Driver of van blames truck

DALLAS (AP) — The driver of a van that collided Aug. 12 with a tractor-trailer, killing five children from the Midland Boys Club, denies that he was drowsy or speeding at the time of the crash.

Instead, he said the Coca-Cola truck "ran into us" as he steered back onto the highway after trying to dislodge a soft-drink bottle from beneath the accelerator.

"If the truck had slowed down to let us back onto the road, there wouldn't have been an accident," said Damon Polk, 23, in his first news conference since the accident.

Polk told the Dallas Times-Herald in today's editions that investigators' early speculation that he fell asleep was "completely false."

A day after the crash, a state trooper said he thought Polk had been exhausted from getting up early and driving most of the day in hot weather, that he had nodded off while trying to pass the truck.

But the report filed last week by the Texas Department of Public Safety said the two factors causing the crash were, "Distraction in the vehicle and faulty evasive action."

No charges have been filed in connection with the accident.

The van was returning to Midland from Abilene with 14 youths and three adults who had been attending a softball tournament.

> "... I grabbed the wheel, but I didn't want to mash on the brakes, because I didn't want the kids to be thrown on the floor. So I got us going straight and then eased back onto the highway. That's when the truck hit us."
>
> — Damon Polk, 23, driver of the Boys Club van

"I was awake and alert," Polk, a former track star whose legs remain paralyzed, said from his hospital room at Methodist Hospital in Lubbock.

"And I never lost control of the van. What happened was this:

"I had just passed a car and was in the left hand lane. I was going between Texas 65 and 68 mph. The Coke truck was behind us, also in the left lane. Then a Dr Pepper bottle rolled up under the accelerator, partly under the pedal and partly under my foot.

"I was holding the steering wheel with my right hand and reaching down with my left to get the bottle. I guess I was looking down too much and we went off the road."

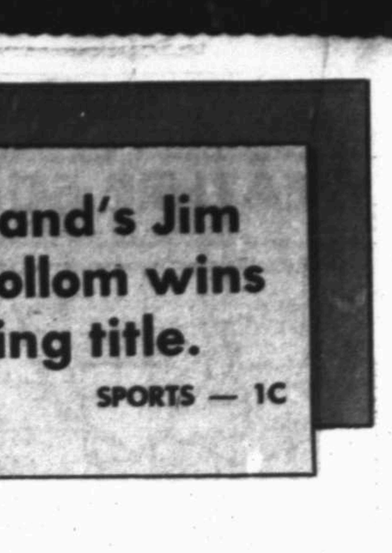

The van pulled off to the left onto the grassy median of Interstate 20, Polk said.

"I grabbed the wheel," he said, "but I didn't want to mash on the brakes, because I didn't want the kids to be thrown on the floor. So I got us going straight and then eased back onto the highway. That's when the truck hit us."

Polk said the rig struck the van in the rear on the right side. Police said the 18-wheeler dragged the smaller vehicle about 150 yards.

After the wreck, Polk said, "... the van was upright but the roof had been stripped off. I tried to turn around to see how the kids were but I couldn't move."

After being rescued, Polk said, "I knew by looking at the van that somebody had died."

Residents warned of rapist

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

Midland Police will hold a public meeting Thursday night to alert east-side citizens to a "potentially very dangerous" rapist preying in that area, Chief Richard Czech said Monday.

Police believe the suspect is responsible for two east Midland rapes, two east Midland attempted rapes and at least 16 burglaries in the area — all of which have occurred since March, Czech said at an afternoon press conference.

■ Related photo — 1B

The latest rape occurred August 10, Czech said.

The suspect is described as a black male in his 20s of slender, muscular build, approximately 5-foot, 10-inches tall and wears his hair in a short Afro, police said.

As in historically true for rapists, the suspect is confining himself to an area he knows well, Czech added.

"We can't tell if he knows his victims well, but he knows the eastside very well," the police chief said. "It's very possible he knows where he is going to go."

Candidates trade 'fire' on weapons

Associated Press

Democrat Michael Dukakis today scoffed at the Republican wish list of weapons, saying "you can't have them all" and still balance the budget, while Republican running mate an Quayle said Dukakis is wrong to call Star Wars a fantasy. "It is called defending America," he said.

Dukakis finished up a two-day swing through his home state of Massachusetts and Republican George Bush toured Kentucky today as representatives of both campaigns opened summit-style negotiations to hammer out a schedule for fall debates.

■ Related stories — 7A

"I believe they recognize how important it is to the American people that there be debates," Dukakis chairman Paul Brountas said before he and campaign manager Susan Estrich met with Bush's campaign chairman James Baker, media adviser Roger Ailes and adviser Bob Goodwin.

Baker, speaking to reporters on his way in to the meeting in the Washington offices of Brountas' law firm, was asked how many debates were expected. "That's what we're here to find out," he said.

The Democratic nominee hinted strongly he would let no more Republican broadsides go unanswered. "If it continues you have to respond," Dukakis said in Springfield, Mass. "I think that's unfortunate but I think it's very clear what kind of campaign the Republicans are running. ..."

Dukakis also cited his opposition to the mobile MX missile system, two new supercarrier task forces and the Star Wars space defense system.

$14.8-million county budget near approval

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Midland County commissioners, who often tout budget trimming, are expected to approve the county's $14.8-million proposed 1989 budget at 9 a.m. Friday.

And to help fund the budget, the commissioners are to set the tax rate four days later — at 2 p.m. Tuesday — in the Midland County Courthouse.

"The budget, like always, is a very conservative budget, and again, it will be tight as tight can be," said Commissioner Win Brown.

While the proposed $14.8-million budget represents a $1.6-million increase over the current budget, it does not convert into a property-tax increase, Brown noted Monday following a brief commissioners' meeting to file the proposed budget with Midland County Clerk Rosenelle Cherry.

The property — ad valorem — tax is to be reduced by 4.5 cents — to 16.50 from 21.072 cents — per $100 valuation based on 100 percent of appraised values. The property tax is to produce about $6.16 million for the county. The county-wide tax base is nudging $4 billion.

Less income produced by the property-tax decrease, Brown noted, will be offset by the one-half-cent county sales tax, which, according to the proposed budget, is to generate $4.3 million for funding the 1989 budget.

"And that helps take the burden off of the taxpayers on his property taxes," Brown said. "That directly offsets the ad valorem taxes."

"The people this coming year will be paying less (property) taxes than they have in the past," Brown said, "and this is due, in part, to the one-half-cent sales tax."

The county's other revenue is generated by fines, license and permits fees, library fines, Fairview Cemetery and other income.

Between now and Jan. 1, when the budget is to be activated, Brown said that "there will be some minor, unforeseen changes.

Funeral boat finds mooring

By PAUL A. DRISCOLL

CHICAGO (AP) — Nearly 4,000 years after it was built, the funeral boat of one of Egypt's most powerful pharaohs takes another journey this week.

The delicate, 32-foot long, wooden craft was gently lifted off the floor of the Field Museum of Natural History on Monday and rotated 180 degrees. Expert riggers who performed the tricky maneuver kept their hands off, fearing sweat or body oils would harm the ancient wood.

Today, the boat used in the funeral of King Sen-wosret III in about 1850 B.C. will be moved inch by inch a few yards to its new setting in the museum — a $2.2 million permanent exhibit.

Brooke may treat air show burn victims

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Spectators injured during an air show disaster in West Germany could be flown to Brooke Army Medical Center for treatment of burn wounds, officials said.

Army burn specialists traveled to West Germany on Monday to help medical experts treat victims of Sunday's tragedy at Ramstein Air Force Base near Frankfurt, West Germany, said Robert Clark, spokesman for BAMC.

More than 300,000 people were watching an air show Sunday when three Italian jet fighters crashed over a crowd, killing 45 people and injurying 500, including some Americans, officials said.

■ Related stories — 8A, 1D

The BAMC team sent to West Germany included two physicians, a nurse, a respiratory specialist and a clinical specialist, Clark said.

He said the team would determine if any of the victims should be returned to San Antonio for treatment.

"This specialist team is something that they have been doing for a while," Clark said.

Many burn victims, injured during military crashes and civil accidents, were earlier flown to the burn center for treatment.

The most recent victims treated at BAMC included sailors from the USS Roberts, which struck a mine in the Persian Gulf earlier this year. Sailors from the USS Stark, hit by an Iraqi missile in May 1987, also were treated at the burn unit.

The 40-bed unit is staffed by 240 physicians, nurses and support personnel and is operated by the Army's Institute of Surgical Research.

The burn unit is one of the top in the world because it has developed treatments, including topical creams, to help burn victims heal more quickly and less painfully, said Clark.

"This is the only burn center in the federal government and it's one of the earliest burn centers and it has developed several treatments now in use at other burn centers," he said.

The burn center was established in 1943 in New York and moved to BAMC at Fort Sam Houston in 1946. In 1949, the unit was given permission to study burn trauma and steadily has developed new techniques, Clark said.

Leading indicators drop 0.8 percent in July

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government said today its chief forecasting gauge of future economic activity dropped 0.8 percent in July, the sharpest decline in eight months.

Economists said the drop in the Commerce Department's Index of Leading Economic Indicators may be a signal of a pause in what has been booming economic growth this year. But they cautioned against reading too much into a single month's figures.

The July decline was the biggest since last November, when the index dropped 1.0 percent in the wake of the October stock market crash.

The latest drop was likely to be seen as good news by the stock and bond markets, which have faltered in recent weeks on fears that inflation is heating up.

But the dip follows a 1.4 percent jump in the index in June, the biggest increase in 18 months. The Commerce Department revised its estimate for May, calculating now that the indicators were off by 0.7 percent instead of the previously reported 0.8 percent.

The government said last week that the U.S. economy, as measured by the gross national product, grew at an annual rate of 3.3 percent in the April-June quarter, following a 3.4 percent expansion pace in the first three months of the year.

NATION

The last remnants of tropical depression Chris caused heavy rain this morning in southern Maine after leading to at least one death along with power outages, traffic accidents and train delays in Greater New York.

A woman was killed Monday night when an oak tree was blown onto her moving car in Mamaroneck, N.Y., police there said.

The storm downed power lines on New York's Staten Island, Long Island and six nearby counties, knocking out power to about 31,000 customers, according to utility company spokesmen. Most of the customers had their power restored by Monday night.

New York-area transit officials said tree limbs fell onto tracks, slowing commuter service during the evening rush hour Monday. Some trains were delayed up to 35 minutes.

Showers and thunderstorms were scattered today from eastern Massachusetts to southeast Virginia and the Carolinas. Rain also was widely scattered along the Gulf Coast and in Iowa.

The nation's high Monday was 109 degrees at Redding, Calif.

Today's weather forecast calls for scattered showers from New England to Virginia, and scattered showers and thunderstorms from the Carolinas across Georgia and Florida to the central Gulf Coast region. Widely scattered showers and thunderstorms also were expected to develop from Texas across New Mexico to the mountains and deserts of Southern California.

High temperatures today were forecast for the 60s over the northern Great Lakes and northern New England; the 70s along the Pacific coast, from the northern and Middle Atlantic states to the Ohio Valley, southern Great Lakes and the upper Mississippi Valley, and in higher elevations of the Southwest; the 90s in Florida and southeast Texas; and upwards of 100 degrees in the desert southwest and California's interior valleys. Elsewhere, highs were forecast to be in the 80s.

The nation's temperatures at 3 a.m. EDT ranged from 42 degrees at Custer, S.D., to 92 at Yuma, Ariz.

Bennett favors phonetics, language study

By CHRISTOPHER CONNELL
AP Education Writer

WASHINGTON — Education Secretary William J. Bennett today offered his own view of what should be taught to America's 32 million elementary school children, from phonics in kindergarten to foreign language in the fourth grade.

Bennett was holding a news conference today to release the 61-page report, "James Madison Elementary School: A Curriculum for American Students."

Elementary schools are "in pretty good shape," Bennett said. They "face fewer and less severe problems than now plague our high schools."

But "despite recent advances, the absolute level of American elementary school achievement is still too low," he said.

Tests indicate "that our children have a still insufficient command of basic subjects ... (and) lag well behind their foreign counterparts," he said.

Bennett, who is leaving his post Sept. 20, called it "my final report to the American people as secretary."

The report outlines what Bennett calls "a sound elementary school core curriculum" from kindergarten through eighth grade in seven subjects: English, social studies, mathematics, science, foreign language, fine arts and physical and health education.

Its suggested reading list ranges from the tales of Pippi Longstocking and Mrs. Piggle-Wiggle for the early grades to "The Red Badge of Courage" and "Alice's Adventures in Wonderland" for older pupils. Bennett said he emphasized classics "because they are so often missing from elementary school instruction."

Bennett has no authority to force a single school in America to follow any of his suggestions. Public school curricula are determined by state and local school agencies, and private schools are free to set their own courses. The 1979 law that created the U.S. Department of Education specifically forbade the agency from prescribing curricula.

Bennett said he was just offering some free advice.

"I do not presume to instruct teachers — or parents, principals, administrators and school boards — in the details of their daily jobs or in the exact shape, sequence and specialized content of their elementary school curricula," he said.

Bennett's suggestions for social studies include: American history in each of the first five grades, world history and geography in sixth and seventh grades, and both world geography and American government in eighth grade.

He would have all youngsters take either algebra or pre-algebra by eighth grade. His science curriculum would be capped with biology in seventh grade and some chemistry and physics in eighth grade. He said foreign language instruction should start "no later than fourth grade."

"We want our students — by the end of 8th grade — to read, write and speak clear and grammatical English, and to be acquainted with the varieties and qualities of fiction and nonfiction literature. We want them to know the essential features of American and world history, the major landscapes and nations of the Earth, and the rights and obligations that belong to citizens of the United States," he wrote.

"We want them to be proficient in arithmetic and geometry, and familiar with basic principles of algebra. We want them to have begun exploring biology, chemistry, physics and a foreign language; to have investigated the history and practice of art and music; and to have developed the habits of health, fitness and athletic fair play."

The report profiles seven schools as models of strong elementary curricula: Meridith Magnet Elementary School in Temple, Texas; Miller Junior High School in West San Jose, Calif.; Blaine Elementary School in Blaine, Wash.; School No. 59, Science Magnet, in Buffalo, N.Y.; LaSalle Language Academy in Chicago; St. Patrick School in Miami Beach, Fla.; and Maryette Elementary School in Stilwell, Okla.

RAPIST

The suspect wields a screwdriver or other sharp instrument which he uses to pry open doors or windows and threaten his victims, Czech said.

Usually, he strikes between the hours of midnight and 5 a.m. and usually will burglarize the home of his rape victim, Czech added.

According to the "type" of sexual assaults he commits, police believe he is responsible for the two actual and two attempted rapes, the police chief said.

Czech would not elaborate on "how" the suspect is committing the rapes.

"We don't want to tell people to arm themselves...we don't want a bunch of vigilantes out there...but if they are comfortable using a weapon" they should, Czech added.

The two women who fended off the rapist did so with a handgun and a knife, police said.

Still, Czech advised a woman who encounters a rapist in her home to "cooperate fully to protect your life."

Police have deployed more units in the eastside area and urge residents to call police at the first sign of a prowler or immediately after they have been robbed or assaulted, Czech said.

"If notified quickly, we can flood the area. We like to respond within three minutes," the police chief said.

Cpl. Jim White speculated the suspect may also like to strike the area because a large number of the homes there are older and not very well secured. In addition, with summer temperatures, some residents may leave a window open to cool their home, the corporal said.

Police have no information on whether the suspect travels on foot or by vehicle, Czech said.

Rapes are not prevalent in Midland, White added.

The town meeting will be held Thursday at 7:30 p.m. in the YMCA building at Scharbauer Drive and Butternut Lane.

Residents of east Midland are urged to attend to ask questions on these crimes and how they may protect themselves against them, Czech said.

Speakers at the meeting will include members of the Midland Police Department, the Midland Rape Crisis Center and the District Attorney's Victim Assistance Program.

"We want people to use crime prevention methods to secure their homes better," the police chief said.

DECLINE

This strong growth has raised concern at the Federal Reserve Board, which is charged with keeping inflation under control.

The Fed has been pushing up short-term interest rates since late March in an attempt to slow growth to a sustainable, non-inflationary pace. On Aug. 9, it took its most dramatic inflation-fighting move by raising the discount rate, its key bank lending rate, by a half percentage point.

Since then, analysts have been watching government economic statistics closely for indications of whether the Fed has tightened enough.

In July, the weakness in the leading indicators was widespread, with seven of the available nine components registering declines.

The biggest drain came from an 11.3 percent jump in unemployment claims. That was followed in order of severity by a drop in new orders for consumer goods; a decline in building permits; a speedup in business deliveries, considered a sign of slackening demand; a drop in the Standard & Poor's index of 500 stocks, a contraction of the money supply and a drop in plant and equipment orders.

One indicator, a rise in prices for raw materials, was read as a sign of economic strength. The length of the average workweek was unchanged in July.

The 0.8 percent overall decline left the index at 192.1 percent of its 1967 base of 100.

Michael Evans, a private economic forecaster in Washington, said he expected GNP growth likely will slow to an annual rate of 2.5 percent in the second half, closer to what the Federal Reserve considers sustainable without quickening inflaton.

"Mr. Bush says he wants them all," the Democrat said. "You can't have them all. Not if you're serious about providing the resources our conventional forces need and not if you're serious about getting that deficit down."

Bush's top surrogate, running mate Quayle, defended Star Wars in a speech today. "It is not a fantasy as the governor of Massachusetts has called it. It is called defending America," he said.

In an appearance before the International Association of Fire Chiefs, meeting in Washington, Quayle opened by saying, "I've become very accustomed to fighting fires the last couple of weeks."

Dukakis made his call Monday for a return to the rhetorical high ground while being criticized by Democrats for letting Bush control the debate with attacks on the Democrat's patriotism, views on defense and gun control and a Massachusetts prison furlough program.

Dukakis, during a tour of western Massachusetts to highlight that area's economic resurgence, said he was "trying to get this campaign up where it belongs" by discussing his economic positions. But the Massachusetts governor also countered Bush's attacks on the furlough program and launched his own salvo on the vice president's support for a reduction in the capital gains tax.

Dukakis said at a news conference he wants to ask Bush about the 16,000 furloughs granted to federal prisoners last year, "some lasting 45 days and many to convicted drug pushers Mr. Bush says he wants to execute."

And in a luncheon speech before the news conference, Dukakis said: "We're not going to accept Mr. Bush's suggestion that the way to build opportunity for our citizens is to cut taxes for the wealthy again, this time with a $40 billion handout, 70 percent of which would go to those making $200,000 a year or more."

BOAT

When the exhibit opens in November, it will allow visitors to walk through the eerie world of tombs, mummies, shrines to cat goddesses and other treasures from ancient Egypt. The museum said the exhibit would give visitors the only opportunity outside Egypt to enter and explore a life-size tomb complex.

King Sen-wosret's boat — a graceful, crescent-shaped canoe-like craft — is but one of more than a thousand artifacts and treasures from the museum's collection used to recreate the burial scenes.

Visitors enter the tomb chambers of the 5th Dynasty pharaoh, King Unis, dating to 2400 B.C. and excavated from Saqqara, Egypt, in 1908.

Beneath a false door, a 35-foot burial shaft takes visitors into the dark and eerie burial chamber. The sarcophagus is empty. When it was excavated, the pharaoh's mummy was gone, stolen by robbers or destroyed by time.

Leaving the burial chamber, the visitor passes through a roughly hewn tomb robbers' tunnel and into another scene depicting a variety of Egyptian burial rites.

"This could well be the most fascinating part of the exhibit," said its developer, Janet Kamien. "It gives them (visitors) a chance to explore the age-old mysteries of mummies and life after death."

Next month, the museum staff will move 23 mummies into the exhibit, along with the accouterments their souls were to take with them to the afterworld.

Sen-wosret's boat will be displayed nearby.

No one actually knows if the boat was used to transport the king's body across the Nile River to the burial site, said Frank Yurco, a scholar on ancient Egypt at the Oriental Institute and a consultant on the museum project.

The boat was one of six found at the burial compound in 1893-94 by Jacques DeMorgan, a Welsh Egyptologist. Two badly deteriorated ones were left at the site.

Two of the four DeMorgan saved are at the Egyptian Museum in Cairo and the other is at the Carnegie Museum of Natural History in Pittsburgh.

Sen-wosret is remembered for military campaigns that extended Egypt's boundary into the Nubian region of Ethiopia and the Sudan.

Debate on debates heating up

WASHINGTON (AP) — The debate over presidential debates moved behind closed doors today amid Democratic demands that George Bush commit himself to a schedule of televised encounters with Michael Dukakis and a response from Bush that he will not be "stampeded."

James Baker, chairman of the Bush campaign; the vice president's media adviser, Roger Ailes, and adviser Bob Goodwin met privately with Dukakis chairman Paul Brountas and campaign manager Susan Estrich in the Washington offices of Brountas' prestigious Hale & Dorr law firm.

"I believe they recognize how important it is to the American people that there be debates," Brountas said before the meeting on the schedule of fall presidential debates.

Baker, speaking to reporters on his way in, was asked how many debates were expected. "That's what we're here to find out," he said.

Questioned about the Bush campaign's edge in the number of participants, Brountas put his hand on Estrich's shoulder and said, "She's as good as two."

Ailes said the campaign brought three advisers because, "We're in their territory.

The meeting came as the rhetoric escalated over Bush's delay in agreeing to a specific debate schedule.

"There will be an opportunity to debate, and I just don't feel under any great rush, frankly," Bush said while campaigning in St. Louis. "We might meet somebody halfway, but I'm not about to be stampeded."

Democratic National Chairman Paul Kirk charged that Bush is using "long-distance innuendo" and "transcontinental slurs" while avoiding face-to-face debate. The Dukakis campaign, which has already accepted a bipartisan commission's plan for four debates, said the next move was up to Bush.

"The Bush campaign has been ducking these debates, and it's up to them," said Leslie Dach, Dukakis' communications director. "We've got a plan, and it's a plan that's been agreed to by both parties. If they aren't willing to follow that plan, we've got to hear from them."

Janet Brown, executive director of the bipartisan Commission on Presidential Debates, said she had been asked by each campaign to meet with them separately after the Baker-Brountas session.

BUDGET

"We are not expecting major changes. There will be no major changes — just adds and deletes," he said.

The "main increase" will be in the Sheriff's Department, said Brown, and some of the increases there are being mandated by the (Texas) Jail Standards Commission on having the proper number of jailers for the number of inmates. In addition, the county is building a 140-cell jail via a $3.8-million bond issue.

The county's Public Safety and Corrections budget, which includes the sheriff's $2.64-million budget, totals about $3.5 million

Despite cutback in chemicals, 'greenhouse effect' looms

WASHINGTON (AP) — Even drastic cutbacks in the release of the chemicals blamed for causing the global "greenhouse effect" are unlikely to halt the heating of the planet, according to a new climate analysis.

A computer model of the Earth's climate was used to calculate future climate changes under three different scenarios: continued rapid release of the chemicals at current levels; release at slower rates; and a drastic cutback in those chemicals.

In the first case, the Earth's average temperature was calculated to rise by 1.6 degrees Fahrenheit within 20 years.

In the second model, it would take 25 years for that same increase to occur.

But even with a drastic "and probably unrealistic" cutback in chemical releases, the temperature would rise that much eventually, and probably would climb by 0.8 degrees within 15 years, according to the study published in the Aug. 20 issue of the Journal of Geophysical Research-Atmospheres.

The greenhouse effect has been widely discussed recently, although most meteorologists contend that it is too early to determine if it is responsible for the current drought and hot weather affecting much of the nation.

The effect occurs when carbon dioxide, largely from burning fossil fuels, and other gases increase in the atmosphere. These gases let incoming heat from the sun reach the Earth but they reflect outgoing heat, keeping it from traveling back into space. That traps heat, much like a greenhouse traps heat indoors.

James Hansen of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, the lead author of the new study, told a congressional subcommittee earlier in the summer that the current hot, dry conditions are an example of things to come.

In particular, he noted in the new report, while the average increase in global warming doesn't sound like a lot, it means increasing frequency for hot summers. And some areas will be affected more than others.

If the summer outlook were dice with six faces, Hansen wrote, the period between 1950 and 1979 would have had two faces representing hot years, two for normal years and two representing cold years.

By the 1990s, he anticipates, the dice will be "loaded," with three or four faces coming up hot.

That means the chances of any particular summer being hotter than normal would top 50 percent, compared with the 33 percent chance in the past.

Such a change would be large enough to affect the quality of life, Hansen and his co-authors reported.

For example, he noted that over the past 30 years, Omaha, Neb., experienced a run of five or more consecutive days with a high temperature of 95 degrees or more on an average of three times every 10 years. The climate model predicts this would increase to five times every 10 years in the 1990s and seven times in 10 years by 2020.

Such an increase in the number of runs of hot weather can damage corn and other crops, Hansen warned, and can also affect forests, water supplies, animals and people.

Ban on new heavy industries, plants in Los Angeles area called symbolic

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A federally ordered building ban on major new Southern California polluters is largely symbolic because the region has no plans for heavy industries, fuel refineries or power generating plants, officials say.

The Environmental Protection Agency on Monday announced plans to ban construction of industry emitting more than 100 tons of carbon monoxide or ozone pollutants a year as a congressional moratorium on such sanctions expires.

The ban could be extended to more than a dozen other U.S. locations, including Denver and suburban Chicago.

The Los Angeles Basin comes under the sanctions slated to take effect at midnight because the air pollution control plan submitted to the agency was rejected.

The order came as no surprise to James M. Lents, executive officer of the South Coast Air Quality Management District, who said it would do nothing to reduce smog in the nation's largest and most populous urban area.

A lawsuit by environmentalists resulted in a January federal court order requiring the EPA to reject the Los Angeles plan because it failed to bring regional air quality into compliance with a 10-year deadline set by the 1977 Clean Air Act, Lents said.

"We've known for some time that if Congress didn't act, the construction ban would go into effect," said Lents, who oversees smog eradication efforts in Los Angeles, Orange, San Bernardino and Riverside counties.

But he said the EPA ban only affects heavy sources of pollution such as oil refineries, power plants or automotive factories. No such plants are planned for the region, Lents said.

"Based on the permit applications we've received this year and last, the ban will have absolutely no effect on smog abatement in the short run," Lents said, adding that it will take at least 20 years to clear Southern California smog to acceptable levels.

"There will be some psychological impact, certainly," Lents said.

He said he hoped the EPA move would spur Congress to revise the Clean Air Act and allow cities more time to clear smog.

"A complete solution calls for federal action," he said. "Congress needs something to motivate them, but I'm afraid this won't be enough."

Mayor Tom Bradley hailed the ban as a signal that the federal government cares about reducing air pollution, even though the effects may be insignificant.

"While it will not have a major impact on the Southern California economy," Bradley said, "the construction ban on major stationary pollution sources re-emphasizes the difficult air quality challenge facing cities and counties of this area."

The EPA's announcement followed a weekend "Air Pollution Summit" at City Hall organized by the Coalition for Clean Air and Campaign California, which were brought together by Assemblyman Tom Hayden.

Among other proposals, speakers called for tight controls on urban growth.

"Los Angeles has intolerable levels of air pollution," Hayden said. "I'm told current smog levels will expose everybody in the basin to toxic pollution 200 to 300 percent above acceptable health standards."

Los Angeles was one of about 100 metropolitan areas that the EPA said missed December's deadline to contain smog at acceptable levels. Because of its weather and terrain, Los Angeles has by far the nation's highest ozone concentrations.

Lents said his agency will present a draft of a new 20-year smog reduction plan that would go to the EPA for approval.

Before the end of the year, the EPA expects to adopt a policy requiring areas not meeting pollution standards to demonstrate steady progress, with a goal of an average 3 percent reduction in pollution concentrations annually.

When it adopts that policy, the agency will decide whether to impose construction bans at Denver, Reno, Nev.; Bakersfield, Sacramento and Fresno, Calif.; East St. Louis, Ill., the Indiana suburbs of Louisville, Ky.; Cleveland, Atlanta and Dallas.

Decisions on similar construction bans are pending for Ventura County, and for the Indiana and Illinois suburbs of Chicago.

U.S. aircraft carrier hits anchored coal ship

NORFOLK, Va. (AP) — The aircraft carrier Dwight D. Eisenhower banged into an anchored Spanish coal ship at the entrance to Hampton Roads harbor Monday on its return home from six months in the Mediterranean, the Navy said.

No injuries were reported among the 3,200 sailors aboard the nuclear-powered carrier or aboard the 893-foot Urduliz.

"There was no fire, flooding or fuel spill aboard the ship. That's the good news," said Lt. Cmdr. Michael W. John, a spokesman for the Atlantic Fleet Naval Air Force. "About 100 feet of the starboard of the ship was damaged, about amidship under the island."

The island is the part of the ship's superstructure that rises three stories above the flight deck on the starboard side.

John described the damage as scrapes and dents.

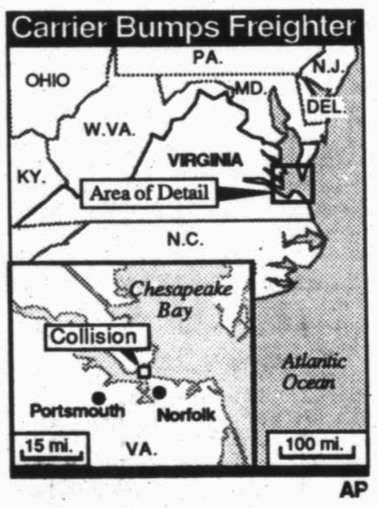

The incident occurred within sight of the Norfolk Naval Station.

Tom Carpenter, a former Navy helicopter crewman, was watching the Eisenhower from his sixth floor window of the Hotel Chamberlin, which overlooks the anchorage.

"I was watching the ship through binoculars and it seemed to get closer and closer to the freighter that was riding on its moorage. It look like the wind blew the Ike into the freighter. There was a cloud of debris when they struck," he said.

Carpenter, from Silver Spring, Md., and his wife, Patricia, watched as the ships hung together for three to five minutes, before the carrier appeared to pull away under its own power.

"When they hit, the sailors were about to man their stations on the rails. You could see lifeboats and other gear being scraped off. They waved off two helicopters that were about to land on the deck," he said.

AP

The Urduliz's forecastle was damaged when the Eisenhower's overhanging flight deck apparently struck the vessel well above the waterline, said Capt. L.D. Amory of the Virginia Pilots Association. The ship, homeported in Bilboa, Spain, was to take on 110,000 tons of coal at the Norfolk coal piers.

David Host, a spokesman for the ship's agent, T. Parker Host, said an inspection team boarded the ship. If seaworthy, the Urduliz was expected to return to Spain for repairs.

John said the Navy started an investigation into the incident. The ship is commanded by Capt. Gary Beck of Dearborn, Mich.

The Eisenhower was in the Mediterrean along with 17 other ships and 13,000 sailor and Marines in its carrier-battle group.

Food donators arrested

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Police in riot gear arrested 29 people on Monday as they tried to give food to the homeless in Golden Gate Park.

