Democrats rallied by Cuomo's speech

By MIKE FEINSILBER
Associated Press Writer

SAN FRANCISCO — As Walter Mondale courted his two opponents face to face, the Democratic National Convention embraced a new hero in New York's Mario Cuomo, who rallied the party to his vision of the future and his vow — "Democrats did it, and Democrats can do it again."

The payoff for Mondale's dramatic move — a personal session alone with his two rivals for the nomination — could come tonight if the convention sidesteps a brawl over philosophical differences as it drafts a platform.

Aides to the three candidates — Mondale, Gary Hart and the Rev. Jesse Jackson — are to meet today to see if they can resolve their bosses' differences over party planks on the use of force abroad, on justice, jobs and peace.

But Monday night belonged to Cuomo, New York's governor, a new face on the national scene, pegged by the professionals as a likely presidential contender in the some future Democratic convention.

He electrified the delegates by recalling their party's vision of a compassionate government that honors hard work. His delivery and timing rivaled the artful Republican in Washington, Ronald Reagan.

"In our family are gathered everyone from the abject poor of Essex County in New York to the enlightened affluent of the gold coasts of both ends of our nation," rang out Cuomo, son of immigrants.

"And in between is the heart of our constituency — the middle class, the people not rich enough to be worry-free but not poor enough to be on welfare, those who work for a living because they have to."

"No nominee can be elected without help," said Mondale, addressing 300 reporters after the hour-long session. Hart said he thought a compromise could be reached on his plank — seeking to pledge a future Democratic president to commit no U.S. forces in Central America and the Mideast unless U.S. interests are jeopardized.

Jackson was ambiguous. "We reserve the right to be competitive to the very end," he said. But he also said: "There is now a need more and more to cooperate."

His planks cover jobs, justice and peace. He seeks an absolute cut in defense spending, not merely the slow growth that Mondale advocates.

Jackson, who won 18 percent of the primaries' votes, addresses the delegates tonight, something candidates for the nomination used not to do.

His speech could answer the question of his role in November. Party professionals think Jackson is capable of delivering millions of votes from newly registered blacks.

All eyes on San Francisco

By BARBARA GAMAREKIAN

WASHINGTON — This city is populated with political warhorses who begin to champ at the bit when political convention time rolls around. So for those Washingtonians who are linked in even a peripheral way with Democratic politics but find themselves in Washington this week instead of in that city by the bay, there is a definite sense of being on the B Team.

Whether lobbyist, lawyer, journalist, campaign worker or eager intern, everyone seems to have left town for the Democratic National Convention in San Francisco.

"Nobody is here," said Mel Krupin, whose restaurant is a major gathering spot for politicos and journalists. "Listen, they did better than a war scare. The media is gone, the assistant media is gone, the pollsters are gone — we have nobody to talk to anymore."

Krupin is exaggerating, of course. The Republicans are here, although, with Congress in recess until after the Democratic convention, it is even tough to find very many of them around town.

Bill Greener of the Republican National Committee says that he, "like all the rest of the political junkies around here," plans to settle down in front of his television set "to watch the madness that will be transpiring in San Francisco."

A variety of Washingtonians will be participating in one way or another in that "madness."

A third of Washington's diplomatic corps is in San Francisco; Mayor Marion S. Barry is in San Francisco; the Senate Press Gallery's staff is in San Francisco; more than 200 Democratic members of Congress are in San Francisco as well as countless congressional staff workers. A phone call to the Democratic National Committee produces a recorded message beginning: "You have reached the offices of the Democratic National Committee. We are at the Democratic National Convention in San Francisco."

Even the city's professional party organizers, such as Carolyn Peachy and Gretchen Poston, have packed their guest lists and finger bowls and headed west to organize such gatherings as the party for former President Jimmy Carter at Maxwell's Plum and The Washington Post-Newsweek party, both on Monday.

Meantime, things are so quiet in the capital that "even the White House doesn't have a state dinner scheduled until after election on November 13th," said Vince Becht of Ridgewell's Caterers. For want of anything better to do, Becht planned to "check out" the catering competition in San Francisco by visiting "a number of our lobbyist clients who are having convention parties."

Speech inspires Midland delegate

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Assistant City Editor

It was like hearing words from the past when New York Gov. Mario Cuomo delivered the keynote address Monday night before the opening session of the Democratic National Convention.

Dallas Willis of Midland, a Texas delegate, heard many similarities between Cuomo's speech and those of Franklin Delano Roosevelt.

"It was shades of Roosevelt," said Willis, whose first vote for president when he was young went to FDR. "It was the kind of speech that basically means the people of America will have a chance to once again regain the care of a responsive administration. That was something like FDR's — a caring administration," Willis said this morning in a telephone interview from San Francisco.

"It means there is someone now who will care for those who don't have anyone to watch out for them."

Willis said Cuomo pointed out the failings of Reagan's administration — the failure to do something about the nuclear holocaust, the failure to do something about the environment and total destruction of the Social Security system.

Cuomo also highlighted Reagan's "stocking of the Supreme Court for years to come if he is re-elected. It would mean destruction of American life for the middle class citizen in judicial decisions."

Texas leaders hard at work

By O'LENE STONE
Hearst News Service

SAN FRANCISCO — The bay breezes wafting over the Democratic National Convention here are winter-time cool by Texas standards, but they're not keeping state party leaders from working up a political sweat as they labor to unify Texas Democrats behind Walter Mondale and Geraldine Ferraro.

U.S. Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, whom Mondale last month considered as a potential running mate, warned the 200 Texas convention delegates yesterday that putting the state in the Democratic column in November will be a tough task that will require all the unity that can be mustered.

"We are the majority party when we're united andwe're going to be united!" Bentsen declared at a breakfast he hosted at a fashionable Fisherman's Wharf restaurant.

The gathering was clearly designed to show the unity that Bentsen and other Texas party leaders have said must be molded.

Among the guests were State Comptroller Bob Bullock, seated at the same table with Gov. Mark White, who Bullock plans to challenge in the 1986 gubernatorial race; conservative U.S. Rep. Kent Hance of Lubbock, who chatted amiably with liberal state Sen. Lloyd Doggett of Austin, to whom Hance lost the U.S. Senate nomination in the June 2 primary runoff; and U.S. Rep. Martin Frost of Dallas, Gary Hart's Texas campaign chairman who wasallowed to address the delegation that is heavily pro-Mondale.

But the appearancee of unity and the conviviality displayed at the gathering did not hide the concerns and tensions that have been evident since the delegates began arriving during the weekend.

In an interview, Hance warned that conservative Democrats are still waiting for some signal that they're wanted and needed in the Mondale campaign.

"If they don't give some signs by the first Tuesday in November, there will be some signs on the first Wednesday of November," he said. It's possible for the Mondale-Ferraro ticket to take Texas and its 29 electoral votes, the third largest bloc in the nation, Hance said, "but it's going to be difficult."

During brief remarks at the breakfast, Hance told the overflow crowd that he had learned that campaign workers for Republican senatorial nominee Phil Gramm were contacting Hance backers seeking support and were using Hance's name without his permission. Hance swept conservative West Texas during the May and June primaries.

Then, in a joke that pointed out the sharp divisions in the party, Hance laughingly noted that Doggett "hasn't even used my name and I told him he could."

Dallas prepares for GOP gathering

The Associated Press

DALLAS — Workers are scurrying on a half-dozen fronts to finish putting a shine on Dallas and assure that the city will be in top shape for the opening gavel of the Republican National Convention.

And to ensure all goes well, several city representatives are in San Francisco this week to observe first hand the problems and situations that develop during the Democratic National Convention so Dallas will be as prepared as possible for the Aug. 20-23 GOP gathering.

The city has launched several efforts to shape up parks, hotels and restaurants, and city officials say that residents' concern about appearances for the convention has resulted in an unusually successful annual cleanup program in Dallas.

"We would like to see Dallas looking neat and clean as can be, and we expect it will look that way," said Charles Griffith, assistant director of the Department of Streets and Sanitation.

A "Haul a Heap" program to remove junk cars from city streets helped remove 2,430 cars in five months — as many as were removed in all of 1983, officials said.

An anti-litter campaign resulted in the removal of more than 1.6 million pounds of litter from city streets — more than triple the previous year.

"This wasn't geared specifically to the convention, but frankly we used the convention to help us involve people," Griffith said.

City officials, who have been rushing to complete resurfacing work on more than a dozen downtown streets, expressed confidence that all the roadways will be clear and new when the first presidential motorcade rolls by.

Local and state inspection teams have almost completed a final round of hotel restaurant and fire safety checks. All buildings and facilities except for two delegate hotels are expected to be in compliance with code requirements before the first conventioner arrives, officials said.

Since early May, at least 20 of the 46 Dallas hotels that will host convention delegates have been cited for a variety of fire code violations, most of them minor, fire department officials said.

Deputy Fire Chief Bob Melton said the Regent and Melrose hotels continue to be the only ones with fire code violations termed serious by inspectors. The problems involve access, Melton said, because not all rooms can be reached with a 150-foot fire hose.

A spokesman for the city health department said all the major delegate hotels received scores in the acceptable range in the latest round of inspections of restaurants.

Austin parks department among first ticketed for misuse of water

By KEN HERMAN
Associated Press Writer

AUSTIN — As residents of this parched city started getting used to mandatory water-use restrictions today, officials were left red-faced by one of the first $200 tickets issued — to the city Parks and Recreation Department.

"We need 100 percent compliance if this is to work," said Paul Hoffman, assistant to City Manager Jorge Carrasco. "I feel a little foolish."

The parks department was cited Monday, the first day of forced conservation prompted by bone-dry weather and an overtaxed distribution system, for watering two locations or the wrong day, officials said.

"Part of it is connected to the confusion of the first day," said Donna Brasher, manager of community services for the parks department.

Droppings bring out town's mule-headedness

The Associated Press

JEFFERSON, Texas — A petition to require that diapers be put on the mules that for 18 years have been pulling buggies through town has this small East Texas community in an uproar.

Those signing the petition are tired of the mules relieving themselves while they travel through town on a three-mile tour of antebellum homes and churches.

But a rival group quickly surfaced, declaring itself anti-diaper or, as an antique dealer put it, "I'm pro-poop."

The squabble started last month. Owners and employees of businesses on Lafayette Street in downtown Jefferson started a petition asking that the mules used to pull the buggies wear diapers — a baglike apparatus worn by police horses in New Orleans and other cities.

"This is a small town," said City Manager Sara Hernandez. "When something starts like this, everybody just chooses up sides."

"Those mules should be wearing diapers," said Van Clark, 40, owner of an antique store on Lafayette Street and a signer of the petition.

The petition asks that a city ordinace be designed "to control manure from commercially used domestic animals" while traveling on property owned or controlled by the citizens of Jefferson.

The anti-diaper petition has drawn its strongest support from operators of antique stores who find the droppings "quaint" and "rustic."

"I'm pro-poop," antique dealer Bob Haynes declared. "Quite frankly, most of our tourists are city people. They don't object. They consider it part of this sleepy country town."

In the past several weeks, the dispute has turned into one of the dirtiest political fights that local residents can remember.

Vandals threw manure at the stores of merchants who refuse to join the pro-diaper movement, and Mullins called the Marion County sheriff's department last week after a wheel flipped off of one of Mullins' carts.

"I think it was vandalized by somebody during the night," Mullins said.

Showers are forecast through Wednesday in a band stretching from the Gulf of Mexico to the East Coast and through Maine. Showers also are expected in an area from California to Montana, Arizona and New Mexico, according to the National Weather Service.

Partly cloudy skies, slight winds forecast for Basin

From Staff and Wire Reports

Once again the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport is calling for a less-than-20-percent chance of isolated thunderstorms tonight and late Wednesday afternoon.

Partly cloudy skies are expected to offer Midlanders some relief from the sun, but slight winds from the southeast won't do much to cool the expected mid-90s high. Lows in the middle 60s are predicted.

Monday's high was 94, seven degrees below the record 101 for that date in 1980. The overnight low of 66 was six degrees above the record 60 set in 1936.

STATE

Widely scattered showers developed along a weak cold front in North Texas early today, and forecasters predicted rainfall would continue in the area through Wednesday.

The slow-moving cold front stretched east to west across North Texas and into the High Plains. Showers and thundershowers were also scattered over the Panhandle and northern High Plains.

Skies were mostly cloudy over the northern half of Texas ahead of the front. Southern sections of the state reported mostly clear skies.

Winds were generally south at 5 to 10 mph, and light and northerly along the Red River, the Panhandle and the northern High Plains.

Low temperatures ranged from 70 degrees at Amarillo to 83 at Abilene, Stephenville and Waco. Most readings were hovering in the 70s and 80s.

Scattered thunderstorms should again form over the northern half of the state through Wednesday, with partly cloudy to mostly cloudy skies in the region. Mostly sunny skies were expected to prevail over the southern half.

A 20 percent chance of thunderstorms was forecast for North Texas by the National Weather Service. Highs were expected near 102 degrees, with the low Wednesday in the middle 70s and the high in the upper 90s.

NATION

Severe thunderstorms moved through the southwestern states and across parts of the Southeast. In northern Louisiana, thunderstorms brought high winds and rain and some streets were flooded in Shreveport, La., where more than 1⅓ inches of rain fell.

ANZUS must have access

WELLINGTON, New Zealand (AP) — The United States and Australia said today that U.S. military forces must continue to have full access to New Zealand's ports and airfields if their three-nation defense pact is to survive.

A communique issued after two days of talks among the alliance partners said, "access by allied aircraft and ships to the airfields and ports of the ANZUS members was reaffirmed as essential to the continuing effectiveness of the alliance."

ANZUS stands for Australia, New Zealand and the United States.

U.S. Secretary of State George P. Shultz met privately later in the day with David Lange, who will become New Zealand's next prime minister following the victory of his Labor Party in Saturday's elections.

The party has pledged to ban visits by U.S. nuclear-powered warships and conventional warships carrying nuclear weapons, and Lange says all U.S. warships will be banned if the United States continues its policy of refusing to say which warships carry nuclear weapons.

Shultz said the talks were "cordial and worthwhile" but declined to give any details. "I think the net of it is that we'll work together cooperatively, across the board...," he told reporters before starting his return trip to the United States.

Lange said there would be a continuing "association and dialogue" between the two nations. However, Australian Foreign Minister Bill Hayden, who met with Lange just before Shultz did, said the New Zealand leader made it clear he would stick to the nuclear ban.

The defeated New Zealand National Party took part in the ANZUS talks with U.S. and Australian officials because the Labor Party has not had time yet to take power. The talks were scheduled long before a date was picked for New Zealand's elections.

Lange contends that visits by U.S. nuclear forces make New Zealand a possible target for a Soviet nuclear attack. He says the Labor government wants to stay in the alliance but without any nuclear involvement.

U.S. officials are concerned about losing access to New Zealand's ports, and warn that Labor's policies could mean the end to defense ties between the two countries, said a well-placed source at the talks who declined to be identified.

Restrictions by New Zealand could encourage other U.S. allies to follow suit, conference officials have said.

"It is obviously essential to any alliance that the military forces of the countries involved be able to have contact with each other," Shultz told reporters.

Shultz declined to say what action the Reagan administration would take if New Zealand does limit or ban U.S. warships. However, he did say the administration does not plan any retaliatory trade restrictions.

DELEGATE

Willis reiterated Cuomo's description of the nation's economy, saying that Reagan "has tremendous disregard for the economic welfare of this country with continued high deficits. Ronald Reagan has totally broken his promise to balance the budget."

Cuomo's speech ignited not only the Texas delegation, according to Willis, but all the delegates. "You wouldn't believe the kind of response he got. The Texas delegation liked the deficit part, the restoring of economic sanity in the country."

Judging Cuomo's performance, Willis said he thinks the New Yorker stands a good chance of taking a role in national government in the future. "The man has a way of putting words together, a lot like what Roosevelt used to do."

President Carter who spoke prior to Cuomo had a good speech, according to Willis. "He pointed out things the administration has done to destroy his programs."

Not making the headlines were the Credential Committee and Resolutions Committee reports being adopted without fanfare, he noted.

Willis arrived in San Francisco Saturday and said he's only viewed one demonstration and that was a candlelight march for peace involving about 100,000 people. "There's always something going on out here," he said."

Along with other Texas delegates, he was to take a tour of the wine country this morning. In addition, he's been making the rounds of parties, he said.

"But duty calls first," he said. "We work hard and we play hard."

WATER

To cut water use, the city has devised a five-day lawn watering rotation based on the last digit of addresses, with violators facing a $200 fine. By 9 p.m. Monday, six tickets had been issued, officials said.

Some businesses were already feeling the trickle-down economic effect of the restrictions.

"Basically, it's putting us out of work," said Charles Fritsch, whose landscaping company was barred from using water from fire hydrants when installing lawns. "We're going to look outside of Austin for work so we can keep people on the payroll."

The water shortage has also dried up grass sales. Sarah Madden of The Grass Patch said sod sales had dropped about 50 percent since officials began discussing restrictions several weeks ago. Sod needs twice-a-day soakings for about three weeks, she said.

A meeting was set for tonight between city officials and landscaping interests to discuss the problem.

Although Austin has had a dry spring and other Texas cities are running low on water, the main problem here is a water treatment system that hasn't kept up with local growth. The restrictions wil remain in effect until rain replenishes water supplies and reduces strain on the system, officials say.

About 67 communities in central and southern Texas have taken water conservation steps this summer because a drought extending back into the winter months has severely dropped the levels of underground wells and reservoirs, meteorologists say.

The Austin restrictions do not curtail in-home use. Lawns can be watered any day with a hand-held hose, but can only be sprinkled from 8 p.m. until noon on the scheduled day for an address — a schedule which has apparently perplexed scores of residents.

About 70 calls had been received at the "water saver hot line" by 10 a.m. Monday, mostly from confused residents but also from some who wanted to snitch on suspected violators, said city employee Maria Gomez.

The first ticket was issued Monday to a northeast Austin man who was watering his lawn on the wrong day.

"He just said he was confused about what day he could water. While my partner was writing the (ticket), I gave him a sheet that had the watering schedule on it," said police Officer Bill Whitaker.

Prominent Austin-based political pollster and strategist George Shipley said he believes the "ball falls strongly in Gov. White's corner" to sell Texas on the Mondale-Ferraro ticket and that Ferraro "is sellable in Texas."

Shipley added the presidential race in the state "could be a lot closer than the conventional wisdom says."

Bentsen, in a news conference with the large contingent of Texas reporters covering the convention, sidestepped a question about concerns by conservatives that they have been "squeezed out" of the presidential campaign.

"Obviously, we start from behind in Texas — all the polls show that," Bentsen said.

"I think we would have been helped" had Mondale chosen a Texan or at least a southerner as his running mate, said Bentsen, one of two Texans Mondale is known to have considered as his ticket mate. The other was Mayor Henry Cisneros. "But they didn't choose to do that...it's an uphill fight, it's a tough fight. But it's a do-able deal."

The party moderate said Democrats have to "get back" some of the party's base of support that was lost to Reagan in the 1980 election when the Republican ticket picked up approximately 120 electoral votes in southern states that had traditionally fallen into the Democratic fold.

"We've got to get some of that back," Bentsen said. "Frankly, I don't see how we can win unless we get some of it."

Bentsen said last week that he was not disappointed that Mondale dropped him from his list of possible running mates before reaching his finaal decision. But some of Bentsen's closest advisors have said privately here that the senator was upset by the manner in which he was treated by Mondale's campaign.

The now deserted Senate Press Gallery is being run by three young interns headed by Scott Broyles, who has been working there only since May. His main business is fielding phone calls from the few people in Washington and elsewhere who do not seem to realize that it is convention time and the town is temporarily but a shell of itself.

The ambassador of Oman is in San Francisco. The ambassador of China is in San Francisco. The ambassador of Saudi Arabia is in San Francisco. The ambassador of Zambia is in San Francisco. In all, 45 diplomats have abandoned the capital for an on-site lesson in grass-roots American politics, said Mrs. Poston, the former social secretary for the Carter White House, who has helped to plan the diplomats' weeklong itinerary.

"We're supposed to be a Republican organization but we have eight staff people flying out," said Joan Braden of Gray and Co., a Washington lobbying and public relations concern that cagily has its lines out to a number of Democratic hopefuls. Some are working with Sen. Gary Hart, others with Walter F. Mondale. And on Tuesday night Gray and Company is to handle the Women's Campaign Fund reception at San Francisco's Hilton Hotel.

Over at the Kamber Group, another Washington communications concern, 15 staff members have headed west to produce a closed-circuit convention video program.

At Joe & Mo's Restaurant, which is usually jammed with Washington bigwigs, Mo Sussman seemed to sum up the emptiness and ennui that have overtaken the city. He lamented, "We're hoping for tourists, some traveling salesmen and a few lawyers who are working on divorce cases."

Will Fainter give his job to Weddington?

Hearst News Service

SAN FRANCISCO — The rumor mill of state government has moved approximately 1,500 miles west of Austin for the week, with most of the state's top elected officials in California for the Democratic National Convention.

The latest Austin rumor circulating among officials here yesterday was that Texas Secretary of State John Fainter is ready to step down from his appointive post and that, if he does, former Austin legislator Sarah Weddington is in line for the job.

Gov. Mark White, who appointed Fainter, one of his top strategists in his 1982 campaign, to the post in January 1983, said yesterday he had not spoken with Fainter about any resignation.

However, Fainter let it be known when he took the job that he considered it only temporary and that he intended to return to private business interests after a short stint as secretary of state.

Ms. Weddington, the director of the Texas State Office in Washington, said yesterday she's interested in an appointment. But, she noted, "there's not a vacancy at this point.

"The governor knows I'm interested in coming back to Texas. It would be a great honor to serve in that position. It'd be great if it works out," Ms. Weddington said.

Texas woman threatens to jump from San Antionio TV tower

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — A woman apparently distraught because of an argument with her common-law husband climbed a steel television tower early today and threatened to jump to the downtown street below.

The woman climbed the abandoned KENS-TV tower about 6 a.m. and was still perched on it at 9 a.m.

The tower is next to the San Antonio Express-News, which now owns the former KENS building.

"She apparently had a family distrubance this morning with her husband," said police spokeswoman Delte Dascomb.

Her common-law husband sat in a police squad car at the scene while negotiators tried to convince the woman to climb down.

