Clinton announces Aristide's return

■ Haiti's president to resume position Saturday; hundreds of partying Haitians drown out Cedras during resignation speech.

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Clinton announced Monday that Jean-Bertrand Aristide will return to Haiti this Saturday to resume his "rightful place" as the country's first democratically elected president.

Clinton, in an Oval Office speech to the nation, also said that since U.S. troops occupied Haiti three weeks ago, the level of violence there had declined, refugees have been returning and Parliament has been restored.

Further, he noted that the two remaining Haiti's military rulers, Lt. Gen. Raoul Cedras and army chief of staff Brig. Gen. Philippe Biamby, had resigned. Cedras resigned Monday and Biamby on Saturday. Port-au-Prince police chief Michel Francois, the third member of the junta, fled last week to the neighboring Dominican Republic.

President insists Iraq sanctions will not be lifted

■ Clinton says there's no evidence Saddam was withdrawing 80,000 troops as promised.

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Unmoved by Iraq's promise to pull back its troops from the border of Kuwait, President Clinton on Monday ordered an additional 350 warplanes — including B-52 bombers and advanced fighter jets — to the Persian Gulf in a muscle-flexing warning to Saddam Hussein.

Clinton said Saddam "cannot be trusted" to keep his word. White House officials said the first real test of Iraq's intentions would come today.

In a nationally broadcast speech from the Oval Office, Clinton said sanctions imposed after the 1991 Gulf War would not be lifted despite Iraq's demands for relief.

"Our objectives are clear, our forces are strong and our cause is right," Clinton said.

"We will not allow Saddam Hussein to defy the will of the United States and the international community," the president said.

Clinton said there was no evidence Saddam was withdrawing 80,000 troops massed at Kuwait's border, as promised at the United Nations earlier Monday. White House officials recalled that Iraq reneged on a pledge to retreat after invading Kuwait in 1990, instead pouring in more troops.

"Iraq announced (Monday) that it will pull back its troops from the Kuwait border. But we're interested in facts, not promises, in deeds, not words," Clinton said. "And we have not yet seen evidence that Iraq's troops are in fact pulling back. We will be watching very closely to see that they do so.

MISD finds promise in day care's closing

The peaceful logo depicts a boy and a girl gently reaching toward a flittering butterfly within their grasp.

"Goode Beginnings Never End," the slogan at the now-closed Goode Beginnings Child Day Care Center proclaims.

While it is certainly true that "good beginnings" may endure a lifetime, all things pass in time, as the Proverbs say.

And now it seems promising that the Goode Beginnings Child Day Care Center, which closed due to a money-losing drop in enrollment, will be converted to a site for a Head Start program for 4-year-old children in the Midland public schools' pre-kindergarten programs.

"We have a waiting list right now," Dr. Joseph P. Baressi, superintendent of the Midland Independent School District, said of the Head Start program for children from low-income families.

Currently, the school system operates Head Start programs at Bunche and West Elementary schools. "And this will allow us to spread a bit and have three sites instead of two."

The Goode Beginnings site will be "an adequate facility," Baressi said. "It will serve our program well."

Council to vote on juvenile curfew ordinance today

Students give their opinions, ideas

By Myra Lee Salcedo
Staff Writer

Some Midland Christian students think a curfew isn't a bad idea, but it could be a logistical nightmare for Midland police.

"There are more kids out there than cops. I think a curfew would be hard to enforce. It would cause a lot more trouble for police," said Midland Christian High School Sophomore Vanessa O'Bryant.

Vanessa and 28 of her peers, composed their thoughts on the issue in the form of persuasive essays. Their English teacher, Kirk Macon, mailed the essays to Midland Mayor Bobby Burns. Macon wanted to allow his students an opportunity to Whether youngsters under 17 will be permitted to stay out late is expected to be determined today by the Midland City Council.

After months of discussion and three town hall meetings, the council is scheduled to vote on a juvenile curfew ordinance. The measure requires a majority vote and two readings.

Despite local and national attention to juvenile crime, the proposed curfew has garnered little public interest. And that's unfortunate, one official said.

"The council has always believed this to be a citizens issue," City Council representative Claudia Egan said. "We just don't feel like enough people have spoken one way or another . . . and it's certainly not because of lack of trying."

Ms. Egan described turnout at three recent town hall meetings to seek input on the proposed curfew as "very little."

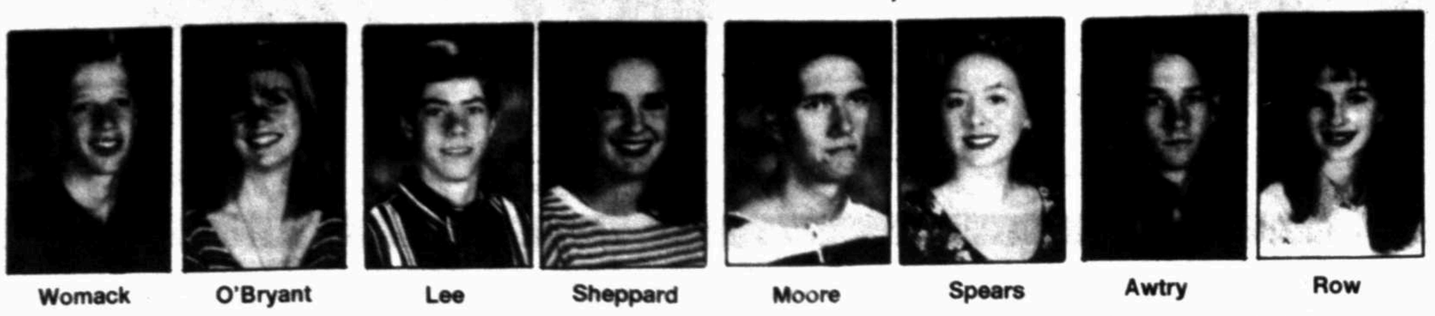

And attendance at approximately 25 public hearings held by Project Awaken — a task

OPINION: Students let City Council know what they think

Womack O'Bryant Lee Sheppard Moore Spears Awtry Row

voice their opinions before the City Council voted on the issue today.

"I thought it was important for the students to see that what they learn up here (at school) has relevance. There is a reason for writing essays. What they learn at school doesn't begin at 8:15 and end at 3:30," he said.

When Macon announced the topic of the assignment in his two English classes, he said there was an immediate reaction. "I told the students to take either side of the issue, and give three reasons either in support of or opposing a curfew ordinance."

"They had free reign with their opinions. All I asked is that they express their feelings tastefully and logically present them," Macon said.

The teacher said his students were encouraged by the fact that their opinions would be read by city leaders.

"It's not a case of they write something, I read it and hand it back, and no one else ever sees it," he said.

Macon said he was surprised that the essays came in with almost as many in favor of as against the curfew.

Mayor Burns said of the 29 letters, 17 of the students were in favor of a curfew and 12 were against having one.

"The kids understood the issue pretty well," Burns said. "Overall, they had a real good sense of what they were talking about."

The students wrote their opinions based on the City Council's first proposal that stated the curfew would be in effect 11 p.m. Sunday through Thursday, and midnight on the weekends. However, it was recently announced that the City Council revised the proposal to push back the curfew to 1 a.m. everyday.

The revised proposal went along with sophomore Alex Autry's suggestion. "I think the times should be moved down," he said, speaking of the original suggested earlier curfew times. "When you get out of a football game — sometimes near midnight — you couldn't go out and get something to eat afterward."

Midland Mayor Burns said he agreed that 11 p.m. was too early. "In the summertime, it doesn't even get dark until close to 10 a.m. So, I thought 11 a.m. was a little early."

Burns said he received about 10 letters about the issue from grade school pupils. "Almost every one of them was against the curfew," he said, noting if a curfew was adopted, it would operate on a one-year trial basis.

"I don't think a curfew would hurt," MC sophomore Emily Row said. "There is nothing to do in Midland that late anyway."

April Sheppard agreed. "Everything is closed in Midland after a certain time," she said.

Fellow student Dwaine Moore disagreed. "If you have a curfew, people will set out to break it. It cuts down on freedoms and you can't go out with your friends."

Sophomore Kelsey Spears said having a curfew could cut down on early morning car accidents.

"I still don't like the idea of government taking away more and more of our freedoms. The government is controlling too much," Vanessa O'Bryant said. She noted that she hoped the City Council members would read the students' essays. "We are getting close to voting age. I hope they listen," she said.

Sophomore Colby Lee said parents ought to be held responsible for the actions of teen-agers up to no good in the early morning hours.

Vanessa agreed. "If kids are out at 3 a.m. getting into trouble, the police ought to find the parents and penalize them."

Kelsey said a non-negotiable issue in her house is what time she must be in a house, her's or a friend's. "My mother is a single parent. She works, and she has put the fear of God into me about being out late," she said. However, Kelsy said she respects her mother's wishes. "I have a good relationship with my mom. She is my best friend. It's a mutual agreement."

Jerod Womack said it would be a real problem for the City of Midland to enforce a curfew if surrounding counties didn't have one. "If Odessa and Greenwood don't have a curfew, if there is no curfew 15-30 minutes away, it's going to be impossible to enforce it in Midland."

He said teen-agers would be tempted to drive to areas with no curfews, hang out with friends, and then sneak back to Midland.

Mayor Burns said Jerod brought up a point not yet considered.

Other students allowed that teen-agers could dodge police officers by remaining less visible by driving down back streets.

Chad Leascher wrote in his essay that "the later teen-agers stay out, the less rest they get that they need. When kids stay up late they are very tired in the morning and not prepared to be able to do school work, if they even go to school."

Emily Mitchell wrote that a curfew could cut down on "teen pregnancy and date rape." But she said enforcement would require "more cops working longer hours, which means that taxes probably will go up."

When queried, the students allowed that some of their parents were stricter than parents of some of their friends.

"Some kids may not have parents around or may only have one parent," Jerod said. "But, I really think there are more crimes police should be spending their time on than enforcing a curfew."

"That's true. And I just don't like the thought behind it, that someone is going to take away your rights," Vanessa said.

MISD: Day care to be used for Head Start program

(From 1A)

The Midland County Commissioners' Court on Monday agreed to deed the brick-and-steel building in the southwest corner of Taylor Park at Goode Street and Griffin Avenue in south-central Midland to MISD.

The non-profit Goode Beginnings Child Day Care Center, which opened in 1982 under a $265,686 federal-building grant, recently closed due to a money-losing drop in attendance despite the center's dedication to quality educational and care programs, said Curtis McClane, a member of the board of directors of Midland Project Self-Sufficiency (MPSS), which monitored Goode Beginnings.

MPSS is a multi-faceted housing and educational program that encourages men and women to get off the welfare doles and to become self-supportive by acquiring knowledge, structure in their lives, and marketable skills.

"We feel we offered probably as good a quality or better than any (day care) in town," McClane said. "We were above minimum standards. There's no point in non-profits trying to compete with private industry if they (non-profit organizations) can't offer anything better. I thought we could offer a better service, but parents aren't always interested in better quality service. It amazes me. And they don't always know how to look for it, either."

McClane's wife, Kitty, had been Goode Beginnings' executive director since 1989.

"Kitty, as far the operations, running it, the curriculum, and taking care of the kids, did a superior job," McClane said. "She is well respected in this area."

Mrs. McClane's academic and work backgrounds are in family and human-development areas.

Jerrie Ann Westmoreland, who is executive director of the Midland County Housing Authority, noted that Goode Beginnings fell victim to an ever-expanding and competitive day-care market, to after-school care facilities, to its own location off of main highway arteries in south-central Midland, and to a drop in guaranteed governmental funding.

Earlier, state and federal funds for subsidized day care were available only to non-profit agencies. It was that policy that gave rise to Midland County's seeking federal funds in the early 1980s to build Goode Beginnings.

The day care was licensed for 140 children from birth through age 10, peaked out at about 120 enrollees, and recently dropped to a money-losing 48.

"Goode Beginnings is sort of off the beaten path," Mrs. Westmoreland said. "It's not on a main artery."

And since the subsidized government money for day care is available to approved for-profit centers and individuals, including mothers, aunts and other relatives, throughout town, Mrs. Westmoreland noted that fathers and mothers seeking day care for their children found more convenient day-care locations for their children.

As a result, Goode Beginnings' enrollment plummeted.

"We had a really good day care when we were off and running," Mrs. Westmoreland said. "She (Kitty McClane) was exceptional in those day-care areas. We tried to operate a positive program that was meaningful."

Mrs. Westmoreland said there was "not a problem" for parents' finding other day-care centers for their children. "There were other day cares welcoming them with open arms."

Mrs. Westmoreland said the conversion of Goode Beginnings from a day-care operation to a Head Start program "would be superb, wonderful."

Fees at the day care were set on a sliding scale in deference to low-income families.

Commissioner Louisa Valencia said Goode Beginnings is "going to be used for what it was built for: low-income children and little people.

"And it's built for little people," she said. "It's got little commodes; it's got little sinks; it's got little urinals. It's got everything in there for little people."

Mrs. Valencia said she was glad that the "school was interested in taking that building over to be used for Head Start. The purpose of that building was to help the people in that area (of town) and low-income children."

Mrs. Valencia said the county would sell the building and its heating-and-air-conditioning system to MISD for a nominal fee, such as $10.

Midland County Judge Charles W. "Bro" Seltzer noted that in deeding the building to MISD, the county "will not have any liability on that building."

The land on which the building rests and the adjoining Taylor Park are owned by the City of Midland.

"Midland County will have no expense, as we are right now. By doing a sale to the school district, we, in turn, save money," Seltzer said.

"Their (MISD's) immunity is much more broad. It takes us out of the liability picture, and it puts them under their immunity under the Texas Tort Claim Act, which is much more broad than the immunity that is granted to county governments," Seltzer said.

The contract will include a "reversion" clause, Seltzer said, "that would return the building's ownership to the county should the building not serve its agreed-upon purpose or purposes.

VOTE: Council to decide for or against curfew force formed to look into juvenile crime issues — since last February was "little or none," said Ms. Egan, Project Awaken chairperson.

(From 1A)

Project Awaken was created to examine recommendations — including a juvenile curfew — made by a special Midland County grand jury in February 1993 following a nine-month investigation into juvenile crime.

From the feedback she has received on the proposed curfew, Ms. Egan said: "There's 60 percent of the people who are apathetic, about 20 percent who want it and 20 percent who don't want it."

A curfew has been supported by the Midland Police Department and the District Attorney's Office.

The most notable opposition comes from a citizens' group — led by Mark Kimble — which advocates an alternative to the curfew.

Kimble — who maintains a curfew would be an invasion of the freedoms of youngsters and their parents — suggested the formation of a committee with two goals: to find things for youngsters to do and seek ways to control juvenile crime. This should not involve the use of tax dollars, he emphasized.

Among the possibilities to occupy youngsters' time are Young Adult Safety Zones, or places and events sponsored by community service agencies and private businesses where youngsters would be welcome, Kimble said.

And among the possibilities to curb juvenile crime might be to impose community service as a punishment to delinquent youths and their parents, he said.

Ms. Egan said the council — if partial to Kimble's suggestions — may defer the vote for a year and help create a citizens committee to research juvenile crime and seek solutions other than a curfew.

"Maybe we need to give the citizens more time and let the juvenile development group (Kimble's group) come back to us in one year," she said.

After a year — or even before if seen fit — the council would bring the curfew issue back up for a vote, she said.

Although today's curfew item is not in the form of a public hearing, the council will welcome public input on what to do, city officials said.

As it stands now, the council can defer the vote, deny the ordinance — or adopt a curfew.

The initial proposed ordinance considered by the City Council was fashioned after a curfew adopted in Dallas.

A revised proposal omits as an offense business owners or operators who allow youngsters in their establishment during curfew hours without notifying police.

The proposal also pushes back the hours the curfew goes into effect to 1 a.m., everyday. The initial consideration was 11 p.m., Sunday through Thursday, and midnight on the weekend. The curfew hours end at 6 a.m.

Several exceptions — such as traveling to and from work, school and church, emergencies, being with a parent or guardian and being married — are included in the curfew ordinance.

Another change includes a 45-day grace period to allow Midlanders to acclimate to the ordinance. That would, contingent on passage, put the curfew into effect at the beginning of December.

The proposal also calls for the ordinance to be active one year unless extended by the City Council.

None of the criteria that make up the proposal are set in stone. The council can make revisions and then vote on the proposal with changes.

ORDER: Clinton sends more warplanes to Iraq

(From 1A)

Nations as it ensures that Iraq never again possesses weapons of mass destruction. Moreover, the sanctions will be maintained until Iraq complies with all relevant U.N. resolutions. That is the answer to Iraq's sanctions problem (that forbids oil sales and other trade) — full compliance, not reckless provocation."

Clinton spoke as 300 U.S. soldiers arrived in Kuwait City on Monday, the vanguard of 70,000 troops mobilized or standing by for duty in the Persian Gulf region.

The new deployment means about 600 U.S. aircraft will be moving into the Gulf region over the coming days from various Air Force bases, including those in Germany and Italy. The list includes a dozen F-117 "Stealth" fighters and six B-52 long-range bombers.

A senior Republican, Sen. Richard Lugar of Indiana, praised Clinton's move. "He has sent very clear signals and has taken action," Lugar said. "The troops that are moving there are for real. They have had, many of them, experience already in the gulf."

Senate Republican Leader Bob Dole said he doubts that Saddam anticipated such a response from the Clinton administration.

"I think he's always had a hearing problem . . .," Dole said on CNN's "Larry King Live" show Monday night. "It seems to me that Saddam Hussein better understand this is not a Democratic or Republican effort. This is an American effort . . . . If they push us, we're going to respond."

Clinton spent much of the day calling world leaders to reassemble the international coalition that defeated Iraq in the Gulf War. He also called former President George Bush and thanked him for expressing support earlier in the day.

"The United States and the international community have given their word that Iraq must respect the borders of their neighbors," Clinton said.

Harking to the expulsion of Iraqi forces from Kuwait, Clinton said, "We remain committed to defend the integrity of that nation and to protect the stability of the gulf region."

Asked about an Iraqi pullback, Gen. John Shalikashvili, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, said, "I haven't seen anything like that, no."

