CARPORT

"With this, it will give us a way to have some control," said Commissioner Faustina Curry. "I drove around and there are carports all over town that don't meet the codes."

Curry expressed concern that even with the new law some may not get permits and build carports that don't meet city regulations.

In addition to being spotted by code enforcement employees, Mayor Bob Neslage said he hopes neighbors will call city hall when they see unauthorized building or poor construction practices in use. "I want people to be considerate of one another," Neslage said in regard to the carport rules. "For most people a home is the biggest expenditure they will ever make ... then for someone to build a carport totally out of character with the neighbor is not right. It should be pleasing to the eye and not devalue the neighborhood."

Mob trial ends with one conviction

WORCESTER, Mass. (AP) — The trial of nine men accused of participating in a murderous battle to seize control of a New England crime family has ended with just one conviction — on gambling.

Jurors couldn't reach a decision on more than half of the 34 counts, and prosecutors said they plan to retry those charges against seven of the defendants.

"It was very difficult to get 12 people to come to the same conclusion," said juror Linda McManus.

Prosecutors had attempted to prove that the defendants, indicted nearly two years ago, had waged a five-year plot to wrest control of the Patriarca crime family.

Authorities contended the suspects tried to kill reputed mob boss Francis "Cadillac Frank" Saleme outside a restaurant in Saugus in 1989, and later succeeded in killing three of his associates. Most of the violence occurred over an eight-month period in 1994.

"Kill a few of them (Saleme loyalists) and the rest of them will scatter," Robert F. "Bobby Russo" Carrozza, the purported ringleader, told two codefendants, according to court documents.

Carrozza was acquitted of a firearms-related

Julie Ann Phillips, 26, Snyder Texas, who is wanted on charges of violation of probation/theft.

Kimberlynn Kaye Ramby, 31, Odessa, who is wanted on charges of possession of a controlled substance.

Crime Stoppers warns that these suspects should be considered potentially armed and dangerous and suggests not approaching them but calling Crime Stoppers at 669-2222 or seeing Student Crime Stoppers at the High School.

charge and jurors couldn't agree on three racketeering charges.

The only man convicted was Anthony Ciampi, found guilty of illegal gambling in poker games.

Tall Capitol

AUSTIN (AP) — Surveyors have determined what Texans thought all along: the state Capitol is taller than the one in Washington, D.C., and by nearly 15 feet.

In December, after decades of debate, General Land Office surveyors armed with precise, space-age instruments, measured the 1888 Capitol from ground level and from sea level.

Their verdict: the Texas Capitol was 302.64 feet from the Oval Walk at the south entrance to the top of the star held aloft by the Goddess of Liberty statue atop the dome.

The U.S. Capitol measures only 288 feet from its east walk to the top of its statue, according to the Office of the Architect of the Capitol in Washington.

PPHM show Indian artwork

CANYON — Continuing to honor the centennial of the founding of the Taos, N.M., art colony, the Panhandle-Plains Historical Museum in Canyon has organized an exhibition opening Jan. 16 featuring oils and water colors by Taos Indian artists Albert Looking Elk and Alberto Lujan who were influenced by Anglo Taos artists.

Unlike most Native American painters who usually worked in a flat, decorative manner, Albert "Looking Elk" Martinez and Alberto Lujan painted in a Euro-American style much like the Anglo painters in Taos. For not painting in an "Indian style," these artists were ridiculed and did not enjoy the fruits of the attention many Native American painters received in the 1920s and 1930s.

Looking Elk modeled for and was befriended by Taos artist Oscar E. Berninghaus who encouraged him to paint and may have given him materials in his early career. Looking Elk was also governor of Taos Pueblo. Alberto Lujan was a crafts instructor at Santa Fe Indian School. He sold his paintings at Taos Pueblo and promoted his work through postcards, which showed him [Lujan] painting.

Texas editorials

The Dallas Morning News on immigrant smugglers and slavery:

He may or may not have been thinking of America's slave past. Still, a modern middle passage was recently on the mind of Paul Coggins, the U.S. attorney for the Northern District of Texas, when he announced the results of Operation Keep and Seek. The case, says Mr. Coggins, is the "most complex and sophisticated alien-smuggling case ever seen in this country."

Not quite slavery, the smuggling of undocumented immigrants nonetheless involves trafficking in human beings. Unless they are willing to defend the practice as bondage with a human face, Americans should be thankful that federal authorities have driven three smuggling cartels out of business.

The bust also vindicates U.S. Rep. Lamar Smith, R-San Antonio. It was the 1996 immigration act he sponsored that contained beefed-up provisions allowing for bigger penalties and wider law enforcement authority in immigration-related cases.

According to Mr. Coggins, over the last three years, three syndicates may have smuggled up to 7,000 mainly Indian undocumented newcomers into the United States. At a cost of $20,000 each, profits may have totaled $150 million. The route to America is believed to have crossed four continents, with Dallas serving as a center of operations.

Smuggled immigrants routinely end up working in conditions that vary between indentured servitude and outright slavery. Beatings, sexual abuse, holding aliens for ransom, and living and working behind barbed wire are not unknown. Meanwhile, the phenomenon also undermines wages and working conditions, and may reduce the job chances, of legal job applicants.

The smugglers surely wear the black hats in this story. But Attorney General Janet Reno recently illuminated a key angle when she cut to the chase in her explanation of the process: "When the undocumented workers arrived, the smugglers would deliver them to unscrupulous employers, employers who wanted cheap labor and fearful workers who could be easily manipulated."