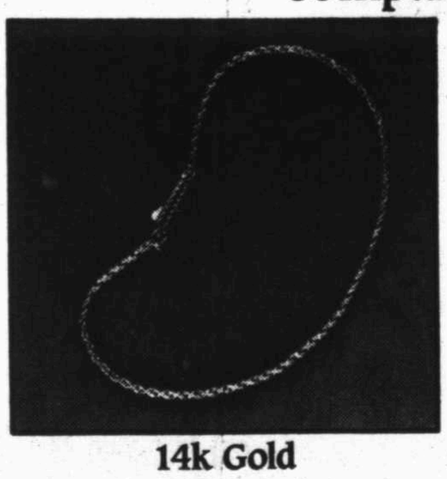

The arrests were made after about 100 members of the group called "Food Not Bombs" marched through the Haight-Ashbury district to the park and set up tables with plates of beans and melons just before noon.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Things begin to turn around for you in many areas of your life. Concentrate on building your financial reserves and developing new sources of funds. Working to the point of exhaustion is counterproductive, impairing your ability to accomplish certain goals. Use common sense to stay at the top of your field and in the best possible physical shape. Your self-confidence grows when you receive wider public recognition.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: playwright William Saroyan, actor James Coburn, violinist Itzhak Perlman, baseball great Frank Robinson.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Set the style for others in the workplace. Your leadership skills could be tested, but you will emerge from a struggle in a stronger position. Wield power deftly. Work on a family matter.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You love order but find it difficult to get others to cooperate. Your ability to bounce back quickly from a disappointment wins you converts. An unusual job opportunity surfaces. Review your options.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Deal with paperwork first and then focus on whatever else you have on your plate today. Your good sense will help you handle a personal problem with style. Keep your head held high.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You are on a roll now. Good things begin to happen! You could be a witness to a confrontation. Try to keep your distance from an office struggle. Avoid lending money.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Try not to make waves. Overbearing ways are a turn-off. Handle routine responsibilities well and you will climb the career ladder in a hurry. Pursue romance with a childhood sweetheart.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): A raise or promotion could be right around the corner. Stay alert to new career opportunities. Foster greater understanding between business partners and you could be the beneficiary of their success.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): If others seem indifferent, do not take it personally. Be consistently kind and a close relationship will get better. Devise a financial plan and stick to it. Build savings with regular deposits.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Variety and change are what you need. Wind up a business deal or class assignment and head for the water or mountains. You can be a trend-setter and make extra cash simultaneously.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): A brilliant idea comes in over the transom. Act fast! Take mate into your confidence. In a real relationship you can share bad news as well as glad tidings. Honor your commitments.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Get your priorities straight. Show appreciation for those who have your best interests at heart. Do not waste time on people who agree with you to your face but bad-mouth you behind your back.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Forget your position and do whatever is necessary to get the job done. Shore up credit accounts. Revise menus if your waist is starting to bulge. Show respect by listening to parents.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Your success today depends on being very correct and business-like. Pick up the telephone and cut back on travel to make the bottom line more impressive. Postpone signing legal papers until next week.

West led the king of hearts, and declarer congratulated himself on having avoided the possibly lethal club lead. His first task was to try to prevent the defenders from shifting to a club before he had the heart suit established, so he took care to play low from dummy on the first trick while dropping the eight of hearts from hand. Not surprisingly, West elected to continue with the queen of hearts (A low heart would have been no better.) Declarer took dummy's ace and persevered with the nine to force out West's last stopper.

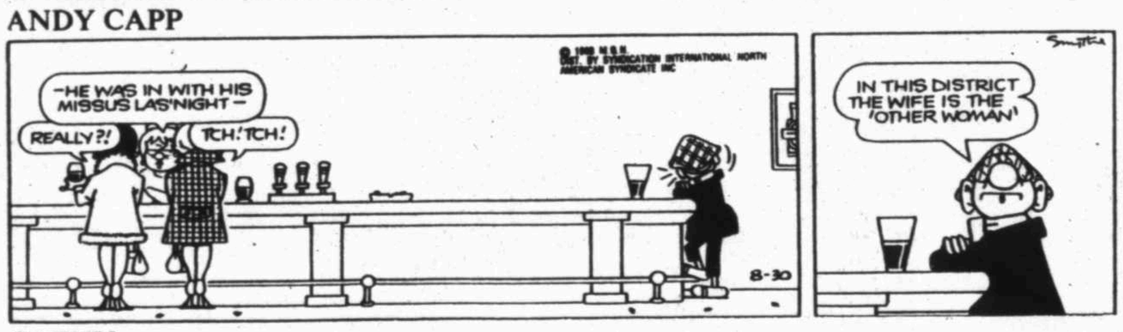

In with the jack of hearts, West found the excellent switch to the ten of clubs, but declarer now had three chances for his contract. First, he put up the queen of clubs from dummy, then captured East's king with the ace. When the possibility that West had the king of clubs did not materialize, declarer tried three rounds of diamonds, ending in hand. Because of the 4-2 split, that too failed to produce the ninth trick. Fortunately, the spade finesse worked, and declarer scored two tricks in that suit, three in each red suit and the ace of clubs—nine tricks in all.

Jessica Hahn's 'radio days' could be numbered, local media critic says

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — Church secretary-turned-topless-model Jessica Hahn's debut as a radio personality Monday was praised by her boss, but a newspaper's media critic called it a "bust."

Jessica Hahn

Jay Stevens, KOY-FM program director, said listener response to Ms. Hahn was all positive.

But Bud Wilkinson, radio-television critic for The Arizona Republic, writing for today's editions, said that Ms. Hahn's presence brought down the momentum and mirth of the entire "Y-95 Morning Zoo," as the radio station's morning show is known.

The station announced last week that Ms. Hahn, 29, had been signed to a 30-day contract with options for renewal.

Ms. Hahn became an overnight celebrity in 1987 when revelations about her sexual liaison with evangelist Jim Bakker led to his giving up his PTL religious television network.

The former $80-dollar-a-week church secretary from West Babylon, N.Y., sold her story to Playboy magazine, posed topless for the publication's November 1987 issue and moved into the Playboy Mansion in Los Angeles.

She appeared in Playboy a second time in the magazine's September issue in semi-nude photographs showing off her recent cosmetic surgery.

Although Stevens denied hiring Ms. Hahn as a publicity stunt and said that both she and the station "want to make this a long-term agreement," Wilkinson advised her not to unpack her bags.

"What she needs are a few nips and tucks in the area of spontaneity," Wilkinson said, adding that "as an air talent, Hahn isn't a sleeper, a wit awaiting harvest, but rather a bust."

Stevens, however, said listeners reacted positively to the Ms. Hahn.

"Believe it or not we didn't get any negative calls at all," he said. "The people in Phoenix were happy to have her here. Some (of the callers) welcomed her to Phoenix, and some offered dates."

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Fred MacMurray will be surrounded by the women of his life at a small gathering to celebrate his 80th birthday today.

On hand will be his wife of 34 years, former actress June Haver, the couple's twin 32-year-old daughters, Kate and Laurie, and his two dogs, also females.

MacMurray

"He's the father of 'My Three Sons' but he's surrounded by females," his wife said Monday during a telephone interview. MacMurray, who is recovering from a stroke, was asleep and couldn't come to the phone, she said.

MacMurray has been encouraged by an outpouring of get-well cards, letters and flowers, she said.

"If life begins at 40, he's only 40," she said. "He's very happy to be 80 years old. Many of his friends are older, you know. He looks at George Burns (92) and Bob Hope (85) and he says, 'Gee, I feel like a kid.' "

DENVER (AP) — Comedian Pat Paulsen and his agent, Linda D. Chaney, were secretly married during the Democratic National Convention in Atlanta, his spokeswoman said.

Paulsen, 61, and Chaney, 35, exchanged vows in a July 20 civil ceremony at Fulton County Courthouse, spokeswoman Marianne Jasin said Monday.

The Paulsens, in Atlanta for the convention, wanted to keep the ceremony a secret at the time, but "about a month later, they thought they should release the news," Jasin said.

The couple met five years ago at a comedy club here. Three years later, she took over his bookings.

In September, Paulsen, the perennial presidential candidate, is scheduled to begin work on the CBS television show "The Smothers Brothers Comedy Hour," Jasin said.

The marriage is the second for Paulsen and the first for his new wife. Paulsen has three grown children.

NEW YORK (AP) — Have you heard the one about the wisecracking political prankster who switched to stand-up comedy? No one could tell the difference.

Erstwhile Yippie Abbie Hoffman, fresh from a reunion of demonstrators from the 1968 Democratic convention in Chicago, made his New York comedy debut Monday night at an Upper West Side club.

Hoffman, whose humor and courtroom antics got national attention during the Chicago 7 trial, spent more than an hour needling "Actor in Chief" Ronald Reagan and the Republicans, and reminiscing.

Predictably, vice-presidential candidate Dan Quayle came in for a few jabs: "looks like a hawk, runs like a chicken."

Hoffman, 51, wore a blue sweater with white stars and red stripes — reminding the audience of his arrest for wearing similar garb in the '60s — then stripped to a "Just Say No" T-shirt.

In addition to politics and protest, Hoffman's topics of choice were drugs, sex and religion. Straightforward jokes were rare, and rambling stories and observations the norm.

As one of the 150 or so who paid $13.50 for the show at Stand Up NY said, "Jay Leno doesn't have to worry." Hoffman had performed his comedy act in California and Ohio before coming to New York.

During a question-and-answer session, he was asked why he took up comedy. He replied that his talks on college campuses always got laughs and "it wasn't hard to pull out all the elements of humor from the talk."

Hoffman, who lives in Pennsylvania, spoke of his three children — "not a yuppie in the litter" — and proudly recounted how his 16-year-old son was thrown out of class for telling his teacher that if America "is a melting pot, then the Indians must have been boiled alive."

SEEKONK, Mass. (AP) — Superman may leap tall buildings but John Wooten, who bills himself the world's strongest man, moves them.

Wooten, 40, pulled a 14-ton mobile home atop a flatbed truck about 100 yards across the Rhode Island-Massachusetts border.

Monday's feat took about a minute.

When it was done, a red-faced Wooten said: "It was a little easier than I thought. I think I could have almost gone for two houses."

Wooten, 6-foot-1 and 274 pounds, said he considers himself to be one of the last old-time strong men, the type who "uses entertainment to show his strength."

Trade differences Begin to intensify

Two recent developments have sharpened the differences over trade practices between Japan and the rest of the world, particularly Western Europe and the United States. The charges of unfair and illegal tactics on both sides have intensified, and Japan is now openly threatening the Europeans.

For three years, the European Economic Community has hiked its import duties each time it suspected the Japanese were dumping products at low prices in a bid to take over a larger share of their markets. Tokyo has maintained a discreet silence because it knew the charges were true.

The Japanese have consistently invented new ways to get around European barriers, as they have done here. This has included setting up their own plants in Europe.

Tokyo has threatened to go to GATT, the watchdog of international trade rules, about the most recent European tactics. Europe shrugged. It takes years to obtain a GATT ruling.

Now, without indicating its plans, Tokyo accuses Europe of anti-Japanese warfare and declares it will retaliate. The Europeans, meantime, merrily continue to up their import duties.

Japanese banks and insurance companies have begun to assume almost as much power as the Ministry of Trade. But just how the three may squeeze Europe is anyone's guess.

Meantime, Tokyo is protesting the new U.S. trade law, especially added congressional attempts to curb unfair practices.

Despite Japan's efforts to limit foreign goods, especially its stonewalling distribution system, imports from Europe grew by 31 percent last July. U.S. imports climbed by some 21 percent.

The United States and Europe are putting numerous pressures on Japan to liberalize its formal regulations and other restrictions on foreign goods. Japan has consistently stalled on opening up its home markets.

Tokyo is firing off a broadside of threats while stepping up its campaign that other nations are engaged in "Japan-bashing" – a phrase reminiscent of Japan's pre-World War II attacks on political foes.

The Japanese are entering a dangerous period in which they must accomodate a more even trade balance in terms of global economic stability. Veiled threats and sharp rhetoric are not the answer. They cannot win a trade war with the United States and Europe, and should know that from history. If they have not, then perhaps Tokyo may be taught another lesson.

Mortgage borrower victim of progress

WASHINGTON — If you have a home mortgage, you probably think that you know which bank pulls the strings. Chances are, you're wrong.

Jack Anderson

A growing number of consumers are startled to learn that the mortgages they got from their friendly local banks have been scattered across the country for servicing. A faceless banker in a nameless metropolis is calling the shots on the money you borrowed from your hometown lender.

Mortgage servicing includes collecting payments, assessing penalties, adjusting interest rates (if it is an adjustable-rate mortgage) and other details. It is likely that the bank where you got your mortgage has farmed your account out to another institution to service it. The Mortgage Bankers' Association recently estimated that 78 percent of its members do not service loans at all. Many banks have the resources to originate more loans than they can service. They lend you the money, then turn the mortgage over for someone else to take care of the ongoing details. The institution that takes over the servicing gets a percentage of the payments.

There is a difference between transferring the servicing and transferring the mortgage itself. The banking industry's ability to pool mortgages and sell them into a secondary market has meant lower interest rates and a bigger pot of money. But the practice of transferring servicing is almost always a losing proposition for the borrower.

The way mortgage servicing is whisked around the country belies the reason that many customers are attracted to particular banks in the first place — personalized service. Some not only offer good interest rates but enjoy reputations for courtesy, friendship and even compassion. Personal attention is the hallmark of the community bank.

If a plant closing throws people out of work and a long-time borrower can't meet a mortgage payment, the community bank often shows some patience. But if a meat-packing plant shuts down in Colorado, it is unlikely that bankers in Manhattan will shed empathic tears.

Welcome to the future, where banking promises to be less personal and less local. Financial forces told our associates, Michael Binstein, that since Congress bowed to the bankers' demands for fewer rules and wider latitude, banks have undergone dramatic changes. Now, the mortgage borrower may be the victim of progress.

According to Rep. John J. LaFalce, D-N.Y., fraud is a growing threat. The door is wide open for an unscrupulous servicing agent or an outside con artist to capitalize on the confusion of the borrower. And when consumers don't receive adequate notice that their mortgage has been transferred, they may send payments to the wrong place and end up being charged a late fee. In extreme cases, foreclosures have resulted.

Frustrated borrowers complain that their questions go unanswered, their payments go up without an adequate explanation and their insurance terms change when the new servicing institution isn't able to service the loan on the same terms as the bank that originally loaned the money.

LaFalce has introduced a mini bill of rights for consumers. It would require lenders to warn borrowers about what is likely to happen to their loan. That warning would have to be given at the time of the mortgage application. Banks also would be required to notify borrowers of any transfers.

So far, bankers have only been willing to support a disclosure requirement under which borrowers would be notified at the time of a transfer. Critics say that is a meaningless gesture because the borrower won't have the information needed to make an informed choice when shopping around for a mortgage.

The banking lobby, which has come to like the sound of deregulation, won't let LaFalce's bill become law without a fight.

Quayle's record reveals 'Easy Rider'

The real character of Dan Quayle is slowly vanishing under the controversy about the National Guard. The business about the Guard is just a small element in what has been a pattern of easy riding: the mediocre college record; the help from the family retainer in getting into the Guard; the use of a little family influence in getting himself into law school when his grades wouldn't; the use of another family employee in securing a job in the Indiana attorney general's office. If all those things were the prelude to a distinguished subsequent career, they would be small potatoes. But they are not.

George Bush defends his running mate by saying that he didn't go to Canada and didn't burn his draft card. He declares that the Guard is an honorable service, which it surely is. But Dan Quayle claimed, then as now, to be a superhawk and a superpatriot. In joining the Guard at a time when everyone knew it was an almost certain way to avoid service in Vietnam, he raised serious questions about who he thought was supposed to make the sacrifices that he, and a strong supporter of that war, demanded of people whose fathers didn't have former National Guard commanders to open doors for them.

Worse, in declaring now that he just wanted to go to law school and raise a family — that he didn't know then that he would be running for vice president today — he shows he still doesn't understand the moral questions that troubled so many in his generation of the ambiguity of his own actions.

Quayle says there were many discussions in his fraternity house about the war and, no doubt, about the most honorable choice in a situation where millions agonized about such choices. For Quayle, however, there was no such agony. That's no scandal. But it says something about the man.

Bush recently compared Quayle to the young John Kennedy, another man of privilege who ran for high office. But Kennedy was a genuine war hero, a man who had risked his life to save shipmates and who, even at the age of 43, knew a great deal about adversity and tragedy. For Kennedy, as indeed for George Bush himself, affluence bestowed as many obligations as it did privileges. For all the family wealth, Bush wanted to prove himself by going to Texas after World War II and starting at the bottom in the oil business.

There is no evidence of that in Dan Quayle's career. On the contrary, his statements of the past week suggest that little has deepened him in the intervening 20 years. His record in Congress, with perhaps one exception, is undistinguished. He has no record as an executive, except in a sinecure in his father's business. What then commends him to be the man who, but for the accidents of health, could be president of the United States at this time next year? It is not Quayle's fault that Bush thinks he's qualified for that office, and it's that decision which is the real embarrassment here And it's that, not the National Guard, which is the real issue.

Dukakis campaign as close as telephone

WASHINGTON — Does it bother you when a stranger calls up to make a telephone pitch for a product, charity or political campaign?

"Telemarketing" — the computer-dialing of your telephone in a new form of junk-mail solicitation — is the name for this new invasion of privacy.

William Safire

Such telephone pollution does not trouble the State of Massachusetts.

In 1985, Michael Dukakis' handpicked chairman of the Massachusetts Community Development Finance Corp., John Marston, approved a $50,000 state loan guarantee to Share Systems Inc., of Cambridge, which Marston proudly tells me "the company was able to use to induce a local bank to give them a $125,000 line of credit."

Success followed. Dukakis can point with pride to this example of government helping entrepreneurs create jobs — especially since this new telemarketing facility (100 operators pitching telephonic targets on a good day, according to company treasurer Gerald Jeffkin) counts among its clients the Dukakis political campaign.

The use of state credit to set up a large boiler-room telephone operation, which is then hired to advance the career of the state governor, may be standard procedure in Boston politics. A request for information about fee billing and amounts raised has been submitted to the Dukakis campaign and may turn up no more than mutual backscratching.

But what could be my Pecksniffian interest in a coziness in the financing of potentially helpful businesses has led to a clear look at "the old Dukakis" in defense and foreign affairs.

Another of Share Systems' clients is the "Jobs with Peace Campaign," which describes itself as a coalition of "low-income, Third World, labor, tenants, anti-intervention, disarmament, and civil rights groups," proposing in its literature "to cut military spending by 25 percent and transfer those funds into the domestic economy."

Listed on the advisory board in a 1987 fund solicitation letter is the usual anti-defense crowd: Jesse Jackson, Reps. Ron Dellums and Pat Schroeder, George McGovern, labor leader William Winpisinger and a dozen other doves. And Gov. Michael Dukakis.

Big deal, you say, a politician regularly joins committees; it doesn't necessarily mean that he supports their goals. Let's see:

On April 16, 1983, in Boston's Faneuil Hall, Dukakis was the lead witness in a mock hearing launching "Jobs with Peace Week," hailing the organization's "common-sense national alternative to the Reagan administration's excessive arms buildup" and charging that President Reagan's policies "are leading us down the road to economic ruin and wider confrontation."

On Nov. 4, 1985 — not three years ago — Dukakis was asked in writing by Carol Doherty, co-chair of Jobs with Peace, to serve on the advisory board. As every politician knows, that meant his name could be used on the letterhead for a solicitation. (Only the most modern polls know how such a letter can be coordinated with "telemarketing.")

The person responsible for confirming his agreement to serve before putting the Dukakis name on the pitch letter is presently on the Island of Bali on her honeymoon — if I were her, I wouldn't return calls either — but the Dukakis press office confirms that the governor is today on the advisory board of the outfit that bewails our "militarized state" and "war economy."

We don't hear the New Dukakis speaking quite that way on the stump, or warning of "wider confrontation" today, especially in light of the success of Reagan policies in bringing about an arms treaty.

But Dukakis cannot cleanly disassociate himself from the dovish far left — the Jackson left — on defense and foreign policy because that is where he comes from. Those activists are his base, their far-out proposals his recent beliefs, their mindset his own. He can fudge his positions to suit prevailing polls, but he cannot honorably rip up his roots.

He cannot reject the Jobs with Peace rhetoric offering a choice "between building the MX missile and improving education, between supporting the Contras and constructing low-income housing," but he is faced with the need to reach rightward. That is why the New Dukakis tosses in expensive conventional arms and maybe a different mobile missile.

His far-left supporters know this moderate pose is only a sop to Cerberus, and smile at the campaign-time conversion. I think they know their fellow dove; in victory, the "old" Dukakis would reemerge, government and politically aided business would work hand in glove, and all our telephones would start ringing off the hook.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Tuesday, Aug. 30, the 243rd day of 1988. There are 123 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

Five years ago, on Aug. 30, 1983, Guion S. Bluford Jr. became the first black American astronaut to travel in space, flying aboard the shuttle Challenger. In another first, Bluford and four colleagues blasted off from Cape Canaveral, Fla., at night.

On this date:

In A.D. 30 (on Aug. 30, by some estimates), the seventh and most famous queen of ancient Egypt known by the name Cleopatra committed suicide.

In 1797, the creator of "Frankenstein," Mary Wollstonecraft Shelley, was born in London.

In 1862, Union forces were defeated by the Confederates at the Second Battle of Bull Run.

In 1893, Louisiana politician Huey P. Long was born in Winn Parish.

In 1905, Ty Cobb made his major league batting debut, playing for the Detroit Tigers.

In 1941, the siege of Leningrad by Nazi troops began during World War II.

In 1945, Gen. Douglas MacArthur arrived in Japan at the end of World War II, and set up Allied occupation headquarters.

In 1963, the Hot Line communications link between Washington and Moscow went into operation.

In 1967, the U.S. Senate confirmed the appointment of Thurgood Marshall as the first black justice on the Supreme Court.

In 1981, the President of Iran, Mohammad Ali Rajai, and Prime Minister Hojatoleslam Mohammad Javad Bahonar were killed by a powerful bomb that exploded in Bahonar's office in Tehran.

In 1984, the space shuttle Discovery finally blasted off on its maiden voyage following three postponements over two months.

In 1986, Soviet authorities arrested Nicholas Daniloff, the Moscow correspondent for "U.S. News and World Report," after he was handed a package by a Russian acquaintance.

Thought for today: "We grew up founding our dreams on the infinite promise of American advertising." — Zelda Sayre Fitzgerald, American writer (1900-1948).

EVANS & NOVAK

Turning point finally reached for Quayle

ST. LOUIS — Sen. Dan Quayle has emerged from his ordeal not only unbowed by draft-dodging charges but convinced, as he told us, that "in the long run this is going to be a plus" for George Bush's presidential campaign.

Rowland Evans and Robert Novak

Judging from his reception by a National Guard convention here Wednesday evening, Bush's 41-year-old running mate may be onto something. Following two well-received appearances in Cincinnati and Lexington, before bipartisan audiences of state legislators and lobbyists, Quayle here got what his campaign desperately needs: rebel yells and standing ovations from 1,500 National Guard veterans. Each has a personal stake in trashing the charge that Quayle exploited their beloved Guard to duck Vietnam.

That suggests Quayle may be correctly gauging a terminal point in the nine-day assault. With time running out, he now believes he will emerge strengthened — not just a survivor but a winner whose sudden and costly notoriety can be backlashed into sympathetic fame.

"Look at it this way," a Kentucky lobbyist told us after Quayle's speech in Lexington. "The press has given him a billion dollars' worth of free publicity."

If there is a backlash, Quayle will be writing a new end in the tricky rule book on picking vice presidential running mates. Sen. Tom Eagleton was yanked off the 1972 Democratic ticket; Sen. Bob Dole's attack strategy was blamed, however wrongly, for President Ford's 1976 loss; Walter Mondale's 1984 campaign was corrupted by financial charges against Geraldine Ferraro.

Quayle, plucked by Bush from nowhere for his Baby Boomer youth and his defense expertise, anticipates a different result. If he can do across the nation what he did here with the National Guard — become beneficiary of an explosive and angry backlash mainly centered on the press — he may write that new chapter.

Quayle told us he was neither bitter about nor resentful over his handling by the media. "This is part of our political system," he said, sitting with his wife in the presidential suite of the Clarion Hotel at the tail end of a campaign day that started at 6 a.m. "These are legitimate questions about why I joined the National Guard and of course that had to be scrutinized."

Now, he claimed to us, the relevant questions have been answered. Consequently, he said, the media's "frenzy" will end about his ethics and morality in signing up with the Guard six days before he would become eligible for the draft in May of 1969.

But there is another problem with Quayle's campaign that, although embellished by the clamor over his military record, is distinct from it: whether his 12 uneventful years in Congress are worthy of placing him a heartbeat from the presidency. Thus, his speech to the National Guard displayed his experience and weightiness in national security affairs. It was a political test-drive, a demo, that came off without a hitch.

Quayle's target was Gov. Michael Dukakis, whom he pilloried for espousing "a litany of retreats." His biggest applause line came when he charged that Dukakis has refused to permit any Massachusetts-based equipment for the Ground Wave Emergency Network (GWEN), a communications system to keep the Air Force operating after a nuclear attack against the U.S.

Quayle's first campaign trip was fortified by political aides under command of Stu Spencer, the trusted, longtime Reagan insider, and including Reagan speechwriter Ken Kachigian and issues strategist Jim Cicconi, a confidant of campaign chairman James A. Baker III. Cicconi is on leave from Democratic wiseman Robert Strauss' law firm.

With the election 10 weeks from Tuesday, the lost time generated by Vice President Bush's very late choice of Quayle has been costly. Quayle himself had not one day to prepare for his new role before his damaging first press conference in New Orleans. Since then, his campaign preparation schedule, which includes reading new biographies about both Bush and Dukakis, was savaged by the ethics-and-morality crisis.

Bush has also suffered. Quayle's picture, not Bush's, is on Newsweek's cover and dominates Time's cover this week. Bush's sunrise as his own political master, ringingly affirmed in his acceptance speech, has lost its glow in Danny Quayle's misfortunes.

Quayle is on the ticket to celebrate the future, but if in this moment of the present a corner has at last been turned it is not too soon.

National Guard to fight wildfires; California town saved

Associated Press

Governors in Idaho and Wyoming called in National Guardsmen today to bolster weary firefighters battling dozens of wildfires, while a remote California town mopped up after lightning-sparked blazes swept within feet of the community.

Favorable weather conditions Monday helped firefighters keep blazes from gaining much ground in Wyoming, Montana, Idaho, Oregon, Washington and Utah. But the wildfires were far from out. And dozens of fires that have been allowed to burn for months in the vast interior of Alaska, largely in scrubland, have charred more than 1.2 million acres.

A fire flare-up prevented Yellowstone National Park officials from reopening the park's south entrance today and they braced for possible stronger wind that could whip up the fires. Firefighters in Montana hoped to get the upper hand on fires that have blackened almost 200,000 acres.

In Idaho, Gov. Cecil Andrus placed the entire state under an extreme fire emergency, releasing National Guardsmen to reinforce 2,000 firefighters battling the worst wildfires.

But officials feared a weather front expected today would bring gusts that would push the flames past fire lines.

Among the priorities was the 16,000-acre Battle Axe fire on the Middle Fork of the Salmon River in the Frank Church-River of No Return Wilderness. It jumped the river to threaten a score of summer homes, and an unoccupied forest ranger station and airstrip at Indian Creek.

In California, firefighters late Monday kept fast-moving fires from reaching a hospital, school and other buildings in remote Portola.

There were no injuries in the town of 1,600 residents, and the only building lost was a barn, as a fire shooting flames 150 feet high was halted at the eastern edge of the Sierra town.

Officials said an afternoon storm sparked about 20 fires around the community, about 45 miles northwest of Reno, Nev. Most of the fires continued burning today, blackening 1,200 acres.

One lightning strike started a fire behind Portola High School just a few minutes before classes were dismissed.

"When we walked out onto the field for (football) practice, it was just smoking," said Mike Muscatt, 15, adding that within a few minutes, "the flames were 80 feet high."

In Alaska, where some fires have been burning since April, the biggest blaze had covered more than 541,000 acres 50 miles north of Fairbanks. But the fires do not threaten any developed property or valuable timber, and a special interagency office handing fire information for the state has been disbanded for the season.

In Wyoming, firefighters in Yellowstone regained ground against one of the tougher fires roaring in the park, sealing off Old Faithful geyser from flames five miles away.

Continued calm winds allowed thousands of firefighters to make further inroads in their battle against 10 major fires, which have charred 450,000 acres of the park's 2.2 million acres.

That calm weather had prompted a decision to reopen Yellowstone's south entrance for the first time in 10 days, but park spokeswoman Amy Vanderbilt said fire activity put the area back in danger. She would not make a new prediction as to when the road, which has been closed for 10 days, would reopen.

Wyoming Gov. Mike Sullivan called out 120 Army and Air National Guard volunteers Monday to aid in the battle against a 15,000-acre blaze near Fayette Lake in the Bridger-Teton National Forest outside Yellowstone. The guardsmen were to go to Jackson for 32 hours of training, and the majority would then be sent to that blaze.

In Montana, one major fire was brought under control Monday, but others burned on more than 187,000 acres.

The 37,600-acre Warm Springs Creek fire, which destroyed 13 homes and cabins near Helena, was declared controlled after three weeks, and most of the 2,500 firefighters were released, said George Bukenhofer, fire information officer.

Costs of fighting the blaze are expected to reach $10 million.

Forest Service 'looking for a few good firemen'

BOISE, Idaho (AP) — As forest fires spread through the West, the U.S. Forest Service is spreading the word: Help!

The Forest Service has put out a call for temporary firefighters to battle the hundreds of blazes scorching the West's timberlands.

But the emergency help must endure backbreaking labor, smoke and flame. And only local people need apply.

The Boise Interagency Fire Center has notified Forest Service regions affected by the dozens of out of control fires that temporary firefighters may be hired on a contingency basis, said Mike Ferris, information officer for the center that coordinates fire suppression in the West.

The temporary "emergency firefighting hires," or "casuals," must have the physical and mental capacity to work on the fire lines, including long days of shoveling and chopping on steep hillsides very near burning timber, Ferris said.

"The job carries with it a lot of drama and romance," Ferris said. "But somedays you've got to ask yourself, 'Why am I doing this?'"

"What we're doing is only hiring from the local community," he said. "I've had people calling from all over the country, and some wanting to volunteer. I've had people wanting to take their vacation and work, if you can believe that."

Ferris said those interested should contact their local national forest office, not the Boise center and not the Forest Service in Washington, D.C.

Applicants will undergo an aerobic stress test, which measures the ability of the heart to recover from exertion.

While some fire officials have set the total number of temporary workers needed at 4,000, Ferris said each national forest must determine its requirements and the cost of employing those extra people.

"We're making assessments about our needs in the situation. We're not saying we're going to hire 4,000 or 8,000," he said.

The emergency labor is a unique situation in a unique fire year.

Late last week, the fire center estimated that 66,000 fires had scorched more than 3.3 million acres, mostly in Alaska.

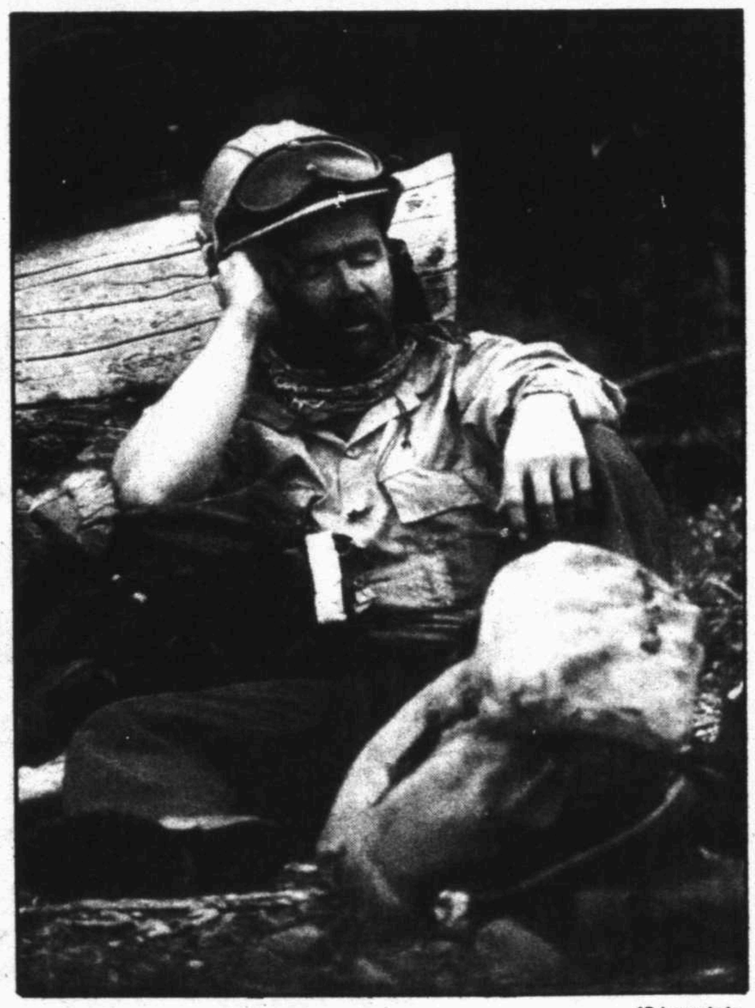

There are 547 20-member crews, or 10,940 regular firefighters, battling the West's fires, Ferris said.

