Delinquent Tax Estimates By Marrs "Unfair," Raley Says

DECISION DELAYED

Judge Adjourns Court To Allow "Unofficial" Conference

Wichita county property owners will be called together in a mass meeting to discuss the financial situation in the county before any increase is voted in the 1929 tax rate, according to opinions expressed in an unofficial meeting of members of the commissioners' court held in the private office of John P. Marrs, county judge, after the court had been abruptly adjourned at 4 o'clock Friday afternoon.

The court had been called in a special meeting to discuss the tax rate Friday morning, but no action was taken and few opinions expressed before the sudden adjournment, called without a motion or a second, at the instance of Judge Marrs at 4 o'clock in the afternoon. The members of the court were individually invited into the private office of the judge where the tax rate conference was resumed.

Hope to Avoid Raise

During the secret meeting members of the court expressed the view that the proposed 10-cent raise, suggested in the report of Paul Barnett, county auditor, might be avoided by altering various apportionments to meet special needs. They added, however, that should an increase seem inevitable they would call the taxpayers together for consultation and advice before any action was taken.

"We called a meeting when we lowered the rate last year," one of MOSCOW, U. S. S. R., July 20. (Saturday) (AP)—Official circles early today said there was no truth to Harbin dispatches to Osaka Asahi regarding opening of a Russian offensive against Pogranichinaya and Manchulf, Manchuria.

ATTACK REPORTED

Chinese officials were declared to be greatly alarmed at the possibility of a sudden thrust by Soviet troops from the border at Manchuli towards Harbin to retake control of the Chinese Eastern railway.

WICHITA MAN SAVES YOUTH

Amateur's Efforts Revive Drowned Boy

Carl Raymond Scarborough, 9, who lives with his parents on the Texas company's Bywaters lease northwest of Electra, was rescued from the waters of a lake on that lease about noon Thursday by T. F. Hollis, of Electra, and R. G. Plemons, 1613 Burnett street, and resuscitated by the latter, according to information given The Record News Friday.

Children Seek Help

According to Mr. Plemons, who is a radio salesman for the Bolton Furniture company, he had just finished setting up a radio for demonstration at a house near the Texas Pipeline company's lake when he heard children's voices calling excitedly that a boy was drowning. Mr. Plemons quickly summoned Mr. Hollis from the house, and the two men ran to the lake, about 250 yards from the house. As they neared the water they saw the boy sink from sight about 75 yards from the shore, it was said. Brought to the surface, apparently lifeless, by Mr. Hollis, the body was brought ashore by Mr. Plemons, who "figured out a life-saving plan of his own on the way in," in the absence of any training or experience in methods of resuscitation.

"I first picked the boy up by his ankles and jugged him up and down several times," said the rescuer.

Thumps and Jerks Life Back

"Then I laid him down on his back and pumped his arms back and forth and up and down. It didn't seem to be doing any good, so I turned him over on his face and thumped him pretty solid between the shoulders. His lips seemed to move then, so I picked him up, put his knees against my body and pounded him down over my shoulder like a sack of grain. You could hear the water break from his lungs, and as it poured out, he began to gasp for breath. And then he soon was all right."

Carl later explained that he had waded out in advance of others in a group which was "going wading," had stepped unexpectedly into water beyond his depth, and was unable to regain shallow depths. His step-father, H. D. Westbrook, is an employe of the Texas company.

SHOWERS FALL IN WAKE OF HEAVY RAIN

Total Precipitation For Wichita Falls Reaches 2.48 Inches

ENDS HEAT WAVE

General Rainfall Over Area Proves of Benefit to Grain Crops

A lull came Friday, and rain which fell in torrents Thursday night over Northwest Texas and Southern Oklahoma dwindled to light showers.

The rainfall over the two days brought great relief from an extended drouth which menaced both persons and crops. Somehow people lived through it, but large acreages of feed crops, especially near Electra, failed to survive. The cotton damage was negligible, and the rain served to further strengthen that crop. Rainfall came at other points, among them Burkburnett, Childress, and Lawton, Okla., in time to rescue wheat crops which had endured the heat better than those in other regions.

2.48 Inches Here

Showers fell in Wichita Falls Friday morning and again late in the afternoon, bringing the total precipitation for the 24-hour period up to 2.48 inches. The temperature Friday tumbled down from its high perch of 108 degrees of a few days ago, and finally settled to 79 degrees at 5 p. m. The maximum for the day was 94 degrees.

Rainfall in surrounding towns in Southern Oklahoma and Northwest Texas was reported by Record News correspondents as follows:

SUNSET—A heavy rain fell here from 1 a. m. to 5 p. m. today. After that light showers were followed by heavy mists. The rain will benefit crops.

BOWIE—Over three quarters of an inch of rain fell here Thursday night, breaking a six weeks drouth.

CHILDRESS—Showers fell in and around Childress this afternoon benefiting cotton and late feed crops.

Haskell Disappointed

HASKELL—The skies clouded up late today, but it did not rain, much to the chagrin of farmers who so far have had a dry month. Rain was reported in Knox City and Stonewall county.

FREDERICK, Okla.—Rain totaling .92 inches fell here Thursday night and Friday, aiding cotton in some sections which had begun to suffer.

ALTUS, Okla.—It was cloudy and cool here today following rainfall totaling .98 inches Thursday night.

BURKBURNETT—Three quarters of an inch of rain fell here Thursday night and Friday. Cotton and feed crops were aided.

Showers at Electra

ELECTRA—Light showers fell here Friday afternoon, bringing the total rainfall Thursday night and Friday to 2.1 inches. The cotton was aided but the feed crop was already beyond hope. Rain came to the Beaver Creek region, 11 miles from here, too late, as far as the feed crops are concerned.

LAWTON, Okla.—A general rain fell over Comanche county today. Here it totaled .85 inches. The rain assured a good crop of late corn, and aided wheat and cotton.

ALVORD—About one-half inch of rain fell here this morning, benefiting melons, corn and truck crops.

The widow was an inmate of a home for the aged here. According to the Burgess' confession, she had claimed to have killed more than 100 persons a year for 25 years through a strange power of will.

GROUT OFFERED DAIRY POST

Former A. & M. Expert Sought as Agent Here

In a written report to the county commissioners court Friday afternoon, members of a committee from the Wichita County Bankers association unanimously recommended the employment of George P. Grout, superintendent of schools at Panhandle, and former head of the dairy department at A. & M. college, as dairy expert for Wichita county.

Job Seeks Man

Luke McCrory, chairman of the committee, explained that Mr. Grout had not applied for the position and had indicated in a telegram to the county judge that he was not open to any offers on the subject, but the committee nevertheless suggested that an offer of $5,500 a year be made to him. The suggestion was made after a long distance telephone conversation between Orville Bullington and Mr. Grout in which the school head said he might consider the offer if he could be released from other contracts.

In a long distance telephone conversation late Friday afternoon Mr. Grout told John P. Marrs, county judge, that he would accept the position for a salary of $5,600. The proposal will be submitted to the court at its regular meeting Monday. Before the adjournment of the Friday afternoon session members of the court had indicated that they were unwilling to pay the $5,500 salary suggested by the committee in making the recommendation.

Three Others Recommended

The report of the committee from the bankers added to its first recommendation the names of three applicants for the job, any one of whom they said they were willing to accept should Mr. Grout prove out of the question. They are John Mizzell of Yoakum, O. L. Putnam of Ardmore, and H. D. Sheflitt of Yale. Definite action on the matter is expected at the Monday morning session of the court.

In its statement to the court, the committee added that its members favored a plan of cooperation with the department of agriculture and A. & M. college in carrying out the proposed plans for developing the dairy industry of the county.

BLAZE SWEEPS PROPERTY OF ROOFING FIRM

Volunteers Aid Firemen in Battle to Save Other Buildings

LOSS OVER $75,000

Five Overcome by Smoke As Tar Paper Blazes To Sky

Fire that broke out shortly after 8 o'clock Friday evening swept through the Lydick Roofing company offices and storehouse at 813 Mills street, completely ravaging the building and goods at an estimated loss of around $75,000.

The flames ate into a large stock of tarred paper, shingles and other roofing and building materials, creating a blaze of such terrific heat as to seriously handicap the fire department in its efforts to control the fire. Six fire companies, representing all but two members of the department were rushed to the conflagration and worked for two hours in a desperate effort to check the flames.

As the walls and roofs of the roofing company crumbled, volunteer workers rushed to the aid of the department in a concentrated effort to prevent the further spread of the fire. A filling station nearby, freight cars standing on the railway tracks and an adjoining manufacturing house were all threatened as the flames leaped beyond the feeble streams of water.

Five Firemen Overcome

Five firemen were overcome by the terrific heat and smoke during the battle but were carried to safety by their comrades. O. L. Green and L. C. Blackman, both of station No. 4, were overcome as they were laying hose near the front of the burning building. Kelly died Thursday night and, after an autopsy, his death was attributed to sunstroke. At a hearing asked by the boys' father, H. G. Kelly, however, it was testified by other inmates that Davis beat the hoeing of a peanut patch.

Charles MacCloud, state detective, was investigating the case for the governor's office; Mrs. Mabel Bassett for the state commission of charities and corrections, and County Attorney Homer Hunt for the state board of affairs.

A report by a correspondent of the Oklahoma News here stated the boys' body "had been cut from head to foot." Davis was quoted as saying he had to punish the boy "because he laid down and refused to work."

FIRE CAUSES $75,000 LOSS

effort to get away from the heat. Morris Bennett and Henry Smith, both of station No. 1, were overcome as they were fighting the flames in the interior of the building after the walls had fallen in. They were carried out by their comrades and placed in ambulances of the Hines and Merkle companies and taken to the Wichita General hospital. Green, who was also taken to the hospital, returned to duty in a short while.

Bill Habern, son of Grover Habern, assistant fire chief, was overcome as he was fighting the fire from the east side, after the walls had fallen. He was taken to the hospital but recovered in a short while.

The fire started in the Jalonic street end of the building housing the Wichita Falls Waste Paper company, fire department officials announced. Its quick spread into the roofing company quarters in the face of a brisk northeast breeze was explained by the highly inflammable building materials housed in the latter concern. Later, however, the wind took a sudden turn, coming from the southwest, fanning the flames quickly into the roofing company, and soon the whole block seemed ablaze.

Cause Undetermined

Fire Chief J. L. McClure and other department officials late Friday night had not discovered the cause of the fire.

The firemen at the outset were greatly hampered by lack of water pressure, the force from the city's mains not being sufficient to throw an adequate stream of water into the burning building. This situation prevailed for a period of about 40 minutes only, however, Chief McClure said. He said he remedied the lack of pressure by dispatching a man at once to the city water plant, where, after the danger had been announced, city officials turned an additional supply of water into the city mains.

C. H. Lydick, manager of the roofing company, said his company sustained a loss of $40,000. The loss of the building will run to approximately $20,000, it was said. The firm carried $40,000 insurance, Mr. Lydick said. Nathan Persky, manager of the Wichita Falls Waste Paper company, was not reached for a statement Friday night, but loss to the concern was estimated at about $20,000. It was not learned whether insurance was carried.

The towering flames which raced to the sky through a spreading blanket of black smoke attracted hundreds to the scene. No sooner had firemen arrived than the streets leading to the blazing structure were jammed with traffic. As the fire trucks maneuvered for strategic positions they met countless throngs of excited people walking, running, and milling around in cars.

The small squad of police which had answered the call with the fire trucks was quickly augmented to control the spectators, and even the officers found welcome assistance from Boy Scouts who, living up to their motto, "Be prepared," resolved themselves into emergency squads and helped direct traffic. The Boy Scouts, in turn, were reinforced by volunteers who aided firemen in pulling the long lines of hose through the car-infested area on Lamar street. The officers on the other streets likewise found assistance from several city officials, among them C. C. Bunnenberg, who, sensing the necessity of action, took stands in the middle of the roads and with outstretched arms protected firemen and fire hose lines alike from motorists.

As if welcoming the situation as offering strange and novel experience, the official and volunteer workers kept steadily at their jobs, and through their efforts fire trucks were enabled to speed to the most dangerous areas, and ambulances, kept from administering to the overcome by lines of cars were hurried through to where the injured lay.

Spectators and workers came out with smoke-filled lungs and mud-spattered clothing. The ground, already damp from rains, was a veritable slush pit by the time water had been thrown on the buildings a few minutes. The smoke was dense, filled with the pungent odor of tar and soggy shingles too wet to blaze, yet dry enough to smoulder.

A total of 40 firemen were called to combat the flames. Twenty-eight of the number were on night duty, and the rest were summoned from their homes. Stations No. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6 sent trucks, and six lines of hose were laid.

