Campaigning geared for big Tuesday

By The Associated Press

Walter F. Mondale traveled to south Georgia to sample the barbecue and get a last-minute political embrace from Jimmy Carter on Saturday while Gary Hart courted the nuclear freeze vote in Massachusetts and won a solid victory in the Wyoming caucuses — his fourth straight.

But the impact of Wyoming — with its 12 delegates up for grabs Saturday — was dwarfed by the approach of Super Tuesday with its 11 primaries and caucuses in which 511 delegates will be chosen.

Sen. John Glenn and the Rev. Jesse Jackson stayed in Georgia, while former South Dakota Sen. George McGovern was in Massachusetts — states where each says he must do well.

The key event for all five remaining canidates before Tuesday comes Sunday, with the nationally televised hour-long League of Women Voters' debate in Atlanta.

The Wyoming county caucuses, the first Democratic presidential event in the West, was to decide the presidential preferences of 12 of the state's 15 delegates to the San Francisco convention in July.

With 22 of Wyoming's 23 caucuses reporting, Hart had 2,108 county delegates or 61 percent, to 1,257, or 36 percent, for Mondale. There were 102 uncommitted, 15 for Jackson, eight for McGovern and three for Glenn.

The Hart victory lengthened a string of triumphs over Mondale that includes the New Hampshire primary, Maine caucuses and the Vermont beauty contest primary.

In a statement released in Washington, Hart said he hoped the Wyoming victory "means that Democrats can begin the effort to regain the West for our party."

Like other states where he had won primary victories, Hart said "this is another situation where we were outmanned."

Glenn attacked Hart for looking for "just another line" in his political biography by applying for a U.S. Naval Reserve commission in 1980.

"It's hardly logical to think he was looking forward to a Navy career or actually being called to duty," said Glenn, who spent 23 years in the Marines. "Every politician likes to have some military background listed on his record, even at the age of 41, after you're in the Senate."

In Plains, Ga., Carter said Mondale's service with him for four years as vice president had proved Mondale can handle the difficult choices facing a president.

Taking a new route

A large crowd braved the unseasonably cool weather Saturday as State Highway 191 was formally dedicated. It is hoped that the new highway will become a symbol of a new togetherness between the people of Midland and Odessa.

Cities linked in new way

By LAWRENCE BUDD
Staff Writer

That road may well be State Highway 191.

Formally dedicated in a ceremony at the Midland-Ector County line Saturday morning, this north link road connects the two cities — literally paving the way for Petroplex development.

State and local dignitaries, including Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby and House Speaker Gib Lewis, huddled against the cold to commemorate the opening of S.H. 191. The event ended with the mayors, county judges and state representatives of both cities painting the final highway line (at the actual county dividing line) before the road's opening.

Bands from Midland Lee and Odessa Permian High School provided musical background for the dedication. A surprisingly large crowd — considering the whipping winds which added a chill to the 40-degree temperature — turned out to listen to short speeches by several of the dignitaries.

They looked on as Odessa Mayor Bob Bryant, Ector County Judge Jan Fisher and Rep. Jay Gibson pushed a paint roller laying down a white line which met the another painted by Midland Mayor Thane Akins, Midland County Judge Bill Ahders and Rep. Tom Craddick in the middle to complete preparations for the road's opening.

"This road perhaps is the symbol of cooperation between your two cities," said Texas Highway Commissioner John Butler Jr., suggesting the road will promote the movement of industry and development into West Texas.

Hobby noted that S.H. 191 provided an additional connection between what he jokingly referred to as "those two capitals of cooperation known all over Texas."

Lewis, promising not to speak too long to the freezing crowd, likened the situation in Midland/Odessa to one he related to as a resident of Dallas/Fort Worth — where cooperation has aided the metroplex's prosperity.

"I certainly can see that evident here today," he said.

Duane Leach, president of The University of Texas of the Permian Basin, unveiled a "friendship monument" donated by UTPB that he said "will stand as an enduring reminder" of the coming together of the two cities.

Further development of the Permian Basin depends to a large extent on the ability of the two cities to draw new businesses to the area, with competition for new commerce tougher than ever.

"We must learn to cooperate in order to compete," said Leach.

The plaque reads: "In commemoration of a joint venture of friendship and cooperation between the cities of Midland and Odessa, this monument is a permanent reminder of our interdependence, mutual goals and ability to achieve greatness together."

"It's high time we did something like this," added Midland Chamber of Commerce President Bill Franklin. His Odessa counterpart, Art Lish, said, "I didn't think we could get this many people in Odessa to agree on anything. Now we've got two cities agreeing."

The ceremony opening S.H. 191 goes along with the cooperative efforts spearheaded by a media campaign based on the theme — "Famous Duos." Both cities' newspapers, radio and TV stations will be donating advertising to the campaign which will be complemented by large roadside billboards.

The $7.6 million road project connects the two cities by a northern route, offering an alternative to I—20 and State Highway 80 for northside residents of Midland and Odessa. It runs from Andrews Highway in Midland to 42nd Street in Odessa.

Except for a four-way stop at the intersection of F.M. 1788 northwest of Midland Regional Airport, the road is a straight, non-stop, four-lane divided highway linking the two cities.

Odessa Mayor Bob Bryant and Ector County Judge Jan Fisher paint the stripe on State Highway 191 during formal dedication ceremonies Saturday.

Mother wants law enforced

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — A woman says she will go to jail instead of paying a $10 traffic ticket to protest a court system she says won't help her collect $4,000 in back child support payments from her ex-husband.

Guadalupe Paz Candelmo, 27, says her former husband has paid no child support since he was ordered to three years ago. Her children are now ages 5 and 8.

Mrs. Candelmo, who works as a hairdresser at a department store, said she went to city court when she learned an arrest warrant had been issued on the ticket she received for making an illegal turn.

The warrant is part of a crackdown by the city on a three-year backlog of about 72,000 outstanding traffic tickets.

"If they want to enforce the law so much, why don't they enforce the law on him?" Mrs. Candelmo asked. "If they're going to enforce laws, they should enforce all the laws equally."

She said the judge lowered the fine to $10 and gave her extra time to pay when she explained her situation, but after the court hearing, Mrs. Candelmo said, "I'm not going to pay anything. I'm still going to tell her (the judge) the same thing."

Mrs. Candelmo said had she sought help from the Bexar County District Attorney's office in locating her husband, who disappeared shortly after their divorce. But she said she was told she would have to pay a $55 "locator" fee before the office would try to find him.

She said she eventually located her husband herself in Rhode Island, but when she gave the information to the district attorney's office, "I was told it would be a matter of time."

A lawsuit she filed seeking the child support is scheduled to be heard next week.

Denise Martinez, head of the domestic relations section of the district attorney's office, says because Mrs. Candelmo's husband is out of state, authorities in Texas must work through agencies in the state where he resides.

"The only thing we can do is send a letter," she said.

Unique society develops in desert

By MARJORIE MILLER and RICARDO CHAVIRA
Copley News Service

First in a series

Highway 80, a blacktop ribbon of road through scrub brush and hill after rugged hill, unfolds south toward Douglas. The windswept Arizona highway leads to the 1,900-mile border where Mexico and the United States stand face to face in a barren land.

At the border, the highway joins a trio of narrow Mexican highways that also traverse the arid geography.

But there are more than lonesome roads among the scrub brush. These Mexican and American highways form a network that connects far-apart towns and cities from San Diego to Brownsville, Texas; from Tijuana to Matamoros, Tamaulipas.

IT IS IN THESE remote border cities, far from national capitals, that the United States and Mexico not only meet but merge to form a new society.

It is a society of people like Elsa Vega and Celia Diaz, both of whom grew up south of the border, but now live north. It is people like Barney Thompson and William Arens, who married women from Tijuana but live in San Diego.

It is Robert Bracker, whose father built a store in Nogales, Ariz., to serve Mexican customers, or Pablo Hourani, who lives in Bonita, Calif., and commutes south daily to run his family clothing business. Or Leobardo Estrada of Los Angeles, the grandson of Mexican immigrants whose family still extends south to Tijuana.

AT THE BORDER, a wealthy technological superpower meets a developing agricultural nation; a predominantly Anglo-Protestant people encounters a society of mestizos, Indians and Spanish Catholics.

Here on the border, a 200-year-old, upstart culture meets one with roots that predate Christ. Together they meld into a new third culture of the borderlands that blurs the very border from which it was born.

This barren land has been fertile ground, after all; fertile for a culture that has flourished in part because of its isolation. The border culture has had room to grow in the desert.

It has grown in Mexican cities like Mexicali, where the land once belonged to American developers, and in Tijuana, which was so isolated that until the 1940s, Tijuanans had to pass through the United States to visit their mainland.

It has grown in American cities like Laredo, Texas, and Calexico, Calif., where the mainstream is a Hispanic majority.

THE CULTURE of the borderlands is a binational world where Mexicans are becoming more Americanized and Americans are becoming more Mexicanized. It is an area, sometimes hundreds of miles wide, where famjlies, businesses, languages and values from the two countries often are entwined as tightly as the chain link fence that attempts to separate them.

While not all of the cities and the 7 million people who live along the U.S.-Mexico boundary belong to the binational culture, there is a border society that is distinct from Mexico and the United States.

In parts, the border culture reaches as far north as Santa Barbara, Calif., and San Antonio, Texas, as far south as La Paz in Baja California Sur and Chihuahua City, Chihuahua.

Divers find 12 bodies aboard sunken ship

HOUSTON (AP) — Divers searching inside an American drilling ship that sank during a typhoon in the South China Sea five months ago have discovered the bodies of 12 of the 81 crewmembers, officials said Saturday.

The discovery marked the first time the fate of any crewmembers has been known.

Dick Vermeer, a vice president with Global Marine Inc., the ship's owner, said the search of the Glomar Java Sea was continuing around the clock.

The bodies were found Friday morning in the ship's galley, recreation room and other areas, he said. Divers were searching the crew's quarters Saturday, the third day of the investigation, Vermeer said.

state

The ship sank during Typhoon Lex on Oct. 25 and now lies in 300 feet of water 60 miles south of China's Hainan Island and 200 miles east of Vietnam.

Company officials have said the crew's last radio transmission indicated workers were in life jackets preparing to board lifeboats. Officials have theorized that some crew members might be alive but imprisoned in Vietnam, where the winds would likely have carried them.

Vietnamese officials have refused to allow outsiders to search their coastal waters, but said they have not located any survivors.

Vermeer said bad weather and lack of equipment kept company officials from investigating the inside of the ship sooner.

Divers did investigate the outside of the wreck for three days in early November and found a large indented fracture which ran from top to bottom of the vessel's starboard side, Global officials said at a Coast Guard hearing in January.

Vermeer said the bodies will be shipped aboard a commercial survey ship to Hong Kong next week, where U.S. medical experts hired by Global Marine will attempt to identify them with dental records.

The crew comprised 37 Americans, 35 Chinese, a Canadian, a Filipino, an Austrailian, four Britons and two Singaporeans, Vermeer said.

Relatives of a few of the U.S. crew members have filed multimillion-dollar lawsuits against Global Marine.

Education board approves revised $2.2 million plan

H. Ross Perot

AUSTIN (AP) — The State Board of Education, moving Saturday to upgrade Texas public education, approved a revised curriculum which establishes student achievment standards and recommended that teachers get raises of nearly $4,000 a year.

The standards in the curriculum approved 20-4 by the board Saturday set out the minimum amounts of time that must be spent on each elementary school subject and require high school students to take more English and math.

School Board Chairman Joe Kelley Butler and other board members made it clear that their actions were not influenced by Dallas computer magnate H. Ross Perot, the chairman of the Select Committee on Public Education who has been highly critical of the board.

"Everyone had input and we welcomed the input from everyone as we put this compromise document into effect," Butler said. "We did not operate in that dictatorial vacuum envisioned by H. Ross Perot."

Education Commissioner Raymon Bynum estimated that the additional $2.2 billion in recommended education improvements, including teachers pay, could be handled by a one-cent increase in the state sales tax. But he said he was not recommending that.

Gov. Mark White named Perot to head a blue-ribbon committee to study and make recommendations about Texas' education system after White failed to get a teachers pay raise out of the 1983 Legislature.

White has said he will call a special legislative session after Perot's committee reports, if the recommendations are acceptable to lawmakers.

The committee meets in Dallas next Wednesday, Thursday and Friday to decide on a preliminary report to the governor.

After Saturday's board session, Butler, who is a member of the select committee, said he would order statewide public hearings on any recommendations by Perot's committee.

Perot and Butler have clashed frequently over one of Perot's personal suggestions that the 27-member board of education, elected from each congressional district, be replaced by a seven-member board appointed by the governor.

The recommendations approved Saturday by the board proposed increasing a starting teacher's salary to $1,500 a month. The present pay is $11,100 a year.

For an experienced classroom teacher the pay would go from $21,000 a year to $24,000.

Each teacher would get an increase of at least $100 a month.

A three-step career ladder would be set up to advance the most progressive teachers.

"We must have a sufficient salary schedule based on the premise of having starting salary at a level to attract our best boys and girls into teaching and so teachers can look to a rewarding career," said Bynum.

One of the most controversial features in the curriculum changes approved Saturday calls on ninth-graders to choose one of two paths to getting a diploma.

Under an advanced honors program, which would be strong on basic academic subjects with fewer electives, a student must have 22 credits before graduating. A general study program, allowing more vocational education study and electives, requires only 21 credits for a diploma.

Parolee kills himself after assault on girl

ARLINGTON (AP) — A 33-year-old parolee killed himself Saturday after a two-hour standoff with police officers who were trying to arrest him in connection with the kidnapping and sexual assault of a young girl, authorities said.

Doyle Wayne Newsome, of Fort Worth, killed himself with a shotgun about 1:35 a.m. after barricading himself inside in an Arlington motel room, said Fort Worth police spokesman Doug Clarke.

Newsome was wanted in connection with the sexual assault of a 10-year-old Fort Worth girl who disappeared on her way to school Thursday morning, Clarke said.

The fourth-grader staggered into a convenience store in nearby Hurst about 7 p.m. Friday. She was listed in stable condition today at John Peter Smith Hospital, Clarke said.

Witnesses said the girl came into the store with blood all over her body and told a customer, "Take me home, I want my momma."

James Hudson, who with his wife, Amy Hudson, was playing a video game at the Hurst convenience store, said the beaten girl identified Newsome as her attacker.

"She had blood all over her," Hudson said. "Her eye was swollen. She looked like she was going to faint."

The girl's eye was swollen shut and a deep gash and her forehead, a store clerk said.

An arrest warrant was then issued for Newsome, Clarke said. The girl apparently knew the man, Clarke said.

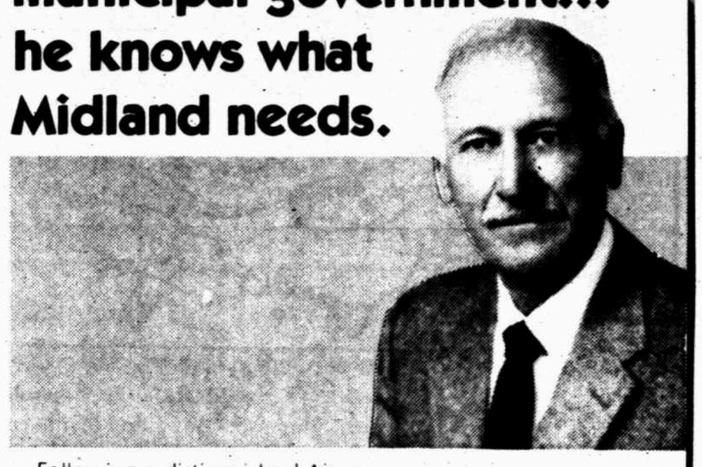

Arlington and Fort Worth police went to the motel after obtaining the address from Newsome's former girl friend, Clarke said. Newsome barricaded himself inside the room and held off police for about two hours, Clarke said.

Police did not fire any shots, Clarke said.

Newsome was on parole for a similar offense in Oregon, Clarke said.

Speaker says he didn't gain by selling property

DALLAS (AP) — Texas House Speaker Gib Lewis denies that he profited by selling some money-losing property where the state now rents his office, even though the proceeds paid off a $139,000 debt he and a business partner owed. The Dallas Morning News reported Saturday.

Lewis and the partner, Jim Odom, sold a Fort Worth shopping center to a member of Lewis' legislative staff two days before Lewis began using taxpayer money and campaign contributions to rent office space there, the News said in a copyright story.

Legislators are prohibited form benefiting from rental contracts for offices in their home districts.

But Lewis called the arrangment as "clean as a hound's tooth" and said paying off the debt was "not a benefit in the sense that means."

Two of the four office spaces in the R.C.O. Center were empty until Lewis began leasing them. One is rented by the state for his legislative office and the other is leased by his inactive campaign committee.

Lewis said that he and Odom didn't make enough rent off the shopping center to make their mortgage payments on the property.

In addition to being Lewis employee, the new owner of the property, D.L. Womack Jr. of Azle, sits with Lewis on the board of Lake Worth National Bank — which had lent Lewis' partnership money with the shopping center as collateral.

Womack bought the property July 30. The bank canceled the Lewis partnership's debt by making out a new note to Womack, said Lake Worth president Thomas E. Stewart.

Womack paid nothing for the property but agreed to assume the shopping center's debts, Lewis said.

Lewis said there was no relationship between his decision to rent office space in the shopping center beginning Aug. 1 and Womack's decision to buy it July 30 — "none whatsoever."

The state is paying $625 a month to rent the legislative office. The Lewis campaign committee pays another $400 a month for its office but only uses it to store boxes and campaign materials, said campaign treasurer David Atkins of Fort Worth.

Lewis said he previously housed his legislative office in the building of his private firm, Lewis Label Products, and saved the state up to $6,000 a year.

Lewis, who last year pleaded no contest to a charge that he failed to properly disclose his finances and paid an $800 fine, said he checked with the attorney general's office about the arrangements for his office space before closing the deal.

A federal bankruptcy trustee, Rufus Garrett, has filed suit to seize the shopping center as an asset to satisfy the debts of Lewis and Odom's bankrupt corporation, W.W. Shipman and Sons Inc., a fruit and vegetable brokerage.

Elderly widow gets home, monthly income for life

CARROLLTON, Texas (AP) — A 75-year-old widow threatened with eviction from her lifelong home and suburban land worth more than $500,000 has reached a settlement that will give her a new house and an income for life.

Lawyers for Callie Wallace reached the agreement Friday with a developer who is buying the five acres of land and agreed to drop a court suit against a contractor who Mrs. Wallace claimed cheated her out of the property more than 18 years ago.

"I heard a song in my heart that the Lord was watching over me," Callie Wallace said when the sale was made final Friday. "I couldn't ask for anything more. I'm happy to be staying on my homestead. That's the most important thing."

The property was given to Mrs. Wallace and her late husband by a cotton farming family that had employed the couple for half their lives. The land skyrocketed in value from about $2,500 in 1944 when they took it over to more than $500,000 because of growth in this Dallas suburb.

The Dallas contractor, Virgil Whatley, maintained that Mrs. Wallace had turned the property over to him to settle a debt. He attempted to sell the land to the developer, F. Peter Lee.

Friends of Mrs. Wallace filed suit to stop the sale. In the settlement reached Friday, Lee agreed to build Mrs. Wallace a new home, let her live on the property for the rest of her life and provide her with a monthly income.

Whatley also agreed to contribute an undisclosed sum to a trust fund established in Mrs. Wallace's name.

Snow in Montana, the Dakotas, Minnesota, Iowa and Maine coast, and rain in Washington and Oregon are forecast for today by the National Weather Service.

Chance for rain, high in 60s expected today

There's a 20 percent chance of rain today in the forecast from the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Air Terminal.

Temperature should range into the 60s, with winds out of the southeast at 10 to 15 mph under partly cloudy skies.

Tonight should see fair skies and temperatures in the low 40s. Monday will be fair, with a high in the low 70s.

The record high for Saturday's date was 88, set in 1954. The record low for today's date was 10, set in 1948.

STATE

A cold front invading the Lone Star State brought showers and thunderstorms to East and South Texas Saturday, and more rainfall was predicted along the gulf coast and in eastern sections later.

Skies were clearing behind the front, which was located from Lufkin through Austin to the Big Bend. Sunny conditions prevailed in far West Texas, the northern Panhandle and parts of the north central region.

High temperatures climbed generally into the 60s and 70s ahead of the front, but only into the 40s and 50s in northern sections. Readings remained in the 80s in South Texas.

Winds were mostly northerly across the state at 5 to 15 mph.

Lows statewide early Sunday should range from the 20s and 30s in the north to the 40s and 50s in central sections and the 60s and 70s in the south, under partly cloudy to cloudy skies.

The National Weather Service said that widely scattered showers should develop in southeastern sections of West Texas early Sunday and east of the mountain areas later Sunday.

Clearing conditions should prevail across West Texas Monday, the weather service said.

A 40 percent chance of thunderstorms was forecast in the Dallas-Fort Worth area Sunday, with the high expected in the upper 50s and the low in the upper 40s.

The weather service said a chance of thunderstorms remained Monday, with a predicted high in the mid-60s.

NATION

A fast-moving blizzard barreled out of Canada and into Minnesota and the Dakotas on Saturday, swirling snow into a "white wall" that cut visibility to zero on highways.

Arctic air hovered over much of the northeastern quarter of the nation, with record lows at more than 30 locations from the northern half of the Great Plains to the middle and northern Atlantic Coast. Light snow fell in the mid-Mississippi and lower Ohio valleys and as far south as Arkansas and northern Alabama.

A blizzard warning was issued for northwestern and west central sections of Minnesota and the eastern part of North Dakota. Gale warnings were in effect for Lake Superior, Lake Michigan and Lake Huron.

Wind blowing at 50 mph whipped up loose, fluffy snow to cut visibility in the Red River Valley on the Minnesota-North Dakota border from 20 miles to zero in a matter of seconds. The storm hit like a "white wall," said Jon Storley, spokesman for the Minn-Kota chapter of the Red Cross.

Temperatures around the nation at 2 p.m. EST ranged from 12 degrees in International Falls, Minn., to 88 degrees in Palm Springs, Calif.

For Sunday, light snow was forecast over Montana and the Dakotas. Northern New England should brace for some snow. Cloudy skies were forecast over much of the Plateau region, with dense fog in northwestern Utah and southeastern Idaho. Rain is predicted along the Washington and Oregon coast.

In a few instances, the borderlands culture crops up like an island far from the international boundary, such as in Chicago — where Mexican immigrants have converted old neighborhoods into replicas of border communities.

By and large, the culture clings to the area along the U.S.-Mexico border, where people might live in one country and work or go to school in another.

It is where Americans and Mexicans intermarry and have children who are dual citizens for the first 18 years of their lives, until they must choose one country or the other.

It is a region where the people speak English and Spanish and often a third language, Spanglish, that is a hybrid of the two.

And it is a society where certain businesses exist simply because the border exists — businesses like currency exchange houses, import-export brokerage firms and drive-through Mexican car insurance agencies — and where businessmen must learn to operate in two cultures so that after years of doing so they become bicultural.

THE BORDER SOCIETY is made up of towns and cities that experience international issues, like illegal immigration, as local problems. Pollution, sewage and natural disasters affect Mexican and American border cities equally because such problems do not respect an international boundary.

Society on the border is united by footbridge, ferry and bus; by bilingual radio and television; by millions of people who legally cross the border hundreds of times each year and by countless others who cross illegally.

It is a society in which the local economies on each side of the border often are more attached to one another than to the mother country's.

It is a society that is slightly scorned by both Mexico and the United States for its unconventional behavior.

Even some of the cities have blended. Take Calexico and Mexicali — on opposite sides of the border, but both named by the Colorado Land River Co. from the words California and Mexico. And cities such as Columbus, N.M., and its neighbor, Palomas, Chihuahua, that have merged in other ways, helping to sustain each other.

MANY COLUMBUS residents have family in Palomas, while nearly half of Columbus' schoolchildren are from the border's other side. Columbus provides the Mexican town with ambulance and fire services. Mexicans commonly use the hospital on the U.S. side, the only one in the area.

On the other hand, Palomas still is the place where Columbus residents go to eat bargain-price steak dinners and drink hearty Mexican beer. And despite Mexico's ailing economy, Columbus still relies on Mexican shoppers to spend money in the U.S. town.

But this binational blend is not spread evenly along the boundary. The border society is not homogenous.

The border region is the wealthiest in Mexico, but one of the poorest regions of the United States.

Its people are a mix of pioneers who have called the frontier home for generations, and a generation of new settlers who arrived yesterday from Ohio or Oaxaca, from Michigan or Michoacan.

THERE ARE PEOPLE living along the boundary who are so oblivious to the new third culture that they might be nearer the Canadian border. There are fourth, fifth, sixth cultures, such as that of the Kickapoo Indians in Texas, the Chinese of Mexicali, the Filipinos of San Ysidro, Calif., that exist under the umbrella of the border society. And there are differences between urban and rural people, the rich and poor, Texans and Californians.

In fact, those who are totally immersed in the border culture are a minority. Far greater are the numbers who dip in and out, whose cross-border experience might be limited to occasional shopping or dining in the other country, whose cross-cultural experience might be limited to Mexicans seeing an American movie or to San Diegans living next door to a family whose mother tongue is Spanish.

Some might be touched by the border only because they work with Americans or employ a Mexican. But inevitably, bits and pieces of the culture rub off — exposure to another language or lifestyle, a conversion from dollars to pesos or kilometers to miles, a sketchy knowledge of the history of another country, a familiarity with its holidays and traditions.

While some people who live in the border culture embrace it as a positive and inevitable change, others are hostile toward it for fear it will degrade their own culture.

The history of the border begins with such antagonism.

After a two-year war between Mexico and the United States, the present-day border was drawn, which cost Mexico nearly half its territory. Mutual hate and distrust poisoned relations, and for years after the conquest, Americans and Mexicans launched cross-border raids against each other.

MEXICO LATER decided to put up the only barrier it had — people — to prevent Americans from capturing more land simply by moving on to it. The government in the 1930s made it a national policy to entice Mexicans to move north — ironically, by offering them access to cheap American goods.

More recently, Mexicans in the interior have chastised those northern Mexicans for becoming too Americanized and too dependent on American goods.

Today, many Mexicans see the cultural encroachment of the United States in Mexico as a further "occupation" of their country. Many Americans, on the other hand, fear that Mexicans slowly are reconquering the Southwest with their cultural encroachment.

Just as the border is not homogenous, neither is it completely unified.

Conflicts, clashes and contradictions have developed out of the interaction between two such diverse peoples: Mexicans and Americans.

ON BOTH SIDES of the border there is the necessary mutual dependence of neighbors. But respect and friendship have combined with resentment and racism to form a love-hate relationship.

There is suspicion and scorn on both sides.

Americans who value speed and efficiency often huff if Mexican goods break down or service is slow. Mexicans, on the other hand, sometimes turn up their noses at Americans whom they feel are rushing through life too fast to appreciate living it.

Many Mexicans are envious of American wealth while, at the same time, they are put off by the individualism, egotism and selfishness that they believe goes with it. They are offended by American haughtiness and bluntness.

A mythology has evolved on both sides that leads Americans to believe all Mexican police will demand a bribe or throw them in jail, and Mexicans to believe that U.S. businessmen always are honest and that U.S. authorities always will deal with them fairly.

U.S. POLICE ALONG the border patrol America's underbelly. It is 1,900 miles of largely unprotected boundary that is vulnerable to anyone determined enough to enter or bring something into the country.

Even in an era of sophisticated electronic surveillance, millions of people and billions of dollars of narcotics find their way north, while stolen cars, high-tech equipment and top-secret defense documents flow south. It is that permeability that scares Americans.

Mexicans, meanwhile, have heard horror stories about discrimination in the United States and for that reason some are wary of going north.

Americans continue to picture the Mexican border as replete with good-time towns of sleazy, honky-tonk bars where anything is for sale for the right price. Some of that does exist, yet Americans played a large role in the creation of that Mexico in the '20s and '30s during Prohibition.

While spending their dollars for fun, Americans developed a double standard, frowning on Mexico for being "that kind of place."

Mexicans invoked their own double standard, profiting from the indulgence while disapproving of Americans for acting as they would not act at home.

MISCONCEPTIONS and misunderstandings about border life still exist, but they are not unique to the border. They exist away from the border — in Mexico City and Washington, D.C., among other places.

For all that border residents criticize each other, however, they are becoming more tolerant of each other and more alike.

U.S. border residents who do business in Mexico learn to temper some of their American straightforwardness with a little Mexican graciousness. Mexican businessmen learn to speed up their timetables to meet Americans' habits, so that a 2 p.m. lunch in Tijuana becomes a noon lunch in San Diego.

American hostesses who invite guests from south of the border learn to time their evenings accordingly because one never knows how long it will take to cross the border.

Many border Mexicans want their children schooled in the United States to learn English, but send them to Catholic schools to make sure they preserve traditional values of family, religion and respect.

FROM CALIFORNIA to Texas, tacos and burritos have become as American as apple pie — so American, in fact, that the way they are prepared is foreign to many Mexicans from the interior.

While Mexican restaurants just now are becoming an expensive fad in New York, rare is the shopping mall or hotel center along the border without at least one Mexican restaurant — fast-food or fancy.

And products from both countries easily intermingle on supermarket shelves for people whose tastes include chilies and Idaho potatoes, tortillas and grits.

Some holidays are heartily celebrated on both sides of the border. In the United States, Cinco de Mayo has become the St. Patrick's Day of the Southwest. Border Mexicans have become attuned to American holidays such as the Fourth of July, Labor Day and Memorial Day, if only because they mean added business over long weekends.

U.S. sports teams in the borderlands are vigorously supported by thousands of Mexican fans. While Mexicans head north to see football and baseball, Americans head south for bullfights, cockfights and jai alai.

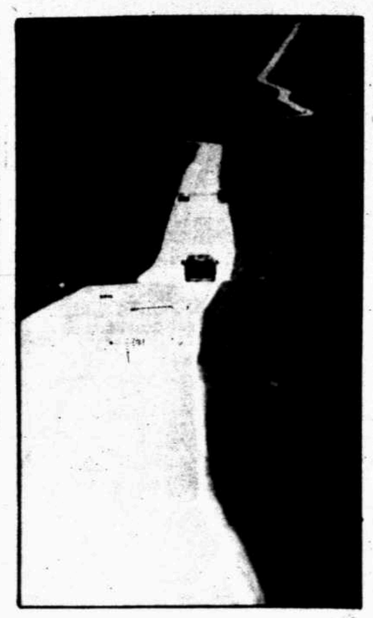

For residents of the binational society, the border is united by cooperation among peoples through charity and neighborliness, among businesses through joint ventures and governments through joint projects.

Despite the rugged terrain of scrub brush and fear, the border is not a barrier but a network of relationships and opportunities. The people who straddle the boundary guarantee that the border society will continue to grow in the desert.

Ricardo Chavira, now a correspondent for Time magazine, was a reporter for The San Diego Union when this story was researched and written.

Blizzard slams throught Dakotas, Minnesota

By The Associated Press

A Canadian-born blizzard wracked Minnesota and the Dakotas on Saturday, blowing snow that caused an "almost instantaneous whiteout" on the region's highways.

Record low temperatures stretched from Nebraska across the Midwest and into New England. Snow also fell from Arkansas across northern Alabama and as far east as northwestern Georgia, and temperatures dipped into the 20s in northern Florida.

Winds topping 50 mph whipped up loose, fluffy snow that cut visibility in the Red River Valley on the Minnesota-North Dakota border from 20 miles to zero in a matter of seconds, said National Weather Service meteorologist Lou Bennett at Fargo, N.D. He described the storm as an "almost instantaneous whiteout."

Wind gusts, which were clocked at more than 60 mph at Devils Lake, N.D., were expected to die down toward evening. However, the weather service warned the valley that temperatures could drop more than 10 degrees in 20 minutes as the storm headed southeast.

Forecasters issued a blizzard warning Saturday for northwestern and west-central Minnesota, with a winter storm warning for northeastern South Dakota and travelers' advisories elsewhere in the three states.

"There's not too much snow, but it's pretty windy and visibility is pretty much down to zero," said a Minnesota State Patrol dispatcher at Thief River Falls.

In North Dakota, Fargo's Nineteenth Avenue North was closed to avoid problems like those during the Feb. 5 blizzard, when four people died after being stranded there, said Gordon Sletmoe of Cass County Disaster Emergency Services.

Shoppers and employees at the West Acres Regional Shopping Center in Fargo were told not to leave. About 6,000 shoppers and 600 employees were in the building, said Fred Anderson, general manager of West Acres Development Co.

A similar storm, dubbed the "Alberta Clipper" for its origin in Canada, struck the area in the middle of last week, and one week ago a storm dumped up to 20 inches of snow on parts of west-central Minnesota. The mid-week storm was blamed for at least 24 deaths as it raced across the country to New England.

Low temperature records were broken or tied in nearly three dozen cities Saturday in Connecticut, Iowa, Indiana, Delaware, Ohio, New Jersey, New York, North Carolina, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Vermont and West Virginia. North Carolina's record was a relatively mild 19 degrees at Asheville, while Mason City, Iowa, had a record 11 degrees below zero.

Sub-freezing temperatures shattered records throughout New Jersey, and weather forecasters said an even more severe cold blast might hit the region Sunday night.

"I know him well," said the former president. "I can tell you we're giving our support to a man who is tough himself."

Carter admitted Mondale is in a difficult position against Hart, whom he never named but whose "new ideas" theme he criticized.

"Fritz Mondale is in for a tough fight," Carter told the outdoor rally. "We've heard a lot in recent days about new and change and modern times and age and so forth. ... We need someone in the White House who can adjust to changing times but who does not abandon unchanging principles."

Following Carter to the podium, Mondale said that working with Carter, he had gained "an understanding and love of the South. ... I understand you. I understand your problems. But more than that, we share the same values."

In Worcester, Mass., Hart went after the nuclear freeze vote, seeking to deflect Mondale's criticism of his stand on arms control.

He told an enthusiastic crowd of 800 that the greatest priority of his administration would be to negotiate an arms agreement with the Soviet Union. As president, Hart said he would negotiate a freeze on the "production and deployment of all nuclear weapons."

Hart told reporters that he does not now support a nuclear weapons build-down. Hart once co-sponsored such a measure, which Mondale said was a Reagan administration effort to defuse the nuclear freeze.

"I do not support any build-down," Hart said in outlining his current position.

Hart walked the streets of an Italian neighborhood in Providence, R.I., with stops in Massachusetts and Connecticut before returning to Washington to prepare for Sunday's debate.

Pressure continues to build on California governor on gay rights bill

nation

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — Deluged with up to 10,000 letters and phone calls daily on both sides of the issue, Gov. George Deukmejian is close to deciding whether to sign a landmark bill that would outlaw job discrimination against homosexuals.

Backers say the bill is a civil rights issue, while opponents say it would "impose a San Francisco lifestyle" on California.

The bill, culmination of a nine-year battle, won final legislative passage March 1 with one vote to spare, triggering the most intensive lobbying Deukmejian has faced since he became governor 14 months ago.

He has until midnight Wednesday to decide whether to sign the bill, veto it or let it become law without his signature.

The Republican governor has given no clue to his decision, and foes and backers of the measure have pushed their lobbying efforts to the limit.

Deukmejian, 55, told reporters that it was "a close question ... a difficult issue."

"I will look at all the arguments on both sides and exercise my honest best judgment," he said at a news conference last week.

After separate private meetings last week with Deukmejian, both the author of the measure, Democratic Assemblyman Art Agnos of San Francisco, and his chief opponent, Bible-quoting conservative state Sen. H.L. Richardson, gave conflicting views of which way Deukmejian was leaning.

Richardson said he was "very, very encouraged" that Deukmejian would veto the bill. But the same day, Agnos said he was impressed and encouraged by the governor's "thoughtfulness, attentiveness and sincerity."

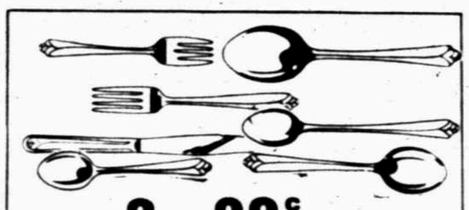

The very fact that there is any doubt about Deukmejian's decision has surprised many of his conservative supporters.

In 1975, when he was Republican floor leader of the state Senate, Deukmejian led the fight against a gay rights measure which repealed criminal penalties against any sexual conduct in private between consenting adults.

But when he took office, Deukmejian left in force a 1979 executive order issued by his Democratic predecessor, former Gov. Edmund Brown Jr., prohibiting job discrimination against homosexuals in state service. He says the job issue raises "totally different" questions than the consenting adults bill he opposed.

Fire erupts in cruise ship cabin

PORT CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — A fire on the cruise ship Scandinavian Sea burned out of control Saturday, a day after flames broke out five miles from shore, cutting short a gambling excursion and forcing the ship to speed back to port with 946 people aboard.

At least 15 people were treated for smoke inhalation because of the fire that erupted in a passenger cabin on the 506-foot vessel Friday evening, said Coast Guard Petty Officer 1st Class Joe Gibson. He did not know how many of those treated were firefighters, but said no one required hospitalization.

Gibson said that by Saturday afternoon the fire had spread to four passenger decks. He said extra breathing equipment was flown in and out-of-state "strike-force teams" trained in fighting shipboard disasters and oil fires were called to join more than 100 firefighters who had been on the scene since Friday.

The fire started as the ship was returning from a "cruise to nowhere" outside the three-mile limit, where gambling is legal, said Jill De Chello, a spokeswoman for Miami-based Scandinavian World Cruises.

By Saturday, the fire was still burning out of control and flames "shooting about 100 feet behind the bridge ... spread up to the fourth deck" of the eight-deck cruise ship, Gibson said.

He said there was no immediate danger of the vessel exploding, although some diesel fuel had briefly caught on fire.

The cause of the fire was not immediately known. But Capt. Jack Houts of the Merritt Island Fire Department told the newspaper TODAY in Cocoa that it was believed to be electrical.

The trip began at 11 a.m. Friday from Port Canaveral, and was supposed to last until about 10 p.m., Ms. De Chello said. Instead, passengers and crew disembarked about 8 p.m.

Many passengers said they were gambling or eating dinner when word of the fire went over the public-address system.

"That dang fire. I was on a roll," said Tom Lynn of Fort Pierce, Fla., who had just hit a $50 jackpot on a slot machine.

Mia Maralli, 19, said it was hard to breathe because of the smoke.

"It smelled so bad you had to cover your mouth," she said.

One unidentified woman said that when she asked a crew member for a life jacket, he took one and told her to get her own, The Orlando Sentinel reported. The newspaper had a reporter and a photographer on the cruise doing research for a story.

"We had to beg for life preservers," said passenger Earl Ross of Grafton, Mass. He criticized what he termed a "lack of authority."

But Ms. De Chello said she had no reports of passengers being denied a life jacket. Ken Olson, hotel manager on the ship, said he was "very proud of the way our crew members handled the situation."

As soon as the ship moored, passengers were evacuated to the cruise line's terminal here.

Coast Guard officials said 744 passengers and a crew of 202 were aboard for the voyage. The ship sailed beyond the three-mile coastal limit so patrons could legally engage in casino gambling.

Ms. De Chello said no estimate of damage would be available "for at least 48 hours."

Man faces rape, murder charges

JOLIET, Ill. (AP) — A 33-year-old man described as a "prime suspect" in a series of killings that rocked Will County last summer has been charged with rape and will be charged with murder, authorities said Saturday.

Will County State's Attorney Edward Petka identified the man as Milton Johnson, a 33-year-old resident of unincorporated Joliet Township.

Johnson was arrested Friday night and charged with rape, deviate sexual assault and aggravated battery, Petka said. The man will be charged Monday with murder and attempted murder in the July 17 attack on a couple on Interstate 55 that left a man dead and a woman raped and stabbed, Petka said.

He also called Johnson a "prime suspect" in the killings of four women in a Joliet-area ceramics shop last August, and in the slayings of five people, including two auxiliary sheriff's deputies, on a rural lovers' lane in July.

At a news conference, Petka said authorities have evidence that links Johnson to the multiple slayings, but he declined to describe it.

The charges stem from an incident in which an 18-year-old man was shot to death and his female companion, also 18, was abducted, raped and stabbed.

The I-55 attack occurred a day after five people were shot to death in three separate ambushes in rural Homer Township. The victims included a man and woman who had been sitting in a parked car on a darkened rural road and two auxiliary sheriff's deputies who responded to the sound of the shots that killed the couple.

Testimony confusing in rape trial

FALL RIVER, Mass. (AP) — In 11 days of testimony, five witnesses have painted an often confused picture of what happened in Big Dan's tavern on the night of March 6, 1983.

The following is a list of the six defendants in the case and key testimony about their actions the night a woman says she was assaulted in the New Bedford bar.

Daniel Silvia

Known as "Fanfa," Silvia is a 27-year-old, part-time factory worker and farm hand with a heart condition. Four people have testified Silvia either carried or dragged the woman to the barroom pool table and sexually assaulted her.

The victim said Silvia pulled her to the floor and carried her to the table with another man. She said Silvia pulled off her pants and raped her, then held her while another man raped her.

Bartender Carlos Machado said Silvia dragged a screaming woman to the pool table and did "piggy things to her."

Sylvester Vultao, a bar patron, said he saw Silvia on top of the woman who "was crying softly, as if she was in pain."

Another customer, Valdimiro Pacheco, said he saw Silvia talk with the woman, then put his hands in her pants. He said Silvia carried the woman to the pool table and climbed onto her. When asked what Silvia did to the woman, Pacheco said, "I don't know. She knows."

Joseph Vieira

Known as "Joe from Connecticut," Vieira, 28, has worked on local dairy farms. Testimony has ranged widely on Vieira's role in the attack.

The woman said Vieira helped Silvia carry her to the pool table and held her while Silvia raped her. Then, she said, Vieira raped her. She said Vieira also tried to force her to perform oral sex.

Machado has told conflicting stories about what he saw Vieira do. He first said Vieira helped Silvia remove the woman's pants. Under cross-examination he said he only saw Vieira bend over the woman as she lay on the floor. Machado said Vieira touched the woman as he rubbed his crotch.

Pacheco, a friend of Vieira, said Vieira stayed at the bar while Silvia carried the woman to the pool table.

John Cordeiro

The 24-year-old defendant was called "the bearded one" and "the boy from the south," referring to New Bedford's South End. Three witnesses said he tried to make the woman perform oral sex.

The victim said Cordeiro made his assault while she was on the table.

Machado said it happened while the woman was still on the floor.

Pacheco said "the bearded one" held the woman while she struggled on the pool table, grabbed her head and tried to force her to perform oral sex.

Victor Raposo

Raposo, 23, another "boy from the south," is a part-time painter and handyman. Testimony has been confused as to his role.

The woman said Raposo told her, "Don't yell and they won't hurt you," as she struggled on the table. She did not identify him as one of her attackers.

Machado said Raposo tried to force the woman to perform oral sex while she was on the floor.

Pacheco said he saw Raposo hold the woman's hand and talk to her while she was assaulted on the pool table. He added that Raposo unbuttoned his pants as he talked to the woman. "I didn't see him do anything," he said.

Virgilio Medeiros

Medeiros is 24, a shipyard laborer. While no one has implicated him as an attacker, he has been charged under the joint enterprise clause because he allegedly aided others.

Machado said it was Medeiros who blocked his way and said, "Where are you going?" when he tried to help the woman. Machado said Medeiros also told him to lock the door when the assault began and shouted encouragements of "Do it! That's how it's done!"

Vultao, the customer, said he saw Medeiros put his hands under the woman as she struggled on the table.

Jose Medeiros

Medeiros, 23, a landscape worker, is called "the blond one" because of his reddish blond hair. He is also charged under the joint enterprise clause. He is not related to Virgilio Medeiros.

Machado said Medeiros also encouraged the attack with shouts of "That's how it's done."

Vultao said Medeiros reached toward the woman on the pool table but Vultao did not know if he had touched her.

Daniel Cunha, another Big Dan's bartender, said he heard Medeiros say he had stuck a bottle between the woman's legs while she was on the floor.

Lignin natural cement

Lignin is the natural cement that binds cellulose fibers in plant stems and prevents enzymes from digesting cellulose. Incredibly complex, lignin makes up 15 to 25 percent of a plant's cell wall. It ranks as nature's second most abundant organic material, exceeded only by cellulose, and its exact formula is unknown.

Former President Jimmy Carter, his wife Rosalynn, and Walter Mondale with his wife Joan greet supporters as they walk down the main street in Plains, Ga., on Saturday from the Carter residence to a barbecue in Mondale's honor

Carter gives former vice president boost

PLAINS, Ga., (AP) — Walter F. Mondale made a pilgrimage to Jimmy Carter's hometown on Saturday hoping for a boost to his presidential campaign before three Southern states vote in primaries next Tuesday.

"Fritz Mondale is in for a tough fight," Carter told about 1,000 people at a sunny, outdoor rally. "I know him well. I can tell you we're giving our support to a man who is tough himself."

Carter described Mondale as a man who "during difficult times and challenges, he was at my side."

In an obvious reference to Sen. Gary Hart, the former president said, "We've heard a lot in recent days about new and change and modern times and age and so forth."

And in an even more obvious reference to Mondale, he added, "We need someone in the White House who can adjust to changing times but who does not abandon unchanging principles."

Mondale followed Carter to the podium and noted that "in a few days, next Tuesday, the South will be heard."

He said that during his four years as Carter's vice president he had gained "an understanding and love of the South. ... I understand you. I understand your problems. But more than that, we share the same values."

Mondale said the United States needs a president who will remember who put him in office.

"I am a people's Democrat. Nothing fancy, no hair spray," said Mondale, who was dressed casually in jeans and a cardigan sweater, a type of attire that helped form Carter's "down-home" image.

"What you see is what you get," he said.

Later, Carter told reporters that if Hart gets the Democratic nomination, "I'll be very happy to support him. But my preference is Fritz Mondale."

Carter and Mondale and their wives met first in Carter's home about a half-mile from the center of Plains and walked to the rally at one end of the town's block-long main street.

It was held beside the railroad tracks that cut the town in half, and a couple of hundred feet from the old Jimmy Cater presidential campaign headquarters that dates back to 1976.

The crowd of 200 or so reporters and camera crews covering the event also was reminiscent of the days when the news media descended on Plains when Carter was running for president, and after he got elected.

After the rally, the crowd ate barbecue, which Carter had dropped by an hour earlier to sample.

Glenn attacks Hart's foreign policy

SAVANNAH, Ga. (AP) — Sen. John Glenn attacked Gary Hart's foreign policy positions on Saturday and accused his Democratic presidential rival of securing a Navy commission as "just another line" on his political biography.

Glenn said it was "hardly logical" that the Colorado senator "was looking forward to a military career ... at the age of 41."

He charged Hart with trying "to tie the president's military hands behind his back in Central America" with legislation that would expand the War Powers Act and require congressional approval even for military exercises.

Hart was made a lieutenant junior grade in the Judge Advocate General's Corps on Dec. 4, 1980, on standby reserve status during the closing days of the Carter administration. He has said he sought the commission so he could serve in the Persian Gulf in the event of U.S. involvement in a war there. He has since been promoted to lieutenant, but gets no pay or allowances.

Hart gets more money, volunteers

WASHINGTON (AP) — On the morning after the New Hampsphire primary, a 66-year-old retiree called the Massachusetts campaign headquarters of Sen. Gary Hart and what she said made the Hart people sit up and take notice.

"I think he's honest," the woman said. And she asked where she could send a $1,000 check.

"She said she woke up at four in the morning and decided she had to do something," recalled Massachusetts volunteer coordinator Pilar Esperon. "She wasn't able to do volunteer work for us so she decided to send money."

All over the country, hundreds of volunteers are appearing at the Hart campaign doors. Money is coming in so fast Hart workers are hard-pressed to process it.

The campaign's national field director, Kevin Sullivan, says Hart aides in Washington and many states have so many volunteers, "It's like a prairie fire out there."