Nearly 1,600 water pumper trucks are manned by 15,213 people, or an average three crew members per vehicle. About 630 people are flying in helicopters for aerial observation or water drops. And 2,400 soldiers have been called to the lines, Ferris said.

That does not include the scores of people who have contracted to cut timber, cater meals at fire camps or bulldoze lines.

The Forest Service does not expect to have the "casuals" trained and fitted for fighting fires until Friday, Ferris said.

"We will not put them in a situation that is more than what they can bite and chew," he said.

Injuring people fire boss' biggest fear

YELLOWSTONE NATIONAL PARK, Wyo. (AP) — Thirty years of firefighting haven't steeled fire boss Dave "Ponce" Poncin against the worst fear a commander harbors while calling the shots against a fire.

"I think the biggest fear is killing someone, injuring people," Poncin said during a break from his command of the 85,000-acre North Fork fire that is eating through Yellowstone National Park's forests.

He especially dreads aircraft accidents.

"When a helicopter goes down, there are usually fatalities. When there aren't, you count your blessings."

But in eight years as a fire boss, the soft-spoken man who seems to have a minute for everyone has never realized his greatest fear. He knows, too, that he's been lucky.

Poncin called a helicopter crash earlier this month in the Bighorn National Forest, in which one firefighter died and three were injured, a "harbinger, or an alert," for his squad of tactical firefighters.

"It's not unexpected," he added.

"It just seems like there's more potential for accidents," Poncin said, especially considering the long weeks of firefighting; the beating the helicopters take; and the stress that the crews and the machines endure.

Relaxing in a lawn chair at his Madison Junction fire base, the 51-year-old Poncin looked back on his 30 years with the U.S. Forest Service and didn't mention a single regret. He also said he's learned how to live with, but not forget, his fears.

"It accumulates with you, and when you think back over the years, you think of the bad things," he said.

As a boy growing up in Cedar Rapids, Iowa, he looked up to his uncle in Montana and longed for the day when he could head west and join the Forest Service. Poncin got his chance out of high school, when he worked as a smoke jumper, parachuting into strategic hot spots, in northern Idaho to pay his way through college.

Now based in Idaho's Nez Perce National Forest, where he is an assistant to the forest supervisor, Poncin spends summers as the leader of 10 people who make up one of the nation's few forest fire overhead teams, who coordinate the firefighting of major forest fires.

From the beginning of May until the end of October he and his team live on two-hour standby, always knowing that wherever they are, they can immediately be summoned to a fire.

But Poncin wouldn't want it any other way.

"Firefighting is a lot like circuses," he said. "It gets in your blood. Part of it is the people (you work with). Part of it is the challenge of chasing and catching a big fire."

In Yellowstone during this unusually dry summer, Poncin has mostly been chasing.

He spent 14 days as commanding the forces for the "Snake Complex," a collection of three tricky fires that by Monday had charred 92,000 acres in Yellowstone.

Less than a week later, he was sent back to Yellowstone, this time to oversee the North Fork fire, which twice threatened the Old Faithful geyser complex, burned across the Madison River and through Norris.

Bush gears up with new combative style

NASHVILLE (AP) — The new "read-my-lips" George Bush was absent for a morning and the old moderate-voiced candidate was back with a speech style that many have labeled dull.

But by Monday afternoon the feisty, tough-talking Bush was in high gear, firing up a college crowd at Middle Tennesse State University in nearby Murfreesboro.

He railed against his Democratic presidential opponent, Michael Dukakis, accusing him of being weak on defense, soft on crime, in favor of new taxes and guilty of poor judgment and a "liberal bias."

Using an applause line that he has all but worn out since the Republican National Convention two weeks ago, he said that if Congress ever tried to insist that as president he raise taxes, he would say, "Read my lips — no new taxes."

When he went down to shake hands in the front of the outdoor rally of some 3,000 to 4,000, the crowd surged forward, hands reaching out excitedly.

"I thought that was good," Bush later told reporters when asked how he felt about the enthusiasm of his supporters.

The combative and buoyant George Bush has been delighting supporters in city after city since the New Orleans GOP convention, as he speaks with a confident voice that seems to have been waiting until after the convention to project itself.

His apparent ease with the new image stood in contrast with a Monday morning speech in which he slipped into his old low-key style addressing employees of a defense contracting plant near St. Louis.

While some of the new rhetoric was there, the tone was more measured, recalling a style that was prominent in the primary campaign.

Bush's chief of staff, Craig Fuller, said that was because Bush wanted to lay out substantive material on the differences between himself and Dukakis, mostly on defense.

"I think there will be times when he'll give more serious speeches, particularly when we move off of one set of issues into another," Fuller said.

But for now Bush is having a good run with the more feisty style, which, coupled with improved standings in the polls, has him in a relaxed, good mood.

Fuller said the campaign has not conducted polling yet to see how the new tough image is working, but "We've certainly noted a lot more enthusiasm in the crowds."

"Now that we're in this phase of the campaign it certainly helps to build up enthusiasm," he said.

Fuller said the campaign looked at the convention as "designed to be a break with the past and the convention was an opportunity to move from being Vice President George Bush to candidate George Bush."

And so Bush has turned up the heat meter on Dukakis, sharpening his rhetoric and raising his voice as he tells audiences it's important to show the "enormous differences" in their positions.

Furthermore, Bush told reporters on Monday morning, he doesn't intend to be "stampeded" into conforming to a debate schedule favored by Dukakis.

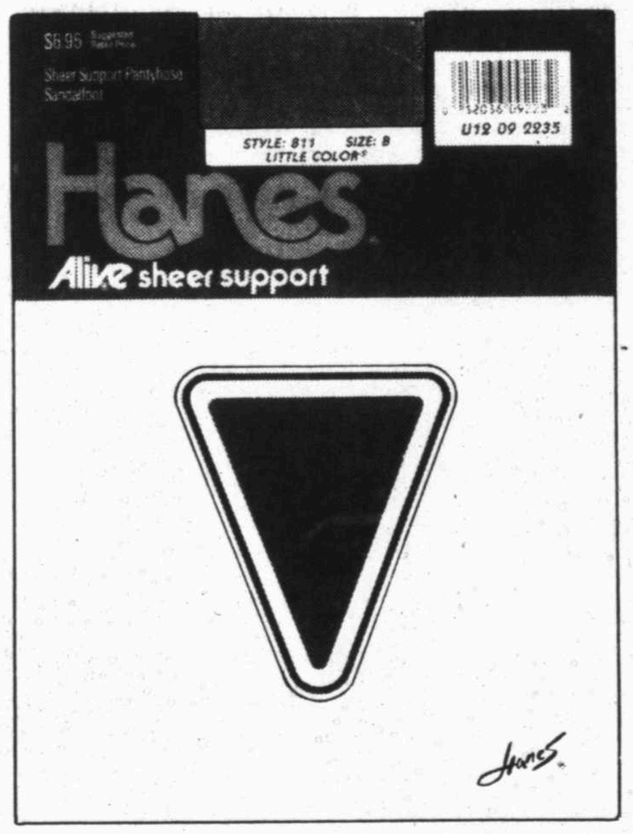

"I say, 'Explain your views on defense,'" he said. "The response is,'How about debates?' — totally irrelevant."

Bush's campaign chairman, James Baker, was meeting today with his counterpart in the Dukakis campaign, Paul Brountas, to discuss the debate matter. Bush headed to North Carolina for a one-day campaign trip.

Campaigning at a defense plant near St. Louis, Bush belittled Dukakis for his opposition to a number of weapons systems.

Bush said it didn't bother him a bit that he and running mate Dan Quayle differ on some policy issues and that the Indiana senator didn't know Bush headed a presidential panel on drug interdiction.

"We're so much in sync on broad issues, you don't expect everybody to be in agreement on every single 't' being crossed or 'i' being dotted," he said when asked about positions he espouses that Quayle voted against in Congress.

Reagan administration 'reluctant' to judge future of U.S. air shows

SANTA BARBARA, Calif. (AP) — The Reagan administration says it is "reluctant to pass judgment" on air shows, but a Democratic congressman today called for a review of U.S. policy in an attempt to make them safer.

The military views air shows as a potent recruiting tool.

White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater, briefing reporters Monday in Santa Barbara while President Reagan vacationed at his nearby ranch, said the United States was assisting in the investigation of Sunday's accident in Germany.

Forty-seven people were killed and hundreds injured when three Italian Air Force jets collided during a high-speed maneuver in the air above the U.S. Ramstein Air Force base. One of the planes fell into the crowd and exploded.

Fitzwater said Reagan was sending messages of condolence to the German people and others.

Rep. Norman Dicks, D-Wash, said he has written to Defense Secretary Frank Carlucci asking for a review of U.S. policy on air shows.

"I am concerned that we, if at all possible, avoid the kind of accident that occurred at Ramstein," Dicks said on ABC-TV's "Good Morning America."

Dicks said he had in the past invited U.S. military air shows to his state. He said he believes officials should consider requiring that spectators be moved back further from aerial demonstrations.

"I think we can make these shows safer," he said. "I certainly would like to see them continue, but let's try to do it as safely as possible."

Members of America's military aerial stunt teams have been killed in the past, but none has ever killed a spectator. The Federal Aviation Administration regulates the aerial teams and limits the maneuvers they may perform.

Fitzwater, asked whether the United States was rethinking its position on such shows, said, "We don't have all the details of this incident, so we're most reluctant to pass judgment on this episode or on air shows in general."

"America has a lot of air shows," the spokesman said. "We have them at Air Force bases. Many are military-oriented. There are a lot of private air shows around the country. It's been a long tradition in various circumstances to have these kinds of air shows. So we would be reluctant to make any judgments at this time.

"It certainly does, however, emphasize the need for vigilance and safety," Fitzwater added. "And I'm sure that those matters will be considered. I noticed that the West German authorities did indicate they would not have any more air shows. But at this point, we don't have any conclusion on that subject."

The Navy's Blue Angels and the Air Force's Thunderbirds have been appearing at air shows for decades.

The Navy determined last year that 63 percent of the students entering Navy flight school had seen at least one Blue Angels performance. Of those, the Navy said, almost 40 percent cited the team as a direct influence on their decision to join the military.

NATION IN BRIEF

U.S. ends effort to expel PLO from U.N. offices

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration is abandoning efforts to get the Palestine Liberation Organization kicked out of offices at the United Nations in New York, while continuing to fight any attempt to reopen a PLO office in Washington, the Justice Department says.

The Reagan administration, following what one source described as a bitter internal fight over the PLO issue, decided not to appeal a judge's ruling that allowed the PLO to maintain its U.N. office.

A year-old law had ordered the administration to close PLO facilities in both New York and Washington, but U.S. District Judge Edmund L. Palmieri on June 29 struck down the provision regarding the U.N. office, saying obligations to the international body took precedence.

Monday was the deadline for appealing Palmieri's order.

The Justice Department said the decision not to fight Palmieri's order "was based on a determination that, on balance, the interests of the United States are best served by not appealing."

The department said its "normal policy" was to appeal adverse district court decisions of this kind, but "it was decided, in light of foreign policy considerations, including the U.S. role as host to the U.N. organization, not to appeal in this instance."

The department said, however, it would continue to oppose any effort to reopen the PLO's Washington office.

Bakkers plead ignorance

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — Jim and Tammy Bakker told attorneys they didn't know where PTL's money came from or how its finances were managed when they led the television ministry, documents filed with U.S. Bankruptcy Court show.

In depositions filed Monday with the Columbia court, the Bakkers said top aides handled most of PTL's money matters.

Asked about six-figure bonuses given her, Mrs. Bakker said, "I just know they (board members) put them in my account, and I spent them like a typical woman."

Bakker, who repeatedly said he did not recall seeing various memos about PTL's finances, was asked if he thought aides did not properly inform him.

He replied, "I was exhausted half the time and reading memos at 11 or 12 (o'clock) before dropping off to sleep, and I could have been informed and would not even know it, I would have been so tired."

The IRS claims Mrs. Bakker's annual salaries during her last four years at PTL were $84,964 in 1983-84, $142,586 in 1984-85, and $90,736 in both 1985-86 and 1986-87. During that period she also received bonuses totaling $825,000, IRS records show.

Department faces changes

WASHINGTON (NYT) — Justice Department officials are watching nervously as the new attorney general, Dick Thornburgh, weighs several personnel changes among the department's senior staff.

A number of aides to former Attorney General Edwin Meese III are expected to leave, replaced by members of what one department prosecutor calls Thornburgh's "Pennsylvania Mafia" — officials who served with Thornburgh while he was governor of the Keystone State.

Among those expected to leave: William Bradford Reynolds, the assistant attorney general for civil rights, who has been a lightning rod for criticism of the Reagan administration's civil rights policies. Within the department, Reynolds was seen as Meese's closest ally.

Lawmen would like state version of RICO Act

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

Fresh from an undercover operation that netted dozens of suspected West Texas drug dealers and 175 indictments in 14 counties, law officers and prosecutors want more power.

Specifically, officers say they would like to see a state version of the federal Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations (RICO) Act and enhanced forfeiture powers.

Under current state law, law enforcement agencies can seize vehicles — successfully — if they are used in actual drug transactions. But because of liberal appellate court decisions, "it is too burdensome on the state" to seize vehicles in other situations which may still be drug-related but aren't used in an actual drug buy, according to a prosecutor who specializes in narcotics cases.

"That is the problem right now, the courts' interpretation of the statute," said Wayne Frost, assistant Midland County district attorney. He hopes that this legislative session, state lawmakers will "fine tune" the Controlled Substances Act to clear up the confusion.

Frost also said the state should have some form of "zero tolerance" laws, which would allow law officers to seize a car, boat or tractor-trailer if any amount — even residue — of a narcotic is found. The federal government had success with the zero tolerance program, including seizure of several yachts, until some complained the action was unfair.

"Zero tolerance would be best," noted Fred Stubbs, a criminal investigator with the Midland County Sheriff's Department. "If that happens, then every one would be on notice. The whole citizenry would have to be aware that this is the problem, and this is what we will do about it."

"The idea is to place some of the responsibility on the public, and that's what we need to do," Frost said.

On Friday, law officers announced that 175 indictments had been handed down in 14 West Texas counties, the results of the first operation of the Permian Basin Drug Task Force.

Frost, a legal advisor to the unit, praised the success of the operation.

Task force officers seized at least 20 vehicles, thousands of dollars in cash, and dozens of weapons, according to Art Van Dorn, task force commander.

"The vehicles can be used for any law enforcement agency," Frost said. "Some will probably be sold in auction, and the money will be turned back to be used for fighting crime."

Last year, $100,000 in cash was seized in drug forfeitures in Midland County, Frost said.

"That's money the taxpayers didn't have to come up with," the prosecutor said. "It is a great service when you can save the taxpayers money while taking it away from the bad guys. That should appeal to the taxpayers."

The RICO Act, which was drafted in Congress to fight organized crime, could be copied by the states to fight any ongoing criminal enterprise, according to Midland County Sheriff Gary Painter.

"It would assist us greatly, not only in narcotics, but in all organized crime," Painter said.

The state has not enacted RICO-type legislation, or tougher asset forfeiture laws, because of the opposition of defense attorneys, according to the sheriff.

"They don't like us going out and seizing someone's property, even though it has been bought and used for illegal means," he said.

"But that's what the state needs. It takes the profit out of being a crook."

CAF planes on display in Midland

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Two warbirds which represent America's World War II air power heritage rumbled and lumbered into Midland on Monday to demonstrate that patriotism and enterprising spirits still are vibrant in America.

"This is a salute to America's air power-aircraft heritage," said Tom Cloyd, a Confederate Air Force colonel who flew the rare bomber, a four-engine Boeing B-29 Superfortress bomber named "Fifi," into Midland International Airport on Monday for a seven-day display.

Along with the B-29, which was the largest bomber produced in World War II, another CAF bomber, the Consolidated B-24 Liberator tabbed "Diamond Lil" was flown.

The airplanes are among the CAF's "Flying Museum" of more than 160 warbirds — trainers, fighters, bombers — of the 1939-45 war years.

Of the almost 4,000 B-29s built in World War II, only one, "Fifi," is still flying.

And the B-24, though not as rare, probably was the most widely used bomber of the war. The workhorse was one of more than 18,000 B-24s built to help fight the war and to win peace.

"Look at what this country did in a very few short months from 1941 when we were almost dead in the water," Cloyd said, "and then a year and a half later, we became the largest producer nation in the world."

The two aircraft, which currently are on a flying tour across the nation, will be available for tours from 9 a.m. to 7 p.m. daily through Monday. The Texas-based CAF, which depends on donations to "keep 'em flying," is asking for touring fees of the aircraft: $1 each for children ages 6 through 12; $2 for those 13 through 18, and $4 for those older than 18 years old. Children under age 6 will be admitted free.

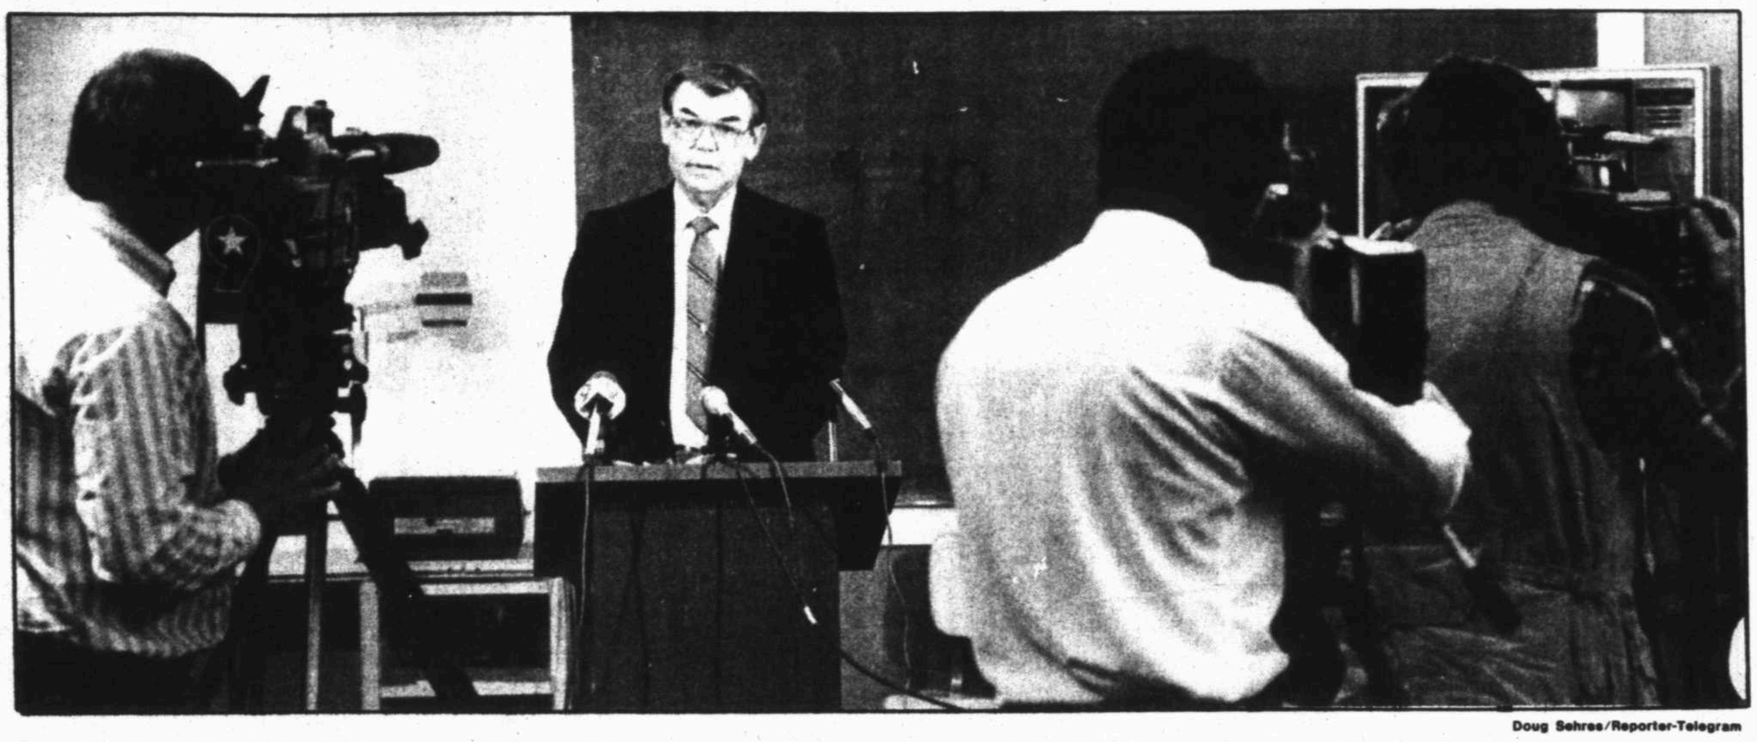

The old B-29, powered by four 2,200-horsepower Wright-Cyclone radial engines, had a 3,700-mile range in which it could carry a 20,000 pound payload — bombs — across much of the Pacific Ocean and into Japan at 325 mph.

The B-24, which complemented the more famous but less formidable Boeing B-17 Flying Fortress in bombing runs over Europe, also marched to the Pacific Theatre and into Africa.

Cloyd, a corporate pilot based in El Paso and formerly of Midland, said that flying the tall-tailed B-29 is "one of the biggest challenges as far as airplanes I've ever flown."

"It is a real challenge to fly," said Cloyd, who first soloed in a J-3 Piper Cub in 1946 at age 15. "It's an extremely big, heavy airplane. There is no boosted controls on it. It is all cable controlled," he said.

Binder says each book has own character

By CHRISTOPHER EVANS

FORT WORTH (AP) — As a child, W.T. Oxford was a bookish type who dreamed of finding fortune in South America.

But adolescence dawned and found Oxford in his native Polytechnic neighborhood in Fort Worth, delivering milk and newspapers.

Adulthood came and his life was what he terms unexciting as he piloted a Fort Worth city bus for eight years.

Then in 1944, Oxford found his treasure — in old books that weren't his. He became "just a bookbinder" as he puts it.

But not just a bookbinder.

At 73, W.T. Oxford is the senior bookbinder at Fort Worth's oldest repairer and restorer of old tomes, Worth Bindery.

In 44 years, Oxford — whose surname befits a bibliophile — has breathed new life into countless thousands of old, tattered volumes. Bibles and cookbooks, law journals and historic works. Outworn and antiquated titles, each important enough to its owner to be brought to the bindery for rebuilding.

From his work station at the bindery, Oxford — an upright white-haired man with spectacles and long, gnarled fingers — caresses each book as though it were his, which it is, for a fleeting few days.

"The way I feel about books is that every book has its character, its own personality, and I try to treat them that way," he said. "We get mostly Bibles, and your hand Bibles usually have gotten deteriorated by a lot of use.

"With the large family Bibles, lots of times the geneaology pages can be used for legal purposes. People will cut them out for court, then want me to put them back in, which I can do."

With books of religious import, Oxford learns something about the owners, people he rarely meets in the flesh.

"By the notes people write in Bibles, you can tell if they're Baptist, which I am, Methodist, Pentecostal, or whatever," he said.

At times Oxford, a substitute Sunday School teacher at Sagamore Hill Baptist Church, finds fodder to incorporate into his religious pilgrimmage.

"I'm bad about copying some of the notes people put into their Bibles," he said.

"Sometimes, they're choice insights on life, little kernels of wisdom. Sometimes, I don't agree with them, but they're funny or something, so I copy 'em down anyway.

"Lots of times, the stuff written in a Bible was done by somebody who's gone on," he said. "One lady brought in her father's old Bible. He'd been a teacher or circuit-riding preacher and she brought it in to preserve his notes, his thoughts.

"If there's scribbling in there, we're careful not to delete it because it might have been done by a child who's since passed on."

The bindery itself is a throwback to old Fort Worth.

Founded in 1928 by B.C. Curtis, whose daughter Oxford later married, Worth Bindery opened in a downtown block that was known as "Printers Row." Two moves ensued, but a small-scale family orientation was retained.

And though job printing is part of the Worth operation, the firm's reputation is in restoration.

Whereas most binderies nowadays deal only in new books and orders of 200 or more, Worth caters to individuals with single books of sentimental value.

"We're sort of an unusual business," said bindery Vice President W.H. "Buddy" Randall, who joined the company after present owner C.M. Pier became sole owner in 1968. "We started in the Depression and made it through the Depression, supporting two families.

"Every piece of equipment we have in here is bought and paid for before we bring it in.

"We've always had the same number of employees, between 10 and 12, and we've always had the same philosophy," Randall said. "We don't want to grow. We've found a niche in the world we like."

He said that in 1987, "which was a slow year for us, we did over 400 hand Bibles alone...not counting the family Bibles and the other books."

A Madison Avenue advertising scheme is not part of the Worth Bindery operation.

"We advertise in the Yellow Pages, and do a little bit of direct mail, but that's about it," Randall said. "Last year, we let Mr. Oxford start calling on customers, which he's very good at."

The cost for restoring an old book, Randall said, ranges from about $50 to $150.

Bell employee first woman in Kiwanis Club

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

A Midland woman recently promoted to a high-ranking position in her job received another honor Monday.

Pam Porter, director of West Texas operations for Southwestern Bell Mobile Systems, was the first woman ever to be initiated into the formerly all-male Downtown Kiwanis Club.

Ms. Porter, who serves on the board of directors of Big Brothers and Big Sisters of Midland, said she wanted to join the group because of its commitment to the future of underprivileged children in the area.

Kiwanis Club President Hi Burney said Monday he "feels very fortunate in getting Pam as our first female member."

In her "high-visibility" job which requires her to make sales calls on many Midland businessmen, she was first approached about joining Kiwanis, she said.

Besides the group's commitment to children, Ms. Porter said she was attracted to Kiwanis because of the diversity of people in the 25-member organization.

Coupling the personal and professional benefits encouraged her to join, she said.

"It all just fits in my plan," Ms. Porter said.

Midland's Kiwanis Club has been in existence since 1946, Burney said, and also contributes efforts to the Salvation Army and the Boys Club of Midland.

Murder charges filed in man's tire tool beating

From Staff Reports

Police Roundup

A fight over a broken beer bottle Friday night has resulted in three Midland men being charged with murder.

Jimmie Ray Stewart, 23, of 1212 E. Wadley Ave.; Thomas Stewart, 20, of 607 Watson St.; and Gregory Winters, 27, of 3100 Caldera Blvd. were charged with murder Monday, said Midland Police Cpl. Jim White.

The three were arraigned in Justice of the Peace Bob Pine's court and are being held in the city jail on $50,000 bond each, White said.

Alfred Lawrence Amy, 32, died Sunday after being struck twice in the head Friday night with a tire tool in front of a home in the 700 block of South Clay Street, police reports indicate.

An argument had erupted in front of the home and the three men are charged in connection with the subsequent beating death of Amy, records show.

In an unrelated matter, Midlander Carl Wayne Sims, 35, of Midland was charged with four aggravated assault felonies Monday and released from the Midland County Jail on $40,000 bond, a sheriff's department spokeswoman said today.

Sims is accused of opening fire Saturday in R.J.'s Club at 2301 E. Kentucky and injured four Midlanders, reports show.

Janet Posey, 27, of 4410 Lanham St., was listed in satisfactory condition today at Midland Memorial Hospital after suffering gunshot wounds to the kidney, gallbladder and both legs, a hospital spokeswoman said.

Man released on bond after high-speed chase

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — A 22-year-old man was released from the Odessa City Jail Monday after posting bonds totaling $2,000 on three charges growing out of a high speed, bullet-punctuated chase Sunday night that involved Odessa Police, Midland County Sheriff's Office and the Department of Public Safety.

According to a Midland DPS dispatcher, at lease five shots were fired to end the high-speed chase on state highway 349 south of Midland where speeds had reached as high as 115 mph.

The man was arraigned late Monday morning before Municipal Judge J.E. Weatherly on charges of driving while intoxicated, evading arrest, and having no liability insurance.

Weatherly set bonds of $750 each on the DWI and the evading arrest charges, and a bond of $500 for Ramos for having no liability insurance.

According to Police Cpl. McAhon, Cpl. Sidney Lyle spotted a 1985 Ford Bronco shortly after 8 p.m. Sunday, which his radar unit showed was traveling south in the 1600 block of Crane Avenue at a speed of 52 mph in a 40 mph zone. Lyle gave chase, notifying the police dispatcher he was in pursuit.

The driver of the Ford Bronco accelerated to about 85 mph as he traveled south on Crane Avenue, and continued trying to elude Lyle until he reached U.S. 385 and West County Road where the vehicle suddenly stopped and the driver and a front seat passenger changed places.

As Lyle approached, two passengers in the rear of the vehicle and the front seat passenger who had moved to the drivers side ran from the vehicle. The driver started moving again and proceeded south on US 385 until he reached FM 1787 and turned east toward Midland County.

According to McAhon, several oncoming cars were forced off the road and there were several near-accidents as the vehicle made its way at high speed toward State Highway 349.

Shortly after reaching SH 349, Midland County Sheriff's Deputy Jerry Wallace and DPS Trooper Leo Arriente joined the chase, which continued north on SH 349 "for several miles," until Arriente "forced the vehicle off the roadway," McAhon said.

The driver fled the vehicle on foot with Wallace and Arriente in pursuit. He was finally stopped about a half mile from where he had left the vehicle.

According to McAhon, the suspect had traveled along FM 1787 and SH 349 "with no lights" at speeds reaching as high as 115 mph. A DPS dispatcher Monday said the 1985 Ford Bronco was finally stopped after at least five shots were fired at the fleeing vehicle, and two tires were flattened by bullets.

After being apprehended, the suspect was taken before Midland County Peace Justice Keith Jobe and arraigned on charges of driving while intoxicated, evading arrest and having no insurance. After being charged, the suspect was transferred to the Odessa City Jail.

Barbecue club still won't admit women

GRAND PRAIRIE (AP) — It's home to some of the best barbecue in North Texas, not to mention some of the coldest beer, sweetest lemonade and saltiest talk.

It's a throwback to the old days — when 10 or 12 men got together to do things they didn't care to do around women: cuss, drink whiskey, tell dirty jokes, spit, or any combination of the above.

Members of the Rock Creek Barbecue club gathered Sunday to bestow that style and dignity upon Fort Worth Mayor Bob Bolen, who also got roasted in a letter from Plano's mayor pro tem: a woman.

Although the U.S. Supreme Court has ruled women can no longer be kept out of many traditionally all-male groups because of professional reasons, the Rock Creek Barbecue club has been an exception.

Six years ago a small mob of women carrying signs protested the club's policy of not admitting women. They were upset because the club is a "must stop" on the political circuit for anyone seeking office, or wanting to keep one.

Except for women, that is.

When the invitations go out for candidate's day, a woman candidate has to send a man to speak for her. It has sparked protests from time to time, but they've fallen on deaf ears.

When the Supreme Court ruled last year that clubs such as Rotary and Elks would have to start taking female members, Rock Creek voted to send a nasty message to the justices.

Over the years women have been told they can't come in because the club doesn't have bathrooms. But the truth is, women weren't wanted — and still aren't.

Former Dallas County Judge Bob Stinson, the club's "speaker of the house," kicked off the roast. A skit portraying Bolen as a wheezing, sneezing drunk, was followed by the reading of a letter from Plano Mayor Pro Tem Florence Shapiro, a friend of Bolen's.

"I couldn't be with you today," she wrote. "Not because I had other plans. I am barred because I am a female. Shame, shame, shame, Bob Bolen. I hope you never let a group such as this honor you again."

Bolen chuckled, the members applauded, and they went about their all-male business.

Discovery astronauts rehearsing mission

SPACE CENTER, HOUSTON (AP) — The five Discovery astronauts and ground support teams are participating in their final long-duration rehearsal before the first launch of a NASA space shuttle in more than 2½ years, officials said.

About 300 people at the Johnson Space Center today began a 56-hour simulation of mission STS-26, a four-day shuttle flight, with as many as 200 others taking part in New Mexico and California, said spokesman Brian Welch.

The scheduled 8 a.m. test got off to a late start because of a malfunction in the shuttle simulator, but the problem was corrected and countdown ended at 9:04 a.m., said spokesman Bill Green.

Commander Rick Hauck, pilot Richard Covey and mission specialists David Hilmers, Mike Lounge and George "Pinky" Nelson will face about 150 simulated problems during the lengthy test.

