Carter to reveal emergency program

WASHINGTON (AP) — Nearly 17 years after President John F. Kennedy split the nation's emergency relief programs into separate agencies, Presdent Carter is preparing to combine them in his latest effort to streamline the federal bureaucracy.

Carter planned to unveil details of the program this afternoon at the White House.

Carter's reorganization project, which assembled the plan, said its 10-month study resulted in a "severe indictment" of the way the federal government has organized its response to national or localized emergencies.

The project, noting problems in the setup of the various programs, said "national security capabilities of civilian government at all levels have eroded considerably in the past decade."

Since 1973, the federal government has spent $2.9 billion on such programs.

Specifically, the report found:

—The federal government "lacks a clear and consistent understanding of the relationship between attack and peacetime preparedness activities."

—Duplication of programs to prepare for nuclear attack, floods, earthquakes and fires.

Such disasters involve not only the three principle disaster-relief agencies — the Federal Disaster Assistance Administration, the Defense Civil Preparedness Agency and the Federal Preparedness Agency — but also the Federal Insurance Administration, the National Weather Service, the U.S. Geological Survey and the National Fire Prevention and Control Administration.

—Poor anticipation of slowly developing emergencies, among them water and energy shortages.

"Natural phenomena like earthquakes, tornadoes and storms are not new, but industrial, urban and agricultural development has made us more vulnerable to their destructive power," the reorganization project's report said.

The Federal Disaster Assistance Administration, a division of the Department of Housing and Urban Development, oversees the distribution of federal funds to cities and states devastated by floods, storms and other disasters.

Tornado makes disaster of 'night out' on lake

By JIM DRINKARD

POMONA, Kan. (AP) — It was to be a night out on Lake Pomona — for celebrating anniversaries and enjoying a revival of the 1930s musical "Dames at Sea." But death lay waiting for at least 14 of the 60 people aboard the sternwheeler showboat Whippoorwill as it glided into a collision course with a tornado.

A 15th person, 9-year-old Melissa Wright, is missing and presumed dead.

The Rev. Milton Vogel, the missing girl's grandfather, also lost his wife, Grace, and his daughter, Sandra Wright, 37, mother of the missing girl. The elder Vogels were celebrating their 40th anniversary when the boat went over.

"I yelled and screamed and looked everywhere through the murky water, but there was nothing," said Willodean Schwartz, whose husband, Dr. Norman Schwartz, 48, was killed in the Saturday night accident.

Schwartz, a University of Missouri dentistry professor, and his wife were with a Central United Methodist Church group.

Mike and Judy Patterson were celebrating their fifth wedding anniversary when the black funnel killed Mrs. Patterson, 25, who was eight months pregnant.

"By the time we noticed it coming, we had less than two minutes," said Bruce Rogers, owner of the boat. "I told the pilot to head for the south shore as quickly as possible. I went below and told the engineer to go full speed ahead."

The 65-foot-long flat-bottom Whippoorwill had pulled away from the dock under clear skies shortly before 7 p.m. Saturday. At almost the same time, weather forecasters in Kansas City, Mo., studying satellite photographs and radar, issued a severe thunderstorm watch, according to Warren Sunkel of the National Weather Service in Topeka.

The tornado formed on the Dragon Creek branch of the lake, and entered the main channel, where it met the Whippoorwill.

Lawrence Stadel, owner of the nearby Lighthouse Bay Marina, saw the Whippoorwill go over about 100 yards from shore and rushed to the scene, where he pulled two people from beneath the craft.

Stadel found two young men, both with their heads barely above water in air pockets just large enough for them to breathe. He swam under the boat once for each of them and pulled them down and out from beneath the boat.

Royal Elder, who heads the boating division of the Kansas Forestry, Fish and Game Commission, said the boat, built by a Methodist minister and residents of the lake area in 1965, was seaworthy.

Divers gather at the stern of the showboat Whippoorwill early today to continue their search of Lake Pomona, where one person is still missing. A U.S. Army Corps of Engineers boat is visible in the foreground. (AP Laserphoto)

Israeli cabinet won't promise withdrawal

JERUSALEM (AP) — The Israeli cabinet has refused again to promise to relinquish the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip, saying Israel will negotiate the status of the territories five years after a peace agreement.

The cabinet, after a monthlong debate, adopted a policy statement Sunday which said that after five years of the limited self-rule Israel has promised the 1.1 million Palestinians in the two territories, "the nature of relations" between Israel, Jordan and the two territories "will be considered and agreed upon at the suggestion of any of the parties."

There was no immediate comment from Egypt. But President Anwar Sadat has never modified his demand that Israel agree to withdraw unconditionally from all the Arab territories it occupied in the 1967 Arab-Israeli War.

A Palestine Liberation Organization spokesman rejected the Israeli declaration, saying the Palestinians would "continue the struggle ... to liberate our homeland and set up our independent state."

The Israeli cabinet's 14-5 vote for the policy statement was a victory for Prime Minister Menachem Begin, who threatened to resign rather than accept an outright commitment to give up the two territories taken from Jordan and Egypt.

The statement evaded a U.S. proposal that Israel agree to discuss the "permanent status" of the territories after the fiveyear period. The Carter administration hoped this would signify enough give by Begin to get the Egyptians back to the negotiating table. But Israeli officials said this implied a commitment to decide the sovereignty of the two territories, and Begin contended that such an advance commitment would undermine Israel's position in future negotations.

A State Department spokesman in Washington said the U.S. government "will be consulting with each side about how to proceed on the basis of the Israeli response and the views developed in our exchanges with Egypt. At this stage we are not going to characterize either the Israeli response or the Egyptian views."

Woman still waiting for that certain meow

ROUSTIN' ABOUT with Ed Todd

One of the "saddest things" Eddi Anderson has ever experienced is the sight and sound of a mother cat grieving over the loss of her kittens.

The disquieted mother paces aimlessly and meows forlornly. Her kittens have been given away in the name of care.

Mrs. Anderson saw such a feline at that shelter of man-to-animal humanity called the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty of Animals.

The pangs of a lost litter will pass.

So, too, will fade with time the pain Mrs. Anderson is having over her missing Buster. It's a sad event in her life, and it's one of life's happenings that visit countless thousands of households.

More than three weeks ago, her live-in companion, the 3-year-old, green-eyed American shorthair she calls Buster, failed to greet her when she returned home from work.

She's still waiting for that certain meow.

"He just vanished into thin air," she said. "He's a real pretty cat, neutered, solid white . . . real gentle and real friendly."

The suspense of not knowing where he is, if he's all right, or what happened to him is causing Mrs. Anderson, a widow living alone, much anxiety.

"He may have been hit (by a car) and somebody threw him in the trash. It's causing me nightmares."

Or, considering how friendly he is, Mrs. Anderson surmises, too, that he may have jumped into somebody's car — coaxed or not — and got carried away to a new home.

"He takes up with people."

Since Buster's disappearance, Mrs. Anderson has been searching for her independent companion. Friends looked, too. She checked with the SPCA, the Animal Shelter, with neighbors and local businesses, such as a quick hamburger joint where Buster might have visited for a handout or a prowl. No luck.

She put a notice in the newspaper and over radio's airwaves.

"People have called and consoled me."

When Buster was with her, she didn't try to shackle him and take away his independence. Had she, she probably would have lost him for sure. She "let" him roam and visit.

He was free to come and go. Mrs. Anderson left food and water out in the garage for him when she was away at work. He could duck in for a snack and then head back outside, or under a shade tree for a nap, or do whatever an active cat does during the day.

"He likes to chase birds . . . and climb trees."

But those clanging metal tags on his collar would alert the birds of his being on the prowl.

She so much would like to hear from her Buster or, at least, about him.

"Someone somewhere knows what happened to my kitty."

She won't seriously consider, not yet, adopting another kitten from the SPCA or from the Animal Shelter.

"I don't want one (cat) just to replace him, because I don't think that's possible."

Many favor addition of Braniff

Eighty-two Midlanders have sent letters to the Midland Chamber of Commerce in support of Braniff Airways' becoming the fourth airline to serve Midland Regional Airport, chamber officials said today.

Bill Mewhorter, chairman of the chamber Aviation Committee, reminded interested businesses and individuals that Wednesday is the deadline for sending letters in support of a request by Braniff that the Civil Aeronautics Board allow the company to begin service here.

Braniff has proposed six flights daily between Midland-Odessa and Dallas-Fort Worth at times to connect with flights to points along the Braniff system. Single-plane, one-stop service would be provided to and from Chicago, New Orleans and New York.

Chamber officials have said the service is necessary with the June 1 discontinuation by Continental Airlines of four of its six daily flights between Midland-Odessa and Dallas-Fort Worth.

Chamber of Commerce officials in Midland and Odesaa are requesting businesses and individuals to send letters in support of the new service to the chamber offices.

"It is important that we remind all the businesses and individuals that they write these letters," Mewhorter said today.

He said he is convinced the CAB will take note of a "grass roots" letter-writing campaign and that the letters will weigh heavily in favor of granting Braniff's petition.

The address of the Midland chamber is P.O. Box 1890, Midland, 79702. The Odessa chamber address is P.O. Box 3626, Odessa, 79760.

Opponents request 'wet' vote recount

ABILENE, Texas (AP) — Opponents of a measure to permit alcoholic beverage sales in Abilene will ask for a recount of Saturday's election that "wet" supporters won by a narrow margin.

"It's too close," said Neil Fry, of Citizens for a Better Community. "They counted the thing in a hurry. There could be some mistakes made. It's worth checking."

Unofficial returns showed the vote was 11,591 for and 11,460 against. The Taylor County Commissioners' Court is expected to meet Tuesday to canvass the returns.

Fry said many student voters were out of town who have traditionally favored keeping Abilene "dry," as it has been since 1901.

In 1976, a similar election was held while Abilene Christian University, Hardin-Simmons and McMurry College were in regular session.

The outcome then was 53 percent to 47 percent against going wet.

"The colleges voted 6 to 1 dry in the last election," Fry said. "Saturday, there were probably 3,000 (student) votes out of town. They were our votes."

The ratio at the Abilene Christian box Saturday was about 85 percent to 15 percent against the "wet" proposal.

The Hardin-Simmons area voted down the proposal by about a 2-1 margin, and the outcome at the McMurry College area was about even.

Early reports from The Associated Press, which indicated the college areas voted for the proposal, were in error. They were, in fact, exactly reverse of the actual vote.

A spokesman for the pro-wet group that brought the issue to the voters said servicemen at Dyess Air Force base helped tip the election.

Mickey Holmes of Update 78 said Dyess was on a base alert at the time of the last election. Saturday the Dyess precinct produced 725 votes for liquor sales and 226 against.

"That was a big factor," Holmes said.

Once official, the measure will allow alcoholic beverages to be sold by the drink and from package stores.

Impact, a small community within Abilene, is already wet. Alcoholic beverages are sold in Abilene only at private clubs.

Pioneer oilman, 71, dies rites planned Wednesday

Alden S. Donnelly, 71, pioneer Midland oilman and former executive vice president of the former Hololulu Oil Corp., died in his home, 1505 W. Ohio St., Sunday morning. He had been in failing health the last several months.

Graveside services will be held at 1:30 p.m. Wednesday in Resthaven Memorial Park, under the direction of the Newnie W. Ellis Funeral Home. The Rev. Sam Hulsey, rector of the Episcopal Church of the Holy Trinity, will officiate at the rites.

Donnelly was born Apr. 29, 1907, at Denver, Colo., and was graduated from the Colorado School of Mines with a degree in geological engineering in 1928. He and Adelaide Field were married Oct. 9, 1929.

Donnelly came to Midland soon after his graduation from college as a scout and geologist for Honolulu Oil Corp. He was advanced to division engineer in 1944; division superintendent in 1945 and to vice president and director in 1949. He was transferred from Midland to the company's San Francisco headquarters in 1958, and was promoted to executive vice president for exploration, development and production in April 1960.

He returned to Midland in 1961 as a consulting geologist-engineer, after Honolulu's assets had been sold to Pan American Petroleum Corp.

Donnelly served as treasurer of the Independent Petroleum Association of America in 1965-66.

He was a former member of the Industry Advisory committees of the Petroleum Engineering Department at Texas Tech University and of the Petroleum Engineering School of The University of Texas.

He served as an officer with the Corps of Engineers during World War II.

He was a former director of the Midland Chamber of Commerce and the Texas Research League. He also had been active and held offices in various trade and professional organizations, including the West Texas Geological Society, Geological Society of America, Society of Economic Paleontologists and Mineralogists, Texas Mid-Continent Oil & Gas Association, Permian Basin Petroleum Association and others.

Prop 13 threatens federal money

The Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON — Like a giant pair of scissors, Proposition 13 is not only slashing through the budgets of California's state and local governments but threatening to cut off the state's claim to some $5.3 billion a year in federal aid.

At stake are federal funds California uses for such basic necessities as child support, medical help, sewers, schools and libraries — 215 federal aid programs in all. To qualify for the funds, state and local governments must put up some of their own money each year — money which may not be available after July 1, when Proposition 13's 57 percent property tax cut goes into effect.

