Israel sorry about deaths, not operation

By ALEX EFTY

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) The casualty toll from Israel's air attack on southwest Lebanon mounted today to more than 100 dead and 150 wounded, most of them civilians, and Israeli Prime Minister Menahem Begin said "we regret it very deeply."

But Begin, who summoned U.S. Ambassador Samuel Lewis to his Jerusalem office to express regrets for civilian deaths in the cross-border reprisal raid Wednesday, told reporters, "we do not apologize for the operation itself."

Lebanese and Palestinian searchers dug deeper into the rubble left by the raiding Israeli warplanes as the Lebanese government announced the death toll had passed the 100 mark.

The governor's office in Sidon, the provincial capital of South Lebanon, also reported 150 wounded in the bombing and strafing of villages and Palestinian refugee camps in southwest Lebanon.

Officials said at least 80 per cent of the casualties were civilians and most of them were Lebanese.

The Lebanese government charged that the attack was "overt aggression" and said it would bring it to the attention of the U.N. Security Council.

The Syrian government radio accused the Israelis of a "deliberate attempt to further obstruct American peacemaking efforts in the Middle East."

Despite Israel's claim that its air force attacked only Palestinian military targets, foreign correspondents who toured devastated villages and a refugee camp found no evidence of guerrilla positions.

Two men battle blowing snow to reach a stalled car on an Alexandria, Minn., street. Most of western and central Minnesota was blasted by the storm in which snowfall amounts up to a foot were accompanied by winds of as much as 80 miles an hour.

Blizzard bottles up Midwest

By The Associated Press

Winter-like weather that dumped more than a foot of snow on the upper Midwest ground its way toward Canada today, trailing low temperatures, gusting winds and some heavy snowfall.

The National Weather Service said the storm at midmorning was pushing through upper Michigan and Wisconsin and said winds as high as 40 miles an hour were common in parts of Minnesota and northern Iowa.

Many roads throughout the Midwest closed by the blizzard remained blocked by snowdrifts.

Travelers' advisories for blowing and drifting snow continued in effect today for Minnesota, northwest Wisconsin and eastern upper Michigan. A heavy snow warning was issued for western upper Michigan, with four inches or more expected during the day.

The blizzard through this morning dumped 14 inches of snow at Canby, Minn., 13 inches at Bemidji, Minn., 12 at Watertown, S.D., and 11 at International Falls, Minn., the weather service said. Snowfall was heavy, too, in parts of North Dakota, Iowa and Nebraska.

Sunny skies were reported after daybreak in western and northern Minnesota, among the areas hit hardest the last two days, and motorists left stranded through the night were headed for home.

Residents of eastern South Dakota burrowed out from under snow drifts, too, to resume normal activities in the aftermath of the early blizzard.

Two deaths in Minnesota were blamed on the storm, which began Tuesday night.

Michael Muzzy, 23, of Thief River Falls, was struck and killed by an industrial loader as he worked to remove snow Wednesday near his hometown. And a motorist, Sandra Kerzman, 25, of Ward Springs, was killed Wednesday morning east of Sauk Centre when she was struck by a car while trying to signal for help.

County authorities said an elderly man found frozen near Perham on Wednesday had apparently died of natural causes not related to the storm.

In South Dakota, Gov. Richard Kneip and the state's budget officer, Rich Garry, remained stranded in Sioux Falls today after flying in Tuesday for meetings with lawmakers. They were sealed in when the airport was closed.

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Federal Government is taking another step toward bringing oil from Alaska's North Slope to the lower 48 states.

The action was taken by the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission, which approved plans to convert a natural gas pipeline into an oil line.

The pipeline will move Alaska oil from California to Midland, Texas.

The commission's vote actually approved abandonment of a 669-mile gas line from Ehrenberg, Ariz. to Jal, N.M.

El Paso plans to lease the facility to Standard Oil of Ohio, which plans to reverse the flow and adapt it for oil.

The project is necessary because the West Coast cannot use all the oil from the new Alaska pipeline. No lines are ready to carry the excess to East and Midwest markets.

The Standard plan still must get state approvals plus the commission's. It still may take two years to complete the conversion.

Who was that nice man doling out a $101 tip?

Some days just seem to be worth a little more than others. That's what Michael Ramirez, 15, of 203 W. Cowden Ave., found out when he received a $101 tip recently.

Said Michael, who has yet to receive his first paycheck as busboy from the Midland restaurant where he began working just two weeks ago: "A man, about 40, asked me what my smile was worth and pulled a bunch of money from his pocket."

"Is your smile worth $20?" Michael said the man asked him near closing time.

"No, not that much," Michael said, pushing away a $20 bill. The man then stuck a $1 bill in his hand.

Later, the man told Michael, "I'm going to give you something."

The man put some money on an overturned chair and began walking out.

Michael discovered the man had tucked a $100 bill beneath a dollar. He called the man to take his money back, waving both bills in the air.

The man did return, laughing, and quickly grabbed the $1 bill back before making his final exit.

Michael said he will put his tip in a savings account.

The death penalty: count prison director as capital proponent

(Editors's Note: This is the first article of a three-part series. The second and third articles will appear in The Reporter-Telegram on Friday and Saturday.)

HUNTSVILLE — James Estelle believes in the death penalty. It's justice, he says, the "ultimate punishment" for the killers society can't figure out.

"Here you've got a human being," he says. "A living, breathing, walking, talking human being. And some son of a bitch comes up and snuffs him . . . Quite frankly, at the point somebody is convicted with capital punishment, I'm not nearly as concerned about the safety of the convicted person as I am about the safety of the community left at their hands."

Estelle figures if his attitude changed, he'd have to quit his job as executive director of the Texas Department of Corrections and search out a living beyond the red brick compound that houses his office and the state's death chamber.

Since he took on the job in 1972, Estelle has never had to execute a Death Row inmate. But, he says, if he owes it to the Texans who favor capital punishment—an apparent majority, he notes—and to the taxpayers who write his paycheck, he's willing to do it.

"If you have a real philosophical difference of opinion, then you've got a decision to make," he says.

But for Estelle, the decision is an easy one—both on professional and philosophical grounds. His personal feelings don't get in the way of his official job of state executioner or the belief common among supporters of capital punishment that it deters other violent crimes.

"I wish I could be (opposed to capital punishment)," he comments. "But the Jonas Salk of our discipline hasn't come marching down the road yet. And the day I can tell my children that there is a safe alternative to the death penalty will be the day I back off my support of it.

"With the lack of knowledge about aberrant human behavior, I just don't believe that for a few cases there is a safe alternative."

What about the possibility of life imprisonment without parole?

"That's truly a good definition of cruel and unusual punishment," he answers.

Estelle shores up his arguments much like other death penalty supporters: the Legislature's revised capital punishment statute, passed in 1973, and upheld by the U.S. Supreme Court in 1976; it excludes inmates who could be rehabilitated and returned to society; and the thought of an official execution keeps potential killers from carrying out their work.

The new law limits capital punishment to five categories of crime: killing of a peace officer during the course of his duty; killing during the Wind eases vapor danger

By JOHN VAN GIESON

PENSACOLA, Fla. (AP) — Brisk winds pushed a cloud of poisonous ammonia gas from a freight train derailment out over the Gulf of Mexico today, after the vapors killed one man and forced evacuation of at least 1,000 people from their homes.

The evacuation was ordered Wednesday night as the gas spread through residential sections here and in neighboring Santa Rosa County. By dawn police in Pensacola, in Florida's panhandle, reported the toxic cloud over Escambia Bay on the Gulf.

Thirty persons were treated for ammonia inhalation and six were hospitalized.

The train's crew members escaped injury, authorities said.

Officials identified the dead man as Dr. John R. Thorshov, 38, a pathologist at West Florida Hospital. Authorities say the gas from three derailed tank cars 40 feet away swept over his home.

His wife Lloyda, 38; their daughter Daisy, 4, and son Gangee, 16 months, were all reported in critical condition.

A Pensacola police spokesman said about three square miles remained cordoned off as federal transportation officials sought to determine the cause of the accident, the second such incident recently involving Louisville and Nashville trains.

Another L&N train had spilled ammonia in downtown Pensacola three weeks ago.

"It verges on criminal negligence for federal agencies and other concerned people in the railway administration not to respond to this," said County Administrator Joe Mooney. "I don't know what it takes to get their attention."

Firefighters spent the night spraying water on a ruptured 33,000-gallon tank car a few yards away from the Thorshov home. Two other tank cars developed smaller leaks after after more than 25 cars had derailed, Pensacola police reported.

"The gas comes on very quickly and basically chokes you to death," said hospital spokesman Robert Rudd.

Minister punches life into oil town with verse

McCAMEY — Weems S. Dykes, McCamey's resident poet and crossover minister, has come up with a bit of verse to bring about some changes in this oil town.

It's called "Wake Up Rip Van Winkle!"

He wrote it expressly for the town's chamber of commerce banquet, which was keyed to the poem's title and to this slogan: "Try Neighborly Together."

Dykes is the regular minister over at the Christian and Presbyterian churches. And he occasionally fills in when the Baptists or Methodists are without a preacher for one reason or another.

Besides being versatile at the pulpit, he's fairy handy at poetry. He's already published a volume of poetry, "A Cup of Thoughtfulness," and he's always jotting down lines.

Just for kicks, you might ask the preacher's wife Verne or their

Far from the maddening situation, three small children sleep snugly at the Red Cross receiving center in Pensacola, Fla., after some 1,000 families were evacuated from the area following a train derailment of deadly anhydrous ammonia gas. One person is known dead, 23 injured in the aftermath of the the disaster.

District governor addresses Lions

Julian E. McLean of Sweetwater, governor of District 2-A1, Lions International, was the guest of honor and principal speaker Wednesday noon at the meeting of the Downtown Lions Club in the Midland Hilton.

Speaking on the subject, "What Is Lionism?" the governor said that first and foremost "Lionism is service — service to mankind."

He went on to explain that Lions International is the world's largest service organization, with more than 1,200,000 members around the world. Lionism last year, he said, accounted for more than 550,000 separate community service projects.

McLean said it all adds up to International President Joseph M. McLoughlin's theme for the year, "People Caring for People."

The speaker said that Lionism also provides a bond of union among members in all of the countries in which Lionism is established.

"Lionism is all of this," Gov. McLean said, "but actually, Lionism is what this club makes it and what it will do for this particular community."

"Ask yourself," the governor concluded, "'has my contribution to my club been such that if I moved tomorrow, would I be missed?'"

"If your answer is 'no,'" he said, "I would suggest that you re-evaluate your position in the club, and then do something about it."

Wake Up Rip Van Winkle!

"Rip Van Winkle, ain't you got no pride?
The weeds are growing side by side,
Look at Fifth Street if you want to know,
The dadgum weeds, watch them grow.

"Houses need painting, lawns mowed,
Trees planted, flowers growed,
No good fairies are gonna come down,
And clean up this run-down town.

"Rip Van Winkle, ain't you got no gump?
Get your fanny off that stump!
Get your work clothes on today,
Work's gonna start and right away.

"Fishing can wait, golfing, too,
No time for hunting in the morning dew,
Roll up your sleeves, get your hoe,
Crank up the mower and away you go!

"You're gonna work I want you to know,
Or I'll crack your skull with a hard blow!

"Old Rip rose up and he stomped his feet,
And he said, 'Old woman, you ain't so sweet,
You always tell me what I ought to do,
I'm headed for King Mountain to forget about you.'

"Rip took his dog and he took his gun
And he climbed King Mountain to have some fun,
He met a stranger who gave him a nip
And they spent the day from sip to sip.

"Soon Old Rip was in a stupor of a sleep
And for 20 years he didn't make a peep,
And when he woke up and went back to town,
Many of his old cronies weren't around.

"The pool hall had closed and a saloon or two,
But he still could find some mountain dew,
He found that his wife had passed away,
But he found some of his children that very day,
And they were happy to have Old Rip around,
To see all the changes in the old town.

"Mayors had come and Mayors had gone,
And some buildings were made of brick and stone,
And some buildings were carted away,
But too many of these were left to stay.

"Many proprietors had moved or died,
And no one seemed interested or even tried,
To keep these businesses up and going,
Or the town prosperous or the town growing.

"People came here a long time ago,
Gonna get rich and then they would go,
Some of these people are still around,
Still a part of the run-down town.

"Radio station ain't no more,
Humble Refinery gone and closed the door,
No dentist to fill our teeth,
And too many people on relief.

"Automotive agencies are no more,
They too have closed their door.

"People seem to come and make a short stay,
And then they're off and on their way,
Never taking roots in the old town,
For some other place they're soon bound.

"Can't build a city when things are this way,
We've got to make people want to stay,.

"Industry certainly must abound,
If we're gonna have a permanent town,
Building new houses is a must,
Or this old town is gonna bust.

"We've got to have plenty of water,
Or all the rest doesn't matter.

"The greatest change that can come in this place,
Is the change of attitude and a smiling face.

"Good schools, that we've got!
Good churches and a lot!
Good climate and good people,
Hard to find anywhere their equal!

"Wake up Rip Van Winkle! Wake up I say!
Join the people of McCamey,
And begin a new day!"

commission of a kidnapping, burglary, robbery, arson or aggravated rape; murder for hire; and murder of a private citizen or penal institution employee during an escape attempt.

"You're not talking about the family beef or the triangle murder . . . You're talking about people who commit murder in the process of the commission of another felony. For instance, the shopkeeper who gets killed by an armed robber simply to eliminate a witness. Or somebody who gets killed for strictly and purely a profit motive. Or a thug who goes out and puts himself as a gunman for hire. It's a very distillate group."

Estelle defends the statute as fair and denies charges the penalty is administered unfairly to the poor and minority groups, saying the ethnic breakdown among Death Row's 61 residents is roughly 50 percent white and 50 percent black and brown.

Meanwhile, he says he does not and has never looked forward to participating in an execution; yet he somewhat glumly predicts continued delays—primarily because of federal court rulings and the "imagination, innovation or creativity" of defense attorneys trying to keep their clients alive.

If "justice delayed is justice denied" for Death Row inmates, Estelle reasons the same is true for society. And he says there's no way to calculate how or if an established but inactive death penalty has hurt society.

The thought of capital punishment, he notes, probably doesn't keep the average murderer from committing his crime. But an execution would prevent a repeated occurrence. It deters the person who is thoughtful enough to question its effects. And, he adds, it deters him from the idea of murder.

"Now that's three of us, but if you apply the principle universally, I have to conclude that the death penalty is a deterrent."

Farr wanted pistol, witness says

By MIKE COCHRAN

AMARILLO, Texas (AP) — A defense witness testified today that shooting victim Stan Farr told him he wanted his pistol returned because he might have "trouble" with millionaire murder defendant Cullen Davis.

Ronnie Bradshaw, co-owner of a saloon that Farr managed, said Farr pointed out that Davis' estranged wife was going back into divorce court and there could be trouble.

Farr was living with Mrs. Davis at the time, the summer of 1976.

"Is it not a fact that Mr. Farr expressed fear that he might have troubles with Cullen Davis and that's why he wanted his gun back?" prosecutor Marvin Collins asked on cross-examination.

"That's correct," Bradshaw replied.

Bradshaw said, under defense questioning, Farr told him in June 1976 that he needed his pistol returned because he was also afraid of Horace Copeland, who was slain a year after a shooting spree at the Davis mansion.

"He didn't think Horace would bother him but he'd have somebody," Bradshaw said Farr told him.

A surprise witness Wednesday said Farr was secretly dating her and that he was carrying a pistol the week before he was slain.

"He said he needed it because people were after him," Kimberly Lewis, 19, testified Wednesday.

The slender, former college student calmly told the jury she and Farr would rendezvous several times a week during the months Farr was living with the defendant's estranged wife Priscilla.

She said Farr referred to Mrs. Davis as his "investment."

Farr, 30, was killed and Mrs. Davis, 36, wounded in the Aug. 2, 1976 shooting at the $6 million Davis mansion in Fort Worth.

The defendant's step-daughter Andrea, 12, also was slain in the midnight gunfire that crippled Gus Gavrel, 22, a family friend. It is the death of Miss Wilborn for which the 44-year-old Davis is on trial.

The defense produced Miss Lewis without word or warning aboat her relationship with Farr, and her testimony provided still another dimension in the bizarre case.

Chief defense lawyer Richard "Racehorse" Haynes and three of his colleagues were grinning broadly when the witness brushed back her long, light brown hair and stepped from the stand.

Miss Lewis testified she met Farr at the Rhinestone Cowboy, a night club he managed, in March 1976. She said they began dating, mostly during the day, and would meet at the club or at a housing project in which Farr was involved.

It was in an office at the latter site where she last saw Farr, although she said she talked with him on the telephone just hours before the shooting.

"He was very nervous," she recalled.

It was at that last meeting, she said, that she spotted the pistol lying on "a red piece of cloth" in Farr's black Thunderbird. And she said he was pacing the floor nervously that day and frequently looking out of the window.

"Did he tell you what he was looking for?" Haynes asked.

"No," she replied.

"Was Mr. Farr able on that day to be intimate with you?"

"I don't remember."

Miss Lewis said she had seen Mrs. Davis at the Rhinestone Cowboy but that Farr had never introduced her.

She said she was attending Texas Christian University and, in reponse to a prosecutor's question, said her parents were aware she was dating Farr.

"They knew about it from the start," she said.

Miss Lewis said she knew Horace Copeland, a shadowy figure in the case, and that she had seen him and Farr together at the nightclub.

Copeland was slain a year after the mansion shootings at a Fort Worth apartment. No charges were ever filed in that case.

A barmaid testified earlier Wednesday that Farr once intervened in a "loud and ugly" altercation between her and Copeland.

Polly Ware, 27, said she once saw Copeland handling a pistol with a towel and wiping off the bullets as he loaded them into the weapon.

She said the first incident occurred less than two weeks before Farr was slain but she did not elaborate on it.

The witness said Copeland moved into her Fort Worth apartment in 1975 but had moved out at the time of the disagreement with Copeland at the Rhinestone Cowboy.

Farr apparently intervened verbally in the argument after Copeland "grabbed" Miss Ware but state objections blocked her from telling what was said.

"The next day," she testified, "I called my attorney and asked him if there was something he could do about Horace Copeland. I told him he had threatened me and my friends."

Her attorney, Charles Baldwin of Fort Worth, said he filed a restraining order against Copeland to prevent him from harrassing Miss Ware and that he had a subpoena issued for Farr to testify in the matter.

Cappadonna said consideration of the hospital's request for a certificate of need was postponed from its scheduled time today because the hearing officer has not completed her report.

New state treasurer visits city

Warren G. Harding, who was appointed state treasurer by Gov. Dolph Briscoe last Oct. 5, was a Midland visitor Wednesday, visiting with friends and meeting with bank officials in informal session during the afternoon.

Harding had served as county treasurer of Dallas County since 1951, until his appointment to the state office last month to serve the unexpired term of the late Jesse James.

Although he has not been announced as a candidate, it is possible that he will seek election as state treasurer in next year's elections.

He is a veteran of World War II and is commander of the American Legion Metropolitan Dallas Post No. 581. He is a former director of the Oak Cliff Chamber of Commerce and a member of the board of the Oak Cliff Lions Club.

He is a past president of both the County Treasurers Association of Texas and the National Association of County Treasurers. He holds an "Outstanding Treasurer's Award" of the national association. He also is active in Masonic organizations.

Agreement near on job-creation bill

By ART PINE and
EDWARD WALSH
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — White House aides and key congressional Democrats have reached tentative agreement on a compromise version of the Humphrey-Hawkins job-creation bill that would set a national unemployment target of 4 percent, to be reached within five years.

But unlike earlier versions President Carter resisted as inflationary, this one would not require the administration to take any specific job-creating steps to reach the goal.

Instead, the compromise worked out in protracted negotiations with congressional sponsors would merely establish the target, then authorize but not mandate new programs to achieve it.

The unemployment rate is now 7 percent of the work force.

A 4 percent overall unemployment rate would work out to a 3 percent rate for all adults over age 19.

Sources emphasized Wednesday that the agreement is only tentative among negotiators, and has not been approved formally either by the president or by the dozen or so labor, civil rights and other outside groups supporting the Humphrey-Hawkins legislation. The bill is sponsored by Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey, D-Minn., and Rep. Augustus F. Hawkins, D-Calif.

The sponsoring groups will be briefed on the compromise Thursday at a meeting of the Full Employment Action Council, which is acting as a lobbying center for the legislation. Key members of the congressional Black Caucus, another major sponsor, were informed of the proposal Wednesday.

Even with these qualifications, the tentative pact marked the first basic agreement between the two sides since the negotiations began early last spring. Carter endorsed the bill reluctantly during the 1976 presidential campaign at the insistence of the Black Caucus, then then shied away from openly supporting it.

The 4 percent unemployment target and the five years allowed for attaining it were the two major sticking-points that had prevented agreement earlier in the negotiations. The 1976 version of the bill provided for a 3.8 percent overall jobless target within four years.

The jobless rate in the United States edged back up to 7 percent in October, marking the seventh month in a row that unemployment has remained at about that level. Moreover, the unemployment rate among blacks has been rising in recent months, despite earlier stimulus efforts.

Endorsement of the legislation by the president would be a major victory for the Black Caucus and other liberals. Supporters have been seeking a White House endorsement for the bill for months, but other observers have scoffed that their goal was unrealistic.

In the face of mounting pressure, Carter pledged in September he would support a compromise version of the bill within 10 days. The negotiations then proved more difficult than expected, but sources said Wednesday the final version involved concessions by both sides.

Along with the unemployment timetable, the bill would contain these elements:

—Establishment of a companion anti-inflation target, with a provision that the White House could not alter either the price or job goals without specific congressional approval.

—A requirement that Carter make annual reports to Congress on the progress the government is making toward the goals. The first report would be due a year after the legislation passes.

—Language guaranteeing, in principle, that every American has a "right" to a job. However, this clause would lose some of the emphasis it had in the earlier version, since the government would not be required to provide work for everyone.

While the final negotiations were going on, the president met Wednesday with members of the Black Caucus. But the subject of the meeting, called at Carter's initiative, was American policy toward South Africa and the Humphrey-Hawkins legislation was not even mentioned.

Rep. Parren J. Mitchell, D-Md., chairman of the caucus, told reporters at the White House that the president has not given his final blessing to the Humphrey-Hawkins compromise. But he added that he has "every reasonable expectation" that Carter will approve the legislation once it finally reaches his desk.

While they did not mention Humphrey-Hawkins, Mitchell said the caucus members raised the issue of black unemployment during their 45-minute meeting at the White House with the president.

"It is clear that the (administration's) efforts have not even begun to dent the unemployment that racks our community," Mitchell said.

Mitchell said the caucus members asked Carter to examine how existing government programs could be expanded and accelerated to deal with "the crisis of unemployment in the black community." He said the president was openly skeptical of a claim by the caucus that there is a $1 billion shortfall in spending for existing programs, but promised to have his staff investigate it.

Return of Hungarian crown meets opposition

By SUSANNA MCBEE
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — President Carter met Wednesday with opponents of his decision to return the Crown of St. Stephen to Hungary and told them that while he understood their concern, he intended to go ahead with the plan.

Administration sources said Carter joined a White House meeting between Vice President Walter F. Mondale and a 15-member delegation that had come to discuss the plan to return the 1,000-year-old relic, the symbol of Hungarian sovereignty which came into American hands for safekeeping at the end of World War II.

Carter told the visitors, not all of whom were against his proposal, that despite criticisms of the regime of Hungarian leader Janos Kadar, the Hungarian people need to have a symbol of their heritage.

He said he feared the crown would become "a distant memory" if it remained in this country.

The pesident stressed that the return would not reflect this nation's endorsement of communism. "I deplore communism," Carter reportedly said.

Carter said he had not decided how or when the crown should be given back and asked the group for its advice, sources said.

About 200 Hungarian-Americans and their supporters demonstrated against the return in front of the Capitol and then crowded into the standing-room-only hearing called by the House International Relations Subcommittee on Europe and the Middle East to discuss Carter's plan, which became known last week.

Most of the spectators cheered as Rep. Mary Rose Oakar, D-Ohio, said the present Hungarian regime "is not a government worthy of receiving this sacred crown."

Oakar, who represents a large Hungarian-American constituency in Cleveland, recalled that Carter said during a campaign debate with then-President Ford last year that people in several Eastern European countries, including Hungary, were under Soviet domination.

By proposing to return the crown, "the president appears to be repudiating his own human rights policy insofar as the Eastern Europeans are concerned," she said.

At the end of her testimony Oakar asked two colleagues to display a pre-1945 red, white and green Hungarian flag with the nation's coat of arms topped by the famed crown in the center. "When the Communists took over, they replaced the crown and coat of arms with the hammer and sickle," she remarked. The crowd booed the Soviet symbol.

AT&T says investigation of book 'short-lived'

By WILLIAM H. JONES
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — American Telephone & Telegraph Co. undertook an investigation earlier this year into the origins of a book highly critical of the giant utility.

Spokesmen for AT&T Tuesday night confirmed that a short-lived probe was begun and then dropped after the company purchased the book and determined that it lacked "proprietary information" promised in an advertisement.

In another development, informed sources said the Federal Communications Commission is looking into an attempt by AT&T's Washington subsidiary to bar former agency lawyers from participating in legal cases involving the nation's largest corporation.

The book at issue is "The Future of AT&T," published late last year by Victor Schnee and Walter J. Gorkiewicz, who are selling it for $750 a copy.

According to AT&T spokesmen, when an advertisement for the book was published in The Wall Street Journal, a security officer at Bell System headquarters in New York noticed a claim that the publication would contain proprietary or private company information about AT&T.

The company's security officer, identified as Ray Ryan, subsequently asked representativs of New Jersey Bell Telephone Co., in Newark, to look into the matter. Ryan since has taken a new job with AT&T.

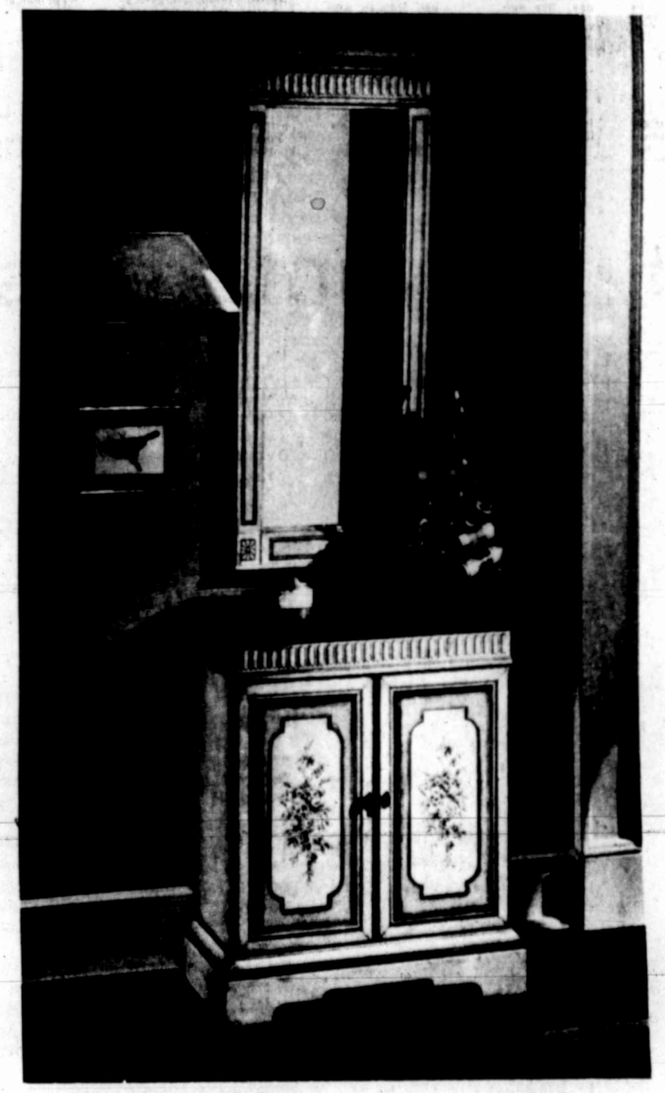

Pete Hoffman, general news manager of New Jersey Bell (an AT&T subsidiary), said Tuesday night that his firm received a note from Ryan on Feb. 8, asking: "What did we know about it?" New Jersey Bell was contacted because the firm publishing the book, Probe Research, Inc., had a Millburn, N.J., address.

On March 1, Hoffman said New Jersey Bell security department investigator James Arnold started to pursue the case and made a telephone call to the home of Probe Research circulation manager Rita Tannenbaum.

Hoffman said Arnold reached Tannenbaum's husband and began asking questions about the book and asked if he could visit the Tannenbaum residence, which also has a Probe Research business telephone.

Tannenbaum declined to be interviewed personally. Later, according to Hoffman, Rita Tannenbaum called the New Jersey Bell investigator and discussed the book.

Fed chairman stands behind constriction of money growth

By HOBART ROWEN
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Arthur F. Burns, whose continuation as chairman of the Federal Reserve past next January remains in doubt, Wednesday announced new moves to curb the expansion of the money supply.

In what may have been his final appearance before the Senate Banking Committee, Burns defended the Fed's decision to push up short-term interest rates, a development that Carter advisers say has weakened the stock market.

Burns scoffed at this theory, attributing the stock market decline and anxiety in the business community, instead, to "the multiplicity" of Carter initiatives. He said he was "deeply concerned" about reports that President Carter had been considering reducing the special tax break allowed for capital gains.

Burns flatly denied, in the course of a friendly examination by Sen. Harrison H. Schmitt, R-N.M., that there had been any "confrontation" between himself and the Carter administration.

"That's the product of journalistic imagination," Burns said, "and I pay almost no attention to it." He added that he hoped the president also paid no attention to such stories.

Burns' policies have been openly criticized by Economic Council Chairman Charles L. Schultze, who says that a further increase in short-term interest rates, up a full 2 percent since early this year, could — if the process continues — weaken the economy next year.

Burns Wednesday revealed that the policy-making Federal Open Market Committee (FOMC) on Oct. 18 had retained a target of 4.0 to 6.5 p rcent for growth in the basic money supply (cash and checking accounts), but had lowered by one-half point targets for broader measures that include savings deposits at commercial banks and thrift institutions.

A "crucial consideration" in lowering these targets for money growth through September 1978 is "to re-affirm (the committee's) intent of gradually bringing down the growth of the monetary aggregates to rates compatible with reasonable price stability," Burns testified.

Since money supply has expanded well over the level promised in the old targets, Burns critics say that a real effort to hold growth within the new range will inevitably push interest rates sharply higher.

House Banking Committee Chairman Henry S. Reuss, D-Wisc., commented that if Burns actually carries out the announced new policy, "the economy would be thrown into another recession."

Although Burns did not directly mention reports that the administration is considering a new stimulus program for 1978 to counter a sagging economy, he warned against "conventional" actions to encourage recovery.

"Simply opening up the monetary faucets or spewing out funds from the Treasury does not seem a promising course in view of the widespread concerns that now exist — particularly in the business and financial communities," Burns said.

Later, he told reporters that any tax cut in 1978 should place "emphasis" on tax cuts for businesses, "because that is where it's needed most." Such a reduction would mean that economic activity "will actually accelerate as 1978 unfolds," he said.

Burns admitted that there had been a divergence of views in recent months on how to grapple with the economy, a split that had even brought two dissents from the 12 members of the FOMC.

But the "dominant" view of the Fed, he told the committee, is that the recent economic pause is giving way to renewed expansion, although "judgments about the more distant future are much more tentative."

He predicted that the Gross National Product would grow by 4.5 percent, inflation would be around 6.0 to 6.5 percent and unemployment would remain "sticky" at around 6.5 percent next year, unless new policies are adopted. These estimates are roughly the same as unofficial guesses within the Carter administration.

Burns and Senate Banking Chairman William Proxmire jockeyed inconclusively on whether short-term interest rates should or would increase beyond the present level, which has hit between federal funds rate, the rate at which member banks borrow from each other, 6 5/8 percent.

Israel pares request for jet fighters

WASHINGTON (AP) — Israel, hoping to boost its fighting power with squadrons of new American jets, has trimmed its request for 250 F-16s to 150.

The government of Prime Minister Menahem Begin, moving to ensure the sale, is also backpedaling on a request to share in the plane's production.

Even so, the Carter administration has not decided whether to equip the already powerful Israeli air force with the light fighter planes, considered more than a match for Soviet jets in Arab hands. But the Israelis' concession on "co-production" could lead to a deal.

Administration officials acknowledge that, in principle, Israel is entitled to a non-specified number of F-16s once they begin rolling off assembly lines.

But in the Pentagon, and among some North Atlantic Treaty Organization allies, there is considerable skepticism about sharing advanced technology with the young Israeli defense industry.

Initially, interviews with a number of sources disclosed, Israel sought 250 planes. But a defense team sent here a month ago by the new government in Jerusalem cut the request to a more acceptable 150 or so.

Still, the touchier issue is joint production.

The old Labor government of Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin advised the Carter administration in May that it was willing to separate the delivery decision from co-production.

The Israelis hoped this would speed shipment of the planes while high-level officials wrestled with sharing sophisticated techniques with a country that is trying to become a major arms supplier itself, partly to boost an economy weakened by the nation's security concerns.

Ex-FBI official maverick

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — William C. Sullivan, once the third-ranking official of the FBI and an outspoken critic of the late J. Edgar Hoover and his policies, was killed in a hunting accident Wednesday near his home in Sugar Hill, N.H. He was 65.

Police said Sullivan was shot while deer hunting in the White Mountains. The hunter accompanying Sullivan was identified as Robert Daniels, about 20, of Lisbon, N.H. The incident was still under investigation Wednesday night and no charges had been filed against Daniels.

William Clarence Sullivan, a farm boy from Boiton, Mass., entered the FBI as a special agent on Aug. 4, 1941. By the time Director Hoover had forced him to retire on Oct. 6, 1971, Sullivan was the assistant to the director for all of the bureau's investigative activities.

His 30 years of service saw enormous changes in the FBI, changes in its place in American government and how it was regarded by some other parts of the government — notably certain sections of Congress — and some sections of the American public.

When Sullivan joined the bureau, the FBI enjoyed enormous prestige as a crime-fighting organization and as the country's first line of defense against Nazis and what it saw as subversives. By the time he left, the Bureau itself was coming under increasing attack for violating the rights of American citizens. Many of these charges have since been substantiated and the myth of Hoover himself has been dismantled.

Sullivan played a role in these transformations, first as a loyal lieutenant of Hoover, who initiated many of the abuses that have been explored by Congress in recent years, and then as a bitter critic of his boss.

In an interview with The Los Angeles Times in 1973, Sullivan called Hoover "a master blackmailer" and suggested that he had lost control of himself before his death. A year later, Sullivan submitted a paper to a meeting of the Roscoe Pound-American Trial Lawyers Foundation in which he said that the FBI, as then organized, posed a threat to the civil liberties of the country.

"The weaknesses of the FBI have always been the leadership in Washington, of which I was a part for 15 years," he wrote. "I accept my share of the blame for its serious shortcomings."

For 10 of the 15 years during which Sullivan described himself as a member of the top leadership of the FBI, he was an assistant director in charge of domestic intelligence operations.

In this capacity, he played a role in numerous abuses by the FBI that have been documented by the Senate intelligence committee headed by Sen. Frank Church, D-Idaho.

Survivors include his wife, Marion, of the home in Sugar Hill, two sons, Andrew and William, also of the home, and a daughter, Mrs. Mark D. Tuttle, of Simsbury, Conn.

Pound regains tradition, but struggle isn't over yet

By JOHN CUNNIFF
AP Business Analyst

NEW YORK (AP) — In the centers of international monetary exchange, where vigilance sometimes erupts into near panic, they were kissing goodbye to the British pound sterling a year ago.

Britain, it was felt, was consuming itself in economic squabbles, wasting its assets, spending itself bankrupt, doing little to stop the postwar drift that had floated the island nation onto the shoals.

No matter that Britain was keeping its head high like a proud gentleman. That wouldn't silence millions of investment and strike. The weeds were frayed, and everyone noticed. Merry madness, they called it.

At the beginning of 1976 a pound would fetch you two American dollars. Later in the year it would get you only $1.55, and the betting among some traders was that it would soon translate into even fewer greenbacks and dimes.

A year later the sky is falling. The pound buoyant against the dollar, at least. It is rising like cork in battle, reaching about $1.82 last week. And currency traders were singing, "There'll always be England."

What changed? Is North Sea oil seems to have done for Britain what rain does for a shallow farmer. Oil is pouring into Britain, and money reacts to oil like bees to nectar.

Industry is taking notice, too. Ford Motor has decided to invest more than $200 million in a new plant in Wales after having considered sites in other countries.

Citibank thinks some other more subtle factors underlie the changed attitude toward the pound, one of them being that the British people and their leaders give indications of finally having had it with inflation.

True, the rate for the past year has been something around 15 percent. But the projections are better. Merrill Lynch Economics expects the rate to average only 11 percent for 1978.

Perhaps even more important, although it is also a corollary of falling inflation, is the projection for real growth in gross national product.

Officials scurry in try to stop more unsafe dams from bursting

By GAYLORD SHAW
The Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON — Senior White House advisers Wednesday urged President Carter to immediately order federal inspection of the nation's most hazardous private dams in an effort to prevent such disasters as Sunday's Georgia dam collapse, the Los Angeles Times learned.

After bouncing around in the bureaucracy for months, an option paper on dam safety reached Carter's Oval Office Wednesday as the grieving northeast Georgia community of Toccoa began burying the 38 residents killed when an earthern dam collapsed on a mountain above a sleeping college campus.

Sources said Carter was expected to instruct the U.S. Corps of Engineers within the next several days to begin inspecting private dams rated as posing serious threats to populations downstream. He also was expected to order policy initiatives to prod states without dam safety programs to implement inspection systems, the sources said.

Meanwhile, there were these other developments in the aftermath of the disaster:

—A nationally recognized expert on dam safety, Dr. Bruce A. Tschantz of the University of Tennessee, warned in an interview with The Times that "many, many more of these dams" could collapse unless dam owners join with state and federal governments to ensure their safety. "We have a moral obligation to at least inspect these dams and do something about them if they are unsafe," Tschantz said.

—An interagency study of how the federal government inspects its 5,000 big dams will be completed within a few days, sources reported, and will recommend a series of reforms to improve safety. When Carter ordered this study last spring he set an Oct. 1 deadline, but the committee obtained a since-expired one-month extension.

Authorities say the mountain-top dam, owned by Toccoa Falls College, apparently had never been inspected by government or private safety engineers. Georgia has no state dam safety program, but in the three days since the disaster it has started a crash program to implement one.

Congress five years ago authorized the Corps of engineers to undertake a national program to inspect private dams such as the one in Georgia, yet no dams were ever inspected because the Nixon and Ford administrations did not seek funds to start the program.

This summer, Congress took the initiative and voted $15 million to begin federal inspections. In late June, several sources told The Times, members of Carter's domestic policy staff decided a change in federal policy was needed to implement the U.S. inspection program, and drafted a policy paper.

For months, the sources said, that paper was lodged in the middle levels of the Office of Management and Budget, the arm of the White House that directs federal spending. "It just never went anywhere," one administration official said. "It was simply ignored because of the press of other business."

Last week, higher-level OMB officials sought to accelerate processing of the policy paper, the sources said, and by Sunday, when the dam collapsed, it was in its final stages. It was rushed to completion and sent to Carter on Wednesday.

Even if federal action had been taken sooner, authorities say it probably would not have averted the Toccoa Falls disaster because the $15 million will provide only a limited start on the enormous task of inspecting the nation's 45,000 large private dams.

Officials said Carter probably will instruct the corps to concentrate on selected dams believed to be unsafe, especially those above populated regions, while seeking to encourage states to start, or upgrade, programs to regulate safety of private dams.

Georgia is one of eight states with no dam safety laws. Most other states have at least limited programs, but only California has what experts regard as an adequate state inspection and safety enforcement program.

In a telephone interview from his Knoxville campus office, Tschantz said, "The Toccoa tragedy illustrates what I've been saying for five or 10 years — that there are a number of structures of this type which have been left to neglect."

Despite objections, NASA delegation traveling to Moscow for more talks

By NICHOLAS C. CHRISS
The Los Angeles Times

HOUSTON — An 18-member delegation, consisting of NASA officials, university professors and State Department personnel, is leaving for Moscow this week to explore the possibility of another joint space effort.

NASA officials in Washington, and at the Johnson Space Center here, confirmed the talks would take place, adding that the American delegates will "rendezvous" first in Paris before proceeding onto Moscow for the discussions.

The trip came as a surprise to many observers of the nation's space program. The talks will take place Nov. 14-17 and will be extended periodically over an 18-24 month period, a spokesman said. He added that NASA was releasing details of the trip Wednesday. The delegates are leaving Friday.

The United States and the Soviet Union conducted a $150 billion joint space mission in July, 1975. It was called the Apollo-Soyuz Test Project.

The mission was heavily criticized in editorials and by some space program insiders on grounds that the Russians gained much more from the flight than the Americans, and because it gave them an inside view of the superior U.S. space technology.

Proponents of the flight, however, said that it enabled the two countries to develop and use a compatible rendezvous and docking system which could one day be used as a space rescue capability.

In a recently published book, former astronaut Walt Cunningham, who talked to his fellow astronauts and NASA officials about the joint mission, wrote: "Let me say this as fairly and gently and diplomatically as I can: In terms of who gained what from the Apollo-Soyuz mission we were had!"

Included in the delegation are two professors, Dr. Gerald Wasserburg of the California Institute of Technology, who has long been active in cooperation with the nation's space program, and Charles Kennel, of the University of California at Los Angeles. There will also be two interpreters, a secretary, three State Department officials. The rest are NASA officials. The delegation will be headed by Noel Hinners, NASA's associate administrator for space science.

According to some NASA sources, the impetus for the new talks came when a delegation of the Soviet Academy of Sciences stopped in Washington last fall. Some of these sources, long disenchanted with the results of the Apollo-Soyuz mission, said they have believed for some time that the Soviets would attempt to revive joint space efforts because they had much more to gain from them.

They point out that at the end of the Apollo-Soyuz mission, despite efforts by the United States to learn the complete details of the Soyuz flight, the Soviets revealed that they had six experiments on board their space craft that the Americans did not even know about.

Last May, NASA issued a press release which announced that the U.S. and the U.S.S.R. Academy of Sciences had agreed on further cooperation in the area of manned space flight.

The announcement said the idea was to "provide continuity of the joint technical, scientific and operational capabilities developed through the highly successful Apollo-Soyuz rendezvous and docking mission of July, 1975."

It said that there would be three U.S.-U.S.S.R. joint working groups which would prepare recommendations for new programs dealing with orbital manned flight activities, with the possibility of a future international space station, as well as a conceptual design of a space platform.

Rare wines found

ALBANY, N.Y. (AP) — A cache of rare, 19th century wine has been unearthed in the cellar of a Revolutionary-era mansion here, but an expert says it must be examined to determine whether it is "priceless treasure or dust."

Alex McNally, international wine manager at Heublein Inc., said he was astounded when he first squeezed past the jammed doors of the musty wine cellar of the 180-year-old Ten Broeck Mansion, now owned by the Albany County Historical Association.

There he found 30 unopened cases of 26 bottles each. Among them were such rarities as Chateau Mouton-Rothschild 1875, Chateau Lafite 1868 and 1870 and Chambertin 1875.

McNally described the cache as "the largest and most important collection of 19th century, golden age vintages ever discovered in America."

He likened the discovery to the uncovering of King Tutankhamen's tomb in the 1920s and said the wine had great potential value.

The cache was to be shipped to Heublein's wine warehouse in East Hartford, Conn., for further inspection. The best of the collection will be offered for sale at Heublein's national auction of rare wines next May in Atlanta, McNally said.

Proceeds from the sale will be used to continue restoration of the mansion, which was built in 1797 for Abraham Ten Broeck, a Revolutionary War general from Albany's Dutch community.

The cases will be opened at Heublein's East Hartford facility, and each bottle will be examined individually, McNally said.

CORRECTION

In the Sears Holiday Sale Circular this week the heading for the blankets on page 10 read "save 25%". It should read "Save 14% to 25%". On page 22 the heading "15.99 Inductive Timing Light" Should have read" 15.99 D. C. Powered Timing Light". We regret these errors. There will be a two week delay in shipping the womans Phasar watch on page 6 and some of the boys turtle necks on page 5. Rain checks will be given.

Carter cancels trip, taxpayers pick up tab for $100,000

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — The government spent well in excess of $100,000 during the last several weeks preparing for President Carter's ill-fated trip to nine countries which has now been postponed.

This cost estimate is based on figures, supplied by the government, on the expenses incurred in transporting a so-called "pre-advance" party of White House and other government officials along the same route the President was to follow.

The pre-advance group for Carter's foreign trip left Washington Oct. 24. They traveled to each of the nine cities on four continents, covering 25,000 miles aboard one of the two Air Force jets normally used by the President. They returned to Washington Monday night after 15 days of travel.

It is likely that much of the cost of this trip — which probably totaled more than $150,000 — will just have to be written off by the government. If and when Carter reschedules his planned journey, additional pre-advance work will have to be done, White House officials conceded Tuesday.

A pre-advance group always precedes a presidential trip to begin handling the thousands of details involved in any such journey. It is made up of officials from various government agencies involved in presidential travel — the Secret Service, military aides, communications specialists, and the White House press, scheduling, advance, transportation and television offices.

A number of State Department officials also were included in the pre-advance group since the president's planned trip involved dealing with foreign governments.

By far, the largest expense for the pre-advance group that just returned was the operation of its aircraft, a Boeing 707 decorated with the presidential seal. The trip took 54 hours of flight time, costing more than $125,000.

This is based on figures, supplied by the White House, that it costs slightly more than $2,300-an-hour to operate Air Force One. However, an airline industry official said Tuesday that the actual cost for the Carter pre-advance trip undoubtedly was much more since aviation fuel is considerably more expensive overseas than it is in the United States.

In addition, the American party — numbering about 40, including the crew of the airplane — was entitled to travel expenses totaling an average of about $2,500 a day. For the 15 days, the group, according to State Department per diem rates for overseas travel, probably spent about $40,000 for hotels, meals and other expenses.

These costs do not include whatever expenses were incurred by American embassies in the nine countries that the group visited.

The government will recoup part of the cost of the trip by billing transportation costs to nine officials of U.S. television networks and communications firms that went along on the trip to beginning planning media coverage of the President overseas.

White House officials, protective of Carter's image of frugality and a nonimperial presidency, were reluctant to discuss the pre-advance expenses.

Allison, pair buy Alpine newspaper

ALPINE — Jim Allison Jr., publisher of The Midland Reporter-Telegram, and Bill Brooks and Bob Dillard, both of Alpine, signed an agreement Wednesday to purchase the Alpine Avalanche.

Allison, Brooks and Dillard formed Far West Texas Publications Inc., and purchased the newspaper from Alpine Publications Inc.

Dillard will serve as editor of the publication, and Brooks will be business manager.

Dillard said they hoped to open an office in Fort Davis, which has no newspaper.

"We will be starting several new items, which have never been done before on this paper, including a sports page, an agricultural page, business page, editorial page and Estilos de Vida, which is a women's lifestyle-type page," Dillard said.

"We also will be expanding it to some areas never before covered," he said.

Dillard, who attended Baylor University and The University of Texas at Arlington, previously worked for the Texas-Pacific Railroad and the Fort Worth Press. He has been a sports writer. He was born in Tyler and grew up in Corpus Christi and Fort Worth.

Brooks is a former Army intelligence officer who was stationed in Washington, D.C., and Vietnam during his eight years in the Army. He studied at The Univeristy of Texas at El Paso. Previously, Brooks was executive officer for General Letter Service. He also owns Territorial Printers of Alpine.

Allison, who resides in Midland, also is publisher of daily newspapers in Plainview and Borger.

He currently is treasurer of the Texas Daily Newspaper Association. He is a former president of the West Texas Press Association, the Midland Chamber of Commerce, Midland Jaycees and the United Way of Midland. In 1961 he was named one of Texas' Five Outstanding Young Men.

Two weary pilots feast after setting world record

CORTEZ, Colo. (AP) — Two weary pilots who teamed to set a round-the-world flight record in a 13-year-old airplane dined on roast goat at a homecoming dinner in their honor.

Jack Rodd, a private flyer for 35 years, and Harold "Ben" Benham, a fighter pilot veteran of three wars, circled the globe in an unofficial time of 11 days, 23 minutes, bettering the old mark for single-engine, piston-driven planes by one day, three hours and six minutes.

Their time must be officially approved by the Federation Aeronautique Internationale.

Handicapped aid study under way

ODESSA — A three-year project aimed at helping the handicapped help themselves is under way at The University of Texas of the Permian Basin.

Dr. John Boelter, assistant professor of physical education, is examining physical performance patterns of severely disabled wheelchair victims as compared to able bodied persons.

Under a grant-in-aid from the University of Houston, the study will help to develop more sufficient training and conditioning programs for the disabled, Boelter said.

Boelter is studying the performance of handicapped persons in Houston engaged in recreational sports.

He said that when a wheelchair patient is released from a hospital or institution, there is little if any outpatient therapy. The patient is on his own to learn urban mobility, or the ability to get around in town and in traffic, Boelter said.

Boelter also is looking at the performance of several local handicapped persons.

He has recommended training and conditioning programs in Odessa and in Houston. The programs are being monitored to see if those involved are getting better use of their limbs.

"Eventually, at one time or another, all of us will be disabled to some extent, if only temporarily. The research I am doing is practical rather than theoretical, and will eventually apply to almost everyone," Boelter said.

Lee's debate, drama students place third

The Lee High School debate and drama students placed third out of 38 schools in sweepstakes competition at a tournament recently at Churchill High School in San Antonio.

Placing in the tournament were: Pat Harris, first place in girls extemporaneous speaking and third place in oratory, and David Kloessel, second place in boys prose.

Semifinalists were: Mike Shaunessy, boys extemporaneous speaking; Jill Hawley, Tricia Munson, and Laura Snell, girls extemporaneous speaking; Craig Stanford, and Bruce McConnell, boys prose; Liz Shrode, girls prose; Tim Norman, Jim Reiter, and Laura Snell, original oratory; Craig Stanford, humorous interpretation, and Allyson Slyker, girls' poetry.

Coaches at Lee are Maridell Fryar and Horace Griffin.

State wins verdict

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — The Texas Supreme Court today rejected a suit by 11 bridge companies which claimed the state owed them nearly $400,000 for the extra cost of being forced to repaint bridges in 10 counties.

The companies argued that the paint sold them by the highway department — a "zinc rich" type known as "primer paint" — peeled from the bridges because it was defective.

The department contended the paint peeled because the companies failed to meet the cleaning and painting specifications in their contracts with the state.

An engineer determined that "work deficiencies" were to blame, not the paint.

The companies were required to repaint unsatisfactory sections of 20 bridges in Harris, Fort Bend, Waller, Washington, Tarrant, Dallas, Navarro, Henderson, Wharton and El Paso Counties.

They sued for $315,337, plus interest, and $60,000 in legal fees.

DR. NEIL SOLOMON
Better see ear doctor

Dear Dr. Solomon: I have a great deal of trouble with my hearing, and I think that pretty soon I'm just going to have to get a hearing aid, much as I hate to give in to such a thing. What do you think would be the best way of going about this, if I do decided to do it? I want to be sure I get good advice and get fitted properly, because hearing aids are so expensive and I don't have money to throw away. — Helen F.

Dear Helen: The best way to begin is by having a thorough examination of your hearing impairment, if you have not already done this. The person most qualified to do the examination is a doctor who specializes in ear diseases. Your regular doctor may, in turn sends you to a specialist called an audiologist. for further evaluation, or directly to a dealer with a prescription for a specific aid. He will also give you a written statement saying that your condition has been medically evaluated and that you are a candidate for a hearing aid — provided, of course, that you are.

Under the Food and Drug Administration's new regulations, dispensers cannot sell a hearing aid without this statement, unless the purchaser signs a waiver. The FDA has taken this action because in some instances, people were being sold hearing aids when, in face they should have been receiving needed medical treatment or surgery.

There are a growing number of clinics and professional centers devoted to hearing troubles. Also, an increasing number of states are requiring that hearing aid dealers be licensed, which provides you added insurance.

In any case, when and if you do get your hearing aid, you will have two kinds to choose from. One is worn in the ear. The other rests against the bone behind the ear.

Best of luck.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My father is pretty much confined to a wheelchair now. He had always been so active that he keeps wondering if there are not at least some exercises he could do, just to keep from getting completely rusty. Do you know what would be helpful? — Geraldine R.

Dear Geraldine. There is a little booklet called "Exercises While You Watch TV" that infludes routines to tone up the muscles and imporve circulation and digestion. It is designed for people exactly like you father, and it has iffustrations and charts, so everything is very easy to follow. The booklet has been recommended for handicapped persons by the National Institutes of Health, so that is an extra plus. You can get a copy by sending $1.25 to Sickroom Services, Inc., 2534 S. Kinnickinnic Ave., Milwaukee, Wis. 53207.

