Ortega justifies attacks as 'defensive'

WASHINGTON (AP) — Nicaragua President Daniel Ortega justified last week's government attacks against rebel bases across the Honduran-Nicaraguan border as "totally defensive operations" in response to rebel forays from Honduran sanctuaries.

Ortega also reiterated his government's willingness to negotiate with the United States, but refused to say whether his government would meet American demands to negotiate with the U.S.-backed rebels.

"We want a dialogue with the Contras, with the chief of the Contras, which is President Reagan," Ortega said.

Appearing Sunday on the CBS-TV program "Face the Nation," the Nicaraguan president said, "We have not invaded Honduras — we have not committed any act of aggression against Honduras."

Ortega justified last week's border incursion against rebel bases by saying Honduras had abdicated sovereignty over areas along the border by allowing the rebels to control and operate from the region, which he called a "war zone."

He said military actions in the border area "have been taking place for years now all along the frontier area to attack the counterrevolutionary forces which-...have their bases in Honduras. They are totally defensive operations."

Ortega cast aside suggestions that his government should negotiate with the rebels, saying, "The policy is decided in Washington, so we have to talk to the White House."

"Isn't it in the U.S. Congress where U.S. policy is being formed against Nicaragua, where the war is being directed and financed? What other Congress in the world is discussing a policy of how to go about overthrowing another government?" Ortega said.

The Senate last week passed Reagan's $100 million rebel aid request by a six-vote margin. The plan earlier was rejected by the House. The measure now goes back to the House for a scheduled April 15 vote on compromise proposals.

The Nicaraguan leader said that, "as a product of a U.S.-Nicaraguan agreement," Nicaragua would support the removal of all foreign military advisers from Central America. That is a key component of the Contadora efforts to reach a negotiated settlement in Central America.

Also appearing on the program was Elliot Abrams, assistant secretary of state for inter-American affairs, who responded to Ortega: "They don't want to negotiate. He said he doesn't want to sit down with the Contras. That's why we've come up with a policy of pressure to try to force them to the bargaining table."

The administration's policy on Nicaragua was criticized by House Democratic Whip Thomas Foley, D-Wash.

"We don't have a friend in this policy in Central or Latin America," Foley said on the CBS show. "We don't have a friend in the world supporting us among our closest allies. This is a unilateralist approach of the United States which...will inevitably draw the U.S. closer and closer into the war."

Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan., appearing on the ABC-TV program, "This Week With David Brinkley," said he did not think the rebels could overthrow the Sandinista government with $100 million in U.S. aid. But, "I expect the Contras to do quite well," Dole said, adding, "They did quite well inside the Honduran border."

Sen. Jim Sasser, D-Tenn., a leading opponent of Contra aid, said, "The problem is you get a $100 million this year, for a policy that the Congress and the American people have no confidence in," he said.

"When you come back at the end of 18 months and ask to fund this same policy again, it simply won't fly. What we need is a sustainable policy in that region that the American people and the public will support."

Crude oil prices drop to $10.70 a barrel

NEW YORK (AP) — Oil prices dropped below $11 a barrel today, the lowest level in eight years, intensifying a plunge caused by oversupply and the failure of producers to cooperate in restraining output.

"The bottom line is, traders don't see anything to hold back prices from falling. There's just too much oil out there," said Peter Beutel, an analyst with Rudolf Wolff Futures Inc., a New York commodities futures firm.

Contracts for May delivery of West Texas Intermediate, the benchmark U.S. crude, were selling for $10.70 a 42-gallon barrel in late morning trading on the New York Mercantile Exchange. The same contract closed Friday at $11.44 a barrel.

It was the lowest level since 1978, when refiners were paying an average $10.61 a barrel for domestic crude oil. Only last November, oil was selling for $30 a barrel.

Exchange spokeswoman Mary Ann Matlock said it was the first time that crude oil prices have traded below $11 in the three years that contracts have been sold on the exchange.

Because London markets remain closed for the Easter holiday, Beutel said, traders had nothing to counter negative feelings that had been building up over last week.

He said there was some restraint in selling when the confrontation erupted between United States and Libya last week, until it became evident that the incident was not going to escalate significantly.

In Abu Dhabi, United Arab Emirates Oil Minister Mana Saeed Oteiba was quoted as saying that oil prices would drop to $5 a barrel without cooperation among producers inside and outside OPEC.

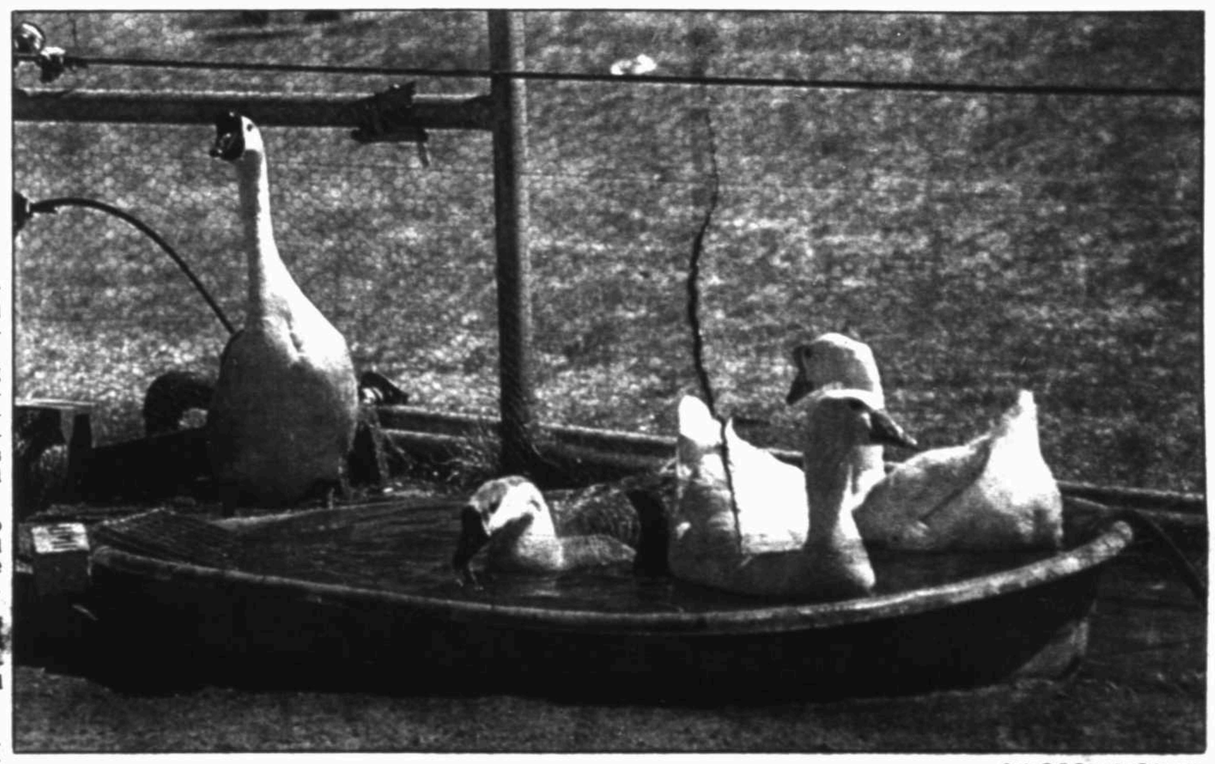

A glut in world supplies was already putting downward pressure on prices when the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries said in December that it would increase production to preserve its "fair market share," abandoning previous attempts to support the market through restrained production.

Earlier this month, the 13-nation cartel failed to devise a strategy for reversing the plunge in oil prices at a protracted meeting in Geneva. The members only agreed to reconvene on April 15.

Today, however, the official Emirates News Agency quoted Oteiba as saying he believed that meeting should be postponed until advance contacts among all oil producers guarantee it would stabilize the world oil market.

The contacts should have the objective of restoring prices to the $28 per barrel OPEC benchmark "in a gradual manner over a reasonable time span," he was quoted as saying.

Without such cooperation "oil prices will drop to $8 or $5 a barrel...There is no bottom level that can arrest the downslide in prices," he was quoted as saying.

Candidates: State reforms, falling revenues major concerns

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the ninth in a 10-part series looking at local candidates in the April 5 election. Today's story focuses on Greenwood Independent School District Board of Trustees.

By JULIE HILLRICHS

The battle cry of budget woes and House Bill 72 are being voiced by candidates seeking election to the Greenwood Independent School District Board of Trustees as the campaign winds down to its final week.

While the three candidates running for two trustee seats say their main goal is to see that quality education continues in Greenwood schools, they acknowledge that implementation of state reforms coupled with declining revenues will continue to be the board's major concern next year.

Incumbent Archie Blackwell, being challenged by Pete Wilkinson in the at-large race for Place 2 on the board of trustees, said the Greenwood ISD is looking at a lean year in 1986-87 as the state continues its school district equalization plan under House Bill 72.

Greenwood ISD lost approximately $280,000 in state revenues in 1985-86 under the plan to divide the wealth among the state's more affluent and less affluent school districts. It is expected to lose as much in 1986-87.

The decline in oil prices also will have its affect on the district in terms of lower tax revenues, he said.

To make up the difference, the Texas Department of Public Safety investigator said the school district will be forced into a year of budget cuts.

"The Greenwood school board has to develop and go with a long-range plan," Blackwell said. "We have to look at the possibility of additional facilities, a water supply and the best education for our kids."

Wilkinson, 38, said Greenwood residents most certainly will pay higher taxes next year in light of declining oil prices. "The Greenwood Indepen-

Officer's stabbing, assailant's shooting being investigated

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — The investigation continues into a Saturday night incident that resulted in the stabbing of a patrol officer and fatal shooting of a 31-year-old man at a southside Odessa tavern.

According to police spokesman John McAhon, 41-year-old Cpl. Robert Clanton was released from Medical Center Hospital Sunday after being treated for a stab wound in the stomach.

Juan Hernandez Rodriguez was shot once in the chest by Clanton as he reportedly attempted to stab Clanton again, police said. Rodriguez was pronounced dead at Medical Center Hospital by Peace Justice R.G. Hungerford about 12:50 a.m. Sunday.

McAhon said Rodriguez had apparently been disorderly earlier at the El Paison, left and went to the El Padrino next door. Reports indicate he spun around and stabbed Clanton in the stomach with a short-bladed knife as Clanton approached to question him. Clanton reportedly stepped back, drew his weapon and fired one shot as Rodriguez came at him again with the his knife, police reports said.

The incident occurred at the El Padrino tavern in the 1100-block of South Dixie Ave. shortly after 10 p.m. Saturday.

Clanton and patrol officers Brad Holt and Pete Simanskis responded to a reported disturbance at the El Paison tavern. Simanskis and Holt went to the rear of the building while Clanton went inside to check out the reported disturbance. A few minutes later Clanton walked next door to the El Paison where a man believed involved in the disturbance had gone.

Pope: World faced with 'challenge of peace'

VATICAN CITY (AP) — Pope John Paul II called on people around the world in his traditional Easter message to accept the "challenge of peace."

Meanwhile in Jerusalem, hundreds of pilgrims attended an Easter Mass at what is believed to be the site of Jesus' Resurrection. But the vast crowds of previous years stayed away, apparently for fear of terrorist attacks.

John Paul chose the theme of life and death Sunday for his message "Urbi et Orbi" — to the city of Rome and the world.

About 200,000 people crowded St. Peter's Square for the pope's Easter Mass. Among them were U.S. Secretary of State George P. Shultz and his wife, Helena.

John Paul referred to abortion, terrorism, and guerrilla warfare during his address at the conclusion of Mass.

"Men continually inflict death upon others, people who are often unknown, innocent people, people not yet born," the pope said in Italian.

"Is not the method of death found in the method of violence, the method of the bloody conquest of power, the method of the selfish accumulation of wealth, the method of the struggle against poverty that thrives on hatred and the longing for revenge, the method of intimidation and the abuse of power, the method of torture and terror?" the pope asked.

Humanity was "faced with a challenge, one more pressing and demanding than all others, the great challenge of peace. To choose peace means to choose life," he said.

"God calls man to oppose death where today, in the most obvious way, it appears as the result of selfishness, division, violence: in the regions bloodied by guerrilla warfare and conflicts, where there arise temptations to use terrorism, and in the nations where the dignity of the person, his rights and his freedoms are trampled upon," he said.

The Roman Catholic patriarch of Jerusalem, Monsignor Giacomo Guiseppe Beitritti, said Mass at the Church of the Holy Sepulcher facing a mausoleum built over the site believed to have been Jesus' tomb.

Palestinians closed their shops in a strike marking the 10th anniversary of a clash in which six Arabs were killed protesting Israeli land expropriations.

Wadji Nusseibeh, the Moslem official who daily opens and closes the door of the Church of the Holy Sepulcher, said, "I have never seen it like this."

Police say mother finds nail in bubble-gum Easter egg

From Staff Reports

Midland police are asking area parents to look out for a certain brand of bubble-gum Easter eggs after one Midland woman found a nail sticking out of one egg in a package she bought about three weeks ago.

The package of Rain-Bio Bubble Gum Eggs was purchased at a K-Mart store at 340 N. Midland Drive, according to Police Capt. Billy Ray. On Sunday the woman, whose name was not released, found a small thin metal nail sticking out of one of the eggs.

"We would suggest that if they bought this brand of eggs they should discard them," Ray said this morning.

The eggs were made by Leaf Confectionery of Chicago. Ray said the nail probably was inserted during the manufacturing process, and could have been an accident rather than deliberate sabotage.

San Francisco area hit by quake

FREMONT, Calif. (AP) — A strong earthquake early today rocked skyscrapers in the San Francisco Bay area, knocked down power lines and roused tens of thousands of people from their sleep. Three minor injuries were reported.

The earthquake, the third in the region in three days, struck at 3:56 a.m. and had a magnitude of 5.3 on the Richter scale, said Willis Jacobs of the U.S. Earthquake Information Center in Golden, Colo. The state Office of Emergency Services estimated it at 5.6, meaning it was capable of considerable damage.

It was centered 10 miles east of Fremont, or about 45 miles southeast of San Francisco, Jacobs said.

Three aftershocks, with estimated magnitudes of 3.6, 3.7 and 3.8, followed within minutes of the initial jolt, said Tom Mullins, spokesman for the state emergency office.

The quake was felt as far north as Santa Rosa and as far south as San Luis Obispo, a range of about 350 miles, and to the east as far as Stockton, about 60 miles east of San Francisco.

Alexian Brothers Hospital in San Jose reported three minor injuries. The victims, who suffered cuts or were hit by objects falling in their homes, were released after treatment.

There was no report of serious damage.

Police switchboards were jammed with calls from people awakened by the temblor.

"I've lived here all my life, and this one scared me," said Gary Edwards, a resident of Walnut Creek, about 20 miles north of the epicenter. He said dishes rolled off the shelf.

"It woke me up and sloshed the water in my swimming pool," said Jim Hushaw, managing editor of the Stockton Record.

"It was a long, rolling motion," said San Francisco Police dispatcher Irene Voorhees.

dent School District's tax base is primarily based on the petroleum industry," he said. "When the price of oil declines, the money has to come from somewhere."

He added that the district must keep tax increases at a minimum through reductions in the budget. "We need to keep taxes at a minimum and the way to do that is to cut costs. We've wasted a lot of money on athletic programs."

Wilkinson, manager of secondary recovery with BTA Oil Producers, said he chose to run for the school board out of concern that his three children are not being encouraged by the district to continue their education beyond high school.

"I don't feel as if they've given our children the drive to continue their education," he said. "The role of the school district should be to provide career goals. They need to improve upon that."

Wilkinson said the present school board lacks direction in terms of setting long-range goals. "We're here to represent the whole community and I think that's something that's never been stressed."

Born in Longview, Wilkinson moved to Greenwood more than seven years ago. He is a graduate of Midland High School and earned a bachelors degree in petroleum engineering from Texas Tech University.

Wilkinson also is a member of the Society of Professional Engineers, Professional Engineering Society and is a registered professional engineer in the State of Texas.

Greenwood resident Vicky Moody, who is unopposed for election to Place 1, has resided in the Greenwood community with her husband, Charles, and three daughters since 1983.

She is a volunteer with Ballet Midland, serves on the Greenwood ISD Parent-Teacher Council and teaches Sunday School at Greenwood Baptist Church.

At 29, the full-time Midland College student said the lack of classroom supplies are a major concern to her.

"If we don't have enough supplies and textbooks to teach our children then we're doing something wrong," she said.

Mrs. Moody said she sympathizes with local school boards as they attempt to implement state reforms while continuing to fight to maintain control on a local level.

"It's hard for someone in Austin to sit up there and say what's right for Greenwood," she said, "but if we want additional programs, we have to realize there are strings attached."

Mrs. Moody does not favor tax increases to balance the Greenwood ISD budget. Instead, she said she supports cuts in areas not directly related to reading, writing and arithmetic.

"With the oil prices the way they are, I could not support our spending money on new school buses or anything else not directly related to the classroom. We don't need to play the game of keeping up with the Joneses," she said.

Colleagues mourn Cagney's death

NEW YORK (AP) — James Cagney, who rose from one of New York City's toughest neighborhoods to become one of Hollywood's most famous toughguys during his 50-year acting career, was "the classic American success story," President Reagan said following his friend's death.

Cagney, who won an Oscar for his 1942 portrayal of song-and-dance man George M. Cohan in "Yankee Doodle Dandy," died Sunday at age 86. He suffered from diabetes and had been in declining health.

His wife of 64 years, Billie, and his manager, Marge Zimmerman, were at his side when he died at his Dutchess County farm north of New York City, where he had been taken only last week after being released from a hospital.

"We were getting him ready for breakfast and he just closed his eyes and went to sleep," Mrs. Zimmerman said. "It's Easter and it's a good time if he had to go."

"Thank God I learned of James Cagney's death in church during Easter Mass because that is where I could help him the most," Frank Sinatra said from his Palm Springs home. "Death isn't even the right word to use, especially on Easter. Jim merely changed addresses from this life into the next."

Cagney retired in 1961 after appearing in 64 films, including "The Public Enemy," in 1931 and "The Roaring Twenties," in 1939. He returned to the screen in 1981 as the police commissioner in "Ragtime."

In addition to the Academy Award, Cagney won a citation from the John F. Kennedy Center for Performing Arts in 1980 for career achievement and the Medal of Freedom, the government's highest civilian award, in 1984.

Despite his fame, Cagney despised the word frequently applied to him: superstar.

"You don't hear them speak of Shakespeare as a superpoet. You don't hear them call Michelangelo a superpainter. They only apply the word in this mundane market," he once said.

James Cagney

John McCabe, who assisted the actor with his autobiography, "Cagney by Cagney," recalled that Cagney never gave fame a thought.

"It was something that he never talked about. To him it was just like a fly on the wall," McCabe said.

"Jimmy Cagney was the classic American success story, lifting himself by determination and hard work out of poverty to national acclaim," Reagan said in a statement from his California ranch. "I believe the entire nation loved Jimmy Cagney and I think he must have loved us, too, because he always gave us his very best...Goodbye, dear friend."

In 1938, Cagney shared billing with Reagan in "Boy Meets Girl," and the men became friends.

Both were presidents of the Screen Actors Guild and both described themselves as Roosevelt Democrats who turned conservative about the same time.

Cagney drew praise for a wide series of roles — mobsters in such films as "The Public Enemy," "Angels with Dirty Faces" and "White Heat;" the neurotic ship captain in "Mister Roberts;" Lon Chaney in "Man of a Thousand Faces;" Cohan in "Yankee Doodle Dandy;" and Bottom in "A Midsummer Night's Dream."

"He was tremendously versatile as far as acting was concerned, and he was an enormous asset to the motion picture industry," actor Jimmy Stewart said.

Cagney was born on the Lower East Side of New York City, the second of five children, moving to Manhattan's Yorkville section upon the death of his alcoholic father.

The area had been among the city's toughest, and Cagney drew upon his experiences there while portraying gangsters.

His trademark — the squirming shrug that started at the feet and writhed up through the shoulders as one hand pounded the other — for instance, came from "a pimp who worked the block between 77th and 78th streets on First Avenue," Cagney said. "All day, he'd stand around and do that."

By age 14, Cagney was known as one of the neighborhood's best fighters. Money was scarce, and he considered boxing as a career; his mother, Carolyn, said no.

Instead, he became a copy boy for a newspaper, wrapped packages in a department store and took other odd jobs, until he heard he could make $35 a week in vaudeville.

He auditioned for the chorus line of a show called "Every Sailor." By his own admission, "I didn't know highland fling from a sailor's hornpipe and I couldn't even sing 'Sweet Adeline.'" But he mimicked his competitors and won the role of a female impersonator, wearing a tutu and a red wig for eight weeks.

What made him a star was "The Public Enemy" in 1931, his first tough-guy role, which included the scene where he mashed a grapefruit into the face of Mae Clark.

But the only movie he would watch again was "Yankee Doodle Dandy."

"The film had all the music and the good nostalgic scenes," he said.

In 1940, Cagney appeared before a congressional committee to answer questions about donating an ambulance to the Loyalists in the Spanish Civil War. He was cleared of having Communist sympathies.

In the last years of his life, he flew an American flag 24 hours a day, 365 days a year.

In order to force producers to pay him what he was worth, Cagney was willing to walk away from films. As early as 1937 he was making $150,000 a picture.

In 1961, while on the set of the Billy Wilder-directed "One, Two, Three," he decided to walk away for good.

"I walked out of the sunlight and into the dark studio and said to myself, 'This is it.'"

"I never missed it, though," he added. "I was a very lucky man in that regard because other actors I've known who slipped by the wayside missed it tremendously. Not me."

Throughout his retirement, producers tried to lure Cagney back. He turned down roles in "That Championship Season" and "The Godfather II."

So Cagney made headlines in 1979 when it was announced that he was returning. And "Ragtime" came along at the right time: his doctors had decreed that he had to become more active to counter the effects of diabetes, which had robbed his legs of their strength.

He and his wife, the former Frances "Billie" Vernon, met in 1920 as cast members of "Pitter Patter" and married two years later. They adopted two children, a boy and a girl.

Cagney's son, James Jr., died in January 1984. The two men had been estranged and hadn't seen each other for two years.

In addition to his wife, Cagney is survived by his daughter, Cathleen. Funeral arrangements are pending.

Easter celebrated with prayers, parades

Associated Press

From New York's Fifth Avenue to California's Hollywood Bowl, Americans celebrated Easter with prayers and parades.

Two downtown Los Angeles missions fed nearly 7,000 of the city's hungry and homeless, while more than 1,000 youngsters scoured the Queen Mary in nearby Long Beach for an Easter "Eggstravaganza" hunt.

Up to 25,000 people turned out for a sunrise service atop Stone Mountain near Atlanta. In Boston, more than 130 crew members and others continued a half-century tradition with a sunrise service on the deck of the 200-year-old USS Constitution, the nation's oldest commissioned warship.

More than 14,000 people greeted the Easter dawn with music and prayers at the Hollywood Bowl. White doves flew into the morning sky as singer Rosemary Clooney led the singing of "America the Beautiful" during the 66th annual service. The star-studded celebration also featured actors Cesar Romero, Eddie Albert and Mabel King.

The Midnight Mission in Los Angeles, meanwhile, provided more than 3,000 people with an Easter meal of ham, yams, vegetables, salad and pie, said Clancy Imislund, mission director. At the nearby Union Rescue Mission, 3,800 people had dinner and listened to a gospel-country band, said spokesman Lonnie Hirsch.

Celebrities including Ricardo Montalban, Pat Boone and Daniel J. Travanti came to the mission to serve meals and publicize a new project, "Our Children, Our Future," intended to send inner-city children to camp, Hirsch said.

Thousands of people turned out to enjoy bright sunshine and temperatures in the 70s for New York City's annual Easter Parade on Fifth Avenue, immortalized in song by Irving Berlin and Judy Garland. The parade, on a closed section of the avenue past high-priced stores in mid-Manhattan, has no floats and no bands — just street entertainers and people showing off spring fashions.

Another sort of parade was held in Metairie, La., a New Orleans suburb — a Mardi Gras-style procession for hundreds of handicapped children from the city and four surrounding parishes.

"Those who were in the parade last year have been asking about it since shortly after Mardi Gras," said Mary Sutton, administrator of St. Elizabeth's Children's Home.

In addition to marching bands and other units, eight flatbed trucks were turned into Easter floats from which the children could toss candy and other favors.

"Some people thought I was making a spectacle of them," said one of the organizers, Marian Matranga, 61. "But it's to let the children enjoy themselves. Where else can these children ride as kings and queens?"

"Daddy" Bruce Randolph, a Denver barbecue restaurant owner who's known for feeding thousands for free on Thanksgiving and Christmas, sponsored his annual Easter egg hunt in Denver's City Park.

"There were years when we had 13,000 or 14,000 people. This year not even 5,000 people have come for Holy Week," he said.

Nusseibeh's family has kept the keys to the church in a tradition dating to the seventh century.

Natan Amorai, an Israeli tour guide, said: "This is the dryest Easter I've ever had," and said Americans were giving in to terrorist threats.

"You fight terrorism not only with the 6th Fleet, but also by making pilgrimages to the Holy Land. By not coming, the American people are showing they are afraid of (Libyan leader Col. Moammar) Khadafy," he said.

Israel's tourism industry has eroded since last June, when Lebanese Shiite Moslems hijacked a TWA airliner and held Americans hostage for 16 days. A series of terrorist attacks followed that incident.

Reagan to receive veterans' petitions

SANTA BARBARA, Calif. (AP) — President Reagan, who heard Easter prayers on his behalf from fellow worshippers, was to receive a petition from a group of veterans who say his policies to fight communism in Central America are leading the United States toward war.

The president and first lady Nancy Reagan attended church Sunday at the Santa Ynez Valley Presbyterian Church near the presidential ranch, where the Rev. Jeffrey L. Cotter led a prayer for divine guidance for the chief executive "in the decisions he has to make."

Shortly after the service ended, members of a veterans' group organized by the Santa Barbara Peace Resource Center began gathering at Refugio State Park, a few miles from the Reagan ranch, in preparation for a march to the gate today.

Eduardo Cohen, a leader of the group, said about 100 veterans were expected to march up a steep, winding paved road to present a petition at the gate.

The group did the same thing last August, but Cohen said they did not receive a response to their petition. He said they were sending a telegram to Reagan this time requesting a meeting with him.

"These veterans feel that the president is ignoring efforts of Latin American allies to seek peaceful solutions to the conflict in Central America, and that he is pursuing military options that will create the conditions in which a combat role for U.S. troops and pilots is predictable and inevitable," a statement issued by the veterans said.

Reagan is seeking $100 million from Congress to assist rebels fighting the leftist government of Nicaragua. The Senate approved the package last week, but the president needs reversal of an earlier vote against it in the House.

On Saturday, Reagan said through a spokesman that he had taken note of Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev's speech in Moscow in which Gorbachev proposed the two superpower leaders meet in Europe to discuss bringing nuclear weapons tests to an end.

But the White House statement countered that the Soviets should accept Reagan's "longstanding proposal that we have our experts meet" on the issue.

On another matter, Reagan has backed recommendations by an administration task force on liability insurance, and plans to announce this week that he will submit the legislation to Congress, according to a published report.

Among the recommendations Reagan endorsed were a $100,000 cap on non-economic jury awards for pain and suffering and reductions in attorneys' fees of 50 percent or more, today's editions of The Washington Post quoted White House officials as saying.

Reagan's trip to church was his first since January 1985 when he attended a special service at Washington Cathedral on the occasion of his second inauguration.

"Like many other Americans today, it was something they (the Reagans) wanted to do and felt was appropriate," said Peter Roussel, deputy White House press secretary.

Another White House aide, speaking on condition he not be identified, said one factor in the decision was that Sunday was the fifth anniversary of the attempt on Reagan's life on March 30, 1981.

The Reagans also attended Easter services at the Santa Ynez church in 1983.

The doors of the small, wooden A-frame church were left open during Sunday's service, and bright sunlight streamed in. It has been foggy and cloudy most of the time since the Reagans arrived on Thursday for a 10-day vacation, but the sun came out for Easter.

The president and his wife sat in front row seats, joining in the singing of hymns, such as "Jesus Christ Is Risen Today."

Cotter preached on the resurrection of Christ, taking his text from Corinthians 15:20-26. The passage ends, "The last enemy to be conquered is death itself."

Like the rest of the congregation of about 250, the Reagans sat on metal chairs.

They apparently were passed up during collection of the offering.

Report reveals critical problems in developing proposed SDI shield

WASHINGTON (AP) — U.S. scientists have not gotten very far in making President Reagan's dream of a high-tech shield against nuclear attack become a reality, a Senate report says.

Rather, research on the Strategic Defense Initiative over the past three years has highlighted the nearly insurmountable problems of basing a comprehensive anti-missile system in space, the study says.

"While some significant progress has been achieved in each of the five major programs of the Strategic Defense Initiative, none of it could be described as amazing," said the report, which was circulated on Capitol Hill last week. A declassified version was released Sunday.

Reagan, when he announced the program in a televised speech in March 1983, said it could "set us free from the prison of nuclear weapons" by late in this century or early in the next by erecting an impenetrable shield against attack.

The Senate report, however, said, "Interviews with key SDI scientists involved in the resseach revealed that there have been no major breakthroughs which make a mid- to late-1990s deployment of comprehensive missile defenses more feasible than it was three years ago."

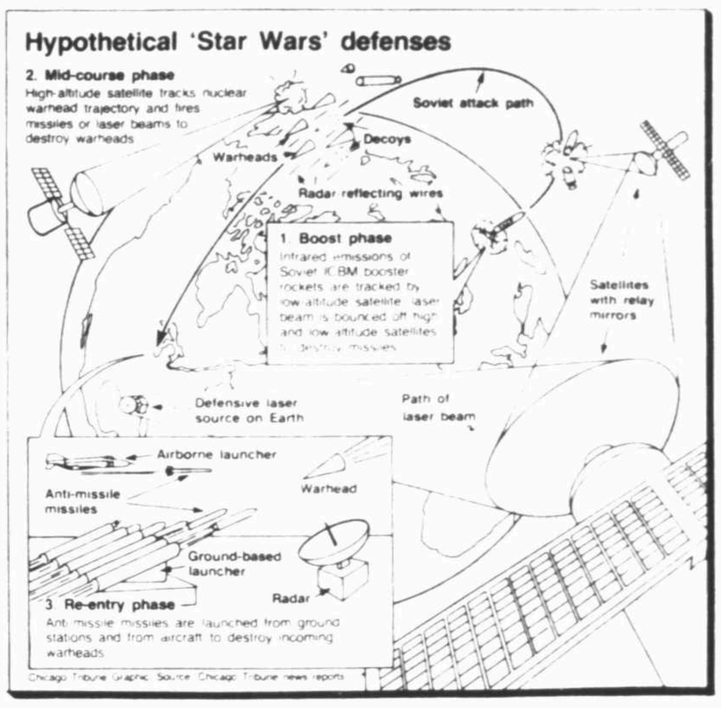

"So far, SDI has moved ahead by inches. We still have miles to go," the report said.

Among the key problems which research has not solved to date are protecting satellite components of the system from attack, distinguishing real warheads from hundreds of thousands of decoys expected in a nuclear barrage and bringing the cost of launching and maintaining such a system to an affordable level.

"Congress should maintain a certain degree of skepticism over claims of tremendous advances in SDI research" while weighing the administration's 1987 budget request for $4.8 billion to fund the program, popularly known as 'Star Wars,'" it said.

Officials from the Strategic Defense Initiative Organization, which is directing the program, could not be reached Sunday to comment on the study.