The woman had climbed 175 feet up on the 250-foot red-and-white tower, then descended a few feet to talk with an Emergency Medical Service worker.

At one point she yelled at officers demanding that an ambulance and paddy wagon be removed from the scene. Authorities complied with the demand.

Bentsen: Democrats will win Senate race

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Texas Sen. Lloyd Bentsen predicts the Democratic Party this November will recapture control of the U.S. Senate, a forecast that cheered the party's presidential candidate.

"I was very pleased by ... the optimism he (Bentsen) has about those candidates and their elections and the possibility of returning that Senate to Democratic control," Walter Mondale said Monday after meeting with Bentsen and several of the party's Senate candidates.

Bentsen, 63, is chairman of the Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee. He was one of the people Mondale interviewed as a possible vice presidential candidate.

The Democrats lost control of the Senate for the first time in two decades in 1980 as President Reagan led the GOP to victory.

But at a meeting of the Texas delegates to the Democratic National Convention on Monday, Bentsen said he is confident party members will put aside their differences this autumn and that the unity will be felt in key Senate races nationwide.

"We are the majority party when we're united, and we're going to be united," Bentsen said. "When we pull it together, there's nothing that can stand in our way." He predicted that when Mondale is sworn as president in January, "He's going to be looking down at a Senate with 51 Democrats."

Bentsen also downplayed speculation that Mondale's decision to choose New York Rep. Geraldine Ferraro as his running mate instead of Bentsen would eliminate chances of a Democratic win in Texas.

"We've got a tough fight ahead of us. The polls show us behind. Well, we've been there before," Bentsen said.

"I know that back in 1968 they said another fellow from Minnesota (Hubert Humphrey) couldn't carry Texas. He did."

Bentsen's backers — including Texas party chairman Bob Slagle, Gov. Mark White and state Treasurer Ann Richards — all had said Bentsen would help the party win in Texas and across the South. Bentsen said he was pleased to have been considered but told the Texas delegation to worry about beating Reagan, who he described as a president who rules by "photo opportunity" for the television cameras.

With Mondale, Bentsen said, "We're going to have a president who doesn't need to rely on photo opportunities.

"We're not going to have a president who cuts aid to the disabled and then goes to the Olympics for the disabled and passes the torch for a photo opportunity."

Bentsen said Democrats need to take the offensive against the incumbent, rather than let Reagan set the tone for the campaign.

"We've must be certain that the Democrats in this country prepare the agenda for this campaign and not Ronald Reagan," he said.

Group forcing vote on gay rights law

HOUSTON (AP) — A group opposed to two recently-passed gay rights ordinances has collected enough petition signatures to force a referendum on the laws, a spokesman said.

The Committee for Public Awareness had collected 36,000 signatures — 8,000 more than the required number — referendum petitions at area churches, Bill McGlashin, the group's executive director, said Monday.

The committee needs 28,127 signatures to overturn the ordinances that forbid the city to discriminate against homosexuals in its hiring practices. City council passed the laws in a close vote last month.

Under state law, a referendum may be called if petitions are signed by at least 10 percent of the number of registered voters casting ballots in the last mayoral election.

McGlahsin said he will continue to collect signatures until Thursday, the deadline for submitting the petitions to City Secretary Anna Russell.

"It looks like the people are really behind us, so we're going to work right down to the wire," McGlashin said.

He said 8,000 signatures were collected at area churches Sunday. He said a group of black ministers are supporting the referendum and that Bishop John L. Morkovsky, head of the Roman Catholic Diocese of Galveston-Houston, endorsed the petition drive last week.

Councilman Frank Mancuso, a leader in the drive, said that Bishop Morkovsky's position on the issue encouraged many people to sign the petitions.

"I think we are going to be successful," Mancuso said. "All of the churches are really working hard on this."

Not all Houston churches have joined in the drive. The Rev. William Hinson, pastor of the 12,600-member First United Methodist Church of Houston, said his congregation refused to participate in the referendum move.

"I think the Methodist stance is well known to the general public," said Hinson. "We consider the practice of homosexuality incompatible with Christian teaching.

"But the whole question of denying groups jobs with the city may involve human rights and civil rights," he said. "I think the (Methodist) churches did not want to risk getting involved with that."

Coast guard boat pulls an oil spill containment boom through the Houston Ship channel early Monday after the Venezuelan tanker Turpial had a fuel tank rupture when it ran aground Saturday night spilling about 33,000 gallons of fuel oil into the channel.

Port opens — at intervals

DEER PARK, Texas (AP) — Ships were allowed to come and go for the first time in three days in the nation's second busiest port, where a tanker ran aground and spilled 33,000 gallons of fuel oil, officials said.

Port of Houston authorities planned to let ships enter the turning basin at half-hour intervals between midnight and 7 a.m today, azd three ships were allowed to leave the basin Monday evening, a Coast Guard spokesman said.

Meanwhile, 25 ships waited Monday night for entrance into the port, which had been closed to traffic to keep the oil from spreading, said Coast Guard Petty Officer Bruce Rutherford.

The fuel oil spilled when the 520-foot tanker "Turpial," a Venezuelan tanker, ran aground Saturday night after apparently losing control of its propulsion system. The ship developed a leak and officials said about 33,000 gallons of heavy fuel oil escaped before the tanker crew could halt the spill.

Rutherford said the tanker later was hauled to the dock of the Oil Tanking Co. of Texas, where the vessel was reballasted to raise the damaged portion of the hull above the water level. He said the leaking tank has been emptied and no more oil is escaping.

Traffic was being restricted to help commerce without causing it to spread, Rutherford said. He said officials were studying the situation, but had not decided when the traffic restrictions would be lifted.

Rutherford said the cleanup was expected to be completed by midweek. The spill covers a three-mile segment of the 58-mile-long channel.

Experts from the Coast Guard and from a private clean up firm confined the oil with booms and were attempting to vacuum it from the surface of the water.

Officials said the tanker was between the docks of Diamond Shamrock Corp. and Shell Oil Co. on Saturday night when it struck the bank of the channel. Coast Guard officials said the vessel apparently lost control of its propulsion system and was run aground as a precaution.

Body identified was that of Taylor woman

TAYLOR, Texas (AP) — Two years after a disappearance that sparked a widespread investigation, the body of a Taylor woman has been found in her car in a creek about two miles from her home.

Williamson County Sheriff Jim Boutwell said the body was positively identified Monday but no ruling had been made on the cause of death. He said there was no evidence of foul play.

Ruby and Charles Cervenka were sure from the outset that the body found in the car was that of their daughter — 19-year-old Carolyn Cervenka, who called home shortly before her June 2, 1982 disapperance.

"We're just glad it's over," said Ruby Cervenka after the car was found Saturday. "Now we can put her to rest."

A man fishing in drought-lowered Mustang Creek found the car. Local officials have sent the remains to Dallas for positive identification.

"I am not prepared to say how that car got into that creek or how the person inside it died," said Ray Hardison, chief investigator for the Williamson County Sheriff's Office.

During the investigation, mass murderer Henry Lee Lucas was questioned. He has been held in Williamson County on other charges.

Lucas told officers he had abducted a woman from a convenience store north of Austin, killed her and drove the car to California, where he left the body. He described jewelry similar to what Cervenka was wearing when she disappeared.

Authorities said Miss Cervenka, an epileptic, could have suffered a seizure and lost control of her car. They also say it's possible she fell asleep at the wheel.

"It's been a nightmare," said Charles Cervenka. "The hardest part of this has been that we didn't know. We always hoped that someone would call and tell us that she was alive. You always visualize the worst and hope for the best."

The car was found about 25 feet from U.S. 79, a road frequently driven by the young woman. The doors were locked, the headlight switch was in the on position and the key was in the ignition.

Killer gets execution date

HUNTSVILLE, Texas (AP) — A California man convicted of killing a woman by burying her alive on a Galveston beach is scheduled to be executed Aug. 11, the Texas Department of Corrections said.

The execution date is the first for Chester Lee Wicker, convicted of killing a Beaumont woman in 1981, TDC spokesman Charles Brown said Monday.

State district Judge Larry Gist signed the execution order for Wicker, whose mandatory appeal of the capital murder conviction was rejected earlier by the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals.

Testimony at his trial indicated Wicker, a Californian, abducted Suzanne C. Knuth of Beaumont from a Beaumont shopping center April 4, 1980. She was driven to an isolated Galveston County beach, where she jumped from the car. Wicker, however, chased her down and choked her, then dug a hole in the beach and buried her, testimony showed. Autopsy results indicated the woman was alive when she was buried.

In their appeal, Wicker's attorneys contended his arrest and confessions that led to the discovery of Mrs. Knuth's body were illegal.

Gramm aide: Candidate recruiting Hance backers

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Texas Republican Senate candidate Phil Gramm's campaign is actively, but not deviously, recruiting backers of defeated conservative Democrat Kent Hance, an aide to Gramm says.

Hance, a delegate to the Democratic National Convention here, charged Monday Gramm staffers had been contacting his former campaign workers and implying that he would prefer not to support the party's U.S. Senate nominee, State Sen. Lloyd Doggett.

"They're trying to make the people think that I want them to be for Phil," Hance said of Gramm's organization. "My name's been dropped and it upsets me. I resent it."

Hance, a conservative congressman from Lubbock, lost to liberal Doggett by just 1,345 votes in their primary runoff. Afterwards, Hance endorsed Doggett as the party's nominee to succeed retiring Republican Sen. John Tower.

"They've been calling my people," Hance complained in an interview. "They've been saying, 'We know you were for Hance. He can't say anything, but....'"

In a telephone interview from Washington, Gramm spokesman Larry Neal denied Hance's charges, saying former Hance backers who have been recruited joined Gramm on philosophical grounds, not because of any "implication."

He said the names of 50 former key Hance backers would be released today as converts to Gramm's campaign.

"These folks were acting on the basis of principle and philosophy," Neal said. "We have been actively recruiting county coordinators, finance chairmen, leaders in Kent Hance's campaign. They want to join us."

He said he talked to Gramm on the floor of the U.S. House just before Congress recessed recently and "told him not to be using my name.

"He (Gramm) said they're not," Hance said.

Doggett says Ferraro won't be as much help

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Walter Mondale's choice of New York Rep. Geraldine Ferraro as a running mate won't be as much help to Democratic U.S. Senate candidate Lloyd Dogett as a Texan would have been, Doggett says.

"She won't be as much help as having (San Antonio Mayor) Henry Cisneros or (Texas Sen.) Lloyd Bentsen would have," Doggett said Monday.

Both Cisneros and Bentsen were interviewed by Mondale for the No. 2 spot on the ticket. Texas Democrats have said either would have been big a help to the party's chances in the nation's third-largest state.

Doggett is facing Democrat-turned-Republican Phil Gramm in the November election for the seat being vacated after two decades by retiring GOP Sen. John Tower.

But while Ms. Ferraro won't be as much help as a Texans she will have some strengths in Texas, Doggett said.

"There are many areas in the state where it will be helpful," he said, pointing to cities such as Dallas, Houston and Austin as examples.

Doggett also said he believes the Texas party can overcome the divisive primary election battle it went through before nominating him this year.

Doggett defeated U.S. Rep. Kent Hance in a runoff. The margin, after a statewide recount, was just 1,345 votes.

Delegates criticize Connally

Connally deserted the Democratic Party 10 years ago to join the Nixon administration. But he appeared in a television anchor booth at the convention Monday and triggered a demonstration by delegates.

Connally worked as a commentator in the glassed-in Cable News Network booth. He smiled as hundreds of people made thumbs- down gestures while chanting.

Houston delegate Billie Carr said she was among those to start the protest.

"Seeing him up there (in the booth) made me mad. I didn't think he ought to be here," she said.

"He's a traitor," said Elizabeth Lara of Houston. "We don't need him up there acting as if he's representing us. He's a Republican."

Connally was three times governor of Texas, running each time as a Democrat. But in the 1972 campaign he was active in Democrats for Nixon and later switched his party. He served Nixon as secretary of the treasury.

Eighty-year-old 'working girl' keeps on working

By MATT WOLF

LONDON (AP) — Claudette Colbert, Paramount Picture's "working girl" from the 1930s, is still working today at the age of 80 as the star of the London stage revival of Frederick Lonsdale's comedy, "Aren't We All?"

"It's good genes," she said recently to an audience at the National Film Theater, where author David Shipman interviewed her about a career that has included almost 100 films and plays.

"My mother lived until she was 94, and I think she died because she was bored. I try not to be," said Miss Colbert, her legendary twinkle undiminished by years.

Her appearance at the NFT climaxed a week-long retrospective of her work, and was immediately preceded by clips from two 1934 films: Frank Capra's "It Happened One Night" and Cecil B. DeMille's "Cleopatra."

"He had more sex appeal than any other man," she said. "He was sex rampant, everything a male should be."

Miss Colbert said that Constance Bennett and Miriam Hopkins had been Capra's initial choices to play the runaway heiress who finds herself hitchhiking alongside the down-at-the-heels journalist played by Gable.

"I did it, frankly, because I wanted to get within four feet of Clark Gable," she said.

Though the film ultimately won four major Academy Awards including best actress, Miss Colbert said that she did regret several of her career choices.

"I turned down the one film that gave Rosalind Russell her chance, 'His Girl Friday,'" she said. "My agent was furious, and he was right, but I wanted to do 'Arise, My Love,' so I had a good reason.

"But I should have done both."

Miss Colbert cited "Guest Wife" with Don Ameche, the 1955 "Texas Lady" and Cecil B. DeMille's "Four Frightened People" as some of her less memorable movies.

"'Frightened People' was the only DeMille picture that ever lost money — and I was in it," she said with a chuckle.

Miss Colbert admitted that she rarely goes to movies now since she makes her home in Barbados.

"We're just getting (Fred) Astaire and (Ginger) Rogers at the local drive-in," she said. "I have a video. That's what saves me."

"Besides, we're in an era of terribly serious movies and all that 'Star Wars' stuff," she said, complaining of the penchant in current films for "all those naked bodies with all those arms and legs."

"I tell you, it's not as sexy," she said, "although in 'It Happened One Night,' I wouldn't have minded a nude scene."

Among younger actresses, Miss Colbert singled out Jane Fonda and Glenda Jackson as personal favorites.

She praised the latter's Oscar-winning "A Touch of Class" as "one of the funniest movies I've ever seen.

"They were allowed to do things we couldn't do in my day," she said. "I was so jealous."

Of her peers, Miss Colbert paid tribute to Gary Cooper, "whom I adored," Ray Milland, Fred MacMurray and Bette Davis, to whom she lost the starring role in "All About Eve" because of a ruptured disc.

"Joe Mankiewicz, who wrote it, used to send me flowers attached to a pogo stick," she recalled.

Committed to her stage role in "Aren't We All?" through September with talk of a possible Broadway run, Miss Colbert played down suggestions that she return to the screen.

"I'm too old for everything," she smiled.

MTV running rival's video ads

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The USA Network, seeking to lure viewers to its "Night Flight" rock video show, is running ads on rival Music Television.

Proclaiming that "Night Flight" is "more than just music television," the 30-second spots show a viewer getting up and switching channels.

"I believe this is the first time this type of campaign is being done anywhere," USA Network spokesman Jamie Padnos says.

How did USA get MTV to run the ads? It didn't. But MTV induces local cable services to offer the channel by giving them ad time to sell, and USA simply went to the local operators in the 30 largest markets and bought the time from them.

"We have no comment on this whole thing," an MTV spokesman said.

North-South were using a 15-17 point no trump. Although North's hand was worth more than the 9 HCP it counted, a jump to game was still somewhat of a stretch. We would have been content with an invitational raise.

As it was, North-South reached three no trump with a spade stopper that, at best, can be described as shaky. South was Dr. George Rosenkranz of Mexico City, and he was not enamored of his prospects when West attacked with the king of spades. Fortunately for him, the defenders may have had a mix-up in their signalling methods, for East played his lowest spade to the first trick when he should have encouraged vigorously.

Declarer received a reprieve when West shifted to the king of hearts at trick two. Declarer won the ace and now he had to run eight more tricks without surrendering the lead. To accomplish that, he needed to score at least three club tricks. The recommended method is a finesse, so declarer led the queen of clubs and, when West played low, he rose with the ace to fell the king and bring home his contract with two overtricks.

The French have a saying: "The king of clubs is always singleton!" And the Rabbi's Rule states: "When the king is singleton, play the ace!" But neither of these was the reason for declarer's play. West had already shown the ace-king of spades and the king-queen of hearts with his first two leads. Had he held the king of clubs as well, he might have entered the auction. In any event, East was entitled to hold a card or two, and the only card of any importance not accounted for was the king of clubs. Hence the winning, if anti-percentage, play.

Networks debate issue of covering political events

By FRED ROTHENBERG
AP Television Writer

NEW YORK — Even before the opening of the Democratic National Convention, debate began on the non-political issue of gavel-to-gavel television coverage, which can be seen only on cable TV's Cable News Network and C-SPAN.

"We're not an entertainment network that only spends part of its program time on news," said Bob Furnad, political director of the Cable News Network. "We're a full-time news service, and this is a major news event...We'll show events unfolding live, instead of recapping them at the end of the day."

"Our basic theory is that the procedural stuff is not that interesting, and that's the stuff we won't be carrying live," said Joan Richman, a CBS vice president and executive producer for the network's political coverage.

Four years ago, CNN was just one month old when it took its cameras to the Republican Convention in Detroit. Planning was minimal, and CNN's anchor booth wasn't even enclosed by glass. No matter how cogent CNN's patter was, it couldn't be heard whenever the Republicans struck up their band.

Now, with a service reaching one-third of the nation's TV homes, CNN is a real alternative, whether the networks are in or out of convention coverage.

C-SPAN, THE public affairs network that normally trains its cameras on the daily workings of Congress, will combine non-stop coverage of the convention hall proceedings with reports on how the local San Francisco media are reporting the day's major events.

"We're interested in trying to fill in the blanks, providing the backbone of the coverage," said C-SPAN president Brian Lamb.

The networks, all of which went with the full convention treatment four years ago, have scaled down their coverage for 1984. CBS and NBC have always done gavel-to-gavel coverage. ABC had abbreviated coverage in 1968, 1972 and 1976.

The networks now believe that only by limiting live coverage to prime time can the wheat be separated from the chaff.

"The conventions have operated with the same four-day schedules, with the same events as 40 years ago," said Ms. Richman. "The real heart of the process — picking a nominee with the primaries — has changed very radically."

The networks will have their cameras whirring for the earlier nuts-and-bolts activities, taping them for later showing or cutting into other programs when events warrant. Ms. Richman said CBS' convention budget has been pared from its 1980 level, but she won't say by how much.

NBC'S JOHN Chancellor, who was co-anchor with David Brinkley in 1980 and now will be providing analysis, said viewers never needed wall-to-wall coverage. "With videotape, they won't miss anything," he said.

Anchor Dan Rather, who will usher in the post-Walter Cronkite convention era for CBS, agreed, even though, on principle, he still advocates more comprehensive coverage as "part of the dance of democracy."

Brinkley, who will anchor ABC's coverage after jumping from NBC in 1981, recalled how the networks were criticized when they were doing more comprehensive coverage. He said one newspaper wondered why the networks sometimes ignored platform proceedings.

"They compared our coverage to doing a baseball game and pointing the cameras at the grandstand," said Brinkley. "The big difference is that, at a baseball game, the audience is the spectators, while, at the political conventions, the audience makes all the decisions."

Brinkley pointed out that "conventions have a lot of long, dull stretches. I covered a lot of them with extreme difficulty. There's not much you can do with politicians giving resolutions of thanks to the fire department."

WHETHER THE coverage is on cable or the networks, it will focus on the delegates' floor play, as reported by the convention reporters — the foot soldiers of the broadcasts.

"Floor reporting is tiring work," said Chancellor, who covered his first convention in 1952. "A lot of floor reporters will be wearing running shoes...The narrow aisles are killers. Eight hours on your feet feels like rush-hour subway traffic.

"Another great problem is not just getting the story, but getting on the air with it," Chancellor added. "You have three competitors there from your own network competing for stories, as well as the reporters from the other networks."

Floor reporters now have separate frequencies to talk to the control center and the anchor, but Chancellor remembers in 1964 when he and NBC colleague Sander Vanocur, now with ABC, shared the same channel.

"We got tired of hearing each other talk," Chancellor said.

Acid rain update

For years now we've all been told that the pollutants spewing into the air were the primary cause of a seemingly new phenomenon: Acid rain.

Much of that opinion was based on a 1981 study conducted by the National Academy of Sciences. What that study said, in effect, was that the factories in the Midwest spewed tons of sulfur dioxide into the atmosphere where it combined with other pollutants and water vapor to become oxidized and acidic. It was then blown east by prevailing winds and rained down on the lakes and forests of New England, the mid-Atlantic states and Canada.

Since that study, however, more evidence has been gathered. Now, according to a recent issue of Fortune magazine, the new evidence indicates that "the portrait drawn in the National Academy study is incomplete.

In fact, the new information indicates that "... we now have grounds for suspecting that the following propositions are true: First, the pollutants in the rain are only a minor contributor to the high-level acidity found in some Eastern lakes and streams. Second, this acidity,... is mostly natural rather than industrial in origin. Third, the popular notion that acid rain is threatening forests ... is based less on substance than upon ill-informed conjecture and is probably wrong."

Well, this new study obviously should serve as the basis for tempering opinion about both the nature and danger of acid rain. But no one should walk out on a limb to accept wholeheartedly this scientific explanation. After all, it's obvious in light of this revelation that on previous occasions decisions have been made on incomplete scientific evidence and there's no reason to backtrack now until conclusive information is available.

Right now the United States is trying to stay abreast of the acid rain situation and to enforce regulations on the release of pollutants into the atmosphere. Until it's proven that such a course is not environmentally beneficial, we think it's best to follow the safe current course.

Bad news for Fritz

The U.S. economy under the Reagan administration continues to out-perform the expectations of many economists and Democrats. According to statistics released a few days ago by the Labor Department, unemployment in June fell to 7.1 percent, the lowest rate since April of 1980. The estimated 450,000 Americans who found work brought to 6.5 million the number of new jobs created since Mr. Reagan took office in 1981.

At the same time, inflation continues to hover below the 5 percent mark, giving Labor Secretary Raymond Donovan good reason to boast that "Americans are being put back to work without the pains of inflation."