Earl Butz still telling his story

Life for the former secretary of agriculture is almost as busy, but much quieter. No longer hounded by the critics of his days of influence in the White House, he travels around the country and uses his own radio program to preach the gospel of conservative government.

At 68 — "I'm a young 68, a vigorous 68, but I'm 68" — Butz still appears hearty and relaxed, just as he did even in the days when his brand of humor sent tremors through Republican administrations in Washington. He is still quick with a joke and still adamant in his defense of private enterprise.

If anything, the difference in his life today is reflected in his surroundings. Rather than a plush Washington office, Butz now works out of a modest room in Purdue University's Department of Agricultural Economics.

The only evidence of his days in Washington is a large color photograph of Butz, former President Gerald R. Ford and three other men relaxing in shirtsleeves aboard Air Force One. It is autographed by Ford to a "super secretary of agriculture."

This is where Butz works, only about 10 hours a week, as dean emeritus of agriculture at Purdue, "which means I'm in retirement, which means I'm not getting paid anything."

Butz spent almost 31 years of his life here as a professor, department chairman and dean, and it is here that he seems most at ease.

A year away from the daily crises and crowded schedules of Washington, Butz teaches an occasional class, criss-crosses the country speaking to business, civic or political groups or does what he always said he intended to do when he retired — spend time with Mrs. Butz.

Finding time to spend with his wife, he said, "is still a problem." He probably spends more time on the road now than he did when he was secretary of agriculture.

He said 200 would "be in the ball park" for the number of speeches he has made in the last year, and he's accepting probably no more than a quarter of the invitations.

He is paid for most of the appearances, the exceptions being Indiana groups "who are used to getting me for free in the state for 40 years."

Honorariums for Indiana speeches, ranging from $100 to $1,000, are donated to the Earl Butz Scholarship Fund for Purdue agricultural students. Money for out-of-state appearances, varying up to $3,000, "is something else. They belong to me," Butz said.

Butz believes he is more in demand because of the circumstances surrounding his resignation in October 1976.

He insists he's not bitter about the way he left Washington — amid a hail of controversy stirred by the disclosure that he had made an off-color racial remark on a flight back to Washington from the Republican National Convention in Kansas City.

His only mistake, he said, was telling it in the presence of John Dean, former President Richard M. Nixon's aide whose testimony before a Senate committee exposed the Watergate coverup. Dean was writing a story on the convention for a national magazine.

In retrospect, Butz said that controversy "had a plus bearing. It made a martyr of me," especially in the Farm Belt.

Butz worries that the Democratic-controlled Congress and the Carter Administration are moving backward, building up reserves again, cutting wheat production 20 percent and withdrawing from the world markets. Those actions, Butz is convinced, will eventually depress farm prices again.

He is spreading his message not just in speeches, but in a daily five-minute radio program syndicated out of Los Angeles by the same firm that handles Ronald Reagan's show. In the first month, Butz said, his program was picked up by 50 stations.

The pattern — speaking tours, political fund-raisers, a radio program — is one followed by many, such as Reagan, pursuing higher ambitions.

Upkeep must be considered if you rent your home

By VIVIAN BROWN
AP Newsfeatures

Some homeowners fail to consider depreciation when they decide to offer their homes for rent. An owner must keep a good sum available for home repairs and emergency problems — big things like water pumps, boilers and water tanks. A hurricane also can do a lot of damage to roofs. But often it is little things that add up to a big cash outlay.

One family had been renting their former residence for a decade as they lived in another area of the country. When a vacancy coincided with their own vacation period, they decided to move back for a few months and refurbish the house.

It became an expensive fixup, clean-up, paint-up, even though they did a lot of the work. Through the years they kept up with appliance problems, but they assumed that tenants were keeping the place maintained. In reality many inconveniences were being tolerated, and maintenance had fallen behind. Some tenants fear a rent increase if they ask for service or new equipment.

To begin with, there was a $5,500 paint job for the 5-bedroom house, indoors and outdoors. Because no tenant had put up the storm windows which had been in a closet through the years, the windows had taken "quite a beating" and a lot of puttying and trim work had to be done, an expensive, time-consuming job. "And why in the world wouldn't tenants use storm windows in these days of high-cost energy?" asked the owner. It may not have been laziness, it may well have been ignorance.

The kitchen needed a major scrubbing, especially the ceiling which was heavily coated with grease, and three coats of paint were needed to cover the dark green walls, even after several washdowns. A bath wall needed a tile job because tiles had fallen off during the years and had not been replaced. Dogs may have had free reign in the house and several floors needed to be scraped and refinished. Weeds had come up around bricks on the large patio and a big job was required in that area using weed killer and realigning bricks.

As this owner pointed out, "You can't do a half-way job if you own a house. You must either do repairs regularly and keep everything in condition or you must be prepared to spend larger sums when you get around to general deterioration." That family opts for a regular checkup when a lease is renewed.

Owners of resort houses may have such problems compounded. A variety of tenants throughout a season can make a home particularly vulnerable to disrepair and even abuse. Some people are untidy, but others simply cannot cope wih simple household equipment. Owners should have directions for the operation of each thing pasted on the appliance itself.

In one house at the end of a renting season, there was a non-working self-cleaning oven; a range that didn't bake unless you were clued to turn the handle slightly to the right; the dishwasher knob had fallen off and needed to be replaced; a plastic door shelf in the refrigerator looked as if it had been smashed with a mallet, and its freezer section had a back panel which didn't quite meet its side panel.

Some problems may have been due merely to faulty equipment, one tenant said. But some problems may well have been due to a succession of tenants who simply did not know how things worked or should be used. A trash compactor was a challenge that no one had accepted — it was unused.

In that house, too, windows were propped open with pieces of wood and tenants were threatened with finger injury when they removed props and windows crashed down. Only the window glass took the brunt — many of the small, old panes had been smashed.

Five nabbed in raids

DANBURY, Conn. (AP) — Authorities Wednesday made the largest confiscation of marijuana in state history, between 1,300 and 1,500 pounds with a street value estimated at $650,000, state police said.

Five persons were arrested about 3:15 a.m.

The largest marijuana confiscation previously was about 1,000 pounds, police said.

State and federal drug agents arrested three Texas men and one Michigan man on charges of sale and possession of marijuana, and a Texas woman was charged with conspiracy to sell marijuana, police said.

The arrests resulted from an investigation of smuggling of cocaine and marijuana out of South America and Mexico and what authorities believe to be major distributors throughout the Midwest, police said.

James E. Stinson, also known as James W. Sutter, 30, and Robert A. MacKay, 30, both of Alvin, Texas, were arrested at the Holiday Inn on Route 6, police said. Mark HX. Ellis, 24, also of Alvin, and James R. Shelly, 36, of Lansing, Mich., were arrested at a Howard Johnson's motel on Federal Road, police said.

Mary Ann St. Onge, 27, of Houston, was arrested at a Howard Johnson's in Stratford and was held on a $25,000 bond at state police barracks in Westport pending her court appearance in Common Pleas Court in Bridgeport today, police said.

The four men were to appear in Common Pleas Court in Danbury today.

Odessa concert group brings in top talent with harp ensemble

ODESSA — The Odessa Civic Concert Association, while apparently not blessed with an over-lavish budget or an over-large membership, nevertheless often comes up with exceptional entertainment.

Such was the case Tuesday night when the New York Harp Ensemble played for association members and their guests — it was, indeed, exceptional entertainment.

I can only wish that more members of the Midland Community Concerts Association (who have reciprocal attendance privileges with the Odessa association) had availed themselves of this rare opportunity to hear not just one, not two or three, but four skilled harpists performing in ensemble, and providing some of the lushest, loveliest sounds imaginable. For that matter, I could wish also that more members of the Odessa association had come out to hear this extraordinary team. But the crowd, although small, certainly was appreciative and quite responsive to the ensemble's artistry.

The New York Harp Ensemble provided a program that was far more than a string of glissandos and arpeggios, much more than mere sounds of rippling waters or musical depictions of forest glades. Its program was a strong one and the team members' collaborative efforts resulted in what amounted almost to a chamber orchestra concert. It was tasteful throughout.

The harpists, who currently are artists-in-residence at New York University, opened their program with a work by a little-known 18th Century composer, Andre Gretry, which was pleasing. They followed with works by three Baroque composers, Johann Pachelbel, Antonio Vivaldi and J. S. Bach, and these presentations were very nearly the high points of the evening. Vivaldi's famous and extremely melodic Concerto in D major was especially well delineated in all its movements by the harpists. The prelude from Bach's Partita No. 3 also had a careful and finely-shaped interpretation by the ensemble.

Another high point of the concert was the group's performance of seven variations on a theme by Archangelo Corelli which was exceptionally well-wrought in all complexities and musical nuances.

The ensemble also offered works by Saint-Saens, Saygun, Frid and Gershwin, and closed with a colorful and lively Spanish dance from Manuel de Falla's opera, "La Vida Breve."

The New York Harp Ensemble, currently winding up a fall concert tour of the U. S., leaves next week on a concert tour of Europe, the Near East and the Orient. The ensemble has made a number of foreign tours since it was organized eight years ago.

Liquid protein diet elicits warning

By MICHAEL PUTZEL

WASHINGTON (AP) — The doctor whose book popularizedthe liquid protein "last chance" diet says his method is still the only effective treatment for obesity, despite government claims that it played a part in the deaths of 10 women.

Dr. Robert Linn, the 43-year old osteopath whose diet book has sold two million copies, said Wednesday he agrees with the Food and Drug Administration that people who embark on his diet should be watched closely by physicians for potentially dangerous complications.

But he said the health risks of obesity outweigh the dangers of the so-called "protein-sparing fast" if it is properly monitored.

FDA Commissioner Donald Kennedy told a news conference Wednesday that government health authorities have "every reason to believe that the liquid protein diet was at least a contributing factor or a cause" in the sudden heart attack deaths of 10 women under age 45.

"We expect to find others," he said. "We only have what we're afraid may be the tip of the iceberg."

Kennedy urged weight-conscious consumers not to go on the liquid protein diet without close supervision by a doctor skilled in its use.

And those now on it, he said, should "get themselves into the hands of a physician" who can spot signs of danger.

Kennedy said warning labels will soon be required on liquid protein bottles. If evidence against the substance continues to mount, he said, "We will use every regulatory tool at hand to get it off the market."

After the news conference, Linn said in a statement issued by his office that he has had no deaths in his own practice, "and further, I understand that when using this obesity treatment properly, several hundred doctors treating several thousand patients have had no deaths."

He also maintained that no other effective treatment exists for the clinically obese, which he called a serious medical problem for one out of every four Americans and "a major risk factor in a number of life-threatening diseases."

He said the FDA's public warning should have a positive benefit, saying the main problem appears to be "with patients monitored minimally by physicians."

Kennedy said, however, that even medical supervision doesn't guarantee the diet is safe. The commissioner said all 10 of those who died after months of modified fasting were under a doctor's supervision.

"Fad diets for weight reduction come and go," the commissioner said. " Most are safe enough for use for short periods by the general public. But the liquid predigested protein diet has real potential dangers."

Uganda pilots may have to leave

WASHINGTON (AP) — A group of Ugandan pilots in Texas for helicopter flight training may lose their visas and be sent home if a State Department review shows that their presence adversely affects United States foreign policy, administration officials say.

The question under review at the State Department is whether the presence of the pilots in the United States "would have serious adverse effects on our foreign policy," the official said.

Meanwhile, Rep. Jim Mattox, D-Texas, called on the State Department and Justice Department to expel the Ugandans training at a Bell Helicopter Co. flight school in Fort Worth and to allow no others into the country.

Mattox said the training of Ugandan pilots is "deplorable," but he blamed the State Department, rather than Bell, because visas were issued to the Ugandans.

He said the department informed him of 24 pilots who received visas for pilot and engineering training, but assured him that future requests for visas by Ugandans would be reviewed at the highest level.

The pilots received their visas Sept. 28. Their courses are scheduled to last four months.

Bell's Washington representative, Jack Doyle, said Thursday that the company sold nine helicopters to Uganda prior to the coup which brought Idi Amin to power in 1971.

He said Bell had planned to sell Amin a Model 214 helicopter but began having "second thoughts" about it this week.

Burial of bandleader musician's last song

By BILL KAUFMAN
Newsday

NEW YORK — Bandleader Guy Lombardo, who for nearly half a century epitomized New Year's Eve, and was a musical status quo for many Americans, was interred Wednesday next to his brother Carmen in the family burial vault in Freeport Long Island.

Skies were overcast as mourners filed into Our Holy Redeemer Church in Freeport to pay their last respects to the man whose style of music had remained virtually unchanged since the late 1920s. Lombardo, 75, died Saturday, suffering from a lung ailment as well as heart and kidney complications. Many of the mourners had waited for more than an hour outside of the Lombardo family church while late-running funeral services were held for someone else.

Lombardo's mahogony coffin was borne inside the church and placed in the center aisle, draped, a few feet from the altar. The Rev. James Hart, assistant pastor of the church, which is less than two miles from Lombardo's waterfront homes, celebrated a Mass of the Resurrection before about 800 persons.

Lombardo was given a 15-minute eulogy by master planner Robert Moses, a longtime family friend and the man who was largely responsible for initiating the bandleader's extravaganzas at the Jones Beach Theater, which have run for the past 24 summers. Reading his eulogy in a matter-of-fact tone, Moses recalled the evolution of Lombardo's colorful shows.

"Guy Lombardo was no ordinary guy," Moses said. "In many a town in the slicks and the sticks, there was only one favorite. . .Guy Lombardo." During the early days of the Jones Beach productions, Moses recalled, some who were critical of the venture felt Lombardo was outdated. "But Guy outsmarted them," he added. "Those of us who are devoted to good, tuneful music, are grateful for Guy."

Lombardo's wife, Lilliebelle, who has difficulty walking, did not attend the mass but appeared later at the cemetery. Among the family members at the church were Lombardo's sisters, Rose Marie and Elaine, Elaine's husband, vocalist Kenny Gardner; and Lombardo's brothers, Lebert, Victor and Joe. The turnout also included Lombardo's entire band, whose bus was parked a block away, ready to take the orchestra to Framingham, Mass., for an engagement, which a family spokesman said would be a memorial concert.

Among the mourners were several music figures, such as bandleaders Sammy Kaye, Phil Harris and Freddy Martin, and actress Julia Meade. Jules Stein, chairman of the board of Music Corp. of America, and a close friend and business associate of Lombardo for many years, was there with Sonny Werblin, chairman of the New Jersey Sport and Exposition Authority.

Following the church service, the funeral cortege of more than 75 automobiles departed for the cemetery. At a brief service moments before the gleaming coffin was lifted into the vault, the Lombardo family, including Lilliebel, listened to the Rev. David M. Burke lead a prayer. "We commend our brother Guy to the Lord," he said. Each immediate family member palced a red rose on the coffine. Then, as it was shoved into the crypt, Lombardo's brother-in-law, Kenny Gardner, walked over and tearfully patted it several times.

Nearby, on Wellwood Avenue, which leads to the cemetery, a large advertising sign in front of a flower shop — the type with changeable letters like those used on theater marquees — boldly read: "Goodbye, Auld Lang Sang."

Sugar supports in works

WASHINGTON (AP) — The only part of the government's new program of supports for the domestic sugar industry that still has to be worked out is a new schedule of minimum wage rates for workers in the sugarbeet and sugarcane fields.

The Agriculture Department established such rates under the old Sugar Act but has had no authority to do so since it expired at the end of 1974.

The new law requiring a sugar price support program, which is being bolstered by higher charges on imported sugar, simply requires a 13.5- cent-a-pound support and a wage schedule, without the "fair prices-fair wages" principles of the old act.

Secretary Bob Bergland has asked for ideas by Nov. 21 from farm workers, labor union representatives, cane and beet farmers and others before setting up the terms and conditions for the minimum wage requirements.

His notice asks those who comment "to keep all of the issues in mind" when recommending rates, operations to be covered, employee classifications and comparable wages for other farming and nearby industrial enterprises.

Rates "fair" to the worker and "reasonable" to the producer will be set, he said. The old program's provisions was geared to producers' sharing with fieldworkers the income the program determined for the crops.

Pool hall hustlers; some finally 'go back to work'

By JOETTE MOFFETT

DALLAS (AP) — Tonight he's in Dallas looking for action.

Tomorrow he might hit Houston or Tulsa.

If he plays his cards right it could be Las Vegas.

The young man was neatly dressed and he walked into the dimly lit room confidently, carrying a leather case. He looked like a professional man because he was, and he had heard Dallas was a city for big-money pool games.

Instinctively the hustler knew which table had a money game. He sized up the spectators as well as the players — one of them would be his mark.

"I just got in from Oklahoma city," the young man said. His name was Tommy. "Are there any shooters in here?"

The spectators sized him up, and baited him with questions.

Finally, Ralph, a grandiose braggart who claims he's the best in the Dallas-Fort Worth area, asked "How much you want to play for?"

The bargaining began. They decided to play even nine-ball for $200 a session. The local product got a backer, or stakehorse.

Tommy's stakehorse, an Oklahoma City bar owner, trailed close behind his protege. Middle-aged and slightly balding, he was resplendent in gold and diamonds and leisure attire.

While the spectators laid down side bets, their girlfriends kept a close eye on the out-of-towner — better looking than most shooters, and the girls don't mind turning a trick to make a buck.

Tommy took his cue stick from its case and slowly assembled it.

A big part of high-stakes pool is the "psyche" job — being cool and confident. Ralph is a hustler too, however. And he's good with "psyche" jobs. "Hey man," he said, "you sure you're up to this?"

Tommy flashed a cocky grin. An hour after his arrival in Big D, his first session had begun.

It is illegal to gamble on pool in 49 of the 50 states. Nevada is the exception.

But that doesn't stop pool shooters from gambling freely with little threat of prosecution. The penalties are so low and the rewards can be so great that it makes little sense to fear hard-to-enforce gambling laws.

"We arrest them when we can catch them at it," said a spokesman for the Dallas Police Department vice squad. "But one of our officers has to actually see the money change hands."

Players in a barroom, who wager $1 or a beer, are much more likely to get caught gambling than the high rollers. When two men are playing for $100 or $500 or even more "they aren't going to throw that kind of money around out in front of people," the police spokesman said.

The maximum fine for gambling — a Class C misdemeanor in Texas — is $250. The stakes on a session of nine-ball quite often surpass that.

An establishment that "condones" gambling can be found guilty of a felony that carries a $5,000 fine and a two-to 10-year sentence for the operator.

Once again, however, "we have to prove that they're aware of the gambling going on," the vice squad officer said.

"We have a sign right up there that expresses our policy," said the manager of Dallas' most popular poolroom for "money games" as he pointed to a "No Gambling Allowed" sign.

"As long as they're not blatant about it, we just let them play," he said. "As far as I'm concerned, there's no gambling going on here."

The young poolroom manager has watched top players from throughout the United States play straight pool, eight-ball, nine-ball or one-pocket games on his front table for hundreds of dollars. He has heard the bets made and seen the money change hands, or watched the hustlers and their backers retire to the adjoining gameroom for their payoffs.

He knows that when there's illegal gambling on a pool game, there's almost always something else illegal going on.

When a hustler isn't shooting, he's playing poker or betting on football games. Maybe he's the local bookie.

When he is shooting, he may take amphetamines or "speed" to stay awake for all-night sessions. "The first time I ever shot speed," one player said, "I was losing about $200 to this guy. The fella that was backing me took me into the bathroom and said 'Look, I'll go one more session, but you gotta do this first. You're dragging out there.'

"So he ran that stuff in my arm, and I went back out there an won his money back. I felt great."

The same shooter said that when he's been down on his luck, he has turned to theft or fraud or pimping — anything to get a bankroll so he can play pool again.

After losing two nine-ball sessions to Ralph, Tommy wanted to raise the wager. Ralph, usually full of bravado, balked.

"How do I know you're not holding back?" he asks.

A little miffed, Tommy took his customized stick apart and put it back in the trim leather case. He roused his bejeweled backer, who doled out $100 bills, and they left — losers.

The next night, they were back. When they returned to Oklahoma City a few days later, more than $1,000 of Dallas shooters' bankrolls went with them.

For the next few nights, the hometown shooters settled into what has become their basic routine — playing each other for low stakes, waiting for untalented "suckers."

What they avoid most is regular work with regular hours and mediocre pay. Although some of the serious pool shooters double as card sharks, bookmakers, drug salesmen or pimps, very few have what most people consider "normal" occupations.

"Hey, did you hear what Robert did?" one player asked. "He went back to work."

Going back to work means not being able to spend hours waiting for just the right mark to come into the poolroom. It means a higher-than-average dependence on "speed" to stay awake during all-night sessions.

It means you just can't make a living shooting pool — and that's the end of the road for the hustler.

"What do you do for a living?" one shooter is asked.

"What do you mean, work?" he replies. "I shoot pool. Oh, I have a "-job," for tax purposes. I wholesale cars. But I'm 33 years old, and that I can remember I've never what you call 'worked.'"

Six jurors selected in Mormon Will trial

By JOHN M. WILLIS

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP)—Six jurors have been tentatively seated in the trial to determine whether the late Howard Hughes wrote the so-called Mormon Will.

Selected Tuesday were Lowell M. Sylvester, 43, Las Vegas, the operator of a small advertising agency; Larry D. Smith, 34, Las Vegas, a field agent with the Internal Revenue Service; Andrew G. Smith, 31, a branch loan officer with the state's largest bank; and Emma L. Wiltshire, 72, Boulder City, the wife of a retired postal clerk. The Smiths are not related.

The six selected thus far could be dismissed when attorneys begin their peremptory challenges, probably next Tuesday or Wednesday.

Much of the questioning to date has been aimed at finding out if the potential jurors have developed any opinions about the case from the news media.

Larry Smith, a Mormon elder, was carefully questioned because the Mormon Will, a three-page, handwritten document found in the Mormon Church headquarters, names many beneficiaries, among them the church.

But Smith said he does not think his religion will keep him from listening to the testimony objectively and rendering a just decision, even if it does mean that the church will not realize any money if the will is found to be a forgery.

Hughes' relatives are challenging the purported will, claiming it is a forgery.

The Mormon Will names Dietrich as the executor of the vast Hughes estate.

Andrew Smith became the first potential witness to be challenged for cause, but Clark County District Judge Keith Hayes rejected the challenge by Rhoden.

Smith works for the First National Bank of Nevada, which has been named co-administrator of the Hughes estate pending the outcome of court proceedings.

Trade adjustment assistance payments rising fast

EDITORS'S NOTE: In just 30 months, more than 255,000 U.S. workers have qualified for government assistance because they lost their jobs as a result of competition from imports. This second in a three-part series examines how the government is trying to help displaced workers.

By ROBERT A. DOBKIN

WASHINGTON (AP) — When Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co. stunned Ohio's Mahoning Valley with a September announcement closing its steel mill and laying off 5,000 workers, the Labor Department quickly made special help available to the workers.

The Youngstown workers joined 250,000 other American workers nationwide who have been declared eligible for cash and other assistance under the Trade Act of 1974 because they lost their jobs as a result of competition from increased imports.

Among them are workers who made shoes in Massachusetts, automobiles in Detroit, bras and girdles in New York, aircraft engines in California, tennis rackets in Missouri and netted shrimp off the Texas Gulf Coast.

Edward Soda, a Lackawanna, N.Y., steelworker laid off in 1975, is one of them. He says the money kept his family off welfare.

The federal program is called "trade adjustment assistance." Workers call it "burial insurance," but are happy to get it.

For workers displaced by imports, the money, when combined with state unemployment checks, give most of them 70 per cent of their former wages for as long as 52 weeks.

"Without the money, I think I would have lost my house," says Soda, a 37-year-old father of four with 18 years' seniority in Bethlehem Steel Corp. mills. He was rehired in 1976 and worked several months before being laid off again last summer.

The Labor Department is considering trade adjustment assistance for the Lackawanna workers but Soda apparently hasn't worked long enough at his new job to qualify for federal assistance a second time.

He says his family may have no choice but accept food stamps and other welfare payments once his unemployment insurance runs out.

Trade adjustment assistance is one of the government's fastest growing programs, having paid out $286 million to workers since the current program began in April 1975. The total is rising as more petitions for aid are filed and approved almost daily.

Among industries with large numbers of workers receiving this type of financial assistance through Sept. 30, the leaders are transportation equipment (largely autos), with 63,454 employes; primary metals (steel, copper), 57,353; apparel, 34,787; electrical equipment, 28,957; leather (shoes), 24,191, and fabricated metals, 22,641.

Organized labor generally has supported the program because of the financial help it offers workers, but says the program shouldn't be considered as the answer to the nation's growing trade problem. The unions have joined with business in demanding import quotas and other protectionist legislation to curb alleged unfair foreign competition.

Trade Adjustment assistance has been around in a moribund way since 1962, but it has only sprung to life since the benefits were enlarged and the requirements softened as a result of the 1974 Trade Act.

In the 13 years of the old law, 40,000 workers received benefits totaling $80 million. In the 30 months of the new program, 840 petitions covering 255,608 workers had been certified for assistance payments. Another 1,009 petitions involving 312,148 workers were denied.

The Labor Department has a backlog of more than 450 petitions covering thousands more workers, and officials say the pace is accelerating.

"We don't know exactly why," says Marvin Fooks, who directs the program. He explains that part of the reason is because of rising imports, but "it could be that more people are becoming aware of the program and are filing for benefits."

An American teacher of Hebrew in a Minneapolis school reptaced earlier this year by an Israeli immigrant wrote the Labor Department asking if he was entitled to benefits. He wasn't.

The same question was raised by schoolteachers, bus drivers and an automobile dealer in White Pine, Mich., after the government approved trade adjustment benefits for the town's miners who lost their jobs because of rising copper imports. The teachers and others in the town weren't eligible because the law requires that workers show that increasing imports were a direct cause of their layoffs.

President Carter and Congress are considering proposals that would liberalize the program to take into account the large numbers of service jobs — such as the teachers and bus drivers in White Pine — or those involving the production of component parts that are lost when imports of autos, steel, clothing and other finished products pose problems for American industries.

Among the proposals are ones to reduce interest rates on loans to companies hurt by imports, increase retraining allowances for workers, ease eligibility standards for communities and provide technical assistance in such areas as marketing and styling products to help make them more competitive with foreign goods.

Payments under the current trade adjustment assistance program amount to 70 percent of a workers former weekly wage, but not more than the national average weekly manufacturing wage of $208. The amount paid by the states in weekly unemployment insurance is deducted from the total.

The law also provides for retraining, job-search and even relocation expenses, but the Labor Department said only a relative handful of the 255,000 workers certified for benefits have taken advantage of these aspects of the program. Critics of the program say that job training and placement is often ineffective and, in many states, is seldom made available.

Touchy midwifery issue to go to South Texas jury

CORPUS CHRISTI, Texas (AP) — The touchy issue of midwifery, an accepted practice among the predominantly Mexican-American population of South Texas, goes to the jury today in the trial of a male midwife accused of injuring a child during delivery.

Attorneys for midwife Miguel Orihuela of Brownsville called only one defense witness Wednesday before resting their case.

Dr. Alphonso Prado told the jury that the use of forceps by Orihuela did not cause a "substantial risk of death" to Juan Martin Valenciano, whom Orihuela delivered on June 18.

Orihuela, who also faces other charges stemming from his operation of a midwife clinic, faces a possible 20-year prison sentence and a $10,000 fine if convicted of intentionally injuring the child during delivery.

The Brownsville midwife allegedly "grasped the head of the child with an unknown instrument and mashed the head" during delivery. The prosecution contends the child, the shape of whose head appears normal, suffered brain damage.

The trial was billed as a "testing of the waters of midwifery"

Harvest slowed

WASHINGTON (AP) — Widespread rains have slowed this fall's corn and soybean harvest still further, according to the Agriculture Department.

By Nov. 6, about 77 percent of the corn was harvested, an advance of only seven percentage points from a week earlier. A year ago 86 percent of the corn was harvested, the department said in a weekly weather review for the week of Oct. 31-Nov. 6.

Soybean harvesting was 74 percent complete, compared with 82 percent a year ago.

'Economic stimulus' won't make impact until 1978, Carter feels

By DONALD M. ROTHBERG

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter said today the nation's unemployment rate has levelled off at 7 percent and that he does not think his economic stimulus program can begin to have a substantial impact before next year.

"It's a tedious, slow process," the president told a nationally broadcast news conference.

Carter said the "general worldwide economic slowdown" is causing unemployment problems in all nations, a situation he said he hopes will improve next year.

Carter noted that the economic stimulus package passed by Congress early this year contains $21 billion for programs designed to reduce joblessness. He said the full amount would not be pumped into the economy until next June.

Carter also said he expects to endorse within a few days a modified version of full-employment legislation that has been an issue since the 1976 presidential campaign.

The bill, sponsored by Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey, D-Minn., and Rep. Augustus Hawkins, DCalif., sets a goal of an adult unemployment rate no higher than 4 percent within five years and would have the government provide jobs for people who couldn't find them otherwise. Carter said he agrees with the concept and his staff is negotiating changes in the details of the legislation.

On the Middle East, Carter expressed concern about "this new outburst of violence" on the Israel-Lebanon border, but he said he is not condemning Israel for what he described as retaliation for terrorist attacks.

"If the provocation was absent, the retaliation would have been unnecessary," he said, then adding that "the bloodshed, in my opinion, will not be stopped until the nations are willing to negotiate."

Carter said that he does not view the misdemeanor conviction of former CIA Director Richard Helms as a "badge of honor." After Helms had pleaded no contest to a misdemeanor charge that he failed to testify fully before a Senate committee about CIA activities in Chile, his lawyer described the conviction as an honor. Helms has contended he was upholding his oath to protect CIA secrets.

Carter said the administration's goals in settling the Helms case through plea bargaining were to uphold the law, to uphold the veracity of those who hold high government positions and to protect the security of the nation.

He said those goals were met.

But he said of the Helms conviction: "It is not a badge of honor and a public official does not have a right to lie."

On other topics, Carter:

—Said he would present a national health insurance program early next year, but it is "too early yet to lay down specifics" of the program.

—Said there are "about 50,000 dams that need to be inspected without delay" to prevent further tragedies like the Toccoa dam collapse in Georgia.

—Said he "reluctantly" cancelled his scheduled trip abroad, but "I think the best thing I can do the rest of this year is to work closely with Congress" on energy legislation.

—Reiterated his opposition to federal financing of abortions.

Critic 'freely' battles free enterprise textbook

By LEE JONES

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Several members of the State Board of Education challenged a publisher's representative today to show whether his textbook on free enterprise really espoused free enterprise.

"Free enterprise in America," published by Harcourt, Brace, Jovanovich, was the most heavily protested work as the board went into the final phase of a $30 million textbook adoption.

The book was recommended by the board's textbook committee.

Norma Gabler of Longview, a longtime textbook critic, singled it out as the only volume she protested out of the 87 submitted to the board by the committee and the state education commissioner for final adoption.

The board will vote Saturday on the books. It can delete from the textbook committee list, but it may not add.

Mrs. Gabler said the book overemphasizes the role of government and displays concern over protecting consumers from business, "but where is the concern for protection for business?"

She also said the book treated unions too favorably.

Board member James Binion of Abilene asked publisher representative Ralph Caulo whether the title was wrong and the book should have been called, "Current Economic Practices" instead of "Free Enterprise."

"If we are going to call it free enterprise, we must admit to the young person that this where you are living and this is what we are doing," Caulo said.

Board members Stanley McCaleb of Richardson and W. W. Carter of Amarillo also pressed Caulo on whether the book should have dealt mainly with the theory of pure market economy as envisioned by Adam Smith in 1777 as distinguished from the modern American economy with its mix of a pure market system, government regulation and labor unions.

"We tried to make it as real as we could so the young people would not be disillusioned," Caulo said.

Anothere perennial protester, Mrs. Billie C. Hutchison, was hospitalized with injuries received in an automobile accident, but taped her testimony and had it played by a friend.

She said the book "does not cover the advantages of the right-to-work law in Texas and the advantages to the non-union employee."

Ireland serenades Miss Lillian

By TAD BARTIMUS

DUBLIN, Ireland (AP) — The Irish trotted out an arrangement combining "Dixie" and "The Battle Hymn of the Republic" for President Carter's mother Wednesday night.

The occasion was a rousing cabaret performance given at a Dublin hotel for Miss Lillian and the 250 Iowans with her on an exchange visit to Ireland.

"I'm having a great time," said the 79-year-old woman as she joined in a snake-dance to "When the Saints Go Marching In" at the end of her first full day in Ireland.

A seven-piece amateur dixieland band from Des Moines joined in the festivities, playing "Sweet Georgia Brown" in honor of "the lady who has become like a mother to us although we only met her a couple of days ago."

Miss Lillian beamed and seldom stopped applauding.

She and the Iowans are visiting Ireland for 10 days on an exchange visit sponsored by the Friendship Force, a private, nonprofit organization founded by President Carter in 1973 when he was governor of Georgia. Meanwhile, a group of Dubliners is visiting Des Moines.

Priding herself on candor and honesty, Miss Lillian is fostering the person-to-person friendship program by talking to her new foreign acquaintances about her son who is president, the other one known for his capacity for beer and her pleasant world in Plains, Ga.

Bell prepared to ask for new rate increases

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Southwestern Bell Telephone Co. is preparing to ask for rate increases totaling $231 million a year, sources at the Texas Public Utility Commission say.

"They came in and said they were going to," said a source who asked not to be identified by name or position.

The dollar amount of the increase Bell reportedly will seek is the difference between what it requested in late 1976 and the $58 mllion granted by the commission.

Bell appealed the decision to the courts, and has not obtained a final ruling yet.

At Bell headquarters in Dallas, public relations man Dale Johnson would neither confirm nor deny that a request for a rate increase was in the offing.

"Company executives have said we probable would go back for another increase before the end of this year. And we still have that possibility in mind. In other words, the prior possibility still exists," Johnson said.

Longshoremen plan to resume full negotiations

NEW YORK (AP) — Management and striking dockworkers will return to the bargaining table here Friday for fullscale negotiations to end the 41day strike against container shipping, according to the union.

Thomas W. "Teddy" Gleason, president of the International Longshoremen's Association, AFL-CIO, summoned his union's 130-man Wage Scale Committee to join the negotiations. That committee would have to approve any changes in the nationwide contract.

Long urges president to stop threat tactics

By BRYCE NELSON

The Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON — Responding to President Carter's veto threat, Senate Finance Committee Chairman Russell B. Long, D-La., urged the president Wednesday to stop imposing conditions on the kind of energy bill he will sign and warned that the result could be no legislation at all.

"I wish the president would quit saying what he will or will not do until we get a bill to his desk," Long told reporters as a House-Senate conference began consideration of the tax portions of the Carter energy package. "The danger is that there will be no (energy) bill."

In his energy speech Tuesday night, Carter warned that he would sign energy legislation passed by Congress only if it was "well balanced" and "fair." In the past, presidents generally have refrained from raising the possibility of a veto until the shape of a bill was clear.

The Carter administration listens carefully to Long because the Louisiana lawmaker wields more influence than any other Senator in determining what will happen to the crucial tax portions of Carter's energy package.

Long said he had no quarrel with the content of Carter's televised energy speech Tuesday evening but added, "I don't want the president to paint himself into a corner. I don't want to paint myself into a corner."

Citing the great differences between the Senate and House energy tax bills, Long said, "With two bills as different as night and day there's going to have to be a lot of accommodating. While Long warned that it would be "very difficult" to get the Senate to pass Carter's energy taxes, House Ways and Means Committee Chairman Al Ullman, D-Oregon, declared that the House would not accept any bill which is "just a bonanza for the oil companies."

Ullman, leader of the House conferees on the energy tax bill, said the final energy bill would have to have "some teeth in it as well as the goodies which everybody likes." Ullman is serving as chairman of the conferees on the tax portions of the energy bill.

Another group of conferees continued its 16th day of work Wednesday in trying to reconcile differences between House and Senate versions of the non-tax portions of the energy package.

The House energy tax bill contains three taxes which Carter considers essential to his program, while the Senate passed an almost-taxless energy bill which features more than $46 billion worth of tax credits and incentives to stimulate conservation and production.

"Ours is a giveaway bill and yours is a takeaway bill," Sen. Robert Dole, R-Kansas, told House conferees Wednesday.

Marathon asks higher MER for Yates pool

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Marathon Oil Co., the operator of the Yates Field in West Texas, has asked the Texas Railroad Commission to increase the most efficient rate of production (MER) from 100,000 to 125,000 barrels a day.

That would deplete the field 10 years sooner.

Yates, one of Texas' top 12 producing fields, was unitized July 1, 1976, with Marathon the unit operator of the 50-year-old field in Pecos and Crockett Counties.

William Stenzel testified Tuesday that numerous voids of "cavernous porportions" have been encountered in drilling into the oil-bebearing formations.

Robert Pfile, engineering manager for the unit, said, however, oil production has improved since the field was unitized.

Pfile said the field was good for another 44 million barrels of oil and should last another 80 years.

Marathon counsel Warren Leach said Marathon recently completed a new well which has a potential of 6,500 barrels of oil a day.

"I have been unable to find anyone who can recall how long it has been since a well of this size has been completed in any field in the lower 48 states . . .and, of course, no one can recall a well of that size ever having been completed in a field that has produced for 50 years."

Offset try scheduled

Amoco Production Co. No. 2-AM David Fasken is a new project in the Fasken, South (Fusselman) field of Ector County.

Bentsen, Tower vote alike on three items

HOUSE

PANAMA CANAL. Rejected, 188 for and 215 against, an amendment seeking to impede U.S. financial assistance to Panama. It sought to require congressional approval of the Overseas Private Investment Corp. (OPIC) guaranteeing $20 million in loans to Panama's national development bank.

The proposed loan guarantee is not part of the new canal treaties but has been agreed upon by treaty negotiators as one of the financial inducements the U.S. has offered the Panamanians. This was the first House vote on the Panama Canal issue since the new treaties were signed. It was proposed to HR 9179, a bill extending the life of OPIC until Sept. 30, 1981. OPIC is a government corporation that insures certain foreign investments by U.S. companies and guarantees loans by U.S.

ROLL CALL REPORT

banks to developing countries. HR 9179 was later passed and sent to conference with the Senate.

Reps. Jim Mattox (D-5), Bob Eckhardt (D-8), Jack Brooks (D-9), James Wright (D-12), Jack Hightower (D-13), Barbara Jordan (D-18), George Mahon (D-19) and Henry Gonzalez (D-20) voted "nay."

Reps. Charles Wilson (D-2), Ray Roberts (D-4), Olin Teague (D-6), Jake Pickle (D-10), John Young (D+14) and Robert Krueger (D-21) did not vote.

HOUSE TV. Adopted, 342 for and 44 against, a resolution (H Res 866) in favor of moving ahead with the plan live, nationwide broadcast coverage of floor proceedings. This vote directed in part that closed-circuit TV coverage of the floor be view in all committees and members' offices and at selected other outlets, as a prelude to coverage that eventually will be watched daily by the population at large.

The resolution stopped short of finally approving full-pledged broadcast coverage, deferring that decision until completion of a Rules Committee study to answer questions such as whether the networks or the government should control the cameras. The study is due Feb. 15, 1978.

None of the opponents spoke up during debate. Among objections they have cited in recent months is fear that the television cameras would induce grandstanding by members.

Members voting "yea" generally favored live broadcast coverage of the House floor.

Mattox, Teague, Pickle and Young did not vote.

SOCIAL SECURITY. Passed, 275 for and 146 against, a bill (HR 9346) to strengthen the shaky financial condition of the Social Security trust fund and make other improvements in the government-run retirement system. It was sent to the Senate. In order to raise an additional $214 billion for the trust fund over the next 10 years, the wage base upon which payroll taxes are levied was raised by the bill; also raised were the rates at which employers and employes are taxed. Under another major provision, for the first time in its 42-year life, the Social Security system may turn to general Treasury funds if trust fund reserves run perilously low.

Rep. Louis Stokes, D-Ohio, a supporter, called the bill "a giant step in addressing the financial problems of the Social Security system."

Rep. John Rhodes, R-Ariz., the GOP leader in the House, called it "a bill supported by the Democratic majority which will result in a tripling of the Social Security taxes paid by American wage earners and meployers" and place "an onerous tax burden on the people of this country."

SENATE

ENERGY. Adopted, 51 for and 37 against, an amendment to levy a user's tax on iol and natural gas to encourage industries and utilities to convert to coal. The amendment was attached to HR 5263, the taxation segment ot the Administration legislation to establish a national energy policy. The bill was later passed and sent to conference with the House. The tax approved by this vote would apply, with exceptions, to existing boilers capable of being converted to coal, as well as to virtually all new boilers built by industries and utilities. The tax would begin at 60 cents per gallon and rise gradually to $6.00 per gallon.

Sen. Russell Long, D-La., an opponent, termed it "a prohibitive tax" which, among other problems, would dislocate some industries by forcing them to move to dirty-air zones that could legally tolerate coal-bruning.

Senators voting "yea" favored the oil and gas users' tax.

Sens. John Tower (R) and Lloyd Bentsen (D) voted "nay."

THE OTHER BUSING. Eliminated, 43 for and 42 against, a proposed tax credit for the inter-city bus industry. The energy taxation bill (HR 5263, see above vote) had called for $200 million annually in tax credits to the industry, in hopes of making bus travel more attractive and thus saving the nation energy. This vote killed that language. The two conglomerates of which Greyhound and Trailways are a part account for 75 to 80 percent of all inter-city passenger miles and revenues, it was stated in floor debate.

Sen. John Heinz, R-Pa., sponsor of the amendment, said it was "taking from the poor and giving to the rich" to "take from the taxpayers of this country $1 billion over the next five years and give it to two of the largest conglomerates in the United States."

Sen. Russell Long, D-La., an opponent, said he feels the industry needs a tax credit to attract riders because his wife "tells me today she would not be caught in one of those terminals, she would not feel safe, she would not feel clean, she wouldn ot be caught on one of those buses, even though she rode them most of her life."

Senators voting "yea" were opposed to the tax credit for inter-city buses.

Bentsen and Tower voted "nay."

SOCIAL SECURITY. Tabled, 74 for and 16 against, an attempt to shore up the Social Security trust fund with general Treasury revenues. The vote came during consideration of the Social Security Amendments of 1977 (HR 9346), a measure headed for final passage and conference with the House. The bill would, in part, increase payroll taxes on employers and employers and employes in order to raise revenue necessary for trust fund to meet its obligations. This vote in effect killed a proposal that at least four percent of the additional money to be raised by HR 9346 come from general revenues rather than higher payroll taxes. However, the House has voted to allow general revenues to bolster the trust fund, and the issue will be decided in conference.

Sen. Russell Long, D-La., a supporter of tabling, said "there is no general revenue to pay for it. . .the general revenue funds this year are minus $60 billion. . . .After a while you will find that you cannot run the printing presses as fast as the value of your money declines, and you will meet yourself coming back."

Sen. Thomas Eagleton, D-Mo., an opponent of tabling, said that with the proposed major increases in payroll taxes the Senate and the House "have raised Social Security taxes beyond the breaking point for the average American worker and employer. We are simply asking too much from these people."

Senators voting "yea" were opposed to letting general revenues bloster the Social Security trust fund.

Bentsen and Tower voted "yea."

Army wants food pouches

By NANCY YOSHIHARA
The Los Angeles Times

C-rations for American soldiers may never be the same.

The U.S. Army has put out the word that it wants to buy 24 million meals that can be divvied up into 40 million zip-top pouches.

Pouches? Yes, aluminum packets that could hold date nut bread, pineapple chunks and even beef stew.

Reynolds Aluminum launched a campaign to promote such a packet, which it calls the Flex-Can retortable pouch.

"We look at it as probably the most important development in food packaging since the can was developed 150 years ago," a spokesman for Reynolds said in a telephone interview from the company's headquarters in Richmond, Va.

The packaging concept, which Reynolds says provides the shelf life of the can and the taste and quality of frozen foods, is not new. A foreign-made version of the pouch has been used for yars in Japan, Europe and Canada, while some U.S. firms have been developing their own prototype.

In May, Reynolds received approval from the Food and Drug Administration and the Department of Agriculture to maret the pouch, which has been under development since the mid-1950s.

A filled 5-by-7-inch, 8-ounce packet measures about 1-inch thick. The pouch is composed of three layers. The polyester film layer is laminated to a middle layer of aluminum foil, which, the Reynolds spokesman says, is an absolute barrier to moisture and light. The third and innermost layer is polypropylene, which does not impart any taste to the food.

Precooked food can be eaten as is or placed in boiling water for five minutes. For microwave ovens, the food must be transferred to another container.

The Continental Kitchens division of ITT-Continental Baking Co. is test marketing seven varieties of pouch-packaged entrees in Fresno, Calif., Ft. Wayne, Ind., and syracuse, N.Y.

"We've had an extraordinary positive response (from consumers) in positioning the product against frozen entrees in taste and quality," said Robert B. Keane, Rye, N.Y.-based Continental's vice president of public affairs.

He added that demand for the individual, 8-ounce servings of chicken cacciatore, veal scallopini, Chinese pepper steak, beef stew, beef bourguigonne and chicken a la king has been so great that the company's pilot plant in Rye cannot supply enough of the products.

"They are more expensive than canned foods, but substantially less expensive than top quality frozen," Keane said. Continental will wind up its pilot program "very soon" and then determine its next move. But, Keane noted "It will be some time before we can go national."

The term "retort" refers to the process by which canned food is cooked. A can is filled, sealed and then placed in a retort to cook. That is why there is so much liquid in canned goods.

The Reynolds spokesman said it takes about two and a half times as long for the heat of aprocessing thermal unit to reach the middle of a can as it does with the inch-thick pouch.

Del Monte Corp., San Francisco, reported, "There is no decision yet to use or not use pouches). We're just looking at them."

A spokesman for Green Giant Co., Le Sueur, Minn., said, "We've been studying the situation and will continue to monitor it. Our research to date shows that at the retail level, consumer just don't perceive products packaged in this form to have a high enough cost-value relationship to make a change from canned or frozen. On the other hand, in institutional food service, we're investigating the opportunities very thoroughly."

GM wins retrial

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — General Motors Tuesday won a retrial of a Houston man's $1 million products liability suit because the original jury was denied details of an out-of-court settlement with another party.

The decision could have farreaching effects on other cases in the growing field of suits against manufacturers for alleged product defects.

A jury awarded Curtis Lee Simmons $1 million after finding that GM had installed defective glass in the front door windows of his 1962 Chevrolet. Simmons was blinded when the glass exploded in a collision with a truck.

The catch was that Simmons settled out of court with the truck's owner, Feld Truck Leasing Corp. and its driver, Hestle Andrew Johnston.

Simmons was paid an undisclosed amount of money by Feld and agreed, in return, not to sue Feld and Johnston.

Under the settlement, Feld would get half of every dollar Simmons received from GM until Feld had been paid $200,000. Johnston and Feld were allowed to present testimony about the accident even though they would benefit from a verdict against GM.

The high court reversed the verdict for Simmons — which had been reduced to $500,000 by the Houston Court of Civil Appeals — because the judge overruled GM's attempts to tell the jury of the settlement.

"It was not an ordinary settlement. By its terms, Feld acquired a direct financial interest in Simmons' lawsuit," the court said.

The court also agreed with the appeals court's finding that GM wasn't solely to blame for Simmons' blindness, since Johnston — after all — had run a red light and smashed into his car.

Because of the settlement, the court of civil appeals had reduced Simmons' judgment against GM by half, saying Feld and Johnston were not entitled to anything from GM.

SS tax increase will fuel inflation, economists say

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — The new increases in Social Security taxes now being pushed through Congress will have a significant impact on the economy in coming years — probably more substantial than the law makers are claiming — according to businessmen and private analysts.

While congressional estimates assert there will be no major effect on the economy, private economists say the tax hikes could add almost a full percentage point to the inflation rate by 1981 and also make a dent in output and employment.

Analysts are concerned that the brunt of the impact will come in 1980 and in 1981, when the economy is expected to be weak anyway and the nation will be hit by the last big jump in the newly proposed energy consumption taxes.

"What that does is to make the impact of the regular cyclical slowdown even worse," said Michael Young, economist at Wharton Economic Forecasting Associates in Philadelphia. "It means any tax cuts the administration was planning will have to be visibly larger."

Albert T. Sommers, vice president of the Conference Board, the New York-based business organization, said the impact could be bigger than the computer projections indicate because the payroll tax is so fundamental a part of business costs.

"This system resonates so throughout the economy," Sommers said. "There's really no way to say with great accuracy precisely what these tax increases ultimately will mean."

To be sure, no one in the business community is suggesting the tax hikes shouldn't be enacted. Virtually all the executives and economists contacted by The Post conceded a tax boost was necessary to put the Social Security trust fund back in order.

Businessmen and analysts are worried about how well the administration will be able to offset the impact of the measure. Executives also fret that the Senate version, to be voted on Friday, will boost prices even more by loading more of the increase onto employers.

As Young explained it, requiring employers to pay proportionally more than the 50 per cent of the payroll tax they traditionally contribute will bloat unit labor costs and prompt companies to pass on the full brunt of the increase in higher prices to consumers.

As a result, he said, the Senate bill "will have a bigger impact on prices" than the House version, which retains the 50-50 split.

Estimates by Data Resources, Inc., the Boston-based economic research firm, show the tax increases contained in the House-passed bill would have little measurable impact until 1979. After that, however, the effects would be significant.

The DRI projections show the tax hikes will push the inflation rate 0.5 per cent higher than it otherwise would have been by 1980, and a full 0.9 per cent higher by 1981. At the same time, the economy's growth would be slowed by similar amounts.

Otto Eckstein, president of DRI, said the firm has not yet compiled projections for the Senate bill, which still is under consideration. But he said the impact would be "in the same neighborhood, but slightly higher than" the House version.

Reaction from businessmen was uniformly pessimistic. Jack W. Gilpin of Varian Associates, the Palo Alto electronics firm, said, "There's no question we'll have to raise our prices." He called the boost "one additional factor" in giving foreign competitors an edge.

Herbert H. Lyon, vice president of the Dow Chemical Co., in Midland, Mich., pointed out that the increase in the employer's share of the payroll tax, provided in the Senate version of the bill, may work in the long run to scare companies out of the pension business.

Lyons' argument is that most private pension plans are set up to "credit" employers for their contributions to Social Security, based on a 50-50 split between company and worker. If that ratio is changed, he said, some firms may shift away from pensions to profit-sharing plans.

Economists also are worried about a provision in the House bill that would remove the ceiling on how much a retiree may earn and still qualify for Social Security benefits. Although estimates still are sketchy, they say the provision is bound to crowd the job market further.

The estimates prepared by private economists are substantially more pessimistic than those of congressional staffers. The House report on the Social Security bill asserts flatly that the tax hike "will not have a very significant impact."

Projections by congressional budget officers show a negligible impact on the economy in 1978 and 1979, with only scant effect in later years. Congressional analysts say the differences stem from their own assumptions that price boosts would be dampened by weakness in the economy.

The differences have stirred debate over how big a tax cut the Carter administration will have to propose next year to offset the adverse effects of the Social Security tax hike. The President has said he plans to consider that in planning the cut, but cited no firm figure.

The congressional estimates show the House bill would boost payroll taxes by $2.8 billion in 1978, $5.7 billion in 1979, $7.7 billion in 1980, $16.1 billion in 1981, $20.9 billion in 1982 and $22.6 billion in 1983. The impact on the overall gross national product could be more.

Some economists say the administration will have to plan to offset some added effects on employment, which could be hit sharply, particularly if the economy slows on its own in late 1978. Wharton's Michael Young said the effect on joblessness "could be sizeable."

Another fireside chat

President Carter doesn't mind asking others to give a bit here and there, but he simply will not budge an inch.

This was very evident in his televised "fireside chat" Tuesday night.

Despite all the factual information on the energy situation presented to him in recent weeks and months, Mr. Carter has not wavered one iota concerning his energy program.

About the only thing new he came out with in his chat was that he will veto any energy legislation that fails to meet "his" test for fairness. About the only thing we can say here is, let him veto it.

As has been said many times, the Carter package as proposed is a tax bill, pure and simple, rather than an energy bill. And a tax bill isn't what is needed in this case.

The President also said Congress must "resist pressures from a few for special favors."

Talk about pressures — if anyone can beat the White House when it comes to pressures being applied on the energy bill, we do not know who it is. Congressmen George Mahon and Jim Collins in separate appearances here a few weeks ago, told about the pressure applied on House members for passage of the Carter energy bill. It was tremendous — and effective. Similar pressures have been applied on members of the Senate.

Although the President did not lower the boom on the oil industry as he did in a recent press conference, when he likened it to war profiteers seeking the "biggest ripoff in history," he again was critical of some segments of the oil and gas industry.

Stating that his proposals provide adequate incentives — "the highest in the world," Mr. Carter said that some of the oil companies "want much more — tens of billions of dollars more." Our answer to that, Mr. President, is "hogwash."

Mr. Carter cited three goals for his energy legislation: "First, cut back on consumption; second, shift away from oil and gas to other sources of energy; and, third, encourage production of energy in the United States."

This sounds great, but he still needs to come up with something which would lend reasonable, practical encouragement to his third goal.