While California officials scramble to decide which of these programs they can do without, federal officials and Congress are bracing themselves for what they believe wil be a deluge of requests for special help. And some believe there are extremely painful decisions ahead.

"We're facing what may be a social triage situation," said a federal official, waiting for the onslaught of emergency requests. "What do you save — hospitals? Welfare? Education? Libraries? We have to wait for the state and the counties to make their budget decisions. We're at the end of a long chain of dominoes and we're waiting for them to fall."

"I would bet you every California agency will be on the doorstep of Congress and the White House asking for dough," said Rep. Timothy E. Wirth, D-Colo., one of five House members who have formed a Proposition 13 study group with the blessing of the House leadership.

"It will create a very interesting pubic policy question," Wirth said. "How much do we give to bail out programs in California that the voters have chosen to chop off? Should taxpayers in Colorado and South Carolina pay to prevent lowered services in California?"

Congress' reponse to helping California is "viciously negative," Wirth concluded. Unlike New York's financial problem, California's was created willingly by the voters, he noted.

"The natural response is, 'You made your bed, now lie in it,'" agreed Rep. Lionel Van Deerlin, D-Calif.

Van Deerlin's statement illustrates the quandary California's 43 members of the House and its two senators are in. Normally they try to wrest as many federal dollars for their state as they can. Now many are concerned that if California gets special treatment, it could set a dangerous precedent for other states joining the tax revolt.

"If we start doing this for California, we have to do it for every state," said Rep. Augustus F. Hawkins, D-Calif., who has championed federal bail-outs for local problems in the past.

Hawkins dissuaded Rep. Jim Lloyd, D-Calif., from introducing an amendment that would have bent the rules for California by allowing the state's 76,000 federally paid Comprehensive Employment Training Act employees to replace locally paid workers being laid off. (Of these 76,000 workers, 46,000 are so-called "public service" employees who work for cities, counties and other local government agencies. The rest are employees of nonprofit agencies such as Community Chest or of labor unions or private industry.)

Faced with unsympathetic attitudes in Washington, some California officials are said to be considering ways to overlook the federal matching requirements and keep spending federal money even if it violates the law.

"School district officials are looking for (federally funded) places to put those teachers," said a state education official. "They can't do it legally. But they can hope that three years from now, when the auditors catch up to them, they'll have retired."

Some communities might divert federal funds illegally to pay for basic services, according to Jim Seeley, Los Angeles' Washington lobbyists.

He said that California cities will be tempted to use federal money already in the pipeline "for other things," even though "federal agencies are going to be screaming."

Some Washington officials are worried that special federal assistance may backfire. They say that if California's cutback is cushioned with federal dollars, people in the state could fail to recognize "the negative impact" of their tax revolt.

She is a working judge's judge

MIAMI (AP) — The "court in session" light over the courtroom door is burning overtime. Judge Ellen Morphonios, alarmed by her case backlog, has been starting court early and running it late — sometimes working three juries at once.

Ms. Morphonios, a self-described "statistics nut," says her goal is to try cases within 60 days, largely by refusing to grant continuances for the defense.

On May 21 she had the ninthlargest backlog of cases among Dade County's 12 felony judges. Now her backlog is the fourth smallest.

"I was guilty of letting things slide," the judge confessed. "I'd go to a meeting, return late in the day, be tired. And I'd wait until the next day to begin a trial."

No longer. Since last month, she has often had three juries going — one being selected, one hearing testimony and a third deliberating.

She ordered a rape trial to begin 30 days after the suspect was indicted. She began the trial of a man accused of killing a police officer less than a month after the slaying.

But Ms. Morphonios' decisions have produced grumbling among defense attorneys, who warn that her tactics may ultimately overturn her cases.

"One of these days, an appeals court is going to decide that a defendant has been deprived of his legal right to counsel if there hasn't been time to prepare an adequate defense," says attorney Philip Carlton. "And it becomes utterly impossible to prepare some of the cases in the time that's provided."

Her pace is already being challenged in the murder conviction of Manual Valle, who was sentenced to death for the shooting of a Coral Gables policeman. The trial began 24 days after Valle's arraignment.

"Of course I was hampered," said David Goodhart, one of Valle's lawyers. "There was no time to pursue cetain defenses. I asked for continuances without success."

More of same weather likely

It may be getting monotonous, but the weatherman predicts fair and warm weather through Tuesday.

The high Tuesday is expected to be in the low 90s, and tonight's low, near 70. Winds should be from the south to southeast at 15 to 20 mph tonight, according to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport.

Sunday's high was 92 degrees, and this morning's low was 70 degrees.

Area weather was clear and hot this morning.

Skies were clear to partly cloudy over most of Texas this morning except for scattered thundershowers along the lower Gulf Coast.

The station never looked so good

PITTSBURGH (AP) — The baggage room features oysters and the tinkling of cocktail glasses and piano keys. The waiting room is crowded with dining tables spread below a vaulted expanse of stained glass. The Pittsburgh & Lake Erie Railroad terminal is no longer your standard train station.

Once filled with passengers who wore bowler hats and boas and waited for trains such as the Empire Limited and the Cleveland Flyer, the terminal is now the Grand Concourse, a lavish restaurant.

Other communities have converted old unused passenger train stations into restaurants and bars, but few can boast the Grand Concourse's marble-like columns, ornamental plaster, brass fixtures and mahogany woodwork all restored to turn-of-the-century splendor.

The restaurant is the first completed segment of a $120 million commercial redevelopment project on the south bank of the Monongahela River that is expected to provide 3,000 jobs and increase retail and tourist business for the city.

The rail terminal was built in 1901 at the height of passenger service by the Pittsburgh & Lake Erie, which still thrives as a profitable freight carrier.

About 400 of the restaurant's 500 tables are set under the stained glass ceiling that covers the terminal's two-story main waiting room.

"Most people in Pittsburgh have never seen the windows," said cigar-smoking owner Chuck Muer. "At night the whole place is just a jewel box."

Muer is a third generation restauranteur whose corporation owns 14 restaurants, including a restored railroad station in Ann Arbor, Mich., and a onetime fire station in Columbus, Ohio.

The train shed vestibule has been converted into the kitchen. The old station dining room and the former ladies waiting room are also dining areas and the former baggage room is a saloon and oyster bar.

The stained glass, which was painted black during World War II, was restored and backlighted and the dining areas were decorated with railroad memorabilia.

The restaurant, which specializes in fresh seafood trucked from the Great Lakes and flown daily from Boston, has attracted as many as 1,100 diners on peak weekend nights. Reservations are sometimes booked two weeks in advance.

Weekend thunderstorms kill at least 17 persons

By The Associated Press

A wave of tornado-spawning weekend thunderstorms left at least 17 persons dead and caused widespread damage and scattered power outages in parts of the Midwest and Northeast.

In Pomona, Kan., about 40 miles from Topeka, a tornado Saturday night overturned the sternwheeler showboat Whippoorwill on Lake Pomona, leaving 14 persons dead and a 15th missing and presumed dead.

In Salt Lake City, high winds brought the Salt Lake Festival of the Arts to a premature close and slightly injured a man who was among five persons pulled 20 feet in the air Sunday while trying to hold down a parachute awning suspended over a stage.

The Salt Lake City Fire Department said the unidentified man received a bruised hip, but refused to be taken to a hospital and was treated at the scene by paramedics.

The National Weather Service said wind gusts of 40 to 50 mph were reported in the Salt Lake Valley Sunday afternoon.

Two men were struck and killed by lightning, and wind ripped off part of the roof of a Columbus, Ohio, bowling alley Sunday as severe thunderstorm watches were in effect for much of Ohio.

Leetonia police said Gary F. Indermill, and William R. Hall, both 30 and both from Leetonia, were struck by lightning while they attended a picnic at a sportsmen's club.

In Columbus, high winds tore an estimated 7,000 square feet of roofing from the Sequoia Lanes bowling alley.

Police seeking robber

ODESSA — A man described in his early 20's reportedly robbed an Odessa convenience store early this morning.

Captain Jack Fillyaw of the Odessa Police Department said today that a man entered the store at approximately 12:30 a.m. and demanded money. He made the clerk open the cash register and took an undisclosed amount.

The discription given to the police was that of a white male, 5 foot 9 inches tall, 140 to 160 pounds with blond hair. The clerk said he was wearing blue jeans, no shirt, a navy pea coat, tennis shoes and a white baseball cap. He carried a small caliber revolver, the clerk reportedly told police.

He was last seen going eastbound from the store.

The police have no one in custody, Fillyaw said.

Returnable study asked

AUSTIN BUREAU

AUSTIN — Conflicting statistics on the potential impact of a law which would require returnable bottles and cans — or a bounty on disposal beverage containers — brought about a call from a New Braunfels House members for an assessment of the Texas litter situation.

Rep. Bennie Bock chairing a Liquor Regulation subcommittee considering returnable beverage container legislation proposals, agreed with several bottle bill speakers that the information provided by the beverage production and distribution industry, and that from environmentalists and several private citizens, conflicts on such issues as potential costs or decreases in beverage prices for consumers, decreases in litter, and impact on jobs of those working in the industry.

"My feeling is that Texas doesn't have the statistics that we would like to see before proceeding with any type of legislation," Bock said.

Bock's subcommittee will be drafting recommendations for possible bills — or studies — to be considered by the next Legislative session beginning in January.

Jim Marston, representing the National Resources Defense Council, told the panel that a mandatory bottle deposit law would reduce litter, reduce the consumption of energy used to produce and dispose of nonreturnable containers, reduce the amont of solid waste which cities must deal with, conserve natural resources that go into disposable containers, and likely reduce the price of the product to the consumer.

"By refilling bottles, 81,000 barrels of oil could be saved," Marston said, adding that Oregon, which has a bottle bill, has saved enough energy to heat 50,000 homes.

Marston said a Texas bottle bill should combine the best attributes of the legislation passed in Oregon and five other states, including a provision to protect workers who might be laid off or relocated by the changeover.

He suggested that a minimum of five cents be required for a deposit on bottle or can to give an adequate economic incentive to return the containers, and further proposed that all flip-top or pull-tabs be banned because of the safety and litter probelms they present.

Richard Craig, representing the Texas Food Marketing Association, told the subcommittee that surveys conducted by his group show there would be an increase in storage cost at supermarkets.

Greatest menace yet

Ordinarily, the 15 member nations of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization are represented at annual conferences by foreign ministers or their equivalents.

The NATO summit in Washington with the heads of state was only the fifth such session in the 29-year history of the organization and, therefore, of unusual significance.

But it was the confluence of forces and developments that made this gathering of NATO chieftans really important.

It was a case of close huddling against the icy winds from Moscow. The massive military power of the Soviet Union looms as a greater menace perhaps than at any time since fears of Russian aggression prompted the formation of the alliance in 1949.

The Russians are seen as the greatest threat to China's security in Asia; their advance with Cuban troops into Africa threatens to engulf that continent; and their mobilized armies in Eastern Europe far exceed any purely defensive concept.

The increasing Soviet pressures on these continents have broadened NATO's concern, formerly restricted to the defense of Western Europe, to include Africa and the Middle East, which Europe must look to for much of its oil. The spirited reaction of France and Belgium, assisted by the United States, in rescuing European hostages from rebel invaders of Zaire had a strong NATO complexion and reflected Western Europe's alarm over Soviet advances into Africa.

By a felicitous coincidence, the Washington meeting provided a sounding board for a toughened Carter administration stance against Soviet aggression.

President Carter's pledge of all-out American response to a Soviet attack on Europe, which is a basic part of the NATO treaty anyway, served, nevertheless, to reassure Europeans who have had doubts about the President's leadership and his will.

But amid the reassurances and the satisfaction over NATO's record of forestalling Soviet aggression in Europe for the last three decades there was one unresolved fear that concessions made by the United States in the strategic arms negotiations with the Soviet Union will cripple NATO defenses.

European members of NATO, for example, want cruise missiles with a range of up to 2,500 kilometers in order to forestall a massive mobilization of Soviet forces in Eastern Europe which would precede a Russian attack against the West.

In the SALT talks, however, the United States has agreed to limit cruise missile ranges to 600 kilometers, except when deployed on a limited number of heavy bombers.

So, if the Senate approves the SALT II treaty, U.S. forces in NATO would be precluded from deploying the kind of cruise missiles believed to be necessary to defend Western Europe.

This one consideration promises to make real trouble for the administration in obtaining ratification by the United States Senate.

Under such circumstances the President may find that he must choose between SALT and NATO.

This could be a momentous decision for the President.

What would you do under such a condition, with the icy winds blowing in from Moscow?

Alexander Solzhenitsyn speaking at Harvard said in effect that we Americans are getting fat and lazy. He didn't get much applause since most of the students were asleep.

The Russian writer cited the materialism, the lack of moral values, the spiritual vacuum, the superficiality and intolerable music — and that was in Vermont.