LEAVE: Clinton announces Aristide's return

(From 1A)

dangerous. We still have a lot of work ahead of us, but our troops are keeping America's commitment to restore democracy.

Concerning the exiled Haitian president, who has frequently been at odds with the administration, Clinton said: "I am pleased to announce Aristide will return home to assume his rightful place Saturday, Oct. 15."

U.S. officials said earlier that Aristide may be accompanied to Haiti by Secretary of State Warren Christopher.

With an eye on Aristide's return, the United States has been sending food to Haiti for feeding programs and equipment for a jobs program that is expected to employ 50,000 Haitians by early next year.

The United States has been feeding large numbers of Haitians for years. Officials said the expanded program being considered will reach 1.3 million Haitian children under 5, women and the elderly. Fuel also is being sent to compensate for shortages resulting from the international trade embargo against Haiti.

All international sanctions against Haiti will be officially removed once Aristide returns.

During Cedras' resignation on Monday, Haiti's masses rose up and drowned him out.

The once-omnipotent Cedras seemed small in the entranceway of the clapboard army headquarters as he announced he was resigning as military leader and quitting the country for its own good.

Cedras was dwarfed by crimson-bereted U.S. military commander Hugh Shelton, whose 19,500 soldiers played a large role in finally driving out the Haitian coup leader.

The sound of 5,000 joyful people buried the tubas and trombones of Cedras' military band playing the national anthem with an impromptu version of "Auld Lang Syne."

Then Cedras' voice, which once dominated state media, faded amid an underamplified sound system and the crowd's shouts of "Hoodlum!" and "Thief!"

Even his wife, Yannick, wearing designer eyeglasses and a green-and-white polka dot dress, wasn't paying attention during her husband's speech, instead trying to maintain a smile as she heard the verbal abuse from the crowd.

As a sort of final indignity, the camouflage-uniformed American occupying troops had to protect Cedras, firing warning shots when a rock-thrower shattered the windshield of his departing Toyota Land Cruiser.

As a result of Lt. Gen. Cedras' resignation, the final condition has been met by the Haitian military leadership to comply with the terms of the agreement.

The World in brief

■ Cult leader died in carnage, police say

LAUSANNE, Switzerland — The financial mastermind of the doomsday cult at the center of 53 deaths in Switzerland and Canada perished in the carnage, police said Monday, deepening the mystery surrounding the fate of the cult's other leader.

Pathologists using dental records identified Joseph di Mambro among the burned bodies found in three charred chalets in the southwestern Swiss village of Granges-sur-Salvan, Valais state police said.

Di Mambro, a 70-year-old French-Canadian, was widely described as the grand master and financial power of the cult, called the Order of the Solar Tradition in Switzerland, with links in France, Canada and Australia.

The whereabouts of Luc Jouret, a Belgian believed to be the charismatic force behind the cult, remained unknown.

Police have said they don't know whether Jouret, 46, is alive or dead, but they have issued an international warrant for his arrest on suspicion of arson and murder, the same charges that had been pending against di Mambro.

■ U.N. intensifies relief flights to Sarajevo

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — The United Nations flew 20 relief flights to Sarajevo on Monday, continuing a stepped-up airlift to replenish seriously depleted food stocks.

The flights delivered 290 tons of food. Twenty more flights were scheduled for today, said U.N. aid spokesman Kris Janowski.

Twenty planeloads of food and supplies also arrived Sunday, the first full day of flights to Sarajevo in more than two weeks.

Bosnian Serb gunfire had forced the airport to close, and Serbs blocked U.N. land convoys to Sarajevo, in retaliation for a NATO air strike Sept. 22 on a Serb tank. U.N. commanders called the strike when Serbs attacked French peacekeepers.

Frequent suspensions of the airlift because of gunfire and the Serb land blockade had left Sarajevo with a three-day food supply, U.N. officials said. The city's 360,000 residents depend on the airlift for 80 percent of their food needs.

The U.N. commander in Bosnia, Lt. Gen. Sir Michael Rose, met Monday with the Bosnian Serb commander, Gen. Ratko Mladic, to convince the Serbs to allow free movement for U.N. aid convoys.

■ Only France, Britain join U.S. in gulf

The international coalition that worked together to fight Iraq in 1991 has yet to unite again in the face of Saddam Hussein's military buildup on the border with Kuwait.

Only the United States, Britain and France had deployed troops by Monday, with Australia and Egypt saying they would join if necessary. Other Arab nations had not made any public announcements about joining an international force to withstand Iraq a second time.

After Iraq invaded Kuwait in 1990, it took President George Bush months to build the coalition of dozens of countries to set up forces in the region.

One big difference from the Gulf War was the stand reportedly taken by King Hussein of Jordan, isolated for siding with Saddam in 1991.

The king was quoted Monday by Kuwait's al-Siyassah daily as saying: "We have advised Iraq not to repeat the mistake of 1990. We will oppose any use of force by any Arab against another. We are on the side of the target of aggression."

Rabin promises security, dignity to Syria

JERUSALEM (AP) — Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin promised security and dignity to Syria and its people Monday as a terrorist attack and Iraqi troop movements shadowed the start of a new round of diplomacy by Secretary of State Warren Christopher.

Christopher pledged that the United States would stand firmly with Israel against terrorists, who he said wanted to kill the peace process as well as innocent civilians. He said Iraqi President Saddam Hussein "would not be permitted to intimidate the people of Kuwait or the people of this region."

The terrorist attack here that left two dead and 13 injured, including an American diplomat, underscored Israel's obsession with security, and Rabin in a gesture to Syria recognized its importance to the Arab country as well.

He said the peace Israel seeks was one that "brings about normalization and security to both our countries, and it has to be done maintaining the dignity of our peoples and our countries together."

His statement at a news conference was a gesture to Damascus in the sphere of "public diplomacy," which has shown more progress recently than the negotiations over the future of the Golan Heights.

"The problem of the negotiation with Syria remains unsolved yet," Rabin said. "There are gaps between the positions between Syria and Israel."

Christopher is hoping public gestures will inspire confidence on both sides and produce the compromises needed for an accord.

He declined to say whether Rabin or Foreign Minister Shimon Peres made any new proposals for him to take to Damascus today. "You will have to understand that it would make it impossible for me to do my job well if I were to indicate what the proposals were, or even if there were new proposals," Christopher said.

Last week, on a visit to Washington, the Syrian foreign minister, Farouk Sharaa, took questions from Israeli reporters at a news conference, gave an interview to Israel television and met with leaders of the American Jewish community.

Christopher praised Sharaa's moves as an important first step, but steered clear of the foreign minister's assertions that Syria had never attacked Israel and that it did not give refuge to terrorist groups.

At the same time, Christopher called on Yasser Arafat, chairman of the Palestine Liberation Organization, to respond to the terrorist attack Sunday night near Zion Square with "a strong condemnation."

The loosening of the Arab economic boycott of Israel is another step in the process that Christopher and other State Department officials hope eventually will produce a peace treaty, though they are now saying the negotiations could drag on into 1995.

Christopher's six-day trip is distracted by the movement of Iraqi troops toward the Kuwaiti border. He will go to Kuwait on Wednesday to talk to leaders of the oil-rich emirate and to underscore U.S. support for the country that a U.S.-led military force liberated from Iraqi annexation in 1991.

Within hours after U.S. troops began landing in Kuwait, Iraq's ambassador to the United Nations announced that Iraqi forces were being pulled back from the border.

Cedras' exit leaves Haiti rudderless until Aristide returns

By Michael Norton
Associated Press Writer

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti — The departure of coup leader Raoul Cedras, while a triumph for American policy-makers, leaves Haiti temporarily rudderless at an uncertain time.

Extraordinary pressures will be placed on Haitians in the next few days, as excitement builds among the people for the scheduled return Saturday of exiled President Jean-Bertrand Aristide.

"The only thing I worry about is that Haiti's going to be five days without a leader," said Spc. Mike Klier, 21, of Virginia Beach, Va., sitting at the wheel at a Humvee outside Haitian army headquarters.

For now, American forces are practically the only law in the land.

The Haitian army melted away in the northern city of Cap-Haitien after a fire fight with U.S. Marines. The first five Haitians introduced there in an interim U.S.-backed civilian police force were hooted out Sunday by a mob calling the Haitians "attaches," the armed, terrorizing allies of the old Haitian military.

Seeking to deal with a power vacuum and stop a series of nighttime burglaries, Port-au-Prince Mayor Evans Paul announced the creation of a 500-member, unarmed municipal police force.

But no one knows how order will be maintained in the countryside, which has traditionally been run by feudal chiefs or county sheriffs.

American Lt. Gen. Hugh Shelton publicly commended Cedras for doing what he could to control the Haitian forces, and none of the 19,500 Americans sent here have been killed in action.

By resigning near the end of his three-year term, Cedras saved some face and may still counsel moderation among his soldiers and the attaches. But his announcement that he was leaving Haiti, joining fellow coup leader Michel Francois in exile, may provoke resentment among those soldiers left behind. They now will have to face the people they repressed — alone.

And the people's expectations are rising as Aristide's return nears.

Aid groups are making plans in case the chaos that allowed the looting of hundreds of neighborhood food centers heightens as the excitement grows.

Without an active role by the Haitian forces, American troops are now handling police functions as the crowd-control responsibility grows. Many American MPs express little eagerness to handle the massive crowds expected this weekend.

■ Analysis

The Americans still wear their flak jackets and understand the volatility of a heated mob. An American had to fire warning shots Monday after a demonstrator smashed the windshield of Cedras' 4-wheel-drive as it departed army headquarters.

Some are optimistic.

"I actually feel safer without Cedras," said 22-year-old Spc. Charles Hill of Pembroke, Mass.

Two Americans win Nobel Prize in medicine for research on cells

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — Two Americans won the Nobel Prize in medicine Monday for shedding light on how cells communicate to speed the spread of killer diseases like cholera and diabetes throughout the body.

Alfred G. Gilman and Martin Rodbell will split the $930,000 prize for determining how a certain group of proteins can help transmit and modulate signals in cells, much like a biological switchboard.

Their discoveries, products of two decades of work, have been "paramount" in helping scientists understand diseases that affect tens of millions of people around the globe, said Professor Bertil Fredholm of the Karolinska Institute's Nobel Assembly.

While their research, carried out over two decades, has not netted treatments yet, the institute said it ultimately might.

The medicine prize was the first of this year's six Nobel awards to be announced. Since 1901 when the first Nobel medicine prize was awarded, 72 of 157 winners have been from the United States, reflecting an American dominance in basic research, especially after World War II.

Rodbell, however, deplored what he called today's emphasis on specific goals at the expense of unfettered basic research.

"The world ain't the same," he said at a news conference in suburban Washington, where he was visiting family. "Now everything is targeted, bottom line, how to make a buck."

Rodbell, 68, retired in May from the National Institute of Environmental Health Sciences in Research Triangle Park, N.C., because, he said, his basic research budget kept shrinking and he saw there would not be enough money to complete the fiscal year. He now holds the title scientist emeritus.

"The attention of the Congress and the executive branch always has been toward the end goal," he said. "They are not as willing to take a chance now on people like me in exploring the unknown."

Gilman, 53, is chairman of the department of pharmacology at The University of Texas Southwestern Medical Center at Dallas.

"I'm awestruck. I'm more excited than I've ever been," Gilman said after the prize was announced.

He predicted more knowledge about the communication process inside cells "will help considerably in designing better drugs and control malfunctions for treatment of specific diseases."

Clinton must stand firm against Iraq

Despite news Monday afternoon that an Iraq-Kuwait standoff had been averted, Saddam Hussein's war drums necessitated President Clinton's response over the weekend: Sending nearly 70,000 U.S. troops to the Persian Gulf in anticipation of another Iraqi move into Kuwait, and demanding that Hussein reverse his troop movements to that region.

Defense Secretary William Perry would not rule out a preemptive strike against Baghdad in retailiation for the Iraqi manuever.

When Hussein began massing Iraqi troops along the border with Kuwait, Clinton had no choice but to send U.S. troops. Were Iraqi forces again to overrun Kuwait, grabbing control once more of what Hussein calls Iraq's 19th province, he would be in a position to begin funding his war machine, which would place all the nations in the Middle East in jeopardy and, particularly, Saudi Arabia.

If Saudi Arabia's oil supply line were to be damaged, ending that nation's supply to the world, the United States' imported supply would be ended. That constitutes a significant percentage of U.S. daily oil demand.

So there is no question that Hussein's warlike move demanded the response given by Clinton. There also is no doubt that Hussein has closely watched Clinton's action in regard to the previous crises in Bosnia, Haiti and North Korea, and obviously thinks he can either get away with grabbing Kuwait or position himself better for negotiations that would undoubtedly be aimed at ending sanctions against Iraq for the Persian Gulf War.

What all that translates into is that Clinton must not hesitate to strike swiftly and with resolve in the event that Hussein sends his troops into Kuwait once again.

Hussein appeared to be positioning himself for a power base from which he could direct future warfare throughout the Middle East, and Clinton must not make the same mistakes that were made at the end of the Persian Gulf War.

On the other hand, even if Hussein's latest actions were no more than a demand for attention and an effort to cause economic sanctions against Iraq to be lifted, Clinton's response was no less in order.

WILLIAM MURCHISON

Election issues include guns, liberty

What's this upcoming election all about anyway? Lots of things — such as the propensity of government to stick its big, fat, ugly nose into ordinary people's business.

Murchison

Take guns. Victory for the sort of senator or congressman who thinks Bill Clinton a great moral example and intellectual leader means intensified efforts to control handguns and, as the media call them, "assault" weapons.

The question always is framed: How can we possibly need all these horrible weapons we have in our closets and purses and glove boxes? The question rarely is framed: "Why do people do ugly things to each other?" This would broach the Original Sin question, which is a theological not political question and therefore, to gun controllers, a big yawn.

The idea is to control behavior by controlling the instrumentalities of behavior. The idea of changing behavior rarely comes up in these rarefied policy debates.

Take cigarettes, which the reigning Democrats hope to tax and regulate almost out of existence.

The Pentagon won't let servicemen smoke on base. The Occupational Safety and Health Administration wants to ban smoking at, get this, 6.2 million workplaces — except where proprietors provide special and costly ventilation. The Food and Drug Administration is looking at the possibility of regulating tobacco as a drug. You can't smoke at the Post Office or at some major airports.

The rationale: Cigarettes kill. But something is funny here. Even if cigarettes (sometimes) kill the smoker (after usually a long interval), you wonder how that got to be the government's business. If cigarettes are suicide weapons, why not require buyers to obtain government permission — as with, in the Brady Bill era, the purchase of a handgun?

Well, you see, it's not just smokers; it's nonsmokers also. The government's official position is that so-called secondhand smoke pollutes other people's lungs.

The scientific evidence for such an assertion is, shall we say, debatable. Drs. Gary Huber, Robert E. Brockie and Vijay J. Mahajan, in the American Enterprise Institute's Regulation magazine, have accused the Environmental Protection Agency of rigging a study of secondhand smoke "through manipulations, assumptions and extrapolations." This is disquieting testimony that the EPA has yet to rebut.

Common sense laughs at other aspects of the government case: John Doe is dying of cancer, thanks to Richard Roe's cigar? A lifelong nonsmoker — the one addressing you at this moment — says baloney. You don't get that kind of smoke from the man at the restaurant table next to you.

So how did secondhand smoke get to be the business of government? It didn't really. Government reached out and claimed it as business. We are far past the era of protective government — the kind that enforces contracts and keeps the peace. That we have so little peace probably is due in part to government's fixation on stamping out things for which the political/intellectual class has a cultivated distaste — e.g., guns and cigarettes. Why (reasons the ruling class) should anyone else like them any better?

CHARLEY REESE

Clinton's foreign policy messages confused

American foreign policy is almost never what politicians tell the American people it is.

Take Iran, for example.

We have just seen Mr. Clinton complain at his meeting with Mr. Boris Yeltsin of Russia about Russian arms sales to Iran. Stop it, says Mr. Clinton. Iran is a bad country. Renegade. Sponsors terrorism, etc.

Reese

Let me quote from Mr. Clinton's speech to B'nai B'rith at Chicago last August:

"Of equal importance," Mr. Clinton said, oh so sincerely, "is our effort to contain Iran, the world's leading state sponsor of terrorism; we pledge to work with like-minded countries to meet the challenge of Iran's support for terrorist groups; its efforts to acquire weapons of mass destruction; and its campaign to subvert moderate regimes that have opted for peace. We must do this. We call upon all our allies to recognize the true nature of Iranian intentions and to help us convince Tehran that we will not tolerate rogue behavior."

The real question is, What are the true intentions of the Clinton administration? Guess where Iran gets money to buy Russian weapons? From U.S. oil companies.

The Boston Globe, no conservative rag, editorialized on Sept. 6, "But Clinton's vow to weaken and isolate the heirs of Khomeini rings hollow. Thanks to dealings of U.S. oil companies, the United States is the major purchaser of Iranian oil."

The Globe also credits the work of Iran's lobby — yes, even the mullahs who desecrated the burned bodies of Americans in 1980 have a Washington lobbyist — with pressuring senators to demand that the State Department report on the Iranian resistance's alleged support of terrorism.

Now this is interesting, because while Clinton is blathering on about isolating Iran, folks in the State Department have been talking for months about the willingness to open a dialogue with Iran. Robert Pelletreau, a State Department bigwig, said last spring, " . . . we hold the door open to an authoritative dialogue with the government of Iran . . . the United States is not really trying to overthrow the Iranian regime. We believe the Iranian regime is a permanent feature."

And guess what the mullahs have said is a condition for dialogue with the United States? The United States must condemn the Iranian resistance.

And guess what the U.S. State Department is about to do. It's about to issue a report on the Iranian resistance, which the Iranian patriots fear is going to paint the coalition as terrorist and Marxist, which, by the way, is the mullahs' description of it.

So let's get this straight. The United States condemns Iran as the world's number one state sponsor of terrorism and pledges to isolate it. At the same time, U.S. oil companies are Iran's biggest customers. At the same time, the State Department keeps saying over and over that it wants a dialogue with Iran, but refuses to talk to the moderate Iranians in the resistance who have pledged to have a democratic and secular government.