The 62-page study was written by aides to three Democratic members of the Senate Appropriations Committee, Sens. William Proxmire of Wisconsin; Lawton Chiles of Florida; and J. Bennett Johnston of Louisiana. All three have supported research on the program, but at lower spending levels than sought by Reagan.

Large piece of Challenger booster rocket recovered

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — A 10-by-15-foot piece of one of Challenger's two booster rockets has been recovered, but officials said they did not know if the chunk was from the shuttle's suspect right booster.

Swells up to 16 feet Sunday hampered the expedition searching for more wreckage from the Jan. 28 explosion.

The Seward Johnson, mother ship of the four-man submarine Sea-Link 2, on Sunday reported finding the large piece.

Shultz: Private diplomacy needed to break stalemate

WASHINGTON (AP) — Secretary of State George P. Shultz today said that only private diplomacy — not public proposals for summit meetings — will break the stalemate in U.S.-Soviet arms control talks.

"If we're going to get into genuinely serious discussions of the many difficult and important issues involved, we're going to have to sit down opposite Soviet leaders and talk carefully, thoughtfully and quietly about them so that you have a real interchange," Shultz said on NBC-TV's "Today" show.

Shultz cited a speech this weekend by Mikhail S. Gorbachev in which the Soviet leader proposed a meeting with President Reagan in Europe to negotiate a ban on all nuclear weapons test.

"To make a proposal for a major meeting between the president of the United States and the general secretary of the Soviet Union, to make it on television with no previous warning or anything, is to simply put it into the public domain and not have it explored carefully."

Shultz, who returned Sunday from a 10-day trip to France, Turkey, Greece and Italy, declined today to answer a question about whether U.S.-Soviet relations had worsened in recent months, although he said, "The atmosphere is not what it ought to be."

Meanwhile, two leading congressional Democrats took a critical view of U.S. policy on nuclear weapons, while Pravda, the Soviet Communist Party daily newspaper, accused the Reagan administration of "dispelling the spirit of Geneva" with regional disputes.

Shultz told reporters Sunday that private diplomacy produced the "fireside summit" Reagan and Gorbachev held in the Swiss city last November. There, they agreed to a "new start" in trying to curb the nuclear weapons race and in dealing with U.S.-Soviet disputes.

But, Shultz said, "It's probably a measure of the lack of progress recently that all the actions are through press statements, publicly rather than privately."

High court to rule on sodomy law

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court, pondering a gay rights ruling that could nullify sodomy laws in about half the states, must decide whether consenting adults have a constitutional right to private, homosexual conduct.

The court was to hear arguments today over the constitutionality of Georgia's sodomy law, which makes it a crime to commit various homosexual acts even in the privacy of one's home.

The court is expected to announce its decision by July.

A federal appeals court struck down the Georgia law last year, ruling that the sexual activities of consenting adults — even adults of the same sex — are constitutionally protected.

Michael Hardwick, a self-described practicing homosexual, was arrested by an Atlanta police officer in 1982 on charges of committing the crime of sodomy with another man in Hardwick's home.

The officer had gone to Hardwick's home to serve a warrant in another case, and had been told he could find Hardwick in his bedroom.

Hardwick, now 33, has never been indicted on the charges, but nevertheless challenged the state's sodomy law. It makes a felony "any sexual act involving the sex organs of one person and the mouth or anus of another."

A married Georgia couple, identified in court documents only by the fictitious names of John and Mary Doe, also challenged the state law. The two people said they had the ambition to engage in heterosexual activities made crimes by the law.

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: You are bold in business but shy when it comes to romance. Do not fret. Your diffidence is very attractive to a certain newcomer. Those who feared retirement find a satisfaction they didn't think possible. You are busier than ever! Travel and love go hand-in-hand. Save for that special vacation. Higher profits give you the opportunity to expand a business. Be careful not to tie up all your extra cash.

CELEBRITY BIRTHDATES: actresses Debbie Reynolds and Ali MacGraw, author William Manchester, Rep. Sala Burton (D-Calif.), bandleader Eddy Duchin, man-of-many-faces Lon Chaney, actor Wallace Beery.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Higher-ups will eventually favor your ideas if you are both persistent and consistent. Money questions prove easier to answer following a phone call. Romance takes on a new glow. Be tender.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) All you want is a fair chance. An old friend helps you get it! Lay all your cards on the table, leaving nothing out. Short letters and memos prove most effective.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Travel is fine but don't leave home without a specific plan. Set up your appointments in advance. Your cash flow could be reduced to a trickle for a while. Let someone go.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) An excellent day for negotiating financial terms and contracts. Read between the lines to understand what romantic partner is telling you. Pets can be a great comfort in times of stress.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Emotional outbursts will only delay success. Adopt a calm, measured approach. A phone call brings a new job opportunity. Put your best foot forward. A personal visit relieves a child's fears.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Your state of mind is affected by events beyond your control. Hang in there and you will eventually find what you seek. Your productivity and income will rise at the same time.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) Original ideas help you advance your career and attract new business. A personal relationship changes for the better. Take a child along on a trip. Fresh experiences widen a young person's horizons.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) Friends may be more helpful than family members today. Follow an expert's advice where insurance or real estate matters are concerned. Take a competitor's claims with a grain of salt. Exaggerations are likely.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) Do not be shy about asking for help in righting a wrong. Telling the whole story will produce the best results. Creditors may be helpful if you inform them of how things stand.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) Creativity and sensitivity will get you what you want. You enjoy new financial security, thanks to someone's help. Devote more time to the personal side of your life. Delegate more work responsibilities.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) You will have to make the first move if you hope to land that special job. Taking the initiative also works to your advantage in romance. A parent-child problem improves after counseling.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) An excellent day for taking care of details and answering overdue correspondence. Be prompt to job interviews. Romance will work out fine if you stand your ground. Refuse to listen to threats.

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♡AJ6 ◇J876532 ♠K93
Partner opens the bidding with one spade. What do you respond?
A.—An ugly hand—your points are outside your long suit. Nevertheless, we would opt for two diamonds. If you are among those who have adopted a forcing one no trump response, we accept that as an answer only if you intend rebidding two diamonds if partner shows clubs next.

Q.2—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠52 ♡AQ643 ◇AQ10 ♣K109
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♡	Pass	1 ♠	2 ◇

What action do you take?
A.—You are virtually in a no-lose situation—double. If partner has the values for your side to make game, the penalty should be substantial. If he has only moderate values, the penalty should still be worth while because your cards are well placed. And if partner has a weak, distributional hand he can remove the double since it is partly cooperative in this sequence.

Q.3—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠KJ10752 ◇AQ85 ♣Q94
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	Pass	1 NT	Pass

What do you bid now?
A.—Since neither opponent could bid hearts, it looks as if partner has some values in that suit. They will be wasted opposite your void. Therefore, you should consider your hand to be a minimum opening, and you should rebid your six-card major suit before trying to show your four-card minor. The latter would be the right course if your hand were a bit stronger.

Q.4—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠K6 ♡A10762 ◇AK103 ♣93
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♡	2 ♣	2 ♠	3 ♣

What action do you take?

A.—Because of your prime controls and the honor in partner's suit, you hand is better than its point-count suggests. Therefore, we would go ahead and make the normal rebid of three diamonds to see what partner wants to do next.

Q.5—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠A ♡AKJ9 ◇109652 ♣KJ6
The bidding has proceeded:

East	South	West	North
1 ♡	Pass	1 NT	Pass

What do you bid now?
A.—The perfect hand for a double. Since you did not double at your first turn, this action is for penalties, not takeout. You rate to defeat two hearts in your own hand, and anything partner can contribute to the defense will be gravy.

Q.6—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AQ105 ♡83 ◇85 ♣QJ765
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South
1 ♡	2 ◇	?

What action do you take?
A.—A perfect hand for a negative double, if you play that. If you don't, you are stuck. A bid of either black suit would be forcing to game and you are not good enough for that. If you play five-card majors, you might venture two hearts; if you don't, you can only pass and hope that partner is strong enough to reopen.

'Bloom County' will soon be back on daily comic pages

WASHINGTON (AP) — Two months after cartoonist Berke Breathed broke his back in a flying accident, his comic strip "Bloom County" is returning to the nation's daily comic pages.

Breathed says in an article in today's Washington Post that he's feeling fine and has gotten lots of get-well wishes from "people I regularly ridicule" in the strip.

"I've got three pounds of steel rods in my back, which makes airport metal detectors go bananas. Sometimes I'll wear an "I love Khadafy" button," Breathed told his "interviewer," the Bloom County cartoon character Opus.

The 28-year-old cartoonist also announced that he plans to get married in May to a "wonderful large-footed photographer named Jody," adding: "Maria Shriver proposed last year, but always one to buck a trend, I turned her down."

The Sunday "Bloom County" strip is to return on April 20, Breathed said. Most papers that carry the strip have been rerunning old ones.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) — The award of a medal to Attorney General Edwin Meese has raised a flap at Harvard University about whether it is a favor for his services or an "honorary medal for distinguished public service," as the school originally called it.

Meese

The award to Meese, from the John F. Kennedy School of Government, has been criticized by some professors and Rep. Barney Frank, D-Mass..

Kennedy School spokeswoman Naomi Chase said Sunday that she considered the award to Meese a "a nicer party favor" because he has agreed to speak April 9 at the government school's 50th anniversary celebration.

NEW YORK (AP) — Mikhail Baryshnikov took a break from the American Ballet Theater's six-city tour to do some dancing with whales.

Baryshnikov

At San Diego's Sea World aquatic park, he donned a wet suit and jumped into a tank with two 900-pound Pacific whales, fed them some fish and did a ballet routine of sorts with them, Time magazine reported.

Baryshnikov, a supporter of the Save the Whales Campaign, said after last week's plunge, "They're so powerful, yet so gentle."

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Entertainer Rudy Vallee remained hospitalized at Cedars-Sinai Medical Center while recovering from surgery two weeks ago, a hospital spokesman said.

"He showed some improvement last week, but he still hasn't been moved to a private room," spokesman Ron Wise said Sunday, adding that the 85-year-old Vallee remains in stable but guarded condition.

Wise didn't know if the singer received any special visitors, flowers or telegrams to commemorate Easter Sunday. Because Vallee is in intensive care he cannot receive flowers or participate in any chapel services, Wise said.

Vallee, who rose to fame as a band leader in the late 1920s, is often remembered for crooning "Vagabond Lover," "The Whiffenpoof Song" and the "Maine Stein Song" through a megaphone and for his trademark salute, "Heigh-Ho!"

Vallee's wife has requested that no details about his condition be released, but Daily Variety columnist Army Archerd reported that Valleee underwent throat surgery two weeks ago.

Wise said recovery is going slowly because of the entertainer's age.

Ritz

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Vaudeville star Harry Ritz spread laughter for 35 years as leader of the zany Ritz Brothers comedy team, but his humor faded with his health and he died a depressed man, his wife said.

Ritz died Saturday of pneumonia at his home here. He was 78. He was also suffering from cancer and Alzheimer's disease.

He was the last surviving Ritz brother. Jimmy Ritz died last year and the oldest, Al, died in 1965. A fourth brother, George, who was in the clothing business, also is deceased.

Although the three Ritz Brothers were never as famous as their rivals, the Marx Brothers, they brought their own brand of crazy insanity to films and nightclubs and were popular for more than three decades.

In his series "Whatever Became Of...?" author Richard Lamparski remembered the brothers as gentler comics than the Marx Brothers, doing take-offs rather than putdowns.

Harry, called by Sid Caesar "the funniest man of his time," was the ringleader of the rowdy gang of siblings.

But the joking gave way to melancholy in later years, according to Ritz's wife, Naomi.

"He was just in a deep, deep pit, like deep. He cried," she said. "He was finished. The Harry Ritz the world knew was over. The sense of humor — gone."

Ritz was credited with encouraging Milton Berle to wear dresses to get a laugh when he went on television; for introducing the nonsensical scat singing that Danny Kaye emulated for years, and for developing the comic mannerisms later adopted by Jerry Lewis.

The Ritz Brothers began as precision dancers, then teamed as a dance act in 1925.

By 1929 they broke into vaudeville, adopted "Collegiate" as a theme song and took to pushing each other around on stage.

They became club headliners and by the early '30s caught the attention of movie producer Darryl F. Zanuck while appearing at the old Clover Club on Hollywood's Sunset Strip.

Wisdom of youth

First it was Samantha Smith, the 11-year-old Maine girl who in 1983 toured the Soviet Union as an ambassador of good will at the invitation of then-Soviet Premier Yuri Andropov.

Leaders at the Kremlin this year responded in kind to a similar generous international gesture. At the suggestion of the Children as the Peacemakers Foundation, they sent their own 11-year-old good will ambassador, Katerina Lycheva, to the United States, and in the past few days she has been visiting key cities.

Samantha captivated the Soviets with her charm and child-like candor, but as all the world should know she came to an untimely death as she and her father were killed in an airplane accident. The good news is that her spirit lives on in the person of the equally charming and diplomatic Katya, as her fellow sixth-graders in Moscow call her.

After landing at New York's LaGuardia Airport, she and her American companion, Star Rowe of San Francisco, lit a candle. Katya said in excellent English, "I light this candle ... and hope it will shine for all the children of the world."

That is, of course, a noteworthy expression of good will. But it's obvious that she and other youngsters around the world have thoughts on other serious topics, too. Like peace between Washington and Moscow. Without expressly criticizing her elders, the 11-year-old observed: "If it were up to the children, it would take us a minute or so to get together" and work something out.

The Book of Isaiah says in Chapter 11, sixth verse, "... and a little child shall lead them." Although Isaiah did not have Samantha and Katya in mind when he wrote this, he surely would have been inspired by the eloquence and common sense of their simplicity.

Modern-day adult leaders would do well to listen to what the youngsters of today are telling them.

Starry-eyed gazers?

The National Commission on Space appointed by President Reagan a year ago has come up with a long-range blueprint for a space program over the next half century embodying concepts which will make the average American's head spin.

As revealed by the magazine Aviation Week and Space Technology, the report envisions spaceports between the earth, the moon and Mars with a permanent colony on the red planet by the year 2027.

Undaunted by the recent Challenger tragedy, the commission still calls for the employment of reusable space shuttles but, of course, in more advanced versions. The report, which is to be submitted formally to the President next month is dedicated to the seven astronauts who perished in the Challenger explosion Jan. 28.

Some of the projections in the report come right out of science fiction and, to the earthbound layman, appear to be based on optimistic assumptions. The report apparently takes it for granted that technological advancement will accelerate beyond the pace of the past 50 years and that the U.S. gross national product will expand sufficiently to underwrite the astronomical cost of the program.

To some, that may appear a bit of a rose-tinted view of the space future. But then, were it not for far-sighted visions of the future science likely would not have progressed to the point where it is today.

The timetables loom dizzyingly close but they are made credible by the character of the panel members who devised them: Thomas O. Paine, former NASA administrator, astronauts Neil Armstrong and Kathryn Sullivan, and Air Force Brig. Gen. Chuck Yeager. These are practical people whose visions of the immediate future are rooted in their experience.

Another View: An absurd ruling

The U.S. Supreme Court has now ruled that although a citizen can never sue a judge for a bad decision, no matter how capricious or unjustified, he can sue a police officer for false arrest, even if the arrest was made with a warrant issued by a magistrate.

The decision is not as dumb as it sounds. Judges should have great protection in their official duties; the alternative is a judiciary looking over its shoulder in fear that it will be hit with personal injury suits and making judicial decisions accordingly. Conversely, the threat of personal damage suits should deter officers from flagrantly and illegally misrepresenting facts in order to get a warrant and make an arrest. In its decision the other day, the Supreme Court made no ruling on the merits of the suit brought against the defendant police officer; it only ruled that the plaintiff had a right to take his case to a jury which, in turn, could evaluate the claim against the officer. And given the constraints indicated in the court's language, it may be hard for a plaintiff to win such a suit.

Police organizations argue legitimately that the decision could have a chilling effect on officers, some of whom may now think twice before taking evidence to a magistrate in order to get a warrant. "It's a heck of a situation," said the executive director of the International Association of Chiefs of Police, "when the police officer gets sued or held liable, and the judge or magistrate gets off the hook."

Yet even where suits are filed, juries are not likely to award damages against individual officers except in cases in which facts were maliciously and grossly misrepresented, and the courts are not likely to uphold them if they do. Writing for the court, Justice Byron White said that officers enjoy a "qualified immunity" from damages unless they "knowingly violate the law" or take other actions that "no reasonably competent officer" would consider legal.

That ought to be of considerable assurance to the police. But to the extent it is, it also vitiates the court's casual suggestion that suing officers is a better way to protect individuals from improper searches than excluding evidence at trials. The court thus seems to be justifying further limits on the scope of the exclusionary rule, which requires the suppression of illegally seized evidence. If the court really believes that, it's badly mistaken. The notion that personal lawsuits against individual officers, with all their expense and uncertainty, are an effective way for a poor defendant to protect his privacy is simply absurd. The decision, in short, is not nearly as dumb as what the court thinks it will achieve.

JACK ANDERSON
Blame Iran, not Libya, for terror

WASHINGTON — The menacing visage of the Ayatollah Khomeini is looming ever larger in the deliberations of experts trying to identify those responsible for the terrorist assaults on the Rome and Vienna airports that left six Americans dead last December.

Jack Anderson

At the time, President Reagan angrily blamed Libya's volatile Moammar Khadafy. But U.S. intelligence agencies have received information from usually reliable sources that Abu Nidal, the renegade Palestinian who heads the group that committed the attacks, used Iran as a planning and training center for the operation.

What makes this development so significant — and so alarming for the United States — is that Nidal's protector and supporter for years has been Iran's blood enemy, Iraq. At one time, Iraq was bankrolling Nidal (real name: Sabri Banna) and his group to the tune of $23 million or more a year.

But then, as part of the U.S. attempt to lure Iraq out of the Soviet orbit with arms supplies and other aid, the State Department prevailed on Iraq to drop its support of Nidal. The selling point was that forcing Nidal to move his headquarters from Iraq might remove Iraq from the list of terrorist nations ineligible for U.S. aid.

Unfortunately, the pressure seems to have worked — sending Abu Nidal into the arms of Khomeini.

Nidal was once part of the most militant wing of the Palestine Liberation Organization. He was associated with Black September, the terrorist group that committed, among other outrages, the massacre of Israeli athletes at the 1972 Munich Olympics.

At about that time, Nidal split with PLO chief Yassir Arafat, and in 1974 a PLO court tried him in absentia and sentenced him to death. Ever since, Arafat and Nidal have been trying to get each other assassinated.

Meanwhile, Nidal has carved a path of murder and mayhem across the Middle East and Europe. His usual assassination targets have been moderate Arabs, particularly PLO diplomats.

On June 3, 1982, Nidal actually ignited a war when his goons seriously wounded Shlomo Argov, the Israeli ambassador in London. The attempt was the immediate cause — some say the pretext — for Israel's ill-starred invasion of Lebanon three days later.

After the twin airport attacks last Dec. 27, the Reagan administration blamed Libya as an accomplice. But the evidence points more to Iran and Syria. The two four-man teams of terrorists got crucial training and operational planning in the Bekka Valley of eastern Lebanon. The Bekka is controlled by the Syrians and patrolled by hundreds of Iranian revolutionary guards, who run the valley as if it were a suburb of Tehran.

Secret interrogation by Italian intelligence of the lone surviving terrorist in the Rome attack, Mohammad Sarham, confirmed that some of the teams' training took place in Isfahan, Iran, as well as the Bekka, and that the airport attackers entered Italy via Syria.

Our own sources inside Iran report that Nidal himself has spent extended periods of time since last September at the Iranian terrorist training camp in Manzariyeh Park, close to Khomeini's Tehran residence. One trusted CIA source said Nidal stayed as long as a week on at least half-a-dozen occasions between September and the Christmastime airport attacks. His escort on these visits was Khomeini's son, Ahmad.

Several U.S. intelligence officials now concede that Iran (and Syria) bear more blame for the attacks than Libya. If Nidal has indeed become a lackey of Khomeini, it means he may shift his attention from old scores against the PLO to new ones against the United States.

CONFIDENTIAL FILE: Are the bureaucrats in charge of the much-criticized U.S. aid program in Egypt trying to boost their own stock by implying that the bad guys disapprove of their activities? Reports to Foggy Bottom from U.S. Embassy officials in Cairo point out that leftist, anti-American opponents of Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak have accused the Agency for International Development of providing cover for U.S. espionage. This, the leftists say, is making Egypt too dependent on the United States and is "a U.S. shadow government in Egypt." Does this absurd criticism mean AID must be doing something right? That may be the message.

EVANS & NOVAK
Illinois overcoming LaRouche

CHICAGO — After a week of mutual recriminations, Illinois Democratic leaders have found a circuitous escape route from the LaRouche shock but not yet faced its underlying cause.

Rowland Evans

Robert Novak

The nomination March 18 of a right-wing extremist Lyndon LaRouche follower to be governor candidate Adlai Stevenson's running mate has led to a solution worthy of Rube Goldberg. Stevenson will head a "third party" ticket with new candidates replacing the LaRouchie primary winners for lieutenant governor and secretary of state and token candidates selected for all other statewide offices. The other Democratic primary winners, including Sen. Alan Dixon, will stay on the regular party line.

Illinois Democrats, after a lifetime of being told to vote a straight ticket, will be asked to split for Stevenson. But more dangerous for the party is its exposure to voters as incompetent, grasping and isolated from real-life concerns.

Outside former senator Stevenson's entourage, Democratic politicians consider his once-bright prospects for denying Republican Gov. James Thompson a fourth term as all but dead. The Rube Goldberg stunt is really aimed less at saving Stevenson than the rest of the ticket. It may not even do that if Thompson bestirs himself to attempt turning Democratic fiasco into not just personal but party triumph.

The Republican opportunity derives from more than the apparition of Lyndon LaRouche. Illinois Democrats are afflicted with the same uncured maladies from which the party suffers nationally: lack of leadership and discipline, loss of voter confidence on the issues.

The leadership question is recognized by such stalwarts as Cook County Board President George Dunne, who told us: "The party is shot." During the 11 years since his death, Mayor Richard J. Daley's monolithic Democratic organization has been Balkanized into petty baronies whose selfishness made possible the events of March 18.

A principal scapegoat is House Speaker Mike Madigan, who last year talked Stevenson into a second try for governor. So consumed was Madigan in attempting — unsuccessfully — to nominate two Cook County Board members against the regular slate that the LaRouchies won in Madigan's own Chicago ward.

But there is plenty of blame to go around. Mayor Harold Washington did nothing for the regular lieutenant governor and secretary of state candidates in the black wards, which backed the LaRouchies. County Democratic Chairman Edward Vrdolyak did not include on his sample ballot statewide regular candidates because that might have offended important Italian ward chairmen backing an insurgent candidate for state treasurer. Both Washington and Vrdolyak were preoccupied in their incessant struggle for City Council control.

That such petty power struggles made possible the LaRouche shock is obvious to Democratic leaders here. Less clear to them is the ideological message. Rather, they insist the primary results do not signal an anti-liberal revolt.

Indeed, while the anti-drug, anti-AIDS, anti-crime message of the LaRouchies might be effective in Illinois, there is no evidence that they've waged any campaign at all. Thus, Democratic leaders claim that Mark Fairchild for lieutenant governor and Janice Hart for secretary of state were merely freak winners who are finished now that they have been exposed.

Yet, an across-the-board protest vote of some 100,000 (out of 600,000 cast) shows plenty of Illinoisans wanted something different from the Democrats. Moreover, now that they are given media access, Fairchild and Hart are sounding some plausible themes.

But it is the Republicans who stand to gain from Democratic distress. Don Totten, the hard-charging new Cook County GOP chairman, tried to do just that with a City Hall post-election press conference. The Thompson camp was not pleased. Much to Stevenson's delight, the governor himself is off to the Orient accompanying the Chicago Symphony Orchestra.

Thompson's politics copies moderate Republicans of yesteryear who built bridges to Democratic business, labor and minority leaders. The depth of Democratic danger in Illinois depends on whether he now reverses tactics and goes after rank-and-file Democrats so disenchanted with their party that, knowingly or not, they voted for disciples of Lyndon LaRouche.

CHARLEY REESE
Politicians all play same 'game'

I have long contended that there are only two real political parties in the United States: one made up of politicians and the other made up of the people. The St. Patrick's Day lovefest between President Ronald Reagan and House Speaker Tip O'Neill is an example of what I mean.

Charley Reese

O'Neill and Reagan, who vilify each other during political debates, embraced at a farewell party for O'Neill who is, thank the Lord, retiring after 50 years on the public teat.

On the surface, such congeniality and civility seem a virtue. Like school boys on the playing field, after the game is over, they embrace or shake hands. The fly in this intellectual salad, however, is that politics is not a sport.

A sport, by definition, doesn't matter. It makes no difference if the Chicago Bears beat the New England Patriots or vice versa. The game is just an amusement. Nobody dies. Nobody is maimed. Nobody's life is irreparably damaged. It was just an afternoon's diversion.

Politics, however, is a serious business. War is a political decision. We shouldn't allow politicians to get away with acting as if it were all just a game. Oh, yes, I sent Americans to Vietnam and 57,000 of them died and 200,000 were wounded and yes, it was a mistake, but let's just forget it and go on about our business. No hard feelings.

Too many Americans do let them get away with that. So much so that most politicians are positively outraged and call it mudslinging when someone dares expose their record and suggest that voters hold them accountable.

Politicians are like lawyers. Two trial lawyers go at it in court and then afterwards go have a drink together. Why do you suppose this is so? It's not sportsmanship. It's because what they say in behalf of their clients doesn't mean anything to them. Their real interest is the common interest they share — the well-being of lawyers. Their respective clients and their clients' cases are merely means to an end — earning money.

What are politicians telling you when they put on the lovefest like Reagan and O'Neill? They are saying, "What we say on the job doesn't mean anything. We share a common interest — our own. He works one side of the street and I work the other, but it's the same street and we both want to keep working. We both put our common interest ahead of you. Neither one of us is sincere."

For example, if Reagan honestly believes what he says about the Nicaraguan situation — that failure to provide aid to Nicaraguan rebels will mean disaster, then how can he feel kindly toward a man (O'Neill) who's trying to block the aid? If O'Neill really believes that Reagan is causing incredible economic hardships for Americans with his domestic policies, then how can he feel kindly toward him?

That would be irrational. The only rational explanation is that neither man really believes what he says about the issues. Like the lawyers, their respective positions are only means to their own ends. You dupe your voters and I'll dupe mine and after duping hours, we'll get together for a drink.

Over the years I've observed that it doesn't matter whether politicians are Republicans or Democrats, liberals or conservatives. They stick together. They protect each other. They stage charades for our benefit, but they take great care not to really harm each other's interests. They defend this practice in the name of civility and good sportsmanship, but I think it's really shared interest in their own welfare. They belong to one party and we, the people, belong to another.

I long for people who say what they mean and mean what they say. I long for people who have honest convictions and are willing to live and die by them. Men like Andy Jackson and Harry Truman never embraced their political enemies. They were men who believed in what they were doing and saying. I'll take sincerity and integrity over congeniality everytime.

"We have to be realistic. In hard times we have to tighten our belts."

"Our future is tied to the oil industry. I think it's a very bright future, with 25 percent of the nation's proven reserves right here in the Permian Basin. But our destiny is not in our hands. We're subject to fluctuations in price that are beyond our control.

"We'll see good times again. And I couldn't think of a better resource to have than oil in the ground. But now is a time for caution."

On February 4, Carroll Thomas was instrumental in alerting the City Council that a $10.8 million bond issue at this time was ill advised. Although he is generally in support of the proposed improvements, Thomas felt the election should be delayed until the local economy improves. At its February 11 meeting, the Council agreed, and deferred the bond election.

A Positive Approach

Thomas stands for positive, constructive improvements within the present City government. He is committed to:

- Improved street repair and maintenance programs to protect our $150,000,000 investment
- Drainage system improvements
- Synchronization of traffic signals
- A freeze on the citizen's City tax burden, the City budget, and City hiring
- Better relationships with other elected bodies.

Thomas believes that improvements to streets, drainage systems, and traffic signal synchronization can be funded out of the City's present cash surplus and unexpended bond funds. When the economy appears more favorable, he supports calling the bond issue to authorize necessary capital improvements.

Pyramiding trucks

Odessa oil business reaps windfall

By Jane Tindall
BUSINESS JOURNAL CORRESPONDENT

ODESSA — The falling price of West Texas Intermediate crude notwithstanding, at least one Odessa oil-related firm is enjoying a windfall of sorts, with more committments on the way.

Watco Truck Rigging Inc., is completing the rigging of three Kenworth trucks for shipment to the oilfields in Eygpt.

Equipped with a six-wheel drive, 12-cylinder Caterpillar engine, each mammonth vehicle is specially-designed for hot desert sands or northern Africa, according to Jim Watkins, vice president of the company.

Because of extreme heat the trucks have dual radiators. Because of sand, they travel on six 1,500 pound Firestone Sand Champion tires, each with a five-foot diameter and measuring two-feet wide, mounted on three axles.

The beds, manufactured and installed by Watco, are 11-feet wide and 22-feet long, making the overall length of the truck at 40 feet.

"We have a real advantage out here in the Permian Basin for these kinds of jobs ... we're probably three or four years ahead of most of the rest of the country in our ability to design and build something like this."

Jim Watkins
Watco VP

IT IS SEVEN and a half feet from the bed to the ground. Fully rigged, each truck weighs in at about 80,000 pounds. The top speed is estimated 35 miles per hour and the fuel consumption is approximately 3 to 4 miles per gallon.

According to Watkins, Watco landed the job through bidding. Amoco asked for bids for the trucks with PACCAR International, of Bellevue, Wash., manufacturers of Kenworth, getting the contract. PACCAR in turn sought bids for rigging, and Watco was successful over two other companies.

"We have a real advantage out here in the Permian Basin for these kinds of jobs," Watkins said, "because we've had to use our imaginations and oil-patch knowledge to improvise because may times there was nothing on the market to fit the need. There are no textbook courses on rigging an oilfield truck. We're probably three or four years ahead of most of the rest of the country in our ability to design and build something like this," he added.

THE FIRST OF THE THREE trucks left Odessa March 26 headed for Houston. From there it will be shipped to its final destination. The trucks first arrived at Watco on Feb. 24, but, Watkins said, they had already fabricated some of the component parts for the bed before the actual arrival of the trucks.

Three other trucks from PACCAR are already arriving at Watco for special rigging to go to Algeria. That order could eventually go to eight.

Watco was established in 1981 by Johnnie Wakins, president, two sons Jim and David, both vice presidents, and Bill Waldrop who serves as secretary-treasurer. The senior Watkins had been with H.L. Cunningham Welding Service for several years and both sons had worked there since their high school days.

In 1982 Watco had 43 employees, and in the last part of 1981 and the first few months of 1982 they were rigging 16 to 18 trucks a month. Then business dropped considerably.

At the present time they have 15 employees, and David estimates these three trucks just completed, consumed about 500 man-hours each.

They say that without these overseas orders they "would have had a lot of free time.

Taxpayers footing bigger PR bill

By Vic Ostrowidzki
WASHINGTON BUREAU

WASHINGTON — The executive branch of the federal government spent $437 million in tax dollars and employed 7,581 persons last year for public relations, making it one of the hottest growth industries in town.

Last year's public relations costs were up substantially from President Reagan's first two years in the White House, when spending dropped after he ordered the federal bureaucracy to cut back on efforts "designed primarily to improve the image of a federal program or agency."

