Announcement was made here this week that Lt. Margaret C. Brace and Auxiliary Webb will be in Sanderson Saturday and Sunday, March 20 and 21, for the purpose of interviewing and giving mental tests to applicants for the Woman's Army Auxiliary Corps.

The recruiting officers will make the Selective Service office at the courthouse their headquarters for the two days, and will accept applications from women who are 21 to 44 years of age and do not have young children or dependents. Women who are interested in joining this organization to aid in the war effort are urged to contact these recruiting officers either Saturday or Sunday at the Selective Service office.

Flying School Seeks Old Radio Sets, Loudspeakers

Marfa—Old radio sets, or radio loudspeakers, are needed by the Marfa Advanced Flying School. It was disclosed at the field this week, for a variety of important purposes in connection with the flying training program.

Old radio equipment can be put to vital use to build apparatus for teaching aviation cadets the wireless code, it was explained by Warrant Officer Charles S. Anderson, Base Communications Officer. Loudspeakers especially are needed to build various inter-communication systems on the field. Salvaged parts of old radio receiving sets can be used to make receivers for the flying department.

Many residents of the Big Bend area, it was explained, may have old radios stored in garages, basements or attics. A check of ranch homes may also turn up ancient models which again come into their own by playing a vital part in the war effort.

Radio sets may be shipped, prepaid, direct to Base Communications Officer, AAF Advanced Flying School, Marfa, Texas.

SOYBEANS AND SOYBEAN MEAL HEADED FOR TEXAS

A break in the protein feed shortage in some areas are expected this week as 24,000 tons of northern soybeans were headed for 16 Texas mills for crushing and the Texas USDA War Board routed 15 additional carloads of soybean meal to livestock producers, according to information from College Station.

Scheduled under March 1 delivery was 5,500 tons of soybeans to mills at Waco, Shamrock, and Ballinger while the March 2 delivery of 18,500 tons was routed for crushing at Hubbard, Texarkana, Greenville, Sherman, Longview, and Caldwell.

Other mills which will receive soybeans from the March 2 release are located at Dallas, Paris, Honey Grove, Sulphur Springs, Clarksville, Winnsboro, and Gilmer.

Operating under contract with the Commodity Credit Corporation, Texas mills which crush northern soybeans are permitted to sell one-half of the meal to livestock producers while the remaining one-half is retained by CCC for shipment into critical areas.

The amount of CCC-owned meal available for a particular area may not be sufficient to break a drastic shortage since the Corporation divides the supply between all states which need protein feeds.

Using all resources available, the Texas USDA War Board, in obtaining the 15 additional cars this week, has routed 53 cars of CCC soybean meal into Texas areas where the feed shortage is particularly acute. Other shipments will be routed as rapidly as the meal becomes available, the board said this week.

To date, 125,000 tons of soybeans have been shipped from northern states to Texas for crushing and the meal expected from these shipments approximates 100,000 tons.

HAVE YOU RESPONDED

to an appeal made by the American Red Cross War Fund Drive?

One-half the time has elapsed and less than 50 per cent of those receiving letters of appeal have replied to them. It may not be your son who needs aid from the American Red Cross on some far away battle front, but—it may be the son of your neighbor.

In battle every soldier does his best. Can we expect to win with the least loss of lives and least amount of suffering with less than 50 per cent on the home front doing their shares?

Sure, you are going to do your share—BUT DO IT TODAY.

CLYDE HIGGINS KILLS EAGLE ON JAKE YOAS RANCH

A Mexican Eagle measuring seven feet from wing tip to wing tip was brought in Thursday morning by Clyde Higgins. He shot the flying eagle with a 30-calibre rifle.

Mr. Higgins stated that while enroute to town he saw the eagle circling over a bunch of ewes and lambs on the Jake Yoas ranch and decided that he would see if he could hit it with his rifle. He said that during lamb season last year he had seen an eagle in about the same place swoop down and fly away with a lamb, and that he believed that the big bird would have soon killed another lamb.

These birds, during lamb season, will kill two lambs daily causing quite a loss to ranchmen.

Non-Highway Gasoline Users To Apply To W P B

Uninterrupted farm production during 1943 keynotes the move which transfers non-highway gasoline applications from county war price and ration boards to county farm transportation committees.

Under the new order which became effective March 1, all applications, whether on a new or renewal basis, will be referred to Texas' 254 county farm transportation committees for analysis and recommendation.