About 150 people call each day to volunteer in Massachusetts, and similar numbers have been appearing in Washington and elsewhere, according to campaign officials. The new workers, many of whom have never worked in a campaign before, are put to work stuffing envelopes and telephoning voters to ask them to support Hart. Some of the new volunteers making the calls are barely knowledgeable of his positions on the issues.

And after months of getting by with a relative handful of experienced campaign workers, there also suddenly is a surplus because of seasoned volunteers coming in from other candidates who dropped out or from previous campaigns, Sullivan said.

At the campaign headquarters in Cambridge, Mass., 32-year-old Dana Trattner said until Hart finished second in the Iowa caucuses, she accepted the idea that Walter F. Mondale was the inevitable nominee of the Democratic Party.

Ms. Trattner, on leave from her job as a school teacher in Portland, Maine, said Mondale — because he was President Carter's vice president — "will have to defend Carter's record. He will be tied to the hostage crisis and the crazy inflation rate of the 70's. Hart isn't tied to all that."

Although she had liked Hart for a long time, Ms. Trattner said it was after the Iowa caucuses that she "realized he had a chance" and went to work for the campaign.

So many people are trying to volunteer for Hart's campaign or get information about him that phone lines to campaign headquarters in Washington, Boston, Atlanta and Miami and other cities are constantly busy.

Tests show Iranians gassed, doctor says

VIENNA, Austria (AP) — Tests on wounded Iranian soldiers show "with certain proof" the men were stricken by mustard gas and "yellow rain," a physician said Saturday. Iran had repeatedly accused Iraq of using the banned weapons in the Persian Gulf war.

Iraq has issued several denials of the allegation.

Dr. Herbert Mandl said laboratory tests on two of 10 Iranian fighters under hospital treatment in Vienna revealed traces of mustard gas and mycotoxin, a poison derived from fungi commonly referred to as "yellow rain."

Such chemical weapons are banned for use in warfare under the 1925 Geneva Protocol.

A State Department spokesman said last week the United States has known since last year of the use of chemical weapons by Iraq in the 3½-year-old war, but Mandl's statements represented the most specific detailing of the charge so far.

Mandl, who is treating the Iranians, said in an interview that the tests were performed by the Toxicological Institute of Ghent, a prominent poison research center in Belgium.

He said high concentrations of both poisons were "determined with certain proof" in specimens of urine, feces and blood taken from the two Iranians under treatment at Vienna's Second University Clinic.

Mandl said "no specific antidote is known" for exposure to either chemical.

He said doctors can develop an approach to treating external and internal burns and other injuries caused by mustard gas — which was first used during World War I.

AP Laserphoto

An Iranian soldier wears a gas mask at his position on Majnoon Island, Iraq. The gas mask protects him against chemical weapons which have been employed by Iraqi forces.

However, yellow rain is "completely unknown" to the medical profession, said another attending physician, Gernot Pauser. "Its use is unique, and should there be a medicine against it we don't know it," he said.

Mandl said, "We have treated so far according to the symptoms and will have to continue to do so."

Symptoms of yellow rain exposure include bleeding from the nose, mouth and intestines, nausea; skin rash, sleep disorders and a decline in the body's ability to protect against disease.

Ten Iranians were flown to Vienna on March 2 with afflictions that included burned skin, lung disorders and a gradual destruction of blood corpuscles and bone marrow.

Arafat, Hussein discuss Palestinian representation

AMMAN, Jordan (AP) — PLO chief Yasser Arafat met again with King Hussein Saturday to pursue their talks on who might represent the Palestinians in any future Middle East peace negotiations.

Earlier in the day, soon after arriving in Amman, Arafat conferred with Chinese President Li Xiannian, who is on an official six-day visit to Jordan.

Arafat and Li embraced when Arafat arrived at the guest palace, and Li told him China "always supported the Palestinian people and the PLO under your leadership."

Official sources, who asked not to be identified, said Arafat later briefed Hussein on the results of the meeting in Tunis earlier this week of the Fatah central committee, which reviewed the previous talks between the monarch and Arafat. Arafat's Fatah guerrilla group is the largest faction in the umbrella Palestine Liberation Organization.

Arafat's previous efforts to reach a solution with Hussein were vehemently criticized by elements within the PLO. Hard liners accused Arafat of betraying the Palestinian cause and of adopting a pro-American position.

Arafat first visited China in 1964, and since then the Chinese have provided limited military training and weapons to Fatah guerrilla.

Heavy fighting rages through most of Beirut

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Heavy fighting raged through most quarters of the capital Saturday and an artillery shell slammed into a clinic, killing seven people. Political leaders went to a conference in Switzerland to try to "put an end Lebanon's agonies."

Fourteen people were killed, including four Lebanese army soldiers, and dozens were wounded in the fighting Saturday, police said.

By nightfall, barrages of artillery and mortar fire battered much of east and west Beirut, as well as in both its Christian and Moslem suburbs, police said.

In the predominantly Shiite Moslem southern suburbs, officials at the Al Zahraa Hospital said seven people were killed and at least 22 were injured when a shell struck a medical clinic.

Officials at the hospital, where victims from the clinic were taken, said some of the casualties were children who had been waiting for treatment at the clinic. The officials declined to be identified.

A field hospital near the Sabra and Chatilla Palestinian refugee camps came under fire Saturday, with an undetermined number of injuries.

Police reported heavy exchanges of fire along the "green line" frontier between Christian east and mostly Moslem west Beirut. At times all sections along the front were engaged in the fighting, which pitted the Lebanese army against Syrian-backed Shiite and Druse militiamen.

Efforts to arrange a cease-fire were under way, and state-run Beirut radio said Lebanese President Amin Gemayel called Syrian President Hafez Assad by telephone during the day and "exchanged views on efforts to close Lebanese ranks."

However, the Voice of Lebanon radio run by rightist Christian factions said the fighting spread after dark to the central mountains east of Beirut. The radio said army positions at the strategic mountain town of Souk el-Gharb came under attack and were returning fire.

After his call to Assad, Gemayel left on a private plane for Europe. Lebanon state television said he planned stopovers in Paris and Geneva, Switzerland, before arriving Monday in Lausanne, Switzerland, for the start of a national reconciliation conference.

"We hope the reconciliation dialogue in Lausanne will put an end to Lebanon's agonies and provide a new start for a better life," said Prime Minister Shafik Wassan, who was with Gemayel when he called Assad.

The conference was part of an arrangement Gemayel and Assad worked out in talks in Damascus at the beginning of March. As part of the agreement, Gemayel gave up Lebanon's troop withdrawal pact with Israel, and Syria pledged to help bring to an end to the renewed Lebanese civil war.

Lebanon's four opposition leaders met in Damascus on Saturday to consolidate their positions on political and constitutional reforms.

A source in Jumblatt's Progressive Socialist Party said the opposition leaders agreed on a program that includes abolishing religious sectarianism in Lebanon's government, restructuring the army.

LONDON (AP) — A bomb exploded Saturday in a nightclub frequented by Arabs, injuring 23 people; a second device damaged a store selling Arab newspapers and three other time bombs were found and detonated safely. Scotland Yard blamed Libyans for the bomb blitz.

The British government warned Libya on Saturday night against committing terrorist acts on British soil. Foreign Secretary Sir Geoffrey Howe ordered Britain's ambassador in Tripoli, Oliver Miles, to inform Libyan authorities that police suspect Libyan involvement in the bombings.

A Foreign Office spokesman said any repetition of the 1980 killings of 11 Libyan exiles in Western Europe would have "a serious effect on our relations."

"As the Libyans know, the use of British territory for acts of terrorism by any foreign group is totally unacceptable," the spokesman said. "We expect the Libyan authorities to do everything in their power to persuade Libyan residents in London not to commit criminal acts."

The head of the Yard's anti-terrorist branch, Cmdr. William Hucklesby, told a news conference that three Libyans who left the nightclub shortly before the blast were being sought for questioning.

He said police "are assuming" the bombings were aimed at opponents of Libyan leader Col. Moammar Khadafy, and warned Libyans and other members of London's large Islamic community to beware of further attacks.

On Saturday, a spokeswoman for the Libyan People's Bureau, or embassy, in London denied that Libyans were behind the morning's explosions. "Definitely not. It could not be," she said, but refused to elaborate.

Police said the terrorists planted five bombs, each consisting of two pounds of explosives tied to a timer.

The first exploded outside a newspaper store on Queensway, a street dotted with Arab shops and restaurants in the city's Bayswater district. The store was damaged but no one was injured.

A short time later, as patrons drank and danced to a disco band, a bomb hidden under a table exploded in the Blue Angel night club just off Berkeley Square in Mayfair, one of London's most fashionable districts.

Mexican government to sell firms' stock

MEXICO CITY (AP) — The government announced Saturday it will sell its stock in 339 non-banking companies owned wholly or in part by the country's nationalized banks. It said it expects to make $459 million from the sales.

The government newspaper El Nacional said first option on purchasing the companies will go to the owners of banks that were nationalized in September 1982.

The announcement means that the government, in effect, is offering to sell non-banking enterprises back to the original owners. The stock came into government possession when the banks were nationalized.

In August 1983 the administration of President Miguel de la Madrid began compensating owners of the nationalized banks with government bonds.

Carlos Sales Gutierrez, deputy secretary of the National Banking System, said the government will retain stock in 109 companies considered essential to the smooth functioning of Mexican banking and will liquidate 19 other subsidiary companies taken over as part of the nationalization.

"From the very moment of the expropriation, the government made clear its decision to put up for sale those companies that formed part of the system and did not constitute indispensable enterprises for providing public banking and credit service," he said.

Young Poles upset over crucifix ban

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Young people from around Poland gathered Saturday at the shrine of the Black Madonna in a display of solidarity with the youths of Garwolin, who are protesting the removal of crucifixes from their high schools.

A Roman Catholic bishop told an estimated 3,000 teen-age pilgrims at the shrine in Czestochowa that the church is "disturbed" that Polish authorities have declared a "war against the cross."

A monastery spokesman said 25 groups from throughout the country converged unexpectedly on Czestochowa, site of the Black Madonna — the most revered shrine in this officially atheist but overwhelmingly Roman Catholic nation. Some students said they had scheduled the trip previously to celebrate their upcoming graduations.

Nearly 700 of the youths traveled overnight from the towns of Mietno and Garwolin south of Warsaw where high school students occupied one school and boycotted classes at three others last week.

The removal of crosses from schools in and around Garwolin, 40 miles south of Warsaw, has led to the most significant unrest in Poland since the government declared martial law in December 1981 and suspended the independent Solidarity labor federation.

"The cross has been the dearest sign for worshipers," Bishop Franciszek Musiel told pilgrims crowded into the Black Madonna chapel in the hilltop monastery of Jasna Gora for a morning Mass.

"It hurts us very much that the war against the cross in Poland, the removal of the cross from schools, is taking place in the Year of the Holy Jubilee of the 1,950th anniversary of the suffering and death of Christ on the cross," he said.

He referred to the designation given by Polish-born Pope John Paul II to the year ending on Easter Day.

"And it hurts us very much that the educators, who should abide by the teachings of the highest order, instead give examples of intolerance for the feelings and religious beliefs of their pupils," Musiel said.

A tape of the sermon was made available to The Associated Press in Warsaw by CBS television news.

Several students said police stopped them repeatedly for identity checks as they left Garwolin, later when they boarded the train in Warsaw and again after they arrived early Saturday morning in Czestochowa.

Chinese rescue giant pandas from starvation

PEKING (AP) — Eight giant pandas have been saved from starvation in a government-sponsored effort to protect the rare animals during a bamboo famine in mountainous central China, an official report said Saturday.

"We must not be too optimistic about the future of the giant panda, but neither must we lose heart," said Dong Zhiyong, vice minister of forestry, during a Friday news conference in Chengdu, Xinhua said.

Dong was quoted as saying nine pandas had been found dead, "obviously from old age or disease" and that rescue workers had saved eight in Sichuan province since last September.

The natural habitat of the endangered species is the remote bamboo forests of Sichuan, Gansu and Shaanxi provinces in central China where an estimated 1,000 of the placid black-and-white animals survive.

Some 300 to 400 of them are seriously threatened by this winter's shortage of bamboo, their staple diet, according to the Chinese government. The famine results from the bamboo plants entering a rare flowering cycle and withering. Normally, bamboo shoots survive the winter, but when they flower — every 30-80 years — they die.

The government has allocated the equivalent of $1.3 million and organized special rescue teams, aided by the World Wildlife Fund, to save the pandas. The animals are taken to special refuges where they can be fed regularly and nursed back to health.

Leftists open new urban front before elections

AP Laserphoto

A group of Salvadoran army soldiers move up a dirt trail on the lookout for leftist guerrillas that have been active near Tecoluca, El Salvador, since early Friday.

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — Leftist rebels have opened a new urban front of political and military activities to make their presence felt before U.S.-backed presidential elections, officials in the capital say.

The activities — coupling a bombing campaign against economic targets with a wave of strikes to draw attention to workers' demands — apparently are the long-awaited rebel response to the elections.

Victor Manuel Quintanilla, a leader of the rebels' political wing, the Democratic Revolutionary Front, told The Associated Press before his assassination here last October that the rebels "surely will have a political response" to the voting. Eight candidates from moderate to far-right parties are fielding candidates in the March 25 presidential elections.

The leftists since have promised that they will not disrupt the balloting itself, which they dismiss as not worth resisting. They also say they don't want to endanger civilians who might feel obligated to vote, but they clearly don't want to be forgotten as Salvadorans go to the polls.

On March 2, guerrillas broke more than 14 months of near silence in the capital by bombing three gas stations and downing power lines to black out part of the city for as long as 18 hours.

Col. Carlos Reynaldo Lopez Nuila, the National Police director responsible for security in most of the capital, said rebels had introduced small numbers of command units into capital safe houses for the first time in more than a year.

Police virtually wiped out the urban guerrilla movement in 1983 through a series of raids, and the last major attack was the January 1983 bombing of 20 tractors on the southern outskirts of the city.

Lopez Nuila said in an interview that police had information that highly trained commandos were moving into the capital along dried out, weed-filled creekbeds leading into San Salvador from the Guazapa volcano, 15 miles to the north.

So far damage has been minimal.

In addition to the gas stations, guerrillas on March 4 set off five bombs in the capital. They also launched minor harassment raids against the Treasury Police headquarters and civil defense units around the periphery.

Lopez Nuila said he expects more attacks before the voting, but thinks rebels will keep their promise that the balloting can be carried out without violence.

"I believe they will respect election day," Lopez Nuila said. "I don't think they will make the same error twice."

Guerrillas attacked polling places and security forces during the March 1982 elections for a Constituent Assembly, and rebel leaders since have acknowleged that the attacks, which took place as long lines of voters waited at the polls, badly damaged their image both here and abroad.

Truckers strike at 'unity' of EEC members

ROME (AP) — Western Europe's paralyzing strikes by harried truck drivers and customs officials last month showed just how far the Common Market has to go to live up to its name.

The truckers — Italian camionisti, British lorry drivers, French routiers, Austrian fernfahrer, German brummis, Danish lastvognschauffoerer and Dutch vrachtwagenchauffeur — brought West European transportation to a standstill for more than two weeks. So had some customs workers.

Not all of them were angry about the same thing. French and Italian truckers wanted better compensation from their governments. Others wanted an end to what they consider harassment from customs officials.

But most were tired of what they saw as cumbersome customs procedures for traveling through the 10 European Common Market countries. The procedures were supposed to have been simplified and made uniform in 1977 under a community-wide agreement.

Trucks are the lifeblood of Western Europe, carrying the vast majority of all freight moved across the continent — 80 percent in France and Italy alone.

But for truckers, getting from one point to another can be excruciating.

Take an average trucker leaving early Monday from Amsterdam in the Netherlands on a 683-mile trip to Milan, Italy. That's about the same as an American trucker going from Detroit to Atlanta, but without the border checks.

A Dutch trucker told The Associated Press that it usually takes only 30 minutes to cross the Dutch border into West Germany. Crossing into Austria can take up to three hours.

By Tuesday morning, the trucker arrives at the Italian border at the Brenner Pass.

"The actual process at customs — checking and stamping documents and registering the vehicle — only takes two or three minutes," Italian trucker Gustavo Asper was quoted as telling the newspaper La Stampa of Turin.

"The average time for waiting in line lasts 12 to 16 hours. Sometimes hours pass without a single truck passing through and no one can understand why."

Some West European truckers get paid overtime by their companies for the wait or "stationary time" but not in Austria. Also, a large number of truckers are self-employed — 86 percent in Italy — meaning they lose their own money in customs lines.

While Austria has 176 customs officials on their side of the pass, Italy has only 30. The Austrians man six truck lanes and the Italians man only three, which are open only 12 hours Monday through Saturday. The same problem is encountered at other border points.

So the trucker from Amsterdam finally makes it to Milan by late Tuesday night or Wednesday morning, dumps his load and then starts back.

If he takes an alternate route through France, he faces another problem besides slow customs procedures.

"We never expect to make one trip through France without being stopped by the police and fined for some trumped-up offense, like a dirty headlight," a British truck driver, who asked not to be named, said in an interview in Paris. "They cut the fine in half if we don't ask for a receipt."

Finally, the trucker makes it back to Amsterdam on Friday or Saturday — a five- to six-day round trip — with dozens of different stamped documents, permits and inspection stickers from six borders checks.

Common Market members couldn't even agree on what to do about the strike.

The reasons for the division are as varied as the countries involved — nationalism, protection of domestically made products and just plain bureaucracy.

Europe was trapped in a gridlock of polyglot demands that sometimes had little to do with the customs problems, and the strikers were more in control of leaders at the hotspots than by national unions.

Raymond Bidet, a spokesman for the French truckers's union, UNOSTRA, admitted that the national leadership could do little to make the truckers end the strike unless the government made serious concessions.

The French finally ended the strike Feb. 24 when the government sent representatives to the border points and agreed to a one-time payment to the truckers of an average of 2,000 francs ($250) each.

MONTEMORELOS, Mexico (AP) — Citrus producers in northeastern Mexico — already suffering from a freeze that destroyed thousands of trees — face the loss of their principal export market because of U.S. regulations.

The United States has demonstrated "bad faith" on the issue, says an industry spokesman in Nuevo Leon, the state that supplies 80 percent of all Mexican citrus fruit exported to the United States, Canada, Europe and Japan.

"We're not going to be able to export fruit because of the laws in the United States," Pedro Vaquero Garcia told The Associated Press. Vaquero is general director of Citrus Industries of Montemorelos, the hub of Nuevo Leon's citrus region, 50 miles southeast of Monterrey.

Citrus exporting in the state is a $350 million a year industry, Vaquero said. He estimated more than 250,000 people make their living in the business.

On March 2, the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency set interim standards for ethylene dibromide — EDB — residue levels in both domestic and imported fruits.

Growers here use the chemical on exported fruit to kill larvae of the Mexican fruit fly and keep it from crossing the border. They are caught in the middle trying to figure out how to eradicate the larvae without losing their export markets.

The new U.S. standards for citrus fruit allow no more than 250 parts per billion of the chemical EDB, which is thought to be a health hazard. In September the U.S. Food and Drug Administration will ban the sale of all citrus with any trace of the chemical.

On Feb. 29, however, the U.S. agency announced it already had banned citrus from Nuevo Leon and five other Mexican states for another reason. Bert Hawkins, administrator of the department's animal and plant health inspection service in Washington, said the ban was ordered "to safeguard U.S. citrus" against a bacterial disease known as citrus canker.

Vaquero was quoted by the Monterrey daily newspaper El Norte as saying, "Its a mistake...They say it's canker, but it's not true...We don't have that problem in Nuevo Leon."

The ban "is a political move" and shows "bad faith" by the U.S. government, he was quoted as saying.

Should the ban provoked by the citrus-canker problem be lifted, Mexico's citrus exporters still will be forced to find an alternative to fumigation with the banned EDB.

In an interview with the AP, Vaquero said citrus exporters have used the chemical for nearly 40 years to satisfy U.S. regulations.

"The chemical, purchased in the United States and used only on fruit destined for export, kills Mexican fruit fly larvae," said Vaquero, a former president of the Mexican Association of Citrus Exporters.

Nigerian riots claim 718 lives in one city

LAGOS, Nigeria (AP) — Sectarian violence has claimed 718 lives in the northeastern city of Jimeta, the authoritative newspaper the Guardian reported Saturday.

Police said last week that 535 people, including seven policemen, were killed in rioting sparked by the outlawed Maitatsine Islamic sect.

The newspaper ran a list of casualties obtained from the government medical officer in the area that recorded 718 deaths, 80 injured admitted to hospitals and 527 treated as outpatients.

In a day-by-day report between Feb. 27 and March 7, the paper quoted the medical officer as recording 245 deaths on March 5 — the worst day — and 92 on Feb. 27, the first day of the clashes.

Riots erupted when sect members broke out of a jail and went on a rampage through a marketplace in Jimeta, a town near the Gongola state capital Yola and about 500 miles northeast of Lagos.

Sikh terrorists kill one

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — Suspected Sikh terrorists raked a car with automatic weapons fire that killed the driver and injured one of two Hindu politicans and a bodyguard, police said Saturday.

Authorities said three assailants on a motorcycle ambushed the car late Friday night near Madhuban, a small village north of New Delhi in Haryana state.

They sealed the border with Punjab state, where Sikh militants have been agitating for greater religious and political autonomy, and launched a statewide manhunt for the gunmen. The Sikhs are members of religious sect that is a majority in Punjab, but is a minority in the rest of the predominantly Hindu country.

The intended victim was believed to have been Ved Pal, deputy speaker of the Haryana state assembly, but he jumped out of the car and escaped unhurt, police said.

Freedom 'fundamental'

VATICAN CITY (AP) — Pope John Paul II on Saturday called religious freedom "the most fundamental" of human rights and urged Roman Catholics to help defend it.

"Among the rights of man one rightly places the right to religious freedom; this is, in fact, the most fundamental," the pope told 200 participants of an international conference on human rights and religious liberties.

A dialogue between the church and society is necessary to defend religious and other liberties and to "build an authentic civilization founded on truth and love," John Paul said in the audience at the Apostolic Palace.

Permian gets taste of Midland Lee dust

Midland Lee's Walter Jones takes a breather after winning the West Texas Relays 200-meter Dash at Ratliff Stadium Saturday.

ODESSA — Midland Lee's track team may be a bit on the youthful side for 1984, but even youngsters can take so much of dust stained teeth.

The Rebels threw a little dirt in the face of Odessa Permian here Saturday afternoon at the West Texas Relays while raising their heels to a team victory for the first time this year. If it was revenge, it was sweet.

Lee went into this 39th running of the West Texas meet as a big underdog to Permian's Panthers. After all, it was Permian who soundly whipped the Rebels in the opening meet of the season two weeks ago in Fort Stockton. The Rebels turned the tables and spilt the dishes in the lap of the favorites. It was cause for a giggle or two on the outside and a hearty laugh inside since these teams will meet often this year.

BUT SATURDAY was a day for the Rebels, who outscored Permian 98-82 to bring the WT title back to Midland for the second year in a row.

"I thought our kids competed very well and they showed a lot of character," said Lee coach Sam Volpe. "We have a young team and we hope they can only get better."

But what was the difference from two weeks ago?

Lee assistant coach Eddie Wolski said, "Three weeks of practice makes a big difference. We're young and I don't think we will reach our potential until around the district meet in April. But today's showing fired me up."

Lee is not new to competing since they are the defending district champions and they did what they had to do Saturday.

Lee won the three events they were expected to win. They took the seniorless sprint relay title with a 42.58. Marc Brackens won the 400 meters with a 50.59 and Isaac Garnett won the shot put with a personal best of 59-4½. Lee is undefeated in all three of those events.

But it was the unexpected that had Lee climbing the wall and that came from junior Walter Jones. Jones, the defending district 100 meter champion, has been running the 200 meters this year and didn't have a victory to his name. Permian's Jason Leach wiped him away two weeks ago. The stage was set for another shootout.

JONES USED the curve to gain an advantage and carried it to the tape for an upset over Leach with a 21.72. .06 seconds ahead of Leach.

"I like running against Leach because he is a good runner," said Jones. "I wanted to run well against him, but not because he beat me, because he is good. I can do even better. I'll be better by next week."

Jones' victory just about emptied Ratliff as the key race was over for the day, but Lee had another surprise when its 1600 meter relay team upset Permian by more than 1½ seconds with a 3:22.05. Jones gave Lee the big third leg lead and Brackens put it away over Leach, who couldn't catch up.

For Brackens and Garnett it was three straight wins this year.

Brackens said of his 400 win, "I was disappointed with the time, but I didn't get warmed up properly. Also, last year I had Permian's Alexander pulling me along. I need someone to push me and I haven't had that yet."

Garnett, who is getting close to the 60-foot barrier in the shot, said, "I could have hit 60 with a few more throws, but it will come. I was over 59 feet twice."

Lee sophomore Lee Dixon, who is the youngest of Lee's four sprint relay members, is even getting into the swing of things. "We don't have a senior on the sprint relay. It'll be state all the way."

Harold Woods, a junior, was third in the 110 hurdles in addition to starting off the sprint relay victory. Senior David Jackson was a surprise second in the discus while Quintus Hampton was fourth in the 300 hurdles and Michael Johnson fifth in the 110 hurdles in his first effort of the year.

IN THE girl's division, Permian did come out on top with 68 points, six more than El Paso Andress. Midland High and Lee both entered and both posted record setting victories. On Friday, Lee's Felicia Farias set a new high jump record with a 5-3, beating her own mark of 5-2 last year. Midland High's Claire Hardy, third in the state cross country meet last fall, may be headed back for state competition after posting a record 11:20.20 in Friday's 3200 meter prelims and winning the finals Saturday with a 11:24.55. However, those were the only local victories.

Andrews' girls won two events as Charlotte Jones won the triple jump and Bonnie Flores captured the 800 meters. But one of the most spectacular showings was a new record of 14.58 in the 100 meter hurdles by Stanton's Dawna West while competing against 5A schools.

Lubbock Estacado easily won the 4A division with 137 points to Lubbock Dunbar's 100. Andrews' Randy Frimel set a division record with a 6-7 in the high jump.

Slaton repeated as the 3A champion with 91 points while Kermit was second with 77. Stanton had a 1-2 sweep in the pole vault from Eddie Thomas and Timmy Bryant and a victory from Rocky Barnes in the 400. Crane's Kenny Walker won the high jump.

WTC Hawks win trip to Hutchinson

Juco Region V

Western Texas College short-circuited another miracle finish by Howard College in the final 20 seconds for a 56-55 Region V Junior College basketball championship that will send the Snyder team to Hutchinson, Kan., next week for the national tournament.

While the game didn't go three overtimes like Friday's Amarillo-Howard pulse-pounder, it generated excitement in its own way, a frantic finish, a near shouting match in which the opposing coaches nearly came to blows.

But when the smoke had cleared and folks once again were speaking in soft, modulated tones, the No. 4 regular season finisher in the Western Conference had knocked off the champion. You couldn't really call it an upset, since the teams split in regular season play, but the Hawks from Big Spring, finishing 28-4, had been a model of consistency. Western, taking a 24-10 record to Kansas, was erratic, but the Westerners won the big ones at the end.

And the coaches, the heat of the game behind, shook hands and parted amicably.

FOR BARRY Davis, in his second season at Western, it meant a return trip nationals. "It's funny, I was on the Hill County team that beat Howard 10 years ago in the finals." Davis was named MVP in that tournament.

Western seemed to take control after Howard wiped out a 35-29 Westerner lead early in the second half to take a 37-35 lead with 15:53 to play. But WTC responded to the challenge, taking command for good on a basket by tournament MVP Larry Banks from the corner and when Banks converted the free throw it was 43-41.

Howard couldn't buy a shot after that and WTC led 54-47 with 2:40 left. Jerry Stroman finally hit bottom with 1:50 left. The 6-6 South Carolinian hit two more jumpers and WTC's lead dwindled to 54-53 with 20 seconds to play. Another miracle in the making to match Friday's when Howard, trailing by four with 40 seconds left, tied it to force overtime?

ALMOST, but not quite. Still, the stage was set for the wild finish. On the inbounds pass by Western, Anthony Snooks stole the ball and in the scramble fell to the floor, apparently injuring his leg in a scramble for possession.

Players and trainer crowded around him near the sidelines in front of the Howard bench. That's when Davis became upset and charged across the center court line, shouting angrily.

You've heard of dugout emptying brawls in which both teams race to the fight on the field. Well, this one was a floor-emptying skirmish in which officials and players rushed to the sidelines to keep Davis and Howard Coach Mike Mitchell apart.

"I SAW last night's game and saw Snook missing all those free throws.

Lee's midnight madness works

By BRUCE CASTLEBERRY
Sports Writer

Bowie Kuhn would have been right at home during the final day of baseball in the 10th annual Tournament of Champions at Cubs Stadium Saturday.

The elements were perfect for the recently departed commissioner of professional baseball. There was vicious cold for mid-March, and there was more baseball than one could shake a stick at. More than 13 hours after things began Saturday morning, things were still going strong as the hour approached midnight with Midland Lee and Dallas Thomas Jefferson locked in a tense, see-saw battle, before the Rebels final pulled the win out in the bottom of the 11th inning, 7-6, to take the title.

The Rebs don't have much time to celebrate, because the district season opens Tuesday. Nevertheless, Lee refused to lose, even though they didn't make things easy on themselves.

Lee bombarded TJ Friday 10-0 in a game called after five innings due to a 10-run rule. Saturday, the Patriots had to win twice to get a shot at Lee, and when the improbable happened and Jefferson won they didn't waste the opportunity.

The Patriots had a long road to get their chance at revenge. In the key game that determined who would meet Lee, TJ nipped Amarillo Tascosa 5-4 in eight innings, scoring on a one-out, bases-loaded balk. Brent Ward made the big boo-boo that cost Tascosa, and Jeff Baum was the benefactor who strolled home for the deciding run.

TJ then took the late afternoon game easily, 5-1, forcing a once-and-for-all championship game at 8 p.m. A small but dedicated crowd braved the elements and waited, and they were rewarded for perservering with a gut-check of a final.

IT LOOKED as if the Patriots, formerly known as the Rebels, coincidentally, had Lee's number in the final. After Mike Moscrey all but sflenced the here-to-fore explosive Reb bats, final starter Tim Petty picked up right on cue. Although Lee had out-hit TJ 6-3 in the early game, the Rebs couldn't solve Petty long enough to get anything going, and after 5½ innings, Lee trailed 4-0. TJ had burst into the game with a two-run effort in the first inning when Reb starter George Matta was the victim of two fielding errors. Matta, however pitched masterfully and the Reb staff and coach Ernie Johnson had to be satisfied with Matta's pitching.

Even after TJ added two more runs off Matta in the sixth, with another Lee erroor figuring in the scoring, Matta stayed put.

It was TJ coach Gerald Turner who first said "check" in the game, and it probably cost Jefferson a story-book comeback for the crown. Turner went to power pitcher Rodney Jinks to start the bottom of the sixth.

Jinks retired the first two Lee batters in the same fashion as his teammates had, but there the Cinderella story ended rudely.

Dirk Bergoon and Jimmy Phillips singled to get Lee rolling, then an error on TJ first baseman son of coach Gerald Turner made an error allowing Matta on in his first at-bat.

Bryan captures second straight 5A crown, 68-56

Boys' State Championships

AUSTIN (AP) — Darrell Mitchell scored 23 points as Bryan broke open a close game in the fourth quarter Saturday to take a 68-56 win over Spring Branch Memorial for its second straight boys' Class 5A state basketball title.

The victorious Vikings, 31-6, trailed much of the way. The Memorial Mustangs, paced by Andy Gilchrest's game-high 31 points, built a 25-20 halftime lead.

But Bryan, using superior quickness, fought back and held a 2-point lead midway through the final period. Dennis Rhodes, a 5-4 junior, keyed the title-winning Bryan spurt with his quick passes and one key shot.

With 3:22 to go in the game, and Bryan leading by two, Rhodes lobbed a perfect pass to Mitchell, who hit a short shot and was fouled. Mitchell missed the free throw, but 6-5 junior Kenny Keller grabbed the rebound for Bryan and Kevin Bradsher followed with a 15-foot jump shot that gave Bryan a 6-point lead.

After Gilchrest hit his final basket of the game for Memorial, Rhodes again took charge. He zipped down the lane and threw in a one-handed running shot that banked in. He was fouled, and added a free throw, giving the Vikings a 7-point lead.

Memorial never got back in the game, falling further behind when the Vikings hit 11 of 12 free throws in the final 2 minutes.

In addition to his 23 points, Mitchell pulled down 10 points for the Vikings. Bradsher chipped in 17 points.

Memorial finished its season at 31-8.

Bees win 4A crown

Senior guard Walter Senegal scored 14 points to lead Port Arthur Lincoln to a 61-52 victory over Corpus Christi Flour Bluff for the Class 4A state schoolboy basketball championship.

The quicker Bees blew Flour Bluff out of the game early, and the Hornets made the score more respectable only by outscoring Lincoln 11-1 in the closing two minutes.

Lincoln, 32-3, ran up a 15-7 lead at the end of the first quarter, and led by 18 points in the second quarter.

Flour Bluff was led by 6-7 Roger Durden, who had 13 points despite hitting only 4 of 14 field goal attempts. The Hornets hit only 36 percent of their shots.

Senegal was backed by a balanced scoring attack. Derek Young added 11 points and Donzell Henton 8 for the Bees.

Flour Bluff, which carried a 29-game winning streak into the title match, finished its season 32-4.

New Boston perfect

The perfect Lions of New Boston, led by Carl Brewer's 18 points, belted Sour Lake Hardin-Jefferson 76-65 Saturday in the Class 3A boys basketball championship game.

New Boston, a Northeast Texas school, finished the year at 33-0. Hardin-Jefferson, from Southeast Texas, ended at 39-4.

The Lions led almost all the way, building an 12-point halftime lead despite a powerful performance by the Hawks' Sam Williams. The 6-4 senior poured in a game-high 33 points and yanked down 14 rebounds.

But New Boston was too quick and too powerful inside for the Hawks. Brewer, a 5-11 junior, popped in his 18 points on nine field goals, mostly quick-release jump shots. Reggie Austin added 16 points, and Ben Griffin chipped in 13 points and 13 rebounds.

The game was put away in the third quarter when New Boston's fast-moving offense built a 58-42 lead.

Rocky Roquemore added 16 for the losers.

New Boston helped itself by staying out of foul trouble, picking up only eight. Hardin-Jefferson was seven of seven from the free throw line. The Lions turned 18 Hardin-Jefferson fouls into 18 points.

Shelbyville best in 2A

Jeff Chumbley poured in 34 points, ripped down 20 rebounds and hit six straight free thorws in the final minute to give Shelbyville a 73-67 win over Somerville in Saturday's final of the Class 2A boys basketball tournament.

The Dragons from East Texas, 33-0, held off two Somerville comeback attempts — the second of which pulled the Yeguas to within a point late in the game.

Shelbyville ran to a 17-point lead with 1:15 to go in the fourth quarter when Chumbley, a 6-foot-5 senior, tipped in a missed shot.

But Somerville's scrambling press forced Shelbyville into a series of turnovers that evaporated the Dragons' lead to 56-54 with 5:41 to play.

The Dragons stayed on top the rest of the way, but Somerville twice pulled to within one point on long jumpshots by Basil Lister.

His 20-foot shot with 1:11 to play left Shelbyville with a 67-66 lead. But Chumbley took over in the final minute, hitting the game's final six points on six consecutive free throws.

Darren Martin added 20 points for Shelbyville and Joe Bolton had 16. Chumbley got his points on hot 12 of 16 shooting from the floor and 10 of 15 shooting from the free-throw line.

Lister led Somerville with 19 points, and 6-4 senior Patrick Williams added 17 and 12 rebounds before fouling out with 2:54 to play.

Who else? Snook

Snook's Blue Jays methodically won their seventh straight state boys basketball title, getting eight points from each of three players, and smothering Nazareth 39-30.

The top scorers for Snook, 37-2, were Wesley Jackson, Vincent Swain and 6-7 freshman Walter Martin in the Class A final.

The Blue Jays slowed the game early, leading only 6-4 after the first quarter. Nazareth fans shouted "Boring, boring" as Snook moved the ball slowly around the floor.

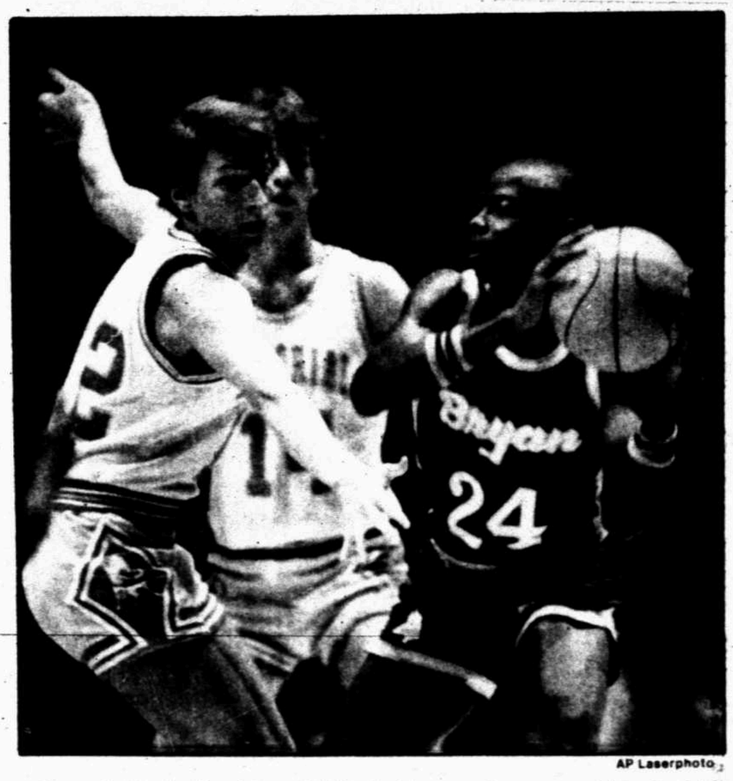

But the champs took the lead for good on a fast-break layup by Johnnie Washington with 5:25 to play in the second quarter. The Swifts pulled within one at 24-23 with 6:59 to go in the third period, but Nazareth managed only three points in the next six minutes.

Nazareth's top scorer and rebounder was 6-3 senior Mark Huseman with 15 points and 10 boards.

Snook's control offense turned the ball over only eight times, and the Swifts converted those to only four points. Nazareth suffered 14 turnovers. Snook picked up a dozen points off the Swifts' miscues.

Nazareth finished the season at 33-3.

The seven straight titles is a state record.

Hogs survive A&M scare, meet Houston in finals

SWC Basketball

HOUSTON (AP) - Arkansas guard Ricky Norton's 22-foot jump shot with a second to play Saturday night carried the No. 8 ranked Razorbacks into the Southwest Conference Post-Season Basketball Classic Championship finals against Houston with a 49-47 victory over Texas A&M University.

Aggie guard Darnell Williams traveled with 10 seconds to play to give Arkansas a chance to win the game in regulation.

A&M, 15-14, was unable to get a shot off after Norton's clutch jumper just inside the three-point circle.

No. 5 ranked Houston outlasted Rice 53-50 in the other semifinal game as Akeem Olajuwon blocked 9 shots and scored 15 points.

The Razorbacks, now 25-5, will play Houston for the third time this season at 1:10 p.m. in The Summit.

Arkansas guard Alvin Robertson, who had a game-high 20 points, hit four free throws and Arkansas led 47-45 but Kenny Brown tied it with 1:44 to go with two free throws.

The Razorbacks stalled most of the time off the clock but suffered a turnover and the Aggies promptly returned the favor.

The Aggies outscored Arkansas 16-2 as they overcame a 15-point deficit to take the lead 33-31 behind fiesty freshman guard Todd Holloway, who finished 15 points.

Arkansas went 9:16 without a field goal during the Aggies' rally.

The Razorbacks were also ice cold from the free throw line, making only 7 of 18 attempts.

Arkansas raced to a 24-9 lead in the first half behind Robertsonbefore the Aggies rallied with 11 unanswered points to trail only 24-20 at intermission.

Robertson scored Arkansas' first five points and had 10 in the half. However, Arkansas went the last 5:46 of the first half without a point.

Aggie freshman Mike Clifford made three free throws, stole a pass and scored a layup as Arkansas became rattled under a fullcourt press.

Another steal and basket by Holloway and two long corner shots by Brown, who had 14 total points for the game, pulled the Aggies within four of the cold-shooting Razorbacks.

Arkansas was hurt when center Joe Kleine fouled out with 2:56 to play with only 10 points.

Akeem Olajuwon scored 15 points, blocked nine shots and helped Houston advance to the title game with a 53-50 victory over Rice in the first semifinal game Saturdaty night.

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — Tim Witherspoon lost $31,000 worth of jewelry to a hotel burglar while in the ring against Greg Page, but he says winning the World Boxing Council heavyweight crown more than made up for the theft.

Witherspoon joined an increasingly crowded field of heavyweight champions with the 12-round decision Friday night, taking a title vacated by Larry Holmes because of a contract dispute with promoter Don King.

Free throws lift Duke past Heels

From Wire Reports

GREENSBORO, N.C. — Sophomore David Henderson sank four free throws in the last 42 seconds to propel 16th-ranked Duke into the finals of the ACC tournament, 77-75, No. 1 North Carolina.

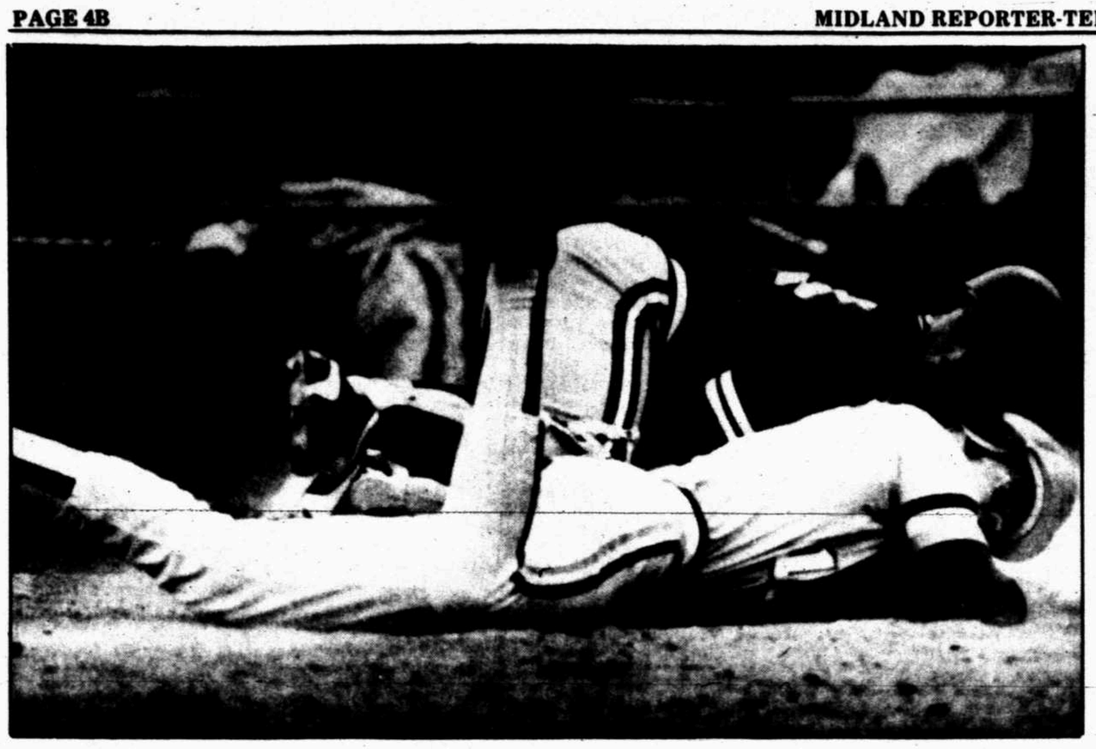

Duke meets Maryland today in its first ACC final since 1980 when it lost to Maryland, 73-72. It was UNC's first ACC loss in 15 games.

It was tied eight times in the first 15 minutes of the second half, the last 69-69 on Matt Doherty's jumper with 2:39 left. Johnny Dawkins put Duke ahead with a 15-footer with 2:10 left and Mark Alarie added two free throws.

UNC's Joe Wolf hit two free throws to bring the Tar Heels within 73-71 at the 51-second mark, but Henderson started his string at that point. Alarie had with 21 points, while Dawkins added 16. Handerson had 14 and Jay Bilas chipped in 10. Michael Jordan scored 22 points and Doherty added 20 for the Tar Heels, 27-2.

Dallas Thomas Jefferson's Larry Chapman collides with Midland Lee catcher Sergio Ochoa and is called out during a first inning pickoff in the first of two Tournament of Champions title games Saturday night at Cubs Stadium.

Cubs Stadium scoreboard. Lee had life.

After a scoreless seventh in which neither side threatened, Jefferson made another bid. Jinks tried for redemption with a lead-off single followed by David Vandecar's base hit. A Rebel error then let both score, and batter Walter Weeks ended up on third, but a nifty 1-2-5 pickoff worked when Weeks tried to steal home, and the TJ threat ended there.

Lee wrapped the win in the last of the eleventh, when with one away, Bergoon and Phillips singled, and TJ shortstop Danny Fine threw the ball away trying to nail Bergoon.

Midland High's Bulldogs found the going rough in a consolation bracket game, losing to the Lubbock Monterey Plainsmen 13-1. Monterey jumped on Bulldog starter Mike Stanton for two runs in the first, then chased Stanton in the third with a seven-run inning.

Meanwhile, Monterey pitcher Curtis Hogan was doing a number on Bulldog batters, retiring ten in a row at one point and limiting coach Tim Whalen's crew to only four hits. Two of those came in the first inning when MHS scored its' lone run, and another came in the second before Hogan completely shut the door.

In the first game Saturday, TJ beat Monterey 5-2 largely on the strength of six Plainsmen errors. Rodney Jinks got the win and went the distance.

Midland High places third

Davis, in his first meet since the end of the basketball season, won the shot put with a very respectable 56-6.

Another basketball player, Chris Rooker, was third in the high jump with a 5-10 and Randall Swindell had a third in the long jump with a 20-5¼ and a fourth in the 100 with an 11.82.

Tracy Hagins was third in the 800 with a 2:02.03 while Freddie Goodman placed fourth in the 400 with a 52.97. Pat Culp was fourth in the discus with a 122-2.

MHS was third in the 1600 relay with a 3:31.37, but was disqualified in the sprint relay.

Sixth place finishes were earned by Jesse Diaz in the 3200 with a 10:40.06 and Ron Hernandez with an 11-0 in the pole vault.

Lubbock Coronado posted 172 points to easily win the meet and Amarillo Tascosa was second with 111. Midland High finished third overall with 86 points.

Butler's 14 paces WTC

We knew before the game that if we got into a situation where we had to foul, he was the one we wanted to foul," said Davis calmly after the game, "Out of respect for Coach Mitchell and his ability, I thought when Snook fell to the floor injured that they were telling him to stay there so a substitute be sent in to take his shots. I was just trying to make sure that they didn't get someone else in the game."

SNOOK MISSED his first shot on the one-and-one and when Billy Chambers converted both ends of a one-and-one with six left to make it 56-53, it was all over.

In analyzing the game, Davis said, "I think Howard was missing the heart and soul of its team with James Johnson unable to play." Johnson suffered a knee injury in the closing stages of the Amarillo game.

And yes, he thought the three-overtime game Friday may have taken its toll. That's one reason we came out in the press in the second half. We felt it might begin to tell on them at the 10-minute mark."

Mitchell, foiled in his bid for a third trip to nationals, took the loss better than he does some calls by officials. "Emotionally, I think Friday's game drained us, but I don't think it hurt us physically."

When Western was taking command midway through the final half, Howard experienced a stretch where it missed eight strong outside shots.

"We have not been consistent offensively inside all year. We depend on our perimeter shooting. There's not much you can do when you are getting the shots you want, but they aren't falling."