Between 1983 and 1985, spending for public relations rose from $376.2 million to $436.7 million, a 16 percent increase, according to a new General Accounting Office (GAO) survey on executive agency spending on public and congressional affairs.

The study disclosed that in 1985 these agencies spent $336.8 million and assigned 5,599 employees to public affairs, while executive branch relations with Congress cost an additional $99.9 million was involved 1,982 civil servants.

"These figures reflect an increase in obligations for public affairs and congressional affairs activities over fiscal years 1981 and 1983 but a decrease in personnel assigned to such duties in these same fiscal years," GAO reported.

In fiscal 1981, there were 6,175 employees involved in public relations and 2,089 in congressional affairs. By 1983, the public relations staffs decreased to 5,705 and congressional affairs offices to 2,016. In fiscal 1985, the latest data available, that number dropped to 5,599 and 1,982, respectively.

The study was requested by of Sen. William Proxmire, D-Wis., to determine why "little was being done to reduce spending on public media relations" while efforts are underway to "eliminate unnecessary spending on developing, printing, and distributing periodicals and recurring pamphlets."

Proxmire cited statisics showing that between 1981 and 1983 spending on public relations had dropped from $383.3 million to $376.2 million.

"This auspicious beginning quickly turned around as the Office of Management and Budget put down its knife and started giving away chocolate fudge," Proxmire contended.

"Why this abrupt reversal?" Proxmire asked. The senator then gave his own answer:

"When people are out of office, they look on government public relations as the quintessential definition of wasteful spending. But once the 'outs' become the 'ins,' then public relations is magically transformed from waste into a shield to guard against a hostile press and an obtuse Congress, with spending increasing in proportion to the number of unfavorable stories and congressional oversight hearings."

"Not so," replied an administration spokesman.

Edwin L. Dale Jr., OMB assistant director for public affairs, insisted that President Reagan's directive to cut back on magazines, pamphlets, films and public service announcements, partly responsible for the initial drop in public relations costs, was still being enforced.

Two years after the order was issued, the OMB found that only the Treasury Department, then headed by Don Regan, the current White House chief of staff, had an increase in spending for publications that were not required by Congress. The increase was 24 percent.

Bill calls for worker benefit changes

By Vic Ostrowidzki
WASHINGTON BUREAU

WASHINGTON — The House-approved tax reform legislation calls for major changes in employee benefits policies.

Although the House plan, now being looked at by the Senate, preserved tax-free, employer-provided health and welfare benefits, it contained significant changes in many benefit provisions, cutting these tax preferences by $23 billion over the next five years.

Individual retirement accounts (IRA), qualified cash or deferred arrangements under section 401(k) and tax-sheltered annuities under section 403(b) of the Internal Revenue Code are the principal tax-favored savings instruments that were substantially changed in the House measure.

These tax breaks enable individuals to supplement their potential retirement income by providing incentives to save. Contributions to these accounts lower taxable income, and the contributions and earnings are tax-deferred until their withdrawal.

According to the Employee Benefit Research Institute (EBRI), the House bill would place a $7,000 cap on IRA's, certain deferred arrangements and tax-sheltered annuities.

UNDER CURRENT LAW, employers can contribute — on behalf of an individual, to all plans — the lesser of $30,000 or 25 percent of compensation.

The House bill would also reduce contribution and benefit limits for retirement plans and apply a 15 percent excise tax on annual distribution from all tax-favored plans exceeding $112,500.

It would increase the penalty for early withdrawal from the plans from 10 to 15 percent and impose a 50 percent additional tax on funds not taken out by the time an individual is 70 years of age.

Also, the plan would repeal 10 year forward income averaging and capital gains treatment of lump-sum distributions, prospectively eliminate 401(k) plans for tax-exempt and public employees and place a 10 percent excise tax on asset reversions from terminated pension plans.

EBRI estimates that as many as 19 million employees are currently eligible to participate in 401(k) plans and that 10 million take part. Data from 1983 indicate that 4.8 million private-sector employees were offered 401(k) and 1.9 million participated with total annual contributions $2.9 billion.

Law breaking

Although Congress has passed conflict-of-interest legislation requiring retired Defense personnel to report defense-related employment, only about 30 percent did so in 1983, the latest data available.

The General Accounting Office (GAO), in a report to Congress, added that those who did report provided insufficient information to allow identification of a possible conflict of interest. Many former DOD employees provided little more than their job title.

Further, the GAO said, the Defense Department does not have adequate process for reviewing disclosure forms.

According to the report by the congressional investigative agency, of the 11,992 employees who had held security clearances and left the Defense Department to work with defense contractors in fiscal 1983, more than 50 percent were exempted from filing a disclosure form because they were not working for a major defense contractor.

The law requires retirees to report defense-related employment for two years after separation.

The Defense Department generally agreed with GAO findings.

Japanese inventors

Californians received more patents per resident in 1985 than all other states. Of the total 43,370 patents issued to Americans, Californians received 6,109. Other states with large numbers were New York, 3,803; Michigan, 2,197; Texas, 2,483; Illinois, 2,793; Pennsylvania, 2,464; Ohio, 2,522; Maryland, 721; Washington, 648.

Japanese inventors and corporations again topped the list of foreigners receiving U.S. patents in 1985. Of the 33,881 issued to foreign residents, 13,351 went to Japanese. West Germans were a distant second with 6,851 patents, followed by residents of the United Kingdom, France, Canada and Switzerland.

Unpluggers, polluters fined

AUSTIN — River City Energy, Inc. of Houston was fined $8,000 for four unplugged wells on its Martha Lou Camp Haslett lease in Bexar County. The company was among nine oil and gas operators that received a total of $26,000 in administrative penalties for problems under the Commission's well plugging and pollution rules.

River City Energy failed to appear at a hearing called by the Commission to investigate violations on the company's Haslett lease. Commission rules require operators to plug or bring back into production wells that have been inactive for 90 days.

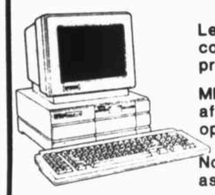

B.J.H. Energy, Inc. of Katy was fined $5,000 for two unplugged wells on it Shirley Doyal lease in McCulloch County. Commission field inspectors noted that one of the wells is leaking saltwater.

In another pollution case, Southwin Exploration, Inc. of Abilene was fined $1,500 for saltwater leaks from a well and a tank on its Alexander lease in Runnels County.

Plugging violation cases where company representatives did not appear at Commission hearings included James B. Harbin of Dallas who was fined $3,000 for an unplugged well on the Ferguson lease, Brown County; and Safemark Energy, Inc. of Richland Springs, fined $3,000 for an unplugged well on the Safemark-Alford 1-A lease, Shackelford County.

To date in 1986, the Commission has levied more than $250,00 in pollution and well plugging penalties. Last year the Commission assessedmore than $1 million in such penalties.

Saying it safe

Bank's survey indicates recession finally here

By Julie Jerome
BUSINESS JOURNAL NEWS EDITOR

MIDLAND — The Midland-Odessa economy is in a recession, and can be expected to shrink as long as oil prices remain down, according to Susan Zurawski, assistant vice president of ClayDesta National Bank.

"We expect a very flat to negative growth rate in the economy while prices are down," she said during a press conference releasing the bank's monthly cost of living figures. "The gross area product is probably negative. It's safe to say we're in a recession."

During February, the cost of living in Midland and Odessa remained stable as the rate calculated for Midland was up 0.06 percent and Odessa was down 0.04 percent, she said.

"The six-month annualized inflation rate in Midland would equal 0.02 percent," she said. "In Odessa, the rate annualized over six months shows deflation of negative 0.26 percent."

During the past year the cost of living in Midland has increased 0.1 percent. In the last six months it has remained stable, she said. The cost of living in Odessa has increased 1.5 percent in the last year, with a decrease of 0.1 percent in the past six months.

See related graphics, Page 21

"Transportation was the most dramatic fluctuation, and that can be attributed to the price of oil," Zurawski said. "But, less cost for oil is nothing we in West Texas need to get excited about because it such a direct indicator of the state of the economy."

MIDLAND TRANSPORTATION COSTS plummeted 8 percent in February, continuing a fourth month of lower gas prices.

"This is the third consecutive month transportation has decreased, and February's percentage is the largest individual trend measured in Midland since these reports began last February," she said. Automobile maintenance and insurance was also reported lower.

Odessa transportation expenses fell 4.2 percent in February, where slightly higher automobile maintenance costs were offset by lower gasoline prices.

In the past year, Midland transportation costs have dropped 20 percent, with 12.7 percent coming in the past six months. A 9.7 percent decrease has been measured for Odessa transportation expenses in the last year with 8.8 percent of that decline occuring in the last six months, Zurawski said.

A 3.5 percent decrease in local residential utility bills was measured in Midland for February. Odessans saw a 3.4 percent decline. Costs have declined for the second month in a row for both cities.

"Gas rates dropped the most significantly within the utility category due to the gas rebate," she said. "Gas rates in Midland showed a 7.2 percent decline and a 6.4 percent drop in Odessa gas rates was reported."

The electric fuel adjustment charge in both cities fell 3.2 percent in February and water rates remained stable, she said.

Midland housing expenses increased 2.4 percent — the largest of the last three months. Zurawski attributed the rise to a second month of higher area rents.

ODESSA HOUSING COSTS fell 0.2 percent in February, after increasing for two months.

> "We expect a very flat to negative growth rate in the economy while prices are down."
>
> Susan Zurawski
> ClayDesta Bank VP

"Midland housing costs have increased 4.6 percent in the last year, with 2.7 percent coming in the last six months," she said. "Over the past year, Odessa housing costs have gone up 4.4 percent. Only 0.4 percent of that rise has come in the past six months."

In clothing costs, both cities saw a 2.4 percent increase.

"Winter sales are virtually over and clothing costs are back up," Zurawski said. "Children's and women's apparel was higher in both cities, while men's clothing was lower in Midland."

Reversing January's trend, food at home costs rose 0.9 percent in February in Midland. And for the fifth month in a row, Odessa grocery prices increased. The rate for February was 2.8 percent.

"This was the largest single month increase since we began preparing these reports in February of 1985," Zurawski said. Food prices in Midland have increased 2.7 percent during the last year — 2.4 percent of it in the past six months. In Odessa, local food costs have increased 6.2 percent during the past year, with 4.8 percent occuring in the last six months.

Midland medical costs increased 0.2 percent in February.

"Slightly lower prices for non-prescription drugs were offset by higher costs for dental care," she said. Following two months of increases, Odessa medical expenses decreased 3.6 percent in February.

"In a direct reversal of last month's trends, slightly higher costs for dental care and non-prescription drugs were offset by lower costs for doctor's care," she said.

In the last year, Midland medical costs have gone up 3.1 percent with 1.1 percent occuring in the past six months. Odessa medical costs have increased 8.8 percent in the last 12 months, and declined 0.9 percent in the past six months.

RESTAURANT PRICES IN Midland remained stable for the second consecutive month. The cost of dining out in Odessa rose 1.6 percent during February, following two months of decline.

In Midland, the change computed over the past year is a 4.7 percent decrease, with 2.1 percent occuring in the past six months. A 5.8 percent increase has been measured for Odessa restaurant prices during the past year. A slightly higher 6.4 percent rise is shown for the past six months.

National consumer price index figure for February declined 0.3 percent.

"This is the first negative fluctuation we've seen in a few months," Zurawski said.

Housing costs dropped 0.1 percent; clothing declined 0.4 percent; medical expenses increased 1 percent; transportation declined 1.5 percent; utilities increased 0.2 percent; and food prices dropped 0.1 percent.

The national annualized inflation rate was 2.9 percent.

Used car sales up in Permian Basin

Region's repair shops flooded with old autos, new work

By Nancy Clise
BUSINESS JOURNAL REPORTER

MIDLAND — Used car sales have surged in the Permian Basin, according to area salesmen and repair shops are being flooded with business as consumers cling to their old cars.

"As money begins to dry up we always see a surge in used car buying," said Richard Green of Neatherlin-Mazda-Jeep of Midland.

Joyce Lee, owner and manager of Angelo Motors, San Angelo, agreed that her business was going well.

"I moved three today and five Saturday," Lee said. "It's definitely the price range. People don't want those big payments when they don't know what's going to happen tomorrow."

"As long as the economy stays down people will buy used cars instead of new ones," Green continued.

Traditionally, Green noted, used car buyers tend to be on the lower end of the economic scale. But with low oil prices and the lay-offs those prices result in people who would usually buy a new car may turn to a used car instead.

"People in high income brackets are looking for used instead of new because no one knows from one day to the next whether they'll have a job around here," Green said.

WHILE SALES ARE UP, business is not all it could be, Green pointed out. "We've had pretty good sales, but they're not booming."

Many consumers are buying used cars instead of new ones, but many are not buying at all.

American roads are handling a record number of automobiles, including a large number of older cars that drivers refuse to part with, according to a study by R.L. Polk & Co., a publishing house that compiles statistics for various industries.

Dwain Handley, service manager for Sewell Ford of Odessa, confirmed that many people were keeping their old cars and having them repaired rather than buying a new or used car.

"A lot of people are keeping older models," Handley said, "and paying higher repair bills to keep cars running. In 1982, during the boom, if a car needed a new motor, people would trade it in for a new one. But for the last couple of years they have had the car fixed instead."

HOWEVER, HANDLEY NOTED that business had dropped off since the first of the year, when oil prices started to drop.

The Polk study found that a record 115 million cars use U.S. roads, including 10.4 million new cars that were registered in the year ending June 30. That was the highest level of new registrations in six years.

While new-car registrations remain at brisk levels, the median age of all cars on the road also continues to rise and is now 6.9 years, up from 6.7 years in mid-1984, the company said.

"A lot of older vehicles are being kept in operating order by the ever-increasing availability of replacement parts at reasonable prices," said R.D. Borthwick, a vice president in Polk's motor statistics division.

In the year ending June 30, 1985, 7.7 million cars that had been registered weren't renewed, placing them in Polk's "presumed scrappage" category. That left a registration total of 114,662,333, compared with 112,018,640 a year ago.

The record median age for cars on the road was 8.0 years, set in 1948 as the domestic auto industry struggled to keep up with the post-World War II demand for goods.

By 1950, a buying binge had reduced the median age to 6.2 years.

The median age of cars fell to 4.9 years in 1970, according to Polk.

ALARM ...

for a Houston firm for two years, the went "on his own."

Noll is not without competition. He feels legitimate competition is healthy. At the same time, he has serious reservations about the do-it-yourself alarm systems which can be sold in Texas without a license.

"The average cost of installing an alarm system in a home or business is around $1,500 to $2,000, although this can vary in either direction," Noll said. "A large portion of the cost is labor. It is not a job the average homeowner or businessman should entrust to an amature."

Noll feels people are sometimes easily confused about the type of alarm they should buy.

"Some customers ask for a silent alarm," he commented, "but, I try to steer them away from this idea. The apprehension and recovery rate for stolen articles is very low ... maybe as low as 15 percent. The idea is to keep from being ripped off or vandalized in the first place. A silent alarm does not alert the thief, but it takes the average thief only minutes to burglarize a home, and depending on circumstances, the response time for the authorities is not necessarily fast enough to catch a professional burglar."

ACCORDING TO NOLL, the major drawback to an audible alarm is accidental triggering. When the siren goes off, it can be somewhat irritating to the neighbors.

A security system not only warns you of an intruder, it can also phone a 24-hour monitoring system which offers various services ranging from checking your residence to be certain the alarm is legitimate to actually summoning the authorities. The systems have advanced to the point they can actually inform the monitors whether the alarm is for the sound of breaking glass, the detection of movement or body heat within the secured area, an unauthorized door being opened, or even if one of your water lines has broken. Some units can even detect fires, or smoke, and will automatically call the fire department.

When asked about the sign his company posts near doors and windows, proclaiming the residence or business to be equipped with an alarm system, Noll said, "There is a logic involved with the sign. It does warn the thief ahead of time. But, the basic function of an alarm is to prevent you from being robbed. A thief, given the choice, would rather rob a home or business which is unprotected, rather than attempt to breach a security system."

Bullard went on from there to work as art director for a number of advertising agencies in and around Dallas (where he resided for 29 years), and demand for his services grew. He reached a point where he found himself being called from Texas to New York, to help create the backdrops in the VIP Wax Museum at Lake George, N.Y., then, back to Texas to do the diaramas for the Presidential Wax Museum in Dallas.

For a number of years, he was responsible for designing and plotting the "traffic lanes," and sets for Texas A&M University's Texas Agriculture Exhibit at the Texas State Fair. He has been asked to design sets for stage plays.

In 1968, he was diagnosed as having colloidal mellanoma...a cancerous tumor on the retina of his right eye. The loss of an eye for an artist is tantamount to disaster.

Without both eyes, it is impossible to judge distances.

When he heard the diagnosis, he "stomped, kicked, cursed...and prayed" as he struggled with a decision that would affect his life tremendously.

Without the eye, he was conceiveably "washed up" as an artist, yet to retain it (they didn't know at the time the tumor was cancerous), he ran the risk of losing his life.

He finally decided to have the eye removed, and afterward taught himself to paint in spite of his handicap.

He has to work close to the canvas, and occasionally must resort to rulers and tools to acertain his "vanishing point," but with perserverance and determination, Bullard has succeeded spectacularly.

In fact, the commissions he received for portraits of entertainers Willie Nelson and Jimmie Dean were received in 1979 and 1981, after he had lost his eye.

His current commercial project is for a local retirement home, which is being renovated. Bullard's assignment is to depict the interior decore, utilizing swatches and photos of materials and furniture the decorating company intends to utilize.

He busily observes various sketches of the main area. Then he examines swatches of material and the photos of the furniture. Next, he turns to a massive, partially painted picture of the room, and adds a daub of color here, a pencil mark there.

That is Jack Bullard at work. Meticulous, fussy, exacting.

Bullard still tinkers around mechanically, and likes to fancy himself an inventor. (He has built and flown six homebuilt aircraft in his lifetime.)

Painting profits perceptively

By Ken Scharnberg
BUSINESS JOURNAL CORRESPONDENT

ODESSA — At first glance, you get the impression the man with the dapper little mustache and the black patch over his right eye might have been cast in one of those 1940s movies as some flying hero, opposite Clark Gable or Errol Flynn.

He even looks like a pilot.

Jack Bullard's first love was airplanes. In fact, he still holds an airframe mechanic's license. But that's not what he's known for. His reputation has grown from his remarkable accomplishments of imaginative, true-to-life works of art.

Is art really a business?

It is when you're skilled in both the fine arts as well as commercial work, and Bullard is a master craftsman who dwells comfortably in both worlds.

He has won national acclaim for his fine art, and has been commissioned to paint portraits of celebrities such as Jimmy Dean and Willie Nelson.

People in the business world know Bullard for his work in developing Palisades Park in New Jersey, and his design of the Riverview Amusement Park abutting the Wisconsin Dells, near Madison.

Commercial artists seldom receive acclaim from the general public, since most of their contributions are unsigned and uncredited. However, there are few people who are not familiar with the Frito Lay brand "Doritos" snack food bag.

Bullard designed it.

He also designed the world-famous Texas Instruments logo.

His work has appeared in such distinguished locales as the World Fair in Brussels, Belgium, when he designed an outdoor display for Dresser Industries.

Over the years he's had honors and awards showered upon him. But one of the laudits he's proudest of is his invitation to participate in this year's Southwest Oilfield Art Exhibition.

During the show, he will display two original paintings.

There is an incredible demand for Bullard's expertise. Just how does a man go from an airplane mechanic to a noted, successful artist?

The eastern Oklhoma native explains, "I've always loved art. One day, while I was working as a mechanic at White Rock Airport in Dallas, the shop hangar burned to the ground. It was instant unemployment. I threw some pictures and paintings together (looking back at them, they were awful!) and hit the street, trying to sell my work. Each night, I'd press my only suit, so I would look presentable the next day. I wore out a pair of shoes, and almost starved to death. Finally, a graphic illustrator asked me if I could do a pen and ink drawing of a chunk of coal, some tung nuts, and some spinach...by the next morning! I rushed home, worked into the night, and presented the drawings to him the next morning.

"It was nerve wracking. The fella looked at them, and looked at them, and finally said, 'They're great...just what I need.', and he bought them. And I've been working ever since. That was in 1947, and I earned $817 that year."

Wind wrung wings' work worthwhile

By Jane Tindall
BUSINESS JOURNAL CORRESPONDENT

ODESSA - A little over a year ago Joe White Lincoln Mercury installed a couple of wind energy towers - windmills - in hope of reducing high electric bills.

Now, with a track record to look at, David White said he's glad they made the $80,000-plus investment, and he would do it again.

"We have saved about 20 percent on our overall electricity costs," White said, "but we did have to extend the payback time a little. We had thought originally that it would take from six to seven years, but now it looks as though it might be more like seven to 10 years."

However, there are tax credits for installing the alternate source and, as a business, there are depreciation benefits. White pays Texas Electric Service Co., 6 cents for each kilowatt hour used and TESCO pays White 2.7 cents for each kilowatt hour the wind energy produces.

Installation of the 90-foot towers was quite an engineering feat, according to White. He said there were only three structural engineers in Odessa, to his knowledge, and only one of them had ever had experience installing a structure of this nature with a rotating turbine at the top.

THE ENGINEER, Ray Hudson, worked with the manufacturer, Jacobs Wind Energy Systems, to make serveral determinations.

One was how to position the three 13-foot blades in order to generate the most electricity for the longest periods of time.

That, of course, depended on the prevailing wind direction and the average wind speed.

"It was a real surprise to me," White said, "to find out, through records kept for several years by the National Weather Service, that the average wind speed here is only 12 miles an hour."

According to White, the weather service clocks the wind speed at a height of 20 feet. They extrapolated that to determine that the wind speed at 90 feet is 14 miles per hour. With the height of the towers and the size of the generator it takes a 27-mile per hour wind to generate the maximum the unit can product at 17.5 kilowatts.

With the prevailing winds from the south the blades are set in that direction, but because the two towers are placed so close together, if the wind is from any direction but south or north it creates wake turbulence, generated by the upwind turbine.

"That's why people driving by sometimes see apparently no movement at all atop one or the other of the towers, and they wonder what's going on," he said.

HE EXPRESSED disappointment at the restrictions imposed by the City of Odessa which forced them to place the towers only about 30 feet apart.

"That's the reason for the interference with the blade action. It's caused by the proximity of the towers. According to White, the manufacturer recommends that the towers be put no closer together than the height of the towers — 90 feet.

But the city ordinance states that the towers must be placed in such a way that if they topple they will fall within the property lines.

"Since we installed them we have bought the property immediately west of our regular lot for our used car lot, but we haven't decided whether the cost of moving one of the towers is economically feasible at the time," he said.

White says the consumption of electricity during business hours is 18 to 20 kilowatts. At night, with all the outside lights, they burn about 45 kilowatts.

TESCO General Manager Bill Griffin, said there is only one other wind energy system in this district, and that is at an individual residence in Crane. He says that utility companies are looking at a number of different sources of co-generation but it muse be a reliable source to be really cost-effective.

Its location in relation to the utility company's power source would also be a factor in its economic feasibility. TESCO right now has three contracts for major co-generation efforts in the Gulf Coast area, Griffin stated.

New rules could cost

AUSTIN — State Comptroller Bob Bullock warned that new rules of the federal food stamp program could cost Texas government $150 million in lost sales tax revenue on candy and soft drinks.

Bullock said reauthorization of the federal program contained new provisions that forbids states from participating if they collect taxes on food stamp purchases.

"We don't tax meat and potatoes, but we do tax candy, soft drinks and diluted juices," Bullock said.

Latest employment figures reveal fundamental change

By Julie Jerome
BUSINESS JOURNAL NEWS EDITOR

Employment in Midland and Odessa not only took a sharp downturn in February from previous months, it reflected shifts in employment sectors other than oil and gas.

In Midland County, the number of employed dropped 2.4 percent from last month, and a drastic 6.3 percent from February 1985. The number of unemployed increased 25 percent from last month, and 32.5 percent from February 1985.

In Ector County, the number of employed decreased 3.2 percent in February from the previous month; and decreased 6 percent from the same month last year.

The number of unemployed increased 32.1 percent from January and from February 1985.

"The effects of previous declines are starting to show a significant impact on other areas of the economy," according to James L. Williams, a Permian Basin economist. "Trade is down 8 percent from one year ago. This shows the drop in employment is not isolated to one portion of the economy — oil and gas."

UNEMPLOYMENT RATES
February, 1986

Midland	8%
Odessa	8.7%
San Angelo	6.8%
Howard County	8.9%
Nation	7.8%

In the city of Midland, 8 percent of the work force was unemployed in February. Some 3,475 people were not working from a labor force of 43,570. This compares to a 5.6 percent rate in January during which 40,949 people were working. The February figure reveals 40,095 people were working from the reported labor force.

In the city of Odessa, 8.7 percent of the work force was unemployed in February. Some 4,131 people were not working from a labor force of 47,546 people. This compares to a 5.9 percent unemployment rate in January.

In February, 43,415 people were working in Odessa, while 44,706 were employed in January.

In the city of San Angelo, 6.8 percent of the work force was unemployed in February. Some 2,562 people were not working from a labor force of 37,683. In January, San Angelo reported an unemployment rate of 4.8 percent.

In Howard County, 8.9 percent of the labor force was unemployed in February. Some 1,382 people were not working from a work force of 15,519. In January, Howard County reported an unemployment rate of 6.5 percent.

The state's unemployment rate of 8.8 percent is a strong rise from the 6.9 percent unemployment rate in January. Of a 7.8-million-member work force, 542,600 were not working.

The national unemployment rate for February was 7.8 percent.

"In the past when we saw declining numbers in employment, we often did not see those people left the area and therefore the labor force," Williams said. "Often these people did not show up as unemployed. But the decline in employment we have been experiencing has been strong enough that it is now severely cutting into the 'permanent' population."

The "permanent" population Williams refers to is that sector which intends to spend much of its lifetime in the Permian Basin. And unlike the more transient labor force that developed during the boom years of 1979-81, this sector shows up on the unemployment roles when members lose their jobs.

"This is one of the reasons we have seen such significant increases in the percent unemployed," he said.

Williams said a healthy economy should grow at a rate of 2.5-3 percent in employment each year.

"We have experienced a 2 percent decline in both cities over the past year, which is 4.5-5 percent below the growth rate that would be expected in a reasonably healthy economy," he said. "As expected, the sectors of the economy hardest hit are manufacturing employment and oil and gas employment. These declines reflect the current weakness in crude oil prices."

Williams said that after observing a large number of initial claims for unemployment in Midland and Odessa, it appears in the next few months there will be "continued significant reductions in the number of employees in the Permian Basin."

Thinking like thief

Alarmist opening doors

By Ken Scharnberg
BUSINESS JOURNAL CORRESPONDENT

ODESSA — Charles Noll's gaze traverses the premises, noting windows, doors and sensitive areas. He's tall, neat, and a graying mustache adds an aire of distinction to his bearing.

Yet, his quiet demeanor is deceiving.

He's looking for a way to rob his customers' homes or businesses.

Noll is the owner of Alarm Systems Inc., an Odessa company specializing in alarm and security systems. Noll ran a successful advertising agency for a number of years, but it was his Navy background with electronics and his close association with a computer company that led him to gradually phase out of the advertising business, and begin Alarm Systems Inc.

"By 1982 ... the oil business had peaked, and the advertising business began to fall off. I've always been something of an entrepreneur, and I had the electronic expertise and some of the computer background to get me started. I saw a need for this service, and capitalized on it."

THE ALARM BUSINESS is highly competitive. The product line is constantly changing, improving and becoming more complex. Noll's systems range from the ultra-sophisticated security demanded by banks, to the technological wonders he has installed in local residences.

When asked why he chose the security field rather than some other enterprise, he replied, "Even though the 'boom' was over, the Permian Basin had become a center of wealth. Unfortunately, it also became a prime target for thieves. Obviously, anyone with material belongings wants to protect his possessions, and the chances of having your home or business robbed or vandalized are incredibly high. In some neighborhoods, homes have been burglarized two, even three or more times in a year."

Noll's customers can bear witness to some rather incredible examples of crime in the area. Noll cited one individual who purchased a security system after first opting for heavily-barred windows and a sophisticated locking system. Thieves simply kicked down his door.

Charles Noll, owner of Alarm Systems Inc., Odessa, has found that thinking like a thief pays.

ANOTHER VICTIM SAID burglars, operating in broad daylight, broke into her house, stole a number of valuable articles and ate a leisurely lunch in her kitchen before departing. She, to, has become one of Noll's customers.

Texas requires two years experience in the alarm business, as well as a security check and a bond for salespeople and installers of security systems. To satisfy the state requirements, Noll worked in Odessa

Individual Retirement accounts, better known as IRA's can be a very beneficial form of tax shelter. They are highly publicized by banks and savings & loans.

The maximum tax savings for a $2000.00 IRA is $1000.00; however, married couples must have taxable income in excess to 189,000.00 to save $1000.00. The tax savings is smaller the lower your taxable income; for example, a married taxpayer with taxable income of $40,000.00 would save $660.00 by contributing 2000.00 to an IRA.

IRA's become taxable income when withdrawn and are subject to an additional 10% penalty if withdrawn before the taxpayer is 59½ years of age.

From Rome to Midland, from busboy to owner, always at home by the range

By Jheri Fleet
BUSINESS JOURNAL CORRESPONDENT

MIDLAND — Le Sans Souci is located in the heart of Rome, but the son of the founder of the restaurant is letting West Texans get a taste of contemporary Italian cuisine in Midland.

Claudio Breugalossi started working in his father's restaurant at 14, represented Italy at an International Cooking Festival in Japan in 1983. He opened his own restaurant, Claudio's in a quiet little corner of Midland in 1984.

Claudio's doesn't offer Italian American dishes, and you won't find red and white checkered table clothes, or chianti bottles with candles melting down the side.

The chef walks through the dining room occasionally checking with the customers personally to see how the dinner guests like their food.

"When I started I was a busboy, I did everything. The dirtiest jobs from working in the kitchen peeling potatoes to bus boy at the table and the bar. I did everything," Claudio said.

"I like to cook the meal. I don't like to supervise," he said.

Next month he will go to Beverly Hills for five days and cook in a restaurant there for a short vacation.

"I have to get away from time to time to refresh myself. I like to change the menu. I experiment with some of my regular customers and try out some special dishes that are popular in Italy," Claudio said.

A change of pace and atmosphere gives him a chance to get creative and try out what is popular in other parts of the country.

"It is very easy nowadays to cook the Italian way if you have the guts to impose the real Italian cuisine. The difference between the real Italian and Italian American food is 16,000 kilometers, an ocean," Claudio said.

When Italians immigrated to the United States at the beginning of the century, Claudio explained, they couldn't find the herbs, so they Americanized their way of cooking with other ingredients. Now you can find more ingredients of the Italian cuisine here than in Italy. Here you find basil, chives, and anise as well as other ingredients all year round, in Italy they are still seasonal.

"What I am trying to do here is create an interesting low sodium, low cholesterol, and low calorie menu," Claudio said. "Men here like sweet things more, fried and sweet. Women are more health and weight conscious. Sweet

Claudio Breugalossi, chef, and owner of Claudio's restaurant, Midland, learned his craft in his family's famed establishment in Rome, La Sans Souci. Breugalossi says the difference between his native Italian cuisine and the popular Italian-American style is 16,000 kilometes and an ocean.

OC on fast-moving bandwagon

By Jane Tindall
BUSINESS JOURNAL CORRESPONDENT

ODESSA - One of the fastest growing career fields in the United States, according to Newsweek magazine is that of legal assistant, and Odessa College has jumped on the bandwagon in offering courses for those interested in such a career to pass the qualifying examinations.