Later, applications for tractor fuel oils in those cases where the ration board feels adjustment is required also will be referred to farm transportation committees for recommendation.

Objective of the Office of Price Administration move is to insure farmers receiving sufficient supplies of gasoline and other tractor and engine fuels for 1943 production. B. F. Vance, chairman, Texas USDA War Board, said in making the announcement.

In making recommendations to the county ration boards on the amounts of gasoline and fuel needed, county farm transportation committees are being asked to examine the 1943 farm plan of the producer, and recommend the probable amount of gasoline required to meet the needs of the farm operator for the six months' period of the ration.

Excessive as well as inadequate rations are equally undesirable and county transportation committees should not hesitate to ask the community transportation leader of the community AAA committeeman to check for them the equipment and needs of the applicant, Vance said.

Kites Dangerous If Flown Near Power Lines

Dozens of little children annually lose their lives or suffer painful injuries in accidents involving kites and wires, either through lack of knowledge of the hazards involved or because of a youthful disregard of danger.

It is to prevent occurrences of this kind from happening here that the local power company annually publishes warnings in the newspapers and schools. This year the company again asks the cooperation of parents in calling the following safety rules to the attention of their children:

Don't use fine wire or metallic string. Don't use wet string or fly kites in damp weather. Don't use metal kite sticks. Don't climb poles to get kites caught in wires. Don't poke sticks at tangled kites or attempt to pull them down by their tails. Always fly kites in open fields, clear away from power lines and busy highways. "Both fine wire and the tinsel string sold for gift wrapping are conductors of electricity and so is string that is wet," cautions James Caroline, power company manager.

"If a kite becomes tangled in electric lines, it is best to call the light company office and let one of our men take it down. In climbing a pole to get a kite a child may come in contact with a live wire or in attempting to pull it down by its tail or poke it loose with a stick, he may cause two wires to come together causing a service interruption."

AN OBJECT LESSON

Advocates of peacetime laws to kill competition in retailing, should now look about them. Competition has been definitely ended, as a war measure. Instead of trying to attract business, the average merchant has to discourage it in his attempt to comply with price regulations and other restrictions which became inevitable when the natural laws of supply and demand, and free competition, were suspended.

The new system has been cheerfully accepted because war made it necessary. Out of this necessity, we will gain valuable experience. We will have a practical example of how restricted competition immediately reacts on the consumer.

The effect would be the same from laws passed in peacetime to destroy competition, as it is from regulations in wartime, which eliminate competition.

Under peacetime competitive retailing, consumers were able to buy what they wanted, when they wanted it, at reasonable prices. Their standards of living rose year by year. The establishments in which they made their purchases, whether chain or independently operated, steadily became more attractive and satisfactory. Service became better. These things the public came to take for granted without realizing that they would not have occurred but for the magic of wholesome competition which is the handmaiden of progress.

The war emergency should warn all of us against peacetime crippling of competition. When peace returns, the free competitive system should be restored. Frozen prices mean frozen progress—that is now being proven.

"Just one more question before you go, Judge. What is this thing called propaganda you hear so much talk about these days?" "I'll give you an example, Hank. Last night I was reading an interesting little book called 'Hitler is in Favor'. It told how Hitler would very much like to see Americans fighting among themselves over prohibition because that would create disunity, waste the time of Congress and legislatures in wet-dry arguments and cripple our war effort. It also mentioned a booklet written about Hitler's government telling how Hitler's gang wants to maintain contact with foreign temperance organizations and how it contributes annually to an international temperance union.

"You can bet Hitler isn't interested in seeing prohibition advanced in our country for any reason except that he knows it's a good way to stir up trouble. That's what they mean by propaganda, Hank."

my proud pleasure to pre- sent the world at large that I, green-eyed, Senior with tremendous ability and cute legs. By now you know I Harold Othello Haynes or maybe he would be better recognized as H. H. Hock H., or Hark. This well-liked Senior was born in Leaky, Texas. November 3, 1925. Harold has what he prefers to call black hair, but to a casual observer it appears dark brown.

H. started to school in Sanderson, and unless something drastic happens will finish here. His ambition is to be a cadet in the Naval Air Corps, and it seems it will be full-filled, because that's what he plans to do after graduation. If the war ends soon enough, he also hopes to go to college.