Slavery existed in America for two and a half centuries. But if the shadow of slavery is to be removed almost 150 years after slavery's demise, Americans and their government will have to work hard on two major fronts.

Most employers abide by the 1986 Immigration Reform and Control Act. But unscrupulous employers who do not must be challenged. As Operation Keep and Seek proves, federal law enforcement officials should be unafraid to use the sword of the 1998 immigration law to fight the modern manifestations of human bondage.

The price of virtue ...

Can a country that gives a known perjurer 70 percent approval ratings be entirely wholesome?

Maybe. One interpretation was offered by Mark Steyn of the London Spectator and Andrew Ferguson of the Weekly Standard in the January/February issue of The American Enterprise magazine. Steyn offered that "the better you know Clinton, the more you loathe him. That would seem to be a fairly general rule. And that's the difficulty because the American electorate don't often get to see him in the raw."

Ferguson agreed. "You have to watch Clinton day in and day out to understand the depth of his loathsomeness. That is why the Beltway media turned against Clinton. ... But for most people, politics is not terribly interesting. ... They just tune in every once in a while. 'Oh, there's the president with his new initiative about banning deadbeat dads from being allowed to have guns. That sounds like a good idea.' And then you turn off again and go about raising your children and doing your work."

Very true. I have liberal friends in the Washington press corps who detest Bill Clinton and would rejoice if he were removed from office. Steyn and Ferguson are exactly right that to know him is to despise him. That's why Clinton's defenders on the House Judiciary Committee went nuclear when Rep. Lindsey Graham recited chapter and verse of Clinton's embryonic plan to trash Monica Lewinsky (before the dress). They understood that those facts, if they were more generally known, would paint a picture not of someone who is well-intentioned but weak (as most Americans assume Bill Clinton is) but rather of someone who is rapacious and without mercy.

Mona Charen

As Graham documented for the committee, and as Majority Counsel David Shippers reiterated, Bill Clinton told several aides, including Sidney Blumenthal and Betty Currie, that Monica was a "stalker." This is classically known as adding insult to injury. It is also, as William Rickenbacker once quipped in another context, a "gotterdammerung lie." Oh, and one more thing, it sounds amazingly similar to what Clinton's agents said about Paula Jones and Jennifer Flowers and Kathleen Willey ...

Another way to understand the public's tolerance of Bill Clinton's low character is to assume that Washington has become almost entirely irrelevant to the lives of most Americans. Karl Zinsmeister, editor of The American Enterprise, advances this theory. He first reproduces a series of statistics on key social indicators which seem to suggest that America has turned a corner culturally and morally.

The illegitimacy rate is trending down slightly for the U.S. population as a whole, from 47 births per 1,000 women in 1995 to 44 per 1,000 in 1997. Among blacks, the trend is more dramatically down. The abortion rate is also down (so much for those who argued that fewer abortions will always mean more "unwanted" babies). The number of kids ages 15 to 19 who have had sexual intercourse is down from a high of 55 percent in 1990 to 50 percent in 1995. A small change but in the right direction. The same is true for divorce, which has dropped slightly but steadily since 1980. Welfare rolls are down, as are crime rates throughout the nation.

In addition to measurable behavioral change, attitudes have undergone a shift as well. In 1990, 38 percent of Americans thought we were spending too much on welfare. In 1996, 56 percent thought so. In 1970, 50 percent thought "a letdown in moral values" was a major cause of the nation's troubles. In 1998, 62 percent thought as much. In 1979, 66 percent of working women thought quality time mattered more with children than quantity. By 1998, the percentage who agreed with that statement had dropped to 40.

If Zinsmeister is right that a conservative shift is underway, it is possible that appropriate judgmentalism is a lagging indicator. People may be choosing not to act as Bill Clinton does, but they don't yet have the confidence to judge him harshly. Just as we Americans believe in heaven but not hell, just as we want all of our children to excel with praise alone and never rebuke, we want to censure Bill Clinton but not to punish him. In time, we should learn that morality doesn't come cheap. The price we pay for virtue is shame. You can't have one without the other.

Today in history

By The Associated Press

Today is Wednesday, Jan. 13, the 13th day of 1999. There are 352 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:

On Jan. 13, 1898, Emile Zola's famous defense of Capt. Alfred Dreyfus, "J'accuse," was published in Paris.

On this date:

In 1794, President Washington approved a measure adding two stars and two stripes to the American flag, following the admission of Vermont and Kentucky to the union. (The number of stripes was later reduced to 13 again.)

In 1864, composer Stephen Foster died in New York.

In 1941, novelist James Joyce died in Zurich, Switzerland.

In 1962, comedian Ernie Kovacs died in a car crash in west Los Angeles.

In 1966, Robert C. Weaver became the first black Cabinet member as he was appointed Secretary of Housing and Urban Development by President Johnson.

In 1978, former Vice President Hubert H. Humphrey died in Waverly, Minn., at age 66.

In 1982, an Air Florida 737 crashed into Washington D.C.'s 14th Street and killed 61 people.

Ten years ago, New York City subway gunman Bernhard H. Goetz was sentenced to one year in prison for possessing an unlicensed gun that he used to shoot four youths he said were about to rob him. (He was freed the following September.)

The year of nonstop speculation

1998 was the year of nonstop speculation in reporting.

In part (but not entirely!) because of the rise of 24-hour news channels, journalists have turned themselves into fortunetellers. Instead of "all news, all the time," most offer all speculation, all the time.

To justify the 24-hour format, reporters must take stories and expand them to fill the available space. And facts alone are insufficient.

