By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.

Editor-In-Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

LONDON — This weekend while you, presumably, are celebrating the Fourth of July, marking our independence from English rule, I'm over here in the historic capital city of London doing the same thing.

To be more explicit, my wife, Austine, and friend and cohort Joe Kingsbury Smith, accepted the invitation (handed us at the hotel desk when we arrived Wednesday night) of U.S. Ambassador Kingman Brewster to join in the annual open house reception at his official residence, Winfield House, on the Fourth.

The occasion reminded me that England actually had a revolution and, for a short time, a Republic before we did.

To refresh my memory, I went back to the history book and what I found might interest you as it did me.

Those of you who remember reading about "1066 and all that" will recall that in that year William the Conqueror, a Frenchman, conquered the British Isles at the Battle of Hastings.

A couple of centuries later, Anglo-

Norman Nobles forced King John to sign the Magna Carta, which established the rule of law and trial by jury.

In the 16th century the establishment of what became a powerful Tudor monarchy led to long periods of domestic peace in which a distinct English civilization flourished.

Religious independence was secured when the Church of England separated from the authority of the pope in 1534.

At the beginning of the 17th century, Scotland was united with England when Stuart kings led to a bloody civil war and the establishment of a republic under the puritan, Oliver Crom-

Midlanders find ways to 'beat the heat'

Ice sales boom, but dryland farmers hope for rain soon

By SUSAN BAKER
Staff Writer

Temperatures in the upper 90s may not seem like sweet relief to residents of some areas.

But after several weeks of record highs that have shoved the mercury consistently above the century mark with hardly a trace of rain, Midlanders are welcoming the "cooler" temperatures this weekend.

The heat wave, which began to build momentum around the first part of June, hit its peak around the 17th. From that day until the end of the month, the National Weather Service recorded only two days with temperatures lower than 100.

A high of 106 on June 27 set a new record for that day, with the previous record set at 105 in 1945.

The last measurable rainfall fell back on June 8, measuring a total of 1.3 inches.

And what are Midlanders doing to beat the heat? Well, ice has been a hot item, and many have found that a swimming pool is the best way to cool off in a hurry.

Business is about twice as good as it usually is for this time of year for the ice business, according to Ben Hendricks of the Tall City Ice Co.

"We've sold just about twice as much ice this year as this time last year," he said, attributing the jump to the sizzling weather. Hendricks said there has been a real shortage of chopped ice commonly sold in plastic sacks at grocery stores and drive-ins.

metown folks were there to welcome their native son — home for the first time in nearly a year.

"Welcome home, Mr. Jimmy," said one of the first people he greeted in the roped-off paddock where local residents gathered.

Crowds greet the president practically every time he steps off an aircraft, but this crowd had familiar faces. Carter called people by their first names, kissed the women young and old, dutifully asked after many mothers and expressed concern for sick relatives.

Then, eschewing the waiting motorcade, he put out his hand for his wife, who had been working the crowd behind him, and set out across a fallow peanut field toward his home about 200 yards away.

"I don't know why they couldn't land a little closer to the house," Carter groused, as his wife Rosalynn, in fancy dress and high heels, lept deftly over mounds of barren red clay that harbor the infamous biting fire ant.

Walking across a field is okay in the daytime, she said to no one in particular, but she had no hankering to do it at night. The president said he was glad to be home for a few days' rest before flying off again on Tuesday, first to Detroit for a meeting with automakers and union leaders, then to Tokyo to memorialize the late Japanese Prime Minister Masayoshi Ohira.

Carter reportedly plans to do some fishing while here, but his younger brother Billy said it's been too hot to fish in recent days, and a Carter brother-in-law reportedly told the president, "They won't even bite for you, Jimmy."

The temperature was in the mid-90s in Plains Saturday morning, and there was no sign of rain.

Carter, a notoriously early riser, waited until after 11 a.m. Saturday to begin his ritual walk through town.

Midland man killed when car strikes him and parked cars

A 19-year-old Midland man was dead on arrival at Midland Memorial Hospital late Friday night after a car apparently ran off the road, striking him and two parked cars.

According to police reports, Robert Leonard Swanson Jr., 19, of 1210 Country Club Drive, was standing in a bar ditch at North A Street and Solomon Lane. Two cars, one belonging to Swanson and another belonging to John Blake Feldt of 1605 Gulf Ave., were parked nearby on the side of the road on North A.

The investigating officer said a car driven by Casey Neal Bowman, 22, of 100 Ridgeline Drive was traveling along A Street when the car ran off the road and struck the parked vehicles. Swanson apparently was hit at the same time Bowman's car collided with Swanson's vehicle.

Swanson received severe injuries to the back of his head. He died in the ambulance en route to the hospital.

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — Two giant U.S. Air Force transports carrying 12 howitzers and 350 assault rifles touched down here Saturday at the start of an emergency four-day airlift designed to protect Thailand from thousands of Vietnamese troops stationed along the Thai-Cambodian border.

President Carter last week ordered the immediate delivery of $3.5 million in military hardware to the pro-Western government following a Vietnamese attack into Thailand June 23 and subsequent skirmishes between troops from the two countries.

A U.S. Embassy spokesman here called the airlift "tangible evidence of U.S. concern for Thailand's security."

The Soviet Union, Vietnam's chief sponsor, said the arms deliveries would aggravate tensions in the area.

China, meanwhile, delivered a protest note to the Vietnamese Embassy in Peking accusing Vietnam of incessant provocations along their border, intensifying aggression in Cambodia and staging an incursion into Thailand. China earlier warned Vietnam it faced "grave danger" if it did not halt its "military adventures" in Thailand.

The U.S. airlift will provide the Thais with a total of 18 new 105mm howitzers, 1,000 M-16 rifles, 38 106mm recoilless rifles and ammunition. The M-16 is the standard weapon of the Thai infantryman.

The Thais are paying for the weaponry, the rest of which will be delivered in four flights Sunday through Tuesday, but the United States will cover the $1 million cost of the airlift.

Gen. Serm Na Nakhorn, the Thai armed forces supreme commander, praised the airlift and said the weapons would be used to ward off external threats and "maintain our sovereignty." A senior Thai military source said the supplies would be sent to the Thai-Cambodian border after being inspected in Bangkok.

Thai prime minister, Gen. Prem Tinsulanonda, helicoptered to the border Saturday to inspect Thai troops and told them to "protect the fatherland."

The Vietnamese attacked Thailand two weeks ago in an apparent effort to drive anti-government Cambodian guerrillas out of bases along the frontier.

Vietnam has withdrawn its forces from Thai soil, but fighting is reported continuing inside Cambodia between Vietnamese forces and guerrillas loyal to deposed Cambodian Premier Pol Pot, who was ousted in the Vietnamese invasion of Cambodia 18 months ago. A Vietnamese-backed government now rules Cambodia.

Relief agency sources said Saturday major international aid agencies, including the International Red Cross and UNICEF, may soon cut off relief shipments to border areas controlled by Pol Pot's guerrillas.

Arms airlift will aggravate tensions, Soviets assert

MOSCOW (AP) — The official Soviet news agency Tass declared Saturday the U.S. airlift of weapons to Thailand will aggravate tensions in southeast Asia.

The commentary said the "hurried additional arming of the Thai army" came under a "Washington-inspired pretext" of a military threat to Thailand, and it added:

"One has to admit that Thailand, deplorably enough, took the Washington bait and played the leading role in the U.S.-staged production causing armed incidents on the border with neighboring Cambodia from June 23-26."

Thailand and Western reporters along the Thai-Cambodian border said fighting started after Vietnamese forces crossed the Thai border June 23.

Fighting along the border, Tass also said, is "destined to impede a growing understanding" by the five anti-communist ASEAN countries that cooperation with Vietnam, Cambodia and Laos is essential.

Tass also said the ASEAN countries — Thailand, Malaysia, Singapore, Philippines, and Indonesia — "are unwilling to reconcile with the establishment of a popular regime in Cambodia and are hateful of socialist Vietnam."

The commentary signed by Nikolai Novikov also said Cambodia offered more than one month ago to start immediate talks with the Bangkok government at any level and that Bangkok was to blame for the "aggravation of the situation" under a scheme carried out by Washington and Peking to oppose a "healthier climate" in Southeast Asia.

"Bangkok turned down this important peace initiative like other similar proposals by the People's Republic of Cambodia," Tass said.

Alamo Pool has been averaging around 300 swimmers daily, according to a pool spokesman. "One day, when it was 105 outside, we had about 850 swimmers," he said. "That's barely enough room to stand up and splash around a little."

Surprisingly, sales for one well-known thirst quencher — beer — have not been as plentiful as one would think. "If anything, our business has slowed somewhat," said Vance Lebkowski of Parker's Package Store.

"Hot weather can slow down sales just like any other type of bad weather can — keeps people home."

He said sales are normally up for the Fourth of July anyway, regard-

Heat death toll climbs to 137

By The Associated Press

The death toll from the 13-day heat wave in the South and Southwest climbed to 137.

Officials in Texas said heat-related deaths seemed to be abating, and medical examiners reported no heat deaths linked to outdoor Fourth of July activities. The latest victims were like most of the others — elderly people in homes without air conditioning.

Dallas broke its 13th consecutive daily temperature record with a 103-degree reading, while Wichita Falls hit a record-breaking 106 degrees. Galveston was the state's cool spot, with a 90-degree reading.

Alabama reported its first apparently heat-related death when the body of Elijah Frank Gibson, 59, of Columbiana was found slumped over the steering wheel of his car on Saturday.

Chilton County Coroner Jimmy Martin said Gibson apparently pulled off the road near Clanton and fell asleep with the windows rolled up. He said the cause of death was suffocation due to the extremely hot temperatures — which he estimated at between 120 and 130 degrees — in the car. The temperature outside was about 95.

San Angelo crash claims two Midland children

SAN ANGELO — A 5-year-old and 7-year-old, both of Midland, are dead after the car in which they were riding burst into flames in a collision near here Friday night. Four others were injured.

Cathy Ann Cockerham, 5, was burned to death before she could be rescued from the blazing vehicle. She was pronounced dead at the scene by Tom Green County Peace Justice Ruth Nicholson. Her brother, Christopher Plangerelle, 7, died later at Parkland Memorial Hospital in Dallas, where he had been airlifted. The child had suffered burns over 85 percent of his body.

Department of Public Safety spokesmen said the accident occurred at 10:20 p.m. Friday 4.9 miles north of San Angelo on U.S. Highway 87.

Two vehicles were involved in the collision. One was driven by Billy Don Hill Jr., 22, of Carlsbad, Texas. The other was driven by Katherine Vance, also of Midland and grandmother of Cathy Ann Cockerham and Christopher Plangerelle.

The spokesman said the Vance vehicle pulled on to U.S. 87 from a service station. They had traveled 536 feet from the intersection when they were involved in a collision with Hill's vehicle. DPS officers said Hill had been travelling at a high rate of speed.

The Vance vehicle skidded 218 feet after impact, overturned and burst into flames. Hill's pickup overturned on impact and skidded 600 feet on its roof.

Hill was admitted to Shannon Memorial Hospital and was listed in good condition Saturday night with cuts and bruises.

Katherine Vance, 38, of Star Route B, Box 2, was treated for a broken wrist and released from Shannon Memorial. Wendy Warren, 19, Lexington Apartments No. 258, was treated for burns and released. Ms. Warren, Katherine Vance's daughter-in-law, was a passenger in the Vance vehicle. Also injured was Brian Warren, 18 months, son of Wendy Warren. The infant was treated and released.

The accident was investigated by DPS troopers from San Angelo.

Weather kept Green in extension work

By BILL MODISSETT
Staff Writer

Charlie Green really didn't intend to stay in extension work.

But as fate would have it, the unpredictable Texas weather had a little to say about his decision-making. A lot of Midland County residents are pretty fortunate it worked out that way.

The product of a stock farm environment in Coleman County, Green was active in Future Farmers of America (FFA) and 4-H programs through school, and then attended Texas A&M University.

He received his bachelor of science degree in 1949. At first Green thought of going into farming himself — getting into the production end of agriculture. But such a move took money — money he didn't have.

So, Green decided, he'd get into agriculture extension work, stay a few years in that and then go into farming.

THAT'S WHERE FATE entered the picture.

Green came to the Midland-Odesa area and was assigned temporarily to the area encompassing Ector, Crane and Andrews counties. But after two months in an assistant's position, three or four county agents retired and Green found himself recommended for and appointed to the county agent's post in Midland County.

Along came the seven-year drought, from 1951 until 1957, and Green was stuck in a situation he now views as not unpleasant.

It was 31 years ago come Aug. 1 that the county agent, strengthened and tanned by his years in agriculture, got into his present line of work and he doesn't mind telling you he likes what he does. He doesn't intend to change.

"I've had some opportunities to transfer or go into other lines of work," smiles Green. "But I always liked what I did so I chose to stay here."

Green probably likes what he does so much partly because of his philosophy about work. "Anybody who asks for help, I try to give help wherever I can," Green says.

Is big bad in terms of farming? Green answers that question with another. "What's too big?" But though farms are getting larger, he doesn't foresee the advent of corporate farms. They simply won't work, Green opines.

"I really don't think a corporate farm's got much of a chance, people punching the clock from eight 'til five and taking off on weekends," Green shakes his head. "That won't work on the farm."

All-in-all Green sees a bright future for American agriculture and agriculture in Midland County despite the current economic hardships.

Perhaps federal loan programs will be needed to help young farmers get a start, he speculated. But that raises the spectre of too much government interference. Green isn't afraid of too much interference, though. Farmers, he says, will always need federal assistance to protect them from disasters and so forth.

"Of course, the farmer without a little bit of government help is really in a pretty precarious situation," he noted.

Despite all the changes, Green is happy with his lot in life. He's satisfied from the years of helping others. "You have to get some satisfaction because you don't get rich," Green laughed.

show explosion

ANTIOCH, Calif. (AP) — An explosion after a Fourth of July fireworks show triggered a stampede in a crowd of 8,000 people, sending at least nine of them to hospitals, officials said Saturday.

The blast, which sheriff's deputies said was caused either by fireworks brought by spectators or a stray from the show, occurred Friday at the Contra Costa County fairgrounds.

Seven persons were treated at Kaiser Memorial Hospital in Martinez for burns, cuts and bruises from the "crowd press," said hospital supervisor Linda Graham.

Two people were treated for minor injuries at Delta Memorial Hospital in Antioch, and several others complained of ear problems from the explosion, officials said.

"The show was over and I was just driving away when I heard a loud boom," said ambulance driver Ronald Remington.

Detroit trying to settle strike before convention

DETROIT (AP) — Negotiators meeting nine days before the Republican National Convention reported some progress Saturday toward ending a strike by 9,000 municipal employees that has halted all bus service and most garbage pickups in the city.

Marathon bargaining in the five-day walkout produced agreement on some non-economic issues, but at least 30 supplemental issues remained unresolved, said Mark Ulicny, the chief city negotiator.

Robert Carter, the GOP convention manager, said preparations for the July 14 convention were continuing without disruption and predicted the walkout would end before the major influx of an expected 20,000 people begins next weekend.

"The strike is having no effect whatsoever on convention preparations," he said. "I don't think it will — and I'm not going to guess."

Republican National Committee members and staff began arriving in Detroit on Thursday, and Carter said the 108 members of the platform committee would begin arriving Sunday. The convention platform debate opens Monday.

Pickets from striking Council 25 of the American Federation of State County and Municipal Employees withdrew Saturday from outside the Joe Louis Convention Arena. Most construction at the center was privately contracted, said GOP spokesman James Caudill.

Since the strike began Tuesday, garbage has been piling up at an estimated rate of 5 million pounds a day.

Public Works supervisors protected by police in the nation's sixth largest city relocated bins outside five city dumps where 1.3 million Detroiters were asked to take their refuse. Private contractors could be seen clearing some downtown garbage, but city officials refused comment.

Around-the-clock bargaining began at 11:30 p.m. Friday with Ulicny predicting "a very, very long session." Talks broke off at 3:15 a.m. Saturday to allow the two sides to caucus separately.

less of the weather. Refrigerated air conditioning sales are normally high for this time of year, anyway, said Gene Lamb of the Weather Mart. "But we have been having a lot of service calls to fix broken compressors that are overworked in the heat."

Rain is one commodity that Midland farmers would prefer to see in better supply. However, Midland is not suffering quite as much from the near-drought conditions as other areas in Texas, where farmers are taking losses in both crops and livestock that may necessitate breaking out the federal disaster funds.

Although conditions are dry, said Midland cotton farmer Vernon Chandler, groundwater that has accumulated underneath his crops has been sufficient enough so far. "Cotton has a really deep tap root, and can go pretty far down to get at the water," he said.

However, several more days without rain could take its toll, he said. "The dryland cotton is what we'd be worried about. The rain is the only moisture it gets. I can just water my irrigated cotton all I need to."

"The worst effect we've had from the weather is not the lack of rain, but the heat. Sometimes the sun can really burn the leaves right after we water," Chandler said.

He speculated that areas of the county that had not had as much rainfall the past month could be hurting more for moisture. "Pasture and grazing land is probably suffering the most from the heat," he said.

But weather in general, not just the hot spell, has not been good this year to John Crosby's Michael-Brandon Vineyards.

"Weather has affected us very badly this year," he said. "First, a freeze in March did a lot of damage, killing a bunch of buds. Then it froze again in April, killing a bunch more."

"But the big hailstorm in May is what really ruined us," Crosby said. He said that of the 30 to 35 tons of grapes he had expected from this year's crop, only about a ton and a half are left.

"If we had been able to save the whole crop, this heat would have made it a bad year anyway. Too much hot weather causes grapes to ripen sooner — they get too sweet and lose a lot of their acid quality," he said. When this occurs, grapes are no longer acceptable for wine-making.

The lack of rain has not seriously affected the grape crop, though. "We water on a drip irrigation system, so it's really better that it doesn't rain," said Crosby.

50,000 attend Willie's last picnic

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Scantily-clad, beer-guzzling country music lovers endured 99-degree temperatures Friday afternoon to bring down the curtain on Willie Nelson's annual Fourth of July picnics.

Authorities estimated 50,000 fans jammed the rolling fairways of Nelson's Pedernales Country Club west of here for the popular singer's 8th and final July 4 shindig.

"We had about 40,000 paid admissions and maybe another 10,000 unpaid," said promoter David Anderson.

The gates were opened at dark to admit those who hadn't bought tickets.

Young contends that each 1 percent raise could cost 150 city jobs as officials grapple with a $70 million deficit in the $1.49 billion fiscal 1980 budget.

Forecast like broken record

If it weren't for the changing days, the forecast might well be a broken record — continued hot...continued hot...continued hot.

Today's forecast calls for continued hot afternoons through Monday with highs in the upper 90s. The overnight low should be in the lower 70s. Winds today should be southeasterly at 10 to 15 mph.

Saturday's high was 96 degrees, way short of the record high of 104 set in 1971. The record low for today is 57 degrees set in 1931. Saturday's low was 71 degrees.

Iranian women protest regulations on clothing

By The Associated Press

About 2,000 women wearing black mourning dresses demonstrated Saturday outside the Tehran offices of Iranian President Abolhassan Bani-Sadr to protest new regulations requiring government employees to wear traditional Islamic clothing on the job. Bani-Sadr later promised to review the regulations.

The protesters dispersed after the Iranian leader grabbed a loudspeaker and told them: "For the time being, there is not going to be any action against anybody concerning dresses or covers because in our religious teaching, there is no such thing as imposing an idea on someone who doesn't want it." But the protesters vowed to return Monday.

Under the new regulations, woman civil servants would be required to cover their heads with a veil and wear a long garment known as a chador.

The new clothing restrictions were part of a 16-point manifesto issued last week that also demanded the purging from government posts of people described as counter-revolutionaries and the dissolution of the country's two biggest left-wing groups. The manifesto apparently was officially sponsored.

More than 500,000 people marched through Tehran on Friday in a show of support for the manifesto and for Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini, the nation's revolutionary leader who is trying to incorporate Islamic principles into every-day Iranian life.

The women's demonstration Saturday sparked a counter-demonstration by a few hundred men who condemned the protesters as "agents of America and the shah."

Bani-Sadr has come under increasing criticism from Khomeini in recent weeks, as religious elements in the revolutionary government press for greater Islamic reform in the country.

Khomeini's son, Ahmad, also conferred Saturday with Bani-Sadr about the clothing dispute and said they both agreed woman civil servants should make sure their dress does not offend public chastity.

Mohamad Hassan Pierhosseni, a top aide to the president, said: "In no way, do we want to impose any kind of clothes (regulations) on women, but it should be well understood there must be a standard of clothing that must be observed in the government offices. If someone does not observe this standard, it should be regarded as violation of ordinary norm of work. It can result dismissal of the employee."

Bani-Sadr met with three of the protesters for three hours before promising a review. The women described the meeting as a "frank discussion." There was violence last year when the government tried to impose a similar regulation.

In other developments:
—Presidential press adviser Ali

Masavi Garmaoui claimed Agence France-Presse, the French news agency, distorted an interview with Bani-Sadr last week and requested that Iran's public prosecutor close the AFP office in Tehran, Iranian radio broadcasts reported. The Tehran bureau of The Associated Press was closed by the government earlier this year.

Oil Minister Ali Akbar Moinefar said if the Soviet Union deals with Iran as an equal partner "we will open the shut-down gas valves to the Soviet Union." The shah and the Kremlin had reached agreement for the Soviets to buy Iranian gas and then sell it to Eastern Europe, but the revolutionary government cut off the supply to the Kremlin in a price dispute.

Moinefar also was quoted by Tehran Radio as saying "the sale of oil this month has increased by 25 percent," forcing an increase in production to over 2 million barrels per day. Production in pre-revolutionary Iran averaged 6 million barrels of oil per day.

—Tehran Radio quoted the public prosecutor's office in the Iranian city of Tabriz as saying the uncle of former Empress Farah Diba, the wife of ex-Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi, was being put on trial because he "misused his position and influence under the satanic system and forcibly usurped land belonging to farmers and a number of villages."

legislation, including social security, old age pensions, unemployment compensation and federally-funded health insurance.

This habit of following the British is thought-provoking because at present the United Kingdom is ruled by two ladies — the queen and Mrs. Thatcher. While I think it too late and, for other reasons as well, highly unlikely that we will elect a lady president this year, to me the thought that it may eventually happen is interesting. How about you?

my opinion for the close "special" relationship that has existed between our two countries for so long. History does not record a similar relationship between two great nations.

Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, a most pro-American allied leader in Europe today, told a group of U.S. correspondents last week that she thinks the language and historical relations between our two countries is what makes the British feel so close to us.

To conclude, it occurs to me that we have seemed to follow in many ways political and social changes wrought earlier by Britain. Magna Carta, stretching a point a bit, can be compared to our constitution in that it was, I believe, the first written delineation of powers between the king and his subjects. Then in 1689 came their bill of rights, our's didn't come until more than 100 years later.

One thing we didn't copy was a national religion. We went out of our way to separate church and state in our constitution. However, we trailed in this present century in all the social engens down there right now trying to pick up several thousand dollars worth of empty aluminum beer cans," he said.

There were no real security problems, Simpson added, saying the crowd was similar to that at a football game — just out for a good time.

"They're like cattle, all you've got to do is herd them in the right direction and they'll go," he said.

Another problem in addition to the heat was the over-consumption of beer to compensate for it.

"We'd get a report of a body and it would turn out to be just another drunk sleeping under a tree," Sgt. Tom Blackwell of the Travis County Sheriff's Department said.

One observer said it looked like a beer bust at a refugee camp.

The fans were jammed tightly together onto the rocky, rolling fairway of the country club. Greens were fenced off to protect the grass.

It was Nelson's 8th Independence Day extravaganza. And he said at the outset it was his last.

"It's time-consuming," Nelson said. "They've been a lot of fun — but a lot of work."

The picnics, which had become a Texas tradition, were originally designed to spread Nelson's "outlaw" style of country music.

That goal was successful and Nelson developed other interests.

He introduced a line of blue jeans and his first starring motion picture, "Honeysuckle Rose," premiered here Thursday night.

"Being a movie star sure beats working," Willie laughed while talking to reporters Friday morning, his diamond-studded Lone Star earring sparkling as he moved his head.

London police executive visits 'Land of High Sky'

By KAY CRITES
Staff Writer

Midland, with its hot temperatures and bright sun, is quite a change from cloudy, rainy London, as Metropolitan Police Superintendent Francis J. Hickman-Smith discovered this past week.

Hickman-Smith stopped in Midland during a tour of the U.S. to visit some old friends, Mr. and Mrs. Leslie Hinds. The Hinds stayed with the Hickman-Smiths in 1978 during a Rotary International exchange program.

"It's great to be in 'The Land of the High Sky,'" he joked. "The Land of the High Sky" is a book on Texas commissioned by The First National Bank when they first moved into their multi-story tower. Hinds gave a copy to Hickman-Smith when the Hinds were in London.

The superintendent is taking a vacation, prior to retiring to Australia in August, after 32 years with the Metropolitan Police.

Currently, he is assistant division commander of the busiest district in London.

It's located in the northwest part of the city, covers 6 1/2 to 7 square miles, includes three police stations and has a population of about 172,000.

"We have a very big immigration population. The Kilburn Police Station alone deals with one customer every hour of every day, 365 days a year. This includes drunks through people who have committed robberies, thefts, auto crimes and the whole range of duties police are called on to deal with, I suppose," said Hickman-Smith.

He explained that the biggest problem in policing the city is that it has become the seat of the government, center for world tourism and the center for trade in Europe.

"All other police forces have the same problems, but they're not as concentrated as in London."

Hickman-Smith has seen a lot of changes in his 32 years with the London police force.

The city has grown tremendously. Capital punishment has been abolished. Even the uniforms have changed.

"I've seen the change from policemen carrying evaporative torches and wearing Salvation Army-type uniforms to policemen today carrying their own personal radios with direct links to Scotland Yard. Effectively, every subdivision has its own radio network.

"I can remember back in the '40s and '50s when people were still hanged, and sitting in a cell with someone who had been sentenced to hang."

Capital punishment was abolished in England about four years ago.

"Whether this is a good thing or a bad thing is difficult to say."

Before moving to London, Hickman-Smith spent two years in the Palestine Police in what is now known as Israel. "I was there during the birth of the nation I suppose you could say."

While in Midland, Hickman-Smith gave a brief talk to the Midland Downtown Rotary Club. The superintendent is a founding member of the Northwick Park Rotary Club in London.

The club sits in the "shadows of Harrow School," which boasts such famous alumni as Winston Churchill. "It's reputed to be the principal public school in England," Hickman-Smith said.

Pedestrian hurt

Jacqueline Smith, 2405 Kentucky Ave., was listed in satisfactory condition in Midland Memorial Hospital Saturday night after being involved in a car-pedestrian accident early Saturday morning.

Police reports said Wilbert Dukes, 21, 3307 W. Front St., made a left turn on to Wall Avenue and was traveling east when he struck a pedestrian crossing the street in the 3700 block of West Wall.

Ms. Smith was taken to Midland Memorial Hospital emergency room by ambulance and later admitted.

Football coach top cherry pit-spitter

EAU CLAIRE, Mich. (AP) — An Eau Claire football coach spit his way to a new world cherry pit-spitting record Saturday with a 65-foot, 2-inch effort.

The winner, Rick Krause, 26, was one of 200 contestants to enter the seventh annual world championship at a 600-acre cherry farm in this southwestern Michigan town. His winning spit broke the 58-foot record set last year by George "Shotgun" Nadenik, of Northbrook, Ill., who finished fourth this year with a 40-foot spit.

"It (pit spitting) seemed kind of dumb at first," Krause said. "But then I happened to be picking some cherries, tried it and got a couple good spits off."

Krause said he practiced his "pellet gun" technique for three weeks. The trick, he said, is holding your tongue between your lips and teeth, balancing the pit behind your teeth and inhaling deeply through your nose to spit.

First prize was a one-year deed entitling Krause to all the cherries that grow on a tree at the Tree-Mendus Fruit Farm, the contest's sponsor. Krause will also have his name listed in the Guinness Book of World Records, tournament spokeswoman Pat Field said.

Jim Kosing of Des Plaines, Ill., finished second with a spit of 42 feet. For his prize, Kosing was allowed to take home all the cherries he could pick from a tree of his choice by sundown, Ms. Field said.

Third-place finisher Jim Burkhart, of Antioch, Ill., won a bucket of cherry pits, presumably so he can practice for next year, with his spit of just over 41 feet.

One of the unsuccessful spitters was Jos Naylor, a 42-year-old English shepherd who won the world's biggest liar title in Egremont, England, last November.

Although he failed to spit his way into the finals, Naylor did manage to win the Cherry Canter, a 6.2-mile run through the orchard. Naylor recently received an award from British Queen Elizabeth for his long-distance runs for charity, Ms. Field said.

A record crowd of 1,000 witnessed the contest.

Drought builds many problems during summer

By CHARLES W. GREEN
Midland County Extension Agent — Agriculture

Hot weather continued to place stress on pastures, field crops, gardens and landscapes in the Midland area last week. Irrigation wells are being pressed into service where available, but dryland crops will have to wait for rainfall, which will be needed soon to prevent damage to yield prospects.

THE HERBICIDE ROUNDUP has recently been officially labeled as approved for control of weeds in cotton in rope wick, roller and other siper applicators. A number of Midland growers made trial applications of Roundup for control of Johnson grass in cotton last season. In most cases control was 50 percent or better, but even where root kill was less, the technique is so economical that it merits continued use.

Our estimate is that three years of use of the herbicide should essentially eliminate the pesky perennial. The label on Roundup indicates that redroot pigweed, giant ragweed, sunflower, hemp dogbane, milkweed and silverleaf nightshade can be controlled with a wick or wiper, with one gallon of Roundup mixed with two gallons of water.

Extension demonstrations have shown that a 1:3 ratio is just about as good for Johnson grass. Some hints on insuring best results: (1) Front mowing of wipers, (2) Operating speeds of less than 5 m.p.h. (2 to 3 m.p.h. in dense weeds), (3) Make a second application in the opposite direction in moderate to severe infestations, and (4) Avoid wiping wet weeds.

