Mayor: T Bar Ranch to provide water relief

Upcoming summer still will be 'tough' without significant rainfall, officials say

By Kathleen Thurber
Staff Writer

The promise of resources from Midland's T Bar Ranch property by May 2013 means residents will have water for decades.

Between now and the completion of pipelines that will be constructed by the Midland County Freshwater Supply District No. 1, Midlanders likely will be under tight restrictions as the city works to conserve water, city leaders said.

"This will be the hardest summer Midland will have to go through," City Manager Courtney Sharp said. "The silver lining is we will have water in 2013."

Mayor Wes Perry and city staff said they likely will recommend to the council an even stricter outdoor watering schedule for the coming months if there aren't significant rains.

Permitted irrigation amounts will depend upon how much water the Colorado River Municipal Water District is able to provide, Director of Utilities Stuart Purvis said. The CRMWD's board will meet Feb. 8 to discuss what level of water can be sold to member and customer cities this spring and summer.

If it decides to hold cities to about winter supply levels, as has been suggested, Perry said Midlanders may only be given one day of outdoor watering each week.

He said the goal is to provide residents enough water to sustain their trees and shrubs. Lawns, however, will not be a major priority.

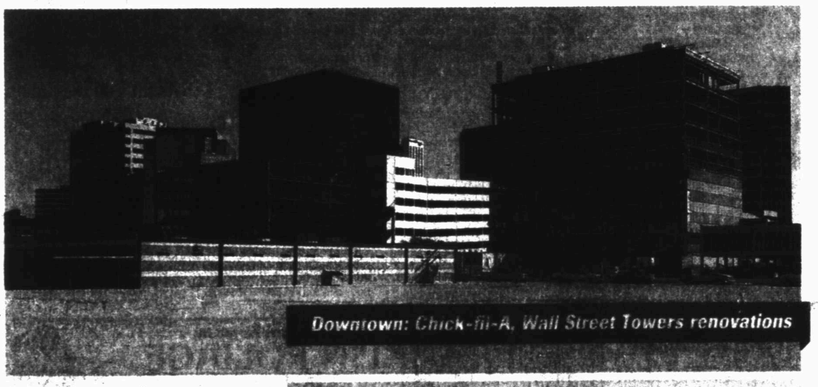

Additionally, top-tier water users could see their bill increase if the city enters into certain stages of its Drought Contingency Plan. Assistant City Manager Jim Nichols said the city heard many complaints in 2011 about the city's not enforceing

ROOM TO GROW

Midland ready to expand, but what will come here?

By Kathleen Thurber
Staff Writer

With an oil boom that creates increasingly expendable incomes in Midland, developers said there certainly are opportunities for growth in the Tall City.

Several developers were in Midland last week for the city's first-ever developers conference. Whether the next big restaurant, entertainment spot or single-family housing neighborhood will be brought to the city remains to be seen. But, several agreed there's plenty of places for expansion for those who are willing to invest.

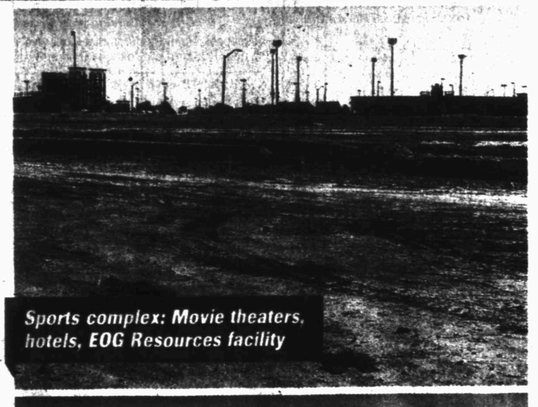

"You've got a little boom going on out here," said Sam Brous, principal at the Westover Group based in Fort Worth.

Aaron Farmer, vice president of the Retail Coach, said its study shows there's a potential for $578 million in restaurant sales in Midland. Because restaurants, grocery stores and retail outlets attract people from Midland and Odessa, Andrews, Hobbs, N.M., and other cities, Farmer said the Tall City is ripe for new additions.

"It goes to show you West Texas, Midland, is a different market," he said.

After talking with developers, speakers at the forum and city staff, the Reporter-Telegram takes a look at a few sectors of city that officials say are growing or are set up for growth.

Celebrity pot busts put tiny county on the map

By Juan Carlos-Llorca
Associated Press

SIERRA BLANCA — Nestled among the few remaining businesses that dot a rundown highway in this dusty West Texas town stands what's become a surprise destination for marijuana-toting celebrities: the Hudspeth County Jail.

Willie Nelson, Snoop Dogg and actor Armie Hammer have been among the thousands of people busted for possession at a Border Patrol checkpoint outside town in recent years, bringing a bit of notoriety to one of Texas' most sparsely populated counties.

"Once I was in Arizona, and when I said where I was from, they said, 'That's where Willie Nelson was busted,'" said Louise Barantley, manager at the Coyote Sunset souvenir shop in Sierra Blanca.

Hudspeth County cameos aren't only for outlaws: Action movie star Steven Seagal, who's already deputized in Louisiana and Arizona for his reality show "Steven Seagal Lawman" on A&E, has signed on to become a county officer.

Locals already have found ways to rub shoulders with their celebrity guests.

Deputies posed for pictures with Snoop Dogg after authorities said they found several joints on his bus earlier this month. When Nelson was busted here in 2010, the county's lead prosecutor suggested the singer settle his marijuana charges by performing "Blue Eyes Crying in the Rain" for the court. Nelson paid a fine instead, but not before county commissioner Wayne West played one of his own songs for the country music legend.

Who's been busted?

Willie Nelson

Snoop Dogg

Armie Hammer

West acknowledged he's a big fan of Nelson and wanted to capitalize on a golden chance to perform for such a noted "captive audience."

"Willie loved the song, he is a real outgoing individual" he added.

The once-thriving town of Sierra Blanca began to shrink to its current 1,000-person population after the construction of nearby Interstate 10 — a main artery linking cities from California to Florida — offered an easy way to bypass the community.

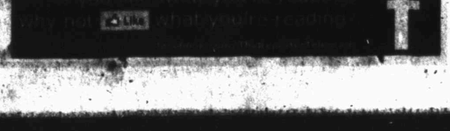

Now the highway is sending thousands of drug bust cases Sierra Blanca's way, courtesy of a Border Patrol checkpoint just outside of town where drug-sniffing dogs inspect more than 17,000 trucks, travelers — and tour buses — daily for whiffs of contraband that may have made

Aimed at young professionals, this year's event is Thursday through Saturday at the Austin Capitol Complex. An added benefit will be a "behind the scenes" tour of the Capitol Building.

The forum will feature as keynote speaker, Joanne King Herring. The international socialite, global political activist and former television anchor was portrayed by Julia Roberts in the movie "Charlie Wilson's War."

Forum participants will be able to choose from more than 20 individualized leadership training sessions, hear leading authorities discuss today's leadership challenges and put their training to the test in breakout sessions.

HUDSPETH

its way inland from the border.

Hudspeth County Sheriff Arvin West, younger brother of the musically inclined commissioner, said his office handled about 2,000 cases last year, most of them having to do with drugs seized at the checkpoint.

Border Patrol agents say people busted with small amounts of pot often say they have medical marijuana licenses from California, Arizona or New Mexico — three states along I-10 that, unlike Texas, allow for medicinal pot prescriptions — and claim to believe the licenses were valid nationwide.

Nelson's publicists declined to comment about the specifics of the singer's case. Representatives for Snoop Dogg, who will pay a fine and court costs after being cited for possession of marijuana paraphernalia, did not return several messages seeking comment.

County authorities have not yet decided whether to prosecute or issue a citation for Hammer, who starred in the 2010 film "The Social Network" and more recently played the FBI's No. 2 man in "J. Edgar" He was arrested in November on his way to his wife's bakery in San Antonio after authorities said they found marijuana-laced brownies and cookies. His attorney Kent Schaffer has called the case a "total non-issue."

Local officials say they're not on a celebrity witch hunt, but some residents are enjoying the publicity from the high-profile arrests. They say the once forgotten town of Sierra Blanca should take pride in not pandering to famous people caught breaking the law.

"We get attention because something is being done right," resident Adolfo Gonzalez said while shopping at a local convenience store. "It'd be worse if we'd let them go because they are celebrities."

That's not expected to change when Seagal comes to town. Sheriff West insists the "Under Siege" star hasn't indicated any plans to film his show here — but the sheriff isn't ruling it out.

"If he wants to, we can do it but that's not what he said this was about," West said.

West's spokesman, Rusty Flemming, said Seagal will patrol the area and train colleagues in martial arts and weapons techniques. The actor is expected to arrive in Hudspeth County within months, once he's done filming a new movie in Canada.

Seagal's management agency did not return calls and emails seeking comment about his plans in Texas.

Four areas in Midland set up for growth

Gateway Plaza and Scharbauer Sports Complex

Goal: To create a new hub for development that will include retail, entertainment, hotels and multi-family housing.

What it will take: Jeff Benson, president and CEO of Cinergy Cinemas, admits he's a bit of a case study for Midland development.

Benson plans to open a movie theater and entertainment venue near Business 20 and Loop 250 late this year.

What convinced him to invest in Midland? Benson said it was the city's apparent lack of entertainment options. Hollywood Theaters is the only comparable competition for a venture like his, and Benson said he saw a need in the market and wanted to step in, particularly on the west side of Midland, where space still is available.

"The local market is hot as a firecracker out here," he said. "There's no family entertainment here in town."

Benson said the ups and downs of the oil market could be a deterrent for some. For a movie man, it doesn't pose a great risk because data show families purchase movie tickets even amid recessions.

For others to invest at Gateway Plaza or near the Scharbauer Sports complex like Benson did, it will take a commitment, said Janice Haven, broker and owner of the Havens Group.

Havens said she's already had interest from people in the area for multi-family housing and restaurants.

SBC LP also has land posted as available for commercial sites in west Midland near the Scharbauer Sports Complex, and city staff said there's open space near Crestview Baptist Church for development.

Upcoming projects: Cinergy Cinemas has planned to build an 11-screen theater and entertainment complex for the land off of Business 20 and Loop 250.

In addition to movie theaters, the complex will have mini-bowling lanes, a ropes course over the lobby and arcade offerings, Benson said.

"It's going to be wild and crazy," he said. "You don't have a lot of entertainment out here, and we're going to try to change that."

A 92-unit apartment complex is under way just off of Business 20 and Loop 250. Havens said she is hopeful another 180-unit apartment complex will be built because the land already is under contract.

"We really believe in the Gateway Plaza," she said. "We feel like we're book-ending the loop."

Near the sports complex, a TownePlace Suites is under construction, and there are plans for a Hilton Garden Inn and a SpringHill Suites. Those hotels are an addition to the three already in the area.

EOG Resources has plans for an approximate 86,000-square-foot office complex near the sports complex.

Downtown Midland

Goal: To create a revitalized downtown that offers amenities during the day and for those who want to stay downtown after 5 p.m. Some projects are under way, though city leaders say they're still hoping for that "catalyst" project that will really spur change.

What it will take: Mary Pampuch, executive vice president at San Diego-based Lankford & Associates, said she came to Midland for the developer's forum, in part, because of an interest in downtown.

She said many cities nationwide have abandoned their downtowns in recent decades. Now, there's a chance to bring activity back, especially in growing markets.

"There was this mass exodus from several of these downtowns," she said.

Pampuch said incentives offered by public entities — such as the Downtown Midland Management District and Tax Increment Reinvestment Zone — are what it takes for some to commit to refurbishing downtown. Others are willing to take on the projects themselves, she said.

Success relies on activity downtown past 5 o'clock.

Upcoming projects: The Wall Towers are under renovation, which has included asbestos removal, city staff said. Once in full operation, more office space will be available.

Construction of a Chick-fil-A restaurant is planned for the corner of Andrews Highway and Wall Street, according to Kenneth Van Dyne, senior planner with the city. Though not in the center of downtown, the restaurant will add another option for those who work or go to school downtown. Midland Memorial Hospital often draws people from other towns, so there's more people to frequent restaurants and other amenities on the edge of downtown than most realize, Van Dyne said.

Concho Resources also is finishing the Permian Plaza project that was started by Basic Energy and will include office space and a parking garage on Illinois Avenue.

On Main Street, Basin PBS is wants to move its headquarters into the Ritz Theater. It has received funds from three public entities and is working on its own fundraising to make the project possible.

North Midland

Goal: To foster growth of the city as it continues expanding toward the north.

What it will take: Van Dyne told developers north Midland is growing, and the city expects growth to continue.

Zone changes are required for much of the development. City staff said a zone change for a single lot can be completed in as little as four months if the developer is able to schedule its requests in conjunction with planning and zoning and City Council meetings.

Oil and gas activity also is taking place in north Midland, so developers looking to start projects — particularly on the far northern borders of the city limits — are learning to co-exist with oil activity.

Builders said more lots needed to construct new homes.

Callie Stevens, president of the Permian Basin Home Builders Association, said most demand is in north Midland, but there's a lack of available lots for those who want to build. The addition of lots takes time, and in some cases, annexation of more land into the city, staff said.

"We are running out of developable lots," City Manager Courtney Sharp said.

Upcoming projects: Fasken Oil and Ranch Ltd.'s development is one of several in far northwest Midland.

Bobby Burns, president and CEO of the Midland Chamber of Commerce, said in 2000 the company was drilling just 20 wells a year. But this year, more than 4,000 wells are planned.

As part of its growth in the oil industry, Fasken is expanding in Midland. It already has broken ground on its 60,000-square-foot office building. Next, the company hopes to foster a multi-use development that could include homes and town homes.

Los Conchos Ventures recently was granted zoning and a preliminary plat for a development near Mockingbird Lane and Holiday Hill Road. The development, planned for four phases over the next five to seven years, will include single-family homes, town homes and lots for commercial and retail additions.

The Bush Tennis Center also still is being built at Briarwood Avenue and Holiday Hill Road. The center will include 18 full-size courts, a stadium, eight quick-start courts and an education building, among other amenities.

Van Dyne said there also are empty lots on the north side of Briarwood Avenue zoned for retail and multi-family housing.

Farther east, Havens said Havens Group is working with an out-of-town developer on the lots in front of Blue Ridge Apartments near Midkiff Road and Loop 250. Havens said she expects ground could be broken there for retail additions this year.

Highway 191/FM 1788

Goal: With the addition of the Wagner Noël Performing Arts Center, city leaders said they hope to create a gateway into Midland on Highway 191. Several envision retail development along Highway 191 that could include restaurants and shops.

What it will take: Developers said the planned addition of water and sewer lines along the north side of Highway 191 will help foster growth.

Without this infrastructure, it's difficult to attract major retailers or restaurants.

John Darnell, of Onyx Contractors, said he sees Highway 191 as a prime spot for future development and will be ready to work on projects when infrastructure goes in and interest peaks.

Stephanie Rivas, marketing manager at the performing arts center, said patrons have asked when a restaurant will be built near the venue to they can eat before a show.

"People are excited about having a night out and are excited about more businesses in this area," she said.

Upcoming projects: Existing businesses along Highway 191 will have to meet certain requirements if they want to expand. New businesses will be subject to the standards of a local retail district.

"It's the hope of the city to make this a nice looking corridor," Van Dyne said. "This is part of our driving force to make this local retail."

Mid-Cities Church's request to add offices to its church along the highway was approved.

The MOTOR Metropolitan Planning Organization also has commissioned a corridor study of the Highway 191 zone that leaders say they hope will shape the future of development. Craig Farmer, senior planner with Freese and Nichols, who is heading the study, spoke at the developer's forum and said he sees the potential for retail and commercial development along the highway, as well as neighborhoods, backage roads and other additions.

Alabama tornado survivors help after latest twisters

By Jay Reevers
Associated Press

CLAY, Ala. — Survivors still haunted by memories of last year's tornado outbreak that killed 250 in Alabama are writing checks, donating diapers and standing over hot grills to help victims of the latest twisters to pummel the state.

The April 27 outbreak of 62 tornadoes that swept across the state in waves caused more than $1 billion in damage, hurt more than 2,000 people and destroyed or damaged nearly 24,000 homes. The storms leveled neighborhoods and virtually wiped out some towns. The latest outbreak of at least 10 tornadoes this week ravaged central Alabama, killing two people near Birmingham and destroying or badly damaging more than 460 homes.

Rick Johnson is still living with relatives and friends after two tornadoes last year killed four people and splintered his home in rural Cordova, where the downtown area is still in shambles. When the latest twisters hit this week, Johnson stepped up. He volunteered to cook 200 pounds of donated chicken and help deliver hot meals to volunteers, workers and storm victims in Center Point, about 45 miles from his hometown.

"You know what they're going through. You know what they feel. It's hard to describe," said Johnson, 55.

Leaders from President Barack Obama on down praised the generosity and volunteering spirit of Alabamians after last year's deadly tornado outbreak. The people who needed help last year, many of whom are still removing debris and rebuilding, have been among those lending a hand this time around. The Alabama Emergency Management Agency said 2,511 victims of last year's storms were still living in temporary housing.

For Leah Bromley, helping out victims of the latest twisters is all about repaying kindness. Mountains of donated clothes and furniture flooded her hometown of Tuscaloosa after a twister killed nearly 50 people there last year.

"I just really believe in paying it forward," said Bromley, who started Rebuild Tuscaloosa, a nonprofit organization formed after last year's twisters to solicit donations and distribute money and services for relief. Now, it's helping out in communities far from Tuscaloosa.

A University of Alabama sorority from Tuscaloosa gave donations to help victims of the latest twisters northeast of Birmingham, and a group brought more from Cullman, which also got slammed last year. A school in a Walker County town that was hard hit last year donated supplies and made sandwiches for survivors in Oak Grove, which was battered both in 2011 and 2012.

Mary Foster couldn't go home for weeks after a tornado badly damaged her home in Tuscaloosa, and she's just now settling back into a normal routine nine months later. That didn't stop her from writing a check to a relief fund this week.

Foster said she was compelled to help because so many people helped her last year, including Bromley's organization and Habitat for Humanity, which helped fix her home.

"I was glad to be able to be a blessing to them because so many people were a blessing to me," Foster said.

Foster's house in east Tuscaloosa was badly damaged when a twister cut a wide swath through the city of nearly 90,000 last year, forcing her and her two daughters to move in first with a brother, then into a motel. Her home is now repaired, but broken trees and splintered, vacant homes dot the rolling hills all through her Alberta City neighborhood, providing a constant reminder of the terror that day.

"When I came out and saw people scream and hollering. ... Oh, my," said Foster, her voice trailing off.

Thanks to contributions from people in tornado-scarred towns and elsewhere, the gym is now full at Bridge Point Church in Clay, which opened a distribution center after a twister last Monday slammed neighborhoods including one where a 16-year-old girl was killed and scores of homes were destroyed or damaged. A steady stream of storm victims came by on Wednesday gathering items off of a gym floor covered with tables full of cleaning supplies and buckets, baby food and diapers, tarps and canned foods.

Pastor Mark Higdon said the outpouring of donations has been gratifying, particularly considering how many Alabama families are still struggling to recover from the tornadoes last year, which leveled entire neighborhoods and virtually wiped out some towns. The church's gym was empty at 8 a.m. Tuesday, a day after the twisters struck, and it was overflowing 24 hours later.

"The generosity of people is unbelievable," Higdon said. "They're just more than willing to give back."

A few minutes after Higdon spoke, two trucks and a trailer loaded with donations pulled into the church parking lot with donations from Rebuild Tuscaloosa, Bromley's group. Wearing a T-shirt emblazoned with a map of Alabama and the date of last year's twisters, Brian DeWitt helped unload boxes of food, kitchen supplies and other items. DeWitt's home was spared, but friends lost theirs and he's been helping with the relief.

What is the Midland County Freshwater District No. 1?

By Kathleen Thurber
Staff Writer

The Midland County Freshwater District No. 1 was created through an election in 2010.

Before the issue was put up for a vote, the creation of the district was approved by the city and the Midland County Commissioners' Court.

After local consent was provided, state statute required freshwater district officials to put the measure on the November 2010 ballot so that anyone who lives within the district's bounds could weigh in on the topic.

Because the Midland Freshwater District No. 1 consists of an about 20-acre plot of land near Midland International Airport, there was only one voter — Ryan Latham — living within its purview.

Latham was serving as caretaker of the land, officials said at the time. His father, the late Paul Latham, was president of Fort Stockton Holdings LP. After a "yes" vote from Latham, the district was officially created and also granted the ability to issue up to $375 million in revenue bonds.

The idea for the district came up during Clayton Williams' efforts to transport water to Midland from Fort Stockton Holdings' land in Pecos County. Those efforts still are ongoing.

For now, the freshwater district has the ability to participate in projects like Midland's T Bar Ranch pipelines.

It submitted an application to complete the project after the city of Midland released requests for proposals in October.

José Cuevas Jr., chairman of the freshwater supply district's board, said efforts like building pipelines for the city of Midland is exactly what freshwater districts are created for.

By using the revenue bonds the freshwater district is authorized to take out, it can build the pipelines and charge the city of Midland only for the water it uses. Without an option like this, the city would have to take out its own bonds to build the pipeline.

Revenue bonds have no direct tax implication on Midlanders because the freshwater district is independent from the city and county, Cuevas said.

The bonds will be paid back through revenue raised by the freshwater district for transporting water from T Bar Ranch. The city of Midland owns the T Bar Ranch-property and the water underneath it. But, as part of its contract with the freshwater district, it has agreed to pay up to $2.78 per thousand gallons of water for any water it uses during the length of the city's contract with the freshwater district.

It's anticipated the contract will be signed for a 40-year term.

Building the pipelines will require the freshwater district to hire a slew of companies and consultants.

Hilliard Energy has been hired to perform the right-of-way studies and acquisition for the pipeline. The freshwater district has the authority to use eminent domain for right-of-way acquisition if that becomes necessary, Cuevas said.

Locally, Parkhill, Smith & Cooper Inc. also has been hired for the project, Cuevas said.

Water districts are not authorized to make a profit, though the companies they hire to perform work can profit, Cuevas said.

As the project progresses, Assistant City Manager Jim Nichols said the city will have oversight of the process. It also will have milestones it ensures the water district meets and is including in the contract a financial penalty if the district's May 2013 deadline is not met.

If Fort Stockton Holdings secures a permit to transport its water from Pecos County, Cuevas said the freshwater district still will have enough bond-issuing authority to construct any pipelines necessary for that project.

The city's project and contract is completely separate from the Fort Stockton Holdings venture, Mayor Wes Perry said.

WATER

From 1A

its watering schedule. He said this approach should help to tackle that issue.

"We will be looking at adjusting our structure to create tiers that incentivize conservation," he said. "With tiered multipliers, you'll feel the impact even if we don't catch you."

For the average resident who follows the restrictions, the shift shouldn't have a drastic effect, Perry said. For those who use large amounts of water or residents who don't follow restrictions, charges could become steep, he said.

Irrigation days also likely will be assigned by sector rather than by odd or even addresses, Perry said.

The city will be mapped into regions, and each region will be given a certain time period in which to water.

Perry said he's hopeful the knowledge that water supplies are en route will make it easier for residents to cope with whatever restrictions are approved.

"We've got hope," he said. "That should help this summer."

T Bar project

The city still is working to finalize its contract with the Midland County Freshwater Supply District No. 1 after the council voted last week to award the project to the public entity.

The freshwater district has agreed to construct a pipeline from Midland's T Bar Ranch property in Winkler and Loving counties to Midland by May 2013.

The project will be paid for through the water district's revenue bonds, and the bonds repaid through charges levied for any water delivered, said José Cuevas Jr., chairman of the freshwater supply district's board.

"We want to be good stewards of Midland's resources," Cuevas said. "We live here. We have businesses here. Our kids and grandkids are here."

Midland owns the water underneath its property at T Bar Ranch. However, because the freshwater district is constructing the pipelines, the city will pay a fee for any water it takes from the pipelines.

The freshwater district has agreed to charge no more than $2.78 per thousand gallons of water used.

Purvis said the contract likely will require the city to pay for an average of 10 million gallons of water per day from the freshwater district, but the bulk of those purchases could be made in the summer.

The city still will purchase water from the CRMWD at least through its current contract, which ends in 2029.

By having this second resource from T Bar, Perry said it will lessen Midland's reliance on the CRMWD and hopefully free up resources for other cities to use.

If Midland can purchase less water from the CRMWD during the summers, for example, there might be more water for Odessa to purchase.

He said the city of Midland also could consider selling some of its T Bar Ranch water to the surrounding towns of Fort Stockton or Kermit if they need additional supplies.

"We've always said we want to be a good partner," Perry said.

Blaus Wasser, a private company that builds pipelines, also had submitted a bid for the project. Perry and councilmen Scott Dufford and Jerry Morales said its bid was a great option but that it came down to price.

Blaus Wasser planned to charge the city between $3 and $3.15 per thousand gallons of water used from the pipelines, which would result in more than $1 million in additional charges for water annually.

The freshwater district's price will provide water to citizens at a cheaper rate than they're receiving for CRMWD water now when considering purification costs, Purvis said.

With a pipeline to T Bar Ranch under way, Dufford and Perry said the city will continue investigating options for its 100-year water supply plan. T Bar Ranch should take care of needs for the next about 40 years, Perry said.

"This isn't the endgame," Dufford said. "The way I look at it, we are going to look for more supplies for our grandkids and kids and their grandkids."

Perry said the city continues to work with Abilene and San Angelo on a regional supply plan.

Regardless of what resources Midland secures, Morales said conservation always should remain a key. After what residents have experienced during the current drought, Morales said he hopes Midland has become cognizant of how precious its resources are.

"We still can't let that message go that we're still in a drought," he said. "We have got to be careful of the resources that we've just found. We're still in a drought. We're still conserving water."

Zombie roleplaying game prompted campus alert

Associated Press

RALEIGH, N.C. — The cause of a security alert at the North Carolina State University campus turns out to have been a live-action roleplaying game involving zombies.

The university issued a statement Friday saying that the two reports of men with handguns on the Raleigh campus Wednesday were describing a person playing a game called "Humans vs. Zombies."

The university statement says both reports described the same person, who contacted police after hearing the descriptions and locations of the sightings. The university did not release the person's name.

The campus wasn't locked down and classes weren't affected, but police issued the alert while they investigated the reports.

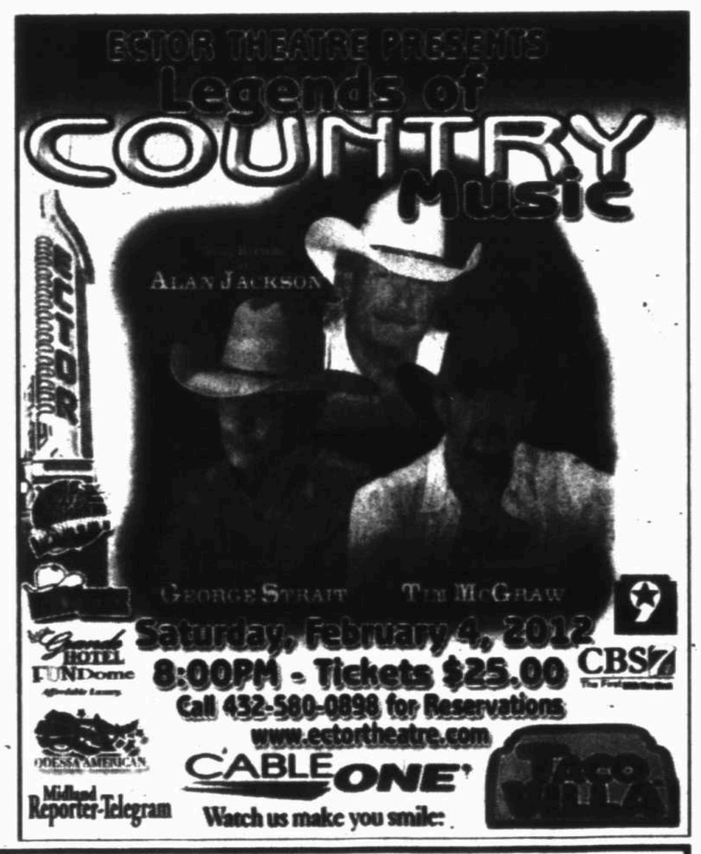

A website promoting the game describes it as similar to tag, in which some players are humans and some are zombies.

Twitter's new censorship plan rouses global furor

By David Crary
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Twitter, a tool of choice for dissidents and activists around the world, found itself the target of global outrage Friday after unveiling plans to allow country-specific censorship of tweets that might break local laws.

It was a stunning role reversal for a youthful company that prides itself in promoting unfettered expression, 140 characters at a time. Twitter insisted its commitment to free speech remains firm, and sought to explain the nuances of its policy, while critics — in a barrage of tweets — proposed a Twitter boycott and demanded that the censorship initiative be scrapped.

"This is very bad news," tweeted Egyptian activist Mahmoud Salem, who operates under the name "Sandmonkey." Later, he wrote, "Is it safe to say that #Twitter is selling us out?"

In China, where activists have embraced Twitter even though it's blocked inside the country, artist and activist Ai Weiwei tweeted in response to the news: "If Twitter censors, I'll stop tweeting."

One often-relayed tweet bore the headline of a Forbes magazine technology blog item: "Twitter Commits Social Suicide"

San Francisco-based Twitter, founded in 2006, depicted the new system as a step forward. Previously, when Twitter erased a tweet, it vanished throughout the world. Under the new policy, a tweet breaking a law in one country can be taken down there and still be seen elsewhere.

Twitter said it will post a censorship notice whenever a tweet is removed, and will post the removal requests it receives from governments, companies and individuals at the website chillingeffects.org.

The critics are jumping to the wrong conclusions, said Alexander Macgilliviray, Twitter's general counsel.

"This is a good thing for freedom of expression, transparency and accountability," he said. "This launch is about us keeping content up whenever we can and to be extremely transparent with the world when we don't. I would hope people realize our philosophy hasn't changed."

Some defenders of Internet free expression came to Twitter's defense.

"Twitter is being pilloried for being honest about something that all Internet platforms have to wrestle with," said Cindy Cohn, legal director of the Electronic Frontier Foundation. "As long as this censorship happens in a secret way, we're all losers."

State Department spokeswoman Victoria Nuland credited Twitter with being upfront about the potential for censorship and said some other companies are not as forthright.

As for whether the new policy would be harmful, Nuland said that wouldn't be known until after it's implemented.

Reporters Without Borders, which advocates globally for press freedom, sent a letter to Twitter's executive chairman, Jack Dorsey, urging that the censorship policy be ditched immediately.

"By finally choosing to align itself with the censors, Twitter is depriving cyberdissidents in repressive countries of a crucial tool for information and organization," the letter said. "Twitter's position that freedom of expression is interpreted differently from country to country is unacceptable."

Reporters Without Borders noted that Twitter was earning praise from free-speech advocates a year ago for enabling Egyptian dissidents to continue tweeting after the Internet was disconnected.

"We are very disappointed by this U-turn now," it said.

Twitter said it has no plans to remove tweets unless it receives a request from government officials, companies or outside party that believes the message is illegal. No message will be removed until an internal review determines there is a legal problem, according to Macgilliviray.

"It's a thing of last resort," he said. "The first thing we do is we try to make sure content doesn't get withheld anywhere. But if we feel like we have to withhold it, then we are transparent and we will withhold it narrowly."

Macgilliviray said the new policy has nothing to do with a recent $300 million investment by Saudi billionaire Prince Alwaleed bin Talal Mac or any other financial contribution.

In its brief existence, Twitter has established itself as one of the world's most powerful megaphones. Streams of tweets have played pivotal roles in political protests throughout the world, including the Occupy Wall Street movement in the United States and the Arab Spring uprisings in Egypt, Bahrain, Tunisia and Syria.

Indeed, many of the tweets calling for a boycott of Twitter on Saturday — using the hashtag #TwitterBlackout — came from the Middle East.

"This decision is really worrying," said Larbi Hilali, a pro-democracy blogger and tweeter from Morocco. "If it is applied, there will be a Twitter for democratic countries and a Twitter for the others."

In Cuba, opposition blogger Yoani Sanchez said she would launch a personal Twitter boycott of unspecified length.

"Twitter will remove messages at the request of governments," she tweeted. "It is we citizens who will end up losing with these new rules."

In the wake of the announcement, cyberspace was abuzz with suggestions for how any future country-specific censorship could be circumvented. Some Twitter users said this could be done by employing tips from Twitter's own help center to alter one's "Country" setting. Other Twitter users were skeptical that this would work.

While Twitter has embraced its role as a catalyst for free speech, it also wants to expand its audience from about 100 million active users now to more than 1 billion. Doing so may require it to engage with more governments and possibly face more pressure to censor tweets; if it defies a law in a country where it has employees, those people could be arrested.

Theoretically, such arrests could occur even in democracies — for example, if a tweet violated Britain's strict libel laws or the prohibitions in France and Germany against certain pro-Nazi expressions.

"It's a tough problem that a company faces once they branch out beyond one set of offices in California into that big bad world out there," said Rebecca MacKinnon of Global Voices Online, an international network of bloggers and citizen journalists. "We'll have to see how it plays out — how it is and isn't used."

MacKinnon said some other major social networks already employ geofiltering along the lines of Twitter's new policy — blocking content in a specific jurisdiction for legal reasons while making it available elsewhere.

Many of the critics assailing the new policy suggested that it was devised as part of a long-term plan for Twitter to enter China, where its service currently is blocked.

China's Communist Party remains highly sensitive to any organized challenge to its rule and responded sharply to the Arab Spring, cracking down last year after calls for a "Jasmine Revolution" in China. Many Chinese nonetheless find ways around the so-called Great Firewall that has blocked social networking sites such as Facebook.

Google for several years agreed to censor its search results in China to gain better access to the country's vast population, but stopped that practice two years after engaging in a high-profile showdown with Chain's government. Google now routes its Chinese search results through Hong Kong, where the censorship rules are less restrictive.

Google Executive Chairman Eric Schmidt declined to comment on Twitter's action and instead limited his comments to his own company.

"I can assure you we will apply our universally tough principles against censorship on all Google products," he told reporters in Davos, Switzerland.

Google's chief legal officer, David Drummond, said it was a matter of trying to adhere to different local laws.

"I think what they (Twitter officials) are wrestling with is what all of us wrestle with — and everyone wants to focus on China, but it is actually a global issue — which is laws in these different countries vary," Drummond said.

"Americans tend to think copyright is a real bad problem, so we have to regulate that on the Internet. In France and Germany, they care about Nazis' issues and so forth," he added. "In China, there are other issues that we call censorship. And so how you respect all the laws or follow all the laws to the extent you think they should be followed while still allowing people to get the content elsewhere?"

Craig Newman, a New York lawyer and former journalist who has advised Internet companies on censorship issues, said Twitter's new policy and the subsequent backlash are both understandable, given the difficult ethical issues at stake.

On one hand, he said, Twitter could put its employees in peril if it was deemed to be breaking local laws.

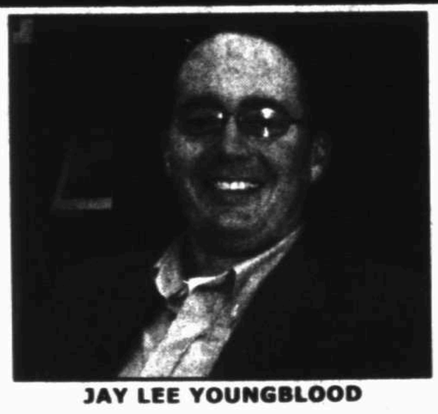

"On the other hand, Twitter has become this huge social force and people view it as some sort of digital town square, where people can say whatever they want," he said. "Twitter could have taken a stand and refused to enter any countries with the most restrictive laws against free speech."

After 70 years, right-to-work impact still unclear

By Tom LoBianco
Associated Press

INDIANAPOLIS — The battle over the right-to-work issue may be reaching a conclusion in Indiana as the state prepares to adopt its law, but the argument over exactly what the measure means for a state's economy is likely to rage on, unresolved, as it has for 70 years.

Since the 1940s, 22 states have passed laws barring unions from collecting mandatory fees from workers for labor representation. Supporters, mostly Republicans, insist the measure helps create a pro-business climate that attracts employers and increases jobs. Opponents say the law only leads to lower wages and poorer quality jobs.

The evidence on the issue is abundant, but also conflicting and murky. The clearest conclusion, according to many experts, is that the economies of states respond to a mix of factors, ranging from the swings in the national economy to demographic trends, and that isolating the impact of right-to-work is nearly impossible.

Obscuring the answer is "the difficulty of distinguishing the effects of the RTW laws from state characteristics, as well as other state policies that are unrelated with these laws," said economists Ozkan Eren and Serkan Ozbeklik, who conducted a major study last year of the right-to-work laws in Oklahoma and Idaho.

For major industries, the chief factors in choosing locations tend to be access to supplies, infrastructure, key markets and a skilled workforce, according to business recruitment specialists. For a state's workers, the impact of right-to-work is limited because only about 7 percent of private sector employees are unionized. Over the years, job growth has surged in states with, and without, right-to-work laws.

On right to work, "The reason we don't have clear views is because it's always being debated at its extremes," said Gary Chaison, a professor of labor relations at Clark University in Massachusetts, who assigns his students to analyze the issue each year. In the end, when it comes to jobs and the law, "We don't know causation," he said.

The Indiana Legislature is expected to complete action on its measure soon. However, the larger debate will continue, focusing on the following arguments:

Claim: Right-to-work brings more jobs to a state.

According to a study commissioned by Indiana's Chamber of Commerce, which supports the right-to-work law, employment grew 100 percent in right-to-work states between 1977 and 2008 but only 57 percent in those without the law.

Proponents point to an immediate impact in Oklahoma, which adopted the measure in 2001. In 2002, the state added 7,822 jobs, said Fred Morgan, president of the Oklahoma Chamber of Commerce.

"In 2002, the Oklahoma Department of Commerce reported that companies announced plans to add the highest number of new jobs since 1995," Morgan said.

However, the chamber study does not account for significant factors affecting employment in the period cited. A massive decline in American manufacturing had a severe impact on jobs in the Rust Belt, where states without right-to-work are clustered. The Sunbelt, where most states have the law, had fewer manufacturing jobs to lose and also experienced big increases in population.

In Oklahoma, the job gains after right to work also were not unusual in the region. Three neighboring states without a right-to-work law — Missouri, New Mexico and Colorado — experienced similar job growth, in some cases even exceeding Oklahoma's. Several major employers shut down in Oklahoma City, including Gulfstream Aerospace in 2002 and Bridgestone Firestone in 2006.

Other factors affecting businesses may play a larger role on job growth in right-to-work states, Eren and Ozbklik's study concluded. Many have "higher subsidies for new factories, low taxes on capital and weaker environmental/safety regulations," they said. In Oklahoma and Idaho, "it is not likely that RTW laws have any impact on manufacturing employment rate."

The chamber study also argues that right-to-work boosts a state's population by making it a more popular place to live and work. Between 2000 and 2009, 4.9 million Americans left non-right-to-work states for those with the law, according to the study. However, the study offered no evidence on other causes for the population shifts.

Claim: Right-to-work decreases wages.

The Economic Policy Institute, which is supported by organized labor, reports that workers in right-to-work states earn $1,500 less annually than their counterparts in states without the law, based on a 2009 analysis of census data.

On average, "right-to-work laws are associated with wages — for everyone, not just union members — that are 3.2 percent lower than they would be without such a law," according to an EPI study released earlier this month.

The EPI researchers, Elise Gould and Heidi Shierholz, said their study made adjustments for differences in the costs of living so that the higher wages in right-to-work states didn't just reflect the higher living costs on the East and West coasts.

But, right-to-work supporters counter with the chamber's study showing that personal income grew 164.4 percent in right-to-work states between 1977 and 2008 while income grew 92.8 percent in non-right-to-work states.

Claim: Right-to-work is designed to weaken unions.

Unions lose some paying members when workers' dues are made voluntary, according to data gathered by Georgia State University professor Barry Hirsch and Trinity University professor David Macpherson at UnionStats.com.

So-called "free riders," or workers covered by union contracts who chose not to pay dues, increased 400 percent in the decade after Oklahoma became a right-to-work state. In 2010, 4.7 percent of the state's private sector work force was covered by union contracts, by only 3.5 percent of the work force were dues-paying members.

In Idaho the number of workers covered by unions who weren't members increased roughly 130 percent after the state approved its right-to-work law.

However, by far the largest blow to union membership and finances has been the manufacturing decline and the loss of millions of jobs. Even in states without a right-to-work law, union membership dropped 54.2 percent between 1983 and 2010, according to data from the UnionStats.com website.

And even before a right-to-work law goes into effect in Indiana, union membership there has dropped from 14.1 percent to 8.9 percent in the last decade.

GOP insiders rise up to cut Gingrich down to size

By Charles Babington
Associated Press

ORLANDO, Fla. — Republican insiders are rising up to cut Newt Gingrich down to size, testament to the GOP establishment's fear that the mercurial candidate could lead the party to disaster this fall.

The gathering criticisms are bitingly sharp, as if edged by a touch of panic, a remarkable development considering the target once was speaker of the House and will go down in history as leader of the Republicans' 1994 return to power in Congress. The intended beneficiary is Mitt Romney, a once-moderate Massachusetts governor whom many rank-and-file Republicans view with suspicion.

"The Republican establishment might not be wild about Mitt Romney, but they're terrified by Newt Gingrich," said Dan Schnur, a former GOP campaign strategist who teaches politics at the University of Southern California.

The anti-Gingrich statements have come from conservative columnists, talk show hosts including Ann Coulter, former Reagan administration officials and others. One of the harshest was written by former Sen. Bob Dole, the party's 1996 presidential nominee.

"I have not been critical of Newt Gingrich but it is now time to take a stand before it is too late," Dole wrote in the conservative magazine National Review. "If Gingrich is the nominee, it will have an adverse impact on Republican candidates running for county, state and federal offices."

As speaker from 1995 through 1998, Gingrich "had a new idea every minute and most of them were off the wall," Dole wrote. He said he struggled against Democrats' TV attacks in his 1996 campaign, "and in every one of them, Newt was in the ad."

Gingrich has reacted unevenly to the accusations, sometimes denouncing them, other times wearing them like a badge of honor.

"The Republican establishment is just as much as an establishment as the Democratic establishment, and they are just as determined to stop us," he told a tea party rally Thursday in central Florida.

The crowd cheered. But lingering near the back was an example of how the Romney campaign is taking advantage of the whacks at Gingrich: GOP Rep. Jason Chaffetz of Utah. Chaffetz is beloved by many conservatives, and he goes from one Gingrich event to another to tell reporters why he thinks Romney would be a stronger challenger against President Barack Obama in the fall.

Gingrich aide R.C. Hammond confronted Chaffetz on Friday at an event in Del Ray, Fla., noting that some Republican officials criticize such shadowing tactics. Chaffetz defended his presence, saying Gingrich has vowed to show up everywhere Obama campaigns this fall, if several hours later.

Romney has drawn other high-ranking surrogates, with mixed results. South Carolina Gov. Nikki Haley annoyed some of her tea party supporters when she campaigned throughout her state for Romney, who lost to Gingrich by 12 percentage points.

It's unclear whether the anti-Gingrich push is driving a new wedge between establishment Republicans and anti-establishment insurgents such as the tea partyers.

"We don't like the Republican establishment anyway," said Mark Meckler, a Californian and co-founder of Tea Party Patriots. He said tea partyers are heavily focused on state and local races, and are wary of getting drawn into the presidential quarrels.

After all, Meckler said, "it's not as though Newt Gingrich hasn't been part of the Republican establishment."

Many other conservative activists also noted Gingrich's long history as a Washington insider, including 20 years in Congress and 13 as a well-paid consultant, writer and Fox News commentator. His history complicates his efforts to rally angry, working-class Republicans who feel that an "elite" cadre of officials, journalists and others look down on them.

"He's in one sense attacking the establishment, he says he helped lead," said John Feehery, a former top House GOP aide who contends the tea party's influence is often overstated. The chief complaints about Gingrich focus more on his personality than his politics, which are hard to nail down, Feehery said.

The most damaging criticisms have come from former friends and colleagues who worked closely with him in Congress. It's Gingrich's egotistic behavior, more than ideology, that is

Stephanie King holds a picture of her uncle, Col. Stephen Scott, who was killed in Iraq in 2008, as she prepares to participate in a parade to honor Iraq War veterans Saturday in St. Louis. Thousands turned out to watch the first big welcome home parade in the U.S. since the last troops left Iraq in December.

St. Louis hosts 1st big parade on Iraq War's end

Associated Press

ST. LOUIS — Looking around at the tens of thousands of people waving American flags and cheering, Army Maj. Rich Radford was moved that so many braved a cold January wind Saturday in St. Louis to honor people like him: Iraq War veterans.

The parade, borne out of a simple conversation between two St. Louis friends a month ago, was the nation's first big welcome home for veterans of the war since the last troops were withdrawn from Iraq in December.

"It's not necessarily overdue, it's just the right thing," said Radford, a 23-year Army veteran who walked in the parade alongside his 8-year-old daughter, Aimee, and 12-year-old son, Warren.

Radford was among about 600 veterans, many dressed in camouflage, who walked along downtown streets lined with rows of people clapping and holding signs with messages including "Welcome Home" and "Thanks to our Service Men and Women." Some of the war-tested troops wiped away tears as they acknowledged the support from a crowd that organizers estimated reached 100,000 people.

Fire trucks with aerial ladders hoisted huge American flags in three different places along the route, with politicians, marching bands — even the Budweiser Clydesdales — joining in. But the large crowd was clearly there to salute men and women in the military, and people cheered wildly as groups of veterans walked by.

GOP

driving the attacks, Feehery said.

Among those defending Gingrich are Sarah Palin, the 2008 vice presidential nominee who is admired by many tea partyers.

"Look at Newt Gingrich, what's going on with him via the establishment's attacks," Palin said this week on Fox Business Network. "They're trying to crucify this man and rewrite history and rewrite what it is that he has stood for all these years."

Palin and Rep. Michele Bachmann, who dropped out of the presidential race, are tea party favorites with minimal experience in Washington and in top GOP circles. Gingrich is trying to tap the sense of resentment among their followers. But his long and complicated Washington record and reputation for intra-party quarrels seem to leave some tea partyers unimpressed.

"It's truly a shame that this is where the Republican establishment has chosen to focus their energy," said Marianne Gasiecki, a tea party activist in Ohio. She added, however, that political activists should focus on congressional races. "If we have a conservative House and Senate," she said, "the power of the president is really insignificant."

As Gingrich's broadcast ads in Florida become more pointed, prominent Republicans are chiding him without endorsing Romney or any other candidates. Gingrich stopped running a radio ad that called Romney anti-immigrant after Sen. Marco Rubio, R-Fla., said it was unfair and damaging to the party.

So long as party insiders' complaints about Gingrich focus on his personality and quirks, the GOP can postpone a more wrenching debate about ideology, which may be in store if the once-moderate Romney is nominated. For now, conservative stalwarts seem determined to depict Gingrich as too erratic to be the party's standard bearer, let alone president.

Columnist Charles Krauthammer told Fox News: "Gingrich isn't after victory, he's after vengeance." He added: "This is Captain Ahab on the loose."

Some Republican voters are pushing back. "I want so badly to be for Gingrich, and I'm not going to be bullied out of my vote," said Barb Johnson, 52, who attended the tea party rally in Mount Dora, Fla., on Thursday. "I like his strong presence."

Florida's primary is Tuesday.

Opinion

Progressives lack patience required to lead

■ Like Roosevelt, Obama has no desire to wait for the system to work like the Constitution requires.

GEORGE WILL
Washington Post Writers Group

War, said James Madison, is "the true nurse of executive aggrandizement." Randolph Bourne, the radical essayist killed by the influenza unleashed by World War I, warned, "War is the health of the state." Hence Barack Obama's State of the Union hymn: Onward civilian soldiers, marching as to war.

Obama, an unfettered executive wielding a swollen state, began and ended his address by celebrating the armed forces. They are not "consumed with personal ambition," they "work together" and "focus on the mission at hand" and do not "obsess over their differences." Americans should emulate troops "marching into battle," who "rise or fall as one unit."

Well. The armed services' ethos, although noble, is not a template for civilian society, unless the aspiration is to extinguish politics. People marching in serried ranks, fused into a solid mass by the heat of martial ardor, proceeding in lockstep, shoulder to shoulder, obedient to orders from a commanding officer — this is a recurring dream of progressives eager to dispense with tiresome persuasion and untidy dissension in a free, tumultuous society.

Progressive presidents use martial language as a way of encouraging Americans to confuse civilian politics with military exertions, thereby circumventing an impediment to progressive aspirations — the Constitution, and the patience it demands. As a young professor, Woodrow Wilson had lamented that America's political parties "are like armies without officers." The most theoretically inclined of progressive politicians, Wilson was the first president to criticize America's founding. This he did thoroughly, rejecting the Madisonian system of checks and balances — the separation of powers, a crucial component of limited government — because it makes a government that can not be wielded efficiently by a strong executive.