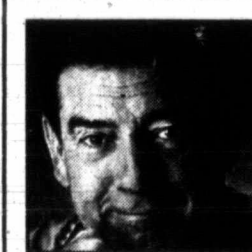

Especially in a case such as the president's relationship with Monica Lewinsky, it can be months before you get many facts. The fear is, if you report nothing but the same old facts hour after hour, your audience will turn to some other channel.

This fear drives reporters to speculate.

Suddenly, everybody forgets that Paddy Chayefsky's "Network" is not a how-to video. In that movie, an over-zealous news producer (Faye Dunaway) declares that it's not good enough to tell people what HAS happened — she wants to tell people what WILL happen. She hires somebody called Sibly the Soothsayer to report news of the future.

Rampant speculation has infected every newsroom I know, including my own. Whether for cable, broadcast, print or Internet, every American news organization succumbed to one degree or another. Speculation, once confined to reporters' watering holes, is now journalism's grossest national product.

Which leads us to the other outstanding

Dan Rather

Syndicated columnist

trend in journalism this year: Overwhelmingly, the speculation was WRONG.

Please note: The president didn't resign in February — or March, or June, or October. He didn't rant and rave in his videotaped deposition. Republicans didn't coast to a filibuster-proof majority in both houses in November's elections. The impeachment drive didn't run out of steam after those elections.

Every one of these predictions was made. Every one turned out wrong. Amazingly, there's been no equivalent of a malpractice suit against the reporters who made these wrong diagnoses. You'll find them all making more predictions next time.

Here I must inject a word of sympathy. Part of being a better-than-average reporter is the ability to ANALYZE the news, to help people understand the context, the impact and the importance of your reporting. And, yes, part of that sometimes entails making educated estimates, based on facts and history, about possible consequences of current events. Many of the most respected names in journalism, from Walter Lippmann to Eric Sevareid, specialized in news analysis.

So, when somebody asks a reporter what's going to happen, it's nigh on irresistibly flattering. You want to sound well-informed, and far-seeing, like the great ones.

But a little goes a long way. Most of us are not Lippmann or Sevareid. I, for example, have learned through repeated and painful experience that I am neither fellow.

That's why I'm making the following resolution: I will avoid speculation in 1999.

When somebody asks me what's going to happen, I'm going to try — REALLY try — to answer, "I don't know." Because the truth is, I don't know. Nobody does.

Swearing off speculation will be tough. It may be like quitting smoking: I may need to taper off gradually. I may even need a patch.

But somebody must recognize that all this speculation is a cancer in our credibility. People may indeed buy the paper or turn on the TV or radio just to see what fool notions we're peddling today. Hard to believe some of the things we say.

But tomorrow, it may be IMPOSSIBLE to believe what we say.

That's not speculation. It's a warning. The journalist who lives by the crystal ball will be forced to eat a lot of broken glass.

WATER

Meers asked why the group at the meeting didn't want to go in with the other group and was told by Williamson, "We have NO water, we have to haul water now. If you're going through the state to get a grant we just don't have the time."

The group originally asked for a grant of $102,400 from the PEDC. Board member Roger David made a motion to that effect saying that it is an emergency situation and the businesses have to have water.

Board member Jerry Foote and Meers both expressed concern about the precedent such an outright grant might make. The project for the water district that is in the works will require a 50 percent contribution. They wondered if those affected by that project wouldn't want a total grant as well.

A second motion was made to make a grant of 50 percent of the cost of building the water supply to the South Price Road group and a loan of the other 50 percent to be paid back over 15 years with a four percent interest rate and contingent on the county supplying "whatever assistance they could." That motion passed. Approval by the city commission and exact details on how the loan will be repaid are pending.

Texas lawmakers file 2000-2001 budget bill

AUSTIN (AP) — State budget writers today said they have filed a $91.7 billion proposed spending bill for the next two years, with three-fourths of the new money directed at education.

The spending total in the measure introduced by Sen. Bill Ratliff, R-Mount Pleasant, and Rep. Rob Junell, D-San Angelo, doesn't include funds the state is getting from settling its lawsuit against the tobacco industry.

That money is expected to total about $1.8 billion, and a statement issued by the lawmakers said the funds would go toward health care programs and health education institutions. Texas sued tobacco companies seeking to recover costs for treating tobacco-related illnesses.

"We believe that the first priority for any additional spending in Texas is and should be education," said Ratliff, who chairs the Senate Finance Committee.

"The fact that 75 percent of all new spending in this appropriations bill is directed toward education is confirmation of this priority," he added.

Lawmakers over the next 20 weeks will write a spending plan for the 2000-2001 budget years.

The state's current two-year budget totals about $87.1 billion, according to the Legislative Budget Board.

Comptroller Carole Keeton Rylander has projected that lawmakers will have an additional $5.6 billion in revenue for the coming two years.

Junell, the House Appropriations Committee chairman, echoed the caution of other state leaders.

"We will ask our colleagues to use discipline and restraint in any additional spending," he said.

Clinton: will spend 'little time as possible' on impeachment

By LARRY MARGASAK
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — On the eve of opening arguments in his trial, President Clinton said today he intends "to spend as little time thinking about" his impeachment as possible and focus instead on issues facing Americans. "I trust that the right thing will be done," he said.

Clinton's lawyers told senators in a legal brief that they had an "obligation to turn away an unwise and unwarranted" House impeachment.

"The vote the American people rendered ... is hanging in the balance," the presidential lawyers said in their trial brief, arguing that there are no legal, constitutional or factual grounds for removal of the president.