SUMMER USUALLY MEANS hot weather in West Texas, and this one certainly lives up to that billing. This can lead to lawn problems — drought, stress, weeds, insects and diseases.

Lawn problems can be headaches for homeowners unless the problems are accurately diagnosed and properly treated before they become severe.

Dry spots, thin turf and weeds can result from improper watering, fertilizing and mowing practices. Before automatically applying a chemical to correct lawn problems, be sure that recommended cultural practices are followed.

Drought stress shows up as wilted, discolored turf. Watering schedules should be adjusted to wet sandy soils to a depth of 8 to 12 inches as often as necessary to keep grass from showing symptoms of moisture stress. This may require one to one and one-half inches of moisture twice a week. Mowing heights might also be raised to improve drought tolerance under high temperatures.

Lack of nitrogen or iron often creates a lawn problem. Grass with a nitrogen deficiency may have a pale color and be heavily infested with weeds. Abundant seedheads are another symptom of nitrogen deficiency. A light application of nitrogen fertilizer will improve the lawn's appearance. But keep it light. Five pounds of 21-0-0 per 1,000 square feet of lawn area is plenty.

Grass leaves that have yellow stripes parallel to the leaf margins may be deficient in iron. An application of iron sulfate or iron chelate at four- to six-week intervals will usually correct this deficiency.

JULY WILL BE CRITICAL for control of white grubs. If the turf does not respond to irrigation and fertilizer, inspect the lawn for this insect pest.

To check a lawn for white grubs, use a shovel or cutting tool and cut one-square-foot sections (two per 1,000 square feet) to a depth of four inches. To reduce damage to grass, make cuts only on three sides of the square foot of sod. Use the uncut side as a hinge to roll the cut sod back. Closely examine the upper two inches of soil for the presence of small white grubs. Chemical treatments should be applied when four or more grubs (less than one-half inch in size) per square foot of sod are found.

If grubworms are found, the following procedures should be carried out: (1) Mow the lawn, (2) Remove all grass clippings, and (3) Irrigate. Use either diazinon or dursban insecticide for grub control.

LAWNS TREATED with liquid formulations of the above should be sprayed immediately after the lawn irrigation. Apply the recommended dosage rate of liquid insecticide in 30 to 40 gallons of water per 1,000 square feet of lawn. Lightly irrigate (one-fourth inch) the sprayed lawn immediately after treatment before the spray dries on the grass. The high volume of spray water and light irrigation after spraying are needed to move the insecticide into the soil where the grubs are feeding.

When using granular insecticides, apply the granules evenly over the entire lawn after the grass is dry from the irrigation prior to treatment. Follow instructions on the label of the insecticide container for treatment rates. Rake the grass with a grass rake or drag a water hose across after application to move the granules down near the soil surface. Then apply at least one-half inch of irrigation water to dissolve the granules and move the insecticide into the soil.

New credit card fraud cropping up

By RANDOLPH E. SCHMID

WASHINGTON (AP) — A new version of credit card fraud is becoming popular around the country.

In the con, callers try to get people to give out their credit card numbers, as these numbers can then be used to charge items against the individual's account without that person's knowledge — until the bill comes.

The Washington Post reported that a common ploy is to tell people they have won a contest and ask for a Visa or MasterCard number to verify their identity. Faced with the possibility of a prize, many people are happy to give out the number, the Post said.

Because tighter credit has limited the availability of cards, they are more valuable now to crooks. Once these people have a card number, they can order merchandise, have it delivered to a temporary address, and then sell it for cash.

Banks have begun warning their customers not to give out credit card numbers to unsolicited callers and some are reportedly considering refusing to replace cards for people who lose them or give out the number more than once.

That is because the banks suffer the primary loss in these schemes. Cardholders are responsible for only the first $50 of fraud on a stolen number and the banks absorb the rest of the loss.

FARM-RANCH REPORT

Future farmers
meet in Houston

HOUSTON — More than 6,000 Future Farmers of America members and guests will meet in Houston's Astroarena Wednesday, Thursday and Friday for the 52nd annual convention of the Texas Association of FFA.

Highlighting the three-day meet, which will be keyed to the theme "Preparing for Progress," will be the presentation of more than $321,000 in college scholarships, the election of state FFA officers and the state FFA sweetheart, and the keynote address by former Texas Gov. John Connally.

Outstanding FFA members will be recognized for their achievements in supervised farming and in agribusiness education programs.

More than 900 FFA chapters are in Texas. The FFA is made up of public school students studying vocational agriculture in preparation for careers in agriculture.

Rodent control suggestions

ABILENE — The invasion of wildlife, including rodents, into the home and urban areas can be controlled, says Kay Cass, wildlife damage control specialist with the Texas Rodent and Predatory Animal Control Service.

Ms. Cass offered 10 suggestions for control of rats:

—Garbage should be stored in steel cans, which should be fitted with disposable plastic liners.

—Food appealing to rats should be stored in metal or glass containers. Avoid plastic containers.

—Dogs should be fed each morning, and all scraps of leftovers should be cleaned up. Sacks of dry pet food should be kept in steel cans, which should be fitted with tight lids.

—Bird feeders should be on tall poles and away from trees. Hanging feeders should be taken in at night and covered with a metal lid.

—Do not feed any animals or birds in your yard, as rats ultimately will get the food most of the time.

—When possible, holes, pipe openings and gnawing spots should be patched or covered with galvanized metal or hardware cloth.

—Lumber or wood piles should be on a rack 12 to 18 inches off the ground.

—Junk appliances and cars should be eliminated, as they are prime nesting places for rats.

—If rats are heard or suspected in the attic, all holes and vents should be covered with hardware cloth. Check electrical wire insulation for gnawing.

—Large numbers of rats cannot exist without a steady food supply. And the rodents won't stick around any place if a food supply is not available. Basic rules to get rid of rats are (1) cut off the rats' food supply, (2) cut off the rats' water supply, (3) destroy or alter the rodents' home, and (4) bait or trap intelligently.

Seed law hearings slated

AUSTIN — A public hearing on proposed changes in the regulations of the Texas seed law will be held here at 10 a.m. on July 22, according to Texas Agriculture Commissioner Reagan V. Brown.

Those wishing to testify are invited to attend the meeting in Room 1046 of the Stephen F. Austin Building.

Proposed amendments to the Texas seed regulations concern noxious weed seeds and Common Giant Mustard. Another proposed change is an increase in fees.

"This increase is necessary because of rising costs of operation," Brown said. "We are far below the charges of other seed testing laboratories in the U.S., and our proposal will still keep our fees below those in other states."

80 screwworm-free days

MISSION — Texas has now experienced more than 80 days of screwworm-free days, according to Dr. James E. Novy, director of the U.S. Department of Agriculture's Screwworm Laboratory.

Novy reported that there have been no known screwworm cases in Mexico within 200 miles of the U.S. border within the past two months.

Poultry output being reduced

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Poultry slaughter has begun to ease off from a year ago, reflecting decisions by producers to reduce output in the face of lower market prices over the past few months.

In May, the most recent month analyzed, the U.S. Department of Agriculture says federal inspections of poultry for slaughter totaled about 1.67 billion pounds, down by 1 percent from a year earlier.

The May total included about 1.36 billion pounds of broiler chickens, a drop of 3 percent from the same month last year.

Broiler prices began to rise a month or so ago, but officials said part of that was a seasonal increase that traditionally occurs just before the July 4 holiday.

White grub control time near

The optimum control period for white grub is quickly approaching, according to Len Newsom of Norton's Horticulture Service in Midland.

"In our area, late July and early August is the time the beetle eggs hatch into their larval stage," reported Newsom. "At this point, they are very small and easily controlled. A soil drench with a grub-controlling insecticide is the solution."

The use of contact and systemic insecticides from now until winter may be necessary to effectively control ornamental pests.

Fruit supply abundant

WASHINGTON, D.C. — U.S. Department of Agriculture experts say there is a large supply of fresh fruit this summer and that the abundance is helping keep price increases "moderate."

Based on June 1 indications, production of early-harvested noncitrus fruit "will be slightly below last year's very large crop" but that remaining supplies of citrus "are sharply larger" than a year ago.

"Thus, large supplies combined with a weak economy will moderate the expected seasonal increases in grower prices for fresh and processing fruit and in retail prices for fresh fruit," the department's outlook board said.

Lone crash survivor still can't talk

By SUE FAHLGREN
Staff Writer

Kelly is a happy girl. At 4, she looks more like a 6-year-old — tall and slender — but then her mother grew to 6-foot-2. She is quiet, missing her front teeth and giggles easily.

But Kelly seems shy and not as active as her peers. She lies listlessly about the house on hot summer days, stretched out on her sleeping bag in front of the TV. And there's nothing her grandmother can do to make her go outside and play.

Kelly is a quadriplegic. She has no use of her legs and only recently gained a small amount of control in her hands. She can only move her head from side to side.

On Dec. 15, 1978, Kelly and her family were en route from Midland to Memphis, Tenn., to her maternal grandmother's house for Christmas. Her father was making his cross-country solo flight to get his commercial pilot's license.

However, at Texarkana, Ark., Kelly's father, Pete, 31, was attempting to land the single-engine aircraft in heavy fog, and the plane struck a power line and crashed in a wooded area.

Kelly's father, mother, Leigh, 25, and older brother, Billy Ray, 6, died in that crash.

Kelly, then two, broke her neck, pelvis and left leg and later contracted pneumonia. She spent six weeks in a Shreveport, La., hospital.

Her paternal grandmother and grandfather, Marie and Buford McDonald, who had only one son and now only one grandchild, took Kelly into their home.

Her grandparents said Kelly spoke to nurses the day after the accident, but she hasn't spoken since. Her voice box is all right; doctors say it was shock that caused her to lose her voice. She tries now, a year and a half later, to talk, but there is little more than soft laughter and some groans coming out.

Kelly spent several more weeks in a Texas hospital, and could have stayed longer, if her grandparents could have afforded it. Her grandparents are still paying the $36,000 worth of bills from her initial stay in the Louisiana hospital.

Since then, Kelly and her grandparents have gotten some help from various organizations. The Crippled Children's fund provided her with a specially made wheelchair, from the Scottish Rite Hospital in Dallas, that enables her to exercise her neck and hands while keeping them upright for traveling.

The Shriners fraternal organization sponsored Kelly to get into the Scottish Rite program. There she got all her baby teeth capped in silver. About once a month, her grandmother drives her there to receive medical care from neurologists to dentists to bone specialists. Scottish Rite provides all her medical examinations and medications free.

"We're planning on putting her in school at the cerebral palsy place here," Mrs. McDonald said. "I'm hoping that when they get her out there they can get her some speech therapy."

The outlook for Kelly may seem bleak, but Mrs. McDonald said, "I'm glad we have her with us."

Youth jailed on assault charge

A 16-year-old youth was taken into custody Saturday morning, after someone reportedly pointed a .410-gauge shotgun at a family on Cuthbert Avenue.

James Brock Jr. of Hunt told officers that he and his wife, Deborah, and his 7-year-old son, Dylan, were driving westbound on Cuthbert approaching Garfield Street when the assault occurred. A red Chevelle also was westbound on Cuthbert. Brock said the Chevelle was travelling so slowly it appeared to be stopped. Brock attempted to pass on the right side of the vehicle.

At that time, the vehicle made a sudden right turn. Brock said he followed the car until they reached the intersection of Cuthbert and Garfield, when Brock passed the car on the left. According to reports, the driver of the Chevelle, began yelling obscenities at the Brocks as they passed. Brock told police he then pulled over to the curb and stopped. The Chevelle reportedly pulled over to the right, and the driver pointed what appeared to be a sawed-off shotgun at the Brocks and threatened to "blow their heads off."

Brock said he drove away and called police from the Handy Hut at 2703 W. Cuthbert.

The youth was taken into custody when an officer responding to the aggravated assault call passed a red Chevelle southbound on Midkiff Road. The officer followed the vehicle as it turned west on to Cunningham Drive and finally stopped it at the intersection of Cunningham and Holly Drive.

According to reports, the officer drew his revolver and held the driver at gunpoint until another officer arrived. Police found a .22-caliber rifle with 14 rounds of ammunition, and two octagonal pieces of wood tied together by a piece of cord about two inches long in the car. The youth was taken into custody for unlawful carrying of prohibited weapons.

He was later released to his brother's custody while awaiting a decision by his parole officer, police said.

Bullet changed Ford's life

By SUE FAHLGREN
Staff Writer

The Bicentennial Year was filled with excitement. The Vietnam conflict was concluded for the U.S.; Watergate defendants were being prosecuted and American pride was on the upswing. Suddenly, there was national unity and harmony. Well, almost.

The fall of 1976 was not a good time for Midlander Trey Ford, however. Then a 19-year-old about to start his sophomore year at Texas Tech University, Ford's life changed at a fast-food restaurant in Lubbock.

Going through a drive-through food line with his Alpha Tau Omega pledge brothers, Ford was shot in the chest following a confrontation with an angry occupant of another car.

"The second or third shot hit me in the chest," Ford explained. The bullet collapsed a lung, hit a rib and eventually nicked his spinal cord at chest height. Ford was left paralyzed — a paraplegic, with no use of his legs.

After spending two weeks in intensive care — one week at West Texas Hospital to repair his lung and another at Lubbock Hospital to remove the bullet — Ford spent an additional two weeks in the hospital before going to Craig Rehabilitation Center in Denver, Colo., for 10 weeks.

At Craig, Ford underwent physical therapy and training for his new life in a wheelchair. He learned to "bounce down stairs," get in and out of a car, to drive a car and to be as independent as one can from a wheelchair. School for him was postponed a full year before he began summer school in 1977 in Denver, where his brother lives. Until then, Ford said, "I really didn't feel like going back to school."

After a full load at the University of Denver that fall, Ford went back to Tech. "I just kinda had to wait until I was ready," he said. This past May, he graduated with a BBA in marketing from Texas Tech.

At 23, Trey now seems like just about any other recent college graduate — he's looking for a job and wants to be successful.

He goes deer hunting with his father every fall and works on a research project about Bonnie and Clyde in the summer. Most of the year he lives alone in his own apartment and drives his own modified van.

He travels a lot when he's working on his "Bonnie and Clyde hobby" — sometimes 400 miles a day. He does research at libraries and newspaper offices and interviews people who knew the gangster duo in the '20s and '30s.

Ford said he became interested in the pair when the movie about their lives appeared in 1967. Since then he has spent the past three summers tracking down their acquaintances.

"It's kind of a strange hobby," he said, "but one I enjoy."

Ford also sometimes visits rehabilitation centers to talk with patients — St. Mary's Hospital in Lubbock, for instance.

"There's nothing I can say to make them feel any better," he said, "but if they can see what I've gone through... maybe that will help them."

He said, "I don't try to offer them any advice," because he said he figures they are getting enough "advice" from counselors, doctors, family members, therapists and others. "I don't tell them, 'Everything's gonna be all right,' because, realistically, it's a bad deal. I don't try to preach to them."

Ford said he sometimes asks himself how such an accident could have happened to him, but he said, "I don't know that there are any answers. I will probably never know."

A graduate of Lee High School here, where he also played football, Ford will attend a fundraiser for spine injury research in Midland Saturday.

The Kent Waldrep International Spinal Cord Research Foundation, Inc., is hosting a barbecue and speech by Dr. John Geldred, associate professor of anatomy at Texas A&M University, on the status of spinal cord research in the United States. The event begins at 7:30 p.m. July 12 at American Legion Hall on Air Park Drive. Former Texas Christian University football player Kent Waldrep, founder of the group, and former Dallas Cowboy Cliff Harris, national chairman of the group, will also attend the function.

Ford, who has met Waldrep a few times and whose family contributes to the foundation, said he felt the group was necessary for the advancement of the spine injury medicine field.

"Any kind of cure," he said, "or any effective operation for spine injuries becomes a matter of time and money." The technological research necessary for advancement can be done, he said, "it's just getting enough funding to do the research."

Waldrep hosts fundraiser for research foundation

Former Texas Christian University running back Kent Waldrep found one of the true athletic challenges in October 1974 after the TCU-Alabama game: the challenge to go on.

Waldrep suffered an injury to the fifth vertebrae in his spinal column during that game. Although immediate surgery was performed to repair the crushed vertebrae, Waldrep was left with a grim diagnosis: quadriplegia — paralysis of both arms and legs.

But, Waldrep has met that challenge head-on.

In October 1978, Waldrep made national news when he traveled to Leningrad, Russia to check into the Polenov Neurosurgery Research Institute there. Becoming the second American sports figure to be accepted for treatment there, Waldrep underwent a series of three therapy treatments: enzyme treatment, hyperbaric oxygenation and intense physical therapy. But, more than that, Waldrep studied the Russian therapies to create the first American foundation dedicated to research of the spinal cord-injured person.

Kent Waldrep

On Saturday, July 12, Midlanders can learn more of Waldrep's challenge when he hosts a fund-raiser for the Kent Waldrep International Spinal Cord Research Foundation, Inc., at American Legion Hall on Air Park Drive at 7:30 p.m.

Former Dallas Cowboy Cliff Harris, who is national chairman for the group, will appear with Waldrep, who is founder and executive director of the research group. Dr. John Geldred, associate professor of anatomy at Texas A&M University, will speak at the event on the status of spinal cord research in the United States.

Waldrep, a native Texan, said American research on the subject has been neglected. Further, he said the consensus of most physicians is to "rehabilitate" spinal cord-injured persons just enough to accept living in a wheelchair and a limited existence.

"The trip to Polenov has made me realize the work and changes that need to be done," Waldrep said. "I know I can live in a wheelchair. If my situation were to continue as it is now, I would be happy so long as I could work to improve the situation of others."

Midland's sponsoring group is a loosely knit one of persons interested in starting a more active group here. Sponsors include some spine-injured persons and their families as well as non-injured persons. Local sponsors are Mr. and Mrs. John Carey; Kelly Cox; Mr. and Mrs. Walter O. Ford Jr.; Mr. and Mrs. Jim Lucus; Bill Mims; and Mr. and Mrs. Bill Munn.

Fourth of July homicidal

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Nine murders were reported on the Fourth of July in Los Angeles County, more than double the number that are reported on an average weekend, police said.

"For one day that's a lot, it's a lot for a weekend," Los Angeles County Sheriff's Deputy Tony Rodriguez said Saturday.

Rodriguez said four reported murders would be normal for a two-day weekend in the county, but could provide no figures on previous Fourth of July.

He had no guess as to what caused the spurt of murders. "Who knows. But none of them appears to be related," he said.

One of the nine was reported when the remains of what appeared to be a woman's body were found Friday stuffed in a closet of a vacant Malibu home.

The owner, attorney Robert Leck, had gone there to check the building.

Los Angeles County sheriff's deputies have not been able to identify the body or determine the cause of death.

Shortly after noon, the body of an unidentified man with his hands bound behind him was found on a San Pedro beach at the bottom of a 60-foot cliff, Los Angeles police reported. Police said it was not immediately known if the man had been pushed from the cliff top.

bodies of two Baldwin Park men were found shot to death in a City of Industry parking lot. They were identified as Harry Estes, 21, and Richard Smith, 18.

A short time later, the body of Gilberto Murillo, 27, was found in the backyard of an East Los Angeles home, beaten and stabbed once in the chest, deputies said.

Los Angeles police investigators were called to a neighborhood on West Imperial Highway where the body of Delino Hernandez, 49, was found shot to death in front of his home.

The nude body of an unidentified woman was found in Central Park West in Baldwin Park about 7 a.m. by a passerby. Sheriff's Sgt. Roger Kaiser said the woman had been beaten about the face and was possibly a rape victim.

A man who was shot early Friday morning in the Florence area died in the afternoon at Martin Luther King Jr. Hospital. His identity is being withheld pending notification of next of kin.

A sheriff's department spokesman said three people were in custody in connection with the shooting. They were not identified.

Suntan freaks think contest winner pale

DALLAS (AP) — Two suntan freaks are seeing red because they think the winner of a suntan contest is too pale. "I laid out (by the backyard pool) every day just for the contest," said runnerup Cindy Seyforth. "That's a lot of suffering in this heat. All day."

Ben Ramsey, roasted to a crisp, is hopping mad too. "I laid out in the sun every day from about 10 to 5 for the last month," he said. "I was suffering like anything to go through all that."

They were among 25 finalists in a tanning contest sponsored by radio station KNUS.

Dormant volcanoes dot landscape across Texas

By LORI McVEY
Laredo Times

Eighty million years ago, eight volcanoes belched fire and smoke underwater and tons of lava created what is now the Hill Country of Central Texas.

Today, Texas' capital sits atop six volcanoes, ringed by another five.

"Most people don't know it, but there are 10 extinct volcanoes within the Austin city limits," said Dr. Dan Barker of the University of Texas Geology Department. "Pilot Nobe, to the south of the city, is the only one that is well-publicized."

Today, Pilot Nobe is a small grassy hill that overlooks a field of maize and nearby Bergstrom Air Force Base.

A cinder cone that curves toward the sky in the Big Bend area has been dubbed "Elephant Tusk," and may be one of the few named volcanoes in the state.

At Huston-Tillotson University and the site of St. Edward's University in Austin, other volcanoes acted up when an old sea — sometimes called the Ouachita Trough — covered that part of Texas.

Other sites of volcanoes that exploded when Austin was a huge oyster bed are located at Bouldin Creek, Stasney Lane and Castlegate, and outside the city in the communities of Elroy and Creedmore.

The volcanoes around Austin are just part of a belt of fire that flickered underwater before the Balcones Fault, which slashes through Central Texas, thrust seabed rocks upward to form land about 20 million years after the volcanoes quieted.

Another belt of volcanoes runs through the Big Bend area of far Southwest Texas — a much younger set of mountains of smoke and fire that shook the air between 45 and 50 million years ago.

"There are literally hundreds of volcanoes in Texas and many of them are still buried," Barker said. "They have been found every year by geologists. Many more have been found recently in magnetic anomaly surveys by people looking for oil."

Remnants of the ancient volcanoes are visible at Knippa, a tiny community just east of Uvalde. White's Mines of San Antonio quarries basalt rock — the solid form of molten lava — out of Knippa for use on Texas highways and in home insulation.

"Basalt is very dense and is used in roads as a non-skid additive for highway construction," said Dick Soares, president of White's Mines. "Cities and highway departments are our main customers."

Miners have chisled into the black igneous rocks at Knippa since at least 1909, yet the crusty formations still loom over the region.

But the volcanoes have left more than a visual mark on the state, Barker said.

"Many of the richest soils we have, in Texas and elsewhere on the globe, come from the volcanic action of lava," he said. "Mineral riches — most of the ore deposits — are formed at very shallow depths in volcanoes. In the Big Bend area, for example, our uranium is derived from the volcanic ash. We also have silver, fluorspar, molybdenum and some gold that comes from those volcanoes."

In a 1927 publication, University of Texas geologist John T. Lonsdale said he found igneous rock — lava in solid form — in Bandera, Bexar, Comal, Hays, Kinney, Medina, Travis and Uvalde Counties.

Another bureau publication notes a lavish sprinkling of old volcanoes through the Big Bend region, arcing north into southeastern New Mexico.

But Barker doesn't expect deadly rumblings from the now-silent domes.

"Volcanos have been known to lay dormant for as long as 100,000 years and then become active," he said. "Mount Vesuvius had been quiet in Italy so long that the whole city of Pompeii was buried in 79 A.D. when it became active."

"Mount Lassen surprised everyone when it erupted in California in 1919, stayed active until 1921, and then became quiet as suddenly as it came to life."

"In Texas, we have the cones of old volcanoes," Barker continued. "We have never known the cone of an old volcano to come to life."

"I won't say it won't happen, but it is improbable, extremely improbable."

Area cities may support law academy

By KAY CRITES
Staff Writer

When the federal Law Enforcement Assistance Administration funds go in September, so will the Permian Basin Law Enforcement Academy — unless area city councils and commissioners approve the plan being proposed to them.

Since the announcement that a federal subcommittee had recommended cutting LEAA funds in an effort to balance the budget, area counties covered by the Permian Basin Regional Planning Commission have been scrambling for a solution to the task of training the new officers.

Under law, within six months of being hired, new officers must receive 240 hours of training. And soon, that figure will rise to 320 hours.

Until now, that training has been handled by the academy.

So, sheriffs and police chiefs in such counties as Andrews, Dawson, Martin, Upton, Reagan, Howard, Crane, Ector, Midland, Glasscock, Ward and Pecos have prepared an alternate plan to save the academy, should all funds cease.

THE PROGRAM Calls for maintaining the academy with local funding. Tentative budget is $76,000. The plan calls for each participating agency to pay membership dues of $50 per officer, according to the department's sworn authorized strength. In addition, agencies would pay $500 tuition for each officer sent through basic training and $75 for in-service schools.

Membership dues for the city of Midland would be $6,400 and for Midland County $1,900.

The plan's future depends on whether the four large departments involved — Midland police, Midland County Sheriff's Department, Ector County Sheriff's Department and Odessa police — participate.

There are rumors that Ector County Commissioners will veto the idea, but if three of the four large departments "go for it, we won't have any problems," said Ahders.

"WE HAVE NO other choice," he said. "We could send them to Austin or neighboring large cities to their schools, but it probably would be more expensive to do it that way."

Ernie Crawford, director of the PBRPC said, "The alternatives would be to send them to Texas A&M, which would be very expensive for each agency or for a city to have its own academy, which would be very expensive. I don't know why any agency would not want to go with it. I don't know what their alternatives would be."

"You can imagine what it would cost to take an officer and send him to A&M for eight to 10 weeks and pay his transportation and lodging for that period of time. You could barely send him for two weeks for $500."

"Everyone," said Police Chief Wayne Gideon, "has been looking for an answer. If every agency had to train its recruits, it would be quite expensive. Whereas, with everyone contributing we can reduce the cost. And there just aren't that many trained, certified policemen that are looking for jobs."

PARTICIPATION in the program will not be limited to the 17 counties in the Permian Basin. "If anyone else wants to participate, all they have to do is come up with the money — their fair share," added Ahders.

Besides membership dues, the proposal also calls for a new home for the academy and an administrator with perhaps an aide. The aide is flexible, according to Sheriff Dallas Smith, depending on the number of counties and cities that decide to participate.

Proposed salary for the administrator is $20,000 to $25,000.

"The only problem," said Ahders, "is finding someone who can be the administrator. He will have to be really qualified and the salary they are talking about right now may not be high enough to attract the kind of person I'd like to see. It's my opinion he should have been in law enforcement himself and also have some teaching experience...someone with an ability as an administrator, organizer and instructor."

The new home proposed for the academy is the Army Reserve Building at Midland Regional Airport.

SMITH AND A few others have formed a committee in an effort to form a contract with the military for the use of the building.

"It has a lot of extra space," said Smith. "It has classrooms with desks and blackboards, a gymnasium area, and firing range. It's already established, has plenty of parking which we don't have at our current situation, and has much more room."

"It's also perhaps a little more centrally located."

Smith hopes to negotiate a contract in which the academy would pay its share of utilities, cleaning and maintenance, as well as a moderate rent.

According to Ahders, a tentative rent figure mentioned by federal officials has been $1.

The new building could also allow more in the way of in-service schools, according to Smith.

Previously, these schools have been held primarily in Austin, but they also are greatly funded by LEAA. And with the elimination of these funds, in-service schools will cost much more, also.

"Since we've got to spend the money anyway," said Smith, "let's try to get the best quality and get the man really trained and not just get it legal. Let's make sure he has had good quality training. Hopefully what we are going to be able to do is make a step that makes it an improvement — makes it benefit more peoples' needs in this area."

Bill Smith spent $150 and his entire Saturday installing a rooftop antenna. (He now receives 3 channels).

Ed Jones subscribes to Cable TV. He spends $7.75* a month and his Saturdays watching a ball game, a movie or his favorite show on any of 12 channels he receives sharp and clear without an antenna.

RANKIN — A public hearing to gather proposals for spending $100,000 in federal revenue-sharing funds for 1980-81 will be held at 10 a.m. Monday, July 14, by the Upton County Commissioners' Court in the Upton County Courthouse, according to County Judge Peggy Garner.

Dawson County out for blood

LAMESA — The Dawson County Blood Association will sponsor a blood drive to net at least 100 pints of blood from 2 to 8 p.m. Tuesday at the Pioneer Natural Gas Co. building.

The blood is to be used to satisfy needs and to build a blood reserve at Medical Arts Hospital.

Persons between ages 16 and 66 and who weigh at least 105 pounds may be eligible to donate blood.

Hospital names Dr. Hunter

BIG SPRING — Dr. Wallace Hunter, staff psychiatrist and former superintendent of Big Spring State Hospital, has been named the hospital's acting superintendent.

He succeeds Dr. Grace Ferguson, the hospital's superintendent since 1977, who has been relieved of her duties. No explanation was offered by Kent Johnson of Austin, head of the Texas State Department of Mental Health and Mental Retardation's legal division, for the superintendent's firing.

According to Johnson, Dr. Ferguson is on administrative leave until July 31, when her employment with the hospital will terminate.

Dr. John J. Kavanaugh, chairman of the Texas State Department of MHMR, named Dr. Hunter as acting superintendent. State Rep. Mike Ezzell has speculated that Dr. Ferguson might contest Dr. Kavanaugh's decision to fire her by appealing to the federal Equal Employment Opportunity Commission.

Dr. Hunter was superintendent of the hospital from 1975 until 1977, when he asked to be relieved of his duties. He was succeeded by Dr. Ferguson.

Kent Hance to visit Andrews

ANDREWS — U.S. Congressman Kent Hance of Lubbock will be in Andrews Tuesday to visit with area constituents.

He will be in the Commercial State Bank's directors room from 2 to 3 p.m.

KERMIT — A Four-Man Scramble Golf Tournament will be held July 12-13 at the Winkler County Country Club.

The tourney, sponsored by the Rotary Club of Kermit, will be limited to 50 teams. Entry fee is $120 per four-man team.