Do you think this is weird?

It's not weird. Never, ever pay any attention to speeches politicians make about foreign policy. Instead, try to find out what big oil and big banks are doing. Follow the money. U.S. foreign policy is not made in Washington. It's made in New York.

Children of '90s are no longer innocents

I found it interesting that this summer's big box-office attraction, "The Lion King," was branded "sexist, racist and homophobic" while only a few years ago, the highest Hollywood award went to "Silence of the Lambs" where the hero ate people, and there was little outcry. I know some will say, "Yes, but one was a movie 'for children.'" Let's not fool ourselves. Children are not innocents anymore. They are exposed to more "life" in one day in the 90's than many of us over 50 were in years of living.

From the violence on Saturday morning cartoons to the Nintendo games they jam the mall arcades to play. From "gun toting" second-graders to babes who "divorce" their parents. They live in a day where scenes of a double murder in Brentwood are revisited daily on prime time TV for weeks on end. Artistic media such as theater, movies and literature have always been attempts to mirror culture back to us as it is. Right or wrong, we live in a day where sexism, racism and homophobia fill our lives. I'm not surprised that these symbols show up in a children's film. They are not protected from them in real life, why should their movies be any different? I just wish the culture had a better image of itself to mirror!

Court's rulings differ from beliefs of some

Judging from the number of critics to my letter of Sept. 4, relating to the Second Amendment to the U.S. Constitution, there seems to be a number of people who, in spite of U.S. Supreme Court decisions to the contrary, seem to believe that the Second Amendment confers upon the individual the right to bear arms. These people should take their arguments before the U.S. Supreme Court and not before this forum. For over 100 years these arguments in various theories or another have been brought before the Supreme Court. None has prevailed.

Notwithstanding J.P. Stroup's snide sarcasm, no one owes me a "debt of gratitude" for citing Supreme Court decisions that are of record and can be read by anyone who may wish to visit the county law library. Stroup does not wish to instruct me on Title 10, Section 31 of the USC, but then proceeds to do so. Stroup should read it again, this time with professional help. His obiter dictum is nothing short of vigilante talk. I obtained my instruction on this subject from an eminent professor and author of constitutional and statutory law at Georgetown University Law School, Washington, D.C.

If there is a constitutional right under the Second Amendment, why has not New York's Sullivan Act been declared unconstitutional. For the very legal reason that there is no such individual constitutional right. But take note, now, that the Second Amendment nowhere says that the individual cannot bear arms. That issue is left to the police powers of the various states. And in no state in the union that I know of is the individual allowed to wear a side arm, except of course certain designated groups of individuals. The law of the West ain't no more.

Now if any of these gung-ho individuals still think he has a constitutional right to bear arms, let him then strap on a side arm and go swaggering down the street and then, when arrested, see how far he gets with his constitutional right argument.

Dems have given us onerous bureaucracy

Russell Baker's October 2 column, "Angry GOP has congressional death wish," chides Republican lawmakers for wanting to become the majority party in Congress at the same time "the American people hate the Congress."

Speaking for myself, I am not so disgusted with Congress as an institution as I am with liberals so fond of jumping on their horses and riding off in all directions at once. It seems that most Democrats are willing to pass any bill that endorses their vision and version of a socially engineered America.

The Democratic Party, which has controlled the House of Representatives since 1933 — with the exception of the years 1947-48 and 1953-54 — has had numerous opportunities to manage federal laws and regulations in a prudent manner. Instead, we now have an oppressive bureaucracy and an economic system that almost requires lower- and middle-income spouses to both work full-time outside the home just to pay the monthly bills.

The Republicans have long been committed to the principle of local government first, state government second and the federal government last. This formula encourages freedom and responsibility to flourish where we need it the most — at home in the community of our choice. A Republican sweep of the House, Senate and, in 1996, the presidency, might be ambitious, but it would be the best thing to happen in America since Dwight Eisenhower's "Mandate for Change" occurred in the elections of 1952.

Seeing stars: Autographs give some collectors scrap of history

By Lynn Bulmahn
Waco Tribune-Herald

WACO — Most of us have stars in our eyes.

When we see a star in public — be he an athlete, author, entertainer or politician — the noted celebrity is usually surrounded by people trying to get an autograph.

Now the autographed items themselves are becoming big business. They fetch big money. And it's a booming hobby.

Even when the buyer doesn't get the autograph in person, he or she may want to purchase one.

Autographed items — ranging from books to balls, 8-by-10 photos to television or movie scripts, jerseys to lithograph prints — have soared upward in sales over the past few years, said Brent Bankston, owner of Bankston's in Southgate Center.

The store, which sells autographed sports cards, baseballs and other items, has attracted collectors wanting the "John Hancock" of anyone famous.

Bankston said there is a "collector's frenzy" for autographs.

A mere signature can up the value of an ordinary object. For instance, a $25 basketball commanded $125 after being signed by Hakeem Olajuwon of the Houston Rockets at the recent Sports Hall of Fame signing party. Stores such as Bankston's may sell such an item for as much as $150 to $160.

Auction houses such as Christie's may feature autographed items at even more incredible prices. "Some items can go for tens of thousands of dollars," Bankston said.

Autographs are a unique niche among collectibles, he said. "People are scouring the bushes looking for things to pick up," he added.

"Sometimes you buy things and sometimes you luck onto things," said autograph collector Dr. Gwin Morris, assistant vice president for field development at Baylor University.

Morris has purchased autographs of 1950s B-movie cowboy stars, of the Brooklyn Dodgers, of many authors and of Presidents.

Today, celebrities may appear at autograph events, where people can purchase admission — and an autograph. However, Morris said, collectors may write to the celebrities, asking for an autographed reply, or simply ask for autographs at sporting events, social events or shows where celebrities perform.

"People want to tie themselves to the stars," Bankston said. "It's all driven by our society today. People want a tie in and to escape a little bit from everyday life with the heroes and people they look up to."

Recently, members of the Houston Rockets showed up at the Texas Sports Hall of Fame to sign autographs. So did the public — in such numbers it prompted coach Rudy Tomjanovich to comment that he didn't realize there were so many Rocket fans in Central Texas.

The appeal may have been, in part, that visitors had the opportunity to get items signed by the NBA champs.

"Everybody loves a winner," whether it be a noted businessman, athlete, coach or other celebrity, said Jordon Cox, director of the Sports Hall of Fame. "I think that's part of the reason that stuff's important. You want to be associated with notables."

It doesn't have to be a sports figure. Cox said U.S. Sen. Kay Bailey Hutchison, running for re-election, recently visited — and was similarly swamped by autograph-seekers.

The autograph is a bridge between the ordinary person and the celebrity, Bankston said. By getting the star's signature, he said, people feel they've have had personal contact with celebrity — if only for a moment.

"People enjoy having familiar people around them and they like to have their signatures for the fun of it," Morris said. "The signatures become true investments."

"It's the personal contact they have with someone who, in their estimation, is larger than life that drives people to get their autograph," Cox said. "The names change and the heroes change. But one thing doesn't change — the part of wanting to be next to someone famous, especially in sports."

Morris said he buys many of his autographs in places as diverse as bookstores and specialty shops. He has collected autographs of everyone from Calvin Coolidge, Lyndon and Lady Bird Johnson and Dick Rutan and Jeana Yaegar, pilots of an alternative fuel plane.

Yet, going into a Houston hotel, Morris bumped into country singer Larry Gatlin. Morris immediately asked for an autograph. He got it.

Similarly, he has an autograph from former Dallas Cowboy great Bob Lilly. That was obtained during a political campaign stop, when Lilly was stumping for a 1960s gubernatorial candidate.

Cox himself has quite a collection. A former sportscaster for KWTX Channel 10, he said he would often take issues of Sports Illustrated magazine with him when he covered games. He would leave magazines in various athletes' lockers to have them signed.

At first, Cox said, he shied away from doing so. Then, older sports reporters told him he should appreciate rubbing shoulders with today's athletes. So, Cox began asking for their autographs.

He said he's been told his collection would be worth some money — but he's not willing to part with such keepsakes.

In the same vein as autographs, letters are also hot items — especially if their content is more than a form letter.

"The person may write, 'This will acknowledge receipt of your note,'" Morris said. "But sometimes you get really strange context of the content of the letters. That makes it real exciting."

Handwritten or signed letters that were sent right before a historic event are often ironic in their content — and prized by collectors.

For instance, Morris said, if a person had received a signed note from John F. Kennedy expressing the slain president's misgivings about his trip to Dallas, such a letter would become almost priceless in value.

Often, a collector may luck into such a collectible.

"I had written Tom Landry to come speak on campus," Morris said.

The then-Dallas Cowboys coach replied in writing, saying he was "incredibly busy." Four days after the date on the letter, Landry was fired by new owner Jerry Jones.

"The content of a letter like that is really great," Morris said.

"For some people, it's the game of getting an autograph," that's the most enjoyable part of the hobby, Morris said.

Many people may flock to public events where the stars gather in hopes of getting a handshake and an item signed.

Morris said he knows a man who writes 10 letters every day to 10 famous people asking them for an autograph. The letter recipients range from Nobel Prize winners to astronauts.

Experimental drug slows progress of multiple sclerosis, experts say

By Malcolm Ritter
Associated Press

The medication, like another experimental drug discussed on Monday at the annual meeting of the American Neurological Association in San Francisco, also reduces the number of MS attacks.

NEW YORK — Researchers using an experimental drug have succeeded for the first time in slowing the progression of a type of multiple sclerosis in which unpredictable attacks leave victims increasingly disabled.

The medication, like another experimental drug discussed on Monday at the annual meeting of the American Neurological Association in San Francisco, also reduces the number of MS attacks.

The drugs are aimed at a relapsing kind of MS that affects some 75,000 to 140,000 Americans. In all, some 250,000 to 350,000 Americans have MS.

People with relapsing MS suffer bouts of symptoms, including fatigue, impaired vision, loss of balance and coordination, slurred speech, tremors and partial or complete paralysis. Patients recover at least partially during the weeks or months after each episode but become progressively disabled.

Doctors now treat many people with relapsing MS with a drug called interferon beta 1B, or Betaseron. This drug, approved by the Food and Drug Administration just last year, reduces the frequency and severity of attacks.

The new results are welcome because the experimental drugs may provide options, said Stephen Reingold, vice president for research and medical programs at the National Multiple Sclerosis Society.

"From our perspective, this is terrific," he said, adding that the new results must be analyzed completely, published for scrutiny by experts and submitted to the FDA for evaluation as soon as possible.

One study found that a drug called copolymer I reduced the number of MS attacks. Researchers had 125 patients inject themselves daily with the drug, and 126 inject themselves with a placebo.

Over two years, patients using the drug had a total of 160 MS attacks, compared with 210 in the placebo group.

The other study found that a substance called interferon beta-1a can prevent or delay increases in long-term symptoms, as well as reduce the number of attacks, said principal investigator Dr. Lawrence Jacobs.

No previous drug has shown an ability to delay the progression of symptoms over the long term, Reingold said.

The study was done with 301 patients who had zero to moderate symptoms between attacks. They received weekly injections of either the beta interferon — which is different from Betaseron — or a placebo.

Researchers measured the progression of the disability with a 10-step scale that looked at weakness or spasticity in the limbs, double vision, slurred speech and lack of coordination. They followed patients over two years to see how many avoided getting worse by a full step on the scale.

At the end of two years, 80 percent of patients taking interferon had avoided this progression, versus 65 percent of patients taking the placebo, Jacobs said. He is a professor of neurology at the State University of New York at Buffalo and head of neurology at Buffalo General Hospital.

Analysis also showed that about 15 percent of patients taking interferon had three or more MS attacks over the two years, compared with about 35 percent of patients taking a placebo, he said.

Johnson said copolymer I also showed a small effect on the progression of the disability. But Reingold said the result was not convincing.

Many express mixed emotions on re-enactment of slave auction

WILLIAMSBURG, Va. (AP) — She came out of the tavern sobbing, her head buried in her husband's chest.

"Please, please don't do this. Please, Mr. Taylor, buy me, too," Lucy begged the landowner who had just paid 62 British pounds for her husband, Daniel.

But the white slave traders stood impassively as the black family was broken apart. Behind them, some 3,000 people, mostly white, stood silent and uneasy.

When the re-enactment of a day in the life of Colonial Williamsburg was over, some in the audience Monday were weeping, too.

Among them was a civil rights activist who had denounced the re-enactment beforehand as trivializing black history.

"I would be lying if I said I didn't come out with a different view," said Jack Gravely, Virginia political action director for the NAACP. "The presentation was passionate, moving and educational."

The auction was one of the most controversial re-enactments that Colonial Williamsburg had attempted, and it drew a smattering of sign-carrying protesters to the tourist community of restored 18th century houses and shops.

While organizers at Colonial Williamsburg said the re-enactment dramatized the horrors of slavery, some complained that it cheapened history and dealt with a episode too painful to handle in a theater-like production.

"This is pure and simple entertainment, making money off people's oppression," said Andrew Highsmith, a white student from Cincinnati. "It's not showing the true history of what it was like to be a slave. Where is the story of people who fought back?"

But Larry Earl, a black actor who has taken part in several re-enactments, said that in one recent show a slave was depicted killing his abusive master. "There were two forms of resistance against slavery — active and passive — and we showed both," he said.

The slave auction was based on a real-life experience: In 1773, slaves Lucy and Daniel, both house servants, were sold to separate owners. Sukey, a laundry woman, met a kinder fate. Her husband, Johnny, was a freed slave who managed to buy her for 42 pounds.

Participants in Monday's re-enactment were led out, unchained, in simple clothes of the sort slaves of the period wore. One man, a carpenter, clutched a large, wooden toolbox that was included in the sale. He fetched 70 pounds.

Company offers less smelly way to enjoy smoke

WINSTON-SALEM, N.C. (AP) — For all those people sneaking smokes in the restroom, R.J. Reynolds may have just the product — a cigarette that doesn't leave you smelling like you just smoked one.

The trick, said Reynolds spokeswoman DeeDee Whitt, is in the paper, which is treated with a secret ingredient to eliminate the lingering stale odor.

The slogan of the new Salem Preferred cigarette: "I love what you're not wearing."

Reynolds came up with Salem Preferred after asking smokers what, besides the price, they would change about their cigarette.

"They said they would change it to get rid of the lingering stale smell," Ms. Whitt said Monday. "We're addressing a growing social concern that perhaps some people don't like the smell of cigarettes in their clothing, car and hair."

Reynolds treated the paper with what Ms. Whitt described only as a very common food additive. Federal regulators were told what it is.

The menthol brand will be introduced this month in stores on military bases across the country. Reynolds didn't say when it would be available elsewhere.

Lack of progress in Congress means success for lobbyists

WASHINGTON (AP) — The 103rd Congress didn't get a lot done, but for most Washington lobbyists that was just fine. It was a largely successful period for the Capital's interest groups, a sign of a new age of defensive lobbying.

Major health care interests — primarily insurance companies, drug makers and small businesses — took comfort in Congress' failure to pass comprehensive health care reform, which they saw as a threat to their survival.

The lobby for trial lawyers, legendary for its clout, beat back efforts to limit damages in product liability and medical malpractice cases. Big Oil and energy-intensive manufacturing killed the Clinton administration's proposed energy tax. Lobbyists looking out for themselves stymied new registration and gift rules.

And American business, large and small, managed to kill initiatives it didn't like and prevailed in the area of international trade. The North American Free Trade Agreement was ratified after an intense lobbying fight, trade with China and Vietnam picked up steam and new international trade rules appear likely to pass when Congress comes back for a lame-duck session in November.

"Generally speaking, it wasn't a bad year because business was able to more often than not stop what it considered the most onerous pieces of legislation," said Bruce Josten, the chief policy architect for the U.S. Chamber of Commerce.

Ron Shaiko, who studies lobbying at American University and spent the past year watching it up close as a congressional fellow, predicted more and more lobbying will fall into that protective mode.

Not all groups came out unscathed, however.

Environmental lobbying groups had a disappointing time, watching a Superfund cleanup bill die along with mining law reform and a proposal to promote the Environmental Protection Agency to cabinet rank.

"This was the worst Congress in 25 years on the environment," said Jim Maddy, president of the League of Conservation Voters.

But environmentalists were able to claim some defensive victories. "We blocked every significant effort to weaken environmental protection," he said. And Congress' final major act was passing a hard-fought bill giving wilderness protection to a huge expanse of California desert.

The National Rifle Association, long one of the most formidable powers in Washington because of its large, active membership and its political money, suffered an unusual double whammy. Congress passed the Brady handgun control law and banned sales of a list of assault-style weapons.

"They took a hit," said Tom Korologos, who lobbies for the NRA.

Lawsuit charges town encouraged black harassment

BATTLEBORO, N.C. (AP) — It was too hot for a newborn to sit in a car while police ran a license check. But when Marilyn Powell asked permission to rescue the infant, she says she got roughed up, doused with pepper spray and charged with assault.

Powell is suing the all-white town government, accusing it giving white police officers "a hunting license for blacks."

Powell, a 36-year-old nurse's aide and substitute teacher, and other blacks say town officials encourage harassment to dissuade blacks from petitioning Battleboro to annex the town's largely black outlying section.

The mayor dismisses those allegations, and police say Powell started an argument with the officers, who have since left the three-person force.

This farming town of 527 people east of Raleigh is about 45 percent black. But the mayor, the five-member town commission and the two employees in the town hall are all white, as was the police force until recently.

Roughly 200 more blacks, including Powell, live beyond the town line and do not vote in town elections.

According to Powell's lawsuit, the officers — Michael and William Strickland — stopped her at a roadblock for a random license check April 20, let her go, then checked her niece, who was driving with her 3-week-old baby.

Powell asked if she could take the baby out of the car. The lawsuit says the officers roughed her up. When she protested, they sprayed her face twice with pepper spray, handcuffed her and left her in the steamy back seat of a patrol car, the lawsuit says.

Powell claims the officers joked about it while driving her to jail. They said they "should have done her 'real good' and we 'shouldn't have given her anything to wipe her face with,'" the lawsuit says.