The two-day test for certification, which is entirely voluntary, is given periodically around the country by the National Association of Legal Assistants Inc., the certification board.

Upon successful completion, the CLA can then do anything an attorney can do except advise clients, quote fees or represent the client in court. Although certification is voluntary at the present time, there is a move toward making it required by either the federal government or by various state governments.

ACCORDING TO PATTY Godwin, who has just completed the test, the reason for the popular move toward certification and hiring of legal assistants is primarily economic. "With an assistant being able to do research, client interviews, draft questions for depositions - all the nitty-gritty details - the fees charged a client are reduced. If an assistant works an hour on a depostition, for instance, it will probably cost the client about one-third of what he would be charged if the attorney spent an hour doing the same thing," she said. "However everything the assistant does must be under the supervision of an attorney, otherwise they would be practicing law without a license, which is illegal."

But, being designed to make legal help more economical is not the only reason for its surge in popularity, she believes.

"We think it's time people stop thinking of legal assistants as ambulance-chasers," she said. "Legal assistants are competent and knowledgeable of the law. They are professionals and want to be recognized as such."

Odessa College began offering the courses because of demand, said Karen Johnson, director of business and professional programs.

They set up an 18-member advisory committee composed of attorneys, legal assistants and judges, in order to establish a curriculum. It calls for 17 different short courses altogether, with a total of 253 hours.

SINCE FEBRUARY, when the curriculum was begun, only seven courses have been offered. A new course, Rules of Evidence, is set for April 7 and 8 and 14 and 15, from 6 to 8:30 p.m.

In May a short course on the Texas Railroad Commission and oil and gas law will be offered.

"Many of these courses are not just for legal assistants seeking certification," said Johnson. "For instance, the course on the railroad commission will give vital information to people in the banking business, accountants, oil company employees and the like. Other courses would help people in other fields understand more about the law governing those areas."

OC sets about one course a month and the classes have varied in size from 10 to 30 participants, depending on the subject matter.

Courses at OC are non-credit courses, but Midland College offers an associate degree for legal assistants, designed especially for those who think they might like to become an attorney, but have not yet made the final decision. With the associate degree the hours can be applied to hours pursuant to a law degree.

According to Godwin, the associate degree is not sufficient to allow one to take the certification examination.

To be eligible he must also have two years experience in a law office.

A person with a bachelor's degree, no matter what field, is able to take the exam with only one year legal experience. A professional legal secretary must have five years experience before taking the test.

Anyone interested in more information concerning the Legal Assistant program should contact continuing education department at Odessa College, 335-6582.

Perfection, safety important to woman's trucking firm

By Nancy Clise
BUSINESS JOURNAL REPORTER

CRANE — "This is an unusual business for a woman to be in," admits Donna Workman, co-founder and manager of Gard Truck Co.

"If there was ever a business you would expect a woman not to be in, it would probably be this one," Workman continued. "Some of my drivers do get some kidding because they work for a woman, but for the most part, we just do what we have to do."

A. R. "Butch" and Donna Workman began their business from a rented office in downtown Crane in 1976. Since then the company has grown from the original two pump trucks to a spacious office building on the East side of town, a large inventory of tanks, four pump trucks, six transport trucks, two tow trucks, a forklift and 28 full-time employees.

Last year the company recorded more than $2 million in sales, but Workman noted that having a "big business" was not why she and her husband started the company after he had been driving in the oil fields for more than 10 years.

"BUTCH DESIRED TO GIVE perfection to customers, that was our whole idea when we went into the business, and it has remained our goal," she said. "We didn't begin this company to get big."

"Butch determined through the years that the only way he could have control over the kind of job that was done and how the drivers responded was if he had his own company," Workman continued.

Success did not come overnight for the Workmans and the building of a business can be a painful and trying experience. It can also be dangerous, as the Workmans found out four years ago when Butch, Donna's husband and the father of their three children, was involved in an accident in one of the company trucks.

"During the boom everybody was driving 100 or even 120 hours a week," Workman said. "Anyway, one night when Butch was returning from a job he had an accident which put him into the intensive care unit for close to a year."

> Butch desired to give perfection to customers, that was our whole idea when we went into the business, and it has remained our goal. We didn't begin this company to get big.
>
> Donna Workman
> Gard Truck Co.

THE ACCIDENT LEFT Workman with brain damage and partial paralysis. He is presently in a hospital in Houston undergoing therapy and health care.

"Before, we had always split the business so that he pretty much took care of the yard and things in the field and I took care of the books and the contracts and the business end of the things," Workman explains. "But since the accident I've been taking care of everything."

Workman freely acknowledges that without the support of her employees she would have been unable to continue running her business, taking care of her sick husband and her three children, Robert, 17, Gregg, 16 and Angie, 13.

"When I had to be at the hospital or at home these people took care of business for me," Workman said. "The first year after the accident I was really just in and out of here all the time, and without good people this business would have gone under."

ONE OF THE PEOPLE Workman relies on is Rick Beardsley, yard manager.

"Donna is a good person to work for," Beardsley said. "While she doesn't have the technical expertise to run the yard, she does know the business end. Then she lets me take care of things for her out here."

One of the programs Beardsley has instituted in the yard is a regular down time for the trucks, for maintenance and repair.

"Most people just wait until something is wrong and the truck just won't run anymore," Beardsley said. "The way we do it, every six weeks each of our trucks is down for one or two days for a complete overhaul. That way, if there is a problem, we take care of it before it's a big problem.

"Most truck companies would never agree to try something like this," he admitted. "But I convinced Donna to try it and it has worked very well for us."

"I HAVE IT IN BLACK and white," Workman agreed. "If you wait until a problem has to be fixed, it could keep a truck down for a week. This way, with proper scheduling, you can keep problems of that type to a minimum. This is keeping costs down and providing safety for my workers."

Workman appreciates the loyalty her employees have given her and intends to pay them in kind. While her business is down this year approximately 25 percent, there are no plans to lay off workers.

"I will never lay off anyone for financial reasons," Workman said. "As far as I am concerned, we will either all swim or all sink together. No one here needs to be concerned about loosing his job because of money problems. I just won't do that."

While giving perfection to their customers has been and remains a primary goal for Gard Truck Co., and its owners, employee safety has also been a major concern for this woman in business.

"I DEFINITELY FEEL that safety is one of the biggest concerns of employers today," Workman said. "It is one of the things I learned after we had been in business only a few months and, of course, because of Butch's accident, it has stuck with me."

Workman has established a number of rules for herself during her years of working and managing the business. Her number one rule is "Don't be afraid to do anything. I would never ask one of my employees to do something that I wouldn't be willing to do myself. I've driven, I've worked on the trucks, I've greased the trucks, I've answered the phone, filed. Anything that needs done around here I can do, of course, I can't do it all myself."

"IT HAS BEEN A VERY slow, gradual growth," Workman points out. "It has been the kind of growth that you didn't just jump in and overextend yourself. We have slowly, slowly built the business up."

Two years after her husband's accident, Donna bought the land and helped to design and build the office and yard from which she now directs the business.

Like many working mothers, business does take up a large amount of Workman's time. However, being her own boss does give her some advantages that other women don't necessarily have.

"I tried to give the place a homey look," Workman emphasized. "There are so many times that I have to spend the night here, while all the drivers are out and I have to be available. That means the kids are up here with me. We eat dinner here and many nights sleep here."

THE IMPORTANCE WORKMAN places on keeping her family together and thriving is apparent while talking to her.

"After my husband's accident it was hard for me to be seen in public, other than in business or church situations," Workman said. "But about a year ago I realized that I wasn't being fair to myself or the kids. Now we take a big trip a least a couple times a year."

The Workman family usually joins several other families from the area and goes skiing in winter months and recently began taking scuba lessons together.

While she is sure that people will continue to be amazed when they meet what is surely one of the few female trucking company bosses, Workman plans to continue what she does best.

Clockwise from upper left: Donna Workman, co-founder and manager of Gard Truck Co. Tanks resting in the yard are ready for use. Starting with two pump trucks, Gard now runs more than ten. Employees give and get loyalty from Workman, who does not plan any layoffs in the future. Trucks are maintained through scheduled downtime which has imporved safety and cut costs.

Congressman to speak to PB Economics Club

U.S. Rep. Richard Armey, R-Denton, will speak to the Permain Basin Economics Club on April 1.

TECHNOLOGY

Improves efficiency, reduces production costs

On marginal wells computers, remote management may be key

By Jheri Fleet
BUSINESS JOURNAL CORRESPONDENT

Though computer technology has proved to be profitable to major oil companies, few independents can afford to staff and equip their companies for the same profitability.

Independents acknowledge the computer advances which result in time and financial savings plus reduced wear and tear on the equipment, but many stubbornly contend, "I believe it works for them (major oil companies), but our wells are different."

On marginal wells that may have to be capped, computer technology and remote production management can mean the difference.

One company in the Permian Basin has been providing the same services used by major to independents, Automated Oil Production of Midland. AOP uses state-of-the-art technology to reduce operating costs and improve efficiency of production operations.

The company provides design, procurement, installation, maintenance, programming and analysis services. And, AOP completely trains the personnel of the client company in all phases of the operations.

FOR MORE THAN 30 MONTHS AOP has "worked out all the bugs," including direct lighting strikes, to service 158 wells with the remote management technology. A recent survey discovered the average savings with remote management technology with $410.66 per well per month.

"This type of management reduces the operating cost and, in many cases, increases the average production. That makes wells that might be plugged profitable, especially now," Dean Woodward, president of AOP said.

> This type of management reduces the operating cost and, in many cases, increases the average production. That makes wells that might be plugged profitable, especially now.
>
> Dean Woodward
> President, AOP

Only recently has the company been actively seeking more clients.

"We had the top men from the beginning to work on the installation, maintenance, programming and analysis. We kept improving on each area and now we have enough trained crews that we can expand," Woodward said. "We rarely have a fault that goes unattended more that the day it happens.

"The independent producer doesn't have the visibility or information to know what is happening to the well that we give him through the dynagraph cards at his office or ours. Instead of relying on someone to go to the field, we are able to do dynagraphs in minutes from right here in the office hourly.

"IF THE CARD IS filling nicely when the dynagraph is taken at the well site," Woodward said, "There is nothing to alert the independent. But, when you can go back in ten minutes or twenty minutes later on a daily basis you find the fault, that makes it profitable. You get a better insight on the mechanics of it."

Woodward emphasizes that AOP is not a vendor, but a systems house. "We are not tied to one single vendor. If a particular client wants a certain piece of equipment, and it isn't something that we feel would be detrimental to them, we do go along with them. We select only the best equipment we can find for our client's."

A typical comment from a major oil company working with similar technology is, "From the time they start putting it on one side of the field until the time he completes the other side of the field the technology has paid for the whole thing." The cost of computerized management is amortized in one year.

AOP IS MOVING TO ONE-HOUR, automatic hourly computer checks of each well. If there is any kind of trouble the computer will print out an alarm and AOP will call the foreman and let him know what is going on with that well. Woodward feels this is especially valuable during the day.

One large disposal well is monitored for sixteen different things every fifteen minutes. If anything goes wrong at night the computer dials the answering service and punches the alarm on the printer and prints out what is wrong and tells them who to call. The computer is specific about what the problem is so that if it is a power failure the client knows and doesn't send a pump repairman.

Daily reports are sent to clients with a cover summary sheet. "We tell them that this well is hitting down hard (pounding), and that is the biggest offender for a well and the most common problem. The client only has to shut the well down for a few minutes to correct the problem, but it saves on destruction of equipment and improves efficiency." Woodward says.

OKLAHOMA HAS POISONOUS GAS wells that have to be shut down as soon as a leak is discovered...perhaps the next time the pumper goes by. But, AOP shuts down the wells remotely the instant a gas leak is detected. While non-poisonous wells must be started manually providing safety for not only the field personnel, but also the surface owner and the livestock.

"We are an information company when you get right down to it," Woodward said. "What the independent has come to appreciate is the value of information and that is what we provide."

"I told one of my first clients that I wasn't a petroleum engineer, but I was a communications engineer. I didn't know much about oil production, but I did know the value of information," Woodward said.

TWO YEARS LATER HE ASKED the client if he know what Woodward meant by the value of information. The client understood.

Any time an AOP client want to they can be on line, in his office personally. He has a computer on his back desk.

Anytime he wants information he can turn around and ask for it by talking through the computer to any well he wants to," Woodward said.

"That client did that from the first well. He managed wells himself with a computer that goes in a briefcase," Woodward continued. "From Hawaii he can manipulate an oil well in Sterling County. Now that's control."

The resistance to computerizing management of oil and gas wells is fading as independents see an opportunity to use the same technology used by the major, without having to bear the extreme cost of staffing and maintaining such a service.

Texaco president warns TRC of shaky oil future

AUSTIN — Texaco U.S.A. President Roland M. Routhier told the Texas Railroad Commission that the precipitous decline in U.S. crude oil prices raises the specter of sharply increased dependence on imported oil and threatens the future of the domestic petroleum industry.

"Clearly, the state of the industry is not good," Routhier said. "If current trends continue for many more months, the U.S. domestic industry will be irreparably injured."

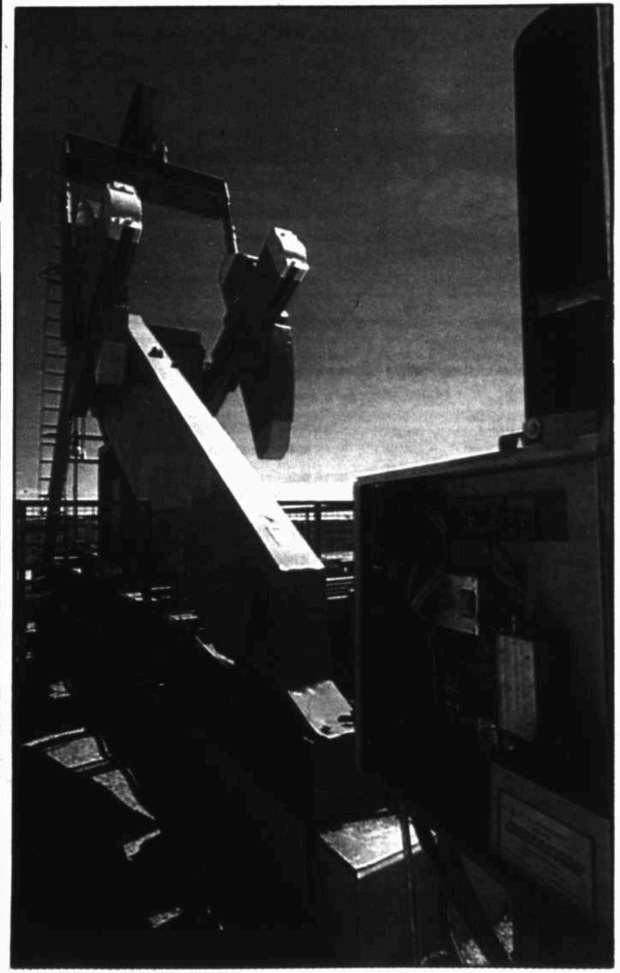

Routhier, in presenting Texaco's assessment of the state of the industry, also called on leaders of the petroleum industry to communicate the gravity of the present situation to the American public, and he committed Texaco to the effort to preserve a strong domestic petroleum industry.

In detailing the factors that have contributed to the current decline in U.S. production, Routhier noted that if a $15 per barrel price level or below continues, a significant percentage of stripper wells - which make up approximately 12-14 percent of total U.S. production - will be plugged, many of which will be lost forever. In addition to the immediate reduction in curde oil production, lower prices portend even steeper future production declines as exploration for

Once 'saved' farm programs may get axe

By Nancy Clise
BUSINESS JOURNAL REPORTER

MIDLAND — Austere budget proposals from President Reagan could cut into some U.S. Department of Agriculture programs that have been "saved" in past years.

Cuts will have to be enacted, even if, as many in the department are hopeful, Gramm-Rudman is found unconstitutional. Senate Appropriations Committee staffers confirmed that a bill would not be passed unless allocation levels are met.

Under Reagan's plan the USDA's 1987 budget outlays would fall 18 percent from the present level. Exceptions are farm price supports, operating loans and food-aid programs, however many other USDA activities - from the Extension Service to meat inspectors - face major cutbacks.

Bud Leuthold, president of the National Association of Wheat Growers, notes that while agriculture accounts for only 4 percent of the budget, it is expected to bear 25 percent of Reagan's overall reduction in federal outlays.

Many details of the cutback are still tentative due to the need for budget approval and changes in law before some activities can be cut. Defense-spending decreases or a tax increase could inject funds for domestic programs, but among highlights for the administration's proposal are:

Target prices and loan rates promised in the 1985 farm bill are retained for 1987. But, due to farmers receiving up to 40 percent of the 1986-crop deficiency payments this spring instead of fiscal 1987.

Farmers Home Administration will eliminate all lending for emergency disasters, farm real estate, rural housing and rural development, although funds for farm operating loans will increase by nearly 25 percent above 1986 levels.

Extension Service funds would be cut 60 percent and have a major impact on the USDA Cooperative Extension Service and consequently the Texas Agricultural Extension Service, a partner in the nationwide system.

"President Reagan's proposed budget for fiscal year 1987 would reduce federal funds to cooperative extension services by more than $10 million," points out Dr. Zerle L. Carpenter, service director of the extension service. "If this is approved by Congress, it would result in the loss of a number of staff positions and a reduction in specific programs. Yet we want to continue to do the best job possible in providing quality educational programs to the citizens of Texas."

While agriculture has traditionally been one of the state's leading industries, hard times in recent years has drastically reduced income for farmers and ranchers. "That makes is all the more important that we have a strong extension service," Carpenter insists, "to work with our agricultural producers in improving their decision making, managerial skills and increasing production efficiency so as to give them every opportunity to increase their income."

Federal cuts to the extension service come in addition to state cuts in already hard-pressed agricultural areas. Texas Extension Services have already been asked to cut back 13 percent by Gov. Mark White, in an across-the-board slash of all state agencies.

In Washington, D.C., half of the extension's 177-man staff could be laid off. The administration also wants to top-prioritize extension funds to help farmers enhance profitability and conserve soil. However, non-farm services such as home economics, turf-grass management and garden care is targeted for elimination.

While proposed cuts may be painful, they will probably be less chaotic to agriculture than cuts under Gramm-Rudman. Automatic cuts of 10 to 30 percent in price-support programs could be in store for farmers unless Congress meets the 1987 deficit target of $144 billion.

New long-length HTD Belts for big drives!

PowerGrip HTD® belts eliminate most maintenance, all lubrication, and are more efficient than V-belts or roller chains.

Servicing a big drive is a big job removing and replacing the guards, muscling heavy components into place, adjusting drive tension; all this can take many hours. And, with V-belts or roller chains you have to do it over and over again as part of regular maintenance.

PowerGrip HTD belts eliminate the work and save the man hours. HTD Belts don't stretch like V-belts or wear like roller chains, so they very rarely need retensioning to take up stretch and wear. And they never need lubrication.

Now, PowerGrip HTD belts are available for big, long-center drives in standard catalog lengths up to 270 inches, for up to 1200 hp, and for speeds from 10 to 5500 rpm.

V-belts and roller chains can't match the efficiency of PowerGrip HTD belts. Output speeds never vary because there is no slippage. HTD belts start out 98% efficient and stay that way for the life of the belts.

You can turn your big drive service problems into big savings in maintenance, man-hours and efficiency with PowerGrip HTD belts.

Congress may help too

Farm lending restraints loosened

By Peggy Roberson
WASHINGTON BUREAU

WASHINGTON — The nation's banking overseers early in March relaxed regulatory constraints on lending by struggling farm belt banks, and Congress soon is expected to approve new legislation to try to head off more farm bankruptcies and bank failures.

New rules announced by officials of the Federal Reserve Board, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation and the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency were immediately effective.

The new rules will allow qualified banks to operate below minimum capital reserve levels. Also banks can get around taking an automatic loss against those reserves when restructuring loans and making concessions to help borrowers make payments.

All "distressed banks" may use the new rules, but banks with heavy losses from farm, energy and real estate loans are expected to be the major beneficiaries.

At least 450 banks on the FDIC'S "problem" list are agriculture banks, making up about 40 percent of the total of all problem commercial banks.

In 1985, 69 agriculture banks failed — more than half of all bank failures across the country.

IT IS NO SECRET that the banking regulators were trying to derail congressional initiatives to aid struggling farm banks. But a senator's aide was quoted last week as saying he cannot imagine any action the regulators could take that would be sufficient to head off legislation.

"The best thing the regulators can do is figure out what they can live with," the aide said.

It is no secret that the banking regulators were trying to derail congressional initiatives to aid struggling farm banks.

Predictions of a lingering depression in agriculture are motivating members of Congress to push forward with legislation.

The momentum for bank relief legislation also is coming from economic troubles in industries other than agriculture. The sharp drop in oil prices has placed many energy banks in just as severe a bind as those with farm loans.

In Texas, some banks are deeply involved in both agriculture and energy lending.

"It is my intention to see that what is done for one is done for both," said Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas, a Banking Committee member, quoted recently in the policy journal, Congressional Quarterly.

Federal Reserve vice chairman Preston Martin recently told the Senate Banking Committee that "a substantial rebound in crop prices does not appear likely in the near term." He cautioned it would be "unwise" to make public policy on the expectation of a rebound.

AS PLANTING TIME rolls around each spring, members of Congress become more interested in trying to help farmers get loans to get seeds in the ground.

Because this is an election year, both Republicans and Democrats are seeking ways to avoid being blamed for new farm and bank failures.

Some farm state members have proposed direct credit subsidies to farmers, but the Reagan administration is against any plan that would increase federal spending in this.

In the Senate, Democrat Alan J. Dixon of Illinois has proposed a bill that would permit banks write off loan losses over 10 years, instead of immediately, as presently required. Dixon said it would help banks keep their best farmer-borrowers from sinking until the ailing farm economy takes a turn for the better.

Senate Majority Leader Robert Dole, running for reelection from the farm state of Kansas, has offered qualified support to Dixon's plan.

Dole suggested a five-year amortization period for bad farm loans, rather than the current 10 years.

Dixon's bill is receiving support because it requires no cash outlays up front.

Congressional Quarterly reported that bank regulators fear it may simply postpone bank failures rather than prevent them.

The FDIC has an insurance fund of almost $18 billion, but officials are concerned that it might not be enough to cover a large number of bank failures.

Georgia Republican Mack Mattingly also supports Dixon's bill.

Alcoholic peanuts taste bad

WASHINGTON (AP) — Peanuts get bitter when they contain too much alcohol, so Agriculture Department scientists have developed a gadget that sorts out the drunks from the regular nuts.

If peanuts are exposed to severe cold or heat before they are cured, they produce alcohol and related compounds that give them a bitter flavor. Until now, taste tests have been used to detect poor flavor, but a new test using a sensor and meter does the job more efficiently.

"It's sort of a breathalyzer test for peanuts," says Harold E. Pattee of USDA's Agricultural Research Service. "The meter tells us the level of alcohol and related compounds in peanuts so that the bad-tasting ones can be separated from the good ones. The peanuts that taste bad can still be used to make oil or other products."

Pattee, who developed the concept, and James W. Dickens, an agency engineer who designed the meter, work at USDA's Market Quality and Handling Research Laboratory in Raleigh, N.C.

The agency said in a report released here that the meter is being tested in peanut production areas of Georgia, Texas and North Carolina.

If successful, USDA and commercial processors eventually may be able to use the device to check peanut inventories. Dickens said a meter would cost about $500, which he said is cheaper and more practical than chemical tests still under development.

In testing peanuts, about three ounces are ground up in a blender for about 10 seconds.

Patsy Welmaker, owner of Adventure Travel, Midland, took just three hours to decide to buy the company after 30 years of preparation.

Thirty years of selling leads to quick decision

By Jheri Fleet
BUSINESS JOURNAL CORRESPONDENT

MIDLAND — "I had been looking for a business to buy for about two years. I looked into quite a number of different things actually ... a liquor store, many franchise things ... then this became available," Patsy Welmaker said.

Adventure Travel wasn't the first business for Welmaker. For 15 years she was successful in real estate sales, before that she sold carpet and before that she was an interior designer. You could say she has been in sales for 30 years.

"This company had been owned previously by some friends and the man had died. By the time I looked at it a year and a half later it had gone way down," Welmaker recalled. "When they called to tell me it was for sale I asked them for three days to make up my mind and they agreed.

"I went to the bank and showed them some figures that they had given me on projected possibilities, (what they had done in the past). The banker looked at what it had done and what it was doing ... " Welmaker said spreading her hands to indicate her office. "I called them back in three hours, not three days and told them I would take it."

SHE HAD TO BUY equipment and refurnish the office because it was furnished in antiques. But most important, the office wasn't automated.

"It wasn't set up to do business in modern times. And it certainly wasn't competitive," according to Welmaker.

Computerizing Adventure Travel was a necessity. It didn't even have calculators when Welmaker took over.

"My background in real estate really helped me because there are so many parallels. Real estate is a commission-people business ... travel is too. Bookkeeping is very similar also," Welmaker said.

From the years of success in real estate Welmaker had earned and saved enough for backup capital.

"I was told that I needed enough to survive for two years without depending on the business. I don't know where that figure came from, but I think it is standard," Welmaker smiled. "It was the same thing I was told when I went into real estate."

Even though Welmaker had the backup capital she borrowed the money to buy the business and put her own capital into computerizing the company.

To get current quickly she took courses in international travel in Fort Worth and one on domestic travel in Dallas.

IN THE TRAVEL BUSINESS it takes 90 days to get approval.

"During those three months I came in on a daily basis and got to know the people working there and some things about the business."

Welmaker went to seminars and travel conventions where she continued to learn.

What Welmaker has found after six years is that she loves the independence and freedom of owning her own business.

"It is just the American feeling of feeling wonderful if it is yours," Welmaker laughed. "Because it certainly isn't easy. It is the satisfaction of saying it's mine."

Location, advertising, outside community activities, the use of a good accountant and attorney are on the priority list for Welmaker.

"We have more walk-in business than most agencies because of our location," she said. "We are the only agency in town where you can drive up and park in front. And that walk in traffic is important."

"It doesn't matter how good a bookkeeper you are — an accountant is very important. The attorney is another important part of the business from the time you begin," she said. "In our business there is nothing you can repossess, so I needed a good attorney."

AS THE ECONOMY changed, Welmaker has had to tighten her restrictions because of bad debts and bad checks. As a result there are few bad checks accepted by any of her agents and her profitability continues to grow each year.

She is always on the lookout for the little things she can do for her customers. Customers who select cruises generally get flowers, a fruit basket or wine, and sometimes the wine is served on their first night out.

Newcomers service sees families persist in moving to region

By Julie Jerome
BUSINESS JOURNAL NEWS EDITOR

ODESSA — Sherri LeBleu has a huge family.

As owner of Newcomers Greeting Service in Midland and Odessa, LeBleu welcomes to each city an average 100 families each month.

"Our main effort is to get these new families into the stream of community involvement so they become a part of the city quicker than if we would not have been here," she said.

And to that LeBleu and her gang of welcomers "make sure every family new to Midland and Odessa is visited or contacted in some way," she explained.

Families are given welcoming packets brimming with information, coupons, phone numbers and free samples. Each city has a separate packet. Sponsors and non-profit organizations advertise in the packets.

Most important though is the information.

LeBleu publishes an information book that explains to newcomers how to register their cars, change their driver's licenses, register their children into school, and covers phone numbers and locations for a plethora of activities including churches, shopping centers, parks and recreation and libraries.

And by making sure these new families are introduced to community involvement, LeBleu is contributing to the assurance these families remain.

In her two years as owner of Newcomers Greeting Service, LeBleu has compiled interesting statistics that include: most of the new families are not employed in the oil industry; many are managers in non-oil professions; and half bring children.

In 1982, an average 183 families per month moved to Midland, and an average 209 families moved to Odessa. In 1983, an average 131 families per month moved to Midland, and an average 130 families moved to Odessa. In 1984, an average 100 families per month moved to Midland, and an average 105 families moved to Odessa. In 1985, an average 111 families per month moved to Midland, and an average 101 families moved to Odessa.

To date in 1986, 1,368 families have moved to Midland and 1,250 families have moved to Odessa.

LeBleu is optimistic despite negative feeling throughout the two cities. And her optimism is backed by her figures.

"When oil dropped to $15 a barrel, people still moved here," she said. "And they're not coming here to look for jobs. Things are going to get better. Anybody who has lived here knows that."

LeBleu determined an average 30-35 percent of the families moving to Midland and Odessa are coming for oil-related employment. An average 15 percent are in professional fields.

"The professionals range from doctors to lawyers to pastors to University of Texas-Permian Basin professors," she said. "They have higher incomes."

In the managerial category, LeBleu found a "good, strong 30 percent every month" moving to Midland and Odessa.

LeBleu is firm in her belief that Midland and Odessa are not in growing periods right now, but the situation is not desperate.

"One percent of the city's population just turns over," she said. "That's why my business is so steady."

Odessa approves public golf course

By Jane Tindall
JOURNAL CORRESPONDENT

ODESSA - The Odessa City Council last week gave its final stamp of approval to a ground-lease agreement between Tee-It-Up, Inc., and the City of Odessa to proceed with final details toward starting constuction of a public golf course on donated land east of Ratliff Stadium.

City Manager John Harrison told council that after six months of negotiations between the city and the golf course developers, Buddy Watson and Doyle Weatherby, the point had been reached where it is now down to intricate details. Ninety days will be allowed for those details to be finalized.

Negotiations began in October 1985, after James R. 'Buzz' Hurt, representing the Ratliff Estate, offered to donate 240-250 acres of land to the city for first a park, and then a public golf course.

Odessa already accepted 75 acres from the doners. When the agreement has been finalized, Hurt said the land would be deeded to the city.

Harrison said that under the agreement the city will extend utilities to the area at a cost of $50,000; extend water lines at a cost of $500,000; and spend $100,000 for drainage.

The developers have agreed to construct, develop and maintain the golf course, an investment by the private company of approximately $1.8 million. The developers will pay the city an annual ground rental and/or a percentage of the gross profits, whichever is larger.

The city also will receive 1 percent of the clubhouse revenues. In additional the developers will pay for the water.

The developers will sign an initial 25-year contract with the city and payments on the ground-lease agreement will begin in the fourth year of operation.

Annual ground rental fee has been set at $12,000, which Tee-It-Up Inc., will pay in the fourth year. At the end of that year if the percentage of the gross receipts exceeds $12,000, the city will receive that additional revenue.

Harrison pointed out that city water is readily available at the site, and that the extension of sewer lines and plans for raw/effluent water lines for that area are already in place. The lines will be laid regardless of whether or not the park and golf course come into being.

"The bottom line," Harrison said, "is that the city, in return for an investment of $650,000 — which it will recover by water and sewer charges, ground lease payments, and clubhouse revenues — will receive a donation of a piece of land that is worth more than $1 million.

Special programs secure gas markets

By John Smart
And Charles Kuss

BUSINESS JOURNAL COLUMNISTS

Pipeline takes of natural gas have declined significantly over the past 18 months. Projections are that pipeline general system purchases for the six months of summer will average less than 10 percent of available gas well gas.

SMART

KUSS

Many pipeline companies have said that unless their markets improve, they will start curtailing casinghead gas. In fact, several of the major interstate pipelines have curtailed casinghead gas to 50 percent of the time during recent months.

