ago from Tulsa, the Midland division vice president of Texaco has proven to be one of the city's best friends in terms of bringing capital, jobs and status to the city.

When falling oil prices caused Midland's economic fortunes to sag, McDaniel was busy shoring up those fortunes by bringing a small army of new employees from other divisions.

The new Midlanders were the product of a four-division reorganization — Midland, Houston, Denver and Tulsa — in which Midland was the surviving division, thanks to the outspoken McDaniel who has been a strong promoter of Midland almost from the day he got here in 1980.

Midland was just another division, responsible for only two-thirds of Texas and three-quarters of New Mexico, when the proud Aggie (the walls of his office are adorned with grandchildren in Aggie T-shirts.) took command of the Midland Division. Today it is a "super division;" the "New Texaco" organization scheme, responsibe for Texaco oil production in all or parts of 30 states from Vermont to Idaho. The division produces 230,000 barrels oil per day and 800 million cubic feet daily of gas, and has responsibility for over 2,700 Texaco employees, including 600 in Midland.

To consolidate an operation of that order in the best of times would have been a feat, but McDaniel did it when Texaco was embroiled in the biggest legal turmoil in the history of U.S. litigation, and finally had to cloak itself in bankruptcy to avoid legal annihilation.

"The Texaco-Pennzoil fiasco was an atrocity, and you can quote me," said McDaniel, who fumes when the topic is broached. He says it will be some time before the dust fully settles from the legal turmoil, but the company can now concentrate on finding, producing and selling petroleum products.

McDaniel is modest when asked about his role in building the Midland district, but friends say he "went to the wall for Midland," arguing long and hard for Midland.

"For a time, it could have all gone to Denver," said McDaniel. "We had to overcome the perception that Midland was in the middle of nowhere."

He reasoned that Midland was not in the middle of nowhere, but in the middle of the oil patch — in the heart of Texaco's production and the center of the company's future enhanced oil recovery activity.

"Midland is perfect not only from an operational standpoint, but from a living standpoint," said McDaniel. "It's clean, friendly, has little crime, a high civic spirit, great amenities and a great climate. I'm sure not all of our employees would agree with that, but 85 percent or more would."

He likens the spirit and quality of life in an oil town like Midland to life in an oil field camp. He was raised in a Humble (now Exxon) Pipeline

Gas curtailment stifles producers

Arsenic clouds Abo gas future

By ALLEN E. HOWLAND
Assistant Business/Oil Editor

Minute levels of arsenic in natural gas may turn into a monstrous financial hardship for producers in the huge Pecos Slope fields of southeastern New Mexico.

Earlier this month, Transwestern Pipeline Co., acting on a complaint from its primary West Coast customer, Southern California Gas Co., suspended taking gas from more than 600 wells north of Roswell.

More than 40 operators in the fields which produce from the Abo Formation are losing a total of about $117,000 per day, because of the gas curtailment pending resolution of the problem, according to Fred J. Schlicher, a Roswell-based independent operator and president of the Independent Petroleum Association of New Mexico.

Pipeline company scientists found arsenic concentrations of from 150 to 1,000 micrograms per cubic meter of gas, said Transwestern spokesman Randal Blauvelt. That translates to about 1.5 parts per million (ppm).

Although the Environmental Protection Agency does not have a minimum standard for hazardous arsenic levels in gas, a concentration of 5 ppm in water requires hazardous waste handling procedures be followed, Blauvelt said.

In addition to operators' economic losses, the state of New Mexico is losing about $27,000 per day in severance taxes and other income from the field, Schlicher said.

"The whole issue is still in its infancy as far as knowing what is going on and what will have to be done," explained Curtiss Mahanay, general manager of Great Western Drilling Co. in Midland.

Early evidence suggests that the naturally occurring, potentially toxic substance is coming from throughout the field, but every well in the field will have to be surveyed to determine the exact magnitude of the problem, Mahanay said.

Producers are working collectively and have formed an engineering committee to investigate possible remedies.

Schlicher said that producers are waiting for more complete and conclusive evidence that the Abo Formation is the culprit in the problem.

Although the vast majority of the Pecos Slope wells are connected to Transwestern's pipeline system, production from a few wells in the area connected to a McKay Oil Co. gathering system is sold to El Paso Natural Gas Co.

EPNG spokesman John McFall said Wednesday that based on its early tests of gas from the Abo area the company "sees no reason not to take the gas."

El Paso's purchases from the area currently average only 11 million cubic feet per day (MMcfgd), McFall said, out of a total system throughput of 3.2 billion cubic feet per day.

EPNG's initial tests registered .05 parts per billion, this week, but gas from the area is being retested, he said.

At the time of the curtailment, Transwestern was taking about 60 MMcfgd and last winter the field produced an average of 90 to 95 MMcfgd into the system, according to Schlicher.

El Paso's actions have Schlicher and his fellow Roswell-area producers wondering "Why is Transwestern taking such a hard-nosed position?"

Schlicher called the supposition that Transwestern was using the arsenic issue as a means of reducing its takes of gas in the field without building up new "take-or-pay" liabilities unlikely.

He said most of the take-or-pay disputes in the Pecos Slope have been settled and that the average price in the field — about $1.30 per 1,000 cubic feet — is near the spot market value.

Transwestern stands behind its position as "the prudent thing to do" and says it will continue to meet with producers and offer technical assistance to help clear up the issue.

However, Schlicher says that an "off-the-shelf" gas scrubber for arsenic does not exist and that designing, building and installing one could take from 6 months to a year.

OIL INDUSTRY

AUSTIN (AP) — A picture of Albert Einstein overlooks the scientific apparatus built by a chemical engineering graduate student who studies the release of micron-sized particles from surfaces through a light microscope.

The particles are glass and copper surfaces, and held there by van der Waals' forces. The forces are the same as those that cause dust to stick to semiconductors surfaces during the manufacture of silicon chips, necessitating the use of "clean rooms."

Habib Chamoun and about 129 other graduate students combined their knowledge of physics, math and chemistry to model real-life conditions underground to increase the efficiency of oil recovery from rocks.

"It is challenging to study chemical and physical processes, something that is abstract and yet reveals truths about the natural world," Chamoun said. "You do not know what is going on until you have nearly finished the research."

Research projects in the Department of Petroleum Engineering are financially supported by a number of different sources. For example, one consortium of about 20 oil companies contributes $400,000 worth of grants to research new methods of producing more oil out of the ground.

"It is a cheap way for oil companies to get good research," said Dave Sevougian, a petroleum engineering graduate student.

The Department of Energy also contributes funds to petroleum research.

Representatives from oil companies come to listen to their findings from research projects. Chamoun said that the meetings, which occur several times a year, give graduate students "practice time to rehearse your thoughts."

He said, "If you can talk to these people about your work, you can express yourself to the rest of the world. They act as negotiators of your ideas."

Collecting data from his experiments took Chamoun two years with the assistance of several chemical engineering undergraduates. The goal was to measure the flow rate of water at which attached particles release from surfaces under different conditions of water chemistry. The particle diameters ranged from 10 to 40 microns.

The number of particles that remained under the microscope after the fluid was pumped through was a measure of the amount of force required to move a particle from a surface.

Chamoun's primary supervisor, Robert Schechter, professor of chemical and petroleum engineering, is particularly interested in a particle release mechanism called peeling.

Chamoun researches the effects of very small particles peeling away from a surface, as opposed to sliding or lifting away. In his dissertation, he states that peeling is the way small particles are dislodged from a surface under hydrodynamic forces.

Schechter said peeling takes less energy than sliding, for example, so fluid pressure need not be as great.

The mechanism of particle release is significant because a knowledge of the amount of force required to release a particle will help researchers determine how to stop the movement of particles, Chamoun said.

JOHN PAUL PITTS

Pitts

Several months ago, on a trip from Midland to Mentone, I departed from my route briefly for a drive through the old Hendricks Field near Wink to stir up old memories.

On the edge of Wink, Texas, this was a prolific oil field that pumped a river of three dollar oil and put most of the groceries on the table for me and my five brothers while we were growing up.

It's still pumping a river; unfortunately most of it is water. But even now, in its neglected stripper state, I was able to recognize many familiar sites from my childhood.

The company camp where I used to visit school friends was now a line of concrete slabs.

I also found the now dry, but once oily ponds, where I lazily floated a raft made of oil drums (until some jerk jackrabbit hunter shot it full of holes) and pretended to be adrift on an ocean I had never seen.

I even found the old dump ground, now little more than a rust pile, where I used to dig for "good stuff."

Then I made a discovery, right under my feet, that brought forth a torrent of memories. I almost overlooked it, because on first sight it looked like ancient, decaying asphalt. But when I picked up a huge chunk of the crumbling road material and examined it closer, I knew right away that this was a genuine piece of West Texas history — an oil patch legacy that had somehow survived at least six decades.

I was standing on one of the original oil top roads.

I stood silently, listening to the sound of a hot wind rustling mesquite limbs, and for a moment imagined it was 1949 again and I was a 12-year-old kid pedaling down this very road on a hot summer Saturday.

I could almost hear the sticking, sucking sound of my bicycle tires as I strained against the tacky traction of the lease road. Later my mama would give me a cup of Duz soap flakes and I would wash my feet and bicycle. I always rode with my pants rolled up to the knees, because despite the radio jingle (D-u-z does everything?), not even Duz could get oil spots out of blue jeans.

Oil roads were not much of a problem in the winter, but under the hot summer sun of West Texas they would become "juicy" and quite a mess. But oh how well they served us.

They were everywhere — an extensive network of county roads, lease roads, city streets and, in the early days, even state highways — and life in West Texas was better because of them.

Constructed by applying alternate layers of the Permian Basin's most famous products, oil and sand (or caliche), these roads compacted over the years into surfaces nearly as hard as asphalt. This gave Permian Basin residents one of the best early day road systems in the state back in the thirties, forties and fifties.