As to a few favorites, Harold likes to shoot pool—as it seems all basketball boys do—and attend the show. However he has not favorite movie stars. His favorite food is unusual for a boy—peas. He runs true to the Navy in liking Navy blue. As for books H. will take "Raven" and always enjoys hearing "I've heard that Song Before". History, and Math, and Science are his favorite subjects. Wow! brains on top of everything else.

H.'s hobby is collecting Indian relics and jewelry from girls.

Hmm rather dangerous, H. His pet and seemingly only peeve is silly girls.

Look! Listen! Live!

An average of 435 passenger trains are delayed a total of 200 hours each month by grade crossing accidents. Illustrated here is a typical case which helps build those monthly totals.

The truck was struck by a passenger train at a crossing protected by flashing light signals, which were functioning. The truck was thrown clear of the tracks, striking and breaking a telegraph pole and an electric power control box. Although the truck driver had defective hearing, he was familiar with the crossing.

The engine was damaged and it was necessary to cut out one Pullman car due to flat wheels.

The National Safety Council is conducting a special campaign to stop these accidents, which every day delay 38 trains a total of 22 hours—a big blow to the nation's war transportation effort.

Driver carelessness is the cause of almost all these accidents, according to the Council. To help win the war—to save yourself and others needless suffering—the Council asks you to be sure the track is clear before starting to cross.

Your Income Tax

LOSSES OF FARMERS

Losses incurred in the operation of farms as business enterprises are deductible from gross income. If farm products are held for favorable markets, no deduction on account of shrinkage in weight or physical value, or by reason of deterioration in storage, is allowed, except as such shrinkage may be reflected in an inventory if used in determining profits.

The destruction by frost, storm, flood, or fire of a prospective crop is not a deductible loss in computing income since it represents the loss of anticipated profits which have never been reported as income. Likewise, a farmer engaged in raising and selling livestock, such as cattle, sheep, and hogs, is not entitled to claim as a loss the value of animals that perish from among those animals that were raised on the farm, except as such loss is reflected in an inventory, if used. If livestock has been purchased for any purpose, and afterward dies from disease, exposure, or injury, or is killed by order of the authorities of a State or the United States, the actual purchase price of such livestock, less any depreciation allowable as a deduction in respect of such perished livestock may be deducted as a loss if the loss is not compensated for by insurance or otherwise. The actual cost of other property (with proper adjustments for depreciation) which is destroyed by order of State or Federal authorities may likewise be claimed as a loss. If reimbursement is made by a State or the United States in whole or in part on account of stock killed or other property destroyed in respect of which a loss was claimed in a prior year, the amount received is required to be reported as income for the year in which reimbursement work on the new film is said to capture all the white-hot fury of the world's toughest fighting men. Irwin Shaw wrote the screen play and Lester Cowan produced "Commandos Strike at Dawn," whose players also include Anna Lee, Lillian Gish, Sir Cedric Hardwicke and Robert Coote.

The importance of the new film can be attested to by the fact that it is Muni's first in two years and Miss Gish's first in nine years. In addition, the governments of the United States, Great Britain and Canada provided Columbia with official co-operation.

ment is made. The cost of any feed, pasture, or care which has been deducted as an expense of operation must not be included as part of the cost of the stock for the purpose of ascertaining the amount of a deductible loss.

If gross income is ascertained by the use of inventories, no deduction can be taken separately for livestock or products lost during the year, whether purchased for resale or produced on the farm, as such losses will be reflected in the inventory by reducing the amount of livestock or products on hand at the close of the year, which has the effect of reducing gross income from business by the amount of the loss.

If an individual owns and operates a farm in addition to being engaged in another trade or business or calling, and sustains a loss from the farming operations, such loss may be deducted from gross income received from all sources in determining the taxpayer's net income, provided such farm is not operated for recreation or pleasure.

If a farm is operated for recreation or pleasure and not on a commercial basis and if the expenses incurred in connection therewith are in excess of the receipts may be ignored in rendering a return of income, and the expenses incurred, being regarded as personal expenses, will not constitute allowable deductions for Federal income tax purposes.

As the rationing of processed fruits and vegetables begins to hit full stride and plans for control of the meat supply takes form, the average housewife now has a fairly good picture of the food outlook as it affects her household and what she will do about it.