Mr. Reagan hasn't had much help from the Democrats in getting the jobless rate down. His enterprise zone legislation, a three-year experiment to entice new businesses to depressed neighborhoods, got a last-minute shafting from House Ways and Means Chairman Dan Rostenkowski during conference committee deliberations on the so-called deficit-reduction bill.

Tip O'Neill's fiscal chief wrongly characterized the program as aiding big businesses, and, in typical "tax-and-spend" fashion, said that small businesses should get "quick cash" through government subsidies.

Adding insult to injury, Democrats in Congress have consistently balked at the president's plan to fight the continued high jobless rate among teenagers through a three-year, summertime reduction in the minimum wage for non-adults. This refusal comes in spite of its endorsement by a majority of the nation's black mayors.

The "A" report card for "Reaganomics," meanwhile, got a predictably gloomy reaction from Walter Mondale, the probable Democratic nominee. He could only say that the growth in jobs is "temporary" and that interest rates will rise and choke growth and "run us into another recession."

If this isn't merely sour grapes by Mondale, it is banking on business cycles. The average postwar boom has been approximately three years in duration. If this one is average, rising interest rates could contribute to a recession in 1985.

But so far, the U.S. economy has acted much more vigorously than people like Mondale had hoped. Although new housing starts have been hurt by the interest rate growth, commercial and industrial construction continues, according to recently released May growth figures. Economic growth outside the United States, spurred on by the two-year recovery here, may well help keep the U.S. economy going.

Finally, the good economic news could continue if there is a consistent monetary policy by the Federal Reserve Bank, if the president remains committed to halting the growth of the federal spending during a second term and if congressional leaders, like Rostenkowski, show a better-faith effort with the next deficit-reduction plan.

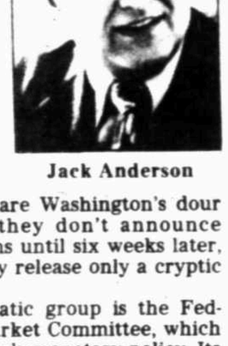
JACK ANDERSON

Secrecy shrouds economic elite

WASHINGTON — About 10 times a year, a mysterious council of 12 assembles in imperial grandeur in a Washington, D.C., conference room two stories high, with an 8-foot marble fireplace and a 10-foot crystal chandelier. Their deliberations are rivaled for secrecy only by the sacred proceedings in Vatican City when the College of Cardinals selects a new pope.



Jack Anderson

At least the cardinals send up wisps of smoke to let the waiting world know when they have taken a vote, and they announce their ultimate decision the day it is made. So secretive are Washington's dour dozen that they don't announce their decisions until six weeks later, and then they release only a cryptic summary.

The enigmatic group is the Federal Open Market Committee, which sets the nation's monetary policy. Its members are the seven governors of the Federal Reserve Board and five representatives of Federal Reserve bank presidents.

Although few outside Washington have heard of the Federal Open Market Committee, its Jovian decisions affect the course of the U.S. economy. The dozen eminences, who are finishing one of their two-day meetings today, influence what interest rates you will pay, how much money will be available for businesses to borrow, and whether inflation will once again eat up your earnings and reduce the value of your bank accounts.

The committee's obsessive secrecy has long irritated White House economists and congressional planners, who for six crucial weeks are reduced to reading tea leaves for clues to its momentous decisions. Legislation that would compel the Fed to disclose these decisions immediately has been introduced by Sen. Roger Jepsen, R-Iowa, chairman of the Joint Economic Committee, and Rep. Jack Kemp, R-N.Y., the economic guru of the House.

In late May, Jepsen thought he had secured Fed Chairman Paul Volcker's support for the disclosure bill. But a prerogative once clutched to the bosom is not easily given up, and Volcker is a master of cautious feelers, retractable bluffs and muted confrontations.

What Volcker told Jepsen in a private meeting has since been "clarified" by the Fed's congressional liaison office. Given the urgencies for secrecy and the imperatives of dignity, the Fed doesn't support prompt disclosure after all. Volcker has told some members of Congress that there's already too much sunshine on the Fed.

The Fed contends that the six-week lag is necessary to prepare the public for the policy decisions. But the memo comments: "The Fed's position, of course, is silly. Why should it take six weeks to justify a policy position? Either the Federal Open Market Committee had a basis for making a decision, which should be revealed, or they had no basis for making a decision, in which case nothing should have been done."

The six weeks of secrecy hampers the plans and predictions of economists in other federal agencies. Congress would also like to avoid economic surprises. Its handling of the federal budget might have been different, for example, if the legislators had known that the prime interest rate was going to rise four times in the past six months — decisions that increased the servicing cost of the national debt by $12 billion.

There's another reason some congressmen want to end the six-week blackout — the possibility that the delay gives big bond traders what amounts to insider information on future trends in the bond market.

Although no one seriously believes that Fed officials are leaking information to outsiders, the six-week delay gives knowledgeable bond traders time to look for clues that could be worth millions. The big bond houses have whole platoons of full-time Fed-watchers, who can make educated guesses on the Fed's next move from the signs. Small-business men can't afford such costly, constant scrutiny.

The real reason the Fed insists on secrecy, outsiders suspect, is to prevent Congress from exercising control over the agency. Knowledge is power, and the Fed doesn't want to share either one.

CONFIDENTIAL FILE: The Soviet bloc is putting pressure on the head of the International Labor Organization in hopes of delaying and softening a 320-page report by the United Nations agency that is highly critical of the Polish government's heavy-handed treatment of labor unions, particularly Solidarity. The report was the result of a lengthy ILO investigation of conditions in Poland. In March, the Soviet bloc pulled the same kind of pressure tactics on another UN agency, the Commission on Human Rights. That time they succeeded in getting a critical report on Poland watered down.

EVANS & NOVAK

No Sakharov rescue for Jesse

SAN FRANCISCO — The Rev. Jesse Jackson will be unable to tell delegates here about any dramatic rescue mission to the Soviet Union, thanks to opposition from the Soviet government.

Rowland Evans

Robert Novak

Secretary of State George Shultz and Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko may not agree on much, but are in accord on Jackson. Neither is enthusiastic about Jackson's proposed trip to end the political bondage of Soviet dissident Andrei Sakharov.

Gromyko has informed Shultz that the Soviet Union does not want and will not permit the Jackson rescue mission. That relieves President Reagan of deciding what to do about a Jackson trip.

ZBIG'S BOMBSHELL

A specially underlined and notated copy of Zbigniew Brzezinski's remarkable warning about surprise nuclear attack published in the July 10 Wall Street Journal was prepared that morning for President Reagan by White House national security aides.

Brzezinski is frequently consulted by high Reagan administration national security officials and occasionally visits the White House itself. He wrote that "strategic defense" against surprise attack is overdue. That is exactly what Reagan has been pressing for in his "Star Wars" proposals.

Brzezinski's role as President Carter's national security adviser, and his strong policy differences with former vice president Walter F. Mondale, give his words unique importance in the Reagan-Mondale political debate over war and peace.

HART'S SURPRISE

Up to the very moment that Walter F. Mondale picked Rep. Geraldine Ferraro for vice president, Sen. Gary Hart and his inner circle thought he was the leading contender.

"We never led them on," one Mondale insider told us. Nevertheless, the feeling within the Hart camp was that the primary election runner-up was the leading contender to be running mate — a perception shared by many Mondale supporters, especially in the labor movement.

A footnote: Pollster Pat Caddell, a Hart strategist who had boosted the senator for vice president, warned early on of potentially serious Democratic losses in Congress if Mondale put a woman on the ticket.

MONDALE'S COATTAILS

Joan Growe, Minnesota's secretary of state and the endorsed Democratic Farmer Labor Party nominee against Republican Sen. Rudy Boschwitz, dropped a candid if impolitic remark last week by questioning the strength of Walter F. Mondale's coattails, even in his home state.

Asked whether Mondale's name at the top of the ballot would help her defeat Boschwitz, Ms. Growe quickly explained that "Fritz doesn't excite many people" "never has." She doubted she would get much help from his "coattails," she told a small group of newsmen at breakfast July 11.

Growe, Mondale's longtime friend and ally, must beat State Treasurer Robert W. Mattson in the Sept. 11 primary before she can test her thesis that the Democratic presidential nominee won't be much use to her against Boschwitz.

BUMPERS' FEAR

Sen. Dale Bumpers explained to friends his hesitation about considering the vice presidential nomination in terms of his fears that the Mondale-led ticket could not carry his own state of Arkansas.

Bumpers worried that President Reagan may carry the state even with an Arkansan on the ticket. Such an outcome could seriously impair Bumpers' political future.

A footnote: The only Arkansan ever nominated on a national ticket was Sen. Joe Robinson, the Senate Democratic leader who was Al Smith's running mate in the Republican landslide year of 1928. Although Smith lost much of the South, Robinson enabled him to carry Arkansas — something Bumpers feared he might not be able to do for Walter Mondale.

CHARLEY REESE

Gingrich stresses sacrifice

Rep. Newt Gingrich, R-Ga., was the only speaker at a recent national security seminar who insisted that his remarks be on the record and for attribution.

Charley Reese

What he had to say was so impressive that had it been in another age, we would have all drawn our swords, kneeled and pledged our loyalty to him. Even in another age that would have embarrassed Gingrich, for he is a thinker, not a marcher, more Tom Jefferson than George Washington.

Since Gingrich is a conservative, you may have had little exposure to him. Over the years I've observed that it is remarkable how infrequent network television ever discovers a conservative doing or saying anything they consider news. My own previous impressing of Gingrich, based on a few brief news stories, was that he was a rigid rightwinger. It was an entirely erroneous impression.

Gingrich is the man who was outraged by the behavior of fellow Republican Rep. Dan Crane, and Democrat Rep. Gerry Studs. It was Gingrich who forced the House to censure them for their sexual misconduct with children. Gingrich is the man who was outraged when Rep. Jim Wright and nine other liberal Democrats wrote a letter to the dictators of Nicaragua apologizing for American opposition to their totalitarianism.

And it is Gingrich who saw the value of using cable television coverage of the House to speak directly to the American people. Gingrich is the ringleader of a group of young men who are waging an intellectual guerrilla war against the entrenched leadership and their bromides.

What really enraged the Democrats, however, was Gingrich commissioning a study of how radically left the national Democratic Party has become and then reading the study into the Congressional Record. Their deplorable record and their deplorable mis-reading of reality as reflected by their own words during the past 20 years opened their veins. That's what caused a nearly apoplectic House Speaker Tip O'Neill to accuse Gingrich falsely of questioning their patriotism.

"It's not their patriotism I question," Gingrich said. "It's their competence."

Competence loomed large in Gingrich's speech. He wants a competent society, a competent academia, a competent press and a competent military.

"I don't object to the press being leftwing, I object to it being ignorant," he said.

Gingrich, who has a Ph.D. in history, believes that the 19th Century model of America is inapplicable to the present circumstances. He thinks we must adapt our thinking an our institutions to conducting a long, drawn-out struggle of perhaps 100 years or more with the Communist bloc.

"If we can forge an alliance that stretches from Seoul, Korea, all the way around the globe to us, there is no way the Soviet Union can compete. There is just simply too much brain power, too much economic power, for them to withstand."

Gingrich's speech is too complex to do it justice in a column. He spoke repidly for an hour and then answered questions for an hour. The best way I can convey my own impression of it is to say that if you can imagine Jefferson, transported in time and able to focus his brilliant mind on our present problems, you will have an idea of why over 500 people from all over the nation gave him a long, loud, standing ovation.

Gingrich is not partisan in the O'Neill sense of the word nor is he ideological. He spouts no simple formulas for fixing the world. He paints no one as dragons to be slain. He proposed no magic legislative formulas. Rather he outlines problems and solutions which over a period of time could maintain both our freedom an our ideals. Nor does he see himself as a secular messiah.

His end message was that each individual American must assume his or her own personal responsibility for advancing, in whatever way they can, the cause of fredom. He said that we must be willing to take personal risks and to make personal sacrifices.

Like Teddy Roosevelt, Gingrich recognizes the necessity of working within the system of two-party politics but of doing it in creative and new ways. I think he sees himself as a Johnny Appleseed of ideas and certainly as a generalist, not a technician.

I'm not easily impressed but he impressed me. I had the distinct feeling that once more this magic mix of people we call Americans was producing the right leader at the right time. After all, that is the genius of a free society: That it is not encumbered by a crust of entrenched leadership but can, when the need arises, draw from the whole bank of idividual intellects and talents.

Threatening mom pleads innocent

MOORHEAD, Minn. (AP) — A woman who allegedly threatened her two children with beatings unless they shoplifted faces a hearing Aug. 6 after pleading innocent to possessing stolen property and a small amount of marijuana.

LaVonne Shirley Mageors, 36, remains free on a $5,000 bond after entering the innocent plea Monday in Clay County Court.

Law enforcement officials say that Mrs. Mageors' 16-year-old son and 12-year-old daughter slipped a note to a Fargo store employee saying they being forced to shoplift. With the aid of the children, authorities confiscated about $3,000 in stolen goods, said Deputy Sheriff Larry Costello.

Engineers disclaim responsibility

CLAYTON, Mo. (AP) — Two engineers say they "welcome the opportunity" to prove they were not responsible for the collapse of two walkways at the Kansas City Hyatt Regency hotel that killed 114 people three years ago today.

GCE International Inc. President Jack D. Gillum and Vice President Daniel M. Duncan appeared at a hearing Monday before Administrative Law Judge James B. Deutsch.

Missouri Attorney General John Ashcroft filed negligence charges in February, and if the charges are upheld the engineers could lose their licenses, be suspended from practice or be reprimanded.

Twin brothers accused of slayings

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A twin faces a maximum sentence of 27 years to life after he pleaded guilty to murder, while his brother awaits trial in another slaying.

Grant Christon, 22, pleaded guilty Monday to the June 1983 slaying of Lamont Norwood, and is to be sentenced Sept. 6.

Christon's twin, Kent, and another man are awaiting trial for the murder of a woman who was to testify against Grant Christon in the slaying of a cab driver.

Prosecutors were forced to drop charges against Grant Christon in that case after the witness was killed.

Lawyers praise prosecutors

MINEOLA, N.Y. (AP) — A lawyer praised prosecutors' "courage" in abandoning charges against his teenage client who was fired on by law officers on an anti-terrorist stakeout outside a Soviet diplomatic compound.

First District Judge Ralph Yachnin on Monday dismissed charges of assault, reckless endangerment and resisting arrest against John Sperrazza, 17, of Port Washington at the request of the Nassau County district attorney. The youth's lawyer, Harry Lipsig, said the FBI had been pressuring for prosecution.

Sperrazza and three friends were frightened and fled April 14 when they encountered armed FBI and New York City officers protecting the Glen Cove compound against a threatened terrorist attacked.

Driver kills one man, stabs another

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. (AP) — A driver and bodyguard for two brothers, whose precious metals firm allegedly bilked thousands of investors, was ordered held without bond for allegedly killing one brother and stabbing the other.

James Joseph Doyle, 42, appeared Monday before Broward County Judge Al Skaf and was charged with second-degree murder in the death Sunday of William Alderdice, 40, and with the attempted murder of James Alderdice.

Doyle met the pair when the three were being held in the Metropolitan Correctional Institution in Dade County, police said.

NRC asked to continue probe

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Nuclear Regulatory Commission has been asked to continue its investigation into possible defects at the controversial Diablo Canyon nuclear power plant in California.

Thomas Devine, attorney for opponents of the plant, told the NRC in a letter Monday that an operating license for Diablo Canyon "will not be worth the paper it is written on" unless the investigation resolves unanswered issues.

The letter was in response to a statement by an NRC spokesman last week that federal safety experts concluded that the plant can be safely operated at full power and are ready to recommend full operation. The NRC is expected to vote later this month on whether to give the plant a full operating license.

Veteran to head space program

WASHINGTON (AP) — Capt. Thomas K. Mattingly II, an 18-year veteran of the U.S. astronaut corps and a two-time traveler in space, has been named director of the space program of the Naval Electronic Systems Command.

Mattingly, 48, the senior Navy astronaut, was the mission commander on the fourth and final test flight of the space shuttle Columbia in 1982. As command module pilot in Apollo 16 in 1972, he orbited the moon while two fellow astronauts carried out experiments on the lunar surface.

His new job puts him in charge of the design, development and procurement of Navy space systems. The Navy and NASA announced the appointment on Monday.

Reagan creates new council

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan has signed several pieces of legislation into law, including one creating a new government council to deal with the growing problem of computer crime.

The bill requires the Small Business Administration to set up a government-industry council to advise it on the scope of computer crime and the effectiveness of existing laws in combatting the problem.

The White House also announced Monday the signing of bills to:

—Authorize $7.5 billion in 1985 for NASA, with language that bars the Pentagon from putting nuclear missiles on a planned U.S. space station.

—Authorize $7.3 billion for nuclear defense activities, $5.2 billion for domestic energy programs and $51 million to continue in operation the Appalachian Regional Commission.

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Some 15,000 demonstrators joined the Rev. Jesse Jackson in chanting "give peace a chance" outside the Democratic National Convention, hours after police arrested 84 anti-nuclear protesters who were sprawled on a downtown street.

In a scene reminiscent of his campaign for the Democratic presidential nomination this year, Jackson led the crowd Monday night in shouts that echoed off the walls of Moscone Center, where New York Gov. Mario Cuomo was addressing convention delegates.

"We must declare the Western Hemisphere to be a war-free zone," Jackson told the youthful crowd.

"If we have the strength of our own convictions, we can stop killing abroad and start healing at home. I will not be silenced as long as there is injustice in this world," he said.

In his keynote speech, Cuomo also condemned the escalation of the nuclear arms race and "the largest defense budget in history."

Police earlier in the day arrested at least 84 people, including six juveniles, who lay on the pavement to block entrances to two buildings in San Francisco's financial district, a half-mile from the convention site.

They were booked for investigation of felony conspiracy to block traffic and were being held in lieu of $2,500 bail each, police said.

The demonstrators were members of the so-called "War Chest Tour," an arm of the anti-nuclear Livermore Action Group which regularly demonstrates at Lawrence Livermore Laboratory, a government-financed lab southeast of San Francisco where nuclear weapons research is conducted.

Two demonstrators were treated at hospitals for cuts and scrapes, along with another protester who fainted in a police station.

In the Moscone Center demonstration, activist Daniel Ellsberg, who gained fame in the early 1970s when he leaked the State Department's "Pentagon Papers" to The New York Times, told the crowd before Jackson appeared that the coming election represents a chance to turn around the arms race.

"We have the choice this fall between a man who has promised to accelerate the nuclear arms race and a man who has promised to end it. If we give Reagan the power, he will make the arms race irreversible," he said.

Ellsberg told the group that this year's presidential campaign shows the effect of the anti-nuclear movement's rise because Democratic candidates have been eager to support a weapons freeze.

"There were no rallies like this in '80.... They've felt the heat of our bodies packed into squares all across America," he said.

Convention faces platform battles

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Gary Hart and the Rev. Jesse Jackson are preparing to sound last hurrahs as they seek to persuade the Democratic National Convention to accept their minority planks to a platform drafted for Walter F. Mondale's candidacy.

As the convention took up the 35,000-word political document today, negotiations continued in an effort to settle as many differences as possible off the convention floor.

All three candidates indicated they wished to avert the kind of bitter floor battle over a platform that marked the 1980 convention when supporters of President Carter clashed repeatedly with delegates loyal to Sen. Edward M. Kennedy.

The remaining differences between the three candidates are largely symbolic because the platform already incorporates numerous contributions from Hart's "new ideas" campaign and Jackson's "new directions" agenda, as well as Mondale's proposals.

NONETHELESS, it seemed likely there would be a lively floor debate over at least two proposals being pushed by Jackson — one calling for large cuts in defense spending and the other proposing the elimination of runoff primaries that are common in the South.

"We reserve the right to be competitive to the very end," Jackson said after a summit meeting of all three Democratic contenders Monday night.

But Jackson added that party unity was now the overriding theme. "There is now a need more and more to cooperate," he said.

The three candidates agreed after their meeting that platform differences still remain among them.

"WE HAVE ASKED our staffs to look at them," Mondale said.

Mondale's forces were reportedly extremely close to accepting a compromise version of Hart's sole plank, one that would set restrictions on the use of U.S. forces overseas. "It certainly can be compromised," Hart said.

When the convention takes up the platform, one of the major players in its drafting, Platform Committee Chairwoman Rep. Geraldine Ferraro of New York will be missing. Democratic leaders decided to keep her out of the spotlight until she delivers her vice presidential acceptance speech on Thursday night.

Instead, Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis, Boston Mayor Ray Flynn and Birmingham, Ala., Mayor Richard Arrington will preside over the platform presentation, which is expected to take up nearly all today's session.

AGREEMENT on the Hart plank, dubbed the "peace plank" by Hart supporters, had already been reached in principle between Hart and Mondale negotiators, according to Rep. Timothy Wirth, D-Colo., Hart's spokesman on the platform committee.

He predicted Mondale would either accept the plank as written or in some modified form.

"They don't want to have that fight," Wirth said.

Substituting a compromise plank would require waiving convention rules, but if all three rivals supported such a move, "it could be done easily," Wirth said.

The Hart plank states that under a Democratic president, military force would not be used around the world in areas "where our objectives are not clear" or until all diplomatic channels had been first exhausted.

IT BEGAN AS a plank that specifically ruled out use of land forces in any war for oil in the Persian Gulf, but was later modified by Hart platform drafters to be applicable to Central America as well as the Middle East.

Mondale aides reportedly were close to reaching agreement on two of Jackson's planks — one calling for stronger affirmitive action programs and another stating that a Democratic president would not make "first use" of nuclear weapons.

"We're negotiating," said Walter Fauntroy, a Jackson delegate who represents the District of Columbia in Congress.

However, Fauntroy and other Jackson supporters said they had told their delegates to prepare for battles over Jackson's minority planks if necessary.

Ministers, military may lose tax break

WASHINGTON (AP) — Ministers and military personnel are in danger of losing part of a "double dip" tax break — their deduction for mortgage interest and property taxes paid with tax-exempt housing allowances.

The Internal Revenue Service already has ruled that ministers have no right to the double deduction. The agency is studying whether to apply the same rule to armed-forces members. Forgoing a chance to block the rule, Congress has agreed only to give some ministers until 1986 to comply and pointedly took no action at all in the case of military personnel.