The golfers will be flighted by the tournament's first-day scores. Those interested in entering the tournament may contact Dick Weston, the golf pro at Winkler County Country Club, at 586-5472.

The tournament earlier had been incorrectly billed as a Three-Man Low Ball Golf Tournament.

Water carnival scheduled

FORT STOCKTON — The annual Fort Stockton Water Carnival featuring water ballet, dancing acts and the musical production "It's About Time" will be held July 17-19 at Comanche Springs Swimming Pool in Fort Stockton.

The musical will be preceded by a different beauty revue at 8 p.m. on each day of the carnival.

"The musical production will showcase songs to suit everyone's taste, including country and Western, rock, and show tunes," according to Dean F. Duerksen, the 1980 Water Carnival's publicity chairman.

The story line of the musical centers around B.Z. Mann, a business executive who finds himself constantly pressed for time. But with the help his company's research scientist, Professor Pumfritz, and a time machine developed by the professor, Mann studies a variety of schemes to stretch his time.

"The ingenious way in which the two men solve the problem will provide laughs and entertainment for people of all ages," Duerksen said in a news release.

The cast and crew of "It's About Time" is made up of 250 Fort Stockton people, directed by writer-director Alice Duerksen.

Advance tickets to the production are $2.50 for adults and college-age students and $2 for public-school students. Tickets at the gate will be $1 higher. The performance for Saturday night — July 19 — will be $4.

Tickets may be purchased at the Fort Stockton Chamber of Commerce.

Groups protest

GLEN ROSE, Texas (AP) — Five nuclear protestors were arrested Saturday after they entered the plant site and apparently were headed for an 8-foot fence that surrounds a nuclear plant here, authorities said.

"There are still some (protestors) out there, but it's quiet," said a dispatcher for the Somervell County sheriff's department.

Police arrest 18 in oil theft ring

HOUSTON (AP) — A petrochemical theft ring averaging $1 million a month in stolen petroleum products was smashed Saturday when police arrested 18 people, including an oil company owner.

"I imagine there are several (similar) operations from Brownsville to Florida," said Detective J.C. Moseley after Coast Guard officers, police and Texas Department of Public Safety personnel made the arrests about 3 a.m. Saturday.

Moseley said a tugboat, two barges loaded with stolen petrochemicals and six tractor-trailer trucks used in stealing the products from barges were confiscated during the raid.

A 32-foot Coast Guard patrol boat pursued the tugboat Athos for about a mile in the San Jacinto river near Channelview before it ran aground and the crew fled on foot, Moseley said. The crew members, including the captain of the tugboat, were arrested.

Two other tugboat captains, their crews and two truck drivers were arrested, Moseley said, in addition to an oil company owner and a former oil company engineer now employed at the barge cleaning firm.

Moseley said word of the thefts came last September after an informant told police of the operation. He said losses were estimated to be between $750,000 and $1 million per month.

Police said the operation centered around a barge cleaning company on the San Jacinto River and probably involved captains of tugboats pulling barges laden with naphtha, gasoline, diesel and other petrochemical products.

Moseley said the tugboat would pull two empty barges alongside barges containing petrochemical products and pump portions of the cargo into the empty barges.

The cargo then would be taken ashore and sold to gasoline stations and other petroleum dealers.

"They were playing within the limits of allowable loss," Moseley said, adding that the thieves never took more than 10 percent of any given cargo.

Police began concentrating on the thefts about six months ago when an oil company complained about suspicious losses. Moseley said several tugboat captains and barge firms cooperated in the investigation.

Pope says media manipulate minds

PORTO ALEGRE, Brazil (AP) — Pope John Paul II warned against what he called growing "manipulation" of the human mind by radio and television, during an open-air Mass on Saturday at a road intersection in this southern Brazilian city.

Interrupted repeatedly by Brazilians wildly waving yellow and white Vatican flags and chanting "The pope is our king," the pontiff said that mass media bred "passivity and emotionalism ... manipulation and consequently evasion and hedonism."

The pope chose this city of conservative Italian, German and Portuguese settlers to reiterate traditional church teachings on education midway through his 12-day tour of Brazil.

In one of the strictest pronouncements of his trip, John Paul told a gymnasium filled with 50,000 priests and seminarians he opposes "experimentation" in seminaries.

One killed, another hurt in Kermit

KERMIT — A Kermit man died and another was seriously injured late Thursday night when their 1980 Corvett rolled three times, throwing them from the vehicle about eight miles east of Kermit.

Hilton Zack Turner, 20, the driver of the vehicle, was pronounced dead at the scene by Peace Justice Lorraine Brumlow.

The passenger, 19-year-old Robert L. Thomas, sustained chest injuries, lacerations and a broken right leg. He was taken to Memorial Hospital in Kermit, where he was listed in improved condition Saturday afternoon.

The two men were traveling west on FM 874 when the car hit some gravel, causing the car to skid some 500 feet and into the opposite shoulder where the car rolled three times, tossing the men from the vehicle.

Phil Gramm will speak to Rotarians

U.S. Rep. Phil Gramm of College Station will speak at the Midland Rotary Club's Thursday noon meeting in the Midland Hilton.

Gramm, who represents Texas' Sixth Congressional District, recently led an effort to increase federal defense spending in the 1981 Fiscal Year by cutting from non-defense programs. He is billed as an outspoken supporter for a balanced federal budget.

He has been active in energy matters.

In 1976, Gramm was a candidate for the U.S. Senate but was defeated in the primary election by Sen. Lloyd Bentsen. He was a professor at Texas A&M University.

Gramm had billed himself as a conservative Democrat interested fiscal responsibility.

High court virtually scraps myth of 'sovereign immunity'

By RICHARD CARELLI

WASHINGTON (AP) — Although important decisions on abortion payments, racial quotas and the commercial use of genetic engineering attracted the most attention, the Supreme Court's 1979-80 term offered one overriding theme: the expanding right of Americans to sue the government.

In a half-dozen decisions on the government's liability to its citizens, the court lowered — or obliterated — centuries-old "sovereign immunity" barriers.

While seldom fodder for newspaper headlines, a citizen's power to hold government and its agents responsible for lawful actions is as essential to a republican form of government as is the power of the ballot.

In its just-completed term, the Supreme Court ruled:

— Persons whose constitutional rights have been violated can sue government officials directly under the Bill of Rights if Congress has not provided an "equally effective" alternative.

In the same decision, the justices extended the right to sue directly under the Constitution to cases involving violations of the Eighth Amendment's protection against cruel and unusual punishment.

— Persons can use an 1871 civil rights law to sue for damages when they believe some act by state or local governments violated a legal right provided by Congress. Never before had the court given such broad meaning to that Reconstruction-era law, a major vehicle for the civil rights movement.

— Such lawsuits do not have to allege "bad faith" on the part of government officials. Instead, those officials must prove they did not realize their acts were unlawful.

— Local governments, unlike their employees, cannot get out from under a lawsuit charging violations of individual rights by proving the violations were unintentional or that the challenged acts were carried out in "good faith." The decision assured citizens whose rights have been violated the availability of some remedy or compensation.

— State courts may be sued for damages if they violate a person's civil rights in enforcing their administrative rules.

— Court-appointed lawyers are not absolutely immune from being sued for legal malpractice.

The court carved out one exception, however. It ruled that states may give parole officials absolute immunity for their decisions to set convicted criminals free.

As they have in recent years, numerous questions about the scope of First Amendment rights — freedom of speech, expression, religion and association — confronted the court.

The justices used their interpretation of the amendment to:

— Require that most criminal trials be open to the public and press, the first time in the nation's history the right to find out what the government is doing has been given direct constitutional protection.

— Strike down a state ban on utility bill inserts that discuss "controversial issues of public policy" such as nuclear power.

— Void a state's blanket ban on the use of promotional advertising for use of electricity.

— All but emasculate the political patronage system by ruling that no government employee may be fired because of his or her political party affiliation unless party allegiance is vital to the job.

— Rule that charities cannot be barred from making door-to-door solicitations if they do not use a certain percentage of the money raised directly for charitable purposes.

— Allow the government to collect all profits made by former CIA agent Frank Snepp in his unauthorized book about the fall of South Vietnam.

The court's criminal justice decisions appeared to afford individual rights more protection than in recent years, but no constant theme emerged.

The decisions included these:

— Law enforcement officials cannot hire jailhouse informants to "induce" criminal defendants in custody to make incriminating statements.

— Prosecutors also can challenge the truthfulness of a defendant's answers under cross-examination by introducing illegally seized defendant's previous statements.

— An illegal police "interrogation" under the court's Miranda doctrine includes any "functional equivalent" of questioning — words or actions police "should know" are reasonably likely to elicit an incriminating response after a suspect has invoked the right to remain silent.

— Unless some unusual emergency exists, police always need an arrest warrant to enter a person's home.

— State "repeat offender" laws requiring life sentences for a person convicted of even three relatively trivial crimes do not violate the Constitution's ban on cruel and unusual punishment.

Prison inmates have a right to contest their transfers to mental hospitals.

— Police who have a search warrant for a public place cannot search all persons who happen to be there.

Here are other important decisions of the 1979-80 term:

ABORTION

— The federal government and the states have no legal obligation to pay for most abortions, even those deemed medically necessary, for women on welfare.

CIVIL RIGHTS

— Congress is free to use racial quotas to make up for past discrimination by setting aside for minority-owned businesses fixed amounts of federal grants. The ruling, announced on the term's final day last Wednesday, is a momentous victory for the concept of affirmative action. But many questions about that important and potentially divisive issue remain.

— Persons suing a local government's at-large election system as unlawfully discriminatory against blacks must prove that the system was set up to intentionally dilute black voting power. Such proof frequently is impossible to obtain.

SCIENCE

— New forms of life created through genetic engineering can be patented, thus allowing them to be sold for profit.

WORK SAFETY

— Workers have a legal right to refuse to perform tasks they reasonably believe to be too dangerous.

— The federal Occupational Safety and Health Administration cannot impose more stringent standards for worker exposure to cancer-causing materials until it proves that current standards present "a significant risk of material health impairment."

FREEDOM OF INFORMATION

— The Freedom of Information Act, passed by Congress in 1966 to curtail government secrecy, does not apply to government-financed research by private groups.

— Before releasing industry-supplied information to consumers who request it under the act, the Consumer Product Safety Commission must try to determine its accuracy and the fairness of public disclosure.

Cost soars

GLEN ROSE, Texas (AP) — The estimated cost of the Comanche Peak nuclear power plant may rise three times as high as the original estimate, a Dallas Power & Light official has confirmed.

The cost estimate already has been raised $923 million from the original $777 million price tag.

DP&L spokesman Ray Ward attributed the cost increase to modifications required after the Three Mile Island accident.

THE NEWSPAPER BIBLE

What is your ambition?

I know that you are wise and good, my brothers, and that you know these things so well that you are able to teach others all about them.

But even so I have been bold enough to emphasize some of these points, knowing that all you need is this reminder from me; for I am, by God's grace, a special messenger from Jesus Christ to you Gentiles, bringing you the Gospel and offering you up as a fragrant sacrifice to God; for you have been made pure and pleasing to Him by the Holy Spirit.

So it is right for me to be a little proud of all Christ Jesus has done through me.

I dare not judge how effectively He has used others, but I know this: He has used me to win the Gentiles to God.

I have won them by my message and by the good way I have lived before them, and by the miracles done through me as signs from God—all by the Holy Spirit's power. In this way I have preached the full Gospel of Christ all the way from Jerusalem clear over into Illyricum.

But all the while my ambition has been to go still farther, preaching where the name of Christ has never yet been heard, rather than where a church has already been started by someone else.

I have been following the plan spoken of in the Scriptures where Isaiah says that those who have never heard the name of Christ before will see and understand.

In fact that is the very reason I have been so long in coming to visit you.

Boat mishap kills three

MIAMI (AP) — Three people were killed and three others critically injured when a speeding pleasure boat smashed into a Port of Miami dock, police said.

The accident occurred just before sunset Friday as the driver of the boat attempted to negotiate a turn into the main port channel that leads to sea, officers said.

"It sounded like an explosion, that's how loud it was," said Nat Tashman, duty officer at the port.

On board were three young men, two teenage women and a little girl about three years old.

Miami Fire Department paramedics rushed the six people to Jackson Memorial Hospital. One man was dead on arrival, and the two others died later Friday, officials said. The victims' names have not been disclosed.

Two Miami teenagers, Maria Elena Meireles,

17, and Maria Meireles, 16, and the little girl, whose identity has not been released, were listed in critical condition today, hospital officials said.

The 26- to 28-foot boat smashed head-on into a seawall at Dodge Island's Terminal Six at an estimated speed of 55 mph and began sinking.

HIDDEN VALUES

Don't pass up buying a home just because it doesn't measure up to your idea of perfection. Most home-buying prospects have a specific dollar limit in mind. They also have a particular type house and neighborhood in mind. Rarely do the two coincide. Because of the continual rise in real estate values, quite often one or the other has to give.

If you decide to wait for the perfect house at the perfect price, the spread between the two will probably increase due to inflation rather than close. So, if you do find a house in a good location, that is structurally sound and available at a "bargain price", my advice is to buy it.

Often, little TLC can do wonders and create a valuable facelift to a house that came on the market in a less-than-best appearance. You'd be surprised at what a paint job or re-doing a kitchen, new built-in appliances, or making a basement into an extra bedroom or family room can do to increase the comfort and value of such a "bargain".

There are still many good housing values on the market. House seekers whose price is limited should look beyond the outside appearance and consider its hidden possibilities.

If you have any questions on this subject or any other aspect of real estate, feel free to phone or drop in at DON HARVEY REALTORS 702 Andrews Hwy. Phone 683-5333. We're here to help! Come in for your free copy of "Home for Living" magazine.

NEIL SOLOMON

Cancer treatment often results in loss of weight

Dear Dr. Solomon: My brother was always a hearty eater, but he has lost weight since developing cancer a few months ago. Although his wife prepares all his favorite foods, including very rich foods that he used to love but tried to avoid, he has little appetite. I know that loss of weight is characteristic of patients with cancer, but I never understood why. Can you explain? — Audrey.

Dear Audrey: Loss of weight is the most common nutritional problem encountered in people with cancer since both the disease and the various methods of treating it tend to blunt the appetite. When the intake of food is decreased, the body has to use its reserves of fat and protein, resulting in loss of weight. The extent to which this occurs is highly individual, depending on the type of cancer, the extent of the disease, the kind of treatment to which the patient is being subjected and the patient's general outlook.

The disease can affect appetite in a variety of ways. In some people, the tumor itself may block the intestines, thus interfering with the passing of food and preventing the patient from eating. Certain tumors also affect taste, causing a loss of appetite.

Moreover, once a person loses weight, a process is set in motion that further decreases the patient's craving for food. This phenomenon often is seen in dieters who, after a few days of dietetically curtailed food intake, lose much of their desire to eat. This creates a vicious cycle. Conversely, eating substantial amounts of food seems to have an opposite effect. Some people who complete one large meal often look forward eagerly to an equally hearty next meal.

Another factor that helps determine the amount of food consumed by cancer patients is the emotional component. Depression is not uncommon in a person who is told he has cancer, and one of the symptoms of depression is loss of appetite. In addition, a patient may experience pain or otherwise feel uncomfortable after eating and may start to avoid food in an effort to prevent the symptoms from returning.

To complicate the problem, the various methods used in the treatment of cancer — whether radiation, surgery or chemotherapy — can influence the patient's desire for food. Radiation therapy ordinarily affects only that part of the body being treated. However, if treatment includes any part of the digestive tract, the patient may experience nausea, vomiting or feelings of fullness. Radiation therapy also may decrease the flow of saliva, resulting in dry mouth, difficulty in swallowing and changes in the sensation of taste.

Surgery also may tend to affect appetite. Surgery on the digestive tract, for example, may cause the patient to feel full or cause diarrhea that interferes with the body's ability to absorb food. Surgery in the area of the mouth or neck may make it difficult for a patient to chew or swallow.

Chemotherapy, too, can produce side effects that interfere with eating. While the treatment is designed to kill fast-growing cancer cells, it also may affect normal cells. Possible symptoms include sores around the mouth and throat, cramps or diarrhea, feelings of fullness, and nausea and vomiting.

(If you have a medical problem, see your doctor. If you have a medical question, write to Neil Solomon, M.D., 1726 Reisterstown Road, Baltimore, Md. 21208. Dr. Solomon cannot give personal replies but will answer as many questions as possible in his column.)

Construction to close stretch of FM 868 between Wadley and Loop 250 in Midland

ODESSA — FM 868 in Midland will be closed to traffic between Wadley Avenue and Loop 250 beginning this week.

South Texas Construction Company of Corpus Christi submitted the low bid of $773,000 to improve FM 868 between Wadley and the loop. The length of the project is .83 mile, and 120 working days will be allowed to complete the work.

The closing of FM 868 within the above area will allow work on the entire roadway rather than working one-half of the roadway at a time and detouring traffic through the construction area. This will decrease the length of time needed for construction and will provide for less inconvenience and greater safety to the traffic. The City of Midland has concurred with this arrangement, according to a release from the State Highway Department.

Traffic should detour this area by using Midkiff Road and Holiday Hill Road for north-south traffic. Wadley Road and Loop 250 should be used for east-west traffic.

The existing two lane paved roadway will be reconstructed to a width of 80 feet with curb and gutter. This will provide for four traffic lanes, a continuous two-way left turn lane and two parallel parking lanes.

This project connects to the recently completed section which was constructed to the same design from State Highway 158 to Wadley Road. The completion of this project will provide for increased traffic demands from State 158 to the new Loop 250 route.

John Aldridge, resident engineer in Midland, is in charge of the project with State Department of Highways and Public Transportation District Engineer W.A. Lancaster of Odessa providing overall supervision.

New school official believes in challenging students

By DAVID CAMPBELL
Staff Writer

Challenging students to achieve their utmost potential is not an easy job for a school system, much less one man.

Dr. Joseph Baressi, new assistant superintendent of instruction for the Midland Independent School District, is in the middle of that battle.

Even the "gifted" or high achieving youngster has to be challenged to obtain maximum potential, according to Baressi.

"I was impressed with the recruitment process and the attitude of the board in what they wanted," the assistant superintendent said in explaining why he came to Midland. Renowned that Midland's reputation for providing a quality school system is known statewide. A letter by James Mailey, school superintendent, helped convince him to apply for the position.

Before accepting the Midland post, Baressi was the assistant superintendent for programs with the Seguin school district where he established a kindergarten through high school program for high achieving students.

"In K-3 (kindergarten through third grade), students would be transferred from their regular school to another location to spend three hours a day in an enrichment study," he said describing the Seguin program.

Fourth through sixth grades spent about half the day in studies that would enhance their thinking and creativity.

Middle school and high school high achieving students were involved with honor courses designed to make them think at a higher level, he said adding that that did not necessarily mean performing more work.

"What works for Seguin might not necessarily work for Midland," Baressi cautioned, noting the design of each program would be different for each community.

A "gifted" or high achieving child is a student who has demonstrated the ability for higher thought academically. Children who perform well in the visual arts category, such as music or art, are not in this class, he noted.

The critical progress in any program for the high achieving student is trying to identify the person with those demonstrated abilities. A series of tests such as the individual IQ exam and grades as well as other materials are used to identify about 5 percent of the student population who would normally make up that group.

A high achieving student does not mean he is good in all academic areas, he said noting that such a student is rare. Students may show exceptional demonstrated abilities in math, but are average in reading.

Once the student is identified, he is grouped with other students who have similar characteristics.

While with this group, the student engages in activities which motivate and challenge the child's mind to achieve his full potential.

As with any normal student, if the gifted student is not motivated and challenged to achieve his potential, he will show signs of discontent as identified by a lack of attendance or tardiness.

However, the gifted student's innate intelligence remains even though it is not cultivated to its potential.

One of the problems the program tries to avoid is making the gifted student feel he is part of an elite group. At Seguin, Baressi noted the high achieving student spends time working with average-achieving students as with other high achievers.

Also, parents wanting their child classified as a high achiever must realize that few students are high achievers, he said. One of the objectives for the Midland program, the assistant superintendent explained, was to establish a committee composed of parents, administrators and teachers assisting in the program's development.

The program can be justified to the community and parents serving on the committee would be able to explain to other parents what the program is about, he said.

The fact that some teachers accomplish great gains with high achieving students does not necessarily mean that other teachers are not successful, Baressi said.

Other teachers spend long hours working hard with a learning disability student and may achieve only a small degree of advancement, he noted.

And yet that is also considered success because the teacher was able to obtain gains with a student who had so little to begin with.

In addition, spin-offs from the high achiever program could benefit the averaging achieving student, Baressi added.

"The goal of public education is to help each student obtain their highest potential," he said.

Laredo police shoot, kill man holding infant daughter with knife at throat

LAREDO, Texas (AP) — A Laredo policeman shot and killed a 26-year-old man who was holding his infant daughter at knifepoint Saturday, police said.

The victim, identified as Guadalupe Trevino, died shortly before 3 a.m. at a Laredo hospital.

His ex-wife, Merta, told police Trevino threatened her and their three children during a late-night argument, police said. She took the oldest daughters, ages 4 and 7, to a neighbor's house and when she returned, Trevino threatened her and a one-year-old daughter with a kitchen knife, police said.

He then took the knife and the daughter into a brushy area near the banks of the Rio Grande, police said. Four officers called to the scene talked to the man for about two hours as he jabbed the knife at the child's head and neck, authorities said. She received only slight bruises, police said.

During the negotiations, police said, an officer tried to overpower Trevino, who attacked the officer with the knife. Another officer, Allen Lanier, fired one shot, striking Trevino in the chest.

Trevino fell to the ground, still gripping the child, who was covered with blood, officers said.

He received emergency treatment at the scene, but died later at a hospital, officers said.

Borg takes 5th straight Wimbledon crown

Bjorn Borg is happy winner again

Downs stubborn McEnroe in five sets for title

WIMBLEDON, England (AP) — Bjorn Borg outlasted John McEnroe 1-6, 7-5, 6-3, 6-7, 8-6 in one of the greatest of all Wimbledon finals Saturday and won the world's most coveted tennis title for the fifth straight year.

McEnroe, the 21-year-old left-hander from Douglaston, N.Y., saved seven match points. Five of them were in a long, nerve-rattling tiebreaker in the fourth set, which he won 18-16.

AFTER 3 hours, 53 minutes of dramatic tennis, Borg wrapped up the match with a backhand pass, sank to his knees and raised his arms skyward.

"This was my hardest match at Wimbledon, and it was my best match," the 24-year-old Swede said. McEnroe was as much a hero as Borg. The 16,000 fans on Center Court of the All-England Club stood and cheered him as he collected his runner-up medal.

McEnroe played almost faultless tennis in the first set, and Borg was slow to get into the match.

McEnroe held his service right up to the end of the second set. Then Borg hit two of his special double-grip backhand returns and broke for the first time to take the set 7-5.

Borg broke to a 2-0 lead in the third and held on to it.

In the fourth set he broke at 5-4 with two great cross-court backhands and the match appeared almost over.

Serving at 40-15 in the next game, Borg had two match points. And then McEnroe's greatest hour began.

THE U.S. Open champion hit a backhand pass and a forehand volley to bring the score to deuce. Borg netted a forehand, and then McEnroe swept a tremendous backhand across the court to break back and level at 5.

Two love games followed with service. Then came the tiebreaker. It probably was the most thrilling tiebreaker ever played here.

Borg had more match points at 6-5, 7-6, 10-9, 11-10 and 12-11. McEnroe saved all of them in brilliant aggressive style. On those crisis points he played one magical drop volley and a series of backhand passes.

McEnroe himself had six set points in the tiebreaker before he cracked Borg with a backhand return at 18-16.

MCENROE SAID humorously later: "Since he had already won the title four times, I thought that when he lost that long tiebreaker he might just give up."

Instead, Borg came back the stronger of the two in the final set. His serving in this final stage of the match was truly that of a champion. He dropped three points in seven service games. Two of them were in the opening game of the set.

McEnroe was 40-0 down on his service in the eighth game, and his cause seemed lost. But he came back to win the game with a series of mighty serves, including an ace and two outright winners.

McEnroe was looking tired at last, but the incredible Swede charged on as powerfully as ever. Borg went to 7-6 after serving in six games and dropping but a single point.

From 15-15 in the final game McEnroe slumped to defeat. Borg ran around his second service and hit a crashing forehand return for 15-30. Next Borg stood up to a cannonball service and sent a backhand across the court for 15-40.

On the eighth match point, he hit the last decisive backhand pass.

BORG, WHOSE income has been estimated at $2 million a year, collected another $46,000 with his fifth Wimbledon victory.

It was McEnroe's first Wimbledon singles final, and he won $23,300.

Borg has broken all records at Wimbledon in modern times. He has now won 35 singles matches here in a row — three more than Rod Laver, who held the previous record of 32.

One oldtimer still is ahead of Borg on consecutive Wimbledon titles. Willie Renshaw won six years running from 1881 to 1886.

McDaniel, Gould stage battle in Clark tourney

The 16th annual George Clark golf tournament at the Midland Country Club is producing a wicked battle between Gene McDaniel and John Gould in the Division I race, which is for golfers with handicaps of 15 and below.

McDaniel, the first day leader after Friday's play with a 67, produced another 67 Saturday for a two-day 134. But Gould, who had a 68 Friday, came back with a remarkable 66 on Saturday to move into the first place tie heading into today's final 18-hole round.

Bill Gesell is three strokes off the pace with a 137 after a fine round of 67 on Saturday. Other division leaders are Al Dillard, 138; Tom Garber, 139; Noel Sikes, 141; Dr. John Young, 142; and Dan Leonard, 143.

In the Division II race, which is for golfers with handicaps of 16 and over, Lloyd Uglund holds a three-stroke lead over the field after back-to-back 65s. Gene Wentworth and Howard Shaw both stand at 133 after identical rounds of 68 and 65.

Other Division II leaders include John Bullard and Jack Matthews, 135; Bill Bohanan, 136; Timber Floyd, 137; and James Lacy, 138.

Los Angeles back in first place

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Steve Garvey's run-scoring single and a sacrifice fly by Dusty Baker in the sixth inning broke a 1-1 tie, and Los Angeles held on to beat the San Francisco Giants 3-2 Saturday night. The victory put the Dodgers back in first place in the National League West with their fourth straight win.

Reggie Smith slugged his 15th homer, and San Francisco's Milt May hit his fourth as the teams entered the sixth tied 1-1.

Rudy Law led off the sixth with a single and stole second. After Smith walked, pitcher Ed Whitson made an errant throw to second on a pickoff try and the runners advanced.

Cubs down Dodgers Henry Mack goes route for triumph

By RICHARD VINCENT
Sports Writer

Ladies and gentlemen, it looks like Henry Mack, the Winchester, Ky., 'rifle' is on target again, particularly after Saturday night's route-going performance at Cubs Stadium, a 5-4 victory over San Antonio which insures Midland's share of first place in the Texas League West Division.

The Cubs, who played the first half of the split TL season something like a sinking ship, now have won four straight and seem to be sailing in the right direction. They'll try to maintain the steady course tonight (6:30) when the two teams meet again at Cubs Stadium. Jon Perlman is expected to be the Cubs' starter.

Mack, who has had his share of problems this season (he's now 3-8), got off to a rocky start Saturday, walking the first two batters he faced. Still, Mack, who allowed seven hits and walked seven, wasn't tagged for the first safety until the fourth, and by then, he appeared in control.

The offensive pyrotechnics came from third baseman J. W. Mitchell, whose sacrifice fly in the eighth scored Tom Grant with the winner. Mitchell also collected a triple and a single and accounted for three Midland runs.

Fletcher added to the fireworks with a solo homer over the left field fence in the third, and catcher Mike Shepton pocketed a run-batted-in with a single in the second. Also, designated hitter Dave Stockstill played his role to a "T" with two base hits.

Midland took a 2-0 advantage in the second inning as the Dodgers ran into some fielding problems.

Gary Krug reached when losing pitcher Brian Holton bobbled a toss from first baseman Mike Marshall. Krug was later forced at second when Randy LaVigne hit into a fielder's choice. But, Stockstill delivered a single to right, moving runners to first and third. LaVigne scored on Mitchell's single to left before Shepton singled and Stockstill scored from second as Dodger rightfielder Mark Bradley threw wide of catcher Jesse Baez on what otherwise might've been an extremely close play.

AL All-Stars battling long dry spell

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Battling a dry spell which has lasted 17 years, the American League takes a new-look team into the 1980 All-Star Game against the National League Tuesday night in Dodger Stadium.

Half of the players on the 28-man AL team will be making their All-Star debuts, hoping to snap a hex which has seen the Americans manage only one victory in this series since 1963. The Nationals have won eight straight games and 16 of the last 17 contests. The only AL victory over that stretch was a 6-4 decision in 1971 at Detroit. Overall, the NL holds a 31-18-1 edge.

Trying to break the NL stranglehold, the Americans will use some fresh faces. Only two pitchers on Manager Earl Weaver's eight-man All-Star staff have appeared in these games before. They are New York Yankee teammates Tommy John and Rich Gosage.

Weaver's other hurlers are all new to this midseason gathering of baseball's best players. They are starters Larry Gura of Kansas City, Steve Stone of Baltimore, Rick Honeycutt of Seattle and Dave Stieb of Toronto, and relievers Ed Farmer of Chicago and Tom Burgmeier of Boston.

The National League, on the other hand, has assembled a veteran All-Star pitching staff, headed by 13-game winner Steve Carlton, the top winner in either league. Carlton was the NL starter last season and was the starter and winner of the 1969 game.

Backing him are Jerry Reuss of Los Angeles, who started the 1975 game for the NL and has authored the season's only no-hitter, Jim Bibby of Pittsburgh, J.R. Richard of Houston and Bob Welch of Los Angeles, Bruce Sutter of Chicago, the winning pitcher in the last two All-Star games, and Kent Tekulve of Pittsburgh.

Bibby, Richard, Tekulve and Welch each were picked for the first time as Ed Whitson of San Francisco, named to replace teammate Vida Blue.