"The people who do the simulation, the 'sim' supervisors, sort of wage a mental battle with the flight controllers," Welch said. "They will do everything they can to make it more difficult. They try to throw a problem at each major (flight) system."

Lounge and Nelson may have to wear spacesuits to wrestle a mock satellite in the space center water tank, the crew may be asked to make an unplanned landing, and early deployment of a $100 million NASA communications satellite may be thrown off schedule during the test.

"I will feel good if they work through the scenarios, if they understand what they did and why they did it," Welch said.

The rehearsal was scheduled to end by 5 p.m. Thursday, and a full day of debriefing will follow, Welch said.

Alleged 'mooner' resigns post

AUSTIN (AP) — An Austin Convention and Visitors Bureau employee who allegedly "mooned" diners at a Dallas restaurant while on a tourism business trip earlier this year has resigned her $40,000-a-year job.

Mary Cook, director of convention sales and marketing, left her post Monday in the wake of publicity about allegations she had exposed her derriere at the Palm Restaurant during a night of drinking in March.

In a letter to tourism agency's executive director, Charles Bass, Ms. Cook said, "Due to the negative publicity of the past week, directed not only at myself, but also at you and the bureau, I feel I can no longer effectively perform my responsibilities."

Bass said he accepted Ms. Cook's resignation reluctantly, because "she was performing her duties well here."

Siblings killed in robbery at pawn shop

HOUSTON (AP) — A brother and sister were shot to death during an apparent robbery at a family-owned pawn shop in north Harris County, authorities said.

Kara Denise Voss, 21, and her brother, Mark Kelley, 26, were both found shot in the head Monday afternoon by a customer who walked into the Golden Nugget Pawn Shop owned by their parents, police said.

"I started walking inside and no one was there, so I started looking for the dog," said Von Eric Chryar, 21, who entered the shop and thought he heard a dog panting.

"I looked behind the counter and he (Kelley) was on the ground, breathing through his own blood. He sounded like a dog snarling," Chryar said. "Then I saw her (Voss') feet and I ran for help."

Two jewelry cases had been broken and two shotguns lay on the floor near the victims, police said.

"Why would they kill two kids for nothing?" cried the victims' mother, Linda Kelley.

"I just talked to her a little while ago," she said of her daughter. "She should have been married a year next week. She just told me this morning she was going to start a family."

OPPORTUNITIES FOR VOLUNTEERS

Volunteer opportunities for this week include:

■ Sewing costumes for theatrical organizations. A few hours a week that individuals could donate would certainly be appreciated. Training provided.

■ Committed and dependable individuals are needed to assist various human service agencies daily for a few hours a week. Great way to polish old skills and/or learn new ones.

■ Individuals to work with building sets and props, or painting sceneries for theatrical groups. A few hours a week during the day, noon hour, or evening is kindly appreciated. Training provided.

■ Telephone Counselors needed to provide support and reassurance to school-aged children at home without adult supervision during after school hours by answering a PHONE A FRIEND telephone line. Two hours every other week. Training provided.

■ Individuals to assist a nonprofit agency with the organization of a Resource Library. Excellent project for a group of friends to work on together! Four to six total hours of volunteer work should bring this project to an end.

■ SEPTEMBERFEST is still signing up interested individuals that can "man" game, T-shirt, and refreshment booths. Lots of people are also needed to help with setting up and tearing down the event. Great opportunity to volunteer and have loads of fun with friends and family!

For more information on how you, your family, or group can volunteer, please call The Volunteer Center at 697-8781.

Midland-Odessa youths attend summer camp

From Staff Reports

SAN ANTONIO — A record total of 2,700 junior members of the Order of the Sons of Hermann from 252 cities and towns across Texas, including five from the Midland-Odessa area, attended the 35th annual Sons of Hermann Youth Summer Camp at Comfort this season, Louis B. Engelke of San Antonio, grand president of the order, has announced.

The number of campers, who are boys and girls aged 9 through 13, was the largest since the camp opened in 1954, exceeding the previous record of 2,433 set in 1986.

Campers from the Midland-Odessa area were Cindy Fortson, Katherine Martin, Melanie Martin and Nancy Martin of Midland and Samuel Thompson of Odessa.

The 80,000-member statewide fraternal benefit society also has 14 youth chapters and sponsors 37 tuition-free schools of dance in cities and towns throughout Texas.

At the 11 weekly sessions campers receive instruction in a number of activities, including tennis, horseback riding, swimming, volleyball, soccer, softball, golf, canoeing, archery and outdoor living skills, as well as arts and crafts.

BOOKS

"And sometimes people don't understand that," he said. "They don't understand how delicate the work is, how long it takes and that we do almost everything by hand."

Oxford treats each volume as a physician would an infirm patient.

His tools include a "folder," an instrument made of whale bone "because that's the only kind of bone that won't chip." There also is a curved, razor-sharp "skiving knife" used exclusively for intricate peeling off of fine layers of the supple, pliable leather the company orders from New Jersey.

If a book's pages are ragged around the edges, "we'll trim 'em with a guillotine cutter if there's space,' Oxford said.

If the pages are rumpled, Oxford will massage them with a sponge or apply a special liquid, then press them until they're flat again.

If they are torn badly, he laminates them.

He uses an imitation leather for the end sheets that go inside the leather cover and a gauze-like material to reinforce a book's spine. He puts head bands at the top and bottom of each spine.

"Now it's time for the cover, and whatever color the original cover was, we try to put in end sheets that match the cover," he said.

One of the final steps, especially with leather-bound books such as Bibles, is folding and gathering the edges around the curvature of the cover, then gluing them down.

"And we put ribbons in all the Bibles we get," he said.

On a recent day, Oxford had his patients — about 12 of them — laid out on a work table. One was an 1883 volume, "Pioneer Heroes and Daring Deeds." Another was "A Dictionary Of The Bible," vintage 1884. A third was a well-worn "White House Cook Book" whose title page and date of publication were missing. Then there was a journal "Medicology." The rest were Bibles.

Oxford opened an old Bible with brown pages. Instantly, he spotted a notation scribbled beside an arrow that pointed to a verse. It said, "Man cooked in the old days."

Oxford smiled.

"Now that," he said, "was probably put in there by some guy whose wife did the cookin.'

"Or maybe she put it in there because she was doin' all the cookin' and didn't like they way things have changed."

The way things have changed at the Worth Bindery through the years is not very much.

MURDER

Robert Davis, 44, of 404 S. Clay St., was listed in stable condition at MMH today after suffering gunshot wounds to the abdomen and arm, hospital spokeswoman Sue Ristom said.

Two others shot Saturday, Don Earl Marshall, 32, and Fretna Banks, 28, were treated at MMH and released that day, White said.

There are still no suspects in a Sunday shooting at R.J.'s Club which injured Ralphard Henderson, 29, of Midland.

Henderson, of 2208 E. California Ave., was listed in stable condition this morning at MMH.

He suffered a gunshot wound to the back of his arm at the club Sunday, police said.

Benjamin Franklin sometimes wrote articles under the pen name Silence Dogood, pretending that they were from a middle-aged widow.

Girl strangled, autopsy shows

AUSTIN (AP) — Trisha Ann Worley, a 7-year-old girl who became a "walking target of abuse" in the last six months of her life, was strangled with a ligature and then sexually assaulted, an autopsy showed Monday.

Police investigators said they had developed no firm suspects since the child's body was discovered Sunday in Town Lake, three days after she disappeared from the parking lot of a West Austin apartment complex.

"How can someone just take a child out and kill them?" asked Trisha's grandmother, Aleen Smith of Austin. "I just don't see how anyone could hurt an innocent, loving child. I just don't see how. I think that when they catch him they should give him a dose of his own medicine. They should treat him the way he treated her. I think that when somebody takes a life that their own life should be taken. I think they should be executed."

PLANES

Cloyd, who was greeted at the airport by his daughter, Susan Riek, and 3-year-old granddaughter, Kristen, added, "It's a 'funny' airplane to fly. You set way back on the flight deck and look through those little panels of glass. You're kind of feeling and hunting, particularly on landing."

The world's last flying B-29, "Fifi" was restored into flying status by CAF colonels at a B-29 graveyard at China Lake, Calif., in 1971 and was flown to CAF's Rebel Field at Harlingen in South Texas for additional work.

The all-aluminum aircraft got its nickname "Fifi" from the wife of a "well-to-do" Mexico City businessman and CAF colonel, Vic Agather, who funded the B-29's basic restoration.

Though the CAF's B-29 "is flying as good as it flew 45 years ago," most of the B-29s "were built to be shot down" following a flying life span of 50 to 60 hours, Cloyd said.

The Fifi B-29 saw no action in World War II but was employed as a trainer.

CAF Col. Paul Schlachter, Fifi's flight engineer, flew the B-29 in the early 1950s, when the bomber was used for training pilots, flight engineers and other crew members for Korean War bombing runs.

"It brings back old memories," he said.

As flight engineer on the B-29, Schlachter said he "does most everything except steer. I start the engines," which burn about 400 gallons of fuel per hour. "I run them up and check out all systems."

When the pilot asks for "power settings or for the speed he wants, and I give them to him."

Schlachter finds a peculiar romance to the B-29.

"You have the noise. You have the smell, and you have the power when you push the throttles," he said. "It's a good old airplane."

CAF Col. David Hancock of Fort Worth is the B-29's co-pilot.

The Diamond Lil B-24 was built for the British as a land bomber, LB-30, in 1939, but never saw combat. A landing gear collapsed in Canada, and the airplane was repaired and converted into a transport.

"It has a lot of history, although it was never in the war," Cloyd said. At one time, the aircraft was assigned to United States diplomat Averell Harriman in Moscow and had carried first lady Eleanor Roosevelt, possibly President Franklin Delano Roosevelt and other high-government officials.

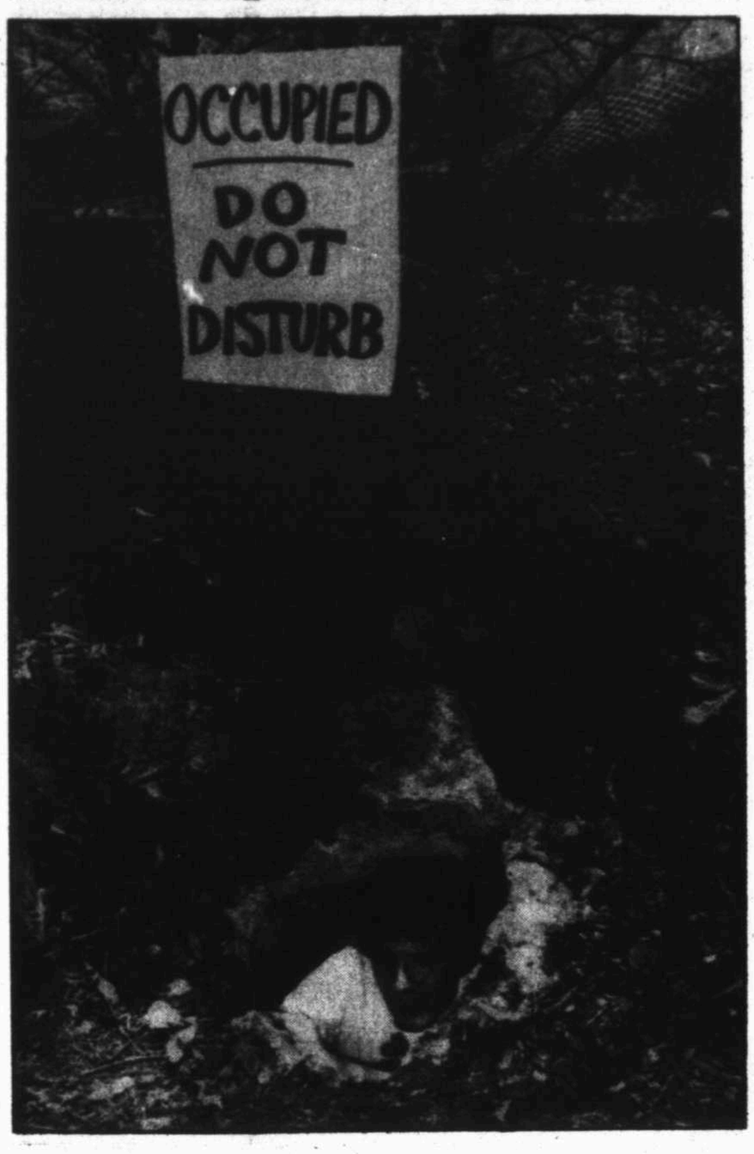

The aircraft's nickname Diamond Lil came from a B-24 which was shot down in the Pacific during the war.

CAF Col. David Hughes of Irving and his co-pilot, Col. Ray Krottinger of Fort Worth, flew the B-24 into Midland. Both also are checked out in the B-29.

"I just love airplanes," Hughes, a Delta Airlines pilot, said. "I've never flown an airplane I didn't like. Jets are great to fly, too, but this (flying the World War II warbirds) is more like history."

STATE IN BRIEF

Earth First protester Mark Sanders emerges Monday from an underground cave in northwest Austin which he is occupying. Sanders, along with three other protesters, claims that development is threatening several rare species, including spiders and beetles.

Environmental group members occupy caves

AUSTIN (AP) — Four members of the environmental group Earth First have occupied four shallow caves in northwestern Travis County, saying the area is home to "a unique assemblage of cave-adapted species."

Group spokeswoman Barbara Dugelby said Monday that five of the cave species, all new to science, have been proposed as "endangered" by the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service.

The species, including beetles and spiders, are believed to inhabit only those few caves in the immediate area northwest of Austin near Lake Travis, Earth First leaders said.

Prior to designation as endangered under federal law, there is no protection for the species, Ms. Dugelby said, adding that the Earth First members moved into the caves, hoping to keep any harm from coming to the species in the interim.

'Rustlers' corralled at base

ABILENE (AP) — Rustlers who stole a little metal calf didn't get far before a posse corralled them at the main gate of Dyess Air Force Base.

The calf is the smallest member of the popular "Herd of Cows" sculpture grazing just an aluminum cowchip toss away from a fire station in this West Texas city.

Valued at $1,000, the calf wasn't easy to steal. It was anchored into concrete with large bolts that apparently were ripped loose. The calf's left front ankle was bent, possibly during the theft Monday.

Charged with stealing the calf were two airmen, ages 21 and 22, who were caught because they reportedly were involved in other illegal late-night activities, said Abilene Police Capt. Ray Portalatin.

Police were told that two men in a white pickup were attempting to siphon gas from and damage vehicles at a hotel and apartment complex, Portalatin said.

A witness noted the truck's license number and gave it to Abilene police, who forwarded the number to the main gate at the air base.

Military police stopped a pickup when it attempted to drive onto the base, Portalatin said. "Lo and behold, there was a cow in it," he said.

The airmen were in Taylor County Jail late Monday facing felony theft charges.

Bodies recovered from lake

DALLAS (AP) — The bodies of a man and woman have been recovered by divers from a lake's marina area, and authorities say both victims had been tied to weights and thrown into the water.

The body recoveries were made by searchers in Lake Ray Hubbard at about 4 p.m. Monday after a fisherman sighted the victims, a police dispatcher said.

The police department's homicide division was investigating the deaths, the dispatcher said.

Dallas Police Department spokesman Jim Gallagher said the bodies were found about 600 yards from the lake's west shore. He said the bodies were bound and had been in the water for some time.

"We found a weight out there also and some rope," he said.

Herman McGill said he first spotted one of the bodies in the lake.

"All I could see was feet and a knee sticking up clad in blue jeans," he said.

A peace justice pronounced both victims dead at the scene. The remains had not been positively identified late Monday, said police.

Reagan to stump for Bush

AUSTIN (AP) — President Reagan will campaign with Republican presidential candidate George Bush in Houston on Sept. 22, it was announced Monday.

Gov. Bill Clements, co-chairman of Texas Victory '88, said Reagan "has made a rock-solid commitment to campaign in Texas this fall."

Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas and the other co-chairman, said Reagan and Bush will speak at a fund-raiser at the George R. Brown Convention Center in Houston the night of Sept. 22.

Also, the White House has indicated Reagan will make additional campaign trips to Texas this fall, according to a GOP campaign statement.

The September fund-raiser is expected to raise $2 million, the statement said.

Hosts for the dinner are Ray Hunt of Dallas, Sam Barshop of San Antonio and Bob Cruikshank of Houston.

Drowned teen 'cried wolf'

CONROE (AP) — A teen-ager who drowned in Lake Conroe was ignored by companions because he reportedly had been "crying wolf" throughout the day, authorities said.

It was the second weekend drowning at the lake.

Leif Eric Harris, 18, of Porter, drowned in the lake Sunday after he and companion Johnny Slaughter, 17, swam to a platform in the water 200 feet from the shore.

As they were returning, Harris began to yell, but because he had been pretending to drown earlier in the day, the others paid no attention to him, said Montgomery County sheriff's spokesman Bob Morrison.

Sheriff's divers found Harris' body about 200 feet from the shore in 15 feet of water about 5 p.m. Sunday, Morison said. He was believed to have gone under around 4:30 p.m.

Construction worker Douglas Ray Northcutt, 21, had drowned in the lake only a day before.

AZT funding may end

AUSTIN (AP) — A federally funded program that supplies the drug AZT to people with AIDS and the AIDS related complex, ARC, is in jeopardy of ending next month, Texas Department of Health officials said.

The department announced Monday that the program, which has supplied azidothymidine, would end unless new federal funds become available after Sept. 30.

To be eligible, recipients must not be otherwise covered by Medicaid or private health insurance. AZT is the only federally approved drug shown to slow the progress of AIDS.

The state received $1.8 million in federal funds this year to buy the drug for some 300 people. Another $343,000 in funds not used by other states was added to the Texas total in June.

Holiday deaths predicted

AUSTIN (AP) — As many as 35 persons will die in Texas traffic accidents over the long Labor Day weekend, the Department of Public Safety predicted Monday.

Col. Joe Milner, DPS director, said additional troopers will patrol Texas roadways during the holiday weekend, which starts Friday at 6 p.m. and continues until Monday at midnight.

During last year's Labor Day weekend, when the DPS officials predicted 42 deaths, 26 people died in Texas traffic accidents.

Milner also said the DPS is supporting the national "Drive of Life" program sponsored by Mothers Against Drunk Driving, or MADD.

MADD officials have asked persons not to drink and drive and to have their headlights switched on during the day Saturday.

Former justice still busy at age 80

AP Laserphoto

Zollie Steakley, former Texas secretary of state and supreme court justice, turned 80-years-old Monday. He is special assistant to the attorney general.

STATE

AUSTIN (AP) — On the first workday of the week, Zollie Steakley slid behind the wheel of his Mercedes 190 and drove to the state attorney general's office, where he reviews complex legal opinions.

Monday was also a bit special for the former secretary of state and Texas Supreme Court justice. It was his 80th birthday.

Steakley's name has never been familiar in Texas despite his long career in public service, and he jokes about a former political opponent saying, "I don't think anybody will vote for a guy named 'Zol-ly Steekley."

Others would greet him in his statewide campaigns for the Supreme Court by asking, "Judge, what do you do?"

Yet this is a man who deals with the intricacies of the law long after his Texas contemporaries have retired, or died.

This is a man former President Lyndon Johnson once described as "Advocate and orator without peer."

Zollie was named for his father, who was named for a former Tennesse congressman and Civil War general, Felix Zollicoffer. The name Zollicoffer became Zollie Coffer Steakley.

Steakley got a bachelor's degree from Hardin Simmons University, where he led the baseball team in home runs as a 5-foot-6½-inch, 120-pound second baseman and turned down a professional baseball offer.

After graduating from the University of Texas law school, Steakley practiced law in Sweetwater, worked as an assistant to attorneys gGeneral Gerald Mann and Grover Sellers, served in the U.S. Naval Reserve in World War II and returned to Austin to practice law.

After Price Daniel was elected governor in 1956, he asked Steakley to be his secretary of state. "I spent an hour on the telephone telling him why I couldn't do it, and who could," Steakley recalls, "and finally he said, 'Will you promise me one thing, will you pray about it?' and hung up the telephone."

Steakley, a lifetime Baptist who had Daniel in his Bible class, served as secretary of state for four years even though his state salary was half of what he was making as a private attorney.

Daniel, who died Thursday at age 77, thought so much of Steakley's classes — held for years at the downtown Paramount Theatre — that he would often break up a conference at the governor's mansion, load the participants in his station wagon and drive them to hear Steakley.

Steakley has been teaching the class, now held at the First Baptist Church, for 40 years. The class is broadcast on a local radio station.

In 1960, Daniel named Steakley to the state Supreme Court, where he served for 20 years. Steakley retired from the court rather than run for another term which would have been interrupted by his reaching the mandatory retirement age of 75.

"I didn't feel that it would be quite right to ask the people to help fund a campaign and vote for another six-year term when I can't serve but half of it," he told a reporter.

Almost immediately, however, then-Attorney General Mark White asked Steakley to serve as a special assistant, reviewing legal opinions issued by the attorney general's office. When White was elected governor, Steakley became counsel to the governor.

After White lost his re-election bid, Attorney General Jim Mattox hired Steakley to again review opinions.

"As long as I feel like I'm able to work, I'd like to have something to do," Steakley said. "I just live it day by day."

He said his health is good, and added, "My father smoked cigars, and they finally killed him at 94."

Steakley only works part-time and plays golf three afternoons a week at the Austin Country Club in a group which includes his pastor, the Rev. Browning Ware, and three deacons.

And Steakley already has written his "Ten Commandments for Gracefully Growing Older."

They include "Keep a Sense of Humor," "Be ever grateful" and "Go Merrily On" — and on.

Texan establishes zoo in Saudi Arabia

RIYADH, Saudi Arabia (AP) — Clad in traditional Arabian robes and headdress, Dr. Lawrence Curtis sits in his study, surrounded by the things he loves — an extensive zoological library, three snakes and a scorpion that paces in a small box.

Every so often, a curious ostrich peers through the window.

Home for Curtis is Riyadh's zoo.

The 58-year-old Texan was hired specially to establish a zoo in this oil-rich nation and sometime in the future, he said, "Saudi Arabia may be breeding more endangered species than many advanced countries."

Curtis spent 15 years as a zoo director in Fort Worth, Texas, and another 15 in Oklahoma City.

"I was bored with conventional zoos," he said, and 18 months ago heard that Riyadh was planning to open a zoo and needed a director. He packed enough clothes for two weeks and headed for the Saudi capital.

He was hired on the spot and given just four months to prepare for the zoo's opening in March 1987.

Today, the Riyadh zoo is home to 1,200 animals, many of them endangered species. It is also an oasis, carpeted in lush grass and filled with flower beds, bubbling man-made streams, small trees, and flowering vines thriving in the highly irrigated desert soil.

Nearly 7,000 visitors a day pass through its gates — men on Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays and veiled women on Tuesdays, Thursdays and Sundays, in accordance with Saudi Arabia's Islamic tradition of separating the sexes.

To Riyadh's residents, the zoo is a welcome change of scenery. To Curtis, the zoo is much more.

"I really wanted our zoo to have an international reputation for conservation," he said.

One of his first tasks was to help persuade the municipality to issue a policy statement supporting the Convention of International Trade in Endangered Species (CITES), a treaty designed to protect wild animals in their native countries.

Saudi Arabia supports the treaty although it has yet to sign it — a point Curtis thinks will change soon — but the expression of support made it easy for him to get colleagues all over the world to help stock the zoo.

In keeping with CITES guidelines, no endangered species were collected from the wild.

An Arabian leopard and an ibex were shipped from Cincinnati's zoo. Pigmy hippos came from the Bronx Zoo in New York City. Boston sent antelopes. Miami, Cleveland and Duke University sent lemurs. San Diego contributed a scimiter horned oryx, and a golden lion marmoset came from Washington, D.C.

The zoo in Cairo, Egypt, sent giant tortoises, the Singapore zoo a crocodile, the Sydney zoo in Australia a kangaroo and two tapirs arrived from the zoo in Lima, Peru.

Bedouins, the nomads who live in Saudi Arabia's desert, brought in lizards, a caracal and a hyena in the back of pick-up trucks. And so it went, until the zoo's eclectic collection rivaled those of its more established counterparts.

"We've got an Indian mynah who speaks Arabic, and a parrot who speaks Swahili," said Curtis. "He's next to a macaw from Brazil and you know what they speak there (Portuguese). We really have a multilingual zoo; it's like the United Nations."

Getting the animals to Riyadh was only half the chore.

"The big challenge was acclimatization," Curtis said. "We had to make a lot of modifications." Upon his arrival, he was given a list of animals approved for acquisition but he rejected some as inappropriate.

A wild horse was scratched for want of adequate running space, and several poisonous snakes were eliminated due to lack of staff expertise in handling them. Many animals need special care in order to thrive in Riyadh's desert climate.

"The key to acclimatization is spraying and misting systems, so we installed a lot of that," Curtis said. The zoo also invested in shade cloth, which cuts out 80 percent of sunlight in the summer months, when temperatures often reach 122 degrees.

Reptiles accustomed to high humidity are sprayed with water.

Like his charges, Curtis seems to have adapted to his new environment. He wears the local robes and headdress, known as a thobe and ghutra.

Court upholds conviction in murder of DEA agent

McALLEN (AP) — An appeals court has upheld the murder and firearms convictions of a drug trafficker found guilty of killing a federal drug agent during an undercover deal.

Felipe Molina-Uribe of Mexico City was sentenced to life in prison for the murder of Special Agent William Ramos of the U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration.

Molina also was sentenced to an additional five years for use of a firearm in committing a crime of violence.

The 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans last week affirmed both of the April 1987 convictions and sentences.

Ramos was shot in the chest while struggling over a gun during a New Year's Eve 1986 drug bust at a grocery store parking lot in the Las Milpas area south of Pharr in the Rio Grande Valley.

On Molina's defense that Ramos was the victim of a conspiracy and assassination by fellow DEA agents, the appeals court ruled, "There was not a scintilla of evidence to support that theory."

"It was our feeling from the beginning that that was purest hogwash," said Christopher L. Milner, supervisory assistant U.S. attorney for South Texas.

Jack Wolfe, senior assistant U.S. Attorney for the McAllen Division who called a news conference to announce the appeals court decision, said "if you're going to be involved in narcotics and you are going to be involved with firearms, these are the kinds of consequences you're going to have to face."

Wolfe helped prosecute the case while he was with the Brownsville office.

In the case, Molina also pleaded guilty to two drug charges.

The appeals court on a technicality reduced the sentence for conspiracy with intent to distribute more than 100 pounds of marijuana from 25 years plus a four-year supervised release to a 25-year term without four-year supervised release.

On the second guilty plea, to a charge of possessing more than 100 pounds of marijuana with intent to distribute, the appeals court found that U.S. District Judge Filemon Vela did not adequately explain to him the maximum possible penalty.

Baby-sitter's boyfriend charged with murder in child-abuse case

AUSTIN (AP) — An unemployed fence builder has been charged with murder in connection with the death of a 14-month-old girl whose death was described by a veteran lawman as one of the worst child abuse cases he had ever seen.

Authorities said the girl's skull was fractured, she was bitten and thrown against an unknown surface.

"It's one of the worst child-abuse cases I've ever seen in my 14 years of being in law enforcement," said Gary Cutler, a Travis County sheriff's investigator. "This child went through a lot."

Hugh James Gallagher, 28, was held in the Travis County Jail in lieu of $100,000 bond in the death of Casey McManus, authorities said.

Gallagher was described as the boyfriend of a live-in baby sitter at the child's home.

Dr. Roberto Bayardo, Travis County medical examiner said the girl's death was caused by a skull fracture from a blunt injury. The child had a human bite on her left shoulder and several ant bites, "like she'd been sitting in an ant pile," Bayardo said.

The child lived with her mother, two brothers and the baby sitter, Nancy Flirt, spokesman Curtis Weeks of the sheriff's department said.

Ms. Flirt, Gallagher's girlfriend, was a live-in baby sitter who had been staying several months at the McManus house in exchange for child care, Weeks said. The child's mother, Diane McManus, was at her job when the child was injured, authorities said.

Authorities said the child's heart was taken to Loma Linda International Heart Institute in Loma Linda, Calif., for a transplant, and her liver went to the Children's Hospital of Pittsburgh.

Lawyers pay tribute to Foreman

HOUSTON (AP) — Percy Foreman was remembered as a friend and teacher as judges and some of Houston's top lawyers gathered to pay tribute to the famous criminal attorney.

Foreman, 86, who practiced law for 60 years, died last Thursday after suffering an apparent heart attack.

"There is a great void in a lot of people's lives right now," began Foreman's partner, Mike DeGeurin, one of the lawyers who delivered informal euglogies Monday.

His voice breaking, DeGeurin closed by urging his approximately 500 listeners "to work together to fill that void. We have to do that. God bless you, Percy."

"Every day of his life, he taught somebody something," DeGeurin said.

Foreman was an institution "in this community long before I became a lawyer, and I'm finishing 30 years as a judge," said State District Judge Miron Love, 67.

DeGeurin's brother, Dick DeGuerin, who spells his name differently from Mike and who is a former member of the same firm, said that when Foreman started out, "Criminal law was not glamorous."

"It was dirty work, and the lawyers who practiced it were dirtier than their clients," DeGuerin said. "You elevated that to an honorable profession."

DeGuerin said Foreman "taught the virtues of courage, strength, hard work — and no compromise."

Defense attorney Richard "Racehorse" Haynes described Foreman as "the quintessential trial lawyer."

Panorama of pants plentiful for fall

By BARBARA DeWITT
Copley News Service

NEW YORK — Pants — that's big news for fall fashion, and leading the parade are Bill Blass and Carolyne Roehm.

Both of these almost-couture designers who create gorgeous clothes for the rich and famous skirted the miniskirt issue with plenty of pants. When they did show skirts, they usually were slim and hit just above the knee, and the pants were pleated and tailored or palazzo (also called evening pajamas).

There was a mixing and matching of menswear plaids, checks and herringbones, a sophisticated return to monochromatic color schemes (head-to-toe ensembles in black, blue, green, red or the "new" purples) and a fresh look.

Silhouettes are looking sleek and shapely with no frills — and very few shoulder pads. Jackets continue to be long, in princess or riding coat shapes with velvet-trimmed collars or streamlined into simple one-button, cardigan styles (without lapels).

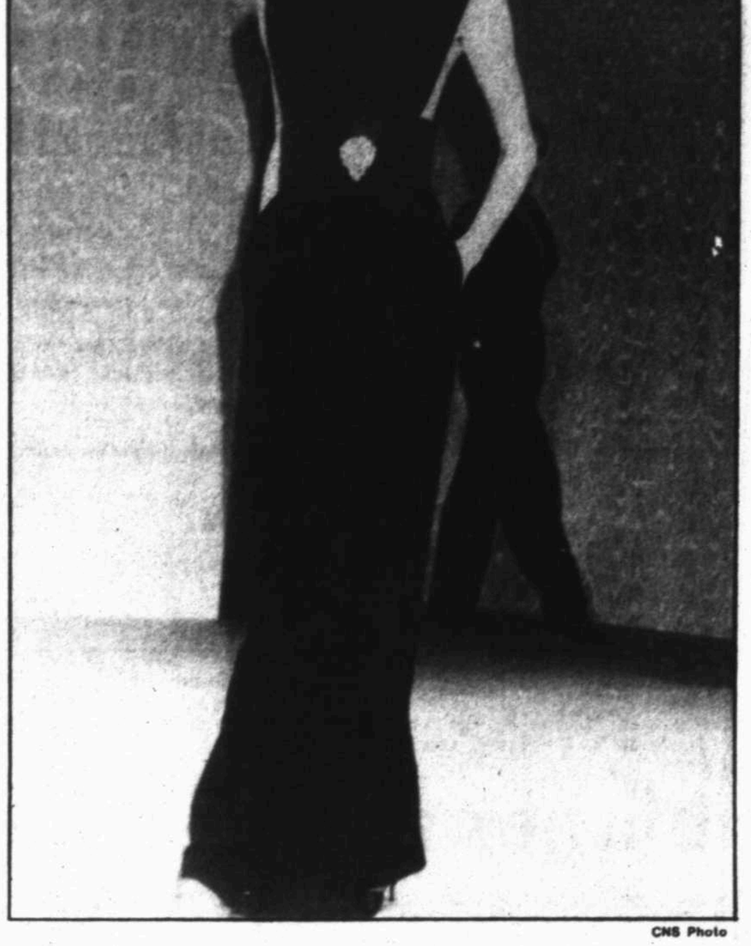

MORE JACKET styles to look for, come fall, are cropped, bolero, spencer and peplumed. While last year the peplum was completely around the waist, this year it's only in the back, which is more flattering to most figures.

