7,072 BALES COTTON GINNED IN HEDLEY

The cotton ginning season has closed in Hedley. The four local gins turned out 7,072 bales.

This is a pretty fair crop, but is short of what it would have been with fair weather in November and December.

However, at the price, any was too much.

METHODIST REVIVAL TO START SUNDAY

The Revival Meeting is to start at the Methodist Church Sunday morning, April 3rd, at the regular preaching hour, and will continue throughout the week with services twice daily.

An out of town evangelist had been engaged for the meeting, but he found it necessary to cancel the engagement, so the home forces will be in charge.

It is hoped this meeting will prove a blessing to the community, and to this end the co-operation of all the people is greatly desired.

We want your help, and we want to help you.

A lot of Fresh Candies, Stick and Fancy, at the
B. & B. Variety Store.

WILL HELP THE NEEDY

The Welfare Committee of the Hedley P. T. A. will accept contributions for the needy, in the form of clothing or money. Any amount, from 5c up, will be very much appreciated.

Mrs. E. D. Whiteside,
Chairman.
Mrs. M. E. Wells,
Mrs. Oscar Hess.

SPECIAL SERVICE

Roosevelt Defeats Smith in New Hampshire Primaries— Billion Dollar Tax Bill Under Debate in the House.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

FIRST blood in the contest between Franklin D. Roosevelt and Alfred E. Smith for the Democratic nomination for President goes to the governor of New York. The opening round of the battle was provided by the New Hampshire preferential primaries, and Mr. Roosevelt captured the Granite State's eight delegates for his forces in the national convention.

Unofficial returns showed the Roosevelt pledged candidates were elected by a margin of approximately 4,500. Since the candidates were voted for separately, the individual totals varied slightly. Four district delegates were elected, two from each congressional district, and each of these delegates will have a full vote.

Franklin D. Roosevelt

A lighter vote than was expected in the cities to which the Smith forces looked for their greatest strength, together with a rural vote generally favorable to Roosevelt, combined to make the result. The vote of the state's eleven cities was divided almost evenly between the Smith and Roosevelt slates and the 224 towns furnished the majority by which the governor's ticket carried the state.

The Smith candidates for delegates at large carried only three cities: Keene, Berlin and Manchester.

An unopposed Republican ticket, pledged to President Hoover, was elected. It consisted of seven delegates at large and four district delegates.

The Roosevelt victory was expected to have an important bearing on the Massachusetts primary on April 23. Smith has given consent to the use of his name there and a ticket of candidates for delegates has been prepared. Roosevelt supporters predicted a Roosevelt ticket would be entered against the Smith slate in Massachusetts.

Next came the Minnesota Democratic state convention to choose delegates to the national gathering. Smith and Roosevelt supporters quarreled fiercely and the former, finding themselves in the minority, bolted and held a convention of their own which picked a delegation that will vote for Smith in Chicago though uninstructed. The regular delegation was instructed to support Roosevelt.

COLONEL LINDBERGH'S baby has not been returned, at this writing, nor has the identity of the kidnapers been made known. This despite the efforts of all agencies in the land, from the federal government down to leaders of the underworld. Negotiations for contact with the criminals are reported to have been put in the hands of Morris Rosner, a mysterious figure of New York, and current stories say the restoration of the child and payment of the ransom have been delayed by fear of the abductors that they would be trapped. Officials in charge of the case declared they were "still making progress," and privately some of them said they were sure the baby was safe and well and would be returned to his parents after the excitement had subsided.

IN THE opinion of the war policies commission, congress should have authority in time of war to fix prices in order to prevent profiteering. This was a vital part of the report made to the President by the commission and a constitutional amendment to that effect was introduced in the senate by Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg of Michigan, a member of the commission. It was referred to the judiciary committee.

Senator Vandenberg

The proposed amendment calls for an addition to the existing Fifth amendment, providing that "in time of war congress may regulate or provide for the regulation of the prices, rent, or compensation to be exacted or paid by any person in respect of the sale, rent, or use of any real or personal property, tangible or intangible, without regard to any limitation contained in this article or any other article of the Constitution."

Should corporations or persons succeed in evading such a price fixing regulation, the commission suggests a further check on profits by recommending a 95 per cent tax on all income in time of war in excess of the average income of the preceding three years.

WHEN the new tax bill designed to raise $1,100,000,000 in increased revenues had been presented to the house, several complications arose that caused considerable debate. Three Democratic members of the ways and means committee submitted a minority report urging that about one-third of the sum be obtained by legalizing and taxing 2.75 per cent beer. These congressmen were T. H. Cullen and C. D. Sullivan of New York, and J. W. McCormack of Massachusetts. They said they failed to understand a point of view which complacently accepts the taxation of illegal brewing and wine making through the levies proposed in the present bill on malt sirup, wort, and grape concentrate, yet refuses to agree with a legal tax on legally made beer. Restoration of the brewing industry, they argued further, would put thousands of jobless back to work.

Representative J. W. Martin, Jr., of Massachusetts, a Republican, presented strong objections to the proposed import levy on gasoline and oil, and he indicated that his opposition to this feature was shared by many representatives from states along the Atlantic seaboard.

WITH only thirteen opposing votes the house passed the La Guardia anti-injunction bill after seven hours of debate in which two men spoke against the measure. The La Guardia bill differed in minor particulars from the Norris bill passed by the senate, so the legislation went to conference.

When it becomes law the "yellow dog" contracts which bind workers not to organize will no longer be recognized and federal judges will be limited stringently in their powers to quiet labor disputes by injunction. Above these mandates the act declares the policy of the nation is to favor labor's right to organize and bargain collectively.