Other areas may have had to battle mud holes, sand drifts, deep rutted dirt roads and washboard gravel roads, but not West Texas. We had oil-topped roads, even in town.

Growing up in Wink only the two highways passing through town were paved; the rest were oil.

While this kept down the dust and blowing sand, it made barefoot pedestrianism a traditional summer challenge.

In the mornings, oil roads were warm and comfortable to the bare foot. Along about noon, however, warm began to turn to hot. Still, one could manage by running very quickly across a street. But around mid-afternoon the sandy grills became too hot for even the swiftest unshod feet — sometimes even for shoed feet.

Sometimes if you wanted to get across a hot oil road you would have to wait until someone came along to give you a piggyback ride. One kid, well-known for his enterprise, capitalized on the situation by becoming a human ferry. He always wore shoes and always demanded a nickel for a piggy back ride.

One of my little brothers, who never had a nickel to his name, dragged around two pieces of cardboard. He would stand on one, put the other one in front of him, step on it, turn and get the other piece and repeat the process until he had leap-frogged his way across the hot road.

Oil roads were so deeply woven into the social fabric of our humble oil field existence that they even became the foundation for many of the social welfare programs in Wink.

The town winos who could not stay sober long enough to hold down a regular job roughnecking or roustabouting drove the city oil truck, managing to keep off the juice just long enough to oil down a few roads each week.

Throughout the winter, retired oil field hands too old to wrestle iron supplemented their Social Security checks by patching roads with oil soaked sand found in abundance around tank farms.

Then in the summer the kids took over and every kid in town from 12 to 17 years of age was permitted to work two weeks for a dollar an hour patching oil roads — just long enough to earn $80 for school clothes. Some places in the roads were patched so often they became soft and spongelike.

I remember some claimed all the road patching was just a way of buying votes, and they were right. For the county commissioner that let the school kids and old folks and winos work on the oil roads finally died in office.

A lot could be said about oil roads but perhaps what they say about that time in history is more important. Yesterday's oil roads, like the long outlawed flare, serve as a painful reminder that there was a time when we had so much oil we could pour it on the roads, and worse, that it was so cheap we could afford to.

LAB

For example, in oil reservoirs, if fine clay particles are restrained from movement, they will not block pores in rocks, and will therefore allow oil to travel more easily through the medium.

Mukul Sharma, professor of petroleum engineering, who also advises Chamoun with his experiments, said that approximately 80 percent of the oil remains in the rocks after an oil well is produced. To increase oil recovery, a fluid that will not mix with oil, such as water or polymer, can pressure the oil out of the pores. However, the problem of particles sticking together decreases the amount of oil that can be pressured out of the pores.

GAS

Given the uncertain economic future of the field, Schlicher said he is "fortunate" to have relatively minor non-operating working interests in the field.

"For the big producers in the field, the economic impact is incredibly severe," he said.

"The Pecos Slope is virtually a pure independents' play and these producers' budgets are already cut to the bone."

Larger producers in the field, including Artesia, N.M.-based Yates Petroleum Co., and McClelland Oil Corp. and Stevens Operating Co. of Roswell declined to comment on the situation.

camp outside Benavides, Texas and knows the quality of such life.

"Living in a oil field camp was a great life, and so is life in Midland," says McDaniel. He vows he and his wife JoAn who also grew up in the oil patch of Duval County, will retire in Midland or come back to retire. The McDaniels have four grown children, a son attending college in South Texas and three daughters who all "married well" — to Aggies.

He still has a ranch outside Benavides, where he goes on occasion to hunt birds, but he says he is sold on Midland as a place to live.

"The people make this town what it is," he said.

McDaniel says Texaco will be one of the most active operators in the Permian Basin in the future:"We have identified over 20 potential enhanced oil recovery projects EOR in the division that we intend to address within the next ten years; most are in the Permian Basin.

"We also have plans for extensive infill drilling programs and an acquisition and sales effort."

Sold on the "New Texaco" policies of Texaco Chairman Alfred DeCrane; President James Kinnear and Jim Dunlap, president of Texaco USA, McDaniel promises it will really will be a new Texaco.

" We used to keep pretty much to ourselves in the industry, and never involved ourselves much in community affairs. We've changed that," said McDaniel. He said the new Texaco would be more involved in community affairs and more cooperative in industry affairs.

He also said the oil company, founded as the Texas Company in 1903 in Beaumont, was changing its managment style by putting more decision-making power in the field, rather than concentrating it in the hands of a few managers. "This is evidenced by the delegation of authority to the divisions," he noted.

"In the months to come, Texaco will also take a closer look at all of its operations and production, and will become involved in trading, buying and selling to consolidate production," he said.

"Texaco is not out to be the biggest oil company — just the best," he said.

Kent, Avis sign lube deal

From Staff Reports

Kent Lubrication Centers of Midland has entered into a franchise development agreement with Avis Service Inc. of Garden City, N.Y.

The agreement calls for Kent to convert its existing 10 units in Midland, Odessa, Big Spring and San Angelo to Avis Lube Fast Oil Change Centers, a conversion that should occur within the next 60 days.

In addition, Kent has agreed to develop additional Avis Lubes in other parts of Texas and New Mexico. Kent's future development plans call for 20 new Avis Lubes.

The announcement was made by Bill Kent, managing partner of Kent Lubrication Centers, and Vincent A. Russo, vice president and general manager of Avis Service Inc.

"We anticipate having roughly four new units built or under construction within the next 12 to 16 months, with the entire development schedule being completed in roughly five years," Kent stated.

Avis Service, a subsidiary of Avis Inc., is franchising the Avis Lube Fast centers across the country, and has sold the rights to develop approximately 300 franchises throughout the nation. Plans are to have 100 open by this winter.

In addition to Kent Lubrication Centers, the company owns Kent Oil Inc., a West Texas convenience store and gasoline wholesale and retail operation.

As part of the agreement, Kent plans to develop some joint facilities that will include both the Avis Lube Fast Oil Change Center and a Kent Kwik convenience store on the same property.

Permian Basin tally plunges 16

From Staff Reports

Sixteen was the magic number for rig counts: The U.S. count rose 16 and the Permian Basin tally plunged the same amount.

According to Baker Hughes of Houston, the U.S. count broke a two-week decline and rose 16 to total 905. The Basin count fell to 113 from 129, and for the first time this year is below a year ago levels. For the same week in 1987, the Permian Basin count was 120.

Lea County, N.M. continues to be the most active in the area, with 14 rigs. Andrews County is second with 12, followed by Howard County with nine. Midland County gained two rigs to stand at five this week.

Rig utilization — the percentage of available rigs being used — mirrored Baker Hughes count, with the U.S. percentage rising to 22.4 percent and the Basin rate dropping to 23.9 percent.

Among major oil producing states, Texas showed the most activity in the latest count, increasing by 14 rigs. Colorado was up by three, Wyoming two and Kansas and Oklahoma one each. Louisiana, meanwhile, was down five, Michigan dropped three, New Mexico two and California one. North Dakota, Pennsylvania and Ohio reported no change.

INTERNATIONAL EXPLORATION

Texaco, Chevron test Indonesian confirmer

WHITE PLAINS, N.Y. (SWN) — Texaco Inc. and Chevron Corp. announced that their jointly owned affiliate, PT Caltex Pacific Indonesia (CPI), has confirmed its second discovery of oil this year in Central Sumatra.

Located in the Riau Province, the exploratory well known as Mangga No. 1 is approximately 30 miles northwest of the Duri Field and 80 miles west of the PAK No. 1 discovery announced in April.

The well, drilled to a total depth of 7,800 feet, flowed 32-degree API gravity crude oil at a gross combined rate of 1,498 bopd from three tested zones within the Oligocene Pematang formation at depths between 4,270 and 4,372 feet.

Amoco encouraged by Brunel area find

LONDON — Amoco (U.K.) Exploration Co. has reported discovering oil in Block 15/22 in the Brunel area of the United Kingdom's sector of the North Sea, about 95 miles northeast of St. Fergus, Scotland.

The 15/22-6 well flowed 6,732 barrels of 40 degree crude daily from the Upper Jurrassic Piper Sandstone through a 30/64 inch choke.

Phillips evaluating North Sea discovery

WOKING, Surrey — Phillips Petroleum Co. United Kingdom Ltd., as operator for a five-company group, has made a new oil discovery in Block 16/29a, located approximately six miles southwest of the Maureen oilfield in the central U.K. sector of the North Sea.

The 16/29a-8 exploratory well, named Moira, flowed up to 5,100 bopd of 42 gravity oil through a 5/8-inch choke. The well has been temporarily abandoned pending evaluation of its possible completion as a future producer linked to the Maureen field platform via subsea flowline. Current information indicates this discovery would warrant a single-well sub-sea completion tied to the Maureen field.

Rig activity shows two-month decline

From Staff Reports

According to the May/June issue of Well Servicing Magazine, rig activity has fallen for two consecutive months in both the U.S. and Canada.

For both areas, the total rigs working fell from 3,755 in February to 3,617 in March, and the number dropped 263 to total 3,354 in April. In April, the percentage of rigs working was 49 percent, down from 52 percent in March.