Franklin Roosevelt agreed. He complained about "the three-horse team of the American system": "If one horse lies down in the traces or plunges off in another direction, the field will not be plowed." And progressive plowing takes precedence over constitutional equipoise among the three branches of government. Hence FDR's attempt to break the Supreme Court to his will by enlarging it.

In his first inaugural address, FDR demanded "broad executive power to wage a war against the emergency, as great as the power that would be given to me if we were in fact invaded by a foreign foe." He said Americans must "move as a trained and loyal army" with "a unity of duty hitherto evoked only in time of armed strife." The next day, addressing the American Legion, Roosevelt said it was "a mistake to assume that the virtues of war differ essentially from the virtues of peace." In such a time, dissent is disloyalty.

Yearnings for a command society were common and respectable then. Commonweal, a magazine for liberal Catholics, said Roosevelt should have "the powers of a virtual dictatorship to reorganize the government." Walter Lippmann, then America's pre-eminent columnist, said: "A mild species of dictatorship will help us over the roughest spots in the road ahead." The New York Daily News, then the nation's largest-circulation newspaper, cheerfully editorialized: "A lot of us have been asking for a dictator. Now we have one. ... It is Roosevelt. ... Dictatorship in crises was ancient Rome's best era." The New York Herald Tribune titled an editorial "For Dictatorship if Necessary."

Obama, aspiring to command civilian life, has said that in reforming health care, he would have preferred an "elegant, academically approved" plan without "legislative fingerprints on it" but "unfortunately" he had to conduct "negotiations with a lot of different people." His campaign mantra "We can't wait!" expresses progressivism's impatience with our constitutional system of concurrent majorities. To enact and execute federal laws under Madison's institutional architecture requires three, and sometimes more, such majorities. There must be majorities in the House and Senate, each body having distinctive constituencies and electoral rhythms. The law must be affirmed by the president, who has a distinctive electoral base and election schedule. Supermajorities in both houses of Congress are required to override presidential vetoes. And a Supreme Court majority is required to sustain laws against constitutional challenges.

"We can't wait!" exclaims Obama, who makes recess appointments when the Senate is not in recess, multiplies "czars" to further nullify the Senate's constitutional prerogative to advise and consent, and creates agencies (e.g., Obamacare's Independent Payment Advisory Board and Dodd-Frank's Consumer Financial Protection Bureau) untethered from legislative accountability.

Like other progressive presidents fond of military metaphors, he rejects the patience of politics required by the Constitution he has sworn to uphold.

Midland's challenge is keeping crime rates down

There is little to complain about when you look at Midland's crime statistics for 2011. After all, the city experienced a 12 percent drop in the overall crime rate for the past year.

The 2011 statistics reflect the lowest crime rates over the previous four years with the biggest reductions in forcible rape (down 56 percent), aggravated assault (down 35 percent) and burglary (down 20 percent). Robbery also declined by 11 percent from 2010.

These double-digit declines are impressive. We think most Midlanders would accept simple decreases across the board as a good result. Theft was down 5 percent and auto theft down 7 percent. Even there, good results abound.

In fact, those are Chamber of Commerce numbers because these statistics tell a far different story than the one you will hear in other parts of the nation where crime rates have risen because of high unemployment and recession.

While we do not want to diminish the role of local law enforcement personnel in any way, it's obvious that Midlanders are working and making money. That has a lot to do with our crime report, and it is just another in a long line of positives that are occurring in our city right now.

Certainly, local law enforcement should take a bow. Without them, these numbers would be higher. It's probably not a good idea to assess a city's crime rate over one year of data, but Midland's crime rate has fallen in seven of the past eight years. This is a significant reduction in crime in a time when the city is growing and the population is expanding.

We don't mind giving kudos for those that deserve it. In this case our hats are off to local law enforcement for the work they did this past year and for the work they have done in the past. In fact, Midland law enforcement is building a résumé of success. And that résumé just happens to help in making Midland a great place to live.

But while we do hand out accolades where needed, we once again issue the challenge that we continue this streak. We believe our residents want a safe place to live, a safe place to raise their kids, a safe place to play and a safe place to worship. These are the things that make a community attractive and things we think are worth protecting.

We hope our whole community will continue to partner with law enforcement in a way where we all can live and play in a safe environment despite our growth and additional pressures on our crime rate.

Romney offers WASP-like candidacy

■ The reserved former governor of Massachusetts hasn't seemed comfortable being the candidate many Republicans want.

RICH LOWRY
King Features Syndicate

Mitt Romney summoned all the righteous indignation he could muster after a Newt Gingrich ad called him "anti-immigrant." Romney blasted the ad shortly afterward in an interview: "It's just inappropriate."

"Inappropriate." For Romney, that qualifies as a stinging rebuke. He also regretted in the strongest possible terms the Gingrich ad's "terrible terms." The Republican campaign now pits, in Newt Gingrich, a man expert at channeling and expressing emotions, against a man, Mitt Romney, who can't or won't.

"I have emotion and passion," Romney said the other day, in an assurance an overtly emotional and passionate person would never have to make. In Gingrich, Romney is fighting fire with reticence. He is a throwback to a cultural archetype that lost its purchase in American culture decades ago. Mitt Romney is the last WASP, Mormon edition.

Romney skeptics worry that he's another John McCain or Bob Dole. Maybe he's another Leverett Saltonstall, his mid-20th-century predecessor as Massachusetts governor. "Salty," as he was known, was of, by and for the WASP ascendancy. His family was here for centuries. He rowed for the Harvard crew team and won the Grand Challenge Cup at the Henley Royal Regatta. One of his daughters became a horse breeder. Saltonstall apparently had a common touch as a politician, but he still might understand Romney better than many Republican primary voters.

In his book "The Way of the WASP," Richard Brookhiser summarized the main traits of the species as "Conscience," "Industry," "Success" and "Civic-mindedness." All can be seen in Romney, the private-equity titan and Mormon bishop who served as the head of the Salt Lake City Olympics and once swept the floor of an aide's garage when he had an idle moment. The same charges that were leveled at the long-ago, buttoned-up WASP establishment are now directed at Romney — stiff, boring, inauthentic.

There is an inherent politeness to him. Interrupted by a heckler in New Hampshire, he said she lacks "courtesy," obviously an offense he takes seriously. Whenever he resorts to trash talk — at one debate he promised to take President Barack Obama's attack on his wealth and "stuff it down his throat" — it feels awkward. It is as if the Marquess of Queensberry briefly strayed into a mixed martial arts octagon.

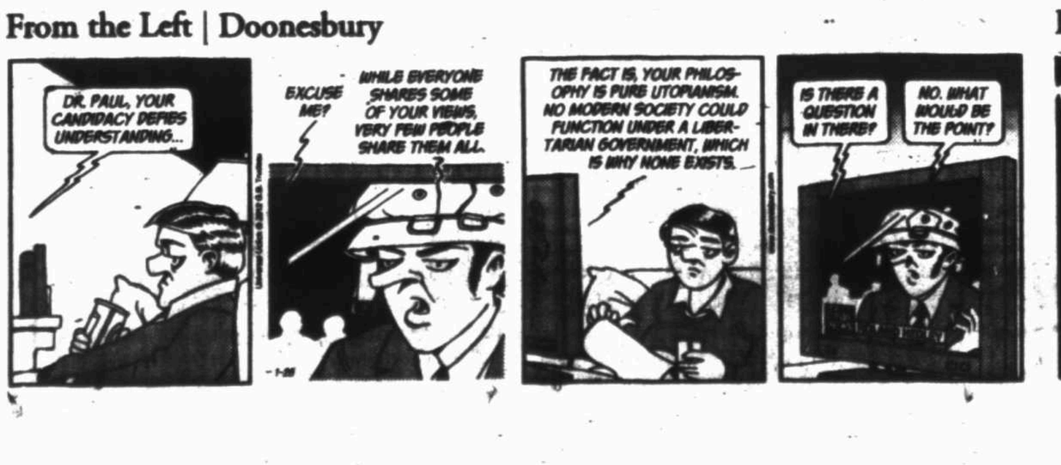

It's not that Romney won't fight. His Super PAC filleted Gingrich in Iowa, and his entire campaign apparatus now is working to crush the former House speaker in Florida. Yet, Romney himself has no relish for the task. In the first Florida debate, he worked early on to hit Gingrich with his entire opposition research file. Rushed and uncomfortable, he seemed to enjoy it as little as Gingrich did. When he got off the attack, he shifted back into his accustomed measured and unflappable mode.

Gingrich is unburdened by any inner guardrails. He loves combat. As a campaigner, he can be loudmouthed, unscrupulous and angry. It's a style that fits the public mood, and it has been validated through the decades in our culture. We've been taught to trust a let-it-all-hang-out spirit over an ethos of emotional restraint. Unfortunately for Romney, if there were a yearbook for presidential candidates, he would be deemed "Least Likely to Weep in Public." It's an irony of Romney's candidacy that his genuine reserve is taken as confirmation of his inauthenticity.

If Romney doesn't wear his emotions on his sleeve, he doesn't wear his riches there, either. He seems uncomfortable with his own success, a classic WASP trait. When he says he makes no apologies for his wealth, he clearly would rather not be talking about his wealth at all. Donald Trump surely would advise him to mention his net worth, and inflate it, in every interview. But he lacks the brassiness of the natural braggart.

If Romney seems alien, it's not his Mormonism or bank account so much as his adherence to a code of conduct that was overthrown long ago, and now feels quaint and odd. His is the plight of the last WASP.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Lela Pittenger is not ready for the US Senate

I appreciate all of the hard work all of the candidates are undertaking as they campaign for their respective offices. However, I am getting tired of the lawyer bashing that seems to be a part of some of certain candidates' speeches.

Lela Pittenger spoke Jan. 11 at the MCRW here in Midland. During her speech, she told the audience the many lawyers in Washington, D.C., are part of our nation's problems, I disagree. The real problem is not the presence of lawyers; the real problem is the lack of people with a solid moral character and compass. Also, some of the finest Christian people here in the Midland/Odessa community currently are practicing law or have practiced law at some point in their careers. Those vying to be a U.S. senator need to have a keen sense of discernment. Pittenger does not seem to be able to discern and distinguish between a person's God-inspired profession and a person's character.

By the way, Mrs. Pittenger, our country's first Republican president was a lawyer.

No pipeline wanted through my land

We purchased some land in Hawkins. The Keystone pipeline was going to go through our land. I am glad it was denied, and I hope it does not go. It is a 36-inch pipe that the oil will go through, and if it ever leaks, it will destroy the land. For the people who want it, then let it go through their land.

PP official mischaracterizes anti-abortion protests

Although Jan. 20's pro-life gathering was larger than the weekly rosary at Planned Parenthood, the intent was the same: pray for babies who will die that day and their parents, pray for pregnant women in crisis, and pray for Planned Parenthood employees. Karen Hildebrand says Planned Parenthood is merely "offering medical services" and protesters are "out in the driveway," as though a crazed mob is preventing pelvic exams.

Truthfully, we peacefully pray on a street corner, giving wide berth to the entrance and exit, and we pray because innocent babies are dying within Planned Parenthood's walls, not because caring physicians are there carrying out their oath to do no harm. If a prayerful attendee crosses the exit, leans against a fence or steps off the sidewalk, we are met with Midland police, summoned to stop our reign of terrifying prayer. Throughout many years, I have never seen an attendee block traffic, mistreat employees or call out unkindnesses. Hildebrand would like residents to think we gather with placards of hate, but no — we gather with rosaries, full hearts, clasped hands and bent knees. These are our weapons of choice, not brutal like those wielded on the women within.

Hildebrand notes patients leave because of intimidation. On the contrary, they leave because of second thoughts and conversations with attendees. We celebrate these women for choosing life, help them emotionally and financially and rejoice in their child's birth. It is difficult for Planned Parenthood proponents to realize children are born who could have been aborted, but thankfully, it does happen.

Hildebrand notes MLK was a Planned Parenthood supporter who received an award from its organization. That award predated the Roe v. Wade decision. Furthermore, no Christian, minister, or MLK specifically, would advocate violating the commandment against killing. Hildebrand is disingenuous to suggest MLK's support equates with support of Planned Parenthood's successful efforts to be the nation's largest abortion provider.

Some truck drivers make roads unsafe

In lieu of the sudden increase in 18-wheeler accidents of late, I would like to give notice of what I've witnessed living just off Highway 158.

It appears the attitude of the truck driver now is to pull on out into the flow of traffic no matter how busy it is, thinking vehicles surely will stop before they run into him.

I cannot tell how many times this has happend to me, or I've witnessed this with other drivers. I realize driving a large vehicle such as this is not an easy task, and sitting at an intersection for several minutes is frustrating, but trust me — the ones whom I have witnessed pulling in front of oncoming traffic or turning in front of traffic are not the impatient ones. They are the ones who, for whatever reason, decided they wanted to be a truck driver and took the matchbook class on truck driving and got their CDL license.

These are prevelent in the oil field trucking business right now, especially because of the shortage of workers in the oil field, and if you can see above the steering wheel of a truck and can obtain a CDL license, then you are immediately a truck driver.

Well, I beg to differ. I have known many long-haul truck drivers, and they are, for the most part, dedicated, safe, courteous drivers — very much the opposite of some of these fly-by-night, CDL-packing oil field truckers.

I would imagine if the highway patrol would spend just a few days along highways 158, 349 or 385, they, too, would find out just how well these truck drivers handle their new-found occupation. I'm sure there are many who drive trucks in the oil field who are compentent, but for every one who is, it appears there are several who are not.

Killing the unborn is never the solution

On Jan. 22, 1973, the Supreme Court handed down a decision in the case of Roe v. Wade that said women had a constitutional right to abortion. The fetus was declared to not be a person but a "potential life," and therefore it did not have any constitutional rights. Some restrictions were put in place pertaining to the trimester in which the abortion would be performed. However, Roe v. Wade was modified the same day by another case, Doe v. Bolton. In that decision, abortion for any reason was legal throughout the entire pregnancy. Until that time, abortions were illegal in most states although some states legalized abortions in situations involving rape, incest or the health of the mother. The Alan Guttmacher Institute has reported that there have been an estimated 54 million abortions performed in the United States in the past 39 years.

I remember memorizing the Ten Commandments in the second grade. One of those was thou shalt not kill, which seemed like an easy one to obey. Obviously, taking a life was wrong. Later, I learned abortion did just that — murdered an unborn child.

Because our Supreme Court voted to legalize abortion makes it sound like it is permissible, but it is not. Planned Parenthood and pro-abortion groups would like for us to believe women have a choice about whether to end a pregnancy, but we don't. The only choice to be made in the case of an unwanted pregnancy is whether to keep the child or put it up for adoption after it is born.

I think too many women believe an abortion will solve their problems, when in reality it only compounds them. Studies have shown there can be many negative aftereffects following an abortion such as regret and grief, not only for the mother, but for the father, too.

An unplanned or unwanted pregnancy may cause stress and anxiety, but killing the unborn child is never the solution. There are always better alternatives.

Pray for an end to abortion.

Younts should represent West Texas district in D.C.

Elections are coming up. To elect or to re-elect. That is the question.

I really don't know what Congressman Mike Conaway's core values are. He voted for TARP, the Farm Bill, raising the debt ceiling and the Super Committee. He calls himself a conservative, but he seems to be for big government as long as Republicans are in charge, and they're spending slightly less than the Democrats. In fact, too much spending is one of our biggest problems.

The size of government has to grow just to keep up with our population, but it should never grow more than we can afford. As a CPA, you'd expect Conaway to know that and help his fellow congressmen understand when to draw the line. So far he hasn't.

Chris Younts (www.chrisyounts.com) has thrown his hat in the Republican primary ring. He has worked in the public and private sectors. He understands what it's like to be on the receiving end of all those rules, regulations and mandates the federal government has become so fond of imposing on us. We need our representative in Washington to vote based on principle, not cronyism or because everybody's doing it. Chris Younts is the answer.

Question about city's water deal

Who owns the water at the T-Bar Ranch? More than 40 years ago, the city of Midland bought the T-Bar Ranch in Winkler County from Wolfe Nursery for the water rights.

Today with the water shortage, the water from T-Bar is being developed. The public is told the city of Midland will purchase the T-Bar Ranch water from Water District I for an amount not to exceed $2.75 per 1,000 gallons. The water district will sell bonds, and the city of Midland will incur no debt.

If the city of Midland already owns the water, why are we buying it from the water district? It appears to me it is a transportation cost, not a sale of water.

I suggest the mayor, Jose Cuevas (head of Water District I) and the City Council explain the terms of the agreement for the benefit of us simple folk.

Can Newt keep the momentum going?

■ The attack on the media pushed Newt to a different level. Can he stay there?

If Newt Gingrich is elected president of the United States this year, he will owe it all to John King and to his former wife, Marianne.

Let's go back to the recent presidential debate in South Carolina. There stood Gingrich, gripping his podium, staring at King, the CNN debate moderator. The former Speaker of the House had to be delighted. King was doing just what Gingrich and his advisers thought he might do: He was trying to embarrass Newt by asking him about salacious stuff his bitter ex-wife told "Nightline."

"She says you asked her, sir, to enter into an open marriage," King said, and the crowd hushed. "Would you like to take some time to respond to that?"

Gingrich paused a beat. Then, with a slight sneer, he let loose: "No, but I will. I think the destructive, vicious, negative nature of much of the news media makes it harder to govern this country, harder to attract decent people to run for public office." Gingrich was rolling.

"And I am appalled that you would begin a presidential debate on a topic like that."

King was thrown off his game. He backpedaled. Gingrich continued to lash out. Finally, King sought a mandatory eight count: "As you noted, Mr. Speaker, this story did not come from our network (CNN)."

Forget it. Gingrich hammered him again: "John, it was repeated by your network. You chose to start the debate with it. Don't try to blame somebody else."

It was all over. Mitt Romney, Rick Santorum and Ron Paul should have just walked off the stage. Gingrich had slayed the media dragon, and blood was on the ground. Nothing else would matter that night, and now Gingrich has a decent shot at securing the Republican nomination. Before King and Marianne, the speaker was dead in the water.

One thing is certain: Gingrich knows about anger. He well understands that many conservative Americans have had enough of being loathed by Hollywood and by the media chieftains in New York and Washington. The condescension shown to the right is undeniable. Every media survey ever taken shows that the vast majority of press and entertainment people are committed liberals. And unlike Walter Cronkite, who largely hid his left-wing ideology, today's media folks are out of the closet.

Gingrich also understands he cannot win the Republican nomination without a populist uprising. His targeting of the media is brilliant, and now the speaker says he will go after the anti-religion crowd.

But there is one big problem: It is difficult to sustain outrage. It gets exhausting, and it can become circus-like if not used wisely. Gingrich had his moment, and he nailed it. It will be hard for him to duplicate what happened in South Carolina on a regular basis.

But everybody now knows there is a deep-seated anger among many Americans who believe they have lost their country. They are looking for a champion. If a candidate can truly fit that profile, he just might become the next president of the United States.

Ben Bernanke smiles in the face of critics

■ Statistics show Fed chairman, and not Republicans, has been right for actions taken to keep America out of a depression.

DANA MILBANK
Washington Post Writers Group

They likened him to a traitor. They hinted darkly that he might suffer violence because of his actions in office. They said they wanted him fired.

But when Fed Chairman Ben Bernanke was invited to respond to the Republican presidential candidates who have made him a whipping boy, he turned the other bearded cheek.

"You haven't had a very good time in all the Republican presidential debates," Greg Robb of MarketWatch told the slight and scholarly chairman at Wednesday afternoon's news conference at the Federal Reserve.

Bernanke smiled and nodded his agreement. "I'm not going to get involved in political rhetoric," he said. "I have a job to do."

In a sense, Bernanke didn't need to rebut his critics; the facts already have. Earlier Wednesday, the Fed reported that expectations are inflation will remain between 1.4 percent and 1.8 percent for 2012 and between 1.5 percent and 2 percent through 2014. The exceptionally low inflation rate proves false the complaints about Bernanke's aggressive — and successful — actions to avert an economic depression after the 2008 financial crisis.

Former candidate Rick Perry has been the worst of the critics, calling Bernanke's behavior "almost treasonous" and declaring that Bernanke would face an "ugly" greeting in Texas if he injected more monetary stimulus into the economy. "It's a travesty that young people in America are seeing their dollars devalued," Perry complained.

Newt Gingrich called Bernanke "the most inflationary, dangerous and power-centered chairman of the Fed in the history of the Fed." Ron Paul accused Bernanke of "inflating twice as fast as Greenspan." Mitt Romney joined the others in saying he wouldn't reappoint Bernanke, who was first appointed by President George W. Bush.

On Wednesday, Bernanke allowed himself just a passing reference to such critics. "The low level of inflation is a validation," he said. "There were some who were very concerned that our balance-sheet policies and the like would lead to high inflation. There's certainly no sign of that yet."

He deserves credit for keeping his equanimity as the Republican candidates abuse him. And, at long last, he has some results to show for the work he has done. The Fed also announced Wednesday that it sees the economy growing at a rate of 2.8 percent to 3.2 percent next year and 3.3 percent to 4 percent the following year. Unemployment is forecast to be between 8.2 percent and 8.5 percent late this year, dropping to between 6.7 percent and 7.6 percent by the end of 2014.

Consumer sentiment, job growth and industrial production all have been improving. And, the results of some of Bernanke's most controversial policies, such as the enormous purchases of securities, have disproved the critics. "I've been pretty satisfied," Bernanke said Wednesday in response to a question from The Washington Post's Zachary Goldfarb, "that purchases do seem to have the desired effects on financial conditions."

That the nation avoided an economic depression is due in no small part to the chairman, whose academic specialty is in the history of depressions. At a time when President Obama and lawmakers have squabbled themselves to irrelevance, Bernanke's Fed has been a model of good government: apolitical, efficient, brutally effective — and transparent.

The news conference itself was an example of Bernanke's attempt to demystify the central bank: He took his place at a carved wooden desk atop an aluminum platform and, after reading a prepared statement full of jargon ("the level of maximum employment is not immutable"), he fielded reporters' questions for nearly an hour in a surprisingly blunt manner.

"There are some positive signs, no doubt," he told CNBC's Steve Liesman, but "I don't think we're ready to declare that we've entered a new, stronger phase."

"It's a pretty good guess that we will be keeping rates low for some time from now," he advised The Wall Street Journal's Jon Hilsenrath.

"Expanding the balance sheet" — the acquisition by the Fed of more assets, which infuriates conservatives — "certainly remains an option," he said to Mark Felsenthal of Reuters.

If inflation remains low, "I think there would be a very strong case," he told Goldfarb, "for finding different additional tools for expansion, for expansionary policies, to support the economy."

Paul and others would abolish the Fed because of such actions. But, it's reassuring that Bernanke is on the job and proving them foolish. For Republican presidential candidates, it's worse than wrong to take aim at the one public servant who has done more than any other to keep the nation out of depression. It's almost treasonous.

Do as Obama says, not as he does

■ The president's actions show an immigration policy entirely different than what he demands in his State of the Union.

What chutzpah. President Obama is trying to turn one of his major liabilities — his cruel, cynical, dishonest and clumsy handling of the immigration issue — into a liability for Republicans. Having broken his promise to make immigration reform a priority, divided countless families with a record 1.2 million deportations, and attempted to deceive Latinos into believing most of the people removed were criminals when the figures say otherwise, Obama now wants Latinos to believe the real villains are Republicans in Congress.

It's a bold move for a president whose job approval rating with Latinos has fallen to 49 percent, according to a recent poll by the Pew Hispanic Center.

Obama seems to think the best card to play is to profess his support for the DREAM Act, a bill that would provide undocumented students with a pathway to citizenship if they attend college or join the military. According to polls, the legislation has the support of about 80 percent of Latinos.

But you always need to ignore what Obama says and watch what he does — or doesn't do.

In his recent State of the Union address, here's what Obama said:

"Let's also remember that hundreds of thousands of talented, hardworking students in this country face another challenge: the fact that they aren't yet American citizens. Many were brought here as small children, are American through and through, yet they live every day with the threat of deportation."

Not just the threat. Under the Obama administration, many high school and college students have been deported. Others were slated for deportation and escaped that fate only because lawyers successfully pleaded their cases, the media told their stories, or activists rallied to their side.

Obama went on to say:

"I believe as strongly as ever that we should take on illegal immigration. That's why my administration has put more boots on the border than ever before. That's why there are fewer illegal crossings than when I took office. The opponents of action are out of excuses. We should be working on comprehensive immigration reform right now."

Why the rush? The president had three years to push for comprehensive immigration reform, and, for two of those years, his party controlled both houses of Congress. The new sense of urgency comes from the fact that we're in an election year, and Obama knows a campaign issue when he sees one.

Finally, he said:

"But if election-year politics keeps Congress from acting on a comprehensive plan, let's at least agree to stop expelling responsible young people who want to staff our labs, start new businesses, defend this country. Send me a law that gives them the chance to earn their citizenship. I will sign it right away."

Seriously? Just who is "expelling" these young people? It's Barack Obama and his administration. The executive branch carries out the enforcement of immigration law, which includes deporting illegal immigrants. Congress has nothing to do with it. Obama has the power, through executive order, to reprioritize deportations so that students go to the bottom of the stack. He has tried to do some of that. And yet it's too little, too late.

Obama's remarks only resonate if the people hearing them have short memories.

They aren't supposed to remember that, during an interview last March with Univision's Jorge Ramos, Obama insisted his administration isn't deporting students eligible for the DREAM Act, only to be confronted by Ramos who produced video of a DREAM Act student holding a deportation order.

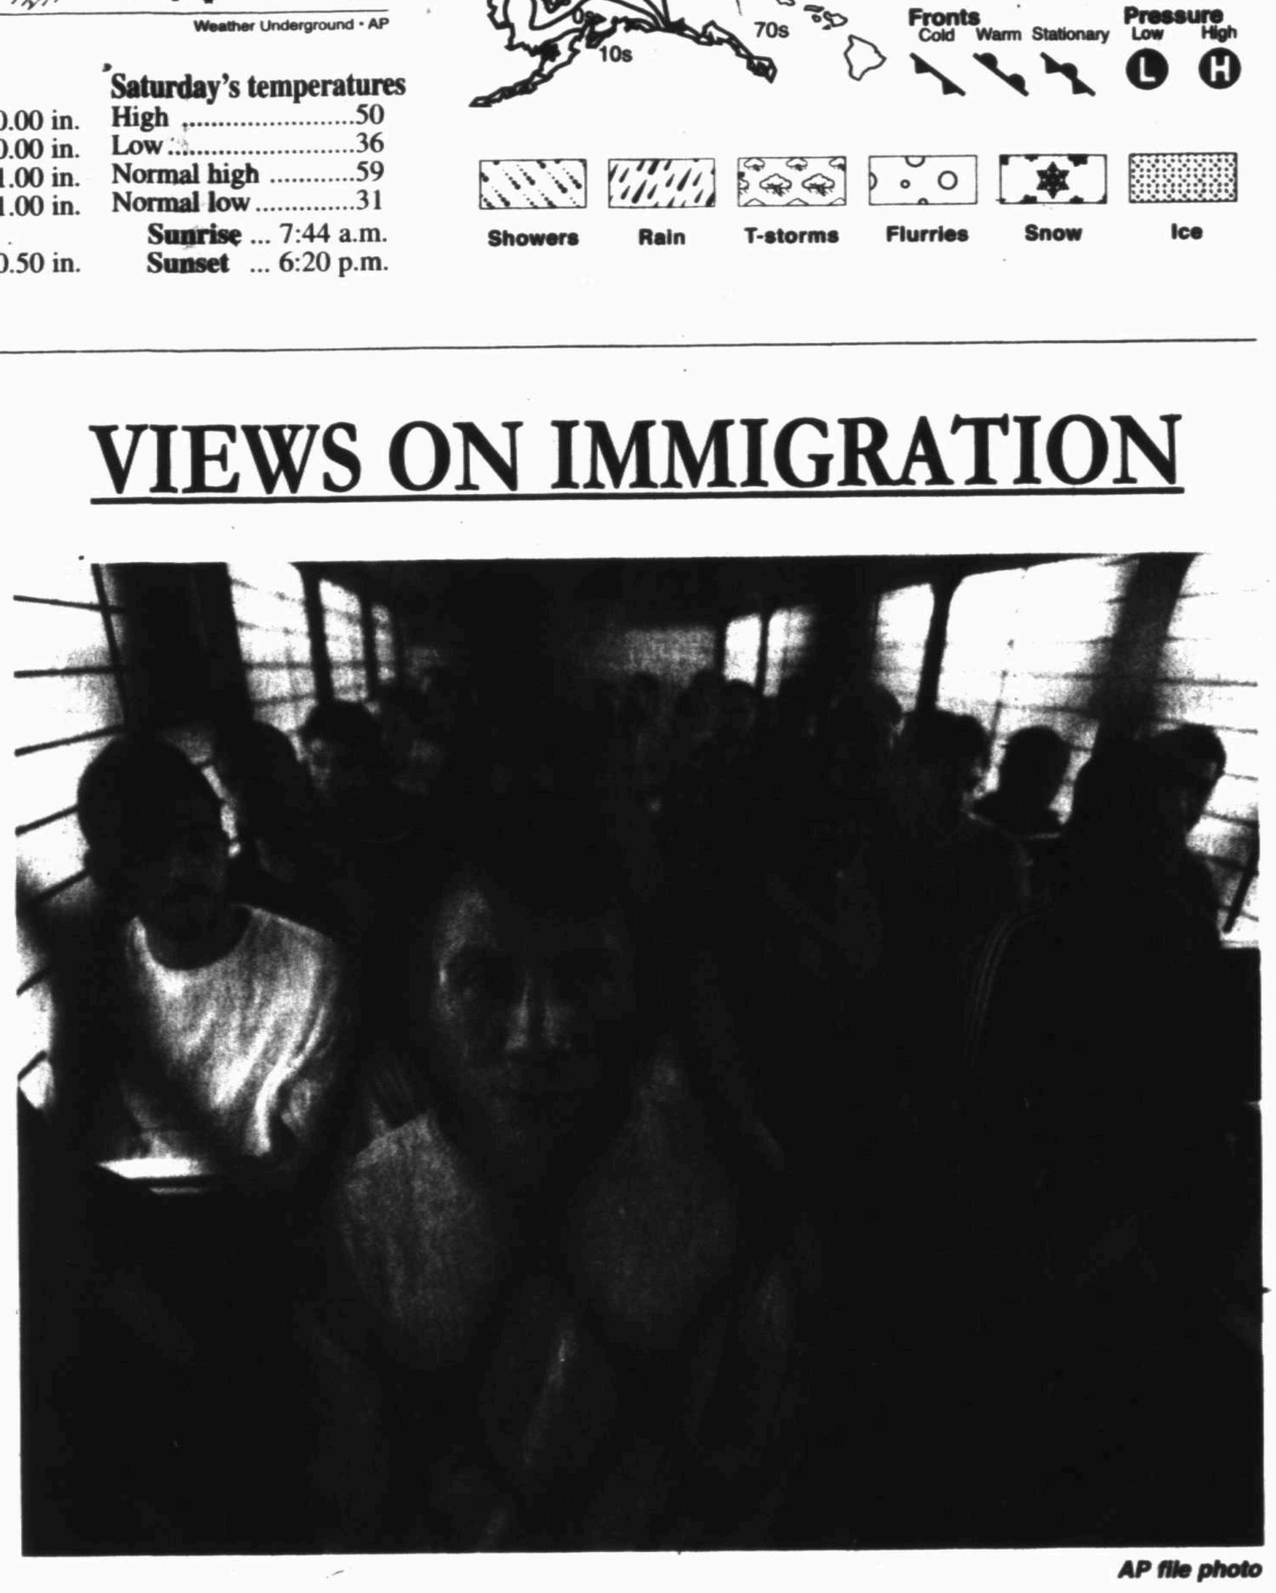

Or that, in December 2010, Obama stood idly by as five members of his own party — Senate Democrats Jon Tester and Max Baucus of Montana, Mark Pryor of Arkansas, Kay Hagan of North Carolina, and Ben Nelson of Nebraska — killed an earlier version of the DREAM Act by denying Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid the 60 votes he needed to prevent a possible GOP filibuster.

Was this just another leadership failure by Obama or something more sinister? If those five Democrats had fallen in line and the Senate had passed the DREAM Act, Obama would have been in the tough spot of having to sign a controversial bill that many voters oppose. Democrats in the House and Senate could have paid a price in the 2012 election. And, Democrats wouldn't have an issue around which to rally Hispanic voters.

What if the Senate Democrats who killed the DREAM Act were just following orders?

If you think this isn't a possibility, then you're the one who is dreaming.

Romney needs to get beyond numbers and get real

■ The Republican offers a clueless response about the 'stateless.'

LLEWELLYN KING

Hearst Newspapers

I jumped on an airplane for London this week. I could do it because of something of inestimable value in my pocket: a passport.

Most people take passports very much for granted, except those who have ever been without one. They know how confining it is to be without the right paperwork. They know what it's like to take the first step into the ghastly limbo of statelessness, a ghoulish existence outside of the law and its protections, outside of normal society, and outside of the right to earn a living.

This sub-societal life, where at least 12 million people reside in the United States, is a place too far for Mitt Romney to comprehend. His immigration proposals have the irrationality of ignorance and the cruelty of those who are committed to not knowing. Exhibit A is his vow that, if elected president, he would veto any legislation providing a path to legal status for people already in the U.S.

Evelyn Waugh, the British writer, talked about the morbid lack of curiosity on the part of colonial settlers in Africa about the indigenous populations.

Romney and his cohorts have a morbid lack of interest in the 12 million or so illegal immigrants who live on the fringes of American society, often doing its dirtiest work.

Statistics never tell the story — in their way, they obfuscate it. They don't tell of decency, generosity, kindness and nobility or despair, hurt and suffering. They tell us that 6 million Jews were killed by the Nazis, but that is just a statistic. To comprehend the horror, you must walk around Auschwitz or some other death camp to see where the deeds were done, to see the hair and shoes of the children and to know, in my case, that these toddlers were my contemporaries.

You have to extract the individual from the data, and look him or her in the eyes.

Not for Romney and other Republican savants. For them, the 12 million are just people who have broken laws — laws they choose to treat as immutable. They are less than human and should be denied education, employment, medical treatment.

These people live in the fear of being rounded up and deported, often to countries they don't know and sometimes where they don't speak the language.

The children, a small minority of those who are here illegally, are among those who the anti-immigration fanatics would punish for a crime committed by their parents: wanting a better life. The sins of the fathers will be vested on the sons.

The life of the illegal, the stateless person, is one of degradation, exposure to exploitation and fear.

My late friend, Johnny Prokoff, who was a much-loved bartender at the National Press Club in Washington, used to tell his own life story of the vulnerability and suffering of the stateless. Prokoff left Lithuania at a time when there was so much poverty that there was a small industry in killing lice in garments with a hammer. The trick, he told me, was to kill the vermin without damaging the garment. It was a necessity induced by poverty.

The young Prokoff stowed away on a ship and began a seven-year odyssey as the property of various ruthless captains. Sometimes they would demand sex, always they would make stowaways work, and never would they let them land on any shore. Also, they would sell them to other captains — slaves, in fact.

Eventually, Prokoff jumped ship in Mexico, made his way to the United States, married an American and was able finally to live a legitimate life.

Multiply him by 12 million. Some walked here, some came on visitors' visas and never left, and some were brought by lovers, parents or spouses. If they cannot find low-grade work as domestics, chicken-factory employees, dog washers — they must contemplate a life of crime or prostitution, creating a statistic politicians can advertize to prove that these people are no good.

I went through a period of not having a passport, although I had a U.S. green card. Other journalists romped around the world, I stayed at home. It's a violation that one does not forget.

Tell the 12 million about Romney's cruel and innovative self-deportation, which is based on the theory that those humans will voluntarily leave the U.S. if life here becomes so harsh.

Walk to where, Mitt?

Blood found at home where toddler was last seen

PORTLAND — Investigators have been analyzing blood found in the basement of a Maine home where a missing toddler was last seen six weeks ago, an official said Saturday.

The blood was found early in the investigation into Ayla Reynolds' disappearance from her father's home in Waterville, state police spokesman Steve McCausland said. The state crime laboratory has been running tests on it since then, but it was unclear when results would be available.

Ayla's father, Justin DiPietro, reported her missing Dec. 17. He had put her to bed the night before in the home he shares with his mother and said she wasn't there the next morning.

Inmate guilty of seeking $890M in tax refunds

SYRACUSE — A jury has convicted a New York prison inmate of falsely filing tax returns seeking $890 million in refunds.

Prosecutors said the man filed the bogus returns from 2006 to 2010 while at various state prisons. They said he even was issued a refund for $327,000 — but prison officials intercepted the check and returned it to the Internal Revenue Service, which led the investigation.

The man was convicted Thursday of 11 counts of filing false claims and one count of helping another inmate file bogus returns.

Etta James remembered as triumphant trailblazer

By Anthony McCartney
Associated Press

GARDENA, Calif. — Etta James was remembered at a service Saturday attended by hundreds of friends, family and fans as a woman who triumphed against all odds to break down cultural and musical barriers in a style that was unfailingly honest.

The Rev. Al Sharpton eulogized James in a rousing speech, describing her remarkable rise from poverty and pain to become a woman whose music became an enduring anthem for weddings and commercials.

Perhaps most famously, President Barack Obama and the first lady shared their first inaugural ball dance to a version of the song sung by Beyonce. Sharpton on Saturday opened his remarks by reading a statement from the president.

"Etta will be remembered for her legendary voice and her contributions to our nation's musical heritage," Obama's statement read.

The Grammy-winning singer died Jan. 20 after battling leukemia and other ailments, including dementia. She had retreated from public life in recent years, but on Saturday her legacy was on display as mourners of all ages and races converged on the City of Refuge church in Gardena, south of downtown Los Angeles.

Among the stars performing tributes to James were Stevie Wonder and Christina Aguilera, who told the gathering that she has included "At Last" in every concert she's performed as a tribute to her musical inspiration.

Wonder performed three songs, including "Shelter In the Rain" and a harmonica solo. James' rose-draped casket was on display, surrounded by wreaths and floral arrangements and pictures of the singer.

Sharpton, who met James when he was an up-and-coming preacher, credited her with helping break down racial barriers through her music.

"She was able to get us on the same rhythms and humming the same ballads and understanding each other's melodies way before we could even use the same hotels," Sharpton said.

He said James' fame and influence would have been unthinkable to a woman with James' background — growing up in a broken home during segregation and at times battling her own demons.

"The genius of Etta James is she flipped the script," Sharpton said, alluding to her struggles with addiction, which she eventually overcame.

"She waited until she turned her pain into power," he said, adding that it turned her story away from being a tragic one into one of triumph.

"You beat 'em, Etta," Sharpton said in concluding his eulogy. "At last. At last. At last!"

The assembly roared to their feet and would again stand to applaud performances by Wonder and Aguilera, who filled the sanctuary with their voices.

"Out of all the singers that I've ever heard, she was the one that cut right to my soul and spoke to me," Aguilera said before her performance.

Throughout the service, a portrait of James as a woman who beat the odds in pursuit of her dreams repeatedly emerged.

"Etta is special to me and for me, because she represents the life, the triumphs, the tribulations of a lot of black women all over this world," said U.S. Rep Maxine Waters, D-Calif.

"It does not matter who sang 'At Last' before or after Etta. It does not matter when it was sung, or where it was sung. 'At Last' was branded by Etta, the raunchy diva — that's her signature and we will always remember her."

James won four Grammy Awards, including a lifetime achievement honor and was inducted in the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame in 1993. In her decades-long career, she became revered for her passionate, soulful singing voice.

She scored her first hit when she was just a teenager with the suggestive "Roll With Me, Henry," which had to be changed to "The Wallflower" in order to get airplay. Her 1967 album, "Tell Mama," became one of the most highly regarded soul albums of all time, a mix of rock and gospel music.

She rebounded from a heroin addiction to see her career surge after performing the national anthem at the 1984 Olympics in Los Angeles. She won her first Grammy Award a decade later, and two more in 2003 and 2004.

James is survived by her husband of 42 years, Artis Mills and two sons, Donto and Sametto James.

"Mom, I love you," Donto James said during brief remarks. "When I get to the gates, can you please be there for me?"

Arab League halts observer mission in Syria

The Arab League halted its observer mission in Syria on Saturday because of escalating violence that killed nearly 100 people the past three days, as pro-Assad forces battled dissident soldiers in a belt of suburbs on the eastern edge of Damascus in the most intense fighting yet so close to the capital.

The rising bloodshed has added urgency to new attempts by Arab and Western countries to find a resolution to the 10 months of violence that according to the United Nations has killed at least 5,400 people as Assad seeks to crush persistent protests demanding an end to his rule.

The United Nations is holding talks on a new resolution on Syria and next week will discuss an Arab peace plan aimed at ending the crisis. But the initiatives face two major obstacles: Damascus' rejection of an Arab peace plan, which it says impinges on its sovereignty, and Russia's willingness to use its U.N. Security Council veto to protect Syria from sanctions.

26 killed in fire at rehabilitation center

LIMA — A fire swept through a two-story private rehabilitation center for addicts in a poor part of Peru's capital Saturday, killing 26 people and critically injuring six as firefighters punched holes through walls to rescue residents locked inside.

The "Christ is Love" center for drug and alcohol addicts was unlicensed and overcrowded and its residents were apparently kept inside "like prisoners," Health Minister Alberto Tejada told the Associated Press.

Is mafia to blame for Kyrgyz prisoners sewing lips shut?

By Leila Saralayeva
Associated Press

BISHKEK, Kyrgyzstan — More than 1,000 prisoners in Kyrgyzstan have sewn their lips together, a grotesque act inmates describe as a protest of their dismal conditions, but which authorities blame on organized criminal gangs that resent attempts to break the power they wield in prisons.

Kyrgyzstan, a poor ex-Soviet nation of 5.3 million, holds around 7,600 inmates in its detention centers. The buildings are notoriously crowded and disease-ridden, and they have not escaped the reach of powerful criminal syndicates that also threaten the stability of the country, which hosts a key U.S. air base.

Over the years, prisoners have staged numerous protests — until Saturday, the vast majority of the prisoners were on a 10-day-long hunger strike. But the sewing of lips has been one of the most unusual and brazen ways to bring attention to the prisoners' plight.

An Associated Press reporter who was allowed to visit a pre-trial detention facility recently saw several prisoners with their lips stitched together, leaving enough space to take in liquids, but not enough to eat food. Some prisoners used strands of coarse fiber or pieces of wire.

A 22-year-old, who gave his name only as Yevgeny, said awkwardly through his constricted lips that he was "suffering for justice."

But the facility's director, Mars Zhusupbekov, countered that the protest was a reaction to his own attempts to bring justice.

Zhusupbekov said he was appointed head of the facility in the capital Bishkek last month and soon learned that a group of 23 inmates was allowed to roam the prison freely, extorting money from others.

"Intimidated prisoners would call their relatives and ask them to sell their apartment or car, and then transfer the money to the gang in jail," he said.

So Zhusupbekov said he decided to launch raids on cells in mid-January to stamp out the thugs. About a week later, inmates started to sew their lips together, an act he said was forced on frightened prisoners by the criminal gang in his facility.

Crime experts say prison gangs in former Soviet nations are typically part of a complex hierarchical fraternity that extends across the penitentiary system and is ultimately subservient to criminal leaders beyond jail walls.

Almost 400 prisoners bound their lips at Zhusupbekov's jail, and as many as 800 others are believed to have done the same in other jails in what they say is an act of solidarity. Authorities say it is only the influence of organized crime that could have enabled protests on such a large scale.

Zhusupbekov was sanguine about the lip-sewing, describing it as a similar procedure to piercing, and dismissed complaints about poor prison conditions. "This is not a hotel, this is not a holiday resort, they should serve their time," he said.

Prisoners said the raids were an attempt by Zhusupbekov to brutally assert his authority.

"We were just decorating our cell when they threw in a smoke grenade and then they beat us all," said Ulan Sheraliyev, who is awaiting trial on charges of robbery. "And so we are starving and demanding this not happen again and that the perpetrator be punished."

Since Soviet times, underfunded police and galloping corruption have enabled local mafia groups engaged in narcotics trafficking and other crimes to flourish and authorities say the writ of crime gangs extends deep into the nation's jails.

But, State Correctional Service chairman Sheishenbek Bayzakov says the system was rotten from the top down.

"I fired 80 percent of prison directors, because over the past few years, they created corrupt schemes and forged alliances with the criminal world," said Bayzakov, who appointed to the post last year. "They laundered money and instead of buying normal food, they would buy rotten and expired goods and just kept the money for themselves."

Bayzakov said several former penitentiary directors now face prosecution for alleged crimes that include running the prison drug trade.

The protests in Kyrgyzstan's prisons have caused international alarm.

Matteo Mecacci, chair of the human rights committee of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe's parliamentary assembly, issued a statement in the past week calling for an easing of conditions in detention facilities.

Reforming the country's jails is seen as an urgent priority by President Almazbek Atamabayev's government, which is battling to maintain stability in the face of opposition from political rivals and organized crime syndicates.

Atambayev was elected last year amid vows he would rid the country of corruption, which prospered under former leader Kurmanbek Bakiyev. Bakiyev was thrown out of power in a violent street uprising in April 2010.

Signs of unrest are viewed with deep apprehension in the West because Kyrgyzstan hosts a U.S. air base that serves as an important transportation hub for military operations in nearby Afghanistan.

Can NATO force weather France's faster exit?

KABUL — France's call for a speedier NATO exit from Afghanistan reflects the depth of war fatigue in the West and raises fears that other countries in the U.S.-led coalition will succumb to rising political pressure and pull their troops home early.

French President Nicolas Sarkozy's decision to fast-track its withdrawal — just days after an Afghan soldier gunned down four French troops — is the latest crack in a coalition already strained by economic troubles in Europe and the United States, the Afghan government's sluggish battle against corruption, on-again off-again cooperation from neighboring Pakistan and a dogged Taliban bloodied but not beaten.

The international coalition already is rushing against the clock to meet President Hamid Karzai's goal of having the Afghan police and army in charge of the nation's security by the end of 2014.

Police arrest 5 in tabloid bribery probe

The criminal investigation into British tabloid skullduggery turned full force on a second Rupert Murdoch publication Saturday, with the arrest of four current and former journalists from the Sun on suspicion of bribing police.

A serving police officer was also held, and authorities searched the newspaper's offices as part an investigation into illegal payments for information.

The arrests spread the scandal over tabloid wrongdoing — which has already shut down one Murdoch paper, the News of the World — to Britain's best-selling newspaper.

Brazilian bikinis burgeon to fit the fat

By Jenny Barchfield
Associated Press

RIO DE JANEIRO — Tall and tan and young and ... chunky?

The Girl From Ipanema has put on a few pounds, and for many sunbathers on Brazil's beaches the country's iconic itsy-bitsy, teeny-weeny bikini just doesn't suffice anymore.

A growing number of bikini manufacturers have woken up to Brazil's thickening waistline and are reaching out to the ever-expanding ranks of heavy women with new plus-size lines.

That's nothing short of a revolution in this most body-conscious of nations, where overweight ladies long had little choice but to hit the beach in comely ensembles of oversized T-shirts and biker shorts.

"It used to be bikinis were only in tiny sizes that only skinny girls could fit into. But, not everyone is built like a model," said Elisangela Inez Soares as she sunbathed on Copacabana beach, her oiled-up curves packed into a black size 12 bikini.

"Finally, it seems like people are beginning to realize that we're not all Gisele," said the 38-year-old mother of four, referring to willowy Brazilian supermodel Gisele Bundchen.

Clothing designer Clarice Rebelatto said her own swimwear-hunting travails prompted her to found Lehona, an exclusively plus-size beachwear line.

"Honestly, the problem went way beyond just bikinis. In Brazil, it used to be that if you were even a little chunky, finding any kind of clothes in the right size was a real problem," said Rebelatto, herself a size 10. "And I thought, 'I'm actually not even that big compared to a lot of women out there, so if I have problems, what are they doing?'"

Since its launch in 2010, the line has become a hit.

In brash leopard spots and flower prints not meant for wallflowers, the label's 14 bikini styles aren't what you'd normally associate with plus-size swimsuits. The necklines plunge dramatically. Straps are mere strings. And while the bottoms provide too much coverage to qualify for the famed "fio dental" or "dental floss" category of Brazilian string bikinis, they're significantly more audacious than the standard U.S. cut.

"We're working from the principle that bigger women are just like everyone else: They don't want to look like old ladies, wearing these very modest, very covering swimsuits in just black," said Luiz Rebelatto, Clarice's son and director of Lehona.