BIG 6-6, 235-pound Melroy Butler led Western with 14 points. He was the key to victory for the Westerners. When Howard was missing in the second half, WTC kept finding Butler under the iron. He hit six of eight shots. Fred Johnsn scored 12 points, all in the first half as WTC took a slim 31-29 lead.

Stroman pumped in seven of nine shots in the second half, all from outside, in keeping the Hawks alive. He scored 23 for the night. Maurice Hoskins scored eight points, all in the first half, from the 15 to 20 foot range to keep the Hawks alive while Stroman warmed up.

In addition to Banks, Bill Chambers, Richie Fells and Eugene Lewis were named to the All-Region V Tournament team from WTC. Stroman, Snooks and James Johnson made it from Howard. Other picks were: Jerry Thomas, Ranger; Mike Sanders and Andrew Kennedy, Amarillo; and Creon Dorsey, TSTI.

Dupree, Young to make professional debuts today

By The Associated Press

Marcus Dupree and Steve Young, the United States Football League's newest prizes, make their pro debuts today with Dupree more likely to make an immediate impact than the man whose $40 million contract far overshadowed Dupree's paltry $6 million.

Dupree, wearing the No. 22 he had both in high school and at the University of Oklahoma, will be the major attraction for the 40,000 or so fans expected at the New Orleans Superdome for the Breakers' home opener with the Memphis Showboats. And while he won't start, he's expected to see some action, both returning kicks and from a running back position.

"How much he plays will depend a lot on how much he grasps from three days of practice," says backfield coach Bill Redell. "We may use him sparingly or he may play a lot. We want to be sure he is ready."

Young has had even less time, reporting for practice with the Los Angeles Express for the first time Friday and he's not scheduled to play for another two weeks. Frank Seurer, a rookie from Kansas, will open at quarterback for the Express Sunday at Oakland against the Invaders.

In other Sunday games, the Philadelphia Stars will be at the New Jersey Generals; the Michigan Panthers at the Denver Gold; the Houston Gamblers at the Chicago Blitz; the San Antonio Gunslingers at the Oklahoma Outlaws; and the Birmingham Stallions at the Pittsburgh Maulers.

On Monday night, the Washington Federals will be at Arizona to play the Wranglers.

USFL

THE JACKSONVILLE Bulls were at the Tampa Bay Bandits Saturday night.

Dupree, who signed with New Orleans after dropping out of both Oklahoma and Southern Mississippi, had his crash course in pro football intensified after Richard Crump, New Orleans' regular tailback, tore a knee ligament last Sunday against Oakland. Buford Jordan, New Orleans' No.1 draft pick, will start, but Dupree definitely will play.

"I feel pretty good except I'm so flatfooted from my new shoes," said Dupree, whom Coach Dick Coury pronounced in remarkably good shape for a man away from football for six months.

Young, who plays a position that demands study, also was pronounced remarkably advanced by his coach.

"I had breakfast with Steve this morning and he already had the formation and movement calls down," said Coach John Hadl.

The game in Pittsburgh marks the home debut of Mike Rozier, off to a slow start in his first two contests. The Maulers say all 59,000 seats have been sold for the game but acknowledge that many of the ticket buyers said they were coming to boo Cliff Stoudt, the former quarterback of the NFL Steelers who now is the signal-caller for Birmingham.

HOUSTON (AP) — Top-ranked Texas, led by a sharp-shooting Fran Harris and Audrey Smith, broke open a tight game late in the second half to surge past stubborn Texas Tech 83-73 Saturday, winning the Southwest Conference Women's Basketball Tournament.

The Longhorns, who have won 81 straight games against SWC competition, used a 16-2 spurt starting with 7:31 left in the game to finally pull away from the Red Raiders, who closed out their season at 23-6.

Harris scored six of her 21 points and Smith got four of her 19 points during the breakaway streak. While the Longhorns surged, Tech committed seven turnovers in eight possessions.

Texas' comeback overshadowed the performance of Tech's Carolyn Thompson, who scored 30 points and was named the outstanding player of the tournament.

Tech led for the last time at 57-55 with 9:40 to go in the game on Thompson's three-pointer, but the Longhorns pulled away to their 30th victory of the season against two losses.

The Longhorns, who have never lost to Tech in 18 games, needed a last-second basket from Smith to take a 37-36 halftime lead against the Red Raiders.

Tech rode the first-half shooting surges of Thompson, who hit 11 of Tech's first 15 points for a 15-14 lead with 12:24 left in the half.

Thompson left the game at that point, and the Longhorns outscored Tech 7-2 and moved to a 21-17 lead with the Raider senior on the bench. The Raiders committed four consecutive turnovers during that Texas rally.

Thompson returned to the game and Tech regained the lead. But Texas drew within one point at 36-35 in the closing seconds.

When Tech's Kellye Richardson missed a basket with six seconds to play, the Longhorns rushed the ball downcourt to Smith, who canned the go-ahead points at the halftime buzzer.

Sports in Brief

Skidmore beats Roth to win King Louie

After nearly bowling a perfect game in the semifinal round, Gary Skidmore cruised past top-seeded Mark Roth 242-188 and captured the $125,000 King Louie Open Saturday. The victory was the third career title on the Pro Bowlers Association for Skidmore, who averaged 244 in four games as he climbed to the top.

Skidmore of Albuquerque, N.M., earlier bowled strikes in the first nine frames of the semifinal match against Steve Cook of Roseville, Calif. In the 10th frame, however, Skidmore, who had posted two "Brooklyn" or crossover strikes during the string, left a two-pin, after sending the ball too far to the right. He spared and filled with a seven count for a 276-235 decision.

BASKETBALL — Michael Jordan of top-ranked North Carolina was named winner Saturday of the John R. Wooden Award as the outstanding collegiate basketball player of the 1983-84 season. Jordan, a 6-foot-6 junior guard, will be presented the award at a dinner at the Los Angeles Athletic Club on April 4, two days after the NCAA Championship game is played at Seattle. The award is determined by a vote of 1,000 sports writers and sportscasters from throughout the country.

The Dallas Mavericks announced Saturday night the signing of 6-6 guard Roger Phegley to a contract for the remainder of the season. Dallas acquired the six-year pro on Feb. 20 because of an injury that kept guard Jim Spanarkel out of the lineup with a broken wrist. Under National Basketball Association rules, a player must either be released or signed for the rest of the year after finishing his second 10-day contract. In Phegley's case, his second 10-day contract was to expire Saturday.

FOOTBALL — Dallas Cowboys quarterback Danny White, who is accused of punching a youth after running his car off the road, faces a misdemeanor assault charge. White allegedly hit a 17-year-old Plano student in the nose last month, according to Collin County District Attorney H. Ownby. Ownby filed the complaint Friday following an investigation by sheriff's officers. White's attorney, Pat Davis, said Friday that White would post a $750 bond and plead innocent.

Johnson running away from ST Classic field

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — Chris Johnson, playing bogey-free golf for the second straight day, fired a 3-under-par 69 and took a commanding six-stroke lead after Saturday's third round of the $150,000 LPGA Samaritan Turquoise Classic.

Johnson, a 25-year-old Tucson resident and former All-American at the University of Arizona, now has a 12-under 204 total and is leading a tournament for the first time in her four-year LPGA career after 54 holes.

Cathy Morse, Patty Hayes and Jo Ann Washam are all tied for second place at 6-under 210 with Ayako Okamoto, Dianne Dailey and Jan Stephenson all at 5-under 211.

Debbie Massey and Pat Bradley both follow at 4-under 212.

Johnson overtook first-round leader Stephenson by fashioning a 4-under 68 Friday to lead the veteran Bradley and rookie Pia Nilsson by two shots and Stephenson by three.

Bradley slipped to a 75 Saturday, however, and Stephenson suffered five bogeys en route to a 1-over 73 on the 6,239-yard Adobe Course at the Arizona Biltmore Country Club here.

Morse and Hayes both shot 68s to move up from an 11th-place tie while Okamoto and Washam each shot 69. Okamoto was also in 11th place after play Friday. Washman had been tied for seventh with Dailey and Massey, who shot 71 and 72, respectively, Saturday.

Mitchell leads Spurs past Rockets

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Hot-shooting Mike Mitchell poured in 36 points as the San Antonio Spurs rallied in the final quarter to defeat the Houston Rockets 123-118 in a National Basketball Association game Saturday night.

Mitchell scored 11 points and Ron Brewer contributed 10 as San Antonio broke away from an 84-84 deadlock after three quarters.

Six Spurs scored in double figures in San Antonio's second straight win.

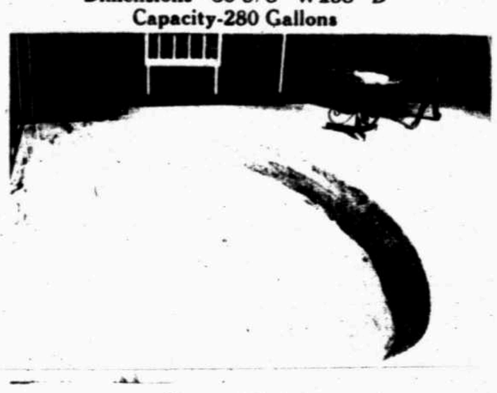

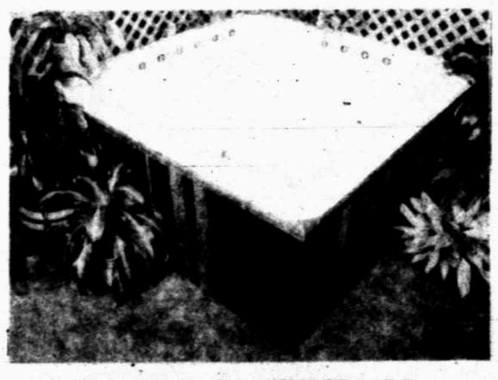

John Lucas and George Gervin each scored 16, Brewer tallied 14, Fred Roberts came off the bench to score 13 and Edgar Jones scored 11 points for San Antonio.

Nicklaus stumbles on 16th; Lietzke, Archer take lead

MIAMI (AP) - After Jack Nicklaus had been victimized by a double bogey on the 16th hole, Bruce Lietzke and veteran George Archer emerged as co-leaders Saturday in the third round of the $400,000 Doral-Eastern Open Golf Tournament.

Nicklaus, the famed Golden Bear, was cruising along in sole command of the lead when he dumped a shot in a bunker, came out long and 3-putted on the 16th hole at the Blue Monster course at the Doral Country Club.

It deprived Jack of the lead and set it up for Lietzke, still riding a high from last week's victory in the Honda Classic, and the gangling, 44-year-old Archer to tie for the top at 205, 11 shots under par.

Archer, a former Masters champion whose last victory came eight long years ago, had a 69 in the bright, warm weather. Lietzke had the lead alone until he bogeyed the final hole, finishing off a 67.

Nicklaus struggled to a 70 and was tied at 206 with Johnny Miller and Gary Hallberg. Miller had a 68 and Hallberg 69.

They were followed by Tom Kite, Wayne Levi and Bernhard Langer of West Germany. Kite's round of 70 included an eagle-2 on the 14th, where he dropped out a 165-yard, 6-iron shot. Levi had a 69 and Langer 68.

DEFENDING CHAMPION Gary Koch was next at 69-208, only three back and very mch in contention.

So are at least 21 others, according to Lietzke.

"It's the kind of golf course that anyone within six shots can come out of the pack tomorrow and win it," he said.

"With the field we have, with the course we're playing, I'd say it's a very good chance, better than 50-50, that the winner will come out of a playoff."

LIETZKE, WHO chipped in from about 50 feet for a birdie on the third hole, had it 6 under par for the day and was one shot clear of the field until he made his lone bogey on the 18th. He let his approach leak to the right, chipped down to about eight feet and missed the putt.

"I'm playing confidently — just a carry-over from last week," he said. "That was a confidence-builder. I was playing well and had confidence coming into this week. I had all the ingredients. So far, I've been able to apply them."

That bogey on the last hole let the 6-foot-5 Archer gain a share of the lead and put him one big step closer toward a longtime goal.

Archer, who had serious back surgery in 1976, said he came back "with one goal in mind — win one more time after the operation.

"I've been close a few times, but I think wanting it so much has kept me from it. If I make it tomorrow, good. If not, well, for a guy that was 80-20 on even walking again, I guess I can't complain."

Nicklaus, trying to break a 1½-year non-winning string, broke out of a three-way tie with a birdie-birdie start, and got to three under for the day with a wedge shot to six feet on the fifth hole.

A drive that bounced off a tree, then a spectator, then settled in high grass, set up his first bogey of the tournament on the seventh hole.

He made a 25-footer for birdie fon the next hole, got a wedge close on the 10th and held his position atop the standings despite some extremely erratic play over the next three holes.

He came out of a fairway bunker on the 14th and made a 30-foot putt for birdie that kept him two in front of the pack.

That margin was cut in half when he bogeyed the next hole from a bunker, then disappeared entirely with the double-bogey disaster on the 16th.

UTEP women no match for MC tennis

From Staff Reports

There were no University of Texas-El Paso survivors Saturday when the Midland College women's tennis team hosted the Lady Miners as the Chaps scored a perfect 9-0 victory.

"In this particular match we were just that much stronger than UTEP," said MC coach Joe Williams. "We're trying to play as many NCAA teams as we can to help get us ready for Nationals."

So far, the only NCAA team to beat Midland College is Texas Christian University and the Lady Horned Frogs did it twice. Midland's record is now 14-2, 3-0 in conference play.

Midland College will travel to Stillwater, Okla., on March 19 to take on Clemson and Oklahoma State in a double dual. Also during that week, which happens to be spring break, the MC men will be with the women against OSU. Other dates that week include matches with Oklahoma, Oklahoma City University and Oral Roberts.

SWC awards 14 athletes extra year

HOUSTON (AP) — Fourteen athletes from six Southwest Conference schools have been awarded an extra year of eligibility, SWC officials announced Saturday.

Five Arkansas football players and three other athletes were granted an additional year due to injury. Six athletes were given another year under the freshman participation rule.

Rice baseball player Clinton Welch, SMU gridders Chris Jackson and Grady Burnett and Texas Tech football players Ronald Byers, Danny Buzzard and Sid Chambers earned another year because of an NCAA rule change.

Freshmen who competed in not more than 20 percent of a school's events prior to Jan. 12, 1982 can now receive another year of eligibility provided the athlete meets all other requirements, conference officials said.

Utah wins ski championship

JACKSON, N.H. (AP) — Utah won the men's cross country relay Saturday as it clinched its second consecutive NCAA skiing championship.

The Utes won with a four-event total of 750.5 points and were followed by Vermont, 684, New Mexico, 580, Colorado, 556, and Wyoming, 516. Seventeen teams competed in the NCAA's second coed championship.

Vermont highlighted its performance by taking first in the women's three-by-five kilometer cross country relay at the Jackson Ski Touring Foundation. Utah led the first two laps, but Jorunn Gran-Henriksen of Vermont caught Utah's Tone Jahren on the last uphill and held her off in the final kilometer. Vermont posted a three-second win over the Utes in a time of 53:07.8. New Mexico was third and Wyoming, fourth.

In the men's three-by-10 kilometer race, Colorado's Thomas Holter opened up a 25-second lead over Utah before Knut Engebretsen put Utah up for good on the second leg. Engebretsen made up the 25 seconds and gained 25 more to give John Aalberg a comfortable lead on the final leg. Utah won in 1:29.17, 43 seconds ahead of Colorado. Vermont was third, and New Mexico, fourth.

The Utes have won three national championships in the past four years under head coach Pat Miller.

Harvey Advertising offers a wide selection of specialty items

Texas based Harvey Advertising ranks among the nation's top specialty advertising companies. With headquarters in Waco, Harvey employs a highly qualified staff trained to provide the kind of service and merchandise required to maintain their reputation for excellence. Proud of a reputation that's known throughout West Texas and New Mexico, the Harvey staff always stands ready to be of service to long time friends and new prospects alike.

"We're not a one-shot outfit peddling pens by phone," says Marketing Consultant, Bill Atwood. "We sit down with our clients to work out a plan that best suits their budget as well as their needs. The customized product is the vehicle for the message that the client wants to convey. We offer quality because specialty advertising is selective and his audience should be pleased with something useful that will remind the recipient of it's source. A well chosen product that expresses appreciation or promotes new business will be given directly to the people that our client wants to reach."

Most of us don't think much about specialty advertising. It's the kind of thing we tend to take for granted. Year after year, for instance, we might receive a handy appointment calendar in the mail from a merchant who appreciates our patronage. We look forward to getting it and find it useful all year long. Whether it comes from a paint store or a lumber yard, it is appreciated. And whether consciously or otherwise, we remember that merchant when it comes time to purchase paint or building supplies. Maybe we are still using the yardstick he handed us four years ago, or the flyswatter we picked up in his store in 1976 is the one that still hangs in the camper every summer. The point is, good specialty advertising works. It works to the advantage of both the merchant and the consumer.

But specialty advertising doesn't stop there. Because it is the business of the Marketing Consultant to develope ideas incorporating the use of products as a vehicle for messages; specialty advertising is by no means limited. Service, Safety, and Incentive Awards programs are frequently utilized by management to promote goodwill or produce a particular desired result within a company. So the message may be conveyed on a plaque, an engraved Cross pen, a handsome jacket or a leather attache case. A good program perpetuates itself for many years, and frequently does.

Many in the Midland-Odessa area who depend on Harvey Advertising are using specialty items strictly in the form of supplies. Scratch-pads, pens, hard hat decals, binders and folders in every description — desk sets, and signs for company trucks and cars are among the most popular such items. Others include caps, jackets, T shirts, paper-weights and log books.

Managers of political campaigns find it far more economical to rely on a Harvey Advertising Consultant for their specialty needs rather than to venture into other forms of promotion. Thus, the candidiate's name, slogan and campaign colors become familiar in many forms. Bumper stickers, lapel buttons, pencils, matches, balloons candy and even hats are effective and popular. So, If you'd like for your candidate's name to beome a household word before election day, why not call Bill Atwood and let him show you how to use specialties?

The success or failure of a Trade Show display is often determined by the manner in which specialty advertising is used. It is for this reason that many in the Permian Basin are already working on ideas for the up-coming Oil Show.

Regardless of the manner in which you use specialty advertising, there are some important things to remember. The greater the quantity — the better the price. Always allow from three to six weeks production and shipment time, depending on the specific facts from your Marketing Consultant. Merchandise is shipped direct to the purchaser, which is a feature that enables Harvey to offer good service.

"If a customer isn't pleased with something purchased from Harvey — we want to know about it.", says Atwood. "One reason we're among the top specialty companies in the nation is because our Waco team won't handle a line of merchandise thau doesn't meet Harvey standards. If a manufacturer wants his product handled by our team, there can't be any quality problems or inexcusable delays. I guess you could say we're still old fashioned enough to believe it's important to please the customer."

Coming up roses!

For the second time in three years the Midland High School band has been invited to march in the prestigious Tournament of Roses Parade.

That's no small feat in itself and is an indication of the band's outstanding level of musical performance. A look at how the band received the invitation and what the performance actually involves gives an even fuller indication of the honor that is attached to marching in the Rose Parade.

The band is one of only eight out-of-state bands invited to participate in the popular Pasadena, Calif., parade. As it marches the five and a half-mile parade route, the band passes before the eyes of about one and a half million people lining the route. Furthermore a television audience of about 150 million people worldwide see the parade.

But that isn't all. Before being selected for the parade, a band has to pass muster and that isn't easy. It has to be officially recognized as an award winner and an outstanding band.

The Midland High School band is that. The Bulldog band has received a number of superior ratings University Interscholastic League competition and beginning in 1977 won six consecutive UIL sweepstakes awards.

What's more, the band's trip to California where it also will appear in a night parade at Disneyland will be paid for by the students and the band booster club. Part of the $80,000 this trip is expected to cost will be raised April 14 when the "Up With People" fund-raising concert is given. The formal Rose Parade invitation will be made at that time by James Boyle, president of the Tournament of Roses Association.

The band is deserving of the signal honor that has been extended to it. Band director Clyde Wilson says appearing in the Rose Parade is "a very unique thing to do." That's much too modest.

Appearing in the Rose Parade is the opportunity of a lifetime. Appearing a second time is the start of a tradition.

Bottle this genie

That war is hell is one of the oldest truths in human experience, but the war between Iran and Iraq is reaching a level of barbarity that is especially appalling. Reports from the Iraqi plain tell of casualties in the tens of thousands after human-wave attacks by the Iranians. Some of the Iranian "troops" are said to be no more than schoolboys, as young as 12.

Most alarming is the evidence that Iraq is using poison gas to repel massive assaults by Iran. In spite of the other brutalities of modern warfare, there has been restraint in the use of chemical weapons — until recently.

There is compelling evidence that chemical weapons originating in the Soviet Union have been responsible for death and injury from "yellow rain" in Southeast Asia and Afghanistan. The Soviet Union is the chief supplier of arms to Iraq. Is that only a coincidence?

Iran has asked the United Nations to investigate the evidence of the use of mustard gas by the Iraqis. Considering the difficulty in getting the United Nations to embark on any project potentially embarrassing to the Soviet Union, that avenue does not look especially promising. We're certainly no friends of Iran after the infamous hostage situation, but ....

Another View:

Let the chips fall

A few months ago the federal government served notice that it was cracking down on companies suspected of cheating the government on defense contracts, and that in appropriate cases it would bring criminal charges against responsible corporate executives.

This week National Semiconductor Corp. pleaded guilty in a San Francisco federal court to a 40-count indictment charging it with lying to the government about the testing of computer parts manufactured for the Pentagon.

The guilty plea was part of a settlement under which National Semiconductor, one of the nation's largest producers of microelectronic chips, agreed to pay $1.75 million in criminal and civil penalties and federal prosecutors agreed not to bring civil or criminal proceedings against company employees or executives.

According to the Pentagon, 14 other companies are under investigation for similar violations; more indictments are expected.

The administration deserves praise for demonstrating its seriousness about a crackdown on fraud committed by defense contractors. But taxpayers have a right to hope that the plea-bargaining in the National Semiconductor case does not set a pattern for disposition of other such cases; where individual responsibility for criminal acts can be pinned down, the guilty parties should go to jail.

According to the indictment, National Semiconductor falsely attested compliance with contract requirements that microchips be subjected to 160 hours of rigorous testing. The inadequate testing involved many thousands of chips sold to the Department of Defense from 1978 to 1981 for inclusion in military equipment that is reported to have included fighter aircraft, battleships and battlefield communication networks.

Obviously fraud of this sort could endanger the lives of service men and women, cause unnecessary loss of expensive military hardware and impair the country's defense capabilities. It is a serious crime, and should be treated as such.

Fortunately for National Semiconductor, double-checking failed to turn up evidence that its under-tested chips caused such failures. That fact, plus the company's cooperation with investigators, led to the government's acceptance of the plea-bargain under which company executives were let off the hook.

The extenuating circumstances may have been sufficient in this particular case. In general, however, the policy should be that corporate executives who knowingly cheat the government on defense contracts will face criminal charges.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

U.S. bankrolling foreign copper

WASHINGTON — The grand designs of our global strategists often fail to take into account painful human consequences. It's unlikely, for example, that the policy makers in Washington have ever given any thought to Superior, Ariz. Yet they have made decisions that have just about ruined the hardy people who live there.

Jack Anderson

Superior was once a booming copper town. Now it's becoming a ghost town. The lives of its 4,600 residents had always revolved around the Magma Copper Co. For four generations, the town's strong-backed men had worked the Magma mine.

Then on Aug. 15, 1982, the company shut down the mine. One day, miners were taking home $100 in daily wages; the next day, they were out of work. And with the Magma payroll gone, the few other enterprises in Superior also began to falter.

A year ago, a restaurant burned down on Main Street; no one has bothered to clear away the charred debris. The local hotel, once bustling with business, has been converted into a charity food dispensary. Even St. Francis cathedral received notice that its electricity would be shut unless back bills were paid.

What have the town's troubles got to do with global policy? Just this: The United States contributes heavily to international loans to help impoverished countries develop their resources. One resource that has been developed in abundance is copper. The resulting overproduction has caused the worst depression in 40 years in the U.S. copper industry.

Specifically, the U.S. taxpayers — including the few in Superior who still have enough income to be taxed — are shelling out money to keep overseas copper mines open. This adds to the worldwide copper glut that is pushing prices down and causing companies like Magma to close mines. Since 1979, 16 of America's 25 largest copper mines have shut down.

In 1982, for example, the International Monetary Fund handed over $325 million to Chile to expand the operations of CODELCO, the state-owned copper monopoly. This raised copper production 15 percent in Chile at the same time that production dropped 25 percent in the United States. Yet the greatest share of the $325 million loan came out of the U.S. treasury.

The townspeople understand that world copper prices have been falling, so they don't blame Magma for closing down the mine. What's driving them to despair is the continuing uncertainty over the company's future intentions. Magma can't say whether the closing is permanent or not.

Just as the outlook began to improve last year, the Inter-American Development Bank loaned the Chilean government another $268 million to expand copper production. Again, the lion's share was contributed by the United States. Now I've learned the governments of Zambia and Zaire are asking the World Bank for multimillion-dollar loans to stimulate copper production.

The U.S. government has usually been able to block any international loans it doesn't like. Then why does it permit loans that damage the domestic copper industry? The State Department contends that opposition to the loans would damage relations between Washington and Third World countries, such as the military dictatorship of Chile's Gen. Augusto Pinochet.

So the residents of Superior are suffering personally and painfully for the Reagan administration's strategic goals. Since the mine closed, there has been a strange outbreak of illnesses and accidents among the townspeople. The Rev. Michael Teta, pastor of St. Francis church, believes these have been caused by anxiety and insecurity. Psychiatrists would probably agree.

In a talk with my associate Michael Binstein, the priest spoke sadly of what is happening to his flock. He told of a woman who sold her radio to buy her child a pair of shoes.

"The uncertainty is probably one of the major sources of anxiety," said Teta. "People are at a loss as to what to do with their lives."

Consider the misfortune of Tony Munoz, who spent 33 of his 58 years in the mines saving up for his lifelong dream — a business of his own to boost his meager pension. A year before the Magma mine closed, Munoz bought a hotel-restaurant on Main Street.

Since the shutdown, Munoz has lost 60 percent of his trade and is losing $700 a month on the hotel. He subsists on $455 in monthly retirement benefits plus whatever he can make selling jewelry in Phoenix on weekends.

Things are so bad in Superior that Munoz turned 10 of his 50 hotel rooms into a food bank run by Loretta Johnson and 22 volunteers. Since unemployment benefits ran out months ago, the center now feeds about 1,200 families with surplus government cheese and powdered milk.

Loretta Johnson is 75 years old. She moved to Superior 13 years ago because her husband was sick and needed a dry climate. He died not long afterward. Then her son developed brain cancer and had to be driven 200 miles each day for radiation therapy in Tucson. He died in 1978.

Mrs. Johnson could go back to a comfortable home in New York, but she decided to stay in Superior and run the food dispensary. She owes it to her neighbors, she said, who were so kind to her in time of need.

GEORGE F. WILL

Nativity okay step toward reason

WASHINGTON — The Establishment Clause of the First Amendment has come to resemble something that has spent a month in a Cuisinart. But now the Supreme Court has come to a semi-sensible conclusion in spite of itself.

George F. Will

In another rebellion against the tyranny of its own foolish formulations and precedents, the Court has decided not to treat Christmas creches on public property the way Carry Nation used to treat saloons. The Court has declined the American Civil Liberties Union's invitation to declare Pawtucket, Rhode Island's, official nativity scene unconstitutional. In declining, the Court has lowered slightly the wall of separation that has recently separated the Establishment Clause ("Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion") from reason.

Reasonableness is rarely more than a vote away from disaster and the Court was divided 5-4. Chief Justice Burger (joined by White, Powell, Rehnquist and O'Connor) said that two lower courts were wrong to say that the creche constituted a Pawtucket endorsement of Christianity. So far, so good.

But Burger also felt obliged to say, believe it or not, that Pawtucket's creche passes constitutional muster in part because it had the secular purpose of abetting retail sales in downtown Pawtucket. And the Court's mania for splitting already-split hairs is visible in the majority's ruling. Burger suggests there is significance in the fact that Pawtucket's Christian symbols were part of a tossed salad of seasonal symbols that included reindeer, a sleigh, a Christmas tree, Santa's house, candy-striped poles, a teddy bear, an elephant and a clown. (The proper objections to the display were aesthetic, not constitutional.) So the Court, which is never more eloquent than when complaining about its work load, has incited more litigation, which will come when the ACLU's beady eye spots a crech that might not have a constitutionally hygenic accompaniment of secular symbols.

Justice Brennan (joined in dissent by Marshall, Blackmun and Stevens) is correct when he says the majority could not get to its position about Pawtucket's creche if the majority really began with the Court's three-part test of "establishment." By that test, a government action touching religion must have a secular purpose, must not have the primary effect of advancing or inhibiting religion and must not foster excessive entanglement of government with religion.

It is zany to say, as the majority seems to, that one reason the creche is constitutional is that one of its purposes is to fuel commerce in Pawtucket. But speaking of zaniness, last year the Court struggled to respect the three-part test while avoiding finding unconstitutional the employment of chaplains by state legislatures. In that case, the Court virtually ignored the three-part test in order to avoid saying that the prayers by Nebraska's chaplain had a secular purpose and did not advance religion — a rude thing to say.

Burger (wouldn't he rather write gothic novels than spend his time devising complicated reasons for being reasonable?) stresses such facts as these: Government supports museums that display paintings with religious themes. And a creche is "passive."

Well, yes, a creche does not grab passersby by their lapels and proselytize, and that should diminish the terror felt by the ACLU in defeat. The first few Christians became Christians in part because of the sort of events that are beyond Pawtucket's power to produce. The events, involving loaves and fishes and Lazarus and other matters, were miracles. Subsquently, many millions have been brought to the faith by various means — or, if you prefer, various workings of one thing (the Holy Spirit).

In any case, the ACLU should not be anxious. Creches on courthouse lawns are not apt to ignite a dangerous conflagration of religious zeal leading to oppression of other sects.

A real danger is that the Court will disappear, swallowed up as in a black hole by one of its labyrinthine formulations, such as the three-part test. Perhaps that test is jettisoned on the last page of Burger's opinion. There, he says that symbols used in "public acknowledgement" of our religious heritage pose no danger "of establishment of a state church." But Burger's 17-page opinion should have been just one sentence long. The sentence, offered here for use in the cases that Burger's needlessly narrow opinion makes probable, is:

"Because the government practice at issue does not do what the Establishment Clause was written to prevent — does not impose a state-sponsored creed or significantly advantage or disadvantage one sect or sects — the practice is constitutionally benign."

If the justices will put that sentence into their word processors, they can get on with the business of complaining about their work load.

ART BUCHWALD

Asleep at wheel — of justice!

I went over to the Justice Department the other day at about 11 o'clock, walked into the antitrust division and found everyone sleeping.

Art Buchwald

I woke up one of the attorneys.

"Sir," I said. "I'm sorry to disturb you, but I have some important news for you. Standard Oil of California is buying the Gulf Oil Company."

"You woke me up to tell me that?"

"I thought it could be important. SOCAL and Gulf are among the largest firms in the oil business, and the merging of the two firms is certainly a violation of the antitrust laws."

The attorney at the next desk said, "Hey, Harry, will you guys hold it down? I'm trying to catch a few winks."

Harry said, "This guy says SOCAL is going to buy Gulf, Frank."

"So what? It's a free country," Frank yawned.

"Yes," I said, "but if you let two oil Goliaths merge you'll be stifling competition."

"What concern is that of ours?" Frank wanted to know.

"I just thought the antitrust department of Justice should be alerted. Isn't it your job to see that there is competition in the marketplace?"

"You mean you want us to sue SOCAL to prevent them from buying Gulf?" Frank asked. "What kind of antitrust lawyers do you think we are?"

"If we stuck our nose into every two-bit takeove[r] ... se in this country we'd clog the courts with work," Harry said.

I protested. "This is not a two-bit takeover case. It's going to cost SOCAL $13 billion, and it won't produce one cup of new fuel for the country. You can't let oil companies eat each other up without a fight."

Frank said, "We didn't do anything about Texaco taking over Getty. Why should we interfere in someone taking over Gulf?"

"Takeovers are good for business," Harry said. "They drive up a company's stock and a lot of lawyers get rich overnight."

"But what about the public?" I said. "How do we benefit from competition when two companies in the same business make a sweetheart deal with each other?"

Frank took a Twinkie out of his drawer and started nibbling on it. "If we thought the merging of two of the largest oil companies in the world would hurt the public we'd be in court right now. But a marriage of this kind should benefit everybody. It could put a damper on these ruthless gas price wars that are cutting into everyone's profits."

Harry said, "And it will be a warning to the independent stations to stop giving away free car washes when you buy a full tank of gas."

"What about the banks?" I said. "SOCAL wants a $14 billion credit to buy Gulf. That's $14 billion the banks can't loan to other types of companies that might create jobs and invest in new equipment."

"That's not our concern," said Harry. "Our job is to see that the antitrust laws are not violated. There is nothing in the Gulf takeover that will hurt competition in the marketplace."

"What have you people done in the last four years to stimulate competition in the marketplace?"

"We broke up the phone company," said Frank proudly. "And there isn't a person in the country who isn't better off for it. If you don't believe me, just wait until you get your bill next month."

TODAY IN HISTORY

On March 11, 1861, the Confederate convention in Montgomery, Ala., adopted a constitution.

Ten years ago: An internal White House memorandum revealed that President Richard Nixon had suggested members of his staff be given tax returns of former presidents so he could learn what deductions they had taken.

Bill Modisett

Poverty can be tragic, but in no instance is it more heart-rending than when its victims are children.

A parent — any parent — faces a frightening and insurmountable dilemma when his or her child is ill and the family doesn't have the money to take the child to a physician. It's a frustrating feeling that will tie the parent's stomach in knots.

Realizing the helplessness and hopelessness of that situation, a few concerned individuals set out last year to remove that fear for Midland's low-income parents. Armed with a $15,000 gift to St. Andrew's Mission, the Midland Presbyterian Corporate Ministry founded Community Children's Ministry — a clinic designed for the medical treatment of ill youngsters from low-income families.

The clinic, housed rent-free in a building owned by the Reporter-Telegram at 307 N. Weatherford, began operations June 21, 1983, and it didn't take long to confirm the service was meeting a definite need. In fact, today the clinic is treating between 20 and 25 children each time it's open. Typically those days are Tuesday and Thursday mornings, but lately the clinic has expanded its open hours to include Wednesday mornings because of the number of ill children.

A visit to the clinic will convince most any critic of its value. The clinic has treated a variety of illnesses and injuries and in one instance treated a child suffering from meningitis. That child was referred to Midland Memorial Hospital's emergency room.

Sometimes that's the course of action when an accident or illness is beyond the clinic personnel's capabilities. The clinic staff also refers those coming to other doctors or the hospital if they fail to meet income guidelines or if they have insurance, or if the child is over 12 years of age. The clinic's income eligibility is the federal poverty line which is based on a family's size and income.

Those who are treated are fully deserving and have no other source of help. In that respect the clinic's services are a godsend to a vast number of low-income Midlanders.

If you're a taxpayer (and most of us are), you'll particularly appreciate this fact: The clinic doesn't cost you one penny.

Some of the medicines dispensed at the clinic are donated and others are bought at cost. The clinic's staff is totally volunteer with the exception of the doctor. The office is furnished with primarily donated materials and what's needed is purchased with the donations that come in from groups and organizations, individuals and gifts from local foundations.

Individuals who use the clinic pay a modest fee for the treatment their children receive. The fee is $3 per visit, but no one with a child needing medical help and unable to pay is turned away. If they don't have the money at the time, says clinic board member Billie Bessellieu, "we just ask them to bring it next time they come."

She also noted the clinic has received outstanding cooperation from local physicians, the health department, the hospital and others. The clinic never lacks for a staff.

In the proud tradition of another Midland organization — the Christmas in April housing repair project conducted each year — Community Children's Ministry is extending a hand of love and compassion to Midlanders who might otherwise not receive that help.

Billie Bessellieu says, "To me, this is really Midland helping Midlanders."

SPEAKING OUT

It's the child's life, but parents' decision

By CAROL KENDALL

Carol Kendall, a volunteer in Midland Memorial Hospital Auxiliary's Kids 'N' Cars Car Seat Rental Program, came to Midland a little over a year ago from Calgary, Alberta, Canada. A native of Richland, Wash., she grew up in South Carolina. She holds a bachelor's degree in geology from Stephens College in Missouri.

One of my greatest concerns as far as traffic safety goes is the issue of seat belts, shoulder belts and special child safety restraints. Though I think the information available on seat belts shows the odds are strongly with one's use of them, that use is a decision each informed, responsible person must make personally.

However, infants and young children are not in a position to make informed, reasonable decisions. When it comes to child restraints, it's your child's life but it's your decision.

A child restraint is an infant seat or child seat designed specifically for use in motor vehicles to absorb and cushion the violent forces in the event of an accident or emergency maneuver. These restraints have internal seat belt systems and/or shields to secure the children in the seats. The restraints are anchored in the vehicle by the use of the vehicle's seat belts.

There are several important points about the use of child restraints. If used correctly, car safety seats reduce the chances of serious injury or death by as much as 90 percent in serious crashes. Studies show that children behave better while buckled up and are less of a distraction to the driver.

So, how should people go about deciding which child restraint is best. Each person should consider:

— Is it dynamically tested (crash-tested)?

— Will it hold the child comfortably and securely?

— Is it padded, free of sharp, hard edges?

— Will it fit in your vehicle seats and vehicle seat belts?

— Will you use it correctly, even if the directions seem tedious?

With a seat bought or borrowed second hand, one also should consider the following:

— Was the seat involved in an accident? (If so, do not use it).

— Are all straps, buckles and other items necessary for proper use of the seat included and in good condition?

— If the seat has a metal frame, does it rattle? (If it cannot be tightened, do not use it).

— Are the bars twisted or bent? (If so, do not use it).

— Are the instruction booklet and instruction sticker required to be on a car seat included?

With all of the above in mind, please don't get discouraged and decide not to use a child restraint. Any inconvenience involved in using the restraint is well worth affording protection for your children. Once having decided to use a child restraint, don't waiver under the child's objections. Just as no parent is going to skip children's immunizations because the kids do not like the shots, so should parents not waiver on use of child restraints just because kids might protest.

It is important for adults and older children to also ride buckled up. Nationwide statistics show cases where adults and older children were not buckled up, but the infant or young child was correctly secured in a child safety seat. In some situations only the buckled-up young child escaped serious injury or death. However, in other situations the buckled up youngster received serious or fatal injuries when crushed by an unbuckled passenger. When I notice an infant buckled up with a toddler standing up on the vehicle seat and unbuckled adult, I wonder if anyone in the car is really protected.

No matter how careful a driver you are, in my opinion, wearing seat belts and using car seats for children under five years of age is a very important part of defensive driving. You never know how careful or careless the other driver is. Please do not underestimate the forces of a crash. A collision at only 30 mph is equal to a fall from a three-story building, oftentimes heads first.

Because you care, invest in, rent, or borrow a child restraint and use it every time your child rides in a motor vehicle.

There is help for babies, toddlers, pre-schoolers and their parents in the Midland area. The Kids 'N' Cars Loan-A-Seat Program was begun by two women three and one-half years ago through Childbirth With Preparation of Texas, Inc. The program has expanded over the years as a community service, loaning infant and toddler restraints for a small fee.

The Midland Memorial Hospital Auxiliary Inc. assumed responsibility for the program as of Feb. 1, 1984. The auxiliary will operate the car seat program similar to the previous administration through CWP. Besides loaning out seats, we are always happy to answer any questions you may have regarding use of vehicle seat belts or securing a child in a restraint you purchased or, received, or child safety while riding in a motor vehicle.

For further information regarding our loan program or for questions, please call 685-111 and ask for the Information Desk. The auxiliary staffs the Information Desk from 9 a.m. until 4:30 p.m. and from 7 until 8:30 p.m. each day. Please leave your name and telephone number with one of the volunteers. Your call will be returned by a volunteer who works in the car-seat program.

"Speaking Out" columnists are invited to submit articles on subjects of their choice. They should be limited to 850 words or less.

Dogs victims of stupidity

Can you or any of your readers explain why people let their dogs ride in the back of pickups and trucks? Sunday afternoon I was going West on Golf Course and what I saw made me sick.

A dog had fallen from the back of a pickup (a camper with the back glass open), and worse yet, was on a long leash and being dragged at a good rate of speed. This helpless animal was fighting for its life and could have been beaten to death on the street.

The owner was lucky. The dog was not killed. I just happened to be on that street, and only after I drove up beside him and blasted the horn repeatedly, did he finally stop. A couple drove up behind me and a young lady jumped from the car in a rage and crying; I thought she just might attack the driver and who could blame her? She was still crying when they drove away.

The driver of the vehicle was not aware that his dog had fallen and was very upset when he saw what had happened. I do not doubt his affection for the animal, but that is beside the point. In the first place, the dog should not be riding in the back, unless accident proof, and definitely not on a long leash. If people insist on letting their dogs ride in the back, and if you use a leash, please make it so short the animal cannot get to the sides or the back, and situate the animal in the center of the bed. That will prevent a possible choking or hanging of the animal.

I am told that this practice of carrying a dog in the back of a truck or whatever, creates a "sort of macho image." Sounds immature and downright silly, to know there are those that will jeopardize the life and welfare of a helpless animal for an image!

It is way past time for a law to be enacted that will protect, in part anyway, these animals from being the victims of stupidity and carelessness.

Column classic liberal smear

In reply to a most scurrilous editorial from the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, titled "Demeaning Honor," which you saw fit to reproduce in your newspaper under the heading of "Another View", this is a classic liberal smear, this printing of half truths.

Whitaker Chambers wrote a play that ridiculed Christianity; it was neglected to say that it was written while an undergraduate at Columbia University which he entered as a Christian and conservative and came out a Communist and atheist.

Chambers became a Communist in the belief that the Communist doctrine offered solutions to the social crisis of the times. When he realized how wrong he was, the effort to undo some of the damage he had done, brought the full wrath of the liberals down on his head, for if there is one thing they just can't tolerate it's an ex-Communist.

The writer of this piece of literary tripe failed to mention that apart from being a darling of the liberal camp, Alger Hiss was a Communist agent who had risen to be the No. 2 man in our State Department and the Prothonotary Warbler episode put Hiss in prison for perjury; it was not the only evidence of his Communist treason.

I will agree with this anonymous writer that it was a sordid period in our history with the unmasking of Alger Hiss, the Undersecretary of State, and Harry Dexter White, the Secretary of Treasury both Communists working at the highest levels of our government.

Whitaker Chambers was an uncommon man of rare courage, knowing full well that by speaking out he was exposing himself to the most vile abuse and placing his life in jeopardy.

I am thankful that a man such as President Reagan, displaying some of that same courage, rewarded his memory with the "Medal of Freedom." He, like Whitaker Chambers, drew down upon himself some of the same smears and hate.

Thank you President Reagan for awarding of this medal to this particular deserving person.

Parker PTA thanks teachers

The Quanah Parker Elementary Parent-Teacher Association takes this opportunity to recognize the outstanding job of our teachers in dealing with the challenges associated with the opening of a new school while maintaining high scholastic standards for the students.

These teachers worked long hours during the summer of 1983 preparing the classrooms and selecting the educational materials that are used in the daily classroom study. The scholastic records of all students were carefully examined and studied by these teachers to ensure that each student would achieve to his highest potential.

Their professionalism, the dedication for futhering the children's education, and their hard work is greatly appreciated. We feel these characteristics are the strength of the educational process and we are proud to have this fine group of teachers instructing at Parker Elementary School.

Thank you, teachers, for your continued good work. You have made this a very successful opening year for Parker Elementary School.

We appreciate MidTran services

We would like to take this opportunity to express our appreciation for the services which MidTran provides. Since we do not have any public transportation in Midland, we are extremely fortunate to have these services.

We are Vocational Adjustment Co-op Special Education teachers on the high school level, and our students are currently utilizing MidTran. MidTran often provides the only affordable source of transportation to job interviews as well as to and from the job when secured. Not only does MidTran assist in employment but also in the daily living needs of our students who have no other form of transportation. This certainly is an invaluable service to our current and former students as well as all handicapped citizens in Midland.

Readers' Views on: GOP sheriff's race

Voters need candid answers

During the past several weeks we have read and heard occasional news accounts about Gary Painter. Gary, a Midland County deputy sheriff, sought to file an application to run for county sheriff on the Republican ticket.

Upon filing, the Republican chairman was not available and Gary drove approximately 160 miles where he located the chairman several hours past the deadline. The chairman said he would accept the application if the Election Division of the Secretary of State's office did; they did not.

Several items need to be addressed and we the voters should receive answers. Why was the chairman out of town? Had prior arrangements been made to accept applications in his absence? What is the chairman doing to assist Gary's efforts in being placed on the ballot?

Ed Todd's article of March 2, indicated the chairman was working out of town. The chairman's response to Gary's filing late was he did not think anyone else would file and Gary had thirty previous days to make the application.

It is sensible the chairman was working out of town; the position which he holds in the Republican Party is voluntary. However, that does not relieve him of his duties to make necessary arrangements no matter what he thought.

It also should not matter if no one filed for thirty days; the office is not closed until the specified time and date. Nor is it the responsibility of the candidate to foretell of his impending decision to seek election or not. Besides, why would anyone want to be unemployed for a longer period of time than necesary (especially in Midland where the cost of living is high?)

Gary has retained the counsel of an attorney from Austin to assist his efforts to be placed on the ballot, even though this sequence of events is not Gary's fault. He will be a write-in candidate, but we all know it is far better to be on the ballot at election time.

Other than Mr. Todd's article, we have not heard anything from the chairman. He may have spoken to a certain selected groups), but the public should know the facts, and we do not. I believe a public response by the chairman is necessary before the election.

Situation reeks of impropriety

I am writing in response to Cindy King's letter in which she stated, "Midlanders need to wake up, get really angry and do something about it," concerning the controversy surrounding Gary Painter's clear intent to file for the sheriff's race before 6 p.m. on the last filing day with the Republican Party. Ms. King's points were well taken and I am in full agreement with her. That situation does reek of impropriety.

As a Democrat, I might point out that it was reported that our county chair was available until the last possible minute with a notary public at her side. I might further point out that the Democratic Party has room for candidates of a vast range of philosophy. This is the party that stresses strong participation in government and the voting process across all areas of the electorate (e.g. — voter registration, our convention process, and the many diverse groups with a voice in the party).

French foreign minister weaves spell-binding tales

Editor-in-Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

Hearst

PARIS — With pink-tinged clouds in a blue sky, there was a touch of spring in the air this week in Paris where we arrived after our busy week in London.

Before we leave this majestically beautiful city, we will be meeting with President Francois Mitterrand who will visit President Reagan later this month. I'll tell you about our talk with the French leader in next Sunday's column. Now I hope you will be interested to know what we have learned so far this week.

One of the most pleasant, articulate and informative statesman we have met up to now on this trip was French Foreign Minister Claude Cheysson. Speaking fluent English, he held us — Joe Kingsbury Smith, Bernard Kaplan, our chief European correspondent, and me — spellbound for an hour-and-a-half talking about French history and such present problems as relations with Russia, the vital importance of keeping West Germany "hooked" to the West, the potentially explosive situation in Third World countries and the Middle East caldron, especially the danger of Ayatollah Khomeini's fanatical Iranian religious revolution spreading throughout the Islamic world.

A WARM camaraderie quickly developed between us when we discovered that we had in common the unforgettable experience of entering Paris on the day it was liberated from Nazi occupation 44 years ago this coming August 25th. I told him I came in a jeep with some war correspondent colleagues through the Port (ancient gate) d'Orleans. We were literally mobbed by deliriously happy men, women and pretty girls as we drove toward the Eiffel Tower with the fighting raging just ahead and shooting seemingly going on everywhere.