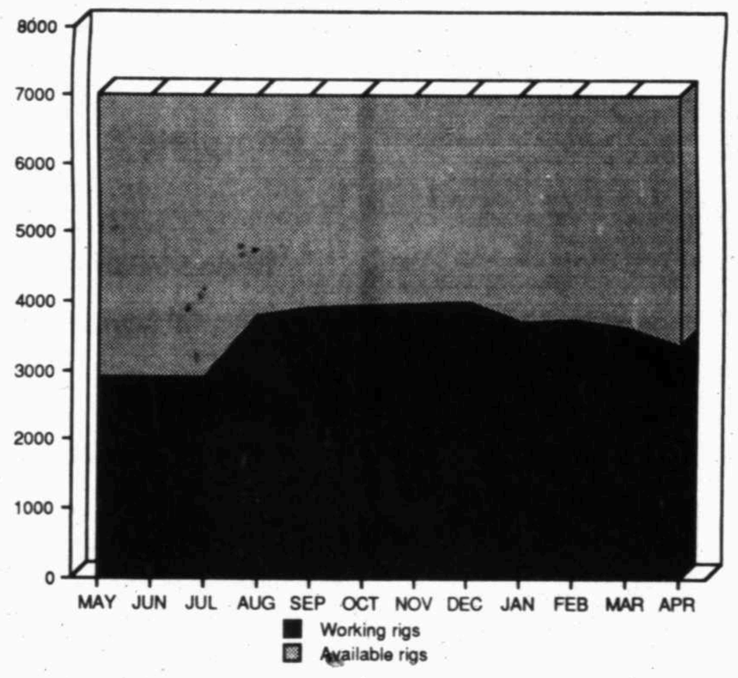
In the U.S., there were a total of 3,230 rigs working in April, a drop of 186 from the March total of 3,416. Of available rigs, 52 percent were at work in April, down from 55 percent in March.

Of the seven U.S. regions identified by Well Servicing, only South Louisiana, the Rocky Mountains and Texas Gulf Coast showed increases from March to April. The Mid-Continent region had a drop of 77 from March to April, totaling 709. The Eastern region, which had falled 100 rigs from February to March, fell an additional 50, standing at 550 in April.

West Texas showed 759 rigs working during April, down 40 from March's total of 799, which was down from the 815 recorded in February. For April, 56 percent of available West Texas rigs were being utilized.

In Canada, the number of rigs working fell from 201 in March to 124 in April, a drop of 77. During April, 19 percent of available rigs were working.

Rig activity



According to the magazine, weather was cited as the reason for delays in new projects in the Western area and Mid-Continent regions. Also, the completion of some projects in the western region also was reflected in the report. Canada's decline came from the Spring Road Bans.

Dow, Exxon announce joint venture

MIDLAND, Mich. (AP) — Dow U.S.A. and Exxon Chemical Co. have formed a joint venture to manufacture material for adhesives and sealants.

The group will build a $20 million plant in Plaquemine, La., where Dow has a manufacturing facility.

The companies will share equally in the capital investment and expenses of building the plant and in profits from marketing the styrenic thermoplastic elastomers it will produce, said L. Dennis McKeever, Dow vice president for polyolefins and elastomers.

McKeever said some current Dow employees at Plaquemine will be involved in operating the plant, but it has not been determined how many new jobs will be created.

Applications for the materials include pressure-sensitive adhesive tapes and hot-melt adhesives, said McKeever, who made the announcement jointly with Jean Pierre L'Hermitte, Exxon Chemical vice president for adhesion products.

Potential future uses include the manufacture of roofing and road construction materials, elastomeric rubber for footwear and other specialty applications, McKeever said.

The plant, scheduled to begin production in 1990, would make 70 million pounds a year of the styrenic TPEs, about 10 percent of worldwide production.

Fast-growing sandwich chain offers lessons in success

By LARRY ROSENTHAL

MILFORD, Conn. (AP) — Entrepreneurs who believe the American Dream can be found in a foot-long submarine sandwich travel here each month to learn how to make mounds of money stuffing pounds of food into fresh-baked buns.

Their teacher and inspiration is Fred DeLuca, the man who would be, and is, the King of Subs.

Twenty-three years after DeLuca opened his first sub shop in nearby Bridgeport to raise money for college, his fast-food chain has grown to more than 2,200 stores, and new shops are opening at a rate of 20 to 30 a week.

His company, Subway Sandwiches & Salads, is one of the fastest growing fast-food chains in the country and was recently named America's top franchise by the magazine "Entrepreneur," which compiles a Franchise 500.

Subway subs are being gobbled up at quite a clip. The chain says it is selling 1.5 million feet of sandwiches a week to customers who like to watch their meals take shape before their eyes and to their specifications.

Last year, gross sales totaled $360 million — an 89 percent increase over the year before, when there were only about half as many franchises.

Subway has its origins in Pete's Super Submarine Sandwiches, a business DeLuca opened in 1965 at age 17 with the help of a family friend, Peter Buck. As the story is told, Buck suggested the idea to DeLuca as a way for him to make money for college, gave him $1,000 in starting capital and agreed to be his partner.

Aided by the decision in 1975 to start franchising, the company was able to meet its 10-year goal of 32 stores and begin expanding in earnest. Subway opened its first store in Alaska this spring and will soon have franchises in every state except Wyoming and South Dakota.

Subway shops can also be found in Canada, the Bahamas and Bahrain, and starting sometime this month folks Down Under will be able to try out such specialties as the Subway Club, a combination of roast beef, turkey and ham, when several stores open around Perth in western Australia.

The recent explosion in growth is the result largely of franchisees investing in additional stores, DeLuca said.

New franchisees learn about bookkeeping, hiring, management, cost-control and the finer points of making subs during two-week courses that begin every other Monday at the company's headquarters here, now spread out over four locations but soon to be consolidated in a new building.

The students spend half their time at stores where the owners have agreed to help take part in training.

The students of submarine-making come "from all walks of life and from all over the world," said Alexander Dembski, the director of training.

Many recent immigrants and other people who are short on cash and long on ambition are attracted to the relatively low start-up costs. A typical first store can be opened for about $65,000, or as much as $20,000 less if equipment is leased, DeLuca said. The franchise fee itself is only $7,500.

The students are typically a motley group. A salesman, draftsman, fast-food restaurant employee, computer consultant, Postal Service worker, and lumber broker were among the trainees enrolled in a recent class.

DeLuca addresses each class at least three times, drumming into the trainees' heads the importance of such simple notions as increasing sales while decreasing costs. His dress and his manner are casual.

"Why am I here? Because they are really joining a new society," said DeLuca, as several students waited patiently to be photographed with their leader after class. "It's important people get an orientation as to what the company, and its president, are like."

DeLuca knows why the trainees have come to his school — and it is not because they have always dreamed of making subs (or hoagies, heroes, torpedos, grinders or poor boys, as the sandwiches are variously called in different parts of the country.)

"Who, ever since they were kids, wanted to grow up and make sandwiches?" he asks his class, prompting a wave of chuckles.

Texan has seen two stock crashes

In 1929, Dusek was an active participant in the market, working in the Galveston office of the investment firm that was the forerunner of Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith.

By Black Monday 1987 he was retired, though he says he still follows the market closely. "It's a way to stay active and keep your mind alert," he says.

Despite the 58-year gap between the 1929 and the 1987 crashes, Dusek says he believes there were similarities in the situations.

"In the late 1920s, we had price manipulation through 'pools' formed by professionals. Suppose you and I were in a pool. I would sell you a block of stock in a price range of 20s: then you would sell it back to me at a higher price and so on and on until we ran the price into the 40s.

"The media prints a story about the stock and then the public — or should I say the suckers? — comes in and starts buying the stock. We unload our stock and then 'bear raid' (sell short) the stock and send it way down into the 20s," Dusek said.

But he added that later, Congress "had the guts" to pass the Securities Act of 1933, which outlawed that practice and also a law requiring that a short sale be made while the stock was on an uptick, increasing in value.

But Dusek says he believes today's program trading using computers also manipulates prices. "It's much worse that the pools of the 1920s and has no reason to exist, as this does not create capital so corporations can sell new stock for expansion and create jobs.

"The public is scared — and I don't blame them — and is not willing to invest in stock as long as program trading is permitted. So a few brokers announced they would quit program trading for their own accounts. What a big deal! Now the arbitragers and professionals can form pools and keep on doing program trading.

"I wonder if Congress has the guts today to do something about program trading. The only way to eliminate it is do away with trading on stock indexes, then raise the margin to 50 percent of the value of the basket of stocks the index represents," Dusek said.

But Dusek says another economic crash like 1929 is unlikely today because of federal programs to protect bank and savings and loan deposits and pensions, and the existence of unemployment insurance and individual retirement plans.

He also notes that brokerage houses today allow only a 50 percent margin on general stocks, compared with margins of as little as 10 or 15 percent before the Crash of '29 that made for greater instability.

But Dusek says the 1929 crash did not itself cause the Great Depression.

He recalls that the market plunged for three successive days, causing the ticker tape to run almost 5½ hours behind, but had recovered about 70 percent of its original value when banks began closing a year later.

"When that happened, people couldn't get their money and had to start selling their stocks just to have money to live on. As more and more stocks were sold, the market began to go lower and lower. I think the lowest average closing was 43 points during the Depression. I do know that nobody was buying. During 1930, '31 and '32, the average number of shares traded during the day would be about 280,000," Dusek said.

Dusek began selling stocks in the late 1920s. He says he never wanted to do anything but work for a brokerage house.

He first went to work for a cotton brokerage firm, marking quotations on a chalkboard. Later, he went to business school and learned telegraphy so he could take quotations as they came over the wire.

He was so determined to make good in the brokerage business that he asked an Associated Press telegrapher to coach him so he could gain more speed. For six months, seven days a week, he went to the old Galveston Press at night and practiced with the AP telegrapher until he became top-notch.

When he retired in 1967, he was a vice president of Merrill, Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith and one of its voting stockholders before the firm went public. He also was manager of Merrill Lynch's Oklahoma City office for 20 years.

Advice to job hunters: Be 'hungry fighters'

By VIVIENNE HEINES
Hearst News Service

Roll with the punches. Break away from the pack. Hang in there. Prepare to win. These are just a few of the phrases that pepper Mackay's conversation. And there's his personal favorite: Be a hungry fighter.

