Congressmen focusing on unemployment

WASHINGTON (AP) — Double-digit unemployment is quickly emerging as the No. 1 issue in the new Congress as Republicans and Democrats compete to produce jobs legislation with or without President Reagan's blessing.

"The question is not whether you're going to have a jobs program," Sen. Dan Quayle, R-Ind., declared Thursday.

"The question is what it is going to look like," Quayle said as he unveiled a plan including $2 billion for public service employment.

Quayle said his program was needed to combat "radically high unemployment." But with the new Congress only a few days old, there is no shortage of competing plans:

—House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., D-Mass., called for a program of $5 billion to $7 billion to counter joblessness that now stands at 10.8 percent of the work force and is expected to remain in double digits well into next year. "We can certainly afford to have a $5 billion or $7 billion jobs program this year, when you take in the fact that we are going to have a military budget between $230 billion and $245 billion," said O'Neill.

—Senate Democratic Leader Robert C. Byrd of West Virginia said he and O'Neill would attempt to work together on the plan.

—Democratic Rep. Gus Hawkins and Senate Democratic Whip Alan Cranston, both from California, introduced legislation of their own providing $5 billion for public works jobs, targeted at the hard-core unemployed.

—Senate Republican Leader Howard Baker of Tennessee said he expects Congress will approve a jobs bill, and said he hoped it would be of "reasonable size" and go into effect quickly.

Quayle's plan calls for $2 billion to create an estimated 250,000 jobs through existing programs either run or sponsored by the government, such as day care workers, forestry programs and Census Bureau jobs.

In addition, Quayle wants to permit unemployed workers to take vouchers equal to 75 percent of their jobless benefits. The vouchers would be turned over to private employers who gave the workers a job.

Another provision of Quayle's plan would increase funds for retraining for workers in industries that have been hard-hit by the recession.

Based on past statements, Reagan would probably object to most of the plans under discussion, including the $2 billion element in Quayle's legislation. Last December, for example, Reagan threatened to veto a $1.2 billion Senate-passed public works bill and a $5 billion House version. Neither measure was sent to the White House.

Dallas bank seeks only rich clientele

DALLAS (AP) — If you're not rich, Dallas' newest downtown bank isn't interested in your business.

"It probably comes across wrong to say it, but we aren't interested in the $250 deposit or the $2,500 personal loan business," said C.O. "Buck" Horn Jr., chairman and chief executive officer of CenterBank Dallas.

The bank, which opened this week, caters to people with annual salaries in excess of $75,000 and net worth of at least $500,000. A checking account requires a minimum deposit of $1,000.

CenterBank customers can enjoy the privacy of enclosed offices; personal lunches on fine china in the bank's board room; a library to rest, work or check stock prices; and highly personal, first-name service from bank officers.

The ground-floor lobby will not be finished until next month, but the bank already has attracted 200 accounts through referrals from members of its mostly millionaire board of directors, Horn said.

"The important thing is not the number of accounts, but their size," Horn told the Dallas Times Herald. "I don't think any of the accounts has had an opening deposit of less than $30,000."

Horn said the bank hopes to become a $100 million bank, "the minimum size needed to become a factor" in downtown banking.

White recalls his campaign promises

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Mark White, in his first speech to the Legislature, urged passage of a hefty pay raise for schoolteachers and changes in the agency that sets utility rates — two of his campaign promises.

"I believe last November's election echoed the voice of the people quite clearly in the area of utility regulation," White told a joint session in his "state of the state" speech Thursday.

He asked the 181 members of the House and Senate to give schoolteachers a 24 percent "catch-up" pay raise over the next two years and to allow election, rather than appointment, of the members of the Public Utility Commission.

"I endorse the Texas Education Agency proposal for a 24 percent increase as a starting point for our consideration" White said. "How can we ever become the state of the future when Texas ranks 28th out of 50 states on the national teacher salary scale?"

His legislative package also called for tax credits to businesses that hire the unemployed, low-interest loans up to $20,000 for military veterans to use as house down payments, re-financing the state's depleted crime victims' compensation fund, adding more narcotics detectives, and increasing penalties for drunken driving.

White said his goals should not require any new taxes.

"Our task is not to decide where to cut. Our task is to decide wisely where to spend," the new Democratic governor said.

White also took a swipe at President Reagan's "disastrous economic policies" in announcing a Texas task force on unemployment.

The Democratic-dominated Legislature interrupted his 27-minute speech 12 times with hand-clapping, including a burst of applause when he listed as his first recommendation "a catch-up pay raise for our schoolteachers."

"I will set teacher salaries as an emergency item," White said. "How can we entrust the education and training of our children and grandchildren to people we treat like second-class citizens?"

At present, schoolteachers earn $11,110 to $19,260 in Texas, depending on length of service. Those figures do not include extra money paid by some districts, especially wealthy ones.

Lawmakers also applauded when White called for abolishment of the present system that gives the governor power to appoint members of the PUC, the three-member panel that sets electric, water and phone rates.

"A regulatory body's primary function is to serve as a watchdog over monopolies, not to serve as a captive handmaiden of those same monopolies," White said. He said Texans have lost faith that the utility bills they pay "are fairly set and impartially considered."

Under his proposal, the commission's three members would be elected to six-year terms. Three separate bills calling for an elected utility commission already have been introduced.

White also recommended hiring an independent lawyer to oversee the utility commission and serve as a consumer advocate, and said the Legislature should abolish the fuel adjustement pass-through charge on utility bills.

Turning to the plight of the jobless, he said there was a "crisis" in the state's unemployment compensation trust fund, which is more than $200 million in debt to the federal government and sinking deeper at the rate of $100 million a month.

"We see a national administration continuing to insist on disastrous economic policies which have kept unemployment levels high and yet have not pulled the nation out of a deep recession," White complained.

He announced a task force on unemployment and said he wanted it to propose a way to give tax advantages to businesses that hire the unemployed, bail out the state's unemployment trust fund, create new jobs in Texas and recommend changes in schools so they will produce "students with skills that are marketable."

A Midland firefighter surveys the scene after a tanker truck filled with benzene rolled over and began leaking fumes at about 8:50 p.m. Thursday. The crash occurred on the north side of Garden City Highway about 10 miles east of Midland. Wrecker crews specially trained in handling hazardous materials reportedly had cleaned up the scene by 2 a.m. today.

Clean-up crews worked cautiously into the early hours this morning to right a tanker truck filled with highly-flammable benzene which toppled over at about 8:50 p.m. Thursday approximately 10 miles east of Midland on Garden City Highway.

According to a Department of Public Safety report, the 18-wheeler was traveling westbound, enroute from Deer Park to El Paso Products in Odessa, when the driver apparently lost control of his rig and left the road.

The accident occurred on a stretch of the two-lane highway currently under construction. The highway's south side is blocked to traffic and two-way traffic is being routed along the north lane and shoulder.

The driver of the vehicle, William Cook, 54, of Odessa, was released from Midland Memorial Hospital after being treated for lacerations and abrasions on the arms and hands.

The DPS, Texas Highway Department and Midland Fire Department employees who responded to the accident consulted a 1980 Emergency Response Handbook for hazardous materials, which recommends that traffic be rerouted around a crash scene involving benzene. Road blocks were established several miles away on either side of the site.

Benzene is a liquid hydrocarbon often used as a solvent or a pesticide.

According to the handbook, the benzene vapors could cause dizziness, suffocation and irritation to the eyes and skin. The handbook warned that a spark or flame could have ignited a fire, which in turn could have released toxic fumes or triggered an explosion.

Midland firefighters stood by awaiting the arrival of crews from Neal Pool Reker company, an Odessa wrecking outfit with employees specially trained to handle accidents involving hazardous material.

Three large wreckers and a recovery unit arrived at about 10:50 p.m. The workers were aided by a southerly wind which carried the benzene fumes downwind of the overturned tanker. A herd of about 10-20 cows roamed in a pasture about 50 yards downwind of the crash site.

The crews reportedly planned to turn the tanker upright and pump its cargo into another tank truck. According to the DPS, the clean-up operation was complete by about 2 a.m.

DPS troopers Ben Valdez and Howard Priddy investigated the accident.

The National Weather Service forecasts rain Saturday for most of the West, except California. Southern areas will be mild but northern states are expected to be colder.

Low in 30s, high in 60s likely for area

While Midlanders may be awaiting and dreading a really hard freeze, the weather is just being so-so mild during the daylight hours but cold — in the 30s — just before dawn.

Under partly cloudy skies, the weatherman at the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport has forecast a low tonight in the low 30s and a mild — in the mid-60s — Saturday.

Winds are to be westerly at 10 to 15 mph tonight and southwesterly at 10 to 15 mph Saturday.

Today's low temperature of 39 degrees was far afield from the record low of 10 degrees on the date in 1948. Thursday's high of 60 degrees was 20 degrees lower than the record high of 80 degrees for the date in 1970.

12 killed in Lebanon bombimg

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — An explosion leveled a three-story Palestinian guerrilla center in the Bekaa Valley town of Chtaura today, killing at least 12 guerrillas and leaving about 40 buried under the rubble, police said.

Several cars parked near the building caught fire and burned, authorities said. Chtaura is the site of the command headquarters of Syria's 20,000-man army in Lebanon.

Lebanon's state radio and television stations said the building was "razed" when a bomb-laden car exploded less than five yards from the building's back yard.

But police said it could not be determined immediately whether the explosion was caused by a car-bomb or by an electrical short circuit in the building's basement that was believed to be an arms depot.

Police said the blast wrecked the security department of Fatah, the largest guerrilla group in the Palestine Liberation Organization, in Chtaura, 21 miles east of Beirut and eight miles west of the Syrian border.

Syrian troops and Fatah guerrillas sealed off the blast scene at the junction linking Chtaura with the Christian city of Zahle, police said.

Police said no one was hurt in the explosion in the magazine office next to the Gamal Abdel Nasser Mosque, which was crowded with worshippers, along Corniche Mazraa Boulevard.

But a statement from the Murabitoun militia said the group's leader, Ibrahim Koleilat, received a telephone call minutes after the bomb exploded, warning him to flee Lebanon or risk assassination.

"Today's bomb is only a warning. You and 2,000 Murabitoun terrorists should leave the country at once. Otherwise the death sentence against the whole gang and the gang leader will be executed," the telephone caller was quoted as telling Koleilat.

The statement said the caller did not give his name but said he claimed to speak for a newly formed Lebanese Cedars Force that will try to "purge saboteurs throughout Lebanon."

The Murabitoun and other leftist militias were disarmed by the Lebanese army after last summer's evacuation of PLO guerrillas from Israeli-surrounded west Beirut.

Israel invaded Lebanon June 6 to smash the PLO and forced the evacuation of thousands of guerrillas from Beirut in August. But thousands more remain behind Syrian lines in eastern and northern Lebanon. The Syrians have been in Lebanon for seven years, ostensibly to police the civil war armistice.

Israel and Lebanon have begun talks on withdrawal of foreign armies from Lebanon, but little substantive progress has been reported so far.

Disaster declared in California counties

By The Associated Press

Four California counties were declared disaster areas after towering waves from the week's third punishing storm washed away swank homes and smashed famous piers as if they were toys, while broken levees and a record high tide forced almost a thousand families to evacuate.

Nine deaths were directly blamed on the violent storms, and six people died Thursday in a twin-engine airplane crash in Scottsdale, Ariz. that officials said could be weather-related.

Another storm was forecast to crash in late today on the central and southern portions of the state, where damage estimates have already reached tens of millions of dollars.

Meanwhile, Thursday's harsh weather moved inland today — extending from southern Idaho to Arizona, with a foot of snow forecast for higher elevations in Colorado, said Hugh Crowther of the National Weather Service's Severe Storms Center in Kansas City, Mo.

Tidal charts showed the seas would normally be at their annual peak now, even without the high winds that led to the current damage.

On Thursday, the pounding surf inflicted serious damage on Southern California beachfront homes owned by such film stars as Bruce Dern and Burgess Meredith.

"I knew it was all over when I saw the hot tub sail by into the ocean," said Becky Ilagan, who fled from her bungalow in posh Malibu just before it broke up in the boiling high tide.

Gov. George Deukmejian declared Los Angeles, San Diego, Marin and San Mateo counties disaster areas. The declaration entitles the counties to money to repair damage to public property, Deukmejian's press secretary, Larry Thomas, said in Los Angeles late Thursday.

Damage from the storms was expected to be in the tens of millions of dollars, and emergency services spokeswoman Anita Garcia said at least 998 families had evacuated their homes.

"The counties and cities are so busy dealing with emergencies, they haven't had time to get any damage estimates together," she said.

The storm whipped up 90 mph winds, dropped 3 or more inches of rain on some towns in a day and sent 20-foot breakers crashing over coastal roads. It plastered parts of the Sierra Nevada with 4 inches of snow an hour as it moved inland toward the Rockies. Some areas got several feet of fresh snow.

Eleven thousand homes and businesses remained without power Thursday night, and during the storm at least 400,000 customers temporarily lost power, said Marilyn Beret, a spokeswoman for Pacific Gas and Electric.

A family of five in the Marin County town of Novato, about 20 miles north of San Francisco, escaped being buried alive when a mudslide crashed into a bedroom of their $300,000 home before dawn Thursday.

Two homes slid down Fitch Mountain in the wine country of Sonoma County north of San Francisco on Wednesday night.

Part of the landmark Crystal Pier in Pacific Beach fell apart, and several others across Southern California were damaged.

At Redondo Beach harbor, near Los Angeles, waves crashed through windows and flooded a dozen businesses and four restaurants.

As many as 100 beachfront homes in Aptos, about 90 miles south of San Francisco, were under siege with the surf knocking out windows and eroding underpinnings. A single wave smashed 10 swank homes, according to the sheriff's office, which estimated area damage at $30 million.

Richard Denny, a mining engineer wmose home was smashed by the Novato mudslide, said the hillside "just got liquefied and came down."

"There was a tremendous hissing sound and then...I jumped out of bed andhthere was mud coming in," said his wife, Jacqueline. No one was injured.

The 200 miles of shoreline from Santa Barbara to San Diego in Southern California was especially hard hit by high tide and high surf. In San Diego, some residents used surfboards to get down flooded streets.

The record tides were recorded in the north at the Sacramento-San Joaquin River Delta that feeds into San Francisco Bay. The water reached 10.34 feet at 1:15 p.m., the highest level in 58 years.

A tractor driver drove his vehicle into a break in a levee at Golden Island to plug it.

About 300 feet of the 1,700-foot-long Santa Monica City pier was severely damaged. The harbormaster's office fell into the sea.

"I was out there when the harbor office went," said harbor patrolman Paul John. "I never moved so fast. You heard it creaking and then it just went — boom!"

A man driving a pickup north on Interstate 5 near Oceanside died in a five-vehicle chain-reaction accident Thursday. Troopers said the truck, the fourth vehicle in the accident, skidded to a stop facing the wrong way and was struck head-on by a car.

Surcharge may follow corporate tax plan into scrapheap

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan's suggestion to abolish the corporate income tax may be joined on the cutting room floor by his proposal for a standby surcharge on taxable income of individuals and business.

After raising the idea Wednesday of doing away with the corporate income tax, Reagan abandoned the notion Thursday.

"I said yesterday I would kick myself for saying that," Reagan observed. "I have."

But Reagan didn't drop the idea fast enough to avoid criticism from Democrats that he was favoring the wealthy over the poor.

"On the same day that the president sat down to drink with the working men of Boston," said House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill, "he showed his heart was still in the corporate boardroom."

AFL-CIO spokesman Murray Seeger commented, "I think it reinforces the impression we all have of him — that his mind is filled with these slogans he learned long ago and they pop out at odd times, and they don't really relate to the basic dialogue on public policy."

Meanwhile, Treasury Department spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said Reagan's proposal for a standby 1 percent surcharge on taxable income may be dropped because it could prove unfair to lower-income Americans.

Instead, he said the administration is considering a 5 percent surcharge on tax liability — rather than a levy directly on income. The change would place a heavier burden on upper-income taxpayers while still raising about the same amount of revenue — about $20 billion a year.

"We're interested in the 5 percent surcharge because it is more fair," Fitzwater said. "It has a greater impact on the upper brackets and less impact on the lower brackets, and maybe is a ... better way."

Either proposal would be part of a package of contingency taxes Reagan wants for fiscal years 1986 through 1988, if needed to reduce future budget deficits. Another part of the package calls for a fee on crude oil that would raise retail gasoline prices by about 12 cents a gallon.

Although the surcharges on taxable income and tax liability are the two leading candidates for inclusion in the package, Fitzwater said a different approach altogether may eventually be selected.

Calculations based on tax rates in effect as of 1984 show that a 1 percent surcharge on taxable income amounts to a 12 percent increase in taxes for a family with a taxable income of $10,000 a year, but only a 3 percent tax increase for a family with $100,000 in taxable income.

Both families would pay 5 percent more in taxes, however, if the surcharge were applied directly to their tax bills.

Taxable income refers to the amount of money on which a person pays taxes after taking allowable deductions, such as for state and local taxes, medical expenses, mortgage interest payments and business expenses.

Under the 1984 tax rates, a family with $10,000 of taxable income would pay $819 in taxes. A 1 percent surcharge on taxable income would raise the family's tax bill by $100, while a 5 percent surcharge on taxes would mean paying only $41 more.

A family with $100,000 of income would pay $32,400 in taxes. A 1 percent surcharge on taxable income would mean an additional $1,000 in taxes, while a 5 percent tax surcharge would mean the family would have to pay $1,620 more.

In pronouncing the death of the idea to repeal corporate income taxes, White House spokesman Larry Speakes accused the press of going "berserk" and failing to put the issue in the perspective of a long-held Reagan view, but one that is not a top priority. Reagan had raised the suggestion in an off-the-cuff remark Wednesday, and acknowledged it probably would cause him trouble.

Nation's leading economic indicators up today, Reagan reveals

WASHINGTON (AP) — After President Reagan tipped the good news in advance, the government is reporting today that its main economic forecasting gauge rose again in December, a new signal of recovery from the long recession.

Talking with reporters at a Thursday night reception, Reagan noted that the Commerce Department would be releasing its Index of Leading Indicators in the morning. He could give no details, he said, except that "there will be some good news."

Private analysts had already said it was virtually certain the index had risen in December, with the only question being how much — a question the president didn't answer. Guesses in advance were that it might have risen about 1 percent, a gain that would be the biggest since last July's 1.2 percent.

The new increase was the eighth in the past nine months.

The index is a compilation of 10 separate economic statistics, including forward-pointing information concerning unemployment, production, prices and business conditions in general.

More and more in recent days, private economists and administration officials have been saying that at least modest recovery is probably already under way. But the new increase in the leading indicators was still a welcome sign that conditions are likely to continue to improve in the next few months.

The strength and length of that recovery are in much greater question.

Testifying before Congress on Thursday, Federal Reserve Chairman Paul Volcker said, "The stage appears set for sustainable recovery in business activity, bringing with it the higher levels of employment and real income that we all desire."

However, he added, looming federal budget deficits of $200 billion or more could threaten that recovery.

"The bigger the deficit, the more pressure there will be on interest rates," he said. And high interest rates "will work against growth in business investment and housing," hampering recovery.

Also on Thursday, private economist Henry Kaufman said in New York that Reagan's State of the Union address did not convince him that the deficits would be coming down rapidly.

"The address itself did not adequately suggest to me we are going to accomplish this quickly," said Kaufman, chief economist at the investment firm of Salomon Brothers Inc.

One day earlier, Treasury Secretary Donald T. Regan told Congress that "the recovery may well already be under way at this moment."

But he said interest rates must decline at least a bit further for the recovery to last.

Regan also said that even with modest recovery from the recession, the nation's unemployment rate — now at a 42-year high of 10.8 percent — would average about that same rate for all of 1983.

Defensive muscle leads Chaps over Clarendon

Nate Bufford goes 'short range' for 25 points

Midland College applied the defensive clamps in the second half to put the squeeze on Clarendon College, 87-64, at Langford Chaparral Center Thursday night in a game that was expected to be close, but wound up a rout.

The Chaparrals go to 9-1 in Western Junior College Conference play and 20-3 for the season while the Bulldogs, upset winner over Howard College Sunday, slip to 5-5 and 16-8.

"They looked tired," Coach Jerry (Two Technical) Stone said of Clarendon. "They've been doing a lot of traveling and I think it showed."

ACTUALLY, IT started out as billed, and the Bulldogs stayed close for almost a half, but some strong off-the-bench performances by Brian Essary, Jackie Phinnessee and Justin Morett to support the starters, led by Nate Bufford's game-high 25 points, and that second half defense were enough to make it look easy.

It was 22-20 with 7:31 left in the half when Spud Webb hung for a jumper, Essary made a back court swipe and soloed for a basket and Morett came up with a defensive steal that set up Phinnessee, whose thunderous play revived memories of Ernie Tate, the tight end who wanted to be a basketball player.

When Morett went under the rim for a reverse layup, Midland led 30-22 with four minutes in the half and the handwriting was on the wall.

After a basket by Richard Miller for Clarendon, Bufford scored twice and fed Chester Smith underneath as MC widened it to 36-26.

CLARENDON STAYED in the game in the first half, during which only one shot was taken from the free throw line, by penetrating the MC defense. In the second half, the penetrations turned into turnovers and MC jumped to 48-30 lead four minutes and 12 seconds into the second half.

It was 55-35 midway through the half when Stone was clipped with two technicals, but the Chaps were so far ahead, it really didn't matter, except that it led to an ice-tossing incident later, which upset Clarendon coach Mark Adams.

"I just thought the game it was a sloppily called game in the second half and expressed myself," said Stone, who got up at 5:30 a.m. to drive to the funeral of Tarleton State football coach Buddy Fornes and didn't arrive back until an hour and a half before tip off.

"Mark was upset, because he thought I was trying to stir up the crowd, but that wasn't my intention. I explained that to him after the game."

"WE JUST played defense," said Jerome Crowe of MC's turnaround. "We got together at halftime and decided to go out and play some basketball. I don't know what's wrong with us. We seem to play just hard enough to win. Maybe when we get to the big ones, we'll turn it on."

As for Coach Stone's technicals, Crowe was more concerned with his own. "Hey, I got one called on me tonight. A foul was called on me and I slapped the ball in a Clarendon player's hand in disgust. He threw the ball at me and I threw it back at him. That's what the ref saw. I've got to learn to let those things slide by and control myself."

Crowe had 11 points and was one of the big reasons, along with Spud, Nate, Chester and Ervin Williams, keeping the Bulldogs from getting inside in the second half. Smith had 16 and Webb had nine.

BUFFORD'S 25 points were unusual in that virtually all of them came inside 10 feet, whereas, his reputation is as an outside marksman par excellence.

"The coach wants us, the guards, to go the boards more," he explained the turnabout, "And that's where the shots were tonight."

Despite a low point night, the 5-6 Webb put on a dazzling floor show that just might have been an audition, since Joe Cunningham, former Harlem Globetrotter and now advance man, was in the stands for the game.

Tim Thomas was high for Clarendon with 14 points. The Bulldogs were terrible from the line, sinking only 14 of 28 attempts.

In other action, Howard College beat Amarillo, 60-59, at Amarillo, the Badgers second straight one-point loss. Frank Phillips defeated New Mexico Military Institute, 90-78.

MC plays another toughie at the Chap Center Monday in South Plains College, a team it beat by just three earlier in the season.

Will schedule aid Bulldogs' title run?

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

The downhill course of the District 4-5A basketball season begins at 8 p.m. today with the Midland High Bulldogs tied with Odessa High and Abilene High for the league leadership.

The Bulldogs are hoping that Chaparral Center will hold the key for a playoff berth. MHS coach Jack Stephenson explains, "We have five of our last seven games at Chaparral Center and that should be a big boost to our team. We haven't lost a district game there this season."

It is true that the Bulldogs seem to have the home court advantage in the second half, but will have to face Big Spring and San Angelo on the road. But they do get both leaders AHS and OHS at the Chap.

IN THE first half campaign, MHS lost to Abilene High and Odessa Permian on the road. It was the loss to Permian, however, that is keeping the Bulldogs from owning sole possession of first place and the Bulldogs are hoping to turn that around at 8 p.m. today at Chaparral Center when they face the Panthers.

The Bulldogs lost to Permian by a 61-56 margin in Odessa to start district play. Since then Permian has managed a meager 2-5 district record and will face the wrath of the Bulldogs tonight.

The Bulldogs would also like to get a helping hand from Midland Lee and Big Spring tonight. The Rebels of coach Paul Stueckler travel to Odessa tonight for a battle with Odessa High. Lee owns the cellar in 4-5A with a 1-6 mark, but has played several district games close, including OHS in a 56-47 first half loss.

Lee seems due to win one of these close battles and the Bulldogs feel this would be a good time to do it.

"Our kids have been doing some things well," notes Stueckler of his Rebels. "We were down 16-2 to Midland High (Friday) and came back to make a game of it. These kids won't let down. They keep playing to the best of their ability, but that just hasn't been good enough so far."

Big Spring opened district play with an upset over Abilene High, but the Steers are barely in the race after the first half with a 3-4 record. Still, the Steers have some big guns to throw at you, including the district's No. 2 scorer in Jerald Wrightsil.

In the only other game tonight, 4-3 San Angelo is favored over 3-4 Cooper, but the Lorand White dominated Bobcats were upset by Cooper on opening night. White is coming off a 36-point effort against Big Spring.

"Permian is a lot like Lee. They don't have great height, but they can beat you. I just hope our kids remember what happened the last time we played them and I think they will. We haven't lost two games to any team we've played this year except Abilene High and we have them at home for the first time in this half. Things should get interesting," said Stephenson.

STEPHENSON'S point is well taken. MHS has series splits with Hobbs, N.M., Big Spring, Permian and Odessa High this year. The only jinx remaining is Abilene High.

Since none of the leaders are facing each other tonight, there could still be a three-way logjam for first place when 4-5A smoke clears. But upsets have been the rule rather than the exception and there is no telling what is in store when this league meets on Tuesdays and Fridays.

Lee girls keep rolling on 4-5A title path

By ROBERT BRUNDAGE
Sports Writers

Taking into consideration that most of Midland Lee's field goal attemps were from short range; high percentage long shots and layups, the 40 percent shooting wasn't a very good night.

But the Lady Rebels really didn't need any of the missed attempts as they hit a smoking 26-of-32 (81 percent) from the free throw line en route to an easy 66-33 victory over Odessa High at Chaparral Center Thursday night to maintain their two-game lead in the District 4-5A girl's basketball race over Midland High, San Angelo and Big Spring, all at 7-3.

The shots the Rebels put up were good ones though they were slightly off the mark. A lot, in fact, rolled around the rim before deciding not to fall through and since it had no bearing on the end result, head coach Shirley Stephenson wasn't displeased with her team's performance.

"I was happy with it," she said. " I don't think they were taking any bad shots, it's just that they wouldn't fall. You can't quit taking the shot just because you're missing. Twenty out of 50 is still 40 percent. I thought it might have been worse than that."

The Rebels didn't quit taking their shots, but they hesitated in putting up a few.

Stephenson was also pleased with Lee's efforts in other areas. "I thought our defense was good and so was our passing and ball handling," she said.

The Rebels opened the game's scoring with a five-footer by Yshun King who was fouled on the play and added the free throw for a 3-0 lead. Lee never looked back after that, building up leads of 11-5 at the end of the first quarter, 24-13 at the half and 41-22 after three.

The top two scorers for Lee on the season, King and Felicia Farias, were both afflicted with the missed shot syndrome from the field, but both proved deadly from the free throw line. Farias, who led the Rebels in scoring with 14 points, hit only four-of-17 from the field while hitting six-of-seven from the charity stripe. King was four-of-10 and three-of-three respectively for her 11 points.

The Bronchos fared no better in the game as they could manage only 10-of-35 from the field for 29 percent and were far below the Rebels at the line with 13-of-29 for 49 percent.

The victory keeps the Rebels on top of the 4-5A standings with a near-perfect 9-1 record. They also became the first league team to reach the 20-win mark with a 20-5 record. OHS, on the other hand, is the exact opposite, 1-9 in district competition, 5-20 overall and is the first team to reach the 20-loss mark.

In junior varsity action, the Rebels came away with another easy victory, 48-34 to improve their season record to 19-8.

Lee held a slim 9-8 margin at the end of the first quarter but expanded it to six at the half, 18-12 and picked up four more points in each of the final two quarters to claim the victory.

Midland High escapes Mojo challenge

ODESSA — The Midland High girls escaped a firm challenge from Odessa Permian here Thursday night to remain in the battle for a District 4-5A playoff berth.

Both teams entered the game with 6-3 district records, tied with San Angelo and Big Spring for second place. Permian now falls a step behind the others with the 63-58 loss to Midland High.

Now the Bulldogs face a stern challenge from 7-3 Big Spring Monday night at the MHS gym, and again another team will fall from the second place logjam.

Rebecca Caton led the Midland High charge against Permian with a big 23-point night, hitting 10 of 15 shots from the field. O.J. Johnson dumped in 15 points while Shelia Christian added 10.