"There is strong agreement among constitutional and legal scholars and historians that the substance of the articles does not amount to impeachable offenses," the attorneys wrote. They said the allegations "do not begin to satisfy the stringent showing required by our Founding Fathers to remove a duly elected president from office, either as a matter of fact or law."

Clinton spoke for the first time about the crisis since his impeachment last month. "I think the Senate has to deal with that. We filed our brief today that makes our case. The important thing for me is to spend as little time thinking about that as possible and as much time working on the issues we're here to discuss."

"They have their job to do in the Senate and I have mine and I intend to do it," he said.

The president indicated he has no plans to address the impeachment matter in his State of the Union speech Jan. 19. "I think the American people have heard about that quite extensively and my instinct is I should do their business," he said.

The 130-page brief offered a preview of the case that Clinton's attorneys will present in defending him against perjury and obstruction of justice charges in the Senate impeachment trial.

House officials are suggesting the impeachment case will be prosecuted like a conspiracy, alleging that the president schemed to keep Monica Lewinsky from revealing their extramarital affair and ultimately plotted to ruin her reputation.

The efforts will move from written pages to the Senate chamber Thursday when the House opens its presentation. There, television cameras will show Americans their first live presidential impeachment trial and record the proceedings for history.

"The Senate has an obligation to turn away an unwise and unwarranted misuse of the awesome power of impeachment," the president's lawyers said in their brief today. "If the Senate removes this president for a wrongful relationship he hoped to keep private, for what will the House ask the Senate to remove the next president and the next?"

The brief said that removing Clinton on the basis of the allegations facing him would "substantially alter the delicate constitutional balance" of power among the branches of government and "move us closer to a quasi-parliamentary system in which the president is elected to office by the choice of the people but continues in office only at the pleasure of Congress."

"It is not simply the president — but the vote the American people rendered in schools, church halls and other civic centers all across the land 26 months ago — that is hanging in the balance," the lawyers said.

The brief did not present new evidence. Instead, White House officials described it as the most comprehensive and detailed presentation to date about Clinton's case.

The lawyers argued that the articles of impeachment against Clinton "fall far short of what the American people demand be shown and proven before their democratic choice is reversed." And in a slap at Independent Counsel Kenneth Starr and the House impeachment team, the brief said the charges "fall far short of what a prudent prosecutor would require before presenting a case to a judge or jury."

In an effort to show a scheme to conceal the relationship and eventually destroy Ms. Lewinsky's reputation and credibility, the prosecutors plan to weave together conduct including: searching for a job for the former intern, hiding gifts she exchanged with Clinton, having her sign a false affidavit in the Paula Jones sexual harassment case against the president, possibly coaching presidential secretary Betty Currie and the president's making comments to aides that portrayed Ms. Lewinsky as the aggressor.

On Dec. 5, 1997, lawyers representing Mrs. Jones the Jones trial judge, who ruled Mrs. Jones was entitled to information on any state or federal employee who had had sexual relations with Clinton.

On Jan. 7, 1998, Ms. Lewinsky signed an affidavit in the Jones case denying a sexual relationship, the House said.

The next day, Ms. Lewinsky had a Jordan-arranged interview and told the president's friend it went poorly. Jordan called the company's CEO, Ronald Perelman. More interviews were held and Ms. Lewinsky was offered a job.

Prosecutors also will focus on the president's off-reported conversation with Mrs. Currie after his deposition in the Jones case, trying to show that Clinton was trying to coach a prospective witness.

"You were always there when Monica was there, right?" Mrs. Currie recalled Clinton asking.

Three arrested in Nevada in killing of 34 wild horses

RENO, Nev. (AP) — Party chatter overheard by the granddaughter of a sheriff's employee helped nab two Marines and a third man now accused of slaughtering 34 wild horses, the sheriff says.

Police arrested a Reno construction worker Tuesday and planned to charge two Marines in California, accusing them of killing the free-roaming mustangs with high-powered rifles.

"We had one lead that was a little better than the others that actually started with an employee of the sheriff's office's granddaughter who was at a party who heard a certain thing being said," Washoe County Sheriff Richard Kirkland said Tuesday.

Anthony Merlino, 21, was held on charges of grand larceny, grand theft and maiming, poisoning or killing another person's animal.

Arrest warrants on the same charges — which carry combined maximum penalties of more than 10 years in prison — have been issued for the two Marines being held at bases in California.

Lance Cpl. Scott Brendle, 22, was being held at Camp Pendleton, Calif., and Lance Cpl. Darien Brock, 21, was being held at Twentynine Palms east of Los Angeles, Storey County District Attorney Janet Hess said Tuesday night.

"It's sad but true," said Major Lenny Ryan of Camp Pendleton.

Both are members of the 1st Marine Division. Both were residents of the Reno area home on holiday leave when the horses were shot Dec. 27, Storey County Sheriff Pat Whitten said.

Hess said it was not clear if some form of extradition would be necessary, but that prosecutors intended to return the soldiers to Nevada to face the charges.

Law officers said they did not believe military weapons were used in the shooting.

Detectives have been investigating the case since the mustangs were shot about 5 miles east of the Reno-Sparks area.

Some of the horses were maimed and at least one was blasted with a chemical fire extinguisher.

Four killed in shooting in North Dallas suburb

RICHARDSON, Texas (AP) — Four people died this morning following a shooting at a house in this North Dallas suburb, and police found a 12-year-old boy standing in the front yard when they arrived.