Solzhenitsyn lives in Vermont which everyone knows is a hodge-podge of tinsel, neon and glitter. He should get around and see the real American — in Las Vegas.

CHARLEY REESE

Menachem Begin: One of world's great leaders

By CHARLEY REESE
Sun Belt Syndicate

ORLANDO, Fla. — There are few leaders and many politicians and tyrants in the world today, but one of the genuinely great leaders is Menachem Begin, the prime minister of Israël.

Begin commanded the Irgun, the Jewish underground, which revolted against the British when they ruled Palestine. In one of the most brilliant urban guerilla campaigns in history, the Irgun drove the British out.

Begin has been called a terrorist by his enemies and the British put a $40,000 price on his head, but Begin's men did not make war on civilians. They attacked the British Army. They raided army posts and jails and drove the British into armed and fortified compounds and then attacked those. When the British hanged Irgun soldiers, Begin had British soldiers hanged; when the British publicly whipped Irgun prisoners, Begin had British officers publicly whipped. With only a few, Begin's organization totally frustrated an army of 84,000 men.

His book, "The Revolt," reveals a man who is a rare combination of intellectual, idealist and realist. In our political terminology, Begin would be called a conservative, for he is a strong believer in individual liberty and free enterprise. Much of the criticism directed at him comes from the Israeli socialists whose party he finally ousted from power.

In the introduction of his book, he faces squarely the question of hate and his words have meaning for us because we occupy the same world the state of Israel occupies.

"Who will condemn the hatred of evil that springs from the love of what is good and just?" he writes. "Such hatred has been the driving force of progress in the world's history — not peace but a sword in the cause of mankind's advancement. And in our case, such hate has been nothing more and nothing less than a manifestation of that highest human feeling: love. For if you love freedom, you must hate slavery; if you love your people, you cannot but hate the enemies that compass their destruction; if you love your country, you cannot but hate those who seek to annex it. Simply put, if you love your mother, would you not hate the man who sought to kill her; would you not hate him and fight him at the cost, if need be, of your own life?

"This is a fundamental human question in the violent and stormy world of today. Let every decent man search his soul and decently answer. Because ultimately the hope of every people lies in the readiness of its sons to stake their lives 'for their mothers' — for freedom which man loves, against serfdom which man hates and should hate in the name of his love."

Later, Begin writes of the spirit necessary to win a struggle for freedom. "Only a man's whole spirit must be utterly devoted to his ideal, and he must be prepared to give his life for it. Perhaps this is the only condition. All the rest will come of itself. If you have anvil (love of your country) and the hammer (the ideal of freedom) you will undubitably find the iron from which to fashion the weapons for the struggle."

This is the same spirit that sparked the American Revolution. The key, as both Begin and Patrick Henry recognized, is the willingness to put your life on the line for your ideals. Without that commitment on the part of citizens, no nation can survive.

Henry said, "The gentlemen may cry, Peace, peace! But there is no peace . . . Is life so dear or peace so sweet as to be purchased at the price of chains and slavery? Forbid it, Almighty God. I know not what course others may take, but as for me, give me liberty or give me death."

As Begin said we live in a violent and stormy world and as Henry said there is no peace. The world sinks into a quagmire of despotism; the enemies of the United States grow more powerful and bold day by day. The air smells of war.

Yet, in Washington, we hear no spirited defense of liberty and country, but instead petulant complaints that the Soviets aren't acting nice and frightened whimperings of "better red than dead."

Where is the hammer and where is the anvil? In Menachem Begin, the Israelis have a leader of courage and honesty. We have yet to find such a man.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

European leaders discuss Carter

By JACK ANDERSON

WASHINGTDN — In a chateau outside Paris, the leaders of France and West Germany recently got into a discussion about President Carter. Intelligence reports describe the meeting as unscheduled and their conversation as spontaneous. Yet both French President Giscard d'Esteing and German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt found themselves in sad agreement that Carter has been a disappointment.

They shared the view that the Western allies could no longer look to Washington for leadership, that Carter was too inexperienced and indecisive. The signals from the White House, they agreed, were confused and inconsistent. They also sensed that he didn't have the stomach to stand up to the Soviets.

Yet only last January, Carter returned from Paris confident that he had made a strong, favorable impression. He reported to the Cabinet on Jan. 9 that his visit to France had been "exhilerating." He rattled on, according to the confidential minutes, about d'Estaing's welcoming speech delivered "in both French and English," the 4,500 people who came out to honor him at a banquet in Versailles and the private discussions which he described as "substantive."

The president told his Cabinet there was only "one negative aspect of the trip." He identified this as "the repeated concern with the shakiness of the dollar, which foreign leaders blame on our failure to enact energy legislation and, therefore, reduce our dependence on foreign oil."

Apparently it was a mistake for Carter to dismiss these misgivings as merely "one negative aspect." Both d'Estaing and Schmidt agreed that the decline of the dollar and the American thirst for oil threatened the stability of the West.

They had good reason, according to intelligence reports, to be apprehensive. The reports warn that the world is rolling toward a dangerous energy shortage unless the United States stops wasting oil. Americans possess the wealth and power to siphon off all the oil they want, but this will leave the rest of the world critically short of oil in just a few years.

The International Energy Agency is trying desperately to avert a world energy crisis. But its confidential projections show that the United States must cut its oil imports in half to prevent a world calamity.

The president is concerned about the energy warnings, but his confidence has been shaken in the CIA assessment. He received some grim CIA projections last February that U.S. oil consumption would rise alarmingly through the mid-1980s. But he secretly advised the Cabinet on Feb. 6 that he had seen "some evidence to contradict the CIA figures." It later leaked out that some CIA figures, indeed, were wrong.

On April 10, Interior Secretary Cecil Andrus cited a geological study which claimed the oil and gas supplies in Alaska "look good." But he admitted that the expectations from other U.S. oil fields "have been moderated." The president, meanwhile, has refused to share the pessimism of his European allies. When Commerce Secretary Juanita Kreps came to him for instructions before flying to Berlin recently for talks with European leaders, Carter urged her to maintain "a positive attitude."

He will be flying to Bonn himself next month for an economic summit conference with world leaders. The confrontation may be critical.

•

CHINESE WHISPERS: Chinese leaders have quietly urged the United States to go ahead with the controversial neutron bomb. Presumably, the Chinese would like the United States to deploy the bomb in Western Europe. This would increase the military pressure on the Soviet Union's western flank and, thereby, reduce the pressure on China's borders.

Nor was President Carter's decision to defer the production of neutron weapons popular with our European allies. The decision stirred a heated discussion behind the closed doors of the NATO command. Military leaders expressed their displeasure to Defense Secretary Harold Brown when he visited Europe last April.

The Chinese attitude, meanwhile, raised speculation inside the Pentagon that China might attempt to build its own neutron bomb in the future. U. S. experts don't think China now has the technology to produce neutron weapons.

•

CARTER VS. DOCTORS: President Carter has antagonized the nation's doctors. His support of national health insurance has raised their hackles. Then last month, he attacked organized medicine as the "major obstacle" to health care in the United States.

Afterward Labor Secretary Ray Marshall advised Carter that he was in hot water with the American Medical Association. Quipped Carter: "When I was governor of Georgia, I was in so much trouble with the Georgia doctors that I was afraid to get sick."

INSIDE REPORT:

Schlesinger again enters national security arena

By ROWLAND EVANS AND ROBERT NOVAK

WASHINGTON — During the first week of June, Secretary of Energy James Schlesinger hand-carried a top secret letter to President Carter's office that for the first time injected him squarely into the turmoil over arms control and national security within the administration.

Schlesinger's letter to the president aligned him with the Joint Chiefs of Staff (JCS) against the proposed five-year "zero-yield" nuclear test ban treaty — a ban on all underground explosions, including the 150-kiloton tests now permitted. As head of the department assigned the duty of certifying the nation's nuclear arsenal, Schlesinger warned Mr. Carter that nuclear testing is essential to maintain warhead reliability. If asked or directed to testify before Congress, he would say just that.

This gave the uniformed military a badly needed cabinet-level civilian to help slow the rush to a total test ban. In a broader sense, it reintroduced a seasoned bureaucratic disputant into the debate over how many national security risks can be taken for the sake of arms controls.

Schlesinger's courageous though indiscreet advocacy of higher arms spending in 1975 ended with President Ford firing him as Secretary of Defense. As the only Republican in the Carter cabinet, discretion has been Schlesinger's watchword. He says nothing publicly about national security, and nobody has ever heard him utter one critical word, on or off the record, about Jimmy Carter (in contrast to his sometimes pungent off-duty remarks about Richard Nixon and Gerald Ford when he was a cabinet member for them).

But in fact Schlesinger has been distressed by national security policy, particularly by chief disarmament negotiator Paul Warnke's operations. Schlesinger is perceived by some defense-oriented Democrats in Congress as Mr. Carter's ultimate salvation, whom he eventually will call upon to pick up the pieces. But to do this, Schlesinger must establish a record of having warned the president that present policies lead to disaster.

How can this be done unless Schlesinger throws discretion to the winds and trespasses directly into national security? The answer is that the legal jurisdiction of his new Department of Energy includes the nuclear-testing laboratories formerly under the old Atomic Energy Commission; Schlesinger has the duty of certifying the reliability of the national stockpile.

Schlesinger's experts at the Energy Department began early to obstruct Warnke's push for quick negotiations of a zero-yield test ban treaty. With atmospheric tests barred by the 1963 treaty and underground tests limited to 150 kilotons by the 1974 treaty, the national laboratories say it is already difficult to certify reliability of the stockpile; with no testing it will be impossible. As for the Soviets, only continual on-site inspection could verify compliance with a zero-yield ban, and Moscow flatly rejects it.

Such misgivings by both Department of Energy and JCS experts led to their exclusion from hush-hush Anglo-American talks here in mid-April. Nor were they consulted before Mr. Carter signed Presidential Decision Memorandum 38 on May 20, calling for a five-year "comprehensive" (presumably zero-yield) treaty with the Russians.

Schlesinger concluded that certain high officials — Warnke and to a lesser degree Secretary of State Cyrus Vance — had forced this process too quickly. He felt it was time a high civilian official gave the Joint Chiefs some help. While privately voicing reservations about a five-year zero-yield pact, Secretary of Defense Harold Brown has made no pitch against it. In closed-door testimony before the Senate Armed Services Committee last week, he conceded the difficulties of verification but offered the questionable argument that the treaty would discourage nuclear proliferation.

Thus, Schlesinger decided to hand-carry his letter to the president. Its distribution was limited, with copies outside the Energy Department going only to Brown and national security adviser Zbigniew Brzezinski. However, Schlesinger wanted publicly to disclose his views; he was prepared to do so a few days later on "Meet the Press" but the question was not asked.

With the president repeatedly on record for banning all nuclear tests (that is, zero-yield) and having signed PDM-38 nearly a month ago, the debate would seem to be over. But few decisions are ever final in the Carter administration, particularly when the persuasive Schlesinger makes a serious move.

With both the Joint Chiefs and Schlesinger now on record against a zero-yield test ban, a potent threat has been raised to the grand strategy of the arms control lobby: to push a test ban treaty ahead of SALT II on grounds it would be harder to oppose and would improve the climate for the broader treaty.

The re-entry of Jim Schlesinger into national security affairs, if only narrowly, transcends the test ban treaty. For 16 months some national security policymakers have been congratulating themselves that Schlesinger's intellect and combativeness were safely harnessed to the daily drudgery of natural gas pricing. Now that he has stepped out of that harness, congratulations of a different sort may be in order.

Old hot water system now making comeback

By RICHARD I. GERSON
Special to The Washington Post

Bone Weary Oregon Trail emigrants hoofing it west used to soak happily in a natural hot spring just east of today's downtown Boise, sometimes cooking up a nice hot meal there without so much as lighting a match.

As Idaho boomed along to statehood, the old warm water hole gave consistent aid and comfort to miners, timbermen and farmers who settled in.

And by 1890, Boise residents were reflecting seriously on what to do with the "truly colossal hot water heater" that Idaho's first governor, George L. Shoup, was sure lay beneath their feet, bubbling above the ground at the hot spring nearby.

Even the best-informed Boise burghers then had little confidence that great gushes of warm water from the underground reservoir would flow constantly for 90 years and probably a good deal longer. Still, a group of inventive town fathers of the '90s drilled two artesian wells, laid out a network of wooden pipes and hooked up the hot water heating system to two rows of Victorian mansions along Warm Springs Avenue. Next they formed the Artesian Hot an Cold Water Co., extending their natural home heating system to 400 houses at its peak, all the while assuming it would continue to work cleanly, cheaply and indefinitely.

It has, and last year modern scientific methods certified their foresight. With 40 percent of U.S. energy going to heat space, and while most other U.S. cities are still wondering where all that energy will come from, Boise leaders are now taking steps to modernize the old system.