"This win keeps us up there in the district race, but we have a tough test Monday when we play Big Spring," noted Jane Young. "All the girls played

Bryant's death comes as a shock to Midland's Jack Pardee

Everyone said when the Bear's time came, he'd be wearing the hounds tooth on a sideline somewhere flanked by a couple of Alabama state troopers, that grim game-look on his craggy features.

So when he "retired" after the Auburn game, one had to suspect, no matter how briefly, that there was something more to it. It wasn't like Bear to admit defeat, which perhaps is what it seemed like he was doing after a rare four-loss season.

After all, this was the fourth quarter, as he liked to impress on his players, that telltale, gut-sucking stretch when winners are separated from losers.

EVEN SO, Bryant's death Wednesday afternoon came as a shock. I had worked the desk that morning and the story that he had been admitted to the hospital with chest pains also was accompanied by the assurance that it was nothing serious, certainly not the suspected heart attack, and that all was well.

"I didn't even know he was in the hospital," said Midland's Jack Pardee, who played for the Bear at Texas A&M in the mid-1950s. "So when someone stopped me on the street and told me Bear had died. It was a shock."

Still, it was characteristic of the Bear. His health wasn't a matter for public discussion. At the coaches' press conference following the Texas-Alabama Cotton Bowl game last year, a writer broached the subject. "How's your health?"

The Bear growled, "Fine, how's your?" Subject closed.

WHILE BEAR'S immortality as one of the game's coaching legends was established during his four-national championship reign at Alabama, his relatively brief stay in Texas left an indelible mark. The A&M years were marked by the Junction Inquistion, two years probation and controversy filled rivalry with, of all people, TCU.

"I think it was Abe Martin (TCU coach in the 1950s) who said when Bear arrived, he made the rest of the Southwest Conference coaches put away their golf clubs," recalls Pardee.

"Yes, Junction was every bit as tough as it is described," recalls Pardee. "In those 10 days, 60 to 70 players quit. Just 26 of us came back. That year we lost nine games, but had a chance to win every game. We just didn't have the ability."

It was the only losing season Bryant ever experienced, but Pardee feels, "It was the best coaching job he ever did."

That '54 season was the foundation upon which the eight-win season the following year and the unbeaten team in 1957 were built. "In 1956, it was the first time A&M had ever beaten Texas in Memorial Stadium."

Bear was to recall that game. "We had a 21-0 lead just before the half, and I took out my first team, which was stupid. Texas scored. But Jack Pardee ran back the second half kickoff for a touchdown to cancel out my error."

BUT, DESPITE the SWC championship, there was no bid to the Cotton Bowl. The Aggies were on a two-year probation for alleged recruiting violations.

There was no doubt that the high-powered coach from Kentucky created waves with his arrival in the laid-back SWC. "I don't know whether he really believed it down deep, but he left the impression with us that the other coaches in the conference were out to get him," Pardee said. "In any case, he used it as an effective psychological weapon."

In those years the big rivalries were TCU and Rice. "Baylor was strong and so was Arkansas, but TCU and Rice were the teams to beat. It was in 1955 that Rice led us 13-0 with two minutes to play and had the ball. I guess it was one of the all time examples of what Bear was determined to get across to us...not quitting. Rice had Buddy Dial, King Hill and Frank Ryan. They were good," says Jack.

STILL, A&M came up a 21-13 winner. "We won with a couple of perfectly executed plays. Rice punted and we immediately completed a 60-yard touchdown pass. Then, we recovered an onsides kick and scored on a 40 or 45 yard run. Then, we intercepted a Ryan pass and turned it into a touchdown. Yes, Bear, was a factor. We knew if we didn't win, we'd have to face him after the game."

The SWC title was at stake when TCU and A&M met on a beautiful day in College Station. By the second quarter, Kyle Field was the center of a tornado alert area and the rain was coming down in blinding horizontal sheets in a 50 mph wind. "You couldn't see the line of scrimmage," says the ex-linebacker. "TCU had plenty of opportunities to score during the middle two periods. We were pinned back deep in our own territory and the best you could do punting into that wind was 15 yards."

Still, there is no doubt in Jack's mind, even to this day, about the controversial goal line play. "He never got in," he says of Jim Swink's goal line plunge. "I know. I tackled him." It would have given the Frogs a 12-0 lead.

BEAR DIDN'T order it as many charge, but the skies miraculously cleared in the final quarter and A&M cashed in for a TD and game winning

JIM MURRAY

Murray's complete guide to broadcasting cliches

The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

Broadcasting has come a long way since the primitive era when Ted Husing invented a whole new football nomenclature of "secondaries" and "tertiaries" and ball carriers were being brought down by a "whole host" of tacklers while "needle-threading" or "swivel-hipping" their way down a sideline. Graham McNamee described a World Series that made veteran press-boxers check their glasses because they couldn't equate the game they were seeing with the game they were hearing.

Still, the state of the art hasn't progressed a great deal. With the advent of television, the tendency is to describe less and explain more. The broadcasters are called upon to delve into the nuances of what you are looking at.

They don't always succeed. Sometimes, all they seem to do is belabor the obvious. As in:

–"He's a good contact hitter." If a guy isn't a good "contact" hitter, what kind of "hitter" is he? There's no such thing as a "non-contact hitter." Every hit is a "contact," isn't it?

–"He understands good field position." What's to "understand"? If you've got the ball on your own one-foot line, third down and 20, you don't need some golden throat to tell you you're in bad shape. Good field position is your ball on the other guy's 6-yard-line, first-and-goal. When the Red Army has Berlin surrounded and the German general staff pinned down in a bunker, even a history dropout knows the Russians have good field position.

–"Crucial third-down play." Is there any other kind? Until they give you five downs, that is. Until then, the third one is always going to be "crucial."

–"This is a big play." Usually they tell you this when the team which has the ball is trailing 7-0 with a minute to play and it's fourth down and 11 from their own 45.

–"He's ahead of the hitter." Any cretin knows a hitter has reduced his options with the count two strikes and no balls on him, but a lot of hitters know pitchers often come in with less than their best pitch when they're trying to waste one. The 1962 World Series, for example, was turned around on a two-strike count which was hit down the left-field line for two bases.

–"He's behind the hitter." Similarly, anyone who can add knows the pitcher is at the point of no return with a three-ball, no-strike count. What they don't know is, the hitter may then be looking at the three best pitches he's seen all night. Like a cornered animal, the pitcher fights best when there's nowhere else to go. We had a pitcher in the Series they said "likes to throw best from behind." That's because a lot of pitchers like a batter to be in a "Should-I-take-it-and-wait-for-a-walk?" frame of mind. That's when they take their "A" pitches out of the box.

–"He needs this difficult 30-footer for par to keep the lead." Any time you have to put a 1.6-inch diameter ball into a four-inch cup from 30 feet away, "difficult" is too inadequate a description. "Miraculous" would be more like it. No amount of skill can direct a ball that far onto target. The skill range is 20 feet, no more. The luck range is 40 feet. Anything over that is water into wine. Even the pros call them "no-brainers."

–"He's using the clock wisely." Usually said of a passer who stops time by throwing the ball out of bounds. Giving up a down for a few seconds of time is dubious strategy at best. To really use the clock wisely, you should start in the first minute. What I would really like to have explained to me is why teams don't go into their high-scoring "two-minute drills" with 58 minutes to play.

"This sets up the double-play." Usually said when a pitcher walks a man to first with the base open and a man on second. Overlooked is the fact this also sets up the three-run homer.

Three teams remain tied for second in girl's chase

well. Rebecca hit a great percentage and Shelia must have had nine assists to go with her 10 points. It was a big win."

The two teams ended first quarter action knotted at 10, but MHS captured a 38-28 lead at the half. The Bulldogs almost let things get out of hand in the third period, being outscored by a 19-12 margin, but held on in the fourth quarter to maintain the advantage.

Big Spring and San Angelo survived Thursday night's District 4-5A girl's basketball schedule and remained part of a three-way tie for second place with Midland High at 7-3, two games behind league-leading Midland Lee.

The Big Spring Steers jumped all over Abilene High quickly, posting a 20-8 first quarter lead and a 31-14 margin halftime en route to a one-sided 62-36 victory over the winless Eagles, now 0-10 in district play and 3-18 overall.

Shell Rutledge and Monette Wise teammed up with 17 and 14 points respectively to pace the Steers to the win while Mary Seguin managed 10 points for Abilene High.

On Monday night, one of the three teams tied for second place must fall back a game as the Steers travel to the Tall City to take on Midland High at MHS Gym at 8 p.m.

For San Angelo, it was a close battle all the way against Abilene Cooper as the Bobcats took a four-point lead into the final quarter and managed to hold on for a 50-48 victory.

The score was knotted at eight at the end of the first quarter but San Angelo broke the deadlock at halftime, 24-22. The Bobcats lead Cooper 38-26 after three.

Bonnie Smith scored 20 points for San Angelo while Monica Bradley added 14 in the winning effort. Cougar Tracy Scott paced her team with 14 points with Pat Seldon adding 12.

On the year, San Angelo is 14-8. Cooper fell to 3-7 in district action and to 11-12 overall.

On Monday, San Angelo will have the opportunity to close within one game of the lead when the Bobcats host the Lee Rebels. Cooper travels to Odessa High to take on the Bronchos. Both games are scheduled for 8 p.m.

Washington receives public reprimand

SEATTLE (AP) — Violations of recruiting regulations by the University of Washington were unintentional, UW's athletic director said after a public reprimand from the National Collegiate Athletic Association.

The NCAA Committee on Infractions on Thursday said Washington was responsible for three rules violations in its summer 1980 recruitment of a basketball player who later decided against attending the univeristy.

The player involved was Greg Wiltjer, who eventually opted to play at Oregon State. He spent one year there, and now plays for Brewster Packing in the Northwest AAU league.

Violations included gifts of a travel bag and two pairs of basketball shoes for the recruit, and free lodging for him at the home of a person representing the "university's athletic interests," NCAA officials said in Mission, Kan.

"The violations reported by the NCAA committee on infractions in our men's basketball program are a matter of serious concern to me, to coach (Marv) Harshman and to the others involved," Washington Athletic Director Mike Lude said in a prepared statement Thursday night. "We regret very much if these violations occurred.

Ninth grade play underway

The Midland ninth grade basketball tournament continues today and Saturday with the championship game set for 7:30 p.m. Saturday in the Midland Lee gym.

Today's action begins 3:30 p.m. at both the Midland Freshman School and the Lee gym. Winner's bracket action is taking place at Lee while the consolation action is being held at the Midland Freshman School. There are games today through 8 p.m. Sixteen teams are taking part in the tournament.

Hardships prepare 'Skins, Dolphins

The Washington Redskins and Miami Dolphins, who meet Sunday in Super Bowl XVII, both subscribe to that theory. They got here, they say, thanks in large measure to past hardships, including character-building losses suffered a year ago.

For the Dolphins, the test came in the 1981 divisional playoffs against the San Diego Chargers, a memorable game Miami lost 41-38 in overtime.

Trailing 24-0 in the first quarter, they had climbed off the deck to first tie the score, then take the lead, only to have the Chargers come back and tie it in the last minute. Then Uwe von Schamann had two field goal tries blocked before Rolf Benirschke kicked a 29-yarder to win it.

"That loss built a little character," said guard Bob Kuechenberg. "You're down 24-0 in the first quarter. We did a little fast calculating on the sidelines and it projected to 96-0 for the game. That would be a little embarrassing on national television and all. It was time for a gut check. We came of age a little that day."

The victory sent the Chargers to the AFC championship game against Cincinnati the next week and finished Miami's season. The following Sunday, with San Diego playing for the conference title, Dolphin teammates A.J. Duhe and Doug Betters were on a skiing trip.

"We got up early, just like we were still playing," Duhe said. "We said, 'Let's ski all day,' and that's what we did. And we did it with the same emotion and intensity of a game. It was as if we were still playing football."

"I remember standing in the locker room after the game," said defensive end Kim Bokamper. "I was thinking we had worked so hard and now we were going home with nothing. It was as tough as any game I had ever been in and I realized that we had to play even tougher than that.

"Everyone remembered that this year. We talked about it and what it felt like. We gained a lot of maturity that day."

Charger tight end Kellen Winslow was a dramatic figure that day, helped off the field, at the end of the game, totally exhausted. Miami linebacker Earnest Rhone laughed at the memory of that.

"You think he was exhausted," he said. "Imagine how we felt chasing him all day. I couldn't have played much longer. I would have passed out. The next day I couldn't eat.

Super Facts

Super Bowl XVII
Facts and Figures
By The Associated Press

AT STAKE — National Football League championship for the Vince Lombardi Trophy.

PARTICIPANTS — Miami Dolphins (AFC) and Washington Redskins (NFC). This will be Miami's fourth appearance in the Super Bowl and Washington's second. These two teams played each other in Super Bowl VII, with Miami winning 14-7.

SITE — Rose Bowl, Pasadena, Calif. This will be the third Super Bowl played in this stadium and the fifth in the Los Angeles area.

SEATING CAPACITY — 101,925.

KICKOFF — 5 p.m. Central Standard Time.

NETWORK COVERAGE — Radio: CBS Radio network over 425 stations. Television: NBC on 223 stations nationwide, including Hawaii and Alaska, as well as Canada, Mexico, Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands. The Armed Forces Television Network will beam NBC's signal to military bases in 10 countries, and Trans World International, the NFL's international distributor, will supply the game live to nine countries and on a delayed basis to 12 more countries.

SUDDEN DEATH — If the game is tied at the end of the regulation 60 minutes, it will continue in sudden death overtime. The team scoring first (by safety, field goal or touchdown) will win. At the end of regulation time, the referee will immediately toss a coin at midfield and the team captain of Miami (the visiting team) will call the toss. Following a three-minute intermission, play will continue by 15-minute periods with a two-minute intermission between overtime periods. The teams will change goals for each period and there will be a two-minute warning at the end of each overtime period.

OFFICIALS — There will be seven officials and two alternates appointed by the commissioner's office.

TROPHY — The winning team receives permanent possession of the Vince Lombardi Trophy, a sterling silver football mounted on a three-sided base, also made of sterling silver. The trophy, created by Tiffany & Co., was named for the late coach of the two-time Super Bowl champion Green Bay Packers prior to Super Bowl V.

ATTENDANCE — To date, 1,296,813 spectators have attended Super Bowl games. The largest crowd was 103,985 at Super Bowl XIV, the last one played at the Rose Bowl.

Washington Sobers Sonics

Three Spurs smash the 30-point barrier

By The Associated Press

The Washington Bullets may be seeing a few changes pay off. Coach Lenny Wilkens hints he may be thinking along the same lines in Seattle.

After Greg Ballard had scored 34 points to give Washington a 99-86 victory over Seattle Thursday night, Rickey Sobers, the Bullets' newest acquisition, was answering questions.

Sobers had scored 18 points despite playing "like a chicken with his head cut off" during part of the game.

"I'm familiar with certain aspects of (Coach) Gene Shue's offense," Sobers said. "But I'm not completely comfortable."

The Bullets have released four backcourt players since the season began and acquired Sobers two games ago from Chicago. Shue said he liked the versatility Sobers gave his team.

"Ricky gives us good defense, consistent outside shooting, and flexibility," Shue said. "All of a sudden, our backcourt could be a little more versatile and quick."

The victory was only the second in 12 games for the Bullets, while the Sonics were losing for the 12th time in 14 games. Wilkens was asked if this was just one of those things that sometimes happens to a good team.

"I don't know. I've never been through one like this before," he said, indicating that he wasn't willing to let the slide continue much longer.

"If these guys want to stay here, they've got to do the job," the Seattle coach said.

Lonnie Shelton led the Sonics with 18 points.

Spurs 143, Pacers 138

San Antonio had three players with 30 points or more — led by Artis Gilmore with 39 — helping the Spurs hand Indiana its 11th loss in 13 games this month. George Gervin had 37 points and Mike Mitchell 33 for the Spurs.

Herb Williams of Indiana tied the score 126-126 with a layup with 3:36 to play before Gilmore started a seven-point San Antonio run with a three-point play. Indiana cut the gap to 139-138 with 18 seconds left, but Mitchell hit two free throws, then stole an inbounds pass to seal the victory.

Rockets 98, Warriors 84

Houston led by just seven points with 8:31 left and ran the advantage to 87-72 on two quick buckets apiece by rookie Terry Teagle and Calvin Murphy in beating Golden State. Allen Leavell paced the Rockets with 16 points and 13 assists.

The Rockets now have won two games in a row for the first time this season. Purvis Short paced the Warriors with 23 points.

Trail Blazers 120, Jazz 106

Jim Paxson scored 22 points as Portland rolled over Utah. The Trail Blazers led by as many as 25 points in the first half and allowed Utah to get no closer than eight points in the second half.

Wayne Cooper and Kenny Carr had 15 points apiece for Portland, and Darrell Griffith and Mitchell Anderson each had 20 for Utah.

Clippers 110, Hawks 100

Al Wood scored a season-high 21 points coming off the bench, and Terry Cummings added 18 points and 20 rebounds to carry San Diego over Atlanta. The Clippers led by as many as 13 points in the third quarter before Atlanta stormed back behind Dominique Wilkins. A short jumper by Cummings with 4:00 left in the third period gave the Clippers the lead for good, 74-73.

Hal Sutton bowed at the knees when this birdie putt would not drop on the 18th hole Thursday in the Phoenix Open. He still shares the first round lead with Ed Sneed, Jack Renner and Leonard Thompson.

Four Phoenix golf leaders all have success reasons

PHOENIX (AP) — The four players sharing the first round lead in the $350,000 Phoenix Open Golf Tournament pointed to four different reasons for their success.

Leonard Thompson credited a cocktail-party tip from old friend Arnold Palmer.

Hal Sutton talked about a new set of irons.

And Jack Renner pointed to the calendar.

All managed 6-under-par 65s Thursday on the 6,726-yard Phoenix Country Club course and were one stroke in front of veteran Lee Elder.

Tied at 4-under 67s were Johnny Miller, Cal Peete, J.C. Snead and Scott Hoch.

Defending champion Lanny Wadkins topped a big group at 68. Masters champ Craig Stadler and Keith Fergus, a winner last week in the Bob Hope Classic, each shot 73 and must improve today if they are to qualify for the final 36 holes.

Thompson said Palmer, who is not playing here, took him aside at a cocktail party last week and pointed out a "couple of things I was doing wrong." He said he was lining up to the right and "not getting far enough behind the ball."

Thompson's round included four birdies on his last five holes.

"I'm hitting the ball more solid now, and, obviously a lot straighter," he said.

Although he dropped a couple of 20-foot birdie putts, Renner said he is "not comfortable with the putter. I have been lacking confidence, and the only way you can get confidence is to make some. This helps a lot."

Renner also noted he had off-years in 1980 and 1982 while enjoying success in 1979 and 1981. He said that should put on schedule for a good season this year.

Washam loves home course

DEERFIELD BEACH, Fla. (AP) — The home-course advantage wasn't the only thing Jo Ann Washam had going for her when she broke out on top after the first day of play at the $150,000 Mazda Classic here.

Washam, club pro at the tournament's Deer Creek Country Club course, credited a new fiberglass-shaft driver she acquired just three days earlier for her 6-under-par 66 round of Thursday. The fast start put her two strokes in front in a record field of 135 players entering today's second round.

She covered the familiar 6,079-yard layout with a 31-35, including an eagle at the second hole as the LPGA began its $7 million 1983 tour.

"I picked up a new driver, a fiberglass shaft, and I never hit a sweeter club," Washam said. "I had broken my old driver and was struggling for a new one. I didn't miss a fairway all day."

Starting her day on the back nine, a good iron shot from her Deerfield Beach home, Washam played steady golf, producing two birdies and her only bogey to turn 1-under. Then she tore up the front nine, starting with the eagle.

Her drive and a 5-iron left her a 4-foot putt for the eagle. She then birdied the sixth, eighth and ninth holes, getting the solo lead with a 15-foot putt at the eighth for a deuce and a 25-foot putt on the ninth when a 4-iron approach went wide of the hole.

Washam, who suffered a rib injury and was involved in an auto accident in 1981, says she thinks this year will bring her luck. "I want to be a winner again," she said. "I want to be consistent."

Pat Bradley, the early leader who said she is aiming to become the latest member of the Ladies Professional Golf Association's $1-million club before the season's first five tournaments are completed, is two strokes back.

One stroke behind Bradley is Beth Solomon, who produced three birdies and saved a par-4 at the 18th hole when had to punch out of high grass, then reached the green with a 3-iron and converted a 20-foot putt.

Bear's influence created college coaching boom

In looking back, Pardee said the Bear instilled "fear and respect in his players. He wouldn't tolerate doing things the wrong way. He set standards and you lived up to them. When he started down from the tower during practice, you always felt you were about to catch it. Somehow, you got the feeling he was watching your every move."

That was something he picked up from Alabama Coach Frank Thomas when the Bear was an end on the Tide's '34 Rose Bowl team. Thomas didn't like his players to go out with girls during the season. To make his point, he benched Bear and another starter, although everyone told Bear that Thomas was bluffing.

The message hit home and Bear and his teammate swore off dates for the rest of the season.

"I never really got to know him as a person until after my senior season. He had all the seniors over to his house and that's the first time we realized how much he thought of us," Jack remembers.

Their paths crossed over the ensuing years. "He never really did change a lot over the years. Maybe he mellowed some, but he retained the same basic philosophies. He was always fair, but he believed in hard work. He demanded you be ready to suck it up in the fourth quarter and win. He felt that was a value that served the rest of your life."

Pardee admits Bryant influenced his life. "I started out in engineering and was majoring in business, but Bear was the one who started me thinking in terms of a career in sports."

Doherty finally finds free throw touch

By The Associated Press

Georgetown's Matt Doherty is still trying to live down the haunting image of last year's NCAA Final Four, when North Carolina won college basketball's national championship despite his missed free throws.

He thinks he might have taken a step in that direction Thursday night.

Doherty sank two free throws with three seconds left to give the third-ranked Tar Heels an 80-78 victory over 19th-ranked Wake Forest in an Atlantic Coast Conference game.

The pressure shots came in stark contrast to the troubles he had last March in New Orleans when the Tar Heels escaped with a 63-62 victory over Georgetown in the championship final despite Doherty's missed chance on the front end of a one-and-one late in the game.

"I hit some big foul shots my first two years, but people probably remember me more for my miss against Georgetown," Doherty said. "It I hit some more like these, maybe people will forget it."

With a minute remaining and the score tied 78-78, Wake Forest held the ball for a final shot. Guard Danny Young drove the lane and was rejected by North Carolina center Brad Daugherty with eight seconds left. Doherty wound up with the ball, drove the length of the court and was fouled by Alvis Rogers to set up the winning free throws. A three-pointer by Young at the buzzer bounced off the rim.

Two other ranked teams were upset. Ohio State defeated No. 14 Iowa 89-83 in double overtime, and Oklahoma edged 20th-ranked Oklahoma State 81-80. No. 17 Illinois State defeated Southern Illinois 69-63.

Sam Perkins paced the Tar Heels to their 13th straight victory and a 16-3 record with 24 points. Michael Jordan added 17 and Daugherty had 14. John Toms had 17 for the Deamon Deacons, 13-3, who led 74-69 late in the game. North Carolina is 5-0 in the ACC, while Wake dropped to 4-1.

Second Ten

Troy Taylor sank six free throws in the final minute of the second overtime to help Ohio State overcome an 83-80 Iowa lead and hand the Hawkeyes their third Big Ten Conference loss in six games. Iowa, 12-4 overall, committed three turnovers in that final minute.

Granville Waiters scored 21 points for Ohio State, 12-4 and 4-2 in the conference, while Greg Stokes led the Hawkeyes with 24. Regulation ended in a 68-68 tie, and the first overtime ended with a 76-76 tie.

Freshman Wayman Tisdale and senior David Little scored 22 points apiece, and Oklahoma short-circuited an Oklahoma State rally to win the 157th renewal of the cross-state "Bedlam Series" in the Big Eight Confernce. Oklahoma led 81-76 with 15 seconds left before Bill Self hit two baskets. Oklahoma now is 15-4 and 2-1 in the conference.

Leroy Combs had 25 points for Oklahoma State, which fell to 13-3 and 1-2 in the league.

Rick Lamb scored 19 points for Illinois State, which led 59-43 with 9:42 left before surviving a 14-3 spurt by Southern Illinois in a Missouri Valley Conference game. Hank Cornley added 14 points for Illinois State, 15-1 and 7-0 in the MVC. Karl Morris scored 17 points for SIU.

Unranked

In a pair of Big Ten games, Jim Bullock hit two baskets in the third overtime as Purdue defeated Michigan 80-77, and Derek Harper scored 17 of his 25 points in the second half to help Illinois beat Michigan State 78-71.

Ricky Ross had 29 points to lead Tulsa over West Texas State 95-57 in the MVC, and Texas-El Paso defeated Brigham Young 65-49 behind the 12 points of Dave Feitel in the Western Athletic Conference.

In a Pacific 10 Conference contest, Charlie Sitton scored 23 points and A.C. Green had 20 to lead Oregon State over Arizona State, 68-59.

Bossy paces Isles to win over Kings

By The Associated Press

Maybe it was the trip to Southern California in the middle of winter. Or his not being voted to the starting team of his conference in the All-Star Game. Or maybe Mike Bossy was just due.

Regardless of the reason, Bossy scored three times — he was credited with a fourth goal which later was given to John Tonelli — to lead the New York Islanders to a 6-4 victory over the Los Angeles Kings Thursday night. It was the 21st hat trick in Bossy's career, second on the active player list to LA's Marcel Dionne, who has 24.

Bossy put in a rebound of his own shot 3:42 into the game, scored again with a 25-foot slapshot at 8:28 and completed the hat trick at 18:55 of the second period. Earlier in the second period, Bossy was announced as the goal-scorer with New York on a power play but replays showed John Tonelli's shot deflected in off the stick of King defenseman Jay Wells.

"I had gone for the puck with my stick but I couldn't tell if I had touched it," said Bossy, who has never scored fewer than 51 goals in any of his previous five NHL seasons. He has 33 this year and two three-goal games. "When they announced it was my goal, I wanted to have it checked to make sure it was. If I hadn't been credited with it, I would have asked them to check it."

Canadiens 4, Rangers 1

Steve Shutt and Pierre Mondou both scored a pair of goals to lead the Canadiens to their ninth victory — against one loss and two ties — in their last 12 visits to New York City. Montreal also won for only the second time in its last eight road games.

"It seems we can come in here and play one of our top games," said Shutt. "We had a bad start last night' (Wednesday in Buffalo, where the Canadiens lost 7-3 after falling behind 6-0) and we knew we had to get on the Rangers quickly tonight."

The Rangers have gone eight games without a victory and have scored a total of seven goals in their last seven games.

Whalers 5, Nordiques 2

Larry Pleau's return as Hartford's coach — Larry Kish resigned earlier this week — was a success as Ray Neufeld had a goal and an assist and Risto Siltanen set up two scores. The Nordiques, who got two goals from Michel Goulet, haven't won in Hartford since joining the NHL in 1979.

"Maybe we were a little overconfident," said Quebec Coach Michel Bergeron after the Whalers snapped his team's five-game winning streak."The Whalers played a strong game but they always seem to play well against us."

Flames 3, Maple Leafs 1

Calgary rode goals by Kent Nilsson, Ed Beers and Richie Dunn to victory over the Maple Leafs. Nilsson opened the scoring four minutes into the second period when he tipped in a shot by Guy Chouinard on a power play. Beers also scored on a tip-in and Dunn blasted a shot off goalie Rick St. Croix's stick and into the net.

Flyers 5, Jets 2

Brian Propp scored two goals, Mark Taylor and Ray Allison connected in a 35-second span and rookie goalie Bob Froese upped his NHL mark to 8-0 since being called up from Maine of the American Hockey League. The Flyers are 16-1-1 over the last 18 games and lead the NHL's overall standings with 72 points.

Blues 3, North Stars 3

There may be link between violence, moral development

BERKELEY, Calif. (AP) — The more aggressive an athlete, the less principled he or she may be, according to researchers studying the link between violence in sports and moral development.

Two researchers — a minister and a physical education professor — were "suprised that the athletes' 'principled moral reasoning' scores were well below the national average for college students generally," the University of California reported.

Moral reasoning may be retarded because in sports, "independent thinking is discouraged, opponents are seen as objects to be overcome and responsibility for welfare and safety is projected onto coaches and officials," said Brenda Jo Bredemeier, a sport psychologist as well as a physical education instructor at the university. The study was released Wednesday.

She and David L. Shields, a minister preparing for his doctorate at Graduate Theological Union, analyzed the athletic aggression and moral development of 24 male and 22 female basketball players at four colleges in the San Francisco Bay area. The athletes' ages ranged from 18 to 23.

The "roughest players, whether male or female, appear to possess the least mature moral reasoning," the researchers concluded.

Their findings spurred speculation that "highly competitive sport experiences may discourage moral growth."