Three of the eight AL starters elected in the fan vote will not be available because of injuries. They are left fielder Jim Rice of the Boston Red Sox, second baseman Paul Molitor of the Milwaukee Brewers and third baseman George Brett of the Kansas City Royals. All three will be with the club but have been replaced on the AL roster.

The other AL starters are Rod Carew of California at first base, New York's Bucky Dent at shortstop, Boston's Fred Lynn and Reggie Jackson of New York in the outfield, and Carlton Fisk of Boston catching.

Besides the six pitchers, other first-time AL stars are catcher Lance Parrish of Detroit, shortstops Alan Trammell of Detroit and Robin Yount of Milwaukee, and outfielders Ken Landreaux of Minnesota, Al Bumbry of Baltimore, Rickey Henderson of Oakland, Ben Oglivie of Milwaukee and Jorge Orta of Cleveland.

Completing the AL team are

Kansas City catcher Darrell Porter, first baseman Cecil Cooper of Milwaukee, second baseman Bobby Grich of California and Willie Randolph of New York, third basemen Buddy Bell of Texas and Graig Nettles of New York, and outfielder Al Oliver of Texas.

The NL starting team includes four members of the host Los Angeles Dodgers. They are first baseman Steve Garvey, second baseman Dave Lopes, shortstop Bill Russell and outfielder Reggie Smith. Also elected to the starting eight were third baseman Mike Schmidt of Philadelphia, outfielders Dave Parker of Pittsburgh, the MVP in this game a year ago, and Dave Kingman of Chicago and catcher Johnny Bench of Cincinnati. Schmidt, out with a hamstring pull, was replaced on the NL squad by Cincinnati third baseman Ray Knight.

of 12 reserves added to the NL team.

Also picked for the squad were catchers Gary Carter of Montreal and John Stearns of the New York Mets, first baseman Keith Hernandez of St. Louis, second baseman Phil Garner of Pittsburgh, shortstop Dave Concepcion of Cincinnati, third baseman Ken Reitz of St. Louis and outfielders Jose Cruz of Houston, Ken Griffey of Cincinnati, George Hendrick of St. Louis, Dale Murphy of Atlanta and Dave Winfield of San Diego.

For the NL, Cruz, Murphy, Reitz and Knight will be making their All-Star debuts. The rest of the team has played in at least one of these games before.

Lopes led all players in votes with 3,862,403, winning the Gillette trophy, while Carew, the AL vote leader with 3,674,247, pushed his all-time total to 26,532,700. Bench is the second-most popular choice for votes over the 11 years since Commissioner Bowie Kuhn returned the

Cards top Phillies

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Keith Hernandez drove in three runs and George Hendrick knocked in two more to help the St. Louis Cardinals to a 6-1 triumph over the Philadelphia Phillies Saturday night.

Cards starter Jim Kaat, 3-5, pitched a six-hitter, struck out two and walked none. The only run he surrendered was unearned.

A two-run single by Hernandez sparked a three-run first inning off Phillies starter Randy Lerch, 3-11. The hit followed a leadoff walk by Bobby Bonds and a double by Garry Templeton. Hernandez then drove in the third run with a double.

The Cards added two more runs in the fifth on a single by Bonds, his stolen base, a triple by Hernandez and an RBI single by Hendrick.

St. Louis got its final run in the seventh as Bonds walked, stole second and scored on Simmons' double.

Ridden by John Giovanni, Burn's Return ran a mile and a sixteenth in 1:45.5. The 4-year-old, daughter of Big Burn, owned by the Ivanhoe stable, carried top weight of 123 pounds, 12 more than Newmarket Lady. Burn's Return paid $2.80, $3 and $2.40.

Newmarket Lady, who closed at 35-1, paid $14.40 and $4.40. Tangerine Doll paid $3 to show.

Burn's Return went to the front at the break and led Solo Haina by a length down the backstretch.

Pirates top Cubs, 5-4

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Bill Robinson's fifth-inning sacrifice fly scored Tim Foli and gave the Pittsburgh Pirates a 5-4 victory over the Chicago Cubs Saturday night.

Foli led off the fifth with a single against Chicago reliever Willie Hernandez, 1-8. A single by John Milner sent Foli to third and Robinson followed with his fly to right field.

The Pirates had taken a 4-0 lead, scoring two runs in each of the first two innings against Cubs starter Dennis Lamp. In the first, Omar Moreno led off with a single, stole second and beat a throw to third on Foli's bunt. After Foli went to second on an infield out, Milner singled, scoring both runners.

In the second, Mike Easler drove in two runs with a single.

Chicago tied it in the fourth against Pirates starter John Candelaria, 5-7. Lenny Randle tripled and scored on a double by Bill Buckner. Jerry Martin singled and took third on a double by Mike Vail.

Barry Foote drove in two runs with a single to right, scoring Martin and Vail.

Cubs outfielder Scot Thompson was carried unconscious from the field on a stretcher after he collided with Foli on a stolen base attempt in the seventh.

John wins 12th Olympian wins meet

CLEVELAND (AP) — Left-hander Tommy John posted his 12th victory of the year with the help of home runs from Bobby Murcer and Joe Lefebvre, and the New York Yankees defeated the Cleveland Indians 3-2 Saturday in a rain-interrupted contest.

The game was delayed by rain for 1½ hours with Graig Nettles at first and none out in the top of the sixth. When the delay ended, Monge replaced Spillner for the Indians.

John, 12-3, allowed four hits in eight innings work, two of them solo homers, in tying Baltimore's Steve Stone for the American League lead in victories. Yankees right-hander Rich Gossage pitched the ninth and earned his 13th save as New York won its seventh game in eight outings.

Cleveland starter Dan Spillner, 7-6, combined with Sid Monge and Mike Stanton to limit the Yankees to just four hits.

The Yankees took a 1-0 lead on Lefebvre's blast with two outs in the second. The Indians answered that with a two-out solo shot in the bottom of the inning by Bo Diaz.

New York went ahead for good in the third on Willie Randolph's two-out walk and Murcer's fourth home run against Cleveland this year, his 10th overall.

Gary Alexander smacked a solo homer off John in the eighth, his second of the year.

The game was delayed by rain for 1½ hours with Graig Nettles at first and none out in the top of the sixth. When the delay ended, Monge replaced Spillner for the Indians.

Birdsell, of Industry Hills, and former Olympian Joe Bottom were the night's only double winners.

Bruner, who won the 800 and 200 freestyle races on Friday, easily outdistanced the field in the 400 freestyle Saturday.

The Mesa Aquatics swimmer was clocked in 3:55.50, .32 seconds slower than Brian Goodell's meet record of last year. However, he was more than nine seconds faster than second-place finisher Ed Ryder of Mission Viejo.

Vassallo, of Mission Viejo, who holds the world record in the 400 individual medley, won that event in 4:30.80, .48 seconds faster than his meet mark of 1978. However, it was more than 10 seconds off his world record.

Birdsell won the women's 100 butterfly in 1:02.44, .70 seconds faster than Nancy Hogshead's mark of 1978. Birdsell also came back to win the 50 freestyle in 26.76.

Cynthia Woodhead, of Riverside, also won her second event of the meet, taking the 400 freestyle in 4:44.45.

Margaret Hoefflich of Concord-Pleasant Hill was the other individual winner, taking the 100 backstroke in 1:07.25.

The three-day meet concludes Sunday.

Arizona scandal brings charges

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — Charges of financial irregularities in the University of Arizona football program have been turned over to the state attorney general's office for possible grand jury action, a Tucson newspaper reports.

The Arizona Department of Public Safety's investigation of reimbursement to former coaches for recruiting trips they never made may go to a grand jury by Aug. 1, the Arizona Daily Star said in Sunday's editions.

The Tucson Police Department investigated charges that football players received paychecks totaling thousands of dollars from the city parks department without doing any work.

Both investigations were begun after the Star published a series of articles on the football program.

Coach Tony Mason subsequently resigned, but has filed a claim for $2 million, charging that the university pressured him to quit and denied due process.

Mason admitted that coaches took money for recruiting trips that never were made, but he said the funds were used to reimburse "out-of-pocket" expenses for recruiting.

Reds in Astros sweep

CINCINNATI (AP) — Ray Knight's double keyed a three-run fourth inning that lifted the Cincinnati Reds to a 3-2 victory Saturday over the Houston Astros and a sweep of their doubleheader.

Cincinnati catcher Joe Nolan knocked in three runs with a pair of singles in the first game to help the Reds overcome a six-run Houston first inning with an 8-6 victory.

The sweep gave Cincinnati three straight victories over the slumping Astros, losers of six of their past seven games.

Starter Mike LaCoss, 5-7, scattered six hits over 62-3 innings in the nightcap for his first victory in five weeks.

Cesar Cedeno doubled home Jose Cruz for one Houston run in the sixth, and pinch-hitter Jeff Leonard tripled in the seventh to score Luis Pujols for the other run.

Knight, who also drove in two runs in the first game, doubled home Dave Concepcion and Dan Driessen with one out in the third off starter Joaquin Andujar, 0-4. Junior Kennedy followed with a single to score Knight.

Relievers Dave Tomlin and Tom Hume held Houston scoreless over the last 21-3 innings to preserve the victory. Hume picked up his 12th save.

Mario Soto, 1-3, won the first game by relieving rookie Bruce Berenyi in the first inning and holding the Astros scoreless over the next eight.

Alcott captures three-stroke lead

NOBLESVILLE, Ind. (AP) — Amy Alcott survived bogeys on her first two holes Saturday to retain the lead with a record 10-under-par 206 after 54 holes of a $150,000 Ladies Professional Golf Association tournament.

Alcott carded a par 72 on the 6,044-yard Harbour Trees Golf Club course in her third round to open a 3-stroke advantage over Sally Little. The 206 broke the 54-hole tournament mark of 209 set by Jane Blalock in 1978.

The 4-year-old Mayflower Classic is being played over 72 holes for the first time and will end Sunday.

Alcott, who set a one-day mark with a 65 on Friday, three-putted from 25 feet on her opening hole and then picked up another bogey when she missed a 10-footer on the par-5 505-yard No. 2 hole.

Both Daniel, last year's rookie of the year, was alone in third place after carding an unusual 2-under-par 70.

Cubs triumph

In the third, the Cubs took a 3-0 advantage on Fletcher's homer.

But San Antonio was determined to come back. They did.

They grabbed a pair of runs in the fourth when Marshall drew a walk and Dale Holman, who paced the Dodgers' attack, sent a drive over the "Green Monster" wall in deep center.

Then, San Antonio tied it in the sixth as Holman walked, stole second and scored on Mike Zouras' double to shallow right.

Midland, however, came right back in its half of the sixth and LaVigne singled, went to second on Stockstill's hit and scored on Mitchell's booming three-bagger to deep left center.

The seesaw wasn't about to stop, either.

Once more, the Dodgers clawed back to even, this time with a lone run in the seventh as Larry Fobbs singled, stole second and scored on Alex Taveras' single.

It was Midland, though, who had the last gasp. Grant opened the eighth with a double to left, went to third on a fielder's choice and scored on Mitchell's fly out to left.

Ali, Holmes dine together

BLOOMINGTON, Minn. (AP) — Muhammad Ali and Larry Holmes exchanged barbs about what they will do to one another in the ring and then went to dinner together Saturday night.

Ali arrived here to watch Holmes' World Boxing Council heavyweight title defense against Scott LeDoux Monday night as the wheels continued to turn for a Holmes-Ali fight in the fall.

Promoter Don King is trying to put together such a bout and said it could end up in Egypt or Las Vegas. Saudi Arabia also has been mentioned in connection with Ali's comeback in which he would seek to become champion for a fourth time.

"I'm gonna whip you," said Ali, shooting left jabs at Holmes and just barely missing the champion's face.

"Don't ruin Scott LeDoux's chance," shouted King when Ali just barely missed Holmes' face.

The two fighters engaged in about 15 minutes of mock threats and quips and Holmes said, "I can't win. If I beat you they'd say you were an old man. If I lose, they'll say I never had it."

Royals topple Mariners

KANSAS CITY (AP) — Jeff Twitty got the victory in his major league debut, and U.L. Washington and Clint Hurdle drove in two runs apiece Saturday night, boosting Kansas City to a 5-4 victory over the Seattle Mariners.

The victory gave the Royals a season-high 9½-game lead in the American League West.

hander, relieved Renie Martin with one out and two on in the fifth and held the Mariners to one run through 21-3 innings.

The Royals jumped on Mike Parrott, 1-10, for four runs in the third on five singles and a wild pitch.

Pete LaCock singled leading off, then singles by Frank White and Willie Wilson loaded the bases.

Fin & Feather

Few things in this world are more compatible than kids and fishing. However, first experiences can certainly make or break this fledgling angler.

Teaching a kid to fish could become a major chore to someone well into fishing. This is pure and simple because catching often is secondary to the fishing experience itself.

How many times have you met a person who has indicated they tried fishing as a kid, gave it up, and now, years later are interested in giving it a second chance?

That's unfortunate. Reading between the lines, those early experiences must have disappointed them thoroughly. They've missed years of enjoyment and therapeutic aspects of fishing, probably because they were never started in the proper direction to begin with.

I've taken several young boys and girls on fishing trips. Casting for bass or sitting in the boat all day long waiting for a channel catfish to bite isn't much fun for a young fishing newcomer. He'll soon forget what all that new equipment he received for Christmas is for.

The first step in hooking youngsters to fishing is matching the tackle to their talents. The timeless cane pole, red and white bobber is a perfect way to interest youngsters in fishing.

The biggest mistake is to expect too much too soon. Take them on an excursion where they can haul home a braggin'-size basket of panfish, and they'll be hooked — probably for life.

Secondly, it's important to play the best odds you can, whatever you're fishing for. If you're determined to make a bass fisherman out of the little lad, then take him or her to a well-stocked farm pond and turn him loose.

However, if you go to a large reservoir, don't expect the child to share your enthusiasm for bass fishing.

The biggest thrill for a youngster is bringing home a tub full of fish. No matter how large or small the catch, they're just as proud. And photographs, don't forget to take plenty of pictures.

I've stressed the importance of getting fish for the youngster, but it can become a serious problem if there's no graduation to the next big step — appreciation of fishing for what it is.

If we're going to build a generation of sportsmen, rather than meat collectors, it's important to stress the challenge of fishing.

Catching a fish is certainly one of the great pleasures in life. But if you depict the art of sportfishing as a means of survival, or an ego booster, then you've missed the whole boat, hook, line and sinker.

Langford, Henderson pace Oakland victory

CHICAGO (AP) — Right-hander Rick Langford pitched a four-hitter and Ricky Henderson hit a three-run homer Saturday as the Oakland A's beat the Chicago White Sox 5-0 for their fourth consecutive victory.

Langford, 5-9, snapped a personal six-game losing streak with his second shutout and 12th complete game of the season. Rich Dotson, 7-4 was the loser.

The A's scored a run in the first when Henderson singled, went to third on a single by Dwayne Murphy and scored on Mitchell Page's ground-er.

They added another in the fourth when Tony Armas reached on an error by third baseman Kevin Bell and came home on three walks by Dotson.

Henderson hit his fourth home run of the season in the eighth after Mike Heath walked and Jeff Cox beat out a bunt for his third hit of the game.

Krantz retains lead in Scandinavian

HELSINGBORG, Sweden (AP) — American Mike Krantz, challenged by a group of Britons, shot a 3-under-par 69 and retained a two-stroke lead after Saturday's third round in the $115,000 Scandinavian Enterprise Open Golf Championships.

Krantz, a 27-year-old globetrotter from Huntington Beach, Calif., led with a 54-hole total of 206, 10 under par, going into Sunday's final round.

Defending champion Sandy Lyle and fellow Briton Mark James were two strokes behind at 208. Lyle fired a 67 and James had a 68 Saturday.

British Open and U.S. Masters champion Seve Ballesteros of Spain shot his third straight 71 for 213 and trailed Krantz by seven strokes. Ballesteros was runnerup here last year.

Sam Torrance of Britain shot a 67 and was alone in fourth place at 209. Ken Brown, who had a 66 for the day's top score, came next at 210.

Gordon Brand and Ewen Murray, two other Britons, tied for sixth at 211.

Bosox blank Orioles by 1-0

BALTIMORE (AP) — John Tudor, Bob Stanley and Tom Burgmeier combined on a four-hitter as the Boston Red Sox defeated the Baltimore Orioles 1-0 Saturday.

Dave Stapleton's sacrifice fly off Jim Palmer, 8-5, in the second inning produced the only run of the game. Carl Yastrzemski opened the inning with a double down the left field line and went to third on an infield out before scoring on Stapleton's drive to deep center.

Tudor, 1-1, making his first start since being recalled from Pawtucket of the International League, allowed only two hits before Stanley took over at the start of the seventh inning in his second relief appearance of the season.

Stanley was lifted after Pat Kelly hit a pinch double to open the eighth and was sacrificed to third by Al Bumby.

Burgmeier was brought in when left-hander Terry Crowley was sent up to bat for Rich Dauer. When the pitching change was made, Baltimore Manager Earl Weaver countered with right-hander Lenn Sakata as a pinch hitter for Crowley, but Sakata grounded out to second and Kelly had to hold at third.

Burgmeier then retired Ken Singleton on a grounder to third to end the inning. He allowed a two-out double to Lee May in the ninth before getting Doug DeCinces to ground out to third, wrapping up his 15th save.

Tudor issued four walks, but he stranded five runners in scoring position while being helped by three fine defensive plays by third baseman Butch Hobson.

He also aided his own cause by picking Bumby off second base with two on and one out in the first inning, and by spearing a line drive by Kiko Garcia in the second with two runners in scoring position.

Palmer allowed seven hits, striking out seven and walking none.

Smalley's homer edges Rangers 2-1

BLOOMINGTON, Minn. (AP) — Roy Smalley's two-run homer off the right-field foul pole in the fourth inning gave the Minnesota Twins a 2-1 victory over the Texas Rangers Saturday behind the six-hit pitching of Geoff Zahn.

Smalley's home run, his ninth of the season, came off loser Ferguson Jenkins, 7-6, who allowed only five hits and struck out a season-high nine. The homer followed a single by Rick Sotfield.

Zahn, 7-10, allowed a run in the first when Al Oliver walked with two out and Buddy Bell and Richie Zisk singled. After that he had to work out of trouble twice for the victory.

In the sixth inning, Mickey Rivers reached first on Smalley's error and was sacrificed to second by Bump Wills. Oliver then walked and the Rangers loaded the bases when third base-

Homers power Toronto to win over Detroit

DETROIT (AP) — Barry Bonnell and John Mayberry homered to help the Toronto Blue Jays snap a five-game losing streak with a 5-3 victory Saturday over the Detroit Tigers.

After Richie Hebner's run-scoring single gave Detroit a 1-0 lead in the top of the second inning, Bonnell tied the game by drilling a shot into the lower left field seats. Mayberry put the Blue Jays ahead to stay with his bases-empty blast, his 14th home run of the season, off Detroit starter Milt Wilcox, 8-5, in the third.

Toronto got another run in the fifth. Alfredo Griffin reached second when Rick Peters dropped his sinking line drive in center field. He scored all the way from second on a sacrifice fly by Bob Bailor because Detroit's Steve Kemp slipped and fell after a long run to catch the drive in left.

Tamm wins hammer throw in upset

MOSCOW (AP) — Yuri Tamm upset world record holder Sergei Litvinov in the hammer throw Saturday as the Olympic gold medal favorites showed their form at the Soviet track and field trials.

The 22-year-old Tamm hurled the iron ball 263 feet 9 1/2 inches on his last attempt in the Lenin Stadium competition area where the Soviet men are expected to dominate the Olympic event later this month.

Litvinov, also 22 but shorter and heavier than Tamm, got off his best mark of 262 on the fourth try, but was unable to improve when he threw into the safety net on the fifth try and abandoned the last attempt.

Litvinov set the world record of 267-11 last Aug. 15 in the same meet where Tamm set his personal best mark of 263-11 1/2.

Gold medalist at the 1976 Montreal Olympics, Yuri Sedykh, placed third with 259-1/2 in the all-Soviet field of 12.

Nearly 600 Soviet athletes are competing in the three-day Znamensky Brothers Memorial Meet honoring pre-war distance runners, the last tuneup before the July 19-Aug. 3 Olympics. About 70 foreigners from mostly Eastern European nations were invited to Moscow the help give the Russians extra competition.

Natalia Bochina, an 18-year-old Leningrad high school graduate, clocked a world record for juniors in winning the 200-meters in 22.45 seconds.

Town's untidy painter uses automotive shop for home and office

By JULES LOH
AP Special Correspondent

CHATHAM, Va. (AP) — The population of this town of genteel culture and Southern charm is given as 1,801 citizens, one citizen removed from numerical tidiness. That would be Hibble.

Hibble drifted here in the early '60s. Since then, although he never set out to do so, he has left his mark all over town.

Hibble paints. He paints pictures of people's homes and of mossy old antebellum buildings that decorate this county, views of the courthouse and the Confederate monument, scenes of tobacco barns and weary rail fences out in the country.

These pictures number in the hundreds; Hibble doesn't keep count. They hang over parlor mantle pieces and on the walls of stores and shops and offices up and down Main Street.

For someone not particularly interested in work, indeed scornful of it, the output is prodigious. They're everywhere. That isn't all. To tide him over between sprints of creativity, or to answer thirst, Hibble also paints signs. He did the Red Fox Inn for lunch and beer. He did the Magic Mist Car Wash for 16 quarts of grape wine, one quart per letter.

He did the signs at Vincent Shorter's Garage, though, for gratitude.

Hibble lives at Shorter's Garage. Vincent took a liking to him some years ago and told him, go ahead, roll in a cot.

He props his canvas on a stack of tires by the grease rack, or he sits outside in the shade on a gasoline tank, a rusty truck fender for an easel and, providing the muse arouses him and his hand is steady, he paints.

In bad weather he paints, and occasionally naps, in a decrepit red car mired out back, a Mercedes.

"Might as well go for quality," Hibble said. He is, however, giving thought to moving to a roomier studio, a blue Chatham Hall school bus languishing nearby. Upward mobility has its uncertainties. He'll decide later. No rush.

Hibble was born in 1920, near Newport News, Va. His parents named him Wilson Gregory, and he signs his work "W.G. Hibble." The ladies of Chatham, who do admire his talent, if not all of his habits, refer to him properly as "Mr. Hibble."

"I'd rather be called Hibble," he said, "just Hibble." The name stitched over the pocket of the blue workshirt he wears, a Shorter's Garage shirt, is just "Hibble."

When Hibble was 17, he ran off and joined the Navy. He dabbled at painting, and when World War II ended, he went to art school in Boston and took a job at an advertising agency.

"I worked there 15 years," he said. "Then, one sunny day, I sat gazing out the window at people lying around Boston Common, doing nothing. I said to myself, that's the life for me."

Next day he caught a bus, got off in Virginia.

He peddled paintings and lived here and there, above a store, in a farm shed, under a peach tree. He sought no almshouse.

One day the wife of the president of the Planters Bank saw him painting a Main Street scene, saw his work (which favors the style of Andrew Wyeth), and on the spot, commissioned a series of paintings for the bank.

Debated religious discoveries to be presented to Midlanders

Several of the most debated religious and archeological discoveries of this century will be presented to Midlanders, 7 p.m., Thursday in the Pioneer Natural Gas Room, 511 W. Missouri Ave.

An audio-visual account detailing the sighting of what some claim to be Noah's ark on Mount Ararat in Turkey as well as the Tower of Babel and Atlantis among others can be viewed free of charge in a two-hour session by the Institute for Restoring Ancient History International.

The Frankton-based organization has indicated they have evidence confirming the Genesis account, chapters 6-8, of a worldwide flood which destroyed the inhabitants of the world leaving Noah and his family to re-populate the earth, noted Bob Wilcoxson of the Institute.

Mount Ararat, a 17,011-foot volcano, is located in Turkey near the place where Iran, Turkey and Russia meet, according to maps of the area. The boat-like structure is resting in a 90-degree angle in front of a glacial pool.

During the early part of this century, a Russian archeological team supposedly had actually touched and walked about on the ark, Wilcoxson said, adding the discovery was never released from Russia because of the Bolshevik Revolution's censure of religious activities.

Interestingly, he explained, other cultures such as the American Indian have stories detailing a worldwide flood.

Information regarding the sighting took 15 years to gather, he said, adding that most of the material was included in the motion picture "In Search of Noah's Ark."

Also, the Institute has indicated evidence suggesting the existence of Atlantis, an island in the Atlantic Ocean explained by Plato in his work "Timaeus."

It is believed the island was located near Azores Islands in the Atlantic, Wilcoxson said. However, certain types of architecture similar to those found near Azores have been discovered near the East Texas town of Rockwall, he said.

Citizens of Atlantis, who escaped from the island's destruction, are presumed to be predecessors of the Aztec and the Incas race, Wilcoxson said.

Another area of interest for biblical scholars and archeologists has been discovery of the Tower of Babel, Wilcoxson noted.

According to a Genesis account, a tower was constructed by men attempting to see God in the heavens. But, the construction was terminated when God caused the men to speak in different languages, the account says.

Stones unearthed near the tower's location have inscriptions declaring the existence of one god, Wilcoxson said. In addition, supporting structures of what is believed to be the tower have been found near the Israeli border, Wilcoxson said.

Jewish groups denounce movie, 'Wholly Moses!'

NEW YORK (AP) — Five Orthodox Jewish groups on Friday denounced Columbia Pictures' "Wholly Moses!" as "the most vicious attack ever upon the Jewish religion in the history of the American movie industry."

The groups, which claim to represent over 2,000 Orthodox rabbis and nearly 1 million Orthodox Jews in the United States and Canada, compared the showing of the film to events in Nazi Germany and Soviet Russia. They called on major presidential candidates and their parties to declare opposition to what they called blasphemy and mockery under the guise of humor.

There was no comment immediately from the film's makers.

"Wholly Moses," a comedy set in Biblical times about a man who tries to be Moses, recently opened to generally poor reviews. The film was being shown in over 600 theaters in the United States and Canada.

"This savage mockery of our God, our Bible, including the Ten Commandments, and our prophet and teacher Moses, is comparable to events that occurred in Nazi Germany and Soviet Russia," said Rabbi Abraham Hecht, president of one of the protesting groups, the Rabbinical Alliance of America in Brooklyn.

"By ridiculing the divine origin of the Ten Commandments and insultingly parodying God himself, the film undermines the very foundation on which our Western system of justice, morality and ethical conduct is based," said the Brooklyn rabbi.

Joining the Rabbinical Alliance in protest were the Union of Orthodox Rabbis of the United States and Canada.

15th century handbound books on display at Houston museum

HOUSTON — Two special exhibits are now on display at the Museum of Fine Arts in Houston.

"Bookbinding: A Living Art," an exhibit of original, handbound books dating from the early 15th century through the 20th century, is currently on display through Sept. 7 in the Masterson Junior Gallery.

The books, all held in individual or institutional Texas collections, are the works of artists from around the world. This exhibit is organized in four sections.

The first group of bindings are those of the 15th through the 19th centuries. In addition to their inherent aesthetic interest, these books serve as a point of comparison with the contemporary bindings. Another section includes examples of binders' work of the last generation which has influenced today's binders. The largest part of the exhibit is devoted to the work of contemporary binding artists. The final section displays the work of Texas binders.

Changes in the craft of bookbinding have reflected historical developments. Until the 19th century when mechanization allowed for mass production, all bindings were done by hand. Many custom binders, however, continued to pursue their craft, employing materials ranging from Moroccan leather to needlework.

Bindings, through the 18th century, were often decorated with architectural motifs or other designs which had no relationship to the content of the text. The concept of text-to-cover, covers which illustrate the text material, emerged early in the 20th century.

The Delaunay exhibit, "Sonia Delaunay: A Retrospective," is composed of more than 200 works, including oil paintings, gouaches and prints, as well as original designs she created for fabrics, fashions, ceramics and books.

Mrs. Delaunay, who died in 1979, was the wife of artist Robert Delaunay. She is considered the last survivor of the School of Paris group, believing strongly in an art which encompassed all aspects of life.

Born in Russia in 1885, she was sent to college in Germany to study drawing. From there, in 1905, she moved to Paris which was the center of the revolutionary Impressionist movement. Her first show was in 1908, the same year she married Wilhelm Uhde. She later divorced Uhde to marry Robert Delaunay.

The Delaunays lived in Portugal during World War I, when, because the Russian revolution cut off their source of funds, Mrs. Delaunay was forced to open Casa Sonia, an interior design studio and boutique which carried designs she created for lampshades, parasols and handbags. She also established herself as an innovator in costume and fashion design with the outfits she created for the dancers in the Russian Ballet.

Both shows have exhibition catalogues that are available. For more information contact the Museum of Fine Arts at 1-713-526-1361.

Your horoscope

By JEANE DIXON

Sunday, July 6, 1980

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Actor Sylvester Stallone shares your birthday, and a determination much like that shown by "Rocky" enables you to make large strides forward in career or business this fall. New leadership qualities surface, and others begin to look your way for guidance. Self-improvement courses or additional studies will aid your trip to the top. Be sure to share a new awareness of your abilities with mate, romantic partner. Loved ones can feel needlessly threatened by what they do not understand! Spend as much time as possible with offspring.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Personal relationship improves after heart-to-heart talk. Discuss future career moves with your nearest and dearest. Much contentment can be found in staying at home, tending to domestic affairs.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Reason your way out of a tough financial dilemma. Talk less and listen more. Intuition is right on target where a new love is concerned. Try not to show surprise at what mate, spouse has to say regarding the future.

Monday, July 7, 1980

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Tensions that have impaired your happiness and progress in the recent past will soon be swept away forever! Some attitudes change and you gain more accurate insights into the motives of others. A good friend helps you recognize an exciting career opportunity. Develop new interests and have at least one absorbing hobby to pursue on week-ends. Romance should be happy so long as you do not try to push partner into making a greater commitment than he or she wants. True success in love results from each person thinking he is the lucky one!