Powell's lawyer, Jessica Creech, said town officials fear annexation of the black neighborhood will upset the local power structure, so they tacitly encourage harassment of blacks.

Both police officers have resigned and don't live in Battleboro. Neither could be located for comment. Prosecutors later dropped the charges against Powell.

No town officials will talk about the incident because of the lawsuit, including Mayor Curtis Andrews.

"Everybody wants to write about racism," Andrews said. "It's not about racism. If you're going to write about racism, I'm not going to talk to you. It's a small town, 527 people. Where's the story?"

But since Powell's encounter, black residents flexed their economic muscle with a boycott that drove one white merchant out of business. Ironically, that cost Powell's two sons their part-time jobs at the Red-and-White supermarket.

"The news media has caused a lot more notice of the problem than we want. However, the problem was there," said Marshall Ethridge, the store's owner. "It will take a long time to settle down."

Battleboro is so small the town clerk and the police department — a chief and two officers — share a phone number. The town hall door is always locked. Papers or money to pay water bills are pushed through a slot. The four-lane highway coming into town leaves as a dinky two-lane hardtop.

The town recently hired a black police officer and a female one, but Andrews said that wasn't related to the boycott or the lawsuit.

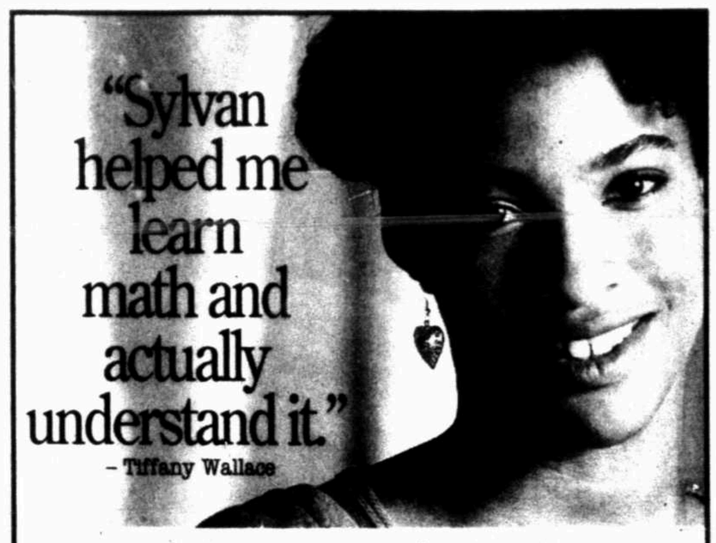

Powell said that blacks and whites get along as they always have but that racism persists below the surface. She said that the frequent license checks by police have become abusive and that blacks are singled out.

Police problems are the most obvious sign of underlying racism, said the Rev. Thomas Walker, an Edgecombe County commissioner who is black.

"They gave one young lady a ticket because they said the windows in her car were too dark," he said. "They gave one guy a $65 ticket for walking across the railroad tracks."

A petition drive is under way to get Battleboro to annex the black neighborhood. Walker and Powell said the neighborhood is part of the town in every other sense and should be legally incorporated.

"It's not a slum," Walker said. "These are hard-working people

Cheney touts his experience over charisma

WASHINGTON (AP) — Dick Cheney often introduces himself as the low-key, anti-charisma option on today's political circuit. "I don't tend to pound on the podium and drool," says the former defense secretary.

Yet no candidate is busier this campaign season than this sober and so-far undeclared candidate for the 1996 Republican presidential nomination. With a resume highlighted by the Persian Gulf War, he is critiquing President Clinton's foreign policy at GOP functions from coast to coast.

The arguments may lose some strength if Clinton oversees a peaceful transition in Haiti and gets credit for staring down Iraq's Saddam Hussein in the latest round of regional tensions.

And in fact, Cheney found himself on the defensive Monday with an NBC interviewer who suggested maybe Cheney and President Bush should have "disposed of" Saddam in 1991 and inflicted more damage on his troops.

Still, Clinton's policies toward Haiti, Bosnia and other trouble spots have created fertile campaign territory for GOP presidential hopefuls.

Cheney, a former congressman and White House chief of staff, has been among the most aggressive. He is charging the Clinton administration with risky cuts in defense expenditures and "fuzzy-headed thinking" about when and where U.S. troops should be deployed. He depicts himself, meanwhile, as the voice of experience, the steady hand on the tiller.

Like Clinton, Cheney did not serve in the military. He sought and received deferments from the Vietnam-era draft.

But his tenure as defense secretary gives him a tough-guy, military aura, reinforced by his terse and occasionally acerbic style. And it doesn't hurt that two successful interventions — the Panama invasion and the Persian Gulf War — occurred on his watch.

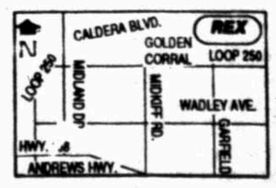

Cheney, 53, is not the only potential 1996 challenger with international expertise. Former Secretary of State James A. Baker III is looking at a race, and there's rampant speculation that Colin Powell — former chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff — may run as a Republican or an independent.

There's also no shortage of prospects with long domestic records, among them former Vice President Dan Quayle, former Housing Secretary Jack Kemp, former Education Secretary Lamar Alexander, Senate GOP leader Bob Dole of Kansas and Sen. Phil Gramm of Texas.

Cheney's liabilities include a history of heart disease and the sedate style that turns on many GOP donors but seems unlikely to set the grass roots afire.

His long and varied experience is a plus, as is his position on the political spectrum.

Bed of berries

Wes Clendenning of the Fanning Cranberry Company Inc., carries a boom over his shoulders through a bed of berries ready to be loaded for transport, last Wednesday.

DEAR ABBY

Couple's day-care schedule doesn't work for wife at night

DEAR ABBY: My husband works as a security guard full time on the midnight shift. He makes $5.50 an hour. I also work full time, on an afternoon shift, making almost three times as much as he does. We are working these shifts so we don't need outside day care for our children. We have a baby together, and he has a son by a previous marriage who lives with us.

Van Buren

My problem is that he has been on the midnight shift for more than two years, and I have been getting very depressed as time goes by. I would like him to find a daytime job, and I will continue working afternoons. That way we still won't need day care, but we could at least sleep together at night. He knows how miserable I am, but he doesn't even look for a job.

Abby, we are newlyweds of just over a year. This is putting a strain on our relationship because I feel he doesn't care enough to do something about it. On the weekends, he needs to catch up on his sleep and spend more time with the kids, and I feel like a third wheel. We have to be quiet around the house during the day so he can sleep.

I miss my husband so much, but I guess he just doesn't feel the same. He reads Dear Abby, so I hope he sees this. Please tell me what is wrong with him — or me. — THIRD WHEEL

DEAR THIRD WHEEL: No amount of money will compensate for the time you spend away from each other.

This is much too serious a problem to hope he reads about it in the Dear Abby column. Collar him and insist that you see a marriage counselor together.

DEAR ABBY: This concerns treating all adult children equally. Three of our children have borrowed money from us. Two have paid us back promptly. The third has not repaid one dime. True, she is not as well off as the others, but she is managing quite well.

We have always tried to treat our children equally, and our estates will be divided equally among them.

To be fair, should we instruct our executor to subtract our daughter's debt from her inheritance?

I have a cousin — a widow — now in her 70s, and comfortably well off. She still resents a bachelor uncle who left instructions to subtract the amount of money she owed him from the inheritance he left her. — MOTHER OF FOUR

DEAR MOTHER: In some families, not all children deserve to be treated equally, but in order to keep peace in the family, they should be.

If you want to be absolutely fair, subtract the amount of money your daughter owes you from her inheritance.

DEAR ABBY: In a recent column about the dangers of being locked in the trunk of a car, you made an appeal for Detroit and Japan to install a safety latch in the trunk.

Abby, I own a 1991 Honda Accord, which came with a latch that will release the locked backseat.

I don't know when they started putting them in, but I'm sure glad they did. — MRS. W.F. STRONG, REDLAKE, MINN.

Real life pet detective offers her services to reunite pets, owners

By David Gonzalez
N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — Flo Phillips is tired of people treating their pets like animals.

Specifically, she's tired of the people who get downright inhuman when a dog is lost because of carelessness or crime. Knowing little about their pet when they had it, they often know less when it comes time to search. Besides, a consumer culture makes it easy to shrug off the loss as a fact of urban life.

"It's a throwaway society," said Miss Phillips, a 57-year-old resident of Manhattan's East Side. "Don't misunderstand me, it's a beautiful city in many ways. But there are too many animals. If you lose one, buy another. That's the attitude people have. They know there are plenty out there."

Does she know.

She's a real-life Ace Ventura, Pet Detective. Over the years, she has hoarded hundreds of lost-and-found ads, photos and reports of missing dogs inside the manila-folder database of PetWatch, her one-person agency dedicated to reuniting pets with their owners.

Unlike her movie counterpart, she often has little to laugh about. She has seen animals discarded like last season's fashions when a family returns from summer vacation and realizes that nobody wants to care for the pet. She also marvels at how animals become crime victims, running off when a house is burglarized or becoming targets of thieves themselves.

From early-morning wake-up calls to late-night jolts, she also is amazed at how the people who contact her don't know the slightest precautions they can take to protect, if not find, their pet.

Fireworks, for example, can frighten an animal into making a mad dash for quiet. Dogs used to the country will take a while to adjust to the noisy and hectic city pace. Different breeds behave distinctly: Huskies, for example, run far and fast, so an initial search has to include a wide sweep.

AT WIT'S END

Expectant mothers deserve few laws

By Erma Bombeck

You know what the problem is in this world? People are challenging the laws faster than the laws can be written.

Bombeck

We're producing frozen embryos before we know who gets custody of them if a couple splits. We have children divorcing their parents before the law has figured out what grounds will permit them to do this.

For some people it isn't enough to believe life begins the day the dog dies and the kids leave home. They believe they're carrying an entity from day one. A nurse from Seattle recently put the theory to the test by driving in a freeway lane requiring at least two people per car. The expectant mother said her fetus was a person.

A judge ruled that it had to occupy a seat and fined her $47.

Getting pregnant is a drastic way to live life in the fast lane, but I had to admit, it's more creative than having an inflatable sitting next to you, which has also been done.

When I was pregnant, I ate for two, I dressed for two and I looked like two, but I draw the line at driving in the diamond lane. It could open doors we don't want opened. For example, using the same theory, a pregnant woman would have to buy two theater tickets, two passes to Disneyland, and if an airline offered to fly a friend free — she'd be wearing hers.

That is not to say an expectant mother shouldn't get some special consideration. I think that a woman carrying a child who drives a car with three kids in the backseat — one who spits, one who is opening an umbrella and one who is hanging his head out of the window and making siren noises — should be given a police escort to wherever she is going.

When a woman is in her third trimester, she should be given two parking spaces for her car. This is a courtesy that permits her to get her stomach through the car door. There could be a little sign put up that reads, "RESERVED FOR EXPECTANT MOTHER."

Another concession that could be given to a woman with child is a potty parking privilege. Whenever she sees a restroom, she can abandon her car. It could be in front of a fire hydrant, a loading zone, or signs marked personnel only, reserved for compact cars, and do-not-block-driveway, so she can go to the bathroom. This is not asking too much for the women bearing the future of our great land.

I've done a lot of thinking about the woman from Seattle. What if a woman gives birth on the freeway? Could she then switch over to the fast lane for two occupants? They haven't written the law on that one either.

Employee's 50 years with same firm represent rarity

By Katherine Poteet
Staff Writer

Bill Kehoe has managed to do what is becoming a rarity in the workplace today — he celebrated 50 years of work this year with the same company.

"With technology the way it is today, unless someone is really willing to move around a lot, you don't see people staying a long time at one company," said Kehoe, who is currently the outside plant engineer at the Southwestern Bell Telephone Midland office.

Kehoe began working at Southwestern Bell's Borger central office on June 5, 1944. From that time, he has worked installing telephones, estimating and, now, he stakes out sites for poles, getting measurements and putting them up.

"I'm the one who digs up the streets," he said. "I set the manholes and the poles and oversee the contract work."

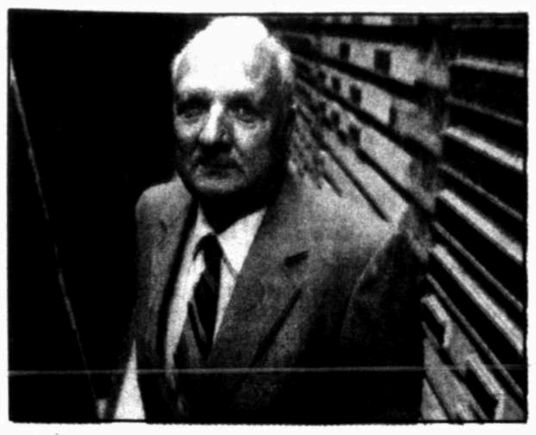

Of his varied experience with the company, Kehoe said there is no one job he likes more than any other.

"Of course, what I do right now is outside, but I really like it all," he said. "That's why I stayed."

He moved to Midland in 1951 and has stayed because he likes the area.

"We (he and his wife) just liked it here," he said. "It's much nicer than the Panhandle."

Jon Farr maintains a high level of excitement for his work as executive director of the Boys and Girls Club of Midland.

Midlander tries to be positive force for youth

By Gary Shanks
Staff Writer

A relative newcomer to the Midland community, Jon Farr, strives to be a force for positive change as he leads the Boys and Girls Club of Midland, providing an enclave of fun and guidance for the city's youth.

Farr, 31, is a graduate of Lubbock Christian University and was involved with the Boys and Girls Club organization for eight years in that city before moving to Midland as executive director. "I've been with the Boys and Girls Club movement for 11 years," he said.

Although his administrative duties keep Farr from interacting with the youths as much as he'd like, he maintains a high level of excitement for the work. "In a more administrative role, I identify the needs within the community and try to address those needs," he said.

As an administrator, Farr says he has considerable influence on the organization's goals and keeping the programs dynamically linked to the needs of the community yields great personal rewards.

Farr's wife, Laura, is a teacher. They have a three-year-old daughter, Allison.

Farr says his family has fallen in love with the warmth and kindness of the Midland people. "The Midland community has been great to the Boys Club," he said. "This is the best place to be because of the sharing and caring community that we have," he added.

Farr began his association with the Boys and Girls Club while playing basketball at Lubbock Christian.

State program to deter underage drinking to come to Midland area

Staff Report

The Texas Alcoholic Beverage Commission (TABC), in conjunction with the Texas Department of Transportation, will be expanding its involvement in the Cops in Shops program to 13 new Texas counties, including Midland and Ector.

Cops in Shops, a federally funded initiative, features the use of TABC agents posing as employees or customers in retail establishments licensed for off-premise sales of alcoholic beverages in a "reverse sting" operation.

"The purpose of the program," said Sgt. Mickey Whitley, who serves as director, "is to deter the illegal purchase of alcoholic beverages by persons under 21 years of age, thus deterring alcohol use and minor involvement in alcohol-related traffic crashes."

Information packets have been mailed to off-premise licensed establishments in the program counties. Participation in the program is voluntary.

Parents, staff seek school board's OK to raise library funds

Staff Report

Not satisfied to wait years for a school renovation, parents and staff of Carver Cultural Center are prepared to ask Midland school board trustees if they can raise $40,000 themselves toward $78,000 to construct a library. School officials hope to raise the remaining $38,000 through matching funds from sponsoring businesses and foundations.

The issue will come before the board during its regular 4 p.m. meeting today. Other items scheduled prior to the 6:30-7:15 p.m. dinner break include:

- Voting on a policy concerning distributing literature on school property.
- Voting to submit the course "Academic Decathlon" to the Texas Educa-

Midland High chorale to present concert

By Myra Lee Salcedo
Staff Writer

Fresh from a successful Region Choir competition, Midland High School chorale students are ready to perform their first public concert at 7 p.m. tonight.

"We have been working hard on this since the first week of school," said MHS Choir Director Barry Dowell. Dowell noted this will be the first concert students have performed under his direction.

His students also practiced for the recent Region Choir Auditions.

"We took 43 students to the auditions at Odessa Permian High School," Dowell said. "Eighteen students placed in the Region Choir, and two are alternates."

Of the students named to Region Choir, 13 have qualified to go to Area Choir Auditions in December, and four students were ranked as first chairs in their section.

Tonight the choral departments of Midland freshman and senior high schools are prepared to perform, free

In addition to his many years with Southwestern Bell — which was celebrated on Sept. 22 — Kehoe has not missed a day of work since he started back in 1944.

"I guess I got plenty of training in school," he said. "I didn't miss school days. I had very good attendance records."

With 50 years behind him and a new grandfather clock from Southwestern Bell for his work, Kehoe has no intentions of retiring, even at 67.

"I like the company," he said.

"I could retire anytime, but I haven't made any plans to. Of course, I may have a bad day tomorrow and change my mind, but I really don't foresee it anytime soon."

games at the Boys Club there and has never lapsed in his association with the organization, Farr said.

Although the organization had been serving the needs of females for several years, the name of the national organization was officially changed to Boys and Girls Clubs in 1990, and the Midland club changed its name that year as well, he said.

The Midland club provides a safe environment to which youths can go after school and engage in social and athletic activities. The club is located at 110 E. New Jersey.

Each day after school, club staff and volunteers host "Power Hour" where students are helped with their homework and tutored in any subject they may need help with, Farr said.

The club has a computer lab and other instructional facilities for this end. The top five students who participate in Power Hour the most are given certificates for free meals at CiCi's Pizza.

"I like for every kid who comes here to feel like they know the staff ... and to know that somebody cares about them," he said.

In addition to sports, the club offers arts and crafts, dances and two internal organizations for those youths who want to engage in community service activities.

Under Farr's leadership, the club emphasizes social development, personal development, citizenship and educational development, while providing the physical and recreational activities that keep the youths coming back, he said.

Farr hopes to expand the Midland club in the future, hopefully providing another clubhouse in a different part of the city to reach other Midland youths.