That apparently conflicts with a popular view that "athletic agression is legitimate, conventional and free of specific moral meaning," the university said.

In the study, team coaches evaluated their players to help the researchers set an "aggression rating" for each athlete. Coaches were told that aggression meant "the initiation of an attack with the intent to injure."

To size up the players' moral development, the researchers had them fill out a questionnaire which posed ethical questions such as should a man steal an expensive medication to save his dying wife.

The researchers assumed that "as people grow, they develop the moral principles that guide their reasoning about individial rights and welfare," a university press release noted.

"When the researchers compared the moral reasoning scores with the aggression evaluations, they found significant associations," the university said.

Bredemeier stressed that the apparent correlation did not mean the differences in aggression were caused necessarily by difference in moral development; they indicated only that aggression and moral reasoning were related in certain ways.

The researchers, noting that the men's average was little more than half the national average, said "highly competitive sport experiences may actually discourage the development of principled moral reasoning."

Said Bredemeier: "It is difficult for participants to think in terms of a morality of universal human rights in the realm of sport."

Bredemeier, an athlete who calls herself an "ardent feminist," noted that the women in the study had a lower moral development rating than the men.

Abe Lemons ready to return to OCU with some mistletoe

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Abe Lemons, former University of Texas basketball coach, says he's ready to return to Oklahoma City University — provided that Texas buys out the remainder of his contract.

Lemons was fired at the end of last season by Athletic Director DeLoss Dodds, but the university chose to keep him on the payroll rather than buying out his contract, which pays him $56,639 a year.

The agreement, which runs through Aug. 31, is the major stumbling block to Lemons returning to OCU, where he coached before accepting a job at Pan American and then Texas, he said.

Should he accept another job before the contract runs out, the University of Texas checks would stop.

"All I want to do is get this year's salary to September," Lemons said in a public affairs program aired on KTBC-TV.

Lemons will qualify for state pension benefits from the state of Texas on March 1, when he will have put in 10 years of service as a state employee. That figured in his decision not to seek a coaching job elsewhere this past season, he said.

Lemons has been linked recently with coaching jobs at both OCU and at Oral Roberts University. He said he has talked with OCU president Dr. Jerald Walker, but has "not totally" agreed on any terms and is "working out a couple of things."

He will go somewhere next September, he said.

When Lemon leaves, he will wish all his friends good luck, he said.

"But all of those others, and they know who they are, all I can say is that I hope they notice the mistletoe tied to my coattails as I leave town," he said.

Woman recovers Super Bowl tickets

CINCINNATI (AP) — No purse snatcher was going to keep die-hard football fan Elaine Niemeyer from the Super Bowl game Sunday in California.

She had made arrangements to replace the tickets that were taken when she was pushed down and robbed Monday. But she'll be able to use the originals after all — they were recovered when a youth's sudden spending spree led police to the stolen purse.

Ms. Niemeyer, 40, Cincinnati, told police that a teenage boy knocked her down and grabbed her purse, which contained the four tickets — valued at $40 each — and $200 in cash.

"I was just absolutely out of my mind," she said after the incident. "I felt like it was the end of my life.

Even without the tickets, she planned to go to the game between the Miami Dolphins and Washington Redskins at the Rose Bowl in Pasadena. She had been assured that a voucher for the tickets would be honored.

Cincinnati police investigator Ernie NeSmith said Wednesday that a routine investigation of a 17-year-old who had used one of Ms. Niemeyer's stolen credit cards led police through trash cans and wooded ravines and, finally, to the stolen Super Bowl tickets.

Although the Police Division's evidence rules usually mean that all stolen property must be held for court, NeSmith said police bent the rules a bit this time — they made photocopies for the evidence files and returned the tickets to Niemeyer.

Upbeat reports give stock mart boost

Two upbeat reports on the economy, one by the chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, gave the stock market a boost and sent the Dow Jones industrial average to its biggest one-day gain in three weeks.

"The stage appears set for sustainable recovery in business activity, bringing with it the higher levels of employment and real income that we all desire," Federal Reserve Chairman Paul Volcker told the congressional Joint Economic Committee on Thursday.

The markets also reacted to a report from the Labor Department that new claims for unemployment benefits in mid-January were at the lowest level since the fall of 1981.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrial stocks jumped 25.66 points to end the day at 1,063.65.

A government economist called the employment figures "an early clue" that joblessness may soon decline.

First-time applications for benefits in the week ended Jan. 15 fell by 71,000 from the previous week's 562,000 to 491,000, the department said.

In a related sign that labor markets may be stabilizing, the Conference Board in New York said its help-wanted advertising index rose five points in December, the fourth monthly increase in a row. The index remains far below year-ago levels, the business-supported research group said.

In other economic developments:

—Auto industry reports in Detroit said indefinite layoffs among U.S. autoworkers this week dropped to 265,544, while the domestic automakers planned to turn out 1.2 percent more cars than last week. The five major U.S. automakers said the layoff drop from 268,945 last week was due mainly to a 4,000 decline at General Motors Corp.

—F. James McDonald, president of GM, said an auto industry recovery is under way. He made the comment in announcing that more than 21,000 U.S. autoworkers will be called back to work in the next three months.

—American Telephone & Telegraph Co. reported 1982 profits of $7.28 billion, a record, up 6.7 percent over 1981. However, AT&T's Western Electric Co. announced Thursday it will phase out its Kearny, N.J., plant and reduce operations over several years in Baltimore and Cicero, Ill. About 6,700 employees, or 5 percent of Western Electric's total work force, will be affected, the company said.

—The Federal Home Loan Bank Board reported that Americans deposited more in their savings and loan accounts in December than they withdrew, the first time that has happened in almost a year. Deposits in the 3,358 federally insured S&Ls outweighed withdrawals by $9.6 billion, the government said. The surge in deposits is attributed to the $2,500-minimum investment accounts, introduced Dec. 14.

—The price of silver jumped to a two-year high of $13.50 an ounce, helping boost gold prices, while the dollar turned in a mixed performance on international currency markets. Silver jumped 37 cents to close at $13.505 a troy ounce in contracts for February delivery on the New York Commodity Exchange.

Losses you may deduct

First in a series of "tax tip" articles provided by the Permian Basin Chapter of the Texas Society of Certified Public Accountants.

Q. A fire destroyed two rooms of our house this year. Our insurance lacked $2,000 in covering the cost of repairs. May I deduct any part of this $2,000?

A. Currently, individuals may deduct losses exceeding $100 arising from fires, storms, theft or other casualty as an itemized deduction. This itemized deduction is taken in the same manner as contributions, interest and tax payments on Schedule A of Form 1040.

In the case of irreplaceable property, the loss is determined by comparing the fair market value of the property immediately after the casualty with the fair market value immediately before the casualty reduced by any insurance recovery.

Beginning in January 1983, you will be able to deduct only the amount that exceeds 10 percent of your adjusted gross income plus the $100 exclusion per casualty. For example, if your roof costs $5,000 to replace and your adjusted gross income is $30,000, then you can deduct only $1,900 of the repair bill. You may want to reassess your homeowner insurance coverage, to allow for this change in the tax laws.

For more information on this and other income tax questions, attend to "You and Your Income Tax" class sponsored by the Permian Basin Chapter of the Texas Society of Certified Public Accountants. The class, scheduled for Tuesday, February 8th, from 7:00 to 10:00 p.m. is presented as a public service.

Classes will be held at Midland College in the Allison Fine Arts Building. A $2.00 with your name and address to Taxpayer Education, P.O. Box 151, Midland, Texas 79702. Pre-registration is encouraged, but walk-in registration will be accepted.

Braniff won't be allowed slot swap

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government said Thursday it will not allow Braniff International's landing authority at various airports to be transferred to Pacific Southwest Airlines, threatening a proposed aircraft lease agreement betweeen the two carriers.

Under the agreement, which must still be approved by the bankruptcy court, Pacific Southwest Airlines would lease 30 Braniff aircraft and form a new division to serve the cities once served by Braniff.

The proposal is before U.S. Bankruptcy Judge John Flowers in Fort Worth, who is handling the attempted reorganization of Braniff after it stopped operations last May and began bankruptcy proceedings.

Braniff chairman Howard Putnam has said the transfer of about 400 so-called landing and takeoff "slots" at airports to Pacific Southwest are essential to the lease agreement.

Flowers has approved an agreement worked out among Braniff, PSA and the Dallas-Fort Worth Regional Airport board that would allow 14 of the 26 gates in the Braniff terminal to revert to the airport.

Putnam said the gate agreement was worked out more than a week ago and received Flowers' approval Wednesday night. The main advantage for Braniff, he said, is that airline officials "don't have to pay the rent on the gates" that revert to the airport.

The agreement would allow PSA to pick up 12 of the old Braniff gates if the Braniff-PSA deal is approved.

PSA spokesman William Hastings said he did not believe "it's any indication of what decision (Flowers) will make." However, he said, "It's one piece of the entire puzzle."

A gate is the physical location where the plane parks, whereas a slot is a time slot allowing the airport to land on the runway at a specific moment.

Without the landing authority, Pacific Southwest would not be able to start the new service because it would have to use its own slots.

Pacific Southwest spokesman Cecil Scaglione, however, said the FAA rejection of the slot transfer does not mean the end of the proposal. He said if the proposal is approved by the bankruptcy judge and made part of a Braniff reorganization plan, the FAA would be asked to reconsider its decision.

In a letter to Putnam, FAA administrator J. Lynn Helms implied the FAA might reconsider the matter if new information is received.

For the time being, however, he said the agency considers the proposed agreement "a partial liquidation, not a reorganization" and "in no sense could PSA be considered a successor to the rights, duties and obligations of Braniff."

Helms said the FAA does not consider Pacific Southwest as a successor airline under the proposed PSA-Braniff agreement.

After Braniff ceased operations May 12, the FAA began distributing some of its slots temporarily to other carriers and said it would shift the authority permanently to either Braniff if it should resume operations or to a successor airline.

Helms said he would permanently assign the former Braniff slots within 60 days.

The airport takeoff and landing restrictions were imposed in September 1981 at 20 major airports as a way to reduce traffic volume. The restrictions, which grew out of the air traffic controllers strike in August of that year, are being phased out, and the FAA said they probably will be eliminated by the end of the year at most airports.

Pacific Southwest has hoped to begin operations with Braniff's aircraft by May 1.

The proposal has been opposed by some competing carriers. Continental Airlines, for example, has argued before the FAA that Pacific Southwest should be required to purchase any Braniff slots it wants to use.

Hodel will miss deadline

WASHINGTON (AP) — Energy Secretary Donald Hodel says he will miss a Feb. 1 deadline for recommending what to do about the ticklish subject of natural gas prices.

Hodel said Thursday he was now hoping to have a recommendation by Feb. 14 on the type of bill the administration should try to push through Congress.

The energy secretary said at the beginning of January that he planned to spend a month seeking a consensus by talking to industry and consumer groups.

Hodel said Thursday in an interview that a "consensus is forming" but that he had not reached a final conclusion on the best approach to take.

President Reagan campaigned on a pledge to speed up the decontrol of natural gas prices. Under a 1978 law, 60 percent of supplies will be removed from price controls by Jan. 1, 1985. However, the other 40 percent of supplies will remain controlled forever.

The administration would like to remove controls on the 40 percent of old gas supplies, but there is a growing mood in Congress to impose a freeze on all prices to shelter consumers who have see their bills go up by 150 percent since partial decontrol began in 1978.

Edwin Rothschild, a spokesman for the Citizen-Labor Energy Coalition, said Hodel's delay showed the administration was running into the same roadblocks which last year forced it to scuttle efforts to speed up decontrol.

"The fact that their deadline is slipping indicates that the political situation is not clear," he said.

Hodel said he hoped to present a proposal to the Cabinet Council on Natural Resources by Feb. 14. The council, made up of key Cabinet members, will make a recommendation to Reagan.

The chairman of the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission has recommended that Reagan appoint a blue-ribbon panel to handle the natural gas issue, just as he did on Social Security financing.

In a letter to the president, C.M. Butler III said such a commission "might be able to find an acceptable legislative answer to the gas pricing problem where so many others have failed."

However, Hodel said he did not think there would be time for such a commission to study the question and make recommendations to Congress. Administration officials have said unless Congress acts this year, changes in gas pricing are dead because they will become embroiled in election-year campaigning in 1984.

Sooner's tallest building shrinks to ordinary size

TULSA, Okla. (AP) — It had been trumpeted as the tallest structure in the state, a gleaming, 52-story monument to corporate image consciousness and petroleum prosperity.

But the recent announcement of a plan to shrink the proposed Cities Service tower to a modest, 17-floor headquarters for a gas company is a reflection both of a shake-up in Oklahoma's energy industry and a softened Tulsa office market.

Oneok Inc. of Tulsa announced Jan. 14 it had reached agreement in principle to acquire the partially completed Cities Service building from Albritton Development of Dallas, Texas. Albritton purchased the structure from Cities Service following the oil company's merger with Occidental Petroleum late last year.

Oneok said it plans to add nothing but a cap to the 16-floor steel skeleton, scuttling another skyscraper that would have given company to the Bank of Oklahoma tower, the Fourth National Bank, the First National Tower and the Mid-Continent building in the downtown skyline.

"This has not happened to us before," said Jackie Reinhardt, a spokeswoman for Welton Becket Associates Architects of Santa Monica, Calif., which designed the building. "We don't have a practice going in cutting buildings down."

The local real estate community reacted more favorably to the news.

"I think it's very positive," said Ed Hensen, president of Williams Realty, one of Tulsa's largest real estate developers. "As long as the project didn't have a home it was sort of hanging over the (real estate) market."

It all started optimistically in September 1980, when Cities Service, flush with fresh oil money, announced plans for a new headquarters.

The building, to be constructed across the street from Cities' current 28-floor home, was to rise 712 feet, topping the 50-floor, 667-feet-high Bank of Oklahoma tower and the 60-floor, 648-feet-high Oral Roberts City of Faith Medical Center south of downtown.

But in July 1981, Cities said it felt some of its capital could be better spent elsewhere and announced a 15-floor reduction to the structure.

Construction began, and after what seemed an interminably long time digging the foundation, steel rose to the 16th floor.

But then came the Occidental takeover, and the Cities tower became a corporate white elephant when the Los Angeles, Calif.-based parent company decided they didn't need the space for their new subsidiary.

Oneok says it will occupy the majority of the 17-floor building, calming real estate agents' fears that the Tulsa office market would be flooded.

"There was a year and a half of office space hanging over the city in that one (17-floor) building," said Williams Realty's Hensen.

Though the office vacancy figure in Tulsa is low — 2 percent to 3 percent, according to Hensen — other buildings coming on line will turn that around.

"When you add them in, those two buildings are in excess of 5 percent (office) vacancy alone," Hensen said.

John Novack, of the Tulsa architectural firm Urban Design Group, said not to worry.

"Because of the curvature (at the narrow ends of the building), it will be perceived as a much thinner building," Novack said.

Two companies that unsuccessfully bidded on the incomplete building asked Urban Design for its opinion on the appearance of the shortened structure.

"We recommended that they cut it off at 17," Novack said. In fact, he added, "The 52 (floor proposal) may have been a little less correctly proportioned" than 17 floors.

Oil boom remembered

CYGNET, Ohio (AP) — Clippers in hand, Max Shaffer looked out the window of his one-chair barbershop and recalled the glory days of this rural village, the wild and wooly era of the region's oil boom.

At the turn of the century, 400 storage tanks, each built to hold 30,000 barrels of crude oil, were scattered over the farm fields around Cygnet like eerie banks holding the region's black gold.

Across the horizon, thousands of 77-foot derricks dotted the landscape and supported the churning machinery that bored day and night into the earth.

Thousands of people then walked the streets of what is now a sleepy community of 700. At that time its businesses included 13 saloons and four churches. Now, cattle wander the pastures and few autos roll down the village's main street.

Most of the storage tanks have been torn down, their 10-foot steel sections dismantled for scrap. No derricks remain. Now and then a farmer plowing a field will turn up a piece of a "go-devil," a cast iron, arrow-shaped affair that was used to detonate the nitroglycerine that fractured the substructure of the oil wells.

But the oil is still there. Shaffer, 69, says an estimated 40 to 60 percent of the original oil is still lying under Cygnet, waiting for the day that crude prices go high enough to make taking it out of the ground worthwhile.

"We still have speculators coming around now and then with leases in their hands," Shaffer said. "Oh, the oil might come back, never as big as it was, you understand. But it will come back."

Shaffer is unofficial historian of the oil fields of Cygnet and the surrounding farmland that once was the home of so many tent cities it was hard to separate where one began and the other ended.

Most of the 19 settlements faded into ghostly existence, showing now only on old maps that once led men from one derrick to another.

Pipeliners may be busy

HOUSTON (SWN) — The next 10 years, beginning in 1984, promise to be among the most active in pipelining history, according to the recently published "Worldwide Pipe Line Outlook - 1983 and Beyond" issued by Pipe Line Industry magazine, a Gulf Publishing Company publication.

An active decade of pipelining will be required to move oil and gas reserves in some of the world's most remote areas to markets in industrial nations, despite the worldwide economic slump in 1983, editors of the Houston-based trade magazine predict. Coal slurry pipe lines will be an important factor starting in 1984.

The PLI editors expect U.S. 1983 construction to total 8,571 miles. The majority of this mileage will be for gas gathering and gas transmission pipe lines.

The editors of the internationally-circulated magazine also predict that worldwide pipe line construction mileage in 1983 will reach 31,012 miles. These figures exclude U.S.S.R., People's Republic of China, Iraq, Iran and huge projects in the U.S. and Canada which are still awaiting government decision and/or private financing.

Stock market gains

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, up 25.66 Thursday for its best gain in three weeks, climbed 7.45 to 1,071.10 by noontime today.

Gainers outnumbered losers by more than 2 to 1 among New York Stock Exchange-listed issues.

General Electric was a standout gainer, up 4½ at 99¾ on word that the company planned to sell most of its Utah International mining subsidiary to an Australian concern.

Volume on the Big Board totaled 44.71 million shares at noontime, against 34.30 million at the same point Thursday.

BUSINESS MIRROR

Economic issues awash in rhetoric

By JOHN CUNNIFF
AP Business Analyst

NEW YORK - Economic issues, programs and policies today are so cluttered and fuddled by political rhetoric that it takes the incisiveness of an acetylene torch to cut through all the junk.

While the list of befuddlements is endless, two particularly good examples present themselves: The Reagan administration's fling with supply-side economics, and the squabble about big banks and foreign debts.

1. Supply-side economics includes the principles that taxes should be lowered to stimulate work, saving and investment, and that government spending and deficits be restrained so as to stimulate the private sector.

While these policies are under way, supply-siders say that growth of the money supply gradually should be reduced to a lower or stable rate.

Thus is economic success assured, its proponents say. And, say those who maintain that Reaganomics and supply-side economics are one and the same, supply-siding doesn't work. Look at the record, they say.

Richard McKenzie, senior fellow in economics for the Heritage Foundation, a conservative policy research institute, disputes the assumption.

"Contrary to popular impression," he says, "true-blue supply-sidism and monetarism — the kind that exhibits intellectual honesty — has not been tested, nor could it have been tested within the short span of two years."

Even the U.S. Treasury, says McKenzie, an economics professor at Clemson University, admits that taxes on income haven't fallen and won't fall for most Americans. Most taxpayers, he says, will pay more in 1984 than in 1980.

Moreover, and despite "hysteria over budget cuts," he states that real government spending rose 1 percent between the fiscal 1981 and 1982 budgets; and that expenditures as a percent of gross national product are now rising.

While interest rates have fallen, he observes, they have done so erratically rather than smoothly, as called for by supply-siders. Thus, he contends, investment risks have increased, leading to industrial declines.

Supply-side philosophy, he argues, hasn't been followed by Washington, despite the popular impression. Besides, he said, supply-siding was never meant to be a short-term fix. It's a long-term prescription, he says.

2. As some of the biggest bankers tell it, they had an economic, social and political obligation to lend money to the less developed nations, some of which are communist dominated.

Not to be ignored, however, is the fact that some of these nation's offered very agreeable and potentially profitable terms to the banks. And as some bankers have pointed out, countries may become illiquid — but seldom insolvent.

In seeking answers to the rise in lending to less developed, non-OPEC nations — to more than $500 billion from less than $100 billion about 10 years ago — seldom do you hear bankers admit to a lack of foresight.

Now that many nations are unable to live up to terms of the loans you hear many explanations: nobody expected a prolonged recession, a fall of commodity prices, tremendous worldwide inflation and extremely high interest rates.

But why not? Isn't it the job of bankers to anticipate? To determine if a customer has the ability to repay? To measure the risks of the loan, and the damage to their banks if payments aren't made?

George Champion, chairman of Chase Manhattan Bank in the 1960s, is a very rare individual. He has admitted in print what other bankers, in congressional testimony and in articles, usually have declined to discuss.

"Many bankers and others share my view that lending to foreign governments isn't the function of a commercial bank."

"The American banks that participated in the lending to the developing and Iron Curtain countries are primarily responsible for the current problem...but it would be unrealistic to suggest that the examining authorities responsible for appraising the soundness of the loans and investments of the banks have lived up to their responsibilities."

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

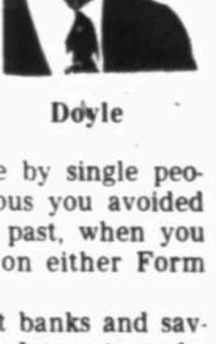
By BILL DOYLE

Q. Until now, I have avoided investing in money market mutual funds, because I want to file the short form federal income tax return. As I understand it, a person with money invested in a money market mutual fund is required to file the long form. Does this hold true for the new money market accounts banks are offering?

A. No. Nor is it the case with money market mutual funds. Your understanding of this situation is wrong. There is no requirement that an investor in a money market mutual fund must file the long Form 1040 federal income tax return. Money market mutual funds pay dividends, which can be reported on short Form 1040A.



Doyle

However, when you have dividend income, you can't use the new, simplified short Form 1040EZ. That form will be used for the first time by single people to report 1982 income. It's obvious you avoided money market mutual funds in the past, when you could have reported the dividends on either Form 1040 or Form 1040A.

The new moneymarket accounts at banks and savings and loan association pay interest. Interest can be reported on Form 1040 or Form 1040A. If your total annual interest is no more than $400, you may be able to use Form 1040EZ.

Q. I'm single. Will I be allowed to use the new Form 1040EZ to file my 1982 income tax return?

A. Yes, if your 1982 total income was less than $50,000; no more than $400 of the total came from interest; the rest came from wages, salaries and-or tips.

Big Spring Sixteen-O-Three North offers many benefits to those who purchase office space in this attractive office condiminium. The building is conveniently located at 1603 N. Big Spring. Call Tom King at 682-6000 for more information, or come by and see for yourself some of the amenities offered with office ownerhip.

Owning your own office offers many advantages

When you own your own office space at Big Spring Sixteen-O-Three North, you gain in several ways. First, there's a sense of permanence and propriety about owning your particular space; then there's the tax advantages as compared to renting; and of course there's the amenities which this particular office condiminium offers; but the bottom line is that Big Spring Sixteen-O-Three North offers you all that plus 100 percent financing and a convenient location.

According to Tom King, who along with Bill Chancellor owns this project, some of the advantages of ownership in Big Spring Sixteen-O-Three North include sharing of secretarial services, sharing of expenses such as utilities, insurance and taxes and the fact that, unlike renting office space, your payments are set and can not be increased over the life of the financing.

King also points out that the tax advantages of owning your own office space can result in a savings in taxes of up to 50 percent a year.

There are still several spaces available for sale, ranging in size from 174 up to almost 800 square feet. Financing is at 100 percent for 15 years at the lowest market rates. The white, stucco building, located at 1603 N. Big Spring, is well-designed to give each office an outside view, as well as a view of the central atrium. Each office also has a skylight. This results in office space which is light and airy, giving one a feeling of being outdoors. There is covered parking in back of the building, as well as a parking area in front for visitors. The building is close to downtown, yet far enough away to avoid the congestion of downtown traffic.

Show patriotism; fly flag

You can show your patriotism in a very tangible way with an American flag flying in front of your home or business. George Leach, owner of Imperial Flag and Banner, says his stock of flags is at an all-time high. He has American flags as large as eight by 12 feet in size, Texas flags as large as six by ten feet and the Confederate flag up to five by eight feet in size.

Imperial Flag also stocks Candadian and Mexican flags; church flags including Protestant, Papal, and Zionist; as well as flag poles and accessories for all of these.

Imperial Flag and Banner is available to service and install flags and flagpoles. You may call Leach at 682-3562 for more information on these services.

Desk flag sets make wonderful gifts for any occasion, and Imperial has a fine selection, along with banners, pennants, special kits for grand openings, clearance sales, standard sales, anniversary sales, truckload sales and tire sales. They feature special car-lot flags for either new or used cars and trucks, or flags for service stations or shopping centers. In fact, Imperial has a flag for any occasion, and in a variety of shapes, sizes and materials.

Custom made flags are designed by top engineers with Annin, flag makers to the world since 1847. These flags can be made from the largest selection of colors available in the beautiful Nylglo material.

Imperial Flag and Banner can offer you outstanding buys on your flag needs. Come by and see the selection at 1601 S. Main. Imperial is open from 8 a.m. to 6 p.m. Monday through Friday and from noon to 6 p.m. on Sunday. They are closed on Saturday.

Flags of every size, shape and description are available from Imperial Flag and Banner, 1601 S. Main. Show your support of the American way by flying a flag from your home or office. Imperial can offer custom designs from the top engineers with Annin, flag makers to the world since 1847. UAE increasing production dramatically

By the Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

CAIRO, Egypt — The United Arab Emirates announced Wednesay night that it is dramatically increasing its oil production and warned that prices may be cut soon in an oil war following the collapse of the OPEC meeting earlier this week.

In making public the decision to boost output by 45 percent to 1.6 million barrels a day, the emirates' Oil Minister Mana Saeed Oteiba said that he could "almost see now in front of my eyes" a price cut by Arab producers in the Persian Gulf.

The action by the emirates, an ally of leading world oil producer Saudi Arabia, suggested that the Saudi-led bloc of Persian Gulf states was prepared to raise production and reduce prices in an effort to pressure its rivals in OPEC to stop trying to encroach on its share of the market.

The emirates previously had been curtailing their production to help the Saudis prop up OPEC's official price of $34 a barrel, but the two now may be changing policy to try to force their rivals to stop offering price discounts and accept production ceilings.

Whether the Saudis will follow the emirates' example and raise their own production remained unclear, but Oteiba pointedly noted that Saudi output already has fallen to only 4 million barrels a day from a record of 10 million a day about a year and a half ago.

A major increase in Saudi output almost certainly would send world oil prices plummeting, a prospect that all OPEC members insist that they wish to avoid.

(Newspapers in the United Arab Emirates and Bahrain predicted cuts in the price of gulf crude, The Associated Press reported.

("Other OPEC members admit publicly they are selling their crude at a $7 discount, yet they want us to remain committed to the official price so that they may continue selling their crude and increasing their production," Yamani was quoted as saying.)

Oteiba, speaking on a local television station, said that the emirates was increasing its output "to the levels required by our national and Arab commitments" following the "resounding failure" of the meeting that ended in Geneva Monday of the 13-nation Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries.

"We are no longer willing to continue shouldering (both) our responsibilities and those of states that fish in troubled waters," Oteiba said.

At the meeting, a tentative agreement on OPEC production ceilings to contain the world glut fell apart when the Saudis and their gulf allies demanded that African countries raise their prices a bit and stop trying to lure buyers away from the gulf states. The gulf states suggested afterward that they might let prices slide for awhile to scare Nigeria, Libya and Iran into cooperating in patching together an agreement.

Oteiba indicated that the emirates chose to raise output because it was facing financial problems and needed the revenue. He said that the country had a $1.2 billion deficit in the current budget and that next year the shortfall would double if the old rate of production of 1.1 million barrels a day were maintained.

The emirates' oil minister was upset with the outcome of the Geneva OPEC meeting, saying that the resulting confrontation within OPEC would have "serious economic repercussions" on every country and provoke "the collapse of exchange rates and the international banking system."

"The future now is unknown and unclear," Oteiba said.

He lashed out at Yahaya Dikko, Nigeria's representative at the meeting, who he accused of having a "bias" against the Arab gulf producers and said, "The knife (of sacrifice) borne by this group has already gone through our flesh."

Oteiba also attacked non-OPEC oil producers, responsible now for more than half the world's total exports, whom he said had also worsened the situation by producing at maximum capacity.

But the emirates' oil minister carefully avoided any mention of Iran, the OPEC member and gulf producer that probably has been the strongest challenger to the Saudi attempt to uphold the organization's current pricing structure. The emirates, like the other small Arab states lining the Persian Gulf, last year moved toward a conciliatory attitude toward Tehran apparently because of Iran's diplomatic and military muscle.

The Iranians claim to have raised their output from 1.3 million barrels allotted to them last March to 3.2 million today. In Geneva, Iranian Oil Minister Mohammed Gharazi made clear that the Iranians were raising production not only for economic reasons but also to undermine Saudi Arabia.