PUSHED off the front page by the Lindbergh baby kidnaping, the Sino-Japanese embroglio still held first place among international affairs. The truce at Shanghai did not last more than a few hours, and though Gen. Tsal Ting-kai and his army had been pushed back further than the Japanese originally demanded, the invaders, strengthened by fresh troops and more guns, insisted on further Chinese withdrawal. They extended their lines day by day, and some of their officers declare it was their intention to move toward Nanking at least as far as Changchow, which is 120 miles northwest of Shanghai. Meanwhile, it was reported, large numbers of Chinese soldiers were being added to General Tsal's forces, and in consequence General Shirakawa, Japanese commander, issued a warning that he would re-open hostilities if the Chinese attempted to enter the 40-mile line held by the Japanese.

Gen. Tsal Ting-kai

As was foreseen, the smaller powers in the League of Nations assembly tried to force the league to take drastic action against Japan, and were blocked by the great powers, which would be the ones directly affected if such a course. For them Sir John Simon, British foreign secretary, proposed the league should again remind Japan of her treaty and covenant obligations, restating Secretary Stimson's declaration that advantages gained by force cannot be recognized; should take the stand that Shanghai will be cared for by the great powers, and that the Manchurian problem should be shelved for the present. The debate was rather warm, but finally a committee was appointed to draft a resolution expressing the league's attitude and intentions.

PRESIDENT HOOVER, recognizing the popular demand for economies in government expenditures, announced that the entire administrative staff was co-operating with congress in trying to cut down federal costs by reorganization, but the house Democrats working on the economy plans were not satisfied. Chairman Byrnes of the special economy committee called for more specific suggestions from the President. He said the only administrative assistance was Brig. Gen. Frank T. Hines, director of the veterans' administration, who proposed "reductions in payments the bureau is now making to certain classes of disabled veterans. 'Surely the President,' said Mr. Byrnes, 'has had this information for some time and the question naturally arises why he did not take the responsibility in his message last December of recommending this legislation which he would now have the country understand he approves with out stating just what it is.'

The senate didn't help the economy plans much, for it passed the agriculture bill after adding $2,015,354 to the appropriations authorized by the house. The total of the measure as it left the senate and went to conference was $177,424,708. Senator McKellar King and Tydings tried in vain to knock large sums out of the figure; even the $1,450,000 item for grass-hopper control was retained.

EAMON DE VALERA is now the president of the Irish Free State. He was elected to succeed William T. Cosgrave by the dail eireann and took office at once. Of the seats in the assembly De Valera's Fianna Fail party holds 72. The Cosgrave party has 56, the Laborites 7 and the Independents, who usually vote with Cosgrave, 17. So De Valera governs only with the help of the Labor party, which demands that economic and social legislation be given the precedence. Cosgrave retired from power gracefully, stating that he and his party would go into opposition but would not unduly hamper the new president. It appeared that De Valera was still determined to try to expunge the oath of allegiance to the British king. Whether the Cosgrave following would vote against this or merely refrain from voting was uncertain.

W. T. Cosgrave

MAHATMA GANDHI'S civil disobedience movement has received strong reinforcements, having been joined by the Jamist ul Ulema, an organization that embraces the entire Moslem priesthood of India. The priests decreed a country-wide picketing of liquor shops to deprive the British government of revenue and decided to close all Moslem higher institutions of learning so the students can join in the anti-British movement.

INSTIGATED, it was alleged, by William Z. Foster and other Communists, more than three thousand jobless men and women tried to storm the Rouge River plant of the Ford Motor company in Detroit. With rocks and clubs they fought fiercely with the police and firemen called out to restrain them, and tear gas bombs did not avail to stop them because a high wind carried off the fumes. Forced back to the gates of the plant, the police finally fired three volleys from riot guns, and the mob took to flight. It was found that four persons had been killed and more than fifty injured. Among the latter was Harry Bennett, chief of the Ford service department, who was severely beaten. Foster and the other Communist leaders took no part in the riot and afterward could not be found by the authorities. Prosecutor Harry S. Toy of Detroit said he was considering placing criminal syndicalism charges before the grand jury, and would bring murder charges if any of the injured police officers should die.

FRANCE and the world lost a great figure in the death of Aristide Briand, foremost European apostle of international amity. Worn out by his long years of arduous labor, he succumbed to other lands had gone. The United States mourns the death of John Philip Sousa, its most famous band master and "march king," whose music has been an inspiration and a delight to several generations of Americans. For twelve years he was leader of the Marine Corps band, and then he organized his own noted band with which he toured the world. During the war he was in the naval service, being musical director at Great Lakes.

CONSIDERABLE interest was aroused by the marriage, in Colorado Springs, Colo., of Mrs. Ruth Hanna McCormick, former congresswoman-at-large from Illinois, and Albert G. Simms of Albuquerque, N. M., former member of congress. After the ceremony the couple left for Albuquerque, where they will reside. The marriage was not a surprise, for their friends had for several years suspected it would come about.

FINLAND'S rebellion came to a sudden end with the surrender of the leaders of the Lapua movement. The would-be revolutionists evacuated Mantsala, marched to the garrison town of Tushy and laid down their arms. Their chiefs were put in prison and probably will be tried for high treason. As is so often the case, it is suspected that the rebellion was financed by the Communist International.