"My father was my mentor, and he was a hungry fighter," says Mackay "That's the quality I look for when I hire a sales person. After you know they have ethics and morals, you want someone who will be able to take rejection, who won't get discouraged, who will take the knocks and keep on coming back for more."

Mackay, 55, is a corporate CEO, community leader, teacher, father of three and author of the business advice book "Swim with the Sharks Without Being Eaten Alive" (William Morrow and Co. Inc., $15.95). During the past 25 years, he has counseled more than 500 young people about career goals and life aspirations. On a recent promotional tour he spoke about his "avocation" for mentoring others.

Mackay, a tall slender man with graying hair, is full of tips for young, would-be corporate giants. For example, he touts extensive travel as a way of broadening one's horizons and making global contacts. He would like to see all college graduates –especially those in master of business administration programs –take courses in public speaking.

"I think it's just pathetic that people can graduate from college and not be able to get up on their feet and express themselves," he said.

But most important, Mackay tells college graduates to get their feet wet in the work world. Volunteer work provides valuable experience and can help hone skills in working with people, handling a budget, supervising a project, lobbying legislators or raising money. As Mackay likes to point out, commencement means to begin, and graduation from college should mark the start of real education.

"You learn in your 20s, and you earn in your 30s," he said.

Be creative in your experience-gathering, Mackay says. If you separate yourself from the pack with jobs that are unusual, you'll have a better chance at catching a job interviewer's attention. One crucial step that many job applicants ignore is research, a process that Mackay likes to describe as "digging your well before you're thirsty." He tells job-seekers to go to the library for articles about the company, to check Dun and Bradstreet for information, to call customers and suppliers for feedback and to even contact a stockbroker for information if it's a publicly owned company. The local chamber of commerce will give you information about a privately held company, he says.

Survey finds tried and true make best company names

NEW YORK (AP) — In the fast-paced, high-tech world of the 1990s, companies thinking about name changes may be better off sticking with something old and familiar.

That's one bit of advice from Landor Associates, a San Francisco-based consulting firm that recently completed a survey of consumer perceptions of the names of some of the nation's biggest corporations.

Sara Lee ranked in the top 15 percent in the latest survey. That was a marked improvement from the days when it was known as Consolidated Foods and ranked in the bottom 10 percent of the Landor sample.

"In the '90s, major corporations will rediscover the raw image power of their established names and may find it much more efficient to modify or add meaning to them rather than start from scratch," said John Diefenbach, president of the image management and strategic design consulting firm.

The survey said consumers thought none too highly of some of the high-tech names — such as USX, Primerica and Unisys.

The old names of those corporations — U.S. Steel, American Can and the premerger Burroughs and Sperry, respectively — each had placed higher in previous surveys.

The recently abandoned name Allegis, as another example, ranked in the bottom 5 percent of the latest Landor survey. But the name of Allegis' biggest subsidiary, United Airlines, placed in the top 15 percent.

Shareholders recently dumped the Allegis name and returned to UAL Corp., as the parent company previously was known.

"The message is very simple," Diefenbach said. "Meaningless names and symbols can confuse and alienate the consumer."

So how can companies avoid similar pitfalls?

Diefenbach says when new names are considered, companies need to remember the long-standing equity built up in long-standing brand images.

When new names are required, he recommends they provide "genuine, favorable and recognizable meaning to the consumer."

States may foot majors' legal bills

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Four states that accused the oil industry of conspiring to create the gasoline shortage of the mid-1970s may have to pay eight oil companies $1.3 million in court costs stemming from an adverse court ruling, attorneys said.

The states and the companies agreed to the $1.3 million amount in a settlement approved here by U.S. District Judge William P. Gray, who dismissed the states' price-fixing suit in November 1986.

However, the states of California, Arizona, Oregon and Washington have appealed the decision to the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeal.

Gray's order approving the payment of court costs doesn't take effect unless the companies prevail on appeal, said Mary Elizabeth Alden, the assistant California attorney general handling the case.

"Until the 9th Circuit decides the appeal, nobody's paying anybody anything," Ms. Alden said.

The $1.3 million award, announced this week by defendant Mobil Corp. of New York, would be split among Mobil, Atlantic Richfield Co., Chevron Corp., Gulf Oil Corp., now a part of Chevron, Exxon Corp., Shell Oil Co., Texaco Inc. and Unocal Corp.

The states, in suits filed separately between 1973 and 1977, accused all 16 major U.S. oil companies of conspiring to fix prices by creating the oil crisis of the mid-1970s. The states sought unspecified damages that attorneys believed would have totaled billions of dollars.

NHTSA releases auto crash test results

WASHINGTON (AP) — Crash tests on seven 1988 subcompact automobiles show drivers of the Dodge Colt have the highest likelihood of head injury, the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration says.

The Colt 4-door station wagon produced a head-injury rating of 1,354 on the driver side, the agency said Monday in releasing test results for 10 vehicles.

The previous high among subcompacts tested this year was the Nissan Pulsar NX 2-door hatchback, which produced a head-injury rating of 1,134 for drivers.

NHTSA said the tests do not result in pass or fail scores, but "provide comparative data for consumers to use in their vehicle purchasing decisions when comparing vehicles of similar size and weight."

NHTSA said new tests for two other subcompacts found the Honda Civic DX 2-door hatchback produced a head-injury criterion of 787, and the Daihatsu Charade 2-door hatchback, 768.

Other new crash tests and the resulting driver head-injury criteria were:

Compact cars: Acura Legend LS 4-door, 435; and Nissan Sentra 4-door station wagon, 1,047.

Large- and mid-size cars: Oldsmobile Delta 88 4-door, 710; and Volvo 740 GLE 4-door, 519.

The force of the 35 mph test crash equals a head-on collision between two vehicles traveling at 35 mph, or a collision between a parked vehicle and a vehicle moving at 70 mph.

- Subcompact cars: Toyota Corolla FX 2-door hatchback, 593; Toyota Tercel 2-door hatchback, 1,005; and Volkswagen Fox 2-door, 1,114.
- Compact cars: Nissan Maxima SE 4-door, 907; Peugeot 505 GLS 4-door, 701; and Pontiac Le Mans 2-door aerocoupe, 819.
- Large- and mid-size cars: Ford Taurus 4-door, 707; and Mercury Sable 4-door, 712.
- Trucks, vans and multipurpose vehicles: Chevrolet Astro van, 1,603; Chevrolet C-1500 pickup, 892; Chevrolet G-20 van, 3,665; Ford F-150 pickup, 1,074; Nissan Van XE, 949; and Volkswagen Vanagon van, 1,320.

"Strength, stability, service and trust . . . what people want in a bank."
Herb Cartwright, Senior Vice President and Trust Officer, Texas Commerce Bank – Midland

Does it make a difference which bank manages your personal or corporate trust account? You bet!

Many Midland banks are feeling the pinch of the current statewide economic decline. Texas Commerce, on the other hand, has been moving from strength to strength.

People today expect a lot from a bank. They don't want to take chances, especially with trust assets. They want the confidence of knowing their bank is ready to provide the kind of personal service and investments designed to fit their individual needs. They want bankers who understand their needs, who can respond quickly to requests.

It all comes down to four key words. Strength, stability, service and trust. That's what people want. And that's what they get when they move to Texas Commerce. The strength and stability of one of the oldest banking organizations in Texas. The service of a team of bankers who really care. And Trust Professionals dedicated to the conservation of wealth and service tailored to their clients' needs.

I think Texas Commerce represents something important for Midland people. It's a reflection of the city's attitude. One that says no matter how tough times get, Midland will succeed. It's all about hard work and a commitment to the community and its future. That attitude is paying off because Texans are moving to Texas Commerce every day.

If you're looking for more in a bank or trust relationship, please call me at Texas Commerce today. Phone 687-0691.

"In this world inflation has got me down.
And if I had a nickel, I would leave this town.
I feel so bad inflation has got me this way,

— "Inflation," 1981, John T. Hunter

By GEORGIA TODD TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

John T. Hunter has no regrets about his career choice as he looks back over 35 years of singing and playing a guitar.

"Picking the guitar is a lot easier than picking 400 pounds of cotton, and that's what I used to do," Hunter says.

"It hasn't always been good — ups and downs in every walk of life. Music's no different, good and bad days, but mostly through it all it's been rewarding."

In 1953, when Hunter was 23 years old, the course of his life changed in less than 48 hours. The eldest of 10 children, Hunter, who describes himself as "a mother's boy," followed his parents to Texas. His dad, a saw mill worker, came to the Lone Star State to work for the mill, which was moved from Arkansas to Beaumont.

"I started working at a box factory with some guys that weren't really musicians, but they knew more about music than I did," says Hunter, an Odessa resident since October 1987.

"I didn't really know anything about music; in Arkansas the only music was Ernest Tubbs, Hank Williams or Hank Snow or somebody like that."

The guys at the box factory, one of whom played the guitar, wanted to hear B.B. King perform. Although Hunter had little interest in music, his co-workers hassled him into attending a B.B. King dance.

"I didn't know nothing about B.B. King," Hunter says. "I hadn't ever been to a dance in my life. At that time, dances weren't as high priced as they are now. I paid a dollar and a half. When we got to this place, this Club Raven, I see all these people standing in line, and it just kind of roused my ego. Who is this guy B.B. King people are lined out here to see?"

"That was more people than I'd ever seen in my life in one place. So after watching B.B. King play the guitar all night, I just decided if he could play guitar like that, I ought to be able to do something with it.

"Thursday I went downtown and bought me a guitar, and I guess it was about 1 o'clock at night and the police came and they reminded me that I was disturbing the peace. I just turned it down a little, and I just kept on with my program. This was Thursday night, and Friday night I played my first gig. My pay was $2.50."

He laughs as he recalls the evening. He and his group played the two songs they knew over and over again.