Mr. Cheysson recalled that he was in the vanguard of French General Philippe Leclerc's Second Armored Division, commanding an American-built tank that was hit by a German shell while moving down the Champs Elysees. Unhurt, he moved out of Paris with his division the next day. Incidentally, the local German commander, General Dietrich von Choltitz, refused to carry out Hiter's orders to blow up and burn Paris, for which he was made a citizen of the city after the war.

From our talks with the foreign minister and General Pierre Gallois, who planned and set up France's nuclear striking force, and our own ambassador, Evan Galbraith, plus other well-informed observers, we learned that here, as in London, there is no fear the existing Soviet leadership would deliberately start a nuclear war. Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko has let Mr. Cheysson know that, despite Moscow's threats of the dire consequences if American medium-range nuclear weapons were deployed in Europe, his government is eager to continue a "dialogue" on improving East-West relations.

HOWEVER, THE French foreign minister is afraid that, over the next ten years, there may be "explosion after explosion" in the poverty-stricken, overpopulated big cities of Third World countries like Brazil. This could lead to a Soviet-American confrontation unless the Western nations provide sufficient economic help to prevent Marxist-oriented revolutions that Moscow is bound to back, he believes.

We also found growing concern over public confidence in America's willingness to risk its own nuclear destruction to protect Western Europe. The French are particularly worried about the impact of this feeling on West Germany. It's feared that what was described to us as a "neutral nationalism" could easily develop there if American troops should be withdrawn or sharply reduced in number, or if more doubt arises about the permanence of American nuclear protection. In that event, the French believe the great danger would be that the West Germans might be tempted by a Soviet offer of unification with East Germany in some form of confederation. In exchange, united Germany would have to agree to a Finland-type neutrality. The Russians probably would sweeten the proposition with promises of new markets and jobs for skilled German workers in the communist bloc.

SINCE IT IS considered economically impossible for Western Europe to build up sufficient nuclear and conventional forces to defend itself, Mr. Cheysson feels that, if a future crisis is to be averted in Germany, there must be no "uncoupling" of the defense link with America.

We also found General Gallois gloomier than on earlier occasions about the way NATO is drifting. He, too, feels Western Europeans are continuing to lose confidence that America would risk becoming a nuclear target in order to defend them. While there has been a lot of talk recently about the Europeans defending themselves, he sees little realistic prospect of it.

Henry Kissinger gets a pretty low grade from this French air force general for suggesting that the Europeans should start their own negotiations with the Russians to limit tactical nuclear weapons on this continent. Practically speaking, as he pointed out, that would mean the French alone. Britain has no tactical nuclear weapons and West Germany, by international treaty, signed away its rights to nuclear weapons 20 years ago.

Thatcher's daughter says keys to Downing Street aren't lost

LONDON (AP) — Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's daughter, Carol, denied Saturday that the keys to 10 Downing Street, the British leader's official residence, were lost when her handbag was stolen.

A spokesman for Mrs. Thatcher's office mistakenly said Friday that the keys to No. 10, one of the world's most famous front doors, were in the handbag. That led Labor lawmaker Tom Torney to denounce "this grave and astonishing lapse of security.

"We know that police maintain a continuous guard at No. 10, but there is no sense whatever in making life any simpler for some crank determined to get inside," the legislator said.

"I don't have any keys to No. 10," Miss Thatcher said in a radio interview. "The handbag contained keys to the family house in Chelsea but luckily not the keys to my car."

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — Boxer Tim Witherspoon spent some expensive time in the ring while he was winning the world heavyweight championship.

SEATTLE (AP) — Actor Barry Williams, best known for his role in television's "Brady Bunch," will star in a movie called "The Obsession of Ted Bundy."

Bundy, formerly of Tacoma, is on Florida's death row while his appeals on three murder convictions move through the courts. Part of the movie will be filmed in the Seattle area this summer, says the state Motion Picture Bureau.

Bundy was convicted of the 1978 murder-rape of a 12-year-old girl in Lake City, Fla., and the slayings of two women students at Florida State University also in 1978.

He also had been charged with killing a vacationing Michigan nurse in Colorado and was convicted of kidnapping in Utah.

Bundy was also a prime suspect, though never charged, in a string of murders in Washington state of college-age women in the mid-1970s. Six bodies were eventually found.

AUSTIN NOTEBOOK

New water plan has ring of old one

By BILL KIDD
Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — "Water is vital to sustaining the people of Texas and their economy...To delay the full dvelopment of our water resources will place a burden upon the future of Texas from which it might never recover."

Speaker Gib Lewis might have said it to the Texas Water Conservation Association meeting in Dallas last month when he outlined his proposal for meeting Texas' water development needs.

That quote, however, is from the introduction to the 1968 Texas Water Plan, which currently is undergoing revision by the Department of Water Resources.

In that introduction, it's also stated that "since Texas does not have enough water within its boundaries to meet all its needs beyond 1985 it will be necessary to seek supplementary water from outside its borders."

And it goes on to talk about bringing water from the Mississippi River "in order to meet our requirements after 1985."

That plan to bring water from the Mississippi brewed up a storm of opposition to the plan, and the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, after studying the proposal, finally concluded that the idea might be possible from an engineering standpoint, but not from a political or economic one.

Department of Water Resources, in its revision of the plan, hasn't abandoned the idea of bringing water in from outside Texas, but has been downplaying the idea, despite insistence of some groups that outside water will be needed.

But the latest battles over water legislation have focused more on the issue of maintaining freshwater inflows to bays and estuaries.

In 1983, an effort was made to pass a package of water legislation which included additional funding for water development and water quality projects, provisions for water conservation requirements, and protecting bays and estuaries.

It was that last item that appeared to hang up approval of the package, after some river authorities indicated thier unhappiness over the prospect of having to relaease water to coastal areas without any assurance they would be paid for such releases.

DWR recently unveiled its own version of such legislation, and the reaction to that indicates that despite efforts by a special legislative committee, there's no guarantee that the next attempt to put together a set of water measures will be any more successful than the last effort.

Sen. Carlos Truan, D-Corpus Christi, who has been increasingly vocal on his concern over environmental matters, charged DWR's proposal is "somewhere between a joke and a fraud."

"The good news," he said, "...is that the water development crowd seems to have finally gotten the message that senators and representatives with coastal constituencies are determined to guaranteee protection for our bays and estuaries. The bad news is that they think they can bamboozle us with style instead of substance."

Truan contends the bill would eliminate the requirement to maintain the "historical productivity" of those waters, as had been proposed, and speaks only of maintaining "productivity," and would allow inflows to be stopped at the discretion of DWR.

That could include, he argues, situations "when some river authority is having financial problems and needs to sell some water that Mother Nature intended to flow downstream."

Truan's argument illustrates one viewpoint on the inflows issue: that the water going to the bays and estuaries would continue to flow there, were it not for the construction of reservoirs upstream.

Therefore, he argues, those who build the reservoirs must make provisions to maintain the coastal waters.

But the dam builders argue that once they construct facilities and capture the water, that water belongs to them, and that if it is to be released, then someone has the obligation to pay for it.

Lewis has attempted to defuse the situation by saying that the legislation he's proposing will recognize the needs of the coastal waters and suggests that the state could pay for releases.

That suggestion has drawn opposition in the past on grounds that there's no reason for the state to pay for water which belongs to the state and with limited funds available, there's been reluctance by legislators to go that route.

Still, despite the continued clashes, legislators are trying to find a solution.

"I've been wrong so often," one says, "that I hesitate to say that I'm hopeful. But I am hopeful."

'Moulin Rouge' next film on museum's bill

From Staff Reports

The Museum of the Southwest's film series, "Tribute," continues March 15 with "Moulin Rouge," director John Huston's vigorous study of the celebrated artist Henri de Toulouse-Lautrec.

The Tribute Series was planned in conjunction with the Museum's "Alfred Morang: A Retrospective Exhibition," on display at the Museum through April 8.

"One of the interesting occurances in researching Alfred Morang for the exhibit was the great tales that have sprung up about his life," says Anne Sherburn, development and public relations officer for the Museum. "It was hard to find people to talk objectively about his days in Santa Fe, especially the final years.

"This mystique that has surrounded Morang since his tragic death in a fire at his studio got the staff thinking about how the media and art historians tend to dramatize the lives of artists. We thought we'd bring attention to this with the Tribute Series."

"Moulon Rouge" successfully captures the atmosphere of Paris' art district, Montmartre, and its colorful characters. The cast includes Jose Ferrer as Lautrec, Zsa Zsa Gabor, Suzanne Flon and Collete Marchand. Showtime for this Academy award winning film is 7:30 p.m. in the Living Room at the Museum.

"The award-winning movie, 'Lust for Life,' is a fitting conclusion to our Tribute Series," Ms. Sherburn says. "Vincent Van Gogh and his tormented life is probably one of the best known and popular stories about an artist told today."

Director Vincente Minnelli captures the friendship between Van Gogh and Paul Gauguin in a beautifully photographed film. The characters of Van Gogh and Gauguin are skillfully developed and portrayed by Kirk Douglas and Anthony Quinn. Supporting cast members are James Donald, Pamela Brown and Everett Sloan. This film will be shown March 29 at 7:30 p.m. at the Museum

Director hated famous scene

LOS ANGELES (AP) — One of the most famous bits in movie lore, the scene in "Now Voyager" where Paul Henreid lights two cigarettes and hands one to Bette Davis, was hated by the director and very nearly cut from the film.

Henreid, who just turned 76, is probably best remembered for "Casablanca," and is the only surviving star from that classic film.

Lighting two cigarettes was something Henreid did as he and his wife took Sunday afternooon drives around Los Angeles. He simply did it while filming a scene with Miss Davis in the 1942 movie. But director Irving Rapper hated it and wanted it cut from the movie.

Crowning accomplishment

Kody Newman is at home on the range and is a star among youngsters in livestock shows. She won the Triple Crown Steer Award by showing three grand champion calves in Houston, Fort Worth and San Antonio this year and pursed almost a quarter million dollars.

She's steering fine course

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

STANTON — At 14, Kody Newman is just a little ol' blondish red-haired country girl from the plains of Courtney.

But she's not poor in spirit or cents.

Three steers bred and raised on her parents' ranch won Texas' top three livestock shows in Houston, San Antonio and Fort Worth this year. And one of the lot, a Chianina-Angus calf named EF, won the World Championship Steer Award in Denver, Colo.

Kody is a rarity. She is Texas' first winner of the Triple Crown Steer Award for having the grand champion steers in the state's three biggest livestock shows in one season.

"I couldn't believe it," she said of the Triple Crown. "Nobody has ever done that before."

The highlight of her livestock showings from mid-January in Denver to early March in Houston was in the prestigious Houston Livestock Show & Rodeo.

"Everybody's goal is to win Houston," she said.

And so she did in the body and form of a 1,245-pound Limousin-cross calf named Ringer, which Red Adair, the renowned fighter of oilfield fires, bought at a record bid of $150,000 or at a fraction more than $120.48 per pound on the hoof. Adair is donating Ringer to the Veterans Administration Hospital.

"He was butchered Monday for a carcass contest," said her father, Tommy Newman. He said all three steers "should have a good (choice) carcass on them."

EARLIER in the season, Kody, an eighth-grade student at Stanton, exhibited other grand champions.

—Roller, a 1,235-pound Maine-Anjou calf, won the San Antonio Livestock Exposition in mid-February. He commanded $36,000. Roller's new owner, Burkett's (Beer) Distributing Co. of San Antonio, is selling chances on the steer, proceeds from sale will be donated to the Future Farmers of America chapters and 4-H Clubs in the San Antonio area. "He eventually will be killed," Newman said.

—EF, a 1,250-pound Chianina-Angus steer named after the EF Hutton stock brokerage firm, was judged the grand champion calf in the Southwestern Exposition & Fat Stock Show in Fort Worth in late January and early February. The Fort Worth Star-Telegram bought EF for $45,000. In Denver, EF won the $5,000 futurity prize as World Champion calf.

Though Ringer, Roller and EF are different breeds, the three had their Newman heritage in common. They were born on the Newman Ranch in June 1982.

"They all came out of the same cow herd," said Newman, a 42-year-old rancher who runs 180 mother cows and oversees 12 sections of range and farm land in Martin County. "That's not a large cow herd."

"If one man put them together, they are going to look alike even though they are different breeds," he said.

Since he has an established cow herd, Newman seeks out vigorously virile bulls to breed the cows.

"YOU CAN BUY one bull that will serve 50 cows," he said. "Or you can buy a cow herd to fit the bull." Being practical, Newman goes after the bull. "You buy the bull to fit the cow herd; it's cheaper that way."

Champion cattle aren't born. They have to be bred, fed, nurtured, conditioned, groomed, pampered. "But it helps if they are born (of good stock)," he observed.

The whole Newman family made the trips to Houston and to the other shows.

"I don't think there's anything close to it (the Houston show) as far as prestige and turnout," said Newman. All told, 1,420 calves were in the show, but 160 were sifted (culled out) prior to the judging.

"The odds (for winning) were bad."

Before the three steers went on the road to Houston, Fort Worth and San Antonio, two of them were shown in the Martin County Livestock Show in Stanton. In the county show, Ringer got tagged the grand champion steer, Kody's heifer was judged a grand champion, and Roller only stood in fourth place.

"He wasn't really ready," Newman said of the Maine-Anjou steer. "An old steer has got to learn how to stand, turn around, look behind and see what's going on."

Parrot fever possibilities still clouded

By RICHARD ORR
Staff Writer

Is there a parrot fever problem in Midland or not?

The answer is obscured in a cloud of bureaucracy and the difficulty of diagnosing the disease — both in birds and humans.

A month ago, former Midland animal control Director Dalton Byerly told state health officials in Lubbock of an anonymous phone call he received from a woman complaining about a sick bird she had purchased at a local pet shop.

Although Lubbock authorities followed through with a call to Chief Sanitarian Don Goodrum of the city health department, they took no action because the report had not been confirmed by a veterinarian and the woman hadn't said that she or any members of her family were ill.

Because of those factors, said Goodrum, he called local pet shops and determined to his satisfaction that their birds did not have the disease.

Dr. Bill Rosser of the state health department said while a Midland veterinarian who does work for a local pet shop had reported "one case" of parrot fever "some months ago," the vet couldn't find any other cases of it and "didn't think the problem was serious."

But the vet had gone ahead and put the store's birds on medicated feed "just to be on the safe side," said Rosser, adding:

"Parrot fever is very, very common in birds — especially parrots. It crops up in the commercial breeding and pet shop industries. Controlling it is almost impossible. Medicated feed and good sanitation is the best way. But there is no routine surveillance of pet shops."

Last month, an eastside woman paid a $300 fine after pleading guilty to selling smuggled Painted Buntings to a Midland pet store. Painted Buntings are among the many bird species that can have or carry parrot fever.

"There's a tremendous traffic in illegal birds (which escape the quarantine requirements placed on legal imports), Rosser noted. "Parrot fever does affect humans and can have serious implications for humans. But the bottom line is that there have been no complaints about a human health problem in Midland."

One reason for that may lie in the fact that parrot fever is often misdiagnosed because it produces symptoms closely associated with flu and pneumonia.

"It's an infectious illness that's airborne on the dustlike particles of bird feces and basically attacks the lungs," said a Midland microbiologist who asked not to be identified. "You have to take precautions when handling birds or cleaning cages.

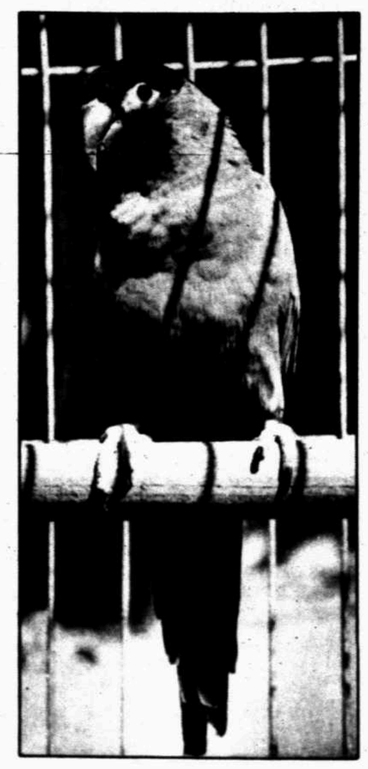

"The symptoms include fever, cough, headaches and a lack of appetite. The basic treatment is antibiotics, but it depends on the proper diagnosis. Untreated, it can be fatal — although it's not considered an extreme health hazard to the general population. The greatest risk is to pet shop employees and people who own or breed birds."

The symptoms in birds include emaciation, lethargy, respiratory distress, diarrhea, gray or rust-colored feces and a puslike discharge from the eyes and nostrils. The disease is found primarily in parrots, parakeets, canaries and cockatoos.

The 1979 edition of "Principles and Practice of Infectious Disease," however, notes that infected birds can lack symptoms and still transmit the disease to humans. Human to human transmission is rare, though.

The book goes on to say that "long-term contact with birds isn't necessary" to acquire the disease.

Parrots aren't the only creatures that contract parrot fever. So do canaries, parakeets, cockatoos and humans. Although most people recover from the disease, 118 deaths were recorded in the United States last year.

Complaints 'name of the game'

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Assistant City Editor

No matter the country, local government doesn't seem to change. It's complaints from citizens that take up much of the elected officials' time.

George Dickinson, a councillor from Newcastle-Upon-Tyne in England, talked about his country's style of government during a visit here last week with a Midland family. And in presenting a medal to Mayor G. Thane Akins, the two compared local governments.

The silver medal commemorated the opening of Newcastle's Metro Bridge which is part of their subway system. "Every bridge being opened in Newcastle has been opened from time immemorial by a member of the royal family," said Dickinson.

At age 63, Dickinson took an early retirement from his company which made generators. For 10 years he had helped to get people from his Liberal Party elected. Now, he decided, was his turn to serve.

Running for local office takes on a flavor of "facing" the issues. And it's all done on the party ticket, unlike the city council elections here which aren't based on party.

Explaining the differences in England's three major parties, Dickinson said he is a Liberal; Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher leads the Conservatives; and Labor is on the left. "I'm in the middle," he said. It's not the majority party, and when Dickinson sought the seat of county councillor, it meant a lot of campaigning.

"We don't do telephone canvassing," he said. "We put out leaflets and we knock on doors."

And with property taxes in Newcastle ranking the highest in Great Britain, Dickinson said usually the first question he got focused on when the taxes would be lowered.

With more than 1 million residents in the Newcastle area, Dickinson represents a 12 square mile area on the Tyne and Wear County Council. And he gets his share of telephone calls with complaints. "We go out and check it out," he said.

Some of Neweastle's problems may have sounded familiar to Midland's mayor: bad road conditions and making ends meet on the public transportation system.

With the last bridge on the subway to open at the end of March, Dickinson said there has been a larger ridership than anticipated. However, they allow people over the age of 65 and those with disabilities to ride free.

"This will cost us 21 million pounds ($30 million) to cover these concessionary fares. We try to break even," he said.

The cost of riding the subway from one end to the other (the county is 208 square miles) is 70 pence, or one pound 40 round trip. Translated into U.S. dollars, it would be about $2.

And his salary as an elected official doesn't amount to much, also familiar to Midland councilmen. They receive $25 a month. Dickinson receives 15 pounds a day for attending meetings. That sometimes can mean, he said, that he goes to four meetings in one day. Or if a meeting lasts half a day, he doesn't get the full payment.

GARY OTT

It matters not if they are large, small or medium-sized. I love them all. Forget the long lines at the check-out counter, the hassle of never being able to find your favorite brand of green beans or the fact many stores all but require a blood sample before cashing a check. These minor inconveniences all pale when compared to the joys experienced as my cart and I take a leisurely stroll up and down the aisles of our favorite market.

And, I should emphasize every aisle. Even if my shopping list consists of only three or four items I still find a tour of the entire building to be in order. True, part of that ritual is based on the fact that I can never remember where the products are located, but even if I could, the grand tour would still be conducted.

There is a certain charm to a grocery store. Indeed, it ranks right behind airports and bus depots when it comes to people-watching. You get the perfect mix. There are the elderly who carefully calculate each purchase, the young who shop with reckless abandon and the middle-aged who look thoroughly bored with the entire procedure.

Likewise, there are certain behavorial quirks all shoppers possess. For example, it is virtually impossible (as I have learned from years of researching this matter) for a person to pass the avacadoes without stopping and spending two or three minutes squeezing each one. Of course, nine out of 10 times this person will move on without buying any, but that's beside the point. The fact remains, he looks like he knows what he's doing. This same person also will handle each and every T-bone steak in the stack before choosing the one that was on top to begin with.

Perhaps this wasted motion is our way of proving to others that we are conscientious shoppers.

Still, the most enjoyable place to be in any supermarket is the check-out counter. Not only does this afford you the opportunity to sneak a glance at the latest Hollywood scandals as told by the National Enquirer, but it also lets you examine people's horrified expressions as they pay their three-digit food bill.

Many people (usually those getting ready to pay a three-digit food bill) show great disdain when getting stuck behind a woman paying for her groceries with food stamps. Not me. What does perturb me, however, is being forced to stand behind an obviously well-to-do woman who spends 15 minutes bickering with the poor clerk over whether or not a 25-cent coupon has expired. The woman can buy the entire store and the rest of us have to endure a one-sided argument on the value of coupons.

It is also interesting to note what different people buy, and from that, estimate how many family members will be partaking of the food.

Predictably, bachelors are the easiest to peg. Their carts overflow with TV dinners, hamburger meat, chips and plenty of beer.

Single women, on the other hand, tend to emphasize vegetables and modestly-priced wine.

Then there are those who are struggling with two carts, both of which are jammed with every conceivable type of food known to man. Either the person, usually a housewife, has 14 growing children or she is supplementing the Pentagon budget by feeding the U.S. Marines.

Then, again, it may be her way of entertaining a supermarket junkie like myself.

In the Stanton show, Kody's two steers and the heifer won feed-and-expense money — $1,160. EF, who had just won the Denver show, wasn't entered. He was resting up from the World Championship competition.

Kody, who helped groom, feed and raise the champion calves, exhibited the Newman steers. Sometimes the show steers are tranquilized a tad so that they won't be too nervous, hyperactive or onerous.

"If you get too much (tranquilizer) in them, they just mope around," Kody said. "You want them to be perky."

KODY HAS EXHIBITED in 4-H livestock shows since she was 9.

"I showed lambs — never showed steers — when I was a kid," Newman said. "My wife (the former Marilyn Sale of the Courtney community northwest of Stanton) showed steers."

"I just couldn't get it done," Kevin said. "Tried. I showed reserve champions at San Antonio, Houston and Chicago and a grand champion at Odessa." The athletic Kevin, a former running back for the Stanton High School Buffalo football team, was named to the All West Texas and All South Plains football teams in 1981.

In school, Kody runs the 100-meter dash (in 13.6 seconds last year), the sprint relays and plays basketball.

About the house, she has dogs and cats to play with, about 15 goats to contend with, and used to have llamas, "but we got rid of them."

IN 1983, SHE WON the world championship in optional roping in the American Junior Rodeo Association (AJRA). In 1982, she was the AJRA reserve champion.

In the living room of the spacious Newman ranch house, spruced up on the outside with live oak trees, is a framed portrait of the Western movie actor, John Wayne.

"He's a national hero," said Mrs. Newman. "It just kind of fits in our business."

Kody said it was "hard" to give up the prize steers, particularly her favorite, EF, whom, her mother noted, Kody thought was "so sweet," had a gentle temperament and "did anything she wanted."

"I guess it (the prize money) helps a little bit," Kody said of the hurt of losing the calves. "It's like taking the leash off your dog and saying, 'Goodbye, he's yours.'"

Kody hasn't decided exactly what she'll do with all the prize money. But her mother said it'll be invested for her, will be used for her education and possibly will help set her up in a business.

Kody, who turned 14 on Jan. 10, had an idea.

"I'll save it," she said, "and when I get old enough, I can buy me a car."

England's council plan outlined my Texas visitor

His trip to the U.S. started almost 20 years ago. He and his wife, Iris, befriended a young American woman visiting in their town in the summer of 1965. Several years later, the American woman married Robert Prentice and they moved to Midland. But the friendship with the English couple and their daughters grew, and trips back and forth resulted.

With his genteel English accent, the councillor explained he was born on the River Tyne in the Newcastle area. Just as certain Londoners are called Cockneys, Dickinson is called a Geordie. "It's steeped in mystery as to how the name came about."

But the language spoken by the Geordies is not easily understood. Dickinson explained Newcastle is on the coast, directly across from the Danish countries. For many years, residents grew up on Danish ham and bacon and butter. "Danish butter is still the most popular in our area," he said.

And like a Midland city councilman, Dickinson has been invited to numerous social events. Last summer, he attended a "garden party" at Buckingham Palace at the request of the queen.

Flashing the invitation stamped with the queen's insignia, Dickinson denied all reports that Princess Diana might be cold to outsiders. "Oh, she can't stop talking. Everywhere she goes she stops and talks to people. The officials have to keep pushing her to stay on time," he laughed. "Now, if you had asked me about Princess Anne..."

Unlike Midland's council which is under no control by the state or national government, Dickinson may see his job disappear next year. Mrs. Thatcher has ordered all metropolitan councils in the country to be abolished by May 1985 on the theory they are spending too much money.

Various duties will pass down to the city's councils, giving them more power, he said.

It also means they will be listening to more complaints.

Even "momentary contact with an environment in which an infected bird had been present previously" can result in human contamination.

"About 20 percent of the patients cannot recall any prior contact with birds. Birds are relativley resistant to re-infection, but second cases in humans — especially pet shop employees — have been described.

"All cases of (parrot fever) should be reported promptly to local public health officials." By law, veterinarians are required to report the disease.

Although human cases of the illness are rare and it "generally goes away by itself," said Dr. Rosser, the disease can be deadly.

A total of 118 deaths were recorded nationwide in 1983, according to "Morbidity and Mortality Weekly Report," which is published by the Centers For Disease Control in Atlanta.

The Azalia Trails trip will be March 30 through April 2. The group will travel by YMCA van to Tyler, where the annual Azalia Trails festival is held. The cost is $195.

Membership dues for the Midland YMCA Travel Club is $10 a year and activities are planned for each monthly meeting. Other trips scheduled for this year include Fort Davis/Big Bend, the Texas Play in Canyon, Ruidoso, N.M., the Sonora Caverns at Sonora, and Reno, Nev.

Those who qualify for membership and are interested may call Marty at the Central Y, 682-2551, for more information.

Softball registration to begin

Registration for Pee Wee Softball will begin Tuesday at all Midland YMCA branches.

The program, for boys and girls in kindergarten through third grade, emphasizes fun and participation for all children. Every child plays and parents are encouraged to participate in the field along side their children to offer coaching tips and support.

A fee of $10 will be charged for YMCA members and $20 for nonmembers. Players need only a standard baseball glove and tennis shoes. Balls, bats, bases and T-shirts are provided by the Y.

Registration will continue through March 24. For more information, call 682-2551.

Alamo offering Aqua Aerobics

Water adds buoyancy, which aids in preventing muscle, bone or joint injury, and the extra resistance not possible with land aerobics.

Designed for all fitness levels, the class will meet from 10:15 to 11 a.m. Tuesdays and Thursdays. No swimming experience is necessary.

For more information, contact Judy Reuter at 682-2551.

He practices what he professes

By RHONDA RIGENHAGEN

Is Russell Johnson:

a) A professor at Lee High School?

b) A professor at The University of Texas of the Permian Basin?

c) "Professor" on Gilligan's Island?

After an 18-year hiatus from public schools, the man who teaches teachers to teach thought a year "in the trenches" was in order. So he took a leave of absence from teaching strategies and methods to education majors at UT[illegible] to teach English at LHS.

"Being out of the classroom for 18 years, there's a need for me to refamiliarize myself with the day-to-day things a teacher needs to do," he said.

Johnson had several reasons for making the switch. "I think I have a pretty good grasp of the theoretical aspect of education," he said, "but I believe that this will give me an insight into 1980s problems and situations (in the classroom), which are different from what they were in the 1960s. I also think it will give whatever I have to say a bit more credibility."

But he had more in mind than simply teaching English. He made arrangements for two high school teachers to take over his classes.

"Often times public school teachers think this is the "real" world and there is no other real world. A university is a real world too. We just have different students and different methods.

"Now they are getting an insight into experiencing the program from a teacher's point of view. Before they were the students. The walk around the desk is a long walk. It gives them a perspective into some of the problems we have teaching teachers."

But his ultimate goal is to implement a cooperative program between the Midland Independent School District and UTPB. He would like education majors and classroom teachers to work together long before the student teaching internship.

"In order to train teachers properly a model other than the apprenticeship model is needed," he asserted.

"Student teaching is when a student teacher works with the classroom teacher for 12 weeks and at the end of that time is either certified or not. Too often most of them never get to the practical stages until they student teach. We feel we'd like to move toward a different model, similar to what they do in medicine."

He would like to set up a type of "teaching hospital" where students intern for a year, working with classroom teachers in theory and in practice.

Such a program will benefit both the university and the school district, he feels. "I think the programs we are trying to deal with cooperatively will strengthen both institutions."

"It's been way more fun than I thought it would be," he said of his job as a high school teacher. "Public school kids are different. I have found them to be a lot of fun.

"It takes a variety of techniques and time and patience (to teach high school students) that you don't have to have at a university," he continued. "I have to get the kids to think, rather than just cover material. I have had to learn how to think in a different way all over again. In order for me to be as effective as I'd like I'd have to work for another year or two."

He said the hours he works now are comparable to those he put in at UTPB, but MISD pays better.

LETTER FROM COLLEGE

MC's contact hours up slightly

By H.A. TUCK

Contact hours rather than headcount are used to determine how Texas community colleges are gaining. For the 1984 spring semester, Midland College had a very slight decrease in its headcount from the 1983 spring semester, from 3,266 to 3,227. But the college's contact hours increased by about two percent. The spring 1983 contact hour total was 606,480 and this spring it jumped to 621,264. That indicates that students are taking more classes.

This spring, the enrollment in academic classes decreased about one percent, while they increased in vocational courses about eight percent. Approximately 59 percent of the enrollment was in academic courses and about 41 percent in vocational. This was a two percent shift from last spring, when it was 61 percent academic and 39 percent vocational.

The report, compiled by registrar and associated dean of students Dee Windsor, shows that 2,767 Midland College students are from Midland County, 387 come from other counties in Texas, 57 students are from out of state and 16 are from other countries.

Many students in the last two categories live in Midland but haven't satisfied the residentce requirements to be considered as in-district.

Male-female ratio continues about even, with 1,565 males and 1,662 females enrolled.

After 14 basketball games in the building last week, Chap Center director Mike Stevens and his staff probably are pleased to have something else going on in the building other than basketball. They've hosted boys' and girls' regional high school tournaments, a Chaparral conference play-off game, and both men's and women's junior college regional tourneys.

Don't forget that Ronnie Milsap is returning to Chaparral Center Friday, March 23, for an 8 p.m. concert. Tickets are available at Chap Center box office, Endless Horizons in Midlnd and Odessa, and at Record Bar in Odessa.

Another in a series of excellent exhibits is on display in the McCormick Gallery, Allison Fine Arts Building. This one is the Texas Fine Arts Association's national touring show, which includes works from artists throughout the United States. MC art instructor Warren Taylor has two paintings in the show and UTPB's Pam Price has one.

The gallery is open Sundays from 1-5 p.m., Monday through Thursday from 8 a.m.-10 p.m., Friday from 8 a.m.-5 p.m., and Saturday from 10 a.m.-5 p.m. The show closes March 28.

Spring concert of the MC Jazz Ensemble is scheduled for 7:30 p.m. Thursday in the Allison Fine Arts Building recital hall. Dr. Don Grant will conduct the group as it performs a variety of old and new jazz compositions.

The public is invited to attend and it's free, of course.

Few died of scurvy in Civil War

British physician James Lind found in 1747 that scurvy, a vitamin C deficiency disease, could be cured with citrus fruits. But his findings were only slowly accepted, especially by armies, and in 1870, troops in the Franco-Prussian war were still subject to large outbreaks.

Some 30,000 men were stricken with scurvy in the American Civil War, but dietary treatment held the death toll below 400.

Exes honor five top seniors

AUSTIN — Five top high school seniors have been named recipients of the 1984 Texas Excellence Award for Scholarship and Leadership given annually by the Ex-Students' Association of the University of Texas.

The winners of the $10,000 award, announced by Roy Vaughan, executive director of the association, are: Douglas Andrew Chin, Stephen F. Austin High School, Austin; Joseph Nathaniel Chorley, Klein Forest High School, Houston; William Douglass Dorland, Texas Senior High School, Texarkana; Kirk David Launius, Hillcrest High School, Dallas; and John Michael Scott, Edna High School, Edna.

The five competed with over 1,000 applicants from all over Texas, all of whom were in the top five percent of their class and had demonstrated leadership ability.

The purpose was to allow interaction among students and engineers from various disciplines and obtain entrance information on Texas colleges and universities.

TAME is an organization for minorities with goals to increase awareness of engineering among public school teachers and administrators, minority parents and students as a career opportunity. LHS chapter sponsors are Mobil Oil Corp. and ARCO Oil and Gas Co. Persons interested in membership may contact S.C. Disher at 684-8211 extension 487.

Two seminars on aging scheduled

Dr. C. Umhau Wolf, adult educator in aging and author of "Ten to Get Ready," a book on pre-retirement planning, will present the programs. The Rev. Dwight Anderson, LSST vice president for residential services, will assist. Anderson is a clinically-trained pastor, licensed nursing home administrator and certified speciafist in aging.

The programs will involve lectures, discussions and audio-visual presentations. The format will be informal and group participation will be comfortably encouraged. Handouts and other resources will be available. Refreshments also will be provided.

Initiated by concerned parents, the group is not affiliated with any organizaton.

Local attorneys and psychologists will discuss legal aspects and peer stress and pressure to drink.

Midland Public Schools

American historian and philosopher Henry Adams once said: "A teacher affects eternity; he can never tell where his influence stops." That's true. In fact, teachers are second only to parents in their influence on students' career choices, inspiration and encouragement of talent development and instilling in students a recognition of self-worth and the desire to learn.

HOW TO WRITE A GOOD WANT AD

1. IT'S ALWAYS BEST to start your advertisement with the name of the article or service you have to offer. If you have an apartment or room for rent or property for sale, it's better to start your advertisement with the location.
2. BE CLEAR. Readers react more quickly and favorably when given complete or definite information. One of the most important considerations of any advertisement is to include the price.
3. MAKE IT EASY for the reader prospect to reach you. ALWAYS INSERT your telephone number or your name and address. If you do not have regular hours, state a preferred time to have prospects contact you.
4. THE GREATEST READER RESPONSE can be secured for your advertisement by using consecutive insertions. Play safe. The thrifty 15 day plan is best and costs less per insertion. There are also special monthly rates for those who want to keep their name and offers before the public each and every day. Cancel when you get results, the charge will be the rate earned at the time of cancellation.
5. PLACE YOURSELF in the reader's position and ask yourself what you would like to know about your offer. The answer you give will make a good classified ad.
6. CLASSIFIED READERS ARE already interested in buying used or new merchandise. These people have the money and are in the market to buy. Give them every advantage you can with good ad copy.
7. WANT ADS THAT FAIL do so not through any lack of readership, but because they are often quickly worded and do not contain enough information to get prompt action.
8. TO PLACE YOUR ADVERTISEMENT in The Midland Reporter-Telegram, where you reach the active Classified market,

CELEBRATE GIRL SCOUT WEEK

MAR. 11-17

Since its founding 72 years ago, Girl Scouting has assisted young women in becoming involved, vital citizens of the community, imparting values and encouragement that last a lifetime.

Through a variety of projects and services, Girl Scouts develop respect for others and an awareness of themselves as individuals with unique capabilities. Girl Scouts have helped our community in hundreds of ways.

We want to salute the Girl Scouts and their fine achievements over the years. Let us recognize and support them in years ahead! Happy Anniversary to all those involved in this fine organization.

The Permian Basin Girl Scout Counsel
And Has Nearly 3,000 Girl Scouts Members
(6 TO 17 YEARS OLD) And 200 Registered Adult Leaders

Part Of A Group
It starts in Brownies, where a young girl feels a sense of belonging. As she goes on to Scouting, her contribution to society grows, as she herself grows into adulthood.

Honoring Leaders
A troop leader is a valuable part of a Girl Scout's education...always there to lend a guiding hand, along with words of wisdom. On this birthday, we heartily salute them!

She's a Winner!
A Girl Scout is a very special person. She's full of enthusiasm and optimism, meeting challenges with the Girl Scout spirit. They are an asset to our community, and we're proud.

Always Learning

"I'VE SEEN EVERY APARTMENT COMMUNITY IN MIDLAND."

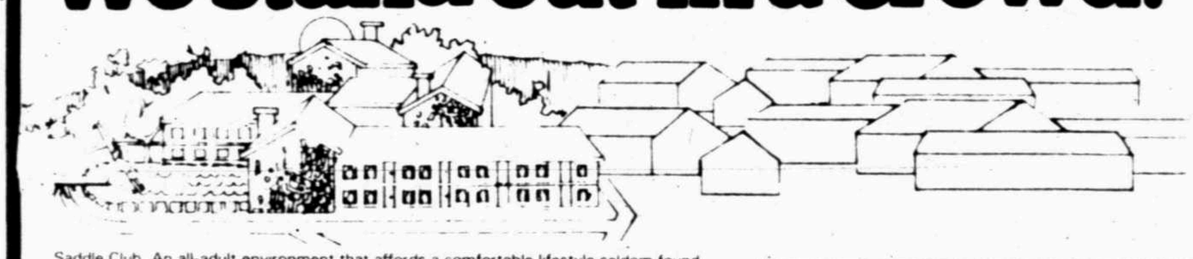

"My feet hurt and my patience was wearing thin. I'd seen every apartment community in Midland, and none met my standards... until I discovered Oakridge Apartments. Just a little off the beaten trail, Oakridge has the quiet, private location I'd been looking for. Plus all the other extras I'd just about given up on. Like new construction, nice, friendly neighborhood appeal and superior amenities—indoor spa and sauna, clubhouse and pool, to name just a few—Oakridge is the greatest. I should know, I've seen them all."

1- and 2-bedroom and 2-bedroom studio apartment homes are available now. Take Loop 250 to N. Holiday Hill Road and look for the giant American flag.

DAY'S CARE

Text by Linda Anderson

Finding "the right" day care for children has become a pressing — and a political — issue, because of an increasing rate of mothers entering the job market. Many children, from infancy until the time they are in junior high, are cared for during working hours by someone other than their parents or family members.

Midland boasts many day care centers which cater to different families and needs.

GRACE PRESBYTERIAN CHILD CARE CENTER
5200 W. Illinois

Grace Presbyterian Child Care Center was established about 14 years ago because "at that time there was not a day care west of Midkiff (Street)," according to Pat Rendall, assistant director and program coordinator of the Center.

Mrs. Rendall, who helped establish the Center, said the children are offered music daily and are given programs that stir imagination and creativity.

"We urge the teachers to read to them (children) everyday," she added. The Center's educational program is a "readiness program for starting school. We try to prepare them for kindergarden."

Shirley Hull, director of the center, listed some suggestions for parents interested in finding the best day care for their children. "It should be as much like home as possible, not institutionalized. It should have, hopefully, a relaxed atmosphere. Listen to the way it sounds in the hall, what's going on in all the rooms, not just where your child will be. Listen for yelling. Don't ever announce what time you're coming, just drop in and look in the rooms. See what the children are doing. Look at the people who will actually be the ones taking care of your child. Check for cleanliness and neatness. Look at the physical building and grounds," she said.

Mrs. Rendall added, "The children should be given a good foundation on learning — learning activities their mothers might not have time for. There should be a certain amount of discipline that goes on to prepare them for public schools." She said the Center's teachers try to stress "listen and follow directions" as part of the children's preparation for kindergarten.

The Center provides lunch and two snacks for the children, most of it homemade and not "stuff out of cans," said Mrs. Hull.

Grace Presbyterian Child Care Center is licensed by DHR to care for 153 children, from newborns through fourth graders. This non-profit organization maintains its own building, has no outside financial help and is entirely self-sustaining, Mrs. Hull said.

ANNA DUBOW
Registered Family Day Care Home

Anna Dubow keeps children in her registered family day care home on Midland's west side. She is licensed by the state to keep 12 children, but said she prefers to keep "about six" so she can give each child more individual attention.

"All children are individual with different needs," she said. "I love them all. It takes a lot of patience, a lot of giving, love and understanding because you have to cope with their different temperments."

Mrs. Dubow has a one-room apartment in her back yard that she, her husband Stephen and seventh-grade son Michael have converted into a room just for the children she cares for. She also has a schedule of activities the children follow, which includes a balance of educational programs and play times. The children participate in music and marching, creative projects, puzzles, workbooks, arts and crafts, outdoor play, puppets and free play.

"I notice they like to work, but when they start getting tired it's time to close up the workbooks and relax," Mrs. Dubow said. "I think it's very important for them to learn to associate with each other and have an equal balance of work and play. I don't think they ought to be pushed."

The children help prepare meals by setting the table. In addition to lunch, Mrs. Dubow, whose background includes training in nutrition, provides breakfast and two snacks. Birthdays and other holidays are also celebrated by the group.

Mrs. Dubow said parents picking a registered family home for their children should "make sure it has a fire extinguisher. Make sure the house is clean and all electric outlets are covered. Talk to the person to find out the schedule. Stay long enough to see if each child is getting individual attention — love is very important. There should be some educational activities if the child is old enough. It should be a safe, healthy, happy, loving environment."

Children who stay in Mrs. Dubow's registered home are between the ages of 1-1/2 and 5. "I get really involved with my kids, as if they were my own," she said. "When they do leave (and start school) . . . I miss them."

SALVATION ARMY DAY CARE CENTER
3500 Park Lane

The Salvation Army Day Care Center, a United Way agency, was established five years ago because "the community requested and wanted it," according to Major Bowers of the Salvation Army.

"A United Way committee did a survey and found a need for a day care in this area," said Janie Alcocer, director of the Center.

The day care center, licensed by DHR to care for 125 children ages 2-5, has a current enrollment of 52 children. New enrollees are welcome.

The Salvation Army establishes day care centers wherever there is a need in the country, according to Maj. Bowers. "We're getting into it more and more because there is such a need. This is possibly one of the cheapest in town, price-wise, but we do not give cheap work."

Mrs. Alcocer said although the day care center is not a pre-school, the children come to think of it as "their school."

Some of the educational programs provided for the children include books, tapes and music. Mrs. Alcocer said the children also enjoy the teachers leading them in exercises.

"The children grow by learning," said Maj. Bowers. "They are so eager to learn and that is so important. They are real proud of what they master."

Day care standards set by DHS

By LINDA ANDERSON
Lifestyle Writer

In Midland, as of November 1983, the Texas Department of Human Resources Licensing Division listed about 59 day care centers and 120 registered family homes in Midland.

The Texas DHR defines a day care center as "a child care facility which provides care for more than 12 children under 14 years of age for less than 24 hours a day," according to its publication on "Minimum Standards — Day Care Centers."

The same publication defines registered family home as "a facility that regularly provides care in the caretaker's own residence for not more than six children under 14 years of age, excluding the caretaker's own children, and that provides care after school hours for not more than six additional elementary school siblings of the other children given care.

A group day-care home is "a facility that provides care for seven to 12 children under 14 years of age for less than 24 hours a day."

Day care centers are licensed by the DHR, and must meet the department's standards for: organization and record keeping; enrollment; personnel qualifications; staff-child ratio based on the children's ages; building, grounds and equipment including space, furnishings, and toilet facilities; fire, sanitation and safety; physical health of the children; food service and nutrition; discipline and guidance; and children's activities, both daily and special; etc.

In section 42.052 Certification and Registration, the publication states: "A state-operated child-care facility or child-placing agency must receive certification of approval from the division. The certification of approval must be renewed every two years.

Health and safety procedures and equipment in day care centers are carefully monitored and inspected by DHR and other agencies, such as the health department and the fire department. Centers are required by the DHR to have regular fire drills. Gas appliances, space heaters and gas pipes are checked and approved by the fire marshal or other authority.

The publication further states: "The building, grounds and equipment shall be repaired and maintained to protect the safety of the children." Electrical outlets within the reach of children are required to have safety covers or safety outlets. Electric fans and heaters and window air conditioners must be out of reach of children or have protective safeguards. Stairs and porches higher than two feet off the ground must have child-sized railings. Play areas, both indoor and outdoor, must meet the DHR requirements for safety.

"First aid supplies shall be kept handy in a designated location, out of the children's reach, and a guide to first aid and emergency care shall be posted," is also specified in the publication.

While maintaining discipline in a day care center is important, physical punishment is unacceptable. Appendix V of "Minimum Standards — Day Care Centers," lists several alternatives, including recognition and encouragement of good behavior; "fair and constant rules" taught by example in a relaxed atmosphere; discipline relevant to the behavior; supervision with understanding and firmness; clear directions and guidance appropriate to child's level of understanding; firm prevention of behavior harmful to the child or to others; redirection by giving alternatives; help in understanding why conduct is unacceptable and "what is acceptable in a given situation."

Programs designed to meet different needs

The Salvation Army, a religious-charitable organization, designed the classrooms of its Midland church with a day care center in mind, she added.

The day care center, located in a quiet neighborhood only a few blocks from Midkiff Street, operates on a sliding pay scale. Parents pay according to their capabilities, but there are no income requirements, according to Mrs. Alcocer. Rates are from $25-$40 a week for one child, with a discount for more than one child in the same family.

Mrs. Alcocer suggested parents looking for day care for their children should "Check the ratio to see they don't have more children than they can hande. I would stress cleanliness. Check the attitude of the staff — are they friendly, do they like children?

FIRST PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH CHILD DAY CARE CENTER 801 W. Illinois

Founded in 1972, First Presbyterian Church Child Day Care Center is a non-profit community service project of First Presbyterian Church.

Director Mildred Penney said each day the Center, licensed by DHR to care for 140 children from newborns to 5-year-olds, offers the children arts or crafts, motor skills programs, songs, story time, games, an occasional field trip and conversation or listening time "because each child needs to feel he is listened to."

The Center provides lunch and two snacks for the children, "and those up to 3-years-old get three snacks," Mrs. Penney said. "We try to limit sweets and have fruit as much as possible. We don't feed them breakfast but sometimes we have toast or waffles with juice for a mid-morning snack, not as breakfast but as a supplement. The tiny ones' tummies get empty."

Mrs. Penney said some factors to look for in a day care facility are the methods of discipline. "Visit the center; have unannounced visits, which you have a perfect right to do. Talk to the teachers to see if they are strict and loving, firm but understanding." She said teachers should have a sense of humor. "See if the facility is clean. Do they have things on the playground to play with?

Although the Center is located in the building of First Presbyterian Church, it is "completely self-sufficient," said Mrs. Penney. Many of the teachers have been with the Center for several years, she added.

The Center's waiting list was recently closed because of its length. Parents whose children are on the list wait about 1-1/2 years before the children can be enrolled.

Tongue attracts oral bacteria

Hearst Feature Service

Despite the popularity of brushing and flossing and the countless dollars we spend on mouthwash, billions of bacteria call our mouths home — and our tongues are the welcome mat.

According to Alan Drinnan, professor of oral medicine at the University of Buffalo School of Dentistry, tongue cleaning should be added to an oral hygiene routine, he said in Science Digest's March issue.