This reduced purchasing of gas well gas significantly reduces the cash flow of operators while the curtailment of casinghead production results in not only the decline of cash flow, but the loss of future revenues through the venting or flaring of casinghead gas.

If an operator has any confidence in the capabilities of pipelines to project their markets' needs for gas, we can only assume that the take situation will worsen.

AS AN ALTERNATIVE to having the operator's gas shut in, the pipelines have instituted what they call special marketing programs which serve to sell the producer's gas on a spot market basis to the various end users scattered throughout the country. The idea behind these spot market programs is to enable the producer to compete for his proportionate share of the markets on a state and national basis.

The pipelines have indicated that such programs are essentially the only means of securing markets. In that the pipeline companies control the means to deliver the gas to the market along with the entry and transportation of the producer's gas in their facilities, this has become the way business is done — like it or not.

The prices paid under the spot marketing programs have evolved to a net-back form. Net-back pricing means that the price which the producer receives is the result of the price which the market will pay, less all costs to deliver such gas from wellhead to market. In many instances prices for gas delivered to the markets are in the $1.80-$2 range; meaning that the price at the lease is sometimes less than $1.25 per MCF (thousand cubic feet).

Rumor has it that over the summer months the price to the market will fall from the current level to a low of $1.25. The producer would then receive less than $1 per MCF for his gas. It appears as long as they are able to buy adequate supplies of gas for less and less each month, the decline in spot market gas prices will continue. At this point, we can see little reason to dispute prediction of $1.25 gas in that people making such claims are also the people that are providing the markets for gas!

THE TEXAS RAILROAD Commission is making an attempt to provide for a more equitable sharing of the traditional markets as well as a more open access to the spot markets through the various pipeline systems. Their answer in dealing with this problem is the restructuring of what is known as the Market Demand Rule.

The Market Demand Rule is what has essentially governed the takes of gas in the State of Texas over the last several years and forms the basis for the pipeline takes of gas out of the various fields. The rule is also the means by which the pipeline purchasers curtail gas well gas and casinghead gas in their times of reduced sales.

We understand that their ability to curtail various sources of gas is the subject of litigation. However, until such time as such litigation is settled, or the rules amended, these practices will most certainly continue.

A new rule proposed by the TRC, known as 16 TAC 3.34, pertains to the ratable production and purchase of natural gas. The commission feels the results of enforcing the new rule as proposed will be an increased understanding of the rule, greater flexibility in the purchasing of natural gas and increased accessability of gas and gas transportation facilites. The Railroad Commission feels the possible economic costs to individuals who are required to comply with the new rule will not vary from that under the current rule.

THE RULE IS PROPOSED under the Texas Natural Resource Code, which provides the Railroad Commission with the authority to prevent the waste of oil and gas in drilling and producing operations, to prevent discriminatory purchasing of natural gas and to prevent discrimination in providing extension or gathering lines to oil and gas wells in a field among other things.

The rewriting of this rule is extremely important to the gas producers of Texas. The results of the restructuring will govern the takes of producer gas for years to come. The rule provides that purchasers of gas from wells shall not discriminate between different wells in the same field, nor shall they discriminate unjustly or unreasonably between separate fields. The new rule, as it is currently written, requires ratable purchasing and production of gas from all wells on a pipeline system and requires that the producer deliver his gas ratably from wells within a field.

IN ADDITION, the new rule requires that purchasers of natural gas which purchase and accept delivery of gas from different wells in the same priority catagory in the same field shall purchase the same percentage of maximum allowable that a well is entitled to under the field allocation formula from the wells in the field which offer the gas for purchase.

The rule requires that purchases and deliveries of casinghead gas based on the well's gas limit and that purchases from all pro-rated wells and limited wells shall be reduced ratably by purchasing and accepting delivery of the same percentage of the maximum allowable established by the field allocation formula. Further, the rule states if purchases of gas are to be reduced they shall be reduced ratably.

Another important part of the rule requires that pipelines which transport gas for hire make their transportation facilities available on a fair and equitable basis to all wells in the field which offer their gas for transportation.

THE PROPOSED NEW RULE also sets priorities for takes of gas on a pipeline system. It says that purchasers of gas shall satisfy their system demand for gas by accepting delivery of gas up to the assigned allowable or limit for each well from six newly established priority categories of gas.

First priority shall be given casinghead gas produced from certified tertiary recovery projects and secondary recovery projects involving water injection, gas injection or pressure maintenance.

The second priority shall be given to gas from special allowable wells which are granted a special allowable status after the effective date of this ruling.

Third priority will be given to the remainder of casinghead gas so that gas produced in association with oil production shall not be wastefully vented and oil production shall not be unreasonably curtailed.

Fourth priority goes to gas from wells classified under 3.49(b).

Fifth priority will be given to gas from administrative special allowable wells and to gas from special allowable wells granted that status before the effective date of the new rule.

Sixth priority will be given to the remainder of gas well gas.

THE NEW RULE WILL also provide that purchasers of natural gas may not discriminate between or against natural gas of similar kind or quality in favor of its own production or production in which it may be directly or indirectly interested in whole or in part and provides that any producer who is denied the opportunity to produce a ratable share of gas by pipeline or purchaser may file a complaint with the commission and request the commission to direct the pipeline or purchaser to end the discrimination.

Likewise, if a producer fails to comply with a purchasers request to ratably reduce production, the purchaser may file a complaint with the commission and request the commission to direct the producer to comply with the purchaser's request.

The new rule will not cure all the problems of the gas business today. There will be changes in the ruling as originally proposed. We feel the ruling, as proposed by the commission, will be passed in some amended for and that this rule will govern takes and purchases of gas for the years to come. It is important that operators become familiar with changes in regulations, understand how the rule will work, and how it will effect sales and deliveries of gas.

While no one rule, regulation or pipeline program will provide an end to the current gas sales problems, hopefully new rules and programs, coupled with producers' efforts, will eliminate many of the problems we are facing today and over the long months of summer.

WT oil prices hover at $15 per barrel

Outside forces determine OPEC price

ENERGY ECONOMY

By James L. Williams
BUSINESS JOURNAL COLUMNIST

The breakup of the OPEC meeting last Monday without tangible results was not unexpected.

WILLIAMS

As a result of OPEC's failure to reach agreement with non-OPEC producers and within OPEC itself, the price of crude oil in international markets continues to be in the $12-$13 per barrel range.

Posted prices in the Permian Basin continue to hover near $15 per barrel. Since the international price of crude oil is the primary price determinant for crude oil in West Texas, it is crucial that West Texas business people understand the forces, political and economic, involved in the determination of that price.

These forces explain OPEC difficulties in reaching an agreement to support crude prices.

Since the beginning of this decade, two major forces have worked together to force down the price of petroleum. The rapid increases in crude oil prices as a result of the Arab oil embargo in 1973 and the Iranian revolution was to encourage conservation on the part of energy consumers and to give additional incentives for exploration and production.

In response to a quadrupling of prices in 1973-1974, and the threefold increase in 1979-1980, many consumers turned thermostats down in the winter and up in the summer. The effect of these temporary conservation measures and the impact on world economic growth showed up in declines in worldwide consumption of 3 million barrels per day in 1975, 3 million barrels per day in 1980 and an additional 3.6 million barrels per day in 1981.

More important than the short-term conservation measures were the long-term effects on consumption. New homes and commercial buildings increased heating efficiency through the use of increased insulation, heat pumps and computer control systems. Industry developed more energy-efficient processes and implemented those processes in retrofitting existing equipment and in the installation of new equipment. Congress mandated that automobiles sold within the United States meet minimum mileage requirements.

The difference between the short-term measures and the use of insulation and improved technology is that the latter is more or less permanent. Even though the current low price of petroleum and its products might not justify the expense of increased efficiency in a new factory or building, those facilities built when it was cost-effective will continue to use less energy for 10-30 years.

This results in a "permanent" reduction in demand.

Petroleum consumption worldwide, with the exception of 1975, increased from 1973 through 1979, when both short and long-term effects of the two major price increases began to exhibit themselves in declines in consumption.

Since 1979 crude oil consumption has declined by almost 15 percent from 62.5 million barrels per day in 1979 to 53.4 in 1985.

In 1979, OPEC crude oil production totaled 30.9 million barrels per day which was more than 49 percent of total production.

Since that year, world consumption declined 9 million barrels per day. But due to the increased incentives to explore for oil brought about by the two major price increases for crude oil, non-OPEC countries increased their production by almost 5 million barrels per day.

OPEC as a result lost almost half of its 1979 production to a combination of conservation and increased production by non-OPEC countries.

As a final result, OPEC nations are faced with not only prices half of those experienced in 1980, but also with a similar decline in sales volume.

This means a decline in gross OPEC sales of more than 70 percent.

Since crude oil is the major source of revenue for the majority of the members of OPEC, it is not unreasonable to expect each of those countries to attempt to cheat on the OPEC imposed quotas in an attempt to increase their country's revenues.

The continued incentives to cheat on quotas caused Saudi Arabia to cut its production from 9.9 million barrels per day in 1980 to below 2.5 million in August 1985 in an attempt to maintain prices.

The reduction in production was roughly half of that of OPEC as a whole. It is not unexpected that at some point Saudi Arabia, with a large current defecit, would demand a more equitable distribution of production cuts among its OPEC partners.

If an agreement acceptable to Saudi Arabia cannot be reached at the April 15 meeting of the OPEC countries, the result will be a continuation of low crude prices.

This will cause increases in consumption and decreases in production by non OPEC producers. The result for the United States will be increases in consumption, a decline in domestic production and an increase in imports.

The increase in the level of imports will lead to another round of OPEC price increases in three to five years.

If OPEC can reach an agreement redistributing production quotas and an enforcement mechanism a price recovery might come sooner.

But in the absence of a major supply interruption in the Middle East it is unlikely that the increase would be enough to bring prices much more than $20 per barrel.

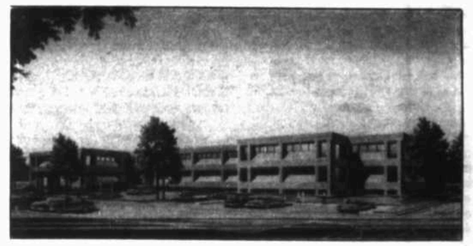

Next week this column will analyze the impact of pending legislation on the oil and gas industry. Successive articles will deal with the impact on the local economy.

Some Impressive Reasons For Using Fiberflex® Fiberglass Sucker Rods.

Proven Results

Several thousand wells and millions of feet of Fiberflex sucker rods have gone downhole and are working to lower the cost of field operations.

Increases Production Through Overtravel

Fiberflex's elasticity makes a long downhole pump stroke possible. This overtravel enables you to increase the volume of fluid lifted per stroke. The result? Significant production increases at lower operating costs.

Enables You To Reduce The Size Of Your Surface Equipment

A Fiberflex rod string weighs 60 percent less than an all-steel string. Because of reduced polished rod load, you can operate at faster pumping speeds and extend the downhole pump stroke by as much as 80% to 120% over steel. Fiberflex's lightweight construction also enables you to reduce the size of your pumping unit, saving you money on equipment and energy costs.

Backed By Quality Technical Service

No one offers after-the-sale technical service comparable to Fiberflex. A skilled technician will help you install your rod string and then stay on-location until the well is producing. Later, if questions or problems arise, our technicians are on call 24 hours a day.

Reduces Corrosion-Related Failures

Unlike steel rods, Fiberflex rods are corrosion-resistant, so you won't have to face the frequent replacement and downtime costs common with steel designs in highly-corrosive conditions.

Provides Wide Range Of Applications

Fiberflex rods aren't just for corrosive wells. The list of applications for fiberglass rods is constantly expanding to include problem wells, high temperature wells, deep wells where stress-caused rod parts occur frequently and wells in which fluid production increases and overloads the equipment.

Consistent High Quality

Strict standards ensure that Fiberflex rods will stand up to the harshest downhole conditions. End-fittings are precision machined and checked to API specs. Then, rods are tested to twice their normal working stress before being carefully shipped to the well site by Fiberflex's own fleet of trucks. Fiberflex rods are guaranteed for one year from the day of installation.

Tennis

CHICAGO — West German teen-ager Boris Becker upset Ivan Lendl, the world's top-ranked player, 7-6 (7-5), 6-3 on Sunday to capture the $315,000 Volvo-Chicago Tennis Tournament.

Lendl's defeat in the first set was the frist time he had lost a set in 14 matches.

ROTTERDAM, Netherlands — Joakim Nystrom of Sweden won the $315,000 ABN Tennis Tournament, defeating countryman Anders Jarryd 6-0, 6-3 in the final Sunday.

In earning $50,000 for the victory, Nystrom now has earned more than $1 million in his tennis career.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Top-seeded Pam Shriver and Barbara Potter won the largest doubles prize on the women's tennis circuit on Sunday by defeating Elizabeth Smylie and Kathy Jordan to win the $175,000 Bridgestone Doubles world women's championships.

Shriver and Potter downed the defending champions 6-3, 6-4 at Maryland Farms Racquet and Country Club to share a $60,000 purse. Smylie and Jordan, the reigning Wimbledon champions, split $30,000.

Golf

PONTE VEDRA, Fla. — John Mahaffey took advantage of Larry Mize's collapse down the stretch and needed only a 1-under-par 71 to score a one-stroke victory Sunday in the Tournament Players Championship.

Mahaffey earned $162,000 from the total purse of $900,000, with a 275 total, 13-under par on the Players Club at Sawgrass. Mize shot a 4-over-par 76 and finished in second place.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Red-hot Dale Douglass shot a 6-under-par 66 on Sunday to give him a 54-hole total of 202 and a three-shot victory over Chi Chi Rodriguez in the $250,000 Johnny Mathis Seniors Golf Tournament.

Douglass, who turned 50 on March 8 to become eligible for the Seniors tour, has won two of the three Seniors events he has entered and finished second in the third one. His earnings for the month of March — $96,000.

Cards block Duke's 4-year plan

By BRUCE LOWITT

DALLAS (AP) — Four years ago, they were considered the best-recruited freshman basketball class, the kind on which national championships are built.

Tonight, all that stands in the way of Duke's destiny is Louisville.

The Blue Devils, ranked No. 1 in the nation and at 37-2 the winningest single-season college team ever, can fulfill the dream that Jay Bilas, Mark Alarie, Johnny Dawkins and David Henderson envisioned when they first set foot on the campus at Durham, N.C.

"We didn't make a sealed-in-blood pact to win a national championship. We felt that was something that didn't need to be said," Bilas, Duke's 6-foot-8 center, said.

There is, of course, the matter of Milt Wagner, of Jeff Hall, of Billy Thompson — of the Cardinals who, although ranked only seventh, are considered just about the equal of the Blue Devils.

"I think the public and the media believes Louisville is playing the best basketball in the country right now," Alarie said. "Their record (31-7) doesn't indicate that they've played the best basketball all year. Obviously ours is better, but they're on a roll as a team."

IF THE Blue Devils don't win it all, they'll be remembered as good but not great, "but even if we do win, people will still knock Duke. That's just the way it is," Alarie said. "We're not an intimidating team on paper. We don't have a 7-foot center. We don't block a lot of shots. We don't dunk a lot. People translate that into us being just a very lucky team.

"I think that lack of respect makes us play harder. Nobody likes to be bad-mouthed."

Because Duke doesn't have that one fearsome, in-your-face superstar (Dawkins is more finesse than power), the Blue Devils, for all their accomplishments, still are looked upon with less than awe.

"Everybody says they're not that good," Louisville Coach Denny Crum said. "I don't buy that. When we played the preseason (Big Apple) NIT in New York, I told everybody that there probably wouldn't be any better teams in the country than those four. Kansas beat us and Duke beat St. John's. Three of us were in the Final Four of the NCAA and the other one (St. Johns) was a No. 1 regional selection.

Duke's won 21 games in a row (to Louisville's streak of 17), they're ranked No. 1 in the nation and rightfully so. They do everything you'd want a basketball team to do, and they do it very well...People say they're not very big, but you stand next to Alarie or Bilas and tell me they aren't big. They're MEN.

"PHYSICALLY THEY'RE a lot bigger and stronger on their front line than we are," Crum went on. "Our guards are taller, but we don't have the strength and size inside that they have. And they have the great combination of great outside players, ballhandlers with quickness, as well as the strength on the inside."

Duke Coach Mike Krzyzewski admits to team weaknesses, "the things that don't come naturally to us, that we have to concentrate on. Shooting, running up and down the court, playing the transition game, they come naturally."

"Rebounding is something we really have to concentrate on. And defense, although we play it well, doesn't come easy. ... If you don't see our guys talking to each other on defense, that's a real weakness. Our defense is not set up for individual matchups; it's set up for team matchups. If we don't play as a team — and the talk is the glue that keeps the team together — we have problems," Krzyzewski said.

"Their team defense is their real strength," Crum said. "They play so well together. They're always in the right spot because they've been together for four years — four of them, anyway."

CRUM PROJECTED matchups of Hall on Tommy Amaker, Wagner on Dawkins, Pervis Ellison on Bilas, Thompson on Alarie and Herb Crook on Henderson.

"But we switch a lot," Crum continued, grinning, "so Jeff might be on Bilas. ... That's the way we play defense."

Krzyzewski shrugged off questions about matchups. "This isn't baseball or football," he said.

Both teams are strong defensively, Duke employing a pressing man-to-man, Louisville constantly switching off, and both rely heavily on the transition game.

Because Duke and Louisville like to run, both coaches predict that tonight's game will be higher scoring than the past half-dozen championships, starting with Louisville's 1980 title over UCLA, in which the winning team has averaged a shade under 65 points. And not just because of the 45-second clock, being used for the first time in the title game.

"We'd like to see a 10-second clock," Crum said with a smile. "There's no reason to hold the ball for 40 seconds if you can get a good shot in 10."

'Big D' means defense in championship finale

By DENNE H. FREEMAN

DALLAS (AP) — Big D won't stand for Dallas tonight.

Big D will be for the stubborn, unrelenting mano y mano defenses used by the Louisville Cardinals and the Duke Blue Devils, the last survivors among 64 teams who hit the NCAA road to Dallas two and a half weeks ago.

Both offenses are set in motion by pressing, man-for-man defenses that are designed to tire out opponents as well as steal the basketball from them.

"We like the full-court game," Louisville Coach Denny Crum said. "Duke plays the same way. They score off transition and the transition game is dictated by your defense."

The styles are somewhat different.

Duke presses full-court for the full 40 minutes unless foul trouble dictates a zone.

Louisville presses full-court at times but is most deadly in the midcourt man-for-man in which it traps after the first pass into the Cardinals' half-court area.

"WHEN YOU press the whole game it forces you to be alert," said Duke coach Mike Krzyzewski. "It's not easy to play good defense well. You have to really work at it."

The game will match Louisville's inside quickness against the physical Blue Devils, and Duke's outside quickness against Louisville's taller guards.

"We hope our guards (Johnny Dawkins and Tommy Amaker) can make it more difficult for Louisville's guards (Milt Wagner and Jeff Hall) to run their offense," Krzyzewski said.

Crum said Duke is a "lot stronger inside. We have a size advantage in (6-foot-11) Pervis Ellison, but he's not that experienced.

Only four teams in the last 29 games have shot better than 50 percent against the tenacious Cardinal defense. The Cardinals average almost six blocked shots per game.

DUKE HAS forced 90 turnovers in five tourney games.

"Duke has a good defense, but we're not going to sit around and worry," Hall said. "We'll just try to get the ball inside and get their people in foul trouble."

SWC boss: Get boosters out

DALLAS (AP) — Southwest Conference Commissioner Fred Jacoby wants to get boosters out of the recruiting process, saying he believes they can sometimes harm a school's athletic program when trying to help it.

Jacoby bristles at the idea of boosters or alumni meddling in university athletic affairs, and he believes they, more than coaches or athletes, may be to blame for the problems facing many SWC sports programs.

"I don't know if some of the boosters or alums are reliving their childhood or living out a fantasy," he said. "Sometimes they want to help so bad that they hurt (the college). It would be great if they could corral all of that energy into the right direction."

In the past year, seven of the league's nine schools have been slapped with NCAA penalties, have come under the scrutiny of NCAA or internal investigations or have been accused of violating NCAA rules.

"It has been a very slow, agonizing and wrenching period," Jacoby told the Houston Post.

Jacoby, 58, was commissioner of the Mid-American Conference for 11 years before he was hired as SWC commissioner four years ago. He said the conference is doing all it can to clean up its image.

"We want to take them (boosters) out of the recruiting process," he said.

Jacoby said university officials cannot keep up with student athletes around the clock.

Playoff contention at stake for Lee-MHS survivor

By ERIC SCHURER
Sports Writer

The time is right for someone to make a move in the District 4-5A baseball chase.

And that someone could easily be the winner of the Midland High-Midland Lee clash Tuesday afternoon that marks the end of the first half of the season.

While the loser won't be out of the race, the winner must be seriously looked at to make a run for a playoff berth as the second half unfolds.

Midland High, wearing visitors gray on Tuesday, would seem in a stronger position going in. The Bulldogs are 4-2 and tied for second place, and despite an embarrassing 23-3 loss Friday, still owners of the league's best earned run average.

Lee, meanwhile, has put together a three-game district winning streak to raise itself from the dust of the basement and into possible playoff contention — a win over MHS would cement the Rebels intentions of making a run at the top.

District 4-5A

In other district games, league leading Odessa Permian hosts Odessa High, Abilene Cooper, tied with MHS for second, will play Abilene High at Hardin-Simmons Field and San Angelo travels to Big Spring.

KENNY DE La Garza, despite logging more than nine innings in two appearances last week, is scheduled to start for the Bulldogs against Lee's Terry Baxter.

De La Garza leads the district in earned run averge with 0.32, even after a poor outing in relief against Permian. De La Garza allowed five hits and six runs, but all were unearned. The senior righthander is 5-3 on the season, 3-1 in district.

Baxter, too, has been the workhorse of his staff, compiling 42 innings pitched on the season, one-half of them in district play. Baxter is 1-2 in district with a 5.33 ERA, however. His overall numbers are 5-2, 2.83.

Lee's hopes of continuing its rise up the 4-5A ladder hinge on the health of pitcher George Matta. Matta, 9-1 in his junior season, has been out almost a month with stretched ligaments in his throwing elbow.

Coach Ernie Johnson had hoped his ace would be ready for Tuesday's encounter with MHS, but as of late last week, Johnson did not think he would be ready. Matta admitted still feeling some pain when he threw on the sidelines. he was 2-1 with a 2.53 ERA when he went down.

THE REBELS have had little trouble scoring runs, however, especially in the last week when they blitzed AHS and OHS with a total of 37 runs scored. Catcher Jason Logi has moved into the district lead in hitting with a .360 average and

The Bulldogs hopes, conversely, seem to ride on the reawakening of their hitting attack. MHS, expected to be one of the heavier hitting clubs in the district this season, have had some anemic performances at the plate recently.

The 'Dogs could only manage five hits in the Permian game which dropped their season and district average to .295. Some of last season's sluggers are struggling at the plate, most notably Ricky Castaneda and Matt Sears, both .300 plus hitters in 1985 but hovering around .250 this season.

De La Garza, last season's big gun, has shown signs of life in the last two weeks and is hitting .375 in district and is tied for second with Lee's Baxter in the stolen base category with six.

Lady 'Horns set new standards at 34-0

By MIKE EMBRY

LEXINGTON, Ky. (AP) — Jody Conradt believes her Texas Longhorns have set the standard by which future women's basketball teams will be measured.

Texas put the perfect ending on a perfect season Sunday, running past Southern California 97-81 in the NCAA women's basketball championship game. The Longhorns finished with a 34-0 record, the first team in the five-year history of the tourney to go through a season with a perfect mark.

Women's Final

"I don't think it can be topped," Conradt said of this year's accomplishment. "It's perfection. It is something we will strive for next season when we play our first game."

Texas already has a head start on a lot of teams next season because of brilliant freshman Clarissa Davis. The 6-foot-1 forward came off the bench to score 24 points and pull down 14 rebounds in leading the Longhorns over two-time champion Southern Cal.

"Our team has so many good people," said Davis, voted the tourney's outstanding player. "I just wanted to get into the game."

It proved to be an all-out team effort for the talent-rich Longhorns, whose bench outscored Southern Cal 58-4.

"Texas continued to bring in players, and bringing in fresh players helps," said Southern Cal Coach Linda Sharp, whose team finished 31-5. "We didn't get from our bench what Texas did from theirs."

Another Texas reserve, senior center Cara Priddy, ignited the Longhorns to the biggest point margin in a championship game.

AFTER SOUTHERN Cal went ahead 30-29 on Cheryl Miller's two free throws with 5:29 left in the half, Priddy completed a three-point play 17 seconds later to give Texas a 32-30 advantage, a lead it never relinquished.

The Longhorns scored seven more points, with Priddy tallying four, to go up 39-30 at 2:06. Miller broke Southern Cal's scoring drought with a 20-footer at 1:50.

"When you get to the national championships, you have to be ready to play," said Priddy, who also had five rebounds in 18 minutes of playing time. "I was happy she put me in. It's not degrading to sit the bench at Texas."

Texas, leading 45-35 at the half, hiked its lead to 51-37 on Davis' 10-footer in the lane with 17:56 left in the game. Southern Cal came back to within 70-61 on Cynthia Cooper's layup at 9:30, but after a Texas timeout, the Longhorns scored seven straight points and pulled away over the final minutes.

Brewer stalwarts Vuckovich, Haas latest casualties

Montreal second baseman Al Newman is dumped by Houston's Denny Walling as Newman turns a double play in exhibition play Sunday in Kissimmee, Fla.

Associated Press

The Milwaukee Brewers, a team that has gone downhill since reaching the World Series four years ago, are now minus two more players from their past.

Pete Vuckovich, who won the Cy Young Award in 1982 when he helped Milwaukee to the American League pennant, retired on Sunday. A few hours later, the Brewers traded away another starting pitcher, Moose Haas, to Oakland.

"We're dedicated to change and dedicated to giving the younger ballplayers a chance to play for us if they're ready," Milwaukee General Manager Harry Dalton said. "We've had a number of pitchers that have made us feel they're ready."

The Brewers' pitchers made Dalton look good — at least for Sunday — when Tim Leary, Chuck Porter and Ray Searage combined on a five-hitter to lead Milwaukee past the Chicago Cubs 4-0. Leary, 3-1 this spring, yielded three hits over six innings while Paul Molitor, Robin Yount and Paul Householder had RBI singles.

Vuckovich, 33, had been in the Brewers' camp as a non-roster player, trying to make a comeback after shoulder surgery last September. After he informed Dalton of his decision during a meeting Sunday morning, Vuckovich was offered and accepted a job in the Brewers' organization as an instructor with some scouting duties.

"I thought he was pitching well enough to pitch in the big leagues," Manager George Bamberger said. "I thought if he didn't make it here, he could've made it somewhere else."

Haas, who turns 30 in three weeks, was 8-8 last season. In nine years with Milwaukee, he was 91-79 with a 4.03 ERA.

Seaver-Armas deal in works?

BOSTON (AP) — The Boston Red Sox reportedly have offered Tony Armas to the Chicago White Sox for pitcher Tom Seaver.

Red Sox General Manager Lou Gorman said he is waiting to hear from Ken Harelson, White Sox general manager. An unidentified White Sox official confirmed that Boston had offered Armas, The Boston Globe reported today.

Armas, who hit .265 with 23 home runs and 64 RBIs last season, said he was stunned by the news.

"I don't know anything about it," the 32-year-old outfielder said. "I didn't hear anything, but whatever happens happens, and you can't do anything about it. That's baseball. Some days you can be here and some days you can't. I don't worry about it. What can you do?

"The only team I want to play for is Boston," he said. "I hope I can play there the rest of my career."

Meanwhile, Seaver has made it clear he wants to be closer to his Connecticut home. The 41-year-old right-hander was 16-11 last season and has had a good spring training. He is tentatively schedule to be Chicago's opening day pitcher.

Mize's four bogies hand Mahaffey title

By GORDON S. WHITE Jr.
N.Y. Times News Service

PONTE VEDRA, Fla. — Larry Mize, who held a four-shot lead with eight holes to go in the 13th Tournament Players Championship, let it all get away. John Mahaffey, the only man in position to take advantage, stepped forward to par the final hole and win the TPC Sunday and its first prize of $162,000 by a shot over Mize.

In one of the most distressing collapses for a golfer in recent memory, Mize bogeyed four of the last five holes, including the 18th hole, where he missed a 4-foot par putt. Then Mahaffey, who had struggled through the final round himself, dropped a 3-footer to take the fifth TPC to be held at its permanent site, the Tournament Players Club.

Mahaffey, who trailed Mize by four shots when the last round began and still by four after bogeying the 10th hole, shot a 1-under-par 71 to win with a 13-under-par 275. It was the ninth victory of Mahaffey's 16-year career on the PGA Tour.

Mize, who has only one victory in five years on the tour, slipped badly to a 76 and 276. He earned $97,200 from the $900,000 purse. The collapse was totally unexpected, as Mize had posted only two bogeys during the first three rounds. He had six bogeys Sunday and only two birdies.

Tim Simpson managed to take third place at 280 when he was also the beneficiary of some mistakes by another player. Tom Kite had third place apparently sewed up before he hit his first tee shot at the par-3 17th hole over the island green on one bounce into the water. This resulted in a double-bogey for Kite, who fell back into a deadlock with Jim Thorpe and Brett Upper for fourth at 281.

As Mize, the 27-year-old Georgian, began crumbling on the back nine, it took awhile for Mahaffey to take much advantage of it. Mahaffey, the 37-year-old Texan who came from seven shots behind in the final round to win the PGA Championship in 1978, birdied the par-5 11th hole to cut Mize's lead to three.

Tournament of Players

Then Mize really began to tumble, bogeying the 14th, 15th and 16th holes. But at first Mahaffey failed to move through the opening door, as he also bogeyed the 14th hole by taking three putts.

While that was only a temporary skid for Mahaffey, it was just the beginning of a crash by Mize. He hit his second shot at the 15th hole into a bunker and ended with a bogey 5. The lead was down to two.

Mize got to the fringe of the par-5 16th in three shots, while Mahaffey got on the green in two. Mize then stubbed his chip shot, so the ball stopped 10 feet short of the hole, and he missed the par putt. Mahaffey got down in two putts, and this two-shot swing put them in a tie for the lead.

After each parred the famed island at 17, Mize missed the green on his approach to the 18th. Mahaffey hit the green. Mize, however, chipped well and had only that short putt to at least force a playoff. But he missed the putt to complete the second near giveaway of his career.

A year ago at the Kemper, he had a four-shot lead going into the back nine and lost to Bill Glasson.

"I didn't play well when I needed to," Mize said. "I'm very disappointed, and John hung tough and congratulations to him."

When the day started, Mize was in the apparently secure position of being able to let everyone shoot at him, with really only Mahaffey having a chance. Mahaffey sputtered a bit at the start before getting down to a good pace. He missed the first green and chipped close to save par while Mize took the 4 in regulation.

Austin lawyer confirms freebie legal service

AUSTIN (AP) — An Austin lawyer has confirmed that he represented "20 or 30" University of Texas football players without charge "over the past five or six years" after referral from Ken Dabbs, an assistant UT athletic director, a newspaper reported today.

The attorney, Alfred M. Walker Jr., said he agreed to represent Texas football players, at no cost to the players or the university, after meeting Dabbs socially about six years ago, the Dallas Morning News reported.

National Collegiate Athletic Association rules forbid student athletes from receiving any benefits beyond the tuition, room, board and books provided by their athletic scholarships, unless they are available to all students.