We must agree with the President on one thing: energy prices, he said, "are going up whether we pass an energy program or not, as fuel becomes scarcer and more expensive to produce."

Meanwhile, a House-Senate conference committee continues its work.

ART BUCHWALD

Here's what happened when 'trip' cancelled

Art Buchwald

WASHINGTON — Most Americans are relieved that President Carter has postponed his trip abroad to nine countries in 11 days. Not only has it saved the American taxpayer millions of dollars but there was a feeling that the President would not be able to accomplish much in that short time.

Yet when the word was announced, it caused great disappointment in the countries President Carter had planned to visit. Preparations had been in full swing and excitement was building up for Mr. Carter's short stay.

When one head of state's wife was informed that the President was not coming she broke into tears.

"But I've been cleaning the palace all week," she told her husband.

"I don't want to hear about your troubles," he said. "I've been painting all the buildings from the airport into town."

The wife asked, "What do I tell the caterer?"

"Tell him the dinner has been canceled. I'm sure he'll understand."

"That's easy enough for you to say. But he turned down three parties to do our dinner. You know this is his busy season."

"Listen, I'm not responsible for Carter canceling his trip. Why are you bothering me with your problems?"

"You think it's easy to get the palace ready for an American President? Do you know we bought new draperies and slipcovers for his visit? And I had all the rugs shampooed. I think he has a lot of nerve telling us he's decided not to come at this late date."

"Woman, will you shut up? I gave all the schoolchildren in the capital the day off so they could cheer for the President. Now I have to go on television and tell them I was only fooling. How does that make me look?"

"Do you realize we invited 800 generals and their wives and two members of the opposition party to a reception before the dinner? We're going to be the laughingstock of the town."

"So we'll uninvite them. I had to get the air force in shape for a fly-over. Only two out of the 400 planes the United States sold us can still get off the ground."

"I never should have sent to Paris for a new evening dress."

"I don't want to hear any more. I've hung American Flags on every lamppost in the city. What am I going to do with 130,000 American Flags?"

"Won't the American exporters take them back?"

"I didn't get them from America. I got them from Japan. They've been dumping American Flags in every country Carter was supposed to visit."

"I think you should send a formal note of protest to the White House telling them we have been personally insulted."

"I've done that already."

"What did they say?"

"I got a note from their daughter Amy telling me she was studying our country in her geography class and asking me to send her any information we had on our raw materials."

"You know our children are furious with us because I made them clean up their rooms?"

"That's just too bad. Do you realize how shaky my regime has been in the last six months? I was counting on Carter's visit to solidify my position with the military junta. The army military band has been practicing 'Dixie' for three months. What do you think they're going to say when I tell them they can forget it?"

"I think if the President of the United States had any feeling at all he would at least have sent his brother Billy Carter in his place."

"They offered us Billy Carter, but he charges $10,000 an appearance, and no one in my cabinet thinks he's worth it."

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Witch finder subject of probe

By JACK ANDERSON and LES WHITTEN

WASHINGTON — Back in the bad old days of Watergate, a briefcase-packing, circuit-riding prosecutor traveled around the country hunting subversives. He was Guy Goodwin, who hurried from place to place indicting people for their political beliefs. We called him Richard Nixon's witch finder.

Justice Department sources say he supervised about 100 grand jury investigations in 36 states. He returned more than 400 indictments. There was one trouble; few of the indictments stuck. The rare convictions were often for minor offenses, having nothing to do with the subversive activities Goodwin was investigating. Goodwin sought contempt and perjury indictments when he couldn't make a better case.

Now the witch finder himself is under investigation. Charges have been brought against him behind closed doors on Capitol Hill. The most devastating testimony has come from a former Justice Department colleague and ex-assistant U.S. attorney for Virginia, Rodney Sager.

The testimony was taken in the strictest secrecy by a House Judiciary subcommittee. Sager cited abuse after abuse by the hit-and-run Goodwin. "His prosecutions were left to others," said Sager. "He got his indictments and disappeared."

Normally, "95 percent of all indictments end in convictions," Sager reported. But Goodwin seemed unable to distinguish between violent, bomb-throwing revolutionaries and peaceful, anti-war activists. No more than 25 percent of those Goodwin indicted were ever convicted, Sager charged.

This "indicates without any question," he said, "that individuals were indicted without the least scintilla of evidence." Innocent people can be "ruined," he warned, by careless indictments. "If I were indicted and the case thrown out tommorrow," he said, "stigma that would attach to what happened to me would never be erased in my community."

Yet despite Goodwin's "numerous abuses of the system," Sager declared, "he remains with impunity on the federal payroll ... The Justice Department, which speaks of protecting witnesses, continues to protect Guy Goodwin. The question can only be asked of the well-meaning representatives from the Justice Department — why?"

Goodwin is an improbable witch finder, an impeccable, subdued, handsome man, with styled grey hair and a soft voice. Testified Sager: "Guy Goodwin is a very mild-mannered individual. He's not one of those so-called screaming, overly aggressive individuals. But he just sits there and just asks broad, sweeping questions that have no relevance whatsoever and are virtually impossible to answer."

Here are a few of the "horror" stories that Sager recalled from his personal experience with Goodwin:

— Goodwin "went so far as to subpoena the defense attorney of the primary defendant" in a Richmond, Va., case. Goodwin even "threatened" to have him locked up ... if he didn't show up for the grand jury." Inside the grand jury room, Goodwin demanded whether the attorney had any "wire tapping equipment." Recounted Sager: "The fellow laughed in his face ... had a few choice words for him and left the grand jury room."

— During the same investigation, Goodwin granted inmunity to the wrong witness. Sager considered this to be "just comical" but also concluded it was a "grossly negligent act ... (that would) suggest professional incompetence."

— When Sager criticized Goodwin's performance, the witch finder tried to indict him. As Sager recalled this startling development: "He said to me, 'Mr. Sager,' he says, 'you complained a little bit and I want to protect you.' I said, 'Protect me? What do you mean protect me? He said, 'Well, I want to advise you of your rights.' I said, 'Man, you've got to be crazy.'"

Nevertheless, Goodwin went ahead with an investigation of Sager and actually hauled him before a grand jury. Sager recalled that Goodwin's questions "were so ridiculous that it would defy my imagination and logic as a prosecutor with six years experience." The grand jury found no misconduct by Sager. He responded by filing charges against Goodwin, but these were ignored by his superior, then-Assistant Attorney General Richard Thornburgh. So Sager quit in disgust. "I'm disappointed and disillusioned," he said.

After listening to the secret testimony, Rep. Harold Sawyer, R-Mich., snorted: "If I were voting here based on what I heard, I certainly would vote to hand down an indictment on Goodwin. You certainly sold me on that."

Other eminent authorities have also condemned the witch finder. Whitney North Seymour, the U.S. attorney in New York City, said Goodwin had "little apparent regard for the rights of witnesses." Prof. Arthur Kinoy, a famed constitutional lawyer who has reviewed Goodwin's record, called him "one of the most serious examples of repression." Some of Goodwin's colleagues referred to him as "the grand inquisitor."

Goodwin is now keeping in the shadows, but he is still keeping an eye out for witches in the Justice Department's Internal Security Section.

Footnote: Goodwin refused to take our calls for his comment.

NICK THIMMESCH

South Korean investigation: On slow-motion camera

Nick Thimmesch

WASHINGTON — The investigation of how congressmen accepted favors and possibly bribes from South Korean agents is like a slow-motion movie which has no value for being slow motion. Stopping the action illustrates nothing except the aversion the Carter Administration and Congress share in pursuing this scandal.

The strategy seems to be for the House Ethics Committee, a group given to dozing, and the Justice Department, a model of restraint when it comes to sinning Democrats, to gently apply the tarbrush to a retired congressman or two and blame everything else on Korea.

One of the graven commandments of this whole episode is: THOU SHALT NOT UTTER THE NAME OF A SITTING CONGRESSMAN.

So last weekend, President Jimmy Carter announced that the South Korean government has impeded justice and acted like an uncooperative ally in not springing Tongsun Park to testify.

Tongsun Park, a retired and also inactive rice merchant, was once a great favorite among many congressmen, including his old school chum Democratic House Whip John Brademas. But nowadays a congressman would rather be caught in the company of Richard Nixon than old buddy Tongsun. Such gratitude.

Back in South Korea, government officials are perplexed over how their mentor, the United States, from which they learned the American art of winning friends and influencing people with favors and whatnots, has suddenly turned so pure and now even threatens to cut off military aid needed to hold off the barbaric North.

The South Koreans believe they only did what the United States, particularly its CIA, has done, and what other nations have also done — all in the interest of developing friendly relations. After all, Greece, Chile and Israel, to name three nations dependent on U.S. goodwill and goodies, have all learned how to massage Uncle Sam.

Anyway, the South Koreans are supposed to be devising a scheme whereby Tongsun Park, in a manner which will satisfy American investigators, can testify in the U.S. Embassy in Seoul without fear of being prosecuted.

In the meantime, one would conclude that there were only bribers and no bribees. House Ethics Committee Chairman John J. Flynt Jr. of Georgia has made it clear that in any public hearings committee members and witnesses are not to mention the names of sitting congressmen.

But last week the committee made a loud exception to its rule. Chairman Flynt and Rep. Floyd Spence, the panel's senior Republican, wrote Speaker Thomas "Tip" O'Neill Jr. to tell him that he was innocent of charges that he allowed the South Koreans to pay the rent on his Washington apartment.

There was great bowing and scraping in that letter, and naturally O'Neill issued a press release expressing his gratitude and hoping there would be no more such crackpot accusations.

Well, it's good strategy to offload guilt onto former congressmen, Koreans with funny-sounding names and rumormongers. But according to sworn testimony, South Korea allocated $10 million to charm congressmen and U.S. officials and compiled lists of congressmen that were intercepted by the U.S. government.

"That $10 million must have gone somewhere," says Rep. Bruce Caputo (R-N.Y.), the committee's exasperated maverick whose investigative ardor caused one senior congressman to spit in his face at a party.

"It is obvious that O'Neill, Brademas, McFall (former Democratic Whip), those five 'Advance Guard' Republicans (named in testimony) and others on those Korean lists should testify. So should Kissinger and other officials in the Nixon and Ford administrations who knew what happened."

The record shows that the aforementioned all came in contact with this Korean "situation" in one way or another. The committee's reluctance to push hard caused its former chief investigator, Philip Lacovora (of Watergate fame) to quit, and the committee had to spruce up by hiring Leon Jaworski (of bigger Watergate fame) as his replacement.

But Jaworski drops in here only every so often and usually sighs that without Korea's help he can't get far. His deputy, Peter White, remarks that congressmen involved "have many incentives not to testify."

Of course they have, and that's why Caputo becomes more impatient, and why a small, rather oddly composed group of House Democrats and Republicans may rebel and blow the whistle on their colleagues. The coverup congressmen may then run out of spit.

Carl Albert: his life is changed

By JIM HENDERSON
Dallas Times Herald

McALESTER, Okla. — Rain clouds lingered over the burnished hill of Eastern Oklahoma as a chill front passed on to the southeast, leaving the air damp and heavy. Carl Albert had a cold.

"It's something that's going around," he said, settling stiffly into the high-backed chair in his office in McAlester's old federal courthouse beside the parkway that bears Albert's name.

There was a time when Carl Albert's health was of national importance: In the autumn of 1973, for example, when the country was without a vice president and he, as Speaker of the House of Representatives, was second in the line of presidential succession, and less than a year later when events again placed him a heartbeat away from the nation's highest office.

Now his sniffles are heard only by his small staff and the consequences reach scarcely beyond the local Lions Club, which awards him a 30-year membership pin this week, or the trustees of a local hospital, who are counting on his persuasive oratory to put across a half-million-dollar bond issue.

Carl Albert's life has changed remarkably, and the cold that followed him on this dismal autumn day seemed to account for only a part of the discomfort one senses in him.

"I shall return to the scenes of my childhood in Oklahoma and live in the community where I grew up," he said in announcing his retirement in 1976. But it's a hard road back, and in many ways Albert is still struggling to find his place there.

Part of the problem is that he left Pittsburg County, Oklahoma, as a young lawyer and returned as an institution. His presence is marked everywhere: The Carl Albert Parkway, the Carl Albert Mental Health Center, Carl Albert Junion College. His institution-size portrait looks down on the rotunda of the State Cpaitol, and a replica of the office he occupied as speaker of the House is being constructed at the University of Oklahoma.

Moreover, he is undisputably the leading citizen of McAlester, population 18,000. He is its only authentic celebrity, its largest claim to fame.

Friends and acquaintances describe him as living the routine life of a civic worker, contented to live out his years 200 yards from where he was born on the old family farm and busying himself with the kinds of serene make-work that props up life in small communities.

"He crops up where you would expect to see a prominent member of the community," said a McAlester attorney. "You know — ball games, civic club meetings, an occasional (Democratic) Party function.

He and Mary (Albert's wife) even came to the Lions Club sweetheart banquet." Said a McAlester businessman: "He stays pretty busy. You know, they gave him a few United Way cards to work ... things like that."

Albert seems to accept such social and civic demands with resignation rather than relish.

"I just do enough to do my part," he said, resting one foot on the edge of his desk. "I am not too much of a social-minded person. I like to be with friends, but I don't care much for organized social functions. I don't like to get my time pinned down."

He is listed on the membership rolls of virtually every organization in town, is the first to be asked to head promotional campaigns of various kinds, receives three or four speaking invitations a day (most of which he declines), and is, according to friends, "on everyone's 'gimme' list."

Former constituents still come to him with their problems, and his staff spends considerable time referring them to their new congressman.

Albert has not retired. He maintains an association with a law firm in Washington, D.C., and the federal courthouse offices and staff are his, by law, as long as he wants to keep them. The obligations he accepts with enthusiasm tend to be those somehow related to this public life or those requiring the skills that made it possible for him to rise from the boondocks to the speaker's chair.

"His high school class held its 50th reunion last spring," a secretary said. "He tracked down people that nobody had heard from in 50 years."

He accepted an invitation to address the Texas Cattle Feeders Association in San Antonio on last week and spent days researching his subject.

He agreed to deliver a series of 12 lectures on Congress and the legislative process at the University of Oklahoma last month and read all of the texts assigned to the students.

"I wasn't going to go up there and just reminisce," he said. "I wanted to read and understand what they were studying and mix that with my own experience. One of the texts written by a man who had worked for me."

It was that kind of tenacity that made Albert a case history in many political science textbooks.

Ironically, it was the years as House Majority Leader, not Speaker, that Albert recalls with the most fondness.

"My most successful time was during (Lyndon) Johnson's first term," he said. "We got all the civil rights and poverty legislation through. My speaker years were Republican years, primarily."

They also were ugly and bitter years in national politics. In 1971, when Albert succeeded John McCormack, he soon ran headlong into the divisiveness and tumult of the windup Nixon-Agnew tenure.

A lean and hungry crop of new congressmen was on its way to the capital determined to overthrow the establishment, and some old-timers on the Hill were hanging out publicly with strippers and putting their mistresses on the government payroll.

Columnist Jack Anderson described Albert as possessing "scrupulous honesty," but the tarnish of those years touched everyone. A member of Albert's staff was indicted for influence peddling. Another trusted aide, Susie Park Thompson, was paraded thorugh the Korean bribery scandal.

Jack Anderson's attention turned from Albert's honesty to his drinking habits, and the final blow came in the summer of 1976 when Time magazine reported that orgies had been staged in a Capitol building room assigned to the Speaker.

Albert called a news conference to deny knowledge of such activities. Four days later, the Speaker announced he would retire from Congress at the end of the year, to return to the place of his childhood.

Aboriginal pair rescued after 20 years in desert

PERTH, Australia (AP) — An aboriginal couple, believed to be the last of their tribe living in a traditional style dating back 30,000 years, has been rescued from near starvation in the drought-stricken Gibson Desert of Western Australia.

The couple, exiled by their tribe almost 40 years ago, were thought to be the last of the Mandjildjara tribe living in the traditional way, eking out an existence from the sparse animal life, vegetation and occasional water holes of one of Australia's driest regions.

Warri, aged about 60, and his wife, Yatungka, about 50, were rescued from the desert recently after older members of the tribe, now living near the small town of Wiluna, 475 miles northeast of here, expressed fears for their survival.

The Mandjildjaras living in Wiluna, who have been forced into civilization by a three-year drought, said the two were the last of their nomadic tribe still living in the desert.

Professor W. Peasley, an Australian anthropologist from Perth, helped organize the rescue operation with the aid of Mudjon, a tribal elder still familiar with the ways of the desert. After an extensive search, the party found the couple at a water hole in tribal territory about 300 miles northeast of Wiluna.

In an interview with the Western Australian newspaper, Peasley said Warri and Yatungka were weak and emaciated when the search party found them. He said Warri, who was naked, could walk only with difficulty and could no longer throw his spear effectively enough to kill animals inhabiting the region. The many sores on his body could not heal because of malnutrition. His wife was a little stronger and was able to reach mud at the bottom of a water hole to get something to drink, he said.

Peasley said that for several weeks the couple's only nutrition had been the fruit of a desert tree.

For many years, the couple refused to join other members of their tribe but finally agreed when the expedition reached them. The two had been exiled from the tribe when they breached a tribal law.

Spearing and social sanctions are the normal punishment for such breaches of tribal law and the couple had avoided other tribal members for many years for fear of punishment and ostracism.

Peasley was joined by four friends and the tribal elder for the long search from one dried water hole to another until a smoke signal from Warri was answered by one sent up from the party.

Hold up trump to cut contact

By ALFRED SHEINWOLD

You've often held up an ace to cut communications between the opponents, but have you ever withheld a trump for the same purpose? It's a play you should get to know.

East takes the queen of diamonds and continues with the ace. Now South must make a key play.

If South ruffs, he is a peeled potato. South must then lead trumps, and West refuses the first two rounds.

When West takes the third trump, he has one trump left and so does South. Now West leads his last diamond.

After South ruffs, West will surely get a trump trick and a club. If South fails to ruff the third diamond, East will continue diamonds until South does ruff. The contract is doomed.

MUST NOT RUFF

South should refuse to ruff the second diamond. Instread, he discards the club that he is sure to lose in any case. Diamonds are continued, and this time South ruffs.

West is then out of diamonds. Whenever West takes his ace of trumps he cannot lead a diamond. It doesn't matter whether West shifts to clubs or to hearts: South can draw the last trump and make his contract.

This is the same play you make at notrump when you hold up an ace until one opponent plays his last card of the suit. Your trump takes the place of the ace.

DAILY QUESTION

As dealer, you hold: S 3 H 8754 D AKQ1083 C 95. What do you say?

ANSWER: Pass. The hand is not quite worth an opening bid of one. Even if you use weak two-bids, you must avoid bidding two diamonds when you have four-card support for a major suit and a side singleton. You might easily lose a game in hearts.

Youngest kidnap victim becomes topless dancer for fun, profit

By ROBERT HEARD

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Kidnapped when she was only 29 minutes old, Carolyn Wharton Smith has endured physical abuse all her life, including a gang rape, but still has the body of a topless dancer.

She dances for both fun and profit — and with the blessing of her husband, Frank, who is a deejay at the Doll House, where she works.

Now 22, Mrs. Smith got interested three years ago in getting publicity for the event that made her famous as an infant. She lived in Beaumont at the time, working in a pizza restaurant, and a male friend said, "You know, you could be in the Guinness Book of World Records."

"I said, 'You've gotta be kidding.'"

He told her to send her clippings and birth certificate and other documents to the publishers.

And that's how she got listed as the youngest kidnap victim.

A nurse had deceived her doctor-lover into believing she was pregnant and wore maternity clothes until the time came for her to produce a baby. To complete the charade and force the doctor to divorce his wife and marry her, the nurse snatched the most recent resident of an incubator in a Beaumont hospital.

The story made headlines around the world in 1955.

The baby's umbilical cord ruptured in the nurse's car, but the nurse knew how to tie it.

Police received hundreds of tips. One proved accurate, and Houston officers found the baby in a dresser drawer at a residence where the nurse had taken her.

The nurse later was tried and given a seven-year probated sentence.

Mrs. Smith suffered beatings as a child and these led to psychiatric sessions. A boy she met in a psycho ward when she was 14 later instigated the gang rape, she said.

She went out on a date with the boy, who picked up five other youths, and they "kept forcing beer on me. I didn't want to drink it, but they made me drink it.

"They got me real, real drunk, and I remember an old broken down house, and I remember that it should have been condemned by the board of health, the way it looked, and I remember there was an old mattress that they picked up and they pushed it upstairs . . .

"I really couldn't do much. I mean, I was drunk, and couldn't fight off all those guys . . . They were drunk, too. I can remember a few faces coming at me, and I can remember laying there on the bed thinking, 'Oh, my God, what is happening?' you know, and being scared to death.

"And then, the next thing I know I picked up this shirt and I don't know how I got out of the house, but I was running down this drive, and this woods, this was out in the woods, there was woods on both sides of this guy's drive, and here's this shirt and it buttons down the front, but this shirt was flying open and I was naked, with this shirt on, and I was running from these people.

"I was running down the street and I was crying and screaming, and here comes this car, and I'm flagging it down naked, and it was those guys."

She said they screamed at her and beat her for running away.

"They gave me my clothes and then they took me home and didn't even drive into the driveway. They just pushed me out of the car," she said.

Years passed before she told anyone about the incident because she feared she would be accused of causing the rape, she said.

The boy who instigated it killed himself three years later.

Mrs. Smith recounts incidents in which different men attracted to her beat her, tied her in a car back seat and raped her, threw her off a second floor balcony at a duplex and threatened to kill her with an ice pick.

"I have met all kinds of horrible people in my life ... I was down on men for a long time. I thought all men were like that," she said.

Smith is her second husband. They have been married eight months.

She only dances topless occasionally, to fill in for regular dancers, she said.

She and her husband "sat down and had a nice long talk about it, and he said, 'Whatever you do, what you think is gonna make money, well, you do it.' And he trusts me completely. He knows no one's going to take my love away from him."

She has become "kind-of addicted" to topless dancing. She enjoys the attention as well as the tips.

"It's just like some actors and actresses will say, 'Man, I just can't get away from the stage.'"

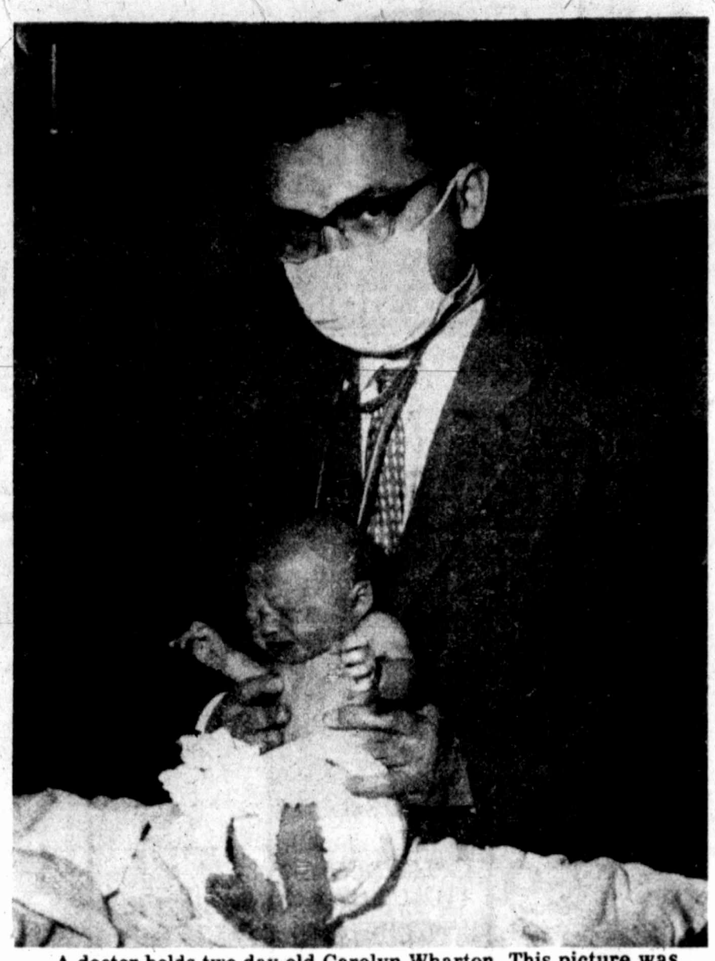

"You have to be in a good mood, because when you're in a good mood, you get the people in a good mood. And you have to present yourself in a way so that they're not going to think — you can't present yourself like you're ready to go to bed or they're going to think that.

"I present myself to where, 'Hi, I'm Carolyn. It's nice to meet you. Hope you have a good time.' And I put my arm around them (fully clothed) and say hello, but if they grab my rear end I push their hand away and say I'm not here for that," she said.

Not all customers are "grabbers," she said. "You meet very, very clean-cut American men who won't touch you, and say, 'Hello. How are you? You've got a nice body,' give me a five-dollar bill and walk out."

She would never dance bottomless as well as topless, except for her husband, she said.

"I want to sell my story for a made-for-TV movie."

Police consult psychologist

ALICE, Texas (AP) — The mutilation slaying of a retired laborer described as a "jolly fellow" who was well-liked in this South Texas town has police conferring with a psychologist and warning citizens to walk in pairs until a suspect is in custody.

Police Chief Juan Rodriguez told a news conference Wednesday that an autopsy revealed 67-year-old Emuel Davis died of "multiple stab wounds."

Davis' body was discovered Monday by workers returning to a church currently being renovated.

Woman drives to shake up ideas of France's educational system

EDITOR'S NOTE — Can a country long attuned to the arts and the idea that men are dominant accept more vocational training in higher education as espoused by a woman? From a practical standpoint, perhaps. From a social and political standpoint, well ...

By DAVE ZIMMERMAN

PARIS (AP) — Alice Saunier-Siete's hobby is flying airplanes. She often wishes that the French university system she runs could dedicate itself to ideas so practical.

Mrs. Saunier-Siete, secretary of state for universities, controls a $2.2 billion budget and an educational system encompassing 77 institutions and about a million students and-teachers. Her major worry is that French students spend too much time studying liberal arts and too little time at more practical research.

"We have far too many holders of liberal arts degrees looking for jobs," she says. "What France needs is more researchers, more scientists, more people with tangible laboratory skills."

Mrs. Saunier-Siete doesn't believe in programming students into vocational courses against their will. "But there must be more counseling at the pre-university level so that those who lack the aptitude for arts and letters will gear themselves toward vocational careers."

The universities minister, 52, a widow and a mother of two, is a study in why she's hesitant to railroad unwilling students. As a teen-ager during World War II, she ran messages for the resistance, later dabbled in philosophy, then bucked her parents wishes that she stay home and marry by going to the Sorbonne to study geography.

Her dream was to be an "explorer-journalist," but it was tempered by practicality — courses in secretarial skills in case her career didn't pan out.

She did have a brief fling with her chosen profession, examining how man adapts to high altitudes in harsh climates in the remote reaches of Iceland, Norway, Canada, Alaska and the Arctic. Then she returned to France and began working her way through the educational ranks, reaching the top and her first major conflict 18 months ago.

"I took office right in the midst of the university strike," she says. "I was attacked violently. The strikers wanted to topple me. They thought they could have my skin because I was politically naive. They thought they would have an easy victory. But in November, after I presented my budget, they realized how wrong they were."

Mrs. Saunier-Siete earns $44,000 a year in her government post. In addition to promoting more basic research, she is trying to make sure her budget is spread more equitably among the universities and that qualified personnel have more job security.

The main thorn is the political left.

"If the left wing wins the legislative elections in March," she says, "political criteria will replace scientific criteria, the criteria of competence, in much of the university system."

Of working mostly with men she says, "The war changed the attitudes of my generation. The girls did the same work as the boys but it became clear to me that a woman must always do more than a man to prove her capability.

"You must remember, too, that I was a university teacher and have always worked mainly with men. And they are the ones who always picked me for positions of responsibility, to be head of the team, like a mother or big sister. I never had any personal ambition, and I think they chose me for my qualities of leadership ...."

Mrs. Saunier-Siete has a staff of 12 which she consults regularly before making decisions. "There are no secrets among us," she says. "Everyone knows the major lines of policy, and while there have been some differences, I have experienced no disloyalty in the 18 months I've been here."

Her outlets are fencing, swimming, volleyball and flying her single-engine plane. She has a private pilot's license and is working toward a navigator's license.

"When you leave the ground and are alone in the plane you think only of piloting," she says. "It's an extraordinary liberation, a real cleansing of the brain."

Union effort divides textile town against itself

EDITOR'S NOTE — For the national labor movement, organizing the southern textile industry long has been a major objective. The battle is centered on Roanoke Rapids and the J.P. Stevens Co. But for the workers caught in the dispute, the issues are less sweeping and more immediate, and the rift runs deep.

By DAVE GOLDBERG

ROANOKE RAPIDS, N.C. (AP) — Billy Birdsong joined the union because he didn't like the way the boss man was treating young Danny Cook. "I figured it could be me next," he says.

Wilson Lambert doesn't like the union and wants it kicked out of the mills, where he's worked for 35 years. The company, he says, has never done him wrong.

The Birdsongs and the Lamberts are the bottom line of a struggle that labor considers vital to efforts to organize the South, where new industries are proliferating, but where organized labor is lagging. Conversely, many southern business leaders see unions as a threat to the region's economy.

Billy Birdsong is 31. His father, now retired, was a foreman in the mills where his mother still works as a weaver. Billy started there 13 years ago.

Wilson Lambert is 57. He's a machinist, and he's worked in the mills for 35 years.

Billy Birdsong and Wilson Lambert, both employees of J.P. Stevens, both peas from the same southern pod, a generation apart. But the Wilson Lamberts don't talk much to the Billy Birdsongs these days. "It's like a football game," Lambert says. "If you're trying to beat the other side, you're not gonna be friendly to them."

The other side, to Wilson Lambert, is the Amalgamated Clothing and Textile Workers' Union. It represents the 3,000 workers at Stevens' seven Roanoke Rapids plants. Three years ago, by a vote of 1,685 to 1,448, they became the first of Stevens' 45,000 workers to be organized, but there is no contract and little movement toward one.

There is no strike and there probably won't be one, because union leaders say Stevens would just shut the plants and go elsewhere.

But there is a nationwide boycott of Stevens' products, organized by the textile union and the AFL-CIO, with strong backing from civil rights organizations. It has been going on for a year, and the union maintains it will go on until the company ends actions that have led to a number of National Labor Relations Board and court decisions against Stevens. The company has been ordered to pay $1.3 million to workers held to have been laid off improperly.

Workers against the union say the boycott could cost their jobs.

Many business and civic leaders in textile towns agree. They contend the southward move of the textile industry over the past 50 years has brought prosperity and that the unions will bring inflation.

Whatever the reason — and the union claims it is threats by management to close plants and lay off workers — fewer than 10 percent of southern textile workers are organized.

Wilson Lambert and a number of other Stevens workers, most of them over 50, are trying to organize an election that would throw the union out of the plant. They call themselves the Education Committee.

Union members claim the Education Committee members, many nearing retirement, are scared and misled by management innuendoes that a stringent contract would lead to layoffs and possibly a shutdown.

Stevens had closed a number of its New England plants when it arrived in Roanoke Rapids on Jan. 11, 1956, to take over from the Simmons Co. the seven mills that ring the town like a horseshoe.

Stevens is the major employer, both in the city of 15,000 residents who are 90 percent white and in Halifax and Northampton counties where at least half the population is black.

Businessmen say Stevens has brought a lot to Roanoke Rapids.

"If Stevens hadn't taken over those mills, there'd be nothing here and everyone would be on welfare," says Robert Towe, who runs The News and Photo Center.

Stevens management and people like Towe bristle at the union's boycott literature, which tends to make the plants sound like 19th-century sweatshops.

Union stalwarts show equal disdain for Stevens' self-portrayal as a benevolent modern employer, with clean plants and the most up-to-date equipment, wishing nothing but the best for its employees.

The company says it has raised wages an average of 7 percent to $3.98 an hour in Roanoke Rapids. The union puts the figure 30 cents below that, but there is little argument that textile workers are among the lowest-paid manufacturing workers in the United States.

There is a continuing dispute over the worth of the Stevens pensions. After the pension plan was revised, some recently retired workers get $20 a month — $2 for each of the last 10 years they worked. Those still working get that money plus $4 a month for each additional year they work.

Most also got cash settlements from the Simmons pension fund, as much as $12,000 for some, but that was 20 years ago and a lot of that money is gone now. Stevens has a profit-sharing plan, but union leaders claim it has been eaten up by inflation and bad investments.

Most mills are air-conditioned and have cafeterias, but the company says little can be done about the noise from the looms and the cotton dust, which can lead to brown lung disease. Many workers wear ear plugs and communicate by hand signals and by reading lips.

Billy Birdsong has quit the mills half a dozen times. He's back as a loom fixer at $5.17 an hour, the best-paying non-supervisory job.

Birdsong was hired after he quit school because his parents worked in the mill. He moved up even though, he says, there were people who had been sweeping the floor for 25 or 30 years who should have been offered promotions first.

"Most of 'em were black folks," he says. "In those days, if you had a dark suntan, you had trouble getting hired."

Wilson Lambert likes to talk about how expensive it is to live in areas where unions have a lot of influence. What bothers him most, though, is what's happened to Roanoke Rapids since the union came.

"It used to be I'd go down to the movie over 'round the corner and it'd be 'Hi Wilson, how're ya doin?' Now people don't speak to each other," he says. "It's just not the same."

Punishment pondered

SAN MARCOS, Texas (AP) — A state court jury today pondered the punishment for a 19year-old Mexican national, who was convicted Wednesday night of kidnapping a 12-year-old Dripping Springs youth and taking him to Mexico.

The jury deliberated about three and a half hours before returning the verdict against Victor Raul Alvarado, on trial in the May 13 disappearance of Greg Fluker from a Dripping Springs school playground.

Attorneys prepare papers for Pecos River hearings

AUSTIN BUREAU

AUSTIN—Attorneys for Texas and New Mexico will begin their presentations in the dispute over delivery of Pecos River water before Special Master Jean S. Breitenstein in Denver Feb. 27.

Agreement on a pretrial order was reached by the attorneys for the two states last week, after Breitenstein had indicated his displeasure with the apparent stalemate which had developed on that effort.

In that pre-trial order, Texas claims New Mexico has violated its duties under the Pecos River Compact by failing to deliver Pecos River water in the quantities specified by the agreement.

New Mexico denies that, claiming it has "delivered water in accordance with the provisions of the compact."

The basic issue between Texas and New Mexico how the "1947 condition" referred to in the compact limits or defines the amount of water to be delivered to Texas.

Texas alleges it has not received the amount of water it is due, with an accumulated deficit amounting to 1,400,000 acre-feet of water, because of "man's activities in New Mexico."

New Mexico contends "that the evidence will show that there is no accumulated defict arising under conditions imposed by the Pecos River Compact."

The trial is expected to be conducted in three week segments, Assistant Attorney General Doug Caroom reports, with breaks between, beginning with the question of compact "construction."

Parents program girls to fit traditional role

By NOEL OSMENT
Copley News Service

Prince Charming disappeared into the forest several years ago, but many parents don't seem to have heard. So they raise daughters as if they will be swept away on a white horse if they grow up to be pretty and coquettish and do not appear too bright.

This is the observation of Drs. Rita and Kenneth Dunn.

Rita is a professor of education at St. John's University, Long Island, and Kenneth is superintendent of schools in Hewlett, N.Y.

The couple recently wrote a book, "How to Raise Independent and Professionally Successful Daughters," in which they set forth various definite procedures.

The couple believes programming toward sexual roles begins at birth, so they advise against dressing little baby girls in pink and providing them with dolls — particularly baby dolls which will bring out their domestic tendencies.

The pink dresses, they explained, immediately classify the child and evoke traditional reactions from others.

They once did an experiment on this, they said.

"On three separate days we took a baby carriage with a male baby in it up and down Fifth Avenue (New York City), wheeling slowly to encourage people to stop and chat.

"The first day we dressed him in pink, and the responses included, 'Oh, look, how adorable,' 'She'll never have to work.' 'She'll marry a doctor.'"

The next day the baby was dressed in blue and the responses, Rita said, included, "How strong he is!" "How alert!" "How intelligent looking!"

"The third day the baby was in white and people didn't say anything, except, 'What is it?'"

The point of this, she said, is that girls need to be praised for their intelligence and alertness rather than for their looks.

"We praise boys for what they do, while we praise girls for how they look," she said.

Dolls are a no-no on two counts. In addition to programming a girl for the domestic life, they are also a passive plaything, the Dunns say.

Boys are traditionally given toys that provide mind and sensory stimulation.

The Dunns based much of their book on a study done by Rita for her doctoral thesis at New York University (and which won her the NYU Research Scholarship Award). For the study, she interviewed 500 highly successful professional women on their upbringing and early experiences.

From the findings she developed five points that she says are essential to the ultimate success of a woman:

— The mother must continue to educate herself in some way, not necessarily by going to college, but by activities such as adult education, going to museums, keeping current with news, discussing what she has seen on television.

— Both parents must actively encourage their daughter in her education — even to keep reminding her about homework — and indicate a level of expectation for her.

— There must be a great deal of talk about professions, particularly about the new ones open to women, such as television work.

— There should be family discussions of values, a discussion of helping others to make changes for better in the world and a dealing with ideas.

— There should be strong, firm discipline in the home.

Eighty percent of the women in the study said they came from backgrounds of firm discipline or of self-discipline. 9 percent came from permissive families and the rest ranged somewhere in between.

"And those whose families were permissive said they spent years making up for it," she said.

The couple also applied their knowledge of education and developed a system they said can help even the child of average intelligence become bright and successful at learning.

They say that each child has an individual learning style. For example, some children learn by listening (about 40 percent), others by seeing (another 40 percent) and the rest by tactile experience.

Thus a child's early reading training can be tailored to his or her particular style of learning, they say. They included a questionnaire in the book designed to help parents know their daughter's learning style.

The couple also said parents should keep an eye on their daughter's reading and television watching to avoid sexist ideas. They also say television watching in general is a passive activity and thus particularly bad for girls, who must be steered from passivity.

The Dunns' 15-year-old daughter, Rana, has five brothers, so it has probably been easier for them to raise her according to their dictates.

DEAR ABBY

Young man thinks God made mistake

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I am a 24-year-old born-again Christian. I studied for the priesthood, but dropped out because I felt I wasn't "good" enough to serve the Lord while living a lie. I am now in training to be a male nurse.

The lie I am living is that I have always wanted to be a woman. I FEEL like a woman inside. I love all feminine activities — cooking, sewing, decorating — yet I am very athletic. I was encouraged to try out for the U.S. Olympic Track Team. (I broke many records in high school.) I detest hunting and fishing; never could I kill a living thing.

I am not a homosexual, but this desire to live as a woman is about to destroy me. Where can I get a sex change operation? I will go anywhere. How much would one cost? I will save a lifetime if necessary. I would rather be dead than go on living like this.

If the Lord really loves me, why did he give me a man's body with all the feelings and desires of a woman?

I have felt this way as long as I can remember. Please help me.— MISERABLE IN MAINE

DEAR MISERABLE: The Lord created all of us, and why He gave you a man's body, but the feelings of a woman, I do not know. Nature sometimes makes biological blunders, as is the case when one's body does not conform with his (or her) natural feelings. You are not alone. Don't feel guilty. One cannot help what he feels.

I believe that knowledge, skill and talent are divinely inspired, and that those scientists, physicians and surgeons whose combined efforts have made sex-change surgery possible, do so with God's guidance. For information about sex-reassignment surgery and related problems, write to:

DEAR ABBY: In a recent column you recounted the instance of a woman who was trying to talk her boyfriend into going with her to a nudist retreat. (He wasn't too keen on the idea.) Do you suppose she just wanted to air their differences?— FURRUM, VA.

DEAR FURRUM: Either that, or just bare them.

Ties succeeding as top accessory

The Washington Post

PARIS — The ties have it as the No. 1 accessory for women in Paris this fall.

It's not a sober comment on the war between the sexes but an amusing takeoff on a clothing item that men acquire at the rate of 300 million a year in the United States alone.

Young Parisians are adding them now to their oversize, mannish clothes, and some designers looped them around the necklines of big, loose dresses and soft blouses in their ready-to-wear collections for next spring.

"It's not a heavy women's liberation trip," said Saks Fifth Avenue fashion coordinator Marilise Flusser, in Paris to see the shows. "It's a way of being friendly to men."

Rather than tying them snugly, they're being word loose and unchoking. Skinny versions are favored, though scenic souvenir numbers have been spotted around the necks of well-dressed women.

The idea's not new. Ties have always been part of the chic riding ensemble for women. George Sand wore them with her masculine dress in the 1840s when many women had them as part of their garb for sports. Marlene Dietrich was a frequent tie wearer and Judy Garland often used them to add piquancy to her costumes.

In fashion terms, they're this season's successor to the scarf, a point well made by Kenzo, who showed super-sized ties that reached to the knees.

Kids take over housework

By JOYCE STILLEY
AP Newsfeatures Writer

> "It had never occurred to me that anybody could manage without me. But, I discovered I had some very competent children."
> Eleanor Berman

NEW YORK (AP) — Eleanor Berman admits that if it hadn't been a matter of absolute necessity, she'd still be doing the cooking and housekeeping and her children "wouldn't have been asked to do a thing."

But after her divorce she had to get a better-paying job than part-time work she had been doing. That meant commuting to New York City from her Stamford, Conn., home. And commuting meant she'd get home late, as well as tired.

"The kids (daughter, then 10. sons 13 and 15) said they didn't want a 'baby sitter' and offered to take dare of things and do the cooking," their mother related in an interview. "So we decided to give it a try."

That was four years ago, and the experiment worked out so well that Ms. Berman has written a book about it, "The Cooperating Family."

"It had never occurred to me that anybody could manage without me," she said ruefully. "But I discovered I had some very competent children. The boys really got into it; they looked through cookbooks and their menus were more interesting than mine, since I had gotten into a routine.

The whole family sat down after Saturday breakfast and planned the week's menus. At first Ms. Berman did the shopping but the kids, finding they didn't have the ingredients to make their sometimes exotic dishes, soon took that task over.

It was the older son, Tom, who cooked the first meal she remembers: veal parmigiana.

"The kitchen looked like a disaster area. Pots I hadn't seen for six months were strewn all over. But Tom was delighted. His brother, Eric, who had to do the dishes that night, was not so delighted.'

Eventually it worked out that Eric was turning into a good cook and enjoyed it. Tom, who didn't like it, volunteered to do the dishes and let his brother do his share of the cooking.

"One reason it worked is because the kids had a say in the planning," says Ms. Berman, who thinks her setup can work in any family, whether it has a single or working mother or single father. She interviewed a number of people who were following similar plans with varying degrees of success.

"Some single fathers had involved their kids without thinking," she said. "Their typical comment was 'We all eat, don't we?' But many women found it hard to give up their burden. I think we are all programmed to believe that whether we're working or not, it's a mother who takes care of everything in the house: cooking, cleaning, laundry. Very few families ask the children to do anything."

Many women, she added, said it was too much trouble to get the youngsters to do the job right, or said that they felt guilty about asking them to help.

"You have to be a little more relaxed about what you want the house to look like," Ms. Berman advises. "Praise is the whole key. Kids basically want to please and if you let them know what they do matters, they feel good about themselves."

When setting up a program, she cautions, be specific and have a written routine, at least until it's established, to avoid fights over whose turn it is to do what. Rotate the bad jobs so nobody gets stuck all the time with something he hates.

If she were going to start over in raising a family, she'd do it differently, says Ms. Berman, who believes mothers who hope to have both family and career should train their children early to help.

"As soon as they're old enough to manage something, let them take over, even if they don't dust as efficiently as you. Gradually as they get older let them take over more responsiblity," she urges. "We underestimate our kids."

Her son Tom, now 19, is in college, and Eric, 17, and Terry, 14 sharing the work, but all three have learned from the experience, says their mother, a publicist and freelance writer who is working on a book.

"They feel good about themselves participating almost on an adult level. They're so much more independent. Their position in the home has changed. My treatment of them has changed. Instead of being someone to take care of and do for, they're more like my partners."

AT WIT'S END

Family stays tuned-up with car talk

By ERMA BOMECK

The other night as my husband and I readied for bed, he said, "Are all the cars in?"

"The VW is spending the night at a friend's house," I said, "The Pinto had a bad night and is getting a tune-up, and the gas guzzler is cramming for an emissions test."

"What time does the van want to get rolling in the morning?"

"Early, he's meeting the jeep at the garage."

I turned to him, "When did we start speaking automotive fluently?"

He thought for a moment. "That's all we talk about anymore, isn't it?"

I nodded. "What's happened to the American family? Our daughter never says hello anymore. All she ever says is, 'My transmission sounds funny.'"

"When was the last time our son ever sat down and discussed anything except his loose tailpipe?"

"Our entire life revolves around insurance rates, repairs, payments, estimates and oil change. We never say anything meaningful anymore."

"All our friends do it...at least the ones with teenagers. Do you realize we spent the entire weekend discussing battery warranties and special insurance discounts?"

"Yeah, incidentally, we should look into the company that offers a discount if a kid is kind to his mother and doesn't bite his nails?"

"There you go again," I said. "I'm sick of being just another pretty mustang. I want this family to have some identity again."

Just then our son stopped by the bedroom, "Can someone give me a ride to the service station tomorrow? I need a tune-up."

"You look thin," I observed.

"Speaking of weight, Dad, what oil should I use?"

"Talk to me, son, I'm your mother. What have you been doing lately?"

"I cleaned my spark plugs, rotated my tires, and I think I've met the motor I want to spend the rest of my life with."

Our daughter joined us. "Aren't you going to speak to your sister?" I asked irritably.

"You're idling a little ragged."

She looked at him suspiciously. "What do you want? You only talk nice to me when you want something."

Lagerfeld invents new clothes

By NINA HYDE
Washington Post

PARIS — Karl Lagerfeld is Paris' big idea man. While other designers sift trends and come up with modern, attractive ways to wear established clothing, Lagerfeld keeps busy inventing entirely new clothes that never occurred to any one else. He's the rare designer who starts each season from scratch, promising his customer that while nothing she already owns of his is likely to go out of date (since others are just starting to copy it), each season collection is a composition of a lot of new ideas.

In the past he dreamed up unlined and shapeless clothing where the layers act as lining for each other and can be worn independently. The dress in two parts that ties on each side of the waist was his idea and so was a brand new construction in putting sleeves into a coat by attaching them to the collar rather than sewing them to the body of the coat.

The ideas flow non-stop in his current collection. Even when they are based on a romantic personality like Louis XIV's sister, the Grande Mademoiselle who wore britches under her dresses, he does them in a modern way. Said Sara Middleman of Saks Fifth Avenue, "he has created some of the most beautiful dresses I have seen in my life. They are like christening dresses," she said.

So what else is new at Lagerfeld?

—A dress that can be worn upside down and right side up. Rightside up the big collar has a tie which lets you wrap the floppy collar around the neck. Worn upside down, the dress is strapless and the sleeves tie around the waist. ("The world is a little upside down at times, so clothes can be, too," he says).

—Using a very old fashioned silk formerly used for ties and men's bathrobes, he has made a totally unlined skirt of just one piece (no seams at all) that wraps around the waist and doesn't flare open. Hiked up on the body it becomes a strapless dress.

—He's big on transparent clothes (to wear only at home) and does them in tuile with appliqued bands of another layer of tuile that gives a more cloud like cover than a see-through effect. For under them, he has created what he calls a French body suit which is knee length in silk or cotton knit to be worn under the transparent styles.

—His pants cut off above the ankle to show off his new shoes that are really not slippers but soles. You can have these fabric slippers (virtually the shape of peds) and strap them onto flat shoes or cone-shaped cork heels, and of course wear the slippers as slippers at home. It means you can have an endless variety of shoes by just having lots of different slippers (far cheaper than having different shoes) and slipping them into flats or heels.

—A new place to wear a scarf is at the heel. To freshen up last year's shoes or add variety to new ones, Lagerfeld has tied a shaped cotton scarf at the heel, in prints or solids. A great way to use old cotton squares.

In his collection for Chloe, Lagerfeld shows his blouses and dresses often with broad shoulders and fitting close to the chest before flaring out, a contrast to his very full dresses which preceded this season's tent shapes.

For his successor to the successful Casanova styles of six months ago, now selling well in Washington and elsewhere in the original as well as cheaper copies, Lagerfeld has done the look of the Grande Mademoiselle, the sister of Louis XIV who led a small revolution, as Lagerfeld describes it. She wasn't very pretty but very sure of herself, Lagerfeld says. He has borrowed her style of petticoat breeches for some of his evening clothes with pants worn under a skirt.

Over many of his clothes, he has put unlined duster (coats) meant for protection to make the clothes last longer, but also to make the wearer more anonymous when wearing such luxury styles. (The curator of Versailles was recently mugged soon after leaving a fancy dress ball. Such dusters would hide elaborate jewelry, Lagerfeld explained.

"There is no such thing as making a mistake in what you wear today," says one of the most successful designers. "To make a mistake you need laws and today there are no laws."

Stained glass art demonstrated

A demonstration on stained glass art was presented members of the Tuesday Painters of the Midland Palette Club when they met in the clubhouse at 604 N. Colorado St.

Fran Willson, member, explained the history and process of stained glass art, and showed some finished works.

Final plans were made for the fall arts and crafts show and sale to be held from 8:30 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. Nov. 19 in Dellwood Mall.

Marjorie Keyes, Marilyn Leirer and Lou Kirby were chosen to represent the club to appear on the television program, High Noon, to be aired Nov. 17.

Hostesses were Clemmie Taylor, Mildred Lindsey and Nettie Garret.

St. Ann's PTA to meet

Honey sweetens, enriches this recipe

DOUBLE DECKER PUMPKIN PIE

As a climax for your special dinner or just for the girls, Double Decker Pumpkin Pie will leave a lasting impression as a glamorous dessert. The frozen pie gives the appearance of a rich parfait and the taste is heavenly.

Honey with a light color and flavor is used as the sweetener. It brings out flavors of other ingredients. This is done so subtly you are not even aware honey has been used. Honey also extends the keeping quality of the pie.

The pie may be cut and served frozen, directly from the freezer. You can make several pies at one time and freeze them. They will keep in top-notch condition for over a month. This way you will be ready anytime to serve this glamorous dessert minus the last minute rush.

DOUBLE DECKER PUMPKIN PIE

1 9-inch baked walnut crumb crust, chilled
1-¾ cups canned pumpkin
½ tsp. salt
½ tsp. nutmeg
½ tsp. ginger
1 tsp. cinnamon
1 cup honey
1 envelope (1 tbsp.) unflavored gelatin
1 cup heavy cream, whipped
1 pint vanilla ice cream, slightly softened
¼ cup toasted blanched, slivered almonds (optional)

Place pumpkin, salt, spices, honey and gelatin in saucepan. Heat slowly, stirring until gelatin is dissolved (about 5 minutes). Cool until slightly thickened. Whip cream until stiff. Combine cooled pumpkin and whipped cream. Place and spread ice cream in chilled walnut crumb crust. Cover ice cream with pumpkin pie mixture. Arrange almonds over top. Place pie, unwrapped, in freezer. When solidly frozen (2 hours or longer) wrap and return to freezer. Remove from freezer about 5 minutes before serving. Makes 8 servings.

WALNUT CRUMB CRUST

1 cup fine graham cracker crumbs (12-14 crackers)
½ cup finely chopped walnut
¼ tsp. salt
¼ cup soft butter or margarine
1 tbsp. honey.

Mix all ingredients well. Press into 9-inch pie pan. Bake at 375 degrees (moderate) 5 to 7 minutes. Cool before adding pie filling.

Invert on a serving plate and let each one break off a desired serving.

Cranberries also boast all-American background

By TOM HOGE
AP Newsfeatures Writer

As American as apple pie is a time-honored phrase, but it would apply more aptly to the cranberry, that brilliant red fruit introduced to the Pilgrims by friendly Indians back in 1620.

Thanksgiving would not seem complete in most homes without the traditional turkey accompanied by a sauce or jelly of cranberries.

The American Indians called the fruit Ibimi or "bitter berry." They used the cranberry to make pemmican, mixing the berries with dried venison and fat. Containing much nutriment and little bulk, pemmican was ideal for rations while on the trail.

It seems that an imaginative Pilgrim likened the pink cranberry blossoms to the heads of cranes and called them craneberries, which later became contracted to the present name.

Wild cranberries remained popular as the Pilgrim settlements grew. Each fall entire families would gather to pick enough berries to preserve for the long winter.

Cranberry products are available the year round. But they are most popular during Thanksgiving and Christmas. Here's a recipe for cranberry chiffon tarts that should go nicely during one of the holidays.

