Pampa High senior named National Merit semifinalist

By BEAR MILLS
Staff Writer

A Pampa High School student is among 15,000 seniors around the nation to be named semi-finalists in the National Merit Scholarship Program.

Laura Hamilton, daughter of Eugene and Colleen Hamilton, was named to the honor based on scores in the Preliminary Scholastic Aptitude Test/National Merit Scholarship Qualifying Test (PSAT/NMSQT).

She is among the top one-half of one percent of all high school seniors in the nation in scholastic ability, officials from the scholarship program announced.

Hamilton, a senior, is now eligible to compete for one of 6,000 Merit Scholarships worth approximately $25 million.

"To qualify as a finalist, a semifinalist must have an outstanding academic record, must be endorsed and recommended by the school principal, must confirm PSAT/NMSQT performance on the SAT, and must complete a detailed scholarship application that includes a self-description and information about scholastic accomplishments, school and community activities and educational plans and goals," NMSC officials explained.

Hamilton said her parents are to be credited for much of her educational advancement.

"They have always encouraged me to be a good student. They don't stand over me, but they are supportive. Mom used to read to me when I was little and she made that a priority - having learning in the home. That has helped," Hamilton said.

"I have read a lot and that information sticks in your brain," Hamilton said. "Last year I really liked physics and I love English literature. I'm taking government this year and I think I will really enjoy that."

She said her current post-secondary plans include Rutgers University, where she would like to major in political science.

"It would be neat to work for a company in international relations or maybe work in Washington," Hamilton said.

Only 11 high school students in the Texas Panhandle reached NMSC semifinalist status, with eight being from Amarillo and one each from Dumas, Hereford and Pampa.

Senate Judiciary Committee opens hearings on Supreme Court nominee

By STEVEN KOMAROW
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Senate Judiciary Committee today opened confirmation hearings for Supreme Court nominee David Souter. The panel's chairman said lawmakers have a duty to discover Souter's views on issues such as the right to privacy and equal rights.

"We are not asking for any commitments as to how you would rule on any specific case," Sen. Joseph Biden, D-Del. said as he gavelled the televised hearings into session. "Nor are we trying to pry into your personal views on publicly debated issues."

Souter sat listening as Biden spoke. The New Hampshire native, 50, is President Bush's first nominee to the Supreme Court. The court has been deeply divided in recent years on contentious issues such as abortion and civil rights. Conservatives are hoping that, if confirmed, Souter would help cement a conservative majority on the high court.

While Biden and other Democrats said they would try to plumb Souter's legal views, Republicans on the committee stressed the appeals court judge's integrity and his qualifications for the high court.

"I look forward to a fair, thorough review of Judge Souter's intellectual capacity, background and his sense of justice," said Sen. Strom Thurmond, R-S.C. He said that should not include "direct questioning about sensitive issues that may come before the court."

Under groundrules laid down by Biden, it was possible Souter would not begin to speak until after noon. The hearings are expected to last at least two days, and perhaps longer.

Souter is a former New Hampshire attorney general who was confirmed to the federal appeals court earlier this year. He remains something of a legal enigma to the many conservative and liberal groups that have scoured his record since his nomination on July 23 to succeed retiring Justice William Brennan.

Biden said that while he was not seeking commitments from Souter, he was determined to learn more about his views.

"We want to know what principles you would apply - what philosophies you would employ - as you exercise the awesome power you will hold if you are confirmed as a justice of the U.S. Supreme Court."

Biden said this is a moment in history when the court's long-term direction is at stake.

"At this fateful moment in our history we have a right to know - and a duty to discover - precisely what you, Judge David Hackett Souter, think about the great constitutional questions of our time."

These, he said, include the right to privacy, equal rights for women and all races, and First Amendment protections of speech and religion.

But it was unclear how far Souter, scheduled to testify for two days, will go toward unveiling his views. He could refuse on the basis that he might prejudice himself regarding cases before the high court.

It's a strategy that his Republican supporters like.

"I frankly believe that a judge has a responsibility not to comment on cases or legal issues that may come before him or her on the court," said Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, a senior member of the Judiciary Committee.

White House chief of staff John Sununu, who appointed Souter to the state bench while governor of New Hampshire, has assured conservatives that the nominee is one they'll like on the Supreme Court, which has taken an increasingly conservative cast.

The 50-year-old federal appeals judge remains a philosophical mystery on many of the issues before the court. His approach to the law is undoubtedly conservative but there's not enough in the record to say, for example, how he would vote on the 1973 abortion rights ruling now being challenged by the Bush administration.

In addition, many of the bachelor judge's friends are political moderates or liberals.

Since being chosen by President Bush on July 23 to replace retiring Justice William Brennan, Souter paid courtesy calls on the committee's 14 members and discussed the law broadly with them. But he sidestepped issues with either them or the news media, saying he would address things more thoroughly at the hearings.

Souter maintained his pre-hearing silence on Wednesday, refusing to answer reporters' questions following a luncheon with the president.

Bush made a plug for his nominee later in the day.

Souter is a "tough, fair-minded, intellectually brilliant judge," the president said. He pressed the Senate to approve the nomination this month "so that he can take his place as the only career prosecutor on the court in time for the court's first sitting" next month.

Souter spent a decade as New Hampshire's attorney general. In that job, he had to take some controversial stands - for example, defending Gov. Meldrim Thomson's order to lower flags to half-staff on Good Friday.

But supporters portray him as a lawyer with a client, representing views not necessarily his own.

After he became a state appeals justice, Souter dissented from his colleagues who struck down government fees for some special court sessions. Although the state constitution appeared on its face to make that improper, Souter said the constitution had to be taken in its original context of 200 years ago.

Liberal senators want to know how heavily "original intent" affects Souter's views, especially on women's rights and abortion, privacy rights, civil rights - issues which in their current context didn't exist when the U.S. Constitution was written.

Evacuees say Iraqi soldiers terrorize Western men

By CHRISTOPHER BURNS
Associated Press Writer

British women who have flown to freedom but left husbands behind in Kuwait say Iraqi soldiers are terrorizing Western men in the captive nation, and there were reports troops were searching house to house for more hostages.

The State Department said it had information that Iraqi troops were mounting intensified, more systematic searches for American men in the oil-rich Persian Gulf emirate they seized in an Aug. 2 invasion.

One evacuee said Kuwaiti resistance fighters who called a general strike shot some residents who ignored the order.

Washington pressed on with diplomatic efforts to isolate Iraq. Secretary of State James Baker III was to fly today to Syria.

U.S. relations with Syria have in the past been strained over its support of terrorists but Damascus is an ally in the desert military standoff with Iraqi President Saddam Hussein.

The trip comes as Iraq rapidly reconciles with neighboring Iran, which after an eight-year war is showing signs it could help Saddam poke holes in a U.N.-ordered trade embargo enforced by dozens of U.S. and other warships.

In another indication the embargo could be in trouble, a U.N. sanctions committee failed in New York Wednesday to agree on what kind of food aid to allow into Iraq and Kuwait. The embargo exempts humanitarian shipments of food and medicine.

The League of Red Cross will send medicine to Iraq for children, pregnant women and the elderly, a spokeswoman for the Geneva-based organization said today. Iraq was not, however, allowing the Swiss International Committee of the Red Cross into Kuwait.

Tens of thousands of foreigners remained trapped in Iraq and Kuwait, and masses of mostly penniless Asian refugees were still stranded in camps in neighboring Jordan awaiting transportation to their homelands.

Egypt said today that its diplomats have followed other foreign envoys in abandoning their embassies in Kuwait. Iraqi troops have besieged the U.S. and other missions that remained staffed, trying to starve them out. Power and water have also been cut to many missions, making conditions insufferable.

In Washington, State Department deputy spokesman Richard Boucher said Iraqi authorities searching for American men in Kuwait are tightening the dragnet.

"In Kuwait, there has been increased harassment of U.S. citizens, and more systematic house-to-house searches for American men are now being conducted," he said.

Boucher also said the 80 or so Americans who have been rounded up for use as human shields to deter a feared U.S. attack are being moved continually. All are believed held in Iraq.

About 1,400 Americans remain in Kuwait while there are about 200 in Iraq, according to official estimates.

Concern for the safety of those held hostage by the Iraqis ran deep among the more than 400 women and children who comprised the latest planeload of Westerners allowed to leave Baghdad by Iraq authorities.

All had reached the Iraq capital from Kuwait.

One British woman who arrived in London on the Iraqi Airways 747 Wednesday night said she was forced to leave her 19-year-old son in the hands of Iraqi soldiers so she and her daughter could gain their freedom.

"The Iraqi soldiers would not listen when I tried to persuade them that Owen was just a student and should be allowed to go free," Elizabeth Walters told reporters. "The soldiers said 'He is a man so he must stay.'"

About 280 Americans were on the jumbo jet, which was chartered by the U.S. and British governments. They were to fly on to Raleigh-Durham airport in North Carolina today.

More than 900 Americans have left Iraq and Kuwait in recent days and an additional flight is scheduled for Friday.

Peru rejects U.S. military aid to fight in war on drugs

LIMA, Peru (AP) - Peru's new president says Washington can keep the millions in military aid it's offering to step up the war on cocaine trafficking. He wants cash to get farmers to stop growing coca and for highway construction so alternate crops can make it to market.

Because the aid package "is destined only for the fight against drug trafficking, we are not going to sign this agreement," President Alberto Fujimori said Wednesday night.

His statement appeared to torpedo any hope his 6-week-old government will accept the $35.9 million in military aid Washington is offering this year to fight the cocaine trade.

Peru could use the money. The country is reeling from the effects of tough austerity measures aimed at curbing 3,000 percent annual inflation.

The government is also battling a 10-year-old insurgency by Maoist-inspired rebels, who have allied themselves with cocaine traffickers in return for money and arms.

Fujimori has warned on several occasions that he would not sign the military aid agreement with the United States unless it included economic aid to wean farmers away from growing coca, from which cocaine is produced.

He has also said Peru needs help in developing alternative crops and in building a paved highway from regions where coca is now king so the produce can reach coastal markets.

The rejected U.S. aid package was to finance the construction of a training base near the coca-rich Upper Huallaga Valley. It also included $20 million to build a training camp and provide weapons and equipment for Peruvian soldiers.

The Upper Huallaga is the world's main supplier of coca leaf, the raw material for cocaine. More than 1,000 Shining Path guerrillas are estimated to operate in the valley, a jungle region 250 miles north-east of Lima.

Many Peruvian politicians had expressed fear that the aid package could lead to direct U.S. participation in a guerrilla war that has claimed nearly 20,000 lives.

The U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration already operates an anti-drug base in the Huallaga Valley with Peruvian police. The Shining Path attacked the base in April and engaged U.S. pilots in a shootout. No casualties were reported.

On Wednesday, U.S. Ambassador Anthony Quaynton did sign two agreements for $400,000 with the interior minister, Gen. Adolfo Alvarado.

The agreements will provide vehicles and motorcycles for the police to help combat drug trafficking and they are to represent the continuation of U.S. anti-drug aid to the police.

Lefors school trustees keep same tax rate

By BETH MILLER
Staff Writer

LEFORS — Lefors Independent School District Board of Trustees unanimously adopted the same tax rate as was used last year with no comment from the public during a Tuesday meeting.

The $1.10 per $100 property valuation was discussed at several prior meetings, including one public hearing, during which no one from the public spoke.

The board also unanimously approved the 1990-91 substitute teacher list for the school district and approved early dismissal dates prior to school holidays.

The following people were approved as substitute teachers: Louise Watson, Deborah Lawrence, Tana Gardner, Roxanna Hendrick, Janet Quarles, Gaylene Grimley, David Day, Peggie Day, Mary Alderson, Teresa Davis and Ross Blasingame.

Four early dismissal dates were approved, with school to be dismissed at 2:30 p.m. on the following days: Nov. 21 for Thanksgiving;

Dec. 21 for Christmas; Feb. 20 for a ski holiday; and March 28 for Easter.

The Lefors ISD Vocational Advisory Committee, composed of Paula Whitney, a home economics teacher, Barry Jackson, a school board trustee, and Principal Joe Roper, was unanimously approved.

The Student Attendance Committee was also unanimously approved. It is composed of Principal Roper, teacher Gene Gee, and school board trustee Charlie Sullivan.

The 1990-91 appraisal calendar for studying teacher performance in the classroom was set by the school board to run from Sept. 10 to Jan. 10 and Jan. 14 to May 24.