Shell coming out ahead

By the Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

LOS ANGELES — Atlantic Richfield Co.'s bold gamble last year to eliminate credit cards and slash gasoline prices almost immediately triggered an industrywide stampede to cut prices for cash customers. But suddenly the company coming out ahead may be the one that refused to join the race.

Shell Oil Co., emphasizing one price for both cash and credit sales, has quietly moved into first place among California's gasoline retailers, as measured by the latest available figures.

"That surprised everybody," one oil company source said Thursday.

Statistics compiled by the Los Angeles-based Lundberg Survey indicate that Shell in November moved from the third-place spot it had occupied for most of the year to No. 1, selling 14.94 percent of gasoline purchased in California.

In doing so, it moved past not only Arco, which earlier in the year had boosted its ranking dramatically, but also the traditional leader Chevron.

Britons take to 'Breakfast Time'

LONDON (AP) — Breakfast-time TV is a hit with British viewers after 10 days on the air, baffling critics who said the American-style news and entertainment show couldn't compete with the beloved daily newspapers.

Even supporters say they're surprised at how quickly Britons are giving up their traditional morning routine to watch the British Broadcasting Corp.'s "Breakfast Time."

"We've been totally amazed," says Ron Neil, editor of the new show.

He claims skeptics "who said there wasn't an appetite for 'Breakfast Time' have been proved wrong."

A National Opinion Poll commissioned by the BBC said this week that an average 8 million of Britain's 56 million people tuned in during the program's first four days and 80 percent liked what they saw.

The Observer newspaper, in another survey, said 37 percent of households with a television switched on at some time during the first four shows and 11 percent said they would watch "often."

The BBC show, which had its debut Jan. 17 and runs from 6:30 to 9 a.m., bears strong similarities to the early-morning shows "Today" on NBC and "Good Morning America" on ABC.

But there are no commercials on "Breakfast Time," which has more leisurely interviews and features offbeat items such as daily horoscopes, a recent survey of fast-food restaurants and a look at feeding time in the Edinburgh Zoo.

The BBC says the show's biggest attraction so far is Diana Moran, a 43-year-old mother of two, who wears a tight green leotard for a 5-minute exercise spot. She is known as the "Green Goddess."

"The sexiest lady to hit the telly screen in years," remarked the tabloid Sun after she invited commuters at London's Waterloo rail station to join in a televised morning "stretch."

The ratings also have exceeded the expectations of the rival TV-AM company, whose "Daybreak" and "Good Morning Britain" shows will be launched on the ITV commercial network next Tuesday.

The "Daybreak" and "Good Morning Britain" shows, which will air back-to-back, also will have characteristics similar to their American television predecessors.

Both the BBC and ITV had aimed at 4 percent to 5 percent of the potential viewing audience — mindful that Britain has 10 national morning newspapers including the high-brow Times and the tabloid Sun.

Peter Jay, former British ambassador to the United States and chairman of TV-AM which he has launched with interviewer David Frost, said the BBC ratings were "absolutely staggering."

"They have exceeded my wildest dreams, let alone the skeptical estimates of others," Jay told The Associated Press. "This proves beyond a doubt that there is a substantial audience for breakfast television."

"Two programs on the air will almost certainly mean the overall numbers of viewers going up and we are confident that we shall take more than half," Jay added.

Unknown period in life of Churchill not dull

NEW YORK (AP) — Martin Gilbert, perhaps the world's foremost authority on Winston Churchill, happened to mention over dinner several years ago that he was writing about the decade Churchill spent out of government before World War II.

"I didn't know anything about the period," says Gilbert's companion for dinner that night, Richard Broke, "and I was sure that meant that most people didn't know much about it.

"And if it's unknown, I told Martin, it's probably with good reason," Broke says. "It's probably dull."

Broke, then a script editor for the British Broadcasting Corp., says he agreed nonetheless to read Gilbert's biography of Churchill, and came away — 1,100 pages later — fascinated, and determined to turn the book into a TV series.

"It was the things that happened to Churchill in that period that people simply don't know about, the men coming to him with secret information on Hitler and Nazi Germany, or the political scandal over India question, that made the story so interesting," Broke says.

He sought intially to interest the BBC in the story, but the project was considered too expensive, and Broke was turned away. Eventually, Britain's independent Southern Pictures agreed to produce "Winston Churchill: The Wilderness Years."

The miniseries starring Robert Hardy as Churchill and Sian Phillips as his wife, Clementine, continues an eight-week run on public TV's "Masterpiece Theater" with Part III Sunday night.

Broke, who produced a number of plays for the BBC before leaving to begin work on "The Wilderness Years," says his study of Churchill's life and political career between 1929 and 1939 radically altered his impression of the statesman.

"You think of Winston Churchill as an old man after the war, a very right-wing, British establishment figure.

Cardinals have few powers; Position mainly ceremonial

VATICAN CITY (AP)— The 18 men Pope John Paul II installs as cardinals next Wednesday assume a title shorn long ago of most of its princely powers and possessions but little of its regal grandeur.

After receiving the red hat from the pope, the 18 men will join a select group of 120 others who serve as the pope's top advisers in running the Roman Catholic Church's worldwide spiritual and temporal empire.

But gone are the rich territories granted to cardinals of yore; treasures that triggered sometimes bloody feuding among the leading families of Italy and Europe who pushed their sons to seek their fortunes in the church.

Those territories were lost with the fall of the Vatican's temporal empire after the unification of Italy in 1871.

Today's cardinals, though still accorded equal rank with princes of royal families, have few special powers other than to elect the next pope, usually from their own ranks. And, as the pope's senate, the College of Cardinals can advise but pass no legislation.

What power the modern cardinals have within the church and their own countries comes from their influence with the pope and the honor of their position, just as any top aide to a head of state.

For instance, Archbishop Jozef Glemp of Warsaw will gain no powers from becoming a cardinal next week that he didn't already have as archbishop. However, the promotion likely will give him greater prestige in dealing with the communist government of John Paul's native Poland.

In addition, most of the administrative offices of the church are headed by cardinals, giving the Curia cardinals in Rome great influence over church policy and over the matters affecting far-flung dioceses.

How the cardinals amassed their powers is closely tied to the rise of the pope, as bishop of Rome, from first among equals to supreme pontiff. As the pope's powers increased, so did those of his court, or Curia.

The origin of the title cardinal is obscure. Some scholars say it derives from "cardo," Latin for hinge, and signifies the men on whom the administration of the Roman Catholic Church turns.

Others maintain that cardinal comes from "incardinare," a term invented by Pope Gregory I to designate men in the three major orders serving a church other than the one in which they were ordained. It was also applied to bishops who had lost their churches during the barbarian invasions of the church's early history.

By the eighth century, cardinal was in general use for the senior priests of the 28 main churches of Rome and the four basilicas.

Later added to the list were the bishops of the seven dioceses surrounding Rome and the deacons of the dioceses, the bishops' chief assistants.

But it wasn't until 1059 that the College of Cardinals was formed, thus institutionalizing their supremacy over patriarchs, archbishops, bishops, and papal envoys to individual countries.

In 1179 the cardinals wrested the right to elect a pope away from other Roman bishops and laymen. Up until the 1907 canon law revision, laymen could be named cardinals.

A man must be at least a bishop before becoming cardinal. Because of that rule, The Rev. Henri de Lubac, a noted French theologian, will be consecrated a bishop before he takes the red hat at next week's consistory.

There were no more than 30 cardinals at a time until Pope Sixtus V set the number at 70 in 1586. Pope John XXIII raised the number into the 80s and Paul VI in 1970 set the maximum age for electors at a papal conclave at 79 and limited the number of voters to 120.

Two of the 18 new cardinals are over 80: Archbishop Julijans Vaivods, apostolic administrator of Riga, Latvia, and theologian de Lubac.

As a result of the historical development, there are still three levels of cardinals, with cardinal-bishops ranking highest, followed by cardinal-priests and cardinal-deacons. The ranking is largely ceremonial now, and only determines who is first in line for official functions.

Generally, the title of cardinal-bishop is still reserved for the bishops of the Rome dioceses, cardinal priests are from outside Rome, and cardinal deacons are members of the Vatican administration.

Group looks to future

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Congressional Clearinghouse on the Future is a small group with a big mission: convincing politicians that the future stretches further than the next election.

An obsqure caucus with a tiny staff and a name that conjures up visions of moonbeams, the clearinghouse hardly seems an ideal power base for an ambitious congressman.

But Rep. Bob Edgar, D-Pa., has been lobbying since July to become chairman of the little-known group. He is the only candidate for the job, and he will succeed Rep. Albert Gore, D-Tenn.

A suburban Philadelphia congressman, Edgar has promised to retire from the House after he seeks a sixth term in 1984.

"Coalitions are what you make them," Edgar said in an interview. "There's an awful lot of hidden potential in an organization like this. And while it is a very small operation at present, it doesn't have to remain that way."

Edgar speaks from firsthand experience.

In his four years in Congress, the clearinghouse staff has grown from four to six and its research arm, the Northeast-Midwest Institute, has tripled from five to 15 employees. The budget rose from $250,000 to $800,000 in the same period.

The seven-year-old clearinghouse, primarily an educational group, sponsors seminars, supplies information and publishes newsletters about biomass plantations, robotic warfare and other esoteric subjects of the way-out future.

Edgar believes legislators and their committees should be spurred by the clearinghouse to develop long-term approaches to population growth, food and water supplies, unemployment and pollution.

The clearinghouse has never held a news conference. It professes to be non-partisan, and it does not generate legislation.

Nonetheless, Edgar clearly hopes to expand its influence, and his own, by increasing publicity, expanding membership and taking stands on important legislation.

"It's not a bad idea for me to be involved in something with more national possibilities," he said.

"If we don't look at some of these issues whose trend is going off the page, we're going to be in big trouble," he said. "Maybe we don't have time to wait and plan a future."

Present membership in the clearinghouse, with a charge of $500 to join, is about 70 representatives and four senators. Edgar envisions a much larger roster of "congressmen who read books and think."

Edgar and others acknowledge that it will take some ingenuity to attract this kind of legislator, considering the political, crisis-oriented nature of Congress.

"The constituency of the future is everybody and nobody, so it's very hard to get legislators to think about the long-range effects of legislation," lamented Rush Holt, an Edgar aide.

"It's too easy in this environment for people to grandstand," said Lena Lupica, the new clearinghouse staff director. "We want people to think consciously about alternatives and not just jump on a bandwagon."

Cotton

NEW YORK (AP) - Cotton futures No. 2 closed unchanged to 75 cents a bale higher Thurs-day.

The average price for strict low middling 1 & 1-16 inch spot cotton was unchanged at 59.70 cents a pound Wednesday for the nine markets, according to the New York Cotton Exchange.

Stock market gains

NEW YORK (AP) — Stock prices rolled up their biggest gain in three weeks Thursday, aided by a steady bond market and hopes for a strengthening economic recovery.

Auto, bank and high-tech- nology issues ranked among the leaders of the rally.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials jumped 25.66 to 1,063.65, for its best daily show- ing since it rose 26.03 on Jan. 6. That more than offset a loss of almost 15 points over the week's first three sessions.

Volume on the New York Stock Exchange reached 88.12 million shares, up from 73.72 million Wednesday.

Analysts said traders were encouraged by the absence of any significant rise in open- market interest rates after the government announced its l a r g e quarterly borrowing needs on Wednesday. Rates on short-term Treasury bills and long-term government bonds showed only mixed and small changes in Thursday's activity.

Paul Volcker, chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, told a congressional committee that the Fed's monetary policy seeks to promote economic growth without abandoning the goal of curbing inflation.

Allowing monetary growth at a rapid rate to help finance the government's heavy borrowing needs would "only risk adding to the uncertainty about future inflation and interest rates," Volcker said in an appearance before the Joint Economic Committee.

Meanwhile, a leading bank economist said strong evidence of an economic recovery can be expected during the current quarter. Leif Olsen, chairman of the economic policy com- mittee at New York's Citibank, told a bankers' group that recovery is "under way."

American Telephone & Tele- graph led the active list, up 1¾ at 69⅞. The company reported earnings for the past year of $8.40 a share, against $8.47 in the previous 12-month period.

Among other leading blue chips, International Business Machines rose 2½ to 97⅝; Procter & Gamble 2½ to 112¼, and Eastman Kodak 1½ to 82⅝.

General Motors, Ford Motor and Chrysler all showed gains of a point or more, as did Citi- corp and Chase Manhattan in the banking sector and Hewlett- Packard, Data General, Com- putervision and Digital Equip- ment among technology issues.

Trans World gained 2⅜ to 30½. Late Wednesday the com- pany posted a fourth-quarter profit, against a loss in the year-earlier period, and said it plans to sell 20 percent of the stock of its airline subsidiary to the public.

One of the few losers among the volume leaders was Xerox, which fell 1½ to 36⅞. The com- pany reported lower fourth-quarter profits, and said its op- erating earnings this year would be only about the same as 1982's.

The daily tally on the Big Board showed advancing issues outnumbering declines by almost 3 to 1, and the exchange's composite index jumped 1.44 to 83.17.

Nationwide turnover in NYSE-listed issues, including trades in those stocks on re- gional exchanges and in the over-the-counter market, total- ed 101.18 million shares.

Standard & Poor's index of 400 industrials rose 3.23 to 162.27, and S&P's 500-stock composite index was up 2.73 at 144.27.

At the American Stock Ex- change, the market value index added 4.77 to 359.49. The NAS- DAQ composite index for the over-the-counter market closed at 245.44, up 4.01.

Economic issues awash in rhetoric

By JOHN CUNNIFF
AP Business Analyst

NEW YORK - Economic issues, programs and policies today are so cluttered and fuddled by political rhetoric that it takes the incisiveness of an acetylene torch to cut through all the junk.

While the list of befuddlements is endless, two particularly good examples present themselves: The Reagan administration's fling with supply-side economics, and the squabble about big banks and foreign debts.

1. Supply-side economics includes the principles that taxes should be lowered to stimulate work, saving and investment, and that government spending and deficits be restrained so as to stimulate the private sector.

While these policies are under way, supply-siders say that growth of the money supply gradually should be reduced to a lower or stable rate.

Thus is economic success assured, its proponents say. And, say those who maintain that Reaganomics and supply-side economics are one and the same, supply-siding doesn't work. Look at the record, they say.

Richard McKenzie, senior fellow in economics for the Heritage Foundation, a conservative policy research institute, disputes the assumption.

"Contrary to popular impression," he says, "true-blue supply-sidism and monetarism — the kind that exhibits intellectual honesty — has not been tested, nor could it have been tested within the short span of two years."

Even the U.S. Treasury, says McKenzie, an economics professor at Clemson University, admits that taxes on income haven't fallen and won't fall for most Americans. Most taxpayers, he says, will pay more in 1984 than in 1980.

Moreover, and despite "hysteria over budget cuts," he states that real government spending rose 1 percent between the fiscal 1981 and 1982 budgets; and that expenditures as a percent of gross national product are now rising.

While interest rates have fallen, he observes, they have done so erratically rather than smoothly, as called for by supply-siders. Thus, he contends, investment risks have increased, leading to industrial declines.

Supply-side philosophy, he argues, hasn't been followed by Washington, despite the popular impression. Besides, he said, supply-siding was never meant to be a short-term fix. It's a long-term prescription, he says.

2. As some of the biggest bankers tell it, they had an economic, social and political obligation to lend money to the less developed nations, some of which are communist dominated.

Not to be ignored, however, is the fact that some of these nation's offered very agreeable and potentially profitable terms to the banks. And as some bankers have pointed out, countries may become illiquid — but seldom insolvent.

In seeking answers to the rise in lending to less developed, non-OPEC nations — to more than $500 billion from less than $100 billion about 10 years ago — seldom do you hear bankers admit to a lack of foresight.

Now that many nations are unable to live up to terms of the loans you hear many explanations: nobody expected a prolonged recession, a fall of commodity prices, tremendous worldwide inflation and extremely high interest rates.

But why not? Isn't it the job of bankers to anticipate? To determine if a customer has the ability to repay? To measure the risks of the loan, and the damage to their banks if payments aren't made?

George Champion, chairman of Chase Manhattan Bank in the 1960s, is a very rare individual. He has admitted in print what other bankers, in congressional testimony and in articles, usually have declined to discuss.

"Many bankers and others share my view that lending to foreign governments isn't the function of a commercial bank."

"The American banks that participated in the lending to the developing and Iron Curtain countries are primarily responsible for the current problem...but it would be unrealistic to suggest that the examining authorities responsible for appraising the soundness of the loans and investments of the banks have lived up to their responsibilities."

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

By BILL DOYLE

Q. Until now, I have avoided investing in money market mutual funds, because I want to file the short form federal income tax return. As I understand it, a person with money invested in a money market mutual fund is required to file the long form. Does this hold true for the new money market accounts banks are offering?

Doyle

A. No. Nor is it the case with money market mutual funds. Your understanding of this situation is wrong. There is no requirement that an investor in a money market mutual fund must file the long Form 1040 federal income tax return. Money market mutual funds pay dividends, which can be reported on short Form 1040A.

However, when you have dividend income, you can't use the new, simplified short Form 1040EZ. That form will be used for the first time by single people to report 1982 income. It's obvious you avoided money market mutual funds in the past, when you could have reported the dividends on either Form 1040 or Form 1040A.

The new moneymarket accounts at banks and savings and loan association pay interest. Interest can be reported on Form 1040 or Form 1040A. If your total annual interest is no more than $400, you may be able to use Form 1040EZ.

Q. I'm single. Will I be allowed to use the new Form 1040EZ to file my 1982 income tax return?

A. Yes, if your 1982 total income was less than $50,000; no more than $400 of the total came from interest; the rest came from wages, salaries and-or tips.

Show patriotism; fly flag

You can show your patriotism in a very tangible way with an American flag flying in front of your home or business. George Leach, owner of Imperial Flag and Banner, says his stock of flags is at an all-time high. He has American flags as large as eight by 12 feet in size, Texas flags as large as six by ten feet and the Confederate flag up to five by eight feet in size.

Imperial Flag also stocks Candadian and Mexican flags; church flags including Protestant, Papal, and Zionist; as well as flag poles and accessories for all of these.

Imperial Flag and Banner is available to service and install flags and flagpoles. You may call Leach at 682-3562 for more information on these services.

Desk flag sets make wonderful gifts for any occasion, and Imperial has a fine selection, along with banners, pennants, special kits for grand openings, clearance sales, standard sales, anniversary sales, truckload sales and tire sales. They feature special car-lot flags for either new or used cars and trucks, or flags for service stations or shopping centers. In fact, Imperial has a flag for any occasion, and in a variety of shapes, sizes and materials.

Custom made flags are designed by top engineers with Annin, flag makers to the world since 1847. These flags can be made from the largest selection of colors available in the beautiful Nylglo material.

Imperial Flag and Banner can offer you outstanding buys on your flag needs. Come by and see the selection at 1601 S. Main. Imperial is open from 8 a.m. to 6 p.m. Monday through Friday and from noon to 6 p.m. on Sunday. They are closed on Saturday.

Flags of every size, shape and description are available from Imperial Flag and Banner, 1601 S. Main. Show your support of the American way by flying a flag from your home or office. Imperial can offer custom designs from the top engineers with Annin, flag makers to the world since 1847. Big Spring Sixteen-O-Three North offers many benefits to those who purchase office space in this attractive office condiminium. The building is conveniently located at 1603 N. Big Spring. Call Tom King at 682-6000 for more information, or come by and see for yourself some of the amenities offered with office ownerhip.

Owning your own office offers many advantages

When you own your own office space at Big Spring Sixteen-O-Three North, you gain in several ways. First, there's a sense of permanence and propriety about owning your particular space; then there's the tax advantages as compared to renting; and of course there's the amenities which this particular office condiminium offers; but the bottom line is that Big Spring Sixteen-O-Three North offers you all that plus 100 percent financing and a convenient location.

According to Tom King, who along with Bill Chancellor owns this project, some of the advantages of ownership in Big Spring Sixteen-O-Three North include sharing of secretarial services, sharing of expenses such as utilities, insurance and taxes and the fact that, unlike renting office space, your payments are set and can not be increased over the life of the financing.

King also points out that the tax advantages of owning your own office space can result in a savings in taxes of up to 50 percent a year.

There are still several spaces available for sale, ranging in size from 174 up to almost 800 square feet. Financing is at 100 percent for 15 years at the lowest market rates. The white, stucco building, located at 1603 N. Big Spring, is well-designed to give each office an outside view, as well as a view of the central atrium. Each office also has a skylight. This results in office space which is light and airy, giving one a feeling of being outdoors. There is covered parking in back of the building, as well as a parking area in front for visitors. The building is close to downtown, yet far enough away to avoid the congestion of downtown traffic.

Andrews Chamber of Commerce honors members

By PATRICK DEAREN
Staff Writer

ANDREWS — Dedication, responsibility, concern and humor: they're all necessary ingredients in the formation of a quality community.

That such exist within the city limits of this West Texas town was obvious Thursday night at the annual chamber of commerce banquet, that unique, once-a-year get-together of the community's supporters when mutual concern is evidenced, honors are bestowed and laughter becomes contagious.

"Andrews is still the greatest place in the world to live," outgoing president Lawton Brevard told a packed-housed crowd of 400 persons.

Even so, incoming president James Pennington wants Andrews to reach an even more transcendent level in the months ahead.

"The theme of our chamber is, 'A Community of Quality,'" noted the superintendent of schools, "and thanks to many of you tonight we do have a quality community. Our aim for the comming year is to make it better if we can — and we can."

THE HONORS WENT to R.W. "Rocky" Taylor and constable Dewey Braswell for their service behind the scenes in contributing to Andrews' success. Taylor copped the Mesquite Burners award as the outstanding member of that local organization while Braswell received the highest honor of all: the 1982 Community Service Award for contributing to the progress of Andrews and improving the quality of living.

"Our honoree tonight has created a gigantic mound of good will for himself, his church and the chamber by his little everyday acts of good deeds," said James Roberts in presenting the award to Braswell. "He's been working behind the scenes in Andrews for a long time...This man does daily what most of us would like to but manage to only a few times a year...He's our chamber's most active, most consistent worker. He does deeds of kindness in every facet for the people of our community."

The sense of humor — that quality which enables members of a community to share together and shove aside the idle worries confronting all persons — was provided by James "Doc" Blakely of Wharton. Through his look at life and its eccentricities, he broke down the barriers of creed and religion, age and tradition in unifying the captivated audience.

Humor, to Blakely, is apparent in most aspects of life — even those which cause a few winces at the time. He recalled just such an occasion when he tried his hand at bullriding a few years ago in Taft.

HE BEGAN having second thoughts, he recounted, when a cowboy gave him myriad instructions on how to hold boot, leg, arm, hand, torso, neck. "A Buddhist monk couldn't think up more tortuous positions," he said. "But when I was all set I clung to that bull and stayed on for a full eight-second ride — then they opened the gate."

It was just his luck, said Blakely, to be atop a "spinner" — and the ultimate result was airplane flight without the airplane. Upon striking the turf, he said, "my bottom jaw scooped up a trench about six inches, and I had a vision of a Biblical passage: 'The meek shall inherit the earth.'"

Upon hearing a "motivating sound" behind him — the bellowing of the bull — his vision vanished and he sought to out-pole vault Bruce Jenner to the top of the arena wall.

He didn't make it. "He hooked me right in the snuff can and I ended up in the third row in the lap of an old maid with bony knees," he said.

Along with a multitude of quips (Son: "Mom, how do lions kiss?" Mother: "I don't know — your father's a Rotarian."), Blakely's funny bone touched upon religion and its denominational quirks.

"LET ME TELL you, if you can't get in anything else on this earth, go to the Methodist Church," he said. "But you know, people think Baptists are so strict they'll never change."

Both of the denominations, he said, have similar rules but slightly different philosophies. "Baptists say don't drink," he said. "Methodists say if you do drink, don't stagger, and if you do stagger, don't fall, and if you do fall, for gosh sakes, fall face down so nobody'll recognize you."

But there was one occasion in Duvall County, said Blakely, in which Baptists were forced to change their diehard rule of immersion. A "terrible drought" struck, he explained, and the city council asked the Baptist Church to quit wasting so much water dunking people in a horse trough. The church deacons finally agreed — on the condition that other denominations make concessions as well.

"For the duration of the drought," said the author of books on humor, "Baptists stopped immersing and start sprinkling. Methodists used a damp cloth. Catholics dry-cleaned. And the Presbyterians were just takin' 'em dirty."

During World War II, he said, a couple of allied soldiers were trapped in a foxhole behind enemy lines. Bombs were exploding in close proximity, the chatter of German soldiers was growing louder and fear reigned supreme. One man turned to the other, suggest-

Pupil population derived from several sources

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

"Last year was easy — everything grew. This year, it's a dichotomy — some are growing and others are not growing."
— Payton Cook

It's an annual routine followed in order to provide enough staffing, space and material for the students of the Midland Independent School District. Although the thought of computing student enrollment projections, birth rates and population growths may seem intimidating to the average person who has trouble balancing the checkbook once a month, the mounds of material piled on Payton Cook's desk are just part of the job.

In constantly evaluating pupil population, Cook, MISD's director of pupil and community services, said reports, charts, statistics and advice are utilized from several different sources. No matter how confusing or contradictory the different accounts are, the district nevertheless seems to hit the actual figures pretty close with its partially presumptuous projections.

Presently, the district is on the verge of plunging deep into the waters of technology by considering the possibility of going to a system-wide computer. According to Cook, administrators now are able to obtain students' names, addresses and grade levels on specific streets. However, the entire process of bus routes, attendance boundaries and current enrollments could more easily be done through a computer, he said.

IT SHOULD beat the pin map system.

For the past six or seven years, two women have lugged a large map of the school district home with them and, over a weekend, proceeded to stick pins along the streets and in the rural areas designating students' residents.

It is a tedious project and, because it is done only once a year in October, doesn't reflect Midland's changing growth areas accurately during the entire year.

The pin map, along with weekly enrollment reports, compiled by teachers every day, are only two factors in projecting future enrollments, Cook said.

"This is just something we do every year. It's a routine thing the board requires us to do and that's particularly true when there is a possibility of a bond isue or when they're trying to decide if additional space will be needed.

"We're constantly evaluating the pupil population growth," he continued. "The enrollment report that is done every week is used basically as a running tab on what's happening school by school, grade by grade."

EVERY JANUARY, a report pertaining to past, present and future enrollments is worked up and presented to the board of trustees. This year's report, presented at a regular board meeting Tuesday, included four comparisons: actual enrollments in January 1982 and January 1983; projected enrollments for 1982-83 and actual enrollment in January 1983; projected enrollments for 1982-83 and actual enrollment in January 1982; and actual enrollments in January 1983 and projected enrollments for October 1983.

Cook explained that statistical trends also are used in the computations. Data from various companies, such as The First National Bank of Midland's Economic Activity Report and publications dealing with population trends across the state and the country, are used.

The entire process of computing enrollments for projection purposes began in the mid-1950s when Midland was experiencing a rapid growth, he said. The formulas used by the district since then are variations of the equation developed by one of the school board members and his engineering firm at that time. According to Cook, the formula works well when projecting short-range growths. However, he added, "it kind of fades out after a few years.

"IF YOU USE the technique and really go through it carefully and in great detail, the predictions for one year are really accurate. If you go past that, they tend to be really exaggerated," he added. "We're interested in the upcoming year because of the need to staff and budget accurately. But the board and the community need to know the long range because they need a lot of leeway before, for example, building a new senior high."

A preliminary projection is made in October and presented to the board before the Christmas break. It is updated in January.

"From October 8, (1982) through January 13, we have basically half of the school year and a third of the year," Cook said. "It's fairly simple to compute the annual growth period on what happened during that time.

"The assumption is, the projection made in October is still valid. But the trouble is when you look at what

Jury deadlocked in deciding theft case

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Jurors who found themselves in a deadlock Thursday night in trying to decide the guilt or innocence of a 23-year-old Odessa woman charged with theft and with trying to cover up the alleged pilferage by altering computer records were ordered by 142nd State District Court Judge Pat Baskin to resume their deliberations today.

The jury had pondered the case's issues for about three hours Thursday afternoon when the jury foreman handed the bailiff a note indicating that the jurors could not agree on a verdict. But the presiding judge suggested that the jurors continue their deliberations into the night and after they had snacked on fried chicken and the trimmings. They deliberated the case for about three additional hours and still could not agree on a unanimous verdict.

At issue in the case is whether or not Lori Reese had stolen $455.85 in cash on July 14 from Cox Marketing, a subsidiary of Taco Villa at Midland Regional Airport. She had been a clerk at Cox Marketing for about two years but resigned that month to give birth.

About two months later, Cox Marketing executive Robert "Bob" Barnes, telephoned her and suggested that she and her attorney meet with him and his attorney, according to testimony in the trial.