2 envelopes unflavored gelatin
½ cup water
1½ cups fresh cranberries
¼ cup water
1 cup sugar
½ teaspoon salt
¼ cup fresh orange juice
2 teaspoons grated orange rind
3 egg whites
8 baked 3-inch tart shells
1-3rd cup heavy cream, whipped
1 teaspoon powdered sugar

Soften gelatin in ½ cup water and set aside. Wash and pick over cranberries. Place in saucepan with the ¼ cup water. Cover and cook till skins pop (about 10 minutes). Add ½ cup of the sugar, the salt and softened gelatin. Mix well. Stir in orange juice and rind. Chill till mixture begins to thicken. Beat egg whites till they peak then beat in remaining ½ cup sugar. Fold egg whites and sugar into cranberry mixture and spoon into tart shells. Chill till ready to serve. Top with whipped cream sweetened with the powdered sugar. Yields 8 tarts.

Natural foods prove reliable

By ROSE DOSTI
The Los Angeles Times

As more and more foods are refined and fabricated, Americans face the danger of too little or too much intake of trace elements. Too much can be toxic while too little can break down body functions.

According to Janet C. King, Ph.D., assistant professor of nutrition at University of California at Berkeley, speaking at the American Dietetic Association convention here, very few cases of trace element toxicity have been seen in humans.

"However, if we begin to fortify our food supply with trace elements to replace the ones lost in food processing and fabrication, the question of how safe the range of trace element intake becomes an important issue," she said.

King pointed out that because so little is known about trace element tolerance levels, appropriate government programs cannot be created. "It is therefore important for us to try to get our trace elements from natural food sources and not rely on fortification programs," she said.

King also pointed out that scientists currently have only a rough idea of toxic levels of trace elements in humans, although toxicity levels have been produced in experimental animals for zinc, copper, chromium, selenium and fluoride. "If these studies can be applied to human intake, one would need at least 1,000 times the usual intake to produce toxicities," she stated.

On the other hand, populations with inadequate and marginal intakes of zinc, copper, chromium and selenium have been identified. Zinc deficiencies were found in 74 children in Denver, and in a group of males in Egypt and Iran. "It is therefore important to establish a safe range of intake of the five trace elements," she said. "We have discovered that zinc deficiencies may occur even before they show up in serum samples, making the problem that much more difficult," she said.

Zinc deficiencies in humans have resulted in dwarfing in males, and anemia, height and hair abnormalities in children.

In test animals, low copper levels caused the development of hypercholesterolemia (excessive cholesterol levels).

Recent animal studies indicate deficiencies in selenium may be correlated to cancer. "So far there is no evidence that selenium deficiencies cause cancer, but populations in low selenium areas have been found to be susceptible to carcinogens," King said.

Studies have shown that incidences of dental caries are most prevalent in nonfluoridated water areas and that greater than usual fluorine intakes appear to be beneficial.

"It appears that in certain populations where trace elements are less than optimal, increased amounts would probably be beneficial. However, caution must be taken not to exceed optimal beneficial amounts," she added.

The best approach, says King, is to rely on natural food sources for the proper intake of trace elements. "If we rely on sources added to our food supply there might be a danger of toxicity," she said.

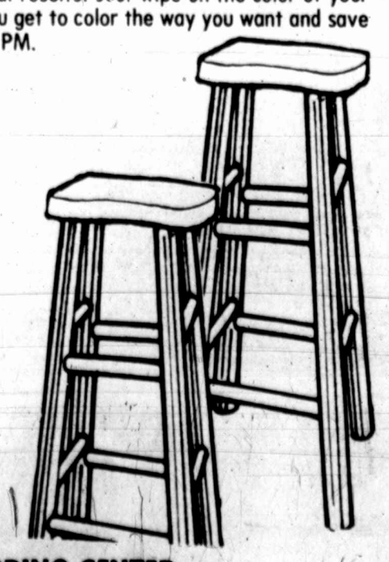

King recommends a balanced diet of natural foods containing trace elements such as cereals (whole grain, not enriched or refined), dark leafy vegetables and protein foods such as animal protein, beans and legumes as well as milk. Syntheic or fabricated foods such as nondairy creams, milk, eggs and meatlike products should be avoided unless necessary.

Catering to nutritional needs of older persons

By JEANNETTE BRANIN
Copley News Service

When older people were asked their most serious problems, in a survey sponsored by the National Council on Aging, they listed these in order of concern: fear of crime, fear of poor health, fear of poverty and loneliness.

So, when a nutrition program for the elderly was set up through the Older Americans Act of 1965 (HR3704), it was declared that the purpose of the program, known as Title VII, would be to provide persons at least 60 years of age and their spouses, regardless of age, with nutritious meals and supportive services.

The focus is to serve persons with low incomes who cannot afford to eat adequately; persons living alone and lacking incentive to prepare well-balanced meals; persons with limited mobility and handicaps that make shopping and meal preparation difficult; and persons who are lonesome and need companionship.

Several nutrition centers to provide both nutritious meals and supporting social services have been established.

Nutrition centers are partially dependent upon contributions, and participants are encouraged to share in the meal cost. Contributions are confidential and there is no financial means test.

Nutritionists plan the meals to make certain that they are well balanced. This is a sample menu:

Chicken Cacciatore
Savory Rice Waldorf Salad Cinnamon roll Coffee, ice tea, milk

All four basic food groups are represented: meat, vegetables and fruits, breads and grains, dairy products.

The elderly taking meals at Title VII nutrition centers were asked to name three foods they liked, three they disliked, and three that they thought were "good for them."

Answers were received from 488 persons over 59 years of age. These were the results:

Foods most liked: beef, potatoes, chicken, green beans, pie, pork, dried beans, lettuce salad, cake, fish.

It becomes obvious, from this sampling, that although those questioned knew that vegetables were good for them, vegetables were most disliked.

Why? In her cookbook, "Wings of Life," Julie Jordan gives this answer: "One of the reasons many people don't find vegetables exciting is the traditional American way of preparing them: vegetables are dumped in too much water and overcooked.

"They lose their taste, color and much of their nutritive value. There are two cooking techniques which avoid these pitfalls, both commonly used in the Orient but as yet rarely used here.

"The one I prefer is stir-frying. The other is steaming."

To stir-fry vegetables: Heat two tablespoons of peanut oil, or sesame oil, or olive oil, or a combination of oil and butter, in a heavy frying pan or wok. Drop in a tablespoon of chopped onions and herbs, such as rosemary, thyme, basil. Stir-fry about two minutes, until onions are transparent but not browned. Add vegetables sliced thin, or in case of cauliflower and broccoli, broken into flowerlets. Stir rapidly for about two minutes; cover and let steam for about two minutes or until vegetables are crisp-tender. (Do not overcook.) Season with salt, pepper and more butter if desired.

Here are some recipes to change anybody's mind about those "most disliked" vegetables:

CARROTS LYONNAISE

2 tbsps. butter or margarine
3 cups thinly sliced carrots
One-fourth cup chopped onion
1 tsp. sugar
One-fourth tsp. thyme
One-fourth tsp. salt
Few grains pepper

Heat butter in a saucepan. Add carrots and remaining ingredients. Cover and cook over medium heat about 15 minutes or until carrots are tender. Stir occasionally. Serves four.

BAKED PARSNIPS

4 medium-sized parsnips
Two and one-half tbsps. butter
One-half tsp. salt
1 beef or chicken bouillon cube
Three-fourths cup water

Pare parsnips and cut into halves lengthwise; discard cores if woody. Place them in a buttered ovenproof dish. Brush with butter and sprinkle with salt. Dissolve bouillon cube in boiling water and add. Cover and bake until tender, between 30 and 40 minutes. Serve with butter, fresh ground pepper and lemon.

QUICK CREAMED BROCCOLI

2 lbs. broccoli
1 can condensed cream of celery soup
2 tbsps. butter
1 tbsp. chopped chives
One-half cup corn flakes

Wash broccoli, peel stems just up to flowerlets if heavy; steam until barely tender, about 15 minutes.

Place in ovenproof dish. Heat soup, undiluted, with butter, chives, salt and pepper to taste. Pour over broccoli. Crush corn flakes with a rolling pin and sprinkle over all. Bake at 350 degrees for 15 minutes or until hot and bubbly.

Canned spinach can be squeezed dry, topped with a creamy sauce and baked with a cheese topping, and it's edible. But if fresh spinach is available, don't bother. Raw spinach is perfectly great prepared in this old-fashioned way, newly discovered by elite restaurants:

WILTED SPINACH

Fresh spinach
4 slices bacon
2 tbsps. chopped onion
1 tbsp. vinegar
1 tsp. sugar

Wash spinach and pat between paper towels until dry. Fry bacon until crisp; remove from pan and crumble. To the bacon fat add chopped onion and stir until onion is transparent; add vinegar, sugar and salt to taste. Add raw spinach and stir until wilted. Serve topped with crumbled bacon.

MINI RECIPES

Grating or shredding cheese? It's done most easily when the cheese is still cold from the refrigerator.

Using cheese in sauces or atop casseroles? Add it at the very end where the heat from sauce or casserole helps to melt it, without much cooking. Cheese is an instant food that melts readily. Overheating or cooking will only toughen it.

Sharp cheese wedges are nice with apple pie, but cheese pumpkins may be more decorative for special occasions. Shred 5 ounces (1¼ cups) Cheddar cheese, cover and allow to come to room temperature. Beat until fairly smooth; add 1 tablespoon milk mixing until well blended and shape into small balls, press in ridges to simulate the pumpkin and attach a whole clove at the top.

Blacks suffer from poor eating habits

By SHERYL FITZGERALD
Newsday

The food we buy in supermarkets, restaurants and cafeterias is filled with substances — fat, saturated fat, salt, sugar and cholesterol — that are directly related to many of the nation's most widespread and fatal diseases. In short, the American diet may be killing us.

So says Sen. George McGovern, D-S.D., in the foreword of "Eating In America: Dietary Goals for the United States," a report by the U.S. Senate's select committee on human needs. Many of the country's leading black physicians would add that blacks are the chief victims.

The same conditions that have long placed most blacks at the bottom of the economy, combined with traditional, poverty-bred eating habits, are also putting blacks at the bottom of the list of those receiving America's nutritional benefits, according to the physicians — and at the top of the list of sufferers of many serious ailments.

For example, according to a recently released congressional report, blacks have a 70 per cent higher rate of infant mortality. Blacks are four times more likely to die of hypertensive heart disease and four times more likely to die of chronic kidney disease. Twice as many blacks suffer from cirrhosis of the liver, and blacks are five times more likely to die of tuberculosis. A black woman is five times more likely to die in childbirth. Blacks, in sum, have a life expectancy that is six years shorter than that of whites.

The recent 82nd annual scientific assembly of the National Medical Association, an organization of more than 8,000 black physicians, took note of the Senate committee's findings and reaffirmed an opinion expressed by Dr. Charles Ireland, director of the Howard University Medical School, more than a year ago. In a magazine article, Ireland wrote the many problems particularly affecting blacks — hypertension, heart disease, obesity and diabetes — are inescapably related to faulty nutrition.

The American Medical Association recently disagreed with Ireland and rejected proposed dietary goals set in hearings before McGovern's committee. The AMA said that it was "inappropriate at this time to adopt ...national dietary goals ..."because evidence linking the American diet with the American death rate is based on "insufficient data, is suggestive, fragmentary and even conflicting."

But in a day-long symposium at the scientific assembly, experts in nutrition and medicine cataloged faulty nutritional traditions that plague blacks, added to the poor nutritional conventions that plague the entire nation and laid out what they called new roads to improving black health.

"Black doctors have acquired their ideas of good nutrition from instructors who have been schooled in the eating habits of the white middle class," said Dr. Alvenia Fulton, a Chicago nutritionist who once supervised the prolonged fasts of comedian-activist Dick Gregory. "While it may be nutritionally sound, to the black person's palate it is often tasteless. There is much in the traditional Southern diet that, without the abuse of salt and animal fats, could be more nutritious and tasteful to the black appetite than the most well-planned hospital diet or the store-bought, highly processed foods that black people have been programed to think of as symbols of middle-class successfulness.

"Cornbread, for example, made from yellow, unbleached flour, tastes better than white bread from which the wheat germ — with its essential Vitamin E — has been removed," she said. (In the Senate report, McGovern had noted that at the beginning of this century, almost 40 per cent of the nation's caloric intake came from whole grains, fruits and vegetables. Today, he said, the figure has fallen to less than 20 per cent.) "The 'soul food' diet of wild greens and fat meat was not African," Fulton said. "It was a slavery survival diet, and we must remove it from our lives. Not only must we teach black people how to use food nutritiously, but we must teach them to do it within the context of their own culture."

The basic building blocks of good nutrition have been laid in 20th century America, she said, but so far, government, the medical profession and the people have chosen to ignore them. "We have more hospitals, more doctors, more health cults, more great medical societies than all the other nations of the world put together, yet we continue to be the least well-fed of any of the so-called developed nations. My answer to this is that if the physicians of today will not become nutritionists, then the nutritionists must become doctors."

To illustrate Fulton's point, Dr. Therman E. Evans of Washington, D.C., cited statistics showing that the black American consumes an average of 36 gallons of coffee and 31.4 gallons of soft drinks each year, but drinks only 21.4 gallons of milk and 6.2 gallons of fruit juices annually.

"More than 30 per cent of all the soft drinks consumed in the United States are consumed by blacks, a group who comprise between 11 and 15 percent of the entire population," Evans said. "We all know the jingle that goes: 'I'd like to teach the world to sing in perfect harmony.' Well, it's certain that when the Coke people talked about the 'real thing,' they had black folks in mind, and their sales figures show it. I think it is time we considered changing some of our habits. Obesity is one of the most serious health problems facing blacks — especially black women, where it affects one out of every three — today, and its cause can be partially attributed to the fact that each of us consumers at least 21 pounds of worthless sugar each year."

McGovern had told the select committee that in 1976, each man, woman and child in the United States consumed 125 pounds of fat and 100 pounds of sugar. Further, he said, each of us drinks on the average of 295 12-ounce cans of soft drinks annually. Dr. D. Mark Hegsted of the Harvard University School of Public Health had told the committee last year that "there is a great deal of evidence, and it continues to accumulate, which strongly implicates and in some instances proves that the major causes of death and disability ...are related to the diet we eat. I include coronary artery disease, which accounts for nearly half the deaths in the United States, several of the most important forms of cancer, hypertension, diabetes and obesity."

Of the conditions mentioned by Hegsted, hypertension, coronary artery disease, diabetes and obesity are the most serious health problems faced by black people. The incidence of hypertension among American black men and women is higher than among almost any other nation or race of people on earth, according to figures gathered by some experts. Lecturing at the National Medical Association meeting, Dr. Marvin Moser of White Plains, N.Y., chief of medicine for the national high blood pressure education program of the National Institutes of Health, called hypertension the No. 1 cause of death among blacks, with a rate among black men of 29.5 per 100,000 deaths annually. Moser added that 17 per cent of all black men and 33 per cent of the women suffer from hypertension, while another 40 per cent of the men and 26 per cent of the women are estimated to have the disease without even being aware of it. Moser called hypertension the nation's "No. 1, most solvable health problem." And after five generations of animal studies of hypertension, he said, "there is little doubt that salt is the culprit."

Medical experts have told the Senate committee that the average daily human requirement for salt is about half a gram, while the average consumption by Americans is about 3 grams each day. In addition, studies by Drs. George Meneely and Harold Battarbee, published by the National Academy of Sciences, suggest that there is some important balance between sodium and potassium that is being upset by what they term an "acquired taste" for salt, since the normal need can be achieved without adding any salt to food.

While the roles played by stress, socioeconomic status and culture are largely incalculable, Moser said, the role of salt in hypertension in blacks can be hypothesized. His theory is that a genetic trait exists in blacks that, under certain conditions, makes them unable to tolerate large quantities of salt. That theoretical "susceptibility" — possibly triggered by poor dietary habits that keep blacks from getting the proper amounts of calcium and potassium — may be the answer to the hypertension problem.

In pursuit of his theory, Moser has studied black and white populations (rural and urban) in the United States and the Bahamas and blacks in several African countries. He found that while blood pressure readings were higher for blacks in nearly every instance, they most often became elevated to the point of hypertension when the diet was altered to include more salt. In such cases, the course toward hypertension could be described as: (1) a probable genetic predisposition, (2) excess dietary salt, (3) retention of salt and water, (4) increased cardiac output, and (5) high blood pressure.

If the transition from rural to urban living could be made without the economic losses that prevent blacks from including fresh fruits, vegetables and low-fat foods in a low-sodium diet, he theorized, perhaps the incidence of hypertension could be reduced. The next step would be to begin black children on low-sodium diets at an early age.

In addition, Evans said, it is essential that blacks break out of the socio-cultural pattern in which they believe that it is better to be "pleasingly plump" than slim. "Blacks have learned from childhood — when the bottle was used to quiet a crying infant — to associate eating with the relief of discomfort. Poor people, black people, with their socio-economic discomforts, have learned to derive a sense of escape through eating, associating a full stomach with a sense of well-being that is denied them through other means," he said. "Despite our cultural backgrounds and the difficulties that make good nutrition an almost insoluble problem for many blacks, we must learn that a fat baby is not always a healthy baby and that a fat adult is most certainly not a healthy adult."

In buying a side of beef, remember it is only about one quarter steaks—the rest is about evenly divided among roasts, hamburger or stew meat and waste, advises Mrs. Gwendolyne Clyatt, consumer marketing information specialist with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service, The Texas A&M University System.

In buying canned tomatoes, the best buy is the all-purpose or broken pieces form—when appearance is not important, according to Mrs. Gwendolyne Clyatt, consumer marketing information specialist with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service, The Texas A&M University System.

PARTY CHICKEN LOAF

By CLAUDINE SEALE

Bake at 425 degrees F. 30 to 40 minutes

Combine:
3 to 4 cups diced cooked chicken (1 large stewing chicken)
½ cup chopped celery
1 unbeaten egg
2 tablespoons chopped pimiento
1 to 1½ teaspoons salt
½ teaspoon Worcestershire sauce
⅛ teaspoon pepper

Melt ¼ cup chicken fat or butter in saucepan and blend in ¼ cup flour. Mix until smooth.

Add gradually, ⅔ cup chicken stock. Cook over medium heat, stirring constantly, until very thick. Blend thoroughly with chicken mixture. Refrigerate while preparing pastry.

Sift together 2 cups sifted flour and 1 teaspoon salt into mixing bowl. Cut in ⅔ cup shortening until particles are size of small peas. Sprinkle 6 to 7 tablespoons cold water gradually over mixture, while tossing and stirring lightly with fork. Add water to driest particles, pushing lumps to side, until dough is just moist enough to hold together.

Divide into 2 portions, one twice as large as the other. Form into balls. Flatten to about ½ inch thickness and smooth dough at edges. Roll out larger portion on floured pastry cloth or board to 15 x 10 inches rectangle. Fit loosely into small loaf pan, approximately 9x5x3 inches. Fill with chicken mixture.

Roll out remaining dough to 10x6 inch rectangle. Cut several slits for escape of steam. Moisten rim of bottom crust. Place top crust over filling. Fold edge over bottom crust. Flute edge against inside of pan. Brush top with milk.

Bake in hot oven (425 degrees F.) 30 to 40 minutes until golden brown. Cook in pan 5 minutes. Gently turn out on wire rack; then place right side up on serving plate. Cut into 1½ inch slices. Serve hot with mushroom sauce.

Mushroom Sauce

Melt 3 tablespoons chicken fat or butter in saucepan over medium heat. Blend in 3 tablespoons flour. Add gradually 1½ cup chicken stock, stirring constantly. Continue cooking and stirring until thickened. Add ¾ cup (4 oz. can) mushroooms and ¼ to ½ teaspoon salt.

CHICKEN WITH EGG NOODLES

By Sonia Butler

2½ to 3 lb. fat chicken
water to cover
4 celery stalks with leaves
1 onion peeled and halved
1 whole carrot peeled
1 turnip peeled and halved
3 whole cloves
12 peppercorns

Place above in deep pot, cover and simmer 1 hour or until chicken is tender. Remove chicken and strain broth (gently pressing vegetables thru sieve while straining to extract juices) Remove skin and bone from chicken-set aside.

Add to broth:
1 stick margarine
2 chicken bouillon cubes
1 tsp. garlic powder

EGG NOODLES

2 eggs
4 tbsps. water
1½ tsps. salt
3 drops yellow food coloring

Start adding flour, stirring with fork until mixture is sticky and thick. With rubber scraper, remove from bowl onto pastry cloth spread with approximately ¾ cup flour. Rub hands with flour-mash dough into flour, turning and pressing until you have worked enough flour into it to use rolling pin. Put more flour on top of dough as necessary-and roll until paper thin (keeping sticky edges coated).

Spread sheet of dough evenly with at least ⅛" flour and roll in jelly roll fashion. With sharp knife cut in very narrow strips (¼"). Sprinkle generously with flour. Pick up strips quickly to unroll, making certain that all edges are coated with flour.

Drop noodles into boiling broth. After broth returns to boil, reduce heat, simmer 20 to 30 minutes. Add skined and boned chicken last 10 minutes of cooking.

STEW

By Johnnie Mae Robinson

1 lb. lean stew meat
1 soup bone
salt pepper
¾ cup celery thinly sliced
2 small carrots sliced thin
1 medium onion diced
1 can tomatoes
1 small can whole kernel corn
½ pkg. Mediterranean frozen vegetables
3 medium potatoes-large dice
1 can tomato soup
optional:
½ cup small macaroni
4 pods okra sliced

Wash stew meat and cut large pieces to approximately ½ inch cube. Cover meat and soup bone with water plus an additional cup of water. Cover and bring to a boil, turn to low and cook one hour. Add salt and pepper to taste. Simmer 1½ hours. When meat is tender, take soup bone out and discard after removing any lean meat from the bone, which can be added to stew meat.

Add celery, carrots, onion, and can of tomatoes, which have been chopped. Cover and bring back to a boil. When boiling turn back to low and cook 45 minutes.

Add corn, frozen vegetables, potatoes, and tomato soup. Add optional macaroni and okra if desired. Rinse tomato soup can with ½ can water and add. Cover and bring to boil, turn down to low and cook 30 minutes, turn to simmer and cook 30 more minutes.

Ready to serve. Can be easily doubled to freeze or for a large crowd. The above will serve 8 generously with tossed salad and hard rolls, or corn bread muffins.

BARBECUE BROILED ROAST

By Claudine Seale

3 to 4 pound chuck roast, 2 to 3 inches thick
1 teaspoon monosodium glutamate
2 cloves garlic, minced
2 tablespoons oil
1 teaspoon prepared mustard
½ cup wine vinegar
2 tablespoons catsup
2 tablespoons soy sauce
1 tablespoon Worcestershire
1 teaspoon salt
½ teaspoon pepper

Sprinkle meat with monosodium glutamate. Cook garlic in oil until tender, but not browned. Remove from heat and add mustard, vinegar, catsup, soy sauce, Worcestershire sauce, salt and pepper. Place roast in heavy duty plastic bag and pour in marinade. Seal bag and place on baking sheet. Marinate meat 36 to 48 hours in refrigerator. Turn bag at intervals.

Lift meat from marinade and broil 3 inches from heat in oven broiler or over coals. Baste with remaining marinade frequently. Cooking time depends on fire, thickness of meat and degree of doneness desired. A 2-inch thick roast will be browned outside and rare inside after about 10 to 15 minutes on each side. To serve, place roast on cutting board, preferably one with a well to catch juice, and carve in thin diagonal slices against grain of meat.

Will you fit fall fashions?

Ms. Mildred Huseman can, thanks to Pat Walker's reducing system.

Ms. Huseman's story:

"'A nice dressy dress,' I said to the saleslady. She looked me over and said 'Well, let's see if we have anything to fit you!' Hurt? Yes, I was hurt. The truth was the saleslady was right. I was very overweight and unhappy about my appearance. My clothes did not look good on me and I never felt pretty.

Then I discovered Pat Walker's.

I have lost 47 pounds and 60¼ inches and I'm not through yet.

I enjoy buying clothes now, I get outside to do yard work, our family goes boating, my husband and I have joined a square dance club. I am enjoying life. Thank you Pat Walker's."

Desertion from Navy at unprecedented high

By GEORGE C. WILL
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — More sailors are deserting today than at any time in the U.S. Navy's 202-year history.

Navy leaders, in confirming that the desertion rate for the fiscal year that ended last month was a record 31.7 for every 1,000 enlisted persons, said they have set up a service-wide task force to combat the problem.

Basically, Navy leaders said, today's young sailor looks upon his Navy service as a job rather than an obligation and quits to get out of additional sea duty.

"We've got to find the motivators" for staying in the service, said Rear Adm. Carl J. Seiberlich, the Navy's deputy personnel director who heads the new task force charged with slowing the exodus. "Who are the guys out there who want to go to sea?"

Seventy-nine per cent of the sailors who go absent without leave for more than 30 days are attached to a ship, not serving ashore, said Seiberlich. Being absent for more tha 30 days is considered desertion.

Sieberlich said that in fiscal 1977, there were 14,539 desertions out of a total enlisted force of 459,857 people.

The current 31.7 Navy desertion rate is almost six times the World War II high of 5.5 desertions per 1,000 service people; more than triple the Korean War high of 8.7, and more than double the Vietnam war peak rate of 13.6.

The message there, said Seiberlich, is that when sailors sense their work is vital to the national interest, they do their duty. The Navy, he added, must now find a way to instill this sense of mission in peacetime.

As it is now, deserting can be the fastest way out of the Navy for sailors disenchanted with sea duty. Because the intent to desert is so difficult to prove in a court martial, Seiberlich said convictions for desertion are rare. Instead, the Navy usually discharged the sailor.

Although such discharges are less than honorable, Seiberlich and Rear Adm. William R. Smedberg IV, the Navy's manpower planning director, said this has failed to stem the desertions.

"If you don't mind a bad piece of paper," said Smedberg, desertion can be the fastest way out. "We ought to get tougher" on deserters, he added.

"But that's tough in today's society," said Seiberlich, adding that the military services are a reflection of conditions in society generally.

Surveys show that sailors desert because they cannot stand the separation that comes from serving aboard ship nor the working conditions at sea and in port during overhaul.

"The fellow you enlist today looks at you as an employer," said Seiberlich. "He has a contract with us," but does not always look upon it as binding. "He doesn't think it's really bad to quit a job," no matter if it is in the Navy or anywhere else.

Seiberlich and Smedberg conceded that the Navy and other services are making themselves look like employers by stressing in their recruiting the job opportunities in the military.

Most of the sailors — 72 per cent — who decide to desert are between 18 and 20 years old, the Navy said.

Also, said the Navy, a profile of deserters indicates that 92 per cent of them were on their first tours of duty and 66 per cent of them were in the lower mental categories.

Sieberlich said he hopes to complete within six weeks a draft of master plan for combatting desertion and other causes of attrition.

Improved training for officers and enlisted people; cash bonuses for enlisting for sea duty; new stress on the traditional values of duty and country — all are among the changes either underway or under consideration.

Seiberlich said he sees no way to reduce the current ship deploment of about six months since there is no desire to reduce the number of warships on duty in the Mediterranean and Pacific.

Also, he said, the work week while in port for overhaul must be long to assure that the ship will be able to relieve another ship at sea on time. Otherwise, the sailors would have to stay at sea longer than six months.

Latest Pentagon figures show the other services have desertion problems too, with the Marines registering the highest rate of all in fiscal 1976 — 69.2 desertions for every 1,000 enlisted persons. But this is of little comfort to Navy leaders because their desertion rate is continuing to climb while that of the other services is falling.

The Navy desertion rate shot up from 13.6 per 1,000 persons in fiscal 1973 to 21.2 in fiscal 1974; 22.4 in fiscal 1975; 24.8 in fiscal 1976, and 31.7 in fiscal 1977. Women deserters are rare, currently representing less than 1 per cent of the incidents.

In comparison to the 1976 desertion rates of the Navy and Marine Corps, the Army registered 17.7 desertions per 1,000 enlisted people that same fiscal year and the Air Force, 1.2 desertions per 1,000.

Cricket losing out in Singapore

By KENNETH L. WHITING

SINGAPORE (AP) — The police and armed forces here have switched their saluting style from British to American.

The English language, long regarded as one of the most important things the British left behind in India, came under attack there last year. Former minister of state for law Syed Muhammed complained "The language of our former rulers is still with us, an obstacle to progress."

Asians sip tea in once sacrosanct British clubs from Kuala Lumpur to Calcutta.

With the exception of Hong Kong, British colonial rule is a thing of the past in this part of the world. And cricket, a sporting symbol of the imperial presence, is fading along with memories of empire.

Ardent nationalists attack it as a colonial relic. In Sri Lanka, which Britain called Ceylon, the government campaigned last year to ban cricket as "a reactionary game left behind by British colonialists," according to a Colombo newspaper.

Mostly, however, the game with its genteel rituals and arcane rules is losing favor to other sports or leisure activities.

A survey by the Singapore Sports Council found only 550 active cricketers in a population of 2.2 million. Ice skating (there are two indoor rinks 77 miles north of the equator), cycling, boxing, softball, shooting and roller skating are more popular, the council found.

Soccer is the top sport, with badminton a close second. Basketball and ping pong are also popular.

The tennis boom that swept the United States several years ago has finally reached Singapore and one sporting goods dealer estimates that it may be second only to soccer in another couple of years.

Cricket has been played in England for at least 700 years and in Singapore since 1884.

Its decline is traced directly to the withdrawal of thousands of British troops based here until the late 1960s and early 1970s, a measure of how closely the sport was linked to the British presence.

A half-dozen British service teams of 11 men each were replaced by a single ANZUK (Australia-New Zealand-United Kingdom) team. After the Australians pulled out, this was reduced to the New Zealand forces' team.

Another blow came when cricket was dropped as an official schoolboy sport. Only eight teams entered the interschool tournament last summer, against twice as many a few years ago.

Neighboring Malaysia also cut cricket but has decided to reintroduce the sport in schools next year after noticing a decline in the standard of play among youths.

Delay in trial to be asked

HOUSTON (AP) — A motion by the Morman Church for a delay in the start of the trial on the validity of an alleged handwritten Howard Hughes will is to be argued next Monday before Houston Probate Judge Pat Gregory.

In the motion, church attorneys argued that the local trial scheduled to begin Monday would conflict with a trial on the same document which began this week in Las Vegas.

Gregory last week rejected a similar motion from top Hughes aide Noah Dietrich, the designated executor in the purported will.

The three-page document, which leaves part of the huge estate to the church, was discovered April 27, 1976, on a desk in the church headquarters in Salt Lake City.

Local church attorney C. Lee Caldwell said a fair and impartial trial on the validity of the "will" is impossible in both places at the same time.

"Witnesses needed for the trial in Las Vegas cannot be here at the same time they are testifying out there," he said.

Texas hopes to prove the late billionaire was a resident of the state. Texas has a state inheritance tax. The administrators of the estate contend he was a legal resident of Nevada at the time of his death. Nevada does not have a state inheritance tax.

Career woman finds time to whip up banquets

By TOM HOGE
AP Newsfeatures Writer

Many of us would like to entertain on a large scale but are intimidated by the prospect of long hours in the kitchen before we greet the guests. Not necessarily so.

I know a career woman who thinks nothing of whipping up a spread for 25 or 30 people, even though she puts in a full week at her job.

I have in mind Madeleine Carabo-Cone, who has made quite a reputation with her method of teaching preschool and elementary grade youngsters in fundamentals of music by developing perception and reading skill along with rhythmic coordination.

When not flying off to Moscow or some other capital to lecture before groups like the International Society for Music Education, my friend relaxes in her kitchen making her specialty which is a casserole in one form or another.

Carabo has several casseroles she favors, although the word is being used loosely, since the true casserole, I'm told, consists of three distinct layers with potato or pasta at the bottom, meat or fowl next and a layer of fresh vegetables on top. I suppose pot au feu would be a better term.

One Carabo favorite is turkey stewed for several hours, then cut into skinless, bite-sized pieces which she marinates in a mixture of mustard and vinegar. The fowl is finally popped into a pot with mushrooms and fresh vegetables and simmered for about an hour while hostess and guests enjoy cocktails.

A simpler Carabo specialty which is also a favorite of mine is that Belgian classic, carbonnade, a mixture of beef and onions cooked for hours in beer. Here's her recipe.

10 pounds of onions, diced
4 medium tomatoes, cut up
2 cans 12 ounces each of beer
2 tablespoons ground dil weed
Pepper, salt and garlic to taste
2 slices pumpernickel bread
Dijon mustard

Cook beef and other ingredients together with the beer in a large, covered pot over a very low fire for about 6 hours, checking occasionally to see whether more beer is needed. During the final half hour, spread Dijon mustard on 2 slices of pumpernickel bread. Break bread into small pieces and cook into sauce to thicken it. Good with noodles and a green salad. Serves about 25 people.

Racetrack serves best sandwiches

By ROSE DOSTI
The Los Angeles Times

DEAR SOS: The best-tasting corned beef sandwiches to be found anywhere are served at the Santa Anita Racetrack. Can you get their recipe for the beef? Is there a trick in the flavoring? —JERRY

DEAR JERRY: Yes, there is a trick, and here is the treat as sent to us by Tony Pope, the executive chef of the Donald R. Williams Catering Co., which runs all the restaurants.

RACETRACK CORNED BEEF

1 (5 to 6 pound) corned beef brisket
3 tablespoons pickling spice
Prepared mustard
Mixed fruit jelly
Sesame seeds

Place brisket in boiling water to cover. Add pickling spice and simmer 2 1-2 to 3 hours or until tender. Do not overcook. Remove from pan and let set 15 minutes. Place in a baking pan and cover surface of beef lightly with prepared mustard. Let stand 10 minutes until mustard penetrates. Spread jelly over brisket and sprinkle with sesame seeds. Bake at 375 degrees 15 to 20 minutes or until set.

DEAR SOS: Mollie and Dollie of Jacksboro, Tex., are famous for their Christmas fruitcake. Do you have their recipe?—ALVAH

DEAR ALVAH: The Texas fruitcake was made famous by a Los Angeles radio talk-show host after interviewing Dollie's neighbor who made the listeners so hungry for the cake they ordered them by mail. When mailing became too expensive, the women sent their cookbook and let people make their own. Evie, who originated the fruitcake, was a friend of Mollie's mom.

EVIE'S FRUITCAKE

2 pounds pecans, shelled and chopped
2 pounds walnuts, shelled and chopped
2 pounds dates, chopped
1 pound candied cherries, cut up
1 pound candied pineapple, cut up
2 cans sweetened condensed milk
2 (4 ounce) cans shredded coconut

Combine pecans, walnuts, dates, cherries (reserving a few for decoration), pineapple, condensed milk and coconut. Mix with hands. Turn into a greased and floured large Bundt or angel food pan. Bake at 225 degrees about 1 1-2 hours. Cake is done when no milk oozes out when pressed with finger. Decorate with reserved cherries, if desired. Let cool. Turn out on foil and wrap snugly. Store in refrigerator or freezer about 1 month before serving. Makes 1 (8-pound) cake.

Note: This cake should be sliced thinly to serve.

DISNEYLAND'S MELBA SAUCE

2¾ cups raspberry jelly
1¼ cups cranberry sauce
1 teaspoon vanilla
2 tablespoons lemon juice
½ cup whipping cream

Combine raspberry jelly, cranberry sauce, vanilla and lemon juice in mixer and blend until smooth. Add whipping cream and blend well. Chill before serving. Serve dressing with fruit salad or as topping for crepes or pancakes or as relish for pork or turkey roasts. Makes 4 1-2 cups.

O'Keeffe: lively as desert, bones, shells, skulls she paints

By AMEI WALLACH
Newsday

"Two days ago we found a rattlesnake in the garage," Georgia O'Keeffe said one recent morning. "It had seven rattles, I think. They're on the mantel." Actually, there were eight rattles, and they were just where she had said they would be, over her studio fireplace, wrapped in a paper towel.

She had kept them "because they are rattles, and because they are here. I have all sorts of them. You know, you could cast a necklace from rattles, and I have enough to make it."

ENTERTAINMENT

Against the buff, adobe walls of her low, spare house near the Ghost Ranch, about 70 miles northwest of Santa Fe, N.M., Georgia O'Keeffe keeps other treasures: horse skulls, cow pelvises, antlers, shinbones, rocks, shells, pine cones — the stark and beautiful debris of nature that litter the high desert around her.

She has often painted those skulls and those bones — nearly as often as she has painted huge close-ups of beautiful flowers or distant views of the red mesas around her or the meandering line of a river seen from an airplane. People are forever trying to read some sort of symbolism into the bones, as they do into the flowers. They say the flowers are sensual, feminine and sexual. They say the bones are symbols of death.

But it is always best to take Georgia O'Keeffe literally. She paints these things because they are there, because, for her, they sum up the landscape they come from. And she sees them as shapes that are beautiful — the way she can see a snake's rattles as forms that could make a necklace. That is why she is one of the most eloquent and original painters this country has ever produced.

"It's as if my mind creates shapes that I don't know about," she says on an excellent PBS special, "Georgia O'Keeffe," scheduled for Nov. 15 — her 90th birthday.

"I get this shape in my head, and sometimes I know what it comes from and sometimes I don't. It never occurs to me that they (the bones) have anything to do with death; they're very lively."

So is Georgia O'Keefe.

"I have enough things to run me crazy," she told her visitor. Then slyly, "Like having interviewers come and drive me crazy." It is only very rarely that the interviewers are permitted to come at all.

After a four-year hiatus, O'Keefe began painting again last year. Her autobiography of painting, "Georgia O'Keeffe," which immediately sold out at $75 when Viking brought it out last fall, has just been published in a slightly smaller hardcover version at $29.95 and a $14.95 paperback edition. She is working on a new book, on the abstractions she began painting in 1916. And the Guggenhheim Museum is eager to mount an exhibit around those abstractions.

In April, another sort of O'Keeffe exhibit will be mounted at the Metropolitan Meseum in New York—50 of the about 500 photographic portraits of her taken by her late husabnd, the master photographer Alfred Stieglitz. O'Keeffe is overseeing the exhibit and writing the catalog.

At her home that morning, she did not look much different from when Stieglitz began photographing her at the age of 29.

She was reclining on the deep blue cushion of a white metal lounge chair set in her sagebrush-spotted paito, wearing white cotton to her toes. She always wears white or black, and all her dresses look exactly the same. Long ago an art teacher taught her, in Ms.O'Keeffe's words, "about filling space in a beautiful way." For O'Keffe that applies not just to canvas or paper, but to rooms, too, and to patios, to feet and hands, to dresses and hair.

Her dress was white, with a long aqua smock over it and aqua moccassins on her feet. At her breast that day, as most days, she was wearing a large silver pin. It was made up of unmistakable spirals — Alexander Calder spirals — and it spelled her initials: OK.

The sculptor had made it for her, she said, even before she met him decade ago. "And I've been wearing it nearly every day since. It was brass, the way he made it. It fits where I need a pin." And then her eyes, which are blue and ready for laughter, gleamed a little, and she said, "This isn't the original pin, if that amuses you. The original was brass, but when my hair turned white it didn't match, so in India, for $5, I had this one made out of silver."

She has a firm sense of the fitness of things. Always has had. That is why, one day when she was just finishing the eighth grade in Sun Prairie, Wis., where she was born in 1887, she told the washerwoman's daughter, "I am going to be an artist."

It is why she early earned a reputation for rebeliousness at the schools she disliked. And why she was able to strip herself of the stultifying artistic training she received at the Art Student's League in Manhatan.

In 1915, "I decided to start anew — to strip away what I had been taught — to accept as true my own thinking," she wrote in her book. "This was one of the best times of my life."

Her own thinking sometimes appeared abstract. It was certainly spare. She stripped her work to the bare essentials, to one or two lines that could suggest everything. For months she would not even allow herself color, working only in charcoal. Finally, she introduced a rich blue and, in 1916, produced "Blue Lines," slender, elegant and as uncompromising as Ms. O'Keeffe herself.

Since then, her way has been to distill scenes and experiences down to their essences. New York, which she has painted often, is vertical. "New York is my ideal city," she told her visitor. "European cities seem like villages. I think of a city going up," she said, raising her arms high.

New Mexico is horizontal, and made of distances. "The world is wide here. And it's very hard to feel that it's wide in the East."

She feels that New Mexico makes painting easier for her. And it takes seeing the landscape to understand why.

[illegible] Ghost Ranch patio is surrounded on three [illegible]y house. The house is surrounded on three [illegible]y jagged stone cliffs in serrated layers of red, [illegible] pink and purple. But they are mostly red. In surrounding pueblos, the Indians retain the ancient custom of climbing to their flat roofs on awkward wooden ladders. Ms. O'Keeffe has such a ladder leading to her roof.

One evening in 1958, she climbed that ladder and looked in the fourth direction — towards the open side of the patio, where the Pedernal mountain looms dark, with the highest peak arrested abruptly in a flat top. The painting that came out of that evening had a turquoise sky, the ladder and the Pedernal with a high white moon over it.

She has painted the Pedernal on other days and nights, in many different ways. "It's my private mountain," she told her visitor, after a lunch of mostly fresh vegetables and berries from her garden. "It belongs to me. God told me if I painted it enough, I could have it."

Ms. O'Keeffe's bones make sense in this landscape. It is so vast that the carcasses help enclose and define the vast space, the way a doughnut does the hole. "I was the sort of child that ate around the raisin on the cookie and ate around the hole in the doughnut," she writes in her book. "So when I started painting the pelvis bones, I was most interested in the holes in the bones. What I saw through them — particularly the blue."

Ms. O'Keeffe first discovered the desert and its "wonderful emptiness" when she went to teach school in Amarillo, Texas, in 1912. She first saw the Ghost Ranch in 1929, but didn't get to stay there until 1934, when it was a dude ranch. Now Ms. O'Keeffe owns the "six to eight acres" around her home, while the Ghost Ranch itself has become a Presbyterian Conference Center.

"Groups of Presbyterians come here from places like Iowa and Illinois," she said. "I pretend I don't see them. I look right past them. I was in Peru and that's how the Indians look — with an eye that passes over you without lingering, as though you didn't exist. Are you Presbyterian?"

From 1929 until 1949, it was only summers that O'Keeffe spent in New Mexico. Three years after Stieglitz died in 1946, she moved there for good, with frequent interruptions for trips around the country and the world.

She had first seen him when, as an art student, she and some friends went one day to 291, the gallery at 291 Fifth Ave. where Stieglitz was introducing avant-garde art to America. She left the other students talking to the volcanic master, while she went outside, into the snow.

Then, in 1916, she discovered that he had hung a show of her drawings without her knowledge and without consulting her, and she went to ask him to take them down. He was away on jury duty that day, but the next day they met, and he talked her into keeping the show up. "He was a good talker," she has said.

Soon she was a member of his circle, along with painters like John Marin, Arthur Dove and Marsden Hartley. She refers to his group as "the men."

In 1924, whe she was 37 and he was 60, O'Keeffe married Alfred Stieglitz. There were always people about — at their New York gatherings and, summers, on Lake George.

"Stieglitz was a people-style person," she said on her patio. "I'm a private-style person. I don't need people. He needed them." And after a while, for the sake of her painting, she began spending summers in New Mexico. It was never easy; Stieglitz never quite became used to it. But both of them believed in what the other was doing.

Now, Ms. O'Keefe has two houses in New Mexico. The young friends and helpers around her laughingly refer to the other house as "downtown," even though it is only 16 miles south of the ranch in the town of Abiquiu, which consists of a general store and gas station.

Ms. O'Keeffe's Abiquiu driveway burts between stone walls into a breathtaking view of the Rio Chama Valley. There are "Beware of the Dog" signs here, as at the ranch, referring to her fierce chows. O'Keeffe coveted the Abiquiu house since she first saw it — when it was in dilapidated shape. In 194 she bought it, spent three years rebuilding it, and finally moved in in 1949.

Everything in it is simple and spare — unpainted adobe walls, her shells and antlers, only the necessary furniture, her books and records. Her sister Claudia lives there now, and Ms. O'Keeffe said, "I had a fever to have a house, like everyone has. And once I got the Abiquiu house, I moved out of it. I need a place to put my sticks and bones. I lived here first, and the bones settled in here. I don't know why I wanted to build a house. Now I have it around my neck."

But the Abiquiu house has a patio, with a long wall and a door in it. And Ms. O'Keeffe has painted that wall and that door often, rearranging the space that the wall and the door occupy on her canvas, and abstracting them.

Lately, Ms.O'Keeffe has turned her hand to pottery. "But the clay controls me; I can't control it," she said. "I can't make the clay speak like Juan can make it speak."

Juan Hamilton is her young friend and assistant. He makes sculpture out of clay. His latest, gray and black polychromed pieces are fine, massive shapes that lean here, curve there in a way that is akin to Ms. O'Keeffe's paintings of the shapes of rocks.

Four years ago, Hamilton knocked on her door and asked Ms.O'Keeffe if she had some work for him to do.

"I'd had a woman secretary for two years. She told me Friday she was leaving Tuesday. I said, 'What am I going to do?'" Ms. O'Keeffe remembered.

"But I knew I would do something. And Juan came to the door, and asked if I wanted work done. Now, people won't believe me. Andy Warhol was here, and he asked, 'How'd you get such a good-looking man?' And I said, 'I didn't get him; he got me.'"

Things tend to work out for Ms. O'Keeffe — probably because she is so matter-of-fact about facing hardships, going on painting trips in the burning heat or freezing cold, camping under the most difficult conditions and dealing with the rattlesnakes that used to visit her eight or nine times a year — once even under the dining-room table — before she built a snake fence to keep them out.

She has been one of the few artists who has managed to retain reproduction rights to her works, so that she keeps strict control of which works appear in which publications. She has fiercely resisted all attempts to make her an icon of the women's liberation movement. "They never helped me," she said. "The men helped me."

Laughing is one of her favorite forms of recreation, it seems. But she brooks no nonsense in the form of praise, cutting it off with, "We get stacks of fan letters every day; we don't even read them. We throw 'em in the wastebasket."

And she is just as clearsighted about her own work. On the easel in her long white studio was a painting in progress. It was abstract, in white and gray and blue, although with Ms. O'Keeffe the line between abstraction and representation is so thin that it may well have been a close-up of the top peak of the Pedernal.

"I don't like it," Ms. O'Keeffe said with finality. "I'm going to throw it away. I'll carry the white down and make my gray tone different. First, I'll try it on this canvas, and then it'll be easier to do another."

The opening attraction of the four-production season will be the highly popular "Madama Butterfly," which will feature stars from the Metropolitan Opera in leading roles.

"Butterfly" will have performances et 8 p.m. Friday, Nov. 18, and 2:30 p.m. Sunday, Nov. 20, in Tarrant County Convention Center theater in downtown Fort Worth.

Its music and story line have enchanted audiences everywhere since the opera was first mounted at Milan's La Scala in 1904.

Continuing Fort Worth's new season will be Mozart's famous fantasy opera, "The Magic Flute," deeply loved by generations of listeners. The Fort Worth presentations will be next Jan. 20 and 22.

Third production of the season is to be Moussorgsky's operatic blockbuster, "Boris Godunov," scheduled for performance March 3 and 5. According to Rudolf Kruger, general manager and music director of the Fort Worth Opera, it will be one of the most lavish and expensive productions ever mounted by the opera organization.

Concluding the 1977-78 season on April 7 and 9 will be the delightful light opera, "Die Fledermaus," by famed "waltz king" Johann Strauss.

Season subscriptions for the entire opera series are now on sale at the Fort Worth Opera Association office, 3505 W. Lancaster Blvd., Fort Worth 76107. Telephone orders are being accepted through 817-731-0833.

Texas Tech students plan special program

LUBBOCK — The music and dance departments of Texas Tech University are joining forces to present a special program of improvisational dance and electronic and avant-garde music. It will be open to the public at no charge.

The presentation is scheduled for 8:15 p.m. Friday in the music building recital hall.

Titled "Experiments in Music and Dance," the program will include both avant-garde music for instruments and electronic music serving as bases for original dance works created by Luke Kahlick.

Music to be offered will include Tom Koester performing two pieces for amplified piano from composer George Crum's "Mikrokosmos I." Judson Maynard, professor of organ at Tech, will play Hind's "Dreamscape" and "Lincoln's Dream." In addition, two electronic works, a movement from Mary Helen McCarty's "Voyages" and Xenakis' "Orient-Occident," will be played. The latter will be accompanied by improvised movement by dancers.

Duet recital held

Keyboard students of Mrs. E. F. Motter participated in a duet recital recently in Mrs. Motter's studio. The recitalists were heard in the numbers which they presented earlier in a duet festival held under auspices of Midland Music Teachers Assocaition.

Playing in the recital were Angela Floyd, Cynthia Miller, Marietta Byrom, Kaye Knox, Cathy Johnston, Sharon Karcher, Brad Edgar, Anthony Vitrano, Susan Lamphere, Scott Morris, Ivan Meissner, Gary Saxyers, Paul Byrom, Mark Edgar, Karen Keaton, Teresa Sawyers, Susan Baker, Marjorie Star, Ann Vitrano, Gill Estes and Sharon Van Horn. Also performing were Amy Hazlewood of Stanton and Shannon Stone and Shawn McCarter.

'California Pictorialism' subject of UT exhibition

AUSTIN — A style of photography known as "pictorialism" which was highly popular during the late 19th Century and the early years of the 20th Century forms a new exhibition at The University of Texas.

Approximately 250 photographs are included in a "California Pictorialism" exhibit currently on view in the Michener Gallery, located in UT's Harry Ransom Center at 21st and Guadalupe streets.

Pictorial photography, or art photography, was in vogue when photographers attempted to turn beautiful objects and experiences into beautiful images. The attempt frequently involved manipulating the photographic process, either through the use of soft-focus lenses or putting cheesecloth or thin silk under an enlarger lens to create diffused images.

The resulting prints were thought to be aesthetic photographs, expressions of beauty. Persons who posed in the photographs sometimes dressed up to become characters from mythology.

The sentimentality of pictorial photography eventually brought the technique into disrepute, but the concept of art photography is now being re-examined and re-evaluated.

Titles of some of the works in the Michener Gallery display indicate what pictorial photography was all about — "The Limpid Pool," "Figure in Lighted Woods," "Ebb Tide," "Ghost Trees" and "When I Was Queen of Babylon."

Pickle for the president

White House press secretary Jody Powell said in Atlanta recently when Carter has an important decision to make, he shows "an amazing ability to separate extraneous matters" such as whether a state voted for him in 1976—or, for that matter, in 1970.
—United Press International

It was Thursday morning, and that meant breakfast with the press. The president rose early in order to prepare himself for the test he knew lay ahead. The nation's newspapermen doubtless were going to be out to discover if indeed he had "an amazing ability to separate extraneous matter," or if that was Georgia bunk from the press secretary. Wish ol' Jody hadn't said that, the president muttered to himself.

Carter washed, dressed and gave his sleeping wife a peck, which unfortunately waked her.

"Good morning, Mr. President," she said, smiling.

"Call me Jimmy," the president said. Rosalynn yawned, and the president left the bedroom and headed downstairs. Halfway down he ran into daughter Amy.

"Good morning, Jimmy," she said.

"Call me Daddy," the president said.

All the newspapermen stood when the president entered the White House dining room. "Good morning, Daddy," they said in unison.

"Call me Mr. President," the president said, sitting down. All the newspapermen sat, too.

"What have we here?" the president exclaimed, looking at his plate. On it were eggs and sausage, toast, marmalade, hash brown potatoes and a giant dill pickle.

"You must separate the extraneous matter, Mr. President," someone whispered into his ear. The president looked up and recognized his chef, Louis Faux-Pas.

"Oh, yes, of course," said the president. He cast a sly glance at the newspapermen, who were watching him intently, then looked again at his plate. "Take these away," he commanded the chef, indicating everything except the dill pickle.

"Very good, Mr. President," the chef said.

"I told you he could do it," the New York Times correspondent said to the NBC News man.

"That's just the first test," the NBC man replied as a waiter removed everything except a dill pickle from his plate.

"How are you today, Dick?" the president said to Richard Rascal, the Texas journalist seated on his left.

"Oil, Amarillo, ten-gallon hats, rattlesnakes, wishy-washy Eastern Establishment liberals, cowboys, the Alamo, football, rodeos," Richard Rascal said.

"What?" said the president.

"He's naming things Texan, Mr. President," Louis Faux-Pas whispered, "and you must separate the extraneous matter."

"The Alamo," said the president without hesitation. "I know for a fact it's in upstate New York, because I made a speech there one time."

"Well, you can't argue with that," the New York Times reporter said to his colleague.

"I'm still not convinced," the latter said.

"You will be after this," the Times' man said. Into the dining room trooped the president's mother, Bert Lance, the entire population of the city of Atlanta, Richard Nixon, Scarlett O'Hara, Lester Maddox and Billy Carter. All were well-dressed except the last, who wore jeans and a T-shirt and was drinking a beer.

"Who are these people?" the president quietly asked Louis Faux-Pas.

"They are Georgians, Mr. President, except one," the chef said. "You must separate the extraneous matter."

"No problem," said the president, going over to his mother. He looked at her closely and announced: "This is Miss Lillian."

"Call me mother," the president's mother said. The president moved on to Bert Lance.

"This is my old friend Bert Lance," he said. "We went to school together. Bert was a whiz at math."

"Thanks, old buddy," Bert said. The president moved on.