Dabbs, Texas' recruiting coordinator until November 1984 and now a special assistant to athletic director DeLoss Dodds, could not be reached Sunday for comment about free counsel provided football players arrested for driving while intoxicated and cited for traffic violations.

However, Dabbs, responding to earlier reports in which players said he and other UT coaches lent them money and arranged bank loans for them, said he lent money to a former UT All-American.

Dabbs told the Austin American-Statesman Saturday night that he gave former Longhorn linebacker Jeff Leiding less than $100 about three years ago to pay off two traffic tickets. Leiding repaid him within the week, Dabbs said.

Leiding was being held in the city jail and "I couldn't leave him there overnight," Dabbs said. "Did I know it was against the rules? Yes."

Dabbs also said he had sent players to two Austin banks for loans on several occasions, after they came to him in need of cash.

The News reported that 16 former football players said they knew they could go to UT coaches when they had money problems, and nine former players claimed they received cash, bank loans, bail money or promises of a loan from Texas coaches.

The newspaper, in an earlier report, said 24 of 28 players interviewed during its two-month probe into UT's sports investigation program routinely sold their complimentary tickets to boosters at inflated prices, some saying they earned $4,000 per season through the sales.

But unlike the boosters and sports agents who reportedly gave cash and gifts to star players, Texas coaches apparently meted out small amounts of money when players claimed they had nowhere else to go, the newspaper said.

At least three former players said they got extra benefits from former defensive coordinator David McWilliams, hired during the off-season to become Texas Tech's new head football coach, the News reported.

"I did in some instances loan some other guys money if it was an emergency, but we're not talking about a lot of times or a lot of money," McWilliams said.

Dallas' Sam Perkins and Charles Barkley of the 76ers grapple for a rebound in the 76ers' 114-113 win Sunday in Philadelphia.

Shorthanded 76ers edge Mavs, 114-113

Associated Press

The Philadelphia 76ers were badly outmanned, suiting up only eight players for their game with the Dallas Mavericks.

Eight was more than enough.

Charles Barkley and rookie Terry Catledge made up for the absence of Philadelphia's three biggest players — centers Moses Malone and Clemon Johnson and forward Bob McAdoo — and the shorthanded Sixers edged the Dallas Mavericks 114-113 on Sunday in NBA action.

The 76ers also were missing guard Andrew Toney (out for most of the season with a foot injury) and forward Bobby Jones (groin injury).

Barkley, who quickly is becoming one of the most awesome forces in the game, played all but one minute and had 32 points and a career-high 25 rebounds. Catledge scored a season-high 29 points.

"You've got to believe, otherwise it's a waste of time," Barkley said. "You can't worry about what you don't have, you've got to do the best with what you do have."

The 76ers led 112-103 with 57 seconds remaining, but Dallas scored seven straight points. Detlef Schrempf and Dale Ellis connected on jump shots, and Ellis stole the ball and scored a three-point basket with 28 seconds left, making it 112-110.

Philly's Perry Moss scored on a layup with five seconds to go, and a three-pointer by Dallas' Derek Harper with two seconds left closed the scoring.

Host Philadelphia led by as many as 24 points in the third quarter. Julius Erving contributed 24 points for the Sixers. Rolando Blackman and Harper each had 22 points for Dallas.

"This is the problem teams have when you play a club that is missing key people," noted Dick Motta, coach of the Mavs. "You seem to lack the concentration you need to win. Philadelphia is so deep."

NBA Roundup

Lakers 124, Warriors 117

Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, the NBA's all-time leading scorer, had 16 points to pass 35,000 for his career. Abdul-Jabbar reached the 35,000 milestone on an awkward left-handed hook shot from about eight feet away with 4:09 remaining in the third quarter. He now has 35,004 points and is playing in his 11th season with the Lakers and in his 17th season in the NBA.

The Warriors played without Chris Mullin and Purvis Short. Mullin, who has a sore left heel, has now missed 14 consecutive games while Short, who has a bruised right foot, has been sidelined for four games.

Celtics 122, Nets 117

New Jersey climbed back into the game after falling behind by 22 points in the first half. But Larry Bird's 40 points, Kevin McHale's 24 and 21 by Robert Parish were too much for the Nets.

Boston, which has won 11 consecutive games, improved its league-leading record to 61-13 with its 27th straight home victory, equalling the record set by the Minneapolis Lakers in 1949-50. With a 36-1 mark at home, the Celtics can establish a new record on Wednesday night against Detroit.

SuperSonics 103, Suns 89

Gerald Henderson hit eight straight field goals, scoring 20 points for host Seattle. It was a costly defeat for Phoenix, which fell two games behind San Antonio in the race for the final playoff spot in the Western Conference. The Suns have nine games left.

Henderson scored nine points in the second period to help Seattle open a 58-47 halftime lead, then scored nine more in the third period as Seattle pulled away.

M-Angels win 2nd straight

From Staff Reports

MESA—The Midland Angels put together back-to-back wins over the weekend to raise their record to 2-4-1 in Cactus League play.

Midland edged Shreveport, its Texas League Eastern Division rival, 2-1 on Sunday thanks to a fine pitching performance by Tom Rentschler.

Brian Hartsock drove in Mike Madril with the game-winner, while Dante Bichette was 2-for-4 with a double and an RBI.

Midland will play the Pittsfield Cubs in Mesa today. The Angels will open the Texas League season with 10 games on the road in San Antonio and Beaumont before returning to Midland for the home opener on April 18 against El Paso.

"WE KEPT wanting to celebrate and celebrate too soon," Conradt said in explaining the timeout. "The only problem was that USC wasn't willing to join our victory celebration. I just wanted to bring us back to reality."

Miller, a four-time All-America, never got untracked in the game, eventually fouling out with 7:30 to go. She scored 16 points, hitting only two of 11 shots from the field and 12 of 13 free throws, grabbed six rebounds and handed out four assists.

"I was a little frustrated," Miller said, "but we were playing a great team. It wasn't one of my better games."

Texas made 40 of 68 shots for 58.8 percent and held a 42-32 edge in rebounding. Southern Cal hit 29 of 65 shots for 44.6 percent.

"We didn't shoot well and couldn't get into the rhythm of the game," Sharp said. "I knew the score would be fairly high."

FORWARD FRAN Harris contributed 14 points, guard Beverly Williams had 13 and Wimbush added 10 for the Longhorns. All-America guard Kamie Ethridge handed out 10 assists in directing a splendid floor game.

Cooper topped Southern Cal with 27 points, tying Miller's championship game record set in 1983, while center Cherie Nelson had 13 and guarad Rhonda Windham scored 12.

Air Force pilot instructor, three others die in crash

DEL RIO (AP) — An Air Force pilot instructor and a student pilot scheduled to earn his wings this Friday were killed, along with two women companions, when the single-engine airplane they had rented crashed into a hillside and fell into Lake Amistad just northwest of this border town.

The cause of the Sunday afternoon crash was unknown, but witnesses reported seeing the Cessna 172 Skyhawk flying very low over the lake less than a half hour before it went down, the Val Verde County Sheriff's Office said.

It was not known which of the two men, both stationed at nearby Laughlin Air Force Base, was piloting the plane when it crashed about 3:15 p.m.

Capt. Claude Morse, public affairs officer for Laughlin, identified the victims as Capt. Norman Eugene Taylor, 29, of Bossier City, La., a T-38 jet instructor pilot; 2nd Lt. Michael Andrew Trujillo, 24, of Littleton, Colo., a student pilot; and civilians Dana Funk 19, and Tammy Breckenridge, both of Del Rio. Ms. Breckenridge's age was not available.

Morse said Trujillo would have earned his wings this Friday, completing undergraduate pilot training with the student squadron of the 47th Flying Training Wing.

Morse said Taylor was an instructor with the 86th Flying Training Squadron.

The plane's wreckage was left in the lake Sunday, and Morse said the Federal Aviation Administration would investigate since the accident occurred off the air base.

Ex-con claims he worked on maps without clearance

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — U.S. Defense Department investigators say they don't believe an ex-convict's claim that he worked on a sensitive mapping project involving Soviet target sites even though he had no clearance.

The San Antonio Light reported in a copyright story Sunday that the former prison inmate worked for a local map-making firm. He said when he went to two federal agencies in February to report he had access to a sensitive mapping project without security clearance, he was fired and labeled a "troublemaker."

His complaint was corroborated by another former employee of the same firm, but Defense Department investigators say they don't believe it and probably won't investigate.

Privately, government officials say the situation points out an inherent problem in contracting sensitive work out to the private sector, where security procedures often are not as rigid as those in government agencies that routinely deal with classified material, the newspaper reported.

The ex-convict, who was not identified by the newspaper, served more than seven years in federal prison for shooting and wounding a military policeman and attempting to manufacture a pistol and silencer while in prison.

He claims he was working on classified targeting maps of the Soviet Union without a clearance and that there was a wide range of security breaches at the firm.

Deborah Deffee, another former employee of the same company, Williams-Stackhouse Inc., confirmed his story and added that she also worked on classified materials without a clearance. Both said they warned supervisors at the company but were ignored.

But Williams-Stackhouse President Robert Koranek said both former employees worked only on unclassified portions of the project and that there was no way of determining the ex-convict's background when he was hired in April 1985.

Second man to be tried for minister's murder

WEATHERFORD (AP) — A second man goes on trial this week for the 1984 brutal slaying of a minister from the little town of Dublin.

Dale Arthur Carrasquillo, 25, of Massachusetts, faces charges of capital murder in the strangulation death of the Rev. John Basham, 55, who was pastor of the First United Methodist Church in Dublin, about 60 miles southwest of here.

Jury selection was scheduled to begin today.

Robert Purtell, 27, was convicted last year and sentenced to death for the Feb. 7, 1984 killing.

Purtell's trial was in Palo Pinto, 30 miles west of Weatherford, but Carrasquillo's trial was moved on a change of venue. More than 250 prospective jurors have been summoned, according to state district court clerk Lana Tibbits.

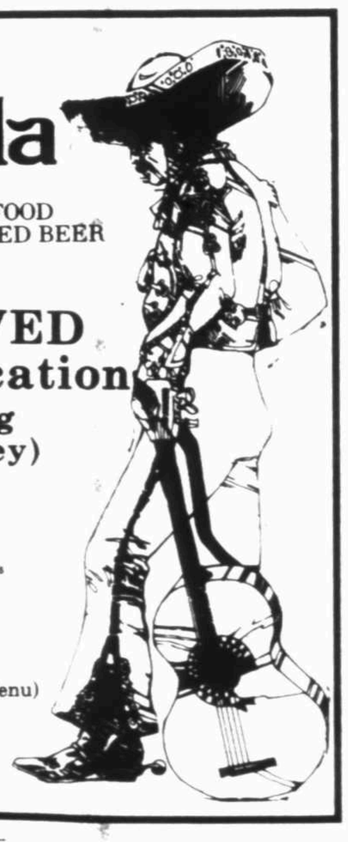

Basham's wife, JoAnn, said her husband left Dublin on Feb. 6, 1984, for a conference of ministers in Dallas. She reported him missing on Feb. 8 after not hearing from him and learning that he never appeared at the meeting.

His battered body was found on Feb. 9 in his van, parked along Interstate 20, near Gordon, 70 miles west of Fort Worth and 35 miles north of Dublin.

Doll maker

Doll heads are the most difficult part of the doll to mend and repair, dollmaker Steven Porterfield says.

Text by

Kent Porter

Porterfield displays one of his dolls. He made about 100 dolls last year.

Dolls are a favorite pastime for most girls, but they are a passion for one Midland man.

From a lump of mud to a $1,000 collectors item, Steven Porterfield follows the process of making porcelain dolls with infinite care.

"It's kinda fun to see something that was mud turn out so pretty," said Porterfield, who has been making dolls for the past six years.

"I like to change things. To turn nothing into something."

The 25-year-old music teacher got hooked onto doll making after walking into a ceramics demonstration class.

In Texas a man making dolls is a rarity, Porterfield says. However, the finest doll makers in the world were men in the late 19th century, he says.

Porterfield's teacher, Ila North, says other men are envious of his talent.

"He doesn't let it shake him. They can't believe that a man has that much ability," Mrs. North said.

About four men are learning doll making skills from Mrs. North, who operates a ceramics store in Fort Stockton. More men are taking up doll making and doll collecting as a hobby. One recent doll show in Fort Stockton drew more men than women, she said.

"They're still a little hesitant. They love the dolls, but because of this macho stuff, some of them back off from doing it."

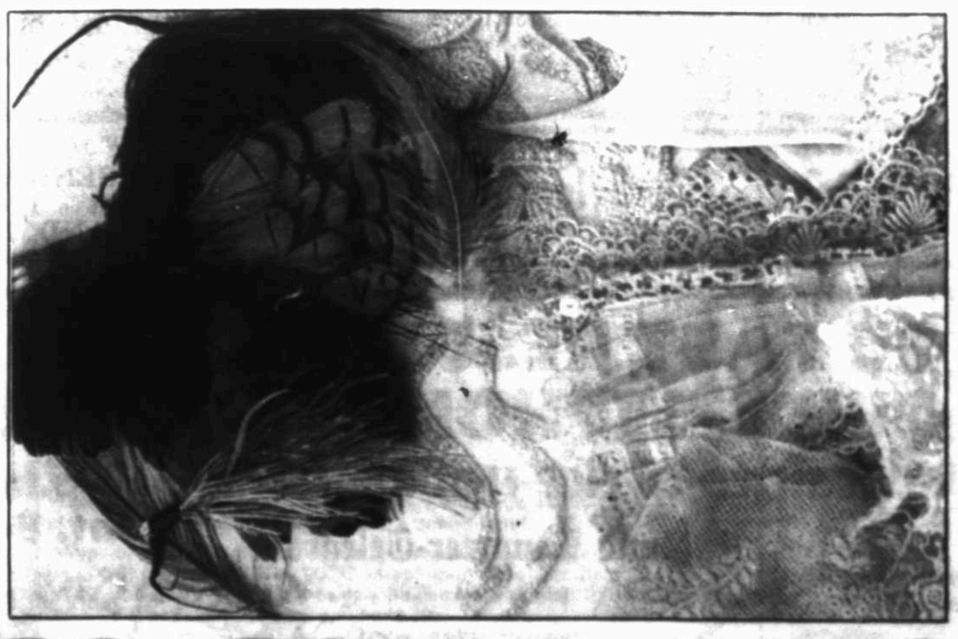

To Porterfield dolls are more than playthings — they are pieces of art.

"Clothes can make or break a doll," says Porterfield of the criteria used to judge dolls.

Porterfield's minority position means he puts up with a lot of teasing from other doll enthusiasts.

Please see DOLLS, Page 2C

He rummages through antique clothing stores and garage sales to find cloth, pieces of lace and other accessories for his doll costumes.

From individually poured pieces to the complete body, Porterfield follows the process of making dolls.

Son left behind in Vietnam had hard time adjusting to America

TEXARKANA (AP) — Thuc Van Vu and his wife, Bong Doan, said it was the happiest day of their life, a family friend recalled.

That was last September when their son, Nguyen, 23, rejoined them in the United States.

But a decade had passed since Nguyen's father and stepmother escaped with their other four small children from Vietnam during the fall of Saigon.

Today Thuc Van Vu and his wife are dead, and their son, Nguyen, is in jail charged with their murders.

On March 20, Thuc, 47, and his wife, 41, were shot to death at their three-bedroom home they had paid off in February, several years before the mortgage was due.

In Texarkana, the family's life and times was a story of hard-won success in a foreign land with a radically different culture. Thuc and his wife worked seven days a week to buy the house and raised five honor roll students who became favorites with their peers.

But during their pursuit of the American dream and their bureaucratic battles to bring to this country the son that had been left behind, Nguyen was growing up.

At age 12, he had been staying with an uncle when his family made its hurried departure, and there was no time to get him before the escape from Saigon.

Once Nguyen did arrive here, friends said he wasn't as comfortable with the United States as the rest of the family.

He found himself equipped with only a few English phrases in a town where the Vietnamese population had dwindled to only about 75, with a family he barely remembered.

He could barely communicate with his youngest sister, Kim, who knows virtually no Vietnamese.

If troubles were brewing between Thuc Van Vu and his newly arrived son, however, they were not apparent to people in the community, friends and neighbors said.

Those who knew the family described Thuc as a hard and tireless worker who had pride in the academic successes of his children, all of whom were enrolled in honors programs in school.

"We lived here two years and never heard him argue with his kids," said Penny Bayless, the nearest neighbor to the family. "My sister lived here before we did. She said she never heard any bad words or nothing."

Thuc also was described as the undisputed head of the family. A stubborn man, he could rarely be dissuaded once he made up his mind. Bong stayed in the background, her assertiveness coming out only when she cooked or cuddled the children, friends said.

Hiker's body recovered at Palo Duro Canyon

CANYON (AP) — The body of a 17-year-old hiker was recovered from Palo Duro Canyon by park rangers and Randall County sheriff's deputies about a mile off a main road that winds through the canyon.

The body of George Bermudez of Hereford was recovered about 10:30 a.m. Sunday. He and a companion had fallen off the side of a hill late Saturday night, officials said.

Frank Villegas, 18, also of Hereford, was reported in satisfactory condition at Northwest Texas Hospital in Amarillo with injuries suffered in the fall.

Randall County Justice of the Peace E. Hail ordered an autopsy, which was performed by forensic pathologist Dr. Ralph Erdmann in Amarillo.

A preliminary report on the autopsy indicated the wounds were consistent with injuries suffered from a fall in rough terrain, Hail said. A full report was expected today.

Bermudez and Villegas were part of a large group of campers that had made camp at the southeast fringe of the park, officials said.

About 8:30 p.m. Saturday, the two youths and a third man went hiking. The third man turned back after about an hour.

Hail said the youths were coming down a steep embankment about 10 p.m., when they plunged over the side of a hill in the darkness.

"As they came down, the one was killed and the other one said he rolled and rolled and rolled, and said he didn't remember what happened after that," Hail said.

None of the others in the rest of the party noticed the two were missing until Sunday, Hail added.

Park rangers reported they received a call about a missing hiker, but that it was later canceled, he said.

Randall County Sherriff's Department is investigating the accident.

Voters to decide whether to sell county hospital

PALESTINE (AP) — A Palestine insurance agent said an election here Saturday presents Anderson County with "a good opportunity" to get out of the hospital business, but retired banker John Cumby considers it "a giveaway" for the county to sell its hospital to a private company.

Voters will decide whether to keep county-owned Anderson County Memorial — the only hospital in the county — or to sell the facility to Safecare Health Services Inc., which has promised to build a new hospital.

"It's such an emotionally charged issue here you can't believe it," said Dr. Glen Goldsmith, vice chief of staff at Anderson County Memorial.

Safecare, a for-profit hospital company, has said it plans to build a new hospital regardless of whether voters approve the sale. The company has offered Anderson County $4.1 million for its hospital and has pledged to move it into a new $16 million building within two years.

"We feel like they made a darn good proposal. This is a good opportunity for the county to get out of the hospital business," said Palestine insurance agent R.L. Kenderdine, leader of a group pushing the sale.

John Cumby, a retired Dallas banker now living in Anderson County and leader of the opposition, calls the proposal "a giveaway" and contends Safecare is taking advantage of a new state government policy to muscle its way into Anderson County.

"This is sort of a test case for public hospitals all over Texas," he said.

Cumby said the county hospital is solid financially. Safecare is trying to get the hospital's assets at clearance-sale prices, he said.

Cumby said he considers Safecare's offer intimidation.

"Their threat is that if we don't sell it to them they will move in here anyway and build a hospital on top of ours. Some say they are bluffing. Some say they would do it," he told The Dallas Morning News.

David Hall, executive vice president of Seattle-based Safecare Health Services, said his company is not bluffing.

"We've already got a site that we have purchased an option on. Our architect is in Palestine this week working out the zoning and things of that nature," Hall said.

Anderson County Judge Edward A. Copeland said that if the sale is rejected by the county's 42,000 residents, he is certain the 35-year-old county hospital could not compete with a new facility.

"I don't see how it could. I don't believe the county can support two hospitals," he said.

Eastland High plays host to Woody Herman's band

EASTLAND (AP)— For Woody Herman, this little town is putting on its "best bib-and-tucker" tonight.

Herman, the 72-year-old big band clarinetist, will be in concert this evening at the Eastland High School auditorium.

Organizers of the concert consider it to be possibly the biggest event in the area since Minnie Pearl performed at the Peach and Melon Festival in nearby De Leon in 1951.

"Woody Herman is one of the last big bands — ever," said Earl Bullock, president of the high school's Band Parents Association, which organized the event as a fund-raiser for the band.

School Superintendant Ray Pruitt said about 50 of the 500 tickets are still available.

Pruitt said he has received calls from as far away as Fort Worth and Dallas inquiring about the concert put on here by the clarinet great.

For those of Herman's generation, the custom was that for very special occasions you would put on a bib and tuck it in. And when you put on your "best bib-and-tucker," that was an occasion about three steps up from "spit-and-polish," big band aficionados say.

In any case, veteran observers here can't recall any entertainer approaching Herman's stature playing Eastland before.

It was high school band director Phil Hewett who brought Herman to Eastland as one of only three concerts in Texas that is part of the musician's 50th anniversary tour.

"My phone has been ringing off the wall," said Hewett, unaccustomed to handling celebrity concerts.

Hewett says he met Herman by visiting him in a hospital years ago after the performer was in a car accident in Kansas.

Herman's band played in Amarillo Sunday night and from Eastland heads on to Oklahoma City.

Eastland, which has a population of about 5,000, is located about midway between Abilene and Fort Worth on Interstate 20.

GOP congressman to speak at economics club meeting

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — U.S. 26th District Republican Rep. Dick Armey, one of three practicing economists in Congress, will speak to Permian Basin Economics Club members during their monthly meeting Tuesday noon at Mission Country Club.

Armey, who received his Ph.D in economics from the University of Oklahoma and was head of the North Texas State University Economics Department before being elected to Congress, has been a continuing critic of federal budget deficits and spending.

Last year, Armey became disenchanted with committee budget process efforts and decided to carry his criticism to the House floor. He organized a group, now said to number about 55 members of Congress, that came to be known as "budget commandos."

While supporting the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings anti-deficit law, which requires annual deficit reductions until a balanced budget is achieved in 1990, Armey contends there is still work for his "budget commandos" because the anti-deficit law only addresses the effect of government policy. He says his group is trying to target the cause of deficits — bad policy that leads to excessive government spending.

Armey's effort seeks to circumvent the traditional committee system, which he contends doesn't work because members become special interest groups, by attacking spending in a line-item-way on the House floor.

Armey, a freshman congressman, has been the subject of controversy in another area, too. In an effort to avoid the high cost of setting up a second home in the Nation's capitol, he set up sleeping quarters in one of the "quiet rooms" of the House gymnasium. Early in February, House members that oversee the facility imposed a rule making the gym off-limits for overnight use, reportedly because "they didn't want the health facility to become known as a motel." Prior to establishing sleeping quarters in the gym, Armey had been sleeping on a couch in his office to avoid spending about $700 a month for an apartment in nearby Virginia. Reports indicate Armey has returned to sleeping on the couch in his office.

The Tuesday noon meeting of the Permian Basin Economics Club is open to the public, says Michael Williams, club president. Charge for the meal for non-members will be $12, he said.

DOLLS

"They tease me a lot about coming and making babies with the older women."

About 20 to 30 hours are put into making a doll. Porcelain is mixed and poured into casts and allowed to dry and then placed in a kiln.

Baked parts are rubbed with panty hose to give them a smooth finish. After they are polished, the parts are again baked in a kiln. Finishing touches include gluing on wigs, inserting eyes and teeth.

Along with making and putting the dolls' bodies together, Porterfield designs and sews all their costumes.

Porterfield shuns synthetics and polyesters. Only silks, satins, laces and real fur are found on his dolls that must show their best for competitions.

"Clothes can make or break a doll," says Porterfield of the criteria used to judge dolls.

Using his background in costume making at the Midland Community Theater, Porterfield designs most of his dolls' costumes and cuts his own patterns.

He rummages around garage sales and antique stores for the bits of laces, furs, silks and satins used to dress his dolls in period pieces.

Porterfield repairs cracks in porcelain and china doll bodies and restrings the elastic that holds the body parts together. He can repair all parts of a doll except for heads.

"If you don't do it just right your doll can explode in the kiln and you lose a lot of money."

The whole process of doll making takes patience and a gentle touch.

"I'm still in a learning phase. I'm good, but I'm not as good as I want to be."

Porterfield says he'll probably continue making dolls until he's 80 and hopes to be able to make money off them some day.

"It makes me feel that I'm doing something. It raises my self esteem to see something made."

Midland man jailed after allegedly threatening woman

From Staff Reports

A 39-year-old Midland man was being held in city jail this morning after a Sunday incident in which he allegedly held a woman at gunpoint.

The man, who was expected to be charged today with aggravated assault, was arrested shortly after noon Sunday in the 2400 block of East Highway 80. According to police reports, he was apparently upset at Elaine McCullough, 4001 E. Highway 80, space 312. He forced his way into her home at gunpoint Sunday morning, but she later escaped and called police.

Ms. McCullough was unhurt in the incident, reports said.

In other reports, a Saturday night house fire at 1919 Morgan was apparently caused by a cigarette falling on a living-room coach, Midland Fire Inspector Lon Dominguez said this morning.

The house occupied by Robert Royals sustained heavy damage in the fire, which was reported about 9:30 p.m. It was extinguished with about 3,000 gallons of water, according to fire reports.

A Buick Electra belonging to Olean Brockington, 1317 E. Cuthbert, was reported stolen early this morning. The car was valued at about $1,500, according to police reports.

Police Roundup

A business on County Road 1300 near County Road 128 reported a stolen IBM typewriter. The $300 machine was taken from Natkin Service by someone who broke through a glass door sometime between Friday and Saturday, according to Sheriff's Office reports.

Richard Gus Lemon, 1602 Hodges, reported the theft of a $500 water-well pump from an unoccupied house on Farm to Market Road 1213 south of State Highway 158. The theft occurred sometime between Friday and Saturday, sheriff's reports said.

A 60-year-old Midland man injured Thursday in a Martin County traffic accident has been released from Midland Memorial Hospital, according to an MMH spokeswoman.

Carl Herndon, whose address was listed as West Highway 80, was injured when the truck-tractor he was driving collided with a truck driven by James Lynn McNeil, also of Midland, on Farm to Market Road 1208 about 11 miles northwest of Stanton, according to Department of Public Safety reports.

Two new cable channels available

From Staff Reports

Dimension Cable Services has announced that two new channels are available for subscribers in Midland — Video Hits One (VH-1) and Headline News.

VH-1 is considered the flipside of MTV; a totally different video music channel, according to a press release from Dimension. Available on Dimension Cable channel 15, VH-1 is geared to an audience that likes "softer" music.Artists likeDiana Ross, Kenny Rogers, Olivia Newton John, Willie Nelson, Melissa Manchester, Julio Iglesias, Stevie Wonder and others will be featured.

Headline News, available on Dimension Cable channel 16, specializes in a "brief news" format.

"A good way to think about the difference between CNN and Headline News is to compare them to a newspaper," said Doug Smith, director of operations. "Headline News is like the front page and CNN is the whole paper. We are really excited about the addition of the two new satellite services and subscribers who currently have our 28 Dimension Cable channel line-up will receive them at no additional costs."

'User-friendly furniture' finds fit way to sit

Copley News Service

With all the attention Americans have been devoting to health and fitness lately, it's only natural that we begin turning our attention to what we've always done best — sitting still.

Along with eating better, exercising more and generally paying greater attention to our bodies, the "healthy set" is beginning to realize that there's more to sitting than slouching in a cloud of puffy upholstery. As a result, function is becoming as important as form and design in some of today's furniture.

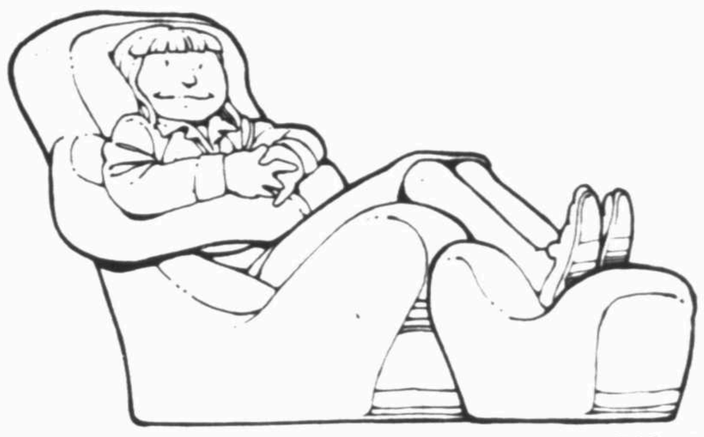

Although user-friendly furniture has been gaining popularity for the last several years, says Eugene McCarkel Jr. of Business Environments in San Diego, it is just now reaching a crescendo. "The business community is very much task- or computer-oriented. And with more people sitting for longer periods of time, they need adjustable chairs or they start to have back problems."

Leif Joslyn of The Better Back Store in La Jolla, Calif., which specializes in furniture that pampers your back, agrees.

"We're such a sitting society that it's essential we address what we sit in and make sure it supports us."

According to Joslyn, "The statistics are so high for back trouble that virtually everyone is at risk. We can only reduce that risk by taking preventative steps."

That's not to say the market is flooded with functional furniture that feel as good as it looks. But several manufacturers have begun concentrating their efforts in this direction.

CNS Graphic

THE TREND, which started in offices and institutions such as nursing homes and hospitals, only recently moved into the home. Even now, much of this furniture, referred to alternately as "functional," "orthopedic" and "ergonomic," looks more orthopedic or officelike than it does home. And most, which remain relatively expensive, is still available only through interior designers, office furniture and specialty stores.

But if you've got a bad back — or want to ward off one — and need a comfortable chair for working at the office, sitting at your home computer or watching television, you can find one. Choices in functional furniture range all the way from the backless "kneeling chair" to chairs that massage and pummel your back.

For senior citizens, there's the likes of the Niagara chair that can propel those who need the extra boost to their feet, as well as more earthly contraptions like the $395 Warren chair with a built-in lilting motion that's supposed to be soothing and relaxing while providing a minimal amount of exercise. For those of us in the workplace, there are adjustable office chairs that adapt to just about any body shape and task imaginable.

One of the hottest accessories is the lumbar support destined to support the lower back. A variety of chairs, and even some automobile seats, now come equipped with these built-in supports. For those that don't, there is a selection of seatback rolls and pillows, which add comfort and support in almost any old chair.

ERGONOMIC, A word that pertains to the comfortable, pleasant and productive relationship between man and machine, has become an industry buzzword. It seems that most manufacturers claim to have at least one line of furniture that provides extraordinary comfort and freedom of movement and reduces physiological stress by providing spinal support and unrestricted blood flow.

But, although it may seem that everyone has jumped on the bandwagon, the ride isn't always smooth. According to some physical therapists, not all the furniture being billed as ergonomic is especially good for you.

Joslyn explains, "The term ergonomic is like 'natural food' — it's a loose term that has been overused to the detriment of the consumer."

Adds Jospeh Marty, director of physical therapy at Sharp-Rees-Stealy Medical Group in San Diego, many of the chairs on the market "still don't put the backs in the optimal position, even the ones that claim to."

Even the better models, says Marty, might be more comfortable for some people than for others. He recommends consumers try out one of these pieces of furniture for a day or two before plunking down big bucks.

But don't be too quick to give up. "If you've been in a poor position for a long time and you sit in a chair that puts you in a good position, you still may be uncomfortable initially," cautions Marty. "Give it time; you may need a couple of weeks to get used to it."