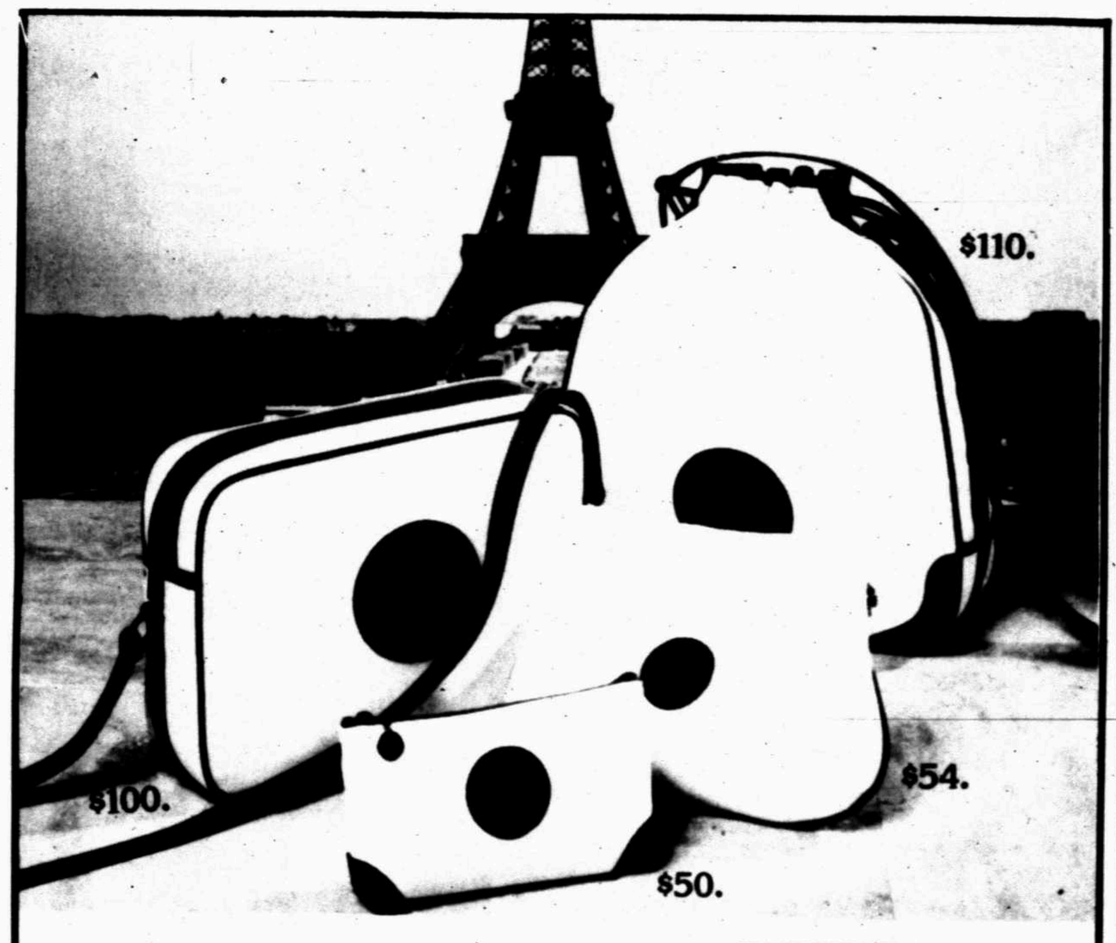

The tongue cleaning procedure cuts down on bacteria and leftover food particles, both implicated in tooth decay, periodontal disease and bad breath.

It is only in the past century that we have neglected our tongue. Throughout the 1700s and 1800s, Europeans used tongue scrapers, often elaborate silver ones. And archeologists have unearthed Roman tongue scrapers dating to A.D. 100.

Have you heard...?

By MARILYN McKNIGHT HARRISON

Never have we attended a birthday party so magnificent as the one given in celebration of Bebe Fisher's three score and ten. Held the evening of March 3 at the Yucca Theatre, the party was attended by approximately 300 friends.

Hundreds of brightly colored balloons, paper flowers and other colorful Mexican decorations created a fiesta-like atmosphere, and luminarios lined the front of the building. Mexican food and drink were served, along with a sombrero-shaped cake. A mariachi band, the Trio Latino, serenaded the honoree and provided background music during the soiree.

Bebe, who has completed nearly three decades of service to Midland Community Theatre as a staff member and volunteer, was saluted via a "This Is Your Life" slide show and by proclamations from Mayor Thane Akins and from the community theatre. In addition, tributes were paid by Bill Heck and Bill Pomeroy with original compositions.

In lieu of gifts, Bebe's friends were asked to jot down their special memories, which will be compiled in a scrapbook along with pictures of the spectacular evening.

Hosting the party were Bebe's four children and spouses, Tom and Jeri Fisher of Midland, Mike Fisher of Houston, John Fisher and his wife Janis Herd of Austin, and Mary and Brent Berry of Midland, assisted by close family friends, Douthea and Bill Shaner.

The out-of-town guests included Bebe's sister Jean and her husband V.E. (Binkey) Heard of Refugio; her sister-in-law Esther (Mrs. Martin) Kelsey of Dallas; former MCT staff members Rick Schiller of Houston and Roger Thomas of Odessa, and past theatre volunteers Rhonda and Randy Hicks of Dallas.

TO CELEBRATE LEAP Year Day, Nancy and Buddy Anguish entertained friends with a theatre party. Approximately 500 persons were treated to a special performance of Midland Community Theatre's current production, "Annie."

Special guests were members of the Texas Opera Theatre company, who had performed "Madame Butterfly" in Midland the previous night.

Festivities got under way prior to show time with a cocktail buffet in the theatre lobby. The play, set during the depression years, inspired the table centerpieces. Two of the large round serving tables were decorated with apple crates, holding arrangements of shiny red apples and flowers, and the other was centered with a floral arrangement in a large soup kettle.

The "Annie" cast, crew and orchestra was invited to join the party for dessert in the lobby following the performance.

MARY PENNEBAKER of Fort Worth and Jim Truitt of Houston, who are planning a spring wedding, were honored at a series of parties in Midland last weekend while visiting her parents, Liz and Bill Pennebaker.

Festivities included a miscellaneous shower on Friday in the home of Elma Jean (Mrs. Richard) Henderson, with Jean Allen and Rita Buckley as cohostesses; a party of Saturday evening given by Katie and Bill Heck in their home, and Sunday brunch at Midland Country Club, hosted by Laulie (Mrs. W.W.) LaForce.

Mary is currently a cost accountant for Datapoint Corporation in Fort Worth. Jim is test manager for Compaq Computer Corporation in Houston. They will be married April 14 in the Houston home of Mary's godparents, former Midlanders Brucie and John Ashmun.

TO HONOR Mary (Mrs. C.S.) Hunter, a grandmother shower was held recently in the home of Jere (Mrs. Bus) Hubbard. Cohostesses for the fun party were Babs (Mrs. Dick) Sevier and Norma Jean (Mrs. Bud) Boles.

Approximately 25 guests, longtime friends of the honoree, presented her with gifts to be kept at her home for the baby's visits. Among them was a baby blanket, which Mary had crocheted for Joan and Pat Baskin's son Bo (who is a good friend of the baby's father) and now will be used for Mary's first grandchild.

The object of all this attention, Matthew Erskine Hunter, was born February 10 to Amy and Barc Hunter in Fort Worth.

IT WAS SO GOOD to see Linden (Mrs. Larry) Kettlewell of Washington, D.C., and to meet her close friend and former roommate Ann Prestidge of Albuquerque. Both young women were in town last weekend for a visit with Linden's parents Katie and Bill Heck, and her brother Doug Heck.

Linden is temporarily residing in Austin, were she serves as executive director of the Reagan-Bush Texas '84 campaign. She is on leave of absence from her post as political director of the Republican National Committee. Also involved in politics, Ann is executive director of the New Mexico Republican Party.

FORMER MIDLANDERS Sue and Everett Sharp of Houston were recent houseguests of Diane and Richard Mendenhall. Their weekend stay was highlighted by informal social courtesies.

The Mendenhalls hosted a party for a few of the Sharps' close friends on Friday night. Guests were Marianne and Will Green, Betty and Dave Miller, Barbara and Frank Schatz, Georgia and Carroll Thomas, Fran and Dr. Joe Hilliard and Patsy and Bill Berry.

The Sharps were entertained on Saturday at a theatre party to "Annie," with dessert afterwards at the Greens. Also enjoying the evening were Ute and Wayne Gibson, the Mendenhalls and the Millers.

"LIFE IN TRANSITION," a conference for adults which was held March 2 and 3 in the First Baptist Church, was led by Dr. Jim Conway and his wife Sally, who is the daughter of Midlanders Altha and Carl Christon. The Conways have written three books on the subject of midlife crisis, which have helped thousands of individuals in the United States and many foreign countries. Dr. Conway also preached both morning services at First Baptist Church last Sunday.

While visiting in Midland the Conways, who reside in Fullerton, California, and Sue and Tom Christon of Stanton helped their parents celebrate their 55th wedding anniversary. Also joining in the special celebration were the Tom Christons' children from Stanton and Oklahoma City.

Dictionary business controversial

By The Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. — Language pundits (1672) and newspaper editors generally gnash (15th century) their teeth when they encounter words such as "prioritize" (1966).

For them, Merriam-Webster Inc.'s recently published Ninth New Collegiate Dictionary, the first American desk dictionary to note the year a word entered the language, has good news and bad news.

The good news is that the -ize ending has been hated since it entered the language in the 1500s. The bad news is that it is here to stay.

Besides noting the dates of many of the 81,000 words listed, Webster's Ninth includes an explanation of the usage of more than 100 controversial words.

In the -ize case, for example, Webster's Ninth has this to say: "The suffix -ize has been productive in English since the time of Thomas Nashe (1567-1601), who claimed credit for introducing it into English to remedy the surplus of monosyllabic words... Nashe (an English satirist and dramatist) noted in 1591 that his coinages in -ize were being complained about, and to this day new words in -ize (finalize) (prioritize) are sure to draw critical fire."

Bah! Humbug! (1751), say the purists.

ANOTHER PET peeve (1910) of guardians of the language is the pronunciation of the word "nuclear." As if reacting to the sound of nails on a blackboard, the experts shudder when they hear "nukular."

The editors who put together Webster's Ninth did not overlook that problem:

"Though disapproved of by many, pronunciations ending in kular have been found in widespread use among educated speakers including scientists, lawyers, professors, congressmen, U.S. Cabinet members and at least one U.S. president and one vice president. While most common in the United States, these pronunciations have also been heard from British and Canadian speakers."

Frederick C. Mish, editor in chief of Webster's Ninth, says dating the words was an awesome task that took six full-time researchers two years to complete. It was done, he says, by searching through scores of historical and often obscure dictionaries as well as daily, weekly and monthly periodicals and Meriam-Webster's citation files.

CITATIONS, MISH explained, are quotations illustrating the use of a word in context. The citation, usually a phrase from a well-known writer or publication, is recorded on an index card, dated and placed in alphabetical order in the massive files kept at the Springfield facility.

To date, Merriam-Webster has about 13 million citations on file. The editors of the new dictionary read each of the 1.5 million citations added to the files since the printing of the Eighth Collegiate Dictionary in 1973, Mish said.

Before a word can be considered for inclusion in a dictionary, Mish says, it must have at least three citations and in some cases, as many as 50.

One such controversial word, Mish says, was "humonguous." It took 15 years and numerous citations for the editors to agree that it deserved to be legitimized (1791) and placed in the dictionary. It is dated in Webster's Ninth as entering the language in 1973, labeled slang and defined as "extremely large: huge."

Mish says that, although by 1981 or 1982, it had been used frequently enough to become legitimate, "It still has a slangy feel to it."

AN OPPOSITE case, Mish says, was the word "ayatolla," which was almost instantly accepted after 52 American hostages were seized in Iran in 1979.

The editors had a page replated in one of the last of the 40 printings of the Eighth Collegiate to accommodate the word.

Mish says editors are sometimes heartily challenged when trying to estabish the etymology, or history, of a word. One such challenge, still unresolved, is the origin of the word "posh."

Legend has it that the word is an acronym for "port out, starboard home," a shipping term supposedly used by the Peninsular & Oriental Steamship Co. of England to describe the better accommodations — those on the shadier and cooler side of the ship that traveled from England to India, Mish says.

But, he says, there is no evidence to support the tale, though it persists. Merrian-Webster went so far as to write to the shipping company's historian for verification, to no avail.

Besides writing definitions, Mish says, he and his staff of 27 editors respond to the nearly 2,500 letters a year from people who write to Merriam-Webster with complaints or queries. "We answer them all, even the abusive ones," Mish says.

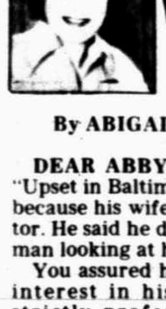

Mish says many of the editors at Merriam-Webster make a career of dictionary work. Others, he said, burn out quickly because the work is intensive and repetitious.

"We've never actually had anyone carried out in a straitjacket, but there have been some pretty close calls," he says. Mish added that most of the editors who researched the dates for the Ninth have left the company.

DEAR ABBY

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: This is concerning "Upset in Baltimore," who was upset because his wife went to a male doctor. He said he didn't want any other man looking at his wife's body.

You assured him that the doctor's interest in his wife's body was strictly professional, and if he couldn't deal with it, he should seek professional help.

You are wrong, Abby. When my wife and I were first married, I told her that I didn't want any other man to see her undressed, and that included her doctor. She assured me that her doctor had no romantic interest in her undressed, and it was no big deal.

We discussed it and came to the conclusion that if granting one small favor could make such a big difference in a marriage, why not do it? So with that in mind, my wife agreed to quit her doctor, and now she's going to a woman doctor just to make me happy. — SATISFIED IN NEW ORLEANS

DEAR SATISFIED: Congratulations on resolving your problem so easily. If granting "one small favor" could make such a big difference in your marriage, why didn't YOU grant your wife the "small favor" of letting her continue with her original doctor?

DEAR ABBY: I divorced my husband six years ago. We have one daughter who is 9 years old. (I'll call her Lisa.) I have done everything in my power to see that Lisa has everything she needs, and that she learns all the proper ways of a young lady.

My ex-husband has never taken much interest in Lisa, but his mother has. Too much, I think. Last Christmas I allowed Lisa to spend the day with my ex-mother-in-law and her relatives. This grandmother loves Lisa, but I think she has overstepped her bounds.

She recently sent my daughter stationery, envelopes, postage stamps and the addresses of all the relatives on her side, requesting that Lisa write them all thank-you notes for the Christmas presents they gave her.

Abby, Lisa thanked these people on Christmas Day when she received their gifts, and she even gave them each a big hug.

Does my daughter have to send a written thank-you note, or is my ex-mother-in-law out of line? — TEED OFF IN TENNESSEE

DEAR TEED OFF: Written thank-you notes are a must, even after a verbal thank-you and a "big hug." Don't be critical of your ex-mother-in-law. Your daughter is lucky to have a grandmother who cares.

DEAR ABBY: I am doing a survey for The Advocate, a daily newspaper in Red Deer, Alberta, Canada. (We carry your column.) When two people kiss, where do they put their noses? — KATHLEEN ENGMAN

DEAR KATHLEEN: Wherever they fit.

DEAR ABBY: For "Cramped in Burbank," who didn't know what to do about people who dropped in when her place was a mess, put this sign on your door:

"If You Didn't Bother to Call, Please Don't Bother to knock." I did. It works. — RUTH IN LOS ANGELES

Copley News Service

Sorrel, with its unmistakable tart flavor, is one of the most distinctive of herbs. It is very commonly used in Europe, but is unfamiliar to many American cooks.

A native of Europe, sorrel was grown in the New World as early as 1620. It appears frequently in a number of early American cookbooks, but for some reason became much less popular in the United States during the 19th and early 20th centuries. Happily, sorrel now seems to be enjoying a renewed popularity here.

It is excellent with veal, chicken and fish, and can be used to create a variety of delicious soups and sauces. In France, a bit of sorrel is often included in salads.

Sorrel is among the easiest of herbs to grow, and will thrive anywhere that there is some light shade. Probably the easiest way to raise a crop of sorrel is to start the seeds in a "flat" or planting tray, and then transfer seedlings to a bed or pot when they are a couple of inches tall.

The leaves should be picked when they are light green and 1 to 2 inches wide. Sorrel is a perennial and new leaves will form to replace those you pick.

Class studies 'what's funny and how come'

Hearst Feature Service

SEATTLE — The homework assignment for this class is a little unusual: Find something funny on your way home. But what else would you expect from a course called "What's Funny and How Come?"

Twenty people have enrolled in this semester's class, being offered by the University of Washington Experimental College. The course has been offered for several years by Elaine T. Gordon, Ph.D., a specialist in marriage and family counseling, who has teamed up with Carl Grant, a stand-up comic who specializes in "sophisticated comedy."

The Gordon-Grant partnership, Gordon says, allows each class to take one of two directions: If participants come expecting a serious analysis of the psychological theories of humor, Gordon can teach it. If they come to cultivate their personal funny bones, Grant can teach that.

The class is taught not in a sterile UW classroom, but in Gordon's laid-back apartment-office, with a crackling fireplace, floor pillows and dozens of teddy bears. It's an atmosphere in which, she says, "people can give themselves permission to be playful. It's like a cocktail party; it's not the glass of spirits, but the situation. Humor is an attitude."

That's the reason for the look-for-something-funny homework. Being funny, Gordon says, "is not so much a set of techniques as it is kind of a mental set — being tuned to the things that are going on around you."

Adds Grant: 'You don't have to invent anything. The universe is just full of funny things." He is a former schoolteacher who discovered he could make people laugh. In addition to gigs at nightclubs, Grant conducts workshops for businesses that want to heighten their corporate senses of humor.

The market for humor instruction is good these days, Grant says, "because our society is becoming so uptight" and both businesses and individuals recognize that humor "adds to the ability to relate to other people; it adds to the effectiveness of speeches, and is especially important to those in sales."

Gallery sells children's art

NEW YORK (AP) — Delorys Welch-Tyson, director of a new gallery of children's art, says she's "not interested in perpetuating the idea of children's art as cutesy stick drawings."

"I pick good art and I'm very selective," adds Ms. Welch-Tyson, whose gallery, the Rainbow Connection, is in Manhattan's Tribeca area.

Ms. Welch-Tyson, who originated the idea of the gallery, is an artist herself, and recalls fondly her own excitement and pride when she exhibited at New York City's Lever House 20 years ago.

"There are so many really talented youngsters out there, there's a need for a place where they can show their work in a setting that's accepted and taken seriously," she says.

She sent out mailings, contacted art teachers, ran newspaper ads and handed out flyers outside art schools to solicit young artists.

"The private schools were the first to pick up on it," she says, "but that didn't bring me the 'rainbow' collection I wanted. Later I developed a sponsorship program — sort of adopt-an-artist idea."

Through this plan, young people who are unable to pay the nominal fee which helps defray expenses for the enterprise, will have it taken care of by sponsors, who share in the gallery's commission on sales.

Their work ranges in style from large-scale graffiti on canvas, "pop" fantasy and surrealist art to classical themes using airbrush, oil, spray paint, pen and ink and watercolor.

Child car seat laws spread

CHICAGO (AP) — Parents across the country are a lot more conscious these days of law enforcement officers observing them as they travel the nation's roads, says the National Safety Council.

It reports that 42 states and the District of Columbia now have laws requiring infants and small children to be protected by child restraints, designed for the very young, when they are riding in motor vehicles.

Three states cover only infants through 1 year of age. Two other states protect children through age 3, and 10 states through age 4. Four states have occupant restraint requirements for children through age 5. One state calls for protection of children through age 9 and another state law applies to children 40 inches or less in height.

Alaska, Idaho, Iowa, Louisiana, South Dakota, Texas, Utah and Wyoming do not have child passenger protection laws. American Samoa, Guam, Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands do not have them.

Gilchrest offers these safety tips for parents with young children:

— Find out exactly what your state law requires; write to the Secretary of State and, ask for free information on the child safety seat law in your state. Or, call your local police department or sheriff's office.

— Read the manufacturer's instruction on how to use the child safety seat. The National Transportation Safety Board has reported that in 53 accidents investigated in which young children were hurt 28 safety seats involved were improperly used. There appears to be widespread misuse of the infant carriers and child safety seats. You must fasten the safety harness around the child and then secure the seat to the vehicle itself.

Students learn parental woes by 'eggs-ample'

By ERMA BOMBECK

(A note from Erma Bombeck: My recent column on Margaret Hudson, who wrote saying she thought she was the first military wife to receive a certificate of appreciation from the U.S. government on her husband's retirement, has brought a deluge of mail.

It seems military wives throughout the world have been so honored. An earlier column on why this was not done brought only one response, and that was from Mrs. Hudson.

We are delighted it is standard procedure.)

Educators are often criticized for not bringing "real life" into the classroom. It is one thing to conjugate verbs and say in Spanish, "Which way is the bullfight?" It is another to know what marriage and raising children are all about . . . a condition destined to affect nearly all of them.

David Parry's sociology class at Blackhawk High School in Beaver, Pa., is at least taking a crack at it. To simulate married life, he has students pair off, spin a wheel of fortune to learn what their gross income is, set up a budget, and live off it.

Each pair then "gives birth" to a hard-boiled egg. They name it, decorate it, house it, and figure out how they are going to raise it.

The responsibility does not end in the classroom. Mr. Parry requires that the egg be attached by string to one of the partners or a guardian 24 hours a day for a week. There are bugs to be worked out. Even though he has the students tie a string to one of their toes and hang "the child" over the bed, he says, "I still can't figure out a way to have them awakened at night or I would."

Actually, there are a lot of similarities between hard-boiled eggs and children — which his students have already discovered. They may look fragile, but they're a surprise. I've dropped a few of them (eggs and children) in my time and fully expected them to destruct, but somehow they roll with the punches and show up for the next day.

You'd think being in hot water would do them in, but they become tougher for it and a little more durable. They can even sustain a few cracks in their exterior and survive.

You can do a lot of things to make eggs look different. You can paint them in different colors, adorn them with gold, place them in a satin-lined bed or a bed of pencil shavings, but underneath, they're pretty much the same.

It shouldn't take Mr. Parry's class long to figure out that the Cheaper by the Dozen theory is a myth and that dragging anything around all day and night is, in their vernacular . . . awesome.

Offhand, I'd say Mr. Parry has done one of two things. He has either done for hard-boiled eggs what Mr. T has done for the three-piece suit, or he has instilled in a class a lesson on responsibility that I suspect they'll remember for a long time.

Partnerships' partings avoided by prevention

By DR. ADELE SCHEELE

"Betrayed!" he said. "I've been betrayed by the two partners I trusted with my business, my money, and my hope. How could they have brought this lawsuit filled with such lies against me!"

There is no bitterness to match that of partners parting. Such ventures closely parallel marriage itself and its dissolution — too often a bitter divorce. One safety valve on the domestic front is a no-fault settlement, but when that fails or is impossible and one takes the other to court, menacing vendettas are often the result.

Is there any protection? Not entirely, but there is an ounce of prevention that is proverbially worth that pound of cure.

The Ounce of Prevention

People originally come to work together because they share a vision or because they find in the other complementary skills. One partner might start with a concept: the other, money or contacts or experience.

Usually excited by their prospects and eager to get going, they speed off course without checking their map of expectations. Much grief might be saved if only partners would try to articulate answers to questions such as these:

What does one really want of the other when things go well and when things don't? Will one be able to pull out or buy out the other? Or bring in a third partner? Or redirect the course or pull it back from any detour? Who owns the idea or product — both? Who holds the patent or copyright? Does one license it to the other and under what terms? Who takes the limelight if there's only room for one? What happens if only one generates business while the other falls behind without redefining the financial split? How long will one carry the other?

Much like a prenuptial agreement, prospective business partners would do well to think about answers whether or not the business is successful. Advice from lawyers and other businesspeople with partnership experience is imperative.

The Pound of Cure

"We work at it" is how happily married couples often respond when they are asked their secret. Business partners who grow together might answer the same, but that, alas, isn't often the case. Lewis, who feels so abandoned by his partners' vicious suit, could have foreseen the conflict. He did sense it, but he avoided confronting his two partners. He never asked for the session that might have cleared the air.

Or, not finding some mutual agreement, he should have realized that irreconcilable differences would spell the end of their business together.

Instead, Lewis kept his eyes tightly closed, not wanting to see reality in the negative. Through denial, he paid in costly lawsuits, first to defend himself and then in a countersuit to get back what he owns. The judge sided with his case and recognized his partner's greed.

Yet there is no real victory. Lewis has been hurt badly. He vows it won't happen again.

However, smart people learn from their mistakes. They learn to anticipate business turns and set out appropriate actions, the "if then" kind. (If this happens, then we'll do that.) They learn to get advice and to protect themselves as well as their companies. And later, if it begins to turn sour, they learn to confront it — speaking up, asking questions, trying for some solutions, even interim ones.

And if all fails, they learn how to fight. And then to move on.

Hearst Feature Service

It is estimated that 13 children are slain by their parents every day in the United States. But scientists have paid little attention to infanticide — the most vicious form of child abuse — until recently.

"The reasons are manifold," said biopsychologist Dr. Bruce B. Svare, an associate professor at the State University of New York-Albany, "but generally, it's because people consider it a very distasteful thing to even talk about."

For the last four years, Svare and members of his research team have been studying infanticidal behavior in strains of inbred laboratory mice. Svare's research and that of other scientists across the country has identified hormonal links to infanticide in animals, which may shed light on human child abuse. Variations also occur between genetically different strains of mice.

Svare came to his research on infanticide through an interest in hormonal effects on behavior, and in particular, the effect of sex differences.

"In mice, there are very profound sex differences in parental behavior," Svare said. Virgin female mice act parental toward newborn babies, retrieving them, licking them and bringing them into their nest. Male mice, when confronted for the first time with newborns, attack, kill and eat them.

Svare began investigating the hormonal basis for the difference in behavior. Females injected with the male hormone testosterone displayed the same infant-killing behavior as the males, Svare discovered. Conversely, castrated males, which no longer produced testosterone, became parental toward the babies, licking them and even trying to nurse them.

"The question arises, why is it this hormone has such an effect? I don't have the answer, but I have some hypotheses," Svare said.

Rodents, he explained, are guided by their sense of smell. Moreover, scientific studies show that when testosterone enters the brain, it effects the olfactory bulb. The testosterone, Svare conjectures, somehow changes the way the mouse perceives the baby.

Another line of research found a genetic link to infant-killing. Svare found that certain inbred mouse strains display a much higher infanticide level than do other strains, suggesting genes may be responsible.

The genetic difference, he said, is not related to differences in the amount of testosterone in the circulation (the levels are about the same in the two strains he studied), but to the sensitivity of the brain to the hormone.

While Svare is primarily interested in uncovering the immediate triggers of behavior, ethologists and other scientists have offered divergent theories about why infanticidal behavior exists.

One school holds that the behavior is a response to some chaos in the environment such as the social stress suffered by a new male in a community. This stress, these scientists conjecture, leads to sexual frustration and rage expressed as infanticide. Another view holds that infanticide is an adaptive behavior, serving such beneficial functions as reducing overpopulation and providing a food source.

Yet another theory proposes that infanticide offers a reproductive advantage. Sarah Hardy, a Harvard primatologist, has reported that most primate infant killings seem to be caused by males who invade primate colonies, usurping the resident males and killing their infant offspring. By killing the infants, the invader male assures perpetuation of his genes.

While Svare believes his research and the work of other psychobiologists is suggestive of directions to take in the study of human child abuse, he emphasizes there is a big leap from the animal to the human.

Nonetheless, there are striking parallels between the animal and the human.

Studies have found that child abuse in humans more often than not is inflicted by non-biological male parents. By analogy, in the case of lower animals, it is a non-biological parent who intrudes on territory and kills existing offspring.

World mythology in modern vogue

LOS ANGELES — When he was a boy, Joseph Campbell was convinced he was an American Indian. It was one of the crushing blows of his childhood when he learned that he was not, that instead he was an Irish Catholic kid whose father was a New York City businessman.

But a seed was planted by that boyhood fantasy and nurtured by Buffalo Bill's Wild West shows and books of Indian lore. Today, more than seven decades later, Campbell, 79, is a globally famous scholar of myth, and he is in the midst of writing the four-volume culmination of his life's work — a historical atlas of world mythology. The first volume, "The Way of the Animal Powers" (Alfred van der Marck Editions, Harper & Row: $75), was published last fall.

For Campbell, the publication of the first volume was an "epochal occasion." What Campbell was referring to was the carte blanche he received from the publisher to choose photographs, maps and charts that illustrate and relate the beliefs and rituals of early man. The result is a lavish book containing 300,000 words, 50 custom-made maps, 400 black-and-white photographs and 175 photographs in full color.

In an interview, Campbell said that in previous works, such as "The Hero With a Thousand Faces," "The Masks of God" and "The Flight of the Wild Gander," he was confined largely to writing about myth, a condition that limited his books and his audience. The new work, he said, should bring into the fold a new batch of readers because the illustrations clarify his writing.

"MYTHOLOGH IS primarily image, and the discourse of myth is an amplification of the meaning of image," he said. "When you write, I don't care how much poetic and mystical imagination you put into it, it doesn't have the impact of a picture. In this book, I have the text and relevant picture on the same page."

"The Way of the Animal Powers" covers the period from earliest man to surviving primitive cultures such as the aborigines of Australia. Its primary subjects are the discovery of death, early concepts of an afterlife and the shamanic rites of what Campbell calls cults of "the Master Animal." The animal may be a bear, as it is in northern Japan, or the buffalo of the plains Indians. But the beliefs and rites that underlie a particular hunting cult are very much the same all over the world, Campbell maintains.

"Life consuming life is one of the great mythic problems that runs right through the ages," Campbell told a standing-room-only audience of several hundred at a lecture for the C.J. Jung Institute here. "How, psychologically, can you bear living on the flesh of other living beings?"

In the hunting cultures, Campbell said, there was and is a widespread "notion of a contract between the animal and the human communities so that the animals would willingly give their lives to the human in the way of the law and order of nature, with the understanding that man, with gratitude, would return their life substance to the mother source by which they would again come back."

Campbell, who has been on the lecture circuit many years, said he was not surprised by the large turnout for his lecture. He has had a following since the days LSD was in vogue. "In 1964 in the middle of the LSD period, my royalties went up 10 times," he said. And "Star Wars" creator "George Lucas has said publicly many times that my books were the inspiration for his flight of imagination."

WHY SHOULD MYTHS, particularly those of primitive man, gain a non-academic following in the late 20th century?

Campbell's answer is that the social glue of family and community has been "smashed up" by the Industrial Revolution and its successor, the technological society.

"So people see this structure disintegrating all around them," he said. "You don't have to wait for the atom bomb; it's already happened as far as the structuring of a life is concerned. So you've got to go back to the individual finding his way. That's what the hunter had to do. The peasant — everybody's working together. But the hunter's luck is something else, and the hunter's skill is individual. So we're in a hunter's jungle, you might say."

Even so, ancient myths and religions offer a cold comfort in a world in which physics, biology and other sciences have combined to destroy literal interpretation of many beliefs, Campbell said. "When you say that Jesus ascended into heaven, with modern physics, where did he go? Even going at the speed of light, he wouldn't be out of the galaxy yet."

Campbell contends that what the world needs now is a mythic system that fits with the modern world. A new myth must deal with traditional themes such as "the transformation of childhood into adulthood and dying instead of lasting forever, but it has to deal with it now in terms of a scientifically interpreted universe and in terms of a society that is in flux."

HE ALSO ARGUES that any new myth must have worldwide appeal because he believes that national and regional boundaries are artifacts of the past. "The new society is the planet, not any little group." The universal similarity of beliefs is a continuing chord in Campbell's work. "What I'm trying to show is that all these differentiated religions are really the same religion."

Campbell's own life has legendary, if not mythic, qualities. He lived in Paris in the 1920s, becoming an early devotee of James Joyce.

"Paris in 1927 was something else, I can tell you," he said.

DURING THOSE YEARS he made the connection between the various myths around the world, he said, and embarked on what would become his life's work. For 38 years Campbell taught mythology at Sarah Lawrence College, retiring in 1972. Between now and 1986 Campbell will be working on the next three volumes of his atlas.

THE IMPORTANCE OF PERSONAL DEVELOPMENT AND IMAGE PROJECTION IN TODAY'S BUSINESS WORLD

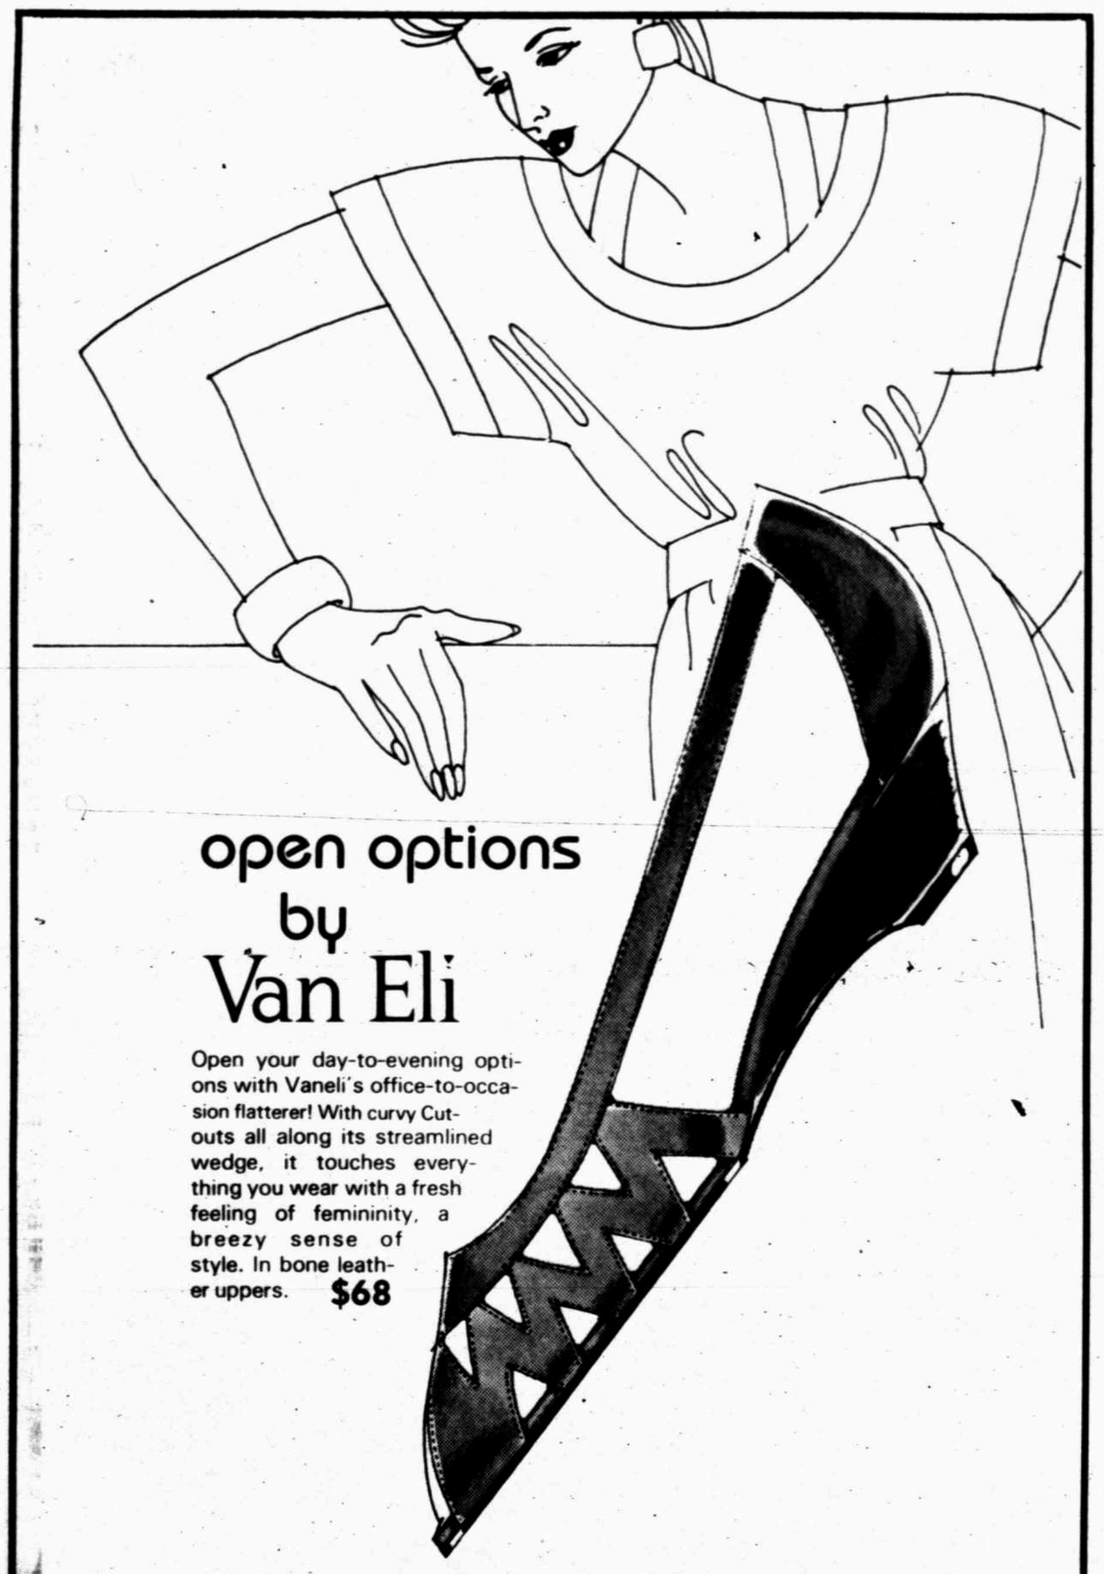

A personal development course can pave the way for smoother human relations by teaching the techniques and proper attitude for getting along with others. A personal development course can provide self-awareness of one's strengths, weaknesses, desires, and the knowledge to acquire the traits of personality and appearance that leads to success in the business world.

The proof of the value of personal development training is evident in the biographies of prominently successful people who have made the most of themselves and who have lived up to their potential. Many have had the kind of assistance that will be received in your personal development course-assistance that has helped them to look at themselves objectively. Once aware of how their appearance and personality affected others, they have made a genuine effort to improve their "image projection." This simply means that they have designed their appearance and personality for success. You can do the same.

The clothes you wear have an affect on others. You will learn how to select the styles, colors, fabrics and accessories that are appropriate and becoming for you and for the business environment in which you will work. Awareness of lines, color, fabrics and accessories will make it possible for you to discriminate and to select the apparrel that is right for the image you wish to project.

Personality has been described as the total effect one person has on another. If this is true, your success demands that you learn and practice good manners, good speech and good interpersonal relations. Your personal development course contains lessons on voice improvement, how to use the business telephone to greatest effect and the twelve steps to a winning personality. Summed up, your personal development course is more than a dress for success course, more than a good grooming course, more than a personality pays course. In essence it is a "how-to" course to increase your self-awareness and to enhance your chances for success in the job market by teaching you how to project an image that potential employers will like, so that their response to your application for employment will be: "You're hired".

Making 'Ugly' BEAUTIFUL

Douglas "Turbo" Burgess, a bar tender at the Last Tycoon, was last year's Ugliest Bartender, after earning more than $1,000 in contributions for the Multiple Sclerosis Society.

He won a trip for two to Las Vegas, where he married his wife, Peggy.

He attributed his victory to his bar's "well-heeled clientele.'

"I just think it's our customers. We take care of them and they take care of us," he said.

Burgess is retiring his championship this year so another bartender from the Last Tycoon can vie for the ugliness crown. The bar's staff said they believe in "getting ugly with style."

"We concentrate on raising money, rather than playing with the 'ugly' thing," said bar manager Grier Brunson. "We expect to win again."

Ugliness can be virtue, say rules

"Ugliness" can be a virtue, at least for bartenders, according to the Permian Basin Chapter of the National Multiple Sclerosis Society.

The society will sponsor an "Ugliest Bartender Contest," among 46 area bars, beginning Saturday. The contestants, however, are judged on fundraising ability rather than physical appearance.

Bar patrons select the "ugliest" bartender by donating money — each 25¢ counts as one vote — to their favorite bartender. The bartender with the most votes enjoys the dubious honor of being named the "ugliest."

Money raised benefits multiple sclerosis patient care and research programs.

When the votes are tallied after the contest's April 14 deadline, prizes are awarded to the top five local bartenders — a trip to San Francisco is the first place prize.

"Thanks to many community-minded bartenders and managers, we are looking forward to our biggest event ever with more fun promotions for everyone to help their favorite bar and bartender 'get ugly,'" said Ms. Messina.

Contest benefits victims of disease

The Permian Basin Chapter of the National Multiple Sclerosis Society alone serves 150 patients, according to the chapter's executive director, Judy Dixon.

Millions of people worldwide are believed to suffer from the often disabling disease and almost 200 more persons are diagnosed each week as having it in the United States.

Multiple sclerosis — meaning "many scars" — is characterized by inflammation and breakdown of the protective sheath around nerve fibers in the central nervous system. It leaves hardened patches scattered through the brain and spinal cord. The scars "short-circuit" nerve impulses between the brain and other parts of the body.

Early symptoms of MS vary, but can include tingling, numbness, slurred speech, double vision, muscle cramps, trembling, loss of bladder or bowel control, sexual problems and fatigue. It can lead to paralysis.

MS is not a mental illness, nor is it fatal, hereditary or contagious, according to the society.

Its cause is unknown and there is no known cure, although there are treatments to alleviate some of its worst symptoms, the society said.

The Permian Basin chapter hopes to raise $40,000 this year with its Ugliest Bartender Contest.

The group helps purchase equipment such as wheelchairs, provides support and counseling services for MS victims and their families and helps MS victims obtain financial assistance.

Procrastination: Common cause of stress

Hearst Feature Service

'Tis the season for procrastination — the sin which provides its own purgatory — as many citizens who could be filling out their tax forms predictably will put off the chore until April 14, subjecting themselves and their families to a stressful 24-hour panic.

Lenora Yuen aims to put an end to this needless human suffering. With Jane Burka, a fellow California psychologist, Yuen is co-author of "Procrastination," a handbook on how to understand and overcome procrastination.

Yuen says she and Burka began their study when both were counselors at the University of California at Berkeley. "We saw a lot of students who had put off term papers and studying for exams and were in a panic state," she says. "So we put together group sessions to teach them time management skills."

But the sessions weren't very successful, she adds, "because students who procrastinate tend to put off using the time-management techniques. We found we had to encourage students to think about the personal issues — what was behind their procrastination."

They found a lot of personal issues, among them people who as children had learned to put things off as a way of rebelling against demanding, perfection-oriented parents, and people who themselves are perfectionists and put things off because they fear the job will be less than perfect. Many of those who put off sending Christmas cards, Yuen believes, do so because they don't want to send out anything less than perfect cards with elegant, witty, personal messages.

Then there are crisis-oriented people who put things off in order to make themselves seem like heroes in last-minute solutions that actually are necessitated by their own tardiness. And there are people who live in such unrealistic worlds of lofty goals that they can't get started on the small, simple tasks needed to achieve any of their goals.

Almost everyone procrastinates, the psychologist says. Yuen believes it can be a harmless way of expressing priorities — simply putting off things you don't really want to do and which don't really have to be done.

"It's a problem only if it bothers you," she says, citing cases of people whose procrastination caused serious mental stress. Marriages can break up, families can fall apart and jobs can be lost because of procrastination.

Her prescription for problem procrastinators is a mixed bag because, she says, "not all techniques work for everybody."

Some of Yuen's recommendations:

— Make an inventory of your procrastination problems and the reasons you want to improve.

— Slow down and make a methodical plan to overcome your problem, instead of making it one of those whirlwind projects you will likely never finish.

— Set specific goals, but also write down the small steps necessary to achieve the goals. A weekly schedule of work tasks, recreation and social activities may help.

"It's important that you recognize that you and the child are separate people," the psychologist says. "That means the child is going to have to make some mistakes and suffer the consequences."

Parents, spouses, employers and others troubled by a procrastinator shouldn't nag, criticize, ridicule or threaten extreme consequences, she cautions. The procrastinator is likely to resent such tactics and stubbornly refuse to change.

Rather, Yuen counsels gentle assistance in helping the person set small, realistic goals, consider the consequences of putting things off and savor the rewards of achieving goals.

Commission: Flea markets source of unsafe goods

WASHINGTON (AP) — The federal government ought to find a way to protect potential buyers of dangerous things in the nation's thousands of flea markets, some members of the Consumer Product Safety Commission believe.

The member who suggested it, Stuart M. Statler, said he would draw the line at supervising garage sales.

"I think we'd have to leave that to caveat emptor" — let the buyer beware — he said after a commission meeting.

Statler said in that interview he had in mind the possibility of volunteers making spot checks of flea markets and notifying local or state authorities when they found something suspect.

Commission chairman Nancy Harvey Steorts said in the meeting that Statler's suggestion for a staff briefing on what the commission could do would be pursued.

The question arose when a commission investigator, Robert Kelly, displayed an electrical space heater he bought for $8 at a flea market in Frederick, Md. The heater was 40 to 50 years old and could not be sold today because it lacked such primitive safety devices as a simple on-off switch, he said.

Kelly bought the heater because it was similar to one he believes caused a fire in the nation's capital on Feb. 1 that killed seven people.

"This whole area, flea markets, is one that needs to be investigated by us, or by us in cooperation with the state and local authorities," said Statler.

Commission colleague Terence M. Scanlon said California consumer groups had complained to him that flea markets were "one of the big sources of unsafe goods."

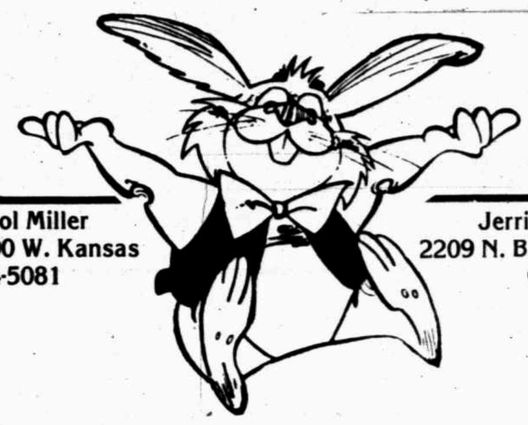

The commission already is planning to study electrical space heaters. William Walton, assistant executive director for engineering, told the panel that 170 deaths a year came from fires started by those items.

The "stab stitch" is a strong stitch that is primarily used where several layers of fabric are to be sewn together. It is effective where the total thickness is too great to take a stitch with the usual in-and-out movement. Work with the right side upper-most. Stab the needle through to the wrong side, then bring it back on top slightly further on. Insert it slightly behind where it emerged and so on. On top only very small stitches will be visible, while on the wrong side the overlapping stitches will show. The size of the stitch depends on the fabric and on how much strength is needed. Situations where the stab stitch might be used include stitching through doubled fabric and the tape of a zipper and reinforcing the ends of pockets.

If you need help in doing special stitches or perhaps would appreciate assistance selecting patterns and fabrics make LEGGETTS FABRICS your sewing headquarters. DEAR DOCTOR

Propanolol may help prevent 'stage fright' reaction

By JEANNE A. PETREK, M.D.

My heart pounds, my hands shake and my dress gets wet from sweat whenever I must speak in public. I have heard that there is a drug that will remove these reactions and allow me to speak.

This reaction falls into the category of stage fright. People also experience a fast breathing rate, nausea and sensation of having to urinate. All of these are mediated by a more or less involuntary reflex of the nervous system and are part of the "fight or flight" response: Excess adrenalin is part of the problem.

There is a new class of drugs, beta-blockers, which inhibit receptors for certain types of these cellular reactions. They are mainly used for heart conditions and high blood pressure. However, it occurred to physicians that these drugs, because of their mechanism of action, may be useful for stage fright. Certainly the physical problems interfere with speaking or any other activity.

At the University of Nebraska Music Department and at the Juilliard School of Music in New York City, a double-blind study was carried out.

The musicians took 40 mg of propranolol, the most common beta-blocker, or a look-alike sugar capsule an hour and a half before a performance. Neither the musicians nor the experienced music critics who were their judges knew which capsule was given on which occasion. The propranolol improved the overall quality of their performance.