"This is the city of Atlanta," he said after scrutinizing half-a-million persons, give or take a thou. "I know Atlanta is in Georgia because I've been there many times to watch the Milwaukee Braves play ball."

"In Milwaukee they called them the Boston Braves," one Atlantan said. The president moved on.

"This is Richard Nixon," he said, looking at the former chief executive. "He's the mayor of Savannah."

"When this is over, you won't have Jimmy Carter to trick around any more," Nixon announced to the newspapermen. The president moved on.

"This is Scarlett O'Hara," the president said, looking at the famous heroine of 'Gone with the Wind.' "She owns a cheese factory in Decatur. Or works there. I can't remember which."

"I own it," Miss O'Hara said sharply. The president moved on.

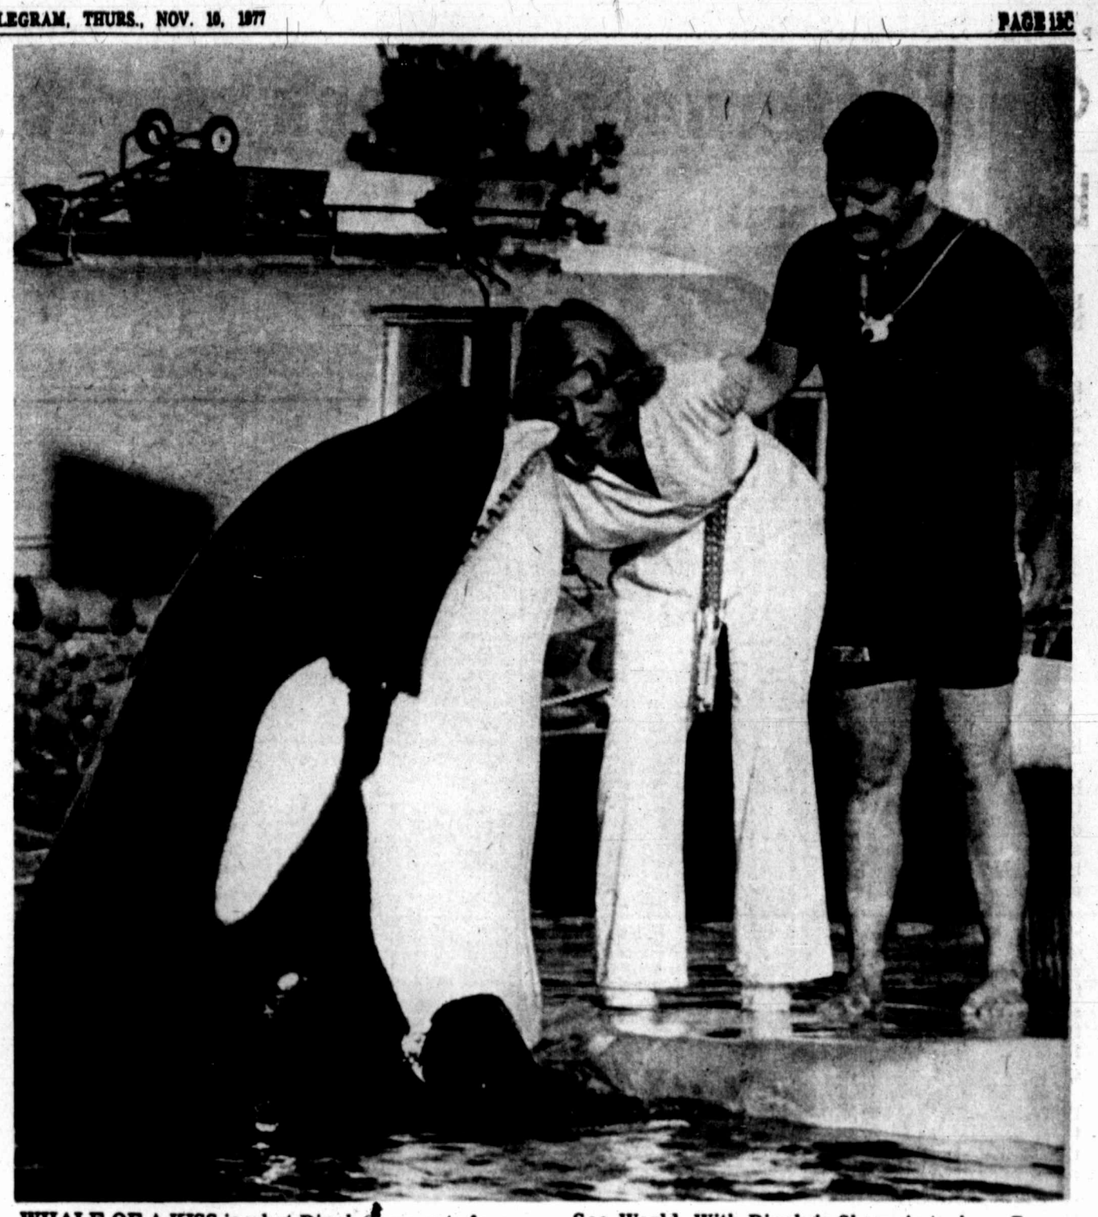

"This is Lester Maddox, the former restaurateur," he said, looking at Lester. "Lester's restaurant was one of those places where you can't be sure of getting in the front door."

"Once inside, though, there was no waiting," Lester said. The president moved on.

"I have never seen this man before in my life," he said of his brother Billy, staring at him, "and if appearance means anything, I hope never to see him again. He is the extraneous matter."

"Congratulations, Mr. President," Louis Faux-Pas whispered. "One hundred percent correct. Your ability cannot be doubted now."

"Well, maybe you don't know me, but I know you," Billy Carter said to his brother. "You're Billy Carter's brother. And now, if we're through with this, I wonder if I might trouble you for a little breakfast? Ain't nothin' goes with a cold one like a dill pickle."

Reviews mixed on Finney singing

LONDON (AP) — Albert Finney, one of Britain's best actors, has gone pop. He's recorded an album of his own songs and joined big-name actors like Richard Harris and Rex Harrison who've turned to music.

"Albert Finney's Album" was released by Tamla Motown in September and so far critics are divided.

Judith Simons said in the Daily Express: "He has a wonderfully poetic, declamatory style ... and proves himself a first-class lyricist. His songs should provide a treasure chest for other artists."

"He should have known better," snorted Barry Coleman in the Guardian when Finney unveiled the songs at a concert a few weeks ago.

Some questioned Finney's wisdom of actually putting down on wax. Growled the actor, Why not?

It isn't as though it's something new. He sang on stage in "The Lily White Boys" and in the movie musical "Scrooge." Besides, Finney has always gone his own way, ever since he started out at drama school in London, a gritty teen-ager from Salford, deep in England's northern industrial heartland.

He was 19 when he turned down a seven-year movie contract from the Rank Organization and went instead to learn his craft the hard way in stock at about $25 a week with the Birmingham Repertory Company.

He later turned down the star role in "Lawrence of Arabia" because he didn't like Sam Speigel, the producer.

He made it just the same, starting a whole new style of acting in "Saturday Night and Sunday Morning," a bleak movie about life in Salford's working class tenements. And he starred in "Tom Jones" and won rave reviews in the stage productions of "Luther," "Macbeth," "Billy Liar" and "Tamburlaine."

Finney, the son of a Salford bookie and a onetime hell-raising drinking buddy of Richard Harris and Peter O'Toole, said the songs on his debut album are autobiographical.

They trace his childhood in Salford during World War II and his amorous adventures. One British showbiz reporter tried to pin down which songs were about which women.

But, said Finney, he got it all wrong.

Mother, son star in film

By NANCY ANDERSON
Copley News Service

HOLLYWOOD — When Barbara Hale finished her final scene in Warner's new film, "Big Wednesday," with young actor William Katt, she told him with deepest sincerity, "Mr. Katt, I do hope we'll work together again some time."

And she'd never expressed a more honestly held sentiment.

For Barbara has known young Katt all his life and since the day he was born has considered him somebody special.

Katt is her only son, born of her durable marriage to actor Bill Williams (legally Katt).

"Big Wednesday," directed by John Milius and written by Milius and Dennis Aaberg, is an autobiographical film about young men growning up on the California beach.

"They surf, of course," Hale notes, "but it's not a 'surfing' film. I play the only mother in the picture. I represent Mrs. Aaberg and Bill represents Dennis."

Mothers and sons have worked together in television and films before.

Helen Hayes has appeared with James MacArthur in "Hawaii Five-O;" Diana Douglas with Michael Douglas in "Streets of San Francisco;" though neither lady played her son's mother.

On the "Burns and Allen" television show, Ronnie Burns played the son of Gracie and George, and for a season on a Lucille Ball show, both of Lucy's children played her children.

However, so far as Warner's publicity department can determine, prior to "Big Wednesday" no mother has portrayed the mother of her flesh-and-blood son in a feature film except in the case of Harriet Nelson who was mom to Rick and David in "Here Come the Nelsons."

"Working with Billy, I was right at home," Hale says. "In fact, it was just like being at home, only in the picture Billy had new friends.

"Nobody has approached me yet about working again with my son but I'd love to do it because he's a splendid actor.

"I told him 'Billy, I could jump right into your eyes.'"

A beauty contest winner from Illinois, trained at the Chicago Academy of Fine Arts and in little theater, Barbara made her movie debut in 1943 and except for playing a starring role in Amana commercials, has been in semiretirement since Raymond Burr's "Perry Mason" series went out of production.

Barbara was Della Street to Burr's invincible Mason for nine-and-a-half years and adores her former colleague as "the funniest, sweetest thing in the world."

"When they made a new 'Perry Mason' series a year or two ago, they put younger people in the roles, and I know why they did," Hale says.

"But Ray was the first actor to be physically accepted as Perry Mason. And after the public has lived with someone for nine-and-a-half years, has welcomed him into the living room week after week, it has difficulty accepting someone else in the role.

"I think that's why the most recent series failed.

"The most important thing a series can have is visual acceptance of its characters. And, indeed, we were accepted."

Burr has complained that the Perry he played was a man of limited dimensions with absolutely no romantic life but Barbara thinks the public preferred him that way.

"You never really knew anything about our backgrounds," she says. "Our private lives were left entirely to the imagination of the audience, and that made the audience participate in the show.

"By participating, the audience felt closer to the characters."

Hale met Williams when they were both under contract to RKO and "worked with him a great deal when we were both kids," she remembers.

Their first picture together was "West of the Pecos" which was Robert Mitchum's last picture as a minor performer, since it immediately preceded "The Story of G.I. Joe."

Barbara isn't sure how many pictures she's made with her husband but estimates that they worked together in six or eight.

Their show business careers have never threatened their marriage, she says.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — On Dec. 5, Neil Simon's 17th Broadway show opens in New York. He says it's his best.

That's quite an admission from the mild-mannered playwright, who is not prone to hyperbole. Perhaps one reason he is so fond of "Chapter Two" is because it is so close to him. The comedy-drama concerns a writer who goes into an emotional tailspin after the death of the wife, and who is saved by the love of a compassionate actress.

Since its opening at the Ahmanson Theater here Oct. 7, "Chapter Two" has been drawing capacity crowds, often with standing ovations at the curtain. The critics have been equally enthusiastic. Bill Edwards of Variety said "this could be one of the most important plays of our time." Wayne Warga of the Los Angeles Times termed it Simon's best play.

"I think it's the culmination creatively of everything I have striven for," said the playwright over a salad at the Beverly Hills Tennis Club.

"It's more than just a comedy. It's a blend of comedy and drama. I've tried that before, sometimes successfully, sometimes not."

In "Chapter Two," Judd Hirsch (TV's "Delvecchio") plays a novelist who undergoes turmoil when his wife dies after 20 happy years together. Through a mixup, he telephones an actress whom his brother (Cliff Gorman) has recommended as a date. The writer and the actress, Anita Gillette, who is rebounding from a divorce, agree to a blind date. They fall for each other, marry in a hurry, with some regrets.

Does the plot parallel Simon's own romance with his second wife, actress Marsha Mason?

"My wife died and I married Marsha: that part of the play is autobiographical," said Simon. "Certainly I borrowed some of the problems of adjusting to a new relationship after 20 years with someone else.

"But my own brother is older, not younger, as in the play. The actress Fay is a composite of actresses I know. And Marsha and I did not meet on a blind date. We met at the rehearsals of 'The Good Doctor,' in which she appeared. Three weeks later we were married."

"Chapter Two" seems to be the most moving of Simon's plays. It is also the longest.

"I think that's necessary," said the author of "Barefoot in the Park," "The Odd Couple," "Plaza Suite," etc. "To get the emotional moments, the play needs time to grow."

'Medea' slated

SNYDER — The drama department of Western Texas College is readying a production of "Medea" for a series of performances next week.

"Medea," a Greek tragedy first performed in 432 B.C., was written by Euripedes. Modern-day productions such as the one now in rehearsal here generally use an adaptation by Frederic Prokosch.

Heading the cast as Medea will be Junanne Brock of Snyder, with Lee Kirby of Lubbock handling the role of Jason, Medea's husband. Other Western Texas College students will be in supporting roles. The production is being staged and directed by Jeanne Kobuszewski of the WTC drama faculty.

"Medea" will have performances in the college auditorium.

Market gains widely

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market showed some widespread gains today on the momentum of Tuesday's late rally.

Gainers held a 5-2 lead over losers in the mid-day tally of New York Stock Exchange-listed issues.

The noon Dow Jones average of 30 industrials was off .69 at 817.74.

But the average would have shown a small gain had it not been for a $3.25-a-share ex-dividend, or dividend payment adjustment, in General Motors, one of the Dow's component stocks.

GM shares led the active list, up ¼ at 65¾.

Analysts said the market was responding favorably to Federal Reserve Board Chairman Arthur Burns' reaffirmation Wednesday of the Fed's intention to restrain monetary growth in an effort to combat inflation.

The NYSE's composite index of all its listed common stocks climbed .36 to 51.40. On the American Stock Exchange, the market value index was up .91 at 115.99.

Trading was active. Big Board volume reached 11.70 million shares by noontime, against 8.49 million at the same point on Wednesday.

American Telephone & Telegraph picked up ⅛ to 60 in active trading. An offering of 12 million new AT&T shares was begun late Wednesday at 59⅞.

Houston Oil & Minerals gained ¾ to 30¾ on the Amex. The company reported sharply higher quarterly earnings Wednesday.

Cotton

The average price for strict low middling 1 1/16 inch spot cotton declined 26 points to 47.46 cents a pound Wednesday for the 10 leading markets, according to the New York Cotton Exchange.

Midday prices were 15 cents a bale lower to 80 cents higher than the previous close. Dec 50.46, March 51.35, and May 52.05.

GM officials, shareholders see rosy 1978

By JOHN CUNNIFF

NEW YORK (AP) — From General Motors to its more than one million shareholders: a Merry Christmas and all that $929 million can buy.

A yearend dividend of that amount will be mailed Dec. 10 to most of the individuals and institutions that make up the GM family, which now numbers 1,223,446 shareholders who own more than 286 million shares.

Nearly a billion dollars! Not much to the federal government perhaps, but GM isn't quite that large yet, although it certainly swamps by comparison a few of the smaller members of the United Nations.

If you require further perspective, the figure isn't very much smaller than the 1976 individual income tax collections by the State of Michigan, in which is situated much of GM's 279,440,000 square feet of property.

Compare that to the 2,240 square feet in your three-bedroom, 1½-bath ranch and you get some idea of the proportions. But don't let the comparison intimidate you; GM is simply bigger than most things. It's payroll of 748,000 employees(1976 average) exceeds the population of at least six states.

The per share dividend breaks down to $3.25, made up of the $1 quarterly dividend and a yearend bonus distribution of $2.25. But that's not even half the story; earlier in 1977 the company paid $3.55 in dividends.

The year's total, $6.80 a share, means a 1977 payout of more than $1.9 billion, a record high for GM and thus the largest payout ever made by a manufacturing concern.

When GM pays there isn't a community in the United States, and many abroad, that isn't affected in some slight way. As GM goes so goes the nation, a former GM chairman once said. Perhaps not, but when GM talks a lot of people listen.

GM did just that on October 20, at a meeting here with securities analysts. And one excerpt from that long presentation gives you an idea of how one company can exite the imaginations of many:

"We are forecasting record sales of 15.5 million cars and trucks in the 1978 model year — including 11¾ million cars and 3¾ million trucks."

If the GM executives are right, one is almost tempted to ask "How can the United States possibly slip into a recession?" as a few of the more timid souls in the audience were warning.

GM doesn't expect a recession. While it is true that many a similar business forecast is made in order to spread optimism rather than broadcast the truth, one does not commit billions of dollars to a total myth. There must be some truth in it.

This is how the GM executives expressed themselves, as the analysts listened and made notes:

"Overall, while some potential problems exist — particularly with regard to Federal Reserve policy — the more substantive evidence points to continued expansion.

"Against this background, an increase of about 5 percent in real GNP (gross national product) in 1978 — which would be about in line with this year's anticipated gain — appears to represent a reasonable expectation.

"While our outlook may be slightly more optimistic than the forecast of many business economists — it is definitely attainable — particularly if the economy proves to be as resilient as it was following the 1976 pause and last winter's brief weather-related slowdown."

Good news, therefore, not just for shareholders, who last year received 3.4 percent of GM revenues, but for suppliers, who received 51 percent; employees, who earned 32.4 percent, and Uncle Sam and his nephews in state and local government, who took 8.5 percent in taxes.

Hawaii seeking film, TV dollars

By JUNE WATANABE

HONOLULU (AP) — Hawaii, which has parlayed its balmy weather, palm trees and sandy beaches into a multimillion-dollar tourist industry, is setting its sights on the motion picture and television industry.

Government leaders hope to establish the 50th state as a Hollywood home-away-from-home by capitalizing on the same natural attractions.

Some of the state fathers are also talking about creating an international film festival to rival Cannes, if not surpass it.

Farfetched? Not if you consider the lure the island paradise has.

More than three million visitors come to the islands annually in search of the sun, surf and romance.

Now, Gov. George Ariyoshi and his staff — and some enterprising film producers — want to transfer these images from the pretty posterboard to the silver screen.

They reason there's lots of money to be made in filmmaking in sunny Hawaii.

$350 ring missed from hotel room

A $350 ring belonging to Mary Helm of the 700 block of Sinclair Avenue was taken from a room in the Midland Hilton Wednesday afternoon, it was reported to police.

Mrs. Helm told police the ring was taken from her make-up kit between noon and 4 p.m. Wednesday.

CLASS RING TAKEN

A Lee High School class ring valued at $120 was taken from Rodney Jobe of the 4600 block of Graceland Drive while he was in swimming class at the school Wednesday morning, police were told.

The boy's father, Quanah Jobe, told police his son placed the ring, along with his wallet and watch, in a chalk tray at the swimming pool about 8:15 a.m. Wednesday. When he returned after class, police were told, the ring was gone.

Man found guilty

A Midland jury Wednesday found Kenneth Sterling Farris of Midland guilty of aggravated assault and assessed a 10-year prison sentence.

Farris, who resides in the 1200 block of Weatherford Street, was charged with assaulting Retha Kay Farrell, 22, in an April 6 incident.

Small commuter line may win long fight with ICC

The Washington Post

MONSEY, N.Y. — The verdict is still out, but it looks like a small commuter line will win a four-year fight with the Interstate Commerce Commission.

But Chaim Lunger, a 29-year-old Hassidic Jew trying to start his own little bus company, doesn't have much reason to celebrate. He has had a long and frustrating fight with the intricate machinery that powers the ICC decision-making apparatus.

The circumstances of this case are admittedly unusual. It all began in the early 1970s when a group of Orthodox Jews moved from Brooklyn and lower Manhattan to this quiet, tree-lined hamlet 22 miles to the north.

They wanted to escape the hassles of city life.

The various congregations — some 32 of them — that have moved here have come in such a steady stream that they now make up more than half of the 7,000 residents.

Most of the working-age residents, though, still toil in the New York City neighborhoods they moved from. And although they left New York to escape the city and its problems, they never imagined the new problems they would face.

Like the ICC, for example, which has spent 2 1-2 years trying to decide just what kind of category the Monsey Jews fit into.

The problem arose because the extremely religious commuters have vern specific and unusual needs that must be met during their travel to and from work. Their daily religious practices include the recitation of prayers on the bus in the morning and evening hours that coincide with the commuting times, and the requirement that men and women sit separately, avoiding "unsanctioned physical contact."

And, they are not allowed to travel on the Sabbath, which begins at sunset on Friday and ends 24 hours later.

Public transportation in the area always has been sparse and could not, or would not, provide the kind of service that would accommodate the special considerations. So about six years ago, 15 members of one congregation got together and bought a school bus to take them back and forth from work.

As the community grew, so did the bus service. Firt one, then two large, used General Motors Corp. bus coaches were purchased from a New Jersey bus company, and Chaim Lunger decided it was time to go into business for himself.

As a child, Lunger had plenty of opportunity tinker with cars and trucks. His father owned a used-car lot, and by the time Chaim was in secondary school, friends would call him out of classes to help them get their cars moving.

With the blessing of his congregation, which also put up the financing, Lunger formed the Monsey Transportation Co. to serve all the congregations of Monsey.

In just three years, Lunger brought his fledgling firm to the point where it was carrying between 70 and 100 passengers a day.

In early 1975, Lunger applied for an ICC license to operate a charter bu sline; he needed federal approval because his route took him over state lines into New Jersey.

Lunger had been stopped earlier by a Port Authority patrolman at the entrance to the Lincoln Tunnel, which is under the Hudson River. He was driving in the newly formed express lane set up for buses.

"I explained to the man that I was driving a bus," Lunger said, laughing. But he told me that I could not use the express lane without an ICC permit saying I was a bus. I thought he was kidding."

Although he already had applied for such a permit, it was to take more than a year before any action would be taken by the ICC, and during that year Lunger's bus had to sit for an extra half hour in rush hour traffic with the 50 riders watching other buses pass them in the express lane.

"I lost several riders during that time," Lunger remembers.

But that was only the beginning of a series of legal snafus that continue to this day, most the product of a regulatory morass that just can't seem to make up its mind about what label to put on the Monsey Transportation Co. and its unusual clientele.

The Port Authority patrolman who stopped Lunger in the express lane was only the tip of the iceberg.

"That was unbelievable," said Ron Greenwald, one of Monsey Transportation's regular riders. "Here we were in the middle of the gasoline crisis, with an express lane that was created to inspire people to take public transportation, and they stop a busload of 53 people to tell them they are not on a bus. What are they afraid of?"

Greenwald has some familiarity with the bureaucratic jumble. He has been a special consultant to the Department of Health, Education and Welfare, and once worked for the Committee to Re-Elect President Nixon ("I handled the Jewish vote in 13 states"). Consequently, he had been chosen as an informal spokesman for the Jews at many of the commission hearings and meetings. He also made several phone calls to congressmen and others in search of held in finding a way out of the bureaucratic maze.

When Monsey did go before the ICC with the request, several other existing bus lines filed protests.

"We were worried about precedent," said Samuel Zinder, attorney for Hudson Transit Lines of New Jersey, one of the protesters. "If they give this group the right to be a common carrier, that means they can start running a regular bus service. Then tomorrow, the next group to get a bus line will be the Indians, then after that the Hispanics, then on and on."

Monsey and the other lines came to an agreement heading off the potential conflict. Monsey sought a permit as a contract carrier — a special category for a bus line that services one specific group with a special need — which meant the line was not authorized, however, to pick up the general public. In exchange, the other lines agreed to drop their protests.

That plan seemed reasonable to the ICC administrative law judge hearing the case. He granted Monsey a contract carrier permit in April, 1976, and Lunger was finally able to use the express lane. Everybody was happy.

Until July 1976, that is.

At that time, ICC Review Board 2 stayed the order of the judge, and instead amended it to give Monsey Transportation a common carrier status — even though it didn't want it.

The board said Monsey could not qualify for contract status because that service is granted only to carriers that serve "a limited number of persons." Monsey, the board, would be serving too many people. But the board did not say how many was too many. Neither does the law.

While being a common carrier has its advantages — the bus can pick up anyone on the street and a whole new area of charter-type sources of revenue open up — there were also drawbacks.

The other interested bus lines immediately filed protests and petitions to be heard. And Monsey would have problems accommodating outside riders on a bus where all the men and women had to sit apart. It would be discriminatory to force an outsider to conform to their religious standard.

"We didn't want to be a common carrier, the other bus lines certainly didn't want us to be a common carrier, and the ICC judge didn't want us to be a common carrier," says Monsey Transportation's attorney, Harvey Strelzin.

It was back to the courts after the review board decision, with the ICC having to defend its decision on the bus lne's status before the U.S. Court of Appeals in the 2nd Circuit.

Last month, that court reversed the ICC review board ruling, stating that the decision to make Monsey a common carrier when no one asked that it be a common carrier "represents a manifest failure to apply the commission's own rule of decision in evaluating a familiar and well-recognized type of contract carrier application."

The court criticized the review board for trying to set an arbitrary numerical cutoff to the words "limited number of persons." Instead, the court ruled, the ICC should have considered all of the Monsey Jews as one specialized class.

"(If) the Congress meant to empower the commission to fix a simple numerical limit ...the Congress could itself easily have imposed a numerical limit (when it passed the respective law in 1957)," the court said.

Hence the entire case has been remanded to the ICC again. According to sources in the ICC, the matter is being reviewed once more, and there is no decision yet on whether to appeal the court ruling.

"The ICC ought to help the people for a change," said Monsey rider Greenwald. "All they do is protect the people in the business already. I get angry when something like this happens.

"For a whole year, we had to waste half an hour every day by not going in the express lane because they wouldn't even schedule a hearing to get us a certificate," he says.

Early Irish art work exhibit in New York

NEW YORK (AP) — The very stuff of legend is visible in real life at the Metropolitan Museum of Art here — in an exhibition titled "Treasures of Early Irish Art: 1500 B.C. to 1500 A.D.," which will visit four other major cities in the United States.

The Republic of Ireland has lent 69 of its most precious masterpieces and historic relics to make up this exhibition. Among them are the hallowed eighth-century Book of Kells, Bronze Age gold, and Brian's Harp, a late medieval Gaelic harp, Ireland's national symbol.

None of these objects has ever been in the United States and most have never left Ireland before. So this is a rare opportunity for American museum-goers to see an aspect of Western art, of extraordinary beauty and significance, which has been little known here so far.

Perched at the edge of Europe, Ireland was open to waves of influence from the continent, and often absorbed, refined and preserved other cultures.

This exhibition represents five of these waves in chronological groupings: Bronze Age settlers; pagan Celts; Christian missionaries; Viking raiders; and Anglo-Normans. What were the Dark Ages in medieval Europe, the sixth to eighth centuries, was Ireland's Golden Age, when its monasteries and artists kept alive the highest levels of Western civilization.

Many of the exhibits are special because they are quite simply the finest examples of art of their kind ever made, others because of their meaning in Irish history or religious tradition. The Book of Kells, with its illuminated manuscripts of the Gospels, is a priceless national treasure on both counts.

Because of its antiquity, it and four other illuminated manuscripts in the exhibition are being looked after with the utmost care while they are here. They will, in fact, stay in a constant environment from the time of leaving Ireland until they return.

They were brought over in humidity-controlled cases, and now they have been installed in the specially designed, hermetically contained display unit which will keep them in unchanging humidity, temperature and light for the rest of their stay. The lighting is at the level of five foot candles, to use the lighting engineers' term — a soft light in which the mellow tones of the books glow richly. Their pages will be turned over week by week.

Most of the other objects in the exhibition are wonderfully worked metals, from the prehistoric to the medieval periods, three thousand years of fine and varied craftsmanship.

Many pieces are personal items of adornment — handsome gold jewelry of the Bronze Age, exquisitely detailed silver brooches from the sixth to eighth century period. Others are religious objects of shining splendor, the Ardagh Chalice, the Cross of Cong, St. Patrick's Bell and its Shrine.

One disarmingly down-toearth piece stands out among the gold, silver and venerated relics — a splendid bronze cauldron from about 600 B.C., wrought with a strong beauty to match its domestic simplicity.

The exhibition, sponsored by SCM Corp., will be at the Metropolitan Museum until midJanuary 1978. Then it will be at the M.H. de Young Museum, San Francisco, Feb. 21 to May 21; the Museum of Art, Carnegie Institute, Pittsburgh, June 28 to Sept. 24; the Boston Museum of Fine Arts Oct. 24 to Jan. 21, 1979; the Philadelphia Museum of Art Feb. 26 to May 27, 1979.

Bastrop wins verdict

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Bastrop school trustees won their legal fight with Giddings trustees Wednesday to annex the Paige Independent School District in Bastrop County.

The Texas Supreme Court affirmed an Eastland appeals court ruling that Paige voters are not entitled to a consolidation election.

Giddings is in Lee County.

The crucial question was whether the posting of a notice by Bastrop trustees to discuss annexation — before a petition was submitted by Giddings trustees to County Judge Jack Griesenbeck — gave Bastrop exclusive jurisdiction over the matter.

The notice was required by Texas' Open Meetings Law.

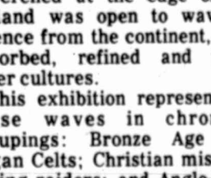

Court records show that president Olan Voigt of the Bastrop board filed with the county clerk a notice of an emergency hearing to discuss annexing the Paige district at 4:45 p.m. May 18, 1976.

The hearing was set for 10 a.m. May 19, and Bastrop trustees voted at that meeting to annex the Paige ISD.

Voigt testified that when he filed the notice and had it posted he was aware that a petition was being circulated in the Paige district for a consolidation election with Giddings ISD.

At 8:36 a.m. May 19 — nearly 1½ hours before the Bastrop trustees met — Griesenbeck received a petition requesting the Paige consolidation election. At 2:05 p.m. the petition was filed with the county judge of Lee County.

Brand Loyalties Shaken By Taste Impact Of Low Tar Merit.

There is a taste alternative to high tar cigarettes.

Modern technology created it.

Tests proved it.

Smokers are confirming it.

Today most MERIT smokers are coming from high tar cigarettes—many from brands they had been loyal to for years.

Yet they're switching to—and sticking with—MERIT.

The reason is a real advance in tobacco technology that resulted in a way to boost natural tobacco flavor without the usual corresponding increase in tar.

It's called 'Enriched Flavor' tobacco. MERIT and MERIT 100's were both packed with this special tobacco. And taste-tested against a number of higher tar cigarettes.

Overall, smokers reported they liked the taste of both MERIT and MERIT 100's as much as the taste of the higher tar cigarettes tested.

Cigarettes having up to 60% more tar!

Only one cigarette has 'Enriched Flavor' tobacco.

And you can taste it.

Dallas best of weak league

By BOB OATES
The Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES — Going into the last six weeks of the season, the Oakland Raiders, Denver Broncos and Baltimore Colts have outdistanced their competition in pro football and most critics now think the Raiders will make it two straight in the Super Bowl, Jan. 15 in the Superdome.

Those who follow the pros in and out of the National Football League have been making these points this week:

— The upset by Denver last month in Oakland (30-7) woke up the Raiders. After their sizzling start this year they needed that as a reminder that nobody wins football titles without bearing down. The Broncos put the NFL's best team on its guard.

— Although the Dallas Cowboys remain the only unbeaten entry in the league, they haven't played outside their conference yet and sometimes indeed have been struggling to beat NFC types. About all you can say with assurance about the Cowboys is that they're the best team in a weak conference which is 1-11 against the AFC this year.

— THE DENVER-Dallas game Dec. 18 in Texas Stadium may be the key to Super Bowl XII. In most respects it will be a test of the NFC's best against a good AFC club — the one that beat Oakland. (The pros say it's hard to get a really true test in any NFL game except the Super Bowl these days because the officiating tends to favor the home team, most noticeably when the home team is favored.)

— With O.J. Simpson missing, Baltimore quarterback Bert Jones has emerged as probably the NFL's best player, but the team around him may not have Oakland's class in all departments. It's conceivable that one AFC division (the West) now harbors the NFL's top two clubs (Oakland and Denver) although that notion will be challenged in San Diego Sunday when Denver comes in — and again Nov. 27 in the Baltimore-Denver game.

— Those who question whether Denver is a genuine new power say they're mainly concerned about quarterback Craig Morton.

— The Super Bowl series (unlike the World Series and other title matches in other sports) has, over the years, developed something of a tendency toward two-time winners. And at the moment, Oakland has much the same grip on the league the others had, speaking of the eras when Green Bay

Hisle rejects pact offered by Rangers

DALLAS (AP) — Free agent Larry Hisle, the Texas Rangers' fifth-round choice in the re-entry draft, has rejected the Rangers' offer of an estimated 10-year, $3 million contract, Hisle's attorney said Wednesday.

In a telegram to Texas owner Brad Corbett, attorney Dick Moss of New York, rejected the offer.

According to Moss, the terms of that offer were for a total of $3 million — to be paid at $300,000 a year for 10 years, although Hisle would be required to play only six years.

In the telegram, Moss praised Corbett for his "gracious consideration and sincere interest."

Baseball Commissioner Bowie Kuhn has said Rangers General Manager Dan O'Brien was guilty of tampering when he made remarks about Ranger efforts to sign Hisle.

Hisle, who led the American League in runs batted in this year for the Minnesota Twins, was tagged as the Rangers' top target in the draft. Kuhn's officials said the tampering penalty would be lightened if they didn't sign Hisle.

Texas then drafted Hisle fifth behind Richie Zisk, who signed with the Rangers Tuesday, and Hisle's Minnesota teammate Lyman Bostock.

Martin zeroes in on sack record

With three more quarterback traps in Dallas' 24-10 win over the Giants, fifth year defensive end Harvey Martin is roaring through his best season.

Through eight games, he has 15 traps, equalling his single season best, last year. Martin has 59 traps in his career and has led the Cowboys in that department every season he has been in Dallas.

He began with nine traps as a rookie in 1973, had 10 in 1974 and again in '75. The club record for traps in a season is 22, set by George Andrie in 1966. Bob Lilly had his personal best that same year with 17. Randy White is second on the Cowboys in traps with eight this year.

IF WASHINGTON'S Eddie Brown doesn't beat him to it, Butch Johnson is on an NFL record-breaking course for punt returns in a season.

The league mark is 54, set by Atlanta's Rolland Lawrence in 1970. Johnson has 37 returns so far, and holds the Dallas club record with 45 last year as a rookie. His 489 yards last year also is a club mark. Johnson has 332 yards in returns to date. Brown has 33 punt returns so far with the Redskins...

One or two Cowboys have come up with outstanding individual tackling performances in each of the team's eight straight wins this season. (The club record for consecutive wins is 12, mid-1971 and concluded after two wins in 1972.)

Beginning with the 16-10 win over Minnesota when Cliff Harris and Bob Breunig each had eight tackles and five assists, fierce tackling has been a key reason for Dallas' defensive success. The Cowboys rank No. 1 in all defensive categories in the NFC.

Bruenig had seven tackles and two assists against New York and the following week eight tackles and four assists against Tampa Bay. Bruenig teamed with Harris, six tackles and four assists

Bruenig, seven tackles and five assists, teamed with Harris, six tackles and four assists, against St. Louis while against Washington, Martin's nine tackles and two assists led the way and Randy White had six tackles and eight assists against the Eagles. White then followed with eight tackles and two assists against the Giants.

Mike Hegman got into the act with five and two against Detroit as a replacement for flu-ridden D.D. Lewis.

MOST OF 1977 has been a vintage year for the Cowboys, although one record of dubious distinction has fallen and another may be in line.

Dallas' 14 penalties against the Giants last Sunday was a new club mark, breaking the 13 penalties set on three other occasions. The Cowboys have committed 67 penalties, just 30 short of the club mark of 97 in 1964. Monday night's opponent, St. Louis, also will be out to cut down in penalties in this game. The last time the two teams met, Oct. 9 in St. Louis, the Cardinals committed 11 penalties for 166 yards, the most yards any team has ever had assessed while playing the Cowboys... For the fifth time in Cowboys' history, the team has played three consecutive games without losing a fumble. The Cowboys have also thrown just two interceptions in eight games, one each by Roger Staubach and Danny White. The record for least interceptions in a season was 13 in 1976.

Passing aces keep BYU on right track

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Brigham Young quarterback Marc Wilson is so much like his injured predecessor Gifford Nielsen that listing differences between them amounts to hairsplitting.

Both have started four games this season for 13th-ranked BYU. Both are 6-foot-5 and 195, adept at other sports, devout Mormons, married to former cheerleaders, good students and want to play pro football.

Statistically it's more of the same. Before he was lost for the season with a knee injury, Nielsen led the nation in passing, completing 98 of 156 passes for 1,167 yards and 16 touchdowns.

WILSON HAS hit 92 of 155 passes for 1,515 yards and 17 touchdowns.

Last week against Utah, Wilson passed for five touchdowns and a National Collegiate Athletic Association single-game record of 571 yards.

That earned him The Associated Press Back of the Week honors for the second time this season. The first was in his initial start when he threw seven touchdown passes against Colorado State. Nielsen won the honor once.

"They are the kind of kids, the old cliche goes, you would like to take home and have as your own son," said BYU Coach LaVell Edwards.

But there are differences between Nielsen, a senior from Provo, Utah, and Wilson, a sophomore from Seattle, Wash. A paragon of accuracy, Nielsen threw only three interceptions this year. Wilson has dished up 12, six in a long afternoon against Wyoming.

"MARC IS a little quicker and

Lee, Midland JVs to play 7 p.m. game

The 1977 junior varsity football season comes to a close today at 7 p.m. when the Midland High Bullpups tangle with the Robert E. Lee Stonewall Brigade in Memorial Stadium.

It was originally a 4 p.m. game, but Athletic Director Sam Cox was unable to get officials for the afternoon contest so it has been switched to 7 p.m.

Midland brings a 6-3-0 record into the finale including two previous victories over the Brigade by scores of 20-15 and 22-21.

Losses were to Odessa Permian, Odessa High and to unbeaten Abilene Cooper.

Lee meanwhile, is 2-7-0 on the year after beating Abilene's JV here last week, 27-12. The other win was over San Angelo Central, 20-12.

Win costs 3 Longhorns

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Texas' offensive line fired out better than it has all year in the Longhorns' recent 35-21 victory over Houston, says Coach Fred Akers, but the victory cost Texas three players.

Akers said Wednesday that top-ranked Texas will start freshmen at quarterback and tight end for the Texas Christian game Saturday.

Freshman Steve Hall, 6 feet 4 inches and 215 pounds, will start at end for sophomore Gil Harris, who has an injured knee, and freshman Sam Ansley is working at quarterback with the first team.

Starting quarterback Randy McEachern hurt his right knee, the one he had an operation on last year, and is "doubtful" for the TCU game, Akers said.

Ansley, 6 feet 2 inches and 175, was a fourth-teamer at the start of the season. Five Texas quarterbacks, including McEachern, are out with injuries.

Ansley's sub would be sophomore defensive back Ricky Churchman, who has not played quarterback since high school, with Ted Constanzo, a likely redshirt, as the No. 3 quarterback.

"He (Churchman) looks fine," said Akers. "He's solid, a competitor, tough. I wouldn't hesitate to put him in a game. He's smart."

McEachern, a third-teamer at the beginning of the season, guided Texas to five consecutive victories after Texas' top two signal callers were hurt. He injured his knee on what probably would have been his final play in the Houston game.

Ansley shows only 19 yards total offense.

"Have you thought about hupping the ball straight back to Earl?" someone shouted, referring to running back Earl Campbell, who has gained 1,188 yards this season.

"Yeah," Akers replied, "but it was a very brief thought. We've got people playing quarterback, and we'll go right on down the road like we're doing."

In addition to McEachern and Harris, the Longhorns lost flanker Ronnie Miksch with a fractured thumb.

"We'll patch up and go on and do the best we can—and we will," Akers said.

Akers said the offensive line "played its best football as a unit" against Houston, led by guard Rick Ingraham, who graded 91.

Johnny "Ham" Jones led the backs with a grade of 97, even though Campbell ran for 173 yards and three touchdowns.

VIEW FROM THE LIVING ROOM

By HOWARD SMITH
AP Sports Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Among the more startling revelations to come out of last week's House Communications Committee hearings in Washington were the terms of CBS' contract with boxer Howard Davis.

Until the hearings, CBS steadfastly had refused to reveal details of its deal with Davis. And with good reason. The contract is a clear example of TV's abuse of power.

The deal, which began last March 3, gives CBS exclusive rights to Davis' bouts through 1980. Through the first 18 months he gets $40,000 for each six-round bout and $50,000 for each eight-rounder.

BUT DURING the second 18 months Davis gets $200,000 per fight if he agrees to pay his opponent or $166,667 per bout if CBS pays the opposition. Davis also, apparently, picks his own opponent.

What this means is that Davis can select some worthless pug, offer him $5,000 and keep $195,000 for himself. The obvious opportunities for chicanery are enormous. What kind of an opponent is Davis going to pick under a deal like that? A cheap one no doubt. And how hard is the opponent going to fight if he's taking on the guy who signs his paycheck? And what if the opponent is offered more to lose than to win? And what about the public. How can CBS promote a sham like this as a legitimate bout? Isn't that an out and out deception?

CBS' answer to all this is that the deal was negotiated by the business department and sports had nothing to do with it.

Network officials say they realize they made a bad deal and are trying to get out of it. But Davis' people are reluctant to change the terms. No wonder.

CBS HAS the next Muhammad Ali fight, a Feb. 15 prime time mismatch against either Leon Spinks, with all of six pro fights, including a draw last time out, under his belt, or the legendary Alfio Righetti. Spinks and Righetti will tangle Nov. 18 for the right to face Ali.

The word is that NBC was offered the fight following its successful telecast of Ali-Earnie Shavers. But the network turned it down, possibly feeling the names Spinks and Righetti were not worth the considerable asking price.

Last Saturday night's Ken Norton-Jimmy Young heavyweight fight on ABC set a record for non-title bouts in the ratings. The entire show, which included two other bouts and ran from 9 p.m. to midnight EST., drew a 25.1 rating and a 44 share. That means one-quarter of the TV sets in the nation, including the ones that were off, as well as 44 percent of the sets in use were tuned to ABC.

The numbers were better when the Norton-Young fight itself was on with a 28.8 rating and whopping 55 share. That was good enough to bury the opposition which included the third part of the TV movie "Aspen" on NBC and situation comedies and "The Carol Burnett Show" on CBS.

ABC IS all smiles these days following its strong showing in the Emmy Awards, presented annually by the National Academy of Television Arts and Sciences.

There were 10 sports categories up for grabs and ABC won eight of them. Frank Gifford was named outstanding sports personality and Chet Forte was the outstanding director for Monday Night Football. The other six awards were all for the Montreal Olympics and included a host of cinematographers, film editors, engineers, cameramen and other technicians.

The other two sports Emmys went to CBS for "The NFL Today" as the outstanding live sports series and to "The Olympiad" on the Public Broadcasting Service for outstanding edited sports series.

No matter how you slice it, ABC is No. 1 in sports, has been for a while and the others are still playing catch up.

McCamey-Marfa, Kermit-Crane battle for titles

By TERRY WILLIAMSON

With four of the area's six playoff berths salted away, the two remaining berths will be decided Friday night in two key games. Then it's off to the playoffs folks.

The District 6-A playoff berth is on the line Friday in McCamey where the Badgers host the Marfa Shorthorns while the District 7-AA title will be decided on the same night in Kermit where the Yellow Jackets host Crane for all the marbles.

The Badgers, the decided underdogs Friday, have been the Cinderella team of West Texas this year while Marfa has been one of the most devastating squads around with an offense that resembles a Mongul horde.

McCAMEY WAS 1-8 this time a year ago and playing for nothing. Under first year head coach Ronnie Page, the Badgers have rebounded this season with a 6-3 mark and a chance to vault into the playoffs with an upset over heavily favored Marfa. Upsets are nothing new this year for McCamey, however, ever since upending Stanton early in the season.

"We're tickled to death to just be playing Marfa for something," Page said this week. "We've been honest with the kids. We've shown them the films of Marfa, and they know what kind of team they have. Marfa has 11 kids that should be all-district, and they just get better every week. But we've been out matched all year, and our kids haven't been too impressed by good teams."

The Badgers, however, will have another strike against them since quarterback Bobby Acosta is limited in ability with an ankle injury.

"A LOT of people thought we held Bobby out of the Wink game to save him for Marfa, but he was not able to play. He will not be full strength Friday either. It seems to be healing well, but he has not been on it much in practice'" Page said.

Marfa has been awesome this year. Rink Polson leads the district in rushing with 1,197 yards and an unbelieveable 180 points scored this year. Kerry Barnett is second with 765 yards and 56 points. Marfa has scored 458 points this year against McCamey's 122.

McCamey's leading rusher Bobby Valdez ranks ninth with 523 yards and Lenny Luna is next with 519 yards. Marfa's Jon Polson also leads the league in passing with 239 yards.

Crane is another team that has been in the Cinderella role the last couple of weeks. The Golden Birds started the season with a 2-5 record, but won their first two district games to earn the right to earn a playoff berth Friday against favored Kermit.

IF CRANE wins Friday, they would take a meager 5-5 record into the playoffs, but this is a team that may just be hitting their stride—and it came at the best of times.

And Crane fashioned this streak after losing two of their best athletes of the year—tackle Jim Smitherman against Marfa and leading receiver Perry Grooms against Lubbock Christian before the district play ever started.

"It's really hard to say why our team turned things around," Crane coach Joe Allen said. "But we could have been 7-2 right now instead of 4-5. We lost some games we should have won. The kids have played team ball all year, and it really hurt us to lose Smitherman and Grooms. But I think our kids knew what they had to do, and they just took up the slack. I guess that has been the most gratifying thing that has happened this season."

CRANE IS the top offensive team in the district while Kermit is the best defensive unit. Crane has averaged 316.8 yards per outing compared to Kermit's 230.3, but the Yellow Jackets, the pre-season favorites, have given up only 166.8 yards per outing while Crane has yielded 228.1 yards a game. In short, the game looks close on paper.

Kermit's Alfred McGilbra is the league's second leading rusher with 886 yards this year, but Crane has a trio of backs over the 500-yard mark this year with Ricky Rives, Roy Hodges and James Fort. Crane's Rocky Rives is the leading passer with 801 yards while Kermit's Scott Edwards is second with 562 yards. With Grooms out, the receiving load will have to be carried by Tom Hughes, who has seven receptions this year for 121 yards. Kermit's Junior Velazquez has eight catches for 204 yards. Grooms had caught 20 passes for 552 yards and still leads the league despite missing the last two games.

THE REST of the teams will be just finishing the regular season Friday. Four teams are marking time for the playoffs next week.

District 2-AAA playoff winner Andrews will seek to end the season without a loss against Monahans while 3-AAA representative Lake View will host Lubbock Dunbar in an effort to go 10-0 for the year.

District 5-A winner Seagraves faces O'Donnell in a warmup game in prelude to a match against the McCamey-Marfa winner next week, and 9-A winner will try to join Seagraves as an unbeaten power against hapless Robert Lee.

In other season ending games, Stanton will try to raise their season mark to 8-2 against Shallowater while Rankin tries for a break-even season against Van Horn.

The Reagan County Owls hope to obtain their second victory of the year against Mason to round out the schedule. It has been one of those years, and there will be more to come with the playoffs—and that's the best part.

Don't blink, gal for real

TERRY WILLIAMSON

ANDREWS—Don't keep rubbing your eyes raw when you attend an Andrews football game because that pretty girl running up and down the sidelines is a legitimate student trainer for the Mustangs.

Times continue to change. There are open dorms in college, girls playing for Little League teams, girls playing football, soccer, basketball and ping pong with boys; and now girls are taping ankles of burly athletes who could squash them with one false step.

Andrews' Marjana Miller seems to be up to the task, however, and as firsts go, she is the first girl trainer for a boys' team in West Texas. Barriers keep falling.

The idea started last spring when Marjana was a manager for the girls' track team, and James "Doc" Ketchum realized that there would be a growing need for a girl trainer as girls' sports began to increase.

KETCHUM, WHO is one of the better known full time trainers in West Texas high school sports, thought it might work, but he insisted that Marjana work with football just like all of his other student trainers.

"There was a growing demand for a girl trainer," Ketchum said. "I was a little leary at first even though I thought the problems could be worked out. I insisted that she carry her load. She has to carry all the equipment and everything just like the boys. I wanted her to work with the football team so that she would be used to seeing and treating injuries. And she's been a big help. We've never had any real problems. In fact, she has treated back problems for some of the girls when it wasn't proper for me to do so."

FOR MARJANA, the new experience has been a fruitful one. In the last two weeks, she has even given thought to being a trainer in college if one has enough foresight to make the experiment next year.

"I really love it. I think I've been accepted by the team," Marjana says. "I had to go through a training period just like the other trainers before school started. I was a little bit apprehensive about it at first, and I felt that I had to be as good at my job as the others."

Ketchum seems to have worked out a workable plan for Marjana and the team.

"I don't go into the dressing room when the players are in there, and when they come to the training room, they have to be dressed. I tape ankles and stuff like that, and there hasn't been any problems. I have learned, though, that I have to walk with my eyes looking at the floor when walking down the hall," Marjana bashfully states.

DOC KETCHUM has been impressed by Marjana.

"I wanted an A student who could do the job, and she's done everything we've asked of her," Doc states. "I have to admit that she caught on faster than some of the boys. She's just been super."

During Homecoming festivities earlier this year, the other trainers sent her a long stem red rose during one of her classes at school, declaring her the Sweetheart of the trainers. There were traces of tears in the eyes of Marjana that day. So, the barriers may be down, but that feminine touch remains. That's the best part.

Last week in the picking game, I was right on 16 of 20 games for a season total of 209-69. Now for the last time around.

MARFA 35, McCAMEY 14—An upset here would rival David and Goliath, but that was a long time ago.

CRANE 24, KERMIT 20— The Cinderella team finds the golden slipper for the Golden Birds.

ANDREWS 35, MONAHANS 12—Andrews has The Booger and a certain 3-0 loss to remember forever.

STANTON 60, SHALLOWATER 6—The Buffs want to go out in a stampede, and they will.

RANKIN 24, VAN HORN 18— Could Rankin possibly have a losing season. Great Scott no!

REAGAN COUNTY 14, MASON 10— It's been a long season for the Owls, but a win would help ease a long idle winter.

MORE WILDNESS: Midland Lee 7, Midland High 6; Abilene Cooper 12, Abilene High 11; Odessa Permian 16, Odessa High 7; San Angelo 40, Big Spring 6; Fort Stockton 18, Pecos 14; Odessa Ector 21, Seminole 13; Snyder 24, Brownfield 17; Lake View 28, Lubbock Dunbar 9; Lubbock Estacado 21, Sweetwater 12; Ozona 22, Sonora 16; Seagraves 48, O'Donnell 0; Wink 10, Clint 8; Wall 42, Robert Lee 6; Junction 12, Menard 11.

Abilene backs top statistics

Abilene High forged to the top in team statistics on the strength of its 405-yard offensive spree against Midland Lee in a 24-6 victory last Friday.

Although held to 36 yards by the Rebels, the Eagles' Reggie Fields maintained his individual rushing lead with 606 yards, which is better than 100 yards per game.

Quarterback Glen Stirman of Abilene passed for 242 yards to increase his passing lead to 190 yards over Odessa's Neal Gray.

Stirman has completed 44 of 90 passes for 795 yards and seven touchdowns. Gray is 24 for 78 and 505 yards with five touchdowns.

Abilene moved ahead of Permian in team offense with 1843 yards, 307 per game, while Permian has 1,823 yards for 303 per game.

The Panthers, who sewed up the district playoff berth by beating San Angelo last week, 16-13, are tops in defense, allowing just 160 yards a game. Abilene Cooper is second with a yield of 182 per outing.

The league heads into its final week of play, highlighted by the annual intra-city battles at Abilene, Odessa and Midland.

San Angelo plays Big Spring and could share the title with a win, should Odessa upset Permian.

In the Midland-Lee game, the Bulldogs will have an offensive edge. The Pack is third in team offense while the Rebels are sixth.

However, the Maroon is fourth in team defense while Midland is sixth. Midland High has the No. 4 rusher in Brently Jackson, 421 yards for a 4.8 per carry mark, while Lee's Jeff McCowan is fifth, 400 yards and 4.5.

Lee's Todd Clements ranks fifth among the passers with 20 for 61 and 297 yards.

In turnovers, Midland has lost the ball 13 times on fumbles and interceptions while Lee has surrendered the ball 17 times. The teams are about even in taking advantage of opposition mistakes, Lee intercepting eight passes and recovering five fumbles while Midland has intercepted three passes and recovered nine fumbles.

Arkansas leans to Fiesta, Sun

LITTLE ROCK (AP) — At the moment, it appears the University of Arkansas football team will play in either the Fiesta Bowl Dec. 25 in Tempe, Ariz., or the Sun Bowl Dec. 31 in El Paso, Texas.

That does not mean the Razorbacks are out of the running for an Orange Bowl bid, but as one source put it: "Arkansas is still in the picture, but not in the foreground."

The bowl committees can announce their selections Nov. 19 and Bob Lafferty, chairman of the Orange Bowl Selection Committee, says, "In my opinion, we won't walk."