Defenders of the "double dip" view it as government's way of boosting the spendable income of military forces and of subsidizing religious activities in a non-denominational way. Critics say such programs should be financed through the regular government appropriations process, not through the tax laws.

Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger said the change being considered by the IRS for homeowning service personnel is shortsighted and would "have an adverse effect on morale in the career force."

FOR MANY YEARS the law has prohibited any tax deduction in connection with most tax-exempt income. However, since a court ruling in 1925, the IRS has avoided taxing most military housing allowances, and rulings issued in 1962 allowed housing-related tax deductions in connection with those and similar allowances.

In 1982 a landmark Tax Court ruling held that a veteran who was going to college to maintain the skills of his trade could not deduct the cost of his flight-training lessons because they were financed 90 percent by the Veterans' Administration. That decision led to an IRS ruling last year that overturned the 1962 regulations and denied tax deductions for:

—An attorney's expenses of studying advanced law under a tax-exempt grant from the VA.

—A worker's costs of taking employer-required classes that were financed by a tax-free scholarship.

—Most of the mortgage interest and property taxes claimed by a minister who received a tax-exempt housing allowance of $6,300 a year. Only the share of interest and local taxes not covered by the allowance was allowed.

"Permitting a full deduction in each situation would lead to a double benefit not allowed" under the law, the IRS concluded.

THERE WAS LITTLE organized opposition to the parts of that ruling affecting educational expenses. But groups representing ministers of almost every denomination urged Congress to overrule the IRS. Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., raised the issue last year but got nowhere.

In the meantime, the IRS disclosed that it was considering applying the same rule to service personnel. That prospect prompted Weinberger and Transportation Secretary Elizabeth H. Dole, who heads the Coast Guard, to protest to Treasury Secretary Donald T. Regan, boss of the IRS.

So, last April, as the Senate was considering a bill making hundreds of changes in the tax laws in an effort to reduce the federal deficit, Helms brought up the church question again. The IRS has no business trying to change the law, he said, adding that the tax deduction on top of the tax exemption is a proper way for government to "give preferred status to certain institutions in society for the public good."

Helms joined forces with Sen. John Warner, R-Va., who was trying to protect the deduction for military personnel. They agreed on an amendment to simply continue the double benefit for ministers and the military.

Hollywood sign takes on rainbow tones during Olympics

By NORM CLARKE
Associated Press Writer

LOS ANGELES — The idea of turning the 450-foot-wide "HOLLYWOOD" sign into a giant lightshow for the Olympics hit Rick Rutherford and Egils Vigants in January.

"We got a lot of $5 and $10 bills when we told our friends about it," said Rutherford, a 30-year-old professional lighting executive.

Their dream appears ready to become a spectacular reality on July 28, the day the Olympics open, when dozens of floodlights — 10 colors in all — turn the 61-year-old landmark into an flashing rainbow.

Beamed to a worldwide television audience, more than 2 billion viewers could see the 61-year-old mountainside symbol splashed in color for the first time.

"It will be the world's biggest animated billboard," Rutherford said Monday.

From 9 p.m. to midnight, for all 16 nights of the Summer Olympics; the 45-foot-high letters will radiate the official color scheme of the Games: magenta, aqua, chrome yellow, lavendar, violet, pink, blue, vermilion, info yellow, and light blue.

A "chaser" light will dart back and forth, drawing attention to the illuminated landmark, which is traditionally solid white.

"She's going to be gorgeous," said Andy Williams, a park ranger who keeps watch over the famed letters propped on the side of Mt. Lee, Hollywood's familiar backdrop.

After several months of trying to convince the Los Angeles Olympic Organizing Committee to help fund the idea, Rutherford and Vigants got the OK on Friday.

The LAOOC, the private enterprise group that is staging the Games, agreed to contribute at least $16,000 to the project and may kick in more to make the lighting even more spectacular, Rutherford said.

"This is Hollywood. We wanted to put more whiz-bang into the sign," Rutherford said.

Rescued from deterioration six years ago, the sign was refurbished when eight sponsors — ranging from Playboy magnate Hugh Hefner to cowboy film star Gene Autry and rock star Alice Cooper — put up about $30,000 each for one of the nine letters.

LONDON (AP) — British children won't be joining Capt. James T. Kirk and Mr. Spock on four of their journeys to explore new worlds and go where no one has gone before.

The British Broadcasting Corp. will not televise four "Star Trek" episodes because they are not suitable to be shown on early evening television when children watch, Ann Rosenberg, BBC publicity officer, said Monday.

The BBC received complaints after the broadcast of "Miri," in which the Enterprise crew, led by William Shatner's Kirk and Leonard Nimoy's Spock, saves the surviving inhabitants of a planet where everyone dies upon reaching puberty, she said.

The other banned episodes are: "The Empath," "Whom the Gods Destroy," and "Plato's Stepchildren." The remaining 73 "Star Trek" episodes are being shown weekly by the BBC.

DiMag raps big bucks

Shoe on other foot today

DADEVILLE, Ala. (AP) — Former New York Yankees great Joe DiMaggio blames big salaries for the problems confronting major league baseball and he holds Yankees' owner George Steinbrenner accountable.

But DiMaggio said he could still play for Steinbrenner "if he paid me enough money."

DiMaggio, the man who hit in a record 56 consecutive games in 1941, said team owners were much tighter with money in his day.

"When I played I had a hard time getting $5 from those guys," DiMaggio said. "It was just not coming. So today, when I see players getting all this money, it's the other way around. The owners are paying the players too much. I wish I'd have had that chance."

DiMaggio, 69, said salaries paid by owners such as Steinbrenner, Atlanta's Ted Turner and Gene Autry of the California Angels have created much of the turmoil in baseball today.

"The money is behind all the turmoil," Dimaggio said of the only team he played for in a 13-year career. "It's not just him (Steinbrenner). It's these fellows that have all that money who create the turmoil — Turner, Autry. Strangely enough, though, those teams paying all that money aren't 10 to 15 games ahead in the standings."

DiMaggio said he could play for Steinbrenner "if he paid me enough money." He defended the Yankee owner's method of dealing with his employees.

"Everybody goes to him because he's the highest bidder," DiMaggio said. "Then, after they sign and get all that money, they say they're dissatisfied. Graig Nettles was the last one," he said referring to the current third baseman of the San Diego Padres.

DiMaggio said he is opposed to any further expansion for the major leagues.

"Play is at a level where it should be now and that would be a terrible mistake, in my opinion, if they expand," he said.

He called former Detroit Tigers second baseman Charlie Gehringer "the best baseball player I ever saw" and said former Boston Red Sox slugger Ted Williams was the best hitter he ever watched even though the two had different philosophies.

"Ted said he believed the best way to hit the ball was to undercut it," said DiMaggio, whose famous hitting streak occurred during the same year Williams hit .406. "I never wanted to disagree with him, because like I said, he was the greatest hitter I ever saw. But I always swung down on the ball."

Cordova's Slam wins for Cubs

By Associated Press

Antonio Cordova's grand slam in the first inning gave Midland's Cubs a 6-5 win over the Shreveport Captains in the final game of the Texas League series Monday night. The Cubs move to Jackson to open a five-game series tonight.

The win was Midland's second straight over the Caps and enabled the Cubs to leave town with a 2-3 record.

Also knocking in runs for Midland were Don Hyman and Paul Noce.

The Captains got three in the third inning on a two-run double by Bryan Snyder and a wild pitch.

Scott Johnson, 1-0, went 2 1/3 innings in relief for his first league win. Chuck Lusted, 5-4, took the loss.

A three-run homer by Billy Beane in the seventh inning helped the Jackson Mets to an 11-1 win over the El Paso Diablos in Texas League baseball action.

In other league play Monday, Beaumont edged Arkansas 3-1 and San Antonio whipped Tulsa 9-2.

After Beane drove in Lenny Dystra and Mark Carreon, the Mets followed with three consecutive doubles by Ed Hearn, Bill Max and Dave Cochrane. Cochrane was driven in on a fielder's choice by Steve Springer.

Springer scored on a single by Carreon.

The Diablos' Mike Felder scored on an infield out by Steve Michael in the top of the third.

Dewayne Vaughn, 3-1, was the winner. Doug Jones, 2-4, took the loss. The Mets are now 12-11, while El Paso is 11-12.

Bill Long, 10-3, pitched allowed four hits and one run in seven innings. He was credited with Beaumont's win.

Greg Norman golfer to beat

British Open

ST. ANDREWS, Scotland (AP) — Greg Norman gave fair warning of what was to come.

"Look out," was all he said.

Norman made that statement at the Congressional Country Club in suburban Washington, D.C. a couple of months ago. He had just scored his first American triumph, a front-running, never-headed, five-shot victory in the Kemper Open.

"This has been a barrier for me, winning the first one in the States. Now I've crossed that barrier. I've proved I could beat these guys. I've proved it to myself.

"Now that I have, look out.

"I'm going to be hard to handle."

AND THE brash Australian, with his harshly hooked nose, sun-bleached white hair and awesome length off the tee, promptly proceeded to fulfill that prediction, embarking on a rampage of such magnitude that Tom Watson was prompted to announce:

"Right now, Norman is playing the best golf in the world. He's riding the crest of a wave. He has to be considered among the favorites, probably the favorite, for the British Open."

And Norman, the man called the "Great White Shark," will not deny that label going into the 113th British Open Championship Thursday on the ancient links of the Old Course at St. Andrews.

"I'm looking forward to it," said the 29-year-old who has abandoned his role as a dedicated globe-trotter and established a permanent home in the United States.

"I'm a confidence player," Norman said.

"Right now I have the confidence I can do what I want with the ball. I know I'll play well. It's a matter of getting the right breaks at the right time, the right bounces at the right time.

"I like St. Andrews. I've played it maybe 30 times. I know its humps and hollows. All the trouble is on the right. They say it's not a fader's course. But that's not true. You just start it to the left and bring it back.

"I'm playing well and I want to play. It's a great feeling to wake up in the morning and want to get to the golf course, just can't wait to get out there and play golf."

HE'S RESTED and refreshed after a one-week break from competition, in which time he's shaken the last traces of the flu which hampered him during the last round of the Western Open, when he lost a playoff to Watson's putting magic.

That tournament ended a five-week stretch in which Norman dominated North American golf in the same spectacular fashion he had won around the world in earlier years.

A former Australian Open champion and two-time winner of the World Match Play title, he led the European tour in money-winnings in 1982 and won seven titles around the world in 1983.

This year, he started off with two Australian titles, then scored his American breakthrough in the Kemper.

From there, he took Fuzzy Zoeller to a playoff before losing in the U.S. Open, recorded a 10th-place finish in Atlanta, turned back Jack Nicklaus in a head-to-head confrontation for the Canadian Open title, then, the following week, went one-on-one with Watson.

Hurt returns UH

HOUSTON (AP) — Former University of Houston assistant football coach Ben Hurt is returning to coach Cougar linebackers this season, replacing Deryl Ray McGallion, who has resigned to enter private business, head coach Bill Yeoman announced.

Hurt, a UH assistant from 1965 to 1971, is returning to the Cougars after coaching assignments at Texas A&M, Middle Tennessee State and Nederland High School.

McGallion, an assistant for the past five years, was the third member of the UH staff to resign this summer. He joins defensive ends coach Ronny Peacock and secondary coach Jim Elam.

U.S. Olympians beat Japan, 6-0

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — Extra-base power propelled the United States to a 6-0 title-clinching win in the Japan-U.S. College Baseball Championship Series here Monday night.

The game was called because of rain with the U.S. at bat and two out in the bottom of the eighth inning.

The victory before 2,180 fans improved the United States' record to 4-1 in the seven-game series.

The U.S. took a 4-0 lead in the first inning, which was capped by catcher Bob Caffrey's three-run home run.

Oddibe McDowell opened the inning with a single and stole second. Mark McGwire, the Southern California first baseman, walked before Brigham Young shortstop Cory Snyder singled to center to score McDowell. Caffrey followed with his homer.

Midlander leaves for Games

He will stop at Lubbock, then swing up to Las Vegas, N.M., and join a friend for the rest of the trip, which he estimates will take him three weeks.

But that's only the beginning. After LA, he plans to go to Seattle and then, "since I've never been to the northeast" go to New York.

That's quite a trip, but how about doing it on a bicycle? That's how Genereau will be doing it.

"I've done some backpacking, but I've never done any bike-packing like this," said the 25-year-old.

"I quit my job Friday," said Genereaux, a geologist for Gulf who has been living in Midland for two and a half years, "And I have a friend from Iowa, who quit his job a couple of weeks ago, who will meet me in Las Vegas, N.M., so I won't be going it alone."

Genereaux, a Texas Tech grad, figures it will take three weeks to make Los Angeles, averaging 100 miles a day. The route will take the cyclists through Flagstaff, Prescott, Quartzite, Yuma and across the California desert. "It gets pretty hot out there, but we'll be traveling at night to beat the heat."

As much as possible, he plans to avoid the interstates and to keep expenses at a minimum, overnights will be at campsites and in hostels.

"The route we'll be taking was mapped out by a bicycle tour organization," said Generaux. They are becoming quite popular."

He'll visit his folks in Seattle before heading to New York, which he expects to reach in mid-October. He'll return to Midland in November, when he'll have some real yarns to tell.

"I plan to keep a journal and and I'll have tape cassettes with me. It will be quite and experience and I plan to chronicle it all. I look upon it as a big learning experience."

Genereaux will be peddling a Univaga, which is not a tour bike.

Despite the fact that he has never undertaken a trip like this on a bicycle, he feels he is physically ready for it. "The mental part, I understand, may be a little rough with all those days on the road."

Jack's grandson lacks talent

Answers to Questions readers ask:

Q—Last week in an Associated Press story about the Trans-Miss at Austin in The Reporter-Telegram, there was a paragraph that stated, "Jack Nicklaus, III, grandson of famous pro golfer, failed to make the cut after slumping to an 83." Can that be right? After all, Jack Nicklaus, Jr., is only a senior at the University of North Carolina, and if this is Jack, Sr.'s grandson, what does it mean?

A—It means Jack, III, just doesn't have his grandfather's golf talent, although a three-year-old playing in the Trans-Miss isn't all that bad.

Q—The Olympic Basketball team has been beating the NBA All-Stars like a drum on their exhibition tour? How can that be, a bunch of college kids beating a bunch of career pros?

A—It means, what I, as an impartial observer, have contended all along, the colleges play a better brand of basketball, pure and simple.

Q—How do you think the Supreme Court's ruling nulling and voiding college football TV agreements will effect the big time ambitions of Catawba College?

A—Well, no national TV, no New Year's Day bowl hopes....it could be that they will reexamine plans to erect a 85,000-seat stadium.

Q—John McEnroe won the Wimbledon Tennis tournament, but how could he possibly have beaten a player of Jimmy Connors' stature 6-1, 6-1, 6-2?

A—He didn't. The player he beat was disguised as Jimmy Connors. It was really Chris Lewis. Why else would Bjorn Borg announce he is coming back.

Q—Last week in an Associated Press story about the Trans-Miss at Austin....

A—What, are you back again? If you must know, a call to AP in Dallas revealed that the stringer in Austin had given the information incorrectly and no one caught it until a reader in Midland began adding two and two.

Q—It sounds bizarre, but is it true that the NFL Colts actually slipped out of Baltimore in the middle of the night so that the team couldn't be prevented from moving to Indianapolis? Has anything like this ever happened in sports?

A—It's true and it happened again a few weeks later. The Chicago Cubs and Los Angeles Dodgers were playing a game on the West Coast and it was being carried on Midland cable station WGN. Midnight struck and WGN was no longer there.

Q—Phil Niekro, 45, has won 14 or 15 games for the New York Yankees after being released by Atlanta Braves as being finished, kaput, all through. What do you think this shows, stupidity on the part of the Braves management?

A—Certainly not. It just shows that the National League is far superior to the American League. Here was a guy decreed a has-been in the NL and he is the best pitcher in the AL. If you doubt it, just imagine what his record would be if he were playing on a winner.

Q—In the Major League All-Star game at Candlestick Park, a ball was hit to Reggie Jackson in right field and he immediately let it go through his legs. Is he really that bad a fielder?

A—Some people are never willing to let Reggie forget his fielding problems. But in this case, Reggie had a legitimate excuse. Those wind-blown grounders in Candlestick are murder.

Q—Now that it has been established, in granite no less, that college basketball is vastly superior to the watered-down version played by the NBA, how come the College All-Stars didn't fare better against the NFL champions in the preseason classic that was abandoned a few years ago?

A—Actually the games weren't all that one sided, considering the circumstances. Look at it this way, the college all-stars worked out three weeks and then played the NFL champions, a team that had been playing to gether as a unit for probably five or six years. If the All-Stars had stayed together for a full season, they'd have been beating the NFL teams like the Olympic team beats the NBA. College football is better, too.

Padres' Thurmond cools off Chicago

By Associated Press

The up-and-down career of Bob "Whirlybird" Walk is back up again.

Walk won his first major league game in two seasons Monday night as the Pittsburgh Pirates halted the Los Angeles Dodgers 4-1 for their seventh straight victory. The game also wrote a new chapter in Walk's odyssey.

In 1980, as a rookie with a spinning windup for the Philadelphia Phillies, Walk racked up an 11-7 record and went on to win the first game of the World Series for the eventual world champions.

In 1981, he was traded to the Atlanta Braves and pitched sparingly in the majors and minors because of a rib injury. In 1982, he was one of the Braves' main starters and went 11-9.

Then, prior to the 1983 season, he was sent to the minors and, admittedly in a poor mental state, lost his first six games as his earned run average ballooned to over 10.00. The right-hander finished the season 11-12 at Triple-A Richmond and made one start for Atlanta.

Prior to this season, he was released by the Braves.

Jim Morrison and Dale Berra cracked solo home runs for the Pirates to pin the loss on Rick Honeycutt, 7-4.

Mets 13, Astros 3

George Foster banged out four hits, including a double, and drove in three runs. Mike Fitzgerald knocked in three runs with a double and two singles. Darryl Strawberry singled, doubled and tripled and Wally Backman contributed three hits.

It all added up to 22 hits for New York — the NL's high this season and one short of the team record set in 1964.

Rookie pitcher Sid Fernandez was the beneficiary of the Mets' offensive outburst. He went seven innings to earn his first major-league victory. Fernandez, 1-0, allowed eight hits, struck out six and did not walk a batter.

Giants 7, Cardinals 6

Jeff Leonard and Dusty Baker had two singles and a double apiece as San Francisco raced to a 6-1 lead in St. Louis.

The Cardinals went into the eighth trailing 7-4, but scored twice on an error by first baseman Scot Thompson and an RBI single by Tom Herr. St. Louis had the bases loaded with two out, but reliever Greg Minton came into the game and got pinch hitter Art Howe to line out to third, ending the threat.

Padres 4, Cubs 0

Mark Thurmond allowed four hits in eight-plus innings before Rich Gossage took over and finished up without giving up a hit as San Diego won at Wrigley Field.

Bobby Brown's two-run homer in the second inning got the Padres rolling against Dick Ruthven, 2-6. Thurmond, 6-5, helped himself with two singles, including an RBI hit in the ninth.

Phillies 7, Reds 2

Mike Schmidt and Garry Maddox each singled, doubled and belted a two-run homer to carry visiting Philadelphia.

Schmidt's homer in the seventh, was his 18th of the season. Dan Driessen homered for the Reds.

Schatzeder, 4-2, has started three games this season and won all of them. He gave up three hits through eight innings and left when Claudell Washington led off the ninth with a double.

Abbott's five-hitter beats Sox for Tigers

When a 10-year major league veteran gets sent down to the minors, it could mean the end of the line. Glenn Abbott didn't let that happen to him, however.

Optioned to Evansville on June 15 after several ineffective performances, Abbott made his first start since his July 15 recall Monday night and pitched a five-hitter to lead the Detroit Tigers to a 7-1 victory over the Chicago White Sox.

"The last two times I pitched down there I felt I was getting to about where I wanted to be," said Abbott of his month-long demotion to the minors. "I really felt I had my stuff together."

He certainly did Monday night, retiring the first 13 batters en route to the Tigers' fourth straight victory. Detroit improved its lead in the AL East to eight games over Toronto, a 3-0 loser to California.

Kirk Gibson drove in three runs for Detroit with his 13th home run of the season and a triple, raising his RBI total to 50.

Angels 3, Blue Jays 0

Jim Slaton pitched a seven-hitter for his first shutout since 1979 to lead California over Toronto. Slaton, 3-3, surrendered two singles in each of the first two innings, then retired 16 of the next 17 men on his way to his first complete game since Sept. 16, 1979, when he had three shutouts as a Milwaukee pitcher. Slaton didn't walk a batter and struck out three.

Orioles 3, Twins 1

John Shelby and John Lowenstein broke out of long slumps with solo homers and Eddie Murray also belted a homer in support of Storm Davis' five-hitter as Baltimore beat Minnesota.

The Orioles have hit 14 homers while winning five of their last six games, and 20 of their 24 runs in the last seven contests have scored on roundtrippers.

Royals 3, Indians 1

Mike Jones pitched eight innings of one-hit ball and George Brett and Hal McRae stroked RBI singles in the eighth as Kansas City snapped a five-game losing streak with a 3-1 victory over Cleveland.

Jones, whose career was almost ended by a 1981 auto accident, struck out three and walked two in notching his first major league victory in almost three years. Dan Quisenbery pitched the ninth for his 24th save, giving up the Yankees 9, Rangers 8

Roy Smalley's one-out, run-scoring single capped a four-run ninth inning to give New York a wild victory over Texas. After Texas fought back with four runs in the top of the ninth on two-run doubles by Bill Stein and Pete O'Brien to take an 8-5 lead, New York responded in the bottom of the inning against reliever Dave Schmidt, 3-4.

Mariners 11, Brewers 2

Ken Phelps and Dave Henderson each drove in five runs, powering Seattle past Milwaukee. Phelps belted a three-run homer in the first inning and a two-run shot in the fifth to give him 14 this season. Henderson drilled a two-run single in the third and a three-run homer in the seventh, his ninth.

Red Sox 4, A's 1

Bruce Hurst Sox continued his mastery over the Oakland, beating the A's with Bob Stanley's ninth-inning relief help. Hurst, 9-5, checked Oakland on six hits, struck out a career-tying eight batters and walked five before needing help in the final inning from Stanley, who recorded his 15th save. Hurst has a 6-0 lifetime record over the A's, including three victories this season.