ARRESTS OF WOMEN GO ON

Female Bootleggers Held In Arkansas

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., July 19. (AP)—Women ranging from a 60-year-old mother to a 20-year-old stockingless girl were arrested today in drives on women bootleggers in Arkansas and just across the border in Texas.

Federal prohibition agents who arrested 14 women at Texarkana yesterday in a series of raids designed to put a stop to female bootlegging in that section, crossed into Texas and arrested the girl and another woman, the mother of two children.

Constable J. L. McBurnett at Pine Bluff chased an automobile and arrested five persons including the aged woman, but not until he said, they had broken several whisky containers.

McBurnett asserted they were transporting a considerable quantity of liquor from Pine Bluff to the star city where a county confederate veterans' reunion was being held. When he finally halted the car the running board was covered with glass and liquor, he said.

The aged woman, Mrs. Ella Long has been in court before, according to officials. In 1927 she was indicted three times. Two of the indictments however, were dismissed in circuit court and she paid a $50 fine on the third which charged possession.

Mrs. Long's daughter, Willie B. Long and two sons and the wife of one were the others arrested. They were Mr. and Mrs. E. Long and Lester Long.

S. M. Gurley, deputy prohibition administrator for Western Arkansas who announced at Texarkana yesterday that the arrest of 14 women there was only the beginning of the campaign to end women bootlegging, left with his squad of raiders for an unannounced destination.

Perryton Building Program Steadily Gains, Threatening to Set Record

Town Will Celebrate Tenth Anniversary Next Month, But Now It's Celebrating Record Wheat Crop

Special to The Record News.

PERRYTON, Texas, July 19.—Building permits for the business district of Perryton since last November have already passed the half million mark. With the city less than 10 years old, this bids fair to be a record for a place where only agricultural development has caused the growth.

Right now about $265,000 worth of business buildings are under construction. This does not include the many $5,000, $10,000 and $15,000 residences, or the $130,000 paving program, which is well under way. There is not a vacant business building or a residence in Perryton.

Not "Boom" Town

One impressive thing about the development here is the fact that all the business buildings are substantial and permanent. Nothing here indicates a boom, but a healthy growth, based on the development of the agricultural resources of the North Plains country.

Perryton will celebrate its 10th anniversary next month, but right now it is celebrating the largest wheat crop in the history of Ochiltree county. Around 300,000 bushels of wheat and barley are piled on the ground here now, the elevators are running early and late, and business men of Perryton are enjoying a good business.

Banner Month Seen

The development of this section is reflected in the fact that the Texas-Louisiana Power company is duplicating its present plant at a cost of $98,000, to take care of the increasing business in Perryton and neighboring towns that are served by highlines from here. From Jan. 1 to June 30, 84 new customers were gained here in Perryton and July will be a banner month here, judging from the new business that has already been put on this month.

CAVERN TOUR STARTS AUG. 1

Scenic Trippers to Start From Marshall

LAMESA, Texas, July 19.—The all-Texas tour to Carlsbad caverns and El Paso over the Dal-Paso cavern highway will start Aug. 1 from Marshall, Texas, and traverse straight through the heart of Texas, according to William A. Wilson, secretary, and O. P. Thrane Snyder, president, respectively of this highway association.

The itinerary of the motorcade includes Marshall, Longview, Mineola, Terrell, Dallas, Fort Worth, Weatherford, Mineral Wells, Palo Pinto, Breckenridge, Albany, Anson, Roby, Snyder, Gail, Lamesa, Seminole, Hobbs, N. M., and Carlsbad. After the party visits the caverns it will motor on to El Paso and disband.

Wilson has been secretary of the Dal-Paso Cavern Highway association for the past two years and manager of the Lamesa Chamber of Commerce for the past three years. He will be in charge of the tour this year according to a late announcement of the directors of the association. Already he has two successful motorcades to his credit.

The officials emphasize the fact that there is no charge for joining the party and special accommodations arranged along the route will reduce the cost to all who make the tour. The only set expense is $2 per person, government fee, for guidance in the Carlsbad caverns monument, and this is optional if any do not care to see the underground caves.

The purpose of this all-Texas tour is to let Texas people have the opportunity to visit the Carlsbad caverns at Carlsbad, N. M., and other scenic spots in Texas and New Mexico, and drive to these points over the straightest and shortest highway in Texas.

The tour is sponsored by the Dal-Paso Cavern Highway association and operated by its officials.

Grandfield Wheat Harvest Is Over

Special to The Record News

GRANDFIELD, Okla., July 19.—Grandfield's 1929 crop of wheat has come and gone, leaving a record here that far surpassed expectations. While the total this year fell some short of last year's crop, the total this year was exceptionally good in face of the setback experienced during the spring and winter.

To date there have been shipped from Grandfield freight yards, about 88 cars of 1,500-bushel capacity. The Rock Island shipping north has cared for 50 cars, according to N. B. Peck, agent. The Katy road has shipped mostly to southern points 38 cars, also of 1,500-bushel capacity.

Studhalter, head of the department of biology of Texas Technological college, for addition to the collection of the Plains Museum society. Professor Studhalter is president of the Plains Museum society and the collection is a gift from Clifford B. Jones, who is chairman of the board of regents of the college.

The gift to the museum includes parts of Indians skeletons, some knives, corn grinders and other implements used by the West Texas Indians. Mr. Jones also included in the collection a number of branding irons which were collected from the Swenson ranch and other historic ranches of the West, and lent the college library some old records of the Swenson ranch to be used in the class of advanced students who are studying the history of the South Plains.

Decatur Ships Car Of Skim Milk Powder

DECATUR, Texas, July 19. (Spl.)—A load of skim milk powder, the fourth straight carload of milk products, left the Tennessee plant here recently, bound for Chicago. The former carload of which this was a duplicate, had gone to Philadelphia, where two or three carloads of sweet cream have been sent. The Chicago shipment was composed of 268 barrels of 150 pounds each. This report was given out by Lester Bell, manager of the local plant.

Milk powder is said to be in demand in Chicago where it is used by ice cream manufacturers, bakers and similar industries as well as by poultrymen and stock feeders. Farmers of Wise county are finding this a valuable feed and are using it in greater quantities. The milk powder is said to be a remedy for some diseases in young poultry.

DALHART HERD BRINGS $60,000

Dallam County Ranch Sells 298 Registered Bulls

Special to The Record News.

DALHART, Texas, July 19.—Dallam county lays claim to the record in shipment of purebred registered bulls to any point outside of the United States.

Two hundred and ninety-eight registered Hereford bulls sold by Coon & Culverson ranch interests of Dallam and Moore counties were delivered yesterday to S. H. Stevenson, general manager of the Polomas Land and Cattle company with headquarters at Columbus, N. M. An estimated value of the shipment which required 10 cars, was upwards of $60,000. The Polomas ranch, which contains 2,000,000 acres of land, lies in old Mexico adjacent to the New Mexico boundary with 168 miles along the U. S. boundary. Mr. Stevenson states that the ranch now has about 30,000 cattle. The entire steer calf output this year has already been sold at $50 per head.

Of interest to many people who know the country west of El Paso is the fact that the enormous ranch is watered by an artesian well, which flows into a creek that carries water to the cattle in the ranch for a distance of 100 miles.

The Coon & Culberson ranch, which sold the bulls to the Polomas Land and Cattle company started the business of registered Hereford cattle some 13 years ago with 100 head registered. The blood of Prince Domino and Anxiety Fourth Hereford are furnishing the foundation of the Coon & Culverson herd. An idea of the size of the registered herd of the Coon & Culverson ranch today can be ascertained by the fact they have 1,300 cows used for breeding purposes.

THIS ESTATE FOR SALE

Daily Editorial

THESE new greenbacks tend to remind us that dollars aren't as big as they used to be. The government is making more of 'em than formerly, but they don't cover so much ground—especially in the outlying metropolitan districts, where any sixty thousand income could recently afford to maintain an estate and its appurtenances. But upkeep has decided that even a moderate multi-millionaire isn't rich enough for such luxuries. The handy man, who formerly put in 12 hours per dollar-day at road building, wall laying, weeding, scything and hedge clipping, now arrives at 8, quits at 5 and grumbles at his $125 monthly check.

It's a lucky property owner who can boast that his rural overhead has merely advanced a thousand per cent since 1900. Manures have practically disappeared, and the limited supply of that standard fertilizer with which lawns and shrubbery were nourished and revitalized begins to retail at $8 to $10 per yard. In the pre-automobile era, stables and cow barns furnished it free. Consequently, to maintain perfect grass and swards, one must willy-nilly turn to bone-meal and chemical invigorators, pad the turf with peat moss, trench the roots of specimen oaks, ashes, and elms, resort to tree surgery and the spraying machine, install subterranean watering systems or watch them wither from thirst and starvation and surrender to beetle and borer attack. It comes high until replacement estimates make the bill seem like a bargain.

The enormous expansion of national park systems is denuding nursery stock at such a lick that evergreens, which this very century remembers as Christmas trees, are lately moving in $25 circles.

And anybody with a 30-foot hemlock to spare can sell it at more than the nineteen hundreds used to ask for a whole acre of 'em.

All of which tends to explain why so many "prominent old families" are offering their places for subdivision and golf club locations.

Faith, in a Modern Age

WE NEVER REALIZE the extent to which we are required to take our fellowmen on trust until one or another of them turns out to be a rogue.

This is supposed to be a cynical and suspicious age—an age of world-wise sophisticates. In reality, however, it is above all ages an age in which men are taking it for granted that their associates are men of honor and dependability.

In New York City not long ago a large bank failed, causing a loss to its depositors—mostly poor Italian workingmen—of some $7,000,000. State officials immediately investigated, and uncovered an unbelievable state of corruption and defalcation on the part of trusted officers. The bank, evidently, had been systematically looted, and the weight of its falling wreckage landed right on the shoulders of those least able to sustain it.

Now the collapse of a bank is not a common event; and, when you stop to think about it, the mere fact that it shocks us so much is a striking proof of the fact that good faith is a predominating element in modern life.

Think it over for a minute. Whatever money you have been able to save you put in a bank. You do not, probably, know a soul connected with your bank. You have no means of knowing whether its officers and employes are honest men or scamps. You never hesitate to put all of your savings into their hands. You do not even dream of distrusting them. Your confidence in their honesty makes you feel that the bank is the safest possible place for your money.

That, of course, is only one instance. You could multiply it by scores.

When you drive your auto at a 50-mile clip, you know perfectly well that if some of its parts should suddenly develop flaws and give way—a steering knuckle, for instance—you would be badly injured, perhaps killed outright. Yet that thought never disturbs you. You have confidence that the men who made the car put honest work into it and made it safe for you.

When you go to a department store to buy clothing the chances are the bill is charged. The store officials do not know you. You are only one of thousands of customers—all of whom are having their purchases charged. But the store is quite willing to take your word for it that you will pay up later. It has found that all but an insignificant minority of people are to be trusted.

When you have a prescription filled at the corner drug store you are putting your life in your druggist's hands. On his shelves are poisons enough to kill a regiment. If he is careless or poorly trained he could easily make a mistake that would put you out of existence. And there is no earthly way for you to check up on him. You do not hesitate. You have perfect confidence that he is up to his job.

That is the way it goes, through every hour of the day. Never before was the ordinary man so much under the necessity of taking it for granted that his fellows are reliable, honest and capable. A scandal like that of the New York bank only emphasizes how seldom it is that this daily confidence of ours is misplaced.

What Men Can Endure

THE CALIFORNIA ENDURANCE FLIERS have set a record that ought to stand for a long time. And if anybody tries to tell you that their flight was interesting and valuable solely because it showed the marvelous stamina and capability of the modern airplane and its motor, don't you believe it.

Those chaps didn't go up in order to see how long a Whirlwind motor would run without stopping, or to see how long an airplane could fly without being damaged.

Indeed, none of the endurance fliers did, with the exception of the army men who went in the Question Mark.

What all of these airmen wanted to find out was how long they themselves would last. The endurance flight presented itself to each of them as a challenge. Like the ocean flights, it was a thing that could only be undertaken by men who could defy both the fear of danger and the deadly, almost unbearable effect of extreme physical fatigue.

And that—no matter what the dignified editorial writers say about "the value of the flights to aviation"—is the main reason why we bother to read about such stunts. It is what makes them interesting.

A rather irritating attitude is being shown by lots of people in connection with these flights. They say, in effect: "Oh, they're very boring and they don't do the least bit of good, except that they show how well our airplanes and motors are made—and the men who make them might better be flying the airmail, or piloting transport planes, or doing something else that is really useful."