He said recent publicity of the brand and several other new swimwear lines catering to plus sizes has triggered an overwhelming number of calls and emails from would-be customers.

"They're all excited and they say, 'I've been looking everywhere for a bikini like that. Where can I get one?'" said Rebelatto.

Lehona is currently sold exclusively at big and tall specialty stores throughout Brazil. Its bikinis retail for about 130 reais or $75 — a relatively high price-point here, but Rebelatto said sales have grown at a galloping pace, though he did not provide any figures.

It's the same story at Acqua Rosa, a conventional swimwear label that added a plus-size line in 2008. Now, plus-size purchases account for more than 70 percent of the brand's total sales, said director Joao Macedo.

It makes sense.

For centuries, large swaths of Brazil were beset by malnutrition, and in 1970, nearly 10 percent of the population in the country's poor, rural northeast region was considered underweight, according to Brazil's national statistics institute.

But the phenomenal economic boom that has lifted tens of millions out of poverty and into the burgeoning middle class over the past decade also has changed the nation's once-svelte physique: A 2010 study by the statistics institute showed that 48 percent of adult women and 50 percent of men are now overweight. In 1985 those figures were 29 percent for women and 18 percent for men.

(Still, there's been no rash of plus-size male swimwear lines, as men here wear Speedo-style suits that don't impinge on big guts.)

Analysts attribute Brazil's rapidly widening girth to changes in nutrition, with chips, processed meats and sugary soft drinks replacing staples like rice, beans and vegetables.

And while the country's elite are widely known to be fitness freaks — and also among the world's top consumers of cosmetic surgery — those recently lifted out of poverty and manual labor are becoming increasingly sedentary. A 2008 study showed that barely 10 percent of Brazilian teens and adults exercise regularly.

Still, despite their growing numbers, not everyone is eager to embrace "gordinhas" — or "little fatties," as chunky women are affectionately known here.

Many high-end bikini-makers have turned a seemingly deliberately blind eye to the burgeoning plus-size market. Rio-based upmarket brand Salinas, for example, offers five sizes, from extra-small through extra-large. But their sizing runs notoriously small and it's hard to imagine anyone over a size 6 actually managing to fit into any of the brand's minuscule two-pieces.

Hospital using 2 new newborn initiatives

By Audrie Palmer
Staff Writer

The neonatal unit at Midland Memorial Hospital has rolled out two new initiatives to help ensure healthier babies as the department experiences a "mini baby boom."

Five months ago, MMH West Campus averaged between 150 and 160 births per month, but those numbers have risen about 20 percent to between 180 and 190 births each month recently, officials said. The increase can be attributed to the city's population increase as a result of the oil boom, said Lenora Sevcik, Women's and Children's Services divisional director.

Neonatal staff members have examined initiatives to accommodate the increase duirng the past five months. The first initiative is part of a nationwide effort to try to prevent induced labor before a baby's 39th week of gestation, or development.

Sevcik said studies have shown that babies still mature in the last weeks of a woman's pregnancy. Inducing early — such as at 38 or 39 weeks — hinders the final stages of development for organs such as the lungs, which can cause respiratory problems.

A full-term pregnancy lasts 40 weeks, Sevcik said.

"It really is best for the baby to stay in their mom," she said.

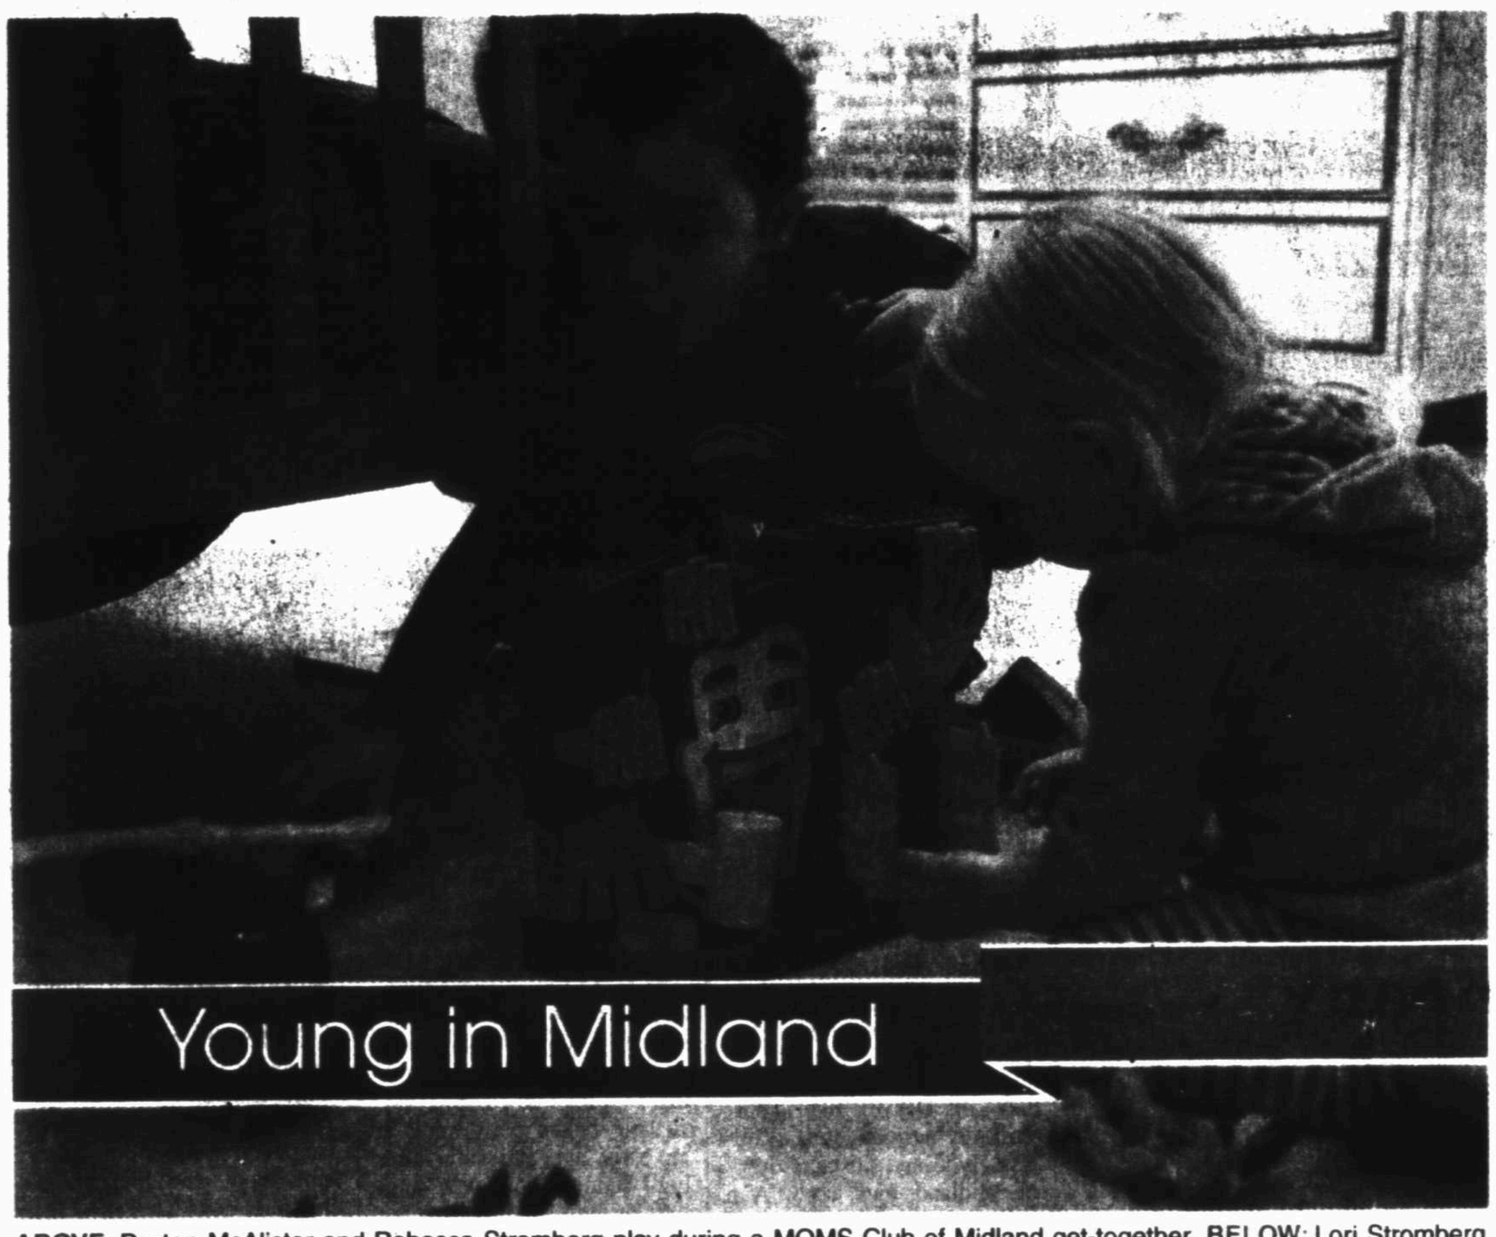

A year ago, members of the Women's and Children's Interprofessional Council and the Peds Section Committee at MMH approached doctors and staff about not inducing labor early unless it's medically necessary. Sevcik said the doctors agreed with the initiative, resulting in a reduced number of early

Mom learns why town is great for kids

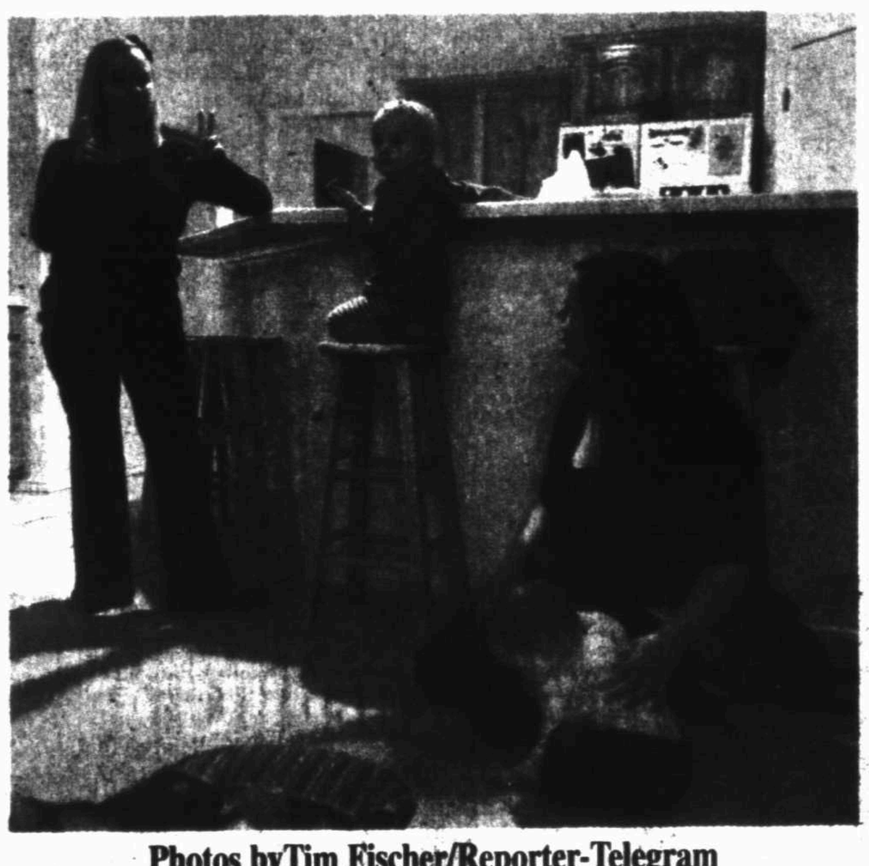

Megan Lea Buck
Features Editor

If you've been in Midland for more than a couple of months, or if you've spent any significant amount of time with people who call this town home, you've probably heard someone say it's a great place to raise kids. When I was a teenager itching for independence and a change of scenery, I would roll my eyes, thinking that was parent speak for "Midland is a boring, little town without too many opportunities for kids to really screw up."

Now that I'm the one spewing parent-speak — luckily my daughter is not old enough to roll her eyes — I find myself agreeing with other parents. My hometown is a great place to raise kids. Do I think this just because the landscape and the faces are familiar? Or is there really something that makes Midland stand out when it comes to thriving as a family unit?

I asked readers what they thought about raising

Canadian oil could hit Texas by summer

■ An alternative to the Keystone XL could connect an existing pipeline in Oklahoma to the Gulf Coast refineries.

By Tim Eaton
Cox Newspapers

AUSTIN — President Barack Obama might have rejected the enormous Keystone XL pipeline, at least for now, but that doesn't mean heavy crude from Canada won't be flowing into Texas' refineries later this year.

TransCanada Corp. — the Canadian company that proposed building the $7 billion, 830,000 barrel-a-day pipeline — has some ideas that could lead to moving oil from the oil sands region in northern Alberta, Canada, to the Gulf Coast of Texas without the blessing of the president, the company said.

"We are still very much committed to building this pipeline," TransCanada spokesman Terry Cunha said in an interview with the Austin American-Statesman.

But, building the full Keystone XL pipeline could take a long time. So in the meantime, TransCanada is talking about alternatives.

One possibility of getting bituminous sands — a substance made of clay, sand, water and heavy black viscous oil that is sometimes referred to as "tar sands" or "oil sands" — to refineries in Houston and Port Arthur involves building only the southern stretch of the proposed Keystone XL.

Cunha said the company is in preliminary stages of planning a new pipeline from Cushing, Okla., where an existing TransCanada pipeline ends, to the Texas coast.

A pipeline that doesn't cross an international border doesn't need a presidential permit, the U.S. State Department said.

TransCanada isn't the only company looking to pipe Canadian heavy crude to Texas.

A competitor, Enbridge Inc., already is working on a plan to bring oil from Canada as early as June, oil executives said. Enbridge and its American partner, Enterprise Products Partners, are hoping to use an existing patchwork of pipelines to push Canadian oil sands to refineries in Freeport, Houston and Port Arthur.

Rick Rainey, an Enterprise spokesman, said "quite a glut" of Canadian tar sands oil and regular crude oil from different regions of the U.S. is backing up in Cushing, a hub where several pipelines

Playing Scrabble is humiliating, humbling experience

Terry Williamson
Real life columnist

Each morning when I wake up, I catch up on the daily weather conditions and early morning news with Greg Morgan and Krista Escamilla on television station KOSA. Then I go out to the driveway and get my newspaper.

Greg's the guy who tells me why it isn't going to rain today, while Krista will tell me what cartoon is playing at the movies. I guess Krista takes her kids to the movies every time the cartoons change.

Now, I've never met either one of these people, but I'd like to one day because they're right there in my home just about every day. We're good friends; they just don't know it. I especially love hearing Greg say every Thursday that it's, "Friday eve." He always has a knack of shortening the work week.

I was watching Krista the other day, and she mentioned that "Words with Friends" was the top selling app at the App Store. That may have been the worst day of my life. For those of you who don't know, WWF also goes by another name — Scrabble.

The wife loves Scrabble. After hearing that story, she quickly purchased an electronic Scrabble game for her Kindle. That was doomsday for me. Now all she wants to do is to get me in a game of Scrabble so she can reduce me to the most humiliating experience known in the gaming world.

I currently own a 1-20 record against the wife playing Scrabble. She kills me every time. She gloats, too. It's not just a humbling experience; it strips away all your humanity and reduces you to idiot status. There is no feeling lower on the self-esteem ladder.

When we started playing this disturbing game, I bragged she never would be able to beat me because I make my living using words. I just didn't know that the words I use most often are of the three-letter variety. And, I know few words that contain all vowels or all consonants, which I seem to routinely draw.

The wife, on the other hand, will throw up 80 points on some word I've never heard of, but the game's computer says it's in the dictionary. Any word I use over three letters is never in the computer's dictionary.

Did you know that qi is a word? How about aa? At least those are words in the Kindle computer's mind. I don't remember using either one of those words in any sentence I've ever written.

I actually thought this game would increase my word skills, but I'm finding out the game is more about placing letters in the right slot than it is with coming up with new words. The wife has mastered this trick, leaving me in her proverbial dust.

You would think she would tire of playing this game with me because I'm absolutely no challenge to her, but she delights in handing my head to me as often as I'm willing to serve it up. You might also ask, "Why do you keep

Born to Felix and Eluteria Terrazas, Sr. on July 19, 1926 in Fort Stockton, TX, and he came to rest amongst family on January 26, 2012. He was a brother, husband, father, grandfather, great-grandfather, great great-grandfather, and SMILING friend to many. Cherish your family.

Be proud of who you are and stand up tall.

Boys be chivalrous and respectful, and girls be poised and honorable.'

He was a hard worker but very much enjoyed having a good time. He was a musician, a drummer, and shared this skill with each generation that preceded him. Upside of cemetery in subdivision: quiet neighbors

By James Ragland
Dallas Morning News

McKINNEY— At the end of the historic James Herndon Trail lies one of the more unusual residential cul-de-sacs in America.

It's literally a dead-end street — a place where new, upscale homes give way to one of the oldest graveyards in Collin County.

The Herndon Cemetery, estimated to be 131 years old, is deeply embedded in Collin County lore, but the tract where three family members and 17 "unknowns" are buried was covered in thickets until a few years ago.

Now, thanks to a rare collaboration between a Dallas-based developer and historic preservationists, the cemetery not only survived intact, it got a sorely needed face-lift — and a bunch of new admirers.

"These are the best neighbors we've ever had," quipped Mark Costollo, a retired auto sales representative who recently moved to McKinney from Little Rock, Ark. "They're quiet."

Costollo, 67, and his wife picked out a lot just a stone's throw from the cemetery last February and, in July, erected their home in the Inwood Hills subdivision, which Meritage Homes Corp. is building.

Costollo said the cul-de-sac lot cost more, and they had no reservations about living next to the cemetery.

"We think it's kind of neat because there's so much history to it," he said, gazing at the burial ground from his front doorway. "And, it's like a little park."

The 1-acre cemetery, which sits on a hill overlooking the sprawl of homes built around it, is enclosed by a wrought-iron fence and stone retaining walls.

Given its lofty perch, it's easy to spot in the neighborhood. And, that's just the way the Herndon descendants — not to mention Bob Finley, the project manager who developed the lots — wanted it.

"When I talked about doing this," said Finley, the former Henry S. Miller vice president who oversaw the development, "everybody said, 'Finley, nobody's going to buy those lots near a cemetery.' I said, 'They'll be the first to go.'"

He was right.

The sensitive way that Finley and others helped preserve and patch up the cemetery still makes at least one Herndon family descendant's eyes well up at times.

"Twelve to 14 years ago, this was a wilderness," said Jim Bundy, a fourth great-nephew of James Herndon, who settled in the area in the mid-19th century and is one of three family members buried in the cemetery.

"I didn't know how I was going to take care of it," said Bundy, who's also a member of the county's preservation group. "You look at it now, and it's just beautiful. We couldn't have asked for anything more."

Bundy and Finley knew the cemetery contained three graves, those of James Herndon and his wife, Elizabeth McGarrah, and their daughter, Ellen N. Montgomery.

But earlier research had indicated that the site also might be home to an old Indian burial ground. They soon discovered that there were, indeed, unmarked graves on the site.

So what's the goal in a 106-5 rout?

■ When your basketball team is up 50-0 at the half, what would you do if you are coaching the superior team?

KEN HERMAN
Cox Newspapers

AUSTIN — It's the kind of focus you admire as high school athletes work to turn individual talent into team success. It's a timeout, and the players are locked in on their coach's every word.

"I want ball pressure," Renee Brown tells her LBJ High School Jaguars girls basketball team. "We've got to be pressing the ball on top."

There's 4:49 to go in the fourth quarter, the crunch time in which so many games are decided. This, however, is not one of those games. LBJ, up 50-0 at halftime, leads Eastside Memorial 95-5.

I, along with a handful of fans in the Eastside Memorial gym Tuesday evening, was watching a repeat rout. LBJ, breezing through district play, recently had clinched its 12th straight district title.

Eastside Memorial's Lady Panthers have won once this year, defeating a small charter school's junior varsity. The losses have been lopsided, including Tuesday's 106-5 defeat by LBJ, which won the teams' earlier meeting 105-4.

LBJ kept defensive pressure on throughout the game, though it used a full-court press only in the first quarter. On offense, the Jaguars never stopped running, sending players racing up the court as soon as they got the ball.

"Layups after layups," is how Brown later characterized it.

Recently, I wrote about Eastside Memorial's difficult year and how impressed I am with the six players' camaraderie and competitiveness and composure in the face of such grinding adversity. I saw it again Tuesday, layup after layup, as LBJ poured it on. (It's important to note the LBJ players remained respectful throughout the game, never openly celebrating the mismatch. Good for them.)

There are two ways to look at such games. On one hand, why shouldn't LBJ keep the foot on the pedal and work on what could make it a better team?

On the other hand, what about sportsmanship? When does doing things at will against an overmatched opponent produce diminishing, if any, returns?

"Basically, my main goal when we came in tonight's game was to work on our offense and defense, basically things we might be using in the playoffs, so, you know, we got layups after layups," Brown told me after the game.

I asked if she ever considers slowing down the offense in an effort to hold down the score against much weaker foes.

"Yeah, I do, but I look at it like in the real-game situation that we might have in the playoffs: If I tell them that now, what will I get later?" she said. "So, I kind of look at it kind of both ways."

I asked Brown if she feels for the Eastside Memorial girls as she maintains full-game pressure on them.

"Yes, I do, because I was in a situation like them some years ago when I first came to LBJ, and I pretty much know what it feels like," she said. "And, basically, that's why with teams like that we don't run a full-court press the whole time."

With 7:50 to go in the game, up 80-5, Brown yelled "Go! Push it!" as she exhorted her team to quickly move the ball up the floor. I guess that could just be a coach's instinctive reaction as she works to get her team to the peak of its potential. It also could be someone who has lost perspective on high school sports.

At McNeil High School, girls basketball coach Amanda Aguilar has been concerned about routs for several years. She said she was "sick" when she saw the LBJ-Eastside Memorial score this week. Aguilar said she backs off when her team has a 30-point lead.

"I don't see that working on layups is going to make you a better team in the playoffs," she said. "I've never been to the state tournament, so maybe I'm wrong."

Aguilar said she spoke with Brown two years ago to express her dismay at LBJ's lopsided wins. "Her response was, 'You don't know what you're talking about. You weren't there. We could have beaten them by more.'"

Aguilar also said she has had no success in getting coaches organizations to see if anything could, or should, be done about these one-sided contests.

After the Tuesday game, Eastside Memorial coach Rhonda Barton declined to pass judgment on her opposite's tactics. "That's for the other coach to decide," she told me.

As a sports fan, I get the notion of using every minute on the court, regardless of the opponent or situation, to work on improving your game.

But as a human, I was dismayed by what I saw Tuesday in the Eastside Memorial gym.

A jeweler's charmed life: Avery's work to represent Kerrville

By Richard A. Marini
San Antonio Express-News

Associated Press

James Avery laughs in his office in Kerrville. When members of Kerrville's Art in Public Places program went looking for an artist whose work would represent the city and the surrounding Hill Country, it quickly became apparent that the person they wanted was Avery. So on Mother's Day, a 12-foot-tall replica of one of Avery's most popular creations will be unveiled in front of the Kerr Arts & Cultural Center as the program's inaugural public art piece.

SAN ANTONIO — When members of the Art in Public Places program in Kerrville went looking for an artist whose work would represent the city and the surrounding Hill Country, it quickly became apparent the person they wanted was James Avery.

"His work is simple, elegant and timeless; and he's well-known and respected in the community," said Peter Lewis, an architect and design committee member.

So on this coming Mother's Day, a 12-foot-tall replica of one of Avery's most popular creations will be unveiled in front of the Kerr Arts & Cultural Center as the program's inaugural public art piece.

"Mother's Love" is a single, off-center heart that represents a mother gazing lovingly at her child. Countless daughters, mothers and grandmothers wear smaller versions of the design attached to charm bracelets, necklaces and as earrings.

Yet, while most everyone in South Texas is familiar with the work of James Avery, few know much about the man himself.

Avery, whose 63 eponymous jewelry stores span eight (soon to be nine) states, recently turned 90. While he no longer runs the family-owned business, having surrendered the reins in 2007 to his son Chris, now the CEO, he remains closely involved in its operations. He still maintains his office at the company's 25-acre compound in Kerrville, coming in almost every day to sketch ideas, attend design review meetings and act as the public face and ambassador for the $156-million-a-year business.

"I don't want to micromanage the boys," he said of Chris and another son, Paul, who serves as executive vice president of sales. "I don't want to say, 'Oh, you're doing it wrong. Here's how to do it better.'"

Then, with typical self-effacement, he laughed and said, "So I spend most of my time just dilly-dallying around, sketching, things like that."

To say Avery is grandfatherly in appearance is unnecessary. Most nonagenarians are. But with a full head of gray hair and a confident, even regal bearing, he easily could pass for being a quarter century younger. He's a natural storyteller and has a lifetime of tales to share, many happy, some sad.

Born Dec. 7, 1921, James Avery grew up in Detroit and the Chicago area. On his 20th birthday, while attending the University of Illinois, he heard an approaching commotion outside the window — drums banging, horns blowing.

Heading outside to investigate, he asked what was going on.

"Someone said, 'Avery, haven't you been listening to the radio?' I said no, 'I'd been studying. They said, 'The Japs bombed Pearl Harbor.' I thought, 'Wow' and knew things were about to change."

Within a few years he was in France, piloting B-26 on bombing raids over Germany. He flew 44 missions and is proud only one of his six-man crew was ever injured, and then not seriously.

"I wanted to fly the B-26 because it was a 'hot' plane," he said, meaning it was fast enough to outrun any German fighters that might attack. "At that age, you think, 'I can handle anything.'"

It was before he got his wings, however, during his military training at what later became Lackland AFB, that Avery first set foot in Texas. It was love at first sight.

"The people I met here were lovely, gracious and kind," he said. "I met a girl, Mona Pierce, in Lubbock, and she was lovely. Eventually I asked her to marry me."

After the war, Avery and Mona headed to the University of Iowa, where he helped establish that school's design department. Although he'd planned on moving to Dallas to set up shop as a freelance industrial designer, the couple already had their first child, George, and Mona was pregnant with their second, Jimmy. Security won out over independence.

A few years later, the growing family moved to the University of Colorado at Boulder where he helped establish that school's design department.

For a man whose life's work is so intertwined with religious iconography — faith-based images such as crosses, chalices, doves and fishes make up about 20 percent of the company's offerings — Avery had, since the age of 15, been an agnostic.

Then his wife left him for another man. Spiritually bereft, he turned to friends, an Episcopalian minister named Pat Patterson and his wife, Gingy, for guidance and support. They helped him return to the church and for years afterward played a vital role in his life.

Still, Avery maintains a surprisingly sanguine view of spirituality.

"I'm not the least bit concerned, at my age of 90, about my death or what comes after," he said. "I'm not concerned about having eternal life at all."

Tapping his desk he continues, "I think this is the place. Man has been here 50,000 years and man is destroying his environment. And man will be gone from this planet before too many more years. But while we're here, let's be kind to each other and help each other reach out and do whatever we can for each other."

Avery eventually got his chance to move back to Texas when he met his second wife, Sally Ranger, a University of Colorado student from Kerrville. It helped that sons Greg and Jimmy were living in Galveston with their mother. The couple married in 1953.

Offered a job driving a beer truck, Avery decided instead to try his hand at creating jewelry.

Working from an old double garage on his in-laws' property and with a slim volume published in 1949 titled "How to Make Modern Jewelry " as his guide, he began creating pieces.

"I learned how to solder, cast, all that stuff," he said. "I'm self-taught, as far as the technique. The first piece I sold was probably a ring."

He soon opened a small retail shop in Kerrville and, because of the religious tone of so much of his early work, had immediate success selling on consignment through area churches. Eventually, however, he realized he had about $25,000 worth of merchandise out on consignment — an untenable position for any small business. So James Avery Craftsman, as the company was originally called, opened a store in Dallas in 1973, followed by stores in Houston and San Antonio.

A few weeks ago we wrote of a family in crisis. They had recently moved here from Florida seeking a new life. The husband had a good job here, but then a motorcycle accident left him in a coma. His prognosis did not look good – while he was expected to live there was some question that he might never regain consciousness and would remain in a vegetative state. The couple has three children, one of whom is a special needs child. The wife wanted nothing more than to return to Florida where they had family and friends, and she had found a hospital that would be willing to admit the husband, but the family could not afford the cost of transporting him back there.

Since we wrote about them a few weeks ago, much progress has been made. The husband has regained consciousness, is breathing on his own and has even been able to sit up. While he still cannot speak and it is still too soon to know where he is at mentally, he is responsive to people who enter his room and is smiling. Once when he was being made to sit up he did manage to say "Ouch". Needless to say, that one simple little word gave his wife tremendous joy and hope.

They are awaiting the final release from the hospital to begin their journey back to Florida. We are deeply grateful to Midland Memorial Hospital for their help in transporting the husband back to Florida. We will also provide the family with a U-Haul trailer so that they can move their furniture and belongings home with them. We thank everyone who helped with the funding to make this move possible, especially the kind parishioners from First Christian Church and the members of the Macedonia Baptist Church Adult Choir. You helped provided not only the trailer, but gasoline and food money for the trip. You are indeed angels!

The family sent us this message and asked that we share it with you: "Words can't express the gratitude and appreciation our family has for all of the love, support and prayers you have given during this difficult time." This was followed by a passage from Psalm 91:14-16. We will continue to pray for the family and for the husband's complete recovery.

MOMS

kids in Midland and, luckily, some of the responses came from parents who don't list the Tall City as their hometown.

Sarah Green is mother to two children, ages 5 and 6. Her husband is a native West Texan who — like many of us — left with no intention of returning. Then the couple started a family, and this attitude changed. The Greens moved to Midland from Huntsville 5 1/2 years ago.

"We love it," Sarah Green said. "We chose to move here when our kids were born. We just like that it's big enough to have major stores, everything you would need on a daily basis, but it's still small enough to be a community where you get to know everyone."

When I asked about specific activities and places to take the family, Green said she loves taking the kids to the Museum of the Southwest, specifically the Fredda Turner Durham Children's Museum.

"Probably the Museum of the Southwest is, I think, one of the best assets of town," she said. "It's affordable, very reasonably priced, and there's a lot to do for all ages."

Carissa Hamilton and her husband enjoy taking their son to city parks.

"We try to go three or four times a week, weather permitting," she said. Her son also takes swimming lessons at the YMCA and recently signed up with Midland Soccer Association.

Other Midland parents mentioned sports events such as RockHounds games and kid-friendly places like Jumping Party when asked about opportunities for family fun. From the Bug Camp at the Sibley Nature Center to Family Science Night at the Petroleum Museum to Kids College at Midland College, there's no doubt Midland has ample opportunities to entertain the kiddos.

Criteria for a family-friendly environment include more than just fun places to go and activities to fill your kids' schedules. Parents need resources, too. Whether it's child care that allows a couple to enjoy a night at a quiet restaurant or a group of people with whom you can discuss day cares and diapers, all parents need a support system.

Some Midland parents find that support at their places of worship.

The Green family participates in the children's and young family ministries at Christ Church Midland.

"We have family get-together nights with pool parties or other fun activities," Green said. "Sometimes there will be babystitting provided at the church by the church, and all the parents will go out." Green said her children enjoy vacation Bible school, Sunday school, Christmas pageants and other fun activities at the church.

Tim Fischer/Reporter-Telegram

Chelsie Daugherty holds Kaedyn Stromberg as she chats with Crystal McAlister, who holds Lexi Daugherty on Wednesday at the MOMS Club of Midland get-together.

Other mothers find support through groups catering specifically to mothers and their children.

MOMS Club of Midland includes about 30 local stay-at-home mothers who meet two to three times a week for activities, play dates and, occasionally, a mothers' night out.

Though open to mothers who work part-time, the group meets during the day and aims to reach out to mothers who do not work outside of the home.

President Lori Stromberg started the local chapter of the international organization in August 2010 after moving to Midland from Farmington, N.M.

The mother of four said the group has connected her with other women who have become trusted friends.

"When I first started staying home, I found it really depressing to just be at home with the baby," she said. "Over the years I've seen myself grow as a mom because I've had all these other moms to learn from."

The group recently completed a project to raise money for the West Texas Food Bank.

"I find as a mom it's great for the kids to see I'm out in the community," Stromberg said. "I want them to grow up with those principles and continue doing that as they get older and as they have kids."

Another group, Midessa Mommies, is open to mothers who work full-time, part-time and those who don't work outside of the home.

Stay-at-home mom Michele Lee joined the group in June 2008 to give her 4-year-old daughter a chance to play with other kids her age.

Through an online forum, Midessa Mommies allows members to set up activities and play dates for others to join.

"Each member can set up a play date," Lee said. "It can be spur of the minute thing or something planned months in advance."

Midessa Mommies includes nearly 200 registered users in Midland and Odessa. In addition to setting up play dates, members give and receive tips and opinions about parenting issues.

"I've got a lot of parenting advice — basically just lots of help with raising my daughter," Lee said. She recommends the group to other mothers in the area looking for support and resources.

Midessa Mommies and MOMS Club of Midland are local chapters of larger organizations — mothers in other cities and other states can find similar support groups. Talking to other parents didn't really lead me to any great conclusions on why Midlanders think their hometown is the mecca of family-friendliness. Other cities have museums and parks, possibly even parks with trees and water. Churches everywhere offer ministries for children and for young parents.

Still, there's something about Midland. Maybe Sarah Green pinpointed it when she said the city is just the right size — big enough to have everything you need but small enough to know your neighbors. Maybe it has something to do with the family values our city displays by its lack of adult-themed businesses. Maybe it's because with the influx of young professionals you see other couples with kids everywhere you go. Maybe, it's just home.

In January 2011, the number of women who were induced before 39 weeks was at 13 percent. In December 2011, that number dropped to 7 percent, according to data from MMH. About 25 percent of all pregnancies at MMH are induced, Sevcik said.

She said she has met with staff at Odessa and Lubbock hospitals; and they also are pushing the initiative.

A second initiative, which began in November, created a neonatal hypoglycemic control protocol. This initiative is for babies whose mothers are diabetic or who weigh 9 pounds or more at birth and are at a higher risk for problems with low blood sugar, Sevcik said. For the first 24 hours of the baby's life, nurses perform periodic screenings and monitor the newborn's blood sugar levels.

"It's very important that a baby's brain has glucose," she said.

Sevcik said the sugar is important for growth and functioning.

After researching articles and accumulating data from infants at the MMH nursery, officials said they launched the protocol.

Staff members are researching potential future initiatives.

"We want to stay current and have evidence-based standards that are good for the patients," Sevcik said. "Slowly, but surely, we'll keep moving forward and see what's happening across the country and what's proving to be a good standard for initiatives."

now end, including one that belongs to Enbridge.

Both Rainey and Oklahoma regulators said there are just too many pipelines into Cushing and too few going out.

The Enbridge/Enterprise partnership is seeking an almost perfunctory permit from the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission to reverse the flow of a 36-year-old pipeline that has always pushed oil from the Texas Gulf Coast to Cushing.

The Seaway Crude Oil Pipeline has mainly been used to carry both heavy and light crude from offshore drilling rigs and from Central and South America. Only relatively minor alterations will be needed to allow it to carry Canadian oil sands oil south, Rainey said.

If all goes as expected, Canadian oil could be running through Texas by June 1, bringing 150,000 barrels a day to the Gulf Coast, Rainey said. By the end of 2012, it should be able to handle much more oil.

"We expect roughly 400,000 barrels to be fully contracted," Rainey said.

In the future, Enbridge and Enterprise could secure enough commitments from shippers of oil to allow them to build a parallel pipeline, which would greatly increase capacity for Canadian oil to Texas. Rainey declined to say how much.

Obama's signature was needed for TransCanada's much bigger Keystone XL pipeline — it would have the capacity for 830,000 barrels a day versus Seaway's 400,000 barrels a day — because it was slated to cross an international border. But, the workarounds that TransCanada and Enbridge discussed don't involve crossing an international border.

The pipelines won't need state approval, either.

The Oklahoma Corporation Commission, which regulates the oil and gas industry, has no permitting authority with interstate pipelines, said commission spokesman Matt Skinner.

Similarly, in Texas, the oddly named Railroad Commission, which oversees the oil and gas industry, confirmed in a written statement that it "does not issue construction permits for interstate or intrastate pipelines to be built. The Railroad Commission also has no authority over the routing or siting of intrastate and interstate pipelines, and it has no safety jurisdiction over interstate pipelines such as a pipeline that would be built from an adjacent state into Texas."

Obama's rejection of TransCanada's proposal to build Keystone XL this month was seen as a highly political move that drew sharp criticism from Republicans. Mitt Romney, the GOP presidential front-runner, accused Obama of putting politics ahead of policy by pandering to environmentalists in an election year. Romney and other Republicans have touted the Keystone XL pipeline as a massive job creator that would help wean the U.S. off dependence on Middle Eastern oil.

Also, Romney charged, rejection of the Keystone XL would prompt the Canadians to try to sell their oil to China.

Many of the opponents of the pipeline complained about the potential environmental harm of building a pipeline over the sensitive Ogallala Aquifer in Nebraska. With about 3.3 billion acre-feet of water, the Ogallala is one of the largest aquifer systems in the world, stretching across eight states.

But the presidential rejection wasn't a total denial. The administration will allow TransCanada to apply for another permit with an altered route that avoids Nebraska's Sandhills, the environmentally sensitive area of porous land atop of the Ogallala.

The hopeful executives in Canada said they plan to reapply with the U.S. government after this fall's elections.

But in the meantime, the Canadian companies are facing a new batch of critics — this time in Texas. An unusual coalition of property rights activists has teamed with groups that often are on the other end of the political spectrum: environmentalists. The groups are working on plans together to fight pipeline development in Texas.

Property rights advocates have been a powerful force in state politics and were instrumental in defeating the Trans-Texas Corridor, the statewide network of toll roads backed by Gov. Rick Perry that many feared would have required taking over private property.

Now former Republican gubernatorial candidate Debra Medina, who also was an outspoken critic of the toll road plan, is leading the libertarian-leaning conservatives. Medina is protesting TransCanada's ability to condemn private landowners' property for the pipeline route. She said a quick search of a few counties' records revealed 22 eminent domain disputes with TransCanada, but she suspects many more exist in other counties along the 18-county route in Texas.

Medina said she always has been pro-business but that "taking private property from landowners is not playing nice."

Some Texas environmentalists began working against the XL pipeline last year.

Trevor Lowell, environmental program coordinator at the Texas office for the consumer watchdog group Public Citizen, said he helped strategize opposition to the Keystone XL pipeline last summer.

Canadian protesters have long said they are concerned about the vast water resources needed to extract the oil sands, pollution associated with oil sands refining and the strip mining necessary to get the oil out of the Earth.

Lowell said he shares the concerns of the Canadian protesters. Even worse, he said, piping Canadian heavy crude to Texas would represent surrender in the battle to curb global warming.

Like many Nebraskans who fought TransCanada, Lowell has concerns about groundwater. In Nebraska, it was about the Ogallala. In Texas, Lowell's concern is the Carrizo-Wilcox Aquifer, which extends from the Rio Grande Valley to parts of Arkansas and Louisiana and supplies water to 60 Texas counties.

Lowell said he also worries about the chemicals in the pipe that would help move oil sands. He believes benzene, a known carcinogen, is one of those chemicals. He pointed to several pipeline leaks throughout the years by the companies.

Most of the accidents, he admitted, were small, but some were major — such as in Michigan, where an Enbridge pipeline broke and spilled 19,500 barrels of crude oil into the Kalamazoo River system. The Environmental Protection Agency detected heightened levels of benzene at the site.

"This is really toxifying the water and even toxifying the air," Lowell said.

Texas ranchers brace for new cattle ID rules

By Kate Galbraith
Texas Tribune

In Dan Gattis' Georgetown pasture, cows and their newborn calves have bright yellow ear tags with identification numbers.

"I can take that knife and pull that ear tag out," said Gattis, a former state representative, gesturing at a knife in his belt. For more permanent identification, he brands each cow with his ranch's 4G symbol and that cow's specific number. Ear tags can also be ripped off by brush, he said, pointing out one cow that had lost its "earring."

Nonetheless, more ear tags may be on the way for ranchers in Texas and across the nation. Proposed rules from the U.S. Department of Agriculture would require ear tags for adult cattle moving across state lines. In Texas, a proposal discussed this week by the Texas Animal Health Commission would require adult cattle — 18 months or older — to have ear tags whenever their ownership changes.

The goal is a standard method of identification for cattle so that health officials can more easily trace the origins of diseases like mad cow and brucellosis, neither of which has been found in Texas for years.

Branding does not lend itself to standardization. In Texas, the largest cattle state, with 13.3 million head as of last January, each county oversees brand records. So in theory — though not in practice — one herd in all 254 Texas counties could register the same brand, like the Rocking R.

Texas ranchers are amenable to changes, within limits. Already, they point out, cattle moving across state lines — as many did last year during the record drought — need certificates of health, and many already have ear tags.

Carmen Fenton, a spokeswoman for the Texas and Southwestern Cattle Raisers Association, said the group basically supported the Texas proposal. But "we also need to make sure that any type of trace-back system doesn't slow down the current speed of commerce," she said in an email, adding that the state program had to work "hand in hand with the federal program."

Eldon White, the executive vice president of the same association, supports allowing brands as another official form of identification for moving cattle between certain states. Brands, he said, are the "only permanent method of identification you can see from horseback," making them crucial theft-prevention tools. Also, when Hurricane Ike struck Southeast Texas in 2008, he said, thousands of cattle wandered through damaged fences, and brands helped ranchers sort them out.

Wolves' senses tapped to keep them clear of cattle

By Susan Montoya Bryan
Associated Press

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. — Wildlife managers are running out of options when it comes to helping Mexican gray wolves overcome hurdles that have thwarted reintroduction into their historic range in the Southwest.

Harassment and rubber bullets haven't worked, so they're trying something new — a food therapy that has the potential to make the wolves queasy enough to never want anything to do with cattle again.

As in people, the memories associated with eating a bad meal are rooted in the brain stem, triggered any time associated sights and smells pulse their way through the nervous system.

Wildlife managers are trying to tap into that physiological response in the wolves, hoping that feeding them beef laced with an odorless and tasteless medication will make them ill enough to kill their appetite for livestock.

Cattle depredations throughout southwestern New Mexico and southeastern Arizona have served as an Achilles' heel for the federal government's efforts to return the wolves.

Conditioned taste aversion — the technical term for what amounts to a simple reaction — is not a silver bullet for boosting the recovery of the Mexican wolf, but some biologists see it as one of few options remaining for getting the program back on track after nearly 14 years of stumbling.

"Just the very fact that the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service is trying something new ought to send the message that they really are seriously concerned about the ranchers' concerns," said Dan Moriarty, a professor and chairman of the psychological sciences department at the University of San Diego.

"We have to find a way to sort of peacefully co-exist," said Moriarty, who has worked with captive wolves in California. "That's my hope, that the taste aversion will be one more tool."

Gray wolves have rebounded from widespread extermination throughout the Northern Rockies and the Great Lakes region. Since they were declared endangered in 1974, the wolf population has grown fivefold — to about 6,200 animals wandering parts of 10 states outside Alaska.

After four decades and tens of millions of dollars, the federal government was recently able to remove the animals from the endangered species list in several states.

The case is much different in the Southwest, where the population of the Mexican wolf — a subspecies of the gray wolf — continues to be about 50 despite more than a decade of work. Biologists had hoped to have more than 100 wolves in the wild by 2006.

About 90 wolves and some dependent pups have been removed — in some cases lethally — from the wild since the program began because of livestock problems. For about four years, the Fish and Wildlife Service operated under a policy that called for trapping or shooting wolves if they had been involved in at least three cattle depredations.

Associated Press

In this December 2011 photo, a female Mexican gray wolf tries to avoid capture for its annual vaccinations and medical checkup at the Sevilleta National Wildlife Refuge in central New Mexico. Biologists are trying to tap into the biological avoidance response in Mexican gray wolves so they will steer clear of livestock.

The agency has since scraped the policy, and ranchers have all but given up on keeping track of their dead cows and calves.

In the last year, monthly reports from the wolf program show wildlife managers investigated four dozen depredations in Arizona and New Mexico. They determined that wolves were involved in half of the cases.

Caren Cowan, executive director of the New Mexico Cattle Grower's Association, said ranchers are frustrated.

"You really have no idea how bad it is when a dad calls you and says 'There's a wolf in my yard and my kids and my wife are stuck in the house. What can you do to help me?'

That's the issue, Cowan said. "These animals are habituated to humans and until we can figure that out, I don't know what you do."

Cowan acknowledged, however, that getting wolves to stop preying on livestock would be a huge first step.

Biologists working at a captive breeding center at the Sevilleta National Wildlife Refuge in south-central New Mexico treated six wolves last April and another two in October. The animals were fed baits made up of beef, cow hide and an odorless, tasteless deworming medication that makes the wolves queasy.

Fish and Wildlife Service biologist Susan Dicks said the initial tests appear to be successful, with the wolves not wanting anything to do with the beef baits after their first serving.

The idea is that when wolves smell cattle in the wild, their nervous system and brain stem will kick into gear and override any desire they have to get near the cattle.

"We're learning as we go, but so far we have seen some good aversions produced," Dicks said. "Again, it's impossible to say yet whether this translates to a livestock animal running around on the hoof."

Wolf releases have been put off for the past year, and it's unclear whether the agency will have the opportunity to release the treated wolves this year so the taste aversion treatments can be fully tested.

The work done with the Mexican wolves is based on decades of research conducted by Lowell Nicolaus, a retired biology professor from Northern Illinois University. He has seen it work with captive wolves and free-ranging raccoons and crows.

"It just takes one good illness," said Nicolaus of Butte Falls, Ore. "Their avoidance is going to be expressed wherever they see the food or smell it. It doesn't depend on when and where they first ate it or when and where they got sick."

Nicolaus said taste aversion works because it's an unconscious response, not a threat that wolves can overcome such as being hazed or shot at with rubber bullets.

The other benefit is biologists say wolves that have an aversion to cattle are likely to pass that on to their pups by teaching them hunting habitats that avoid cattle and focus on deer, elk and other native prey. They call that a feeding tradition.

Bill Given, a wildlife biologist who helped the Fish and Wildlife Service with the first batch of wolf treatments at Sevilleta, describes taste aversion as a natural solution that taps into an evolutionary defense mechanism that is common among all animals.

"You can build a great fence or you can have a dog as a shepherd, but none of those things can change the desire to consume the livestock," he said. "They just make it challenging and then the predator has to work around that barrier."

To ranchers, the wolves are "killing machines," Cowan said.

The biologists don't necessarily disagree.

"There's no stopping the feeding and the sex drive. All life is about those two things," Given said, noting that wildlife managers have an opportunity to gain some control through taste aversion.

The next challenge will be proving its value on the range by monitoring wolves that have been treated.

"I think it does have a lot of promise," Dicks said. "And part of it is we're willing to try anything to get these animals successfully on the ground without impacting livestock growers."

Indian tribes join forces to save petroglyph site

By Pauline Arrillaga
Associated Press

TUBA CITY, Ariz. — In the far reaches of northern Arizona, where city sprawl gives way to majestic canyons and a holy place is defined not by steeple and cross but rather by earth and sky, lies a monument to a people's past and a symbol of the promise of peace between two long-warring Indian nations.

The Hopi people call it Tutuveni, meaning "newspaper rock," and from a distance this place is just that — a collection of sandstone boulders set on a deserted swath of rust-stained land outside of Tuba City, some 80 miles from the Grand Canyon and a four-hour drive north of Phoenix.

It is only when you step closer that you begin to understand what Tutuveni really is: a history of the Hopi Indian tribe carved into stone.

The site contains some 5,000 petroglyphs of Hopi clan symbols, the largest known collection of such symbols in the American Southwest. According to researchers with the Hopi Cultural Preservation Office, the many etchings on the boulders of Tutuveni date as far back as A.D. 1200.

On the dark desert varnish of the boulders are rows of bear paws, corn stalks, spiders, coyotes, kachinas, clouds, cranes. Some of the symbols represent various aspects of Hopi cultural life, but most are the markings of the Hopi clans, or family systems, which are usually named for animals or other natural objects.

The Hopi made these engravings during ceremonial pilgrimages from their land to the Grand Canyon to mark the passage into adulthood for Hopi young men.