The company apparently had been plagued by inner-office theft for some-time. By inference, Ms. Reese also was accused but not charged with stealing $196.58 on June 18 and $363.35 on July 7.

The state, via its prosecutor, Janet Copeland, built its case on circumstantial evidence.

"THERE'S NO DISPUTE...except who did it," said Ms. Copeland, an assistant district attorney. "The only dispute is that Lori Reese did the misapplication (of more than $1,000 in funds). Nobody actually saw Lori Reese take the money," she admitted. "The state has proved that no one else could have taken the money.

Among other witnesses, the state used the testimony of Melissa Grimes, Cox's office manager whom defense attorney Jim Bobo of Odessa described as the office's "hound dog in this ordeal," Belinda Notgrass, a Cox clerk; and Barnes to bolster its circumstantial-evidence case against the defendant.

The defense attorney noted that "credibility is an issue" in the case and said that the state's purpose in mentioning the additional missing funds not in the charge was to propose that "where's there smoke, there's fire."

Outside the presence of the jury, Bobo questioned Barnes on his confronting Ms. Reese two months after she had resigned from the job to have her baby. Barnes said he did not approach Ms. Reese on the theft in mid-July although talk of thievery apparently was rife in the office.

BOBO ASKED BARNES why he did not confront the clerk with the accusation in July.

"At the time, Lori was pregnant, and we didn't want to jeopardize the baby's position, primarily," he replied. In addition, Barnes said he wanted to be discreet about the matter to avoid a possible libel or slander suit.

After talking to Sheriff Dallas Smith's office and District Attorney Vern Martin's staff, Barnes said the district attorney advised him "to contact Lori and try to work out" restitution if the former clerk would admit to the theft.

Bobo suggested that Barnes, in accusing Ms. Reese of the theft, was looking for someone to accuse and to take to court as "an example" to deter future inner-office stealing.

After the Barnes-to-Ms. Reese September telephone call, the defendant contacted Bobo, who in turned met with Barnes and his attorney on Sept. 28 "to discuss a settlement" and, "specifically," said Barnes, "to give her a chance to pay back the money."

"If she paid the money," Bobo asked Barnes, "you would not prosecute?"

"I don't think we ever got that far," the Cox Marketing executive said.

Bobo asked Barnes if the company was seeking a "signed confession of guilt regarding the monies" which had been missing from the office.

"WE WANTED an admission that she actually took the money," said Barnes, who further explained that the company wanted Ms. Reese to sign a form which would release the company from any liability should the issue of libel or slander crop up.

Bobo then surmised that Cox Marketing didn't want the money back but rather really "wanted to make an example of her."

Barnes responded that the company's policy was to detect stolen funds and to prosecute in order to deter further office pilferage.

"We were willing to prosecute (by September)," Barnes said. "The baby had already been born."

Barnes charged that the defense attorney had interpreted the confrontation with Ms. Reese as a "threat" — pay the missing funds, admit guilt and sign an admission of thievery.

"The way you worded it," Barnes told Bobo, "it sounded like a threat, and I don't believe it was a threat."

"I specifically said my client would not sign anything like that," Bobo said he told Barnes on Sept. 28.

In his closing argument, Bobo told the jurors that "You better believe that the heat was on" Ms. Reese.

"I'm proud that that young lady took the (witness) stand," Bobo noted, "and said 'I didn't do it.'"

MMH forced to combat loss of Medicare dollars

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

Midland Memorial Hospital has gone through a significant financial improvement, but because the government plans to tighten its money belt, there will be a demand to do a better job, according to Arthur Andersen & Company representatives.

Randy Kurtz, representing Andersen & Co., gave MMH a "significant improvement" grade on its 1981-1982 financial audit at the MMH board of trustees and directors meeting Thursday. He also explained that the Tax Equity Fiscal Responsibility Act (TEFRA) of 1982 will force MMH along with hospitals nationwide to scramble this year for lost dollars.

TEFRA, enacted in October 1982, is a three-year budget and tax package that will reduce nationwide Medicare costs by $12.5 billion with a $2 billion reduction this year.

"You will have to have more productivity and control expenses," Kurtz said. "Overall, the government is going to reduce the amount of dollars it will spend on Medicare reimbursement. It could be $500,000 that you will not receive in the coming year. The money you got last year, you will not get this year."

According to Ray Branson, MMH president, MMH will combat its expected $500,000 reimbursement loss through increasing productivity, reducing payroll, shortening the patients' length of stay, scrutinizing new services and programs and providing more services on an outpatient basis.

In other board news, trustees discussed the 1981-82 audit, the annual trustee evaluation and the chemical dependency facility.

According to Kurtz, MMH's "accounting systems and personnel are in place — there's been remarkable improvement. Obviously there is a lot more to do, but (comparing) this year to last year (1982-1981) there are significant improvements in the accounting procedures and internal controls."

One area where there has been improvement is in the days of revenue, or the number of days it takes to collect on a bill. Kurtz said "two years ago, it took 90 days to collect on a bill. They (MMH) set a goal of 70 days and met that goal, and now they (MMH) are looking at 60 to 65 days which would give them a month's worth of cash they can use."

Kurtz pointed out that in 1981 Arthur Andersen cited 41 accounting procedures that needed attention, but this year there will be 20 with only nine referring to 1981's 41.

Kurtz explained that MMH is "carrying a significant amount of bad debts compared to hospitals of the same size. The challenge now is operations as it relates to staffing, general expenses and TEFRA."

According to Ray Moudy, trustee, although MMH's bad debts for December totaled $205,349, December recoveries totaled $127,144.

"There were two incidents that contributed to this (collection)," Moudy

MMH board approves expansion project consultant

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

Midland County Hospital District board of directors approved an investment bank firm as financial consultant for its proposed 77-bed expansion Thursday.

In other business, the board considered the financial statements and paid bills.

Because the sluggish economy could hinder funding for MMH's $15 million proposed 77-bed expansion, the directors pursued alternative financing for the project. On Nov. 11, 1982 four investment bankers — First Southwest Co. of Dallas, Shearson American Express Inc., Rauscher Pierce Refsnes Inc., and E.F. Hutton Co. Inc. — submitted bond proposals to the five publicly-elected directors. Also, Howard Weil-Merrill Lynch gave a presentation at a later date.

Thursday the board made a decision. First Southwest Co. of Dallas, the lowest bidder, was chosen as the district's financial consultant for the expansion. First Southwest will charge the hospital $66,675 for a general obligation bond issue, or $120,010 if the directors should elect to fund the project with revenue bonds. No decision on the type of financing has been made.

According to Ray Branson, MMH president, the expansion program is more urgent than the $3.4 million state-approved chemical dependency facility; therefore, financing arrangements for the expansion were made. On March 4, the Texas Health Facilities Commission is expected to hand down its decision on the certificate of need for the expansion.

In other financial business, the directors paid MMH $71,815.71 and $22,804.36 to Lubbock General for December's indigent care. The directors also paid $1,236 to the City of Midland for computer services, $207 to the Midland County Tax Appraisal Board for a bill it paid for a newspaper notice of the tax rate, and $1,241 to Ted Kerr for legal services.

Directors approved MMH's second quarter $177,000 capital equipment list, $60,000 for physician-recommended equipment and $60,000 if the Midland Memorial Foundation is unable to raise the remaining funds for radiology equipment. In addition a bid for physical therapy equipment was accepted for $6,595.

The directors also reviewed December's financial statement. According to Dale Miller, MMH vice president of finance, gross patient revenues totaled $2,382,161, and exceeded budget by $66,795. Total expenses were $2,212,986, and were $43,069 over budget. The net loss from operations after interest and depreciation was $81,793 compared with a budgeted $93,768 loss, a favorable variance of $11,975. Salaries and benefits exceeded the budget by $76,328, a result of FTE's being over budget and overtime exceeding budget by 3.6 percent. Referrals to collectors totaled $205,349, for December, bringing the 1982 bad debt to $854,494.

said. "An attempt was successful in settling a two-year-old claim, recovering $50,000 of an $88,000 bill. In another bill, an individual voluntarily paid $20,000 on his daughter's bill. This is a very unusual occurrence."

Turning to the status of MMH's state-approved $3.4 million chemical dependency facility, Eugene Abbott, trustee, said that the results of a declaratory ruling by the Texas Health Facilities Commission will not be announced until Feb. 8. The ruling will determine if MMH should "show intent" in constructing the facility. MMH is indirectly involved in a suit filed by American Medical Corp., Parkview Hospital's owner, which was denied a certificate of need for a similar facility.

Because Abbott said MMH attorneys have advised the hospital to "achieve development in case they (THFC) determine the clock has been running," MMH will have to settle the question of land and financing of the chemical dependency facility by Feb. 9.

In a self-evaluation of the board of trustees, several areas need improvement, according to Roy Campbell, trustee who presented the results of the evaluation to the board.

The evaluation results included:

—A lack of women, ethnic and racial minorities on the board.

—A low score in board orientation and information on legal responsibilities.

—A high endorsement of educational programs for the board.

—A high score in the hospital's mission statement.

—A lack of committee reviews in the area of goals and action plans.

—An uneasiness about responsibilities of making decisions on medical staff appointments.

—A lack of comfort on communications with the community.

—A need for more feedback from the medical staff about board decisions.

In board action, the trustees approved the utilization review plan, which is a change in the methods of reviewing Medicaid patients' records. According to John Holt, MMH vice president of quality assurance, the plan is a response to Medicaid directives. The utilization review committee, composed of physicians, will begin reviewing every Medicaid patient record every three days, as opposed to reviewing the records on average length of stay for a particular diagnosis.

"Overall, its a move to review the records more frequently," Holt said.

MMH board discusses new CAT scan

And that's the message Ray Branson, Midland Memorial Hospital president, gave the board of directors Thursday in a discussion requesting the purchase a $1.2 million total body fourth generation computerized axial tomography (CAT) scan.

MMH's head scan, which was updated to a "second generation" full body CAT scan last year, has become obsolete. With MMH facing the loss of about $500,000 in Medicare reimbursement funds this year, productivity is high on the list of priorities to make up the dollars. According to Branson, MMH could make more money if it had the most modern "fourth generation" CAT scan.

Branson said physicians who ordered CAT scan tests for patients asked him to approach the board about the purchase. Currently, most patients needing a body scan must leave Midland for the diagnostic test which is a non-invasive radiologic technique, utilizing a computerized X-ray machine to obtain a clear, cross-sectional view of the body. Branson said the fourth generation CAT scan is 10 to 20 times faster than MMH's second generation CAT scan, which requires patients to lie still, holding their breath for some 50 seconds.

"Ours can't diagnose, for example, the back," Branson said. "Right now we have to use invasive procedures for (the diagnosis of) a milligram."

Branson said the fourth generation CAT scan would be "extremely beneficial to those patients at the Allison (cancer) Center in detecting soft tumors." He added that physicians were "more than willing to talk to the board members" about the purchase.

"As far as I know there is not a fourth generation CAT scan in the Permian Basin," he said. "I think Lubbock has one. Some patients are going to Dallas, but most of our patients are now going to Odessa, where they have a slightly more sophisticated CAT scan than ours."

Branson said a pre-application was filed with the Texas Health Facilities Commission, but a certificate of need (CON) must be filed before June 30. A certificate of need is required by the state for any equipment exceeding $600,000.

Branson said he anticipates that the request will be a "streamline CON process" because "it is a replacement and it is possible to get a declaratory ruling" from the THFC that will allow the purchase. Branson said he is not sure how the $1.2 million CAT scan would be funded. "We expect to fund it out of operations," Branson said. "But it's not unusual to attach a piece of equipment to a bond issue...and we accept donations."

ing that his companion lead them in a prayer as "I've never belonged to an organized religious group — I'm a Church of Christ."

THE SECOND soldier, while noting that he was an agnostic, nevertheless volunteered to pray. "I used to live next door to a Catholic Church and I used to hear 'em pray a lot," said the man. "I think I can still remember it."

Kneeling in the foxhole, said Blakely, the man bowed his head and reverently repeated: "Under 'B'...Seven! 'I'...thirty-eight!"

Blakely noted that every community — Andrews not excepted — has its ecumenical council, in which the priests, preachers and rabbis "rent a room at the Holiday Inn to study the world's problems. You know what they do? They play poker."

Recounting a story of a gambling raid on just such an ecumenical "meeting", Blakely said an officer barged in and asked in order a Baptist preacher, Catholic priest and Jewish rabbi if he had been gambling.

"And you," said the officer to the rabbi, "have you been gambling?"

"With who?" he replied.

If the characteristics which made the annual banquet a success — wit, creativity, responsibility and unification — are retained in this city during the coming year, it seems likely those directors will see a continuation of a "community of quality."

Travis Elementary School grew from 641 students in October 1982 to 675 students this month. "That means Travis is still growing fairly rapidly," he explained. "So we feel that the projection done in October is no longer valid to Travis. So we do another one."

HE POINTED OUT that Burnet Elementary School had an October enrollment of 730 students which declined to 711 in January.

"Last year was easy — everything grew," he said with a sigh. "This year, it's a dichotomy — some are growing and others are not growing."

Even the most trustworthy formulas and ratios for predicting growth trends and patterns are useless when a city such as Midland has such a sporadic population movement, he said.

For example, Cook said October is usually a period of peak enrollments. Various factors contribute to this, such as the number of migrant families who move back to Midland after the summer season ends.

"Those families who follow the agriculture — Midland seems to have a lot more than people realize — but many of them don't make the whole migration trail and that threw us off at first. It is harder to identify those than it is to identify those that do follow the migration trail. Those kids are actually here (in town) but they just don't enroll in school for about two or three months (after school has begun)."

ALSO, COOK pointed out, a general decline in local activity seems to appear at a specific time.

"For some reason, there seems to be a slowing down in the period of time between October and the end of the year," he said. "Companies may have exceeded budgets and may be laying off people. The slowdown is related to the economy of the area — to which it did not apply during the last three years. But during other years, we reached a peak in October and that seems to be returning this year."

Total district enrollment in October 1982 was 17,899; this month it is 17,625.

Although a district-wide trend usually can be predicted, the changes within the different grades are another variable kept in mind while projecting enrollments.

High school enrollment levels usually decline during the first semester because of mid-term graduates and drop-outs. On the other hand, most high school students rarely move to another school during the year, he said.

There is usually an increase in enrollments between kindergarten and first grade, he continued, reasoning that some children do not attend kindergarten or attend a private kindergarten before enrolling in public first grade. There also is a big growth factor between sixth and seventh grades because of students coming into the public schools from the private schools. Cook said usually 75 to 100 more students enroll in the junior highs every year.

THE PROJECTED increase in student enrollment, which ran as high as 10 percent during the last few years, is less than 3 percent for 1983-84, Cook said. Because fewer families are expected to move into the district, the move-in factor will be small. However, the roll-up factor, or the number of students currently in the district who will move up into the next grade, still will be taken into account.

The formula used in projecting roll- up enrollment is total present enrollment minus the number of graduating seniors plus the projected number of kindergarten students.

Birth rates, used in projecting kindergarten enrollments, don't always take everything into account, Cook cautioned. For example, the children of women born during the baby boom in the mid-1950s would be entering kindergarten next year if they were born when their mothers were around 20 years old. While that has been the trend in the past, times are changing.

"If that's typical of the whole nation, then it can happen here," Cook said. "But in Midland, it may be exaggerated bacause of the move-in of younger families.

"There are a number of things that change," he continued. "Women now are waiting later to have their first child. People just don't follow mathematical patterns. Just when you get all of the buildings built, there is a decline in enrollment. And just as soon as you think you should tear a school down and make it into a park or something — this kind of thing happens.

However, without the aid of computers in which to input present growth trends, the manual system that has been used will have to suffice.

"This technique has served us particularly well up to this point," he added. "The ratios work just beautifully statistically, but they fail to take into account what is going on right now. All we can do is make a projection — and then hope they come out right.

"In most instances, we've come close enough so that the principals can have adequate staff," he said, adding that he couldn't recall missing a total enrollment projection by more than 5 percent. "It's a whole lot better than a wild guess — even though it is not that sophisticated statistically."

Man sentenced to 10 years for assault

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

A 31-year-old ex-convict who turned down a five-year prison term under a district attorney's plea-bargaining agreement and who opted to plead guilty to aggravated assault with a pool cue and let the jury set punishment was meted a 10-year prison term by a jury in Midland's 238th State District Court on Thursday.

The man, Pierce Leonard Johnson Jr., had been charged with hitting Darrold Lynn Hunt on the head with a cue stick last Oct. 9 on the parking lot of an eastside bar. He admitted his guilt to the six-man, six-woman jury, and then elected to have the jury set his punishment, which could have ranged between two years and 20 years in the state penitentiary and which could have included a fine to up to $5,000. Due to a prior conviction, he was not eligible for probation.

In its almost 1½ hours of deliberation on the punishment phase of the trial, the jury had submitted two questions to the presiding judge, Judge Vann Culp.

"How long was defendant incarcerated in Huntsville — actual month?" a note from the jury foreman read.

Johnson had served time in the Texas Department of Corrections beginning in 1980 after he had pleaded guilty to aggravated assault with serious bodily injury by wielding a knife on April 23, 1979, and injuring Vernell Cooks. The original charge had been "attempted murder" but was reduced to the assault charge. He was sentenced to three years in prison.

The court's reply to the jury's query was: "The court, under the law, is not permitted to answer the question..."

In general, a prisoner will serve at least a third of his court-ordered sentence before he is paroled. But a jury is not to consider how much actual time an inmate may spend in prison. That is determined by the Texas State Board of Pardons and Paroles.

The jurors, who apparently were considering levying a fine on Johnson, submitted another question to the judge but decided not to impose a fine evidently after they figured the court could not enforce collection of the fine. The question was: "If a fine is imposed, must it be paid before the prisoner is released and from what sources?"

"Ladies and Gentlemen," the judge responded in writing, "the answer to your question is 'no.' "

The case was prosecuted by Assistant District Attorney Bill Cooper. Defending Johnson was Midland lawyer Ralph Noyes.

As the jurors filed from the courtroom after settling on the 10-year prison term, they looked straight ahead, didn't even glance at the unsmiling defendant, and no one on either side of the case said "thank you" to the jurors or shook their hands. The judge, however, did thank the jurors for their service to the community and noted that their daily jury-duty pay had been increased from $6 to $10.

Burglary suspects caught in the act

ODESSA — Two suspects were in custody today after police allegedly caught them in the act of burglarizing an Odessa business establishment early this morning.

Municipal Court Judge Otis Moore set bonds of $3,000 each on 22-year-old Robert Kidd Jr. and Ralph E. LaGrone, 22, both of Odessa. They are charged with breaking into the Deluxe Party Sales Co. at 610 N. Grandview Ave.

Officer R.J. Hammerman said he was on routine patrol in the 600 block of Grandview about 2:45 a.m. when he received word that two men were on the roof of the company. Arriving back-up officers surrounded the building and the two men were captured without incident.

Two money bags containing about $600 in cash were found on the roof and loose change was scattered on the floor inside the building, according to police, who said one of the suspects also had 18 gold beads on his person when he was searched prior to being jailed.

Bank robbers get away in stolen car

ODESSA — Two men who held up an Odessa bank Thursday afternoon apparently got away in a car one of them had commandeered from a woman at Permian Mall earlier in the day.

According to police, two men armed with a .45-caliber automatic entered the Odessa Savings and Loan Association at 2701 West County Road about 1:50 p.m. Thursday and announced, "This is a holdup."

One of the men stayed in the lobby while the other went behind the counter and then into an office, where he grabbed about $400 in rolled coins from a safe.

Both men, who were wearing stockings over their hair but not their faces, fled out a rear door.

Witnesses told police they saw the men leave the area in an older model white car. Shortly before the robbery, an Odessa woman reported her white 1977 Oldsmobile Cutlass was taken from her at gunpoint on the mall parking lot by a man who said "not to worry" because he would return the car "unharmed" later.

The car was recovered this morning about two blocks away from the bank. An investigation is continuing.

Retired trooper named Special Ranger

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Retired Department of Public Safety trooper Bert Cornelius of Midland has been accorded the honor of being named Special Ranger for the famed Texas Rangers, it was announced Thursday.

Cornelius, 57, recently retired after 28 years with the DPS and will serve in the honorary Ranger post until January 1985, when his term expires. There are currently 192 retired DPS officers in the state who are commissioned as Special Texas Rangers.

Reverend reports theft of weapons

In burglary complaints to city police during the past 24 hours, the Rev. F.W. Johnson of 2208 California Ave. said assorted weapons and change worth a total of $1,392 were taken in a break-in at his residence. Entry was gained through a bedroom window.

And Macel Wilson, 3517 Hyde Park, told officers a TV set and jewelry vauled at $900 were stolen from her home after someone broke a bedroom window to gain entry.

Canine Unit to be at mall

The Canine Unit of the Midland Police Department is scheduled to appear at Midland Park Mall today and Saturday in conjunction with the "Safety's Sake" program being sponsored by the Mall.

Officers of the unit will cover areas of pet care and how to avoid being bitten. The officers also will outline the use of dogs in police work and will demonstrate "bite work" with their animals.

Demonstrations are scheduled for 2 p.m. and 4 p.m. on both days in the court area of the Sears store in the mall.

Author: This is 'Heyday of Neurotics'

By JOY HOROWITZ
Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

He won't step on a crack; there's the lingering fear he'll discover his mother writhing in back pain. He won't cross his eyes, even in jest; there's the childhood fear that they'll stay that way. And he won't assume anything but the worst, having learned early in life that fantasy beats the real thing.

A champion and chronicler of the modern-day neurotic's tics and foibles, Charles Monagan says most people these days are neurotic. In fact, Monagan explains in "The Neurotic's Handbook" (Atheneum: $5.95), the Age of Normalcy has been replaced by the Era of the Neurotic.

"It was not so long ago," he writes, "that most people were normal." But, Monagan suggests, time propelled us into a period he calls "the neurotic's heyday" — when "there were no good men around, no decent women, no leaders, no juicy tomatoes."

On an individual level, the transition from being normal to becoming neurotic can be traced to sources in the home, Monagan says. Empty ice trays. Just missing the telephone. Referring to last week's TV listings. Running out of toilet paper. Getting tuna fish in the mayonnaise. No pens or pencils that work (and nothing to write on) when you have to take an important phone message. No towels in the bathroom, particularly after you showered and when someone knocks at the front door.

But those are just the annoyances at home. What about choosing the wrong line at banks or grocery stores, Monagan asks. What about the fact that crazy people seem to be drawn to you? What about the person seated behind you at the movies who has come to the theater not to watch the film "but rather to rotate the contents of six paper bags"? What about driving behind someone who has the directional blinker blinking but doesn't turn?

"THE MAIN IDEA HERE is that we're all in this thing together," says Monagan, who views his treatise as "a guide and a comfort."

"We all have trouble getting through the day from time to time. The book will help. If you just pick it up and read it, for example, there's two or three hours killed right there."

In a telephone interview from his home in the Connecticut suburb of Wolcott ("It's isolated enough here so all my neurotic tendencies can reign"), Monagan was quick to point out that he is no authority on the subject, "just a writer who's written a humorous book."

The 32-year-old author, who is the eldest of five children and the son of a former Connecticut congressman, said that being a politician's son may have promoted his fantasy life and neuroses.

"I was a real shy kid when I was small," he said. "We were paraded around on each campaign as part of the normal electoral process. I found that to be excruciating. I would sit and fantasize about all sorts of situations. I still do."

Monagan's fantasies have become the centerpiece of "The Neurotic's Handbook." From an elaborate description of how to get your shoes on at the beach without getting sand in them to Monagan's own "Neurotic's Hall of Fame" — including Ludwig van Beethoven, the 1978 Boston Red Sox, Sigmund Freud and Lucy Ricardo — he offers sympathetic and sometimes gut-busting insight into the normal-to-neurotic passages in life.

NEUROTIC BEHAVIOR, Monagan believes, dates back to infancy and time spent in the playpen, "a shortened form of play-penitentiary...meant to teach us early on that too much fun is a bad thing and that there always is someone who knows better than we do."

The fundamental building blocks of anxiety (which is "just another word for nothing much to do"), Monagan said, are distrust, fantasy, insecurity and guilt. Distrust is created by the pacifier; fantasy is spurred by stuffed animals; insecurity is developed as a result of the "security" blanket — "later given up in favor of gin" — and guilt derives from the rigors of toilet training.

In childhood, the young neurotic is "nothing if not resourceful," says Monagan, and develops imaginary friends who fall into Monagan's scheme of the world somewhere between stuffed animals and gin. Stitches, of course, "bespeak a life that is at least slightly reckless and nonconformist and therefore desirable; the more stitches the better," and a tonsillectomy is "the medical nirvana for the child neurotic."

For teen-agers: "Neurosis is the natural state for teen-agers to be in" because "(1) the whole world is against them, (2) just about everything parents say and do is a hideous embarrassment and (3) teen-agers begin to experience powerful yearnings no longer satisfied by Saturday morning cartoons on TV, so girls mistakenly take up horseback riding and boys go for fast cars."

In college: "The all-nighter is a neurotic exercise that combines Kafkaesque despair with the tension of the Cuban Missile Crisis."

As for the young adult neurotic: "It used to be said that if a man had not found a proper niche in society by age 30 he was likely to be a shiftless ne'er-do-well and a bounder, and that if a woman had not found a husband by that time she was doomed to spinsterhood in the most chilling, Agnes Moorehead sort of way. Now, it seems, such opinions are not so widely aired. Neurotics know, however, that people secretly still believe them to be true."

BASICALLY, MONAGAN SAYS, if you haven't got things figured out by age 30, you never will. "If you still can't open a bag of potato chips without using your teeth, how are you going to pick apart the subtleties of the cosmos?" he asks. The only significant thing about turning 30, he adds, is that "outwardly neurotic buzzwords such as 'humungous' and 'gross' and 'teeny-weeny' have been dropped."

Lest there by any doubt in your mind as to whether you are neurotic, Monagan offers some checkpoints. One key neurotic trait, for example, is hoarding things — in closets, in basements, in kitchen drawers. In a section entitled "Big Money in Your Spare Time," he suggests that neurotic hoarders try collecting sugar packets, paper place mats and drink stirrers, the kind that say, "This is a swanky joint."

Beyond topics such as neatness, insisting on using your own coffee cup, hypochondria, dating and crossword puzzles, Monagan points to the two favorite rooms of the neurotic: the bedroom and the kitchen.

In the bedroom, early rising is always a problem. "If neurotics have to get up particularly early in the morning they will set the alarm clock, check it again 10 minutes later to make sure it is set, wake up in the middle of the night to check it again (and make sure the electricity hasn't gone off) and then wake up two minutes before the alarm was set to ring anyway."

Wright advises foster group home advisory board

Charles Wright, administrator of Texas Baptist Children's Home in Round Rock, and Mrs. Johnnie Dickson, institutional licensing representative from the Department of Human Resources, meet with the Midland Foster Group Home Advisory Board of Directors Tuesday to provide consultation and interpretation of minimum standards for operating a child care facility and for licensing foster homes.

The Midland Foster Group Home is an emergency shelter/foster group home which is a joint project of the Midland Junior League, First Baptist Church of Midland and Texas Baptist Children's Home. It is designed to serve abused and/or neglected area children who are temporarily homeless.

Recruitment for area foster family homes was initiated. Families are needed to provide temporary care for children of all ages in their homes. Primary emphasis, however, will be placed on providing emergency care for infants and pre-school age children who have been abused, neglected or abandoned. Foster parents will be licensed and supervised by Texas Baptist Children's Home. A small monthly stipend is available to help defer the cost of care for the child.

The Midland Foster Group Home is chaired by Charlie Dodd. Vice chairman is Mrs. Loren Bryant; Mrs. Robert Donnelly is secretary and Dave Leonard treasurer. Committee chairmen include Mrs. Bruce McKague, site selection; Mrs. Mike Bradford, licensing; and Mrs. John Greer, publicity.

Anyone interested in providing financial support for the project or becoming a foster parent can call 682-1646 for more information.

Baltimore's Keswick Home marks 100th anniversary

By CHRISTOPHER SULLIVAN
Associated Press Writer

BALTIMORE (AP) — The term incurable has lost fashion in the century since a $10 donation and a notion born of the "Victorian enlightenment" led to the founding of Baltimore's Home for Incurables.

"It's a word, I think, of despair," says Virgil Halbert, director of the institution, which today is also called the Keswick Home.

Since its founding in 1883, and despite some troubled periods, the private, non-profit home has belied its despairing name, Halbert said.

"With all of the problems of the chronically ill, it's a light place," says home volunteer Frances Meginnis.

Early patients were often stooped with polio or birth defects.

Among the 216 there now, a visitor sees the bent form of a young man whose wheelchair bears a tiny license plate saying, "Eddie," along with dozens of others whose incurable ailments include old age.

"Think of those ... whose weary eyes have only had blank walls before them, and whose days have been passed in helpless illness and suffering," said an 1886 pamphlet produced by the home's founders, the Hospital Relief Association of Maryland.