That attitude is quite mistaken. It is always valuable to see men go out and prove that they can ignore the demands of their bodies. Any kind of triumph over the physical man—the creature that demands food and sleep and relaxation and comfort—is worth looking at.

Why do we like to read stories about the old-time sailing ships that fought stupendous gales off Cape Horn in mid-winter—ships that were half buried in foam for days, ships whose sails were stiff as boards and whose rigging was sheathed in ice, ships whose seamen brought them through unimaginable dangers and hardships, going a fortnight without a bite of hot food or drink?

Why? Simply because it is endlessly encouraging to know that men can do things like that. Simply because it raises our confidence in the whole human race to know that it can endure every extreme of danger and discomfort without whimpering.

The endurance flights are things of the same sort. What if they don't greatly advance the "science of aviation?" Who cares? They have another kind of value—a value in which all of us can share, whether we're directly connected with aviation or not.

Quotations Worth Noting

"Just so long as we believe in a government based upon individualism and the freedom of opportunity, just so long must we realize the pitfalls which are inherent in any system that diverts us as a nation into paths other than those which we have traveled to the success that is ours today."—Roger W. Babson.

The End of Doctor Moffett

Ask him why he tried to kill a young fellow by the name of Ainswirth and why he threatened to murder Miss Castle. Ask him why he murdered his wife. Ask him why he faked the dictaphone evidence. Ask him—but you could fire questions at him the rest of the night, and still you wouldn't cover the ground.

"And I may not care to answer all those questions," observed Moffett with a sneer.

"That's so," said Dale thoughtfully. For a moment he gazed at Axelson's gray, twitchin face. Then he took Summers aside and talked to him earnestly in an undertone. At the end of 10 minutes the captain appeared less incredulous. He stepped up to Axelson and released his feet.

"Come with me," he directed gruffly.

He took the old man's arm and led him from the room. Moffett watched their departure with a dark and uneasy glance. Dale turned to the girl and engaged her in light conversation. An hour passed, and then Summers and the old man returned.

"Ferryman," he said, slipping a pair of steel links over the prisoner's wrists, "I arrest you for the murder of your wife."

The man's face changed horribly. He sent Axelson a deadly glance.

"He's squealed—the fool!" he snarled. "He is the murderer, not I."

"You instigated the murder," said Summers quietly. "It was true as you told me, that your wife left you a number of years ago. But she came back last June and became your accomplice. You did not live together, and she used the name of Conway. You thought you could work better if you were not looked upon as man and wife.

"Soon you began to suspect your wife was double crossing you. You were afraid of her and decided she had to be disposed of. Axelson was to do the work, and a certain night was set for the deed. Your wife had been out to a gay party that night—that's why she wore all that finery. She did not go to her own apartment after the party, but to 262 Bank street.

"You had sent her word you wished to see her there, but it was Axelson who met her when she arrived at the house, and it was he who committed the actual murder."

"Of course he did!" Ferryman declared chokingly. "I didn't know anything about it."

"You did, and I can prove it. The murder was easy, but it wasn't so easy to dispose of the body. That's a ticklish thing to do in a big city. You hadn't given that angle much thought beforehand. After talking it over with Axelson you decided to make it appear that the murder had been committed by an outsider. Axelson was to 'find' the body when he made his rounds next morning. And to make everything look straight and aboveboard you came to my office and gave me a long rigmarole, part truth and part fiction. And I fell for it!"

"I should have tumbled," he admitted. "It was a little too pat, you sitting there in my office and handing me a sob story about your missing wife and how you kept the old home ready for her return, and the news of the murder coming in just then. Well, you're a great actor, Ferryman—I've got to hand it to you. You fooled me good and hard."

"Console yourself," said Dale comfortably. He fooled us all."

Summers glared at the cause of his humiliation. "I know all the rest, too, Ferryman—how you tried to frame Mr. Dale with the pearls and the dictation machine. And the green light. Where is it, Axelson?"

The old man, glumly resigned to the inevitable, trudged across the room and opened a little niche in the wall. They heard a click, and again the magic green light flooded the room, obscuring the candles on the mantel and throwing a softening shimmer over tense faces.

"It's a kind of magic lantern with a special lens Ferryman had made for him." Axelson explained in a husky voice.

"Turn it off," Summers grumbled uneasily, with a hard look at Ferryman.

"Ferryman has several of those thingumbobs, hasn't he?" Dale suddenly inquired.

The old man nodded dully. "Two. One in town and one here. Then there are several smaller ones that you can carry around in your pocket."

"Like a flashlight?" Dale asked, his thoughts going back to the night when he had encountered an intruder in his apartment.

"Yes, something like that."

"Nifty things," Summers muttered, and then he asked abruptly: "Ferryman wears green-stained glasses sometimes, doesn't he?"

"Yes," said Axelson, "but you wouldn't notice the green stain unless you looked at them carefully. An ordinary bright light hurts his eyes."

Summers was peering craftily at the old man. "Tell me this," he said suspiciously. "If Ferryman wasn't present when his wife was murdered, how do you explain that I found a piece of green-stained lens in the room where she died?"

"Oh," said Axelson, a sickly smile hovering about his lips, "that happened afterward. We had an argument about what to do with the body. Ferryman struck me, and I struck back."

Summers nodded as if satisfied with the explanation.

Dale smiled at an odd recollection. He recalled the little scene in the restaurant when he had caught Ferryman's glasses as they fell. He had noticed the green stain, but the thought of associating Ferryman with the evil enterprises of Doctor Moffett had been too staggering, and in the stress and rush of subsequent events he had almost forgotten the episode.

"Well," Summers grumbled, addressing Ferryman again, "there was one man you didn't fool, and that was Ainsworth. He fooled you."

"Paul?" the girl exclaimed.

"Ainsworth?" Dale echoed.

The captain scratched his sturdy shin. He looked quizzically at Miss Castle. "Ferryman was working some sort of scheme against your father, wasn't he?"

The girl started and turned white.

"It was just a frame-up," Dale hastened to say. "You know how he tried to frame me. He tried to work the same sort of stunt on Mr. Castle, except that his motive was different. He hoped to get money out of Mr. Castle."

Summers' narrow gaze traveled from Dale to the girl. "Well, anyhow, Mr. Castle must have been worried, too, Miss Castle. Ainsworth noticed it, but you wouldn't tell him what the trouble was, and so he started out to find out for himself. It seems his intentions were good. He was piqued because you wouldn't tell him, and he wanted to help you. He bribed one of your servants to keep his eyes open and report to him what was going on."

"Wambley!" Adele exclaimed. She looked quickly at Dale. "And we thought—"

"An all-around comedy of errors," Dale murmured with a rueful sort of smile.

"And he also got around somebody in your father's office," Summers went on. "Ainsworth seems to be the sort that gets what he goes after."

"Oh, he is!" said Adele in a queer voice.

"It seems he intercepted a letter," Summers went on, still watching the girl narrowly. "It was signed Doctor Moffett, but it didn't tell much. It was just a lot of mysterious hints. Well, to cut a long story short, Ainsworth got on Moffett's trail. He did things his own way. He couldn't learn much as an outsider, so he joined Dr. Moffett's crew. Just how he worked it I can't tell you. Maybe he'll explain later. Anyhow, he got on the inside of Doctor Moffett's gang and pretended to work with it."

"Just like him!" Adele exclaimed. "And he never told me. But then," and her face fell, "I couldn't expect to—"

"But even on the inside he couldn't find out much," Summers continued. "He never saw Doctor Moffett face to face, but he had talks with him. That's where the mask and the green light came in handy. Being a newcomer, he wasn't let into the secrets of the gang. They didn't quite trust him, and they threw dust in his eyes. It seems Doctor Moffett has a brother who is the ugliest man in the world."

"Oh!" Dale exclaimed. "That explains a little."

"The brother is straight, even if his face would stop a freight. Ferryman doesn't like him. The brother knows something about his crooked work and has tried to stop him. Half jokingly, Ferryman has scattered hints now and then that his brother is Doctor Moffett."

"He told me the first time I saw him," Adele remarked, "that one of the reasons why he didn't want to show his face is that he is the ugliest man in the world."

"Yes, that seems to be one of his little jokes. He has several. Partly to tickle his own sense of humor and partly to fool Ainsworth, he dropped a lot of discreet hints to the effect that the Picaroon and Doctor Moffett were the same person."

The captain turned to Dale with a guarded smile. "He also made Ainsworth believe that the Picaroon's other name is Martin Dale."

Dale laughed amusedly. "Nothing new in that. I have been misunderstood so often that it doesn't worry me. Even you, Summers, have viewed me with suspicion now and then. But that explains why Ainsworth paid me a visit the other night." He fingered his jaw reminiscently.

"Well, Ainsworth started to watch you," the captain told him. "And I guess he discovered several peculiar things about you, especially when he followed you in the dark hours of the night. The things he saw seemed to lend color to what Doctor Moffett had hinted. Ainsworth wasn't to blame for being deceived. You do some queer things at night, Dale—looking at the moon when there's no moon, for instance."

"You're too literal, Summers," Dale eyed him with mock reproach. "Don't you ever see things through the eyes of the soul?"

"I don't," Summers declared stoutly.

"I can see plenty with my real eyes. And one of these days—"

"Now Summers!"

The captain's reddish face relaxed in a grin. "Anyhow, you have made good on your promise." He regarded Ferryman darkly. "I haven't got the Picaroon yet, but you've helped me to make a good catch."

"And I'll help you make an even better one," Ferryman declared in a tone that tremebled with chagrin.

Dale glanced quickly at the girl and saw a look of returning dread in her eyes. And then he glanced at the fireplace, where the evidence of Mr. Castle's tragic mistake had reduced to ashes.

"There," Moffeet snaried, his face black with malice, his manacled hands raised and pointing in Adele's direction, "stands the daughter of the mysterious Mr. Graves."

Adele shuddered. A faint gasp of dread fell from her lips.

"Raving!" said Dale contemptuously.

"The daughter of—who?" Summers exclaimed.

"The mysterious Mr. Graves," said Dr. Moffett in a voice that throbbed with spite and malice. He glared at Adele.

Summers stared in amazement. And then he turned to Adele, noting her blanched cheeks and the horrified look in her eyes.

"You mean to tell me that Virgil Ellsworth Castle is the mysterious Mr. Graves?" he exclamied incredulously.

"I do," Dr. Moffett declared, his face aglow with malicious glee. "Look at her. Doesn't her face tell you enough?"

"Ridiculous!" Dale murmured. He laughed as at something very preposterous. "Try to tell any sane person that Virgil Ellsworth Castle is the mysterious Mr. Graves and you will draw the biggest laugh you ever heard."

Summers was not listening. His hard eyes were fixed on Ferryman. "Can you prove that?" he demanded.

Ferryman gave a chuckle of malicious satisfaction. "You might ask Miss Castle to explain why she gave me a check of $100,000 tonight."

"One hundred thousand—"

The sum was too staggering for Summers but again he looked into Adele's stricken face. She would indeed have much to explain if it could be proved that she had given Ferryman such a check. "Where is the check?" he demanded.

"In my pocket. Get it, please. These confounded handcuffs—"

Summers came forward with a brisk and eager step.

"No, the other pocket," Ferryman gleefully directed.

Summers thrust his hand into the other pocket. He brought out something. For a moment he stared at it blankly.

"The Picaroon's card!" he exclaimed in a hollow voice. He searched the pocket again. "There is nothing else."

A heavy grass of frustration, edged with a beast-like snarl, broke from Ferryman's lips. A long, trembling sigh of relief escaped Adele. Her brightening eyes fixed on Dale, and Dale cast another glance at the black, silent ashes in the fireplace.

"Queer about that card," said Summers.

"Isn't it?" agreed Dale innocently. "Wonder how it got into Ferryman's pocket. Another frame-up, maybe."

"Maybe." Summers shrugged his sturdy shoulders. "Anyhow, it's been a good night's work."

Dale turned to Adele. He saw a warm, misty, heavenly smile in her eyes. He smiled back and touched her hand lightly.

"Thanks," he said softly.

"Why? Why should you thank me?"

"You will never know," he whispered. Then he turned quickly and a little awkwardly toward the door. He was still smiling. Life held its compensations for the Picaroon.

The Once Over

The Hours-in-the-Air Fliers

(The scene in a municipal center where two birdmen, Blooks and Schnozzel, are being honored after just having established a world's record for endurance. They have been up 10 days).

Mayor (addressing the fliers): Gentlemen, we are here today to celebrate an epochal event. You two daring heroes of the blue, by remaining 10 days in the air, have accomplished something no other airmen have been able to achieve. You have set a world's record that will endure for all time, and I am indeed happy to present to you this medal, which . . .