Cashmere sweaters in mock turtle, crew and jewel necklines will replace silk shirts, and you'll see them worn snug and tucked into trousers, often belted with last year's crocodile belt.

While jumpsuits may be the newest look at the restaurant or nightclub, especially when topped with short beaded or fur jackets, there's still a need for dresses, and the look is that '50s sheath worn by Audrey Hepburn in "Breakfast at Tiffany's" or the classic princess silhouette favored by Princess Di.

There are a few chemises and Empire waists this year and an occasional baby doll or flirt skirt, but most dresses are cut to show cleavage, not crinolines.

And, speaking of decolletage, there's plenty of it, ranging from plunging V's to squared scoops to transparent chiffon. And to keep the chill off exposed chests, coats are big and cozy, sometimes in Mongolian lamb, mohair, boucle or wool felt. Collars are inspired by Christian Lacroix's fichus, which look like shawls. Some are so deep that they can be pulled up and used as hoods; others rise high into tunnel shapes to keep the wind off the neck and chin.

This black matte silk crepe jumpsuit by designer Carolyne Roehm bares the sides and emphasizes the waist.

WHILE BLASS and Roehm were both hooked on the classics, they had their own interpretations.

Blass had a chic sheath in black jersey that featured a long-sleeved ultrashort bolero over a strapless dress, and a black velvet sheath wrapped and crisscrossed around the hips in bands of satin that ended in a saucy but sophisticated bow.

Roehm got raves with a group of purple separates that included a stunning purple haze mohair clutch coat over an amethyst ribbed wool sweater with a Mongolian lamb-trimmed cowl neckline and indigo suede skirt, an amethyst Mongolian lamb clutch coat and a fluffy lamb chubby jacket that created a large-over-lean silhouette.

Both designers favored amethyst for fall, and it was used in big doses as well as accents with pink, dark green and black.

In evening trousers Blass wowed the audience with hot pink satin palazzo pants and a beaded, cropped jacket in fuchsia, while Roehm drew applause with a spruce green iridescent mohair jacket over a matching satin halter jumpsuit that featured a deep decolletage.

FOR THOSE black-tie nights on the town, the look is long. Party poufs are nowhere in sight, and elegant ankle-skimming columns of black or bright satin with matching coats or rustling, iridescent taffeta skirts topped with satin camisoles or cashmere sweaters are what's new again.

Carmelo Pomodoro presented a mixed bag of fashion ideas ranging from sleek, colorful leather skirts and jackets to under-the-bust-cut jumpers and jumpsuits featuring white crepe blouses with swing backs that literally swung out the back of the ensemble.

Like other designers this season, he used bold colors such as purple, red and green, sometimes in a monochromatic statement, other times mixing them together.

Trying his hand at British airs, Pomodoro offered bankers' gray and cobalt windowpane checks and plaids, but in stretch wool crepe trousers and cropped jackets, accented with sea green or cobalt.

Rising star Andrea Jovine made her show less of a stage production.

Her look for fall was polished yet sporty, and her chartreuse wool gabardine jacket with a long, shapely silhouette was a hit when worn with black or a matching ribbed knit cropped sweater and slightly above-the-knee skirt.

Another standout in Jovine's collection was a rayon navy jacquard stripe trouser suit with rust pinstripes worn with a rust-colored shell top. The suit featured Edwardian details with long, flattering lapels.

Designers skirt mini issue with mirage of pants

Hearst News Service

Remember that old adage about putting on your pants one leg at a time? Sure you do, but forget it. This fall those hordes of women who despaired at the return of the miniskirt and the attack of the rubber bicycle shorts will be popping into pants the quickest way possible.

Gone are those itsy-bitsy, teeny-weeny, panty-short sheaths. Designers have inched their skirts downward to the top of the knees and below for fall, but they have also correctly perceived that women want something more. They want comfort, as well as fashion.

They do not want to show off their stretch marks while shopping, working or dancing. They do not want to struggle around in ankle length skirts that make them look like latter 20th-century pioneers. And they do not want to wiggle into what could pass for a pair of rib knit skivvies.

No more sucking it in until you turn blue in the face. No more not eating lunch at lunch. These are pants normal, thicker than-pencil people can wear.

But no, shopping this fall will not be like that expedition back in '68 when you went out to the store and returned with the perfect little pantsuit.

There are pantsuits around, but most of what you will see in the stores will be sold as separates. And don't expect a return of the extreme bell bottoms of the '60s and '70s anytime soon, either. Basic, often man-tailored, tasteful trousers will be the order of the day.

The wrong pants can be as unseemly as a too-short skirt, so avoid ultra skinny-legged, thigh-clinging pants, even if you find them somewhere. They're on the way out.

Those easy-fitting cashmere duos, with sweater tops and loose legs, will be popular items and a lot dressier than sweat suits.

This fall and winter, pants — and these are really trousers — should be cut full and graceful.

Most will pants will have pleats in front, one or more, and perhaps elasticized side or back waists for more creature comfort. Handsome belts can be worn over the elastic.

Look, too, for many high-waisted trousers, some with loops for wearing narrow belts at the waists.

There will be trouser legs for every taste, whether cut straight or fairly full, tapered at the ankles or as full as palazzo pajamas or harem pants. Lengths will vary from cropped above the ankle to long on the shoe heel.

Expect to see trouser legs flapping in the breeze again. Worn with the right socks and loafers or opaque tights and suede flats, however, these high-water cuts make for a young and modern look, no matter the age of the wearer.

Newest on the pants scene for fall and winter are pants-skirts and skirt-pants — whatever you prefer to call them — that are so full it is difficult to determine their persuasion.

Pants-skirts may be flared, draped, pleated at the waist or pleated to the hems for a touch of Edwardian elegance, but all are divided like culottes.

Pants dressing is back for evening as well as daytime. Silk and crepe palazzo pajamas with an ethnic feel, and le smoking, with tuxedo striped trousers and beautiful white silk blouses and pearls, will be the two most popular choices.

Lacroix adapts to fashion's quieter ways

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — The pouf is now part of fashion history. So are its variants the balloon, the bubble and other elaborate shapes. What is happening to Christian Lacroix, the designer who exploded on the fashion scene by promoting these and other whimsical designs?

It was only a year and a half ago that he left the House of Patou in Paris to start his own couture salon. In March he showed his first ready-to-wear collection, with relatively quiet daytime clothes.

But as fashion takes a quieter path, is the new Christian Lacroix strong enough to maintain his stellar position?

The answer, provided by his first cruise collection shown in New York, is a resounding yes. For Lacroix has proved a quick study. He showed a real understanding of what "cruise" styles mean for the American customer. Beyond that, he showed that his range as a designer is profound. While he is widely credited with having a sense of humor about his clothes, he is also fully capable of working in a more practical, serious vein.

He brings distinction to the chemise, the jumpsuit and jackets and trousers. What he has absorbed and made his own is the American concept of sportswear.

Well organized as usual, the collection focuses on a few strong, bracing colors, mainly orange and blue, tempered with white. Dots — small polka dots or larger quarter-size specimens — enliven the colors; there is an occasional jungle print of flower patterns.

Fabrics are mainly three different weights of wool, including a double-faced material for short coats, a medium weight for suits and a very light fabric for warm weather. Lacroix also uses three different weights of cotton, including a rather stiff faille, gabardine and poplin for blouses. The sheer silks, georgette and organza, some silk crepe and a viscose-linen combination for prints complete the lineup.

The same style is available in many different fabrics, changing its look along the way. The jumpsuit, which buttons down the back, looks fiery in the jungle print, but almost sedate in polka dots.

What Lacroix has clearly mastered is the principle of changing parts to form distinctive outfits. It is an idea that many of his more experienced French colleagues have yet to comprehend.

The collection of about 30 outfits consequently has many different looks. Among the distinguished parts is the shapely chemise with a cool neckline that bares the shoulder blades and a long jacket with a curved peplum. The jacket is worn with a slightly rounded narrow skirt eased by inserts of puckered stretch material over the hips. Separated from its formal-looking jacket, the skirt becomes a play skirt with the addition of a navy and white striped T-shirt.

For dressier hours, there are wide pleated pants and slender tank-top dresses with a flurry of fullness at the hemline. Hemlines stop a couple of inches above the knees.

The American concept of "cruise wear" has little to do with ocean voyages. It involves midwinter vacation clothes in warm climates and work clothes in the Sun Belt. Lacroix grasps this idea knowledgeably. Priced from $200 to $1,200, his collection will be shipped to American stores in November, allowing southbound vacationers plenty of time to get their new wardrobes in order.

AT WIT'S END

Children's 'priorities' cost money

By ERMA BOMBECK

Bombeck

We've always had a philosophy about doling out money to our kids. Somehow it didn't seem fair to rob them of the poverty they so richly deserve by subsidizing them.

That philosophy carries with it guilt that is second only to stealing the Christmas tree from the orphanage. There are few parents in this world who can sit by and watch their kids struggle. You say you will, but you don't do it.

A father in California shared a little vignette that happened in his house recently. His wife came in carrying a large box of disposable diapers for their grandchild. They were trying to "help out" their daughter, who, according to her father, "has an entire living room wall with a monster stereo unit with the little lights running back and forth on a bar, dials that swing back and forth, and speakers that look like something NASA would use to launch a satellite.

"Their TV is remote control," he continues, "where they can have ... little boxes in each corner that lets them know what is going on ... like they do when watching baseball games. You see the pitcher get ready to throw the ball and the little squares in the corners show the guys on the bases. Our kids have one of those."

As he was sitting there trying to figure out why he and his wife are buying them diapers, he hears a conversation he does not believe. His daughter says, "Mother, did you ever pay me for the shirt and underclothes you bought Dad and put on my charge? And when we went to the hardware store and I paid for the set of screwdrivers, did you reimburse me?" No mention of the diapers, the milk, the bread, and the flow of countless gifts provided over the years.

In a way, parents have to take some of the responsibility for parents-give-and-kids-take, what's-yours-is-mine, and what's-mine-is-none-of-your-business. We start early rewarding them for everything from having bowel movements to breathing. We ask little in return.

Kids have different priorities. Mine would rather ride around in a non-air-conditioned car in Phoenix, where the summer temperature is 112, and join a health club.

Or to put it another way, they'd rather change channels than change diapers.

Throughout the years we've loaned money and demanded it back. We've gone through, "We're doing this because we love you" to, "You'll thank us for this someday." We tell them they're buying their own self-esteem and the only way they can pay for it is ... on time.

They'd rather have the money.

DEAR ABBY

Gift belongs to recipient, not giver

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I have an aunt who has been very close to me all of my life. She is nearing 80. About 15, maybe 20 years ago, Auntie gave one of her nieces a large wooden table when she got married. Since then, the couple has divorced. The niece has moved to another state, and her husband has remarried.

Auntie has asked me to get in touch with the ex-husband and ask him to send the table back to her! Abby, my aunt has no room in her small apartment for this table. When I reminded her of this, she said, "I don't care — and I will give it to the Goodwill if I have to!"

When I told my aunt that I would not feel comfortable calling this man and asking for the table and suggested that she call her niece and let her handle it, Auntie said, "I'll remember that you refused to help me when I needed help."

She hurt me by this remark and left me totally confused. This aunt has always said, "If I give you something and you don't want it, don't give it away — give it back to me."

If you were in my place, what would you do? — PUZZLED IN BUFFALO

DEAR PUZZLED: I would stick to my guns and not be maneuvered into calling the ex-husband and asking him to return the table. Once a gift is given, it belongs to the recipient to do with whatever he or she chooses. The giver has no claim on it whatsoever. Auntie's comment that she will "remember" that you didn't help her when she needed it sounds like a veiled threat. You have a right to feel hurt, but there is no reason to be confused. Auntie is petty. Let her pout.

DEAR ABBY: I'm sure you received a lot of letters about using the telephone during a thunderstorm. "Washington Reader's" letter proves that a little learning is a dangerous thing, and here he is encouraging other people to do something that could easily kill them. Lightning, with its fantastically high voltages and currents, is not limited by the same rules that control your usual power line electricity.

The extreme voltages enable lightning to spark through the air, and in so doing, start an arc of ionized air that conducts current quite well. The size of the wires in the telephone does NOT prohibit transmission of the current (that's current, not voltage). If the wire "blows," it leaves a streak of ionized metal vapor that serves the lightning as a fine conductor to the telephone user, who was probably already fried by the very current that "blew" the wire, anyway.

So, Abby, don't believe "Washington Reader" for a minute. During a thunderstorm, stay away from the telephone, your computer keyboard, the earphones on your hi-fi, electric shaver — anything connected to the power line or outdoor wiring of any kind. — EARNEST C. WOLFE, TOKYO, JAPAN

DEAR MR. WOLFE: Thanks for some sound advice.

DEAR READERS: Talk about vision concerning television, read on: "I believe television is going to be the test of the modern world, and that in this new opportunity to see beyond the range of our vision, we shall discover either a new and unbearable disturbance of the general peace, or a saving radiance in the sky. We shall stand or fall by television — of that I am quite sure." — E.B. WHITE (Harper's magazine, October 1938)

To get Abby's booklet "How to Write Letters for All Occasions," send a check or money order for $2.89 ($3.39 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, Letter Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054 (postage and handling are included).

The advantages of the all-inclusive vacation by Adventure Travel

The all-inclusive vacation is becoming more and more popular, according to the professional travel consultants at Adventure Travel. Located in Oakridge Square, at the corner of Wadley and Garfield, Adventure Travel has all the details on the convenience of a cruise, Club Med or Jack Tar Village dream vacation.

Paying for all expenses up front is appealing to a great many vacationers. For this reason, cruises have always been a favorite. One price includes airfare, ports of call, all meals, shipboard activities and soft drinks. Some cruise lines have now dispensed with tipping. Alcoholic beverages are inexpensive and kept on a tab until the end of your trip.

In addition to cruises, Club Med and Jack Tar Village vacations also include all activities–airfare and watersports, as well as all beverages (soft drinks, wine, beer and cocktails).

The newest Jack Tar Village is north of Puerto Vallarta, at Nuevo Vallarta. Adventure Travel agent Polly Welmaker has been to this newest one and recommends it highly. Club Med has also added a new resort to its Mexico retreats. Huatulco is located south of Acapulco, and is known as "the undiscovered Riviera." You'll enjoy three beautiful beaches, and will be immersed in exotic, tropical culture.

Not only will you find relief from the stresses of everyday life, but you will discover a totally different, unique way of vacationing, since everything is paid for in advance with an all inclusive vacation. You can forget about money, and concentrate on fun, fun, fun.

Each day will bring new adventures and experiences. You'll meet new friends who all have the same goal–fun, sun and relaxation. Every Jack Tar Village, for example, can bring you new experiences, and each offers a character of its own. Stroll down to the beach for a relaxing sail or an adventure in windsurfing. And remember it will only cost you your time, since the all inclusive vacation includes free activities.

You can join in the fun of a barbeque beach party, or you can try many of the other activities. Some villages have golfing, bicycling and tennis. Most villages even offer unlimited cigarettes–you don't have to worry about anything.

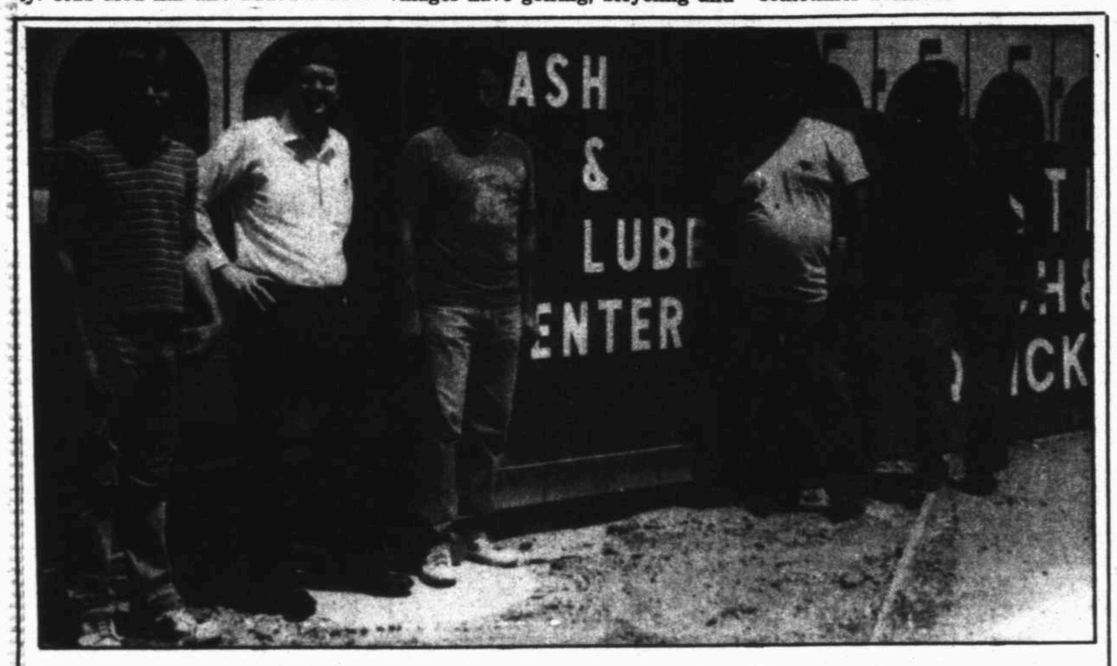

If you are in the mood for excitement, try river rafting or walking up a waterfall in Jamaica; or, test your luck in the casinos of the Bahamas and the Dominican Republic. Local markets in all the Jack Tar Villages offer interesting native crafts, and duty-free goods imported from Europe are most attractive.

Basic features such as meals, transfers, round trip airfare from Dallas, cocktails and watersports such as sailing, water skiing, snorkeling, scuba lessons and windsurfing are offered at each location (every Jack Tar Village varies in the exact watersport events available).

For more information on Jack Tar Village, Club Med or cruise all inclusive vacations, call any of the trained travel assistants at Adventure Travel today. Call 683-4211 and get set for a wonderful time! Three to four week reservations for these vacations are recommended, but spur of the moment bookings are sometimes available.

The staff at Chaparral Wash & Lube Center, 2300 N. Big Spring, will do a job for you that is "second to none". From left are Steve Thompson, general supervisor, owner Leon Jeffcoat, Guillermo Portillo, car wash supervisor, Gilbert Gutierrez, car was attendant, and C.C. Banks, lube center specialist.

Chaparral Wash & Lube Center suggests pre-Labor Day car care

The service specialists at Chaparral Wash and Lube Center suggest that now is the time to service and clean your car before the Labor Day holiday weekend. Start your trip off right with a quality quick lube and oil change and Midland's best full-service car wash. Chaparral, located at 2300 North Big Spring, is committed to your convenience and satisfaction.

"Our two-bay Lube Center is available to change your car's oil and filter, check fluid levels and hoses and lubricate the chassis," said owner Leon Jeffcoat. "Included in the lube center package, at prices ranging from $15.50 to $21.50 is a full-service car wash at no additional charge."

Chaparral customer J. L. Yates commented that the service in the lube center is superior. "I came in one day on my lunch hour and my car's oil was changed quickly and expertly. The attendant, C.C. Banks was extremely helpful and courteous. I had plenty of time afterward for both a car wash and some errand running before my lunch hour was up."

The lube center is located at the rear of the facility which faces Big Spring Street, so just pull into the north driveway and follow the sign at the north side of the building.

You can depend on Chaparral to treat your car right, with gentle brushes, soft water and attention to detail. The friendly staff will bring your vehicle to a showroom shine.

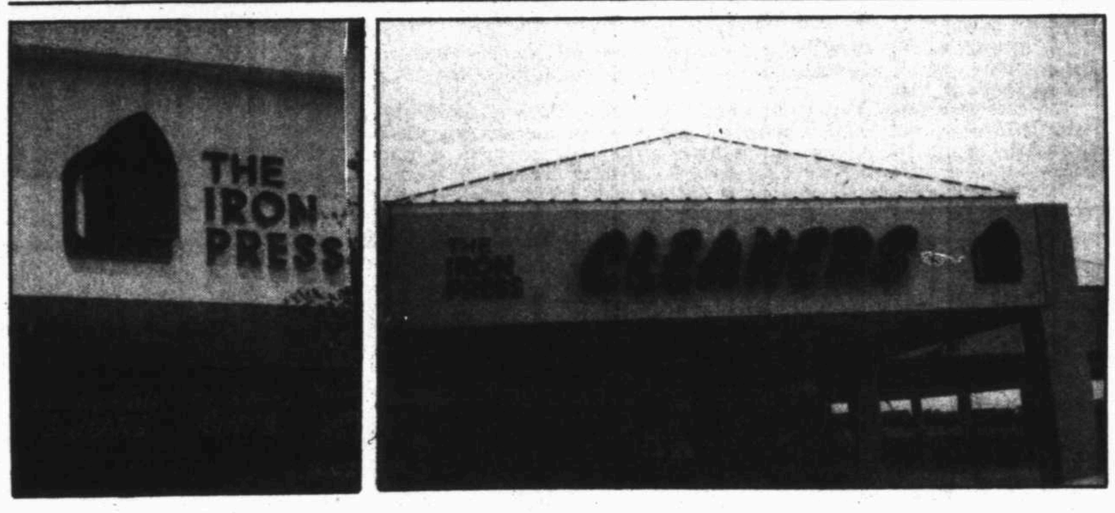

Besides keeping your car clean inside and out, Chaparral's detail services may be just the extra lift your car needs. Hand waxing, carpet and upholstery shampooing are all available. Just ask for a quote on these services.

Chaparral Wash & Lube Center offers Texaco gasoline, and you can receive discounts on your car wash with each fill-up.

Generally open on rainy days, Chaparral's lube center and gasoline pumps are at your service. With the purchase of gasoline or an oil change, if the clouds are threatening, you'll receive a rain check for your next car wash.

"We will be closed on Labor Day so our employees can enjoy the day off," Jeffcoat said. "We have a good base of dependable employees. This is how we maintain consistent quality in the car wash and the lube center."

Chaparral Wash & Lube Center is conveniently located at the corners of Big Spring and Scharbauer and for your convenience accepts Texaco, Visa, MasterCard, American Express and Discover credit cards. Hours are 8 a.m. to 6:30 p.m. Monday through Friday and 8 a.m. to 6 p.m. Saturday. For more information call 682-8013.

The Iron Press Cleaners serves Midlanders with three locations

You'll really notice the difference between dressed and well dressed when you have your clothing cared for by the professionals at The Iron Press Cleaners. With three convenient locations in Midland to serve you, The Iron Press Cleaners will give your clothes the professional finish that you desire.

The main store, located near Albertson's, at the corner of Wadley and Midland Drive, is the headquarters for a state of the art in-house plant. This is where all the laundry and dry cleaning is processed. Alterations by an experienced seamstress are done at this location, also.

The other two handy locations are #2, at the corner of Midkiff and Loop 250 (across from Burger King) and #3, at 1707 North Big Spring.

Customers of The Iron Press Cleaners enjoy same day service on dry cleaning and laundry if it is received by 9 a.m. Monday through Friday. Your order will be ready for you after work that afternoon after 5:00 p.m.

In addition, most alteration work will be completed the day it is brought in to The Iron Press Cleaners.

You can count on quality service at the Iron Press Cleaners, which is family owned and operated. The staff believes in treating your clothing as if it were their own. Their expertise is reflected in every order they process.

One of the many benefits of having your clothes cleaned by The Iron Press Cleaners is that your clothes will not smell like heavy solvents, as is the case with many dry cleaners. The Iron Press Cleaners uses only expensive, professional dry cleaning materials, which do not leave a lingering odor on your valuable clothing.

Be sure to take advantage of the many everyday specials at The Iron Press Cleaners. Men's laundry shirts are priced at 99¢, and you can have three pairs of pants processed for $4.95. The Iron Press Cleaners also has a wedding gown service where you can have that special dress dry cleaned and boxed airtight, for years of protection.

Hours at The Iron Press Cleaners #1 are Saturday from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m., and Monday-Friday from 7 a.m. to 6:30 p.m. The #2 and #3 hours are 7 a.m. to 6 p.m. Monday-Friday and Saturday from 9:30 a.m. to 1 p.m.

Midland Angel Jim McCollom became the Texas League batting champion Monday by warming up relief pitchers. He played late in the game, but did not bat.

McCollom wins TL batting title

By BILL GRIMES
Sports Writer

You can say Jim McCollom backed into the Texas League batting championship. But would you be telling the truth?

Sure, the Midland Angels first baseman rode the bench Monday during the season finale against Wichita to protect his one-point lead over El Paso's Mario Monico. The decision to sit was made easier when it was learned that the El Paso-San Antonio doubleheader set for Monday was rained out and would not be rescheduled.

But McCollom had finally pulled ahead of Monico after 134 games with three hits in four trips to the plate Sunday. It was the culmination of a long, hard road that has included back surgery, slumps and groin pulls incurred since he signed with the California Angels organization out of Clemson University in 1985.

DESPITE McCOLLOM'S big night Sunday, the Angels were eliminated from the pennant chase. On that basis, the 25-year-old handyman didn't mind sitting out.

"I thought about (playing) it a little bit," he said. "But it made sense for me not to play. The game doesn't count, but the batting title is something I'll remember for a long time."

McCollom's .343 mark (155-for-452) was his highest in what had been an injury-marred pro career before this season. In fact, he'd missed 1½ years with back surgery performed midway through the 1986 season.

But his emergence as a first baseman forced the Angels to move Lee Stevens to the outfield before the 1988 season, though McCollom can also play left and right field, third base and even catcher.

McCollom got off to a respectable start, batting .297 in his first 13 games. Then the righthanded hitter caught fire with a .362 mark in his next 22 games to move among the top five batters in the league.

But a groin injury took its toll on McCollom, who wasn't blessed with abundant speed anyway, so that by July 4, his average was down to .312 — 49 points behind Monico, who led then-runnerup Jeff Manto of Midland by 43 points at the time.

Monico, who served mostly as the Diablos' designated hitter, batted .314 after July 4, respectable, but not enough to overcome McCollom's .394 clip over the last eight weeks of the season.

McCollom said a mechanical flaw made the effects of his midsummer groin injury even worse.

"I was jumping into everything and I needed to stay back," he said. "Then I was starting to get good pitches to hit."

The emergence of Stevens may have been a factor there in the final weeks, as the Angel left fielder blasted 10 of his 23 homers in his last 17 games and almost reached the .300 mark himself after a slow start.

Despite his late spurt, McCollom didn't have the title on his mind until the season's final days.

"I wasn't even thinking about it until a week ago," he said. Nor was it high on his priority list during spring training.

"It wasn't my main goal this season, but I'll always remember it."

McCOLLOM HOPES his big year will help him leave Double-A ball behind next season. Understandably so.

"I wouldn't want to come back here after hitting .340 here this year," he said. "Maybe next year, I'll get a good chance at Triple-A. Then if I do good there, maybe I'll get to the big leagues."

Monico finished at .342 after his average dropped 20 points on the last month of the season. Still, the El Paso outfielder finished far ahead of third-place batter Domingo Michel of San Antonio, who hit .330 in only 98 games.

And in turn, Michel was far ahead of Arkansas' Tom Baine, who hit .308. In fact, only nine TL hitters broke the .300 barrier. Jackson's Angelo Cuevas was 10th in the batting race with a .298.

Midland Angels drop '88 finale

By BILL GRIMES
Sports Writer

While the Midland Angels were playing out the string with some unusual player moves, Rusty Ford was setting foot on a professional baseball field for perhaps the last time.

The veteran Wichita Pilots hurler hadn't won a game all season in 52 relief appearances, so Pilot manager Pat Kelly lets him start in Monday's season finale and ...

...he sets the Haloes down on five hits in the first six innings of a 9-2 Pilot win that wrapped up the Texas League season for both teams.

Ford admittedly hasn't set the minor leagues afire since graduating from Texas Wesleyan College in 1984. The Lufkin native advanced to the San Diego Padres' Class AAA farm at Las Vegas, Nev., last season, but was returned to Wichita this season after several unimpressive long relief outings.

And, an 0-5 won-loss record and 4.72 earned run average for 1988 isn't exactly credentials for promotion. So Ford is starting to think about another career.

"It depends on what happens," the submarining righthander says. "It's probably my last year with the Padres, because they have a lot of prospects.

"If I'm going to get a shot, it will be somewhere else."

Joe Fan couldn't perceive Ford's statistical mediocrity by the way Midland batters performed Monday. Singles by Lee Stevens and Jesus Alfaro, along with a sacrifice fly by Tom Alfredson in the second inning produced the only run standing between Ford and six shutout innings.

"I was nervous before the game," Ford said. "But I started concentrating out there and forgot about the nerves.

"You really have to concentrate a lot more as a starter," Ford added.

If no teams come calling next spring, Ford hopes to either land a college coaching job or continue his association with a hardwood flooring company in Birmingham, Ala. — a firm that installs gymnasium floors.

The Angels got their other run in the seventh inning off reliever Paul Quinzer. Stevens doubled and scored Midland's 727th and final run of the season on a fielding error by Wichita first sacker Craig Cooper.

Wichita picked on Class AA newcomer Roberto Hernandez for six runs in five innings, and treated veteran reliever Vinicio Cedeno little better before Gary Buckels was finally able to shut the Pilots down with five strikeouts in the last three innings.

Seven of the Pilots' 11 hits were for extra bases, including a double and triple by Thomas Howard and two doubles by Jeff Hermann. Both Howard and Hermann collected three RBI to lead Wichita.

Wichita scored three runs in the second inning, followed by one in the first, two in the fourth and sixth innings each, and one in the seventh.

But the Angels had been eliminated from the Texas League playoff hunt on Sunday, so the locals were understandably light-hearted.

Being out of the pennant chase gave Halo skipper Max Oliveras a chance to juggle lineups in hopes of preserving milestone batting averages.

For example, first baseman Jim McCollom was able to preserve his TL batting crown (see related story) despite playing an inning of first base as a result of juggling caused by an injury to catcher Mike Knapp in a home plate collision.

McCollom was able to avoid batting because pitcher Phil Venturino was available for pinch-hitting duty, perhaps the only time in professional baseball this season that a pitcher has hit for a batting champ.

Oh yes, Venturino grounded to second. And fellow pitcher Marty Reed wasn't any more successful with the stick, going 0-for-3 as a designated hitter in relief of Jesus Alfaro.

Alfaro was lifted after stroking a second-inning single, bringing his average to .300 for the eighth season in his long minor league career.

Angel third baseman Jeff Manto likewise protected his .301 average by sitting out all but the last two innings, when he came in as a defensive replacement at...first base.

Steers open campaign with Open

By BILL GRIMES
Sports Writer

BIG SPRING — What ever superlatives there are about a football team, David Thompson uses them to describe Lubbock Estacado.

"I know they're big, fast, quick and tough," the Big Spring football coach said. That's the bad news.

The good news is that Thompson has an extra week to prepare his young Steers for the perennial District 1-4A power, because Big Spring has an open date Friday — the first week of the regular season for both schools.

Some coaches might bristle at having to start the regular season a week late, but Thompson is one Steer who won't chomp at the bit.

"I think not having to play a game this week will be beneficial to us," Thompson said. "Since we're putting in a new offense (changing from a Veer into a multiple offense), we'll use this time to continue working on the fundamentals like we did in two-a-days."