ARIES (March 21-April 19): A fine day for handling financial details and seeking favors from influential people. Personal service is highlighted. New family agreement can prove useful if there are not strings attached.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Insist on fair play where career, employment matters are involved. Background information helps you impress a difficult higher-up. Pay raise or promotion could be in the works. Expect phone call or letter to bring good news.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Creative efforts can be more lucrative than a loved one thinks. Set aside some time to do over personal finances. Important bill may have been overlooked. Dress to impress if attending a social function.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Stick to the tried-and-true today, and steer clear of someone promoting a get-rich-quick scheme. An exchange of ideas with a close friend could prove rewarding to both parties involved.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): All signs look great for new projects. Think carefully before rushing into new contracts, agreements. Look around for the best possible terms before making final decision.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): The cooperation of a family member is necessary to the success of certain social ambitions. Prominent associate may offer some helpful advice about career. Show your appreciation.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Keep a tight rein on purse strings today. An influential acquaintance is congenial but unimaginative. Avoid arguments with loved ones by being extra patient with someone who is moody.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): List your priorities, and stick to them! Others look to you for leadership, guidance. Take stand on issue dividing the community neighborhood.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Now is the time for quiet persistence. Do not fret over the loss of something replaceable. It is important to know the difference between a minor upset and a major catastrophe.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Bask in the support and encouragement of mate, romantic partner. Employment affairs enjoy favorable influences. Use greater restraint.

Defective pap tests reported

BOSTON (AP) — Federal and state health authorities say "several hundred" women who had pap smears analyzed by a Boston laboratory may have been given faulty results.

A "health alert" was issued last week by the Boston office of the U.S. Health and Human Services Department, along with the State Department of Public Health. Women were urged check with their doctor or clinic to see whether they need re-testing for cervical cancer.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Open new lines of communication with relatives. Have a frank talk with someone who always takes but seldom gives. Hunch could be both valid and premature.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Set aside some time for quiet meditation. Speculation should be avoided, but creative enterprises can bring extra income. New ways will soon be found to reduce everyday expenditures.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Continue to concentrate on domestic matters, personal goals. Loved one may be most appreciative of your efforts but not know how to show it. A last-minute invitation could lead to an important new friendship.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): The companionship of old friends will be most rewarding today. Cater to whims of mate, romantic partner. Candid discussion with someone special yields new insights.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): A good day to get together with someone who has been absent from the social scene recently. An attractive stranger could try to lead you down the garden path.

Crime increasing in rural Texas areas

By SALLY CARPENTER
Associated Press Writer

In the 1970s, Texans joined a nationwide movement to America's countryside. Refugees from the teeming humanity of Houston, Dallas and San Antonio streamed into the wide-open, crime-free spaces.

As a result, some Texas towns grew faster than the big cities, and by 1979, their crime rates exceeded the state average.

And so far this year that trend is holding.

A study by the Texas Department of Public Safety showed crime up 6-7 percent across Texas in 1979. In a survey of Part I crimes — murder, rape, robbery, aggravated assault, burglary, felony theft and auto theft — officials in some smaller cities say their rates are even higher in 1980.

A survey of five mid-size Texas cities showed an average 24.5 percent increase this year over the first five months of 1979.

In Abilene, crime jumped almost 14 percent in 1979, and it has skyrocketed an additional 22 percent in 1980. Murder has shown the most dramatic increase this year in Abilene, up 60 percent. Only robbery, aggravated assault and auto theft have declined, said Sgt. Harold Emerson of the Abilene Police Department.

In Odessa, where crime rose 23 percent in 1979, the population grew even more — from 8,000 to 115,000.

"We're the nation's fastest-growing small city," said Officer Dan Webster of the Odessa Police Department Crime Prevention Division. "There's just more people. You're bound to have more crime."

So far in 1980, Odessa has shown a 3 percent increase over 1979, with jumps in all categories but auto theft. Murder is up 120 percent.

Longview's crime rate jumped 54 percent over 1978, and an additional 54 percent for the first five months of this year with aggravated assault the only category to decline.

The city's largest increase has been in burglaries — 98 percent — and crime prevention officer Gene Noble calls that "mind boggling."

"The problem with (illegal) aliens is tremendous," he said. "They expect streets of gold and we don't have them. They don't have anything; they're hungry; they steal."

Most of the burglaries are very small, Noble said, adding: "They do more damage by breaking a $10 windowpane than what they steal."

"I'm at a loss. It's very, very disturbing."

In Wichita Falls, crime was up 7.76 percent over 1978, but officials said it skyrocketed 46 percent through May 1980.

Murder is up 100 percent, and burglary 72 percent. Rape was the only Part I crime to decrease.

Lubbock, the only city of the five to show a decrease in crime (5 percent in 1979 and 3 percent more in 1980), showed increases only in aggravated assault and theft.

Lt. James Prothro of the Lubbock Police Department attributes the downturn to better community awareness of crime and the police fleet car program, in which officers take their patrol cars wherever they go.

In addition, he said, criminals "are moving out into the areas that don't have the money to spend to put their officers in school, where they have to struggle to keep their officers" — the less populated areas, he said.

At the same time, the officers are moving to better-paying jobs. "A good man gets a little knowledge, then moves to a larger city," Prothro said. Dr. Richard Hawkins, a sociology professor at Southern Methodist University, said rising crime rates in Texas' smaller cities probably are the result of the growing population.

As inflation and unemployment rise, people who might have moved to the city in better times "might be staying in rural areas and getting into trouble there," he said.

In addition, Hawkins said, "there might also be some outmigration from the city. People who fail in urban areas may seek jobs in rural areas."

Families may move to rural areas for the cheaper housing — then lure burglars by keeping their doors unlocked, he said.

This jukebox looks like a product of the spage age, but is actually a 1948 Wurlitzer model. It was an unpopular music machine at the time because of its bomb-shaped top which reminded people of the recent war. Wurlitzer is considered the "Cadillac" of juke boxes.

Nostalgia is in.

Antiques have long been considered a sound investment. But in today's throwaway society, anything dating back earlier than the seventies can be considered a "collectable" and may be worth something of value.

Advertising signs and movie posters, for example. And juke boxes, gas pumps and pinball machines.

Larry Hatfield of Midland saw the growing trend years ago. "I've always had an appreciation of old things," he said. "I saw this stuff even as a kid and saved it because I liked it."

And what started as a small collection has today developed into a business of nostalgia and amusements.

He specializes in antique juke boxes, pinball and other coin-operated machines, advertising and collector's items.

"I like to deal in fun things—happy time things," he says.

A native of Snyder, he still has a warehouse there stocked full with his treasures and travels back and forth from Midland to Snyder every week.

"Everybody in Snyder thought that I was crazy years ago when I had old gas pumps sitting in the yard and juke boxes bulging out of my garage," he admits. "But their attitude has changed over the years."

Hatfield believes that the nation is reverting back to the basics where home and the family comes first. "You've heard the saying that 'the family that plays together stays together,'" he said. "Well, I like that."

His collection is of items largely from the twenties to the fifties.

"I think movies and television have done a lot to make us more conscious of that time," he said. "It represents an era of tranquility and cheap energy—the days of sunny mornings, wet-nosed puppies, a smiling waitress with a hot cup of coffee and the cheerful paperboy who daily throws the newspaper."

And he says that his items have lately become very big sellers.

"With gas going over $1 a gallon, families are sitting at home thinking that even though they can't afford to travel anywhere, they can still have fun. So they're buying home amusements," he said.

Pinball machines—the colorful, electromechanical kinds—and juke boxes are quite popular now. As are porcelain signs, automotive signs and soda pop advertisements.

As a boy, he explored every old barn in West Texas. "I know every nook and cranny of this country," he claims. He's also talked to an endless number of antique dealers, traveled to countless flea markets and peeked into all the old buildings he can find.

His best successes, though, are found by word of mouth. "I talk to people like the oldtimers at the feed mill. They know everything about everybody," he said.

"I've relived and recreated the lives of so many people in tracking down my stuff," he says. "That's what makes it so interesting."

At first, every spare weekend was spent traveling over the country with what was at that time a hobby. "My wife Roxanna has fortunately been very supportive in this," he said.

When they moved to Midland from Snyder two years ago, he decided to make the plunge and go into the "nostalgic" business fulltime. And he discovered that he enjoyed his lifestyle, different though it may be.

His "warehouse" in Snyder is actually two old stores located just off the square.

"I originally intended to just use that as storage and a place to work on my machines, but people are curious and somebody was always dropping in. So I converted it into a store."

He has visitors from all over the United States. He rarely advertises, he says. They hear about the place from friends, business associates or just by passing through.

The store is a natural setting for his collections, looking as though it was a product of the thirties or forties itself. And the shelves are crammed with items which in those days were just considered "junk."

"That's why they're collectable now," explains Hatfield. "There was so much of this stuff made back then that it was just thrown away."

A pack of Lucky Strike cigarettes, for example. The wrapper alone—minus cigarettes—is worth about $100 if it was made in 1940, the last year Lucky Strikes was sold.

The tall gas pumps, circa 1920, are valued at approximately $1,250.

And anything made by the Coca-Cola Co. is a desirable item. A 1938 Coca-Cola tray Hatfield owns in mint condition is worth about $75, he said.

Even stuff from the fifties, such as Elvis Presley posters, bubble gum machines, even toys, is now collectable. "It's because of the throwaway society that we live in," he says. "When I started collecting this stuff, I picked up items that were made no later than the twenties. Now I'm looking at the fifties stuff."

Probably his most valuable items are the juke boxes, valued anywhere from $1,000 to over $5,000. Hatfield has several rare and valuable styles in his collection, including Wurlitzers, Rock-Ola's, Seeburg's and more.

"My job now is to spot the trends of the future before they become trends," he says. He predicts, for example, that the advertising items, such as drinking glasses, given away by the millions in the large fast food chains, will become the collectables of the future.

"That's what happened with Coca-Cola," he said. "They gave away so much stuff as advertising gimmicks that it was thrown away. And then it became rare."

He doesn't think that nostalgia will ever go out of style. "Stuff that is old, from another period, will always be popular. It represents history," he said.

Larry Hatfield's collection of old pinball machines numbers over 50.

These glass globes once sat atop gas pumps and are very hard to find these days. Other collectables from the twenties and thirties are soda pop advertisements.

Hatfield makes adjustments to the mechanism of a 1945 Wurlitzer juke box.

Mammography is effective tool in saving lives, says chairman

By LEE JONES
Associated Press Writer

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Mammography offers women benefits from early detection of breast cancer that far outweigh any radiation risks, says the chairman of the radiology department at the University of Texas Medical School in Houston.

"It is shocking that the public has been told mammography is dangerous. ... It is an effective tool in saving many, many lives," Dr. Richard Lester said in an interview.

That, he said, is why he wrote an article for Texas Medicine, journal of the Texas Medical Association, on routine X-ray for diagnosis of breast cancer.

"Women have been discouraged from obtaining mammograms by some rather loose public talk, and physicians have been discouraged from giving them," Lester said.

LESTER SAID ANY risk that radiation from routine mammography could, itself, cause breast cancer "is so small that it cannot be measured, it cannot be shown experimentally."

In 1976, a panel of physicians convened by the National Cancer Institute recommended routine mammography for women over 50. But it said women under that age should receive periodic mammograms only if they have a family history of breast cancer or have had breast cancer themselves.

Lester recommended in his Texas Medicine article that women of any age should receive mammographic examination "if there are signs, symptoms or other significant reasons to suspect breast cancer."

"Also, a baseline mammogram is recommended for women approximately 40 years old. Occasionally, a small, unsuspected malignant neoplasm may be uncovered, but more important, the study provides a baseline for evaluation of subtle, but significant, changes in later examinations," Lester said.

"Furthermore, there is increasing evidence that certain tissue patterns defined by mammography are associated with greater or lesser risks of breast cancer in subsequent years.

"FOLLOW-UP MAMMOGRAMS SHOULD be recommended at appropriate intervals, to be determined by the physician through evaluation of risk factors, such as family history, low or late parity (child-bearing), and the findings of the baseline study. For women 50 years and older, annual or other regular mammographic examination is recommended at the time of physical examination."

Lester based his conclusions on findings of the Breast Cancer Detection Demonstration Projects, which examined 270,000 women in the only large-scale study of its kind.

He said 711 of the 1,597 cancers found in the study, including 55 percent of all malignant tumors less than one centimeter across, were detected by mammography alone. Among women under 40, Lester said, 199 cancers — 40 percent of the total for that age group — were found only by mammography.

"These neoplasms would have been missed had there been no roentgenographic (X-ray) examination of the breast," he said.

Lester said 10-year survival rates for breast cancer patients run as high as 95 percent when their tumors are discovered before they exceed half a centimeter.

HE SAID THE dose of radiation necessary for a satisfactory mammogram "has been reduced progressively."

Comparing statistical assumptions of risk with survival rates for cancers detected by mammography, Lester concluded the benefit-risk ratio for women under 50 was 12-to-1. For women 50 and over, he said, the benefits outweigh the risks by an even greater 22-to-1.

The American Cancer Society recently issued new mammography guidelines which parallel Lester's:

(1) Annual mammograms for women over 50; (2) Baseline mammograms for all women between the ages of 35 and 40; and (3) Women between 40 and 50 should consult their doctors about the possible need for periodic mammograms in their individual cases.

Lester said his article offers "straightforward, sound advice to physicians and to women, and I stand behind it."

U.N. aids refugees

NEW YORK (AP) — To escape the fighting between rival political factions in the central African country of Chad, an estimated 100,000 people have fled to the neighboring country of Cameroon. Eighty percent of them were women and children under 15.

To meet the emergency needs of these refugees, the U.N. Children's Fund and the U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees have allocated a total of $700,000 for the purchase of tents, blankets, medicines and foods.

Many of the refugee children suffer from malaria, tuberculosis, dysentery and measles. Some were wounded during the fighting in the Chadian capital of N'djamena.

AT WIT'S END

Burrs popular again

By ERMA BOMBECK

Okay, America, this is the time to play it cool.

A few dozen teenagers have gotten burr haircuts. It doesn't mean we're into a hair recession, but we all have a shot at having our young people look like our high school graduation pictures if we just keep our heads.

I cannot caution you enough on what a sensitive and crucial time this is. You probably think I'm overreacting, but if one — just one — parent gets a burr haircut, it's all over. We've blown it.

For centuries young people have tried desperately to get a "look" that is their own. Every time they do, their parents come along and imitate it and young people move on to something else.

They loved miniskirts, loud music, tinted glasses, gold chains around the neck, causes, marches, relationships, meaningful conversations, tight jeans, tape decks and frizzy hair until their parents discovered them too and their popularity began to wane.

I never knew what solitude was until I poked my head into my son's bedroom one day when his stereo was going 88 decibels and shouted, "Could you turn it up? I can't hear all the words in the kitchen." From then on, his music became private.

For parents who yearn to see their son's ears once more, may I suggest you pick out a boy in the neighborhood who has a ponytail down his back and say to your son, "Why can't you let your hair grow like George? It's neat caught up in a rubber band instead of sticking up in the air like a porcupine in heat!"

Tell him it's his "patriotic duty" to keep his hair long like George Washington. Tell him he can't go visiting with you until he lets his hair grow as you're ashamed of him.

Tell him he looks like his sister with short hair and not to be surprised if the coach tells him to let his hair grow before he can play football.

Nag at him for not using enough shampoo and water. ("How can your hair be clean if you use only one towel to dry it?") Remind him of the good old days when his hair used to clog the drains every two weeks or so.

But mostly, what we all must do is to let our hair grow. Remember, the longer ours becomes... the shorter theirs will become.

I know I'm asking a lot. It's going to Agencies 'invading' USA

NEW YORK (AP) — Foreign advertising agencies are "invading" the United States by following their own multinational clients to these shores, reports Advertising Age.

The publication notes that during the post-World War II period "advertising might well be considered to have been America's most successful export."

Now, "in Europe particularly, advertising has matured and reached points of excellence equal to and sometimes exceeding that of the U.S.," it says. "And, as in so many other economic spheres, a reverse invasion has begun, with European and other foreign advertising agencies developing American branches.

How to buy a used car

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — People in the market for a used car need to know more than kicking the tires to spot a good one.

Fram Corp., a manufacturer of auto products, recommends doing the following to avoid buying trouble:

—Ask the dealer for the car's history; —Talk to the previous owners to determine how the car has been driven and maintained;

—Be wary of a car with paint on the chrome and hinges. This can suggest extensive repainting, meaning that the car has been in a major accident;

—Examine the tires for cuts, imbedded objects, flat spots and uneven wear;

—Look for worn brake or accelerator pedals which can indicate higher mileage than is on the odometer;

—Avoid cars with sagging front ends. This suggests extensive wear.

DEAR ABBY

'Tired' ready for bed rest, not play

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: My husband has been reading up on the subject of sex, and he is of the opinion that if a woman doesn't enjoy sex right up to the grave, there must be something wrong with her.

At age 50, and after 30 years of marriage, I would like to forget about sex altogether. Believe me, I've paid my dues.

Where is it written that a woman should be ready and willing to perform every time her man beckons? I suspect that many (if not most) women get very little physical satisfaction out of sex; they just go through the motions because they want to do something for the men they love.

I can't believe that I'm the only woman who feels this way. Please poll your readers, Abby. And if they're honest, I think you will find that I am right.—TIRED IN LINCOLN, NEB.

DEAR TIRED: Now that we have become more enlightened and less inhibited about sex, a survey would probably turn up statistics as significant as the Kinsey Report of 1953. I invite all women to send a postcard (or letter) to Abby, 132 Lasky Drive, Beverly Hills, Calif. 90212, stating whether they agree (or disagree) with TIRED. You need not sign your name, only your age. I will deeply appreciate your participation.

DEAR ABBY: You aren't going to believe this, but maybe I'd better start at the beginning. My mother buys all her Christmas presents for the family at a discount store. Because the store doesn't deliver, Mom put out the word for all of us kids to stop by her house and pick up our Christmas presents.

Well, it's no big deal to most of us, but there is this one daughter-in-law (I'll call her Maria) who didn't get around to picking up the Christmas presents for her family until the middle of April! And when she got there (after driving 22 miles), Mom said, "You're too late. I took everything back to the store!"

Now Maria isn't speaking to Mom, and the family is divided as to who is to blame for this falling out.

I volunteered to write to you and find out if you think Mom was wrong for taking the gifts back. Or is Maria wrong for not speaking to Mom anymore?—A FAMILY DIVIDED

DEAR FAMILY: After Mom returned the Christmas gifts, she should have phoned Maria and told her not to come to pick up the gifts because there were no gifts to pick up. As for Maria not speaking to Mom anymore, Mom could be lucky, considering what Maria might say to her.

DEAR ABBY: My father is the most stubborn man in the world. Nobody can tell him anything.

He had seat belts put in our car as soon as they came out, and he gave us kids a big long lecture on how we should always use them, but he never uses them himself. When I tell him he forgot to fasten his seat belt, he says he is going only a short distance and it doesn't pay to bother.

I have tried to tell him that it takes only a few seconds to fasten a seat belt and it might save his life, but he gets mad at me for speaking up to him. He has a very ugly temper, and I have to be careful what I say to him or I'll end up with a fat lip.

How can a 14-year-old boy tell his father to practice what he preaches?—FOURTEEN

DEAR FOURTEEN: Tell him that the National Safety Council estimates that most automobile accidents occur within 25 miles of the victims' homes. But don't tell him to practice what he preaches or you're apt to get a "belt" in the chops.

DEAR ABBY: I am a homosexual, happily "married" to my lover. To my fellow employees I am a happy bachelor.

A woman in our office has recently broken off with the man she's been living with, and she asked me if I'd like to join her, another woman in our office and her husband for dinner and dancing some night. She caught me completely off guard, so I said, "Yes," before I could think of a valid reason to say no.

Abby, I have no desire to join these people or get involved socially with them.

I can easily say I'm busy when she asks me for a specific date, but how can I handle any subsequent invitations?

I do not discuss my love life at the office, but I want her to know that I am not available for any dates, without telling her why.—SHOOK UP

DEAR SHOOK: Tell her you're not available because you're "involved" with someone. (It's true, you are.)

Do you have questions about sex, love, drugs and the pain of growing up? Get Abby's new booklet: "What Every Teen-ager Ought to Know." Send $2 and a long, stamped (28 cents) self-addressed envelope to: Abby, Teen Booklet, in care of this newspaper.

A person's bedroom will soon be his castle

By BARBARA MAYER
AP Newsfeatures

With homes getting smaller, it's no wonder home-furnishings observers are beginning to talk about the exodus to the bedroom.

It stands to reason that if a family has to accommodate itself to fewer and smaller rooms, a person's bedroom will soon become his castle.

At least, that's the way a group of designers and furniture makers saw it at a recent industry meeting.

"I see a definite shift away from the great room of the 1970s," said John Mascheroni, a furniture designer. "The bedroom will become the place to relax, read and watch television."

Furniture makers are already preparing the way for this use of the bedroom with the introduction of more multiple-function furniture for the bedroom. Modular storage pieces that stack on top of one another along the perimeter of the room, and headboards that incorporate lights and significant amounts of storage in attached nightstands are examples of this type of furniture.

However, the most important area of expansion in the type of furniture available for the bedroom may be seen in the development of a great variety of alternatives to the traditional innerspring mattress and box spring.

Flotation beds which are filled with water or gel, beds that fold up into a cabinet, and adjustable beds which go up and down by pressing a button are now likely to be on view at well-stocked bedding specialty stores and departments.

In addition, platform beds which dispense with the bulky box spring, convertible sofas which open into beds or fold down into beds and even low-to-the-floor mattresses inspired by Japanese futons are available.

Other types of beds which disguise their true function when necessary are daybeds, high risers and trundle beds. Daybeds can be made up as sofas by day and as beds at night. High risers, studio couches and trundle beds also can be made sofa-like with covers and accessory pillows.

Although the great variety of bedroom furnishings now makes it easy to furnish a bedroom as a multi-purpose room, there are a few disadvantages in making a bedroom look too much like a living room or study.

Researchers have found that the quality of sleep can be affected by physical surroundings. It is harder to fall asleep in a room cluttered with reminders of daytime activities, such as a sewing machine or a drafting table, according to Charlotte Potter, a spokeswoman for a mattress company.

To provide for dual activity without compromising the quality of the sleeping place, Ms. Potter suggests consumers select an overall color scheme that is fairly neutral and use vibrant colors and bright patterns as accents to brighten up a bedroom without overpowering it.

Separate work and sleep areas if possible. A bookcase is a practical way to provide a boundary. A folding, decorative screen can be used to screen off the busy work area from the quiet sleeping area, too.

Hide work tools in attractive storage containers, such as steamer trunks, storage cubes or wicker baskets.

Cut down on clutter by using the walls, the ceiling and unseen areas behind doors to hang baskets, plants, lighting fixtures and shelves.

Although it might seem that each individual's bedroom is a matter of personal taste alone, there are basic standards for judging the adequacy of a sleeping place.

In a good bedroom, there is provision for deadening annoying outside sounds and for screening possible intruding light from such sources as passing cars and street lamps.

Couple is honored with bridal shower

A bridal shower was given for Cathy Muse, bride-elect of Craig E. Young, in the home of Mrs. Melvin Douglas.

Miss Muse is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. K. D. Muse. Her fiancé is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Don L. Young of Dallas, formerly of Midland.

Hostesses were Mrs. Douglas, Mrs. William Deso and Mrs. S. Curt Hinshaw.

Guests included the grandmother of the bride-elect, Mrs. Thelma Echols.

Age doesn't keep 'Dancin' George' still

By CHARLES HILLINGER
The Los Angeles Times

WILSON, Wyo. — Every Sunday night women flock to this tiny town to whirl around the dance floor with "Dancin' George" Green.

Dancin' George is 80. The piece de resistance of the evening at the Stagecoach bar is when the band strikes up the last number: "Keep On The Sunny Side Of Life." It's George's cue.

He looks around, selects one or two of the "pretty yunguns," as he calls his partners. He hops on top of the bar, helps the girl(s) up, then swings through the final tune.

George's on-the-bar ritual has been going on every Sunday the past 10 years at the Stagecoach.

For most cowboy bars in the West, Fridays and Saturdays are the big nights for live country music.

But not in Wilson, population 200. Sunday is the biggie.

The place jumps with at least 200 to 300 inebriated and dancers Sunday nights.

It's a short evening. Wyoming law says all bars must close at 10 p.m. on the Sabbath. So, it's dancing at the Stagecoach from 5:30 to 9:30 p.m.

George, a widower and lifelong lumberjack, dances every number, each one with a different partner.

"Women come from everywhere in Wyoming to see 'Dancin' George' and to dance with him," says Jolene Williams, member of a U.S. Forest Service fire crew. "George is a living legend. I was on the bar with him Easter.

The band was belting out "Smoke, Smoke That Cigarette" as George danced by with a big grin. "Just look at him," says "C.C." Hagedorn, 36, a secretary. "Look at that sparkle in his eyes.

"He is always dressed so spiffy in an embroidered cowboy shirt, bolo tie, fancy pants and Stetson. He smells good, too. And, oh can he dance."

"He's the best in the West," adds nurse Kathy Falcon, 21.

Jay Hess, 52, owner of the Stagecoach, shows how the bar has been worn down where George moves his feet.

George says he lives in Green Lake, a suburb of Wilson. It has a population of 22 and is named in his honor because he was the first one there.

Wallpapering growing business for women

VANCOUVER, Wash. (AP) — Shirley Peak is mixing colored paper and paste and coming up with greenbacks — greenbacks that stuff her pocketbook but don't compromise her independence.

The 35-year-old mother has started her own wallpapering business, an endeavor of a growing number of enterprising women in Clark County are trying.

Closing the door at the end of a day's work on walls suddenly alive with stripes or checks is "fun, creative and satisfying. I make money, but I can still control my own work schedule," said Mrs. Peak, owner of The Paper Chase.

The ability to control their work schedules is the factor apparently enticing many women into the locally burgeoning wallcovering service industry.

Their involvement ranges from Mrs. Peak's two days a week — "I'm strictly labor. I'll pick up sample books from the paint store and help a customer select one if they want me to, but mostly I just hang what they already have" — to Vi Tiniakos' "26 hours a day" of consulting, buying and hanging what she calls an endless variety of wallcoverings that are flooding today's market. "If you go to work part time for someone else, pretty soon you find it's not part time. Your days aren't your own any more, and I need the time for my family," business where there's just me and my customer, adding, "With my own er, I can work on the days I want to and still be able to do the things I like to do at home."

The 1980s will see a whole new generation of glamour girls. At left, Bill Blass brings back the important evening gown. The 1980 version with body draperies like those in the Austrian lampshade dress at right.

Copley News Service

STAMFORD, Conn. — There is a bright spot in the fabric picture.

While the polyester and other petroleum-base fabric production is on the decrease the high performance rayons "that are more like cottons" are on the increase. In effect this means that there will be some fabrics with durability and flexibility at reasonable prices to offset the new all-out use of pure fabrics — silks, woolsens and cottons — which are selling at top prices and require high-cost maintenance.

During the late 1960s and early 1970s Rayonier, a division of International Telephone and Telegraph, set up a major research program to develop more cottonlike high-performance rayons. Out of this effort came Prima, a chemically crimped high wet modulus rayon fiber with substantially more bulk and cottonlike feel than any previous variety of high wet strength rayon.

Women's interest in cars creates need for clinics

NEW YORK (AP) — "Hello, is my wife there?" asks the telephone caller, his voice tinged with suspicion. "She said she was going to a car clinic — but it's nearly midnight, and she's not home yet."

Such calls from mistrusting husbands usually bring reassurance that the missing wife is not missing at all, says the clinic sponsor.

It's just that she's so engrossed in what she has learned at the three-hour session she's still asking questions of the auto mechanic-instructors, explains a spokesman for the sponsor, the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co.

The women's car-care clinics were launched last year in response to increasing feminine interest in and concern about the costs of driving and maintaining an automobile in these inflationary times.

AT LATEST COUNT, some 1,000 free clinics have been held around the nation, attended by more than 35,000 women.

"Most women are interested in cars to some extent," William F. McAdams, the company's retail service manager, said in an interview. "But now they would really like to know more about holding down the costs of car operations and maintenance."

So many women find the clinics fascinating that the meetings frequently run much later than their scheduled 10 p.m. closing time, because of a heavy volume of questions.

Fear of getting "ripped-off" by garage mechanics also has been a motivating factor in the heavy clinic attendance.

"I guess everyone who's ever owned an automobile has had a horror experience about getting it fixed," says McAdams. "We try to help by explaining how to handle oneself in a repair shop, how to take a little time to explain to the mechanic what the basic problem is, as opposed to merely saying the car goes 'clunk, clunk'."

"THE GUY TRYING to repair the car is like a doctor. He's got to have some idea of what's wrong, otherwise he's going to go through the process of elimination, which takes unnecessary time and cost. To repair it right, he's got to know the symptoms."

Would the clinics have been as successful if there had been no gasoline crunch?

"I believe they would," McAdams replied. "Because when we kicked off the program last year, we were in between two gas crises."

"There are now fewer service stations, and many have stopped doing pre-service work. It used to be that your local service station would take care of your car for you, but now you even have to pump your own gas at times."

At the clinics, the women are taught basics, such as knowing from the color and location of dripping liquids what probably is leaking; how to jump a battery or change a tire, and what those little red lights on the dashboard are trying to tell them.

The program has proved to be of immediate practical value for some of the participants.

In Chicago, one woman noticed that the oil light flashed intermittently while she was driving to a clinic. When the program was finished for the night, she had the mechanics check her car and they found it was virtually without oil.

In Washington, D.C., an elderly woman — after checking out her car for the things she had just learned at the clinic — was soon back knocking at the garage door, saying, "I need transmission fluid." She was right.

Placemats easy to make

Copley News Service

All you need for placemats are fabric scraps, batting (stuffing in flat sheets), and ordinary sewing supplies.

Here are directions for the placemats:

Materials: For two placemats: one-half yard fabric for placemat backing, assorted fabric scraps, polyester batting, two yards of bias tape or extra fabric to make tape, scissors, ruler, pencil, sewing supplies, iron.