PHILLIPS

Mayor's secretary (interrupting him and whispering): Just a moment, your honor. This, er, is a telegram which has just come in and it, er, somewhat alters matters.

Mayor: What is it?

Secretary: It seems that two other airmen, Schmalz and Rosenwaller, have just come down in California after being in the air 15 days and 17 hours.

Mayor (resuming): Gentlemen, tidings have just been received which somewhat change the complexion of this ceremony. Two birdmen have alighted in California after setting a new record of more than 15 days in the air. We hail this achievement, but, nevertheless we may justly proceed with this ceremony and honor you two boys as pioneers who were the first to remain 10 days in the air. Ten full days in the air constitute a truly remarkable and noteworthy performance and I am glad to present this medal to you as two of the world's most . . .

Mayor: What now?

Committee member: We've just heard over the radio that Mooney and Puddicombe, a pair of Detroit airmen, have come down in Ohio after remaining in the air two full weeks and three days.

Mayor: Gentlemen, I am informed that Mooney and Puddicombe have come down in Ohio after remaining aloft nearly two and a half weeks. Such a feat is deserving of the greatest praise. Nevertheless the record set by you two boys was a noteworthy one at the time and I take great pleasure in presenting this medal to you for having been among the earliest fliers to attempt . . .

Mayor: Now what's happened.

Policeman: The newspaper boys have just sent word that Broaches and Czologowski have come down in Missouri after having remained in the air three weeks, two days and 17 hours.

Mayor (wearily): Gentlemen, two more fliers have alighted and set a new world's record for hour-in-the-air flights. Accept this medal with my best wishes.

The two fliers (now quite disgusted): Why?

The Day Book of a New Yorker

Broadway Chatter by Grant Dixon

NEW YORK, July 19.—Yacht brokers have had a great season. More men own yachts now than ever before because of the large fortunes made in this country in the years since the war. The problem of many yachtsmen now seems to be to get the guests to ride on their palatial boats, because as a matter of fact there is very little to do on a yacht once you are on it and have exclaimed appropriately at its magnificent appointments.

There is conversation, cards and liquor, in case the owner wants to take a chance and doesn't believe in the 18th amendment. Occasionally it can anchor so that the guests may take a swim if they enjoy bathing, but the chances are the boat has discharged oil on the water near where it is anchored so there is a thin film which makes swimming unpleasant.

I heard some time ago a story of a yachtsman who purchased a boat and was soon dismayed by the bills presented to him by its captain. Finally, exasperated when the skipper came to him with the last account to be settled, he inquired:

"Where is the nearest port?" to which the captain replied:

"New London, sir."

"Put in there!" ordered the yachtsman.

As soon as the boat arrived, the owner packed his duds, walked up to the captain and said,

"She belongs to you; I am a retired yachtsman."

This man was a well known playwright.

Irvin Cobb tells a story of another yachtsman who had a captain named Penny. Cobb said his name was Pretty Penny at the end of the season.

Human Dynamos

In discussing the head of a big New York bank, a man who is himself important in the financial world, criticised him as follows:

"He's a guy who exercises every morning."

I don't know whether this can be called a complete characterizer in view of the large amount of propaganda that there is now for matutinal exercising, but it certainly fitted the subject under discussion. What the author of the statement meant to say was that the bank president had accomplished the success he had made in life through brute strength and energy rather than through superior thinking and unusual mental adroitness. He is the type of executive who is always driving and pushing, and, when one stops to consider it, a great deal can be accomplished by application and brute strength without an unusual quantity of talent. For example, look at the results the prohibitionists have gotten by everlastingly keeping at it.

Summer Playboys

Overhearing two conversations in 24 hours makes me sure that the New York summer season is open. Riding up in the elevator yesterday a fellow passenger yawned wearily, and remarked:

"I never got to bed until 6 o'clock this morning and then the telephone started to ring at 9."

As I was going out to lunch today, I overheard an otherwise sane looking individual making precisely the same remark. He confided to his companion:

"It was 6 o'clock this morning when I got to bed."

Now you know that the wives of these two "sports" have unquestionably gone to the country for the summer. To quote the fair Texas Guinan:

"Hello, suckers!"

The Motorist's Dilemma

A well known man submitted a question to me the other day and, not being either a government official or a law enforcement officer, I cannot answer it. Therefore, I am passing it along to some of my more intelligent readers. This man has a permit signed by a supreme court justice to carry a revolver in any part of the country. He said to me:

"I have occasion to drive an automobile a good deal at night. Sometimes I have to travel to Canada. Therefore I am announcing myself as going armed. I have a permit to carry a revolver. In view of the recent fatal shootings, if anyone undertakes to hold me up, I will not wait. I am going to do my best to shoot him and find out later whether he is an enforcement officer or a hold-up man. Delays have been fatal in too many cases recently. I never carry any liquor in my car."

This is a situation which may confront authorities in several territories because citizens are becomingly genuinely afraid of any one who undertakes to stop any automobile.

Newcastle Test Looms as Oiler

G. A. Horrall and others No. 1 H. L. Morrison located in the southeast corner of section 431, T. E. L. survey, south Young county is standing with a hole full of oil from a sand at 3809 feet.

The well is an absolute wildcat located about five miles east of the town of Newcastle, and a like distance of Graham on the main highway. The sand was drilled one foot into when the oil rose into the hole rapidly. A well here will be the factor in the starting of other deep tests as a number of the major companies hold protective acreage on the nearby tracts.

PEEPS AT PEOPLE

By MRS L. N. CASON

Every tree was smiling Friday morning because it had been given a nice bath.

J. L. Jackson Jr. has a moving picture machine and making pictures is his hobby. He has one now that is an ideal for a mother and father who wish to remember a day in their children's lives. For it is just that—a day in their children's lives. It begins with the early morning and takes them through school, through other lessons, through lunch and tea at home and hours spent with their playmates, through the evening and at last to the hour when they are kneeling to say "Now I lay me."

What would you not give, you mothers and fathers of grownup children, to be able to see your children moving through one of their childhood days?

◆ ◆ ◆

There is a law in California against killing the mocking birds. An article appeared in the morning paper in San Diego this summer, concerning a letter from a local woman who had appealed to the police for help. She knew the birds could not be killed and a pair had nested in a tree in her yard and sang so thrillingly in the night they annoyed her old father who was an invalid. The chief of police advised her to catch the birds, put them in a cage and give them to him and he would gladly take care of them.

◆ ◆ ◆

Only imagine one being annoyed by the mocking bird's song. It makes us very sorry for the sick old man.

◆ ◆ ◆

But then we know a girl who will not eat a field lark, because she has heard the sweet note of the field lark.

And we heard one of our cleverest friends complaining of having to run out in the yard and protect a strange chicken which had been put in with a nervy, tiny home grown one. She couldn't stand, she said, having the strange fowl eaten bit by bit and the noise he made was heart-rending. But she didn't mind at all eating the chicken herself.

Some one told us the other day that the trees in the 2000 block on Eleventh street are the tallest of their kind in town. And we've noticed since that they meet overhead; you pass beneath a canopy of green.

Mrs. McIver Honoree At Lovely Luncheon

Complimenting her mother, Mrs. A. C. McIver, Mrs. Ray Bourland entertained at her home, 1408 Burnett, with a lovely luncheon Wednesday.

The reception suite was profusely decorated with tuberoses, tinted in all rainbow colors. The tables was especially lovely with the center of pastel tinted flowers mingled with baby's breath and everything else gleaming white.

The place cards furnished a floral contest, which was won by Mrs. O. L. Powers.

Favors were little birds wired on the salad plates.

A delicious four-course luncheon was served to Mesdames McIver, J. M. Finch, W. W. Brown, J. T. Brooks, O. L. Powers, R. C. Smith, L. A. Mytinger, J. M. Raney, Ada Moore, Florence Cullin, W. L. Robertson, J. W. Morgan and Miss Dosia Carter.

Mrs. Bourland, whose home was in Wichita Falls until a few years ago, has recently returned to make this city her home again.

Diocesan Camp Delightful Success

Glenrose, Texas, is the happy hunting ground of the high school age Episcopal girls of this diocese just now, with 32 of them in camp in lodges named for the flowers planted round them—marigold, aster, daisy and zinnia. The camp is the property of the Y. W. C. A., loaned to the diocese for a two-weeks' period.

Besides the girls, Miss Rachel Summers is in charge, and there are several councillors. Bishop Harry Moore is chaplain.

Every evening, something is done for the enjoyment of the girls; they have put on plays, skits, pageants, etc. One night they held a water carnival and one day they climbed to the top of a high hill and had lunch there.

Stepmothers Find Their Road to Be Lined With Thorns

Hazardous Lot of the Unwelcome Stepmother—A Man's Love May Be Judged by His Wish to Protect—Unjust Cruelty of a Suspicious Mother.

Dear Miss Dix—There is a widower with a number of children, ranging between the ages of 8 and 15, who has fallen in love with a girl who is deeply in love with him and who would make him a splendid wife, but one of the children, a girl, is very much opposed to her father's marrying. The man loves his children, of course, but feels he needs a companion and friend, such as a wife would be. The girl is of a lovable nature and would be good to the children, but she is afraid to marry him on account of this girl, as she does not wish to bring friction into the family. The man is well off and in a position to give his family everything they desire. What do you think this girl should do?—H. M. H.

Answer—It takes a courageous, not to say a foolhardy, woman to marry any widower with a houseful of children, for the road of the stepmother is a thorny one to travel, even under the best of conditions.

Managing one's own children is a difficult and heartbreaking job in this day of the emancipation of youth, when every girl and boy is determined to do his or her own way, and generally does it. Few modern youngsters can be found who do not defy their fathers and mothers and disobey them and talk back to them and who do not think that they know far better about everything than the poor old dodoes who brought them into the world. Nor are there many children who show any appreciation or gratitude for the work and worry and sacrifices their parents make for them.

So the lot of the parent is not an easy one, but fortunately when a baby is born God works the miracle of parental love and fills the heart of the father and mother with an affection that makes them blind to the child's faults and defects, and that enables them to forgive seventy times seven the sins that the child commits against them.

Now, all that the real mother has to suffer for the child the stepmother has to endure. She has to put up with all the mischief of childhood, with all the arrogance and unreason of adolescence. She has to work and sacrifice herself endlessly for the children. She has to nurse them when they are sick. Keep watch and ward over their manners and morals. She has to plan their parties and get them their pretty clothes and see to their good times. She has to do for them all that a mother would do without the mother's love to sweeten it and take the sting out of its self-denials.

Worse still, the children rarely repay her with the love that they would give their mother. She is always an outsider. Always under suspicion. They are always a little antagonistic toward her. And generally she has not only the children to placate, but their mother's family are continually poisoning their minds against her.

A hard and thankless task is the stepmother's, and so a woman does well to think long and earnestly before she undertakes it. In fact, nothing but the most overwhelming love for a man could justify her in running such a risk, and any man must needs be a sheik, indeed, who finds a woman who is willing to take him with a ready-made family.

Aside from the question of her own happiness, the woman who has an altruistic spirit can find no role in which she can do a nobler work than that of a stepmother, and that, at least, must be some compensation to the one who is dealing with obstreperous and spoiled stepchildren. Certainly there can be no finer work than that of the woman who mothers motherless little children, who shapes and directs their lives, often better than their own mother could have done, because she is a woman of more intelligence and has had better advantages than their mother had.

Of course, it is natural for children to object to their father's marrying again, because foolish people have made a bugaboo of the cruel stepmother, who mainly exists only in old nurses' tales, but if a man chooses wisely and well he is doing his children a great favor by giving them a stepmother. For the stepmother will establish a home for the children where they will be in the natural relationship to their father, and she will almost invariably be a far better friend, counselor and guide for them than the old grandmother or other female relatives who have had them in charge.

Besides this, she leaves the children free to follow their own lives when the time comes, as they could not do if their father had stayed single on their account. Then the oldest girl would have to stay at home and take care of father and the younger children, instead of marrying, or going about a career, or whatever she wanted to do. And later on father would have to come and live with his married children instead of having his own home.

In this particular case I should advise the woman who is in love with the well-to-do widower to marry him. Send the antagonistic girl off to school, which should be gone for her in any case, and which will keep her from fomenting rebellion among the other children, and by the time she has had a year or two away from home she will have got over her prejudices and perceived the advantages of having a snappy young stepmother.

CHATTY—CODDESS OF CAB

By BEATRICE BURTON, Author of "HER MAN," "SALLY'S SHOULDERS"

COPYRIGHT 1929, CENTRAL PRESS ASS'N, INC., CLEVELAND, OHIO.