"That was the starting of my music life, and I've been playing ever since," Hunter says. After touring and playing clubs in Texas, New Mexico and Mexico, Hunter has settled in Odessa, hometown for his wife, the former Darline Rigsby.

"We just decided that enough time had went by with me running up and down the road so here I am," Hunter says. The two have been married 24 years.

Mrs. Hunter works for Phillips Petroleum Co., and this spring Hunter opened his own place with Murray Neece, the manager of the combo division at Caldwell Music.

The club, aptly named Partners, is located at 620 N. Granview Ave. Performing at the club Wednesday through Saturday are Long John Hunter and the Walking Catfish, which includes Neece, vocals and bass; Hunter, vocals and guitar; Joe Foster, vocals and guitar; and Donny Butler, vocals and drums. The group has also played in Midland at The Bar, Joey's II and Garfields.

but also in Juarez, Mexico, where he played at The Lobby for a total of 10 years. His first tour there lasted for three years and began in August 1957.

"When I came from Houston to El Paso, they just kept telling me about I should go to Juarez. A friend of mine from Houston was playing in Juarez at the time at a club called The Lobby. I went in and I sat in with these guys and played a couple of songs, and I was real accepted in that club. The boss of that club came over and saw me and said he had to have me playing for him."

Hunter, who lived in El Paso at the time, worked long hours, from 8 p.m. until 6 or 7 a.m.

"But I had a pretty good time because there were a lot of people all night, every night," he says.

He remembers the scene well.

"Just a lot of wild people; they partied all night long, and it was really amazing because we just had wall to wall people seven nights a week. I just couldn't believe that many people wanted to dance all night long, and we had some people who did just that — danced every song all night long."

The pay was good and, at that time Hunter says, "a job was a job to me. I wasn't looking farther than The Lobby; to me that was home."

In 1960, Hunter went on a two-year tour with Big Jay McNeely, who had recorded a song, "There is Something on Your Mind," which was doing good on the charts.

"That's how I got to meet a lot of musicians. We did a lot of shows on the same card with people like Aretha Franklin, Ike and Tina Turner and I did two shows with B.B. King."

Hunter recalls in the early 1960s when B.B. King played Midland, and Hunter was playing at an after-hours club here.

"After he finished his job where he was playing, he came over and he played my guitar from 2:30 till 5 o'clock in the morning. We just had a ball.

"B.B., he's kind of a down to earth guy. After playing all that time, we sat and talked for another hour and a half at least. He came up the hard way, sort of the way I did off the farm. Back in the old days that was the life — to be a farmer."

Although Hunter worked other spots, his primary club was The Lobby from 1962 until 1970. When The Lobby closed, Hunter stayed in El Paso, but he didn't play Juarez anymore.

"The owner of the club got real sick. The doctor said he just couldn't be in that noise and all the hoopla that goes with that business. He just had to shut it down."

Six months after working at an El Paso club called the King's X, Hunter met Charley Pride.

Please see HUNTER, Page 2H

HUNTER

"Charley Pride was just gaining his popularity, and he came into the King's X where I was playing, and I never will forget the song that he sang with my group, 'Jambalaya.'"

Hunter spent five years at the King's X. During that time, he was to met and talk with Charlie Daniels and he missed an opportunity that Daniels offered him.

"He begged me to to go back to Nashville with him, so many things he could do with and for me, and I just don't know, I can't quite explain why I didn't go with him. One mistake in my life I made. I probably could have gained a lot of popularity, if I'd left El Paso to go to Nashville. I was working at the time and I said, 'A bird in the hand is better than a thousand in the bush.' Looking back, I really think that could have been one of my big chances right there."

When Hunter cut his album, "Smooth Magic," he began using original material in his shows. Although he has a reputation for playing the blues, his music encompasses more than one musical style. For example, July 2, 1982, Hunter and His Untouchables did a show at El Paso County Coliseum with Chuck Berry.

"I play rock 'n' roll, a little country, a little hard rock here and there, so I'm a 'whatever' kind of a guy."

When asked what he would tell a 23-year-old prospective musician in 1988, Hunter, who has always had a job since he started playing, says, "I would tell him that if you make it, it's one enjoyable kind of a life. You don't have to be high on drugs or alcohol or anything to enjoy it because I've never drank or smoked or been high in my life so I know from experience you don't have to drink or be high to be a musician."

"He (Charlie Pride) begged me to to go back to Nashville with him, so many things he could do with and for me..."
— John T. Hunter

Through the years, those who have heard him play and watched his act have wondered why he's not in a bigger marketplace.

"I would have liked to have had a Number One hit for however many years I could have. It hasn't happened; I haven't given up yet.

"I've had a lot of people say to me, if I could play guitar like you where they'd be. It's just not that easy. We don't all get the breaks that some others do, but I own my place in the music world, and if it never gets to be the Number One thing, I won't feel too bad about it. I've done my best, and I feel all right about doing my best."

Hyatt polls travelers about their vacation fantasies

Temple

Mail. I receive local, regional, state, national and international releases containing information from and on museums, libraries, tours and travel spots, theme parks, events in countless towns in too many states to name, music — rock, jazz, country, classical, rhythm'n'blues and pop, singers, songwriters, authors and artists.

Imagine other writers all over the country receiving the same amount of mail. Not only does that add up to lots of money for the sender, it makes for very busy writers, those who at least scan all the information they receive. And I do.

I can think of two other industries which may create as much paper — the national government and the oil business (due of course to regulations by the national government). I guarantee that the mail I receive is vastly more interesting, educational and informative.

Recently, a "Fantasy Vacation" survey conducted by Hyatt Hotels and Resorts captured my attention. Those polled were guests at Hyatt Hotels across the country.

The survey shows that 49 percent of those polled chose to spend time with "a loved one" over such partners as Tom Selleck and William Hurt, who captured 15 percent each among the women, and Christie Brinkley, 10 percent, Kelly LeBrock, 5 percent, and Meryl Street, 4 percent, for the men.

Does that mean 49 percent of those polled were living in reality and not fantasy and don't feel they are in a relationship with a person they wish was someone else?

How refreshing if it means both of the above. At times I am concerned that our society has reality confused with the fantasy world seen on TV and in the movies.

I remember an article in People magazine in which the writer never made clear whether the job situation problems he was writing about were being faced by the characters in a TV program or by the real life people who played those roles.

Also disconcerting was an experience I had this spring.

I was watching one of those countless television cops and robbers shows along with some friends. The hour-long segment contained the amount of violence we now take for granted on television. Then the 10 p.m. news came on and showed a guy who had been shot lying by his car. He was dead.

I asked the young people with me if they realized the difference between fact and fantasy. Did they realize that this man was not going to get up, wipe the dust off his clothes and take a break when the scene was over?

They became somewhat hostile and didn't really answer my question. Later, I was told that the idea I hit them with had never occurred to them, and when I said what I did, they were shocked and embarrassed.

The questions "Do I know this is fantasy?" "Do I know/understand/feel the difference between this and the news?" are revealing.

Of course, Hyatt management is not concerned with such grisly affairs. Quite the contrary. Their desire in conducting the survey was to find out just exactly what people expect from a vacation.

The company plans to open nearly $3 billion in new resorts around the world in the next five years and will, in September, open the most expensive resort built to date — $360 million — on the big island of Hawaii, Kelly says. The 62-acre Hyatt Regency Waikoloa will have a boat and monorail transportation system, a river pool, a lagoon where guests can swim with dolphins and an activity program that includes being a cowboy for a day.

Adventure ranked high as a reason people take vacations, the survey says. Nearly half, or 47 percent, chose the chance to play Robinson Crusoe on a deserted island for a day as the ultimate vacation fantasy, while 25 percent thought hot air ballooning, 7 percent chose big game hunting and 7 percent a trip to an observatory to see distant stars up close as part of a dream vacation.

Of the group polled, 19 percent felt the most important element of a pleasure trip was luxury accommodations and 16 percent were looking for the change to relax and do nothing.

Exotic pools and water features were selected as the ideal sports amenities by 41 percent, while 16 percent are looking for great golf courses, 15 percent line up on the tennis courts and 1 percent are looking for a good bar.

What interferes with vacation fantasies? Leaving work undone or unattended was the major concern for 33 percent, 17 percent worry about what to pack, and 16 percent worry that their expectations won't be met.

When asked why they take vacations, 36 percent of the respondents said that "reducing stress" was their main goal, 21 percent said "getting away from daily life," and 18 percent said "having a new adventure."

Two percent are unlikely to have a fantasy vacation in the first place. They look on vacations as the ideal time to delve into a competitor's annual report. (When they die pouring over those reports, will they want to have them buried with them or not?)

According to the survey, most of the respondents are taking shorter, more frequent vacations, five to seven days, two to three times per year. They spend an average of $2,000 to $3,000 for a one-week vacation, prefer to visit an entirely new destination than return to a familiar one and consider shorts, a polo shirt and sneakers to be the ideal vacation attire.

Three young area residents are enjoying the reality of their own fantasy vacation this summer. Congratulations to Midlanders Iris Brito and Amy Beebe and Odessan Fritz Anders, who are spending their summer on a working vacation as members of the 23rd annual production of "TEXAS," at Palo Duro Canyon.

Speaking of outdoor dramas, I talked with local writer/author Mary Frances Beverley recently, and she couldn't say enough good things about the "refreshing" time she had attending the Outdoor Drama Group of Sonora's "The Covered Wagon Dinner Theater," playing Friday and Saturdays through Aug. 21.

The production involves "real people telling real stories about their families," she says, adding that former Midlander Dean McClain is among the 3,500 or so residents of Sonora involved in staging the summer production. Then she says, "It was a long drive, but I wouldn't have missed it for anything.,"

New movie could help baseball team

DURHAM, N.C. (AP) — The movie "Bull Durham" apparently has created new fans for the Class A baseball team the film depicts, and team officials say they hope it leads to increased attendance as well.