THE ORANGE Bowl is scouting three games this week — Arkansas vs. Texas A&M, Penn State vs. Temple, and Notre Dame vs. Clemson.

With Notre Dame apparently leaning toward the Cotton Bowl, that leaves Arkansas and Penn State as prime contenders.

Penn State should be an easy winner over Temple, but then plays Pitt on Nov. 26. After A&M, Arkansas will must play Southern Methodist University Nov. 19 and Texas Tech on Thanksgiving.

Either way the Orange Bowl goes, it's a gamble.

Lafferty says the Orange Bowl is "more than slightly interested" in Arkansas and that the Razorbacks are "very much in our consideration."

THE ORANGE Bowl is tied to the Big Eight which means the winner of the Oklahoma-Nebraska game will be playing in Miami.

An Arkansas-Oklahoma matchup would appear to be a natural if both finish 10-1. Oklahoma lost to Texas 13-6 and Arkansas lost to Texas 13-9. However, in recent years the Orange Bowl has been leary of matching two teams from west of the Mississippi.

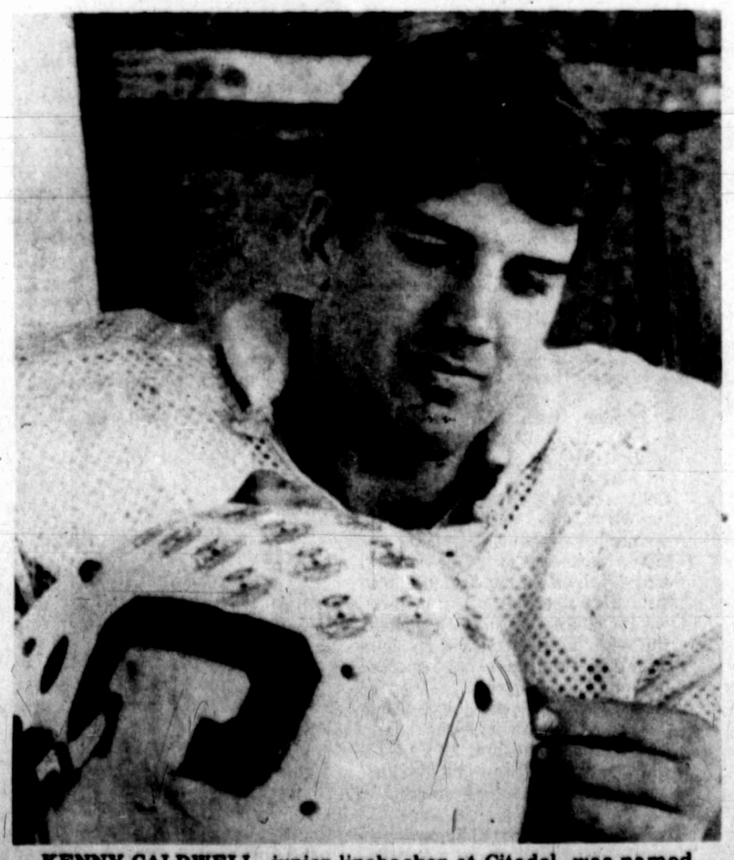

The Razorbacks appear to be out of the Sugar Bowl. ABC-TV has the Sugar Bowl contract and probably will get clobbered in the ratings if Texas and Notre Dame meet in the Cotton Bowl with the national championship on the line.

Alabama will get one spot in the Sugar Bowl and matching the Crimson Tide against Arkansas apparently would do little to attract the TV audience outside this region.

Therefore, ABC figures to try and match Alabama against the Michigan-Ohio State loser. In fact, the executives are probably pulling for Michigan to beat Ohio State so they can pit Bear Bryant against Woody Hayes.

Of course, Arkansas must win its remaining three games to have a shot at any of the Jan. 2 bowl games. The Razorbacks still have an outside shot at the Cotton Bowl, but would have to win out while Texas was losing twice, including once to Texas A&M. That is unlikely as long as Longhorn running back Earl Campbell is healthy.

Arkansas coach Lou Holtz says the Razorbacks will not discuss the bowl situation until Nov. 19.

KENNY CALDWELL, junior linebacker at Citadel, was named AP National Lineman of the week after making 15 primary tackles and 15 assists against William & Mary last week. (AP Laserphoto)

In other matches, Ramiro Benavidez of Bolivia defeated Javier Restrepo of Colombia 6-4, 6-3, and Hans Gildemeister of Chile beat Antonio Munoz of Spain 6-3, 6-3.
TOKYO — Unseeded Tim Gullikson upset top-seeded Manuel Orantes of Spain 7-6, 6-1 in the opening round of the $75,000 Hong Kong Tennis Patrons' Classic Tournament. In another upset, Mike Cahill ousted eighth-seeded Dick Crealy of Australia 6-4, 1-6, 6-4.

NEW ORLEANS running back Chuck Muncie has missed practice for the past two days and the team says his whereabouts is unknown. A first-round pick in 1976, Muncie has missed several team flights to games in the past.

Baseball loses pair of managerial greats

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. (AP) — Fred Haney, a man who experienced the highest of highs and the lowest of lows in baseball, is dead at the age of 79.

The 5-foot-6 Haney, called Pudge by friends, died Wednesday of a heart attack suffered at his home.

Haney played for 17 years in the major and minor leagues, managed the St. Louis Browns, Pittsburgh Pirates and Milwaukee Braves, and was the first general manager of the expansion California Angels when the franchise was formed prior to the 1961 season. He retired in 1968.

A ROSARY will be said Friday night at the Cathedral Chapel in Los Angeles. Funeral services will be held Saturday morning at the same church.

Haney began his minor league career as an infielder with Portland in 1918 and broke into the majors in 1922 with the Detroit Tigers. He also played with the Boston Red Sox, Chicago Cubs and St. Louis Cardinals, twice hitting over .300.

His first managerial job was with the Toledo Mudhens of the American Association in 1935. He managed the old Browns of the American League from 1939-41. Later, he piloted the Pirates from 1953-55 and the Braves from 1956-59.

Haney led the Braves to a World Series championship, two pennants and two second-place finishes.

When the Braves lost a 20-4 decision to the Brooklyn Dodgers in 1957, he was hanged in effigy. But his team won the National League pennant and, with Lew Burdette winning three games, defeated the New York Yankees in the World Series.

MILWAUKEE REPEATED as NL champions in 1958 but lost to the Yankees four games to three in the World Series.

Haney was named the Major League Executive of the Year for 1962 when the Angels compiled an 86-76 record and finished third in the AL in only their second year of existence.

The prelims are over

The prelims are over and despite the Dallas Cowboys' 8-0 record, both those who are convinced the Pokes are the stuff of which Super Bowl champions are made and the isolated skeptic who feels they have been fattening up on soft opposition contend the run from now until the season's end will determine whether Dallas is sure enough for real.

It begins Monday night against the explosive St. Louis Cardinals and continues with Pittsburgh, Washington, Philadelphia, San Francisco and then Denver.

PROBABLY, THE most dangerous pitfalls will be Pittsburgh and Denver, although a game at Washington is never a picnic.

But the Steelers and Broncos present special problems, since both are not only formidable opponents without any gimmicks, but follow that short week after a Monday night game that seems to raise so much havoc with a team's preparations.

If you'll trace the records of teams and how they fared the game following the Monday night games since the inception of the TV special several years ago, you'll find that missing that one day of rest for some reason makes the Sunday-after a treacherous nightmare.

Then, too, Mondays are notorious themselves for upsets. Even dogs sometimes play out of their skulls when they know the eyes of the NFL world are focused on them for their one brief moment of undiluted glory.

The result has been some eye-poppers.

ONE OF the Cowboys' fortes this year has been their stamina. In seven games this fall, the Cowboys show a total of just six points allowed in the fourth quarter...Two Dallas training camp cuts have hooked on with other NFL teams. Running back Secedrick McIntyre signed with Atlanta while quarterback Steve DeBerg has been activated by San Francisco...

There is a suspicion that some of Dallas' training camp cuts at Thousand Oaks, Calif., are just staying on and playing for California Lutheran. At least Lutheran's record indicates it is getting better than average talent.

CLC has a better winning percentage than Notre Dame, 78 per cent, with winning seasons in 14 of the last 16...

After starting Preston Pearson at halfback Sunday against the Giants, Coach Tom Landry turned the job over to Tony Dorsett after the first period in a departure from his alternating policy for the two followed previously.

"I wanted to give Tony some more experience. He looked pretty good there in the second quarter and we weren't doing much of anything else." Landry said.

Dorsett wasn't too happy over his performance, 16 carries for 39 yards and two receptions for 12 yards. "I guess I didn't respond the way the coaches expected me to," he said.

'Boy Wonder' dies at 81

WASHINGTON (AP) — He was the original "Boy Wonder" of baseball.

At the age of 27, Stanley Raymond "Bucky" Harris managed the Washington Senators in their only World Series victory in 1924 and guided them to two of their three American League pennants.

Later, in 1947, Harris won the league crown and the World Series championship with the New York Yankees only to be fired the following year after finishing third — one game behind Cleveland and Boston who tied for first — and was replaced by Casey Stengel.

Harris died Tuesday night on his 81st birthday at a suburban health center after a long illness.

Private funeral services will be held Friday following cremation in Pittston, Pa., where he entered baseball.

HARRIS, A native of Port Jervis, N.Y., was elected to the baseball Hall of Fame two years ago.

In addition to managing the Yankees and the Senators, which he did during three different periods, he also was the skipper of the Boston Red Sox, the Detroit Tigers and the Philadelphia Phillies.

Almost every time he was fired by a team, Harris was rehired in some capacity, usually as manager, by the late Senators' owner, Clark Griffith, who admired Harris' spunk. His last managerial job with the Senators ended in 1954 when Griffith's adopted son, Calvin Griffith, replaced Harris with the late Chuck Dressen.

None of the teams Harris managed finished last.

stronger than Gifford," Edwards said. "I think Marc has a little stonger arm, but obviously he doesn't have the experience Gifford has."

Edwards said Wilson is the softer-spoken of the two. "He has worked on his confidence and leadership, and probably has had to work on them more than Gifford, who seems to have them as innate qualities."

Wilson agrees.

"In a year or so, maybe I can develop the ability to think on the field like Gifford did. That is his great strength. I can't imagine anyone reading defenses better than him," Wilson said.

won in 1966-67, Miami in 1972-73 and Pittsburgh in 1974-75.

Those teams all had three things in common with the Oakland team this year: ability, pride and attitude. They all said it was relatively easy to win the first time and relatively much harder to repeat. But they were determined, they said, to win the second time to prove the first time wasn't a fluke.

THEY WORKED harder the second year than the first. And because they were teams of quality they did succeed twice.

Then each fell apart. Having proved they could sustain their drive and interest through two seasons, all demonstrated they couldn't do it for three.

They were beaten thereafter by a change of either luck or attitude or both. In particular, injury luck has often been decisive in NFL tournaments. But in addition, those playing for two-time champions couldn't seem to look at the world as they had when they were coming up.

For example, in both Miami and Pittsburgh, individual goals supplanted team goals. The pursuit of personal benefits took precedence over team attainments, and, with their luck also gone, down they went.

Watching Oakland this year you see a club that is still coming up and knows it and is driven less by individual than team desires.

San Jacinto wins 8th grade crown

The San Jacinto Muatangs wrapped up the 8th grade football championship Wednesday afternoon in Memorial Stadium by tying surprising Odessa Crockett, 20-20.

San Jacinto wound up with a 7-0-1 record with the tie while Midland Alamo finished second with a 7-1-0 mark after edging Odesaa Bonham, 6-0, Wednesday in Odesaa.

Odesaa Hood defeated Midland Goddard, 14-8 in the other finale. Hood wins winds up 5-2-1 and Goddard 4-4-0 on the year. Crockett's final record is 3-4-1 on the year.

TPWD sees bad year for deer

The upcoming deer season in Texas may be disappointing in some areas.

Surveys by Texas Parks and Wildlife Department biologists and field officers indicate that only two major parts of the state—East Texas and the South Texas brush country—are expecting average to better than average deer herds.

The rest of the state, including the heavily hunted Hill Country of the Edwards Plateau, is experiencing a sub-par year due to capricious rainfall and resulting food shortage conditions for the deer.

SOME AREAS have already

SPORTSMEN'S NEWS

reported deer losses, most notably southwest of San Angelo, where the persistent drought brought starvation conditions in the past month.

Most areas of the state started 1977 with good range conditions because of generous spring rains. But the summer was harsh and dry in most areas, cutting down on the browse needed to maintain the deer until the mast crop is available.

Hunters may find it a bit easier to get their deer than usual, as poor range conditions generally cause the animals to be more active than during years of good range conditions.

Throughout the state it may be advisable for hunters to get into the field as early in the season as possible to harvest the deer while they are still adequately nourished. Biologists urge hunters and landowners to utilize their antlerless deer permits early as well, to trim the herds and ease the pressure on the available forage during the hard winter months.

ALL AROUND the state, the dry August and September caused acorns to fall earlier than normal. In many areas, the deer are utilizing this mast crop too early—a food source which may be depleted by the first severely cold weather.

While most deer herds in the state are holding their own numerically, the weather still could wreak havoc before the end of the season, biologists believe.

Turkeys, on the other hand, have fared slightly better through the summer because they have been able to switch to an insect diet to offset the loss of vegetation through drouth.

Belwo is a region-by-region breakdown of the deer situation:

HILL COUNTRY—The rains came, but they were a little late to help in some areas. Conditions still are more dry than normal, and the acorn crop looks poor in some regions which are already short on browse. Antler development is good this year, but look for some fairly lean deer.

SOUTH TEXAS—The South Texas brush country is used to dry conditions, and so are the deer. The arid-land vegetation of South Texas is able to provide nutrition for deer through dry spells, and observers have noted good antler development. body weight of the deer may be a bit under normal because of dry conditions, but nowhere in the area does an emergency condition exist.

SOUTHEAST AND OAK PRAIRIE—Barring any extremely cold, wet periods, this region looks for a good season. Although not as heavily populated with deer as the Hill Country and South Texas, the Southeast herd is healthy because of adequate browse. The mast crop is sub-par, but this won't be a factor until late winter. The same prognosis applies to the Post Oak Prairie region west of Houston, where the deer are healthy and showing good antler development, thanks to timely rains.

PERMIAN BASIN AND TRANS-PECOS—Permian Basin hunters can expect to see some good antlers on poor deer, with populations about what they were last year. An average year is also expected in the Trans-Pecos, where both whitetail and mule deer herds got a big boost from spring rains which built up vegetation. Subsequent rains should be enough to keep the deer in fair shape for the next few weeks if the weather stays warm.

PANHANDLE—The Panhandle area deer population, although not large, tends to be quite stable, and this year looks good, biologists say. The Rolling Plains and the ravines of the Canadian River area both had good rains through May and are still producing good seed and browse. Panhandle deer should be in good body and antler condition.

POSSUM KINGDOM—This has been one of the drier areas of the state through the summer, and some fawns already have been lost, according to field reports. The area has had only about two months of growing season for vegetation, and winter browse will be scarce. This year will be just the opposite of last year when the deer were unusually fat. This year's crop of bucks will be well antlered, but any deer taken from the Possum Kingdom area is likely to be somewhat thin.

Bomb capability possible — report

By THOMAS O'TOOLE
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Scientists at the Oak Ridge National Laboratory have said that it is technically feasible for a "bandit nation" to produce enough plutonium from uranium to make a crude atomic bomb in six months.

This conclusion came from a paper connected with the design of a production facility the scientists drafted for their own use, but which has been circulating in Washington.

Opponents of President Carter's policy to curb plutonium production say the draft design undercuts one of the key assumptions of the president's plan.

Proponents of limits on the spread of nuclear power see the design as a conspiracy to sabotage their position.

The Carter administration is against the proliferation of power plants that use or produce plutonium because it has said that a nation in possession of such a facility could easily divert the metal to the making of nuclear weapons.

The White House has said that a country denied plutonium and wanting nuclear weapons would have to make them from uranium, a process that had been presumed to be so involved that it would be obvious from aerial surveillance, take a lot of money and involve at least two years' work, which would give other countries time to detect such a move and stop it.

But in a report identified as "intra-laboratory" correspondence, scientists at Oak Ridge said that any nation that wanted to could build in six months a plant to extract plutonium from spent uranium fuel and then begin production of that plutonium inside of a week.

Once in production, the plant could make enough plutonium every month for 10 nuclear weapons.

In the design of what the report calls a "quick and simple" reprocessing plant, nothing is automated. A winery, dairy or oil refinery could be converted to plutonium extraction, the report says. It also assumed that a country wanted to make plutonium for weapons would have "adequate and ready funds" and a "sympathetic and friendly populace."

The plant design is written in a 23-page report from Oak Ridge scientist D. E. Ferguson to Floyd L. Culler, deputy director of the Oak Ridge National Laboratory.

Culler said he asked for the report as the result of a conversation he had at the State Department with Carl Walske, president of the Atomic Industrial Forum, and Joseph S. Nye, deputy under secretary of State for security assistance and an architect of the Carter policy on plutonium and the spread of nuclear weapons.

"I told Nye that I didn't think a two-year lead time without plutonium or a complex reprocessing plant was realistic," Culler said in a telephone interview. "I told him I felt the time involved if a country really wanted to get there in a hurry wasn't nearly that long."

Culler said he had no idea how and why the report was being circulated in Washington. He said he delivered it to Nye at the State Department about a month ago and didn't say "it should or shouldn't be distributed."

U.S. envoy-Brezhnev meeting sparks rumors

The Washington Post

MOSCOW — U.S. Ambassador Malcolm Toon Wednesday delivered a letter from President Carter to Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev and talked with him for more than an hour, chiefly about the growing possibility of a Soviet-American agreement on a new treaty to limit strategic nuclear weapons.

Their meeting was the first lengthy one between Toon and Brezhnev since July, when U.S. Soviet relations were entering a chilly stage.

Tass, the official Soviet news agency, reported that Brezhnev spoke of "a definite change for the better in relations "between the Soviet Union and the United States.

The meeting especially emphasized "the urgency of finalizing the drafting of a new agreement on limiting strategic offensive arms" on the basis of accords reached in principle in discussions that Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko had with Secretary of State Cyrus Vance and Carter when Gromyko was in the United States several weeks ago, Tass said.

Those talks set off speculation in Washington and here that the two superpowers had charted general agreement on a SALT II treaty.

In Washington officials said Carter's letter to Brezhnev, timed to the 60th anniversary of the Soviet revolution, dealt with "substantive" issues involved in the arms control talks, the negotiations on a total nuclear test ban, and other subjects.

White House Press Secretary Jody Powell said, however, that there were "no new American proposals on SALT or anything else" in the president's message.

GAO notes cuts in FBI activity

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — The FBI has cut back its domestic intelligence activities sharply, especially the use of clandestine informers, in the wake of last year's controversy over illegal surveillance of dissidents during the last decade, the General Accounting Office said Wednesday.

But the congressional watchdog agency said the FBI is still in need of a congressional charter laying out objectives and limits on the techniques it uses in order to prevent an erosion of its new safeguards.

The GAO's findings are included in a 95-page report presented to the House Judiciary Subcommittee on Civil and Constitutional Rights. The report is the GAO's second in two years on the FBI.

In its review of eight months of FBI activity last year the GAO said it found no clear and significant violations of Justice Department guidelines by FBI agents, but uncovered several instances in which personal information of questionable relevance to investigations was included in FBI files.

The GAO credits a new system of intelligence guidelines set up by then-Attorney General Edward Levi in 1976 for the sudden drop in FBI abuses and for its smaller caseload.

Of comparable importance, the report notes, in the declining use of political protest from the high points of the late 1960s and early 1970s.

While generally commending the FBI on its efforts to control itself, the report once again raised questions about the worth of domestic spying. Only 10 of the 319 cases it chose at random to review produced information useful in solving criminal investigations, the report said.

"Despite the improvement in the direction and control of domestic intelligence, there are still few visible results," reads the report.

"...Realistically, this may be the best that can be expected, particularly in view of the greater restrictions now placed on the FBI and its past record when there were fewer restrictions and less control."

In a 1976 report, GAO found that of 797 cases, only 10 led to prosecutions and eight to convictions.

In statistical terms, the drop in FBI activity in recent years is astonishing. The number of pending cases dropped from 9,814 on June 30, 1975, to 642 on June 30, 1977.

In 1974 the FBI had 157 organizations and "an undeterminable number" of individuals under investigation; last month, there were 17 organizations and 130 individuals, GAO said.

The number of agents in domestic intelligence dropped from 788 in 1975 to 143 in July; the number of informers fell from 1,100 to 100.

The continued — though limited — use of agents produced some dispute between the principal GAO witness and subcommittee Chairman Rep. Donald Edwards, D-Calif.

Noting that of 214 sample cases involving surveillance of individuals, only one led to the uncovering of criminal activity, Edwards asked, "Is it appropriate to keep thousands of Americans under surveillance, (involving) everything they do, interviewing their employers, just because two or three people say they're going to stage a demonstration?"

"What it really comes down to is whether we should have a surveillance program at all," replied Victor L. Lowe, GAO's general government division director.

"Personally, I feel more comfortable with the FBI out there looking at some of these people," Lowe said.

Lowe added there is "some likelihood" that the new restrictions on the use of informants has resulted in some underground activities' going undiscovered until a crime has been committed.

Du Pont plea persuades EPA man to let danger go unchecked

Newsday

WASHINGTON — A federal move that could halt production of a potentially dangerous fungicide was delayed recently after E.I. du Pont representatives persuaded an Environmental Protection Agency official to wait until similar action could be taken against a competitor's product.

Edwin L. Johnson, EPA's deputy assistant administrator for pesticide programs, agreed to the delay after a private meeting with du Pont officials on Sept. 3.

The decision would help protect du Pont from financial losses to a competitor, while prolonging public exposure to a fungicide that EPA scientists have deemed potentially dangerous to humans.

Johnson's superior, Steve Jelinek, assistant EPA administrator on toxic substances and pesticides, said this week he was not aware the meeting had occurred and he intended to talk with Johnson about it.

"It hits me real cold ...there is no way I can react to it yet," Jelinek said. "My general feeling is that we ought to be very careful about taking any action as the direct result of a private meeting without meeting with other interested parties. Our policy should be to check with other interested parties so that they get a shot at us before we decide to do anything."

At stake for du Pont is an annual market worth about $15 million in a fungicide called benomyl, which is widely used to protect soybeans, peaches, rice, oranges and other crops. At the time of the Sept. 3 meeting, EPA scientists already had completed tests that showed a by-product of benomyl causes cellular mutations in lower life forms that reproduce rapidly. EPA's policy requires that the agency take action against products when such cellular deformities occur.

The agency was preparing to publicly issue a notice that would force du Pont to prove that the benefits of its product to humans outweigh the risk, or face federal cancellation or suspension of its product.

Issuance of such a notice often puts the product on shaky ground in the market place, especially if there is a competing product that has not come under public attack by EPA. That was the situation when du Pont officials arranged their meeting with Johnson.

A competing company, the Pennwalt Corp., of Philadelphia, has sold U.S. marketing rights to a fungicide called Thompson M (methyl thiophanate) that also breaks down in the environment to the same mutagenic byproduct as benomyl, EPA scientists say.

ERA supporters refuse to join TV 'cat fight'

HOUSTON (AP) — Gloria Steinem and Audrey Colom, two representatives of the National Women's Conference, have dropped out of a scheduled national television news program to be broadcast from Houston because an anti-Equal Rights Amemdment activist was invited to take part.

Ms. Steinem said the program would have turned into a "cat fight."

Ms. Steinem, founder of the magazine Ms., and Ms. Colom, president of the National Women's Political Caucus, said Wednesday they would refuse to participate in the Nov. 20 "Meet the Press" telecast by the NBC network because Phyllis Schlafly, an anti-ERA activist, was asked to be one of the guests.

Contacted by the Houston Post, Ms. Steinem, an NWC commissioner, said she had a "moral obligation not to enlarge the audience for a speaker who refuses to tell the truth."

Contacted by the newspaper, Mrs. Schlafly said, "They just can't take it. They don't have any argument against me and just want to go through their charade."

The NWC meeting, believed to be the largest convocation of women in this country, will meet here Nov 18-21 to ratify resolutions advancing women's rights that will be presented to Congress next year.

Schlafly, an outspoken opponent of the women's rights movement, will attend a "profamily" rally as an alternate to the convention here at the same time.

"Phyllis has not participated in the conference on the state or local level and believe me, she was welcome to be a member in this," Ms. Steinem said. "She just wants to use us as a way of promoting herself.

"It's just television going after the sensationalism. We have women representing all points of view on the political and philosophical spectrum, including Schlafly's. TV is just keying in on what they want to turn into a cat fight."

Said Mrs. Schlafly, "They got their $5 million from the government to find out what women want and now it's just a big special interest group trying to ramrod lesbian privileges, abortion and the ERA."

NBC news released a statement Wednesday from New York saying Ms. Steinem and Ms. Colom had dropped out of the program. A spokesman said Mrs. Schlafly was still invited and other conference representatives would be contacted.

Egyptian government after Palestinians

CAIRO (AP) — Egypt is cracking down on Palestinians in Cairo in retaliation for the radical Arabs' war on President Anwar Sadat.

A Palestinian spokesman said three top Palestinian officials were arrested Tuesday night and would be expelled from the country. It appeared likely that the government would close the Palestine Liberation Organization's office in the Egyptian capital.

The officials were Gamal Sourani, the PLO's permanent representative; Ribhi Awad, representative of Al Fatah, the largest guerrilla group in the PLO, and Ahmed Sakhr Basaso, head of the Palestinian Student Union.

Last week the government closed down the Palestinians' Cairo radio station after it broadcast a PLO statement denouncing Sadat's visit to Israel.

The PLO speaks today in the U.N. General Assembly debate on the Middle East and was certain to condemn Sadat. It was not known whether Egypt's ambassador to the United Nations, A. Esmat Abdel Meguid, would boycott the session or would walk out when the attack started.

Meguid on Tuesday left the assembly hall when Syrian Ambassador Mowaffak Allaf accused the Egyptian president of "surrendering to the Zionist butchers" and "stabbing the Arab peoples in the backs" by visiting Israel.

It was the first time an Arab delegate had walked out on another Arab delegate's speech at the United Nations.

Sadat has said repeatedly he would not make a separate peace with Israel, and during his visit to Jerusalem he reiterated the Arab demands for Israel's withdrawal from all territory occupied in the 1967 war and for a Palestinian state. But the Syrians and the Palestinians fear he will come to terms with Israel without getting satisfaction for their demands, as he did in the Sinai disenagement agreement of 1975, and Syria was reported preparing to introduce a U.N. resolution demonstrating this fear.

An informed diplomat said the resolution, after expressing satisfaction with last month's U.S.-Soviet statement in favor of a Geneva conference and Palestinian rights, "urges the parties to the conflict and all other parties to avoid any partial agreement or arrangement which ignores the core of the problem."

The "core of the problem" to the Palestinians is their demand for their own state on the West Bank of the Jordan River, while to the Syrians it is the return of the Golan Heights.

Syria and the PLO, in a statement issued in Damascus Tuesday, called on all the Arabs and the rest of the world to join in condemnation of Sadat's visit to Jerusalem.

The leftist Arab governments in Iraq, Libya, Algeria and South Yemen also have denounced Sadat.

American Ambassador Hermann Eilts met with President Anwar Sadat at the Egyptian leader's Nile-side home today in an apparent resumption of U.S.-mediated indirect negotiations between Israel and Egypt.

Diplomatic sources expressed the view that Sadat's initiative in going to Israel had placed the Carter administration "on the spot to produce the concessions from Israel" in order to resume Middle East peace talks in Geneva before the end of the year.

Angelo appoints assistance commission

Midland Mayor Ernest Angelo Jr. has appointed a 20-member commission "to explore all possible avenues" for raising funds from the private sector to aid the elderly and handicapped.

". . . Our community should be able to take care of its own needy citizens," Angelo said in making the announcement this morning at City Hall.

Formation of the commission comes after the city was denied Community Development funds from the Department of Housing Urban Development.

The mayor estimated that the city will need between $150,000 and $200,000 to replace those federal funds, which would have gone to the Midland Housing Authority.

"In my view," Angelo said, "as long as the federal government puts restrictions on money — interferes in local decisions — I would hope that Midland stays out of the (HUD's CD) program."

Spearheading the fund-raising drive will be Gary Thurman, social concerns chairman at The First United Methodist Church of Midland.

Thurman initially suggested that a commission be formed by the city "to seek private-sector support for the housing rehabilitation work which could not be done with city funds," Angelo said.

Midland is constitutionally prohibited from giving municipal funds directly to individuals and groups, he explained.

Serving with chairman Thurman on the commission, Angelo said, are Hamp Hodges, Mrs. Pomeroy Smith, Mrs. John Redfern, Robert L. Monaghan, Clem Barnes, Marshall McCrea, Bob Southerland, Tony Martin, Mrs. Michael Wisenbaker, Ron Schwisow, J. M. Fullinwider, Mrs. Walter Hubbard, Pete Montgomery, Joe McGruder, Mrs. Kitty Spears, and church pastors Charles Lutrick (Methodist), Daniel Vestal (Baptist), Bob Smith (Presbyterian) and Elmer Burrall (Lutheran).

"Several of those agreeing to serve on the commission have expressed a belief that this effort at community involvement may generate a long-lasting concern for those in need," Angelo said.

"It is their hope that a broad-based local approach to helping our fellow citizens might evolve."

As for himself, Angelo said it is "the responsibility of the community" to help the elderly and handicapped now that federal money isn't available through HUD's Community Development program.

"We're plowing new ground," he said of the city's self-help campaign. "Today, I'll admit it's a new type of effort," said Angelo.

He said that perhaps other city governments will take similar approaches to helping their own needy (particularly, the elderly and han-

Tall City much taller by 1995?

(Editor's Note: This concludes a four-part series of articles on Midland's growth and its effect on city government. However, a related article will appear in Sunday's edition of The Midland Reporter-Telegram.)

By JIM STEINBERG

By 1995 Midland may have a metropolitan population of 117,500, say Texas Highway Department officials.

Its growth will be heavily to the northwest, unless something drastic happens to disrupt the population migration patterns of the city between now and then.

The north connecting route will be well on the way toward completion — or possibly completed — and will join Midland with neighboring Odessa, which at that time will have a metropolitan area of 155,500, according to current predictions of the Midland-Odessa Regional Transportation Study.

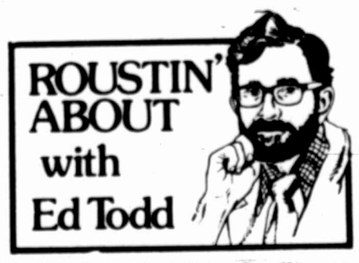

Downtown Midland will be completely renovated and rejuvenated, and hopefully the traffic lights will be sychronized by a system other than the one which, according to Public Works Director Fred Baker, may already have passed its designed life in 1977.

The downtown Exhibition Hall will be a city showplace, and one can wonder if the largest enclosed gathering area in this region will still be the Ector County Coliseum.

The new terminal building at the Midland Regional Air Terminal will probably be bursting at the seams in 1995, and a few may look back to the current airport parking lot problems during the new construction project

Midlander joins move to oust Howard Cosell

Another Monday night football fan, John Healy of Midland, is rallying behind the "Cosell Must Go" campaign.

Bearing the banner in that drive to oust glib sportscaster Howard Cosell from the network's Monday-night press box is Irving Gold of Ridgefield, Conn.

He owns a delicatessen there.

Gold's goal was reported in the "Mulligan's Stew" column in Monday's edition of The Reporter-Telegram.

His basic complaint is that Cosell talks too much. Declaring that Cosell belongs to radio's heyday, Gold said he "just couldn't take Cosell's verbosity and extraneous statistics any longer."

Neither can Healy. And to demonstrate his support for Gold, he's going to send off for about three of Gold's "Cosell Must Go" kits.

Each kit, which costs a $3 donation, is made up of a green-and-white lapel button and a bumper sticker. Both "mouth" the obvious: Cosell Must Go.

"I just can't stand that fellow. He irritates me," said football buff Healy, who's a day-time seismologist.

Healy said he's got three fellow football fans "already lined up" to get the anti-Cosell kits.

"They'd like to get rid of Cosell, too," he said.

If you're in their league, you, too, can join Irving Gold's Army in the fight to get Cosell off the "boob tube" during the Monday-night football season.

You can get your own kit and make a few comments or two by writing:

Cosell Must Go
P.O. Box 13
Redding Ridge, Conn. 06876

Keep watching. Somebody will launch a "Save the Glib" campaign to support Howard Cosell and his company, Dandy Don included.

Meanwhile, Gold will keep up his drive — at least through the pro football season.

"A lot of people feel put upon (by Cosell)," he told The Reporter-Telegram.

Joseph H. Mims

Judge Mims leaving post

District Judge Joseph H. Mims today announced he will not seek election to that office in 1978.

Mims was domestic relations court judge from 1965 until September of this year, when he was appointed judge of the newly formed 318th District Court specializing in family law.

"There are just a lot of things that I want to do," Mims said this morning. Among his plans are taking college electives he never had time to take and fishing.

He said he may go into part-time teaching or practice law part-time.

Among those mentioned around the courthouse as a successor to Mims has been County Judge Barbara Culver.

Contacted this morning, Judge Culver said, "At the appropriate time, I will file and announce and seek election to that office."

Prior to becoming domestic relations judge, Mims was district attorney in Midland for 11 years and county attorney eight years.

Council approves its portion of costs in north loop project

The Midland City Council on Tuesday voted unanimously to pick up its part of the bill for the proposed Midland-Odessa north connecting road and a north loop road around the city.

The action follows similar moves by the Odessa City Council and the Ector County Commissioners to pave the way for federal and state funding for the north connecting road between Midland and Odessa.

Midland County's approval is now needed to make both projects a reality.

During the Nov. 8 City Council meeting, Henry Pearson of the State Highway Department said the right-of-way for the north loop around the city could cost $1.5 million if no land is donated. Curbing and gutters for the project will cost approximately $300,000, while an additional $100,000 will be required to provide curbs and gutters for the city's part in the north connecting route.

It will be approximately six months before the city can begin acquiring right-of-way for the north loop but preliminary inquiries into the process will begin shortly, Mayor Ernest Angelo Jr. said.

In a related matter, the council also approved city participation in a State Highway Department proposal to make a four-lane road of North Midkiff Road between FM868 and Maxwell Drive. That project is expected to get underway in less than a year, city officials said.

In other action, the council voted unanimously to accept a recommendation of the Building Code Review Committee for an exception to the building code to permit the use of untested "Mexican" brick as a veneer material.

In connection with this action, the council will require the builder to fill out forms that document the use of the untested brick in the home construction as a notice to prospective buyers.

The building review committee did not recommend this action, because title companies in the area do not routinely look to see if construction materials are untested or tested during their record searches.

Mayor Angelo asked City Attorney Joe Nuessle to see if title companies would call attention to the fact the a house was constructed with untested bricks at the time of the sale closing.

Before the vote, homebuilder Bill Hickey told the council that the number of "soft" untested bricks in any given shipment is too small to justify banning the bricks.

Approximately one year ago, the city council instructed the city staff to begin enforcing an existing ordinance banning the use of bricks unable to withstand 2,500 pounds per square inch.

The move brought an outcry from builders, who claimed many home buyers were demanding the untested brick as a veneer.

Then, six months ago the city council voted to place a moratorium on the untested brick ban until the question could be studied.

The use of the untested bricks had become a widespread practice by Midland homebuilders prior to the enforcement of the ordinance banning them one year ago.

Untested brick is currently not allowed in Lubbock and Odessa. Abilene requires the untested brick be treated with silicon prior to use.

The council unanimously accepted a proposed contract with the Midland

Midland on medical school list

LUBBOCK — Midland is on the list of cities being invited to submit proposals to form a regional health center for the Texas Tech University School of Medicine.

Letters of invitation were sent to community and health leaders in Midland, as well as Big Spring and Odessa, inviting them to submit proposals for the site of the new Capitol Regional Academic Health Center to be developed for future medical educational programs, Texas Tech officials announced today.

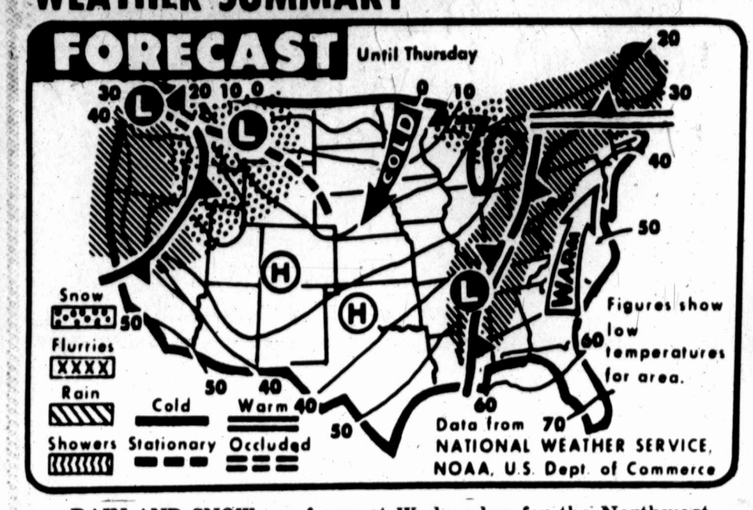

The officials requested that written proposals be submitted to the medical school by Dec. 20.

Community participation is being solicited in order that sites selected may be based on advantages to both the community and the medical school health programs, a Texas Tech spokesman said.

as a golden age of simplicity. (Actually, an engineer connected with the building project said he felt the new terminal building will be outgrown when it is completed.)

Parks and Recreation Department officials predict that higher transportation costs in the future will keep more in town for recreation, even without a population increase. Where will they go?

Parks and Recreation Director Bob Thomson said it is clear that an additional park in northwest Midland, between Midland Drive and Midkiff Drive, is needed.

Thomson said trends indicate that the demand for golf facilities will accelerate as more and more retired persons move into the area.

Thomson said he hopes the department is able to modernize present park equipment, purchased in the mid-1940s, sometime in the late 1970s.

Growing Midland is one of the few areas in West Texas not having a water problem to worry about. Although the city may need some modifications — someday — at the water purification plant, the supply of water is not in doubt for the forseeable future, City Utility Director John Lowe said. And the future may improve the aesthetic quality of Midland's sometimes unpleasant smelling and "wood-like" tasting water. A good rain near Gail could put Lake Thomas back in business as the mainstay of Midland's water supply. Lowe said water from this source is far superior in quality to the present Lake Spence or Paul Davis well field water.

Lowe pointed out that a yet-untapped source of Midland's water, located 65 miles northwest on the T-Bar Ranch, could provide enough water for almost 100 years at present usage.

Perhaps almost as vital to Midland as the water supply is diversification of the economy.

Mayor Ernest Angelo Jr. said all members of the city council "believe that this diversification is necessary."

Angelo added, however, that "the oil and gas industry that made Midland what it is will be essential for future prosperity for many years."

Angelo predicted that the area around the Midland Regional Air Terminal will become "an industrial heartland between the two cities."

To facilitate that development which is well under way, the city council recently hired a consulting engineering firm to study the most efficient way to extend city water and sewer services to the terminal.

Man jailed on charges

A Midland man was in county jail this morning, charged with delivering a controlled substance to two Midland police officers.

Joe Larry Ellis of the 4400 block of North Garfield Street was in jail in lieu of $10,000 bail.

Police officer R. W. Gray reported that a man approached him and another officer in the parking lot of the Warwick Apartments, 4405 N. Garfield St., and first asked for a ride to the Haystack Apartments, one block away.

When the police officers would not give him a ride, he asked to use their phone and offered them tablets believed to be methaqualone if they would allow him to make the call, Gray said.

The police officers took the tablets and then arrested the man, Gray said.

Under the agreement approved by the city, the MISD will pick up 58 percent of the city tax office expenses, the city 23.3 percent, Midland College 10.9 percent and the hospital district 7.8 percent.

The council also voted to extend until Dec. 1, the time limit for completion of the downtown demolition work in connection with the downtown Exhibition Hall.

The contractor required a special crane to complete the project, city officials said.

City Thanksgiving services set

Special services of praise and gratitude are planned here tonight and Thursday morning to mark Thanksgiving in the city.

Leading off the holiday events will be the traditional union Thanksgiving service, sponsored by the Midland Association of Churches, at 7:30 p.m. today in Covenant Presbyterian Church, 5200 W. Illinois Ave.

Dr. William K. Hedrick, minister of Trinity Presbyterian Church, will be the speaker at the ecumenical service. His sermon topic is to be "In Everything, Give Thanks."

The Litany of Thanksgiving will be given by Dr. Larry Grimm, minister of nurture at First Presbyterian Church here. Special music will be provided by a youth choir of Covenant Presbyterian Church.

The union service will be open to all residents of the city and surrounding area. The church nursery will be available to care for infants and small children.

St. Nicholas' Episcopal Church, 2900 Princeton Ave., will have a Eucharist service at 10 a.m. Thanksgiving Day. The Episcopal Church of the Holy Trinity, 1412 W. Illinois Ave., also will have a communion service at 10 a.m., with the sermon to preached by the Rev. Charles Davies, who has been serving the parish as interim rector for the last several weeks. Special music will be presented by the Chancel Choir of the parish.

Midland Lutheran Church, 2705 W. Michigan Ave., will hold its traditional Thanksgiving Day service at 10 a.m.

The service will include a Thanksgiving meditation as well as special music. The church choir, under direction of Bonnie Hanssen, will sing "We Praise Thee, O God," with accompaniment to be provided by trumpeters Gary Hicks and Judy Roop. Mary Ann Stice, organist, and Kathy Liscum, pianist, will present "God Of Our Father" as the offertory selection.

The Rev. David Herman and the Rev. Charles Meyer are pastors of the Midland Lutheran congregation.

St. Ann's Catholic Church, North M and West Illinois, will have Thanksgiving Day masses beginning at 8 and 10:30 a.m.

Grace Lutheran Church, 3000 W. Golf Course Road, has scheduled its Thanksgiving Day service for 8:30 a.m.

The service will be divided into 10 areas for which thanksgiving is due, including home, church, nation, schools and community. The Rev. Donald V. Halfmann, pastor, will give a short meditation on each area of gratitude. Banners depicting each will be displayed.

Scripture readers at the service will be Paul Stuckler, Eddie Mee, Bob Nichols, Ron Fischer, Vic Hollrah, Skip Allen, David Braden, Bob Meyer and Don Neujahr.

At the service, the choir, under the direction of Mrs. Bob Macina, will sing "Come, Ye Thankful People, Come," by Ron Nelson. Members of a brass choir accompanying the ensemble will be Kevin Lewis, Karen Lewis and Ken Juran. Mrs. Bruce Barthel will be the organist.

Midland's First Church of Christ, Scientist, will hold its traditional Thanksgiving service at 11 a.m. Thursday at 1001 W. Tennessee Ave. The event will be open to the public.

In Midland, as in all Thanksgiving services at Christian Science churches, the 100th Psalm will be read.

The service also will include the reading of the official Thanksgiving Proclamation of President Carter and the reading of a Bible lesson-sermon on thanksgiving. Citations also will be read from the denominational textbook, "Science and Health With Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy.

Florence Shade, first reader in the Midland church, and Catherine Lundy, second reader, will conduct the special service which also will include testimonies of gratitude by church members.

Numerous other Midland churches having regular midweek services tonight will key those services to themes of gratitude and thanksgiving.

Fair skies forecast for Thanksgiving Day

It should be mostly fair through Thursday with Thursday's high temperature in the middle 60s for those Midlanders who plan to spend the Thanksgiving holiday in this area, the weatherman said.

Temperatures are expected to turn cooler tonight with the low temperature in the upper 30s. Winds should become northwesterly tonight.

With only a trace of rain recorded at the National Weather Service at the Midland Regional Air Terminal, the rainfall average for November 1977 is falling behind .49 inch so far. For the year to the end of this month, the rain fall average is behind by 6.44 inches, the weatherman said.

Tuesday's high temperature was 78 degrees, and the overnight low temperature was 41 degrees, recorded between 6:30 a.m. and 7 a.m., the weather service said.

Skies were mostly clear with rather cool temperatures in Stanton, Rankin, Big Lake, Big Spring, Crane, Garden City and Odessa this morning. Partly cloudy skies with temperatures in the 40s were reported in Andrews and Lamesa.

Dense fog reduced visibility to a mile or less across a wide area of the Lone Star State today.

Visibility at Brownsville dropped to near zero and was at a mile or less from the Lower Rio Grande Valley across the coastal zone and into the Tyler and Texarkana areas of Northeast Texas.

Fog was also reported at Beaumont-Port Arthur, Longview, McAllen, Palacios, Alice, College Station, Cotulla and Houston.

Weathermen forecast mostly mild temperatures for Texas for the Thanksgiving holiday. There was no mention of rainfall for the holiday.

Skies over South Texas were cloudy today and it was clear to partly cloudy over most of the rest of the state.

Early morning temperature extremes ranged from 32 at Marfa in Southwest Texas to 66 at Brownsville, but most readings were in the 50s and 60s.

by the Legislature to develop a center in the Permian Basin and Texas Tech intends to request funds from the next Legislature for its construction and operation.

Legislation creating the medical school recommended teaching sites in Amarillo, El Paso, Lubbock and Midland-Odessa. The Legislature also directed the medical school to develop clinical teaching programs in each of those sites to help augment health care resources in the areas.

The initial thrust of the education programs in the Permian Basin facility will be continuing medical education seminars for practicing physicians and other health professionals with emphasis on primary medical care, the spokesman said.

Later, post-graduate programs will be established. Undergraduate programs will be developed as full-time faculty are recruited on site and as resident programs become operational.

Among those contacted in Midland are city, county and state elected officials, as well as civic leaders and administrators and medical staff of hospitals.

Meeting dates for presentations will be set for the first part of January.

Holiday planned for mail

The U.S. Postal Service will operate on a normal holiday schedule Thursday in observance of Thanksgiving Day, Postmaster D. E. Holster said Tuesday.

No residential, business or rural delivery will be provided. In addition, no window service will be provided, nor lockbox mail be boxed.

Special delivery service, including delivery of perishables, and holiday collection services will be provided as usual.

State, county and city offices also will be closed for the holiday.

Midlander joins move to oust Howard Cosell

slapped smartly with the proverbial leather glove.

And he's seeking satisfaction, though he has no visible inclination for a duel with swords, pistols, slingshots or brass horns.

Shultz' pang is this: his band's Bugle Corps didn't sound up when programmed to do so at a historical marker dedication ceremony in Bicentennial Park at Rankin Saturday morning.

Somebody missed a cue, huh?

But Shultz said it wasn't he or his buglers, which, in truth, were three trumpeters.

The Bugle Corps was to sound off with "The Star-Spangled Banner" just after the Boys Scouts presented the colors.

The flag was unfurled but the "Banner" wasn't tooted.

And the reason for that, Shultz wants all of Rankin to know, is that neither he nor his corps was notified.

"We try to uphold our obligations," he said. "But that wasn't one of them."

However, it was his buglers who did play during the presentation of the colors. On the trumpets then were Rodney Johnson, Mark Sides and Brant Myers.

Shultz said he would try to get ahold of Ann Clark, chairman of the Upton County Historical Commission, to find out the root-cause of his embarrassment. He did, and she apologized for not letting him know about the "Banner." The commission put the show and the program together.

But you can leave it to emcee Paul Patterson to bridge the wounds. Healing may not be instant, but it's forthcoming.

When the trumpets didn't strike up the National Anthem, Patterson promptly allowed:

"Evidently, the U.S. Naval Band couldn't make it," he good-humorly said and went on with a good show.

Junior Achievement names board members

Walt Weller and Boley Embrey were named to the board of directors of Midland Junior Achievement, Inc., to fill vacancies, at a meeting of the board held this morning in the J.A. Business Center.

President C. Winston Barclay appointed Royce Brookmole, Fred Gordon Middleton and Ray Galvin as members of a special committee to plan a series of seminars on various phases of Junior Achievement to be conducted early next year.

Parker Humes, chairman of the annual fund campaign, said the drive is under way, with the first progress report session scheduled Dec. 1. The final report breakfast will be held on Dec. 15 in the Midland Hilton. The December board meeting will be held in connection with the breakfast.

The financial report for the month was submitted by Treasurer Thomas Bruner.

Ed Hagan told of plans for a group of Midlanders to attend Junior Achievement's National Business Leadership Conference on Feb. 2 at Detroit, Mich.

Gary D. Petersen, executive director, said 14 Junior Achievers, will leave Thursday for Tucson, Ariz., where they will attend a regional J.A. conference. They will be accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. Petersen. The delegation will return late Sunday.

Petersen also will attend a J.A. staff conference Dec. 7-9 at Oklahoma City.

Angelo indicated he prefers that route over federal assistance and the accompanying "restrictions."

CARE offers gift card plan for Christmas

NEW YORK (AP) — Holiday gift cards from CARE provide a way to send greetings, while at the same time helping poor families around the world to survive and to work toward becoming self-supporting, suggests Frank L. Goffio, executive director of the agency.

"Attractive cards will notify each person that you have given to CARE in his or her honor to help those suffering from hunger, poverty and disease," Goffio said.

Names and addresses on your holiday gift list, with a contribution for each card, should be sent to CARE, Dept. HOL, Box 570, New York, N.Y. 10016, or to any regional CARE office. The cards will be sent to you by return mail or, if you prefer, directly to the recipients, Goffio said.

City water tower to come down

On Tuesday, the Midland City Council voted to approve advertisement for bids for removal of the downtown water tower.

Mayor Ernest Angelo Jr. said the the water tower has not been an active part of the city water system for about 10 years and qualifies as "an attractive nuisance."

"At one time it was a backup system, but that is not even true any more," Angelo said.

On at least three occasions, young men have climbed the tower and required the attention of numerous police and firemen in an attempt to coax them down.

The land will be used for expanded city parking, officials said.

In other action, the council approved the removal of seven dilapidated houses, primarily from east Midland.

The council also approved the hiring of a consulting firm to study the needs for future expansion of the Water Pollution Plant No. 1.

First Thanksgiving feast now priced out of sight

By HUGH R. MULLIGAN
AP Special Correspondent

The town fathers of Plymouth, Mass., should be thankful this Thanksgiving that the first Thanksgiving was held 356 years ago instead of here and now.

At today's food prices, they never could afford it.

It will be recalled from Governor Bradford's Journal that the Mayflower settlers early on established good vibes with the Wampanoag, the resident tribe, when colonist Edward Winslow cured Big Chief Massasoit of his chronic constipation by administering the favorite physic of Dr. Samuel Fuller, the Pilgrim physician who apparently didn't make wigwam calls.

Mulligan's Stew

If George Armstrong Custer had had the hindsight to treat Sitting Bull in this humane manner a couple of centuries later, he might have avoided the unpleasantness at the Little Big Horn and the Sioux chief might have stuck to his old name of Jumping Badger.

Anyhow, the relieved sagamore of the Wampanoag was so grateful at rejoining the regular fellows he warned the Pilgrims of a conspiracy to wipe out Plymouth by the rival Massachusetts Indians and with alacrity, considering his condition, accepted an invite to the First Thanksgiving Dinner.

But, as it turned out, the chief's heart was bigger than the menu. On the appointed day in 1621, he turned up with 90 of his braves, instead of just a few assistant sachems to grace the head table, and thereby created history's first Thanksgiving panic in the kitchen.

From the chronicles we know that of the 102 passengers who arrived on the Mayflower, including the two born at sea, only 55 survived that first winter and only five of the 18 wives, who by now probably wished they hadn't either. Here they were slaving over an open fire for an unexpected guest list of 146 and only enough food for a third that many, subtracting the five little ones.

Miles Standish dispatched four of his militiamen with fowling pieces to bag a gaggle of geese, a gobble of wild turkeys and a brace of mallards in the surrounding woods. Nymphet Priscilla Mullins stopped holding hands with John Alden long enough to pluck some lobsters, clams, oysters, cod and eel from the town brook. And the embarassed Indians untucked their napkins, unquivered their arrows and came back with five deer.

Somehow they got it all together and came up with an eight-course menu that even now would tantalize the cost accountants in the catering department of an elite bar mitzvah palace. There were no pies or fruit cakes that first Thanksgiving, because the colonists had run out of sugar, but the bogs were full of cranberries and, after a fine harvest, the common house larder was piled high with corn, barley, peas and dried fruit.

The Indians had yet to show them how to use pumpkins, but they had learned the fireside secrets of Indian pudding and ash cakes and how to pop corn and douse it in maple sap, a favorite with the children. The sober Pilgrim Fathers, who didn't trust the local water, brought over enough Scotch whiskey, Holland gin and beer, and other "strong spirits" to last more than a year after the Mayflower departed, and Massasoit's medicine man had taught them how to make red and white wine from the wild grapes that abounded on Cape Cod.

Thomas Hogan, director of catering at the New York Hilton, figures the original Thanksgiving dinner from soup to nuts from the lobster bisque and oyster stew down through the haunch of venison, the roast wild turkey, the braised mallard and the stuffed goose, "would cost $50 a person today at any first-class hotel or restaurant."