She already has made the pleasant discovery that the OPA rationing order, covering chiefly canned fruits and vegetables, leaves a long and appetizing list of staple foods in the non-rationed class and that these items alone are of a sufficiently varied nature to provide a healthful, nourishing diet.

This means that under present regulations food purchases which require stamps from Ration Book Two can be held to a minimum without allowing the family diet to suffer. It means also that housewives will pay closer attention to the foods for which no ration stamps are required.

Such an optimistic view is shared by Secretary of Agriculture Wickard and others in close touch with the food situation. Secretary Wickard asserts that there is going to be enough food for essential diets in this country provided we manage our food supplies wisely. With the beginning of point rationing, he said, we enter a new phase of wartime living.

"We can enter it with the assurance that by careful management we shall have all that we need to eat, even if we have to forego some of the food that we would like to eat," Mr. Wickard declared.

Careful management calls for full use of food available for civilian consumption, equal distribution of this supply, avoidance of waste, and cultivation of all garden space. Our 1943 Victory Gardens and our volunteer U. S. Corps will bolster food production from two directions—the small-scale and community garden and the large-scale staple crops from the farms.

Whatever changes occur in our dietary habits, they cannot be compared with British food experience since the beginning of the war. Britons have had to fall back on a diet that is nourishing but monotonous, supported chiefly by home-raised fresh vegetables. Their war gardens—both private and community ones—and the Volunteer Women's Land Army are as vital to the United Kingdom as its military defenses. In fact, they are classed as a vital part of the total defense of the British Isles.

In this agricultural region, most of the farm folk and some city dwellers have had gardening experience, but thousands of our people will plant their first row of beans this spring. They will want to read all they can on gardening and get hints from their more experienced neighbors.

If the victory gardener expects to get bountiful crops containing health-protecting vitamins and minerals, he'll have to be sure that the soil in his plot is adapted to cultivation and that it gets plenty of sunshine. Gardening in distant spots which involve use of the family car should be avoided, for saving rubber is just as important as growing food. Rationing of rubber and gasoline has cut the national average 5400 miles annually for passenger cars, but a further reduction may be necessary. In the areas where rationing began last December 1, a 36 per cent decline in rural traffic contrasts with 47 per cent in December.

While city folks with garden plots have the opportunity of growing their own vegetables, they are not as fortunate as their rural friends from the standpoint of fresh or cured meats. The new ceiling prices on pork cuts are slightly higher than prevailing prices in some localities, but the regulation which becomes effective April 1 will assure a more even supply for everyone.

STORY TOLD OF EXPERIENCES OF FLYING FORTRESS CREW IN INDIA

Marfa, March 10—The story of how the crew of a Flying Fortress under his command survived a spectacular forced landing in an Indian jungle was disclosed for the first time today by Maj. William M. Bowden of the Alamogordo, N. M., Army Air Base in an address to the second class of pilots graduated from the AAF Advanced Flying School here.

Before Col. Gerald Hoyle, Commanding Officer, presented wings and second Lieutenants commissions to men from 25 states, Maj. Bowden related incidents he described as typical of what the graduates might expect in combat service.

The San Dimas, Calif., speaker now operations officer for a heavy bombardment group in training, was ordered from Florida to the defense of Java a few weeks after Pearl Harbor, but engine trouble delayed him and led to his joining a free-lance "lame-duck" bombing squadron in India after the Japs seized the Dutch colony.

"We had wasted much gasoline because of poor visibility," Maj. explained, "and when we tried to fly back to our base in Calcutta we became lost. We finally saw a train and 'buzzed' it to see where it was bound."

As the needles of the fuel indicators fluttered about the "empty" mark, all crew members save himself and his co-pilot bailed out in parachutes. "We came to a river and made a good landing along a sandy shore," he said.

"Unfortunately, the landing was the only thing that was soon gathered, and while we were able to drive them off at first by shooting over their heads, they swarmed back when they saw we weren't hurting them. We didn't know whether they were planning to carve us up or our plane, but we didn't relish either possibility, believe me. Finally some patriarchy of these natives appeared from under umbrellas and convinced the rest of the mob we were okay."

"After a while we heard a mob approaching, and then we saw our other crew members in its midst, carrying their parachutes. Our boys were having a time of it trying to fight off natives who wanted to help carry the 'chutes," Maj. Bowden related. Missionaries eventually came to the rescue of the fliers.

Using gasoline flown to them from Calcutta, the crew later returned the Flying Fortress to its base.