"He was in the house when the incident occurred," Richardson police Sgt. Steve Upchurch said. "He heard what sounded like a gunshot. Because he was scared, he climbed out of a window."

Once inside, police found three women and one man shot, Upchurch said. An older man and woman died at the scene.

A third victim was dead at Baylor/Richardson Medical Center and a fourth was dead at Baylor Medical Center at Garland, but Baylor public relations coordinator Susan Hall would not identify them.

"I can confirm we have two victims at our hospitals," Ms. Hall said.

Upchurch said investigators don't know the relationship of the victims or what may have happened, but they are questioning the boy, who was not injured. Officers have recovered a shotgun from the red brick, two-story house.

"It's too early at the stage of this investigation right now to make any guesses about that," he said.

Neighbors said gunfire shattered their predawn peace shortly before 6 a.m.

"We heard two gunshots, loud. They sounded like they were outside," said Ben Harvey. "Then the house alarm went off and then several other gunshots after that."

The shooting happened at the end of an eight-home cul-de-sac in an upscale neighborhood. Neighbors said the family had just moved to the area from Midland.

Neighbor Joe Quirk said the family had moved to the house about a year ago, but he didn't know their names. He said there was a husband and wife and possibly two children, one of whom is an older daughter who has moved out.

"I heard two gunshots followed by a third. It sounded like it was outside," Quirk said. "It's a tragedy. I'm sure they'll resolve it and it'll get back to normal."

Texas man indicted after internet sting

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A Texas man who allegedly planned to have sex with a 13-year-old girl he met over the Internet was indicted Tuesday by a federal grand jury.

The teen-ager turned out to be a police officer, federal prosecutors said. The two became acquainted in an Internet chat room for older men wanting to meet younger girls, said Assistant U.S. Attorney Ronald Cheng.

Shelby Hardage, 58, of Austin exchanged messages with the officer between Sept. 11 and Dec. 26. He then traveled to Santa Monica to meet her, court papers said.

Hardage, who is free on bail, was charged with intent to engage in sex with a minor and use of the Internet to induce a minor into sex. If convicted on both counts, he would face up to 30 years in federal prison.

Program targets leaf blowers

HIGHLAND PARK, Texas (AP) — The use of leaf blowers on the lawns of this affluent Dallas suburb caused such a ruckus that City Hall is stepping in.

Instead of banning the popular but noisy lawn tools altogether, city officials have enacted a new program that will encourage the gas-powered blowers to be used at no more than half-throttle within 150 feet of residences.

The city agreed to study the situation in the wake of complaints last summer by a residents' group.

The new program begins Feb. 1. Town officials said they are preparing notices about the program.

Mom's Ready to Shoot-Sheet Son's Unsupervised Sleepover

DEAR ABBY: I need help with a family problem. My 14-year-old son and his friends enjoy sleeping over at one another's homes. Recently he spent the night at a new friend's apartment. I just discovered that the other boy's mother works all night. She left about 10 p.m., and the two boys were left on their own.

I was horrified when I found out and informed my son that he may have his friend over at our home, or he can sleep at his friend's home on the condition that I speak first to a parent to be certain that an adult will be present.

My son says I'm being unreasonable, and my husband sees nothing wrong with two 14-year-old boys being left alone for the night. I seem to be alone in my opinion that this is potentially dangerous. What do you think? Should I back down?

WORRIED MOM IN MINNEAPOLIS

DEAR WORRIED: Do not back down. It's difficult to be Mom the Enforcer when your husband doesn't support you; however, I agree there should always be an adult on the premises to make responsible decisions should an emergency occur. Dad seems to have forgotten how immature 14-year-old boys can be. Remind him.

DEAR ABBY: With reference to "Dad, the Morning Rooster," who has to haul his 18-year-old son out of bed to go to work. There's another side to the question of slow-to-rise adults. Some body clocks cannot be adjusted.

My husband has this problem. When he was single, he paid the janitor of his building to see that he was up and sitting on the side of the bed each morning before leaving him.

After we were married and both working and sharing transportation, his problem caused me a lot of stress. After I quit working, I thought he could and should change, get a loud alarm clock, suffer the consequences of oversleeping, etc. Nothing worked. I continued to get angry, and he continued to apologize and tell me how much he appreciated my getting him up.

I finally accepted the fact that he is a night person and a very sound sleeper. (He could respond to an emergency in the middle of the night and have no recollection of it the next morning.) I, on the other hand, am a morning person, waking up early and hungry.

My husband worked long, hard hours at a job where he was not in danger of being fired, but certainly didn't get the day off to a good start when he overslept. I finally solved the problem by sending the children, as soon as they were old enough, to wake Daddy. They loved it, and not even he could continue to sleep with a couple of preschoolers climbing all over him.

If possible, night people would do well to follow a career that calls for working afternoons and evenings (such as operating a movie theater). A true night person and a true morning person living together will have to understand and compromise. To people like us, I offer this consolation: It gets better as you grow older. Sound sleepers sleep less soundly, and early risers don't leap quite as eagerly out of bed in the morning. Eventually you meet on middle ground.