Describing its work of decorating walls with paintings, installing and stocking bookshelves and visiting the crippled and aged patients, the report said, "Picture the change and advantage of it to them."

When the Hospital Relief Association was established in 1880, conditions of treatment for many hospital poor or critical patients were "deplorable," said Ms. Meginnis, who has served as historian for the institution.

In England, similar conditions were leading to the formation of aid groups and treatment centers. Writer Charles Dickens helped found the Royal Hospital and Home for the Incurables near London in 1857.

"We are the product of a movement that was imported from England," Halbert said. Ms. Meginnis called the period "the Victorian enlightenment."

Until about a decade ago, 70 percent of those at the Baltimore Home for Incurables — called "inmates" in old records — were indigent cases, Halbert said. Now, the figure is about one-third, he said.

Families previously paid a one-time fee of $150 and the patient's possessions would be bequeathed to the home in exchange for indefinite care — a faulty policy, in Halbert's view.

"It was an open invitation to families to abandon their disabled and crippled," he said. "Out of sight, out of mind."

When he arrived as director in 1953, Halbert met a woman patient who had been in the home since 1893. She had arrived as a little girl who could not walk.

The home operated under a cloud of controversy at the time of his arrival — with benefactors questioning its commitment to rehabilitating patients and the maintenance of its campus-like facilities.

"The place was a mess," said Halbert. "For the first few months I was here, I was sick I'd ever come. I thought I was in the farmhouse that was the Union hospital at Antietam (during the American Civil War)."

He added, "From that great spirit and dedication that had founded the institution, there was a letdown ... In the meantime, there was a lot of progress in medicine."

A consultant's study made numerous recommendations, and a turnaround began, according to the director.

In the 1970s, the home undertook a $7.5 million building program.

It had come a long way since the days early in the century when an annual report listed donations: three pounds of pudding, 24 bottles of whiskey, two gallons of ice cream donated in July, Christmas tree ornaments in December.

Now, on a wall in an activities office of the home a small sign bears the motto: "Those who attempt the ridiculous may achieve the impossible."

Copley News Service

Have you tried these:

TOOTHBRUSH: Use one to clean lint from feed dogs of your machine; to brush up nap on corduroy (old hemline, etc.); to clean lint from inside hem fold, etc.

EYE-DROPPER: Use to remove those marks from water-soluble fabric markers.

SPRAY BOTTLE: To dampen press cloth or areas of garment.

SQUEEZE-WHISTLE ELECTRIC PLUG ATTACHMENT: (I don't know what else to call it!) You can turn on your iron as you sit at your machine, and it will be warm when you are ready for it.

GAUZE DIAPERS: Make great press cloths.

FOOTSTOOL: When you are ready to do hand work, turn your chair away from the machine and put your feet up. Good for your back.

SMALL TRAY: No matter how much we talk to ourselves about it, we still tend to eat and drink at the machine while we work. So often crumbs (which can be greasy) and spills (which can stain) get onto the sewing table. Keep a small tray close by where you can keep your foods and drink. Keeps your sewing area clean and makes it easy to cart everything back to the kitchen.

Manic-depression emotional roller coaster ride

Copley News Service

Sometimes Joe Barbee would spend the entire day in bed. Immobile beneath the sheets, he would be reluctant even to get up to go to the bathroom.

Barbee was a carpenter, a framer and he loved his job. It wasn't because he decided to play hooky from work that he remained frozen beneath the covers. He was too depressed to face the world beyond his bed.

A hulking 6-foot-6 with gray hair and beard, Barbee was the stereotypical "man's man." He loved to ride motorcycles and go to drag races and football games with his buddies. And he could drink beer with the best of them — which he did often.

Sometimes, Barbee remembers, he and his co-workers would start a job — and start in on the beer — at 6 a.m. And the six-packs would keep rolling until they quit work at 4 that afternoon.

Then it was out to a bar "to really get started" drinking.

BARBEE DRANK, like so many people, because drinking made him feel better. And he needed to feel better.

The days he was sober, he found himself morose and frightened. It was on such mornings that he lay paralyzed in bed at home in Chula Vista, Calif.

Barbee, 40, recounts the tale in a voice tinged with terror. The worst was over eight years ago but the memory of the seesaw of drinking and depression are hard to erase from his mind.

After a severe drinking escapade in 1975, he wound up in a Veterans Administration hospital. He was diagnosed as a chronic alcoholic — and as a manic-depressive.

MANIC-DEPRESSION.

It is the roller-coaster ride of mood disorders, one which researchers now believe may be genetically inherited. It also has been designated as "bipolar affective disorder," which sounds "more palatable," and the title reflects the up-and-down moods of the disorder, according to one San Diego psychiatrist.

Some of those who suffer from manic-depression spend their days in deep, dark depression, occasionally surprising their family and friends with bursts of energy and enthusiasm that are frightening.

Sometimes the opposite exists. Much of their days are spent in frenzied activity and actions, with intermittent depressions.

"I just naturally assumed that this was the normal thing — to get SO depressed or SO elated," said Jeffrey Jones, 39, a recovering alcoholic who has been diagnosed manic-depressive.

"Manic-depression is characterized by severe mood swings — very severe," said Dr. James DeLeo, a psychologist who works with those who are both alcoholic and manic-depressive.

Some who are unaware that they are afflicted with manic-depression turn to alcohol to relieve the mental anguish. Some, like Barbee, ultimately become alcoholics, adding a second major problem to their lives.

"Drinking was 'magic' to me; it helped me calm down," said Pat Rudolph, a manic-depressive and recovering alcoholic, who, unlike Barbee, spent more time being manic (up) than depressive (down).

DR. RONALD FIEVE, the psychiatrist who promoted the use of lithium to successfully treat manic-depressives, described the ties between alcoholism and manic-depression in his book "Moodswing."

Fieve wrote that "it has become apparent that alcohol, marijuana, amphetamines and sleeping pills are frequently used by depressed people in our society in an attempt at self-treatment of their mood disorders. Instead of curing the depression, these drugs worsen it and add the dangerous problems of alcoholism and drug addiction."

DeLeo estimates between 5 percent and 12 percent of the alcoholics he counsels at San Diego's Clairemont Neighborhood Recovery Center, an alcoholic rehabilitation program, are manic-depressive.

"Sometimes they try to help themselves and they reach out for the drug that works the quickest and is the most readily available — alcohol," he said.

It is difficult to tell if someone is exhibiting signs of manic-depression when they are alcoholic, DeLeo said, but it is alcoholism which must be dealt with first.

"We have people here who sober up, then three to four months later show symptoms of manic-depression, and we refer them to private or county psychiatrists for help," he said.

DR. JAMES BROPHY sees many of those patients. An associate clinical professor of psychiatry at the University of California at San Diego's School of Medicine, he is a part-time psychiatrist for the county's Mental Health Department.

"I don't have much success with people unless they stop their drinking," he said. "Bipolar affective disorder, like other mood disorders, and alcoholism are linked so highly ... you can't tell the color of something if you're throwing black paint all over the canvas.

"When someone stops drinking, so many of their other problems become rather clear. But under the influence of alcohol, they just don't know what's wrong," he said.

Lithium carbonate is often the prescribed treatment for manic-depressives, stabilizing neurotransmitters in the brain and reducing the frequency and intensity of manic-depression. A salt compound and not a drug, lithium carbonate was approved for public use by the Food and Drug Administration in 1970.

One stumbling block for some manic-depressive-alcoholics is the use of lithium, psychiatrists say. Frequently, counseling through programs like Alcoholics Anonymous is used to first resolve the alcoholism.

But because of AA's unwritten creed against the use of drugs or any substance which could be considered a substitute for alcohol, recovering alcoholics are sometimes reluctant to take or use any sort of pill or medication.

"People become so committed to their sobriety that they don't want to use anything, and that becomes detrimental to someone who is manic-depressive," DeLeo said.

A SPOKESMAN FOR AA said, "There is a feeling among many alcoholics that any kind of substance, unless it is strictly prescribed by doctors, is not necessary because many people are dually addicted."

Both Barbee and Rudolph take lithium daily, although they both know of other manic-depressives who are recovering alcoholics who refuse to take the medication.

Pat Rudolph remembers her highs and shivers.

After the breakup of her first marriage 21 years ago, her life, for the next 12 years, became a nightmare.

She was always somewhat "hyper," she said, but the marriage plunged her into a depression "that was so intolerable, I discovered if I'd drink enough, I could go to sleep and forget my pain."

Rudolph, who was in public relations at the time, obtained a divorce after a year of marriage but she didn't stop drinking. When she wasn't drinking, she was infuriating her dwindling number of clients with her late-night phone calls and her high-pitched invectives, telling them what they should do, demanding, not suggesting.

"Manic people have delusions of grandeur and no proper sense of time," she said. "I'd start making phone calls to people at 3, 4, 5 o'clock in the morning because I could only sleep two hours, not thinking that other people might not appreciate it. I didn't care if they did or not."

SHE WOULD "start eight projects at once and finish none of them. Everything was done with a blaze of glory."

Rudolph, a handsome woman of 57, moved 16 times in five years and had 12 different jobs in the same period of time. She finally flew off to Switzerland on impulse — impulsive behavior is typical for someone who is manic-depressive — not certain what she was going to do but determined to do whatever she ultimately decided on with flash and panache.

She worked for a development firm for awhile, but, like other jobs, "blew it" because of her behavior.

"When you're manic-depressive, you talk more, you dance harder, you sing harder," she said. "Whatever you do, it's inappropriate and exaggerated."

She continued drinking, usually in private. But citizens of the small Swiss town where she lived thought she was drunk in public because of her erratic behavior, as she randomly sought out strangers on the street, "telling them off" in her loud, insistent voice.

After one such escapade, the police took her to a Swiss mental hospital where she spent 10 days.

"When I got out, the first thing I wanted to do was have a drink with the cabdriver," she said. "I was so glad to get out of the hospital."

ICING THE PUCK!

Gordie Howe, a National Hockey League All-Star at age 52, had a career that covered part of five decades. He played from the 1940's to the 1980's.

Goalie Glenn Hall, who played for Detroit and Chicago, played 502 consecutive complete games. His record began in 1955 and was ended by an injury in 1962.

The New York Islanders' Bill Smith is the only goalie to score in a National Hockey League game. According to Figgie International's Sherwood-Drolet division, he accomplished the feat in 1979 against the Colorado Rockies.

Stereotype of Indian denounced as totally false

PROVO, Utah (AP) — Although Buffalo Bill's Wild West Show has been off the entertainment circuit for nearly 100 years, the image of Indians created by the show lingers on — in motion pictures, television shows and textbooks, according to a Brigham Young University professor.

The faulty stereotype of Indians that persists is being examined in a contemporary Indian affairs class taught at BYU by Dr. Janice White Clemmer, assistant professor of American Indian Education and History. Mrs. Clemmer is believed to be the first Indian woman in the United States to earn two doctoral degrees, one in cultural foundations of education and the other in history.

"Images of Indians portrayed in most movies, television shows, cartoons and textbooks stereotype them as the bad guys, perpetuating the same type of negative image which Buffalo Bill's show produced," Mrs. Clemmer said. "Throughout history, the Indians seem to be shown as stumbling blocks for Europeans immigrating to this continent.

"When Indians first appeared in movies, the people in those roles were not Indians," she said. "Most portrayals were negative, and, for the most part, no respectable Indian would play a negative role. Besides, movie makers thought Indians had no talent.

"Indians were not acceptable to play leading roles because the producers didn't believe the public would accept Indians in modern dress," Mrs. Clemmer said. "In some Western movies, all the Indians and non-Indian extras were spray-painted to be one color, and they all had the same type of black wigs and the same basic clothing worn by the Plains or Apache tribes."

Although Indians are not all one color and often a variety of tribes may live on one reservation, movies frequently lead viewers to believe all Indians live and die in Monument Valley, she pointed out.

"Some people are shocked that all Indians are not the same," she said. "One Eastern student in my class even asked if Indians still live in tepees."

The "Indian" look — staid, ferocious, wrapped in a blanket or dressed in beaded buckskin — came into being as the Indians resisted assimilation by the Anglo society early in American history, she said.

"But Indians in early entertainment shows went along with the image for economic reasons," Mrs. Clemmer explained. "As time went on, fancy dancing was developed in these shows because the audiences demanded more exciting dances and many traditional dances are not the reveling or rollicking entertainment non-Indians wanted to see.

"In 1890, however, the government published circulars saying that Indians could not be used in Wild West shows because the shows were unbecoming and dehumanizing. Ironically, we can see similar concepts in recent movies and television shows."

Non-Indians are still being cast in Indian lead roles, she said.

"And most movies giving a positive image of Indians, such as 'Little Big Man,' 'Cheyenne Autumn' and 'Soldier Blue,' don't go far enough today. An exception is the movie 'Three Warriors.' The movie portrayed Indians as real people with problems.

"But with 'Seems Like Old Times' — in which two Indians are shown in trouble with the law, having low morals and drinking problems — the old stereotyping seems to shift back again."

Producers apparently feel Americans are not ready to accept Indians as people with good values and concerns. "They continuously portray Indians as unreal people," Mrs. Clemmer said. "This is a great disservice to all."

She noted that Jay Silverheels, who had the role of Tonto in the Lone Ranger series, tried to upgrade Indians in Hollywood roles, but there weren't enough people with money to support the move.

Macadamia Butterscotch Pie has delightfully unusual flavor

By CECILY BROWNSTONE

MACADAMIA BUTTERSCOTCH PIE

¼ cup butter
¾ cup firmly packed dark brown sugar
¼ cup water
1 tablespoon dark corn syrup
¼ cup cornstarch
½ cup granulated sugar
¼ teaspoon salt
1½ cups milk
2 large egg yolks

8-inch pie shell with a high fluted rim, baked (from homemade pastry or a pie mix)

Heavy cream

In a 1-quart saucepan over low heat, melt butter; add brown sugar, water and corn syrup; stir until sugar melts. Cook over medium heat, without stirring, to 238 degrees on a candy thermometer — about 10 minutes; a teaspoon of the mixture dropped into a bowl of ice-cold water will form a soft ball that flattens on removal from the water. Remove from heat and reserve.

In a heavy 1½-quart saucepan thoroughly stir together cornstarch, granulated sugar and salt; gradually stir in milk, keeping smooth; add egg yolks and stir vigorously until blended. Cook over medium heat, stirring constantly, until mixture is as thick as mayonnaise and boils (sputters) for a minute. Remove from heat; gradually pour in the reserved sugar syrup, stirring as you do so, until blended. Turn into the baked pie shell; top with macadamias; cool. Refrigerate to allow filling to set.

Before serving, whip cream, flavoring with vanilla and sweetening with a suspicion of sugar; heap over pie filling or pass.

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: As a regular follower of your column, I read one of your recent replies in the San Francisco Chronicle in which you stated that the statute of limitations for the prosecution of rape in California is three years.

I thought you would be interested to know that since Jan. 1, 1982, the statute of limitations for rape has been six years, as a result of legislation which I authored in 1981. MILTON MARKS, STATE SENATOR, FIFTH SENATORIAL DISTRICT, SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.

DEAR SENATOR MARKS: Mea culpa. The lawyer who provided me with the outdated information discovered his error shortly after my column had already gone to press. He's a prominent attorney, presently attired in sackcloth and ashes, eating crow in San Francisco.

DEAR ABBY: My sister and I have always been close. Now that we're both married and have children, we are even closer.

Just before the holidays, Sis' husband came over to borrow my floor scrubber and he tried to get fresh. I couldn't believe it, but there was no doubt of his intentions.

I told my husband, and he wanted to go to my brother-in-law's house and kill him, but we decided for my sister's sake not to say anything. I did tell my parents, and my dad's reaction was the same as my husband's. (My mother just said, "That's men for you.") For Sis' sake we all decided to drop it.

My parents have completely dropped it, but my husband and I haven't. We've backed out of family gatherings. My sister keeps asking me why I'm mad at them, and I keep saying, "We have other plans," etc.

Even if I told her the truth, she'd probably say I was nuts or I must have led him on. What should I do? — KEEPING MY MOUTH SHUT

DEAR KEEPING: Join in on the family gatherings, but tell your brother-in-law that the next time he makes a move toward you, you will expose him to his wife and the entire family for the kind of person he is.

DEAR ABBY: I was a lonely, frustrated widower after my wife passed away. Then a pretty young widow came along, and we seemed attracted to each other.

However, the only time I can see her is when I take her somewhere to spend money on her — to dinner, the theater, etc. For example, I bought tickets to a special dinner at a club. We arrived there in separate cars. After the dinner, she got into her car and I got into mine, and without even a handshake, she said good night.

This young woman is wearing my ring and says she loves me. I even loaned her money to pay off some debts.

Am I unreasonable to expect a little more personal attention? Or must I be content to see her only when there is something in it for her? — OLD ENOUGH TO KNOW BETTER

DEAR OLD: You and your fiancee (and that it what she is if she's wearing your ring) are not on the same wavelength. If you can't communicate with her now, shake hands and wave goodbye before you invest any more time or money in this relationship.

Latest trends seen at Paris fashion show

By CAROLYN LESH
AP Writer

PARIS (AP) — The first installments of the week-long Paris fashion shows for spring and summer revealed curves at every turn — with nipped-in waists, see-through gowns, slit skirts and bared knees marking the lines of haute couture designers.

The shows began Monday. By Thursday, 23 Paris high fashion houses will have paraded more than 2,000 new creations for the handful of women who are willing and able to pay prices that start at about $1,500 an outfit.

Only about 3,000 women in the world regularly buy custom-made clothes from the deans of the Paris "rag" trade. But the trends that surface on the runways this week will set a standard for the less expensive ready-to-wear lines.

So far, the trend has been for a sleek silhouette that features broad shoulders, wide lapels, snug waists, thin skirts and three-inch heels for daytime dresses and suits.

Big bows, ruffles and wide-legged sailor pants that sometimes climb as high as two or three inches above the ankle also highlighted the first shows of the week.

At Christian Dior, they ranged from foot-wide corselet belts, to lacquered straw centurion belts and embroidered and interlaced cinch belts. One show-stopper Monday at Dior was a white crepe dress with op-art splashes of black set off with a six-inch wide belt.

Dior stressed the look of illusion with "trompe l'oeil" lapelled spencers and spindle skirts in plain silk or large floral prints. Many of the Dior skirts had buttons down the back that were undone almost up to the derriere.

Unbuttoned and slit skirts also were featured Monday by chez Jean-Louis Scherrer, where styles were set off with plenty of black patent leather belts. One typical Scherrer suit had a white linen skirt topped by a wide-belted black jacket with white lapels almost reaching the elbow-length puffed sleeves.

At Pierre Cardin, belts were narrow and often several inches above the waist for an empire-style effect. Cardin also used the thin belts at the top of bodices on strapless dresses.

Most designers put daytime hemlines right at the knee or one or two inches below it. But most cocktail dresses liberated the kneecap, either with moderate minis or asymetrical hemlines that climbed as high as the thigh.

The short dinner dresses at Pierre Balmain on Monday added a daring touch with lace bermudas and camisoles.

Black bouffant pants in organza or taffeta, tied under the knee, also were show in Balmain's styles for the twilight hours. The bouffant pants were perfect for someone looking for a style that makes the hip look larger.

Remodeling can help cut cost of energy at home

By BARBARA MAYER
AP Newsfeatures

Rising energy costs and the habit of remaining in the same home instead of moving are combining to produce a change in home remodeling projects.

A recent survey by the publisher of Building Supply News Magazine found today's remodeling projects tend to be more energy related than in the past.

"Caulking, weatherstripping and adding insulation never used to be important at all. But today they have become very important to the home remodeling trade," said Morry Robinson of Cahners Publishing Co., the magazine's publisher.

In a 1981 survey of 2,500 households, the magazine found the 10 top projects (in descending numbers of jobs completed) were: interior and exterior painting; wallpapering; carpeting; weatherstripping, caulking and sealing; replacing or adding lighting fixtures; adding new kitchen faucets; insulating; replacing bathroom faucets, and remodeling the bath.

Counting by dollar volume instead of number of jobs, room additions topped the list at $10.5 billion. Other projects, (in descending order of dollars), were: Kitchen remodeling; adding new carpet; reroofing; installing exterior siding; remodeling a bathroom; finishing a basement; adding a new garage, and installing new kitchen cabinets.

Robinson, who expects a trend toward practical remodeling projects to accelerate, sees five growth areas for 1983 and beyond. They include: Replacing exterior windows and doors and installing storm windows; upgrading the home heating and hot water system; adding insulation to reduce energy costs; interior painting and wallpapering, and installing passive solar systems and devices such as sun rooms and sun scoops, greenhouse windows and air locks for entryways to the house.

On the other hand, he predicted a drop in big-ticket remodeling jobs, such as the addition of new bathrooms and kitchen remodeling.

"People tend to make these major changes when they move into a home, rather than in midstream, and the statistics indicate that fewer people are moving nowadays," he said.

With consumer interest in improving the home environment high, many industry trade associations have found it worthwhile to develop written materials showing how to use their products and services to enhance that environment.

These groups may provide an overlooked source of information and guidance for consumers interested in remodeling their home.

The following will provide free or low-cost information about some aspect of home remodeling:

* American Society of Interior Designers, 730 Fifth Ave., New York, NY 10019. Provides lists of members around the country and information on selecting an interior designer.

* Asphalt Roofing Manufacturers Association, P.O. Box 3248, Grand Central Station, New York, NY 10163. Has two booklets for 50 cents each: "A Homeowners Guide to Quality Roofing" and "Good Applications Makes a Good Roof Better," for do-it-yourselfers.

* Association of Home Appliance Manufacturers, 20 North Wacker Drive, Chicago, IL 60606. Literature and information about appliances.

* Carpet & Rug Institute, P.O. Box 2048, Dalton, GA 30720. Information on buying, installing and maintaining carpets, rugs, bathmats and bedspreads.

* National Association of the Remodeling Industry, 11 East 44th St., New York, NY 10017. Can provide names of contractor members.

* National Decorating Products Association, 9334 Dielman Industrial Drive, St. Louis, MO 63132. Provides information about paint and wall coverings.

* National Woodwork Manufacturers Association, 355 Lexington Ave., New York, NY 10017. "A Guide to Energy-Saving Windows" is 25 cents. "A Guide to Energy-Saving Doors" is 15 cents.

* Resilient Floor Covering Institute, 1030 15th St., N.W. Suite 350, Washington, DC 20005. Information about vinyl floors.

* Tile Council of America, P.O. Box 503, Mahwah, NJ 07403. Information on ceramic tiles.

* Vinyl Siding Institute, 355 Lexington Avenue, New York, NY 10017. Offers a free eight-page booklet: "What Homeowners Want to Know about Solid Vinyl Siding."

* Wood Moulding & Millwork Producers, P.O. Box 25278, Portland, OR 97225. Library of information on do-it-yourself wood moulding projects. Will send a listing of offerings in response to written requests.

Besides these organizations, others may be found in the listings of trade associations. Ask your local librarian for guidance in locating these groups.

Dillard finds writing hard work

By SCOTT M. BUSHNELL
AP Writer

There is no magic behind her work, no rush of poetry created amid a woodland setting, says the winner of the 1974 Pulitzer Prize for general non-fiction for her book, "Pilgrim at Tinker Creek."

"It is simply work, hard work," Ms. Dillard said in a recent interview at Wesleyan University, where she is a visiting professor.

She challenges the mystique that a writer's life is somehow easy.

"There's no romance in it," she says, pointing to an alcove where cigarette packs are peppered around papers and a pot of coffee. "It's just a matter of hard work."

HER NEWEST book, "Teaching a Stone to Talk," disguises some of that. It is a smooth flowing collection of essays that ranges from a discourse on weasels to a poignant weekend for a woman and her daughter in a cabin.

It is marked by Ms. Dillard's vivid insights into both animal and human behavior. Whether petting the neck of a giant tortoise in the Galapagos Islands or talking to a lonely little boy in a field, she brings a gentle metaphysical bend to the scene.

Ms. Dillard refuses to comment on her works, or to analyze her writing. She also brushes off any comparison between her and Thoreau, as some critics have done.

Her writing, the 37-year-old native of Pittsburgh says, stands for itself. "Teaching a Stone to Talk" isn't "a collection of occasional pieces, such as a writer brings out to supplement his real work," she writes in an author's note preceding the 14 narratives. "Instead this is my real work, such as it is."

THE DOMINANT essay, she says, concerns a comparison between polar expeditions and man's search for religion. In point-counterpoint, she looks at the search for such absolutes as simplicity and purity, whether by polar explorers or those searching for God.

"The Absolute is the Pole of Relative Inaccessibility located in metaphysics," she writes. "After all, one of the few things we know about the Absolute is that it is relatively inaccessible. It is that point of spirit farthest from every accessible point of spirit in all directions."

But the book is rarely so directly philosophical. Rather, it offers detailed sketches, such as Sir Robert Scott's dying letters from the Antarctic and the image of an elderly priest's knees cracking as he knelt at the altar.

She is now at work on a series of literary vignettes about China, which she visited in the spring as part of a U.S. cultural delegation.

DINNER FARE
Minute Steaks & Potatoes
Combination Salad
Lemon Rice & Coffee

LEMON RICE

Adapted from Venezuelan cookery.

1 cup long-grain rice
3 cups water
1 teaspoon salt
½ cup sugar
¼ cup canned flaked coconut
1 cup milk
Grated rind of 1 medium lemon (about 2 teaspoons)
Ground cinnamon
Half-and-half

Rinse rice several times in hot tap water. In a heavy 2- or 3-quart saucepan bring water and salt to a boil; stir in rice and bring to a boil; boil 15 minutes; drain. In the clean saucepan stir together rice, sugar, coconut and milk; cover and cook over low heat, stirring often, until milk is absorbed, rice is tender and grains stick together — about 15 minutes. With a fork stir in lemon rind. Pack a 6-ounce custard cup with rice, filling ¾ or completely full; loosen edge with a small metal spatula and turn out into a shallow individual dessert bowl; sprinkle top with cinnamon. Repeat with remaining rice. Serve at once; pass half-and-half. Makes 4 to 6 servings.

Lebanese Moslems, Christians in power struggle

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Deep division has developed between Lebanon's Moslems and Christians over how power will be shared once the estimated 60,000 foreign troops leave the country.

Israel's invasion last June upset the precarious internal balance of power among the 17 officially recognized religious sects in the nation of 4 million people.

Rightist Christians who had allied with the Israelis gained the upper hand and Moslems who sided with Palestinian guerrillas lost influence.

For now, President Amin Gemayel, a Christian, appears to have a mandate from both sides to try to re-establish government authority. But there are increasing signs of friction and some Moslem leaders have been pressing for a national debate on a solution.

Moslem politicians have accused Gemayel's government of failing to use the 21,600-man Lebanese army to disarm and disband the 4,000-man militia led by the Phalange Party founded by the president's father, Pierre Gemayel.

Takieddin Solh, a former prime minister and Sunni Moslem leader, said in an interview: "Moslems are disarmed while the (Christian) Lebanese Forces still have weapons. We are being very watchful.

"Also, we worry as to the nature of the state. The president belongs to a disciplined political party (the Phalange). Will it be a one-party state? How much is he willing to share power?"

Other major Moslem sects in Lebanon are the Shias and the Druses.

Gemayel's insistence on having emergency powers for six months aroused Moslem suspicions that he was trying to change the form of government from a parliamentary system in which the powers of the sects were carefully balanced to a strong presidential form of government.

Those suspicions were deepened by an attempted car-bomb assassination of leftist Socialist Progressive Party leader Walid Jumblatt, a Druse, in December and by published but unverified reports that the Phalangists planned to set up political offices in the Moslem sector of this capital.

An unwritten national covenant for the sharing of political power was created after independence from France in 1943.

Under that system, the president is a Maronite Christian, the prime minister a Sunni Moslem, the Parliament speaker a Shiite Moslem and political power is divided up in Parliament and the civil service on the basis of the relative strength of the sects in the 1930s when the last formal census was taken.

The power-sharing agreement collapsed twice, in 1958 and 1975 when Moslem-Christian civil wars were fought. Younger politicians from both the Christian and Moslem communities are now calling for a new formula.

"I believe the 1943 formula is unworkable in the present situation of Lebanon," said Dany Chamoun, 48-year-old civil engineer and political heir of his father, former Christian President Camille Chamoun.

Young Chamoun advocates a strong presidency and an "American-style system" of checks and balances. He proposes creating a senate in which seats are equally divided between Moslems and Christians and a lower house where members are elected on the basis of "one man, one vote."

George Adwan, a 34-year-old lawyer who leads the Tanzim militia allied with the Phalangists, agreed with Chamoun that the formula for power sharing should be revamped.

"Part of the responsibility for what has happened in Lebanon lies with the 1943 covenant," he maintained in an interview.

"People have tended to hide behind confessionalism (sectarianism) so they won't be punished or held accountable. We must change this system."

Adwan and Chamoun believe the civil service should adopt a merit system in which posts are awarded for ability rather than religious affiliation as it is now.