Boston had eight hits off A's starter Lary Sorensen, 3-10, but three of them were in the second when the Red Sox took a 2-0 lead on a sacrifice fly by Rich Gedman and RBI single by Marty Barrett.

Lee Trevino...criticizes British.

Trevino knocks British 'body'

From Wire Reports

GOLF— Lee Trevino breezed into St. Andrews and immediately criticized the ruling body of British golf for "ruining open championship courses." Trevino claimed the game was being "Americanized" in Britain and that the authorities were "getting away from tradition." The extrovert 44-year-old Trevino said the problem with championship courses had started when the Royal and Ancient Club began to install irrigation.

"They are taking away the shot-making because these courses were made for the bump and run game. If they get soft because of too much watering, people will fly the ball to the flag. If the fairways are soft, you can cut or hook the ball and it will stop, but if you don't hit it straight down a firm fairway the ball will roll into trouble."...

BASEBALL— Ed Short, 64, former GM of the Chicago White Sox, died at Skokie, Ill., over the weekend. He was an Army captain in WW II and in 1945 became sports director of WJJD, the radio station over which White Sox games were broadcast. Short had said the best trade he ever made was in the winter of 1965, when the White Sox sent outfielders Mike Hershberger and Jim Landis and pitcher Fred Talbot to the Kansas City Athletics. The White Sox received outfielder Rocky Colavito in return, but 30 seconds later they sent him and catcher Camilo Carreon to the Cleveland Indians for pitcher Tommy John, catcher John Romano and outfielder Tommie Agee...

Cal Ripken Jr. of the Baltimore Orioles slugged four home runs and was named AL Player of the Week. He also .476, 10-for-21, and had 23 total bases for the week...

Los Angeles Dodgers rookie Orel Hershiser, who pitched a two-hit shutout against the Chicago Cubs Saturday, was named the NL Player of the Week. Hershiser struck out nine Cubs and walked one in winning his third straight start...

Jeff Doyle smashed his eighth home run of the Japanese League season in the bottom of the ninth, giving the Nankai Hawks a 2-2 nine-inning tie with the Nippon Ham Fighters Monday. Hiromitsu Kadota of the Hawks hit a single in the sixth and became the 25th Japanese professional player to record 3,000 base hits...

Al Schacht buried

SOUTHBURY, Conn. (AP) — As the national pastime's clown prince, Al Schacht entertained tens of millions of fans at stadiums across the country for more than half a century.

The funeral was held in a small chapel on a lazy July afternoon, the kind of day on which Schacht's zany shenanigans would rock stadiums with laughter.

Schacht entered major-league baseball as a pitcher in 1919, the year the game was robbed of its innocence by Chicago's World Series-rigging scandal — the Black Sox.

He spent the next five decades bringing smiles to the faces of children and adults with a brand of silly, slapstick comedy that would be oft-imitated in years to follow.

In the 1922 World Series, Schacht brought a goat to the Polo Grounds in New York. After stuffing his pockets with cabbage, he had the goat turned loose.

He intended to taunt the goat as a bullfighter would a bull. But the goat charged and began gnawing at Schacht's pockets. So, Schacht wrestled the animal to the ground.

One of Schacht's more comic moments came in Dallas where he paid a man $5 to sit on the roof of the grandstand and hurl a dozen baseballs down onto the field as he was mimicking Babe Ruth's mighty swing.

But the man on the roof fell asleep, Schacht said, and never threw the balls during his routine. Schacht ad-libbed the rest of his act and left the field.

But with the cheer of the crowd at the game's first pitch, the man on the roof woke up. He started throwing baseballs down onto the field, forcing the players to run for the dugouts.

Tougher academics may bench athletes

HOUSTON (AP) — Texas' recently-passed education reform laws discriminate against some students and may prompt some who participate in extracurricular activities to drop out of school, local education officials said.

Tougher academic requirements in House Bill 72, adopted recently by the state legislature, could affect schoolboy athletics, band, debate, choir and drill squad, officials said in a story published Monday in The Houston Post Monday.

The new law forbids a student to participate in sports or other extracurricular activity after Jan. 1 if he or she is failing any academic class. The law follows the recommendation of a study committee headed by Dallas computer magnate H. Ross Perot.

"Everybody wasn't created equally like H. Ross Perot thinks," Buddy Hopson, athletic director for the Fort Bend Independent School District, told the Post. "Kids are raised in different environments. It (the bill) is a very discriminatory thing.

"The best days of high school athletics are behind us," Hopson said.

Some educators estimated that about 20 percent of the students now in extracurricular programs will be benched or forced to withdraw.

"I don't think there's a team in the state that it won't affect," said Paul Benton, basketball coach of Madison High School in Houston.

"It will be real tough on the inner city kids," he said. "And it won't just affect sports. It affects the bands and the drill teams, too. Some kids will drop out of school that otherwise would have stayed in."

College coaches also are concerned.

"It could be too stringent if a student is taking five good academic courses," said Jackie Sherrill, football coach at Texas A&M. "I think what they're trying to do is right, but it may be a step too far."

In Longview, where the high school football team was top-ranked in some polls, school superintendent Bill Ford said the effect could be dramatic.

"We run approximately 18 to 20 percent failures in at least one subject," said Ford. "Across the board, we could see 18 to 20 percent of our athletes not able to participate on Friday night (when football games often are played)."

Humble athletic director Sam Mosely said the new law will cause a change in philosphy in his district. He said coaches will use a different academic strategy to keep their players on the field.

"If a kid only has to take four (classes), we wouldn't insist on him taking five," said Mosely. "The way it was before, we would like him to take five solids so he could be flunking one. Now we wouldn't want him to take five."

If the law had been in effect last fall, it could have radically changed the championship picture in football, officials believe.

The Converse Judson High School, which won the Class 5A state championship in football, had "five or six" players who would not have been able to play in every game, according to Frank Arnold, the team coach.

Among those Judson students who had academic difficulties was Chris Pryor, a running back who gained 2,800 yards in 16 games and averaged 200 yards in each of the school's six playoff games. He failed to graduate from high school this spring because of poor grades in English, and he is attending summer school in order to be eligible to attend Texas Tech next fall.

Ryne everything Cubs hoped for

By JOE MOOSHIL
AP Sports Writer

CHICAGO — Ryne Sandberg is becoming the kind of star the Chicago Cubs hoped he would when they acquired him two years ago, and Manager Jim Frey sees no reason why his All-Star second baseman can't keep it going.

"Why not?" said Frey. "It's not necessarily a hot streak. He's playing up to his potential. Maybe he can't keep the same pace of the last three or four weeks, but who does?"

Sandberg, a 24-year-old who batted .271 as a rookie and .261 last season, with a combined total of 15 home runs, is rolling along at a .332 clip this year.

He already has 20 doubles, 11 triples and 13 home runs to exceed his total of 37 extra base hits last season.

FREY, IN his first season as manager of the Cubs, planted the seed of power hitting into Sandberg's mind during spring training.

"Nail the ball," Frey told Sandberg. "With your size and strength you can be more than a singles hitter."

Frey never mentioned it again to Sandberg, who took the cue to lengths that even his manager didn't envision.

"He can continue it," Frey said. "He's maturing as a major leaguer with confidence and realizes he has the ability to do the things he can do. He can hit consistently and with power. He has the perfect emotional makeup."

Sandberg never displays emotion. Not even when he hit successive game-tying home runs off relief ace Bruce Sutter to set the stage for an extra-inning victory in a nationally televised game against St. Louis recently.

Nor when he cracked a home run in extra innings last week to defeat the Los Angeles Dodgers. Not even when he hit a game-tying homer Sunday to start a four-run, game-winning rally against Fernando Valenzuela and those same Dodgers.

Macy's opens first Texas store

HUMBLE, Texas (AP) — Macy's Department Store, a symbol of New York City and the Yankee North, arrives in Texas this week with the grand opening of its first of several stores planned for the Houston and Dallas areas.

The first of the Texas Macy's is an anchor store at the Deerbrook Mall, a shopping center under construction just northeast of the Houston city limits.

The store is a 225,000 square-foot, three-story building that will serve as the pattern for future Macy operations in the state, spokeswoman Judy Cohn said.

"This is the prototype for all of the Texas stores although some may be larger," she said.

The white brick building, with glass facades over each entrance, is modelled after a Macy's outlet which opened last October in North Miami, Fla. Another is slated for October in northwest Houston, followed by a store in Dallas and a third Houston store south of the city.

The eventual flagship of the Macy Texas stores will be in the Houston Galleria, Ms. Cohn said, where it will run head-to-head with longtime Texas retailers Joske's, Sakowitz and Neiman-Marcus.

The Deerbrook store, which holds its grand opening on Tuesday, joins 94 other R.H. Macy & Co., Inc., operations which rang up nearly $3.5 billion in sales last year.

"We view Texas as a vital and dynamic marketplace," Arthur Reiner, Macy's chairman, says. "It is young and energetic and offers great opportunity for the growth of our business.

"I am confident that the public's response to Macy's will be positive. I'm optimistic about Texas. I firmly believe there's a great future here for Macy's."

The New York-based Macy's Department Stores arrives in Texas this week with the grand opening of its first of several stores planned for the Houston and Dallas areas.

Reiner says the key to Macy's anticipated success is "an outstanding selection of high quality merchandise and excellent service in a dramatic and exciting environment."

Although the Macy's operates with five divisions, including Macy's California and Macy's Midwest, the Texas operations will be run by Macy's New York.

"At the time we decided to go into the Sun Belt, we (Macy's New York Division) had the resources and capital to make the move," Ms. Cohn said.

Threat of interest rate hike seen

The Associated Press

American consumers took on an unprecedented amount of debt in May and factory use in June hit its highest level in three years, two reports that some economists said threaten to push interest rates higher.

Consumers took on $10.23 billion more in installment debt than they paid off in May, eclipsing the previous record of $6.61 billion set last February, the Federal Reserve said Monday.

In a second report, the Fed said factories, mines and utilities operated at 81.7 percent of capacity in June, the highest level since July 1981 and up from 81.5 percent in May and 81.4 percent in April.

And in a third report, the Commerce Department said American businesses replenished their shelves and showrooms at a slower but still healthy pace in May, boosting inventories 0.9 percent above the previous month.

The department also said business sales jumped 1.6 percent, the sharpest gain since December, to a record $412.3 billion in May after climbing 1.0 percent in April and 0.8 percent in March.

Together, the reports indicated that the nation's economy, while probably slowing from its sizzling pace in the first quarter, continued to expand briskly the past two months.

"We knew the economy was humming along in the second quarter but nothing like that," said Donald Straszheim, vice president of Wharton Econometrics in Philadelphia.

The economy's strong growth has many credit analysts worried, since it keeps raising private credit demands at a time when the Treasury is already borrowing heavily.

Bush optimistic about methanol

Hearst Feature Service

WASHINGTON —Vice President George Bush is optimistic about the possibility that methanol, a form of alcohol, can become an alternative source of fuel energy that could greatly lessen, if not virtually end, America's dependence on foreign oil supplies.

Indicating strong administration support for exploratory development of methanol, the Vice President told the Hearst Newspapers in an exclusive interview that a cabinet council working group is coordinating action by federal agencies to assure that government regulations do not block research on the use of methanol as energy fuel, especially for motor vehicles.

"There is a good prospect for methanol as a transportation fuel," the Vice President said. "The question is not whether but when. In other words, we are encouraged by what we have seen. We think the more the consumer knows about methanol, and right now we think he knows very little, the faster the shift (from oil to methanol) is going to occur.

"There is a lot of evidence that methanol really does drive better than gasoline. It is a cleaner fuel than either gasoline or diesel oil, and the environment is a powerful reason for encouraging the research and knowledge and not discouraging it.

"There is, I gather, some opposition but basically the administration's view is that we are not going to push one answer or another but we want to provide as much information, research and coordination of government effort as possible to give methanol a chance to see what it can do."

U.S. to help Iraq build pipeline

N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — The United States government guaranteed $425 million of loans to help Iraq build an oil pipeline through Jordan only after Iraq revised the proposal to include large quantities of American steel pipe, according to Reagan administration officials.

The Export-Import Bank was initially opposed to giving financial guarantees for the pipeline because it believed that the Iran-Iraq war posed excessive financial risks, the officials said. Those reservations were overcome when Iraq agreed to order about $100 million worth of American steel pipe, which was not part of the original proposal, administration officials said.

The episode shows the role that steel politics is playing this election year. "You can bet this order is going to be played hard up and down the steel country," one Reagan official said.

"That's a very substantial piece of business," a steel executive commented. It represents about 10 percent of last year's total steel exports.

President Reagan has been under mounting pressure to give the steel industry further protection against imports this year, particularly after such protection was recommended last week by the U.S. International Trade Commission.

The Iraq deal is the first one in years that includes American steel pipe in an overseas pipeline. The United States usually provides most of the pumps, compressors and turbines for the overseas projects.

Handyman closing Texas, Oklahoma stores

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Handyman, a San Diego-based hardware store chain, has announced plans to close 21 outlets in Texas and Oklahoma because of lagging sales, company officials said.

Fifteen of the locations have been sold to Ross Stores, a San Francisco-based clothing chain.

Handyman said it also planned to sell the remaining six stores, plus a warehouse in Richardson, Texas.

John Hogarth, a spokesman for Handyman, said the company expected to make $40 million from the liquidation of inventories, along with the sale of buildings and property.

Handyman, a wholly owned operating company of St. Louis-based Edison Brothers Stores Inc., did not disclose the purchase price paid by Ross, although the company said the transaction was finalized last Friday.

Hogarth said Handyman would begin "quitting business" sales at the Texas and Oklahoma stores this week.

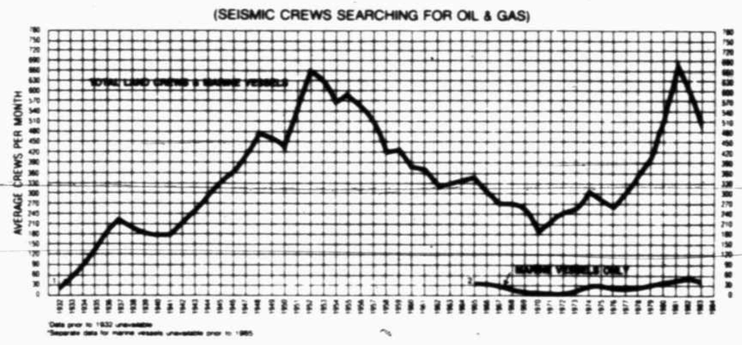
PI says time, circumstances on OPEC's side

. HOUSTON — Time and circumstances are on the side of the OPEC in its fight to reassert control over world oil markets, according to Petroleum Information. Oil ministers of the exporters' group will convene in Vienna this week for an attempt at maintaining a semblance of unity in the crude oil market that weighs heavily against them. The regularly scheduled meeting will be held July 10. PI reports, OPEC is in a struggle to maintain internal pricing and production discipline in the face of sluggish world petroleum demand and weak oil prices.

PI notes that while OPEC is operating at only 60 percent of its productive capacity because of the current low level of oil demand throughout the world, it reasons that over time an increase in demand and changes in the oil ouput of leading producing countries will lead to OPEC's advantage.



Seismic land, marine crews increase in June

. TULSA — According to the Society of Exploration Geophysicists' latest report, the number of seismic land crews and marine vessels searching for oil and gas in the U.S. and U.S. waters during June increased by 10 crews and vessels over May. The June total was 500, compared with 490 in May.

The June total (500) represents an increase of two percent over last month, a six percent increase over June 1983, a 19 percent decrease from June 1982, a 28 percent decrease from June 1981, a seven percent decrease from June 1980,a 24 percent increase over June, 1979, and a gain of 38 percent over the same month in 1978.

Dollar gains

LONDON (AP) — The dollar surged to near-record highs early today, backed by predictions of higher U.S. interest rates. Gold prices moved lower.

Dealers said the dollar advance was powered by Monday's announcement of a boom in May consumer credit in the United States and the forecast by economist Henry Kaufman that interest rates would be moving up.

EXPLORATION HIGHLIGHTS

Lea wildcat opens new gas pay

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business-Oil Editor

The successful completion of a wildcat in Lea County has opened a new pay zone in the Pitchfolk Ranch field.

HNG OIL CO., Midland, completed its Madera Ridge "25" Federal Com No.1 flowing 5.7 Mmcfd gas on a 9/64 in. choke with a flowing tubing pressure of 8,150 psi. The well was completed in the Upper Morrow Sand through perforations at 14,664-14,682 after being drilled to a total depth of 15,750 ft.

HNG is partners in the well with Southland Royalty of Fort Worth, with each holding 50 percent interest, and HNG acting as operator.

HNG has in excess of 1,000 undeveloped acres in the area of the discovery, which is being currently held by oil production.

Scurry wildcat tests for 103 barrels

BUSH EXPLORATION INC., Midland, has completed its No.2 Ainsworth pumping 103 bopd of 49 API crude with 30 bwpd and a gas oil ratio of 92:1.

The well completed in an open hole section of the Ellenberger, after being drilled to a TD of 8,350 and 4 1/2 in. casing was run to 8,303 ft. No acid was used in the completion. Formation tops were established at 7,709 on top of the Strawn; 8,174 at the Mississippian; and 8,326 ft. on top of the Ellenberger on a ground elevation of 2,660 ft.

Texas American tests for 72 barrels

A fusselman wildcat completed by TEXAS AMERICAN OIL CORP., Midland, looks "encouraging" according to the opeator and may open a new area of interest.

The Fusselman discovery is five mile from nearest production in that interval and over two miles from Cisco Sand and Wolfcamp production which is prevalent in the area.

The No.1 LeRuth Stewart finaled flowing 72 bopd of 54.4 API crude, 160 Mcfd of gas and 9 bwpd on a 12/64 in. choke through perforations in two intervals, 8,922-8,930 ft. and 8,934-8,937 ft. Total depth was 9,125 and plugged back depth was 9,017 with 5 1/2 in. casing being run to that depth.

Formation tops were selected as 7,026 for the Wolfcamp; 7,410 ft. for the Cisco Sand; 8,616 ft. at the Strawn; 8,758 on top of the Mississippian; 8,874 on the Woodford and 8,970 at the Montoya. Ground elevation was 2,518 ft.

The well is now shut-in awaiting a gas connection, and the operator has not yet tested formations up hole.

The prospect was drilled on seismic, since there is a lack of well control in the area, and a confirmation well has been scheduled one milé to the west.

Texas American holds approximately 1,500 acres in the area, including a farm out from Woods Petroleum. The confirmation well will be drilled on the farm out.

Location for the well is 1,300 ft. from north and 2,150 ft. from east lines of Section 3, Block 30, W&NW survey, 13 miles northwest of Sterling City.

Council proposes salary increase for employees

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Assistant City Editor

The city of Midland will be giving its employees a 5 percent salary increase next year while keeping the tax hike barely under the 8 percent limit if a proposed budget is approved by the City Council.

A final form of the proposed budget will be filed in the City Secretary's office Thursday morning by Mayor G. Thane Akins. He will explain the budget during a news conference at 9 a.m. in City Hall Council Chambers.

Akins said the final tally should be $57 million for the three separate funds — General, Airport, Water and Sewer. This is 16 percent above the 1983-84 budget of $49 million and will require $1 million from surplus to balance the budget.

On an estimated tax base of $3,437,520,000, the city's effective tax rate would be 34.27 cents per $100 valuation. This is the tax rate that would bring in the same amount of revenue as last year's 44 cents per $100 on a tax base of $2,677,964,461. The proposed tax rate is 37 cents, or 7.9662 percent. These figures came from a city official and Roland Wilkinson, chief appraiser with the Midland County Tax Appraisal District.

By staying under 8 percent, the city won't be subject to a rollback if the citizens believe the tax rate is too much.

However, before the budget and tax rate are finalized, the tax base could change, according to Wilkinson.

The 5 percent pay increase will add about $1 million to the budget. When the City Council started its work sessions on the budget June 25, a memo from City Manager James Brown noted that "no general wage increases have been calculated into the budget." The memo also pointed out that each 1 percent of salary increase equals about $209,000.

Akins said only the City Council can determine if the employees get a wage increase and that normally is not discussed until the end of the budget work sessions "because it has the biggest impact."

Word that the employees might have to go a second year without pay raises circulated the first couple days of the budget work session. "We got more calls on that," said the mayor, who added that the council hadn't intended on not giving the increases.

Sales tax rebate estimates for next year will remain conservative "as a matter of course," said the mayor. "We're going to stay on the conservative side for the next fiscal year." Last week, the city received a check for $616,000 compared to slightly more than $200,000 for the same month a year ago. These checks are for the 1 cent charged by the city on items included in the sales taxable category. They make up part of the revenues in the General Fund budget.

Wilkinson said he expects to have a more definite tax base figure ready by the end of the week, although he expects it to remain in the area of $3.4 billion. Bank stock hasn't been included in the figure, a change which was ordered by the State Legislature in an 11th hour move during the special session.

Under this change, the district will charge $5.25 per $1,000 of total equity capital along with taxing tangible personal property such as computers and office furniture. However, this change from the normal procedure of taxes on the banks may not yield as much money for Midland, he said.

In addition, corrections on valuations by the Appraisal Review Board have not been made in the tax base, he said.

The 28 percent increase in the tax base falls in line with an estimate made by the State Property Tax Board in January 1983 that Midland's appraisals were at 73 percent of market value. The tax district reappraised all property this year, an act that was required by state law, according to Wilkinson. He suggested that reappraisals might be done every year rather than once every four to five years.

A tentative schedule lists the council as having a special meeting Aug. 7 to vote on the tax rate for 1985. Another special meeting will be Aug. 21 to hold a public hearing on the tax increase. At the regular meeting Aug. 28, the council will vote on the tax rate, adopt the tax rate and then adopt the budget for 1985 fiscal year.

Mini classes for mini students

Wait a minute...

Monday was the first day of Kids' College at MC, and more than 200 youngsters signed up for the two-week courses being offered.

"I didn't think I'd have to go through this for another eight years," one mother lamented as she dropped off her son for his first day at college. "Behave yourself!" she called after him.

"Aw, Mom."