"They would stop at Tutuveni and camp there, and they would peck their clan symbols on those rocks to mark their participation in that pilgrimage. And they did this for four or five centuries at least," said Wes Bernardini, an archaeologist and professor at the University of Redlands who has been studying Tutuveni for years. "When people from the same clan would visit the site, they would put their symbols next to the previous symbol that somebody had left earlier. There's no other site that we know of like that, that shows these repeated visits.

"It's a very important place."

It is also a place threatened by modern-day vandals who view Tutuveni not as the sacred site and archaeological treasure that it is, but rather a canvas for their own graffiti.

Scattered among the many ancient impressions are the markings of lovers, history buffs and random visitors looking to leave their mark with etchings such as: "Aaron Myrianna 07," "The Victor 10-20-85," "Van.B," "Ramon Albert," "Ariz. Hy. Dept." Even: "1969-Man Land on Moon."

On one rock is a carved image of the two World Trade Center towers, with a plane heading for them. Elsewhere, clan symbols have been chiseled away or spray-painted over.

The Hopi had long known that what they considered a religious place had become, instead, a gathering spot to drink beer and act out. There was talk over the years of erecting a fence or building berms to help keep out vehicle traffic.

But the question of how to protect Tutuveni was complicated by its mere location: The site, while recognized as a Hopi traditional cultural property, actually sits on land now owned by the Navajo Indians, the result of a decades-old dispute that saw these neighboring tribes fighting over land each considered its own. The conflict was finally resolved in 2006 with much of the disputed 1.5 million acres going to the Navajos, but bitterness lingers still.

It might have been easy for Tutuveni to get caught up in all of that — and its needs overlooked — but for the small group of researchers, archeologists and preservationists from both tribes and beyond who came together in common cause: to save this important cultural resource.

BP emails reveal company veiling spill rate

By Cain Burdeau
Associated Press

NEW ORLEANS — On the day the Deepwater Horizon sank, BP officials warned in an internal memo that if the well was not protected by the blow-out preventer at the drill site, crude oil could burst into the Gulf of Mexico at a rate of 3.4 million gallons a day, an amount a million gallons higher than what the government later believed spilled daily from the site.

The email conversation, which BP agreed to release Friday as part of federal court proceedings, suggests BP managers recognized the potential of the disaster in its early hours, and company officials sought to make sure that the model-developed information wasn't shared with outsiders. The emails also suggest BP was having heated discussions with Coast Guard officials over the potential of the oil spill.

The memo was released as part of the court proceedings to determine the division of responsibility for the nation's worst offshore oil disaster, which began when the BP-leased Deepwater Horizon exploded April 20, 2010, killing 11 men about 50 miles southeast of the Louisiana coast. The first phase of the trial is set to start Feb. 27.

BP officials declined to comment on the emails late Friday.

The official amount of oil that flowed from the well was pegged at 206 million gallons from at least April 22 until the well was capped on July 15, a period of 85 days. That's a daily flow rate of about 2.4 million gallons — two-thirds of the way to BP's projection of what could leak from the well if it was an "open hole." BP has disputed the government's estimates.

Having an accurate flow rate estimate is needed to determine how much in civil and criminal penalties BP and the other companies drilling the well face under the Clean Water Act.

In the memo, a BP official urges not to share the flow-rate projections and refers to the "difficult discussions" the company was having at the time with the Coast Guard.

Gary Imm, a BP manager, told Rob Marshall, BP's subsea manager in the Gulf, to tell the modeler doing the estimates "not to communicate to anyone on this."

"A number of people have been looking at this we already have had difficult discussions with the USCG on the numbers," Imm said in the email string, referring to the Coast Guard and flow estimates.

On April 23, 2010, the Coast Guard, relying on BP's remotely operated vehicles, said no oil was leaking from the well a mile under the sea. A day later, Coast Guard Rear Adm. Mary Landry announced that oil was leaking an estimated rate of 42,000 gallons a day. The Coast Guard and BP did not divulge how they reached that figure.

In the second week after the spill, the official flow rate was increased to 210,000 gallons a day, an estimate the government continued to use until May 27.

On May 24, BP informed Congress they used an "undisclosed method to generate much higher figures" than the official estimates, according to a report from a presidential commission investigating the spill. BP estimated that the flow rates were between 210,000 gallons and 1.6 million gallons a day, the January 2011 report said.

As the spill grew into weeks and months, and soiled fishing grounds, beaches and coastal marshes, independent scientists questioned the official flow rates. Eventually, the federal government convened teams of government and independent scientists to determine how much oil leaked out of the well. They came up with an official estimate of about 2.4 million gallons of oil a day on average.

New 2-year contract for Farmington's lobbyist

Associated Press

FARMINGTON, N.M. — The city of Farmington will continue to hire a lobbyist to keep track of what's happening at the state Capitol that could affect the city.

It's important to have a presence in Santa Fe during the legislative session, City manager Rob Mayes told the Farmington Daily Times.

"Every year, there are dozens and dozens of proposed legislations that could have a potential impact on the city," Mayes said.

The City Council unanimously voted to extend Scott Scanland's contract for another two years at a meeting last week.

In addition to lobbying for projects that bring state money into the city, lobbyists also monitor potential legislation that could affect Farmington, Mayes said. Scanland will earn $11,000 a year for service during the 60-day sessions.

"It's vital that we have a voice at the state Legislature," Mayes said. "That is the main reason that we have a lobbyist. In terms of the last several years, Scott has monitored bills. Really, the primary lobbying focus is that the state not do anything to harm municipalities."

Monitoring proposed new regulations on power plants, mining and oil and gas industries are an important part of Scanland's job, but he also is watching the for threats to "hold harmless" provisions in state law.

Those provisions require the state to replace tax money local governments lost when certain tax changes are implemented by the state.

In 2003, for example, New Mexico lawmakers repealed the food and prescription tax. A so-called hold harmless provision promised a state backfill for lost gross receipts tax totals.

In Farmington, that's 10 percent of the general fund budget, or about $5 million annually.

The Legislature is debating the future of hold harmless, which could create significant financial hardship for municipalities.

Scanland was unavailable for comment, but Roger Makin, spokesman for the New Mexico Municipal League, a nonprofit lobbying organization that represents New Mexico's incorporated cities, explained lobbying like this: "It's kind of like nailing Jell-O to a wall. It depends on who's doing it and for what purpose."

Jacks get big win against IceRays

By Len Hayward
Sports Editor

ODESSA — The Odessa Jackalopes are officially in playoff mode, and Saturday night they picked up some much-needed points to help their postseason quest.

Jacks	6
IceRays	1

Odessa scored all its goals in the final two periods and routed South Division rival Corpus Christi 6-1 at the Ector County Coliseum for two key points.

The victory not only helped the Jacks gain two points on the IceRays, who are now eight points ahead of the Jacks (15-20-5, 35 points) in fourth place in the NAHL's South Division standings, but also helped Odessa break out of a recent scoring slump.

"We know that we can bury it, but we just have to find the back of the net," said forward Lawrence Cornellier, who had a goal and two assists on Saturday. "Like (Jacks) coach (Paul Gillis) says, it's already the playoffs for us. We've got to get that fourth spot and we've got to work hard to get it."

Six different players scored goals for the Jacks on Saturday as Cornellier, Tyler Poulsen, Jared Docken, Josh Obregon, Jalen Krogman and Tyler Cayemberg all found the back of the net against the IceRays, who were playing their third game in three days.

Plus, the Jacks scored in three different ways as Poulsen's came on a penalty shot, Cornellier was on the power play and Docken and Obregon all scored while the Jacks were shorthanded.

Bears withstand rally

Jones III scores 22 points to lead Baylor over Texas

Associated Press

WACO — Close games are becoming the norm for No. 6 Baylor.

Even more importantly for coach Scott Drew and the Bears, winning these tight contests have also become a regular occurrence.

Perry Jones III scored 22 points and grabbed a career-high 14 rebounds, Pierre Jackson hit the go-ahead 3-pointer and Baylor withstood a second-half rally to beat Texas 76-71 on Saturday.

The Bears (19-2, 6-2 Big 12) improved to 5-1 in games decided by five points or less. On Tuesday night, Baylor needed a late push to pull away from Oklahoma in a 77-65 victory.

"It's a lot easier to teach after a win than it is a loss," Drew said. "We've been fortunate to win. Hopefully, we keep improving and getting better."

Bears	76
Longhorns	71

It appeared early in the second half that the Bears might be able relax down the stretch as their lead grew to 12 points

A late string of turnovers and J'Covan Brown's hot shooting helped the Longhorns tie the game with less than 3 minutes left.

Jackson answered with his 3-pointer that gave Baylor the lead for good with 2:36 left, and the Bears hit seven free throws down the stretch to seal the victory despite committing 18 turnovers — twice as many as the Longhorns.

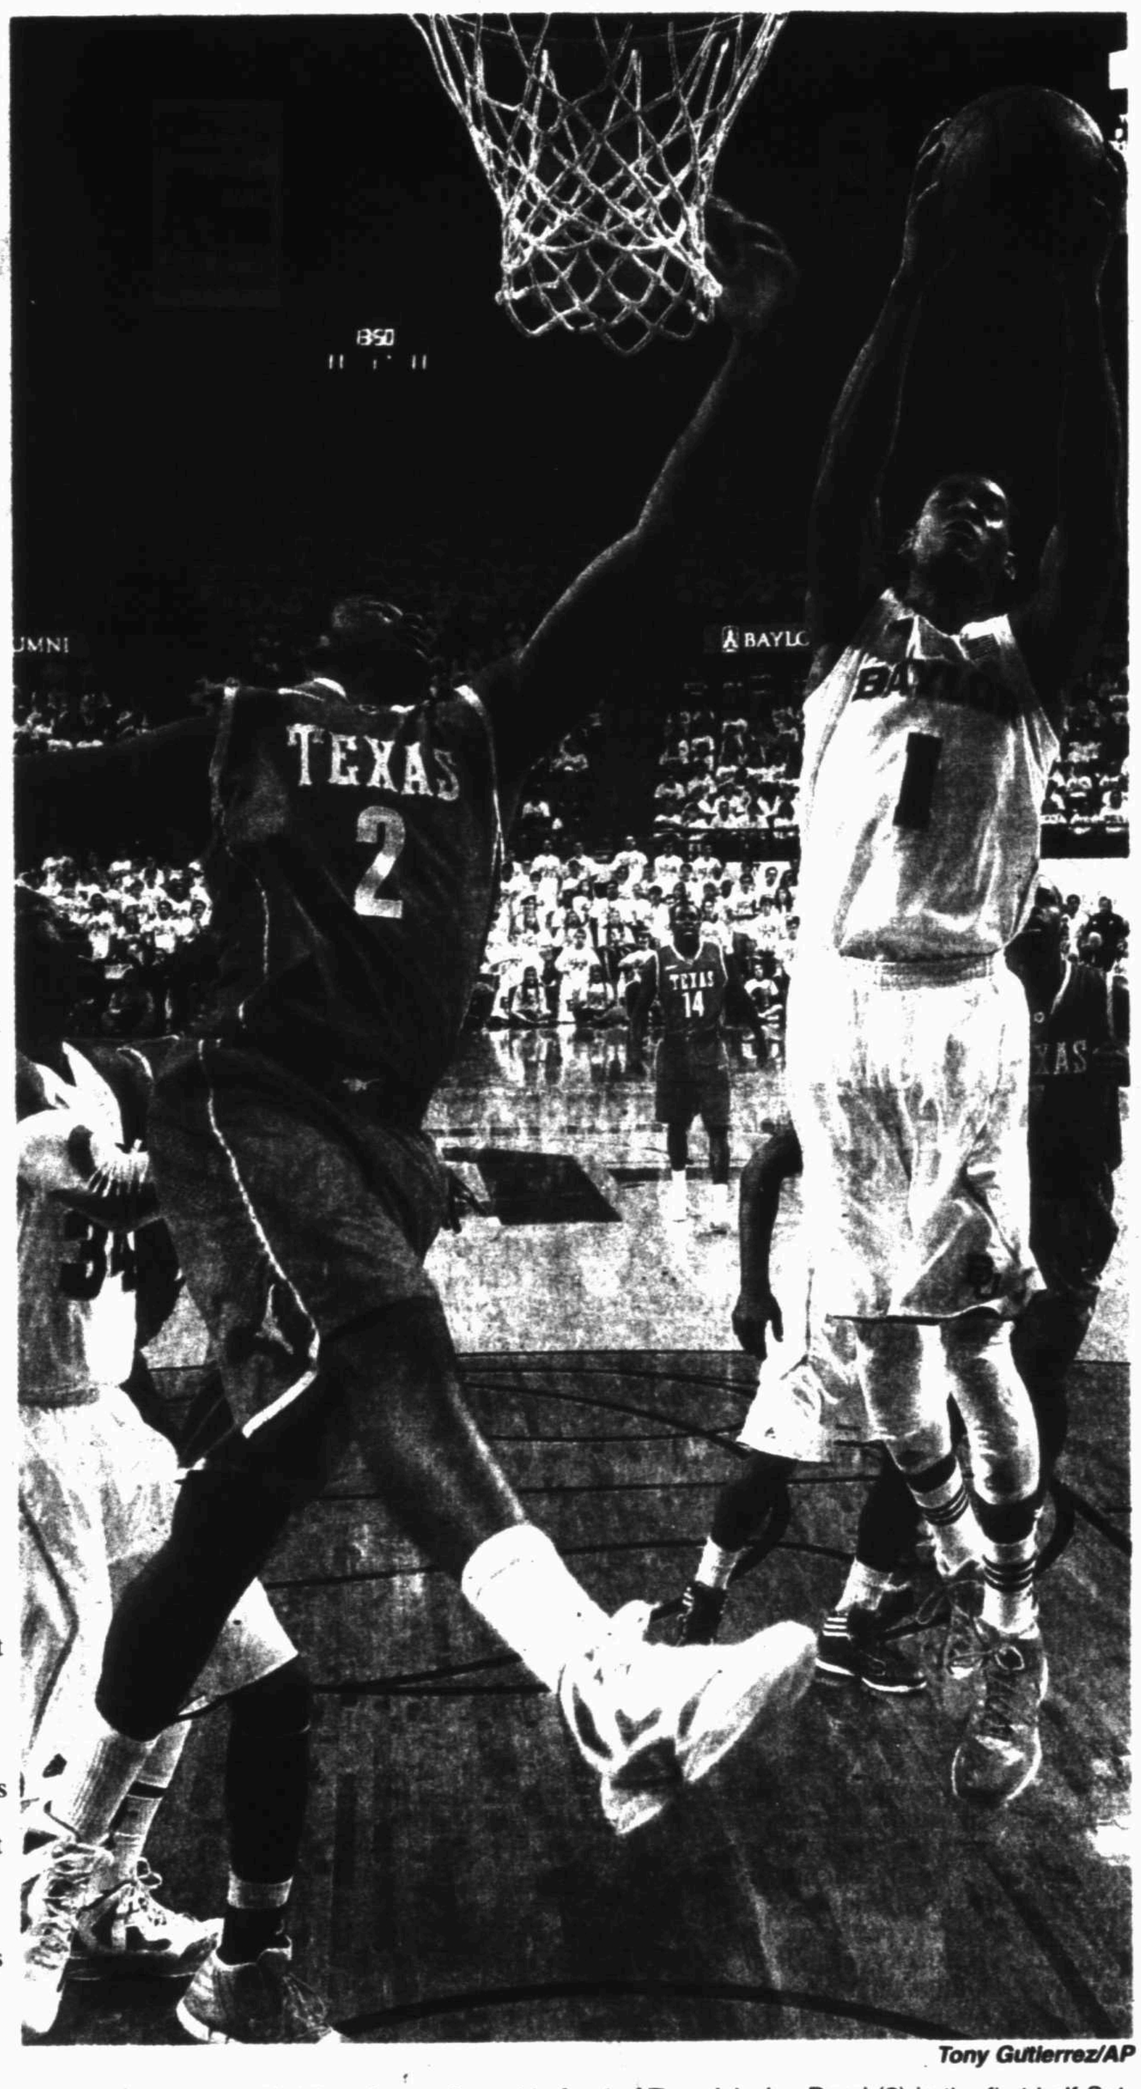

"If we cut down on the turnovers, then the game wouldn't have been that close," said Jones, who has 43 points and 26 rebounds the past two games.

Brown scored 20 of his 32 points in the second half for Texas (13-8, 3-5), but he missed a 3-point attempt with 10 seconds left that would have tied the game.

Texas struggled to find offense outside of Brown. The rest of the Longhorns hit only 13 of 38 shots and 10 of 18 free throws.

The Longhorns have lost four of five since starting conference play 2-1. Texas is in the midst of a six-game stretch when they play

Pro Bowl turns into numbers game

By Jaymes Song
Associated Press

KAPOLEI, Hawaii — The Pro Bowl has turned into a numbers game.

The AFC features five players who wear No. 24, including three corners, which has caused some confusion with autograph seekers and photographers leading up to today's all-star game.

The quintet of 24s include New York Jets cornerback Darrelle Revis, Denver Broncos cornerback Champ Bailey, Houston Texans cornerback Johnathan Joseph, San Diego Chargers running back Ryan Mathews and Jacksonville Jaguars special teamer Montell Owens.

They all posed for photos together after Friday's practice.

So will real No. 24 please stand up?

"They're all the real No. 24s on their own team," Mathews said. "On the Chargers, I'm the real No. 24."

Mathews wore No. 21 at Fresno State, but changed to 24 when he arrived at San Diego.

"(LaDainian Tomlinson) was No. 21, so I had to change my number," he said. "I'm sure he wouldn't have minded if I wore it, though. But that's L.T.'s number. I wanted to make my own brand."

Numbers often become a part of a player's brand or identity, especially for superstars in their respective sports. Michael Jordan is 23, even though he also wore 45. Jerry Rice's No. 80 San Francisco 49ers jersey is a classic.

Besides serving as a player's brand, numbers often carry a story behind it and can represent something they've carried since childhood, the number of a player they admired or simply a special number. Or it could mean nothing at all.

"It's my first year wearing 24 and I made it to the Pro Bowl," said Joseph, who switched from 22 when he left the Cincinnati Bengals after five seasons and joined the Texans.

"I wouldn't say it's my lucky number, but it's working for me."

Bailey, on the other hand, is making his 11th Pro Bowl and has worn 24 since joining the NFL 13 years ago. He wore No. 4 at Georgia. Bailey acknowledges having so many 24s may create some confusion with fans, but not with the coaches or players.

"We all know each other and we're all going to represent the number real well," he said.

Azarenka routs Sharapova to win Australian title

By John Pye
Associated Press

MELBOURNE, Australia — Victoria Azarenka beat Maria Sharapova 6-3, 6-0 Saturday night to win the Australian Open and take over the women's No. 1 ranking, all in her first Grand Slam final.

The 22-year-old Belarusian had her serve broken in the opening game and was down 2-0 after a nervous start before winning 12 of the next 13 games to take the match away from Sharapova, a three-time major winner and the 2008 Australian champion.

She became only the third woman to earn the No. 1 spot after winning her first Grand Slam title. Caroline Wozniacki vacated the top spot when she lost in the quarterfinals, leaving Azarenka and Sharapova to play for the title and the top ranking.

The third-seeded Azarenka set up championship point with a stunning forehand winner and sealed it when Sharapova netted a backhand.

She dropped on to her knees at the baseline with her hands over her face. She got up, held up her hands and mouthed "What happened?" before jogging up to her coach, Sam Sumyk, in the stands to celebrate.

"The best feeling, for sure," Azarenka said. "I don't know about the game. I don't know what I was doing out there.

"It's just pure joy what happened. I can't believe it's over."

At the trophy presentation, her first word was "wow." Then she started giggling. She thanked her support team, saying "You made me realize I can believe in myself and I can finally raise this trophy."

And she paid special credit to her grandmother, "the person who inspires me the most in my life."

Azarenka has been a distinctive presence at Melbourne Park as much as for her shrieks and hoots with each shot and seemingly boundless energy as for her white shorts, blue singlet and lime green head and wrist bands.

Against Sharapova, she maintained the frenetic movement that has been the hallmark of her campaign in Australia, her 25th consecutive major. She won the Sydney International title the weekend before the year's first major and is now on a 12-match winning streak, including a semifinal win against 2011 Australian Open champion Kim Clijsters. She's the first player since 2004 to win a WTA tour event the week before winning a major.

A lot of attention before the final was on the grunting of both players. In the second game, someone shouted "turn the volume down," but there was nothing after that except for a few mutterings when the shrieking got really loud.

Finishing off the match in 1 hour, 22 minutes at Rod Laver Arena seemed to silence the critics.

"She did everything better than I did today. I had a good first couple of games, and that was about it," Sharapova said. "Then she was the one that was taking the first ball and hitting it deep and aggressive. I was always the one running around like a rabbit, you know, trying to play catch-up all the time."

Sharapova also won only three games in a 2007 final loss to Serena Williams, who also conceded only

This and that as the Super Bowl madness and unnecessary hysteria officially begins on Monday:

■ As realignment approaches this week, it seems that there is a realization that no matter how hard a school district prepares for what may come, they just don't know what the University Interscholastic League folks in Austin will give them every two years.

That's the feeling among athletic directors in West Texas, but that doesn't mean that they aren't preparing for any number of scenarios. It seems that athletic directors from the cities that will be affected in Class 5A out here have had some informal discussions to talk about scheduling not only for football but other sports as well, and get a head start for what the UIL might throw at them on Thursday.

All the athletic officials in districts in Midland, Odessa, San Angelo, Abilene, Lubbock and Amarillo do feel better prepared for a large district that stretches from the Panhandle to the Concho River, but they also know they could see something they hadn't expected.

And that's what makes realignment so interesting.

■ It seems that the next generation of swimmers are making their way in the high school ranks from Midland, and a pair of freshman and younger siblings are two to keep an eye as the regional and state meets approach.

Blythe Lary, a freshman at Midland High, won both of her events at the District 3-5A meet, and is the younger sister of former MHS star Dirk Lary.

Also, Greenwood freshman Alyson Drennan won two events at the 4-4A meet in Pecos on Saturday. Drennan is the younger sister of former Greenwood swimmer and current University of Nevada swimmer Jocelin Drennan. Keep an eye on these two over the next two weeks and in future years.

■ I think officials with the Odessa Jackalopes knew they had some selling to do when they made the move from the professional Central Hockey League to the junior North American Hockey League, but I'm not sure if they knew it would be this tough.

The hard part has been getting the message out about what the organization is doing and what kind of players are playing on the ice now. It was the right move financially for the organization because the ownership group is committed to keeping hockey in the area, and I think once they get the word out that there are some good young stars playing attendance will increase.

It will take some time, but it's worked in other cities such as Amarillo and Corpus Christi, and I think it work in Odessa.

■ Congrats to The Bar owner Scott Gunn for purchasing a Tim Tebow jersey for $1,400 as part of an eBay auction done by the Pittsburgh mayor to raise money for charity. Gunn is apparently a huge Broncos fan and it shows with some of the memorabilia in The Bar, and this jersey just adds to that collection.

■ Is Tiger Woods really back? I'll tell you after the Masters.

■ Two great events are upcoming in the next two weeks in the annual West Texas Sports Banquet on Wednesday this week, and a week later on Feb. 8 the Harlem Globetrotters will be in town at Chaparral Center. The banquet will have former Major League reliever Lee Smith as the keynote speaker, and many old timers will remember that Smith actually spent some time in Midland as a minor leaguer.

As far as the Globetrotters, it's always cool to see those guys come into town.

■ Two professional all-star games are on today, what's a sports fan to do on a nice Sunday afternoon? Go golfing.

■ District 3-5A soccer starts this week with about as much uncertainty as to who will win the district titles in boys and girls as I've seen since I've been back in the Permian Basin. There is really no clear-cut boys favorite, and the girls side could be a three-horse race between Midland High, Lee and Odessa Permian.

It all starts on Tuesday, and I still say the best rivalry in District 3-5A regardless of sport is the one between Odessa High and Lee in boys soccer. Those two teams square off on Tuesday at Grande Communications Stadium.

■ And finally, I think the ethanol fumes are finally clearing out of my head.

Drennan wins both events in 4-4A meet

From staff reports

PECOS — Greenwood freshman Alyson Drennan followed in her sister's footsteps on Saturday at the District 4-4A Swimming & Diving Championships.

Drennan, the younger sister of former Greenwood star and current University of Nevada swimmer Jocelin Drennan, swept the 50-yard freestyle and the 100-yard freestyle at the meet on the way to being named the district's Female Athlete of the Meet.

Drennan won the 50 freestyle with a time of 26.13 seconds, and then took the 100 freestyle in 58.07.

Drennan will advance to the Region I-4A meet in two weeks in Andrews.

LEE WINS THINK PINK TITLE

LEANDER — Tori Rackow's goal in the 74th minute proved to be the game winner for the Lee girls soccer team in a 3-2 victory against Round Rock Stony Point in the championship of the Think Pink Tournament.

Rackow's tally in the 74th minute was off an assist from Haley Smith and broke a 2-2 tie between the two squads. The win helped improve Lee's record to 8-3. Alyssa Carr started the scoring in the 26th minute off an assist from Megan Hodges, and Serena Pinter scored the other goal on an assist from Jessi Gonzalez.

Lee began the day with a 2-0 victory against Boerne in the semifinals. Kendeal Stark scored an unassisted goal in the 11th minute, and Hodges added the game's second goal in the 21st minute off an assist from Ashley Lopez.

Kaitlin George, Gonzalez, Rackow and Smith were named to the all-tournament team.

Lee will begin District 3-5A play at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday against Odessa High at Grande Communications Stadium.

MIDLAND HIGH PLACES 2ND AT BRAZOS VALLEY

BRYAN — Midland High came up just shy of claiming the championship at the Brazos Valley Cup Championship, falling to Kingwood 1-0 in the title match Saturday.

Kingwood scored the game's only goal in the second half during the 60th minute. Kingwood attempted 28 shots in the match with MHS goalkeeper Whitney Sigler making 16 saves.

Sigler combined with Emily Spencer to record a shutout earlier in the day, during a 3-0 victory against host Bryan. Morgan Hannon scored off an assist from Madison Scribner in the 32nd minute to get MHS on the board.

Sarah Krisa made it 2-0 in the 66th minute, finishing a set-up by Baylea Builta. Krisa then found Nicole Hartzoge in the 70th minute to round out the match's scoring.

Midland High begins District 3-5A play at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday with a visit to rival Odessa Permian.

MIDLAND HIGH SPLITS IN WICHITA FALLS

WICHITA FALLS — After opening the day with a 5-2 loss to Amarillo Palo Duro in what coach Warren Cottle called "the strangest game he's ever seen," Midland High bounced back to finish the Wichita Falls Tournament with a 2-1 victory against North Dallas.

Against Palo Duro, the Bulldogs held their opponent to just six shots on goal. However, five of those attempts found the back of the net. Midland High, meanwhile, took 22 shots, but managed to score just twice.

The Bulldogs got an unassisted goal from Will Downing in the 49th minute, cutting the deficit to 3-1. Jason Carter made it a one-goal game with an unassisted score in the 68th minutes.

But Palo Duro scored again a minute later and added a fifth goal in the 76th minute.

The Bulldogs got down early against North Dallas, which scored in the 13th minute. Ethan Baltier tied the match just before halftime in the 40th minute via a free kick. Downing scored his second unassisted goal of the day, and what turned out to be the game-winner, in the 75th minute.

The Bulldogs return to action at 5:30 p.m. Tuesday in their District 3-5A opener against Odessa Permian at Ratliff Stadium.

MHS' Jones places 2nd at National Pole Vault Summit

From staff reports

RENO, Nev. — In a competition featuring more than 230 competitors, Midland High senior Chase Jones stood near the top.

Jones competed in the National Pole Vault Summit on Jan. 21, placing second in the high school division with a vault of 16 feet. Jones is currently ranked third in the state and fifth in the nation.

The Midland High senior is a two-time regional qualifier and won a District 3-5A title in pole vault last season. Jones is hoping to make his first trip to the Class 5A state meet in Austin this coming track season.

The 16-foot vault Jones posted at the Summit is 11 inches better than his personal best for last season at 15 feet, 1 inch.

JACKS

It was the second time in five games the Jacks had scored six or more goals and scoring has been something the club has struggled with this season.

"Really, our hockey isn't that bad, and we've been playing pretty good hockey," Jacks coach Paul Gillis said. "We are just offensively challenged. We get lots of chances and don't score and the other team gets an opportunity and puts it in the net and then we are behind the eight ball."

Odessa had some solid scoring chances in the first period but could never break through, but Cornellier's power-play goal midway through the second period broke the ice and then the Jacks scored three more over the next eight minutes.

Odessa added three more goals in the third period, and at least for one night could forget about their scoring woes this season.

"We were able to keep the puck out of the net at the same time (we had chances)," Gillis said. "They didn't get that first goal when we had all those chances, and that's when we get frustrated. We knew we just had go to keep pushing."

Odessa will hit the road today for a second game in three nights against South Division leaders Amarillo, who beat Odessa 3-2 on Friday night.

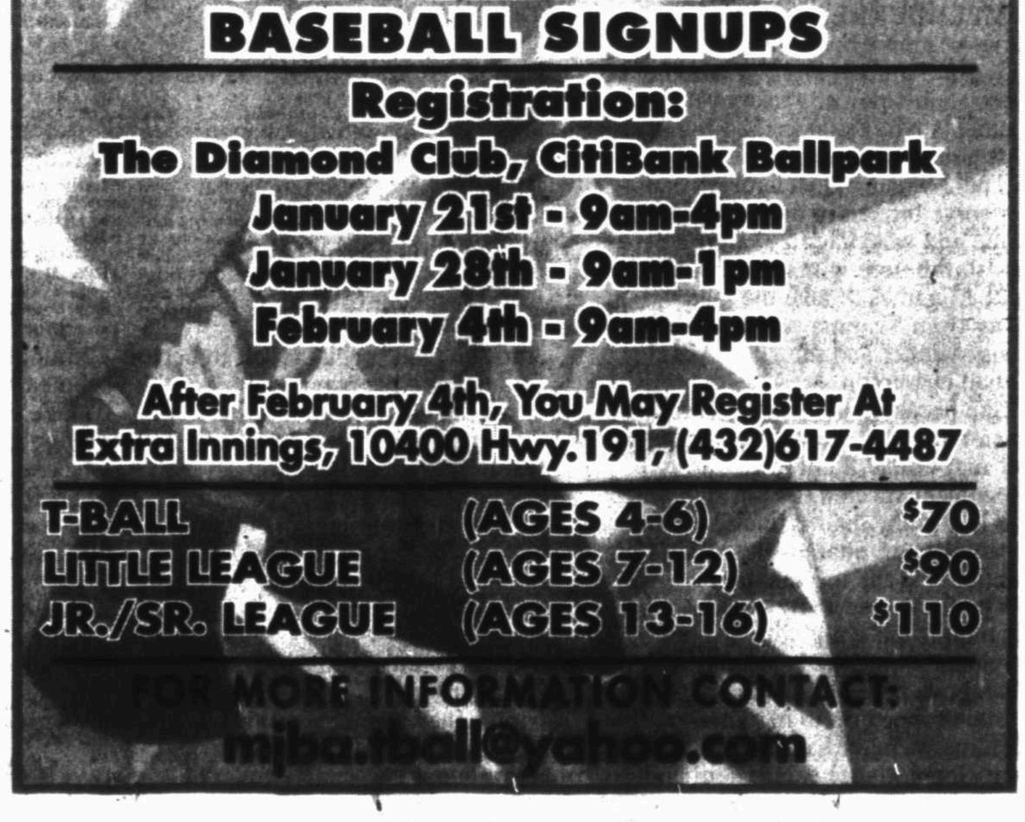

"We knew we needed the two points tonight," said Cornellier, who is from Machesney Park, Illinois. "We know we've got to make that fourth spot for the playoffs, and everyone wanted it tonight."

MC softball team splits season-opening series

From staff reports

BEEVILLE — The Midland College softball team split its season-opening doubleheader on Saturday against Coastal Bend College.

Coastal Bend took a 5-2 victory in the first game only to see the Lady Chaparrals rally for an 8-2 win in Game 2.

During Game 1, the Lady Chaps committed six errors, allowing four earned runs. The fielding issues clouded what was otherwise a solid day in the pitcher's circle for Yolanda Rios, who finished with eight strikeouts and one earned run on seven hits and no walks. Rios also had a RBI in the first inning.

"Can you tell we came out a little tense?" MC coach Tommy Ramos said. "They came out and put a lot of pressure on themselves. We made routine mistakes that cost us runs. They seemed to put their heads down after making that mistake and couldn't get over the hump."

Errors continued to plague the Lady Chaps in Game 2, but they managed to overcome their four fielding mishaps for their first win of the season. Holly Harrington picked up the win after allowing no earned runs and six hits with two strikeouts.

Gabee Losoya was the top hitter, going 2 for 4 with two RBI. Kayla Parra and Marlene Fields each had three hits in the win. Ramos was encouraged with the way the Lady Chaps rebounded from the earlier loss.

"Considering how we started out, it was nice to get the split," Ramos said. "We came out with so much anxiety, but we were able to recover the second game and put together some back-to-back hits."

FALCONS RELY ON INSIDE GAME TO TAKE DOWN HILLTOPPERS

AUSTIN — A 23-10 run in the game's final 7:30 propelled The University of Texas of the Permian Basin to a 73-67 win over St. Edward's in Heartland Conference action.

UTPB erased a 45-33 halftime deficit to earn its fourth Heartland Conference victory thanks to a combined 39-point effort from Tammy Acosta and Teisha King. Acosta put in a season-high 20 points while King scored 19.

The Falcons will remain on the road when they head to San Antonio on Thursday to face St. Mary's for the second round of Heartland Conference action.

MEN'S BASKETBALL WINS SECOND-STRAIGHT

AUSTIN — The University of Texas of the Permian Basin men's basketball team shot 54 percent from the field and rode the hot hand of Erik Martin as the Falcons took a 56-53 win over St. Edward's. The victory marks the second-straight Heartland Conference win as they improved to 8-12 overall.

Martin finished with 16 points with seven rebounds. The senior was also key down the stretch as nine of his points came in the final three minutes of the game, accounting for all of the Falcons' scoring during that stint.

UTPB is now 2-5 in Heartland Conference games, while St. Edward's fell to 9-10 overall and 1-6 in league contests. The Falcons will remain on the road as they head to San Antonio on Thursday to take on St. Mary's for the second round of conference games.

Lolo Jones wins US Open hurdles

By Rachel Cohen

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Every time Lolo Jones cried because she could barely walk, every time she dragged herself to two or three workouts a day.

"It was all worth it," the American hurdler said Saturday night after winning in her first race since spine surgery.

Jones beat a deep field in the 50-meter hurdles in the U.S. Open at Madison Square Garden on Saturday night. She finished in 6.78 seconds to hold off Britain's Tiffany Porter.

"I was such a mental mess the night before," she said. "Just thinking, 'Am I healed from surgery? Am I fit? Am I in shape?' Just to have this one under my belt and with such a tough field — it's just a sigh of relief that all that hard work paid off."

Evans unanimously outpoints Davis at UFC Chicago

Associated Press

CHICAGO — Rashad Evans unanimously outpointed fellow former Big Ten wrestler Phil Davis in a five-round light heavyweight fight at UFC Chicago on Saturday night.

Evans (22-1-1) handed a Davis (9-1) his first loss of his young career in a fight that was scored 50-45.

Evans moved into position to regain the light heavyweight title from Jon Jones. Evans, 4-0 since losing the belt to Lyoto Machida in May 2009, will face Jones — who was in attendance — On April 21 in UFC 145.

Evans, a former Michigan State wrestler, controlled the first round by catching a kick from Davis and taking him down and keeping him there to end of the round. Evans finished the second round just as he did the first, catching another kick from Davis and keeping him on the ground to the end.

Davis, the 2008 NCAA wrestling champion for Penn State, did get a takedown in the third round, but it was after Evans landed an uppercut and a combination. Evans got in a right hand on Davis as the fourth round ended and used his superior striking game to control the fifth round.

Evans knows Jones quite well — and there's no love lost between them.

He was friends and training partners with Jones before a falling out led to some bitter feelings.

The Saturday night card was broadcast on FOX.

No Sid? No problem: Plenty of NHL stars in Ottawa

By John Wawrow
Associated Press

OTTAWA — Three first overall NHL draft picks. The Sedin twins, Daniel and Henrik. And don't forget Pavel Datsyuk, the consistent Detroit Red Wings forward.

Datsyuk is so admired by his colleagues that many regard him as one of the game's best all-around players.

Add it up and there just might be enough bona fide talent attending the NHL's All-Star festivities in Ottawa to overcome the absence of Sidney Crosby and Alex Ovechkin, and capture the imaginations of the young, old and even most casual fans searching for a distraction on a light sports weekend.

"All I know is that we're missing some really good hockey players, but there's a lot of good hockey players in this league," Boston Bruins coach Claude Julien said Friday.

"Even when there's a few missing, there's always a bunch of them that can step in and do just as well. As far as who's going to emerge as a star player ... I'm not very good when it comes to guessing, so I'm certainly not going to throw out a name."

There's plenty to choose from as Team Daniel Alfredsson takes on Team Zdeno Chara in the All-Star game today.

With concerns hovering over the status of the NHL's elite — concussions have slowed Crosby; Ovechkin's slumping in Washington; so is goalie Ryan Miller in Buffalo.

And there's an aging old guard that includes Detroit's Nicklas Lidstrom and San Jose's Joe Thornton — the question is who might have a chance to grab a share of the spotlight this weekend and potentially beyond?

"For those who are really keyed on Crosby or Ovechkin, maybe it is an opportunity to see some of the other dynamic and exciting players, which the NHL has a lot of," Calgary forward Jarome Iginla said. "But yeah, I think the stage is there."

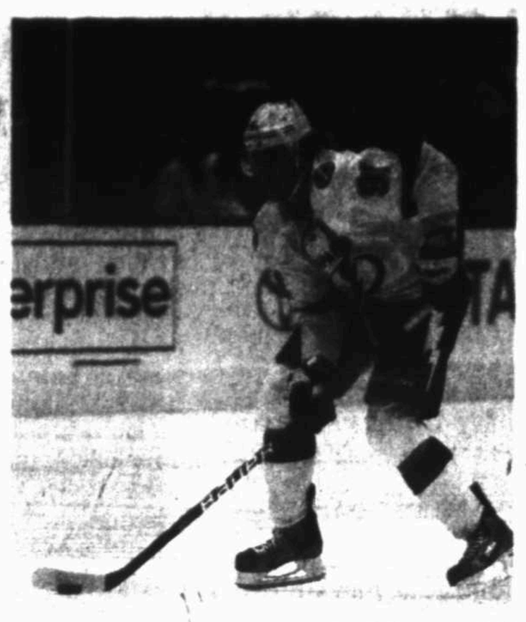

Three of the past five No. 1 draft picks are playing — Tampa Bay's Steven Stamkos, Chicago's Patrick Kane and New York Islanders' John Tavares.

Led by Pittsburgh's Evgeni Malkin, the NHL's top nine and 14 of the top 15 points leaders are here.

The Vancouver Canucks' Sedin twins are no pushovers, given that they rank 1-2 in the NHL in points — Henrik has 258 and Daniel 240 — since the start of the 2009-10 season according to STATS LLC.

And of the 42 All-Star players in attendance, the consensus top pick leans toward Datsyuk.

"His talent is probably as good as anybody's," said Chara, the Boston Bruins defenseman who selected Datsyuk first overall in the All-Star draft a day earlier.

three games in the 2009 final against Dinara Safina.

When Sharapova won the first two games, there was no indication of how lopsided the match would be. Azarenka took control after holding for the first time, breaking Sharapova at love and then holding again on a three-game roll.

Sharapova held, finishing off with an ace, to even the score at 3-3 in the first set but then didn't win another game.

Azarenka started dictating the points, coming to the net at times, hitting winners from the baseline and forcing the 24-year-old Russian to the extremes on both sides of the court. Sharapova seemed barely able to move by comparison, and had 30 unforced errors in the match.

The second set was completely lopsided and lasted only 36 minutes, with Sharapova winning only 12 points in six games.

"As in any sport, you have your good days, you have your tough days and you have days where things just don't work out," said Sharapova, who has now been on the losing end of two of the most lopsided scorelines in a final at Melbourne Park.

Azarenka had momentarily flirted with the idea of quitting the sport during a quick trip home to Minsk after a loss at Doha early last year. But she was quickly set straight by her family, including her grandmother, who had reportedly worked three jobs to the age of 71.

She couldn't get through to her family immediately "because my phone is freaking out right now," but she texted them from the court.

"I made a pretty smart decision, not walking out, right? That was pretty special," she said. "There's always ups and downs, now I'm up."

North claims Senior Bowl victory

By John Zenor
Associated Press

MOBILE, Ala. — Michigan State's Kirk Cousins and Wisconsin's Russell Wilson threw touchdown passes to lead the North to a 23-13 victory over the South in the Senior Bowl on Saturday.

Purdue kicker Carson Wiggs put it away with his third short field goal, a 28-yarder with 4:11 left in the showcase for senior NFL prospects.

Boise State's Kellen Moore led that clinching 13-play drive that consumed 8:36 with the help of a running clock.

It snuffed out a spark provided by South quarterback Nick Foles of Arizona, who started his career with Cousins at Michigan State.

Foles had gotten the South into the end zone by firing a 20-yard touchdown pass to Arizona teammate Juron Criner with 12:55 left in the game.

It was an up-and-down day for a crew of quarterbacks with sparkling college credentials, with a combined five interceptions.

Cincinnati running back Isaiah Pead had a big day for the North. He set a Senior Bowl record in the first half with 98 yards on two late punt returns, and was named the MVP. Pead also rushed for a team-high 31 yards on eight carries.

Cousins completed 5 of 11 passes for 115 yards but threw an interception. Moore, who won an college-record 50 games as a starting quarterback, was 6-of-12 passing for 50 yards, and had a 23-yarder to set up the final field goal that put the North up two scores.

Wilson completed 4 of 7 passes for 45 yards with an 8-yard touchdown pass to Marvin Jones in the second quarter. He also threw an interception.

Arkansas receiver Joe Adams, the South's Most Outstanding Player, had six catches for 116 yards after losing a fumble on the opening drive. He had a 36-yarder and a 29-yarder in the third quarter.

Criner gained 77 yards on six catches.

Linebacker Bobby Wagner of Utah State had seven tackles and an interception and was the North's Most Outstanding Player.

Wiggs made kicks of 27, 32 and 28 yards while missing a 37-yarder in the final minutes.

Foles almost got the South back in it earlier, but his fourth-down pass from the 13 was incomplete with 3:59 left in the third quarter.

BOWL

From 1C

At Friday's practice on the grounds of the players' hotel at the Ko Olina Resort, Revis played the left side while Bailey was on the right.

Revis said there are some similarities between the 24s.

"All of us are great at we do and that's play great football," he said.

While some are selective about their numbers, Owens was willing to take whatever he could get after playing his collegiate ball as No. 33 at Maine.

"I noticed all the 24s out here, but for me, it wasn't even the number I selected at Jacksonville. It was given to me," he said. "I was a guy who came out undrafted and so when you come out undrafted, you better take any number they give you."

For the NFC, there's only a pair of 24s — Arizona Cardinals safety Adrian Wilson and Seattle Seahawks running back Marshawn Lynch. But there are four 21s.

Cardinals rookie cornerback Patrick Peterson wore No. 7 at LSU, changed to the standard double-digit NFL number after being selected fifth overall in the 2011 draft.

"It (21) is definitely the hottest number out there and a lot of guys are representing it well," Peterson said. "I obviously wanted to follow that trend as well."

But it came at a cost, which Peterson wouldn't disclose. He purchased the number because another Cardinal already had it.

Safety Hamza Abdullah wore No. 21 before Peterson. Abdullah is now 23, but apparently still has his old number in his heart. He still tweets from (at)HamzaAbdullah21.

Green Bay Packers cornerback Charles Woodson is among the four 21s for the NFC.

"But there's an elder statesman 21 and that would be me," he said.

Woodson wanted to be 21 back when he first joined the Raiders, but that number was taken by Eric Allen. So he picked 24, which became one of the more popular Raiders jerseys. But he nabbed No. 21 when he joined the Packers.

"I was leaving Oakland behind and moving on to another chapter of my life so I wanted to change it and 21 was there, so I took it," he said. "(In the end), it's all about the names on the jersey. That's what counts."

Stanley builds 5-shot lead

By Doug Ferguson
Associated Press

SAN DIEGO — Hang gliders were taking off from the cliffs behind the 13th tee at Torrey Pines where Kyle Stanley was waiting to tee off on the 524-yard hole. Then, the 24-year-old launched a shot that was just as majestic.

"Wait 'til to you see where this one went," caddie Brett Waldman said.

On another clear day along the Pacific coast, it was hard not to notice.

In a familiar performance — even if the name might not be all that familiar now — Stanley overpowered the South Course on Saturday on his way to a 4-under 68 that gave him a five-shot lead going into the final round at the Farmers Insurance Open.

"For some reason, I've always been long," said Stanley, who has a slight but athletic build and generates enormous speed. "But if you take a golf course like this where you're hitting 7-irons into par 5s and short irons into long par 4s, it definitely helps."

It never hurt Tiger Woods, a seven-time winner as a pro at Torrey Pines.

Stanley chose to lay up on the par-5 18th with the large pond in front, and spun a wedge near the hole to about 4 feet. About his only regret in the third round was missing that putt. One last birdie would have broken the 54-hole tournament record that Woods set in 1998, before Rees Jones beefed up the South Course to 7,698 yards for the 2008 U.S. Open.

Stanley grew up outside Seattle when Woods ruled the sport. All through his school, he kept a poster of Woods over his bed.

"I think he's definitely influenced me, and a lot of other people, too," Stanley said.

Tiger Woods shoots 66 to share lead in Abu Dhabi

By Michael Casey
Associated Press

ABU DHABI, United Arab Emirates (AP) — Tiger Woods put himself in position to win his second straight tournament Saturday, and this one would leave little doubt about which direction his game is going.

He finally won two months ago against an 18-man field in California.

On Saturday, against the strongest field golf has seen in at least three months, Woods shot a 6-under 66 for a share of the lead with Robert Rock going into the final round of the Abu Dhabi Golf Championship.

The topic suddenly shifts from the state of his swing and his health. Woods has a 55-8 record worldwide when he has at least a share of the lead going into the final round, and a win would be the first time since August 2009 that he has won consecutive starts.

More than being atop the leaderboard, it's how Woods got there.

"It's fun when I'm able to control the golf ball like I did," Woods said.

There wasn't a lot of fist-pumping from Woods, who traded drama for consistency, racking up six birdies in a bogey-free round. It was a memorable performance by the American, mostly for his ability to hit fairways, tame the par 5s and sink clutch putts — including a 6-footer for birdie on the final hole.

"It just seemed like I didn't do a lot of things right but I didn't do a lot of things wrong today, it was just very consistent," Woods said. "You know, made a couple putts here and there. ... I stayed away from trouble and tried to keep the ball towards the fat side of some of these pins, and I think I did a pretty good job."

Woods finished at 11-under 205. Rock, at No. 117 in the world, birdied his final two holes to join Woods in the last group along with Peter Hanson, who had a 64 and was two shots behind.

Also two back at 9-under 207 were Rory McIlroy, who played with Woods for the third straight day and had a 68, keeping the No. 3 player very much in the picture.

Francesco Molinari (66) and Paul Lawrie (68) also were tied for third. George Coetzee (65), James Kingston (67), overnight leader Thorbjorn Olesen (71) and Jean-Baptiste Gonnet (69) were another shot back.

The two-month break did little to slow Woods' progress. This was the first time in 20 months — dating to The Players Championship in 2010 — that he broke par in the opening three rounds of any tournament. It was his lowest score since a 66 in the second round of the Masters last year, and his first time atop the leaderboard in a full-field event since he won the Australian Masters in November 2009.

Woods was two shots back after the second round, but started climbing up the leaderboard Saturday with an opening birdie, followed by another on No. 7. He stepped up his game on the back nine and grabbed a share of the lead after he just missed an eagle putt on 10 and settled for a birdie. He briefly took the outright lead with a birdie on 14.

The crowd of several hundred cheered every birdie, with some yelling "Tiger's back."

Woods refused to talk about his chances of winning, saying there were too many players within striking distance.

"There's a ton of guys with a chance to win," Woods said. "I can't go out there and shoot even par and expect to win. I've got to go out there and go get it."

76ERS 95, PISTONS 74: At Philadelphia, Andre Iguodala recorded the eighth triple-double of his career with 10 points, 10 assists and 10 rebounds, and the Philadelphia 76ers won their second straight game with a 95-74 victory over the struggling Detroit Pistons on Saturday night.