"We were all over the papers, both locally and nationally," said Durham Bulls sales manager Kevin Maloney. "Souvenir sales have picked up and phone-in orders have picked up nationwide.

Maloney said the Bulls' office has taken souvenir orders from as far away as Edmonton, Alberta; Yardley, Mass.; and New York City since the movie opened last week.

Texas Cowboy Reunion slated

STAMFORD — The Texas Cowboy Reunion begins Wednesday and runs through Saturday.

This year's rodeo, which has in past years been held through July 4, will be over by Independence Day. Rocking-K Championship Rodeo Co. will provide the rodeo stock for the first time.

"The TCR is still considered the world's largest amateur rodeo, and each year the number of contestants continues to grow," says a release from TCR.

Contestants are mostly working cowboys on the large and small spreads of Texas, New Mexico and Oklahoma.

"New clowns and new acts and new announcers have been contracted to make the show more entertaining," the release says.

The downtown parade on the square will kick off events at 3 p.m. Wednesday. Theme for the parade is "Generosity in West Texas." Shelly Smith, administrator of the West Texas Rehabilitation Center in Abilene and San Angelo is the official parade marshall.

Many of the country's top western artists will have their work displayed in the 15th annual Stamford Art Foundation Exhibit and Sale. The Gallery is open until 9 p.m. daily.

'Bull Durham' loaded with laughs

By MYRA LEE SALCEDO

Salcedo

"Bull Durham," the film about minor-league baseball players with major-league aspirations, is a whole new ball game in the baseball movie category. Sure it's about baseball, but it's also about the games people play on — and off — the baseball diamond.

The biggest game player of them all is Annie Savoy (Susan Sarandon), a groupie who picks one player each season from the Durham Bulls, a North Carolina minor-league team, upon which she lavishes herself and her zany poetic philosophies of baseball and metaphysics. Somewhat of an aging groupie, Annie, who lashes one new recruit to her bed and reads him Walt Whitman, is presented as a sort of muse.

"I believe in the church of baseball," Annie says in a Southern drawl during the opening credits. She soon is explaining her notions to the two men she has her eye on, the naive pitcher, Nuke LaLoosh (Tim Robbins) and the veteran catcher, Crash Davis, (Kevin Costner).

Crash, who enters saying "I'm the Player to be Named Later," is an experienced ballplayer who lost his chance to be a major league player. He had the brains but not the talent.

Crash is hired by the Bulls to guide major league hopeful Nuke. This is no easy task since Nuke, described as having "a million-dollar arm and a five-cent head," is accused of pitching like he makes love, "sorta all over the place."

Annie is bedazzled by Nuke's potential and Crash's sassy and savvy attitude. Nuke follows Annie's every suggestion, right down to her idea of having him wear a black garter belt under his uniform while he pitches. As Nuke explains, "That way I can keep one side of my brain occupied when I'm on the mound, thus keeping the other side slightly off-center, which is where it should be for artists and players."

Crash however, knows his own mind and is not bamboozled by Annie's tactics. Costner gives Crash a shrewd and knowing manner, and a smoldering sexuality. Sarandon's seductive qualities and the sense of class she gives her character meshes well with Costner's character, creating some memorable chemistry.

The film is well-cast, well-photographed and wrapped in a witty script. Although not flawless — one fight scene between Crash and Nuke isn't well constructed — "Bull Durham" has more hits than misses. It's one ball game worth attending; the bases are loaded with laughs and romance. And you don't even have to like baseball to enjoy it.

Local actors will be performing in 'TEXAS'

From Staff Reports

Midlanders Iris Brito and Amy Beebe and Odessan Fritz Anders are in the 80-member cast of Paul Green's musical drama "TEXAS," playing nightly except Sundays through Aug. 27 in the open-air Pioneer Amphitheatre beneath the cliffs of Palo Duro Canyon.

Miss Brito, a 1987 graduate of Midland High who has attended Midland College, plays the part of Evie Blair. This is her first season with the production.

The daughter of Paz and Beatrice Brito, Miss Brito is an active member of Midland Community Theatre and has appeared on stage in "The Sound of Music" as Sister Margaretta and in "South Pacific" as Bloody Mary. She is a member of MCT's Winning Season Singers.

While in high school, Miss Brito was named Most Outstanding Senior in Choir and Who's Who in Choir.

For Amy Beebe, who plays dream mother Sadie Cline, this summer marks her second season with the "TEXAS" company. A senior at West Texas State University, Miss Beebe is a 1985 graduate of Lee High School and is the daughter of Joyce and Phillip Beebe.

Her credits at WTSU include involvement in the West Texas Chorale and the Sigma Nu Little Sisters and the Opera Workshop.

Anders, who plays the part of Stony Richards, is a 1988 graduate of Permian High in Odessa. This summer marks his first season with the "TEXAS" company. His credits include the role of Goat in "The Robber Bridegroom" at the Permian Playhouse in Odessa and the role of Ronny in "The House of Blue Leaves" at MCT.

Anders, who has been a church organist in Odessa, was a member of the 1988 All State Choir and was the Outstanding Senior at Permian High School. He plans to study music theory and composition and hopes to teach on the college level.

"A half million dollars in renovations during the past three years can be seen in the costumes, sets and finest sound and light equipment available," says a release from "TEXAS."

Written by Pulitzer Prize winning author Paul Green, "TEXAS" is the dream of founder Margaret Harper. Having read about Green and his outdoor dramas in Reader's Digest in 1960, she wrote Green a letter which drew him to the canyon.

Six years later, the money had been raised, the theater built and Green had completed the script.

"Today that script remains virtually unchanged, but enormous talent and the latest sound and light technology would make Green proud," the release says. "Ideas that Green envisioned in 1966 but were technically impossible are now a reality."

Last year, a total of 100,000 persons traveled from every state and 84 countries to see the production. Over 1.8 million have seen "TEXAS" since its beginning.

Reservations are encouraged and can be obtained by calling the "TEXAS" office at 1-806-655-2181, or by writing "TEXAS," P.O. Box 268, Canyon, Texas 79015.

Tickets are priced at $5, $7 and $9 for adults and $2.50, $3.50 and $9 for children under 12.

In the event that all seats have been reserved, it is still possible to get tickets for those who can be at the canyon box office at 6 p.m. to sign the waiting list. Cancellations occur, and in addition some 250 step-seats are never sold in advance. The waiting list is called at 7:45 p.m. and tickets are distributed in the order names were signed.

An optional chuckwagon barbecue is served by Sutphen's of Amarillo before each performance from 6:30 to 8 p.m. Reservations are not necessary, and dinner is $5 per person.

Ex-Midland writer to head writers' group

From Staff Reports

Fleet

The Austin Writers' League, the second largest regional organization in the United States, has named former Midlander Jheri Chastain Fleet as the new executive director.

The organization was founded in 1979 by Austin writers interested in writing for publication. Since then the organization has become nationally known for its newsletter, monthly meetings, annual series of writing workshops and growing number of members which is now near 1,200.

Ms. Fleet founded the Texas Nightwriters in Midland in 1984, an organization to help aspiring and published writers, encourage publication and serve as a writing network.

"We are adding several resource services, not only for our members, but for the public as well," she says. "Writing for publication has been treated mystically in the past, but many working writers have found that there are rules and writers who don't know the rules don't get published. We are trying to take the mystery out of it as much as possible and we can do that through our seminar and workshop series and the monthly meetings and the newsletter."

Ms. Fleet has been involved in the arts and fundraising for over 20 years. While in Dallas, she was a member of the boards of Opera Action, Junior symphony League, Dallas Civic Ballet, Dallas Theater Center, Dallas Summer Musicals and the Dallas Fine Arts Museum.

Her first venture into publication was as a teen-ager when she illustrated a children's book written by Mary Rea, and later, as a parent, when her children's PTA used a book concept as a fund raiser. She authored and co-authored three more travel books including "The Child's Guide to the Permian Basin."

After studying under P.M. Fielding, a well-known Tulsa writing instructor, Ms. Fleet quickly achieved recognition as a magazine writer specializing in the interview/profile, writing more than 300 magazine articles for national, regional and local magazines.

Ms. Fleet still maintains an interest in several other areas and is known for her work in television commercials, print ads and film, as a writer and an actress/model.

Her parents, Joe and Gerry Chastain, have lived in Midland since 1946.

From Staff Reports

The 40th annual Summer Mummers' production "Banditry on the Border" or "They Came to Acuna," is playing the Yucca Theatre through Sept. 3.

While living in Midland, the late William S. Davis authored seven other melodramas, including "Peril on the Pecos" and "Rascality on the Rig," both of which were produced twice in Midland and at two Irish theater festivals. Davis, a Midland resident from 1958 to 1964, was the first Republican representative elected to the Texas Legislature from West Texas in 1962, at which time he was a petroleum engineer for Exxon.

Those attending the 1988 Mummers can expect to find the Wadley Avenue detour playing a part in the "movieola" portion of the melodrama. They will also see scenes filmed at the Pecos River by Loving, N.M.

Creating the film footage, staging the melodrama and the olio — a series of short sketches which play after the show — is a major MCT project.

Appearing in the cast are Harry Harrison and Mike Trost as the dastardly Pancho Basto; Mark Eells and David Hidinger as his evil aide Gordo Gaspacho; Tim Rosborough and Frank Mateo as the hero, Dwain Dogood; Scooter Tilley and Charles Taylor, his sidekick, CLaud Clod; Jodie McElligott and Kathy Hodges as the heroine, Eileen Eyeque; and Pat Voss and Donna Rushing as her schoolmarm friend, Beulah Bookworm, as well as David LeMaster, David Whitaker, Terry Martin, Ken Hilfiker, Steve Myers, Chris Statton, Barbara Fritz, Lori Skelton, Gilley Estes, Pat Rattan, Mona Gail Gibson, Jane Phares, Bob Haskell and Buddy Fazzio, along with the members of the Olio.