More important, the city plans to tap more deeply into what geologists from the Idaho National Engineering Laboratory believe is enough underground hot water to heat all the buildings throughout the city's metropolitan area. The goal is to cut down or eliminate the use of expensive, waning natural gas and other fuels in favor of hot water pumped directly from the earth.

The city is gearing up a major move to lay new pipes, leading first to a redevelopment district and other areas downtown. In the last six months, its Energy Task Force has secured commitments from the managers of 18 public and private buildings next to the redevelopment area, and from Boise State University to tie its campus into the new heating district. At that point, the still-expanding system will heat 2 million square feet of space geothermally. Savings before newly proposed federal incentives take effect are expected to be 25 percent of next year's fuel costs in Boise, and the equivalent of 20,000 barrels of oil annually.

When Boise's Energy Task Force began planning this, there were some doubts. Would the hot underground reservoir continue to last? Would longtime users lose heat or pressure if service were expanded? new flow and pressure tests have helped to answer these and other questions.

There are fewer doubters now, especially since new evidence was released early last winter of what experts say is enough hot water to heat Boise well into the next century and maybe a good deal longer. To check today's cost of heating buildings larger than homes with the earth's hot water, the state began piping it into a health laboratory last year. In the effort moving forward now, eight federal, nine state and 12 city agencies have taken action geared to the starting of the system within 18 months. The Economic Development Administration has joined the department of Energy and plans to put money into the facilities that will be installed.

Meanwhile, some nearby gardeners are using the underground water to heat big greenhouses. Others are investigating piping it into the open fields to thaw the ground in winter, and into sprinkling systems to combat frost. The manager of one big food plant 60 miles west of Boise wants to find out if it can use underground hot water in his processing. In Boise, they have found the undergound waters to be a constant 170 degrees Fahrenheit, a good temperature for large-scale heating. If it were 30 degrees hotter, it could be used for absorption refrigeration and air conditioning too.

That could prove to be the case in the Rio Grande Basin, including major population centers at Albuquerque and El Paso. The New Mexico Legislature has been considering a bill calling for a community or industrial heating project, and will doubtless take it up again next session. Klamath Falls, Ore., is trying to expand an existing heating system. Other places where uses of geothermal energy are being explored include Hawaii, Alaska and several towns in South Dakota, Louisiana and Texas. Recent exploration in the eastern United States reveals signs of potential underground reserves from Delaware to Georgia. Even New Jersey has possibilities.

One of the likeliest places to find out what's been going on with geothermally heated homes and other buildings is Iceland. In Reykjavik, virtually all buildings are heated by energy from geothermal waters. Theswitchover from coal has cleaned up the city visibly, and the customers are more than satisifed with the price.

Other countries — Japan, Hungary, France, the U.S.S.R., China, Italy, Mexico, New Zealand, El Salvador — are tapping hot undergroundwater. Paris plans to heat hundreds of thousands of apartments within the next 10 years using geothermal heat. Budapest and several Soviet communities use geothermal energy, while technical and economic analysts from about 40 other countries are trying to build on what has already been learned. Some of them have found fluid underground that is hot enough to generate elecric power; virtually all of them have warm waters available for heat.

One place where the underground waters are hot enough to make the generation of electric power feasible is the Imperial Valley-Salton Sea area of southern California, and large amounts of electric power based on geothermal resources are anticipated there. Problems to be overcome relate to the fact that the fluids are very salty and therefore corrosive.

Cubans in Angola said to be protecting Gulf

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — The United States has protested sharply the presence of Cuban troops in Angola. Ironically, part of those troops' military task is to guard the operations and workers of a major U.S. corporation Gulf Oil of Pittsburgh.

Behind a protective screen of about 2,000 Cubans, by State Department estimate, Gulf's 125 offshore wells pump 122,000 barrels per day of petroleum to be shipped to the United States, Japan and Europe. While official U.S. aid to Angola is prohibited by act of Congress, the taxes and royalties from Gulf Oil are estimated to provide 60 to 80 percent of the Angolan government's operating revenue.

• ENERGY OIL & GAS •

The Cuban troops are in Angola to make sure the oil, and the revenue, keep flowing. The explicit threat to the pumping operation is a guerrilla force, backed by neighboring Zaire, which calls for the secession of oil-rich enclave of Cabinda, a legacy of Portuguese colonialism. Another presumed threat arises from Angolan insurgents who contest the rule of the Moscow-backed Luanda regime.

At the international political level bitter rhetoric continues, with no sign that Washington is ready even to grant diplomatic recognition to the Havana and Moscow-backed Luanda regime. At the business level, calm and compromise have characterized nearly completed negotiations between Angola and Gulf over the terms of a new contract. The Angolan side's consultant in the negotiations is no Marxist firebrand but another prominent U.S. firm — Arthur D. Little, the management experts from Cambridge, Mass. $The divergence of economics and politics is a familiar fact of current international life, but rarely is the contradiction as spectacular as this one. U.S. Ambassador to the United Nations Andrew Young, who has cited the Angolan and Cuban role in protecting Gulf in arguing against a Cold War perspective on Africa, was careful to say that the Angolan regime ws "not doing us any favor" but taking the action because it needs the money.

Young, in a recent interview with U.S. News & World Report, estimated the Gulf operations in Angola at "almost $1 billion worth of oil a year." A U.S. intelligence agency official told congressional sources that Gulf's payments to Angola are $600 to $800 million yearly. Oil industry sources put the figure closer to $600 million. Gulf will give no current figure, but said Angola received tax and royalty payments from Gulf last year of $460 million.

In a statement furnished last week to the Africa subcommittee of the House Internatinal Relations Committee, Gulf said that "the cooperation of the governent of Angola with Gulf in maintaining its production operation and in providing security for its employees and installation has been excellent." A Gulf spokesman in Pittsburgh said, "We've had good relationships" in Angola and that employees have experienced "no trouble that is known" in pursuing their jobs. According to the statement furnished to Congress, Gulf had 248 Angolan and 35 foreign employees in Angola as of April, including 23 Americans.

Indicating its optimism, Gulf reported to the House subcommittee that it plans to initiate new projects costing $83 million in its Angolan operations this year, with about half of the sum to be furnished by Angola under new contractual arrangements. The investments will include a "gas injection" system for existing wells and drilling for new offshore wells in the Atlantic. Such projects are usually undertaken only in situations where operations and return of capital over a long period of time are expected.

A senior State Department official dealing in U.S. Policy in Africa said of Gulf's Angola operation, "Everybody knows it's there but it doesn't come up very much. It's taken for granted that this is going on ... I guess it just shows that people can be pragmatic."

UT-Arlington plans expansion of program

Despite the harsh comments of President Carter and other high officials about Angolan and Cuban responsibility for last month's cross-border attack on Zaire's Shaba Province, the State Department continues to advise U.S. businessmen, on a pragmatic level, that "we have no objection" to business deals and investments in Angola.

The Boeing Co., which sold several commercial jets to Angola and is installing air traffic control systems in Angola's network of commercial airports, is second to Gulf in U.S. business operations in the African country. Mobil Oil, Texaco, Cities Service and National Cash Register are also reported to do business there. And business sources said New York's Morgan Guaranty Bank recently held amicable discussions with Angola's ministry of finance about possible financial deals.

Dr. Charles I. Smith, chairman of the Department of Geology at The University of Texas at Arlington, has announced that the school's Master of Science program in Geology will be expanded starting with the fall semester.

The program is being coordinated by the Permian Basin Graduate Center in Midland and is offered with the cooperation of The University of Texas of the Permian Basin.

The degree corresponds to degrees earned in residence at UT-Arlington.

Applications for admission now are being accepted at the Permian Basin Graduate Center Office, 105 W. Illinois St., Midland.

Admission requirements to the program, curriculum and thesis requirements are the same for resident students at Arlington.

Normally, a one-year's residence on the Arlington campus is required; however, in this program, the residency requirements may be met by enrollment in at least one two-week intensive course given on the Arlington campus. A student can become a full or parttime student on the Arlington campus any semester he choses.

Two graduate geology courses are planned to be offered each semester and one in the summer if there is sufficient demand.

An average of 10 enrollments per course is necessary to meet minimum enrollment requirements of the Texas College and University System Coordinating Board.

Also, nine hours of approved 400-level undergraduate courses from UTPB or UTA may apply toward the degree if taken for graduate credit. Up to 12 hours of transfer credit may be given for graduate courses taken at other universities within the last five years, subject to approval by the geology graduate faculty.

Students enrolled in the program, should, therefore, be able to earn sufficient credits to complete course work requirements within two years.

Dr. Jack G. Elam, president of the Permian Basin Graduate Center, has been appointed Adjunct Professor by U.T.A. and will serve as Graduate Advisor in Midland.

For application, admission requirements, and general information, persons should contact the PBGC in Midland.

Tri Service schedules two Ector operations

Tri Service Drilling Co. of Midland has announced locations for a pair of projects in the Circle Bar, East (Atoka) pool of East Ector County.

Each of the tests will drill to 11,200 feet.

No. 2 Fasken is 660 feet from north and west lines of section 17, block 41, T-1-N, G&MMB&A survey and 3,000 feet northwest of production.

Tri Service No. 3 Fasken is 660 feet from north and 1,980 feet from west lines of section 32, block 41, T-1-N, G&MMB&A survey.

The locations are 22 miles west and slightly north of Midland.

Packing basket

When packing a picnic basket, take along some extra large plastic bags to slip the soiled picnic dishes in. This keeps them from soiling the contents of the basket. It also prevents the dishes from drying out, making them harder to wash later on.

Dallas woman an 'egg-aholic'

DALLAS (AP)—Ask Jane crawley how she likes her eggs and she will probably answer "with Austrian jewels, French silk and gold-plated bases."

Mrs. Crawley, by her own admission, has been an "eggaholic" for 21 years and has filled her home with some exquisite designs.

Her personal collection includes creations from almost 20 types of eggs, including the giant ostrich, naturally black colored emu egg, durable goose egg and miniature zebra finch egg.

DEAR ABBY

Daughter's moral code should be formed

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: Maybe I am worrying needlessly, but I can't help it. Our daughter will be a freshman this fall at a coed university halfway across the continent. It's considered to be a fine school, but I understand there is practically no supervision. I mean, the students stay in dormitories, and there is a dean of women to talk to, but the hours are very liberal. Students can "sign out" for weekends, and with so many freshman girls, ours will get no special looking after.

We've never had any trouble with our daughter, but with all we hear about premarital sex in colleges, we are concerned.

Shouldn't the colleges try to discipline the freshman girls a little more strictly? After all, it is the first time many of them have ever been away from home.—CONCERNED IN KANSAS

DEAR CONCERNED: By the time a girl goes to college, her moral code is well established, and what she didn't learn at home and in church, she will not learn from the dean of women. It's time parents realized that even more important to college students than "supervision" is a good, sound moral grounding during their impressionable years at home.

Educators cannot be expected to "police" the morals of college students beyond the general rules that apply to society as a whole.

DEAR ABBY: There is a new assistant clergyman at our church who is very well liked by everyone—especially the young people. I was shocked and disappointed last Sunday to see him standing out in front of the church after services smoking a cigarette!

This bothered me so much that I wrote him a note telling him I thought he was setting abad example for the young people, and if he had to have a smoke, he should at least wait until he could do it behind closed doors. He telephoned me and told me that he wasn't "proud" of his smoking habit, but he had it bad, and he would be more ashamed sneaking a smoke in private than smoking in public. What is your opinion?—OPPOSED TO SMOKING

DEAR OPPOSED: I admire the young clergyman's honesty, but I deplore his weakness. Pray that his future doesn't go up in smoke.

LIFESTYLE

DEAR ABBY: I'm a recently retired gent who's dating a nice gal in her mid-50s. Being retired, I have a limited income.

We go out for dinner every Saturday night, and once in a while during the week we go out for lunch. My lady very much wants to chip in to pay for the meals, drinks, etc.

I can't see it. I told her that when it gets to the point where I can't afford to pick up the tab for both of us, we just won't go anywhere. She says she doesn't see anything wrong with HER picking up the tab once in a while.

Am I right or is she?—CONFUSED

DEAR CONFUSED; She's right. Surrender, dear.

DEAR ABBY: I have been married for nearly a year to a man who had been divorced for three years before I met him. He does something that drives me up a wall, and I have trouble controlling my hurt and anger when he does it. He still refers to his ex-wife as "my wife." (They were married for a number of years, but that's no excuse.)

Abby, I am his wife. She is his FORMER wife, but for some strange reason he continues to refer to her as "my wife."

I love him very much. He is a fine man and I know he doesn't do this intentionally, but it bothers me. I should add, his former wife has remarried, so she is somebody else's wife now. Help me, please. Correcting him hasn't helped.——HIS WIFE

DEAR WIFE: If you "love" this fine man, and correcting him has not helped thus far, cool it. He'll eventually get the right wife in the right context when you've been his wife as long as she was.

MINI RECIPES

"My husband and children are proud of the way I look... Thanks again Pat Walker!

Read how Victoria Patron Charlene Rawlings of Port Lavaca Lost 34 inches and became a slim size 7....