Also unanimously approved by the board was the following:

- The Special Education Co-op Policy Manual.
- The Career Ladder "stricter performance criteria" for 1990-91.
- A local policy for the development of the district wide Educational Improvement Council.
- Several transfer students from Pampa.

• Allowing Superintendent Ed Gilliland to travel outside the school district to the Grandview-Hopkins ISD if needed for appraising teachers' performance.

• Minutes of previous meetings.

• Monthly expenditures.

Several items were deferred. These included the Student/Parent Handbook and Discipline Management Plan and sample school board policies as submitted by Texas Association of School Boards.

In the superintendent's report, Gilliland reported that the school district had requested the Texas Department of Highways and Public Transportation to study an area near the school to see if warranting the placement of a traffic signal.

Gilliland also reported that a survey will be conducted to get residents' input on the goals and objectives for the Lefors ISD.

The board also met in executive session for about three hours to discuss personnel and salaries.

Following the closed session, no action was taken.

Dallas businessman named to prison board

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Bill Clements today appointed a Dallas businessman to the Texas Board of Criminal Justice for the vacancy created by the resignation of Charles Terrell.

But Clements has yet to name a chairman of the board to succeed Terrell, who stepped down Tuesday.

Richard Collins, 43, owner and president of Collins Enterprises, an investment firm, is a graduate of Southern Methodist University.

He is founder and chairman of Associated Texans Against Crime.

Technically, Collins is being appointed to the unexpired term of Ben Gallant of Corpus Christi. Gallant, 56, will move to another position on the nine-member board that oversees the criminal justice system.

Terrell's resignation made vice chairman Jerry Hodge the acting board chairman. Hodge gained notoriety by participating in a prison dog training exercise that uses inmates as bait.

Hodge was criticized after taking two companions to the exercise and giving them jackets proclaiming the event as "The Ultimate Hunt."

He later apologized for the jackets but defended the practice of using inmates as bait to train dogs.

Soldiers

Mrs. Walters, who said her husband was in hiding in Kuwait, told of Iraqi soldiers terrorizing Western men in the emirate:

"One (British) man was taken off into the desert, blindfolded and told to get out of the car and then they threatened to kill him. He was then pushed back into the car and they drove him round again and did the same, threatening to kill him again. They were terrorizing him just for the sheer hell of it."

The U.S. military buildup in the region, though adequate to defend Saudi Arabia against Iraq, won't be completed for about two months, the U.S. commander in Saudi Arabia was quoted today as saying.

That's about a month later than earlier reported.

Army Gen. H. Norman Schwarzkopf, in an interview published in the Washington Post, attributed at least part of the slowdown to breakdowns of some of the Navy's fast transport ships, which he said has forced the use of slower vessels. About 150,000 American troops have been deployed in the region.

Hispanic Brownsville man files suit against TEC on English-only notice

BROWNSVILLE (AP) — A Spanish-speaking Brownsville man is suing the Texas Employment Commission, saying he didn't understand an English-only notice denying his unemployment benefits and thus couldn't appeal the order.

The federal class-action lawsuit accuses the TEC of failure to comply with a law requiring it to provide notices in Spanish.

Bernardino Gonzalez, 43, represents a large class of people who said they couldn't appeal their benefit denials because they didn't understand the notices, the lawsuit, filed Monday, claims.

The class includes Mexican-Americans and other Hispanics eligible for unemployment, according to the lawsuit filed with the assistance of Texas Rural Legal Aid Inc.

Several lawsuits filed against the TEC in the early 1980s complained of lack of services in Spanish. A state law requiring that important forms be made available in Spanish as well as English was passed in 1985, according to the lawsuit.

Ed Davidson, special counsel for the TEC, said lawyers for Texas Rural Legal Aid and TEC have discussed the issue for years.

"What they (TRLA) want is for everybody who was denied a hearing to have an opportunity to try to prove ... that it was because the notice was in English," Davidson said. "Our position is going to be that we implemented the law in a timely fashion."

Davidson said TEC spends thousands of dollars a year on interpreters and translated forms.

"It's not as though we are not aware of this need," he said.

Efren Hernandez, a supervising interviewer with the TEC office in Brownsville, said the agency has a system of notifying claimants in their native language. He said candidates receive correspondence in English and Spanish if they say they prefer Spanish during their initial interviews.

The lawsuit asks for a permanent injunction to prevent TEC from denying the plaintiffs a hearing on their unemployment compensation claims and from discriminating against the plaintiffs. It also asks for unspecified "relief deemed proper by the court" and attorneys' fees.

Environmentalists endorse Democrats

AUSTIN (AP) — Clean Water Action, which calls itself the largest environmental lobby in Texas, said it couldn't find a single Republican candidate for statewide office who strongly supported environmental goals.

The environmental group, which on Wednesday endorsed a straight Democratic ticket, identified only one Republican who even had an environmental campaign platform, said spokeswoman Brigid Shea. That was Rob Mosbacher in the lieutenant governor's race.

He was not endorsed because his positions were much weaker than those of his opponent, Bob Bullock, she said.

Clean Water Action, a national organization with about 60,000 Texas members, has endorsed Republicans in other state elections, but in Texas "there was almost no contest," Ms. Shea said.

In the governor's race, "Texas clearly faces enormous environmental problems and Ann Richards has laid out a bold and aggressive plan to respond to these problems," the environmental group said in its endorsement.

Republican Clayton Williams "has a documented history of breaking environmental laws — weak as they are — with his oil and gas business," the group's endorsement said.

Williams spokeswoman Mona Palmer criticized the group. Clean Water Action "is a California-based liberal fringe group whose goal, like the goal of Ann Richards, is to shut down economic and job opportunities in Texas," Ms. Palmer said.

In the agriculture commissioner's race, Democrat Jim Hightower has a solid national reputation for reforming Texas' pesticide laws, the group said, whereas Republican Rick Perry "is the ultimate astro-turf candidate — green on the outside, plastic on the inside."

A Perry spokeswoman said his campaign is focused on gaining the support of Texas cattle ranchers, rather than Clean Water Action.

"We were conservationists long before the new-styled environmentalists, as they call themselves, became the fashion," Perry said in a statement released after the environmentalists' endorsements.

Antique machinery show begins Saturday

Among the featured exhibits will be a steam-operated saw mill and steam engine races.

Other features will include antique cars and trucks, a steam engine incline, stationary engines, mule and horse drawn equipment, an old time threshing, flea market, Kiowa Kickers Square Dance on Saturday night, cow dog demonstration, children's pedal tractor pull and museum at the farm.

Antique farm equipment scheduled for display at the event include a two bottom John Deere plow, Deering Reaper, 1913 60hp Case steam engine, mule drawn grain grinder and Holt self-propelled combine.

Admission for those 12 and over is $4. To reach the farm, travel 10 miles east of Perryton on FM 377 and then go five miles south on FM 2711.

The museum is open from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. A display procession, with explanations of each piece of equipment, is scheduled for 1:30 p.m. each day. Church services are scheduled for 9 a.m. Sunday.

Organizers of the event said parking and camping spaces are available and motels are located nearby for those wishing to stay overnight.

Greenspan warns against depositor insurance hike

WASHINGTON (AP) — Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan said today the fund that protects bank depositors will likely "remain under stress for some time to come," but he cautioned Congress against hastily passing legislation that would only make the situation worse.

Greenspan noted that the reserves in the Federal Deposit Insurance Fund now stand at their lowest level ever as a string of near-record bank failures has depleted FDIC reserves.

"There remain all too many problems in the banking system, problems that have been growing of late as many banks, including many larger banks, have been experiencing a deterioration in the quality of their loan portfolios, particularly real estate loans," Greenspan told a House committee.

"It thus seems clear that the insurance fund likely will remain under stress for some time to come," Greenspan said. "Moreover, pressures would intensify if real estate market conditions were to weaken further or a recession were to develop in the general economy."

Greenspan's warning was similar, although less specific, than reports earlier this week from the congressional General Accounting Office and the Congressional Budget Office.

Texas farmers face problems in getting disaster help they say they need

By EVAN RAMSTAD
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Rep. Kika de la Garza, the south Texas who chairs the House Agriculture Committee, says he doesn't think the government can provide the disaster relief the state's farmers desperately need.

Yield losses to Texas farmers for cotton, corn and sorghum are estimated at $619 million this year, Wayne Labar of the Texas Cotton Producers said at hearing before the committee Wednesday.

The ripple effect will cost the state's agribusiness industry $2 billion, he said. "For some farmers it is the third year in a row of poor yields," Labar said.

The adverse budget climate, the condition of the federal crop insurance program and the lack of disaster areas have combined to make disaster legislation hard to sell on Capitol Hill this summer.

"A disaster bill costs money and I don't know where we have any," said de la Garza, D-Mission.

"I can only promise we will consider whatever is possible," he said.

Another powerful congressman, Rep. Leon Panetta, the California Democrat who chairs the House Budget Committee, has offered his support.

"With the recurrence of weather disasters each year, it is clear that we must find a permanent solution to this problem," Panetta said. "However, until that time I believe that it is important that we provide assistance to those farmers who have lost crops in weather-related disasters."

Texas and Georgia farmers have suffered the most from disasters, primarily drought, this year.

Crop losses are estimated at more than $500 million in Georgia, $130 million in Alabama and $119 million in South Carolina, officials from those states testified.

Texas received $235 million in disaster relief in 1988 and $348 million in 1989.

After floods this spring made 54 counties federal disaster areas, Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, sponsored a bill to extend the 1989 disaster act. The bill is sitting in the Senate Agriculture Committee. Its progress depends on finding a way to finance it, aides say.

Most of the farmers who appeared before the House committee said they appreciated the government's budget constraints. But several said they couldn't understand how it could forgive billions of dollars in loans to Egypt and not help out U.S. farmers.

"It seems that any budget problems can be overcome," said James Adams, a San Patricio County cotton producer, referring to the Egyptian debt forgiveness.

Some lawmakers and the Bush administration oppose using both annual disaster bills and crop insurance to help farmers. They say one or the other should be chosen and fully developed.

The House version of the 1990 farm bill supports funding crop insurance while a replacement program is being devised.

The agriculture subcommittee of the Senate Appropriations Committee Tuesday funded a crop insurance program for next year over the opposition of the administration.

The House Appropriations Committee did not fund crop insurance for 1990, however.

Separately, the Senate panel approved $3.3 million to build Texas A&M's Institute of Biosciences and Technology and $4 million to build a facility at Texas Tech's Plant Stress Lab.

Also funded were wool research efforts in San Angelo, oilseed extraction research at Texas A&M and the USDA's boll weevil control program in South Texas, Bentsen said.

A bright green cactus mailbox greets mail carriers bringing letters to the Herndon Sloans on East Hwy. 60. Also sometimes greeting the carriers are two of the Sloans' horses, Old Red and Blue. The metal cactus was made for the Sloans by their friend, Raymond Barrett of Price Road, who gave it to them as a gift.

Man denies he poisoned Treaty Oak in interview

AUSTIN (AP) — The man convicted of poisoning Texas' famed Treaty Oak with the powerful herbicide Velpar says he is innocent and jokingly said he may open a nightclub named "The Velpar Spot" when he is released from prison.

Paul Stedman Cullen, 46, made the remarks Wednesday during an interview with the Austin American-Statesman.

Earlier in the day, Cullen received a one-year prison term from U.S. District Judge James Nowlin on a guilty plea on a charge of not revealing he was a convicted felon when he filled out a purchase form to buy a rifle.

Cullen received a nine-year prison term last May after being convicted of using Velpar to poison the centuries-old oak, where legend holds pioneer Texas colonist Stephen F. Austin signed treaties with the Indians. The tree's fight for survival and Cullen's trial were the subject of world-wide media coverage.

After sentencing, Cullen talked of many things, including his future and his reaction to being convicted of one of the most infamous crimes ever committed against public property.

"I didn't poison it," he said. "We're appealing (the case). I think with the pressure brought to bear by the media, they were trying very hard to fit somebody into the role of suspect and defendant."

Since the poisoning in the spring of 1989, the City of Austin has received thousands of letters from people all over the world who followed the tree's struggle to survive massive doses of the liquid herbicide.

Visitors still place gifts, poems, and other items in front of the tree to express their sorrow. Only a fourth of the oak, which stands on Baylor Street at the western edge of downtown, is alive.

"I'm glad to see that society can have sympathy for a tree," Cullen said. "I think it may be somewhat misguided, but if a tree can serve as a focus to bring sympathy out of people, then I'm glad to see that they have the capacity for that."