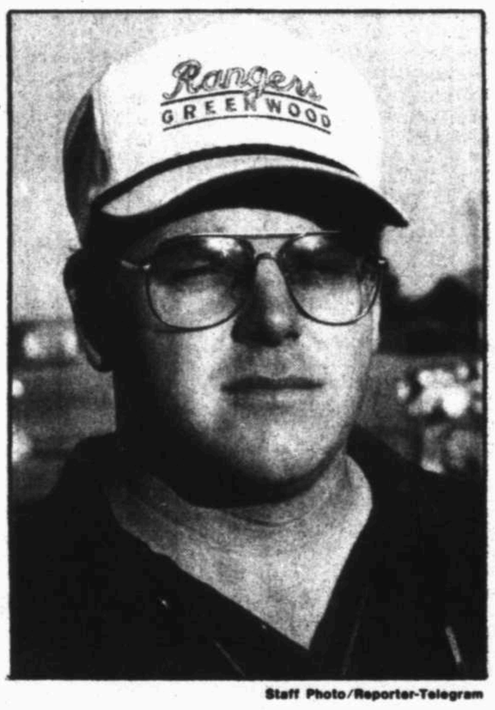

THE STEERS are coming off a scrimmage with Wolfforth Frenship in which they were outscored, three touchdowns to two. However, the Steers performed better in two quarters of game-type play after Frenship burned them for two scores in the controlled scrimmage portion.

"The longer it went, the better we were," Thompson said. "It seemed like they did better when we (the coaching staff) weren't out there."

Junior quarterback Rance Thompson nailed down the starting slot for next week by completing seven-of-13 passes for 125 yards against Frenship. Of course, young Thompson had a head start on his competition, having worked with the system at Post before moving to Big Spring when his father took the head coaching job.

All-district candidate Tony Lewis was young Thompson's main target with four catches for 80 yards, while speedsters Dennis Hartsfield and Rodney Brown ran for 50 and 60 yards, respectively. The Steers amassed 225 yards total offense in the two game-type quarters, while holding Frenship to under 200 — 50 of those on the first two plays.

Defensively, the Steers slipped a little from their performance in the previous week's scrimmage against Lubbock Dunbar.

Greenwood coach Bob Purser ...pleased with Ranger scrimmage

"We weren't as quick or sharp this week," Thompson said. Nevertheless, middle linebacker Jason Phillips, tackle Dusty Reeves and sophomore outside backer Jermaine Miller stood out.

Thompson will kill two birds with one stone by scouting the Estacado-Plainview game Thursday in Lubbock. That's because Plainview is the Steers' second opponent on Sept. 16.

AROUND THE BASIN: Greenwood mentor Bob Purser said his Rangers' 3-1 scrimmage win over Seminole last Friday was a good momentum-builder for the tough Denver City team that invades east Midland County on Friday.

"I thought our kids did real well against Seminole, but they kind of ran out of gas at the end," Purser said. "Still, they showed that they improved from last week (when the Rangers scrimmaged Coahoma)."

Quarterback Randy Donnell showed signs of adapting to his new position by running for two touchdowns. Donnell played left half last season, but people expecting three yards and a cloud of dust from the Rangers may be left hanging, because the senior threw well to ends Tim Flowers, Tom Marvin and Sean Holcomb, according to Purser.

Defensively, the Rangers shined in the controlled portion of the scrimmage by holding Seminole to only three first downs. Tackle Garry Popham and end Terry Morgan led the defensive front, while Holcomb and fellow linebacker Jimmy O'Briant provided able backup and Dave Dixon and Larry Nichols covered the corners.

STANTON BATTLED to a scoreless draw with Wink in their second scrimmage, after tying Colorado City with two scores apiece the previous week.

Buff coach Dale Ruth praised defensive tackle George Reyna, linebacker David Mendez, ends Jeff Hall and Lance Jenkins and cornerback Anthony Inman for their play against Wink. Offense is another story, however.

"The offense is always behind, especially when you switch," Ruth said. "We feel like we can pass better from the Wing-T than from the wishbone."

At least the Buffaloes got a look at somebody else's Wing-T last Friday. The Wildcats were the District 5A champion using their own version of the Wing-T.

Speaking of offense, it was recently determined that 28.1 percent of Texas high school offenses line up in the I-formation, while 26.9 use multiple sets.

Seventeen-six percent of Texas schools still use the Wing-T, while 11.3 run the Veer and 8.6 run the Wishbone.

Oh yes, 21 schools use the run-and-shoot offense — you know, the one with four wide receivers.

Rain Flushing Meadow winner in first round

U.S. Open Tennis

NEW YORK (AP) — Wimbledon is famous for its wet weather but it has had nothing lately on Flushing Meadow during the U.S. Open.

The opening day of the final Grand Slam tennis event of 1988 was curtailed severely by rain. Just five matches were completed on Monday, with No. 11 Zina Garrison the only seed to finish a match, a 6-0, 6-3 rout of Nicole Provis of Australia.

It was the second consecutive scheduled day of play to be ruined by raindrops. Last year's men's final was postponed from a Sunday to a Monday by showers.

Mats Wilander, who lost that title match to Ivan Lendl, led Greg Holmes 6-2, 6-1, 1-2 on the stadium court when Monday's match was halted. It was to be completed today.

Also scheduled to see action today were women's defending champion and No. 2 seed Martina Navratilova, who was to play Catarina Lindqvist of Sweden; fourth-seeded Pam Shriver, against Anne Smith; and No. 5 Gabriela Sabatini, against Argentine countrywoman Bettina Fulco.

Among the men, No. 5 Boris Becker was to meet Todd Nelson, 11th-seed Brad Gilbert opposed Milan Srejber of Czechoslovakia, and No. 16 John McEnroe, a four-time Open champion, was scheduled against Leonardo Lavalle of Mexico.

The top seeds, Lendl, after his fourth straight American title, and Steffi Graf, going for the Grand Slam, won't begin play before Wednesday.

Wilander, the Australian and French Open champion this year, is seeded second here. The third seed and winner of the other 1988 Grand Slam crown, Wimbledon champion Stefan Edberg, didn't get onto the court against Libor Pimek of Czechoslovakia. He was scheduled to try today.

The other completed matches saw Darren Cahill of Australia beating Lawson Duncan 6-0, 6-0, 6-2; Amy Frazier over Olga Tsarbopoulou of Greece 6-1, 7-6 (7-4); Dinky Van Rensburg of South Africa over Wendy White 6-3, 6-4 and Elna Reinach of South Africa downing Radka Zrubakova of Czechoslovakia 6-1, 6-4.

Garrison was up 6-0, 5-0 against Provis, a semifinalist in the French Open this year.

"It was scary for me then, at that point, because I do not like to win love and love," Garrison said. "Going into the next round, it is like a jinx and you want the player to have another game.

"I think right from the beginning she was thinking I was staying back. I took her second serves and came into the net and I was serving-and-volleying and I think I gave her a different game than she expected me to play."

Garrison has had a rough year. She has made it to six tournament semifinals but never into a final. Once ranked as high as fifth in the world, the Houston native has slipped to 12th.

"I've been playing some really good tennis but my ranking doesn't show it," she said. "I've been playing people in the top 30 and reaching the semis and quarters of most of the tournaments."

The quarterfinals of the Open is the best Garrison has done, making the final eight in 1985. She is hopeful that her ninth year on the professional tour will be marked by her increased maturity.

NFL holds Heartbreak Day for high draft choices

Associated Press

Marc Wilson and Rusty Hilger, who competed with each other for the same job last season, are now without one. So are some former high draft choices who never quite became the NFL players the scouts thought they would be.

"There will be mistakes in draft choices," San Diego Coach Al Saunders said Monday after cutting cornerback Lou Brock Jr., son of the baseball Hall of Famer and a second-round choice a year ago. "You never know for sure how people will develop, and we're disappointed this high pick did not pan out."

Monday was the NFL's annual Heartbreak Day, the deadline for teams to get down to the 47-player limit for the start of the season. Not only did the usual complement of rookies and free agents go, but so did dozens of veterans and some former high draft picks.

Not only did the Green Bay Packers cut Wilson, whom they would have had to pay $550,000 this year, but the Los Angeles Raiders waived Hilger, with whom he alternated at quarterback last season.

"From day one, it was one of those deals that was not meant to be," said Wilson, who signed with the Packers at the start of training camp after being released by Los Angeles. "I wanted it to be. A lot of people wanted it to be. For whatever reason, it just didn't happen. Now I can get on with something else."

Like the Chargers, the Raiders were another team that admitted making a mistake with a high pick. They cut Bob Buczkowski, their first-round pick in 1986.

Buczkowski, a defensive end, had spent almost all of his first two years on injured reserve with a bad back.

And the New Orleans Saints and Denver Broncos swapped disappointing first-rounders, the Saints sending last year's top pick, defensive tackle Shawn Knight to the Broncos for Denver's 1988 first-rounder, nose tackle Ted Gregory.

Gregory was third on the Broncos' depth chart while Saints Coach Jim Mora said of the 6-foot-6, 288-pound Knight, who has never come close to starting:

"Denver likes Shawn's size and strength."

AMONG THE other oddities were the Los Angeles Rams, who left themselves with just one quarterback, Jim Everett, after cutting backups Hugh Millen and Steve Dils. Atlanta immediately claimed Millen and Coach John Robinson said he hoped to re-sign Dils once he cleared waivers.

Some of those cut were more bitter than others.

"I know what the business is like, how ruthless it can be," 32-year-old Doug Betters, an 11-year defensive end and one of the last of Miami's "Killer B's" said after being waived by the Dolphins. "I was just an insurance policy the last two years. I don't think I was ever given a chance to compete for a starting job."

Among the other veterans to go were a group with recent Super Bowl rings: tight end Clint Didier and running back Keith Griffin of the defending champion Washingon Redskins; wide receiver Stacy Robinson, guard Chris Godfrey and safety Greg Lasker of the New York Giants' 1986 champions; and wide receiver Keith Ortego and defensive back Reggie Phillips, who returned an interception 26 yards for a touchdown in Chicago's 46-10 Super Bowl victory over New England after the 1985 season.

"It was probably the toughest cut we had to make," Redskins general manager Bobby Beathard said of Didier, who lost his job to second-year man Craig McEwen. "But we felt Craig would help us more with our passing game. He was a little more maneuverable."

Among the other cuts were Paul McFadden, whose 91 field goals were more than any Philadelphia Eagle in history; strong safety Lester Lyles, a two-year starter for the New York Jets; wide receiver Frankie Neal, Green Bay's second-leading receiver as a rookie last year with 36 receptions; wide receiver Mike Jones, New Orleans' leading receiver in 1986; running back Walter Abercrombie and linebacker Robin Cole of Pittsburgh, defensive backs Russell Carter and Ron Fellows of the Raiders and three other Super Bowl veterans: running back Gene Lang and defensive back Steve Wilson of Denver and defensive lineman Jerome Sally of the Giants' 1986 team, who was cut by the Colts.

Houston cut defensive lineman Charles Martin, best known for his body slam of Chicago quarterback Jim McMahon while with Green Bay in 1986, a play that got him a two-game suspension.

In addition, veteran tight end Kellen Winslow, once an All-Pro, was suspended by San Diego for refusing to play. Winslow, who suffered a severe knee injury in 1984, said he was unfit. The Chargers said he was fit.

Cincinnati waived its rights to two holdouts, fullback Larry Kinnebrew and defensive back Robert Jackson, leaving them free to sign with anyone.

Center Mike Baab was traded to New England for a draft choice by Cleveland, which also cut veteran defensive linemen Al "Bubba" Baker and Dave Puzzuoli. Baker was the defensive rookie of the year with Detroit in 1978.

There also appeared to be considerable stashing of promising players on injured reserve by the more talent-laden teams.

The San Francisco 49ers put talented but raw second-round draft choice Pierce Holt, a defensive lineman, on injured reserve with what was described as "a hyperextended right toe."

ON INJURED reserve for the Saints went fullback Lydell Carr with a knee injury. Carr, who played at Oklahoma, was a fourth-round draft choice who has been plagued by hamstring pulls but was declared healthy on Sunday by Coach Jim Mora.

And the Giants, overstacked in some positions, put several young players on the list, including offensive lineman Mike Ariey, said to have shoulder and knee injuries, and defensive back Sammy Lilly, with a knee injury. Jeff Rutledge, their third quarterback, also went on IR with a knee injury, although he played almost a half in Friday night's exhibition game in Cleveland.

Many of the veterans released, particularly the younger ones, may be picked up by the end of the week.

McFadden, who missed several crucial kicks last year, said he felt he was in the form he showed in 1984, when he made 30 of 37 field goals and scored 116 points. He lost his job to Dean Dorsey, who was given a $65,000 signing bonus after leaving the Canadian Football League.

Taylor handed long suspension

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. (AP) — Lawrence Taylor gave no indication of having a substance abuse problem during training camp and seemed determined to re-establish himself as the NFL's most dominant defensive player, coaches and teammates say.

But the New York Giants' All-Pro linebacker saw his 1988 season thrown into turmoil Monday when the NFL handed him a 30-day suspension for violating the league's drug policy for a second time.

Coach Bill Parcells and NFL spokesman Joe Browne said Taylor was suspended after testing positive following "a recent" mandatory preseason drug test. They declined to disclose what substance Taylor was abusing.

"I am a little surprised," said Parcells, a hard-liner on drug problems. "You don't expect these types of things. I had every reason to believe everything was all right (with Taylor.)"

Taylor had acknowledged that he underwent treatment for a cocaine problem in 1986 and he outlined his problems with the drug in his book "LT: Living on the Edge."

"He is a person who has clearly stated that he has not found the answers in life that he has found on a football field," David Falkner, the co-author of Taylor's book, said in a television interview.

Most of Taylor's teammates declined to talk about the suspension.

"In practices and games I couldn't see anything," cornerback Perry Williams said. "He was the same way he has always been, enthusiastic. He was giving his all."

The suspension means Taylor will miss four games, including the season opener next Monday night against the Super Bowl champion Washington Redskins.

"Obviously when you lose a player of that nature, it will have an effect," said Parcells. "However, that player could have been hurt in the first play of practice on Wednesday and we'd have had to make an adjustment."

Taylor is the ninth player suspended this summer for substance abuse problems. One, Tony Collins of the Indianapolis Colts, was suspended for the season for a third violation.

Seven others, including Dexter Manley of the Redskins, were suspended for 30 days in training camp after failing pre-season drug testing. All will be back for the regular-season, including Manley, who reported to the Redskins on Monday.

Taylor, who must stay away from the Giants training facilities during his suspension, has an unlisted telephone number and could not be reached for comment. He had expressed high hopes for this season in an Aug. 9 interview.

"I want people to say ... he can play football and he knows how to lead a team and take it to the Super Bowl," Taylor said. "That's what I'm planning to do, help this team as much as possible. I'm not going to do it by myself, but I am going to do my part to get this team back to the Super Bowl."

Parcells would not comment on whether the Giants plan to pay Taylor his $62,500 weekly salary while he is under suspension. The coach also would not comment on the changes the Giants planned for weakside linebacker.

"There are a lot of things you have to overcome every year in this business, or you have to attempt to do that," he said.

Parcells also did not know whether Taylor would undergo rehabilitation during his suspension. Gary Kovach, Taylor's agent, was not taking telephone calls from the media.

The league drug policy states that second-time offenders must undergo some type of rehabilitation.

Parcells said he spoke with Taylor earlier Monday but would not disclose what was said.

Williams said he felt the team could overcome Taylor's absence.

"He is going to be sorely missed. He is one of the best defensive players in the league, sure to be a Hall of Famer. I just feel bad he won't be there." Williams said. "But we have got some guys like Andy Headen and Byron Hunt who are capable of doing an adequate job. I'm sure they will play very well."

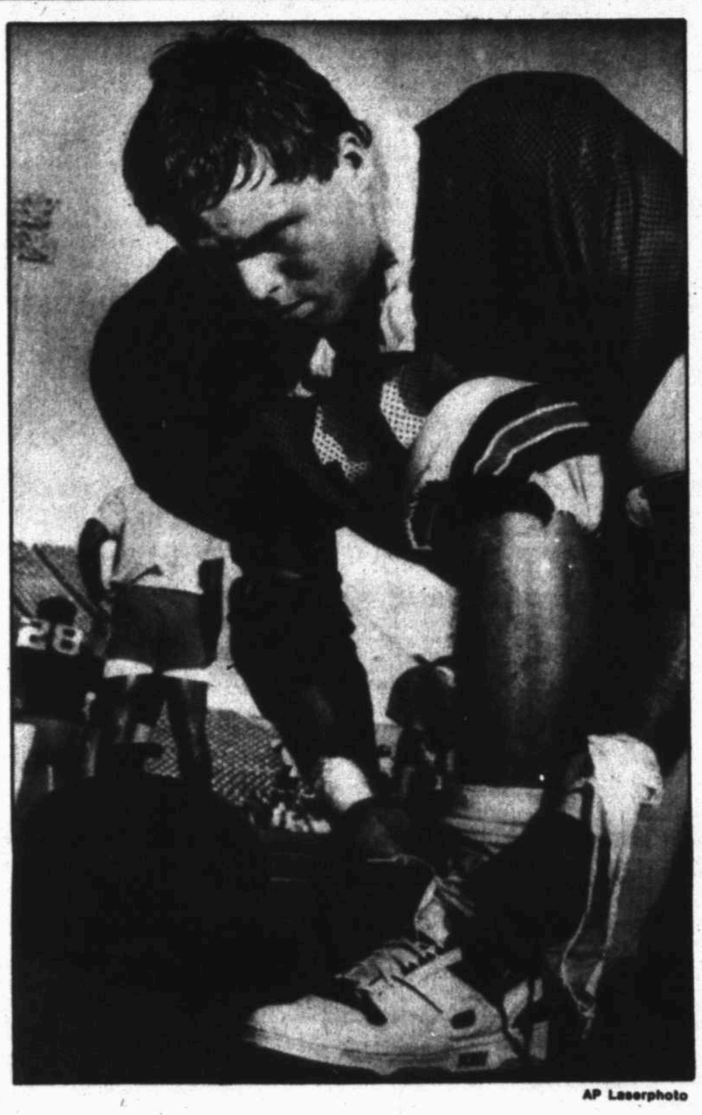

Fullback Maurice Carthon said there was no bitterness toward Taylor.

"He's an average guy," Carthon said. "He has a sickness and he made a mistake."

But offensive tackle Mark May of the Redskins said the suspension will be a blow to the Giants, who are coming off a 6-9 season in 1987.

"One player does not make a defense, but in this case it does," May said.

Taylor, who has a $1-million contract, had an excellent training camp and posted 3½ sacks in four preseason games.

First string defense pleases Tech's Dykes

LUBBOCK (AP) — Texas Tech coach Spike Dykes says the play of his first defensive string could surprise opponents and spectators, just like it surprised him.

Although just four defensive starters are back from last season and others are adjusting to new positions, Dykes said the first string's play at last week's intrasquad scrimmage was impressive.

"Defense is sort of a mood," he said Monday. "... Defense is reaction football. You react to what the offense does and you can be a little wilder and less conservative.

"Our guys are tired of hearing how bad we are on defense or how bad we were last year. The only way you quit hearing it is to do something good."

The Red Raiders want to do something good against North Texas Saturday in their season opener.

But Dykes knows better than to write off the Eagles simply because thet belong to Division I-AA.

"So many people consider them just so-so just because of the fact that they are a Division I-AA football team," he said.

Dykes cited a last-minute North Texas field goal that led to a 10-9 win over Oklahoma State, then ranked fifth, in 1985 and last season's meeting with Texas Christian as evidence North Texas should be taken seriously.

"TCU was on a roll at that time and they were really playing well and, in the fourth quarter, TCU came back and managed to score 11 points to go ahead 19-10," Dykes said. "So we know if we don't play well against them that we're in for a long, long afternoon."

The Eagles, 7-5 last year, return eight offensive and seven defensive starters to a team that is ranked fifth in the nation in Division I-AA.

"Defensively, they're very different than anything we've seen in a long time," said Dykes. "They're a five-man front and they're pretty vanilla in what they do, and they just do it well."

Woman brings suit against Olajuwon

HOUSTON (AP) — A federal judge has been asked to bar Houston Rockets center Akeem Olajuwon from leaving the United States to play basketball in Italy.

The request for an order was filed by a former longtime companion of Olajuwon, who is asking for $9 million in actual and punitive damages on grounds that Olajuwon refused to marry her after she became pregnant in an attempt to prove to him that she could bear children.

Lila Spencer claims that Olajuwon has threatened to play with an unnamed team in Italy that has offered him more salary and endorsement income than he now enjoys.

Ms. Spencer contends Olajuwon left her for "a taller woman who is more likely to bear tall sons worthy of his genetic heritage."

Olajuwon, a native of Nigeria, stands about 6 feet, 11 inches.

The suit contends that Olajuwon breached a contract when he backed out of his promise to marry Ms. Spencer.

Because of Olajuwon's Moslem religion, she said, he demanded that she prove she could bear children. She became pregnant with him and bore a girl last month, the lawsuit said, but Olajuwon refused to marry her.

Olajuwon's contract with the Roockets was re-negotiated in November 1986 and calls for the Rockets to pay him an estimated $23.5 million through the 1997-98 season.

Ms. Spencer contends in the amended complaint filed last Friday that Olajuwon is attempted to negotiate a new contract that would increase his salary by $1 million per year.

The Houston woman said Olajuwon told her she will never collect any money from him because his attorney will destroy her character and reputation. He also allegedly threatened to liquidate his assets and move them out of the country to avoid paying damages as a result of the lawsuit, she said.

Olajuwon told the Houston Chronicle Monday, "When basketball season starts, I will have something to say. Until then, I have no comment."

Four quarterbacks make Cowboy roster

IRVING (AP) — The Dallas Cowboys kept four quarterbacks, among them rookie Scott Secules of Virginia, as they cut 12 players including veteran wide receiver Gordon Banks and offensive guard Glen Titensor.

Coach Tom Landry on Monday put wide receiver Mike Renfro on the injured reserve list, meaning he can't be activated for six weeks. Renfro had missed the majority of the preseason with a hamstring injury.

Secules will be placed on the two-man reserve squad that can be activated for any game. The other player will be named on Saturday.

The other quarterbacks on the team include Steve Pelluer, Danny White and Kevin Sweeney.

Banks is a six-year veteran who caught 15 passes last year. He was used very little in the preseason.

"I know I can help someone else," Banks said. "I got caught up in the numbers game here as they brought in some new people."

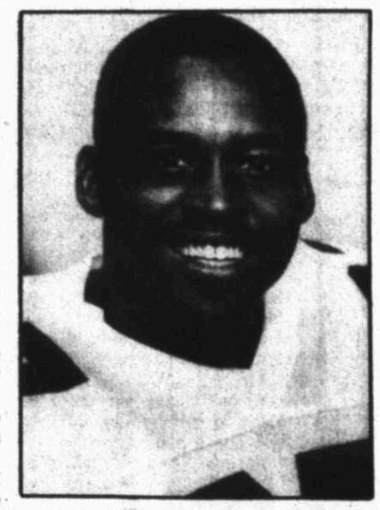

Titensor is a seven-year veteran who lost out in the Cowboys' move to bigger and beefier blockers. He was backing up Crawford Ker at right guard.

Others cuts Monday included wide receiver Cornell Burbage, offensive linemen Steve Cisowski, Vernice Smith, and Jason Cooper, linebacker Ben Hummel, a 10th-round draft pick, defensive linemen John Kropke, Sean Scheller, and Robert Smith, fullback Gerald White and cornerback Charles Wright.

The Cowboys kept linebacker Garry Cobb, a nine-year veteran who was cut by the Philadelphia Eagles.

Cisowski was signed as a free agent in 1987 and released on the final cutdown. He was picked in the eighth round of the 1986 draft by the New York Giants.

White was a third-year veteran, signed as a free agent in 1987. He was released after the third preseason game then.

Dallas' Gordon Banks ...receiver bites the dust

The six rookies making the 47-man team included offensive tackle Dave Widell, linebacker Sean Scott of Maryland, wide receiver Michael Irvin of Miami, strong safety Billy Owens of Pittsburgh, running back Mark Higgs of Kentucky and Secules.

The Cowboys have two players who definitely won't play on Sunday against Pittsburgh: cornerback Ron Francis, who has a separated shoulder, and Victor Scott, who has a sprained ankle.

Doubtful for the Steelers' game was cornerback Robert Williams, a deep thigh bruise, defensive lineman Danny Noonan, a hip problem, and Mark Walen, a neck injury.

The Cowboys open the regular season with the Pittsburgh game.

Spurs trade Berry to Nets

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. (AP) — St. John's all-time leading scorer Walter Berry is now a New Jersey Net and he says he is looking forward to playing for another former New York area basketball star.

"It's great to be coming back home and playing for such a great coach as Willis Reed," Berry said in statement released by the Nets Monday. "I am looking forward to playing with the Nets. I know I will fit in with their style of play."

Berry was acquired Monday from the San Antonio Spurs in exchange for Nets forward Dallas Comegys.

Berry, the 14th selection overall in the first round of the 1986 draft, averaged 17.4 points per game last season, second-best on the Spurs. He shot .563 from the field and started 56 games for San Antonio.

"Naturally, we are pleased to bring Walter back home," Nets General Manager Harry Weltman said. "We feel Walter will fit in well with our front line, which already features Buck Williams, Roy Hinson, Chris Morris, Keith Lee and Tim McCormick. Berry is an outstanding open-court player with fine offensive talents."

Berry, 6-foot-8, originally was drafted by Portland.

Drugs in sports: Taylor, Myers continue sorry saga

Sports Analysis
By ED SCHUYLER JR.
AP Sports Writer

On it goes.

Lawrence Taylor, the New York Giants linebacker who makes a mere $62,500 a game, has tested positive for cocaine.

Angel Myers, who won three swimming events in the women's Olympic Trials and was given a shot at winning five Olympic medals, tested positive for a banned substance.

Taylor will have to serve a 30-day suspension, which means he will miss the first four games of the National Football League season. Then he can resume his career. His latest lapse in self-discipline might even help sales of his book, "LT: Living on the Edge," which has just been released in paperback.

Myers has been disqualified from the Olympics.

Perhaps it's the thin edge that athletes have been forced to walk due to the drug menace in society plus cheating through performance-enchancing drugs that has put Myers on the spot.

It's hard not to feel sympathy for Myers. It's just as difficult to feel sorry for Taylor, who voluntarily submitted to drug rehabilition in the winter of 1986. The lesson L.T. apparently feels he learned was that he can control drug use.

The U.S. Olympic swimming team refused to disclose the drug for which Myers has been disqualified.

In fact, said Martha Fennessey, an assistant coach with Myers' swim club at Americus, Ga., Myers didn't take any banned substance. "We are going to do everything we can to prove that the drug they are calling a banned substance was not, that it was something similar."

"It's is a shame that this has happened to our sport and to Olympic sports," said Richard Quick, the Olympic team coach, "but it speaks well for the necessity and integrity of substance testing. Every consideration was given to Angel during this process."

Of course, drug testing can trap the innocent, or at least the naive. Illegal drugs can be contained within medications used for illness or injury and sometimes have properties that make them similar to banned substances.

Rick DeMont, a freestyle swimmer for the United States, was stripped of a gold medal in the 1972 Olympics at Munich when he tested positive after taking a medication for asthma.

Stringent drug testing necessarily has become an intergral part of international competitions in which the pressure to succeed is fueled by nationalistic fervor. That pressure, especially in the Olympics, can lead talented athletes to look for a drug-induced edge.

In the 1988 Olympics, which open Sept. 17 at Seoul, the most closely watched results might be the results of drug testing. It's no longer a question of did so-and-so win, but did he or she pass the drug test.

As for professional sports, fans not only have to worry about whether their favorites are going to slump, but whether they're going to stay clean.

Our games are played in an atmosphere of suspicion, but more serious aspects of our lives are conducted in the same atmosphere.

Drug testing is a shame, but not as big a shame as the attitudes of social mores that make it neccessary through unspoken condoning of drug use in many situations. A star player is easily forgiven.

If the Giants are a winning team when Taylor returns, he'll probably return to applause.

Kimball loses driving privileges in hearing

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — Former Olympic diver Bruce Kimball is without driving privileges pending his trial on alcohol-related manslaughter charges in the deaths of two teen-agers.

Kimball, accused of driving a car into a group of teen-agers in nearby Brandon on Aug. 1, pleaded innocent Monday in Hillsborough Circuit Court to two counts of drunken-driving manslaughter and three counts of drunken-driving in an accident with serious injury.

Judge Harry Coe allowed the 1984 Olympic silver medalist to remain free on $10,000 bond without any travel restrictions pending a tentative trial date of Nov. 14, ruling the diver posed no risk of flight.

The judge said the high-profile case had drawn so much publicity that "the whole country in a sense is watching him."

The judge set a meeting for Sept. 8 to discuss with media representatives any restrictions that he might impose on the press at a trial.

Kimball, 24, was present for the arraignment but said nothing as attorney Frank Quesada entered the plea before Coe. If convicted, the diver faces up to 45 years in prison.

Defense co-counsel Lee Fugate said Kimball would be attending the University of Michigan this fall and working part-time at his father's diving school so he could he get around without his license.

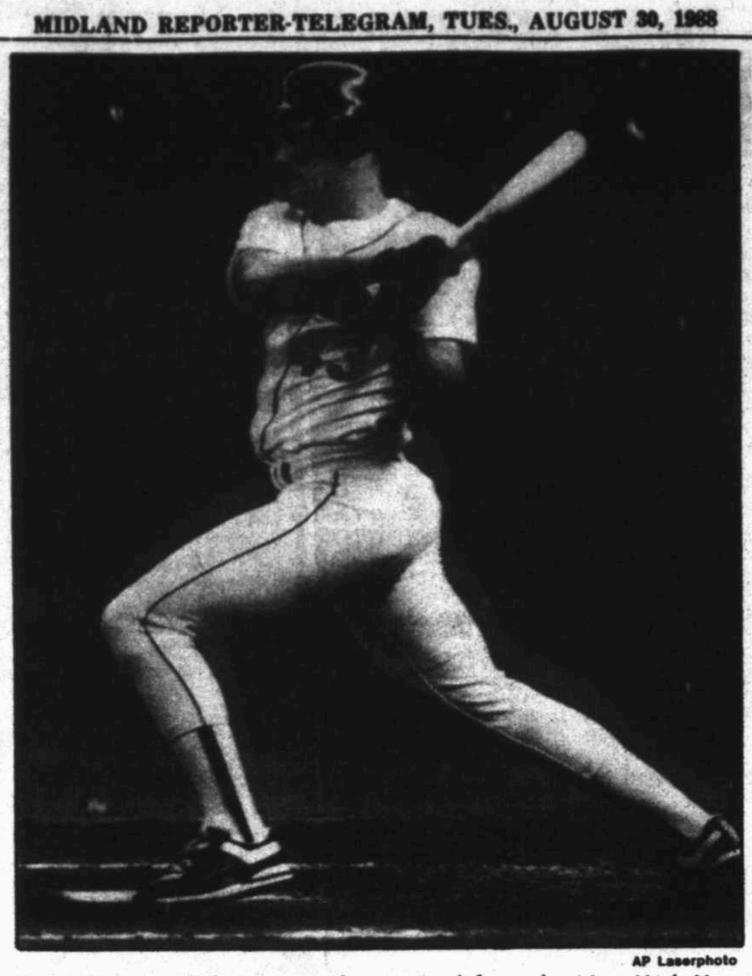

Kimball, who finished second in the Olympic platform diving competition four years ago, was a favorite to make the 1988 U.S. team before the accident. He went ahead with plans to compete at Olympic trials in Indianapolis earlier this month but did not qualify.

Among the spectators at the diving trials was a group of Florida residents protesting Kimball's efforts to go to Seoul, South Korea, for the Summer Games in the wake of the deaths of Robbie Bedell, 19, and Kevin Gossic, 16.

Members of Mothers Against Drunk Driving attended the diving trials, and Tom Slattery, head of the local MADD chapter, was in the courtroom Monday as were Bedell's father and girlfriend.

While prosecutors have refused to release the results of Kimball's blood-alcohol test taken after the accident, the Tampa Tribune has reported it was 0.20 percent. Under Florida law, a driver with a level of 0.10 of higher is presumed intoxicated.

Police estimate Kimball was traveling between 70 and 90 mph when his car struck several other vehicles and plowed through a group of teens gathered at a popular roadside in suburban Brandon known as "The Spot."

Seattle's Jay Buhner, recently acquired from the New York Yankees, had two singles and a homer Monday against his former teammates in a 9-6 Mariner victory.

Nebraska still No. 2 after win over Aggies

Associated Press

Following Nebraska's 23-14 victory over Texas A&M in the Kickoff Classic on Saturday night, Coach Tom Osborne was asked if he thought the second-ranked Cornhuskers deserved to be No. 1.

"I'll let the voters decide," Osborne said.