RETIRED MORNING PERSON

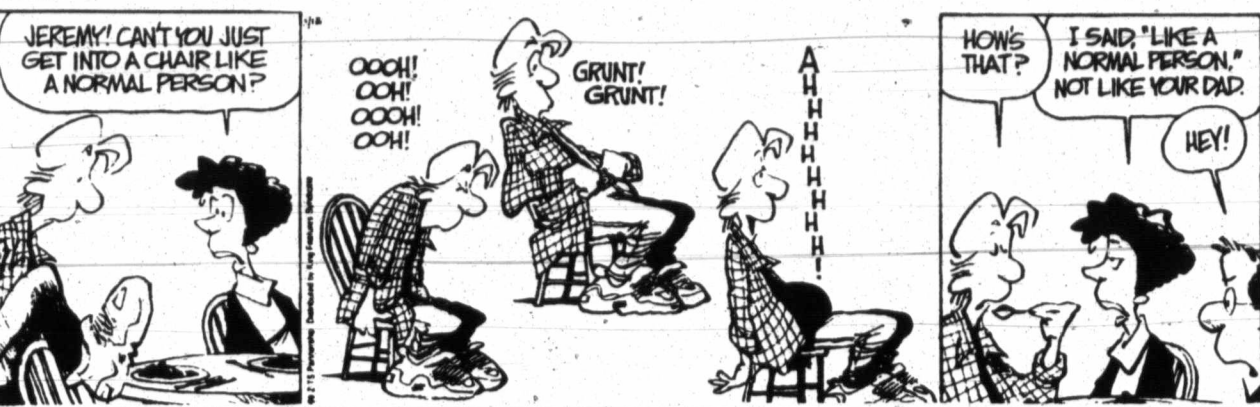

DEAR RETIRED: It's true that people have different biological rhythms. However, it's not always possible for an 18-year-old to work nights and sleep in — particularly if he or she must balance a work schedule with school.

BASEBALL

HOUSTON (AP) — The Houston Astros have signed backup catcher Tony Eusebio to a one-year contract general manager Gerry Hunsicker announced Tuesday.

Terms were not disclosed. Eusebio hit .253 in 66 games with the Astros last season. He had 46 hits and drove in 36 runs playing behind starter Brad Ausmus.

when he was suspended March 17 because of poor grades.

OLYMPICS

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — The International Olympic Committee says it has enough evidence to complete its bribery investigation and will recommend expelling some members and changing the site-selection process.

Robert Garff, chairman of the Salt Lake Organizing Committee, said the SLOC ethics panel has identified eight IOC members who could be implicated. SLOC member and IOC executive Anita DeFrantz has said as many as a dozen IOC members could be ousted.

The report by the six-member IOC commission investigating bribery allegations in Salt Lake City's winning bid for the 2002 Winter Games is scheduled to be published Jan. 24 after a meeting of the IOC's executive board in Lausanne, Switzerland.

"The commission has identified improper behavior by certain IOC members with respect to the Salt Lake City bid," the IOC said through its newly hired New York public relations firm, Hill & Knowlton.

The IOC sent letters this week to members implicated in the investigation, demanding an explanation. IOC president Juan Antonio Samaranch has said guilty members would be expelled or asked to resign.

The report also will include recommended changes in the bidding for Olympic Games and the IOC election process. DeFrantz, speaking today on NBC's "Today" program, dismissed talk that the Olympics could be moved elsewhere or canceled.

"The Games will be in Salt Lake City," DeFrantz said. "The people there have been working very hard."

Cowboys' Johnston could be going to Browns

IRVING, Texas (AP) — There could be "Moooooose" calls coming from the Dog Pound this fall.

Daryl Johnston, a fullback so popular his nickname is often cheered on the road, will be available to Cleveland in the Feb. 9 expansion draft. Should he wind up with the Browns, the blue-collar player would likely become a quick favorite of the rowdy home crowd.

Johnston has spent his entire 10-year career with the Dallas Cowboys, winning three Super Bowls while opening holes for Emmitt Smith and making the Pro Bowl twice. He was rewarded before the 1997 season with a five-year contract and a $2 million signing bonus.

But as Johnston heads into the third year of the deal, his base pay jumps to $1.25 million and he counts $1.65 million against the contract. With the Cowboys having to plug many holes, team owner-general manager Jerry Jones doesn't appear willing to commit that much to someone who is essentially a sixth lineman.

So Tuesday morning Jones called Johnston's agent, Leigh Steinberg, with an offer.

"Daryl was sort of given a choice: cut his salary dramatically or put him on the list," Steinberg said. "It was somewhat of a surprise."

By exposing Johnston, Jones is playing hardball. If Johnston doesn't get taken by Cleveland — which could always draft him just to trade him elsewhere — then the fullback and his agent know they must be prepared to renegotiate with Dallas or risk being waived.

"Whether he agrees with it or not, I know he understands the things we took into consideration on this decision," Jones said. "I will reiterate this was a difficult decision."

Steinberg said Johnston was being "philosophical" about the predicament.

"He understand this is today's NFL," Steinberg said. "His preference is to stay with the Cowboys on this contract, but if Cleveland picks him he'll graciously go and give them his best efforts."

"But hopefully he'll end up with the Cowboys and end his career there."

Johnston, who turns 33 the day after the expansion draft, re-established himself as one of the league's top blocking fullbacks this past season, less than a year having potentially career-ending neck surgery.

Johnston had played 149 straight games before suffering the bulging disk. It's an impressive streak for someone who is primarily a human battering ram. That toughness, along with a humble attitude, has made him one of the team's most popular players on and off the field. He's also involved with several local charities, including a high-profile literacy campaign.

While the potential parting of Johnston and the Cowboys may be a bit surprising, Steinberg did not criticize the way the team handled things.

"The Cowboys have been successful in running their business," Steinberg said. "Who can tell what the correct protocol is in the sense that there have only been two of these (expansion) drafts in many years."