On the possibility of opening a nightclub when he gets out of prison, Cullen said, "Well, it's humorous. But I'm halfway serious about it. If someone would provide financial backing..."

He also said he is considering moving out of the United States if his parole allows him to travel. He would not name the country he would want to live in, but said, "Let's just say it's south of here and it is much hotter during the summer. It's a place where the fish speak classical Latin and the cabbages sing."

"Or, I might go out in the country and raise cattle that breathe fire..." he added in the rambling interview.

Cullen says he's not afraid of going to prison since he has two previous convictions on burglary charges, one for possession of marijuana, and one for driving while intoxicated.

"I've met some beautiful people while I was locked up," he said. "Time is a subjective thing. I'll just lay low and enjoy the workings of my own mind. Prison is just another place to be."

Celanese: Tests show no benzene in water wells

Hoechst Celanese Chemical Group has informed landowners in areas neighboring its Pampa plant that voluntary tests of 15 off-site water wells have shown no evidence of benzene contamination.

Test results were confirmed through independent analyses performed by the Texas Water Commission (TWC). Hoechst Celanese and the TWC co-sampled water from each of the wells in June.

The 15 wells tested were selected from drinking and irrigation wells in areas adjacent to the plant, according to the company.

"We hope these test results affirm for the public our continuing commitment to monitoring and protecting the area's water resources," said Brent Stephens, Pampa plant manager.

"Our company places high value on the health and safety of our employees and neighbors and on the protection of the environment," he added. "By making these test results available to the public, we hope to reinforce the spirit of openness and trust we've established in Pampa."

Stephens said the well tests are a part of the company's ongoing environmental programs at the Pampa plant. Hoechst Celanese said it has contacted all landowners whose wells were tested. The company is providing notification of the results by letter to the landowners.

Hoechst Celanese is a wholly-owned subsidiary of Hoechst AG of West Germany, with leading positions in chemicals, fibers and film, advance materials and technologies, and the life sciences.

Its 1989 sales were $6 billion, placing Hoechst Celanese 77th on the Fortune 100 list.

Limited TV in federal court proceedings approved

By JAMES H. RUBIN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Americans, accustomed to watching presidents and members of Congress on television, will get their first televised look at federal judges at work next year.

The U.S. Judicial Conference, which sets policy for the federal courts, approved on Wednesday a carefully controlled and limited plan to permit TV cameras to record and broadcast civil trials in a handful of federal courtrooms.

The three-year experiment will begin in July, limited to two federal appeals courts and six trial courts. Judges who volunteer their courtrooms for the plan will have almost total control over what the public sees.

Rep. Robert W. Kastenmeier, D-Wis., who has been urging approval of the experiment, hailed the Judicial Conference action as a step toward promoting public understanding of the court system.

"The time for federal courts to permit TV news coverage in courtrooms has come," said Kastenmeier, chairman of the House Judiciary subcommittee on courts. "Technology that permits us access to world events also compels us to use that access to make our own government available to our citizens."

Kastenmeier said televised congressional proceedings, which began in the House in 1979 and in 1986 in the Senate, have been beneficial to the public.

C-Span, the cable network that telecasts public affairs programs, also welcomed the experiment and predicted it will enhance respect for America's system of justice.

The Judicial Conference, headed by Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist, approved the idea overwhelmingly by voice vote, said spokesman David Sellers.

Sellers indicated that Rehnquist spoke in favor of the experiment.

The conference, with 27 federal judges as its members, traditionally meets in private.

Sellers said only a few judges spoke against the experiment and that "the pervasive view is this is inevitable."

Forty-five states have approved the use of television cameras, and supporters say there have been no adverse results.

Wednesday's action does not mean that federal criminal trials will be televised. The Judicial Conference left intact a rule banning cameras in criminal cases.

Nor will Supreme Court proceedings be televised anytime soon. The Judicial Conference has no control over the high court, and most justices are believed opposed to permitting cameras there.

Some justices reportedly were turned against the idea after watching Supreme Court nominee Robert Bork get roughed up verbally at televised confirmation hearings before the Senate Judiciary Committee in 1987. Bork subsequently was rejected by the Senate.

For years, then-Chief Justice Warren E. Burger played a leading role in keeping cameras out of federal courtrooms.

Cameras and radio sound equipment have been banned in federal courts since 1937.

Those who oppose lifting the ban say television will lead to grandstanding by judges and lawyers and could distort public understanding because only snippets will be aired on TV news programs.

Sellers said three or four judges raised those objections at the Judicial Conference meeting.

He said the new experiment will be monitored by the Federal Judicial Center, a think tank for the federal courts. It will issue a report on its findings in September 1993 or March 1994.

Author: Israeli informants knew of planned attack

By RUTH SINAI
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Israeli agents had detailed information about plans to bomb a U.S. Marine barracks in Lebanon in 1983 but gave the CIA only a vague warning about the attack in which 241 Americans were killed, a new book claims.

The allegation is one of many by Victor Ostrovsky, a Canadian graphic artist who says he served for four years as an operative of the fabled Israeli spy agency, the Mossad.

A New York court, at the Israeli government's request, on Wednesday issued a temporary order barring the publisher, St. Martin's Press, from distributing the book. The suit said information in the work could endanger the lives of Israeli agents.

The 300-page book, "By Way of Deception: The Making and Unmaking of a Mossad Officer," was written in collaboration with Canadian journalist Claire Hoy. It purports to name many Mossad agents and supervisors as it describes in detail Ostrovsky's three-year training and many of the operations he heard about or in which he was involved.

In the summer of 1983, Ostrovsky writes, a Mossad informant told his contact in Beirut that a large Mercedes truck was being outfitted by Shiite Moslem radicals with compartments that could hold bombs.

The book says the informant reported that the hidden spaces in the truck were large, and Mossad deduced the target had to be big. "Now the Mossad knew that, for size, there were only a few logical targets, one of which must be the U.S. compound," Ostrovsky writes.

"The question was whether or not to warn the Americans to be on particular alert for a truck matching the description," he says.

The Mossad decided to give its CIA allies only "vague notice that they had reason to believe someone might be planning an operation against them."

Mossad chief Nahum Admoni is quoted as having told his agents:

"No, we're not there to protect Americans. They're a big country."

CIA spokesman Mark Mansfield said his agency would have no comment.

On Oct. 23, 1983, a suicide driver rammed a Mercedes truck into the Marine compound, killing 241 U.S. soldiers who were part of a multinational peacekeeping force. Another truck drove into the French compound, killing 58 troops.

In Canada, the 40-year-old Ostrovsky told The Associated Press that Israeli agents were hounding him and smearing his name.

Among other stories in the book is one that describes how Israeli agents used money and sex to lure an Iraqi agent to supply information that helped Israel blow up Iraq's nuclear reactor in 1981.

Ostrovsky also describes what he calls a highly secret unit that collects information within the United States about the Arab world. The unit is called "AI," Hebrew for "above," and employs 24 to 27 people, most of them within the United States, the book says.

Ostrovsky writes that the unit's bugging of the home of Kuwait's ambassador to the United Nations led to the 1979 resignation of Andrew Young as U.S. ambassador to the world organization.

He says Mossad agents overheard Young meeting at the home of the Kuwaiti with a representative of the Palestine Liberation Organization, in violation of a Carter administration ban on such meetings because of the PLO's terrorist activities.

Young initially denied the meeting, then said it was a chance encounter. But Ostrovsky says Young was forced to quit when the Israelis leaked details of his talk.

Shooting of three students called part of gang problem

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — The shootings of three high school students show that San Antonio's gang violence problem is about to get out of control, parents and community leaders say.

"It has been getting so bad, lately," said County Juvenile Court Judge Tom Rickhoff. "It's time we start doing more preventive work instead of just greeting these people in court."

Three teen-agers were wounded when gunfire erupted Tuesday during lunch break at Sam Houston High School on the city's east side. Students describe the San Antonio School District school as fraught with drugs and gangs.

Three other students, including a varsity football player, were arrested and charged with aggravated assault with a deadly weapon in connection with the shootings.

"We've got a gang problem and, damn it, nobody wants to admit it," said Lt. William Maldonado of the San Antonio School District police force. "It's spilling over into the streets. It's spilling over into our schools."

San Antonio police, through a special task force, have been documenting gang activity throughout the city. More than 45 gangs have been identified by name.

"It is not out of control, yet," said Maldonado. "But it will be soon if we don't do something about it."

The Northside School District recently hired former city police chief Charles Rodriguez to help educators and parents identify youth gangs and gang behavior.

East side community activist T.C. Calvert said he and other residents have warned city leaders about the gangs. "The violence has got to stop," he said.

Frustrated parents who gathered outside of Sam Houston High School after the shootings said they and their children are afraid.

"I want my son out of here — what is this world coming to?" one woman shouted.

Charles Shannon, executive director of the Alamo YMCA on the east side, said police should have taken action last week when three weapons were found in a locker at the school.

Pearl Bailey refutes Skinner's behaviorism

Pearl Bailey, who died in August a couple of days before psychologist B.F. Skinner, may serve as a refutation of Mr. Skinner's theories. B.F. Skinner was the guru of psychological behaviorism, the view that what may seem like spontaneous behavior is actually regulated through rewards and punishments. People don't shape the world, he said, the world shapes them.

In the ages-old debate between "nature" and "nurture," Skinner was near the extreme "nurture" end, coming close to denying that human nature, self-motivation or even genuine choice existed or were relevant. He devised the "Skinner Box," a sound-proof enclosure with buttons or levers for animals to press to receive food in return for doing what the experimenter wanted them to do. A fictional work, Walden Two, described a tightly controlled "utopia" in which people were motivated to behave as authorities desired solely by reward and punishment.

Well, sure, people respond to reward and punishment, but are those responses — behaviors — the sum total of what human beings are? If every action, every idea, is environmentally determined, it is silly to talk about whether they are true or false. By its own terms, Skinner's deterministic philosophy couldn't be true (or false). It was just a behavior.

And how does determinism explain a Pearl Bailey? Miss Bailey did credit her father's revivalist church services with introducing her to rhythm and harmony, but not every preacher's daughter starts singing and dancing at age 3. And not every preacher's daughter is Pearl Bailey.

Miss Bailey said recently: "When people say, 'Pearl, where did you get that style?' I tell them: 'I have no style. I just sing songs.'" She sought to reach the heart of a song and adapted her own magnificent talents to the music at hand rather than impose one ironclad style on everything.

She was foremost a singer, but her talents and warmth were such that she did acting and comedy almost without effort, and could turn her incredible energy to the United Nations and other forms of service.

She loved and was loved lavishly. But you got the impression she would have loved people and music regardless of reward or punishment. Pearl Mae was one of a kind, not the product of some scientist's deterministic behaviorism concept.

Commercial sex ban outmoded

Stephen Chapman

In the last couple of decades, American attitudes and laws about matters of the flesh have changed dramatically. Sex outside of marriage, for better or worse, is now commonplace. In most places, the law no longer criminalizes adultery. Until the outbreak of AIDS, homosexuality had gained considerable social acceptance, and for the most part gays no longer fear prosecution, at least for private, noncommercial acts between consenting adults. Pornography that would make Hugh Hefner blush is available in every video store.

But in one major area, the law has remained resolutely Victorian. Prostitution, though not exactly a new phenomenon, is still legally forbidden everywhere except in parts of Nevada. And these laws, unlike those affecting dirty movies, aren't there just for show. Police still routinely arrest prostitutes, prosecutors still indict them and judges still sentence them to jail.

The problem is not that commercial sex is an exception to Americans' tolerance of how others satisfy their sexual appetites. A 1977 Time magazine poll made the startling discovery that 59 percent of Americans think prostitution should be permitted, either without restriction or with some regulation.

But, with the admirable exception of some counties in Nevada, our laws haven't caught up with our libertarian attitudes. The reason is that those Americans who favor prohibition attach greater importance to the issue than those who believe people's sex lives are their own business, even when federal reserve notes are exchanged. So politicians shy away from any hint of open-mindedness.

As in the case of marijuana, the utter futility of our prostitution laws discourages the tolerant majority from insisting on repeal. Since anyone who wants a woman's (or man's) services can easily get them, who cares what the law says?

But futile laws aren't necessarily harmless ones. The American people would be even more critical of our intolerant policy if they knew how costly it is, in both money and safety. What most people don't realize is the inevitable trade-off involved in enforcing the prostitution laws: If a policeman is raiding a massage parlor, he's not going to be investigating robberies. A jail cell occupied by a streetwalker can't be reserved for a child abuser or a drunk driver.