Iguodala, who turned 28 on Saturday, received a nice ovation from the crowd when he secured his triple-double with a defensive rebound with 7:34 remaining.

SUNS 86, GRIZZLIES 84: At Phoenix, Jared Dudley made two free throws with 3.3 seconds remaining to lift the Phoenix Suns to an 86-84 victory over the Memphis Grizzlies on Saturday night.

Dudley finished with a season-high 20 points, Steve Nash added 21 and Marcin Gortat finished with 13 points and 12 rebounds for the Suns, who snapped a three-game losing streak.

Rudy Gay and Marc Gasol had 18 points each and Mike Conley added 15 for the Grizzlies, who have dropped three straight after a season-best seven-game winning streak.

BUCKS 100, LAKERS 89: At Milwaukee, Drew Gooden scored 23 points and the undermanned Milwaukee Bucks made sure the Lakers' road struggles continued, beating Los Angeles 100-89 on Saturday night.

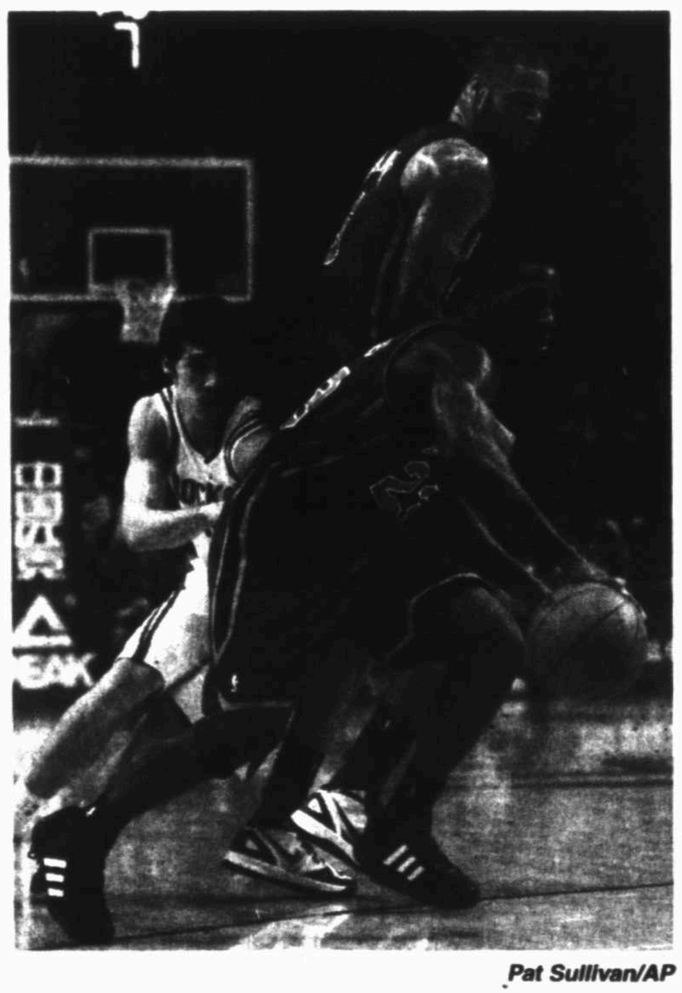

Kobe Bryant scored 27 for the Lakers, who are 1-7 on the road this season.

WIZARDS 102, BOBCATS 99: At Charlotte, N.C., JaVale McGee scored 22 points and had 10 rebounds as the Washington Wizards defeated the Charlotte Bobcats for the second time in a week, 102-99 on Saturday night.

The matchup between two teams tied for the fewest wins in the NBA came down to the final shot, but Matt Carroll's 3-point attempt at the buzzer fell short.

McGee had a chance to seal the game with less than 6 seconds to go, but missed two foul shots. But that was about all McGee didn't do right, as shot 9 of 14 from the field. Like many others this season, McGee exposed Charlotte's poor interior defense, using an effective hook shot in the lane.

John Wall added 13 points and 10 assists for the Wizards (4-16).

five ranked opponents. Things don't get any easier for Texas as it hosts No. 2 Missouri on Monday night.

"I think the biggest thing is consistency with everybody," coach Rick Barnes said. "We need guys that we know we're going to get something from every single night. We still don't have that consistently."

Quincy Miller had 18 points for the Bears, who are 6-2 in conference play for the first time since 1986-87. Brady Heslip added 11 points, and Quincy Acy had 10 points and 10 rebounds.

Brown, leading the Big 12 with 19 points per game, was 11 of 22 from the field and broke out of an offensive slump. The junior guard had made only 18 of 70 shots in his last three games.

Brown scored six points during a 14-2 run that tied the game at 54. He then connected on a 3-pointer that tied it at 66 with 2:56 left.

"J'Covan was special," Drew said. "We didn't have an answer for him."

Jackson had five turnovers, but he made up for those miscues with his 3-pointer that gave Baylor a 69-66 lead.

"That's not really like Pierre," Heslip said of the turnovers. "He does a great job for us, so he's allowed to do that."

Jones and Acy each hit a pair of free throws to stretch the lead to 73-66 before Texas made one last surge to pull to 74-71. Brown couldn't complete the rally as his 3-point attempt in the final seconds was well off.

"I didn't help my team get a win," Brown said. "I just didn't come through for them. Those shots I made, they don't even matter because we didn't win."

Miller scored 13 points in the first half, and Jones had 12 points and 10 rebounds to give Baylor a 38-29 halftime lead.

Jonathan Holmes scored to give the Longhorns a 19-18 edge with 9:14 left in the first half.

Texas, which came into the game shooting just 40 percent in conference games, missed six of its first seven shots. The Bears capitalized as they went on a 15-5 run over the next 5:29 to take the lead for good.

Johnny O'Bryant III had 12 points and nine rebounds for LSU (12-9, 2-5), which has lost four of five.

Jones had the last four points of the first half, then helped Kentucky break the game open by scoring the first nine of the second half on two dunks, a fast-break layup and another basket inside as he was fouled. His last of 13 straight points in the game gave Kentucky a 44-26 lead.

NO. 3 SYRACUSE 63, WEST VIRGINIA 61: At Syracuse, N .Y., Brandon Triche had 18 points, including a pair of free throws that broke the final tie with 88 seconds left, and Syracuse beat West Virginia.

Texas Tech falls short against Missouri

Associated Press

COLUMBIA, Mo. — Jordan Tolbert's absence in the second half because of foul trouble was costly for Texas Tech.

Tolbert, the Big 12 freshmen leader in rebounds per game (6.4) and field goal shooting (56.6 percent), could only watch as his Red Raiders struggled to come back from a seven-point halftime deficit and lose 63-50 to Missouri.

"Obviously it was too difficult because we didn't get it done," Texas Tech coach Billy Gillispie said.

Tolbert tied his season low of four points on 2-of-4 shooting and four rebounds after getting called for his third and fourth fouls early in the second half. He also committed eight turnovers in his 16 minutes.

"He had a tough day today," Gillispie said. "He got pushed around a little bit and didn't respond nearly as well as he needs to. But that's part of the education process for a freshman, especially when we don't have a whole lot other than him to help him inside."

Jaye Crockett scored 11 points and grabbed 11 rebounds and Ty Nurse added 13 points, but Texas Tech (7-13, 0-8 Big 12) has lost its first eight conference games for the first time since the 1999-2000 season.

"I've always been proud of our guys, I love our guys," Gillispie said. "But I hate losing. We have to do something about getting beat all the time."

Kim English scored 19 points in the first half and Marcus Denmon had 13 after the break to help Missouri (19-2, 6-2) avoid a second straight upset.

Clark Lammert's 3-pointer off the glass at the shot clock buzzer with 2:36 to go cut a 15-point Texas Tech deficit to seven.

But the Tigers answered with six straight points to finish the game, including Ricardo Ratliffe's dunk in transition with a minute left after English blocked a shot and then saved the ball from going out of bounds.

English finished with 22 points, Denmon with 19 despite 4-for-15 shooting and Phil Pressey matched his career best with 12 assists.

Missouri remained unbeaten at home, three days after an upset at Oklahoma State. The Tigers' first 11 home victories had been by an average of 27 points.

"Their game plan was to take our paint production out and they did a nice job of that," Missouri coach Frank Haith. "It was tough getting the ball inside to Ricardo but I'm proud of our guys adjusting, not getting frustrated. We had to be patient on both ends of the floor."

English and Pressey had impressive totals at the half — English with four 3-pointers and 19 points and Pressey a heavy contributor without taking a shot, racking up seven assists and three steals.

English hit a pair of 3s to fuel a 10-0 opening run, but Missouri missed nine of its next 11 shots as Texas Tech rallied to tie it at 14. English scored nine points in the final 6 minutes, helping build an 11-point cushion before the Red Raiders closed the gap to seven at the break.

Tolbert picked up his third and fourth fouls in the first 1:39 of the second half, the latter a flagrant foul with Denmon hitting a pair from the free throw line to put Missouri up 35-24.

"We needed him out there," Crockett said. "I was talking to him and telling him, 'be smart, be smart.' But you also have to be aggressive. So that's kind of difficult, trying to be aggressive and staying out of foul trouble."

Heralded national football recruit Dorial Green-Beckham got a huge ovation when he arrived courtside just before game time, escorted by Missouri assistant coach Andy Hill. Fans later chanted "MIZ-DGB!" and Green-Beckham, a wide receiver from Springfield, watched the game from behind the Missouri bench.

The wooing continued when most of the football team was introduced during a break in the first half along with a recitation of the school's accomplishments under coach Gary Pinkel. Green-Beckham got a standing ovation on his way off the court, stopping to pose for a picture with Truman the Tiger, the school mascot.

LUBBOCK — Jordan Barncastle scored 19 points, including a key three-point play with 24 seconds left, to help No. 21 Texas Tech end a five-game skid with a 75-71 victory over Texas on Saturday.

Texas led for just the second time in the game after free throws by Ashleigh Fontenette made it 71-70 with 48 seconds to play. Barncastle's offensive rebound and put back moments later gave the Lady Raiders the lead again, and a corner three by Texas' Chassidy Fussell bounced off the side of the backboard with 9 seconds left.

Texas Tech (15-5, 3-5 Big 12 Conference) avoided a six-game conference losing streak for the third consecutive year. The Lady Raiders were ranked as high as No. 10 after a 14-0 start.

Fussell scored 19 for Texas (13-7, 3-5).

2012 REPORTER-TELEGRAM H.S. GOLF & TENNIS PREVIEW

BY LEN HAYWARD, SPORTS EDITOR

GOLF

LEE

2011 Results: 5th in District 3-5A

What to expect in 2012: It's been a rough couple of years for the Rebels, and this spring will be one more where Lee will have some work to do to get into the regional tournament. Rebel coach Blain Huddleston admitted that this year is going to be a rebuilding year as the lineup could have as few as one senior in it. But Huddleston said that he was encouraged to see 16 players come out for the team, and could help with depth as the season progresses. "They've got to learn how to compete," Huddleston said. "They have to learn to put the bad shots behind them, and go on." ... Huddleston said his top five could be fluid through the early part of the year, as move-in Cade Castro (Jr.), Sanchez (Jr.) and Nathan Salois (Sr.) could also contribute this year.

MIDLAND HIGH

2011 Results: 3rd in District 3-5A

What to expect in 2012: Bulldog coach Billy Mitchell said this could probably be the deepest team he's had since he's been heading up the Midland High program. Smith, Lester and Lyssy all played on the Bulldogs' top team last year during the 3-5A Golf Tour, and will be counted on again this season. Mitchell added that Ben Taylor (Sr.), Zarek Crowder (Jr.), Chris Terebessy (Jr.), Jake Gilmore (Jr.), Lucas McCubbin (Soph.) and Kyle Logan (Soph.) will also play roles for the Bulldogs this spring. Mitchell said he doesn't expect to make many changes to the lineup during the invitational portion of the schedule, but he said if he does have to make changes he's confident any of the players can fill in. "This group of kids I have, you have to beat them off the golf course," Mitchell said. "They are there until dark everyday. I've gotten a tremendous amount of commitment out of them." ... Mitchell said that senior Michael Board will not play this as he chose to concentrate on baseball, but has suffered a back injury. Board was 10th in the 3-5A tournament in 2011.

GREENWOOD

2011 Results: 6th in District 4-3A

What to expect in 2012: Adams is a four-year letterwinner for a team that struggled in the 4-3A tournament a year ago, but coach Kyle Kitto said the squad has expectations of bettering that finish this year. Martin will concentrate on golf this year as he has spent the past few years splitting time between track and golf. Kitto said that Matt Rose (Soph.) and Tanner Young (Sr.) could also contribute to the team this season. "I feel like we are young, but I think we will be able to compete a little bit, I hope," Kitto said. "We are in that hard district, and hopefully we will compete better this year. We are just going to have to consistently shoot low scores and not blow up."

MIDLAND CHRISTIAN

2011 Results: 5th in TAPPS 4A state tournament

What to expect in 2012: The Mustangs returned to the state tournament for the first time since 2005 last year, and took fifth but have higher goals in mind this year. Midland Christian will not be lacking in experience as three of the five members of that state tournament qualifying team return this season, which includes Rice, Hibler and Blackwood. Josh Hollar will compete in the top five this season, while the fifth spot is still up for grabs as freshman Reagan Brown could also play into that spot. Coach Kevin Wallum said the squad has the potential to win state, but will have to play more consistent on better courses at regional and state. "We had some good stretches, but at the end of the year we didn't clutch up," Wallum said. "We have to be able to face adversity and pressure a little bit better."

LEE JUNIOR LIBBY THOMAS

TRINITY

2011 Results: Won TCAF Division I title

What to expect in 2012: The Chargers enter their final season in TCAF with hopes of winning another TCAF title, but also coming up with a victory, or two, in the invitationals they will play against public schools this spring. Morrow returns as one of the top players in the area, and coach Chris Jauz said he is expecting him to take home a few medalist titles this season. "I think Trace has the ability to win a couple of tournaments," Jauz said. ... Jauz said they will be short a few players for the first tournament in Fort Stockton, but are expecting as many as seven players to join the team after basketball season, including Gage Morrow (Fresh.), Alex Beal (Sr.), Phillip Beal (Fresh.), Will Farish (Fresh.), Brantley Harrington (Jr.), Brett Womack (Jr.) and Brandon Lee (Jr.).

MIDLAND CLASSICAL ACADEMY

2011 Results: 5th in TAPPS 3A North Region

What to expect in 2012: The Knights return nearly everyone from a team that missed out on the state tournament in 2011. Snell, who finished 11th at the regional tournament last year, will help anchor a squad with expectations of playing in Waco in late April at the state tournament. Hyden is the other senior on the squad, as Haest will return to the team and play after basketball season, while Daniel Snell (Soph.) and Timothy Snell (Freshman) will also contribute this season.

GIRLS

LEE

2011 Results: 7th in District 3-5A

What to expect in 2012: The Lady Rebels head into this season looking for improvement on last year's seventh-place finish. To do that, Lee will have to have Thomas continue to be consistent but also coach Blain Huddleston said the team will have some individual goals to meet and see what happens from there. "We have some individual goals for a couple of my top five, and we are going to try and focus on those individual goals," Huddleston said. "If anything happens for the team, that's just a little bit extra." ... Thomas returns this year after falling out of the top 10 on the final day of the Region I-5A tournament, but has expectations of playing in Austin in early May this spring. "Her attitude is a lot better as far as she knows what it's going to take," Huddleston said. "She has played in quite a few tournaments this summer, and is noticing that the college coaches are actually watching her makes a big difference."

MIDLAND HIGH

Players to watch: Rachel Eyler, Sr.; Madeline Coffman, Sr.

2011 Results: 4th place in District 3-5A

What to expect in 2012: Coffman and Eyler are the lone returners off a Bulldog team that finished fourth in district, and coach Rick Sample said he will need the three invitational tournaments to determine a lineup for district. "This is kind of a rebuilding year," Sample said. "These tournaments coming up will determine how we will place everybody. We are going to be competitive but I don't have any superstars. But they are very good players." ... Sample said he will have a mixture of juniors, sophomores and freshmen that could be part of the top five by the time district starts in late March.

MIDLAND CHRISTIAN

2011 Results: 3rd in TAPPS 4A state tournament

What to expect in 2012: The Lady Mustangs have plenty of experience returning from last year's squad that took third at the state tournament. Cheatham finished seventh in the state tournament, while Warpula was ninth and Lewis won a one-hole playoff for 10th. The addition of Curnutte, a successful junior player and defending Midland Women's City champion, has coach Kevin Wallum thinking this team could bring home some hardware in April. "Consistency is going to be the big deal," Wallum said. "We have to peak at the right time. If you add Christian into the mix, it's really going to drop the scores down." ... Curnutte brings plenty of success with her into her first high school season, and Wallum said he expects her to have similar success wearing Mustang blue and red. "The thing with Christian is that she has a quiet hunger to win," Wallum said. "If she doesn't win it kind of ticks her off really, and then she just works harder than anybody."

MIDLAND CLASSICAL ACADEMY

Players to watch: Anna Bunsen, Sr.; Avary Hyden, Jr.

2011 Results: 6th in TAPPS 3A state tournament

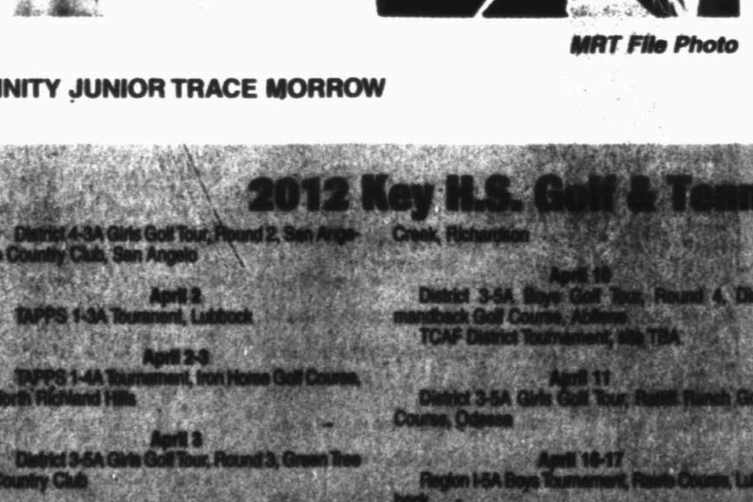

What to expect in 2012: The Lady Knights had a team a year ago where many of them were playing competitive golf for the first time, and qualified for the state tournament. Coach Stephen Johns said that experience proved valuable for the team heading into this season. "Just to be able to go and see the pressure involved, and how it works was good," Johns said. ... Along with Bunsen and Hyden returning, Angela Johns (Soph.), Brianna Rico (Soph.) and Madison Sheets (Freshman) all could contribute this season.

GREENWOOD

Players to watch: Haley Kemp, Jr.; Elyssa Selinger, Soph.

2011 Results: 7th in District 4-3A

What to expect in 2012: The Rangers will be in a rebuilding mode this year as there will be no seniors on the squad and coach Sheila Smith that as many as two freshmen could be playing of the six that will go out for the team. "We are just going to try to build a program," Smith said. "We want to build some interest up and build some confidence up, and teach them how to play."

LEE

Boys Singles: Stephen Mangum, Jr.; Natey Webb, Jr.

Boys Doubles: Joe Simmons, Jr.-Pete Hulder, Jr.; Mason Wuthrich, Sr.-Chase Lynch, Jr.

Mixed Doubles: Paxton Albert, Sr.-Hope Williams, Soph.; Michael Sherlick, Jr.-Lilly Heu, Soph.

Girls Singles: Jennifer Gerstner, Soph.; Kaitlin Kiker, Fresh.

What to expect in 2012: For the first time since Everett took over Lee's program, he comes in feeling good about the depth that this year's team has. Everett said he doesn't expect to do much changing in his lineup during the spring invitational season, but said he could do some tweaking. He added that there will still be some competition for spots, and if an injury or something else occurs he said he feels confident that someone will fill in. "The difference between our No. 2 and 3 spots are pretty close," Everett said. "Everything is based on not so much the challenge matches within the team, but tournament performance. We have a lot of wiggle room between now and April." ... Everett said he expects Mangum to compete for a regional tournament berth along with the mixed doubles team of Albert and Williams.

MIDLAND HIGH

Boys Singles: Frankie Sanchez, Sr.; Tyler Gilland, Jr.; Sam Ross, Soph.

Boys Doubles: Jacob Stump, Jr.-Michael Hopkins, Jr.; Garrett Wilson, Sr.-Cole Van Cleave, Sr.; Chris Lopez, Jr.-Phillip Koonce, Jr.

Girls Doubles: K.K. Hanson, Soph.-Caroline Smith, Soph.; Carolina Murillo, Jr.-Adriana Garcia, Fresh.

What to expect in 2012: Much like his counterpart at Lee, Midland High coach Alan Biel said the squad's depth will be a big key for the team this season. He said he still has some work to do with his lineup before district in early April, but said no matter who plays he is confident they will play well. "Our depth is fantastic," Biel said. "Our tournaments happen so quickly, and there is not as much time to change things once the tournament schedule starts." ... The Bulldogs will be young all over the lineup as there are only three seniors listed by Biel in early-season lineups. The rest of the lineup is filled with juniors, sophomores and even a freshman.

GREENWOOD

Players to watch: Brandon Elliott, Soph.; Kelci White, Jr.

What to expect in 2012: The Rangers will have a familiar face patrolling the courts as coach this year as former Midland High mentor Tom Helting returns to the coaching ranks at Greenwood. Helting left the MHS program two years ago to pursue an administration job at the school. ... Helting said that as far as a lineup goes he is not quite sure what one will look like until after some early season tournaments. He said that Elliott has the potential to play in the regional tournament, and that he had good numbers with 15 total players coming out for the team. "My expectations are just that they learn a little bit more about tennis, and be able to compete within the district," Helting said. "We are going to take things one match at a time."

Players to watch: Austin Rohwer, Sr.; Garrett Nelson, Sr.; Johnathan Dorman, Jr.; Jules Fletcher, Sr.; Kalinda Wight, Jr.-Katie Vaughn, Jr.

What to expect in 2012: Mustangs coach Jon Lanier said both the boys and girls teams have a chance at being successful this spring in TAPPS play, but said the lineups are still being worked out. Rohwer qualified for state a year ago in boys doubles, while Nelson went to state in singles along with Dorman. Meanwhile, Fletcher returns after making the quarterfinals of the state tournament in girls singles. But Lanier said other than Fletcher, he's not sure where Rohwer, Nelson or Dorman may play this year. Both Wight and Vaughn return after qualifying for the state tournament in girls doubles. ... Other players expected to make an impact this year include Zane Nelson (Soph.), Austin Hedrick (Jr.), Matthew Figel (Fresh.), Mackenzie Stubbs (Fresh.), Natalie Keesee (Soph.), Bailey Warpula (Fresh.) and Madysen Helm (Fresh.).

Players to watch: James Taylor, Sr.; Daniel Shelburne, Sr.

What to expect in 2012: Knights coach Craig Taylor said this is the first year where they have the majority of players focusing on tennis, and not playing other sports. That could be a help during the early part of the season and in preparation for the TAPPS 1-3A tournament in April. James Taylor returns for his senior season after a making state in boys singles in 2011 and Daniel Shelburne also made the state tournament in boys singles. Coach Taylor said that Duncan Richter (Jr.), Cade Carrigan (Jr.), Michael Bunsen (Soph.) and Patton Small (Jr.) will all be in the boys doubles mix this season but not sure on their combination yet. ... On the girls side, coach Taylor said Sumner Sparks (Soph.) and Mackenzie Griffin (Soph.) will lead a young girls team. "The boys team is going to be very strong, while the girls are kind of in another building year," Craig Taylor said. "The boys will carry us."

Players to watch: Veena Agusala, Fresh.; Adam Ball, Soph.; Mallory Hightower, Jr.

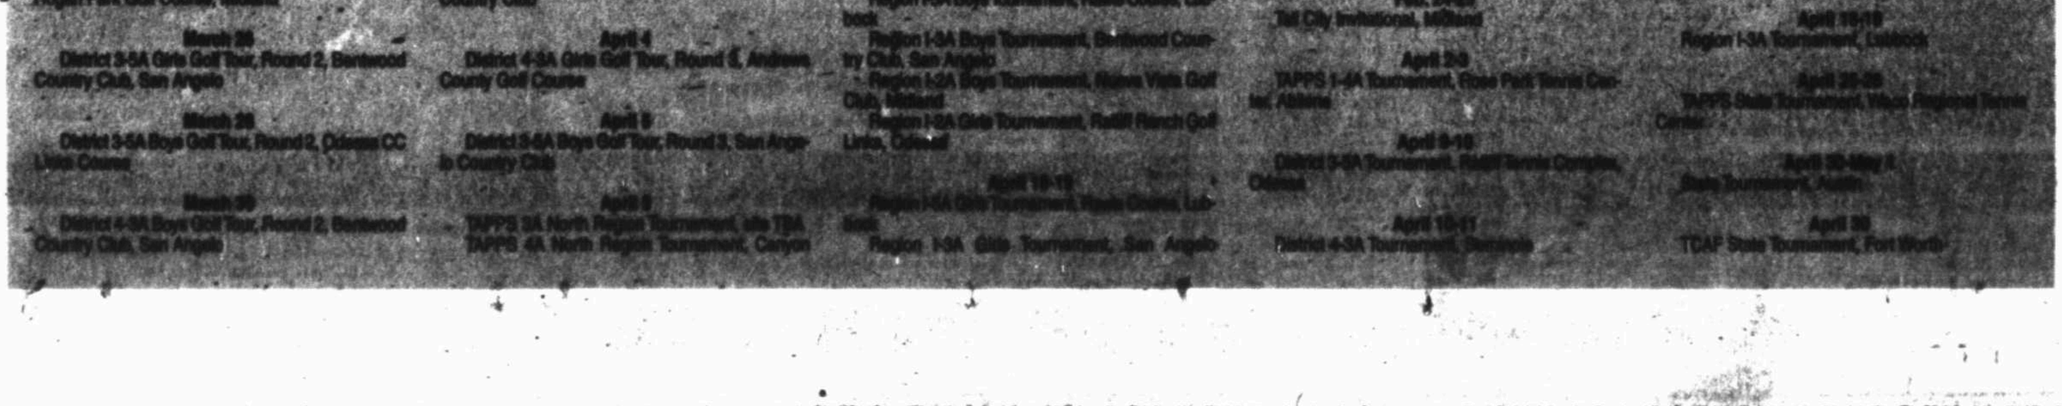

What to expect in 2012: Trinity will head into its final season in TCAF looking to win a district title and head back to state with a team that suffered some significant losses from last year's squad. There are no seniors on this year's squad as it is filled with sophomores and freshmen. "The top players from last year have graduated, so the dynamics have shifted a bit," said Trinity tennis coach Janneke Garos. "I am looking forward to seeing all the players grow and improve during the season." ... Garos said that Agusala has some high expectations as a freshman, as both Ball and Hightower return off last year's squad. The two teamed up in mixed doubles in 2011. ... Other players expected to make contributions this season include Chad Carr (Jr.), Ryan Carr (Fresh.), Sam Clement (Jr.), Christopher Cooper (Soph.), Madeline Fryt (Soph.), Mariah Long (Fresh.), Zach Lyon (Soph.), Avantika Mallik (Fresh.), Raquelle Reeves (Fresh.), Miriam Shayeb (Fresh.), Sally Anne St. Jacque (Fresh.), Adam Syed (Jr.) and Pearce Wray (Fresh.).

JOB WEEK

BE THE EARLY BIRD

By EPHRAIM TUCHO
CTW Features

For some workers, the biggest challenge of the day is simply getting to the daily grind on time.

Some 16 percent of workers admit to being late at least once a week and 27 percent say they are late at least once in a month, according to a poll of more than 7,000 employees by Careerbuilder.com.

Arriving late to work consistently can be career limiting. Of 3,000 employers polled in the Careerbuilder survey, one-third said they have fired employees for not arriving on time.

People find it hard to make it out of the house on time when they do not enjoy their jobs, points out Denise Landers, CEO of Key Organization Systems, a Houston time management and productivity consultancy.

Beyond lack of enthusiasm for a particular job or workplace, procrastination and lack of preparation are the downfall of the chronically tardy. "People often underestimate how long it takes to get something done," Landers says.

Follow her quick tips and put yourself on timelier footing in short order:

• Lay out clothes the night before. People have problems in the morning when they try to do too much right before leaving for work. Getting themselves and their children ready earlier can make mornings much less stressful.

• Turn in earlier. Staying up too late at night can make the morning reveille more difficult.

• Avoid the temptation to procrastinate. If a lengthy to-do list comes between you and a timely departure for work, complete the most daunting or time-consuming tasks early.

• Break up big tasks into several smaller ones. The job will seem less overwhelming and you'll be less likely to take on more than you can handle.

> A deadline can help you to organize your time in the morning.

• Set a time to get tasks done. A deadline can help you to better organize your time in the morning.

• Build an extra 15 minutes into your morning routine. If planning ahead doesn't work, overestimate how long it will take you to get ready. That way you'll give yourself enough cushion to make it out on time.

With some practice, you'll not only get to work on time, your stress level will be lower when you walk in the door.

HOW SMART ARE YOU?

LANDING A JOB TAKES SOCIAL SKILLS, NOT JUST BRAINPOWER. HERE'S HOW TO BOOST YOUR EMOTIONAL INTELLIGENCE

By PATRICIA RIVERA | CTW Features

In a competitive market, a jobseeker's experience is just part of the hiring equation. More employers now are alert to an applicant's emotional intelligence.

Emotional intelligence involves the ability to identify, understand and manage the emotions of oneself, others and groups of people. Studies suggest that individuals with higher emotional intelligence may be more successful than people with lower emotional intelligence, even if their traditional IQs are average.

"People take their personal and social skills for granted, but they can help or hurt you," says Lisa Caldas Kappesser, a Cincinnati career coach and author of "The Smart New Way to Get Hired" (Jist Works, 2010). "The interview is all about making the connection with the interviewer and communicating your value and benefit to the employer. This requires people skills, or what I call emotional intelligence skills."

Interviewers expect applicants to be emotionally balanced. Since the interview is all about making a connection, both the interviewee and the interviewer need to be engaged in the conversation. But the applicant must be attentive to maintain that connection. Take time to listen, and let the interviewer do some of the talking. Read body language and facial expressions for signs that you are engaging your interviewer.

Self-awareness and self-management are key aspects to interviews, says Caldas Kappesser. It takes empathy – one aspect of emotional intelligence – to pick up on nonverbal cues from your interviewer and manage yourself accordingly. For example, consider the challenge of how to project confidence without giving the impression that you are cocky. Confidence reflects a sense of security about your skills and expertise. But if you start to come off as boastful in an interview, you risk appearing arrogant, and the interviewer is likely to begin disengaging with you.

"Shorten your answers if you suspect you are being too wordy or too focused on yourself," Caldas Kappesser says.

Adele B. Lynn, a consultant in Belle Vernon, Penn., and author of several books on emotional intelligence, including "The EQ Interview" (AMACOM, 2008), says it's crucial to stay positive during the job hunt and interviews. Never focus on negatives regarding your last job, company, boss or coworkers.

"Companies do not want to hire people who come across as complainers or critics. Even though you may think you have valid issues with your previous employer, the job interview is not the time or place to air them," she says.

Lynn offers other tips for expressing with emotional intelligence during interviews:

• Use strong non-verbal cues that demonstrate emotional intelligence. These include smiling, making eye contact, listening attentively and showing respect to the hiring manager.

• Use stories and data to describe yourself. Start by expressing your accomplishments in numbers and data. Then detail how you interact with others, anticipate their needs and build strong relationships with customers, peers and your boss. "You are proving your worth with the numbers and data, but you are enabling the interviewer to see that you value and can work with and serve others," she says.

• Be cautious of how you describe situations that didn't go well. Take ownership for the lessons you learned from the experience. Then describe in detail how you responded, what you learned and what you have done differently since. We all make mistakes. Learning from them takes courage.

• Avoid the seven common reflection errors. "More than likely, if you make one of these errors in your interview, you will not be hired. These include, Lynn says, blaming, justifying and rationalizing, psychoanalyzing, playing the victim, beating yourself up, getting angry or focusing only on your intentions and not the results of your behavior.

• Keep the doors open. If you encounter rejection, be gracious. Express thanks for the opportunity. Other opportunities may arise that better suit your skills and experience. Begin to prepare yourself for a brighter future success by remaining positive and hopeful.

TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN

"Call the post office! Call the newspaper!"

To make my point in job counseling sessions years back, I suggested extreme measures that my charges should use to get the name and title of a hiring authority. Using anything less than a person's name on a cover letter was a no-no.

Today, I would not turn jobseekers into sleuths just to get a name to use on a cover letter. Most companies do not list a contact person in job ads for a reason. They don't want the individual to be inundated with email or snail mail.

Not offering a specific contact name is no longer a test of an applicant's resourcefulness.

While a company may not look down on letters that arrive with a generic salution – To Whom It May Concern – it is still best to use a person's name if possible. Call the company and ask, for example, "Who is the manager of the accounting department?"

A new approach is to omit the salutation entirely and jump right in with the first paragraph.

Of course, there's the old-school generic salutation. Avoid using "Dear Sir" or "Gentlemen," assuming that the hiring authority must be male.

Acceptable generic salutations include:

• Dear Hiring Manager
• To Whom It May Concern
• Dear Human Resource Manager
• Dear Sir or Madam

– Bob Lankard

3909 Baybrook in Mockinbird Heights

Want a "new" house but do not want to go through the building process? Here is the house for you! 3909 Baybrook, built in 1992, has been meticulously cared for both inside and out. With neutral brick and cream trim, it is surrounded by beautiful landscaping. It has 4,306 square feet (MCAD) and features four bedrooms, 4 ½ bathrooms, two half baths, two dining areas, three living areas, two fireplaces, a basement and a three car garage. It is located in the Santa Rita Elementary, Goddard Jr. High and Midland High School districts.

Open the front door to wood floors, tall ceilings, Plantation shutters, an open floor plan and crown moulding that outlines the ceilings. To the left of the entry is a large dining room with a bronze chandelier ready to light up your next dinner party. Ahead of the entry is the formal living area with a fireplace where you can light the gas logs for a warm crackling fire. Windows look out to the screened porch where there is ample room for tables and chairs.

Located past the dining area, the kitchen has been recently updated with granite countertops, walls of antique stained cabinets, stainless appliances, a tile floor and an island that includes drawers and more cabinets. Decorative lighting hangs over the island and bonus space over the cabinets provides areas for displaying collections. Nearby, the informal dining space is bright and light with windows looking out front and to the side yard.

The den has wood flooring, another fireplace and is the perfect place to relax with your family! A hallway here leads to a separate bedroom, complete with a full bathroom and walk-in closet. All the bedrooms to the home have ceiling fans, beautiful carpeting and walk-in closets with built-ins. Across the hall from this bedroom is the spacious laundry room with access to the covered and screened back porch. Another doorway in the hall leads to the three-car garage where there is extra space for a workbench.

To the right of the front door, you will find two large bedrooms connected by a Jack and Jill bathroom. Dual sinks, a tile floor and loads of built in cabinets make this an easy area to share. A surprise is hidden behind a door in the hall located by these bedrooms. Open it to a stairway that leads down to a finished basement, which you can turn in to a playroom or bonus den. There is a half bathroom here and a large closet for storing items.

Enjoy the sequestered master suite when you want to get away to relax! Large and roomy, you will be slipping into the bathroom to enjoy the jetted tub, a perfect place to unwind after a hard day. Dual sinks and dressing areas as well as built in cabinets for storage will keep your items organized. Closet space is not a problem when you arrange your clothes in the wrap around closet, complete with a large built in dresser and shelves.

Additional amenities to this home include: automatic sprinkler system, automatic garage door opener, two sequestered bedrooms including the master, two fireplaces, basement and built in drawers.

This beautiful like-new home is waiting for you! Listed at $585,000.

EVIDENCE OF OWNERSHIP

QUESTION: Exactly what is a deed?

ANSWER: In simplest terms, a deed is a written document that conveys title (evidence of ownership) to real estate from one person to another. You don't acquire title until you receive and accept the deed.

Every deed must have a grantor (seller) - of legal age, mentally competent, and legal owner of the property. If all three requirements are not fulfilled, the deed is worthless.

If husband and wife are to be the co-owners, the property will be conveyed to "John Doe and Mary Doe, wife." Proper wording will insure that if either spouse dies, the survivor will become the sole owner.

Buy A New Home or Sell Your Old Home First??

You find the perfect home but are unable to make an offer because you already own a less home. You worry how long it might take to find a buyer. Don't freeze in place because of the buy first or sell first decision! Find an experienced Real Estate Agent to help you evaluate your options. Go ahead and get pre-approved, get your home ready to sell and if you are opting for owning 2 homes for a while get your financial situation in order. Look into a Bridge Loan that will give you the funds to close on the new home until you can sell your current home. If you must sell before you buy then you need to get your plans in place for temporary living and storage. Evaluate your options and get moving in one direction or the other!

5 Reasons to Refinance

While not everyone can afford to refinance due to little or no equity, refinancing is still a popular option for many, as it can be a smart way to simplify and save money. Below are five reasons why you might want to consider refinancing:

1. To Get a Lower Mortgage Rate

Many lenders today are offering low rates, making a refinance a smart decision for struggling homeowners.

2. To Cash Out and Lower Debt

Several years back, a cash-out refinance was a popular way for homeowners to get their hands on some extra cash to do things like add renovations or purchase a new car. While this trend has become less popular, many are still using the cash-out refinance option to pay off their debt.

3. To Cash Out and Buy Property

Investment properties are a trend on the rise. Many homeowners are choosing to refinance their home to buy a second property to use as an investment.

4. To Convert to an ARM

Refinancing as a way to switch from an adjustable-rate mortgage to a fixed-rate can give homeowners not only a better rate, but a stable rate too. With inflation looming, having a fixed-rate loan makes many homeowners feel more comfortable.

5. To Consolidate Two Mortgages

Some homeowners want to refinance in order to combine their first mortgage with their home equity line of credit. Although home equity loan rates are often shockingly low, many people are worried about rates jumping in the future. By combining their two loans into one, they feel safer—plus paying off one loan can be more appealing than dealing with multiple credit lines.

WINDOW TO A SALE

QUESTION:

We are considering selling our home within the next two years. The existing double-hung windows need to be re-glazed and should really be replaced with energy-efficient windows. Knowing we will not be in this house long term, should we replace the windows now or let the next owner's put in what they want?

ANSWER:

The real answer has to do with other sellers. What does it take to quickly market a home in your community for a good price? Are new windows expected? Or do homes readily sell with the windows they have?

Go to local open houses and see what the potential competition is like. And speak with local brokers. You'll likely find three strategic choices:

1. Do nothing because it will not impact your sale prospects.

2. Get new windows because it will raise the value of your home, cut energy costs and make the property more competitive when you sell.

3. Offer the home for sale as-is. If it does not sell quickly then market it with a $5,000 credit (or whatever the right number is) for new windows.

Speak with local brokers for specifics.

QUESTION:

I have a 572 credit score. I have been approved for a mobile home mortgage – except for my low credit score. What can I do?

ANSWER:

Don't buy at this time. Even if you were to somehow get a loan the interest rate would be steep and a high monthly cost would not be good for your financial situation. The better alternative is to pay down bills, make sure all monthly payments are made in full and on time, do not borrow more on credit cards and build up your credit profile. You will then be able to improve your credit and thus qualify for financing at a better rate.

RENTING

GETTING DUE CREDIT

LOOKING TO BOOST YOUR CREDITWORTHINESS? THOSE MONTHLY RENT CHECKS JUST MIGHT BE THE THING TO DO IT

By MARILYN KENNEDY MELIA
CTW FEATURES

Does your landlord love you because you're always on time with the rent? Well, your good reputation may spread to others, like credit card issuers.

That's because there's a movement underway to include rental payment history in

"It's fantastic," to have rents included, says John Ulzheimer, president of consumer education for SmartCredit.com.

Many millions of young adult renters and others who don't have many credit accounts, as well as renters who've previously had financial difficulties, could boost their credit rating through on-time rent payments, Ulzheimer says.

Here, a look at who's looking at rent payments:

THE COUNT BEGINS

Experian, one of the three major credit-reporting bureaus, began reporting on 8 million renters last year through its subsidiary RentBureau.

Another major bureau, Equifax, reports that it does not collect rental data, and TransUnion, the other big bureau, says that it has rental information for tenant-screening use by landlords only.

While 8 million is a big number, it's remains only a small portion of the many millions of renters nationwide. Currently, Experian is collecting rental data only from property managers, who usually work for larger-scale apartment complexes. "We're working on a partnership that would allow individual landlords to participate as well," reports Brannan Johnston, vice president of Experian's RentBureau.

If you're not one of those 8 million, it's likely a credit report compiled by CoreLogic, a consumer information firm based in Santa Ana, Calif., will have information about when you take a lease – in addition to any subsequent eviction or collection notices – but not monthly payment data. Moreover, Fair Isaac Corp., the firm that develops FICO credit scores, is working with CoreLogic to introduce a numerical score that indicates credit worthiness using this information.

THE THIN ARE BULKING UP

It may seem that credit cards are more American than apple pie, many people have no or limited credit. Last year, Experian included only positive rental payments in its report but this year is including negative information, too. Because they added in only positives, consumers with "thin" credit – meaning two or fewer credit-related items on their records – tended to show a significant boost in their credit score, relates Johnston. For those with many credit items on reports, there was "less general score movement," he says.

LENDERS TAKE A LOOK

If renters apply for a mortgage someday, the lender will "track down your rental payments one way or another," asserts Neil Caron, vice president of Freedom Mortgage in Mount Laurel, N.J.

Usually, lenders call landlord or management companies for the information, but having a score or credit report that reflects the data will make it easier, Caron adds.

Both CoreLogic and Experian say their scores will be used by a variety of credit-extending firms, not just mortgage lenders.

WHEN IS 'LATE?'

When rent isn't paid on the defined due date, "it's legally late," says Janet Portman, an attorney and co-author of "Every Tenant's Legal Guide, 7th edition" (Nolo Publishing, 2012).

However, "some states [have laws] that give you a grace period of two to five days," she says.

When landlords report late pays, their statement is duly recorded by the bureau.

The fact that landlords can report late pays without input from a renter disturbs both Portman and Chi Chi Wu, an attorney with the National Consumer Law Center. "In a lot of jurisdictions, it is a tenant's legal right to withhold rent if something is wrong, like the hot water isn't working," Wu says.

Both CoreLogic and Experian say that consumers have the right to dispute any data they deem inaccurate in their reports. But that's a cumbersome process, and put onus on the renter, Wu notes.

POLICY

HOME IS WHERE THE VOTE IS

As we move into the election year, promoting homeownership remains a top issue among likely voters

The majority of Americans are saying, Read our lips: We want tax incentives. At least when it comes to promoting homeownership, according to a survey of 1,500 likely voters recently released on behalf of the National Association of Home Builders.

The survey shows that three-fourths of voters – both renters and homeowners – believe it's appropriate and reasonable for the federal government to provide tax incentives to promote homeownership. Along party lines, the sentiment is felt by 84 percent of Democrats and 71 percent of both Republicans and Independents.

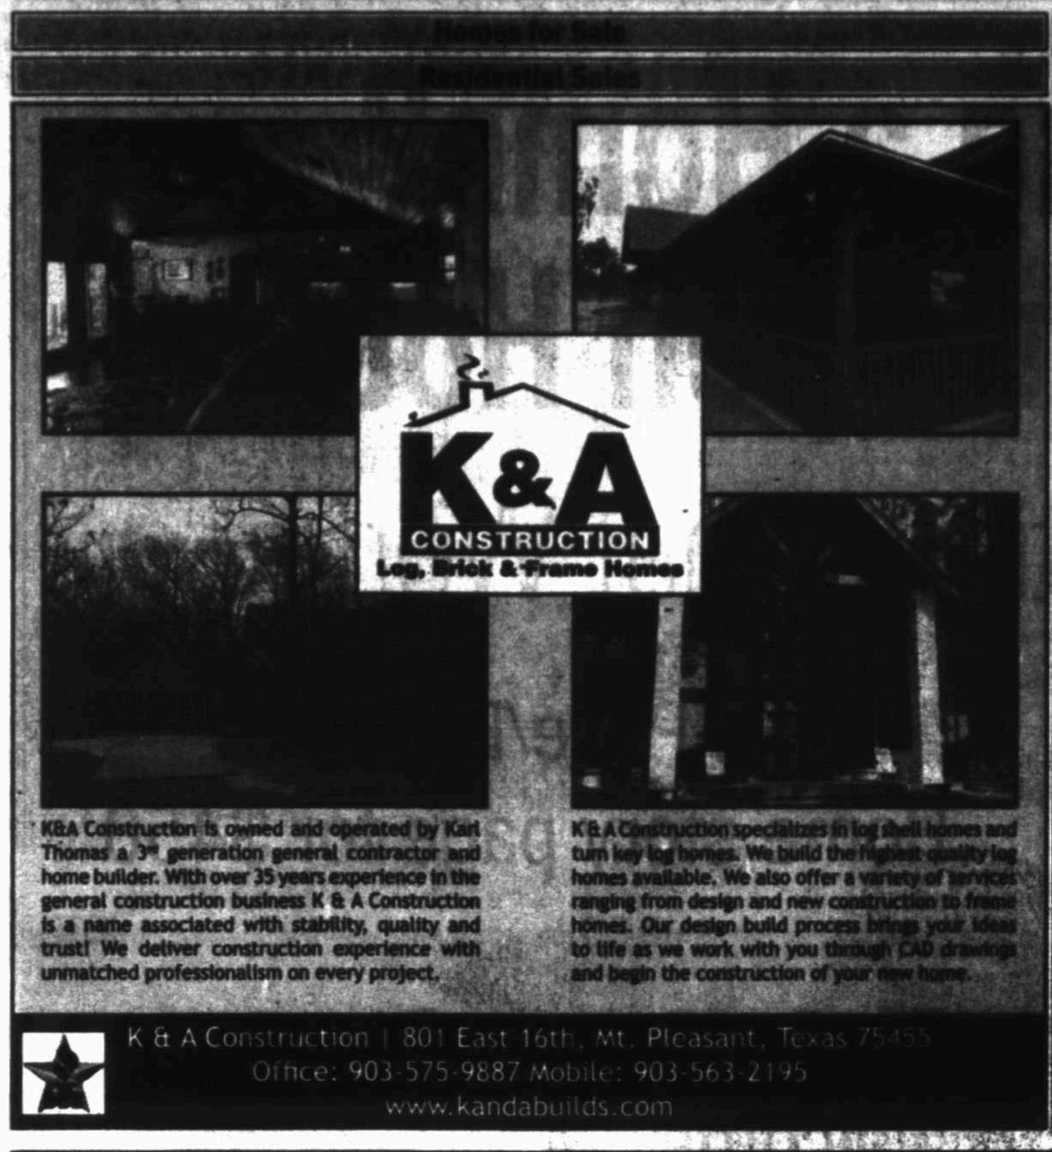

On the mortgage front, two-thirds of respondents say the federal government should help buyers afford long-term (30-year), fixed-rate loans. With that, 73 percent of respondents oppose eliminating the mortgage-interest deduction, a position held by 77 percent of Republicans and 71 percent of both Democrats and Independents. Sixty-eight percent of respondents said they would be less likely to vote for a congressional candidate who proposed abolishing the deduction.

Among the poll's other major findings:

- 96 percent of homeowners say they are happy to own their home; 84 percent of owners who are "underwater" – owing more then their home is worth – felt the same.
- 79 percent of owners would advise a family member or close friend to own; 69 percent of underwater owners would offer the same advice.
- 74 percent said that despite the ups and downs of the housing market, owning is the best investment they can make.
- Nearly seven in 10 voters who currently do not own a home said buying a home was a goal.

ASK THE EXPERTS:

What is our Local Real Estate Market doing?