REPORTS from all parts of the country tell of the success attending the efforts of the Citizens' Reconstruction organization, headed by Frank Knox of Chicago, in getting hoarded money back into trade channels and thus helping to restore public confidence.

Correct Lighting Will Save Your Eyes and Add to Your Enjoyment

THERE'S nothing quite so cozy—these long winter evenings—as a good book, a restful chair, comfortable slippers and the old briar pipe. The finishing touch, to make the evening at home a rare treat and to add to the enjoyment of your reading, is good light.

Good lighting, more than anything else, will make your reading a genuine pleasure. The print will stand out plainly and your eyes will follow the text untiringly. This absence of strain will double your enjoyment.

Lighting fixtures combining beauty and efficiency are so inexpensive—and the cost of adequate light so insignificant—that truly it's wise economy to use plenty of light. A courteous representative will be happy to inspect your home-lighting arrangements, and suggest beneficial changes if they're necessary. There's no obligation, of course.

Do you know that your increased use of Electric Service is billed on a surprisingly low rate schedule ... and adds only a small amount to your total bill?

BABY FRETFUL, RESTLESS?

Look to this cause

When your baby fusses, tosses and seems unable to sleep restfully, look for one common cause, doctors say. Constipation. To get rid quickly of the accumulated wastes which cause restlessness and discomfort, give a cleansing dose of Castoria. Castoria, you know, is made specially for children's delicate needs. It is a pure vegetable preparation; contains no harsh drugs, no narcotics. It is so mild and gentle you can give it to a young infant to relieve colic. Yet it is as effective for older children. Castoria's regulative help will bring relaxed comfort and restful sleep to your baby. Keep a bottle on hand. Genuine Castoria always has the name:

FULL MEASURE

One of the results of the present economic situation is that a "full measure" of value is necessary in order to gain the confidence and patronage of the public. That's one reason why St. Joseph's Genuine Pure Aspirin has become the largest selling aspirin in the world for 10c. People everywhere realize that it is neither economical nor necessary to spend more than 10c for 12 tablets of genuine pure aspirin. In addition, they know that "St. Joseph's" is as fine and as pure as money can buy. They know further that St. Joseph's moisture-proof cellophane wrapping preserves the purity and full strength of each tablet. Be safe, be sensible and ask for the original, genuine, pure cellophane-wrapped St. Joseph's largest seller at 10c—St. Joseph's.

STORY FOR BEDTIME

By THORNTON W. BURGESS

PETER RABBIT had run over to the Smiling Pool for a bit of gossip with Grandfather Frog if he were in sight, or with anyone else who might happen to be there in case Grandfather Frog was not. He had just reached the bank of the Smiling Pool and had time to see that Grandfather Frog's big green lily-pod was quite lonely looking without Grandfather Frog sitting on it, and that Jerry Muskrat was sitting on the end of an old log which was half in the water and half out, when he looked toward the Green Forest and saw the stranger who belonged to the Hawk family headed toward the Smiling Pool.

"Hello! Good-by!" shouted Peter to Jerry Muskrat and scampered for a hole between the roots of the Big Hickory Tree which grows near the bank of the Smiling Pool. Once in the hole he drew a long breath of thankfulness. Then he turned and watched the big stranger, whose broad wings were bringing him straight over the Smiling Pool. "Queer I never have seen him try to catch anyone, nor have I ever heard anyone complain of perfectly still for a second, and then with his wings closed he shot down, down, down, so fast that it quite took away Peter's breath just to watch him.

Peter's first thought was of Jerry Muskrat. Of course that must be who this great stranger with the ugly great claws was after. From his hiding place he couldn't see the Smiling Pool, although it was so near. And so, of course, he couldn't see Jerry Muskrat. With all his heart he hoped that Jerry saw the danger, and he listened for the splash when Jerry dove into the water. But there was no splash—that is, there was no splash by Jerry. Down plunged the stranger, and Peter watched for him to being chased by him," muttered Peter. "I wonder what he lives on."

As Peter said later, things happened then just as if they were in answer to his thoughts. The big stranger was just above the Smiling Pool and headed straight toward the Big River. Just as he got right over the middle of the Smiling Pool he turned a little circle in the air, seemed to hang there FRUIT salad is especially valuable to balance heavy foods. With oranges as the basic fruit, many pleasing combinations may be had with cheese nuts and dried fruits.

Vitamin Salad.

On a lettuce covered plate, place a square or scoop of cottage cheese, stand on end sections of orange. Top with half a pecan or walnut meat and serve with:

French Honey Dressing.

Take three tablespoonfuls of lemon juice, six tablespoonfuls of salad oil, one-fourth teaspoonful of salt, one-fourth teaspoonful of paprika and one-fourth cupful of strained honey Shake thoroughly before serving.

Orange and Date Salad.

Take two large oranges, arrange in sections of six on lettuce radiating from the center on the salad plate. In the center place stuffed dates, four to a serving. Top with a rose of mayonnaise.

Fruit Salad in Orange Cups.

Cut three large oranges into halves, remove the pulp carefully and mix with two slices of diced pineapple twelve quartered marshmallows, one third of a cupful of pecan meats and two-thirds of a cupful of dried pear. Serve the orange cups filled with the fruit mixed with mayonnaise and whipped cream. Serve on lettuce and garnish the top of each with nuts.

by William Byron Mowery

Joyce hesitated. She was aware that Alan deeply wanted her company. After all he'd done for her, it seemed cruelly ungrateful to refuse. And she herself wanted to go. But bitter wisdom whispered a warning. Since that morning when she turned his letters and picture and gifts to ashes, there had been no looking back. There must be none now. She had strength and courage to talk with him calmly and to act toward him as though they had never been more than good friends; but she dared not presume too far on that new-born strength. To be alone with him two hours on a twilight river, with their talk inevitably drifting to former times—it would be unbearable.