But foremost is keeping the existing clubhouse, located specifically to serve an area with many disadvantaged youths, an active and important part of that community.

State agency takes control of nursing home

AUSTIN (AP) — A Dallas nursing home that must relinquish control to state regulators is also faced with the possibility of suspension from the federal Medicaid program following accusations of poor patient care.

A trustee appointed by State District Judge Joseph Hart is temporarily managing Kenwood Nursing Home.

The 120-bed home is one of more than 24 long-term care facilities temporarily taken over by a court-ordered trustee following Texas Department of Human Services investigations.

A DHS team found last week that one tube-fed female resident, weighing 88 pounds, was receiving only 720 calories of a nutritional supplement daily, compared with a nutritional consultant's recommendation of 2,144 calories a day.

Kenwood staff failed to follow doctors' instructions in care of several other residents, with one losing more than 40 pounds in less than a year and another suffering from severe pressure sores, the survey found.

The DHS, which sought court intervention because of the findings, also contended that a lack of hand washing and proper housekeeping practices led to an unsanitary environment.

In a proposed 23-day termination by DHS Commissioner Burt Raiford, Kenwood would be suspended from Medicaid unless deficiencies discovered by the agency are corrected within the period.

DETER: Program to expand to area

(From 1B)

Once the retailer receives the Cops in Shops information packet and displays the Cops in Shops warning sign on the front door, they are considered to be participants in the program.

The Cops in Shops sign, which reads "Under 21 Warning — Police Officer May Be Posing As An Employee," will serve to deter the illegal purchase of alcoholic beverages by persons under the age of 21, Whitley said. Retailers also will be contacted by Cops in Shops area coordinators to set up the Cops in Shops sessions where a TABC agent will pose as either an employee or customer.

Retailers who have immediate problems with minors trying to purchase alcoholic beverages, intoxicated persons or other alcohol-related problems will be given priority in scheduling, Whitley said.

Minors who attempt to purchase alcoholic beverages during a Cops in Shops session will be issued citations. Minors who use fake identification or misrepresent their age also will be cited, Whitley said.

The State in brief

■ Governor demands Bush documents

AUSTIN — Gov. Ann Richards' campaign Monday demanded that Republican challenger George W. Bush release documents related to a federal investigation into his sale of stock of an oil company.

Bush said the investigation cleared him and that he has released documents about the transaction. He said the Richards' campaign was trying to make him appear to be a lawbreaker.

"I believe that this is an attempt to try and make it look like I'm the kind of person trying to skirt the law. And I'm not," Bush said.

The Securities and Exchange Commission investigated Bush's June 22, 1990 sale of $848,560 of stock in Harken Energy, The Houston Post reported Sunday.

SEC records indicate Bush didn't file the required form intended to protect against insider trading until eights months after the federal deadline, according to previous news reports. Bush sold the stock at $4 per share. Within the next couple of months, the stock plummeted to nearly half that value.

But Bush said he did file on time the document that told the SEC of his stock sale. A subsequent form, which Bush said was not as important, may have been lost by the SEC, he said.

On Oct. 18, 1993, weeks before announcing his bid for governor, the SEC wrote a letter saying that the investigation into Bush had been concluded and "no enforcement action is contemplated with respect to him."

■ Corrections employees get suspensions

HUNTSVILLE — Nine corrections employees were suspended Monday after an inmate died and two others were hurt in disturbances over the weekend at the Terrell prison near Livingston.

Unauthorized and excessive use of force may have been used by employees during attempts by inmates to overpower prison guards in a recreational area, said Andy Collins, executive director of the Texas Department of Criminal Justice.

Charges were expected to be filed against both inmates and prison staffers, Collins said.

Michael McCoy, 30, serving a six-year term for burglary and unauthorized use of a motor vehicle in Galveston County, died late Sunday at the prison hospital in Galveston.

■ Audit finds contracting abuse in project

DALLAS — A city audit has found abuse of policy and possible illegal activity among companies involved in the Cotton Bowl renovation, discrepancies it says deprived minority businesses of some $1.2 million.

City Auditor Daniel Paul said larger nonminority companies used smaller minority-owned businesses "as a subterfuge" by reporting that they performed work or provided supplies and services when they did not.

"These companies were not doing anything other than handling paper," he said.

The audit was delivered to city council members over the weekend, more than 18 months after reports of the possible use of minority fronts surfaced. A front is a company purportedly owned by a minority but actually run and financially controlled by someone else.

However, Assistant City Manager Ted Benavides said city officials don't necessarily agree with the audit's findings.

Poll shows politicians miss boat on environment

AUSTIN (AP) — Armed with an opinion poll showing public support for environmental protection, environmental groups said Monday that politicians should heed the message.

"Many politicians have been running scared from protecting our natural resources. Despite what a small group led by land speculators are saying, an overwhelming number of Texans want to preserve our natural heritage," said Tom Smith of the group Public Citizen.

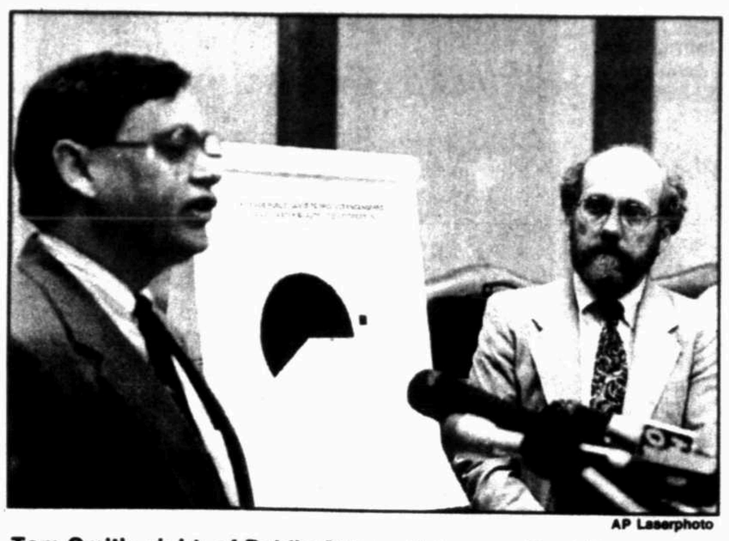

Public Citizen commissioned the survey, which found 80 percent of respondents saying they agree there is a "moral obligation to future generations to protect the diversity of wildlife from pollution and extinction . . ."

The random telephone survey of 400 Texans was conducted last week by Bannon Research of Washington, D.C. It has a margin of error of plus or minus 4.9 percent.

Pollster Brad Bannon said he was "stunned" by the results.

"This is a dramatic example of the public being way ahead of the politicians on an issue that is vital to the economic well-being and quality of life in Texas."

Among his findings, 62 percent said Texas should do more to prevent or clean up water pollution; 59 percent feel more action is needed to deal with air pollution, and 60 percent agreed that the state should set aside more public land to protect endangered species, water quality and for recreation.

Tom Smith, right, of Public Citizen, listens as Brad Bannon announces results of a poll showing Texans support state protection of natural resources, Monday, in Austin.

The survey was released at a time when a growing property-rights movement has surfaced and attracted the attention of several top politicians.

Drawing special ire from them was the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service's aborted consideration of parts of 33 Central Texas as critical habitat for the endangered golden-cheeked warbler.

Both Democratic Gov. Ann Richards and Republican challenger George W. Bush opposed designation of the 800,000 acres as critical warbler habitat.

Gene Hall of the Texas Farm Bureau said the property rights movement is growing rapidly because both citizens and politicians support it.

"A number of politicians — both Democrats and Republicans alike — are trying to get ahead of the property rights issue," Hall said. "It's very clear how Texans feel about it."

In other political developments:

■ A group of Republicans and independents was announced to back Democratic Lt. Gov. Bob Bullock, who faces the GOP's Tex Lezar.

The group's leaders include Sam Barshop, former Republican Gov. Bill Clements' appointee to the University of Texas board of regents; Ken Lay, chairman of Enron, and Bob Lane, NationsBank president. One member, Julian Zimmerman, founder of the Associated Republicans of Texas, said, "I've raised money for years to defeat Democrats, but Bob Bullock is one we must keep."

Lezar spokeswoman, Kay Ryon, said Lezar "will win this election because the voters know that the politics of Bill Clinton and Bob Bullock are wrong for Texas. The only people who don't seem to comprehend that are the few people in this group."

■ Marvin Gregory, Democratic candidate for agriculture commissioner, accused Republican incumbent Rick Perry of ignoring key issues. "He's got a house and 20 acres in West Texas and he's spent more time talking about property rights than anything else in this election. I've got a 900-acre dairy business, so I know the problems we have in agriculture," Gregory said.

■ A coalition of 30 organizations called Farmers and Ranchers for Property Rights endorsed several candidates, including: Bush, Bullock, Perry, Republican U.S. Sen. Kay Bailey Hutchison, Democratic Comptroller John Sharp, and GOP land commissioner candidate Marta Greytok.

Richards meets with President-elect Zedillo of Mexico

MATAMOROS, Mexico (AP) — Gov. Ann Richards took her re-election campaign south of the border Monday, and Mexican President-elect Ernesto Zedillo used the event to spotlight stability in a state where a recent assassination plot was hatched.

"I look forward to having a relationship with you as I did with President Salinas," Richards told the man who won Mexico's presidential elections in August and will succeed President Carlos Salinas de Gortari.

Zedillo, in his first visit outside Mexico City since the election, met with Richards amid tight security at a Matamoros hotel. In an earlier speech to ruling party faithful, Zedillo vowed to wage a war against drug traffickers.

"We will fight with decision, tirelessly, and with all the force of the government, against narcotics trafficking and all the political bosses who accompany the traffickers," Zedillo said.

The Mexican government has not ruled out possible links between drug traffickers and the Sept. 28 assassination of the No. 2 man in the ruling party, Jose Francisco Ruiz Massieu.

However, the most recent statements from the Mexican attorney general's office indicate that anti-reform elements of the ruling party in this northeastern state of Tamaulipas conspired to kill Ruiz Massieu and other ruling party officials.

Tamaulipas Gov. Manuel Cavazos Lerma, whose name reportedly was on the death list of the assassination plotters, said Richards' visit demonstrated that his state was safe.

"We will not allow the prestige of the state of Tamaulipas to be harmed by the actions of two or three people," he said, referring to the assassination plotters.

"There is stability. There is law and order," Cavazos Lerma said.

Richards also said the meeting sent a message of stability along the border.

"We agreed that it was a good time for us to be gathered here, particularly because this state has been mentioned in this latest incident," she said.

The Texas governor said her first priority during the brief meeting was to urge Zedillo to end a $50 limit on duty-free goods that Mexican citizens can carry across the border after shopping trips on the U.S. side.

U.S. border retailers say the limit severely hurts their sales to Mexican shoppers, who account for about 40 percent of retail purchases along the border.

Richards said Mexican customs agents have enforced the limit, first imposed in December 1992, more stringently since the passage of the North American Free Trade Agreement.

"President-elect Zedillo has expressed an interest in making that limit more to the interest of both Mexico and the United States and we discussed a little bit how we might go about that," Richards said. "I am very hopeful that after he becomes president that we will see an alternation of that policy."

Zedillo signaled that he wished to review the $50 limit.

Church issues public apology as part of harassment settlement

FORT WORTH (AP) — The First United Methodist Church of Fort Worth has apologized publicly as part of a $275,000 settlement with four women who claim they were sexually harassed by the Rev. Barry Bailey, the church's former senior minister.

The declaration was made from the pulpit Sunday to stunned church members. It followed a three-month investigation of allegations against Bailey, who announced his retirement Sept. 4.

"Based on our investigation, we have good reason to believe both verbal and physical acts of sexual harassment did occur," Earl R. Cox III, chairman of the church's Pastor-Parish Relations Committee, told stunned congregation members during two morning services.

Cox was referring to allegations by two church employees, one former employee and one church member.

The statement, which included a public apology to the women, was the result of negotiations between church officials and the four women. An agreement also includes a $275,000 settlement, church officials said.

Bailey resigned during the investigation into the allegations against him.

Bailey, who became one of the Southwest's most popular ministers in his 18 years at the church, released a statement saying he has "the deepest concern for the people who have brought these charges against me and any pain they have experienced breaks my heart."

"I would do whatever I could in order to make things better and bring about healing," the statement says. "In no way would I ever want to harm anyone. Those who have worked and been associated with me over the years know that I would never intentionally harm anyone."

Church officials declined to give details of the harassment allegations or their investigation. They cited concerns about possible litigation.

Cox told the congregation that church officials "have also been made aware of other women who have come forward and given statements that similar conduct has occurred."

Vickie Prehoditch, an Austin attorney representing three of the women, said that about 10 others have accused Bailey of sexual harassment.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

By Jeane Dixon

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 11, 1994

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Your career could move in a new direction following a candid talk with higher-ups. December brings a promotion or relocation. Business travel, publishing and advertising are accented early in 1995. Your leadership skills and charisma win you wider public recognition. Make sure romantic partner shares your values before tying the knot. By late summer of 1995, you will enjoy new independence. Aim high!

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: actor Luke Perry, country singer Dottie West, actress Joan Cusack, Broadway choreographer Jerome Robbins.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Proceed cautiously in a new business undertaking. Keeping up with the latest financial news and trends is essential. In the evening, turn your attention to those you care about.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Easy answers are not forthcoming today. Keep your emotions in check where a key relationship is concerned. Plan a business trip carefully, looking for ways to save time and money.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Good relations with your co-workers can help you further your goals. Tend a helping hand when needed. Family obligations may take precedence today. Handle domestic tasks with dispatch. Good times lie ahead!

CANCER (June 21-July 22): The work scene is busy. Welcome change — it could be the best thing for you! Getting outdoors will have an almost magical effect on your spirits. Choose recreational activities that the whole family can enjoy.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Give fresh ideas and methods a chance to work. New contacts and contracts enjoy highly favorable influences. There may be more at stake in romance than you realize.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): A good day to catch up on routine tasks and correspondence. You can learn a lot from your associates' impressions of someone. The evening favors getting together with sympathetic people. Dine out.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You can do your business or career some real good today. Widen your circle of social contacts by joining a professional organization or community group. A family matter requires immediate action. Proceed with caution.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): People could ask embarrassing questions. Answer only if you must; otherwise, plead ignorance. A relative could hold the key to a tremendous financial or career triumph. Keep the cost of business entertainment within reasonable limits.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Put a bold plan into action with a close associate's help. Using your authority judiciously will nip any opposition in the bud. Your social life accelerates. New faces and places will enliven your weekends.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Smarten up! Make intelligent concessions when dealing with influential people. Keep your ears and eyes open at social events. Good timing is an intrinsic part of your success formula. Put romance on hold temporarily.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): A chic outfit could help you feel confident if you are thrust into the limelight. Rely on your special talent for sizing up people and situations. Less independent types are counting on your leadership.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Focus on your priorities. Better organization and attention to detail are vital. Substitute diplomacy for criticism if hoping to win over family members. Your mate or partner offers valuable support. Read all documents carefully.

The bidding:

SOUTH	WEST	NORTH	EAST
1 NT	Pass	3 NT	Pass
Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Jack of ♠

South, declarer at three no trump, selected a line that would bring home the contract more than four times out of five. The fact that the contract failed could be considered unlucky were it not for the fact that there was a sure-trick line available.

The auction was straightforward. With 11 high-card points and no four-card major, North had something in reserve for raising partner's one-no-trump opening to game.

Declarer won the opening lead in dummy and immediately took the club finesse, losing to West's king. The spade return was taken in hand and the ace of clubs was cashed to reveal the bad break. Next came three rounds of diamonds — to no avail. Now declarer could amass no more than eight tricks.

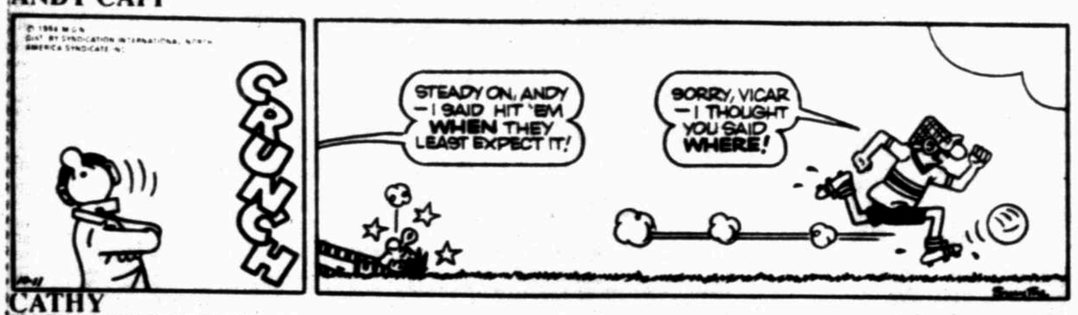

Observe the calamities that befell declarer. The club finesse was wrong, the suit broke badly and diamonds did not split evenly. Yet, had declarer paused to count tricks before committing to any line, the correct technique should have been obvious.

There were seven fast tricks available in spades, diamonds and clubs, and the heart suit had to provide two more no matter how the suit was distributed. Each time declarer gained the lead a heart should have been led, and nine tricks would have been amassed before the defenders could get any suit going.

The moral of this story: Even when the play seems to be too easy for words, check to make sure you haven't overlooked a line that comes with a guarantee.

Woody contemplates taking revenge out on big screen

NEW YORK — Woody Allen is contemplating revenge via the big screen.

The Neurotic One may make a movie about his child custody battle with Mia Farrow if Farrow doesn't treat his kids right, said Douglas McGrath, Allen's writing partner on the new movie "Bullets Over Broadway."

The director and his longtime leading lady have a biological child, Satchel, and two adopted children, Dylan and Moses. A judge last year gave Farrow custody of all three, with only limited visits with Dylan.

"Woody perseveres and remains optimistic but has told me that if the children are not treated with the humanity and sympathy they deserve, he may make a nonfiction film of the events," said McGrath, who wrote about the possibility in the Oct. 17 issue of New York magazine.

Allen contends the custody arrangement was meant to punish him for his affair with Farrow's adopted daughter Soon-Yi Previn.