Other players exposed by Dallas are receiver Billy Davis, center Clay Shiver and defensive ends Antonio Anderson and Hurvin McCormack.

Cleveland will stock its roster with between 30 and 42 players from a pool of 150 offered by the existing 30 NFL teams. No team will lose more than two players and some clubs won't lose any. After the Browns chose one player from a team, the club gets to pull another off the list.

Much-maligned cornerback Kevin Smith was a somewhat surprising omission, as were expensive veterans such as tight end Eric Bjornson and line-backer Fred Strickland.

Jones refused to discuss why players did or didn't make the list, but he insisted there was a lot of thought, discussion and strategy behind every name. He said position coaches, coordinators and coach Chan Gailey all had input and that every player was evaluated.

Dumas sneaks by Lady Harvesters

DUMAS — Dumas sneaked by Pampa, 36-35, in a District 3-4A girls' basketball game Tuesday night.

Both teams are now 1-1 in district play.

There were 11 lead changes in the game and the Lady Harvesters led by as many as eight points at one time.

Bethany Ratliff was high scorer for Dumas with 19 points. Holly Ratliff followed with 8.

Emily Waters led Pampa with 11 points while teammate Lisa Kirkpatrick had 8 points and 6 rebounds.

Pampa led at halftime by four (19-15) and by two (28-26) going into the fourth quarter.

The Demonettes made the most of their trips to the foul line, hitting 19 of 26 attempts. Pampa was 10 of 17.

Others scoring for Pampa were Jordanna Young with 7, Lisa Dwight 5 and Anne Gaddis 4.

Dumas is 14-6 for the season while Pampa is 9-8.

Pampa hosts Hereford at 6 Friday night in more district action. The Lady Whitefaces fell to Palo Duro, 50-40, Tuesday night and are 1-1 in district play.

Dumas defeated Pampa, 39-36, in last night's junior varsity girls'

High School Basketball

Emily Hartman had 12 points and Jennifer Lindsey 10 to lead Pampa JV scorers.

Pampa JVs are now 12-4 for the season and 1-1 in district.

WHITE DEER — White Deer slipped past Highland Park, 54-51, Tuesday night in a girls' District 6-2A basketball game.

Rhonda McClendon led a balanced scoring attack for White Deer with 16 points. Kacey Knocke, Samantha Lee and Suni Jo Petty added 8 points each.

White Deer girls are now 1-1 in district play and 10-11 for the season.

Alicia Ornelas had 20 points for Highland Park. Amanda Neomode followed with 15.

Highland Park turned back White Deer, 50-48, in the boys' game.

Josh Patterson had 12 points and Steve Lamberson 10 to lead Highland Park.

Shawn Poor was the leading scorer for the Bucks with 12 points. Jeremy Crook chipped in 9.

A big-bucks baseball

NEW YORK (AP) — Philip Ozersky ignored an offer to shake hands with Mark McGwire and take home some autographed paraphernalia in exchange for home run No. 70.

Smart move. Then he turned down a $1 million offer for the baseball.

An even smarter move. That's because the ball wound up being sold to an anonymous phone bidder for a record $3 million at Gurnsey's Auction House.

The price included a bid of $2.7 million, plus a $305,000 buyer's commission, making the total sale price $3,005,000.

Ozersky, a research scientist at Washington University in St. Louis, was flabbergasted by the price.

"I'm excited and overwhelmed," he said.

Ozersky, who retrieved

McGwire's No. 70 when it landed under his seat in a private box at Busch Stadium last Sept. 27, said he never imagined that would happen.

"I was the person who least expected a ball to fly in there," he said. "I never caught a baseball before. I went to see the Cards play and have some fun with friends."

When he put the ball up for auction, Ozersky admitted he didn't know what to expect.

"The sky's the limit," he said. "I found out what the sky was."

So did Irwin Sternberg, president of Stonehenge, Ltd., manufacturers of fine neckwear. When auctioneer JoAnne Carter reached $1.6 million, the bidding turned into a one-on-one showdown between Sternberg and the anonymous voice on the telephone, who described himself only as "one heck of a baseball fan."

Chase is on

Pampa's Ryan Sells (left) and an Amarillo High player chase after the ball in a high school soccer match Tuesday night at Harvester Stadium. AHS won by a score of 4-0. Pampa now has a 1-1 record while AHS is 2-1-2.

Jets' offensive line does turnabout

NEW YORK (AP) — Make that rebuilding the darn thing.

When the Jets were 1-15 two years ago, prior to Parcells taking over, the line was in shambles. Even last season, a 9-7 campaign that was New York's best record since 1986, the blockers weren't anything special.

"It was an area that needed attention," Parcells admitted early in this special season that has brought the Jets (13-4) to Sunday's AFC championship game in Denver. "So we tended to it."

Parcells was happy with left tackle Jumbo Elliott, who played for him on the Giants when they won the 1990 title. He felt Matt O'Dwyer would continue to improve at right guard.

That left three holes.

"My No. 1 priority in the offseason was to try to get a center," said Parcells, who let incumbent

Roger Duffy leave for Pittsburgh as a free agent. "The opportunity to get someone at that position is minimal. There's not usually many coming out of the draft, and they are inexperienced."

But there was a solid, experienced center in Seattle, Kevin Mawae, who was a free agent. Parcells made Mawae the richest center in the league with a five-year, $16.8 million deal that included a $5 million bonus.

"To be able to get Kevin, a good player with enough NFL experience, was a big advantage for us."