With gentle firmness she said: "I'd like to go Alan. But I'll have to run back to the post. There's so many things to do." She tried to smile. "I don't want to be a neglectful hostess to Bill and Mr. Featherfoot."

As she started up the river trail, her thoughts brooded on several things Alan had said in the course of his story, especially on his occasional references to Elizabeth. Not that he had said anything derogatory about Elizabeth. But his tone, his manner. . . . Was he becoming a little disillusioned? Was he seeing Elizabeth Spaulding not as the sister of his dead partner Curt, not as a girl to be cherished and shielded, but as a selfish, calculating person? Was he dimly foreseeing what his married life with her was going to be?

Joyce checked herself sharply from hoping or even thinking that Alan might break off his engagement, or from extending him anything more than grateful friendship. She was glad, profoundly glad, that his words had caused no resurrection of hope, no tremor of emotion. The discovery of her strength suffused her with a kind of pride. But for all that, she felt a great sorrow for Alan. He was bitterly unhappy, and she knew it. What was his situation now? Police work, his life in the North, comradeship with his old friends—everything that he had cherished was stripped away from him, and he was going into a marriage reluctantly and forcing himself into a life that was alien to his whole nature. When Joyce thought of all that, her sympathy, tender and compassionate, went out to him wholeheartedly.

Returning at deep twilight with the drums, Alan found Buzzard cleaning fouled spark plugs on the plane engine.

Candles were already lit in the trading store. Alan looked up the path, expecting to see Joyce's figure in the lighted doorway. He hoped to have an hour or two alone with her this evening. But all day the conviction had grown upon him that a talk would be worse than useless. If only God's truth didn't sound so preposterous; if only he could tell Joyce that he had become engaged to Elizabeth, had expected to marry Elizabeth, and yet all the time, in his deepest longing, had wanted not Elizabeth but her. . . .

"If we're going to get away from here first thing in the morning," Buzzard broke into his thoughts, "we ought to put in a couple hours' work after supper on these alleron leads. They're pretty bad frayed around the pulleys."

Alan knew that Buzzard was asking him to help with that job. But he did not answer. He wanted this evening with Joyce. Unless he took circumstances into his own hands tonight, he and Joyce would drift across a continent from each other in a few days more. Torn with uncertainty of her affections for him, he was debating about this evening. After the incidents of today—his picture gone, her coldness, her refusal to go with him—he was wavering, undecided.

He tossed his cigarette out on the water. "Maybe we'd better go up and help Joyce what we can."

Buzzard did not stir. For several minutes he had been glancing uneasily at Alan. Finally he screwed up courage to speak.

"It's strictly none of my business, Alan, but—but. . . . You're engaged to a girl there at Endurance, but you bought Miss MacMillan that rainbow scarf with your last dollar and you talked a lot about getting back here and helping her—"

Alan was loath to speak of Joyce, even with a partner. He tried to say quietly: "We've been good friends for several years. She's one of the sweetest girls I ever knew. You've met her now. You'd naturally want to help her, wouldn't you?"

"Of course. But—but. . . . See here, I may be imagining things; you can tell me to shut up if you want to—but it seems to me there's something wrong between you and her."

Alan repeated, rather shortly: "We're good friends. There's nothing more than that."

Buzzard knew different. He had had a vague suspicion of it ever since Alan first mentioned Joyce MacMillan's name at the cafe in Edmonton. As he remembered the incident of this noon, he wondered at the Spartan courage Joyce had shown and at the passion behind such an act. Surely some bitter unhappiness lay between her and Baker.

He said reluctantly: "If that's true, if you're merely friends and nothing more, what made her burn up that scarf you brought her?"

"What?" Alan whirled on him, gasping. "Burn up that centure flechee!"

He halfrose. "You say that's what she did? You're sure about that? You didn't make a mistake?"

For a moment, groping about to retrieve his blunder, Buzzard hardly knew what to say or do. There had been no mistake; he had seen that incident with his own eyes when he glanced through the window to find where Alan was. He debated whether to draw back from his statement or to plunge ahead and tell the rest of it—Joyce's momentary battle, the shudder that swept her whole body when she put the scarf into the stove, and the quick blinding tears that she dashed away.

He thought: "Better not get any deeper into this. I'd only blunder again. Better back out entirely."

He stammered: "I might have made a mistake. I might—uh—it might have been the wrapping paper. I just merely saw her put—uh—something into—and I jumped to conclusions. Must have been the wrapper. Why would any person want to burn up a gift like that? Let's forget it."

His tones carried no conviction. He realized it himself. Alan disbelieved him; Alan knew Joyce had burned the scarf he gave her.

Cursing himself hotly, Buzzard looked out across the purpling river. He had meant only the best, and he had dealt Alan a savage pitiless blow.

After a little time Alan said to him: "You'd better go up, Buzzard; she may be waiting for us."

"Aren't you going?"

"No—not now; I don't much care. . . . I don't want supper."

Something in his voice warned Buzzard not to urge him. As he turned away, Alan said, in the tones of a man who has made some hard and abiding decision:

"When you've had supper, come back down here; I'll help you with that work; we'll do it now, so we can get away early. I was thinking—for this evening—something else. But that's out—now. . . ."

"What!" Alan whirled on him, gasping. "Burn Up That Centure Flechee!"