He will make up his mind about the movie after all his appeals over custody are resolved, McGrath said.

Allen also wants to see what Farrow wrote in her upcoming book.

PHILADELPHIA — Amy Tan isn't an expert on China, Chinese culture, mah-jongg or the psychology of mothers and daughters.

Or any of these subjects: immigration, assimilation, racial tension, Tiananmen Square, the most favored nation trade agreements, the future of Hong Kong after 1997 or Chinese cooking.

Amy Tan takes pride in her heritage, but doesn't want to be boxed in as Asian-American writer.

Make no mistake: The acclaimed author of "The Joy Luck Club" and "The Kitchen God's Wife" takes pride in her Chinese heritage. She just doesn't want to be boxed in as an Asian-American writer.

"I often wonder why works of fiction by minority writers are read mainly for the study of class, gender and race," Tan said during a recent stop on a publicity tour for her new children's book, "The Chinese Siamese Cat." "Why is it so hard to break out of this literary ghetto?"

NEW YORK — Darnell Martin had to bully the new movie "I Like It Like That" onto the screen.

Martin, who wrote and directed the film about a young woman struggling to support her three children, stood firm when Columbia tried to cut some of the grittier scenes. She threatened to remove her name.

"That made them back down," she told Newsweek. "That and the test screenings, when the audience applauded the very scenes they wanted to cut."

The Bronx-born, Sarah Lawrence-educated Martin said she hates being called the first black woman to direct a major feature.

"To single me out takes away from all the new black woman directors like Julie Dash, Leslie Harris, Euzhan Palcy," she said. "And it suggests we're not part of the mainstream."

NEW YORK — Robert MacNeil will announce this week that he's retiring from "The MacNeil-Lehrer NewsHour" in 1995, two newspapers reported Saturday.

The New York Post and The Washington Times said MacNeil will make his announcement today.

MacNeil, 63, has spent the last 18 years co-hosting the nightly PBS news show with Jim Lehrer. MacNeil anchors the show from New York, while Lehrer works from a studio in Washington.

The Canadian-born MacNeil has written several books and won an Emmy, a Peabody Award and a Dupont Award for his TV work.

A PBS spokesman did not immediately return a message The Associated Press left at his offi

NEW YORK — Martha Stewart, the authority on upper-crust domesticity, uses all 24 hours in a day.

"Once my wife and I were with Martha at her house in Easthampton, and I noticed her light was on very late at night," said Richard Z. Chesnoff, a correspondent for U.S. News & World Report and a friend for nearly 20 years.

"She told me she keeps her light on all night so if she wakes up she can immediately read. It sounds obsessive, but it's not. It's just Martha's determination not to waste time."

Stewart, with her own how-to TV show, magazine, books and American Express commercial, lives alone after she and her husband of 26 years divorced in 1989.

"I make a home for myself," she said in Sunday's New York Times. "I love my home."

Moon rises over Giants

■ Young New York quarterback Dave Brown gets a lesson from some veteran Vikings of Minnesota.

By Dave Goldberg
AP Football Writer

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — Anthony Parker and Warren Moon showed New York Giants' prize prospect Dave Brown that he still has a lot to learn about life in the NFL.

Parker picked off a pass by Brown and returned it 44 yards for a touchdown on the fourth play of the third quarter Monday night to break a tie and lead the Minnesota Vikings to 27-10 win over the Giants.

Moon, with 154 NFL starts to Brown's five, was 23-of-34 for 299 yards and touchdown pass and demonstrated the rythym that Brown has yet to learn.

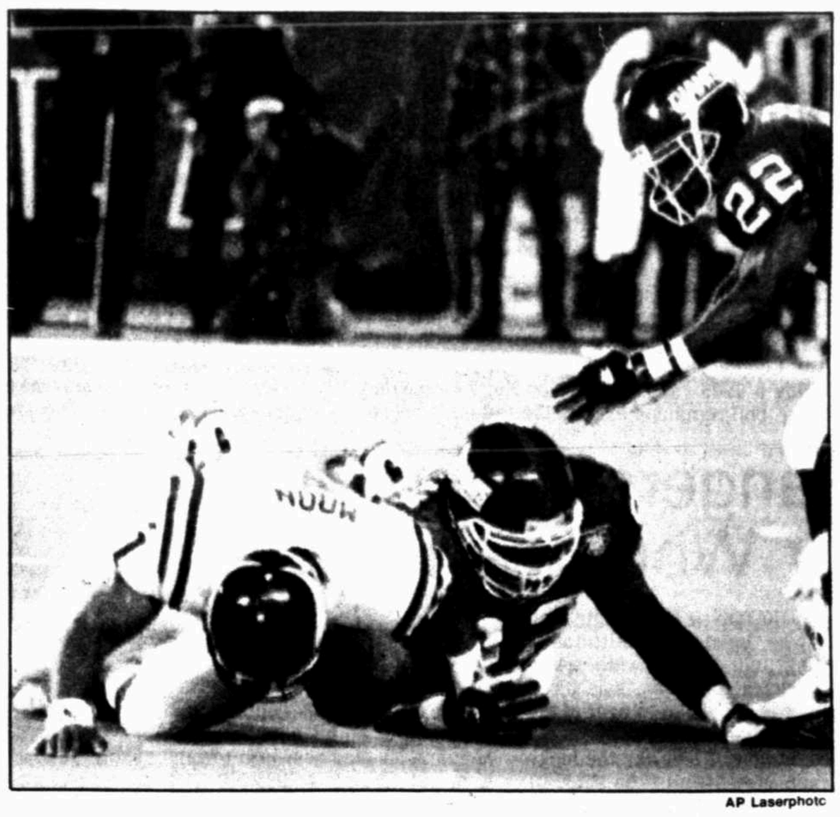

Parker's interception came after Brown, who also threw an interception that led to Minnesota's first touchdown, had tied it with a 3-yard run. The quarterback draw came at the end of a remarkable 94-yard touchdown drive that began on the Giants' 6-yard-line with 1:27 left in the first half.

It alone demonstrated why the Giants decided to give him their starting job and release veteran Phil Simms. Brown was 6-of-8 for 91 yards in the drive.

But on New York's first series of the second half, he demonstrated his inexperience, raising up and passing into the flat and hitting Parker perfectly in stride. The Minnesota cornerback took it untouched down the left sideline for the score, the second straight game that Brown has had an interception returned for a score.

Moon hit Cris Carter with a 20-yard TD pass late in the period to make it 24-10 and putting Brown, who finished 18-

Greenwood begins 8-3A V-ball play

By Lynn Guillory
MRT Correspondent

GREENWOOD — With the start of the District 8-3A girls volleyball play today, the Greenwood Rangerettes will go into battle against the Kermit Yellow Jackets on home turf.

Greenwood has the ability to seize a state playoff berth, but Greenwood coach Patti Purser says, "Team unity and player commitment will be essential."

Greenwood sports a young volleyball program started only four years ago, but has produced a positive impact on the school's fall athletic program while playing a schedule that features teams from Class 3A through 5A.

With a young four-year program in place, there still remains a concern over the lack of experience that was missed in the junior high level. The experience factor sometimes catches up with the youthful squad in close situations with teams of comparable talent levels.

"Teamwork and a positive mental attitude are necessary for success," Purser says.

Presently, the Rangerettes own a 9-13 record heading into 8-3A action tonight.

The team does have capable talent in all positions, however, as seniors Allison Worley, Lisa Nichols and Rhonda Mebane are strong and quick on the outside, and each have recorded a notable record of kills.

Chargers have Means streak

San Diego running back Natrone Means has the Chargers flying high and unbeaten. Here he gains 23 yards against Kansas City.

■ With an innovative passing attack, unbeaten San Diego is winning on the ground with Natrone Means.

By Bernie Wilson

SAN DIEGO — On the day when Don Coryell was honored for his innovative passing attack of a decade past, running back Natrone Means ripped through Kansas City's defense to highlight the other side of the San Diego Chargers' offense.

Life with the Chargers isn't always a 99-yard Stan Humphries bomb.

Means rushed for a career-high 125 yards and one touchdown on 19 carries in a 20-6 win over the Chiefs on Sunday that kept the Chargers (5-0) the NFL's only undefeated team.

"Overall I think this was the best game I've played so far," said Means, a second-year pro from North Carolina. "Hopefully I can keep doing it, but as long as we keep winning, that's the key."

The Chargers are off to their best start since 1961 — the franchise's second year — mainly because of their balanced offense.

Humphries' passing will make the highlight shows, and so will Means' quick bursts and spin moves that get him extra yards.

Boo birds don't buck Bucky

■ Backup quarterback Bucky Richardson seems to be the only Houston Oiler immune to the taunting of fans.

By Michael A. Lutz
AP Sports Writer

HOUSTON — Anyone in a Houston Oilers uniform usually gets booed these days — unless it's Bucky Richardson.

While others on the team have taken their share of criticism for a 1-4 start, Richardson has led a charmed existence with the fans as the backup to starting quarterback Cody Carlson.

Richardson's aggressive approach to the game and his enthusiasm for taking off on wild scrambles has made him an entertaining feature on a team that's had little to cheer about this season.

He'll get to test his popularity and effectiveness in the starting role on Thursday night in the Astrodome against the Cleveland Browns.

Typically, he expects the Oilers to begin a season turnaround.

"It happens every week in the NFL, somebody shows up and beats somebody they aren't supposed to beat," Richardson said. "But if you don't show up and play and do the things it takes to win, you get beat.

"That's as simple as I can put it. If you mosey around all week and show up on Sunday and expect to beat somebody's butt, it just doesn't happen."

The Oilers are struggling with the run-and-shoot offense and their attempts to incorporate elements of the tight end and two-back sets into their arsenal.

Coach Jack Pardee and assistant head coach Kevin Gilbride, who is in charge of the offense, have been panned for the lurching offense. The revamped offensive line and Carlson have heard the booing fans.

Richardson, with a heavy fan base from his nearby alma mater, Texas A&M, sees a chance to lead the Oilers out of the morass. His mandate came Sunday when Pardee said Carlson wouldn't play until he's recovered from shoulder,

Smith takes Arizona rest

By Denne H. Freeman
AP Sports Writer

IRVING — The laugher against the Arizona Cardinals provided Emmitt Smith the vacation he needed.

"My hamstring was getting tight, and I'm not sure how much longer I could have played," Smith said. "It was good to get a huge lead so I could get treatment at halftime and not have to play anymore.

"I might not have been able to go in the second half."

The Cowboys gave Buddy Ryan his worst loss as an NFL coach in a 38-3 rout during which Smith carried the ball nine times and scored two touchdowns. He gained 22 yards as the Cowboys took a 28-0 halftime lead.

"We didn't need him against the Cardinals, but we will against the Philadelphia Eagles on Sunday," said offensive lineman Nate Newton. "And we'll have to have him all day in that game."

Smith pulled his right hamstring in the first half of a 34-7 victory Oct. 2 over the Washington Redskins. He also wasn't needed in the second half of that game.

Both the Cowboys and the Eagles are 4-1 in the NFC East pending their meeting next Sunday at Texas Stadium.

Smith, who has played in 73 consecutive games, said there was no need to push it against the Cardinals.

"It was nice not to have to play so much," he said. "We showed the Cardinals we can do more than just run the ball. With the lead we had, there really wasn't any reason for me to play."

Schulenburg garners most first place prep votes

DALLAS (AP) — When realignment was announced earlier this year, the road to a third Class 2A title in four years appeared to have become rougher for the Schulenburg Shorthorns.

The Shorthorns were part of a new District 27-2A that included top contender East Bernard and tough newcomers Shiner and Flatonia.

Six games into the season, Schulenburg has little to fear.

The undefeated Shorthorns are considered far and away the best in the class and have more first-place votes (28) than any other No. 1 in The Associated Press high school football poll released Monday.

"They're just playing good ball and enjoying the game," Schulenburg coach David Husmann said. "With the district we're in now, every week they've got to be ready and so far so good."

Only one new team entered this week's poll of 31 sports writers and broadcasters from across the state as The Colony jumped in the 5A rankings at No. 9 following a 61-26 victory over then-No. 7 Grapevine.

The 1A poll remained exactly the same for the second-straight week and the other classes had very minor movement following a weekend in which Grapevine was the only ranked team to lose.

■ AP Prep Top 10 Rankings

On a weekend full of extremely lopsided victories by ranked teams, Schulenburg contributed to the trend by pounding Brazos Consolidated 69-0.

"Last week, we really put it together," Husmann said. "The offense has done a lot of good things and the defense comes up with big plays. We're just pretty consistent in all phases of the game and we have good depth."

Schulenburg dominated 2A in 1991 and 1992 with two-way superstar Casey Taber. The Shorthorns won state titles both years, then began last season 1-3.

An eight-game winning streak followed, then Schulenburg was ousted in the regional finals by Freer.

"That was kind of overachieving for that group," Husmann said.

This year, seven players who contributed to the 1992 state champs as sophomores are now senior starters.

Several other players got the experience they needed last year, giving Husmann 18 returning starters and high hopes for another title.

"It's extra pressure and, yes, they do expect it," Husmann said. "We try to take some off them and make sure they enjoy the game, but it's definitely there."

Quarterback Steve Sartain leads the offense with 55-of-95 passing for 1,143 yards. He's thrown 13 touchdown passes and only one interception.

But defenses can't key on Sartain because they also must be worried about running back Jason Houston, who has gained 865 yards and scored 15 touchdowns on 76 carries.

Protecting both of them is an offensive line of four seniors and a junior.

"They give Steven time to throw and make room for Jason to run," Husmann said.

District-rival East Bernard held on to fourth in the week's poll, behind No. 2 Archer City and No. 3 Goldthwaite.

Pilot Point is fifth, followed by Hubbard, Springlake-Earth, Alto, Kerens and Refugio.

Abilene Cooper remained No. 1 in 5A following an idle week, and the next five places remained intact with Austin Westlake second, followed by Deer Park, Plano East, Aldine MacArthur and Houston Cypress Creek.

Arlington Lamar is No. 7, North Mesquite is No. 8 and A&M Consolidated remained No. 10.

In 4A, defending champion Stephenville steal holds a strong grip on No. 1 ahead of Waxahachie and La Marque.

Gregory-Portland and Sulphur Springs traded spots, with G-P taking over fourth and Sulphur Springs slipping to fifth. Sherman is sixth, followed by Bay City, Austin Reagan, Denison and Corpus Christi Calallen.

Class 3A barely changed, with the top eight spots locked and the bottom two trading places. Cuero still holds a wide lead over No. 2 Sealy and Marlin moved up to No. 9 while Columbus dipped to No. 10.

Thorndale remains entrenched atop 1A and Sudan is solidly in second. Crawford, Burkeville, Iola and Bartlett have a good battle for the next four spots.

Rangers call on Melvin for World Series push

ARLINGTON (AP) — Doug Melvin, who bolstered Baltimore's pitching and defense while assistant general manager, was hired Monday as general manager of the Texas Rangers.

"Right now, I feel like the luckiest man in baseball," he said. "I want to bring a World Series here to Texas and I feel like we can do it fairly quickly."

Melvin, 42, becomes the sixth GM in club history. He was given a three-year contract. Financial terms were not disclosed.

The Rangers have long revolved around power hitting. The lack of solid pitching and defense were cited last month when Tom Grieve was fired after the team failed to win a division title during his 10 seasons as general manager.

The Rangers led the AL West when the season ended, but they were 52-62 and team president Tom Schieffer insisted a change was needed.

"We're really excited about having Doug here," Schieffer said. "He knows the game from scouting and developing areas, and we feel he can be the person who can bring a world championship here."

Manager Kevin Kennedy just completed his second season and must now await his fate. He has one year left on his contract and ownership is on his side, although Melvin's low-key response toward Kennedy may not bode well.

"I haven't talked to Kevin," Melvin said. "He's one of the personnel I want to sit down and talk to. That decision is not going to come today."

Melvin has been in pro baseball since his playing days began in 1972. He's been an executive since the New York Yankees made him scouting director in 1985.

He joined the Orioles in 1986 as a special assistant to the president. Two years later, when Baltimore lost 107 games, he became director of player personnel.

Under Melvin, the Orioles have returned to near the top of the AL East, playing a more balanced game and relying less on the long ball.

A key has been the development of Melvin's first-round draft picks: pitchers Gregg Olson, Ben McDonald, Mike Mussina and outfielder Jeffrey Hammonds. The last top pick by Texas to pan out was pitcher Kevin Brown in 1986.

AP Laserphoto

Doug Melvin, former assistant general manager for Baltimore, was named Monday as the new GM of the Texas Rangers.

"Defense and pitching and staying free of injuries are the three areas I think need to improve with this ballclub," Melvin said. "Good defense will make pitching better and if you can stay healthy and keep them on the field, they'll all play better."

Melvin was considered for last year's GM opening in Boston and he was considered a candidate for a similar position currently open in St. Louis.

Other candidates for the Texas job included Colorado assistant GM Walt Jocketty, Rangers assistant GM Sandy Johnson, former Houston GM Bill Wood, Atlanta assistant GM Chuck LaMar and Florida assistant GM Frank Wren.

Computer says K-State

NEW YORK (AP) — The writers say Florida is No. 1. So do the coaches. What does the computer say?

Kansas State!

The undefeated Wildcats (4-0) jumped from No. 6 to the top spot — ahead of Florida, Nebraska, Penn State and Colorado — in the New York Times' computer rankings released Tuesday. The Gators (5-0) are ranked seventh by the computer, up three spots from last week.

In The Associated Press writers' poll, Kansas State is 16th, while the USA Today-CNN coaches poll has the Wildcats 11th.

The Times' computer is based on an analysis of each team's scores, with emphasis on who won, by what margin and against what quality of opposition.

Kansas State beat Southwestern Louisiana 34-6, Rice 27-18, Minnesota 35-0 and Kansas 21-13. Those opponents have a combined record of 10-7 not counting the losses to the Wildcats.

Florida beat New Mexico State 70-21, Kentucky 73-7, Tennessee 31-0, Mississippi 38-14 and LSU 42-18. The Gators' opponents have a combined record of 9-13 not counting the losses to Florida.

Why Kansas State?