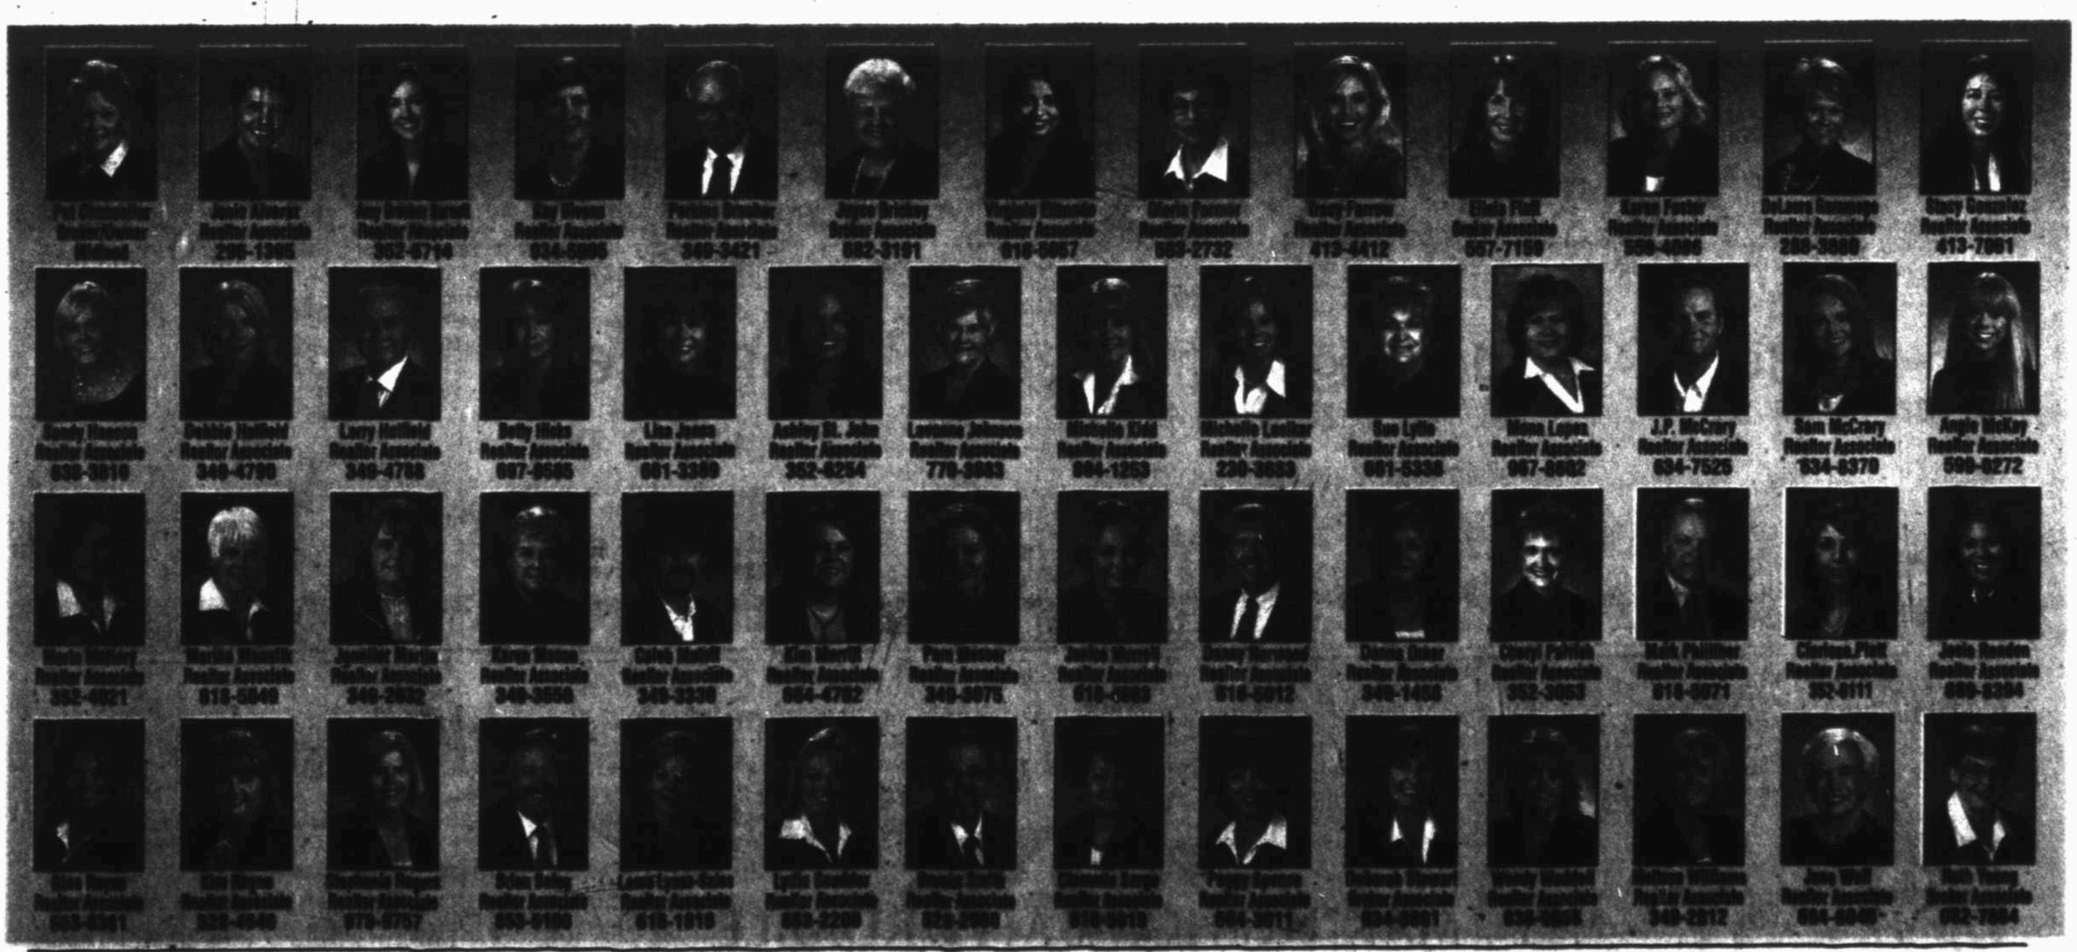

Midland County Annual Stats Copyright ©2011 PMDB, Inc.
ALL RIGHTS RESERVED All info deemed reliable but not guaranteed.

You hear that the 'market is good' in Midland, but what does that really mean? These statistics show how many houses were sold on a monthly basis for 2011. It also illustrates two key indicators of the real estate market, Days on Market and Sold vs. Listing Price Ratio. Over the course of 2011, listings decreased and the average days on the market ended with 54 days. The Listing vs. Sell Price Ratio illustrates that houses are selling for an average 97% of asking price. In December, over 50% of the inventory sold. More houses are needed as inventory continues to decrease.

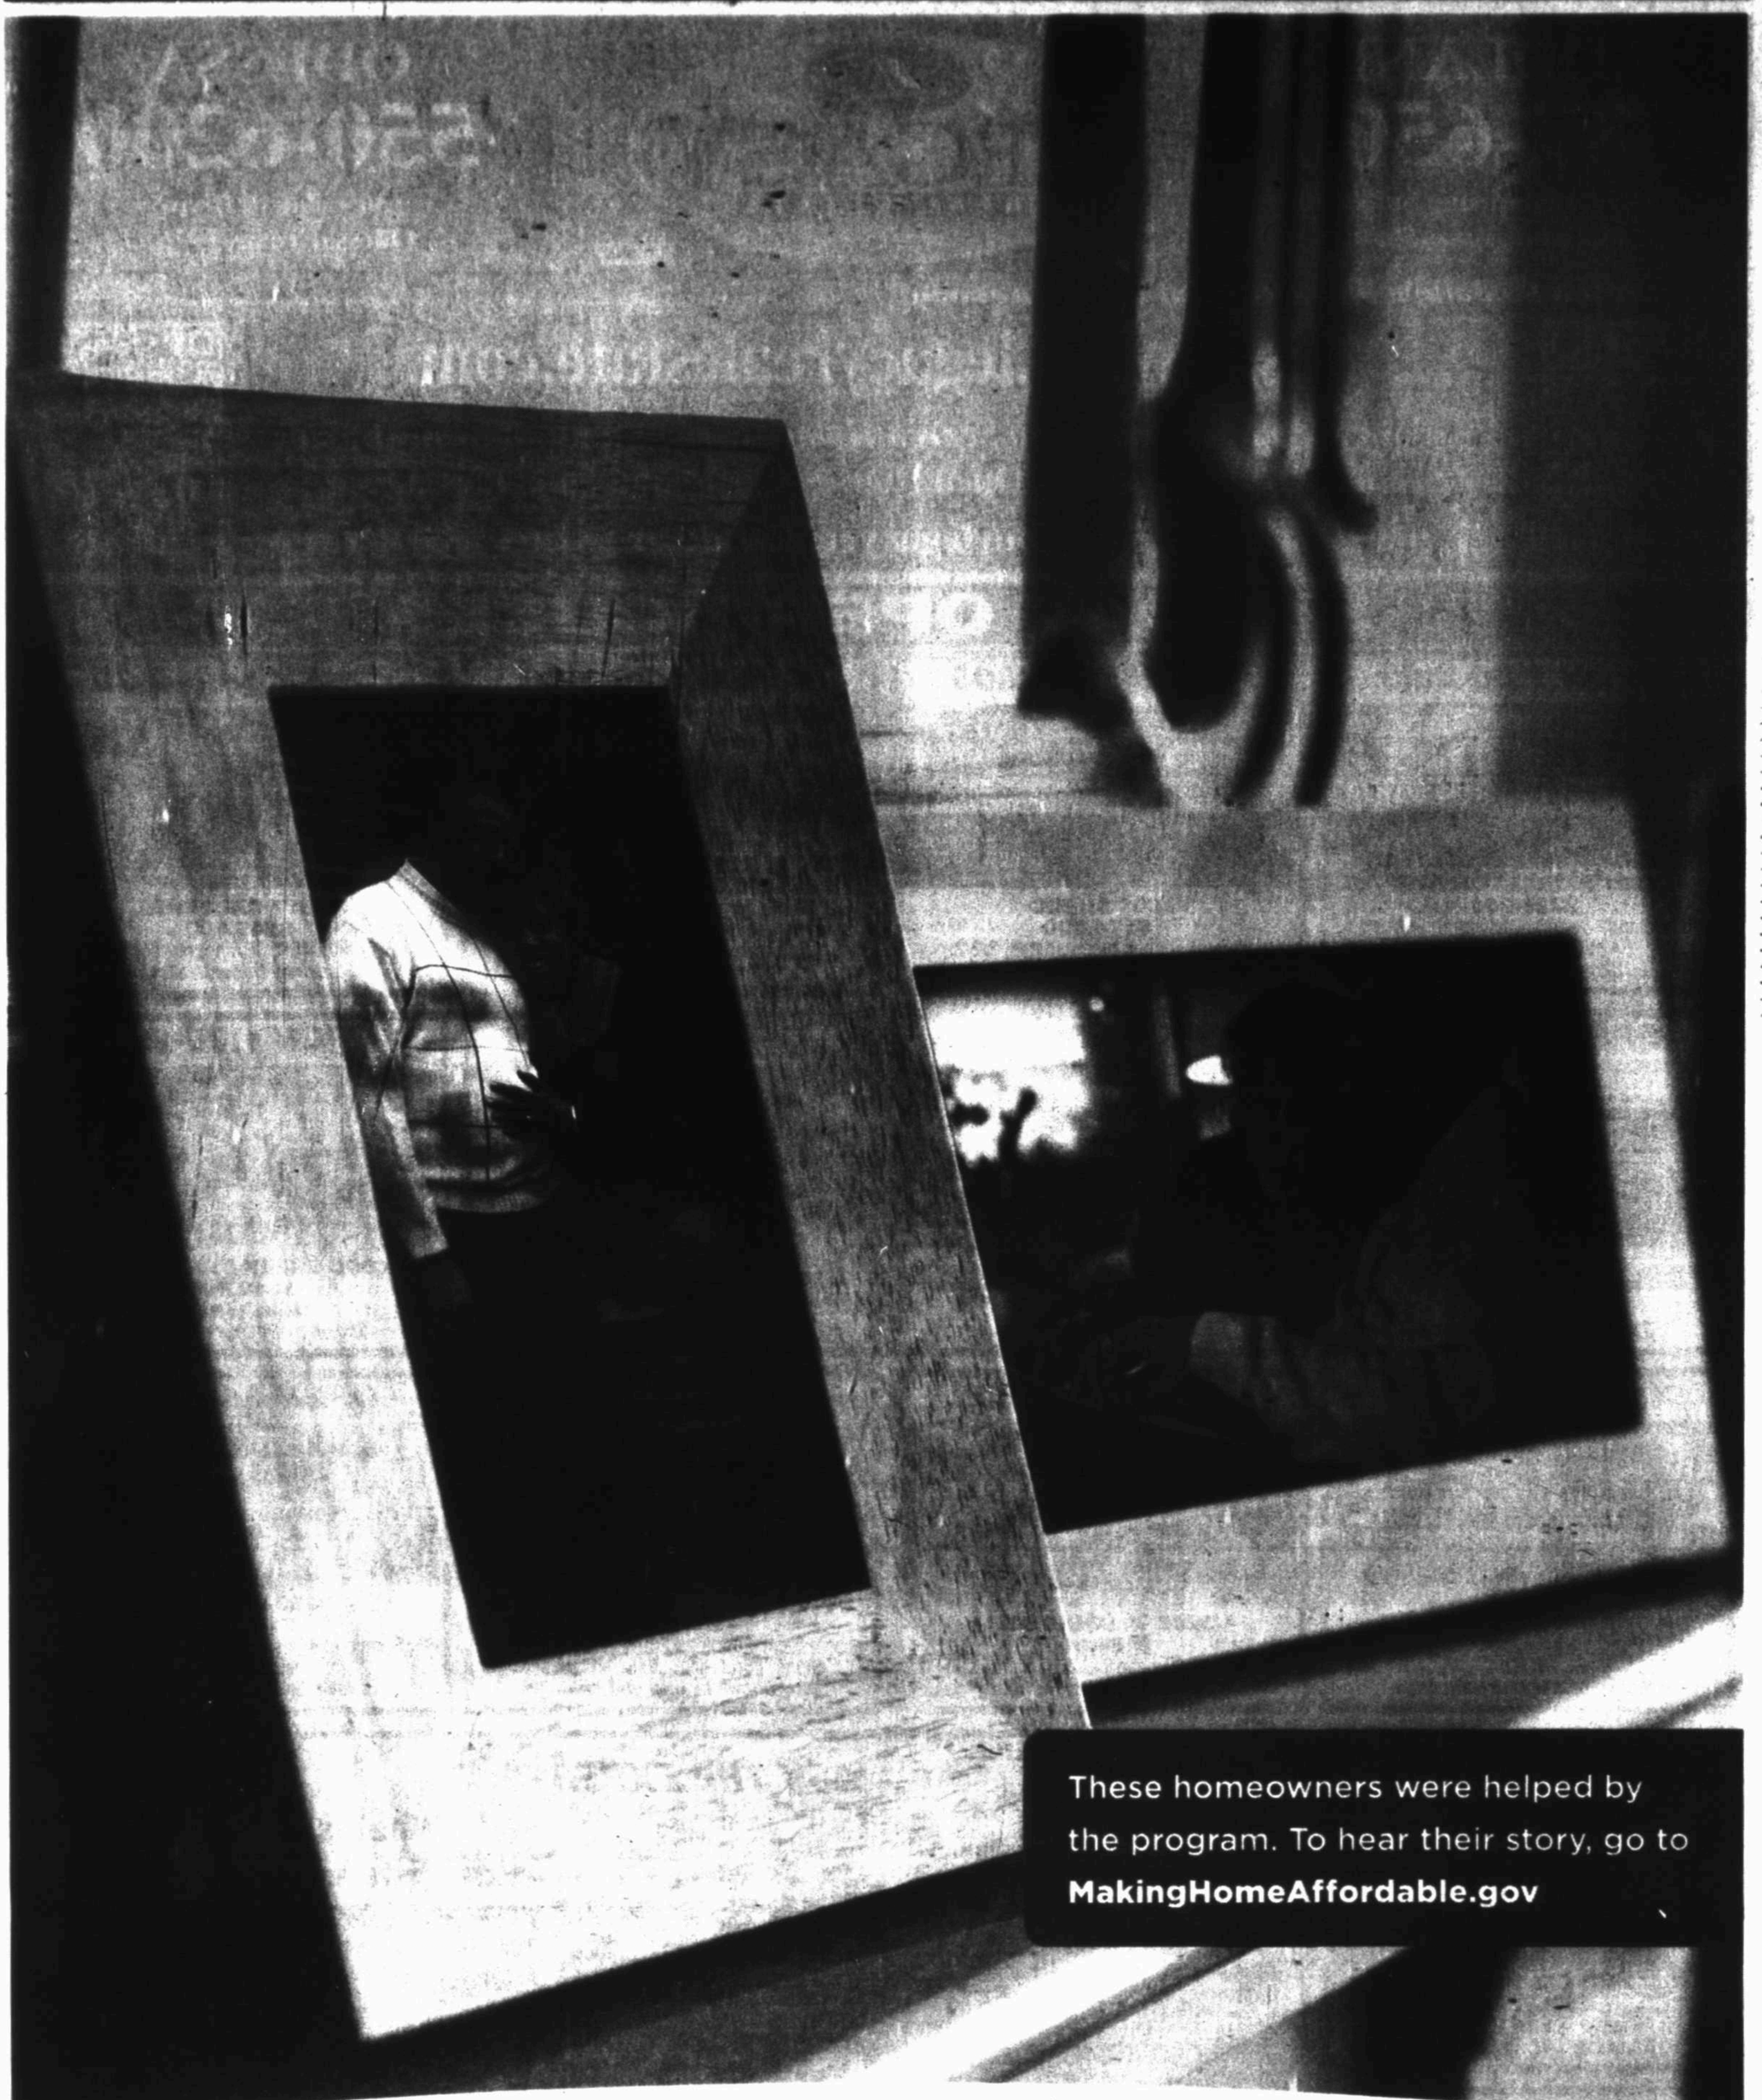

If you have ever thought about upgrading or downsizing and still owe on your current mortgage, the process to sell and buy is not as difficult as you may think.

Night of mystery to benefit Aphasia Center

By Sara Higgins
Staff Writer

Sweet and savory meets mystery and glamour at this year's Chocolate Decadence event hosted by the Aphasia Center of West Texas.

Upon walking through the door, attendees will be transported to a scene set in 1940s Hollywood and given their first clue of the evening to solve a baffling mystery, said marketing and development manager Kathryn Shelley. As participants go about the different activities available at the event, they are invited to follow the clues, or simply enjoy watching others attempt to solve the mysterious feat.

"Suspects" at the event will include jeweler Cathy Eastham, West Texas National Bank President Keith Moore, CBS 7's Catherine Collins and Jay Hendricks, and Susie's South Forty Owner Susie Hitchcock-Hall.

The event, which will take place 7 p.m. Feb. 9 at the Midland Center, will benefit the center's mission to improve the quality of life for individuals and families living with aphasia by helping them overcome communication barriers.

Strokes continue to be the top cause of long-term disability in the U.S., Shelley said, and about 35-40 percent of stroke survivors will live out their lives with aphasia. This year the center is celebrating its 10th anniversary as a non-profit in West Texas. The Chocolate Decadence event is the organization's main fundraiser each year, with a goal of raising 30 percent of the center's costs of providing services, Shelley said.

The center is recognizing JoAnne Richards as this year's "Sweetheart" for her role in the Chocolate Decadence boutique as well as the two terms she has spent on the board. For the past five years, Shelley said, Richards has utilized market connections in Los Angeles and Dallas through her former business Acrylic Image to provide items for the boutique. She also served on the renovation task force as the center prepared to settle into its permanent location at

Sesame oil: What it is and how to use it

Editor's note: : Off the Beaten Aisle is a weekly column by AP Food Editor J.M. Hirsch that also appears at FoodNetwork.com. It explores lesser known but widely available ingredients.

By J.M. Hirsch
AP Food Editor

Maybe it's time to look beyond claims of virginity in the oil aisle.

Because you see, our 20-year love affair with olive oil has had fallout. We've forgotten there's a whole world of oils that don't come from the olive tree. And they can do a heck of a lot more than just saute and make a fine dressing.

OK, maybe we didn't forget. Maybe we didn't know about them at all. It's not as though prior to the EVOO revolution we were all swilling avocado and grape seed oils. But olive oil has done a fine job of elbowing out other up-and-comers.

Sesame, for instance. You may never have bought it, but chances are you've had it. It's what gives many Asian dishes a nutty, savory, richly aromatic flavor.

Most sesame oil is made by pressing roasted sesame seeds. The oil tastes deeply nutty, almost smoky, and pairs well with anything salty. There are cold-pressed varieties, but skip them; while fine for frying, the flavor is unimpressive.

A high smoke point (420F) means this amber colored oil can handle the heat of the fry pan. But its flavor shines brightest when used raw. Which means that getting the deepest, richest sesame flavor will mean using a bit of the oil in the pan to saute, then drizzling a bit more over the finished dish.

When shopping for sesame oil (sometimes labeled "toasted sesame oil" and often hidden in the Asian or international aisle), the darker the color, the richer the flavor. And while loads of antioxidants give sesame oil a long shelf life, refrigerating it will make it last even longer.

What to do with it? It's obviously a natural for stir-fry (remember to drizzle a bit more on the finished dish for best flavor) and makes killer marinades for steak. For more ideas for using sesame oil, check out the Off the Beaten Aisle column over on Food Network: http://bit.ly/wp2mDN.

Sesame Pulled Pork Sandwiches

Start to finish: 50 minutes (15 minutes active)
Servings: 6

12-ounce bottle beer
6-ounce can tomato paste
1/4 cup packed brown sugar
1/2 cup rice vinegar
3 tablespoons sesame oil, divided
1 tablespoon soy sauce
1 1/2 teaspoons garlic powder
1 1/2 teaspoons mustard powder
1 whole star anise
3 pounds pork tenderloin, cut into 2-inch chunks
1 to 2 teaspoons hot sauce
Salt and ground black pepper, to taste
6 bulky rolls or other burger buns
Sesame seeds, to garnish
Sliced scallions, to garnish

In a large saucepan, whisk together the beer, tomato paste, brown sugar, vinegar, 2 tablespoons of the toasted sesame oil, the soy sauce, garlic powder and mustard powder. Add the star anise and pork. Bring to a simmer over medium-high, then cover and cook until very tender, about 40 minutes.

Discard the star anise, then use 2 forks to shred or pull apart the pork into bite-size pieces. Stir in the remaining tablespoon of toasted sesame oil and the hot sauce. Season with salt and pepper.

Divide the pork between the buns, sprinkling each serving with sesame seeds and scallions.

Crowd-friendly taco bar fit for Super Bowl

By Elizabeth Karmel
Associated Press

Whenever I think of Super Bowl Sunday, I think of chili and guacamole and chips. And Ro-Tel cheese dip. And Frito pie.

Because face it, people love to indulge in fatty, crunchy, salty foods they can munch while milling about or standing and watching the game in suspense. And if you make a dish that combines everyone's favorite football snacks, you've got a winning day regardless of who wins the game.

When I was growing up, the go-to football party food was seven-layer dip. Which is basically the same thing as Frito pie — layers of Fritos corn chips, chili, cheese and other toppings.

A few months ago, I flew down South and when I arrived, I met a chef from New York who essentially was serving Frito pie, but calling it "The Walking Taco" — a bunch of toppings dumped into snack-size bags of Fritos and eaten right from the bag.

I loved the name and concept, and immediately thought that it would be a great party food. I liked the idea of offering guests bags of chips and a buffet of toppings (chili, cheeses, vegetables, etc.) to let them assemble their own walking tacos. The medium snack bags are the best bet for this approach.

This make-your-own-bar is dramatic, and is easy on the cook. I like adding pulled chicken to the mix (buy a rotisserie chicken or make your own beer-can chicken and pull it once it is cool). Great homemade chili and guacamole are key, so I am including those recipes here. Otherwise, most of the ingredients are just purchased and put out for guests.

Suggested Toppings:

- Guacamole
- Pulled chicken
- Pulled pork
- Grilled shrimp
- Grated sharp white cheddar cheese
- Grated jalapeno-Jack cheese
- Grated yellow cheddar
- Sliced scallions
- Chopped tomatoes
- Chopped white onions
- Chopped cilantro
- Sliced olives
- Pickled jalapenos
- Pickled onions
- Black beans
- Pinto beans
- Refried beans
- Tomato salsa
- Tomatillo salsa
- Shredded lettuce
- Sour cream

Texas Bowl of Red Chili

This chili can be prepared up to two days ahead, then slowly reheated over low.
Start to finish: 2 1/2 hours
Servings: 8

1 pound ground sirloin
1 pound ground chuck
2 large yellow onions, finely chopped
12-ounce bottle Lone Star or Corona beer
Two 10-ounce cans chopped tomatoes with chili peppers
6-ounce can tomato paste
1 tablespoon ground cumin
1 tablespoon dry oregano leaves
1 tablespoon garlic powder
2 teaspoons kosher salt (or more to taste)
1 tablespoon ancho chili powder
1 tablespoon New Mexican chili powder
1 teaspoon chipotle chili powder
1/2 teaspoon cayenne pepper (optional)

Heat a large, heavy-bottomed stockpot over medium-high. Add the sirloin, chuck and onions and cook for 15 minutes, or until the meat is browned and the onions are translucent.

Add the beer, tomatoes and tomato paste. Stir and simmer for a few minutes, then add the cumin, oregano, garlic, salt, all 3 chili powders, and the cayenne pepper (if using). Stir well, then cover, reduce heat to low and cook for 2 hours, stirring occasionally.

If chili is too thick, water or an additional beer may be added. If so, add just a bit at a time or the chili will get too thin.

1-2-3 Tomatillo Salsa Guacamole

I first made this recipe for a very large event in California. I was daunted by the task of making guacamole for 500 people. But friends at Frontera Foods suggested I try their easy recipe. Well, it was so good that it was the hit of the event. And I couldn't stop eating it. Since I tried this recipe, I've never made guacamole any other way.
Start to finish: 5 minutes
Servings: 6

3 to 4 ripe avocados
1 cup Frontera Foods tomatillo salsa
1/4 cup chopped fresh cilantro
Kosher salt

Cut the avocados in half, scoop out the flesh and combine in a bowl. Mash well. Stir in the tomatillo salsa, then the cilantro. Season with salt.

Chef serves healthy surf and turf dish for Valentine's Day

By Rocco DiSpirito
Associated Press

It's Valentine's Day again, and I just want to remind people there are alternatives to chocolate when it comes to showing your love.

Because let's face it, at any given time many of us are on diets or at least watching what we're eating. And a box of chocolates isn't exactly helping out.

So if you're looking for a romantic Valentine's Day gift that's truly from the heart, why not give the best gift of all — a mouth-watering, healthy meal you make yourself?

This week's recipe is my version of a trendy dish served in restaurants across the country — lobster pot pie. A typical pot pie like this will cost you around 680 calories and 46 grams of fat per serving. But I've downsized that to just 330 calories and 6 grams of fat.

I did this by turning the pie into a cobbler, which means the crust is only on top. And my crust is made from a lower calorie pancake mix that gives you the taste of a pot pie, but without all the fattening richness of typical crusts. I've also added in lean beef tenderloin, making this a true surf and turf delight.

I saved you plenty of fat by thickening this dish with a delicious and pleasantly sweet puree of beets, instead of the usual butter, cream and flour.

Valentine's Day Surf and Turf Cobbler

Start to finish: 45 minutes (30 minutes active)
Servings: 2

1 1/4-pound live lobster
4 ounces fresh asparagus spears (12 to 16 spears, depending on thickness), trimmed and cut into 1-inch pieces
3 ounces beef tenderloin, cut into 8 cubes
Salt and ground black pepper
1/4 1/2-ounce can red beets with liquid
16 pumps butter spray
1 tablespoon fresh tarragon, chopped
2/3 cup Bisquick Heart Smart Pancake and Baking Mix
1/4 cup water
2 teaspoons prepared horseradish

In a large stockpot, bring 6 quarts of water to a boil. Set a bowl of ice water nearby.

Submerge the lobster in the boiling water, then return the water to a boil. Cook the lobster for 4 minutes, adding the asparagus to the water for the last 2 minutes. Use a slotted spoon to transfer the asparagus to the ice water to cool for 2 minutes, then transfer to a kitchen towel to dry. Remove the lobster from the water and place on a sheet pan. Let cool until easy to handle.

Heat a medium nonstick skillet over high.

Season the beef with salt and pepper, then spritz the pan with cooking spray and add the beef to the pan. Cook for 1 to 2 minutes, or until the outsides are well browned and the centers are rare, turning once. Transfer the beef to a small plate and set aside.

Drain the beets, reserving 1/4 cup of the liquid. Cut two-thirds of the drained beets (about 1 cup) into bite-size pieces (save the remaining beets for another use). Add half of the beet pieces to a blender along with the 1/4 cup of reserved liquid. Cover and blend until smooth.

Add the 16 pumps of butter spray and cover and blend again just until combined. Pour the pureed beets into a medium bowl and add the remaining chopped beets. Add the asparagus to the beet mixture along with the cooked beef cubes and fresh tarragon.

Heat the oven to 400 F.

Remove the meat from the lobster and cut into bite-size pieces. Add to the beet mixture and stir until well combined. Season with salt and pepper. Spoon the mixture evenly into a 1-quart oven-safe glass bowl or soufflé dish.

In a medium bowl, mix the pancake mix and water. Drop the dough into 6 small mounds over the lobster mixture. Bake for 15 minutes, or until the top is browned and the filling is heated through. Remove and top with horseradish.

One of the activities to be featured this year is a cork pull, where guests can purchase a voucher that allows them to reach into a bucket of corks that correspond to bottles of wine valued between $60 and $100. There also will be real pearl necklaces and earrings featured in the Chocolate Decadence boutique in a variety of lengths, sizes, shapes and colors. As in previous years, there will be desserts, chocolate martinis and Valentine truffles.

A limited number of sponsor tables and individual tickets still are available, and range from general seating at $150 per person to a premium table for eight including gifts for $5,000. Food Network, book take on heavy-weight chefs

By Leanne Italie
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Paula Deen's diabetes revelation pretty much sums it up: Kitchen pros at all levels struggle with obesity and its dangerous aftertaste in the high-pressure, high-calorie world of food.

The queen of Southern comfort cooking, now a spokeswoman for a diabetes drugmaker's health initiative, recently announced she hid her Type 2 diabetes for about three years while continuing to cook up deep-fried cheesecake and bacon-and-egg burgers between doughnuts on TV.

Choosing to digest her ill health privately all those years, Deen's story is familiar to those in chef's jackets who already had gone public with the question few in their world love to talk about: How do you stay healthy while trying to earn a living making food?

Thursday, a dozen obese chefs, restaurant owners, caterers and others began to search for the answer. That's when the Food Network premiered "Fat Chef," which follows participants for 16 weeks as they struggle to lose weight and learn a healthier way of life with the help of trainers, nutritionists and therapists.

"You have this abundance of food all around you," said pastry chef Michael Mignano, who's one of the dozen. "You're doing parties, you have weddings. There's always a lot of food left over. You're constantly tasting, working late hours, eating late."

Mignano, 36, owns a bakery in Port Washington, N.Y. At 6 foot 2, he weighed about 500 pounds soon after he was diagnosed with Type 2 diabetes in 2010, before "Fat Chef" went into production last October. His resolve to do something about his weight grew stronger as the result of a different Food Network show on which he appeared in September, "Sweet Genius."

"I wasn't nervous about that show, but I was nervous about whether the jacket would fit me," said Mignano, who now weighs about 400 pounds and has a long road ahead to reach his goal weight of 250. "Watching myself on that show, I was the fat guy. That's all I saw. I felt almost like a drunk seeing himself on the floor passed out."

Going public with his weight loss journey hasn't been easy for Mignano and others in similar unhealthy dire straits. As chefs, the constant food stimulation by sight, smell and taste was compounded by personal struggles and family obligations.

Art Smith, who doesn't appear on the show, is a child of fried chicken and other Southern staples like his old pal Deen. Like Deen, he was diagnosed with Type 2 diabetes about three years ago.

Also 6 foot 2, Smith ballooned to 325 pounds while gorging on refined sugar, caffeine, PB&Js — anything that gave him an instant energy boost or filled him up at the end of an exhausting day as a chef for Oprah Winfrey.

Exercise? He could barely walk a block, until he decided to turn it all around and lost 118 pounds. Now 51, the Jasper, Fla., native, restaurant owner, cookbook author and food TV personality has kept the weight off.

Smith has run marathons, eats oatmeal and egg whites for breakfast, drinks plenty of water and has expanded Common Threads, his healthy eating initiative for low-income kids. He declares: "I've got my sexy back!"

Obviously not all chefs struggle with obesity and serious health threats like diabetes, but most do think about weight and how to hold back the extra pounds.

Allison Adato, a senior editor and former food beat writer for People magazine, is out in April with a book, "Smart Chefs Stay Slim," offering insights and tips from three dozen of the biggest names in the industry.

"Paula Deen's revelation may mark a turning point for some viewers and diners," Adato said. "My hope is that this moment creates a broader awareness that the way a person eats does have an impact on his or her health. Fortunately, there are a lot of chefs who have already thought about how to balance a healthy lifestyle with enjoying wonderful food."

Surrounded by rich, decadent food and their need to earn a living from it, Adato's chefs stay fit by keeping hyper-aware of every calorie. Some balance out their food excesses over a few days, indulging one day, but "eating clean" the next. They know the difference between tasting the food they prepare without gorging on it, and exactly how much dessert to enjoy.

Ally Vitella, 41, a New York City caterer, discovered she had Type 2 diabetes at the first health check-in for "Fat Chef." At 5-9, she weighed 345 pounds and was forced to sit guiltily by as her husband and mother-in-law lugged catering ovens and other equipment up and down the stairs of their Manhattan clients.

After a job, "You're kind of a scavenger. I was eating hors d'oeuvres for lunch and dinner. I would scoop up half a tray of food and eat it. We were ordering pizza and Chinese food at home because we were exhausted all the time," she said. "We cook things you're supposed to eat once in a while, but I was eating them every day."

This year, replace bad habits with healthy ones

One of my favorite holiday stories is Charles Dickens "A Christmas Carol." The story opens with a visit by the tormented ghost of Jacob Marley, Ebenezer Scrooge's former business partner. Marley's soul has been condemned for eternity to carry a long and incredibly heavy metal chain in the afterlife. He warns the miserly Scrooge, "I wear the chain I forged in life! I made it link by link and yard by yard! I (made) it of my own free will and by my own free will, I wore it!"

The symbolism behind Jacob Marley's immense chain of misdeeds reminds me of the chains of choice we all forge in life regarding our health.

Just as Scrooge had the chance to change his life direction even in old age, we do too. And if we were to have our own ghostly wakeup call, what sort of chains would a 21st century ghost of Jacob Marley be dragging around today? Would such a chain consist of huge soft drink containers, monstrous bags of snack foods, gargantuan fast food boxes and 65-inch video screens?

Newly-diagnosed diabetics have their own life chains of differing lengths. Some consume sugary drinks from the minute they awaken to the time they get in bed. Some keep bags of processed snack foods in the cupboard, in the car or at the office to constantly munch. Some frequently purchase meals at drive-through and fast food restaurants. Some spend all their free time in front of a screen of some kind. How long is your chain now?

The chains of addiction are strong, but not impossible to break. It takes that "ah-hah" moment to kick in. You can't keep putting off change until another day. Those days rapidly will become fewer in number, as the Ghost of Christmas future so bluntly showed Scrooge.

Talking about change is only the first step. Making change and sticking to it is the biggest hurdle to overcome. Get into a changed routine for at least three weeks and it starts to become a new habit. In a way, you are making a different chain — one that lifts you up instead of weighing you down.

This year, I suggest you make simple changes to your routine. Stop or slow down dramatically on drinking sugary soft drinks. Working your way to drinking none at all would be a huge accomplishment. In doing so, you will lower your risk of diabetes, high blood pressure, bone thinning and heart disease all at the same time. Weight loss is an added bonus.

Stop snacking on things you get out of bags that are made in a factory. Instead, snack on nuts and whole fruits. They're full of antioxidants and fiber and are heart-healthy choices.

Program outfits Super Bowl volunteers with scarves

By Rick Callahan
Associated Press

INDIANAPOLIS — A nationwide army of knitters, crocheters and weavers has created more than 13,000 blue-and-white scarves to help keep Super Bowl volunteers warm and highly visible when the big game comes to this cold-weather city.

Thousands of scarf-makers, from great-grandmothers to prison inmates, put in hours of work on the 6-foot-long scarves.

Super Bowl organizers hoped to get 8,000 scarves — one for each volunteer. They ended up with thousands more, sent from 45 states, as well as Belgium, Canada, South Africa and the United Kingdom.

The designs vary widely, from simple blue-and-white stripes to intricately plotted Super Bowl themes.

The idea behind the Super Scarves program was to give the unpaid volunteers "a warm thank you" to keep them snug during the week leading up to the Feb. 5 game and make it easy for visitors to the city to identify someone who can give directions and other help, said host committee spokeswoman Dianna Boyce.

She said the scarves program was inspired by a similar effort staged a few years ago by the Special Olympics. Each scarf is adorned with an official Super Bowl host-city patch — all sewn on by inmates at the Indiana Women's Prison.

Bev Meska, an 82-year-old retired school secretary from Michigan City, Ind., was the most prolific of the more than 3,000 Super Bowl scarf-makers. She planned on crocheting only a few when she set to work in April 2010, after her daughter emailed her a link to the project website.

But Meska, who's been crocheting since age 16 and has made hundreds of afghans over the decades, ended up creating a staggering 250 scarves by November's deadline. She estimates she spent three to four hours on each one, using crocheting's single-hooked needle. Each of her scarves sports tasseled or fringed ends.

Every day, Meska said, she used her spare time to work on the scarves, often as she and her 12-year-old great-grandson, Ben Fore-Knight, watched sporting events, including NFL games. She said Ben kept encouraging her to make more. During the summers, she took her scarf work to nearby Lake Michigan.

"I crocheted everywhere — even down on the beach. I took my lawn chair and basket down there and worked away on them," she said.

Meanwhile, a group of inmates at a state prison in Indianapolis who call themselves the Naptown Knitters were learning how to knit, guided by prison volunteer Doreen Tatnall.

Tatnall, a real estate agent, didn't know how to knit either when she started. But she and 17 inmates at the 350-inmate Indianapolis Re-Entry Educational Facility, where inmates go as their release date nears, learned together by following YouTube instructional videos.

The men slowly picked up speed, creating more than two dozen scarves. Two prison staff members who knew how to knit gave them lessons during their twice-weekly, two-hour sessions.

"Once you get the hang of it, it's kind of calming. Some of the men said that for a couple of hours they forgot where they were," Tatnall said.

Steve Jordan, a 44-year-old from Kokomo who is due for release the day after the Super Bowl, made three scarves and said he would have made more if not for a prison rule forbidding inmates from taken their plastic knitting needles back to their cells.

Jordan, who is finishing out a murder sentence, said the courses were a nice break from the monotony of prison life.

"Here's a group of a guys sitting around knitting, something we normally don't have inside prison. No tension, everybody just sitting back and laughing. And knitting," he said.

Elsewhere, Belinda Martinez of St. Paul, Minn., knitted 46 scarves, some with elaborate Super Bowl or football designs. One captures in yarn the game's kickoff, showing a player's leg down to the shoe making contact with the ball.

Another pays homage to late "Peanuts" creator Charles Schulz, a Minnesota native, rendering in comic-strip style the moment when hapless Charlie Brown once again tries to kick a football held by Lucy, who once again snatches it away.

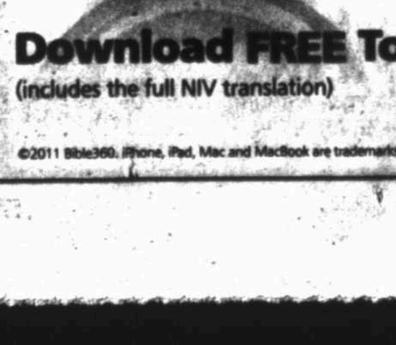

A patch is seen Nov. 11, 2011, on a scarf Bev Meska made in Indianapolis. Meska crocheted about 250 scarves for a "Super Scarves" program.

Family meetings may help solve problem with teenage daughter

DEAR FAMILY: I need some advice about my 14 year-old daughter and her demands to be driven everywhere. She fully expects me to drop everything I'm doing to take her somewhere or pick her up from somewhere and to be right on time. I think I created this monster in my foolish desire to make sure she had friends and social invites when she was in seventh grade.

All my girlfriends told me how difficult it could be for girls, so I made a big effort to be ready and willing to take her whenever she had an opportunity. I even encouraged her to let me know and I would pick up other girl friends to take them wherever she was going, too. My husband kept telling me at the time I was making a big mistake spoiling her like that but I didn't listen. Now I'm truly regretting that I didn't.

She's actually a very good kid but her demands have gotten out of hand and she doesn't seem to appreciate the sacrifices I'm making. When I try to tell her she's asking and demanding too much she gets that teenage girl attitude and then I want to strangle her. Is it too late to correct my mistake? I can't take two more years like this. — MOMMA'S TAXI SERVICE

DEAR MOMMA: It is not too late to establish a more appropriate system that is more respective of you and your time. My preferred way to do that is through the mechanism of weekly family meetings. While it is easier to have started this process before hitting the teenage years, later is better than never. The general structure of the weekly family meeting is simple. Once a week on the same day and at the same time (we always did this Sunday at 7 p.m.) the family gathers for the meeting. There are no distractions such as television, cell phones, telephone calls or stereo.

The meeting starts with each person expressing appreciation to every other person for something he or she did the previous week. Then, review any problems with resolutions from last week's meeting and bring up new problems if appropriate. This process is the crux of teaching effective communications and problem-solving techniques to the family. For example, you could bring up the taxi problem, give examples of how it can be a problem for you and then open it up for discussion with your daughter. You did not say if you had other children but all the children would be included in the meeting. Brainstorm and get everyone's calm ideas about what might and should be done to improve the situation — no drama allowed.

After some potential solutions are identified, select one and try it the next week. Not all solutions will work, but then we teach adjustment and flexibility in problem solving. Utilize your daughter's (or the children's) solution whenever possible to let her experience making a decision and experiencing the results of that decision.

After the problem segment of the meeting, each child would read from some sacred or inspirational text (say, starting with one of the teenage Bibles). We always ended our meetings by holding hands and each person saying a sentence prayer. I believe you will find the family meeting approach to yield amazing benefits. When you think about it, we often only communicate with our teenagers when we are in the middle of a problem. Many parents do not exhibit the best form in the heat of an argument.

The family meeting process gives us the opportunity to communicate and teach our children to solve problems in an effective way. I further believe keeping God involved in the process imbeds the idea of compassion and caring in the discussion and in whatever solutions are offered. There is a spirit in all families that needs to be nurtured.

If any readers would like a simplified form of the family meeting, send me an email and I will send you one.

New Girl Scout badges recognize finance, technology

By Helena Oliviero
Cox Newspapers

ATLANTA — As a Girl Scout, Sandra Kennedy wants to create a comic book, finance her dreams and explore the science of happiness.

Luckily, there are badges for that now.

Girl Scouts USA recently unveiled 136 new badges, giving Scouts a new look — and new direction — in the year of its 100th anniversary. Designed to arm girls with modern-day skills, the insignias include everything from Digital Photography and Science of Style to Social Innovator.

Sandra, who is 12, joins more than 2 million girls across the country on a quest to amass new talents — and new badges.

"I like them a whole lot," said Sandra who lives in Roswell, Ga. "I think they are very interesting, and I think it will motivate me."

Many Scouts are in the process of earning the new badges. Still, you may begin to see some of them as Girl Scouts canvass neighborhoods selling cookies.

The annual cookie season kicked off earlier this month and continues through March.

Beth Messer, director of Girl Leadership Experience with the Atlanta region, said the new badges are designed to reflect girls' evolving interests and the importance of technology and finance in today's culture. A major update was also long overdue, she said. The last time the badges were overhauled was 1987.

A business strategy consultant and focus groups helped develop the badges. In focus groups, girls asked for more challenge, creativity, technology and "fun with purpose," according to Michelle Tompkins, a spokeswoman with Girl Scouts USA.

Financial literacy is a major theme. Brownies can earn Money Manager badges; Junior Girl Scouts can obtain Savvy Shopper badges; and middle school Cadettes can try for Budgeting and Marketing badges.

According to a 2011 survey by T. Rowe Price, three-fourths of parents believe they should begin conversations about finances with their children before age 10.

Messer said the Girl Scouts believe teaching financial skills to elementary-age girls can help establish lifelong money-management skills.

The new badges also deal with other critical life skills that weren't around when Juliette Gordon Low started the movement 100 years ago, such as learning how to apply good manners on the Web.

While Brownies can get a badge for Making Friends, middle schoolers can earn a badge for Netiquette.

In general, Scouts need to complete several steps for each badge. To obtain the Netiquette badge, for example, Girl Scouts need to explore how to avoid "oops" moments and feelings of regret over hitting the send button and determine what makes a great social media profile.

Badges familiar to an earlier generation of Scouts, meanwhile, have taken their bow. Gone is the sewing badge. The food fibers and farming badge also got the boot. A handful of the yesteryear badges, now called Legacy badges, will stick around, including ones for First Aid, Cooking and the Girl Scout Way.

The new badges also exude a hip look. The pale orange Room Makeover badge features a paint brush and hammer.

Girl Scouts earn between eight and 10 badges every year on average. They also can design their own badge. They can develop a template for the five steps to earn the badge and design the look of the badge by going to www.gsmakeyourown.com after it goes live next month.

Besides the new badges, the Girl Scouts also have introduced a program of "leadership journeys" in which Girl Scouts will engage in activities around themes such as the environment, advocacy and self-esteem building.

But one constant remains: selling cookies. This year, there will be a centennial lemon cookie called Savannah Smiles, named to honor Low. "It's a great product," Messer said. "People like to eat the cookies and it's a great cause because when people buy Thin Mints from a Girl Scout, yes they want their Thin Mints, but they look at the Girl Scout selling the cookies and see that this is a program worth supporting."

Sandra started selling cookies last week and sold 44 boxes her first day. She's interested in selling more cookies, but she's also interested in something else: those new badges.

"I think because of these new badges, I will be a Girl Scout longer," she said.

Sandra recently started drawing a comic story, sketching two flying creatures vying for a prized gemstone.

She's one step closer to getting her own prize: the badge for Comic Artist.

Be creative thinking of ways to spend time with grandchildren

Can grandparents still date? As humorous as this may sound, I have had fun thinking about dating with my grandchildren. I have begun a monthly, sometimes weekly, date time with my 6- and 9-year-old grandchildren. It is so wonderful they are old enough to really have a good time doing things together and we now can double date.

My challenge is thinking of places to go that will be educational and fun. We take in the usual — the Fredda Durham Children's Museum, the Petroleum Museum, the Planetarium and the CAF. They enjoy all of these places. Along with one of these trips there has to be a special stop for refreshments such as ice cream. Sometimes the Cracker Barrel is selected (more for the toys than for the eats). Nevertheless, all the trips are fun.

I plan to take pictures of our adventures together and make a book for 2012 to give to them at Christmas time.

We also will go to the Sibley Nature Center, to the George W. Bush Childhood Home, the public library, to the Maxey Park Petting Zoo in Pecos and to the Odessa Meteor Crater — at 500 feet in diameter it is the second largest meteor crater in the nation. At the Maxey Park Petting Zoo my grandchildren will see peacocks, ostriches, antelopes, longhorns, donkeys, buffalos, waterfowl and wolves. We should get some good pictures there.

The I-20 Wildlife Preserve will be a special trip as soon as the public is invited to hike the 3 1/2-mile trail. Hopefully, that will be in April. Along with the hike, we will have the opportunity to pick up trash along the trail and help Keep Midland Beautiful.

This spring, I want to take them to the Hummer House in Cristoval to see the humming birds and perhaps help to band the birds, if we pick the right weekend.

Prude Ranch in Fort Davis is another overnight adventure in the spring or summer. Maybe I will get them to do a little hiking in the mountains with me. We also will look for birds and make a collection of wildflowers we may see. On the way to Fort Davis, we could stop at Balmorhea's spring-fed pool.

On the weekends we have limited time; we can go to a park in Midland or Odessa, take our lunch and just hang out.

As often as possible, I will not tell them where we will go because I think the mystery will add to the excitement. I hope other grandparents are already doing this with their grandchildren and if not, how about joining me this year? New destinations are always appreciated.

Man wants to cook without criticism from his worried wife

DEAR ABBY

Write Dear Abby at www.DearAbby.com or P.O. Box 69440, Los Angeles, CA 90069. Her column is distributed by Universal Press Syndicate.

DEAR ABBY: I'm fortunate to be married to an amazing woman. There's just one problem. She's convinced I'm going to burn down the house. She constantly nags me when I'm cooking, even when I'm literally standing over the pots. I find her tone — and the idea I don't know how to use a stove — insulting.

She insists I have the burner on too high when I'm making spaghetti, and it somehow will result in a catastrophe far worse than a ruined meal. I find it extremely annoying because I am 30, served my country honorably in Iraq, have been making spaghetti since I was 12 and haven't ever caused any sort of kitchen fire.