At three o'clock the next morning Buzzard lifted the plane out of the Big Alooska. With Alan directing him, he headed due north.

One hundred and thirty miles away, nearly four hundred miles from Fort Endurance, a small tribe of Tinnets lived along the western fringe of the Thal-Azzah. They were a timid, skulking, inoffensive band, shrouded into a region where other tribes scorned to live. Dave MacMillan had been their friend and they brought him their furs; and Alan, during his years at Endurance, had sent a protective patrol to them twice a year.

Joyce had found out where they were spending this summer; and Alan had a mission with their old headman, Mugwa-Etthen.

When the timbered country began yielding to lakes and semi-muskeg, he got out his glasses and started searching ahead for their camp. At a height of five thousand feet he could sweep a region of more than two hundred thousand acres. The eyes of an eagle, the wings of a bullet-swift curlew, and that big-barreled Browning machine gun—through luck and driving purpose and a faith in his dubious plan, he had smashed through obstacles till now he held the power and heavy odds over those bandits.

The sure knowledge of this was about all that was left to him. His

Races and Languages Huddled in Suez Area

The Port Said consular district in Egypt has three cities of importance: Port Said, situated on the northern extremity of the Suez canal, with an officially estimated population of 108,592 inhabitants, of whom 25,000 are Europeans; Suez, at the southern end of the canal, with 49,909 inhabitants, of whom 8,000 are Europeans; and Ismailia, between the two aforementioned cities, with 25,194 residents, of whom 10,000 are Europeans. The preponderant element is almost entirely Egyptian Arabs, says United States Commerce Reports.

Egyptian Arabic is the language of the native population, while the foreign element converse usually in two work in the Mounted, his life here in the North, were both gone; and Buzzard's cataclysmic words last evening had showed him that his secret hope towards Joyce had been a fool's hope, a fool's wishful thinking.

How low he must have fallen in her esteem, that she should burn his gift to her! At first it had seemed a little cruel of Joyce to do that. But then he looked at the incident with relentless honesty, and he could not blame her. Once he and she had planned to marry. People had spoken of it; it had been generally accepted along the River. She had liked him, loved him. What must her feelings have been as she watched his relations with Elizabeth, and saw him engaged to another girl, and coming no more to the Big Alooska? She must have felt shame, a burning shame, at being jilted. A month after long months of that—it had been an outrage to her girlhood. Nothing she could do to him could be so heartless as what he had done to her.

Through the propeller disk he at last sighted the Indian camp, a cluster of brown leather tents beside a lake where the hand was passing the summer near their fish weirs. Buzzard roared over the camp and banked to alight. Old Mugwa-Etthen, a gnarled and wrinkled old savage, stalked up and gravely bade them welcome.

After this food season of heavy rains, Alan knew there were a few trails in the watery wilderness of the Thal-Azzah where a party of men could camp. He himself had only a hazy idea where those areas lay; but this old headman, Mugwa-Etthen, Who Follows-the-Caribou, had lived his life along the border of that great marsh and knew it better than any man alive, and could probably give him a pretty definite idea where to look.

Very wisely, Joyce had kept from letting the nomad bands know anything about the police defeat. The Shagalasha maintained order in so huge a territory largely through their reputation of never failing, and the news of their stinging defeat would do incalculable harm. Joyce had not even told old Mugwa-Etthen.

After pledging the headman to silence, in guttural Tinnet Alan began sketching the story of the robbery and battle. As he told of the bandits escaping up the Alooska, he noticed that the old chief suddenly became all interested.

Alan looked at him keenly. "Something's up," he thought. "I've stumbled onto something." He demanded: "When I wa-wa two three breaths ago you start like hit buck. Why?"

Drawing a crude map of the Thal-Azzah with his bony forefinger, the old headman sprang his astounding news.

Ten suns ago, he said, Tukeok and another young buck had gone westward into the Land of Many Waters to locate rat colonies for autumn trapping. One evening they heard the boom-boom of fire-sticks far away southwest. Slipping up, timid, cautious, they saw some strange men shooting waxes for food. They saw a tent, a camp on an island. . . .

For several minutes, fighting down a wild elation, Alan forced himself to crouch there, asking questions, fixing that map and that spot unforgettably in his mind.

At the wigwams he rejoined Bill. "Come on! Let's be getting into the air! An hour and a half from now we'll be saying it with a machine gun. When we flew up here we brought our luck along!"

From his height of three thousand feet, reading the country spread below him, Alan could follow the crude finger map without once being in doubt. . . . That should be the great blue-water lake which Mugwa-Etthen had described. It should have islands in the center of it. On one of the islands near the north edge of the cluster the bandits should be camped, if they had not moved on.

"Swing north!" he shouted at Buzzard. "Those islets there to themselves. . . ."

The machine swerved and thundered closer. One by one Alan started to search the five. On the first one, nothing. On the second, nothing. But on the third. . . . He started suddenly as he caught that center one in clear focus. Below them on that center island, conspicuous to their sky patrol, stood a solitary dirty-white tent.

After a few moments Alan had presence of mind again. He leaned forward and shouted instruction: "Drop down to a thousand feet. Fly over that island again. Slow. Want to study it carefully before we start things."

THE GIRL ON THE SILVER DOLLAR

THE classic profile which is familiar to all of us as that of the goddess of liberty on our silver dollar, belonged in real life to Ann W. Williams, a school teacher, who died just a few years ago in Philadelphia.