And this, he points out, does not include the high cost of Scotch or the Holland gin at $22 a jug and the Dutch beer at $1.75 a bottle.

"Some of the items like the wild turkey would be a bit difficult to come by today," says Hogan, "but we could duplicate the original menu if given advance warning. The other night someone ordered mallard duck and we had to get it from the 21 Club, about the only place you can find it."

Let's see now, 146 people at $50 a head and figuring 28 to 30 shots to the bottle of booze, that's another $6 per... All told, something on the order of $8,176 not counting tips, and a little something extra to keep those five colonial dames in the kitchen from going on strike.

Have a happy.

Old mayor asks for competition

PAVO, Ga. (AP) — Janice Hart was in line to pay her qualifying fee to run for city council. But Mayor Ed Hutchinson suggested another post — mayor.

"Mrs. Hart ran for council last year and made a good showing, but lost," said Hutchinson. He said he advised her to run for mayor in the Nov. 28 election because the council races were "too crowded."

Here we go again

Joseph Califano recently introduced his Department of Health, Education and Welfare to "Operation Common Sense."

The agency, now get this, will review and revise the 6,000 pages of HEW regulations already on the books to make sure that "English is the official language of HEW." The agency also is to change completely the way a new regulation is developed, by determining in the first place whether it is necessary, in the second how important it is.

And if you think Operation Common Sense will be a massive undertaking — well, it is. Mr. Califano says that it will take five years to finish. And it will not be an insular effort. Mr. Califano is asking not only those obviously affected by HEW regulations — governors, mayors and university presidents, for example — but also every private citizen "who has encountered a rule that has perverse effects, a confusing form, an unfair requirement."

Much,then, would seem to commend Operation Common Sense, yet upon reflection it is clear that the effort can only go so far.

Mr. Califano says that "next to more money the single most important thing we can do is to get all that red tape and paperwork off (the people's) backs so they can get on with their job."

He thus can be understood to want to pump into the country more money while he pumps out the grime of bureauracy. But apparently the point has not registered with him that more money means more grime and so Operation Common Sense cannot reduce "the red tape and paperwork" until something like Operation Less Government is proclaimed.

This, of course, is unlikely, since President Carter's vision of government is, so far as it is able to be detected, one of "making things work better."

If Operation Common Sense is a limited program, it is perhaps a reflection of the President's limited vision.

But it isn't a bad idea to keep on talking "common sense" in the operation of government. It just might catch hold sometime!

Courageous stand

Three cheers for the 12-member Florida Citrus Commission for its just and courageous stand in extending Anita Bryant's orange juice promotion contract through August 1979 for $100,000 a year. The vote was unanimous.

The commission also adopted a resolution supporting Miss Bryant's right to express her views on any issue without fear of reprisal. Again, the commission is due commendation.

Miss Bryant, popular singer and outspoken opponent of the gay rights movement, has been subjected to all kinds of threats and abuses in recent months. But she hasn't backed down in the least. She is a brave, remarkable person.

Likewise the Florida Citrus Commission has been the recipient of numerous threats by homosexual rights proponents to boycott Florida citrus products. The threats most likely have been stepped-up since announcement of the Bryant contract extension. But there are many, many more persons on the side of the Florida citrus group; they are just not as vocal.

Although the commission said it based its decision on whether Miss Bryant yet is effective in promoting Florida orange juice ("and she is,") rather than on her positions against homosexuality and in favor of prayer in public schools, it is significant that the commission gave Miss Bryant a free rein in expressing her personal views.

There is little if any doubt that the Florida Citrus Commission and Miss Bryant will weather the present storm of controversy. More power to them.

CHARLEY REESE:

America is still the greatest nation ever

By CHARLEY REESE
Sun Belt Syndicate

ORLANDO, Fla. — Even when it's not the Thanksgiving season, nothing gets my goat quicker than to hear an idiot run down America.

We Americans are still the greatest. If the world ended tomorrow, an objective celestial historian would be forced to say, "Nobody did it better."

We created a republic, writing the two greatest political documents, the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution, the world has ever seen. What's more important, we have for 200 years striven mightily to live up to the ideals expressed in those documents.

We conquered a wilderness and turned a land into a prosperous nation that is the envy of the world as well as the hope. It is important to realize why we were able to do this.

While our continent is blessed by nature, it was not the resources but the people and the principles which created the wealth. Other lands have equal or better resources. They did not have Americans and liberty.

If you will only think for a moment what it would take for you to pack up your family and leave, with little cash, for the Amazon jungle with no guarantee of anything but opportunity, you will appreciate the spunk and grit of the millions who have become Americans.

Spunk, grit, ingenuity and hard work created the wealth and it was freedom which attracted the people with those qualities and nourished them. We have always been a nation of rebels and malcontents, contentious and cocky.

More than once our farmers and shopkeepers and miners and factory workers have taken up arms and whipped the nations who made militarism a cult. From Valley Forge to Pleiku, the American rifleman has been the most undisciplined soldier on earth yet under fire, he becomes an ingenious, indomitable warrior.

The American is a person who does not bow and scrape to anybody, a person who does not believe that there is anything which can't be done if it's necessary, a person who is always asking the question: How can I do this better and faster?

It is this traditional American refusal to recognize limits that has turned a nation of poor immigrants into a nation so rich that even our officially defined poor have a higher standard of living than most of the people on earth.

I do not believe there is today a single problem facing us that cannot be solved so long as we keep our faith in ourselves.

From the beginning there have always been individuals among us who worshipped Europe and wished to convert America into a second Europe. They used to argue that European culture was superior to American and today they are arguing that European philosophy is superior to American.

That's bunk. America is superior culturally, philosophically, materially, and militarily in part because we have taken the best of the Old World in both ideas and people and molded them into new entity that is stronger than any of its components.

The only threat to America is the danger that we will listen to these Europe-worshippers and commit suicide by adopting the failed concepts of collectivism and class.

The American way is free enterprise and limited government and a true classless society where no one is allowed special privileges by government fiat or by reason of wealth or birth, and where everyone is afforded the opportunity to rise as high but no higher than his ability and determination will take him.

Every single American has the right to be proud that he is American, proud of the Americans who have preceded him, and proud of the role he will play in the future.

Not only should we always thank God for America but so should the rest of the world for we remain today the world's hope for peace and freedom and an example that men and women can achieve both freedom and prosperity without resorting to conquest and plunder.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

U.S. vets, ex-Nazis honor SS dead

By JACK ANDERSON and LES WHITTEN

WASHINGTON — The U.S. Army provided a military band and a chaplain—the music and the prayers — for a macabre meeting recently of U.S. veterans with former Nazi shock troops at an SS graveyard.

The Nazis once belonged to Adolph Hitler's dread Waffen SS, which was hated even by the regular German army. The Encyclopedia Britannica notes that Gestapo chief Heinrich Himmler, the Nazis' most ruthless exponent of racism and terrorism, founded the SS.

According to the encyclopedia, this elite force became "an all—embracing empire within the Nazi state, at once the embodiment and the instrument of (Hitler's) racial theories."

Yet uniformed members of America's Eighth Infantry Division band tootled funeral music as veterans of the U.S. 70th Division laid wreaths on the graves of dead SS troops near Bucholz, West Germany, on September 26. And a U.S. military chaplain, believe it or not, pronounced an invocation over the graves.

This strange gathering was inspired by an encounter in the United States a year ago. Three German visitors from the SS Sixth Mountain Hunter Division met the brother of a dead 70th Division soldier. After some beer drinking, a reunion was planned in West Germany.

Notices were published in U.S. Army Reserve publications. All veterans of the 70th Division, known in World War II as the Trailblazers were invited. About 80 signed up for the trip to their old battlefields in France and Germany.

The notices mentioned only that they would meet with the Sixth Mountain Hunter Division, without adding it was an SS unit. Some of the former GIs, therefore, may not have known they would share their reunion with ex-Nazi shock troops. But this seems unlikely since the SS unit opposed the 70th in both France and Germany during the war.

The Americans met the Hitler veterans formally for the first time in the French town of Epinal. The SS men laid a wreath on U.S. graves in a nilitary cemetery near a battlefield where they had once fought.

Then the Americans, who had invaded Germany to free Europe from Nazism, journeyed with the Fuehrer's finest across the same border to Sucholz, where the high point of the reunion occurred.

First the mayor of Bucholz threw a reception for the former enemies. Then they gathered together at the graveyard. This was followed by a dinner-dance where the men of the 70th whooped it up with the SS veterans.

Gen. George Blanchard, the U.S. Army commander in Europe, must have been aware of the odd reunion since he met the next day with the 70th Division veterans. The highest ranking U.S. officer at the SS meeting, retired Brig. Gen. Theodore Mataxis, told us: "All it was was talk among people who fought 30 years ago."

Mataxis is now assistant superintendent of the Valley Forge Military Academy in Wayne, Pa. He told us he was aware the Germans were an SS unit, but noted that they had been combat troops. At the Nuremberg trials, the SS was condemned en masse with few exceptions, as a criminal organization. And for years, meetings of SS veterans were banned in postwar Germany.

Footnote: At the Pentagon, the U.S. Army did not hold back on the facts. But a spokesman said the participation of the band and chaplain was the extent of official U.S. involvement.

SOLAR BLACKOUT — Rep. Mike McCormack, D.-Wash., apparently doesn't like too much sunlight. The scholarly, bespectacled former nuclear scientist isn't eager to generate electricity from the sun. In place of solar energy, he would prefer to use the nuclear power that is produced at the Hanford Project where he used to work. He also tried to block out the sunlight recently from his House subcommittee. Rep. Albert Gore, D.-Tenn., was questioning some expert witnesses about solar technology. He was developing information that would shed light on a $28 million solar project that McCormack opposed.

"We're going to have to adjourn and submit our subsequent questions in writing," snorted McCormack.

"Why is that, Mr. Chairman?" demanded Gore. "I think this has a tremendous leverage on the future. I think this program is important. I think we ought to explore it."

But McCormack wouldn't budge. "I think perhaps we'd better schedule another oversight meeting," he snapped.

"We can't go for the rest of the day?" persisted Gore.

"No," repeated McCormack. "I'm sorry, we cannot."

The transcript, which hasn't been released to the public, shows Gore objecting: "I would like the record to reflect that, as one member of the subcommittee, I have a number of specific questions...and I don't have an opportunity to continue the questioning here today."

McCormack, growing more irritated, growled: "I'm sorry. We must terminate now."

Unpersuaded, Gore demanded again: "Why?"

"I'm sorry," retorted McCormack, "but it is necessary that we adjourn."

"Without an explanation?" asked Gore incredulously.

"Yes, I'm sorry," said McCormack, with finality. "The meeting stands adjourned. Thank you very much."

INSIDE REPORT:

Soviet Union mischief indicated in Middle East

By ROWLAND EVANS And ROBERT NOVAK

Evans

Novak

WASHINGTON — Alarming indications are reaching Washington and European capitals that Soviet operatives may be undermining President Carter's Mideast peace plans even before the reconvening of the Geneva conference, a suspicion that has caused U.S. diplomats to put all Soviet actions in the Mideast under intense scrutiny.

U.S. officials here carefully withhold charges of sabotage on grounds that hard evidence is not available — at least not yet. But top European diplomats trying to promote Mr. Carter's Arab-Israeli settlement plans are less restrained.

Thus, an official European source regarded as impeccably informed told us that a major break in the attitude of the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) toward Israel as a sovereign state was secretly vetoed by Soviet diplomats in Damascus.

According to this high-level European official, the governing body of the PLO (the executive committee) met in Damascus the first week in November and agreed on the following points:

1. To issue a statement adopting language taken directly from President Carter's formal pronouncements about an Arab-Israeli settlement and from UN Resolution 242. The resolution (adopted after the 1967 six-day war) calls on Israel to withdraw from Arab territories and the Arabs te make real peace with a sovereign Israel.

2. The Damascus statement, while not specifically mentioning Resolution 242, would have served to close the procedural gap between the PLO and the U.S. In effect, it would have proclaimed the PLO's readiness to recognize Israel's status as a permanent state, while saving a little face by not linking that recognition directly to Resolution 242.

But just before the PLO's statement was to be issued in Damascus, Soviet diplomats — according to our highly-informed European official — sabotaged it. The change toward the U.S. never occurred.

No statements of any kind were made. Only ten days later, a high PLO official suddenly announced that the PLO would cooperate with a reconvened Geneva conference — but only if invited to do so by the U.S. and the Soviet Union under terms of the U.S.-Soviet joint statment issued last Oct. 1.

That joint statement was attacked by Israel the moment it became public. In the U.S., supporters of Israel also were infuriated. Moreover, anti-Soviet hardliners with no special commitments to Israel were stunned at its implications: bringing Moscow squarely back into the Middle East after almost a decade of official U.S. policy designed to keep the Soviets as far away as possible.

The PLO official who disclosed his organization's latest policy gambit was attending the Arab League foreign ministers' meeting in Tunis. His formula for PLO cooperation in a newly reconvened Geneva peace conference would drastically complicate U.S. diplomacy and aid the Soviet Union.

It would embarrass President Carter by challenging him to get United Nations sanction for the joint U.S.-Soviet statement. Mr. Carter cannot disavow that joint statement because it is his own; but he cannot seek its adoption by the UN Security Council (as the PLO wants) without severe political reprisals here and in Israel.

Some well-informed U.S. officials question the depth of Soviet involvement in the PLO's unexpected switch from a strictly American policy in Damascus to a Soviet policy ten days later in Tunis. Their point: the PLO is no more controllable than a herd of wild horses, by the Kremlin or anybody else.

Whatever its influence on the PLO, the Kremlin's enthusiasm for collaboration with Washington quickly faded after some early supporting statements. Soon after the joint U.S.-Soviet statement was made public, Moscow seemed to lose interest in backing the U.S. case for a Mideast settlement with anything like full vigor. Within the last two weeks, Soviet policy seems to have switched from simply losing interest to positive undermining of the U.S. position — as indicated by the switch in PLO strategy.

If the PLO had gone ahead as planned at Damascus, it would have paved the way for close U.S.-PLO collaboration after months of Mr. Carter's efforts to achieve just that. It would also have raised the prestige of Jimmy Carter at a time he needs every ounce he can get.

That is why American officials, though unable to prove Soviet skullduggery in the latest meandering of the PLO, have placed a double-watch over all Soviet Mideast moves. Self-congratulations for the joint U.S.-Soviet statement of Oct. 1 have turned into suspicions, and that at least is a healthy state of mind for a President still learning his way around the world.

Mark Russell says

At first I wouldn't admit it, but now I am willing to face the truth: My car is a gasoholic.

Jimmy Carter's speech made it easier for many cars to come out of the garage and admit they were gasoholics. What causes this condition? They are driven to it.

One car said, "I got hooked on the stuff at an early age. I've quit before, but when I do I don't seem to have the energy to leave the house."

Jimmy Carter has brought attention to the fact that gasoholism can be cured. How? One day at a time.

DEAR ABBY

Shoe clerks dress, not undress, feet

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I am writing on behalf of the salespeople who sell men's shoes.

When a man goes to a doctor for an examination, he at least unbuttons his own shirt. He certainly doesn't wait for the doctor to come in and undress him. So why do some men come into a shoe department, sit down and expect the salesperson to undress his feet?

The salesperson is supposed to try the NEW shoes on the customer, not take off the old ones; but when I ask a man politely to slip off his old shoe, he looks at me like I'm crazy.

And while I'm on the subject of men's shoes, when a man comes in to try on shoes and I ask him what size he wears, nine out of 10 say they don't know!

Can you believe that a 50-year-old man has no idea what size shoe he wears? So we have to look in his old shoe or measure his foot. This takes time and most of us work on commission. It would sure help a lot of us who sell men's shoes if you'd ask your male readers to please be a little more cooperative. Thank you.—OLD SHOE DOG

DEAR DOG: Okay, here's your letter. Now, all you men out there, if the shoe fits—wear it. (But first, take your old shoe off, and remember your size.)

DEAR ABBY: We've been married for 16 years and have four children. After our last child was born, complications arose, so I had a hysterectomy. It was a big relief not having to worry about getting pregnant again. Well, a few months ago my husband came home and, out of the blue, announced that he'd had a vasectomy! I couldn't have been more shocked. The more I thought about it, the more suspicious I became. (Wouldn't you be?)—SUSPICIOUS IN OELWEIN, IA.

DEAR SUSPICOUS: he has obviously decided that he wants no more children with you—or anyone else. DEAR ABBY: I am getting tired of reading about the atrocious things wives discover about their husbands after marrying them. For instance that they are unclean, that they have a temper or that they're stingy. All the clues are there during courtship. Why don't women see them and heed the warning?

It seems to me that if a woman chooses to overlook a fault in her husband BEFORE marriage, she should continue to overlook it AFTER marriage, and forever hold her peace. Why should she expect a man to change overnight just because he put a wedding band on her finger?—DEAR REALIST: If you'll excuse a cliche, "Love is blind." Some women do not see the faults before marriage. Other women (the predatory kind) marry a man knowing his deficiencies but hoping to "reform" him. They rarely do, and their failure eventually leads to frustration and bitterness.

CONFIDENTIAL TO D. D. L.: if you are too busy to answer your child's questions, you are to busy.

Wives striking back at violent husbands

By DIANE CLARK
Copley News Service

Everybody's heard about wife-beating, but what about husband-beating? Did you know that:

— For the first time last year in Chicago, the number of wives charged with murdering their husbands exceeded the number of husbands charged with murdering their wives.

— A recent study of domestic violence in Delaware found that husbands were most often the victims of spousal beatings, but that wives bore the brunt of the severe injuries.

— In San Diego, Calif., a husband-wife psychotherapist team determined that there is an increasing trend of wives battering their husbands, but that the battering is more often psychological than physical.

There has been much publicity about husbands beating their wives in recent years. And wife-beating is a dramatic problem with an estimated five million women a year, nationally, who suffer injuries at the hands of their husbands. But there is another less-publicized side to the story: the occasional husband who is the victim of his wife.

Husband-battering is a problem that is difficult to assess because few statistics are available. For one thing, unless it involves a stabbing or shooting, it is unlikely to be reported to local police.

For another, because of the "unmasculinity" of the idea, it is not as likely to be confessed to marriage counselors, ministers or psychologists working with a troubled couple.

"We've just begun to notice this trend enough to call it 'husband-beating' in the last year and a half," said Charles (Chuck) Hansen, a San Diego psychotherapist in joint practice with his wife Susan. "We've talked to other counselors around the country and they're seeing the same thing.

"I'm getting increasing numbers of husbands I would call battered," Hansen said. "But wives do not batter their husbands the way husbands batter their wives ...it has the same basis but it's just taking place in a less violent manner."

The Hansens explained that women are much more prone to give psychological or mental whippings than actual physical beatings. And when physical force is used by a woman, it is more apt to take the form of slapping or pinching — as demonstrated by one of the couple's clients who unbuttoned his shirt to reveal a right side that was black-and-blue from pinchings.

This psychotherapist team, which currently works with four couples where husband-battering is a problem and has worked with about 30 such couples in the last 18 months, is convinced that the problem is increasing in both frequency and severity.

Marriage and family counselor Charles Nelson, who serves on a San Diego City subcommittee of Sexual Assault and Intrafamily Violence, said he has noticed an increasing assertiveness by women in the marital relationship.

However, it is more often the women who mention aggression against their husbands than the men.

"Men don't report this type of thing because of the cultural stigma. They don't want to appear unable to defend themselves against a woman," Nelson concluded.

"During one counseling session I had a woman say about her husband, 'I even hit him over the head with a hatchet (the blunt end) and that didn't get any response,'" Nelson recalled.

(The man was knocked to the floor and needed several stitches.)

This sudden violent action on the part of the wife culminated a domestic feud that had been building for months between them.

While women, because of women's liberation and societal changes, are becoming more assertive today, he believes that only rarely do they lash out physically. (As yet, statistics are too scanty to prove or disprove his supposition.)

"The strange thing about it is that it wasn't the man who told me about being struck. It was his wife," Nelson remembered. "The man said he didn't want to admit that she had hit him."

This illustrates the problem in gathering statistics on husband-battering.

A recent study by Dr. Suzanne Steinmetz, family studies professor at the University of Delaware, found that husbands were more often the victims of their wives' violence than vice versa, but that wives did less damage.

"I found that wives, more frequently than husbands, used physical violence. Wives are inclined more to throw things or hit their husbands with objects. But in terms of severity, more wives got done in by their husbands. I found for every severely beaten husband, there were 12 severely beaten wives," Steinmetz said during a recent interview.

Her study, three others she participated in and a fourth done by a colleague are being published in a book entitled, "The Cycle of Violence." This husband-beating study was limited in scope, however. It dealt with in-depth interviews over a period of time with randomly selected couples in New Castle County, Delaware.

In her study, about one-fifth of the husbands and wives admitted hitting their spouses physically, one-tenth admitted hitting their spouses with an object and about one-third confessed to pushing and shoving, or throwing things at their spouses.

Pluck food poisoning from your turkey dinner

By MARION WELLS
Copley News Service

At Thanksgiving people find eating a pleasure, but food poisoning is for the birds.

The taste, smell or look of an "eatable" doesn't always warn you if it's contaminated. Your guests will give thanks if you've taken precautions to minimize food poisoning pitfalls.

Experts advise making sure your turkey is cooked at a temperature high enough to kill harmful bacteria. A University of California Agricultural Extension Service publication warns, "Roasting poultry for a long time at a very low temperature can produce food poisoning.

"Do not partly roast poultry on one day and finish roasting the next day."

Thanksgiving is a time when turkeys and people may both get stuffed, but it's actually safer if your turkey doesn't. Consumer expert Virginia Knauer explains why.

"This is because stuffing — which usually contains ingredients...that carry salmonella and other germs — often doesn't reach a high enough temperature inside the turkey cavity to kill bacteria."

Cooking stuffing separately is safest. If you decide to stuff the turkey, wait until just before cooking. Later, take the stuffing's temperature to be certain it reaches at least 165 degrees Fahrenheit. To do so, remove the turkey from the oven, insert the (meat) thermometer into the body cavity and leave it there for five minutes.

A working area used for cutting raw meat or poultry is an ideal place for bacteria to lodge and multiply. Kitchen utensils, working surfaces (including cutting boards) and your hands should be thoroughly cleaned before reusing. Otherwise, other food, including cooked food, can be contaminated.

If meals are prepared in advance, plan ahead to keep hot food hot (above 140 degrees Fahrenheit) and cold food cold (below 40 degrees Fahrenheit). In temperatures between 45 degrees Fahrenheit and 115 degrees Fahrenheit the bacterial population in perishables may double each 15 to 30 minutes.

Refrigerate leftovers promptly. Stuffing should not be left in the turkey. Store in a separate covered container shallow enough to permit rapid cooling.

If you have too much leftover turkey to use up quickly, freeze immediately.

Make sure your refrigerator and freezer stay cold enough. Good thermometers will help you keep tabs on the temperature. Take care not to stuff in so much warm food that your refrigerator's temperature goes up. When it's overcrowded, the temperature may rise enough to cause increased bacterial action.

Most leftovers and meats and milk kept in the refrigerator section are best stored close to the freezing compartment where it will stay coldest.

Mrs. Trudeau to make debut

MONTREAL (AP) — Margaret Trudeau has "enormous dignity and poise and amazing potential as an actress," says a film producer who has signed her for a leading role in "Kings and Desperate Men."

Alexis Kanner of Kineversal Inc. said Monday he has been working closely with Mrs. Trudeau and is confident her debut as a screen actress will be successful.

"She shows great promise," said Kanner, who will produce and direct the feature-length film.

The estranged wife of Prime Minister Pierre Elliott Trudeau is cast in a lead role with Patrick McGoohan.

The $1.2 million film is about about a group of terrorists who lay siege to a radio station and broadcast a mock trial to condemn the social system from which they sprang.

Power of a woman influenced history

Mrs. Sarah Josepha Hale was the driving force behind the movement to make Thanksgiving a national holiday, says researcher, Sally Hopkins. Mrs. Hale, as editor of Ladies' Magazine and Godey"s Lady's Book, started her crusade in 1827 with fiery editorials and with hundreds of letters to presidents, governors and other men of influence. On Oct. 3, 1863, her efforts were rewarded with President's Lincoln's Thanksgiving Proclamation making Thanksgiving a national holiday.

DALLAS — Texas Oil & Gas Corp. has reported an increase in net income for the 12-month period ended Aug. 31.

Attorney General Hill backs gas producers

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — The U.S. Supreme Court will hear arguments Dec. 7 in the case testing the federal government's power to order the owner of natural gas to sell it to out-of-state buyers, Attorney General John Hill said Tuesday.

"This case is more important to Texas than most states because most of the natural gas we produce is consumed in Texas," Hill said.

"This strong intrastate gas market not only has kept gas flowing to our homes during winter while some northern states have gone without, but it also has fueled our Gulf Coast petrochemical complex, which is a key contributor to our state's healthy economy," he said.

"While this issue is being debated in Congress, we may wake up and find the courts have already settled it. That is why I have entered this case to present the argument for continued freedom to choose between selling gas to out-of-state buyers or Texas buyers," Hill said.

The suit is an appeal by Southland Royalty Co. of Fort Worth from an order of the Federal Power Commission to sell Southland gas produced in Crane and Ector counties to El Paso Natural Gas Co., which planned to sell it to California purchasers.

Southland had planned to sell it to a firm supplying users mainly in the Houston area.

DOE head to look into gas moratorium

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Thomas Eagleton, D-Mo., says Energy Secretary James Schlesinger has agreed to look into the possibility of lifting a moratorium on new natural gas hookups in a five state area.

Eagleton said after a 20-minute meeting with Schlesinger Tuesday that the secretary "was understanding of the potential difficulties" the moratorium creates.

Energy Department officials confirmed the meeting, but would not comment on what transpired.

The issue involves an order by the Federal Power Commission last June which prohibits any new gas hookups after the end of this year except those which could be accommodated from conservation efforts.

The moratorium, which affects parts of Missouri, Kansas, Oklahoma, Nebraska and Texas, is under review and hearings have been scheduled before the final decision is made. It affects communities served by companies supplied by City Service Gas Co.

Eagleton asked Schlesinger to "intervene ... to have this moratorium vacated entirely (because it) ... is unnecessary in view of the improved (gas) supply situation and it could seriously affect jobs and economic development on the western side of Missouri."

A spokesman for Eagleton said the senator gave Schlesinger a lengthy memorandum outlining his position and listing a number of construction projects which have been halted because of the moratorium.

The senator said that failing a reversal of the moratorium, he recommends that its effective date be extended from Jan. 1, 1978 to Jan. 1, 1979.

"At the very least there should be an exemption from the Jan. 1, 1978, date for any project on which construction had already begun or final approval had been granted at the time of the FPC order," Eagleton told Schlesinger.

In a statement issued by Eagleton's office, the senator said: "The secretary (Schlesinger) was understanding of the potential difficulties this FPC order creates and he indicated he will be looking into the matter further to determine what action on his part might be necessary or appropriate."

Explorer flows gas

Tucker Drilling Co., Inc., San Angelo, was drilling ahead at No. 1 Tisdale, Schleicher County wildcat, after it flowed gas heavily on a drillstem test in the Strawn.

Tool was open four hours and 10 minutes on the test taken from 5,280 to 5,307 feet. Gas surfaced in three minutes at the rate of 1.8 million cubic feet per day. Recovery from the test tool was three to four feet of drilling mud and two to three feet of oil.

Location is 660 feet from north and 2,100 feet from west lines of section 23, block M, GH&SA survey, 11 miles northeast of Eldorado.

Operator reported a 24-hour flowing potential of 12 barrels of 37.5-gravity oil and 265 barrels of water per day, through perforations from 3,983 to 4,212 feet after 1,000 galloms of acid and 18,000 gallons of fracture solution. Gas-oil ratio was 15,750-1.

Schlesinger talks too much say plan allies

By TOM RAUM

WASHINGTON (AP) — Energy Secretary James Schlesinger should keep quiet about what compromises the administration might take to get an energy bill through Congress, some top Carter administration allies on Capitol Hill are saying.

Those defending Carter's energy plan in a House-Senate connerence committee say Schlesinger's public statements are hurting chances the administration's own program will win congressional approval.

"I don't know why he feels it incumbent on him to say anything about what he's willing to take," protested Rep. Thomas L. Ashley, D-Ohio, a key backer of the administration bill.

Drawing the fire was Schlesinger's remarks at a news conference earlier in the week that he may be willing to accept higher oil and gas prices than Carter wanted to get the bill through Congress.

A White House spokesman denied Tuesday that Schlesinger was trying to dictate terms of a compromise to conferees.

The House passed most of Carter's energy proposals while the Senate rejected many of its key elements — including the president's plan to keep price controls on natural gas and to impose a tax on crude oil.

Conferees are attempting to reconcile the wide differences between the two chambers.

In a news conference Monday, Schlesinger hinted that to meet

ENERGY
OIL & GAS

Senate objections to the president's plan, the administration might accept a higher price than the $1.75 per thousand cubic feet Carter wants set for natural gas.

He also said the administration might agree to adjusting an oil price control formula to allow greater quantities of oil to qualify for higher prices.

Coming up with a compromise bill is "a very difficult and sensitive situation," Ashley said. He said Schlesinger's comments make that job even harder for the House conferees trying to uphold the president's program.

But Deputy White House Press Secretary Rex Granum argued that Schlesinger "was restating principles and previous statements we have made."

Granum said Schlesinger acknowledged that compromise often is a part of the legislative process but said the energy secretary did not propose any compromise positions.

The White House spokesman said the administration would await recommendations from its congressional allies before considering any compromises.

Meanwhile, Schlesinger's remarks also drew opposition from those who feel the White House is not making enough concessions.

Assistant Senate Republican Leader Ted Stevens noted that Schlesinger, while saying he might accept higher prices for natural gas, also said the administration wouldn't budge from its proposal to extend regulation to intrastate natural gas markets.

"Senators from oil-and gasproducing states will never yield to that. It's a no-win position for everyone," Stevens said.

Only natural gas in interstate pipelines is now subject to federal regulation, at a ceiling of $1.46 per thousand cubic feet. Carter's bill would raise this price to $1.75 while also extending the controls to gas produced and sold within the same states.

Stock market gains

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market, struggling to maintain the momentum of Tuesday's rally, showed some spotty gains in active trading today.

Advances outnumbered declines by close to a 2-1 margin in the midday tally of New York Stock Exchange-listed issues.

The noon Dow Jones average of 30 industrials was down 2.00 at 840.52.

But the average would have been about unchanged had it not been for ex-dividends, or dividend-payment adjustments, in the prices of two of its components—Du Pont and American Telephone & Telegraph.

The market began a solid advance Tuesday after the government reported a smallerthan-expected 0.3 per cent rise in the consumer price index last month. The Dow gained 6.41 for tne day.

The advance brought the average once again into the 840s—the area in which it ran into resistance after a sharp rally earlier this month.

Warner-Lambert led the active list, up ⅝ at 26⅞. A 132,000-share block traded at 26¾.

The NYSE's composite index of more than 1,500 common stocks rose .07 to 53.01. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index gained .64 to 121.22.

Volume on the NYSE reached 12.18 million shares by noontime, against 11.47 million at the same point on Tuesday.

Commonwealth Oil Refining fell ¾ to 2¼. The company said Tuesday it had received indications from Ashland Oil that Ashland probably wouldn't exercise its option to acquire a controlling interest in Commonwealth.

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Cheese low on salt

Dear Dr. Solomon: I am supposed to watch that I don't eat too much salt because of my blood pressure. It isn't too high, but it is more than what it ought to be. I used to practically live on cheese, but I know it almost always has a lot of salt in it. Do you know if there are any kinds of cheese that would be all right for me to eat?—Hazel N.

Dear Hazel: If you are on a mild salt-restriction regimen, then you should definitely avoid all processed cheeses and cheese spreads (except dietetic products) and the really salty natural cheeses, like Roquefort, blue, Camembert or Gorgonzola—or the ones that are shipped in brine, the way feta cheese from Greece is, as a rule.

Nancy Selvey, an expert nutritionist with the American Medical Association, says the following cheeses meet the guidelines of the American Heart Association for mild salt restriction: American cheddar, natural Swiss, lightly salted cottage cheese, natural Colby, natural brick, farmer, cream cheese, natural Edam, and natural Gouda. In other words, quite a few good cheeses are still O.K.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I've heard that there is a new technique that works better than the hair plug system for a man who is beginning to really go bald. I'm getting there—fast—so I would appreciate any information you can give me.—Bud P.

Dear Bud: A short time ago, the Journal of the American Medical Association reported on a new technique that was pioneered by Dr. Jose Juri of Buenos Aires and is now being done by a few plastic surgeons in the United States. Perhaps this is the one you mean. A strip about 1½" wide and 10" long is detached from the side of the head (where there is still hair), rotated around and sutured across the top of the head from which a strip of bald scalp has been removed. During a transitional period of three to six weeks, the flap remains attached to its original site by one small segment so that is is sure to get plenty of blood.

One strip is equal to more than 300 of the little circular plugs transplanted by the usual method, according to the JAMA report, and as many as three flaps can be shifted to bald areas. The method is said to give a denser head of hair in a shorter period of time than is possible with the punch procedure. Dr. Richard C. Webster, president of the American Academy of Facial Plastic and Reconstructive Surgery, says it shows a great deal of promise and may become the operation of choice for hair transplants in certain cases.

The operation is expensive, but the JAMA article says it is becoming popular. Patients are in just about every age bracket—mid-20s to 60s.

MC to prepare bids for system

By KAY HORD

Because of state law, Midland College trustees Tuesday authorized bids to be prepared for the purchase of new telephone equipment, rather than approving a new system with Communications Corporation of America.

The board had received an offer from the private company to install the new system with an estimated savings of $45,000 over a comparable Southwestern Bell system during a 10-year period.

During the October meeting, trustees tabled the subject of a new telephone system in order to study the offer by CCA. At that time, Midland College President Dr. Al G. Langford said the new system was necessary because additional construction had surpassed the capabilities of the present telephone system.

Under the proposed agreement with CCA, the company would install a total telephone system with new cable, switchboard and brains, and would be responsible for maintenance and operation, a spokesman for the company told the board Tuesday.

Communications Corporation of America is a private company which sells telephone systems and equipment and interconnects with Bell Telephone Co. lines.

"With our company (CCA), everything belongs to the college. You have a tangible system. If you want to, you can sell it," the spokesman for the company said.

Estimated cost of equipment, installation, maintenance and use of Bell's telephone lines for a 10-year period is $216,727. Estimated cost over the same period for installation and maintenance of a Southwestern Bell Dimension system would be $262,159, the CCA spokesman said. The difference in cost between the systems is $45,432.

Over the first three years, the costs would be approximately the same with either CCA or Bell Telephone Co., the spokesman said. However, after the three years, the CCA equipment would be paid for and the college would pay only a maintenance fee, which would be considerably less than the amount paid to Bell to continue renting its equipment, he said.

"That (the $45,000 difference) is fairly conservative. I feel it would probably be more in the way of $60,000," Langford said.

Langford also told the board that Communications Corporation of America would guarantee its service. If the board was not satisfied, the company would remove their cables and replace the system with a comparable one or refund the college's money.

Communications Corporation of America also guaranteed that their maintenance costs would not rise more than eight percent during any year.

CCA was one of the first private companies in the United States to enter the interconnect industry, said Bob Bozeman, president of CCA. The company was formed in 1969 and now has over 800 systems in Texas.

"We must give three things to our customers: We must save them money; we must give them better service, or we must give them better equipment," Bozeman said.

Carter achieves pluses on policy

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter may have seemed just an interested onlooker during the Egyptian-Israeli dialogue in Jerusalem, but appearances in this case were deceiving, according to Israel's ambasador to Washington.

As the envoy, Simcha Dinitz, emerged from the White House on the eve of Egyptian President Anwar Sadat's arrival in Israel, a reporter asked, "Are the Americans pretty well cut out of all this?" Dinitz responded:

"The fact that I have been in the White House three times in the last two days doesn't indicate that the Americans are cut out of it."

Results give teachers strong teaching tool

BY MARLEEN RAY

Test results of the Midland Assessment Program give the teacher "a powerful teaching tool," Midland Independent School District Superintendent James H. Mailey said Tuesday.

The results of the fourth, fifth and sixth grade level testing were submitted to the Midland Board of Education at its regular meeting Tuesday afternoon.

Assistant Superintendent Douglas W. Brown said the reading and math exams administered to the students in early fall were "pre-tests" and enable the teacher to group the students according to the skills they have not yet mastered.

The math test evaluated common subtraction, multiplication and addition skills with fractions and stated problems at the higher grade levels. The reading test primarily evaluated basic reading skills through questions on comprehension, vocabulary, phonics, word attack and study skills.

Brown said the teachers will be able to use the test results to outline their program objectives. He said when the same test again is administered to the students in April, the results then "will show how well the teaching program is doing." He said the results will serve as a "yardstick" of comparison with future test results.

In other items on the agenda, the board approved a time schedule in the event of classes starting an hour later due to inclement weather. Mailey said the time schedule would be put into effect if the roads were too dangerous to travel on in the early morning, but would become safe later in the morning.

A $2,059 bid was accepted by the school board from Lanier Business Products for dictation equipment for Midland High School. A bid of $2,246 and an alternate bid of $2,197, both from Malone Office Equipment were turned down.

The board also accepted bids for several vehicles needed by the school district. It approved a $16,270 bid from Nickel Chrysler-Plymouth-Dodge for two 15-passenger vans. An alternate bid of $16,398 from Nickel was rejected. Nickel's bid of $14,700 for two 12-passenger vans was accepted by the board over the $14,898 bid entered by Huckabay Chevrolet.

Purchase of a pickup truck for $4,415 from Huckabay was approved by the trustees, who turned down the $4,490 bid from Nickel. An alternate bid of $7,880 from Huckabay for a two-ton truck was accepted. The other bid from Huckabay was for $8,147. Wes-Tex equipment also entered a bid of $8,315 for the truck.

The $1,214 bid from Huckabay also was approved by more board members to purchase a platform truck body. The $1,700 bid from Wes-Tex Equipment was rejected.

During the meeting, the board went into executive session to consider a real estate matter, but no action was taken. Approval also was given to the Midland Teachers Credit Union to join the Blue Cross-Blue Shield insurance program. The credit union will pay a monthly premium for its members, according to the plan.

Bridge etiquette may pose problem

By ALFRED SHEINWOLD

Few bridge players know the etiquette of their favorite game. As a result, hardly anybody knows what kind of gum to chew at a bridge party or how to pick a partner up from the floor. a difficult etiquette problem came to me in the mail recently.

"South ruffed the third club, led a trump to dummy's ten and returned the queen of hearts for a finesse. West won and returned a trump.

"South was in the dummy for the last time and couldn't unblock the ace of hearts to get a discard on the jack of hearts. While he was thinking, he upset a glass of water on the lady at his left. He apologized profusely, explained that he was discarding a diamond on dummy's jack of hearts, mixed all the cards together and helped mop up the spilled water.

"We were in the middle of the next rubber before anybody realized before anybody realized that the contract couldn't have been made."

"What should we do?"

DELICATE SITUATION

It's a delicate situation. Of course you shold tell South not to take such foolish finesses. He should lead the ace and deuce of hearts before touching trumps. Then he gets to dummy with a trump to discard on the queen of hearts.

Maybe you shouldn't invite so slumsy a player. If you must have him around, here's an etiquette pointer: Never serve soup in the middle of a bridge hand.

ANSWER: Bid 1 NT. The hand is worth a response, and this is the most informative way to keep such a hand open.

Kleasen sentence reversed

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — The Court of Criminal Appeals reversed and remanded today the death penalty conviction of Robert Elmer Kleasen in the slaying of a Mormon missionary whose body was allegedly cut up on a taxidermy band saw.

The court's ruling means Kleasen must be retried or let go. However, the state will have much greater difficulty winning a conviction in a new trial because the appeals court said officers used a defective search warrant to seize evidence from Kleasen's trailer.

Exclusion of that evidence, which included the missionary's wrist watch and car keys, will make it hard to prove a circumstantial evidence case.

Kleasen was charged with killing two missionaries but tried only in the death of one, Mark Fischer, 19, of Milwaukee, Wis. Fischer and his companion, Gary Darley, 20, of Simi Valley, Calif., disappeared after visiting Kleasen's trailer Oct. 28, 1974, in the hills west of Austin.

Strong tremors rock portion of Argentina

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP) — A strong earthquake rocked western Argentina early today, killing at least 50 persons and demolishing numerous buildings, the government said.

The quake, which also injured hundreds of persons, many seriously, struck hardest near San Juan, a wine growing and agricultural city of 500,000 located 800 miles northwest of Buenos Aires near the Chilean border.

The tremors were felt in Buenos Aires as well as across the borders in Chile, Brazil and Peru. No serious damage or casualties were reported in the other countries.

The official news agency Telam said 80 per cent of the dwellings in rural communities on the outskirts of San Juan were demolished when the quake hit at 6:28 a.m. (4:28 EST). Most of the dwellings were of adobe or flimsy materials.

Corpses, funeral pyres cover Indian coastline

By GENE KRAMER

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — The stench of rotting corpses and a pall of smoke from funeral pyres blanket stretches of India's southeast coast where a cyclone and tidal waves killed at least 10,000 persons last weekend.

The Times of India said the death toll could reach 20,000, and tens of thousands of survivors were homeless.

The stricken state of Andhra Pradesh was "hell on earth," one newspaper report said.

Officials said as many as 100 villages were washed away by the towering waves generated by the storm. Countless bloated human corpses and animal carcasses were seen floating in flood waters.

"Overnight, villages have been turned into burial grounds," said the state education minister, Khrishna Rac, after a tour.

He reported roads blocked by masses of uprooted trees and debris in which bodies of cattle and humans were tangled.

Bodies that could not be identified immediately were being burned on huge funeral pyres in an attempt to prevent the outbreak of disease. A reporter for the Samachar new agency said he saw thousands of corpses and carcasses in the worst-hit district of Divi Taluk.

"In some villages, the living were struggling for survival and have no time to attend to the dead," he reported. "They are so shocked they have ceased to cry."

The toll in Divi Taluk was estimated at 8,000 dead and the damage at $230 million. The state government estimated a total of at least 1.5 million acres of crops were destroyed, including banana and rice plantations, and floods covered more than 200 square miles of land.

Air force and navy planes and helicopters brought more than 10 tons of food to isolated areas, but many stranded hungry survivors still had not been located, officials said.

School district keeps strong financial status

Except for some internal weaknesses in tax collection and assessment procedures, the financial condition of the Midland Independent School District was pronounced satisfactory Tuesday with no major problems, according to an independent auditor's report.

Ronald Bumpas of Peat, Marwick, Mitchell and Co. said the financial status of the school district is "strong and continues to be so" in his address to the Board of Education at its regular meeting Tuesday afternoon. The audit covered the 1976-77 fiscal year.

At one point during the report, President Johnny R. Warren expressed concern that the cash reserves of the district were about 30 percent less than what they had been at the beginning of the year.

Bumpas said the district has "always had a pretty substantial cash reserve and that probably 70 percent of what (the district) had is sufficient."

He said there is no magic number on what is an adequate reserve. "It's just whatever the school district needs," he said. In his opinion, the taxing and assessment procedures were adequate.

In other business, the school board approved a motion to negotiate the costs of the tax office with the parties who share them with the district based on 50 percent of each party's work load demands on the office and 50 percent of the income taken in by each party through the office.

Services of the Tax Office presently are shared by the school district, the City of Midland and Midland College. Plans call for the Midland hospital district also to share the costs.

Other alternatives to distribute the cost of the office's operations were based on work load demands only, on generated income only and on an even splitting of the total cost. The 50-50 method of distributing the cost was settled on as the most equitable way of sharing the burden.

Reimbursement picked by college

Midland College Trustees Tuesday had to decide whether to spend approximately $11,500 for unemployment compensation insurance or to risk having 10 employees file unemployment claims against the college.

Beginning Jan. 1, 1978, Midland College, and other educational institutions, will come under the Texas Unemployment Compensation Act, Bob Phillips, business manager for the college, told board members.

Midland College had two choices: pay the state a one percent tax on each employee, based on salary, up to $60, or be a reimbursing employer.

The one percent tax would cost the college the estimated $11,500, but the college would be covered for any unemployment claims.

Under the reimbursement method, the state would pay any unemployment claims against Midland College, and then bill the college for that amount.

"The average claim is about $932 per claim," Phillips said. "We would have to have at least 10 people file claims against us in a year to meet the $10,000 we would pay under the taxing method."

The board approved the reimbursement method.

The board authorized Midland College President Dr. Al G. Langford to begin looking for a director of activities for the Chaparral Center, to begin duties Feb. 1.

In other business, the board amended the budget to include $54,000 in bills carried over from last year, appointed a salary committee and tabled discussion on the operational contract for the tax office.

Strike begins to prod employers

NEW YORK (AP) — Dockworkers in Baltimore stayed away from the job today in a general strike aimed at prodding employers who they say are "dilly dallying" in local contract talks.

The general strike, which halted work on all vessels in the second largest port on the East Coast, was the first sign of general walkouts authorized Tuesday night by Thomas W. "Teddy" Gleason, president of the International Longshoremen's Association, AFL-CIO.

The strikes also were authorized for New Orleans and Philadelphia should negotiations on local issues drag to a halt at those ports.

Baltimore's 4,000 dockworkers said Tuesday night they would accept no work orders today, and gave no indication of how long their action might continue.

The stumbling block came during negotiations for agreement on working conditions to supplement the master salary pact reached earlier for North Atlantic ports.

Earlier, it was hoped that a voting schedule would be announced today for the 50,000 dockworkers who are selectively striking "automated" ocean shipping on the Atlantic and Gulf coasts. The strikes are now in their 54th day.

That optimism followed a report by Gleason that settlement efforts on the Gulf Coast were going well.

Earlier, he had said Friday was his target date for a ratification vote. But that was predicated upon completion of agreements in all 34 port areas from Maine to Texas, something that now seems unlikely in the near future in Baltimore, New Orleans and Philadelpia.

Gleason on Tuesday had expressed confidence that an agreement in New Orleans, where he indicated that only the details of a "guaranteed annual income" (GAI) program — to care for longshoremen idled by automation — was holding up a complete accord.

The union has made it clear that a GAI provision is necessary for every local settlement this year. Most northern ports, affected the most by automation, already had such income protection.

A tentative settlement on the Texas coast, he said, awaited the resolution of a dispute of a tentatively approved pact on the Atlantic coast. That dispute involves a 60-day contract cancellation clause in the containerization section of a master agreement. The clause, inserted to cover a possible outlawing of new container provisions, conflicted with a policyof arbitration that has prevailed in Texas ports.

Gleason said negotiators for master and local contracts on the East Gulf area were meeting in Mobile, Ala., Tuesday, and that he anticipated no problems there.

Meanwhile, the strike here has blocked unloading of some 2 million long tons of cargo worth $4 billion since the job action began. Included are large quantities of goods for Christmas and their delivery is already too late for sale this season in many cases. This will cause heavy losses to consignees.

TheMaritime Administration counted 79 "automated" ships strikebound Tuesday. These included seven U.S. flag ships lying idle in European ports and 24 foreign vessels in East and Gulf coast ports.

The biggest concentration of struck ships was 23 container ships and three "LASH" vessels idle here in the nation's biggest port. The container ships move general cargo in sealed steel van-size boxes that eliminate the need for much manual labor. Thus the union blames "containerizatioo3aum1or much of the joblessness among dock workers. The "LASH" vessels carry loaded barges which move inland by river and canal without having to transfer their cargo.

The master agreement would add 80 cents to hourly wages of $8, retroactive to last June 1, 80 cents more next Oct.1 and another such raise one year later.

Gas Service Co. announces halt on all new connections

KANSAS CITY (AP) — Gas Service Co. today announced the filing of tariff provisions which would end all new home and small business gas hookups for its customers in Kansas, Missouri and Oklahoma on Jan. 1.

The order was filed with the corporation commissions of the three states.

Because of federal regulations, the company has been unable to secure assurance that future pipe line supplies of natural gas will be available from its principal supplier, Cities Service Gas Co., after Jan. 1.

The actio stems from federal moves this summer to restrict the growth of Cities Service, which provides gas for 502 communities in Kansas, Missouri, Oklahoma, Nebraska and Texas. That federal order was overturned, but is being appealed. A rehearing on the growth curtailment case has been scheduled before the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission Dec. 6. The final hearing in the case is scheduled April 4, 1978.

Gas Service says if it adds more customers after Jan. 1, then the FEPC reverses the decision and imposes growth restrictions retroactive to Jan. 1, the penalties to the company could be severe.

President resigns after drumming out

PORTSMOUTH, Va. (AP) — To the solemn roll of drums, the uniformed figure marched between columns of his friends, who turned their backs as he passed. The ritual is an old military ordeal, but in this case, the object of disgrace was a 14-year-old boy.

Reaction to the drumming out at Frederick Military Academy here has apparently forced the resignation of the school's president.

Col. William Haas, who was named FMA president in August 1976, resigned Sunday, six days after the drumming out, but the school's directors did not disclose his decision until Tuesday.

The 14-year-old cadet put through the drumming out was ranked second in his class. He had admitted stealing $14 from a teacher.

Haas could not be reached for comment. He is a 1955 West Point graduate who won two Silver Stars and three Bronze Stars for gallantry in Vietnam. He retired from the Army in 1975 with the rank of lieutenant colonel.

The last time the U.S. military drummed anyone out of the service apparently was in 1962, when a Marine accused of theft was drummed out of his unit at Camp Allen in Norfolk, Va.

None of the armed services practices the ritual today.

Some parents in the school's booster club complained to directors about the ceremony, calling it offensive and vindictive.

"Many of the boys were upset by this," one booster said. "They didn't even know what a drumming out was before the ceremony."

A parent who supported Haas said, "Many of us feel the action was done properly and justly. That's why we sent our boys there. Because Haas does a good job."

Upsets rule grid world

By HERSCHEL NISSENSON

NEW YORK (AP) — What's so tough about picking college football winners?

Last week, in a fit of pique at all the skullduggery by the various bowl nommittees, this corner picked every upset where a Top Twenty team was concerned, 10 in all.

And guess what? Three of them actually came about, giving several bowls plently of consternation — Colorado State over Arizona State, San Diego State over Flordia State and Houston over Texas Tech. In addition, Clemson needed a last-minute touchdown to beat South Carolina.

Even with all the crazy selections, last week's score was 39 right and 19 wrong for a .672 percentage. Imagine if we were really bearing down. For the season — and these will be the last picks before the bowl games — it's 546-220-15 — .713.

This is the week that will settle the final lineup for the Cotton, Bluebonnet, Orange, Liberty, Rose and Fiesta bowls.

Texas at Texas A&M: These bitter rivals have played six common opponents. Texas has the edge five times and the sixth is only a one-point difference in A&M's favor. Texas is the nation's only unbeaten team so leave it to the good old Aggies to foul that up. Upset Special of the Week ...Texas A&M 24-17.

Nebraska at Oklahoma: The Cornhuskers have a different offense and they don't have the great drop-back passer (David Humm, Vince Ferragamo) and, according to Oklahoma's Barry Switzer, I.M. Hipp "gives them a dimension they haven't had since Johnny Rodgers — a back who can score from anywhere on the field." Overall team speed will decide this one ... Oklahoma 35-21.

Penn State at Pitt: The way things have been going lately in Western Pennsylvania, all the traditional rivalries may pale in comparison to this one before too long. Besides, the Panthers think Joe Paterno cost them a shot at the Orange Bowl ...Pitt 30-24.

UCLA vs. Southern California: A victory sends UCLA to the Rose Bowl. USC hasn't done much right lately, losing four of its last six games, which means the Trojans probably will louse things up for their crosstown enemies ...Southern Cal 24-14.

Arizona at Arizona State: A funny thing happened to the Sun Devils on their trek to the Fiesta Bowl — they got bumped off by Colorado State in the snow when a victory would have clinched the WAC berth. When was the last time it snowed in Tempe? ...Arizona State 38-17.

Army vs. Navy at Philadelphia: The wolves say Army Coach Homer Smith's job is riding on this one despite the Cadets' first winning season in five years. Smith has brought Army back to respectability, but the Middies seem to have his number ...Navy 24-17.

Arkansas at Texas Tech: We've picked Texas A&M to deal the Cotton Bowl a staggering blow by knocking off Texas. Why shouldn't the Orange Bowl suffer, too? Second Upset Special ...Texas Tech 21-20.

Other games:

East — Boston College 49, Holy Cross 7.

South — Alabama 35, Auburn 7; Jackson State 28, Alcorn State 0; Louisiana Tech 25, Northeast Louisiana 14; Southwestern Louisiana 27, McNeese State 8; Georgia 20, Georgia Tech 17; Lousisana State 28, Wyoming 14; Florida 34, Miami, Fla. 17; Grambling State 42, Southern U. 21; Tennessee 24, Vanderbilt 14; Virginia Tech 27, VMI 17.

Midwest — Miami, O. 17, Cincinnati 13.