One reason the trade-off is ignored is because it is hard to measure. But now it has been measured. Thanks to the heroic work of Julie Pearl, a graduate of the University of California's Hastings College of Law, we can now see what we sacrifice in dollars and diverted resources by treating prostitutes as criminals and the picture is appalling.

Pearl's exhaustive study of 16 major cities, summarized in her article in the April 1987 issue of the Hastings Law Journal, found that together they spend more than $120 million a year to combat commercial sex, including expenses associated with police, courts and jails.

More alarming than the monetary expense is the drain on police time. In the average city, says Pearl, the number of arrests for prostitution equals the number of arrests for all violent crimes. One result is that in 72 percent of all reported violent crimes, police make no arrest. They're too busy locking up call girls to waste time on muggers.

Each arrest consumes valuable police time, making life easier for real criminals. In the typical case, Pearl found, the time spent by the arresting officer booking the suspect, writing a report, testifying in court and the like adds up to 21 hours. To take one hooker off the street for a few hours takes a police officer off the street for the equivalent of nearly three working days.

It is commonly assumed that crackdowns on prostitution also deter other street crimes, but Pearl's evidence points in the opposite direction. In New York City, an effort to clean up Times Square nearly doubled the number of arrests for prostitution. But the rate of serious crimes in the same area rose by as much as 40 percent, while arrest rates dropped. Houston had a similar experience. "Even the most vigorous police battles against prostitution yield Pyrrhic victories at best," writes Pearl.

Unfortunately, this news comes just as the AIDS epidemic is providing a new excuse for laws against commercial sex. But the impulse is exactly the wrong one. At Nevada's famous Chicken Ranch, a legal brothel, the proprietor attracts customers with strict health regulations on his employees. In a futuristic illegal market, such precautions are much less feasible.

AIDS is just one more empty pretext for our mindless laws against prostitution, which draw resources away from truly dangerous crimes without ever making much progress against the vice they aim to eradicate. Prohibitionists insist we can't afford to sanction commercial sex, but Pearl's evidence makes it clear we can't afford not to.

Today is Thursday, Sept. 13, the 256th day of 1990. There are 109 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:

On Sept. 13, 1788, the U.S. Constitutional Convention authorized the first national election, and declared New York City the temporary national capital.

Cop hits sour note at concert

I will spare the names because a cooler head kept the incident from getting out of hand. But the story's worth telling.

There are all sorts of cops, of course. Good cops. Bad cops. Smart cops and stupid cops. Just like in any other line of work.

This one was a cop who apparently became overcome with his authority.

The Frank Sinatra concert had ended. It was an older crowd, of course. They came with their wines and cheeses and Ol' Blue Eyes put on a show that brought them to their feet on a number of occasions. He lit up a smoke and crooned in a manner one wouldn't expect of a 74-year-old.

I was standing outside Gate One waiting for a friend to join me for a ride home. That's when I heard the cop yelling.

He was directly in a man's face. I'd say the man was in his 70s, too.

The cop screamed at the man: "I'll take your ass to jail. You understand me?"

The man was aghast. "I don't believe this is happening," he said.

The man's elderly wife, who was walking with the help of a cane, was crying.

What could the man have done? I was asking myself that and so were others leaving the concert.

Lewis Grizzard

Surely, he hadn't sneaked any dope in. He obviously wasn't a member of a street gang. Did he jaywalk?

I couldn't keep my nose out of it. I went to the cop and I announced my affiliation with the newspaper, hoping he wouldn't decide to take me downtown with his desperados.

He let the man talk to me. The man said he and his wife had driven all the way from Panama City, Fla., to see the concert. He said they had arrived early so that he could find the handicap parking. He had a handicap parking sticker on his car because of his wife's crippled condition.

When he came out of the concert, holding to his wife as they walked to the car, the cop was waiting. The cop said they were illegally parked in the handicap parking space.

The man's handicap sticker, you see, had expired.

"I didn't even know the things went out of date," he told me. "I never even thought of checking it."

The cop told the man he was illegally parked and was going to write him a ticket.

The man argued. The cop got mad.

I recognized a city councilman walking out of the concert. I called to him. I told him what I had determined the situation to be.

He handled the matter marvelously. He took the young cop aside. They talked.

He calmed the cop. He calmed the elderly couple. There were no tickets, no trips to jail. But you ask: How can a policeman lose his cool with an elderly out-of-town couple over an expired handicap sticker?

The cop could see the woman was walking with a cane.

They're shooting each other on the streets and this guy's hassling old people at a Frank Sinatra concert?

I hope the elderly couple will visit our city again.

But I doubt they will.

Shoring up beaches is a tidal waste

By ROBERT WALTERS

OCEAN CITY, Md. — Last summer and fall, the Army Corps of Engineers spent $12 million in public funds on an eight-mile-long beach replenishment project at this seaside resort. But more than half of the restored sand already has been washed back into the sea.

In the wake of that fabulous failure, the corps now wants to launch the second phase of its shoreline stabilization project — at a cost of an additional $60 million. If authorized, it too will almost certainly be wiped out by an ocean that has no respect for government efforts to alter nature's balance.

For decades, public and private agencies have sought in vain to stabilize the shorelines of the almost 300 barrier beaches that lie just offshore along the Atlantic and Gulf coasts and are home to many of the ocean resorts in the East and South.

Seawalls, bulkheads, jetties, groins and assorted other devices have been installed in countless futile attempts to preserve beaches for vacationers. During the past quarter of a century, the corps has dumped 1.7 billion cubic yards of sand along 400 miles of the country's shoreline at a cost of $8 billion.

Those efforts cannot succeed because the barrier islands' shorelines — including the dunes, lagoons, near-by ocean floor and other associated features — are dynamic systems. The ever-moving ocean causes the sand to constantly shift — rising here, falling there and migrating everywhere.

Any effort to permanently preserve that system as it exists at one particular moment in time is doomed to failure because the forces of nature — so powerful that they can easily overwhelm anything people attempt — will not tolerate a static condition.

During the last century, water levels relative to adjacent land have risen about six inches along the Gulf of Mexico and about 12 inches along the Atlantic Ocean.

That has produced yearly beach erosion ranging from 2 to 3 feet in some locations to 12 to 15 feet elsewhere. Global warming caused by the "greenhouse effect" will accelerate the trend.

Orrin H. Pilkey Jr., a duke University geologist, studied 270 replenishment projects undertaken on 90 East Coast beaches since the early 1960s. One-fourth washed away within a year, three-fourths disappeared within two years and almost none remained after five years, he reports.

The most notable exception to that rule: The sand in Miami Beach, Fla., was replenished more than a decade ago at a cost of $65 million and the beach remains in superb shape today.

More typical, however, are the experiences of New Jersey communities such as Atlantic City, Ocean City and Long Beach Island, where all evidence of shoreline stabilization projects was wiped out within a few years.

In Sea Bright, N.J., a massive seawall was supposed to protect 300 feet of beach. All of the sand is now gone, but the Corps of Engineers has a new solution — a 12-mile-long shoreline restoration project that will cost $100 million.

Groins jutting out from the shore enhance sand accumulation on a beach — at the expense of other beaches. After groins were installed in Ocean City, for example, the erosion rate on nearby Assateague Island accelerated from 2 to 36 feet yearly.

Notwithstanding the overwhelming evidence, fundamentally misguided projects to "save" beaches and protect billions of dollars worth of resort real estate are constantly being launched.

Just north of Ocean City, Fenwick Island, Del., had its beach replenished in 1988 at a cost of $1.6 million. Since then, more than $5 million has been spent on other rehabilitation projects in Middlesex Beach, Sea Colony, Bethany Beach and other southern Delaware oceanfront communities.

Nature has one more surprise for those towns: The coastal development boom of the 1970s and 1980s occurred during a period when hurricane activity was only about half of the average experienced in the 1940s, 1950s and 1960s.

If those fierce storms return to their earlier level of activity, much more than the sand dumped on the beach will be lost.

Mack Vines, fired as Dallas police chief.

Ousted police chief says he'll fight perjury charge

DALLAS (AP) — Fired police chief Mack Vines criticized his quick ouster and said he will fight a misdemeanor perjury charge that he tied to a panel investigating his dismissal of an officer.

Vines was fired by City Manager Jan Hart on Wednesday, less than two hours after a grand jury returned the indictment. The grand jury refused to bring other, more serious charges.

"I am surprised and saddened by the precipitous action that has been taken by the Dallas city manager. I plan to fight the minor legal charge returned by the grand jury," Vines said in a statement.

A Dallas County grand jury rejected the district attorney's recommendation that Vines be indicted on seven felony perjury counts.

Vines, who was suspended with pay last month, has denied any wrongdoing. His attorney Bill Boyd said he will plead innocent to the perjury charge. If convicted, Vines faces a maximum penalty of one year in county jail and a $2,000 fine.

Before Wednesday's events, some city and police officials had speculated that had Vines been cleared, he would have been able to return to his job. But after the indictment, they said, Ms. Hart had no choice but to fire him.

"I just think it would be nearly impossible to go on as if this hadn't happened," said Dallas city councilman Jerry Bartos.

Police Sgt. Judy Katz said most officers believe the firing was justified, although some defended the chief and attributed his ouster to politics.

J.T. Means, president of the patrolman's union, said Vines' dismissal was "something that had to be done."

Because Vines was indicted, even on a misdemeanor charge, "he had to be terminated," Means said.

At a news conference at City Hall, Hart said the dismissal was in the best interests of the city. "The issue is really one ... of public confidence and trust in the leadership of the department," she said.

But Dallas Mayor Annette Strauss said she felt sorry for Vines.

"Our police department is a whole lot stronger, and because of his leadership, I believe that we have better ... public safety in our city, and our crime rate really is down," she said.

"And I regret what has happened."

Prosecutors had urged felony charges against Vines for statements he made in August to a panel investigating the firing of Dallas police officer Patrick LeMaire.

LeMaire was fired in June 1989, about two weeks after he killed an unarmed Mexican national. He was reinstated in July by an administrative law judge who ruled his firing unjustified. However, he did not rejoin the Dallas force.

During LeMaire's appeal of his firing, reports surfaced that police internal affairs documents on his dismissal were altered. Hart appointed a special panel to look into those charges.

The misdemeanor charge alleges that Vines lied to the panel about a conversation he had with his assistant Greg Holliday Aug. 2. Holliday said Vines called him late at night and tried to influence Holliday's testimony before the special panel, which he was scheduled to give the next day.

On Aug. 3, Hart suspended Holliday and Vines with pay. Holliday later was reinstated.

Vines' firing marks the second time in as many years the Dallas Police Department is without a leader. In July 1988, Vines succeeded former chief Billy Prince, who retired saying he no longer wanted to deal with mounting turmoil, mostly over a record number of police shootings of blacks and Hispanics.

The San Antonio Missions park would be expanded more than 300 acres to 832 acres under a bill sponsored by Rep. Albert Bustamante, D-San Antonio. It would also allow Congress to spend up to $15 million for development of the park.

House to consider Meredith park bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House will be asked next week to expand the San Antonio Missions National Historic Park and increase the role of the National Park Service at Lake Meredith near Amarillo.

The Interior and Insular Affairs Committee on Wednesday approved measures to do both. The bills will be sent to the House floor next week, aides said.

A bill by Rep. Bill Sarpalius, D-Amarillo, extends the National Park Service's supervision of Lake Meredith indefinitely. That should spur development of the lake that the park service has hesitated to do because of the impermanent role it had there. "This is a positive move for the lake and a potential boost for the economy of the entire Panhandle," Sarpalius said.

The bill calls for a five-year development plan and authorizes $1 million to be spent on the plan in 1991.

Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, is sponsoring similar measures in the Senate.

Memo: Fort Hancock dump site 'too convenient'

By SUZANNE GAMBOA
Associated Press Writer

EL PASO (AP) — A state-hired consultant told Texas officials in a 1985 memo that more work was needed on a preliminary report, because it made the choice of a West Texas site for a nuclear waste dump look "too damn convenient."

The July 20, 1985, memo written by Jim Hussey, project manager for Dames and Moore Consulting, listed several problems in the state's selection of Fort Hancock for Texas' radioactive waste.

Attorneys for El Paso and Hudspeth counties plan to introduce the memo as evidence in a non-jury trial before 34th District Judge Bill Moody. The attorneys said Wednesday the memo will help prove the state relaxed health and safety code standards when it picked a site near Fort Hancock.

The memo was addressed to Sal Gozioglou, Dames and Moore task manager, and Ruben Alvarado, chief engineer for the Texas Low Level Waste Disposal Authority.