Dear Pat Walker,

About a year ago I had decided to do something about the way I looked as I had not only gained weight, but inches as well. I had tried a few diets, but could not stay with them and I did not seem to have time for exercising.

I had read an ad about Pat Walker's but did not give it too much thought as I figured it would not work for me. A friend telephoned one afternoon and in our conversation told me she was going to Pat Walker's and getting results!

I called to make an appointment for a complementary treatment and analysis and you can see the results for yourself in the photographs.

My husband and children are proud of me and all my friends have complimented me on the way I look..

I recommend Pat Walker's to anyone with a weight problem who wants to do something about it.

THANKS AGAIN PAT WALKER!!!

One Texan fights to honor memory of USS Houston

By ROB WOOD

HOUSTON (AP) — It was shortly after midnight Feb. 29, 1942, when the heavy cruiser USS Houston, out of ammunition, her number two turret wrecked, fires raging uncontrolled, her commanding officer dead, sank beneath the warm Java Seas in Sunda Strait.

A youngster that morning near the barren West Texas town of Fort Davis, sat on a hillside and watched the military planes soaring overhead, making mental notes of the crafts, and thinking of the battles that had been fought and were to be fought in the South Pacific during World War II.

The USS Houston, along with the Australian cruiser Perth, sank after sailing into a large Japanese landing force. The two ships refused to retreat and stayed to fight, although outnumbered and out-gunned. The enemy lost an estimated 17 ships.

Of the 1,084 crewmen on the USS Houston, only 368 survived and were captured by the Japanese. Of this group 76 died in prisoner-of-war camps.

Sam Redford, in the ranchlands near the Big Bed Country, followed each report of the war. While other younsters checked the daily baseball statistics, he read the news of events happening thousands of miles away, especially the naval conflicts.

Many have forgotten the USS Houston and its last gallant stand in those days when the Allies seemed on the brink of defeat and destruction in the South Pacific.

Sam Redford, now a 42-year-old rancher near the Central Texas community of Hamilton, has remembered.

He knows where the USS Houston rests and he believes this is the time for a documentary film showing the battered hulk of the ship and revealing the stories told by survivors of that fierce battle.

Redford has spend about $8,000 of his own money on research and now is looking for additional funds to finance an exploration expedition and then a documentary effort.

His interest in naval warfare, sparked during his boyhood years, increased as time went by.

After graduation from Texas A&M University, and serving in several jobs as an instrumentation engineer, Redford went to the South Pacific island of Kwajalein with the RCA Service Co.

During that time, he used his hobby of scuba diving to explore for the many ships he had read about in those news accounts of major sea battles.

He said in a recent interview. "I once led an expedition of divers to the Truk Lagoon and found a record numer of seven sunken and previously unlocated Japanese ships."

Redford said, "I want some Indonesian divers who located the wreckage of the Houston in 1973. Since then I have talked to some of the survivors and it has been almost an obsession with me to record on film the wreckage and tell this proud history of a proud ship."

FTC asks regulation of funeral industry

WASHINGTON (AP) — Funeral homes exploit bereaved customers for their own profit and should be put under federal regulation, an exhaustive Federal Trade Commission study concluded today.

If the commission adopts the staff recommendations, many of the nearly 2 million people who pay for funerals a year could save from several hundred to more than a thousand dollars, the staff estimated.

The report's major recommendation urges requiring that consumers be given itemized price information in advance.

The average funeral and burial costs more than $2,000, making it the most expensive purchase many consumers make after a house and a car, the study said.

The 526-page staff report said, "In many instances, funeral 'counseling' is really thinly disguised salesmanship designed to persuade consumers to purchase additional and costlier funeral merchandise and services."

The report, the product of FTC investigations beginning in 1972, concluded that:

—Grief-stricken customers, who must decide quickly on funeral arrangements, are "in a peculiarly vulnerable position and enter the transaction in an especially weak bargaining position."

—Funeral directors manipulate consumers into buying high-priced goods and services.

—Funeral directors harass and intimidate competitors who charge low prices.

"These practices have almost completely deprived consumers of the ability to choose the type and cost of funeral arrangements they desire and have resulted in tremendous injury to consumers," the study said.

The National Funeral Directors Association, whose members conduct more than 75 percent of the nation's funerals, attacked the staff report.

"It could reduce the caring and sensitive relationship of the funeral director to the family being served to a cold, commercial transaction. The necessary trust relationship that now exists between funeral director and those served would be impaired," the trade association's executive director, Howard C. Raether, said.

The report singles out the association as one of the major reasons for the practices it criticizes.

"One feature of the funeral industry that has had broad effects on the funeral-buying public is that, for over a century, the undertaking trade has sought to elevate itself to the status of a profession," the report said.

The report said the funeral directors' association has campaigned for state laws forbidding price advertising.

The proposed regulation would make it illegal for a funeral director to try to increase his bill by such tactics as failing to display less expensive caskets, misrepresenting legal or religious requirements and requiring a casket for cremation.

Economist examines rate costs

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — An economist for the Texas Retailers Association said today residential electric rates are heavily subsidized at the expense of a commercial — and to a lesser extent — industrial customers.

Charles King of Washington said residential customers get subsidies because they have political power.

The industrial class has economic power, he told the Public Utility Commission, but commercial interests simply lack power.

King said the most effective method of encouraging energy conservation and maintaining the economic prosperity of Texas is to charge each customer class the cost of the energy it consumes.

Higher electrical rates would not cause the poor to use a great deal less electricity because "they are down to the essentials now," said Phillip Weitzman of Texas ACORN — Association of Community Organizations for Reform.

The testimony of King and Weitzman was filed prior to the resumption of the commission hearing on different ways to set electric rates.

Doctors part of drug trade?

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — A few hundred Texas doctors are believed to be pumping millions of dollars of dangerous amphetamines into the state's illicit drug market each year. And police say there is virtually nothing they can do about it.

In a copyright story in Sunday editions of the Fort Worth Star Telegram, law enforcement officials said doctors write prescriptions for the drugs under the guise that they are being dispensed as part of a weight control program.

Fort Worth police said they have identified 10 area physicians who are believed to be supplying local drug users with one third of the dangerous narcotic pills on that city's streets.

Police said the doctors are supplying an estimated $1 million worth of amphetamines anually.

A report prepared after Fort Worth police officers infiltrated the offices of several of the doctors indicates the physicians are running assembly line operations, and are handing out prescriptions to just about anyone who can pay their $20 office visit fee, the story said.

In Houston, police estimate that about a dozen physicians supply half the amphetamines distributed in their city. Houston narcotics Captain Lelan Alsup said one local doctor singlehandedly reduced the price of an amphetamine pill from $25 to $15 almost overnight by flooding the market with pills.

Dallas police Sgt. H. A. Amos said four doctors are supplying about one fourth of that city's illicit pills, and San Antonio police estimate doctors there are responsible for about a third of the amphetamine pills in the city's illicit drug trade.

The doctors continue to operate because of a 1976 Texas appeals court decision involving a Houston doctor, Fred Thomas Haney, which virtually put state and local law enforcement authorities out of the picture in trying to police the state's drug-pushing doctors.

Bill Pruitt, in charge of the Texas Department of Public Safety narcotics enforcement division, told the paper the court decision "put us out of business" as far as policing the physicians. "It's impossible."

Navarro County district attorney Pat Batchelor said the Haney decision forced him to drop charges against one of the 10 Fort Worth physicians who was arrested in Corsicana for dispensing controlled substances to a sheriff's deputy.

"The case was never presented to a grand jury because of the state court of appeals ruling that doctors can be dope pushers," Batchelor said.

Law enforcement sources also said the state board of medical examiners is largely ineffective in policing the state's physicians because of a code of brotherhood among doctors that makes them relmedical license. And, they said, the board is also overburdened because it has only eight investigators for the entire state.

Miss Hearst to marry

NEW YORK (AP) — Patricia Hearst, serving a seven-year prison sentence for bank robbery, plans to marry a San Francisco policeman who at one time moonlighted as her private bodyguard, according to Newsweek magazine.

The magazine quotes an unidentified source as saying the 24-year-old newspaper heiress's wedding to Bernard Shaw, who is divorced, could occur before Miss Hearst leaves prison.

Shaw, who worked as Miss Hearst's bodyguard while she was free on bond for 18 months, has declined comment on the report, according to Newsweek.

Miss Hearst gained national attention when she was kidnapped on Feb. 4, 1974, from her Berkeley, Calif., apartment.

Confucius rehabilitated after decade of neglect

By LINDA MATHEWS
The Los Angeles Times

HONG KONG — Confucius lives.

After a decade of the worst kind of abuse, China's greatest thinker and symbol of learning has been formally rehabilitated.

The People's Daily, which once called the ancient sage a demon and "an arch-reactionary spokesman for the stinking aristocracy," has reversed its verdict and decided that the old-fashioned virtues Confucius embodied may not be so bad after all.

In an obvious bid to restore Confucius' standing, the party newspaper said that the late Mao Tse-tung himself had been deeply influenced by the once-disgraced philosopher.

"Chairman Mao often quoted Confucius," the newspaper disclosed, and counseled all Chinese to "learn from Confucius his attitude of inquiring into everything.'"

The highly regarded Chinese Academy of Social Sciences got into the act by declaring that Confucian studies are no longer off-limits. Some aspects of Confucianism still warrant criticism, historian Ting Wei-chih told the academy recently. But it should be done in a thoughtful and balanced manner.

Instead of "knocking him (Confucius) with curses," Ting said, scholars ought to acknowledge his strengths as well as his weaknesses. Otherwise, he went on, "how can we explain the fact that Chairman Mao quoted so many remarks by Confucius, such as 'be insatiable in learning'...and told us to do the same?"'

In most countries, a debate over the merits of a philosopher dead for 2,500 years would be confined to the classroom and to literary journals. But in China the issue of Confucius' standing has been a deadly serious business, making and breaking the careers of politicians as well as historians.

When the campaign against him was at its peak, several leading figures lost their jobs because they had the nerve to see some good in his writings. And last week, as Confucius' stock was rising, the career of his leading critic, Yang Jung-kuo, was on the skids. Yang, dean of philosophy at Canton's Chungshan University, has been hauled before his students and forced to confess his errors in humiliating "struggle sessions," Hong Kong's pro-Communist press reported.

Largely because of the reevaluation of Confucius, filial piety, a Confucian virtue that had fallen into disrepute, also seems to be making a comeback in China. Although Mao, with his vision of "perpetual revolution," always seemed the embodiment of youthful rebellion, the closet Confucianists now in charge of the official media insist that the late chairman was as devoted to his parents as any dutiful Chinese son.

As proof, they cite an incident in Mao's life that had previously been hushed up. On one of his rare trips back to his hometown of Shaoshan in 1959, Mao supposedly surprised his entourage by leading them straight up a hillside to an old graveyard.

"We did not know until we read the inscription that it was the grave of our leader's parents," a participant, Gen. Lo Jui-ching, recalled later. "He went up and bowed. We all did the same. We were distressed that we had not asked our chairman about this trip. We had not taken a wreath with us, not even a white paper flower. Luckily, a young man among us was quick-witted. He picked some pine twigs, tied them into a bundle and let our chairman place it on the tomb."

Mao must have realized the unsettling effect this show of ancestor worship had on his companions, for, according to Lo, he tried to explain himself, saying.

"We Communists are thorough going materialists. We do not believe in ghosts or deities. But still we must acknowledge that we owe our birth to our parents...The next time I come back, I will pay them another visit."

The revival of some Confucian ideals signals a halt to a 10-year-old propaganda campaign that was vicious even by Peking's usual vitriolic standard. Tolerated in the first years of the Communist regime, Confucius and his ethical codes first came under bitter attack at the onset of the Cultural Revolution in 1966.

Confucius' emphasis on a well-ordered society and respect for one's superiors, summed up in the instruction "Let the ruler be a ruler and the subject a subject," was anathema to radical Maoists intent on ridding Chinese society of privilege and elitism. Acting on orders from above, young Red Guards stormed into the village of Chu Fu, where Confucius was born in 551 B.C., and destroyed the shrine erected in his honor. Other shrines were vandalized.

Liberals launch counterattack

By BILL PETERSON
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — The Democratic liberal establishment, supposedly awash in a national drift to the right, has launched a counterattack with an emotional appeal to liberals: don't fold your tents and run.

That is the formal and informal rallying cry as the Americans for Democratic Action met here in annual convention. It comes at a time when liberals are increasingly disillusioned with the Carter administration and confused over the California taxpayers' revolt.

Its chief spokesman is Sen. George McGovern, S.D., the 1972 Democratic presidential nominee and outgoing ADA president, who Saturday attacked politicians who are "seeking a mandate to govern by running against government."

His speech was designed to rekindle the fires of the liberal establishment, which the ADA has embodied for the last 31 years. But it amounted to a scathing denunciation of the Carter administration and one of the president's key Democratic rivals, California Gov. Edmund G. (Jerry) Brown Jr.