In 1876 George Morgan, expert designer and engraver, was entrusted with the task of preparing a new design for a silver dollar that was to be minted at Philadelphia. At that time Miss Williams was principal of the girls' school at the House of Refuge in Philadelphia and boasted blue eyes, golden hair and a profile of Grecian beauty. Thomas Eakins, an artist, was acquainted with both Mr. Morgan and Miss Williams' family, and had contact with the girl herself while she was an art student. He brought them together, but it was only after considerable persuasion and with the promise that her identity remain a secret that Miss Williams consented to pose.

The sittings took place in Mr. Eakins' home during November of 1876. The first sketches showed the model's hair, abundant and light in texture, caught in a soft coil at the back of her neck. Some time later it was decided that the familiar cap and sheath was a more fitting ornament for the goddess of liberty's head. Despite persistent rumors that the engraver put so much heart and soul into his work that he ended up by falling madly in love with Miss Williams, the fact remains that she continued her work as teacher and always referred to it as the greatest joy of her life.

SWEET ADELINE

FOR romance's sake we assume that each and every one of the several billion who have ecstatically sung "Sweet Adeline" has had in mind some one "flower of his heart" when he sang it. For it is certain that the author, Richard Gerard, when he wrote the song back in 1903, had in his mind a certain brunet who worked behind a music counter in a New York department store, and wrote his love-sick words in all youthful sincerity.

The brunet, alas, married some one else. But all this happened, of course, when Gerard was just a kid and in love with a new brunet each week. Only one of them, however, achieved the fame of Sweet Adeline. Her song was written in an old apartment house in Greenwich Village and took about twenty minutes in the writing. Equipped with music written by Harry Armstrong, "Sweet Adeline" commenced making the rounds of the music publishing houses. Most of them just weren't interested, though this was the day of the sentimental ballad and "Just for Tonight," "After the Ball," and "Daisy Bell," were making money. Soon after it was finally published, Armstrong sold his rights for $1,000; Gerard parted with his five years later for $3,000. Over 50,000,000 copies of it have been sold since, at 30 cents each for the publisher!

THE MARQUESA DE MONTMAYOR

IN the Seventeenth century Madame de Sevigne, writing from Paris long, gossipy letter to her beloved daughter in Provence, earned for herself a dramatic place in the literary world as its foremost woman letter writer. Out of the story behind those letters, the passionate, bitter story of a mother who loved unwisely and too well a daughter who did not return that affection, Thornton Wilder in 1928 conceived the character of the Marquise de Montmayor, one of the victims of that inexplicable catastrophe, the fall of "The Bridge of San Luis Rey."

Marie du Rabutin-Chantal was a charming, vivacious woman with an outright manner of speech unusual in the Seventeenth century when affection was a social necessity. Her marriage to the Marquis de Sevigne was an unhappy one, and she concentrated her affection upon her two children, and especially upon her daughter. When that daughter married the Comte de Grignan, lieutenant general of Provence and went there to make her home, her lonely mother commenced her famous correspondence with her, consisting of over 1,000 letters written over a period of 25 years. The establishment of a postal system via stagecoach in 1627 had given impetus to the writing of letters, which contained not merely personal matters for the recipient alone, but news in general for a group of friends, acting as a newspaper in the days before journalism. Thus the letters of Madame de Sevigne are not only charming as letters, but they contain much valuable insight into current life in fashionable Paris. (© 1922, Western Newspaper Union.)

Forgotten HEROES

By
ELMO SCOTT WATSON

"Disaster at Phil Kearney!"

CHRISTMAS EVE at old Fort Laramie on the Oregon Trail in Wyoming. In "Bedlam," the building where all the social functions of the post were held, a great ball was going on and unmindful of the bitter weather outside the little garrison was forgetting for awhile the perils and hardships of life on the frontier. Across the snowy parade ground a horse plodded wearily, wavered and dropped to the ground dead. Its rider reeled from his saddle as it fell and stumbled toward the door of the building.

A moment later the music stopped with a crash as his gigantic figure, wrapped from head to foot in buffalo overcoat, leggings and cap, staggered into the little ballroom. "Disaster at Phil Kearney," he gasped. "Captain Fetterman and 81 men massacred. The Indians are all around the post. Colonel Carrington must have help." Then he fell unconscious from over-exposure and exhaustion.

Immediately after the destruction of Fetterman's command by Red Cloud's Sioux, Colonel Carrington called for volunteers to go to Fort Laramie for help. Outside a frightful blizzard was raging and the thermometer stood at 25 degrees below zero. To go meant a ride of 236 miles through that bitter weather and through a country swarming with hostile Indians, blood-mad from their recent success. None of the soldiers would offer to make the trip, then a frontiersman, named John Phillips, nicknamed "Portugee" because of his nationality, stepped forward and said he would go if given the swiftest horse in the command.

This was done and at midnight of December 22, 1890, with only a few crackers for himself and a small amount of feed for his horse, Phillips slipped out a side gate in the stockade and rode away into the storm. Although the soldiers had predicted that the messenger would be caught before he had gone a hundred yards, he managed to avoid the Indians and set out for Fort Laramie. After 48 hours of cold, hunger and fatigue he reached that post as previously related. On New Year's day a cry of thanksgiving went up from the beleaguered garrison at Fort Phil Kearney as a line of soldiers appeared over the hills. "Saved! Saved! Phillips got through to Laramie!"

"It's What We're Here For!"