READ THIS FIRST

Charlotte Chatterton, whose nickname is Chatty, is a born gossip and busy-body. She loses her job in Mrs. Mayberry's store because she talks too much, and leaves without collecting her weekly wage of thirteen dollars. However, her younger brother, Fred, gets it for her later.

Chatty does not mind being fired, except for the loss of her weekly salary, because she would rather work in an office, where she would have a chance to meet men. She stays with Mrs. Mayberry.

One of the customers of her mother, Mrs. Harriet Chatterton, who earns a small living by doing plain sewing, is Mrs. Van Nuys. The two women have always been friends, and when Chatty asks Mrs. Van Nuys to ask her wealthy husband to give her a position in the office of his bond house down town, Mrs. Van Nuys says she will do her best.

On the following day, which is Easter, the two Van Nuys come to the Chatterton flats to tell Chatty that she can have a job in the filing department of the company, and Chatty says she will start work the next morning.

She gets there at 8 o'clock, before anyone has arrived, to start work for the day, and after she takes off her hat and coat she goes prowling around the office. As she is going through the files a good-looking, red-headed young man, whom Chatty has seen twice before on the street during the past few days, comes up to her and scolds her for looking at the name cards in the files. He tells her she must never let anyone outside the office know what those names are—for they are the names of the Van Nuys company's customers, and are a big trade secret. Chatty promises she never will repeat a single name.

Now Go on With the Story

Long afterward she was to remember how kind they had been to her that morning . . . Long afterward, when she had repaid them for their kindness with unkindness and sorrow and disgrace.

The next morning at 8 o'clock Chatty pushed open the doors of "The Van Nuys company, bonds and investments," on the third floor of the Kinney building, and stepped inside.

There was no one in sight in the big bright offices, with their shining mahogany desks and their thick brown velvet carpets.

She backed quickly out again, and rang the bell for the elevator. When it came up she asked the man who ran it where she would find a dressing room where she could leave her coat and hat.

"Van Nuys company got one o' its own, somewheres in there," and the man waved a gloved hand in the general direction of the big offices, slammed his door shut in Chatty's face, and left her standing there helplessly.

Once more she went into the main office and looked at all the words that were printed on the doors that opened from it—clients' room—manager's room—cloak room—

"Cloak room, that's it!" And Chatty crossed the office and went in. There was no doubt that it was the girl's dressing room.

For the long marble shelf that ran along above the six washbowls was covered with boxes of powder, with invisible hairpins and lipsticks—all the little things that girls use when they want to make themselves attractive.

Above the long marble shelf was a huge shining mirror. Ninety-nine girls out of a hundred would have stopped to look themselves over carefully in it.

But not Chatty! She passed a quick hand over her smooth hair, straightened the collar of her dress, and went back into the main office.

On the side of it that was nearest the front windows were three rows of steel files, painted olive green, and looking very businesslike.

"That's where I'll work, I suppose," said Chatty to herself, and crossed over to them. Most of them were locked . . . but as she tried them one after the other, she found one that was not. She pulled it open and looked to see what was inside.

"Why, how funny! Nothing but names and names of men!" she thought, running through the cards that were neatly stacked within the top drawer.

And then suddenly she gave a jump, and her heart seemed to stop beating. For some one had laid his hand on her shoulder, and was holding it tight in his fingers!

"Hey! What do you think you're doing here?" he asked gruffly. "Going through our files? How did you get in here, anyway? And who are you?"

"I walked in—and I'm going to work here!" Chatty told him, pulling herself away from him. "And what difference does it make if I look at a few old names, anyway. You'd think I was robbing a cash register or something—the way you spoke to me!"

"Those names are just as important to us as money, young lady!" he said. "They're the names of the people who buy bonds from us—and we never let anybody know who they are, or else we might lose their trade to some other company, see?"

He closed the file.

"Better leave it alone until Miss Langenau gets here," he added, sharply. "And you're never to mention those names outside this office. Just remember that, in case she forgets to tell you, herself!"

"I will remember!" Chatty promised.

She solemnly crossed her heart like a little girl. And looking down at her earnest face, the red-headed man suddenly burst into a laugh showing the whitest teeth that Chatty ever had seen in her life!

"Gosh, but I like him!" she thought. "Jimminy crickets!—but I do."

CHAPTER IV

The big, luxurious office was as thrilling as a three-ring circus to Chatty that morning.

She sat there in her corner, near the filing cabinets, and watched it fill up with the people who worked there.

They came in, one by one—smart girls in tiny hats and short skirts and silk stockings—good-looking young men in well-brushed suits and the stiffest of white collars.

"There's not a man in the place, though, who is half so good looking as the red-headed man!" Chatty decided, looking them all over with her quick, busy eyes.

His dark-blue suit was no neater than any other suit in the office. His white collar was no whiter than the rest of the men's collars. But somehow, he had a certain grace and a certain I-should-worry air that the others did not have.

"He's a regular head-liner!" thought Chatty, who picked up Pud's slang every now and then, and used it.

At 9 o'clock a pretty, brown-eyed girl came out of the cloakroom and walked straight up to Chatty. She was holding out her hand, and a smile of welcome shone in her eyes and lifted the corners of her lips.

"Good morning!" she said. "I just saw Mr. Nuys in the elevator, and he tells me I'm to have a new assistant. Are you Miss Chatterton?"

Chatty said she was.

"I'm Billie Langenau," the girl introduced herself. "Our job here is to keep the cards in the files in order—and all the letters and other papers, too. It's not hard work. I like it—and I know you will, too. Let's see, have you any paper cuffs to wear over your sleeves?"

Chatty did not have any. So Billie Langenau made her a pair out of some heavy brown paper and pinned them around Chatty's wrists.

"They'll save your dress," she said. "And I usually pin a piece of paper on the front of my blouse where it rubs the desk. You'll find that if you do it you'll be fresh and clean at the end of the day—just in case you're staying down town for dinner with the boy friend."

"With the boy friend!" Chatty repeated the words to herself. "I wonder what she'd say if she knew that I've never had a boy friend in all my life? She'd never believe it, of course."

For she could tell, just by looking at Billie Langenau, that she was the kind of girl who has "boy friends" from the time she starts to school until she walks down the church aisle to the strains of "Here Comes the Bride." Her brown hair was wavy and had golden tints in it. Her eyes were the friendliest, sweetest eyes that Chatty had ever seen.

And everything about her was so clean and sweet . . . Her little fingers, with their polished pink nails. Her skin, with a film of flower-scented powder on it. Her black satin dress, with its spotless white organdy collar and cuffs.

At noon she took Chatty out into the cloakroom with her.

"We'll go to lunch together today," she said. "Your first day is pretty hard, I know, and we'll go out and forget it for forty-five minutes. Tomorrow, and always after that, one of us at a time will go out—so that there'll be someone on the job in our department in case anyone wants anything out of the files."

There were two other girls in the cloakroom.

One was a tall, plain girl, in a plain serge dress and low-heeled shoes.

The other was bit wild looking. Her hair had been dyed a dark red, and it stood up in ringlets all over her head. She had mascara on her eyelashes and bright scarlet paint on her mouth. Her skirts were too short, her stockings too thin, her heels too high.

But she was pretty, all the same, and she had an air of dash and snap that made her very attractive.

Billie introduced the tall, plain, quiet looking girl first.

"This is Miss Hertford, Mr. Van Nuy's secretary," she said. "And this is Miss Winnie Talcott, who helps her."

The flapperish looking girl grinned broadly at Chatty.

"I hope you'll like it here in this Little Group of Willing Workers," she said, airily, pulling a bright purple hat down over her mahogany hair.

"I'm sure Miss Chatterton will like it!" Miss Hertford's voice was gentle and sweet.

"Oh, horse feathers!" And Winnie Talcott gave a snort. "Nobody really likes the place where she works, Agnes! The only reason I keep at it is because I must have some new chokers and some silk undies once in a while. See you all of a sudden, girl!" And she was gone.

"Winnie Talcott is the office pet," Billie Langenau told Chatty, as they stepped out of the Kinney building into the sunny, crowded streets, where vendors were selling violets and boys were dashing through the crowd with newspapers, and everybody and everything looked gay and cheerful and full of the job of life.

"Is she?" Chatty's voice was dreamy. She was wondering if the girl she had seen with the red-headed man on Saturday worked in Mr. Van Nuy's office.

"If she does, I haven't seen her yet," she said to herself. "But perhaps she works in some other office—and maybe she doesn't work at all. Maybe she's one of the girls who don't have to do anything but wait for some man to come along and marry them—"

She wondered if the red-headed man was going to marry the girl he had bought those flowers for. She didn't even know his name, but the thought that he might be engaged to her somehow made Chatty blue.

"Who's the red-headed man up in our office?" she asked Billie, suddenly, when they were finishing their lunch of creamed oyster stew and Waldorf salad.

Billie laid down her spoon and began to laugh. "Now, don't you do it," she cried.

"Do what?"

"Fall for him! Every girl who comes to work at Van Nuys' falls for Dave Jordan like a shot! And don't you do it. You'll just be letting yourself in for a lot of sorrow. I never heard of his taking anybody seriously. Once in a while he takes Agnes Herford out for lunch—"

"I saw him buying flowers for a girl last Saturday—" Chatty began.

And then all at once it came to her that she was talking too much again! Telling things that perhaps would be better untold—things that were none of her business.

"You saw him buying flowers for a girl? What sort of a looking girl?" Billie Langenau asked, quickly.

And Chatty had to pretend that she had bitten her tongue so that she would not have to answer her. That afternoon at 4 o'clock Agnes Herford sent for Chatty.

She was sitting behind a large flat desk in the office just outside Mr. Van Nuys' private office, and she looked very dignified and business-like.

"Now, what can a peppy fellow like David Jordan see in a girl like her. To go to lunch with her must be like going to lunch with the missionary society, or something," thought Chatty, going meekly up to her.

"Mr. Van Nuys wants me to talk to you about your salary," Miss Herford began. "We have been in the habit of paying $15 a week for jobs like yours. Will that be satisfactory to you, Miss Chatterton?"

Palatable foods are better for us

"AN IMPORTANT thing to remember about eating is that we should enjoy our food," says one of the country's eminent food scientists. "Remember that sugar is one of the finest condimental foods in the world."

He went on to explain that sugar is nature's incomparable flavor. It helps to relieve the monotony of our daily diets. It is an aid to nutrition and health because it enables us to enjoy a greater variety of foods more.

"Sugar is wholesome," he said, "and it is inexpensive. Everyone can benefit from this flavor which adds so much pleasure to many of the foods we eat."

The advice of this famous man can be carried out in planning almost all daily dishes. Fresh or cooked fruits are full of minerals, vitamins and other health elements. They are made more delightful to our taste by the addition of sugar.

The flavors of nearly all vegetables are very much improved by adding a pinch of sugar in cooking. Sugar in connection with chocolate or cocoa makes milk a delicious beverage. Most foods are more delicious and nourishing with sugar. The Sugar Institute,

Outdoors a Pippin ...indoors a Pest

For every woman there is a sermon in the case of this lovely Philadelphia girl (name withheld). Outdoors others found her so charming, so gay. But in the drawing room they politely avoided her. She couldn't understand it. The truth is that her trouble, which went unnoticed in the open air, became instantly apparent—and offensive—indoors.

Don't fool yourself

It's folly to assume that you never have halitosis, the unforgivable social fault. One out of every three is either an occasional or constant offender, surveys show.

Halitosis is caused by fermenting food particles in the mouth. Minor infections of the oral tract. Bad teeth, and Pyorrhea.

Kills germs—Destroys odors

Since you, yourself, cannot tell when you have halitosis, the wise precaution is to gargle with full strength Listerine. Every morning. Every night. And between times before meeting others.

Undiluted Listerine strikes at the cause of odors because it's an active—though safe—germicide. Even the stubborn Staphylococcus Aureus (pus) germ is killed by it in 15 seconds.

Furthermore, being a powerful deodorant it immediately destroys all odors arising in the mouth. Leaves your breath sweet and normal.

Be at your best

Keep Listerine handy in home and office and use it often. Take it with you on your vacation. By the way, our free Book of Etiquette may interest you. Address Dept. H9, Lambert Pharmacal Company, St. Louis, Mo., U. S. A.

WACHTEL MUFFLES SPUDDER BATS IN PINCHES AND BUFFS WIN

PAUL PITCHES 2 TO 1 VICTORY

Steengrafe's Great Chucking Goes for Naught

Special to The Record News.

HOUSTON, July 19.—Great pitching by Milt Steengrafe and George Payne went for naught here today and the Buffs won the opener of the three-game series from the Spudders, 2 to 1. It was Houston's fourth straight victory.