Choose washable, soil-resistant fabrics of cotton, linen or blends. To be sure placemats don't distort after washing, wash all fabrics twice before piecing together placemats.

Cutting — 1. Press all fabrics. 2. For each placemat, measure and mark 12 5x5-inch squares. 3. Cut out squares. 4. For each placemat, cut one 13x17-inch rectangle from fabric. 5. For each placemat, cut one 13x17-inch rectangle from batting.

Stitching: 1. Arrange square in three rows of four squares. 2. Join squares in horizontal rows. Make seam one-half inch wide. 3. Press seams open. 4. Join horizontal rows together with one-half-inch seams. Press seams open. 5. With right sides outside, sandwich batting between patchwork and large fabric rectangle. 6. Baste a large X-shape through all layers. 7. Machine stitch near patchwork seam lines. Remove batting stitches.

Bias tape: To make your own bias tape: 1. Cut fabric scraps on the bias, in one-and-three-eighths-inch width strips. (Note: The "bias" is diagonal to the weave. To locate the bias, pull fabric in different directions. The direction of greatest stretch is the bias.)

2. Place strips together to form one continuous, two-yard length. 3. Press seams open. 4. Fold under one-fourth inch on long edges. Press edges along fold line.

Finishing: 1. Open out one edge of bias tape. With right sides together, pin tape to placemat, three-eighths inch from edge. 2. Stitch tape along fold line (a).

fabrics. Horizontal lines move the eye on a horizontal plane, thereby adding width to the figure. (whether done with stripes, design or trim)

How to know which type fabric works for you:

Surface texture: wools, corduroys, velvets and other "heavy" fabrics give a heavy, full appearance to the figure. If you are thin, these fabrics work well toward "putting meat on your bones." If you have a heavy figure, these fabrics will add width you may not want.

Shine: light reflects from the shiny surface of some fabrics. This will add fullness to the figure.

Cling: only those slender figures that have no bulges should try for real cling. However, the same type fabric fashioned into a soft, draped or gathered style goes well on many figures.

Large prints: large contrasting figures (such as large red flowers on white) are for the tall, slender figure. Not for the large figure, or for the tiny.

Stripes and other lines: we learned the lesson in school, now we can apply it to our choice of

Cream helps color scheme

By BARBARA HARTUNG
Copley News Service

Q. My husband and I wish to refurbish our small home which is in a lovely old part of town. We like to entertain and since our children are all grown now, we feel for the first time in a long time we can have an elegant home for grown-ups.

We have had avocado carpeting and dark browns and beiges in upholstery, primarily because it was a practical color scheme. But now I want to lighten everything. Please suggest a clean, bright but traditional color plan for us and explain how it might be carried out.

I'll be reupholstering a number of pieces of furniture or buying new. — R.B.M.

A. I've recently been visiting elegant homes on homes tours and have been struck by what a lovely color scheme apricot and cream and blue-gray can be. Also pale peach, cream and aqua can't be beat. You could use cream for the walls and ceiling. Perhaps the apricot, cream and blue-gray or the peach, cream and aqua could be found in an important floral fabric you could put on a chair and sofa. Those same colors might be repeated in a slender stripe for another chair or pair of chairs. If you need still another, choose the peach or apricot for an accent chair.

Perhaps you'd like the print also at the windows for draperies or maybe you'd like wall colored draperies in a simple design to leave full attention for the furniture.

If you like pale colors and luxury — and if your budget would allow — what about a lovely pale Chinese rug in the colors of your room? The gorgeous detailing and fine craftsmanship of a Chinese rug can raise any very pretty room to the caliber of outstanding.

Lawn mowers can be dangerous

Copley News Service

Next to your car, the most dangerous tool you will ever use at home is your power lawn mower. A rotary mower can and does chop off thousands of fingers and toes, and, perhaps more importantly, can injure bystanders.

A power mower can propel a metal bolt through a steel car door 90 feet away, shoot rocks through the wall of a house and hurl other objects with the striking force of a .22-caliber bullet. Over 150,000 people are injured by power mowers each year and 30 of these die. The resulting hospitalization costs run in excess of $15 million annually.

These statistics aren't meant to horrify you the next time the grass has grown up to your windowsills. It is meant to serve as a reminder that power mowers are extremely dangerous products, alarming in light of the few hours they are actually in use.

Most of the injuries result from unsafe operating procedures and, thus, are not likely to be eliminated by changes in the mowers themselves. Twenty percent are from thrown objects. Sixty eight are from inadvertently touching the blade while it is moving. And since most power mowers last from six to seven years before they wear out, there will still be thousands of injuries for a long time to come even if drastic changes were made.

Are there standards of safety for power mowers? Yes and no. The power mower industry has developed some voluntary standards that have resulted in significant strides in safety.

Male maids becoming popular

By LEIGH FENLEY
Copley News Service

SAN DIEGO, Calif. — Believing that a little muscle around the house couldn't hurt, Nick Hubbard and Ed Rosenberg started a new venture nine months ago that turned out to be somewhat profitable. The work, in the words of Rosenberg, "is boredom itself." But there are compensations.

"People like to invite you to their homes," explains partner Hubbard. "They love to say, 'Meet my male maid.'"

Well, meet Male Maids. Hubbard is the one with the striped apron tied around his stomach. The one with the sponge in his hand, on his knees scouring out the shower. Rosenberg — you can spot him by the boredom written across his face — is on the stairs with the vacuum cleaner.

The satisfied customer is Gayle Sallee who is sitting on the sofa watching Hubbard and Rosenberg scrub and polish her turn-of-the-century redwood cottage on Point Loma.

"They clean better than any woman I ever had," Sallee attests.

The relative cleaning abilities of the sexes are an inevitable debate here. Hubbard and Rosenberg prefer to tread lightly.

"There may be an advantage in having us," says Rosenberg. "I cleaned the other day for two older ladies. I pulled out their refrigerator and cleaned behind it. You might have to be pretty strong to do that." Strength, however, is just one quality that made speech therapist Sallee and her psychologist husband permanent customers. For $7.50 an hour Male Maids will wash dishes, change bed sheets, dust the bookshelves, clean the kitchen, clean out the fireplace, replace the water bottle and hang your nightgown in the closet next to your robe.

"I'll tell you, in the beginning I wasn't used to men picking up my clothes," Sallee confides. "I made it a point not to leave my underwear laying around. But we're comfortable enough with them that they both have keys to the house now."

The idea of men as maids is not completely new. Other services use some men, and one, Dana's Housekeeping Inc., changed its name from Dana's Housekeeping Ladies Inc., in deference to the number of men it uses in its 11 branches.

Pat House, manager of the San Diego Dana's, which has two male maids, says customers' preferences are a matter of personality rather than sex.

Male Maids was Hubbard's idea. A designer for a florist, he spilled dirt on a church carpet once when he was delivering flowers. In the midst of vacuuming the dirt, he thought, "People would pay for this."

His friend Rosenberg had housekeeping experience, once cleaning hotel rooms while ski bumming in Aspen. He agreed to leave a clerking job at a kitchenware shop to become full-time dispatcher and manager. Hubbard (and now five other men) works part time. "We figured men could do it as well as women," says Rosenberg.

They started out with $200 of soap powder and buckets, and a couple of dozen flyers promoting Male Maids. "Men do it better," the ads claimed, picturing a muscle-bound jock with a mop in his hand.

Word of mouth served them well. They now clean all over the city and have expanded their service to include painting, gardening, plant care and bartending.

As a group, psychologists seem most attracted to their service. "It's avant garde," explains Hubbard. "Psychologists are always interested in something out of the ordinary."

"The people really make it fun," he continues. "They ask you to dinner. ... You really get personable with them."

The biggest drawback, grimaces Rosenberg, is the boredom.

A defective doorbell can easily be repaired

By ANDY LANG
AP Newsfeatures

Fix a doorbell?
You can so.

That's because the failure of a doorbell to ring or sound a chime is caused, in nearly all cases, by a defect in the pushbutton. To repair it or replace it requires not the slightest knowledge of electricity. What's more, there is no possibility of suffering a shock, since the voltage needed to make a bell ring or a chime go off is low enough not to be dangerous even if you make a mistake.

Step one is to get a screwdriver and remove the two screws that hold the pushbutton in place. If one or both of the line's two wires are still attached to the pushbutton terminals, the button and its cover plate will remain in place. Pull forward gently so that the wires uncoil several inches and the back of the plate can be seen.

If one of the wires is disconnected, you may have found the trouble instantly. Re-attach the wire to the terminal or screwhead and turn the screw clockwise until it is fairly tight. Wind the wire around the screwhead so that it gets tighter rather than looser as you turn the screw. If that was the trouble, you will hear the welcome sound of a bell or chime when you press the pushbutton.

When you remove the plate and both wires are still attached to the terminals, place a screwdriver blade across both terminals or unscrew the wires and push them together. If you hear a ring, it means the pushbutton itself is not working. Try rubbing sandpaper or emery across the contacts, the points the pushbutton touches when it is pressed. Test again. If there is no sound when you push the button but there is a ring when the wires or terminals are bridged by the screwdriver blade, a new pushbutton is needed. When you buy a new one, take the old one with you. The new one doesn't have to be the same, but it should be the right size to fit the same position on the wall or moulding or whatever.

There are, of course, other reasons why a bell or chime won't sound off, but that's another cup of tea and requires more space than is available right now. In the very large majority of cases, it is the pushbutton that is the culprit. By following the instructions given, you will feel like a professional electrician when you push the button and get a response.

(There is much valuable information for do-it-yourselfers in Andy Lang's handbook, "Practical Home Repairs," which can be obtained by sending $1.50 to this newspaper.)

Questions about home repair are answered

By ANDY LANG

Q. — We have some kind of sheet flooring in our kitchen that is either vinyl or linoleum or something like that. An area near the stove has become damaged beyond repair. We have a piece of the same flooring left over from a few years ago. There is enough of it to cover the damaged part and a few inches more on each side. What is the best way to put in the patch so that it fits properly?

A. — Place the patch over the damaged area. Position it very, very carefully so that, if there is a pattern, you get the best possible match. Now use masking or similar tape to hold the patch in place. Using a very sharp knife, such as a linoleum knife, cut through both thicknesses of flooring at the same time. To do this without injuring yourself or spoiling the job, you will have to be moderately strong and work slowly.

Once the complete cut has been made, put aside the patch. Scrape under the damaged flooring until it comes loose. Now scrape away the old cement. Brush away all dirt and grit, then apply new cement. Set the patch in place. It should fit perfectly. Weight down the patch until the adhesive dries. The patch will stand out for a while. You can wait for time to take care of the difference in color or you can try to dirty up the patch a bit so that it more closely approximates the shade of the old flooring.

Q. — I am getting ready to insulate our attic before making it into two rooms. In insulating the attic floor space, do you start from the center, the edges or the sides? Also, the insulation batts have been in the attic for several weeks now and a few of them have small tears in the vapor barrier. How can these tears be patched so that the barriers keep the moisture from passing through?

A. — Work from the outer edges in the cramped areas toward the center of the room. Then if you have to do any cutting or fitting, it will be much easier where there is plenty of space. For the patches, use pieces of the vapor barrier from scrap sections of the batts. If this isn't practical, get a couple of sheets of polyethylene and cut patches to size. In either case, tape the patches in place. Be very careful that there are no openings through which moisture can pass.

Q. — I want to hire a professional insulation contractor to insulate our attic. What's the best way to get one?

A. — See if you can find a friend or neighbor who has had such work done and can recommend a contractor. Or ask your utility company to give you a suggestion. Or try the yellow pages of your phone book. Once you have selected a contractor, ask your bank to check his credit rating and call your local Better Business Bureau. A reliable contractor should be willing to give you references from home owners who have had work done by him.

Not too late to get legs in shape

Copley News Service

Each year, fashion magazines focus on a different part of the female body. Enthusiastically, they swoon, "If you've always loved the off-the-shoulder look, this is your year!" or, "Those with small waists will want to go all out this spring." Yet in spite of these isolations, any woman old enough to have been through a few summers knows that every year is a leg year.

With summer beginning, you may say it's too late to get your legs in better shape. However, you can visibly tone legs in just one month, and if you work at it, your legs can improve right along with your tan! An added plus — the following leg exercises can fit right in with something else you're already doing.

Fortunately, one of the best leg exercises is very easy. You can do it anytime you are standing still. Simply squeeze tight the muscles of your buttocks and thighs for approximately three seconds and then relax. Great for outer and inner thighs and the buttocks, this alternate tensing and relaxing should be done as many times as possible whenever you think of it. While you're sitting, you can adapt this exercise by repeatedly tensing one thigh and then the other. This is marvelous for reducing fat and firming the long muscles on the back of the leg.

Entire family revs up for work and relaxation present, ride it home," he said after showing her how the accelerator and brakes worked.

GREEN BAY, Wis. (AP) — Mary Truckey has no trouble remembering the day she became a motorcyclist. It was Mother's Day, 1973, and her husband, Bob, had just presented her with her present, a new cycle.

Now Mrs. Truckey, like the other members of the Truckey family, is a genuine devotee.

"I think it's a very relaxing thing if you just take an easy ride," she said.

Her cycle is just one of nine owned and operated by Mr. and Mrs. Truckey and their children. Her 49-year-old husband, a Green Bay fireman, has been a cyclist since the days when, as a 15-year-old, he equipped an ordinary bicycle with an engine.

Four of the couple's five children still live at home and are cyclists, while their married daughter, Judy Kloehn of Green Bay, has former-cyclist status.

"She had a motorcycle before she had her children, but then she sold it," Mrs. Truckey explained.

The Truckeys' eldest son, Dan, 21, drives a 1,000-cubic-centimeter machine that is the largest of the family's motorcycles. Their youngest son, 15-year-old Dave, is a year short of the legal age for driving on roadways but rides a dirt bike on trails.

The other two riders are son Bob, 19, and daughter Jean, 17.

In addition to the cycles, the family has several more conventional vehicles such as a station wagon and three trucks, but Mrs. Truckey said they liked to use the cycles for transportation rather than merely for recreation.

"The older ones use them to go back and forth to work and to school," she said.

"I use my bike a lot for going back and forth to the store," making use of saddlebags on the cycle, she said.

One motivation to use the cycles is the fuel savings, with the cycles commonly getting 50, 60 or more miles per gallon compared with the 15 to 18 miles per gallon for the other vehicles, she said.

Helmets are worn most of the time by the family members although they are optional under Wisconsin law.

"The ones under 18 wear them all the time," Mrs. Truckey said.

The family has avoided serious accidents or injuries, but family members remain wary of the dangers of riding.

"You have to be on the defensive all the time when you're riding a bike," Dan said. "Cars will not give you a lane on the highway. They just don't watch for you."

Mrs. Truckey said it wasn't common for the entire family to ride together.

"A lot of the time, the kids are going one way and we're going the other," she said. "We do ride together sometimes, though."

"We go to church together. You ought to see that."

Save and plan ahead before buying household furniture

Copley News Service

Unless you are a new-lywed who is just starting out on your own, you probably don't have to worry about shopping for a whole house full of furniture. But in the long run, just about everyone will completely replace the furniture in his or her home several times during adult life.

There are dozens of practical suggestions for buying furniture that apply equally to the new-lywed looking for all of the basics to a senior couple who just want a particular addition. The smart shoppers may recognize some of these hints, but few shoppers will know them all.

The first consideration is, of course, money. Instead of giving in to impulsiveness, furniture shoppers can save themselves a lot of money by simply planning ahead. Few large furniture purchases take us completely by surprise, so a little waiting won't hurt anyone. By saving a tidy sum before shopping, you can avoid the high interest charges that are common in furniture purchases.

In particular, shoppers should try to avoid installment houses that specialize in "buy now, pay later" plans. Scan the papers for price wars or special sales. And remember that there are annual furniture sales in virtually all parts of the country, usually in February and August.

When you have saved enough money and have found the right store, head straight for the basement. Usually the profit margin on goods found there is lower. And what kind of furniture should you be looking for?

Well, one kind you shouldn't buy is the matching, 10-piece set. These sets are mostly merchandising gimmicks and are likely to be outmoded in just a few years. Look for classic furniture that is sturdy built and will not be "dated" in a short time. The pieces don't have to match as long as they harmonize. As for colors, carry samples of your colors with you when shopping.

If you want real bargains, shop where the dealers sell (instead of where the dealers sell). Auctions are a good example. And if you are particularly energetic, you may want to organize a "buying club," consisting of 10 or so other persons who are interested in the same kind of merchandise as you are. If you buy with a group, through work or social contacts, it should be easier for all members to get a more than fair price.

Ties show personality

Copley News Service

NEW YORK — What's in a necktie?

The personality of the wearer and a reflection of his lifestyle, according to Countess Mara, designer of men's neckties that sell from $17.50 to $350 — with an occasional dazzle priced at $5,000.

"Of course," reminds the countess, "each $5,000 tie is an original — no two alike — and the tie bears the prestigious CM — coronet signature."

The red Moroccan vault that houses the outrageous neckwear treasure also has the gold coronet emblazoned on the lid.

As for the "world's most expensive necktie," the countess calls it a diamond-studded investment in luxury and elegance. It is smartly cut with clusters of brilliantly faceted diamonds (1.83 carats) mounted on 18 karat gold, anchored on an exclusively designed cut velvet fabric, which is in itself a work of art, with jewels complementing the subtle tone-on-tone tracery of the fabric.

"It is worthy of heads of state — kings, emperors and presidents," says Countess Mara. "For this necktie, more than anything else, does reflect a man's lifestyle. Perhaps that's why it is a favorite among so many businessmen."

Whatever the cost, surveys indicate that almost 50 percent of the nation's men wear some sort of tie or neckpiece almost every day in the year. Therefore, the tie remains the No. 1 gift item for men. While the style changes are minimal over the years, stripes and solids remain the favorites with polka dots and patterns coming in for a share of the market.

"One noticeable change for the '80s is that more men are selecting bright color cravats," says the countess. "This translates into confidence."

Injecting new life into a 64-year-old oil field, Conoco Inc. engineers pump a detergent into formations to loosen stubborn crude oil from sand and rocks so it can be pumped to surface.

Conoco gives transfusion to old pays

Stamford, Conn. - An oil field normally gives up only about a third of its treasure, then it dies - unless man gives it a "transfusion."

The problem is that natural pressure that forces oil to the surface peters out, and the remaining oil is too lazy or thick to flow to wells to where it can be pumped up.

The art of coaxing more oil to the surface takes many forms.

One method is called secondary recovery, usually pumping water into a field to force more oil out. Conoco Inc. operates or participates in 300 such projects, most of which are water-floods.

In 1979, approximately 45 percent of the company's total domestic oil production came from these projects.

But, opportunities for installing new waterfloods, or for major expansions of old ones, have diminished. So, oil companies are investing heavily in more exotic enhanced or tertiary recovery techniques to improve oil production, and it is costly.

Conoco, for example, is investing more than $60 million this year in such projects to "bribe" stubborn oil to the surface.

How important is secondary and enhanced recovery?

Currently, oil companies are producing 4.4 million barrels a day in the United States through these methods. This represents about 40 percent of total domestic production - or an amount equal to 42 percent of current U.S. oil imports.

The sophisticated techniques of enhanced recovery include forcing steam down into a reservoir to drive more oil out, pumping down chemical detergents to wash oil out of sand and rock, and even experimenting with underground fires to force oil to budge.

Conoco operates seven enhanced recovery projects in the United States, experimenting with a wide variety of techniques. The company also participates in a large number of projects operated by other companies.

At Loco, Okla., and Cat Canyon, Calif., Conoco is applying steam-flooding to reservoirs of oil too thick to produce through conventional methods. The steam "melts" the grease-like crude to help it flow to pumping wells.

The Loco field is now producing 650 barrels a day; Cat Canyon is producing 4,000 barrels a day.

At Plum Bush, Colo., Conoco engineers are experimenting with fire-flooding. They are injecting air into deep reservoirs where it ignites the other elements of combustion - high temperature and hydrocarbons. The hot gases generated by the fire push the oil to producing wells to be pumped up.

In eastern Wyoming, Conoco is injecting a detergent into the 64-year-old Big Muddy field. The project will cost more than $35 million, of which the Department of Energy will fund $9.5 million.

"It will take five years before we get clear data on whether the program will work," says Conoco's Butch Madrazo, manager of North American production. "Enhanced recovery takes time and money, but it's the best approach for squeezing more oil out of many fields like Big Muddy."

Operators set record pace in domestic well completions

By MAX B. SKELTON
AP Oil Writer

HOUSTON (AP) — Domestic oil and gas operators set a record pace in January-May for well completions.

The industry drilled an average of 4,933 wells during the five months.

That average exceeded the all-time monthly average high of 4,847 the industry established for completions in 1956 when a record 58,160 wells were drilled.

During January-May, the industry had an average of 2,664 rotary drilling rigs at work each week. That average fell just short of the record level of 2,687 set in 1955 when there were 56,682 well completions.

Final figures are not yet available but the hectic January-May activity continued through June. Late in the month, rig activity had moved the weekly average for the year to an all-time high of 2,695.

After the record 58,160 completions in 1956, domestic drilling operations went into a prolonged slump that did not bottom out until 1971 when there were only 27,300 completions.

Compared with the current record pace, active rotary rigs at work in 1971 averaged only 975 a week.

The industry had 2,901 rotary rigs making hole the final week of June, the highest average for a single week since an all-time high of 3,137 in mid-December 1955.

How fast can the current count of active rigs go up from now on?

By only 25 to 30 rigs a month, says Ed McGhee, executive vice president of the International Association of Drilling Contractors.

"That's close to the rate at which newly built rigs are being put into service," McGhee said.

"The domestic fleet has been operating at 95 to 96 utilization the past two months. That level is about the maximum sustainable. Time losses to repairs, weather, delayed locations, etc., prevent real utilization from reaching the 100 percent level."

But, although strange to say, McGhee added, it is possible for the statistical utilization rate to exceed 100 percent.

"The reason is a sizeable number of well-servicing rigs can on short notice be converted to drilling," he said.

"Many of these 'production rigs' are already manned 24 hours a day and routinely sidetrack or deepen existing wells."

McGhee said little modification is required for such rigs to spud a new well and carry it to total depth.

"And well service contractors say they are indeed prepared to convert to drilling work if the price is right," he said.

McGhee said the attrition rate for existing drilling rigs is not very fast, quoting one manufacturer as using a figure of 2 percent for rig retirements.

"Figuring a total domestic fleet currently of about 3,580 units, that would mean only about six rigs per month make a one-way trip to the scrap heap," McGhee said. "Most such retirements are probably smaller, wheel-mounted units; usually it is the truck rather than the rig which requires replacement."

"Is the net addition of 25 to 30 rigs per month enough?" he asked.

"If you ask an operator who has to spud tomorrow in order to hold an expiring lease, chances are he'll respond with an emphatic, 'No!' You get a different perspective from a contractor who has to pay out his rigs over several years, doing several operators' work."

McGhee said rigs, according to one Kansas contractor, should not be compared with fire trucks.

"The fireman is paid by taxes whether he works or not," he explained. "Instead, rigs are like taxicabs. On a rainy day, the cabbie can't keep up with the demand. Next day when the sun shines, he can't keep up with his loan payments."

McGhee said there is indication new rigs are being delivered at about the maximum rate they can be employed.

"If this weren't so, manufacturers claim, they'd be seeing a big rush of new orders," he said.

"In addition, anyone who wants a new rig for immediate delivery can get it from speculators if he is willing to pay the premium price."

Windfall tax amendment may save firms millions

By STU HENIGSON
Dallas Times Herald

WASHINGTON — A little-noticed amendment to the windfall profits tax, added to the bill by two Texas Democrats, is going to save oil companies at least $6 million a day in taxes by 1985, according to government estimates obtained by the Dallas Times Herald.

The tax savings are supposed to provide an incentive for oil companies to invest in costly, high-technology projects to increase oil production — so-called "tertiary" recovery projects.

But the first projects to qualify for the tax breaks will be those already under an existing, $1 billion government incentive program.

Those same projects will now qualify for an additional tax savings of at least $2.1 billion a year under the windfall profits tax incentive, according to as-yet-unpublished estimates by the Department of the Treasury. Because of the structure of the tax, most of the savings will go to major oil companies.

Companies using conventional oil recovery techniques leave about two-thirds of the oil in the ground. By using the more complex tertiary techniques, which usually involve injecting gas or chemicals into the ground, one-sixth of the oil that remains might be recovered — about 50 billion barrels, or enough to supply the country's needs for 10 years.

But so far the Department of Energy's analysts have not estimated how much additional oil is expected to be produced because of the incentive, or how much money the Treasury will lose as a result.

What is clear, however, is that oil companies with tertiary projects in the works — projects that were expected to be profitable without the tax incentive — will now qualify for a legal bonanza.

The amendment is the work of U.S. Rep. J.J. Pickle of Austin and Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, two Democrats who sit on the committees in the House and Senate that wrote the tax legislation.

When the bill left the House, it included incentive for tertiary projects. But it also contained a key limitation: To qualify, "the project could not be expected to be economic without the preferential tax treatment," in the words of one legislative document.

The House version of the incentive was the result of a compromise between the Department of Treasury and Pickle, according to a Pickle aide. Pickle wanted an even larger incentive with no limitation; the administration wanted a much smaller incentive.

But in the Senate Finance Committee, Bentsen got the Treasury-backed limitations knocked out. Bentsen also prevailed in the House-Senate conference committee that wrote the final version of the tax.

Emil Sunley, deputy assistant treasury secretary for tax analysis, defended the final version of the incentive. He said the Internal Revenue Service did not have the staff or expertise to evaluate whether the projects would have been economical.

Department of Energy officials anticipate that their program will result in as much as 190,000 barrels per day additional oil production by 1985, at a total cost of about $1 billion.

Already dozens of applications have been submitted to the Department of Energy — nearly all of them proposing tertiary projects that would be profitable without additional incentives.

The Department of the Treasury estimated that by 1985, some 507,000 barrels of oil per day will be shifted from the highest tax bracket to the lowest tax bracket as an "incentive" for tertiary projects that would have been undertaken anyway. With the tax rate difference conservatively calculated at $12 a barrel, the incentive will be worth $6 million per day, or $2.1 billion a year.

By comparison, the windfall profits tax will be bringing in about $20 billion a year in revenue by 1985.

C. Wayne Greenlee

Greenlee to give talk

The Desk & Derrick Club of Midland will meet at 6:30 p.m. Thursday in the Midland Petroleum Club.

The speaker will be C. Wayne Greenlee of Midland, vice president of Dorchester Exploration Inc.

His topic will be "South Louisiana's Lower Tuscaloosa Trend."

Greenlee was graduated from the University of Oklahoma with a bachelor's degree in Geology.

He served as division land manager for Signal Oil & Gas Co. in Midland from 1967 to 1974. He was land manager the next four years for Sandefur & Andrews, Inc., in Abilene, and in 1977 became land manager for Flag-Redfern Oil Co. in Midland.

He resigned that post in 1978 to go with Dorchester as land manager. He was promoted to vice president this year.

Greenlee is a member of the Permian Basin Landman's Association and the American Association of Petroleum Landmen.

Conoco sets safety mark

The Midland-based production division for Conoco Inc. has completed two consecutive years of operation without a single lost-time accident, according to D. W. Matthews, division manager.

Matthews said his division has not had a lost-time accident since June 13, 1978, a record of more than 900,000 man-hours of safety on the job.

The division has 218 employees in field and office operations.

Matthews said credit for the continuing safety record goes to J. D. Edwards, training coordinator for the division, and to each individual in the division.

Basin rotary rig count shows eight-unit increase

Three hundred and thirty-three rotary rigs were making hole in the Permian Basin of West Texas and southeast New Mexico last week, reports Reed Rock Bit Co.

The firm, which conducts a weekly survey of rotary rig operations, said the count was 325 a week earlier, and that one year ago there were 224 rotary units making hole in the Basin.

The company counts only those rotary rigs actually cutting hole at the time the survey is made.

Lea County, N. M., reported 41 units at work last week a drop of one from the previous tally.

Eddy County, N. M., in second place behind Lea in Permian Basin rotary activity, had 36 units making hole, the same as the week-earlier count.

Pecos County continued to be the leader in West Texas and third Basin-wide.

That area reported 29 rigs, an increase of five.

Other West Texas counties with 10 or more active rotaries last week were: Andrews, 17; Reagan 11, and Ward 10.

United States seismograph activity surging toward record levels of '50s

TULSA, Okla. — U.S. seismic activity is surging toward the record levels of the 1950s as industry presses its search for oil and gas.

Oil & Gas Journal, in its June 30 issue, says that if exploratory drilling follows historical patterns, the number of wildcats drilled will increase in proportion to the seismic push, lagging the increase about a year.

There are indications, however, that while wildcat drilling certainly will increase, it won't jump as much as seismic activity.

Improvements in seismic data acquisition, processing, and interpretation have increased the role of seismic surveys in the overall exploration effort. As a result, lead times between seismic surveys and wildcat drilling have shortened.

"Until recently, the lead time was 18 months," says John D. Platt, president and chief executive officer of Geosource Inc., Houston. "Today, it is closer to six months."

A consequence of the trend, Platt says, is that more seismic activity is required for each wildcat ultimately drilled.

The hectic pace of seismic activity is straining supplies of personnel and equipment, and costs are increasing, the Journal said. And observers expect the surge of action to continue at least through the next few years.

In May, the number of seismic crews and marine vessels looking for oil and gas in the U.S. reached 502, according to the Society of Exploration Geophysicists. It was the first time the crew count had exceeded 500 since late 1957.

At least one company expects the increase to continue until 1982 or 1983, leveling off at 700 to 800. The all-time seismic crew and vessel count is 710, set in late 1952.

Action is hot in key exploration areas across the country, the Journal said.

"Our industry is going back over all sedimentary basins for a new look," says L. Decker Dawson, president of Dawson Geophysical Co. and chairman of the board of the International Association of Geophysical Contractors. "We are looking for features that we missed before."