But Moslems fear that because the Christian community has a generally higher level of education they will dominate in the civil service. They also are wary of Christian proposals to divide Lebanon into states or cantons under a federal system.

"I am afraid of partition," Nabih Berri, leader of a now-inactive paramilitary group of Shiite Moslems, said in an interview, reflecting widespread Moslem beliefs that a federated Lebanon would be a divided Lebanon.

Underlying the debate on the future government is a traditional suspicion the Moslem and Christian communities hold for each other.

Christians, particularly the Maronite sect affiliated with the Roman Catholic Church, are wary of the Pan-Arab philosophies that espouse the unity of the Arab and Islamic nations of the region. As a consequence the Christians have aligned with the West and Israel while the Moslems look to the Arab world.

"Relations with the different communities in Lebanon should be equal but with the recognition of the responsibility of the Christians" to head the government, said the Rev. Boulos Naaman, a Maronite abbot who is active in Phalange Party politics. "There cannot be a Moslem regime in Lebanon because the government has to be free and independent of all the currents in the area."

Although census figures do not exist, Moslems are convinced they constitute the majority of the population and should have at least an equal say.

Commented former Prime Minister Solh: "The Christians feared the preponderance of the Moslems in the past and we gave them the presidency and the commander in chief of the army. What else do they want?"

CAF members each join for unique reasons

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — Vernon Ricks says there's something special about a group that has all chiefs and no Indians and where members each have their own unique reason for belonging but still share a common love — war planes.

Ricks is a colonel and leader of the Mississippi Wing of the Confederate Air Force, an organization which locates, restores and flys World War II vintage aircraft.

In this organization, started in 1957 by Lloyd Nolan in Mercedes, Texas, every member has the title of colonel. Currently there are about 7,500 members in the United States and the CAF has a number of wings in foreign countries.

"There are almost as many different reasons to be in the Confederate Air Force as there are people in it," said Ricks, a former jet fighter pilot who owns a farm machinery business in Greenwood. "If you ask them, some will tell you it's the chance to travel, the glamour, the association with others with the same interest.

"Or, if they're like me, its the love of the machine; not just working on these old planes but flying them," Ricks said.

HE SAID THE Mississippi wing has grown from four members two years ago, including Ricks and his son, to about 100 members. He said there are no organized wings east of Mississippi but that the Tennessee wing has 75 members, Louisiana 82 and Arkansas 64.

He said Florida once had a strong wing but that a disagreement over uniforms several years ago resulted in that branch forming a new organization known as Valiant Air Command. He said several CAF members from Georgia and south Alabama have gone with the new group.

He said the name Confederate Air Force, apparently picked up from Nolan's early group, has not hindered the spread of the organization to the north.

"I just talked with the wing in Minnesota and they're going great," he said. "And we have good folks in places like the Great Lakes Wing in Chicago — it's a common bond to that machine that draws us together."

About half of Mississippi's wing are pilots and there are a few members who actually flew or repaired the war planes from 1939 to 1945.

"We've got members who are hour laborers and we've even got a neurosurgeon," he said. "In this organization, the cast system disappears.

"EVERYBODY'S A COLONEL and I've seen a man worth $4 million or $5 million crawling around under an old plane pumping grease where another guy, a mechanic, tells him to pump it, and they're both enjoying every minute of it."

William H. Hatfield of Booneville says he joined the CAF a couple to years ago because he wanted to be part of an organization which was helping preserve an important part of history.

Hatfield was a military pilot for almost 27 years and for 3½ years was a member of the Four Horsemen precision flying team. The team, which operated out of bases in Oklahoma and Texas, used the giant four-engine C-130 aircraft for aerobatics instead of the sleek fighters used by the better known flying teams.

Hatfield said the demands for better fighting aircraft during the war had sparked major technical advances that later paid off in the space program, in computer developments and in other areas.

Jack Gordon of Greenville has a somewhat personal reason for belonging to the CAF: The national organization is restoring a B-26, one of only five known to be in existance and the only one that will actually fly.

Gordon spent his years in the military repairing the medium bombers as a member of the 17th Bomb Group made famous by Gen. Jimmy Doolittle, leader of the B-25 bomber raid on Tokyo from the carrier Hornet. For 30 months in places like Africa, Sardinia and France, Gordon helped patch up the group's B-26 craft.

RICKS, WHO FLEW jets during the 1950s, said he was attracted to the organization not only because of his love for the machines but because "as I grew up all my heros were World War II pilots."

He said the national organization has a museum at its headquarters in Harlingen, Texas, but "rather than parking these planes, we actually operate them. We locate the aircraft, purchase and restore them, and then let people see how they performed."

He said the group owns 122 planes, including some the last surviving examples of many models.

"For example," he said, "we've got the only flying B-29 like the kind that dropped the first A bomb" on Japan.

He said members in Mississippi wing own advanced fighter trainers and a Navy Corsair and that the wing has acquired and was restoring a twin-engine C-45 transport.

Ricks said the wing holds both business meetings and working sessions throughout the year and stages air shows to display the aircraft and raise money for restoration projects.

"THIS CAN BE A costly undertaking because these aircraft go for top prices," he said. "I'm talking about people asking $350,000 for a P-51 Mustang without batting an eye, or $200,000 and up for a Corsair."

He said he has contacted a Chicago man about an English fighter which had no radio and needed painting, and was told the purchase price was $225,000.

In addition, he said there was a great deal of expense for travel to airshows and for fuel.

"You've really got to love these machines," he said. "I guess that's why the Confederate Air Force has been so successful."

'Flexibility' becomes fashionable in hallways of Washington

By BARRY SCHWEID

In a city where "MAD" had its day, "detente" flourished and "shuttle diplomacy" is out of style, "flexibility" is getting a rush.

Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger says U.S. nuclear policy must be based on it.

U.S. arms negotiator Paul H. Nitze says it will guide his negotiations with the Soviet Union to curb nuclear weapons in Europe.

It's getting hard to talk of war or of peace without dropping flexibility into the conversation.

While mediator Philip Habib occasionally tries shuttle diplomacy to free Lebanon of foreign forces, he lacks Henry Kissinger's panache and touch for publicity. Habib's Mideast travels fall colorlessly under the heading of traditional diplomacy.

MAD also has had it. The notion that the best insurance against Soviet nuclear attack is Mutual Assured Destruction — making sure the Soviets know they would be wiped out — is passe.

The idea now is to deter war by having a flexible nuclear force: a variety of missiles, bombers and submarines. That gives the president the option of an all-out response to Soviet attack or a more limited one.

Weinberger explained the strategy last month to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee:

"Of paramount importance to the flexible response strategy is the requirement for flexibility — for our nuclear forces and plans for their use to be designed and developed in such a way that our response is appropriate to the circumstances against us."

An Analysis

In other words, the United States must be capable of fighting a limited nuclear war or a global one.

Kenneth Adelman, the new U.S. disarmament director, is inclined to the same flexibile strategy.

"U.S. strategic forces do not exist solely to deter a Soviet nuclear attack or an attack against the United States itself," he said in a 1981 magazine article.

"Rather, they are intended to support a range of U.S. foreign policy goals, including the commitment to preserve Western Europe and even parts of the Persian Gulf against over aggression."

If it's wise to be flexible in averting war, it's also the smart way to pursue peace.

Before flying to Europe for a new round of talks, U.S. negotiator Nitze hinted he would show flexibility if the Soviets demonstrated some new "give" in their proposals.

Nitze said he was "confident that if it becomes wise for the United States government to change its position" in the missile reduction talks "it will in fact do so."

Only time will tell, of course, but flexibility may have a longer shelf life than the once-voguish MAD, detente and shuttle diplomacy.

Shipyard puts Walesa on payroll, but still won't let him back on job

GDANSK, Poland (AP) — The Lenin Shipyard has put Lech Walesa back on the payroll, but still won't let him start work until he produces documents showing he was not employed elsewhere and has his business affairs with the banned Solidarity union in order, a spokesman for the labor leader said.

Walesa, who was detained under martial law for nearly a year, tried to get his job back Jan. 14 but was turned away at the gates of the shipyard, where he founded Solidarity during August 1980 strikes.

Shipyard officials told him that before he could return, he must obtain the government certification.

A spokesman at Walesa's apartment said Wednesday that Walesa was summoned by shipyard officials who told him he had been placed on the payroll effective Jan. 17, but still needed the documents.

Most French think system can work, but it isn't now

By JEFFREY ULBRICH

PARIS (AP) — A recent national survey indicates that 52 percent of the population believes socialism can work in France, but only 19 percent believe it is working now after 20 months under the leadership of President Francois Mitterrand.

While polls such as the one published at the end of December by the Quotidien de Paris newspaper are useful barometers of public opinion, there has been no real national report card on the government since Mitterrand took the presidency from Valery Giscard d'Estaing in May 1981 and the Socialists swept to power in Parliament a month later.

But that test is just over the horizon and both the leftist majority and the conservative opposition are gearing up for the showdown in two rounds of municipal voting March 6 and 13.

At stake are six-year terms for city councils in France's 36,414 communities.

While the outcome of the municipal elections will have no direct bearing on the conduct of national policy, it is being viewed by both sides as an extremely important sounding of public opinion on the performance of the Mitterand government.

PREPARATIONS FOR the elections began in the fall with negotiations between the Socialist and Communist parties as well as between the coalition of conservative neo-Gaullists and centrist parties on who will head the party lists on the ballot.

While general agreement has been reached by both sides to run unified tickets in most cases, the overall composition of the lists is still being hammered out on a local level in communities all over the country.

Until now, Mitterrand has had little to brag about. His popularity continues to fall slowly but steadily in the polls. In spite of a number of major programs — nationalization of several large companies, new rights for workers, new taxes on the wealthy and efforts to stimulate investment and employment — France remains mired in economic stagnation.

Though the rise in unemployment appears to have been blunted, it is firmly stuck at an uncomfortably high 9.4 percent. Economic growth in 1982 was up only 1.5 percent over 1981 and is predicted to increase only 0.5 percent this year. Business investment, down 1.75 percent last year, is expected to fall an additional 0.5 percent in 1983.

MITTERRAND SUCCEEDED in getting inflation down from 14 percent in 1981 to something under 10 percent last year, but France's main European trading partners did even better without resorting to a four-month wage and price freeze.

Mayor Jacques Chirac of Paris, leader of the opposition forces, has said "the municipal elections are the next big political reckoning in France. It must be the occasion for us to strike the first blow and begin the change."

But Bertrand Delanoe, official spokesman for the Socialist Party, re-affirmed that the elections "will have no influence on the central power or the choice that the French made May 10 (1981)."

The pre-election maneuvering has not been without its controversy. The Socialist-dominated Parliament passed a new election law that chopped Paris into 20 separate administrative districts, each with its own mayor who will have limited authority under the main city council.

The reason, the Socialists said, was to bring city officials closer to the people.

THE MOVE, widely viewed among conservatives as an attempt to undercut Chirac, aroused such a controversy that the Socialists felt compelled to extend the same plan to Lyon and Marseille, France's next largest cities.

The new election law also changed the way in which the composition of city councils is determined.

Under the old law, the system was different for cities with populations of more than 30,000 and those under 30,000. In the 221 large towns and cities, the list of candidates winning at least 50.01 percent of the vote won all the seats on the city council and the opposition was shut out. In the small towns, seats were distributed by a proportion of votes.

This year, in all municipalities of more than 3,500, the list winning more than 50 percent of the votes will get the majority of seats. The rest of the seats will be divided up pro rata according to the vote. Thus, the winners will get half the seats, plus at least 25 percent of the remainder, with the rest divided among the other parties. Towns under 3,500 will operate on the same system as in the last elections in 1977.

The Socialists, who already control a large majority of France's municipalities, including 70 percent of the cities of more than 30,000 population, maintain the new law is more democratic and will permit minority parties to have at least a small voice. But conservatives contend that the law is a leftist effort to crack strong conservative bastions such as Bordeaux, Nice and Metz.

Norway outlaws killing of two types of baby seals

OSLO, Norway (AP) — The Norwegian Seal Hunting Council has banned killing of two types of baby seals this winter and is imposing general limits on other seal hunting by Norwegians, the council chairman said.

Under the ban, hooded and Greenland seals under three weeks old may not be killed. These seals' pelts are commonly called "white coat" and "blue back."

Jonsgaard said the council also decided to reduce from 10 to seven the number of vessels allowed to take part in the winter seal hunt off Newfoundland.

Prince's Italian resort center of controversy

ROME (AP) — Prince Karim Aga Khan's Emerald Coast resort is locked in a bitter battle with authorities in Sardinia, who oppose an ambitious expansion plan along the crystal clear waters of the Mediterranean island.

Angered by nearly a decade of bickering and waiting, the spiritual leader of the world's 15 million Ismaili Moslems resigned from the presidency of the resort consortium in early January, triggering fears he would leave Italy's most successful tourist area in the lurch.

But despite local opposition to an $800 million investment program, the 46-year-old prince told his executives that he intended to hold on — at least for the moment — to his 20-year-old Sardinian resort, Costa Smeralda in Italian.

The 33 miles of snow-white beaches are adorned by six hotels, a 600-berth marina and shipyard, a ceramics factory, an agricultural development corporation, and a score of other activities including a golf course and an airline which brought prosperity to an area once called the "Valley of Hell."

Less than three years after his grandfather, the Aga Khan III, appointed him as his successor — 49th hereditary imam and direct descendant of the prophet Mohammed — Karim carved out a vast real estate paradise amid the rough vegetation of the north Sardinian coast.

Along with five other original investors, he bought up 25,000 acres, built roads, sewers and clamped a strict architectural code, balancing all construction in the area with assorted greenery.

The complex now permanently employs 1,200 people and 800 more in the summer, and has become a household word in Italy, associated with vacation luxury and jet-set living.

But in the wake of the Costa Smeralda's success, imitations have sprung up throughout Sardinia, with skyscrapers and sometimes cheaper construction by real estate promotors.

Detractors mushroomed along with the high-rises, and some Italian sociologists turned sour. Bachisio Bandinu commented that a wholly artificial community devoted to "visual hedonism" outlawed even death by not including a cemetery in the master plan.

Rome's Socialist-leaning newspaper La Repubblica charged that what the Aga Khan had created was an artificial Shangri-La of candy-colored concrete for affluent Italians and foreigners.

Thus, since 1972, when the Aga Khan submitted the first draft of the plan, the local municipality of Arzachena stalled the blueprint, claiming that 199.5 million cubic feet of cement to be poured into the area would turn it into an eyesore equivalent to building 45 large hotels.

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Dear Dr. Solomon: My mother is in her late seventies and has rheumatoid arthritis. Her doctor says that exercise can be of help to her, but this seems to me to be a Catch-22 situation. What kind of exercise is a woman my mother's age supposed to be able to do? — Sue, Brooklyn, N.Y.

Dear Sue: Even small amounts of exercise can help a patient with arthritis. According to Dr. Thomas M. Harkcom, of the University of Michigan Medical School, Ann Arbor, 15 minutes of exercise three times a week can lead to improvement. Women with rheumatoid arthritis who participated in an exercise program reported they felt less fatigued, were more able to perform their household chores, and were better able to participate in social activities than before the program started.

I suggest your mother ask her physician about the type of exercise best suited to her needs; she certainly wouldn't want to overdo it. But don't belittle the potential beneficial effects of even a limited amount of exercise that is regularly performed by rheumatoid arthritis patients.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I have entered a number of marathons and while I have never won, I do complete them. My 11-year-old son has now started running and I'd like to get him more involved. He is very athletic and says he enjoys running but doesn't want to race. I wouldn't enter him in a marathon, but do you see any reason I shouldn't enter him in some of the longer races? I think it would do him good. — Steve, Spokane, Wash.

Dear Steve: I would ask you to consider very carefully whether you really feel that your son's involvement in long-distance competitive running would do him good, or whether your motivation might not be to satisfy your own needs. Try to think about this objectively. Here is an 11-year-old boy who enjoys running but does not want to race competitively. What's wrong with that?

I fail to see what benefit would accrue to your son from becoming competitively involved in long-distance running, particularly when he shies away from it. It would obviously not be of psychological benefit to force him into an activity, and long-distance running may also result in physical harm to children your son's age.

There will be plenty of occasions in future years when your son will have to do things he may not enjoy cr may even intensely dislike. If today he wants to run just for the fun of it, don't spoil it for him.

For Arthur, Ann Arbor, Mich.: It is true that death from stroke has been cut almost in half over the past 30 years. However, it is also true that stroke is still the third leading cause of death in the United States.

These statistics, although serious, in a sense have a bright side. That is, the continuing high mortality from stroke is probably in part a result of the fact that people are living longer and that death from cancer and heart disease has declined.

(If you have a medical question, write to Neil Solomon, M.D., 1726 Reisterstown Road, Baltimore, Md. 21208. Dr. Solomon cannot give personal replies but will answer as many questions as possible in his column.)

NEW YORK (AP) — In a room filled with gambling equipment to rival Atlantic City's, police officers gather every few weeks to play craps, roulette and slot machines.

The setting, however, is hardly a swank casino. The spin of the roulette wheel, the throw of the dice and the shuffling of cards all occur in the office of the vice squad.

The police who gather on the 12th floor of New York City's mammoth police headquarters aren't practicing for trips to Atlantic City, Las Vegas or Paradise Island. They are here to become expert at the games so they can blend in with the high-rollers who fill a handful of expensive Manhattan townhouses containing luxurious, illegal casinos.

The plush gaming dens "reproduce the Atlantic City milieu," said Inspector Aaron Rosenthal, commander of the Public Morals Division. "They're basically for the high rollers and the rather hoity-toity. They just won't let you in off the street."

Police don't arrest customers of the gambling houses because they break no laws, Rosenthal said. Only the operators, dealers and other employees are arrested. Undercover agents must be able to identify them when they mingle with customers.

HARARE, Zimbabwe (AP) — Police have parked patrol cars and ride horses. Bicycle sales are soaring. Bus service is cut nearly in half. Thousands hitchhike and motorists rent cars just to siphon the gasoline into their own automobiles.

Zimbabwe is in its worst fuel crisis ever — the result of sabotage in another country.

Lines stretch for miles outside filling stations. Drivers usually wait three or four days, sleeping in their cars, barbecuing meat and drinking beer alongside the road, to purchase a few allotted gallons.

Zimbabwe's 300,000 drivers have had severely reduced fuel supplies since Dec. 8, when saboteurs opposed to the Marxist government in neighboring Mozambique knocked out the main oil pipeline from the Mozambican port of Beira to Zimbabwe. Some fuel began moving through the pipeline in mid-January, but not enough to solve the crisis immediately.

Africa's youngest black state depended on white-ruled South Africa for nearly all its fuel until the pipeline opened in June. South Africa has agreed to transport extra fuel from Mozambique by railroad to Zimbabwe during the crisis but has refused to resume shipments of its own oil unless the Zimbabwean government negotiates directly with the South African white-minority government.

Tempers and radiators boil. When a black driver tried to butt into a gasoline line, six husky whites lifted his compact car and carried it to a nearby parking lot.

"Oil has raised the same sort of emotions, greed and anger that gold did in the gold-rush days," said service-station owner Don Clarke.

With bus service cut by 40 percent, fewer city workers make the weekly commute to their rural villages. More employees arrive late to work. General production is sagging.

"I usually get into town OK, but it's a bind getting a car going your way home at night," she lamented.

Some plumbers and electricians have stopped making calls to desperate homeowners. Physicians have been denied extra fuel to make house calls. Farmers complain that they need fuel to harvest Zimbabwe's twin staples — wheat and corn.

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan's nomination of Kenneth L. Adelman to head the arms control agency is running into difficulty in the Senate, where some members question the 36-year-old diplomat's qualifications.

Adelman, who appeared before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee Thursday, was criticized by both Democrats and Republicans.

The panel asked Adelman to return Feb. 3, along with Eugene V. Rostow, who resigned Jan. 12 as director of the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency at the president's request.

Rostow said elements within the administration and in Congress were trying to undermine his agency's efforts to negotiate arms reductions. Adelman, deputy to United Nations Ambassador Jeane J. Kirkpatrick, was nominated to succeed Rostow.

At the hearing, Sen. Charles H. Percy, R-Ill., the committee chairman, said he was "not inclined to vote for confirmation" until Adelman clears up the administration's intentions regarding a pair of nuclear test ban treaties that have languished since the mid-1970s.

Sen. Alan Cranston, D-Calif., said flatly he would vote against confirmation of Adelman, whom he said is "clearly a novice in the arms control field."

And Sen. Claiborne Pell of Rhode Island, the ranking Democrat on the committee, said he had not made up his mind on how he would vote. But he added that Adelman "would not appear to bring as much experience as I would like in arms control to an administration already very thin in that area."

The nominee also got into trouble for his answer to a question by Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., about how Adelman would respond if the Soviets proposed total elimination of nuclear weapons.

"It is an idea I have just never thought of," Adelman replied. He said the current goal is to negotiate sharp reductions in numbers of nuclear weapons.

Sen. Rudy Boschwitz, R-Minn., said he was "almost flabbergasted by the answer." He said elimination of nuclear weapons is the objective of arms talks and "if you say you have never considered it, I'm somewhat alarmed."

Boschwitz expressed reservations about the nomination, saying Adelman "has not gained the stature that I would hope would come" to the directorship of the arms control agency. He said he was "somewhat surprised" by the nomination.

Adelman said he would "work tirelessly" for Reagan's goals of "deep cuts" in nuclear armaments leading to "greater world stability based upon genuine equality with effective verification."

Sen. Larry Pressler, R-S.D., chairman of the arms control subcommittee, said he believed the committee should hear further from Adelman and take testimony from Rostow before voting.

Percy said the committee would probably vote next week on the nomination.

The two treaties that Percy referred to were the Threshold Test Ban Treaty, which would prohibit underground tests of nuclear weapons greater than 150 kilotons, and the Peaceful Nuclear Explosions Treaty, which extends this restriction to explosions for peaceful purposes such as mining.

Flaw found in design of MX engine

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Air Force reportedly is seeking correction of a flaw found in the second stage rocket engine of the MX Missile and is planning to skip two scheduled test firings after the engine is redesigned.

Sen. James Sasser, D-Tenn., quoted Air Force officials as saying Thursday that design flaws have been found in the engine of the missile, one of which exploded and killed four workers last November.

Sasser, ranking Democratic member of the military construction subcommittee of the Senate Appropriations Committee, met privately with the officials. He said they also told him the Air Force plans only one more test firing of the MX rockets — instead of the three originally planned — before launching the missile on its first test flight.

"I'm not entirely satisfied," Sasser said after meeting with Major Gen. Al Casey, director of the MX project, and three other Air Force officials.

"I still have a question about whether the testing of the Air Force is adequate prior to flying the missile," Sasser said.

Neither Casey or the other officials would comment about the meeting, but Sasser said the flawed engine is being redesigned by its manufacturer, Aerojet Corp. of Sacramento, Calif.

He said the design error involved distribution of the solid fuel and caused deterioration of the second-stage rocket casing during full thrust.

When the flaw is corrected, the engine will be checked in a test at Edwards Air Force Base in California, Sasser said he was told.

Previously, the engine was to be tested three more times at the Air Force's Arnold Engineering Development Center near Tullahoma, Tenn. at a simulation of 80,000 feet. Edwards Air Force Base is at sea level.

Nixon discusses Vietnam War, nuclear arms

NEW YORK (AP) — Former President Richard Nixon says he never intended to use nuclear weapons during the Vietnam War but that he might have given Hanoi that impression.

Speaking on the 10th anniversary of the signing of the peace accord that ended the controversial war, Nixon also said there was "no question" that Watergate hurt his credibility and hindered his ability to resolve the crisis of the war.

Nixon made his comments Thursday night on ABC's "Nightline" news program, in a live interview from Woodcliff, N.J., near his home in Saddle River.

Asked if he realized the flimsiness of the peace treaty, signed in Paris on Jan. 27, 1973, Nixon replied:

"I knew it was fragile. I thought, on the other hand, that with strong leadership on our side, that our keeping up of the bargain... I felt that the agreement would last.... As we look in retrospect, we have to realize it did hold for two years. It was two years before the provincial capital was fost."

Of all the terms agreed to, only two were met. Prisoners of war were for the most part exchanged and the United States ultimately withdrew all its troops and military advisers.

But the cease-fire pledged in the treaty broke down, with the North Vietnamese moving thousands of additional troops into South Vietnam; foreign troops were not removed from either Cambodia or Laos, and the South Vietnamese government was driven out.

In answer to a question about whether he ever promised former South Vietnamese President Nguyen Cao Ky that he would resume bombing over Hanoi if the North Vietnamese crossed the border again, Nixon said:

"I don't recall a specific promise of that type. However, based on what I had done previously, I think he had good reason to expect that we would react strongly in the event that the North Vietnamese broke the terms of the agreement. And certainly I had every intention of doing that had other circumstances not intervened."

Reagan won't stop efforts to locate MIAs

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan will not abandon his efforts to find out what happened to 2,500 Americans still missing in Indochina 10 years after the Vietnam War, one of his aides says.

The president has a "personal and abiding commitment to our missing men and to you, their families," national security adviser William P. Clark told the National League of Families of POWs and MIAs on Thursday.

Reagan was addressing the group today.

About 550 league members gathered at a suburban hotel Thursday, a decade after the United States signed the Paris Peace Accords ending its role in the nation's longest war. In 1975, North Vietnam overran South Vietnam.

The relatives of the missing men were flown by the Air Force to the nation's capital for two days of briefings, speeches and emotional reunions.

"It's kind of a show of strength," said Patti Sheridan, a spokeswoman for the league. "The issue is back on the front burner, where it should have been for years. Now it is no longer an embarrassment to talk about it."

After the peace agreement, Hanoi returned 591 American prisoners of war. But 2,494 men remain unaccounted for. Many were pilots whose planes or helicopters were shot down in the jungles and most of them have been declared legally dead.

Reports of sightings of live Americans in the jungles of Southeast Asia still trickle back.

And Clark said the government had information that "disallows us from ruling out the possibility that Americans are still being detained against there will."

Clark said all the reports are checked out with the "highest priorities and necessary resources."

The United States has no diplomatic relations with Vietnam.

Suit involving Vietnam rocket launchers dismissed

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government has dismissed a 14-year-old civil fraud suit after getting a $3.5 million settlement in a case involving the manufacturer of rocket launchers used in the Vietnam war.

Justice Department attorneys Alexander Younger and Timothy F. Knoelker said Thursday that the government dismissed its civil suit in U.S. District Court against Andrew L. Stone and Francis S. Rosenbaum, 67, both of McLean, Va.

The suit involved 15 contracts issued from 1963 through 1969 to Chromcraft Corp., later known as Alsco Corp., of St. Louis, Mo., and Farmingdale, N.J.

Under the contracts, the firm was the sole manufacturer — supplying about $50 million worth — of air-to-air and air-to-ground rocket launchers of the type used on helicopter gun ships in Vietnam.

The government alleged that the men developed a scheme to inflate the charges on the electrical firing mechanism and to deposit the money in Swiss bank accounts they controlled.

The government also alleged the defendants demanded and received kickbacks from Western Molded Fiber Products, manufacturer of the nose cones for the rocket launchers. No claims were filed against that company.

The government said it was overcharged $5.9 million on the 15 contracts and was entitled under the law to recover double that amount. Younger and Knoelker said the government has now received the amount it believed it was entitled to.

Andrews Chamber of Commerce honors members

By PATRICK DEAREN
Staff Writer

ANDREWS — Dedication, responsibility, concern and humor: they're all necessary ingredients in the formation of a quality community.

That such exist within the city limits of this West Texas town was obvious Thursday night at the annual chamber of commerce banquet, that unique, once-a-year get-together of the community's supporters when mutual concern is evidenced, honors are bestowed and laughter becomes contagious.

"Andrews is still the greatest place in the world to live," outgoing president Lawton Brevard told a packed-housed crowd of 400 persons.

Even so, incoming president James Pennington wants Andrews to reach an even more transcendent level in the months ahead.

"The theme of our chamber is, 'A Community of Quality,'" noted the superintendent of schools, "and thanks to many of you tonight we do have a quality community. Our aim for the comming year is to make it better if we can — and we can."

THE HONORS WENT to R.W. "Rocky" Taylor and constable Dewey Braswell for their service behind the scenes in contributing to Andrews' success. Taylor copped the Mesquite Burners award as the outstanding member of that local organization while Braswell received the highest honor of all: the 1982 Community Service Award for contributing to the progress of Andrews and improving the quality of living.

"Our honoree tonight has created a gigantic mound of good will for himself, his church and the chamber by his little everyday acts of good deeds," said James Roberts in presenting the award to Braswell. "He's been working behind the scenes in Andrews for a long time...This man does daily what most of us would like to but manage to only a few times a year...He's our chamber's most active, most consistent worker. He does deeds of kindness in every facet for the people of our community."

The sense of humor — that quality which enables members of a community to share together and shove aside the idle worries confronting all persons — was provided by James "Doc" Blakely of Wharton. Through his look at life and its eccentricities, he broke down the barriers of creed and religion, age and tradition in unifying the captivated audience.