My wife hasn't cooked for me in more than a year. That doesn't upset me because I know she works hard to earn money for our family. But if she doesn't cook for me and I'm not allowed to cook for me, then how am I supposed to eat?

Is there anything I can do to make my wife understand I can be trusted to make a simple meal on a simple stove? — PASTA GUY IN PHILLY

DEAR PASTA GUY: Probably not, if you haven't been able to convey that message in more than a year. So insist she stay out of the kitchen while you're cooking, or prepare your meals after she has left for work. Or expand your repertoire beyond spaghetti and make a salad instead.

DEAR ABBY: I'm a 15-year-old high school student with a wonderful life, but I'm not happy. I get good grades, have many great friends, a weekend job and an amazing boyfriend. (He's 17.)

The problem is I'm bored. I have had only one technical boyfriend besides the one I have now. I had two "flings" where I got involved with guys without an official or physical relationship. I know most teenagers would kill for a boyfriend like mine who buys them things and tells them they're beautiful. But I want a relationship with ups and downs — drama and fighting. Am I crazy to want to date other people, or is this normal? — LOST IN LOVE

DEAR LOST IN LOVE: You're not crazy. It is normal for some teenage girls to want variety. However, please don't equate the kind of drama you see on TV and in films with what real life is supposed to be about. Relationships filled with drama and fighting do not have happy outcomes. They can lead to bruised hearts and sometimes violence.

If you want to end the relationship with your boyfriend, by all means do so. But before you become involved in the kind of relationship you think would be exciting, please discuss it with your mother or another trusted adult, because a mature person with insight should share some of it with you.

DEAR ABBY: My mother gives gifts — sometimes very generous ones — but always with strings attached. She also keeps a record of which recipients have responded with appropriate gratitude (cards, phone calls) and those who have not. Those individuals on the "not" list are ridiculed behind their backs and slighted in other ways.

My mother considers herself a "good Christian," but I believe her actions are selfish, and I have conflicting emotions when I receive gifts from her. What do you think? — CONFLICTED IN WISCONSIN

DEAR CONFLICTED: I think you should always thank your mother graciously and appropriately for her generosity when she gives you a gift, if only because it is considered good manners.

Zebra mussels, an invasive species found in some Texas lakes, cover the motor of a boat.

Mussels, carp threaten Texas bass fisheries

MIKE LEGGETT

Mike Leggett writes for the Austin American-Statesman.

AUSTIN — Sometimes I feel sorry for the fisheries guys at the Texas Parks and Wildlife Department.

The inland division staff are arguably the national standard for innovation, maintenance and production, especially where those traits apply to largemouth bass. And since largemouths are the big dogs of fishing, that makes the Texas Parks and Wildlife Department No. 1, as well.

But often biologists find themselves fighting outside influences, especially when it comes to nonnative and invasive species whose spread and propagation could threaten bass fishing.

Part of that fight has been on Lake Texoma on the Red River northwest of Sherman, where a tiny creature called a zebra mussel has managed to grab a foothold in the state's premier striped bass fishery. With no natural enemy, it thrives and multiplies, competing with native species for space and for food.

To try to stop the spread of the mussel, as well as a pair of hardy carp species, the parks and wildlife department is proposing some new rules to help prevent their movement when anglers and fish managers net and move shad from Texoma and other lakes.

The new rules would prevent even the movement of water in a live well because the zebra mussel's offspring, called veligers, which are microscopic, could be in the water. Bottom line: The state now is trying to stop the spread of an enemy that is not easily seen.

"So far, Texas has been fortunate that zebra mussels and Asian carps are confined to a few areas," said the parks and wildlife department's Ken Kurzawski. "Lots of states are making major efforts to stop their spread. The prime ecological impact of these organisms is that they feed low on the food chain and can tie up substantial portions of the nutrients available, impacting fishes and other organisms."

Native to Russia, zebra mussels are believed to have made it into U.S. waterways through ballast dumped from ships on the St. Lawrence Seaway. They were first noted in 1988 and have spread through the Great Lakes chain, down the Mississippi. They've come into Texas possibly via boats brought down for winter boating and fishing at Texoma.

"The problem on Texoma is that the microscopic veligers can be transported in water taken from Texoma and spread to other reservoirs. Numerous anglers and pleasure boaters come off Texoma and go to other (Dallas area) reservoirs," Kurzawski said. "Additionally, we know of pond consultants and bait dealers that collect shad from Texoma and most likely transport those shad in water taken from Texoma. That means in addition to getting spread to public waters, they can also get into private ponds."

The parks department is concerned that within those shad captures are young versions of nasty carp known as bighead and silver carp. In their juvenile stages, these two Asian natives aren't invisible but they are largely indiscernible from the gizzard and threadfin shad with which they may have been swimming when they were netted. The plan behind the new rules is to stop their inadvertent spread, as well.

The sad part of this situation is the measures probably already are too late. Just as with feral hogs and exotic big game animals, it may not be too late to help but stopping them cold is a real long shot.

"Probably no one involved with exotic species thinks you can be 100 percent successful with any of these measures," Kurzawski said. "Our proposals are some additional steps that are in our authority to enact that can help slow the spread of these species."

> "So far, Texas has been fortunate that zebra mussels and Asian carps are confined to a few areas. Lots of states are making major efforts to stop their spread. The prime ecological impact of these organisms is that they feed low on the food chain and can tie up substantial portions of the nutrients available, impacting fishes and other organisms.

Seminole Indians part of West Texas history

Coocoachee rode in front of 30 men up the Palo Duro Canyon late in the fall of 1847. He had been there before, during the U.S. Army peace mission of the winter of 1845-1846. Modern day people know him as "Wildcat," one of the famous leaders of the Seminole Indians during the Seminole Wars in Florida in the 1830s. He was one of the few Indians who escaped Fort Marion (a list that includes the famous Apache, Geronimo.) After years of war, he finally agreed the Seminoles would move to Indian Territory (now Oklahoma.)

While on the peace mission he remembered the visit of Tecumseh to Florida many years before. Tecumseh had sought a pan-Indian alliance, promoting the idea all of the Indians would fight together against the encroaching United States Army and the hordes of settlers. Tecumseh died with his goal incomplete. During the peace mission, he spent time alone with the leaders of the bands of Comanche the mission force met, getting to know them personally. He gave away small gifts without expectation of immediate return. He knew he would be returning, to see if he could set up an alliance of the plains tribes. He returned in the summer of 1846 with loads of goods to trade and 250 Seminoles and black Seminoles, and further developed his relationships with the Comanches.

The group of Seminoles and black Seminoles, led by John Horse, soon were spotted by Comanche "wolves," who had spurred out of sight, headed back to the camps to report the approach of the little force. Coocoachee figured the leaders were expecting them, for he had told other Comanches seen earlier of his plans to head to the winter camp. The Comanches would have completed their fall buffalo hunt, laying in their winter supplies. They would have full bellies and be more at ease.

Coocoachee already had talked with the headmen of the other five major bands of the Comanches. The southern leaders of the Penahtaka (honey-eaters), some of whom had been to Washington, were leaning toward peaceable relations with the Texans, and a few already had agreed to move to the new reservation along the Brazos River. Despite Coocoachee's warnings the gifts of the white were not gifts at all but cheap pay for their lands, he didn't believe they would join his idea of an alliance on the plains. The Kotsoteka, in their camps near the Double Mountains thought his idea was good, but told him to go to see the Yamparikas. These two bands would give rise to the Quahadi, who would continue to fight another 25 years.

He was about to meet Siskotah (Bald Head). Siskotah's band often traded Mexican mules in the Indian Territory. The famous Missouri mules originally were Mexican mules, and many of the mules used on the plantations of the deep South also were Mexican mules stolen by Comanches. During the drought of the early 1840s, the trade had numbered in the thousands as most of the Kotsotekas and many Yamparikas had gone to Mexico and had stripped many of the northern haciendas of anything worth trading. Little is known about Siskotah, because he mostly stayed away from the whites, except to encourage the establishment of Bent's Fort in the 1840s on the Arkansas River in Colorado, as another site to trade.

As Coocoachee visited with Siskotah over the next few days, he was amazed at the multi-ethnic makeup of the band. He had not realized there was an almost constant stream of immigrants from other tribes. He met Cherokees, Shawnees, Pawnees, Caddoes, Genizaros from northern New Mexico and even a couple of Seminoles and black Seminoles. The Comanches already had done what he was proposing. All of the people who wanted to live free of the rules of the Europeans — the Anglos of the U.S., and the Hispanics of Mexcio — yet gain wealth and prestige from raiding the Europeans had been gathering. During the discussions he realized his Seminoles and Seminole blacks would be subordinate to the Comanches if they sought a new homeland on the Llano Estacado.

As he visited with some of the Hispanic members of the tribe, he learned the Mexican Army would accept Indian scouts who fought against not only the Comanche empire, but the Apaches. Before he left Palo Duro, he made up his mind to take his people to Mexico, and so he did, departing Oklahoma in December of 1849 and returning for more people the following summer. Coocoachee died of smallpox in the late 1850s, a colonel of the Mexican Army scouts. Most of the Seminoles eventually returned to Oklahoma, but the black Seminoles became scouts for the U.S. Army and early west Texas cowboys.

Marilyn Monroe

Elizabeth Taylor

Look of old Hollywood glamour is a modern favorite

By Samantha Critchell
Associated Press

In the Hollywood landscape of new, new, new, what really stands out is that today's starlets still emulate the looks of classic screen beauties, including Elizabeth Taylor, Marilyn Monroe and Rita Hayworth, who ruled the red carpet in the 1950s.

Funny, you don't hear that much about Cher, Sharon Stone, or even Demi Moore and Julia Roberts, all very popular stars of the awards-show circuit in more recent history. Could you imagine Angelina Jolie all done up as Sally Field?

But Jolie made most of the best-dressed list from the Golden Globe awards earlier this month with her bright red lips and neat hair that complemented her glamorous gown.

"To reference the bygone era of past screen sirens, there's something about that genre that women gravitate to, men gravitate to and fashion gravitates to," says Jenn Karsten, director of education and artistry for the cosmetics brand Make Up For Ever.

"I think it's the essence of the real woman," she says. "If we referenced the '70s, '80s and the '90s even, the culture was shifting so much. It was a sexual revolution but with a strong androgynous look. It was, 'Don't look at me for my beauty, look at me for my brains, my power.' But if you look at Liz Taylor, Sophia Loren or Marilyn, they're all mega stars that were proven talents and proven beauties."

Lori Taylor, global pro lead makeup artist for Smashbox, says Hollywood back in the day was more about crafting a lasting image instead of jumping from trend to trend. "The 1940s and '50s had a ladylike glamour. Everything worked! These women weren't testing anything out. If you look at the women of the '80s, it was more about pushing the edge — and that's not as timeless."

It was a pretty rare occasion that the Monroes and Hayworths of the world would turn up somewhere without a well-planned outfit and full madeup face, adds Wende Zomnir, founding partner and creative director of Urban Decay. Their appearances were more staged than the paparazzi snapshots of today's stars, of course, but they also had fairly simple beauty routines, even if they wore a lot of product, she says.

Tips on recreating those looks:

■ Beautiful, full brows. "Pamela Anderson ruined brows," declares Zomnir. "Brows are hard to do right, but people are scared to let them grow."

She's like to see more people take their cue from Elizabeth Taylor, or at least Brooke Shields in the '80s.

■ A natural look. This isn't carte blanche to be natural, however, says Karsten.

The goal is a look that's simple, but well-groomed, with flawless skin and a few big statements, such as a bright lip color and jet-black lashes. You might need foundation, you'll need a good skin-care routine, you might even need time-consuming false lashes to make it look like you barely gave it a thought.

Balance those one or two bold moves with neutral-tone eyes and cheeks, she says.

■ Healthy lifestyle. Many ingredients commonly used in skin care today were virtually unknown 50 years ago, like antioxidants and peptides, said Charles Denton, CEO of skin-care company Erno Laszlo, but Laszlo, the company's late founder, was an early proponent of lifestyle approaches. He also personally worked with Monroe and Ava Gardner.

"He actively promoted a good diet, the idea of avoiding the sun and getting a good night sleep," Denton explains. "He supported antioxidants that do good when drinking red wine and eating dark chocolate."

■ Clean canvas. Targeting skin blemishes will mean less makeup — and less room for error, says Denton.

■ Red lipstick. "Red lipstick makes you walk a little taller, stand a little straighter and you'll get more attention and compliments," says Karsten. "Why not do it?"

Lori Taylor says there is a right shade of red for everyone. Most people can wear a warm red, but you have to try it on, she says. If it doesn't work, move toward something with a little bit more orange. It'll have the same effect but be friendlier to both pale and olive skin tones, she says.

Elizabeth Taylor made candy-apple red her signature, and Hayworth wore the red that really looks like real red. Monroe leaned toward a really rosy pink. A berry-tone fuchsia also turns heads and is easy to wear, especially for daytime, says Zomnir.

■ Highlighting instead of contouring. Contouring makeup that took advantage of staged lighting is clunky and cumbersome for a modern on-the-go lifestyle, says Lori Taylor. The modern version is highlighting (for example, by using bronzer), which adds dimension with just a few strokes here and there.

Kim Kardashian and Beyonce are masters, she says.

■ Playing to type. A sultry star — she has Eva Mendes, Megan Fox or Jennifer Lopez in mind — can do Hayworth with a good glow on the skin, Lori Taylor says, while a blond can do the contrast of pale skin and highly pigmented cosmetics.

Glee's Lea Michele does ad campaign for Candie's

NEW YORK (AP) — Lea Michele is moving from a locker to a much bigger closet. She's the star of the new Candie's ad campaign, dubbed "Hanging at Home," shot at a private mansion in Beverly Hills, Calif. The images show her poolside, in the kitchen, in a bed with satin sheets and in a walk-in closet, wearing a new outfit and pair of shoes in each one.

The 25-year-old star of "Glee" is following in the high-heel footprints of former brand spokeswomen Britney Spears and Fergie, among others. Michele says she particularly liked Spears' old ads. "I think they're fun and flirty and show off her body great."

Lea Michele has become a "get" for designers eager to show off their gowns on a hot, young starlet. At the recent Golden Globes, she wore a silver Marchesa gown that was straight from the runway.

BUSINESS SCENE

Blackbird Interior Design flies into Midland shopping center

Just opened in the Plaza Oaks Shopping Center at 2101 W. Wadley is BLACKBIRD INTERIOR DESIGN, FURNITURE AND ACCESSORIES.

Owners Melissa Morehead, who had operated a design studio out of her home, and Brooke Mayes, met at Alldredge Home when Morehead worked there to learn the retail business. When Alldredge Home announced it was closing, the two decided to open their own business.

The two offer design services but also operate a retail business selling furniture and accessories. "We carry everything, from contemporary to vintage, Hollywood glamor, French and Urban," Morehead said. "We even have a man-cave where the husbands can watch sports or a movie while their wives shop."

Morehead and Mayes came up with the name from the famous Beatles' song combined with the fact that the blackbird is iconic and is an American species. "We carry American furniture, we're an American company," she said.

Hours are 10 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. Tuesday through Saturday. More information is available by calling 618-2473 and the store has a Facebook page.

Targeting little miss Midlanders with a taste for the frilly is LE BOW BOUTIQUE, found at 2814 W. Wall Street next to Tall City Sweets.

"I do lots of hairbows, I carry tutus and clothes - zebra prints and frilly items," said boutique owner Viola Magana. "It's a unique girl's store."

She carries sizes infant to Girls' 7, she said.

Magana has also opened a consignment area, accepting childrens' clothing - for boys and girls - in all sizes through juniors.

Hours are 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Monday through Saturday.

More information is available by calling 689-2525.

With construction complete, Midland's newest KENT KWIK has opened for business at 4400 W. Illinois. The grand opening was celebrated with a ribbon cutting ceremony Tuesday.

The new store, Midland's largest, boasts 16 fueling positions at the gasoline island, including four diesel positions.

Inside the convenience store includes a delicatessen that offers sandwiches, burritos, even oatmeal, and a large beverage center dispensing hot and cold drinks. There is a Mr. Payroll that cashes paychecks. Customers can come in through the front door, park in back and enter through a back door or utilize the drive-up window.

The store is open 24 hours a day.

Minivan sales on the decline, overall car sales up in Midland-Odessa

By Kathleen Thurber
Staff Writer

After years of trying to break the stereotype of minivans as the trademark vehicle of soccer moms, some vehicle manufacturers have started moving away from the models all together.

Because as families look to become sportier and fuel costs continue to increase, the once-popular multi-seater designs have started to fade in recent years, auto dealers say.

According to data from IHS Automotive, minivans once accounted for close to 10 percent of all new vehicle sales in the U.S. In recent years, though, they've accounted for closer to 3 percent.

"We don't even make minivans anymore," said Beau Moore, new car and truck manager at Rogers Ford Lincoln. "There wasn't much demand."

Honda, Toyota and Chrysler dealers do still offer a minivan but staff say even when minivan sales are steady, the amount of revenue they generate pales in comparison to the large sale totals coming from trucks and SUVs on the lots.

Still, at least one manufacturer is hoping to this year shift the downward trend of minivans.

At last week's 2012 Detroit Auto Show, Chrysler unveiled its 700C concept van that moves away from the boxier vans that were well-known in previous years and works to make the van more of a sport utility vehicle.

It's not an entirely new concept as other manufacturers, including Honda, have redesigned the minivan in recent years in hopes of broadening its appeal. Honda's 2011 Odyssey was tweaked in an effort to market it to a larger number of generations. It said when the van was released that while the SUV has its positives, minivans with their open seating and sliding side doors are simply better at moving families in a quality way.

Mark Staring, general manager at Honda of Midland, said the concept did work. They've had steady sales of the model, particularly among area families.

The Odyssey sells for $25,000 or more, with the price increasing each time additional features are added.

In some parts of the country, the price of new vans has been what's kept buyers away more than its design, particularly when they consider the lower gas mileage the van will receive when compared with a car.

In the Permian Basin, however, Staring said price hasn't been a deterrent for many.

In overall vehicle sales, Honda of Midland saw an increase of 20 to 30 percent in 2011.

Other dealerships reported similar sales. Those whose major business is in trucks said sales were up as much as 30 percent in 2011 when compared with 2010.

"And 2010 was a great year," Moore said.

Part of why minivan sales took such a hit in recent years was because all automotive sales saw declines, according to economists.

"As we entered the recession, auto sales just took a beating," said Karr Ingham, Amarillo-based economist. "As a result of that, declines were so sharp and so deep that most places aren't even close to getting back to where they were before the downturn."

In Midland-Odessa that hasn't been the case, he said, as purchasing of everything has actually outpaced job growth in large part because of how closely the Permian Basin's economy is tied to oil and gas activity and profits.

Whether the minivan can grow at the same pace as other vehicle sales will be what determines how well it survives in the coming years.

Through the first half of 2011, Chrysler reported an increase in all vehicle sales but showed its steepest sales were being made in trucks and SUVs, which both posted increases of 34 percent.

Staring said some families will always trend toward the minivan if for no other reason than convenience.

Moore, however, said particularly in Midland, families tend to prefer SUVs.

"They're sportier and have more utility," he said.

Use personal comfort level to determine emergency fund range/2F

DAVE SAYS

Use personal comfort level to determine emergency fund range

DAVE RAMSEY

Dear Dave,

In your plan, you talk about Baby Step 3 as saving enough to have three to six months of expenses in your emergency fund. My husband and I were wondering how you can determine whether you need to be on the low end or high end of that range?

Amanda

Dear Amanda,

Lots of times in a marriage you'll have a situation where one person wants to save more, while the other is excited to move on toward investing. Technically, neither is wrong. So, the emergency fund really deals with someone's own personal level of peace. Remember Murphy's Law, and how it says that says if something can go wrong it will go wrong? Your emergency fund is Murphy Repellant. Some people just want to make sure he doesn't knock on the door, while others make sure he stays in the next county!

There are always practical considerations you can use to determine the amount of your emergency fund. If you both have very stable jobs, you'll probably be OK saving up three or four months of expenses. But if just one of you works outside the home, or if one is self-employed or on commission, leaning toward the six month side is probably a good idea.

Of course, you can always compromise. Start out with three months, but add a little every once in a while until you reach a point where you're both comfortable.

—Dave

Dear Dave,

We'll be completely out of debt in September and looking to buy a home in the next year or two. We're thinking of buying a repo home. Do you have any suggestions on where to find these?

Levi

Dear Levi,

One way is to buy the home from the owners before the sale happens. It's better for them because they realize some money and it stops the foreclosure. It's better for you, too, because you won't find yourself in a bidding war later on the courthouse steps!

You can also find listing in your local newspaper under the legal notices section, and if you live in a metropolitan area it's not hard to find a legal newspaper that lists incorporations, real estate transactions and foreclosures.

Dear Dave,

I've never heard you discuss at what point it's advisable to let someone else make and manage your investments. Also, is there a point at which it's good to go with a fee-only financial planner?

Anonymous

Dear Anonymous,

I think it's always a good idea to do it yourself. And to be honest, I never recommend fee-only planners.

Don't just turn everything over to someone else — no matter how many letters they have after their name — and let them manage it all or make all the decisions for you. You're the one who made the money, so you should take care of your own stuff. In lots of cases people looking for this kind of help have a greater net worth than the bozos dishing out advice and wanting to "handle" it all.

None of this stuff, investing, personal finance, or saving, is rocket science. You need to be in control of your money. Now, can you have counselors in your life? You bet! Everyone needs the benefit of people around them who have wisdom and experience.

But it's never a good idea to just blindly trust someone. If you do, you might end up like an old, washed up boxer — no money and no teeth!

THE ECONOMIST

A closer look shows income inequality not as cut-and-dried as it seems

RAY PERRYMAN

The Perryman Group

"Income inequality" has become a flashpoint, with protestors occupying various locales, campaigners jumping on the bandwagon, and pundits spouting statistics. It's an emotionally-charged issue, with the recession and sluggish recovery causing many families intense financial pain. Taking a step back from the rhetoric and looking at hard facts and real numbers reveals that it's not a simple case of "the rich getting richer while the poor get poorer." Here are a few patterns that may surprise you.

A long-term perspective shows that, actually, everyone is getting richer. Business cycles naturally affect incomes, but looking at long-term trends shows that average incomes are rising across the spectrum. The Congressional Budget Office recently completed a study of average household income over the period from 1979 to 2007; the CBO divided households into quintiles and looked at inflation-adjusted, after-tax incomes. One of the key findings from the analysis was that incomes rose for all groups over the period: up by 18 percent for those in the lowest 20 percent of households, up 60 percent for those in the 21st through 80th percentiles; and up 65 percent for those in the 81st through 99th percentiles. Americans across the spectrum are, thus, better off (and typically much better off) in terms of income than they were in 1979 even after accounting for price increases and taxes.

Even with all of this good news, however, the CBO study has been cited by some as evidence of problematic rising income inequality. In fact, the study does indicate rising inequality thanks to the substantial growth in incomes by the top 1 percent of the population, which were up by 275 percent over the period. (Note that this was just before the recession, when many of the highest earners were hardest hit in terms of percentage drops in income.)

Naturally, the rapid growth at the very highest levels tends to skew the picture in that it does mean that the lower income levels have a smaller share of the pie (though they're still better off than they were before since the pie is so much bigger). A number of possible explanations for this trend have been explored. One is that changing technology allows "superstars" to generate higher incomes. For example, a musician or an athlete has a much broader potential audience thanks to all of the media outlets and, therefore, can generate much larger earnings. Another possibility is that increasingly complex and large corporations lead to larger numbers of very highly compensated CEOs. Financial professionals, lawyers, and doctors have been identified as often in this group, which is not hard to believe. There have also been some tax law changes which could cause income that might formerly have been classified as business or corporate earnings (such as for certain types of small businesses) to show up as individual income. The favorable treatment of investment income is also advantageous to those who earn their money in this way.

In short, the evolving economy and society have made it possible for the top earners to earn far more than they did before. The interesting point is that this is seen as a bad thing. As an economist, I see the large potential returns to certain activities (such as owning a successful business or becoming a superstar in some field) as a very good thing — an incentive to do those things that help the economy grow and enhance our wellbeing. As a consumer, I'm glad that there are huge incentives for the late Steve Jobs and Apple to create iPhones, Bill Gates and the Microsoft crew to bring us Windows, top doctors in the field to keep pushing ahead with new and better ways to save our lives, and the countless entrepreneurs building businesses to do what they do best (and later sell their companies for a fortune if they choose). I'm all for that 1 percent being able to make the big money; it's good for all of us.

Looking at the other end of the spectrum — the poorest poor — also shows a story not always seen in the headlines. The U.S. Census Bureau looked at the dynamics of poverty during the 2004-2006 period in a study released in March. They looked at information collected by survey which shows how people transitioned into and out of poverty over a 36-month period. During that time, 29 percent of people experienced at least one poverty spell lasting at least two months (episodic poverty). Most poverty spells were short, with almost half ending within four months. Of those in poverty in 2004, almost 42 percent were not in poverty in 2006. Furthermore, less than 3 percent of people surveyed were in poverty throughout the entire time period. The bottom line is that people move into and out of poverty due to changing circumstances which are often short-term in nature. Chronic poverty is much less common.

People also move into and out of higher income groups. Tax return data from the Internal Revenue Service shows that in 2007, 392,222 returns were filed with adjusted gross income (AGI, adjusted by the IRS for deficits) of $1,000,000 or more, accounting for $1.4 trillion (16.1 percent) of total adjusted gross income. In 2008, the number of million-dollar returns stood at 321,295 for total AGI of less than $1.1 trillion (13 percent of the total). By 2009, as the recession took its toll, only 236,883 persons filed returns with $1 million or more in income for a total of $726.9 billion (9.5 percent of the total).

Poverty is certainly a difficult problem, and helping those in financial crisis is a worthy societal goal. However, all too often heated rhetoric obscures the reality of what's going on. Yes, the recession took a toll on the poor and the middle class, but it also harmed those with high incomes. Yes, the rich are getting richer, but so are the poor. And those who are poor now are unlikely to stay poor (just as those who are rich now may not stay that way). The best way to solve the problem lies in greater opportunities for all, rather than inflammatory, divisive battles of often inaccurate words and statistics.

Pruning trees without pruning your budget

A few weeks ago, I was driving down the street when I saw what looked like a new fence with a hole cut through it. The hole allowed an overgrown tree branch to pass through the fence unobstructed and continue to blossom.

It seems to me that a little bit of cautious tree pruning might have served the homeowner better. Pruning removes dead and unwanted branches, allowing a tree to grow lush and happy without causing any damage to property or becoming a safety hazard.

At the same time, I understood the homeowner's hesitance. Tree trimming services can be expensive and heading out with a saw and a prayer can be dangerous and unhelpful if you don't know what you're doing.

For those do-it-yourselfers out there, this time of year is a good time to prune your oak trees. Oak wilt is a disease that kills trees and is spread by a certain type of beetle. Those beetles are dormant during the coldest and hottest part of the year.

The Arbor Day Foundation and the U.S. Department of Agriculture have online tree pruning guides with other tips to help homeowners safely and effectively prune their own trees.

For those who prefer to hire professionals to keep their trees in shape, Better Business Bureau offers the following tips:

- Start with trust. When choosing a company, check its BBB Business Review for information about the business and any complaints that have been filed against the company. BBB's Request a Quote allows you to get quotes from multiple companies at the same time. Remember that the cheapest quote is not always the best.
- Beware of door-knockers. Most companies have business cards, uniforms, truck signs, etc. and the reputable ones are generally too occupied to solicit work in this manner. Remember that improper tree care can take many years to correct itself, and in some cases never corrects itself at all.
- Get an inspection and a written estimate. Find out exactly how much the service will cost and make sure the amount quoted includes all labor, clean-up and disposal charges. Services that quote a price without a visual inspection cannot be sure of the scope of the work involved.
- Hire someone who is bonded, licensed and insured. Tree trimming and removal can be very dangerous; true professionals will be able to cover their own mishaps.
- Ask for a Certified Arborist. They have passed the International Society of Arboriculture's extensive Certification Exam covering all aspects of tree care.

Want good customer service? Put down the phone

By Candice Choi
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Consumers are demanding better service in unprecedented ways.

In the past several months, public outrage has helped beat back efforts by Bank of America, Netflix and Verizon to raise fees or significantly alter services. The victories come at a time when money is tight all around and consumers are tapping into social media to air their frustrations with like-minded individuals.

"In the past people would be angry, but they'd be all over the country talking to their neighbors," said Kit Yarrow a professor of consumer psychology at Golden Gate University. "Now they can connect online and they have power."

For example, petitions on Change.org were instrumental in convincing Bank of America and Verizon to drop plans for new fees. "Bank Transfer Day," which sprang to life after Bank of America's announcement, called on Facebook supporters to move their money to a credit union or community bank.

Not every issue demands a mass call to action. But consumers basking in their newfound sense of empowerment should keep their expectations high going into 2012. Here are some strategies for making sure you get the service you deserve.

Work the chain of command

Before you switch into outrage mode, give a company a fair chance to right any wrongs. It may be that the issue can be easily resolved with a simple email or phone call to customer service.

But if the customary means aren't helpful, one strategy is to reach out to the company CEO or another high-ranking officer. Most major companies have "executive resolution teams" that field correspondence from customers who take their complaints to the top, says Edgar Dworsky, founder of Consumer-World.org, which features news and tips on deals. And these teams generally have a lot more leeway to appease customers.

To get your message in the right hands, start by searching under the "About" section on the company's website. Even if executive contact information isn't listed, you can usually figure out their email addresses based on the contact information listed for other employees. Otherwise, try mailing a letter to the corporate headquarters.

"Really boil it down," Dworsky said. "If it goes on and on, they're not going to have the time or patience to read it. Put yourself in the shoes of the recipient of the letter."

Make it easy for the company by quickly spelling out the resolution that you're seeking. And don't forget to include any relevant information, such as order numbers or purchase dates.

The Permian Basin has been yielding oil and natural gas for close to 90 years and, like the human body, those wells can develop problems with age.

"The No. 1 operational issue oil companies face in production is problems related to paraffin," states Herb Collier, owner-general manager of Southwest Environmental Products.

With more than 125,000 producing wells in the Permian Basin, he continued, "if you reduce drag, if you reduce electric costs, if you reduce operational costs, theoretically you could cut oil imports and even the price of oil."

Southwest Environmental provides microbes for use in treating a variety of issues, from paraffin build-up to cleaning oil spills and Collier said he is working to let operators know they have the option of using this technology.

"It's like going to the doctor and having him say he can get rid of your cholesterol; doing that would eliminate a number of other health issues," Collier said. "Paraffin is the cholesterol of the oil industry."

To help spread the word, the company is hosting a lunch-and-learn event Thursday, Feb. 2.

The event will feature Dr. Dennis Schneider, vice president of research and development at Micro-Bac International and adjunct professor of microbiology at the University of Texas at

Analyst: Permian Basin to play major role in North American production growth

■ Shale production expected to help U.S., Canadian oil production surpass record set in 1973.

By Mella McEwen
Oil Editor

Thanks to the shale boom that has migrated from natural gas to oil, production from U.S. and Canadian fields is expected to surpass records set nearly 40 years ago.

BENTEK Energy, a Colorado energy market analytics company, reports that by 2016, combined U.S. and Canadian production should grow by 36 percent or 3,100 million barrels a day, reaching 12,100 million barrels a day and surpassing the previous record set in 1973. Of that, 2,200 million barrels a day will be U.S. production, largely light or intermediate crudes. At the same time, the company said, oil imports should sink 41 percent or 2,800 million barrels a day to an average 3,900 million barrels a day by 2016. The exception will be imports from Canada, which BENTEK said should rise 900 million barrels a day.

"The Permian Basin will be a big part of that growth," said Matt Marshall, manager of oil analysis. "The volume of activity has stepped up so much. The Permian Basin, since early 2009 when prices were so pitiful, the number of rigs that are active have outgrown any other areas in the U.S. Because of that, we've seen production grow in almost a linear fashion." He said activity will not only continue to grow but should grow at an even faster rate due not only to drilling momentum but the high number of rigs at work in the Basin.

But it's not just the amount of rig activity, Marshall pointed out. "It's improving well results, it's improving technology like hydraulic fracturing." Technology that was proved in the gas shales like the Barnett and in tight sands are moving into conventional reservoirs, he said. "Old reservoirs are being retouched," he said.

Noting that North American production is expected to surpass the record set when domestic production was believed to have peaked, Marshall explained that the "peak oil" argument is "naturally biased toward the technology available then. Hydraulic frac-

Turning industrial plastic waste into ultra-low-sulphur diesel, heating oil or other mid-grade fuel is the purpose of this plant. The plant is created, owned and operated by Canadian green energy company JBI, Inc.

Canadian company turns waste plastic into ultra-low-sulphur fuel

By Paul Wiseman
Special to the Oil Report

Over a 10-year period running through the mid-1990s, Canadian entrepreneur John Bordynuik saw the beverage industry switch from glass to non-biodegradable plastic bottles. He saw those bottles littering roads and filling solid waste facilities. He also saw the world's increasing appetite for fuel, along with concerns about air quality.

Now he is convinced he has found a way to make inroads in all three categories by recycling waste plastic into ultra-low-sulphur fuels and carbon black while creating virtually no emissions.

The process, called Plastic2Oil®, currently uses post-industrial plastic to make a variety of mid-grade fuels, including diesel and heating oil, along with petcoke, also known as carbon black. Basically, the process involves heating the waste plastic in a gas-fired plant to break that plastic down into fuel. Approximately 10-12 percent of the output is in the form of butane, propane and hydrogen, which are used to fuel the fires that make the process work. The plant needs city-supplied natural gas only to start. "I start on natural gas for about the first four hours, then we cut over to our gas," said Bordynuik. After it reaches a certain temperature, the off-gassed butane and propane are enough to run the plant. Another 1-3 percent is petcoke and the rest is fuel that is basically usable without further processing, Bordynuik stated.

Bordynuik's company, JBI Inc., made the first processor in 2009. "We got a one-kilogram reactor that was making what I would call a 'spec fuel' at that time," he recalled. "That was pretty exciting for us because there had been a lot of attempts to change plastic into some kind of product." To get a usable form of fuel from it was particularly exciting from a marketing perspective.

"We evolved from a one-kg plant in 2009 to a fully commercial plant now, with permits, and over that time we increased from 1 kg every couple of hours to one ton to 20 tons per day and now to 4,000 pounds per hour in our latest plant, with no emissions," he continued. This is the equivalent of 100 bbl/day of fuel output. Each pound of fuel contains approximately 10,000 BTUs of energy.

There are so few emissions, said Bordynuik, that plant permitting has been very simple in New York and other places where plants have been installed. In one test, the emissions were found to be cleaner than the air inside the plant. Emissions were tested at 13 ppm NOX, which he called "very, very low" and "basically no carbon dioxide, very little VOCs (volatile organic compounds)." He added that his plant's emissions are typically about one-fifth those of a standard natural gas furnace.

Permitting is further simplified by the fact that the Plastic2Oil plants operate at atmospheric pressure, making blowouts highly unlikely.

JBI currently has contracts with plastics companies to receive their waste, and with trucking firms and fuel companies to buy the produced fuel. Waste plastic comes to JBI at no cost, which is still a bargain to suppliers because they avoid paying the landfill fees that would otherwise be required. Eventually the company wants to also take post-consumer waste but Bordynuik first sees a huge potential supply of the post-industrial variety.

He notes that the EPA estimates post-consumer waste to be 30 million tons per year. Although there are no estimates on industrial waste plastics, Bordynuik believes it is much higher.

RockTenn, a Georgia-based industrial packaging company that has one of the Plastic2Oil plants on its property, "has enough (waste plastic) to supply us for a long time" at JBI's current rate of growth. "We also have a plant in Niagara Falls, NY, which is not on RockTenn property," where, Bordynuik stated, "we bring our own plastic in." Much of that comes from a nearby meat packing plant, which is one of the largest in the United States.

Each plant is owned and operated by JBI, with just two or three employees required for monitoring of the mostly automated equipment and to fill the inlet hopper with plastic. The plant is 10 feet wide and 120 long.

The process is able to use most plastic as feedstock, with PVC being a major exception because of its low BTU content. Also, the presence of chlorine makes it difficult to maintain the near-zero production emissions goal.

It is not an accident that the Plastic2Oil process is so clean. Bordynuik stated his goal in having it created was to do so with no trade-off-being environmentally sound in just one or two aspects.

Rather than expand too quickly and risk being buried by a resulting mountain of debt, JBI has adopted a pay-as-you-go philosophy other than selling stock. "We are not funded by investment banks," he asserted. "We want to grow strategically, taking the lowest hanging fruit first."

JBI has no plants in Texas currently, but RockTenn has some locations in the state, and JBI's vice president of blending is from Texas, so Bordynuik said he feels his company is likely to establish a footprint in the state before long.

Given the large amount of waste plastic generated by both industry and consumers, Bordynuik believes his process eventually could make a difference in U.S. oil imports. Plus, it could significantly change landfill usage for the better.

Mud logger learns that lazy work will be found out

ARMANDO ARENIVAS

Hello, hope your kelly is high! I'm going to call this week's oilfield story "Plugged Jets." This Ain't No Bull!

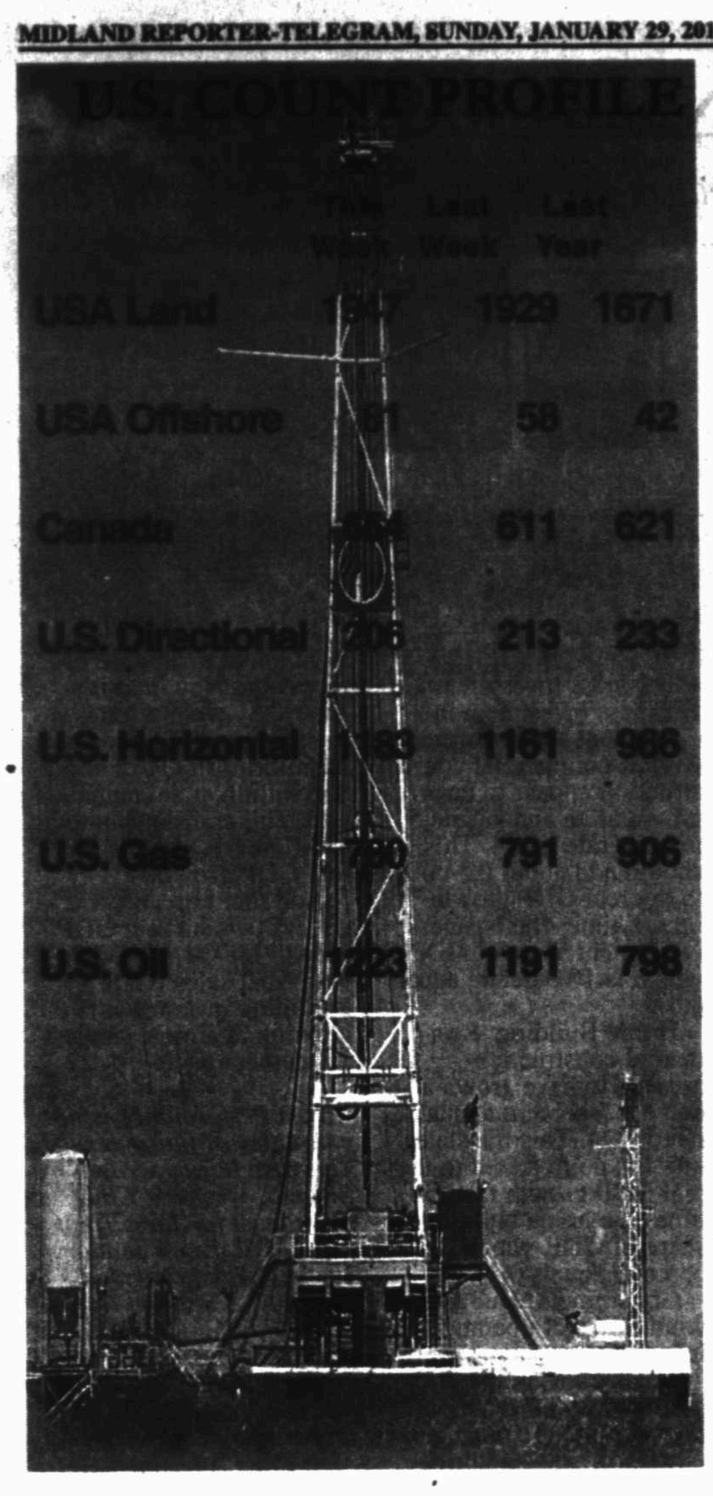

The evening tour crew was drilling ahead when the mud logger come up there with a bag of carbide to pump down the hole to see how long his lag time was going to be. On a connection, the crew put the carbide in the pipe and pumped it down the hole; about 10 minutes later, they blew the nail on the pop-off. The driller picked the kelly up and told the derrick hand to put another nail in the pop-off. The driller then kicked the pump in and the pump pressure came up really fast so he kicked it back out. The pressure stayed at about 2,000 pounds and did not bleed off. About that time the tool pusher walked up on the floor and told the driller it looked like the jets (on the drill bit) were plugged; he told the driller to try to chase it, to try to unplug the jets, but they had no luck getting it unplugged. He told them to pull the drill string out of the hole and get the jets unplugged. The crew started pulling a wet string (mud-filled pipe) and right before the drill collars; the pipe became dry, indicating the jets were unplugged. The jets don't often unplug themselves, so they went ahead and pulled the string all the way to the bit. When they got to the bit, they unscrewed it and looked in the jets but found nothing.

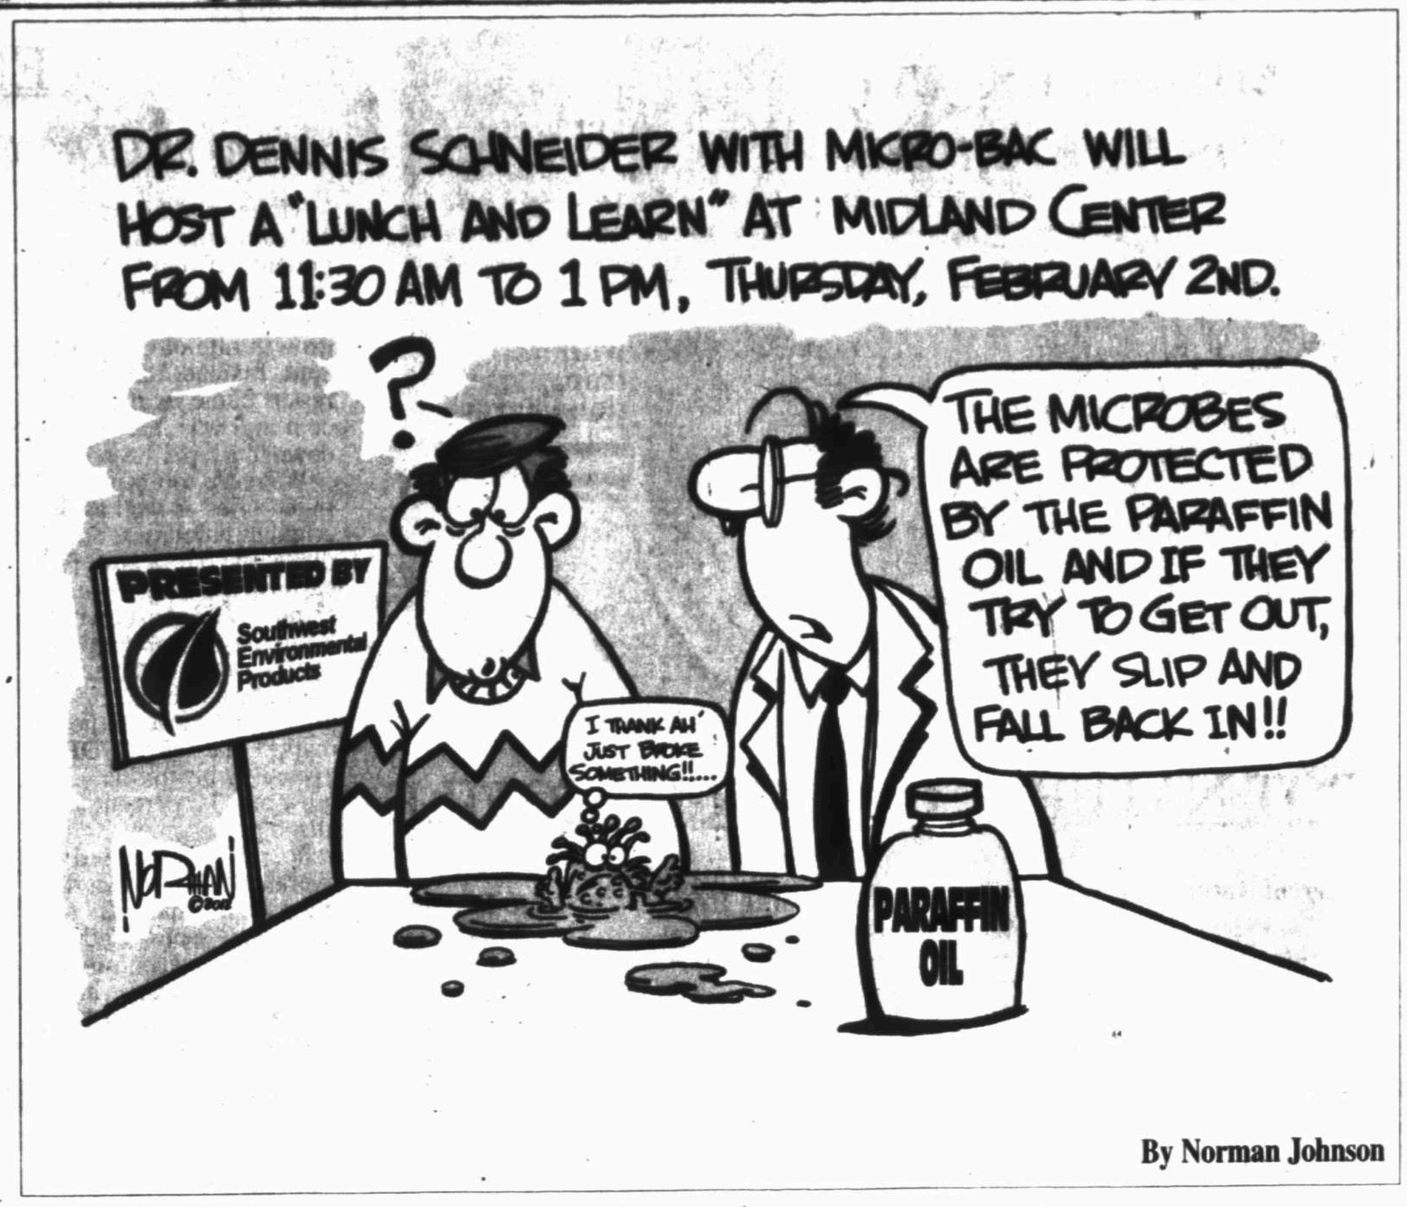

The very next day, the very same thing happened when they pumped the carbide. They pulled the bit again, and again found nothing. The pusher had the crew put a mud line screen between the vibrating hose and the mud line. It is very odd to pull out of the hole for a plugged jet and find nothing; but, the screen seemed to work because they were drilling ahead.

Three days later the mud logger came up again with another bag of carbide to pump down the hole and again they blew the nail in pop-off and had to make another wet trip. Right before the drill collars it came dry again; everyone was confused about the repeated mystery. They again pulled all the way to the bit and found NOTHING!

While drilling ahead the very next day, the mud logger came up there with another bag of carbide to pump down the hole. One of the hands dropped the bag while putting it the pipe and inside they found three red candy jaw breakers! The hands were very angry and took the candy to show the company man and tool pusher. The candy explained why they never found a plug in the jets; the candy plug would dissolve before they got to it.

The company man put the candy in his pocket and went to the mud logger's trailer. He knocked on the door and when the mud logger answered the door, he asked if they were coming out of the hole for another plugged jet. The company man replied, "No, we're drilling ahead today." The company man then went in the trailer and sat down. As he did, he noticed a bag of red jaw breakers on the counter. He told the mud logger to get his boss on the line, he needed to talk with him. Needless to say, the mud logger was run off!!!

Never practice this kind of lazy work; sooner or later you will be found out! Karma has her ways.

Hand of the week this week is Jerry Gay from Midland. Jerry is a directional driller and works for Cudd. Keep up the good work, Jerry.

Thanks for all the emails. Keep it safe, talk at you next time!

GROWTH

turing was pioneered in Texas. In 1973 there was fracturing and wells were treated with synthetic fracturing, but no one could have predicted anyone would be able to unlock the oil trapped in low-porosity rock and that new technology would let you get so much more oil be recovered the way we can now."

The belief at the time Hubbert's peak, named after geophysicist M. King Hubbert, was developed, was that there was much less economically recoverable oil, he said.