Southwest — Baylor 29, Texas Christian 15; Houston 33, Rice 13; West Texas State 34, Southern Illinois 14.

Far West — San Diego State 28, San Jose State 24; Brigham Young 56, Texas-El Paso 20; Colorado State 30, Utah State 10; South Carolina 23, Hawaii 16; Boise State 34, Idaho 24; Long Beach State 38, Bowling Green 28; New Mexico 24, Utah 17.

Gossage can afford bed

NEW YORK (AP) — On the day he signed a six-year, multimillion dollar contract with the New York Yankees, relief pitcher Rich Gossage thought back to the days in the rookie leagues when he, Bucky Dent and Terry Forster slept on the floor of their one-bedroom apartment in Appleton, Wis.

"We slept in front of the air conditioner, catching our death of cold," he recalled.

Those were the days in the rookie leagues, "Way down at rock bottom," according to Dent, when the trio only had one mattress to share and an "old green '55 Chevy we used to drive around in."

Now Dent is the Yankees' shortstop and making considerably more than the $500 per month he and Gossage used to get in the rookie leagues. And for the next six years, if all goes well, Dent will be watching Gossage pitch in relief for New York.

That's because the righthanded Gossage sold his services to the Yankees, who also own a certain left-handed reliever named Sparky Lyle — the American League's Cy Young Award winner for the 1977 season.

"I told Rich I thought he'd really enjoy playing here," said Dent, who was his teammate at Appleton, later with the Chicago White Sox, and now with the defending World Champions.

Gossage feels the same way. "I'm very proud. It's a very big privilege for me. My family and I have followed the Yankees for a long time," he said.

Now, courtesy of the free agent sweepstakes, he brings to New York a brilliant season with an 11-9 record, 26 saves and a 1.62 earned run average in 72 appearances for the Pittsburgh Pirates. Add that to Lyle's figures of 13-5 record, 26 saves, a 2.17 ERA and 72 appearances for the Yankees.

"We got into 144 games between us," said Gossage. "There's 162 in a season, so that left a few games over for the other guys."

The other guys will be youngsters like Ken Clay, Gil Patterson, Jim Beattie and Steve Taylor.

"With Gossage and Lyle, there is a margin for error with some of the young pitchers," explained Yankees President Gabe Paul. "We haven't had much of an opportunity to get them in, but with this kind of a bullpen, that will be different."

Team owner George Steinbrenner said he wasn't concerned about there being enough work for both bullpen stars. "I consider this a great business deal, from the standpoint of the return on an investment," he said. "Sparky is a team man. He'll be fine. I think he's very happy and feels he has been treated fairly."

Steinbrenner's investment, some say, is more than $2.5 million over the six years — a far cry from Gossage's sandwich days in Appleton, Wis. The Yankees won a bidding war with 13 other clubs, who all asked a kindness of Gossage's agent, Jerry Kapstein.

"They all said, 'We want him, but if we don't get him, could you send him to the other league?'" said Kapstein.

At least a few of them got their wish.

NFL's turkey game won't be on Thursday

By BRUCE LOWITT
AP Sports Writer

We won't bore you with a lot of talk about a turkey. The National Football League will serve that up next Monday night.

Instead, we'll get right to business, namely Thanksgiving Day's side dishes.

Walter Payton, having shattered O.J. Simpson's one-game rushing record, takes aim at his one-season mark — and does it against the team Simpson steamrollered just a year ago. Payton and the Bears also will run roughshod over Detroit. The Lions will come out of the game looking more like (heh-heh) giblets.

St. Louis drives everybody up the wall with its last-gasp victories while Miami drives its coach up the wall with its lastgasp defeats. It won't be that close this time. The Cardinals will knock the (ahem) stuffing out of the Dolphins.

Add to your upset stomach our Upset Special — New Orleans over San Francisco. Last week's 12-2 mark put the season's record at 98-42, .700.

This week's pickings:

Bears 27, Lions 10

Last year Simpson nailed the Lions for 273 yards. Last week Payton rolled up 275 yards. If we didn't know better, we'd expect 300 or more this time. But that would be foolish ...wouldn't it?

Cardinals 28, Dolphins 17

Miami, which gets burned by long passes, usually blows leads late in the game. The Cardinals, who love long passes, won't wait that long.

Chargers 20, Seahawks 10

Did you know San Diego's got the AFC's No.1 defense? Did you know Seattle's got the No.12 defense? Do you know what that adds up to?

Saints 21, 49ers 14

San Francisco beat New Orleans in overtime two weeks ago — but the 49ers didn't have to worry about Archie Manning then.

Raiders 35, Bills 10

After turkey sandwiches, turkey hash, turkey burgers and turkey a la mode, we get Monday night indigestion ...and this!

Broncos 20, Colts 17

Cowboys 31, Redskins 13

Remember how they've been saying Washington has a shot at a playoff berth. Howdy, pardner. BANG!

Rams 24, Browns 17

Patriots 34, Eagles 20

Bengals 33, Giants 13

Cincinnati uses the reverse. The Giants' offense goes that way.

Vikings 17, Packers 10

Two teams without quarterbacks — or much of anything else.

Oilers 28, Chiefs 12

Steelers 41, Jets 9

Like carving up the main course.

Falcons 20, Bucs 7

Speaking of turkeys!

Washington Redskins want instant replay

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Washington Redskins are looking for an instant replay of 1976.

At this time a year ago, the Redskins had a won-lost record of 6-4, the same as they do now. They won their last four games, including victories over Dallas and St. Louis, and got into the playoffs as a wild card selection.

The Redskins hope to repeat that feat, beginning with a victory over the Dallas Cowboys Sunday in a nationally televised game here at RFK Stadium.

If they want to gain a wild card berth, however, they will have to perform like they did in the last four games a year ago, a feat that currently boggles the mind.

"We can do it, if everybody thinks we can do it," said defensive tackle Diron Talbert, who pointed out the similarities of the 1976 and 1977 seasons after Washington's 10-9 victory over Green Bay Monday night. "We're not scoring a lot of points on offense, but we're giving up few points on defense. Everybody's sticking together. Nobody's really down on anybody and that's what it takes to make it to the playoffs."

Talbert recalled that the Redskins gave up only 40 points in the last four games of 1976. "That's excellent. That's the effort it's going to take this year."

For the record, in their first 10 games a year ago, the Redskins held the opposition to a total of 177 points while scoring 207 themselves. In the last four games the Redskins gave up 40 while picking up 104.

The Redskins defeated St. Louis 20-10 and lost 20-7 to Dallas early in the 1976 season but came back with victories of 1610 against the Cardinals and 2714 over the Cowboys in the final four games. They also earned victories over Philadelphia and the New York Jets at the end of the season.

This year, the Redskins have picked up only 136 points while the defense has allowed 141. They still must play Dallas, Buffalo, St. Louis and Los Angeles.

In earlier meetings, the Redskins defeated the Cardinals 24-14 but lost to Dallas 34-16.

"You can't beat anybody if you give up 34 points, I don't care if you play Tampa Bay," said Talbert. "Our goal is to hold the opposition to 17 points. We figure if we can hold them to 17, somehow our offense is going to scrape up 20."

Using this reasoning, the Redskins' record would have been 2-6-2 because they've scored 24 and 23 points and 17 twice but all the rest of their games were 16 or under.

"What the hell, I don't care how we win," said Talbert. "As long as we come out on top, that's all that's important. One year from now, nobody is going to know the difference whether we win by one point or whatever."

Expos' Andre Dawson earns rookie honors

NEW YORK (AP) — Centerfielder Andre Dawson today became the second player in the nine-year history of the Montreal Expos to win the National League's Rookie of the Year Award, beating Steve Henderson of the New York Mets by one vote.

"I'm very happy, regardless of how many votes I won by," Dawson said by telephone from his Florida home.

The 23-year-old Dawson, who hit .282 with 19 home runs, 65 runs batted in and 21 stolen bases, received 10 votes in balloting by a 24-man committee of the Baseball Writers Association of America.

Henderson, a leftfielder, got nine votes, while first baseman-outfielder Gene Richards of the San Diego Padres received four votes and pitcher Floyd Bannister of the Houston Astros got the other vote.

Pitcher Carl Morton, who won in 1970, was the other Montreal player to take the prize.

"I was a bit surprised that it was as close as it was," said Dawson. "I'm not taking anything away from Steve Henderson. He's a fine ballplayer and had a super year considering the time he spent with the Mets."

Henderson joined the Mets from Cincinnati in the celebrated Tom Seaver deal last June 15. He didn't begin playing regularly until late that month, but finished the season with a .297 batting average, 12 home runs, 65 RBI and six stolen bases.

"Steve's a super player. I see him also as one day being a superstar," said Dawson, who combined with Warren Cromartie and Ellis Valentine to give the Expos one of the best young outfields in baseball.

Dawson gave Manager Dick Williams part of the credit for his achievement. "I had heard Dick has a reputation of not being able to handle young players," he said, "but I found that to be untrue. Dick was sincere, and around the middle of June, he told me I was going to play every day. I'm very thankful to him for giving me the opportunity to play and I can sincerely say he was super to me.

"Fortunately for me, things did work out. I played well and I sincerely feel I deserve the award.

"I felt I had proven myself in the minor leagues and there was no use in playing there any more."

So when his chance came, Dawson took it. Now he wants a pennant for the Expos.

"In a few years, when we blossom together and pick up a few pitchers, we can turn things around," he said.

Henderson became the second Mets player to finish second by one point in the rookie voting, pitcher Jerry Koosman losing the 1968 election to catcher Johnny Bench of the Cincinnati Reds by that margin.

Richards had a .290 average and 56 stolen bases, while Bannister compiled an 8-9 record for the Astros.

Henderson pulls rout over Chaps

ATHENS—Henderson County Junior College got a 27 point performance from Alex Middleton here Tuesday night to deal the Midland College Chaparrals a 90-71 basketball defeat.

The Chaps fell to 5-3 on the year with their second straight loss. MC will try to rebound tonight against Temple Junior College in Temple.

Henderson also got 15 points from Chuckie Smith and 10 from Lance Jagmin.

Luis Alvarado led the Chaps with 15 points while Ron Jones and Cullen Mayfield added 12 each, but the big inside men, Rick Hudgins and Clifford Taylor, scored only 12 points between them. The Chaps also converted only three of eight free throw tosses while Henderson connected on 14 of 15 charity tosses.

MIDLAND COLLEGE (71): Mayfield 6-0-12; White 3-0-6; Mayes 4-0-8; Jones 6-0-12; Denny 1-0-2; Murdock 1-0-2; Riggins 1-0-2; Alvarado 7-1-15; Curry 0-0-0; Hudgins 1-2-4; Taylor 4-0-8. Totals: 34-3-18.

New NHL award to get test

MONTREAL (AP) — The National Hockey League Tuesday announced it is establishing an annual award to be given to a forward who shows outstanding defensive play.

The award, the Selke Trophy, is the NHL's ninth official trophy for individual players and the first adopted by the league since 1966, when the Lester Patrick Trophy was first awarded for outstanding service to hockey in the United States.

Braves name manager

ATLANTA (AP) — Bobby Cox, a light-hitting infielder who became "a tough son of a gun" as a minor league manager, has been chosen by Atlanta Braves owner Ted Turner to lead his cellar-dwelling National League team to baseball's "promised land."

"We lost 101 games last year, so obviously there is the need for a lot of work," Cox said Tuesday after signing a two-year contract to become the Braves' seventh full-time manager since they moved from Milwaukee in 1966. Terms of the contract were not disclosed.

"I'm my own manager. I'll manage the way I want to," said Cox, who had a .224 lifetime batting average in two seasons as a New York Yankees third baseman before becoming a minor league manager in 1970. He became a Yankees coach last season after winning two pennants in five seasons as a manager in New York's farm system.

"We want to turn it around as soon as possible," Cox said. "I want to come out of spring training with the players thinking we're pennant contenders. That's a feeling we have to have and it will be my job to make them feel that way."

Cox said pitching was the greatest need of the Braves, whose 61-101 record last season was the club's worst in 42 years. He said he would soon announce some coaching changes and added, "There are some deals cooking with pitching, naturally, our first preference."

"Our top pitcher won 16 games and lost 20 and our next best pitcher won seven games," he said. "We definitely need pitching, that's all there is to it. You can't win without pitching."

The 36-year-old Cox is the youngest manager in the major leagues. He succeeded Dave Bristol, fired last month after two consecutive last-place finishes with the Braves.

"We're hoping Bobby can be the manager to lead us to the promised land as soon as possible," said Turner, who termed Cox' credentials and background "just what the doctor ordered."

Turner's choice got a complimentary nod from Pat Gillick, a Toronto Blue Jays official who knew Cox when he managed the Yankees' farm team at Syracuse.

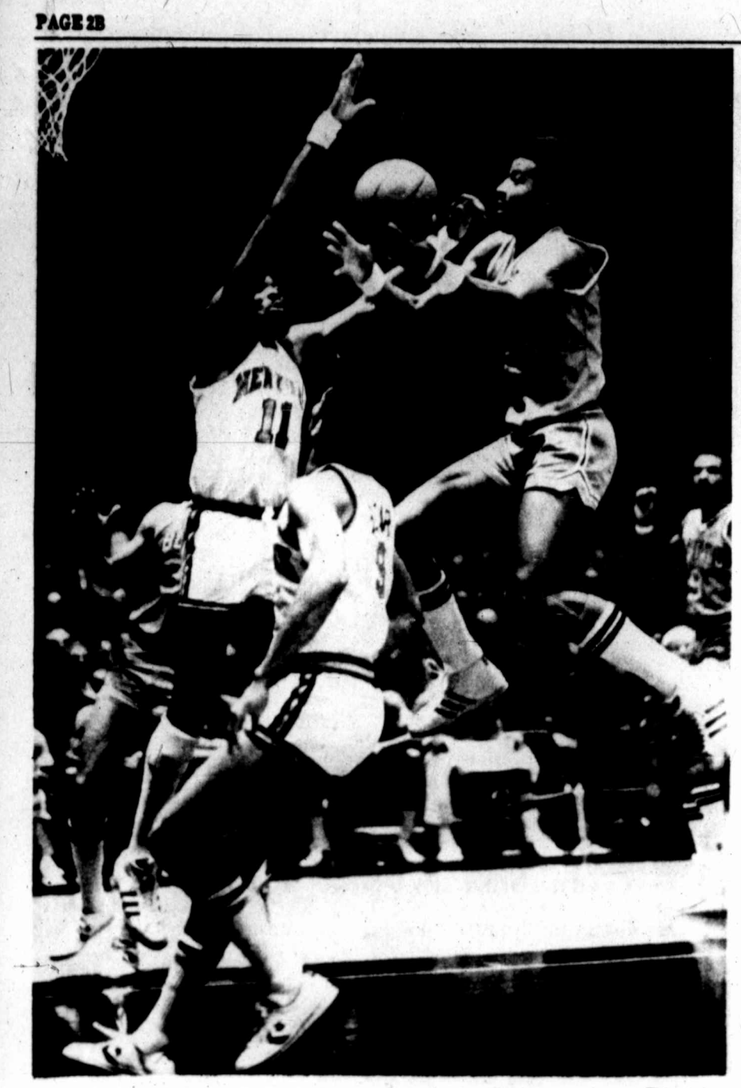

"He's his own man," Gillick said of Cox. "But easy going? He is until somebody backs him into a corner. Then he's a tough son of a gun. He's easy going as long as you put out and hustle for him. Don't put out, and he's meaner than hell."

American League President Lee MacPhail, who gave Cox his first minor league manager's job when both were with the Yankees, predicted Cox would be "a fine big league manager."

Phoenix finds new bright spot

The 6-foot-6 forward from the University of North Carolina scored a career-high 34 points, nine in the last 3½ minutes, helping the Suns to a 118-107 National Basketball Association triumph over the Los Angeles Lakers Tuesday night. It was Phoenix fifth straight victory at home.

"He's a heckuva player," said Lakers Coach Jerry West. "I saw him play a lot at the collegiate level and he's just a great player, and unselfish. He's as good a rookie as I've seen play this year."

That's exactly what the Suns were hoping for when they went into the college draft in June. Both their forwards, Curtis Perry and Gar Heard, had missed much of last season because of injuries and Coach John MacLeod was seeking insurance in case one of them couldn't come back. He also wanted a player who could add some quickness to a relatively slow front court.

He got his man in Davis.

"He does a lot of things very well," said MacLeod. "He brings the ball down l ke a guard, has the ability to play defense and is the best shooting forward we've had since I came to Phoenix. And he's got just a super attitude."

The blueprint called for Davis to break in slowly behind Heard and Perry, but the rookie showed in training camp that there was no way he would be kept out of the starting lineup.

With Davis joining standouts like Paul Westphal and Alvan Adams in the starting lineup, the Suns are off to a 9-5 start and stand second in the Pacific Division behind defending champion Portland.

In other NBA games Tuesday night, the Buffalo Braves edged the New York Knicks 102-101, the Denver Nuggets trimmed the Washington Bullets 119-114, the Philadelphia 76ers beat the Houston Rockets 105-99, the Milwaukee Bucks defeated the Golden State Warriors 109-88 and the New Orleans Jazz stopped the Indiana Pacers 123-118.

Phoenix led by as many as 17 points before Lakers rookie James Edwards scored 11 points in the third quarter. Los Angeles pulled within 105-102, but Davis' three-point play with 3½ minutes to go put Phoenix comfortably in front again.

Edwards, playing center in place of injured Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, led Los Angeles with 29 points. But West said his team still missed his big giveman, who suffered a broken hand while punching Milwaukee's Kent Benson in the season opener.

"I simply don't have anybody who has surfaced to make the key play down the stretch on offense," he said. "And we have no idea when Abdul-Jabbar will be back."

Braves 102, Knicks 101

Randy Smith's 17-foot jumper with three seconds to play was the winning basket for Buffalo, which got 34 points from Billy Knight, 26 points from Smith and 19 rebounds from Swen Nater.

Nuggets 119, Bullets 114

Denver continued to buck the trend around the league by posting its fourth victory in the last five starts on the road, beating the Bullets in Landover, Md., as Bob Wilkerson scored eight points in the last 1:06.

Dan Issel scored 26 points and David Thompson had 24 as the Nuggets won their seventh straight game. Bob Dandridge scored 29 for Washington, which had a four-game winning streak snapped.

76ers 105, Rockets 99

Philadelphia raised its record to 11-5, including 9-1 under Coach Billy Cunningham, as Doug Collins scored 27 points and George McGinnis 24. It was the seventh road loss in a row for Houston.

Bucks 109, Warriors 88

Golden State shot just 29 per cent from the field in the first period against Milwaukee, fell behind 35-22 and never recovered. Brian Winters led a balanced Bucks' attack with 22 points.

Jazz 123, Pacers 108

New Orleans pulled away from Indiana with a 21-4 burst early in the third period en route to its third straight victory. Pete Maravich led the Jazz with 34 points and Len Robinson had 28. Robinson also grabbed 22 rebounds and Rich Kelley 19, helping New Orleans to a 65-4 edge off the boards.

Playoffs provide trouble

BOB DILLON

Odessa Permian's Panthers did District 5-4A right proudly last weekend in beating a good Denton team, 28-0, in the bi-district game in Abilene, but this corner had rough going, overall, in hitting 14 while missing seven in schoolboy playoff games.

Misses were the El Paso Bel Air-Andress game; Bryan Adams-Roosevelt tilt; Lufkin-Plano; Conroe-Temple; LaPorte-Dulles; Brownwood-Austin Reagan and the San Antonio Holmes-Converse Judson game.

Last week 32 Class AAAA teams opened play and now, of course, it is down to half with 16 left which gives a chance at eight games along with a couple of small school games involving West Texas teams.

Anyway, before looking at this week's games, the record on the season is 143 correct and 98 incorrect for a .591 percentage.

ODESSA PERMIAN takes on another rough foe in the Arlington Lamar Vikings which wound up sharing the District 8-4A crown with Arlington High.

The Vikings own a 9-2 record with the only season loss to Wyatt of Fort Worth and to Haltom City in district play.

Last week, Lamar was down, 24-14 with less than seven minutes left in its game with Arlington Heights. The Vikings, like Mojo, exploded in the final period to win, 29-24.

Steve Tecklenburg and Tom Kidd keyed the rally and the amazing victory.

Tecklenburg and Kidd are juniors and the Vikings start three sophomores and are a young outfit.

They really got going by whipping Arlington Sam Houston, 41-13, to win their district. At the time Sam Houston was 8-0 on the year and had been in the state playoffs four straight years.

THE VIKINGS run the Houston Veer and have some good athletes, but a big plus for Permian is the fact that Lamar is about the same size as the Panthers.

Permian has been playing larger teams all season long, but its quickness has been the difference in most close games and last week, conditioning was the difference with Denton.

Anyway, after all that talk, going with Permian to gain quarterfinals with Lubbock Monterey by taking a 21-13 victory in Abilene's P.F. Shotwell Stadium Saturday.

LUBBOCK MONTERREY faces Bel Air in the Sun Bowl on of all nights — Thanksgiving. The Plainsmen, like Permian, play superb defense and will have no trouble with the Highlanders even though the game is in the Border City. Monterey to post a 27-7 victory.

IN OTHER GAMES, Highland Park will move into the quarterfinals by beating Dallas Roosevelt, 27-14 in Texas Stadium Friday night. Two players on Highland Park's unbeaten outfit are Russ Walker, son of former Highland Park and SMU fame, Doak Walker and Lance McElhenny, whose father, Don, was an SMU running ace more than two decades ago. McElhenny threw three TD passes in the Scottie's Turner 28-7 victory over Carrollton and Walker had a 20-yard TD run too.

Plano and Conroe hook up in another headliner in Waco Friday night. Last week, Plano tripped a strong Lufkin outfit, 17-7 while Conore upset the No. 2-ranked Temple Wildcats, 3-0. (Temple had shut out Conroe, 10-0, earlier in the year). This one is tough and the winner of this one has a shot at going all the way to the semifinals in two weeks. Going with Conroe to take a narrow 17-14 victory.

In the bottom park of the bracket, there's Port Neches-Groves, San Antonio Lee and Austin Reagan, all three familiar faces in the state playoffs. Spring Branch Memorial will take care of Houston Kashmere by a score of 21-16; Port Neches-Groves to beat LaPorte, 20-14; Reagan over Alice, 27-15 and San Antonio Lee to trip up San Antonio Holmes, 22-14.

SEAGRAVES WILL have its hands full in Class A play, but will beat Haskell, 22-18 in Snyder Friday night; Brownwood to trip Perryton, 26-22 in Lubbock Friday and Tahoka to upset Kermit, 20-14 in a Class AA playoff game in Andrews Friday night.

Landry's humor survives spin

DALLAS (AP)—Since Dallas Cowboys Coach Tom Landry signed a new five-year contract here's what has happened to the 17-year veteran of National Football League wars:

—His team has lost to St. Louis and Pittsburgh.

—A fat three-game lead in the National Conference Eastern Division has shriveled to one game.

—The opponents have outscored the Cowboys a total of 35-3 in the second half.

—He is suffering from a cold so bad that his vision is blurred and his left eye swollen so he couldn't watch arch-rival Washington on television Monday night.

But the classy Landry still managed a sense of humor Tuesday at his weekly press luncheon despite the adversity which has suddenly struck his team.

"I heard the Washington game last night but I sure couldn't watch 'em," said Landry. "It sounded pretty good right until the end."

Washington beat Green Bay 10-9 to setup a showdown with the Cowboys Sunday in the National Conference Eastern Division.

Asked if he might not be able to call plays for quarterback Roger Staubach, Landry quipped, "No such luck. I know how Washington so well I don't have to see to call plays. It's just a matter of executing."

Dallas has lost twice after an 8-0 start, the best in the club's history, and St. Louis lurks just a game behind and Washington is two back.

Landry said he would still take an 11-3 season.

"I don't care where we go for the playoffs," said Landry. "Our job is to get into the playoffs even if it isn't at home."

He said Dallas' problems were typical of the ups and downs that teams hit during the long NFL season.

"There's no way you can play at a high level over 20 games," said Landry. "We were way down Sunday and Pittsburgh was way up."

Pittsburgh whipped the Cowboys 28-13, totally dominating the second half.

Landry said there were a lot of plus factors for Dallas, including the performance of million-dollar rookie Tony Dorsett.

"Tony ran well and he blocked well," said Landry. "We just couldn't make the big third down play."

Landry said his defense has played poorly the last game and a half.

"I guess we just need a challenge and there's no better one than losing two games in a row," said Landry. "If we can beat Washington in their backyard it should give us a psychological lift for the rest of the season."

NMSU fires Bradley

LAS CRUCES, N.M. (AP) — New Mexico State will move "as fast as possible" to hire a new football coach to replace Jim Bradley, said university President Gerald Thomas.

An NMSU spokesman announced the firing of Bradley Tuesday following a meeting of Thomas, Athletic Director Spike Colson and members of the university's athletic council. The council voted Monday night to recommend Bradley not be rehired. Thomas and Colson accepted the recommendation.

Thomas said the process to select a new coach is being started immediately despite a call by a member of the university's board of regents, Jack S. Apodaca, that the firing of Bradley be reviewed by the regents at their Dec. 2 meeting.

"It's board policy for me to make the decision," said Thomas. "I made the decision and we're moving ahead now. I anticipate any change. We need to move as fast as possible but because of Mr. Apodaca's request we won't make any decision until after Dec. 2. We won't be able to move that fast anyway."

Apodaca requested Tuesday "this item be placed on the agenda for final action by the Board of Regents at our December 2 meeting." The brother of Gov. Jerry Apodaca gave several reasons for wanting to retain Bradley, whose Missouri Valley Conference team was 4-7 this season and has a compiled 23-31-1 record in his five years as coach.

Bradley's eagerness to recruit players from New Mexico and from the Las Cruces area were cited by Apodaca as reasons for keeping him another year. Apodaca also said a wonloss record is not the only reason to hire or fire a coach.

Thomas said the action "would routinely appear" on the regents' agenda and the board has "the ultimate authority." But he said he expected the decision made by him and Colson, which he said was based on what is best for the university, will stand.

Bradley, who was in Santa Fe Tuesday, was unavailable for comment.

He was given a one-year contract extension last November, and had called on the administration last week to give him another year. He said the Aggies had established solid recruiting contacts in California and that the new 22,000-seat Aggie Stadium to be opened next fall would attract quality football talent.

He was named NMSU coach following the 1972 campaign. The Aggies, who have not had a winning season since 1967, were 5-6 in each of his first three years as coach and were 4-6-1 last year.

Lott thinks Nebraska will fizzle

KANSAS CITY (AP) — Whatever defense Nebraska tries to use Friday to neutralize Oklahoma's Wishbone offense will fizzle, predicts confident Dewey Lott.

"If it's run right and executed right, we're the only ones who can stop it," says the magician-like Sooners' quarterback. "There's nobody else who can stop it. I feel sure we're going to run and execute, and do the things the coaches have taught us."

The winner of the Big Eight Conference's nationally televised Orange Bowl football showdown Friday may be the team that touches the ball last. Oklahoma and Nebraska rank 3-4 on the national rushing charts, each averaging more than 300 yards per game. Both have big, mobile offensive lines to open the way for some of the quickest, strongest runners in the nation.

Nebraska is a team built around two stars, alternating I-backs I.M. Hipp and Rick Berns, while Oklahoma loads its Wishbone with about a half-dozen speedsters.

And which one will have the ball? That's the dilemma that faces every Oklahoma opponent when the Sooners break their huddle. Oklahoma tops the Big Eight in team rushing, yet not one Sooners player ranks in the league's top six, while Hipp and Berns are 1-2.

Sooners fullback Kenny King is "a tremendous threat," noted Nebraska coach Tom Osborne, and Lott "is a better quarterback even than he was last year.

"They probably have more breakaway threats in their backfield than anybody else in the country," said Osborne. "And defensively they're very quick and well coached. We'll have our work cut out for us on both sides of the ball."

Barry Switzer, Oklahoma coach, believes that Hipp and Berns give Nebraska the best offense since the days of Heisman Trophy winner Johnny Rodgers.

"The reason why is I.M. Hipp," said Switzer, pointing out the sophomore sensation is ageraging more than 7 yards per carry. "They've got a back now that we feel is probably the most dangerous, the most productive back in the Big Eight Conference ..."

Nevertheless, Lott feels certain the Sooners' tricky offense will prove too good for the Huskers' defense. "If they try to key on one runner, that just means somebody else will be open," he said. "Whoever they tackle will be the wrong one."

Actually, the secret to stopping the Lott-King tandem was revealed Nov. 12 during the Sooners' 52-14 rout of Colorado.

"What am I supposed to do?" an exasperated Colorado lineman asked King. "Every time I tackle you, Lott's got the ball. Every time I tackle Lott, you've got the ball."

USC eyes bowl berth with win over UCLA

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Southern California Coach John Robinson said the Trojans voted almost unanimously to accept a provisional Bluebonnet Bowl bid, and added, "Most of our players have a deep sense of frustration and want to prove something."

Robinson, speaking Tuesday at his weekly meeting with newsmen, said, "Our players have had a lot of things go wrong,a lot of disappointments, and they want to take every chance to make amends."

The biggest disappointment in USC's 6-4 season is the fact that the Trojans, with a 4-2 conference mark, have no chance to play in the Rose Bowl. But they can knock UCLA out of the Pacific-8 title Friday evening when the two crosstown rivals meet in their nationally televised regular-season finale.

A Southern Cal victory would put the Trojans into the Bluebonnet Bowl against either Texas or Texas A&M, while Washington would go to the Rose Bowl and UCLA would stay home. A USC loss means UCLA goes to the Rose Bowl, Washington goes to the Bluebonnet Bowl, and the Trojans go nowhere.

The USC-UCLA rivalry is a somewhat unusual one in that it is, while heated, not bitter. Robinson reflected that when he talked about the showdown with the Bruins.

"We're not really thinking about knocking UCLA out of anything," he remarked. "I can't say you don't wish your rival ill, because there's a little bit of that in all of us. But when the game's over, the main thing we want to say is, 'We won that football game,' not that weknocked UCLA out of the Rose Bowl.

"We're more concered with ourselves, how we play, than what happens to UCLA."

A tie in the game would have the same consequences as a Trojan victory, but the USC coach said only at the time to make the decision would he know for sure if Southern Cal would go for a tie.

"If we have the ball fourth-and-15 on their 35 and time running out," he said, "sure, we might kick a field goal for a tie. But that's something I can't say for sure until it happens."

Bulldogs thump Pecos

PECOS — Bill Fredrickson and Walter Bryson led the Midland Bulldogs to their third straight basketball victory without a loss Tuesday night as they gunned down the Class AAA Pecos Eagles, 74-60.

Fredrickson, a 6-4 senior, tallied 14 points and Bryson, a 5-10 junior, added 12 more as the Bulldogs take a perfect 3-0 record into the Tall City Tourney in the Robert E. Lee Gym Friday. First round opponent for the Purple Pack will be El Paso Parkland at 7:30 p.m.

Midland took an 18-11 first period lead and Coach Don Humphrey's outfit never trailed after that.

The difference in the game was the final period when Midland outscored the Eagles 23-13.

Midland made it a clean sweep for the night, easily winning the junior varsity contest, 86-46.

Big guns for the Bullpups were Archie Booth, Daryl Loudd and David Green with 16, 12 and 10 points, respectively.

It was the season opener for Eddie Shirley's JV.

Arkansas seeks SWC title share

LUBBOCK, Texas (AP) — Arkansas hopes to gain at least a share of the Southwest Conference title with a victory over the Texas Tech Red Raiders Thanksgiving Day, only the Red Raiders may not be in a giving mood.

While sixth-ranked Arkansas was crushing Southern Methodist 47-7 to earn a spot in the Orange Bowl Jan. 2, Texas Tech was nailing down a Tangerine Bowl bid with a humiliating 45-7 loss to Houston.

"It's the worst whipping I've had since I was seven years old and tried to hide a can of spinach at the dinner table," said Tech Coach Steve Sloan of the Houston disaster.

Arkansas can finish the SWC race with a 7-1 record, tying Texas and Texas A&M if the Aggies upset Texas Saturday then defeat Houston Dec. 3.

Tech will field a crippled team in the nationally televised match.

"We've got so many people hurt it's hard to pencil a starting lineup, particularly in our offensive line," said Sloan. "We don't know exactly who is going to play there."

If things weren't bad enough, senior quarterback Rodney Allison, who had just recovered from a small broken bone in his leg, suffered a broken nose against Houston.

Allison works with a limp at best anyway.

"I think our team has enough character to bounce back off the Houston loss and the fact we have so many injuries," said Sloan.

But he added "It's going to be tough. Arkansas may be as good as Texas. They look very similar. They have speed and exceptional athletic ability. They don't have Earl Campbell but they've got Ben Cowins."

A crowd of some 40,000 fans is expected in Jones Stadium for the battle of bowl-bound teams.

Arkansas will play the winner of Friday's Big Eight joust between Oklahoma and Nebraska while Tech will meet Florida State at Orlando, Fla., Dec. 23.

The Razorbacks are 9-1 for the year while Tech is 7-3 and 4-3 in SWC play. The defending SWC co-champion Red Raiders are hoping to clinch a fourthplace finish with a victory.

Arkansas and Texas, which whipped the Razorbacks 13-9, are the two surprise teams for the conference. The Razorbacks are under new coach Lou Holtz.

"Coach Holtz has done one fine job," said Sloan. "Arkansas deserves every bit of its national ranking."

Holtz said, "We have a 'bowl' game at Lubbock and that's the end of our season. The Orange Bowl will be a one-game season against the Big Eight champion."

National cage race balanced

By The Associated Press

For someone who is coaching the defending national college basketball champions, Hank Raymonds certainly doesn't act like a man with a million.

"This will be the toughest schedule in Marquette history," says Raymonds, who has replaced Al McGuire as the Warriors' coach with some obvious trepidation.

Along with a supposedly mountainous schedule, Raymonds claims to have a few more problems. First of all, there is the business about recruiting.

"It hasn't been that easy to recruit simply because we won the NCAA title," claims Raymonds. "The reason is that everybody sees us on TV and realizes how much we have coming back."

OF COURSE, replacing the flashy McGuire hasn't been all that easy, either.

"I've been running all over the place trying to establish new identities," says Raymonds. "Al didn't do that. He had everybody snowed."

For good measure, Raymonds admits he's "scared" to be a rookie coach and voices the traditional coaching fears that some of his players won't be eligible and everybody will be shooting for the NCAA kings.

But despite the question marks in Raymonds' mind, the Warriors should still be an exclamation point on the college basketball scene this season with three starters back from last year's champions — guard Butch Lee, center Jerome Whitehead and forward Jimmy Boylan.

THEY'LL BE one of the nation's stronger teams in a field crowded with good lookers. The byword is balance in 1977-78.

Whereas nearly a dozen teams had a realistic shot at winning the national championship last year, there are possibly twice that number this season.

The conferences display more top-to-bottom energy than has been visible in recent memory. There are few clear-cut favorites anywhere, including North Carolina's NCAA finalists and defending Atlantic Coast Conference champions.

The ACC, by the way, might battle the Big Ten in producing Top Twenty teams.

Besides the Tar Heels, led by one of the country's best guards in Phil Ford, there are Maryland, Clemson, Wake Forest, Duke and North Carolina State, all with strong potential. Maryland, especially, is considered dangerous with the acquistion of ultra-prospect Albert King and Clemson could improve on its 22-6 record even with the loss of Tree Rollins.

THE BIG TEN attracted some of the nation's top high school talent and, from top to bottom, might be the strongest it has ever been. Both the haves and have-nots did themselves some good and the consensus is that defending champion Michigan, Michigan State, Ohio State and Wisconsin had the most success.

The highest-touted recruit there is 6-foot-8 Earvin Johnson of Lansing, Mich., staying in town to attend Michigan State. Termed the "top prospect in the nation" by more than one coach, with all due respect to King, Johnson's nickname is "Magic" and his ball-handling proficiency reflects that colorful sobriquet.

UCLA, the perennial Pacific-8 Conference champion, faces possibly its toughest league battle in more than a decade. Several teams are capable of wresting the title away from the Bruins, who have won the Pac-8 title 15 times in the last 16 seasons.

AMONG THE bonafide contenders are Oregon, Washington State, Oregon State and Washington. Much-improved Stanford and California could be spoilers as well.

UCLA suffered some big losses with the departure of Player of the Year Marques Johnson and guard Jimmy Spillane, and a virtual wildcat walkout by some of the team's bright talents. Even Coach Gene Bartow skipped town, leaving the team in the inexperienced hands of Gary Cunningham.

In the same state with UCLA, but not in its conference, is a team that begs just about as much respect — San Francisco. The defending champions of the West Coast Athletic Conference are the preseason favorites in their league, but Coach Bob Gaillard doesn't think his team will win as easily as it did last year. The Dons had a 29-game winning streak last season and posted a 14-0 record in WCAC play, but Gaillard — a lameduck coach — says:

"I would think that it would have to go down to the final two games to decide the championship this year."

CINCINNATI, the most talented team on paper in the Metro-Seven, is both the coaches' and media's choice to win the league tournament championship. Yet the Bearcats could be challenged by any one of six teams, especially Louisville.

The Missouri Valley Conference has expanded to nine teams this year with the addition of Indiana State and Creighton, and at least five of them will be in the race.

A Penn spokesman calls the Ivy League race "the closest league situation in years," and the Quakers will be among the sardines. The biggest fish in the Ivy pool continues to be Princeton, a well-disciplined team known for its textbook-perfect basketball.

THE BIG EIGHT has a bunch of heavyweight contenders including defending champion Kansas State, Missouri, Kansas, Oklahoma and Colorado.

The Mid-American Conference appears to have a fourhorse race, with Miami holding some of the thoroughbreds — headed by perhaps the best of the all-around MAC players in Archie Aldridge.

The old joke about the Big Sky being wide open is another year older and never truer. Idaho State lost three players to graduation and most expect the defending champions to come back to the pack. Expected to challenge the Bengals are Montana, Boise State and Weber State.

At least two teams are capable of winning the Western Athletic Conference — Utah and New Mexico. Four starters from last year's squad, 80 per cent of the point production and all-WAC performer Michael Cooper at guard enhance New Mexico's chances.

Eleven football games could impede digestion

NEW YORK (AP) — The annual Thanksgiving Day feast, turkey and pigskin, not necessarily in that order, approaches. Most sections of the country will get no fewer than 11 football games this long weekend to help with — or perhaps impede — digestion.

Here's the schedule:

—THURSDAY: CBS kicks things off with Chicago-Detroit, a pair of National Football League disappointments. Pat Summerall and Tom Brookshier will talk about how both clubs have a shot at their division title despite .500 records. As the game wears on Brookshier will suggest he'd rather be home eating turkey. Summerall will agree.

ABC is next with college action, Texas Tech-Arkansas. Although the game is virtually meaningless in the Southwest Conference race, Keith Jackson will assure us "when these two teams get together, anything can happen."

Doubters in the audience will switch to NBC an hour later for the best game of the day, St. Louis-Miami, an NFL matchup with definite playoff implications. Curt Gowdy and John Brodie call the shots.

—FRIDAY: ABC has lined up its fourth-string broadcast team — Bill Fleming and Rick Forzano — for the Oklahoma-Nebraska game. Prime competition will come from the soap operas on NBC and CBS. Will Rita reveal Bill's secret? Will Mac get wise to Sven's deception and call it off with Regine? Will Oklahoma earn an Orange Bowl bid? Will I.M. Hipp carry the ball 46 times? Will Rick Forzano notice?

ABC returns at night with Southern Cal-UCLA in one of those "regionals" that will be shown everywhere but the Wells Fargo office in Phoenix and selected bowling alleys in Lafayette, La. Those points will get Arizona-Arizona State and McNeese-Southwestern Louisiana. Chris Schenkel and Frank Broyles call the shots on USC-UCLA. The game has lost much of its usual luster due to Southern Cal's poor season but Schenkel will assure us "when these two teams get together, anything can happen."

—SATURDAY: ABC checks back in with a doubleheader — Penn State-Pitt followed by Army-Navy. Grambling-Southern will also be shown but only on a 12-inch screen located behind the Coke machine at the Grambling student center.

Al Michaels and Lee Grosscup will call the Penn State-Pitt game. Keith Jackson and Ara Parseghian will be on hand for Army-Navy. Neither team is ranked but Jackson will point out: "when these two teams get together, anything can happen."

CBS provides an added bonus Saturday for fans who have yet to catch a glimpse of the year's dumbest event. "The Sports Spectacular" will present the eighth installment of the World's Strongest Man contest. In this episode the contestants try to lift a platform with two girls on it. Will anyone be able to do it? Will anyone actually tune in to see? Do the girls have Blue Cross?

—SUNDAY: CBS gets the edge here. The NFL insists that the networks alternate national telecasts on Sundays during the regular season and it's CBS' turn. The network will offer Washington-Dallas. Summerall and Brookshier, presumably well fed by now, will be on hand to point out that Washington still has a shot at a playoff berth.

CBS will televise six games regionally and NBC will have four of them. ABC will be content with college football highlights.

—MONDAY: Frank Gifford, Howard Cosell and Don Meredith will close out the weekend with Buffalo at Oakland. This could be the least attractive Monday night game of the season. Oakland should win by 30 points. But Cosell will assure us "when these two teams get together"

MHS, Lee girls take cage wins

The Robert E. Lee girls and Midland High girls posted basketball victories Tuesday night, beating Lake View, 48-47 and Monahans, 57-21.

Lee trailed the entire game and was down by five points with 40 seconds left, but pulled out the big victory, thanks to some great defensive play by Dee Dee Poole who had three steals.

Debbie Kittle hit the winning basket with only nine seconds left to give Lee a 3-1 season record. Miss Kittle led the attack with 18 points while Miss Poole wound up with 10.

The Lee JV also trailed most of the way before pulling out a 42-39 win behind the 11-point performance of Gloria Bowens.

Lee travels to Slaton next Monday in its next outing.

Midland had an easier time in beating Monahans. Beth Thomason fired in 22 points and Karen Cook 11 as the Bulldog girls were also bringing their season mark to 3-1 with the victory.

Susan Sloan and Kim White stood out on defense for Midland which faces Andrews in the MHS Gymnasium next Monday night.

Midland also won the JV game, 41-31 with Jana Trolinger scoring 16 points for the Tall City team.

Grinsfield wins meet

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — Vesma Grinsfield of San Francisco won the $35,000 Professional Women's Bowling Association national tournament Tuesday night.

Grinsfield beat Pat Costello of Union City, Calif. 229-168 for the $5,000 first prize.

Donna Adamek of Monrovia, Calif. beat Judy Soutar of Kansas City 225-214, gaining second place over Costello.

Bev Ortner of Tucson, Ariz., finished fourth, Pam Rutherford of Oroville, Calif., was fifth and Soutar was sixth.

McConn Houston victor

By ROB WOOD

HOUSTON (AP)—Jim McConn, a former city councilman and home builder who accused his opponent of not understanding the problems of the ethnic minorities, won a stunning overwhelming victory Tuesday in the election for mayor of Houston, the nation's fifth largest city.

McConn, 49, nailed together the black, the Mexican American, and the university student vote, to hand Frank Briscoe, a former tough law-and-order district attorney, his second defeat in a run off election.

In the nonpartisian general election two weeks ago, Briscoe led the field of 12 candidates by 16,000 votes, but failed to receive the necessary 50 percent of the vote.

McConn, the runnerup, turned it all around this time as he received an endorsement from a politically powerful black organization and got a helping hand from Mayor Fred Hofheinz, who refused to seek a third two-year term.

Unofficial returns from all of the city's 323 precincts gave McConn 184,301 votes, to Briscoe's 67,353.

Briscoe had made the runoff two years ago only to lose to Hofheinz and in much the same manner, as the minorities turned their backs on the onetime Harris County district attorney.

Briscoe said, "I don't know whether I am too conservative for the city of Houston or Houston is too liberal. I do regret to see this city, and this election is a result of it, a trend toward liberalism, with overtaxing, overspending, that has contributed so much trouble to other cities in this nation."

McConn answered, "Mr. Briscoe was just not sensitive to the problems of the minorities of this city."

The predominantly black precincts of this growing, sprawling city, gave McConn 97.5 percent of their vote. The Mexican-American area went for McConn by 64 percent, and the precincts in the sections of the city where three major universities are located handed McConn a 73.4 percent margin.

It was only in the affluent, white west side of Houston that Briscoe ran strongly. He took 63.5 percent of the vote in the silk stocking section, but ran almost dead-even in the middle income white precincts.

McConn and Briscoe spent more than $1 million to win a job that pays only $20,000 a year.

Briscoe said the two major factors leading to his defeat were statements made by Hofheinz and the heavy turnout in the black and Mexican-American precincts.

Hofheinz struck a match to an otherwise cold campaign when he charged Briscoe with planting rumors about the mayor. A grand jury investigated reports that a top elected city official had been arrested in a drug or vice raid, and then was released after a high-ranking police official stepped in.

The grand jury took no action, but Hofheinz said Briscoe was responsible for the rumors and the investigation.

The turnout on a hazy, cool autumn day was about 30 percent of the 650,000 registered voters, far more than in the nonpartisan general election two weeks ago.

It was early in the night when Briscoe knew he had lost for the second time and said, "I wish McConn well. I offer him my congratulations. I don't blame Mr. McConn personally, but some of his supporters used tactics I am sure he was ashamed of, but I have no bitterness."

McConn answered, "I am not ashamed of anything my supporters did. I would hope Mr. Briscoe would rally his supporters around him and bring them into our administration so we can go on and build a bigger and better Houston."

The Texas Legislature recently passed a bill permitting a hike in the salary for the Houston mayor.

Hofheinz said he would place this recommendation before the city council before he leaves office.

Asked about the possible boost in pay, McConn said, "I have always believed it was ridiculous to pay the mayor of the nation's fifth largest city only $20,000 a year. The payroll of the city of Houston is Houston's biggest business and the mayor deserves more than $20,000."

During the two-week runoff campaign, Briscoe repeatedly referred to McConn as "my bankrupt opponent," indicating that if a man couldn't run his own business he couldn't handle the millions of dollars spent annually by the city of Houston.

McConn, who acknowledged a $412,000 indebtedness resulting from the homebuilding recession several years ago, said Briscoe "is a sick man who has absolutely no understanding of finances."

In another runoff election, Kathy Whitmire a 31-year-old widow and audit executive, won the race for city controller over Steve Jones, 31, an accountant.

The vote was Whitmire 110,579 and Jones 79,369.

Course helps anti-smuggling customs agents

NILAND, Calif. (AP) — The United States is dulling the thrust of smugglers by sharpening the skills of its customs agents in a mandatory guerrilla warfare course in the Southern California desert.

After three weeks of rigorous training, even normally chairbound supervisors learn to run, crawl, fight and shoot back.

The desert games, played out just south of the Chocolate Mountains where Gen. George S. Patton trained his tank and armored cavalry units for World War II, are a reaction to the growing threat from smugglers and their sophisticated tactics in recent years.

"Smugglers are finding ways to get around us," said Bob Lasher, assistant patrol director for the San Diego district. "The stuff continues to be brought in by aircraft and ships."

In 1973, when the U.S. Customs Service started patrolling the Mexican border with Southern California, it seized 27,289 pounds of marijuana in six months.

Smugglers in one recent case delivered a load of marijuana into Canada by freighter and then smuggled it into the United States.

But authorities say the desert training is paying off with more smuggling captures and seizures.

Danger from smugglers has always been acute. Two customs officers were captured by a band of smugglers near Nogales, Ariz., in 1974. They were slain across the border in Mexico.

The program was started soon after the Nogales killings. Treasury funds pay the $30,000 cost of each three-week class.

The Navy's Sea Air and Land (SEAL) team from the Naval Amphibious Base in Coronado, specialists in unconventional warfare, teach how to plan and carry out interdiction missions and stakeouts, how to spot smuggling along canyons, deserts and busy trails, how to deliver agents by helicopter into desolate areas, how to track down and capture air smugglers.

The training days run to midnight without a weekend off.

The desert program graduated 30 last Friday, aged between 23 and 42. Nine are being assigned to Southern California, and the others will go elsewhere along the Mexican and Canadian borders.

Police, agent arrest Midlander

Midland police and a state narcotics agent this morning arrested a 35-year-old Midland man and confiscated three packets of a substance they believe to be heroin.

The arrest at Red's Drive In at 1807 E. Front St. came on a tip from an informant, police said. The arrest took place at 12:15 a.m. this morning.

The man was in the Midland City Jail this morning.

HOUSE FIRES

Midland firefighters responded to two house fires Tuesday night and this morning.

In a fire shortly after 8 p.m. Tuesday in the 1900 block of Hudson St., heavy damage was done to one bedroom and heat and smoke damage to the rest of the house, a fire department spokesman said this morning.

A couch and mattress were destroyed and the rest of the house smoke-damaged in a fire about 2:30 a.m. this morning in the 1300 block of West Dakota Avenue, the fire department spokesman said.

VANDALISM

Mrs. Charles Edwards of the 2600 block of Cimmaron Street told police someone threw a brick through a car window at her residence Tuesday night, causing $75 damage.

HOUSE BURGLARIZED

A stereo and 10 eight-track tapes were taken from a house in the 1600 block of West Kentucky Avenue, Felipe Gonzales reported to police.

Means of entry was unknown, police said. The items were valued at $150.

Rally supports strike

DALLAS (AP) — A national farmers' group has put American consumers on notice — if the farmers don't get what they consider to be a fair price for their production, next year's Thanksgiving tables might look a little barren.

Keith Thomas of a group called American Agriculture announced a two-day rally in Dallas Dec. 1-2 in support of a nation-wide farmers' strike planned for Dec. 14.

Arthritis cutting short heart surgeon's career

By MAUREEN JOHNSON

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Ten years after he performed the world's first successful heart transplant, Dr. Christiaan Barnard is getting ready to put away his scalpel because of arthritis in his hands.

"I operated yesterday ... it was absolute agony," the 55-year surgeon said in an interview a few days ago.

"Every stitch that I put in and tie is such an agony. I felt so bad I started using cortisone again, the last thing I want to use.

"It is difficult to say just how long I've got. But I think I probably will — maybe — last until the end of next year, and that will probably be the end."

Barnard has traveled a long road since Dec. 2, 1967, when with suit crumpled and hair untidy, he told a news conference in a rolling Afrikaans accent that he had cut out the ailing heart of a businessman and replaced it with the heart of a 25-year-old girl killed that dy in a road accident.

A decade later the clothes are immaculate. A heavy gold watch gleams as he excitedly describes his latest surgical activity, criticizes the press, declares he would fight to prevent black rule in his racially divided country and concedes defeat in his latest attempts to save two cardiac victims by transplanting baboon and chimpanzee hearts into them.

The doctor says he has changed little in the past 10 years, except to become suspicious of people. This he blames on the mass media, which he accuses of exploiting him personally, causing heart donors to shun him and of misrepresenting South Africa generally.

Dr. Christiaan Barnard

There are other changes. He is no longer a little-known surgeon living in a modest suburban home with a wife his own age and two teen-age children.

Now he is a jet-setter who has mixed with heads of state and film stars and who has a rich wife half his age.

Lamesa C of C event draws more than 400

By ED TODD

LAMESA — Ray Renner, Lamesa's drop-of-the-hat emcee, must have left Jerry Harris on the stage with a sense of fulfillment.

"Jerry is a man of leadership and persuasion," he said of Harris, a farmer who rounded out a year as president of Lamesa Area Chamber of Commerce.

"If it's for the good of Lamesa, Dawson County and West Texas, Jerry is going to be right in the forefront pushing, pulling and shoving, if necessary," Renner told the 400-plus folks at the annual chamber of commerce banquet here Tuesday night.

Harris got the cue, and took the "stand" at the banquet hall, which was generously adorned with symbols of Lamesa's and Dawson County's economy: cotton bolls, cotton bales, drill bits, capsules of crude oil, heads of milo maize and the such.

Harris lambasted the Occupational Safety and Health Administration (OSHA) for being "misguided," particularly in trying to control "cotton dust."

He also told of the chamber's accomplishments in the past year: from fighting for agriculture's gain to putting up a state historical marker at Old Chicago, a faded settlement just north of town.

Harris turned to the night's feature speaker, Texas Agriculture Commissioner Reagan Brown, and said, "We consider you a friend of agriculture."

And Harris said he was sure that Charles Bratcher, the incoming chamber president, "will keep up the fight" against OSHA and other possible blights on the profitability of agriculture.

In turn, Bratcher, a Lamesa insurance agent, assured Harris and the other chamber supporters that he would continue in the Harris tradition.

Bratcher presented Harris a plaque in appreciation of his service to the community.

"And thanks to you from all of us," Bratcher said,

He gave Harris' wife, Nelda, a bouquet of red roses and these words of praise and consolation: "We know it's been a chore and sometimes maybe a burden" to have been the chamber president's helpmate.

For the night's main event, Commissioner Brown spoke on the virtues of free enterprise, the need for more profits in agriculture and for more love in the world.

His talk was heavily laced with tales, jokes and anecdotes.

"I'd rather be in Lamesa tonight than any place in the world," Brown said.