About 230 children, ages 9 through 12, enrolled in one, two or three courses. They were able to choose from nearly 20 1½-hour classes, costing $20 each.

Although MC has offered computer classes for children, this was its first full-fledged attempt at half-pint education. And, according to Assistant Director for Community Services Deana Lusk, it's a smashing success.

The halls were overrun with students carrying floppy discs for computer class, sketchpads for drawing, Polaroids for photography, ballet slippers, tennis rackets and guitars.

Computer classes were still the most popular, Ms. Lusk said, with 72 children registered.

"I was born BVG — before video games," instructor Dennis Sever told his computer students. "Nowadays, if you can't score 11,000 on Pacman you're a nerd. You guys are growing up in an age where you're going to have to conform to the computer. You're going to have to learn to live with it — for good or bad."

Words such as loop, break out, chip, program and input rolled off the instructor's tongue. The children seemed to understand what he was talking about. Most of their parents wouldn't.

"Times are going to change. People who have computer skills are going to be very much in demand — not just programmers but users," Sever continued. "Don't think you'll be able to get through college without some kind of word processing skills."

— Sixteen children, enrolled in a course entitled Kids' College Gazette, plan to put out a newspaper by next Thursday. They'll learn the printing trade from deadlines to headlines. Interviewing, writing, typesetting, designing, printing and distributing are items on their agenda.

— Mona Hudson was teaching a dozen budding photographers principles of composition, lighting and camera care. They'll start from scratch (one girl couldn't even open her SX-70 Land Camera) and finish by learning something about darkroom techniques, even though they only use Polaroids.

— Well-dressed students in his clay course sat on dirty, dusty chairs and were told their group project would be to create "Life on Planet X135," a table-top replica of a foreign planet.

— In a training room lined with discarded shoes, Carol LaRoche was teaching ballet positions to 16 slender girls balanced precariously against chairbacks. Some came dressed for the part — turning out in leotards, skirts, leg warmers and slippers — while others were stretching awkwardly in T-shirts, shorts and bare feet.

— Reading for Speed and Fun, a course Ms. Lusk was worried wouldn't fill up, was so popular a second section was offered.

"The response (to Kids' College) has been so terrific, we're planning to do it again next summer," Ms. Lusk said.

Consultants move students into working world

By LAWRENCE BUDD
Staff Writer

ODESSA — There is a group of Permian Basin consultants that do the job for free.

What's in it for them?

Class credit.

But these are not typical college students.

Participants in the Small Business Institute at the University of Texas of the Permian Basin provide area entrepreneurs with experienced consultants to give their businesses "the business."

Graduate students or seniors with prior experience in the area the business owner wants studied are matched by Tom Schaefer, director of the institute.

The business gets what Schaefer estimated was a $5,000 consulting job free (with a charge for expenses incurred). The students get the added experience and three credits toward their degrees.

"The client creates a laboratory for us," said the UTPB management professor, getting the student out of the classroom and into the business world.

While cautioning that "We can't service everybody," Schaefer did list a number of success stories in which the business came away with something of value.

When a new motel chain moved into the Petroplex, the SBI provided them with a customer profile.

A Midland day care center was contemplating expansion during the latest boom. Instead of opening a new facility, the center took the advice of its SBI consultants (vice presidents at a Midland bank) to expand their current facility and fire the operating manager, said Schaefer.

Jacksons concert made my dreams come true

It was the two grade school-aged girls standing on their chairs four rows ahead of me who wiped out the childish recollections in which I had been so comfortably living for the past few hours.

Dressed in shiny plastic shorts and those cut-off sweatshirts made popular in "Flashdance," they turned to each other in question when the Jacksons broke into "I'll Be There."

So maybe they weren't around when that hit made Casey Kasem's top whatever. I guessed I was about their age when a group of 10 or so girls dressed in flannel nightgowns and big brother's old football jerseys and participated in popcorn eating and pillow-throwing slumber parties.

We listened to The Jackson 5, The Monkees and the Partridge Family 45's, dreamed about our first real boy-girl party — and giggled about slow-dancing and first kisses.

Okay, maybe I didn't learn my alphabets from "ABC," but I came pretty darn close.

In the parking lot before what has been tagged the event of the summer, it was too familiar a scene — another tailgate party with old college friends, fried chicken and iced-down coolers of beer. The Dallas humidity felt like home and, stationed amidst the Mercedes, BMWs and Volvos plastered with yellow and blue Highland Park High School stickers, the setting was reminiscent of another early fall football game.

The same feelings started simmering as they always do when seated on a cramped Southwest flight. The stewardess swept by collecting cans as the skyline of Dallas appears on the horizon off the tip of the wing. The rush for the aisle was typically frenzied, as was the charge to the baggage area, the car and the liquor store across from the Love Airport entrance.

And then there was that winding drive down Northwest Highway to Texas Stadium, feeling selfishly satisfied in the knowledge of a whole weekend away from work — just one more chance at a few short days of irresponsible collegiate chaos and watching, once again, SMU sports, snobbery and silliness.

Despite the craziness of the crowd, the personalized plates in the parking lot and the long lines, it was not quite the normal materialistic Mustang mob that greeted us at the gate.

First clue: metal detectors. Unless there was a threat on Lance McIlhenny's passing arm, something was not flying right here. Checking purses and bags, perhaps suspiciously eyeing bulging ankles and other anatomical areas for flasks, yes — but not siren sounds at the scent of a key ring.

Second clue: Pespi — not Coca-Cola or Dr Pepper — concession stands.

Third clue: red satin jackets, which could have been pompon girl apparel, but wasn't. It just doesn't fit with sideline kicks when combined with black leather shorts and white sequined gloves.

And there was a lot of that there. A lot of little Michael Jackson look-alikes and a lot of big Michael Jackson clones. There were kids with their parents and, among some families, it was difficult to determine which generation was the most loyal. But most of the faces were white.

A group, once past the security guards on the field, formed around a little kid, who, at the age of about two, was trying his best to make it on stage with his talented break-dancing. The moondance didn't exactly give the illusion of floating, but, heck, give the kid another year.

There were the two junior high school-aged guys making an enthusiastic effort to be the Spinners of the stadium steps.

There were kids, teens and adults, some punkers, a few long-hairs and, unfortunately, a lot of preppies and fewer blacks.

But so be it. This was a show with lasers, a seven-story stage, lighted spiders, dragon-slayers and colorful costumes. And, along with Eddie Van Halen and Prince, there were thousands more in attendance than I ever saw at an SMU football game my first couple of years of college.

The Motown music, when, as Michael put it, the brothers got "old-fashioned," was worth the ticket torment; the synchronized smoothness of the steps (when viewed through binoculars or on the large overhead screen) melted away the 90-degree heat; the surprise appearance of Van Halen (although we were tipped off by a local newspaper reporter) was still filled with electricity and, after an hour of amazing acrobats and three costume changes, the real-life video of "Billie Jean" was, I mean, like really (way) tubular.

Hey, even the fireworks which showered the stadium after the show should have made those responsible for Fourth of July country club displays (in attendance as chaperones, I'm sure) sit up and take note.

And the majority of the audience, no matter how responsive to the music, consisted of North Dallas and Park Cities residents, who, with grins plastered on their innocent faces, headed out to the parking lot and an easy cruise down the tollway home.

Maybe some who really wanted to be there couldn't afford the tickets. Maybe others who forked over the $120 couldn't afford bus fare home. No one wants to walk from Irving.

I guess my biggest satisfaction, other than having a fourth-grade dream come true, was the thought that no matter how big a future victory over that little school in Austin with the glowing orange tower could be, it can't possibly rival the enthusiasm of a Michael Mania event.

Blind Tulia man shapes his life through wood

TULIA, Texas (AP) — The power saw buzzes as Larry Shannon shapes pieces of pine into toy-size 18-wheeler trucks in his garage woodworking shop. He sandpapers the pieces before assembling them into trucks for gifts.

A true craftsman, Shannon takes pride in his work and knows that it is well done, although he can't see what he has made. Shannon has been blind for the past 12 years.

Shannon's wife, Gwyn Ann, gave him the radial alarm saw for Christmas one year and told him it was time for him to enlarge the house.

"Everyone was sure I'd cut an arm off," said Shannon, 38, who lost his eyesight as a complication of diabetes. "But I haven't had an accident and hardly ever hit my fingers with the hammer."

Carrying out his wife's request for more home space, Shannon, with an assistant, made their single garage into a double one with spacious utility room at the back. He built sewing cabinets for it and beautiful ash cabinets for their kitchen.

Shannon is especially proud of the detailed kitchen cabinets with convenient sliding shelves in some areas, and also of a lattice wood frame for potted plants that hangs from the ceiling of their dining room. His first carpentery job was a backyard storage house, and later he built a playhouse for their children, Paula, 10 and Kenny, 3. Shannon also has built bookcases for their home.

"The only times I have been a little worried that I might get hurt while carpentering was when I was on roofs putting up rafters in new construction, re-decking or laying new shingles," said Shannon. He has built two new houses in Tulia during the past three years.

Born in Plainview, Shannon attended Plainview schools 10 years before the family moved to Tulia where he was graduated from Tulia High School in 1964. For three years in Plainview schools he enjoyed Future Farmers of America and the shop classs where he was introduced to woodworking. After attending South Plains College at Levelland a year and a half, Shannon quit to farm with his father, R.A. Shannon of Tulia, and Weldon Kiker. Then came a three-year period of working in the Tulia Post Office as clerk and carrier.

Shannon returned to farming for two years, this time with his brother, James Shannon, nine miles west of Kress in the Center Plains Community. He quit farming in 1969 because he was losing his eyesight. He was blind by 1972. He has had diabetes since he was 9.

He gradually taught himself how to use power tools again and five years ago attended for three months the Kresco Rehabilitation Center in Austin.

"I went to get help in using power tools, but in two weeks, I started helping the Center staff use them," smiled Shannon. "But they did teach me to measure better."

Also Shannon learned how to read Braille, use an abacus, and to use his white cane so he could get around on his own. He does not read anything in Braille because he finds it more convenient to listen to the talking books available from the State Library. However, he uses a Braille tape, foot rule and three-foot rule in his work.

Shannon said he wouldn't be afraid to ride a commercial plane anywhere, as the airlines took good care of him when he went back and forth to Austin while training at the Center. But he would have ended up in California instead of Tulia once when riding the bus if it had not been that a local driver recognized him and got him home.

Shannon, who formerly liked to ride horses on his father's farm, still enjoys water skiing. "Snow skiing is all right," he said, "but it gives me a strange feeling coming down when I don't know where the trees are!"

Shannon makes light of his disability. "It's just one of those things," he said. "I just overlook it and go on. You do what you have to. You learn how to use your other senses when you are blind."

CONSULTANTS

"One of the biggest mistakes you can make is to expand prematurely," he said.

Location studies performed by the SBI have convinced several businesses to move to keep up with development.

Other methods the consultants use include studying license plates to sample traffic frequenting the store's location. Because traffic might pass by a store, rather than struggle to reach an inaccessible locale, the license-plate method is used.

Other areas the SBI can study include:

— Financial analysis.
— Records and credit collection.
— Inventory control.
— Market research.
— Personnel.
— Foreign trade.

SBI also has convinced struggling businesses to fold. "Sometimes you get a basket case. Sometimes people wait too long," said Schaefer.

"Timely closure is a money saver," he said, "If the handwriting is on the wall and you don't admit it, you're going to lose a lot more than you would have otherwise."

SBI feasibility studies have convinced aspiring merchants to reconsider. "This is sometimes the best advice a businessman can get — to not go into business," said Schaefer, suggesting many prospective businesses are doomed from the beginning by a lack of working capital.

"Usually, it takes more than you think," he said.

A "start-up kit" available from SBI gives people beginning a business venture a set of guidelines which take them from determining how much capital will be needed to checklists ensuring the business is prepared to open.

"You'll have people going into business who forget to plan for the price of a cash register," he said, who might have been prepared if they had resorted to the start-up kit.

While much of SBI's skills come from the individual business backgrounds, Schaefer said the consultants sometime uncover "an obvious little thing" that might have gone undetected otherwise.

Many times, "The client who asks for help could just as well do this himself." Schaefer suggested the owner is often "too hung up in everyday sales to take a step back."

Operated in cooperation with the U.S. Small Business Administration, SBI is academia's answer to the Service Corps of Retired Executives, a group formed in he 1960s, and Active Corps of Executives, a group of active executives that offer consultation to struggling businesses.

SCORE/ACE, the current combined group, is forming a chapter through the Midland Chamber of Commerce, said Schaefer.

He pointed out these non-profit organizations offer small businessmen wanting outside help a solution to a paradox which otherwise frustrates their search for aid: The business that needs a consultant many times cannot pay the price.

Wife remains in jail

From Staff Reports

A 41-year-old rural Midland woman charged with trying to have her husband murdered remains jailed under $100,000 set Monday by Justice of the Peace Robert Pine.

She is accused of capital solicitation of murder after allegedly offering a Department of Public Safety officer an undisclosed amount of cash and jewelry to kill her husband.

The officer was posing as a "hit man" after city police received a tip on July 9 that she was trying to get someone to kill her husband.

In theft and burglary complaints to city police during the past 24 hours, a safe contining an undetermined amount of cash and checks was reported taken in a Sunday night break-in at the Midland Church of God, 5800 Thomason Drive.

Firefighters to have MD drive

The Midland Fire Fighters will have the annual Muscular Dystrophy "Fill the Boot" at two major intersections Saturday.

Ceremonies will begin at 10 a.m. Thursday in the fire chief's office for the coin toss which determines which shift will get its choice of intersections.

Both the Midkiff Road and Wadley Avenue and the Andrews Highway and Illinois Avenue intersections will be manned by off duty firemen trying to fill their boots with contributions. The funds will be used to support the local Muscular Dystrophy clinic and the extensive patient service program.

There have been a number of church burglaries in the past few months and this week Crime Stoppers is focusing on such a case.

During the early morning hours of June 24 someone broke a window to gain entry into the First Church of God, 2212 E. 11th in Odessa. The burglar used spray paint to write Satanic symbols and profanities throughout the church. The writings were found on walls, ceilings and furniture. Items used in the worship service as well as a Bible were thrown on the floor.

Odessa Crime Stoppers will pay

$1,000 cash for information given this week that results in the arrest and grand jury indictment of the burglar. Crime Stoppers pays cash rewards for information leading to indictments of felony offenders. In Odessa, call 333-TIPS. In Midland, call 694-TIPS. All callers can remain anonymous.

Bombing suspects' trial postponed

State District Judge Thomas Thorpe said Monday that he has delayed the trial of Marshall Dewayne Williams until the defendant, who is also under federal indictment, is examined by a psychiatrist appointed by U.S. District Judge Joe Fish.

Williams also is under federal indictment for manufacturing, possessing and detonating a bomb, according to court records.

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — The Ector County Jail inmate who escaped July 5 while working as a trusty at the county maintenance facility was recaptured Thursday in St. Louis, a sheriff's department spokesman said.

John Alex Boggs, 27, who gave the sheriff's department a Fort Worth address, was reportedly in a St. Louis jail, facing local charges there, said Capt. Gene Kloss. He had no further information on how Boggs was arrested, and said the inmate would be transported back to the county after the St. Louis cases had been prosecuted.

Boggs apparently walked away from the county maintenance facility after being driven to the building near I-20 in South Odessa. The sheriff's department had indicated Boggs would have been released on theft charges the day he escaped, but Boggs was on parole from the Texas Department of Corrections and was facing revocation.

Kloss said July 6 that the county attorney's office would have agreed to release Boggs based on time he had already served since his June 10 arrest.

She's in no danger because a shark is no match for Care Bears. Her pink suit has a screen printed front of Care Bears and heart balloons and crisscross straps in back. The shark's friend is wearing elastic-waisted rainbow trunks.

Summer is bright in color spliced suits of red, orange, yellow and purple. Safety tip: Lifesaving devices should be kept on hand, but floating objects that could tempt a child to deep water should not be left in a pool.

Summer vacation is no vacation for parents. That's when they suit up and dive right into the role of lifeguard, whether at the pool or on the beach. With children home from school and the weather warm, swimming is a popular pastime. Despite the sport being great exercise and fun for children, far too many drownings occur each year.

A parent's summer job becomes that of lifeguard: Watching for overexposure to the sun, making sure the water is not too deep and doing everything possible to keep the children safe.

Dr. David Gluck, corporate medical director of JCPenney and swim insructor to his own three children, is a firm believer in the safety principles of The National Safety Council. He offers the following lifeguarding rules for water safety:

— Children should not be allowed to swim or play in the water without the supervision of an adult who can swim and who knows rescue techniques.

— Be sure to teach children to swim. Parents should arrange for instruction by professionals if not qualified to teach the child themselves.

Children are not born swimmers, nor are they inherently afraid of the water. It is the parent's attitude toward swimming that is most important in shaping the child's attitude. If the parent is nervous about the water, the child will be too. So be confident, review safety procedures and encourage them to enjoy their summertime swim.

Hearst Feature Service

All-American sportswear has its foot firmly planted in fashion's door, and judging from the recent fall openings in New York, tailored wear has no intention of relinquishing its position.

For years, sportswear separates have played second fiddle to dresses, but now they have their own secure position. If designers have their way, fashions with the thoroughbred look will continue to compete with the dress market for a favored spot in women's wardrobes.

Well-tailored styles on Seventh Avenue took their cue from the clean lines and sensible cuts of menswear. The mannish look for women was the most pervasive trend, emphasized by ties, crisp shirts and menswear fabrics. Broad-shouldered coats, pleated and crisply cuffed trousers and supple lean-lined sweaters are predominant.

While the look is emphatically boyish, as in Calvin Klein's clean shirt jackets and flannel pants, or super-refined and romantic, as in Ralph Lauren's tweed jackets matched with sweeping velvet skirts, sportswear has lost none of its feminine appeal.

At the presentations in Manhattan, American designers agreed on fluid, easy silhouettes, especially at the top. There will be oversize toppers and jackets. Slinky airborne jerseys, coats and column-shaped dresses are de rigueur.

Perry Ellis did offer some refreshing moments away from the tailored look, inspired in the loosest sense by the vivid design artist Sona Delaunay, a post-World War I painter known for bright colors and bold geometric shapes.

But it was Klein, America's dean of understated style, who gave free reign to his fantasies of thoroughbred gentility. While not exactly for the horsey set, even though a few of his models sported pony tails, the boyish look had a sophisticated but eminently commercial look that the designer promoted with Klein basics.

Designers play 'Pajama Game'

The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

PARIS — The Pajama Game is the hottest ticket in Paris as France's most famous designers say good night to ball gowns and jump into jammies.

The new get-ready-for-bed look for fall features ankle-length dressing gowns that the French call "robes de chambre." These come in fabrics such as printed satins, menswear foulards, black velvets and satin or silk crepe de Chine. They are worn with slick satin pajamas, some with tuxedo stripes down the sides, and they are intended for the boudoir, the bistro or the ballroom. You could even wear them to bed.

Claude Montana, who started the whole trend with his menswear collection last month when he sent his bridegrooms out in ankle-length robes and pajamas instead of the traditional black-tie formal wear, calls his ankle-length smoking jackets "peignoirs." He says that they are meant for at-home entertaining, but are certainly OK to wear out on the town.

Lagerfeld's replacement at Chloe, Guy Paulin, offers foulard-print satin smoking jackets that are bath-robe-sashed over wide-leg pajamas. Nino Cerruti layers his bedtime story with jackets over satin robe-coats over pajamas. Issey Miyake gives us his idea of Dr. Dentons in leopard-print cotton. And Guy Laroche buttons his taupe satin pajamas in rhinestones, then unbuttons the top to reveal a black sequined tank top.

While Sonia Rykiel does not present her pajama pants as part of a dressing-gown look borrowed from Noel Coward, she offers several versions of her wide-leg, ankle-length pajamas for both day and night. She is the only designer in Paris to come up with balbriggans (garments made of the loosely knitted cotton found in underwear) as well as the wide-leg pj's.

In a truly remarkable collection that once more establishes her as the queen of French fashion, Rykiel offers a sweater for every body type — from skintight pullovers for the very lean to big front-paneled blousons for weight watchers. Both her wide-leg pajamas and her new above-the-ankle cigarette pants, which fit like a second skin, make the trouser-pleated, man-tailored variety look suddenly dated.

Rykiel's coats are the talk of the town right now, especially the side-tie versions in heavy jersey and the fake-fur teddy-bear coats with real teddy bears placed around the neck like fur pieces. Rykiel also comes up with the best finale of the season: 40 models wearing sweater-dresses with tie-on tulle tutus. Colors include several shades of pink, violet, blue, red, celery, white, black and several shades of gray.

Issey Miyake confirms his standing as Japan's No. 1 designer with a collection that offers a breathtaking range of fabrics and colors that only the Japanese seem to be able to do.

His pin-tucked sweaters are true miracles of fabrication, and his evening matte jerseys look as if they have been sprayed onto the torso over hidden plastic body-molds. If you are wondering whether to buy fall pants that are wide or narrow, buy Miyake. He has come up with trousers that convert from slender to full via pant-leg zippers.

Like Thierry Mugler, Miyake likes hoods for fall — on coats, on jackets, and sometimes shown by models wearing face masks that are exact reproductions of their own faces. If Miyake's intention was to save face for the Japanese, who have been widely criticized this season for not furthering their ragtag look much beyond its original rags, he succeeded. He is the undisputed king of wrap-and-tie fashion and a wizard with modular clothes that fold and unfold, wrap and unwrap to form a new look with each gesture.

Just as talk of fashion androgyny seemed to overshadow the news of longer skirts in Milan, pajamas and pants are grabbing the headlines here. The fact remains, however, that skirts are indeed inching downward, and coats, including dressing gown-bathrobe coats, are firmly established at or around the ankles. Some of the best in Paris are at Jean Claude de Luca, where epauletted trench coats come in bright orange and powdery pastel tweeds that are lined in lush fur.

The Cerruti collection takes the man-tailored look beyond its manly limitations with such new ideas as long, white oversize vests that perform like jackets over smaller patterned vests. The best blazer coat of this or any other season is Cerruti's oversize version that buttons with one button at hip level rather than at the waist.

NEW YORK (AP) — Fresh fruits and vegetables may be as good for your skin externally as they are for your nutrition internally, according to an article in a new magazine devoted to fashion, beauty, health and fitness.