OFFICER and gentleman"—such is the tradition in the American army and none better exemplified than Guy V. Henry, who has also, and justly, been called "the typical knightly American soldier." A West Pointer, and the son of another, he was born into the service in which he was to have such a distinguished career. He saw four years of the hardest fighting in the Civil war, was three times mentioned in dispatches and brevetted five times for gallantry in action. At the desperate fighting at Old Cold Harbor he won the army's highest distinction, the medal of honor.

He was a brilliant Indian fighter from 1895 to 1898 and during the Spanish-American war he accomplished wonders as military ruler of Porto Rico and there he died because he would not ask to be relieved of his command although he knew that by staying he was doomed. "Here I was sent and here I will stay until my duty is done," he said. Yet, for all of his services, he is but little known, as compared to other officers whose more spectacular careers brought them to public notice.

"Thin as a shoestring and as brave as a lion," the soldiers who served under him and almost worshipped him, said. What he lacked in physique, he more than made up for in will power. During the winter of 1874 he was ordered from Fort Robinson with a troop of soldiers to expel miners from the Black Hills. The march, which is a classic in old army traditions, took them over 300 miles of the roughest country in America and was made in weather ranging from 20 to 40 degrees below zero. Only the indomitable perseverance of the commander kept the men from lying down and being frozen to death. His plight was the worst of all. They had to cut the bridle reins from his frozen hands when he returned to the fort, and slit his gloves into strips. Each strip brought with it a piece of flesh and to the day of his death he could not close the fingers on his left hand.

In the Battle of the Rosebud during the Sioux War of 1876 Henry was shot through the face and fell to the ground. A desperate hand-to-hand conflict raged over his body but he was rescued and carried to the rear. "Fix me up so that I can go back" were the words mumbled through bleeding lips to the surgeon, but there was no going back for him. There he lay through the long hot day while the battle raged, almost unattended, for not a man could be spared from the firing line. To a fellow officer who once came and bent over him miserably, Henry murmured, "It's all right, Jack, it's what we're here for." And a few moments later to a war correspondent who came to see him, Henry recommended that he join the army!

Washington's Travels

Wakefield; a Restoration of the Birthplace of George Washington.

(Prepared by National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.)—W.S.W. Service.

GEORGE WASHINGTON, soldier statesman, has eclipsed George Washington, the traveler—yet as a traveler, and as a geographer who gained his information at first hand, the Father of His Country earned the right to another "first."

Many places Washington visited have been unaware of the fact; other places where he is reputed to have "stopped" or "spent the night" are far from the verified records of his travels. This information developed when the map makers of the National Geographic Society started on the extensive research task—research consuming more than a year—to record all of Washington's journeys on a single map.

Thorough checks was made of the diaries of Washington, of the contemporary accounts of his travels, and in many cases personal visits had to be made to places, and dusty courthouse files scanned, because of places that have changed names, or have their names duplicated.

The compilation of this information shows that George Washington traveled over a larger area than any other official of his time. His travels extended from the heart of Georgia to Kittery, Maine. Westward, he went to the vicinity of Lake Erie, in Pennsylvania; to the neighborhood of Point Pleasant, in West Virginia, and to Gallipolis, Ohio.

Of three sea voyages Washington made, one was to foreign soil, Barbados. But the most amazing aspect of his travels, perhaps, are his journeys on horseback—journeys ranging from Virginia to Fort Le Boeuf, and from Mount Vernon to Boston. However, so far as records show, he did not visit the birthplace of his mother, Epping Forest.

Long Horseback Trips.

Washington's horseback trips were often arduous. He was known to average 35 miles a day for periods of more than a week. Once he rode 560 miles in 16 days. That trip was from Cumberland, Md., to Williamsburg, Va., and two days of the 16 were "time out," waiting for an armed escort. He carried the pay for Braddock's army in his saddlebags.

Horses often broke under the strain, when public duty called Washington to move with dispatch. For instance, when riding to join General Braddock, upon reaching the vicinity of what is now Charles Town, W. Va., he reported that he killed one horse outright and had rendered the three others he had brought along unfit for service.

When there was no urgency of public business his horses fared better. After his trip to his western lands in 1784, during which he had twice crossed the Appalachians and had been so far from civilization that he could get no corn for his horse (and nothing or only boiled corn for himself), he sets down with satisfaction that he had traveled 689 miles between the first day of September and the fourth day of October, on the same horses.

Washington's geographic instincts began to develop on this early trip. The trough of the south branch of the Potomac, where many years later President Grover Cleveland fished for bass, he described as "(a) couple of Ledges of Mountain Impassable running side and side together for above seven or eight miles and ye River down between them." He adds: "You must Ride Round ye back of ye Mountain for to get below them."

With boyish zest Washington ate his evening meal on Friday, April 8. "We camped this Night in ye Woods near a Wild Meadow where was a Stack of Hay after we had Pitched our Tent and made a very Large Fire we pull'd out our Knapsack in order to Recruit ourselves every (one) was his own Cook our Spits was Forked Sticks our Plates was a Large Chip as for Dishes we had none."

Good Pay, Small Expense.

A letter written to a friend while on one of the several other surveying trips he made to the waters of the Shenandoah, the Cacapon, and the South Branch in 1749, 1750, 1751, and 1752 indicates it was the good pay that reconciled young Washington to the hardships of a surveyor's life. Therein he says that he had not slept above three or four nights in a bed, but after walking all day he lay down "before the fire upon a Little Hay Straw Fodder or bairskin which ever is to be had with Man Wife and Children like a parcel of Dogs or Cats & happy he that gets the Berth near out the fire there's nothing would make it pass of tolerably but a good Reward a Dubbleloon (87.16%) is my constant gain every Day that the Weather Will permit my going out and Fredericksburg, Md., on the 114-mile journey in three days and still being fit enough to play billiards the evening he arrived. On Wednesday, February 4, 1750, Washington set out for Boston to lay a case of military precedence before Gen. William Shirley, commander in chief of the British forces in America. He reached Philadelphia the following Sunday, and took five or six days to look around the city.