The increasing reliability of seismic data is a key factor in the trend, but so is economics.

Don F. Carlos, vice president for natural resources and technical services for Getty Oil Co., points out that decontrol of oil prices means his firm "can afford to take a look at things which had to be bypassed when prices were lower."

Companies differ in their outlooks for continued increases in seismic activity. A key reason is their uncertainty over how much of the Outer Continental Shelf will be opened for exploration during the next few years.

The Journal also noted that improving quality of data is a big reason explorationists are increasing their reliance on seismic surveys. And in processing centers, increasingly sophisticated computers allow for better use of data.

Most seismic contractors and company geophysical managers say a shortage of qualified seismic personnel is the biggest restraint on activity.

"Manpower will continue to be the most critical problem," said one executive. "Given time we can always get equipment. But the bottleneck continues to be people. The key to the problem is a quality training program."

11 Auto unions ask Carter to limit imports

WASHINGTON (AP) — Eleven unions in auto component industries are joining calls by the United Auto Workers and Ford Motor Co. for curbs on Japanese car imports to help an estimated one million laid-off American workers regain their jobs.

A coalition of AFL-CIO unions appealed to President Carter Tuesday to take immediate, strong steps to restrict Japanese imports into this country, but most of the president's top advisers on trade matters are showing no enthusiasm for such action.

The coalition, representing workers in steel, rubber, plastics, glass, aluminum and other auto-related fields, announced its formation at a news conference Tuesday and then met with Special Trade Representative Reubin Askew to press its case for import protection.

Askew, who is known to oppose import restrictions, "listened and was non-committal," said one source who was at the meeting.

In a report that was to go to the president this week, most of Carter's top economic advisers are recommending that he take either no action against the Japanese or only a timid first step toward possible restrictions in the future, administration sources said.

The advisers, who developed an auto industry aid plan at Carter's request, were divided over the critical question of import relief, according to the sources.

Those favoring some action on the trade front suggested that the president urge the International Trade Commission to speed up its investigation of the UAW's complaint that imports are seriously injuring the domestic industry. The ITC investigation currently is due to be completed in December.

According to the sources, Transportation Secretary Neil Goldschmidt is among the few top Carter administration officials favoring stronger trade actions.

Spokesmen for the coalition of unions, all members of the AFL-CIO's Industrial Union Department, said the layoff of 325,000 UAW members at the big car makers has been well publicized. But the union leaders complained that little attention has been paid to the estimated 650,000 workers laid off in supplier industries because of the severe domestic auto sales slump.

And unlike UAW members, many jobless workers in supplier plants are ineligible for company or federal benefits that unemployment compensation, union leaders said.

"It's a damn shame that workers have to come to Washington and beg our legislators ... to save our jobs," said George M. Parker, president of the American Flint Glass Workers Union.

The UAW, which does not belong to the AFL-CIO, and Ford already have appealed to Carter for relief from fuel-efficient imports, which captured a record 28 percent of the U.S. market in May and which have been blamed by union leaders as a chief cause of worker layoffs.

HOUSTON — A registered offering of 850,000 shares of common stock of Moran Bros. Inc., is being made at $30.25 per share through an underwriting group managed by Smith Barney, Harris Upham & Co. Inc., and Bateman Eichler, Hill Richards Inc.

Of the 850,000 shares, 800,000 shares are being sold by the company, and 50,000 shares are being sold by a selling stockholder.

The net proceeds from the sale of 800,000 shares by the company will be used to reduce bank indebtedness and to finance a portion of the company's 1980 capital expenditures, primarily for oil and gas exploration and development.

JAKARTA, Indonesia - Conoco Inc. has been awarded oil and gas exploration and production rights in a production-sharing contract for an area of approximately 1.6 million acres in northern Sumatra.

The contract between Conoco Sumatra, the subsidiary which will serve as operator, and Pertamina, Indonesia's national oil company, was signed here today.

Under terms of the agreement, Conoco is committed to spend $130 million in exploration costs during the next four years.

Seismic work is expected to begin within 60 days.

DENVER, Colo. - Energy Minerals Corp. announced two promotions and four additions to its staff.

Robert Marolda was promoted to operations manager, and Rickard Micklin was promoted to division geologist.

AUSTIN — Railroad Commission Chairman John Poerner has accepted an invitation to meet with the Texas congressional delegation in Washington Tuesday to formulate strategy for rail rate and tax relief for "captive" coal shippers.

The meeting may be climaxed by a visit of the delegation with President Carter to discuss the plight of the Lower Colorado River Authority, the City of San Antonio and others in the face of increased rail rates and high severance taxes on coal purchased in Wyoming and Montana and shipped to Texas power generating facilities.

Prior to leaving for Washington Monday afternoon, Poerner said he intends to confer with officials of the Energy and Interior Departments of surface mining matters while in the nation's capital.

The Railroad Commission is the regulatory arm for Texas' surface mining operations.

AUSTIN — Fifty-one permits for more than 448 miles in new pipelines were granted by the Railroad Commission through the first five months of 1980, according to the Railroad Commission of Texas' Administrative Service Division.

Twenty-eight of the permits were for gathering pipelines, 13 were for trunk transmission lines, two were for gas plants, and one each was for gas injection and feed stock. Six were for multipurpose and other lines.

Thirty-seven of the newly permitted pipelines will transport gas, seven will carry petroleum products, six will contain crude oil and condensates, and one is designated for other materials.

Private pipelines accounted for 42 of the permits, followed by six for common carries and three for gas utilities.

In the five-month period, Southeast Texas led other areas of the state with 13 new permits.

Nine were granted in West Central Texas, five each in East Central Texas and the San Antonio and Refugio areas, three each in Exas Texas, North Texas and the San Angelo area, two each in deep South Texas and the Midland area, and one in the Lubbock area.

TEXAS CITY — Amoco Oil Co. announced a major modernization program to enable its refinery here to process more heavy, high sulfur crude oil.

The program will equip Amoco's largest refinery to shift about half its capacity of 415,000 barrels per day from medium sulfur crude to heavy, high sulfur crudes in 1984, said John F. Horner, Amoco's vice president for refining and engineering.

Horner noted that Amoco has recognized this trend to lower quality crudes for many years and in the mid-1970s invested more than $100 million for facilities to allow the Texas City refinery to process 150,000 barrels per day of medium sulfur crude oil.

FINDLAY, Ohio - G.R. Schoonmaker, vice president of exploration projects worldwide for Marathon Oil Co., retired after more than 40 years of service with the company.

During his tenure as vice president of the company, Schoonmaker directed exploration projects in the United States, Canada, Libya, Somalia, Australia, Guatemala, Egypt, Tunisia, the Gulf of Mexico and in other frontier areas around the globe.

DENVER, Colo. - IREX Corp., a Denver-based oil and gas exploration firm, announced the addition of three members to its headquarters management group.

The new personnel are D. Eric Luck, land manager; Dudley Brown, manager of production and operations; and Mark F. Luther, controller.

Luck is a former employee of Champlin Petroleum Co. and the Monsanto Co.

Brown has more than 20 years experience in foreign and domestic operations management, planning and field development.

Luther worked for the Denver office of Coopers & Lybrand in the Audit and Tax departments before joining IREX.

HOUSTON — The Superior Oil Co. announced changes in its top management structure. Howard B. Keck, chief executive since 1963, retired as an operating officer of the company. Joseph E. Reid, the company president, was elected chief executive officer.

While Keck will remain an employee of The Superior Oil Co. and will continue to serve as chairman of the board and of its executive committee, he will have no operating responsibilities.

Reid joined The Superior Oil Co. in 1972 as a corporate vice president, and president of Superior Oil International. He was elected senior vice president in 1974, and president and chief operating officer in 1978. Reid joined Superior from Trunkline Gas Co., where he was executive vice president and a director.

After receiving a degree in petroleum engineering and geology from Louisiana State University, Reid played professional football with the Los Angeles Rams and then joined Shell Oil Co. as an exploitation engineer. He has an MBA from Harvard University.

A native of Meridian, Mississippi, he makes his home in Houston.

TULSA — The Bovaird Supply Co. has announced eight changes affecting management responsibilities within the organization.

These changes are being made to keep pace with increasing growth of company activities, according to R.E. Batchelor Jr., executive vice president and general manager.

Veteran management personnel involved in these eight changes represent 205 years of service in the oilfield supply business.

FORT WORTH — J.W. Huie has been named president of Western Petroleum Services, a unit of The Western Company of North America, and J.R. Huff succeeds Huie as president of Western Oceanic, Inc., a subsidiary of The Western Company.

Huie joined Western Petroleum Services in 1955 and subsequently served as vice president of the cementing division and vice president of operations until 1977 when he was named president of Western Oceanic. He holds a degree in petroleum engineering from The University of Texas.

Huff joined Western Oceanic in 1972 and since then has served as vice president of technical services, vice president of sales.

FORT WORTH — The Western Company of North America announced new contracts for three of the offshore drilling rigs operated by its wholly owned subsidiary, Western Oceanic, Inc.

A contract has been signed for "Western Delta", a jack-up rig, to work for three years for Texoma Production Co. in the Gulf of Mexico, expected to commence around November, 1980.

New contracts were also signed for two semi-submersible rigs to work in the North Sea. The contract for "Western Pacesetter I", now drilling for Phillips Petroleum Exploration U.K., Ltd., was extended from March 1981, until December 1982.

Under a new contract "Western Pacesetter II" will drill one well for Houston Oil & Minerals commencing in February 1981. Completion of this well is expected in May 1981, at which time the rig will begin a one-year contract for Chevron.

Research group gives U.S. petroleum supply warning

By WILLIAM KRONHOLM

WASHINGTON (AP) — Saying a cutoff of Mideast oil could trigger another Great Depression and provoke "a dangerous confrontation with the Soviet Union," a research group said last week the United States must accelerate its efforts to fill the nation's strategic petroleum reserve.

The study was released on Capitol Hill by the Aspen Institute for Humanistic Studies. It resulted from a three-day conference in May involving members of Congress, industry, environmentalists and academic researchers.

"The warnings in this document before you... should serve as a pretty severe warning of the consequences of further failure of this country to act," said Rep. John Dingell, D-Mich., chairman of the House Commerce Committee's subcommittee on energy.

Dingell, Sen. Bill Bradley, D-N.J., and Alvin Alm of Harvard University released the study, which argues that the dangers of another oil cut-off should be treated as a genuine national security issue.

"The United States faces a grave security threat from a large oil cut-off," the study says. "A serious interruption in oil supplies from the Persian Gulf would disrupt mobility, close factories and create an economic crisis comparable to the Great Depression."

"It would tear at the fabric of the Western alliance and could provoke a dangerous confrontation with the Soviet Union, whose proximity to this unstable region compounds the security risk."

Alm said one group of experts concluded that the odds of a 3 million barrel-a-day shortfall occurring in the coming years was about 3 out of 4.

"You wouldn't think about not having fire insurance on your house with much smaller odds of a disaster occurring," Alm said.

Yet, he said, filling the petroleum reserve at 100,000 barrels a day — the minimum standard in a bill just signed into law by President Carter — would require 27 years to reach the stated goal of 1 billion barrels of oil in reserve.

The reserve now contains only a 12-day supply of oil, he said. Saudi Arabia has objected to U.S. efforts to fill the reserve, saying it might cut production in response.

But Dingell said former U.S. energy chiefs Frank Zarb and James Schlesinger have testified before his committee that "although the Saudis were making certain protests publicly, they were certainly aware of our need to take this step."

"A superpower that does not act in what is clearly a national security interest no longer has the respect and clout it needs," Bradley added.

The lawmakers suggested filling the reserve at the rate of 500,000 barrels a day, which would meet the goal in five years.

Other recommendations in the study report included:

— Encouraging refiners to build and maintain private oil stocks.

— Developing emergency contingency plans.

— Creating an alternative to gasoline rationing, particularly a high gas tax that could be rebated to the public through the federal tax system.

"This approach would substitute for the creation of large new bureaucracy and the confusion and chaos from implementing a brand new administrative system during an emergency," the report said. "Yet, it could be just as fair or fairer than rationing."

— Strengthening international agreements covering oil sharing during cutoffs.

Exxon hikes '80 budget

HOUSTON — Exxon USA announced that it has increased its 1980 oil and gas production budget by 20 percent, raising the company's production-related expenditures this year to $912 million.

H.L. Siegle, Exxon USA vice president for production, said the added expenditures will be made primarily for increased drilling, well workovers, additional offshore production platforms, gas plant investment, and the purchase of undeveloped acreage.

The largest part of the budget increase — $61 million — will go for increased development and outpost drilling. Siegle pointed out. He said an additional 37 development wells, those wells designed to increase production in a previously discovered field, will be drilled this year, bringing the total to 701. This will be 25 percent more development wells than Exxon drilled in 1979.

An additional 10 outposts, those wells drilled to determine the extent of an earlier discovery, also are planned, according to Siegle, bringing the 1980 outposts well program to 58, versus 37 outposts wells last year.

Siegle said the next largest budget increase — $59 million — will go for construction of three additional Gulf of Mexico production platforms and producing and support facilities. Total budgeted platform-related expenditures during the year were raised to $147 million.

Other production budget increases include additional work at several of the company's gas plants, an expanded workover program, and purchase of undeveloped acreage.

Expansion planned

SAN ANTONIO — Valero Energy Corp. announced plans to expand both treating and gathering facilities in West Texas as part of its ongoing expansion program in the area.

The projects will be in Loving County north of Pecos, where recent drilling activity has resulted in new gas discoveries. The new gas has a high hydrogen sulfide content which must be treated and removed before the gas enters the transmission system.

The company will install a gas treating plant to increase treating capacity in the area. The new facility will have the ability to treat up to 50 million cubic feet per day of the extremely sour gas.

About 16 miles of gathering lines also will be built into the area of current drilling activity. Cost of the two projects is $3 million.

Ellis Wind, senior vice president, said, "The plant expansion will enable us to treat the gas we have as well as the additional gas we expect to buy in the area."

When you've arrived... Meadowpark

What is Meadowpark?

Meadowpark, a project of Citizens Savings & Loan Association, will be a Planned Unit Development of attractive patio home and townhome clusters. Meadowpark will consist of up to 200 attached and detached patio homes, and attached townhomes on nearly 60 acres in north Midland. The development is inside the city of Midland and receives all municipal services, including police and fire protection, and water and sewer services.

Meadowpark Owners' Association

Common recreation facilities and park areas are managed by the Meadowpark Owners' Association. Purchasing or building a patio home on your own lot automatically makes you a member of the Meadowpark Owners' Association. The Association provides management and maintenance of the common park areas, playgrounds, tennis courts, and swimming pool with deck area. Homeowners are assessed a monthly maintenance fee.

A low density development.

The cluster arrangement of Meadowpark restricts traffic flow on residential streets. On-street parking is prohibited, so that streets become areas for family activities.

Patio Homes and Townhomes

Lot sizes in Meadowpark will accommodate patio homes ranging in size from 1,576 square feet, up to a four-bedroom patio home with 3,600 square feet livable. A total of 17 floor plans are available in one and two story designs, or a buyer may employ his own architect/builder.

As a Meadowpark homeowner, you own the lot on which your home is located, all of the improvements on the lot, and an interest in the common areas and facilities.

Meadowpark homes will offer two or more enclosed patios, affording a relaxed, suburban lifestyle. General landscaping includes attractive entrances off of FM 868 (proposed Loop 250) and North "A" Street, berms for noise and visual barriers, trees, ground cover and grass. Clusters of live oaks and red oaks will be used at various locations.

Each Meadowpark residence is designed as an energy efficient home and will meet Texas Electric Service Company's strict "E-OK" rating.

What does it cost?

Patio homes and townhomes start in the low eighties and range up to $150,000. Of course, you may request additional features in planning with your builder which may affect the final sales price.

Citizens Savings & Loan Association serves as both developer and permanent lender, and you may wish to visit with one of our loan officers about interim financing and permanent mortgage for your Meadowpark home. We will be pleased to supply a list of reputable builders who will execute your selected Meadowpark plan.

Meadowpark

Where is Meadowpark?

Meadowpark is located on 59.91 acres northeast of the intersection of North "A" Street and FM 868 (proposed Loop 250). Nearby are newly developing shopping centers and a regional mall, Midland College, schools and Midland Air Park. Country clubs are close by as well.

Credit cards may be easier to obtain

By MARTHA M. HAMILTON
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — The end of credit controls may not produce much immediate change in either retail sales or credit card terms, although credit cards may become easier to get again.

Retailers and credit card issuers said Thursday they expect the results of the phase-out of controls to be primarily a psychological boost, a slight easing of the economic doom and gloom that kept people out of stores and their hands out of their wallets.

At the same time, much of the decline in credit use is attributed to the recession, so no great surge of renewed buying is expected because of the lifting of the controls.

Changes in credit card terms — including new annual service fees and changes in the way monthly average balances are computed — appear likely to remain in effect.

"What we really will see, I think, is a gradual return to normalcy. I don't think public confidence will come back that fast," said Dee Hock, president of VISA. "I think we're in a more serious recession than the administration admits, and we'll be slower to come out than we were to get in, and the removal of credit controls is not going to be a significant factor," he said.

Hock said that, in those states that permit annual fees for credit card services, "I think they're here to stay." The fees were as much a reform designed to spread the cost of servicing credit card accounts more equitably among customers and to offset the rising cost of money to credit card issuers as they were a reaction to controls, he said.

"The credit controls and high money costs simply provided the absolute necessity and economic conditions under which that could begin," he said.

Susan Fack of the American Retail Association said sharp declines in retail sales may be as much the effect of the recession as credit controls. "It's such a chicken and egg sort of thing. There's no way to know whether the economic capacity had come to a place where people felt they had to pull back" or whether credit controls made them, she said.

The biggest impact of controls has been "a mental negative attitude," she said. "It made people unsure of their ability to handle their own money, when in many cases they were doing OK," she said.

"Sales have been so bad, it's hard to believe it was all controls," said Flack.

Where credit terms have been changed, "you're not going to see anyone undoing them," she said. In part, the terms will remain as they are because of the trouble involved in undoing the last few months work and the confusion that reversing recent changes might create. But she added that the impact of the changes in terms has been small.

In recent weeks, after the Federal Reserve began phasing out controls and after the initial confusion about the impact of controls, banks, oil companies and other issuers of credit cards began to end moratoriums on new applications and return to business as usual. That trend appeared likely to accelerate with the total phase-out of controls.

A spokesman for Mobil Oil said it was too soon to know whether the oil company would reverse a decision doubling the minimum monthly payment required on credit accounts. An Exxon spokesman said the same thing about changes that company had made in credit terms.

A spokesman for Sears said he expects no dramatic impact on sales from the end of controls. "It will take some time to reverse the negative impact," said Bob Shoup.

He said a change made by Sears in the method for computing accounts that resulted in slight increases in minimum monthly payments would not be rolled back. "That change was in the works in advance of credit controls and independent of them," he said.

Michigan unemployment 6 percent above U.S. average

By KRISTIN GOFF
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Unemployment in Michigan is running at 14.1 percent, which is more than 6 percentage points above the national average.

And in Texas the rate is 5.5 percent, more than 2 percentage points below the national average of 7.7 percent in June, reported by the Labor Department this past week.

That national average was little changed from the 7.8 percent unemployment rate in May.

But as the Labor Department's report this past week on unemployment rates in 10 large industrial states shows, there are wide discrepancies in how various states are faring in the downturn.

After Texas, in order of increasing unemployment rates, are Florida with 6.4 percent; Massachusetts with 6.8 percent; California and New York each with 7.3 percent; Pennsylvania 7.7 percent; New Jersey 7.9 percent; Illinois 8.6 percent; Ohio 9.7 percent and Michigan 14.1 percent.

History shows a wide difference in how various regions of the country react in business cycle slumps. Areas such as the industrial Midwest, which depend heavily on manufacture of automobiles and durable goods, have traditionally been hard-hit in business downturns.

The Southwest, on the other hand, has historically fared better than most because its economy has a high proportion of petroleum and petrochemical concerns, electronics businesses and aircraft industries, which have generally been less sensitive to business declines than consumer durables.

The Commerce Department's Bureau of Economic Analysis recently issued a report showing that the Plains States, from North Dakota and Minnesota south to Kansas and Missouri have been the most recession-issued this past week.

But economist Lora S. Collins suggested that "the margin of disadvantage may not be as wide as in the past because the most acutely cyclical industries — notably steel and autos — are becoming less important in the heartland economy."

The report paints a less optimistic outlook for economies in heavily agricultural areas. Although slumps in the farming economy do not always coincide with national recessions, that is the case this year, according to the report by the Conference Board, a business-funded research group.

With plentiful harvests and a reduction in demand because of reduced exports to the Soviet Union and reduced American incomes, the report predicts difficulty in "America's Breadbasket," a region including the grain, beef and other food-producing areas of the Plains states and sections of the Midwest.

For other regions, the report predicts that New England and the Southeast will not suffer as badly in the current recession as they did in the 1973-75 decline, largely because the local economies are in better balance and less dependent on cyclical industries, including construction, than they were several years ago.

Among other regions, the report predicts the Southwest and Mountain regions will see slower growth but no recession or outright drop in output. The Pacific region should about match the national economic decline because its economy includes relatively recession-proof defense and high technology industries as well as the deeply depressed lumber and construction-related industries.

In other business developments this past week:

—The Federal Reserve Board said it would complete a phaseout of special credit controls it put into effect in March when the government was zeroing in on rampant inflation rather than a deepening recession.

The phaseout will affect those who borrow from banks, charge on credit cards, and invest in popular money market mutual funds.

—Federal savings and loan associations will be able to begin issuing credit cards to their 22 million customers next week under new rules issued by the government. The action taken by the Federal Home Loan Bank Board later will allow those 2,000 federal thrift institutions to offer interest-bearing checking accounts and a variety of other consumer services aimed at making them more competitive with commercial banks.

—Firestone Tire & Rubber Co., the nation's No. 2 tire maker, said it was voluntarily recalling 1.8 million steel-belted radial "500" tires after government tests raised questions about the performance of some of them. The tires being recalled are largely ones produced in 1976 and 1977. They are not part of the 1978 recall of some 10 million tires which was done at the urging of the National Highway and Safety Administration but mean that the "vast majority" of the company's 500 line of tires now have been recalled, a company spokesman said.

Bill C. Parker

Bill C. Parker has joined The First National Bank of Midland as a vice president, reports Charles D. Fraser, president.

Parker will serve as department head of the Consumer Loan section. He was graduated in 1964 with a degree in Business Administration from Southwest Texas State University.

He received a B.B.A. degree in Management from the same university in 1970.

Prior to joining FNB he was associated with the American National Bank in Austin and the Corpus Christi National Bank.

The First National Bank of Midland last week reported earnings of $3,522,344 for the second quarter of 1980, according to Fraser. The figure represents a 117 percent increase over the same period in 1979 and brings year-to-date earnings of $6,801,070 or $3.03 per share. That compares to

Deposits June 30th were $744,513,569, up 52 percent from deposits of $489,385,306 June 30, 1979.

Loans totaled $546,096,306 (net of unearned interest) at the end of the first six months of 1980 and $366,765,039 at the end of June 1979, an increase of 49 percent.

Seminars on small business will be presented by employees of the Internal Revenue Service the second Wednesday of each month in Room 101, Federal Office Building, 200 E. Wall St., Midland.

Starting this month, the seminars will begin at 9:45 a.m. and last about two hours.

They will include an overview of business taxes and a question and answer session. Topics to be covered include: Kinds of business organizations; business income tax returns, and recordkeeping and employment taxes.

There is no charge for the seminars. The Permian Basin Personnel Association, a chapter of the American Society for Personnel Administration, will host a day-long seminar July 16 on "Improving Your Techniques as a Personnel and Industrial Relations Assistant-secretary."

The event will be held at the Odesa Holiday Inn.

Registration fee for ASPA members and employees of members is $100. Fee for non-members is $125.

Womack, Claypoole, Griffin Advertising Inc. of Odesa and George Koonz & Associates Inc. of Dallas have signed a letter of intent to merge.

The resulting merger will create one of the 10 largest agencies headquartered in Dallas. Womack, Claypoole and Griffin was organized in Odesa in 1951 and opened headquarters in Dallas in April 1978.

proof in the six recessions that have occurred since World War II.

And it noted that in the latest business cycle, measured from the start of the 1973 recession, Alaska, North Dakota and Idaho were the least affected.

The Commerce Department study measured changes in nonfarm income and salaries to examine effects of business cycles.

Michigan and New Hampshire were most affected by the swings in the latest business cycles, as measured by income loss during the 1973-74 recession and recovery since then.

Not surprisingly, the Great Lakes region, including Michigan, Ohio, Indiana, Wisconsin and Illinois, with its high dependence on auto, steel and other cyclically sensitive manufacturing industries has been subject to the biggest income swings of any region in the six post-World-War-II business recessions and recoveries.

In a forecast of how the current economic slump will effect various regions, the Conference Board also put the "industrial heartland" on the top of its recession hit-list in a report

Sales figures for Texas 'absolutely phenomenal'

AUSTIN — Applications to the State Securities Board for sales in Texas are running at four times the dollar volume for the previous fiscal year, an "absolutely phenomenal" rate, Securities Commissioner Richard D. Latham reports.

In May, latest month for which full figures have been compiled, 213 issues for a total $1,787,437,972 were approved for issuance, with $828,995,000 of the total representing money market funds, Latham says.

Total dollar amount for the first nine months of the fiscal year is $12,819,539,875, compared to $33,316,683,428 for the comparable period in fiscal 1979.

Number of applications processed for the nine months was 1,505.

Of the $12.8 billion total, $7,681,506,754 was money market funds, an area which has been showing growth for the last several years.

Latham notes that 1979's volume represented a doubling of 1978's figures — so that the growth over the last two years has been rapid and large.

While money market funds have made up the "giant's share" of the issues, Latham says, "we're seeing more common stock (issues) than we have in a long time."

Part of the reason, he feels, is that companies have found it easier, during a period of high interest rates, to finance operations by sale of stock rather than financing through loans.

That may change, Latham notes, as interest rates dip.

The Securities Board also reports that it has been monitoring programs involving sale of diamonds for investment purposes — since some of those programs may constitute securities offerings — to determine if there are any problems in that area.

gard to fault or negligence; under the blanket accident policy, he has only to prove negligence.

Sid McKinney, employer representative on the IAB, says some employers giving up worker's compensation coverage may not know what they're getting in exchange — adding, "we feel this type of policy does not replace worker's compensation."

Use of such policies by sub-contractors first attracted IAB attention to the matter.

McKinney says use of such policies could serve to push Texas towards a compulsory worker's compensation law, (Texas is one of three states without such a law.)

Most of the blanket policies are being written in Dallas, Houston and San Antonio, McKinney reports.

He also notes that there are legal provisions to the effect that no worker's compensation subscriber can avoid liability by subletting part of the work to avoid payment of compensation — and that an injured employee of a subcontractor could receive compensation and take legal action against the subcontractor.

In another insurance matter, the State Board of Insurance heard a presentation by Commercial Union Assurance Companies on a "custom" auto insurance program, which doesn't use the traditional rating factors of age, sex and marital status.

Rates under the program are lower for persons who have held drivers' licenses for six years.

Driving records, including convictions and accidents, and claims are used in rating.

Territorial factors used are based on where the insured auto is used, rather than where it is garaged, as in the current Texas formula, and on mileage (with greater use resulting in a greater premium.)

The insurer reports the plan has been adopted in 30 states and is expected to be adopted in another 10 by the end of the year.

However, those states allow insurers to file their own programs — whereas in Texas, the SBI promulgates a standard policy and standard rates.

Or it's possible the company could amend its program and submit it for consideration through the Texas Automobile Insurance Services Office, which advises the SBI on such matters.

Efforts also have been made in several past legislative sessions to eliminate use of age, sex and marital status, and rating territories as well, for auto insurance rating purposes.

Vietnam revisited

Vietnam's invasion of Thailand raises the spectre of another Southeast Asian conflict too reminiscent of the recent past.

The situation now is dangerously close to the scenario that drew the United States into Vietnam in the 1960s, into one of the most controversial conflicts in which this country has ever been involved.

Clearly, the current situation provides more justification for U.S. action than anything that happened during the early years of that previous conflict. Vietnam has invaded a U.S. ally. It was a blunt, hostile move.

Already, however, the United States is closer to the brink of conflict in more nations than in recent memory. Iran continues to hold 53 of this country's citizens and the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan threatens to escalate past its current status.

On top of that, the memory of that other long and grueling Vietnam conflict still is fresh in the minds of many Americans. The invasion of Thailand renews a host of old questions never resolved during that last conflict.

What are the lessons of Vietnam? How can they be applied to the current situation? Would the reasons for becoming involved in the Vietnam-Thailand conflict be any clearer than were the reasons for becoming involved in Vietnam? Would such involvement be supported any stronger by the American public?

War is dirty, brutal, heartless and inhumane. Unfortunately in some instances it also is unavoidable.

The United States does not have a record of going off looking for a conflict to become embroiled in, but neither does it shirk from military confrontation when a clear and present danger exists.

It's just that in Vietnam, the reasons for United States involvement were never clear, the stakes more honorary than strategic. Would our involvement compromise Thailand's efforts toward national independence?

There is no question that we must stand by an ally. We must not be viewed as fair weather friends, an image some of our European allies have cast in recent months.

But before the United States escalates past a supportive role in Thailand, this nation must learn from the mistakes of the past without confusing the present for the past.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Sunday, July 6, the 188th day of 1980. There are 178 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history: In 1699, the notorious pirate, Capt. William Kidd, was taken into custody in Boston. He was later hanged in England.

On this date: In 1535, Sir Thomas More was executed in England for treason.

In 1777, a British force under Gen. John Burgoyne captured New York's Fort Mifflin during the Revolutionary War.

In 1923, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics was formed in what had been Russia.

In 1971, American jazz pioneer Louis Armstrong died at the age of 71.

Five years ago, the Hawaiian volcano, Mauna Loa, erupted for the first time in 25 years.