In a convention keynote address, McGovern scored Carter for timid leadership, deserting the ideals of past Democratic presidents, bringing the country to the brink of a new Cold War and misreading the recent California vote in favor of Proposition 13, which he said had undercurrents of racism.

"Timid officials are repeating and reinforcing a despair of democracy," he said. "Last January, the president hismelf announced that the state of the union was one of powerlessness — that government cannot solve our problems ... define our vision ...eliminate poverty ... or reduce inflation."

"A president reaps disapproval not because he is set back in a cause that is right, but when he is lukewarm in a course that is confused," he said later. "We elected leaders to set goals and solve problems, not to plead that they are insoluble."

He accused the administrtion of risking Armageddon in Africa and inviting the nation "to the brink of a new cold war."

He singled out the president's national security affairs adviser, Zbigniew Brzezinski, for special criticism. "No national security adviser wants to appear faint-hearted in the face of genuine crisis. But to avoid being chicken, one need not become Chicken Little," he said. "We cannot conduct foreign policy as though every stirring in Africa, Asia or the Indian Ocean is another Cuban missile crisis."

"Foreign policy must be selective in centering upon the few fundamental interest of the nation — not the minor distractions," he added later.

On the domestic front, McGovern accused Carter and other office holders of "compounding the deeper causes and the worst inequities of the tax revolt."

"The president resurrected his promise of a balanced budget by 1981 while simultaneously calling for a tax cut and an even bigger Pentagon budget," McGovern said. "That combination will bring economic trouble if he really means it, and disillusion if he does not."

McGovern was circumspect in criticizing Carter directly in the speech, at one point calling him a "dedicated, conscientious man who longs to be a good president."

But in a luncheon with reporters Thursday where he discussed the speech he made it clear that the president and his aides were his main targets.

North solves identity woes with Open win

DENVER (AP) — Winning the U.S. Open put golf's most prestigious trophy on Andy North's mantle and $45,000 in his pocket. It may even get people to remember his name.

"I don't think I'm any egomaniac, but it's nice to have people call you by your right name," said North. "My first couple of years I was confused with Jerry Heard a lot, and the last couple with Andy Bean. At least they were comparing me with golfers who can play some."

North put an end to his identity problems this week in the U.S. Open championship over the rugged Cherry Hills Country Club layout.

The lanky 28-year-old from Madison, Wis., who has labored in relative obscurity during six yers on the pro tour, withstood challenges from some of the game's more celebrated performers to fashion a 1-stroke victory Sunday over Dave Stockton and J.C. Snead.

"Thank goodness we ran out of holes," said North, who staggered home Sunday with closing round of 3-over-par-par 74 that barely edged both Stockton and Snead, who watched anxiously from the scoring tent just off the 18th green, anticipating a possible three-way playoff.

It was not to be.

After "getting too cute" with a pitch to the 18th green which landed in a bunker, North came out four feet from the hole. He backed off his putt twice to let gusty winds die down, then rapped the ball into the back of the cup for a bogey that left him with a 72-hole total of 1-over 285.

"If you ever had a putt to win the Open or the Masters, that was the one you'd want," North said. "It was uphill and straight. I just made solid contact."

North, whose only previous victory came in the 1977 Westchester Classic, held a seemingly comfortable fivestroke lead during portions of Sunday's final round, thanks to birdies at the fourth and fifth holes.

"Up through the seventh hole, I was hitting everything solid," he said. "I had no worries."

But he badly hooked his iron off the eighth tee which started a string of three straight bogeys — and his lead melted to two shots. Birdies at the par-5 11th hole and the par-4 13th put him in a commanding position once again, but he was wild off the tee at No. 14 and took bogey. Then disaster struck at the par-3 15th, where North hit into a trap, left the ball in the trap on his second shot and wound up with a double bogey.

He then led Stockton by a single stroke and Snead by two, with three difficult holes left to play.

Playing conservatively — "I was just trying to make pars," he said — North maintained his lead into the treacherous 18th hole, a 480-yard, uphill par-4 that is guarded by a long lake on the left side and has been the most difficut hole throughout the tournament.

Stockton, playing just ahead of North, drove into the rough, was short with his second shot and took a bogey-5 on the hole. Snead skipped his drive off the water and back onto the fairway for a par.

North knew a bogey would win it for him. He hit a 3-iron off the tee into the right rough and then hit his ill-fated pitch shot into the bunker.

"I was just trying to put the ball on the green," he said. "But I got a little too cute with it. I didn't want to leave myself a 40-foot downhill putt."

"I thought he had blown it when he hit into the trap," said North's playing partner, Gary Player.

But North, who had withstood the pressures of being the second-and third-round leader, calmly came out of the bunker and sank the putt.

The putt dropped just as North had fantasized countless times before. "We've all done it 100,000 times — pretended to be putting for the Open title during a practice round."

Fantasy indeed became reality for the 6-foot-4, 210-pounder who took up golf as a 12-year-old when a bone disease in his left knee forced him to give up other sports.

Lopez achieves 'golf miracle'

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (AP) — Nancy Lopez calls her record fifth women's professional golf victory a miracle.

"I need to thank the Lord for what I've done," she said Sunday after handling the immense tension for a 4-under-par 69 and a 2-shot victory over Jane Blalock and Debbie Massey.

"The pressure this week will be the most I'll ever get," the game's 21-year-old superstar acknowledged. "I feel relieved more than anything. I wanted to win it very badly."

Her 54-hole total of 214, 5 under at the Locust Hill Country Club, achieved:

—The undisputed record for consecutive victories on the LPGA tour. She had shared the standard with Mickey Wright (twice), Kathy Whitworth and Shirley Englehorn.

Her accomplishment is second only to Byron Nelson's string of 11 in a row on the men's tour in 1945.

—The all-time rookie professional golf money champion with $153,336 for one year, slipping by Jerry Pate's record in 1976 by $234.

—The first place check of $11,250 jumped her 1978 money past $130,000, more than double runnerup JoAnne Carner's $57,000.

—Her seventh triumph this year, the most since Whitworth won that many in 1973. No other women has won more than once in 1978.

—Her 15th round of par or lower in her last 16.

Blalock and Massey, tied at 3-under 216, marveled over Lopez' deftness around the slick, fast greens.

"Twenty-footers are gimmes to her. She's the best putter I've seen in my life," said Blalock, who needed a birdie at 18 to force a playoff with Lopez. Instead, she took a bogey for a 74.

Massey continually beat Lopez when both were amateur stars. But not now. And she knows why after playing with the sensation in the final round of the $75,000 tour stop.

"She was always an aggressive player. Now she's refined her short game. It's gone haywire. It's unbelievably good," said Massey, whose 70 earned her a tie with Blalock.

Ironically, Lopez' putter was not that sharp Sunday. She required a so-so 33 strokes, but made the big one — a 20-footer for birdie that gave her sole command of the lead at 17.

Nancy Lopez does it.

Diablos beat Dodgers

By The Associated Press

The El Paso Diablos squeaked past San Antonio 2-1 Sunday night and in the process hopped over the Dodgers to take first place in the Texas League's western division.

The Diablos now lead San Antonio by half a game. A victory tonight at San Antonio would give El Paso a sweep of their current five-game series with the Dodgers.

Shreveport edged past Jackson 4-3 and Amarillo rolled over Midland 11-4 in other Texas League action Sunday.

San Antonio's lone tally came in the fourth. Alex Taveras was on third with the bases loaded when Rob Millsop balked. The Diablos' Bill Ewing doubled in a run in the sixth to tie the game. Ewing also drove in the winning run when he singled in the eighth.

Dan Boone picued up his third save of the series. He came in to retire all three San Antonio batters in the ninth.

Millsop, 7-2, chalked up the win. Rick Sander, 4-4, took the loss.

Catcher Tony Pena slammed two homers for Shreveport, including the deciding run in the bottom of the ninth. He also hit a home run in the fifth with the bases empty.

Dick Waterhouse contributed his sifth home run of the season for Shreveport in the eighth.

Rusty Johnson faced only two batters but took the win by striking them both out in the ninth.

Houston four-hits Cubs, 3-1

HOUSTON (AP) — Houston righthander Tom Dixon is well aware of his imitations as a pitcher.

"I don't have the stuff that can blow people away," he said after he combined with Joe Sambito on a four-hitter in Houston's 3-1 victory over the Chicago Cubs Sunday night.

"I'm a battler. I try to go out there and challenge the hitters. I think that I will be able to keep our team in the game every time I go out there."

Dixon surrendered all four of Chicago's hits through the first seven innings as he notched his third victory in five decisions this season and his first triumph since May 12.

Sambito, who retired all six Cub batters to face him, gathered his fifth save of the year as the Cubs lost for the fourth time in five games.

Houston took an early 1-0 lead against losing pitcher Dennis Lamp, 2-6, on back-to-back singles by Dennis Walling and Dave Berrman and Enos Cabell's first inning sacrifice fly to right.

A fourth inning single by Bob Watson and Art Howe's double tallied Houston's second run of the game in the fourth inning. Watson scored all the way from first base as a fan ran onto the field to pick up the ball while it was still in play.

Palmer notches seventh straight mound victory

By The Associated Press

Surging Jim Palmer gained his seventh straight victory and the Baltimore Orioles' 18th in their last 20 games Sunday, a 21 decision over Oakland which extended the A's' losing streak to 11 games.

Palmer, winning his 10th game in 14 decisions, lost a chance for his fifth shutout in his last six decisions when Dave Revering hit his seventh homer of the season in the seventh inning. The three-time Cy Young Award winner was replaced in the ninth by Tippy Martinez, who recorded his second save of the year.

Rick Dempsey opened the Baltimore fifth with his third homer. Rich Dauer walked with one out, took third on a single by Ken Singleton, then scored on Murray's sacrifice fly.

Palmer, a 20-game winner in six of the past seven season, began his winning streak on May 20. The Orioles have won 24 of 30 starts since. The 32-year old right-hander has allowed only five runs, three of them earned, in his last 67 1-3 innings.

In other American League action, Bill Stein and Bob Robertson hit run-scoring doubles as the Seattle Mariners snapped a 10-game losing streak by beating Boston 3-2 and ending the Red Sox' nine-game winning string.

Ron Fairly's ninth-inning home run lifted the California Angels to a 3-2 victory over the New York Yankees. Willie Norwood drove in the deciding run with a fifth-inning sacrifice fly, helping the Minnesota Twins beat the Detroit Tigers 8-4.

Darrell Porter's tie-breaking single scored Hal McRae with the winning run in the 11th inning to give the Kansas City Royals a 3-2 victory over the Chicago White Sox in the first game of a doubleheader.

The White Sox came back to win the second game 11-0 as Eric Soderholm blasted two solo homers and Chet Lemon and Claudell Washington each hit two-run shots.

Rick Waits pitched a six-hitter and Buddy Bell and Andre Thornton drove in the runs, leading the Cleveland Indians past the Milwaukee Brewers 3-0 in the first game of a doubleheader.

The Brewers came back to win the second game 4-1 as Ben Oglivie smashed a two-run homer and Paul Molitor stole home.

In the National League, Fred Norman continued his success at Riverfront Stadium with the help of Manny Sarmiento's relief pitching and Dan Dreissen's third-inning sacrifice fly as the Cincinnati Reds whipped the St. Louis Cardinals 4-2. Norman improved his lifetime record at the Reds' park to 45-18.

Rowland Office's three-run homer highlighted a seven-run first-inning outburst that carried the Atlanta Braves to an 8-7 victory over the Pittsburgh Pirates.

Don Sutton fired a six-hitter and Steve Garvey and Lee Lacey knocked in two runs apiece, leading the Los Angeles Dodgers to a 5-0 victory over the Montreal Expos.

Gaylord Perry and Rollie Fingers combined on an eighthitter, leading the San Diego Padres to a 4-1 victory over the Philadelphia Phillies.

Left-hander Vida Blue pitched a five-hitter and Darrell Evans blasted a two-run homer as the San Francisco Giants beat the New York Mets 3-0 in the first game of a doubleheader. The Giants completed a sweep with a 4-3 victory in the second game as Rob Andrews belted a run-scoring single in 10th inning.

Gold Sox crush Cubs

BY TED BATTLES

Amarillo's Gold Sox swaggered out of the Tall City Sunday night, giddy from the spirits of victory after making-merry at the expense of Midland Cubs pitching for their third straight triumph.

The Sox, led by outfielder Jim Beswick's blazing bludgeon, hammered out 17 hits including four home runs and five doubles to post an 11-3 win in the series wind up at Cubs Stadium Sunday night.

It was the first time Amarillo had won three in a row on the road this season and the streak broke a tailspin of 12 straight road losses.

Manager Glen Ezell admitted three may sound like a modest number to most, "but if you don't win No. 3, you can't win No. 4."

Beswick was the ringleader of the bash-barrage, clouting his ninth homer of the season and fourth of the series and adding a double and single for his three rbi. That made it 13-for-22 (.591) for the series with 11 rbi. For the year Beswick is hitting .467 against Midland with 19 rbi.