"Teams are rewarded not only for the won-lost record, but for the quality of opponent at the time they played," Times sports editor Neil Amdur said. "And as a result, a team like Florida, ranked No. 1 in both other polls, is seventh because its schedule really includes teams of less quality than teams that are ahead of them."

Kansas State's reaction?

"Our football players have a great deal of confidence in themselves," coach Bill Snyder said. "We're at a point in the program where we don't put limitations on ourselves. I think every time we do something, it's another step, another threshold, it's another step ahead."

The next, and perhaps biggest, step comes Saturday when the Wildcats play host to Nebraska, a team they last beat in 1968.

Longhorns hope the worst is finally over

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas coach John Mackovic is finally starting to have some problems that other coaches would gladly accept.

At the beginning of the season, Mackovic had to steer his team through NCAA infractions involving star wide receivers Mike Adams and Lovell Pinkney.

Then, enough injuries plagued the Longhorns to open a MASH unit at Memorial Stadium.

After all that, the Longhorns still are 4-1, ranked No. 12 and have only a last-second loss to No. 4 Colorado separating them from the ranks of the undefeated.

"I don't know if we would want to go through it again by the numbers," Mackovic said Monday of his team's first five games. "But we have come through it very well. Our players have learned a lot about themselves and about trusting and counting on other people."

And now for the latest dilemmas: a mild quarterback controversy after the startling success that backup quarterback James Brown had in a 17-10 victory against No. 22 Oklahoma on Saturday, and making sure Texas doesn't let down heading into the heart of its Southwest Conference schedule.

Texas, 1-0 in the SWC, will face Rice (2-2, 1-0) in a televised game Sunday night.

"Where we are now is on the threshold of a six-game season to see if we can get to the Cotton Bowl," Mackovic said.

"Every week it appears we have played a little better football and have risen to the occasion. I would expect that our team is gaining maturity to understand that we must continue that trend."

Although Texas has defeated Pittsburgh, Louisville, Texas Christian and Oklahoma with the near-miss against Colorado, the Longhorns have won only one game (TCU) decisively. The rest have come down to the final minute.

Mackovic said that should keep his team from getting overconfident.

"We haven't dominated anybody yet," Mackovic said. "We have mostly hung in there."

As for the quarterback controversy, Mackovic says there isn't one.

Shea Morenz, who missed the OU game with strained ligaments in his left knee, is expected to work out this week and, if healthy, will start against Rice, Mackovic said.

Brown, a redshirt freshman, played with the savvy of a senior in one of the nation's most heated rivalries. He hadn't thrown a college pass and had only taken 11 snaps in a game for Texas before dismantling the Sooners. He completed 17 of 22 passes for 148 yards, including a touchdown, and scrambled for 30 yards, including a 9-yard score.

"I was very pleased with his poise," Mackovic said. "He just went out there on that first series and took charge."

When asked if Brown would see any playing time once Morenz is healthy, Mackovic said, "Possibly. I haven't mapped out any future exactly. It's good to know that if we ever have to turn to him, he's ready and can do some things for us. But I would expect Shea to start this week."

Mackovic said Adams, who strained ligaments in his right knee against TCU, is questionable for Sunday's game. Adams, who was suspended from the season opener along with Pinkney for violating NCAA rules by accepting the free use of a rental car, missed the Colorado and OU games due to the knee injury.

At least six offensive players and five defensive players have missed action this year.

for-36 for 226 yards and three interceptions, into a hurryup mode. Fuad Reveiz, who opened the scoring with a 44-yard field goal in the first quarter, tacked on a 24-yarder that made it 27-10.

Minnesota improved to 4-2, tied for first in the NFC Central with Chicago. The Giants' loss, on the night Lawrence Taylor's "56" jersey was retired by the team, was their second straight after they opened the season with three straight wins.

It was also the first Minnesota win over New York since 1976. The Giants had won four straight during that period, one of them a playoff game last January.

It was largely the product of a defense that has now scored 13 defensive touchdowns in its last 18 games.

Rodney Hampton, who returned to the Giants after missing two games with a back injury, was limited to 27 yards in 13 carries after rushing for 161 yards in the Giants' playoff win over Minnesota last season..

Phillips lands Oklahoma St. AD job

STILLWATER, Okla. (AP) — Oklahoma State ended its 16-month search for an athletic director Monday by going across the state border and selecting Terry Don Phillips to lead the Cowboys into the Big 12 Conference.

Phillips, senior associate athletic director at Arkansas since 1991, will take over effective Aug. 1. Until then, he will serve as a consultant to Oklahoma State while he completes law school at Arkansas.

The hiring is contingent on approval from Oklahoma State's regents, who are expected to give their OK when they meet Oct. 28. Phillips would replace Jim Garner, who was fired in June 1993.

Phillips was the top choice of new president James Halligan, who courted Phillips during his visit to the campus. Phillips decided against the move Oct. 1, because he thought his law schooling would interfere with his commitment to Oklahoma State.

Plight of Cuban refugees disturbs Canseco

GUANTANAMO BAY NAVAL BASE, Cuba (AP) — Everywhere Jose Canseco went, the chants were the same.

"Canseco! Canseco!" crowds of refugees would shout, followed by "Libertad! Libertad!"

Canseco, who was born in a suburb of Havana, visited 19 refugee camps Sunday to deliver on a promise he made to himself while watching news reports of rafters trying to reach Florida. The Texas Rangers outfielder, carrying toys for Cuban children living in the tent cities, said the trip was one of the most educational experiences of his life.

"These people have to get out of here," Canseco said. "No one should have to live like this. These conditions are horrible."

Canseco emigrated to the United States with his family in 1964, when he was 9 months old.

"I've always felt a special bond toward Cuba," he said. "After seeing this, I feel a stronger bond."

One moment, Canseco was driving softballs over a barbed-wire fence into a mass of refugees. Later, he was wiping a tear from his eye as a gathering of children sang of wanting to be free.

"I was brought up believing men don't cry," Canseco said. "But I actually almost started breaking down and crying. It was from the heart, and you could tell. Children don't lie."

Canseco was accompanied by his 66-year-old father, Jose Sr., and by Seattle Mariners shortstop Alex Rodriguez, who was raised in Miami by Dominican parents.

UNLV attempts buyout of Massimino contract

LAS VEGAS (AP) — Rollie Massimino's future as UNLV basketball coach was on the line Monday as university officials tried to negotiate a possible buyout of the remaining years on his contract.

Just five days before the Runnin' Rebels were to start practice, Massimino met with UNLV interim president Kenny Guinn and athletic director Jim Weaver to discuss whether he would remain as coach.

Sources told The Associated Press that Guinn has decided Massimino should leave, and efforts were being made to structure a buyout to get the coach out before the start of practice on Saturday.

Massimino emerged from the meeting to confirm a buyout had been proposed, but said nothing was resolved.

"We talked about it, but it was a very preliminary discussion," Massimino said. "We talked in generalities about the whole situation."

Weaver also confirmed a buyout was discussed, and said another meeting would be held with Massimino in the next few days.

"It was a very amicable meeting," Weaver said.

The effort to settle Massimino's lucrative contract and oust him came amid reports that scholarship ticket sales were down 30 percent over last year and UNLV's athletic programs were facing a financial crunch.

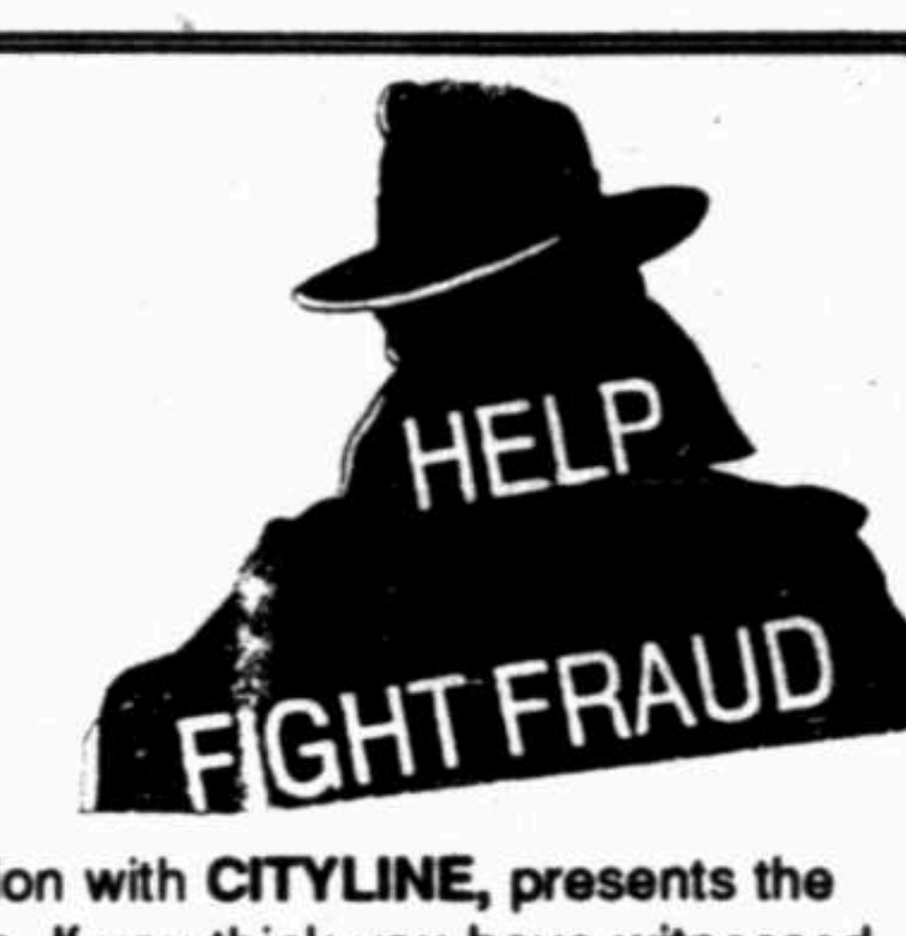

Massimino has been under fire since it was disclosed in August he had a secret supplemental contract with former UNLV administrators that paid him $375,000 a year in addition to his $511,000 base salary.

Guinn said Sunday that the meeting with Massimino would "certainly involve the possibilities about him staying or leaving.

"We need to put to rest if he's going to be here or not," Guinn said.

The Las Vegas Sun reported Monday that former UNLV assistant coach Tim Grgurich, now with the Seattle SuperSonics, was the prime candidate to succeed Massimino.

V-BALL: Rangerettes could make playoff run shown by Ashlie Evans, a senior, and 6-foot-0 freshman Karen Gasch, who might be in the running for District 8-3A "Newcomer of the Year" honors.

(From 1C)

Junior Shannon Guillory brings some experience after her participation on the USVB Junior Olympic team in the off-season. Lisa Nichols is strong at the serving line.

Kermit, expected to be somewhat weaker than its 1993 winning team, is still the 8-3A favorite going into loop action under the leadership of junior Tina Cobos.

Greenwood and Crane should both battle for one of the two playoff berths available in the district. Colorado City should also be a team to watch with a new coach and some talented returning players.

Crane lost heavily in the senior class last season, but the Golden Cranes still have some talented players, especially Heather Jefferys, and they also have a new coach on hand this year.

Greenwood's future is bright. The junior varsity team owns an 11-5 record under coach Sheila Smith and the freshman team is 12-9 under Frank McRae.

SMITH: Dallas runner to play against Eagles

(From 1C)

Quarterback Troy Aikman connected on 16 of 22 passes for 231 yards and two touchdowns. Michael Irvin caught eight passes for 136 yards against the blitzing Arizona defense.

"They played a lot of man coverage and challenged us to make plays outside, and that's what we did," said Irvin, who caught a 12-yard touchdown pass. "We love it when teams do that."

Dallas plays at Arizona in two weeks.

Ryan described what happened Sunday as "a lesson in humility."

He had defeated the Cowboys in seven consecutive games as a head coach when he was with Philadelphia. His record against Dallas is now 8-3.

Everything worked for the Cowboys, including the special teams. Kevin Williams returned a kickoff 87 yards for a touchdown. Williams has returned two punts for touchdowns, but never a kickoff.

"I've still got two or more of those left in me this year," he said. "I was kind of surprised it took me this long to get one."

Smith will take it easy on his hamstring this week but will play against Philadelphia.

Offensive tackle Mark Tuinei is expected to return after a bout with back spasms kept him out of the Arizona game. He was replaced by rookie Larry Allen.

Cornerback Kevin Smith sprained his right Achilles tendon and could miss some practice time.

BUCKY: Oilers need more offensive scoring

(From 1C)

knee and nose injuries.

"From the first play of the game, I know I'll have to play well," Richardson said. "As a backup, you never know when you're shot is going to be and you don't have much time to think about when you get into the game."

Richardson's nature has kept him from expressing any negative thoughts about the team.

He disagreed with cornerback Cris Dishman's assessment that the Oilers don't have the talent to repeat last season's 11-game winning streak which propelled them into the playoffs.

"He has a right to say what he feels but I don't feel that way," Richardson said. "I feel if we come out and execute and win individual battles, anything can happen. I feel we can win no matter who we play."

Richardson sees one trend that must change: slow starts.

The Oilers have been outscored 100-30 in the first three quarters of their games this season. They were behind 20-0 after the first quarter of their 30-14 Monday night loss to Pittsburgh on Oct. 3.

"We just need to maintain some ball control and not get down so early," Richardson said. "It's all uphill when the other teams scores 17 to 20 points."

MEANS: 'Air Coryell' aided by Means attack

(From 1C)

coordinator Ralph Friedgen said Monday. "There's no doubt about that."

And that starts with Means, who developed so well in his rookie year that the Chargers traded Marion Butts to New England in April.

"We need a big, strong running back, and what Natrone gives you is not only being big and strong, but he's elusive and can make people miss," Friedgen said. "That's a little different quality."

On San Diego's decisive fourth-quarter drive on Sunday, Means carried four times for 57 yards, with runs of 25 and 23 yards. He strained a muscle in his chest and came out, but returned on play later. Humphries capped the drive with a 5-yard touchdown pass to Mark Seay.

"Coming down that last stretch when I had a couple of runs back-to-back, I wanted it every time I saw them signal in the play," Means said. "The offensive line was in the groove, the whole offense was in the groove.

"When we're all focusing and playing our best, I think teams are hard-pressed to try to stop us," Means said.

In the second quarter, Means carried five straight times for 38 yards, including a 9-yard TD run.

The Chargers have run 163 times this year — Means has 107 for 466 yards — and thrown 132 passes.

"We've always been a power running team, and Natrone is our power back," left tackle Harry Swayne said. "He gets it done."

"We like to be out there for 10, 11, 12 plays a drive to wear the defense down," Swayne added. "So in the third and fourth quarter, when we need to go to the run, we've set it up already with that first and second quarter of pounding."

Said Friedgen: "I guess we don't have as many finesse plays as say a San Francisco or teams along those lines. We come pretty much straight at you."

Friedgen, who spent the previous two seasons as running game coordinator and coach of the tight ends and H-backs, said elements remain from the "Air Coryell" offense designed by Coryell. Coryell, coach from 1978 to midway through the 1986 season, was inducted into the team's Hall of Fame on Sunday.

In the Chargers' scheme, the H-back is a hybrid tight end-fullback who often goes in motion to block at the point of attack.

Friedgen said Humphries, the top-rated passer in the AFC, is a vital part of the running game.

SJ Green climbs to 5-0 in V-ball

The San Jacinto Green eighth grade volleyball team went to 5-0 by beating Alamo Red Monday, 15-4, 15-1. Michelle Acosta had nine serves for wins as did Nikia Wilkerson. Cristy Urias and Wilkerson both served aces. Green beat Goodard White 13-5, 15-0, 15-7 last Thursday.

In other eighth grade action, San Jacinto White also stayed unbeaten at 4-0 with a 15-10, 15-5 win over Alamo Gray. White was led by the serving of Tenille McDonald and Nicki Green.

Also, Abell White defeated Goddard Black, 15-13, 15-4, to climb to 3-2 on the year. Outstanding servers were Annette Okneski with eight and Gina Ochoa with nine.

Abell Blue, however, fell to 4-4 in a loss to Goddard White, 16-14, 5-15, 15-9 despite six winning serves by Susie Pruka.

How to use StockQuote Hotline:
1. Call CITYLINE at 560-2400. When prompted, enter Category 9991.
2. At a second prompt, press 2.
3. THEN, for Stocks, press 1. For Mutual Funds, press 2. For Money Markets, press 3. For Market Indices, press 4.
3. When prompted, enter the numerical code of your ticker symbol (i.e., for IBM, enter 43-22-61) followed by the star (*) key. Ticker symbols can be found in Standard & Poor's Ticker Guide, or by calling your broker. Refer to the Alphabet Code listings at left for instructions on converting the ticker symbol into its numerical code. (Quotes are current, delayed by 15 minutes.)
4. To exit the StockQuote Hotline and request another CITYLINE category, press the pound (#) key.

Stock quotes are from the Associated Press. Over 9,000 stocks are listed from NYSE, AmEx and OTC, and are available 24 hours a day.

StockQuote Hotline
CITYLINE has upgraded the StockQuote Hotline. Call now and follow the instructions below to retrieve the latest information on Mutual Funds, Money Markets and Market Indices. If you have difficulty interacting with the StockQuote Hotline, please call CITYLINE at 687-8852.

Prices slump

NEW YORK — Oil futures opened higher on news of U.S. troops arriving in Kuwait, then dropped sharply Monday after Saddam Hussein's government backed away from a new standoff with the United States.

Contracts for next month's delivery of light sweet crude oil settled at $17.99 per barrel, down 27 cents on the New York Mercantile Exchange.

Local crude purchasers lowered their posted price 25 cents to $16.50 a barrel.

Prices peaked with a 37-cent gain before dropping off after Nizar Hamdoon, Iraq's ambassador to the United Nations, said Iraqi forces would withdraw from the Kuwaiti border and "are already on the move."

Natural gas prices were higher, with contracts for delivery in November settling at $1.658 per 1,000 cubic feet, up 3.4 cents.