Steengrafe held the Buffs to four hits for seven innings while Payne, who went to the hill in the eighth after Lapan had batted for Milt, retired the Buffs in order in that round. But the Buffaloes bunched two hits with a walk and sacrifice in the third round for the winning tallies.

Paul Tight in Pinches

Wichita Falls got eight hits off Paul Wachtel, but the veteran spitball wizard kept the blows scattered and was backed by fast fielding.

The Spudders filled the bases in the seventh and eighth rounds but on both occasions the tying hits were not forthcoming.

Hermann and Crouch were batting leaders of the day with two hits each, one of Jack's blows going for two bases.

Mancuso, first up in the Buff third, strolled and went to second when Wachtel beat out an infield hit. Hock sacrificed, Steengrafe to Turgeon. Taylor doubled against the left field wall, tallying Mancuso and Wachtel.

Spudders Tally One

The Spudders scored in the sixth. Bennett singled after one was out. Turgeon flied to Bailey. Hermann singled to left, Bennett stopping at second. Stapleton beat out an infield hit, filling the bases. Jordan fumbled Crouch's grounder, Bennett scoring.

Wichita Falls maintained the league lead despite the defeat as Waco and Beaumont also lost.

TILDEN-HUNTER EASY VICTORS

Americans Beat Germans In Davis Cup Singles

By WILLIAM HILLMAN

BERLIN, July 19. (US)—William T. Tilden II and Francis T. Hunter, leading their teammates in a determined effort to return the coveted Davis cup tennis trophy to America, played havoc today with Germany's dream of facing France for the cup.

Hunter, flashing bewildering form, stunned 10,000 spectators at the Rotweiss tennis club, conquering Germany's youthful star, Daniel Prenn, 3-6, 6-3, 6-4, 6-3, while Tilden, with greater ease than the score indicates, defeated Hans Holdenhauer, 6-2, 6-4, 6-4.

Play Doubles Today

The American team needs only one more victory to win the final challenge round, and this is expected tomorrow in the doubles play, when Wilmer Allison and John van Ryn, Wimbledon champions and youthful shining pair of the present day court constellation, face Germany's two "iron men."

As a result of Hunter's amazing form, it is generally conceded America will make a clean sweep of all the singles as well as the doubles.

Hunter was good enough today to give even the French musketeers a great battle. Germany counted on the "weakness" of Hunter to give them a chance to defeat the Americans.

Tilden Toys With Foe

The other man in the day's tale is, of course, Tilden, who literally played with Moldenhauer, exhibiting a variety of tennis which hopelessly outclassed the German.

The lanky Philadelphian's victory was by no means an easy one, although it could not be said that Big Bill was ever extended. He merely played his usual game, going after points only when he needed them most.

Dempsey May Stage Max-Sharkey Fight

SAN DIEGO, Calif., July 19. (UP)—Jack Dempsey, former heavyweight champion and officials of Agua Caliente, fashionable resort across the Mexican border, have holding conferences which may result in a Jack Sharkey-Max Schmeling bout for the heavyweight crown.

The negotiations, it was said, were in a very early stage and definite announcement—if any—is not expected for several days.

The general discussion centered around the matching of the Boston sailor and the young German for 15 rounds.

Dempsey's part would be that of a co-promoter and referee, it was said.

Batting Form

A studious fanatic from the Middle West wants such information as he can get as to the name of the ball player having the best batting form in the two majors. He refers to those new in harness as well as those who have flashed and passed out.

This, of course, is merely a matter of individual opinion where no direct proof can be offered. As a form hitter it would be hard to improve upon Rogers Hornsby. He knows his trade in the ash furniture department. Hornsby can hit to any field and, as a rule, he can hit any type of pitching. He has the essentials of balance and timing at bat. He has the fundamentals of hitting under good control. The Cub infielder has been shifted from place to place on baseball's map, but he has led his league seven years and is still among the leaders.

Hornsby is a form hitter in every respect. W. B. Hanna once remarked that Hornsby looked at bat more like Ed Delehanty than any one he had ever seen. And Delehanty was certainly one of the great hitters of all time.

The best form hitter I ever saw in action was Larry Lajoie. Lajoie had every correct fundamental of batting under perfect control. He averaged something like .350 for 20 years. But he lacked Cobb's speed at getting down to first. With Cobb's fast footwork in beating out infield hits, I believe Lajoie would have been close to .400 for an all-time record.

Lajoie would have led the American league eight or 10 times if he had been a trifle faster. He wasn't slow for a 200-pounder, but he wasn't fast getting away from the plate. Practically all his base hits were clean driven smashes that no infielder could knock down. He could hit to any field and there was no fuzz on any of his wallops. Most of them were line smashes that left a tail of fire behind.

Looking Back a Year or Two

In one game I saw Lajoie choke up his bat as if he intended to bunt. On the next pitch the third baseman eased up closer to the plate to be set for the next bunt. In place of bunting, Lajoie hit one down the third base line that came near decapitating the startled third baseman, who dropped flat on the ground to keep from being killed. A few innings later, with a runner on first, the hit and run signal was given. The base runner started for second as the pitcher attempted to waste one about two feet to the right of the plate. Lajoie reached over and singled across first with his right hand only on the bat. On another such occasion he threw his bat at the ball and singled to right.

The big Frenchman was the easiest looking performer baseball has ever known. He was always completely relaxed, almost careless as he stood and waited, and when he had decided to take his cut at the ball it made no great difference where the ball was—below his knees, over his shoulders, inside or outside.

For a long time he averaged around 200 base hits a year and practically none of these were infielder's grounders that he beat to first. They were 200 hits that traveled like a bullet.

Frank Schulte and Tris Speaker were two others who batted in practically perfect form.

What about Ty Cobb? Cobb also was a form batter, but he also had wonderful foot speed in racing out hits and an uncanny eye. He never looked as easy at the plate or as graceful as Lajoie, Schulte and Speaker looked. The same is true of Hans Wagner, another great hitter.

Among the younger players, Mel Ott of the Giants, and Jimmy Foxx of the Athletics, are two fine form hitters who carry most of the fundamentals.

Among the veterans, Hornsby, Ruth, Heilmann, Manush and Terry are among the best.

Only a good form hitter can hold the lead for more than a year. A ball player with a fine eye, strong hands and wrists and a lot of competitive courage may hit well for a while and then slip away if he has a bad kink in his form.

The Value of Form

Form has received its share of kidding and joshing, but it is the basis of continued success. It means the player, in any game, has something he can return to when he bumps into a slump.

And form doesn't have to mean always an orthodox method. All men are not built alike. It means there are certain fundamentals such as balance, arm and body action, foot action, etc., that have to be followed. One may play brilliantly, for a short time, in bad form. But the brilliancy can't last.

And when the slump comes the formless entry is floundering in the dark. He has no fixed base to which he can return for another start. Cobb nearly always had some old timer spotting his swing to see that he was not violating certain fundamentals that even a Cobb couldn't violate and get by.

"I am always careful about this," he said one day, "when I get into a slump. It is hard for the player to tell what he is doing, but a smart observer can put him straight."

All of which is undeniably true. A short while a certain chronic hookerino pronounced a certain mild course as one of the hardest and one of the worst and one of the unluckiest golf courses he ever saw. I played there a few days later and discovered there were three of four out-of-bounds and three or four patches of deep woods to the left of the course, all perfect targets for a brisk hook. If these hazards had been to the right of the course to catch a slice what a difference of opinion! The same golfer, knowing his inbred faults, should select a course to match them. Why not, you may ask, cure the faults? Why not—and again why not. It can be done, but it so rarely is. Only one golfer in a hundred has the patience to attend to such a job. That is why opinions concerning golf courses are so often different. It often depends on how a course fits the player's game—or doesn't fit it.

INDIANS DIVIDE WITH YANKEES

Gehrig Hits No. 23; Ruth Forced Out With Injury

CLEVELAND, July 19. (AP)—The Yankees lost half a game in their race with the Philadelphia Athletics today by dividing a double-header with Cleveland. New York won the first game, 7 to 2, but the Indians took the second by an 11 to 3 count. Wesley Ferrell gave the Yankees only seven hits in the second.

Lou Gehrig hit his twenty-third home run in the first game. Babe Ruth was forced to leave the opening contest with a lame leg. Score:

Athletics at University of Texas May Be Placed Under Super-Director

AUSTIN, July 19. (AP)—The Austin Statesman said today sweeping reorganization of the athletic department of the University of Texas is being considered by a five-member faculty committee which will report its conclusions to the board of regents at an unannounced date in September.

Under a suggested plan a super-director would be placed in charge of present uncorrelated inter-collegiate athletics, physical education, physical training and women's athletics.

Names of L. Theodore Bellmont, former director of athletics and now professor of physical education; William J. Disch, veteran baseball coach; F. J. Stewart, former football coach and Berry Whittaker, former head football coach, are being considered as chief of the new athletic department, the newspaper said it had learned.

Daily Dope

By LARRY DAILEY

IT DEVELOPS that Eddie Roetz was the innocent cause of the recent quarrel between Owner Phil Ball and Manager Dan Howley of the St. Louis Browns, which led to the assertion of Dapper Dan'l that he would pack up and leave the Mound City flat after this season. L. C. McEvoy, vice president of the Browns, acting under orders from Ball, had instructed Howley to use the youthful Mr. Roetz, who played in 1928 in Wichita Falls regalia, at shortstop in place of Ralph Kress. Dapper Dan'l then told Mr. Ball, Mr. McEvoy and any other misters who cared to know, that he was running the St. Louis Browns on the ball field, and that he would play who he wanted to at shortstop, even the batboy.

Dapper Dan'l even went so far to say, it is reported, that Mr. Ball could tell his employes how to conduct his ice business, but that winning ball games was an entirely different matter than selling ice.

Howley thinks a lot of Kress and pointed out that the red-haired kid from Tulsa had a fine year last season in his first fling in fast time. So Kress went to shortstop after the row but it may be noticed that in recent games our youthful Mr. Roetz was playing shortstop. Edward was guilty of three errors Thursday, however, and simultaneous with the appearance of this piece in print Kress may be back on the job.

THE RAPIER has supplanted the bludgeon in boxing. Gene Tunney, in proving the superiority of brain over brawn, set the style that has been followed by others of the heavyweight division and in the lesser classes. It is always thus in boxing, the reigning heavyweight champion being the dictator of fistiana as Paris sets the mode for Milady.

Corbett revolutionized boxing and others were quick to copy the masterful boxing style of Gentleman Jim. Then the hitter came into his own when Bob Fitzsimmons became champion, and the sluggers ruled for a long period, with Dempsey the last of the sockers. The methodical, counter-fighting style of Tunney, while not exciting to watch, was successful and exemplified by Gene to a high degree. Others of the profession, recognizing that such tactics would win fights with a minimum amount of punishment, were quick to follow Mr. James Joseph Tunney's style.

The result is that knockouts, particularly in fights involving championships or between leading contenders, are rare indeed. This is noted especially among the heavyweights, a most amazing state of affairs. Not since Tunney stopped Heeney more than a year ago, which feat incidentally was accomplished by a machine like process of chopping the hard rock to little bits, has there been a k. o. in an important heavyweight fight.

Sharkey and Stribling went 10 harmless rounds and while Schmeling gave Paulino a tremendous shellacking the Basque was on his feet at the end of 15 rounds. Now we have Tommy Loughran, the light heavyweight champion, rivaling Tunney in an exposition of masterful boxing—but again showing lack of hitting power and the killer instinct that marked Dempsey and others of like ilk.

RECENT EVENTS in baseball indicate that there will be a change in the attack of the game, with a reversion to the smart and fast style of play that made the game so interesting before the advent of the home run orgy. Powers of the game are beginning to realize that the home run stuff has been far overdone and that circuit clouts are becoming a joke. Nine home runs were hit in one game in the National league; it is a rare contest indeed that does not see several circuit drives.

Fans are weary of home runs. The lively ball, restrictions on pitchers, and short fences have brought about the epidemic of home runs and have about ruined the game as a fast and interesting spectacle. Base stealing, sacrificing, the squeeze play and other sharp bits of baseball are lost arts. Why take a chance on scoring a run when any hitter, even the pitcher, is apt to loft a high fly for a home run, reason the managers.

Phil Ball, owner of the Browns, has built a screen on the right field fence at his park, which will curtail home runs. Other major league clubowners have indicated they favor measures to curtail home run hitting and a note in that direction is seen in the minor leagues with the decision of the New England league to seek a ball with less "carry" than the one it now employs.

Baseball will be better when it reverts back to the scientific era of a decade ago.

Avoids Slump

NEW YORK, July 19. (AP)—William Harold Terry, generally known as Bill Terry, is one of the two members of the 1929 Giants playing as well this year as last.