When shopping for functional furniture keep in mind that just because manufacturers may promise a soothing day or night doesn't mean they can neccessarily deliver. Before you make any costly decisions, you may want to consult a physician, physical therapist or chiropractor.

DEAR ABBY

Alaskans announce their annoyance at Abby answer

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I was astonished by your reply to "Annoyed Canadian." It is apparent that many people have misconceptions about Alaska.

As congressman for all Alaska, I can assure you that we, too, have "beautiful summers, dress like most Americans (we ARE Americans), and live in houses just like you do." While some in the "bush" or outlying areas may use dogsleds for travel, most people in Alaska use cars, planes and boats as do those in the "lower 48."

I've enclosed a travel guide to give you a better idea of what our state is like. Better yet, do come to the Great Land and see for yourself. Best regards, DON YOUNG, CONGRESSMAN FOR ALL ALASKA

DEAR REP. YOUNG: Thank you for your gracious letter. I don't know where my head was when I told a reader that he must have been thinking of Alaska when he mistakenly assumed that all Canadians lived in igloos, traveled by dogsled and dressed like lumberjacks.

I know that you have beautiful warm summers, and I was also aware that your annual dogsled races had been recently canceled, due to "no snow."

Please forgive my colossal goof. I really knew better.

However, my Alaskan gaffe brought me an unexpected bonus. Robert Atwood, editor and publisher of The Anchorage Times, invited me to Anchorage to see the truth firsthand.

I also received the following editorial from the Juneau Empire:

DEAR ABBY: I would have written you sooner, but I didn't get my newspaper until just today. Three different kids tried to deliver papers this week, but they all got ate up by polar bears. The fourth kid finally made it through to my igloo by riding on a moose, and then the moose yelled "Timber!" and chopped up those polar bears with a chain saw.

Abby, you're probably surprised that us up here can even read a newspaper. Well, a handful of us can. We sit around and read your column to the others while they scratch their heads with old eagle claws they dug out of the snow.

And our sled dogs listen, too. Those dogs have long been our best friends, and they're the only way we can get from igloo to igloo. Really great dogs like Blazer and Celica and Bronco and Subaru and 1966-Chevy-Needs-Work-Runs-Good.

There are some folks who say people up here sometimes even wear Nike shoes instead of lumberjack boots. Well, let me tell you, we wear those funny little sneakers to stay ahead of the wolves when we run down the trail to the outhouse.

People say we have real summers, too. That's a lie told by some of our good neighbors to the south. We get all our sled dogs to haul away the snow whenever those tourists from California show up in July and ask us about the exchange rate on Alaska money.

I'm writing you in desperation, Abby, to make sure schools Down There teach your children about us right.

You're probably surprised any of us can even write a letter. Well, one or two of us can. I tried to write you in bear blood on a musk ox chip, but I figured you might think that's something they do in Ontario.

So I gave up and just yelled "Mush!" at my faithful IBM-PC with enhanced color display. — ALASKA IGNORAMOOSE

Copley News Service

A well-designed chair may help improve posture and circulation, while decreasing fatigue, according to health specialists. When buying furniture that is as functional as it is attractive, consumers need to consider certain criteria.

At the top of the list, the well-designed chair permits most of the body weight to be transferred to the seat through the buttocks, rather than the thighs. The thighs should be horizontal, the lower legs vertical and the feet squarely on the ground. A seat with a waterfall design, one that slopes gently without sharp angles, can relieve pressure on the blood vessels in the thighs.

Most important, according to Patty Sullivan, physical therapist at the San Diego Sports Medicine Center, a good piece of furniture should maintain a normal spinal curve. "Avoid all furniture that makes you feel like you're sitting in an ice cream scoop. Your back should not be slouched in a C." That means avoiding any furniture that is "too soft."

While your feet should touch the ground, your back must reach the back of the chair, according to Sullivan.

"Always sit with your hips higher than your knees, adds Joseph Marty, director of physical therapy at Sharp Rees-Stealy Medical Group in San Diego.

If it's a chair that you sit in for extended periods of time, says Chiropractor Michael Blott, it should be adjustable. "You'll get less fatigued if you can adjust it for different work tasks."

When it comes to living room furniture, Sullivan advises that sofas and chairs "should not be too high or too low." If they are, she says, they will reverse the normal lumbar curve. "Your knees should be at 90 degrees — trunk to thigh and thigh to calf." If you and your spouse vary greatly in height, you might need to get your own chairs.

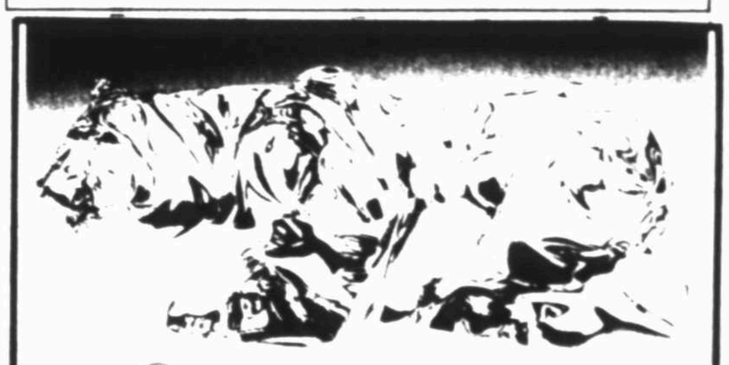

She recommends against ottomans for extended periods of time, because "they put too much weight on your back." When you're tired, she says, there's nothing wrong with propping your feet up for 15 minutes or so. But any more than that puts too much strain on your back.

As for recliner chairs, Sullivan says, "They're the worst: They're very bad for your posture; most offer no back support whatsoever."

Proposals to cut dependence on OPEC oil going nowhere

By ROBERT D. HERSHEY Jr.
New York Times News Service

WASHINGTON — In the spring of 1977, with the United States importing a record 8.5 million barrels of oil a day — 46 percent of its needs — President Carter unveiled a program to meet an energy challenge that he called "the moral equivalent of war." Among the plan's seven goals was cutting imports in half by 1985.

To the surprise of many, and with the aid of doubled prices, the nation did exactly that. Imports last year averaged 4.2 million barrels a day. What's more, the main sources had shifted so that the nation's reliance on politically volatile Middle East producers dropped by far more than half.

Oil prices have tumbled from $26 a barrel late last year to around $12. And in Geneva last week, the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries again adjourned a meeting without agreeing on how to stabilize the market.

Sliding prices have had their benefits for the United States, some of which were dramatically illustrated last week. One was a drop in February of 0.4 percent in the Consumer Price Index, the first since December 1982 and the biggest in more than 32 years. And lower oil prices were a principal reason the nation's foreign trade deficit shrank by $4 billion, to $12.5 billion last month.

Now there is concern that America could again become vulnerable to supply disruptions because import patterns are shifting. Saudi Arabia, for instance, which during much of last year was not among the 10 top American suppliers, is back up to No. 3, behind Canada and Mexico.

Furthermore, slumping prices have prompted several major domestic companies to announce huge cuts in exploration budgets, and many wells, now uneconomic, have been abandoned. Because of the high start-up costs and the wells' low output, experts say, they are unlikely to be reopened unless the price of crude rises to $50 or more. At the same time, lower prices have begun to spur demand, generating fears that the conservation ethic might be eroding. Detroit, to cite one example, is again making and selling big cars.

Several proposals have been offered to prevent the United States from slipping back into a dangerously high level of dependence on foreign oil; others remain in the talking stage. Following are outlines of the more widely discussed ideas.

Besides an oil import fee of $5 to $10 a barrel, which has been proposed, with little prospects of passage, a number of proposals have also been offered, including:

STOCKPILE OIL

THE PROPOSAL. In its 1987 budget, the Administration proposed that the Government stop filling the Strategic Petroleum Reserve when it reaches 500 million barrels, as it will in the next few weeks. But the Energy Department said last week that it was reconsidering.

THE PROS AND CONS. Supporters argue that prices are low and the system should be kept going. Opponents say that when deficits are high, four months' reserve is enough.

THE PROSPECTS. A deal to buy Mexican oil is possible.

USE MORE NATURAL GAS

THE PROPOSAL. There are a number, including the repeal of the 1978 Fuel Use Act, which bars burning gas in new industrial boilers and electric generating plants, and lowering industrial rates to the level of residential ones. Other proposals include lifting federal price controls on "old" gas to encourage suppliers holding it to put it on the market.

THE PROS AND CONS. Supporters argue that so far, gas deregulation has benefited the consumer and that the more gas the nation uses, the less oil it will consume. Opponents, including consumer groups, say that lifting controls on old gas will force prices up because producers will see a chance to make a profit.

THE PROSPECTS. The administration is introducing a broad deregulation measure this month. Because of the complications of the subject, not to mention the 1986 elections, it is not likely to go anywhere soon.

IMPOSE A GASOLINE TAX

THE PROPOSAL. The tax would be paid by motorists at the pump.

THE PROS AND CONS. Widely seen by economists and others as the "least worst" energy tax, a gasoline tax could raise much more revenue than an oil import fee and do more to discourage consumption. But it does not aid production.

THE PROSPECTS. Enactment seems unlikely, for the same reasons that passage of an oil import fee does, though in this case the regional opposition comes from the West, where driving distances are great.

PROMOTE COAL

THE PROPOSAL. Again, there are many. They include ending the moratorium on leasing federally owned coal lands, going slow on curbing acid rain and retaining the depletion tax incentive the tax revision bill would change. A measure permitting the use of eminent domain powers for coal-slurry pipelines has often been, discussed, as has permitting railroads to charge more for carrying coal.

THE PROS AND CONS. Supporters of the various measures argue that it is in the national interest to use more coal and that the more coal is dug, the less expensive it will get. Opponents call coal burning plants polluters that will never be really economic because it costs too much to burn coal cleanly. An acid-rain bill now in the Senate, they point out, has a price-tag of $6 billion a year.

THE PROSPECTS. Coal slurry is a perennial loser because of railroad opposition; there may be a future to allowing railroads to raise prices.

ENCOURAGE NUCLEAR POWER

THE PROPOSAL. One measure in the House would encourage standardized plants and provide a simplified, one-stop licensing process so costs can be predicted.

THE PROS AND CONS. Supporters say it is irresponsible not to proceed with nuclear power generation. Opponents say the the plants are expensive and unreliable, and that the risk of accident is too high, particularly in an economy that is not growing so fast as 20 years ago.

THE PROSPECTS. With 15 percent of the nation's electricity nuclear-generated but many plants operating under huge cost overruns, the House measure could pass.

BOOST DOMESTIC PRODUCTION

THE PROPOSAL. Again, there are many. Several would repeal the "windfall profits" tax on newly discovered domestic oil. Others include protecting tax incentives, and leasing more offshore tracts.

THE PROS AND CONS. Those who would repeal the windfall profit tax point out that it raises practically no revenues with prices so low. Opponents consider such proposals part of a "drain America first" resource policy.

THE PROSPECTS. Oil preferences will probably survive in any tax bill; the rest is uncertain.

'SOFT' SOURCES AND CONSERVATION

THE PROPOSAL. The Senate tax revision bill would extend for 10 years all so-called renewable-energy tax credits. Intended to increase the use of solar and other "soft" energy sources, they expired last year. Some argue that federal conservation standards should be imposed on appliances and home insulation as well as cars. There is no specific proposal to increase hydroelectric output, which accounts for 11 percent of the nation's electricity now.

THE PROS AND CONS. They are many. Those who favor deregulation generally resist federal standards. Many of the measures discussed would save little energy.

THE PROSPECTS. Federal support for developing technology to convert the United States' vast resources of oil shale and coal to gas or liquid fuels grew after the gasoline lines of the 1970s. A government-sponsored synthetic Fuels Corporation goes out of business next month.

PROPOSALS FOR DECREASING OPEC DEPENDENCE

- Oil import fee
- Stockpile oil
- Use more natural gas
- Impose gasoline tax
- Promote coal
- Encourage nuclear power
- Boost domestic production
- Encourage alternate energy

Soviets blame prices on 'imperialist conspiracy'

By BERNARD D. KAPLAN
Hearst News Service

PARIS – The Soviets put the blame for falling world oil prices on an "imperialist conspiracy."

Oil markets are being "manipulated by Western oil companies and their governments" in a plot to carry out "neo-colonialist plunder," according to the official Communist Party paper, Pravda.

Izvestia, the Soviet government daily, has accused Western governments of seeking to "destroy the economies of the poor nations" by a "scheme of the capitalistic pirates to rig the oil market."

In the past few weeks, the drop in oil prices has become a daily, indignant theme, usually discussed in lengthy "analytical" articles in the state-controlled Soviet press.

Western observers believe the unusual amount of space allotted to the question, as well as the outraged tone employed, is a dead giveaway. It shows how severely the Soviets are being hurt by the oil crisis.

"Whenever the Russians cry 'conspiracy,' it's a sure sign that they're in considerable pain," was how one observer here put it.

The Soviet media campaign has concentrated on the damage done to OPEC and other Third World oil producers. Izvestia, for example, hailed a proposal from Algeria, Iran and Libya, the OPEC hard-liners, that the faltering cartel ban oil production for two weeks in every month.

Soviet propagandists are wailing in pretended sympathy with the "catastrophic future" awaiting heavily indebted oil producers like Mexico and Nigeria as a consequence of "the imperialists' treachery."

But foreign observers are convinced that the Soviets are really worried about the effect of depressed oil prices on themselves, although they seldom, if ever, mention that.

They interpret the media campaign as confirming that the crisis may already have seriously handicapped Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev's plans to modernize his country's economy through the purchase of up-to-date technological assistance from the West.

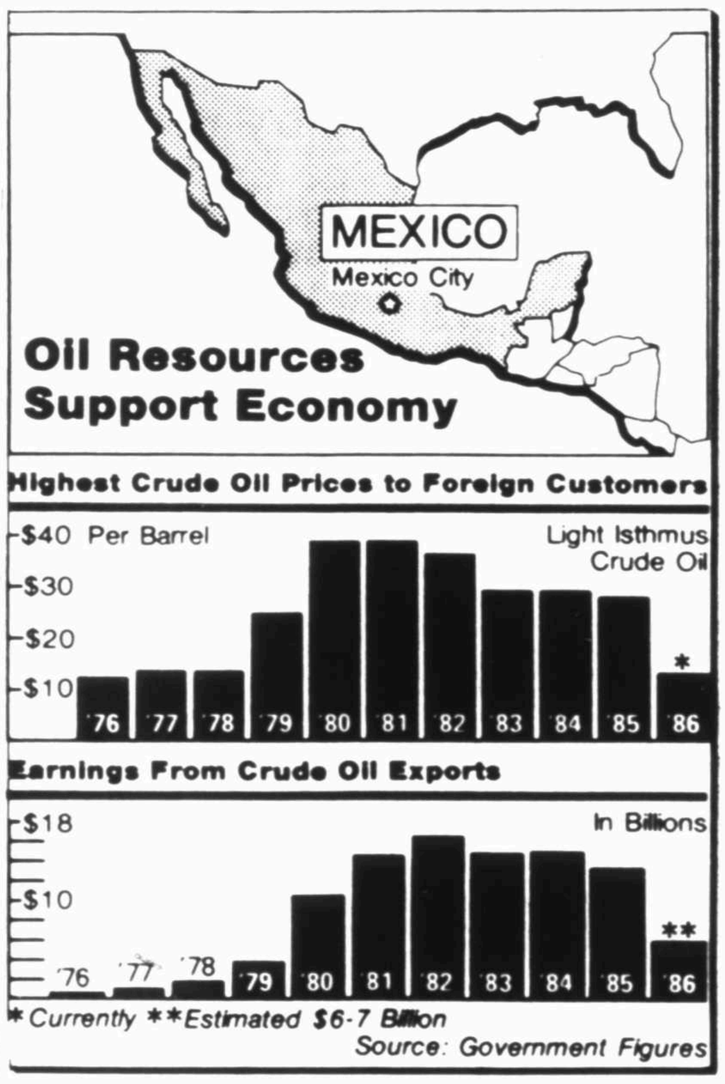

The Soviet Union is the world's biggest oil producer and counts on its exports to the West for slightly more than half of its hard currency income.

U.S. officials estimate that each one dollar drop in the price of crude oil costs the Russians $500 million (m) in foreign earnings. If that's accurate, they have lost approximately $5 billion (b) since the market turned sour late last year.

Axel Bosch, a leading European writer on the oil industry, told the Hearst newspapers that the Soviets had doggedly tried to resist the sharply downward trend. The tactic not only hadn't worked, but had left them in an even worse position.

"When the market price was around $23 a barrel in January, they were demanding $27," he explained. "The result was, of course, that they found themselves with a lot of oil on their hands. Later, they came back into the market, asking $22. By then, the price had fallen to $19.50."

The problem has been made more critical for the Soviets because their production has been falling, largely because of the difficulties of extraction from their Siberian fields. Production last year was only 595 million (m) metric tons, a drop of 20 million metric tons from 1984.

Mexico adjusting to lower crude oil prices

MEXICO CITY(AP) — Falling oil prices are shrinking the economy of Mexico and dramatically changing lifestyles in that country.

Interest rates on two-year car loans are about 90 percent, while an adjustable, 10-year home mortgage comes with an interest tag of about 80 percent, according to analysts.

Interest rates on credit cards are 8 percent a month, up from 5 percent a few months ago.

Travel to the United States, a popular vacation place not too long ago for the middle class, is out.

"Everybody is saying that the cost-of-living has been extremely high in the last three or four months," said economist Trigueros.

Even before the oil-price shock, analysts and government officials had predicted the economy would grow little, if at all, this year.

Now, analysts said government officials are projecting the economy will shrink 2 percent to 3 percent, after adjustment for inflation. Data Resource's Murcio said the decline could be sharper, at a 4 percent rate, if oil prices stay low.

That would be the worst performance since a decline of 5.3 percent in 1983. The economy slipped 0.5 percent in 1982. It posted a solid 3.9 percent performance last year, based on preliminary figures.

With the projected recession, workers are unlikely to see any gains in their inflation-adjusted wages. Minimum wages, adjusted for inflation, have slipped 23 percent since 1983, said Trigueros. In Mexico City, the minimum wage is less than $3.50 a day.

Unemployment will likely grow this year. The government has no reliable jobless rate, but some private analysts roughly estimate 40 percent of the population of 78 million is out of work or underemployed.

With a weak economy and tight credit, little new investment, either domestic or foreign, is expected, most analysts said. A few, though, predicted a robust year for the construction industry because of rebuilding after the earthquakes. The country is sprucing up for the World Cup soccer tournament that will begin May 31, drawing thousands of tourists and fans.

To help make up the lost oil revenue, the government is pushing exporters to sell more of their goods to overseas buyers. Trigueros predicted non-oil exports would advance $2 billion this year, above the $7.7 billion posted in 1985. Among the industries expected to make gains, he said, are tourism, coffee and the assembly plants along the U.S.-Mexico border.

It also is expected to try to trim back on the swollen federal budget, partly by selling off some of the hundreds of companies it owns.

Another savings to the economy may come from a decline in purchases of foreign goods. Trigueros projected that imports would be $1.5 billion less than the $13.3 billion posted in 1985.

BUSINESS BRIEFS

American business to add 3 million new jobs

NEW YORK (AP) — American businesses plan to create nearly 3 million new jobs in 1986, a strong increase over the 2 million jobs added last year, according to the results of an annual Dun & Bradstreet Corp. survey.

The nation's smallest firms — those employing less than 20 workers — expect the largest payroll increase, 7.4 percent, according to the survey results.

Companies with 20 to 99 employees expect a 6.9 percent increase in employment.

Businesses with fewer than 100 employees account for over 90 percent of all firms in the United States, Dun & Bradstreet said Sunday.

Two West Coast airlines integrate schedules

SAN DIEGO, Calif. (AP) — Pacific Southwest Airlines says it will integrate its flight schedule with Northwest Orient Airlines in an effort to pick up a substantial amount of additional travelers.

PSA carries the most passengers on the West Coast and is the nation's 13th-largest carrier. It serves 30 cities in seven Western states and Mexico.

Northwest is the nation's seventh-largest and the leading U.S. airline that flies the Pacific, serving 73 cities in 26 states and 17 countries.

"We expect considerable additional traffic as a result of the agreement," PSA spokeswoman Margery Craig said Friday.

Unions seek job protection in airline mergers

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Five unions representing workers at Northwest Orient Airlines and Republic Airlines have filed comments with the U.S. Department of Transportation seeking job protection as part of the proposed combination of the two Minnesota-based airlines.

The Transportation Department must pass on Northwest's request to buy Republic, for $884 million.

Police arrest 69 people at rally in South Korea

AP Laserphoto

Dissident leader Kim Young-sam, center, wipes away a tear as an unidentifed mother grieves at the grave of her son, who was killed in the Kwangju uprising in 1980. Kim is in the provincial capital for the rally of the New Korea Democratic Party.

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — Police arrested 69 people and went on a one-month alert today following a giant opposition rally attended by thousands of South Koreans pressing their demands for direct presidential elections and other democratic reforms.

The opposition New Korea Democratic Party hailed the Sunday gathering in the southwestern city of Kwangju, scene of a 1980 uprising, as a success, and said the people's yearning for democracy had proven "greater than expected."

But both National Police and the ruling Democratic Justice Party accused opposition forces of inciting people through radical slogans. Police warned that such "illegal agitative actions" will not be tolerated at future rallies.

Up to 100,000 people turned out to launch a campaign for constitutional changes allowing direct presidential elections, a hot political issue that has provoked sharp confrontation between the government of President Chun Doo-hwan and the opposition.

Chun came to power in 1980 after an uprising in which the government says 191 people were killed. Opposition groups put the toll much higher.

Police said about 4,000 people who attended the Sunday rally marched for five hours until midnight through Kwangju's main streets in a noisy anti-government demonstration, and that 500 of them defied police orders to disperse.

Witnesses said police fired tear gas to scatter them. Police said some demonstrators started a bonfire and burned down an advertising tower set up by the city government, and also threw rocks at police. Police said 69 people were arrested.

Kim Dae-jung, a dissident leader, was unable to attend the rally because police in Seoul prevented him from boarding a plane bound for Kwangju.

Another major dissident leader, Kim Young-sam, and New Korea Democratic Party head Lee Min-woo had called on the crowds to help maintain order after some marchers appeared to get out of control.

Lee today expressed regret over the violent actions of some demonstrators, and vowed that that the party will do its best at future rallies to maintain order.

Police officials, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the month-long special police alert was called to deal with possible terrorism and student activism, but it was apparently motivated in part by fears of possible disturbances at future rallies.

In April, Seoul is to host several international events, including the general meeting of the Association of National Olympic Committees. The police officials said the alert calls for stepped-up checks and vigilance at airports, hotels and other public places.

The rally in Kwangju was the third held by the major opposition political party in its effort to collect as many as 10 million signatures supporting the constitutional revisions. Rallies have also been held in the capital city of Seoul and the southern port city of Pusan.

As in Pusan last week, government authorities in Kwangju tried to discourage the city's 900,000 inhabitants from attending the rally by staging picnics and shows with pop singers.

City Hall told its 3,000 employees to engage in "environmental purification" campaigns Sunday, a move apparently designed to prevent them from taking part in the opposition gathering.

Leaflets purportedly signed by the New Korea Democratic Party were also scattered that wrongly gave the rally's date as today. The opposition accused pro-government people of trying to trick the public.

London palace fire kills woman, damages priceless art treasures

LONDON (AP) — A raging fire today gutted a wing of Hampton Court Palace, a sprawling country residence of kings and queens dating from the reign of Henry VIII, killing one person and damaging some art treasures.

Queen Elizabeth II, accompanied by her heir, Prince Charles, and her sister, Princess Margaret, visited the palace after the fire was under control to inspect the damage.

A body believed to be that of an 86-year-old widow was found in the burned building, police and fire officials said.

Seven or eight elderly widows in their dressing gowns were led from apartments on the top floor of the south wing before the roof collapsed into two lower floors filled with art works, said Toby Jessel, a Conservative Party lawmaker who represents the district.

Hampton Court is owned by Queen Elizabeth II and contains hundreds of rooms, including about 15 apartments that are offered at low rent to court retainers and prominent retired diplomats and generals. Many residents of the apartments were away for the Easter holiday.

Flames poured through the roof of the 16th century palace, one of Britain's most popular tourist attractions, and smoke was visible miles away. The palace is on the banks of the River Thames 12 miles from the heart of London.

More than 120 firefighters brought the blaze in the south wing under control at 9:40 a.m., four hours after it was reported, Fire Brigade spokesman Brian Clark said. They managed to keep the blaze from spreading to other wings of the huge palace, which is built around several inner courtyards.

After the fire was under control, smoke still billowed from the building.

At one point, three people were unaccounted for. Two were found, and firefighters wearing masks crawled through a maze of gutted corridors, risking the possibility of collapsing floors and ceilings, searching for the missing woman, Clark said. The body was found later.

The Fire Brigade had identified the missing as Lady Daphne Gale, widow of Gen. Sir Richard Gale. He was deputy supreme commander of NATO in Europe from 1958-60 and played a prominent role in the Allied invasion of Normandy in World War II.

Clark said the cause of the fire was not known and the extent of the damage had not been determined.

"Some art pieces were salvaged at the start of the fire, but there is damage to others. We don't know how much, but considerable damage," Clark said.

The palace houses a historic royal collection of paintings, tapestries and furniture. It is occasionally used for official state receptions, including one given for Mikhail S. Gorbachev, now the Soviet leader, when he visited London in November 1984.

"This is a terrible tragedy," Richard Tracey, undersecretary for the environment, said at the scene. "This building is really one of the jewels in our heritage."

Gerry Clarkson, deputy chief of the London Fire Brigade, said many of the palace's art treasures were rescued in an emergency operation carried out by fire officials and palace staff.

He said firefighting was difficult because the heavy, leaded roof of the palace's south wing collapsed and floors were so badly burned that they were unsafe. The roof fell into a gallery which displayed copies of Raphael tapestries.

Clark, the fire brigade spokesman, estimated damage to the south wing in the millions of dollars.

"Because the rooms are so small and because there is such a maze of corridors our crews are having trouble getting from one end of that part of the building to the other," he said.

Soldiers try to rout strikers at U.S. bases

CLARK AIR BASE, Philippines (AP) — Filipino soldiers guarding the main gate at this U.S. military installation fired into the air today to rout striking workers trying to regain control of the entrance to block the movements of American personnel.

Barmaids and taxi drivers, who complain that the 10-day old strike has cut into their livelihood, scuffled with the strikers Sunday night, driving them away and allowing U.S. service personnel in and out of the base for the first time in several days.

Fifty miles away, at Subic Naval Base, the gates remained closed by picket lines.

During the night, the Clark strikers boarded six buses and made a 90-minute trip to Manila, where they held a vigil outside the suburban residence of President Corazon Aquino. They then returned to the base.

But 50 soldiers blocked their way, firing rifles and other weapons into the air as the strikers approached Clark's main gate.

Strikers said today they rejected an offer by leftist groups opposed to the existence of the U.S. bases to join their ranks and blockade the gates. The strikers represent 22,000 unionized workers on the bases.

Another 23,000 non-union Filipino employees at Subic, Clark and a half-dozen other U.S. facilities have also been affected by the strike.

The major issue is severance pay, but strikers have raised other issues since the walkout, the longest ever to hit all U.S. installations in the Philippines.

Francisco Nepomuceno, the acting mayor of Angeles City, which lies outside Clark, told the barmaids and cab drivers that Mrs. Aquino would intervene in the strike.

Spokesmen for Mrs. Aquino, however, said she had not taken any hand in ending the strike and that as far as they knew, it was still a matter for the Ministry of Labor.

Proposals to cut dependence on OPEC oil going nowhere

By ROBERT D. HERSHEY Jr.
New York Times News Service

WASHINGTON — In the spring of 1977, with the United States importing a record 8.5 million barrels of oil a day — 46 percent of its needs — President Carter unveiled a program to meet an energy challenge that he called "the moral equivalent of war." Among the plan's seven goals was cutting imports in half by 1985.

To the surprise of many, and with the aid of doubled prices, the nation did exactly that. Imports last year averaged 4.2 million barrels a day. What's more, the main sources had shifted so that the nation's reliance on politically volatile Middle East producers dropped by far more than half.

Oil prices have tumbled from $26 a barrel late last year to around $12. And in Geneva last week, the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries again adjourned a meeting without agreeing on how to stabilize the market.

Sliding prices have had their benefits for the United States, some of which were dramatically illustrated last week. One was a drop in February of 0.4 percent in the Consumer Price Index, the first since December 1982 and the biggest in more than 32 years. And lower oil prices were a principal reason the nation's foreign trade deficit shrank by $4 billion, to $12.5 billion last month.

Now there is concern that America could again become vulnerable to supply disruptions because import patterns are shifting. Saudi Arabia, for instance, which during much of last year was not among the 10 top American suppliers, is back up to No. 3, behind Canada and Mexico.

Furthermore, slumping prices have prompted several major domestic companies to announce huge cuts in exploration budgets, and many wells, now uneconomic, have been abandoned. Because of the high start-up costs and the wells' low output, experts say, they are unlikely to be reopened unless the price of crude rises to $50 or more. At the same time, lower prices have begun to spur demand, generating fears that the conservation ethic might be eroding. Detroit, to cite one example, is again making and selling big cars.

Several proposals have been offered to prevent the United States from slipping back into a dangerously high level of dependence on foreign oil; others remain in the talking stage. Following are outlines of the more widely discussed ideas.

Besides an oil import fee of $5 to $10 a barrel, which has been proposed, with little prospects of passage, a number of proposals have also been offered, including:

STOCKPILE OIL

THE PROPOSAL. In its 1987 budget, the Administration proposed that the Government stop filling the Strategic Petroleum Reserve when it reaches 500 million barrels, as it will in the next few weeks. But the Energy Department said last week that it was reconsidering.

THE PROS AND CONS. Supporters argue that prices are low and the system should be kept going. Opponents say that when deficits are high, four months' reserve is enough.

THE PROSPECTS. A deal to buy Mexican oil is possible.

USE MORE NATURAL GAS

THE PROPOSAL. There are a number, including the repeal of the 1978 Fuel Use Act, which bars burning gas in new industrial boilers and electric generating plants, and lowering industrial rates to the level of residential ones. Other proposals include lifting federal price controls on "old" gas to encourage suppliers holding it to put it on the market.

THE PROS AND CONS. Supporters argue that so far, gas deregulation has benefited the consumer and that the more gas the nation uses, the less oil it will consume. Opponents, including consumer groups, say that lifting controls on old gas will force prices up because producers will see a chance to make a profit.

THE PROSPECTS. The administration is introducing a broad deregulation measure this month. Because of the complications of the subject, not to mention the 1986 elections, it is not likely to go anywhere soon.

IMPOSE A GASOLINE TAX

THE PROPOSAL. The tax would be paid by motorists at the pump.

THE PROS AND CONS. Widely seen by economists and others as the "least worst" energy tax, a gasoline tax could raise much more revenue than an oil import fee and do more to discourage consumption. But it does not aid production.

THE PROSPECTS. Enactment seems unlikely, for the same reasons that passage of an oil import fee does, though in this case the regional opposition comes from the West, where driving distances are great.

PROMOTE COAL

THE PROPOSAL. Again, there are many. They include ending the moratorium on leasing federally owned coal lands, going slow on curbing acid rain and retaining the depletion tax incentive the tax revision bill would change. A measure permitting the use of eminent domain powers for coal-slurry pipelines has often been, discussed, as has permitting railroads to charge more for carrying coal.