"Take the Bakken," Marshall said. "We knew where the reservoirs were, but we didn't have an economic way to extract it. Now we have the Bakken and, closer to you, the Wolfbone and the Spraberry that may have been largely ignored until now. That's not to say we don't have a finite amount of oil, but we have ways to extract more."

The additional oil being produced in the U.S. will be lighter or intermediate, considered superior grades of crude, he said, while the additional crudes coming from Canada will be heavier crudes. The increased imports from Canada will push out water-borne imports, primarily from North Africa and the Middle East, he said, "and not just by a little. Between the end of 2010 and 2016, there will be about 1.1 million barrels displaced by light domestic crude."

Those additional supplies — and BENTEK forecasts supply will exceed demand growth by 2016 - will result in over 75 pipeline expansions, 25 rail projects and seven refinery expansions to ease oversupply in some areas, such as at Cushing in Oklahoma. Those expansions should result in a spread between the price for West Texas Intermediate and Brent of $13 a barrel, with discounts for WTI of $3 in 2013 and 2014 after pipeline expansions link Cushing to the Gulf Coast. Discounts will be much larger by 2016 as supplies grow, the company said.

"The spread grew to the point pipelines couldn't ignore it any longer," Marshall said. "They realized it wasn't a transient issue and they'd need to pursue permanent solutions because the Permian Basin was sending so much more crude to Cushing, along with the Bakken and the emerging Niobrara. All the growing producing basins are sending their production to Cushing and the operators are saying this is going to last and they'd better develop a solution. Everyone's promoting ideas to push the oil from Cushing to the Gulf refineries."

Marshall concluded by saying that the growth in production benefits not just the oil and gas industry but everyone, with producing areas like the Permian Basin, North Dakota and Colorado "desperate" to find workers, not just to work on drilling or service rigs or drive trucks but "for occupations as simple as barbers, plumbers and electricians."

Easily overlooked, he said, is the fact that while American manufacturing has declined, the current technology-fueled boil boom is "American technology and American manufacturing that was invented here and perfected here and we're the first to benefit. It benefits manufacturing. It opens up the possibility of exports, exporting gas. This is very good news for our economy and we will continue to benefit. We've not discovered all the sources of economic oil yet."

MICROBES

From 1G

Austin. He has helped isolate different strains of microbes to attack different types of paraffin, Collier said, noting Micro-Bac provides the microbe products his company uses.

While discussing Micro-Bac's products, Schneider said, he also plans to offer an overview of how the microbes are being used in the oil and gas industry.

"We're using biotechnology to control or mitigate various problems, principally paraffin but also water injection, water quality issues and stimulation," Schneider said.

The use of microbes to treat well problems is gaining acceptance, he said, as products are improved and their use spreads around the globe.

"Our main competition is from the chemical companies, and there are some big companies," Schneider said. "We can eliminate or control chemical use. They don't like that and I can understand their point of view."

The microbes being used, he pointed out, are naturally-occurring and thus environmentally friendly and have been used in treating wells for the last 20 years. The first use of microbes to treat paraffin build-up was in the Austin Chalk, he noted. Schneider described it as an alternative technology, particularly for operators unhappy with the results from conventional treatments.

Schneider said he is excited about the level of activity in the Permian Basin and during a recent trip to Midland was happy to see the number of drilling rigs in the area. "We have a role in hydraulic fracturing," he pointed out. "We will have a a role in the future as the industry tries to be more environmentally friendly, " and the company is always looking for new applications. In fact, he said, the Permian Basin is home to some cutting edge research right now.

There are, he said, "a lot of people who think the domestic industry is dead," he observed. "There's a lot of oil yet to find. The ground is a deep place and we don't know for sure what's down there."

Deal boosts Apache holdings in Panhandle, West Oklahoma

Houston Chronicle

Houston-based Apache Corp. will double its holdings in the Anadarko Basin of the Texas Panhandle and Oklahoma with a $2.85 billion deal to acquire Cordillera Energy Partners III.

The deal, which the companies announced Monday, adds 254,000 net acres and about 800 producing wells to Apache's portfolio in the region, including oil and natural gas reserves in the Granite Wash, Tonkawa, Cleveland and Marmaton plays. The acquired land holds about 88 million barrels of oil equivalent in proven reserves, according to Apache.

The company said it will drill more than 200 wells in the area this year, and will increase its use of horizontal drilling to get at oil and gas locked in the area's tight formations.

"Apache always has believed that the Anadarko Basin is one of the most prolific unconventional plays in North America," said CEO G. Steven Farris, in a conference call with analysts. "It's one of the highest rate-of-return projects we have in the company and adding this transaction just doubles our position there."

Apache said about half of production in the Anadarko Basin has been dry natural gas - the price for which has plummeted because of an oversupply in the U.S. market.

But Farris noted that 80 percent of revenue from the area is projected to come from oil and natural gas liquids, which command much higher prices.

Pearce Hammond, managing director of research for Simmons & Co. International, said the high percentage of dry gas in the deal raised concerns about the price Apache paid for the acreage.

"We were surprised that it was such a full price, given the backdrop of very low gas prices," he said. "But with 80 percent of the revenue coming from liquids, their point was that gas doesn't matter as much."

Apache said it will ramp up use of horizontal drilling, a technique that is paired with hydraulic fracturing to improve the flow of oil and natural gas in dense rock formations.

Horizontal wells now account for about half of Apache's daily production of 40,000 net barrels of oil equivalent in the region, the company said.

Apache executives noted that the company has operated in Oklahoma for more than 50 years and drilled 2,500 wells in the Anadarko Basin.

"We can hit the ground running when we close," said Rodney J. Eichler, Apache president and chief operating officer. "We have a rich inventory of drilling locations that provides decades of development and growth."

Apache expects the deal to close by Apr. 30, subject to regulatory approval.

Cordillera is a privately held oil and gas exploration and production company headquartered in Denver. Its investors — including Texas private equity firm EnCap Investments and individual Cordillera managers - will receive $600 million in Apache stock. Apache will fund the remaining $2.25 billion of the deal with debt.

Analyst expects more companies to follow Chesapeake's lead

By Dan X. McGraw

Houston Chronicle

Energy companies likely will ramp down production of natural gas because of low prices and constrained storage space, following the lead of Chesapeake Energy, a BNP Paribas analyst said.

The Oklahoma City-based company said it will cut production and reduce spending in gas fields by 70 percent after prices hit a 10-year low last week. Chesapeake said it will immediately cut output by 500 million cubic feet a day and idle half its rigs, and is prepared to cut daily output by up to 1 billion cubic feet.

BNP Paribas analyst Teri Viswanath said more companies will need to take similar proactive measures to keep natural gas economical viable and create the necessary storage space for future production.

"You are going to have to see more than just Chesapeake," she said. "For us to balance this market, other producers are going to have to take some proactive measures."

Viswanath said a mild winter contributed to drop in demand and constrained storage facilities, and as a result, prices have dwindled below $2.50 per million British thermal units.

Chesapeake Energy CEO Aubrey K. McClendon said the mild winter sent prices below the company's expectations and below levels that made drilling economically attractive.

McClendon called on other companies to also cut output to combat sinking prices and constrained storage hubs.

"Having led the industry in natural gas production growth over the past 10 and five years, we recognize the need to demonstrate leadership and take action now in order to protect value for our shareholders."

Chesapeake has been shifting its focus to fields with oil and natural gas liquids. In the Barnett Shale in North Texas, which mostly produces a less-valuable "dry" gas," production has been slowly declining.

Viswanath warns prices likely won't be seeing a rebound in 2012.

"In light of the present requirement to maintain supplies within the confines of physical system constraints, we expect that this price recovery will now be delayed," she said.

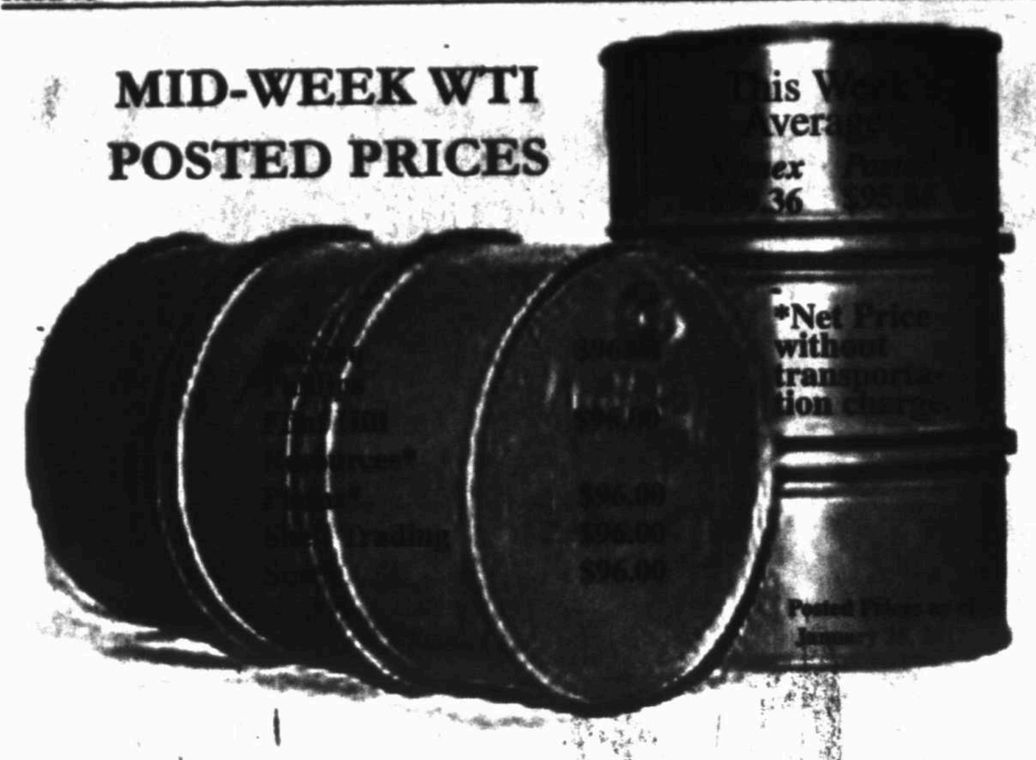

She predicted prices to average $2.70 per million Btu in 2012, but natural gas prices should start to edge up to $3.85 in 2013.

Adding up GDP components suggests 3.5 percent growth rate

Bhupen Agrawal is Branch Manager and Managing Director - Investments for Wells Fargo Advisors' Midland office.

Amit Agrawal is an Associate Vice President - Investment Officer and Financial Advisor with offices in Midland and Austin.

Three months ago, we added up the major components of real GDP for the third quarter and predicted a solid annualized growth rate of 3.5 percent. Instead, the advance report came in at 2.5 percent and was later revised down to a tepid 1.8 percent.

We were too high on inventories as well as government purchases, and that made our overall forecast too high. However, our estimates of consumer spending, business investment, home building, and the trade balance were all pretty darn close to the mark. Final sales (GDP excluding inventories) grew at a 3.2 percent annualized rate.

So, while we missed on overall GDP, the underlying pace of final sales to the private sector made it clear that the economy did not need more government spending, temporary Keynesian-style tax cuts or more quantitative easing.

Now, once again we have added up the major parts of GDP and are forecasting … a 3.5 percent annual pace of growth in Q4. Be aware up front, however, that our predictions for consumer spending, business investment and home building are quite modest. Much of the growth we see in Q4 is due to our forecast that a surprising drop in business inventories during Q3 will be offset by a rebound in Q4. Another check on the forecast is that hours worked in the private sector were up at a 3 percent annual rate in Q4, so even modest productivity growth (growth in output per hour) suggests more than 3 percent increases in output.

Consumption: Auto sales were up at a 36 percent annual rate in Q4 while retail sales ex-autos were up at a 5.1 percent rate. Services, a major part of consumption, were not up as much, but it looks like real personal consumption - goods and services combined - probably climbed at a 2.3 percent annual rate in Q4, contributing 1.6 points to the real GDP growth rate (2.3 times the consumption share of GDP, which is 71 percent, equals 1.6).

Business Investment: Business investment in equipment and software as well as commercial construction appear to have grown at an annualized 5 percent rate in Q4. This should add about 0.5 points to the real GDP growth rate (5 times the business investment share of GDP, which is 10 percent, equals 0.5).

Home Building: Residential construction appears to have grown at about a 5 percent annual rate in Q4. This translates into 0.1 point added to the real GDP growth rate (5 times the home building share of GDP, which is 2 percent, equals 0.1).

Government: Due to the wind-down of operations in Iraq, defense outlays were unusually soft in Q4. So, despite signs of a bottom in government construction - think schools and bridges - real government purchases shrank at about a 3.5 percent rate in Q4, which should subtract about 0.7 percentage points from the real GDP growth rate (-3.5 times the government purchase share of GDP, which is 20 percent, equals -0.7).

Trade: In the last five years, the trade sector has added an average of 1.2 points to the real GDP growth rate in Q4. We probably won't get the same size boost this time, but do expect a modest add of about 0.3 points on the growth of real GDP.

Inventories: As always, inventories are a wild card. Inventories actually fell in Q3, which is rare for an economic expansion. We think businesses were way too cautious. They didn't want to get caught holding too much merchandise just in case the pessimists were right about a "double-dip" recession. Now that it's clear they were wrong, we look for a solid build to inventories in Q4 of about $55 billion at an annual rate. This translates into an additional 1.7 points for real GDP growth.

Add them up and you get 3.5 percent real GDP growth for Q4, although with final sales (GDP excluding inventories) growing at a more modest 1.8 percent pace.

North Dakota Gov. Jack Dalrymple speaks during a meeting of the North Dakota Industrial Commission on Monday, Jan. 23, 2012, in the governor's conference room in the North Dakota Capitol in Bismarck, N.D., about proposed changes to North Dakota's oil and gas production rules. The commission on Monday approved the changes, which will reduce the number of open pits that are used for waste dumping during oil drilling. Dalrymple is chairman of the commission. Rules to cut North Dakota oil waste pits endorsed

By Dale Wetzel
Associated Press

BISMARCK, N.D. — North Dakota oil regulators on Monday endorsed new rules aimed at reducing the number of oil waste disposal pits and disclosing the chemical makeup of fluids pumped underground to coax oil to the surface.

The rules, developed over several months, are acceptable to western North Dakota's burgeoning oil industry, even though they are likely to increase production costs, an industry representative said.

A spokesman for an environmental group said the regulations were not strict enough, saying they should at least require flow monitors on pipelines used to dispose of salt water. Brine is a byproduct of oil drilling, and some recent large spills have contaminated farmland.

The new rules do not require all disposal lines to have flow monitors, said Donald Nelson, of Keene, spokesman for the Dakota Resource Council.

"We can't afford to sacrifice agricultural production for the convenience of the oil and gas industry," he said.

North Dakota's Industrial Commission on Monday approved the regulations. Gov. Jack Dalrymple is chairman of the commission, which oversees the state Department of Mineral Resources, North Dakota's oil and gas regulatory agency. The commission's other members are Agriculture Commissioner Doug Goehring and Attorney General Wayne Stenehjem.

The rules still must undergo review by a legislative oversight committee. Lynn Helms, director of the Department of Mineral Resources, said he hoped they would be in place by June.

North Dakota's oil production has more than quadrupled in the last five years, from 115,370 barrels daily in November 2006 to 509,754 barrels daily last November, agency data shows. During the same period, the number of operating oil wells jumped from 3,415 to more than 6,000.

When a well is drilled, a producer typically digs an open pit to use for dumping oil-drilling muds, diesel fuel and chemicals used during the drilling process, as well as rock chips ground up by the drill itself. The pit is later filled in and reclaimed.

The new rules mostly ban the dumping of liquid drilling wastes into an open pit, unless the well is less than 5,000 feet deep or the drilling muds contain mostly fresh water. Drilling muds are used to maintain a well's pressure, cool the drill bit and clear away ground-up rock chips.

The regulations do allow producers to use open pits to dispose of rock chips and other solid wastes.

"There are extraordinary circumstances that may arise where you need an open pit for a well below 5,000 feet," Stenehjem said. "But that is to be the exception, not the rule."

The rules also affect hydraulic fracturing, a process that is driving North Dakota's oil production. Water, grit and chemicals are pumped underground at high pressure to crack, or fracture, oil-bearing shale rock and promote oil flows.

Once oil companies finished "fracking" a well, the rules require them to post information about the chemical composition of the fluid they used within 60 days, Helms said.

All oil wells must carry bonds, which are intended to cover cleanup costs if they are abandoned. Individual oil wells must carry a $50,000 bond, an increase from $20,000, the rules say, and bonds that cover more than one well must be at least $100,000. Wells used for commercial disposal of salt water must have a bond for at least $50,000.

The Industrial Commission delayed accepting the rules last month when Dalrymple said they were too vague about the conditions under which producers would still be allowed to dump liquid waste in open pits.

Helms said the rules were then changed "to provide some guidance as to what kind of mud systems we would consider allowing a reserve pit for."

"In other words, no diesel fuel, no high (sodium) content, which are two things that cause issues in the environment," Helms said.

Ron Ness, president of the North Dakota Petroleum Council, said the industry backed the rule changes.

"They are going to add substantial cost to the operations, and substantial investment in the equipment," Ness said. "You have to extract all of those liquids on (the well) site. You have to haul those liquids off site ... More equipment. More costs. More time."

Shift to liquids helps keep Halliburton profit growing

By Emily Pickrell
Houston Chronicle

Halliburton's fourth-quarter earnings grew nearly 50 percent as it followed customers from natural gas into oil and gas liquids exploration in the U.S., company officials said Monday.

"The shift from natural gas to liquids-rich plays continues and was quite apparent in the fourth quarter," CEO Dave Lesar said during a conference call to discuss the financial results.

He noted that U.S. oil rig count increased by 8 percent during the quarter while the natural gas rig count dropped 2 percent.

Halliburton posted net income of $907 million for the quarter, up from $607 million in 2010. Fourth-quarter revenue rose 36.9 percent to $7.06 billion.

The Houston-based oil field services company's revenue and earnings growth has tracked the exploration fever in North American shale plays.

Halliburton's full-year revenue increased to $24.8 billion in 2011, a 38 percent increase over $17.9 billion in 2010.

Annual net income was $2.8 billion in 2011, up from $1.8 billion in 2010.

Bill Herbert, an analyst with Simmons International, said the hot spell in the services industry may be cooling a little.

"We've had a two-year period of unbridled market expansion for Halliburton and its peers in North America," Herbert said, describing a growth spurt after the worst of the economic slump in 2008. "We are now transitioning into a new phrase, with a less-fervent growth."

Costs of moving equipment and personnel to liquid-rich fields are eating into margins as natural gas prices hover at less than $3 per million British thermal units.

Herbert also noted a maturing market for horizontal drilling - a process that along with hydraulic fracturing has been key to the surge in shale exploration and production.

"The market has been significantly undersupplied because of the growth of drilling and service intensity," said Herbert. "Now the market is becoming better-balanced." As a result, raw materials and labor costs have increased for Halliburton, but its ability to pass increases on to customers has lagged behind.

Tim Probert, president of strategy and corporate development, said Halliburton will push this year to lower the costs in its North America operations, as it shifts towards more profitable areas.

Halliburton shares closed Monday down 76 cents at $35.44 in trading on the New York Stock Exchange.

Some analysts say it is underpriced, the result of investor concern about a possible equipment glut relative to future drilling demand.

"Haliburton's stock has been weak on the basis that if the North American market softens at all, because of natural gas or if oil prices come down, that this is an area where we have had a lot of building of equipment," said James Crandell, managing director of Oil Services Research for Dahlman Rose & Co., who gives the stock a "buy" rating. "We could see some erosion and in pricing and profitability."

Report: Energy imports' share of demand down almost half by 2035

By Puneet Kollipara
Houston Chronicle

Increases in domestic oil and gas production, efficiency and use of renewables will cut the share of U.S. energy demand fulfilled by imports nearly in half by 2035, a federal agency said.

Net imports will satisfy 13 percent of energy demand in 2035, down from 22 percent in 2010 and 29 percent in 2007, according to an analysis from the U.S. Energy Information Administration, an agency of the Department of Energy that prepares studies and compiles data on energy. Additionally U.S. emissions of greenhouse gases will remain below 2005 levels by 2035, according to the agency.

"These projections reflect increased energy efficiency throughout the economy, updated assessments of energy technologies and domestic energy resources, the influence of evolving consumer preferences, and projected slow economic growth," Howard Gruenspecht, the EIA's acting administrator, said in a statement.

Domestic oil production will rise 20 percent by 2020 to 6.7 million barrels a day, the highest level since 1994, as shale oil production continues and more Gulf of Mexico resources are developed, according to the agency. That rise will help reduce oil imports, the report added.

Also U.S. natural gas production will exceed consumption by early in the 2020s, according to the agency, as continuing shale-gas development boosts domestic output, pipeline imports drop and pipeline exports rise. Natural gas prices should remain low in the U.S. relative to other markets, the agency projected.

But recoverable shale gas resources may not be as high as once thought, the agency said. The analysis estimated total recoverable shale-gas resources at 482 trillion cubic feet, down from 827 trillion in 2011?s outlook.

Fossil fuels will continue to dominate, absent a major policy shift, the report said, echoing another more globally-oriented outlook from BP. Their share of U.S. energy demand will fall from 83 percent in 2010 to 77 percent in 2035, according to the agency's report.

Use of renewable energy sources will increase, primarily on the electricity grid, according to the report, which found the share of renewable power generation will increase from 10 percent in 2010 to 16 percent by 2035. But that share could rise further if the U.S. extends renewable-energy tax credits and other incentives that are due to expire in the coming years, the report said.

Coal, which now provides almost half the nation's electricity, will decline significantly as tougher pollution regulations go into effect, power demand ticks down and competition from renewable sources and natural gas take their toll, the report said.

Coal's share of generation, already down from 50 percent in 2005 to 45 percent in 2010, will decrease to 39 percent in 2035, the agency said. But the Sierra Club, an environmental group, noting that last year's outlook forecast coal's share in 2035 four points higher than this year's outlook, said the actual percentage could be lower.

"Even today's EIA projections remain far too rosy for coal," Bruce Nilles, senior director of the group's Beyond Coal Campaign, said in a statement.

Although greenhouse-gas emissions will rise 3 percent from 2010 to 2035, they nonetheless will stay below 2005 levels thanks largely to coal's decline, improved efficiency and state-level renewable-power mandates, the agency said. Energy use and climate-warming emissions fell from 2005 levels as a result of the recession.

The agency added that greenhouse-gas emissions and net oil imports will fall further than projected if the U.S. finalizes proposed fuel-economy standards for cars, minivans and pickup trucks. Last fall two federal agencies proposed standards for model years 2017 to 2025 that would roughly double mileage from current levels by the end of that period.

Upcoming fuel-efficiency standards could prevent 6 billion metric tons of greenhouse gases — almost what the U.S. emitted in all of 2009 — from entering the atmosphere over the lifetimes of the vehicles covered, according to the White House. They also would cut oil use by 2.2 million barrels per day by 2025, roughly one-fourth of current levels, the White House says.

MCT to present musical for third time

Relationships and gambling don't mix or do they in the musical "Guys and Dolls," opening Friday at Cole Theatre, 2000 W. Wadley Ave?

Gambler Nathan Detroit needs funds to support his floating craps game. To solve his problem, the Save-a-Soul Mission good girl, Sgt. Sarah Brown, becomes the center of a wager between Detroit and gambler Sky Masterson. Detroit must also keep his longtime show-girl fiancé, Adelaide, from finding out about his continued gambling while dodging a trip down the aisle and the police.

"I think 'Guys and Dolls' is one of the best musicals of all time," said Tim Jebsen, executive director of Midland Community Theatre. "It's got great music, great characters, and it also, I think, has a lot of humor that really helps it as well."

With music and lyrics by Frank Loesser and book by Jo Swerling and Abe Burrows, the musical is based on "The Idyll of Miss Sarah Brown" and "Blood Pressure," two short stories by Damon Runyon, and also borrows characters and plot elements from other Runyon stories. Premiering on Broadway in 1950, the original production ran for 1,200 performances and won the Tony Award for Best Musical.

This marks the third time in its history MCT has produced "Guys and Dolls."

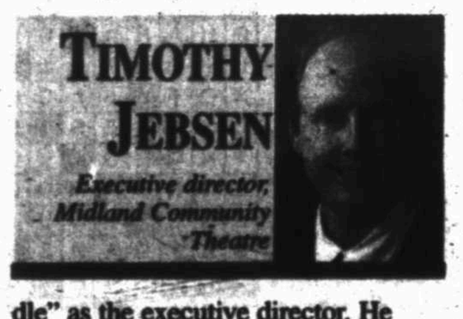

"I would call it about average," Jebsen said regarding the cost of producing the musical. "Certainly it has a lot of great set pieces and we are building some great costumes for the show."

New to the MCT stage is Mark Kaufman who has been cast as Sky Masterson.

"I actually grew up here, and I've been a band director in Andrews for seven years," said

There would be no MCT without the vision, talent, leadership of Art Cole

I first met Art Cole in 1997, after I had been hired as only the third executive director in Midland Community Theatre's history. One of the first things I noticed about Art was that what he lacked in stature he more than made up for in his presence and theatrical knowledge. Art and I had a great discussion that day about the history of Midland Community Theatre and his opinion about its leadership and future. He was more than happy to answer all of my questions, and willing to share his advice without imposing his opinion upon me.

I will never forget the main piece of advice he provided to me that day. He told me to "lead from the middle" as the executive director. He explained he believed the director should not stand away from the audience and volunteers and tell them to follow, but rather to be among the volunteers and get to know the audi-

Cole made MCT theater with international reputation

"I would employ Art Cole," replied Doug Heck of Heck Exploration when asked what reference he would have given for the founding director of Midland Community Theatre. Almost in the same breath he said, "Don't do it. He'll have your job in three weeks." He laughed. "Be nice to him. He'll let you have his job when he takes yours."

Not that Art Cole, who passed away Jan. 22 at the age of 92, would intentionally have gone after someone else's job. He was just talented at whatever he set out to do.

As both Joan Baskin, longtime civic leader and arts supporter, said of Art Cole and Mary Lou Cassidy, longtime MCT supporter and producer of the Maverick Players, concurred: "He was one of the few

MUSICAL

From 1H

Kaufman. "I had the opportunity to audition for the play. I had grown up with music and watched musicals. I had come to many of their (MCT's) productions before, and I've loved them. Some friends of mine who are actually in the show convinced me to tryout."

Kaufman was ready to accept any part, but he hoped for a leading role. In being cast as Sky Masterson, he said, "I feel very fortunate. There were so many good people to choose from, and I was really grateful they decided to go with me. This is a great show. I'm loving every minute of rehearsal and can't wait for the performances to start."

This marks the second time John Briggs, who this time has been cast as Nathan Detroit, has been in a MCT production of "Guys and Dolls."

"Actually I think it was the first musical I saw live," said Briggs. "I saw it when I was in high school. My high school did it. I saw three performances of it. I loved the music. There's not a bad song in the show.

"And when MCT did the show back in 1998, it was the first musical that Tim directed here. I got to be in it. And it's just one of my favorite shows, and I've always wanted to play the role of Nathan Detroit. So this is sort of a dream role."

Briggs agreed with Jebsen about the appeal of "Guys and Dolls."

"It's one of the best constructed American musicals that exists," said Briggs. "And it's very funny. I can't imagine who would not have a good time at this show. Anyone who sees it will have a great time."

The bidding:

Opening lead: Nine of ♡

If the Good Lord had been a bridge player, we would have been born with 13 fingers. That would have made counting a hand easier.

North was surprised to hear partner open the bidding with one no-trump. The point count suggested that a small slam was the maximum that could be bid with confidence, and North got there in one fell swoop.Since the king of clubs lead was more likely to cost than gain, West selected the safe heart lead. Declarer could count eight fast winners outside spades, so that suit had to produce four tricks for the slam to come home.

Declarer started by cashing seven tricks in the red suits. East followed to six of these and discarded a diamond on the last heart. West discarded a club on the third diamond. At this point declarer had no clue as to how the spades were divided. Both defenders followed to the ace of clubs and ace-queen of spades. South played dummy's remaining spade and elected to rise with the king.

With a little foresight, South could have obtained a complete count of the hand. All that was needed was to lead a club from dummy at trick two and insert the jack! When declarer cashes his winners outside spades, East will become marked with three hearts, five diamonds and just one club, so therefore the defender must have four spades. So, after cashing the ace and queen of spades and the jack does not appear, declarer has a marked finesse for the jack at trick 12. Easy, if you think of it!

THEATER

From 1H

geniuses I've ever known because he could do anything and do it well."

The last time Heck saw Cole was 10 years ago.

"I was producing the (Summer) Mummers that he created," said Heck, whose parents Katie and Doug Heck were actively involved at MCT when the younger Heck was a child. "He was there before I was born. I've known him literally all my life. I kind of grew up in the theater."

Cole first came to Midland during World War II when he was stationed at Midland Army Air Field at Terminal from April 1942 to May 1945. During that time he acted in several productions of the Midland Civic Theatre and directed war-bond shows using base personnel as well as Midlanders.

In 1943, Ruth Martha Rayme of Fond du Lac, Wis., joined him here. The two were married in the home of Naomi Lancaster, a longtime supporter of the arts. Ruth Cole, Art Cole's former wife, passed away Jan. 1.

In 1945 Cole was sent to Guam. From there he sent out queries looking for a theater position. Among those queries was one to Midland, which at that time had around 10,000 residents.

The response he received from Midland Civic Theatre said, "We need you." He found out later the letter was from Lancaster, the mother of Addilee Lancaster Abell Penn, an active member of Midland Civic Theatre.

Cole returned here in January of 1946, just in time for the Civic Theatre's memorable opening night production of "It Pays to Advertise."

Within an hour after the show, overheated wires on photoflood lights on the stage ignited the curtain and fire gutted the stage area of the City-County Auditorium, almost literally bringing the house down. The production and the Civic Theatre closed, and Midland Community Theatre was born.

"They had a meeting to form this organization at Naomi's home and had people like Ronald DeFord, who became its first president, Judge Clifford Keith, Judge Elliott Barron, Frank Stubbleman, Mrs. Jon P. (Alva W.) Butler and Mr. And Mrs. W.A. (Grace L.) Waldschmidt there," Ruth Cole told the Reporter-Telegram during Midland's centennial year. "I give Ronald a lot of credit for providing a solid framework in the beginning of Midland Community Theatre, which made the organization a viable, credible one."

The charter for MCT was adopted in April of 1946. A total of seven regular productions were staged along with two children's shows. Total revenues the first season were $6,762, including $3,400 from memberships.

"You had to be there to really understand," Ruth Cole said in 1985. "There was such enthusiasm, such a 'joie de vivre,' a willingness to work.

"We rented Naomi's guest studio for almost three years while the theater was getting on its feet, and we were beginning our family. It really was the fun time; those were happy days."

The same guest studio was moved and the Lancaster House, where the formative meetings of MCT were held, was demolished by the Museum of the Southwest on Nov. 6, 1984. Lancaster had given both to the museum in 1970.

The first productions, "George Washington Slept Here" and "Uncle Harry," were held at Midland High School Auditorium. The opening production in the rebuilt City-County Auditorium, a Quonset structure located where the Midland County Public Library is now, was an evening of one-acts.

"They started doing shows there and selling memberships, just the two of them," Cassidy said. "They were the janitors. Ruth was up front and he was at the back building sets. He kept recruiting volunteers. He was brilliant at recruiting volunteers. They didn't have to hire a lot of staff. They had volunteers by the hundreds."

In June of 1981, Cole, who had an exhibition of his watercolors at what was then Theatre Midland and is now Cole Theatre, spoke with the Reporter-Telegram about his years at MCT.

"When I started the theater in 1946, it was a one-year job," Cole said. "I just never got finished. I never had a contract. If the theater didn't like what I was doing, they could fire me at 8 o'clock any morning, and, conversely, if I didn't like it, I could quit at 8 o'clock any morning. It makes for the best kind of relationship, one which entails mutual respect and trust."

In 1949, MCT launched what has become its major fundraiser, the Summer Mummers, an annual melodrama and olio. The first production, "The Drunkard," starred Cole as the hero and Norris Creath as the villain and was directed by Bill Pomeroy and produced by Bill Pennebaker. It was staged in the American Legion Hall behind the City-County Auditorium and raised $1,800.

"I went down on a lark to try-out for the Summer Mummers in 1953 and was cast as Art Cole's sidekick, and we did it for 20 years," said Scotty Alcorn, who at 6 feet, four inches was a foot taller than Cole.

On Feb. 6, 1958, MCT opened its new home at Theatre Center on Indiana Avenue, behind Chase Bank, with the company's 75th major production, "Oklahoma." Thus began the tradition of opening each season with a musical. That decade, MCT presented "Guys and Dolls," the musical that is opening the 2012 season. In 1978, the theater moved into its current home at 2000 W. Wadley Ave.

After 34 years, Cole resigned as executive director effective July 1, 1980, and moved to Colorado to pursue a career as an artist. At that time he was named director emeritus and continued to remain actively involved in the theater's activities, including directing the annual Summer Mummers in its new home at the Yucca Theatre.

"I assume the theater would let me stay around until the end, allowing the moss to grow on my north side," Cole said in his resignation letter to William Morrow, then president of the MCT board of governors. "However, I cannot do that for a variety of reasons, not the least of which is that it would not be good for the theater. Instead, I intend to use whatever is left of my three-score-and-ten to try some of the things I wanted to do 30 years ago."

In his letter announcing the change to MCT members, Morrow said, "Art Cole's talent, energy, dedication and love for the theater has transformed Midland Community Theatre into a theater with an international reputation offering a broad variety of productions."

Cole continued to pursue his art, living first in Colorado and then New Mexico. He and his wife, Ruth, separated when he left Midland.

"He was still painting but he had moved on to sculpture," Jim Salners, a longtime member of MCT who now lives in Houston, said of Cole's work in the years preceding his death. "Some of the stuff, just like everything he did, was amazing."

In 1999, Cole was the Distinguished Artist for the Arts Council of Midland's Celebration of the Arts.

The Coles made MCT possible.

"Ruth was the detail lady of MCT from its inception," Cassidy said. "In the early years, she ran the box office, watched the budget, did the programs, cleaned the toilets, recruited volunteers and did whatever it took to keep the doors open.

"Most importantly, Ruth, with Art, raised millions of dollars for a community theater in the middle of nowhere. She knew your name, she knew where you liked to sit, and she never failed to try to be sure you had a special experience at the theater. She knew that attention to details meant loyal members and loyal donors.

"She was an extraordinary salesman. Ruth sold Midland Community Theatre. Ruth sold Midland, Texas. Ruth sold more raffle tickets in one weekend of Mummers than they do in a full summer these days. And this was long before someone invented marketing and public relations."

"She was the mortar," Salners said of Ruth Cole. "She kept it all together. And she was the one who made sure we had enough money."

"When we came here, half the people in town were in some way associated with the theater because of Art's charisma," said Baskin. "He was so, so really good at attracting volunteers and training them and making them feel needed and wanted and accomplished, not just the ones on stage but the ones who did the casting, built lights and sets."

The Coles have two grown children, Michael Cole of Houston and Martha Runkle of Albuquerque, N.M.

"MCT theatrical productions were also taken to Dundalk, Ireland, a place for which he and the casts and guests who traveled there from Midland shared a particular fondness," said Michael Cole. "It was this element of camaraderie so evident in these trips and in the run of a show that made the theater and the company of others a magnet for talent and earnest volunteers.

"Libations and good conversation following rehearsals at Carmello's, later Luigi's, cast parties with a parody at the end of a plays run celebrating the efforts of all and the open invitation for stopping by after 5 at our home for drinks and unwinding before evening rehearsal – all of this made it fun. And always near the center of conversation was Art and those who loved engaging minds, great fun and full-on participation in life."

ence members and bring them along with you. From his experience, it was best to incorporate the advice and experience of those around you into the decision-making process for the benefit of the non-profit organization.

It was great advice for a brand new executive director of a long-established community theater, and something I think about often and continue to strive to emulate to this day.

Over the years, Art continued to provide me with support and encouragement via phone and in person. Art returned to Midland in 1998 to perform in the 50th Anniversary production of Summer Mummers as the Hero, a role he had played for many years after founding our annual fundraiser in 1949.

Although he was only in Midland for rehearsals and the opening weekend, the entire volunteer community welcomed his leadership and vision back into the fold. Art also returned to Midland to display his artwork in the Midland Community Theatre lobby during our production of the Yasmina Reza play "Art" in 2001.

After departing Midland in 1983, Art had fashioned a second career as a painter, and his works were detailed and fascinating.

Art also returned and was recognized when Midland Community Theatre hosted the 2006 International American Association of Community Theatre (AACT) festival. Art Cole had a tremendous effect on the USA's participation in international amateur theater festivals, and I have been pleased to follow in his footsteps and continue this tradition.

The past three years, my family and I have spent Labor Day weekend in Santa Fe and always took an afternoon to visit Art and Donna at their home and studio. Art always wanted to know more about what's happening at Midland Community Theatre with our productions and volunteers, as well as what was new and exciting in the national and international theater community.

Frankly, there would be no Midland Community Theatre without the vision, leadership, talent and dedication of Art Cole. Most community theaters fail to grow beyond the initial efforts of their volunteers and leaders and remain an organization that struggles from year to year.

Through his tireless work and tremendous talent, Art lead Midland Community Theatre through an amazing period of growth and expansion, and nurtured MCT to be one of the largest community theaters in the country.

His tremendous leadership and vision are honored by AACT (American Asssociation of Community Theatres) through the "Art Cole Lifetime Achievement Award," which is awarded every odd year during the national theater festival to others who have dedicated their lives to a community theater.

Art Cole provided future Midland Community Theatre staff, board and volunteers with the wings to continue this artistic growth and development in an amazing performance space and with a strong history of excellence in productions. The next time you visit Cole Theatre, please take a moment to remember our founder and the foundation of our organization, Arthur Weller Cole.

TIM MCGRAW
"Emotional Traffic"

In 2005, the year Toby Keith turned 44, he released "As Good as I Once Was," one of his most bellicose and smarmy singles in a career that specialized in them, and a declaration of potency in the face of encroaching middle age. Keith, one of country's most pugnacious characters, figured out that aging gracefully in country music, unlike in many other genres, can sometimes mean becoming even rougher and less warm than you were in your younger years.

Tim McGraw, who is 44, comes from roughly the same generation as Keith, but from a whole other perspective. McGraw was never much of a bruiser to begin with, though early in his career he was sizzling with machismo, a romantic with a troublemaker streak.

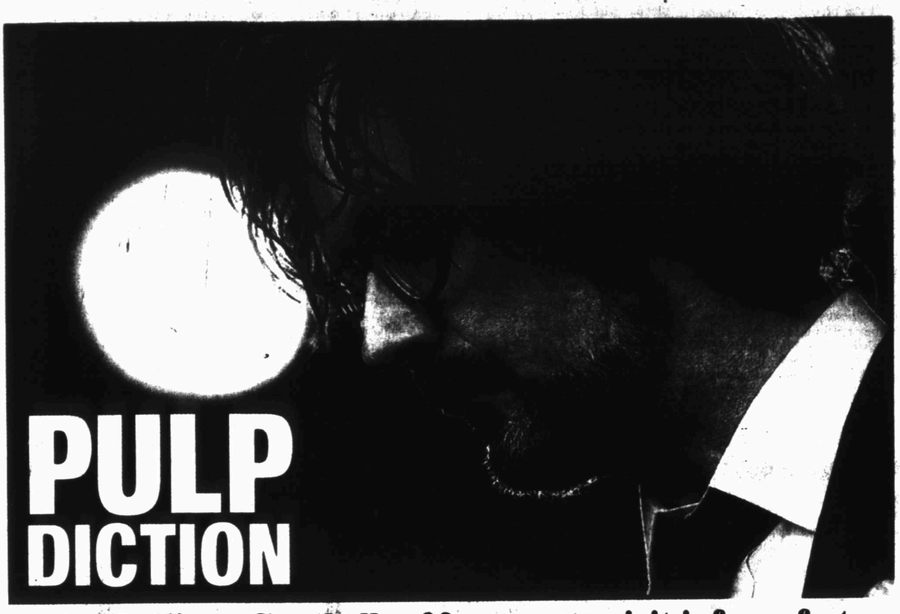

That's just a memory, though. The first single from "Emotional Traffic," his 11th studio album, is "Better Than I Used to Be," which may as well be a shrugging answer song to Keith's. Here is the fighter in decline, "Standing in the rain so long has left me with a little rust." What could keep him in contention, though? That's right, a little of your love: "I pinned a lot of demons to the ground/Got a few old habits left/ But there's still one or two I might need you to help me get."

Admitting that you can't go it alone is no great insight, but all throughout this often tepid album, McGraw is conceding. A woman only gives him a fraction of her love on "One Part, Two Part," and he grins and bears it. The same is true on the Eric Carmen-esque "Halo," on which at least McGraw has hired someone to write a metaphor that bites where his voice doesn't: "Cover me with rage/I'll take it like a circus lion, silent in my cage."

The older McGraw has gotten, the more resistant he's seemed to grit. Texture has been all but absent from his voice since the mid-2000s era of songs like "When the Stars Go Blue" and "Drugs or Jesus." "Only Human," a new duet with Ne-Yo, is a smooth slice of '80s whimper-soul but isn't as alluring, or as sui generis, as "Over and Over," McGraw's 2004 duet with the rapper Nelly. At some points on this album, as on "The One" and "Right Back Atcha Babe," McGraw appears to be channeling the endless youth of a Kenny Chesney. Even though he's never been a true stoic on the order of Alan Jackson or George Strait, McGraw has never sounded this casual; it doesn't suit him.

After a listless several-song run toward the end of the album, McGraw closes with the bold, invigorated "Die by My Own Hand," a cover of a song by Halfway to Hazard. It's a statement of sly regret about how even the sort of love he was leaning on elsewhere on this album in the end isn't nearly enough. "You changed me, baby/Given enough time, girl, you might have saved me/But then again, you might have just gone crazy." For the first time, he's singing ruefully, with real bite. "Girl I don't blame you for nothing," he concedes. "I'll always die by my own hand." Finally, a real stand.

PULP DICTION

A rebellious Coachella: 99 percent spirit infuses fest

By Randall Roberts
Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES — One of the great, universal rock anthems of the last two decades — Pulp's "Common People" — bypassed the U.S. when it exploded out of England in 1995. But if and when a reunited Pulp plays the song at this year's Coachella Music and Arts Festival in Indio, Calif., its artful and catchy screed against the 1 percent couldn't be more timely.

At a moment when jobless kids are cracking open piggy banks and digging deep for a Coachella ticket to see 120-odd bands over one weekend at the Indio festival, Pulp seems the most relevant among veteran acts that also include Refused, Mazzy Star, At the Drive-In, Company Flow, Madness and Squeeze. But Pulp's arrival isn't the biggest name coming out of the desert's festival, which runs two consecutive weekends. This year's roster will feature Dr. Dre and Snoop, Radiohead and the Black Keys as headliners, while dozens of other acts will occupy the festival's five stages, including Grammy-nominated names such as Bon Iver, Florence and the Machine and David Guetta. An undercard includes dance, hip-hop and rock upstarts SBTRKT, M83, Azealia Banks and Feist.

Pulp's arrival at Coachella this year, however, typifies the festival, its ever-evolving and maturing aesthetic, and its place in the culture right now.

"Common People" is a lyrical conversation with a rich girl longing to slum it with the commoners. With bitterness in his voice, Pulp's Jarvis Cocker tells of her desire to "sing along with the common people," then replies that she could never truly do that because inherited wealth blinds her to the realities of the paycheck-to-paycheck life. "You'll never get it right," he sings, conjuring the spirit of both Ray Davies and Bob Dylan, "'cos when you're laid in bed at night/watching roaches climb the wall/if you call your dad, he could stop it all."

The song's kicker, one of the most exuberant refrains in rock, is the reason why it has grown into a worldwide scream-along anthem and why — especially now — it has fans making mental notes on this year's Coachella schedule: "You'll never fail like common people/You'll never watch your life slide out of view"

Cocker achieved more notoriety, though, in 1996 at the Brit Awards (the English equivalent of the Grammys), during an over-the-top Michael Jackson performance of "Earth Song" featuring dozens of dancers, risers, fog and a Jesus-like Jackson healing sick children. A fed-up Cocker pulled a Kanye West (long before, though) and jumped onstage, then turned his bum to the audience and deflated the pompousness of the king of pop's performance with what can best be described as a butt salute.

The Pulp singer was arrested (though never charged), Jackson was outraged and demanded an apology (but never got one), and Cocker became tabloid fodder in England (and a rock legend in the process).

It's this spirit that's always generated the best moments in musical history, those times when stuff gets too overblown and artists unite under a banner of rebellion, be it Dr. Dre and Snoop thumbing their noses at the cops in the late '80s and early '90s while documenting the street culture that informed them; Radiohead following its collective muse away from the simple structures of post-grunge and the pressures of its record label; or Modeselektor crafting curiously strong German minimalist techno — rich with snarky humor.

Throughout the roster, this spirit is evident. Influential reggae singer Jimmy Cliff rose from the slums of Kingston, Jamaica, to become a defiant voice amid chaos and violence; Canadian singer and songwriter Feist took a hit song — "1234" — and used its buzz to create new music that pushes in less commercial, more Joni Mitchell-esque directions; fellow Canuck Dan Bejar, who records as Destroyer, somehow manages to make soft rock and cheesy sax solos sound positively dangerous; guitarist Greg Ginn flipped the bird at East Coast punk snobs while forming both Black Flag and SST Records in the late '70s. Find an artist on the bill this year, and you'll see a similar story.

Well, almost. This year's weakest element, at least from an aesthetic if not commercial perspective, is the bigger-name electronic dance music bookings, which unlike the other main pop subgenres represented (rock, hop-hop and, interestingly this year, folk), features too many pop crossover producers making plodding, pop-friendly fare, including Guetta, AVICII, Calvin Harris, Afrojack and Martin Solveig.

There are fantastic exceptions of course: Amon Tobin's stunning dub-infected cutup beats and visionary presentation; Girl Talk's clever copyright-infringing mash-ups; some of the weirder dubstep of the Pure Filth Sound posse; and the experimental L.A. beat producers making the trip to Indio — Flying Lotus and the Gaslamp Killer.

Plus, even if you despise thumpy club music, you can skip it and go elsewhere. Coachella's 2012 offerings are worth the price of admission, whether you're a commoner who saved up all year for a ticket or a 1-percenter who turned to Daddy for cash.

Coachella, run by AEG-owned concert promoter Goldenvoice, will be held over two consecutive weekends, the first on April 13-15 and the second on April 20-22. Each weekend is a separate ticket, priced at $285.

TOGETHER

We're Stronger than Ever.

When we launched Medical Center Health System, we knew that the strength of one is made better by the strength of many. So we brought together a team of highly-skilled physicians, nurses, technicians and support staff to help set a new standard for quality of care.

Our mission is to deliver comprehensive quality healthcare to the people of the Permian Basin. To accomplish this, we have built new facilities, introduced innovative services and expanded our reach throughout the community.

Now, our mission has become a reality. As your healthcare partner, we look forward to keeping you healthy today and into the future.

WHY SHOULD A PERSON MAKE PLANS NOW?

- Prices on a set plan do not increase over the years.
- Decisions do not have to be left up to the family at a very emotional time.
- Space selection is generally better.

for your information

Monday's healthy living is designed for health related issues.
Tuesday's for your information presents merchant stories of general interest.

fyi has become one of the most-read sections of the Midland Reporter-Telegram. Tapping into powerful reader interest in local content, Midland Reporter-Telegram helps professionals and small businesses connect with Midland. fyi should be at least a portion of any local information campaign.

Why is fyi the place to be seen?

- It includes a professionally written or edited article, approved by the sponsor, which helps business owners and professionals present what they have to offer, while building rapport with readers.
- It provides a photograph or graphic, usually in full color at no extra cost.
- It incorporates a display ad for 13 weeks, tapping into the key to teaching and selling: repetition, repetition, repetition! This distributes the cost over time.

Are you looking for an MD?

fyi's Healthy Living has become one of the most-read sections of the Midland Reporter-Telegram. Tapping into powerful reader interest in local content, Midland Reporter-Telegram helps professionals and small businesses connect with Midland. Healthy Living should be at least a portion of any local information campaign.

Why is fyi the place to be seen?

- It includes a professionally written or edited article, approved by the sponsor, which helps business owners and professionals present what they have to offer, while building rapport with readers.
- It provides a photograph or graphic, usually in full color at no extra cost.
- It incorporates a display ad for 13 weeks, tapping into the key to teaching and selling: repetition, repetition, repetition! This distributes the cost over time.

Healthy Living publishes every Monday, covering the Healthcare industry exclusively!