Maj. Bowden was introduced by Maj. John D. Wynne, Director of Training.

To illustrate the value of his advice "never to neglect to learn everything possible while you are in school," Maj. Bowden said his plane was delayed on its way to Java because unsuitable oil used in India caused an engine to burn out. "When you are charged with the responsibility of an airplane and its crew never neglect little details," he warned.

On another occasion, his crew hunted for a submarine in waters near Rangoon. Sighting a black object, the crew made several runs over the target. "We finally dropped a few bombs, while the crew argued whether it was a sub or a whale," he said. "I still think it was not a sub, but anyway we had a 'whale' of a story when we got back."

The free-lance squadron was given fighter protection by the famed American Volunteer Group in numerous sorties over Burma and China, he explained, and he warmly praised the work of the Flying Tigers.

Combat service sometimes has a "gravy train," he explained, referring to his experience as pilot for Gen. Brereton, of the AAF, and the famous British desert hero, Gen. Wavell, while these men studied defenses in India. Maj. Bowden returned to the U. S. in September.

Col. Hoyle pointed out Maj. Bowden's remarks by emphasizing the responsibility that commanders of warplanes must assume, such as the instance of the jungle forced landing. "It was Maj. Bowden's responsibility to look after his men and his plane at that time under trying circumstances," he said.

The post band made its first public appearance under the direction of Warrant Officer Paul Steg when the cadets passed in review along the flying line before commencement exercises were held in the post theater.

CEILING PRICES ON PORK IN EFFECT AFTER APRIL 1

On April 1, 1943, ceiling prices will be fixed on all retail sales of fresh and processed pork. The United States is divided into eleven zones, in each of which the pork prices will vary for different classes of retail stores. Prices in OPA Maximum Price Regulation 336 take the place of all previous ceiling prices.

On and after April 1, a retailer may sell only—(1) pork cuts given dollars and cents prices under OPA 336, and (2) pork products whose prices are fixed under General Maximum Price Regulation, including pork sausage, canned pork, pork variety meats or offal (including temple meat, cutlets, brains, chitterlings, liver plucks, kidneys, tongues, lips, snouts, ears, hearts, cheek and head meat, stomach, weasand meat and heads), and quick frozen cuts which are delivered to the retailer in individual packages in which he sells them. Ceiling prices on pork must be posted in each store and, upon request, the retailer must give a customer a receipt showing the date, name and address of retailer, name and weight of each pork cut sold, and the price paid for it.

WOMEN AT WAR

Sophia

Mrs. Kimball and Mrs. Worthington, dressed soberly and wearing their best black gloves, walked along the stony country road back toward Sophia Hardy's farm, to pay their visit of condolence.

"How do you reckon she'll be bearing up?" Mrs. Kimball asked Mrs. Worthington. Both ladies wore their most solemn, funeral expressions.

"A mighty severe blow," Mrs. Worthington said. "Mighty severe. To lose your only son, the mainstay of your declining years. And such a dreadful death, too—to go down with a ship. Mercy!"

"The first of our boys from Hand County to go, too," Mrs. Kimball said, mournfully.

"I wouldn't blame Sophia Hardy for feeling right bitter."

They stood on the simple stone doorstep, with downcast eyes, getting themselves into the proper commiserative mood.

"Come in!"

The voice was brisk and cordial. They looked up in surprise. Sophia herself had come to the door. As they followed her into the parlor they exchanged glances, with eyebrows lifted. Sophia was not even in mourning. The parlor shades were not even drawn.

"It's nice of you to come," Sophia said. "Do sit down."

"We came," Mrs. Kimball said almost reprovingly, "to tell you that our hearts are bleeding for you in your great loss."

"We know how lonely you must be out here," Mrs. Worthington said. "With nothing to take your mind off . . . off . . ." She sniffed and reached in her purse for a handkerchief.

"Oh, I keep busy," Sophia said. "I've just finished applying for the Government insurance on Tom's life."

The visiting ladies could not resist a shocked glance at one another.

"I want to get it right away," Sophia said. "So I can put it into War Bonds. My boy hasn't finished fighting yet, not by a long shot."

The ladies were so occupied with their feeling of horror, so titillated by this feeling of horror, that neither of them noticed Sophia's hands. Under the folds of her clean print dress, against the seat of her chair, they were tightly clenched.