Dollar retreats

NEW YORK — The dollar ended mostly lower in subdued holiday trading Monday, slipping from a six-week high against the Japanese yen after Iraq said it would withdraw troops from the Kuwait border.

Gold prices fell modestly. On New York's Commodity Exchange, gold for current delivery settled at $390.70 a troy ounce, down 20 cents.

In late New York trading, the dollar was quoted at 100.35 yen, down from 100.67 late Friday.

The dollar also was changing hands in New York at 1.5445 German marks, down from 1.5470.

Other late dollar rates in New York compared with late Friday: 1.2820 Swiss francs, up from 1.2798; 5.2842 French francs, down from 5.2855; 1,573 Italian lire, down from 1,575; and 1.3467 Canadian dollars, down from 1.3470.

Stocks surge

NEW YORK — Stocks ended higher in light holiday trading Monday as investors shifted their attention from inflation and interest rates to upcoming third-quarter earnings reports.

The Dow Jones industrial average rose 23.89 points to 3,821.32.

Advancing issues outnumbered declines by about 2 to 1 on the New York Stock Exchange.

Volume on the floor of the Big Board came to a relatively light 213.21 million shares, down from 284.23 million in the previous session. The Columbus Day holiday held down trading activity.

The strong showing by technology stocks meant the smaller capitalization Nasdaq index which is heavily weighted in such issues, put in the best performance of the major market indexes, rallying 6.85 to 756.81.

Apple, IBM move closer to common standard, executives say

SAN FRANCISCO (NYT) — Executives of Apple Computer and IBM are close to agreeing on a common standard that would make the computers each company produces compatible with one another, industry executives familiar with the discussions said on Sunday.

For consumers, such a standard would mean they could buy a single machine that would run software using several different operating systems: OS/2, which is the operating system that IBM promotes; Apple's Macintosh and the Windows NT program made by the Microsoft Corp.

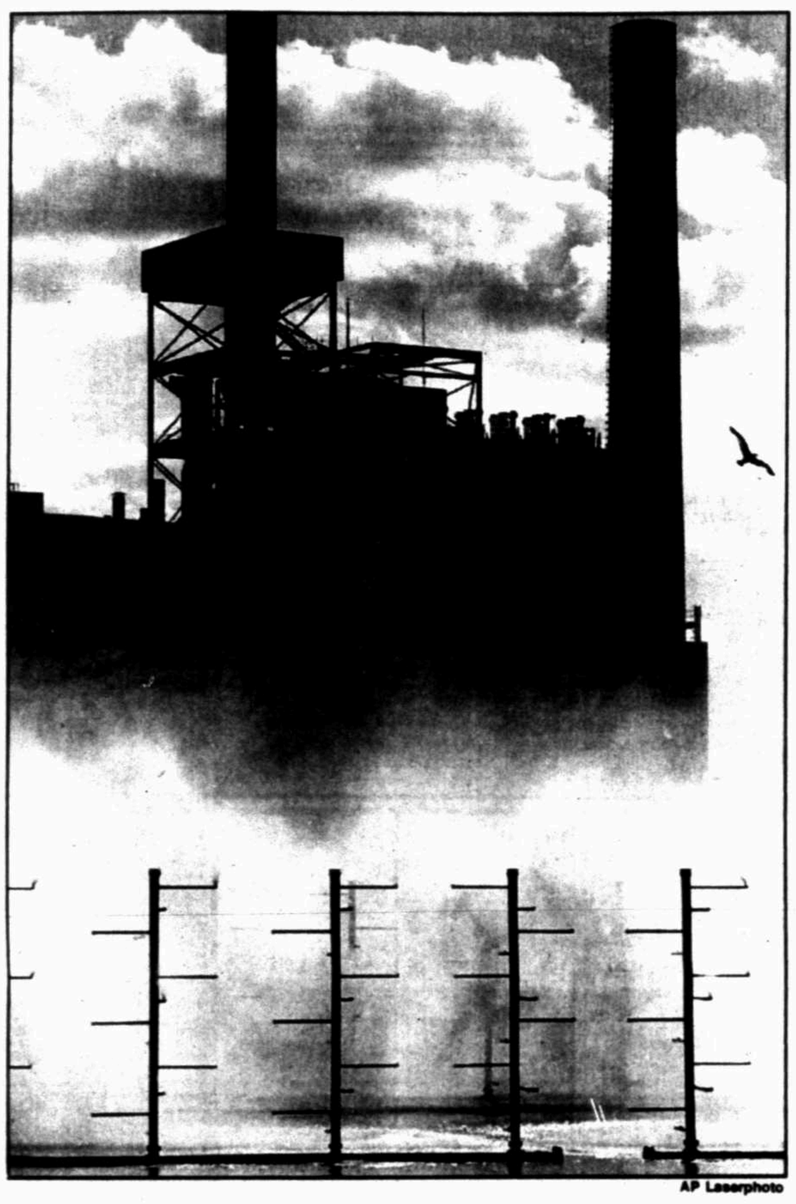

For the companies, a common standard would mean they were providing software developers with a bigger potential market, a linchpin of their attempt to counter the increasing domination of the personal computer market by the Intel Corp., the leading chip maker, and Microsoft, the largest software company.

Apple and IBM declined to provide any details of the talks, although a spokesman for the International Business Machines Corp., Roger Bolton, confirmed that "We continue to be in talks with Apple and we're optimistic that we will be able to reach an agreement."

The intensified negotiations included meetings last week between Apple's chairman, Michael H. Spindler, and an IBM vice president, James A. Cannavino. Speculation has been pulsing through Silicon Valley and the financial markets in recent days that IBM or Motorola Inc. might be considering an equity investment in Apple, or even acquiring the company outright.

IBM, Apple and Motorola have been working together since 1991. But although the three partners were able to quickly develop a powerful microprocessor chip, the Power PC, Apple and IBM were unable to agree on a standard for personal computers.

The Power PC chip, currently available in some Macintosh computers, runs all Macintosh software and is capable of running some programs designed for Intel-based machines.

Oil market not as shaken by threat of crisis

NEW YORK (AP) — Four years after the first Persian Gulf crisis sent oil prices soaring, the market has grown wiser in assessing the real implications of a new threat by Saddam Hussein to world energy supplies.

"We've already been through this once," said Peter Beutel, an oil futures analyst at Cameron Hanover Inc., a commodities research concern in Bronxville, N.Y. "If this was happening for first time, prices would already be up $3 a barrel. The market is more sophisticated now."

Certainly, the market has been reactive to news of a new Iraqi troop build-up on the Kuwaiti border, but far less wildly than in the summer of 1990, when Iraqi troops seized the oil-rich emirate and appeared ready to move into Saudi Arabia, the world's biggest exporter.

The market's jitters have been restrained, say Beutel and other industry analysts, because energy futures traders saw how quickly other oil producing nations were able to replace Iraqi and Kuwaiti oil supplies in 1990.

Also, thanks to a decisive response to the last Iraqi attack by a U.S.-led coalition, the market is far more confident that the long-range effects of any new agression by Saddam Hussein will be minimal.

"Most people feel that if there's a military situation, it will be won as handily by the allies as last time," said Beutel. "At this stage, the only legitimate concern is that maybe Iraq would be able to dash into Kuwait and set a few wells on fire."

Oil prices fluctuated widely in the aftermath of the Iraqi invasion of Kuwait in 1990, often shifting several dollars a day on the latest tough talk or conciliatory gesture by both sides.

At one point, crude more than doubled to $40.42 a barrel, only to settle back to the $30 range and then plummet by $10 in one day, after a U.S.-led coalition launched Operation Desert Storm to oust the Iraqis from Kuwait.

Such price movements have been absent during the latest Western standoff with Saddam Hussein, who desperately wants to start selling crude again because the Iraqi economy is starving.

In Monday's trading on the New York Mercantile Exchange, prices for next month's deliveries of crude oil rose slightly on the arrival of new U.S. troops in Kuwait, but edged lower after the Iraqi ambassador to the United Nations, Nizar Hamdoon, said Iraqi forces would withdraw from the Kuwaiti border.

Emotions aside, there are more substantive reasons for the market to remain calm this time around. In 1990, the Iraqi invasion meant a disruption in both Kuwaiti and Iraqi oil supplies — 2.8 million barrels from Kuwait and 1.3 million barrels from Iraq — and a potential threat to Saudi production.

Recycled paper products find hot new business market

N.Y. Times News Service

Recycling is being transformed from a gesture to help the environment into a solid business. Used paper, cardboard and newspaper that had recently languished in warehouses are now hot commodities.

The reasons: an economic recovery that has increased demand for raw materials, and a commitment by manufacturers to build the mills that can process recycled products.

The surge in demand has sent prices soaring, and has made it more likely that what is rescued from the trash at home and in the office will find a valuable use somewhere else in this country. In the past, much of the trash collected for recycling was exported because of low domestic prices.

Bales of old corrugated boxes that sold for as much as $35 a ton in September 1993 shot up to as much as $110 a ton in the Midwest by last month.

Waste paper collected from offices went from less than $15 a ton to more than $85 in the same period. Newspapers jumped from less than $30 a ton to more than $55. There have been similar increases in most other regions.

Prices for steel cans, which are melted and used to make new steel, have increased to a range of $70 to $110 a ton east of the Mississippi, from $30 to $70 a ton two years ago.

Even some plastics, typically the weak sisters among recyclable materials, are in greater demand. A poor cotton harvest in China in recent months has had brokers in Western states scurrying to gather old soda bottles to be transformed into synthetic fibers for the textile industry there.

"The last year represents the beginning of the maturing of the recycling industry," said Ralph Earle, an environmental strategist with A.D. Little Inc., a consulting firm. He said investments over the last six to eight years in equipment to collect, transport and process recycled material have created momentum for the industry.

Indeed, recycling is becoming a significant line of business for some other companies, as well. Browning-Ferris Industries, the nation's second-largest trash hauler, expects recycling revenue to approach $400 million this year, or about 10 percent of its total. As recently as 1989, recycling amounted to less than 1 percent of the company's revenue.

"This is the fastest-growing business we have," said Philip Angell, an aide to William D. Ruckelshaus, Browning-Ferris' chairman. "And the margins are in the mid-teens, which produces respectable profits." The company can thus sell the recycled paper for about 15 percent more than it costs to collect and process it.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

'Defensive' investments don't usually lose value

By Bill Doyle

Q: The trust department at my bank allowed $159,000 in my trust and $66,000 in my daughter's trust to lay fallow at 2 percent for four months this spring.

Am I justified in my rage?

Doyle

A: This has to be a judgment call and, in my judgment, you have no good reason to throw a fit. While 2 percent is lower interest than you could have obtained on many investments during that period, the low yield could indicate your money was in "defensive" investments, which usually do not fall in value, even when the stock market tumbles — as it did last April.

The stock market was relatively calm last spring. So, if those two trusts were set up with the intention of preserving capital, the bank's trust department clearly did its job of meeting that investment objective.

Even if the trusts have different objectives, such as capital appreciation, you have no good reason to complain unless the market values of the securities in the trusts went to you-know-where in a handbasket.

It's clear you were expecting a higher yield than 2 percent — and probably got it in previous periods. But there are times when, because of conditions in the securities market, even experienced officers in a trust department can't produce outstanding investment results.

You really should make an appointment to visit with your bank's trust department and have everything explained to you.

Q: When a certificate of deposit is in two names — "George Smith or Susan Smith" — and Susan dies, can George cash it immediately or must he wait for the CD's maturity date?

A: He needn't wait. The "or" between their names means the CD is in co-ownership — not joint ownership. That enables either George or Susan to redeem it.

If it were in joint ownership — with "and" between their names — they both should sign to redeem the CD. However, many banks cash jointly owned CDs with only one signature.

Q: In the world of finance, isn't more than half a cent considered to be the next whole cent and less than half a cent forgotten?

Example: An item in a store costs 39 cents; the state sales tax is 6 percent; 6 percent of 39 cents is 2.34 cents. Should the customer pay two cents or three cents sales tax on that item?

A: In the best of all worlds, that sales tax should be two cents.

In practice, however, all the purchases subject to sales tax are added together and the sales tax — be it 6 percent or some other number — is levied against the total. As a result, it becomes virtually impossible to learn what the sales tax amounts to on each item.

Q: My son has two accounts at a credit union. One is for a loan and VISA account; the other for his savings and checking account.

He sent two payments, in separate envelopes, to pay on his loan and VISA. The credit union applied both to his VISA and then took money from his savings account to pay on his loan.

I don't think they have the right to do this. I feel it gives you no control over your money. Am I correct?

A: Not if the account agreements your son signed authorizes the credit union to move money from one account to another account. Don't be surprised if you find words to that effect in those agreements.

It's only natural for depository institutions, such as banks, credit unions, and savings and loan associations, to insert such language in their account agreements. That's a matter of self-preservation. Face it. Some people do attempt to cheat.

Market Timing: More myth than reality

Some people believe that the secret of successful investing is to properly time the market -- buying investments when prices are bottoming out and selling them when prices peak.

"In theory, that's a wonderful idea," Van Pearcy explained. "Unfortunately. it's also like saying that the secret to becoming rich is to discover a buried treasure. It's easier said than done.,"

To test the success of market timing, Hulbert Financial Digest studied 29 market-timing strategies over a period of five-years. (The study considered the after-tax return of an upper-middle-class investor.) The results of the study showed a simple buy-and-hold philosophy outperformed 28 of the 29 market-timing strategies. In other words, the investors who bought and and held on to their investments fared better than those who bought low and sold high.

A University of Michigan study came to the same conclusion. Trying to predict when to be invested in stocks and when to be out of the market is nearly impossible.

The Michigan study covered 1982 to 1987, a five-year bull-market. Based on the Standard & Poor's 500 average annualized return for this period, an investor who stayed invested for the entire 1,276 days would have realized a 26.3 percent annualized return. Had that same investor missed just 10 of the biggest gain days while trying to time the market, his or her return would have dropped to 18.3 percent. Had he or she missed the 40 biggest gain days, the return would have fallen to 4.3 percent! Missing these biggest-day movements would not have been unheard of for the in-and out trader. Typically, more dramatic price increases follow a prolonged decline. After that, increases tend to be more orderly.

Pearcy summed it up this way: "The message is simple: Dramatic stock market gains are generally limited to a relatively few trading days. If you want to be there when they happen, you've got to stay in the market."

Van Pearcy has been an investment representative with Edward D. Jones & Co. since 1987. The native West Texan received his BA and MBA from the University of Notre Dame. This month Van travelled to St. Louis to receive an award for being one of the top investment representatives with Edward D. Jones & Co. in the nation.

Dearly b'Loved: Unique gift shop has that "Fredericksburg flair"

When customers open the door at Dearly b'Loved they find themselves surrounded by a wonderful atmosphere of the old blended with the new. Recently expanded and relocated in the Imperial Shopping Center, Dearly b'Loved still offers one of the most enjoyable assortments of antiques, decorative accessories and an exceptional variety of seasonal gift items.

The owner of the shop, Tricia Nicholson offers a superb collection of the well-known Yankee Candles that bring customers back time and time again. Fragrances such as that from the 'Home Sweet Home' candle will convince customers to have an extra candle on hand all year round.

Still an important part of the shop is the large collection of 'Muffy' bears that are part of the North American Bear Co.. Nicholson has an unsurpassed collection of 'Muffys' and 'Muffy' accessories which have evolved into collector's items, some valued at several hundred dollars. Dearly b'Loved has many of these 'retired' 'Muffys' that are growing in value each year.

Also included in Dearly b'Loved is a collection of 'Stacey's Stuff' an area which is displayed and offered by Deborah Fikes She says that being part of Dearly b'Loved is most enjoyable because of the special feeling of yesteryear the shop creates.

"It's like going back in time, but customers have the advantage of also finding new gift ideas here. Our atmosphere is unique because we display most of our pieces in vintage, antique pieces," Fikes said.

'Stacey's Stuff' was named after Fike's seven year old daughter and includes decorative accessories, baby, children and teacher's gifts as well as stationary and potpourri. Some of the most popular 'Stacey's Stuff' items include 'Chippendale' doll and children's chairs as well as an assortment of angels and angel memorabilia.

The face behind 'Dearly b'Loved's' 'Stacey's Stuff' is Stacey Fikes. Here, she is pictured sitting on a country porch from an old home in New Orleans. Dearly b'Loved is located in the Imperial Shopping Center, telephone number, 689-7771.

Also featured at the new Dearly b'Loved shop is 'Designs by Candice McPherren'. McPherren is a designer who offers fabrics and wallpaper samples along with tassels, trims and curtain and lamp finials, which complement her design and custom floral services. She can be contacted at Dearly b'Loved or at 689-9710 to schedule an appointment.

'Johnny's Things' is another addition to Dearly b'Loved. Johnny Hackleman has designed a gathering of decorative accessories, furniture, prints and intriguing gift items that are unique to this area.

Completing the atmosphere is Yvonne Tighe of 'Yvonne's' who is well known as being a source for exceptional antique furniture and accessories in this country and abroad.

'Yvonne's' is currently displaying a collection of 'Spode Christmas ware which will enhance any holiday setting.

The shop's grand opening celebration is scheduled for this week, starting on Thursday October 13th and continuing through the 15th. The shop hours are 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Monday through Saturday.

The shop will offer refreshments and wonderful door prizes in addition to a friendly and helpful atmosphere. All customers are offered complimentary gift wrap and delivery service

Classified Telephone Sales Supervisor

We are looking for a special person to supervise our classified telephone sales department. The ideal candidate will have prior sales supervisory experience and possess the quality to lead a team of six persons to be the best they can be. Our current telephone sales staff is highly motivated, professional and want a supervisor with whom they can share challenges and successes.

Our classified department is a beehive of activity and sometimes becomes chaotic during peak business periods. The ability to perform under these conditions is mandatory

The classified advertising department is responsible for assisting customers, both private individuals and businesses, in wording and scheduling their ad to get maximum results. In addition to taking incoming calls our consultants telemarket on various promotions.

If you are the person we are looking for we would like to talk to you. If you are the successful candidate you will enjoy a good base salary, monthly commission, quarterly performance bonus plus a package of company benefits hard to beat.