THE PROS AND CONS. Supporters of the various measures argue that it is in the national interest to use more coal and that the more coal is dug, the less expensive it will get. Opponents call coal burning plants polluters that will never be really economic because it costs too much to burn coal cleanly. An acid-rain bill now in the Senate, they point out, has a price-tag of $6 billion a year.

THE PROSPECTS. Coal slurry is a perennial loser because of railroad opposition; there may be a future to allowing railroads to raise prices.

ENCOURAGE NUCLEAR POWER

THE PROPOSAL. One measure in the House would encourage standardized plants and provide a simplified, one-stop licensing process so costs can be predicted.

THE PROS AND CONS. Supporters say it is irresponsible not to proceed with nuclear power generation. Opponents say the the plants are expensive and unreliable, and that the risk of accident is too high, particularly in an economy that is not growing so fast as 20 years ago.

THE PROSPECTS. With 15 percent of the nation's electricity nuclear-generated but many plants operating under huge cost overruns, the House measure could pass.

BOOST DOMESTIC PRODUCTION

THE PROPOSAL. Again, there are many. Several would repeal the "windfall profits" tax on newly discovered domestic oil. Others include protecting tax incentives, and leasing more offshore tracts.

THE PROS AND CONS. Those who would repeal the windfall profit tax point out that it raises practically no revenues with prices so low. Opponents consider such proposals part of a "drain America first" resource policy.

THE PROSPECTS. Oil preferences will probably survive in any tax bill; the rest is uncertain.

'SOFT' SOURCES AND CONSERVATION

THE PROPOSAL. The Senate tax revision bill would extend for 10 years all so-called renewable-energy tax credits. Intended to increase the use of solar and other "soft" energy sources, they expired last year. Some argue that federal conservation standards should be imposed on appliances and home insulation as well as cars. There is no specific proposal to increase hydroelectric output, which accounts for 11 percent of the nation's electricity now.

THE PROS AND CONS. They are many. Those who favor deregulation generally resist federal standards. Many of the measures discussed would save little energy.

THE PROSPECTS. Federal support for developing technology to convert the United States' vast resources of oil shale and coal to gas or liquid fuels grew after the gasoline lines of the 1970s. A government-sponsored synthetic Fuels Corporation goes out of business next month.

PROPOSALS FOR DECREASING OPEC DEPENDENCE

- Oil import fee
- Stockpile oil
- Use more natural gas
- Impose gasoline tax
- Promote coal
- Encourage nuclear power
- Boost domestic production

Soviets blame prices on 'imperialist conspiracy'

By BERNARD D. KAPLAN
Hearst News Service

PARIS – The Soviets put the blame for falling world oil prices on an "imperialist conspiracy."

Oil markets are being "manipulated by Western oil companies and their governments" in a plot to carry out "neo-colonialist plunder," according to the official Communist Party paper, Pravda.

Izvestia, the Soviet government daily, has accused Western governments of seeking to "destroy the economies of the poor nations" by a "scheme of the capitalistic pirates to rig the oil market."

In the past few weeks, the drop in oil prices has become a daily, indignant theme, usually discussed in lengthy "analytical" articles in the state-controlled Soviet press.

Western observers believe the unusual amount of space allotted to the question, as well as the outraged tone employed, is a dead giveaway. It shows how severely the Soviets are being hurt by the oil crisis.

"Whenever the Russians cry 'conspiracy,' it's a sure sign that they're in considerable pain," was how one observer here put it.

The Soviet media campaign has concentrated on the damage done to OPEC and other Third World oil producers. Izvestia, for example, hailed a proposal from Algeria, Iran and Libya, the OPEC hard-liners, that the faltering cartel ban oil production for two weeks in every month.

Soviet propagandists are wailing in pretended sympathy with the "catastrophic future" awaiting heavily indebted oil producers like Mexico and Nigeria as a consequence of "the imperialists' treachery."

But foreign observers are convinced that the Soviets are really worried about the effect of depressed oil prices on themselves, although they seldom, if ever, mention that.

They interpret the media campaign as confirming that the crisis may already have seriously handicapped Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev's plans to modernize his country's economy through the purchase of up-to-date technological assistance from the West.

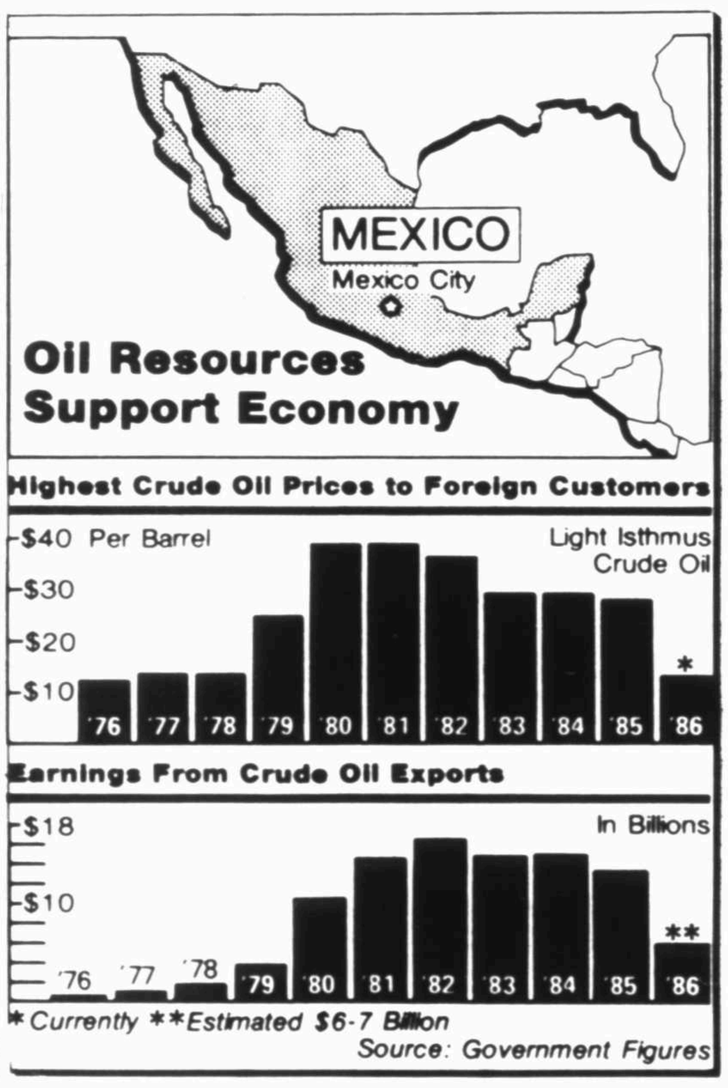

The Soviet Union is the world's biggest oil producer and counts on its exports to the West for slightly more than half of its hard currency income.

U.S. officials estimate that each one dollar drop in the price of crude oil costs the Russians $500 million (m) in foreign earnings. If that's accurate, they have lost approximately $5 billion (b) since the market turned sour late last year.

Axel Bosch, a leading European writer on the oil industry, told the Hearst newspapers that the Soviets had doggedly tried to resist the sharply downward trend. The tactic not only hadn't worked, but had left them in an even worse position.

"When the market price was around $23 a barrel in January, they were demanding $27," he explained. "The result was, of course, that they found themselves with a lot of oil on their hands. Later, they came back into the market, asking $22. By then, the price had fallen to $19.50."

The problem has been made more critical for the Soviets because their production has been falling, largely because of the difficulties of extraction from their Siberian fields. Production last year was only 595 million (m) metric tons, a drop of 20 million metric tons from 1984.

Falling oil prices are likely to push Mexico's battered economy into a fresh recession, forcing millions of people to look for extra work.

Mexico adjusting to lower crude oil prices

MEXICO CITY(AP) — Falling oil prices are shrinking the economy of Mexico and dramatically changing lifestyles in that country.

Interest rates on two-year car loans are about 90 percent, while an adjustable, 10-year home mortgage comes with an interest tag of about 80 percent, according to analysts.

Interest rates on credit cards are 8 percent a month, up from 5 percent a few months ago.

Travel to the United States, a popular vacation place not too long ago for the middle class, is out.

"Everybody is saying that the cost-of-living has been extremely high in the last three or four months," said economist Trigueros.

Even before the oil-price shock, analysts and government officials had predicted the economy would grow little, if at all, this year.

Now, analysts said government officials are projecting the economy will shrink 2 percent to 3 percent, after adjustment for inflation. Data Resource's Murcio said the decline could be sharper, at a 4 percent rate, if oil prices stay low.

That would be the worst performance since a decline of 5.3 percent in 1983. The economy slipped 0.5 percent in 1982. It posted a solid 3.9 percent performance last year, based on preliminary figures.

With the projected recession, workers are unlikely to see any gains in their inflation-adjusted wages. Minimum wages, adjusted for inflation, have slipped 23 percent since 1983, said Trigueros. In Mexico City, the minimum wage is less than $3.50 a day.

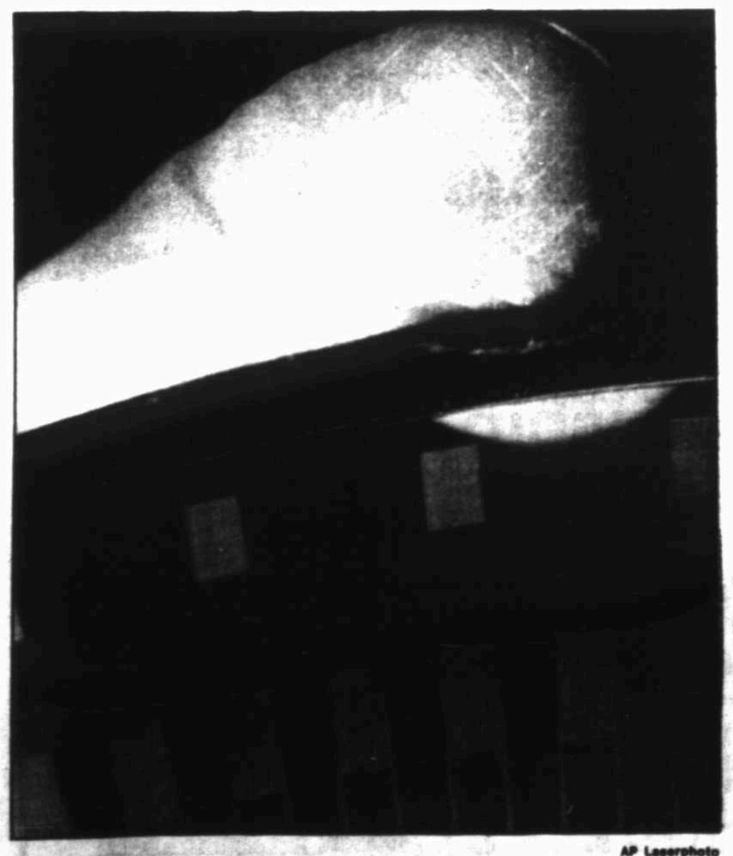

Unemployment will likely grow this year. The government has no reliable jobless rate, but some private analysts roughly estimate 40 percent of the population of 78 million is out of work or underemployed.

With a weak economy and tight credit, little new investment, either domestic or foreign, is expected, most analysts said. A few, though, predicted a robust year for the construction industry because of rebuilding after the earthquakes. The country is sprucing up for the World Cup soccer tournament that will begin May 31, drawing thousands of tourists and fans.

To help make up the lost oil revenue, the government is pushing exporters to sell more of their goods to overseas buyers. Trigueros predicted non-oil exports would advance $2 billion this year, above the $7.7 billion posted in 1985. Among the industries expected to make gains, he said, are tourism, coffee and the assembly plants along the U.S.-Mexico border.

It also is expected to try to trim back on the swollen federal budget, partly by selling off some of the hundreds of companies it owns.

Another savings to the economy may come from a decline in purchases of foreign goods. Trigueros projected that imports would be $1.5 billion less than the $13.3 billion posted in 1985.

BUSINESS BRIEFS

American business to add 3 million new jobs

NEW YORK (AP) — American businesses plan to create nearly 3 million new jobs in 1986, a strong increase over the 2 million jobs added last year, according to the results of an annual Dun & Bradstreet Corp. survey.

The nation's smallest firms — those employing less than 20 workers — expect the largest payroll increase, 7.4 percent, according to the survey results.

Companies with 20 to 99 employees expect a 6.9 percent increase in employment.

Businesses with fewer than 100 employees account for over 90 percent of all firms in the United States, Dun & Bradstreet said Sunday.

Two West Coast airlines integrate schedules

SAN DIEGO, Calif. (AP) — Pacific Southwest Airlines says it will integrate its flight schedule with Northwest Orient Airlines in an effort to pick up a substantial amount of additional travelers.

PSA carries the most passengers on the West Coast and is the nation's 13th-largest carrier. It serves 30 cities in seven Western states and Mexico.

Northwest is the nation's seventh-largest and the leading U.S. airline that flies the Pacific, serving 73 cities in 26 states and 17 countries.

"We expect considerable additional traffic as a result of the agreement," PSA spokeswoman Margery Craig said Friday.

Unions seek job protection in airline mergers

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Five unions representing workers at Northwest Orient Airlines and Republic Airlines have filed comments with the U.S. Department of Transportation seeking job protection as part of the proposed combination of the two Minnesota-based airlines.

The Transportation Department must pass on Northwest's request to buy Republic, for $884 million.

Police arrest 69 people at rally in South Korea

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — Police arrested 69 people and went on a one-month alert today following a giant opposition rally attended by thousands of South Koreans pressing their demands for direct presidential elections and other democratic reforms.

The opposition New Korea Democratic Party hailed the Sunday gathering in the southwestern city of Kwangju, scene of a 1980 uprising, as a success, and said the people's yearning for democracy had proven "greater than expected."

But both National Police and the ruling Democratic Justice Party accused opposition forces of inciting people through radical slogans. Police warned that such "illegal agitative actions" will not be tolerated at future rallies.

Up to 100,000 people turned out to launch a campaign for constitutional changes allowing direct presidential elections, a hot political issue that has provoked sharp confrontation between the government of President Chun Doo-hwan and the opposition.

Chun came to power in 1980 after an uprising in which the government says 191 people were killed. Opposition groups put the toll much higher.

Police said about 4,000 people who attended the Sunday rally marched for five hours until midnight through Kwangju's main streets in a noisy anti-government demonstration, and that 500 of them defied police orders to disperse.

Witnesses said police fired tear gas to scatter them. Police said some demonstrators started a bonfire and burned down an advertising tower set up by the city government, and also threw rocks at police. Police said 69 people were arrested.

Kim Dae-jung, a dissident leader, was unable to attend the rally because police in Seoul prevented him from boarding a plane bound for Kwangju.

Another major dissident leader, Kim Young-sam, and New Korea Democratic Party head Lee Min-woo had called on the crowds to help maintain order after some marchers appeared to get out of control.

Lee today expressed regret over the violent actions of some demonstrators, and vowed that that the party will do its best at future rallies to maintain order.

Police officials, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the month-long special police alert was called to deal with possible terrorism and student activism, but it was apparently motivated in part by fears of possible disturbances at future rallies.

In April, Seoul is to host several international events, including the general meeting of the Association of National Olympic Committees. The police officials said the alert calls for stepped-up checks and vigilance at airports, hotels and other public places.

The rally in Kwangju was the third held by the major opposition political party in its effort to collect as many as 10 million signatures supporting the constitutional revisions. Rallies have also been held in the capital city of Seoul and the southern port city of Pusan.

As in Pusan last week, government authorities in Kwangju tried to discourage the city's 900,000 inhabitants from attending the rally by staging picnics and shows with pop singers.

City Hall told its 3,000 employees to engage in "environmental purification" campaigns Sunday, a move apparently designed to prevent them from taking part in the opposition gathering.

Leaflets purportedly signed by the New Korea Democratic Party were also scattered that wrongly gave the rally's date as today. The opposition accused pro-government people of trying to trick the public.

London palace fire kills woman, damages priceless art treasures

LONDON (AP) — A raging fire today gutted a wing of Hampton Court Palace, a sprawling country residence of kings and queens dating from the reign of Henry VIII, killing one person and damaging some art treasures.

Queen Elizabeth II, accompanied by her heir, Prince Charles, and her sister, Princess Margaret, visited the palace after the fire was under control to inspect the damage.

A body believed to be that of an 88-year-old widow was found in the burned building, police and fire officials said.

Seven or eight elderly widows in their dressing gowns were led from apartments on the top floor of the south wing before the roof collapsed into two lower floors filled with art works, said Toby Jessel, a Conservative Party lawmaker who represents the district.

Hampton Court is owned by Queen Elizabeth II and contains hundreds of rooms, including about 15 apartments that are offered at low rent to court retainers and prominent retired diplomats and generals. Many residents of the apartments were away for the Easter holiday.

Flames poured through the roof of the 16th-century palace, one of Britain's most popular tourist attractions, and smoke was visible miles away. The palace is on the banks of the River Thames 12 miles from the heart of London.

More than 120 firefighters brought the blaze in the south wing under control at 9:40 a.m., four hours after it was reported, Fire Brigade spokesman Brian Clark said. They managed to keep the blaze from spreading to other wings of the huge palace, which is built around several inner courtyards.

After the fire was under control, smoke still billowed from the building.

At one point, three people were unaccounted for. Two were found, and firefighters wearing masks crawled through a maze of gutted corridors, risking the possibility of collapsing floors and ceilings, searching for the missing woman, Clark said. The body was found later.

The Fire Brigade had identified the missing as Lady Daphne Gale, widow of Gen. Sir Richard Gale. He was deputy supreme commander of NATO in Europe from 1958-60 and played a prominent role in the Allied invasion of Normandy in World War II.

Clark said the cause of the fire was not known and the extent of the damage had not been determined.

"Some art pieces were salvaged at the start of the fire, but there is damage to others. We don't know how much, but considerable damage," Clark said.

The palace houses a historic royal collection of paintings, tapestries and furniture. It is occasionally used for official state receptions, including one given for Mikhail S. Gorbachev, now the Soviet leader, when he visited London in November 1984.

"This is a terrible tragedy," Richard Tracey, undersecretary for the environment, said at the scene. "This building is really one of the jewels in our heritage."

Gerry Clarkson, deputy chief of the London Fire Brigade, said many of the palace's art treasures were rescued in an emergency operation carried out by fire officials and palace staff.

He said firefighting was difficult because the heavy, leaded roof of the palace's south wing collapsed and floors were so badly burned that they were unsafe. The roof fell into a gallery which displayed copies of Raphael tapestries.

Clark, the fire brigade spokesman, estimated damage to the south wing in the millions of dollars.

"Because the rooms are so small and because there is such a maze of corridors our crews are having trouble getting from one end of that part of the building to the other," he said.

Soldiers try to rout strikers at U.S. bases

CLARK AIR BASE, Philippines (AP) — Filipino soldiers guarding the main gate at this U.S. military installation fired into the air today to rout striking workers trying to regain control of the entrance to block the movements of American personnel.

Barmaids and taxi drivers, who complain that the 10-day old strike has cut into their livelihood, scuffled with the strikers Sunday night, driving them away and allowing U.S. service personnel in and out of the base for the first time in several days.

Fifty miles away, at Subic Naval Base, the gates remained closed by picket lines.

During the night, the Clark strikers boarded six buses and made a 90-minute trip to Manila, where they held a vigil outside the suburban residence of President Corazon Aquino. They then returned to the base.

But 50 soldiers blocked their way, firing rifles and other weapons into the air as the strikers approached Clark's main gate.

Strikers said today they rejected an offer by leftist groups opposed to the existence of the U.S. bases to join their ranks and blockade the gates. The strikers represent 22,000 unionized workers on the bases.

Another 23,000 non-union Filipino employees at Subic, Clark and a half-dozen other U.S. facilities have also been affected by the strike.

The major issue is severance pay, but strikers have raised other issues since the walkout, the longest ever to hit all U.S. installations in the Philippines.

Francisco Nepomuceno, the acting mayor of Angeles City, which lies outside Clark, told the barmaids and cab drivers that Mrs. Aquino would intervene in the strike.

Spokesmen for Mrs. Aquino, however, said she had not taken any hand in ending the strike and that as far as they knew, it was still a matter for the Ministry of Labor.

Women who want abortions will get them, experts say

BOSTON (AP) — Women who want abortions will get them no matter what legal restrictions exist, say two experts who studied the impact of laws requiring minors to get their parents' approval for abortions.

Their report found that after one of these laws was put in force in Massachusetts, girls went to neighboring states for abortions, and there was no significant drop in the number of youngsters ending their pregnancies.

"The history of making abortion inaccessible or illegal is very well known," said Judith A. Gorbach, director of adolescent health services in the Massachusetts Department of Public Health.

"Whenever a society puts up obstacles, women find ways around them," she said. "In this case, we've been lucky that youngsters have found other states with legal facilities."

She commented on a study conducted by Drs. Virginia G. Cartoof of Boston University and Lorraine V. Klerman of Yale, published in the April issue of the American Journal of Public Health.

Their analysis concludes that the law, which went into effect in 1981, had little impact. "Massachusetts minors continue to conceive, abort and give birth in the same proportions as before the law was implemented," they wrote.

Laws in four other states also require the approval of parents before minors may get abortions, while in six states, parents must be notified of planned abortions.

"I suspect that most women, of whatever age, will find a way to have an abortion, as they have historically, if that's their choice," Cartoof said in an interview. "I don't think that these laws, for the most part, will inhibit minor women from getting abortions if that's indeed what they want to do."

The Massachusetts law requires unmarried girls under age 18 to have the consent of both parents or of a superior court judge before having an abortion.

During the 45 months before the Massachusetts law took effect, an average of 412 minors had abortions each month in Massachusetts. But during the following 20 months, that fell to 226 a month — a 43 percent decline.

However, after the law, an average of 94 Massachusetts minors obtained abortions each month in the bordering states of New Hampshire, Rhode Island, Connecticut, Maine and New York, up from just seven a month before the law.

Cartoof said that the number of abortions on all women, minor and adult, began to drop during the 16 months before the Massachusetts law took effect. Assuming that this decline would have continued, the number of abortions performed on Massachusetts minors in other states made up for the drop in abortions in Massachusetts.

The study estimated that 50 to 100 more babies were born to minors in Massachusetts in 1982 than would have been expected, but it was unclear whether this resulted from the abortion law.

During the first months after the law began, most of the minors went to Rhode Island and New Hampshire for their abortions. In September 1982, Rhode Island adopted its own parental consent law, and the flow of abortion seekers to Connecticut increased.

One New Hampshire clinic even advertised in the Yellow Pages in towns along the northern Massachusetts border, stating "consent for minors not required."

Laws similar to Massachusetts' are in effect in Louisiana, North Dakota, Utah and Rhode Island, the researchers said, while laws in Arizona, Idaho, Maryland, Minnesota, Ohio and West Virginia require that parents be notified, but do not have to give consent, before an abortion.

Americans jam lines in response to 'Relief'

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Americans responded enthusiastically to a serious appeal from Hollywood's top comedians, jamming phone lines with pledges to help the homeless, a spokesman for the "Comic Relief" weekend television special says.

The total amount of donations was not announced Sunday, but callers jammed the show's 500-line phone bank to help the needy in 18 cities, said Brian Lindquist, a spokesman for the Home Box Office cable television network in Los Angeles. He said the tally would be available today, after figures were audited.

The four-hour show, with comedians Billy Crystal, Whoopi Goldberg and Robin Williams as hosts, starred about 40 comics and was broadcast by HBO.

HBO agreed to allow local cable companies to carry its signal on a free channel, increasing the potential audience from 14.5 million homes to 39 million.

The comedians ended their fund-raiser with a spoof of a similar benefit forming a choir to parody the song, "We Are The World."

The idea was appropriate, since "Comic Relief" followed several previous fund-raisers, including "We Are the World," the Live-Aid concert for African famine relief and the FarmAid concert for America's struggling farmers.

"Comic Relief" offered humor for a broad spectrum of tastes, ranging from the down-home style of Minnie Pearl, with a price tag on her hat, to Pee Wee Herman's bizarre gags. Other comics included Steve Allen, Jerry Lewis, Madeline Kahn, John Candy, David Steinberg, Buddy Hackett, Joe Piscopo, Gilda Radner, Carl Reiner, Sid Caesar and Henny Youngman.

"Let's just say it's the greatest collection of funny people since (Charlie) Chaplin dined alone," said Crystal.

Between laughs, producers showed sobering scenes of people who don't have much to be gleeful about.

"Some of them (the homeless) have no choice," Crystal said. "One guy came up to me in Seattle and said, 'Billy, just make sure you tell 'em we're not all bums.'"

"I could find myself homeless tomorrow, and the current administration doesn't seem to care," said Miss Goldberg, a one-time welfare recipient and star of "The Color Purple."

Technical problems kept about 60 smaller stations nationwide from receiving the audio portion of the show for the first 20 minutes, said Pat Filli, HBO's vice president of production.

Money raised by viewer pledges will be disbursed to Health Care for the Homeless projects in 18 cities — Albuquerque, N.M.; Baltimore; Birmingham, Ala.; Boston; Chicago; Cleveland; Denver; Detroit; Los Angeles; Milwaukee; Nashville, Tenn.; New York; Philadelphia; Phoenix, Ariz.; San Antonio; San Francisco; Seattle; and Washington, D.C.

Governor proclaims New Mexico 'a sanctuary'

SANTA FE, N.M. (AP) — Gov. Toney Anaya has proclaimed New Mexico as a "state of sanctuary," making it the first state in the union to openly resist deportation of Central American refugees.

"I only wish that we could do more," said Anaya, upon signing the proclamation Friday.

"The proclamation of New Mexico as a state of sanctuary is an action in the best traditions of America, the Underground Railroad, the Statue of Liberty and Judeo-Christian ethics," he said. "It is right that we take this action and very appropriate that we do so during the Easter season when spiritual considerations are paramount.

He commended "those civic and religious organizations and the compassionate and dedicated individual volunteers assisting these organizations who are working in New Mexico and throughout this country to extend the spirit of sanctuary to all those in need."

Tom Sharpe, the governor's deputy press secretary, said the action "is largely a symbolic gesture — something that will stir debate if nothing else."

Anaya said in the proclamation that soon he will be issuing "administrative guidelines for state employees outlining the legal and regulatory boundary lines of sanctuary."

"This proclamation means that New Mexico is joining with those church groups, civic organizations and cities across America that have already declared sanctuary in opposing the deportation of Central American refugees back to their home countries where they may face persecution, torture and even assassination by anonymous death squads," Anaya said.

He said "the key to understanding the sanctuary movement is to realize that the sanctuary movement is not fighting against unjust laws, it is fighting for the observance of just laws."

Thirteen held after anti-Contra protest continue their fast

SEATTLE (AP) — Thirteen people arrested last week in a protest against aid to U.S.-sponsored rebels in Nicaragua continued fasting and refusing to give their names to police today.

Nan McMurray, a spokeswoman for the Seattle chapter of Pledge of Resistance, said the 13 intended to identify themselves later in the day when they were to be arraigned on charges of failing to comply with an order to leave the Federal Building.

They were arrested Friday at a sit-in organized by the peace group outside the office of Rep. John Miller, R-Wash., a supporter of military aid for the Contras.

At the King County Jail, Sgt. C. Manning said Sunday night the protesters would be denied visitation rights until they gave their names.

Nicaraguan alien wins temporary stay from INS

WASHINGTON (AP) — Hours before he was to be deported, a Nicaraguan who said he faced being drafted into the army of that leftist-controlled country today won a temporary, emergency stay.

Joan Arrowsmith, a judge in the Office of Immigration Review, granted the indefinite stay, pending a decision on whether to reopen the deportation case of Marcos Perez-Roblero, 28.

Arrowsmith's court clerk, Vanessa Bloodsaw, said that the judge had presided at an earlier hearing in which an order was issued ordering Perez to leave the United States. The order was to have been carried out today.

Perez came to this country in 1979 to visit his mother, overstayed his original six-month visa and began working as a parking lot attendant in violation of the requirements for temporary immigrants, according to his attorney, David Carliner.

Carliner has said that if Perez is sent back to Nicaragua, he would be drafted into the army of the Sandinista government, which is trying to quell a guerrilla insurgency.

Perez applied last fall for admission as a permanent resident, but under immigration service rules he was required to leave the United States and make his application at an American consulate in Nicaragua or to obtain an exemption permitting him to apply for readmission in Mexico.

NATION IN BRIEF

Forest, brush fires blacken six states

Associated Press

Crews from Arizona and New Mexico headed to Kentucky today to help battle some of the forest and brush fires that have blackened thousands of acres in six states and killed one firefighter.

More than 25,000 acres have burned in West Virginia in what one official called the state's worst outbreak in a decade. Forecasters there and in Alabama, Ohio, North Carolina, Kentucky and Tennessee, which had more than a dozen fires out of control, said no rain was expected soon.

"It's hot, windy and the humidity is about 25 percent," said Charles Crail, a spokesman for the Daniel Boone National Forest in Kentucky, who reported four fires in the forest Sunday.

In Ohio, brush fires charred about 360 acres in the south and 65 acres in the northeastern part of the state Saturday.

PALM SPRINGS, Calif. (AP) — Students streamed out of this resort city after a week of sometimes debauched and violent spring revelry, clogging roads and leaving behind relieved police.

The town was quiet late Sunday, although some youths "were still trying their best to be jerks," said a police spokeswoman who declined to be identified.

In another hot spot for vacationing college students, Florida, officials and hotel owners expressed concern over the deaths of several students this year, including four who fell from hotel balconies.

Falwell to lay off about 225 employees

LYNCHBURG, Va. (AP) — The Rev. Jerry Falwell says construction projects at his university caused financial problems that will force the layoff of about 225 employees from his ministries.

The layoffs are part of an austerity move that includes plans to drop his toll-free telephone lines, increase fees at Liberty University and cut scholarships.

Falwell, founder of the Moral Majority, said the cuts are in response to $14 million in construction over the past two years at Liberty University.

While the changes will save millions of dollars, Falwell said he isn't trying to cut a specific amount. "We're just looking at the ministry to see what we can do," he said.

AUTOMOTIVE REPORT

SAAB FINDS EXPLOSIVE SAFETY SOLUTION

Pyrotechnic charge tightens seat belts

States where seat belt laws are in effect report a 20-percent drop in traffic fatalities. The results could be better still.

Problem is, belts work best when tightly attached, but most people wear them loose, and the padding of clothes gets in the way besides.

Saab, the Swedish automaker, found a solution using, of all things, explosives, to take up belt slack in a collision.

The new Saab 9000 Turbo is equipped with emergency belt tensioners for the front seats. Within 10 milliseconds of a collision, an electronic sensor activates the tensioners and in another 10 milliseconds the belts are tight.

This is how it works. In a head-on crash at 11 miles per hour or more, a sensor triggers a shotgun-like blast inside a small cylinder. The explosion forces a piston up inside the cylinder in the same way that a bullet shoots up the barrel of a gun. There is a difference of course: Unlike a gun barrel, the cylinder is capped, and the piston is tied by a steel wire to the seat belt's takeup reel. That's the mechanism that winds up the belt.

The piston's seven-inch stroke inside the cylinder corresponds to the amount of slack that can be taken up.

The charge produces enough force to take up the slack but is harmless to people. "No lbroken ribs," promises Saab-Scania of America President Robert J. Sinclair.

Tests with calibrated dummies show that the HIC value (Head Injury Criteria, by which automakers mesure survivability in a collision) is improved by 50 percent with Saab's belt tensioner compared to an ordinary belt with two inches of slack. This can be the difference between life and death.

This feature appears each Monday in the Classified Section as a reader service of the Midland Reporter-Telegram