The voters in the Associated Press' first regular-season college football poll decided Monday that Nebraska is still No. 2 — but by a much closer margin than in the preseason rankings.

Florida State remained No. 1 by receiving 41 of 53 first-place votes and 1,032 of a possible 1,060 points from a nationwide panel of sports writers and sportscasters. Nebraska received four first-place votes and 939 points.

In the preseason poll, Florida State led 44-2 in first-place ballots — 60 voters participated — and 1,161-952 in total points.

"It's something I've always wanted — unbeaten, untied, unscored upon, No. 1 in the nation," joked Florida State Coach Bobby Bowden, whose team opens next Saturday night against defending national champion Miami, ranked No. 6 this week. "If I didn't have to play that schedule (the Seminoles also face nationally ranked Clemson and Michigan State in September), I would be happy. If it wasn't for the games, I'd have it made."

College AP Poll

By losing the Kickoff Classic, the only game played thus far, Texas A&M fell out of the Top Ten, slipping from 10th to 11th.

This week's 20 ranked teams are the same as in the preseason poll, but there was some minor shuffling in the order.

Oklahoma held onto third place with one first-place vote and 845 points.

Athletics' McGwire keeps Red Sox out of first place

Associated Press

Before the Boston Red Sox can claim first place in the American League East, they have to stop Mark McGwire and the Oakland Athletics.

McGwire hit a two-run homer Monday night and the Athletics beat Boston 3-1, preventing the Red Sox from tying Detroit atop the division.

The Tigers lost their third in a row, 3-2 to Chicago. But Boston remained one game behind as Oakland's Bob Welch and Dennis Eckersley combined on a six-hitter.

"The first game of a series isn't important if you win the next two," Boston manager Joe Morgan said. "We had a chance to move up. Well, we didn't lose any ground."

Tonight in Oakland, Boston's Roger Clemens will try to end his career-long four-game losing streak when he faces Dave Stewart.

The Athletics maintained their eight-game lead over Minnesota in the AL West. Oakland is 82-50, the best record in the majors, and is assured of its first winning season since 1981.

McGwire's two-run homer put Oakland ahead 3-1 in the sixth inning. Dave Parker singled with one out and McGwire's 26th home run came against Mike Boddicker, 10-15.

"They're going for a pennant and so are we. All these games are going to be exciting," McGwire said.

Welch, 15-7, gave up six hits, struck out seven and walked one in 8⅔ innings.

American League

"Being in a tight game and against a team like Boston, I concentrate a little more," Welch said.

Eckersley got the final out for his major league-leading 36th save, tying the team record set by Bill Caudill in 1984.

Ellis Burks hit his 15th home run in the Boston second. Parker had an RBI single in the fourth that tied it.

White Sox 3, Tigers 2

Carlton Fisk and Ken Williams homered, leading Chicago over visiting Detroit.

Bill Long, 6-9, gave up one run on seven hits in 7⅓ innings. Bobby Thigpen closed for his 28th save, allowing pinch hitter Dwayne Murphy's RBI single in the ninth.

Steve Searcy, the International League's most valuable pitcher, was recalled from Class AAA Toledo before the game and made his major league debut. He permitted three runs on five hits in 7⅔ innings.

Fisk hit his 14th home run of the season. It was his 318th career homer and 298th as a catcher. Donnie Hill's run-scoring single put the White Sox ahead 2-1 in the fifth.

Mariners 9, Yankees 6

Jay Buhner homered and got three hits and Darnell Coles connected for a three-run homer as host Seattle sent New York to its season-high fifth straight loss.

The Mariners got 15 hits, including a triple and double, off three pitchers.

The Yankees have allowed more than seven runs per game in August and their starters are 0-9 in the last 15 games. In the past 35 innings, New York has been outscored 41-8.

Mark Langston, 10-10, teamed with two relievers on a six-hitter.

Buhner, traded by the Yankees on July 21 for Ken Phelps, led off the third inning with his ninth homer. Coles hit his sixth home run later in the inning.

Twins 3, Rangers 2

John Moses hit an RBI single, capping a string of five straight hits with two outs in the second inning as Minnesota beat host Texas, ending a three-game losing streak.

Fred Toliver, 6-3, gave up two runs on seven hits in six innings. Jeff Reardon pitched one inning for his 33rd save.

Jeff Russell, 10-6, allowed eight hits in his fifth complete game.

Brian Harper and Randy Bush singled with two outs in the Twins' second and Greg Gagne, Al Newman and Moses each hit run-scoring singles.

Steve Buechele hit an RBI single in the Rangers' second, but Pete Incaviglia was called out on the play because of interference after running into third base coach Dave Oliver.

Angels 4, Orioles 2

Tony Armas hit his fourth home run in a week and California beat Baltimore for its fifth straight victory.

Mike Witt, 11-12, gave up nine hits in his ninth complete game. Jeff Ballard, 7-11, took the loss.

Armas led off the seventh with his 13th homer for a 3-1 lead.

Royals 6, Indians 3

Danny Tartabull's two-run homer capped a four-run rally as Kansas City got past visiting Cleveland for its fourth consecutive victory.

Kevin Seitzer hit an RBI single off Scott Bailes, 8-12, for a 3-3 tie, and Pat Tabler had a run-scoring grounder. Tartabull hit his 20th homer against Don Gordon.

Bret Saberhagen, 13-13, won despite allowing 11 hits in eight innings. Steve Farr finished for his 16th save.

Blue Jays 6, Brewers 1

George Bell hit a three-run homer as Toronto won in Milwaukee.

Bell's 18th home run gave the Blue Jays a 4-0 lead in the sixth inning against Tom Filer, 5-8. Bell had grounded into double plays in his first two at-bats.

Jim Clancy, 8-13, pitched a seven-hitter in his fourth complete game. He struck out five, walked none and got support with three double plays.

Former Texas League All-Star gives Mets needed lift

Associated Press

After five hits in his first nine at-bats this season, Gregg Jefferies is creating some problems for the New York Mets.

Jefferies, a Texas League All-Star a year ago, had a double, a triple and his first major-league homer to support David Cone's one-hitter as New York beat San Diego 6-0 Monday night at Shea Stadium.

When second baseman Wally Backman went on the disabled list Saturday, the Mets called Jefferies up from Class AAA Tidewater and most expected he would be used as an utility infielder.

But Jefferies' hitting might cost Howard Johnson, Kevin Elster, Tim Teufel and Dave Magadan some playing time.

Does the 21-year-old rookie see any signs of jealousy among players who have been in the lineup all season?

"I'm concerned," Jefferies said. "I'm not here to take any one's position, but I can feel that there's some tension. Nobody has said anything behind my back, and I don't think I have seen any outward jealousy. I don't want to make enemies, but I'm not going to stop hustling and playing the way I know how."

The Mets have won six of their last seven games, and maintained a 6½-game lead in the National League East over second-place Pittsburgh.

National League

Dodgers 2, Expos 1

Alfredo Griffin snapped an eighth-inning tie with his first homer of the season and 20-year-old Ramon Martinez won his first major league game as Los Angeles beat Montreal at Olympic Stadium for its fourth straight victory.

The win moved the Dodgers 6½ games ahead of second-place Houston in the NL West.

Martinez, 1-1, in only his fourth career game, went seven innings allowing seven hits and an unearned run to beat veteran Dennis Martinez. Jay Howell finished the game for his 17th save.

Dennis Martinez, 15-10, gave up only four hits en route to his eighth complete game.

Cubs 2, Astros 1

Mitch Webster's RBI single in the 11th inning lifted visiting Chicago over Houston as the Astros wasted another strong effort by Nolan Ryan.

Ryan allowed five hits in eight innings and struck out 11, giving him 196 for the season, tops in the NL. He has 10 or more strikeouts in 180 games during his 21-year career.

In Ryan's last four starts, the Astros have scored a total of four runs. In those games, he has 36 strikeouts in 28⅔ innings, with one loss and three no decisions.

Pirates 8, Reds 1

Andy Van Slyke's two-run double highlighted a four-run first inning and Dave LaPoint won his third game in three starts for Pittsburgh as the Pirates beat Cincinnati at Riverfront Stadium.

The Pirates, who had scored just 22 runs in their last 12 games, batted around in the first inning off rookie Keith Brown, 1-1. The right-hander lasted just one-third of an inning in his second major-league start.

It was Van Slyke's 15th game-winning RBI, surpassing the club record of 14 by Bill Madlock in 1982 and 1983.

Phillies 3, Giants 0

Shane Rawley allowed four hits for six innings in his first start since coming off the disabled list and Bob Dernier stole home as Philadelphia beat San Francisco at Veterans Stadium to snap a five-game losing streak.

It was the Giants' fifth loss in their last six games and dropped them 7½ behind Los Angeles.

Rawley, out with a strained left shoulder since Aug. 2, struck out five and walked four. Rawley, 6-13, had lost seven straight before he was disabled.

Cardinals 3, Braves 2

Pedro Guerrero hit a three-run homer to lead visiting St. Louis past Atlanta.

Guerrero, 12-for-28 in his first full week with the Cardinals after being acquired for pitcher John Tudor from Los Angeles, was named NL Player of the Week on Monday.

Guerrero's sixth home run of the season followed two-out singles by Vince Coleman and Ozzie Smith in the third inning off Rick Mahler, 9-12.

New chip sparks intense competition

TI, other firms jockey for market share

By ANDREW POLLACK
New York Times News Service

SAN FRANCISCO — The market for microprocessor chips based on technology known as reduced instruction set computing is growing increasingly competitive with numerous new companies entering the field.

The competition could result in lower prices for the microprocessors, known as RISC chips. That could speed acceptance of computers based on the technology. But it also could begin an industry shakeout that could lead to reduced profits for vendors.

The jockeying for position and increasing competition was reflected in a flurry of announcements of new competitors entering the field.

The LSI Logic Corp., said Monday that it would begin selling RISC processors for prices that are a fraction of those offered by other companies, one of the first times price has been used as a competitive weapon in selling such chips.

A Colorado startup company financed by Japan's giant Matsushita Electric Industrial Co. Ltd. said it would build a powerful workstation based on a customized version of Sun Microsystems Inc.'s RISC chip.

The move reflects a growing interest by Japanese companies in the market for RISC chips and workstations built around them.

Texas Instruments Inc., one of the nation's leading semiconductor companies, will announce on Tuesday that it will manufacture a version of Sun's chip, which is known as Sparc. Texas Instruments will also work with Sun to develop future generations of the Sparc chip and will incorporate the Sparc chip into workstations with artificial intelligence capability.

The market for microprocessors, the central chips in desktop computers, has long been dominated by the Intel Corp. and Motorola Inc.

But the emergence of RISC, a new approach to designing microprocessors that are potentially faster than the older designs, has produced an unusual opportunity for newcomers to break into the industry.

Texas Instruments, for instance, despite vying with Motorola Inc. to be the nation's largest chip company, has never had a presence in the lucrative microprocessor business.

Until now, most of the competition has been based on technical features. But LSI's move might indicate that pricing will soon become an issue.

"It reflects the fact that the window for designing in RISC chips is not going to stay open forever," said Bruce Entin, a spokesman for LSI Logic, which is selling its own versions of the RISC chips designed by Sun and by its competitor MIPS Computer Systems. "If we're going to get people to design us in, we've got to make a bold statement."

LSI Logic, based in Milpitas, Calif., will sell its chips for $80 to $200, compared to competitors' prices that reach as high as $800.

But Michael J. Stark, semiconductor analyst for Robertson, Colman & Stephens in San Francisco, said the price comparison is somewhat less favorable if an entire RISC chip set rather than just the microprocessor is counted.

Texaco, DOE settlement approved

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Energy Department said Monday it has given final approval to an agreement with Texaco Corp. calling for $1.25 billion in payments to the government over 5½ years to settle accusations of overcharging for price-controlled crude oil.

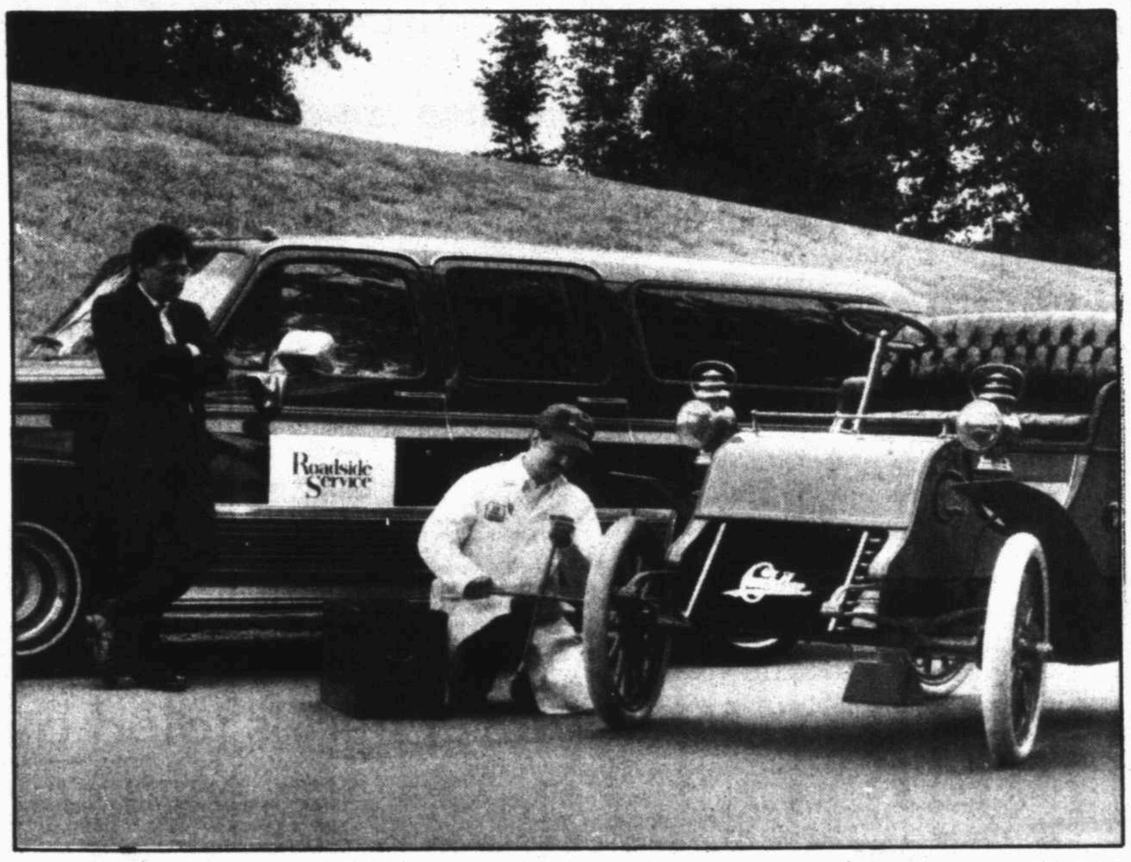

The settlement, details of which were announced in February, is the second largest in the government's long campaign to recover overcharges in the years from 1973 to 1981, when crude oil was subject to price controls.

Only $2.1 billion paid by Exxon Corp. was larger. With the Texaco payment, the government will have recovered more than $7 billion.

The government originally sought $2.1 billion from Texaco on similar grounds: that, like Exxon, Texaco had pumped oil from old wells under price controls and sold it at a higher price from newly drilled wells exempt from controls.

Texaco will pay the government $400 million within 30 days, $190 million plus interest within 18 months and four annual payments after that of $165 million plus interest.

The department said about $120 million would be refunded to buyers of Texaco's refined products, 20 percent of the rest would be set aside for future claims and the rest split between the federal government and the states.

Mesa, Energas end discussions with Amarillo

AMARILLO, Texas (AP) — Mesa Limited Partnership and Energas Co. have stopped negotiating with the city of Amarillo in a natural gas lawsuit the city filed against the companies, T. Boone Pickens Jr. said.

The move, announced Monday, comes as Mesa and Energas officially rejected the city's most recent counterproposal, an altered version of a settlement proposed by Mesa.

"We're through because I can see that these people have no idea of ever working anything out, because negotiations now have gone on for more than a month, and the last document that they gave us had substantive changes in it and actually went back and put things in that had been rejected a week before that," said Pickens, general partner of Mesa.

The city alleges in a suit against Mesa and Energas that the companies are charging too much for natural gas and reducing the quality by over-extracting natural gas liquids.

Amarillo Mayor Glen Parkey said the city commission's proposed changes in last week's Mesa offer were apparently "more substantive" than the commission believed would be acceptable to Mesa and Energas.

"I'm very disappointed," Parkey said. "I'm not a lawyer so all I can do is take the explanation of the lawyer and do what they believe is best."

Pickens said a change in the pricing mechanism after a five-year period was unacceptable to Mesa.

Under the pricing provision as amended by the commission Thursday, if a price suitable to the city, Mesa and Energas could not be reached after the five-year period, the court would appoint a neutral party to assist in arbitration.

Robert L. Templeton, the attorney representing Amarillo, said that change "provided a future price mechanism that related to market prices."

In Mesa's most recent offer, negotiations on the price Mesa charges Energas would be negotiated only between the two companies.

Amarillo attorney Jim Brandon filed a class-action plea last week to intervene for three Amarillo residents as gas consumers. That filing also influenced the Mesa-Energas decision to reject the city's counterproposal, Pickens said.

"We would have to go ahead and make our settlement, and the class action of Brandon could succeed," he said.

Oil found in Paris suburb

PARIS (AP) — Oil has been found beneath a Paris suburb and officials with the state-controlled oil company said Monday they were encouraged by the success of their first wildcat well in the capital.

Exploratory drilling began three weeks ago on a permit granted to the company, Societe Nationale Elf Aquitaine, for the Paris-Isle-de-France region.

"After the seismic tests we did, we figured we would find something," said Thomas Saunders, a spokesman for the oil company. "But we thought there was maybe one chance out of six or seven. Everybody's very pleased, of course, that we found something the first time."

Elf Aquitaine holds a 50 percent share of the permit with Total-Compagnie Francaises des Petroles owning 35 percent and British Petroleum France holding the rest.

The Elf-Total-BP joint venture has already spent $11.6 million on the permit to drill, most of it for seismic tests, said Elf's chief of French operations, Bruno Weymuller.

"It was important to find oil to show that we are right to be drilling in the region," said Patrick Oberto, director of exploration for BP France.

The Paris Basin, which contains 6.36 million barrels of known oil reserves, 48 operating wells and about 600 exploratory wells, has a discovery rate of 1 in 12 wells.

Freddie Mac head discusses stock sale

New York Times News Service

The Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corp., known as Freddie Mac, decided last month to allow savings and loan associations that owned its preferred stock to sell those shares to the public.

Since the announcement on July 13, the preferred stock, which had been trading at around $60 a share, has jumped as high as $140.50.

Freddie Mac's chairman and chief executive, Leland C. Brendsel, talked about the stock sale, which will begin in January, and its consequences in an interview with Sarah Bartlett of The New York Times.

Q. Why did you decide to broaden the market for your preferred stock?

A. We found that the preferred stock of the corporation, which is like nonvoting common stock with ownership limited only to thrift institutions, was significantly depressed in value.

And as a result, it was really not enabling our thrift stockholders to realize the full financial benefit of ownership in Freddie Mac.

In addition, for Freddie Mac to be able to maintain a sound capital structure, it was desirable to have a market for equity that was very broad.

Q. Why do you think the price has gone so high?

A. If you look at other stocks of other companies that are somewhat similar to Freddie Mac, say Sallie Mae, Fannie Mae or other major financial institutions, and look at the earnings in relation to the stock prices of those companies, one soon came to the conclusion, as many equity analysts did, that the price of the stock should be well in excess of $100 a share.

Q. What are the consequences for the thrift industry of your decision to allow a more liquid market for the stock?

A. The main consequence is the increased financial gain.

If you compare the price of the stock before any discussions of lifting the restrictions occurred, to where it is now, there has to be a financial gain of over $1 billion.

Q. What do you think that will enable the industry to do?

A. I think it varies. For those institutions that were insolvent or close to insolvent, any additional capital probably means that the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation will have to pay less.

For institutions that are financially weak but had the promise of being viable entities if they could add to their capital base, this of course will enable them to really develop their institutions and expand in their market.

And for a few larger institutions it might mean that they will be able to invest that additional equity capital, maybe buy another troubled thrift.

Q. Will this have any impact on your common stock?

A. No. Our common stock is unique in that it is held only by the Federal Home Loan Banks.

The $100 million outstanding is held by 12 district banks.

Q. What are some of your goals?

A. One of the major thrusts of Freddie Mac is to expand the types of mortgages we purchase from the secondary market.

Approximately half of all mortgage loans being originated are now adjustable-rate mortgages, yet there is a much less well-developed secondary market for those loans.

Freddie Mac is expanding its purchase programs and securitization programs for adjustable-rate mortgages as well.

Q. There has been some criticism from financial institutions that Freddie Mac is becoming more directly competitive with them and that that was not part of your charter. What do you say to that?

A. We have heard complaints that we have made the mortgage markets more competitive and that we have reduced the yield on mortgage loans, and, as a result, the profits that portfolio lenders could earn from holding those mortgages.

My response is that to make mortgage markets more efficient, to make mortgage markets more competitive, which is what we do, is ultimately a benefit to the home buyer and to the consumer.

Q. You have had very few defaults on your mortgages. Do you think that in the high-interest rate environment you will be able to maintain that, or do you think you are going to see some deterioration?

A. We think we will continue to have a very good credit experience even in a higher interest rate environment.

The entire mortgage industry has had some difficult times in the last few years, with the problems of some of the energy states and so forth and we continue to have a very good default experience.

As to an increase in interest rates, it depends on what happens to overall employment.

Because ultimately, if people are out of jobs they can't make their payments on their mortgages.

Jaded traders skeptical of Subroto

From Staff and Wire Reports

Oil futures were mixed after a dull session marked only by a late technical rally in the near-term contract for unleaded gasoline. Crude prices slipped further after the opening bell, down 7 cents at $15.15.

On the New York Mercantile Exchange, contracts for October delivery of West Texas Intermediate fell 12 cents per barrel to close at $15.22 on Monday. Most other contract months fell a similar amount.

Near-term contracts rose for refined oil products traded on the exchange. Contracts for September delivery of wholesale unleaded gasoline rose 0.45 cent to 47.24 cents a gallon. Other months were lower.

Wholesale heating oil for September advanced 0.09 cent to 42.76 cents a gallon while longer term contracts declined.

Oil traders were watching the travels of OPEC Secretary-General Subroto, who arrived in Tehran for crucial talks on cutting the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries' output in a bid to stabilize the world oil market and boost prices.

But traders said there was a great deal of skepticism surrounding his efforts.

"People are becoming jaded because you can't get any kind of a good move in crude on the upside," said Madison Galbraith, a senior trader at Merrill Lynch Energy Futures.

Traders said the market ignored a report by The Middle East Economic Survey, a respected oil industry newsletter published in Nicosia, which stated that OPEC's August output totaled about 20 million barrels a day, roughly 3.5 million barrels a day over its overall production quota.

Limits expected on dollar's gain

LONDON (AP) — The dollar inched up against most foreign currencies in early European trading today, but exchange dealers predicted gains would be limited by fears of central bank intervention and a lack of market-affecting news.

Gold prices fell.

In Tokyo, the dollar rose 0.19 yen to a closing 134.39. Later, in London, it was quoted at 134.45 yen.

Other dollar rates at midmorning, compared with late Monday:

—1.8707 West German marks, up from 1.8693

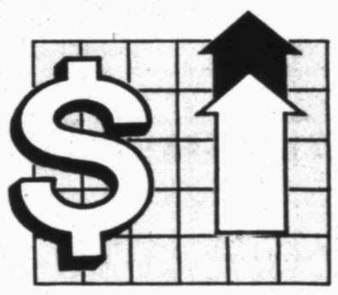

—1.5775 Swiss francs, up from 1.5772

—6.3505 French francs, up from 6.3500

—2.1124 Dutch guilders, up from 2.1120

—1,390.45 Italian lire, up from 1,389.50

—1.2405 Canadian dollars, up from 1.23935

In London, one British pound cost $1.685, slightly more expensive for buyers than $1.684 dollars quoted in Europe late Monday. London's financial markets were closed Monday for a bank holiday.

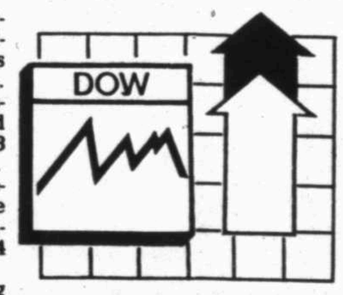

Gold opened in London at a bid price of $429.70 a troy ounce, down from $431.40 bid late Friday, prior to the three-day holiday weekend. At midmorning, the city's five major bullion dealers fixed a recommended price of $429.40.

In Zurich, the bid price was $428, down from $432 dollars bid late Monday.

Earlier, in Hong Kong, gold fell $2.68 an ounce from Friday to close at a bid $432.56. Hong Kong's financial markets were also closed Monday for a national holiday.

Silver was quoted in London Monday at a bid $6.53 a troy ounce, down from Friday's $6.64.

Stocks gain in ultra-light trading

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market gained ground Monday, but trading was so light that most analysts saw little substance in the advance.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, which had bounced around last week to post a net gain of 1.43 points, rose 24.00 points to 2,041.43.

Advancing issues outnumbered declines by nearly 2 to 1 in nationwide trading of New York Stock Exchange-listed stocks, with 924 up, 494 down and 513 unchanged.

Volume on the floor of the Big Board, at 99.28 million shares, was the second slowest of the year, surpassing only last Friday's figure of 89.24 million.

As measured by Wilshire Associates' index of more than 5,000 actively traded stocks, the market increased $20.59 billion, or 0.79 percent, in value.

The NYSE's composite index of all its listed common stocks gained 1.31 to 148.55.

Standard & Poor's industrial index rose 3.19 to 301.20, and S&P's 500-stock composite index was up 2.65 at 262.33.

BUSINESS IN BRIEF

Primerica acquisition price $1.65 billion

GREENWICH, Conn. (AP) — Commercial Credit Group Inc. has agreed to acquire Primerica Corp. in a cash-and-stock deal valued at $1.65 billion that could create a major force in the financial services industry.

Under terms of an agreement approved by both companies' boards, shareholders would receive one share of Commercial Credit common stock plus $7 in cash for each share of Primerica.

The combined companies expect to operate under the Primerica name, the chairmen of both companies said Monday.

Insurer donates policies for Discovery crew

NEW YORK (AP) — The company that donated a $1 million life insurance policy to Christa McAuliffe before the Challenger explosion is contributing half-million-dollar policies to the five crew members of the space shuttle Discovery.

Corroon & Black Corp., an insurance broker, said Monday it was donating the coverage, but declined to say how much it was paying in premiums for the insurance, totaling $2.5 million, which was arranged through Lloyd's of London.

More college graduates in U.S. work force

WASHINGTON (AP) — One of every four U.S. workers is a college graduate, compared with just one in five 10 years ago, the Labor Department says.

An additional 20 percent, up from 16 percent a decade ago, have completed one to three years of college, according to the new data released Monday by the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

Cotton prospects point to higher supply

WASHINGTON (AP) — Prospects for another good cotton crop in 1988 could push the total supply for the coming year to the highest level in more than two decades, an Agriculture Department report says.

Based on Aug. 1 indications, the cotton harvest could be 14.9 million bales, up from 14.8 million bales last year, the department's Economic Research Service said Monday. The increase would result from a larger acreage this year, despite a reduction in per-acre yields.

ACTIVITY HIGHLIGHTS

Pecos reentry yields gas strike

From Staff Reports

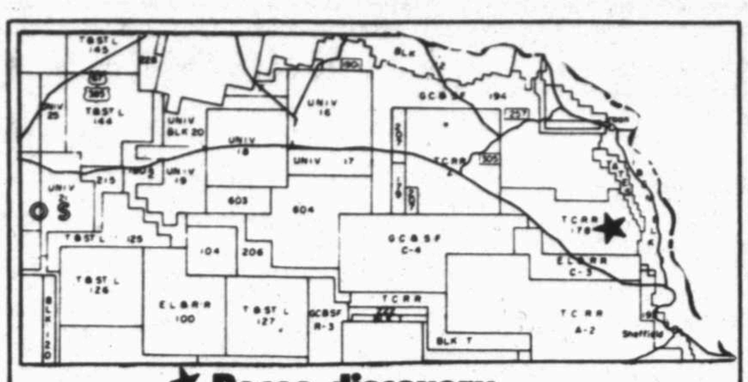

A recompletion project in Pecos County has yielded an undesignated gas discovery for ELK ENERGY CORP.

Elk plugged back the No. 1 Cannon "10," a producer in the Sheffield (Ellenburger) field, testing it for a calculated absolute open flow of 780 Mcfd from perforations 7,700 to 7,720 ft. Gravity was 61 degrees and gas-liquid ratio was 35,996:1.

Originally drilled to 9,669 ft., the well was plugged back to 7,800 ft. with seven inch casing set at 9,649 ft.

On elevation of 2,520 ft., formation tops include the Strawn at 7,426 ft., Devonian at 7,929, McKee at 8,330, and the Ellenburger at 9,040 ft. Pay was topped at 7,700 ft.

Location is 886 ft. from west and 1,460 ft. from north lines of Section 10, Block 178, TCRR survey, 11 miles northwest of Sheffield.

Elk Energy gained a gas discovery in Pecos County by plugging back the No. 1 Cannon "10", a producer in the Sheffield (Ellenburger) field.

Upton field gains 108 barrel extension

H.L. BROWN JR., Midland, has extended pay south in the King Mountain Southeast (Bend) field of Upton County with the addition of a sixth producer.

On potential test, the No. 1-A Halff "18" flowed 108 barrels of 43 gravity crude and five barrels of water on a 16/64 inch choke from perforations 10,080 to 10,150 ft. The interval was acidized with 3,500 gallons of acid. Gas-oil ratio was 2,314:1.

Permitted as a 10,500 ft. wildcat, the well was drilled to 10,213 ft., where 5 1/2 inch casing was set, and plugged back to 10,170 ft.

Formation tops, on ground elevation of 2,745 ft., include the Yates at 2,540 ft., San Andres at 4,025, Dean at 7,620, Wolfcamp at 7,760, and Dean at 10,080 ft.

Location is 1,980 ft. from south and 660 ft. from west lines of Section 18, Block 2, MK&T survey, Abst. 673, 14 miles northwest of Rankin.

Shell continues adding to Wasson production

SHELL WESTERN EXPLORATION & PRODUCTION, INC., Houston, continues adding to production in the Yoakum County portion of the Wasson field.

Shell completed the No. 2330 Bennett Ranch Unit to pump 20 barrels of 32.4 gravity crude and 100 barrels of water from perforations 5,260 to 5,388 ft.

The No. 2543 Denver Unit potentialed for seven barrels of 32.9 gravity crude and 260 barrels of water. Production is from perforatins 4,936 to 5,187 ft.

On potential test, the No. 2941 Denver Unit pumped 29 barrels of 34.2 gravity crude and 270 barrels of water from perforations 4,930 to 5,157 ft.

The No. 3542 Denver Unit was finaled to pump 17 barrels of 32.9 gravity crude and 437 barrels of water. The well produced from perforations 4,933 to 5,160 ft.

Shell also completed the No. 4838 Denver Unit to pump 12 barrels of 37.2 gravity crude and 562 barrels of water from perforations 4,888 to 5,100 ft.

Marathon taps Kellogg for project

HOUSTON (SWN) — The Louisiana Refining Division of Marathon Petroleum Co. has selected The M.W. Kellogg Company to provide a ROSE (Residium Oil Supercritical Extraction) deasphalter and all associated offsites for its Garyville, Louisiana refinery.