He apparently made the 90 intervening miles to New York in two days. And what must the New York of that day have meant to the young Virginian, who had spent the last three years mostly in the primeval forests or fighting French and Indians on the savage frontiers!

A Visit to New York.

There was the "Microcosm" to visit described at the time as a world in miniature, which took 22 years to build. Washington's enthusiasm for it is written in his accounts, for on two separate occasions he enters items "for treatz. Ladies to ye Microcosm." There was also a rout at Mrs. Baron's, and tips to the servants in the household of Beverley Robinson, son of the speaker of the Virginia house of burgesses. The young officer was always punctilious in tipping the servants in households where he was entertained, and equally so in entering these items in his account books—two traits that have aided a great deal in tracing his travels.

Two days before he was twenty-four years old he set out on the last leg of his journey to Boston, and the "Pennsylvania Gazette" carried the news that "Colonel Washington, of Virginia, but last from Philadelphia, left this city (New York) for Boston." On his way to Boston he stopped with a Mr. Malbone, in Rhode Island. He entered a tip for the latter's servants of 14 and another item of 15 for a broken bowl. In Boston he stopped at Cromwell's Head tavern. He saw General Shirley, who decided the question of command at Fort Cumberland in his favor; visited a man of war in the harbor, lost some money at cards at the governor's house, and then set off for Virginia. But at the governor's he had met such people as John Adams, and made a deep impression by his recital of conditions in western Virginia, Maryland and Pennsylvania. Unconsciously he again was playing into the hands of destiny, for John Adams was one of those who 19 years later joined with Thomas Johnson of Maryland in making him commander in chief of the American forces.

Survey of the Frontier.

Another interesting phase of Washington's travels began when he determined to make a personal survey of the frontier with a view to establishing a chain of forts at the important passes, in the hope of damming the Indian tribe behind the Allegheny divide. During the French and Indian war days, villages and towns near the frontier had not yet begun to take shape, except in the case of county seats. Places were known as "John Smith's Plantation," "William Scott's 'Mill,'" "TaskerTosh's Fort," "Big Lick," etc. The changing ownerships of five generations, together with the substitution of bridges for fords, have obliterated these names from map and memory alike.

It was necessary, therefore, to go patiently through scores of massive land-grant books, dozens of old deeds books, and all the survey records that have survived, in order to find out where the early settlers lived.

Meal That Lingers in One Doughboy's Memory

Your discussion of breakfast as a possible contender for the position of "best meal of the day" (writes G. W. E.) reminds me of a breakfast I had in the army once that was a best meal. I had been out driving an ambulance over muddy French roads between Bar-le-Duc and Marquenterre for a day and a night, with nothing to eat but a can of sardines and a spare tank full of frog beer. I got back to camp about ten in the morning and found the cook away getting ravitaillément for dinner. Well, I was so empty I could see my skeleton without an X-ray, so I rummaged through the trailer kitchen for solid grub. All I could find was a big pan of cold baked army-and-navy beans. Also a quart of maple sirup. Together they went and down they went and that was my best meal that day or any day.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

SICK HEADACHE?"

It is not necessary to give-in to headaches. It is just a bit old-fashioned! The modern woman who feels a headache coming on at any time, takes some tablets of Bayer Aspirin and heads it off. Keep Bayer Aspirin handy, and keep your engagements. Headaches, systemic pains, come at inconvenient times. So do colds. You can end them before they're fairly started if you'll only remember this handy, harmless form of relief. Carry it in your purse and insure your comfort while shopping; your evening's pleasure at the theatre. Those little nagging aches that bring a case of "nerves" by day are ended in a jiffy. Pains that once kept people home are forgotten half an hour after taking Bayer Aspirin! You'll find these tablets always help. If you get real aspirin, you'll get real relief. In every package of genuine Bayer tablets are proven directions which cover headaches, colds, sore throat, toothache, neuralgia, neuritis, sciatica, rheumatism, etc.

The tablets stamped Bayer won't fail you, and can't harm you. They don't depress the heart. They don't upset the stomach. So take them whenever you need them, and take enough to end the pain.

First Name Unknown
Daniel J. Dempsey, Jr., Boston and Worcester attorney, was examining a French-Canadian witness a few yrs ago. "My name is Beauvais," he said, in answer to the usual opening question.

"And what is your first name?" asked Mr. Dempsey. To a flabbergasted attorney and court he replied, "I don't know." "You don't know your first name?" asked Dempsey. "No. It was this way. We were twins up in Canada, and our names were Pete and Joe. Well, one of us died. My mother says it's me. My father says it's him. So I don't know whether I'm Pete or Joe."—Boston Globe.

Young BODIES DEMAND it!

The bodies of all growing children require certain essential vitamins. Important among these are Vitamins A and D, both of which are found abundantly in Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil. "A" helps youngsters—and their parents, as well—resist common colds-in-the-head. "D" aids children in growth and in the development of bones and teeth. In this emulsified form, cod liver oil is easy and pleasant for young and old to take. Scott & Bowne, Bloomfield, N. J. Sales Representative, Harold F. Ritchie & Co., Inc., New York.