The researchers were quick to point out in their 1982 report that while propranolol improves performance, neither it nor any other drug can increase the performer's ability; it simply removes physical obstacles to the expression of that ability. The researchers also pointed out that performance anxiety may arise as a conditioned reflex to intensely competitive training.

In some, "stage fright" does not decrease even with more experience and prestige, but like other reflexes, becomes stronger. Some musicians have attempted to solve this problem with alcohol and tranquilizers, but such depressants worsen physical and intellectual ability.

Propanolol is not a totally harmless medicine. It requires patient follow-up and monitoring. The patient should know about the drug's possibly harmful effects. Asthmatics, insulin-dependent diabetics and those with cardiac conducting system disease may encounter a serious side-effect if they use it.

There is little danger of psychological dependence, because there is no distinct feeling associated with the drug, as any who take it for hypertension or heart disease will tell you. The effect of propranolol is generally detectable only by absence of symptoms.

What can I do for airsickness without taking medicines? Sometimes I forget to have pills on hand. Is seasickness the same as airsickness?

Airsickness and seasickness are essentially the same; both result from over-stimulation of the inner ear which controls balance. Large aircraft are usually very smooth, particularly at high speeds and cruising altitude.

As you can imagine, seasickness is much more common than airsickness. However, bad weather can produce all kinds of motion that disturb the balancing mechanism. The disturbed balance reflexes are further aggravated by the psychological factors of anxiety and apprehension which are common with bad weather.

With or without medicines, one can help decrease symptoms by covering or closing the eyes to reduce the visual part of the stimulation, directing an air vent into the face, applying a cool cloth to the face and sitting as far as possible from the engines because their vibration may compound the problem.

Bladder pacemaker holds promise for spinal injuries

Hearst Feature Service

Research that developed a bladder pacemaker is promising possible treatment of other lower-body functions for those suffering spinal injuries.

Dr. Emil A. Tanagho, a professor of urology and chairman of the urology department at the University of California-San Francisco, can finally talk about the 15 years of hard work, from the despair that once nearly caused him to give up this approach to today's encouraging achievements.

The bladder pacemaker stimulates nerves to contract and also to relax the bladder, returning control over their urinary systems to individuals who have suffered spinal cord injury in accidents or from disease.

"We've reached the point in our work that we are now negotiating with industry to develop a package that can be marketed. I hope this will be available to the medical world within six months to a year."

HE DISPLAYED the delicate-looking device. Two clear thin cords of sialastic about a foot in length at one end have cuffs that attach to sacral root nerves near the base of the spinal cord. At the other end the cords come together in a disc about the size of a fat quarter. This disc containing a receiver is implanted just under the skin in the lower abdomen.

The user carries a small control unit, about the size of a package of cigarettes, with a cord and a loop antenna. To stimulate the bladder pacemaker, the user places the loop over the abdomen, where the receiver is implanted. Dials are turned to cause the body to operate the bladder.

"We want to drive the nerves to control the basic functions — in this case it is urinating, but we see possibilities for emptying the bowels and for erection control. We want to let the nerves do all the work. We drive the nerve so it will do what it is supposed to be doing. Other bladder control pumps are mechanical. This is an attempt to make the body do the work. This is a logical theory, but we've worked 15 years already to put it into practice."

IN CLINICAL tests, six young adults now have implants and three more patients will be implanted in the first six months of this year. "On the drawing board," he said "is a self-contained battery-powered unit, similar to the heart pacemaker. I would say that will be available in four to five years."

He described the bladder as a "unique organ, an involuntary organ under voluntary control. There is no other organ like it. It can be ordered to contract and it can be ordered to relax. That is what is lost in spinal cord injury."

Tanagho estimated that more than 1.5 million persons in the United States suffer from various nerve-connected bladder dysfunctions. Many of them are paraplegic or quadriplegic, with spinal cord injuries from automobile or sports accidents. Multiple sclerosis, cerebral strokes and other diseases of the nervous system also interfere with bladder control.

"Diabetes is a good example. There are 15 million diabetics in this country, and 10 to 15 percent of them suffer some interference in the control of the bladder," he said.

Tanagho presented his idea of a bladder pacemaker to the National Institutes of Health, which 11 years ago began grants to support the research leading to the current developments. Over the years as many as 18 research fellows have worked with him.

THE BASIC physiology studies were done with dogs, because of the bladder similarity to human anatomy. Th first implants of patients, three a year in a three-year test, began in 1982. "All are young adults educated, motivated, with relatively recent spinal cord injuries. All are wheelchair-bound, quadriplegic or paraplegic, with the problem of loss of bladder control. They are fully informed and cooperative so they can give back all the information we need."

Surgery to implant the pacemaker, Tanagho said, "is not that difficult, but the testing to identify the exact nerve fibers to control the bladder is difficult."

The urologist said all patients in the trial are benefitting, but "nothing is yet ideal. It is an easy accomplishment to make them dry, but more difficult to get them to empty the bladder completely. We are fine-tuning the process; the experimental model worked perfectly with animals."

California studies AIDS quarantine

Hearst News Service

LOS ANGELES — California health officials are considering authorizing the quarantine of recalcitrant acquired immune deficiency syndrome sufferers.

The controversial proposal authorizes involuntary hospitalization or other incarceration for those AIDS sufferers who refuse to follow state medical guidelines, Dr. James Chin, head of the state Department of Health Services' infectious disease section, said Wednesday.

The proposal, under review by the department's legal staff, also authorizes "modified isolation," to minimize the disease's spread through "donating blood and sexual contact," said Chin.

While acknowledging the difficulty of monitoring sexual behavior, Chin said it might be necessary to do so. "The majority of (AIDS sufferers) are quite cooperative, but every now and then you run into somebody who either denies having the disease or is hostile about having (it) and doesn't put the public interest first," he said.

The proposal was condemned by some of those who work with AIDS sufferers.

"It sounds like the Inquisition. I don't think society is prepared to jail the ill," said Marshall Caskey, an attorney who is a member of the board of directors of the AIDS Project, non-profit organization here that assists AIDS sufferers.

Ed Slough, executive director of AIDS Project, said he doubted the proposal is needed.

"If there are recalcitrant AIDS sufferers, they're probably people who are left with no way to make a living. What's needed is government money for food and shelter, not this policy."

To Roberta Achtenberg, who is co-chairwoman of the Bay Area Lawyers for Individual Freedom, a San Francisco gay and lesbian legal association, the proposal conflicts with the California Constitution's privacy provisions.

"The sexual behavior of gays has historically been judged much more harshly than sexual activity in general, and this would open the door to all kinds of stigmatizing activity on the part of the public health service," she said.

Achtenberg said there isn't a basis for the proposed quarantine because there's no evidence that AIDS is spread through casual contact or because of alleged recalcitrance.

But, said Chin, "The bottom line for us is trying to protect the public health. Personal liberties go so far, and then, if there is danger to the public health, we have to step in and take action."

But taking such action may not be possible, said Dr. Shirley Fannin, associate deputy director of Los Angeles County's communicable disease control program.

"I don't see how it can apply to sexual activity. It's a little beyond me how one would gather that type of information," she said, adding that she was aware of the proposal but had not seen a final draft.

Scientists are not certain what causes AIDS but believe it to be transmitted sexually or through body fluids. About 90 percent of AIDS cases are among gay males, Haitian immigrants, intravenous drug users or hemophiliacs.

There is no known cure for the disease, which has struck 3,515 people and claimed 1,506 lives nationwide, according to the national Center for Disease Control. California accounts for 797 of those cases and 287 of the deaths from AIDS.

Thermographic exams need to be consistent

By Dr. NEIL SOLOMON, M.D.

Dear Dr. Solomon: Why would a doctor insist that a patient come in at the same time for her appointment for breast examination by thermography? I have an unusual schedule on my job and I can't get away at the same time each day. Yet when I called to make an appointment, the receptionist told me that the appointments have to be at the same time each day. Is there a reason for this? — Edna, N.Y.C.

Dear Edna: I assume that the reason for the insistence that your appointments be at the same time each day is the physician's desire to assure reliability. The receptionist should have explained that temperature readings obtained during thermographic breast examination may vary from one time of day to another. Such differences might suggest the presence of a lesion when, in fact, one does not exist, or may fail to indicate a lesion when there is one.

In one study of 11 women conducted at Beth Israel Hospital in Boston, there was a three-to-four degree difference in temperature readings between those taken in the early morning and those taken later in the day.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I can understand when a person gets a pancreas from another person who has died. But how can you get one from a person that is still alive? Yet I've been told by someone who should know that this is possible. What does the person who has donated the pancreas use? — Sy, NYC

For Virginia, Oakland, California: The birth of a severly impaired child may make a couple even more desirous of having another child. I assume that this is in part what is motivating your friends. What may appear to be logical to you is not necessarily logical to others.

Neil Solomon, M.D., is a columnist for Los Angeles Times Syndicate. If you have a medical question, write Dr. Solomon at 1726 Reisterstown Road, Baltimore, Md. 21208. Dr. Solomon will not give personal replies but will answer as many questions as possible in his column.

Caffeine, birth defect link evidence weakens

WASHINGTON (AP) — Federal regulators, citing new research, say pregnant women don't need to be as cautious about caffeine consumption as had been thought.

Reassessing the link between caffeine and birth defects, Food and Drug Administration spokesman William Gregg said the new study, designed to more closely approximate the way humans ingest caffeine, "alleviates some of the more serious concerns that suggested that even low levels of caffeine might be harmful."

In the earlier, 1980 study, large amounts of caffeine were injected directly into the stomachs of pregnant rats, study author Dr. Thomas F.X. Collins said. The resulting offspring had a high incidence of birth defects, mainly paw malformations.

The new study, conducted last year, found few dose-related birth defects, and those were at high consumption levels.

In that study, the caffeine was put into the rats' drinking water to imitate "sipping" rather than the "gulping" indicated by the stomach injections, Collins said.

"In reality, it's probably somewhere in between. Some people sip their coffee vs. taking it in a gulping type of a motion," he said.

The only problems that showed up in the 1983 study were developmental troubles triggered when the pregnant rats were given the equivalent of 18 cups of coffee per day.

Gregg emphasized that because caffeine is a drug that crosses the placental barrier, "we still have a concern," although not as great as before the new study.

Another FDA official said that, at least for the time being, the agency has not changed its formal position that it would be "prudent" for pregnant women "to avoid caffeine-containing foods and drugs, or use them sparingly."

Study isolates major gene in immune system

Copley News Service

Scientists have taken a major step toward understanding the nature of the body's defense network which battles disease and is responsible for tissue rejection in transplants.

The research, the subject of a worldwide search for more than a decade, involves the isolation of a gene responsible for the recognition of agents invading the body such as viruses, bacteria or even tumor cells.

Discovery of this gene may help researchers answer questions about the immune system that have eluded them for years, opening new possibilities for treating a variety of ailments.

"To call this a breakthrough is an understatement," said Dr. Stephen M. Hedrick, a biology professor at the University of California at San Diego Medical Center and principal author of the study. "Most people in the field have been interested in this for the last 10 years, at least, and it's eluded everyone's study."

The research was conducted at the National Institutes of Health in Bethesda, Md. Also participating in the study are Drs. Mark Davis and David Cohen, who recently moved to Stanford University, and Ellen Nielsen of the NIH.

This study, along with another from Canada also reporting the discovery of the same gene, will be published in Wednesday's edition of the British science journal Nature.

To work properly, the body's immune system relies on the carefully orchestrated work of two principal types of cells, B-cells and T-cells.

B-cells, so named because they are produced in the bone marrow, are antibody factories, churning out disease-fighting molecules that fight against bacterial and viral disease.

T-cells, which mature in the thymus gland in the neck, are somewhat like the cop on the beat, patrolling blood and lymph for invaders. If any potential anti-social cells are encountered in their paths, they send out alarms which spur B-cells into action. T-cells themselves divide into a large army of cells and launch their own attacks against certain bacteria and malignancies.

The question that has eluded scientists was how T-cells recognize cells as aliens. For years they speculated something on the cells' surface, specialized receptor molecules, helped them do this job.

Now, Hedrick's team has solved this problem, by isolating the gene for this T-cell receptor molecule from laboratory mice. The human gene, identified by the Canadian team, is very similar.

Hedrick noted that the gene exhibits some unique qualities which allow parts of it to be shuffled and rearranged. This property allows the gene to produce a large diversity of receptors necessary to respond to the many hundreds of foreign cells or antigens which can assault the body.

With the gene now available, scientists will be able to learn how T-cells work and how they recognize the difference between foreign tissue and the body's own cells.

This knowledge could be crucial in learning why the body rejects tissue transplants from donors. Research here could produce ways to eliminate these often disastrous side effects.

"Perhaps we may be able to manipulate the T-lymphocytes (T-cells) that lead to graft rejection, or mediate the response to viral infection and bacteria," Hedrick said. "But all that may be a few years down the line."

SQUAW VALLEY, Calif. — On a clear winter afternoon, the view from the Squaw Valley tram is stunning. Graceful ski slopes that attracted the 1960 Winter Olympics seem to run forever. Lake Tahoe rises silver-blue behind the mountains as the tram climbs higher above the valley meadow.

Yet the spectacular setting and Olympic heritage have never been enough to make Squaw Valley a world-class winter resort. Grand plans to make the valley attractive to vacationers have bogged down over the years in red tape and financial troubles.

But with $30 million spent last year to begin the make-over into a new Aspen or Vail, and local hero Tamara McKinney having publicized Squaw Valley in the Sarajevo Winter Games, planeloads of skiers and vacationers from New York and Japan soon may be lured down narrow High Sierra highways to this quiet hamlet.

The plan, conceived by developers and Placer County officials, calls for a European-style village where cars would be banned. The area's proximity to Tahoe, six miles away, and the Nevada gambling casinos would figure prominently in promotion.

THE RECENT IMPROVEMENTS, which include an inn with 90 large suites, new condominiums, a faster gondola to move skiers up the mountain and better restaurants on the slopes, have already begun to alter the sleepy nature of the valley, which had changed little since the Olympics.

Blyth Arena, the landmark ice stadium where another American hockey team beat the Russians and won a gold medal, was torn down last summer. It had become dilapidated.

The old Olympic village had suffered years of misuse under a succession of tenants. It was gutted and reopened last winter as an inn with $125-a-night suites, a nice restaurant, outdoor swimming pool, tennis courts and four outdoor whirlpools.

For past visitors, the inn is the clearest sign of change. Aside from the lure of the champion-level ski mountain, Squaw Valley has earned a reputation for having few decent places to stay.

The corporation that runs the ski mountain has routinely referred skiers to motels along the north shore of Lake Tahoe or 10 miles away in Truckee.

The Inn at the Village, as the new development is called, would be the centerpiece of the Tyrolean-theme village proposed by developer Philip P. Carville, who designed another Tahoe area resort, Northstar.

CARVILLE, WHO LIVES in Squaw Valley, proposes to erect the village on 141 slushy acres he owns at the base of the tram. The land, which would be leased to other developers who would build the village, is now used as the ski area parking lot.

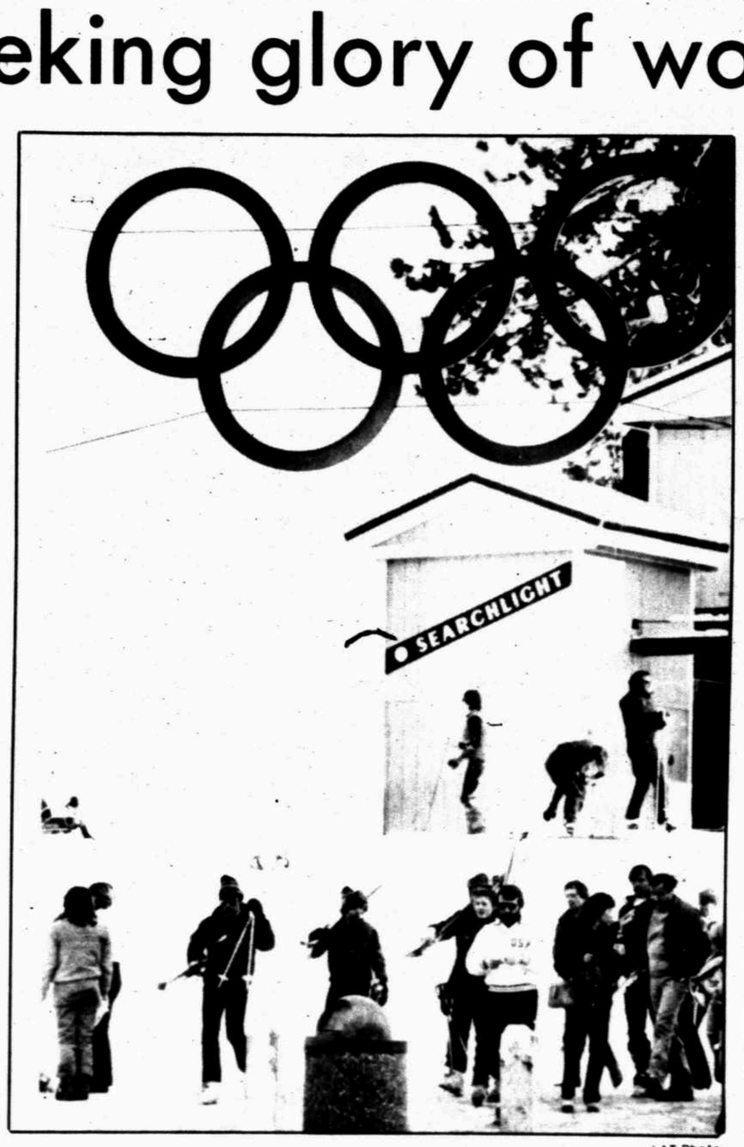

Plans for the village, which would be completed in about a decade if developers can obtain financing and new parking facilities are built, call for shops, restaurants and at least two new hotels "catering to affluent, sophisticated visitors," a spokesman for Carville said.

Attracting a higher-income clientele is a major goal of the Squaw Valley "renaissance," as Carville calls it.

The ski area has been popular with locals and a young, rowdy weekend crowd that drives in from the San Francisco area and Sacramento — at times 14,000 skiers a day. The developers want to shift the customer base to families and international visitors who will stay longer and spend more money.

Dreams of riches and grandeur, often left unrealized, form a big part of Squaw's history. Indians found a Nirvana of gentle streams and rich wildlife in summer, only to be chased to lower elevations by nasty November snows. Fortune-hunting miners came later, but shortly went bust.

Beginning with the 1960 Olympics, seekers of another sort have attempted to make their fortune in the valley.

BOOSTERS ESTIMATED that it would cost only $1 million to stage the Olympics in Squaw Valley, an undeveloped 6,200-foot valley on what was then the inaccessible side of Lake Tahoe. It actually cost at least $14 million, and daily attendance never exceeded 35,000.

After the games, predictions of future glory became common. Local interests often talked about making Squaw Valley a major "destination resort" for weeklong skiers, and the opening of Interstate 80 over Donner Summit made Squaw Valley an easy four-hour drive from San Francisco.

The state of California tried to maintain the valley as a winter resort-park for several years, but lost more than $300,000 a year and finally sold its 1,253 acres for $2.5 million. The Australian company that bought the land never seriously developed it.

Squaw Valley's reputation also suffered from a tragic 1978 tram accident, when a cable snapped, killing four persons and injuring 30. One of the tram cars plunged 30 feet and then was left dangling about 100 feet off the ground.

Despite the setbacks, investors remained interested in Squaw Valley because of the natural attractions and the limits put on development elsewhere in the Tahoe area.

THE BUILDING BOOM began when Placer County officials adopted a new master plan last year that encouraged developers to invest, replacing a more restrictive plan. The Board of Supervisors specifically endorsed the car-free village concept, relaxed building regulations and adopted rules promoting hotel construction. Condominium projects also began to win approval in the valley.

Officials considered Squaw Valley underused and said that the new developments would help the local economy by bringing in more tourist dollars. To attract summer business, the master plan would permit a golf course on the meadow that runs the length of the valley.

"There's just been monumental changes in the past year," said Fred Yeager, assistant county planning director. "It's too bad it didn't happen right after the Olympics."

Not everyone welcomes the new look. Land prices and rents are rising, and are likely to rise even faster if building along the lake is further restricted.

Restricting construction along the lake would make Squaw Valley, with its new welcome mat for developers, even more attractive. Some residents feel that they may be forced out and that the valley's beauty will be destroyed.

Meanwhile, the Squaw Valley Ski Corp. has kicked off an international promotion campaign that makes liberal use of the valley's Olympic past. To avoid confusion, however, they refrain from using the town's official post office name of Olympic Valley, which is not shown on most maps.

OLYMPIC RINGS are featured from the 8,200-foot restaurants and warming lodge on the mountain to the mirror behind the bar at the new Olympic Plaza lounge on the valley floor.

WASHINGTON (AP) — "Immigration and Customs procedures are just awful. You must know how many people are passing (through) JFK, so why not you arrange in accordance?" the foreign visitor wrote while flying home from New York's international airport.

"Improve Immigration, Customs at San Francisco. After 11-hour flight, delays of two hours average to clear Customs, and Immigration is poor," said another departing traveler.

"It is very irritating, as a citizen of a country which allows free access of U.S. citizens to the U.K. (United Kingdom), to have all the hassle of visas ...," a British visitor added.

"Why visa required for Swedish citizens when U.S. citizens can enter Sweden without visa?" echoed another European.

Complaints such as those were sprinkled throughout some 5,300 questionnaires that the government's tourism-promotion agency, the U.S. Travel and Tourism Administration, collected from departing foreign visitors in late 1982.

Today, as industry and government officials work to reverse a two-year decline in the number of foreign visitors, steps are being taken to reduce such irritants, albeit more slowly than tourism interests would like.

AN IMMIGRATION reform bill that passed the Senate last May but is stalled in the House contains a provision for a three-year pilot program waiving visa requirements for citizens of up to eight countries whose visa-rejection rate is low and who do not require such entrance documents of Americans.

Meantime, the Justice and Treasury departments are working to speed clearances through a combination of procedures tailored to the particular needs of individual airports.

In one of the few places where good records have been kept, clearance time has been cut about in half — to an average of 30 minutes — at busy Miami International Airport while drug seizures increased by 50 percent, officials say.

At 24 airports, Justice's Immigration and Naturalization Service permits U.S. citizens returning from abroad to bypass passport inspectors, subject only to spot checks. This has shortened lines and waiting times for foreign nationals, all of whose papers must be examined, spokesman Duke Austin said.

In addition, a half-dozen airports — Los Angeles, San Francisco, Anchorage, Denver, Atlanta and Minneapolis-St. Paul — have a one-stop arrangement where a single agent inspects both documents and baggage.

TREASURY'S CUSTOMS Service also has adopted a European system of dual exit corridors from baggage-claim areas at eight other airports: JFK, Newark, Philadelphia, Miami, Houston, San Juan and Chicago's O'Hare.

One hallway — painted green — is used by those who have no items to declare; the other — painted red — by those who think they may have to pay duty. Spot checks are made in the green hallway.

John Heinrich of Customs' office of inspections said the process begins even before the formal checkpoints, with plainclothes agents mingling among arriving passengers to try to catch suspicious people off guard.

FOREIGNERS CONTRIBUTE more than 6 percent to the $200 billion-a-year travel and tourism sector, whose revenues are second only to food stores among U.S. retail industries.

Canadians made up more than half of the 21.56 million foreign visitors to the United States last year, increasing their trips south of the border by 14 percent, the Travel and Tourism Administration's research director, Don Wynegar, reported recently.

But this growth was offset by a 27 percent plunge in the number of visitors from Mexico and a 12 percent drop in arrivals from overseas points.

Wynegar projects a 3 percent growth in overall foreign arrivals this year, to 22.3 million people. At the same time, nearly 25 million Americans — 400,000 more than 1983 — are expected to travel to other lands, meaning another net deficit in the trade balance.

But despite the complaints about bureaucratic procedures and other problems — high prices, troublesome taxicab drivers, a shortage of public restrooms and the like — the questionnaires elicited more good than bad impressions of America by homebound travelers.

There were many such phrases as: "A lovely holiday," "a great place to visit," "big country with a big spirit and heart" and "the American hospitality is fantastic."

DESPITE THE EFFORTS by government and industry to make things easier for foreign visitors, they might understandably be puzzled about how to react to one visitor's succinct impression of America: "Dallas is not funny."

Recovery Conference attracts over 600

Sponsored by SPE sections

Over 600 registered for the 1984 Permian Basin Oil and Gas Recovery Conference which concluded Friday at Midland Center.

Co-sponsored by The Permian Basin and Trans-Pecos sections of the Society of Petroleum Engineers of AIME, the meeting theme was: "Additional Reserves from Improved Technology."

Over 20 technical papers were presented in the program which opened Thursdayin sessions that included production and injection operations, well completions and stimulations, reservoir evaluation and enhanced oil recovery and economics.

Individual papers were also presented in artifical-lift methods, new cementing and stimulation materials, improved fracture design, EOR design and case histories, drilling and production forecasts and engineering salary trends.

More than 50 exhibits in all phases of recovery were on display at the Midland Center during the two day affair.

Keynote speaker for the conference was Danny J. Boggs, deputy secretary of the U.S. Department of Energy. Boggs has an extensive career in the energy field and is the department's second highest ranking officer.

Other speakers for the gathering were: Larry A. Turner, general manager Gulf Oil Exploration and Production Co., western division and E.E. Runyan, of Bell Petroleum Services. Runyan is the 1983 AIME president and past president of SPE.

Speaking on the subject of oil and gas exploration to the year 2,000, E.E. Runyon, AIME president, said that the world would probably not see any real shortages of oil and gas into the year 2,000, because there was still enough undiscovered oil and gas to supply the needs.

He said that this did not take into consideration 'politically' contrived shortages which could take place at anytime as a result of war, revolution or other political devices.

"We may not like its price or its location politicially," said Runyon,"but the oil will be available. The world supply of oil looks good, but the U.S. supply looks pretty grim."

He discounted predictions of a collapse of oil prices as "ridiculous." Said Runyon: "In the long term, no one can continue selling oil for less than its replacement cost. As finding oil increases in cost and exploration areas become more hostile–environmentally and politically–the cost of oil must go up."

The oilman said that contrary to opinion the closing of the Straits of Hormuz would hurt us, because even though 10 percent of U.S. oil comes through the straits, oil would have to be purchased elsewhere during a disruption, and would go to the highest bidder.

He said that the basinal prospects to find upwards of an additional 500 billion barrels of oil existed, but world governments would have to allow the free market to operate and provide a stable political environment to find it.

Said Runyon: "Internationally, the exploration industry has reached a stage in its development similar to that of the domestic industry in the 1960's. Most of the large, obvious structures in the accessible basins have been tested. Exploration activity in these basins is now in its second round where smaller structures and stratagraphic plays are being tested on the basis of greater well control and improved geophysics."

More than 50 exhibitors, including Halliburton Services, were on hand at the recovery conference

Gulf Oil's corporate undoing may have been its own doing

By EARL BOHN
AP Business Writer

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Gulf Corp.'s agreement to merge into Standard Oil Co. of California could be the final chapter for a company that began in glory at Spindletop, Texas, soared to dizzying heights on foreign oil but then staggered through a decade of trouble at home and abroad.

One of the Seven Sisters of international oil, Gulf agreed last week to merge with Socal to avoid possible liquidation at the hands of a Texas oil man whose company is only a fraction the size of Gulf.

T. Boone Pickens Jr., a petroleum geologist who once worked from the back of a station wagon and is now the gutsy chairman of Mesa Petroleum Corp., marched past various hurdles placed in his way by Gulf's management to push his investor group's stake in the company to 13.2 percent and bid for 8.2 percent more. He planned to oust the board and reorganize or liquidate the company.

If approved by the Federal Trade Commission, the proposed merger between Gulf, the nation's sixth-largest oil company based on 1983 production, and No. 5 Socal would create the industry's third-largest company behind Exxon Corp. and No. 2 Mobil Corp. It would also be the largest corporate merger in U.S. history at $13.3 billion, or $80 for each share of Gulf stock.

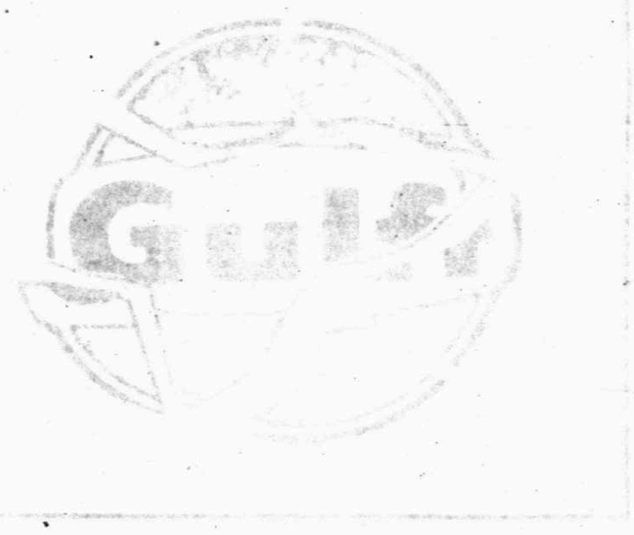

While Pickens, 55, may have driven Gulf into the arms of Socal, industry observers, analysts and at least one former Gulf manager say the groundwork for Gulf's undoing was laid years ago. Some say it was Gulf's own doing.

One Wall Street analyst blamed the company's problems on "just a lot of bad advice" to James E. Lee, who has been chairman since December 1981, and his predecessors.

The decision by Gulf's board of directors to abort their $4.8 billion takeover bid for Cities Service Co. in 1982 may have been the miscue that inspired Pickens, said the analyst, who spoke on condition he not be quoted by name.

Tulsa, Okla.-based Cities Service said then that it was "astounded" by Gulf's backing out. Gulf blamed it on the FTC's objections to anti-competitive aspects of the deal, but Cities Service accused Gulf of reneging on its pledge to "vigorously" seek a settlement with the regulators.

"That signaled to Mesa that the management at Gulf didn't have that much control over its board of directors," the analyst said. "Mesa sensed a vulnerability there. And that was on top of the fact that Gulf had a depressed stock price because of poor financial performance for years."

Gulf breakup will end an era.

Weakness at the top of Gulf was Pickens' theme from the start as his group began accumulating Gulf shares last fall.

Pickens claimed that after 42 years with Gulf, Lee owned only 21,000 shares of stock. In a December proxy statement, Gulf said its directors and officers owned fewer than 325,000 shares and held options on 1.1 million shares.

"Managers without meaningful ownership are more concerned with job security, perks and power than with shareholder interests," Pickens said in a speech at the University of Texas last month.

Pickens also hammered hard on the fact that Gulf's petroleum reserves have been declining.

Gulf also has carried a thorn in its side since agreeing in 1964 to sell Texas Eastern Trasmission Corp. a minimum of 500 million cubic feet of natural gas per day at prices long since outstripped by market forces. The contract runs through 1990.

The company had its beginnings when the Spindeltop well roared in on Jan. 10, 1901, in Texas, and it grew with the financial backing of Pittsburgh's Mellon family to become one of the world's leading oil traders by the 1960s.

Gulf had turned down an offer to explore what proved to be immensely rich oil fields in Saudi Arabia, but it later recovered by sharing Kuwait's oil wealth with British Petroleum. Gulf also developed huge reserves in Venezuela.

"Gulf was the largest crude oil-selling company in the world. We had great strength, great organization," said a former manager in Gulf Oil Trading Co. who asked not to be identified.

But the Kuwaiti holdings, which produced more than a million barrels of oil a day for Gulf at one point, were nationalized along with Gulf's properties in Venezuela in 1975. Gulf dropped from second to fifth place among worldwide crude producers.

"The loss of the Kuwait concession was probably the telling loss. They never seemed to be able to come back. Gulf seemed to lose its way," the former manager said.

Trouble began to pile up in the 1970s with disclosures that Gulf had maintained an illegal $10 million political slush fund for politicians.

Jerry McAfee, former president of Gulf Canada, stepped up to become chairman with a clean image when Dorsey was forced to resign in 1975 along with three other company officials. Among them was Claude C. Wild Jr., the company lobbyist who pleaded guilty to funneling $100,000 to President Richard Nixon's re-election campaign.

In 1976, Gulf's Canadian subsidiary was accused of involvement in an international cartel to fix the price of uranium. The company pleaded no contest to federal antitrust charges. Gulf also settled out of court with Westinghouse Electric Corp., which had charged 29 uranium producers of trying to drive middlemen, like itself, out of the uranium business.

Then in December 1978, Fred W. Standefer, Gulf's former vice president for tax administration, was convicted on nine criminal counts charging that he gave illegal gratuities to Cyril J. Niederberger, who headed an Internal Revenue Service team auditing the company's books. Gulf pleaded guilty to four of nine counts.

Houston firm claims to have had best first year sales in history

HOUSTON (AP) — Two years ago, Compaq Computer Corp. was just a sketch on the back of a Houston pie shop placemat. Today, the firm is basking in the glow of $111.2 million in 1983 sales and is building a new administrative complex in hopes of doubling its staff.

"We are laying claim to the most successful first business year in U.S. history," says Ken Price, Compaq director of marketing communications. He said Compaq researched 6 million companies to be able to make that claim.

In fact, Price says one of the biggest problems the firm has had is producing enough computers to meet demand.

Compaq's star is attached to a 28-pound portable computer unveiled in November 1982. The Compaq was not the first portable computer, but it had one feature that made it different from others.

"Compaq was the first IBM-PC-compatible portable. That was the key to their success," says Harold Kinne, senior vice president of Future Computing, a Richardson, Texas-based marketing research firm.

"PC" is the industry's term for "personal computer," a word or data processor that sits on a desktop and which may or may not be portable.

Price says Compaq's founders, believing the IBM-PC would become the standard for the industry — as it has — designed a machine that could be used with IBM software.

Compaq shipped its first portable personal computer in January 1983.

"From then on, demand was in excess of manufacturing capability," Price says. In the fourth quarter of last year alone, Compaq shipped more than 56,000 computers, worth better than $52 million. The company's success also came at a time when many businesses were feeling the pinch of the slow national economy and when some computer firms were pulling out of the market.

The story of the Compaq PC is legendary in the computer industry. The placemat sketch was drawn by two former Texas Instruments Inc. executives, Rod Canion and James Harris. They were joined by TI marketing executive William Murto. Now, Canion is president, and Harris and Murto are vice presidents. And Compaq has a 700-person workforce, which Price says the firm hopes to double.

Canion said Compaq was organized with growth in mind by hiring people suited to a large company.

"We felt like the opportunity in the PC industry was so great that if we were going to dive into that, we needed to be prepared for success," Canion said. Preparing for success, he said, meant hiring people who could make the company strong in all areas, such as marketing, production and administration.

"We hired the best people we could find," he said. Several of those people were former TI employees.

TI subsequently filed a suit against Compaq in April 1983, alleging the firm had stolen trade secrets, interfered with employee contracts, misappropriated trade secrets and infringed upon the company's patents. However, the two companies settled out of court in April 1983.

The company sold 6 million shares of stock in December 1983, when it made its first public stock offering, said Compaq Vice President Jim D'Arezzo.

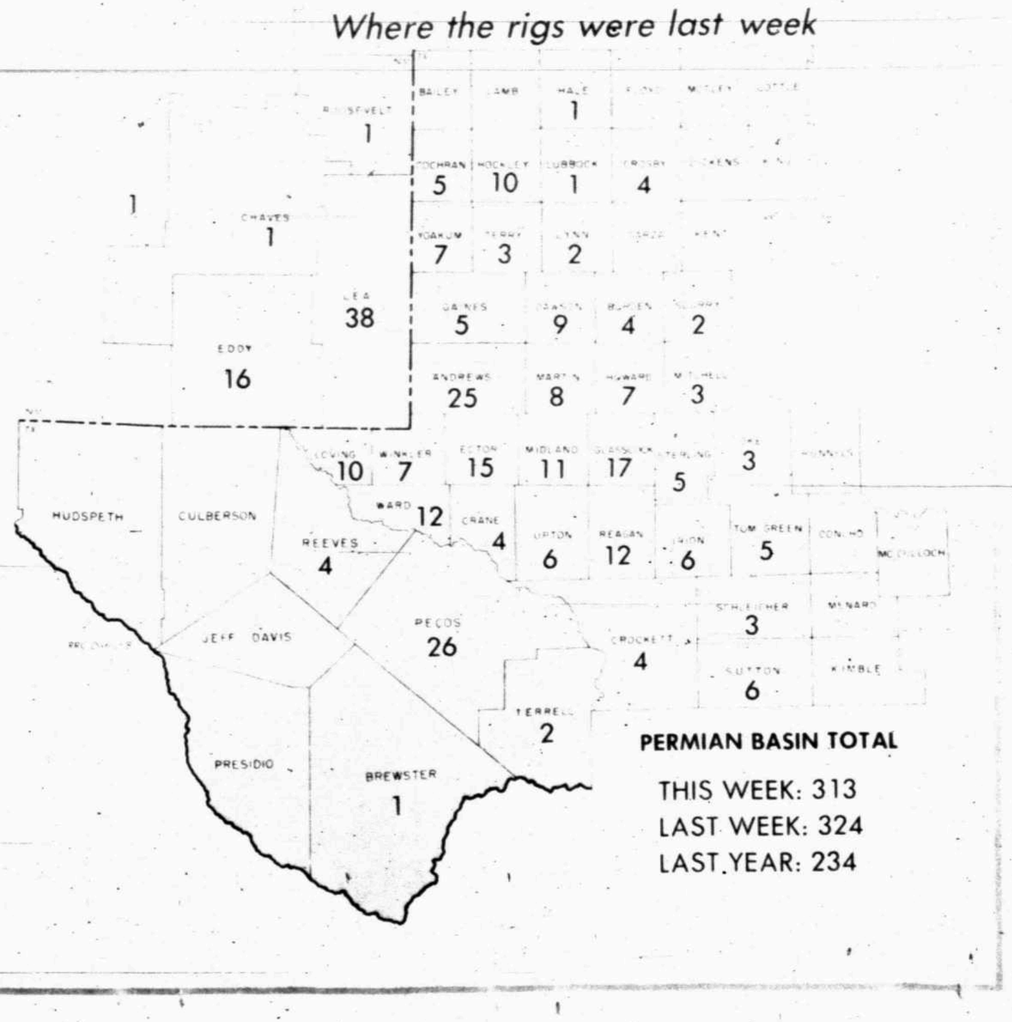

"It sold out almost immediately," D'Arrezo said, and brought in more than $61.3 million. The company sold an additional 512,000 shares in January, bringing in another $5.3 million, D'Arrezo said.

Compaq started with 24,000 square feet of manufacturing space. It has expanded to 170,000 square feet. And the company recently broke ground for a new administration and office complex that will add more than 420,000 square feet.

Compaq's designers not only made their product compatible to the IBM-PC, but also improved upon it.

The Compaq PC has a 9-inch diagonal screen with green text. It features dual mode display, meaning one monitor can display both text and graphics. The IBM-PC, on the other hand, required a separate monitor to display both, Price said. In addition to portability, the Compaq also had a memory that was cheaper to expand and a stronger power supply than its non-portable counterpart.

First City offering new IRA

First City National Bank of Midland, is now offering a new individual retirement account program. The First City Self-Directed IRA is part of an expanding package of financial products First City is developing now that banks can participate in "non-traditional" banking services.

First City is the first major banking institution in Texas to offer an IRA program that allows customers to buy and sell securities with their IRA funds. The special IRA account is designed to offer flexibility in generating funds for retirement.

Bill Franklin, President of First City, commenting on a new service, said, "In today's rapidly changing economic environment, flexibility is the key to successful investment strategy. With our new Self-Directed IRA, customers have many more investment alternatives available than with traditional IRAs. Customers decide for themselves how their contributions are invested. They can direct the purchase and sale of stocks, bonds, and covered call options. And, they can change their inestments at any time to take advantage of current market opportunities."

Every dollar contributed to an IRA, up to the maximum $2,000 allowed by law, can be deductecd from income reported for tax purposes. Depending on an individual's tax baracket, this can save up to $1,000 per year, and IRA earnings are tax-deferred until withdrawals from the account begin.

IRA cntributions are made in cash with one annual payment, or in multiple contributions of $100 or more over the course of a year. A lump-sum rollover distribution from an employer plan also is available, and securities can be contributed to the rollover account.

First City Self-Directed IRAs have two components: one, a money market savings account, is used to make contributions and to hold cash; the other, a brokerage account, is used for trading and holding securities. Customers can place tradeorders by telephone, and a written confirmation will be sent the next busienss day.

These new Self-Directed IRAs are available at First City for a fee of $25 per year, regardless of the assets in the account. Customers can take advantage of substantial savings of up to 70 percent on brokerage commissions when placing trading orders for their IRA accounts. Since customers make their own investment decisions, the cost to operate the service is significantly lower than costs associated with IRAs offered by full-service brokerage firms.

Foreigners investing more money in Texas

DALLAS — Foreigners have invested more money in Texas than any other state except California, and this investment has directly created 136,000 jobs, says RepublicBank Corp.'s Regional Economist Dr. Edward L. McClelland.

In 1980 foreigners held direct interest in 1,387 U.S. affiliate businesses in Texas, and those enterprises had a gross book value of nearly $14.4 billion, according to findings of the U.S. Bureau of Economic Analysis. California ranked first with foreign investment in 1,649 affiliate businesses with a gross book value of $15 billion. New York ranks third in foreign direct investment.

"Foreigners have invested heavily in the state although their investments constitute a relatively small part of the state's economy," Dr. McClelland states in the new March issue of Economic Perspective.

The petroleum industry in Texas attracted most of the foreign investments with a 38 percent share of gross book value of foreign investment. Chemicals and real estate ranked second and third, respectively.

The foreign countries with the most investment in Texas were the Netherlands — which accounted for nearly a third of the total foreign investment, largely through operating divisions of Shell Oil and Schulumberger Ltd. — followed by Canada, with heavy investments in commercial and residential real estate, and the United Kingdom and Germany, both of which have invested primarily in maufacturing.

While foreign ownership of Texas land has increased six fold inthe past 10 years, Dr. McClelland says, only about one half of one percent of the state's land area was ownedd by foreigners in the 1980 BEA survey.

On the other hand, he notes, foreign investment in all mineral rights, both owned and leased, totaled 4.7 million acres or 2.8 percent of the state's land area. Europeans owned the largest amount of acreage, followed by Latin Americans and Canadians.

"Initially, foreigners were attracted to Texas mainly for locational reasons. For example, foreign oil companies moved here to join the search for oill and gas, and related supply and processing industries followed close behind," Dr. McClelland says. "Location remains an important factor. In a area when trade restrictions are imoposed or threatened, one way around trade barriers is to establish a presence in the country that might impose such limitations."

Moreover, he says, the United States is perceived as a "safe harbor" for investment where the political system is stable, foreign investment is permitted, and taxes are not burdensome.

Texas has attracted a substantial share of the foreign investment because state and local organizations seek out business investment and the state imposes no corporate income taxes.

RepublicBank Corp. — the nation's 21'st largest banking organization — has 37 affiliate banks in Texas with combined assets of more than $19 billion. Its flagship affiliate, RepublicBank Dallas, is the largest bank in Texas.

Jobsite theft, vandalism a nationwide problem

WASHINGTON, D.C.- Theft of construction equipment and vandalism on jobsites is a nationwide problem and California is high on the list. Statistics also reveal that most construction equipment is stolen between 5 p.m. Friday and 8 a.m. Monday.

The toll of equipment theft has been the highest in the southwest and west, with Texas heading the list, according to a report by the Associated General contractors of America (AGC). Caifornia is ranked second.

But all areas of the country are being hit, and about half the states in the top-10 list are in the Midwest, according to Gene Rutledge, a special investigator for the Caifornia Highway patrol who specializes in construction equipment theft.

The value of construction equipment makes it a lucrative target for thieves, the AGC reported. Among the most frequently stolen pieces of equipment, bulldozers cost over $70,000, truck loaders over $115,000, and combination backhoe and front end loaders over $38,000.

"It's a serious problem for contractors," Richard S. Pepper, AGC president, said. "The value of the equipment is, of course, significant, but the time lost on a job until the stolen equipment is replaced may prove more costly to the contractors."

In the past, stolen construction equipment has offered big-dollar rewards, often with relatively little risk. "The thieves operate like professionals," Pepper, a Chicago contractor, added. "They know when and how to strike."

Contractors and law officers, however, are starting to effectively strike back. Equipment manufacturers are developing standardized number identification systems and a Manufacturer's Certificate of Ownership document to establish rightful ownership and provide police officers with a "paper trail" for investigating the thefts.

Local AGC chapters are expanding crime prevention networks to educate contractors and law enforcement officers and help them develop theft prevention sys-tems.

"If a thief thinks he can complete the job in five minutes or less, he'll do it," according to Jim Baylor, a former Texas highway patrolman who now is president of Texas' statewide Construction Crime Prevention Services, Inc.

"But if he encounters any barriers — such as watchdogs, fences, lights or guards — that will lengthen the time," Baylor added. "Then he'll probably go elsewhere."

Steel firms drop merger pact

PITTSBURGH (AP) — U.S. Steel Corp. today said it terminated its merger agreement with National Intergroup Inc., parent of National Steel Corp., due to expected resistance to the combination by the U.S. Justice Department.

"Following our intensive study of the methodology the Justice Department would use in analyzing our merger proposal, it was clear the Department would challenge it," U.S. Steel Chairman David Roderick said in a statement.

The Justice Deparment recently said it opposed LTV Corp.'s proposed merger with Republic Steel Corp., and many expected the department would take a similar stand against the U.S. Steel-National merger.

Roderick said that after meeting with J. Paul McGrath, chief of the Justice Department's antitrust division, he was convinced there was "no room" to negotiate a settlement.

"The conditions for acquisition set forth by the Justice Department were unnecessarily harsh and punitive," Roderick said. "With the need to further improve production efficiency in the steel industry, mathmatical formulas in measuring anti-trust implications as used by the Justice Department should be abandoned in favor of a more logical approach of reason and circumstance."

U.S. Steel, the nation's largest steel producer, had said it would acquire National Intergroup's National Steel subsidiary to take advantage of production efficiencies. National, mainly a producer of sheet used in the appliance and auto industries, offered relatively modern equipment that U.S. Steel could have bought for less than it would cost to build them.

McGrath said on Feb. 15 he would sue to stop the $770 million merger between Republic, the nation's fourth-largest steel producer, and LTV, which owns No. 3 Jones & Laughlin Steel Corp., because the deal would give the surviving company too great a share f the sheet and stainless steel markets.

"It is remarkable that in stating its reasons for blocking this merger the government would fail to consider the world's steel market and competitive materials when calculating market shares," National Intergroup Chairman Howard M. Love said in a statement.

Even though imports captured about 20 percent of the nation's steel market in 1983, McGrath said he disregarded imports in calculating the market shares that would have gone to LTV-Republic had he approved the merger.

Officials of the prospective merger partners have recently been negotiating with antitrust officials to determine whether the deal could win approval if certain facilities were divested.

"The department's action casts a large cloud over any reasonable hope that the National Steel-U.S. Steel merger could be approved. Recent discussions with the Justice Department concerning our proposed merger confim the high probability that it would not be approved," Love said.

"We believe the Justice Department's decision to oppose the LTV-Republic merger is an unrealistic application of the merger guidelines that fails to take into account the competitive realities of today's steel market," he said.

Airline to expand no smoking flights

CHICAGO (AP) — Midway Airlines is considering expanding its experimental smoking ban to other flights after calling its Chicago-St. Louis experimental no-smoking trips a qualified success.

"We have not made a definite decision on whether to ban smoking in any one market or systemwide," said Neal F. Meehan, Midway president and chief operating officer. "But we are considering expanding the smoke-free flight experiment to other cities to determine if we will receive the same passenger support."

For one week recently, no one was allowed to smoke aboard flights between Chicago and St. Louis. Instead, flight attendants handed out "survival kits" of candy, gum and no-smoking hints to people who were getting the jitters from lack of nicotine.

Passengers were asked to fill out questionnaires on whether they liked the experiment. 65 percent were in favor of the ban, 14 percent were against it, and 21 percent didn't care.