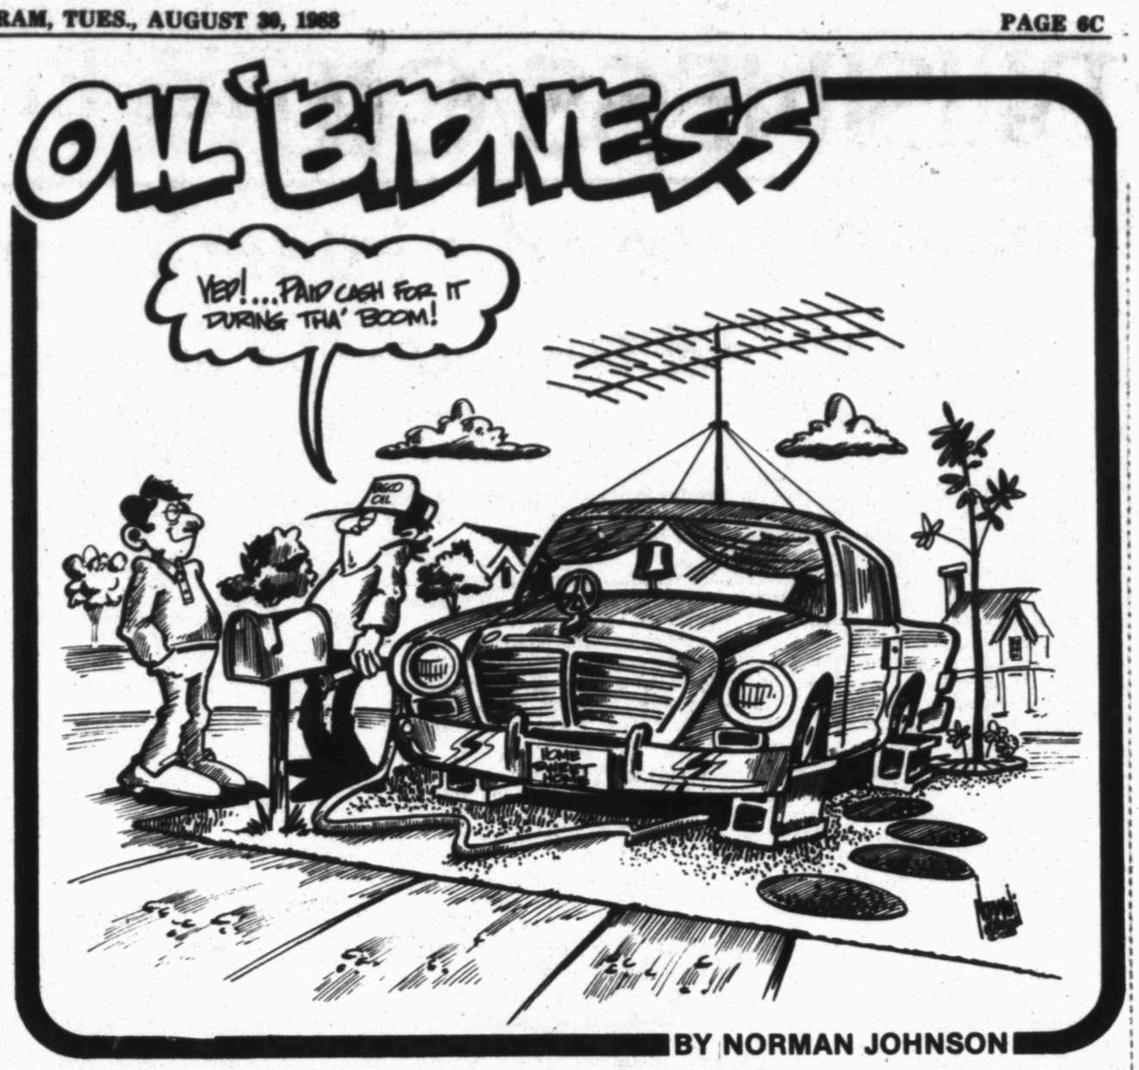

Total installed cost is approximately $25 million.

M.W. Kellogg, an international, technology-based engineering and construction subsidiary of Dresser Industries, Inc., will provide engineering, procurement, and construction management for the 30,000 barrel-a-day grassroots unit, which will be the largest ROSE unit of its kind in the world.

The refining unit will increase gasoline production and give Marathon the flexibility to adjust product as seasonal needs change.

Detailed engineering is underway and tie-ins for the new unit will be made this fall. Completion is planned for the fall of 1989. Construction work will be done by local subcontractors, selected and managed by M.W. Kellogg.

The M.W. Kellogg Company, with world headquarters in Houston and a European Operations Centre in London, is a world leader in the design and construction of processing and manufacturing facilities primarily, but not exclusively, for the refining, petrochemical, chemical, fertilizer and related energy-oriented industries. The company is active on projects throughout the world.

Mexican refineries idled by explosion

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Production at three oil refineries was suspended after a pipeline explosion that killed 12 people and injured 14, an official of the state-owned oil monopoly Pemex said.

The explosion early Sunday in the 300-mile (484-km) line cut supplies to refineries in Ciudad Madero, near the northeastern city of Tampico, Cadereita, near the northern city of Monterrey, and Salamanca, in the central state of Guanajuato.

Three shiploads of oil were headed for the refineries on Monday and they were expected to resume operations after being resupplied, Abundio Juarez Mendez, deputy director of primary production at Pemex, said in remarks quoted by the government news agency Notimex.

The 15-year-old pipeline was expected to be repaired by early today, he said.

Juarez Mendez said toxic gases from a pipeline leak near the town of Angel Cabada, 270 miles east of Mexico City in Veracruz state, "caused the deaths of three minors, and several hours later a flame caused an explosion that cost the lives of eight victims."

A twelth man died on Monday from injuries suffered in the explosion, said Guadalupe Gonzalez Garrillo, an official with the Angel Cabada municipal government.

Ezequiel Palagot, mayor of Angel Cabada, said more than 1,000 residents who were evacuated from their homes after the explosion were receiving food, medicines and clothing at public shelters.

A statement from the oil company, Petroleos Mexicanos, S.A., said the evacuated campesinos would be allowed to return to their homes on Tuesday.

Between 18,000 and 20,000 barrels of crude were lost through the leak before the pipeline exploded, Juarez Mendez said.

The cause of the explosion was under investigation, Pemex said.

Normandy to buy Oklahoma gas facilities

FORT WORTH (SWN) — Normandy Oil & Gas Co., Inc. and Normandy Gathering and Processing Corp., its wholly-owned subsidiary, announced that a conditional letter of intent has been entered into with three companies to purchase their interests in major natural gas gathering and processing facilities and other assets in Oklahoma in a transaction with a current market value in excess of $10 million.

The sellers are Amcole Energy Corporation, Buckeye Crude Exploration, Inc. and Meridian Reserve, Inc., all of Columbus, Ohio, who are currently in receivership proceedings in an Ohio state court. These companies own interests in approximately 600 miles of natural gas gathering lines connected to approximately 550 wells, along with six natural gas liquids processing plants with 27 compressors.

Company seeks to connect two pipelines

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — Natural Gas Pipeline Co. of America has asked the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission for permission to connect two of its gas pipeline systems with a line stretching from southern Oklahoma to northeast Texas.

Natural said the $108 million project would improve the company's ability to transport gas produced in Oklahoma, Texas and Kansas to the Midwest, the Gulf Coast and to other pipelines.

The project calls for two 30-inch pipelines and a compressor station in Carter County. One of the pipelines would be in southern Oklahoma and the other in northeastern Texas.

The 97-mile pipeline in Oklahoma would connect the Amarillo, Texas, system line with a 39-mile existing line that crosses the Oklahoma-Texas border. A 94-mile long line would then connect the 39-mile line to Natural's Gulf Coast system in eastern Texas.

The new lines would have a capacity of 350 million cubic feet of gas per day.

Natural, which is an interstate pipeline unit of MidCon Corp., a subsidiary of Occidental Petroleum Corp., has more than 12,600 miles of interstate pipelines.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Institutions can set own policies on IRAs, CDs

By BILL DOYLE

Q. We are confused about the rules covering the transfer of money in individual retirement account certificates of deposit from one bank or savings and loan association to another. We always understood we could do that without penalty, after reaching age 59 1/2. In fact, we did that in the state in which we previously lived.

Banks and S&Ls here say, "The government does not impose a penalty, but we do." Can you clear this up?

A. You received straight information — unhappy though it may be — from your local banks and S&Ls. Every bank and S&L, no matter where it is located, is allowed to charge an early withdrawal penalty on an IRA CD redeemed before maturity.

Doyle

Many banks and S&Ls waive that charge for people 59 1/2 and older, but they are not required to.

If you have your IRA in a CD that has not reached its maturity date and you want to move the money elsewhere — even through an IRA rollover or trustee-to-trustee transfer — you have to redeem your present CD. After all, a CD is a contract between you and a bank or S&L. You agree to leave the money on deposit for a certain length of time; the bank or S&L agrees to pay a specific rate of interest. You break the contract when you redeem a CD before it matures.

The federal government never imposes a tax penalty on an IRA trustee-to-trustee transfer. Nor does it levy a penalty on an IRA rollover completed within 60 days. And after you're 59 1/2, you can take money out of your IRA without tax penalty. You just pay regular income tax on the IRA withdrawals.

IRA tax penalties are entirely different than bank and S&L penalties. The latter are determined by each institution.

Q. Having decided to buy a car, I went to my bank to cash one of my CDs. Because that CD is not due to mature for several months, I fully expected to pay an early withdrawal penalty.

To my surprise — "horror" would be a better word — the bank refused to redeem the CD. I was informed I must keep it until its maturity date. Can they do this?

A. They can and some do.

Most banks and S&Ls permit customers to redeem CDs before maturity and charge early withdrawal penalties. But they are not required to comply with requests to redeem CDs early. Some flat-out refuse to do so.

You used an apt word. That is horrible customer relations. It's a safe bet you will be taking your money out of that bank, as each of your CDs comes due.

Q. On April 4, 1988, I opened an IRA at a local bank and put into it my $2,000 contribution for 1987. At that time, I also signed papers for the transfer to the local bank of an IRA I had at a bank where I formerly lived. The IRA CD at my old bank matured on May 4 and the money was to be deposited in the IRA I had opened on April 4.

On May 10, the local bank informed me the money from my old IRA could not be transferred into my new IRA and I would have to open an additional IRA with an 18-month CD. I thought all IRAs could receive contributions, including transfers and rollovers.

I feel the local bank pulled a fast one. What is your thinking on this?

A. Some IRA trustees, such as banks, S&Ls, brokerage firms, mutual funds and insurance companies, permit money from transferred and/or rollover IRAs to go into the same account as regular IRAs, into which IRA participants make annual contributions. Some don't.

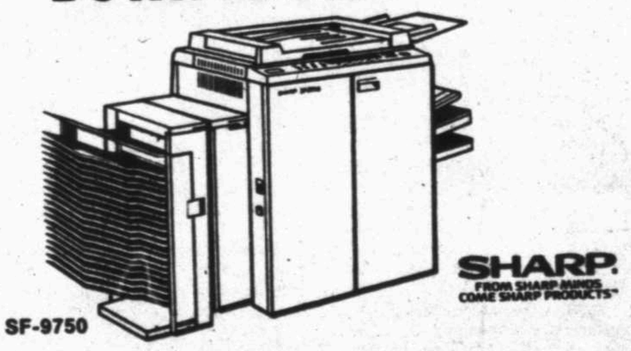

I suspect you ran into a situation where the bank was offering high-interest IRA CDs before the April 15 deadline for tax-deductible contributions. Many banks and S&Ls do that — and reduce rates on accounts opened after April 15.

If that's the case, the bank isn't going to pay a pre-April 15 rate on money received in May.

Your gripe should be that the people at your new bank did not explain its policies when you opened your IRA there.

Tight ethylene supplies boost plastics, other prices

Industry's interest in recycling plastic on upward cycle again

By MYRA KLOCKENBRINK
New York Times News Service

Under pressure from anti-pollution legislation and shrinking landfill space, the plastics industry is moving rapidly to develop technology for recycling its products, like beverage bottles and plastic bags, after they have been used by consumers.

Plastics manufacturers are investing research funds, and entrepreneurs are already exploiting existing techologies to draw profits from recycled plastics.

Some companies are recovering pure resin polymers from plastic carbonated beverage bottles to create products like fiberfill for pillows, as well as plastic textiles and carpet facing.

The industry is also converting mixed and layered types of plastics into plastic lumber for picnic tables and other outdoor uses.

But it is still unclear how much the plastic industry's recent foray into recycling can reduce the burden of waste that is overtaxing the nation's disposal capacities.

Critics of the industry question whether recycling will be feasible on a scale large enough to make a difference, and they say that limiting the use of plastics must have the highest priority.

Although the newspaper and aluminum industries began intensive recycling efforts more than 20 years ago, the plastics industry is only now beginning to look at recycling used consumer products.

Less than 1 percent of all plastics are currently recycled, as against 29 percent for aluminum and 21 percent for paper.

Separating and collecting reusable plastics from garbage is a major challenge.

So far, the industry has primarily relied on legislation in nine states requiring deposits on beverage containers, thus encouraging consumers to return them.

But plastic beverage bottles represent only 0.3 percent of the plastic produced in the United States.

Environmentalists, on the other hand, say the chief way of eliminating plastic pollution should be reducing the amount and type of plastics produced.

"Recycling only takes care of the problem once it's been created," said Jeanne Wirka, a research analyst for the Center for Environmental Education in Washington.

She added that plastic production is projected to rise to about 75 billion pounds in the year 2000 from about 50 billion pounds in 1988.

Environmentalists also assert that plastics are too widely dispersed, too mixed in composition and too inexpensive to be profitably recycled.

"The very adaptability of plastics is the enemy to recycling efforts," said Barry Commoner, director of the Center for the Biology of Natural Systems at Queens College in New York.

But spokesmen for the plastics industry say the potential for recycling has only begun to be explored.

They say markets have been created for recycled plastic products and that once collection technologies improve, new markets will emerge.

To ease one of the main problems in recycling — sorting different types of plastics from one another — the Society of the Plastics Industry in Washington recently initiated a voluntary coding system that identifies plastic containers by resin.

Plastic waste, which can take up to four centuries to degrade, contributed 6.8 percent of the weight and 25.4 percent of the volume of the nation's solid wastes in 1984, according to a study by the International Plastics Consultants Corporation of Stamford, Conn.

In addition to recycling, the plastics industry is also working to develop degradable products that would reduce disposal burdens.

Although degradable plastics may take over some uses, the interest in recycling remains high.

In fact, in a reversal of its former opposition, the plastics industry is now urging states and cities to include plastics in their mandatory recycling programs, said Dr. Darrell Morrow, director of the Center for Plastics Recycling Research at Rutgers University.

Legislation aimed at reducing plastic garbage has prompted the research effort.

Recently Suffolk County, N.Y., banned the use of polystyrene foam packaging, and about 20 states have proposed bills that would either ban or restrict some plastic packaging.

"No doubt about it, legislation is the single most important reason why we are looking at recycling," said Wayne Pearson, executive director of the Plastics Recycling Foundation, a consortium of 45 companies including plastics manufacturers like Du Pont and such beverage manufacturers as Coca-Cola and Pepsi.

GE Plastics, a division of General Electric is studying the possibility of cars with recyclable plastic parts and houses built from recycled plastics.

In the major commercial recycling operation today, 150 million pounds of carbonated beverage bottles are being recycled by six companies in the United States to recover polyethylene terephthalate or PET, a pure plastic resin designed to prevent carbon dioxide in the beverages from leaking out.

Wellman Inc. of Johnsonville, S.C., the largest PET recycling company, has been recovering the material since the first bottle bills were passed in Oregon, Iowa and Michigan in 1979.

Last year Wellman recycled 100 million pounds of plastic from the 890-million-pound beverage bottle industry into fiberfill and carpet facing.

Shoppers are paying more these days for garbage bags, antifreeze, women's polyester-blend sportswear and many other products made from plastics or synthetics.

The culprit is a chemical called ethylene, the most widely used building block for an array of consumer and industrial goods. Demand for ethylene is booming, capacity is stretched to the limit, and since there isn't enough to go around, chemical companies are collecting record prices for it.

Industry experts say recent fires at huge ethylene plants owned by Shell and Texaco and explosions at plants overseas caused a huge ripple in the supply. While both U.S. plants are operating again, their customers say it will be several months before the already tight ethylene market is back to normal.

The most dramatic price increase so far has come in antifreeze, which is made from an ethylene derivative called ethylene glycol. Producers add corrosion- and foam-inhibiting agents to glycol to make antifreeze.

Shell Oil Co. spokesman Bill Gibson said Shell's wholesale price for antifreeze has gone up 80 percent since August 1987. Retail prices have increased at least that much. Last spring a gallon of antifreeze cost $3 or $4, but today is it selling for $6 to $8 or more, and some stores cannot keep it in stock.

"The demand has been just crazy, especially in the Upper Midwest," Target Stores spokesman George Hite said. He added that demand this summer has been running about 10 times the normal rate for this time of year.

"By the first of the year, glycol supplies will begin to loosen up," said Ray Barrett, president of Houston-based Hi-Port Industries, which mixes and packages anti-freeze for several companies. "But by then it's too late. You're doing all your packaging for the winter months now (through November)."

A chemicals expert with the U.S. Department of Commerce said even though glycol prices have surged, he believes retail prices have been overinflated by media attention and consumer hysteria.

"I'm a do-it-yourselfer," said Vince Kamenicky, director of the Commerce Department's office of chemicals, "and right here in the Washington area, I recently bought four gallons of antifreeze at $5 a gallon – and that's with a $2 rebate."

Antifreeze makers, which earn a relatively small profit margin, must compete with other industries for the supply of ethylene glycol. Some of the largest competitors are textile manufacturers who make polyester.

Joel Futterman, executive vice president of the Klopman Fabrics division of Burlington Industries, said his company is paying 10 percent to 12 percent more than it was a year ago to buy polyester fibers from chemical companies such as DuPont that make polyester from glycol. Burlington weaves polyester "filament" fibers into fine fabrics and mixes "staple" fibers with natural materials like cotton to make fabrics for sports wear.

Manufacturers have tried to absorb the cost increases, especially in the filament lines that are hurt by sudden price increases. One line that did see a price hike recently was women's sportswear, Futterman said, and shoppers have responded with fewer purchases.

Plastic garbage bags, which are made from another ethylene derivative called polyethylene, have gone up in price by about 30 percent to 35 percent at retail stores in the last two years, said Fred Hermann of Mobil Chemical Co.'s consumer division in Rochester, N.Y. Mobil makes Hefty brand bags. A box of 10 heavy outdoor bags, for example, increased in price from $1.49 in January 1986 to $1.99 today, he said, due to increases in the cost of plastic.

"Plastic is the bulk of our cost," he said. "Packaging is a relatively small cost."

Retail prices for bags have not gone up nearly as much as feedstock prices, however. Nick Greco, Mobil Chemical's polyethylene group manager, said that polyethylene has increased from about 25 cents a pound to 52 cents in 18 months.

The plastic crunch hit the milk industry last spring, when chemical producers were rationing the materials from which milk packers make plastic jugs. The short supply of high-density polyethylene forced some companies to cut back on the amount of milk they packed into half-gallon jugs.

Those that still had machinery capable of packing milk in half gallon cartons temporarily switched to paper, said Linwood Tipton, president of the Milk Industry Foundation in Washington, D.C. Supplies loosened in early August, and most are back to normal today, he added.

The automobile industry is another major consumer of plastics, and while higher prices have not materialized on the showroom floor, many suppliers who make plastic parts that go on cars are swallowing cost increases.

Joseph E. Colombo, vice president for sales of Sterling Engineered Products in Mount Clemens, Mich., said his company's costs for three kinds of plastic have increased as much as 15 percent, and carmakers have absorbed only part of the increase. Sterling makes bumpers, interior consoles, plastic engine parts and other functional and decorative parts.

Chemical industry consultants say ethylene prices could climb a little higher in the next year or so. But major companies have plans to add several billion pounds a year of capacity, and once that new capacity comes on line in two or three years, the supply will loosen and plastics prices will drift downward.

That is good news for consumers and manufacturers who use plastics. But it will be bad news for the big, integrated energy companies. Wide profit margins from chemicals have allowed them to offset poor returns on their oil and gas businesses, and lower chemical prices could put them back in an earnings squeeze.

Just 3 of air show victims identified

AP/Karl Gude

RAMSTEIN, West Germany (AP) — West German authorities said today they had identified just three of the spectators killed when three Italian stunt jets collided during an air show, one hurtling in flames into a crowd.

They said four people died during the night, bringing to 47 the death toll in Sunday's disaster at the U.S. Air Base in Ramstein, and 344 remained hospitalized.

"Many of them have life-threatening injuries," added Juergen Dietzen, spokesman for the Rhineland Palatinate state where Ramstein is located.

"So far, only the three Italian pilots and three spectators have been positively identified," he told reporters in the state capital of Mainz. "The three spectators who have been positively identified are Germans."

Brigitte De Jesus, spokeswoman at the U.S. Army hospital in Landstuhl, said today that "three to four Americans who were injured are scheduled to return to the United States this afternoon." She did not elaborate.

U.S. military burn specialists from the Brooke Army Medical Center in San Antonio, Texas, examined 12 seriously burned Americans — including several children — at the hospital.

West Germany's ARD television said about 50 people were in critical condition.

Many of the dead were burned beyond recognition in the accident, the world's worst air show crash involving spectators. Authorities did not release an accounting of the number of dead and injured children.

The Associated Press called Ramstein spokesman Sgt. Eddie Lee for comment on the revised German death count, but was told by a secretary he was busy with other calls and unable to come to the telephone.

The U.S. military radio, AFN, had been reporting 46 deaths.

Earlier today, Lee told the AP "The mortuary people are having trouble with the identifications. It will be some time before we have full list of the dead."

A memorial service for the victims will be held Saturday in Ramstein, Hans-Juergen Vollmer, spokesman for the Kaiserslautern district government, said today.

Monday, the government banned acrobatic performances by West Germany warplanes and called for the suspension of all military air shows in the country. In addition, U.S. Ambassador Richard Burt indicated the United States might ban stunt-flying exhibitions at air shows at its bases in West Germany.

West Germany and its NATO partners suspended military air shows in this nation Monday "until suggestions for effective measures are complete," said Defense Minister Rupert Scholz.

Scholz also said he was permanently barring military stunt-flying exhibitions by West German military aircraft at air shows.

"I have made the decision that aerobatic flying can no longer be considered," he told the ZDF television network Monday night. "But it is obvious that I can make this decision only for the West German armed forces."

"We are very open-minded about whether there will be future aerobatic shows," Burt said. "The United States will do all it can to make sure such a tragedy never happens again."

Meanwhile, John Galvin, commanding general of NATO, visited the crash site on Monday.

"We have absolutely no idea what went wrong," he said.

Sunday's accident occurred as two formations of stunt-flying jets passed each other in a complicated maneuver about 180 feet above the airfield as about 300,000 people looked on.

Talks can begin when strike ends, Polish leaders say

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Talks between the government and Solidarity on solving Poland's problems can begin as soon as Lech Walesa calls off a strike at the Lenin shipyard, a government spokesman said today.

"The stoppage of strikes by Mr. Lech Walesa and the shipyard where he works would mean automatically convening a round table," chief government spokesman Jerzy Urban told reporters.

Urban said there were no preconditions on what subjects could be discussed, adding: "The starting of talks will be a common victory."

Interior Minister Gen. Czeslaw Kiszczak would mediate the talks, Urban said. Urban declined to elaborate on other possible participants, but hinted the head of the official OPZZ union would be included.

Wednesday is the eighth anniversary of accords signed in Gdansk guaranteeing the right to free trade unions. Solidarity, once the only independent trade federation in the Soviet bloc, was outlawed following the imposition of martial law in 1981.

If the talks do take place, they would be the first direct contact between Walesa and high government officials since he was interned after the martial law crackdown that crushed Solidarity.

Round-table talks were proposed first Friday by Kiszczak, who said there would be no pre-conditions although he indicated the strikes must first end.

Aides earlier quoted Walesa, a founder of Solidarity, as saying he would not call for an end to the strikes without pledges that talks involve the issue of union pluralism. He also was quoted as saying he should take part as recognized chairman of Solidarity.

Ten enterprises remained idled by work stoppages in Poland's most serious wave of strikes since 1981. The work stoppages began Aug. 16.

About 5,000 workers joined an occupation strike at a major southeastern steel mill on Monday after authorities attempted to reopen it, and talks between striking workers and management broke off at a coal mine and in the Baltic port of Szczecin.

During the peak of the unrest, about 20 enterprises employing 100,000 workers were idled.

The week-old strike at the defense-related Stalowa Wola mill in southeastern Poland swelled dramatically Monday when managers tried to reopen the 18,000-worker plant, strikers and authorities said.

"Strikers control a substantial part of the complex's territory," state radio said of the strike. "They control roads inside the plant. They check IDs of passing people who are not on strike."

Stunt crash stuns town near big U.S. air base

RAMSTEIN, West Germany (AP) — For the people of this town near the biggest U.S. air base in Europe, Sunday's stunt crash was a disaster waiting to happen — and made worse because it was "just taking risks for a show, not a war."

"We have an air show every day here," Stephanie Antes, 26, said of the warplanes that roar over Ramstein daily from the base. "But this has to be the last time they it do it for a display."

More than 24 hours after the tragedy in which three Italian stunt aircraft collided, killing more than 40 people and injuring hundreds as one plowed into the crowd in a ball of flames, Ramstein has gone quiet.

Few people were on the streets Monday evening, the bars were half-empty, and the talk was loaded with resentment.

There was also a strong sense of just being lucky.

Heike Griebhammer, a 20-year-old bar attendant, left the air show just 10 minutes before the crash. Her aunt and a 3-year-old cousin, Sarah Griebhammer, stayed on.

The child was caught on the edge of the ball of flame, but she too was among the lucky ones — her mother scooped her up and the child escaped with a badly singed arm, said Miss Griebhammer.

"I've always thought something would happen," she said. "It's only afterward that you wonder why you went (to the show) at all."

This town of 8,000 relies heavily on revenues from the sprawling air base about half a mile from Ramstein's modest business district.

One establishment, the Diebglocker bar, does a brisk business from Ramstein air shows.

But Sunday afternoon, instead of coming in for a drink and a meal, hundreds of people poured in trying to telephone friends and relatives after the accident.

"It was just terrible," said co-owner Helga Pisani. "It doesn't matter what it means for the business. We don't want another show here."

But her husband, Salvatore Pisani, an Italian who settled in Ramstein 25 years ago, said the shows should go on.

"It was just chance, it was fate," said Pisani.

France Hausladen, 74, recalled 25 years of hearing the jets roar overhead since he moved to Ramstein.

"They do it thousands of times and it's all right. But sooner or later there was going to be a disaster," said Hausladen.

"People, thousands of people, want to see these things and nobody makes them go. But it is all so unnecessary."

"There's a big fuss now, but in six weeks it will probably be forgotten," said Uwe Prien.

Adoption case reopens wounds from 'dirty war'

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP) — The 10-year-old daughter of a couple presumed killed by security forces during Argentina's "dirty war" was ordered taken from her natural grandparents and returned to her adoptive parents.

Federal Judge Alfredo Sanudo, who handed down the decision, "doesn't deserve to live," said Ruben Fontana, Juliana's maternal grandfather.

Fontana vowed to appeal the order, issued Monday in a closed-door hearing in the Buenos Aires suburb of Moron.

Jose and Carmen Trevino adopted the dark, chubby-cheeked Juliana after she was found as an infant in the doorway of a building and taken to an orphanage. They did not comment on the ruling to reporters outside the courtroom.

The "Juliana Case," as it is called in South America, is reminiscent of "The Official Story," the Oscar-winning 1985 Argentine film about a family that adopts the child of a woman killed by security forces.

In the 1970s, at least 9,000 people vanished in Argentina and were presumed abducted and killed by security agents in the "dirty war," which was ordered by the military dictatorship to quell the leftist opposition. Several military leaders have been tried, convicted and sentenced for their role in the terror.

The Trevinos — unlike other families who didn't question where their children came from — adopted Juliana legally, told her she was adopted, and tried for years to track down her biological parents.

Jose Trevino, a journalist, recently told The Associated Press:

"From the first moment, we told Juliana she was adopted...If her real parents appeared, my wife and I told ourselves we would rip up the documents" and return the child.

The Trevinos brought Juliana to the attention of her natural grandparents earlier this year, when they gave a sample of her blood to a clinic set up to match children with parents who had "disappeared."

The blood sample proved Juliana was the daughter of Pedro Fabian Sandoval and Liliana Fontana — who was pregnant when the couple was arrested on July 1, 1977 — and the granddaughter of Ruben and Clelia Fontana.

Pinochet backers, opponents anticipate his nomination

SANTIAGO, Chile (AP) — Backers of President Augusto Pinochet staged vigils today in anticipation of his expected nomination as the only candidate in a presidential referendum that would decide whether his rule extends until 1997.

Gen. Pinochet, who deposed Chile's elected president in a bloody 1973 military coup, was to meet behind closed doors today with his colleagues in the navy, air force and national police to choose the single candidate.

Opposition groups planned to protest the nomination by the four-man junta, which was to gather at the heavily guarded Defense Ministry.

Under the election rules established by the military government, Pinochet, the army commander, and the other three junta members were to name a single nominee and voters will vote "yes" or "no" on that candidate.

Pinochet backers staged all-night vigils to await the announcement and prepared a downtown rally tonight to celebrate it.

Monday, police used water cannons to scatter a downtown demonstration by women chanting anti-government slogans and urging voters to vote "no" in the referendum. Witnesses said about 25 people were arrested.

A 1980 Constitution gives the military leaders 48 hours to reach a unanimous decision. But the government seemed clearly convinced that the meeting will be brief, and was making arrangements for a formal announcement to the nation later today.

Pinochet was scheduled to attend a formal luncheon with the army generals at 1.30 p.m. — 90 minutes after the meeting's scheduled starting time.

At the announcement ceremony, the commanders also were expected to disclose an exact date for the referendum. Pinochet has said it will take place in early October.

If a majority of the 7.2 million registered voters cast "yes" ballots in the referendum, the nominee will begin an eight-year term March 11. If a majority reject him, an open election will be held in 1990, with Pinochet remaining in power until then.

Were the commanders to fail to reach a unanimous decision within 48 hours, the Constitution calls for nomination by majority decision of an eight-man National Security Council, which includes Pinochet, navy chief Adm. Jose Merino, air force commander Gen. Fernando Matthei and national police director Gen. Rodolfo Stange. It also includes four other officials, three of whom are appointed to their posts by Pinochet.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Cease-fire flap stalls talks

GENEVA (AP) — The U.N. secretary-general today blamed disagreements over an immediate troop withdrawal and a maritime cease-fire for stalling formal Iran-Iraq peace talks.

"We are trying to clear the first part (of a U.N. peace resolution) on an immediate cease-fire and a troop withdrawal without delay...The cease-fire at sea is part of the problem," Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar said.

Formal sessions between Foreign Ministers Ali Akbar Velayati of Iran and Tariq Aziz of Iraq have been suspended since Friday. Plans for a formal session Monday were shelved without explanation, and no formal talks were planned today.

Low-level talks with Iran and Iraq were continuing.

Velayati today accused Iraq of "raising unnecessary or out-of-place issues to disrupt the talks."

In an interview with Tehran Radio monitored in Nicosia, he said he hoped Perez de Cuellar, the U.N. Security Council and other nations can pressure Iraq and "put a stop to this deviating course...or force them to come back to the correct path."

Fetuses buried at hospital

MONTERREY, Mexico (AP) — A hospital here was under investigation following the discovery of a shallow grave on hospital grounds containing dozens of human embryos and fetuses.

Jose Cavazos Lopez, Health Secretary for the northern state of Nuevo Leon, said Monday the investigation concerns the hospital's failure to properly dispose of human remains.

Cavazos said pathologists had not determined if the remains are the product of miscarriages or abortions, which are illegal in Mexico.

But, he said, "The practice of illegal abortion is not that great in Monterrey that a hospital would be filled up with them. It's very difficult to hide."

State attorney general's office investigators, acting on a tip from a hospital employee, discovered the 3-foot by 70-foot grave Friday on the grounds of the private Section 50 Teachers' Union Hospital.

Shanghai rations pots

BEIJING (AP) — Shanghai residents wanting a new aluminum pot will have to surrender an old one under regulations to curb profiteering and panic buying, the official China Daily said today.

The price of aluminum in China has more than doubled since January.

Only newly married couples who produce their marriage certificates will be exempt from the old-for-new rationing system, the newspaper said, and those couples will be limited to two sauce pans and one tea pot.

It said the rationing would counter the rising price of aluminum caused by a shortage of supplies.

Aluminum is selling for the equivalent of $4,324 per ton, compared to $1,892 in January.