It refers to a preliminary report on a study by the authority of potential sites located on state-owned land.

"I wonder if the approach and conclusions don't go a bit too far — without having any sub-surface data at all. It is awfully convenient now that we are concentrating on state lands that HU is (greater than) the world," Hussey wrote in the memo.

Hussey said in the memo that the report would conflict with a previous evaluation, called the Phase II study. In that study, the state eliminated the Fort Hancock site.

Hussey said the newest report would make the Phase II study appear seriously deficient, giving the state a credibility problem.

"I believe more work is necessary to assure a smooth, convincing transition from Phase II work to these studies," he said in the memo.

An attachment to Hussey's memo listed seven problems with the state's selection process.

The attachment said the state would need to work on explaining why the criteria for choosing a site changed when the state began looking at state-owned land.

"I don't think the considerations need to be changed, but if they have to be addressed, we ought to justify each on technical grounds. Avoid in this report!?" he wrote in the memo.

He also pointed out that the state had ranked three Culberson County sites third, fourth and fifth environmentally but that they were left out potential sites for the dump. Finally, Hussey said the state would have a hard time selling the Fort Hancock site as the best choice because it had previously eliminated that site and earlier had called a South Texas site the top choice.

"The switch to Hudspeth looks too damn convenient!" Hussey said.

Assistant County Attorney Gayle Garner said the memo shows that the state influenced the results of the consultants' studies of potential sites.

"They hired Dames and Moore to do this study. This tells us they (the state) suggested what they wanted."

Rick Jacobi, general manager of the authority, disagreed.

He said the memo was "an illustration of the internal control we have."

"What they will prove (with the memo) is internal honesty rather than some sort of deception," he said.

Jacobi said Hussey wrote the memo knowing that others would want to be convinced that Fort Hancock was a suitable site.

"He's telling us to make absolutely sure about your conclusions and be prepared to convince me," Jacobi said.

Witness says sheriff chased him, threatened to kill him

DECATUR (AP) — Wise County Sheriff Leroy Burch on Tuesday chased a grand jury witness in his car, yanked him out of the vehicle and threatened to kill him, officials say.

The witness captured the altercation on a miniature tape recorder in his shirt pocket, authorities said Wednesday.

Sam Lee, an investigator for the Wise County attorney's office, suffered several cuts on the back of his head during the altercation Tuesday, according to Jerry Cobb, the special prosecutor handling a grand jury inquiry into the Sheriff's Department.

On the tape, the sheriff, sometimes screaming, repeatedly threatened to kill Lee.

"I ain't gonna fight you. I'm going to kill you. I'm going to kill you, Sam," Sheriff Burch said as the two began arguing.

Burch, 36, who was appointed to his position four years ago, did not return telephone calls to his office, The Dallas Morning News reported.

The sheriff issued a two-page statement about the incident late Wednesday. He did not deny making the threats but accused Lee of deliberately trying to provoke him by harassing his teen-age daughter.

Sheriff Burch's threats came only minutes after an encounter outside a doughnut shop between Lee and the sheriff's 17-year-old daughter.

Lee says the daughter approached him at the shop about 8 a.m., called him a name and accused him of trying to put her father in jail.

Sheriff Burch said in his statement that Lee "made harassing remarks to her using abusive and profane language."

Lee only acknowledged raising his voice after he said the girl called him a foul name.

The sheriff's statement said: "Apparently this incident had been premeditated in an attempt to provoke me into a physical confrontation not as the sheriff, but as a father."

"Apparently the county attorney's office feels the grand jury is not going to indict me on any criminal charges as they would have, so they've taken a new approach and launched a personal vendetta," Burch said.

County Attorney Jean Bishop said her office had nothing to do with the incident Tuesday. "I wasn't even aware of it until after the fact," she said.

Lee, a former sheriff's deputy, in July testified before grand jurors for three hours. The panel is investigating allegations of civil rights violations and narcotics trafficking involving the Sheriff's Department and the county's only bail agent.

Those allegations first were raised in articles published by The Dallas Morning News earlier this year.

Cobb said Wednesday that he has investigated the confrontation between the two peace officers and plans to present his findings to the grand jury on Friday.

The sheriff has been invited to appear Friday before the panel, which is scheduled to finish its work Sept. 21.

Law enforcement officials said that when the sheriff learned from his daughter of her encounter with Lee, he telephoned Wise County District Attorney Pat Morris. In that conversation, the sheriff told Morris that he was going to kill Lee, said an official who did not want to be identified.

Morris declined to comment on the conversation, but investigators said he immediately notified Texas Department of Public Safety officers, who began looking for Lee and the sheriff.

Lee said he was driving away from Decatur when he met the sheriff, who was driving towards town. He said the sheriff turned his car around, passed him, slammed on the brakes and forced him off the road.

It was then that the confrontation began.

Lee says Burch has threatened him before, including once soon after the newspaper reported that the Sheriff's Department had arrested hundreds of men at a roadside park on indecent-exposure charges that many of the men contended were false.

Budget bargainers weigh cigarette tax as optimism prevails

By ALAN FRAM
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - White House and congressional budget bargainers are considering new taxes on cigarettes and petroleum products as participants say they sense an approaching deal despite daunting remaining obstacles.

Negotiators worked into the early morning hours today for a seventh consecutive day cloistered at Andrews Air Force Base, just outside the capital city in Maryland.

Round-the-clock sessions seemed possible as bargainers tried to close in on a package of tax increases and spending cuts saving $50 billion in the fiscal year starting Oct. 1 and $500 billion by 1995.

"The mood is fairly positive, fairly upbeat," said Rep. Bill Archer, R-Texas, one of the negotiators. "But I've got to tell you, we are a long way from reaching agreement until some major issues are resolved."

On Wednesday, the negotiators tackled the question of whose taxes will be increased. They already have agreed to raise taxes and federal fees by $25 billion next year and $130 billion over the next five years.

Participants said they discussed boosting the 16-cents-per-pack cigarette tax, perhaps doubling it, which would raise $2.8 billion next year. They continued their efforts to agree to higher taxes on alcoholic beverages, an idea both sides have suggested.

In response, Anheuser-Busch, the nation's largest brewer of malt beverages, has been running "Can the Beer Tax" advertisements. Walker Merryman, vice president of the Tobacco Institute, said cigarette manufacturers have chosen a lower-profile effort against any increase, contending that a rise in tobacco taxes would hurt the poor disproportionately and cause job layoffs.

White House budget chief Richard Darman suggested slapping a 1 percent tax on all petroleum-containing products except livestock feed, one official said, a proposal that would cover items ranging from gasoline to cosmetics. It would reap the government $800 million next year and $7 billion over five years.

He also proposed a lower-cost version of a tax on luxury items the Democrats have advanced. Goods subject to the levy under both proposals include expensive cars, private planes and boats, jewelry, furs and electronic equipment.

But one of the thorniest remaining hurdles is also a tax proposal: President Bush's proposal to lower the capital gains tax rate. The levy is charged when property and other investments are sold at a profit. Republicans say a cut would stimulate more sales and thus bring in more tax revenue.

But Democrats, complaining that the idea would merely fatten the wallets of the rich, say they won't accept it without a proposal of their own: a boost in income taxes on the wealthy. Republicans reject that idea.

The parties also remain at odds over spending totals for domestic programs. GOP negotiators want domestic programs - ranging from benefit programs like Medicare to general government efforts like road-building - to be slashed by $130 billion over the next five years. Democrats want to hold the reduction to $90 billion.

"We had to get to the tough questions, and now we're there," said Rep. Leon Panetta, D-Calif., chairman of the House Budget Committee.

One further complication was added when New York's 34 members of the House signed a letter promising to vote against any deal that limits the deductibility on federal income taxes of state and local income taxes.

Made-in-USA AK-47s exempt from import ban

By CAROLYN SKORNECK
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - Assault-style AK-47 rifles are being manufactured for the first time by an American company that is getting around the government's ban on imports of the weapon by producing some new parts.

But the company's owner and president says he wants to get out of the business as soon as he recoups the money he lost when the government cut off imports of the semiautomatic weapons last summer.

"There's no money in the firearms manufacturing market," said E. Robert Jensen of Lathrop's Shooters Supply Inc. in Tucson, Ariz. "I don't need to be in the manufacturing business. When I'm out seven figures because of an arbitrary action by the government, I'd like to get it back."

Jensen said the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms had issued him permits to import several thousand AK-47s from China before he contracted to buy them. But before they arrived, the government banned the imports and the Customs Service refused to release the guns to him, he said.

However, Jensen was allowed to tear the weapons apart and salvage some parts - everything except the receiver, which is the trigger and firing mechanism.

Then he hired a company with "state-of-the-art aerospace-type equipment" to produce new receivers and put the rifles together.

The action "is a perfectly legal activity," said BATF spokesman Jack Killorin.

The bureau permanently barred imports of 43 models of foreign-manufactured assault-style rifles in July 1989, ruling that they did not meet the "sporting uses" requirement for imported firearms.

The weapons were equipped with military-type accoutrements such as folding or collapsible stocks, pistol grips, threaded barrels for silencers; flash suppressors that could hide the shooter's position at night; bayonet lugs and large-capacity ammunition magazines.

The action followed a public outcry sparked by the Jan. 17, 1989 attack by drifter Patrick Purdy, who killed five children in a Stockton, Calif., schoolyard with an AK-47.

The bureau's action, however, did not affect domestic production of similar weapons.

Killorin of BATF said the manufacture of AK-47s by Jensen's company is an example of why Congress needs to pass President Bush's proposal to ban the domestic manufacture of weapons that had been barred from import.

Killorin and Jensen said they knew of no other U.S. company that was manufacturing assault-style firearms banned from import.

"This most recent action ... illustrates the industry's creativity when there's a loophole to be exploited and a dollar to be made," said Josh Sugarmann, director of the pro-gun control Firearms Policy Project, who first noticed that the new AK-47s were being made.

Jensen would not specify how many guns he had bought but could not bring in, narrowing it only to the "mid-four figures," nor would he say how many AK-47s he is manufacturing with the salvaged parts.

The original price of the new guns to dealers was $498 each for nine or fewer, $449 each for 10 or more. But Jensen said he had dropped both prices about $50 to move the guns more quickly.

"That's still a premium price," he said, acknowledging that the demand for the guns is high. "I chose to see if I couldn't find a way to get out of the program in 60 to 90 days. I want out of that market."

"I'm trying to recoup the losses from what the government did to me, is all," he said.

California county struggles at the brink of bankruptcy

By JOHN HOWARD
Associated Press Writer

PARADISE, Calif. (AP) — When Eve Hutton's father was beaten nearly to death, a Butte County sheriff's deputy told her to hire a private investigator.

The county, he said sadly, was simply too poor to investigate.

For Hutton and the 185,000 others in this colorful, rugged Northern California county, Butte's slide toward bankruptcy has meant fewer firefighters, fewer patrol officers, longer delays at county offices, closed libraries and a deepening perception that their county is finally going under.

"There was only one deputy sheriff to patrol 30,000 people, and he told me there was not enough manpower to investigate this crime, as it should be investigated," said Hutton, whose father, a real estate broker, remains hospitalized from an attack by eight men while he inspected property.

"That's what it's come down to: They don't even have enough people to investigate attempted murder."

Local authorities, unable to come up with $15 million needed to balance their $155 million budget, say they will decide within two weeks whether Butte will be the first county in the nation to declare bankruptcy.

The tax base in mostly agricultural Butte is buckling under a big welfare caseload — 60 percent above the per capita state average — and a large retirement community. In June, voters rejected several tax increases.

The lack of revenue has meant the elimination of 23 jobs at the sheriff's department and the part-time operation of libraries with volunteers. Because of a four-year freeze on county salaries, 15 workers in Butte's welfare department qualify for benefits themselves.

"Nobody is really sure what this bankruptcy will do," said James Souci. He said the county offered him and his neighbors equipment to form a volunteer fire-fighting unit if they would agree to maintain it. "They said they just didn't have the money," he said.

If the county actually filed for bankruptcy, a federal judge in Sacramento would most likely protect Butte from its creditors, appoint a fiscal trustee and set up a priority list of who gets paid what.

But since a county has never filed for bankruptcy before, "there are a whole lot of gray zones here. We really don't know exactly what would happen," said spokeswoman Christina Cutshaw of the state County Supervisors Association.

Butte's fiscal problems stem from costly welfare and health care programs, county authorities say, and the state's failure to kick in money. "Almost 90 percent of our budget is committed to mandatory programs," said Supervisor Jane Dolan.