Last year, Nicaraguan President

Anastasio Somoza sent 1,000 soldiers against the city of Masaya, held by Sandanista rebels determined to oust him.

Today's birthdays: Actor Sylvester Stallone is 34, actress Janet Leigh is 53, talk show host Merv Griffin is 55.

Thought for today: Wit is the salt of conversation, not the food. — William Hazlitt (1778-1830)

WASHINGTON JOURNAL:

Concerns of civil libertarians should be tempered

WASHINGTON — A federal commission studying immigration law reform is seriously considering whether worker eligibility cards should be issued to Americans and legal aliens in an effort to thwart the hiring of illegal aliens.

Such a recommendation would be made only if the Select Commission on Immigration and Refugee Policy also proposes that Congress make the hiring of illegal aliens a violation of federal law.

Although the panel's recommendations are not expected to be sent to Congress and the White House until December, its members and staff have begun focusing on what they believe are some key elements of what an immigration law reform package should be.

The House of Representatives twice has approved legislation making the hiring of an illegal alien a violation of federal law, but the measures died in the Senate for lack of action.

However, a worker eligibility card — called by its critics a "national ID card" and by its advocates a "national work permit" — never has been considered on Capitol Hill.

Although such documents are common in many other industrialized nations, civil libertarians in the United States have labeled them an unacceptable degree of federal control and a centralized filing of personal information.

However, the immigration commission's chairman, Rev. Theodore M. Hesburgh, former chairman of the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights, endorsed the work permit in February and ordered the panel's staff to study the technical and legal problems of implementing such a system.

Stressing that the commission has reached no conclusions yet, its executive director, Lawrence Fuchs, said the panel is focusing on recommendations that also include:

— Amnesty, or immunity from deportation, for illegal aliens already residing permanently in the United States.

Benjamin Shore

— A liberalized immigration policy that stresses family reunification and U.S. labor needs, thus reducing some of the pressures for illegal migration.

— Reducing the massive law enforcement efforts along the border and in the interior of the United States.

— Help for nations from which most illegal immigrants come to the United States in developing labor-intensive agriculture and industry to reduce the "push" factors, and making the hiring of illegal aliens a violation of federal law to reduce the "pull" factors.

Fuchs said that employer sanctions without a "secure method of identification" of persons legally eligible to work in the United States would pose a major threat to civil liberties.

It has been argued by ethnic minorities, especially Hispanics since the majority of illegal aliens are from Mexico and Central America, that employers threatened by a federal law against hiring illegal aliens might deny jobs to Hispanic Americans rather than risk violating federal law.

Civil libertarians in the House, such as Rep. Don Edwards, D-Calif., and Rep. Robert Kastenmeier, D-Wis., both influential members of the House Judiciary Committee which has jurisdiction over immigration law, are known to believe that while they oppose a national worker eligibility identification program, they might have to accept it in order to get their colleagues to support the equally controversial proposal for amnesty. Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee and a member of the immigration commission, has not staked out a public position on work cards.

An aide to the senator said Kennedy will be influenced by the debate over whether employer sanctions coupled with work cards would be "crucial" to congressional acceptance of the entire package of immigration law reforms.

The commission's staff has been studying the feasibility of using the existing Social Security identification number system but issuing counterfeit-proof cards that employers would have to ask job applicants to produce.

Although opponents frequently contend that the original law setting up the Social Security system in 1935 stated the number was not to be used for identification purposes, that prohibition was ended eight years later.

In November 1943, President Franklin D. Roosevelt issued an executive order requiring all federal agencies to use the Social Security number in setting up accounts for individual citizens. Roosevelt also ordered the Social Security Administration to issue a number to a citizen needing one for other business with the government.

In 1962 the Internal Revenue Service adopted the Social Security number as the basic taxpayer identifying number.

Most states now use Social Security numbers to identify licensed drivers, and banks are required by federal regulation to request individuals to provide their Social Security numbers when opening accounts.

The immigration commission staff believes that using the Social Security system as the basis for a worker identification card system has psychological advantages over initiating a separate system.

The Social Security number already is identified with work, the record-keeping system is in place, and proof of citizenship or legal alien status has been required for several years to get a card.

"Anyone who gets a new card these days is carrying, in effect, a work eligibility card," commented a Justice Department official who monitors the immigration commission's work.

Alan Westin, a Columbia University professor and noted expert on privacy issues, believes there would be no technical problem in producing a counterfeit-proof card at a cost low enough to eliminate that argument against it.

However, he warned that an "upgraded" Social Security card likely would be based on personal identifying information that would make the computerized files attractive to federal law enforcement agencies and thus raise the worst fears of civil libertarians.

The immigration commission's staff director, Fuchs, said "civil liberties concerns must be reconciled with the unprecedented pressure on the United States to provide jobs for increasing numbers of migrants."

"Doing nothing (about the flow of immigrants) could lead to even greater threats to our civil liberties," he said.

Announcing the losers adds interesting twist

WASHINGTON — No one wants to say it out loud but all the award shows on television are getting to be a bore. Whether it's the Oscars or the Tonys, the format never seems to change. "May I have the envelope, please — the winner is —"

"Oh my goodness, oh my gracious, this is the greatest moment of my life — I want to thank my producer Ron Christmas, my agent Eddie New Year, the cast, the cameramen, the sound mixer, my chauffeur, the woman who comes to clean my apartment twice a week, the Beverly Hills Fire Department, the boy who delivers my newspaper, my mother, my father, my third husband, and his two children by a former marriage, Thomas Edison, the Mormon Tabernacle Choir, Burger King, who always let me have it my way"

The producers of these shows know they're up against the wall and they are searching desperately for a new format to hold the audience's interest. I believe I may have one for them.

Instead of announcing the winners at shows such as the Academy and Tony awards, they could announce the losers.

This is how it would go.

"The nominees for the best actress are Lila Crane in 'Valium,' Sylvia Riff in 'Light My Beer,' and Dora Tremble in 'Roller Skate Hustler.' And the big loser is Lila Crane who starred in 'Valium.'"

Art Buchwald

"I am delighted to accept this award because it gives me an opportunity to mention all the no-talent people who participated in the making of 'Valium.' I don't know where to begin when it comes to blaming people involved with this picture. There were so many of them I'm sure I'll forget someone's name.

"To my lecherous producer, Sam Tolstoy, who pursued this project for 13 years before he found a studio dumb enough to put up the money, I would just like to say it was a lousy script to start with, but you managed to mess it up even worse. To my director, Gary Ack, who doesn't know one end of the camera from the other, I advise you to go back into your father's slides. To the cast, who sabotaged every scene I had, I will see all of you at a Screen Actors Guild hearing where I've preferred charges. And to my astute husband-manager, who persuaded me to play in this turkey, I want the house in Bel Air, custody of the dogs, and a complete account of the money I've made in the past 10 years. If you have anything to say to me after tonight, you can tell it to Marvin Mitchelson, my lawyer."

"Thank you, Lila, and now for the best actor of the year, the nominees are Rock Hammer, for 'Drowning,' Jeff Holster for 'Far Too Many Indians,' and Dan Lava for 'The One-Legged Place Kicker.' And the loser is Dan Lava."

"I'm proud to stand up here and accept this award, not because I believe that I am the only loser in this business. Everyone who was nominated is a loser. I saw Rock Hammer's performance in 'Drowning' and had to walk out of it. Jeff Holster's portrayal of a half-breed sheriff set the motion picture business back 20 years. They both deserve to be up here with me tonight. As for 'The One-Legged Place Kicker,' I have nothing to apologize for. I did it for the money, which in this business is the name of the game."

"Let's hear it for a great actor, Dan Lava. And now our final award for the best picture of the year, the nominees are 'Two Tickets to Picasso' produced by Sy Custer, 'The Incredible Tax Shelter,' producer Merrill Linch, and 'Ashes Over Portland,' producer Chaucer Campbell. May I have the envelope, please? The big loser is Merrill Linch."

"Accepting the award for Merrill Linch, who could not be with us tonight, is E.F. Houghton."

"Ladies and gentlemen, Merrill wanted to be here this evening in the worst way. But as you know he's doing one to 10 in the Allenwood Penitentiary for padding the books and writing bum checks to pay the cast. 'The Incredible Tax Shelter' was a labor of love as far as he was concerned, and although it brought in $60 million at the box office, it never made back its negative cost. Why a jury refused to believe this, is something Merrill will never understand."

"To the talented people associated with 'The Incredible Tax Shelter,' who were cheated out of their profits, Merrill has asked me to say you've been great sports, and as soon as his parole comes through he'd be proud to make another film with each and every one of you."

AUSTIN NOTEBOOK

John Anderson's battle in Texas has been uphill all the way

By BILL KIDD
Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — John Anderson has had an uphill battle all the way in his effort to get his name on the Texas ballot as an independent presidential candidate.

And the hot weather in Texas hasn't been helping, officials at his Austin campaign headquarters say. Anderson needs 40,719 signatures by July 14 to get on the Texas ballot — and about half that number had been collected by the time the Illinois congressman visited Austin at the end of June.

Since then, another 3,000 or so persons have signed Anderson's nominating petitions, but Texas campaign coordinator Jane Fowler says the hot weather has slowed efforts — with folks just not getting out to places where volunteers are located.

Anderson's candidacy has been a source of worry to Democrats nationally and at the state level.

AFTER ANDERSON announced as an independent, Secretary of State George W. Strake Jr., an appointee of Republican Gov. Bill Clements, ruled that no one who voted in the May 3 GOP primary could sign Anderson's petitions, because of Texas Election Code provisions against persons taking part in a presidential primary signing nominating petitions for independent candidates.

But Strake concluded voters from the Democratic primary could sign — reasoning that "whatever it was" that the Democrats held, "it wasn't a presidential primary" because it did not result in selection of delegates to the national nominating convention.

Garry Mauro, executive director of the Texas Democratic Party, says party officials then asked Rep. Sue McBeck, Del Rio, chairman of the House Elections Committee, to ask fellow Democrat Attorney General

Mark White for a ruling.

That ruling concluded that no one who voted in either primary could sign Anderson's petitions.

FOWLER SAYS Anderson's folks think Strake's ruling "will prevail, since he is the chief election officer" in Texas.

Of course, neither opinion is really more than advice — and the matter may have to be decided at the courthouse.

The Anderson workers say they hope it won't come to that — but note that they have an attorney standing by, as they've done in other states.

Mauro says the Democrats are "going to do whatever our attorneys think is legally correct," if the Anderson petitions appear to rely heavily on Democratic voters' signatures.

Mauro says the Texas situation isn't really part of a nationwide "stop Anderson" movement by Democratic officials concerned that the independent will strip votes away from Jimmy Carter, if Carter is, as expected, the party's nominee for November.

"WE THINK IT'S a plain and simple party integrity situation," Mauro says.

"We're going to court," he commented at one point, "because we don't think Democrats should participate in the selection of an independent. If I were an Anderson person, I wouldn't even take their signatures."

Mauro says the "Washington press" has been "trying to tie us into" efforts by the Democratic National Committee to keep Anderson off the ballot, but says the Texas situation is really more an on-going feud with Strake.

He cites a ruling by Strake in November that voters could sign petitions to get GOP candidates on the ballot, and then vote in the Democratic primary.

The DNC's opposition to Anderson and the state party's fight against Strake "happened to coincide," he said.

STRAKE SAYS HIS feeling is that Democrats are worried that Anderson being on the ballot "is going to help Reagan and hurt Carter," but "I think our ruling is correct; it has some pluses and minuses...I'm willing to stand behind it in a courtroom."

"I think," Strake adds (and many other folks agree) "they're making a mistake in giving it so much publicity."

him a page one item, rather than a page 22 item," Strake says.

His own opinion is that Anderson will get votes from people who "probably wouldn't have voted" otherwise — and that could help some "liberal Democrats" in other races.

Democratic officials (in the top ranks, at least) don't seem to share that view. (At the Democrats' state convention in San Antonio, Anderson was denounced as a "mini-Reagan.")

If the Carter/Reagan matchup in Texas is close in November, as it's expected to be, Anderson's presence on the ballot could be a crucial factor.

But Anderson's first big problem in Texas is getting on that ballot — and at least until July 14, his people, and Democratic officials, will be sweating a bit — and not just from the summer heat.

POSITIVE THINKING

Yes, prayer is a factor in curing of illnesses

By NORMAN VINCENT PEALE

Is prayer a factor in healing? I am sure that it is, judging from the many cases I have studied.

A retired Episcopal clergyman, knowing of my interest in examples of answered prayer, wrote me to describe a moving experience he had some years ago. At that time he was rector in charge of a church in Connecticut.

"One day upon entering a hospital lobby," he recalls, "I saw a small boy, alone and crying, to whom nobody was paying any attention. He was poorly dressed. He was carrying a bunch of rumpled wild flowers. I knelt beside him, put an arm around him and asked, 'What's troubling you, sonny?'"

"I want to see my aunt and they won't let me."

"Well," I said, "give me the flowers and I'll see that she gets them. Tell me her name."

"On inquiring at the desk I was referred to the women's ward, where I saw there were about 30 patients. A nurse directed me to a bed that had ominous screams around it. She said, 'We expect her to die tonight.'"

"I went behind the screens. I was amazed by what I saw: a beautiful young woman, about 20, unconscious, breathing, but entirely alone. I put the flowers on the table beside her."

"I laid my hands on her warm forehead and I prayed God to spare this world the life of such a beautiful young woman, who somewhere must have someone who loved her besides the little boy — someone who loved and needed her."

"That night I worked in my study until nearly midnight. Then before retiring I knelt at my desk and prayed, as was my custom, for all those I had met during the day who needed special help. And of course I included the unknown young woman."

"Next day I went to the hospital as usual. I stopped at the women's ward and asked about the young woman. 'She surprised us,' the nurse said. 'She suddenly rallied. We think she has a chance.'"

"What time did the change take place?" I asked.

"Just at midnight."

"I saw the young woman again, both at the hospital and later at her poor, bare home in the tenement district. Her husband was a truck driver, a rough sort of man, who in his uncouth way really loved his wife.

"In time I baptized her baby. And I had the satisfaction of seeing her go about her housework, restored to health — and as beautiful as ever."

People sometimes ask my views on the healing of illness and disease. As I have stated more than once, I believe God sometimes heals through His servant, the medical doctor or psychiatrist, sometimes through a person's faith, often through a combination of the two.

One type of case, however, has a special significance from a scientific as well as a religious standpoint. That is where a person for whose healing there has been fervent prayer — like the young woman I have cited — recovers from a condition the doctors had considered hopeless. Such occurrences are quite frequent.

I am well aware we cannot say for certain that the minister's prayers were instrumental in that woman's healing. Some would say the sudden improvement in her condition at the time of his midnight prayer was probably just coincidence.

But that is such an easy way of dismissing anything we do not understand. And there seem to be so many "coincidences" of this kind. That should make doubters, stop, look and wonder.

Healings prayed for are not always granted, for events are influenced by other factors also — and especially by a wisdom greater than our own. But I believe that prayers full of faith and love cannot fail to benefit the ailing person spiritually.

There is always the possibility of prayers being answered with a physical healing. Remember the promise of the Bible, "The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much."

Down on Ramsey

To The Editor:

I notice an AP report from Boston in the July 1st Reporter-Telegram where the tough "Gun Control Law" enacted by the state of Massachusetts was being heralded as a great success. All endorsements and quotes in the AP report, however, were from the original sponsors and advocates of the stringent law.

Ramsey Clark's name was not mentioned, however, he and many of the other long time advocates of such law will be leading the band the fast approaching day when a communist-socialist government takes over the United States, all without a shot being fired.

If my comments sound harsh or hysterical, study the actions and philosophy of Ramsey Clark, a man that was our Attorney General under Johnson's administration.

She likes Braniff

To The Editor:

I was returning recently on a Braniff International Flight 609 from Frankfurt, Germany to Dallas. A short way out of Newfoundland a fellow passenger had a heart attack. The crew worked diligently over the man, while the captain re-routed us into Dulles Airport, Washington, D.C.

We were met by an ambulance and medical team and they removed him and his family, and rushed him to the hospital.

After taking off from Dulles on to Dallas, the captain kept apologizing for the inconvenience it caused some people. I was horrified to hear so many people complain of the inconvenience and they would never fly Braniff again because we were so late.

I just want to say I will always choose Braniff over any other airline as I know they are human and care about their passengers. I don't know if the man lived or not, but I do know the Braniff crew did everything they could to save his life.

I had to write this letter as it may in some way make people stop and think how they are putting their needs above a human life. Bravo Braniff!

Functional taxes

To The Editor:

Recently reported was the annexation into Midland of "our" Polo Club and the comments of a spokesman that the club members would be worked a hardship upon should the land be taxed at its actual value.

rather than at its production value, since it only produces an occasional polo game.

This is consistent with the recent Texas practice of extending the same courtesy to farmers, valuing rutabaga ranches on the value of their production, whether or not located in downtown Dallas.

I certainly agree with this policy and thus I am most upset with the assessor-collector's arbitrary treatment of my great-grandfather's doorstep. It has faithfully held our doors open for generations, yet the tax man wants to assess it at its resale value, even though it produces only that limited function.

Just as the farmers (and the Polo Club members) expect, I feel that its functional value should logically determine its taxable value and not the irrelevant fact that it is composed of 26 pounds of 24 karat gold. Don't you agree?

Buggin' the city

To The Editor:

Midland is being covered by a swarm of flies in this long, hot summer. It's not only noticeably worse than last year, but several others have agreed that it's the worst in the last 20.

Why? Has the city ceased spraying the alleys or maintaining the cleanliness of the dumpsters or what?

During the last city election, all of the candidates asked for our votes, manifesting a desire to serve the citizenry. Now's their chance: the city awaits their efforts to solve a problem which is beyond the capabilities of the individual homeowner. While each taxpayer should assist by keeping his alley clean, an over-all program under city guidance is called for.

Or maybe we're to wait until the mosquitos hatch out of all the rain-filled parks, hoping for a battle royal to end both nuisances.

But a few preventive measures might produce more positive results. Maybe this letter will bug 'em into some much-needed action.

Praise for Paula

To The Editor:

In today's Midland Reporter-Telegram (June 29), we noted with admiration, the photograph of the outstanding people "recognized at the state convention of Texas Association for Retarded Citizens."

We would very much like to call attention to one member of that organization in particular who exemplifies Midland's young citizenry. In addition, she seems to be a competent librarian from whom we have constantly received a willingness to help, as well as courteous manner in our library needs. Miss Paula Greene, you are a credit to your community!

Over regulation

To The Editor:

The Congress is now into the business of business in a big way. The metamorphosis of Congress from a passive to an active role in business began with the failure and ultimate bankruptcy of the Penn Central Railroad. Fearing the failure of the Penn Central would embarrass the nation as well as leave important transportation needs unserved, Congress rushed to the rescue. The end result was Conrail.

It wasn't too long before Congress got a chance to play life-guard again, this time throwing the life-line to a floundering New York City awash in red ink.

Then Congress went to it again. Chrysler, like predecessors New York City and Penn Central, was doomed if the federal guarantees weren't approved. Thus, Congress chalks up its third rescue.

Now, many will argue that such rescues are absolutely necessary. Thousands of jobs are saved, a home industry is saved which would otherwise have its products replaced by foreign imports and Congress and its members end up as the guys wearing the white hats.

Congress is setting dangerous prece-edents and is overriding the mechanism of the free enterprise system by over regulation. The free enterprise system's checks and balances do not need Congress' tinkering. If a company fails, then so be it. Competition will take care of pricing. Demand, or lack of it, will determine what products are available.

Congressmen should stick to the business of legislating and let businessmen take care of the business of business.

Lacks quality

To The Editor:

I am writing this letter to express my opinion of the quality of reporting or, rather, the lack thereof contained in Mr. Ed Todd's June 18th story about the letter Lonna Bartley wrote to the judge presiding over her father's embezzlement trial.

To me, the headline of the story, "Daughter's letter favors punishment," immediately cast Miss Bartley in the role of a vindictive daughter urging severe and harsh punishment for her father. The lead-in paragraph of the article supported the headline by saying "Lonna Beth Bartley wrote the judge that he might ought to punish her father for embezzling from the banks where he was a vice president."

I strongly feel this language and style of reporting smack of sensationalism and does not accurately reflect what Miss Bartley wrote. I believe the message contained in her letter was more on the order of asking for compassion and understanding from the judge when sentencing Mr. Bartley rather than a statement that her father "might ought to be punished" as depicted in the story.

Hit list?

To The Editor:

I wrote my congressman asking how the victims of ABSCAM and BRILAB were selected, were they on someone's "hit list"? I certainly do consider most of them as victims.

The congressman's reply was that the FBI would not comment on any cases before court action. Clearly those who hatched the plots would prefer such questions were never raised and hope that the question doesn't come up after the public hoopla dies down.

I can only shake my head at the state of law in the U.S. today. It reminds me of what prophets of old wrote, "Therefore the law is slackened — wrong judgement proceedeth." Our law is used. I have good reason to believe that foreign politics figured in the plot to discredit most of those who were indicted.

Those supposed to enforce law have made deals with criminals, been taken in by their instructions and have rewarded people for breaking the ninth commandment. Good names will be sullied beyond recovery by people who had no good name to lose.

While I predict that for hundreds of thousands of tax dollars expended no more than two or three public and an equal number of private individuals will ever be convicted, but because of its infamous conception of the BRILAB-ABSCAM package will to a great extent do the damage it was intended to.

Not feeble minded

To The Editor:

My wife recently received a notice from the Planning & Zoning Commission that a permanent home for the "feeble minded" is being constructed adjacent to the Opportunity Center on N. A Street.

Her first reaction was one full of question due to the wording.

As a message to all concerned citizens, let me set the record straight. The residence being constructed is one for the trainable handicapped. This residence is needed and will serve a very vital service to our community.

The handicapped can be trained to perform useful and productive tasks to businesses. When trained properly

Park much needed

To The Editor:

I read your article, "Midland annexes 6 1/2 square miles," in Wednesday, June 25th issue, with great interest.

When it came to the Kiwanis Park, as Wayne Kohout put it, "Never, Never Land," I got upset. Especially learning they pulled the workers off the park and put them on the rose garden at the fire station!

This park has been talked about and planned and talked about. I've lived in Midland since '76 and it's been in the discussion stage all this time.

I talked to Wayne Kohout and it will be a unique and beautiful park, if given sufficient funds. It will be something for all ages.

This area is growing and this park is desired and needed. There is nothing in this area for preschoolers; but this park is designed for all ages!

Would the City Council please give the parks dept. these funds out of the existing budget, and this park can be completed by school time.

If given funds out of next year's fiscal budget, it could be months and months (if not another year) before this park is finished. It's much needed in this community. Let's not stall, or hold out on funds, or we'll end up with a plain, flat piece of land, with only a few pieces of equipment. Let's have it done right and have something to be proud of!

Say 'boo'

To The Editor:

The Austin elite are trying to do it to us again! Beware people, the beast is called the Alcohol Services Act and it is now a piece of proposed (draft) legislation which will be brought up in the next Texas legislative year.

The act "broadens" the powers and duties of the Texas Commission on Alcoholism. "Broadens" will certainly mean greatly increased outlays of our tax dollars to fund another unnecessary bureaucracy.

The act decriminalizes public drunkenness. This may not sound like much of a deal, but stop and consider all of the consequences. The act says that a peace officer may not arrest an "intoxicated person," but "may offer the person assistance, but cannot insist that the offer be accepted." I have been a peace officer for over eight years and have arrested hundreds of drunks. Not once have I ever had one admit that they needed assistance!

How does this affect you? Suppose a drunk comes and lays down in your front yard. You call the police and they advise you that there is nothing that they can do about the inebriate because public intoxication is no longer against the law. Your only recourse is to then go before a judge (if you can find one) and file a trespassing complaint. The judge may then issue a warrant for the arrest of the person for trespassing. Once the warrant is transferred to the police department they will then go and arrest the person. All the while the drunk is fermenting all over your yard!

If you really want to get sick apply the above basic set of circumstances to your place of business. If your business is generally open to the public (a restaurant, store, shop, etc.) you couldn't even file a trespass complaint. The drunk could stay there and offend your customers indefinitely if he or she so desired. "Nuf said. Write your Texas representative and senator and say "boo" on the Alcohol Services Act. Thank you very much.

RINGING THE BELL

Black English, law enforcement problems need close attention

With BOB TIEUEL

Our sources from Ann Arbor, Mich., indicate that teachers were given no "magic teaching potions" to deal with students who speak black English, but they say a controversial, court-ordered training program in the dialect did not leave them discouraged. Linguists and educators still have a ways to go, they say, to reach a consensus on black English and how those who use it in everyday speech can best be taught.

U.S. Dist. Judge Charles W. Joiner ruled recently that seven black students at Martin Luther King Elementary School were denied access to an equal education because their teachers failed to consider black English in standard English lessons. Following the ruling, black English workshops were set up throughout the system. Joiner defined black English as "a language system . . . used at some time by 80 percent of the black people of this country . . . in their casual conversation."

Prof. Roger Shuy of the University of Georgetown Center for Applied Linguistics gives this black English writing as an example: "Henry ain't no basketball star but he play real good with the other guys on the team an they been name number one in the city."

"Basically, it's just that children learn better with teachers who are accommodating and are gentle in correcting children while not letting them have their own way," said one principal.

Bellringers and readers interested in the research studies on black English and their relationship to reading problems should contact Dr. Percy Bates, assistant dean of education, University of Michigan, Ann Arbor.

Bellringer sources in Houston report that ex-Police Chief Harry Caldwell hung up his badge recently while saying he had guided the department through some ugly publicity about brutality and community unrest to "moral watershed."

"We've been in the news nationally not because Houston's problems or people are different, but because we were running an open house with the curtains open. I dealt with the accountability issue head-on," he said, contending that professional police conduct will be an essential ingredient for policy in the 1980s.

In trying to bring the department to what he considered professional standards, Caldwell met resistance. His firm policy against deadly force was an example. Caldwell ordered his men to shoot only to protect their own lives or the lives of others. No more warning shots, Caldwell ordered. No more shots at speeding cars.

Caldwell may be the best educated law enforcement officer in the state, with advanced degrees in his field. His personal community relations program which occupied about half his time was considered by some to be too much. In reply, Caldwell said it was vital to his bid for community acceptance of law enforcement.

Whatever the reaction, Caldwell said he was correct to establish ties with minority groups. He sidestepped traditional ward heelers and sought grassroots relations.

He concluded: "I never tried to force myself on the community. The future of law enforcement in the state is brighter than ever."

hints from Heloise

DEAR HELOISE:

As a working woman I have enjoyed and valued your hints for years. Finally, I have a hint which your dieting readers may appreciate. My current diet calls for two hard-boiled eggs for breakfast but I hate to cook in the morning and dislike cold eggs.

The solution involves my popular brand of automatic drip coffeemaker. I hard boil 10 eggs on Sunday. On working days I simply take two from the fridge, scrub and place in the top plastic water holder of my coffee maker before I dispense the water.

By the time my coffee is ready, the chill is removed from the eggs. I can eat and run without getting up early for breakfast preparation.

DOUBLY GOOD

DEAR HELOISE:

Recently I bought two of the pull-top solid air fresheners at a very inexpensive price.

They were so pretty that after the freshener was used up, I decided not to throw them away. But what to do with them?

Then the idea came to me to use them as refrigerator fresheners. I thoroughly washed them, removing any scent, and then put baking soda inside.

They look very decorative inside the refrigerator, and were so inexpensive.

DIPPITY DO!

DEAR HELOISE:

One day I was helping my daughter and granddaughter with arts and crafts. We needed felt tip markers to color our project.

The felt tip pens had dried out completely. But my daughter came up with the idea of dipping the pens in food coloring.

It worked like a charm and saved a trip to the store.

JANE'S LETTER-WRITING DIARY

DEAR HELOISE:

I love to write letters but often have trouble remembering if I told Patty where I was going (possibly Bernadette or Julie?) or if I sent my picture and list of hobbies to Gina, Karen or Lynn, and so on.

Now I use an old notebook, print my friend's address at the top of the page and write the letter. Then I copy the letter on good paper and it's ready to mail.

I now have a record that makes a neat journal or diary too.

A DOG-GONE GOOD IDEA

DEAR HELOISE:

Over the years I have been collecting my dogs' vaccination tags.

I had so many that I made a board to hold them all. I got a piece of attractive plywood and cut it the size I needed, then varnished it.

I got my favorite photograph of my dog and pasted it in the middle of the board and printed his name under it.

I took some nails and hammered them around the picture and hung all the tags on it. Now, when another one of his tags expires, I can take it off his collar and hang it on a nail.

LOOK! NO HANDS!

DEAR HELOISE:

I've enjoyed your column (and your mother's!) for years. A great time saver for me is a shoulder rest attached to the receiver of my telephone.

One can be purchased from the phone company or a specialty catalog. It frees your hands so you can file your nails, take off polish, dust the top of the desk while still chatting.

You can even write notes or balance the checkbook while waiting for someone on the other end of the line to return with the information requested.

I think you won't want to be without one once you've tried it.

UPSIDE DOWN TIP!

DEAR HELOISE:

When putting a dress with a long zipper on a wire hanger, the dress slips off the hanger before you can get it zipped up.

So I put the dress on the hanger, turn it upside down and the weight of the hanger keeps the dress in place.

You can then quickly zip the dress without any hassle.

HINTS FROM HIM

DEAR HELOISE:

The quickest, easiest and most convenient way to shape your hamburger patties is to spray the top of an ordinary 303 size can and just mold your meat right on top.

Tip the can upside down and the patties come right off.

I like to use a full can as it has more weight to work with.

When you're through, just wipe the can off and return it to your cabinet.

John L. Reynolds

CRATE IDEA

DEAR HELOISE:

I needed a place to store my record albums and happened upon a wooden crate in the shape of an apple crate but a little larger.

My albums stand on end inside the crate, which is set on its side. My receiver and turntable perch on top of the crate (make sure it's strong enough, though).

Now everything is compact, easily accessible and is a conversation piece, to say the least!