Lindstrom, Benton and Hogan have slipped. But Terry and young Mel Ott are carrying on in excellent form.

Memphis Bill has been up with the leading hitters all season and for a time led the National league. He batted .369 for 79 games, making 121 hits and 54 runs.

McKechnie's Nine Tops 'Int' League

Bill's Rochester Club Out in Front Six Games

ROCHESTER, N. Y., July 19. (AP)—The Cardinals are having little luck trying to repeat in the National league this year, but Bill McKechnie should worry.

The veteran baseball manager has his team out in front in the International league race and has been leading the pack by a six-game margin.

McKechnie assumed the managership of the Rochester Red Wings after he had been deposed as chief of the Cardinals. The powers at St. Louis decided that Bill had to go following the Red Birds' sorry showing against the Yankees in the 1928 world series. They offered him the Rochester job and Bill accepted. Rochester is a Cardinal farm.

Winning pennants is nothing new to McKechnie. He headed Pittsburgh to the National league pennant and the championship of the world in 1927 and brought the Cardinals home in front in splendid fashion last year.

In coming to Rochester, McKechnie swapped jobs with Billy Southworth, who piloted the Red Wings to the International league title last year.

U. S. College Athletes Sail Today for Europe

NEW YORK, July 19. (AP)—Five of the party of seven American track and field stars who will invade Europe this summer leave tomorrow on the President Roosevelt for Germany. Led by Erik Kjellstrom of Georgetown, hurdler and organizer of the trip, they include Fred Sturdy of Yale, national pole vault champion; Leo Sexton, Georgetown all-around star; Dick Rockaway, of Ohio State, world's record breaker in the low hurdles; and Leo Lermond of the Boston A. A. National one-mile champion.

Reginald (Pete) Bowen of Pittsburgh, national quarter-mile champion, and Eddie Tolan, the Michigan negro who holds both national sprint titles, will sail on the Olympic Friday to complete the group.

The opening of the E-Z Auto Laundry was a great success; crowded from morning until night. We appreciate the hearty cooperation extended to us by our friends, and we hope when in need of car washing, greasing, polishing, permanizing, gas or oil service, you will pay us a visit. It does not pay to let your car remain dirty as it will soon ruin the finish.

Health Ice Cream

During a hot day, one's thought naturally turns to ice cream, but it should be thoroughly understood that the food value of ice cream is very high, and it should at all times be considered as a real food and may be used as a meal by itself or with fresh, whole or crushed fruits.

Most of the formulas used by the ice cream manufacturers contain approximately the same ingredients, 10 to 12 per cent milk fat, 14 to 15 per cent cane sugar, 10 to 11 per cent of milk solids, and less than 1 per cent of edible gelatin.

During the summer, I would suggest that you try some lunches of ice cream as the principal part of the meal, using with it any one kind of fruits, such as cherries, peaches, oranges or berries. Or, in place of the fruit, you may use the cooked or non-starchy vegetables. When you use ice cream, it is better to leave out meat, potatoes, bread, cake and all other heavy foods, as they are not needed with such a highly nutritious food as ice cream.

You can make a very fine health ice cream at home if you have an ice cream freezer. If you are inclined to be overweight, or intend the ice cream for children, it is better not to use as high a proportion of cream, but use more milk. It is also a little better to use brown sugar or honey than the refined granulated sugar in preparing the ice cream. If you wish the cream to be of a smoother consistency, you can add gelatin, but you can make a very fine ice cream by simply mixing crushed fruits, whole milk and sufficient sweetening. Pure orange juice or crushed cherries, mashed peaches, etc., can be frozen without milk for fruit ices by those who wish to avoid gaining weight. The following recipe will be found quite good:

Crushed Fruit Ice Cream

Measure into a dish half the contents of an envelope of plain gelatin and add to it two or three tablespoonfuls of cold water to soften. Crush the desired amount of one kind of fruit and mix with a half pint of cream. Into another bowl put a pint of whole milk into which has been thoroughly mixed about a third of a cupful of honey, and add to the fruit. Next, add the gelatin which has been dissolved over hot water. Stir all together and pour into freezer and freeze until of the desired consistency. The amount makes about a quart, depending upon the quantity of fruit used. The amount of honey varies with the acidity of the fruit.

If you have no freezer, you can make an ice in the following manner:

Frozen Canned Fruits

Do not open the can of pineapple, peaches, berries, etc., but remove label, placing the entire can in a bucket and entirely surround it with a mixture of chopped ice and ice cream salt. This will freeze in about a half hour, after which the can may be opened by cutting around the outside edge—not the top. The frozen ice may then be sliced and served; or, if you have one of the new electrical refrigerators, you can place the can of fruit in the freezing compartment for about a half to three-quarters of an hour.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

Rash

Question—H. W. G. Writes: "A rash composed of water blisters has appeared on my neck and arms which irritates, especially at night. Have been eating a good deal of rhubarb lately."

Answer—Rhubarb is too acid to be used with ordinary food and you have probably guessed the cause of your trouble. Besides, the acid of the rhubarb makes it necessary to use so much sugar to make it palatable, that this mixture increases the acidity of the stomach above normal.

Treatment for Hair

Question—F. D. asks: "Can you recommend something to use on my hair to thicken it and to make it grow?"

Answer—The ice treatment applied to your scalp twice daily will make your hair grow strong. Keep your hair cut short and treat the scalp by applications of ice. Hold the ice in a thick towel and move it from one part of the scalp to the other, giving about a five-minute treatment. This brings the blood to the hair roots, and the hair shafts will become larger and stronger because of the increased blood supply. Rub in cocoatnut oil afterwards.

Warts

Question—L. D. G. Writes: "I am getting warts on my fingers and I want to know if there is any way to get rid of them, or to prevent any more."

Answer—Warts are caused by a systematic acidosis, and can be prevented by proper dieting. Warts can be easily removed by the application of glacial acetic acid. Get a small bottle of these crystals in a drug store and apply a small crystal to each one of the warts. Rub vaseline all around the wart before applying the acid. One application of the crystals is usually sufficient.

Vernon May Get Aviation School

Special to The Record News.

VERNON, Texas, July 19.—Prospects for the location of a Texas Air Transport corporation flying school in Vernon in the near future were made known today on the receipt of a wire from Robert H. Gray, assistant manager of the T. A. T. by M. K. Berry, chairman of the chamber of commerce airport committee.

The message indicated that the T. A. T. would establish the flying school at once if a sufficient number of students could be enrolled here to justify the location of the school in Vernon. Mr. Gray will probably be in Vernon this week in connection with the project.

Easing Call Money Raises Stocks, And Railroads Jump Into Lead

By BROADAN WALL

NEW YORK, July 19. (US)—Railroads led the market higher as easing call money offset the effect of the increase in brokers' loans to a new high record level today. Steel stood out in the Industrial list, rising to new high record price for advance of 6⅜, while other Standard Industrials remained irregular. There was continued liquidation evidenced that closed most of the Industrials lower. Union Pacific gained 6⅞. Erie two, Katy 3⅝, Central 7⅞ and Alleghany Corporation 1¾. Individual Utilities were strong with American Power & Light gaining 5½. National Power & Light 2⅛ and Public Service of New Jersey 5¼. Colorado Fuel gained four while Gulf States Steel climbed over three points on publication of record earnings. Oils and Coppers remained quiet and nervous. The call rate dropped from renewal of eight to seven per cent. Turnover increased to 4,000,000 shares.

While the easing in money was accredited with influencing the advance in the market it was the consistent strength of Steel that had the most effect on sentiment. Steel's move to a new record high has enhanced hope for favorable development at the meeting of directors to be held a week from Tuesday. The earnings' statement for the three months ended June 30 will show the highest income in history for that period. Such income apparently warrants an extra dividend but the corporation is using a good part of its cash in paying off bonds so the directors may decide to hold off such action for awhile. In banking circles it is claimed that the Steel management plans to eventually split up the shares. No definite time for such recapitalization has been set but when it occurs it is stated the new stock will be put on a dividend basis equal to $10 a share annually for the present stock.

Resumption of activity in National Power & Light was experienced coincident with report that the deal with Electric Power is nearing consummation. Important announcement on Italian Superpower was forecast for the near future also. Special group activity was reported in Southeastern Power which was regarded as being out of line with other Utilities. Radiator met more profit-taking as the forthcoming report of earnings is not likely expected to make as good a showing as was forecast heretofore. Buying of Congoleum was attributed to interests who are identified with the bankers who control the company. Second half of the year normally is the most prosperous period for the company.

"Railroad market" was the cry raised again as Central, Alleghany Corporation and others forged ahead. Strength is due to expectation that the railroad bankers will not be interfered with in their activity through holding companies so that they will be able to achieve concentrated control without recourse to mergers. When the bankers have control of the roads they want, it is thought, the full effect of the O'Fallon decision will be seen as the larger systems are likely to adopt a more liberal method of accounting. Bullard company reflected its increasing earnings as directors declared the first extra dividend authorized since the stock was split up. Another extra is likely toward the close of the year. Hudson's earnings for the second quarter were fully as good as expected but like other motor shares it feels the effect of disturbing advices from trade centers.

Increase in government security holdings shown in the federal reserve statement caused belief that reserve was beginning to lift its pressure on stock market credit. However, the increase was due almost entirely to gain in treasury notes and it seems probable that this resulted from the mid-year treasury operations and are in but a temporary development. The increase in brokers' loans to a new high record reflected in good part the extent of pool liquidation that has been going on during recent weeks. Some of the distribution has been accompanied by the crudest kind of manipulation. Pool activity in at least one stock is being closely investigated by the powers that be.

CHICAGO GRAIN REVIEW

CHICAGO, July 19. (AP)—Top heavy under enormous speculative holdings acquired on recent steep upturns the wheat market reeled downward today. Moisture relief in Canada and predictions of a general rainfall there tonight, gave a material advantage to the selling side of the market. Final quotations were at the day's bottom level.

Wheat closed heavy, 3¼ to 4½ cents net lower, rye 5¼ to 5½ cents off, corn ⅜ to 1 cent down, oats showing ⅝ to 1⅝ cents decline, and provisions varying from 5 cents setback to a rise of 12 cents.

Only during brief intervals in early dealings did wheat prove favorable to the hosts of traders.

Announcement that the world's wheat crop was authoritatively estimated today at 12 to 13 per cent less than last year, and that the world supply including the end of the season carryover on July 1 is 10 per cent short compared with a year ago, failed to check the tumble in prices. Special notice was taken of an embargo at Galveston, where 4,000 cars of wheat are waiting on railroad tracks, with 2,000 more cars heading toward there for an outlet.

Rye, corn and oats worked lower, influenced by wheat weakness and by favorable crop reports as to corn.

RAINS HELP FEED CROPS

Dairymen Aided by Showers Over Section

Practically all feed crops in the Wichita Falls territory, and much cotton, was saved from impending failure by the heavy rains which fell Friday, according to O. K. Barnes, agricultural agent of the chamber of commerce.

Prolonged hot weather had completely exhausted soil moisture in this community where a large acreage has been given to a wide variety of feed crops in keeping with a rapid increase in dairy herds, it was said. Much cotton also had reached the point where additional moisture was requisite to further growth, according to Mr. Barnes.

Reports from the vicinity of Lake Wichita indicated that the rainfall in that community was among the heaviest received in several years.

Roads made impassable toward Archer City and Olney by the rain prevented local dairy leaders from attending the dairy development program of the Hutch-Manning Pioneer association at Newcastle Friday afternoon, it was reported.

Wheat dropped five cents in Wichita Falls Friday afternoon, offering $1.05, while cotton jumped 15 cents to make a total advance of 90 cents in the last two days. Friday's closing offer, middling basis, was 17.90 cents per pound.

MIDWESTERN LIVESTOCK

KANSAS CITY, July 19. (AP)—(U.S.D.A.)—Hog trade around the circuit was somewhat uneven, but the tone was generally improved. Prices were mostly steady at 15c higher than Thursday's average, with a few markets showing more upturn on strong weight butchers. The day's extreme top of $12.40 was paid at Chicago. Total offerings were around 59,900.

The sheep supply numbered around 32,100, an increase of 7,500 over a week ago. Fat lambs were on a steady to strong basis with the exception of the close at Chicago, where slight concessions were made. Aged stock was unchanged. Chicago scored $15.50 on a few closely sorted natives, and realized $15.15 on 10 cars of rangers.

Cattle prices registered no material change, trade at most markets being the usual Friday cleanup. Two loads of choice 1,143 pound Missouri fed steers at Kansas City made $15.60, while four loads of 1,250 pound Kansas grassers on the St. Joseph market brought $12.25. Eastern dressed beef markets are closing the week sluggish. The supply of highly finished steers and yearlings, however, is not expected to be more than sufficient to meet the demand. Feeder buyers also will probably compete with the packers for the better kinds of western grassers. Aggregate receipts were estimated at 11,900.