As an alternative to expensive beauty preparations it offers these suggestions:

— For oily skin: mash a tomato with one tablespoon each of honey, yogurt and oatmeal. Apply to face, avoiding eye area. Leave on for 15 minutes. Rinse with warm water, working mixture into skin.

— For dry skin: beat an egg yolk well and blend with half avocado until smooth. Apply to face and neck. Leave on for 15 minutes. Rinse with warm water.

— For all skin types: save juice from steamed or boiled spinach. Mix with 3 tablespoons sour cream. Apply to face and leave on for 10 minutes. Rinse with warm water.

Season for baring feet arrives

NEW YORK — The barefoot season is here. Before kicking those shoes off, Seventeen magazine suggests taking a few minutes to treat feet to some special care designed to make them beautifully "bareable" all summer.

The key step to keeping feet nice and neat is soaking them in warm, soapy water. "Your feet will get lots of exposure this summer, so keep them clean with a daily scrubbing," the magazine's beauty editors advise. Be sure to pay special attention to the areas where dirt collects — between toes, on backs of heals and on soles.

To keep feet smooth all over, use a pumice stone two or three times a week. Diane Young of the Diane Young Skin Care Center in New York said using the pumice stone or callus file will not only remove rough skin, but will smooth down calluses and corns, which can be irritating if left untreated.

Top off special foot treatment with a pedicure. "Clip toenails straight across, then smooth the edges with an emery board," said the magazine's beauty experts. Massage feet with lotion, then push back the cuticles and scrape off the dead skin with an orange stick.

As a final touch, apply a little polish. For a little "fancy footwork" try electric-colored polishes including red, yellow, green, orange and purple — or try one color for each toe. To keep colors from smudging separate toes with cotton balls.

Even when shoes are required, keep feet in shape by following suggestions in the magazine from New York specialist Dr. A. Louis Shure: "Keep feet dry, change shoes often and use an antifungal powder to help prevent athlete's foot." Buy well-fitting shoes with adequate room in the toe area — espcially important if bunions are a problem.

Finally, to prevent "pump bumps," painful swelling which often appears on the back of the heal bone in the summer, adhesive strips of moleskin fabric can be attached to the back of shoes or to feet.

Manicure technique wins hands down

King Features Syndicate

If you are one of those people who wishes her hands stopped at the second knuckle, take heart. Bid farewell to chipped, split, torn and bitten nails. Thanks to good grooming and nail-wrapping techniques, anyone can have respectable and healthy nails.

Carole Yaffa, a Scottsdale, Arizona, nail specialist, would bet her topcoat on that. For 15 years, Yaffa has been on the nail-wrapping bandwagon, because she is convinced that, properly done, no other technique protects nails as well and helps them grow as strong as paper wraps.

C.A. Barrett and Holly Templeton, owners of a nail salon in Phoenix, agree. "Wrapping is not damaging and allows you to grow your own nails," Barrett says.

In this process, thin pieces of a tissue-like paper are applied over the top one-half to one-third of the nail. The technique involves a complete manicure, followed by two layers of nail polish and one layer of topcoat.

"Technique is the key to a good wrap," Yaffa explains. "The wrap should not feel thick under the nail. It should be tucked in well on the sides, and you should not be able to see a ridge where the wrap begins on the nail."

According to Templeton, the nail wrap should last two weeks. "The manicure lasts longer," she explains, "because the tissue actually absorbs the polish, so there's less maintenance necessary."

"This process has been around at least 35 years," Yaffa explains, "And, although there are many variations on it, I still feel the paper wrap is best, because it does not involve the nail bed." A healthy nail bed is essential for healthy nails.

LIQUID WRAP: A liquid containing fiber is applied in two or three coats to the nails. Although faster and initially as attractive, this process builds up material on the nail bed and still leaves the sides of the nails unprotected.

SILK WRAP: Pieces of silk are affixed to the nails with five-second glue. The danger here is that a lot of glue is used, and this glue must be completely removed at each manicure or fungus can grow under the nail. The glue is also very drying to the nail.

PORCELAIN NAILS: An acrylic or "champagne" nail is affixed over your natural nail and nail bed. Porcelain nails lend instant glamour and can be done to look very realistic. However, this process involves filing the nail bed and thinning the natural nail.

The danger in covering the nail bed with a man-made one is that the nail can loosen on the sides and water can get under the fake. This wet and dark area provides an ideal breeding ground for fungus.

Ideally, acrylic nails should be taken off at each manicure and inspected for signs of disease. If fungus is present, the nail will look dark green. In this case, the acrylic product must not be reapplied.

TIPS: This alternative to acrylic nails involves having acrylic tips affixed to your own. Combined with nail wraps, this process does not touch the nail bed and produces, instantly, glamorous hands. Tips also come in handy if a nail breaks off. Since the nail bed is not affected in this process, tips do not weaken the natural nail.

Once you've grown those lovely perfect ovals (on your own or with help), here's some advice on how to keep them that way.

NAIL-SAVING DO'S

— Use a screwdriver for loose screws, not your nail.

NAIL-KILLING DON'TS

NAIL TIPS

— Never thin that thickened polish with nail-polish remover. Always use a polish solvent or thinner; and realize that you can't thin a polish more than twice, at most, without chemically breaking down the substance.

Bright shades included among fall collections

Hearst Feature Service

If basic black has been your fashion choice for the past two seasons, better retrain your thinking.

High-powered colors come together this fall in brilliant classic collections. They've been winningly translated in fabulous fabrics in shades of pink, rose, saffron, malachite, evening violet, cranberry, tomato, sea blue and tile green, along with more subdued shades of navy, chocolate brown and the sleeper, khaki.

Who could better deliver the basic menswear look, minus all the frills, than the moneyed woman's friend, Bill Blass? And the dominant accent in his collection was pink. At his show in New York's Pierre Hotel, Blass presented a feast of tailored looks with bold proportions and offbeat color and fabric mixes.

Sashaying down the runway was a pink double-faced wool polo coat, mixed with camel or black-and-white tweed, sometimes both. This was for the woman with a more temperate taste, as were his bright seven-eighths coats worn over short black skirts.

While Blass favored sweaters under suits and coats, his newest blouse was also cut like a sweatshirt with wool ribbing on the neck, waist and cuff.

Understated luxury was best exemplified for day in a navy leather jacket and skirt with Russian crown sable collars and cuffs. The simple sweater shirt underneath was a double layer of navy chiffon and knit.

Occasionally, Blass accessorized his tailored coats and suits with a hand-beaded sweater or vest for the woman to wear at a Sunday night party or dinner. "That's always the trickiest night of the week to know what to wear," he explained.

It's not only a glittery evening at de la Renta's, but a gold standard one too. If his daytime look is on the quiet side, his nighttime wear lights up with sexy boldness. He garnished vivid jackets witi the beaded trim his fans know him for; then he cut gold lame into slinky skirts and tunics for wearing with a gold sequin jacket. And then there was his Gypsy chic, with billowy blouses and skirts that glittered with Lurex thread.

President's shoes on display

Hearst Feature Service

SAN FRANCISCO — This is what you might call a footnote to the Democratic National Convention. "Shoes of the American Presidents," a small collection of hand-crafted shoes worn by former presidents, is on display at Hastings Clothing Co. here.

You might wander past the window and not notice the shoes worn by Presidents James Monroe, Abraham Lincoln, James Garfield, Ulysses Grant and Warren Harding. Except for the placards saying otherwise, the shoes look as if they're on sale as part of Johnston and Murphy's latest line at the store. Men's shoe styles have change little in a century.

"We've made shoes for presidents from the days of Millard Fillmore down to Jimmy Carter," Richard Tobasco, the shoe company's West Coast representative, said. "For some reasons, President Reagan hasn't called on us for his shoes."

The shoes on display look new, and some are — they were ordered, but not delivered.

Lincoln's shoes are narrow and sleek with only three eyelets, almost Italian in look. "Surprisingly, Lincoln had small feet for a tall man," Tobasco said. "I don't know his exact size, but his is a 9, maybe." The average American male wears 9-1/2 or 10.

Of the five presidents whose shoes are on exhibit, Garfield had the biggest feet — size 11-1/2. His high-top shoe, all laced up from toe to top of the ankle, looks like a boxing shoe.

The fanciest shoes belonged to Grant, whose two-tone, high-back shoes are half black patent leather and half natural kidskin with side buttons. They look like they have built-in spats.

"Lyndon Johnson was the most difficult to please," said Tobasco, who's been in the shoe business for 22 years. "He was particular. He wanted some thing substantial and yet something soft at the same time."

DEAR ABBY

Readers sink teeth into brushing brouhaha

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR READERS: "Grossed Out in Georgia" expressed disgust with people who brush their teeth in public washrooms. I defended the brushers. Many readers bristled.

Some letters straight from the readers' mouths:

DEAR ABBY: This is in regard to "Grossed Out," who couldn't stand the sight of someone brushing his teeth in a public restroom:

As a dental assistant for four years, I have seen many mouths that might have needed a lot less dental work had their owners done a little more brushing.

Tell "Grossed Out" that he needs to brush and floss only the teeth he wants to keep. — KEEP SMILING IN MISSION VIEJO

DEAR ABBY: After reading the letter from "Grossed Out," I was prompted to write in defense of brushing teeth in public.

At the age of 30, I finally got enough nerve to get braces to correct my teeth. Anyone who's had braces knows that food tends to adhere to the teeth and braces.

I brush my teeth in public restrooms after eating because I think it would look far worse to have food particles dangling from my braces.

Also, it's especially important while wearing braces to brush so decay doesn't destroy the teeth under the braces. — BRUSHING IN PUBLIC

DEAR ABBY: I'd like to comment on your answer to "Grossed Out," who objected to people brushing their teeth in a public washroom. Oral hygiene is important, but to have healthy teeth in the first place one must practice good nutrition. If you have poor teeth to begin with, it doesn't matter how often you brush and floss.

Children who live on candy bars, soft drinks, cookies, ice cream and other junk foods are asking for rotten teeth.

There are no substitutes for fresh fruits, vegetables and plenty of dairy products to ensure heathy teeth. — NUTRITIONIST

DEAR ABBY: The letter from "Grossed Out" is utterly dismaying. Instead of being put down, the practice of public teeth brushing should be encouraged — the same as the frequent washing of hands.

As any dentist could tell "Grossed Out" (and I'm sure a lot of them will), mouth bacteria like nothing better than immediately going to work on tiny bits of food lodged between their victim's teeth, and they're not about to wait until he is in the privacy of his own home.

And on purely aesthetic grounds, does "Grossed Out" find it less objectionable to encounter people (strangers or not) with bits of lunch clinging to their teeth? And how about breath that smells of onions and garlic following lunch at the deli down the street?

One wonders about the writer's own oral hygiene habits. Gross, no doubt. — ILL-MANNERED WITH HEALTHY TEETH

DEAR ABBY: You told "Grossed Out" that the sooner one brushes and flosses his teeth after eating, the healthier his teeth will be. Abby, that shows that you have fallen for the commercials of the teeth care industry.

There is no real proof that brushing and flossing will make teeth last longer. Let me tell you why I say that: My grandfather never owned a toothbrush and he never heard of dental floss. When he died at 88, he had all his own teeth and they were in wonderful condition. My mother brushed her teeth but never flossed, and she also kept all her teeth to a ripe old age.

I do a little better: I brush my teeth once a day and have my teeth cleaned once a year. At age 72 I still have all my teeth plus a few fillings.

On the other hand, my husband was a fanatic about brushing his teeth and flossing them, too. He saw his dentist every six months, but he lost all his teeth before he was 60.

So, I have concluded that if you want healthy, long-lasting teeth, you must choose the right parents. Nothing else counts. — M.K. IN CALIFORNIA

New parents make vulnerable consumers

By ERMA BOMBECK

If there's anyone more vulnerable than new parents, I don't know who it is.

Just mention, "It's good for your child," and we're filling out the check stub before we even know the price. We'll buy anything . . . especially if it promises to make our children smarter.

For the first child, I bought a three-tiered imitation leather pencil box that was supposed to restore order to her life and teach her self-reliance. She stuffed it down a sewer so she wouldn't have to lug it around.

We bought her only educational toys . . . large, expensive wood blocks that encouraged dexterity and modeling clay that nurtured creativity. She smashed the wood through a glass coffee table and forced the clay up her nose.

The globe of the world that was to pluck her from the ranks of "ordinary" students sat on the desk in her room and was a challenge. She once tossed 18 pieces of clothing on it and none fell off.

The puzzle map of the United States which we visualized as her ticket out of the fourth grade ended up in a sweeper bag, one capital at a time.

Later, we were suckered into the "study center" in which we created her very own learning womb. There was a desk equipped with a lamp which directed light to just the right height, a chair that commanded good posture and a hernia-unabridged dictionary. The "study center" never saw a human face.

The point of all this is the current push to make sure your child has a head start in the 20th century by giving him his own computer at the age of 3. They cost a lot of money. Millions of parents will buy them and sit back to wait for all that technology to pay off.

Me? I've learned my lesson. After the first child, I found I could motivate and inspire my children to levels of higher acadamia by whispering just six little words in their ear: "You flunk and I'll kill you!"

Jewish settlement pioneering symbol

KIRYAT ARBA, Occupied West Bank (AP) — By day, children pedaled tricycles and chased each other across the grassy lawns of this Jewish settlement while their mothers rocked baby carriages and kittens frolicked among the flowering shrubs.

By night, the settlement looked like a town under siege. Most people stayed inside their apartments with their families. Floodlights illuminated the barbed-wire fences, and armed guards moved into a stone bunker at the front gate.

Kiryat Arba's security chief, a U.S.-born Vietnam veteran who asked to be identified only as David, climbed into his jeep and drove slowly down the hill into the sprawling Palestinian city of Hebron. A spotlight mounted on top of the jeep swept across the road and over the roofs of Palestinian houses.

Kiryat Arba, a compact collection of four- and five-story apartment buildings, is a pioneering symbol and ideological center of the Jewish settlement movement in the West Bank.

"The Jewish underground is basically misinformed young idealists who were led to believe they could do anything and the authorities would look the other way."

At least a third of the 27 men arrested in connection with a "Jewish underground" accused of committing acts of terror against Palestinians have ties to Kiryat Arba, either as residents, former residents or relatives of settlement leaders. To many settlers they are heroes.

"Anything they have done was done for the sake of their country," said Rachel Klein, a middle-aged mother of four who has lived in Kiryat Arba since 1975.

Not all residents have that opinion. Three people who met a reporter in an alley after nightfall requested anonymity for fear of retaliation against their families by fellow settlers.

"The Jewish underground is basically misinformed young idealists who were led to believe they could do anything and the authorities would look the other way," said a settler who is an Israeli army reserve officer.

One of his friends added that Kiryat Arba was the source of "moral values for all settlers in Judea and Samaria," the biblical name for the West Bank. "There are people here who tell them that stealing and killing are OK, because the outcome is holy, that they can do anything they want and it's OK because they are doing it to reclaim the land of Israel."

Two of the men said that 72 semi-automatic rifles have been missing from the Kiryat Arba arsenal for several months. "We need to clean our own house," one of the men said. "There are people here who should have been disciplined a long time ago."

Kiryat Arba's 5,000 Jews are surrounded in all directions by the more than 200,000 Palestinians of Hebron and nearby villages. The hilltop settlement is both revered and reviled as the home of modern-day Jews who are not afraid to live in the midst of hostile Arabs, Jews who are not afraid of killing or being killed.

The settlement started in 1968, less than a year after Israel captured the West Bank from Jordan. Since then, eight Jewish settlers have been shot or stabbed to death in Hebron. Three of the six attacks in which the Jewish underground is charged occurred in Hebron, including last July's machine gun ambush at the Islamic University, which killed three Palestinian students and wounded 33 others.

Most Kiryat Arba settlers carry guns when they go down the hill to shop in Hebron's Palestinian market, where many vegetables sell for half the price charged by the settlement's grocery stores.

"I believe in preventive security," said David, the security chief who spent six years in the U.S. Marine Corps before immigriating to Israel a decade ago. "I've never discovered anything lurking in the bushes, and probably the reason I haven't is that I'm out here every night."

To people in Hebron, David's jeep is a hated symbol of the 30,000 Jews who live in more than 100 settlements among the West Bank's 750,000 Palestinians.

"This jeep and the settlers who march through the streets with their guns make the people very nervous," said Mustafa Natsheh, who was Hebron's acting mayor.

War has little effect on Americans

MANAMA, Bahrain (AP) — The Iran-Iraq war has had little outward effect on the estimated 80,000 Americans living and working in Arab nations along the Persian Gulf.

Many Americans contacted by The Associated Press in Kuwait, Saudi Arabia and Bahrain said they were not particularly disturbed by the attacks on commercial shipping in the gulf or the possibility that the conflict could escalate.

"Not much," said Sharon Palmer, an American nurse in eastern Saudi Arabia, when asked how the strife had changed her life. "It seems like you are so insulated here. You don't get the full impact of it, because you don't get all the news. You don't feel affected by it."

The news media in the area are either government-controlled or government-guided.

Other Americans, in Bahrain, the United Arab Emirates and Qatar, said in response to inquiries that their biggest problem was relatives calling from the United States expressing concern for their safety.

"They are sure we are on the firing line," said one American in the eastern Saudi oil center of Dhahran.

Most of the Americans asked that they not be identified because they did not want to upset their families at home. Americans in the region work for oil companies, construction firms and industrial establishments. Some are employed by banks, hospitals and universities. Still others serve as consultants to Arab governments.

Some of the Americans said they became concerned on June 5 when Saudi jetfighters shot down an Iranian warplane over Saudi waters.

"There's always been skirmishes somewhere in the region," said Hank Wolbrink, who has lived in Saudi Arabia for the last 11 years. "But we always felt safer here than anywhere else."

The largest single concentration of Americans — about 67,000 — is in Saudi Arabia — most of them in the eastern province on the gulf.

The sight of U.S. Airborne Warning and Control System (AWACS) radar planes flying over Saudi cities often give the Americans a sense of security, more than a dozen of the Americans interviewed said.

"The fact that the Saudis were directly involved in one incident did cause more concern among people here," said Wolbrink.

While U.S. Embassy officers along the gulf insisted there was no reason for concern, West European diplomats claimed that a good number of Americans were evidently worried.

"In the gulf, the Americans are more in the frontline than us," said one European diplomat, who refused to be identified. He added that these Americans have reason to worry because many Arabs resent the U.S. policy in the Middle East and because Iran's Islamic revolutionary government frequently denounces the United States as a "great devil."

SULTAN YAACOB, Lebanon (AP) — An Israeli soldier adjusted his field glasses to watch two Syrian soldiers climb from the shell of a concrete house in the desert of the Bekaa Valley a half a mile away.

The soldier, Pvt. Danny Hellman, trained his binoculars next on a nearby rock formation he knows by heart, where two other Syrians spend most of their day in the hot sun watching the Israelis at their northernmost outpost on the eastern front.

"Things are calm here now, but this is not our place," said Hellman, a young red-haired man doing his month of reserve service. "They watch us and we watch them. It is dangerous here, and I feel that."

Israeli troops fought their way into the Bekaa Valley during the 1982 invasion into Lebanon. Today, according to reports from Beirut, 30,000 to 40,000 Syrian troops face about 10,000 Israeli soldiers across the 35-mile front line stretching from the Bekaa south toward the Golan Heights.

In some places, as here, the two armies are less than a few hundred yards apart. The proximity keeps tension high, but it generally is controlled.

Although fighting breaks out routinely with forces Israel identifies as Syrian-backed Palestinian groups, the two armies have clashed only once since the cease-fire line was established in the Bekaa on June 11, 1982.

That flare-up occurred this past June 14 at Kfar Kouk, a post about six miles southeast of here.

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Dear Dr. Solomon: Isn't it true that so-called folk remedies have been found to contain ingredients that are actually helpful in treating a lot of illnesses? And if this is so, why are doctors against the Chinese herbal remedies that come into the United States? I'd be willing to bet that years from now doctors will find that these remedies also contain ingredients which really can make a person feel better. — Ms. W.P., Tulsa, Okla.

Dear Ms. P.: Some of the herbal remedies that have entered the United States over the past several years have not been considered to be particularly harmful. Their greatest disadvantage was that they discourage some patients, such as those with arthritis, from seeking medical treatment that could have been beneficial.

More recently, however, the Food and Drug Administration has received reports of illness and even of deaths associated with use of these remedies. Tests have revealed substantial variations in the manufacture of some of these remedies over a period of time. Apparently the combination of drugs and the amount of each drug in a product depend on what is available at the time of manufacture.

When I prescribe medication for one of my patients I want to know precisely what the medication contains. This is one time that I don't want to be surpised.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My daughter has been taking an antibiotic for some time. Lately her fingernails seem to be affected by it. The doctor has seen her and says there is nothing to worry about. Does this sort of thing happen very often? — Mrs. W.L., Cambridge, Mass.

Dear Mrs. L.: Drug use may produce nail changes, just as it may cause side effects in the hair and skin. Some of these changes disappear once the drug is stopped and the nails grow. Apparently your daughter's physician feels that the changes you observe are transient and fall within the category of side effects that will be eventually resolved.

Dear Dr. Solomon: Every time there's an article in newspapers about AIDS it mentions that homosexuals have a better chance of getting it than any other group. But when they write about homosexuals, do they mean both men and women? — Jason, Winston-Salem, N.C.

Dear Jason: It is the male homosexuals who represent a high-risk group for the acquired immune deficiency syndrome (AIDS). According to the Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta, there have not been any lesbians among the 3,000-plus cases of AIDS reported in the United States since 1979.

Dear Dr. Solomon: When the weather gets hot it seems that I can never get enough to drink, whether it's water, soft drinks, or juices. How can I tell if I'm getting more than is good for me? — Bill, Baltimore, Md.

Dear Bill: Fluid intake during hot weather is extremely important, and people are more likely to have too little than too much. In fact the thirst an individual experiences might not be an adequate indicator of the amount he or she actually should have.

Of course there are some people for whom an excessive intake of fluid may pose a problem. These include patients with heart, kidney, or liver disease, and those who have problems with fluid retention. These individuals should check with their physicians about what would be considered an adequate consumption of fluid in their specific cases.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I hope we don't have as hot a summer this year as we did last year, but if we do I would like to be prepared. Last year our neighborhood community center invited all senior citizens like myself to use their air-conditioned auditorium to cool off. What I would like to know is whether it is a good idea to go from a hot apartment to an air-conditioned place and then back to a hot apartment, or whether it might not be better to stay at the same temperature even if it is hot. — Mrs. E.K., Louisville, Ky.