The airline also asked the passengers if they would be less likely to fly Midway if they couldn't smoke. Forty percent said they would be more likely to choose Midway, 13 percent said they would be less likely and 47 percent said it wouldn't make any difference.

"These figures indicate that a significant percentage of our passengers ... support the smoke-free flight concept," said Meehan.

Xerox officially opens Latin American plant

AGUASCALIENTES, Mexico (AP) — Xerox officially opened its new Latin American plant here Thursday, and a company official said the investment shows confidence that Mexico will overcome its economic difficulties.

"This plant ... was built during the harshest moments of the crisis through which the country is now passing," said Sidney Stieglitz, president of the board of advisers of Industrias Xerograficas.

"We have (the economic crisis) under control now and there is no doubt that we will eventually overcome it," Stieglitz said.

Stieglitz addressed his remarks to President Miguel de la Madrid, who attended the innauration of the $24 million, 450-square-yard plant. The president did not make a speech.

Xerox said the plant — the production center for Latin America — will make modern photocopy equipment for markets throughout the region.

In building the new plant, the company received tax breaks from the Mexican government, which was eager to see industry locate in areas outside metropolitan Mexico City, Xerox said in a statement. Metropolitan Mexico City has more than 15 million people and is suffering severe congestion and pollution problems as a result.

Xerox has been doing business in Mexico for 20 years.

There are a total of 2,205 people working for Xerox throughout Mexico, according to Abel Nava, personnel supervisor at the Xerox office in the capital city.

The company has 405 employees working at the plant in Aguascalientes, which is located 291 miles northwest of the capital, Nava said.

The main Latin American plant previously was located at Tlalnepantla, which is in Mexico state, across the northern border of the capital city.

A bulletin from Xerox says the decision to move the plant was made in 1981, "with the objective of collaborating with the Mexican government in the solution of excessive centralization of activities of all kinds in the metropolitan area of the country."

Xerox proceeded with its plans even as Mexico in the middle of 1982 entered its worst recession in half a century. President de la Madrid has been saying the worst of the economic crisis is now over, although administration critics charge that the situation has not improved significantly.

The Aguascalientes plant began functioning in October.

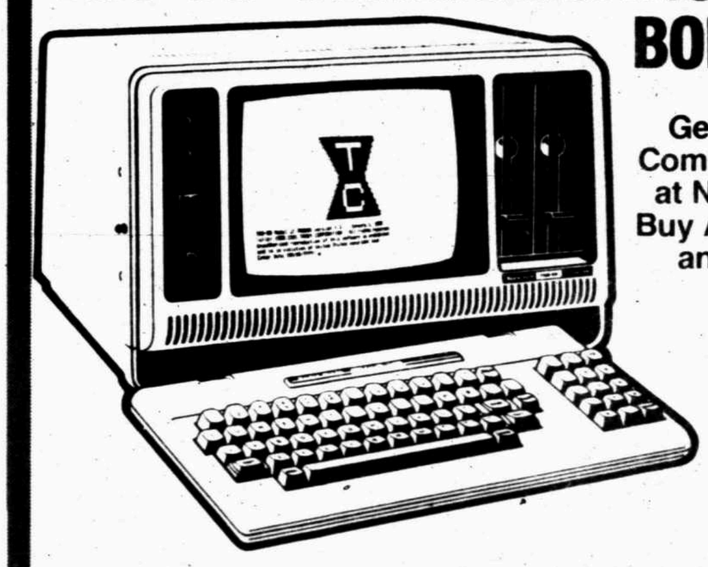

The Xerox bulletin says the company has other unspecified expansion plans in Mexico. "Xerox is considering other interesting manufacturing projects it has in the future for Mexico, with the goal of opening and developing markets for export and for the internal market ... and to create a greater number of jobs," the bulletin said.

The parent company of Industrias Xerograficas is the Xerox Corp., which has main offices in Rochester, N.Y.

Commodity price support program gets overhaul

WASHINGTON (AP) — Driven by desires to trim federal budget deficits and placate angry farmers in this election year, the Senate Agriculture Committee has approved a major rewrite of the government's commodity price support programs for the next two years.

Administration officials say the move, if approved by the full Senate and the House, could save the government some $3 billion over the next four years by freezing certain subsidy payments to wheat, corn, rice and cotton farmers.

But it also would pay those farmers not to grow crops on part of their land, and pay half the 1985 land-idling subsidy in advance — plopping government checks into rural mailboxes just weeks before November's elections.

The committee's action came Thursday after three days of meetings between Agriculture Secretary John Block, administration Budget Director David Stockman, and close to two dozen Farm Belt senators.

Agriculture Secretary John Block, closeted in an adjacent room during Thursday's committee session, emerged afterward to term the bill a step "in the direction of more emphasis on exports and less emphasis on individual payments."

Sen. Robert Dole, R-Kan., who organized the rewrite effort as a way to improve this year's wheat subsidy program, called the product "a rather vast improvement."

But the measure still faces potential problems on the Senate floor because of objections from a handful of senators who say the bill is unfair to the commodities they represent. Dole said aides would try to work those problems out this weekend, and the bill could be brought to the floor next week.

Sen. John Melcher, D-Mont., hinted he might try to filibuster the measure if the program is not sweetened still further for wheat farmers. Other members, notably Sens. Howell Heflin, D-Ala., and David Pryor, D-Ark., served notice they may try to remove cotton and rice from the package.

The signup deadline for commodity programs is March 16, a date Block said would hold for corn, rice and cotton because those programs would not be affected until 1985 under the bill. But he said the deadline for wheat would be extended if it appears Congress is serious about passing the revisions.

If the Senate approves, the bill still must be endorsed by the House, which has passed a wheat improvement bill of its own.

As worked out during private sessions, the new commodity supports would include a freeze on 1985 target prices — the price farmers are guaranteed they will get for their corn, cotton and rice — at 1984 levels. The target price for wheat would be frozen for both 1984 and 1985 at $4.38 a bushel, seven cents below the planned 1984 level.

In return, farmers would get diversion payments at varying levels if they agree to idle a specified proportion of their cropland. The promise of up-front payments of half that amount brings assurance of increased cash flow to farmers who are in a cost-price squeeze and often have to scrape to come up with the cash for seed and fertilizer.

Additional sweeteners were added in the form of some $2 billion in aid to agricultural exports. That includes a $325 million increase in funds for providing grain to needy third-world countries and about $1.6 billion over two years for export credit subsidies to countries that need help in buying U.S. farm roduce.

More credit help would also be given domestically to farmers suffering from drought or other "economic emergencies." The government would make available an additional $250 million for direct low-interest loans to producers. Eligibility rules for the loans also would be liberalized, and ceilings for operating loans would be doubled.

Taco Villa reports record earnings

Taco Villa, Inc. has announced the highest earnings in its 15 year history, with a 95 percent increase in net income over 1982.

Results for the 52 weeks ended December 28, 1983 on a historical basis were $1,142,705 in net income or $.31 per share on revenues of $25.6 million as comared to $586,623 in net income or $.16 per share on revenues of $25.1 million for 1982. Sales have grown every ear since Taco Villa's inception in 1968.

Taco Villa is a chain of Mexican-style family restaurants located in Texas and New Mexico. The company currently operates 41 company-owned restaurants, with 4 other Taco Villas operating as franchises. President, Bobby D. Cox attributed the otustanding earnings increase to cost controls and several innovations which added to sales. He noted the introduction of the "Salad Ole"', a new product developed and added to the concept's menu in 1983, and the opening of the company's first shopping mall location.

It is anticipated that 1984 will also show accelerated growth for Taco Villa. In all, construction will begin on 12 new units in 1984, and remodeling is scheduled for 10 existing units. An even more aggressive growth plan is slated for 1985.

Center to link UTPB with business

Providing information in support of economic industrial diversification and development efforts in the Permian Basin is one of the objectives of a new business research center which opened this week at The University of Texas of the Permian Basin.

The Permian Basin Center for Business and Enterprise Studies, which will function under the auspices of UTPB's College of Business Administration, will be directed by Dr. Corbett Gaulden, Jr., UTPB assistant professor of marketing.

Gaulden said one of the major functions of the center will be to provide comprehensive statistics in business, industry and economics in the Permian Basin or West Texas areas.

"It will be our mission to serve the needs of the business community in terms of collection, analysis and distribution of economic, industrial, business activity, demographic and related information and statistics," he said.

The current avalable material is fragmented or sporadic in its distribution, completeness and usefulness," he said. "We believe the center will provide a partial solution to this problem."

"We plan to provide an interface between the business community and the faculty and other resources of UTPB, and hope to become a sounding board for investigation of ideas and strategies for economic ad industrial diversification and development in the region," he said.

Dr. J. Edwin Becht, dean of UTPB's College of Business Administration, saidd funding for the center will be predminantly through privatecontributions and fees. "The College of Business Administration Advisory Council is providing seed money to begin operation, and the university has pledged initial support in terms of riormal operational facilities in the early phase," he said. "We are already planning seminars which will generate some funds."

"As the project begins to take shape, it will be necessary to secure additional funding to upgrade all aspects of the operation and to provide the director with a budget for travel and other related expenses," Becht said, noting the director's job will eventually become full time. He said full-time personnel will be added as needed, but positions will be staffed by UTPB students until full-time professionals become necessary.

UTPB President Duane Leach noted the center will function as a contact linking the university to area industrial business community.

"One long-term goal is to help the university be a significant partner in areawide efforts to define goals in economic and industrial diversification," he said. "We want this to become a nationally recognized business research center which attracts statewide and national attention to the area. It is this type of activity which both broadens and deepens the quality oof the university's programs," Leach added.

Gaulden, who did much of the planing for te center, was on the faculty at Arizona State University before accepting his current position at UTPB. He has extensive consulting exxperience andhas written numerous articles for books adprofessional journals. He holds a PhD in marketing from Louisiana State University, a Master of Business Administration degrees from Northeast Louisiana University and a Bachelor of Science degree from Southeastern University.

The office for the Permian Basn Center for Business and Enterprise Studies is located in CR 403 in UTPB's main building. Persons desiring information may cal the center at 367-2323.

Chambers sponsoring seminar

The Midland and Odessa Chambers of Commerce are sponsoring a regional seminar on the Small Business Innovation Research program in cooperation with the Governor's Office of Economic Development. The SBIR program can priovide up to $550,000 in federal funds for research and development.

Area investors and business representatives can attend the seminar on writing, budgeting and filing project proposals from 1:00 — 4:00 p.m., March 12 a the West Texas Education Service Center.

"Small firms produce 24 times as many technological innovations per research and development dollars spent as large compaies, yet lack of seed capital has made it difficult for small companies to develop and market their ideas," Governor White said.

"The Small Business Innovation Act of 1982, is designed to remedy this problem by requiring all federal agencies with research and development budgets of $100 million or more to reserve a percentage for a Small Bbusiness Innovation Research Program" the Governor said.

This program gives small firms of 500 employees or less a chance to apply for a maximum $50,000 from participating federal agencies for a six-month, in-house study to test a new technological concept. Program participarts, who can develop tenchnicaly feasible proposals with commercial potential, are eligible for Phase 11 awards of up to $500,000 under the Small Business Innovation Research program to ly the groundwork for developing a portotype.

"Our state must compete more aggressively for these dollars," Governor White said. "By helping small Texas companies obtain federal funds to develop tomorrow's technology, state government is renewing its commitment to bolster this impotant segment of the business communithy." This program can be of particular benedfit to the diversification of the area economy.

Open gas market urged

WASHINGTON — The American Iron and Steel Institute has urged the Federal Energy Regulatoy Commission (FERC) to allow all natural gas consumers and local gas distribution companies to buy gas on the open market at the best price available and have it transported by gas pipelines on a non-discriminatory basis.

The Institute called on the FERC to reject the so-called "special marketing programs" which, it said, allow pipelines to divide up their markets, charge rates on presumed ability-to-pay, and shift costs to those customers now considered "captive".

Testifying at a public FERC hearing on behalf of AISI, Gerald R. Curtis, Director of Engineering for Armco, Inc., said that the special marketing programs reminded the steel industry "all too closely" of the incremental pricing program.

State considers board to study worker's compensation policy

By Bill Kidd

AUSTIN —State Board of Insurance is considering appointment of an advisory committee for further study of the new "simplified" worker's compensation policy proposed for use in Texas by the National Council on Compensation Insurance.

SBI earlier delayed action on the policy after a public hearing Jan. 17, when various groups (including the Texas Association of Business, Texas Automobile Dealers Association and Associated General Contractors of Texas) asked for additional time to review the proposal.

While there doesn't appear to be strong opposition to the concept, concerns have been raised regarding changes in coverage which could result from the modified language of the polilcy.

The delay could mean the policy won't be adopted until this summer, or later, if it does win SBI approval.

Texas Savings and Loan League Executive vice president Durward Curlee reports the States savings and loan industry is continuing its recovery, with increased activiy in lending.

"Things are looking up," Curlee reports, and should continue to do so" as long as interest rates stay down."

Associations are "working old loans off, and putting variable rates (on mortgage loans) on the books," he reports.

Biggest controversy in the industry at present, Curlee says, is use of brokered funds ("a national matter"), with the securities industry "sending lots of money into Texas and California."

The Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. and Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corp. have been looking at that situation, Curlee notes.

"Generally", he comments, "Texas likes the idea of brokered funds," sincee many associations are "cash hungry".

Curlee reports the Savings and Loan League has been looking at Federal legislation regarding defining thrift institutions in terms of their investment in housing, with 60 per cent having been suggested (and 65 per cent at the State level) regarding assets.

That, he feels, would be acceptable to most Texas associatons. "We need to tell our constituencies we are going to stay in housing, and we are," Curlee says. "That's where we have all our expertise."

But, he adds, it's likely that associations will become more specialized in the type of lending they perform.

Curlee says the league is looking at some possible legislative matters for 19785, including the question of associations taking public funds.

"We can provide better collateral and give the public a higher yield are going to stay in housing, and we are" Curlee says. "That's where we have all our expertise."

But, he adds, it's likely that associations will become more specialized in the type of lading they perform.

Curlee says the league is looking at some possible legislative matters for 1985, including the question of associations taking public funds.

"We can provide better collateral and give the public a higher yield," he argues.

And, he says, changes in homestead provisions to permit borrowing against a home-owner's equity in his or her home are likely to be brought before the 1985 Legislature, but league-members remain divided on that question, he says.

Texas Housing agency is preparing to implement a new multi-family housing program with the Federal National Mortgage Administration, although THA Executive Administrator Earlens Jewett says the program may run afoul of actions by the U.S. Treasury.

Jewett reports the Reagan Administration, as part of its tax package, has proposed to a prohibition against such programs, and Treasury is seeking legislation with an effective date of March 31.

However, she comments, "this possibility had already been faced during the past session of Congress," and it appears that neither the U. S. House Ways and Means Committee nor the Senate Finance Committee is inclined to include such a ban.

If the program can be implemented, she says, it will provide for increased participation by developers in various parts of Texas, rather than only the "maga-builders" in metropolitan areas.

Fannie Mae's guarantee would take the place "of either a lender having to put up collateral from its own portfolio or a developer having to get a guarantee from an insurance company," Jewett explains.

"It would allow more people to participate."

But, she says, Treasury's efforts to stop such programs could create market problems, and uncertainty on "giving any assurance at all to investors that their security will remain tax-exempt."

THA is looking at a bond sale for financing multi-family units under its existing program, with that sale expected to be held smetime this month.

Jewett says the sale will be "a small one," with the exact amount determined by projects which have qualified.

Texas faces surge of vets over 65

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Texas faces a 97.6 percent surge in the number of veterans over the age of 65 in the next 10 years. Many of them may go without adequate medical treatment unless Veterans Administraton facilities are expanded, renovated or constructed, the Associated General Contractors of America (AGC) reported today.

While Texas is expected to have 249,900 veterans over 65 years old in 1984, the total will soar to a projected 493,900 persons by 1994, accordng to government figures researched by the AGC.

The most urgent need is for new and expanded container terminals, the AGC added, particularly along the North Atlantic and Pacific coasts.

Other major needs are for new dry bulk cargo berths and new liquid bulk facilities. For adequate coal handling facilities, said that by 1990 the Gulf coast will need six new terminals, and North Atlantic will need one.

The Gulf Coast region leads all others with projections of 55 new prot facilitirs needed by 1990, the AGC found. It is followed by the South Pacific with 49 facilitis, the North Atlantic with 46, the North Pacific with 33, and the South Atlantic with 28.

Raw steel production improving

WASHINGTON — United States production of raw steel continued to show gradual improvement in January, the American Iron and Steel Institute reported today. The month's output was well below pre-recession levels, however.

Production was 7,970,000 net tons, compared with 6,991,000 tons in December and 5,570,000 tons in January 1983 (which was close to the 36-year low reached at the bottom of the recession).

The steel mills operated during Jauary at 69.6 percent of production capability compared with 54.7 percent in December and 43.4 percent in Jauary 1983.

Arizona copper mines decline this year

PHOENIX: Ariz. (AP) — The state's chief economist says the number of working Arizona copper miners will dip this month to the lowest level in 15 years.

Department of Economic of Security economist Dan Anderson said Thursday the planned closure of the Cyprus Bagdad Copper mine on Feb. 11 will put Arizona copper employment at the lowest level since the state began keeping records in 1959, excluding strike periods.

More than 500 jobs will be lost at the Bagdad mine, and Anderson said that will leave only about 12,050 copper workers in the state.

Copper producers, in explaining their decisions to close mines and furlough of workers, in large part have blamed high labor costs and low copper prices caused by reduced demand because of the recent recession and subsidized foreign producers.

The weak demand for copper has cut industry employment from a record 22,500 in July 1981 to about 12,600, Anderson said.

"If you really want to look at the drop, in a period of five months (from April 1982) employment went from 21,900 down to 15,400," Anderson said. "We lost about 6,500 people, which was roughly 30 percent of the industry in a five-month period."

Anderson said he does not expect the industry to rebound soon and that many of those employed in the mines during peak periods will never go back.

"We're figuring 4,000 to 5,000 aren't going to get their jobs back," he said.

War in Persian Gulf now affecting insurance rates

LONDON — Fighting in the Persian Gulf war has now started to affect insurance and shipping rates in the region as markets react to confirmed reports of damage to vessels.

Lloyds, the London insurance exchange, announced an increase Tuesday in war-risk rates on ships traveling to the Iran-Iraq area, in what a spokesman said was the largest boost since the war began. The move followed word that two ships have been hit by Iraqi bombs or missiles in the gulf in recent days.

Sources at the Baltic Exchange, a center for world shippers, said that the price for chartering ships, particularly oil tankers, headed for the gulf area are rising daily and business is tailing off.

The London Financial Times said Wednesday that rates for very large crude oil carriers from the gulf to Europe were now running as much as a third higher than a month ago.

Oil markets, however, are apparently still reacting cautiously to the fighting. Prices on the oil spot market, a key indicator, have continued to edge up only slightly and are now equal to the official OPEC marker price of $30. But analysts said there are no signs yet of a price scramble or big premiums being demanded.

Moreover, the effect of Lloyds' move is more symbolic than real. Although the war rate has been doubled to 1.5 percent of a ship's value from .75 percent, the duration of the insurance has also been increased to 14 days from seven days. The change is a measured one, therefore, but does reflect "sensitivity" to the dangers in the gulf, analysts said.

A week ago, experts on the market movements said prices and other indicators were remaining stable because threats and allegations coming from Iran and Iraq appeared to be exaggerated. In particular, there was no evidence of the raid on tankers at Iran's Khark Island oil terminal that Iraq had claimed.

Confirmed damage to a tanker or proof that Iran intended to carry out its threat to close the Strait of Hormuz at the mouth of the gulf would likely precipitate major upheavals in the insurance, shipping and oil rates.

However, news over the weekend of the hitting of two ships — a 9,000-ton Turkish cargo ship and a 16,000-ton Indian vessel — in the gulf apparently convinced traders that the situation is more serious. So far this year, according to Lloyds, four ships have been damaged in the area from Kharg to the Shatt al Arab estuary that the two countries claim.

For all of 1983, the figure was 14 ships, a Lloyds spokesman said. About 800 merchant ships are thought to be in the region.

Tuesday's revision of war-risk rates means that the gulf area is now regarded by insurers as the most dangerous in the world. But at least three other areas also carry premium rates because of the possibility of attacks by pirates, the spokesman added. They are the Straits of Malacca off Sumatra, the Gulf of Tonkin off Vietnam and the waters off the coast of Nigeria.

In a related development, Britain has firmly denied Iranian allegations that British sources have supplied poison gases allegedly being used by Iraqi troops. A series of statements have asserted that Britain destroyed all stocks of chemical weapons in 1957 and adopted a policy of prohibiting both manufacture and export of equipment that could be used to produce gas.

Court rules on intangible drilling cost deductions

By DONALD J. MASSOGLIA

The U.S. Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit recently upheld the Tax Court decision in Stephen A. Keller v. Comm. In the Keller decision, the Tax Court applied a three-part test to prepaid intangible drilling costs (IDC) that the IRS had previously proposed in the context of prepaid livestock feed.

This three part test required that: 1) the expenditure for IDC must be a payment rather than a deposit; 2) the prepayment must be for a business purpose and not merely for convenience; and 3) the deduction for the year of prepayment must not result in a material distortion of income. The Tax Court applied this test without making the second part of the test an independent requirement because it felt that a legitimate business purpose could satisfy the material distortion of income test. In Keller, the Tax Court found that the prepayments for footage and daywork contracts and the well-servicing contracts were not payments but were instead refundable deposits and therefore not deductible in the year of payment. The IDC prepaid under the turnkey contracts was not refundable and was paid for a business purpose (i.e., locking in rates). The Tax Court held that such turnkey payments were deductible in the year of payment.

In Keller's appeal to th Eighth Circuit, he contended that the three-part test may apply to prepaid livestock feed but should not apply to prepaid IDC. Additionally, Keller argued that the application of the three-part test represented an unfair shift of position from previous IRS revenue rulings and private letter rulings upon which he properly relied.

The Eighth Circuit was not moved by Keller's arguments. It held that: (1) the Tax Court did not err in applying the three-part test in its analysis of the timing of IDC deductions; (2) the Tax Court's finding of no business purposes for the prepayments under the footage and daywork drilling contracts and well servicing contracts was not clearly erroneous; (3) the IRS's private letter rulings and revenue rulings are entitled to some consideration, however they are not controlling authority and do not move the court in this case; and (4) although no court has previously adopted the three-part test, the results in this case are not inconsistent with previous prepaid IDC cases.

Although the decision can be challenged on theoretical issues such as: (1) the appropriateness of applying a three-part test used in the prepaid livestock feed area to prepaid IDC, and (2) the application of the distortion of income test to an expenditure which by its very nature results in a distortion of income, taxpayers and their advisors must give adequate consideration to this decision in the structuring of any IDC prepayments.

American steel in crisis

PHILADELPHIA, PA. — The American steel industry is in a time-sensitive crisis, with its future greatly dependent on the steps business and government leaders take now toward resolving the two major strategic problems — trade and rationalization — confronting it, David M. Roderick, chairman of U. S. Steel and the American Iron and Steel Institute (AISI) said at the Wharton School.

Speaking at an AISI-sponsored economic conference on "Strategic Management in the Steel Industry," Mr. Roderick said that the current unhealthy state of the steel industry won't improve unless definitive, decisive and urgent measures — in addition to those the industry has already initiated — are taken to counteract its decline. He emphasized that even though trade and rationalization "are issues that can be viewed separately, they cannot be separated "when making these important decisions.

The impact of this variance in goals on the steel industry, Mr. Roderick continued, is the severe overcapacity — approximately 200 million tons of steel production that exists in all free world countries except the U. S. But the open U. S. market suffers the adverse effects. "In order to keep factories going full tilt and maintain full employment, the price of exported steel is not determined by the cost of production", he declared. "The result is that the U. S. market is flooded with dumped and subsidized steel."

The domestic industry has three options then, according to Mr. Roderick. It can continue as usual and face certain decline; it can conform to "their" way of doing things; or, it can call the whole trade matter into question and seek some accomodation that is fair to all while preserving competition in a world steel marketplace. It has chosen the latter, and is asking for a temporary legislative solution: The Fair Trade in Steel Act. This measure, he said, would limit imports to 15 percent of the domestic market for five years, and "give time for major adjustments to the trading system worldwide while offering breathing space for rationalization at home."

Rationalization — closing down inefficient operations while at the same time modernizing production facilities to make them more process, cost and quality competitive — will not be easy, Mr. Roderick said.

Average daily production in 1983 was 2,326,225 barrels, down from 2,388,439 barrels daily in 1982 and 2,459,105 barrels daily in 1981.

In December 1983, crude oil production in the state averaged 2,173,450 barrels per day, as compared to the November 1983 volume of 2,327,426 barrels per day. December 1982 production averaged 2,349,532 barrels per day.

The state's top producing counties in 1983 were Pecos, 50,250,720 barrels; Ector, 44,369,476 barrels; Yoakum, 44,030,955 barrels; Gaines, 43,993,824 barrels; Hockley, 37,957,560 barrels; Andrews 37,899,907 barrels; Gregg, 37,807,021 barrels; Scurry, 30,365,899 barrels; Crane, 25,962,893 barrels; and Refugio, 22,506,010 barrels.

Strategic reserves half full

WASHINGTON (AP) — With more than $15 billion already invested, the nation's strategic petroleum reserve is more than half filled and on schedule for completion in late 1990, the Reagan administration said today.

William A. Vaughan, assistant energy secretary for fossil energy, told a House subcommittee that slightly more than 190,000 barrels of crude oil each day are flowing into the petroleum reserve, consisting of underground caverns in Louisiana and Texas.

More than 385 million barrels of crude oil are now stored as insurance against another oil supply disruption, Vaughan said. The reserve represents the equivalent of 90 days' worth of oil imports, making it the largest reserve of any major oil-importing nation, Vaughan said.

Vaughan testified before the House Appropriations subcommittee on the interior in support of the administration's request for $2.3 billion for the strategic reserve during fiscal 1985, including $1.9 billion for oil purchases.

The money would support oil purchases amounting to 145,000 barrels a day during the next fiscal year, a rate Vaughan said would lead to completion of the planned 750 million-barrel reserve sometime during the last three months of 1990.

Members of the committee questioned whether the reserve should be filled more quickly. Congress in the past has supported a fill rate of at least 220,000 barrels per day.

But Vaughan said increasing the purchases would exceed storage capacity, forcing the government to rent temporary storage in tankers or land-based tank farms. At the 145,000-barrel rate, he said, storage construction and oil purchases will mesh.

"We believe that this stable oil fill program represents a sound management approach in light of the continuing need to restrain federal spending," Vaughan said.

Takeover door still open on Texaco?

NEW YORK (AP) — Texaco Inc. has defused one potential takeover threat, but analysts say the giant oil company may have opened the door to future acquisition overtures by "ransoming its shares back."

On Tuesday, Texaco agreed to acquire 25.6 million shares of its stock now held by Bass Brothers Enterprises Inc. in a cash and securities transaction valued at $1.3 billion.

The costly truce with the Fort Worth, Texas, Bass family business sent Texaco's shares plunging $5.875 to close at $38.75 a share, with nearly 3.4 million shares changing hands Tuesday.

Alvin Silber, an oil industry analyst at the investment firm of Dean Witter Reynolds Inc., estimated the profit for the Bass group at $12 a share, or $307 million. He said the quick profit suggests others may try the same tactic.

Adam Leight, an analyst at Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc., said that through the transaction, "Texaco's ransoming its shares back."

"If they are willing to pay the kidnapper the first time," Leight said, "it just opens the door to another attack."

Bass Brothers Enterprises is operated by Sid, Robert, Edward and Lee Bass, the sons of Perry Bass, who inherited much of the fortune of Sid Richardson, a bachelor uncle and legendary oil wildcatter. The private company has interests in oil, real estate and other investments.

Texaco said it would buy 13 million shares of its stock from the Bass group for $50 a share in cash, or $650 million.

The remaining 12.6 million of its shares held by the Bass family would be exchanged for an equal number of new Texaco adjustable-rate preferred stock with a stated value of $50 a share. That is equivalent to about 4.9 percent of Texaco's outstanding common stock.

In exchange, Bass Brothers Enterprises agreed it would not acquire any additional Texaco shares during the next decade and said that the shares it continues to hold in that period would be voted in accordance with the recommendation of Texaco's board.

In January, when the Bass family increased its holdings to 9.9 percent of the outstanding stock in Texaco, speculation grew that the family was building an alliance to launch a takeover for Texaco, the nation's third-largest oil company.

As a result of those rumors, Texaco stock rose from $39 a share at the end of January to $44.625 a share at the close of trading Monday, then gave up all of that gain and a little more.

The agreement is subject to approval by Texaco's board, and Texaco said it would schedule a meeting soon.

Texaco recently purchased Getty Oil Co. for $10.13 billion, in what is the largest corporate takeover in U.S. history.

That mark will be surpassed, however, if Standard Oil Co. of California succeeds in the $13.2 billion bid it made Monday to acquire Gulf Corp. The Federal Trade Commission is reviewing that proposal for any antitrust implications.

Estimated earnings of 42 cents per share told

Texas American Energy Corp. estimated preliminary unaudited net earnings of approximately $2,800,000, or $.42 per common share for the year ended December 31, 1983. The estimate was made by William F. Judd, president of the energy-related company during an interview. The figures for 1983 compare with restated net earnings of $2 million or $.29 per common share for the year ended December 31, 1982.

The company's units are an oil and natural gas exploration and production sement, and a gas utility division in Kentucky. Consolidated operating results for 1982 have been restated to reflect an accounting change for the oil and as exploration and production segment from the "successful efforts" method of the "full cost" method. This change was adopted in the fourth quarter of 1983. The company believes that the "full cost" method more properly reflects the economic facts associated with the discovery and development of oil and natural gas reserves, and is the method most often used by independent oil and gas companies.

Consolidated revenues from continuing operations for 1983 rose approximately 11 percent to $199,400,000 from $179,900,000 in the prior year, due to higher sales at the company's gas utility division.

Judd also estimated that consolitated net earnings from continuing operations should be in the vicinity of $6,300,000 for 11983, as compared with $2,30,000 for the prior year. Reasons for this improvement include: reduction in operating and administrative costs, lower Windfall Profits taxes and lower interest rates. In the third quarter of 1983 the company charged the remaining book value of its refinery and brokerage business operations in Michigan and related future costs to discontinued operations. This resulted in a one-time after tax charge of $3,200,000.

Proved oil and gas reserves at year-end 1983, in equivalent barrels of oil, will be down approximately 10 percent. A significant factor in this reduction was the decrease of $2.44 per barrel in the average price received for oil, while the average price received for gas at the wellhead increased by only 22 cents per thousand cubic feet. Another factor was the intentional decrease in drilling expenditures in 1982 and 1983 due to decreasing oil prices.

Gulf, Pogo to jointly explore gas

SAN ANTONIO — Gulf Energy Producing Co. and Pogo Producing Co. have entered into a Joint Venture and Lease Acquisition Agreement to jointly explore for natural gas reserves underlying more than 16,000 jointly owned acres in Zapata and Webb counties, Texas. Nine separate exploratory test wells will be drilled during 1984 by Gulf Energy and Pogo to depths ranging from 9000 feet to 17,500 feet. Gulf Energy is the originator and operator of the joint drilling and production operations. Other identifiable development drilling is also scheduled for 1985 by joint ventures. Their expenditures for exploration and development are expected to total $25-$30 million by 1984-85.

Deep sections of the Wilcox Formation are the objectives of extensive petroleum exploration drilling in South Texas by numerous major and independent petroleum companies. Several major natural gas discoveries have been made in the Deep Wilcox Formation in this trend during the past several years.

Deep drilling down 52 percent

DALLAS — Deep drilling in the United States declined by 52 percent last year after having reached an all-time high of 1,205 completions in 1982, according to an exclusive report in the March 1984 issue of Petroleum Engineer International magazine.

The Dallas-based publication's annual Deep Well Report indicates that 577 wells were drilled to 15,000 feet or deeper in the U.S. during 1983 — the lowest total for any year since 1977. The magazine adds that the sharp decline brought to an end a string of seven consecutive years in which the number of U.S. deep completions had risen steadily.

Author voices opinion on OPEC

AUSTIN — Rather than worrying about breaking up OPEC, industrial nations should start to implement "policies that would make it possible in the words of an Arab proverb, to eat the grapes from the vineyard without having to kill the watchman."

That is the view of M.S. Daoudi expressed in a recent opinion piece in the Christian Science Monitor.

Tenneco gets Conservation Award

HOUSTON — Tenneco, Inc. has been selected to receive a 1983 National Conservation Award by the National Wildlife Federation, and will be honored at a ceremony at the Federation's Annual Meeting in Atlanta, Ga., on March 17.

"Tenneco has been a pioneer in innovative environmental thinking and international environmental action that place it at the forefront of corporate conservation commitment," said Jay D. Hair, NWF Executive Vice President. "From its support of the National Institute of Urban Wildlife to its work with the California condor recover program, Tenneco has an impressive conservation record that is a model for al corporations."

Offshore drilling recovering

HOUSTON — The international offshore drilling rig market has started a gradual but sustained recovery from a prolonged slump, Petroleum Information International says in its recent issue.

The recovery is being helped by a surge in current and planned exploratory drilling in the U.S. portion of the Gulf of Mexico, the North Sea and offshore the People's Republic of China.

Encroachment brings fine to state

AUSTIN — Texas Land Commissioner Garry Mauro has anounced that the General Land Office has reached an agreement with Texas City Terminal Railway Co. that will net the Permanent School Fund an additional $2.5 million. Mauro said the settlement was arrived at after the Encroachment Division of his agency discovered the Texas City company had illegally built and operated a terminal switching and pipeline operation on 106.76 acres of state coast land.

Mauro said the recovery is te largest encroachment settlement in the history of the state.

Nugent hits regulatory programs

AUSTIN — "Weak in concept, short on logic and far from being in the best interests of Texas consumers" is how Railroad Commissioner Jim Nugent characterized a recent proposal from the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission concerning special marketing programs.

FERC has recently issued a notice of inquiry on the impact of SMPs on natural gas compaies and customers. Nugent's comments were in response to that notice.

"These special marketing programs are nothing more than justification of the interstates raiding supply from Texas pipelines and Texas gas consumers," Nugent said. "FERC is apparently attempting to add their stamp of approval to massive dumping of spot gas sales by the intersstates," he charged.

"There are several sound, sensible, reasonable approaches to slving both the temporary overproduction of natural gas and gas pricing," Nugent said. "Yet every one of these ideas seems to have eluded the majority of the people at FERC.

"If the FERC wants to address the sporadic over- and under-supply situation, all they have to do is establish a prorationing system for Outer Continental Shelf gas production — just as we have done in Texas for years," Nugent said. "Two oof the more enlightened FERC commissioners have already acknowledged this," he added.

"Not only would this solve up and down supply problems, both in Texas and nationwide, but it would also stabilize gas prices, encouraging producers to explore for more gas reserves," he said.

"As for FERC's proposed SMPs, the result will most likely be interstate pipelines grabbing an ever larger share of the market and market reserves — to the detriment of our intrastate pipelines," Nugent explained.

"Of course, the ultimate result will be that in future high-demand situations, our intrastate pipelines may not be able to meet our needs here in Texas — while at the same time, the interstate pipelines will be able to sell a great deal more of our Texas production to the Northeast, probably at a heaper price, leaving Texas consumers out in the cold," he said.

"We must encourage aggressive exploration now," Nugent stressed. "On Christmas Day of last year, texas used more gas than we could produce. Each year, our total production of Texas gas is going down. We face a bleak future of not being able to meet the needs of the people of Texas because we can't produce enugh gas when they need it most — in cold weather."

Deep drilling symposium set

The 1984 Deep Drilling and Production Symposium sponsored by the Society of Petroleum Engineers of AIME and the Amarillo Petroleum Section of SPE will be held April 2 and 3, 1984 in the Amarillo Civic Center.

The two day meeting will feature a technical program of 22 original papers relating to the drilling and production of deep wells (wells in excess of 15,000 ft.)

In addition to the technical sessions, over 70 companies will be exhibiting their products and services. Approximately 1,000 leading oil industry representatives from all over the world will be present for the meeting.

This will be the ninth Deep Drilling and Production Symposium. The first was presented by the Monahans Petroleum Section in March of 1966. It has been held biannually since that time with the Amarillo Section hosting it the last five times.

Social activities for the meeting include a welcoming luncheon on Maonday and a complimentary cocktail party after each day's session. For the ladies, there will be a tour of the Panhandle Plains Museum on Monday and a brunch and stay style show on Tuesday.

Texas A&M, SEDCO set terms for use of ship in drill program

Texas A&M Research Foundation has reached agreement with SEDCO Incorporated of Dallas for the long-term of a drilling ship for the Ocean Drilling Program (ODP) funded by the National Science Foundation (NSF) and nine foreign countries.

The 470-foot ship being considered is SEDCO/BP 471 owned jointly by SEDCO AND British Petroleum. It will drill various sites on the sea floor chosen by scientists from around the world who will try to answer critical questions on the ages and origins of the world's ocean basins and the sediments deposited within them. Testing and shake-down of the ship is scheduled for next fall; the first scientific cruise is scheduled for Jauary, 1985.

The ship is 70 feet wide with a displacement of 16,596 long tons. The derrick towers 200 feet above the water line. A specially designed computer controlled dynamic positioning system keeps the ship over a specific location while drilling in water depths as great as 27,000 feet.

The SEDCO/BP 471 is one of the world's most modern and best equipped drill ships. Its rated drilling depths capabilities rank it among the top of the worldwide dynamicaly positioned drillship fleet. It has a crew of 52 and canaccomodate 50 scientists. The ship was built in Halifax, Nova Scotia, in 1978.

The drilling system will be specially designed to retrieve cores from beneath the sea floor for scientific studies. The rig will be converted so that 30,000 feet of drill pipe for sampling deep ocean basins and trenches can be used and so that a riser system for drilling in 6,000 feet of water can be deployed to retrieve cores from margin areas. A riser is a series of pipes that encases the drill string and provide a path for drilling "mud" to be returned to the ship. This makes it possible to safely drill deeper in sediments near or on cntinental shelves.

The ODP is the successor to the scientific and technical programs of the Deep Sea Drilling Project (DSDP) carried out by Scripps Institution of Ooceanography in LaJolla, Caifornia, from 1966 to 1983, under the sponsorship of the NSF. The DSDP was the first project to drill at great depths in all ocean basins and to retrieve cores from the earth's crust for scientific analyses. This program made invaluable cntributions to the science and technology of ocean drilling, including such firsts as dynamic positioning of a drillship and the remotely guided reentry of the drill string into previously drilled holes.

Working with advanced technology in deep water riser drilling and high temperature and pressure instrumentation, the ODP will be able to answer more difficult questions on the history and evolution of ocean basins.

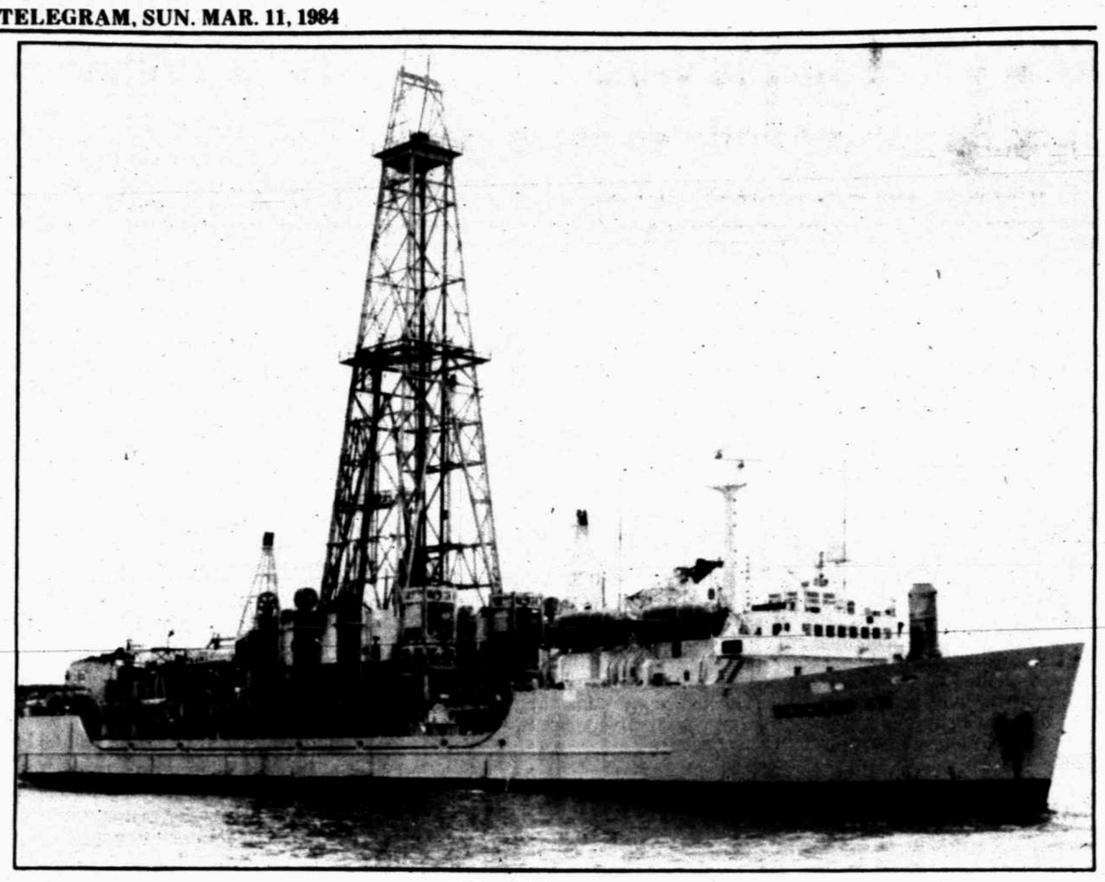

The NSF, a agency of the U. S. Government, has chosen the joint Oceanographic Institutions Inc. (JOI), to be program manager for the ODP. JOI is a consortium of 10 major oceanographic institutions, including Texas A&M University, which provides management support to scientific research programs of international stature. In the ODP, opportunities are provided for earth and ocean scientist to pursue their own field of expertise while combining their knowledge to solve oceanographic, geological and geophysical questions.

Science direction for the program is provided by Joint Oceanographic Institutions for Deep Eaeth Sampling (JOIDES), an international scientific organization composed of earth scientists from U. S. oceanographic intitutions and those of other participating nations. International members include Canada, the Federal Republic of Germany, France, Japan, the United States and the European Science Foundation, which represents Italy, the Netherlands, Sweden and Switzerland.

Operation of the drillship, which includes planning and implementation of the work at sea, will be managed from the ODP Science Operator's headquargers at Texas A&M University, College Station, Texas. This facility will also serve as a repository for cores from the Pacific and Indian Oceans.

In addiion, Lamont-Doherty Geological Observatoy of Columbia University will provide a repository facility for cores obtained from the Atlantic, Antarctic, Mediterranean and Carribbean. Lamont-Doherty will also plan for and manage the wireline logging operations, a procedure used to acquire measurements of physical characteristics of rocks and sediment by electrical, accoustical and other means.

Dr. William J. Merrell, Jr., Associate Dean of the College of Geosciences at Texas A&M Uniersity, is principal investigator of the ODP. Dr. Phillip D. Labinowitz is the Director and Principal Scientist.

The SEDCO/BP 471 is 470 feet long and 70 feet wide, with a 200 foot derrick. The rig will be converted to have a 30,000 foot drill string and will be able to drill in waters 6,000 feet deep. It has a crew of 52 members and can accomodate up to 50 members. About 12,000 square feet of ship space will house science laboratories.

TRC seeks fines against oil companies

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas Railroad Commission said Wednesday it is seeking civil penalities against Big-Tex Oil Co. and Skeeter Oil Co., both of Abilene, for violation of state pollution laws.

The commission asked the attorney general's department to file the suit.

The complaint said that a commission investigator saw a Big-Tex tank truck enter the company's yard in Abilene and begin to dump salt water onto the ground.

The investigator said the driver had a handwritten note directing him to pick up salt water from a Skeeter Oil Co. lease and to "dump the water on the yard."

Wild about the West

EDITOR'S NOTE: When the sixth annual Haley Library Western Art Show and Sale opens March 24 at Midland Center, a Midland resident will be among the 60 artists represented in this by-invitation event. Well-known Western artist Tom Ryan moved to Midland from Sanford this past year. Ryan has won gold medals at both the Cowboy Artists of America and the National Academy of Western Art exhibitions. An invitation for the show and sale may be secured through the Nita Stewart Haley Memorial Library.

Tom Ryan's childhood was one most boys would envy. When Ryan was born in 1922, his hometown of Springfield, Ill., possessed the charm of a quaint America. Winter held the promise of skating and summer, the sureness of fishing and swimming.

"I had been exhibiting at the gallery, (Helen) Teri Card's Gallery (owned by Walter Latendorf until his death). It was on Madison Avenue; it was formerly the Mannados (Indian for old New York) Bookshop of Western Americana. They sold as much art as they did traffic in books.

"At that time, they were dealing principally in (Frederic) Remington and (Charles) Russell and the well-known deceased artists, and I think there were three, or four or five of the contemporary artists including myself. She (Miss Card) put out a catalogue two or three times a year and reproduced our work in the catalogues in order to sell it. And wrote favorable comments about each piece.

"Norman Rockwell was one of her customers for these catalogues. Of course, Norman Rockwell had been doing the Boy Scouts Calendar, the Four Seasons Calendar for Brown & Bigelow of St. Paul, Minn. He knew Clair Fry, the art director there, rather well through these things. He told Clair Fry about my work.

"At that time, they were looking for a Western artist. One day in 1962, I picked up the telephone, and this fellow said, 'This is Clair Fry.' We got together on some sketches. The next year, I had a painting that was to be reproduced for my first Western calendar."

Prior to that, his work as a Western book cover artist resulted in 300 major oil paintings for various publishers in eight years. Ryan developed, during that time, a distinctive color sense and gained experience in composition that few artists painting the Western art scene have. His travels carried him West for sketching trips which left him wanting to know more; however, he'd not yet lived the experiences of today's cowboy on a working ranch.

Brown & Bigelow wanted Ryan to create a painting that combined the flavor of today's livestock industry with strong ties to the past. This job found Ryan on the 6666 Ranch at Guthrie, Texas, for the colt branding.

"I accomplished a lot in a short time, and most of all I came to know such men as Jay Pumphrey and George Humphrey. I gained an insight into their feelings about the past. I sense, more than I hear discussed, that they are reluctant to change because they have an obligation and pride in the past."

Ryan's painting "Two More for Chow" was "the result of an actual incident...in the immediate camp area. Two bulls were exchanging blows and bluffs. Finally, the cook had had enough and ran them off with some vehement language. In sketching the incident, the two culprits were changed to calves."

On this trip and others which followed, Ryan was to discover: "The men today are familiar with modern ranching methods, as well as the old. They are doing the same work that their fathers did, but with modern conveniences. The average ranch hand today lives a much more satisfying life than the oldtime cowboy did. Still in all, the cowhands are disappearing from the scene."

He traces his love of the West back to his childhood, and the stories he heard his parents tell of their lives in Leadville, Colo., during the early 1900s. When he was growing up, he was seen, on numerous occasions, galloping one of his father's horses across fields bareback, wearing a cowboy hat. "The Indian pony was mine. The larger horses, the older brothers and sisters rode."

As an elementary-school-age child, Ryan sat in front of his grandmother and rapidly sketched a good likeness of her. His interest in drawing continued throughout his schooling; frequent visitors at his home were his none-too-complimentary pictures of teachers as well as his drawings of cowboys and Indians.

His answer is quick and to the point when asked if he ever imagined doing anything besides being an artist. "No.

"But, I'll tell you one thing," he adds, beginning a rolling, chuckling laugh. "My father couldn't see me as an artist. What he thought of as an artist was a French beret, wax moustache and the Left Bank (location of Paris' art community). When I mentioned I was thinking about being an artist, my word. Boy."