Mawae was a second team All-Pro and the leader of the line. His biggest contribution came against massive defensive tackles such as Buffalo's Ted Washington and Seattle's Cortez Kennedy, the kind who dominated the Jets in '97.

Next in was left guard Todd Burger, signed away from Chicago as a free agent. He struggled early and nearly was benched, but came on down the stretch.

"He had some adversity early in year, but he has toughness and hung in there," Parcells said. "He has to try to be technically perfect. If he puts himself in the right positions, he is very strong and hard to overpower."

Burger was perfect in one area. "Burger had no penalties at all, which is quite an accomplishment," Parcells said. "I tease him about that: 'Maybe you can't get close enough to hold them.'"

O'Dwyer matured at right guard, although he still has problems with his temper. In his first three seasons, O'Dwyer built a reputation as a dirty player, and drew too many penalties.

"Matt has had a solid year, and he's grown as a player," Parcells said. "He's learned to channel things."

Noisy dome a headache for Vikings' opponents

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Playoff football in Minnesota used to mean snow and bitter cold, a distinct home-field advantage that helped the Vikings to four Super Bowls in the 1970s.

Now the temperature never strays too far from 68 degrees whenever the Vikings play at home, but they've still got a big edge in what owner Red McCombs calls "the noisiest stadium in the NFL."

And the Vikings aren't apologizing for the manmade advantage they've had at the Metrodome this season, something that has helped them with in one victory of their first Super Bowl in 22 years.

"Who cares if it's fair or not. We earned it," running back Leroy Hoard said. "Everybody has the same opportunity that we had to get home-field advantage. We got it. It's got to be good for something — that noise."

That noise is something the Atlanta Falcons will have to deal with in Sunday's NFC championship game, which the Arizona Cardinals were unable to do in the divisional round last weekend.

The racket helped rattle Arizona quarterback Jake Plummer into three turnovers that led to 17 points for the Vikings in their 41-21 victory. The decibel level wasn't the difference for Minnesota — its offense was — but it certainly helped.

"(The) crowd was a big part of it," Atlanta coach Dan Reeves said. "(It) gave Arizona a lot of problems early in the game. Those are the type things we've got to be ready to deal with. You can't change them. They're going to be there. We've got to deal with them."

At one point just before kickoff Sunday, Cardinals tackle Lomas

Brown and some teammates tried to communicate by screaming while standing next to each other. They couldn't hear.

Neither could Hoard and Robert Smith, who were side by side on the Vikings' side of the field. Plummer said there were times during the game when he couldn't hear offensive coordinator Marc Trestman, who was speaking directly into his helmet from the coaches' booth via microphone.

The most annoying, and some say most disrupting, part of the dome noise is the stuff roaring through the speaker system. The Vikings blast heavy metal music and other canned noise into the arena to help whip the fans into a frenzy.

The Packers complained loudly about the piped-in noise after their 28-14 loss at the dome Nov. 22. Their biggest beef was about on-field speakers the Vikings say they use to channel the music to the cheerleaders.

Vikings vice president of business operations Rand Gottlieb contends the team stays within league rules for stadium noise, including turning off all artificial sound when the opposing offense breaks the huddle.

But that's when the fans take over, with 64,000 of them screaming as the quarterback slips behind center. That's helped the Vikings (16-1) go 9-0 at home this season, winning by an average score of 36-13. They are 11-point favorites against the Falcons.

"With the loudspeakers and crowd noise, our communication was messed up all day," Arizona center Aaron Graham said. "It was almost non-existent. It forced us into trying all sorts of things we haven't tried before."

That's the dome-field advantage, something the Minnesota Twins used to win World Series titles in 1987 and 1991. No dome team ever has made it to the Super Bowl, but Sunday's matchup guarantees one finally will.

Thanks to their enthusiastic fans, the Falcons (15-2) enjoyed a similar edge against San Francisco last weekend at the Georgia Dome. Now they'll feel what it's like to be in someone else's raucous dome, and the Vikings aren't concerned with what anyone thinks of that advantage.

"You want me to feel sorry for it? No, I don't," Hoard said. "We bust our butts all year. We won 15 games (in the regular season). It's got to count for something — the home-field advantage."

"Whether we play indoors or outdoors, that's what all the other teams got to think of. Oh, man. We don't want them to get home-field advantage. They play indoors."

Notice of Class 2 Compliance Plan Modification

Celanese Limited-Pampa Plant, located southwest of the intersection of U.S. Highway 60 and FM Road 2300, approximately 5 miles southwest of the city of Pampa in Gray County Texas, has requested a Class 2 Compliance Plan Modification to the Texas Natural Resource Conservation Commission (TNRCC). The purpose of the modification request is to: 1.) Revise Table II of the Compliance Plan to reflect the recent addition of a new Ogallala Aquifer monitoring well (MW-094), and 2.) Remove the air stripping unit from the existing Ogallala Aquifer Remediation System (OARS) as described in Section II.G and II.C of the Compliance Plan. With regard to proposed modification 1.), the addition of a new Ogallala Aquifer monitoring well requires that the well be added to the list of compliance monitoring wells on the existing Compliance Plan. The well was completed as authorized by the Compliance Plan and the Approved work plan dated April 27, 1998 (JBM-165-98).

Proposed modification 2.) is intended to remove the air-stripping unit from the existing Ogallala Aquifer Remediation System. This is being done to improve the overall reliability of this pump and treat system. The air-stripping unit is no longer providing additional treatment of the retrieved groundwater. that at which treatment would be necessary, thus this piece of equipment is not necessary and will be removed.