Humor, to Blakely, is apparent in most aspects of life — even those which cause a few winces at the time. He recalled just such an occasion when he tried his hand at bullriding a few years ago in Taft.

HE BEGAN having second thoughts, he recounted, when a cowboy gave him myriad instructions on how to hold boot, leg, arm, hand, torso, neck. "A Buddhist monk couldn't think up more tortuous positions," he said. "But when I was all set I clung to that bull and stayed on for a full eight-second ride — then they opened the gate."

It was just his luck, said Blakely, to be atop a "spinner" — and the ultimate result was airplane flight without the airplane. Upon striking the turf, he said, "my bottom jaw scooped up a trench about six inches, and I had a vision of a Biblical passage: 'The meek shall inherit the earth.'"

Upon hearing a "motivating sound" behind him — the bellowing of the bull — his vision vanished and he sought to out-pole vault Bruce Jenner to the top of the arena wall.

He didn't make it. "He hooked me right in the snuff can and I ended up in the third row in the lap of an old maid with bony knees," he said.

Along with a multitude of quips (Son: "Mom, how do lions kiss?" Mother: "I don't know — your father's a Rotarian."), Blakely's funny bone touched upon religion and its denominational quirks.

"LET ME TELL you, if you can't get in anything else on this earth, go to the Methodist Church," he said. "But you know, people think Baptists are so strict they'll never change."

Both of the denominations, he said, have similar rules but slightly different philosophies. "Baptists say don't drink," he said. "Methodists say if you do drink, don't stagger, and if you do stagger, don't fall, and if you do fall, for gosh sakes, fall face down so nobody'll recognize you."

But there was one occasion in Duvall County, said Blakely, in which Baptists were forced to change their diehard rule of immersion. A "terrible drought" struck, he explained, and the city council asked the Baptist Church to quit wasting so much water dunking people in a horse trough. The church deacons finally agreed — on the condition that other denominations make concessions as well.

"For the duration of the drought," said the author of books on humor, "Baptists stopped immersing and start sprinkling. Methodists used a damp cloth. Catholics dry-cleaned. And the Presbyterians were just takin' 'em dirty."

During World War II, he said, a couple of allied soldiers were trapped in a foxhole behind enemy lines. Bombs were exploding in close proximity, the chatter of German soldiers was growing louder and fear reigned supreme. One man turned to the other, suggest-

Pupil population derived from several sources

Staff Writer

It's an annual routine followed in order to provide enough staffing, space and material for the students of the Midland Independent School District. Although the thought of computing student enrollment projections, birth rates and population growths may seem intimidating to the average person who has trouble balancing the checkbook once a month, the mounds of material piled on Payton Cook's desk are just part of the job.

In constantly evaluating pupil population, Cook, MISD's director of pupil and community services, said reports, charts, statistics and advice are utilized from several different sources. No matter how confusing or contradictory the different accounts are, the district nevertheless seems to hit the actual figures pretty close with its partially presumptuous projections.

Presently, the district is on the verge of plunging deep into the waters of technology by considering the possibility of going to a system-wide computer. According to Cook, administrators now are able to obtain students' names, addresses and grade levels on specific streets. However, the entire process of bus routes, attendance boundaries and current enrollments could more easily be done through a computer, he said.

IT SHOULD beat the pin map system.

For the past six or seven years, two women have lugged a large map of the school district home with them and, over a weekend, proceeded to stick pins along the streets and in the rural areas designating students' residents.

It is a tedious project and, because it is done only once a year in October, doesn't reflect Midland's changing growth areas accurately during the entire year.

The pin map, along with weekly enrollment reports, compiled by teachers every day, are only two factors in projecting future enrollments, Cook said.

"This is just something we do every year. It's a routine thing the board requires us to do and that's particularly true when there is a possibility of a bond isue or when they're trying to decide if additional space will be needed.

"We're constantly evaluating the pupil population growth," he continued. "The enrollment report that is done every week is used basically as a running tab on what's happening school by school, grade by grade."

EVERY JANUARY, a report pertaining to past, present and future enrollments is worked up and presented to the board of trustees. This year's report, presented at a regular board meeting Tuesday, included four comparisons: actual enrollments in January 1982 and January 1983; projected enrollments for 1982-83 and actual enrollment in January

"Last year was easy — everything grew. This year, it's a dichotomy — some are growing and others are not growing."
— Payton Cook

1983; projected enrollments for 1982-83 and actual enrollment in January 1982; and actual enrollments in January 1983 and projected enrollments for October 1983.

Cook explained that statistical trends also are used in the computations. Data from various companies, such as The First National Bank of Midland's Economic Activity Report and publications dealing with population trends across the state and the country, are used.

The entire process of computing enrollments for projection purposes began in the mid-1950s when Midland was experiencing a rapid growth, he said. The formulas used by the district since then are variations of the equation developed by one of the school board members and his engineering firm at that time. According to Cook, the formula works well when projecting short-range growths. However, he added, "it kind of fades out after a few years.

"IF YOU USE the technique and really go through it carefully and in great detail, the predictions for one year are really accurate. If you go past that, they tend to be really exaggerated," he added. "We're interested in the upcoming year because of the need to staff and budget accurately. But the board and the community need to know the long range because they need a lot of leeway before, for example, building a new senior high."

A preliminary projection is made in October and presented to the board before the Christmas break. It is updated in January.

"From October 8, (1982) through January 13, we have basically half of the school year and a third of the year," Cook said. "It's fairly simple to compute the annual growth period on what happened during that time.

"The assumption is, the projection made in October is still valid. But the trouble is when you look at what

Jury deadlocked in deciding theft case

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Jurors who found themselves in a deadlock Thursday night in trying to decide the guilt or innocence of a 23-year-old Odessa woman charged with theft and with trying to cover up the alleged pilferage by altering computer records were ordered by 142nd State District Court Judge Pat Baskin to resume their deliberations today.

The jury had pondered the case's issues for about three hours Thursday afternoon when the jury foreman handed the bailiff a note indicating that the jurors could not agree on a verdict. But the presiding judge suggested that the jurors continue their deliberations into the night and after they had snacked on fried chicken and the trimmings. They deliberated the case for about three additional hours and still could not agree on a unanimous verdict.

At issue in the case is whether or not Lori Reese had stolen $455.85 in cash on July 14 from Cox Marketing, a subsidiary of Taco Villa at Midland Regional Airport. She had been a clerk at Cox Marketing for about two years but resigned that month to give birth.

About two months later, Cox Marketing executive Robert "Bob" Barnes, telephoned her and suggested that she and her attorney meet with him and his attorney, according to testimony in the trial.

The company apparently had been plagued by inner-office theft for some-time. By inference, Ms. Reese also was accused but not charged with stealing $196.58 on June 18 and $363.35 on July 7.

The state, via its prosecutor, Janet Copeland, built its case on circumstantial evidence.

"THERE'S NO DISPUTE...except who did it," said Ms. Copeland, an assistant district attorney. "The only dispute is that Lori Reese did the misapplication (of more than $1,000 in funds). Nobody actually saw Lori Reese take the money," she admitted. "The state has proved that no one else could have taken the money.

Among other witnesses, the state used the testimony of Melissa Grimes, Cox's office manager whom defense attorney Jim Bobo of Odessa described as the office's "hound dog in this ordeal," Belinda Notgrass, a Cox clerk, and Barnes to bolster its circumstantial-evidence case against the defendant.

The defense attorney noted that "credibility is an issue" in the case and said that the state's purpose in mentioning the additional missing funds not in the charge was to propose that "where's there smoke, there's fire."

Outside the presence of the jury, Bobo questioned Barnes on his confronting Ms. Reese two months after she had resigned from the job to have her baby. Barnes said he did not approach Ms. Reese on the theft in mid-July although talk of thievery apparently was rife in the office.

BOBO ASKED BARNES why he did not confront the clerk with the accusation in July.

"At the time, Lori was pregnant, and we didn't want to jeopardize the baby's position, primarily," he replied. In addition, Barnes said he wanted to be discreet about the matter to avoid a possible libel or slander suit.

After talking to Sheriff Dallas Smith's office and District Attorney Vern Martin's staff, Barnes said the district attorney advised him "to contact Lori and try to work out" restitution if the former clerk would admit to the theft.

Bobo suggested that Barnes, in accusing Ms. Reese of the theft, was looking for someone to accuse and to take to court as "an example" to deter future inner-office stealing.

After the Barnes-to-Ms. Reese September telephone call, the defendant contacted Bobo, who in turned met with Barnes and his attorney on Sept. 28 "to discuss a settlement" and, "specifically," said Barnes, "to give her a chance to pay back the money."

"If she paid the money," Bobo asked Barnes, "you would not prosecute?"

"I don't think we ever got that far," the Cox Marketing executive said.

Bobo asked Barnes if the company was seeking a "signed confession of guilt regarding the monies" which had been missing from the office.

"WE WANTED an admission that she actually took the money," said Barnes, who further explained that the company wanted Ms. Reese to sign a form which would release the company from any liability should the issue of libel or slander crop up.

Bobo then surmised that Cox Marketing didn't want the money back but rather really "wanted to make an example of her."

Barnes responded that the company's policy was to detect stolen funds and to prosecute in order to deter further office pilferage.

"We were willing to prosecute (by September)," Barnes said. "The baby had already been born."

Barnes charged that the defense attorney had interpreted the confrontation with Ms. Reese as a "threat" — pay the missing funds, admit guilt and sign an admission of thievery.

"The way you worded it," Barnes told Bobo, "it sounded like a threat, and I don't believe it was a threat."

"I specifically said my client would not sign anything like that," Bobo said he told Barnes on Sept. 28.

In his closing argument, Bobo told the jurors that "You better believe that the heat was on" Ms. Reese.

"I'm proud that that young lady took the (witness) stand," Bobo noted, "and said 'I didn't do it.'"

MMH forced to combat loss of Medicare dollars

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

Midland Memorial Hospital has gone through a significant financial improvement, but because the government plans to tighten its money belt, there will be a demand to do a better job, according to Arthur Andersen & Company representatives.

Randy Kurtz, representing Andersen & Co., gave MMH a "significant improvement" grade on its 1981-1982 financial audit at the MMH board of trustees and directors meeting Thursday. He also explained that the Tax Equity Fiscal Responsibility Act (TEFRA) of 1982 will force MMH along with hospitals nationwide to scramble this year for lost dollars.

TEFRA, enacted in October 1982, is a three-year budget and tax package that will reduce nationwide Medicare costs by $12.5 billion with a $2 billion reduction this year.

"You will have to have more productivity and control expenses," Kurtz said. "Overall, the government is going to reduce the amount of dollars it will spend on Medicare reimbursement. It could be $500,000 that you will not receive in the coming year. The money you got last year, you will not get this year."

According to Ray Branson, MMH president, MMH will combat its expected $500,000 reimbursement loss through increasing productivity, reducing payroll, shortening the patients' length of stay, scrutinizing new services and programs and providing more services on an outpatient basis.

In other board news, trustees discussed the 1981-82 audit, the annual trustee evaluation and the chemical dependency facility.

According to Kurtz, MMH's "accounting systems and personnel are in place — there's been remarkable improvement. Obviously there is a lot more to do, but (comparing) this year to last year (1982-1981) there are significant improvements in the accounting procedures and internal controls."

One area where there has been improvement is in the days of revenue, or the number of days it takes to collect on a bill. Kurtz said "two years ago, it took 90 days to collect on a bill. They (MMH) set a goal of 70 days and met that goal, and now they (MMH) are looking at 60 to 65 days which would give them a month's worth of cash they can use."

Kurtz pointed out that in 1981 Arthur Andersen cited 41 accounting procedures that needed attention, but this year there will be 20 with only nine referring to 1981's 41.

Kurtz explained that MMH is "carrying a significant amount of bad debts compared to hospitals of the same size. The challenge now is operations as it relates to staffing, general expenses and TEFRA."

According to Ray Moudy, trustee, although MMH's bad debts for December totaled $205,349, December recoveries totaled $127,144.

"There were two incidents that contributed to this (collection)," Moudy

MMH board approves expansion project consultant

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

Midland County Hospital District board of directors approved an investment bank firm as financial consultant for its proposed 77-bed expansion Thursday.

In other business, the board considered the financial statements and paid bills.

Because the sluggish economy could hinder funding for MMH's $15 million proposed 77-bed expansion, the directors pursued alternative financing for the project. On Nov. 11, 1982 four investment bankers — First Southwest Co. of Dallas, Shearson American Express Inc., Rauscher Pierce Refsnes Inc., and E.F. Hutton Co. Inc. — submitted bond proposals to the five publicly-elected directors. Also, Howard Weil-Merrill Lynch gave a presentation at a later date.

Thursday the board made a decision. First Southwest Co. of Dallas, the lowest bidder, was chosen as the district's financial consultant for the expansion. First Southwest will charge the hospital $66,675 for a general obligation bond issue, or $120,010 if the directors should elect to fund the project with revenue bonds. No decision on the type of financing has been made.

According to Ray Branson, MMH president, the expansion program is more urgent than the $3.4 million state-approved chemical dependency facility; therefore, financing arrangements for the expansion were made. On March 4, the Texas Health Facilities Commission is expected to hand down its decision on the certificate of need for the expansion.

In other financial business, the directors paid MMH $71,815.71 and $22,804.36 to Lubbock General for December's indigent care. The directors also paid $1,236 to the City of Midland for computer services, $207 to the Midland County Tax Appraisal Board for a bill it paid for a newspaper notice of the tax rate, and $1,241 to Ted Kerr for legal services.

Directors approved MMH's second quarter $177,000 capital equipment list, $60,000 for physician-recommended equipment and $60,000 if the Midland Memorial Foundation is unable to raise the remaining funds for radiology equipment. In addition a bid for physical therapy equipment was accepted for $6,595.

The directors also reviewed December's financial statement. According to Dale Miller, MMH vice president of finance, gross patient revenues totaled $2,382,161, and exceeded budget by $66,795. Total expenses were $2,212,986, and were $43,069 over budget. The net loss from operations after interest and depreciation was $81,793 compared with a budgeted $93,768 loss, a favorable variance of $11,975. Salaries and benefits exceeded the budget by $76,328, a result of FTE's being over budget and overtime exceeding budget by 3.6 percent. Referrals to collectors totaled $205,349, for December, bringing the 1982 bad debt to $854,494.

MMH will scramble for lost dollars

said. "An attempt was successful in settling a two-year-old claim, recovering $50,000 of an $88,000 bill. In another bill, an individual voluntarily paid $20,000 on his daughter's bill. This is a very unusual occurrence."

Turning to the status of MMH's state-approved $3.4 million chemical dependency facility, Eugene Abbott, trustee, said that the results of a declaratory ruling by the Texas Health Facilities Commission will not be announced until Feb. 8. The ruling will determine if MMH should "show intent" in constructing the facility. MMH is indirectly involved in a suit filed by American Medical Corp., Parkview Hospital's owner, which was denied a certificate of need for a similar facility.

Because Abbott said MMH attorneys have advised the hospital to "achieve development in case they (THFC) determine the clock has been running," MMH will have to settle the question of land and financing of the chemical dependency facility by Feb. 9.

In a self-evaluation of the board of trustees, several areas need improvement, according to Roy Campbell, trustee who presented the results of the evaluation to the board.

The evaluation results included:

—A lack of women, ethnic and racial minorities on the board.

—A low score in board orientation and information on legal responsibilities.

—A high endorsement of educational programs for the board.

—A high score in the hospital's mission statement.

—A lack of committee reviews in the area of goals and action plans.

—An uneasiness about responsibilities of making decisions on medical staff appointments.

—A lack of comfort on communications with the community.

—A need for more feedback from the medical staff about board decisions.

In board action, the trustees approved the utilization review plan, which is a change in the methods of reviewing Medicaid patients' records. According to John Holt, MMH vice president of quality assurance, the plan is a response to Medicaid directives. The utilization review committee, composed of physicians, will begin reviewing every Medicaid patient record every three days, as opposed to reviewing the records on average length of stay for a particular diagnosis.

"Overall, its a move to review the records more frequently," Holt said.

MMH board discusses new CAT scan

And that's the message Ray Branson, Midland Memorial Hospital president, gave the board of directors Thursday in a discussion requesting the purchase a $1.2 million total body fourth generation computerized axial tomography (CAT) scan.

MMH's head scan, which was updated to a "second generation" full body CAT scan last year, has become obsolete. With MMH facing the loss of about $500,000 in Medicare reimbursement funds this year, productivity is high on the list of priorities to make up the dollars. According to Branson, MMH could make more money if it had the most modern "fourth generation" CAT scan.

Branson said physicians who ordered CAT scan tests for patients asked him to approach the board about the purchase. Currently, most patients needing a body scan must leave Midland for the diagnostic test which is a non-invasive radiologic technique, utilizing a computerized X-ray machine to obtain a clear, cross-sectional view of the body. Branson said the fourth generation CAT scan is 10 to 20 times faster than MMH's second generation CAT scan, which requires patients to lie still, holding their breath for some 50 seconds.

"Ours can't diagnose, for example, the back," Branson said. "Right now we have to use invasive procedures for (the diagnosis of) a milligram."

Branson said the fourth generation CAT scan would be "extremely beneficial to those patients at the Allison (cancer) Center in detecting soft tumors." He added that physicians were "more than willing to talk to the board members" about the purchase.

"As far as I know there is not a fourth generation CAT scan in the Permian Basin," he said. "I think Lubbock has one. Some patients are going to Dallas, but most of our patients are now going to Odessa, where they have a slightly more sophisticated CAT scan than ours."

Branson said a pre-application was filed with the Texas Health Facilities Commission, but a certificate of need (CON) must be filed before June 30. A certificate of need is required by the state for any equipment exceeding $600,000.

Branson said he anticipates that the request will be a "streamline CON process" because "it is a replacement and it is possible to get a declaratory ruling" from the THFC that will allow the purchase. Branson said he is not sure how the $1.2 million CAT scan would be funded. "We expect to fund it out of operations," Branson said. "But it's not unusual to attach a piece of equipment to a bond issue...and we accept donations."

ing that his companion lead them in a prayer as "I've never belonged to an organized religious group — I'm a Church of Christ."

THE SECOND soldier, while noting that he was an agnostic, nevertheless volunteered to pray. "I used to live next door to a Catholic Church and I used to hear 'em pray a lot," said the man. "I think I can still remember it."

Kneeling in the foxhole, said Blakely, the man bowed his head and reverently repeated: "Under 'B'...Seven! 'I'...thirty-eight!"

Blakely noted that every community — Andrews not excepted — has its ecumenical council, in which the priests, preachers and rabbis "rent a room at the Holiday Inn to study the world's problems. You know what they do? They play poker."

Recounting a story of a gambling raid on just such an ecumenical "meeting", Blakely said an officer barged in and asked in order a Baptist preacher, Catholic priest and Jewish rabbi if he had been gambling.

"And you," said the officer to the rabbi, "have you been gambling?"

"With who?" he replied.

Also recognized during festivities were the 1983 board of directors. In addition to Pennington and Brevard, they included Ira Adams, first vice president; Lou Williams, second vice president; Kitty Bristow, treasurer; Louie A. Cure, manager; Les Brown, Jimmy Martin, Snyffy Tom, Bob Isbell, Henry Mohr, Jerry Wade and Neal Wade.

If the characteristics which made the annual banquet a success — wit, creativity, responsibility and unification — are retained in this city during the coming year, it seems likely those directors will see a continuation of a "community of quality."

Travis Elementary School grew from 641 students in October 1982 to 675 students this month. "That means Travis is still growing fairly rapidly," he explained. "So we feel that the projection done in October is no longer valid to Travis. So we do another one."

HE POINTED OUT that Burnet Elementary School had an October enrollment of 730 students which declined to 711 in January.

"Last year was easy — everything grew," he said with a sigh. "This year, it's a dichotomy — some are growing and others are not growing."

Even the most trustworthy formulas and ratios for predicting growth trends and patterns are useless when a city such as Midland has such a sporadic population movement, he said.

For example, Cook said October is usually a period of peak enrollments. Various factors contribute to this, such as the number of migrant families who move back to Midland after the summer season ends.

"Those families who follow the agriculture — Midland seems to have a lot more than people realize — but many of them don't make the whole migration trail and that threw us off at first. It is harder to identify those than it is to identify those that do follow the migration trail. Those kids are actually here (in town) but they just don't enroll in school for about two or three months (after school has begun)."

ALSO, COOK pointed out, a general decline in local activity seems to appear at a specific time.

"For some reason, there seems to be a slowing down in the period of time between October and the end of the year," he said. "Companies may have exceeded budgets and may be laying off people. The slowdown is related to the economy of the area — to which it did not apply during the last three years. But during other years, we reached a peak in October and that seems to be returning this year."

Total district enrollment in October 1982 was 17,899; this month it is 17,625.

Although a district-wide trend usually can be predicted, the changes within the different grades are another variable kept in mind while projecting enrollments.

High school enrollment levels usually decline during the first semester because of mid-term graduates and drop-outs. On the other hand, most high school students rarely move to another school during the year, he said.

There is usually an increase in enrollments between kindergarten and first grade, he continued, reasoning that some children do not attend kindergarten or attend a private kindergarten before enrolling in public first grade. There also is a big growth factor between sixth and seventh grades because of students coming into the public schools from the private schools. Cook said usually 75 to 100 more students enroll in the junior highs every year.

THE PROJECTED increase in student enrollment, which ran as high as 10 percent during the last few years, is less than 3 percent for 1983-84, Cook said. Because fewer families are expected to move into the district, the move-in factor will be small. However, the roll-up factor, or the number of students currently in the district who will move up into the next grade, still will be taken into account.

The formula used in projecting roll- up enrollment is total present enrollment minus the number of graduating seniors plus the projected number of kindergarten students.

Birth rates, used in projecting kindergarten enrollments, don't always take everything into account, Cook cautioned. For example, the children of women born during the baby boom in the mid-1950s would be entering kindergarten next year if they were born when their mothers were around 20 years old. While that has been the trend in the past, times are changing.

"If that's typical of the whole nation, then it can happen here," Cook said. "But in Midland, it may be exaggerated bacause of the move-in of younger families.

"There are a number of things that change," he continued. "Women now are waiting later to have their first child. People just don't follow mathematical patterns. Just when you get all of the buildings built, there is a decline in enrollment. And just as soon as you think you should tear a school down and make it into a park or something — this kind of thing happens.

However, without the aid of computers in which to input present growth trends, the manual system that has been used will have to suffice.

"This technique has served us particularly well up to this point," he added. "The ratios work just beautifully statistically, but they fail to take into account what is going on right now. All we can do is make a projection — and then hope they come out right.

"In most instances, we've come close enough so that the principals can have adequate staff," he said, adding that he couldn't recall missing a total enrollment projection by more than 5 percent. "It's a whole lot better than a wild guess — even though it is not that sophisticated statistically."

Man sentenced to 10 years for assault

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

A 31-year-old ex-convict who turned down a five-year prison term under a district attorney's plea-bargaining agreement and who opted to plead guilty to aggravated assault with a pool cue and let the jury set punishment was meted a 10-year prison term by a jury in Midland's 238th State District Court on Thursday.

The man, Pierce Leonard Johnson Jr., had been charged with hitting Darrold Lynn Hunt on the head with a cue stick last Oct. 9 on the parking lot of an eastside bar. He admitted his guilt to the six-man, six-woman jury, and then elected to have the jury set his punishment, which could have ranged between two years and 20 years in the state penitentiary and which could have included a fine to up to $5,000. Due to a prior conviction, he was not eligible for probation.

In its almost 1½ hours of deliberation on the punishment phase of the trial, the jury had submitted two questions to the presiding judge, Judge Vann Culp.

"How long was defendant incarcerated in Huntsville — actual month?" a note from the jury foreman read.

Johnson had served time in the Texas Department of Corrections beginning in 1980 after he had pleaded guilty to aggravated assault with serious bodily injury by wielding a knife on April 23, 1979, and injuring Vernell Cooks. The original charge had been "attempted murder" but was reduced to the assault charge. He was sentenced to three years in prison.

The court's reply to the jury's query was: "The court, under the law, is not permitted to answer the question..."

In general, a prisoner will serve at least a third of his court-ordered sentence before he is paroled. But a jury is not to consider how much actual time an inmate may spend in prison. That is determined by the Texas State Board of Pardons and Paroles.

The jurors, who apparently were considering levying a fine on Johnson, submitted another question to the judge but decided not to impose a fine evidently after they figured the court could not enforce collection of the fine. The question was: "If a fine is imposed, must it be paid before the prisoner is released and from what sources?"

"Ladies and Gentlemen," the judge responded in writing, "the answer to your question is 'no.'"

The case was prosecuted by Assistant District Attorney Bill Cooper. Defending Johnson was Midland lawyer Ralph Noyes.

As the jurors filed from the courtroom after settling on the 10-year prison term, they looked straight ahead, didn't even glance at the unsmiling defendant, and no one on either side of the case said "thank you" to the jurors or shook their hands. The judge, however, did thank the jurors for their service to the community and noted that their daily jury-duty pay had been increased from $6 to $10.

DEATHS

La Vonya Dunn

Graveside services for La Vonya Boone Dunn, 68, of 3618 W. Ohio Ave., were to be at 3:30 p.m. today in Resthaven Memorial Park with the Rev. Fred Tinsley of the Episcopal Church of the Holy Trinity officiating. Handling arrangements is Newnie W. Ellis Funeral Home.

She died Tuesday afternoon in a Midland hospital.

Mrs. Dunn was born Aug. 20, 1914, in Portales, N.M. She spent her early life in the Texas Panhandle and southwest Oklahoma. She moved to Midland in 1934. In 1936, as Miss Midland, she represented the city at the Texas Centennial in Dallas. She was married Oct. 25, 1940, to James E. Dunn, moving to Houston afterward.

In February 1942, when her husband joined the Navy, Mrs. Dunn moved to San Francisco where she worked for Matson Ship Lines. In 1943, she moved to Washington, D.C., and later to Boston, Mass. After her husband was discharged, they moved to Dallas and later to several other Texas cities. In 1957, they moved from Lubbock to Midland. She was a member of the Episcopal Church of the Holy Trinity.

Survivors include her husband; a sister, Ruth Runnels of Midland; and several nieces and nephews.

The family has requested that memorials be directed to the Pink Ladies, Midland Memorial Hospital, 2200 W. Illinois, Midland, 79701.

Ernest Shepherd

Services for Ernest Shepherd, 84, of 2800 N. Midland Drive, were Thursday in the Newnie W. Ellis Funeral Home chapel with the Rev. Kenneth James, associate minister of St. Luke's United Methodist Church, officiating. Burial was in Fairview Cemetery.

Shepherd died Tuesday evening in Midland nursing home after a lengthy illness.

Oralia Lopez

BIG SPRING — Rosary for Oralia Lopez, 39, of Big Spring will be recited at 8 p.m. today in Nalley-Pickle Funeral Home's Rosewood Chapel. Mass will be said at 1 p.m. Saturday in the Immaculate Heart of Mary Catholic Church. Burial will be in Mount Olive Memorial Park.

Mrs. Lopez died Thursday in a Big Spring hospital.

She had lived in Big Spring for 19 years.

Napoleon was defeated on Oct. 17, 1805, in Austria at Ulm.

Reverend reports theft of weapons

In burglary complaints to city police during the past 24 hours, the Rev. F.W. Johnson of 2208 California Ave. said assorted weapons and change worth a total of $1,392 were taken in a break-in at his residence. Entry was gained through a bedroom window.

And Macel Wilson, 3517 Hyde Park, told officers a TV set and jewelry vauled at $900 were stolen from her home after someone broke a bedroom window to gain entry.

Cranberries grow

Cranberries today are grown in five states: Massachusetts, Wisconsin, New Jersey, Washington and Oregon. But Massachusetts and Wisconsin together account for 80 percent of the national crop.

Canine Unit to be at mall

The Canine Unit of the Midland Police Department is scheduled to appear at Midland Park Mall today and Saturday in conjunction with the "Safety's Sake" program being sponsored by the Mall.

Officers of the unit will cover areas of pet care and how to avoid being bitten. The officers also will outline the use of dogs in police work and will demonstrate "bite work" with their animals.

Demonstrations are scheduled for 2 p.m. and 4 p.m. on both days in the court area of the Sears store in the mall.

Saddle Club Introduces Polo Park

Polo Park and Saddle Club amenities include: total electric kitchens with ice-makers and self-cleaning ovens, fully carpeted and draped units, individual private storage, fireplaces, microwave ovens, ceiling fans. In addition to your generous interior features the only indoor racquet ball court in an apartment community, combined with lighted tennis court, exercise room and hot tub, complete your recreational needs.

To reach Polo Park:
Travel west on Loop 250, right on Polo Parkway, or take Garfield north past 250 and follow Polo Park signs. 4700 Polo Park.

To reach Saddle Club:
Take Big Spring Street to Loop 250; travel west and turn right on "A" Avenue and turn into the exclusive Saddle Club. 5101 North Avenue A.