Ryan comes from at least three generations of coal miners; his grandfather, who came to this country from Ireland in 1882 with two of his brothers, died in a mine accident in Springfield. His father, William, president of the Central Illinois Coal Mining Company, dabbled in politics after his retirement when Ryan was 17 years old. "But other than that, it was coal mining."

Ryan enrolled in art school in St. Louis in 1941 when he was 19. "At that time I knew what I wanted to be, an easel painter, a painter of pictures and not a commercial artist." But World War II spent in the South Pacific with the U.S. Coast Guard separated him from his studies from 1942 until 1945.

BETWEEN THE LINES

Bill Murray

Q. I miss Bill Murray. What's he been doing?

Debra Konyu
Carmichael, Calif.

A. Making movies. He'll have two out later this year: "Ghostbusters," a comedy that reunites him with former "Saturday Night Live" co-star Dan Aykroyd, will be released this summer; and in the fall, "The Razor's Edge," a remake of the film based on W. Somerset Maugham's novel.

The role is Murray's first serious part and there was a bit of industry apprehension at first about whether or not he could pull if off; early talk is that he has, impressively.

Barbara, Diane, Judy and Lisa
McAllen, Texas

A. "El Puma," as he is nicknamed, is 39, Venezuelan and an actor as well as a singer. He has appeared in 17 soap operas in his native land and, in fact, got his nickname from one of the characters he played.

Rodriguez got his showbiz start in a singing group called Los Zeppy, was then drafted into a popular group called Billo's Caracas Boys Orchestra and during the next four years lived the good life in the night life of that city.

He left to become a soloist and TV actor, scored his first international recording hit in 1977 with "Voy a Perder La Cabeza Por Tu Amor" (roughly translated: "Your Love is Driving Me Crazy") and has since done concerts around the world, covering all of Latin America and parts of Europe and the Middle East.

Now he's set his sights on the U.S. and after scattered concerts in the South and New York, he makes his Atlantic City debut later this month. Sometime this year he plans to record his first album in English. Like the other handsome Latin, Julio Iglesias, he lives in Miami.

Q. I'm doing a school project on Buddy Holly and I was wondering if you could help me. What were his most popular songs; how old was he when he started his career; how old was he when he died in the plane crash and why was he on the plane?

Tricia Lipton
Anacostar, Ont.

A. Charles Hardin Holly was 17 when he started his career, performing country-and-western songs with his friend, Bob Montgomery, on a radio station in his hometown, Lubbock, Texas. Spotted by a talent scout in the Lubbock rock show two years later, in 1955, he was signed to a recording contract.

By 1957 he and his group The Crickets, were turning out hits: "That'll Be the Day," "Peggy Sue," "Oh, Boy" and "Not Fade Away."

The next year, he and The Crickets split and he started recording on his own with additional success: "True Love Ways" and "It Doesn't Matter Anymore" among his hits.

At the end of 1958, he went out on tour with new backup musicians — including current country star Waylon Jennings — and that was the reason he was on the plane in which he died. He had just left Clear Lake, Iowa, on February 2, 1959 after a concert when the chartered plane crashed just after takeoff. He was 22 years old.

Sybil Danning

Q. Could you ask Sybil Danning if she plans to make any movies? Also, what movies has she made?

Billy L. Prince, Jr.
Wilmington, N.C.

A. Sybil's been in about 25 movies, first in Europe, now here, mostly in the action-adventure genre such as "Battle Beyond the Stars," "Hercules" and "Chained Heat," in which she played a tough prison inmate who beats up the guards.

She may want to play roles like Meryl Streep's but the "female Clint Eastwood," as she's often called, is resigned to tough, independent, physically active roles.

Next up: episodes of "Simon and Simon" and "Masquerade" plus a pilot for a cable show called "Heavenly Bodies." And she just started another film, "Mata Hari."

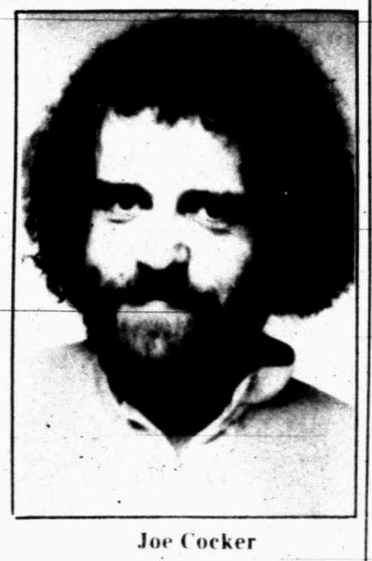

Q. Please tell us about Joe Cocker.

"The Terre Haute Rockers"
Terre Haute, Ind.

A. He's 39, from Sheffield, England, and his real name is John Cocker. He's been in the music business for about 20 years, with varying levels of success. His first big hit was a version of the Beatles song, "With a Little Help from My Friends," in the late 1960s, followed by his appearance at Woodstock in 1969, and then the notorious and successful "Mad Dogs and Englishmen" tour in 1970 that did as much for the careers of Leon Russell and Rita Coolidge as it did for his.

In the last decade, his career has been on the down side, with one bright spot, the hit "You Are So Beautiful" in 1974. Lately, however, it appears to be on the upswing again, sparked by his hit duet with Jennifer Warnes, "Up Where We Belong," and his appearances in the celebrity-packed benefits for fellow musician Ronnie Lane.

This month he starts a world tour, due to hit the States this summer and has just finished a new album. And, yes, there is the matter of his lurching physical appearance on stage, mercilessly parodied by the late John Belushi.

Hearst Feature Service

SAN FRANCISCO — Austrian President Rudolf Kirchschlaeger went home to Vienna after his six-day tour of the United States with at least two life-long dreams realized.

He had a lavish look at California, and he got to visit a working ranch. The Hearst ranch at San Simeon has everything from its own airstrip to its own castle as well as cowboys and cattle and a festive flavor of the Old West.

The Western fling of the Austrian leader was set in motion more than a year ago when Secretary of Interior William P. Clark visited Vienna. "I have wanted to see California all the years of my life," Kirchschlaeger confided. "I have heard about Western ranching from movies and literature and I would like to see a little cattle work."

Clark, a ranch owner himself and a long-time friend of the Hearst family, began the plans that culminated in last weekend's visit. Kirchschlaeger, his wife and top ministers, arrived in Washington on an official state visit that started with formal entertainment at the White House and worked its way across the country to San Francisco.

After Mayor Dianne Feinstein showed the Austrians the scenic highlights of San Francisco, the Commonweath Club of California lined up 880-strong for a gala welcoming reception at the St. Francis Hotel. President Shirley Temple Black greeted President Kirchschlaeger, who discussed "Austria in Today's World" and expressed hope for improved U.S.-Soviet relations.

Kirchschlaeger and his wife, who were guests in the century-old original ranch house of Senator George and Phoebe Hearst, changed into Austrian national dress for ranch festivities. Two hundred guests, including neighboring ranchers and representatives of pioneer California families, were spectators at a parade staged in honor of the visitors.

The Austrian president and his first lady were transported in an antique carriage. Secretary Clark and Amory J. "Jack" Cooke, manager of the Hearst ranches (he and his wife Phoebe were party hosts), followed on horseback and in Western attire. A team of horses drew a vintage ranch wagon with the other guests of honor.

Among those welcoming the visitors were Mr. and Mrs. William Randolph Hearst III and former movie cowboy Joel McCrea, who as a young man had been a working cowboy on the Hearst ranch.

A few toasts, welcomes by Secretary Clark and Cooke, preceded a presentation by Frank A. Bennack Jr., president of the Hearst Corp.

"The pictures of rural scenes in full color were almost breathtaking. Wyeth's work in the magazine ignited a feeling in me that burns today. It was at that precise time, magazine in hand, that I made the decision to become an easel painter in the tradition of that school of painting."

His father was still hoping he might become a mining engineer, but Ryan was determined. He applied for entrance into the American Academy of Art, Chicago, Ill., and was put on its waiting list. In the interim, Ryan worked at an advertising agency.

He was 24. It was at this time that he met his future wife, Jacqueline Ruth Harvey. The two were married in 1946, and Ryan gained admittance into the American Academy in 1947.

"It was a big step, and I was pretty nervous about it. My family and a few friends were anything but encouraging. An art career was thought of as being undesirable, on the par of burlesque."

The American Academy years were followed by a return to Springfield, where Ryan worked full time for another advertising agency, painting late hours and weekends.

"It was at that time that I had an understanding with my art. I was wasting time here. I wanted to be a painter. The urge was very strong to go east for further study."

In the summer of 1951, Ryan began studying at the Art Students League in New York. As his GI Bill benefits started playing out, Ryan made the transition toward making a living by his art, both in illustration and fine arts painting. His winning entry, "The Outlaw," in a school competition to design a Western book jacket launched Ryan on a career of painting book covers and doing illustrations for publishers. Since that time, he has worked continuously as an artist.

His father's attitude began to change when he discovered, after Ryan had been working as an artist about six years, that his son had regular work to do.

"I worked with Brown & Bigelow for a number of years (nine or 10) and I did a calendar for them, a Western one. I believe he kind of felt that that was reaching up and doing something, and he could see that. Then when I won the Gold Medal for painting at the Cowboy Hall of Fame in 1968, that made him feel good. Over the years, he kind of came around to my way of thinking."

Looking back over the transitions in his art career, Ryan says: "I proved to myself in New York, as a Western book jacket painter, that I could average three to four paintings a month. They consisted of a variety of the old epic themes rehashed to form incidents of the Western scene and contributed very little in an art sense. During this time my Western historical background was broadened, my Western interests deepened, and my painting and drawing vastly improved over an eight-year period.

"As I gravitated to the Western historical fine art field, my painting production was cut in half. Later, I averaged six canvases a year, as my purpose took on more meaning. In this day and age, one must realize a living, but at the same time, true creative work cannot be forced."

"I don't believe that I ever finished a painting that came up to my expectations." Laughing that rolling, chuckling laugh again, he quips, "I have a terrific imagination."

Newman wears many hats in latest film

Paul Newman

MALIBU, Calif. — Paul Newman is everywhere in "Harry & Son," his latest movie, which opened last weekend to poor reviews. He not only stars and directs, but co-produced the film and co-wrote its screenplay about the stormy relationship between an aging construction worker and his literary-minded son.

That no longer seems unusual in this era of superstars-turned-film makers, as evidenced by Barbra Streisand, Clint Eastwood or Burt Reynolds. But according to Newman, you'll never see him do all this again.

"Something's got to suffer," Newman said recently, relaxing on the back porch of the Malibu Colony home he and his wife, actress Joanne Woodward, had rented. "You can't pay enough attention to the other actors when you're acting, and you can't do your role justice when you're directing."

Sitting with his feet up on a coffee table, Newman shielded his eyes against the bright sun. He now sports a salt-and-pepper mustache that suggests his 59 years, but the shaded eyes are still the piercing blue that has thrilled Newman fans for 30 years.

THEIR OWNER would prefer that those eyes be looking into the camera from the opposite direction from now on, however. He said he only agreed to star in "Harry & Son" when it became apparent that the movie wouldn't get made any other way.

"A few studios turned down the project with me as director," Newman acknowledged. "That just burns me. I originally said I wouldn't act in the damn thing, but I was cornered. I had a real dilemma there — I didn't want to bring in someone else to direct, and I couldn't get the movie made with anyone else in the role.

"So I threw caution to the wind, and as far as the workload, I really regretted it," Newman continued, carefully searching for the right words. "Physically, it was just too much. You can't do your best work when you're beat. Between acting, directing and rewriting the script on the set, we were putting in 15-hour days, six days a week. That's just dumb."

Newman is never one to make excuses for what he considers to be flaws in his work. He is a perfectionist on and off the screen, whether being on time for a filming call or finishing first in a formula-car race. That's one reason, he indicated, that he has directed so few movies.

The last one wasn't a theatrical film at all, but an acclaimed 1980 television version of Michael Cristofer's Pulitzer Prize-winning play "The Shadow Box." The other movies he's directed include "Rachel, Rachel" in 1968, "Sometimes a Great Notion" in 1971 and "The Effect of Gamma Rays on Man-in-the-Moon Marigolds" in 1972. Three of those projects, plus "Harry," not coincidentally, starred Ms. Woodward, while the fourth, "Notion," starred Newman himself.

"I'VE NEVER been objective about any of the films I've done," Newman said. "I devote too much time and effort on a project to divorce myself from it. When people say they don't like something I'm interested in, it becomes more of a challenge to make it work. I'm showing myself that it can be done, not them."

Newman also considers it his duty to bring his films in on budget and schedule. ("Harry & Son" cost $9.5 million, and Newman said he finished it $350,000 under budget.) "It's a manner of honor," he said, simply. "It's a question of doing the best you can possibly do."

Newman's reasons for making "Harry & Son" go beyond the fact that he and co-producerco-writer Ronald L. Buck spent more than a decade on the project. The story about the lack of communication between a father losing his edge and a son just coming into his own clearly had reflections in Newman's personal life.

It is still not easy for the actor-director to discuss his relationship with his own son, Alan Scott Newman, who died in 1978 at the age of 28 from an accidental overdose of alcohol and Valium. (Newman has since set up an anti-drug foundation in his son's name.) The tragedy traumatized Newman to the point that, even today, it is difficult for him to discuss it.

"Some of what's in 'Harry' comes from own own life, although I'm not exactly sure in what ways," Newman said, casting his eyes downward and biting his lip. "I'm not sure I'm over it yet," he said softly in answering a question about his son's death. His gaze quickly shifted out to the breaking Malibu surf, and stayed there.

ABRUPTLY CHANGING what was obviously a painful subject, Newman spoke about his love for racing, and its similarity to movie making. "The concentration you develop is the same," he said. "You're like a horse with blinders on, whether you're directing on a set or sitting behind the wheel of a car—you have to shut out everything else that's going on. That kind of concentration was introduced to me by acting, and it has been helped by racing."

Newman has had time recently to look back on a career that started with his first movie role in 1954, playing a Greek slave in "The Silver Chalice." Earlier this year, Newman accepted a Golden Globe award in honor of his "long and distinguished career."

The honor moved a man not known for his sentimentality. "Sometimes when you plod along, you forget that you have a body of work. When I looked at those film clips, I was surprised I didn't hate it all. Some of it was pretty good work."

Now that Newman prefers a career as a director, what can he do to achieve it? "I think the only way to get made what you want to make is to write it," he said. "I haven't been very successful at that in the past, but I'm trying it again now." One of the projects may be a continuation of the story of Ms. Woodward's character in "Rachel, Rachel," but Newman is unusually tight-lipped about movies that have yet to become real.

RIGHT NOW, his concern is that audiences won't be turned off by the realistic treatment of the father-son dynamic in "Harry." "You don't want to do something and have four people go to see it after you've spent 1½ years of your life on it," Newman said. "I think there's a very big audience that welcomes an emotional experience they can identify with. We have a lot of anesthetics in today's society, a lot of things that dull our lives. This picture is a chance to break through that."

Newman's life hardly seems dull. The boyish grin that is another Newman trademark suddenly exploded on his face. "I've achieved a nice balance now, thank you, between racing and movie making. Wherever the challenge is, that's where I go."

Theater shows 'Thriller,' 'Fantasia'

Last December that pairing appeared at a theater in Westwood Village so "Thriller" could qualify as a short subject in the Oscar race. The Jackson music video film didn't win a nomination, but the Disney people feel the booking was a successful experiment.

"We thought it was a good idea to combine an old classic with a new classic," said Richard Berger, president of Walt Disney Pictures. "Most of the patrons were pleased, although there were some complaints from mothers whose children were frightened by the werewolf sequence in 'Thriller.' If we did it again, we probably wouldn't show 'Thriller' until after seven o'clock."

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Actress Amy Linker has a list of reasons why she likes her role in the HBO drama "When We First Met" but one stands out: "It's my first screen kiss."

Miss Linker, probably best known as the school girl constantly in pursuit of popularity in "Square Pegs," plays one of a pair of star-crossed lovers in a film that borrows from "Romeo and Juliet."

"Whenever I audition for a role I always ask if there's a screen kiss," said Miss Linker, 17. "I finally got one" with Canadian actor Andrew Sabiston.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — There's "I Left My Heart in San Francisco," "New York, New York" and "Chicago," but let's face it, Los Angeles is an unsung city.

Fred Travalena, a comedian who plays Las Vegas and Tahoe and does imitations of singers, including Frank Sinatra, is out to change that. Travalena has written "L.A.'s the Spot" and sings it the way Sinatra does "New York, New York."

Travelana sings the virtues of Sunset and Vine, the Hollywood sign and Mulholland Drive.

Couple's work displayed at UTPB

ODESSA — The contrasting art work of a husband-wife team from Houston is featured in an exhibition in The University of Texas of the Permian Basin third floor art gallery through March 22.

Robert and Carla Poindexter, both graduates of UTPB, are showing paintings, prints and drawings inspired by a recent visit to Mexico. Poindexter, who paints predominately landscape and still life, visited Mexico this summer with his wife. His trip was made possible through a grant from a Houston fine arts museum. Much of the work in the exhibition consists of studies of land and impressions of the environment in Mexico.

Poindexter, a 1980 UTPB graduate, is completing a masters degree at the University of Houston. He plans to graduate in June. He is represented by Merideth Long, a gallery in Houston and New York.

Mrs. Poindexter, a 1979 UTPB graduate, has done baccalaureate study in art at the Alfred Glassell School and at the University of Houston.

There is no charge to view the exhibit. Hours are 9 a.m. to 7:30 p.m. Monday through Friday.

Lubbock cellist to perform at UTPB

ODESSA — Lubbock musician and former Odessa resident Kathleen Smith will present a cello recital in The University of Texas of the Permian Basin Founders Building Performance Area today at 2:30 p.m.

Ms. Smith, who has played cello for the Lubbock Symphony for the past six years, is principal cellist for the Texas Tech University Symphony Orchestra. She is a graduate music student at Texas Tech.

In addition to her involvement in orchestra in Lubbock, Ms. Smith plays in the San Angelo Symphony Orchestra and the Roswell Symphony Orchestra, New Mexico. A Permian High School graduate, she was a member of the Midland-Odessa Symphony for four years before leaving Odessa in 1977.

Accompanist for the recital will be Jennifer Garrett, music faculty member at Texas Tech. The recital is free and open to the public.

Youth orchestra to give concert

The West Texas Youth Orchestra will present its second concert of the 1983-84 season today at 3 p.m. in the Allison Fine Arts Auditorium, Midland College.

The program will include works by Prokofviev and Mussorgsky and will feature Texas Tech University harpist Stephanie Reavis as soloist for Aria in Classic Style by Grandjany, a piece for harp and string orchestra.

Now in its third season, the West Texas Youth Orchestra is conducted by Charles Nail of Odessa and coached by the Thouvenel String Quartet of Midland. Weekly rehearsals are held at the Midland-Odessa Symphony Rehearsal Hall.

All concerts are free and open to the public.

Texas Indian artifacts on exhibit

BIG SPRING — A temporary display of Texas Indian artifacts is on exhibit at the Heritage Museum, 510 Scurry, Big Spring. The artifacts, primarily prehistoric projectile points, represent 12,000 years of cultural change in Texas.

Jazz Classic will be in October

Reservations can now be made for Midland's eighth annual Jazz Classic to be held at the Holiday Inn Country Villa Oct. 9-14. Some 20 nationally known jazz musicians will provide the nightly entertainment.

Only 240 seats are available to the general public. Each seat costs $125 and is good for all six performances. Many people who are interested in going to some, but not all the performances, share tickets with friends. This reduces the price considerably for a couple attending one performance.

Tickets are available only from the Midland Jazz Association, 400 W. Wall Ave., Suite 209. Reservations may be made by calling 682-5334. Tickets are not available at the door.

Many of the musicians who performed in 1983 have accepted invitations to return in 1984. Two of the returning musicians, Trummy Young on trombone, and Jack Sheldon on trumpet, received many standing ovations for their music, vocals and humor in 1983.

Young, whose musical career spans 54 years, has been featured with such giants as Earl Hines, Jimmy Lunceford, Billie Holiday, Charley Barnet and Louis Armstrong. He has also been heard on many hit records since 1933.

Sheldon has appeared with Benny Goodman, Count Basie, Stan Kenton, Harry James and Woody Herman. He has also been on many television shows including The Mike Douglas Show, The Joey Bishop Show, The Tonight Show and The Merv Griffin Show.

Other musicians who have been invited to the 1984 Classic are Derek Smith, Ralph Sutton and Dick Hyman, piano; Jack Lesberg (who is also the musical director for the event), Milt Hinton and Michael Moore, bass; Butch Miles, Gus Johnson and Mousey Alexander, drums; Warren Vache and Clark Terry, trumpet; Urbie Green and Carl Fontana, Trombone; Zoot Sims and Flip Phillips, tenor sax; Bud Shanks and Jim Galloway, soprano sax, alto sax and flute; Johnny Mince and Phil Bodner, clarinet; and Cal Collins, guitar.

'Annie' to be on stage through March 24

The production is directed by Don Bachmann, executive director at MCT. Music director is Tom Roberts, minister of music at First Presbyterian Church. The dance numbers have been choreographed by guest choreographer Ed Brassos. Set design is by Brett Batterson with John Michael Warburton serving as technical director.

Williams choses Ann-Margaret for TV role

By JANE ARDMORE
King Features Syndicate

Glamorous Ann-Margret has played three non-glamorous highly dramatic characters which have brought her critical acclaim.

For "The Return of the Soldier," she is being touted for an Academy Award nomination. For "Who Will Love My Children?," she has won a Golden Globe Award. And she has been nominated for an Emmy and has won the Hollywood Women's Press Club Golden Apple.

With the recent airing of "A Streetcar Named Desire" she plays the role previously acted by such established dramatic actresses as Jessica Tandy on stage and Vivien Leigh on screen.

It was 1951 when the film version made screen history for Ms. Leigh and Marlon Brando. Tennessee Williams had his heart set on a television production as long as seven years ago and had chosen Ann-Margret for the role.

He did not live to see it, and she longed to know why he had chosen her. When they were shooting on location in New Orleans, she had a chance to find out.

"I MET this gentleman who was a friend of Mr. Williams," she recalls. "He had a restaurant where all the writers used to go, and several years ago when he was there, Mr. Williams talked about my doing the part. He said, '...because of her survival instinct in her career and in her personal life.'"

He was so right. She has survived on-screen from parts such as those she played in "State Fair" and "Bye Bye Birdie," which utilized her song and dance talents.

She brought those talents to fruition in a nightclub career which has utilized her glamour, her sensuality and energy. And now, having made 38 pictures, she is establishing herself as an actress of lasting significance.

"When you are a new girl in town," she explains simply, "they want to put you in a category. Because I started with George Burns at Las Vegas."

She was 17, a fresh-faced youngster on vacation from Northwestern University, who with the Suttel tones, three fellow classmen (a pianist, a drummer and a bass player) drove west to the glitzy entertainment center. The group thought it had a job waiting in a hotel lounge.

"Film makers became aware of me when Mr. Burns introduced me in his act at the Sahara, so they figured, 'She sings, she dances, she's an entertainer. Okay?' Right. Fine. If you come from the New York theater, you're an actress. They put you in that category.

"IF YOU'RE the girl next door, they put you in this category. And heaven help anyone who tries to ever move from category one to category two. But I always knew that inside I had something that was very, very serious. I did 'Once a Thief' — that was dramatic. And 'Kitten with a Whip' and 'Carnal Knowledge' (for which she received one Academy Award nomination. For "Tommy" she received a second.)

"I have always been extremely serious about my work, about my life. I knew I had it within me.

"The part in 'Streetcar' has taken more out of me than anything. Blanche is still with me. But we had no choice. You have a three-month clause to get out of a concert situation. When we signed for the tour, we had no idea I was going to play Blanche.

"I had just finished 'Who Will Love My Children?' playing that wonderful woman who, knowing she was dying of cancer, was only concerned that she find a home for each of her dear ones first.

"Did you know I met all those children, her real children — nine of them — and they told me they had never seen their mother cry? Never. No self-pity. No pain pills. No medication. She did what she had to do.

"It was then, after that marvelous but devastating experience, that we signed to do the tour eight months later. I would never deliberately have gone from 'Streetcar' to this. It's crazy, but it helps to be a little crazy. What actually has happened is that it's like a catharsis to get up on stage and release all that pent-up emotion."

THIS WAS THE girl who at 2 a.m. on the set one night, phoned the psychiatrist who had cued her on the stages of mental disintegration for playing Blanche. "I've never before done a character whose mind has gone, and you know I am not a technical actress. The only way I can portray a character is to become the character.

"At that moment, after four days of that final scene, I felt exactly like Blanche. I was terrified because I thought it was my mind that was going. Luckily this doctor is a wise, wise lady. And we finished the scene that morning. I don't know how you'd do it on stage.

"The rape scene, for example. I had known Treat Williams' work. It was wonderful to work with him but very scary during the rape scene. I had never done such a scene, and this is '84, not '51. I'm fighting back with everything I have.

Ann-Margaret

"We'd rehearsed the choreography so that we wouldn't hurt ourselves because this is very real violence. At one point live candles burned onto the antique curtains, and we didn't even notice! Not Treat, not I, not director John Erman. Stunt men whisked us off the set."

She was playing Blanche in that scene as she herself is — a survivor. Tennessee Williams knew that Ann-Margret had that quality, not only in her career but in her private life.

She proved that in 1972 when, performing in Lake Tahoe, a platform at the top of the stage tilted and threw her 20 feet to the stage below, bashing in one side of her head, smashing her jaw, breaking her arm and putting a two-inch gash in her kneecap.

IT WAS A fall which brought her close to death. Her husband, Roger Smith, who is never away from her, but who had left her for that night to put his daughter, Tracy, in a new school, risked his life piloting a little two-engine Cessna across the Rockies in treacherous weather to get to his wife.

He then brought her home in that same plane to UCLA where doctors were able to perform miraculous surgery that put her back together. Ten weeks later she was back on stage.

"One of the happiest things I ever did," Ann-Margret says, sitting in her exquisite living room with her tiny Maltese cat, Sugar, in her lap, and surrounded by flowers and floral paintings, "is that after the accident, I chose to confront the world rather than retreat and hide.

"We all have that dark side of us that would retreat. You have a choice. You can stay at home and knit, avoid everything that is dangerous or daring — even walking out the door is daring — or...

"Some people might call it tempting fate to go right back out there and start all over again. But I refuse to let fear rule my life. I have been afraid many times of many things. I started out a shy little girl and I'm still basically a shy person. But fear is something to overcome.

"All of a sudden your life is going to be over and you'll be saying, 'Why didn't I do this? Why didn't I do that?' I have a Harley 1000, and I ride it. I was riding before I met Roger.

"I KNOW HE isn't too thrilled that I still ride. He'd rather have me sitting behind him. He's a very protective man, Roger. I knew on my third date that we would be married because that was one of the qualities for which I was looking. A strong man. Very much a father image."

With Smith she has survived. "We've been together 20 years, I'm very proud of that. Very proud of a marriage a lot of people didn't think would last 20 minutes."

He explains it this way: "I'm protective of her. I have to be. She's such a vulnerable human being, so shy and sensitive and essentially naive.

"I think what probably brought us so close in the beginning was that I understood the type of atmosphere in which she'd been brought up. Old-world, old-fashioned and unbelievably sheltered, a dream world. She was taught that if you were good and honest and nice to everyone, everyone would be nice to you. Not always true, unfortunately.

"She had had no training in the business world. It wasn't long from the time she came to Los Angeles that she was making a lot of money and working a lot; but by the time we met and fell in love, I was aware that her career was being mismanaged and going down the drain.

"When Annie found that out and retreated, she became almost a recluse. For two years I kept out of it. After two years she asked me for help." Smith, and his manager, Allen Carr, took over and her career skyrocketed. The more it zoomed, the more she needed Roger.

"MY WIFE IS my responsibility," he always said. "If a man doesn't feel that way, he can't have a very good marriage, which is why I've become so involved in her career. I have had little time for my own. I want her to achieve the feeling of knowing she's a superstar, a rich, full human being who's realized her potential."

This is the year she's achieved it. Where does she go from here? On vacation. She is taking eight months off to be with Smith. It has been three years since he was diagnosed as having myasthenia gravis (a disease characterized by progressive weakness and exhaustibility of voluntary muscles) for which there is at present no cure. Some days he wakens feeling well and they can do anything. Other days he can't get out of bed.

Right now, he's home from the hospital where he has had numerous additional tests. Ann-Margret feels very sure that a cure will be found.

"In the '50s," she points out, "it was polio. Now that has been virtually eradicated." Now what is needed is more money for research for such diseases as myasthenia gravis, she believes, and she and Smith participate in fund-raisers.

After all that he has done for her, she has, these last years, been paying him back in kind. "After our last concert, I'd told Roger I was taking time off, not even considering future projects. We want to travel to Egypt, to Hawaii, to Aspen for skiing.

"Right now we are spending time quietly with visits from friends and the (Smith's) children — Tracy, 26; Jordan, 25; Dallas, 22; and Tracy's baby, 2½." The children have been a vital part of this family.

ONE OF THE things Ann-Margret has tried to pass on to them is something she learned from George Burns: the necessity of learning each day.

"I believe you have to take chances, accept challenges. Sometimes I've fallen on my face, but how else can you learn? Without failing, how would you know the wonder when something joyous happens?

"I always thought life extremely precious. I've alway had strong faith. When I awakened after four days in a coma after the fall and gradually returned to life, I knew that there was a reason for my being spared.

"There is something I have to do, give, to people. I've been asked how I can enjoy playing unglamorous parts, but how can you be a woman dying of cancer with false eyelashes? I do the most honest portrayal I can.

"These women have something important to say. I couldn't have played them this way had my own personal life not changed, had I not grown and learned and refused to be ruled by fear."

CHECKING OUT THE LIBRARY

Library has materials to help with tax returns

By JOHN W. DEATS

It is time once again, for us to render unto Uncle Sam what is Uncle Sam's, but most of us wish to give him no more than he is due. Sam's niece, Iris (IRS), wishes to collect all that she can for her uncle's annual birthday present, but there is a right way and a wrong way to approach her.

The library can come to the rescue by providing an in-depth resource, PRENTICE-HALL FEDERAL TAXES, 1984, a 17-volume collection of IRS rulings, changes in the Internal Revenue Code, U.S. Supreme Court decisions, lower court decisions, and acquiescences and nonacquienscences by the IRS Commissioner to Tax Court decisions. Add to these the "private letter rulings" to individual and corporate taxpayers, Treasury Department decisions, Executive Orders, Congressinal committee reports, and pending legislation, and we are presented with a mass of information through which we must filter.

The key to using our tax service is Prentice-Hall's simple "ABC system." Step A is to select the code section number or key word from the spine of the volume. For instance, the most current rulings are to be found in volume 11, CURRENT MATTER. Suppose you know of a bill that is before Congress which could affect you or your business if it were passed. You would turn to "New Legislation-Committee Reports" within Volume 11, in which you wuld find a Status Table. This table lists, among others, the "Permanent Tax Treatment of Fringe Benefits Act of 1983," and tells that it was introduced on July 12, 1983, and that it is a House Bill (H.R. 3525).

Rather than the approach by code section, you can consult the index in volume 1, an extensive subject matter index. Step B is to turn to the explanatory text which is indicated by a paragraph number, 59,319 in the above example.

Step C is to turn to the Cross Reference Tables to New Developments, again in volume 11. Opposite the paragraph to which you were first referred in Step A, you will find references to any newer information and new paragraphs which are pertinent.

Why is the PRENTICE-HALL FEDERAL TAXES service so valuable to us? The Economic Recovery Tax Act of 1981 became law on August 13, and included the biggest tax cut in American history. Many of the changes to the Tax Code were retroactive, a fact of which many taxpayers are only dimly aware.

The only practical way to keep up with the tax changes is to use a tax service, as many professional accountants do. The Prentice-Hall service provides information even before the IRS Cumulative Bulletins, case reporters, or other bound volumes, since it is updated weekly.

Lastly, this is a source for finding tax precedents. All Federal tax law is covered, including income tax, estate and gift taxes, and most excise taxes. Similarly, every court decision on federal tax issues is cited here in a system that is convenient to use.

Patrons will find the PRENTICE-HALL FEDERAL TAXES, 1984, in the business department on the secnd floor. Tax return forms and tax guides are to be found next to the photocopier in the main reading room.

Lofts' 'Saving Face' solid, sturdy book

A Review

"Saving Face and Other Stories," by Nora Lofts; Doubleday; $14.95; 240 pp.

Norah Lofts has written steadily, been published steadily, since the 1930s. There are 45 books — biographies, novels, historical novels — not counting the mysteries written under a pseudonym. The public loves her books. The critics sometimes don't. In both cases, one can see why. Ms. Lofts tells a good story. She does not always tell it well. Parts of this book are as crude as apprentice work. The text is studded with cliches, some events are implausible or inaccurate, and stories end abruptly.

Yet "Saving Face" is solid and sturdy, a yeoman of a book about the yeoman class — and sometimes it is beautiful. There is nothing of the polemic about it, but it has its message. The generations who "knew their place" are passing from the earth. With them will pass the old order: the mutual consideration and obligation Ms. Lofts calls (in Good Old Suffolk) "bounden duty."

Norah Lofts wrote long ago that "All my people have been farmers for uncounted years, and I still regard growing food as the most important work anyone can do." "Times are against people like us," says her character Mrs. Polstead, who farms — alone — the four remaining acres of the family holding and wonders if she is "the one last reasonable person left alive in an unreasonable world."

There are private villains too, among them Mrs. Polstead's daughter-in-law Sonja, married not so much to Charlie Polstead as to her "dear little house," a piece of suburban trash. Sonja is suburban trash herself. Charlie Polstead realizes that "his marriage had failed, had probably been a mistake from the first. Had better be ended," but Sonja is reluctant to divorce. "The fact remains," she tells her friend, "he is my meal ticket." His mother's revenge is simple and satisfying — a lien on the "dear little house," not disclosed until the property settlement is signed. But then one realizes it simply couldn't happen: Liens are recorded, deeds are examined, settlement is not a shell game. The gorgeous story collapses.

Another villain is "the new Young Mr. Turnbull," Jonathan, heir to Turnbull and Sons, solicitors in the Suffolk town of Baildon since the Restoration. Suffolk is not big enough for Jonathan; he wants to amalgamate with an international company. When his father objects, Jonathan undermines him and the dislodged old gentleman disintegrates.

Ms. Lofts' heroines are hardheaded realists and true conservatives. They resist interference, gratuitous change, and all that is polyester or cheap.

Here is Mrs. Polstead, at 73, in slacks and muddy boots: "...Beautiful hair...dead white and shining, and a face from which age seemed to have stripped all superfluous flesh, no jowls or sags or deep folds. She had a profile as clear cut as a cameo, and her manner was so unconsciously dignified as to be regal." These characters are true sisters to their author. This year, the hard-working Norah Lofts is 80.

Gondolier a dreamer

A Review

Once upon a time, the gondoliers of Venice were the greatest singers in the world. "The Silent Gondoliers" by S. Morgenstern (Del Rey: $12.95) is a tall tale that unravels the riddle of why the gondoliers suddenly stopped singing. At the center of the mystery is Luigi, a gentle and gifted gondolier who dreams of singing opera on the Grand Canal. The only problem is that he can't carry a tune. Even though he must leave the ranks of the singing gondoliers, Luigi never gives up his dream. This inventive, offbeat fable honors those who hold fast to dreams against great odds.

Italian dishes don't have to be calorie-laden

FOOD

FETTUCCINE ALFREDO

The "light" version of this traditionally rich main dish will get raves. The calorie-skimming secret? Skimmed milk instead of heavy cream; reduced-calorie margarine in place of butter.

1 12-ounce package fettuccine noodles
1 cup skimmed milk
½ cup grated Romano cheese
3 cup reduced-calorie margarine
⅛ teaspoon salt

30 minutes before serving: Prepare fettuccine noodles as directed; drain. Return noodles to saucepot; over low heat, gently toss noodles with skimmed milk and remaining ingredients until margarine melts and mixture is heated through. Serve immediately. Makes 6 servings. 315 calories per serving. (Original recipe: 770 calories per serving.)

EGGPLANT PARMIGIANA

There are no "extra" calories in this version because we broiled the eggplant instead of frying it (the big calorie difference — 1088 per recipe!), used part-skim mozzarella cheese.

1 28-ounce can tomatoes
1 teaspoon Italian seasoning
vegetable cooking spray
1 large eggplant (about 2 pounds), cut into ¼-inch slices
¼ cup grated Romano cheese
1 8-ounce package part-skim mozzarella cheese, shredded

1¼ hours before serving: Chop tomatoes; drain. In small bowl, combine chopped tomatoes, Italian seasoning and salt; set aside.

Preheat broiler if manufacturer directs. Spray rack in boiling pan with vegetable cooking spray; on rack, broil eggplant, a few slices at a time, until lightly browned on both sides, turning once, removing slices as they brown to warm plate.

Turn oven control to 350 F. Spray 12-inch by 8-inch baking dish with vegetable cooking spray; arrange half of eggplant slices; spoon half of tomato mixture over eggplant; sprinkle with half of Romano and then top with half of mozzarella; repeat.

Bake in oven 30 minutes or until bubbly in center. Let stand 10 minutes before serving. Makes 4 servings. 285 calories per serving. (Original recipe: 645 calories per serving.)

GARLIC BREAD

Garlic bread doesn't have to be "soaked" in oil. Just brush with one tablespoon olive oil, some reducedcalorie margarine and get the same crunch, authentic flavor.

1 tablespoon olive oil
1 small garlic clove, crushed
dash pepper
½ 8-ounce loaf long Italian bread

20 minutes before serving: In small saucepan over low heat, cook margarine, olive oil, garlic and pepper five minutes, stirring occasionally.

Meanwhile, preheat broiler if manufacturer directs. Slice bread crosswise into four slices. On cookie sheet, toast bread slices until golden brown on both sides, turning once.

With pastry brush, brush both sides of bread slices with oil mixture. Makes 4 servings. 130 calories per serving. (Original recipe: 315 calories per serving.)

TOMATO AND MOZZARELLA WITH BASIL AND OREGANO

The robust flavor of olive oil means a little goes a long way. The calories are halved in this tasty appetizer by using just one teaspoon per serving. It's all you really need!

20 minutes before serving: Slice 2 medium tomatoes into 8 slices. Slice one-half 8-ounce package part-skim mozzarella into 8 slices. On four salad plates, alternately arrange tomato and mozzarella slices.

Sprinkle with 4 teaspoons olive oil, ½ teaspoon basil; then sprinkle salad with salt and pepper to taste. Makes 4 servings. 135 calories per serving. (Original recipe: 275 calories per serving.)

THICK-CRUST PIZZA

This low-calorie pizza starts with supermarket Italian bread — it has fewer calories than regular pizza dough. Also: By skipping the oil on the topping, switching from Parmesan cheese to Romano — it's fuller flavored, lower in calories.

1 6-ounce can tomato paste
2 tablespoons water
1 tablespoon olive or salad oil
1 teaspoon sugar
½ teaspoon oregano leaves
1½ 8-ounce loaves long Italian bread
1 8-ounce package part-skim mozzarella cheese, shredded
2 tablespoons grated Romano cheese

45 minutes before serving: Preheat oven to 375 F. In small bowl combine tomato paste, water, oil, sugar and oregano. Slice Italian bread lengthwise; then into 12 even pieces.

Spread tomato mixture evenly over cut surface of each bread piece; sprinkle with mozzarella, then Romano. Place pizza pieces on large cookie sheet. Bake in oven about 20 minutes or until topping is hot and bubbly.

MEAT SAUCE

To trim the calories on this savory meat sauce, this recipe substitutes extra-lean ground beef (only 812 calories per pound) for regular ground beef (1,549), uses zero-calorie fennel seeds for great sausage flavor, leaves out the calorie-rich sausage.

¾ pound extra-lean ground beef
1 medium carrot, shredded
1 small onion, diced
½ medium celery stalk, diced
1 28-ounce can tomatoes
1 6-ounce can tomato paste
½ cup cooking or dry red wine
1 teaspoon sugar
1 teaspoon basil
¾ teaspoon salt
¼ to ½ teaspoon fennel seeds
¼ teaspoon pepper

1 hour before serving: In heavy 4-quart saucepan over high heat, cook ground beef, parsley, carrot, onion and celery, stirring frequently, until all pan juices evporate and beef is well browned.

Add tomatoes with their liquid and remaining ingredients; heat to boiling, stirring to break up tomatoes. Reduce heat to low; cover and simmer 30 minutes, stirring occasionally.

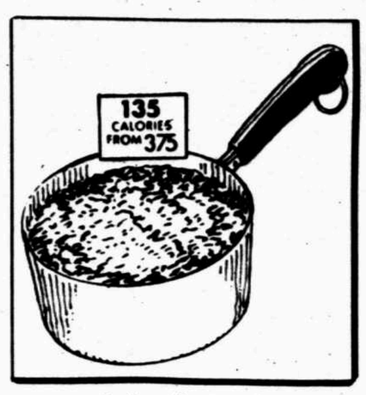

Makes about 5½ cups sauce. 135 calories per serving of sauce. (Original recipe: 375 calories per serving of sauce.)

SAUTEED ZUCCHINI WITH OREGANO

To cut calories the zucchini is fried in less olive oil — just two tablespoons! — than the original recipe called for. It has fabulous flavor, so you can use less.

2 tablespoons olive oil or salad oil
5 small zucchini (about 1¼ pounds), cut into ⅛-inch slices
1 large garlic clove, minced
½ teaspoon salt
½ teaspoon oregano leaves

25 minutes before serving: In 10-inch skillet over medium heat, in hot oil, add zucchini, garlic, salt and oregano. Reduce heat to low; cover and simmer until zucchini is tender-crisp, about 15 minutes, stirring occasionally. Makes 6 servings. 60 calories per serving. (Original recipe: 120 calories per serving.)

CHICKEN CACCIATORE

Easy calorie-cutting tip for this or any chicken-in-a-skillet dish: Remove the skin and excess fat from the chicken before cooking; spoon off the fat after the chicken's browned. You'll save a whopping 500 calories!

1 2½-pound broiler-fryer, cut up
2 tablespoons olive or salad oil
1 8-ounce can tomato sauce
¼ pound mushrooms, sliced
1 medium onion, diced
1 large garlic clove, minced
¼ cup cooking or dry red wine
¾ teaspoon oregano leaves
⅛ teaspoon pepper
salt

Reduce heat to low; cover and simmer 30 minutes or until chicken is fork-tender, stirring occasionally. Salt to taste. Makes 4 servings. 190 calories per serving. (Original recipe: 576 calories per serving.)

ITALIAN DRESSING

Calories are cut back by using equal amounts of oil and vinegar — instead of the usual ratio of four-to-one. A fine quality wine vinegar will give you that extra flavor. Dressing too sharp? Just add about one tablespoon water.

2 tablespoons olive or salad oil
2 tablespoons wine vinegar
¼ teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon Italian seasoning
¼ teaspoon sugar
⅛ teaspoon garlic powder
⅛ teaspoon pepper

20 minutes before serving: In small bowl, mix well all ingredients. Makes ¼ cup dressing, enough to pour over 4 cups mixed salad as 4 servings. 60 calories per serving. (Original recipe: 120 calories per serving.)

YOUR HOROSCOPE

By Jeane Dixon

Monday, March 12, 1984

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Liza Minnelli, producer Roger Stevens, Atlanta Mayor Andrew Young, playwright Edward Albee, music's James Taylor and New York Mets rookie sensation Darryl Strawberry celebrate birthdays today. Also born on this date: actress Barbara Feldon, former astronaut Wally Schirra, Washington Redskins kicker Mark Mosely. Concentrate on one project at a time and you will find success on many fronts. One victory follows swiftly on another. Travel looks great in May, December. An enterprise that seemed to be going nowhere suddenly catches fire! You benefit financially. A management position opens up. Let romantic partner know your plans. He or she can help.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Become more practical. Keep a tighter rein on spending and office gossip. Although a job offer sounds tempting, it might be better to stay put. A calm Taurean makes a wonderful partner.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): An animated discussion could show you a new way to achieve your aims. You get ideas for self-promotion. The news regarding foreign investments is encouraging. Spend more time alone with mate.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): A good day to review financial arrangements and discuss investments with a stockbroker or accountant. Although bargains abound, carefully examine the merchandise. A free-spiritied Libra brings more balance to your life.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): The self-employed make fine profits. Mate or partner is waiting for you to make the next move . You will get the credit you deserve for helping others. Be modest.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Learn to recognize new trends in business and finance. Sticking with outdated methods will hold down profits. Curb a tendency to demand too much from your loved ones.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): The spotlight is on an opportunity to buy land in a distant place. Your relatives and business associates urge you to make a quick decision. Protect yourself— refuse to be stampeded.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Look forward to a highly rewarding work day! Your office mates are cooperative. An attractive newcomer makes a strong first impression. Affairs of the heart enjoy favorable influences.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You are on a new path. Take your time when working on a complex project. Your attention to detail impresses those in authority. An unexpected check brings great delight.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22—Dec. 21): You can expect to get a lot done today. If you hold an executive position make sure others are prepared to do their share. A neighbor provides some fun moments this evening.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You could feel some resentment over unshared expenses. In some ways you are right, but grumbling will not help. Enlist everyone's cooperation in cutting costs. Tend to personal chores this evening.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Someone may be envious of your possessions or special gifts. You have nothing to apologize for. Go your way. A loved one needs extra attention. Be generous with your time.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March. 20): There could be romantic undercurrent to a talk you have with a younger person. Complete routine tasks before beginning a new project. Keep an exercise or diet resolutions.

GOREN BRIDGE

BY CHARLES GOREN AND OMAR SHARIF

DEAR READERS: We have had many requests over the years for those hands that we consider to be our favorites. That makes quite a list. For the time being, therefore, we are devoting the Sunday column to a series of famous hands. At the end of the series, we will go back to our weekly question and answer column.

In 1975, the Italians won the world team championship when on one of the last hands of the match, they bid a grand slam that depended on finding West with precisely a doubleton king of trumps with five missing. The cards lay favorably, and when the hand was over, the American West was heard to mutter: "Is God Italian?"

He had good reason to inquire. Besides the fact that they play extremely well, Italy's Blue Team did seem to have a considerable edge in luck during their long reign. This example is from the 1959 World Team Championship.

The Amerian North-South pair bid to a reasonable four spade contract and, after a diamond lead, made five-odd. The Italian auction is shown above. It went off the rails when the great Giorgio Belladonna elected to bid his three-card heart fragment at the four-level, and he ended up in a rather undignified contract of six hearts.

Without the diamond lead the contract would have had more play, but West naturally led his partner's suit and that knocked out the only quick entry to the South hand. Now declarer had to worry about an immediate diamond loser as well as the ace of trumps.

Belladonna won the ace of diamonds, crossed to the ace of spades and cashed the aceking of clubs. Now he continues with the queen of clubs. To prevent declarer from sluffing his losing diamond, East made the good play of trumping with the ten.

Belladonna was not yet through. He overruffed with the king of trumps, cashed the king of spaces for a diamond discard from dummy, and then led the six of trumps. Since he had no entry back to his hand to lead up to dummy's trump honors again, Belladonna ran the six when West followed with a low trump.

After the finesse for the nine of trumps succeeded and trumps broke 3-3, the slam rolled home. To make the slam Belladonna needed, in addition to the trump position, East to have two clubs and West to have three. There was also the possibility that East might be able to ruff the second round of spaces. All in all, we estimate that six hearts had somewhat less than a 5 percent chance. Are you beginning to wonder?

Mandol is a dummy, albeit a large one, fashioned entirely as protection for Mrs. Holt on her frequeht trips between homes in Florida and Arkansas.

Like the dummies used as decoy police officers to staff traps for speeders, Mike has an effect on motorists.

"Some men will stop slouching and sit up straight in their cars when they see him in the rear-view mirrors," Mrs. Herron said.