Offbeat, unique travel spots are worth the effort to visit

By The Associated Press

Vacationers seeking little-known destinations for their outdoor fun don't have to look far no matter where they live in the United States, according to a recently published travel guide.

The book, "Off the Beaten Path," points the way in all 50 states to special places uncrowded with tourists.

According to the book, published by Reader's Digest, the covered bridge capital of America is in Indiana, not New England; the first big gold strike in the United States was in Georgia, not California; America's first state prison was an abandoned copper mine in Connecticut, and the oldest street in the nation with its original houses is located in New Paltz, N.Y.

Other travel suggestions include:

■ REMINISCING about the Wild West with a visit to Langtry, Texas, and the restored courtroom-saloon where Judge Roy Bean — known as the "Law West of the Pecos" — dispensed his quick version of justice along with hard liquor.

■ SKIING ON sand, not water or snow, at the Great Sand Dunes National Monument, Colo.

■ HIKING through a network of 13 caves in Maquoketa, Iowa.

■ BIKING THROUGH rolling countryside along an old abandoned railroad bed through three dark tunnels and across 33 trestles between Elroy and Sparta in Wisconsin.

■ EXPLORING Michigan's Mackinac Island State Park, an island captured by the British in the War of 1812, where no motorized vehicles are allowed.

■ HOUSEBOATING on Lake Shasta, Calif., where 17 species of fish abound, the air is fresh and sweet and green-clad mountains slope to the water's edge.

"The Legend of Sleepy Hollow" and other tales by Washington Irving come alive at Sunnyside in Tarrytown, NY., the 19th-century home of America's first internationally acclaimed man of letters. Overlooking the widest point of the Hudson River, the Tappan Zee, is Irving's stone cottage. Visitors may explore the rooms and view the author's personal possessions.

Family gatherings gain in popularity

By The Associated Press

The "gathering of the clan" has gone beyond the traditional holidays, and family get-togethers are becoming more popular and festive than ever.

If you're thinking of celebrating with a family gathering of your own, here are some adventurous ideas from Better Homes and Gardens Family Network, a public service organization:

Once you've picked the site, says Family Network, have a family "fact-finding" contest for the first hour, with each family member asked to identify the youngest, the one who lives farthest away, etc.

Other ideas include having the guests rotate to a different table after each course; plan a hayride, a parent-child softball game, or a family treasure hunt.

Millions of Americans active, interested in wildlife activities

By BILL SCHULTZ
Associated Press Writer

More than 141 million Americans over age 16 take part in wildlife-associated recreation, and they spend more than $55 billion a year on their sport.

The bulk of those people, 109.7 million, took part in nonconsumptive use, such as feeding, birdwatching, photography or just hiking in the woods to see animals, according to preliminary results of a survey released this year by the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service.

In addition, 46.6 million Americans, or one adult in four, fished and 16.7 million, or about one adult in 10, were hunters.

Results of the survey "support what we have suspected — that more Americans than ever before are engaging in wildlife-related activities," says Frank Dunkle, director of the Fish and Wildlife Service.

"This tremendous growth in the popularity of wildlife watching and photography is so significant that it is bound to bring fundamental changes in wildlife programs," says Joyce M. Kelly, president of Defenders of Wildlife.

"These new outdoor recreationists are an untapped constituency whose needs require much more attention from public officials and policy makers."

That constitutency has helped bring an entire new branch of wildlife management, nongame wildlife. Almost all states have enacted specific financial programs, such as a checkoff on state income tax forms, to raise funds specifically for nongame wildlife, such as eagles, songbirds and sea otters.

Until these checkoffs were introduced almost all money for wildlife management came from taxes on hunters and fishermen.

For example, federal excise taxes on hunting and fishing gear raised $248 million, which will be returned to the states for sport fish and wildlife restoration in fiscal 1987, the Fish and Wildlife Service said.

The FWS survey was done by telephone. More than 100,000 households were contacted by the U.S. Bureau of the Census. More than 30,000 people were interviewed in depth.

The surveys found:

An overwhelming majority of fishermen, 40.2 million of the 46.6 million, fished fresh water, while 14.1 million fished salt water. Some fished both. Anglers spent $28.2 billion on their sport, an average of $604 per angler, and spent 987.7 million days fishing, an average of 21 days per angler.

The 16.7 million hunters also spent an average of $607 per person, or $10.09 billion, on their sport. They were afield 335.1 million days, an average of 20 days per hunter.

Big game, deer, bear, turkey, was sought by 12.5 million, or about 75 percent, of the hunters. Nearly as large a percentage, 65 percent, or 10.8 million, sought small game, such as ducks, geese, doves and rabbits.

Of the 109.7 million adults who took part in nonconsumptive use, 105.3 million stayed around their homes. They included 63.6 million who observed wildlife, 82.5 million who fed wild birds and 18.1 million who photographed wildlife.

But 29.5 million reported taking trips for the primary purpose of ob serving, feeding or photographing wildlife.

Survey results suggest a substantial increase in the number of anglers during the first half of the '80s, a slight decline in the number of hunters and an increase in the number of people who take part in other wildlife-related activities.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

MONDAY, JUNE 27, 1988

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Decisive action will help you get your career on the fast track. If your current job does not challenge you, find one that will. Otherwise, the lasting success you want will elude you. Be affectionate with partner and you will have a relationship that will endure.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Do the unexpected today. Your competitors will be caught off-guard, thereby increasing your chances for success. How parents handle a delicate situation will affect their child's future.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You enjoy rare good luck in a money matter. Sharpen your negotiating skills. Someone you believe to be against you, really is not. Your respect for mate keeps you on the road to success.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Do not push too hard to find another job; the one you have could be your best bet. Sometimes inaction is the preferred course. Keep your health resolutions and you will feel fine.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You have learned a great deal about life lately and have a new desire to excel. Get little tasks out of the way early today. Afternoon features a "rush job."

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Be aware of what is being said, but only rely on what you yourself know to be true. Those who trust you have nothing to worry about. A relationship is progressing nicely. Be patient.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): A confidential tip could boost your income. Good luck is yours in business and career negotiations! Forge ahead with a self-promotion scheme. Rely on your own efforts at work. Stress originality.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Get unfinished work out of the way early in the day. If you must deal privately with people, be discreet. Comparison shopping could save you a bundle. Friends, family members hold your interest tonight.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Be prepared to work at a faster pace. Day trips may be more profitable than overnight stays. You learn where to obtain a hard-to-find item. Your social life could pick up tonight.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Get organized so you can make better use of your time. Act more willing to join your associates in a team effort. News from those at a distance brightens your evening.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): The social scene is lively. Welcome visitors from afar. Avoid distractions when dealing with figures at work. Count to 10 before saying what is really on your mind to loved one.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): A private discussion behind closed doors could prove profitable. Disregard rumors and stick to the facts. A first impression could be wrong. Be willing to admit mistakes. The future looks bright!

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Financial matters occupy your thoughts. Consult accountants, lawyers. Resist the temptation to spend money you do not have. Your ESP influences a personal decision; you emerge a winner. Choose confidants with care.

The bidding:

West	North	East	South
2 ♠	Pass	4 ♠	5 ♡
Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Ten of ♣

If a play you would dearly like to make rates to fail because of the bidding or lead, see if there are any options available. South made good use of that principle to land a difficult game.

With the vulnerability in his favor, East wasted no time in making it as difficult as possible for his opponents to enter the auction by boosting his partner's weak two-bid to game. However, South was just too strong to be kept out of the auction. North realized that his partner was bidding under pressure, so he wisely stayed out of the auction.

West led the ten of clubs, and declarer was delighted with his prospects. In the light of the opening lead, it was probable that the club finesse would fail, but the bidding suggested that the diamond finesse would succeed. Another implication of the opening lead was that West held the ace of spades, so declarer found a way to ensure his contract even if the diamond finesse were doomed to failure.

The opening lead was ducked all around, and the club continuation was won in dummy. After ruffing a spade, declarer led a trump to the queen, collecting both outstanding trumps, and ruffed another spade. He completed his groundwork by cashing the ace of clubs, then crossed to the table with a trump to lead the king of spades. When East played low, declarer did not ruff, but discarded a diamond instead!

That simple maneuver left West on lead with a choice of losing options. Any black card would allow declarer to ruff in dummy while discarding the queen of diamonds from hand; and a diamond would be into declarer's major tenace, assuring no loser in that suit.

An archaeological exhibit, "Jean Louis Berlandier: A French Scientist in Texas 1828-29," is on display through July 25 at the Museum of the Southwest, 1705 W. Missouri Ave.

Berlandier, born in France in 1804, studied to be a natural scientist and by age 25 was the official biologist for the Comision de Limites of the Republic of Mexico. He accompanied Mexican importers in Texas studying plants and animals and observing Indians and their material culture.

The exhibition traces the 1828-29 journey of Berlandier using artifacts such as tools, clothing and weapons to augment the illustrated information panels. Artifacts are from the museum's collection and from The Museum of Texas Tech.

The exhibit's panels were designed by the Smithsonian Institution and given to the Museum of the Southwest.

Many plants and animals were named for Berlandier after his scientific studies were known. He was a prolific writer and collector, and his writings are preserved in the Library of Congress, Harvard and Yale universities and the Thomas Gilcrease Institute of American History, Tulsa, Okla.

Hours at the museum are 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Tuesday through Saturday and 2 to 5 p.m. Sunday. No admission is charged.

Symphony, chorale members attend conference

From Staff Reports

The Midland-Odessa Symphony & Chorale had seven representatives among the more than 1,500 delegates of orchestras attending the 43rd National Conference of the American Symphony Orchestra League in Chicago.