Authorities also say more poor people are coming in from the cities, swelling the welfare rolls.

Family sues fast-food company over woman's stabbing death

BROWNSVILLE (AP) — The family of a woman stabbed to death in the parking lot of a Whataburger restaurant has sued the fast-food company, alleging that a lack of security guards or other precautions contributed to the slaying.

Plaintiffs in the lawsuit filed in the state's 103rd District Court in Brownsville include Ms. Valenzuela's mother, Maria Luisa Vega; the dead woman's father, Poririo Vega; and Ms. Valenzuela's widow, Oscar Valenzuela.

Family members seek compensation for hospital and funeral costs, and other unspecified compensation for mental and emotional distress. Gilberto Moreno Jr. was sentenced to life in prison last November for the murder.

House tells allies to help pay for American troops

By DONNA CASSATA
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House is sending a pointed message to U.S. allies slow to provide military and financial help for the Persian Gulf deployment: The United States will no longer foot the entire bill for defending the world.

Angered by Japan's delay in giving $1 billion to a campaign that could cost up to $15 billion in the next year, the House on Wednesday adopted a measure requiring the Asian nation to pay all the costs of stationing U.S. forces on its soil, or begin losing the troops.

The amendment was one of three burden-sharing proposals added to the $283 billion defense budget for fiscal 1991, which begins Oct. 1, by lawmakers who spent several hours of debate lashing out at America's friends.

The House resumed action on the bill today with the following issues on the agenda:

• Amendments to increase or decrease the level of spending on the Strategic Defense Initiative in fiscal 1991. President Bush had called for a budget of $4.7 billion for the program commonly known as Star Wars. The Senate trimmed about $1 billion from the 1991 request; the House slashed nearly $2 billion.

In debate on Tuesday, the ranking Republican on the House Armed Services panel, Rep. Bill Dickinson of Alabama, raised the possibility of a Bush veto if lawmakers "decimate the program."

But Rep. Barbara Boxer, D-Calif., sponsor of an amendment to end Star Wars, said it was time to stop spending "billions of dollars on a fairy tale."

• Debate over the B-2 stealth bomber, the costliest weapon in history at some $860 million a plane. Proponents of the radar-evading aircraft plan to discuss the bomber's merits but no vote on the issue is planned.

If approved, the House bill calls for halting production of the plane at the 15 bombers under construction.

• Amendments to assist communities, businesses and workers left without a job due to cutbacks in defense spending that force the closing or scaling back of military contractors.

Prompted by the rising cost of Operation Desert Shield and little in the way of assistance from Japan, West Germany and other U.S. allies, lawmakers vented their frustrations on Tuesday in overwhelming votes on burden-sharing.

By a vote of 370-53, the House adopted the amendment requiring Japan to pay all the costs associated with the 50,000 U.S. troops stationed there. For each year Japan does not cover the costs, 5,000 troops would be taken out of the country.

The United States spends $4.5 billion annually for U.S. forces in Japan; Japan contributes $2.9 billion.

"This is a real wake-up call for the new world order," said Rep. David Bonior, D-Mich., sponsor of the amendment targeting Japan.

Eight similar slayings worry Philadelphia neighborhood

By BILL STIEG
Associated Press Writer

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — The El rattles and rumbles over Frankford Avenue and dingy bars like Kenny's Saloon, The Happy Tap and the Beehouse Tavern.

From their dim interiors may emerge clues to a string of eight similar fatal stabbings over the past five years that has detectives working overtime and residents doing their own armchair — or barstool — sleuthing.

Coincidence? Copycat? Serial killer?

"They say he only kills women who go to bars, but you don't want to rely on the consistency of a psychopath," said Jillian Bailey, 23, as she read the newspaper one morning this week on her front porch on Arrott Street.

Two doors up the street, unmarked police cars were parked on the sidewalk outside a four-story brick apartment building where the latest victim lived. Detectives carried plastic bags of items from the apartment of Michelle Martin, 30, whose body was found Saturday in her apartment.

Like the seven other victims, the woman known by some as "Crazy Michelle" was a white barfly who was stabbed numerous times and found partially clothed. All eight slayings were in the city's Frankford section.

"We've had sleepless nights," homicide Lt. James Ferguson said as he came out of an alley, holding a flashlight. "We're working around the clock. Any leads, any clues, we're following up."

The night before, Police Commissioner Willie L. Williams had announced, "We're not looking at it as a serial killer."

Bailey retorted: "What is it, a fad?"

"If it's not one guy, then this is the sickest neighborhood in the country," she said.

Police have a good reason not to attribute all eight deaths to a serial killer. They arrested a local fish-store worker, Leonard Christopher, 38, in the April slaying of 46-year-old Carol Dowd. Christopher has been in jail since, so obviously he didn't kill Martin.

"They got this guy at the fish store and everyone said he's such a nice guy," said Mary Trainer, 74, who has lived in the area for more than 40 years and in the same apartment building as Martin for two years. "So now this, and everyone is saying maybe they got the wrong guy. Or maybe there's more than one."

Police released a sketch of the person last seen with Martin — a gray-haired, beer-bellied, bespectacled man of about 60.

Six of the victims were between 46 and 74 years old. The others were 29 and 30 but looked older, Williams said. The commissioner said information was being compiled so the FBI can come up with a psychological profile of the killer or killers.

"Are people scared? Yeah," said the barmaid at the Jolly Post Tavern, where one victim, Theresa Sciortino, last was seen alive in January 1989.

"It's like watching a TV show," said the barmaid, who wouldn't give her name. "You wonder what this guy is thinking. I don't know — maybe he had a thing about his mother and he looks for women like her."

Philadelphia police have released this sketch of the person last seen with Michelle Martin, 30, the most recent victim in a string of eight similar fatal stabbings.

The Selby Family, a popular band in the Pampa area, will provide musical entertainment prior to the live auction portion of the Chamber of Commerce Country Fair. Standing with the bass is Carolyn Selby. Center back with the fiddle is 19-year old Thurston Selby. On the far right is guitarist Jack Selby, and in the bottom center is 16-year old Wallace Selby who plays the mandolin.

Selby Family to entertain at Pampa Chamber of Commerce Country Fair

Organizers for the Pampa Area Chamber of Commerce Country Fair are pleased to announce that the Selby family will provide entertainment for the fair-goers prior to the live auction portion of the evening's events.

Set for Oct. 27 at the M.K. Brown Civic Auditorium, attendees will have a chance to bid on over 200 items donated by local and area merchants, corporations and artists.

Jack Selby was raised in a musical family. "My dad and grandfather played for dances during the depression," remembers Selby. "That's how they paid for the farm."

The start of this family venture began when Selby helped to organize a fiddlin' contest during the Gray County 80th birthday celebration. That's when Thurston, Selby's 19 year-old son, made his playing debut.

The Selby family performers consist of Selby, who plays the guitar, his wife, Carolyn, who plays bass, Thurston, who plays the fiddle, and the youngest son, 16 year-old Wallace, who plays the mandolin.

The Selby family who entertained at this year's Top O' Texas Rodeo and at the American Cancer Society fund raiser held at the Mack home earlier this summer, also play for family reunions and anniversaries.

Father and son team up to play for small affairs when the full band isn't needed.

"We are carrying on a family tradition of playing old-time music," says Selby, "at least 50 years old," although he adds that some newer tunes have been incorporated into the family's repertoire because of Thurston's love of Chubby Wise.

Selby is employed at IRI while his wife teaches pre-K at Horace Mann. Thurston is a freshman at South Plains College in Levelland and Wallace is a sophomore at Pampa High School.

Tickets for the 6th annual Chamber fund raiser are on sale now. For more information call the Chamber office at 669-3241.

Home nursing care creates more emotional demands than hospitals

By ANTON REICHER
Ennis Daily News

ENNIS, Texas (AP) — Nurses who visit patients' homes face emotional problems that nurses in hospitals are often spared.

"You get to know patients as they live," said Agnes Burris, a registered nurse with the Baylor Home-Care program. "We don't know about them in the hospital."

Getting to know the patients and their families more closely means having to deal with the grief when the end comes.

"I'm a very emotional person," said registered nurse Debra Griffin. "I sit down and cry with the family and then the next day go on."

The rewards are when patients overcome sometimes insurmountable odds against recovery.

Baylor HomeCare nursing supervisor Becky Lucas' favorite example is the diabetic truck driver who survived heart surgery and then endured months with an open chest wound.

"I told him 'If I ever catch you with a cigarette, I'll stomp your socks off,'" Mrs. Lucas said.

Baylor HomeCare provides registered nurses, nurse assistants and therapists skilled in the same techniques used in hospitals.

The trend in health care today is to limit the patient's hospital stay, Mrs. Lucas said.

Restrictions set by private insurance or Medicaid often determine if a patient will benefit from home care.

In the Baylor program, registered nurses serve as case managers, visiting five or six patients a day. The nurses manage up to 15 cases at a time, initiating therapy prescribed by doctors and setting tasks for nurse assistants.

The nurses also are on hand to assess the patient's condition, with a hotline to the doctor if immediate care is indicated, Mrs. Lucas said.

"We can catch things that maybe the patient has ignored or isn't aware of," Mrs. Lucas said.

Nurse assistants, or home health aides, take care of the daily chores of bed baths and other personal care, Mrs. Lucas said. Nurse assistants are certified and are required to have one year's experience.

Despite the potential personal attachments, or perhaps because of them, the home care nurses interviewed say they prefer their jobs to the hospital grind.

"At first, you have a scary feeling going into their environment," Mrs. Griffin said. "You don't know what it would be like, but you try not to let it bother you."

The work is more challenging in that "you have to know a little bit about everything," Mrs. Griffin said. "You don't have another nurse down the hall to run to."

Treatment at home often is different from the ideal hospital conditions.

"Some families think they've got a better home remedy and start changing things," Mrs. Griffin said.

Mrs. Burris, a native of Scotland, said she often has to repeat herself for older patients who find it hard to get past her Highland burr. Caring for patients in their own homes calls for "a lot of improvising," she said.

Licensed vocational nurse Nita Killins said the opportunity to visit the patient's home and make new friends makes the job "better than any place I've ever worked."

However, Ms. Killins acknowledged that "the job can be sad."

Every nurse handles the death of a patient differently, Mrs. Lucas said.

"I ask myself three questions: did I keep them comfortable, did they die with dignity, and is the family coping," Mrs. Lucas said.

After that, the only thing to do is "go on with it, because someone else needs my help." Unfortunately, it never seems to be a single death, but two or three at a time, she said.

Mrs. Griffin said she makes it a practice to check back with the family several days later to see how they are coping.

On the positive side, thank you notes and Christmas cards from patients who have recovered are not unusual. At least one former patient a week drops by the office for a visit.

The combined Waxahachie-Corsicana-Ennis home care program has about 350 patients, with as many as 100 a month cared for by the Ennis office.

Affair with married man destroys self-respect

DEAR ABBY: Don't ever stop printing letters from women involved with married men. In fact, please print one more — especially this one.

I am a well-respected professional in the mental health field, and it boggles my mind now to realize that I wasted five years of my life hopelessly entangled in a destructive relationship with a married man. I lost my marriage, my health, thousands of dollars and my self-respect, as I desperately tried to make the impossible work. I was so needy, I was sure I couldn't survive without him. I was totally addicted to this man and in so much pain, I was numb.

It has taken a year of no contact with him, therapy and great support from friends to start rebuilding a new life for myself without him.

Abby, please tell women that life is ever so much more beautiful outside an addictive relationship. Withdrawal is not easy, but it's the only hope, and well worth it.

Reading similar letters over and over in your column convinced me that not all those women could be wrong — so I began to break through my denial. I hope you will print this as my gift to all the readers who inspired me to leave the hell I was living in.

THANKFULLY FREE

DEAR FREE: The "hell" you were living in has men in residence as well as women. It takes some people a little longer to learn that (a) there's no free lunch, and (b) forbidden fruit is often poisonous.

Sexual attraction predates marriage, but we still have freedom of choice, so should you find yourself sexually attracted to a married person, run in the opposite direction as though your life

Dear Abby

depended on it, because it usually does.

DEAR ABBY: I have been a male mail carrier for 20 years, and I have a message for all those lonely housewives out there: We appreciate your offer of a cold drink in the summer, and a hot drink in the winter, but please, give it to us on the porch.

Abby, you have no idea of how many women wait by the door, wearing see-through negligees, short shorts and sometimes just a beach towel wrapped around them — and invite us in for a little cold lemonade or a hot cup of coffee.