But Sunday he had plenty of help as the Sox raked three Midland pitchers over the coals. Dane Ilertsen hit his ninth homer, Barry Evans his fourth, Joe Hicks his fifth and Kurt Seibert his fourth...but wait a minute, Kurt is with the Cubs.

HICKS POUNDED out four hits and batted in two runs while Evans had a double and single to go with the homer plus four rbi.

Lefthander Gary Pickert, who was tagged for 13 hits in the series opener by the Cubs while lasting only 5 innings, was a complete mystery this time, scattering seven hits for a route-going fourth triumph in 10 decisions.

Seibert's homer came with two out in the ninth and was his third of the series and fourth of the season.

Steve Macko had two hits as Midland managed just two earned runs off Pickert, who pitched his college ball at Emporia, Kan., the team that this year won the NAIA title.

Amarillo jumped in front 2-0 in the first on a run-scoring double by Beswick and Evans' run-producing double. In the fourth, Beswick and Evans opened the inning with successive solo homers off Ledbetter, 2-3. In the fifth, the Sox nicked lefty Bob Clark for three runs with five inning-opening hits, including a two-run single by Beswick, the 20-year-old from North Versailles, Pa.

It became official in the seventh when the Sox knocked Clark out of the box as Hicks hits his homer and when Larry Groover arrived, Ilertsen hit his first pitch for a two-run homer.

The Cubs conclude the first half race with six games in five days at El Paso, a series that begins Tuesday night.

New stronger steel

Our previous steel cord used only five steel filaments. Now there are ten. It's an all new steel cord that starts out with two filaments with seven more wrapped around them. Then, one more steel filament binds the cord together. That's how the tire received its name — seven over two plus one — or, 721.

Rangers win with sneak attack

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — With two outs in the bottom of the ninth inning, the bases loaded and the score tied 2-2 between Texas and Toronto, Rangers rookie Bobby Thompson decided to launch a sneak attack.

He watched the first pitch from Toronto reliever Tom Murhphy go by for a strike.

Then Thompson, playing center field for the injured Juan Beniquez, laid down a perfect bunt on the first base side of the pitcher's mound and beat it out for a single as Bobby Bonds raced home to score the winning run in Texas' 3-2 victory over Toronto on Sunday night.

"I figured with two outs and the bases loaded in the ninth, a bunt was the last thing anyone would be looking for," said Thompson, who added he had no hitting instructions from manager Bill Hunter.

The bunt single gave Thompson his first game-winning hit in the major leagues and allowed the Rangers to move within 1½ games of first-place Kansas City in the American League West race.

Murphy, 2-5, who relieved starter Balor Moore in the seventh inning, said third baseman Roy Howell warned him Thompson might try a bunt. But he said the bunt was so well executed that nothing could have stopped the play.

"As soon as it got by Murphy, I knew the game was over," said Hunter, the Texas manager.

Bonds doubled with one out and Murphy gave Jim Sundberg an intentional walk. Toby Harrah's ground out advanced Bonds and Sundberg and Murphy gave another intentional walk to Bump Wills, loading the bases for Thompson's bunt.

Toronto took a 1-0 lead in the first inning when Bob Bailor singled and scored on Rico Carty's double off Texas starter Doyle Alexander. But the Rangers tied in their half of the first when Mike Hargrove doubled off Moore and scored on Kurt Bevacqua's single.

The game then settled into a pitching duel until Zisk singled in the seventh inning off Moore, moved to second on Bobby Bonds' single and scored when Bump Wills singled off reliever Murhphy with two outs.

Toronto came back in the top of eighth to tie the score at 2-2 when Carty drilled a line drive into the wind over the 400-foot sign in center field for a solo homer. John Mayberry then slapped an Alexander pitch for what seemed to be a double, but he was thrown out at second base.

Reggie Cleveland, 2-3, relieved Alexander to start the ninth and allowed Dave McKay to single.

Stamina may prove decisive in World Cup

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP) — It's been tough going in the World Soccer Cup as the bruised teams face their sixth game in 17 days, and it looks like the team with the most stamina will win the title in the world's most popular sport.

Right now, it appears tha one of four — Holland, Italy, Brazil or Argentina — will be that team.

Argentina and Brazil battled without success to break down each other's defensive barriers in a 0-0 tie at Rosario Sunday night — the toughest game in the tournament set. If the final at Buenos Aires' River Plate Stadium next Sunday is comparable, one shot could win the Cup.

That shot could come from a marksman of the caliber of Johnny Rep of Holland, Paolo Rossi of Italy, Dirceu of Brazil or Mario Kempes of Argentina.

The final will be between the winners of the two groups contesting the second round. Both groups are wide open.

Holland and Italy are joint leaders in Group A with three points each from two games. The two teams meet in the vital match next Wednesday. Italy must win to gain the final because the Dutch have scored more goals..

Argentina and Brazil are ahead in Group B with three points each. Brazil has scored three goals and Argentina has two. Neither team has been scored against. Next Wednesday, Argentina faces Peru and Brazil plays Poland.

Defending champion West Germany, with two points in Group A, has little chance of winning the Cup again.

Non-smokers are becoming more vocal, and currently a move is underfoot to limit smoking to "consenting adults"—you smoke only if those around you consent. (AP Laserphoto Drawimg by Joe Yeninas)

Non-smokers becoming outspoken

By ANNE ZUSY

NEW YORK (AP) — "Smoking should be confined to consenting adults in private."

"I don't spit in your face, please don't blow smoke in mine."

As these slogans from a national anti-smokers' campaign suggest, life is becoming more difficult for smokers as their habit clashes with ever more outspoken non-smokers. The non-smokers are beyond the dirty-look stage and do not hesitate to speak sharply on planes and buses or in restaurants. Sometimes arguments get fiery.

More and more, it also is becoming illegal for smokers to light up in public. Only eight states are without some kind of ban on smoking in public places, anti-smoking forces say. Some 100 cities, 25 counties and 15 universities have separate rules against it. And more bills against smoking are expected before legislatures this year.

On the federal level, the Civil Aeronautics Board is considering a ban on pipe and cigar smoking on airliners. The board is tied 2-2 and the fifth member has asked for more time to study the question. Should the ban pass, a rule against all smoking on airplanes would be proposed, opened to public comment and probably voted on next year.

Health, Education and Welfare Secretary Joseph Califano, an outspoken non-smoker after years of cigarettes, supports a total ban on airplane smoking and has pledged to help cure the country's "most preventable health problem."

And though he thinks "education and not regulation" is the answer, he said in an interview, the bans against smoking in public places "are a healthy trend."

They prevent those who object from becoming "involuntary smokers," he said. "Consenting adults can smoke in their own home ...."

Califano also said the smoking bans mesh with his proposed $30 million anti-smoking campaign for fiscal 1979 and the new HEW division on smoking and health. He said he does not object to the "freedom to smoke ... But I am saying we've got to put money into education to combat the tobacco industry's image of the Marlboro man and the glamorous woman."

Others are trying to do the same. There is ASH, the 10- year-old, Washington-based Action on Smoking and Health, which is fighting to increase existing bans. There are the American Cancer Society and state lung associations, which are preparing new anti-smoking commercials to be broadcast this summer.

On the other side there are the industry-backed Tobacco Institute in Washington and Smokers United, a new group in New York pledged to fight "obnoxious and tyrannical" smoking bans, HEW proposals and and other proposed antismoking regulations.

James Stewart, director of the new group, said in an interview that the anti-smoking laws are "simply unconstitutional." The "campaign against the anti-smoking campaign will be used as a focal point to say 'stop all this anti-everything legislation,'" he said.

Stewart, chairman of an insurance brokerage firm, said his group now has fewer than 200 members. "Two dozen or so are non-smokers," he said, adding that the group "has no connection whatsoever" with the Tobacco Institute.

Non-smokers, Stewart added, "can live their lives by avoiding places with smokers if they so choose. I'm going to continue refusing to give up anything, because this is an invasion of my individual rights."

ASH director John Bahnzaf disagreed. "There is an old legal maxim — my right to swing my fist ends where your nose begins," he said, adding that smokers are "not given a constituionally protected right, but a privilege."

One third of all American adults older than 21 are smokers, according to government statistics. Federal regulations now ban smoking on buses, planes and trains except within specified areas. The government also prohibits smoking in coal mines, oil and gas wells and caves.

Caves became off-limits after a study showed that cave guides and other employees who smoke on the job faced a higher risk of cancer because of the combination of smoking and high radiation levels in the caves. The high levels were found to pose no danger to visitors.

Shate laws range from bans against smoking in "all but the back 20 percent of seats on buses" in the tobacco state of Virginia, to the Clean Air Act of Minnesota, which prohibits smoking in all public meetings and public places except bars.

Bans in other states and cities cover everything in between. Some laws ban smoking in certain stores or in all stores, in elevators, in churches and in schools. Among oddities, it is illegal to smoke in bed in Independence, Mo., and in Indianapolis. In Montgomery County, Md., the ban includes opera houses, of which there are none. In Sacramento, Calif., smoking is banned in shops except those selling tobacco.

State or local laws require mandatory non-smoking restaurant sections in Alaska, Arkansas, California, Michigan, Minnesota, North Dakota and Utah. Such a law takes effect in New Jersey early next year, and 17 other states are considering similar legislation. Some restaurants and businesses have voluntarily created smoking and no-smoking areas.

Meanwhile, all sides on the public smoking issue agree that enforcement is next to impossible. But even their agreement prompts different reactions.

"The point of these laws is not to make criminals out of smokers," explained Jim Mulrooney, a director of Minnesota's Lung Association. "What we hope to do is consciousness-raising — to get people to realize that sometimes their smoking seriously bothers others."

The anti-smoking campaign "has prompted ... a consciousness raising for smokers," agreed Connie Drath of the Tobacco Institute. And smokers "must acknowledge the fact that there are those who object to it. We recognize that."

But, she added, the advocates of non-smoking are trying to enact laws "that turn smokers into criminals. And that we don't like. We'd rather that non-smoking be a matter of common courtesy."

Count to thirteen before you finesse

By ALFRED SHEINWOLD

What does the tired businessman do when he isn't doing business? Part of the time he plays bridge, and if he isn't too tired, he remembers how to count from one to thirteen. It's amazing how much this helps.

West begins by taking three club tricks. Then he leads a trump, and South needs the rest of the tricks.

The hearts are the problem. Most players would draw trumps and try a finesse with dummy's jack of hearts. This loses, and the tired businessman consoles himself with the thought that you can't turn a profit on every single deal.

South does better business when he counts the West hand. Since East discarded on the second club, it is clear that West started with six clubs. When West also follows to three rounds of spades, the normal heart finesse begins to look doubtful.

By this time, nine of West's 13 cards are known. West can have only four cards in both red suits combined.

COUNTS DIAMONDS

A good declarer next takes the top diamond and ruffs a diamond, discovering that West held three diamonds to begin with. There is room in the West hand for only one heart.

South can make the contract only if West's singleton heart is the queen or ten. Declarer must lead a low heart to dummy's king, thus learning that West's heart is the ten. Now South returns the jack of hearts from dummy for a sure finesse through East.

Captain Cook gains homage of 'skipper'

By Hugh A. Mulligan

RAROTONGA, COOK ISLANDS, South Pacific (AP) — Bicentennial greetings to you, Capt. Cook, from the skipper, retired, of a 19-foot sailing sloop that inadvertently discovered a drainage canal in New York's Cold Spring Harbor.

This was written weeks ago, while sojourning in the lovely islands you discovered, and put away in the old sail locker next to the tarnished brass sextant and my certificate from the

Mulligan's Stew

Coast Guard boating safety course waiting for an auspicious occasion to salute your anniversary.

They say that when Captain Cook died in 1779 on a Hawaiian beach, King George III wept. And why not? In his 60 years on the throne, which included losing both the Revolutionary War and the War of 1812, James Cook was the only good news George ever got.

While Capt. William Bligh, who once served under Cook, was snorting and swaggering about the seven seas, creating great movie roles for Charles Laughton and Trevor Howard, Cook was quietly going about the business of becoming the greatest sailor who ever lived. Greater than Magellan, Columbus or Chichester.

No previous navigator had gone so far, stayed at sea for so long, discovered so many new lands and islands, charted with amazing scientific accuracy so many unknown coastlines and treated both his men and the natives he visited with such respect and fairness.

Cooktown in Australia, Mount Cook and Cook Straits in New Zealand, Bay de Cook near Cape Horn, Cook village on the island of Hawaii, Cook Inlet in Alaska and these islands in the South Pacific merely suggest the territory he covered in his three epic voyages on square riggers named the Endeavour, Discovery, Resolution and Adventure.