See the Beauties of New Mexico

Ages before the first white man came to America, a race of Indians, living in cities composed of many-storied buildings, dwelt in the Great Southwest. The clear, dry climate of New Mexico and Southern Colorado has preserved many examples of their architecture. While their cities have been abandoned for centuries, something of their art still lives in the work of Zunis, Navajos and Pueblos. Their land is now a haven for people who want to relax in mountain air and sunshine, where man and Nature have contrived unique human contrasts against a background of natural grandeur.

The Magnolia Man will be glad to furnish you with a free map giving latest highway information. With its aid you may visit these prehistoric cities and gain enjoyment from your car. It will also be helpful in planning week-end trips to natural beauty spots near you which afford happy recreation for all the family.

The full pleasure of the trip can be had by going in your car properly conditioned and kept at its best with the correct motor fuel and lubricants. The Magnolia Man near you all the way has Magnolia MAXIMUM MILEAGE Gasoline, Magnolia ANTI-KNOCK Gasoline and the right Paraffine Base MAGNOLENE MOTOR OIL, Transmission Oil or Grease to give you motoring at its best. Visit the Magnolia Man--he is friendly and helpful.

GET DEPENDABLE PRODUCTS

Magnolia MAXIMUM MILEAGE Gasoline

Magnolia ANTI-KNOCK Gasoline

Magnolene (PARAFFINE BASE) Motor Oils and Lubricants

A paraffine-base for every operating condition. Keeps the youth in moving parts. Magnolene Motor Oils seal motor compression, preserving power and fuel.

Six grades—all paraffine base. The Magnolia man knows which you should have.

NOTE: When touring in New York or New England States, use Standard Oil Company of New York SOCONY products; in Arizona, California, Oregon and Washington, use General Petroleum Corporation "General Gasoline" and "Parabase" Motor Oils. You will find the products of these affiliated companies of the same high quality as Magnolia products.

IT'S 'PEIPING'

Former Capital of China Spelled in New Way By Nationalists

WASHINGTON, July 19. (AP)—The new name of the former capital of China is spelled "Peiping" and means "northern peace."

Chinese Minister Wu has said that spelling of the city is correct by way of clearing up confusion resulting from press dispatches during the present Sino-Soviet troubles, in which the city has been called by such names as Peping, Piping, Peipin. Peiping is a revival of the name given the city by the first emperor of the Ming dynasty during the 14th century. The change from Pieking was made by the Nationalist government after it established Nanking as the capital.

"Was forced to land at Vanderhoff, B. C., due to fuel shortage owing to increased gas consumption by motor caused by heavy head winds," the message said. DEMOS BARRED IN TARIFF TALK

G. O. P. Hold Secret Sessions on Bill

WASHINGTON, July 19. (INS)—The Hawley tariff bill will be rewritten in secret by Republican members of the senate finance committee and new rates will be denied the public until the bill is completed, under plans evolved today by Senator Reed Smoot, Republican of Utah, chairman of the committee.

Having ended its open hearings and dismissed Democratic members from further participation in the revision of the house bill, the finance committee prepared to begin its rate-making behind closed doors on Monday with a consideration of the valuation question.

Many Changes Planned

As the hearings concluded there were further indications that the finance committee will propose many changes in the house bill in an effort to allay some of the bitter criticism which has been directed at "the highest tariff bill in history."

Whether the Republican members, being regulars and chiefly from high-tariff states, will carry their revision efforts farther than an effort to change the most controversial schedules, remained a matter of doubt.

Chairman Smoot, although declining to predict the rate level, announced that his proposed sliding scale on sugar contains a reduction from house rates, and Senator Watson of Indiana, Republican leader, is on record as declaring that "some rates" in the house bill are too high. Smoot also predicted that importation of Philippine sugar would not be limited.

Final jabs at the committee's policy of barring Democrats from the rate-making conferences were taken by Senators Harrison Democrat of Mississippi and Connally Democrat of Texas, as the hearings ended.

The committee's policy was defended by Chairman Smoot, who asserted that when the Democrats revised the tariff in 1913 "they did not let the Republicans even stick their noses in the door at the hearings."

Senator Reed Republican of Pennsylvania plans to raise the question of abandoning the long-used practice of basing tariff duties on the foreign value of imports and substitute the United States selling price as the basis for assessing percentage, or ad valorem, rates.

Complete Revision

Such a proposal would involve the complete revision of tariff rates in the pending bill, since the United States value is so much higher than the foreign value that rates on the same level would boost the tariff to undreamed of levels. The Pennsylvania senator has been promised a statement by the tariff commission of comparable tariff rates based on United States value.

Opposition expressed by committee members in the conclusion of hearings to the demand of independent oil producers for a tariff on foreign oil, and the plea of port authorities for the creation of free trade zones in which goods would be prepared for reshipment to foreign countries indicated that both proposals will be rejected.

With a fight being waged against the house action in taking shoes, hides and leather from the free list, it was understood that Republican chieftains are planning to revise these schedules. Although some leading members of the committee have declared in favor of a protective tariff on shoes and hides, they indicate that they are not satisfied with the ratio between the hide and shoe and leather rates.

Probe Places No Blame In Lawton Girl's Death

OKLAHOMA CITY, July 19 (UP)—The attorney general's office will not recommend filing of any charges in connection with the death early in June of Mildred Speck, near Lawton, it was determined following an investigation by W. O. Gordon, assistant attorney general. Miss Speck was killed when she fell from an automobile on the highway near Lawton, Gordon reported.

COUNTY HEADS DEBATE TAXES

Commissioners Seek To Avoid Raise

the court members explained, "and we ought to consult the people again if it looks like we'll have to raise it."

Plans Discussed

In the course of their private conference several members of the court suggested that the public building fund be eliminated for the year, that a separate bridge building fund be sliced and that the proposed increase for special road and bridge fund No. 2 should be decreased by around 5 cents. No definite action was taken. The discussion will be resumed at the regular Monday session.

Discussion during the open session Friday morning centered around a study of figure offered by Paul Barnett, county auditor, showing that two special road and bridge funds will be facing a serious deficit in 1931 unless the present apportionment is altered. Mr. Barnett, who has told the court that a 10-cent increase will be needed to meet the emergency, explained that the slicing of other funds might serve to add to those greatly in need in order to avoid putting an additional 10 cents to the present 75-cent rate.

Barnett Explains Problem

"You can reverse the procedure of the past several years," Mr. Barnett explained, "and take off from the operating and maintenance funds to add to these interest and sinking funds. As the rates on the road and bridge funds have been decreased during the past several years, those on maintenance and operation have increased in proportion. There has been only a 10-cent fluctuation in the total rate, a reduction from 80 to 75 cents. That was accomplished by cutting the former 23-cent rate for road and bridge fund No. 2 down to the present 8-cent apportionment and adding some of that money to the operating funds. If the court pleases it can make such adjustments as that.

"I do not want an increase any more than anyone else," the auditor went on. "It is just that I can see that these funds are going to have to have more money from some source."

H. H. Haynes, commissioner from the Electra precinct informally expressed the opinion that a raise would be necessary and was inclined to the belief that it would have to be as much as 10 cents.

Reduce Other Funds

"Naturally we don't want it and would like to find a way out, but it looks to me like it's going to come."

Judge Marrs and M. A. Bundy were joined in their opposition to any increase by L. L. Kuntz, representing the Iowa Park precinct. He joined T. W. McHam, county treasurer, in expressing the belief that the money needed for the funds facing a shortage could be obtained by cutting the apportionment of those which now have a surplus.

F. N. Knauth, of the Burkburnett precinct, would express no opinion Friday, although he declared himself anxious to avoid a raise if any other way out of the situation could be hit upon.

"I'm open-minded, so far," he said. "I'm not going to make up my mind finally until I've had a greater opportunity to study the situation. We want to avoid the increase if we can."

Members of the court called into conference Mr. McHam, Wayne Somerville, county attorney, Guy C. Raley, and Max Shumate, county tax assessor. The discussion grew sharp and emphatic for a few minutes when Mr. Raley described certain delinquent tax figures quoted by Judge Marrs as "untrue and unfair."

Raley-Marrs Clash

"When you want a diamond, you go to a jeweler," the collector said. "When you want tax figures why not go to the man whose business it is to collect them and to keep the delinquent rolls instead of writing to Austin or elsewhere for your figures? I can tell you what taxes haven't been collected, and I can show you the rolls I got the figures off of. Those comptroller's figures given by Judge Marrs do not allow for duplication, cancellation, and mistakes. They include figures that have been found inaccurate and much oil land the value of which has disappeared since the boom days. They are untrue and unfair."

The collector reasserted that only about $101,000 in delinquent taxes since 1885 remain uncollected on city and farm lands and about $35,000 on oil lands. He requested to be allowed to employ a man to compile the figures necessary to file suit on these properties, but the court delayed its action until the regular meeting Monday.

Wayne Somerville, county attorney, told the court that all the taxes collectable up to 1926 had been either collected or filed in the delinquent tax drive almost continuously maintained by himself and Mr. Raley and that with the help of the man they have asked to employ, the 1927 rolls can be handled in the same way.

The commissioners indicated through the morning session that they expected to postpone the actual setting of the rate until the meeting of July 29, the last legal date for the apportionment.

After the noon adjournment the court did not take up the tax matter again until just before the abrupt adjournment at the instance of Judge Marrs.

BON VOYAGE

This trip is being sponsored by Rotary International and conducted by Dr. Suen V. RAIN RAISES WATER SUPPLY

Hard-Pressed Filter Plant May Catch Up Now

The heavy rains which fell in the Wichita Falls area Thursday and Friday removed the necessity of bypassing city water without filtration to remove mud and odor, it was stated Friday by George D. Fairtrace, city manager. The water department was enabled to replenish the reserve supply of filtered water in the tank and reservoir and it will not become necessary to bypass more water until there is a repetition of the hot weather experienced here last week, Mr. Fairtrace said.

In the event that the temperature again rises to the high levels it has reached within the last 10 days, there is no doubt but that large quantities of the city water will again have to be by-passed, Mr. Fairtrace declared. About 1,000,000 gallons of water were pumped into the city mains Thursday before the rain without having been filtered, due to the inadequacy of the filtration machinery. This water was taken from the ditch, chlorinated to remove bacteria and pumped into the mains for consumption.

It was pointed out that water thus by-passed was harmless but that a peculiar odor and taste and a cloudy color due to the unremoved mud from the ditch could be noticed. The inadequate condition of the filtering machinery and the undesirability of having the water brought to the city in an open ditch was pointed out to the city council recently by Mr. Fairtrace in his annual report, when recommendations for much-needed improvements were made.

Members of the council Friday stated that there was a possibility that the question would again be brought forward at the meeting next Monday night.

Mystery Baboon Shows Up Again

DALLAS, July 19. (AP)—Little Rollo, a big baboon of unknown residence, made another of his periodic appearances here today.

This time it was wild eyed groups of boys which reported that Rollo pounced into the middle of their marble ring and broke up the game.

For months, according to the reports—unvarying as to description—the baboon has skulked about the Trinity river bottoms. After each public call he presumably retires to his dark recess.

Officials of local zoos long ago have checked their membership and reported nothing missing so it is assumed little Rollo is not of the garden variety.

198 YEARS FOR LOYD DAVIDSON

Slayer of Parents Given Second 99-Year Term

CORSICANA, Texas, July 19. (AP)—One hundred and ninety-eight years in the penitentiary faced Lloyd Davidson, convicted by a jury here today on a charge of slaying his father.

The jury here added 99 years more to a like sentence returned at Groesbeck, where the defendant was convicted of killing his stepmother. The case in connection with the elder Davidson's death was brought here on a change of venue.

Davidson was arrested after the bodies of his father and stepmother were found in the ruins of their farm home near Cooledge. Clues unraveled at the scene indicated that the couple had been slain and their home burned to conceal the crime.

Judge Refuses Retrial Of Cafe Damage Suit

Judge P. A. Martin Friday morning overruled a motion for a new trial argued for F. P. Bransford against W. E. Mahaney in a $25,000 damage suit which resulted in a verdict for the defendant in a trial here last week. Bransford is seeking damages for injuries alleged to have been suffered after the consumption of a green pepper in a local cafeteria.

In the arguments for a new trial, attorneys for Bransford abandoned the plea that the verdict, brought in by 11 jurors, had not been properly signed and based their argument on technical legal points and the assertion that the verdict was not justified by the evidence. Notice of appeal to the court of civil appeals was given.