Dear Mrs. K.: According to Dr. James Knochel, of the University of Texas Health Science Center at Dallas, even cooling off once a day can be of significant help since the effects of heat on the body are additive. Therefore, an air-conditioned break for even a couple of hours would be preferable to remaining in a hot apartment all day.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I've spoken with my daughter on numerous occasions about the danger of getting too much sun, but it hasn't done any good. On the theory that if you can't beat them, join them, I would like to know what precautions a person should take who insists on broiling herself in the sun during the summer months. — Mr. H.F., Boston, Mass.

Dear Mr. F.: These suggestions are not new, but I'm happy to repeat them:

Remember that the sun is a factor even on cloudy days since about three-quarters of the rays that can cause burning penetrate through the clouds.

Be aware that the sun's rays may be reflected from water, sand, and other surfaces.

For Grant, Memphis, Tennessee: Corticosteroids tend to increase the incidence of gastrointestinal hemorrhage. This has to be considered whenever treatment with steroids is being contemplated.

PUBLIC NOTICE

AT&T Communications has filed with the Public Utility Commission (PUC) of Texas to introduce a new intrastate, optional long distance service to begin August 1, 1984, the same date "Reach Out® America" plan will be available for interstate calls.*

A new service designed to give customers the opportunity to reduce the cost of long distance in Texas has been filed with the state PUC by AT&T Communications of the Southwest, Inc.

"Reach Out® Texas" is an optional calling plan which will provide additional discounts on long distance rates for Texas customers who frequently place calls in the evening, weekend, and night time calling periods.

The new "Reach Out® Texas" plan for the first time extends the benefits of competition to many Texas consumers who previously have not had any discounted long distance service available to them.

AT&T Communications customers who choose this new optional service will pay a monthly charge of $14 which entitles them to one hour of intrastate "Direct Dialed" (1+) calling during the weekend and night rate period.

An additional customer savings for those participating in the plan will be that any Direct Dialed calls placed during the weekend and night rate period that exceeds the one hour period will be charged at an hourly rate of $12, or $ .20 per minute.

Customers selecting this option also receive an additional 15 percent discount for intrastate Direct Dialed calls during the evening discount rate period for a total savings of approximately 38 percent.

A one-time charge of $6 is billed when a customer orders the "Reach Out® Texas" plan. The $6 is collected by AT&T Communications and paid to the local telephone company to establish the service. This charge will be waived during the first 90 days that the offering is available.

AT&T Communications is proud to offer this optional service for its Texas long distance customers and will in the future continue to introduce cost cutting programs to help Texans reduce their long distance bills.

A complete copy of the "Reach Out® Texas" tariff and rate schedule is on file with the Texas Public Utility Commission at Austin, Texas.

AT&T Communications estimates that the revenue impact of this new service would be significantly less than 2.5 percent of annual gross revenues.

Persons who wish to intervene or otherwise participate in these proceedings should notify the Commission as soon as possible. A request to intervene or participate or for further information should be mailed to the Public Utility Commission of Texas, 7800 Shoal Creek Boulevard, Suite 400N, Austin, Texas 78757. Further information also may be obtained by calling the Public Utility Commission Consumer Affairs Division at (512) 458-0223 or (512) 458-0227, or (512) 458-0221, teletypewriter for the deaf.

Customer billing for the optional calling plan will be provided for AT&T Communications through billing contracts with the local telephone companies. Therefore, the introduction of these rate plans into a specific area is contingent upon local company billing capabilities. Southwestern Bell Telephone Company has agreed to handle the billing in its service areas effective August 1, 1984.*

Once the mother makes her selections, it will be much easier to select a gift for her.

Midland's oldest carpet store celebrates its 33rd anniversary with an open house

In May of 1951, House of Carpets became Midland's first carpet store, with its grand opening at the old Brunson ranch house at 1502 North Lamesa Road. Since that time, over 150 other carpet stores have come and gone, but House of Carpets remains as Midland's premier carpet store, and has carpeted more Midland homes than all other active carpet dealers combined.

Recently, House of Carpets celebrated its 33rd birthday with an open house for its customers and friends. The open house was attended by Midland Mayor Thane Akins, representatives of the Midland Chamber of Commerce, and many of House of Carpets' old customers. In fact, House of Carpets' very first customers, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Mullins, were in attendance and took part in the festivities. Mr. and Mrs. Mullins are designers, builders and developers, and are still loyal customers of House of Carpets after 33 years!

House of Carpets is a charter member of the Chicago-based RFI (Retail Floorcovering Institute), a national organization with over 2,000 members, dedicated to promoting integrity and professionalism within the floorcovering industry. House of Carpets' owner Felix Welmaker was one of the first members of the organization, and served on its original Board of Directors in 1974 and 1975. Leading carpet dealers in all fifty states belong to the RFI, which sponsors a strict code of ethics. Welmaker recommends that no matter in which city or which store you shop for carpet, you ask if the store adheres to the RFI's code. Adherance to that code will assure you of honest dealings and excellent value.

Over the years, House of Carpets has installed carpets in may cities in Texas, and in many other states as well, including Illinois, Florida, New York, Arizona, New Mexico, Alaska, California and Utah. However, the most "famous" carpet job done by House of Carpets was, undoubtedly, Texas Stadium, home of the Dallas Cowboys. Cowboys' owner Clint Murchison Jr. worked personally with Welmaker in developing the specifications for the carpet and padding, and Welmaker furnished the carpet and personally supervised the installation to assure its perfection. The installation of that job was so flawless that it earned a word of praise from the supervising architect on the job, Warren Morey.

After 33 years, House of Carpets is still Midland's favorite carpet store, and it's no accident. People buy from House of Carpets because the values are better, the service is better, and the service representatives are so pleasant and well-informed. If you have ever bought carpet in Midland, chances are you have bought from House of Carpets. However, if you're new in Midland, you might drop by the "House" for a visit. They are located conveniently in the Village Shopping center (with Walgreen's and White's) just a few yards off Wall Street. You'll enjoy their newly-decorated store interior, and you'll find plenty of free parking close by. Make your next carpet shopping trip a pleasant one - at the House of Carpets, Midland's most respected name in carpets since 1951.

British trying to resolve strike

By MICHAEL WEST
Associated Press Writer

LONDON — Government mediators worked today to negotiate an end to a week-old dock strike that stranded scores of foreign truck drivers near Dover and forced sharp increase in some food prices.

Face-to-face negotiations between union leaders and employers have broken down, and mediators from the government's Advisory, Conciliation and Arbitration Service plan to talk separately with each side.

Mediators met Monday night with representatives of the National Association of Port Employers and were scheduled to meet later today with officials of the Transportation and General Workers Union, which represents some 35,000 dockworkers. But the Times of London said union leaders were pessimistic about the negotiations.

The strike, an offshoot of the four-month-old coal miners' strike, was stated last Tuesday to protest the use of non-union labor to unload iron ore for a British Steel plant blockaded by the miners. About 90 of Britain's largest ports have been shut down.

On Monday, the strike broadened when 511 dockworkers at Dover, Britain's main ferry terminal, decided to stop all freight traffic in and out of the busy English Channel port.

Police sealed off a five-mile stretch of highway near Dover as an emergency parking area for trucks stuck by the stoppage. More than 100 trucks, almost all with drivers from France and elsewhere on the European continent, were parked there by dawn today, police said.

Union official Les Sharp said the Dover employees voted 3-2 in favor of the stoppage.

Dover will continue to provide ferry service for cars, trailers and buses. But port officials expressed concern that vacationers would get caught up in traffic jams caused by the freight ban.

On an average working day Dover handles 2,500 trucks, 7,000 cars, 400 buses and 30,000 passengers.

Thousands of tons of produce were reported rotting in ships. Despite an airlift of fresh tomatoes from the Channel Islands, tomato prices in London jumped 26 cents a pound to nearly 91 cents a pound.

The original dispute over handling iron ore at Immingham on the east coast has been settled. But the union wants a guarantee the problem will not be repeated. Nicholas Finney, the director of the National Association of Port Employers, said he could not give such a guarantee.

Transport Secretary Nicholas Ridley told the House of Commons Monday that Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's Conservative government "will take any action necessary to keep the life of the nation going."

But Employment Secretary Tom King said in a radio interview there were no immediate plans to call out troops or declare a state of emergency.

Published reports said possible use of troops was among items discussed Monday when Mrs. Thatcher convened top Cabinet ministers to discuss what is widely seen as the toughest union challenge during her five-year rule.

Miners struck March 12 to protest plans by the state-owned National Coal Board to shut 20 unprofitable mines and cut the 183,000 workforce by 20,000.

Pertini joins pontiff for 'fresh air,' skiing

ROME (AP) — Pope John Paul II put on a blue ski suit and did a "perfect slalom" down a slope in the Italian Alps, his first ski outing since becoming pontiff in 1978, according to Italian news agencies.

Wearing a blue cap and dark sunglasses, the pope reportedly made a few runs down the mountain in the company of eight guards whilePertini, clad in a thick white sweater and smoking his pipe, cheered him on.

The pope skied the mountain near Trento, in northern Italy, for more than an hour, according to Italian news agency reports.

The news agencies ANSA and AGI said "highly placed official sources" and unidentified witnesses were the sources of their reports.

The presidential palace issued a statement saying the pope and Pertini flew to Verona and then went to the mountains by helicopter. The statement did not mention skiing, and the Vatican said there would be no elaboration on the palace statement.

AGI said the pope, who as a youth skied often on Poland's slopes, executed a "perfect slalom."

After the pope went skiing, he and Pertini dined on pasta, wine and roast beef at the Lobbia Refuge on the mountaintop, the news agencies said.

The reports said the pope made a telephone call Thursday to Pertini, inviting him to go skiing. The president replied that he was sorry but he did not know how to ski.

"Well, come along anyway and take a little fresh air and we'll eat lunch together," the pope told him, and Pertini quickly accepted the invitation, according to AGI.

The news agencies quoted the pope as telling Pertini that some people would consider their holiday a scandal "because nothing like it has ever happened before in relations between church and state.

The presidential statement said Pertini returned to Rome Monday afternoon.

A Vatican spokesman, the Rev. Romeo Panciroli, said the pontiff had not returned Monday afternoon.Vatican sources, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the pontiff would return today.

The pope gives his weekly general audience on Wednesday.

According to news accounts, John Paul, who is spending the summer at the papal palace in Castel Gandolfo south of Rome, was driven to Rome's Ciampino military airport shortly after sunrise.

Dressed in white with a black hood over his head, the pope joined Pertini in the president's DC-9 jetliner, which was parked far from the terminal, reports said.

Iraq shoots down Iranian jetfighter

BAGHDAD, Iraq (AP) — Iraqi air defense units today shot down an Iranian jetfighter in the southern sector of the border area, an Iraqi military spokesman said.

The spokesman, reading a communique over the state radio, said the Iranian warplane "tried to violate Iraqi air space in the southern sector" of the 730-mile border separating the two countries, which have been at war since September 1980.

"Iraqi air defenses confronted the enemy jetfighter and downed it. The plane crashed into Iranian territory opposite to the forwardmost Iraqi positions," the spokesman added without further elaboration.

There was no independent confirmation of the claim.

In another development, Arab officials and diplomatic sources said Monday that Iran has proposed a regional conference to keep the Iran-Iraq war in check.They said Saudi Arabia and its five allies in the Gulf Cooperation Council were considering the Iranian suggestion.

If the council approves, the conference would be held without Iraq in either Damascus, the capital of Syria, or Algiers.

The Saudi deputy foreign minister, Abdel-Aziz al-Thunayyan, flew to Kuwait on Saturday and broached the idea of a conference with Iran for peace in southern and western Persian Gulf regions, where shipping has been attacked by Iranian and Iraqi warplanes.

The Kuwaiti leadership responded favorably, according to the sources, who spoke on condition they not be identified.

The sources said Iran's undersecretary for foreign affairs, Mohamed Hussein Lavassani, advanced the proposal when he secretly visited Saudi Arabia and Qatar last week.

The Gulf Cooperation Council of Saudi Arabia, Kuwait, the United Arab Emirates, Bahrain, Qatar and Oman is a regional alliance designed to foster economic integration and collective defense.

In Baghdad, President Saddam Hussein said Monday that Iraq is "seriously considering a new plan to extend a new pipeline across Turkey to export oil...in addition to another pipeline for gas exports."

He said in an address to the nation marking national day on Tuesday that oil exports through the present trans-Turkey Iraqi pipeline "have been increased since July 1983." He did not disclose figures, but according to a reliable source, who spoke on the condition he not be identified, Iraq now ships about 900,000 barrels of oil a day across this pipeline.

Iraq's oil terminals in the gulf have been out of action since Iran and Iraq went to war in September 1980.

Foreign reporters in Baghdad said that Iranian prisoners of war flung shoes and chanted for 10 minutes Monday to protest repeated visits by journalists to their camp of detention, 66 miles east of Baghdad. The Iraqi Information Ministry organized visits over the previous four days for correspondents in Iraq to cover national day celebrations.

Israel's Labor Party facing some difficulties, polls say

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — A poll published today indicated the opposition Labor Party was holding a solid lead over the governing Likud bloc but could face a difficult struggle to form a new government.

The poll, conducted by the Modi'in Ezrahi Research Institute on Thursday among 1,349 adults and published in the daily Maariv today, indicated Labor could win 48 seats in the 120-member Parliament to 34 seats for the Likud when Israelis vote on Monday.

In Israel, the government is formed by a coalition of parties, and the largest party may not be able to govern if it does not win the support of enough smaller factions.

The new poll showed that if Likud won the support of eight smaller parites, most of them right-wing or religious groups, it could form a coalition of 60 seats, one short of an absolute majority.

The poll indicated that 11 smaller parties are likely to win from one to seven seats in the next parliament. The research institute said the poll's margin of error was 2 percent.

A recent poll conducted by the Labor Party indicated an edge of 52 seats to 36 seats in Labor's favor. A survey conducted by Likud pollsters showed a breakdown of 45-40 in Labor's favor.

One development during the campaign has been a challenge of Israel's two major religious parties, mounted from one side by Sephardic Jews of Middle Eastern origin who want a greater voice in policy and from another side by militants who view Jewish settlement in the West Bank as a biblical command.

The National Religious Party, which has served in every government since Israel was founded 36 years ago, and the ultra-religious Agudat Yisreal formerly had the allegiance of most of the roughly 20 percent of the population that tended to vote on religious lines.

Now that vote may be divided among six parties, and the religious parties could lose some political influence.

In return for support of the religious parties, Israeli governments have given religious authorities control over marriage and divorce, awarded generous funds to religious schools, and limited public transport and entertainment on the Sabbath.

The National Religious Party, which usually got more than 10 percent of the vote in national elections, served in coalition governments with the Labor Party for 29 years.

Brothers dig tunnel

MUNICH, West Germany (AP) — Two East German brothers tunneled all night under a chain-link fence fortified with automatic shooting devices and escaped into West Germany this morning, Bavarian police said.

The brothers, ages 28 and 19, used a collapsible shovel to dig in a spot where the East German authorities had not yet buried blocks of cement to prevent tunneling, said police spokesman Heinz Slee.

The exact location of the escape was withheld for security reasons, he said.

Vietnam returns remains

HANOI, Vietnam (AP) — Vietnam today turned over graying bones believed to be those of eight U.S. servicemen, and U.S. officials put them on a cargo plane headed for a military identification center in Hawaii.

The bones, packed in separate wooden crates, were checked briefly at Hanoi's Noi Bai Airport by U.S. specialists and loaded onto an Air Force C-130 transport plane.

Turner to seek post

VANCOUVER, British Columbia (AP) — Prime Minister John Turner says he will run for Parliament in a Vancouver district as part of an effort to improve the showing of his Liberal Party in western Canada.

Turner said he run in the Sept. 4 election out of Vancouver-Quadra, a well-to-do district that includes the campus of the University of British Columbia, where the prime minister, now 55, was a student and track star.

In Canada a candidate is not required to live in the district he or she represents in Parliament. Before quitting politics in 1976, Turner represented districts in Montreal and Ottawa.

Temple repair begins

AMRITSAR, India (AP) — About 150 orthodox Sikhs began repairing the battle-scarred Golden Temple today despite accusations by other Sikhs that they were traitors for starting the work while the shrine remains occupied by government soldiers.

A curfew was extended until Wednesday morning in Amritsar, the walled city around the Golden Temple, to prevent another march by protesters from the Sikhs' Akali Dal political party.

About 125 hymn-chanting Sikh women were arrested Monday night when they tried to march to the temple to protest the army occupation. They shouted, "Down with (Prime Minister) Indira Gandhi" and "President Zail Singh is a traitor" as they were hustled away. No violence was reported.

Candidates named

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — An opposition party named its presidential and vice presidential candidates for the Nov. 4 election but said they would not run unless the leftist Sandinista government promises the balloting will be honest.

The Sandinistas said Monday night that they would announce their candidates today. Sources within the Sandinista National Liberation Front said the presidential candidate was expected to be Daniel Ortega, coordinator of the junta.

The opposition Social Christian Party nominated Adan Fletes, 39, for president and Magdalena de Rodriguez, 50, for vice president, party secretary Luis Vega Miranda said Monday.

Ruling to be appealed

LONDON (AP) — Lawyers for Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher plan to appeal a judge's ruling against a government-imposed ban on union membership at a top secret intelligence center in southwest England.

NOTICES FOR ALL AIP CONTRACTS

A. POLICY. It is the policy of the Department of Transportation (DOT) that minority business enterprises as defined in 49 CFR Part 23 shall have the maximum opportunity to participate in the performance of contracts financed in whole or in part with Federal funds.

B. MBE PROGRAM. All bidders assure they will make sufficient reasonable efforts to meet the Minority Business Enterprise goals as established for this prime contract. The MBE goal for minorities is five percent and the goal for women is two percent of the dollar value of this contract.

After opening of bids, the apparent succesful bidder will be required to submit the names and addresses of MBE firms that will participate in the contract along with a description of the work and dollar amount for each firm. If the responses do not clearly show MBE participation will meet the goals above, the apparent successful bidder must clearly demonstrate, to the satisfaction of the airport sponsor, that a good faith effort has in fact been made and that meeting said goals is not reasonably possible. If any apparent low bidder cannot do so, the contract may, at the option of the airport sponsor, be awarded to the next low bidder able to meet these requirements.

C. REQUIRED NOTICES FOR CONTRACTS OVER $10,000. The regulations and orders of the Secretary of Labor, OFCC, and FAR 152.61 require the following notices:

1. The proposed contract is under and subject to Executive Order 11246 of September 24, 1965, and to the Equal Opportunity Clause, and

2. The Bidder must supply all the information required by the bid or proposal form.

3. The successful bidder will be required to submit a Certification of Nonsegregated Facilities prior to award of the contract, and to notify prospective subcontractors of the requirement for such a Certification where the subcontract exceeds $10,000. Samples of the Certification and Notice to Subcontractors appear in the specifications.

4. Women will be afforded equal opportunity in all areas of employment. However, the employment of women shall not diminish the standards or requirements for the employment of minorities.

Notice of Requirement for Affirmative Action to Ensure Equal Employment Opportunity (Executive Order 11246, as amended)

a. The Bidder's attention is called to the "Equal Opportunity Clause" and the "Standard Federal Equal Employment Opportunity Construction Contract Specifications" set forth herein.

b. The goals and timetables for minority and female participation, expressed in percentage terms for the contractor's aggregate work force in each trade on all construction work in the covered area, are as follows.

These goals are applicable to all the contractors's construction work (whether or not it is Federal or federally assisted) performed in the covered area.

The contractor's compliance with the exective order and the regulations iin 41 CFR part 60-4 shall be based on its implementation of the Equal Opportunity Clause, specific affirmative action obligations required by the specifications set forth in 41 CFR Part 60-4.3(a), and its efforts to meet the goals established for the geographical area where the contract resulting from this solicitation is to be performed. The hours of minority and female employment and training must be substantially uniform throughout the length of the contract, and in each trade, and the women evenly on each of its projects. The transfer of minority or female employees or trainees from contractors to contractor or from project to project, for the sole purpose of meeting the contractor's goals, shall be a violation of the contract, the executive order, and the regulations in 41 CFR Part 60-4. Compliance with the goals will be measured against the total work hours performed.

5. The contractor shall provide written notification to the Director, OFCCP, within 10 working days of award of any construction subcontract in excess of $10,000 at any tier for construction work under the contract resulting from this solicitation. The notification shall list the name, address, and telephone number of the subcontractor; employee identification number; estimated dollar amount of the subcontract estimated starting and completion dates of the subcontract; and the geographical area in which the contract is to be performed.

d. As used in this notice and in the contract resulting from this solicitation, the "covered area" is nationwide.

D. CONTRACTS IN EXCESS OF $50,000. For contracts of $50,000 or more a contractor having 50 or more employees, and his subcontractors having 50 or more employees, and who may be awarded a subcontract of $50,000 or more, will be required to maintain an affirmative action program within 120 days of the commencement of the contract.

E. ADDITIONAL NOTICES FOR $1 MILLION CONTRACTS. For each contract which may result in a bid of $1 million or more, the following notices shall also apply:

1. PREAWARD EQUAL OPPORTUNITY COMPLIANCE REVIEWS. Where the bid of the apparent low responsible bidder is in the amount of $1 million or more, the bidder and his known all-tier subcontracts which will be awarded subcontracts of $1 million or more will be subject to full, on-site, preaward equal opportunity compliance reviews before the award of the contract for the purpose of determining whether the bidder and his subcontractors are able to comply with the provisions of the equal opportunity clause.

2. COMPLIANCE REPORTS. Within 30 days after award of this contract, the contractor shall file a compliance report (Standard Form 100) if:

a. The contractor has not submitted a complete compliance report within 12 months preceding the date of award; and

b. The contractor is within the definition of "employer" in paragraphs 2e(3) of the instructions included in Standard Form 100.

The contractor shall require the subcontractor, on all-tier subcontracts, irrespective of dollar amount, to file Standard Form 100 within 30 days after award of the subcontract if the above two conditions apply. Standard Form 100 will be furnished upon request.