Cook, a Yorkshireman who joined the merchant navy as an ordinary seaman before volunteering for the royal navy in the war against France, was the first seamen ever to cross the Antarctic Circle. He discovered Hawaii, New Caledonia, the Cook Islands and the large island of South Georgia. He claimed Australia, the world's last unknown continent, for his king. He charted most of the North American Pacific Coast all the way to Alaska and the Bering Sea. He made the first accurate survey of the St. Lawrence River and Newfoundland. He proved, to his own and the King's disappointment, that there was no Northwest Passage connecting the Pacific and Hudson's Bay.

About the drainage canal. Seeking refuge from gale-force winds and following seas, we heaved to (a nautical term for mal de mer) into a promising inlet which our tattered charts showed to be Cold Spring Harbor.

"Where's the channel markers and how far upstream is the town dock?" I called from the bridge, the cockpit really, to a landlubber lounging by an abandoned factory shed.

"Don't know," the lout replied with a snigger, "but you're sailing up the drainage ditch."

Cook would have called for a dozen lashes. And headed for the nearest lobster house.

Leaders accuse CIA

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Cuban President Fidel Castro and Joshua Nkomo, a guerrilla leader fighting the Rhodesian government, charged in separate television interviews Sunday that the Central Intelligence Agency has continued to interfere in Angolan affairs in violation of congressional restrictions outlawing such involvement.

"We know from very good sources that recently the CIA established contact with UNITA in Angola and ... promised U.S. assistance," Castro said on "Issues and Answers" (ABC).

He said the assistance to UNITA, the pro-Western United Front for the Total Liberation of Angola, "constitutes a very serious involvement in Angola's interior affairs."

Nkomo, speaking on "Face the Nation" (CBS), said his information about U.S. assistance to UNITA's fight against Angola's Marxist central government came from "those who know."

They said they "believe UNITA) Angolan forces . . . do get some aid from the United States" by way of South Africa, Nkomo said. "I have no reason to believe that the CIA is not aiding South Africa to aid some dissidents in Angola to overthrow the governent, (because) the United States has not recognized the legitimate government of Angola," Nkomo said.

Congress voted in 1976 to approve an amendment by Sen. Dick Clark, D-Iowa, prohibiting U.S. involvement in Angola.

Research all avenues when changing careers

By LOUISE COOK
Associated Press Writer

Bored with your present job? Thinking of switching careers in midstream?

You will probably be happier if you do a little research first to try to match your profession to your personality.

If, for example, you dislike doing the same thing over and over, you're not likely to be satisfied with a job as a bank clerk or an accountant.

It is not always easy, however, to find out what job best suits your temperment and talents and the U.S. Department of Labor is trying to help.

The department has prepared a guide, "Matching Personal and Job Characteristics," to 282 occupations. The guide costs 90 cents and is available from the Consumer Information Center, Dept. 906F, Pueblo, Colo., 81009.

The guide lists 25 job characteristics, including educational requirements and such things as how competitive the field is, whether overtime or shift work is usual and opportunities available for self-expression. If you have your heart set on a given career but dislike one or two aspects of work in the field, the department guide may be able to help you find a similar vocation.

Some jobs require special training and a growing number of people are turning to vocational schools for the extra education. In New York State alone, about 125,000 people a year enroll in licensed business and technical schools.

The most frequent complaint about the schools, according to New York officials, is that they promise jobs they don't deliver. The second most common complaint is that the schools are not providing the training or education they promised.

You can help protect yourself and avoid problems by shopping carefully, says the Department of Health, Education and Welfare. "It makes sense to be aware of common rip-offs, to understand the current job market, to recognize advertising gimmicks, to ask the right questions and to talk to the right people," writes William D. Green.

Mayors meeting focuses on tax-cut propositions

The Los Angeles Times

ATLANTA — Many of the nation's mayors believe that if Proposition 13 were put before voters in their cities and states it would pass. And that, clearly, has them looking over their shoulders.

Proposition 13 and its impact both on California and the nation — more than any other issue — has dominated the 46th annual meeting of the U.S. Conference of Mayors, which began here Saturday.

"If a similar type of proposition were introduced in our state, I would be very surprised if it did not pass. I think that holds true for Massachusetts, New York State and Rhode Island," said Mayor Edward Bergin of Waterbury, Conn., expressing what appeared to be the consensus among mayors.

"We could have exaclty the same thing they have in California. There's a feeling of: 'by God, we pay too many taxes, and what do we get back?'" said Mayor Roger L. Baker of Springfield, Ohio.

There was a lot of talk, both during and after a three-hour special session called Sunday to discuss Proposition 13 and its ramifications of belt-tightenging and moving away from the property tax as a primary source of revenue.

San Antonio, Tex., Mayor Lila ccockerell said:

"It's very important for mayors to analyze what the voters were saying in California. Very obviously the first thing is that they want less government spending, particularly at the local level. So as mayor, I'm urging my city to draw up the very tightest budget we can and still deliver a responsible level of service."

Said Chicago City controller Clark Burrus:

"All of us...are going to have to tighten our belts and work with reduced budgets."

Burrus, one of the speakers during the special session on Proposition 13, spoke to a crowd of several hundred mayors and city officials.

"Proposition 13 has got everyone's attention. It's all anyone is talking about," said Mayor William T. McLaughlin of Wilmington, Del.

There was angry talk her about the squeeze put on local government by state and federal governments and their mandated programs, like health and education, and environmental planning. And there were predictions that local governments would have to ease the burden being placed on property taxpayers by generating revenue from other special taxes and fees.

Chicago Mayor Michael A. Bilandic, while predicting an issue similar to Proposition 13 would pass if it got on the ballot in Illinois, said the public's anger was misdirected and should be aimed instead at the federal government.

Like most other mayors here, he believes local governments are more conscious of costs than any other level of government.

"Local budgets are scrutinized more carefully than any other budget. Whether we have four men on a garbage truck or five men on a garbage truck makes front page headlines. Every little detail is scrutinized. Yet our budget (of $1.2 billion) is just a drop in the bucket compared to the deficits the federal government has been running up over the last 142 years, Bilandic said.

Bilandic, who said Chicago began moving away from the property tax in recent years while increasing or adding taxes like hotel bed taxes and utility taxes, said, "If you want to see a bigger 'revolt' put the federal income tax up on referendum."

Brown promises no state layoffs

By W.B. Road
The Los Angeles Times

SACRAMENTO — When Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr. announced his plan for slashing the state budget in reponse to Proposition 13, he was quick to stress there would be no layoffs of state workers, at least for now.

That immediately raised questions as to whether any serious attempt to cut government spending could ignore the mounting cost of government payrolls at all levels.

The issue of layoffs in local government has triggered the most controversy over implementation of Jarvis since the June 6 election.

Representatives of public employee groups and unions have been particularly outspoken in claiming that the people voted for Prosition 13 to cut "waste" from government — not to lay off workers.

State and local governmental agencies — including counties, cities, schools and special districts — employ 1.5 million workers at an estimated cost of $15 billion a year. That's better than one out of every 10 Californians in the work force.

About 75 percent of state government's operating costs go for employee salaries and benefits. For cities and school districts, the figure is more like 80 percent.

That means that any major cuts in government spending would have to come at the expense of public employees.

Brown's decision not to lay off any state workes imposed a practical limit on the amount that can be trimmed from the state budget to make up for the $7 billion in property taxes local governments and school districts will lose due to Proposition 13.

Between budget cuts and money available from the state surpus, the governor plans to share $4 billion with local government over the next fiscal year.

"It's pretty easy to see that if you're losing $7 billion and only getting back four, there are going to be certain segments of local government that can't get by unless they lay some people off," said Charles E. Gocke, assistant state director of finance.

If the state were to attempt to replace all local tax revenue to be lost as a result of Proposition 13, it would itself have to consider layoffs.

So far, Brown has been able to trim about $715 million from the state budget.

Only $570 million of that can be funneled down to the local level along with additional sums from the state surplus because of legal restrictions on the way certain state funds can be spent.

The governor's fiscal analysts say that pushing budget cuts to the $1 billion level would be virtually impossible without laying off state workers.

"To cut $1 billion, I would have to eliminate 25 percent of state government, and there's no way to elimiate that much state government without laying off quite a few people," Gocke said.

Brown's reluctance to lay off state workers is likely to generate major controversy if local agencies are forced to fire large numbers of employees to survive the looming fiscal crisis.

The city of Los Angeles alone is currently estimating it will be necessary to lay off 6,100 employees.

And the Los Angeles city schools are also facing the possibility of mass layoffs.

"The most recent data I have seen projects that from 5,000 to 7,000 teachers and an equal number of (nonteaching employees) will have to be cut," said Robert Sanders of the United Teachers of Los Angeles.

The City of Berkeley plans to lay off 700 of its approximately 1,200 employees and eliminate funding for 36 community agencies.

Similar stories are to be heard all over the state, and Brown could find it particularly difficult to defend the jobs of state workers if predictions of mass layoffs at the local levels materialize.

Meanwhile, public employee groups are exerting their considerable influence in Sacramento to encourage steps to avert or at least postpone drastic cuts in the number of public workers.

At a minimum, the political pressure which is already mounting will force Brown and the state Legislature to take a close look at legal constraints which have made solving the Proposition 13 crisis particularly difficult.

For instance, almost a fourth of the state budget is locked up in special funds comprised of fees and charges collected from those regulated by such departments as Fish and Gam,e Motor Vehicles and the California Highway Patrol.

These funds can only be used for the functions assigned to these departments by law, and money derived from cutting their budgets cannot legally be used for other purposes such as helping local governments and districts out of their financial bind.

The same budgetary inflexibility exists at the local level.

About 40 percent of most cities' budgets is self supporting, relying on funds collected for such services as water, sewer and refuse collection.

"Money collected for water charges must go for financing the water system," said Don Benninghoven, executive director of the League of California Cities.

"You cannot legally transfer the fees collected for these services to the city general fund."

Officials are locked in debate as to whether the solution is to simply change the law to allow for more flexible use of funds.

Proposition 13 requires that any new generl tax must be approved by a two-thirds vote of the qualified electorate.

Benninghoven argues tht using, for example, water fees to make up for shortfalls in city general funds would in essence subject water users to a new tax and thus have to go to a vote.

Counties have the same problem.

"We need enabling legislation at the state level to allow us to make money on fees, and it would have to be done fast so there would be time for a court interpretation as to whether these would constitute a general tax," said Richard Watson, executive director of the County Supervisors Association of California.

Mandel still relaxes

ARNOLD, Md. (AP) — Suspended Maryland Gov. Marvin Mandel, facing court action on $30,000 in unpaid alimony and awaiting appeal of his political corruption conviction, says he still finds it possible to relax and look to the good things in his life.

"Mostly, it is Jeanne and all of the children that have been instrumental in helping me to overcome some of the frustration that I have," Mandel says of his second wife and his family. She has four children by her prior marriage, two of them living at home, and he had two children, both living away.

In an interview with The Associated Press, Mandel was as adamant as ever that he is innocent of political corruption and feels frustrated about the conviction.

Rhodesian peace plan failing?

The Washington Post

SALISBURY, Rhodesia — The British-American peace initiative in Rhodesia appears perilously close to failing as white and black leaders of the 3-month-old transitional government continue to hold out against attending an all-parties conference, and militant nationalist guerrillas stiffen their conditions for ending the war.

The refusal in particular of the three African members of the government's executive council to go to a Western-sponsored conference comes at a time of a public crisis of confidence among both black and white supporters of the government over its record and ability to survive.

Since the new interim government was set up under an agreement signed here March 3, its rule has been marked by repeated crises within the executive council, threats by its leading black member, Bishop Abel Muzorewa, to withdraw and several accidental massacres of African civilians caught in crossfire between guerrillas and government troops.

At the same time there has been no significant progress toward a cease-fire, despite a formal appeal to the guerrillas over a month ago to lay down their arms. Without a cease-fire, it is seriously doubted elections for a black-majority government can be held before the end of this year, as provided for under the March agreement.

All this explains why there is mounting grass-roots pressure now from the African population for the transitional government to attend an all-parties conference. But its black leaders apparently fear this step would spell political disaster for the March agreement and themselves.

Reports circulating here say the United States and Britain have almost given up on their original idea of convening a general peace conference. They are now said to be simply trying instead to get the black nationalist leaders in and out of the country to talk directly to each other about some kind of a political settlement to end the escalating war.

But one of the nationalist guerrilla leaders, Robert Mugabe, has rejected outright such direct talks while another, Joshua Nkomo, is hinting strongly that the only issue left to discuss with the transitional government is surrender terms.

The two men lead separate factions of the Patriotic Front, the guerrilla alliance that operates from Zambia and Mobambique.

Mugabe told British envoy John Graham and American Ambassador Stephen Low Thursday that he was only willing to attend an all-parties conference called to discuss a new constitution for black-majority rule in Rhodesia. The two Western envoys met with him in the Mozambican capital of Maputo.

They have been visiting Salisbury and other African capitals for the past two weeks in another Western bid to get talks under way involving all the parties to the dispute.

Meanwhile, Nkomo said in an interview here Saturday with the black newspaper the National Observer that there would be no end to the fighting until there was "a clear transfer of real power" to the Patriotic Front.