Don't get me wrong; I realize most of them are only trying to be nice, but I wish they wouldn't ask us to come in the house. Any suggestions?
U.S. POSTAL EMPLOYEE

DEAR EMPLOYEE: Come on — by this time you should have figured out a friendly, inoffensive way to say, "Thank you, but it's against regulations to go into someone's home to socialize," or, "Sorry, I'm running late, but thanks for offering."

Cone tosses 3-hitter as Mets down Bucs

By DICK BRINSTER
AP Sports Writer

David Cone's success in the clutch against the middle of the Pittsburgh lineup has the New York Mets alive and hoping to sweep the Pirates tonight.

"Cone seemed to be a man on a mission," Pittsburgh manager Jim Leyland said after the right-hander pitched a three-hitter Wednesday night. "He wasn't going to let us beat him."

Not Bobby Bonilla, not Barry Bonds. Both were beaten by Cone, who made a two-run first inning stand up all night as the Mets held on for a 2-1 victory.

Had they lost?

"If we lost this game, we were dead," New York's Frank Viola said.

Tonight, Doug Drabek will try to become Pittsburgh's first 20-game winner in 13 years. Dwight Gooden (16-6) goes for the Mets.

The Pirates, who could afford the luxury of a loss, were relaxed after Wednesday night's game.

"When you come into the clubhouse after losing 2-1 and still with a 21/2-game lead, you can't be too devastated," said Bonilla, who drove in Pittsburgh's only run with a bases-loaded walk in the third inning.

"I was flirting with disaster in the third inning," Cone said.

Indeed, He allowed a single to losing pitcher John Smiley, who nearly matched Cone pitch for pitch before settling for a five-hitter.

Cone walked Jay Bell, Andy Van Slyke and Bonilla to force in a run. But Cone toughened in the face of disaster and got Bonds to pop out to end the inning.

Elsewhere, it was San Francisco 8, Atlanta 3; Chicago 9, Philadelphia 3; Montreal 6, St. Louis 2; Houston 3, Cincinnati 1 in 13 innings, and Los Angeles 10, San Diego 3.

Cone improved to 5-0 lifetime against the Pirates. The victory was especially sweet for the Mets, who entered the fray against Smiley having won just one of their last eight games against southpaws.

The Mets won on a two-run double by Dave Magadan following a walk to Gregg Jefferies and a single by Keith Miller.

Astros 3, Reds 1

Mike Simms' first major league hit knocked in the go-ahead-run in the 13th inning.

Simms, who replaced Glenn Davis at first base in the 12th, singled to center off Tim Layana (5-3) to score Eric Yelding. Layana wild-pitched in another run. Juan Agosto (7-7) pitched 1 2-3 innings for the victory, with Brian Meyer getting the last out for his first save.

The A's Mike Gallego performs a balancing act after being hit by a pitch.

It sounded like a concession speech from Carlton Fisk, the elder statesman of the Chicago White Sox.

"We still have our guns, but we're out of bullets," Fisk said after the White Sox lost to Cleveland 12-2 Wednesday night and fell 11 games behind Oakland in the American League West with only 20 left. If you're counting, the Athletics' magic number is 10.

"We just can't pack it in yet," Fisk said. "I don't think anyone here will. You want to finish respectably. But they have a huge lead, seemingly insurmountable. A lot of things that were working early in the season stopped working for us."

Oakland, which has doubled its lead since Sept. 1, trounced Seattle 9-3. In the AL East, Boston increased its lead over Toronto to four games with a 6-1 triumph over Milwaukee while the Blue Jays lost to Kansas City 7-5.

Elsewhere, it was Texas 5, New York 4; Baltimore 2, Detroit 1; California 8, Minnesota 6.

The White Sox lost for the sixth time in seven games as Cleveland rapped out 17 hits — four each by Brook Jacoby and Alex Cole plus homers by Stan Jefferson and Carlos Baerga — and Bud Black (11-10) won for the first time in more than a month by scattering eight hits.

Melido Perez (12-14) lost for the fourth time in five starts, yielding five runs and nine hits in 5 1-3 innings.

Athletics 9, Mariners 3

Rookie Dann Howitt's first major league hit, a tie-breaking triple, ignited Oakland's five-run sixth inning.

Scott Sanderson (16-9) combined with three relievers for a seven-hit effort.

Howitt's triple off Mike Gardiner (0-1) broke a 3-3 tie and Terry Steinbach added a two-run double in the sixth inning.

Ken Griffey Jr. drove in his 40-year-old father, Ken Sr., for the first time since Ken Sr. joined the Mariners on Aug. 29, hitting a two-run homer in the first inning.

Red Sox 6, Brewers 1

Mike Boddicker stopped Boston's skid with a seven-hitter and Ellis Burks and Carlos Quintana led a 13-hit attack with three singles each. Boddicker (15-8) struck out three and didn't walk a batter. Milwaukee's Teddy Higuera (10-7) gave up all the Boston runs and 12 hits in six innings.

Royals 7, Blue Jays 5

Bo Jackson drove in four runs, three with a first-inning homer, and George Brett had two triples among his four hits.

Mark Davis, who led the majors with 44 saves a year ago, went two scoreless innings for his sixth save and first since May 7.

Amarillo High's Dippel wary of Harvesters' defense

According to the Harris Football Rating System, things won't change much when Pampa goes against Amarillo High at 7:30 p.m. Friday night in Dick Bivens Stadium in Amarillo.

Harris is going with Amarillo High as a 19-point favorite in the traditional meeting between the longtime rivals, but Sandies' coach Larry Dippel isn't taking the Harvesters for granted.

"Pampa has a pretty good defensive team and they made the big plays on offense. They shut Levland down good, and they look like the type of team that won't give up much on defense," Dippel said.

In the overall series between the two clubs, AHS holds a 49-14-3 edge. Dippel owns a 12-1 mark against the Harvesters.

AHS opened the season with a 17-14 win over Clovis, N.M., thanks to a 25-yard field goal by Brian Earthman with 25 seconds remaining in the game. It was the first field goal try in Earthman's prep career.

"I felt fortunate to win that game. Clovis has a good football team. Of course, you have to be pleased to win the opener," Dippel said.

The Wildcats were New Mexico's top-ranked Class 4A club going into the game.

The AHS-Clovis tilt was played in a steady drizzle, creating a slippery turf which made breakaway runs almost impossible.

"We've got an experienced offense and a couple of good running backs (Bryan Paulk and Mick Byers), but they couldn't do much playing in a rainstorm," Dippel said.

Despite the adverse weather, Paulk and Byers still rushed for 83 and 72 yards, respectively, with Byers scoring a TD on a one-yard run.

The Sandies also hooked up for a TD through the air with quarterback Jason Lynch throwing to split end Cayce Powell for a 12-yard score.

"I feel like we're going to have some good balance in our running and throwing game," Dippel said.

"Anyway, I look for that to hold true."

AHS' defense recovered three fumbles and held the Wildcats to 165 total yards.

"Going into the season I felt we would be better offensively, but our defense did a pretty good job against Clovis," Dippel said.

Pampa's defense didn't do a bad job either, despite surrendering 352 yards total offense in the 20-0 win over Levland last week.

The Harvesters were able to slam the door whenever the Lobos got inside Pampa's 20. Harvester defenders came up with a half-dozen Lobo turnovers.

In starring roles for Pampa's defense were senior strong safety Steve Sanders and senior middle linebacker Zach Thomas. Sanders intercepted two passes and Thomas has a pass theft and a fumble recovery. Between them, the duo had 10 solo tackles and 13 assisted tackles.

Three long touchdowns runs produced 311 of the 315 total yards for Pampa's offense. Quincy Williams'

91-yard TD dash was the longest run of the night while Wayne Cavanaugh and Thomas contributed 86-yard TD runs. Cavanaugh with 107 yards on eight carries was the game's top rusher. Thomas had 106 yards on seven carries while Williams finished with 98 yards on 14 totes.

After leading, 13-12, at halftime, the Harvesters ended up losing to the Sandies, 20-16, in last year's contest.

The AHS game begins three straight road trips for the Harvesters, who won't play at home again until Oct. 12 when Hereford visits to open the District 1-4A season.

Scoreboard

SWC Thumbnails
DALLAS (AP) — Here are previews of the weekend's college football games involving Southwest Conference teams:

HOUSTON (1-0, 0-0 SWC) at TEXAS TECH (0-1, 0-0 SWC), Thursday, Sept. 13, 7 p.m. (CDT), ESPN Telecast — Houston has a 16-5-1 overall advantage in a series which began in 1951. UH won last year's meeting 40-24 in the Astrodome. Houston mentor John Jenkins is 1-0 overall (first year) as he undertakes his initial SWC contest as a head coach. Tech's Spike Dykes is 20-15-1 (fourth year, all with the Red Raiders) overall and 12-9-1 in SWC activity. The two head coaches were on the same staff together at Mississippi State in 1979. The Cougars have outscored their opponents 626-159 over the last 12 games since Sept. 1989, with the run-and-shoot offense, devised by Jenkins, and a swarming, turnover-creating defense. The Red Raiders, going to the air a little more often this autumn after losing SWC all-time leading scorer RB James Gray (312 career points), hope to rebound after falling to rugged Ohio State in Columbus on a fourth quarter punt return by Jeff Graham.

Houston QB David (Slinger) Klingler showed why he might have been college football's best reserve behind Heisman Trophy winner Andre Ware last fall. In the opening win over UNLV, the junior standout was 30-of-54 for 426 yards and a 55.6 percent completion rate. SB Chuck Weatherspoon brings in 10 carries for 120 yards and three punt returns for 26 yards. Tech's defense, which has to carry the young squad through two games in five days, is paced by LB Charles Rowe (119 tackles last year, SWC-high 16 hits against the Buckeyes last week). RB Anthony Lynn (27 carries, 89 yards in the opener) keeps defenses honest. Game is part of a Division I-A experiment on ESPN in pre-weekend viewing.

SMU (1-0, 0-0 SWC) at TULANE (1-1), Noon (CDT), Raycom Sports Telecast — The Green Wave leads 4-3, dating back to 1943 at Tulane Stadium. SMU won 51-7 when the squads last met in 1982 at Texas Stadium in Irving. SMU's Forrest Gregg is 3-9 (second season, both at SMU) as a college head coach after helping the Mustangs resume football game activity in 1989. Tulane's Greg Davis, a Texas A&M assistant coach in the mid-1980s, is 10-15 (third year) at Tulane. Tulane last week beat Rice 21-10 at Houston. The Mustangs downed Vanderbilt of the SEC 44-7 at Owenby Stadium last week. Green Wave FB Terrance Strickland averaged almost seven yards per carry (7 attempts, 48 yards) at Rice last week and is Tulane's leading receiver over the last 14 games with 54 receptions (including 47 in 1989). Quarterback Deron Smith recovered from a slow, early start to notch a 19-of-30 passing night against Rice for 221 yards and two TDs. Smith has completed over 55 percent of his tries and 274 total passes since Sept., 1989. SMU QB Mike Rocco started the season with a 11-of-13 first quarter passing against Vanderbilt as he needs three completions to move into 22nd place in SWC career completions' history with 316, ahead of Texas A&M's Gary Kubiak with 315 completions from 1979-82. RBs Rongea Hill and Kevin Love are Nos. 3 and 4 in SWC rushing this week with 120 and 119 yards, respectively. WR Michael Bowen and Corey Beard combined for 15 catches, 165 yards and four TD receptions against Vanderbilt.

TULSA (1-1) at ARKANSAS (0-2, 7-1 SWC In 1989), 4 p.m. (CDT) — Arkansas leads the Golden Hurricane 49-15-3 in one of the two schools' longest-standing rivalries — 67 games with the series origin in 1899. Tulsa's Dave Rader, a star Golden Hurricane quarterback in his playing days, is 11-14 (third year, all at Tulsa). Razorbacks' mentor Jack Crowe makes his Arkansas debut after serving as offensive coordinator-quarterbacks coach for the 1989 UA crew. He's 5-15 (third year) as a college head coach after guiding Livingston (Ala.) in 1977 and '78. The Golden Hurricane lost a hard-fought decision 10-3 at Oklahoma State before topping Southwest Missouri State last weekend. Tulsa is coming off a 1989 Independence Bowl appearance against Oregon, won by the Ducks 27-24 in Shreveport, La. Arkansas, 20-4 with a pair of Mobil Cotton Bowl berths and SWC titles since 1983, is going with a bit of a youth movement as 47 lettermen (4 starters on offense, 7 on defense, 11 total) return to the 1990 fold. In a battle of the quarterbacks, the Hurricane's T.J. Rubley has amassed over 7,000 yards of career total offense. His top passing season was in 1988 when he was 182-of-374 for 2,497 yards and 17 TDs. UA quarterback Quinn Grovey is one of the nation's most elusive signal-callers. He enters the campaign with 348 rushing attempts and 1,420 net ground yards (most by any Razorback QB) to complement 172-of-291 passing (59.1 percent) for 2,610 yards and 11 TDs on a team which has been primarily triple option on offense for three years. NG Chad Rolan balances a tenacious defense as a three-year letterman at Arkansas.