Those attending from Midland were Linda Powell, board member; Sally Kelly, president; and Kerry Kay Cook, president-elect of the Midland Guild. Also attending was Connie Linsler, the organization's general manager.

The conference theme, "Orchestras Forge Ahead: New Audiences/Setting Standards of Excellence," served as the focus for four days of activities that included concerts, luncheons with featured speakers, award presentations, meetings and sessions on artistic and management issues.

The week's highlight was a concert featuring Leonard Bernstein conducting the Chicago Symphony Orchestra along with the conductors selected for the 1988 American Conductors Program.

The conductors were Leif Bjaland, Affiliate Artists assistant conductor of the San Francisco Symphony; John Fiore, assistant conductor of the Bayreuth Festival; and Kate Tamarkin, music director and conductor of the Fox Valley Symphony Orchestra and Chamber Orchestra in Appleton, Wis.

This year's program, a joint project of the American Symphony Orchestra League and the Chicago Symphony Orchestra, was designed to focus attention upon young conductors who show exceptional promise.

Other traditional conference events included the annual presentation of the Gold Baton Award, the League's highest honor for "distinguished service to music and the arts." This year, the Gold Baton Award was presented to Robert Shaw, music director and conductor of the Atlanta Symphony Orchestra.

Past winners include Leonard Bernstein, Aaron Copland, Beverly Sills, Eugene Ormandy, William Schuman and Isaac Stern.

Other awards presented included the League's Helen M. Thompson Award for a young music director, the Louis Sudler Award for "distinguished service to orchestra management," the Volunteer Council annual project awards and the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers awards for "adventuresome programming of contemporary music."

The America Symphony Orchestra League, founded in 1942 and chartered by Congress in 1962, is the national non-profit service organization of symphony orchestras and symphony orchestra personnel — conductors, managers, musicians, trustees and volunteers. The purpose of the League is to provide leadership and service that ensure the artistic, organizational and financial strength of American orchestras.

Towns off the beaten path most affordable in Europe

By PHILIP SOUSA
Copley News Service

The unmatched cultural and historic treasures are still there, of course. But where is affordable Europe? With a couple of exceptions, notably Greece and Portugal, the case of vanishing bargains entails a plot best summed in three little words, a weak dollar.

The worst is over, a number of experts say, and that bodes well for the more than 6 million Americans the 23-nation European Travel Commission predicts will visit the continent this year.

Affordable Europe has not vanished. But new approaches have to be used to find it.

Dinant, Belgium

Of a dozen friends and colleagues polled, none could identify or place this delightful town in the hills of southern Belgium that's home to but 13,000 inhabitants.

The engraved copper work it produces has admirers around the world. But tourists, especially Americans, have yet to discover the town — and that's but one of its lures.

Dinant sits on a particularly attractive stretch of the meandering Meuse River a mere 56 miles southeast of Brussels. But it ticks to its own tempo, one decidedly more leisurely than the capital's. More than a score of hotels span the range of accommodations, the common denominators being neatness and reasonable rates. And as is the case throughout the country, excellent food and wines are highlights of a stay here.

Of several options, this is my pick as a comfy gateway to the Ardennes, the serene domain of forested rolling hills, castle-dotted narrow valleys and swift-flowing rivers that stretches across three of Belgium's French-speaking southern provinces. It attracts hunters, anglers, hikers and campers. It draws history buffs and antique collectors. Frequent trains link the larger centers, buses the smaller towns, but a rental car is best because there's so much to see and the roads are excellent.

If you cannot resist the lure of delightful Brussels, get there on a weekend — that's when most hotel rates drop by as much as 40 percent.

Corfu, Greece

Welcome to Greece, one of the very few corners of Europe where a dollar-bearing visitor can touch antiquity, glimpse superb scenery, dine and dance with abandon and call the whole heady experience a bargain.

And that goes for the whole zestful country, including its often smoggy but always captivating capital, Athens.

A purely subjective motivation prompted me to include Corfu in this list of favorites: I think of it as the most beautiful of Greece's larger islands.

Bigger lights have shared my feeling. Homer sang its praises in his "Odyssey." Empress Elizabeth of Austria picked it as the site of her summer palace. Henry Miller celebrated this flowery isle of gentle slopes and myriad olive trees in "The Colossus of Maroussi."

I don't know about the olden days, but I thoroughly enjoy the eclectic mix of Venetian, British and other architectural styles in its sophisticated capital, also called Corfu. As important, I appreciate being able to go first-class at a posh resort, such as the bustling Corfu Hilton on the beach, or opt for a more modest and quieter setting, the likes of the delightfully isolated San Stefano Hotel up on a forested hillside.

Maastricht, Holland

Impressive churches and storied castles — rather than windmills and canals — characterize the hilly landscape of Holland's southern province of Limburg. And historic Maastricht, the provincial capital, is another of those European cities off the beaten tourist path well worth visiting.

Dating to around 50 B.C., when the Romans established a settlement here, the country's oldest city boasts more than 1,400 public and private structures that date back through the centuries.

But Maastricht, more continental than typically Dutch, also claims more than 350 pubs and cafes, several top-rated restaurants, and hotels as good as — but generally less expensive than — those in Amsterdam, an easy three-hour rail journey to the north.

Above all, this cozy town on the placid Maas River epitomizes the leisurely lifestyle for which the fun-loving Limburgers are known. Some call it the Dutch version of the American South.

Most of the great monuments are found on the city's compact west bank. Here, cobblestoned streets and pedestrian malls link such landmarks as Vrijthof and Markt, the two main squares; the 17th-century Town Hall; and the 14th-century Den Ouden Vogelstruys, the country's oldest cafe.

Austria

Most Americans perceive the land of Mozart as a rather pricey destination. And with our weak dollar, it can be, especially when staying and dining at one of the luxury hotels in Vienna, the stately capital, or in Salzburg, the composer's delightful hometown.

An outstanding mosaic of scenic and cultural riches, Austria is a country you can visit without having to float a bond issue: Consider the numerous pensions and guest houses that blanket the country. They are almost always spotless and charge from $25 to $50 a night, often with breakfast.

One of the larger collections of such accommodations can be found in and around one of Europe's most enchanting smaller cities — Innsbruck, the patrician gateway to the tiny villages, manicured valleys and awesome Alpine peaks that characterize the province of Tyrol.

Denmark

Calm and tidy, this little kingdom has the whimsy of a Hans Christian Andersen fairy tale. Storybook castles and picturesque country towns dapple the gently rolling countryside. Beneath this element of fantasy, though, there ticks a thoroughly modern land whose fun-loving denizens personify the art of being hospitable.

Simultaneously a sophisticated metropolis and a charming village, the city of Copenhagen is a favorite with American travelers — myself included. For an extra helping of magic, however, your visit should include time out in the country. My choice is the island of Funen, which most Danes refer to as their national garden.

CNS Photo

Ideally, you'll want to spend a few days at one of the island's numerous and mostly reasonable country inns. You also may explore from Odense, a city of 200,000 that is celebrating its 1,000th birthday with a yearlong party. As would be expected, many of the festivities center around the life and work of its most famous son, that H.C. Andersen fellow who couldn't make it as a ballet dancer and went on to charm generations with his splendid fairy tales.

Finland

Europe's last and greatest wilderness, Lapland takes up the top third of this at times austere and often striking country. Reindeer safaris and superb cross-country skiing through unspoiled birch forests are some of the popular sporting pursuits possible well into May. About three months of continuous daylight follow, and the Land of the Midnight Sun becomes a surprisingly warm summer playground, especially popular with hikers and hunters.

Rovaniemi, the capital of Finnish Lapland, makes for a comfortable and reasonable base for guided treks above the Arctic Circle that take in the many rivers, lakes, gentle hills and Lapp settlements of this truly unspoiled region. It's another world, all right. But you can reach it in just one hour by jet from Helsinki, Finland's handsome capital.

Germany

The land of Bach, Goethe and the Brothers Grimm brims with scenic and cultural diversity. Glittering cities and time-arrested villages of half-timbered houses are part of the tapestry, as are 10,000 castles and palaces, the picturesque Rhine and the legendary Black Forest, mountainous Bavaria in the south and the rolling countryside of the north.

The dollar's weak stand against the West German mark has made sampling even a few of the treats a costly proposition. But there are ways to save substantially on accommodations and meals. You do that with the "WunderHotels" program — prepaid vouchers to cover the length of your visit from about $40 a night per person, double occupancy, valid at 90 participating hotels; the price, which includes breakfast, taxes and gratuities, is guaranteed against currency fluctuations.

For great savings in sightseeing and transportation, the GermanRail Tourist Card is the key. It entitles you to unlimited travel throughout Germany's superb rail system and is available for four, nine or 16 days; the latter, for instance, costs around $10 a day.

When it comes to special places, I have several here. Pressed, I'll admit that neck and neck at the top of my list are Rothenburg, likely the country's best preserved medieval town, and Wurzburg, one of Europe's outstanding baroque cities.

Britain

To some of us, a week in London is the goal, others prefer mixing time in the capital with a few days in the country, and still others would rather devote their entire vacations to the rural wonders of England, Wales and Scotland.

Individual preferences notwithstanding, Queen Elizabeth's domain is the choice for an Old World vacation with most Americans. Our British cousins in the travel industry know that. They're also aware of our dollar woes, and they've done something rather smashing about it.

British Airways' new "Traveller's Choice Holidays" offer a wide range of accommodation options at prices that are up to half off the standard rates. In London alone, you can choose from more than 50 hotels, all with private bath, at rates that range from $26 a night for budget class to $119 for luxury class, per person, double occupancy.

Throughout the British Isles and southern Ireland (Eire) — where Dublin is celebrating its 1,000th birthday — American visitors can get the discounted hotel rates when they fly on British Airways.