SOUTHWESTERN LOUISIANA (2-0) at TEXAS A&M (1-0, 0-0 SWC), 6 p.m. (CDT) — First meeting between the teams. USL's Nelson Stokley, a native of Kennedy, Texas, and star for LSU in the 1966 Cotton Bowl as the Tigers' quarterback (LSU stopped Arkansas' 22-game winning streak with a 14-7 win) is 27-19 (fifth season, all at USL) overall. A&M coach R.C. Slocum is 9-4 second year, both with the Aggies) and is off to the best head coaching start in Aggieland since D.X. Bible started at 12-0-1 with the 1919-20 A&M squads. A&M has had a week to recuperate after a 28-13 triumph at Hawaii. Southwestern Louisiana, which has won 9 of its last 13 contests (some success rate as the Aggies since Sept., 1989), has suffered only minimal effects from the loss of All-South independent QB Brian Mitchell (a 3,311 yards rushing, 1,966 passing yards, 3,267 yards of total offense in 1989). USL has compensated with a stingy defense and the play of QB James Freeman (132 yards rushing, 18-of-33 passing for 290 yards, touchdown responsibility of 3). The Aggies counter with the fierce defense of LB William Thomas, the SWC Defensive Player of the Week for his showing against Hawaii, and a pinpoint, ball-control offense. QB Lance Pavlas engineers the cavalcade with 10-of-20 passing for 122 yards and one TD in his 1990 debut. CB Kevin Smith has the best interception success of any current SWC player with 11 pickers in his last nine games for the Aggies.

Turning doves into a delicacy

September 1st was the opening day of dove season. The annual lessons have been reinforced, relearned or learned by a new generation of hunters.

Lesson 1 - The special friendship shared on opening day is more important than the quality of the hunting.

Lesson 2 - Shooting at doves is easy. Downing one of those speed demons requires both skill and luck. (A quick trip to the gun club will help your next hunting trip.)

Lesson 3 - Most doves that are killed end up in a freezer where they become unrecognizable before ending up in the trash. My wife, Becky, has a recipe that will turn doves into a delicacy. The remainder of this column is in her talented hands.

When it comes to cooking doves, I draw on the expertise of two of Texas' most respected cooks. Their suggestions should help you enjoy eating your gamebirds.

The late Helen Corbitt, director of the Neiman-Marcus restaurants, suggested that fish that has been frozen should be "refreshed" by soaking in milk for up to 24 hours before cooking. This technique works beautifully on bass, and can be applied to gamebirds as well.

For doves or any other game, I find that soaking in buttermilk for a day works even better.

The world's greatest recipe for doves has to be this one from Mary Faulk Koock of Austin's legendary Green Pastures restaurant.

It is found in The Texas Cookbook (Little, Brown, 1965).

DOVES

Salt lightly, but pepper birds generously. Take two parts of chopped apple and one part of chopped onion, depending on number of birds.

Stuff cavity of birds firmly. Wrap each bird with a piece of breakfast bacon. Place on wire rack over low coals; turn often until bacon is crisp. Then place birds in roaster, add just a very small amount of wine (red) or water (1/2 cup), again depending on number. Cover and place in a very low (200 degree) oven to keep warm till time to serve. Place on platter and pour drippings in pan over the birds.

If you have trouble with flames because of the bacon fat dripping on the coals you may want to take the birds off before they are completely done and finish them in the oven with the wine, at a slightly higher temperature, but no higher than 325 degrees. Plan to have lots of birds when you fix these. I have seen men eat 10 or 15 each!—RBP

Tulsa wants to join SWC

DALLAS (AP) — The University of Tulsa has expressed interest in joining the Southwest Conference and has conducted a letter-writing campaign to conference officials, according to a published report.

The school has also collected thousands of signatures on a petition in order to influence opinion in the conference to allow it to become a member.

Tulsa athletic director Rick Dickson told The Dallas Morning News there was a "groundswell campaign from the University of Tulsa and the Tulsa community that went on for a month or so, directed toward Fred Jacoby and the Southwest Conference presidents."

SWC Commissioner Jacoby confirmed that "Tulsa has expressed interest in joining the conference, which is losing Arkansas to the Southeastern Conference.

"Other than that, I really don't care to say much about it," Jacoby said. "They have expressed interest. There has been no formal application."

Jacoby would not speculate when asked if Tulsa was a viable candidate to join the SWC.

Tulsa is a private school of 4,500 students and plays its football games at 40,385-seat Skelly Stadium. The Golden Hurricane averaged 25,388 fans in five home games last season when it posted a 6-5 record. Tulsa then lost to Oregon in the Independence Bowl.

Top-ranked Irish kick off season

By RICK WARNER
AP Football Writer

Notre Dame has already taken over the top spot in the rankings. Now comes the hard part — playing a game.

The Irish, who moved up to No. 1 after Miami lost to Brigham Young last week, start their season Saturday at home against fourth-ranked Michigan.

It's the second straight year that Michigan has opened against a top-ranked Notre Dame team. Last season, Rocket Ismail returned two kickoffs for touchdowns to lead the Irish over the No. 2 Wolverines 24-19 at Michigan.

Ismail, probably the most versatile player in the country, is back for his junior season along with two other All-Americans — nose tackle Chris Zorich and cornerback Todd Lyght. But Notre Dame has a big hole to fill at quarterback, where sophomore Rick Mirer will try to replace Tony Rice, who was 28-3 as a starter.

"Rick has never started a game for us, so it's hard to tell what he'll do," Notre Dame coach Lou Holtz said. "We're not asking him to be another Tony Rice. We just want him to be our quarterback."

Michigan will be starting a new era under Gary Moeller, who replaced Bo Schembechler as head coach after 18 years as a Wolverine assistant.

Michigan returns 14 starters from last year's Big Ten championship squad. The Wolverines have their entire offensive line back plus a standout secondary that features All-American Tripp Welborne.

Michigan also has Elvis. That's quarterback Elvis Grbac, 4-0 as a starter last season. Grbac made his college debut against Notre Dame last season, coming off the bench and completing 17-of-21 passes to lead a Wolverine rally that fell just short.

Notre Dame, which has won 17 straight at home, is favored by 4 1/2 points. ... NOTRE DAME 21-17.

The run-and-shoot has replaceable parts. The latest is David Klingler, who passed for 426 yards and five touchdowns last week against UNLV. ... HOUSTON 42-17.

Worley unhappy with Steelers' low-risk offense

By ALAN ROBINSON
AP Sports Writer

PITTSBURGH (AP) — While Bubby Brister was becoming unglued, Tim Worley found himself glued to the bench on key downs in the Pittsburgh Steelers' season-opening 13-3 loss to Houston.

As Brister blistered offensive coordinator Joe Walton's new offense, Worley bristled over his playing time. But now that Brister has backed down, saying he deserves to share in the blame, Worley said there's no use for him to publicly vent his wrath. On Wednesday, Worley said he's not happy with the scheme of things these days — or with Walton's schemes. But he said it would be counterproductive to blast the system with 15 weeks left in the season.

"It's hard to keep quiet about it," Worley said. "I can't do it by myself, I need my teammates . . . so I'm keeping quiet. I don't want to get anything started, so I don't say anything. I let them call it."

Worley, considered a Pro Bowl-caliber running back after averaging nearly 90 yards a game over the final month of last season, had his number called by Walton 11 times last Sunday in Cleveland. Not surprisingly, he ran for just 33 yards.

Worley wasn't happy with his production or his playing time. He didn't put all the blame on Walton's messenger-guard system where running backs, tight ends and wide receivers shuttle in plays, but said he can't produce if he's not playing.

Brister, the quarterback, was particularly critical of a second-and-goal play from the Browns' 1 where reserve Warren Williams carried instead of Worley. The play was designed for Worley, and Williams hadn't practiced it the week before, several players said.

"If you can run the ball, you win games," Worley said. "I'm just doing what they tell me to do. You can't keep coming in and out of there to get a feel for the game, you got to be in there all the time. I don't know, I'm just doing what they tell me to do. I don't run the offense; they do."

"A couple of times we'd hit it up there eight or nine yards and we just stop doing it. I don't know why. . . . I leave it up to them. They're the masters, not me."

Worley said the Steelers have mastered Walton's low-risk offense, which relies on ball-control passing rather than the down-the-field throws favored by Brister. They just aren't running it correctly.

"We know the offense. We've just got to be consistent. Some plays we do real good. The next thing you know we just blow up," Worley said. "We've got to be consistent with it, and the only way to win games is to be consistent. We've got good plays. We've just got to execute them."

Worley disagreed with Coach Chuck Noll that the Steelers' loss, because of the offense's ineffectiveness, was similar to last year's season-opening 51-0 defeat to Cleveland.

The Steelers were bad, Worley said, but not that bad — and they expect to get a lot better in Sunday's home opener against Houston.

"We had no excuse Sunday, but it was nothing like last year. That was a disaster," he said. "I think we've got to stick to what we do best. That's what I say."

Two West Texas men develop friendship in garden patch

By OLIVIA HILL
The Odessa American

ODESSA (AP) — Dr. Michael Wempe likes living things. The Odessa veterinarian did not have enough animals to feed and water and tend to, so he added a garden to his business.

"I just like to see things grow," he said on a recent damp morning as he tromped through corn and zinnias and black-eyed peas.

But plants are not the only things that have grown.

A friendship has also bloomed between Wempe and Ray Barham, 81.

Barham retired from oil field production work in 1974. He liked to garden, and Wempe had more than he could handle. So the two of them joined forces.

"Barham does all the work," said Wempe. "I just provide the land. I'm blessed with great soil and good water, so we share."

Said Barham: "I can't sit still, and I don't like to travel."

Barham came from a farming family, but his east Odessa backyard doesn't have enough space.

"I grew up on a farm in the Texas Hill Country. I guess it's in my blood. I've always like to garden."

The two of them got together frequently during the winter to plan. They read Texas Gardener and a library full of seed catalogs to determine which was the best variety to mail-order.

Barham and Wempe walked between rows. One high-high row contained shrub-sized zinnias in a riot of color. The other row was tightly packed with their 600 gladiola bulbs that the men had ordered.

Barham opened the chicken-wire gate to see if the 6-foot tomato vines were producing any better with the cool weather.

The large enclosed wire structure used to be a chicken house, but after Wempe started his low-cholesterol regimen, he filled it with tomatoes.

The tomato seeds, ordered from a seed catalog, were started in the greenhouse last winter. Because the area is protected, the young plants were transplanted outside in March. Now, despite a small bout with curly leaf blight, they are picking vine-ripened tomatoes.

Celebrity, Fantastic, Early Girl and Champion have done the best this year, they agreed.

"Also, we planted some new varieties this year. There's an orange one and a yellow one called Lemon Girl, but they aren't ripe yet," said Wempe.

The tomatoes have been fed Miracle Gro.

Wempe practices organic gardening, but "I'm not a purist," he said. "A few times I've sprayed for a real bad infestation."

They rotate crops both for pest control and for soil conservation.

"Corn is hard on the soil. It really depletes the nitrogen, so we alternate it with legumes such as beans and peas, which put nitrogen back into the soil," he said.

He also enriches the soil with green manure.

"After a plant has slowed down its production, but before it has died," he explained, "you can till it back into the soil while it is still green. Because it decays mixed in with the dirt, it's a more effective fertilizer. It's so good for the soil that it is called green manure."

He plows with a Troy-bilt rotary cultivator that "digs deep." The early corn has finished producing. It's stalks have been plowed under, and the second planting of turnips and green beans are about 2 inches tall.

Wempe also encourages earthworms, he said, while pointing out their mounds.

But Wempe has other unwelcome guests — fire ants. He pushed away the top of their mound and watched the tiny intruders scurry away.

His 18-year-old son Noah, a recent Permian High School graduate, is helping spray the fiercely stinging fire ants until he leaves for the University of Texas at Austin this fall.
